The First Book of the CHRONICLES.

THIS, and the following book, were reckoned by the Jews as one book, as appears by the Maſoretic note at the end of the ſecond book, and as is affirmed by Origen [a] and Jerom [b]; and they were by the ancients [c] called Chronicles, as they are by us; but they are different from the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael and Judah, ſo often mentioned in the preceding books, ſeeing ſeveral things there referred to, as in them, are not to be found here; though no doubt many things here recorded were taken from thence under a divine direction. In the Greek verſion, and ſo in the Vulgate Latin verſion after that, they are called Paralipomena, that is, things paſſed over or omitted, becauſe they contain ſeveral anecdotes, which are not to be found in the books of Samuel and Kings. The Hebrew title of them is, Dibre hayamim, words of days, day-books or diaries, and what the Greeks call Ephemerides; though as yamim ſometimes ſignifies years, they may be named annals; and ſo the Arabic inſcription is, "the books of annals;" and becauſe they chiefly reſpect the kings of Judah, the Syriac inſcription is, "the book of the things that were done in the times of the kings of Judah." The Targum is, "the book of genealogies, the words of days, which were from the days of the world;" becauſe the firſt 10 chapters conſiſt of genealogies beginning from Adam. The inſpired penman of theſe books muſt live after the return of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity, ſince he carries down the genealogy of the kings and princes of Judah beyond that time, 1 Chron. iii. 17—19. ſee ch. ix. 1. It is generally thought by the Jews and Chriſtians, that Ezra was the writer of them, with which agrees the age in which he lived; and as it may ſeem from the laſt of theſe books, ending with the ſame words, with which that under his name begins: ſo the Talmudiſts [d] ſay, that Ezra wrote his own book, and the genealogy of the chronicles unto his own, or unto Velo, and he had brethren, 2 Chron. xxi. 2. and Jarchi affirms, that he wrote them by the hand, or means of Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi, inſpired prophets; though ſome Jewiſh writers [e] ſuppoſe they were written partly by him, and partly by Nehemiah; that all to 2 Chron. xxi. 2. were written by Ezra, and the reſt by Nehemiah. Kimchi thinks, that Ezra was not the firſt author and writer of theſe books, but that the books of chronicles and annals of the kings of Judah, and of the kings of Iſrael, were ſeparately written before him; but that he only reviſed them, and with the men of the great ſynagogue added the genealogies, and put them into the canon of the ſcriptures [f]. Spinoſa [g] fancies, they were written after Judas Maccabæus had reſtored the temple, ſince the hiſtorian tells what families dwelt in Jeruſalem in the times of Ezra, 1 Chron. ix. and ſpeaks of the porters, ỳ. 17. two of which are mentioned, Neh. xi. 19. as if Ezra could not deſcribe the families that lived when he did, or name the porters of the temple, ſince it was finiſhed and dedicated in his time, Ezra vi. 15. but however there is no doubt to be made of the authenticity of theſe books; ſince not only they have always been acknowledged by the Jews as a part of the canonical ſcripture, and by ancient chriſtians, as appears by the catalogues of Melito [h] and Origen [i]; but there are plain references to them in the New Teſtament. The genealogy of Chriſt, by the evangeliſts, is formed out of them; the doxology in Rev. v. 12. as ſome have obſerved, comes very near to what is uſed by David, 1 Chron. xxix. 11. and the paſſages in Acts vii. 48. and xvii. 24. contain the ſenſe of what is expreſſed in 2 Chron. ii. 5, 6. and vi. 18. The uſe and deſign of theſe books are chiefly to give a larger account of the kingdom of Judah, eſpecially after the diviſion of it from the ten tribes, and of the kings thereof, than what is given in the preceding books, as in the laſt of theſe books; and particularly they aſcertain the genealogy logy of Chriſt, that it might be clear and plain of what tribe and family the Meſſiah came, that he deſcended from the tribe of Judah, and from the kings of the houſe of David, as in this firſt book. They both contain an hiſtory from Adam, to the deliverance of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon. The firſt of theſe books reaches, according to Hottinger [k], to A. CHAP. I.

THIS chapter gives us the genealogy of the patriarchs from Adam to Noah, ℣. 1—4. of the ſons of Noah, and their poſterity to Abraham, ℣. 5—27. of the ſons of Abraham, and their poſterity, ℣. 28—34. and of the ſons of Eſau, ℣. 35—42. and of the kings and dukes that reigned in Edom, ℣. 43—54.

℣. 1, 2, 3, 4. Adam, Seth, &c.] Theſe firſt four verſes exactly agree with the account of the Antediluvian patriarchs in Gen. v. the firſt letter in Adam is larger than uſual, as a memorial, as Buxtorf [m] obſerves, of the firſt and only man, from whence mankind had their beginning, and whoſe hiſtory the author had undertaken to write.

℣. 5. The ſons of Japhet, Gomer, &c.] Here begins the genealogy of the ſons of Noah after the flood; of the ſons of Japhet the elder, in this and the two following verſes; next of the ſons of Ham the younger brother, ℣. 8—16. then of Shem, whoſe poſterity are mentioned laſt, becauſe from him, in the line of Heber, ſprang Abraham, the anceſtor of the Jewiſh nation, of whom the Meſſiah was to come, for whoſe ſake this genealogy is given, ℣. 17—27. The whole is the ſame with the account in Gen. x. and xi.

℣. 28. The ſons of Abraham, &c.] The famous and well-known anceſtor of the Jews; of Iſhmael his firſt-born, and his poſterity; of his ſons by Keturah; and of Iſaac and his ſons, an account is given from hence to the end of ℣. 34. entirely agreeing with that in Gen. xxv.

℣. 35. The ſons of Eſau, &c.] The firſt-born of Iſaac; his poſterity are named in this and the two following verſes, as in Gen. xxxvi. only it ſhould be obſerved, that Timna, ℣. 36. is not the name of a man, but was the concubine of Eliphaz, the eldeſt ſon of Eſau, and the mother of Amalek, Gen. xxxvi. 12. and ſo in the Arabic verſion it is read, "and Timna, which was the concubine of Eliphaz, the ſon of Eſau, bare him Amalek;" and ſo the Alexandrian copy of the Septuagint.

℣. 38. And the ſons of Seir, &c.] This man and his poſterity were not of the race of Eſau, but are mentioned becauſe they were a family into which Eſau, and a ſon of his, married, and whoſe poſſeſſions he and his obtained. The account from hence, to the end of ℣. 42. is the ſame with Gen. xxxvi. 20—28. with ſome little variation of names.

℣. 43. Now theſe are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom, &c.] Which had its name from Eſau, who was ſo called, Gen. xxv. 30. From hence, to the end of the chapter, an account is given of the kings and dukes of Edom, in the ſame order as in Gen. xxx. 31—43.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter begins with the twelve ſons of Iſrael or Jacob, ℣. 1, 2. then reckons the ſons of Judah, the fourth ſon of Jacob, ℣. 3, 4. then the poſterity of Pharez and Zerah, ſons of Judah, ℣. 5—8. next the ſons of Hezron, a ſon of Pharez, ℣. 9. particularly the poſterity of Ram, a ſon of Hezron, from whom ſprung Jeſſe and his family, ℣. 10—17. then of Caleb, another ſon of Hezron, ℣. 18—24. and next of Jerahmeel, the firſt-born of Hezron, ℣. 25—33. and particularly the poſterity of Sheſhan, a deſcendant of his, ℣. 34—41. and then other ſons of Caleb, with their poſterity, are reckoned, ℣. 42—54. and the chapter is cloſed with the families of the Scribes in Jabeſh, the ſame with the Kenites, ℣. 55.

℣. 1, 2. Theſe are the ſons of Iſrael, &c.] Or Jacob, the other ſon of Iſaac, who had the name of Iſrael given him, becauſe of his power with God, Gen. xxxii. 28. whoſe twelve ſons are here mentioned by name; the firſt four according to their birth of Leah, Reuben, Simeon, Levi and Judah; then the two ſons of Zilpah, Leah's handmaid, Iſſachar and Zebulun; and between Dan and Naphtali, the ſons of Bilhah, Rachel's handmaid, are placed Joſeph and Benjamin, the ſons of Rachel.

℣. 3. The ſons of Judah, &c.] The genealogy begins with him, though the fourth ſon of Jacob; becauſe, as Kimchi ſays, this book treats chiefly of the kings of Judah; but rather not only becauſe Jeſſe and David ſprang from him, but alſo the king Meſſiah: Er, and Onan, and Shelah, which three were born unto him of the daughter of Shua the Canaaniteſs; ſee Gen. xxxviii. 2, 12. and Er, the firſt-born of Judah, was evil in the ſight of the Lord; becauſe he did that which was evil: and he ſlew him; he died by the immediate hand of God, and ſo his brother Onan, being wicked alſo, Gen. xxxviii. 7, 10.

℣. 4. And Tamar his daughter-in-law bare him Pharez and Zerah, &c.] Through inceſt; they were twins, Gen. xxxviii. 27—30. all the ſons of Judah were five; who are before mentioned by name.

℣. 5. The ſons of Pharez, &c.] One of the above twins, born to Judah: Hezron, and Hamul; ſee Gen. xlvi. 12.

℣. 6. And the ſons of Zerah, &c.] The other twin of Judah: Zimri, and Ethan, and Heman, and Calcol, and Dara: five of them in all; the Targum calls them governors, and adds, on whom the ſpirit of prophecy dwelt; and in the Jewiſh chronology [n], they are ſaid to propheſy in Egypt; and the four laſt are ſup-ſuppoſed to be the ſame with thoſe in 1 Kings iv. 31. ſee the note there.

℣. 7. And the ſons of Carmi, &c.] The Targum adds, this is Zimri; but in Joſh. vii. 1. Carmi is ſaid to be the ſon of Zabdi, who ſeems to be the ſame with Zimri; and ſome ſupply the word here, and read °, the ſons of Zimri, Carmi, Achar, who was the grandſon of Zimri; his proper name was Achan, Joſh. vii. 1. but called Achar here by way of reproach, as Jarchi and others obſerve; being, as it follows, the troubler of Iſrael, as Achar ſignifies: who tranſgreſſed in the thing accurſed; devoted to the Lord, by taking it away for his own uſe, ſee Joſh. vi. 17. and vii. 21. hence the valley in which he was put to death, was called Achor, ℣. 26.

℣. 8. And the ſons of Ethan; Azariah.] Including his poſterity, ſee Gen. xlvi. 23. and ℣. 31. the poſterity of the other three ſons of Zerah are not mentioned, either becauſe the writer could not find the genealogy of them, as Kimchi; or rather, as he thinks, he cuts ſhort the genealogy of Zerah, becauſe the kingdom did not proceed from him, and returns to the genealogy of Hezron, from whence it did, or perhaps they had no children.

℣. 9. The ſons alſo of Hezron, that were born unto him, &c.] The Targum adds, in Timnath; but moſt likely in Egypt: Jerahmeel, and Ram, and Chelubai; afterwards called Caleb.

℣. 10, 11, 12. And Ram begat Amminadab, &c.] Ram is the ſame with Aram, Matt. i. 3, 4. the genealogy is carried down from him to Jeſſe in the ſame order as there, and in Ruth iv. 19—22. only here Nahſhon the ſon of Amminadab is called the prince of the children of Judah; which Kimchi and Jarchi ſay is written for the honour of David, who deſcended from him; and Salmon his ſon is here called Salma.

℣. 13, 14, 15. And Jeſſe begat his firſt-born Eliab, and Abinadab the ſecond, and Shimma the third, Nathaneel the fourth, Raddai the fifth, Ozem the ſixth, David the ſeventh.] But Jeſſe had eight ſons, 1 Sam. xvi. 10, 11. and xvii. 12. one of them therefore is not reckoned, either becauſe he was by another woman, and the writer only mentions thoſe that were of the ſame mother with David; this is the opinion of Aben Ezra and Kimchi; ſome ſay he was dead before David came to the kingdom; Kimchi mentions a Midraſh, or expoſition of theirs, according to which his name was Elihu, and was younger than David, who is mentioned in ch. xxvii. 18. and Jarchi obſerves, that the writer, having found the pearl, (David) reckons not the 8th ſon Elihu, though the Syriac and Arabic verſions have inſerted him in this order, Elihu the 7th, David the 8th; ſome take the 8th to be a grandſon of Jeſſe, Jonathan the ſon of Shimea, 2 Sam. xxi. 21. the third ſon of Jeſſe, here called Shimma, as he is Shammah, 1 Sam. xvi. 9. and xvii. 13.

℣. 16. Whoſe ſiſters were Zeruiah and Abigail, &c.] That is; ſiſters of David: and the ſons of Zeruiah; Abiſhai, and Joab, and Aſahel, three; all valiant men, and captains in David's army; their father's name is no where mentioned.

℣. 17. And Abigail bare Amaſa, &c.] Who was Abſalom's general, afterwards reconciled to David, and deſigned to be made general of his army, but was ſlain by Joab, ſee 2 Sam. xvii. 25, and xix. 13. and xx. 10. and the father of Amaſa was Jether the Iſhmaelite; he is called an Iſraelite, 2 Sam. xvii. 25. and ſo in the Targum here, he being either a proſelyte; or elſe he was an Iſraelite by birth, but called an Iſhmaelite, becauſe he had dwelt among the Iſhmaelites ſome time, as Obed-Edom is called the Gittite for the like reaſon; ſo Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it.

℣. 18. And Caleb the ſon of Hezron, &c.] The ſame that is called Chelubai, ℣. 9. but not the ſame with Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, made mention of in the books of Numbers, Joſhua, and Judges: he begat children of Azubah his wife, and of Jerioth; who were both his wives; or it may be rather, ſince Azubah is ſo particularly called his wife, Jerioth might be a concubine: or of Azubah he begat Jerioth; ſo the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions; though it ſeems beſt with Hillerus [P] to interpret theſe names of the ſame perſon, and render the laſt clauſe, that is, of Jerioth, of her whoſe name alſo was Jerioth, Azubah having two names; and the rather, ſince only the children of one are mentioned, as follows: her ſons are theſe; Jeſher, and Shobab, and Ardon; of whom we read no where elſe; the Targum ſays, Azubah was ſo called, becauſe ſhe was barren and deſpiſed, which this clauſe contradicts.

℣. 19. And when Azubah was dead, Caleb took unto him Ephrath, &c.] The Targum is, "Miriam, who was called Ephrath; but, according to Joſephus [Q]. it was his ſon Hur that was the huſband of Miriam the ſiſter of Moſes: which bare him Hur; ſee the note on Exod. xvii. 10.

℣. 20. And Hur begat Uri, and Uri begat Bezaleel.] Who yet is not thought to be the ſame Bezaleel we read of in Exod. xxxi. 2. though the fathers and grandfathers of both have the ſame names, and were of the ſame tribe.

℣. 21. And afterward Hezron went in to the daughter of Machir, the father of Gilead, &c.] Which Machir was the ſon of Manaſſeh, and Gilead was his grandſon, Numb. xxvii. 29. the Targum is, "but he enticed a virgin, the daughter of Machir;" which ſuggeſts, that he committed fornication with her, though he afterwards married her; her name is not mentioned; to me it ſeems to be Abiah, ℣. 24. and whom the Targum there calls the daughter of Machir: whom he married when he was 60 years old; the Targum is 66; this ſeems to be his laſt wife: and ſhe bare him Segub; the ſame name with the youngeſt ſon of Hiel, who rebuilt Jericho, 1 Kings xvi. 34.

℣. 22. And Segub begat Jair, who had 23 citics in the land of Gilead.] Which, according to Kimchi, he inherited in right of his wife, which, he ſays, he took out of the land of Gilead; but they ſeem to be rather what he took by force of arms from the former inhabitants; ſee Numb. xxxii. 41.

℣. 23. And he took Geſhur, and Aram, with the towns of Jair, from them, &c.] Cities or countries which the Geſhurites and Aramæans, or Syrians, before inhabited; and which he took from them, together with other towns, which, being taken by him, were called after his name; the Targum is, the Geſhurites and Aramæans took the villages of Jair from them; that is, from the ſons of Jair in after-times; ſee Joſh. xii. 5. and xiii. 13. with Kenath and the towns thereof; which Jair took by Nobah his general, and called it after his name, Numb. xxxii. 42. even 60 cities; ſee Deut. iii. 4—14. Joſh. xiii. 30. all theſe belonged to the ſons of Machir, the father of Gilead; being given him by Moſes, Numb. xxxii. 40. Deut. iii. 15.

℣. 24. And after that Hezron was dead in Caleb-ephratah, &c.] Suppoſed to be the ſame with Bethlehem;

Bethlehem; and was ſo called, both from Caleb the ſon of Hezron, and Ephrath his wife, ℣. 19. then Abiah Hezron's wife bare him Aſhur the father of Tekoa; being left with child by him at his death; the whole verſe is paraphraſed thus in the Targum, "and after Hezron died in the houſe of Caleb his ſon in Ephrath, the wife of Hezron the daughter of Machir was left with child, and ſhe bare to him after his death Aſhur the prince of the Tekoites;" whoſe ſon gave name very probably to the city of Tekoa, 2 Sam. xiv. 2.

℣. 25. And the Sons of Jerahmeel the firſt-born of Hezron were, Ram the firſt-born, &c.] So called by his father after the name of his brother, ſee ℣. 9. and Bunah, and Oren, and Ozem, and Ahijah; or of Ahijah, as ſome [r] render it, this being the name of his wife, who bare him the ſons before-named, ſince mention is made of another wife in the next verſe.

℣. 26. Jerahmeel had alſo another wife, whoſe name was Atarah, &c.] Diſtinct from his wife before-named; or another woman, which is a phraſe for an harlot or concubine, Judg. xi. 2. which ſhe might be, as Kimchi obſerves; though the former ſeems beſt: ſhe was the mother of Onam; and perhaps was the only ſon ſhe bore to Jerahmeel, of whoſe ſons, ſee ℣. 28.

℣. 27. And the ſons of Ram the firſt-born of Jerahmeel, &c.] By his firſt wife: were Maaz, and Jamin, and Ekar; of whom no other notice is taken; perhaps they left no children.

℣. 28. And the ſons of Onam, &c.] The ſon of Jerahmeel by his other wife: were Shammai and Jada. And the ſons of Shammai; Nadab, and Abiſhur; whoſe poſterity are mentioned in the two following verſes.

℣. 29. And the name of the wife of Abiſhur was Abihail, &c.] Of the ſame name was a wife of Rehoboam, a daughter of his grandfather David's eldeſt brother, Eliab, 2 Chron. xi. 18. and ſhe bare him Ahban, and Molid; which are no more mentioned, they perhaps leaving no poſterity.

℣. 30. And the ſons of Nadab, &c.] The eldeſt ſon of Shammai, ℣. 28. Seled and Appaim: but Seled died without children; and therefore we hear no more of him.

℣. 31. And the ſons of Appaim; Iſhi. And the ſons of Iſhi; Sheſhan, &c.] Though they had each of them but one ſon, yet the plural number is uſed, their poſterity being included, as in ℣. 8. and ſo in the next clauſe: and the children of Sheſhan; Ahlai; who, from ℣. 34, 35. appears to be a daughter.

℣. 32. And the ſons of Jada the brother of Shammai, &c.] See ℣. 28. Jether and Jonathan: and Jether died without children; the poſterity of Jonathan are given in the next verſe.

℣. 33. And the ſons of Jonathan; Peleth, and Zaza, &c.] Of whom no mention is made elſewhere: theſe were the ſons of Jerahmeel; not only his immediate ſons, but their poſterity, called from him Jerahmeelites, 1 Sam. xxvii. 10.

℣. 34. Now Sheſhan had no ſons, but daughters, &c.] And but one of that ſort, whoſe name was Ahlai, ℣. 31. the plural being put here for the ſingular; or, if that is the name of a ſon, as ſome think, he died in his father's life-time, and left no iſſue; ſo that there only remained daughters, and it ſeems but one by the next verſe: and Sheſhan had a ſervant, an Egyptian, whoſe name was Jarha; one born in his houſe, and brought up by him, and a proſelyee, ſuch an one as Eliezer in Abraham's family.

℣. 35. And Sheſhan gave his daughter to Jarha his ſervant to wife, &c.] Having firſt given him his freedom, as the Targum premiſes; this daughter ſeems to be Ahlai, ℣. 31. which receives confirmation from Zabad, one of the deſcendants of this man, ℣. 36. being ſaid to be the ſon of Ahlai, ch. xi. 41. that is, great-grandſon: and ſhe bare him Attai; the genealogy of whoſe deſcendants is given to the end of ℣. 41. of whom no mention is made elſewhere, but of Zabad, as before-obſerved; and, according to the Jews, it is given for the ſake of Iſhmael, the ſon of Nethaniah the ſon of Eliſhamah, the laſt perſon mentioned in this genealogy; which Iſhmael ſlew Gedaliah governor of Jeruſalem, and is ſaid to be of the ſeed royal, Jer. xli. 1.

℣. 42. Now the ſons of Caleb the brother of Jerahmeel, &c.] Called Chelubai, ℣. 9 and is the ſame Caleb ſpoken of in ℣. 18. and his ſons next reckoned were by a third wife, Azubah, Ephrath being dead, ℣. 19. and theſe ſons were Meſha his firſt-born, which was the father of Ziph; who gave name to the city of Ziph; there were two of this name in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 24. 55. or this is the title of Meſha governour of the city of Ziph; ſo the Targum calls him, prince of the Ziphites: and the ſons of Mareſha the father of Hebron; according to Kimchi and Ben Melech, the words are to be ſupplied thus, and the ſons of Ziph were Mareſha the father of Hebron; which, though ſometimes the name of a city in the tribe of Judah, is here the name of a man, from whom, perhaps, the city had its name, ſince Hebron is ſaid to have ſons in the next verſe; Jarchi makes Meſha to be the prince of Ziph, and prince of the children of Mareſha, and prince of Hebron.

℣. 43. And the ſons of Hebron; Korah, and Tappuah, and Rekem, and Shema.] One of theſe, Tappuah, is the name of a city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 34. and there is alſo Beth-Tappuah in the ſame tribe, ℣. 53. which one, or both, might have their name from this man; and Shema alſo, ℣. 26.

℣. 44. And Shema begat Raham, the father of Jorkoam, &c.] Which Hillerus [s] takes to be the name of a city in the tribe of Judah; and Jarchi's note is, that wherever the word father is here uſed, it is to be underſtood of the prince of a city that follows: and Rekem begat Shammai; there is a deſcendant of Jerahmeel, the brother of Caleb, of this name, ℣. 28.

℣. 45. And the ſon of Shammai was Maon, &c.] Who gave name to a city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 55. ſee 1 Sam. xxiii. 24, 25. and xxv. 2. and Maon was the father of Beth zur; prince of a very ſtrong fortified city of this name in the ſame tribe, Joſh. xv. 58. unleſs this was a ſon of Maon's, from whom the city had its name.

℣. 46. And Ephah Caleb's concubine bare Haran, and Moza, and Gazez, &c.] An half-wife, or ſecondary wife; for though this man ſeems not to have had more wives than one at a time, yet he had concubines with them; we read of another after this, if not a third: and Haran begat Gazez; whom he ſo named after his brother.

℣. 47. And the ſons of Jahdai, &c.] Who is not mentioned by this name before; perhaps the ſame with Moza, who might have two names; though, according to Hillerus [t], he was the ſon of Moza; ſome take it to be the name of another of Caleb's

Caleb's concubines, by whom he had the ſix following ſons: Regem, and Jotham, and Geſhan, and Pelet, and Ephah, and Shaaph; one of theſe, Pelet perhaps, gave name to Beth-Pelet in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 27.

℣. 48. Maachah Caleb's concubine, &c.] Another concubine of his: bare Sheber, and Tirhanah; or of whom Caleb begot thoſe two; for the verb is maſculine; ſo Kimchi.

℣. 49. She bare alſo Shaaph the father of Madmannah, &c.] Prince of a place ſo called, in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 31. Sheva the father of Machbenah, and the father of Gibeah; prince of two cities of thoſe names in the ſame tribe; of the latter ſee Joſh. xv. 57. and the daughter of Caleb was Achſa; Caleb, the ſon of Jephunneh, had a daughter of this name, but neither he nor ſhe are here meant, Joſh. xv. 16, 17. but by whom Caleb, the ſon of Hezron, had this daughter is not ſaid; perhaps by Maachah his concubine laſt-mentioned.

℣. 50. Theſe were the ſons of Caleb the ſon of Hur, the firſt-born of Ephratah, &c.] This is another Caleb, the grandſon of Caleb the ſon of Hezron, called after his name; he was the ſon of Hur, the firſt-born of his wife Ephratah, ℣. 19. Shobal the father of Kirjath-jearim; of the inhabitants of that place; they ſprung from him; or, as the Targum, he was prince of Kirjath-jearim, a city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 60.

℣. 51. Salma the father of Beth-lehem, &c.] Or prince of Beth-lehem, as the Targum; not the ſame as in ℣. 11. he was the ſon of Nahſhan, this of the younger Caleb: Hareph, the father of Beth-gader; prince of a place of that name called Gador, ch. iv. 4. and where this man's name is Penuel; Gader was in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 58.

℣. 52. And Shobal, the father of Kirjath-jearim, had ſons, &c.] Which ſhows that Kirjath-jearim is not the name of a man, or of any of Shobal's ſons, who are next mentioned, but of a place of which he was prince: the firſt is Haroeh, who is called Reajah, ch. iv. 2. a word of the ſame ſignification: and half of the Manahethites; which Kimchi takes to be the proper name of a man called Chatzi-hamanaheth, another ſon of Shobal's; but Jarchi interprets it of the name of a place or province called Manaheth, ch. viii. 6. over half of which Haroeh was governor.

℣. 53. And the families of Kirjath-jearim, &c.] That dwelt there, of which Shobal was prince, and who ſprung from him, are as follow: the Ithrite, and the Puhite, and the Shumathite, and the Miſhraite; who had their names from Jether, Putha, Shumath, and Miſhra, deſcendants of Shobal: of them came the Zareathite, and the Eſhtaulite; that is, from the Miſhraites ſprung the inhabitants of Zareath and Eſhtaul, places in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 33.

℣. 54. The ſons of Salma, &c.] Another ſon of the younger Caleb, ℣. 50; 51. whoſe ſons were Beth-lehem, the inhabitants of the place, at leaſt many of them, of which he was prince, ℣. 51. and the Netophathite; the inhabitants of Netophah; a place in the tribe of Judah, mentioned along with Beth-lehem, Neh. vii. 26. theſe ſprung from Salma: Ataroth, the houſe of Joab; Ataroth ſeems to be the name of a place in the tribe of Judah, where the family of Joab lived, the inhabitants of which were the deſcendants of Salma: and half of the Manahethites; the other half of the inhabitants of Manaheth, ſee ℣. 52. the Zorite; part alſo of them, called Zareathites, ℣. 53.

℣. 55. And the families of the ſcribes which dwelt at Jabez, &c.] A city in Judah, the founder of which perhaps was Jabez, mentioned in ch. iv. 9: in which learned men dwelt: the Tirathites, the Shimeathites, and Suchathites; who ſprung from men whoſe names were Tira, Shimea, and Sucha; and if they were not the poſterity of Salma, yet dwelt among his, and ſo are reckoned with them; perhaps the latter might have their name from dwelling in tents; the former clauſe may be rendered, that dwelt with Jabez, who was their maſter, and they his ſcholars; in the Vulgate Latin verſion the words are rendered as appellatives, ſinging and reſounding, and dwelling in tents: Conrad Pellican, on the place, goes a middle way, and interprets theſe families as dwelling with Jabez their maſter, and they his ſcholars, and that they were called by their progenitors Tirathites, becauſe learned and ingenious, and præcentors of the divine oracles; Shimeathites, becauſe they diligently hearkened to the ſacred ſongs, and the doctrines of the law of God; and Suchathites, becauſe they dwelt not in cities, but in tents, deſpiſers of all worldly things, that they might freely attend to learn: theſe are the Kenites; that is, the Suchathites are the Kenites, who, it is well known, dwelt in tents, and not in cities; though Jarchi takes theſe Kenites to be the inhabitants of Cain, a city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 57. but they ſeem rather to be the Kenites that ſprung from Jethro, here made mention of, becauſe ſome of them dwelt in the tribe of Judah, and among the poſterity of Salma, ſee Judg. i. 16. that came of Hemath, the father of the houſe of Rechab; the prince of that family, and who from Rechab were called Rechabites; Jer. xxxv. 2.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter gives an account of the ſons of David, born to him both in Hebron and in Jeruſalem, ℣. 1—9. and of his ſucceſſors in the kingdom to the Babyloniſh captivity, ℣. 10—16. and of his family to the coming of the Meſſiah, ℣. 17—24.

℣. 1, 2, 3, 4. Now theſe were the ſons of David, &c.] The ſix following born in Hebron, who are reckoned in the ſame order as in 2 Sam. iii. 2—5. only here the ſecond ſon is called Daniel, who there goes by the name of Chileab; he had two names, the reaſon of which ſee there; and here David's wife, Eglah, is ſaid in the Targum to be Michal Saul's daughter, ſee the note on 2 Sam. iii. 5. to which is added an account of his reign both in Hebron and Jeruſalem, agreeable to 2 Sam. v. 5.

℣. 5, 6, 7, 8. And theſe were born unto him in Jeruſalem, &c.] Whoſe names follow, in all 9; there are but 7 mentioned in 2 Sam. v. 14, 15, 16. the reaſon of which ſee in the notes there; it may be obſerved that Bathſheba is here called Bathſhua, and her father Ammiel, whoſe name is Eliam in 2 Sam. xi. 3. names of much the ſame ſignification.

℣. 9. Theſe were all the ſons of David, &c.] By his wives: beſide the ſons of the concubines; who are not reckoned, and how many they were is not known; he had ten concubines at leaſt, 2 Sam. xv. 16. and xx. iii. And Tamar their ſiſter; not the ſiſter of the ſons of the concubines, but of his other ſons, and only of Abſalom by the mother's ſide, of whom ſee 2 Sam. xiii.

℣. 10—14. And Solomon's ſon was Rehoboam, &c.] From hence to the end of the 14th verſe, David's ſucceſſors are reckoned, according to the order of their reign, unto Joſiah and his ſons: Solomon, Reboboam, Abia, Aſa, Jehoſhaphat, Joram, Ahaziah, Joaſh, Amaziah, Azariah, Jotham, Ahaz, Hezekiah, Manaſſeh, Amon, Joſiah, in all 16.

℣. 15. And the ſons of Joſiah were, the firſt-born Johanan, &c.] Of whom we no where elſe read; he probably died before his father Joſiah: the ſecond Jehoiakim; whoſe name was Eliakim, changed for the former by the king of Egypt, when he depoſed his younger brother, and ſet him on the throne, 2 Kings xxiii. 24. the third Zedekiah; whoſe name was Mattaniah, but changed by the king of Babylon, when he placed him on the throne in the room of his brother's ſon, 2 Kings xxiv. 17. the fourth Shallum; the ſame with Jehoahaz, who was firſt made king in the room of his father; but reigning ſo ſhort a time, and making ſo mean a figure, is mentioned laſt, ſee Jer. xxii. 11.

℣. 16. And the ſons of Jehoiakim; Jeconiah his ſon, Zedekiah his ſon.] This is not the Zedekiah mentioned in the preceding verſe; for he was not the ſon but the uncle of Jeconiah, unleſs he ſhould be called his ſon, becauſe he ſucceeded him in the kingdom; but he ſeems to be another of that name no where elſe mentioned, and not the ſon of Jeconiah in any ſenſe; he is not reckoned among them in the following verſes, but of Jehoiakim.

℣. 17. And the ſons of Jeconiah, &c.] For though he was pronounced childleſs, Jer. xxii. 30. that reſpects not his having no children in any ſenſe, but none to ſucceed him in the kingdom: Aſſir; which ſignifies bound, or a priſoner, becauſe, as Kimchi thinks, he was born in a priſon, his father then being a captive in Babylon; but rather it refers to Jeconiah himſelf, and is an appellation of him, and to be rendered, the ſons of Jeconiah the captive; which agrees beſt with the Hebrew accents: Salathiel his ſon; the ſame that is called Shealtiel, Hagg. i. 1. who was both the proper ſon of Jeconiah, and who ſucceeded him, as ſome think, in the honour and dignity the king of Babylon raiſed him to.

℣. 18. Malchiram alſo, &c.] That is, was a ſon of Jeconiah as well as Salathiel, and ſo the reſt that follow: and Pedaiah, and Shenazar, Jecamiah, Hoſhama, and Nedabiah; Kimchi ſays, theſe were the ſons of Salathiel; but I rather think they were the ſons of Jeconiah, and brethren of Salathiel, becauſe of what follows.

℣. 19. And the ſons of Pedaiah were, Zerubbabel, and Shimei, &c.] Here ariſes a difficulty, ſince elſewhere Zerubbabel is ſaid to be the ſon of Shealtiel, Hagg. i. 1. Matt. i. 12. Luke iii. 27. ſome think this is not the ſame Zerubbabel here as there; ſo Grotius [u]; but I ſee no reaſon for that; but this difficulty may be removed, by obſerving that if Pedaiah was a ſon of Salathiel, as Kimchi thinks, then Zerubbabel being his grandſon, may be called his ſon, as grandſons are ſometimes called ſons in ſcripture; or rather, Salathiel, having no children, adopted Zerubbabel, his brother's ſon, and made him ſucceſſor in the government; ſo that he was the ſon of Pedaiah by birth, and of Salathiel by adoption; or elſe Salathiel dying without children, his brother Pedaiah, according to the law, married his widow, and by her had Zerubbabel, who was the proper ſon of Pedaiah, and the legal ſon of Salathiel; and the ſons of Zerubbabel; Meſhullam; who is called Abiud, Matt. i. 13. another ſon of his, with their father, is mentioned in this verſe, and five more in the next. From hence to the end of the chapter, the genealogy is carried on from the captivity of Babylon, out of which Zerubbabel came, to the coming of Chriſt; and if Ezra was the writer of this book, as is generally thought, who was cotemporary with Zerubbabel, this account muſt be written by another hand: and it may be obſerved, that it is carried on in the ſame number of generations as in Matthew; and here it ſtands thus: Zerubbabel, Hananiah, Jeſaiah, Rephaiah; Arnan, Obadiah, Shecaniah, Shemaiah, Neariah, Elioenai, Anani; in Matthew thus, Zerubbabel, Abiud, Eliakim, Azor, Sadoc, Achim, Eliud, Eleazar, Matthan, Jacob, Joſeph; the difference in names may be accounted for by their having two names; and it is remarkable that the Targum makes Anani to be the king Meſſiah, who was to be revealed; which, though it makes one generation leſs to his time, yet plainly ſhews that the Jews expected the Meſſiah to come at the end of this genealogy, and about the time Jeſus the true Meſſiah did. Anani is reckoned by other Jews a name of the Meſſiah, who is ſaid to come in the clouds of heaven, which Anani ſignifies, Dan vii. 13. ſee the note there.

CHAP. IV.

IN this chapter is a farther account of the tribe of Judah, and of ſome principal families in it, ℣. 1—23. and of the tribe of Simeon, their families, cities and villages, ℣. 24—38. and of the enlargement of their borders, and conqueſt of the Amalekites, ℣. 39—43.

℣. 1. The ſons of Judah, Pharez, &c.] The poſterity of Judah in the line of Pharez, for he only is mentioned: Hezron, and Carmi, and Hur, and Shobal; Hezron was the ſon of Pharez, and Carmi is ſuppoſed to be Chelubai, or Caleb the ſon of Hezron; and Hur the ſon of Caleb; and Shobal was the ſon of the ſecond Caleb, the ſon of Hur; ſee ch. ii. 5, 9, 19, 50.

℣. 2. And Reaiah the ſon of Shobal begat Jahath, &c.] Reaiah is the ſame with Haroeh, ch. ii. 52. the names are of the ſame ſignification: and Jahath begat Ahumai, and Lahad, theſe are the families of the Zorathite; who inhabited Zoreah, as the Targum, at leaſt part of it; ſee ch. ii. 53, 54.

℣. 3. And theſe were of the father of Etam, &c.] Or of the prince of Etam; or, as the Targum, theſe are princes that dwelt in Etam, a place not far from Zorah, Judg. xv. 8. and is mentioned with Bethlehem and Tekoa in the tribe of Judah, 2 Chron. xi. 6. namely, which follow: Jezreel, and Iſhma, and Idbaſh; theſe were the ſons of the governor of Etam: and the name of their ſiſter was Hazelelponi;

[u] In Luc. 3.

Hazelelponi; who perhaps was a perſon of great note in thoſe days, though now unknown; indeed, a Jewiſh chronologer [w] tells us, that the mother of Samſon was Hazalelponith, of the tribe of Judah.

℣. 4. And Penuel the father of Gedor, &c.] The prince of that place, according to ſome, and the ſame with Hareph, ch. ii. 51. and Ezer the father of Huſhah; thought to be the ſame with Shuah, ℣. 11. theſe are the ſons of Hur, the firſt-born of Ephratah; Caleb's wife, ch. ii. 19. the Targum adds, the ſame with Miriam; and ſo other Jewiſh writers [x] ſay, Miriam had two names, and one was Ephratah; though Joſephus makes [y] Hur to be her huſband, and not her ſon, as here: who was the father of Bethlehem; of the inhabitants of that city, at leaſt part of them, or prince of that place, as his grandſon Salma alſo was, ch. ii. 51.

℣. 5. And Aſhur the father of Tekoa, &c.] A ſon of Hezron by Abiah, ch. ii. 24. had two wives, Helah and Naarah; as Lamech had, polygamy not being reckoned unlawful in thoſe times.

℣. 6. And Naarah bare him Ahuzam, and Hepher, and Temeni, and Ahaſhtari, &c.] Of whom we have no account elſewhere: theſe were the ſons of Naarah; the ſecond wife of Aſhur.

℣. 7. And the ſons of Helah, &c.] The other wife: were Zereth, and Zoar, and Ethnan.] No where elſe mentioned.

℣. 8. And Coz, &c.] Another ſon of Helah, and brother of the fore-mentioned: begat Anub, and Zobebah; of whom we no where elſe read: and the families of Aharhel, the ſon of Harum; theſe were of the poſterity of Coz; the Targum is, "and the family of Aharhal, this is Hur, the firſt-born of Miriam;" which is not at all probable.

℣. 9. And Jabez was more honourable than his brethren, &c.] The Targum adds, "and wiſer in the law than his brethren;" or he might be a man of great wealth and riches, or of great ſtrength and courage, all which make a man honourable; or he may be ſo called, becauſe a praying man, as follows, a man of devotion and religion, a man of God, ſee 1 Sam. ix. 6. but who he was is not eaſy to ſay, probably a ſon or brother of Harum, or however that belonged to one of the families of Aharhel, mentioned in the preceding verſe; for that he was Othniel, as ſay the Targumiſt and other Jewiſh writers [z], is not probable, and beſides is after ſpoken of diſtinct from him, ℣. 13. and his mother called his name Jabez, ſaying, becauſe I bare him with ſorrow; either with ſorrow for her huſband, being dead, or by reaſon of very ſharp pains ſhe endured at the birth of him; he was another Benoni.

℣. 10. And Jabez called on the God of Iſrael, &c.] Or prayed to him, as the Targum; though ſome underſtand it as a vow, promiſing what he would do if God would do thus and thus for him; the Syriac and Arabic verſions read in the third perſon, taking it to be what others, his parents and friends, wiſhed for him, let him bleſs thee, &c. but they are doubtleſs his own words, and a ſupplication of his to the Lord: ſaying, oh that thou wouldeſt bleſs me indeed; the Targum adds, with children; but he no doubt prayed for greater bleſſings than any outward or temporal ones are, even ſpiritual bleſſings, covenant-bleſſings, the ſure mercies of David, which are ſolid, ſubſtantial, durable and irreverſible: and enlarge my coaſt; the Targum is, "multiply my borders with diſciples." It may be underſtood of an enlargement of the borders of his country, by expelling the Canaanites that might dwell in it, and of an increaſe of his wordly ſubſtance for good ends and purpoſes; or rather of a ſpiritual enlargement by deliverance from ſpiritual enemies, and of grace as to exerciſe; and particularly of ſpiritual light and knowledge, and of the affections and deſires of the ſoul after divine things, ſee Pſ. iv. 1. and cxix. 32. 1 Kings iv. 29. 2 Cor. vi. 11, 12. and that thine hand might be with me; the Targum adds, in buſineſs, proſpering and ſucceeding him; the ſenſe may be, that his hand of providence might be with him to protect him, of grace and love to comfort and help him in every time of need, of wiſdom to direct him, and of power to keep him: and that thou wouldſt keep me from evil; from the evil of affliction, and eſpecially from the evil of ſin, and from the evil one ſatan, and from all evil men and evil company; the Targum is, "and make me companions ſuch as I am:" that it may not grieve me; alluding to his name Jabez, which he had from the ſorrow and grief of his mother; and nothing is more grieving to a good man than the evil of ſin, ſo contrary to the nature and will of God, being committed againſt a God of infinite love, grace and mercy, whereby the name, ways and truths of Chriſt are diſhonoured, and the Spirit of God grieved, and ſaints are bereaved of much comfort; and therefore deſire to be kept from it, knowing they cannot keep themſelves, but the Lord can and will, at leaſt from the tyranny of it, and deſtruction by it: the Targum is, "leſt the evil figment (or corruption of nature) ſhould move or provoke me:" and God granted him that which he requeſted; as he does whatever is aſked in faith, according to his will, and will make for his glory, and the good of his people; ſee 1 John v. 14, 15.

℣. 11. And Chelub the brother of Shuah begat Mehir, &c.] If Shuah is the ſame with Huſhah, ℣. 4. then Chelub was the ſon of Ezer: which was the father of Eſhton; not the prince of a place called Eſhton, as Vatablus; for it is the name of a man, the ſon of Mehir, and who in the next verſe is ſaid to beget ſons.

℣. 12. And Eſhton begat Beth-rapha, &c.] Or the family of Rapha: and Paſeah, and Tehinnah the father of Ir-nahaſh; or the city of Nahaſh; Tehinnah ſeems to have been the prince or governor of a city, ſo called: theſe are the men of Rechah; theſe ſons of Eſhton dwelt in a place called Rechah; the Targum, without any reaſon, ſays, theſe are the men of the great Sanhedrim.

℣. 13. And the ſons of Kenaz, &c.] Who was either the ſon of Chelub, or of Eſhton: Othniel, and Seraiah; the firſt of theſe is he who is mentioned, Joſh. xv. 17. Judg. i. 13. and iii. 9. and was the firſt judge in Iſrael: and the ſon of Othniel, Hathath; and the next mentioned.

℣. 14. And Meonothai, &c.] Another ſon of Othniel: begat Ophrah; and Seraiah, the brother of Othniel, begat Joab; not David's general, but another of the ſame name, who lived long before him, ſee ch. ii. 54. the father of the valley of Charaſim; of the inhabitants of the valley, or the prince of them, called the valley of craftſmen, Neh. xi. 35. the reaſon of which is here given: for they were craftſmen; that dwelt in it, carpenters and ſmiths, both which the word ſignifies, men that wrought in ſtone, wood and iron.

℣. 15. And the ſons of Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, &c.] Jephunneh is not the ſame with Hezron, as the Targum, but another ſon of Kenaz, hence called led the Kenezite, Joſh. xiv. 6. and brother of Othniel; and Caleb his ſon is the ſame that was ſent one of the ſpies of the land of Canaan by Moſes, ſee Numb. xiii. 6. and xiv. 6. his ſons were Iru, Elah, and Naam; of whom we no were elſe read: and the ſons of Elah, even Kenaz; another Kenaz, or rather it ſhould be read Uknaz; ſo Jarchi and Kimchi.

℣. 16. And the ſons of Jahaleleel, &c.] Who probably was the ſon of Uknaz: Ziph, and Ziphah, Tiria, and Aſareel; there were two cities in the tribe of Judah of the name of Ziph, Joſh. xv. 24, 25. which might be called from theſe men, or from Ziph in ch. ii. 42.

℣. 17. And the ſons of Ezra, &c.] Who was perhaps the ſon of Aſareel, laſt mentioned: Jether, and Mered, and Epher, and Jalon; only one of them, Mered, is after-mentioned: and ſhe bare Miriam; which is not the name of a woman, but of a man, as Kimchi obſerves; and, according to him, his mother was the wife of Mered, which he gathers from the next verſe; though ſhe ſeems to be the wife of Ezra, who bare him other ſons: and Shammai, and Iſhbath the father of Eſhtemoa; a prince of a city in the tribe of Judah, ſo called, Joſh. xv. 50. and xxi. 14.

℣. 18. And his wife Jehudijah, &c.] Another wife of Ezra; or, according to Kimchi, of Mered; a Jeweſs, as the word is by ſome rendered, to diſtinguiſh her from another wife, an Egyptian, in the latter part of the verſe: bare Jered the father of Gedor, and Heber the father of Socho, and Jekuthiel the father of Zanoah; who were princes, as Jarchi ſeems rightly to obſerve; of ſeveral cities of theſe names in the tribe of Judah, as of Gedor, ſee Joſh. xv. 58. of Socoh, ℣. 35, 48. of Zanoah, ℣. 34. the Targum interprets the names of all theſe men of Moſes, whom Pharaoh's daughter brought up; and ſo other Jewiſh writers [a], into which miſtake they were led by what follows: and theſe are the ſons of Bithiah, the daughter of Pharaoh, which Mered took; that is, to wife; this Mered was one of the ſons of Ezra, ℣. 17. the Targum, and other Jewiſh writers [b] ſay, this was Caleb, called Mered, becauſe he rebelled againſt the counſel of the ſpies; but this contradicts their other notion of Jehudijah, or Bithiah, Pharaoh's daughter, whom he married, being the bringer-up of Moſes, ſince Moſes was elder than Caleb; but Bithiah, whom Mered married, was not a daughter of Pharaoh king of Egypt, but of an Iſraelite of this name; her ſons are ſuppoſed to be thoſe in the latter part of ℣. 17.

℣. 19. And the ſons of his wife Hodiah, &c.] Another wife of Mered. Hillerus [c] takes her to be the ſame with Jehudijah, ℣. 18. though ſome [d] take Hodiah to be the name of a man, and read the words, and the ſons of the wife of Hodiah; which wife of Hodiah was the ſiſter of Naham; or rather Achotnaham we render the ſiſter of Naham, is the name of the firſt ſon of Hodiah, as ſome think [e]: the father of Keilah the Garmite; prince of the city of Keilah, in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 44. who ſprung from the family of Garmi: and Eſhtemoa the Maachathite; the father or prince of the inhabitants of Eſhtemoa, another city in the ſame tribe, ſee ℣. 17. who ſprung from Maacha, ſee ch. ii. 48.

℣. 20. And the ſons of Shimon, &c.] Perhaps another ſon of Mered by his laſt wife, or the ſame with Shammai, ℣. 17. were Amnon, and Rinnah, Ben-hanan, and Tilon; no where elſe mentioned: and the ſons of Iſhi; who it may be was the brother of Shimon or Tilon: were Zoheth, and Ben-zoheth; of whom we know no more than their names.

℣. 21. The ſons of Shelah, the ſon of Judah were, &c.] The genealogy of the poſterity of Judah, in the lines of Pharez and Zerah being given, and very largely in that of the former, becauſe of the honour of David, and his kingdom, which ſprang from thence, as Jarchi obſerves, and alſo the king Meſſiah; the writer returns to give an account of his poſterity by Shelah, a ſon he had by the daughter of Shuah, Gen. xxxviii. 2—5. and the only one that had children: which were as follows, Er the father of Lecah; prince of a city of this name in the tribe of Judah; Shelah gave him the name of Er, in memory of his brother, Gen. xxxviii. 3. and Laadah the father of Mareſhah; prince of a city of this name in the ſame tribe, Joſh. xv. 44. and the families of the houſe of them that wrought fine linen, of the houſe of Aſhbea; which laſt clauſe explains what houſe theſe families were of, which ſprang from Shelah, and were employed in making fine linen; the Targum adds, for the garments of kings and prieſts, or for the curtains of the tabernacle, as Jarchi; for not with the Egyptians and Greeks only fine linen was made, but among the Hebrews, as Pauſanias [f] teſtifies.

℣. 22. And Jokim, &c.] The Vulgate Latin verſion is, and he that made the ſun to ſtand; as if Joſhua was meant; and in the Talmud it is [g] ſaid Jokim, this is Joſhua, who confirmed the oath to the Gibeonites; and the Targum here is, "and the prophets of the ſcribes that ſprang from the poſterity of Joſhua;" but Joſhua was of the tribe of Ephraim, and not of Judah; though ſome interpret it of Elimelech, as Lyra obſerves [h], of whom the fable is, that the ſun ſtood ſtill at his prayers, as it did in Joſhua's time, to convert the men of Bethlehem; but Jokim is no doubt the proper name of ſome famous man or family that deſcended from Shelah: and the men of Chozeba; which ſignifies a lye; and the Targum interprets it of the Gibeonites, who lied to Joſhua; but thoſe were Canaanites, and not of the poſterity of Shelah, and tribe of Judah; Chezib or Achzib, a city in the tribe of Judah, very probably is meant, as Kimchi, the very place where Shelah was born, Gen. xxxviii. 5. and where dwelt ſome of his poſterity: and Joaſh and Saraph, who had the dominion in Moab; ſome render the word, which married in Moab; and ſo the Targum interprets it of Mahlon and Chilion, who took wives of the daughters of Moab; but rather it is to be underſtood of ſome who were governors in Moab in the times of David, when Moab was ſubdued by him, 2 Sam. viii. 2. or however were ſuch, who at one time or another, made war with Moab, and overcame them: and Jaſhubi-lehem; which the Targumiſt underſtands of Boaz, prince of the wiſe men of the ſchool of Bethlehem, and the Talmudiſts [i] of Ruth, that dwelt in Bethlehem; and may be interpreted of ſome of the inhabitants of that place which ſprang from Shelah; or rather is the name of a ſingle man famous in his time, tho' not now known: and theſe are antient things; an account of perſons that lived in antient times, and which which the writer of this book gives not on his own knowledge, but by tradition, or rather by inſpiration.

℣. 23. Theſe were the potters, &c.] Or are the potters; the poſterity of thoſe men, who were ſo famous in their day, are now of mean employments: ſome of them made earthen pots; and ſome of them dwelt among plants and hedges; or were employed in planting gardens and orchards, and making fences for them; or, as other think, dwelt in Netaim and Gadara, cities in the tribe of Judah: there they dwelt with the king for his work; to make pots, plant gardens, and ſet hedges for him; either for the king of Judah, or it may be for the king of Babylon, where they were carried captive, and now choſe to remain, doing thoſe ſervile works for the king; without the city in the fields.

℣. 24. The ſons of Simeon, &c.] The account of whom, next to the tribe of Judah, is given before Reuben, becauſe its inheritance lay in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xix. 1. his ſons were Nemuel, the ſame with Jemuel, Gen. xlvi. 10. and Jamin, Jarib, Zerah, and Shaul; who, in the place referred to, is ſaid to be the ſon of a Canaanitiſh woman; and Jarib and Zerah are the ſame with Jachin and Zohar there; and Obed is here omitted, it may be, becauſe he died without iſſue; ſee Numb. xxvi. 12, 13.

℣. 25. Shallum his ſon, &c.] The ſon of Shaul, and Mibſam was the ſon of Shallum, and Miſhma the ſon of Mibſam.

℣. 26. And the ſons of Miſhma, &c.] Theſe were Hamuel, Zacchur, and Shimei.

℣. 27. And Shimei had 16 ſons and ſix daughters, &c.] None of which are mentioned by name: but his brethren had not many children; Hamuel and Zacchur: neither did all their family multiply like to the children of Judah; to ſhew the fruitfulneſs and great increaſe of which tribe, the genealogical account of it, in this and the two preceding chapters, is given.

℣. 28. And they dwelt at Beerſheba, &c.] The poſterity of Simeon; and this and the other places of their habitation are mentioned in the ſame order, and with very little variation of names to the end of ℣. 31. as in Joſh. xix. 2—6. and here, at ℣. 31. it is added, theſe were their cities unto the reign of David; when, according to Kimchi, and other Jewiſh writers, he expelled them from thence, and reſtored them to the tribe of Judah.

℣. 32. And their villages were Etam, and Ain, Rimmon, and Tochen, and Aſhan, five cities.] There are but four mentioned in Joſh. xix. 7. one might be added ſince, or new built, namely, Tochen; theſe, according to Kimchi, were all that remained for them to dwell in, in the times of David; and therefore they were obliged to ſeek out for new ſettlements for themſelves and flocks, as in ℣. 39, &c.

℣. 33. And all their villages that were round about the ſame cities, unto Baal, &c.] The ſame with Baalath-beer, Joſh. xix. 8. theſe were their habitations, and their genealogy; as before deſcribed, until the times of David.

℣. 34—37. And Meſhobach, and Jamlech, &c.] Theſe, with thoſe that follow to the end of ℣. 37. were famous men in the tribe of Simeon, of rank and dignity, and eminent for courage and valour, as the latter part of the chapter teſtifies, though they are no where elſe taken notice of. Jamlech, as Fabritius [k] obſerves, is not very different from Jamblichus, the name of a famous Platonic philoſopher.

℣. 38. Theſe mentioned by their names, were princes in their families, &c.] The principal men of them, heads of their fathers houſes: and the houſe of their fathers increaſed greatly; by them, ſo that they were obliged to ſeek out for new habitations, as follows.

℣. 39. And they went to the entrance of Gedor, &c.] There was a city of this name in the tribe of Judah, ℣. 18. but this ſeems to be farther off, and perhaps is the ſame with Gedaris, mentioned by Strabo [l] along with Azotus and Aſcalon, cities that belonged to the Philiſtines; ſince it was inhabited by the poſterity of Ham, of whom the Philiſtines were, as in the following verſe: even unto the eaſt ſide of the valley; which was near to Gedor, and a ſuitable place: to ſeek paſture for their flocks; their ſheep and goats.

℣. 40. And they found fat paſture and good, &c.] In or near the valley of Gedor: and the land was wide, and quiet, and peaceable; there was room enough for them and their flocks, and they had no enemies on either ſide to diſturb them: for they of Ham had dwelt there of old; either the Canaanites who deſcended from Canaan the ſon of Ham, and had never been expelled from thence; or the Philiſtines, who were a colony of the Egyptians, the poſterity of Ham; and theſe inhabitants being of this curſed race, the Simeonites ſcrupled not to diſpoſſeſs them.

℣. 41. And theſe written by name, &c.] Before in ℣. 34, 35, 36, 37. came in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah; as Dr. Lightfoot [m] thinks, not within the firſt 14 years of his reign, when the Syrian army was abroad, and none durſt peep out, but in his laſt 15 years, when the army was deſtroyed and gone: and ſmote their tents; the tents of thoſe who dwelt there for the ſake of feeding their flocks, and whoſe paſturage the Simeonites wanted: and the habitations that were found there; or the Meunim or Maonites, which the Septuagint verſion here calls Minæans, a people ſometimes mentioned along with the Philiſtines, and others; ſee Judg. x. 11, 12. 1 Chron. xxvi. 6, 7. and deſtroyed them utterly unto this day; to the writing of this book; they had not then recovered their poſſeſſions: and dwelt in their room, becauſe there was paſture there for their flocks; which was the thing they were in ſearch of.

℣. 42. And ſome of them, even of the ſons of Simeon, 500 men went to mount Seir, &c.] In the land of Edom: having for their captains Pelatiah, and Neariah, and Rephaiah, and Uzziel, the ſons of Iſhi; theſe four captains are ſaid, by the ancient Rabbins, to be of the tribe of Manaſſeh, as Kimchi obſerves; ſee ch. v. 24. but as the 500 they were at the head of, were of the ſons of Simeon, the captains no doubt were of the ſame race.

℣. 43. And they ſmote the reſt of the Amalekites that were eſcaped, &c.] That eſcaped the ſword of Saul; though, according to the Jews [n], 100,000 of them were ſlain by him in one day; and of the ſword of David, though he is ſaid not to leave man or woman alive, 1 Sam. xxvii. 8, 9. and dwelt there there unto this day; in the cities of the Amalekites, even of the poſterity of the above; who were ſome of the remnant of Iſrael, that were not carried away by the king of Aſſyria, and who dwelt here after the return of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity, even in the times of Ezra, the writer of this book: ſee 2 Chron. xxxiv. 9.

CHAP. V.

THIS chapter relates the genealogy of the tribes that lived on the other ſide Jordan; of the Reubenites, ℣. 1—10. of the Gadites, ℣. 11—17. of the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, ℣. 23, 24. and of their war with the Hagarites, in conjunction with each other, and their conqueſt of them, ℣. 18—22. and who yet for their ſins were all carried captive by the king of Aſſyria, ℣. 25, 26.

℣. 1. Now the ſons of Reuben the firſt-born of Iſrael, &c.] Are as follow in ℣. 3. where the account begins; for what comes between this and that is in a parentheſis: (for he was the firſt-born; of Jacob by his wife Leah; that muſt be owned, and Jacob allows it, Gen. xlix. 3. and yet the genealogy in this book begins not with him, as might on that account be expected; the reaſon follows: but foraſmuch as he defiled his father's bed; by lying with Bilhah his concubine: his birthright was given unto the ſons of Joſeph the ſon of Iſrael; his beloved ſon by his beloved wife Rachel, and ſo had a double portion given him; his two ſons being equally ranked with the other ſons of Jacob, and became diſtinct tribes, and each had their lot in the land of Canaan, ſee Gen. xlviii. 5. 32. compared with Deut. xxi. 17. and the genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birthright; or, but the genealogy, &c. [o] neither after the birthright of Reuben, which he had by nature, being Jacob's firſt-born; nor after the birthright of Joſeph, which he had by his father's gift, as it might be thought it ſhould; the reaſon of which follows.

℣. 2. For Judah prevailed above his brethren, &c.] That is, the tribe of Judah prevailed above the reſt in number, in valour, and courage, and in dignity; wherefore the genealogy is not reckoned according to birthright, but dignity and dominion; hence this genealogical account began with Judah, becauſe of him came the chief ruler; David and the kings of Judah, his ſucceſſors; and above all, from him the prince Meſſiah was to ſpring, and did, according to Gen. xlix. 10. ſo both the Syriac and Arabic verſions read, "out of Judah ſhould go forth the king Meſſiah:" but the birthright was Joſeph's) or though [p] it was; yet Judah having the dominion and dignity, that tribe is firſt genealogized.

℣. 3. The ſons, I ſay, of Reuben the firſt-born of Iſrael were, Hanoch, and Pallu, Hezron, and Carmi.] As in Gen. xlvi. 9.

℣. 4, 5. The ſons of Joel, &c.] Who was either the ſon of Carmi laſt-mentioned, or rather of Hanoch, Reuben's firſt-born, ſince the deſcendants of him were the princes of the tribe: his poſterity in ſucceſſion were, Shemaiah, Gog, Shimei, Micah, Reaia, Baal, Beerah; of whom we know no more than their names, and by theſe the deſcent is carried down to the captivity by Tiglath-pileſer, as follows.

℣. 6. Beerah his ſon, &c.] The laſt of Joel's poſterity, who, according to the Targum and other Jewiſh writers [q], was a prophet, and the father of Hoſea, ſee Hoſ. i. 1. but neither the name, title, time, nor tribe agree: whom Tilgath-pilneſer king of Aſſyria carried away captive; the ſame with Tiglath-pileſer by a tranſpoſition of letters. 2 Kings xv. 29. and is read the ſame here in the Greek, Syriac, and Arabic verſions: he was prince of the Reubenites; at that time; that is, Beerah was.

℣. 7. And his brethren by their families, &c.] Either the brethren of Beerah, or the reſt of the poſterity of Reuben: (when the genealogy of their generations was reckoned;) either in the times of Jotham and Jeroboam, ℣. 17. or at the time of their captivity, as in the preceding verſe: were the chief, Jehiel, and Zechariah; theſe were the principals or heads of their families.

℣. 8. And Bela the ſon of Azaz, the ſon of Shema, the ſon of Joel, &c.] The pedigree of Bela, another principal man in the tribe of Reuben, is traced up to Joel the father of Shema; the ſame with Shemaiah, according to Kimchi and Ben Melech, ℣. 4. who dwelt in Aroer; which belonged to the tribe of Gad, and was rebuilt by them, Numb. xxxii. 34. wherefore Kimchi obſerves, it may be interpreted either from Aroer, or on the border of it, Bela dwelt: even unto Nebo, and Baal-meon; of which ſee the note on Numb. xxxii. 38.

℣. 9. And eaſtward he inhabited, &c.] Either Bela, or the tribe of Reuben: unto the entring in of the wilderneſs; the wilderneſs of Kedemoth, which was near to Sihon king of Heſhbon, whoſe land the Reubenites inhabited, Deut. ii. 26. from the river Euphrates; a learned man [r] thinks that this river, Phrat, was different from the Euphrates near Babylon, which was northward, ſince this was to the eaſt or ſouth-eaſt: becauſe their cattle were multiplied in the land of Gilead; therefore their habitation was extended farther, even to the river Euphrates, as in the days of David and Solomon, 2 Sam. viii. 3. 1 Kings iv. 21.

℣. 10. And in the days of Saul they made war with the Hagarites, &c.] Not with the Hungarians, as the Targum, a people not then in being; but the Iſhmaelites, ſo called, becauſe they deſcended from Hagar [s], Sarah's maid; the ſame that are placed by Pliny [t] and Ptolemy [u] in Arabia, near the Batanæans, or inhabitants of Baſhan; with thoſe the Reubenites made war, in conjunction with the Gadites and half-tribe of Manaſſeh, ℣. 18, 19. perhaps this war might be much about the time Saul relieved Jabeſh-Gilead, and beat the Ammonites, 1 Sam. xi. by which the tribes on that ſide Jordan might be encouraged to it: who fell by their hand; were worſted and conquered by them: and they dwelt in their tents; in which the Arabians uſed to dwell, becauſe of their flocks; hence ſome of them were called Scenites: throughout all the eaſt-land of Gilead; or rather, throughout all the land of the Hagarites, Hagarites, which lay to the eaſt of Gilead, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; or otherwiſe the land of Gilead itſelf was their original poſſeſſion.

ver. 11. And the children of Gad dwelt over againſt them, &c.] Or by them, the Reubenites; and one part of Gilead was given them between them, and the other to the half-tribe of Manaſſeh: in the land of Baſhan, unto Salcah; for though all Baſhan is ſaid to be given to the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, Deut. iii. 13. yet that is to be underſtood of the greater part of it; all of that which belonged to Og, but what did not, the Gadites, either from the firſt, or in after-times, inhabited even as far as Salcah, which was one of the cities of Og, Deut. iii. 10. and which Benjamin of Tudela [w] makes mention of, being called by the ſame name in his days.

ver. 12. Joel the chief, &c.] In this and the following verſe are reckoned up the principal men in the tribe of Gad, and the chief of all was Joel, another from him in the tribe of Reuben, ver. 4. and Shapham the next; the ſecond chief man, from whom, Reland [x] conjectures, Shophan, a city in the tribe of Gad, had its name, Numb. xxxii. 35. and Jaanai; from whom Dan-jaan might be called, as Michaelis intimates, 2 Sam. xxiv. 6. and Shaphat in Baſhan; not Shaphat the father of Eliſha, according to a tradition of the Jews, mentioned by Kimchi; which is not at all probable.

ver. 13. And their brethren of the houſe of their fathers, &c.] Who were alſo men of eminence and note in them: were, Michael, and Meſhullam, and Shebai, and Jorai, and Jachan, and Zia, and Heber, ſeven; ſo they are as here mentioned by name.

ver. 14. Theſe are the children of Abihail the ſon of Huri, &c.] That is, the ſeven before-mentioned; they were the poſterity of Abihail, whoſe pedigree is traced from his father Huri to Buz, the intermediate progenitors being Jeroah, Gilead, Michael, Jeſhiſhai, Jahdo.

ver. 15. Ahi the ſon of Abdiel, the ſon of Guni, chief of the houſe of their fathers.] Which Ahi was a principal man in the families the ſeven above men belonged to; beſides them, or thoſe three, were every one of them heads of families.

ver. 16. And they dwelt in Gilead, &c.] In that part of it which belonged to the tribe of Gad: in Baſhan, and in her towns; ſee the note on ver. 11. and in all the ſuburbs of Sharon, upon their borders; there were two Sharons, one to the weſt of the land of Iſrael near the Mediterranean ſea, which is mentioned in Acts ix. 35. as near Lydda and Joppa; and the other to the eaſt or north-eaſt, beyond Jordan, which is here meant.

ver. 17. All theſe were reckoned by genealogies, &c.] All before mentioned: in the days of Jotham king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam king of Iſrael; not that thoſe two kings reigned at the ſame time, and one and the ſame reckoning is meant; but, as Dr. Lightfoot [y] obſerves, there were two reckonings; his words are, "in the days of Jotham there was an account taken of the families of Reuben, Gad, and half Manaſſeh, 1 Chron. v. 17. and ſo had there been in the days of Jeroboam the ſecond; then at their reſtoring by Jeroboam out of the hands of Hamath and Syria, and now at their arming againſt the Aſſyrian, under whom they fell in the time of Pekah, and are never again reſtored to Iſrael."

ver. 18. The ſons of Reuben, and the Gadites, and half the tribe of Manaſſeh, &c.] Theſe all joined together, living together on the other ſide Jordan. of valiant men, men able to bear buckler and ſword, and to ſhoot with bow, and ſkilful in war; ſtrong, able-bodied men; and not only able to bear and carry arms, ſword in one hand, and ſhield in another; but were men of valour and courage, and had military ſkill, and knew how to handle their arms to advantage: were 44,760, that went out to the war; that uſed to go out when there was occaſion, and did at this time.

ver. 19. And they made war with the Hagarites, &c.] Before-mentioned, ver. 10. with Jetur, and Nephiſh; with the poſterity of theſe men, who were ſons of Iſhmael, Gen. xxv. 15. and ſo was Nodab; perhaps the ſame with Kedemah, mentioned along with the other two there; ſo Hillerus [z] thinks.

ver. 20. And they were helped againſt them, &c.] The Iſraelites were helped againſt the Iſhmaelites, to fight with them, and overcome them; either by their brethren of the houſe of Iſrael, as the Targum, thoſe on this ſide Jordan; or rather by the Lord, to whom they cried, and who was intreated by them as follows: and the Hagarites were delivered into their hand, and all that were with them; they and their confederates and auxiliaries, the Ituræans, &c. for they cried to God in the battle; which at firſt ſeems to have gone againſt them; and they prayed to God, as the Targum, whilſt they were fighting, that he would appear for them, and give them victory: and he was intreated of them; he received their prayer, as the ſame paraphraſe; he heard them, and anſwered them: becauſe they put their truſt in him; in his power and providence, and not in their own ſtrength, courage, and military ſkill; the Targum is, "becauſe they truſted in his Word."

ver. 21. And they took away their cattle, &c.] Which they brought with them, and they found in their camp when they fled, or in their fields: of their camels 50,000; with which Arabia abounded, and were fit to travel with in thoſe hot and deſart countries, being ſtrong to carry burdens, and able to bear much thirſt. The Arabians, as Diodorus Siculus [a] reports, brought up camels, for almoſt all the uſes of life; as for the ſake of their milk and fleſh to feed upon, as well as for carrying burdens in common; and which in time of war they loaded with proviſions for the army, and fought upon, one of them carrying two archers with their backs to each other, the one to meet the enemy in front, the other to annoy thoſe that purſued them; and ſo the Parthians made uſe of camels both to fight on, and to carry proviſion for their ſoldiers [b]: and of ſheep 250,000; which theſe Hagarites kept both for food and clothing, and ſome of them might be now taken with them to ſupply their army; the Spartans carried ſheep with them in their expeditions as ſacrifices to their gods [c]; but it need not be ſuppoſed that theſe creatures, and thoſe that follow, were in ſuch large numbers with the Hagarites in the battle, but were afterwards found, partly in their camp, and partly in the places inhabited by them: and of aſſes 2000; uſed to ride on, and carry loads, and alſo to plow with; and in all theſe lay the wealth of men in thoſe times and countries, ſee Job i. 1. and of men 100,000; ſo that they took captive above as many more as their army conſiſted of.

ver. 22. For there fell down many ſlain, &c.] Many were were killed in the battle, beſides the great number of priſoners made, ſo that the army the Iſhmaelites brought into the field was very great: becauſe the war was of God; or from the Word of the Lord, as the Targum; he ſtirred up the Iſraelites to it, directed, aſſiſted and ſucceeded them, that vengeance might be taken on this wicked and idolatrous people: and they dwelt in their ſtead until the captivity; the Targum adds, of Sennacherib king of Aſſyria; but this captivity of the tribes referred to was not by him, but by Tilgath-pilneſer king of Aſſyria, ℣. 26. and they dwelt not in the country of the Arab-hagarites or Iſhmaelites in their ſtead there, but in Gilead, as in ℣. 10. which belonged to the Gadites and Reubenites originally, but had been diſpoſſeſſed of it, or however diſtreſſed in it by theſe Hagarites, which they now drove out, and dwelt in their ſtead; for as for the Scenite-arabs or Iſhmaelites, they never were conquered and brought into ſubjection by any people, but always maintained their independency [d]; and lived upon the plunder of their neighbours, pitching their tents here and there for their conveniency, which in theſe parts were at this time ſpoiled.

℣. 23. And the children of the half-tribe of Manaſſeh dwelt in the land, &c.] Not in the land of the Hagarites, but in the land of Gilead and Baſhan beyond Jordan, given them by Moſes. The writer having reckoned the genealogies of ſome of the principal men of Reuben and Gad, proceeds to give a ſhort account of ſome principal men in this half-tribe: they increaſed from Baſhan; where they firſt ſettled, and extended their poſſeſſions: unto Baal-hermon and Senir, and unto mount Hermon; mountains which lay to the north of the land of Canaan, and are what geographers call Anti-libanus.

℣. 24. And theſe were the heads of the houſe of their fathers, &c.] Some of the principal men of this half-tribe: even Epher, and Iſhi, and Eliel, and Azriel, and Jeremiah, and Hodaviah, and Jahdiel; but of none of theſe we read elſewhere, excepting Hepher and Azriel, Numb. xxvi. 31, 32. mighty men of valour, famous men, and heads of the houſe of their fathers; men that obtained a name for their ſtrength, courage, and valour, and military exploits, and were the chiefs of the families in this half-tribe, and by whom they were denominated; ſo from Hepher were the family of the Hepherites, and from Azriel the family of the Azrielites, as in the place before quoted.

℣. 25. And they tranſgreſſed againſt the God of their fathers, &c.] Againſt his law, will, word and ordinances, not only the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, but the Reubenites and Gadites alſo: and went a whoring after the gods of the people of the land, whom God deſtroyed before them; that is, committed idolatry, which is ſpiritual fornication or whoredom; worſhipped the idols either of the Amorites, who were deſtroyed by the Lord to make way for their firſt ſettlement; or of the Iſhmaelites whom they conquered, and whoſe land they dwelt in to the captivity.

℣. 26. And the God of Iſrael, &c.] The Targum is, "the Word of the God of Iſrael:" ſtirred up the ſpirit of Pul king of Aſſyria; in the times of Menahem king of Iſrael: and the ſpirit of Tilgath-pilneſer; in the times of Pekah king of Iſrael, to invade the land, and make war in it: and he carried them away: not the former, but the latter: even the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh; theſe entirely together, with ſome other parts of the land, ſee 2 Kings xv. 29. and brought them unto Halah, and Habor, and Hara, and to the river Gozan; to the very ſame places where afterwards Salmaneſer carried the 10 tribes, or what remained of them, ſee 2 Kings xvii. 6. unto this day; the times of Ezra, the writer of this book, after the tribe of Judah returned from the captivity of Babylon; but the 10 tribes remained where they were carried, and have not returned even to this day.

CHAP. VI.

THIS chapter begins with the fathers and heads of the tribe of Levi, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and reckons up the high-prieſts in the line of Eleazar, to the Babyloniſh captivity, ℣. 4—15. gives an account of the families of the ſons of Levi, ℣. 16—30. and of thoſe Levites that were employed as ſingers, and in other miniſtrations in the ſanctuary in the times of David and Solomon, ℣. 31—49. then follows a repetition of the ſons of Aaron in the line of Eleazar, to the ſaid times, ℣. 50—53. and a recital of the dwelling-places of the Levites in the ſeveral tribes, ℣. 54—81.

℣. 1. The ſons of Levi, &c.] After an account of the chief of the tribes of Judah and Simeon, of Reuben, Gad, and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, follows that of Levi, and his poſterity; the kingdom being given to Judah, the birth-right to Joſeph, and the prieſthood to Levi: the immediate ſons of Levi were Gerſhon, Kohath, and Merari; as in Gen. xlvi. 11. Exod. vi. 16. from theſe ſprung the three families of the Levites.

℣. 2. And the ſons of Kohath, Amram, Izhar, and Hebron, and Uzziel, &c.] Given in the ſame order as in Exod. vi. 18. ſee the note there.

℣. 3. And the children of Amram, Aaron, and Moſes, and Miriam, &c.] Very memorable perſons; Aaron was the high-prieſt, Moſes the prophet and lawgiver, and Miriam a propheteſs, ſee Micah vi. 4. the ſons alſo of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar; the two firſt were deſtroyed by fire from heaven for offering ſtrange fire, Lev. x. 1, 2. and the third ſucceeded his father in the high prieſthood; the line of which is drawn from Aaron through him unto the Babyloniſh captivity, from hence, to the end of the 15th verſe, where it ends: Jehozadak is the ſame with Joſedech, Hagg. i. 1. who went young into Babylon, and whoſe ſon Joſhua, born in the captivity, came out of it on the proclamation of Cyrus, Ezra ii. 2. and iii. 2. According to Joſephus [e], and other Jewiſh writers [f], in the times of Uzzi, ℣. 6. the prieſthood was tranſlated into the family of Ithamar, of which Eli was the firſt high-prieſt; where it continued to the times of Solomon, when it was reſtored to Zadok of the line of Eleazar.

zar. It is particularly obſerved of Azariah, ℣. 10. that he it was that executed the prieſt's office in the temple built by Solomon; not that he was the firſt that officiated in it; that was Zadok; but this ſeems to be Aazariah, who was the high-prieſt in the times of Uzziah, who oppoſed him when he would have offered incenſe in the temple, 2 Chron. xxvi. 17, 18. which may be the reaſon why he is ſo particularly taken notice of here; tho' ſome think this is to be underſtood of Johanan, the father of Azariah, ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Jehoiada, who in the times of Athaliah, was the inſtrument of preſerving both church and ſtate, 2 Kings xi. the temple in which he miniſtred, is deſcribed as built by Solomon, becauſe at the time of the writing of this there was another temple built, or building by Zerubbabel.

℣. 16. The ſons of Levi, Gerſhon, Kohath, and Merari.] Which is repeated from ℣. 1. for the ſake of their poſterity, whoſe names are given in the three following verſes, in the ſame manner as in Exod. vi. 17—19.

℣. 20, 21. Of Gerſhon, Libni his ſon, &c.] Whoſe genealogy runs thus, Jahath, called Jehiel, ch. xxiii. 8. Zimmah, between whom was Shimei, ℣. 42. Joah, the ſame with Ethan, ℣. 42. Iddo, called Adaiah, ℣. 41. Zerah, Jeaterai, whoſe name was alſo Ethni, ℣. 41. the poſterity of Shimei, the brother of Libni, are omitted.

℣. 22—28. The ſons of Kohath, Amminadab, &c.] The ſame with Izhar, ℣. 2, 18, 38. the poſterity of his brethren, Amram, Hebron and Uzziel are omitted; and his genealogy is carried to a conſiderable length, for the ſake of Samuel the prophet, who ſprang from him: it ſtands thus, Korah, Aſſir, Elkanah, Ebiaſaph, Aſſir, Tahath, Uriel, called Zephaniah, ℣. 36. Uzziah, the ſame with Azariah, ℣. 36. Shaul, whoſe name is Joel, ℣. 36. then through the ſons of Elkanah, before mentioned, Amaſai, Ahimoth, called Mahath, ℣. 35. another Elkanah, Zophai, or Zuph, ℣. 35. Nahath, the ſame with Toah, ℣. 34. and Tohu, 1 Sam. i. 1. Eliab, called Eliel, ℣. 34. and Elihu, 1 Sam. i. 1. Jeroham, another Elkanah, the father of Samuel the prophet, whoſe firſt-born was Vaſhni, and whoſe name alſo was Joah, ℣. 33. 1 Sam. viii. 2. and ſo here it is read in the Syriac and Arabic verſions; and his ſecond ſon Abiah.

℣. 29, 30. The ſons of Merari, Mahli, &c.] The poſterity of his brother Muſhi are omitted; his genealogy is drawn thus, Libni, Shimei, Uzza, Shimea, Haggiah, Aſaiah.

℣. 31. And theſe are they, &c.] Who follow; the account of whom begins ℣. 33. whom David ſet over the ſervice of the ſong in the houſe of the Lord; whom he appointed chief muſicians, and maſters of the chorus, to manage and conduct that part of divine ſervice in the ſanctuary, ſinging the praiſes of God, both with vocal and inſtrumental muſick: after the ark had reſt; which was when it was brought from the houſe of Obed-edom, to the city of David, and was placed in a tabernacle he provided for it, 2 Sam. vi. 12—17. where it remained until the temple was built, when and which was the only time it was removed, whereas before it had been removed from place to place, and ſo till now had no reſt; though ſome underſtand this of the ceaſing or ſilence of the oracle over the ark, which was neither conſulted by Solomon, and his ſucceſſors, nor any of the high-prieſts afterwards [g].

℣. 32. And they miniſtred before the dwelling-place of the tabernacle of the congregation with ſinging, &c.] Pſalms, hymns and ſpiritual ſongs; this ſervice they performed before the ark, which was in a tent or tabernacle David pitched for it; and which the Targum here calls the tabernacle of time, or a temporary tabernacle: until Solomon had built the houſe of the Lord in Jeruſalem; the temple there: and then they waited on their office according to their order; performed it in the manner preſcribed by David, ſee ch. xxv.

℣. 33—38. And theſe are they that waited with their children, &c.] They and their poſterity who officiated in the ſervice of ſinging pſalms in the ſanctuary: the three heads of them were of the three families of the Levites, as follow: of the ſons of the Kohathites, Heman a ſinger; the chief of the ſingers, and who compoſed pſalms and hymns, which are in the book of pſalms: the ſon of Joel, the ſon of Shemuel; or Samuel. This Heman was grandſon of Samuel the prophet; for whoſe ſake his genealogy is traced up to Jacob or Iſrael, in the following verſes, and ſtands thus; after Samuel, Elkanah, Jeroham, Eliel, Toah, Zuph, Elkanah, Mahath, Amaſai, Elkanah, Joel, Azariah, Zephaniah, Tahath, Aſſir, Ebiaſaph, Korah, Izhar, Kohath, Levi, Iſrael.

℣. 39—43. And his brother Aſaph, &c.] That is, Heman's brother; ſo Aſaph was, as he was a deſcendant from the ſame original anceſtor Levi, yet in the line of Gerſhon; and as being of the ſame office, a precentor, or chief ſinger: who ſtood on his right hand; he was next to Heman; Heman ſtood in the middle, which was the moſt honourable [h], and Aſaph on his right-hand, and Ethan, after mentioned on his left; even Aſaph, whoſe name is often met with in the book of Pſalms; and his genealogy here ſtands thus, as traced up to Levi, viz. Berechiah, Shimea, Michael, Baaſiah, Malchiah, Ethni, Zerah, Adaiah, Ethan, Zimmah, Shimei, Jahath, Gerſhon, Levi.

℣. 44—47. And their brethren, the ſons of Merari, &c.] Who were the brethren of the Kohathites and Gerſhonites, deſcending from the ſame anceſtor Levi: ſtood on the left-hand; that is, of Heman, ſee ℣. 39. the chief of whom was Ethan, ſometimes called Jeduthun, ch. xvi. 41. and xxv. 1, 3, 6. and often in the book of pſalms; his genealogy is traced up to Levi thus; Kiſhi, called Kuſhaiah, ch. xv. 17. Abdi, Malluch, Haſhabiah, Amaziah, Hilkiah, Amzi, Bani, Shamer, Mahli, Muſhi, Merari, Levi.

℣. 48. Their brethren alſo the Levites, &c.] Who were not ſkilled in ſinging, and employed in that ſervice, even the reſt of the Kohathites, Gerſhonites and Merarites: were appointed unto all manner of ſervice of the tabernacle of the houſe of God; ſome were porters at the gates; others had the care of the veſſels; others ſlew the beaſts for ſacrifices, ſtead them, and cut them up, and brought the pieces to the altar of burnt-offerings, for the prieſts to offer.

℣. 49—53. But Aaron and his ſons, &c.] Thoſe that deſcended from him, though of the ſame tribe of Levi were all prieſts: and they offered upon the altar of burnt-offerings; the daily ſacrifice, and all the offerings of the people brought to them:

them: and on the altar of incenſe; they burnt incenſe night and morning: and were appointed for all the work of the place moſt holy; ſuch as were high-prieſts of the line of Eleazar, whoſe work it was to go into the moſt holy place once a year: to make atonement for all Iſrael, according to all that Moſes the ſervant of God commanded; in Lev. xvi. which ſee; and on mention of this, a liſt of the high-prieſts from Aaron, in the line of Eleazar, is given, to the times of Solomon, in the four following verſes, juſt in the ſame order as in ℣. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

℣. 54—81. Now theſe are their dwelling-places, &c.] The dwelling-places of the prieſts and Levites, aſſigned and given to them in the ſeveral tribes of Iſrael; and the account of them agrees with that in Joſh. xxi. with ſome few variations of names of places, which have been there obſerved; ſee the notes there; only in ℣. 57—60. two cities are omitted, Juttah and Gibeon, through want of care in tranſcribing, ſince they are ſaid to be thirteen, as they ſhould be, whereas eleven only are mentioned. The Jews ſay [h], the cities of the ſuburbs, (thoſe here mentioned) ceaſed from the time the firſt temple was deſtroyed; and yet Ezra, who lived after the captivity, and the building the ſecond temple, here gives a very particular account of them; the ſuburbs belonging to every city, which he particularly mentions, were 2000 cubits, both to the cities of refuge, and the reſt, Numb. xxxv. 5. Hebron, the firſt city mentioned in the next verſe, was a city of refuge, and had ſuburbs of ſuch a ſpace; and it is remarkable, that ſome of the temples with the heathens, which were aſylums, or places of refuge, had the ſpace of 2000 paces aſſigned them for the ſame ſanctity and privilege [i].

CHAP. VII.

IN this chapter are given the genealogies of the tribes of Iſſachar, ℣. 1—5. of Benjamin, ℣. 6—12. of Naphtali, ℣. 13. of Manaſſeh, ℣. 14—19. of Ephraim, ℣. 20—29. and of Aſher, 30—40. even of the chief men of them; and their numbers, are reckoned as in the times of David. The tribes of Dan and Zebulun are omitted.

℣. 1. Now the ſons of Iſſachar were Tola, Puah, Jaſhub, and Shimron, four] The ſame number is given, Gen. xlvi. 13. with a ſmall variation of two of their names, there called Phuvah and Job, from whence ſo many families ſprang, mentioned Numb. xxvi. 23, 24. where the names are the ſame as here.

℣. 2. And the ſons of Tola, &c.] The eldeſt ſon of Iſſachar, whoſe poſterity are only reckoned by name: Uzzi and Rephaiah, and Jeriel, and Jahmai, and Ibſam, and Shemuel, heads of their father's houſe, to wit, of Tola; the principal man of his family: they were valiant men of might in their generations; famous for their courage and military exploits, though they ſprang from Tola, whoſe name ſignifies a worm; and which name Bochart [k] conjectures was given him by his parents, becauſe he was ſo weakly that they had no hopes of raiſing him; and yet from him ſprung ſuch mighty men, and from them ſuch a numerous race, as follows: whoſe number was in the days of David 22,600; beſides thoſe of the poſterity of Uzzi, after mentioned. This was at the time Joab took the number of Iſrael, by the order of David, ch. xxi. 5.

℣. 3. And the ſons of Uzzi, Izrahiah, &c.] Including his poſterity: and the ſons of Izrahiah, Michael, and Obadiah, and Joel, Iſhiah, five; together with their father, all reckoned the ſons of Uzzi: all of them chief men; in their father's houſe, heads of families.

℣. 4. And with them, by their generations, after the houſe of their fathers were bands of ſoldiers for war, &c.] Companies of men of military courage and ſkill, who could and did go out to war upon occaſion: 36,000 men; beſides the 22,600 Tolaites, ℣. 2. for they had many wives and ſons; having many wives, they had many ſons; polygamy was the cauſe of their large numbers; and that they gave into for the ſake of the multiplication of Abraham's ſeed, according to the divine promiſe.

℣. 5. And their brethren among all the families of Iſſachar, &c.] As thoſe of Puah, Jaſhub, and Shimron, ℣. 1. were men of might; valiant and courageous: reckoned in all by their genealogies, 87,000; that is, including with theſe thoſe of Tola and Uzzi before given.

℣. 6. The ſons of Benjamin, Bela, and Becher, and Jediael, three.] Benjamin had ten ſons, but three only are mentioned firſt; the latter of theſe ſeems to be the ſame with Aſhbel, Gen. xlvi. 21.

℣. 7. And the ſons of Bela, Ezbon, and Uzzi, and Uzziel, and Jerimoth, and Iri, five, &c.] Theſe are thought by ſome to be the grandſons of Bela, becauſe of the different names in ch. viii. 3, 4, 5. heads of the houſe of their fathers, mighty men of valour; principal men in their tribe and families, and of great courage: and were reckoned by their genealogies, 22,034; who ſprung from theſe men.

℣. 8. And the ſons of Becher, &c.] Another ſon of Benjamin, ℣. 6. Zemira, and Joaſh, and Eliezer, and Elioenai, and Omri, and Jerimoth, and Abiah, and Anathoth, and Alameth; the two laſt of theſe, according to Kimchi, gave names to two cities in Benjamin, built by them; Anathoth, the native place of Jeremiah the prophet, and Alameth, the ſame with Bahurim, 2 Sam. xvi. 5. all theſe are the ſons of Becher; before named.

℣. 9. And the number of them, &c.] Of the poſterity of the ſons of Becher: after their genealogy by their generations, heads of the houſe of their fathers, mighty men of valour; as they increaſed in ſucceeding ages, and at the time of David: was 20,200.

℣. 10. The ſons alſo of Jediael, &c.] The third ſon of Benjamin before mentioned, ℣. 6. Bilhan, including his poſterity, as follows: and the ſons of Bilhan, Jeuſh, and Benjamin; called ſo after his great grandfather: and Ehud; who was the ſecond judge in Iſrael, Judg. iii. 15. and Chenaanah, and Zethan, and Tharſhiſh, and Ahiſhahar; of whom we no where elſe read.

℣. 11. All theſe the ſons of Jediael, by the heads of their fathers, mighty men of valour, were 17,200, fit to go out for war and battle.] Which, with the above ſums put together, make of the tribe of of Benjamin, beſides what follow, 59,430; who, if numbered by Joab, the account was not given in by him, ch. xxi. 6.

℣. 12. Shuppim alſo, and Huppim, the children of Ir, &c.] The ſame with Iri, ℣. 7. ſo that theſe were not ſons of Benjamin, as they ſeem to be, if they are the ſame with Muppim and Huppim in Gen. xlvi. 21. but his great grand-children, and are the ſame with Shupham and Hupham, from whom families of the tribe of Benjamin ſprang, Numb. xxvi. 39. the Targum calls them the inhabitants of a city, but of what is not ſaid, unleſs Geba ſhould be meant, ch viii. 6. and Huſhim, the ſons of Aher; either the ſame with Aherah, the third ſon of Benjamin, ch. viii. 1. or Ahiram, Numb. xxvi. 38. though ſome read the words, the ſons of another, whom they ſuppoſe to be Dan, who otherwiſe is omitted; and Huſhim is the only ſon of Dan, Gen. xlvi. 23. where the ſame plural word is uſed as here; who, they think, is called another, by way of deteſtation, that tribe being guilty of groſs idolatry; but he rather ſeems to belong to Benjamin.

℣. 13. The ſons of Naphtali; Jahziel, and Guni, and Jezer, and Shallum, &c.] Called Shillem, Gen. xlvi. 24. the ſons of Bilhah; Jacob's concubine; her grandſons; for Naphtali, the father of them, was her ſon; from theſe ſprung ſo many families after their names, Numb. xxvi. 48, 49.

℣. 14. The ſons of Manaſſeh; Aſhriel, whom ſhe bare, &c.] The wife of Manaſſeh, as diſtinguiſhed from his concubine in the next clauſe; though the Targum reads, in connexion with that, "whom his Aramiteſs (or Syrian) concubine bare;" and then adds, who alſo bare Machir the father of Gilead; ſo that Aſhriel and Machir were brethren; from which Aſhriel ſprang the family of the Aſhrielites, Numb. xxxvi. as from Machir the Machirites, Numb. xxvi. 29, 31.

℣. 15. And Machir took to wife the ſiſter of Huppim and Shuppim, whoſe ſiſter's name was Maachah, &c.] He married into the tribe of Benjamin, a ſiſter of the perſons mentioned, ℣. 12. whoſe name was Maachah: and the name of the ſecond was Zelophehad; the ſecond ſon of Manaſſeh, or of his poſterity mentioned; for he was not his immediate ſon; for he was the ſon of Hepher, the ſon of Gilead, the ſon of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, Numb. xxvii. 1. and Zelophehad had daughters; but no ſons, the names of his daughters are given, Numb. xxvi. 33. and xxvii. 1. and xxxvi. 11. Joſh. xvii. 3.

℣. 16. And Maachah the wife of Machir bare a ſon, and ſhe called his name Pereſh; and the name of his brother was Shereſh, &c.] He had both theſe ſons by her: and his ſons were Ulam, and Rakem; that is, either the ſons of Pereſh or Shereſh, the neareſt, as Kimchi obſerves.

℣. 17. And the ſons of Ulam, Bedan, &c.] See 1 Sam. xii. 11. theſe were the ſons of Gilead, the ſon of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh; that is, were of his poſterity, or belonged to his family; for Ulam and Rakem were ſons of a brother of Gilead, ℣. 16.

℣. 18. And his ſiſter Hammoleketh, &c.] The ſiſter of Gilead ſo named; though the Targum renders it that reigned; and ſo Kimchi, that reigned in ſome part of Gilead; and the Vulgate Latin verſion tranſlates it, a queen bare Iſhod, and Abiezer, and Mahalah; Abiezer is the ſame with Jeezer, from whom a family ſprung of that name, Numb. xxvi. 30. Joſh. xvii. 2. of which Gideon was, Judg. vi. 11. 15.

℣. 19. And the ſons of Shemida, &c.] Another ſon of Gilead's ſiſter, unleſs the ſame with Iſhod; from him ſprang the family of the Shemidaites, Numb. xxvi. 32. were, Ahian, and Shechem, and Likhi, and Aniam; from Shechem came the family of the Shechemites, as from Likhi, if he is the ſame with Helek, as probably he may be, was the family of the Helekites, Numb. xxvi. 30, 31.

℣. 20. And the ſons of Ephraim, &c.] A ſon of Joſeph, and father of a tribe of this name, whoſe genealogy through five generations follows: Shuthelah, Bered, Tahath, Eladah, Tahath; the ſecond.

℣. 21. And Zabad his ſon, &c.] Not the ſon of Tahath the ſecond laſt-mentioned, but the ſon of Ephraim, a ſecond ſon of his: and Shuthelah; his ſon, the ſon of Zabad, called after his uncle's name, ℣. 20. and Ezer, and Elead; two other ſons of Zabad: whom the men of Gath that were born in that land ſlew; that is, Zabad and his three ſons; theſe the men of Gath ſlew, who were Philiſtines that dwelt there, and were originally of Egypt, and were born in that land, but had removed into Paleſtine, which had its name from them, of which Gath was one of its cities; and this bordering upon the land of Goſhen, or being near it, where the Iſraelites dwelt, they made inroads upon them, and plundered them: becauſe they came down to take away their cattle; and the ſons, the grandſons of Ephraim, reſiſted them, and ſo were ſlain: and that the aggreſſors were not the Ephraimites, who went out of Egypt before their time, and fell upon the men of Gath, born in the land of the Philiſtines, in order to diſpoſſeſs them of their land and ſubſtance, and were ſlain by them, which is the ſenſe of the Targum and other writers, both Jewiſh and chriſtian; but the men of Gath, as is clear from this circumſtance, that they came down, as men did, when they went from Paleſtine to Egypt, not when they went from Egypt to Paleſtine, then they went up; which would have been the phraſe uſed, if this had been an expedition of the Ephraimites into Paleſtine; beſides, it is not reaſonable to think, that the Ephraimites, addicted to huſbandry and cattle, and not uſed to war, ſhould engage in ſuch an enterprize; but rather the men of Gath, or the Philiſtines, who were a warlike people, and given to ſpoil and plunder; this, according to a learned chronologer [l], was 74 years after Jacob went down to Egypt, and 140 years before the children of Iſrael came from thence.

℣. 22. And Ephraim their father mourned many days, &c.] For the loſs of his ſon and grandchildren; for the above fact was done while the Iſraelites were in Egypt, and Ephraim the patriarch yet alive; nor is there any need to ſuppoſe another Ephraim different from him: and his brethren came to comfort him; ſome of the heads of the other tribes of Iſrael, particularly Manaſſeh, with ſome of his family.

℣. 23. And when he went in to his wife, &c.] After his grief and ſorrow in part at leaſt had ſubſided: ſhe conceived and bare a ſon; which in ſome meaſure made up for the loſs he had ſuſtained: and he called his name Beriah; which ſignifies being in evil or calamity, he being born in an evil time: becauſe it went evil with his houſe; or evil was in his houſe, as Noldius [m], in his family; a great calamity had befallen it.

℣. 24. And his daughter was Sherah, &c.] That is, the daughter of Beriah; not an immediate daughter, but a deſcendant of his, otherwiſe ſhe ſhe could not have reached the times of Joſhua, as ſhe did by what follows: who built Beth horon the nether, and the upper; which were cities on the border of the tribe of Ephraim; which the Iſraelites having taken from the Canaanites, and deſtroyed, ſtroyed, ſhe rebuilt, ſee Joſh. xvi. 3, 5. and Uzzen-ſherah; which was called after her own name, and to diſtinguiſh it from another place called Uzzen; though of neither of them do we read elſewhere.

℣. 25, 26, 27. And Rephah was his ſon, &c.] The ſon of Beriah, whoſe genealogy from him is traced down to Joſhua in this and the two following verſes, and ſtands thus: after Rephah, Reſheph, Telah, Tahan, Laadan, Ammihud, Eliſhama, who was prince of the tribe of Ephraim in the wilderneſs, Numb. i. 10. then Non or Nun, whoſe ſon was Jehoſhua or Joſhua.

℣. 28. And their poſſeſſions and habitations, &c.] That is, of the ſons of Ephraim, when come into the land of Canaan: were Bethel, and the towns thereof; the villages belonging to it, which was formerly called Luz, and was the border of Ephraim, Joſh. xvi. 2. and eaſtward Naaran; the ſame with Naarath, Joſh. xvi. 7. and weſtward Gezer, with the towns thereof; of which ſee Joſh. xvi. 3, 10. and Shechem alſo, and the towns thereof; which was a city of refuge in mount Ephraim, Joſh. xx. 7. unto Gaza, and the towns thereof; not Gaza, a city of the Philiſtines, for the tribe of Ephraim did not reach ſo far; the Targum calls it Aiah; it may be read Ad-aza, as in the margin of our bibles.

℣. 29. And by the borders of the children of Manaſſeh, &c.] Of the half-tribe of Manaſſeh on this ſide Jordan: near to them the Ephraimites dwelt, even near to Bethſhean and her towns, Taanach and her towns, Megiddo and her towns, Dor and her towns; of all which places ſee Joſh. xvii. 11. in theſe dwelt the children of Joſeph the ſon of Iſrael; the Ephraimites, in thoſe mentioned in ℣. 28. and the Manaſſites, in thoſe that are here mentioned; who were both the children or poſterity of Joſeph, the beloved ſon of Iſrael.

℣. 30, 31. The ſon of Aſher, &c.] Which, and his two grandſons born before Jacob went down to Egypt, are here reckoned as in Gen. xlvi. 17. only it is here added Malchiel his ſecond grandſon, who is the father of Birzavith; which Jarchi interprets, prince of a city of this name, which ſignifies pure oil; which it might have from the abundance of olives about it, Aſher being a tribe which abounded with them, ſee Deut. xxxiii. 24. though ſome of the Rabbins take it to be the name of a man, whoſe daughters they ſay, as Jarchi obſerves, were very beautiful, having much oil to anoint with, and were married to kings and prieſts anointed with oil.

℣. 32. And Heber, &c.] The other grandſon of Aſher, and ſon of Beriah: begat Japhlet, and Shomer, and Hotham, and Shuah their ſiſter; a place on the borders of Ephraim is called the coaſt of Japhleti; but whether from this Japhlet is uncertain.

℣. 33. And the ſons of Japhlet, Paſach, and Bimhal, and Aſhvath; theſe are the children of Japhlet.] Of whom we read not elſewhere.

℣. 34. And the ſons of Shamer, &c.] Or Shomer, the brother of Japhlet, ℣. 32. Ahi, and Rohgah, Jehubbah, and Aram; of whom nothing is known but their names.

℣. 35. And the ſons of his brother Helem, &c.] Or Helem his brother, that is, the brother of Shomer, who, according to Hillerus [n], is Hotham, ℣. 32. Zophah, and Imna, and Sheleſh, and Amal; no where elſe mentioned.

℣. 36, 37. And the ſons of Zophah, &c.] The eldeſt of the ſons of Helem: Suah, and Harnepher, and Shual, and Beri, and Imrah, Bezer, and Hod, and Shamma, and Shilſhah, and Ithran, and Beera; in all eleven.

℣. 38. And the ſons of Jether, &c.] The ſame with Ithran, the laſt of Zophah's ſons but one, ℣. 37. Jephunneh, and Piſpah, and Ara; not Jephunneh the father of Caleb; he was not of the tribe of Aſher, but of Judah.

℣. 39. And the ſons of Ulla, &c.] Who either was the ſon of Ara, laſt mentioned, or another ſon of Jether: Arah, and Aniel, and Rezia; here ends the genealogy of Aſher, the laſt of the tribes; Dan and Zebulun, not being reckoned at all.

℣. 40. All theſe were the children of Aſher, heads of their father's houſe, &c.] Principal men in their tribe, and reſpective families: choice and mighty men of valour; theſe were ſome ſelected from others, being eminent for their courage and valour: chief of the princes; or chief princes; the Vulgate Latin verſion is, dukes of dukes, they were heads of their fathers families: and the number throughout the genealogy that were apt to war, and to battle, was 26,000; that is, in the days of David, ℣. 4. this was the number, not of their chief men, nor of all the people in the tribe, but of their militia.

CHAP. VIII.

IN this chapter the genealogy of the tribe of Benjamin is re-conſidered, and ſeveral of the principal men and families in it are taken notice of, which were not before; or a farther account is given of them, as of the ſons and grandſons of Benjamin, ℣. 1—5. of Ehud, ℣. 5, 6, 7. of Shaharaim, ℣. 8—11. of Elpaal and Beriah, ℣. 12—18. of Shimhi, ℣. 19—21. of Shaſhak, ℣. 22—25. of Jeroham, ℣. 26, 27. of Jehiel the father of Gibeon, ℣. 28—32. of Ner, and particularly Saul, ℣. 33. and of Jonathan, and his poſterity, ℣. 34—40.

℣. 1. Now Benjamin begat Bela his firſt-born, &c.] See ch. vii. 6. The genealogy of the tribe of Benjamin is reveiwed, becauſe it joined and kept cloſe with Judah in the worſhip of God, went into captivity, and returned out of it with it; and this review is made, chiefly for the ſake of Saul, and his poſterity, the firſt king of Iſrael, who was of it, and in whoſe poſterity this genealogy ends: Aſhbel the ſecond; ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Jediael, ch. vii. 6. ſee Gen. xlvi. 21. and Aharah the third; the ſame with Aher, ch. vii. 12, and with Ahiram, Numb. xxvi. 38.

℣. 2. Nohah the fourth, and Rapha the fifth.] Nohah is ſuppoſed by ſome to be the ſame with Becher, ch. vii. 6. and by others with Naaman, Gen. xlvi. 21. as Rapha, the ſame with Roſh there.

℣. 3. The ſons of Bela were Addar, and Gera, and Abihud.] The firſt of theſe is thought to be the ſame with Ard, mentioned among the ſons of Benjamin, Gen. xlvi. 21. but was one of his grandſons, ſee Numb. xxvi. 40. as Gera alſo was.

[n] Onomaſtic. Sacr. p. 551.

℣. 4, 5. And Abiſhua, and Naaman, and Ahoah, and Gera, and Shephuphan, and Huram.] Theſe were all the ſons of Bela; one of the name of Naaman is reckoned among the ſons of Benjamin. Gen. xlvi. 21. and from this grandſon, the family of the Naamanites are named, Numb xxvi. 40. and Ahoah is by ſome thought to be the ſame with Echi, mentioned in Gen. xlvi. 21. as one of Benjamin's ſons. Some take the three laſt to be the ſons of Ehud, ſpoken of in the next verſe; but Shephuphan and Huram ſeem to be the ſame with Shupham and Hupham, Numb. xxvi. 39.

℣. 6. And theſe are the ſons of Ehud, &c] Not he that was a judge in Iſrael, Judg. iii. 15. but perhaps a ſon of Huram the laſt mentioned; for not the three laſt are his ſons, as ſome think, but the three following in the next verſe; what follows being to be read in a parentheſis: (theſe are the heads of the fathers of the inhabitants of Geba); a city in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 24. namely thoſe ſons of Ehud, after mentioned, were principal men in that tribe, and chief of the inhabitants of the city of Geba: and they removed them to Manahath; the name of a country referred to in ch. ii. 52, 54. according to Jarchi, which was in the tribe of Judah; Geba being too ſtrait, either the inhabitants of Geba removed them, or they removed themſelves, or their fathers removed them, ℣. 7. or it may be read imperſonally, they were removed thither for the ſake of a better habitation; the Targum adds, "to the land of the houſe of Eſau," to Edom; which is not likely.

℣. 7. And Naaman, and Ahiah, and Gera, &c.] Or, to wit, Naaman, &c. ſo the words are to be connected with, theſe are the ſons of Ehud, in the preceding verſe: he removed them; to the above place, that is, either Gera, or rather Ehud, he adviſed them, directed and enjoined them to go thither, as being moſt convenient for them: and he begat Uzza and Ahihud; after he had removed his other ſons.

℣. 8. And Shaharaim, &c.] Who was either a ſon of Ahihud, or rather a brother of his, another ſon of Ehud: begat children in the country of Moab; whither he might go on account of the famine, as Elimelech did, Ruth i. 1. after he had ſent them away; which ſome underſtand of thoſe that were removed from Geba to Manahath, ℣. 6. but a different word is here uſed; and beſides Shaharaim ſeems to be one of thoſe that were removed. Kimchi takes Shilho-otham, we render, had ſent them away, to be the name of his firſt wife of whom he begat children in Moab; but it ſeems beſt to render and interpret the words in connexion with what follows: he begat children in Moab, after he had ſent them away, even Huſhim and Baara his wives; after he had divorced them for ſome reaſons he had, he begat children of another wife, after mentioned.

℣. 9, 10. And he begat of Hodeſh his wife, &c.] That is, he, I ſay, begat, namely, Shaharaim; the Targum makes this Hodeſh to be the ſame with Baara, called ſo, becauſe ſhe was newly eſpouſed; but wrongly: the ſons begotten of her were the ſeven following; Jobab, Zibia, Meſha, Malcham, Jeuž, Shachia, and Mirma. Theſe were his ſons; the ſons of Shaharaim by his wife Hodeſh: heads of the fathers; of the houſes or families of their father.

℣. 11. And of Huſhim he begat Abitub, and Elpaal.] Before he ſent her away, or divorced her, ℣. 8.

℣. 12. The ſons of Elpaal; Eber, and Miſham and Shamed, &c] Beſides thoſe in ℣. 14. 17, 18 who built Ono, and Lod, with the towns thereof; not Shamed but Elpaal his father, ſo the Targum; and the Talmudiſts ſay [o], theſe were walled cities from the days of Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and were deſtroyed in the days of the concubine in Gibea, and Elpaal came and rebuilt them; they were inhabited by the Benjaminites, upon their return from the Babyloniſh captivity, Neh. xi. 35. they were near to each other; according to a Jewiſh chronologer [p], it was three miles from the one to the other; Lod is the ſame with Lydda, in Acts ix. 32. 35. 38.

℣. 13. Beriah alſo, and Shema, &c.] Theſe were ſons of Elpaal: who were heads of the fathers of the inhabitants of Aijalon; which, though in the tribe of Dan, Joſh. xix. 42. might afterwards come into the poſſeſſion of Benjamin; or this may be another place of the ſame name in Benjamin; or however, might be inhabited by Benjaminites, upon the return from captivity, who deſcended from thoſe men: who drove away the inhabitants of Gath; diſpoſſeſſed them of their city, in revenge for what they had done to the Ephraimites, ch. vii. 21.

℣. 14. And Abio, Shaſhak, and Jerimoth.] Theſe were alſo ſons of Elpaal.

℣. 15, 16. And Zebadiah, &c.] And all that follow in this and the next verſe were the ſons of Beriah the ſon of Elpaal; namely, Arad, Ader, Michael, Iſpah, and Joha.

℣. 17, 18. And Zebadiah, and Meſhullam, &c.] Theſe, with thoſe that follow, Hezeki, Heber, Iſhmerai, Jezliah, and Jobab, were the ſons of Elpaal.

℣. 19, 20, 21. And Jakim, &c.] With all the reſt in theſe verſes, namely, Zichri, Zabdi, Elienai, Zilthai, Eliel, Adaiah, Beraiah, and Shimrath, were the ſons of Shimhi, the ſame with Shema brother of Beriah, and ſon of Elpaal, ℣. 13.

℣. 22, 23, 24, 25. And Iſhpan, and Heber, &c.] And all that follow to the end of theſe verſes, Eliel, Abdon, Zichri, Hanan, Hananiah, Elam, Antothijah, Iphedeiah, and Penuel, were the ſons of Shaſhak, another ſon of Elpaal, ℣. 14.

℣. 26, 27. And Shamſherai, &c.] Who, with thoſe next mentioned, Shehariah, Athaliah, Jareſiah, Eliah, and Zichri, were the ſons of Jeroham, who perhaps is the ſame with Jerimoth, another ſon of Elpaal, ℣. 14. who makes a conſiderable figure in this genealogy. Kimchi obſerves that it is a tradition [q], that this Eliah is Elijah the prophet, who was of the ſeed of Rachel.

℣ 28. Theſe were heads of the fathers, by their generations, chief men, &c.] All from ℣. 14. the ſons of Elpaal and their ſons: theſe dwelt in Jeruſalem; part of which always belonged to the tribe of Benjamin, ſee Joſh. xv. 63. and xviii. 28.

℣. 29. And at Gibeon dwelt the father of Gibeon, &c.] The builder of the city, and prince of the inhabitants of it, which was in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 25. whoſe name was Jehiel, ch. ix. 35. (whoſe wife's name was Maachah) of which name were many, ſee ch. ii. 48. and iii. 2. and vii. 16.

℣. 30, 31. And his firſt-born ſon Abdon, &c.] That is, Jehiel's, the father or prince of Gibeon; other

℣. 32. And Mikloth begat Shimeah, &c.] Called Shimeam, ch. ix. 38. and theſe alſo dwelt with their brethren in Jeruſalem, over againſt them; in another part of the city, right againſt them.

℣. 33. And Ner begat Kiſh, &c.] Who alſo is called Abiel, as the Targum here adds; for Ner had two names, as other Jewiſh writers likewiſe ſay [r], ſee 1 Sam. ix. 1. and Kiſh begat Saul; the firſt king of Iſrael, for whoſe ſake chiefly the genealogy of Benjamin is reviſed and enlarged in this chapter: and Saul begat Jonathan, and Malchi-ſhua, and Abinadab, and Eſh-baal, ſee 1 Sam. xxxi. 2. Abinadab is called Iſhui, 1 Sam. xiv. 49. and Eſh-baal is the ſame with Iſhboſheth, 2 Sam. ii. 8. 10. ſo Baal and Boſheth are uſed of the ſame idol of which they are names, Hoſ. ix. 10.

℣. 34. And the ſon of Jonathan was Merib-baal, &c.] The ſame with Mephiboſheth, 2 Sam. iv. 4. and ix. 6. ſo Jerub-baal is called Jerub-boſheth, Judg. vi. 32. 2 Sam. xi. 21. and Merib-baal begat Micah; called his young ſon in David's time, 2 Sam. ix. 12.

℣. 35. And the ſons of Micah were, Pithon, and Melech, and Tarea, and Ahaz.] The laſt but one is called Tahrea, ch. ix. 41, where Ahaz is left out, though ſupplied in our verſion.

℣. 36. And Ahaz begat Jehoadah, &c.] Called Jarah, ch. ix. 42. and Jehoadah begat Alemeth, and Azmaveth, and Zimri; and Zimri begat Moza; the ſame account is given, ch. ix. 42.

℣. 37. And Moza begat Binea; Rapha was his ſon, &c.] Called Rephaiah, ch. ix. 43. Elaſa his ſon; whoſe name is Eleaſah, ch. ix. 43. Azel his ſon.

℣. 38. And Azel had ſix ſons, whoſe names are theſe, Azrikam, Bocheru, Iſhmael, Shcariah, Obadiah, and Hanan, &c.] Which make the ſaid number: all theſe were the ſons of Azel; his family was large.

℣. 39. And the ſons of Eſhek his brother, &c.] The brother of Azel; who he was is not known, unleſs he is the ſame with Elaſa, as is conjectured: were Ulam his firſt-born, Jehuſh the ſecond, and Eliphelet the third.

℣. 40. And the ſons of Ulam were mighty men of valour, &c.] Men of great fortitude and courage, though their names are not expreſſed: archers; ſkilful in the uſe of the bow and arrows, as the Benjaminites formerly were famous for ſlinging ſtones: and had many ſons, and ſons ſons, 150; ſo that the poſterity of Jonathan, whoſe genealogy is drawn down from ℣. 34. hither, were very great; and greater ſtill, according to the Vulgate Latin verſion, in which the number is 150,000 in the edition of Sixtus the 5th, and ſo in moſt MSS. of that verſion [s]: all theſe are of the ſons of Benjamin; his poſterity, whoſe names are given in this chapter.

CHAP. IX.

THE genealogies of the ſeveral tribes being given, according as they were written in the book of the kings of Iſrael, ℣. 1. an account follows of thoſe who firſt ſettled in Jeruſalem after their return from the Babyloniſh captivity; of the Iſraelites, ℣. 2—9. of the prieſts, ℣. 10—13. of the Levites, and of the charge and offices of ſeveral of the prieſts and Levites, ℣. 14—34. and the chapter is concluded with a repetition of the genealogy of the anceſtors and poſterity of Saul king of Iſrael, ℣. 35—44.

℣. 1. So all Iſrael were reckoned by genealogies, &c.] Not now by the writer of this book in the preceding chapters; for two of the tribes are not reckoned at all, and the reſt but in part; but there had been kept an exact account of them: and behold, they were written in the book of the kings of Iſrael; not in the canonical book, or books of kings, but in the annals, journals, and diaries which each king took care to be kept with ſome exactneſs, often referred to in the preceding books; out of which this writer, under a divine direction, had taken what was proper to be continued, and had carried the genealogy down to the captivity of the ten tribes; but the genealogy being loſt with them, he could proceed no farther, nor ſay any thing more concerning them: but Judah; for ſo the word ſhould be ſtopped, and read according to the Hebrew accents: who were carried away to Babylon for their tranſgreſſion; their idolatry, and were now returned again; of them the writer propoſes to give a farther account.

℣. 2. Now the firſt inhabitants that dwelt in their poſſeſſions in their cities, &c.] Who firſt returned from Babylon upon the proclamation of Cyrus, and enjoyed their former poſſeſſions, and dwelt in the cities they had before, or in ſuch as were allotted them, or they choſe: were, the Iſraelites, the prieſts, Levites, and the Nethinims; the whole body that returned were divided into four claſſes, as they had been before the captivity; the Iſraelites were the common people in general, the body politic; the prieſts, the eccleſiaſticks, who officiated in ſacred things; the Levites, who miniſtred to them; and the Nethinim were ſuch perſons as were given, as the word ſignifies, to do ſervile work for the ſanctuary, as to be hewers of wood and drawers of water; ſuch were the Gibeonites, Joſh. ix. 27. and ſuch as were appointed by David for ſuch work, ſee Ezr. viii. 20.

℣. 3. And in Jeruſalem dwelt of the children of Judah, and of the children of Benjamin, &c.] Of which tribes were the largeſt number that went into, and returned out of, captivity: and of the children of Ephraim and Manaſſeh; ſuch of thoſe tribes who had joined the others when Jeroboam introduced his idolatry, or had fled to them when Samaria was beſieged and taken by Salmaneſer, and ſo went into captivity with Judah, and now returned; and as many of them as took the advantage of the proclamation of Cyrus, who were carried captive with the ten tribes.

℣. 4. Uthai the ſon of Ammihud, &c.] Called Athaiah, Neh. xi. 4. though his anceſtors there are differently reckoned here; his genealogy here is traced from his father Ammihud, through Omri, Imri, Bani, Pharez, to Judah.

℣. 5. And of the Shilonites, &c.] Not called ſo from the city of Shilo, which was in Ephraim; whereas whereas theſe here intended were of the tribe of Judah, and were either the deſcendants of a man, whoſe name was Shiloni, Neh. xi. 5. or rather theſe are the ſame with the Shelahites, Numb. xxvi. 20. ſo called from Shelah the ſon of Judah; and ſo the Targum here is, "and of the tribe of Shelah:" Aſaiah the firſt-born, and his ſons; the ſame with Maaſeiah, Neh. xi. 5.

℣. 6. And of the ſons of Zerah, &c.] Another ſon of Judah: Jeuel, and their brethren, 690; or their kinſmen; for this number includes all of the poſterity of Pharez, Shelah and Zerah mentioned.

℣. 7. And of the ſons of Benjamin, &c.] Who were of the tribe of Benjamin, and went with Judah into captivity, and returned with them, and ſuch of them as dwelt in Jeruſalem before that: Sallu the ſon of Meſhullam; whoſe pedigree is differently given, Neh. xi. 7. the ſon of Hodaviah, the ſon of Haſſenuah; perhaps theſe men had two names, there called Joel and Pedaiah.

℣. 8. And Ibneiah the ſon of Jeroham, &c.] Who with two more, Elah and Meſhullam, whoſe anceſtors are given, of whom we have no mention elſewhere, were all of the tribe of Benjamin, ſaid to ſettle at Jeruſalem.

℣. 9. And their brethren, according to their generations, 956, &c.] Which was the number of the Benjamunites, there reſident put together, and which greatly exceeded that of Judah, ℣. 6. all theſe men were chief of the fathers in the houſe of their fathers; principal men in the families of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, even all the ſeven before mentioned.

℣. 10. And of the prieſts, &c.] Who returned and dwelt at Jeruſalem: Jedaiah, and Jehoiarib, and Jachin; Jedaiah was the ſon of Jehoiarib, and Jachin is called Jachin, Neh. xi. 10.

℣. 11. And Azariah the ſon of Hilkiah, &c.] That is, the ſon of Azariah, whoſe name was Seraiah, ſee ch. vi. 13, 14. Neh. xi. 11. whoſe pedigree is traced up from Hilkiah through Meſhullam, called Shallum, ch. vi. 12, 13. Zadok, Meraioth, to Ahitub, the ruler of the houſe of God; high-prieſt in it; which is to be underſtood of Ahitub, and not of Azariah or Seraiah in the time of Ezra; for Joſhua was then high-prieſt.

℣. 12. And Adaiah the ſon of Jeroham, the ſon of Paſhur, &c.] In this genealogy between Jeroham and Paſhur, were three more here omitted, Pelaliah, Amzi, Zechariah, Neh. xi. 12. and then Paſhur the ſon of Malchijah, as here: and Maaſai the ſon of Adiel; whoſe pedigree is traced up from hence, through Jahzerah, Meſhullam, Meſhillemith, to Immer; one of the five heads of the courſes ſettled by David, ch. xxiv. 14. The name of this man, and of his anceſtors, are given, with ſome variation, in Neh. xi. 13.

℣. 13. And their brethren, heads of the houſe of their fathers, 1760.] Theſe, with other prieſts, made up this number, which was greater than thoſe of Judah and Benjamin that dwelt in Jeruſalem, put together: very able men for the work of the ſervice of the houſe of God; men that had not only ſtrength of body, which ſome part of the work of the prieſts required; but had courage and fortitude of mind to ſet about the ſervice of God with chearfulneſs, and to preſerve it from corruption.

℣. 14. And of the Levites, &c.] Having given an account of the two firſt claſſes of the people, the Iſraelites and prieſts; the author of the book now proceeds to the Levites, the third claſs: and the firſt mentioned is Shemaiah, whoſe anceſtors Haſhub, Azrikam, and Haſhabiah, were of the ſons of Merari; the third ſon of Levi.

℣. 15. And Bakbakkar, Hereſh, and Galal, and Mattaniah, &c.] Four more of the chief of the Levites, the pedigree of the laſt of which is traced up by Micah and Zichri to Aſaph, the ſinger in the times of David, a deſcendant of Gerſhon, the firſt ſon of Levi; the firſt of theſe is thought by Hillerus [t] to be the ſame with Bakbukiah, Neh. xi. 17.

℣. 16. And Obadiah the ſon of Shemaiah, &c.] Called Abdah the ſon of Shammua, Neh. xi. 17. the ſon of Galal, the ſon of Jeduthun; who was Ethan, another of the ſingers in the time of David: and Berechiah the ſon of Aſa, the ſon of Elkanah, that dwelt in the villages of the Netophathites; the villages about Netophah, which was in the tribe of Judah, ch. ii. 54. Neh. vii. 26. which may be underſtood either of Elkanah, the anceſtor of Berechiah, whoſe dwelling was there; or of Berechiah, and muſt be rendered, who had dwelt there; for now he dwelt at Jeruſalem.

℣. 17. And the porters, &c.] Or keepers of the gates of the tabernacle: were Shallum, and Akkub, and Talmon, and Ahiman, and their brethren, Shallum was the chief; of theſe four porters, and their brethren.

℣. 18. Who hitherto waited in the king's gate eaſtward, &c.] At the gate through which the king went into the temple, and was at the eaſt of it; and here theſe porters were placed in the ſame order after the captivity, and their return from it, as before: they were porters in the companies of the children of Levi; or in the camp of Levi, which was placed around the tabernacle, as in the wilderneſs: the Septuagint verſion is, theſe are the gates of the camp of the children of Levi; at which theſe porters were placed.

℣. 19. And Shallum the ſon of Kore, &c.] The ſame as in ℣. 17. whoſe pedigree is traced up to Ebiaſaph the ſon of Korah, ſee Exod. vi. 24. and his brethren, of the houſe of his father, the Korahites; ſo called, becauſe they deſcended from Korah: were over the work of the ſervice, keepers of the gates of the tabernacle; until the temple was built: and their fathers being over the hoſt of the Lord; the Levites, who were the Lord's army, and whoſe ſervice is repreſented as a warfare, Numb. iv. 5. were keepers of the entry; into the tabernacle, that none might enter that were impure; or into the court of the prieſts, excepting prieſts; or into the holieſt of all, as Kimchi ſuggeſts.

℣. 20. And Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar was the ruler over them in time paſt, &c.] Over the hoſt, over the Levites, and the chief of them; which is to be underſtood of Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar, in the time of Moſes, who ſucceeded his father in that poſt, ſee Numb. iii. 32. though ſome think, as Kimchi obſerves, that this was not Phinehas the prieſt, but a certain Levite of this name in this poſt; but ſince he is ſaid to be in time paſt, it may very well be underſtood of him: and it alſo is obſerved, and the Lord was with him; inſpiring him with zeal for his honour and glory, aſſiſting and ſtrengthening him to do his will and work, as particularly in the affair of Zimri, Numb. xxv. 7, 8. the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord was for his help;" this may be ſaid for the encouragement of him that was in the ſame office now.

[t] Onomaſtic. Sacr. p. 401. 548.

℣. 21. And Zechariah the ſon of Meſhelemiah, &c.] Some think this refers to one that was in the times of David; but it ſeems rather to reſpect one that was after the Babyloniſh captivity, ſee ch. xxvi. 1, 2. though he and his brethren were in an office eſtabliſhed in the times of David, and the order of which was now, as then obſerved: was porter of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; who was the chief porter, and kept the door; either that led into the outer court, and kept out all unclean perſons from entring there; or that which led into the court of the prieſts, that none but prieſts might enter there.

℣. 22. All thoſe that were choſen to be porters in the gates, were 212, &c.] As fixed in the days of David, and might not be fewer: theſe were reckoned by their genealogies in their villages; where they dwelt: whom David and Samuel the ſeer did ordain in their ſet office; the ſcheme was firſt drawn by Samuel the prophet, and communicated to David, who put it into execution, to be conſtantly and perpetually obſerved.

℣. 23. So they and their children had the overſight of the gates of the houſe of the Lord, &c.] They that were appointed in David's time to watch the gates of the temple, their poſterity ſucceeded them in that office; for it was hereditary: namely, the houſe of the tabernacle by wards; that which was at Gibeon in David's time, and now one was erected until the temple was built.

℣. 24. In four quarters were the porters, &c.] For, according to the Targum on ℣. 22. there were 24 wards: towards the eaſt, weſt, north and ſouth; and as the ſame paraphraſe has it, ſix wards to the eaſt, ſix to the weſt, ſix to the north, and ſix to the ſouth.

℣. 25. And their brethren which were in their villages, &c.] Aſſigned them to dwell in: were to come after ſeven days from time to time with them; there was a new courſe of them every week; the old ones went off of duty, and another courſe ſucceeded, which came out of the villages where they dwelt, and the old courſe retired to theirs.

℣. 26. For theſe Levites, the four chief porters were in their ſet office, &c.] The four chief porters who were over all the 212, and had one over them, ℣. 17. theſe were never changed, nor went into the country-villages; but were always upon the ſpot, and in their office ſuper-intending the reſt: and were over the chambers and treaſuries of the houſe of God; ſee ch. xxvi. 20.

℣. 27. And they lodged round about the houſe of God, &c.] In chambers on the outward wall about it, that they might be near to do their office: becauſe the charge was upon them; to guard the houſe: and the opening thereof every morning pertained to them; that is, the opening of the doors of the mountain of the houſe, and the court of women; for as for others, that appertained to the prieſts, as Dr. Lightfoot [u] obſerves; under the ſecond temple, it is ſaid [w], Ben Geber was over the ſhutting of the gates in the evening, and ſo of opening in the morning.

℣. 28. And certain of them had the charge of the miniſtring-veſſels, that they ſhould bring them in and out by tale.] Which the prieſts uſed in ſacrificing, and which the Levites brought to them, and returned again to their proper places.

℣. 29. Some of them alſo were appointed to overſee the veſſels, and all the inſtruments of the ſanctuary, &c.] They were committed to their care; the delivered them out on occaſion, and their buſineſs was to ſee that they were returned when they had done their uſe and ſervice: and the fine flour, and the wine, and the oil, and the frankincenſe, and the ſpices; which were uſed in meat-offerings, drink-offerings, &c. ſee ch. xxvi. 20. under the ſecond temple, Ahiah was over the libations or drink-offerings [x].

℣. 30. And ſome of the ſons of the prieſts made the ointment of the ſpices.] For though the Levites had the care of the ſpices, they might not make the ointment with them, only the prieſts, ſee Exod. xxx. 23.

℣. 31. And Mattithiah, one of the Levites, who was the firſt-born of Shallum the Korahite, &c.] Of whom ſee ℣. 19. had the ſet office over the things that were made in the pans; the meat-offerings that were made in pans; and ſo had the care of the fine flour, oil, and frankincenſe uſed in them, which he delivered to the prieſts when neceſſary, ſee Lev. ii. 5. the Septuagint verſion is, "over the works of the ſacrifice of the pan of the high-prieſt;" as if it reſpected peculiarly his meat-offering, Lev. vi. 20, 21. we read in the Miſnah [y] of the offerings of the high-prieſt, as expreſſed by this word, which it ſignifies, and not pans, but what was fried in them [z]; and Ben Melech on the place ſays, this man was an high-prieſt who offered every day the 10th part of an ephah in a pan, half of it in the morning, and half of it in the evening, according to Lev. vi. 20. but that cannot be, for certain it is he was a Levite, as the text expreſſes it.

℣. 32. And other of their brethren of the ſons of the Kohathites, were over the ſhew-bread to prepare it every ſabbath.] Twelve loaves of which were ſet every week before the ark upon the ſhew-bread-table, and the old ones taken away: now the work of theſe Levites was to make this ſhew-bread, and get it ready every week to be ſet upon the table, and which was done not by them, but by prieſts; under the ſecond temple, the family of Garmu was ſet over this work [a].

℣. 33. And theſe are the ſingers, chief of the fathers of the Levites, &c.] Others of them were employed in ſinging, and were maſters of the ſong, and preſided in that ſervice, ſee ch. vi. 31. who remaining in the chambers were free; from all other work and ſervice; and there they abode, even in the chambers of the temple, that they might be near to perform their work, and not be defiled, and made unfit for it: for they were employed in that work day and night; ſome or other of them, either in compoſing or ſinging pſalms and hymns, or teaching others how to ſing them.

℣. 34. Theſe chief fathers of the Levites were chief throughout their generations, &c.] Even all before made mention of in this chapter: theſe dwelt at Jeruſalem; always reſided there, and did not in turns go into the country-villages, as the inferior Levites did; their office requiring them to be conſtantly there, being chief of the porters, ſingers, &c. who had the ſuperintendency and direction of the reſt.

℣. 35. And in Gibeon dwelt the father of Gibeon, &c.] Whoſe name is here mentioned, which is not in ch. viii. 29. Jehiel, whoſe wife's name was Maachah; as there, but here called his ſiſter, as a wife ſometimes is, Gen. xx. 2. 5. ſee 1 Cor. ix. 5.

From hence to the end of the chapter is a repetition of the anceſtors and poſterity of Saul king of Iſrael; which is made to lead on to and connect the following hiſtory of the kings of Judah, begun in this book, and carried on in the next unto the Babyloniſh captivity, ſee ch. viii. 29—40. and the notes there.

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter from ℣. 1. to the end of ℣. 12. which gives an account of the laſt battle of Saul with the Philiſtines, and of his death and burial, is the ſame with 1 Sam. xxxi. 1—13. ſee the notes there; the cauſe of his death follows here.

℣. 13. So Saul died for his tranſgreſſion, &c.] A violent and diſhonourable death, which was ſuffered on account of the ſins he was guilty of: one was, which he committed againſt the Lord, even againſt the word of the Lord, which he kept not; both in not ſtaying for Samuel the time appointed, and by ſparing the Amalekites, whom he was bid to deſtroy, 1 Sam. xiii. 13, 14. and xv. 3, 9. and alſo for aſking counſel of one that had a familiar ſpirit, to enquire of it; what he ſhould do with reſpect to engaging in battle with the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. xxviii. 8, 15. which to do was contrary to an expreſs command of God, Lev. xix. 31.

℣. 14. And enquired not of the Lord, &c.] For though he did enquire in ſome ſenſe in an external, careleſs, and hypocritical manner, yet not done ſeriouſly, ſincerely, and heartily, nor with conſtancy; it was accounted as if he enquired not at all, ſee 1 Sam. xxviii. 6. the Targum adds another reaſon of his death, becauſe he killed the prieſts of Nob; but that is not in the text: therefore he ſlew him; or ſuffered him to be ſlain: and turned the kingdom unto David the ſon of Jeſſe; tranſlated the kingdom of Iſrael, out of Saul's family upon his death, into Jeſſe's, even unto David; for the ſake of which obſervation, this ſhort account is given of the laſt end of Saul.

CHAP. XI.

THIS chapter treats of David's being anointed king by all Iſrael, ℣. 1—3. which agrees with 2 Sam. v. 1, 2, 3. ſee the notes there, and of his taking Jeruſalem from the Jebuſites, ℣. 4—9. the account of which we have 2 Sam. v. 6—10 ſee the notes there; only here we are told, that it was Joab that ſmote the Jebuſites firſt, and ſo was made chief captain according to David's promiſe; and that he alſo repaired the reſt of the city David built round about; perhaps the fortifications demoliſhed in taking it, ℣. 6, 8. or rather, as others give the ſenſe, he ſaved alive [b] thoſe that remained in the city, after he had ſlain the lame and the blind; though a learned [c] writer conjectures it ſhould be read, and Joab יהוידע was made שר the governor of the city; and the Targum is, "Joab governed the reſt of the city." And then follows an account of David's mighty men and worthies, ℣. 10—41. of whom ſee the notes on 2 Sam. xxiii. ℣. 8—39. and others are added here, ℣. 42—47. of whom we know no more than their names.

CHAP. XII.

THIS chapter gives an account of thoſe that came to David at different times, and joined and aſſiſted him both before the death of Saul, and when perſecuted by him, and after he was made king of Judah in Hebron, and before he was king of all Iſrael, in order to it; of the Benjaminites that came to him when at Ziklag, ℣. 1—7. of the Gadites that came to him when in the hold, ℣. 8—15. of ſome of Judah and Benjamin, who came to him in the ſame place, ℣. 16—18. and of the Manaſſites at the time he came with the Philiſtines againſt Saul, ℣. 19—22. and the number of the ſeveral tribes are given, that came to him at Hebron to make him king over all Iſrael, ℣. 23—40.

℣. 1. Now theſe are they that came to David to Ziklag, &c.] Given him by Achiſh to live in, when he fled from Saul, 1 Sam. xxvii. 6. while he yet kept himſelf cloſe, becauſe of Saul the ſon of Kiſh; when he was an exile from his own country, and obliged to live retire in a foreign one, becauſe of Saul's perſecution of him, and ſeeking to take away his life: and they were among the mighty men, helpers of the war; not againſt Saul, with whom David had none, but with the Amalekites, and others, 1 Sam. xxvii. 8. and xxx. 16, 17.

℣. 2. They were armed with bows, &c.] Much uſed in war in thoſe times: and could uſe both the right-hand and the left, in hurling ſtones, and ſhooting arrows out of a bow; they were ambi-dexters; who could ſling ſtones, or ſhoot arrows, with either, which was no ſmall advantage to them: even of Saul's brethren of Benjamin; they were of the tribe of Benjamin, of which Saul was, and ſo his brethren; and they might be, at leaſt ſome of them, his relations and kinſmen; who obſerving the unreaſonableneſs of Saul's enmity to David, and deteſting his cruelty, and ſenſible of the innocence of David, and of the ſervice he had done his country; and perhaps not being ignorant of his divine right and title to the kingdom, went over to him to comfort, ſtrengthen and aſſiſt him.

℣. 3. The chief was Ahiezer, then Joaſh, the ſons of Shemaah the Gibeathite, &c.] Who was of Gibeah, in the tribe of Benjamin, ſometimes called Gibeah of Benjamin, and of Saul, it being his birth-place, ſee 1 Sam. xi. 4. and xiii. and ſo theſe might be ſome of his kindred: and Jeziel, and Pelet, the ſons of Azmaveth; there is one of this name in the poſterity of Jonathan, ch. viii. 36. who might be ſo called after ſome of his relations: and Berachah, and Jehu the Antothite; or Anathothite, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, who was of Anathoth, a city in the tribe of Benjamin, the native place of Jeremiah the prophet.

℣. 4. And Iſhmaiah the Gibeonite, a mighty man among the 30, and over the 30, &c.] That came with him, and he had the command of; this man was of Gibeon, another city in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 25. and Jeremiah, and Jahaziel, and Johanan, and Joſabad the Gederathite; one of Gedera, a city in the tribe of Judah, perhaps on the borders of that and Benjamin; Jerom ſpeaks of it as belonging to the country of the city Ælia or Jeruſalem.

℣. 5. Eluzai, and Jerimoth, and Bealjah, and Shemariah, and Shephatiah the Haruphite.] A native of Haruph or Hariph, ſee Neh. vii. 24.

℣. 6. Elkanah, and Jeſiah, and Azareel, and Joezer, and Jaſhobeam, the Korhites.] Not Korahites, deſcendants of Levi, ch. ix. 19. but the poſterity of Korah a Benjaminite.

℣. 7, And Joelah, and Zebadiah, the ſons of Jeroham of Gedor.] A city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 58. and might now belong to Benjamin; or this was another city of the ſame name in that tribe.

℣. 8. And of the Gadites there ſeparated themſelves unto David, into the hold to the wilderneſs, &c.] Men of the tribe of Gad, who lived on the other ſide Jordan; theſe ſeparated themſelves from the reſt of their tribe, from their families and dwellings, and from the government of Saul, and came over to David, and joined him; either when he was in ſome ſtrong-hold in the wilderneſs of Ziph, or Maon, 1 Sam. xxiii. 14, 24, 25. or, as ſome think, when he was at Ziklag, in the hold there, ſaid to be in the wilderneſs of Judah: men of might, and men of war fit for the battle, that could handle ſhield and buckler; warlike, valiant and courageous men, well ſkilled in military diſcipline: whoſe faces were like the face of lions; bold, ſtern and fierce. The Philoſopher obſerves [d], that of all creatures the lion moſt reſembles a man, having a great mouth, a ſquare face and forehead, large eye-brows, &c. and were as ſwift as the roes upon the mountains; which are remarkable for their ſwiftneſs on the mountains, ſee Cant. ii. 17. and viii. 14. Ælianus [e] ſpeaks of one ſort of them that run as ſwift as a tempeſt. Theſe Gadites, as with their undaunted looks and courage, intimidated their enemies, and put them to flight, ſo they were ſwift to purſue them, and overtake them.

℣. 9—13. Ezer the firſt, &c.] This, and thoſe that follow, are the names of the Gadites given, according to their age, or merit, or order in coming to David: Obadiah, Eliab, Miſhmannah, Jeremiah, Attai, Eliel, Johanan, Elzabad, Jeremiah, Machbanai; in all eleven.

℣. 14. Theſe were of the ſons of Gad, captains of the hoſt, &c.] Of the militia in their own country, and of the men they brought with them; or they were ſuch afterwards in David's army; one of the leaſt was over 100, and the greateſt over 1000; not that they were ſo when they came, or brought over ſuch a number of men with them under their command; but they were promoted by David when he came to the throne, to be centurions and chiliarchs; according to Jarchi, the ſenſe is, that the leaſt of them would put to flight, and purſue 100, and the greateſt of them 1000, and ſo fulfilled the paſſage in Lev. xxvi. 8.

℣. 15. Theſe are they that went over Jordan in the firſt month, &c.] The month Niſan or Ab; as they muſt come over Jordan to come to David, ſince they dwelt on the other ſide of it: when it had overflown all its banks; as it did at this time of the year, ſee Joſh. iii. 15. which is obſerved to ſhew both the time of the year when they came over, and their zeal and ardour to aſſiſt David, and their boldneſs and intrepidity; fearleſs of danger, they threw themſelves into Jordan, and ſwam over it, in all probability when the waters of it were ſo deep they could not ford it, and ſo rapid that they were in danger of being carried away with them: and they put to flight all them of the valleys, both towards the eaſt, and towards the weſt; who dwelt in the vallies, or plains of Jordan eaſt and weſt; who ſeeing a number of men come over, took them for enemies, and fled, ſo Kimchi; or, as others think, theſe were the Philiſtines, who on the defeat of Saul, took poſſeſſion of the cities of Iſrael, in the vallies forſaken by them, 1 Sam. xxxi. 7. or rather theſe were the Moabites or Arabs, who made incurſions into the land of Iſrael for prey, the Gadites met with, when they came over Jordan.

℣. 16. And there came of the men of Benjamin, and of Judah, &c.] Beſides thoſe before mentioned, ℣. 2. to the hold unto David; the ſame as in ℣. 8.

℣. 17. And David went out to meet them, &c.] Out of the hold where he was; either out of reſpect and deference to them, ſome of them being perſons of eminence; or it may be out of ſuſpicion, fearing they were not his friends, being, it may be, chiefly of the tribe of Benjamin, and therefore was deſirous of ſounding them before he admitted them: and ſaid unto them, if ye be come peaceably unto me to help me; if they were come, with a good-will to him, and intention to help him againſt his enemy, and protect him: mine heart ſhall be knit unto you; they ſhould have ſuch a ſhare in his affections, that their hearts would be as one, as his and Jonathan's were, 1 Sam. xviii. 1. but if ye be come to betray me to mine enemies; into the hands of Saul, and his courtiers, that ſought his life: ſeeing there is no wrong in mine hands; no injury done by him to Saul, or to them, or to any other: the God of our fathers look thereon, and rebuke it; he that ſees all things, let him revenge it; and it is not only a wiſh that he would, but a prayer of faith that ſo it would be.

℣. 18. Then the ſpirit came upon Amaſai, &c.] Or clothed [f] him; a ſpirit of fortitude, as the Targum, of ſtrength, courage, and preſence of mind, with which he was endowed, covered and clothed as with a garment; this was a ſiſter's ſon of David's, ſee 2 Sam. xvii. 25. who was chief of the captains; of them that came at this time with him to David; he was afterwards Abſalom's general, and deſigned to be David's, but was murdered by Joab: and he ſaid, thine are we, David, and on thy thy side, thou son of Jesse; which being spoken in this short and concise manner, as the supplement shews, denotes the vehemency with which he spake, and is expressive of their cordial fidelity to him, and their resolution to abide by him at all events: peace, peace be unto thee, and peace be to thine helpers; wishing all prosperity, temporal and spiritual, to him and all his confederates and auxiliaries, among whom they reckoned themselves: for thy God helpeth thee; which they perceived by the remarkable deliverances of him out of the hand of Saul, when in imminent danger; the Targum is, "for the Word of the Lord is for thy help:" then David received them; into the hold, and admitted them as his friends: and made them the captains of the band; they brought with them; or in after-times, when he came to the throne.

℣. 19. And there fell some of Manasseh to David, &c.] Of the tribe of Manasseh; they took his part, and on his side, and joined him: when he came with the Philistines against Saul to battle; which was a strong proof of their cordial attachment to him: but they helped them not; the Philistines; neither David nor his men, nor the Manassites that joined them: for the Lords of the Philistines, upon advisement; counsel taken among themselves: sent him away; that is, David and his men: saying, He will fall to his master Saul, to the jeopardy of our heads; meaning, that he would go off with his troops to Saul, and betray them into his hands, and with their heads make his peace with him, see 1 Sam. xxix. 4.

℣. 20. As he went to Ziklag, there fell to him of Manasseh, &c.] Others besides the former, who joined him when he went with the Philistines; these joined him when he was dismissed from them, and was returning to Ziklag: namely, Adnah, and Jozabad, and Jediael, and Michael, and Jozabad, and Elihu, and Zilthai, captains of the thousands that were of Manasseh; that tribe being, as the rest were, divided into hundreds and thousands; these were captains over the thousands of the militia of the tribe.

℣. 21. And they helped David against the band of the rovers, &c.] The Amalekites, who, whilst he was gone with the Philistines, had seized on Ziklag, and burnt it, and carried the women captive, with what spoil they could make; these coming to David thus opportunely, assisted him in his pursuit and defeat of them: for they were all mighty men of valour, and were captains in the host; or army of David.

℣. 22. For at that time day by day, there came to David to help him, &c.] Particularly after the defeat of Saul by the Philistines, unto the time that David came to Hebron: until it was a great host, like the host of God; the heavenly host, the angels; so the Targum.

℣. 23—37. And these are the numbers of the bands that were ready armed to the war, &c.] That were trained up to it, and accoutred for it: and came to David to Hebron; after the death of Ishbosheth and Abner, and when David had reigned seven years in Hebron: to turn the kingdom of Saul to him; to transfer it to him and his family: according to the word of the Lord; by Samuel, which they were acquainted with; and the number of those of the children of Judah, who made him their king already, and so there was the less need of a numerous appearance of them, were 6800 armed men, ℣. 24. of the tribe of Simeon, valiant men, 7100, ℣. 25. of the children of Levi 4600, ℣. 26. of the Aaronites or priests, with Jehoiada the son of Benaiah, according to Jarchi and Kimchi, at the head of them, 3700, ℣. 27. besides Zadok, a young man of the line of Eleazar, who was made high-priest in the time of Solomon, who brought with him 22 captains, ℣. 28. the heads of the courses of the priests, which were afterwards 24, 1 Chron. xxiv. 4. of the tribe of Benjamin, the kindred of Saul, the greatest part of whom had been sticklers for the continuance of the kingdom in the family of Saul, 3000, ℣. 29. of the tribe of Ephraim, valiant men, 20,800, ℣. 30. of the half-tribe of Manasseh on this side Jordan, whose names were pricked down, being given, to make David king, 18,000, ℣. 31. and of the tribe of Issachar, 200 of the heads of them; men of knowledge and understanding, either in chronology or astrology, or in the proper seasons for husbandry, or for the fixing the beginning of years and months, and the intercalation of them, for keeping the several festivals; or rather, were men of prudence and wisdom, and knew that this was the proper time for making David king, Ishbosheth and Abner his general being dead; and as they were men in high esteem for their parts and abilities, their brethren were at their beck and command, ℣. 32. and of the tribe of Zebulun, warlike men, skilful in war, and well armed, 50,000 men; and their numerous appearance shewed that they were hearty and sincere, being the greatest number of all the tribes, ℣. 33. and of the tribe of Naphtali, 1000 captains, and with them armed men, 37,000, ℣. 34. and of the tribe of Dan, men skilled in war, 28,600, ℣. 35. and of the tribe of Asher, warlike men, 40,000, ℣. 36. and of the Reubenites, Gadites, and half tribe of Manasseh, on the other side Jordan, military men, well armed, 120,000, ℣. 37. which in all made 348,800 men, and upwards.

℣. 38. All these men of war that could keep rank, &c.] Well disciplined men: came with a perfect heart to Hebron to make David king over Israel; they were all of one mind, and quite hearty and sincere in fixing David on the throne of all Israel: and all the rest also of Israel were of one heart also to make David king; those who came not were of the same mind; it was the unanimous voice of the people that he should be their king.

℣. 39. And there they were with David three days, eating and drinking, &c.] Keeping a festival, to testify their joy on this occasion: for their brethren had prepared for them; not the inhabitants of Hebron only, but all the country round about brought in provisions on this joyful occasion; otherwise the men of Hebron would not have been able to have provided what was sufficient for such a vast number, as appears by what follows.

℣. 40. Moreover, they that were nigh, &c.] To Hebron, or bordered on the tribe of Judah: even unto Issachar, and Zebulun, and Naphtali; as far as to those tribes, and including them: brought bread on asses, and on camels, and on mules; all which were creatures used to carry burdens: and on oxen; who, though commonly employed in ploughing, yet, on this occasion, might be made use of either in drawing waggons laden with provisions, such as follow, or in carrying loads on their backs; tho', as Tully [s] observes, their backs show they were not formed to receive and carry burdens: and meat, meal, cakes of figs, and bunches of raisins, and wine, and oil, and oxen, and sheep abundantly; that is, food made of flour, baked meats, besides bread before-before-mentioned, with dried figs, preſſed and made into cakes, and cluſters of grapes dried, and of liquids, wine and oil, which make chearful, and beef and mutton in great plenty: for there was joy in Iſrael; that their civil wars were ended; that they were united into one kingdom again; and had a king over them according to their hearts deſire, the darling of the people, of whom they had raiſed expectations; being a valiant, prudent, and good man, who ſtudied the good both of church and ſtate, and above all, was one of God's chooſing, appointing, and anointing: greater joy there will be, when David's ſon and antitype, Zion's king, reigns, when he ſhall be king over all the earth, and there will be one Lord, and his name one, Pſ. xcvii. 1. Iſ. lii. 7. Zech. xiv. 9. Rev. xi. 15, 16, 17.

CHAP. XIII.

THE contents of this chapter are the ſame with 2 Sam. vi. 1—11. only David's conſultation with the principal men of Iſrael concerning the affair herein tranſacted is premiſed in the firſt four verſes of this.

℣. 1. And David conſulted with the captains of thouſands, and hundreds, and with every leader.] With the chiliarchs and centurions, and every officer in that large body of armed men in every tribe, who met to make and crown him king; for at that time was this conſultation had, and therefore is connected with it; though the affair adviſed about was not yet done, as Dr. Lightfoot [h] obſerves, and was not done until ſome conſiderable time afterwards. Advice being taken, the ſeveral officers went with their men to their reſpective countries, to meet again at a certain time and place to put the thing projected into execution; and between this and that time were Hiram's meſſage to David on his acceſſion to the throne, the taking of Jeruſalem, and the two battles with the Philiſtines, as the ſame writer notes; moſt of which are recorded before this in the book of Samuel, and follow here.

℣. 2. And David ſaid unto all the congregation of Iſrael, &c.] To the above perſons, as repreſentatives of it: if it ſeem good unto you, and that it be of the Lord our God; if it could be thought by them a good and uſeful thing, and agreeable to the will of God, and would make for his glory: let us ſend abroad unto our brethren every where that are left in all the land of Iſrael; that were not then preſent with them, even all the common people; whom David, though king, owns as his brethren; nor is his antitype aſhamed to own this relation between him and his people, Heb. ii. 11. and with them alſo to the prieſts and Levites which are in their cities and ſuburbs; given to them in the ſeveral tribes to dwell in, ſee ch. vi. 54—81. that they may gather themſelves unto us; at a certain time and place appointed.

℣. 3. And let us bring again the ark of our God to us, &c.] The ſymbol of the divine preſence, than which nothing was more deſirable to David, and he choſe to begin his reign over all Iſrael with it: for we enquired not at it in the days of Saul; he being indifferent to religion, and careleſs about it, and the enjoyment of the preſence of God, and having direction from him; and the people alſo content with worſhip at the Tabernacle at Gibeah, though the token of the divine preſence was abſent.

℣. 4. And all the congregation ſaid, that they would do ſo, &c.] They unanimouſly agreed to the motion: for the thing was right in the eyes of all the people; they ſaw the propriety, neceſſity, and uſefulneſs of it.

℣. 5. So David gathered all Iſrael together, &c.] The principal of them, even 30,000 ſelect men, 2 Sam. vi. 1. from Shihor of Egypt; or the Nile of Egypt, as the Targum and other Jewiſh writers, called Shihor from the blackneſs of its water, ſee Jer. ii. 18. though ſome think the river Rhinocurura is meant, which both lay to the ſouth of the land of Iſrael: even unto the entring of Hamath; which the Targum interprets of Antiochia, which lay to the north of the land; ſo that this collection of the people was made from ſouth to north, the extreme borders of the land: to bring the ark of God from Kirjath-jearim; where it then was, and had been a long time, ſee 1 Sam. vii. 1. from hence to the end of the chapter the account is the ſame with 2 Sam. vi. 1—11. ſee the notes there; what little variations there are, are there obſerved.

CHAP. XIV.

THIS chapter gives an account of the meſſage of Hiram king of Tyre to David, and of David's taking him more wives, with the names of his children by them; and of two battles he fought with the Philiſtines, in which he had the victory over them; the ſame are recorded in 2 Sam. v. 11—25. ſee the notes there; and the chapter is concluded with obſerving, that the fame of David, on account of his victories, was ſpread in all countries, and they were ſtruck with a panic from the Lord, and were in dread of him.

CHAP. XV.

DAVID, having prepared a place for the ark of God, gathered the Iſraelites, Levites, and prieſts to aſſiſt in the bringing of it up thereunto, ℣. 1—13. and which was done in a very honourable and joyful manner, ℣. 24—28. though David, for his behaviour, was deſpiſed by Michal his wife in her heart, ℣. 29.

[h] Works, vol. 1. p. 61, 62.

℣. 1. And David made him houſes in the city of David, &c.] With the help of the maſons and carpenters Hiram ſent him, ch. xiv. 1. the royal palace is meant, with all the apartments in it, which were many and large, as ſo great a family he had required, and with all the out-houſes to it neceſſary for his ſervants, and their offices: and prepared a place for the ark of God, and pitched for it a tent; ſee 2 Sam. vi. 17.

℣. 2. Then David ſaid, &c.] Either within himſelf, or to his miniſters and courtiers about him: None ought to carry the ark of God, but the Levites; he ſaw his former miſtake in employing thoſe that were not Levites in bringing up the ark from Kirjath-jearim, and in bringing it in a cart, and not on the ſhoulders of the Levites, and ſo miſcarried in his attempt, 2 Sam. vi. and perhaps had ſince more diligently conſulted the law of God about this matter: for them hath the Lord choſen to carry the ark of God, and to miniſter unto him for ever: as long as the Levitical diſpenſation laſted, as appears from Numb. i. 50. and iv. 15. and vii. 9.

℣. 3. And David gathered all Iſrael together to Jeruſalem, &c.] The chief and heads of the people: to bring up the ark of the Lord; from the houſe of Obed-edom, where it had been three months, and for the ſake of which his houſe was bleſſed, and which David heard of; and this encouraged him to take this ſtep to fetch it from thence: unto his place, which he had prepared for it; ℣. 1. ſee 2 Sam. vi. 12. 17.

℣. 4—10. And David aſſembled the children of Aaron, and the Levites.] Whoſe buſineſs it was to bear the ark when there was any occaſion for it: and from hence to the end of ℣. 10. an account is given of the Levites, and their number employed in this affair: of the ſons of Kohath; a ſon of Levi, that is, of his poſterity; for his immediate ſons, and ſo thoſe of the reſt after-mentioned, had been dead ages ago; the principal of thoſe, at this preſent time, was Uriel, and his kindred, or thoſe of the ſame family with him, were 120: of thoſe of Merari, another ſon of Levi, the chief was Aſaiah, with 220 of his relations: of thoſe of Gerſhon, another ſon of Levi, was Joel, and his brethren were 130: of the poſterity of Elizaphan, a grandſon of Kohath, Exod. vi. 18. 22. the moſt noted was Shemaiah, who had 200 of his family with him: and of thoſe of Hebron, the ſon of Kohath, Exod. vi. 18. Eliel was the moſt famous, and he had 80 of his kindred with him: and of thoſe of Uzziel, another ſon of Kohath in a different line from Elizaphan, who alſo was a ſon of Uzziel, was Amminadab the chief, who had 112 of his kindred with him: the number of Levites, in all, gathered together, were 862, beſides their chiefs.

℣. 11. And David called for Zadok and Abiathar the prieſts, &c.] See 2 Sam. viii. 17. and xv. 27. 29. 1 Kings iv. 4. and for the Levites, for Uriel, Aſaiah, and Joel, Shemaiah, and Eliel, and Amminadab; the ſix chiefs before-mentioned.

℣. 12. And he ſaid unto them, Ye are the chief of the fathers of the Levites, &c.] Of the families of the Levites, heads of their fathers houſes: ſanctify yourſelves, both ye and your brethren; reſpectively under each, whoſe numbers are before given, by waſhing their bodies and cloaths, and abſtaining from their wives: that you may bring up the ark of the Lord God of Iſrael, unto the place that I have prepared for it; 2 Sam. vi. 17.

℣. 13. For becauſe ye did it not at the firſt, &c.] Did not ſanctify themſelves, as the ſupplement in our verſion directs; but rather the ſenſe is, ye were not there at firſt, when the ark was brought from Kirjath-jearim as far as the houſe of Obed-edom, as they ſhould have been; they were not then employed, as was their buſineſs, and therefore the Lord our God made a breach upon us; by ſmiting Uzzah with death, who was no Levite, and touched the ark, which is called his error, and for which God ſmote him, 2 Sam. vi. 7. on which place Lud. Capellus obſerves, the word Shal, we there render error, ſignifies a diſeaſe in the Arabic language, and might formerly deſign a ſudden one with the Hebrew; as an apoplexy; and ſo the ſenſe be, that God ſmote Uzzah with an apoplexy, of which he ſuddenly died: for that we ſought him not after the due order; but inſtead of employing the Levites to carry the ark on their ſhoulders, it was put upon a cart.

℣. 14. So the prieſts and the Levites ſanctified themſelves, &c.] As they were ordered, and in the manner they ſhould: to bring up the ark of the Lord God of Iſrael; for though it was chiefly the work of the Levites, yet the prieſts might do it, and ſometimes did, ſee Joſh. iii. 13, 14. and vi. 6.

℣. 15. And the children of the Levites bare the ark of God upon their ſhoulders, with the ſtaves thereon, as Moſes commanded, according to the word of the Lord.] Not only bare it on their ſhoulders, but with the ſtaves in it, which reſted on their ſhoulders, ſee Numb. vii. 9. Exod. xxv. 14. the reaſon of this command, that the ark ſhould be carried on mens ſhoulders, and not in any carriage, according to Maimonides [h], was both for the honour of it, and leſt its form and ſtructure ſhould be any ways damaged.

℣. 16. And David ſpake to the chief of the Levites, &c.] The ſix before-mentioned, ℣. 11. to appoint their brethren to be the ſingers; before the ark, as they brought it up: with inſtruments of muſick, pſalteries, and harps, and cymbals; which were uſed in thoſe times, ſee 2 Sam. vi. 5. and ch. xiii. 8. ſounding, by lifting up the voice with joy; the inſtrumental muſic was to be attended with vocal muſic, and that very ſonorous and loud, and performed with all tokens of inward joy and gladneſs, as the occaſion required.

℣. 17. So the Levites appointed Heman the ſon of Joel, &c.] The grandſon of Samuel the prophet, ch. vi. 33. and of his brethren, Aſaph the ſon of Berechiah; a famous ſinger, often mentioned in the pſalms, ch. vi. 39. and of the ſons of Merari their brethren, Ethan the ſon of Kuſhaiah; the ſame with the ſon of Kiſhi, ch. vi. 44. theſe were the chief of the ſingers.

℣. 18. And with them their brethren of the ſecond degree, &c.] Who were next unto them, both in office and ſkill in ſinging: the fourteen following, Zechariah, Ben, and Jaaziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, Eliab, and Benaiah, and Maaſeiah, and Mattithiah, and Eliphelehu, and Mikneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, the porters; who, when they were not employed in ſinging, were doorkeepers of the ſanctuary; either they had been porters at the tabernacle in Gibeon, or were ſo after the ark was placed in the tabernacle David prepared for it.

℣. 19. So the ſingers, Heman, Aſaph, and Ethan, &c.] The three principal of them: theſe were appointed ed to ſound with cymbals of braſs; for as there were three ſorts of muſical inſtruments, ℣. 16. theſe three chief ſingers had one of thoſe inſtruments appropriated to them, one of which were the cymbals of braſs, to which the apoſtle alludes, 1 Cor. xiii. 1.

℣. 20. And Zechariah, and Aziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, and Eliab, and Maaſaiah, and Benaiah, &c.] Who were eight of the ſecond degree; Aziel is the ſame with Jaaziel, ℣. 18. and Ben is left out, in whoſe room Azaziah, in the next verſe, ſeems to be put; Ben is thought to be ſick or dead before they came to execute their office, and whom the father of Kimchi takes to be the ſame with him who is expreſſed in the title of Pſ. ix. which title is, on Muth Labben, or the death of Ben: theſe were appointed to ſound with pſalteries on Alamoth; pſalteries were another kind of inſtruments of muſic; and Alamoth, was either the beginning of a ſong, to the tune of which thoſe inſtruments played, or the tune itſelf, and the note of it; either the treble or counter-tenor, a ſhrill ſound, like that of organs, which this word ſometimes ſignifies, ſee Pſ. xlvi. title.

℣. 21. And Mattithiah, and Eliphelehu, and Mikneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, and Azaziah, &c.] Theſe ſix were appointed to ſound: with harps on the Sheminith to excel; which Sheminith ſome take to be an harp with eight ſtrings, or the beginning of a ſong, or a muſical tone, the baſe; ſee the title of Pſ. vi.

℣. 22. And Chenaniah chief of the Levites was for ſong, &c.] But the chief for the ſong were Heman, Aſaph, and Ethan; rather for the burden, as the Targum; for the lifting up and bearing the ark: he inſtructed about the ſong; or about the taking up and bearing the burden, the ark; directing when to take it up, and how far to go with it, and then reſt: becauſe he was ſkilful; a wiſe and prudent man in all things, and ſo proper to direct in this buſineſs.

℣. 23. And Berechiah, and Elkanah were doorkeepers for the ark, &c.] Either whilſt it was at Kirjath-jearim, and at Obed-edom's houſe; or rather after it was put in the tabernacle David had prepared for it; though it may be beſt of all to underſtand it, that thoſe, as it was carrying, went before it, to keep the people from preſſing to it, and gazing on it.

℣. 24. And Shebaniah, and Jehoſhaphat, and Nethaneel, and Amaſai, and Zechariah, and Benaiah, and Eliezer the prieſts, did blow with the trumpets before the ark of God, &c.] With the ſilver trumpets; one uſe of which was to blow with when the camps and ark of the Lord moved, Numb. x. 5, 6. and Obed-edom, and Jehiah were door-keepers for the ark; they went behind it, as the others before it, for the ſame purpoſe, as it was bringing up.

℣. 25. So David and the elders of Iſrael, and the captains over thouſands, &c.] He and the principal men of the nation, and the officers of the army or militia: went to bring up the ark of the covenant of the Lord, out of the houſe of Obed-edom with joy; with all demonſtrations of it; for which purpoſe, ſuch a band of muſic was prepared, as before deſcribed.

℣. 26. And it came to paſs when God helped the Levites that bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, &c.] Not merely granted them bodily ſtrength to carry it, which did not require a great deal; but helped them to carry it with chearfulneſs, and without fear, and ſo as to commit no error, nor in any reſpect provoke his diſpleaſure, as when it was brought before from Kirjath-jearim: that they offered ſeven bullocks and ſeven rams; by way of thanksgiving, beſides what David offered; and this was done by the way, ſee 2 Sam. vi. 13.

℣. 27. And David was clothed with a robe of fine linen, &c.] For though a king, he being among the ſingers, was clothed as they; for ſo it follows: and all the Levites that bare the ark, and the ſingers, and Chenaniah the maſter of the ſong; or of thoſe that bore the burden, the ark, as the Targum: with the ſingers; all were clothed in robes of fine linen: David alſo had upon him an ephod of linen: which he had beſides his linen robe, and was over it; and being a ſhorter and ſtraiter garment, it bound the other cloſer to him; though ſome think this is explanative of the former, and deſigns the ſame, and is what others beſides prieſts, were, on occaſion, allowed to wear, ſee 1 Sam. ii. 18.

℣. 28. Thus all Iſrael brought up the ark of the covenant of the Lord with ſhouting, &c.] See 2 Sam. vi. 15.

℣. 29. And it came to paſs as the ark of the covenant of the Lord came to the city of David, that Michal the daughter of Saul looking out at a window, &c.] Of the palace, to ſee the proceſſion, ſee 2 Sam. vi. 16. 20, 21, 22, 23. where not only this circumſtance is related, and the inward contempt ſhe had David in, becauſe of his behaviour, but alſo what ſhe ſaid, and what David returned in anſwer to it.

CHAP. XVI.

THIS chapter relates, that David offered ſacrifices when the ark was brought into his city; ℣. 1, 2, 3. who were the ſingers he appointed to ſing before it continually, ℣. 4, 5, 6. and the ſong he that day compoſed and delivered to them to ſing, ℣. 7—36. and that he appointed not only proper perſons to miniſter before the ark, but alſo before the tabernacle at Gibeon, ℣. 37—43.

℣. 1, 2, 3. So they brought the ark of God, &c.] What is contained in theſe three verſes is the ſame with 2 Sam. vi. 17, 18, 19. ſee the notes there.

℣. 4. And he appointed certain of the Levites to miniſter before the ark of the Lord, &c.] By ſinging the praiſes of God: and to record; or bring to remembrance; to commemorate in a ſong the great and good things God had done for Iſrael as a people: and to thank, and praiſe the Lord God of Iſrael; for all his benefits, and the bleſſings of his goodneſs beſtowed on them.

℣. 5. Aſaph the chief, &c.] Of thoſe that were now appointed; otherwiſe of the three principal ſingers, Heman was the chief, and Aſaph next, ch. vi. 33. 39. and next to him Zechariah, Jeiel, Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Mattithiah, and Eliab, and Benaiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel with pſalteries, and with harps; to play upon them before the ark at the ſame time the pſalms and ſongs were vocally ſung; the above perſons are ſuch as are named before, ch. xv. 18. 20, 21. but Aſaph made a ſound with cymbals; he ſtruck and played upon them, ſee ch. xv. 19.

℣. 6. Benaiah alſo and Jahaziel the prieſts, &c.] Theſe were appointed to blow with trumpets continually before the ark of the covenant of the Lord; morning and evening.

℣. 7. Then on that day, &c.] The ark was brought to Zion, and the above perſons appointed to miniſter before it: David delivered firſt this pſalm to thank the Lord, into the hand of Aſaph and his brethren; to be ſung by them now, and on every proper occaſion; and this ſeems to be the firſt that was delivered to them; afterwards there were many more, as the titles of the pſalms ſhew; the following is compoſed of part of two others, as they now ſtand in the book of pſalms. From hence, to the end of ℣. 22. is the ſame with Pſ. cv. 1—15. with a little variation, ſee the notes there; and from thence to the end of ℣. 33. is Pſ. xcvi. which ſee; and ℣. 34. is the ſame with Pſ. cvi. 1. and cvii. 1. ſee the notes there.

℣. 35, 36. And ſay ye, ſave us, O God of our ſalvation, &c.] The author of temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal ſalvation; the words are a direction to the ſingers, and thoſe that ſung with them, to expreſs the prayer and doxology in the next verſe, which both are the ſame with Pſ. cvi. 47, 48. ſee the notes there; which David directed by a ſpirit of prophecy, foreſeeing the people of Iſrael would be in captivity among the heathens; tho' ſome think theſe were added by Ezra; for tho' there was in his time a return from the captivity, yet many ſtill remained in it.

℣. 37. So he left there before the ark of the covenant of the Lord Aſaph and his brethren, &c.] Whom he, that is David, had appointed for the ſervice of it: to miniſter before the ark continually; in ſinging the praiſes of God: as every day's work required; at the time of the morning and evening-ſacrifice, as Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it.

℣. 38. And Obed-edom, with their brethren, 68, &c.] The Levites, the brethren of Aſaph and Obed-edom, theſe were left before the ark to miniſter there: Obed-edom, alſo the ſon of Jeduthun; or Ethan, which ſome take to be another Obed-edom; but the vau may be explanative, even Obed-edom: and Hoſah to be porters; theſe he left to be door-keepers of the ark.

℣. 39. And Zadok the prieſt and his brethren the prieſts, &c.] Theſe he left, having appointed them to be before the tabernacle of the Lord, in the high place that was at Gibeon; namely, the tabernacle of Moſes, which was removed from Nob thither in the days of Saul, and continued there to the times of Solomon, ch. xxi. 28. 1 Kings iii. 4. and viii. 4.

℣. 40. To offer burnt-offerings unto the Lord, &c.] Which was the work of the prieſts only to do: upon the altar of burnt-offering continually morning and evening; the lambs of the daily ſacrifice, which were a burnt-offering, and only to be offered on the brazen altar at the tabernacle: and to do according to all that is written in the law of the Lord, which he commanded Iſrael; with regard to them, and all other ſacrifices, ſee Exod. xxix. 38—42.

℣. 41. And with them, &c.] That is, with Zadok, and the prieſts with him at Gibeon: he left Heman and Jeduthun; or Ethan, two principal ſingers: and the reſt that were choſen, who were expreſſed by name; ſee ℣. 18, 20, 21. to give thanks to the Lord, becauſe his mercy endureth for ever; to praiſe him for his benefits, flowing from his grace and mercy continually.

℣. 42. And with them Heman and Jeduthun with trumpets, and cymbals, &c.] Or with them were the trumpets and cymbals, as Kimchi; or as Piſcator ſupplies it, with them he left the trumpets and cymbals: for thoſe that ſhould make a ſound; by ſtriking upon them: and muſical inſtruments of God; ſacred ones, ſuch as were devoted to his ſervice, as pſalteries and harps; the Syriac and Arabic verſions carry the ſenſe of the words quite differently, that theſe men did not ſing with thoſe muſical inſtruments, but with a pleaſant voice, and with pure and acceptable prayers, in humility and uprightneſs, glorified God: and the ſons of Jeduthun were porters; at the tabernacle in Gibeon.

℣. 43. And all the people departed every man to his houſe, &c.] Having accompanied the ark to its place, and having praiſed the Lord for it, and been refreſhed with food, ſee 2 Sam. vi. 19. and David returned to bleſs his houſe; his family; the Targum is, "to bleſs the people;" ſee 2 Sam. vi. 20.

CHAP. XVII.

THIS chapter contains an account of David's intention to built an houſe for God, which he ſignified to Nathan the prophet, who firſt encouraged him to it; but afterwards was ſent by the Lord to him with an order to deſiſt from it, aſſuring him at the ſame time that his ſon ſhould build it, and that his own houſe and kingdom ſhould be eſtabliſhed for ever; for which David expreſſed great thankfulneſs, the whole of which is related in 2 Sam. vii. with ſome little variation, ſee the notes there; only one thing has ſince occurred, which I would juſt take notice of, that here, ℣. 5. as there alſo, it is ſaid by the Lord, that he had not dwelt in an houſe ſince the day he brought up Iſrael out of Egypt; which ſeems to ſuggeſt that he had dwelt in one before, as has been hinted on 2 Sam. vii. 6. even whilſt the people of Iſrael were in Egypt, though it is no where mentioned by Moſes, or any other writer; yet it is not unreaſonable to ſuppoſe it; for as the anceſtors of the Iſraelites, Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, when only travellers from place to place, built altars for God where-ever they came; ſo their poſterity, 'tis highly probable, not only did the ſame, but when they found themſelves ſettled in Egypt, in the land of Goſhen, might build places of worſhip; and when we conſider the wealth of Joſeph, and his family, and indeed of all Iſrael, who enjoyed for many years great plenty, proſperity and liberty before their ſervitude, the vaſt numbers they increaſed to, and the long continuance of them in Egypt, more than 200 years; it will not ſeem ſtrange that they ſhould build houſes for religious worſhip, and even one grand and ſplendid for public ſervice, to which alſo they might be led by the example of the Egyptians; who, as Herodotus ſays [1], were the firſt that erected altars, images, and temples to the gods, and who in the times of Joſeph had one at On, where his father-in-law officiated as prieſt, Gen. xli. 45. or rather to this they might be directed rected by some hints and instructions of their father Jacob before his death, who it is certain had a notion of a Bethel, an house for the public worship of God, Gen. xxviii. 17, 19, 22. and xxxv. 1. and I find a learned man [k] of our own nation of this opinion, and which he founds upon this passage; and he supposes the house God dwelt in in Egypt, was not a tent of goat's hair, as in the wilderness, but a structure of stones or bricks, a firm and stable house, such an one as Abraham built at Damascus when settled there; which continued to the times of Augustus Cæsar, as related by Nicholas of Damascus [l].

CHAP. XVIII, XIX, XX, XXI.

THE xviiith and xixth chapters are the same with 2 Sam. viii. x. with very little variations, which are observed in the notes on them, to which the reader is referred; and ch. xxth

AGREES with various passages in the second Book of Samuel; ℣. 1. with ch. xi. 1. and ℣. 2, 3. with ch. xii. 31, 32. and the rest, to the end of it with ch. xxi. 15—22. What differences there are, are observed in the notes on those passages, which see. And ch. xxiist, EXCEPTING the three last verses, is contained in 2 Sam. xxiv. with some few variations, which are there observed; see the notes there.

℣. 28. At that time when David saw that the Lord had answered him in the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite, &c.] The same with Araunah, 2 Sam. xxiv. 16. with some small variation of the letters, and are of the same signification; both signifying the Ornus, as Hillerus [m] observes, the pine-tree or ash; see Is. xliv. 14. in whose threshing-floor David now was, and where he had been praying and sacrificing; and God had accepted his prayer, as the Targum, and had answered him, by causing fire to come down on the sacrifice and consume it, and by ordering the angel to put up his sword in its sheath: then he sacrificed there; again by the priests, and continued to do so, for he had sacrificed there before, ℣. 26. and finding his sacrifices in that place were acceptable, he repeated them, and did not go to Gibeon, as follows.

℣. 29. For the tabernacle of the Lord which Moses made, &c.] Or ordered to be made by the command of God, and according to his direction: and the altar of burnt-offerings, were at that season in the high place at Gibeon; which was four or five miles from Jerusalem, and too far for David to go in that time of extremity; though he must have gone thither to sacrifice, had not the Lord bid him build an altar on the threshing-floor; for there was the altar of burnt-offering, on which only, according to the law of Moses, sacrifices were to be offered: this high place is, in the Targum, called the sanctuary, it including, as Kimchi observes, the whole house, the tabernacle, and the altar in it; which had been here, and at Nob, 57 years, as the Jewish writers say [n].

℣. 30. But David could not go before it to enquire of God, &c.] Which yet was the proper place to seek the Lord in: the reason follows, for he was afraid, because of the sword of the angel of the Lord; which had so terrified him, that he was so weak that he could not go; and he feared, that should he attempt to go, whilst he was going thither, at such a distance, the angel would make a terrible slaughter in Jerusalem, and therefore he durst not go and leave it; and besides, as the Lord had commanded him to build an altar there, he might fear it would displease him, should he depart from it; and the rather, as hereby he pointed out to him the place where the temple should be built, and sacrifices offered, as appears from what he says in the beginning of the next chapter.

CHAP. XXII.

IN this chapter we read of the place David pitched upon by divine direction for building the temple on, ℣. 1. the preparation he made of artificers to build it, and of matter to build it of, as iron, brass and wood, ℣. 2—5. the charge and instructions he gave to Solomon to set about it, ℣. 6—16. and to the princes of Israel to assist him in it, ℣. 17—19.

℣. 1. Then David said, &c.] Within himself, or to some principal persons about him: this is the house of the Lord God; the place where the temple was to be built, hinted at in Deut. xii. 5. and elsewhere; the meaning is, here, or in this place, shall be the house of God, so Noldius [o], for as yet there were none; but it was now made known to David, that here it should be built, and so the words in 2 Chron iii. 1. should be rendered, then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord in Jerusalem, which was shewn to David his father, which he prepared in the place of David, that which he bought in the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite: and this is the altar of the burnt-offering for Israel; not which he had built here; but this was the place where one should be built for the people of Israel to bring their offerings to, and to be here offered for them by the priests: this he said by a divine impulse upon his mind, or which he concluded from the acceptance of his sacrifice here, signified by fire that came down from heaven and consumed it; and this being in the threshing-floor of the Jebusites, might prefigure the church of God to be built up among the Gentiles.

℣. 2. And David commanded to gather together the strangers that were in the land of Israel, &c.] The proselytes, as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin ver-verſions; that is, proſelytes of the gate, who ſubmitted to the ſeven precepts of Noah, were admitted to dwell in the cities of Iſrael, ſee Gen. ix. 4. and theſe were ordered to be got together to be employed in building the temple, and making preparations for it; and that partly, becauſe they were better artificers than the Iſraelites, who were chiefly employed in huſbandry and cattle, and partly that the Iſraelites, who were freemen, might not be put to hard ſervice; but chiefly this was for the ſake of a myſtery in it, denoting that the Gentiles would be concerned in building the ſpiritual houſe and church of God, the temple was a type and figure of, ſee Zech. vi. 15. and he ſet maſons to hew wrought ſtones to build the houſe of God; to dig them out of the quarries, and fit them for the building.

℣. 3. And David prepared iron in abundance for the nails for the doors of the gates, and for the joinings, &c.] Great plenty of iron to make nails of for joining the boards together, of which the doors and gates were to be made, and for the faſtening of the hinges of them: and braſs in abundance without weight; for making the altar of braſs, and the laver of braſs, and other veſſels. Braſs was much uſed by the heathens in ſacred things, as Macrobius[p] obſerves.

℣. 4. Alſo cedar-trees in abundance, &c.] To be ſawed into boards and planks for the cieling, wainſcotting and flooring of the temple, and other things: for the Zidonians, and they of Tyre, brought much cedar-wood to David; from mount Lebanon, which was chiefly in their poſſeſſion; and which they did either of themſelves as a free gift and preſent to him, or at his requeſt, for which he paid them; and this is another thing pre-figuring the help of the Gentiles in building up the church of Chriſt in goſpel-times.

℣. 5. And David ſaid, Solomon my ſon is young and tender, &c.] Jarchi ſuppoſes he was about 12 years of age, though he obſerves that the ſame word is uſed of Joſhua when 42 years of age; it is probable Solomon might be now about 20: and the houſe that is to be builded for the Lord, muſt be exceeding magnificent, of fame and of glory throughout all countries; and ſuch was the temple built by Solomon; it was renowned throughout the whole earth; never was there a temple equal to it, no not the famous temple of Diana at Epheſus, built by the aſſiſtance of many kings, and at the expence of all Aſia, and was 200 years in building: I will therefore now make preparation for it; ſeeing his ſon was ſo young, and this building to be ſo magnificent, though he himſelf was not admitted to build it: ſo David prepared abundantly before his death; of which we have an after-account in this chapter, and more largely in ch. xxviii. and xxix.

℣. 6. Then he called for Solomon his ſon, &c.] To be brought before him: and charged him to build an houſe for the Lord God of Iſrael; which charge was given a little before his death, after he had made great preparations for this work, as appears from ℣. 5, 14, 15, 16.

℣. 7. And David ſaid to Solomon, &c.] When brought into his preſence: my ſon, as for me, it was in my mind to build an houſe unto the name of the Lord my God; he was diſpoſed and inclined to it, and was once determined upon it, ſee 2 Sam. vii. 2, 3.

℣. 8. But the word of the Lord came to me, &c.] The word of prophecy, as the Targum, by the mouth of Nathan the prophet: ſaying; as follows, which though not expreſſed in the book of Samuel before referred to, is here recorded by divine inſpiration: thou haſt ſhed blood abundantly; Kimchi thinks this refers to the blood of Uriah, and thoſe gallant men that were ſlain with him, and to the prieſts ſlain by the order of Saul, which David was the occaſion of, or accidental cauſe of, 1 Sam. xxii. 22. and to many good men among the Gentiles; though it was the intention of the Lord to conſume the wicked among them, that they might not prevail over Iſrael: and haſt made great wars; with the Philiſtines, Moabites, &c. thou ſhall not build an houſe unto my name, becauſe thou haſt ſhed much blood upon the earth in my ſight; an intimation this, that the church of God, of which this houſe was a type, was to be built by Chriſt, the prince of peace, and to be ſupported and maintained not by force of arms, and by ſpilling of blood, as the religion of Mahomet, but by the preaching of the goſpel of peace.

℣. 9. Behold, a ſon ſhall be born to thee, &c.] For this was ſaid to David before the birth of Solomon, ſee 2 Sam vii. 12, 13. and xii. 24. who ſhall be a man of reſt, and I will give him reſt from all his enemies round about; and ſo ſhould be at leiſure for ſuch a work, and his people enjoy great proſperity and riches, and ſo be capable of contributing largely and liberally to it: for his name ſhall be Solomon; which ſignifies peace, and is one of the ſix perſons that had their names given them before they were born, as the Jews obſerve[q]: and I will give peace and quietneſs unto Iſrael in his days; and ſo a proper time to begin and carry on ſuch a work; of the fulfilment of this prophecy, ſee 1 Kings iv. 24, 25. and v. 3, 4.

℣. 10. He ſhall build an houſe for my name, &c.] For the worſhip of God, and for his honour and glory: and he ſhall be my ſon, and I will be his father; ſee 2 Sam. vii. 13, 14. and which is applied to Chriſt, Heb. i. 5. and I will eſtabliſh the throne of his kingdom over Iſrael for ever; that is, for a long time in his poſterity; and which will have its fulfilment in Chriſt, his antitype, in the utmoſt ſenſe of the expreſſion, whoſe kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom, and his throne for ever and ever, Luke i. 32, 33. Heb. i. 8.

℣. 11. Now, my ſon, the Lord be with thee, &c.] Or ſhall be with thee[r], as ſome; and if it be conſidered as a prayer, it was no doubt a prayer of faith; the Targum is, "may the Word of the Lord be thine help:" and proſper thee; may ſucceſs attend thee: and build the houſe of the Lord thy God, as he hath ſaid of thee; foretold he ſhould, and therefore would aſſiſt him to do it, which was an encouragement to go about it.

℣. 12. Only the Lord give thee wiſdom and underſtanding, &c.] To manage and conduct an affair of ſuch importance, as well as to govern the people as follows: and give thee charge concerning Iſrael; or, when he gives, commits the charge of them to thee, ſets thee king over them: that thou mayeſt keep the law of the Lord thy God; have wiſdom and underſtanding to do that, and make that the rule of all thine actions, private and public, in thine own houſe, in the houſe of God, and in all all things relative to that, and in the government of the nation.

℣. 13. Then ſhalt thou proſper, if thou takeſt heed to fulfil the ſtatutes, &c.] See 1 Kings ii. 2, 3. where the ſame things are ſaid as here; which ſhews that this was ſpoken by David a little before his death.

℣. 14. Now behold in my trouble, &c.] Or affliction, which had attended him, through the greater part of his reign, partly through wars abroad, and partly through rebellions and inſurrections at home: or, in my poverty [a]; living in a frugal way, as if he had been a poor man, in order to lay up money for this purpoſe: I have prepared for the houſe of the Lord; for the building of it, and for things to be uſed in it: 100,000 talents of gold, and 1,000,000 talents of ſilver; a prodigious ſum, be it reckoned as it will; the gold, according to Scheuckzer [b] was anſwerable to 1,222,000,000 ducats of gold; according to Waſcrus [c] the talents of gold made 600 millions of Hungarian pieces of gold, or 6000 tons of gold; our Brerewood [d] makes them to amount to 450,000,000 pounds; but this being a ſum ſo exceſſive large as what exceeds the riches of any monarch read of in hiſtory, he thinks [e] the word Kikkar ſignifies a maſs or cake of gold of an uncertain value; or that this talent was of a leſſer value than the Moſaic one, as there were ſmall talents in the times of Homer [f], as he obſerves, and ſome of different worth in various countries. The ſilver, taking gold to be in proportion to ſilver, as 10 to 1, as it formerly was, is juſt of the ſame value with the gold; but Brerewood who takes it to be as 12 to 1, computes it at 375,000,000 pounds; but the proportion of gold to ſilver is now grown, as biſhop Cumberland obſerves [g], to above 14 to 1. According to Scheuchzer the ſilver talents amounted to 4,500,000,000 imperials or rix-dollars; according to Witſius [h] the gold and ſilver both amounted to 3000 and 900 millions of pieces of gold; but Joſephus [i] has reduced theſe ſums very much, making them to be 10,000 talents of gold, and 100,000 of ſilver. Dr. Prideaux [k] ſays that what is ſaid to be given by David here, and in ch. xxix. 3, 4, 5. and by his princes, ℣. 6, 7, 8. if valued by the Moſaic talent, exceeded the value of 800 millions of our money, which was enough to have built the whole temple of ſolid ſilver: and of braſs and iron without weight, for it is in abundance; there was ſo much of both, that it was too much trouble to take the weight and value of them: timber alſo and ſtone have I prepared; ſee ℣. 2—4. and thou mayeſt add thereunto; which might eaſily be obtained, there being not a ſufficiency of either of them prepared for the work.

℣. 15. Moreover, there are workmen with thee in abundance, &c.] All the ſtrangers in the land being gathered by the order of David, ℣. 2. who were ſkilled in all manner of work as follows: hewers and workers of ſtone and timber; maſons and carpenters: and all manner of cunning men for every manner of work; joiners, carvers, &c.

℣. 16. Of the gold, the ſilver, and the braſs, and the iron, &c.] That is, the cunning artificers were ſkilful to work in each of theſe, ſome in gold and ſilver, others in braſs and iron: there is no number; either of the workmen, or of theſe materials; which yet muſt be reſtrained to the braſs and iron, for the gold and ſilver are numbered, but not the braſs and iron, ℣. 14. ariſe therefore and be doing; not that he ſhould ſet about, and begin the building the temple directly; but as ſoon as he could after he came to the throne, and not neglect and delay it: and the Lord be with thee; as in ℣. 11. and here as there the Targum is, "may the Word of the Lord be thy help."

℣. 17. David alſo commanded all the princes of Iſrael, &c.] His courtiers and nobles that were about him: to help Solomon his ſon; by their advice, and with their purſes, ſhould he need them, and by overlooking the workmen, directing and encouraging them: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 18. Is not the Lord your God with you, &c.] Bleſſing them with wealth and riches: and hath he not given you reſt on every ſide? from all enemies within and without; ſo that they had peace and quietneſs, and leiſure to attend the ſervice he recommended to them: for he hath given the inhabitants of the land into my hand; meaning the reſt of the Canaanites, who before were unſubdued, as even the Jebuſites in Jeruſalem: and the land is ſubdued before the Lord, and before his people; and the extent of it carried to its utmoſt bounds, as God had promiſed.

℣. 19. Now ſet your heart and your ſoul to ſeek the Lord your God, &c.] His honour and glory, moſt ſincerely and cordially, and to the utmoſt of their power: ariſe ye, and build ye the ſanctuary of the Lord God; aſſiſt therein, and encourage the work as much as they were able, without delay: to bring the ark of the covenant of the Lord; which was now in a tent of David's erecting and pitching: and the holy veſſels of God; which were in the tabernacle at Gibeon: into the houſe that is to be built to the name of the Lord; that ſo they might be together, and made uſe of; which in times paſt had been ſeparated, and much neglected.

CHAP. XXIII.

IN this chapter David makes Solomon king, ℣. 1. calls together the princes, prieſts, and Levites, numbers the latter, and aſſigns them their proper work, ℣. 2—5. divides them into 3 claſſes, ℣. 6—23. when the number of them was taken from 20 years of age, and upwards; the reaſons of which are given, partly from the reſt the land enjoyed, and partly from the ſeveral branches of their work and office in the temple, ℣. 24—32.

℣. 1. So when David was old and full of days, &c.] Perhaps was now in the laſt year of his age, about 70 years old, though before he was bed-rid; ſee ch. xxviii. 2. he made Solomon his ſon king over Iſrael; declared him to be his ſucceſſor; this was before the affair of Adonijah, for then he ordered him to be anointed king, and placed on the throne; and this aggravated the rebellion of Adonijah, jah, that it was againſt rhe declared and known will of his father.

℣. 2. And he gathered together all the princes of Iſrael, &c.] Ordered them to be aſſembled, partly to acquaint them with his will and pleaſure, that Solomon ſhould ſucceed him in the kingdom; and partly to ſettle the order of the work and ſervice of the temple; and therefore theſe were convened with the prieſts and Levites; to aſſign to them their reſpective places and offices.

℣. 3. Now the Levites were numbered from the age of thirty years, and upward, &c.] So they were numbered in the days of Moſes, and by his order, and ſo they were now at firſt; though afterwards there was a new reckoning of them, ℣. 24. and their number by their poſts; or according to their heads: man by man was 38,000; which vaſtly exceeds the number in the times of Moſes; ſee Numb. iv. 47, 48. but then thoſe above 50 years of age were not numbered, as they now might; ſince their work in the temple would be much more eaſy, no burdens to carry, as the ark, the veſſels, &c.

℣. 4. Of which 24,000 were to ſet forward the work of the houſe of the Lord, &c.] To prepare for the work of the prieſts by ſlaying the ſacrifices, flaying them, cutting them in pieces, and waſhing them, and bringing them to the altar; 1000 of theſe ſerved weekly in their turns: and 6000 were officers and judges; that acted as juſtices of the peace in the ſeveral parts of the country, heard cauſes and adminiſtered juſtice to the people, being trained up in and acquainted with the laws of God, civil as well as eccleſiaſtic; ſome were more properly judges, and others executioners of their ſentence; ſee Deut. xvi. 18. and xvii. 9.

℣. 5. Moreover 4000 were porters, &c.] At the eaſt, north, and ſouth gates of the temple, in their turns: and 4000 praiſed the Lord with the inſtruments; were ſingers in the temple, which in all made up 38000: which I made ſaid David to praiſe therewith; which inſtruments he deviſed and ordered to be made to praiſe the Lord with; ſee 2 Chron. xxix. 26. Neh. xii. 36.

℣. 6. And David divided them into courſes among the ſons of Levi, &c.] Into three claſſes, according to the number of them, which follow, namely: Gerſhon, Kohath, and Merari; ſee Exod. vi. 16.

℣. 7. Of the Gerſhonites were Laadan and Shimei;] Theſe two were the immediate poſterity of Gerſhon; are the ſame with Libni and Shimhi, and heads of families, Exod. vi. 17.

℣. 8. The ſons of Laadan, the chief was Jehiah, and Zetham, and Joel;] Not his immediate ſons, but ſome that deſcended from him.

℣. 9. The ſons of Shimei, &c.] Not him that was the ſon of Gerſhon, but a deſcendent of Laadan, his ſon, as Kimchi obſerves: Shelomith and Haziel, and Haran, theſe were the chief of the fathers of Laadan; of the families that ſprang from him.

℣. 10. And the ſons of Shimei, &c.] The ſon of Gerſhon, and brother of Laadan, according to Kimchi, which ſeems right, were Jahath, Zina, and Jeuſh, and Beriah, theſe four were the ſons of Shimei; deſcendents of his in the times of David.

℣. 11. And Jahath was the chief, &c.] The prince and head of a family: and Ziza the ſecond; the ſame with Zina in ℣. 10. and is there read Ziza in the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions: but Jeuſh and Beriah had not many ſons; ſo as to conſtitute diſtinct families: therefore they were in one reckoning, according to their father's houſe; made one family with their brethren.

℣. 12. The ſons of Kohath, &c.] The ſecond ſon of Levi: Amram, Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel, four; ſee Exod. vi. 18.

℣. 13. The ſons of Amram, Aaron, and Moſes, &c.] A ſon of Kohath, ℣. 12. Exod. vi. 20. and Aaron was ſeparated; from the children of Iſrael, Exod. xxviii. 1. that he ſhould ſanctify the moſt holy things, he and his ſons for ever; by an holy uſe of them, and keeping them from all unholy and profane uſes; and this they were to do as long as the Aaronical prieſthood laſted: to burn incenſe before the Lord; in the holy place, on the altar of incenſe; which none but prieſts deſcended from Aaron might do: to miniſter unto him; both at the altar of burnt-offering and of incenſe; and the high-prieſt in the holy of holies: and to bleſs his name for ever, or in his name; that is, the people in his name; ſee Numb. vi. 23—27.

℣. 14. Now concerning Moſes the man of God, &c.] Raiſed up by him as a prophet, admitted to great familiarity with him, a law-giver from him, and the ruler and guide of Iſrael under him thro' the wilderneſs: his ſons were named of the tribe of Levi; were only common Levites; Moſes had no ambition to gratify; he ſought no honour for his poſterity; the civil government was left to Joſhua, and the prieſthood to Aaron.

℣. 15. The ſons of Moſes were Gerſhom and Eliezer;] See Exod. xviii. 3, 4.

℣. 16. Of the ſons of Gerſhom Shebuel was the chief;] Of the poſterity of Gerſhom in the times of David, called Shubael, ch. xxiv. 20. the Targum makes him to be the ſame with Jonathan, Judg. xviii. 30[l].

℣. 17. And the ſons of Eliezer were Rehabiah the chief, &c.] The firſt and only begotten, as it follows: and Eliezer had none other ſons; before nor after him: but the ſons of Rehabiah were very many; or greatly multiplied; not, as the Targum ſays, above 600,000; the number of Iſrael, as the Jewiſh writers [m] fancy; which they gather from Exod. i. 7. and xxxii. 10. ſee Numb. xi. 21. and that though Moſes deprecated the multiplication of his ſeed, God fulfilled it.

℣. 18. Of the ſons of Izhar, &c.] Another ſon of Kohath, the ſon of Levi, ℣. 12. Shelomith the chief; the principal deſcendent of Izhar at this time.

℣. 19, 20, 21. Of the ſons of Hebron, &c.] A third ſon of Kohath, ℣. 12. Jeriah the 1ſt, Amariah the 2d, Jahaziel the 3d, and Jekameam the 4th: of the ſons of Uzziel; another ſon of Kohath, ℣. 12. Micah the 1ſt, Jeſiah the 2d: the ſons of Merari, Mahli, and Muſhi, Exod. vi. 19. the ſons of Mahli, Eleazar, and Kiſh; of whom ſee ch. xxiv. 28, 29.

℣. 22. And Eleazar died, and had no ſons, but daughters, &c.] And ſo none to ſucceed him in his office and ſervice: and their brethren the ſons of Kiſh took them; married them, their uncle's ſons, their own couſins.

℣. 23. And the ſons of Muſhi, &c.] The other ſon of Merari, Mahli; ſo called from his uncle, his father's brother: and Eder and Jerimoth, three; mentioned again ch. xxiv. 30.

℣. 24. Theſe were the ſons of Levi, after the houſe of their fathers, &c.] According to the three claſſes of them, as deſcending from the three ſons of Levi: even even the chief of the fathers; or heads of families: as they were counted by number of names by their polls; or according to their heads, one by one: that did the work for the service of the house of the Lord; the particulars of which are in ℣. 28—31. from the age of 20 years, and upwards; they were first numbered from 30 and upwards, ℣. 3. but David before his death ordered they should be numbered from 20 and upwards, ℣. 27. because the Israelites, being increased, there would be more work for the priests in the temple, which would require the assistance of more Levites. The reasons follow.

℣. 25. For David said, &c.] As a reason why he ordered a new account to be taken: the Lord God of Israel hath given rest unto his people; from all their enemies round about, and settled rest in the land, so that there was no danger of being carried captive, as they were time after time in the days of the Judges, and whereby they became more numerous: that they may dwell in Jerusalem for ever; where the temple would always continue, and not be removed as the ark and tabernacle had been, and where all Israel would appear three times in the year continually.

℣. 26. And also unto the Levites, &c.] Or with respect to them: they shall no more carry the tabernacle; on their shoulders, from place to place, as they had done: nor any vessels of it for the service thereof; and so the service of it did not require men at their full strength, but such as were but twenty years of age might be employed in it.

℣. 27. For by the last words of David, &c.] Or therefore by the last orders he gave before his death: the Levites were numbered from 20 years old and above; as able and sufficient to do the work of their office.

℣. 28. Because their office was to wait on the sons of Aaron, &c.] The priests: for the service of the house of the Lord; to assist them therein, and not to bear burdens as in times past; the Targum is, "wherefore the place of their habitations was by the side of the sons of Aaron, for the worship of the sanctuary of the Lord:" in the courts, and in the chambers, and in the purifying of all holy things, and the work of the service of the house of God; to keep the house, and all the apartments in it, courts and chambers clean, by sweeping and washing them, and carrying out all the filth thereof made by the sacrifices, and otherwise.

℣. 29. Both for the shew-bread, &c.] Also to make and get that ready every week for the priests to set on the shew-bread-table, when they took off the other that had stood a week, see ch. ix. 32. and for the fine flour for meat-offering, and for the unleavened cakes, and for that which is baked in the pan, and for that which is fryed; to deliver out the flour of which these several things were made, see ch. ix. 31. and Lev. ii. and for all manner of measures and size; as the hin and the ephah, and the several parts of them; for things both liquid and dry, which were in their keeping, and according to which they gave out the proper quantity of oil, and wine, and fine flour upon occasion.

℣. 30. And to stand every morning to thank and praise the Lord, &c.] The office of others of them was to sing the praises of God, both vocally and with instruments of musick, at the time of the morning-sacrifice: and likewise at even; at the time of the evening-sacrifice, by way of thankfulness for the mercies of the night and of the day.

℣. 31. And to offer all burnt-sacrifices unto the Lord, &c.] This was the work of the priests to offer such sacrifices, and not the Levites; but the meaning is, according to the Targum, and so Kimchi, that these not only sung the praises of God morning and evening, but at all times when burnt-offerings were offered to the Lord; besides, some of them helped the priests at such times in slaying the sacrifices, and bringing them to the altar: and especially their service was requisite in the sabbaths, in the new moons, and on the set feasts, by number; because besides the daily sacrifices, there were additional offerings at those times: according to the order commanded unto them continually before the Lord; see Numb. xxviii. and xxix.

℣. 32. And that they should keep the charge of the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] That no unclean persons entered into it, and that none of the vessels were carried out of it; this was the business of the porters: and the charge of the holy place; of things that belonged unto it, the vessels in it, and what was requisite for it, and used there: and the charge of the sons of Aaron their brethren; the priests, whatever they should command them to do: in the service of the house of the Lord; in any part and branch of it before specified.

CHAP. XXIV.

THIS chapter relates the distribution David made of the priests into twenty-four classes or courses, and which were observed by lot, and each course had an head or principal man over it, ℣. 1—19. and of a like distribution of the Levites into the same number of courses, to attend the priests in theirs, ℣. 20—31.

℣. 1. Now these are the divisions of the sons of Aaron, &c.] Into the classes or courses following: the sons of Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar; ch. vi. 3. these were the immediate sons of Aaron; but the division or distribution of them into classes, are of their posterity in the times of David, who descended from the two latter.

℣. 2. But Nadab and Abihu died before their father, &c.] Whilst he was living, see Lev. x. 1, 2. and had no children, therefore Eleazar and Ithamar executed the priests office; otherwise, as Jarchi observes, had their brethren left children, they would have come into the office before them.

℣. 3. And David distributed them, &c.] The posterities of Eleazar and Ithamar into certain classes or courses: both Zadok of the sons of Eleazar, and Ahimelech of the sons of Ithamar; these were the two principal men of the respective families, the one was high-priest, and the other sagan or deputy; or they both officiated as high-priests alternately, until the one was removed in Solomon's time, and the other established alone. And now their brethren the priests, who were under each of these, are the persons David divided into classes: according to their offices in their service; to perform their their office as priests in the service of the temple in their turns.

℣. 4. And there were more chief men found of the sons of Eleazar, than of the sons of Ithamar, &c.] Or heads of men, heads of their fathers houses and families: and thus were they divided; among the sons of Eleazar there were 16 chief men of the house of their fathers, and eight among the sons of Ithamar, according to the house of their fathers; in all 24, and into so many classes or courses did David divide them; Jarchi says, at first when the tabernacle was at Shiloh, there were but 16 courses, eight from Eleazar, and eight from Ithamar, as is explained in the treatise of fasting[n]; but when David saw that there were more heads of men, or chief men of Eleazar's, he divided the courses of Eleazar into two parts, and fixed 16 courses; and the courses of Ithamar he established as at first, eight courses; left them as they were, which he thinks appears from ℣. 6. but of the former number of courses, and when and by whom fixed, the Jews are divided[o]; see the note on Luke i. 5. perhaps there were none before David's time.

℣. 5. Thus were they divided by lot, one sort with another, &c.] Which course should serve first, and which next, and so on; and who should be the chief to each course; which course was to serve a week, and then go out; and this method was taken to prevent envy, strife and contention about precedence: for the governors of the sanctuary; or of the holy things, or who presided in things ecclesiastical: and governors of the house of God; or rather governors of God, appointed by him judges in civil things: were of the sons of Eleazar, and of the sons of Ithamar; there were of both families, some employed both in sacred and civil things, and who presided in each.

℣. 6. And Shemaiah the son of Nethaneel the scribe, &c.] The Targum is, Moses the chief scribe, so called: one of the Levites wrote them; the lots, and the names upon them, put into the urn, and as they came out, which was first, second, &c. and this was done before the king, and the princes, and Zadok the priest, and Abimelech the son of Abiathar, and before the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites; and in this public manner before such great personages, and in the presence of those that were interested in the affair, that it might appear plainly no frandulent methods were taken, and that there might be no suspicion of any: one principal household being taken for Eleazar, and one for Ithamar; the sense of Jarchi as above, and other Jewish writers, is, that one was added to each family of Eleazar, and so made 16, and Ithamar's were retained, and left as at first, eight: but the sense is, that first one family of Eleazar was taken, and then one of Ithamar's family, and then one of Eleazar's again, and so on until 16 were gone through; and then the other eight were divided under so many heads of the family of Eleazar.

℣. 7—18. Now the first lot came forth to Jehoiarib, &c.] And the other 23 to the following persons in order: Jedaiah, Harim, Seorim, Malchijah, Mijamin, Hakkoz, Abijah, Jeshua, Shecaniah, Eliashib, Jakim, Huppah, Jeshebeab, Bilgah, Immer, Hezir, Aphses, Pethahiah, Jehezekel, Jachin, Gamul, Delaiah, and Maaziah; of all which courses we know little more than their names, though they continued in some form or other both under the first and second temple, to the destruction of it; the Jews say only four of these courses returned from the Babylonish captivity, which were those of Jedaiah, Harim, Pashur and Immer; though Pashur is not among these here; yet they say each of these four had six lots, and that the names, and the order of the other courses, were retained and continued under them, and supplied by them: hence we read of Mattathiah, from whom sprung the Maccabees, as of the course of Jehoiarib, 1 Maccab. ii. 1. which was the first course, and the most honourable; wherefore Josephus[p], who was of it, valued himself upon it, that he was not only of the priestly order, but of the first class or course of the 24; and we also read of the course of Abijah, the eighth course, of which was Zechariah the father of John the Baptist, Luke i. 5. of these courses, see more in the note there.

℣. 19. These were the orderings of them, &c.] Their classes or courses into which they were divided: in their service to come into the house of the Lord; to perform their service in the temple, according to their turns, and in course as fixed by lot; one class or course served one week, and then went out, and another came in. each consisting of 1000 men, see ch. xxiii. 4. according to their manner; law, right, custom, here prescribed for them: under Aaron their father; that is, him who was high-priest for the time being; who bore this name because his succession and representative, under whose inspection, direction and authority all the rest of the priests were, and whom they were to obey in all things: as the Lord God of Israel had commanded him; to take care they should be done.

℣. 20—30. And the rest of the sons of Levi were these, &c.] Who were not priests, only Levites; and from hence, to ℣. 30. their names are given; of the sons of Amram, Shubael, and his son Jehdeiah; Rehabiah the son of Eleazar, and Isshiah the son of Rehabiah; of the Izharites, so called from Izhar, the brother of Amram, Shelomoth, and his son Jahath; and of the sons of Hebron, another brother of Amram; Jeriah, Amariah, Jahaziel, and Jekameam; of the sons of Uzziel, another brother of Amram, Michah, and his son Shamir; Isshiah the brother of Michah, and his son Zechariah: the sons of Merari, Mahli and Mushi, his immediate sons; from whom sprung by Jaaziah, Beno, Shoham, Zaccur and Ibri; of Mahli sprung Eleazar, who had no sons; and Kish, whose son was Jerahmeel; the sons of Mushi, another son of Merari, Mahli, Eder, and Jerimoth; most of these names are the same with those in ch. xxiii. 16—23. these were the sons of the Levites, after the house of their fathers; some of the principal of them.

℣. 31. These likewise cast lots over-against their brethren, the sons of Aaron, &c.] These being divided into 24 classes also, cast lots; which class should answer to, attend upon, and serve the first course of the priests, and which the second, and so on. And this they did in the same solemn and public manner as the priests had done: in the presence of David the king, and Zadok, and Abimelech, and the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites; as in ℣. 6. even the principal fathers over-against their younger brethren; the sense is, either that the one stood over-against the other, to be distributed by lot, the one as well as the other; or they were chosen by lot, let it fall as it would, with-without any regard to age or dignity, to the seniority or largeness of houses and families; but as they were chosen, be they younger or elder, richer or poorer, their families more or less numerous, and ancient, so they took their places.

CHAP. XXV.

THIS chapter relates the appointment of the sons of Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun, to be singers in the temple, ℣. 1—7. the distribution of them by lot into 24 classes, 12 in each class, ℣. 8—31.

℣. 1. Moreover, David and the captains of the host separated to the service, &c.] Of singing the praises of God; this was done by the princes of the people, and the chief of the priests, who were gathered together, and before whom the lots were cast, both for priests and Levites, and now here for the singers, see ch. xxiii. 2. and xxiv. 6. and those that were separated were of the sons of Asaph, and of Heman, and of Jeduthun; or Ethan, the three precenters, or chief of the singers: who should prophesy with harps, with psalteries, and with cymbals; sing psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs, indited by the holy Spirit of God; which contained in them prophecies concerning things to come, particularly relating to the Messiah, of which there are many in the book of Psalms; and to the tunes of these they played on the above instruments of musick: and the number of the workmen, according to their service was; as follows.

℣. 2. Of the sons of Asaph, &c.] Who were separated, and by lot appointed to the service of singers in the temple: Zaccur, and Joseph, and Nethaniah, and Asarelah; called Jesharelah, ℣. 14. these had the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 7th lots, ℣. 9, 10. 12. 14. under the hands of Asaph; under his instruction and authority: which prophesied according to the order of the king; which Asaph composed psalms under the inspiration of the Spirit of God, and was ordered by king David to sing them, and by whose command they were inserted in the book of psalms, where they now stand with his name to them.

℣. 3. Of Jeduthun, &c.] Or Ethan, the sons of Jeduthun: Gedaliah and Zeri; called Izri, ℣. 11. and Jeshaiah, Hashabiah, and Mattithiah, six; whereas five only are mentioned; it may be thought that Shimei, ℣. 17. is the sixth, he not being mentioned elsewhere; it is a tradition of the Jews, that his mother was now with child of him, and it being foreseen by the Holy Spirit that he would be the chief of a course, the number six is given, as Jarchi observes; but rather as Kimchi, he was young, and not fit to sing, yet was chosen the head of a course, until he was grown up and fit for it; to these six came up the 2d, 4th, 8th, 12th, 14th, and 10th lots, ℣. 9. 11. 15. 21. 17. and these were under the hands of their father Jeduthun; to instruct and direct them, and appoint their service to them: who prophesied with a harp; or sung a prophetic psalm or hymn on that: to give thanks, and to praise the Lord; for what he had done and promised, and foretold he would do for his people.

℣. 4. Of Heman: the sons of Heman, &c.] The third chief singer: Bukkiah, Mattaniah, Uzziel; the same with Azareel, ℣. 18. Shebuel; called Shubael, ℣. 20. and Jerimoth, Hananiah, Hanani, Eliathah, Giddalti, and Romanti-ezer, Joshbekashah, Mallothi, Hothir, and Mahazioth; in all fourteen, to whom came the 6th, 9th, 11th, 15th, 16th, 18th, 20th, 22d, 24th, 17th, 19th, 20th, and 23d lots, ℣. 13. 16. 18. 20. 22, 23. 25. 27. 29. 31. 24. 26. 28. 30.

℣. 5. All these were the sons of Heman, the king's seer, &c.] The prophet of the king, as the Targum, who was frequently with him, assisting him in the words of God; in divine things: to lift up the horn; to blow with the hornpipe or trumpet, and to magnify and set forth the greatness of the kingdom of Israel, and especially of the king Messiah, the horn of salvation, that would be raised up in the house of David: and God gave to Heman fourteen sons; whose names are before-mentioned: and three daughters; of whom we have no more account, only may observe, that both are the gifts of God, and an heritage from him, Ps. cxxvii. 3.

℣. 6. All these were under the hands of their father, for song in the house of the Lord, &c.] Instructed and directed by him in the performance of the service in the temple: with cymbals, psalteries, and harps, for the service of the house of God; which were the three principal instruments of music used in the temple-service: according to the king's order, to Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman; who ordered and directed them what to sing, what tunes to make use of, and what instruments to play upon to those tunes.

℣. 7. So the number of them, with their brethren, &c.] Who each of them had 12 with them, as after reckoned: that were instructed in the songs of the Lord; taught how to sing them: even all that were cunning; expert and well skilled in the science of singing: was 288; for there being 24 classes answerable to those of the priests, and 12 in each class, 12 times 24 make 288.

℣. 8. And they cast lots, ward against ward, &c.] That is, which ward or course of the singers should answer to and attend on the first ward or course of the priests in their weekly service, and which the second, and so on: as well the small as the great, the teacher as the scholar; no regard was had to the age of a person, his being the first-born or a younger brother, or to his office and station, whether as a teacher or a learner in the science of singing; he was made the head of a course, as the lot came up; and it may easily be observed, by comparing the lots in the following verses with the sons of the chief singers, according to the order of them in ℣. 2, 3, 4. that the younger are often preferred in the courses by lot to the elder, of which even the first lot is an instance.

℣. 9. Now the first lot came forth for Asaph to Joseph, &c.] His second son to the preference of the first-born, ℣. 2. the second to Gedaliah, who with his brethren and sons were twelve; and which must also be understood of Joseph, and supplied to him; for those being both in one verse, as Jarchi observes, it is but once mentioned, but must be supplied, or otherwise the number of 288 could not be made up; the same is observed of all the other lots and courses to the end of the chapter as here, and therefore need no more remarks.

CHAP. XXVI.

IN this chapter we have a farther account of th diſpoſition and diſtribution of the Levites, to ſerve in other offices, as of porters at the ſeveral gates of the temple, for which they caſt lots, ℣. 1—19. of others, as over the treaſures of the houſe of the Lord, ℣. 20—28. and of others that were appointed judges in the land, to adminiſter juſtice to the people, ℣. 29—32.

℣. 1. Concerning the diviſions of the porters, &c.] Or door-keepers, whoſe buſineſs it was to open and ſhut the doors of the temple, to keep all impure and improper perſons from entring into it, or any of the veſſels being carried out of it, and to prevent tumults and riots about it; theſe, as it ſeems, David divided into a like number of claſſes, as the ſingers, to take their turns in waiting: of the Korhites was Meſhelemiah the ſon of Kore, of the ſons of Aſaph; not Aſaph the ſinger, who was a Gerſhonite, but the ſame with Eliaſaph, ch. vi. 23, 27. a Korhite.

℣. 2, 3. And the ſons of Meſhelemiah were, Zechariah the firſt-born, &c.] And ſix more, who are mentioned in their order: Jediael, Zebadiah, and Jathniel, Elam, Jehohanan, and Elioenai.

℣. 4, 5. Moreover, the ſons of Obed-edom, &c.] The ſame at whoſe houſe the ark was, before it was brought by David to Zion; his ſons were porters alſo, as himſelf, ch. xv. 24. and xvi. 38. mention is made of eight ſons of his, according to their birth: Shemaiah, Jehozabad, Joah, Sacar, Nethaneel, Ammiel, Iſſachar, Peulthai; for God bleſſed him; as with wealth and riches, ſo with a numerous offspring, and that becauſe of his entertainment of the ark at his houſe; the great increaſe of his family is aggravated by the Jews [q] beyond all credit, that all in his family brought eight at a birth; the Targum here makes them eighty-two in all.

℣. 6. Alſo unto Shemaiah his ſon, &c.] His firſt-born, ℣. 4. were ſons born, that ruled throughout the houſe of their father; were heads of families, eminent and principal men: for they were mighty men of valour; which their office ſometimes required them to be, to guard the temple at night as well as day from thieves and robbers, and to hinder reſolute men entring in, unfit for it, and ſeize on rioters, and quell tumults raiſed.

℣. 7. The ſons of Shemaiah, &c.] The ſame before-mentioned, the firſt-born of Obed-edom: Othni, and Rephael, and Obed, and Elzabad, whoſe brethren were ſtrong men; Elihu and Semachiah; which may rather denote their valour and courage, as before, though ſtrength of body was needful, particularly to open and ſhut the doors of the temple, which, Joſephus [r] ſays, required the aſſiſtance of 20 men.

℣. 8. All theſe of the ſons of Obed-edom, &c.] And grandſons: they and their ſons and their brethren, able men for ſtrength for the ſervice; men of fortitude of mind and ſtrength of body, as before obſerved: were 62 of Obed-edom; that ſprung from him, which the Jews [s] account for in an extravagant manner, as the effect of miraculous births.

℣. 9. And Meſhelemiah had ſons and brethren, ſtrong men, eighteen, &c.] He had ſeven ſons, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and therefore muſt have eleven brethren or kinſmen.

℣. 10. Alſo Hoſah of the children of Merari had ſons, &c.] Who was a fellow-porter of Obed-edom's at the ark, ch. xvi. 38. Simri the chief (for though he was not the firſt-born; yet his father made him the chief;) the firſt-born being unfit for ſervice, either through want of an intellectual capacity, or of ſtrength of body, or through ſome defect or another; according to the Syriac verſion, he was dead; ſo ſome underſtand the words, he, the father, had no firſt-born remaining or living.

℣. 11. Hilkiah the ſecond, Tebaliah the third, Zechariah the fourth; all the ſons and brethren of Hoſah were thirteen.] Four ſons, and nine brethren or kinſmen.

℣. 12. Among theſe were the diviſions of the porters, even among the chief men, &c.] Theſe before named were the principal men of the porters; among which was a diviſion or diſtribution of them into claſſes or courſes, in which they ſerved weekly in turn: having wards one againſt another, to miniſter in the houſe of the Lord; meaning either to watch in, as on the north againſt the ſouth, and the eaſt againſt the weſt, and vice verſa. The Jews ſay [t], the prieſts kept ward in three places in the houſe of the ſanctuary; in the houſe of Abtines, in the houſe of Nitzotz, and in the houſe of Moked; and the Levites in 21 places, five at the five gates of the mountain of the houſe, four at the four corners of it within, five at the five gates of the court, four at the four corners of it without, one at the chamber of the offering, one at the chamber of the veil, and another behind the houſe of atonement, the holy of holies; but rather the ſenſe is, that they had wards or courſes anſwerable to thoſe of the prieſts, and the other Levites, the ſingers, and were diſtributed into 24 claſſes or courſes as they, which are thus reckoned by Kimchi; at the eaſt ſix, at the north four, at the ſouth four, at Aſuppim two and two, which were four, at the weſt four, and at Parbar two; lo, twenty-four; ſee ℣. 17, 18.

℣. 13. And they caſt lots, &c.] To determine at which gate each ſhould ſtand, who at this gate, and who at the other, &c. as well the ſmall as the great, according to the houſe of their fathers for every gate; meaning, not little ones and grown perſons in a family, but the ſmaller and poorer families, and the larger and richer ones, had their places aſſigned them at the ſeveral gates, as the lot directed; they did not go according to the dignity and precedence of their families, but according to lot.

℣. 14. And the lot eaſtward fell to Shelemiah, &c.] The ſame with Meſhelemiah, ℣. 1, 2, 9. he by lot was placed at the eaſtern gate, called afterwards the gate Shuſhan, the city Shuſhan being portrayed upon it [u]: then for Zechariah his ſon (a wiſe counſellor;) and who was his firſt-born, ℣. 2. a man of great parts and learning: for they were not mean perſons that were employed in this office, nor was the office a mean one, like that of our porters;

porters; but men of conſiderable rank and figure, and of knowledge and learning, were in it; ſome of them were judges, ℣. 29. and their places were places of great truſt, they had much treaſure committed to them, as appears by ℣. 20, &c. they caſt lots, and his lot came out northward; where was a gate in after-times, called Teri or Tedi, which differed from other gates in this, that it had no threſhold, only one ſtone was laid upon another, and was not commonly uſed [w].

℣. 15. To Obed-edom ſouthward, &c.] Where were two gates in after-times, called the gates of Huldah [x]: and to his ſons, the houſe of Aſuppim; the word has the ſignification of gathering, hence ſome take it to be a council-houſe, where the Sanhedrim or elders gathered together, and ſat; and others, rather a treaſure-houſe, where things of value were collected and laid up, ſince Obed-edom had the charge of gold and ſilver, and the veſſels of the houſe, 2 Chron. xxv. 24. but Dr. Lightfoot [y] is of opinion, that "Aſuppim were two gates in the weſtern wall, which ſtood moſt ſouth, or neareſt to Jeruſalem; and the houſe of Aſuppim was a large piece of building that ran between them, which was a treaſury, or divers rooms for treaſuring or laying up ſomething for the uſe of the temple;" though L'Empereur thinks [z] it was the chamber of Korban, which is not ſo probable.

℣. 16. To Shuppim and Hoſah the lot came forth weſtward, &c.] Of Shuppim no mention is before made; of Hoſah, ſee ℣. 10, 11. their lot was to be placed at the gates on the weſtern wall, where were four; the two more ſouthward being aſſigned to the ſons of Obed-edom, whoſe lot alſo was ſouthward, are taken notice of under the diviſion in the preceding verſe; Parbar was another, ℣. 18. and another follows here: with the gate Shallecheth, by the cauſey of the going up; this gate was in later times called Coponius, from the name of a Roman commander, in the times of Herod, who might give it this name on his account; it might have the name of Shallecheth either from ſending out, or carrying out the filth of the temple through it; or rather from caſting up the cauſey, as here expreſſed, which was the going up, or aſcent, Solomon made, by which he went up to the temple, 1 Kings xx. 5. and which agrees with the deſcription Joſephus [a] gives of one of the gates on the weſtern wall, that it led to the royal palace, the valley between being filled up for the paſſage; on each ſide of which cauſey, it is ſaid, grew oaks and teil-trees, ſee Iſ. vi. 13. which ſerved both to keep up the cauſey, and to make a fine, pleaſant, ſhady walk for the king to paſs through to the temple; all which are obſerved by Dr. Lightfoot [b]: ward againſt ward; for as the gates anſwered one another, ſo the wards or watches at them.

℣. 17. Eaſtward were ſix Levites, &c.] The eaſtern gate being the way of entrance into the temple, required more porters: northward four a day; in the day-time, or every day, where was the gate Teri or Tedi, ℣. 14. ſouthward four a day; at the two gates of Huldah, ℣. 15. and toward Aſuppim two and two; which were two gates, two at each gate, ℣. 15.

℣. 18. At Parbar weſtward, &c.] A gate at the weſtern wall; the Jewiſh writers generally interpret it an outward place, but Dr. Lightfoot [c] thinks it is the ſame with Parvar, which ſignifies ſuburbs, 2 Kings xxiii. 11. and which agrees with the deſcription Joſephus [d] gives of one of the weſtern gates, that it led to the ſuburbs: four at the cauſey; by which was the gate Shallecheth, ℣. 16. and two at Parbar; the gate before-mentioned.

℣. 29. Theſe are the diviſions of the porters among the ſons of Kore, and among the ſons of Merari.] For among thoſe Levites which deſcended from Kore, a grandſon of Kohath, and which ſprung from Merar, a brother of Kohath, the porters only were, ſee ℣. 1. 10.

℣. 20. And of the Levites, &c.] The reſt of the Levites, as the Gerſhonites, Amramites, Izharites, and Hebronites, ℣. 21. 23. Ahijah was over the treaſures of the houſe of God; as the tithes, veſſels, veſtments, wine, and oil, and other things; ſuch an one was Phinehas at the time of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Veſpaſian, who being taken, ſhewed and delivered the prieſts garments, and many other precious things and ſacred ornaments under his care [e]: and over the treaſures of the dedicate things; voluntarily devoted for ſacrifices and repairs of the temple; and this Ahijah had the care of each of thoſe at firſt, which afterwards were divided, and put under the care of different perſons.

℣. 21. As concerning the ſons of Laadan, &c.] The ſame with Libni, ſee ch. xxiii. 7. the ſons of the Gerſhonite Laadan; ſo called, to diſtinguiſh him from another Laadan, as Kimchi thinks: chief fathers, even of Laadan the Gerſhonite; that ſprung from him: were Jehieli; and his ſons next mentioned.

℣. 22. The ſons of Jehieli; Zetham, and Joel his brother, &c.] Both ſons of Jehieli: which were over the treaſures of the houſe of the Lord; that part of the truſt which before was committed to Ahijah, which concerned proviſions for ſacred uſes, before obſerved.

℣. 23. Of the Amramites, and the Izharites, the Hebronites, and the Uzzielites.] Who ſprang from the four ſons of Kohath, Amram, Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel, Exod. vi. 18. with reſpect to the concerns they ſeverally had in the truſt of the treaſures, the account follows, all but the Uzzielites, who are not after mentioned.

℣. 24. And Shebuel the ſon of Gerſhom, the ſon of Moſes, was ruler of the treaſures.] This is the firſt time that any of the poſterity of Moſes are taken notice of, as being in any office of honour, authority, and truſt; by the Targum he is ſaid to be Jonathan, ſpoken of in Judg. xviii. 30. but very wrongly; this man, according to Jarchi and Kimchi, had all the treaſures and treaſurers under him.

℣. 25. And his brethren by Eliezer, &c.] His kinſmen that deſcended from Eliezer, the brother of Gerſhom, the anceſtor of Shebuel, whoſe deſcent from him in ſucceſſion were Rehabiah, Jeſhaiah, Joram, Zichri, and Shelomith.

℣. 26. Which Shelomith, &c.] The laſt mentioned in the lineage from Eliezer, the younger ſon of Moſes: and his brethren; or kinſmen: were over all the treaſures of the dedicate things; which had been devoted for the ſervice of God, and of the temple particularly: which David the king had dedicated; out of the ſpoils he took in war, ſee 2 Sam. viii. 11. the chief fathers; princes of tribes, and heads of families: the captains over thouſands and hundreds; in the ſeveral tribes of the kingdom, and and were concerned in the adminiſtration of juſtice to the people: and the captains of the hoſt had dedicated; of the army, out of the ſpoils in victory that came to their ſhare, ſee Numb. xxxi. 48. 50. as follows.

℣. 27. Out of the ſpoils won in battle, did they dedicate to maintain the houſe of the Lord.] When it ſhould be built; for as yet it was not; both to repair it when neceſſary, and to provide ſacrifices for it; or to confirm, ſtrengthen, and animate the heart of the king to build it, ſo ſome, and put it into the power of his hands to do it; ſo the Romans dedicated the beſt of their ſpoil, and laid it up in the temple of Jupiter Feretrius, after the example of Romulus, their firſt king [f]; yea, ſometimes out of the ſpoil they erected temples, as Tarquinius Superbus [g] did; or repaired and ornamented them, as the temple at Delphos, and others [h].

℣. 28. And all that Samuel the ſeer, &c.] Or prophet, won in battle with the Philiſtines: and Saul the ſon of Kiſh; in his wars with the Moabites, Edomites, Amalekites, and Philiſtines: and Abner the ſon of Ner; the general of his army, who as ſuch had his ſhare in the ſpoils: and Joab the ſon of Zeruiah; the general of David's army, who fought with the Ammonites, Syrians, and others; all of whom had dedicated more or leſs towards the building of the temple, and the ſupport of it, it being known by them all, that God would have a place to put his name in: and whoſoever had dedicated any thing, it was under the hand of Shelomith, and of his brethren; this man had a great truſt committed to him, with his brethren; ſome, before-mentioned, are ſaid to be over the treaſures, ſome over one part, and ſome over another; but this man was over all of them, he had the ſuperintendency of the whole.

℣. 29. Of the Izharites, Chenaniah and his ſons were for the outward buſineſs over Iſrael, &c.] Which was done out of the temple, and out of Jeruſalem, in the ſeveral parts of the country: for officers and judges; to adminiſter juſtice and judgment, and to take care that the laws of God were obſerved, both with reſpect to things civil and religious, and delinquents puniſhed; which is a better ſenſe than what Jarchi and Kimchi put upon this, outward buſineſs, as if it lay in taking care to have timber cut down in the foreſt, and ſtones dug and hewed in the mountains, for the building of the temple; and that the lands were ploughed, and the vineyards, gardens, and orchards, dreſſed, which were devoted to ſacred uſes.

℣. 30. And of the Hebronites, Haſhabiah and his brethren, men of valour, 1700, &c.] And ſuppoſing the Izharites in the preceding verſe to be 1600, theſe, with thoſe on the other ſide Jordan, 2700, ℣. 32. make up juſt the 6000 officers and judges, ch. xxiii. 4. theſe were officers among them of Iſrael on this ſide Jordan weſtward; in thoſe parts of the land which were on this ſide Jordan, to the weſt of it, yet nearer to it than thoſe meant by Iſrael in the preceding verſe; it may reſpect thoſe that dwelt more remote from Jordan, though on this ſide alſo, towards the Mediterranean ſea: in all buſineſs of the Lord, and in the ſervice of the king; in things divine and civil, what appertained to the worſhip of God, and the ſupport of civil government, and to take care that all the laws were obſerved, moral, ceremonial, and judicial, and that both the Lord was feared, and the king honoured, and both had what was due unto them.

℣. 31. Among the Hebronites was Jerijah the chief, even among the Hebronites, &c.] The poſterity of Hebron, the ſon of Kohath: according to the generations of his fathers; a principal man in the families that deſcended from his anceſtors: in the 40th year of the reign of David; which was the laſt year of his reign, in which year all the above things were done; the diſtribution of the prieſts into their claſſes and courſes, and ſo of the Levites, ſingers, and porters; as well as the appointment of thoſe ſeveral judges and officers employed in divers parts of the land: and particularly in this year thoſe Hebronites were ſought for, and there were found among them mighty men of valour, at Jazer of Gilead; a city on the other ſide Jordan, which belonged to the tribe of Gad, ſee Numb. xxi 32. and xxxii. 1. 3. 35.

℣. 32. And his brethren, men of valour, were 2700 chief fathers, &c.] That is, the brethren or kinſmen of Jerijah the Hebronite were ſo many principal men in their families, and men of fortitude and courage: whom king David made rulers over the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh; all which lay on the other ſide Jordan; and being ſo remote from the ſeat of civil government, and of the worſhip of God, they were in greater danger of revolting, both from their obedience to their king, and duty to their God; and therefore ſo large a number was appointed over them, to inſtruct them and keep them in their duty to both, as follows: for every matter pertaining to God, and affairs of the king; to ſee that they kept cloſe to the pure worſhip and ſervice of God; and were faithful and loyal ſubjects of the king.

CHAP. XXVII.

IN this chapter we have an account of twelve military courſes, or twelve legions of ſoldiers, with the captains of them, that ſerved David monthly in their turns, ℣. 1—15. and of the princes of the ſeveral tribes, ℣. 16—24. and of his œconomical rulers, ℣. 25—31, and of his counſellors and general, ℣. 32, 33, 34.

℣. 1. Now the children of Iſrael after their number, &c.] Not the whole body of the people, but the militia of the nation; for after the account of the diviſion of the prieſts and Levites into courſes, follows an account of the militia of the nation, being divided alſo into monthly courſes; which, though done in the beginning of David's reign, as Kimchi and Jarchi obſerve, yet is here related; and that it was ſo ſoon, is clear from the inſtance of Aſahel, who was killed whilſt David was king in Hebron, ℣. 7. to wit, the chief fathers; the chief men in the tribes, the princes of them, not the natural fathers of the ſoldiers ſoldiers in each courſe, as a learned man ſuggeſts [i]; ſince it can never be thought that ſuch a number ſprung from thoſe as made a courſe of 24,000; for they are diſtinct from the captains and officers aftermentioned, under which the ſoldiers were; beſides, why ſhould they be called chief fathers? theſe, no doubt, were the general officers or princes, under which the captains and inferior officers were: and captains of thouſands and hundreds; in the ſeveral tribes: and their officers; that were under them: that ſerved the king in any matter of the courſes, which came in and went out month by month, throughout all the months of the year; by which it appears that the militia of the kingdom was divided into twelve courſes, which ſerved each month by turns; when one went out another came in; by which means the king was well ſupported and guarded, and had an army at once at command upon any inſurrection or war that might ariſe; and each courſe ſerving but one month in a year, it was no great burden upon them, even if they maintained themſelves, ſince they were at leiſure, the other eleven months, to attend to their buſineſs; and eſpecially if it was, as Jarchi obſerves, that not the poor but the rich were ſelected for this ſervice: of every courſe were 24,000; ſo that the twelve courſes amounted to 288,000 men.

℣. 2—15. Over the firſt courſe for the firſt month, &c.] The month Niſan, ſometimes called Abib, which was March: was Jaſhobeam the ſon of Zabdiel; the firſt and chief of David's worthies, ch. xi. 11. and in his courſe were 24,000; and ſo in all the following ones; this man was of the poſterity of Perez, or Pharez, a ſon of Judah, and ſo had the preference and command of all the captains of the army for that month: Dodai an Ahohite; the ſame with Dodo, ch. xi. 12. was over the courſe of the ſecond month, the month Ziv, ſometimes called Jiar, or April; and his lieutenant or ſucceſſor was Mikloth: Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, a chief prieſt; or rather a prince, a principal officer, was general of the army for the third month, Sivan, or May; the ſame was mighty among the thirty, and even above them, for he was among the three mighty, ch. xi. 22. 24. and Ammizabad his ſon ſucceeded him, or was his deputy, when otherways employed: though led by our verſion here, and following the Jewiſh writers, I have called Benaiah a prieſt in the note on 1 Kings ii. 31. yet I am now rather of opinion that he was not one; for though prieſts might bear arms on ſome occaſions, yet it is not likely that one ſhould be in a conſtant military office, and eſpecially general of an army; and beſides, this man was of Kabzeel, a city in the tribe of Judah, which is not mentioned among the Levitical cities, ſee 2 Sam. xxiii. 20. Joſh. xv. 21. Aſahel the brother of Joab was over the courſe for the fourth month, Tammuz, or June, and who being ſlain by Abner, his ſon Zebadiah ſucceeded him: Shambuth, the ſame with Shammah, 2 Sam. xxiii. 11. and Shammoth, ch. xi. 27. was captain for the 5th month, Ab, or July: Ira the ſon of Ikkeſh, the Tekoite was over the courſe of the 6th month, Elul, or Auguſt, ſee ch. xi. 28. Helez the Pelonite was captain for the 7th month, Tiſri, or September, ſee ch. xi. 27. the captain for the 8th month, Marcheſvan, ſometimes called Bul, or October, was Sibbecai the Huſhathite, of the Zarhites, of the poſterity of Zerah, a ſon of Judah in the line of Huſhah, ch. iv. 4. ſee ch. xi. 29. the captain of the courſe for the 9th month, Ciſleu, or November, was Abiezer, of Anethoth, in the tribe of Benjamin, ſee ch. xi. 28. Maharai, of Netophath, in the tribe of Judah, and of the poſterity of Zerah, was over the courſe for the 10th month, Tebet, or December, ſee ch. xi. 30. and the captain for the 11th month, Shebet, or January, was Benaiah, of Pirathon, in the tribe of Ephraim, ſee ch. xi. 31. and over the courſe for the 12th month, Adar, or February, was Heldai the Netophathite, the ſame with Heled, ch. xi. 30. and who was of the poſterity of Othniel, the firſt judge in Iſrael, Judg. i. 13. and iii. 9.

℣. 16—22. Furthermore, over the cities of Iſrael, &c.] Were the following rulers or princes; the captains over the militia before-named were of David's appointment; but theſe ruled over their reſpective tribes in their own right, or by the choice of their tribes: the ruler of the tribe of Reuben was Eliezer, the ſon of Zichri: of the tribe of Simeon, Shephatiah the ſon of Maachah; whether this was his father's or mother's name is not certain, it being the name both of a man and woman: of the tribe of Levi, Haſhabiah the ſon of Kemuel: of the Aaronites, who were of the ſame tribe, but being prieſts, are thus diſtinguiſhed from the Levites, Zadok, who was made high-prieſt in the times of Solomon: of the tribe of Judah, Elihu, a brother of David's, the ſame with Eliab, 1 Sam. xvi. 6. of the tribe of Iſſachar, Omri the ſon of Michael: of the tribe of Zebulun, Iſhmaiah the ſon of Obadiah: of the tribe of Naphtali, Jerimoth the ſon of Azriel: of the tribe of Ephraim, Hoſhea the ſon of Azaziah: of the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, on this ſide Jordan weſtward, Joel the ſon of Pedaiah: of the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, in Gilead, on the other ſide Jordan eaſtward, Iddo the ſon of Zechariah: of the tribe of Benjamin, Jaaſiel the ſon of Abner, the famous general on the ſide of Iſhboſheth: of the tribe of Dan, Azareel the ſon of Jeroham: theſe were the princes of the tribes of Iſrael; of all excepting Gad and Aſher, who are omitted; perhaps he that was prince of the tribe of Reuben, or elſe of the half-tribe of Manaſſeh beyond Jordan, was ruler of Gad and Aſher; theſe lying between Zebulun and Naphtali, might be under the prince of one of them.

℣. 23. But David took not the number of them from twenty years old and under, &c.] Only thoſe that were twenty years and upwards; but according to Cornelius Bertram [k], he numbered them that were under 20, though but 16, 17, 18, or 19 years of age, provided they were of robuſt bodies, and of a tall ſtature, and able to bear arms; which he takes to be the ſin of David, in numbering the people, being contrary to the law of God; yet though he had ordered them to be numbered, and they were, yet he would not take them and put them into the account of his chronicles, as in the next verſe, that his ſin might not be known, ſee 2 Sam. xxiii. 9. becauſe the Lord had ſaid, he would increaſe Iſrael like to the ſtars in the heavens; which are not to be numbered, and therefore David ſinned in attempting to number the people.

℣. 24. Joab the ſon of Zeruiah began to number, &c.] By the order of David, but entirely againſt his own will, ſee ch. xxi. 2, 3, 4. 6. but he finiſhed not; the two tribes of Benjamin and Levi not being counted by him, ch. xxi. 6. becauſe there fell wrath for it againſt Iſrael; the plague being broke forth before he had done numbering, which put a ſtop to it, ch. xxi. 14. neither was the number put in the account of the chronicles of David; that which was brought in by Joab, though imperfect, was not entered entered into the diary, journal, or annals which David ordered to be written of all memorable events and tranſactions in his reign; and which were afterwards carried on by the kings of Judah, often referred to in the preceding books; and this was done, not becauſe of the imperfection of the account, but becauſe David did not chuſe this ſin of his ſhould be tranſmitted to poſterity, though it has been, notwithſtanding this precaution of his.

℣. 25—34. And over the king's treaſures was Azmaveth the ſon of Adiel, &c.] The hiſtorian here proceeds to relate who were employed in the œconomical and civil affairs of David; and the firſt mentioned is the lord of his treaſury, who had the care of his gold and ſilver brought into his exchequer, either by a levy on his own people, or by the tribute of others: Jehonathan the ſon of Uzziah had the care of the ſtorehouſes, in which were laid up what the fields, cities, villages, and caſtles that belonged to the king produced, whether by fruits gathered in, or by rents collected: Ezri the ſon of Chelub looked after his workmen in the fields, employed in the tillage of the ground: Shimei of Ramath, in the tribe of Benjamin, had the care of the vineyards, to ſee that they were dreſſed and pruned, and kept in good order: Zabdi of Shepham, Numb. xxxiv. 10, 11. had the charge of the wine ſqueezed out of the grapes, both in the preſſes and in the cellars: Baal-hanan of Geder, in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 36. 58. was over the olive and ſycamore-trees, to ſee that they were well taken care of: and Joaſh was entruſted with the cellars where the oil was depoſited: Shitrai the Sharonite had the herds of kine fed in Sharon committed to his truſt; whether in Sharon beyond Jordan, or that about Lydda and Joppa, near the Mediterranean ſea, both affording fruitful paſtures for herds; and this man being of Sharon, was a fit man to be employed in ſuch ſervice: and Shaphat the ſon of Adlai was over thoſe herds that were in the vallies, where were good paſtures for them; ſuch officers Pharaoh king of Egypt had, Gen. xlvii. 6. and as early as the times of Ninus king of Aſſyria, one named Simma was maſter of the king's cattle [l], as Fauſtulus was to Amulius king of the Latines [m]; and ſo Tyrrhus in Virgil [n] had the command of all the king's cattle; and Cicero mentions another in the ſame office [o]: Obil the Iſhmaelite; an Arab, as the Targum, had the care of the camels; and a very proper perſon he was, who muſt know the nature of them, and how to manage them, Arabia, of the land of the Iſhmaelites, abounding with them. This man was ſo called, either becauſe he was an Iſhmaelite by birth, and was proſelyted to the Jewiſh religion; or he was an Iſraelite that had dwelt ſome time in the land of Iſhmael, and therefore ſo called. Bochart [p] thinks, he had his name of Obil from his office, the word in the Arabic language ſignifying a keeper of camels. Jehdeiah the Meronothite was over the aſſes, which were employed in ploughing and carrying burdens; and Jaziz the Hagarite was over the flocks of ſheep, the chief ſhepherd, who had the command of all the under-ſhepherds, and a very proper perſon, being an Hagarite, or Arab; for ſuch dwelt in tents for the ſake of paſturage for their flocks, as Jarchi notes: theſe were the principal men that had the care of David's perſonal ſubſtance; ſo in after-times, the Roman Cæſars [q] had ſuch ſort of ſervants to take care of their farms, fields, fruit, cattle, &c. the reſt that follow were David's courtiers. Jonathan, or to whom David was uncle, the ſon of Shimea, his brother being a wiſe and learned man, was his counſellor, ſee 2 Sam. xxi. 21. and Jehiel the Hachmonite was preceptor, or tutor to the king's ſons, that brought them up, and took care of their education; Ahithophel was his counſellor until the conſpiracy and rebellion of Abſalom; and Huſhai the Archite was his companion, friend and favourite, with whom he converſed at leiſure hours. After the death of Ahitophel, Jehoiada the ſon of Benaiah, and Abiathar, were his counſellors, and Joab the general of his army.

CHAP. XXVIII.

DAVID having convened the principal men of the nation, declared Solomon his ſucceſſor, whom God had choſen both to be king, and to build the temple, ℣. 1—7. and exhorted both them and him to ſerve the Lord, and build an houſe for him, ℣. 8, 9, 10. then gave Solomon the pattern of it, and an account of the materials he had prepared for it, ℣. 11—19. and encouraged him to go about the work with alacrity and intrepidity, ℣. 20, 21.

℣. 1. And David aſſembled all the princes of Iſrael, the princes of the tribes, &c.] Whoſe names are given in ch. xxvii. 16—22. and the captains of the companies that miniſtred to the king by courſe; monthly, each having 24,000 men under him, whoſe names are expreſſed, ch. xxvii. 2—15. and the captains over the thouſands; of which there were 24 in a courſe, at the head of each 1000, under the chief captain: and captains over the hundreds; centurions under the ſecond captains: and the ſtewards over all the ſubſtance and poſſeſſion of the king, and of his ſons; whoſe names may be read in ch. xxvii. 25—31. with the officers; the courtiers: and with the mighty men, and with all the valiant men; both men of valour, and of wealth and riches: theſe David aſſembled unto Jeruſalem; the metropolis of the kingdom, and where his court and palace were.

℣. 2. Then David the king ſtood up upon his feet, &c.] Roſe from the bed or couch on which he lay, as Kimchi thinks, being ſomewhat recovered of his paralytic diſorder, and being willing to exert himſelf on this occaſion; or he roſe up from the ſeat or throne, on which he before ſat, in honour to this auguſt aſſembly before him, and that he might be the more eaſily heard; for which reaſon we are told [r], it was a cuſtom with the ancients, even for kings to ſtand up when they had a number of people about them they ſpoke to; and if any one ſat, it was reckoned a new and ſtrange thing; ſo Agamemnon, when wounded, did not ſpeak ſitting, until he had made an excuſe for it: and ſaid, hear me, my brethren, and my people; having having ſomething of moment and importance to ſay unto them, and which required their diligent attention; and though they were his ſubjects, he calls them his brethren, being of the ſame nation and religion, and to ſhew his modeſty and humility; in which he was a type of Chriſt, the king of kings, ſee Heb. ii. 11. as for me, I had it in my heart to build an houſe of reſt for the ark of the covenant of the Lord; where it might abide, and not be removed from place to place; the ſame he had told Solomon, ch. xxii. 7. and for the footſtool of our God; or even for it, for the ark is meant, which is ſo called, Pſ. xc. 5. and cxxxii. 7, 8. for as the Lord ſat between the cherubim over the mercy-ſeat, the lid of the ark, it was ſpeaking after the manner of men, a footſtool to him: and had made ready for the building; prepared materials for it; ſee ch. xxii. 3, 4, 14, 15, 16. and ch. xxix. 2—5.

℣. 3. But God ſaid unto me, thou ſhalt not build an houſe for my name, &c.] This he ſaid by Nathan the prophet, 2 Sam. vii. 5. becauſe thou haſt been a man of war, and haſt ſhed blood; ſee ch. xxii. 8.

℣. 4. Howbeit, the Lord God of Iſrael choſe me before all the houſe of my father to be king over Iſrael for ever, &c.] Paſſing by all his brethren who were elder than he, he pitched upon him, and ordered him to be anointed king of Iſrael, ſee 1 Sam. xvi. 10, 12. and that for ever, for a long time, as long as he lived; or rather in his poſterity for many years to come, and beſt of all in his antitype Chriſt, the ſon of David, ſee Luke i. 32, 33. for he hath choſen Judah to be the ruler; the tribe of Judah to be the ſeat of government, and one out of that tribe to be the chief ruler, ſee ch. v. 2. Gen. xlix. 10. and of the houſe of Judah, the houſe of my father; out of that tribe he choſe his father's family, to take from thence one to be king of Iſrael: and among the ſons of my father, he liked me to make me king over all Iſrael; tho' the youngeſt of them, 1 Sam. xvi. 11. this was his will and pleaſure.

℣. 5. And of all my ſons, for the Lord hath given me many ſons, &c.] Whoſe names, and the order of their birth, may be read in ch. iii. 1—9. he hath choſen Solomon my ſon to ſit upon the throne of the kingdom of the Lord over Iſrael; to be his ſucceſſor in it: this he ſays to obſerve to them, that this was not merely his own will and choice, nor the fruit and effect of a fond affection to Solomon; nor was it barely in purſuance of a promiſe made to Bathſheba, ſhe had obtained of him; but it was according to the will and appointment of God, and therefore to be the more regarded.

℣. 6. And he ſaid unto me, Solomon thy ſon, he ſhall build my houſe, &c.] See 2 Sam. vii. 13. and my courts; in the houſe or temple: for I have choſen him to be my ſon; predeſtinated him to the adoption of children, Eph. i. 5. and I will be his father; ſee 2 Sam. vii. 14.

℣. 7. Moreover, I will eſtabliſh his kingdom for ever, &c.] The ſame is ſaid in 2 Sam. vii. 13. if he be conſtant to do my commandments, and my judgments, as at this day; if he continued in the obſervance of them, as he had begun, and went on in until that day; this is added here, and was not ſpoken by Nathan, when what goes before was; for Solomon was not then born, but muſt be ſuggeſted to David ſince, and as it ſhould ſeem at this time.

℣. 8. Now therefore, in the ſight of all Iſrael, the congregation of the Lord, &c.] Whom this aſſembly repreſented: and in the audience of our God; before him, as Jarchi, in whoſe preſence they were, and who heard and ſaw all that paſſed, and to whom David appeals as a witneſs; the Targum is, "before the Word of the Lord," before whom all things are naked and open, Heb. iv. 12, 13. keep and ſeek for all the commandments of the Lord your God; ſeek to know them, ſearch for them in the word of God, and endeavour to keep them: that ye may poſſeſs this good land; continue in the poſſeſſion of it, for by their obedience they held it, Iſ. i. 19. and leave it for an inheritance for your children after you for ever; that ſo they might not be removed from it, and carried captive into other lands, as they were for their diſobedience.

℣. 9. And thou, Solomon my ſon, &c.] Who was preſent in this aſſembly, and preſented to them by David as his ſucceſſor, and their future king: and having addreſſed them, he turns himſelf to him, and exhorts him, ſaying, know thou the God of thy father; who was his father and covenant-God, and whom he ſerved and worſhipped, and who had beſtowed upon him many favours, both temporal and ſpiritual; and having had ſuch an experience of his goodneſs, he exhorts his ſon to ſeek to know more and more of him, and to own and acknowledge him as his God, and to love and fear him: ſerve him with a perfect heart, and with a willing mind; cordially and ſincerely, chearfully and freely, neither in an hypocritical manner, nor through force and conſtraint, nor with loathing and wearineſs: for the Lord ſearcheth all hearts; the hearts of all men, even of kings, and knows from what principles, and with what views, and in what manner they ſerve him: and underſtandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts; not only the thoughts of the heart, when regularly formed and ranged in order, but even the very beginning of them, the firſt motions of the mind, and before they are well formed, ſee Gen. vi. 5. Pſ. cxxxix. 2. if thou ſeek him; by prayer and ſupplication in his houſe and ordinances: he will be found of thee; grant his preſence, and beſtow his favours, ſee Iſ. lv. 6. but if thou forſake him; his word, his ways, his worſhip: he will caſt thee off for ever; from being king, or enjoying that peace, proſperity and happineſs which otherwiſe would be enjoyed.

℣. 10. Take heed now, &c.] Of offending God by forſaking him; or ſee, conſider, and obſerve now what he was farther about to ſay to him, concerning the building of the temple, as follows: for the Lord hath choſen thee to build an houſe for the ſanctuary; a temple for the ark, called the ſanctuary, Numb. vii. 9. and x. 21. the Targum is, the Word of the Lord hath choſen thee, &c. be ſtrong, and do it; be of a good heart and courage, and ſet about it with vigour and reſolution.

℣. 11. Then David gave to Solomon his ſon the pattern of the porch, &c.] The breadth, and length, and heighth of it, which was to be placed at the eaſt-end of the temple, and was the entrance into it: and of the houſes thereof; the holy place, and the moſt holy, which latter is called the greater houſe, 2 Chron. iii. 5. and of the treaſuries; where things belonging to the temple were laid up, the prieſts veſtments, and other things: and of the upper chambers; where the prieſts lay or met for converſation, Jer. xxxv. 2. and Acts i. 13. and of the inner parlours thereof; where the prieſts eat of the holy things; all theſe ſeem to be buildings againſt the wall of the temple round about, 1 Kings vi. 5. and of the place of the mercy-ſeat; the holy of holies, lies, where that with the cherubim over it, and the ark under it, were placed.

℣. 12. And the pattern of all that he had by the Spirit, &c.] By the Spirit of God, who gave him the whole form of the temple, and all things relative to it; juſt as God ſhewed to Moſes, the pattern of the tabernacle in the mount; the Targum is, by the ſpirit of prophecy that was with him. The Jews ſuppoſe, that Samuel the prophet was firſt made acquainted with it, and he made it known to David: of the courts of the houſe of the Lord; the outward court, the court of the prieſts, &c. and of all the chambers round about; ſee 1 Kings vi. 5. of the treaſuries of the houſe of God, and of the treaſuries of the dedicate things; of the difference of which, ſee ch. xxvi. 20.

℣. 13. And alſo for the courſes of the prieſts and Levites, &c.] Where they ſhould ſerve, of which as fixed and ordered by David, ſee ch. xxiv, xxv, xxvi. and for all the work of the ſervice of the houſe of the Lord; they ſhould be employed in: and for all the veſſels of ſervice in the houſe of the Lord; which they ſhould uſe therein.

℣. 14. He gave of gold by weight for things of gold, for all inſtruments of all manner of ſervice, &c.] Whatever was to be made of gold, David was directed by the Spirit of God what weight or quantity of gold ſhould be made uſe of in making it, as appears from ſome following inſtances: ſilver alſo for all inſtruments of ſilver, by weight, for all inſtruments of every kind of ſervice; ſo likewiſe whatever inſtruments or veſſels, for the ſervice of the temple, were to be made of ſilver, he had a direction from the Spirit of God what weight each was to be of, or what quantity of ſilver was to be uſed in it, and this he gave; according to Jacob Ichudah Leon [s], the veſſels of gold were 340,000, the veſſels of ſilver 470,000, in all 810,000.

℣. 15. Even the weight for the candleſticks of gold, and for their lamps of gold, by weight for every candleſtick, and for the lamps thereof, &c.] Theſe candleſticks were ten, and each had ſeven lamps, and were placed five on one ſide the Moſaic candleſtick, and five on the other, as ſay the Jews, ſee 1 Kings vii. 49. and the weight of gold for each candleſtick, according to the above writer [t], was 100 pound; and for both candleſticks and lamps, David, by the Spirit of God, was directed to give: and for the candleſticks of ſilver, by weight, both for the candleſtick, and alſo for the lamps thereof, according to the uſe of every candleſtick; the weight of ſilver for them was fixed; of theſe we no where elſe read. Kimchi thinks theſe were for the chambers of the prieſts, to give them light when they eat and lay there.

℣. 16. And by weight he gave gold for the tables of ſhew-bread, for every table, &c.] For though there were but one table for the ſhew-bread in the tabernacle of Moſes, there were ten in the temple of Solomon, 2 Chron. iv. 8. and each of them contained 100 pound in weight [u]: and likewiſe ſilver for the tables of ſilver; theſe were placed in the court, as Jarchi thinks, on which they ſlead the ſacrifices; or, as Kimchi, on which they ſlew them, and laid the fleſh of the burnt-offerings on them, which he gathers from Ezek. xl. 39.

℣. 17. Alſo pure gold for the fleſh-hooks, &c.] To take the pieces of fleſh out of the pots, in which they were boiled: and the bowls, and the cups; and for the golden baſons he gave gold by weight for every baſon; which were veſſels made uſe of for the receiving and ſprinkling the blood of the ſacrifices: likewiſe ſilver by weight for every baſon of ſilver; for it ſeems ſome of them were of ſilver, as others were of gold.

℣. 18. And for the altar of incenſe refined gold by weight, &c.] This was alſo 100 pound weight in gold, with which it was to be overlayed [w]: and gold for the pattern of the chariot of the cherubim; which were two large ones, beſides thoſe which Moſes made; and theſe were not made of gold, as they were, but overlaid with it, ſee 1 Kings vi. 23—28. which with them made four; and to which the four living creatures in Ezekiel's viſion allude, and make the mercavah or chariot, the Jews ſo much ſpeak of; perhaps from this, and other like phraſes; and the Lord ſitting here as in a chariot, not only denotes the glory and ſplendor of the Shekinah, or divine majeſty; but, as ſome obſerve, his readineſs to ride off and depart, when diſpleaſed and provoked, ſee Ezek. x. 18, 19. that ſpread out their wings, and covered the ark of the covenant of the Lord; not that ſpread their wings over the ark, and covered it, that the Moſaic cherubim did; but theſe ſpread their wings before it from wall to wall, ſo that it could not be ſeen by any that turned aſide the vail, and even by the high-prieſt when he entered into the holy of holies: the ark, with the cherubim, which were on that, weighed 200 pound of pure gold, according to the above writer [x].

℣. 19. All this, ſaid David, the Lord made me underſtand in writing by his hand upon me, &c.] Either by an impulſe of his Spirit on him, whereby it was as it were written on his mind, and as clearly repreſented to him, as if he had it in writing before him; though the Jews think, that all was firſt made known to Samuel, or ſome other prophet, who delivered it to David in writing, as from the Lord: but I ſee not why it may not be underſtood, that David had the pattern of the temple, and all things relative to it, by an hand-writing from the Lord himſelf, through the miniſtry of angels, as Moſes received the two tables, the hand-writing of the Lord, from himſelf; for the words, as they lie in order in the Hebrew text are, the whole of this in writing from the hand of the Lord, unto me, he made me to underſtand: even all the works of this pattern; the particulars of which are given before.

℣. 20. And David ſaid to Solomon his ſon, be ſtrong, and of good courage, and do it, &c.] See the note on ℣. 10. fear not, nor be diſmayed; that thou ſhalt meet with any oppoſition in the work, or not be able to finiſh it for want of materials and workmen, or money to pay them: for the Lord God, even my God, will be with thee; to guide and direct, proſper and ſucceed; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord God, my God, will be thy help:" he will not fail thee, nor forſake thee; a promiſe made to Joſhua, and is applicable to every good man in whatſoever good work he is concerned, Joſh. i. 5. Heb. xiii. 5. until thou haſt finiſhed all the work for the ſervice of the houſe of the Lord; built the temple, and all the apartments of it, and courts belonging to it, and made and pro-provided all the utenſils and veſſels neceſſary for the ſervice and worſhip of God.

℣. 21. And behold, all the courſes of the prieſts and the Levites, &c.] Which David had lately fixed to take their turns in the temple, when built: even they ſhall be with thee for all the ſervice of the houſe of God; to adviſe and aſſiſt him in every thing relating to the ſervice of the ſanctuary, which they might be ſuppoſed beſt to underſtand: and there ſhall be with thee for all manner of workmanſhip, every willing ſkilful man for any manner of ſervice; men that were not only well ſkilled in all manner of curious work, that was neceſſary for the ſervice of the houſe, but were willing to employ their ſkill to the uttermoſt for it, and ſuch David had provided, ch. xxii. 15. alſo the princes and all the people will be wholly at thy commandment; to do whatever he ſhould order, whether to overlook the workmen, or to contribute to the expences of the work.

CHAP. XXIX.

THIS chapter relates how largely and liberally David, beſides what he had before done, and his princes, offered towards defraying the expences of building the temple, ℣. 1—8. and the joy and thankfulneſs that he and his people expreſſed on that account, attended with prayers for Solomon, and offering ſacrifices unto the Lord, ℣. 9—21. and the chapter is cloſed, and ſo the book, with an account of the ſecond unction of Solomon, the placing him on the throne, and the ſubmiſſion of all ranks of men unto him, and of the death of David. ℣. 22—30.

℣. 1. Furthermore, David the king ſaid unto all the congregation, &c.] Having finiſhed what he had to ſay to Solomon, he addreſſed the congregation again: Solomon my ſon, whom alone God hath choſen; both to be king, and to build the temple: is yet young and tender; ſee ch. xxii. 5. and the work is great; both of governing ſo great a people, and of building ſo magnificent a temple, eſpecially the latter is meant: for the palace is not for man; for any mortal king, though ever ſo great: but for the Lord God; the Targum is, "but for the Word of the Lord God," who is the King of kings, and Lord of lords; and therefore is to be built as with the greateſt exactneſs, according to the pattern he himſelf has given, ſo with the greateſt ſpendor and magnificence.

℣. 2. Now I have prepared with all my might for the houſe of my God, &c.] According to the utmoſt of his ability for the building and decorating of it: the gold for the things to be made of gold; as the candleſticks, ſhew-bread-tables, &c. and the ſilver for things of ſilver; as for baſons, &c. and the braſs for things of braſs; as the brazen altar, brazen laver, &c. and iron for things of iron; for nails, hinges, &c. and wood for things of wood; for rafters, ceilings, floors, &c. onyx ſtones; the Targum, ſtones of beryl: and ſtones to be ſet; other precious ſtones to be ſet in gold and ſilver: gliſtering ſtones; the Targum, emeralds; the word is uſed for ſtibium, or black lead, with which women painted their eyes; and ſo may ſignify black ſtones, like black lead; as white marble is after mentioned, perhaps black is here meant, or ſuch ſtones Solomon paved the ways with leading to Jeruſalem [y]; but as ſuch ſtones are not very gliſtering, there ſeems to be no reaſon for ſuch an epithet; unleſs the ſtone Phengites ſhould be meant, which was a clear bright ſtone, and ſerved for looking-glaſſes. Domitian the Roman emperor, when under ſuſpicion of being murdered by perſons he had offended, garniſhed the portico's of his palace with this ſtone, which was of ſuch brightneſs, that by the images formed in it, he could ſee what was behind him [z]; and ſo Lucian ſpeaks [a] of Aſtarte having a ſplendid ſtone about her, called λυχνις, which in the night gave much light to the temple, but ſhone weakly in the day-time, and looked like fire: and of divers colours; that is, ſtones of divers colours, as jaſpers, amethyſts, &c. Kimchi interprets it of embroidered clothes, and garments of needle-work, and in theſe precious ſtones were ſometimes inſerted: and all manner of precious ſtones; as pearls, diamonds, &c. it is hard to ſay what all theſe precious ſtones were for; Jarchi and Kimchi think, they were to decorate the walls overlaid with gold, in which they were ſet; it is certain they were for garniſhing and beautifying the houſe, ſee 2 Chron. iii. 6. and marble ſtones in abundance; for pillars, tables, and pavement, as Jarchi; this was Parian marble, according to the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions; the whiteſt of marble [b], found in the iſland of Paros, and which agrees with the word here uſed.

℣. 3. Moreover, becauſe I have ſet my affection to the houſe of my God, &c.] Had a good will to it, and was earneſtly deſirous of having it built, and that in a grand manner: I have of my own proper good; which he had treaſured up for his own uſe: of gold and ſilver, even that I have given to the houſe of my God; to build or ornament it, or make veſſels for it: over and above all that I have prepared for the holy houſe; for the building of the temple, which is made mention of in the preceding chapter.

℣. 4. Even 3000 talents of gold, &c.] Which, according to Scheuchzer [c], amount to 36,660,000 ducats of gold; and, according to Brerewood [d], to 13,500,000 pounds of our money: of the gold of Ophir; which was reckoned the beſt gold; not Ophir in India, which was not known till Solomon's time, but in Arabia, as Bochart [e] has ſhewn; ſo Eupolemus [f], an heathen writer, ſays, that David having built ſhips at Achan, a city of Arabia, ſent miners to Urphe (ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Ophir) in the iſland of the Red-ſea, abounding with gold, and from thence fetched it, ſee the note on 1 Kings ix. 28. and that he was able to give ſo great a ſum out of his own ſubſtance, Dr. Prideaux [g] thinks, can only be accounted for by his great returns from this traffic; ſince theſe 3000 talents, according to him, amounted to 21 millions, and 600,000 pounds ſterling: and 7000 talents of refined ſilver; amounting, according to Scheu-

Scheuchzer [h], to 31,500,000 imperials, or rix-dollars; and, according to Brerewood [i], to 2,625,000 pounds of our money: to overlay the walls of the houſes withal; the gold was to overlay the walls of the holy and moſt holy place, the ſilver to overlay the walls of the chambers built around the temple.

℣. 5. The gold for things of gold, the ſilver for things of ſilver, &c.] The one for what was to be overlaid with gold, the other for what was to be overlaid with ſilver: and for all manner of work to be made by the hands of artificers; what remained was to be made uſe of, in employing artificers in making veſſels for the temple that were needful: and who then is willing to conſecrate his ſervice this day unto the Lord; or fill his hand [k]? and give largely and liberally towards building an houſe for the ſervice and worſhip, honour and glory of God; and David having ſet ſo good an example, could with the better grace recommend the good work to his nobles and people, and which had its deſired effect, as follows.

℣. 6. Then the chief of the fathers, and princes of the tribes of Iſrael, &c.] The princes of the 12 tribes: and the captains of thouſands, and of hundreds, with the rulers over the king's work; who were now aſſembled, ch. xxviii. 1. offered willingly; and chearfully, needed no more arguments to preſs them to it, but at once readily communicated.

℣. 7. And gave for the ſervice of the houſe of God, &c.] For building and adorning it, and providing proper utenſils for it: of gold 5000 talents; which, according to Scheuchzer [l], came to 61,100,000 ducats of gold: and theſe, with the 10,000 drams; make of our money, according to Brerewood [m], 22,507,500 pounds; ſome reckon a dram at two ducats and a half, and ſomewhat more [n]: and of ſilver 10,000 talents; which, according to the former writer, amounted to 450,000,000 imperials or rix dollars; and, according to the latter, they made of our money 3,750,000 pounds: and of braſs 18,000 talents, and 100,000 talents of iron; the weight of each of which were ſo much.

℣. 8. And they with whom precious ſtones were found, &c.] Such as are mentioned ℣. 2. gave them to the treaſure of the houſe of the Lord; to be laid up there: by the hand of Jehiel the Gerſhonite; who, and his ſons, had the care of that treaſury, ch. xxvi. 21, 22.

℣. 9. Then the people rejoiced, for that they offered willingly, &c.] They were not only glad that they had it to offer, but that they had hearts to do it; they found themſelves quite free to the work, and ſaw it was ſo with others, which gave them extreme pleaſure: becauſe with perfect heart they offered willingly to the Lord; not grudgingly, but chearfully; not preſſed and urged to it; not by conſtraint, but freely, and that with a pure view to the honour and glory of God: and David the king alſo rejoiced with great joy; it made his heart glad exceedingly now he was old, and juſt going out of the world, to ſee this good work in ſuch forwardneſs, on which his heart had been ſo much ſet; it gave him reaſon to believe it would be ſet about in good earneſt, be carried on with vigour, and brought to perfection.

℣. 10. Wherefore David bleſſed the Lord before all the congregation, &c.] To whoſe goodneſs he aſcribed both the ability and willingneſs of him, and his people, to offer after ſuch a manner; he knew it was God that wrought in them both to will and to do, and therefore gave him the glory of it: and David ſaid, bleſſed be thou, Lord God of Iſrael our father, for ever and ever; the phraſe, our father, does not belong to the God of Iſrael, their father by covenant and adoption, but to Iſrael or Jacob, the anceſtor of the Jewiſh nation; who is made mention of on this occaſion, he being the firſt that ſpoke of building an houſe for God, as ſome Jewiſh writers, Jarchi and Kimchi, obſerve; ſee Gen. xxviii. 22.

℣. 11. Thine, O Lord, is the greatneſs, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majeſty, &c.] That is, either God is poſſeſſed of all greatneſs, and immenſity, of dignity of nature, and of all perfections; of almighty power, of excellent glory, of ſuperiority to all beings, and of honour, and majeſty, and all that grandeur, might and honour in men, and victory over others; the majeſtic appearance they make, and exaltation above others they have, are all of God: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth, is thine; they are both made by him, and all that is in them, and therefore he has the ſole right unto them: thine is the kingdom, O Lord; of nature and providence; he has the ſole dominion over all creatures, and the ſovereign diſpoſal of all things: and thou art exalted as head above all; men on earth, and angels in heaven.

℣. 12. Both riches and honour come of thee, &c.] Whatever of either the children of men have, is not owing to their merits, nor to their diligence, and induſtry, and wiſe conduct, but to the providence of God, Eccl. ix. 11. Pſ. lxxv. 6, 7. ſo the gods with the heathens are ſaid [o] to be givers of riches: and thou reigneſt over all; governeſt the world by wiſdom, and diſpoſeſt all things in it for the beſt: in thine hand is power and might; to do whatſoever he pleaſeth: and in thine hand it is to make great; in worldly things, and ſo in ſpiritual: and to give ſtrength unto all; againſt their enemies, and to do the will and work of God; of all which David had had an experience.

℣. 13. Now therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praiſe thy glorious name.] That he that was ſo great, and ſo much above them, ſhould take notice of them, and beſtow ſo many great and good things on them.

℣. 14. But who am I, &c.] Originally duſt and aſhes, a ſinful creature, unworthy to receive any thing from God, and of having the honour of doing any thing for him: and what is my people; ſubject to him, the leaſt of all people, ſeparated from the nations round about them, and deſpiſed by them: that we ſhould be able to offer ſo willingly after this ſort? that they, who were a poor people, ſome years ago brought out of Egyptian bondage, ſhould now be poſſeſſed of ſuch an affluence, and have ſuch a generous heart, and liberal ſpirit given them, as to contribute in ſo large and liberal a manner as they had done; all was owing to the goodneſs of God to them, and the efficacy of his grace upon them: for all things come of thee; all good things, temporal and ſpiritual; the Lord is the fountain of goodneſs, and father of mercies: and of thine own have we given thee; for there is nothing a man has but he has received from the Lord, and therefore can give nothing to him but his own, ſee Rom. xi. 35, 36.

℣. 15. For we are ſtrangers before thee, and ſojourners, as were all our fathers, &c.] For tho' they were in poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, yet they held it not in their own right, but as the Lord's, who ſaid, the land is mine, Lev. xxv. 23. they were but tenants in it, and were not to abide long here; they belonged to another city and country; the conſideration of which might tend to ſet them looſe to worldly things, and the more eaſily to part with them for the ſervice of God, and the honour of his name: our days on the earth are as a ſhadow; man's life is expreſſed by days, not months and years, being ſo ſhort; and by days on earth, in diſtinction from the days of heaven, or eternity; and theſe ſaid to be as a ſhadow, of a ſhort continuance, empty, mutable and uncertain, dark and obſcure, quickly gone, like the ſhadow of the ſun; and not only like that, or of a mountain, tree or wall; but, as the Targum, of a bird that is flying, which paſſes away at once: and there is none abiding; not long, much leſs always, being but ſojourners as before; ſo Cato in Cicero [p] is repreſented as ſaying, "I depart out of this life as from an inn, and not an houſe; for nature has given us an inn to ſojourn, not a place to dwell in:" or there is no hope or expectation [q]; of living long, of recalling time, and of avoiding death.

℣. 16. O Lord our God, all this ſtore that we have prepared, &c.] Of gold, ſilver, &c. that he and his people had provided and contributed: the gold, according to Jacob Leon [r], amounted to 59,766 tons of gold, and 46,123 gilders, each ton to be reckoned at leaſt 1000 pounds ſterling; the ſilver reduced to the value of gold, made 46,337 tons, and 250 gilders; but both, according to Witſius [s], amounted to 20,585 tons of gold; and if the talents were talents of the ſanctuary, and they double the common talents, as ſome ſay they were, it was as much more, and may well be expreſſed by all this ſtore, beſides the braſs, iron, &c. to build thee an houſe for thine holy name; to perform holy and religious worſhip in it, for the glory of his name: cometh of thine hand, and is all thine own; this he repeats, that God might have all the glory of all they had and did.

℣. 17. I know alſo my God, that thou trieſt the heart, &c.] Searches it, and knoweſt it perfectly, whether what is done is from it: and haſt pleaſure in uprightneſs; in what is done in ſincerity and uprightneſs of heart: as for me, in the uprightneſs of my heart I have willingly offered all theſe things; for the truth of which he could appeal to the heart-ſearching God: and now have I ſeen with joy, thy people which are preſent here, to offer willingly unto thee; he judged by what they did, and their manner of doing it, that it was done in the uprightneſs of their hearts alſo, as his were, which gave him ſenſible joy and pleaſure.

℣. 18. O Lord God of Abraham, Iſaac, and of Iſrael our fathers, &c.] The anceſtors of the Jewiſh nation, whoſe covenant-God the Lord was, and who had ever been mindful of his promiſe to them, with reſpect to them their ſeed: keep this for ever in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people; let the ſame diſpoſition of mind always continue in them to ſerve the Lord their God: and prepare their heart unto thee; incline and diſpoſe their minds always to fear the Lord, and obey his will.

℣. 19. And give unto Solomon my ſon a perfect heart to keep thy commandments, thy teſtimonies, and thy ſtatutes, &c.] All the laws of God, moral, ceremonial and judicial, even to obſerve them cordially and ſincerely: and to do all thoſe things; he had ſuggeſted to him particularly: and to build the palace for the which I have made proviſion; as before declared.

℣. 20. And David ſaid to all the congregation, &c.] Conſiſting of princes, captains and officers, ch. xxviii. 1. now bleſs the Lord your God; as he had done, for putting it into the power of their hands, and into their hearts, to do what they had: and all the congregation bleſſed the Lord God of their fathers; ſome one as the mouth of the reſt put up a thankſgiving to God, as David directed, to which they all aſſented, and in which they all joined: and bowed down their heads, and worſhipped the Lord and the king; the one with religious worſhip, the other with civil; the Syriac and Arabic verſions more plainly diſtinguiſh, they worſhipped the Lord, and bleſſed David the king; though ſome think Solomon, now made king, is meant.

℣. 21. And they ſacrificed ſacrifices unto the Lord, &c.] David and the congregation: and offered burnt-offerings unto the Lord on the morrow after that day; not having time enough on that day to perform, at leaſt not all of them; and theſe they offered on the altar David had erected in the threſhing-floor of Araunah, by the order of God, where afterwards the temple was built: even 1000 bullocks, 1000 rams, and 1000 lambs, with their burnt-offerings; and meat-offerings alſo, both which always went along with them: and ſacrifices in abundance for all Iſrael; whom they repreſented; theſe laſt were peace-offerings, part of which the offerers had for themſelves and friends to feaſt on, as theſe did, as follows.

℣. 22. And they did eat and drink before the Lord on that day with great gladneſs, &c.] Before the ark of the Lord, which was in the tabernacle David had pitched for it: and they made Solomon the ſon of David king the ſecond time; the firſt was upon Adonijah's rebellion, and was done in the preſence only of the inhabitants of Jeruſalem; but this was done by and in the preſence of all the great perſonages in the land: and anointed him unto the Lord to be the chief governor; under his father during his life-time, and then to reign in his own right: and Zadok to be prieſt; high-prieſt; which office yet he did not exerciſe till after the death of David, when Abiathar was thruſt out by Solomon.

℣. 23. Then Solomon ſat on the throne of the Lord, &c.] Who had given it to him, and eſtabliſhed him on it, and whoſe vicegerent he was, and over whoſe people he ruled: as king inſtead of David; he was viceroy to him in his life-time, and ſucceeded him at his death, when he had the full power of government: and proſpered; his reign was happy and peaceable: and all Iſrael obeyed him; at once; whereas it was ſome time, even years, before all Iſrael obeyed David.

℣. 24. And all the princes and the mighty men, &c.] The princes of the tribes, and the officers of the army: and all the ſons likewiſe of king David; as many as were living: and though they were elder than Solomon, they ſubmitted to Solomon the king; or gave the hand under [t] him, promiſed obedience, and ſwore allegiance to him, ſee Gen. xxiv. 2, 9.

℣. 25. And the Lord magnified Solomon exceedingly before all Iſrael, &c.] By giving him ſuch a large ſhare of wiſdom and underſtanding in government: and beſtowed upon him ſuch royal majeſty; not only ſuch wealth and riches, but ſuch honour and reverence, as had not been on any king before him in Iſrael; not on Saul, nor even on David.

℣. 26. Thus David the ſon of Jeſſe reigned over all Iſrael.] As before related in this book, and in the ſecond book of Samuel; his reign being long and glorious.

℣. 27. And the time that he reigned over Iſrael was 40 years, &c.] See 1 Kings ii. 11.

℣. 28. And he died in a good old age, &c.] Being 70 years of age: full of days, riches and honour; had as much of either of them as he could wiſh for; and having enough, he ſought after, and was taken to the poſſeſſion of, eternal life, durable riches and honours and glory that fade not away: and Solomon his ſon reigned in his ſtead; in full power and authority.

℣. 29. Now the acts of David the king, firſt and laſt, &c.] All that he did that was memorable, both before he was king, and when king in Hebron, and then in Jeruſalem: behold, they are written in the book of Samuel the ſeer, and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the ſeer; which were journals of his life and actions, begun by Samuel, and carried on by Nathan and Gad; out of which what is recorded in canonical ſcripture, was taken by divine direction, and preſerved, whilſt other writings are loſt; or rather the book of Samuel deſigns the firſt book of Samuel, and the books of Nathan and Gad, the ſecond book of Samuel, by whom it was written.

℣. 30. With all his reign and his might, &c.] The whole of it, and the mighty, valiant acts done by him, the battles he fought, and the victories he obtained: and the times that went over him, and over Iſrael, and all the kingdoms of the countries; things that were done in his time in Iſrael, and in the nations round about ſubdued by him, as Moab, Ammon, Syria and Philiſtia.

The Second Book of the CHRONICLES.

THIS, and the preceding, were but one book originally, but divided into two becauſe of the largeneſs of it, ſo that this is only a continuation of the former hiſtory; that ends at the death of David; this begins with the reign of Solomon, goes through that, and the reigns of all the kings of the houſe of David; of the kings of Judah only, after the ſeparation of the ten tribes, quite down to the captivity of Judah in Babylon, and reaches to the deliverance of the Jews from thence by Cyrus, and contains an hiſtory of 479 years. It treats not at all of the kings of Iſrael, after the ſeparation, only of the kings of Judah, through whom the line of the Meſſiah was drawn; and though it omits ſeveral things recorded of them in the book of Kings; yet it gives abundance of anecdotes not to be met with there, which are of great uſe and advantage in hiſtory to know.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter relates, how that Solomon being confirmed in his kingdom, went to Gibeon to ſacrifice, ℣. 1—6. that the Lord appeared there to him, and what paſſed between them, ℣. 7—12. and that when he returned from thence to Jeruſalem, he increaſed in ſplendor, wealth and riches, ℣. 13—17.

℣. 1. And Solomon the ſon of David was ſtrengthened in his kingdom, &c.] Well ſettled and eſtabliſhed on the throne of his father, after the death of ſome perſons, from whom he might expect trouble, ſee 1 Kings ii. 46. and the Lord God was with him; directing and inſtructing him, proſpering and ſucceeding him; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord was his help:" and magnified him exceedingly; ſee 1 Chron. xxix. 25.

℣. 2. Then Solomon ſpake unto all Iſrael, &c.] To their repreſentatives about going to Gibeon to ſacrifice, as the next words ſhew; ſo Jarchi and Kimchi obſerve: to the captains of thouſands, and of hundreds, to the judges, and to every governor in all Iſrael, the chief of the fathers; whom he had convened on this occaſion; though ſome think this is the ſame congregation gathered by his father, by whom he was anointed and made king, and that he ſpoke of this to them before they broke up, 1 Chron. xxviii. 1. and xxix. 22. which ſeems not ſo probable, ſince it was after the death of his father, after he had been king ſome time, and even after his marriage with Pharaoh's daughter, that what follows was done, ſee 1 Kings iii. 1—4.

℣. 3. So Solomon, and all the congregation with him, went to the high place that was at Gibeon, &c.] They agreed to his motion, and went with him thither, ſee 1 Kings iii. 4. for there was the tabernacle of the congregation of God, which Moſes the ſervant of the Lord had made in the wilderneſs; by the Lord's direction; where was alſo the altar of the Lord, and ſo moſt proper to offer ſacrifice on, which was what Solomon went thither to do; ſee 1 Chron. xxi. 29.

℣. 4. But the ark of God had David brought up from Kirjath-jearim, &c.] See 2 Sam. vi. 2, 17.

℣. 5. Moreover, the brazen altar that Bezaleel the ſon of Uri, the ſon of Hur, had made, &c.] According to the pattern given by Moſes, at the direction of God, Exod. xxxviii. 1. he put before the tabernacle of the congregation; either David, or rather Solomon; though it ſeems beſt to read the words as in the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, and there it was before the tabernacle; for it was always there: and Solomon and the congregation ſought unto it; to ſacrifice unto it; or rather ſought unto him, the Lord, before whoſe tabernacle the altar was, ſo Guſſetius[a].

℣. 6. And Solomon went up thither, &c.] To the high place at Gibeon: to the braſen altar before the Lord; where he uſed to be, and accept the ſacrifices of his people, though the ark, the ſymbol of his preſence, was not there: which was at the tabernacle of the congregation; that is, which altar was there; or rather who, that is, God was there, as Oſiander, hearing the prayers of his people, ple, and accepting their offerings: and offered 1000 offerings upon it; by the prieſts, ſee 1 Kings iii. 4.

℣. 7. In that night did God appear unto Solomon, &c.] From hence to the end of ℣. 12. it is the ſame with 1 Kings iii. 5—13. ſee the notes there.

℣. 13. Then Solomon came from his journey to the high place that was at Gibeon, &c.] Or rather without the ſupplement, the words may be read as in the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, Solomon came from the high places, having ſacrificed there, ſo Vatablus; ל being put for ב, as R. Jonah obſerves [b]; but the Targum agrees with us, he "came to the high place which is in Gibeon, and from thence to Jeruſalem;" and to the ſame purpoſe Kimchi; having been there, he came to Jeruſalem: from before the tabernacle of the congregation; which was at Gibeon, where he had been ſacrificing: and reigned over Iſrael; in great ſplendor and proſperity. From hence, to the end of the chapter, the ſame things are ſaid as in 1 Kings x. 26—29. ſee the notes there.

CHAP. II.

SOLOMON intending to build a temple for God, and a palace for himſelf, ſent to Hiram king of Tyre to furniſh him with materials and workmen, ℣. 1—10. to which Hiram returned an agreeable anſwer, ℣. 11—16. and for this ſervice Solomon numbered all the ſtrangers in Iſrael, ℣. 17, 18.

℣. 1. And Solomon determined to build an houſe for the name of the Lord, &c.] For the worſhip and ſervice of God, and for his honour and glory, being directed, enjoined and encouraged to it by his father David: and an houſe for his kingdom; for a royal palace for him, and his ſucceſſors, firſt the one, and then the other; and in this order they were built.

℣. 2. And Solomon told out 70,000 men, &c.] Of whom, and the difference of the laſt number in this text from 1 Kings v. 15, 16. ſee the notes there.

℣. 3. And Solomon ſent to Huram king of Tyre, &c.] The ſame with Hiram, 1 Kings v. 1. and from whence it appears, that Huram firſt ſent a letter to Solomon to congratulate him on his acceſſion to the throne, which is not taken notice of here: as thou didſt deal with my father, and didſt ſend him cedars to build him an houſe to dwell therein; ſee 1 Chron. xiv. 1. even ſo deal with me; which words are a ſupplement.

℣. 4. Behold, I build an houſe to the name of the Lord my God, &c.] Am about to do it, and determined upon it, ſee ℣. 1. to dedicate it to him; to ſet it apart for ſacred ſervice to him: and to burn before him ſweet incenſe; on the altar of incenſe: and for the continual ſhew-bread; the loaves of ſhew-bread, which were continually on the ſhew-bread table; which, and the altar of incenſe, both were ſet in the holy place in the tabernacle, and ſo to be in the temple: and for the burnt-offerings morning and evening; the daily ſacrifice: on the ſabbaths, and on the new moons, and on the ſolemn feaſts of the Lord our God; at which ſeaſons, beſides the daily ſacrifice, additional burnt-offerings were offered, and all on the brazen altar in the court: this is an ordinance for ever unto Iſrael; to offer the above ſacrifices, even for a long time to come, until the Meſſiah comes; and therefore Solomon ſuggeſts, as Jarchi and Kimchi think, that a good ſtrong houſe ought to be built.

℣. 5. And the houſe which I build is great, &c.] Not ſo very large, though that with all apartments and courts belonging to it, he intended to build, was ſo; but becauſe magnificent in its ſtructure and decorations: for great is our God above all gods; and therefore ought to have a temple to exceed all others, as the temple at Jeruſalem did.

℣. 6. But who is able to build him an houſe, &c.] Suitable to the greatneſs of his majeſty, eſpecially as he dwells not in temples made with hands: ſeeing the heaven, and heaven of heavens cannot contain him; ſee 1 Kings viii. 27. who am I then that I ſhould build him an houſe, ſave only to burn ſacrifice before him; ſince God was an immenſe and infinite Being, he would have Hiram to underſtand, that he had no thought of building an houſe, in which he could be circumſcribed and contained, only a place in which he might be worſhipped, and ſacrifices offered to him.

℣. 7. Send now therefore a man cunning to work in gold, and in ſilver, and in braſs, and in iron, &c.] There being many things relating to the temple about to be built, and veſſels to be put into it, which were to be made of thoſe metals; and in purple, and crimſon, and blue; uſed in making the vails for it, hung up in different places: and that can ſkill to grave; in wood or ſtone: with the cunning men that are with me in Judah and Jeruſalem, whom my father David did provide; ſee 1 Chron. xxii. 15.

℣. 8. Send me alſo cedar-trees, fir-trees, and algum-trees out of Lebanon, &c.] Of the two firſt of theſe, and which Hiram ſent, ſee 1 Kings v. 10. The algum-trees are the ſame with the almug-trees, 1 Kings x. 11, 12. by a tranſpoſition of letters; theſe could not be coral, as ſome Jewiſh writers think, which grows in the ſea, for theſe were in Lebanon; nor Braſil, as Kimchi, ſo called from a place of this name, which at this time was not known; though there were trees of almug afterwards brought from Ophir in India, as appears from the above quoted place, as well as from Arabia; and it ſeems, as Beckius [c] obſerves, to be an Arabic word, by the article al prefixed to it: for I know that thy ſervants can ſkill to cut timber in Lebanon; better than his; and behold, my ſervants ſhall be with thy ſervants; to help and aſſiſt them in what they can, and to learn of them, ſee 1 Kings v. 6.

℣. 9. Even to prepare me timber in abundance, &c.] Since he would want a large quantity for raftering, ceiling, wainſcotting and flooring the temple: for the houſe, which I am about to build, ſhall be wonderful great; as to its ſtructure and ornaments.

℣. 10. Behold, I will give to thy ſervants the hewers that cut timber, 20,000 meaſures of beaten wheat, &c.] Meaning, not what was beaten out of the huſk with the flail, as ſome; nor bruiſed or half half broke for pottage, as others; but ground into flour, as R. Jonah [d] interprets it; or rather perhaps it ſhould be rendered food [e], that is, for his houſhold, as in 1 Kings v. 11. and the hire of theſe ſervants is propoſed to be given in this way, becauſe wheat was ſcarce with the Tyrians, and they were obliged to have it from the Jews, Acts xii. 20. Ezek. xxvii. 17. and 20,000 meaſures of barley; the meaſures of both theſe were the cor, of which ſee 1 Kings v 11. and 20,000 baths of wine, and 20,000 baths of oil; which meaſure was the tenth part of a cor. According to the Ethiopians, a man might conſume four of theſe meaſures in the ſpace of a month [f].

℣. 11. Then Huram the king of Tyre anſwered in writing, which he ſent to Solomon, &c.] In which letter he told him, he had conſidered the contents of his, and would grant him all that he deſired, ſee 1 Kings v. 8. becauſe the Lord hath loved his people; he hath made thee king over them; which are much the ſame words the queen of Sheba ſaid to Solomon, 1 Kings x. 9. ſee the note there.

℣. 12. Huram ſaid moreover, bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, that made heaven and earth, &c.] Huram ſeems to have had ſome good notions of the divine Being, not only as the God of the people of Iſrael, in a peculiar ſenſe, but as the former and maker of all things: who hath given to David the king a wiſe ſon, endued with prudence and underſtanding; ſee 1 Kings v. 7. that might build an houſe for the Lord, and for his kingdom; as in ℣. 1.

℣. 13. And now I have ſent a cunning man, endued with underſtanding, &c.] In ſuch things as Solomon required he ſhould, ℣. 7. of Huram my father's; a workman of his, whom he employed, and ſo might be depended upon as a good artificer; though rather Huram is the artificer's name, and Abi we render my father, his ſurname, that is, Huram Abi; and this is the opinion of ſeveral learned men [g], and is very probable; for certain it is, that his name was Huram or Hiram, 1 Kings vii. 13. and ſo he is called Huram his father, or Huram Abif, ch. iv. 16.

℣. 14. The ſon of a woman of the daughters of Dan, &c.] Here follows an account of the deſcent of the artificer, and of his ſkill in working; of what ſeeming diſagreement there may be in this account, with that in 1 Kings vii. 14. ſee the note there.

℣. 15. Now therefore, the wheat, and the barley, the oil, and the wine, which my lord hath ſpoken of, &c.] In his letter to him, ℣. 10. as for the phraſe, my lord, which ſome think is uſed, becauſe Hiram was tributary to Solomon, it may only be a reſpectful way of ſpeaking: let him ſend unto his ſervants; Hiram accepted thereof as a proper reward for the work of his ſervants.

℣. 16. And we will cut wood out of Lebanon, as much as thou ſhalt need, &c.] Both cedar and fir, 1 Kings v. 8, 10. and we will bring it to thee in flotes by ſea to Joppa; a port in the Mediterranean ſea, the ſame that Jonah went down to, ſee the note on 1 Kings v. 9. and thou ſhalt carry it up to Jeruſalem; in land-carriages, about 40 miles off.

℣. 17. And Solomon numbered all the ſtrangers that were in the land of Iſrael, &c.] Which, according to Kimchi, were the remains of the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites and Jebuſites, ſee ch. viii. 8. yet not idolaters, or they would not have been ſuffered by David and Solomon to have dwelt in the land, but were ſuch as were become proſelytes of the gate: after the numbering wherewith David his father had numbered them; not at the time Iſrael was numbered by him, but in order to provide workmen for the building of the temple, 1 Chron. xxii. 2. and they were found 153,600; men able to bear burdens, and hew timber.

℣. 18. And he ſet 70,000 of them, &c.] Which is repeated from ℣. 2. to ſhew how the above number of ſtrangers were diſpoſed of; 70,000 of them bearers of burdens, 80,000 of them hewers of wood, and 3600 overſeers of the workmen, in all 153,600; an emblem of the Gentiles employed in building the ſpiritual temple, the church, Zech. vi. 15.

CHAP. III, IV.

THESE two chapters give an account of the building of the temple, of the materials, parts and form of it, and of things belonging to it, and which agrees with 1 Kings vi. and vii. ſee the notes there; only here, ch. iii. 1. mention is made of the particular place where it was built, mount Moriah; of which ſee the notes on Gen. xxii. 2. and 1 Chron. xxii. 1. The dimenſions of the houſe, as the Targum rightly explains ℣. 3. are ſaid to be after the firſt meaſure, either of that of the tabernacle by Moſes, or rather of that of the pattern David gave to Solomon, 1 Chron. xxviii. 11. though ſome underſtand it of the greater cubit: the holy place is called the greater houſe, ℣. 5. being twice as long as the holy of holies; in ℣. 6. we are informed what the precious ſtones were for, which David and his princes gave for the temple, 1 Chron. xxix. 2, 8. that they were to decorate the houſe; and alſo what ſort of gold was uſed in overlaying it, gold of Parvaim, which ſome interpret of Peru [h], in America; but it is a queſtion, whether that was then known, or if it was, muſt go by another name, ſince Peru is a late name given by the Spaniards, at their conqueſt of it. Bochart [i] takes it to be Taprobane, an iſland in the Indian ſea, as if it was Taph Parvan or Provan, the ſhore of Parvan. Kircher [k] is of opinion, it it the ſame with Javaim, the iſles of Java in the ſame ſea, from whence was gold, which is not very likely. Waſerus [l] thinks, Parvaim is the name of a town, which is by Pliny [m] corruptly called Parbacia, which was in the land of Havilah, or the kingdom of the Charazenes, where was the beſt gold, Gen. ii. 11, 12. though others ſuppoſe it to be the ſame with Ophir, by removing the firſt letter of the word, to which Pfeiffer [n] inclines, and is as probable as any; and much more probable than what the Jews [o] ſay, that this gold was ſo called, becauſe it it was red like the blood of Parim, oxen: in ℣. 8. the quantity of gold, with which the moſt holy place was overlaid, is given, 600 talents; of which ſee the note on 1 Kings vi. 21. in ℣. 9. we read of the nails with which the plates of gold were faſtened to the boards, no where elſe mentioned, except in the Vulgate Latin verſion of 1 Kings vi. 21. he faſtened the plates with golden nails; which verſion perhaps is righteſt; the weight of which were 50 ſhekels of gold; that is, according to the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, each nail weighed ſo much, which amounted to 75 pounds of our money [p]. Eupolemus, an heathen writer [q], ſpeaks of theſe nails, which he makes to be ſilver ones; and ſays they were of the weight of a talent, in the form of a woman's breaſt, and in number four, with which the plates of gold were faſtened, which were of five cubits; I ſuppoſe he means, there were four of theſe nails in every plate of five cubits: in ch. iv. 1. an account is given of an altar of braſs, made by Solomon, we have not elſewhere, only referred to 1 Kings viii. 64. and ix. 25. whether this was only covered with braſs, as that made by Moſes was, as ſome [r] think; or whether of maſſey braſs, as Dr. Lightfoot [s], becauſe not to be removed as that was, is not certain; the altar of the ſecond temple was of ſtones unpoliſhed, according to the Miſnah [t], with which agrees 1 Maccab. iv. 46, 47. and ſo Philo [u]: 20 cubits was the length thereof, and 20 cubits the breadth thereof, and 10 cubits the heighth thereof; it was four times as big in its ſquare as that of Moſes, and three times higher, and a cubit over, ſee the note on Exod. xxvii. 1. Hecatæus [w], an heathen writer, ſpeaks of this altar as fourſquare, and made of whole and unpoliſhed ſtones, each ſide of which was 20 cubits, but the height of it he makes to be 12 cubits, in which he miſtakes. It weighed, according to Jacob Leon [x], 7000 Arobas of braſs, each Aroba containing 25 pounds. The reſt of the chapter agrees with the account in the book of Kings.

CHAP. V, VI.

THE words with which ch. v. begins, are the ſame with 1 Kings vii. 51. and what is contained in that and ch. vi. is much the ſame with 1 Kings viii. on which ſee the notes; the bleſſing of Solomon on the people of Iſrael, which is there, is here omitted, and two verſes are here added, much the ſame with Pſ. cxxxii. 8, 9, 10. ſee the notes there.

CHAP. VII.

IN this chapter is an account of the Lord's acceptance of the ſacrifices offered at the dedication of the temple by fire, to the great ſurprize and encouragemcnt of the people, ℣. 1—7. and of the feaſt kept on that account, and the feaſt of tabernacles, ℣. 8—12. and of the Lord's appearance to Solomon, giving an anſwer to his prayer, ℣. 13—22.

℣. 1. Now when Solomon had made an end of praying, &c.] The prayer recorded in the preceding chapter: the fire came down from heaven and conſumed the burnt-offering and the ſacrifices; which was the token God gave of his acceptance of them, of which there had been ſeveral inſtances before, Lev. ix. 24. 1 Kings xviii. 38. 1 Chron. xxi. 26. and the glory of the Lord filled the houſe; the glory of the Shekinah of the Lord, as the Targum, ſee 1 Kings viii. 11.

℣. 2. And the prieſts could not enter into the houſe of the Lord, &c.] They went in to carry the ark thither, but not being able to ſtand to miniſter, they came out, and could not re-enter: becauſe the glory of the Lord had filled the Lord's houſe; both the holy place, and the holy of holies, ſee 1 Kings viii. 10, 11.

℣. 3. And when all the children of Iſrael ſaw how the fire came down, &c.] From heaven upon the ſacrifice, and conſumed it, which was all viſible to the eye; or it may be, this was a diſtinct fire from the former, ſince it ſeems to have come down upon the houſe, and ſo may denote a bright, ſhining, glorious light; the ſame with what follows: and the glory of the Lord upon the houſe; for not only the houſe was filled with the glory, but there was a bright ſtream of light and glory over it, very dazzling and ſurprizing: they bowed themſelves with their faces to the ground upon the pavement; of the great court, where they were aſſembled: and worſhipped and praiſed the Lord; worſhipped him by praiſing him: ſaying, for he is good; in his nature, promiſes and bleſſings; is good, and does good: for his mercy endureth for ever; this was the cloſe of their ſong of praiſe.

℣. 4, 5. Then the king and all the people, &c.] Of theſe two verſes, ſee the notes on 1 Kings viii. 62, 63.

℣. 6. And the prieſts waited on their offices, &c.] Performed them, ſome in offering ſacrifices, others in blowing trumpets, as it may be explained from the latter part of the verſe: the Levites alſo with inſtruments of muſick of the Lord, which David the king had made to praiſe the Lord; under a divine direction, on which the Levites played to the ſongs of praiſe offered to the Lord, and by which they made muſick ſacred to him: becauſe his mercy endureth for ever; which as it was the cloſe of their ſongs of praiſe, was the cauſe of them: when David praiſed by their miniſtry; the ſongs ſung being compoſed by him, and the inſtruments they played upon being of his invention, and uſed by his order: and the prieſts ſounded trumpets before them; or rather over-againſt them, that is, over-againſt the ℣. 7. Moreover, Solomon hallowed the middle of the court, &c.] From hence, to the end of ℣. 10. is the ſame with 1 Kings viii. 64, 65, 66. ſee the notes there; only mention is made in ℣. 9. of the dedication of the altar, as if diſtinct from the dedication of the houſe, and hallowing the middle of the court, ſee Numb. vii. 10. in imitation of which the heathens dedicated their altars, in which they uſed aſhes and water, as Pauſanias [y] relates, and had alſo feaſts, as here, at the dedication of their temples [z], in which they have been imitated by chriſtians; and many of our country feaſts, as they are called, were firſt kept at the dedication of churches to ſuch and ſuch a ſaint.

℣. 11. Thus Solomon finiſhed the houſe of the Lord, &c.] With which begins 1 Kings ix. 1. ſee the notes there.

℣. 12. And the Lord appeared to Solomon by night, &c.] From hence, to the end of the chapter, much the ſame things are related as in 1 Kings ix. 2—9. ſee the notes there; excepting ℣. 13—15. which contain an anſwer to the particular requeſts made by Solomon in caſe of a famine or peſtilence, that when the people of Iſrael ſhould humble themſelves in prayer and ſupplication, the Lord would be attentive to them, and forgive them, ch. vi. 26—30. and which is given as a ſpecimen, and as an encouragement to expect the ſame treatment in all other caſes mentioned in Solomon's prayer, they ſo behaving.

CHAP. VIII.

THIS chapter contains much the ſame, with a little variation, as what is related in 1 Kings ix. 10. to the end.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs at the end of 20 years, &c.] See the note on 1 Kings ix. 10.

℣. 2. That the cities which Huram had reſtored to Solomon, &c.] Which Solomon firſt gave to him, but he not liking them, returned them to him, 1 Kings ix. 12. Solomon built them; or rebuilt them, being very much out of repair, which might be one reaſon of Huram's not accepting them: and cauſed the children of Iſrael to dwell there; they being inhabited by others, the remains of the Canaanites perhaps; ſee ℣. 7.

℣. 3. And Solomon went to Hamath-zobah, &c.] In an hoſtile manner, which is the only inſtance of any warlike expedition of Solomon's. This was Cœle-ſyria, which though ſubdued in the times of David, perhaps rebelled, and now Solomon went forth to reduce it: and prevailed againſt it; took it.

℣. 4. And built Tadmor in the wilderneſs, &c.] Of which ſee the notes on 1 Kings ix. 18. and all the ſtore-houſes which he built in Hamath; a country in Syria, which he made himſelf maſter of, and where he laid up ſtore of proviſion and ammunition to keep it, ſhould any attempt be made to reſcue it out of his hands. Acording to an Arabic writer [a], Solomon in the 24th year of his reign having demoliſhed Antioch, built ſeven cities, of which Tadmor was one.

℣. 5. Alſo he built Beth-horon the upper, and Beth-horon the nether, &c.] Only mention is made of the latter in 1 Kings ix. 17. fenced cities, with walls, gates, and bars; fortified cities in the tribe of Ephraim.

℣. 6. And Baalath, &c.] See 1 Kings ix. 18. From hence, to the end of ℣. 11. it is the ſame with 1 Kings ix. 19—24. ſee the notes there.

℣. 12. Then Solomon offered burnt-offerings to the Lord, &c.] Meaning not barely at the time, he rebuilt the above cities, for it was his conſtant practice: on the altar of the Lord, which he had built before the porch; the brazen altar, which was at the entrance into the temple, within the court; of which ſee ch. iv. 1.

℣. 13. Even after a certain rate every day, according to the commandment of Moſes, &c.] The daily ſacrifice, morning and evening, Exod. xxix. 38, 39. on the ſabbaths, and on the new moons; when there were additional ſacrifices, Numb. xxviii. 9, &c. and on the ſolemn feaſts three times in the year, even in the feaſt of unleavened bread, and in the feaſt of weeks, and in the feaſt of tabernacles; which ſerves to explain the three times in 1 Kings ix. 25.

℣. 14. And he appointed, according to the order of David his father, the courſes of the prieſts to their ſervice, &c.] The 24 courſes which ſerved weekly in their turns, 1 Chron. xxiv. and the Levites to their charges, to praiſe and miniſter before the prieſts as the duty of every day required; who alſo had their courſes by lot, to ſing the praiſes of God, when the prieſts ſacrificed, or blew the trumpets, 1 Chron. xxv. the porters alſo by their courſes at every gate; from hence Dr. Lightfoot concludes, that theſe were divided into 24 claſſes, as the prieſts and Levite ſingers were: for ſo had David the man of God commanded, 1 Chron. xxvi. who in all theſe affairs acted as a prophet, under the inſpiration and direction of the Holy Spirit of God.

℣. 15. And they departed not from the commandment of the king unto the prieſts and Levites, &c.] The prieſts and Levites departed not from it, not from the commandment of Solomon, according to the order of David, but in all things obeyed it: concerning any matter; which related to the office of either of them, ſacrificers, ſingers or porters: or concerning the treaſures; ſuch of the Levites as had the care of them, were faithful to their truſt, ſee 1 Chron. xxvi. 20, &c.

℣. 16. Now all the work of Solomon was prepared unto the day of the foundation of the houſe of the Lord, and until it was finiſhed, &c.] The materials were prepared, and the money for the expences; and even the very ſtones and timber were made fit for the building, ſo that there was nothing to retard the completion of it: ſo the houſe of God was perfected; in the ſpace of ſeven years in all the parts, and according to the form and pattern of it, ſee 1 Kings vi. 38.

℣. 17. Then went Solomon to Ezion-geber, &c.] Being now at leiſure to look after his navy, to carry on merchandize; and of this, and the following verſe, and the reconciliation of them with 1 Kings ix. 26, 27, 28. ſee the notes there.

CHAP. IX. and X.

THE ix^th chapter is the ſame with 1 Kings x. ſee the notes there, excepting ℣. 26, which agrees with 1 Kings iv. 21. and ℣. 29, 30, 31. the ſame with 1 Kings xi. 41, 42, 43. only in ℣. 29, it is more largely expreſſed, that the acts of Solomon's reign were written in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite, and in the viſions of Iddo the ſeer, againſt Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat; or rather, concerning Jeroboam, as the Septuagint and ſome other verſions [a], in which Iddo is called Joel; and by Theodoret ſaid to be the ſame that propheſied of Jeroboam and his altar, 1 Kings xiii. 1. ſee the note there; the books mentioned are ſince loſt: and ch. x. is not only in ſenſe the ſame, but is expreſſed almoſt in the ſelf-ſame words as 1 Kings xii. 1—19. ſo that there needs not any thing to be added to the notes there, which the reader is referred to.

CHAP. XI.

IN this chapter are related the preparations Reboboam made to regain the ten tribes that revolted from him, but was forbid making the attempt by a prophet of the Lord, which he paid a regard unto, ℣. 1—4. the fortification of ſeveral cities in Judah and Benjamin for his defence, ℣. 5—12. the reſort of ſeveral prieſts and Levites to him from Jeroboam, which ſerved to ſtrengthen his kingdom, ℣. 13—17. and an account of his wives, and of his children, and of his diſpoſal of them, ℣. 18—23.

℣. 1. And when Reboboam was come to Jeruſalem, &c.] After he had been at Shechem, and had given his anſwer to the requeſt of the men of Iſrael, upon which they revolted from him: this and the three following verſes are the ſame with 1 Kings xii. 21—24. ſee the notes there.

℣. 5. And Reboboam dwelt in Jeruſalem, &c.] The metropolis of Judah, and the capital city of his kingdom: and built cities for defence in Judah; that is, rebuilt, enlarged, and fortified them; for otherwiſe they were built before, though neglected before the revolt of the ten tribes; but now it became neceſſary to make them more capacious and ſtrong, to protect his people, and defend himſelf againſt Iſrael; for though he was forbid to act offenſively, and therefore contented himſelf to abide in Jeruſalem, and not go forth to war; yet he might lawfully put himſelf into a condition of defence.

℣. 6. He built even Bethlehem, &c.] The place of our Lord's birth, about 6 miles from Jeruſalem: and Etam; another city in the tribe of Judah; ſee 1 Chron. iv. 32. there was a rock of this name, Judg. xv. 8. and a fountain from whence waters were conveyed into the pool at Jeruſalem, ſpoken of in Jewiſh writings [b]: and Tekoah; of which place Amos the prophet was, and which was about 12 miles from Jeruſalem. Rauwolf [c] ſpeaks of it as a fortified place now; he ſays, it has a ſtrong and mighty caſtle, built on a great and high hill.

℣. 7. And Beth-zur, and Shocho, and Adullam;] All in the tribe of Judah, of which ſee Joſh. xv. 35, 58.

℣. 8. And Gath, &c.] Which cannot be that Gath, which was one of the principalities of the Philiſtines, but a city in the tribe of Judah; tho' of it we no where elſe read; unleſs this is the ſame with Moreſheth-Gath, Mic. i. 14. which is probable, ſince it follows: and Mareſhah; the birthplace of Micah the prophet, Mic. i. 1, 15. and Ziph; there were two cities of this name in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 24, 55.

℣. 9. And Adoraim, &c.] Called by Joſephus [d] Adora, which he mentions along with Mareſhah, or Mariſſa: and Lachiſh; a royal city in the time of the Canaanites, and which fell to the lot of Judah, Joſh. xii. 11. and xv. 39. and Azekah; a city ſituated in the plain of Judah, Joſh. x. 10. and xv. 35.

℣. 10. And Zorah, &c.] The ſame with Zoreah, Joſh. xv. 33. and Aijalon; there was a city of the tribe of Dan of this name, in the valley of which the moon ſtood ſtill in the times of Joſhua, Joſh. x. 10. and xix. 42. but whether the ſame with this, and now belonging to Judah, or another of the ſame name, is not certain: and Hebron; a city in the mountainous part of Judah, and a city of refuge, about 20 miles from Jeruſalem, Joſh. xv. 54. and xx. 7. which are in Judah and in Benjamin, fenced cities; as they were now made by Reboboam.

℣. 11. And he fortified the ſtrong holds, &c.] Of theſe and other cities: and put captains in them; garriſons of ſoldiers, with captains over them to defend them: and ſtore of victual and of oil and wine; that they might be able to hold out a ſiege, ſhould they be attacked.

℣. 12. And in every ſeveral city he put ſhields and ſpears, &c.] Furniſhed them with theſe and perhaps other pieces of armour, theſe being put for all, to defend themſelves with againſt an enemy, and to annoy them: and made them exceeding ſtrong; ſo that they could not be eaſily taken: having Judah and Benjamin on his ſide; which tribes cleaved to one another, and to Reboboam, and to the kings of the houſe of David, in after times, as well as to the true religion.

℣. 13. And the prieſts and the Levites, that were in all Iſrael, &c.] In the ten tribes, in the cities aſſigned to them therein: reſorted to him out of all their coaſts; as to their rightful ſovereign, and chiefly for the ſake of the ſervice of the ſanctuary at Jeruſalem.

℣. 14. For the Levites left their ſuburbs and their poſſeſſion, &c.] The cities and the fields adjacent to them, which were given them in the ſeveral tribes, and were in all 48; ſee Joſh. xxi. 1——41. and came to Judah and Jeruſalem; to the cities of Judah, which belonged to the Levites; and to Jeruſalem, where they exerciſed their functions: for Jeroboam

roboam and his ſons had caſt them off from exerciſing the prieſts office unto the Lord; neither ſuffering them to go to Jeruſalem in their courſes, as they uſed to do by turns, nor to perform their office in their own dwellings, according to the law of God, in teaching and inſtructing the people.

℣. 15. And he ordained him prieſts for the high places, &c.] Of ſuch who were not of the tribe of Levi, and family of Aaron; ſee 1 Kings xii. 31. and for the devils; dæmons in the ſhape of goats, as this word ſignifies, in which form many of the heathen deities were worſhipped; idols of whatſoever kind are ſo called; for whoſoever worſhips them, worſhips not God, but devils, 1 Cor. x. 22. the images which Jeroboam ſet up may be meant, and the next clauſe may be rendered as explanative of them: even for the calves which he had made; one of which he ſet up at Dan, and the other at Bethel, 1 Kings xii. 28, 29.

℣. 16. And after them out of all the tribes of Iſrael, &c.] Beſides the prieſts and Levites, and after their example, many of the common people, out of all the ten tribes: ſuch as ſet their hearts to ſeek the Lord God of Iſrael; to ſeek his face and favour, where he was to be found; to worſhip him according to his revealed will, and to receive doctrine or inſtruction from him, as the Targum: came to Jeruſalem to ſacrifice to the Lord God of their fathers; to ſacrifice where only ſacrifices were to be offered up, and by the prieſts of the Lord, who were gone thither, and to their father's God, whom the ten tribes had revolted from.

℣. 17. So they ſtrengthened the kingdom of Judah, &c.] Made it more numerous, and in a better condition to defend itſelf: and made Reboboam ſon of Solomon ſtrong three years; eſtabliſhed him on the throne, ſtrengthened the government in his hands, and were the means of preſerving him in the pure worſhip of God for the ſpace of time mentioned, the reaſon of which follows: for three years they walked in the way of David and Solomon; in their good ways, which were according to the rule of the divine word; and which, as they refer to the whole of David's life and reign, ſome particular actions excepted, ſo to the former part of Solomon's reign, before he fell into idolatry, and to the latter part of it after his repentance; for that he did repent is by ſome concluded from hence, and may be more ſtrongly from the book of Eccleſiaſtes, written by him in his old age. This is to be underſtood both of Reboboam and his people, who after three years forſook the law of the Lord, ch. xii. 1.

℣. 18. And Reboboam took him Mahalath, the daughter of Jerimoth, the ſon of David, to wife, &c.] Of which ſon of David we no where elſe read; perhaps he might be the ſon of one of his concubines, or he might have two names: and Abihail the daughter of Eliab the ſon of Jeſſe; who was David's eldeſt brother, 1 Sam. xvii. 13, 28. She muſt be a grand daughter, or great grand daughter of his.

℣. 19. Which bare him children, &c.] Or, and ſhe bore him[d]; for it is ſaid only of one of them, the other perhaps died without children; this may refer to the laſt-mentioned, Abihail, whoſe children were Jeuſh and Shamariah, and Zaham; who perhaps all died in their father's life-time, ſince the firſt born of an after wife ſucceeded him.

℣. 20. And after he took Maacah the daughter of Abſalom, &c.] Thought by ſome to be Abſalom, the ſon of David, his father's brother, and his uncle, and ſo married his couſin; but Abſalom ſeems to have had but one daughter, whoſe name was Tamar, 2 Sam. xiv. 27. and the name of this man is different from his; he is called Abiſhalom, 1 Kings 15. 2. and Uriel of Gibeah; ch. xiii. 2. of the tribe of Benjamin, whereas Abſalom was of the tribe of Judah: which bare him Abijah, and Atthai, and Ziza, and Shelomith; Abijah the firſt-born, and who was ſucceſſor in the kingdom, is the ſame with Abijam, 1 Kings xiv. 31. of the reſt we no where elſe read.

℣. 21. And Reboboam loved Maacah the daughter of Abſalom above all his wives, and his concubines, &c.] Who is called Michaiah, the daughter of Uriel, ch. xiii. 2. for he took 18 wives, and 60 concubines; led thereunto by the example of his father Solomon, contrary to the command of God, Deut. xvii. 17. and begat 28 ſons and 60 daughters; to have many children was reckoned a great bleſſing, but it was not honourable to have them in ſuch a way.

℣. 22. And Reboboam made Abijah the ſon of Maacah the chief, &c.] The chief of all his ſons, head over them, being the ſon of his moſt beloved wife, and her firſt-born however, and perhaps might be of a greater capacity than the reſt of his children: to be ruler among his brethren; or over them; gave him greater authority, and entruſted him with more power, ſet him above them, and treated him as heir apparent to the crown: for he thought to make him king; either to take him into partnerſhip in the throne with him in his lifetime, or to appoint and declare him to be his ſucceſſor.

℣. 23. And he dealt wiſely, &c.] Acted a prudent part, in order to execute his ſcheme, and particularly by diſpoſing of his other ſons, in different parts of his kingdom, as follows: or he made him his ſon Abijah to underſtand[e]; he taught and inſtructed him in the art of government, took a particular care of his education, that he might be fitted for it; and he might inſtruct him how to behave towards his brethren, for the preſent and hereafter, as well as towards all the people in general: or he (Abijah) underſtood[f]; had more underſtanding and wiſdom than all the children of Reboboam; though it ſeems beſt to interpret it of Reboboam himſelf, ſince it follows: and diſpoſed of all his children throughout all the countries of Judah and Benjamin, unto every fenced city; to be governors thereof, in whoſe hands he could better truſt them, than in any other; or elſe by thus ſeparating them, they would not be able to enter into combination againſt Abijah; but then he muſt at the ſame time appoint ſome perſons, to watch and obſerve them; or otherwiſe having ſuch ſtrong places in their poſſeſſion, they might rebel againſt him; the Targum is, "he built and repaired the cities, and appointed of all his children throughout all the countries of the houſe of Judah, to all the fortified cities;" that is, to have the command of them: and he gave them victual in abundance; that they might have no reaſon to complain, and might be able to hold out a ſiege againſt an enemy, ſhould they be inveſted: and he deſired many wives; either for himſelf, or rather for his ſon, ſince he himſelf had many; or Abijah deſired, or aſked[g] many wives of their parents, or of thoſe who had the diſpoſe of them, in imitation of his father.

CHAP. XII.

REHOBOAM and his people forſaking the law of the Lord, Shiſhak king of Egypt is ſuffered to invade his land, and take his fenced cities, ℣. 1—4. upon which a prophet of the Lord was ſent to him, and his princes, to ſhew them the reaſon of it; whereupon they humbled themſelves, and the Lord was pleaſed not to ſuffer the enemy utterly to deſtroy them, yet to reduce them to ſervitude, and take away their riches, ℣. 5—12. and the chapter is cloſed with an account of the reign and death of Reboboam, ℣. 13—16.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs when Reboboam had eſtabliſhed the kingdom, &c.] Or when the kingdom of Reboboam was eſtabliſhed; the tribes of Judah and Benjamin being firmly attached to him, and great numbers from the other tribes coming over to him, and things going on peaceably and proſperouſly during the three years that he and his people abode by the pure worſhip of God: and had ſtrengthened himſelf; built fortified cities for the defence of himſelf and kingdom, ch. xi. 5—12. he forſook the law of the Lord; after he had reigned three years, and was become ſtrong, and thought himſelf ſafe and ſecure on the throne, truſting to his ſtrength: and all Iſrael with him; the greater part of them following the example of their king; of this defection, and the ſins they fell into, ſee 1 Kings xiv. 22, 23, 24.

℣. 2. And it came to paſs in the fifth year of Reboboam, &c.] In the fourth year, the apoſtacy of him and his people began; and in the year following, what is next related, happened, as a puniſhment of it: Shiſhak king of Egypt came up againſt Jeruſalem; of whom ſee 1 Kings xi. 40. and xiv. 25. becauſe they tranſgreſſed againſt the Lord; tranſgreſſed the law of the Lord by falling into idolatry and other abominable evils; the Targum is, "againſt the Word of the Lord."

℣. 3. With 1200 chariots, and 60,000 horſemen, and the people were without number, &c.] The foot-ſoldiers; their number, according to Joſephus[h] was 400,000: that came with him out of Egypt; the above numerous army came from thence with him, which was famous for horſes and chariots of war, ſee Exod. xiv. 7, 28. what follow ſeem to have joined him after he came out of Egypt, or whom he ſubdued in his way; the Lubim or Lybians, inhabitants of Lybia, a country near Egypt, the ſame with the Lehabim; of whom ſee Gen. x. 13. the Sukkiim; who were either the Scenite Arabs, who dwelt in tents, as this word ſignifies; or the Troglodytes, according to the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, who dwelt in dens and caves, in which ſenſe the word Succah is ſometimes uſed, Job xxxviii. 40. Pſ. x. 9. and in their country was a town called Suchæ, mentioned by Pliny[i]; they inhabited near the Red-ſea; and if Shiſhak is the ſame with Seſoſtris, as is thought, theſe people were ſubdued by him, as Herodotus[k] and Strabo[l] teſtify: and the Ethiopians; ſome think theſe were the Cuſhite Arabs, and that Seſoſtris came into Arabia, is teſtified by the above writers; though rather the proper Ethiopians are meant, ſince they are joined with the Lubim or Africans; and ſince, as Herodotus[m] ſays, he ruled over Ethiopia; and Diodorus Siculus[n] ſays, he fought with them, and obliged them to pay him tribute.

℣. 4. And he took the fenced cities which pertained to Judah, &c.] Which Reboboam had lately built, and placed his ſons in them, ch. xi 5—12, 23. theſe he took without any oppoſition: and came to Jeruſalem; there being no army to oppoſe him; and ſo Seſoſtris took many countries without fighting, and among the reſt Phœnicia, as Manetho[o] relates, in which Judea may be included.

℣. 5. Then came Shemaiah the prophet to Reboboam, &c.] The ſame as in ch. xi. 2. there called the man of God: and to the princes of Judah that were gathered together to Jeruſalem becauſe of Shiſhak; through fear of him, and for ſafety and protection from him, and to conſult what was to be done at this critical juncture, whether to fight him, or make peace with him on the beſt terms they could: and ſaid unto them, thus ſaith the Lord, ye have forſaken me; his law, his word, worſhip, and ordinances, ℣. 1. and therefore have I alſo left you in the hand of Shiſhak; ſuffered him to invade their land, take their fenced cities, and come up to Jeruſalem without any oppoſition, as a puniſhment of their apoſtacy; and to explain this providence to them, and call them to repentance, was the prophet ſent.

℣. 6. Whereupon the princes of Iſrael and the king humbled themſelves, &c.] Both by words acknowledging their ſins, and the juſtice of God, and by deeds, perhaps putting on ſackcloth as was uſual on ſuch occaſions, and betaking themſelves to faſting and prayer: and they ſaid, the Lord is righteous; in giving them up into the hand of their enemies, ſeeing they had forſaken him, and ſinned againſt him.

℣. 7. And when the Lord ſaw that they humbled themſelves, &c.] Though but externally; the Lord takes notice of external humiliation, as he did of Ahab's, 1 Kings xxi. 29. the word of the Lord came to Shemaiah, ſaying, they have humbled themſelves therefore I will not deſtroy them; not now, at leaſt not altogether, ℣. 12. but I will grant them ſome deliverance; yet not a complete one, for they were brought into ſervitude by Shiſhak, ℣. 8. or only for a ſhort time: and my wrath ſhall not be poured out againſt Jeruſalem by the hand of Shiſhak; that is, to the uttermoſt; that was reſerved to another time, and to be done by another hand, Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon.

℣. 8. Nevertheleſs, they ſhall be his ſervants, &c.] Tributaries to the king of Egypt: that they may know my ſervice, and the ſervice of the kingdoms of the countries; the difference between them, how eaſy the one, which they might perform without taxes and tributes, and how hard and heavy the other, through the exactions and exorbitant demands of thoſe to whom they became ſubjects.

℣. 9. So Shiſhak king of Egypt came up againſt Jeruſalem, &c.] The Vulgate Latin verſion is, "departed from Jeruſalem," as he did, having taken it, it, and ſpoiled it of its riches, and ſettled a yearly tax on the inhabitants of the land; of this, and the two following verſes, ſee the notes on 1 Kings xiv. 26, 27, 28.

℣. 12. And when he humbled himſelf, &c.] That is, Rehoboam; or broke his heart, as the Targum, was of a contrite ſpirit ſeemingly, for it was merely external: the wrath of the Lord turned from him; which appeared by the departure of Shiſhak's army: that he would not deſtroy him altogether; or make an utter deſtruction of him and his people: and alſo in Judah things went well; proſpered and ſucceeded after this affair of Shiſhak was over: or in Judah there were good things[p]; there were ſome good men, prieſts, Levites, and many of the common people, that did good things, kept up and abode by the pure worſhip and ſervice of God; and which was another reaſon why the Lord would not deſtroy them altogether now, ſee Gen. xviii. 31, 32.

℣. 13. So Rehoboam ſtrengthened himſelf in Jeruſalem, &c.] Fortified that yet more for the defence of himſelf, after Shiſhak departed: and reigned; twelve years more, for he reigned in all ſeventeen, and this was in his fifth year; of what follows in this verſe, ſee the note on 1 Kings xiv. 21.

℣. 14. And he did evil, &c.] Committed idolatry, relapſed into that, his humiliation not being hearty and ſincere: becauſe he prepared not his heart to ſeek the Lord; by prayer and ſupplication, and by an attendance on the ſervice and worſhip of God; for though he did theſe things outwardly, yet not ſincerely and heartily; he did not engage in them ſeriouſly and in good earneſt, with affection and fervour.

℣. 15, 16. Now the acts of Rehoboam, &c.] Of theſe two verſes, ſee the notes on 1 Kings xiv. 29, 30, 31.

CHAP. XIII.

THIS chapter begins with the reign of Abijah, ℣. 1, 2. gives an account of a battle between him and Jeroboam, previous to which Abijah made a ſpeech to Jeroboam and his army, to vindicate his own cauſe, encourage his own ſoldiers, and intimidate the enemy, and diſſuade them from fighting, ℣. 3—12. and in the mean while Jeroboam laid an ambuſh for him, which greatly diſtreſſed him, ℣. 13, 14. nevertheleſs he obtained a compleat victory over him, ℣. 15—20. and the chapter is concluded with ſome account of his family and reign, ℣. 21, 22.

℣. 1. Now in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam, began Abijah to reign over Judah.] See the note on 1 Kings xv. 1.

℣. 2. He reigned three years in Jeruſalem, &c.] See the note on 1 Kings xv. 2. his mother's name alſo was Michaiah the daughter of Uriel of Gibeah; ſee ch. xi. 20. and the note on 1 Kings xv. 2. and there was war between Abijah and Jeroboam; and in this chapter is an account of a battle fought between them, not recorded in the book of Kings.

℣. 3. And Abijah ſet the battle in array, with an army of valiant men of war, even 400,000 choſen men, &c.] Collected ſuch an army of ſelect men, led them into his enemy's country, and ſet them in order of battle: and Jeroboam alſo ſet the battle in array againſt him, with 800,000 choſen men, being mighty men of valour; double the number of Abijah's army, he having ten tribes to collect out of, and Abijah but two.

℣. 4. And Abijah ſtood upon mount Zemaraim, which is in mount Ephraim, &c.] Which might have its name from a city of Benjamin of this name, to which it was near, though within the borders of Ephraim, Joſh. xviii. 22. formerly inhabited by the Zemarites, from whence it might have its name, Gen. x. 18. here Abijah ſtood, that he might be the better heard by the armies pitched in the valley; and very probably he deſired a parley, and it was granted, otherwiſe he would not have been ſafe in the poſition in which he was: and ſaid, Hear me, thou Jeroboam, and all Iſrael; as many as were now gathered together, and which were a great number.

℣. 5. Ought you not to know, &c.] They did know what he afterwards ſays, but he would have them conſider and acknowledge it: that the Lord God of Iſrael gave the kingdom over Iſrael to David for ever; to him and his ſeed, particularly to the Meſſiah, that ſhould ſpring from him; but whether Abijah had this in view is a queſtion, ſee 2 Sam. vii. 13. 16. even to him and to his ſons by a covenant of ſalt; that is, a perpetual one, which was inviolable, and never to be made void; called ſo, becauſe ſalt preſerves from corruption and putrefaction, and becauſe made uſe of in ſacrifices offered when covenants were made; the Targum is, "as ſalt-waters, which never loſe their ſaltneſs.

℣. 6. Yet Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, the ſervant of Solomon the ſon of David, is riſen up, &c.] Notwithſtanding it was well known the kingdom was entailed on the poſterity of David by an everlaſting covenant; Abijah calls Jeroboam Solomon's ſervant by way of great contempt, as Jarchi obſerves, he being the general receiver of his tax in the tribe of Ephraim, 1 Kings xi. 28. and hath rebelled againſt his Lord; his rightful king and ſovereign; the charge is no leſs than high-treaſon.

℣. 7. And there are gathered unto him vain men, &c.] Void of the fear of God, and all that is good: the children of Belial; men unprofitable, good for nothing, or that had caſt off the yoke of the law of God, were lawleſs and abandoned perſons: and have ſtrengthened themſelves againſt Rehoboam the ſon of Solomon; rejected his government of them; went into a ſtrong oppoſition to him, and ſet up another king over them: when Rehoboam was young and tender-hearted, and could not withſtand them; not that he was young in years, for he was 41 years of age when he began to reign; tho' Joſhua is called a young man when he is ſuppoſed to be between 50 and 60 years of age, Exod. xxxiii. 11. and though adoleſcentia and juventus are both uſed in Latin writers for youth, yet Varro[q] diſtinguiſhes them, and makes the former to begin at the year 15, and continue to the year 30; and the latter to begin at 30, and end at 45; ſo that according to this, Rehoboam was then in his ſtage of youth; but perhaps the meaning here is, that he was young in the kingdom, ſcarcely ſettled on his throne, throne, and the advantage of that was taken; nor was he cowardly and fearful; and if Abijah meant that, by tender-heartedneſs he not only reproached but belied his father; for he would have fought with Iſrael in order to have reduced them to obedience, but was forbidden by the Lord; if, by tender-hearted, he means that he had a tender regard to the command of God, it is true; but that ſeems not to be his ſenſe, but the former.

℣. 8. And now ye think to withſtand the kingdom of the Lord, in the hand of the ſons of David, &c.] To oppoſe them, prevail over them, and get it out of their hands, which is delivered to them by the Lord, as the Targum: and ye be a great multitude; of which they boaſted, and in which they truſted, being ten tribes to two, and in this army two to one: and there are with you golden calves which Jeroboam made you for gods; or, but [r] there are with you, &c. which Abijah ſuggeſts would be ſo far from helping them, that they would be their ruin, they having, by the worſhip of them, provoked the Lord againſt them.

℣. 9. Have ye not caſt out the prieſts of the Lord, the ſons of Aaron, and the Levites, &c.] Becauſe they would not ſacrifice to his idols, and that they might not inſtruct the people in the pure worſhip of God, and that he and his people might be free from the payment of tithes, firſt-fruits, &c. and their cities fall into his hands: and have made you prieſts after the manner of the nations of other lands; after the manner of the Gentiles, without any regard to any particular tribe, which God had appointed thoſe to be taken from: ſo that whoſoever cometh to conſecrate himſelf with a young bullock and ſeven rams; which were five more than what were required by the law of Moſes for the conſecration of a prieſt, Exod. xxix. 1. the ſame may be a prieſt of them that are no gods; by nature, only nominal and fictitious deities, as the calves were, which had no divinity in them, ſee 1 Kings xiii. 31.

℣. 10. But as for us, the Lord is our God, &c.] The Word of the Lord, as the Targum; we know and acknowledge no other; not the calves at Dan and Bethel, nor any other idols, only the one living and true God: and we have not forſaken him; his laws, ſtatutes, ordinances, and worſhip; for though Abijah was not a religious man, yet it ſeems the form of religion was kept up, and temple-ſervice was obſerved in his days: and the prieſts which miniſter unto the Lord; by offering ſacrifices, and burning incenſe: are the ſons of Aaron; and they only: and the Levites wait upon their buſineſs; ſome in ſinging ſongs of praiſe, vocally and inſtrumentally, others in keeping the doors of the temple and the treaſures of the houſe of God, and others in aſſiſting the prieſts at the altar.

℣. 11. And they burn unto the Lord every morning and every evening, burnt ſacrifices and ſweet incenſe, &c.] That is, the prieſts; the one they did on the altar of burnt-offering, and the other on the altar of incenſe, and both every day, morning and evening: the ſhew-bread alſo ſet they in order upon the pure table; the ſhew-bread-table, every ſabbath-day, when they took the old bread off, which had ſtood there a week: and the candleſtick of gold with the lamps thereof, to burn every evening; theſe were lighted every evening, and dreſſed every morning; and though there were ten tables and ten candleſticks in Solomon's temple, yet only one of each was uſed at a time; and therefore from hence it is not to be concluded, that all the reſt were taken away by Shiſhak: for we keep the charge of the Lord our God; obſerve all the rites and ceremonies, laws and ordinances enjoined by him; the Targum is, "the charge of the Word of the Lord our God:" but ye have forſaken him; his fear or worſhip, as the ſame paraphraſe.

℣. 12. And behold, God himſelf is with us for our captain, &c.] To go before our armies, and fight our battles for us: and his prieſts with ſounding trumpets to cry alarm againſt you; which was one uſe of the trumpets, that the people might be remembered by the Lord, and ſaved from their enemies, Numb. x. 9. ſo that this circumſtance was againſt Jeroboam and his army, and for Abijah and his: O children of Iſrael, fight ye not againſt the Lord God of your fathers; for fighting againſt his people, that retained the pure worſhip of him, was fighting againſt him: for you ſhall not proſper; he ſeems to be aſſured of victory.

℣. 13. But Jeroboam cauſed an ambuſhment to come about behind them, &c.] Whilſt Abijah was making his oration, he detached a party from his army, which got about, and lay in ambuſh, behind the army of Abijah: ſo they were before Judah; Jeroboam and the greater part of his army: and the ambuſhment was behind them; which Jeroboam had ſent thither.

℣. 14. And when Judah looked back, &c.] On hearing a noiſe behind them: behold, the battle was before and behind; men were ſet in battle array, and the battle was begun, and an attack made upon them both ways: and they cried unto the Lord; for help againſt their enemies, and to deliver them out of their hands: and the prieſts ſounded with the trumpets; to inſpire them with chearfulneſs, and to ſuggeſt to them that God was with them, and they need not be afraid.

℣. 15. Then the men of Judah gave a ſhout, &c.] Taking heart at the ſound of the trumpets, and in order to encourage one another, and intimidate the enemy; ſee the note on 1 Sam. xvii. 20. and as the men of Judah ſhouted, it came to paſs, that God ſmote Jeroboam and all Iſrael before Abijah and Judah; poſſeſſed them with a panic, ſo that they fled at once, as follows.

℣. 16. And the children of Iſrael fled before Judah, &c.] Were in ſuch a fright and conſternation, that they could not ſtand their ground, or engage at all; but took to flight immediately: and God delivered them into their hand; to be taken and ſlain by them.

℣. 17. And Abijah and his people ſlew them with a great ſlaughter, &c.] As they fled, purſuing them: ſo there fell down ſlain of Iſrael, 500,000 choſen men; ſuch a ſlaughter as is not to be met with in any hiſtory, as Joſephus [s] obſerves; though Abarbinel wonders he ſhould ſay ſo, and affirms, that he had read of larger numbers ſlain at once; but he is the only man that ever pretended to it; Jerom [t] makes the number but 50,000, and ſome copies of the Vulgate Latin [u], and Joſephus Ben Gorion, as Abarbinel [w] relates; but the true Joſephus, the Targum, and all the antient verſions, agree with the Hebrew text; more than half Jeroboam's army was cut off, and 100,000 more than Abijah had in his.

℣. 18. Thus the children of Iſrael were brought under at that time, &c.] Humbled and weakened, but not reduced to the government of the houſe of David:

David: and the children of Judah prevailed; or grew ſtrong: becauſe they relied upon the Lord God of their fathers; truſted in him, and not in an arm of fleſh; the Targum is, "in the Word of the Lord God of their fathers."

℣. 19. And Abijah purſued after Jeroboam, &c.] As he and his army fled: and took cities from him; the following ones: Beth-el with the towns thereof; the villages adjoining to it; here one of the calves was ſet up, which either Jeroboam took care to remove before this place fell into the hands of Abijah, or Abijah let it remain, and did not deſtroy it: and Jeſhanah with the towns thereof; which Reland [x] thinks is the ſame that is called by Jerom [y] Jethaba: and Ephraim with the towns thereof; a city ſo called, thought to be the ſame that is mentioned in John xi. 54. ſee the note there; it is here called in the Targum, Ephron; ſo Jerom [z] calls it, and ſays it was Sichem.

℣. 20. Neither did Jeroboam recover ſtrength again in the days of Abijah, &c.] So as to bring an army into the field againſt him, and fight him: and the Lord ſtroke him; by ſome Jewiſh writers [a], this is interpreted of Abijah; and the reaſon of his being ſtricken, they ſay, was becauſe he did not deſtroy the calf when he took Bethel; but it is beſt to underſtand it of Jeroboam, ſince Abijah is afterwards ſaid to wax mighty: and he died; not immediately, for he lived two years after Abijah, 1 Kings xiv. 20. and 15. 9. but continued under a lingering diſeaſe he was ſmitten with, and which iſſued in his death.

℣. 21. But Abijah waxed mighty, &c.] In his kingdom, increaſing in riches and numbers, power and authority, and in his family: and married 14 wives, and begat 22 ſons, and 16 daughters; not after the above battle, nor ſince he began to reign; for he reigned but three years; but he, no doubt, married wives, and had children before he came to the throne, as he might have others after.

℣. 22. And the reſt of the acts of Abijah, and his ways, and his ſayings, &c.] Not only his warlike actions, and his courſe of life, but ſome remarkable ſayings of his, he being a man of wiſdom and eloquence, as his above ſpeech ſhews; are written in the ſtory of the prophet Iddo; who might write the hiſtory of his own times; ſee 1 Kings xv. 7.

CHAP. XIV.

THIS chapter relates the death of Abijah, and the ſucceſſion of Aſa in his ſtead, ℣. 1. gives a good character of the latter for his reformation in religion, and for the care he took for the ſafety and protection of his ſubjects, ℣. 2—8. and an account is given of a large army of Ethiopians that came againſt him, over whom, he crying to the Lord, and truſting in him, by his help obtained a compleat victory, ℣. 9—15.

℣. 1. So Abijah ſlept with his fathers, ſee 1 Kings xv. 8. And Aſa his ſon reigned in his ſtead; in his days the land was quiet 10 years; the Targum is, the land of Iſrael; but much better the Septuagint, the land of Judah; theſe 10 years, in which it had reſt from war, were the firſt three years of Aſa's reign, and the firſt ſeven of Baaſha's, according to Jarchi, and which ſeems right; after which there was war between them all their days, ſee 1 Kings xv. 32, 33.

℣. 2. And Aſa did that which was good and right, &c.] See 1 Kings xv. 11.

℣. 3. For he took away the altars of the ſtrange gods, &c.] Or of a ſtrange people, of the Zidonians, Ammonites, and Moabites, which had remained from the times of Solomon, and which he built for his wives, 1 Kings xi. 7, 8. and the high places; built for idols; for as for thoſe on which the true God was worſhipped, they were not removed in his days, 1 Kings xv. 14. and brake down the images; or ſtatues, or pillars, erected to the honour of idols, and on which the images of them were placed: and cut down the groves; in the midſt of which they ſtood.

℣. 4. And commanded Judah to ſeek the Lord God of their fathers, &c.] To pray to him, and him only, and attend his worſhip and ſervice; this he did by a public edict: and to do the law and the commandment; to obſerve all the laws of God, moral, ceremonial, and civil.

℣. 5. Alſo he took away out of all the cities of Judah, the high places and the images, &c.] Perhaps the high places in ℣. 3. deſign only the high places and altars in Jeruſalem, and near it; theſe in all the reſt of the cities of the land; the images were, as the word ſignifies, ſun-images, either made in the form of the ſun, or dedicated to it, or temples for it; ſee the note on Lev. xxvi. 30. and the kingdom was quiet before him; he had no foreign enemy to moleſt him, and ſo took that opportunity to reform divine worſhip, and in that he met with no oppoſition from his people.

℣. 6. And he built fenced cities in Judah, &c.] for his defence againſt the kingdom of Iſrael and other nations, as Reboboam had done before him; and which might have been demoliſhed by Shiſhak king of Egypt, when he took them, ch. xi. 5—12. and xii. 4. for the land had reſt; according to the Targum, the land of Iſrael reſted, and gave no diſturbance to the kingdom of Judah, not having recovered the blow given them by Abijah; but it is rather to be underſtood of the land of Judah, which, as it did not attempt the reduction of the 10 tribes, ſo it was neither attacked by them, nor any other enemy, and he had no war in thoſe years; in the 10 years mentioned, ℣ 1. neither with Iſrael nor any other nation: becauſe the Lord had given him reſt; that he might be at leiſure to do the above things; all reſt is from the Lord, civil, ſpiritual and eternal.

℣. 7. Therefore he ſaid unto Judah, &c.] To the nobles and principal men of the kingdom: Let us build theſe cities; which he, no doubt, particularly mentioned by name, and pointed at; that is, repair and fortify them, and put them into a better condition of defence: and make about them walls and towers, gates and bars; which are always made to fortified places, to protect the inhabitants, and keep out an enemy: while the land is yet before us; in our power, no enemy in it, nor any to hinder or moleſt, becauſe we have ſought the Lord our God, we have ſought him, and he hath given us reſt on every every ſide; had ſet up his pure worſhip, reformed abuſes in it, and removed idolatry from it, and cloſely attended to the ſervice of the ſanctuary, which was well pleaſing to God; the happy effect of which they experienced, reſt from all their enemies round about them: ſo that they built, and proſpered; they began, and went on, and finiſhed, there being nothing to hinder them.

℣. 8. And Aſa had an army of men that bare targets and ſpears, out of Judah 300,000, &c.] Theſe were armed with a large ſort of ſhield, to protect them, and with ſpears, to puſh at an enemy when they came near them, and to cloſe quarters with them: and out of Benjamin that bare ſhields and drew bows, 280,000; theſe had alſo a leſſer ſort of ſhields, to defend their bodies, and bows and arrows, to annoy an enemy at a diſtance; all theſe were mighty men of valour; able-bodied men, valiant and courageous; perhaps Aſa gathered theſe together, on hearing that the Ethiopians were preparing to attack him, as follows.

℣. 9. And there came out againſt them, Zerah the Ethiopian, with an hoſt of 1000,1000, and 300 chariots, &c.] According to Joſephus [b], this army conſiſted of 900,000 foot, and 100,000 horſemen, and certain it is there were horſemen among them, ch. xvi. 8. ſome ſay theſe were not the Ethiopians in Africa, beyond Egypt, being, as is ſaid, too far off for ſuch an army to travel, and it would be hard to ſay what ſhould induce them to it; and beſides it is urged, the king of Egypt would never have ſuffered them to paſs through his dominions, as they muſt to come to Judea; but that they were the Cuſhite Arabs, that inhabited Midian, part of Arabia Petræa, and Arabia Felix, near Judæa, ſee the note on Numb. xii. 1. but ſince this great hoſt conſiſted of Lubim or Lybians, inhabitants of Africa, as well as of Ethiopians, ch. xvi. 8. theſe Ethiopians ſeem to be rather thoſe in Africa, who were maſters of Egypt and Lybia, as well as Ethiopia, quickly after the death of Shiſhak, or Seſoſtris, ſee ch. xii. 2, 3. which accounts for the largeneſs of this army, and their paſſage through Egypt: that there were two ſorts of Ethiopians, the weſtern and eaſtern ones, the one that dwelt in Africa, the other in Aſia, appears clearly from Homer [c], Herodotus [d], and Heliodorus [e], the former of which ſeem here meant; nor need this army be thought incredible, eſpecially ſince they were joined by the Lubim or Lybians, and aſſiſted by the Philiſtines, as appears by what follows; beſides, the two armies of Iſrael and Judah we read of in the preceding chapter, when put together, exceed this; ſee alſo, ch. xvii. 14—18, ſo the armies of Tamerlane and Bajazet, that of the former being 1,600,000 and that of the latter 1,400,000 [f]: and came unto Mareſhah; a city in the tribe of Judah, on the borders of it, ch. xi. 8.

℣. 10. Then Aſa went out againſt him, &c.] Notwithſtanding he brought ſo great an army with him: and they ſet the battle in array in the valley of Zephathah at Mareſhah; where the Ethiopians were; he did not ſtay till they got farther into his country, but marched againſt them when on the frontiers of it, and choſe the valley to pitch in, as being more to the advantage of his ſmaller army; ſee Judg. i. 17.

℣. 11. And Aſa cried unto the Lord his God, &c.] Or prayed, as the Targum, with vehemence, being in diſtreſs; this he did before the battle began, at the head of his army, and for the encouragement of it: and ſaid, Lord, it is nothing with thee to help; nothing can hinder from helping, his power being ſuperior to all others, and even infinite, and none beſides him could: whether with many, or with them that have no power; numbers make no difference with him, nor the condition they are in; whether numerous and mighty, or few and feeble; he can as eaſily help the one as the other, ſee 1 Sam xiv. 6. help us, O Lord our God; who are few and weak in compariſon of the enemy: for we reſt on thee; truſt in thee, and rely upon thee for help; the Targum is, "on thy Word we lean:" and in thy name we go againſt this multitude; expreſſing faith in him, expecting help from him, encouraging and ſtrengthening themſelves in him, going forth not in their own name and ſtrength, but in his; the Targum is, "in the name of the Word of the Lord:" O Lord, thou art our God; and thou only we know, and ſerve no other, and we are thy people, called by thy name: let not man prevail againſt thee; for ſhould this enemy prevail againſt them, it would be interpreted prevailing againſt their God.

℣. 12. So the Lord ſmote the Ethiopians before Aſa, and before Judah, &c.] With conſternation and terror; they were thrown into a panic: and the Ethiopians fled; before them, juſt as Jeroboam and Iſrael had, as related in the preceding chapter, ℣. 15, 16.

℣. 13. And Aſa, and the people that were with him, purſued them unto Gerar, &c.] A city of the Philiſtines, Gen. xx. 1. and the Ethiopians were overthrown, that they could not recover themſelves; they were thrown into ſuch a fright, and into ſo much confuſion, that they could not put themſelves in order, and rally again; or there fell ſuch a vaſt number of them, that there were ſcarce any remaining alive, which ſeems to be the ſenſe of the words uſed: for they were deſtroyed before the Lord, and before his hoſt; the army of Iſrael, which the Lord was, as it were, the commander of, fought for, and led them in the purſuit, and gave them victory; or it may mean an hoſt of angels, employed in deſtroying this great army; and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions of ℣. 12. read, "the angel of the Lord ſmote the Ethiopians:" and they carried away very much ſpoil; which they found in their camp, and with their ſlain; even much gold and ſilver, as Joſephus [g] ſays.

℣. 14. And they ſmote all the cities round about Gerar, &c.] The cities of the Philiſtines, who were auxiliaries and confederates with theſe Ethiopians, and colonies from them, according to Theodoret, and who ſays, about Eleutheropolis was a place, called, in his time, Geraron Saton: for the fear of the Lord came upon them; ſo that they had no power to defend themſelves, and oppoſe the men of Judah: and they ſpoiled all the cities; of the goods and ſubſtance that were in them: for there was exceeding much ſpoil in them; great wealth and riches of one kind or another.

℣. 15. They ſmote alſo the tents of cattle, &c.] The people that dwelt in tents for the ſake of the paſturage of their cattle; the Scenite Arabs, ſo called from dwelling in tents: and carried away ſheep; which thoſe Arabs were feeding in Paleſtine, and which this great army brought with them for their ſup-

ASA returning from the battle, and with the ſpoil of the enemy, was met by a prophet of the Lord, who encouraged him to go on with the work of reformation, promiſing the preſence and help of God with him, ℣. 1—7. which inſpired him with freſh courage, and he went about the work with great alacrity; and having offered ſacrifices, he and his people entered into a ſolemn covenant with the Lord, to ſerve him, ℣. 8—15. upon which he deſtroyed his mother's idol, brought the dedicated things into the houſe of God, and the effect of this was peace for a long time, ℣. 16—19.

℣. 1. And the ſpirit of God came upon Azariah the ſon of Oded, &c.] The ſame with Iddo, as Hillerus [h] thinks; and ſome ſuppoſe this to be the name of the ſon as well as the father, but called Azariah, to diſtinguiſh him from him, ſee ℣. 8. on whom came, as the Targum, the ſpirit of prophecy, inſtructing him what to ſay to Aſa; and the Jews ſay [i], he is the ſame with Iddo, and he the ſame that was ſent to Jeroboam, to reprove him for the altar he built.

℣. 2. And he went out to meet Aſa, &c.] From Jeruſalem, as Aſa was coming to it: and ſaid unto him, Hear ye me, Aſa, and all Judah and Benjamin; the principal inhabitants of which tribes had been collected, and went to this war, and were now returning: the Lord is with you, while ye be with him; it was a clear caſe he had been with them, in giving them the victory over the Ethiopians; and as long as they continued in the ſervice of God, and abode by his pure worſhip, they might expect he would yet be with them, otherwiſe not: and if ye ſeek him, he will be found of you; you will ſee his face, and enjoy his favour, and have his preſence, and help from him in every time of need, when they ſought him by prayer and ſupplication, as Aſa had, and attended his worſhip and ordinances: but if ye forſake him; his laws and his ſervice: he will forſake you; and leave you to fall into the hands of your enemies.

℣. 3. Now for a long ſeaſon Iſrael hath been without the true God, &c.] The fear, worſhip, and ſervice of him being greatly neglected by them for a long time; what period of time is referred to is not expreſſed, whether paſt, preſent, or to come, but left to be ſupplied; the Targum refers this to the time of the ſeparation of the ten tribes, and the days of Jeroboam, when the calves were worſhipped, and not the true God, and the teaching prieſts of the Lord were caſt out, and the law of the Lord, eſpecially with reſpect to worſhip, was not regarded, in which it is followed by many interpreters; others think it refers to time to come, and to what would be the caſe, ſhould they forſake the Lord; and was fulfilled in the Babyloniſh captivity, ſee Hoſ. iii. 4. and the Jews [k] ſay, that "Oded propheſied that the days ſhould come, when Iſrael would be without the true God, ſince judgment ſhould not be done in the world; and without a teaching prieſt; ſince the high prieſthood ſhould ceaſe, (ſee Heb. vii. 12.) and without the law; ſince the Sanhedrim ſhould ceaſe;" but according to our ſupplement, and which ſeems righteſt, it refers to time paſt, not to the caſe of the ten tribes from the times of Jeroboam; nor to the caſe of Judah from the times of Rehoboam; but to times more remote. even the times of the judges, when they worſhipped Baal and Aſhtaroth, and not the true God, Judg ii. 10, 11. yet at the ſame time ſuggeſting, that ſhould the preſent inhabitants of Judah go into the ſame practices, their caſe would be like theirs, deſcribed in the following verſes: and without a teaching prieſt; as they were under the judges, from the times of Phinehas to thoſe of Eli, which was a long ſpace of time: and without law; every man doing as he pleaſed, there being no king in Iſrael, nor any regard paid to the law of God, moral or ceremonial, Judg. xvii. 6.

℣. 4. But when they in their trouble did turn unto the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] When being carried captive by neighbouring nations, and oppreſſed; and they cried unto the Lord, and repented of their ſins, and turned from them to him: and ſought him; by prayer and ſupplication: he was found of them; and appeared for their help and deliverance, of which there are many inſtances in the book of Judges.

℣. 5. And in thoſe times there was no peace to him that went out, nor to him that came in, &c.] There was no ſafety in going abroad for travellers from one part to another on account of trade and buſineſs, the highways being infeſted with thieves and robbers, but great vexations were upon all the inhabitants of the countries; of the country-villages which were deſerted, becauſe of the plunders and depredations of them, Judg. v. 6, 7.

℣. 6. And nation was deſtroyed of nation, and city of city, &c.] Or one tribe of another; as the Ephraimites by the Gileadites, and the tribe of Benjamin by the other tribes; and Shechem by Abimelech, Judg. ix. 45. and xii. 6. and xx. 21. 24. 44—48. for God did vex them with all adverſity; both with foreign enemies and inteſtine wars; and now it is intimated that this would be their caſe again, ſhould they not keep cloſe to the Lord their God.

℣. 7. Be ye ſtrong therefore, and let not your hands be weak, &c.] Be hearty, earneſt and vigorous, and not languid and remiſs in reforming the worſhip of God, which Aſa had begun: for your work ſhall be rewarded; with peace and proſperity at home, and ſucceſs againſt enemies abroad, of which they had had a recent inſtance.

℣. 8. And when Aſa heard theſe words, and the prophecy of Oded the prophet, &c.] Some think that beſides the above words of Azariah the ſon of Oded, a prophecy of Oded his father was related by him, though not recorded; but rather Oded here is the ſame with the ſon of Oded; and ſo the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read Azariah the ſon of Oded; and ſo does the Alexandrian copy of the Septuagint verſion: he took courage, and put away the abominable idols out of all the land of Judah and Benjamin; which were abominable to God, and all good good men; beſides the images and ſtatues he had broken before, he removed other idols that remained, being animated and emboldened by the ſpeech of the prophet: and out of the cities which he had taken from mount Ephraim; the ſame which his father Abijah had taken from Jeroboam, ch. xiii. 19. and which perhaps, upon the approach of the Ethiopians, revolted from Aſa, or were reſtored by them to Jeroboam, and which Aſa retook upon his conqueſt of them: and renewed the altar of the Lord before the porch of the Lord: the altar of burnt-offering, which had never been repaired ſince it was made by Solomon; perhaps he anew overlaid it with braſs, that being worn out, or become very thin in ſome places.

℣. 9. And he gathered all Judah and Benjamin, and the ſtrangers with them, &c.] The proſelytes of the gate: out of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, and out of Simeon; out of all the places in thoſe tribes that had come off to him, or had been taken by him; for otherwiſe theſe belonged to the ten tribes under the government of Jeroboam, and his ſucceſſors, and the next clauſe explains it: for they fell to him out of Iſrael in abundance, when they ſaw that the Lord his God was with him; as was clear by the victory he gave him over the Ethiopians; after that time many in the above tribes came over to him; the Targum is, "when they ſaw the Word of the Lord his God was his help."

℣. 10. So they gathered themſelves together at Jeruſalem, &c.] By the order of Aſa, ℣. 9. in the third month; of the eccleſiaſtical year, the month Sivan, in which month was the day of Pentecoſt; and that very probably was the time of their gathering: in the 15th year of the reign of Aſa; and which ſeems to be the year in which he fought the Ethiopians.

℣. 11. And they offered unto the Lord the ſame time, &c.] The Targum adds, on the feaſt of weeks, or Pentecoſt: of the ſpoil which they had brought; from the camp of the Ethiopians, and the cities of the Philiſtines: 700 oxen and 7000 ſheep; partly for burnt-offerings, and partly for peace-offerings, by way of thankfulneſs to the Lord, for the victory he had given them, and for a feaſt at the making of the following covenant with him.

℣. 12. And they entered into a covenant, &c.] Aſa and all his people; that is, as Piſcator remarks, they went between the pieces of the calf cut aſunder, for the confirmation of the covenant; ſee Jer. xxxiv. 18. to ſeek the Lord God of their fathers, with all their heart, and with all their ſoul; to ſerve and worſhip him moſt truly, ſincerely and cordially.

℣. 13. That whoſoever would not ſeek the Lord God of Iſrael, ſhould be put to death, &c.] That obſtinately refuſed to worſhip him, and ſerved other Gods, which by the law was deſerving of death, Deut. xvii. 2—6. whether ſmall or great, whether man or woman; without any regard to rank or dignity, age or ſex.

℣. 14. And they ſware unto the Lord with a loud voice, &c.] As not being aſhamed of the oath they took, and that there might be witneſſes of it, and that it might be clear they did not equivocate in it, but expreſſed themſelves in plain words: and with ſhouting, and with trumpets, and with cornets; ſhewing that the oath was not extorted from them unwillingly, but that they took it with the utmoſt chearfulneſs, and with all the demonſtrations of joy and gladneſs imaginable.

℣. 15. And all Judah rejoiced at the oath, &c.] The greater part of them; for ſome there might be who were diſſemblers: for they had ſworn with all their heart; in the ſincerity and uprightneſs of their ſouls: and ſought him with their whole deſire; none being more or ſo deſirable as he: and he was found of them; and favoured them with his preſence: and the Lord gave them reſt round about; from all their enemies.

℣. 16, 17, 18. And alſo concerning Maachah the mother of Aſa the king, &c.] Or rather his grandmother, 1 Kings xv. 10. he removed her from being queen; the Septuagint verſion is, that ſhe ſhould not miniſter to Aſtarte; which was the goddeſs of the Zidonians; of this and the two next verſes ſee the notes on 1 Kings xv. 13, 14, 15.

℣. 19. And there was no more war unto the 35th year of the reign of Aſa.] That is, from the Ethiopian war to that time; after that there was no war with any foreign enemy; there were animoſities and diſcords, bickerings and hoſtilities of ſome ſort continually between Aſa and Baaſha king of Iſrael, as long as he lived, ſee 1 Kings xv. 16. 32.

CHAP. XVI.

BAASHA coming up againſt Judah, and building Ramah, Aſa made a league with the king of Syria, and hired him to make a diverſion in his favour, and cauſe Baaſha to leave off building, which ſucceeded, ℣. 1—6. for which he was reproved by a prophet of the Lord, with whom he was ſo angry for it as to put him in priſon, and oppreſs others, ℣. 7, 10. and the chapter is cloſed with an account of his diſeaſe and conduct under it, and of his death and burial, ℣. 11—14.

℣. 1. In the 36th year of the reign of Aſa, Baaſha king of Iſrael came up againſt Judah, &c.] How this is to be reconciled with the reign of Baaſha, which was but 24 years, and was begun in the 3d of Aſa, and therefore muſt have been dead near 10 years before this year of Aſa's reign, ſee the note on 1 Kings xv. 17. where, and in the following verſes, are the ſame things related as here, to the end of the 6th verſe; for the explanation of which the reader is referred thither.

℣. 7. And at that time Hanani the ſeer came to Aſa king of Judah, &c.] Being ſent by the Lord to reprove him: and ſaid unto him, Becauſe thou haſt relied on the king of Syria; on the covenant he made with him, on the promiſes the Syrian king made to him upon receiving his money, and ſo truſted to an arm of fleſh, and even an heathen king: and not relied on the Lord thy God; his promiſes, power, and providence, which he had reaſon to believe would have been engaged on his behalf, had he placed his confidence in him as he ought to have done; the Targum is, "and not relied on the Word of the Lord thy God;" therefore is the hoſt of the king of Syria eſcaped out of thine hand; which otherwiſe would have fallen into it, had he left him to continue in league with the king of Iſrael, and not ſollicited him to break it; for then he would have come with him againſt Aſa, and the Lord would have delivered him to him.

℣. 8. Were not the Ethiopians and the Lubim an huge hoſt, with very many chariots and horſemen? &c.]

&c.] They were no leſs than 1,000,000 men, and 300 chariots, ch. xiv. 9. the Lubim were the Lybians, a people near Egypt, that dwelt in Africa; according to an Arabic writer [1], they were the Nubians: yet becauſe thou didſt rely on the Lord, he delivered them into thine hand; and with equal eaſe could and would have delivered the Syrian army unto him, had he as then truſted in the Lord.

℣. 9. For the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, &c.] The eyes of his omniſcience are every where, and the eyes of his mercy and goodneſs, of his care and providence, are here and there, and in every place throughout the whole world at once, ſee Zech. iv. 10. to ſhew himſelf ſtrong in the behalf of them whoſe heart is perfect towards him; or, as in the margin, ſtrongly to hold with ſuch, to be on their ſide, take their part, ſtrengthen them, ſupport and ſupply them, and to protect and defend them who are ſincere and upright in heart; whoſe graces are ſincere and unfeigned, though not compleat, nor they free from ſin, and who, with the heart, ſincerely believe in God, in which Aſa at this time failed, though otherwiſe his heart is ſaid to be perfect, 1 Kings xv. 4. it was ſo in the general bent of it, and eſpecially with reſpect to the worſhip of God, though there was ſomething lacking in his faith at this time, as there often is in the beſt of men: herein thou haſt done fooliſhly; to truſt in man, and not in the Lord, to part with his money, and loſe the opportunity of having the whole Syrian army fall into his hands: therefore from henceforth thou ſhalt have wars; which, though we read not of, was doubtleſs his caſe; ſome interpret it of his poſterity.

℣. 10. Then Aſa was wroth with the ſeer, &c.] For this faithful reproof of him, which was another inſtance of his ſin and folly; and put him in a priſon-houſe; in a very ſtrait place, in which he could not turn himſelf, what we call little eaſe; ſome ſay it was the ſtocks, others a pillory he put him into: for he was in a rage with him, becauſe of this thing; his paſſion roſe very high, and to which he gave way, and was his infirmity: and Aſa oppreſſed ſome of the people the ſame time; by fines and impriſonments, ſuch as perhaps expreſſed their diſapprobation of his league with the king of Syria, and of his ill uſage of the prophet.

℣. 11. And behold, the acts of Aſa, firſt and laſt, &c.] See the note on 1 Kings xv. 23.

℣. 12. And Aſa in the 39th year of his reign was diſeaſed in his feet, &c.] This was about two years before his death, and his diſeaſe is generally thought to be the gout in his feet, and a juſt retaliation for putting the prophet's feet into the ſtocks: until his diſeaſe was exceeding great; it increaſed upon him, and became very ſevere and intolerable, and the fits were frequent, as well as the pain ſharper; though the ſenſe of the Hebrew [m] phraſe may be, that his diſeaſe got upwards, into a ſuperior part of his body, head, or ſtomach, which, when the gout does, it is dangerous. A very learned phyſician [n] is of opinion, that not the gout, but what he calls an oedematous ſwelling of the feet is meant, which inſenſibly gets up into the bowels, and is ſucceſſively attended with greater inconveniences; a tenſion of the abdomen, difficulty of breathing, very troubleſome to the patient, and iſſues in a dropſy, and death itſelf: yet in his diſeaſe he ſought not to the Lord; his ſeeking to phyſicians for help in his diſeaſe, perhaps, would not have been obſerved to his reproach, had he alſo ſought unto the Lord, whom he ought to have ſought in the firſt place; and when he applied to the phyſicians, he ſhould have implored the bleſſing of God on their preſcriptions; but he ſo much forgot himſelf as to forget the Lord: this is the firſt time we read of phyſicians among the Jews, and ſome think theſe were heathens, and a ſort of enchanters; the Jews entertained a very ill opinion of phyſicians, the beſt of them, they ſay [o], deſerve hell, and they adviſe [p] men not to live in a city where the chief man is a phyſician; but the author of the book of Eccleſiaſticus gives a great encomium of them, and exhorts to honour and eſteem them, ch. xxxviii. 1—8. Julian [q] the emperor greatly honoured them, and obſerves, that it is juſtly ſaid by the philoſophers, that the art of medicine fell from heaven.

℣. 13. And Aſa ſlept with his fathers, and died in the 41ſt year of his reign.] See 1 Kings xv. 10. 24.

℣. 14. And they buried him in his own ſepulchres which he had made for himſelf in the city of David, &c.] Where was the burying-place of the kings of Judah; here Aſa had ordered a vault to be made for himſelf and his family, and therefore called ſepulchres, becauſe of the ſeveral cells therein to put ſeparate bodies in: and laid him in the bed; not only laid him out, as we expreſs it, but laid him on a bed of ſtate, where he lay in great pomp; or the funeral bed, which, with other nations [r], uſed to be ſtrowed with ſmeet-ſwelling flowers and herbs, as follows: which was filled with ſweet odours, and divers kinds of ſpices prepared by the apothecaries art; or rather, confectioner or druggiſt; for it is a queſtion whether there were then any ſuch we call apothecaries; this bed was ſtrowed with ſpices, myrrh, aloes, caſia, cinnamon, &c. and which perhaps might be made up into a liquid, which was ſprinkled over the bed and ſhroud in which he lay: and they made a very great burning for him; not that they made a great fire, and burned his body; for burning was not uſed with the Jews; but they burnt ſpices and other things in great quantity, in honour of him; ſee the note on Jer. xxxiv. 5. and this cuſtom continued to the times of Herod, at whoſe funeral there were 500 of his domeſtics and freed-men bearing ſpices [s].

CHAP. XVII.

THIS chapter relates the acceſſion of Jehoſhaphat to the throne, his ſettlement on it, his piety, and reformation in religion, ℣. 1—6. his care to inſtruct the people in the law of God, ℣. 7, 8, 9. the reſpect ſhown him by neighbouring nations, ℣. 10, 11. the fortified places of his kingdom, his numerous forces, and mighty men at the head of them, ℣. 12—19.

℣. 1. And Jehoſhaphat his ſon reigned in his ſtead, &c.] In the ſtead of Aſa his father: and ſtrengthened himſelf againſt Iſrael; the ten tribes, by fortifying his cities, building caſtles, raiſing and keeping a large ſtanding army, as the latter part of this chapter ſhews, and the next verſe.

℣. 2. And he placed forces in all the fenced cities of Judah, &c.] A conſiderable number of ſoldiers, to defend them ſhould they be attacked: and ſet garriſons in the land of Judah; on the frontiers and borders of it, to protect it: and in the cities of Ephraim; ſoldiers to keep garriſon there: which Aſa his father had taken; ſee ch. xv. 8.

℣. 3. And the Lord was with Jehoſhaphat, &c.] Guiding and directing, proſpering and ſucceeding him in all things; he had, no doubt, his gracious preſence in ſpiritual things, as well as his powerful and directing preſence in things civil; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord was for his help:" becauſe he walked in the firſt ways of his father David; which were his beſt; ſome of his laſt ways not being good, as in the affair of Uriah and Bathſheba, and his numbering of the people; Jehoſhaphat followed him in the one, but not in the other: or, in the ways of David and his father, the firſt; the firſt of them both; for the latter ways of his father Aſa were not ſo good as his firſt, as the preceding chapter ſhews; and the Septuagint verſion leaves out the word David, and ſo reſtrains it to his own father: and ſought not unto Baalim; as did Ahab king of Iſrael, who now reigned there; 1 Kings xv. 24. and xvi. 32.

℣. 4. But ſought to the Lord God of his fathers, &c.] Prayed to him, worſhipped and ſerved him: and walked in his commandments; obſerved and kept them, moral, ceremonial, and judicial: and not after the doings of Iſrael; who worſhipped the golden calves at Dan and Bethel.

℣. 5. Therefore the Lord ſtabliſhed the kingdom in his hand, &c.] Piety is the beſt prop of government; the throne is beſt ſupported and eſtabliſhed by truth, righteouſneſs, and mercy; by the exerciſe of theſe Jehoſhaphat was ſettled in his kingdom, and had a place in the hearts of his people: and all Judah brought to Jehoſhaphat preſents; being well affected to him, as well as it was uſual ſo to do at a prince's acceſſion to the throne, ſee 1 Sam. x. 27. and he had riches and honour in abundance; through the preſents his ſubjects brought him, and the reſpect they ſhewed him.

℣. 6. And his heart was liſt up in the ways of the Lord, &c.] It was engaged in them, was bent and ſet upon them; he walked in them with great pleaſure and chearfulneſs, being inſpired with zeal and courage; he was fearleſs and intrepid, and regarded not any oppoſition he might have, or expect to have, in the work of reformation in which he was concerned: moreover, he took away the high places; ſuch as were dedicated to idols, but not thoſe in which the true God was worſhipped, ch. xx. 33. and groves out of Judah; where idols were placed; for though theſe had been removed by Aſa, yet had been renewed in the latter part of his days, when more negligent of religion.

℣. 7. Alſo in the third year of his reign, he ſent to his princes, &c.] That dwelt in the ſeveral parts of the kingdom; or he ſent them, being with him, ſome of the principal men of his court; for ל may be a ſign of the accuſative caſe, as it ſometimes is: even to Ben-hail, and to Obadiah, and to Zechariah, and to Nethaneel, and to Michaiah, to teach in the cities of Judah; to ſee that they were taught, and oblige them to attend to the inſtructions that ſhould be given them, and not mutiny and rebel againſt their teachers; and to let them know what was the king's pleaſure on this head, and to back with their authority the prieſts and Levites, whoſe proper work it was to inſtruct, and who therefore were ſent with them, as follows.

℣. 8. And with them he ſent Levites, &c.] With the five princes he ſent nine Levites: even Shemaiah, and Nethaniah, and Zebadiah, and Aſahel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehonathan, and Adonijah, and Tobijah, and Tob-adonijah, Levites; of whom we no where elſe read; no doubt they were principal perſons, and fit for the work they were ſent about: and with them Eliſhama, and Jehoram, prieſts; whoſe lips were to keep knowledge, and at whoſe mouth the law was to be ſought, Mal. ii. 7.

℣. 9. And they taught in Judah, &c.] The people their duty to God and man: and had the book of the law of the Lord with them; as the rule of their inſtruction, and the people's obedience; out of this they taught them, and by it confirmed what they taught, and enforced it with the divine authority: and went about throughout all the cities of Judah; not only their own cities, the Levitical ones, but all others: and taught the people; the law of the Lord, the fear and worſhip of God.

℣. 10. And the fear of the Lord fell upon all the kingdoms of the lands that were round about Judah, &c.] Upon the ten tribes, and on foreign nations about them, as Moabites, Edomites, Syrians, Egyptians, Arabs and Philiſtines; this fear, as it came from the Lord, ſo might be raiſed and increaſed by obſerving, that religion was revived in them; for they might perceive by former obſervations made, that the more religious theſe people were, the more proſperous and formidable they were: ſo that they made no war againſt Jehoſhaphat; to interrupt him in the work of reformation he was ſo intent upon.

℣. 11. Alſo ſome of the Philiſtines brought Jehoſhaphat preſents and tribute-ſilver, &c.] Perhaps thoſe of Gerar, and the parts adjacent, Aſa took and ſpoiled, and made tributary, ch. xiv. 14. and the Arabians brought him flocks, 7700 rams, and 7700 he-goats; with which their country abounded; and theſe might be the Scenite Arabs, who fearing leſt Jehoſhaphat ſhould fall upon them, and take away their flocks as his father had done, ch. xiv. 15. brought theſe preſents to him.

℣. 12. And Jehoſhaphat waxed great exceedingly, &c.] In wealth and riches, power and authority, in his forces and fortifications: and he built in Judah, caſtles, and cities of ſtores; caſtles for the defence of his kingdom, and ſtore-cities to lay up corn, and wine, and all proviſions, in caſe of an invaſion, or againſt a time of war.

℣. 13. And he had much buſineſs in the cities of Judah, &c.] Partly in fortifying them, and partly in reforming the inhabitants of them: and the men of war, mighty men of valour, were in Jeruſalem; or by or near unto it, ſo the particle is rendered, Joſh. v. 13. they encamped in places adjacent to it; for ſuch a number of men as follows, even 1,160,000, could never be contained in Jeruſalem, but muſt be diſpoſed of in the territories of it; nor did they wait on the king together, but in courſe, ſee ℣. 19. by which it appears there is no need to ſuppoſe any miſtake of the tranſcriber, in any or all of the following ſums, as has been ſuggeſted [q].

[q] See Maitland's Hiſtory of London, b. 3. ch. 2. p. 543.

℣. 14. And these are the numbers of them according to the house of their fathers, &c.] Both of the tribe of Judah, and of Benjamin: and first of Judah, the captains of thousands; some had 1000 men under them, and some 100: Adnah the chief; he was the principal commander or general of them: and with him mighty men of valour, 300,000; such a number was under his command.

℣. 15. And next to him was Jehohanan the captain, &c.] Being of the same rank as to office, but having a lesser number of men under him; and it may respect not any kind of subordination, only nearness of place, as the Targum, "he that encamped next to him:" and with him 280,000; which number was but 20,000 less than the former.

℣. 16. And next him was Amasiah the son of Zichri, &c.] He encamped next to him, as the Targum: who willingly offered himself unto the Lord; to fight the Lord's battles, and without any stipend, as some think; or, as Kimchi, he offered gold and silver to the treasures of the house of the Lord: and with him 200,000 mighty men of valour; the number was 80,000 less than the former; the whole of Judah amounted to 780,000 men.

℣. 17. And of Benjamin, Eliada, a mighty man of valour, &c.] Was the chief commander: and with armed men with bow and shield, 200,000; which were the armour of the tribe of Benjamin they were best skilled in, ch. xiv. 8.

℣. 18. And next to him was Jehozabad, &c.] According to the Targum he encamped next him: and with him 180,000 ready prepared for war; being able-bodied men, well disciplined, valiant and well armed; these numbers of Judah and Benjamin put together, amount to 1,160,000 men, whereas Asa only brought into the field 580,000; but it should be considered, there had been a long time of peace, many had come off from the ten tribes to Judah, and the promise of multiplying the seed of Abraham was eminently fulfilled.

℣. 19. These waited on the king, &c.] Not this vast number of men at one time, but in course, as David's military men waited on him, 1 Chron. xxvii. 1—15. or these several captains, with a proper number of men under them detached from the body; and they were all ready to obey the king's orders whenever he should have occasion for them: besides those whom the king put into the fenced cities, throughout Judah; and all together, the militia of the kingdom was very numerous and formidable.

CHAP. XVIII.

℣. 1. NOW Jehoshaphat had riches, and honour in abundance, &c.] Still more and more, see ch. xvii. 5. and which moved Ahab to desire friendship and affinity with him, to which Jehoshaphat agreed: and joined affinity with Ahab; king of Israel, married his son Joram to Athaliah, a daughter of Ahab by Jezebel of Zidon; which marriage proved of bad consequence to Jehoshaphat and his family.

℣. 2. And after certain years, &c.] Two years, according to the Syriac and Arabic versions, or in the third year after the affinity was contracted, see 1 Kings xxii. 2. he went down to Ahab to Samaria; to pay him a visit upon the alliance, civil and matrimonial, contracted between them: and Ahab killed sheep and oxen for him in abundance, and for the people that he had with him; entertained him and his retinue in a very grand and liberal manner: and persuaded him to go up with him to Ramoth-gilead; from hence, to the end of the chapter, it is the same with 1 Kings xxii. 4—37. see the notes there.

CHAP. XIX.

JEhoshaphat returning from the battle at Ramoth-gilead, was met by a prophet, who reproved him for helping the ungodly, ℣. 1, 2, 3. which quickened him to a greater regard for the reformation of his kingdom, ℣. 4. and he set judges in all the cities of Judah, and exhorted them to do justice, ℣. 5, 6, 7. and in the city of Jerusalem he appointed priests and Levites for the same purpose, and gave them a strict charge, and animated and encouraged them to perform their office faithfully, ℣. 8—11.

℣. 1. And Jehoshaphat the king of Judah returned, &c.] From Ramoth-gilead, after Ahab was slain: to his house in peace in Jerusalem; to his palace there in safety, having narrowly escaped losing his life in the battle.

℣. 2. And Jehu the son of Hanani the seer, &c.] The son of him that reproved Asa, for which he put him in prison, ch. xvi. 7, 10. but that did not deter this his son from reproving Jehoshaphat: went out to meet him; as he was returning: and said to king Jehoshaphat, shouldest thou help the ungodly; such an one as Ahab, an idolater, murderer and persecutor: and love them that hate the Lord? his laws, worship and ordinances, as he had; intimating, that he had done wrong, by entering into alliance and affinity with him, by shewing him friendship, and assisting him in his war against the Syrians: therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord; which appeared in the war of the Ammonites and Moabites with him, related in the next chapter, and in the calamities that came upon his family, his sons being slain by Jehoram that succeeded him, and his grandsons by Jehu.

℣. 3. Nevertheless, there are good things found in thee, &c.] Principles of grace, righteousness and holiness, faith, love, zeal, and other graces, true and genuine, from whence sprung many good works done by him: in that thou hast taken away the groves out of the land; cut down the groves of trees, and destroyed the idols and images in them: and hast prepared thine heart to seek God; through the grace of God his heart was disposed to serve and worship the Lord, and to seek his honour and glory.

℣. 4. And Jehoshaphat dwelt at Jerusalem, &c.] And went out no more to Samaria, nor concerned himself about the affairs of Israel, but attended to his own: and he went out again through the people; took a tour throughout his dominions now, in his own person, as before by his princes, with the priests and and Levites: from Beerſheba to mount Ephraim; Beerſheba was the ſouthern boundary of the land of Judah, and mount Ephraim lay to the north, and was the northern boundary of it ſince the diviſion of the kingdom: and brought them back to the Lord God of their fathers; from idolatry to the pure worſhip of God, ſuch who had relapſed ſince the firſt reformation, or had not been influenced by it.

℣. 5. And he ſet judges in the land throughout all the fenced cities of Judah, city by city, &c.] Inferior judges in leſſer courts of judicature than that at Jeruſalem, and that in every city, that judgment and juſtice might be executed every where; ſuch were appointed by David, but had been neglected, and now reſtored, ſee 1 Chron. xxvi. 29, 32.

℣. 6. And ſaid to the judges, take heed what you do, &c.] In judgment, that they judged righteous judgment according to the law of God, without partiality and reſpect of perſons: for ye judge not for man, but for the Lord; not for man only, but for the Lord; and not ſo much for man, as for the Lord, whom they repreſented in judgment; whoſe law was the rule of their judgment, and whoſe glory their end, and to whom they were accountable: who is with you in the judgment; as to guide and direct you, ſo to obſerve how they behaved, and be a witneſs for or againſt them; the Targum is, "ye judge not before men, but before the Word of the Lord, whoſe Shekinah dwells with you in the affair of judgment."

℣. 7. Wherefore now, let the fear of the Lord be upon you, &c.] And act as having that before your eyes, and on your hearts: take heed and do it; do the commands enjoined them by him, and do judgment according to the law of God: for there is no iniquity with the Lord our God; none in his nature, nor in his law; none commanded nor approved of by him, and therefore none ſhould be done by his repreſentatives in judgment: nor reſpect of perſons: whether high or low, rich or poor: nor taking of gifts; he accepts not the faces of men, nor receives bribes, nor ſhould his judges; this is forbidden by him, Deut. xvi. 19.

℣. 8. Moreover, in Jeruſalem did Jehoſhaphat ſet of the Levites, and of the prieſts, and of the chief of the fathers of Iſrael, &c.] This was the great court of judicature, conſiſting of princes, prieſts, and Levites, of eccleſiaſticks and political perſons; for cauſes of both ſorts were brought thither: for the judgment of the Lord; in things ſacred, which related to the worſhip of God, and the ſupport of it: and for controverſies; of a civil kind between man and man, whether pecuniary or capital, of a more private or public kind: when they returned to Jeruſalem; that is, this court was ſet up at Jeruſalem, when Jehoſhaphat, the prieſts, Levites, and chief men that went with him returned thither.

℣. 9. And he charged them, &c.] The members of the court at Jeruſalem: ſaying, thus ſhall ye do in the fear of the Lord, faithfully, and with a perfect heart; judge righteouſly and impartially, as men fearing God, true to the truſt repoſed in them, and ſincere and upright in heart and actions, having nothing elſe in view but the glory of God, and the good of men.

℣. 10. And what cauſe ſoever ſhall come unto you of your brethren that dwell in their cities, &c.] Whether ſacred or civil, that ſhould come before them by way of appeal from inferior courts in the country, where they could not be determined: between blood and blood; one relation and another, or with reſpect to ſhedding of blood, whether ignorantly or purpoſely: between law and commandment, ſtatutes and judgments; not rightly underſtood, and ſo pleaded on both ſides: ye ſhall even warn them that they treſpaſs not againſt the Lord; the perſons engaged in controverſy, that they take no falſe oath, nor bear falſe teſtimony, and act not ſtubbornly againſt any of the laws, when explained in court unto them: and ſo wrath come upon you, and your children; upon judges for the neglect of their duty in giving due warning, and upon the people for not taking it when given: this do, and ye ſhall not treſpaſs; if the above charge in all its parts is ſtrictly attended to.

℣. 11. And behold, Amariah the chief-prieſt is over you in all matters of the Lord, &c.] He being high-prieſt, preſided in this court in all things ſacred, or which reſpected the worſhip of God; and was preſent to give his advice, and direct in the determination of all ſuch matters that ſhould come before them, according to the laws and ſtatutes provided in ſuch caſes; though it may be he was only a common prieſt, that was chief over them, or the preſident of this court: and Zebadiah the ſon of Iſhmael, the ruler of the houſe of Judah; the prince of the tribe of Judah: for all the king's matters; ſuch as related to civil government, and which were not ſo clearly determined by poſitive laws: alſo the Levites ſhall be officers before you; to execute the ſentences that ſhould be paſſed by them: deal courageouſly; fear not the faces of any, but judge righteouſly and faithfully: and the Lord ſhall be with the good; with good men that do good, to beſtow all needful good upon them, to protect and defend them; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord ſhall be for your help, who is good."

CHAP. XX.

JEhoſhaphat having notice of a numerous army coming againſt him, ℣. 1, 2. betakes himſelf to faſting and prayer with his people, ℣. 3—13. when they were immediately aſſured of victory by a prophet, which filled them with joy and thankfulneſs, ℣. 14—21. and accordingly their enemies deſtroyed one another, and Jehoſhaphat and his people returned to Jeruſalem rejoicing and praiſing God, ℣. 22—30. and the chapter is cloſed with an account of the latter part of Jehoſhaphat's reign, ℣. 31—37.

℣. 1. It came to paſs after this alſo, &c.] After Jehoſhaphat's return from Ramoth-gilead, and putting the civil and religious affairs of his people on a better footing, when he might have expected much peace and proſperity: that the children of Moab, and the children of Ammon; both the deſcendants of Lot, ſee Pſ. lxxxiii. 8. and with them other beſides the Ammonites; a great company of Arabians, according to Joſephus[r]; or with the Meamonites, which the Targum underſtands of the Idumæans or Edomites; and ſo do other interpreters, ters, and which they conclude from ℣. 10, 22, 23. Jarchi thinks the Amalekites are meant, who were of the race of Edom; but the notion of Kimchi ſeems beſt, that theſe are the people that are ſo called from the name of a place Meon, and by an inverſion of letters, the ſame with the Meunim or Maonites, mentioned along with the Zidonians and Amalekites, Judg. x. 12. and whom the Septuagint verſion here calls Minæans; ſome [s] take them to be ſuch who counterfeited the Ammonites in their apparel and geſtures: theſe came againſt Jehoſhaphat in battle; being inſtigated perhaps by the Syrians, who owed him ill-will for aſſiſting Ahab againſt them at Ramoth-gilead; for from that quarter they came, as the following verſe ſhews.

℣. 2. Then there came ſome that told Jehoſhaphat, &c.] Deſerters or ſpies, or ſome of the inhabitants of thoſe parts where they had entered, who rode poſt haſte to acquaint him with it: ſaying, there cometh a great multitude againſt thee from beyond the ſea on this ſide Syria; that is, beyond the Dead or Salt-ſea, the ſea of Sodom; the Targum is, "beyond the weſt of Syria," that ſea being the weſtern boundary of it: and behold, they be in Hazazon-tamar, which is Engedi; ſee the note on Gen. xiv. 7.

℣. 3. And Jehoſhaphat feared, &c.] Exceedingly, as the Targum adds, not merely becauſe of the number of his enemies, for he had forces enough to go forth againſt them, ſee ch. xvii. 14—19. but chiefly becauſe the Lord had told him that wrath was upon him from him, ch. xix. 2. and he might fear that this was the time for the execution of it: and ſet himſelf to ſeek the Lord; by prayer and ſupplication, with all ſerioufneſs, fervour, and conſtancy: and proclaimed a faſt throughout all Judah; a day of humiliation and mourning for ſin before the Lord; when they were ordered to abſtain from bodily food and labour, that they might be fit and more at leiſure for ſpiritual exerciſes.

℣. 4. And Judah gathered themſelves together to aſk help of the Lord, &c.] To implore his aſſiſtance againſt their enemies, and his protection of them; and they met not in their ſeveral cities, but at Jeruſalem, as appears by what follows: even out of all the cities of Judah, they came to ſeek the Lord; at the temple, where was the ark, the ſymbol of his preſence.

℣. 5. And Jehoſhaphat ſtood in the congregation of Judah and Jeruſalem, in the houſe of the Lord, &c.] In the temple, in the court of the people, where the inhabitants of Judah and Jeruſalem were aſſembled, in the midſt of which he ſtood very probably on the brazen ſcaffold erected by Solomon, ch. vi. 13. before the new court; which muſt be the court of the prieſts, for he ſtood in the great court, or court of the people, and before this, which might be ſo called, becauſe renewed or repaired when the altar was by Aſa, ch. xv. 8. Dr. Lightfoot [t] thinks, it was the court of the women; but it is a queſtion whether there was any ſuch court in the firſt temple; or that the great court was then divided into two, one for the men, the other for the women.

℣. 6. And ſaid, O Lord God of our fathers, &c.] Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, whoſe Covenant-God he was: art not thou God in heaven? that dwelleſt and ruleſt there, and doſt whatever thou pleaſeſt in the armies of it: and ruleſt not thou over all the kingdoms of the heathens? being King of kings, and Lord of lords, all the world over: and in thine hand is there not power and might, ſo that none is able to withſtand thee? his power being infinite, unlimited, and uncontroulable, and ſo not reſiſtible by finite creatures, at leaſt not ſo as to be ſtopped and overcome.

℣. 7. Art not thou our God, &c.] In a peculiar ſenſe, not merely as the creator and governor of men, but in a covenant-relation their covenant-God and Father: who didſt drive out the inhabitants of the land before thy people Iſrael; the ſeven nations of Canaan, to make way and room for Iſrael: and gaveſt it to the ſeed of Abraham thy friend for ever? made a deed of gift of it to them, and ſettled it on them till the coming of the Meſſiah, and that as an inſtance of love and friendſhip to Abraham; and wilt thou therefore ſuffer it to be taken from his ſeed?

℣. 8. And they dwelt therein, &c.] From ages paſt, hitherto, ſince it was firſt given them, and they were put into the poſſeſſion of it: and have built thee a ſanctuary therein for thy name; a temple for his worſhip, honour and glory, and for him to dwell in; and is a reaſon why it might be hoped he would protect them, eſpecially when they prayed to him: ſaying; and he promiſed to hear and help them, as follows.

℣. 9. If when evil cometh upon us, &c.] Any calamity, as the ſword, judgment, or peſtilence, or famine, God's four ſore judgments, if by judgment is meant wild beaſts: we ſtand before this houſe; in the court before the holy place, and holy of holies: and in thy preſence, for thy name is in this houſe; called upon in it, and it was called by his name, and in which he dwelt: and cry unto thee in our affliction; as Solomon prayed at the dedication of it: then thou wilt hear and help; as the Lord promiſed, ſee 1 Kings viii. 33, 37. and ix. 3.

℣. 10. And now behold, the children of Ammon, and Moab, and mount Seir, whom thou wouldeſt not let Iſrael invade, when they came out of the land of Egypt, &c.] Charging them not to meddle with them, nor take any of their lands from them, Deut. ii. 5, 9, 19. but they turned from them, and deſtroyed them not; in obedience to the divine command, when it was in their power to have done it.

℣. 11. Behold, I ſay, how they reward us, &c.] Evil for good: to come to caſt us out of thy poſſeſſion, which thou haſt given us to inherit; the land of Canaan was their inheritance, an inheritance given them by God, their Covenant-God and Father, who had a right to diſpoſe of it; and yet ſo given, that it was ſtill his poſſeſſion, he was the lord and proprietor, they but tenants under him; all which, as they were ſo many aggravations of the guilt of their enemies, ſo they were ſo many arguments with the Lord to protect them.

℣. 12. O our God, wilt thou not judge them? &c.] Bring them to thy bar, examine theſe facts alledged againſt them, convict them of injuſtice, and condemn and puniſh them for it: for we have no might againſt the great company that cometh againſt us; for though the militia of the kingdom of Judah was very numerous, as deſcribed ch. xvii. yet on a ſudden it might not be eaſy to gather it together; beſides, it was nothing to put truſt and confidence in; and if the Lord was not with them, their ſtrength would be weakneſs, and they not able to withſtand this numerous army: neither know we what to do; whether to attempt to muſter the militia, and go out to meet them, or to ſhut up themſelves in Jeruſalem, and make the beſt defence they they could: but our eyes are upon thee; for advice and direction, for help and protection; the eyes of their bodies were lifted up in prayer to him, and the eyes of their ſouls, of faith, hope, expectation and deſire were faſtened on him.

℣. 13. And all Judah ſtood before the Lord, &c.] Looking towards the moſt holy place, where the ark of his preſence was, in a humble and ſubmiſſive poſture; waiting what would be the iſſue of things, what anſwer they ſhould have from the Lord: with their little ones, their wives, and their children; they and their wives, with their children, both ſmall and grown up, which they brought with them, that as the ſight of them, now in the utmoſt danger, might affect them, and make them the more fervent in their ſupplications to God, ſo they might hope the Lord would have pity and compaſſion on them, and ſave them.

℣. 14. Then upon Jahaziel, the ſon of Zechariah, the ſon of Benaiah, the ſon of Jehiel, the ſon of Mattaniah, a Levite, of the ſons of Aſaph, &c.] Being a man of ſome note, though a Levite, his genealogy is given: came the Spirit of the Lord in the midſt of the congregation; the ſpirit of prophecy from the Lord, as the Targum, as it was; for he foretold the victory that ſhould be obtained over the enemy, and that without fighting, yea, the particular place where they ſhould meet them; and this came upon him ſuddenly, whilſt he was in the midſt of the congregation, whilſt he and they were waiting upon the Lord, and perhaps had never propheſied before; or if he had, prophecy did not come according to the will of man, but by the will of God; the Spirit of God in that, as in other inſtances, is like the wind that blows when and where it liſteth.

℣. 15. And he ſaid, hearken ye, all Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jeruſalem, and thou king Jehoſhaphat, &c.] There is a climax or gradation in theſe words riſing from the loweſt to the higheſt; from the people of the cities in the country, to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem the metropolis, and from thence to the king the ſupreme governor: thus ſaith the Lord unto you, be not afraid, nor diſmayed, by reaſon of this great multitude; whoſe numbers were diſcouraging to the king, and he had taken notice of them, which this reſpects: for the battle is not yours, but God's; the cauſe was his, and he would eſpouſe and maintain it; not they, but he would fight the battle, and therefore they had nothing to fear.

℣. 16. To-morrow go ye down againſt them, &c.] This was the faſt-day, and ſo not proper to march out in, but on the morrow they might go out with great confidence and intrepidity; and as Jeruſalem was ſituated on an eminence, they are directed to go down: behold, they come up by the cliff of Ziz; a ſteep hill, ſo called from the flowers upon it: and ye ſhall find them at the end of the brook; on the bank of Kidron, according to Beckius, which ſeems not likely to be meant, ſince they went as far as the wilderneſs of Tekoa, ℣. 20. before the wilderneſs of Jeruel; the ſame with that of Tekoa, or near it.

℣. 17. Ye ſhall not need to fight in this battle, &c.] Since the Lord would fight for them: ſet yourſelves, ſtand ye ſtill; preſent themſelves they might, as if ready to engage; and keep their ground, not giving way in the leaſt, but would have no need to ſtrike a ſtroke: and ſee the ſalvation of the Lord with you; which he would work for them; ſee Exod xiv. 13. and Judah and Jeruſalem, fear not, nor be diſmayed; which is repeated for the confirmation of them: to-morrow go out againſt them, for the Lord will be with you; to protect them, fight for them, and give them victory; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord ſhall be your help."

℣. 18. And Jehoſhaphat bowed his head with his face to the ground, &c.] Not only in reverence of God, and his prophet, but as a token of his belief of what was ſaid, and his thankfulneſs for it: and all Judah, and the inhabitants of Jeruſalem fell before the Lord, worſhipping him; adoring his goodneſs to them, in imitation of their king.

℣. 19. And the Levites, of the children of the Kohathites, and of the children of the Korhites, &c.] Who were of the poſterity of Kohath, in the line Korah: ſtood up to praiſe the Lord God of Iſrael with a loud voice on high; in high notes; they being the courſe in turn at this time for this ſervice.

℣. 20. And they roſe early in the morning, &c.] Being confident of ſucceſs, animated by what the prophet ſaid to them: and went forth into the wilderneſs of Tekoa; which, according to Jerom [u], was ſix miles from Bethlehem, and nine from Jeruſalem, ſome ſay twelve, beyond which was nothing but a deſert; it was part of the wilderneſs of Judah: and as they went forth; out of Jeruſalem, through one of the gates of it: Jehoſhaphat ſtood and ſaid, believe in the Lord your God; in the promiſes he had made, particularly with reſpect to the victory over their preſent enemies; the Targum is, "in the Word of the Lord your God:" ſo ſhall you be eſtabliſhed; have courage and firmneſs of mind, as well as be ſafe and ſecure: believe his prophets; ſent by him, and that ſpeak in his name, particularly Jahaziel, who had predicted victory to them: ſo ſhall ye proſper; things will ſucceed to your wiſhes, and beyond your expectations.

℣. 21. And when he had conſulted with the people, &c.] His principal officers, in what order they ſhould march, and in what manner they ſhould form themſelves, when they met the enemy, and how they ſhould conduct as if they were to engage: he appointed ſingers unto the Lord; to ſing his praiſe, and give him glory, as if the victory was already completed, it being ſo ſure: and that ſhould praiſe the beauty of holineſs, as they went out before the army; that is, praiſe God who is glorious in holineſs, whoſe beauty lies in his holineſs, and who is holy in all his ways and works: and to ſay, praiſe the Lord, for his mercy endureth for ever; with which they were to conclude their ſongs of praiſe, as David did, and whoſe ſongs they might ſing; ſee Pſ. cxxxvi.

℣. 22. And when they began to ſing and to praiſe, &c.] They ſung more or leſs all the way they went, from the time they ſet out, but when they came nearer the enemy, they ſung louder and louder: the Lord ſet ambuſhments againſt the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, which came againſt Judah; ſome take them to be their own ambuſhments, which they ſet for the deſtruction of Judah; but the Lord turned them againſt their own confederates, miſtaking them for Jews; ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion, "the Lord turned their ambuſhments againſt themſelves; or rather theſe were were angels, who appeared in the form of the Edomites, and ſo fell upon the Ammonites and Moabites: and they were ſmitten; by them, many of them were deſtroyed; hence it follows, ℣. 23. For the children of Ammon and Moab ſtood up againſt the inhabitants of mount Seir, &c.] Supposing that they had acted a treacherous part by them, and took on the ſide of their enemies: utterly to ſlay and deſtroy them; as they did: and when they had made an end of the inhabitants of Seir; ſo that there were none left of them: every one helped to deſtroy one another; in their confuſion miſtook one another, either for Edomites or Jews, like the Midianites in the times of Gideon.

℣. 24. When Judah came towards the watch-tower in the wilderneſs, &c.] Which might ſtand upon the hill or cliff of Ziz, for the ſake of the direction of travellers, and the preſervation of them from thieves and robbers: they looked unto the multitude; which they could take a view of from the top of the hill: and behold, they were dead bodies fallen to the earth, and none eſcaped; all to a man ſlain, there was not one to be ſeen ſtanding on his feet.

℣. 25. And when Jehoſhaphat and his people came to take the ſpoil of them, &c.] Which was all they had to do; they had no need to fight, as they were told, the Lord had fought for them: they found among them in abundance both riches with the dead bodies; rich garments on them, and gold and ſilver on them: and precious jewels, which they ſtript off for themſelves; with which their clothes, or ſome part of their bodies were ornamented: more than they could carry away; they were ſo many, that they made too great a burden for them: and they were three days in gathering of the ſpoil, it was ſo much; it took up ſo much time to ſtrip the bodies, to ſearch for their money and jewels, rings, chains, and ſuch like things of value, worn by them.

℣. 26. And on the fourth day they aſſembled themſelves in the valley of Berachah, &c.] As it was afterwards called from what they did there, as follows, which was the reaſon of its name: for there they bleſſed the Lord; returned thanks to him for this wonderful appearance on their behalf, and gave him the glory of it; no doubt but they had given him praiſe before in ſome ſort and manner, but now in a ſet, ſolemn and public manner, with one heart and voice they united in aſcribing honour, bleſſing, and glory to him: therefore the name of the ſame place was called the valley of Berachah, unto this day; the valley of Bleſſing; this name it bore in the times of Ezra, the writer of this book, even after the Jews returned from the Babyloniſh captivity; it is thought to be the ſame that is called by Jerom [w] Cepharbarucha, which he ſpeaks of as not far from Engedi, ſee ℣. 2. others will have it to be the ſame with the valley of Jehoſhaphat, but not ſo likely, that ſeems to be nearer Jeruſalem.

℣. 27. Then they returned every man of Judah and of Jeruſalem, and Jehoſhaphat at the fore-front of them, to go again to Jeruſalem with joy, &c.] There to praiſe the Lord in the temple, as they had done in the valley: for the Lord had made them to rejoice over their enemies; by giving them a compleat victory, and making them maſters of ſo much wealth and riches.

℣. 28. And they came to Jeruſalem with pſalteries, and harps, and trumpets, &c.] The three principal inſtruments of muſic uſed in ſinging the praiſes of God; theſe they played upon as they came to the city, and entered it, and paſſed thro' it: unto the houſe of the Lord; the temple, there to offer praiſe and thankſgiving again.

℣. 29. And the fear of God was on all the kingdoms of theſe countries, &c.] Whoſe armies were ſlain, and all other neighbouring ones; for the word theſe is ſupplied: when they had heard that the Lord fought againſt the enemies of Iſrael; and they were afraid to invade their land, or make war with them; nor did the Edomites dare to revolt in the times of Jehoſhaphat.

℣. 30. So the realm of Jehoſhaphat was quiet, &c.] Both within and without; they were at peace among themſelves, and none from abroad dared to moleſt them: for his God gave him reſt round about; from all his enemies; the Targum has it, the Word of his God; and ſo in the preceding verſe, the Word of the Lord fought; and in ℣. 28. the Word of the Lord made them rejoice.

℣. 31, 32. And Jehoſhaphat reigned over Judah, &c.] Of theſe two verſes ſee the notes on 1 Kings xxii. 42, 43.

℣. 33. Howbeit, the high places were not taken away, &c.] The high places, where idols were worſhipped, were taken away, ch. xvii. 6. but not thoſe where ſacrifices were offered to the true God: for as yet the people had not prepared their hearts unto the God of their fathers; to ſeek and ſerve him wholly, according to his will, to offer ſacrifices to him only at Jeruſalem, as the law required, Deut. xii. 5, 6, 7. they could not as yet be prevailed upon to relinquiſh the high places, built and made uſe of before the temple was; partly becauſe they were nearer to ſome of them than that, and partly out of veneration for them, as being of a long time uſed.

℣. 34. Now the reſt of the acts of Jehoſhaphat, firſt and laſt, &c.] Thoſe that were done at the beginning, and thoſe that were done at the latter end of his reign: behold, they are written in the book of Jehu, the ſon of Hanani, who is mentioned in the book of the kings of Iſrael; ſee 1 Kings xvi. 1, 7. the ſame that reproved Jehoſhaphat, ch. xix. 2. He wrote a book of his own times, and which was ſo much eſteemed, according to Kimchi, that it was written with, or put along with the book of the kings of Iſrael, for ſo he interprets the phraſe; but the Targum underſtands it of Jehu, being the king's hiſtoriographer, who had the care and overſight of the diary, journal, or annals of the kings of Iſrael.

℣. 35. And after this did Jehoſhaphat king of Judah join himſelf with Ahaziah king of Iſrael, &c.] Meaning, not after the invaſion of the Moabites, &c. and the ſlaughter of them, but after Jehoſhaphat returned from Ramoth-gilead, when he was reproved by a prophet for helping the ungodly, ch. xix. 1, 2. ſo that it was a great aggravation of his folly and weakneſs, that after that, and quickly after that, he ſhould join himſelf to a wicked prince, though not in war, but in trade; for ſo it muſt be, ſince Ahaziah reigned but two years, and thoſe not complete, ſee 1 Kings xxii. 51. but is here related, that Jehoſhaphat's weakneſſes and blemiſhes might be laid together: who did very wickedly; that is, Ahaziah, who walked in the ways of Ahab his father, and of Jezebel his mother, and of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, 1 Kings xxii. 52.

℣. 36. And he joined himſelf with him to make ſhips to go to Tarſhiſh, &c.] Of which, ſee the note note on 1 Kings xxii. 48. and though it is there ſaid, ℣. 49. that Jehoſhaphat refuſed letting the ſervants of Ahaziah go with his, that was after he had been reproved for joining with him, and after the ſhips were broken: and they made the ſhips in Ezion-geber; of which ſee the note on 1 Kings ix. 26.

℣. 37. Then Eliezer the ſon of Dodavah of Mareſhah, &c.] A city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 44. propheſied againſt Jehoſhaphat, ſaying, becauſe thou haſt joined thyſelf with Ahaziah; an idolatrous prince, with whom he ought to have had no fellowſhip, even in civil things, it being both a countenancing him, and expoſing himſelf and people to danger: the Lord hath broken thy works; the ſhips built at the joint expence of the two kings, that is, the Lord had determined to break them, and now foretold that he would; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord hath deſtroyed thy works:" and the ſhips were broken that they were not able to go to Tarſhiſh; ſee the note on 1 Kings xxii. 48.

CHAP. XXI.

THIS chapter relates Jehoram's ſucceſſion to the throne of Judah, and the murders and idolatries committed by him, ℣. 1—7. the revolt of the Edomites from him, and ſome of his own people, ℣. 8—11. a writing of Elijah to him, threatening a great plague to him and his family, ℣. 12—15. the raiſing up of ſeveral enemies againſt him, ℣. 16, 17. his ſickneſs, death and burial, ℣. 18, 19, 20.

℣. 1. Now Jehoſhaphat ſlept with his fathers, &c.] See the note on 1 Kings xxii. 50.

℣. 2. And he had brethren, the ſons of Jehoſhaphat, &c.] That is, Jehoram had, who ſucceeded him: their names follow, Azariah, and Jehiel, and Zechariah, and Azariah, and Michael, and Shephatiah; two of them were of the ſame name; though it may be obſerved, that in the Hebrew text they are ſomewhat diſtinguiſhed, the latter is called Azariahu; Jehiel is ſaid, by the Jews [x], to be the ſame with Hiel that rebuilt Jericho; indeed it was rebuilt in the times of Jehoſhaphat, and was a city of the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 21. which was under his juriſdiction; but it can never be thought, that he would ever ſuffer a ſon of his to rebuild it; beſides, he is expreſsly ſaid to be a Bethelite, 1 Kings xvi. 34. all theſe were the ſons of Jehoſhaphat king of Iſrael; which generally, ſince the diviſion of the kingdom, deſigns the ten tribes, but cannot be the meaning here, becauſe Jehoſhaphat was only king of two tribes, Judah and Benjamin; they were tribes of Iſrael indeed, and ſo he was king of a part of Iſrael; and beſides, many out of the ten tribes came and ſettled in his kingdom, and were under his government; though ſome think he is ſo called, becauſe he concerned himſelf ſo much for the kingdom of Iſrael, and more than for his own; but the Vulgate Latin, Septuagint, Syriac and Arabic verſions, all read king of Judah; wherefore ſome are of opinion, that Iſrael is a miſtake of the tranſcriber; but this need not be ſuppoſed, ſince he was of right king of Iſrael, and was in fact king of two tribes that belonged to Iſrael.

℣. 3. And their father gave them great gifts of ſilver, and of gold, and of precious things, &c.] As jewels and precious ſtones; or precious garments, as the Targum, in like manner as Abraham gave to his ſons, when he ſent them from Iſaac: with fenced cities in Judah; not as their own property, but he appointed them governors in them, to defend them againſt an enemy, and as a mark of honour to them: but the kingdom gave he to Jehoram, becauſe he was the firſt-born; ſtrictly obſerving the law in Deut. xxi. 16, 17. which was not always done; though it was reckoned by the heathens contrary to the law of nations, to give the kingdom to the younger [y].

℣. 4. Now when Jehoram was riſen up to the kingdom of his father, &c.] Succeeded him in it, and reigned alone, for he had reigned with his father ſome years before his death; ſee the note on 2 Kings viii. 16. he ſtrengthened himſelf; in the kingdom, by ſome means or another cloſely attaching the greater part of the princes, and people of the land, unto him, when he thought himſelf well ſettled and eſtabliſhed on the throne; though ſome underſtand it of making ſtrong, or hardening his heart to do what is next mentioned: and ſlew all his brethren with the ſword; either to get their riches into his hands, or leſt, being religious princes, they ſhould oppoſe his reſtoring idolatry, and for that reaſon the people ſhould depoſe him, and ſet up one of them; and therefore he diſpatched them out of the way to ſecure himſelf, and carry his point: and divers alſo of the princes of Iſrael; ſuch who had removed out of the ten tribes, for the ſake of religion, and therefore would never agree to the introduction of idolatry among them, for which reaſon Jehoram ſlew them; and perhaps they might expreſs their diſapprobation and abhorrence of his murder of his brethren.

℣. 5—10. Jehoram was 32 years old, &c.] Of theſe verſes, ſee the notes on 2 Kings viii. 17—22.

℣. 11. Moreover, he made high places in the mountains of Judah, &c.] Temples and altars for idols, which being built on mountains, had the name of high places; and theſe Jehoram made or rebuilt, were thoſe which had been pulled down by Aſa and Jehoſhaphat: and cauſed the inhabitants of Jeruſalem to commit fornication; that is, idolatry, drawing them by his own example to worſhip Baal, for he did what Ahab and his family did, ℣. 6. and compelled Judah thereto; the inhabitants of Jeruſalem falling into the ſame idolatrous practice with him, he forced the inhabitants of the cities, and in the country, to do the ſame, who its ſeems were not ſo willing and ready to comply therewith.

℣. 12. And there came a writing to him from Elijah the prophet, &c.] Not what was written by him after his aſcenſion to heaven, and from thence came to Jehoram, even ſeven years after that, as ſay ſome Jewiſh writers [z]; nor was it a writing from another perſon of the ſame name in thoſe times, ſince of ſuch an one we no where read; nor from Eliſha bearing the name of Elijah, having a double portion of his ſpirit on him, ſince he is never ſo called; but this was a writing of Elijah's before his his aſcenſion, who foreſeeing by a ſpirit of prophecy what Jehoram would be guilty of, wrote this, and gave it to one of the prophets, as Kimchi ſuggeſts, and moſt probably to Eliſha, to communicate it to him at a proper time; and who might, as the above writer intimates, think it came immediately from heaven: ſaying, thus ſaith the Lord God of David thy father; and from whoſe God he had departed, and to which anceſtor of his he was ſo much unlike: becauſe thou haſt not walked in the ways of Jehoſhaphat thy father, nor in the ways of Aſa king of Judah; neither trod in the ſteps of his father nor grandfather.

℣. 13. And haſt walked in the way of the kings of Iſrael, &c.] Worſhipping the calves, and even Baal, with other idols, as they did: and haſt made Judah and the inhabitants of Jeruſalem to go a whoring, like to the whoredoms of the houſe of Ahab; meaning ſpiritual whoredoms or idolatries: and haſt alſo ſlain thy brethren of thy father's houſe, which were better than thyſelf; more religious, more human, more prudent, and fitter for government.

℣. 14. Behold, with a great plague will the Lord ſmite thy people, &c.] They going into the ſame idolatry with himſelf willingly, at leaſt great part of them, and therefore deſerved to be ſmitten, and which would be a puniſhment to him: and thy children, and thy wives, and all thy goods; which ſhould be carried captive, as the event ſhews.

℣. 15. And thou ſhalt have great ſickneſs by diſeaſe of thy bowels, &c.] Which was a juſt retaliation to him, for having no bowels of compaſſion on his brethren whom he ſlew: until thy bowels fall out, by reaſon of the ſickneſs day by day; that continuing day after day, and even year after year, the ſpace of two years, as appears from ℣. 19.

℣. 16. Moreover, the Lord ſtirred up againſt Jehoram the ſpirit of the Philiſtines, &c.] Which had been depreſſed in the times of Jehoſhaphat, to whom they brought their preſents and tribute willingly, ch. xvii. 11. and of the Arabians that were near the Ethiopians; not the Ethiopians of Africa, as the Targum, for the Arabians were not near them, but the Chuſæan Arabs or Midianites, ſee Numb. xii. 1. The Targum is, the Word of the Lord did this.

℣. 17. And they came up into Judah, and brake into it, &c.] In an hoſtile manner: and carried away all the ſubſtance that was found in the king's houſe; his gold, ſilver, and precious things, the rich furniture of his palace; no mention is made of any other plunder in the city, or the country; ſo that they ſeem to have had their principal eye to the king's palace, and the ſpoil of that; being ſo directed by the providence of God, who had ſtirred them up to do this as a puniſhment of Jehoram: and his ſons alſo, and his wives; theſe they alſo carried away, all but Athaliah, who hid herſelf; he through his diſeaſe not being able to make any oppoſition, or to get any forces together to withſtand them: ſo that there was never a ſon left him, ſave Jehoahaz the youngeſt of his ſons; the ſame that is called Ahaziah and Azariah, ch. xxii. 1, 6. ſo the prophecy in ℣. 14. was fulfilled.

℣. 18. After all this the Lord ſmote him in his bowels with an incurable diſeaſe.] What it was is not agreed upon; ſome take it to be an hernia, or rupture; others, the falling of the anus, or a fiſtula in it; others, the cholic, or iliac paſſion; but generally it is thought to be a dyſentery, or bloody flux; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord broke him."

℣. 19. And it came to paſs that in proceſs of time, after the end of two years, &c.] So long he was afflicted and tortured with the above diſeaſe: his bowels fell out by reaſon of his ſickneſs; either in like manner as Judas's did, Acts i. 18. or as in the manner the bowels of Arius are ſaid to do, whilſt ſitting on the ſeat of the vault [a]; or perhaps only what was contained in the bowels, is meant, if it was the cholic: ſo he died of ſore diſeaſes; he ſeems to have had a complication of them, and theſe very painful and diſtreſſing: and the people made no burning for him, like the burnings of his fathers; as they did for his grandfather Aſa, ch. xvi. 14. they did not burn ſpices or odoriferous wood, as the Targum; though his body, becauſe of the ſtench of it, needed it, as Jarchi obſerves.

℣. 20. Thirty-two years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jeruſalem eight years, &c.] See 2 Kings viii. 17. and departed without being deſired; to live, either by himſelf, being weary of life through the pain he endured; or by his people, he being ſo wicked a prince, and ſo ill-beloved by them, that no body wiſhed to have him live, but were glad to hear of his death; the meaning is, he died unlamented; his death is expreſſed by a departing out of this world into another, a phraſe more than once uſed for death in the New Teſtament, ſee John, xiii. 1. Phil. i. 23. howbeit, they buried him in the city of David, but not in the ſepulchres of the kings; they ſhewed him ſome reſpect for the ſake of his father, by burying him in the city of David, but denied him the honour of lying in the royal ſepulchres, ſee 2 Kings viii. 24.

CHAP. XXII.

IN this chapter we have an account of the wicked reign of Ahaziah the ſon of Jehoram, ℣. 1—4. of his death, the occaſion and manner of it, ℣. 5—9. and of his mother Athaliah deſtroying all the ſeed royal, excepting one who was hid by the king's ſiſter, and aſſuming the government to herſelf, ℣. 10—12.

℣. 1. And the inhabitants of Jeruſalem made Ahaziah his youngeſt ſon king in his ſtead, &c.] He being the only ſurviving one of the ſons of Jehoram, the ſame with Jehoahaz, ch. xxi. 17. who was ſaved when the reſt were taken captive and ſlain, by his mother Athaliah, and he made his eſcape, and that ſhe alſo eſcaped is clear from ℣. 10. for the band of men that came with the Arabians to the camp; that is, of the Philiſtines, ch. xxi. 16. which band ſeems to be a band or company of thieves and robbers, as the Septuagint, cruel and barbarous, as the action aſcribed to them ſhows: for they had ſlain all the eldeſt; ſons of Jehoram; the Philiſtines and Arabians only carried them away captives, but thoſe ſlew them in cold blood: ſo Ahaziah the ſon of Jehoram king of Judah reigned; being declared his ſucceſſor by the inhabitants of Jeruſalem.

[a] Sozomen. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 29, 30.

℣. 2. Forty-two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, &c.] In 2 Kings viii. 26. he is ſaid to be but 22 years old at his acceſſion to the throne, which is undoubtedly righteſt; for this makes him to be two years older than his father when he died, who was 32 when he began to reign, and reigned eight years, ch. xxi. 20. different ways are taken to ſolve this difficulty; ſome refer this to Jehoram, that he was 42 when Ahaziah began to reign, but he was but 40 when he died; others to the age of Athaliah his mother, as if he was the ſon of one that was 42, when he himſelf was but 22; but no inſtance is given of any ſuch way of writing, nor any juſt reaſon for it; others make theſe 42 years reach to the 20th of his ſon Joaſh, his age 22, his reign 1, Athaliah 6, and Joaſh 13; but the two principal ſolutions which ſeem moſt to ſatisfy learned men are, the one, that he was 22 when he began to reign in his father's life-time, and 42 when he began to reign in his own right; but then he muſt reign 20 years with his father, whereas his father reigned but eight years: to make this clear they obſerve [b], as Kimchi and Abarbinel, from whom this ſolution is taken, that he reigned eight years very happily when his ſon was 22, and taken on the throne with him, after which he reigned 20 more inglorioufly, and died, when his ſon was 42; this has been greedily received by many, but without any proof: the other is, that theſe 42 years are not the date of the age of Ahaziah, but of the reign of the family of Omri king of Iſrael; ſo the Jewiſh chronology [c]; but how impertinent muſt the uſe of ſuch a date be in the account of the reign of a king of Judah? all that can be ſaid is, his mother was of that family, which is a trifling reaſon for ſuch an unuſual method of reckoning: it ſeems beſt to acknowledge a miſtake of the copyer, which might eaſily be made through a ſimilarity of the numeral letters, מב 42, for כב 22 [d]; and the rather, ſince ſome copies of the Septuagint, and the Syriac and Arabic verſions read 22, as in Kings; particularly the Syriac verſion, uſed in the church of Antioch from the moſt early times; a copy of which biſhop Uſher obtained at a very great price, and in which the number is 22, as he aſſures us; and that the difficulty here is owing to the careleſſneſs of the tranſcribers, is owned by Glaſſius [e], a warm advocate for the integrity of the Hebrew text, and ſo by Vitringa [f]: and indeed it is more to the honour of the ſacred ſcriptures, to acknowledge here and there a miſtake in the copyers, eſpecially in the hiſtorical books, where there is ſometimes a ſtrange difference of names and numbers, than to give in to wild and diſtorted interpretations of them, in order to reconcile them, where there is no danger with reſpect to any article of faith or manners; and as a learned man [g] has obſerved of the New Teſtament, "it is an invincible reaſon for the ſcripture's part, that other eſcapes ſhould be ſo purpoſely and infinitely let paſs, and yet no ſaving or ſubſtantial part at all ſcarce moved out of its place; to ſay the truth, theſe varieties of readings in a few bye places, do the ſame office to the main ſcriptures, as the variation of the compaſs to the whole magnet of the earth, the mariner knows ſo much the better for theſe, how to ſteer his courſe;" and with reſpect to ſome various readings in the Old Teſtament, Dr. Owen [h] obſerves, God has ſuffered this leſſer variety to fall out, in or among the copies we have, for the quickening and exerciſing of our diligence into our ſearch of his word: he reigned one year in Jeruſalem, his mother's name alſo was Athaliah, the daughter of Omri, ſee 2 Kings viii. 26.

℣. 3. He alſo walked in the ways of the houſe of Ahab; &c.] As his father Jehoram had, ch. xxi. 6. ſee 2 Kings viii. 27. for his mother was his counſellor to do wickedly; to commit idolatry, who was of that idolatrous houſe.

℣. 4. Wherefore he did evil in the ſight of the Lord, like the houſe of Ahab, &c.] See 2 Kings viii. 27. for they were his counſellors after the death of his father, to his deſtruction; both of ſoul and body; for they gave him bad advice, both in religious and civil things; theſe were ſome of the family or court of the king of Iſrael, that his mother ſent for after his father's death to be of his council.

℣. 5, 6. He walked alſo after their counſel, &c.] Did as they adviſed him, as in matters of religion, ſo in political things, of which there is an inſtance in this, and the next verſe; of which ſee the notes on 2 Kings viii. 28, 29.

℣. 7. And the deſtruction of Ahaziah was of God by coming to Joram, &c.] Of his appointing; it was according to his purpoſe and decree, and was brought about by his over-ruling providence, ordering the occaſion and manner of it very juſtly for his ſins: for when he was come, he went out with Jehoram againſt Jehu the ſon of Nimſhi; ſee 2 Kings ix. 21. whom the Lord had anointed to cut off the houſe of Ahab; raiſed up to be king of Iſrael for that purpoſe, 2 Kings ix. 6, 7, 8. the Targum is, "whom Elijah anointed by the command of the Word of the Lord;" but it was not Elijah, but a prophet by the order of Eliſha, that anointed him, 2 Kings ix. 1, 2. and this being done by the direction of the Lord, is aſcribed to him.

℣. 8. And it came to paſs, that when Jehu was executing judgment on the houſe of Ahab, &c.] On Joram, his ſon, and 70 more ſons, his kinsfolks, courtiers, and prieſts: and found the princes of Judah, and or even the ſons of the brethren of Ahaziah; whoſe number was 42: that miniſtred to Ahaziah; had offices in his court, or in obedience to his will, went to viſit the children of the king and queen of Iſrael: and he ſlew them; Jehu did; of the occaſion, time and place of his meeting with them, and ſlaying them, ſee 2 Kings x. 12—14.

℣. 9. And he ſought Ahaziah, &c.] Who fled on Joram's being wounded by Jehu: and they caught him; the ſoldiers of Jehu, who were ſent after him, and bid to ſmite him: for he was hid in Samaria; either in ſome part of the kingdom of Samaria, or in the city itſelf, whither he fled: and brought him to Jehu; who was at Jezreel, ſee the note on 2 Kings ix. 27. and when they had ſlain him, they buried him; not at Jezreel, but delivered him to his ſervants to carry him to Jeruſalem, and there bury him in the ſepulchres of his fathers, 2 Kings ix. 28. becauſe, ſaid they, he is the ſon of Jehoſhaphat, who ſought the Lord with all his heart; a grandſon of his, and therefore out of reſpect to the memory of his name, theſe being religious men, ordered his burial there: ſo the houſe of Ahaziah had no power to keep ſtill the kingdom; his bre-brethren and their ſons being ſlain, and his own children being young fell into the hands of Athaliah, who murdered them all, but one, hid by his aunt, and ſo got the government into her own hands, as may be obſerved in the following verſes, 10, 11, 12. of which, ſee the notes on 2 Kings xi. 1, 2, 3.

CHAP. XXIII.

THE contents of this chapter are the ſame with 2 Kings xi. 4—20. and need no other explanation than what may be found in the notes there, to which the reader is referred.

CHAP. XXIV.

THIS chapter begins with the reign of Joaſh king of Judah ſon of Ahaziah, ℣. 1, 2, 3. relates his concern and care to repair the temple, ℣. 4—14. the death of Jehoiada the prieſt, during whoſe life he reigned well, but after his death ſadly apoſtatized, ℣. 15—19. for which, being reproved by Zechariah, he was ſo wroth with him, as to order him to be ſtoned, ℣. 20—22. wherefore for theſe evils enemies were raiſed up againſt him; he was ſmitten with diſeaſes, and his ſervants conſpired againſt him and ſlew him, and would not bury him among the kings, ℣. 23—27.

℣. 1, 2. Joaſh was ſeven years old when he began to reign, &c.] This, and the following verſe, are the ſame with 2 Kings xi. 21. and xii. 1, 2. ſee the notes there.

℣. 3. And Jehoiada took for him two wives, &c.] Not for himſelf; he had a wife who was aunt to king Joaſh, and he had ſons who were concerned with him in anointing him, ch. xxii. 11. and xxiii. 11. and was now upwards of 100 years of age; but for the king, when he was at an age fit for marriage, he adviſed him to marry, and propoſed wives to him, whom he thought would be agreeable; for obſerving what miſchief was done both in church and ſtate through Jehoram's marrying Athaliah, he was deſirous of preventing any ſuch diſagreeable marriage; and as the young king was in all things guided and directed by him, ſo he was in this; and no doubt they were good women he pitched upon, and propoſed to the king; one of them was Jehoadan, ch. xxv. 1. but the name of the other we know not: and he begat ſons and daughters; how many is not ſaid, nor do we read of the names of any of them, but of Amaziah who ſucceeded him.

℣. 4. And it came to paſs after this, &c.] After his marriage, when he was about 20 or 21 years of age perhaps: that Joaſh was minded to repair the houſe of the Lord; which in ſome places might be fallen to decay, having been built 150 years or more, and in others defaced by Athaliah, and needed ornamenting, ſee 2 Kings xii. 4.

℣. 5. And he gathered together the prieſts and Levites, &c.] To communicate his mind unto, and give them a charge and inſtructions: and ſaid unto them, go out unto the cities of Judah, and gather of all Iſrael money to repair the houſe of your God from year to year; what money he means, is more fully explained in 2 Kings xii. 4. and ſee that ye haſte the matter; for he was very deſirous of having this work accompliſhed, it being the place of the worſhip of God, and where he had been preſerved in his infancy: howbeit, the Levites haſtened it not; either through negligence in them to collect the money, or backwardneſs in the people to give, or through an avaricious diſpoſition to keep it, and uſe it for themſelves; ſo that it was delayed unto the 23d year of his reign, 2 Kings xii. 6.

℣. 6. And the king called for Jehoiada the chief, &c.] Who was either the high-prieſt, or the head of his courſe, or however the chief of the prieſts and Levites concerned in this affair, and indeed was the chief or prime miniſter of ſtate: and ſaid unto him, why haſt thou not required of the Levites to bring in out of Judah, and out of Jeruſalem, the collection; the money to repair the houſe they were ordered to collect, ℣. 5. according to the commandment of Moſes the ſervant of the Lord, and of the congregation of Iſrael, for the tabernacle of witneſs; for the repair of it, ſuch as Moſes required, and the people uſed to pay, referring to the half ſhekel; or to a free-will offering of the people, Moſes enjoined or directed to.

℣. 7. For the ſons of Athaliah, that wicked woman, &c.] Not Ahaziah and his brethren, in the life-time of Jehoram, but ſons of Athaliah by another man, as Kimchi ſuggeſts: had broken up the houſe of God; not that they had made ruptures in it, or broke down the walls of it, but had defaced it by taking off the gold and ſilver upon it: and alſo all the dedicate things of the houſe of the Lord did they beſtow upon Baalim; not ſtrictly all, but a great many of them, as this word in many inſtances is uſed, as Kimchi obſerves, and with them furniſhed, beautified, and adorned the temple of Baal.

℣. 8. And at the king's commandment they made a cheſt, &c.] See the note on 2 Kings xii. 9.

℣. 9. And they made a proclamation through Judah and Jeruſalem, &c.] By heralds appointed for the purpoſe: to bring in to the Lord; into the houſe of the Lord, and for the reparation of it; and ſo for his ſervice, honour, and glory: the collection that Moſes the ſervant of the Lord laid upon Iſrael in the wilderneſs; not to bring in the tabernacle of Moſes, as the Targum here and in ℣. 6. but ſuch a voluntary gift as Moſes moved the children of Iſrael to bring, when in the wilderneſs, for the ſervice of the tabernacle.

℣. 10. And all the princes and all the people rejoiced, &c.] When they heard the proclamation, and underſtood for what uſe the money was to be given, and in what manner; all was agreeable and pleaſing to them: and brought in and caſt into the cheſt; through the hole that was in the lid of it, 2 Kings xii. 9. until they had made an end; every one had given as much as he could, or thought fit to give.

℣. 11. Now it came to paſs that at what time the cheſt was brought unto the king's office by the hand of the Levites, &c.] The place where his officer or officers met, appointed for this ſervice; very very probably in one of the chambers of the temple: and when they saw that there was much money; see 2 Kings xii. 10. the king's scribe; or secretary: and the high priest's officer; his sagan, or deputy-priest: came and emptied the chest; poured out the money, and told it, and put it up in bags, 2 Kings xii. 10. and took it, and carried it to its place again, ℣. 8. by the hands of the Levites that brought it: and thus they did day by day; as often as the chest was full, or they perceived there was much in it: and gathered money in abundance; enough to repair the house, ornament it, and furnish it with vessels that were wanting.

℣. 12. And the king and Jehoiada gave it to such as did the work of the service of the house of the Lord, &c.] That is, they gave it to those who were overseers of them, to pay them with it, 2 Kings xii. 11. and hired masons and carpenters to repair the house of the Lord; see 2 Kings xii. 12. and also such as wrought iron and brass to mend the house of the Lord; where it required any work of that kind.

℣. 13. So the workmen wrought, &c.] The masons, carpenters, blacksmiths, and braziers: and the work was perfected by them; the business of repairs was compleatly finished: and they set the house of God in his state; as it was at first: and strengthened it; so that it seemed as firm and stable as when first built.

℣. 14. And when they had finished it, &c.] The repairs of the house, all that were necessary: they brought the rest of the money before the king and Jehoiada; that is, the overseers when they had paid the workmen, brought what was left of the money collected to the king and the priest, to dispose of as they should think fit: whereof were made vessels for the house of the Lord; in the room of such that Athaliah and her sons had taken away, and converted to the use of Baal; for though it is said 2 Kings xii. 13. that none were made of this money, the meaning is, that none were made of it until the work was finished, and the workmen paid: even vessels to minister and offer withal; which, according to Jarchi, were pestles and mortars to beat spices with; but Kimchi thinks they were small vessels with which they drew wine out of the hin for drink-offerings: and spoons and vessels of gold and silver; see 2 Kings xii. 13. and they offered burnt-offerings in the house of the Lord continually all the days of Jehoiada; the daily sacrifice, morning and evening.

℣. 15. But Jehoiada waxed old, and was full of days when he died, &c.] A very old man; few at this time arrived to such an age; he was a rare instance: 130 years old was he when he died; the oldest man we read of from the times of Moses, and older than he by ten years.

℣. 16. And they buried him in the city of David among the kings, &c.] In honour to him, he having been the preserver of the king, and of the kingdom, and being by marriage a relation of the present king, uncle to him: because he had done good in Israel; in that part of it which belonged to the kingdom of the house of David: both towards God, and towards his house; both for the restoring the pure worship of God, and the repairs of the temple.

℣. 17. Now after the death of Jehoiada came the princes of Judah, &c.] Who had been secretly inclined to idolatry, but durst not discover it during the life of Jehoiada; whose influence at court was too great for them to counterwork, but when dead they came to court: and made obeysance to the king; bowed in a very lowly manner, fawned upon him, and flattered him. Some Jewish writers, as Kimchi observes, understand this of religious adoration, that they made a god of him, and worshipped him, pretending as a foundation for it, his being hid six months in the temple, and preserved; but it designs no more than civil worship and homage: then the king hearkened unto them; discoursing with him about divine worship, which was the business they came about; desiring that they might not be obliged to come to Jerusalem to worship, but might make use of the high-places, and by that means worship what idol they pleased, which he granted to them; the Targum is, "he received their idols from them."

℣. 18. And they left the house of the Lord God of their fathers, &c.] Came no more to the temple at Jerusalem, forsook the worship and service of it: and served groves and idols; worshipped idols in groves, which were upon high places: and wrath came upon Judah and Jerusalem for this their trespass; their idolatry, and particularly on these princes, the Syrian army coming against them, and destroying them, ℣. 23.

℣. 19. Yet he sent prophets to them, to bring them again unto the Lord, &c.] To reprove them for their sin, to warn them of their danger, to exhort them to their duty, and endeavour to restore them, and reduce them to the obedience and worship of God; such was his clemency, goodness, and condescension to them, before he executed his wrath upon them: and they testified against them; against their sins, and declared what would befal them, and called heaven and earth to witness for God and against them: but they would not give ear; to their reproofs, admonitions, cautions, and exhortations, but went on in their own ways.

℣. 20. And the spirit of the Lord came upon Zechariah the son of Jehoiada the priest, &c.] The spirit of prophecy, as the Targum; he was moved and influenced by it, to speak what is after related: which stood above the people; in a desk, or sort of pulpit, in which the priests stood when they taught the people, that they might be the better heard, like that which Ezra used, Neh. viii. 4. and said unto them, thus saith God; being moved and directed by his Spirit, he spake in his name: why transgress ye the command of the Lord, that ye cannot prosper? by committing idolatry, than which nothing could more hinder prosperity, both in things spiritual and temporal, in soul and body: because ye have forsaken the Lord, he hath also forsaken you; because they had forsaken the worship of God, as the Targum, God had forsaken them, and was about to give them up into the hand of their enemies.

℣. 21. And they conspired against him, &c.] Consulted together to take away his life, and got the order of the king to do it: and stoned him with stones at the commandment of the king in the court of the house of the Lord; where he had stood and reproved them; this they did before he went out, whilst in the temple; and if he is the same Zechariah as some think, our Lord speaks of, he was slain between the temple-porch and the altar, Matt. xxiii. 35. see the note there.

℣. 22. Thus Joash the king remembered not the kindness which Jehoiada his father had done to him, &c.] In preserving him in his infancy, and nourishing him; in settling him on the throne, and assisting him with his advice and counsel: but slew his son; who also assisted at his coronation, and with his father and brethren anointed him king, as is probable, ch. xxiii. 11. and when he died, he said, the

the Lord look upon it, and requite it; meaning his blood; this he ſaid, not from a private ſpirit of revenge, but with a view to the glory of divine juſtice, and which he delivered not as a wiſh, or by way of imprecation, that ſo it might be, but as a prophecy that ſo it would be.

℣. 23. And it came to paſs at the end of the year, &c.] After the death of Zechariah; ſo ſoon had his prophecy its accompliſhment: that the hoſt of Syria came up againſt him; againſt Joaſh, king of Judah, under Hazael king of Syria, or however ſent by him; for ſome think this is a different expedition from that in 2 Kings xii. 17. though others take it to be the ſame: and they came to Judah and Jeruſalem; not only came into the land of Judah, but as far as Jeruſalem, the forces of Joaſh not being able to ſtop them: and deſtroyed all the princes of the people from among the people; the idolatrous princes of Judah, ℣. 17. which is very remarkable, that they ſhould be diſtinguiſhed from the people in their deſtruction, who had been the chief cauſe of the wrath of God coming upon them: and ſent all the ſpoil of them unto the king of Damaſcus; all the riches that were taken from them were ſent to the king of Syria at Damaſcus; this looks as if Hazael was not with this army.

℣. 24. For the army of the Syrians came with a ſmall company of men, &c.] It conſiſted but of few: and the Lord delivered a very great hoſt into their hand; which the king of Judah and his princes had got together to oppoſe them: becauſe they had forſaken the Lord God of their fathers; therefore the Lord forſook them, and gave them up into the hand of their enemies: ſo they executed judgment againſt Joaſh; were the inſtruments God made uſe of to execute his vengeance on him for his idolatry and murder.

℣. 25. And when they were departed from him, &c.] Having got what wealth and ſpoil they could: for they left him in great diſeaſes; through the wounds they gave him, and the diſtreſs they brought him into: his own ſervants conſpired againſt him, for the blood of the ſons of Jehoiada the prieſt; for perhaps more than one was ſlain at the ſame time; the reſt vindicating the cauſe of their brother, ſhared the ſame fate; or the plural is put for the ſingular: and ſlew him on his bed; in the houſe of Millo, where he lay ill of his wounds, and ſick of his diſeaſes, and could not defend himſelf: and he died; of the wounds his ſervants gave him: and they buried him in the city of David, but they buried him not in the ſepulchres of the kings; ſee 2 Kings xii. 21.

℣. 26. And theſe are they that conſpired againſt him, Zabad the ſon of Shimeah an Ammoniteſs, &c.] Called Jozachar, the ſon of Shimeah, 2 Kings xii. 21. and Jehozabad, the ſon of Shimrith, a Moabiteſs; called in the ſame place the ſon of Shomer.

℣. 27. Now concerning his ſons, &c.] The ſons of Joaſh; how many they were, and what their names: and the greatneſs of the burdens laid upon him; which ſome underſtand of the hard and heavy prophecies of the Lord againſt him; and others of the heavy taxes and tribute impoſed on him by the king of Syria; and others of the collection for the repairs of the temple, ℣. 6. where the word uſed ſignifies a burden; and it follows, and the repairing of the houſe of the Lord; the whole hiſtory of that: behold they are written in the ſtory of the book of the kings; not in the canonical book ſo called, but in the hiſtory, commentaries, or annals of the kings of Judah now loſt: and Amaziah his ſon reigned in his ſtead; ſee 2 Kings xii. 21.

CHAP. XXV.

THIS chapter begins with the reign of Amaziah, and ſome of the firſt acts of it, ſlaying thoſe that killed his father, ℣. 1—4. raiſing a large army in his own kingdom, to which he added 100,000 more he hired out of Iſrael, whom yet he ſent home by the advice of a prophet, ℣. 5—10. and with his own army marched againſt the Edomites, and obtained a victory over them, ℣. 11, 12. but the Iſraelites being diſpleaſed with him for diſmiſſing them, fell on ſome of his cities, and ſlew many in them, ℣. 13. and ſuch was his ſtupidity, as to worſhip the gods of the Edomites he had conquered, for which he was reproved by a prophet, ℣. 14—16. and being elated with his victory, he ſent a challenge to the king of Iſrael, who accepting of it, a battle enſued, in which Judah was worſted, their king taken, and treaſuries ſpoiled, ℣. 17—24. and the chapter is cloſed with the death and burial of Amaziah, ℣. 25—28.

℣. 1, 2, 3, 4. Amaziah was 25 years old when he began to reign, &c.] Of theſe verſes, ſee the notes on 2 Kings xiv. 2, 3, 5, 6.

℣. 5. Moreover Amaziah gathered Judah together, &c.] The inhabitants thereof: and made them captains over thouſands, and captains over hundreds, according to the houſes of their fathers, throughout all Judah and Benjamin; he divided the people, according to their families throughout his kingdom, into thouſands and hundreds, and out of their reſpective families appointed captains over them: and he numbered them from 20 years old and above; the uſual age men were numbered at for war, to the 50th, according to Joſephus; the Roman law [a] obliged none to be ſoldiers after 50, nor might any be diſmiſſed before [b]; the age of military men with the Romans was from 17 to 46, or as ſome 45; but with the Perſians from 20 as here to 50 [c]: and found them 300,000 choice men, able to go forth to war, that could handle ſpear and ſhield; which ſhews that their number was greatly decreaſed ſince the times of Jehoſhaphat, ch. xvii. occaſioned by the wars under Jehoram, Ahaziah, and Joaſh; ſome copies of the Vulgate Latin [d] have only 30,000.

℣. 6. He hired alſo 100,000 mighty men of valour out of Iſrael, &c.] The ten tribes, judging his own army not ſufficient for his expedition againſt the Edomites he was meditating: for 100 talents of ſilver; which amounted to 35,300 pounds ſterling, and according to Beckius [e] were about five florins and a half to each ſoldier.

℣. 7. But there came a man of God to him, &c.] Who the Jews ſay [f] was the brother of the king, Amos, the father of Iſaiah, but without foundation:

tion: ſaying, O king, let not the army of Iſrael go with thee; to war againſt Edom; meaning the 100,000 men he had hired, and ſuggeſting that to have them with him would not be to his advantage, but his detriment, for the following reaſon: for the Lord is not with Iſrael, to wit, with all the children of Ephraim; they being idolaters, worſhippers of the calves; and as they had forſaken the Lord, he had forſaken them; therefore no help could be expected from them; the Targum is, "the "Word of the Lord is not their help."

℣. 8. But if thou wilt go, do it, be ſtrong for the battle, &c.] An ironical expreſſion; if thou wilt not be adviſed, take them with thee, and try what thou canſt do; exert all thy courage, and uſe thy military ſkill, and mark the iſſue: God ſhall make thee fall before the enemy; notwithſtanding the number of thy troops, and thoſe of thy auxiliaries; tho' ſome take them to be ſpoken ſeriouſly, and read the words, but go thou; that is alone, without the hired troops, and fight boldly and courageouſly; or otherwiſe God ſhall make thee fall, &c. for God hath power to help and to caſt down; to help with a few, and to caſt down with many; to help without the hired Iſraelites, and to caſt down with them.

℣. 9. And Amaziah ſaid to the man of God, But what ſhall we do for the 100 talents which I have given to the army of Iſrael? &c.] They'll be loſt, there's no demanding them back again; this he ſpake with ſome concern, as loth to loſe ſo much money: and the man of God anſwered, the Lord is able to give thee much more than this; whoſe is the earth, and the fulneſs thereof, the gold and ſilver, and all the riches of it; and therefore he had no need to trouble himſelf about the loſs of his money, which, if obedient to the will of God, he might expect it would be abundantly repaid him.

℣. 10. Then Amaziah ſeparated them, &c.] From his army, among whom they were incorporated and ranked, to wit, the army that was come to him out of Ephraim; which he had hired of the 10 tribes, theſe he ſingled out: to go home again; to their own country: wherefore their anger was greatly kindled againſt Judah, and they returned home in great anger; it being a great ſlight put upon them, and a reproach to them, to be thus diſmiſſed, as they thought; and eſpecially if they underſtood that it was becauſe they were idolaters; and the rather as they might have hoped to have had their ſhare in the plunder of the Edomites.

℣. 11. And Amaziah ſtrengthened himſelf, and led forth his people, &c.] To go to war with the Edomites; not diſcouraged by the diſmiſſion of the hired troops, but truſting in the promiſe and power of God, he went forth with boldneſs and intrepidity: and went to the valley of ſalt, and ſmote of the children of Seir 10,000; the Edomites; ſo called, not becauſe they were the poſterity of Seir, but becauſe they dwelt in Seir, from whence they drove the deſcendants of Seir, and dwelt in their ſtead; ſee 2 Kings xiv. 7.

℣. 12. And other 10,000 left alive, did the children of Judah carry away captive, &c.] The reſt of the army of the Edomites, which amounted to the ſame number, fell into their hands, and they took them, and carried them off: and brought them unto the top of the rock; very probably the ſame on which the city Petra, the metropolis of Edom, was built, called alſo Selah, 2 Kings xiv. 7. both which names ſignify a rock. Joſephus[g] calls it the great rock in Arabia; that is, Arabia Petræa: and caſt them down from the top of the rock, that they were broken all in pieces; burſt aſunder, bones broken and limb from limb ſeparated. This ſort of puniſhment was inflicted by the Romans on various malefactors, by caſting them down from the Tarpeian rock[h]; and in Greece, according to the Delphian law, ſuch as were guilty of ſacrilege were led to a rock, and caſt down headlong from thence[i]: and now in Turkey, at a place called Conſtantine, a town ſituated on the top of a great rock, the uſual way of executing great criminals is by puſhing them from off the cliff[k]; ſee Luke iv. 29. but to uſe captives taken in war after this manner, ſeems cruel and barbarous; and what ſhould be the reaſon of ſuch treatment of them, is not eaſy to ſay.

℣. 13. But the ſoldiers of the army which Amaziah ſent back, that they ſhould not go with him to battle, &c.] The 100,000 men hired out of Iſrael, whom he diſmiſſed before he went againſt Edom: fell upon the cities of Judah, from Samaria even unto Bethhoron; which though it formerly belonged to Ephraim, had been taken by the men of Judah; they did not fall on theſe as they returned home, for then it would have been ſaid from Bethoron to Samaria; but after they had returned home, they meditated this piece of revenge for the ill treatment of them, as they reckoned it: and ſmote 3000 of them; of the inhabitants of the cities, who roſe up and oppoſed them: and took much ſpoil; out of them, and went their way with it.

℣. 14. Now it came to paſs, after that Amaziah was come from the ſlaughter of the Edomites, &c.] Inſtead of returning thanks to God for the victory obtained, and giving him the glory of it: that he brought the gods of the children of Seir, and ſet them up to be his gods; what were the gods of the Edomites, is no where ſaid in ſcripture; only Joſephus[l] ſpeaks of the prieſts of Coze, which he ſays was a god of the Idumæans: and bowed himſelf before them, and burned incenſe unto them; which was the greateſt piece of ſottiſhneſs and ſtupidity imaginable, to worſhip the gods of a nation conquered by him; for ſince they could not ſave them, what help could he expect from them?

℣. 15. Wherefore the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Amaziah, &c.] Idolatry being always highly diſpleaſing to the Lord; and this was a moſt provoking inſtance of it, that when the Lord had given him victory over his enemies, that he ſhould forſake him, and worſhip their gods: and he ſent unto him a prophet; whether the ſame as before, is not certain: which ſaid unto him, why haſt thou ſought after the gods of the people, which could not deliver their own people out of thine hand? and therefore it was madneſs in him to ſeek after them, and worſhip them.

℣. 16. And it came to paſs as he talked with him, that the king ſaid unto him, art thou made of the king's council? &c.] He was not indeed one of his privy council, made ſo by him, but he was appointed a counſellor to him by the Lord, the King of kings, to expoſtulate with him about his idolatry, and to adviſe him to relinquiſh it, to whoſe counſel he ought to have hearkened: forbear, why ſhouldſt thou be ſmitten? bidding him hold his peace, and threatening him, that if he did not, he muſt expect to be ſmitten; that is, with death, as Zechariah the prophet was by the order order of his father: then the prophet forbore; left off ſpeaking, only added this at parting: and ſaid, I know that God hath determined to deſtroy thee; being given up to hardneſs of heart, ſo as to pay no regard to the Lord and his prophets, which was a ſure preſage of deſtruction: becauſe thou haſt done this; committed ſuch idolatry, and perſiſted in it: and haſt not hearkened to my counſel; to reform from it.

℣. 17. Then Amaziah king of Judah took advice, &c.] Not of God, nor of his prophets, but of ſome of his nobles like himſelf: and ſent to Joaſh —king of Iſrael; of his meſſage to him here, and his anſwer in the two following verſes, ſee the notes on 2 Kings xiv. 8, 9, 10.

℣. 20. But Amaziah would not hear, &c.] What the king of Iſrael adviſed him to, not to meddle to his hurt: for it came of God, that he might deliver them into the hand of their enemies; Amaziah and his army into the hands of Joaſh and his; this was the will of God, and was brought about by his providence; and that it might be, Amaziah was given up to blindneſs and hardneſs of heart, as a puniſhment of his idolatry: becauſe they ſought after the gods of Edom; he and his nobles, and many of the people following his example; from hence to the end of the chapter, the ſame things are recorded as in 2 Kings xiv. 11—20. ſee the notes there.

CHAP. XXVI.

THIS chapter relates the good reign of Uzziah, ℣. 1—5. his wars and victories, his buildings, the number of his ſoldiers, and his military ſtores, ℣. 6—15. his invaſion of the prieſt's office, in attempting to offer incenſe, for which he was ſmitten with a leproſy, which continued to his death, ℣. 16—23.

℣. 1. Then all the people of Judah took Uzziah, &c.] Of this and the three following verſes, ſee the notes on 2 Kings xiv. 21, 22. and xv. 2, 3. where Uzziah is called Azariah.

℣. 5. And he ſought God in the days of Zechariah, &c.] Not that Zechariah, the laſt of the prophets ſave one, he lived 300 years after this; nor he that Joaſh ſlew; but as it may ſeem, a ſon of his, perhaps the ſame with him in Iſ. viii. 2. who had underſtanding in the viſions of God; who either had prophetic viſions granted to him, or had divine wiſdom to interpret ſuch that others had; or as others think, had a gift of interpreting the prophecies of others, the writings of Moſes and David, &c. to which the Targum ſeems to agree; which paraphraſes it, "who taught in the fear of the Lord; with which agree the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions; ſome copies read in the fear of God, as an ancient manuſcript mentioned by Junius, and ſo the Talmud[l]: and as long as he ſought the Lord, God made him to proſper; in his kingdom, and againſt his enemies; even ſo long as he abode by the word, worſhip, and ordinances of God, of which inſtances are given, as follow.

℣. 6. And he went forth, and warred againſt the Philiſtines, &c.] Who in the times of Jehoram broke in upon Judah, and diſtreſſed them, ch. xxi. 16, 17. and brake down the wall of Gath; which was one of the five principalities of the Philiſtines: and the wall of Jabneh; no where elſe mentioned in ſcripture, but frequent in the Jewiſh writings; where the ſanhedrim ſometimes ſat, and where was a famous univerſity, and from whence ſprung many of the Jewiſh Rabbins; it is the ſame which in ſome writers is called Jamnia, and was a port near to Joppa; and belonged to the tribe of Dan, as Joſephus[m] writes: and the wall of Aſhdod; another of the principalities of the Philiſtines, the ſame with the Azotus of the New Teſtament; he diſmantled all theſe places: and built cities about Aſhdod, and among the Philiſtines; where he placed garriſons to keep them in awe; ſee Amos i. 8.

℣. 7. And God helped him againſt the Philiſtines, &c.] He did not do all before related of himſelf, and by his own ſtrength, but by the help of God; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord helped him:" and againſt the Arabians that dwelt in Gurbaal; the ſame with Gerar, according to the Targum; which alſo belonged to the Philiſtines, and had a king in Abraham's time, Gen. xx. 1. the ſame with Aſkelon, another of the five principalities of the Philiſtines: and the Mehunims; or the Minæans, as the Septuagint, and whom Pliny[n] makes mention of among the Arabians; they ſeem to be the Scenite Arabs; ſee ch. xx. 1. or rather as the Targum, thoſe that dwelt in the plain of Maon, which was in Arabia Petræa.

℣. 8. And the Ammonites gave gifts to Uzziah, &c.] As tributaries to him, or however as deſirous to live in friendſhip with him: and his name ſpread abroad, even to the entering in of Egypt; ſo far he carried his arms, and conquered the countries that lay between Paleſtine and Egypt: for he ſtrengthened himſelf exceedingly; his kingdom and its coaſts from the force of enemies.

℣. 9. Moreover Uzziah built towers in Jeruſalem at the corner-gate, &c.] Which was broken down by the king of Iſrael in his father's time, ch. xxv. 23. and which he not only repaired, but ſtrengthened, by building a tower upon it: and at the valley-gate; which led to the valley, Neh. ii. 13. and iii. 13. called the valley of the dead bodies, in which they were caſt, and in which the brook Kidron ran, Jer. xxxi. 40. and at the turning of the wall; at each of thoſe places he built towers, which Joſephus[o] ſays were 150 cubits high: and fortified them; put garriſons of ſoldiers into them.

℣. 10. Alſo he built towers in the deſart, &c.] In the deſert of Arabia, to protect travellers from thieves and robbers, and particularly ſhepherds and their flocks, as appears by what follows; which a certain writer[p] thinks are the ſame which the Indians call Pagods; not ſuch as ſerved for temples, but were buildings encompaſſed with good walls, where flocks were gathered together in caſe of any alarm: and digged many wells; for the watering of the flocks, which in thoſe hot and deſert places were of great uſe: for he had much cattle, both in the low country and in the plains; both flocks and herds: huſbandmen alſo and vine-dreſſers in the mountains; huſbandmen to take care of the corn, and manure the land for that, and gather it in when ripe; and vine-dreſſers to prune the vines, and look after them; which were very often planted on mountains, and and on which alſo corn grew, Pſ. lxxii. 16. and in Carmel; a place in the tribe of Judah, where Nabal dwelt, 1 Sam. xxv. 2. or it may be put for any fruitful field: for he loved huſbandry; not only the profit, but the exerciſe of it at times; and it was uſual with great perſonages in the eaſtern countries to employ themſelves in ſome ſuch way; Saul after he was king attended the herd, 1 Sam. xi. 5. Meſha king of Moab was a ſheep-maſter, 2 Kings iii. 4. among the Romans, Quinctius Cincinnatus and Cato Major [q] were great lovers of huſbandry; and we read of one of the Chineſe emperors that gave himſelf to huſbandry, held the plough himſelf, broke the clods, and caſt in the ſeed, to ſet an example to the whole empire [r]. Another of their emperors gave himſelf wholly to huſbandry [s]; another choſe an huſbandman for his ſucceſſor, and who alſo encouraged huſbandry [t].

℣. 11. Moreover, Uzziah had an hoſt of fighting men, &c.] A ſtanding army: that went out to war by bands; to annoy his enemies, and to ſcour the country from thieves and robbers, that came in troops to plunder: according to the number of their account, by the hand of Jehiel the ſcribe; the ſecretary of war, who ordered theſe bands, ſettled their number, and directed their deſtination: and Maaſeiah the ruler; or officer over them, a lieutenant: under the hand of Hananiah one of the king's captains; that had the command of them, or at leaſt of one of them.

℣. 12. The whole number of the chief of the fathers of the mighty men of valour were 2600.] Who were the commanders and principal officers of his army; and ſuch a number ſuppoſed a large army, as follows.

℣. 13. And under their hand was an army, 307,500, &c.] Which was larger than that in his father's time by 7500, ch. xxv. 5. beſides officers: that made war with mighty power, to help the king againſt the enemy; they were ready to fight, and fight valiantly, whenever the king had any occaſion for them, or the land was invaded.

℣. 14. And Uzziah prepared for them throughout all the hoſt, &c.] For every ſoldier in the army: ſhields, and ſpears; defenſive and offenſive weapons, the one to cover and protect their bodies, the other to puſh and pierce their enemies: and helmets, and habergeons; the firſt of theſe were a covering for the head in the day of battle, and the other coats of mail, to defend the body: and bows; to ſhoot arrows out of: and ſlings to caſt ſtones; at which the Benjaminites formerly were very expert.

℣. 15. And he made in Jeruſalem engines, invented by cunning men, to be on the towers, and upon the bulwarks, to ſhoot arrows, and great ſtones withal, &c.] Such as with the Romans were called Catapultæ, Balliſtæ [u], Scorpiones [w], &c. and by this it appears, that theſe were not firſt invented in Greece and Rome, but in Judæa. It is ſaid [x], that the Romans received the machine to batter cities, from the Grecks, and that the Trojan horſe was no other than a battering ram; but if they did, the invention of them muſt be aſcribed, not to them, but rather to the Syrians and Phœnicians, according to Pliny [y]; though others [z] ſuppoſe the Carthaginians, who were a colony of theirs, to be the inventers of them; yet after all, they ſeem to be the device of ſome ſkilful men among the Jews, in the times of Uzziah; according to Diodorus Siculus [a], they were not found out, when Nineveh was beſieged in the times of Sardanapalus: and his name ſpread far abroad; in diſtant countries, for his warlike diſpoſitions and preparations, which made them ſtand in fear of him: for he was helped until he was ſtrong; he was wonderfully helped by the Lord to build fortified places, raiſe a numerous army, and provide all ſorts of armour for them, and invent ſuch machines as would greatly annoy the enemy, whereby he became very potent, and injected dread round about him.

℣. 16. When he was ſtrong, &c. Became great and powerful, through his victories, the enlargement of his dominions, and having a numerous army, and theſe well accoutred, and many fortified cities and towers: his heart was lifted up to his deſtruction; he grew vain and proud, elated with his flouriſhing circumſtances, which iſſued in his ruin: for he tranſgreſſed againſt the Lord his God; who had helped him, and made him ſo great, and had beſtowed ſo many favours upon him; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord his God;" what his tranſgreſſion was, follows: and went into the temple of the Lord; the holy place, into which none but the prieſts might enter: to burn incenſe upon the altar of incenſe; which ſtood there.

℣. 17. And Azariah the prieſt went in after him, &c.] To hinder him from doing it, and to perſuade him to go out. This was the high-prieſt, as appears from ℣. 20. and is thought to be the ſame that is ſpoken of in 1 Chron. vi. 10. and with him 80 prieſts of the Lord, that were valiant men; not only able-bodied men, but men of ſpirit and courage, and zealous for the honour of God.

℣. 18. And they withſtood Uzziah the king, &c.] They not only ſtood againſt him, but ſtood about him, ſurrounded him, ſo as to hinder him from approaching the altar of incenſe: and ſaid unto him, it appertaineth not unto thee, Uzziah, to burn incenſe unto the Lord; it did not belong to his office as a king, it was no part of it: but to the prieſts the ſons of Aaron, that are conſecrated to burn incenſe; and to them only; for even the Levites might not do it, only thoſe of the tribe of Levi, that deſcended from Aaron, ſee Numb. xvi. 35. go out of the ſanctuary, for thou haſt treſpaſſed; by going into that: neither ſhall it be for thine honour from the Lord God; but to his hurt, and be a brand of infamy upon him; for more is deſigned than is expreſſed, and as the event ſhewed.

℣. 19. Then Uzziah was wroth, &c.] With the prieſts, and as Joſephus [b] ſays, threatened to kill them: and had a cenſer in his hand to burn incenſe; ready to do it, and reſolved upon it: and while he was wroth with the prieſts; and expreſſing his indignation, and declaring what he would do to them, if they continued to oppoſe him: the leproſy even roſe up in his forehead before the prieſts in the houſe of the Lord, from beſide the incenſe-altar; which ſeems not only to deſcribe the poſition of the prieſts, being beſide the altar of incenſe, to keep the king from it, when the leproſy was ſeen by them in his forehead, but the quarter from whence the ſtroke inviſibly came. Joſephus [c] ſays, there was an earthquake at the ſame time, and a mountain was rent.

℣. 20. And Azariah the chief-prieſt, and all the prieſts, looked upon him, and behold, he was leprous in in his forehead, &c.] He was leprous all over his body no doubt, but it appeared in his forehead very remarkably, and was ſeen by them all, who without doubt, informed him of his caſe, and of which he ſoon became ſenſible: and they thruſt him out from thence; the holy place, he being now unfit to be in a common dwelling-houſe, or his own palace, and much leſs to be in the houſe of God: yea, himſelf alſo haſted to go out, becauſe the Lord had ſmitten him; fearing, ſhould he continue there, that ſomething worſe would befal him; the Targum is, the Word of the Lord. CHAP. XXVII.

THIS chapter treats of the reign of Jotham, which was a good one, ℣. 1, 2. of his buildings and wars, ℣. 3—6. and of his death and burial, ℣. 7, 8, 9.

℣. 1. Jotham was 25 years old, &c.] See the note on 2 Kings xv. 33.

℣. 2. And he did that which was right, &c.] See the note on 2 Kings xv. 34. howbeit, he entered not into the temple of the Lord; to burn incenſe, as his father did; he did according to his good ways, but not his evil ones: and the people did yet corruptly; in ſacrificing and burning incenſe in the high places, 2 Kings xv. 35. which ſome think Joaſh himſelf did, and is meant in the preceding clauſe; but the ſenſe given is beſt.

℣. 3. He built the high gate in the houſe of the Lord, &c.] See the note on 2 Kings xv. 35. and on the wall of Ophel he built much; which Kimchi interprets an high place; it was the eaſtern part of mount Zion. Joſephus [f] calls it Ophlas, and ſays it joined to the eaſtern porch of the temple; and ſome have thought, the porch of the temple is meant; the Targum renders it a palace; it is a tradition of the Jews, that it was the holy of holies [g].

℣. 4. Moreover, he built cities in the mountains of Judah, &c.] In the mountainous part of it, the hill-country of Judea, Luke i. 65. and in the foreſts he built caſtles and towers; for the ſafety of travellers, and of ſhepherds and their flocks, ſee ch. xxvi. 10.

℣. 5. He fought alſo with the king of the Ammonites, and prevailed againſt them, &c.] Theſe were brought into ſubjection by David; but in after-times endeavoured to caſt off the yoke, and even invaded the land of Judah, as in the days of Jehoſhaphat, and now in the reign of Jotham, but ſucceeded not, ſee Amos i. 13. and the children of Ammon gave him the ſame year 100 talents of ſilver; he obliged them to pay this tribute annually, and which they began to pay in the preſent year, and amounted to 35,330 l. and 10,000 meaſures of wheat, and 10,000 of barley; the meaſure here is the cor, the ſame with the homer; which, according to Godwin [h], held 45 gallons, or five buſhels and five gallons, ſo that there muſt be upwards of 50,000 buſhels, of each of theſe paid to Jotham; according to biſhop Cumberland [i], a cor or homer, held 75 wine gallons, and upwards of five pints: ſo much did the children of Ammon pay both the ſecond year and the third; the two following years as well as the preſent one; why this tribute was not continued to be paid, cannot be ſaid with certainty, whether the Ammonites refuſed and revolted, and could not be obliged, or whether the agreement was only for three years.

℣. 6. So Jotham became mighty, &c.] Having built towers and caſtles, and fortified cities, and conquered his enemies: becauſe he prepared his ways before the Lord his God; ordered, directed, and guided them according to the word and will of God, and walked as in the ſight of God, having the fear of him continually before him.

℣. 7. Now the reſt of the acts of Jotham, and all his wars, &c.] Not only with the Ammonites, but with the Syrians, and ten tribes, ſee 2 Kings xv. 37. and his ways, lo, they are written in the books of the kings of Iſrael and Judah; not in the canonical books of Kings, but in the Chronicles of the kings of both nations, ſee 2 Kings xv. 36.

℣. 8. He was 25 years old, &c.] The ſame is repeated here as in ℣. 1. and of the following verſe, ſee the note on 2 Kings xv. 38.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXVIII.

THIS chapter contains the reign of Ahaz, and gives an account of the idolatry he was guilty of, ℣. 1—4. what calamities came upon him and his people, being delivered up into the hands of the kings of Syria and Iſrael, who ſlew many, and carried others captives, ℣. 5—8. tho' they that were taken captive by Iſrael, at the admonition of a prophet, were ſent back again, ℣. 9—15. how alſo he was diſtreſſed by the Edomites and Philiſtines, and not helped by the king of Aſſyria, he ſent for and made preſents to, ℣. 16—21. and yet went into more and greater idolatries, ℣. 22—25. and the chapter is concluded with his death and burial, ℣. 26, 27.

℣. 1—4. Ahaz was 20 years old when he began to reign, &c.] Theſe verſes are much the ſame with 2 Kings xvi. 2—4. only in ℣. 2. it is ſaid, he made alſo molten images for Baalim; the ſeveral Baals or idols of the nations round about, as well as ſerved Jeroboam's calves; ſee Judg. ii. 11. and he is ſaid in ℣. 3. to burn incenſe in the valley of the ſon of Hinnom; to Molech, the god of the Ammonites, who was worſhipped there.

℣. 5. Wherefore the Lord his God delivered him into the hand of the king of Syria, &c.] Whoſe name was Rezin, 2 Kings xvi. 5. though that is an after-expedition to this, which is there related. The Lord is called the God of Ahaz, becauſe he was ſo of right; he had dominion over him, and ought to have been worſhipped by him; and beſides, he was ſo by virtue of the national covenant between God and the people Ahaz was king of; and moreover, Ahaz profeſſed he was his God, though in an hypocritical manner, and he forſook the true worſhip of him: and they ſmote him, and carried away a great multitude of them captives, and brought them to Damaſcus; whereas in an after-expedition, related in 2 Kings xvi. 5. they did not ſucceed: and he was alſo delivered into the hand of the king of Iſrael; whoſe name was Pekah: who ſmote him with a great ſlaughter; as is next related.

℣. 6. For Pekah ſon of Remaliah, &c.] Who was at this time king of Iſrael: ſlew in Judah 120,000 in one day, which were all valiant men; a great ſlaughter to be made at one time, and of valiant men, but not ſo great as that in ch. xiii. 17. becauſe they had forſaken the Lord God of their fathers; this was not a reaſon with Pekah for ſlaying them, he himſelf being an idolater, but why the Lord ſuffered them to be ſlain by him.

℣. 7. And Zichri, a mighty man of Ephraim, ſlew Maaſeiah the king's ſon, &c.] Who therefore muſt have eſcaped being burnt in the valley of Hinnom, or only was cauſed to paſs through the fire there, ℣. 3. and Azrikam the governor of the houſe; ſteward or treaſurer in the king's houſe, in the ſame office as Shebna was, Iſ. xxii. 15. and Elkanah that was next to the king; prime miniſter of ſtate.

℣. 8. And the children of Iſrael carried captive of their brethren 200,000 women, ſons and daughters, &c.] Which was a very large and unuſual number to be carried captive; but having made ſuch a ſlaughter of the men, and the reſt being intimidated thereby, it was the more eaſily done: and took away alſo much ſpoil from them; wealth and riches out of their cities, and even from Jeruſalem; for by the preceding verſe, it ſeems as if they came thither: and brought the ſpoils to Samaria; or rather towards Samaria[k], as ſome render the word; for they were not as yet come to it, nor did they bring it, and their captives thither, ſee ℣. ix. 15.

℣. 9. But a prophet of the Lord was there, whoſe name was Oded, &c.] Not the ſame that was in the time of Aſa, ch. xv. 1, 8. and he went out before the hoſt that came to Samaria; that was coming thither; he went out of Samaria to meet them: and ſaid unto them, behold, becauſe the Lord God of your fathers was wroth with Judah, he hath delivered them into your hand; he let them know it was not owing to their wiſdom and conduct, their proweſs and courage, that they had got the victory over them, but becauſe the Lord was diſpleaſed with them for their ſins, and therefore gave them up into their hands: and ye have ſlain them in a rage that reaches up unto heaven; that is, with an exceeding great rage and fury, and the cry of which reached to heaven alſo, and was diſpleaſing to God; he ſuggeſts to them, that they had exceeded all bounds, and had not ſhown that compaſſion to their brethren, when fallen into their hands, they ought to have done, and which therefore was reſented by the God of heaven, ſee Zech. i. 15.

℣. 10. And now ye purpoſe to keep under the children of Judah and Jeruſalem for bondmen and bondwomen unto you, &c.] As ſeemed by taking and bringing captive ſuch a number of them, contrary to the law, Lev. xxv. 39—46. but are there not with you, even with you, ſins againſt the Lord your God? for which they deſerved to be chaſtized as well as their brethren the men of Judah, and might expect it, and eſpecially if they uſed them in a barbarous manner, and contrary to the will of God.

℣. 11. Now hear me therefore, &c.] And not only hear, but be obedient: and deliver the captives again, which ye have taken of your brethren; their women, ſons and daughters, even all of them, the whole, 200,000: for the fierce wrath of God is upon you; hangs over your heads, and will fall upon you, unleſs you do this.

℣. 12. Then certain of the heads of the children of Ephraim, &c.] Of the principal men of the ten tribes, whoſe names follow: Azariah the ſon of Johanan, Berechiah the ſon of Meſhillemoth, and Jehizkiah the ſon of Shallum, and Amaſa the ſon of Hadlai, ſtood up againſt them that came from the war; who were bringing the captives and ſpoils to Samaria; but theſe princes being influenced by what the prophet ſaid, hindered their proceeding any farther.

℣. 13. And ſaid unto them, ye ſhall not bring in the captives hither, &c.] That is, into Samaria, near which it ſeems they now were; for whereas we have offended againſt the Lord already; by exceeding in their cruelty againſt their brethren of Judah, as well as by worſhipping the calves: ye intend to add more to our ſins, and to our treſpaſs; by making ſlaves ſlaves of thoſe they had taken captives, which was againſt the expreſs law of God: for your treſpaſs is great; which they had committed already, by their idolatrous practices: and there is fierce wrath againſt Iſrael; which they perceived by what the prophet had ſaid.

℣. 14. So the armed men left the captives and the ſpoil, before the princes and the congregation.] Which were come out of Samaria to meet them; ſuch an effect had the words of the prophet, and the princes, upon them, that they not only left the captives with them, but the ſpoil, to diſpoſe of, as they thought fit.

℣. 15. And the men that were expreſſed by name, roſe up, &c.] Either thoſe before named, ℣. 12. as Jarchi, and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion; or ſuch as they pitched upon, nominated and appointed: and took the captives, and with the ſpoil clothed all that were naked among them, and arayed them, and ſhod them; put clothes on their backs, and ſhoes on their feet, who either were taken or carried away before they could put on their garments, or had been ſtripped of them: and gave them to eat, and drink, and anointed them; not only fed them, being hungry and thirſty, but anointed them for refreſhment after travelling; the Targum is, waſhed them, from dirt and filth contracted by travelling: and carried all the feeble of them on aſſes; women and children that were not able to walk afoot ſo far back again: and brought them to Jericho, the city of palm-trees, to their brethren; a city on the borders both of Judah and Iſrael, and famous for the number of palm-trees near it, ſee Judg. i. 16. in all which theſe inhabitants of Samaria acted the part of the good Samaritan, Luke x. 33, 34. then they returned to Samaria; the prophet, with the princes, and the army, and the whole congregation.

℣. 16. At that time did king Ahaz ſend to the kings of Aſſyria to help him.] To Tiglath Phileſer, and his ſon, ſee 2 Kings xvi. 7. and the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic verſions, read in the ſingular, and ſo the Targum.

℣. 17. For again the Edomites had come, &c.] As in the days of Jehoſhaphat, ch. xx. 10. and ſmitten Judah, and carried away captives; taking the advantage of the weak and low condition Ahaz was in, and which was the reaſon of his ſending to the king of Aſſyria.

℣. 18. The Philiſtines alſo had invaded the cities of the low country, &c.] Which lay neareſt to them, as Sharon, Lydda, Joppa, &c. in revenge of what Uzziah had done to them, ch. xxvi. 6, 7. and of the ſouth of Judah; they penetrated as far as that, from the weſt to the ſouth of the land: and had taken Bethſhemeſh, and Ajalon, and Gederoth, and Shocho with the villages thereof, and Timnah with the villages thereof; of which ſee Joſh. xv. 10, 35, 41, 57. and xix. 42. and Gimzo alſo, and the villages thereof; which though no where elſe mentioned in ſcripture, yet we frequently read in Jewiſh writings [l] of Nahum, a man of Gamzu, which perhaps is the ſame place with this: and they dwelt there; kept them in their hands, and inhabited them.

℣. 19. For the Lord brought Judah low becauſe of Ahaz king of Iſrael, &c.] Becauſe of his impieties and idolatries, which the people by his example went into; he is called king of Iſrael, becauſe he walked in the ways of the kings of Iſrael, and becauſe he ruled over two of the tribes of Iſrael, and of right was king over all Iſrael, as David and Solomon his anceſtors were; though the Vulgate Latin, Septuagint, and Syriac verſions read, king of Judah; and ſo the Targum: for he made Judah naked; ſtript them of their religion, and the worſhip of God, and ſo of the divine protection, whereby they were expoſed to their enemies, ſee Exod. xxxii. 25. the Targum is, "for the houſe of Judah ceaſed from the worſhip of the Lord:" tranſgreſſed ſore againſt the Lord; by committing groſs idolatry; the ſame Targum is, "they dealt falſely with the Word of the Lord."

℣. 20. And Tilgath-pilneſer king of Aſſyria came unto him, &c.] Not to Jeruſalem, but to Damaſcus, where he made a diverſion in his favour, and took that city, and where Ahaz met him, 2 Kings xvi. 9. and diſtreſſed him, but ſtrengthened him not; exhauſted his treaſures, and laid a tribute upon him, but did not help him againſt the Edomites and Philiſtines, or recover for him the cities they had taken from him; and in taking Damaſcus, he ſerved himſelf more than Ahaz, and paved the way for ſeizing upon the ten tribes.

℣. 21. For Ahaz took away a portion out of the houſe of the Lord, and out of the houſe of the king, and of the princes, &c.] A part out of the treaſures of the temple, and a part out of his own treaſures, and another which he levied upon his nobles: and gave it unto the king of Aſſyria; ſent it to him as a preſent, to engage him on his ſide, and aſſiſt him againſt his enemies, 2 Kings xvi. 8. but he helped him not; ſee the note on the preceding verſe.

℣. 22. And in the time of his diſtreſs did he treſpaſs yet more againſt the Lord, &c.] By increaſing his idolatries, as appears by what he did, in imitation of what he ſaw at Damaſcus, where he had an interview with the king of Aſſyria, 2 Kings xvi. 10—16. this is that king Ahaz; that monſter of iniquity, than whom there was none worſe, nor any ſo bad, of all the kings of Judah.

℣. 23. For he ſacrificed unto the gods of Damaſcus which ſmote him, &c.] As he fooliſhly imagined, that they might do him no more hurt; as it is ſaid of the Indians, that they worſhip the devil, that he may not hurt them; but that a king of Judah ſhould do this, is monſtrous ſtupidity; rather therefore the meaning may be, that he worſhipped the gods of thoſe that ſmote him, thoſe of the men or ſoldiers of Damaſcus [m], ſee ℣. 5. for the Spirit of God would never aſcribe the ſmiting of him to idols, though he himſelf might: and he ſaid, becauſe the gods of the kings of Syria help them; which looks as if this was before Damaſcus was taken by the king of Aſſyria, and when Rezin king of Syria prevailed over Ahaz: therefore will I ſacrifice to them, that they may help me; againſt the Edomites and Philiſtines; wherefore rather to this his idolatry, reſpect is had in ℣. 22. but they were the ruin of him, and of all Iſrael; the worſhip of them was the cauſe of all the calamities that came upon that part of Iſrael, of which he was king.

℣. 24. And gathered together the veſſels of the houſe of God, and cut in pieces the veſſels of the houſe of God, &c.] And converted them to his own uſe, ſold them, or melted the gold and ſilver, of which they were, and made money of them, his treaſures being exhauſted: and ſhut up the doors of the houſe of the Lord; that the people might not come and worſhip there, but on the high places he made: and he made him altars in every corner of of Jeruſalem; that the prieſts might ſacrifice there, and not in the temple.

℣. 25. And in every city of Judah he made high places to burn incenſe unto the gods, &c.] The gods of Damaſcus, and other idols; this he did to prevent their coming to Jeruſalem to worſhip.

CHAP. XXIX.

THIS chapter begins with the good reign of Hezekiah, who upon his acceſſion to the throne opened the doors of the temple, ℣. 1—3. ſummoned the prieſts and Levites, and exhorted them to purge the temple, and reſtore the worſhip of it, ℣. 4—11. who accordingly ſet about the work immediately, and cleanſed the temple, and when they had done, reported it to the king, ℣. 12—19. upon which he, with the princes, went into the temple and offered ſacrifices, ℣. 20—24. and ordered ſingers to ſing at the offering of burnt-offerings, ℣. 25—30. when he and his people offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings in great abundance, ℣. 31—36.

℣. 1, 2. Hezekiah began to reign, &c.] Of theſe two verſes, ſee the notes on 2 Kings xviii. 2, 3.

℣. 3. He in the firſt year of his reign, in the firſt month, &c.] And as appears from ℣. 17. on the firſt day of the month: opened the doors of the houſe of the Lord; which his father had ſhut, ch. xxviii. 24. and repaired them; or ſtrengthened them, the hinges, and other parts of them, being looſened and weakened; and ornamented them by overlaying them with gold, the plates of which very probably his father had taken off; for, certain it is, Hezekiah overlaid them, and very probably at this time, ſee 2 Kings xviii. 16.

℣. 4. And he brought in the prieſts and Levites, &c.] The perſons that officiated in the ſervice of the temple: and gathered them together into the eaſt-ſtreet; which led to the eaſtern gate of the temple.

℣. 5. And ſaid unto them, hear me, ye Levites, ſanctify yourſelves, &c.] By waſhing their bodies and their garments, that no pollution might attend them in their ſervice, ſee Iſ. lii. 11. and ſanctify the houſe of the Lord God of your fathers; by carrying out of it all manner of uncleanneſs, as they did, ℣. 16. and carry forth the filthineſs out of the holy place; or the abomination; the altar, like that at Damaſcus, which Ahaz, removing the altar of the Lord, had placed in the court of the prieſts; or, as Kimchi thinks, an idol, which he had ſet upon that altar.

℣. 6. For our fathers have tranſgreſſed, and done that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord our God, &c.] Meaning their more immediate anceſtors, his father and theirs, who had committed idolatry; which is a great treſpaſs, and than which there is not a greater evil in the ſight of God, nor more provoking to him: and have forſaken him; his word, worſhip, and ordinances: and have turned away their faces from the habitation of the Lord; the temple, by neglecting that, and the ſervice of it, and attending the high places: and turned their backs; upon it; though ſome think this refers to a rite or cuſtom, introduced by Ahaz before he ſhut up the temple, that inſtead of looking to the weſt, when they worſhipped, where was the ark of the Lord, he ordered them to turn their faces to the eaſt, where his altar ſtood.

℣. 7. Alſo they have ſhut up the doors of the porch, &c.] So that there was no entering into the temple, ch. xxviii. 24. and put out the lamps; for the prieſts not being able to go in morning and evening to light them, and dreſs them, they in courſe went out; the Jews ſay [n], that on the 18th of Ab, which anſwers to part of July and Auguſt, the weſtern lamp was extinct in the days of Ahab, for which a faſt was kept on that day: and have not burnt incenſe, nor offered burnt-offerings in the holy place unto the God of Iſrael; but had done theſe in the high places to idols, ch. xxviii. 3, 4, 24, 25.

℣. 8. Wherefore the wrath of the Lord was upon Judah and Jeruſalem, &c.] As appeared, by ſuffering the Syrians, and Iſraelites, and Edomites, and Philiſtines, to come upon them, and diſtreſs them, as the hiſtory of the preceding chapter ſhews: and he hath delivered them to trouble, to aſtoniſhment, and to hiſſing, as ye ſee with your eyes; ſuch deſolation and deſtruction were made among them, as not only threw them into a ſtupor, that they knew not what to do, but were amazing to all their neighbours, and cauſed them to hiſs at them, which they could not but be ſenſible of.

℣. 9. For lo, our fathers have fallen by the ſword, &c.] Of the kings of Syria and Iſrael, even great numbers of them, ch. xxviii. 5, 6. and our ſons, and our daughters, and our wives are in captivity for this; for this idolatry; or they were, though afterwards diſmiſſed, ch. xxviii. 8, 15. and ſome of them were ſtill in captivity, perhaps ſuch as were carried captive by the Edomites, ch. xxviii. 17.

℣. 10. Now it is in mine heart to make a covenant with the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] To renew one, as Aſa and Jehoiada had done, promiſing to ſerve the Lord, and worſhip him according to his will: that his fierce wrath might be turned from us; under the tokens of which they ſtill continued, and might expect it to break forth in other inſtances, unleſs a reformation was made.

℣. 11. My ſons, &c.] So as the father of his people, he beſpeaks them in the moſt tender and affectionate manner: be not now negligent; backward to this good work, ſlothful, ſluggiſh and remiſs in it; according to Jarchi and Kimchi, the word has the ſignification of error, and the ſenſe may be, don't continue in the error in which you have been, in neglecting the ſervice of God: for the Lord hath choſen you to ſtand before him, to ſerve him, and that ye ſhould miniſter unto him, and burn incenſe; on the altar of incenſe, which was the work of the prieſts, and for which they were ſelected from the reſt of their brethren; and Hezekiah's diſcourſe was directed to them, as well as to the Levites, ℣. 4, 5.

℣. 12—14. Then the Levites aroſe, &c.] Whoſe names are mentioned; of the Kohathites two, Mahath the ſon of Amaſhai, and Joel the ſon of Azariah; of the Merarites two, Kiſh the ſon of Abdi, and Azariah the ſon of Jehalelel; of the Gerſhonites two, Joah the ſon of Zimmah, and Eden the ſon of Joah;

Joah; and of the family of Elizaphan, a Kohathite, two, Shimri, and Jehiel; and of the family of Asaph, one of the chief singers in the times of David, two, Zechariah and Mattaniah; and of the family of Heman, another principal singer in the same times, two, Jehiel, and Shimei; and of the family of Jeduthun, the third principal singer, the same with Ethan, two, Shemaiah, and Uzziel, in all 14.

℣. 15. And they gathered their brethren, and sanctified themselves, &c.] As they were bid, see ℣. 5. and came, according to the commandment of the king, by the word of the Lord, to cleanse the house of the Lord; for this, which the king commanded, was by the Lord, and they came to do this work, in obedience to both.

℣. 16. And the priests went into the inner part of the house of the Lord, to cleanse it, &c.] Into the holy place, where the candlesticks and shew-bread-tables stood, into which none but priests might enter, but not into the most holy place, the innermost of all; for none but the high-priest might go into that, and only on the day of atonement; tho' in case of necessity, as for repairs, others might go into it, and so perhaps now to cleanse it, if any pollution was there: and brought out all the uncleanness that they found in the temple of the Lord, into the court of the house of the Lord; into the court of the priests, where the Levites might be, and were: and the Levites took it, to carry it out abroad into the brook Kidron; which ran through the valley of the son of Hinnom, into which all unclean things, and the filth of the temple and sacrifices, were usually carried and cast, see 2 Kings xxiii. 12.

℣. 17. Now they began on the first day of the first month to sanctify, &c.] Either of the reign of king Hezekiah, or rather of the year; the month Ab or Nisan, as the Targum expresses it: and on the eighth of the month came they to the porch of the Lord; they seem to have begun cleansing the inner part of the temple first, and so came forward until they came to the porch which led into it: so they sanctified the house of the Lord in eight days; the holy place, and it may be the most holy place, and the court of the priests: and on the 16th day of the first month they made an end; it took them eight days more to cleanse the outward porch, and the buildings and chambers belonging to the temple; according to Jarchi, it required so much time, because Ahaz had framed pictures of idols upon the walls of the temple, which could not be defaced sooner.

℣. 18. Then they went in to Hezekiah the king, &c.] In his palace: and said, we have cleansed all the house of the Lord; the several parts of it, and apartments belonging to it: and the altar of burnt-offering, with all the vessels thereof; which they cleansed and scoured, and put in their proper place, and which Ahaz had removed: and the shew-bread-table, with all the vessels thereof; which had lain neglected and prophaned, but were now put in order.

℣. 19. Moreover, all the vessels which king Ahaz in his reign did cast away in his transgression, &c.] Not that he threw them away, being valuable, as made of gold and silver; but, as Kimchi interprets it, he removed them, and converted them to idolatrous uses; or, as the Targum, he defiled or prophaned them, and made them abominable by strange idols: have we prepared and sanctified, and behold, they are before the altar of the Lord; they had cleaned them, and fitted them for service, and had put them where they were ready for use; tho' the Targum is, "we have laid them aside, and hid them, and prepared others in their room," as unfit for divine service; and which is the sense of other Jewish writers [o].

℣. 20. Then Hezekiah the king rose early, &c.] Took the first opportunity to attend the worship of God, and set an example to his people: and gathered the rulers of the city; the elders of the people, the chief magistrates in Jerusalem: and went up to the house of the Lord; the temple, to worship there.

℣. 21. And they brought seven bullocks, and seven rams, and seven lambs, and seven he-goats, for a sin-offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary, and for Judah, &c.] To make atonement in a typical way, having respect to the sacrifice of the Messiah, for the sins of the king, his family and court, among whom idolatry had prevailed in the times of his father; and for the cleansing of the temple, which had been polluted by the idolatries of Ahaz; and for the extirpation of the whole land; seven of each sort are ordered, though only one goat was required for a sin-offering by the law, because of the multitude of transgressions that had been committed, and because of the length of time in which sacrifices had been neglected: and he commanded the priests the sons of Aaron to offer them on the altar of the Lord; the altar of burnt-offerings, whose business it was to do it.

℣. 22. So they killed the bullocks, &c.] The seven bullocks, that is, the priests killed them: and the priests received the blood; into basons provided for that purpose: and sprinkled it on the altar; according to the law of Moses, Lev. i. 5. and so they did with the rams and lambs.

℣. 23. And they brought forth the he-goats for the sin-offering, before the king and the congregation, &c.] Which were to make atonement for the sins of both: and they laid their hands on them; signifying thereby, that they were vicarious sacrifices to be offered up in their own room and stead, and that they deserved to die, as these creatures would; transferring as it were hereby their sins unto them, for which they were to be sacrificed, and to make atonement, as an emblem of the imputation of the sins of the Lord's people to Christ, sacrificed in their stead.

℣. 24. And the priests killed them, &c.] The seven he-goats; for of the killing of the bullocks, rams and lambs mention is made before, ℣. 2. and they made reconciliation with their blood upon the altar, to make atonement for all Israel; typical of the reconciliation and atonement made for the whole spiritual Israel of God by the sacrifice of Christ: for the king commanded that the burnt-offering, and the sin-offering, should be made for all Israel; not only for the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and for as many of the rest of the tribes as were come over to them, and dwelt among them; but even for the ten tribes also, sadly guilty of idolatry, and for whose reformation and good this pious prince was concerned, see ch. xxx. 1.

℣. 25. And he set the Levites in the house of the Lord with cymbals, with psalteries, and with harps, &c.] To play upon, which were the three principal instruments of musick used in religious worship, and what had been disused in the times of Ahaz: according to the commandment of David, and of of Gad the king's ſeer, and Nathan the prophet; this ſort of muſic was not commanded by the law of Moſes, but was directed to by David under a divine influence, and was approved of by the prophets of the Lord here mentioned: for ſo was the commandment of the Lord by his prophets; the Targum is, "for by the Word of the Lord was the commandment by the hand of the prophets."

℣. 26. And the Levites ſtood with the inſtruments of David, &c.] Which were invented, directed, and ordered to be uſed by him, and are the ſame as in the preceding verſe: and the prieſts with the trumpets; which were made by the direction of Moſes, according to the order of God, Numb. x. 2.

℣ 27. And Hezekiah commanded to offer the burnt-offering upon the altar, &c.] Which was wholly devoted to the Lord, and was an acknowledgment of his ſovereignty over them, and of his goodneſs to them: and when the burnt-offering began, the ſong of the Lord began alſo with trumpets, and with the inſtruments ordained by David king of Iſrael; and this was done at the time of the pouring out of the drink-offering, which always attended the burnt-offering; for this is a rule with the Jews, that they don't ſay the ſong but over the drink-offering °.

℣. 28. And all the congregation worſhipped, &c.] Bowed their heads as a token of divine adoration: and the ſingers ſang; both with vocal and inſtrumental muſic, who were the Levites: and the trumpeters ſounded; their ſilver trumpets; theſe were the prieſts: and all this continued until the burnt-offering was finiſhed; with all appertaining to it, the meat and drink-offerings.

℣. 29. And when they had made an end of offering, &c.] Both the ſin-offering and the burnt-offering: the king and all that were with him, bowed themſelves and worſhipped; towards the place where the ark was, giving thanks for the purging of the temple, and reſtoring the worſhip of it.

℣. 30. Moreover, Hezekiah the king, and the princes commanded the Levites to ſing praiſe unto the Lord, with the words of David, and of Aſaph the ſeer, &c.] Making uſe of pſalms compoſed by the one and the other; Jarchi takes it to be the 105th pſalm, which begins, O give thanks unto the Lord, call upon his name, as in 1 Chron. xvi. 7, 8. and they ſang praiſes with gladneſs; the king and all the people: and they bowed their heads and worſhipped; made another adoration of the divine being, as deeply impreſſed with a ſenſe of his greatneſs and goodneſs.

℣. 31. Then Hezekiah anſwered and ſaid, &c.] Or proceeded to ſay, as follows: now ye have conſecrated yourſelves unto the Lord; having entered anew on the performance of their office, filling their hands with ſacrifices, as the words ſignify: come near, and bring ſacrifices, and thank-offerings into the houſe of the Lord; which the people were to put into their hands to offer for them: and the congregation brought in ſacrifices and thank-offerings; peace-offerings, part of which the offerers had to feaſt on with their friends, ſo expreſſing their joy and thankfulneſs on this occaſion: and as many as were of a free heart, burnt-offerings; of which they had no ſhare, but were wholly the Lord's; and which was a greater proof of their liberality, and ſo of their ſincere and cordial thankfulneſs.

℣. 32. And the number of the burnt-offerings which the congregation brought, were 70 bullocks, 100 rams, and 200 lambs, all theſe were for a burnt-offering to the Lord.] Of which they had no part to feaſt on, but were wholly devoted to the Lord, by way of thankfulneſs to him.

℣. 33. And the conſecrated things, &c.] Which were devoted for peace-offerings, of which the owners had a part: were 600 oxen, and 3000 ſheep; which was a much leſſer number than what were offered upon occaſion in the times of David and Solomon, the nation being poorer; and beſides, theſe were only the oblation of two tribes, they of all Iſrael.

℣. 34. But the prieſts were too few, ſo that they could not flay all the burnt-offerings, &c.] Take off the ſkins of them, which uſed to be done by the prieſts, Lev. i. 6. wherefore their brethren the Levites did help them till the work was ended; aſſiſted in the flaying of the ſacrifices, until they had gone through the ſervice of this time, and the ſkins of all the ſacrifices were flayed off: and until the other prieſts had ſanctified themſelves; who had been negligent of it, or had defiled themſelves by idolatry: for the Levites were more upright in heart to ſanctify themſelves, than the prieſts; were more ready to do it, and did it with greater chearfulneſs and good-will; were not backward to do it, but did it at once.

℣. 35. And alſo the burnt-offerings were in abundance with the fat of the peace-offerings, and the drink-offerings for every burnt-offering, &c.] Beſides the abundance of burnt-offerings, whoſe ſkins were to be taken off, there were meat-offerings and drink-offerings to each, which required many hands to prepare them; and alſo the fat of the peace-offerings was to be burnt; which, all together, occaſioned a great deal of buſineſs: ſo the ſervice of the houſe of the Lord was ſet in order; both for ſacrifice and ſinging; a good beginning was made, and there was a good foundation laid to proceed on.

℣. 36. And Hezekiah rejoiced, and all the people, &c.] To ſee things go on ſo well, which foreboded good unto them: and particularly, that God had prepared the people; diſpoſed and directed their hearts in ſuch a manner, as to yield ſuch a chearful obedience to the will of God, and ſhew ſuch a hearty regard to his worſhip and ſervice, and the reſtoration of it: for the thing was done ſuddenly; whereby it the more appeared that they were under a divine influence; which ſo quickly and powerfully wrought upon them to engage in this work, and needed not arguments and perſuaſions to bring them to it.

CHAP. XXX.

HEZEKIAH having conſulted his nobles about keeping the paſſover the ſecond month, and determined upon it, ſent meſſengers throughout Iſrael and Judah to acquaint them with it, at which ſome mocked, and others ſeriouſly attended to it, ℣. 1—12. ſo it was celebrated in a ſolemn manner, though ſome were not qualified for it according to the law, and for whoſe pardon Hezekiah prayed, and it was granted, ℣. 13—20. alſo the feaſt of unleavened bread was kept ſeven days, and a feſtival of ſeven days more was likewiſe obſerved with great joy and gladneſs, ℣. 21—27. ℣. 1.

° T. Bab. Eracin, fol. 12. 1.

℣. 1. And Hezekiah ſent to all Iſrael and Judah, &c.] Sent meſſengers to them, not only to the ſubjects of his own kingdom, Judah, but to all the Iſraelites that dwelt in it, who were come thither for the ſake of religion, and the worſhip of God: and wrote letters alſo to Ephraim and Manaſſeh; which are put for all the ten tribes, as appears from ℣. 10, 11. and are diſtinguiſhed from Iſrael in the preceding clauſe: that they ſhould come to the houſe of the Lord at Jeruſalem; not that he laid his commands upon them to come, they not being his ſubjects, namely, thoſe of the ten tribes; but he hereby admoniſhed them of their duty, and gave them a kind invitation, ſignifying the doors of the temple were open for them, and they were welcome to come thither: to keep the paſſover unto the Lord God of Iſrael; to the glory of his name, who was the common Lord of them all, and whoſe command it was to keep the paſſover, and that at Jeruſalem, and no where elſe, ſee Deut. xvi. 1—6.

℣. 2. For the king had taken counſel, and his princes, and all the congregation in Jeruſalem, &c.] He and his nobles, and the great ſanhedrim or ſenate of the nation, had conſulted together: to keep the paſſover in the ſecond month; in the month Ijar, as the Targum, becauſe they could not keep it in the firſt month, as it ſhould have been kept, according to the law of God, for the reaſons following.

℣. 3. For they could not keep it at the time, &c.] In the month Niſan, as the Targum adds, on the 14th day of the month, as the law enjoined, becauſe the cleanſing of the temple was not finiſhed until the 16th day, ſee ch. xxix. 17. and beſides this, two other reaſons follow: becauſe the prieſts had not ſanctified themſelves ſufficiently; that is, a ſufficient number of them were not ſanctified, to ſlay all the paſſover-lambs the people that came to the feaſt would want: neither had the people gathered themſelves together to Jeruſalem; they had no notice of it, nor ſummons for it; and it was required that, at ſuch a time, all the males in the land ſhould appear at Jeruſalem; but this cuſtom having been long diſuſed, it required time to acquaint them of the revival of it.

℣. 4. And the thing pleaſed the king, and all the congregation.] They all unanimouſly agreed to it, and determined it ſhould be done.

℣. 5. So they eſtabliſhed a decree, to make proclamation throughout all Iſrael, &c.] Paſſed a vote, that heralds ſhould be appointed and ſent to proclaim it throughout the land, that all might know it, and none plead ignorance: from Beer-ſheba even to Dan; the one being the ſouthern and the other the northern boundary of the whole land of Iſrael: that they ſhould come to keep the paſſover unto the Lord God of Iſrael at Jeruſalem; the only proper place where it was to be kept: for they had not done it of a long time in ſuch ſort as it was written; as preſcribed in the law; thoſe of the ten tribes had not obſerved it from the time of the ſchiſm of Jeroboam, and many in the kingdom of Judah had neglected it, at leaſt had not kept it as the law required; for the phraſe which we render of a long time, rather reſpects a multitude of perſons than length of time, who had been very deficient in their obſervance of this ordinance; the Targum is, that "many had not done it in its time, in Niſan," and ſuggeſts, that it was kept twice this year, firſt in Niſan by a few, and now again in the ſecond month Ijar, and which is the ſenſe of ſome Talmudic writers [p], but has no foundation in the text.

℣. 6. So the poſts went with the letters from the king and his princes, throughout all Iſrael and Judah, &c.] Both through the kingdom of the ten tribes of Iſrael, and the kingdom of the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin: and according to the commandment of the king, ſaying; ſo they were ordered by the king to ſay, when they delivered the letters which by the king's commandment they carried; or this was the purport of them, as follows, eſpecially of thoſe that were ſent to the ten tribes: Ye children of Iſrael, turn again unto the Lord God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Iſrael; from whom they had revolted, and from whoſe worſhip they had departed, by ſetting up and ſerving the calves at Dan and Bethel: and he will return to the remnant of you that are eſcaped out of the hand of the king of Aſſyria; Pul and Tiglath-pileſer, who had both invaded their land, and the latter had taken many of their cities, and carried the inhabitants captive, 2 Kings xv. 19. 29.

℣. 7. And be not ye like your fathers, and like your brethren, which treſpaſſed againſt the Lord God of their fathers, &c.] By worſhipping the calves, and neglecting the ſervice of God in the temple at Jeruſalem; the Targum is, "which acted deceitfully with the Word of the Lord their God:" who therefore gave them up to deſolation, as ye ſee; ſome part of the land of Iſrael being already made deſolate by the kings of Aſſyria, which was very viſible.

℣. 8. Now be ye not ſtiff-necked, as your fathers were, &c.] Obſtinate and refractory, like heifers unaccuſtomed to the yoke, which draw back from it, and will not ſubmit to it: but yield yourſelves unto the Lord; be ſubject unto him, or give the hand [q] to him, as a token of ſubjection and homage, or of entering into covenant with him, promiſing for the future to ſerve and obey him: and enter into his ſanctuary, which he hath ſanctified for ever; ſet apart for worſhip and ſervice, until the Meſſiah ſhould come: and ſerve the Lord your God; there, in the temple, according to his preſcribed will; that the fierceneſs of his wrath may turn away from you; which had already broke out, in ſuffering the Aſſyrians to invade their land, and diſtreſs them.

℣. 9. For if ye turn again unto the Lord, &c.] To the fear or worſhip of the Lord, as the Targum: your brethren and your children ſhall find compaſſion before them that lead them captive, ſo that they ſhall come again into this land; who had been carried away by Tiglath-pileſer, ſee Pſ. cvi. 46. for the Lord your God is gracious and merciful; ſo he had proclaimed his name, as they muſt know, Exod. xxxiv. 6. and will not turn away his face from you; in wrath and anger; or withdraw his Shekinah from you, as the Targum; his gracious and glorious preſence: if ye return unto him; his fear and worſhip, as the ſame paraphraſe.

℣. 10. So the poſts paſſed from city to city, through the country of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, even unto Zebulun, &c.] Through all the ten tribes, not being hindered or forbid by Hoſhea king of Iſrael, who was one of the beſt of their kings, and was very willing his people ſhould go and worſhip at Jeruſalem if they thought fit; ſo that they had no excuſe to make as before, that they were forbid by their king going thither; and which it is very probable Hezekiah knew, and therefore took the freedom dom to ſend poſts throughout his kingdom: but they laughed them to ſcorn, and mocked them; the meſſengers that brought the letters, the contents of which they deſpiſed, and paid no regard to; this was the behaviour of many, and probably of the greater part, but not of all, as follows.

℣. 11. Nevertheleſs, divers of Aſher, and Manaſſeh, and of Zebulun, humbled themſelves, &c.] Confeſſed their idolatries and impieties, and expreſſed ſorrow and repentance for them, and were willing to obey the commands of God, and attend his worſhip and ordinances: and came to Jeruſalem; to keep the paſſover.

℣. 12. Alſo in Judah the hand of God was to give them one heart, &c.] To make them unanimous in this ſervice, hearty and willing to it, to a man, which was owing to the power and efficacy of divine grace: to do the commandment of the king and of the princes, by the word of the Lord: to keep the paſſover, which they did not only in obedience to their ſuperiors, and their orders, but conſidering theſe as agreeable to the word and will of God.

℣. 13. And there aſſembled at Jeruſalem much people, &c.] Out of the ſeveral tribes: to keep the feaſt of unleavened bread; the paſſover, which was eaten with unleavened bread: in the ſecond month; the month Ijar: a very great congregation; ſuch as had not been ſeen on ſuch an occaſion for many years.

℣. 14. And they aroſe, &c.] Before they ſlew and eat the paſſover: and took away the altars that were in Jeruſalem; which Ahaz had ſet up in every corner of Jeruſalem, to offer ſacrifices upon, ch. xxviii. 24. and all the altars for incenſe took they away; for as there were ſome to offer ſacrifices on, there were others to burn incenſe upon, not to the Lord, but to idols, as the Targum adds: and caſt them into the brook Kidron; having reduced them to duſt and aſhes, ſee ch. xxix. 16.

℣. 15. Then they killed the paſſover on the fourteenth day of the ſecond month, &c.] For though they could not keep it in the month in which it ſhould have been kept, for the reaſons before given, yet they kept it on the day of the month in which it was obſerved: and the prieſts and the Levites were aſhamed; of their negligence and backwardneſs to ſervice, and to fit themſelves for it, when they ſaw the people ſo forward and ready to attend to it: and they ſanctified themſelves; by waſhing their bodies and their garments: and brought in the burnt-offerings into the houſe of the Lord; to be offered up on the altar of burnt-offerings, to expiate their own ſins, and the ſins of the people; though ſome take theſe to be the paſſover-offerings; but they were not offered until the 15th day, and beſides were peace-offerings, mentioned ℣. 22. rather theſe were the daily ſacrifices.

℣. 16. And they ſtood in their place after their manner, according to the law of Moſes the man of God, &c.] The prieſts in their place, and the Levites in theirs, in which they were ordered to ſtand when they offered ſacrifice: the prieſts ſprinkled the blood, which they received of the hand of the Levites; the blood either of the burnt-offerings before-mentioned, or of the paſſover-lambs, which the Levites ſlew, and received the blood of them in baſons; and which the prieſts took of them, and ſprinkled, not on the door-poſts of houſes as in Egypt, but on the altar round about, and which none but prieſts might do, Lev. i. 5.

℣. 17. For there were many in the congregation that were not ſanctified, &c.] Or purified from uncleanneſs, contracted either by idolatry, or thro' ſuch things which, according to the ceremonial law, made them unclean, and from which they had not now time to cleanſe themſelves according to the law: therefore the Levites had the charge of the killing of the paſſovers, for every one that was not clean, to ſanctify them unto the Lord; this they did for the maſters of families, who were ceremonially unclean, who otherwiſe might have killed their paſſover-lambs themſelves, ſee Exod. xii. 6. but now the Levites did it for them, that their paſſovers might be ſanctified and conſecrated to the Lord; for as Philo the Jew ſays [r], one day in a year the whole ſacrificed, every one acted as a prieſt, and brought and ſlew his own ſacrifice, meaning at the paſſover.

℣. 18. For a multitude of the people, even many of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, Iſſachar, and Zebulun, &c.] All which were of the ten tribes, where idolatry had prevailed for a long time: had not cleanſed themſelves; from impurity contracted by idolatry and other things: yet did they eat the paſſover otherwiſe than it was written; becauſe they eat it in their uncleanneſs, which was not according to the law, that required that ſuch ſhould be clean that eat of any holy things, ſee John xviii. 28. but ſince theſe people came a great way off, and there was no deferring it to another month, the king choſe rather they ſhould be admitted to eat of it, though in their uncleanneſs: but Hezekiah prayed for them, ſaying, The good Lord pardon every one; God, who is gracious and merciful, and of his goodneſs, grace, and mercy, forgive ſuch who, though ceremonially unclean, eat of the paſſover, and eſpecially ſince they were ſincere and cordial in their ſervices; and therefore he hoped that this breach of the ceremonial law would not be laid to their charge. Goodneſs is ſuch a well-known attribute of God, that the very heathens aſcribe it to their deities; hence we read of a temple of the good God, the Gods being the givers of good things to men; Jupiter, or Jove, the ſupreme God, is ſuppoſed to be meant [s].

℣. 19. That prepareth his heart to ſeek God, the Lord God of his fathers, &c.] Who was heartily deſirous of worſhipping God, and obſerving his ordinances, which had been enjoined their fathers, and they had kept; though Aben Ezra, as Kimchi obſerves, refers this to Hezekiah, whoſe whole heart he directed or prepared to ſeek the Lord, &c. by prayer and ſupplication for every one of the ſaid perſons: though he be not cleanſed according to the purification of the ſanctuary; according to the ceremonial law, which the ſervice of the temple required; ſince, though they were attended with a ceremonial impurity, had a moral purity, and their hearts were right with God.

℣. 20. And the Lord hearkened to Hezekiah, &c.] Heard his prayer, and accepted of it, and granted what he deſired: and healed his people; that is, forgave their ſins, as Kimchi interprets it; forgiveneſs being expreſſed by healing, for which he refers to Pſ. xli. 4. to which may be added Pſ. ciii. 3. Mal. iv. 2. and which was known either by a prophet ſent to declare it, or by not puniſhing them for their offence.

℣. 21. And the children of Iſrael that were preſent at Jeruſalem, kept the feaſt of unleavened bread ſeven days days with great gladneſs, &c.] Which, according to the law of Moſes, were always to follow the paſſover, Exod. xii. 18, 19. and the Levites and the prieſts praiſed the Lord day by day, ſinging with loud inſtruments unto the Lord; or inſtruments of ſtrength [c]; ſo called not from the matter of them, or manner in which they were made, but either from the ſound of them, as our verſion, or from the ſtrength and power of God, which they ſet forth in praiſe; the Targum is, "with inſtruments of praiſe," and ſo the word is ſometimes uſed, ſee Pſ. viii. 3. compared with Matt xxi. 16. the prieſts blew with trumpets, and the Levites played on harps, pſalteries, &c. and this they did every day when the ſacrifices were offered, during the ſeven days of unleavened bread.

℣. 22. And Hezekiah ſpake comfortably to all the Levites, &c.] Or to the heart [d] of them, ſuch things as were very encouraging to them to go on in the work and worſhip of God, commending their ſinging, exhorting them to diligence in inſtructing the people, promiſing them his favour and protection: even thoſe that taught the good knowledge of the Lord; who inſtructed the people well in his word, worſhip, and ordinances; though ſome reſtrain this to their ſkill in ſinging the praiſes of God, both vocally and inſtrumentally, and their abilities and diligence in teaching others: and they did eat throughout the feaſt; or did eat the feaſt; that is, the ſacrifices of it; not the Levites only, but the king, and all the congregation: offering peace-offerings; part of which belonged to the Lord, another part to the prieſts, and a third to the offerers, on which they feaſted with their friends; and this they did throughout all the ſeven days of the feaſt: and making confeſſion to the Lord God of their fathers; confeſſing their ſins of omiſſion and commiſſion they had been guilty of; owning the goodneſs, grace, and mercy of God towards them; bleſſing and praiſing his name for the reſtoration of his worſhip and ordinances among them.

℣. 23. And the whole aſſembly took counſel to keep other ſeven days, &c.] They conſulted among themſelves, and with the king and his nobles about it, who all agreed to it: and they kept other ſeven days with gladneſs; not altogether in the ſame manner they had kept the preceding ſeven days; they did not ſlay and eat paſſover-lambs, nor did they eat unleavened bread, but offered peace-offerings, and feaſted upon them; and ſung the praiſes of God, and attended to the inſtructions of the prieſts and Levites, being in a very agreeable frame of mind for religious exerciſes.

℣. 24. For Hezekiah king of Judah did give to the congregation 1000 bullocks, and 7000 ſheep, &c.] He ſeparated them, as Kimchi interprets it, from his own herds and flocks; or out of his own ſubſtance, at his own expence purchaſed them; or lifted them up, as the word ſignifies, as heave-offerings to the Lord; and gave them to the people for thank-offerings to feaſt upon: and the princes gave to the congregation 1000 bullocks, and 10,000 ſheep; for the ſame purpoſes, following the king's example: and a great number of prieſts ſanctified themſelves; beſides thoſe who had before, that they might be fit to offer this great number of ſacrifices.

℣. 25. And all the congregation of Judah with the prieſts and Levites, &c.] The people that were gathered together out of the ſeveral cities of Judah, which no doubt was the largeſt congregation with whom the prieſts and Levites are joined, as being of that kingdom, and dwellers in Jeruſalem, where their office lay: and all the congregation that came out of Iſrael; out of the ten tribes, particularly Ephraim, Manaſſeh, Iſſachar, and Zebulun, ℣. 18. and the ſtrangers that came out of the land of Iſrael, and that dwelt in Judah, rejoiced; the proſelytes, even ſuch as were circumciſed, who eat of the paſſover, and kept the feaſt of unleavened bread, as well as the other days of rejoicing, the former of which none might partake of, but circumciſed perſons; and it can hardly be thought that any other would come out of Iſrael on ſuch an occaſion, ſee Exod. xii. 48.

℣. 26. So there was great joy in Jeruſalem, &c.] Not merely carnal, expreſſed in eating and drinking, and making merry with one another, but ſpiritual, on account of the reſtoration of temple-ſervice, and the feaſts of the Lord: for ſince the time of Solomon the ſon of David, king of Iſrael, there was not the like in Jeruſalem; not the like joy, ſo ſpiritual, ſincere, and hearty; nor ſuch a number of perſons rejoicing together on ſuch an occaſion; nor for ſo many days together, which were as many as at the dedication of the temple by Solomon.

℣. 27. Then the prieſts the Levites aroſe, &c.] The prieſts who were of the tribe of Levi; for there were ſome in Iſrael that were not, but were made of any of the people, as in the times of Jeroboam; though ſome ſupply the copulative and; ſo the Targum: and bleſſed the people; which was the proper work and buſineſs of the prieſts to do; tho' whilſt they were bleſſing, the Levites might be ſinging: and their voice was heard; meaning not by the people, though undoubtedly it was, but by the Lord; the Targum is, "their prayer was heard or received;" for the bleſſing was delivered in a petitionary way, Numb. vi. 24, 25, 26. and was no other than a requeſt that God would bleſs them, which he did: and their prayer came up to his holy dwelling-place, even unto heaven; ſee Pſ. iii. 4. and xviii. 6. by what means it was known their prayer was heard and accepted cannot be ſaid; there might be ſome viſible token of it, as the people were diſmiſſed and departed.

CHAP. XXXI.

THIS chapter begins with the deſtruction of idolatrous worſhip, the appointment of the courſes of the prieſts and Levites, and the royal bounty for ſacrifices, ℣. 1, 2, 3. next follows the order Hezekiah gave, that the people at Jeruſalem, and throughout the land, ſhould make the proper proviſion for the prieſts and Levites, as the law directed; and which was chearfully complied with, and the firſt-fruits and tithes were brought in, in great abundance, inſomuch that there was enough, and plenty left, ℣. 4—10. wherefore chambers were prepared in the temple to lay it up in, and perſons appointed to be the overſeers of it, and to diſtribute it faithfully to their brethren and their families, to ſmall and great, ℣. 11—19. and the chapter is cloſe din praiſe of the works of Hezekiah, and the ſucceſs that attended him, ℣. 20, 21.

℣. 1. Now when all this was finiſhed, &c.] The temple temple cleanſed, the prieſts and Levites ſanctified, the paſſover and feaſt of unleavened bread obſerved, and other ſeven days of rejoicing kept: all Iſrael that were preſent, went out to the cities of Judah, and brake the images in pieces, and cut down the groves, and threw down the high places and the altars out of all Judah and Benjamin; which had been erected by Ahaz, ch. xxviii. 2. 25. at or about this time alſo the brazen ſerpent was broke to pieces, 2 Kings xviii. 4. in Ephraim alſo and Manaſſeh, until they had utterly deſtroyed them all; which muſt be underſtood of ſuch cities in thoſe tribes, that had been taken in former times by the kings of Judah from the kings of Iſrael; or ſuch as were now in the hands of the Aſſyrians, who might not concern themſelves in matters of religion; or this might be done at the connivance of Hoſhea king of Iſrael, who had no regard to any other idolatry than the worſhip of the calves; and beſides, having met with trouble from the Aſſyrians, and fearing more, might be willing to have his kingdom cleared of idolatry, in hope the divine diſpleaſure would be removed: then all the children of Iſrael returned every man to his poſſeſſion into their own cities; and not till then, when all monuments of idolatry were removed.

℣. 2. And Hezekiah appointed the courſes of the prieſts, and the Levites after their courſes, &c.] As they were fixed by David, and were in the times of Jehoſhaphat, and had been ſince interrupted, and which Hezekiah now reſtored, and placed them in their regular order: every man according to his ſervice, the prieſts and Levites for burnt-offerings, and for peace-offerings, to miniſter and to give thanks, and to praiſe in the gates of the tents of the Lord; or camp of the Lord, where they were poſted, and lay as an hoſt encamped, to keep the watch of the houſe of the Lord; the prieſts, they were appointed to offer the ſacrifices of every ſort; the Levites to miniſter to them in what they needed and required of them, and others of them to be ſingers in time of ſervice, and others to be porters at the gate.

℣. 3. He appointed alſo the king's portion of his ſubſtance, &c.] Out of his own treaſury, of his royal bounty, over and above what was uſual for kings to give for their own ſacrifices, the treaſury of the temple being exhauſted, and the people being brought into low circumſtances in the laſt reign: for the burnt-offerings, to wit, for the morning and evening burnt-offerings; the daily ſacrifice offered morning and evening, which had been neglected, but now revived: and the burnt-offerings for the ſabbaths, and for the new moons, and for the ſet feaſts; when beſide the daily ſacrifice there were additional ones: as it is written in the law of the Lord; in Numb. xxviii. 9—31. and xxix. 1—40.

℣. 4. Moreover, he commanded the people that dwelt in Jeruſalem, to give the portion of the prieſts and the Levites, &c.] What was aſſigned unto them by the law of God by tithes, firſt-fruits, &c. that they might be encouraged in the law of the Lord; in the ſtudy of it; that they might gain greater knowledge of it themſelves, and be better able to inſtruct the people, which of late had been much neglected; and that they might be more at leiſure for ſuch ſervice, and be free from all worldly buſineſs, care, and diſtraction of mind, was the deſign of this edict.

℣. 5. And as ſoon as the commandment came abroad, &c.] Not only was publiſhed in the city of Jeruſalem, but the report of it, or rather that itſelf was ſpread throughout the cities of Judah: the children of Iſrael brought in abundance the firſt-fruits of corn, wine, and oil, and honey; the three firſt of theſe are expreſſed in the law, Deut. xviii. 4. but not honey; wherefore the Targum here, and the Jewiſh writers in general, interpret it of the Dubſa of the palm-tree, as they call it, the fruit and liquor of that, which is of a ſweet taſte, and which the Scenite Arabs called Dabuſa, as Pliny [w] from Juba relates; for ſo it ſhould be read, and not Dabulan or Dablan, as in ſome copies: but though honey was forbid to be uſed in ſacrifice, it was not forbidden to be eaten; and as the land of Judea abounded with honey, properly ſo called, the prieſts might have the firſt-fruits of that as of other liquors; ſee the note on Deut. viii. 8. and of all the increaſe of the field; of the trees of it, vines, fig-trees, pomegranates, &c. as Kimchi: and the tithe of all things; even of herbs, as the ſame writer, and ſo the Talmud [x], which were free from tithes by the law, ſee Matt. xxiii. 23. brought they in abundantly; even of all that their vineyards, olive-yards, and fields produced.

℣. 6. And concerning the children of Iſrael and Judah, that dwelt in the cities of Judah, &c.] As for the ſupplement concerning, I ſee no need of it; the ſenſe is, that when the king's edict was known by the inhabitants of the cities in the country, as well as at Jeruſalem: they alſo brought in the tithes of oxen, and ſheep; according to the law in Lev. xxvii. 32. and the tithe of holy things, which were conſecrated unto the Lord their God; which Jarchi underſtands of the ſecond tithe the Levites were to give to the prieſts; but Kimchi of things conſecrated to ſacred uſes, and no longer for their own, and which were even free from tithing: and laid them by heaps; heaps upon heaps, ſuch large quantities were brought in.

℣. 7. In the third month they began to lay the foundation of the heaps, &c.] The month Sivan, as the Targum, in which month was the feaſt of Pentecoſt, called the feaſt of the harveſt, Exod. xxiii. 16. for then barley-harveſt was ended, and wheat-harveſt began, and the firſt fruits were brought: and finiſhed them in the ſeventh month; the month Tiſri, as the Targum, in which was the feaſt of tabernacles, ſometimes called the feaſt of in-gathering, of the fruits of the earth, the wine, oil, &c. and ſo a proper time for bringing the tithes of all.

℣. 8. And when Hezekiah and the princes came and ſaw the heaps, &c.] Of the tithes and firſt-fruits; they bleſſed the Lord; for the great increaſe of the fruits of the earth, and for making the people ſo willing to bring in the dues to the prieſts and Levites: and his people Iſrael; wiſhed all happineſs and proſperity to them, being found in the way of their duty.

℣. 9. Then Hezekiah queſtioned with the prieſts and the Levites concerning the heaps.] How they came to be ſo large, or why they let them lie where they did.

℣. 10. And Azariah the chief prieſt of the houſe of Zadok, anſwered him, &c.] Who was the high-prieſt of the family of Eleazar, in the line of Zadok, made high-prieſt in Solomon's time, when Abiathar thar was thruſt out; Jarchi takes him to be the ſame Azariah that was in the days of Uzziah, ch. xxvi. 17. and ſaid, Since the people began to bring the offerings into the houſe of the Lord, we have had enough to eat, and have left plenty; which were now four months ſince; and the prieſts and Levites, and their families, had partaken of them, and eat to ſatiety, and yet there was great plenty remaining: for the Lord hath bleſſed his people; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord has bleſſed them," given them large crops this year, and a ready willing mind to bring in what is due for the ſervice of the temple: and that which is left, is this great ſtore; the heaps the king and princes ſaw, and enquired about; or what is left is for the great multitude of the prieſts and Levites, and their families, both at Jeruſalem, and in the cities in the country; ſo Kimchi interprets it.

℣. 11. Then Hezekiah commanded to prepare chambers in the houſe of the Lord, &c.] Either to build new ones, or fit up thoſe that were built: and they prepared them; got them ready to lay up the ſtores in.

℣. 12. And brought in the offerings, and the tithes, and the dedicate things faithfully, &c.] Kept nothing back for their own private uſe, but faithfully delivered in and laid up the whole that was brought which remained; this was done by the prieſts and Levites, in whoſe hands and care they were: over which Cononiah the Levite was ruler, and Shimei his brother was the next; theſe two had the charge and care of the whole, the one as deputy to the other.

℣. 13. And Jehiel, and Azaziah, and Nahath, and Aſhahel, and Jerimoth, and Jozabad, and Eliel, and Iſmachiah, and Mahath, and Benaiah, were overſeers under the hand of Cononiah, and Shimei his brother, &c.] Theſe ten were aſſiſtants to the other two, were under them, and at their command, and were to be ready at hand to do what they ſhould order and direct them: at the commandment of Hezekiah the king, and Azariah the ruler of the houſe of God; theſe were fixed in their poſt under the other two by the king and the high-prieſt, to whom alſo the other two were accountable.

℣. 14. And Kore the ſon of Imnah the Levite, the porter towards the eaſt, &c.] At the eaſt-gate of the temple; ſee 1 Chron. xxvi. 17. was over the free-will offerings of God to diſtribute the oblations of the Lord; to the prieſts and Levites, for whoſe uſe they were; or to deliver out the fine flour, oil, and wine, and frankincenſe, for the meat and drink-offerings: and the moſt holy things; which belonged to the prieſts only to eat of, as the remainder of the meat-offerings, the ſin and treſpaſs-offerings, and the ſhew-bread.

℣. 15. And next to him were Eden and Minjamin, and Jeſhua, and Shemaiah, Amariah, and Shecaniah, &c.] As Kore was the principal, and his buſineſs lay chiefly with the prieſts in the temple, and in Jeruſalem, theſe men under him were employed in diſtributing to the prieſts, in the cities of the prieſts; in the ſeveral parts of the country: in their ſet office; or faithfully: to give to their brethren by courſes, as well to the great as to the ſmall; to communicate of the ſtores under their hands, according to their ſeveral courſes, both prieſts and Levites, and to all in their families, ſmall and great.

℣. 16. Beſide their genealogy of males, from three years old and upwards, &c.] Their office was not only to give to the prieſts, but to thoſe of their males in their genealogy, who were three years old and upwards; for under that age, according to Kimchi, they were not fit to come into the temple; nor have they knowledge to keep what is put into their hands; nor fit to handle offerings, leſt they ſhould defile them; but at that age they might be taught how to hold them, and be uſed to it; but as for females, he ſays, they were not admitted at any age: even unto every one that entereth into the houſe of the Lord; of the ſaid age, and in the genealogy and regiſter of the prieſts: his daily portion for their ſervice in their charges, according to their courſes; food for every day, in conſideration of their ſervice in their ſeveral wards, according to their courſes in turn.

℣. 17. Both to the genealogy of the prieſts by the houſe of their fathers, &c.] As to the prieſts regiſtered according to their families from the age before obſerved, a portion was given: ſo to the Levites from twenty years old and upward, in their charges by their courſes; for though originally they were not admitted into the tabernacle till twenty-five years of age, nor to officiate till thirty, but in David's time they were allowed at twenty years of age and upwards, 1 Chron. xxiii. 24.

℣. 18. And to the genealogy of all their little ones, their wives, and their ſons, and their daughters, through all the congregation, &c.] Theſe were all genealogized and regiſtered, wives and children, ſons and daughters, whether ſmall or grown up; and a portion was diſtributed to them according to their number, greater or leſſer: for in their ſet office they ſanctified themſelves in holineſs; which is to be underſtood either of the overſeers, who, in their ſet office, faithfully diſtributed the holy things to the perſons before deſcribed; or elſe to the prieſts and Levites, to whom, and to whoſe families, the diſtribution was made, becauſe they wholly devoted themſelves to the holy ſervice of God.

℣. 19. Alſo of the ſons of Aaron the prieſts, which were in the fields of the ſuburbs of their cities, in every ſeveral city, &c.] Which were allowed to them out of the ſeveral tribes, and where they dwelt, when it was not the turn of their courſe to officiate in the temple; now to theſe, as well as to thoſe in Jeruſalem, a portion was diſtributed for the ſupport of them and their families: the men that were expreſſed by name; before-mentioned, ℣. 13. though ſome underſtand it of ſuch as were nominated and appointed by them, and to act under them in the country: to give portions to all the males among the prieſts, and to all that were reckoned by genealogies, among the Levites; as before declared.

℣. 20. And thus did Hezekiah throughout all Judah, &c.] Settled the courſes of the prieſts and Levites, and made a proviſion for them and their families: and wrought that which was good and right and truth before the Lord his God; or did that which was truly right and good, according to the law and will of God, in the ſincerity and uprightneſs of his ſoul, and as in the preſence of the omniſcient God, he approving and accepting it for Chriſt's ſake.

℣. 21. And in every work that he began in the ſervice of the houſe of God, &c.] In cleanſing the temple, providing ſacrifices, placing the prieſts and Levites in order, taking care of the maintenance of them, &c. and in the law and in the commandments; in the obſervation of all the laws, ſtatutes, and judgments of God, moral, ceremonial, and judicial: to ſeek his God; and ſerve and worſhip him, and therein his honour and glory: he did it with all his heart; in the moſt cordial, ſincere, ſincere, and upright manner: and proſpered; he ſucceeded in all he undertook, God being with him, and bleſſing him in his civil and religious concerns.

CHAP. XXXII.

THIS chapter relates Sennacherib's invaſion of the land of Judah, the preparations Hezekiah made to reſiſt him, and the encouragement he gave his people to truſt in the Lord, ℣. 1—8. the meſſages and letters Sennacherib ſent to Hezekiah and his ſubjects, full of arrogance and blaſphemy, to ſolicit them to deliver up Jeruſalem to him, ℣. 9—19. the deſtruction of his army by an angel, and the deliverance of the Jews at the prayers of Hezekiah and Iſaiah, ℣. 20—23. the ſin Hezekiah fell into after this, and his recovery from a fit of illneſs; but upon his humiliation for it, wrath was averted, ℣. 24, 25, 26. and the chapter is concluded with an account of his honours, riches, and exploits, and of his death and burial, ℣. 27—33.

℣. 1. After theſe things, and the eſtabliſhment thereof, &c.] What are recorded in the preceding chapters, when matters were well ſettled, eſpecially with reſpect to religion and temple-ſervice, and when Hezekiah was well eſtabliſhed in the throne of his kingdom, had fought with and defeated the Philiſtines, and caſt off the Aſſyrian yoke, and was in very proſperous circumſtances; for it was in the fourteenth year of his reign that what follows was done: Sennacherib king of Aſſyria came and entred into Judah, and encamped againſt the fenced cities, and thought to win them for himſelf; or to break them, or into them; or through them [y], to break down the walls to take them, and join them to himſelf, as the Targum, and he did take them, ſee 2 Kings xviii. 13.

℣. 2. And when Hezekiah ſaw that Sennacherib was come, &c.] Into the land of Judah, which he perceived and underſtood by reports brought to him: and that he was purpoſed to fight againſt Jeruſalem; to beſiege it and take it, if poſſible; this he ſaw was his deſign, by taking the fenced cities in his way, and coming forward with his forces.

℣. 3. He took counſel with his princes, and his mighty men, &c.] With his nobles, and the officers of his army, what ſteps ſhould be taken to reſiſt, retard, and diſtreſs the enemy, and among the reſt what follows was propoſed: to ſtop the waters of the fountains which were without the city [z]; that ſo the Aſſyrian army would find it difficult to ſupply themſelves with water, which was an article of great importance: and they did help him; to ſtop the fountains, not only with their advice how to do it, but with their men, their ſervants, who aſſiſted thoſe that Hezekiah employed in this work.

℣. 4. So there was gathered much people together, &c.] At the inſtance of Hezekiah, his nobles and officers: who ſtopt all the fountains; perhaps by laying planks over them, and earth upon them, ſo that it could not be diſcerned there were any fountains there: and the brook that ran through the midſt of the land; which, according to Kimchi was Gihon, ℣. 30. which was near Jeruſalem; the ſtream of this very probably they turned into channels under-ground, whereby it was brought into the city into reſervoirs there provided, that that might have a ſupply during the ſiege, whilſt the enemy was diſtreſſed for want of it: ſaying, Why ſhould the kings of Aſſyria come and find much water? by which means they would be able to carry on the ſiege to a great length, when otherwiſe they would be obliged to raiſe it quickly: mention is made of kings of Aſſyria, though there was but one, with whom there might be petty kings, or tributary ones; and beſides, as he boaſted, his princes were altogether kings, Iſ. x. 8.

℣. 5. Alſo he ſtrengthened himſelf, &c.] In the Lord his God, and fortified his city, and put it in the beſt manner of defence he could: and built up all the wall that was broken; which was broken from the gate of Ephraim to the corner gate by Joaſh king of Iſrael; and though it might have been repaired by Uzziah, it might again be broken down in the times of Ahaz by Pekah king of Iſrael, or ſome other enemy, ſee ch. xxv. 23. and xxvi. 9. and xxviii. 6, 7. and raiſed it up to the towers; from the corner-tower, to the tower of the gate of Ephraim, which, as before obſerved, had been broken down: and another wall without; a ſecond wall, either all around the city, or at ſuch a part of it which was weakeſt; Joſephus [a] ſays the city of Jeruſalem had three walls about it: and repaired Millo in the city of David; a wall on the north ſide of the city: and made darts and ſhields in abundance; darts to caſt from the walls of the city, to annoy the enemy with, and ſhields to defend them from thoſe of the enemy.

℣. 6. And he ſet captains of war over the people, &c.] To teach them the exerciſes of war, to lead them on againſt the enemy, to direct them where to ſtand, and what to do in defence of the city: and gathered them together to him in the ſtreet of the gate of the city; the ſtreet which led to the gate, and was large and commodious to aſſemble the people in: and ſpake comfortably to them; to animate and encourage them to hold out the ſiege, and do all they could to repel the enemy: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 7. Be ſtrong and couragious, &c.] Be of good heart and ſpirit, and quit yourſelves like men: be not afraid, nor diſmayed for the king of Aſſyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him; which was very large; for no leſs than 185,000 were ſlain of them by an angel in one night, 2 Kings xix. 35. for there be more with us than with him; though not in number, yet in power and might; and if angels are meant, they are more in number; but it ſeems by what follows, that Hezekiah had only the Lord his God in his thoughts and view.

℣. 8. With him is an arm of fleſh, &c.] Only weak, frail, mortal men, not at all to be feared; nothing in compariſon of the Lord: but with us is the Lord our God, to help us, and to fight our battles; who is the Lord God Almighty, who has the hoſt of heaven at his command, and with whom all the inhabitants of the earth are as nothing; the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord our God is for us to help us, and fight our battles:" and the people reſted themſelves upon the words of Hezekiah king of Judah; not upon his bare word, but on what was contained in them, on the ſtrength and power of the the Lord God he assured them was on their side; they believed what he said to be true, and trusted in the Lord that he would save them.

℣. 9. After this did Sennacherib king of Assyria send his servants to Jerusalem, &c.] Who are mentioned by name, 2 Kings xviii. 17. this was after Hezekiah had given him a large quantity of silver and gold to depart, and he did depart from him, 2 Kings xviii. 14, 15, 16. but he himself laid siege against Lachish, and all his power with him; one of the cities of Judah, see Is. xxxvi. 2. from hence he dispatched them unto Hezekiah king of Judah, and unto all Judah that were at Jerusalem; who had retired thither for safety, upon the invasion of their country by the king of Assyria.

℣. 10. Thus saith Sennacherib king of Assyria, Whereon do ye trust? &c.] On what power in heaven or on earth? that ye abide in the siege in Jerusalem; hold out against the siege of it, and don't deliver it up.

℣. 11. Doth not Hezekiah persuade you to give over yourselves to die by famine, and by thirst, &c.] suggesting that would be their case if they did not surrender: saying, The Lord our God shall deliver us out of the hand of the king of Assyria? see the note on Is. xxxvi. 15.

℣. 12. Hath not the same Hezekiah taken away his high places, &c.] For the sense of this and the three following verses, see the notes on Is. xxxvi. 17. 18, 19, 20.

℣. 16. And his servants spake yet more against the Lord God, and against his servant Hezekiah.] Than what is here recorded, as may be read in 2 Kings xviii. and xix. Is. xxxvi.

℣. 17. He wrote also letters to rail on the Lord God of Israel, &c.] See 2 Kings xix. 9—14. Is. xxxvii. 9—14.

℣. 18. Then they cried with a loud voice in the Jews speech, unto the people of Jerusalem that were on the wall, &c.] The messengers of Sennacherib, particularly Rabshekah the chief speaker; though they were desired to speak in the Syrian language, Is. xxxvi. 11. 13. but this they did to affright them, and to trouble them, that they might take the city; to throw them into terror and confusion, that they might prevail upon them to deliver up the city to them.

℣. 19. And they spake against the God of Jerusalem, &c.] The only living and true God, whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem professed to be their God, and who was worshipped by them in the temple there: as against the gods of the people of the earth, which were the work of the hands of man; they made no difference between the one and the other, but spoke as freely and as contemptibly of the one as of the other, see Is. xxxvi. 19, 20. and xxxvii. 10—13.

℣. 20. And for this cause Hezekiah the king, and the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz, prayed and cried to heaven.] To God in heaven; of the prayer of Hezekiah on this account, see Is. xxxvii. 15—20. and the notes there; and though we read not of the prayer of Isaiah, no doubt he made one, as Hezekiah desired, and since he received a message from the Lord, which he sent to Hezekiah, Is. xxxviii. 4. 21.

℣. 21. And the Lord sent an angel, &c.] The Targum is, "the Word of the Lord sent Gabriel;" Josephus [a] takes this angel, or messenger sent of God, to be the pestilence; and others suppose it to be a hot pestilential wind, common in the eastern countries, called Samiel, or the poison-wind, by which multitudes are sometimes destroyed at once; of which Thevenot and other travellers make mention, see the note on Job xxvii. 21. and on Ps. xci. 6. but be it as it may, it was sent of God, was under his direction, and by his power and providence did the execution according to his prediction: which cut off all the mighty men of valour, and the leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria; the generals and officers of his army, with the common soldiers, to the number of 185,000, Is. xxxvii. 36. among these, no doubt, were the three generals sent with railing letters to Hezekiah, particularly Rabshakeh, see the note on Is. xxxvii. 36. so he returned with shame of face to his own land; Assyria, particularly to Niniveh, the metropolis of it, Is. xxxvii. 37. and when he was come into the house of his God; the temple of his idol, whose name was Nisroch: they that came forth of his own bowels, slew him there with the sword; his sons Adramelech and Sharezer, Is. xxxvii. 38.

℣. 22. Thus the Lord saved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the hand of Sennacherib the king of Assyria, &c.] As most clearly appeared; for no stroke was struck but by him: and from the hand of all other; the Arabic version adds, "who were round about them;" who by this defeat were deterred from attacking them: and guided them on every side; and guarded them all around, as a shepherd leads his flock, where they may be secure from all dangers.

℣. 23. And many brought gifts unto the Lord to Jerusalem, &c.] Even out of neighbouring nations, things which they devoted to the service of God in the temple, being convinced that this wonderful deliverance was wrought by the Lord God of Israel, and by him only: and presents to Hezekiah king of Judah; being desirous of living in friendship with him, who appeared to be the favourite of the God of heaven: so that he was magnified in the sight of all nations from thenceforth; from the time of the destruction of the Assyrian army in such a wonderful manner, he was highly esteemed, and his name and fame spread abroad among all the neighbouring nations round about him.

℣. 24. In those days Hezekiah was sick, &c.] Of which sickness, and of his prayer, and of the sign given him, see Is. xxxviii. and the notes there.

℣. 25. But Hezekiah rendered not again according to the benefit done unto him, &c.] Both in the deliverance of him and his people from the king of Assyria, and the recovery of him from his sickness: for his heart was lifted up; with pride, because of the wonderful defeat of the Assyrian army in his favour, the miracle wrought at his recovery from illness, the riches and honour conferred upon him, the presents brought him from his neighbours, and especially the embassy of the king of Babylon to him: therefore there was wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jerusalem; who, in imitation of him, fell into the same sin of pride, with many others; and therefore both he and they were threatened with some tokens of the divine displeasure.

℣. 26. Notwithstanding, Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart, both he and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, &c.] In what manner is not said; perhaps by putting on sackcloth, and by fasting and prayer, and making confession of sin, and declaring repentance for it; so that the wrath of of the Lord came not upon them in the days of Hezekiah; but in the days of his ſon's ſons, Iſ. xxxix. 7, 8.

℣. 27. And Hezekiah had exceeding much riches, &c.] Increaſed by the ſpoil of the Aſſyrian camp, and the preſents ſent him after that by neighbouring nations, ℣. 21. 23. and honour; both from his ſubjects, and the nations around him: and he made himſelf treaſuries for ſilver, and for gold, and for precious ſtones, and for ſpices, and for ſhields, and for all manner of pleaſant jewels; which were houſes both for rich and curious things, and for armour, he ſhewed to the ambaſſadors of Babylon, Iſ xxxix. 2. ſee the note there.

℣. 28. Store-houſes alſo for the increaſe of corn, and wine, and oil, &c.] The produce of his fields, vineyards, and olive-yards, ſuch as David had, with perſons over them, ſee 1 Chron. xxvii. 25—28. and ſtalls for all manner of beaſts; as oxen, horſes, camels, and aſſes, ſee ch, ix. 25. and cotes for flocks; folds for ſheep.

℣. 29. Moreover, he provided him cities, &c.] Where he had the above ſtorehouſes and ſtalls, and convenient dwellings for thoſe that looked after them, and were over his cattle, ſmall and great, as follows; the Vulgate Latin verſion reads ſix cities in ſome copies [b]: and poſſeſſions of flocks and herds in abundance; in which the riches of men, and even of kings lay in thoſe times: for God had given him ſubſtance very much; for all was owing to his diſpoſing providence, let it come which way it might.

℣. 30. This ſame Hezekiah alſo ſtopped the upper water-courſe of Gihon, &c.] Which Procopius Gazæus ſays was the ſame with Siloam, and which it ſeems had two ſtreams, and this was the upper one; Mr. Maundrel ſays [c], the pool of Gihon "lies about two furlongs without Bethlehem-gate weſtward; it is a ſtately pool, 106 paces long, and 67 broad, and lined with wall and plaſter, and was, when we were there, well ſtored with water:" and brought it ſtrait down to the weſt ſide of the city of David; through canals under the plain of the city of David; as the Targum, by a ſubterraneous paſſage; and Siloam, as Dr. Lightfoot [d] obſerves from Joſephus, was behind the weſt wall, not far from the corner that pointed toward the ſouth-weſt: and Hezekiah proſpered in all his works; natural, civil, and religious, ſee ch. xxxi. 21.

℣. 31. Howbeit, in the buſineſs of the embaſſadors of the princes of Babylon, who ſent unto him to enquire of the wonder that was done in the land, &c.] Not to ſee the two tables of ſtone which were in the ark, with the other two that were broken becauſe of the ſin of the calf, as the Targum; nor to aſk about the deſtruction of the Aſſyrian army, and the manner of it, as Grotius; but to be informed of the miracle of the ſun's going back ten degrees, when Hezekiah was recovered from his ſickneſs; the Chaldeans being a people much given to aſtrology, and curious in their obſervations of that kind: God left him to try him; by ſhewing him all his treaſures: that he might know all that was in his heart; not that God might know, who knows all things, unleſs ſpoken of him after the manner of men; but rather that Hezekiah might know the pride lurking in his heart, and other ſins which eſcaped his notice, Jer. xvii. 9. or that it might be known by others; that the children of men might know it, as Kimchi; and take warning by it, and obſerve the frailty and infirmity of the beſt of men.

℣. 32. Now the reſt of the acts of Hezekiah, and his goodneſs, &c.] His acts of piety and liberality: behold, they are written in the viſion of Iſaiah the prophet, the ſon of Amoz; in the prophecy of Iſaiah, ch. xxxvi 37, 38. 39. whoſe book is called the viſion of Iſaiah, ch. i. 1. and in the book of the kings of Judah and Iſrael; in the 2 Kings xviii. xix. xx.

℣. 33. And Hezekiah ſlept with his fathers, &c.] Died as they did: and they buried him in the chief of the ſepulchres of the ſons of David; in the most honourable and principal of them; there are ſtill to be ſeen, on the north of Jeruſalem, ſome grotto's, called the ſepulchres of the kings, though it is certain none of the kings of Iſrael or Judah were buried there; unleſs it may be thought, as Mr. Maundrel [e] conjectures, that Hezekiah was here interred, and that theſe are the ſepulchres of the ſons of David here mentioned; however, he obſerves, whoever was buried here, this is certain, that the place itſelf diſcovers ſo great an expence both of labour and treaſure, that we may well ſuppoſe it to be the work of kings: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jeruſalem did him honour at his death; by attending his funeral in great numbers, by burning ſpices for him, and by mourning for him many days: and Manaſſeh his ſon reigned in his ſtead; of whom a further account is given in the next chapter.

CHAP. XXXIII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the reign of Manaſſeh, of his idolatries and impieties, ℣. 1—10. of his captivity, humiliation, repentance, and reformation, ℣. 11—17 of his laſt end, death, and burial, ℣. 18, 19, 20. and of the wicked reign of Amon his ſon, and of his death by his ſervants, ℣. 21—25.

℣. 1. Manaſſeh was twelve years old, &c] From hence to the end of ℣. 9. the ſame things are recorded, almoſt word for word, as in 2 Kings xxi. 1—9. ſee the notes there.

℣. 10. And the Lord ſpake to Manaſſeh, and to his people, &c.] By his ſervants the prophets, ſee 2 Kings xxi. 10—15. where what was ſaid to them is recorded: but they would not hearken; to what was ſaid, to reproofs, admonitions, and exhortations to repent and reform.

℣. 11. Wherefore the Lord brought upon them the captains of the hoſt of the king of Aſſyria, &c.] Who was Eſarhaddon, the ſon and ſucceſſor of Sennacherib; this, according to the Jewiſh chronology [f], was in the twenty-ſecond year of Manaſſeh's reign: which took Manaſſeh among the thorns; in a thicket of briars and thorns, where, upon his defeat, he had hid himſelf; a fit emblem of the afflictions flictions and troubles his ſins brought him into: and bound him with fetters; hands and feet; with chains of braſs, as the Targum, ſuch as Zedekiah was bound with, 2 Kings xxv. 7. not chains of gold, with which Mark Antony bound a king of Armenia, for the ſake of honour [g]: and carried him to Babylon; for now the king of Aſſyria was become maſter of that city, and added it to his monarchy, and made it the ſeat of his reſidence; at leaſt ſometimes that and ſometimes Niniveh, Merodach-baladan being dead, or conquered; though, according to Suidas [h], it was he that took Manaſſeh; and by an Arab writer [i], he is ſaid to be carried to Niniveh.

℣. 12. And when he was in affliction, &c.] In priſon, however in fetters; according to the Targum, the Chaldæans made an inſtrument of braſs, with holes in it, and put him in it, and fire about it, ſomething like the brazen bull of Perillus; and the above Arabian writer [k] calls it a tower of braſs: he beſought the Lord his God; by prayer and ſupplication: and humbled himſelf greatly before the Lord God of his fathers; confeſſing his ſins, expreſſing great ſorrow and repentance for them.

℣. 13. And prayed unto him, &c.] To have mercy on him, and forgive him his ſins: and he was entreated of him, and heard his ſupplication; and granted his requeſt, ſhewed favour to him, and forgave him his ſins: and brought him again to Jeruſalem into his kingdom; ſo wrought upon the heart of the king of Aſſyria, as to give him his liberty, and reſtore him to his dominions; it is very probable his captivity was not long; for, being ſoon brought by his affliction to a ſenſe and confeſſion of his ſins, by the over-ruling providence of God, he was quickly releaſed: then Manaſſeh knew that the Lord he was God; and not the idols he had ſerved; that he was a holy God, and hated ſin, and a juſt God in afflicting him for it, and gracious and merciful in forgiving his ſins, and bringing him out of his troubles.

℣. 14. Now after this, he built a wall without the city of David, &c.] Which perhaps had been broken down by the Aſſyrian army, when it came and took him; Vitringa [l] thinks this is the wall of the pool of Siloah, Neh. iii. 15. which ſeems to be the firſt and oldeſt wall as Joſephus [m]; for that turning to the north bent towards the pool of Siloam; an Arabic writer [n] calls it the ſouthern wall: on the weſt ſide of Gihon; on the weſt ſide of the city towards Gihon; for that was to the weſt of it, ch. xxxii. 10. in the valley, even to the entring in at the fiſh-gate; through which the fiſh were brought from Joppa, and where, according to the Targum, they were ſold: and compaſſed about Ophel; the eaſtern part of mount Zion; ſome ſay it was the holy of holies, ch. xxvii. 3. and raiſed it up a very great height; built the wall very high there: and put captains of war in all the fenced cities of Judah; this he did to put his kingdom in a poſture of defence, ſhould it be attacked by the Aſſyrian army again.

℣. 15. And he took away the ſtrange gods, and the idol out of the houſe of the Lord, &c.] Which he had ſet there, ℣. 7. and all the altars that he had built in the mount of the houſe of the Lord, and in Jeruſalem; ſee ℣. 4. 5. and caſt them out of the city; perhaps into the brook Kidron; all this he did to ſhew the ſincerity of his repentance for his idolatry, and his abhorrence of it.

℣. 16. And he repaired the altar of the Lord, &c.] Which was fallen to ruin, being neglected and diſuſed in his times of idolatry: or, according to the Keri, or marginal reading, and ſo the Targum, he built it; which perhaps he had before pulled down and deſtroyed: and ſacrificed thereon peace-offerings and thank-offerings; to the Lord, for bringing him out of captivity, and reſtoring him to his kingdom; and eſpecially for converting him from his idolatries, giving him repentance for them, and forgiveneſs of ſins: and commanded Judah to ſerve the Lord God of Iſrael; and him only; another inſtance of the truth of his repentance, in endeavouring to reform thoſe whom he had miſled, and reſtore the pure worſhip of God among them, and bring them back to that.

℣. 17. Nevertheleſs, the people did ſacrifice ſtill in the high places, &c.] Not in thoſe that were built for idols, at leaſt did not ſacrifice to them; for it follows: yet unto the Lord their God only; the Targum is, "to the name of the Word of the Lord their God."

℣. 18. Now the reſt of the acts of Manaſſeh, &c.] Good and bad, what were done by him both before and after his converſion: and his prayer unto his God; which it ſeems was taken and recorded, but now loſt; for as for that which is among the apocryphal writings, there is no reaſon to believe it to be his, though it is thought to be ſo by many [o]: and the words of the ſeers; or the prophets, as the Targum; and the prophets in his days, according to the Jewiſh chronology [p]. were Joel, Nahum, and Habakkuk: that ſpake to him in the name of the Lord God of Iſrael; words of admonition and reproof before his humiliation, and words of comfort, advice, and inſtruction after it; the Targum is, "that ſpake to him in the name of the Word of the Lord God of Iſrael:" behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Iſrael; not in the canonical book ſo called, where none of the above things, namely, his prayer, and the ſpeeches of the prophets, are to be found, at leaſt not all; but in the annals of the kings of Iſrael, now loſt.

℣. 19. His prayer alſo, &c.] Was not only recorded in the above annals, but in the writings of another perſon after-mentioned: and how God was intreated of him; heard his prayer, and ſhewed him favour both in a temporal and ſpiritual way; for though the Jews will not allow that he was ſaved, or had a part in the world to come, eternal life [q], yet there appears no juſt reaſon why it ſhould be ſo thought: and all his ſin, and his treſpaſs; his impieties, idolatries, and murders: and the places wherein he built high places; ſee ℣. 3. and ſet up groves; ſtatues in groves: and graven images before he was humbled; ſee ℣. 7. 22. behold, they are written among the ſayings of the ſeers; or of Hoſai, the name of a prophet who wrote the hiſtory of his own times; ſo the Targum and Vulgate Latin verſion; and, according to the Jewiſh chronology [r], there was a prophet of this name in the times of Amon the ſon of Manaſſeh.

CHAP. XXXIV.

THIS chapter begins with the good reign of Joſiah, the reformation he made in the land, purging it from idolatry, ℣. 1—7. relates the orders he gave to repair the houſe of the Lord, which was accordingly done, ℣. 8—13. when the book of the law was found and brought to him, which greatly affected him, ℣. 12—19. upon which he deputed ſome perſons to enquire of the Lord, who did of Huldah the propheteſs, to whom ſhe gave an anſwer, which they returned to the king, ℣. 20—28. and the chapter is concluded with an account of reading the book in the ears of all the people, and of the king, and then making a covenant with the Lord to ſerve him, ℣. 27—33.

℣. 1, 2. Joſiah was eight years old when he began to reign, &c.] Of theſe two verſes, ſee the notes on 2 Kings xxii. 1, 2.

℣. 3. For in the eighth year of his reign, while he was yet young, &c.] Being in the 16th year of his age; though Kimchi thinks, it was the very year he began to reign, which was the eighth of his age; and Jarchi obſerves, it may be interpreted, though he was young, he began to ſeek after the God of David his father; to pray unto him, to ſeek after the knowledge of him, and the true manner of worſhipping him, what were his will, commands, and ordinances; the Targum is, "to ſeek inſtruction or doctrine of the Lord God of David his father," to be taught his ways, ſuch as David his great anceſtor walked in, and whom he choſe to follow: and in the 12th year he began to purge Judah and Jeruſalem from the high places, and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images; which were made in the times of Manaſſeh; and though removed by him when humbled, were reſtored in the reign of Amon. Now Joſiah purged the land from theſe, by putting them down, and deſtroying them; and this he did when he was 20 years of age, having now more authority, being out of his minority, and from under guardians, and one year before Jeremiah began to propheſy, Jer. i. 2.

℣. 4. And they broke down the altars of Baalim in his preſence, &c.] He not only ordered them to be broke down, but he went in perſon, and ſaw it done; theſe were the altars Manaſſeh had reared up to the idols; and though upon his humiliation he caſt them out, they were rebuilt by Amon his ſon, ſee ch. xxxiii. 3, 15, 22. and the images that were above them he cut down; ſun-images, as the word ſignifies; theſe Chamanim might be repreſentatives of Cham or Ham, the ſon of Noah, the ſame with Jupiter Ammon; and there was another heathen deity Amanus, Strabo [w] ſpeaks of, ſuppoſed to be the ſun, ſee the note on Lev. xxvi. 30. theſe, as Jarchi ſays, were in the form of the ſun, and were ſet above the altars, over-againſt the ſun, to whom worſhip was paid; though ſome think this reſpects not place but time, and that theſe were images in times paſt; in the preceding age, as the Tigurine verſion: and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images he brake in pieces; ordered them to be broken; the groves were ſtatues, or images in groves, and thereby diſtinguiſhed from thoſe made of wood, and were carved, and from thoſe that were of molten metal, and were placed elſewhere: and made duſt of them, and ſtrewed it upon the graves of them that had ſacrificed unto them, ſee 2 Kings xxiii. 6.

℣. 5. And he burnt the bones of the prieſts upon their altars, &c.] On which they ſacrificed, in deteſtation of their idolatry, and to deter from it; and this he did according to the prophecy of him, above 350 years before: and cleanſed Judah and Jeruſalem; from idolatry, and all the monuments of it.

℣. 6. And ſo did he in the cities of Manaſſeh, and Ephraim, and Simeon, even unto Naphtali, &c.] Which though they belonged to the 10 tribes, yet theſe being carried captive by the king of Aſſyria, they that were left became ſubject to the kings of Judah, ſee the note on 2 Kings xxiii. 19. with their mattocks round about; or hammers or mauls, as Kimchi, or pick-axes, ſuch ſort of inſtruments as were uſed in demoliſhing altars and images: the Targum is, "in the houſe of their deſolation;" and ſo other verſions, in their deſolate places [x], which were become ſuch, the inhabitants being carried captive, and few left behind.

℣. 7. And when he had broken down the altars and the groves, &c.] The ſtatues or images in them: and had beaten the graven images into powder; and ſtrewed it on the graves of the idolaters: and cut down all the idols throughout all the land of Iſrael; the ſun-images, as in ℣. 4. he returned to Jeruſalem; this tour of his throughout the whole land, and the things done by him, which are repreſented as done before the repairs of the temple were made, and the book of the law found and read, and the covenant he and his people made with the Lord, are ſpoken of in 2 Kings xxiii. 4—20. as if done after.

℣. 8. Now in the 18th year of his reign, when he had purged the land and the houſe, &c.] The temple; this was in the 26th year of his age, ſix years this work had been doing before it was finiſhed: he ſent Shaphan the ſon of Azaliah; who only is mentioned in 2 Kings xxii. 3. two more are added here, as follow: and Maaſeiah the governor of the city; the city of Jeruſalem, a deputy-governor under the king, a ſort of mayor or provoſt: and Joah the ſon of Joahaz the recorder; who was over the book of memorials, as the Targum; the word may be rendered the remembrancer; and, according to Jarchi, as every king of Judah had a ſcribe to write down the memorable things that happened in his reign, good or bad, ſo the ſcribe had one by him, to put him in mind of every tranſaction, from whom he wrote it down: to repair the houſe of the Lord his God; that is, to give orders for the doing of it, to prepare for it, provide workmen, and appoint appoint overſeers of them: it had not been repaired ſince the times of Joaſh, which, according to the Jewiſh chronology [y], was a ſpace of 218 years.

℣. 9. And when they came to Hilkiah the high-prieſt, &c.] To whom they were ſent to adviſe with about the repair of the temple: they delivered the money that was brought into the houſe of God; that is, the high-prieſt, and the Levites the door-keepers, gave it to the king's miniſters; which money was either brought to the temple voluntarily, as the free-gifts of the people, for the repairs; or rather what was collected by the Levites, ſent throughout the land for that purpoſe, or it may be both: which the Levites that keep the doors; of the temple, and received the money as the people brought it: and alſo had gathered, of the hand of Manaſſeh and Ephraim, and of all the remnant of Iſrael, and of all Judah, and Benjamin; they went throughout all the land of Iſrael and Judah, and collected money for the above purpoſe: and they returned to Jeruſalem; with it, which the high-prieſt took the ſum of, ſee 2 Kings xxii. 4. of whom the king's miniſters now received it.

℣. 10. And they put it, &c.] The king's miniſters did: in the hand of the workmen that had the overſight of the houſe of the Lord; whoſe buſineſs it was to inſpect the temple, and ſee what repairs were neceſſary, and to overlook the workmen in making thoſe repairs; the names of theſe overſeers are in ℣. 12. and they gave it to the workmen that wrought in the houſe of the Lord, to repair and mend the houſe; that is, the overſeers gave the money they received to the labourers, as the hire of their labour, and the reward of their work, and to buy materials with, as follows.

℣. 11. Even to the artificers and builders gave they it, &c.] To the maſons and carpenters: to buy hewn ſtone; to put in the room of that which was decayed or fallen down: and timber for couplings; of boards, beams, and rafters: and to floor the houſes; the chambers, the apartments in the temple, which belonged to the prieſts and Levites: which the kings of Judah had deſtroyed; the idolatrous ones, who had let them go to decay and ruin, taking no care of them.

℣. 12. And the men did that work faithfully, &c.] The labouring men, as alſo their inſpectors, ſee 2 Kings xxii. 7. and the overſeers of them were Jahath, and Obadiah, the Levites, of the ſons of Merari; the third ſon of Levi: and Zechariah, and Meſhullam, of the ſons of the Kohathites; who had their name from Kohath, the ſecond ſon of Levi: to ſet it forward; to urge and animate the men to their work, to keep them conſtant to it, and ſee that they did it well: and other of the Levites, all that could ſkill of inſtruments of muſick; theſe when they were not employed in ſinging in the temple, attended this ſervice, to look after the workmen at the repairs of it; and perhaps they might play, as ſome think, on their inſtruments of muſick, whilſt the men were at work, that they might go on in it the more pleaſantly and chearfully.

℣. 13. Alſo they were over the bearers of burdens, &c.] Who carried the timber and ſtones to the workmen, to look after them, that they were not dilatory, and that the workmen might not ſtand ſtill for want of materials being brought to them to work with: and were overſeers over all that wrought in any manner of ſervice; whether in the way of maſonry, or in that of carpenters, or of ſuch that ſerved them, or in whatſoever way: and of the Levites there were ſcribes, and officers, and porters; ſome to take the account of the money carried in and paid, who were the ſcribes, according to Jarchi; and others who looked after the men, and kept them to work, who were the officers; and others that let them in and out, called porters.

℣. 14. And when they brought out the money that was brought into the houſe of the Lord, &c.] The Levites, who brought it out of the country into the temple, and from thence brought it to the high-prieſt, who delivering it to the king's miniſters, and they to the overſeers, the repairs were begun: and then Hilkiah the high-prieſt found a book of the law of the Lord given by Moſes, ſee the note on 2 Kings xxii. 8. From hence, to the end of ℣. 28. is the ſame as 2 Kings xxii. 8—20. ſee the notes there.

℣. 29. Then the king ſent and gathered, &c.] From hence, to the end of ℣. 32. the ſame account is given of the reading of the law to the people, and of the covenant the king and they made to ſerve the Lord, as in 2 Kings xxiii. 1, 2, 3.

℣. 33. And Joſiah took away all the abominations out of all the countries that pertained to the children of Iſrael, &c.] All their idols, as related in 2 Kings xxiii. 4, &c. and made all that were preſent in Iſrael to ſerve, even to ſerve the Lord their God; by his edicts, and by his example: and all his days they departed not from following the Lord God of their fathers; not publickly and univerſally; otherwiſe there were great declenſions and corruptions among them, as the prophecies of Jeremiah and Zephaniah ſhew.

CHAP. XXXV.

IN this chapter we have an account of the keeping of the paſſover and its preparation, for which the prieſts and Levites were ordered to prepare, and to which Joſiah, and his princes, gave liberally, and ſuch an one was kept as had not been for ages paſt, ℣. 1—19. and of Joſiah's raſh engagement in battle with the king of Egypt, in which he was ſlain, ℣. 20—23. and of the great lamentations that were made for him, ℣. 24—27.

℣. 1. Moreover, Joſiah kept a paſſover unto the Lord in Jeruſalem, &c.] Where only it was to be kept: and they killed the paſſover on the 14th day of the firſt month; the month Niſan, as the Targum, which was the exact time of killing the paſſover-lamb, according to the law of Moſes, Exod. xii. 6. in the Vulgate Latin verſion of 3 Eſdras i. 1. it is called the 14th moon of the firſt month; a phraſe often uſed in eccleſiaſtical writers, when ſpeaking of the time of the paſſover; and ſo we now call one of the days of the week dies lunæ, Monday.

℣. 2. And he ſet the prieſts in their charges, &c.] In their offices, and in their proper places, to execute them: and encouraged them to the ſervice of the houſe of the Lord; to attend it with chearfulneſs neſs and conſtancy, and do it according to the will of God, promiſing his favour and protection.

℣. 3. And ſaid unto the Levites that taught all Iſrael, &c.] Whoſe buſineſs it was to go through the ſeveral tribes, and inſtruct them in the knowledge of God, his word and worſhip, ſtatutes and ordinances. In an ancient MS. mentioned by Junius, it is read, who prepared for all Iſrael the holy things, &c. which were holy unto the Lord; who were conſecrated to the name of the Lord, as the Targum, dedicated to his worſhip and ſervice; or it may ſignify the holy things they taught or prepared: theſe put the holy ark in the houſe which Solomon the ſon of David king of Iſrael did build; which ſome think was removed from thence by Amon, and an idol put in its room, which is the greater treſpaſs he is ſaid to be guilty of, ch. xxxiii. 23. others, that it was privately removed by the high-prieſt in idolatrous times, and laid up in ſome ſecret place for the preſervation of it; but rather the truth is, that it had been removed by the order of Joſiah, for the ſake of the repairs of the moſt holy place; and this being done, he orders it to be replaced; and though the Levites might not go into the holy of holies, yet they could carry it to the entrance of the holy place, and the prieſts from thence to the door of the moſt holy place, where the high-prieſt could receive it, and fix it in its proper place: it ſhall not be a burden upon your ſhoulders; it was not now to be carried from place to place, having a fixed abode in the moſt holy place, and therefore they were at leiſure to attend other ſervice: ſerve now the Lord your God, and his people Iſrael; by ſinging the praiſes of God, and ſlaying the paſſover-lambs for the people.

℣. 4. And prepare yourſelves, &c.] To do their work in this ſervice of the ſanctuary, the paſſover; that they be ready to do it, and diligent in it, and perform it according to the law of God: by the houſes of your fathers, after your courſes; ſuch of them whoſe turn in courſe it was to officiate: according to the writing of David king of Iſrael, and according to the writing of Solomon his ſon; who had given in writing directions in what manner their courſes ſhould be obſerved, ſee 1 Chron. xxiii, xxiv.

℣. 5. And ſtand in the holy place, &c.] The court of the prieſts, where their miniſtrations were: according to the diviſions of the families of your brethren the people; of the other tribes, who were according to their families to provide a lamb for the paſſover: and after the diviſion of the families of the Levites; who were obliged to obſerve the ſame ordinance in their reſpective families, and for whom, as well as for the other families of Iſrael, they were to ſlay the lamb.

℣. 6. So kill the paſſover, &c.] In the manner, time and place, and for the perſons it ſhould be killed: and ſanctify yourſelves; by waſhing themſelves and garments, that they might be fit for this ſervice: and prepare your brethren; prepare a lamb for your brethren, or inſtruct them how to perform their office that needed inſtruction: that they may do according to the word of the Lord by the hand of Moſes; celebrate the ordinance of the paſſover in all its rites, according to the law of Moſes, at leaſt in every rite, in which they were more peculiarly concerned.

℣. 7. And Joſiah gave to the people, of the flock lambs and kids, all for the paſſover-offerings, &c.] Which might be either lambs or kids of the goat, Exod. xii. 5. for all that were preſent, to the number of 30,000; that is, 30,000 lambs or kids, which would ſerve 30,000 families: and 3000 bullocks; theſe were for the chagigah or feaſt, kept on the day following the paſſover: theſe were of the king's ſubſtance; taken out of his flocks and herds, or bought with his money, and liberally given to the people, to ſuch poor families as could not afford well to be at the expence of ſuch a feſtival.

℣. 8. And his princes gave willingly to the people, to the prieſts, and the Levites, &c.] Beſides, to ſome other families, they gave alſo to poor prieſts and Levites, which the king's bounty did not extend to; and theſe princes were not ſecular, but eccleſiaſtical princes, as follows: Hilkiah, and Zechariah, and Jehiel, rulers of the houſe; of the temple; Hilkiah was high-prieſt, and the other two were chief-prieſts, the one of the line of Eleazar, and the other of the line of Ithamar: theſe gave unto the prieſts for the paſſover-lambs 2600 ſmall cattle; which were lambs, or kids, or both: and 300 oxen; for peace-offerings on the ſeven days of unleavened bread, to feaſt upon.

℣. 9. Cononiah alſo, and Shemaiah, and Nathaneel, his brethren, &c.] See ch. xxxi. 12. and Haſhabiah, and Jehiel, and Jozabad, chief of the Levites; men of conſiderable ſubſtance, and in good poſts and offices: gave unto the Levites; their poor brethren of that order: for paſſover-offerings 5000 ſmall cattle; lambs, or kids, or both: and 300 oxen; for the feaſt that followed the paſſover.

℣. 10. So the ſervice was prepared, &c.] Every thing was got ready both for the paſſover and the feaſt of unleavened bread, for all ſorts of people, rich and poor: and the prieſts ſtood in their place; in their court near the altar, to ſprinkle the blood of the ſacrifices about it, as in the following verſe: and the Levites in their courſes; whoſe turn it was to officiate: according to the king's commandment, ℣. 4.

℣. 11. And they killed the paſſover, &c.] The lambs for the paſſover, which was done by the Levites: and the prieſts ſprinkled the blood from their hands; which they received from the Levites, ſee ch xxx. 16. and the Levites flayed them; the paſſover-lambs, took off their ſkins.

℣. 12. And they removed the burnt-offerings, &c.] Either ſuch of the lambs and kids as were deſigned for burnt-offerings for the people; theſe they ſeparated from thoſe that were for the paſſover; or they removed from them what was to be burnt, the fat of the inwards, of the kidneys and the caul on the liver: that they might give; the reſt for the paſſover: according to the diviſions of the families of the people, to offer unto the Lord; according to the number of them: as it is written in the book of Moſes; ſee Lev. iii. 3, 4, 5. and ſo did they with the oxen; ſuch of them as were appointed for burnt-offerings were ſet apart by themſelves, and ſuch as were for peace-offerings; what of them were to be burnt, as thoſe before mentioned, were taken from them.

℣. 13. And they roaſted the paſſover with fire, according to the ordinance, &c.] Of the Lord by Moſes, Exod. xii. 8. but the other holy offerings; which were the peace-offerings: ſod they in pots, and in cauldrons, and pans; which was forbid to be done with the paſſover-lamb, but might with the other ſacrifices, which were to be eaten, Exod. xii. 9. and divided them ſpeedily among all the people; the parts which belonged to the offerer, who was the king; but he gave his part to the people, and therefore the Levites delivered them to them as ſoon as they could.

℣. 14. And afterwards they made ready for themſelves, and for the prieſts, &c.] The paſſover-lambs, and ſuch parts of the peace-offerings that belonged to them: becauſe the prieſts the ſons of Aaron were buſied in offering burnt-offerings; ſuch as are before ſaid to be removed or ſeparated for that purpoſe: and the fat; of the peace-offerings that was to be burnt: and this employed them until night; ſo that they could not prepare the paſſover for themſelves: and therefore the Levites prepared, not only for themſelves, but and alſo for the prieſts the ſons of Aaron; who were otherwiſe engaged in the ſervice of the day.

℣. 15. And the ſingers, the ſons of Aſaph were in their place, &c.] In the court of the prieſts, ſinging and playing on their inſtruments whilſt the ſacrifices were offering: according to the commandment of David, and Aſaph, and Heman, and Jeduthun the king's ſeer; the ſame with Ethan; and every one were ſeers, as Jarchi interprets it, that is, the three laſt: and the porters waited at every gate; ſuch of the Levites as were in that poſt and office: they might not depart from their ſervice; to let people in and out, that came for their paſſover-lamb, and ſhare in their other offerings: for their brethren the Levites prepared for them; becauſe they were not at leiſure to prepare for themſelves.

℣. 16. So all the ſervice of the Lord was prepared the ſame day, &c.] With every ſacrifice, and for all ſorts of perſons: to keep the paſſover, and to offer burnt-offerings upon the altar of the Lord; which were required to be done on that day: according to the commandment of king Joſiah; which was, that every thing ſhould be provided, prepared and done, as the law required.

℣. 17. And the children of Iſrael that were preſent, kept the paſſover at that time, &c.] In its proper time, on the 14th day of Niſan: and the feaſt of unleavened bread ſeven days; the ſeven days following the paſſover, as the Lord by Moſes appointed.

℣. 18. And there was no paſſover like to that kept in Iſrael, &c.] So exactly according to the law, ſo univerſally by Iſrael and Judah, and with ſuch liberality ſhewn by the king, and the chief of the prieſts and Levites; of this, and the following verſe, ſee the notes on 2 Kings xxiii. 22, 23.

℣. 20. After all this, when Joſiah had prepared the temple, &c.] Purified it, and cleanſed it from the filth in it, and from all idolatry, and had repaired it, and put the ſervice of it in good order, and on a good footing, after which great proſperity in church and ſtate might have been expected: Necho king of Egypt came up to fight againſt Carchemiſh by Euphrates; now called Querquiſia, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the ſame with the Cadytis of Herodotus, which that hiſtorian calls a great city of Syria, whither he ſays Necho went after the battle with the Syrians [x]; of which ſee the note on Iſ. x. 9. and of this king of Egypt, ſee the note on 2 Kings xxiii. 29. and Jer. xlvi. 2. and Joſiah went out againſt him; or to meet him, and ſtop him from going through his land, which lay between Egypt and Syria; Egypt being on the ſouth of Iſrael, and Euphrates on the north of it, as Jarchi obſerves.

℣. 21. But he ſent ambaſſadors to him, &c.] That is, Necho ſent to Joſiah: ſaying, what have I to do with thee, thou king of Judah? ſignifying he had no quarrel with him, he did not come to fight with him, and he had no buſineſs to intermeddle between him and another prince: I come not againſt thee this day; in an hoſtile manner: but againſt the houſe wherewith I have war; the king of Aſſyria; for God commanded me to make haſte; and oppoſe his enemy: according to the Targum, it was his idol; and which is the ſenſe of other Jewiſh writers [y]; but the true God might have appeared to him in a dream, or ſent a prophet to him; or at leaſt he might pretend this, that it might have the greater effect on Joſiah; and indeed it ſeems to be real from the following verſe: forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he deſtroy thee not; he concluded God was with him, and would ſucceed him, becauſe he had put him upon this enterprize, and haſtened him to it; therefore Joſiah in oppoſing him, might expect to be reſiſted by him, and fall.

℣. 22. Nevertheleſs, Joſiah would not turn his face from him, &c.] Or withdraw his forces, and go back: but diſguiſed himſelf, that he might fight with him; without being perſonally known, and aimed at, ſee 1 Kings xxii. 30. and hearkened not unto the words of Necho from the mouth of God; not believing that what he ſaid came from the Lord, though it might; and his infirmity was, that he did not enquire of the Lord about it: and came to fight in the valley of Megiddo; which was in the tribe of Manaſſeh, thought to be the Magdolum of Herodotus, where he ſays Necho fought the battle [z]; ſee the note on 2 Kings xxiii. 29.

℣. 23. And the archers ſhot at king Joſiah, &c.] For though diſguiſed he appeared to be a general officer, and indeed chief commander, and therefore aimed at him, and preſſed him hard: and the king ſaid to his ſervants, have me away, for I am wounded; as Ahab ſaid, when in the like caſe, 1 Kings xxii. 34.

℣. 24. And his ſervants therefore took him out of that chariot, &c.] Dead, and had him to Jeruſalem, and buried him; ſee the note on 2 Kings xxiii. 30. and all Judah and Jeruſalem mourned for Joſiah; he having been ſo good a king, ſo tender of them, and ſuch an happy inſtrument in reſtoring the true religion, and the ſervice of God; this was the ſenſe of the generality of them, who were ſincere in their mourning; but it is not improbable, that thoſe who were inclined to idolatry, were ſecretly glad, though they diſſembled mourning with the reſt.

℣. 25. And Jeremiah lamented for Joſiah, &c.] Compoſed a lamentation for him, which is now loſt; for what is ſaid in Lam. ch. iv. 20. reſpects Zedekiah, and not Joſiah: and all the ſinging men, and all the ſinging women, ſpake of Joſiah in their lamentations unto this day; who were made uſe of on mournful occaſions, as the prefiçæ among the Romans, ſee Jer. ix. 17. theſe in their mournful ditties uſed to make mention of his name, and the diſaſter that befel him: and made them an ordinance in Iſrael; an annual conſtitution, as the Targum calls it, appointing a ſolemn mourning for him once a year, which Jarchi ſays was on the 9th of Ab or July: and behold, they are written in the lamentations; not of Jeremiah; tho' the Targum is, "lo, they are written in the book which Baruch wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah, concerning the lamentations," but reſpect a collection of lamentations on various ſubjects then in being, but ſince loſt.

CHAP. XXXVI.

THIS chapter records the reigns of the four kings of Judah, and the captivity of the Jews, the ſhort reign of Jehoahaz, depoſed by the king of Egypt, and his brother Eliakim or Jehoiakim ſet up in his room, ℣. 1—4. the reign of Jehoiakim, who was bound and carried away by Nebuchadnezzar, ℣. 5—8. the reign of Jehoiachin his ſon, who alſo in a ſhort time was taken and carried to Babylon by the ſame king, ℣. 9, 10. the reign of Zedekiah, who alſo rebelled againſt the king of Babylon, and he and his people were taken and carried captive by him for his ſins, which are here mentioned, according to the prophecy of Jeremiah, and where the Jews continued until the reign of the kingdom of Perſia, ℣. 11—21. and the chapter is concluded with the proclamation of Cyrus king of Perſia, and with which alſo the next book begins, ℣. 22, 23.

℣. 1. Then the people of the land took Jehoahaz the ſon of Joſiah, &c.] Of whoſe reign, and of the three following, Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah, and the account of them, from hence to the end of ℣. 13. what needs explanation or reconciliation, ſee the notes on 2 Kings xxiii. 31—37. and xxiv. 5, 6, 8, 10, 17, 18, 19, 20.

℣. 14. Moreover, the chief of the prieſts, and of the people, tranſgreſſed very much after all the abominations of the heathens, &c.] The prieſts, and even the chief of them, who ſhould have inſtructed the people in the duties of religion, and retained them in the pure worſhip of God, theſe were the ringleaders of idolatry, who led the people to commit all the idolatries of the heathens round about them; and of the people, all ranks and degrees of them, were corrupted with them; this was their caſe in ſeveral of the preceding reigns, and now a little before the deſtruction of them: and polluted the houſe of the Lord which he had hallowed in Jeruſalem; the temple dedicated to his worſhip there; this they defiled, by ſetting up idols in it.

℣. 15. And the Lord God of their fathers ſent to them by his meſſengers, &c.] The prophets of the Lord, to admoniſh them of their idolatries, and to reprove them for them, to warn them of the wrath of God that would come upon them on that account, unleſs they repented and reformed; theſe were at the beginning of their apoſtacy, and were ſucceſſively continued unto this time, as Ahijah, Elijah, and others, in the firſt times of it; Amos, Iſaiah, and others, in the middle of it; and Jeremiah, Zephaniah, and Ezekiel, towards the cloſe of it: riſing up betimes, and ſending; which is either to be underſtood of the Lord, and as expreſſive of his care and diligence, like the maſter of a family, ſolicitous for the good of it; or of the meſſengers, the prophets, who made haſte to go or ſend their prophecies and inſtructions to reclaim the people; the phraſe is often to be met with in the prophecy of Jeremiah, ſee ch. xi. 7. and the note there: becauſe he had compaſſion on his people, and on his dwelling-place; being unwilling they ſhould come to ruin and periſh, and their city and temple be deſtroyed where they dwelt.

℣. 16. But they mocked the meſſengers of God, and deſpiſed his words, &c.] Which was the treatment Jeremiah and Ezekiel frequently met with: and miſuſed his prophets; impriſoned them, as Micaiah and Jeremiah were: until the wrath of the Lord aroſe againſt his people; which burned like fire in his breaſt, and broke out to the conſumption of them, till there was no remedy, or healing of them; there was no reclaiming or recovering of them, no bringing them to repentance, and no pardon for them.

℣. 17. Therefore he brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, &c.] Nebuchadnezzar; and though it was the rebellion of Zedekiah, which was the cauſe and occaſion of his coming againſt them, yet it was the Lord that moved him to it, and gave him ſucceſs: who ſlew their young men with the ſword, in the houſe of the ſanctuary; in the temple, where they took ſanctuary, imagining that ſacred place would protect them from the rage of the enemy, but it did not: and had no compaſſion on young man or maiden, old man, or him that ſtooped for age; ſpared none on account of age or ſex, but put them all to the ſword, or carried them captive: he gave them into his hand; that is, the Lord delivered them into the hand of the king of Babylon, for their ſins.

℣. 18. And all the veſſels of the houſe of God, great and ſmall, &c.] All that were left; for ſome had been carried away in both the reigns preceding: and the treaſures of the houſe of the Lord, and the treaſures of the king, and of his princes; which became the ſpoil and booty of the ſoldiers: all theſe he brought to Babylon; the veſſels were laid up there, and reſtored when Cyrus took it; but the treaſures were no doubt in part taken for his own uſe, and the reſt divided in the army.

℣. 19. And they burnt the houſe of the Lord, &c.] The temple; of which, and what follows in this verſe, ſee the notes on Jer. lii. 13, 14.

℣. 20. And them that had eſcaped from the ſword, carried he away captive, &c.] The king of Babylon, or his general by his orders, excepting ſome poor perſons left to till the land, ſee Jer. lii. 15, 16. where they were ſervants to him and his ſons; his ſon Evil-merodach, and his grandſon Belſhazzar, ſee Jer. xxvii. 7. and the note there: until the reign of the kingdom of Perſia; until that monarchy began, as it did upon the taking of Babylon by Cyrus king of Perſia. This is the firſt place we meet with this name of Perſia in ſcripture. The Arabic writers differ about the origin of it; ſome derive it from Pars the ſon of Arſham (Arphaxad) the ſon of Shem; others from Pars the ſon of Amur, the ſon of Japhet; and others ſay Pars was the ſon of Elam, the ſon of Shem, the ſon of Noah[a]; but Bochart[b] ſeems to be righteſt in the derivation of the word, who obſerves from Xenophon[c] horſes were very rare in this country; and very few could ride them before the times of Cyrus, who taught his foot-ſoldiers to ride horſes; and hence it became came common, so that none of the best men of the land cared to be seen on foot; yea, he made a law, that it should be reckoned infamous, if any of those he had taught the art of riding, were seen to go on foot, though ever so little a way; from this sudden change made in his time, the people were called Persians, and the country Persia; in the Arabic language, Pharas signifying a horse, and Pharis an horseman; and the same writer observes, that hence it is that no mention is made of this country in the name of Persia, by Isaiah and Jeremiah; but by Ezekiel and Daniel, who were cotemporary with Cyrus; and in this book and the following historical ones, which were wrote after the Babylonish captivity, as their history shews; and that this book was, is clear from the preceding clause, as well as from the three last verses.

℣. 21. To fulfil the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, &c.] That is, the Jews were so long servants in Babylon, as in the preceding verse, to accomplish Jeremiah's prophecy of it, ch. xxv. 12. and xxvii. 7. and xxix. 10. until the land had enjoyed her sabbaths; the sabbatical years, or seventh year-sabbaths, which, according to the law of the land, was to rest from being tilled, Lev. xxv. 4. which law had been neglected by the Jews, and now whether they would or no, the land should have rest for want of persons to till it: for as long as she lay desolate, she kept sabbath, to fulfil threescore and ten years; as threatened in Lev. xxvi. 34, 35. on which text Jarchi observes, that at the destruction of the first temple the law concerning the sabbath, or rest of the land, had been neglected 430 years, in which space were 69 sabbatical years; and, according to Maimonides [d], it was at the end of a sabbatic year that the city and temple were destroyed, and so just 70 years had been neglected, and the land was tilled in them as in other years, and now it had rest that exact number of years; but of this we cannot be certain, though it is probable.

℣. 22, 23. Now in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, &c.] These two verses are the same with which the next book, the book of Ezra, begins, where they will be explained; and these two books, the one ending, and the other beginning with the same words, is a strong presumption, that one and the same person, Ezra, is the writer of them both; or rather, as a learned [e] writer conjectures, these two verses are added by some transcriber, who having finished the book of Chronicles at ℣. 21. went on with the book of Ezra, without any stop, but perceiving his mistake, broke off abruptly; for so it is plain these verses conclude; however this shows, as the same writer observes, that the book of Ezra followed that of the Chronicles, in the Hebrew copies, though it now does not.

EZRA.

E Z R A.

THIS book in the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions, is called the firſt book of Ezra, Nehemiah being reckoned the ſecond; but with the Jews both were accounted but one book [a]; in the Syriac verſion, it is called the writing or book of Ezra the prophet; and this title is given him, both by Jews [b] and Chriſtians [c]; in the Arabic verſion, it is called the firſt book of Ezra the prieſt, ſkilful in the law; and that he was a prieſt, is clear, ſince he was the ſon of Seraiah the high-prieſt, who was ſlain by Nebuchadnezzar, and the younger brother of Joſedeck, who ſucceeded his father as high-prieſt, and uncle to Joſhua that ſucceeded him; and he was alſo a ready ſcribe in the law of Moſes, ſee ch. vii. 1, 6, 10, 11, 12. That Ezra was the writer of this book, is believed by the Jews [d], and by the generality of Chriſtians; only Huetius [e] thinks, that the ſix firſt chapters were written by another hand, but his reaſons are not ſatisfactory; and it has been univerſally received as canonical by all; it agrees with the prophecies of Haggai and Zechariah, and ſerves to illuſtrate them; it is of uſe for the continuation of the ſacred hiſtory, to point at the fulfilment of prophecies concerning the return of the Jews from captivity, and the rebuilding of the temple; and to give us an account of the ſtate of the church in thoſe times, the troubles and difficulties it met with, and what care was taken to keep the tribes and families diſtinct, that it might be known from whom the Meſſiah ſprung; this book contains an hiſtory of 70 years, according to the calculation of biſhop Uſher [f], from A. M. 3468, to A. M. 3538.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter informs us of the proclamation of Cyrus king of Perſia, for the Jews to return to their own country, and rebuild their temple, ℣. 1—4. and that upon it, the chief of them roſe up for that purpoſe, whoſe hands were ſtrengthened and ſupplied by thoſe about them, ℣. 5, 6. and particularly by Cyrus, who gave orders that the veſſels belonging to the temple ſhould be delired to them, ℣. 7—11.

℣. 1. Now in the firſt year of Cyrus king of Perſia, &c.] Not in the firſt of his reign over Perſia, for he had been many years king over that, and now had all the kingdoms of the earth given him, ℣. 2. but over Babylon, and the dominions belonging to it, which commenced with Darius upon the taking of Babylon; he reigned in all 30 years, as Cicero [g] from a Perſian writer relates; or 29, according to Herodotus [h]; but in what year this was, is not certain; Africanus [i] has proved, from various hiſtorians, that it was the firſt year of the 55th Olympiad, perhaps about the 20th of Cyrus's Perſian government [k]; ſee the note on Dan. x. 1. that the word of the Lord, by the mouth of Jeremiah, might be fulfilled; which foretold that the Jews ſhould return from their captivity at the end of 70 years, which fell on the firſt of Cyrus, reckoning from the 4th of Jehoiakim, and the firſt of Nebuchadnezzar, ſee Jer. xxv. 1, 11, 12. and xxix. 10. the Lord ſtirred up the ſpirit of Cyrus king of Perſia; who has the hearts of all men in his hands, and even of the kings of the earth, and can turn them as he pleaſes; he wrought upon him, put it into his heart, enlightened his mind, ſhewed him what was right, and his duty to do, and preſſed him to the performance of it; ſo that he could not be eaſy until he had done it, and he was made thoroughly willing, and even eager to do it: that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it alſo in writing; gave it in writing to his heralds to read and proclaim throughout all his dominions: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Thus ſaith Cyrus king of Perſia, &c.] Of whom, and this edict of his, Iſaiah propheſied 200 years before he was born, Iſ. xliv. 28. the Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth;

earth; many he had conquered before he took Babylon, and then the whole Babylonian monarchy fell into his hands. Herodotus [l] says, he ruled over all Asia; Xenophon [m] reckons up many nations that were under his government, Medes and Hyrcanians, Syrians, Assyrians, Arabians, Cappadocians, both the Phrygians, Carians, Phœnicians, Babylonians, Bactrians, Indians, Cilicians, Sacæ or Scythians, Paphlagonians, Megadinians, and many other nations, the Greeks inhabiting Asia, and the Cyprians, and Egyptians; and elsewhere he says [n], the borders of his kingdom were, to the east the Red-sea, to the north the Euxine Pontus, to the west Cyprus and Egypt, and to the south Ethiopia. And the possession of these kingdoms Cyrus ascribes, not to his own martial courage and skill, but to the providence and disposal of the God of heaven, which he seems to have had some notion of: and he hath charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah; in the prophecy of Isaiah, which, according to Josephus [o], he had seen and read, and believed it to be a charge upon him, and a command unto him to rebuild the temple at Jerusalem; however, to give leave for the rebuilding of it, and to encourage to it, and assist in it; an Arabic writer says [p], that Cyrus married a sister of Zerubbabel, and that it was at her request that the Jews had leave to return; which is merely fabulous.

ver. 3. Who is there among you of all his people, &c.] The people of God, the Israelites, as well of the 10 tribes, as of the two of Judah and Benjamin; for this edict was published throughout all his dominions, where were the one as well as the other: his God be with him; to incline his heart to go, to protect him in his journey, and succeed and prosper him in what he goes about: and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel, he is the God; the one only living and true God: which is in Jerusalem; who has been in former times, and is to be worshipped there; though Aben Ezra says, this is to be connected with the house of the Lord; as if the sense was, to build the house, that was in Jerusalem, or to be built there; and so our version connects them, putting those words into a parenthesis, he is God; but this is contrary to the accents.

ver. 4. And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, &c.] Is left behind, and can't go up thro' poverty, not having a sufficiency to bear his charges in his journey to Jerusalem: let the men of his place help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts; with money to bear the expences of his journey, with goods to furnish his house, or trade with, when he came to Judea, and with cattle to carry him, and his goods, and to till the ground with, when he came thither; and the men exhorted to this are either the Gentiles that dwelt in the cities where these poor Jews were, or the richer Jews, who chose as yet not to go up until they saw how things would succeed; and are therefore called upon to assist their brethren who had a will, but not ability: besides the will-offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem; which they freely gave, and sent by them for the rebuilding of the temple.

ver. 5. Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, &c.] Princes of these tribes, and heads of families in them, and of some other tribes too, though chiefly of these, as appears from 1 Chron. ix. 3. and the priests and the Levites; whose presence was necessary both to direct in the building of the temple, and to animate to it, and to set the vessels in their proper places; and particularly to assist in the setting up of the altar, and to offer sacrifices on it, which was the first thing done when come to Jerusalem, ch. iii. 2, 3. with all them whose spirit God raised to go up, to build the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem; God who works in men both to will and to do, wrought powerfully by his Spirit on their hearts, inclined their minds, and made them willing to go up, and set about this work; and such a divine, powerful, and efficacious operation upon them, was necessary to engage them in it, since the embarassments, difficulties, discouragements and objections were many: some of them were well settled, and had contracted a pleasing acquaintance with many of their neighbours, and indeed to most of them it was their native place; and as for Judea and Jerusalem, they knew nothing of, but what their fathers had told them; the way to it unknown, long and dangerous, at least fatiguing and troublesome to their wives and children; and Judea and Jerusalem desolate and in ruins, and in the hands of enemies, from whom they had reason to expect trouble.

ver. 6. And all they that were about them, &c.] Their neighbours, the Chaldeans: strengthened their hands with vessels of silver, with gold, with goods, and with beasts, and with precious things; which they either did of themselves at their own motion, or by the direction and example of Cyrus, ver. 4. and perhaps many of them to ingratiate themselves into the favour of their new monarch: besides all that was willingly offered: by the rich Jews, who thought fit, at least for the present, to remain in Babylon.

ver. 7. And Cyrus brought forth the vessels of the house of the Lord, &c.] Or ordered them to be brought forth: which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Jerusalem; out of the temple there, when he took it and burnt it: and had put them in the house of his gods; in the temple of Belus at Babylon, see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 7. Dan. i. 2. and v. 2, 3. by which means they were providentially preserved.

ver. 8. Even these did Cyrus king of Persia bring forth by the hand of Mithredath the treasurer, &c.] Or Mithridates, a name common with the Persians, from their god Mithras, the sun they worshipped: and numbered them unto Sheshbazzar prince of Judah; delivered them by tale to him; who, according to the Jewish Rabbins, as Jarchi says, was Daniel, who was so called, because he stood in six tribulations; but it does not appear that Daniel went up to Jerusalem with the captivity, as this man did, but remained at Babylon; rather, with Aben Ezra, it is best by him to understand Zerubbabel, who did go up, and was the prince of Judah; and Cyrus in his letter [q] to the governors of Syria, expressly says, that he delivered the vessels to Zerubbabel, the prince of the Jews. He had two names, Sheshbazzar, which signifies he rejoiced in tribulation, and Zerubbabel, which signifies either the seed of Babylon, being born there, or dispersed, or a stranger there, as others.

ver. 9. And this is the number of them, &c.] Of the vessels delivered, as follows: 30 chargers of gold, 1000 chargers of silver; these, according to Ben Melech, were vessels in which water was put to wash wash hands in; but rather they were, as Aben Ezra observes from the Jerusalem Talmud[r], vessels in which they gathered the blood of lambs and bullocks slain for sacrifices: 29 knives; which because the handles of them were of gold or silver, were valuable, and might be very large knives, and what the priests used in slaying and cutting up the sacrifices.

℣. 10. Thirty basons of gold, &c.] Cups or dishes with covers, as the word seems to signify; but, according to Jarchi and Aben Ezra, they were vessels in which the blood of sacrifices was received, and out of which it was sprinkled on the altar: silver basons of a second sort 410; perhaps lesser than the other, however not so valuable, being of silver; in the apocryphal Ezra, ch. ii. 13. the number is 2410; and in the letter of Cyrus, before referred to, it is 2400: and other vessels 1000; which are not particularly mentioned; Junius and Tremellius render the words, other vessels by thousands, there being near 3000 that are not described.

℣. 11. All the vessels of gold, and of silver, were 5400, &c.] Those that are mentioned make no more than 2499, which Aben Ezra thinks were the larger vessels; but this general sum takes in great and small, as in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 18. in the letter of Cyrus, before mentioned, these vessels are more particularly described, and their several numbers given, which together amount to the exact number in the text 5400; the apochryphal Ezra makes them 5469: all these did Sheshbazzar bring up with them of the captivity, that were brought up from Babylon unto Jerusalem; of whom there is a large and particular account in the following chapter.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter contains a list of those that went up from Babylon to Jerusalem, of their leaders, their chief men, princes and priests, ℣. 1, 2. of the people described by their families, towns and cities, and number of persons, ℣. 3—35. of the priests, Levites, and Nethinim, ℣. 36—58. and of those that could not make out their genealogy, people and priests, ℣. 59—63. and then the sum total of the whole congregation is given, ℣. 64. besides men and maid-servants, singing men and women, and cattle of divers sorts, ℣. 65—67. and the chapter is closed with an account of the free-will-offerings of the principal men towards the building of the temple, and of the settlement of the people in their respective cities, ℣. 68, 69, 70.

℣. 1. Now these are the children of the province, &c.] Either of the province of Babylon, as Aben Ezra, where they were either born, or had dwelt for many years; or else rather, according to Jarchi, of the province of Judea, as it is called, ch. v. 8. once a flourishing kingdom, but reduced to a province of the Babylonian monarchy, now in the hands of the Medes and Persians, of which province they and their fathers originally were: that went out of the captivity, of those which had been carried away, whom Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon had carried away unto Babylon; who either in person, or in their parents, were carried captive by him, and who were the tribes of Judah and Benjamin; and they are only mentioned, because they were the principal that returned, though there were some of the other tribes that also came up with them: and came again unto Jerusalem and Judah, every one unto his city; that he dwelt in before, or was now assigned to him by lot, see Neh. xi. 1, &c.

℣. 2. Which came with Zerubbabel, &c.] The head of them, the prince of Judah; and the chief that came with him, are the 10 following; Jeshua, Nehemiah, Seraiah, Reelaiah, Mordecai, Bilshan, Mispar, Bigvai, Rehum, Baanah; the first of these Jeshua, was Joshua the high-priest, the son of Josedeck, Hagg. i. 1. Dr. Lightfoot[s] thinks, that Nehemiah is the same, whose name the following book bears; and that Mordecai is he who was uncle to Esther, so Aben Ezra; but if so, they must both return again; for that Nehemiah came to Jerusalem in the 20th year of Artaxerxes, Neh. i. 1. and that Mordecai brought up his niece in the city of Shushan, in the times of Ahasuerus, is certain; and this with respect to both, is denied by others[t], who take them to be different men of the same name; and the same writer is of opinion, that Seraiah, and who is called Azariah, Neh. vii. 7. is the same with Ezra, who therefore must, and did return, since he went up to Jerusalem in the 7th year of Artaxerxes, ch. vii. 1, 7, 8. as for the others, we know nothing more of them than their names: the number of the men of the people of Israel; either of the principal of them before named, or of the common people, which next follows.

℣. 3. The children of Parosh, 2172.] From hence, to the end of ℣. 35. a list is given of the captives that returned, described by the families they were of, their ancestors from whence they sprung, or the towns and cities to which they originally belonged, and by their numbers; otherwise nothing more of them is known.

℣. 36. The priests, &c.] An account of them is given in this, and the three following verses, and only four families are mentioned, those of Jedaiah, Immer, Pashur, and Harim, and the number of them amounted to 4289; these, according to the Jews, were heads of four courses, which were all that returned from Babylon[u].

℣. 40. The Levites, &c.] Singers and porters, who are reckoned in this, and the two following verses, whose numbers were no more than 341; whereas in the times of David, they were 38,000, 1 Chron. xxiii. 3.

℣. 43. The Nethinims, &c.] Supposed by Aben Ezra and Jarchi to be the Gibeonites, who were given by Joshua, as the word Nethinim signifies, to the congregation, to be hewers of wood and drawers of water; but rather were those that were given by David to assist the Levites; of these is an account from hence to the end of ℣. 58, together with those who descended from Solomon's servants, who seem to be the remains of the Canaanites in the land, whom Solomon made bond-servants of, 1 Kings ix. 20, 21. 2 Chron. ii. 17. who, and their posterity, became proselytes; or those sprung from men that were domestic servants of Solomon's, and valued themselves on that account; the number of the the Nethinim, and these together, were three hundred ninety and two.

℣. 59. And these were they that went up from Tel-melah, Tel-harsa, &c.] Places in the land of Babylon, see Is. xxxvii. 12. Ezek. iii. 15. Cherub, Addan, and Immer, but they could not shew their father's house, and their seed, whether they were of Israel; these were such that professed the Jewish religion, and went for Jews in Babylon, but could not trace their pedigree, and tell what family they were of, who their ancestors, and where they had lived in Judea; they had lost their genealogical tables, if they ever had any, and could not make it out, whether their parents were Israelites, or proselyted Gentiles; or they were such who had been exposed, and taken out of the streets, and their parents unknown.

℣. 60. The children of Delaiah, Tobiah, and Nekoda, 652.] These, though their immediate parents, were known, yet by their being mentioned here, it seems as if they could not carry their genealogy farther, and make it clearly appear what was the house of their fathers, or what their family.

℣. 61. And of the children of the priests, &c.] Who could not make out their pedigree, for those that could are mentioned before: the children of Habaiah, the children of Koz, the children of Barzillai; how the latter came by this name, follows: which took a wife of the daughters of Barzillai the Gileadite, and was called after their name; this man married a woman that descended from the famous Barzillai the Gileadite, in the times of David; and the priesthood being in disuse, and mean, and despicable in Babylon, he chose to take the name of his wife's family, and pass for a descendant from that, and perhaps destroyed, or at least neglected to take care of the genealogy of his own family.

℣. 62. These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, &c.] To find their names written and registered there; for the Jews kept public registers of their priests, their descent, marriages, and offspring, that it might be known who were fit, and who not, to officiate as such: but they were not found; their names were not there, nor any account taken of them: therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood; were not suffered to attend at the altar, and offer sacrifice, and enjoy the privileges belonging to that office.

℣. 63. And the Tirshatha said unto them, &c.] By whom Jarchi understands Nehemiah, and observes, that their Rabbins say, he was so called, because the wise men allowed him to drink the wine of the Gentiles, he being cup-bearer to the king; but Aben Ezra, with greater probability, takes it to be a name of honour and grandeur in the Chaldee language, as a prince or governor; and no doubt Zerubbabel is meant, the prince of the Jews, the same with Sheshbazzar, ch. i. 8. according to Gussetius [w], this office was the same with that of the king's commissary in a province, delegated to carry his orders, make them known, and see them put in execution; and that this name Tirshatha, is the same with Tithraustes in Ælian [x]; but that seems to be not the title of an office, but the personal name of a man that was a chiliarch: that they should not eat of the most holy things; as of the shew-bread, and those parts of the sin-offerings, and of the peace-offerings and meat-offerings, which belonged to the priests, which the governor forbid these to eat of, who were rejected from the priesthood: till there stood up a priest with Urim and Thummim; as yet there was not any priest that had them; they were not to be found at the return from Babylon; the governor might hope they would be found, and a priest appear clothed with them, when it might be enquired of the Lord by them, whether such priests, before described, might eat of the holy things or no; but since the Jews [y] acknowledge, that these were one of the five things wanting in the second temple; it is all one, as the Talmudists [z] express it, as if it had been said, until the dead rise, or the Messiah comes; and who is come, the true high-priest, and with whom are the true Urim and Thummim, lights and perfections to the highest degree, being full of grace and truth; of the Urim and Thummim, see the note on Exod. xxviii. 30.

℣. 64. The whole congregation together, was 42,360.] But the sums before given make no more, with Zerubbabel, and the 10 principal men, than 29,829, so that there are more than 12,000 wanting; wherefore in answer to the question, where are the 12,000? the Jews say in their chronology [a], these are they of the other tribes, who set up the altar on its bases, and gave money to the masons, &c. ch. iii. 1, 3, 7. this was a much larger number than were carried captive; see 2 Kings xxiv. 14, 15. Jer. lii. 28, 29, 30. but not to be compared with the number that came out of Egypt, Exod. xii. 37. An Arabic writer [b] makes them 50,000, but wrongly.

℣. 65. Besides their servants and their maids, of whom there were 7337, &c.] This shows, that the greater part of those that returned were of the poorer sort, since there were so few servants that belonged unto them; these came not into the above account: and there were among them 200 singing men, and singing women; among the servants, who were kept by persons of figure for their pleasure and recreation; see Eccl. ii. 8. for that these were such as were employed in sacred service, is not so clear, especially the latter, though some conclude it from 1 Chron. xxv. 5, 6. but rather they were such as were employed at marriages, festivals, and funerals; though Jarchi thinks they were employed by the returning captives, to make them chearful as they travelled along, see Is. lv. 12.

℣. 66, 67. Their horses were 736, their mules 245, their camels 435, their asses 6720.] So that the far greatest part of them must walk on foot, since these can be thought to be little more than sufficient to carry their goods or baggage; some copies of the Vulgate Latin read 636 horses [c].

℣. 68. And some of the chief of the fathers, when they came to the house of the Lord that is at Jerusalem, &c.] That is, when they came to the place where it formerly stood, and where were still the ruins of it: offered freely for the house of God, to set it up in its place; to rebuild it upon the spot where it formerly stood; this they did besides the free-will-offerings they brought with them from Babylon.

℣. 69. They gave after their ability unto the treasure of the work, 61,000 drams of gold, &c.] These Darcemons or Darics were a Persian coin; one of which, which, according to Brerewood [k], was of the value of fifteen ſhillings of our money, and ſo this quantity of them amounted to 45,750 pounds; but according to biſhop Cumberland [l] they were of the value of twenty ſhillings and four pence of our money, and ſo came to upwards of 61,000 pounds; theſe every one, according to his ability, put into the common ſtock or treaſury for the work of building the temple; the Vulgate Latin [m] reads 40,000: and 5000 pound of ſilver; and an Hebrew mina, or pound, being of our money ſeven pounds, ten ſhillings, according to Brerewood [n], amounted to 31,250 pounds; but others [o] reckoning a dram of gold at 10 ſhillings, and a mina or pound of ſilver at 9 pounds, make the whole to amount only to 75,500 pounds of our money: and 100 prieſts garments; which as they were laid up among treaſures, ſo were neceſſary for the ſervice of the temple.

℣. 70. So the prieſts and the Levites, and ſome of the people, and the ſingers, and the Nethinim, dwelt in their cities, &c.] Which were aſſigned to them out of the ſeveral tribes, and in which they or their forefathers had dwelt before the captivity: and all Iſrael in their cities; as thoſe of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, ſo of the other ten, as many as returned and joined thoſe who were left in the land.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter relates how that the people of Iſrael returned from captivity, gathered to Jeruſalem, and ſet up the altar, where ſacrifices were offered, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and kept the feaſt of tabernacles, and offered the ſacrifices of that, beſides the daily ſacrifice, and of other feſtivals; and contributed to the workmen that prepared for the building of the temple, ℣. 4—7. and began it by laying the foundation of it; which to ſome was matter of joy, to others of grief, on different accounts, ℣. 8—13.

℣. 1. And when the ſeventh month was come, &c.] The month Tiſri, which anſwers to part of September and October; or when it was approaching [p], for before it was actually come ſome following things were done, the people met, and an altar was built; for on the firſt day of it ſacrifices were offered, ℣. 6. and the children of Iſrael were in the cities; their reſpective cities, ſettling their domeſtic affairs: the people gathered themſelves together as one man to Jeruſalem; the thing was univerſal, and done with as much diſpatch, as if only one man was concerned; and it ſeems to denote as if they were under a divine impulſe, and came together, without any conſultation, or knowledge of each other's deſigns, and without ſummons.

℣. 2. Then ſtood up Jeſhua the ſon of Jozadak, &c.] Who was the high-prieſt, and the proper perſon to give the lead in the following work: and his brethren the prieſts; the common prieſts, very fit to join him, and aſſiſt him in it: and Zerubbabel, the ſon of Shealtiel; the prince and governor of Judah, whoſe preſence was neceſſary to give countenance to the work, and animate to it: and his brethren; the princes and heads of the people, particularly thoſe mentioned ch. ii. 2. and builded the altar of the God of Iſrael; the altar of burnt-offering, gave orders for the building of it, and directions about it: to offer burnt-offerings thereon, as it is written in the law of Moſes the man of God; or prophet of God, as the Syriac verſion; ſee Lev. i. 1—17.

℣. 3. And they ſet the altar upon his baſes, &c.] Which might remain of the old altar; or the meaning is, that it was fixed and ſettled on the ſame ſpot where it ſtood before: for fear was upon them, becauſe of the people of thoſe countries; and therefore they haſtened to erect an altar, and offer ſacrifices to the Lord, in hope that he would appear for them, and help them againſt their enemies; or rather, as ſome render the words [q], tho' fear was upon them, &c. yet they were not deterred from the work, worſhip, and ſervice of God: and they offered burnt-offerings unto the Lord, even burnt-offerings, morning and evening; the daily ſacrifice, as directed to Exod. xxix. 38, 39.

℣. 4. They kept alſo the feaſt of tabernacles, as it is written, &c.] According to the rules preſcribed for the obſervation of it in Lev. xxiii. 34—42. this began on the 15th day of the ſeventh month: and offered the daily burnt-offerings by number, according to the cuſtom, as the duty of every day required; for on all the eight days of the feaſt, there was a certain number of ſacrifices fixed for every day; and exactly according to the law concerning them did they offer them at this time; ſee Numb. xxix. 12——38.

℣. 5. And afterwards offered the continual burnt-offering, &c.] Not after the feaſt of tabernacles, as if they then began to offer the daily ſacrifice; for that they did as ſoon as the altar was ſet up, and on the firſt day of the month, ℣. 3, 6. rather the ſenſe is, that after the daily burnt-offering of the morning, they offered the other ſacrifices peculiar to the ſeveral days of the feaſt of tabernacles; they never neglected that, yea always began with it; all the reſt were after it, and ſo on other feſtivals: both of the new moons, and of all the ſet feaſts of the Lord that were conſecrated; to the ſervice of the Lord, and the honour of his name, as every firſt day of the month, and every other appointed feſtival, they offered the ſacrifices appropriate to each; but not to the neglect of that ſacrifice, and always after it: and of every one that willingly offered a free-will offering unto the Lord; theſe they were careful alſo to offer in their proper time

℣. 6. From the firſt of the ſeventh month began they to offer burnt-offerings unto the Lord, &c.] And which day was not only a new moon, but a grand feſtival, the feaſt of blowing of trumpets, Lev. xxiii. 24, 25. and no doubt but they obſerved the 10th day of this month, with all the rites of it, which was the day of atonement, Lev. xxiii. 27—32. but the foundation of the temple of the Lord was not yet laid; they began firſt with ſacrifices, that having thereby given thanks to God for their return to their own land, and for all the benefits they

they enjoyed; and made atonement for their ſins in a typical way, they might be the more prepared and fit for the work of building the temple; or, tho' the foundation of it was not laid [z], yet they offered the above ſacrifices.

℣. 7. They gave money alſo to the maſons, and to the carpenters, &c.] To buy ſtone and timber with for the building of the temple: and meat and drink and oil unto them of Zidon, and to them of Tyre; which were more agreeable to them than money, becauſe there was not plenty of ſuch things in their country, as in the land of Iſrael: to bring cedar-trees from Lebanon to the ſea of Joppa; as they did at the firſt building of the temple by Solomon; they cut down cedars at Lebanon, which belonged to them, and ſent them by ſea to Joppa, the neareſt ſea-port to Jeruſalem, about 40 miles from it; ſee 2 Chron. ii. 16. according to the grant that they had of Cyrus king of Perſia; for Tyre and Zidon being under his dominion as well as Judea, he not only gave leave to the Jews to get cedar-wood from Lebanon, but gave orders to the Zidonians and Tyrians to furniſh them with it, paying a valuable conſideration for it; and ſo ſome [a] render the word, according to the commandment of Cyrus.

℣. 8. Now in the ſecond year of their coming unto the houſe of God at Jeruſalem, &c.] The place where it formerly ſtood; the Jews ſeem to have ſet out from Babylon, in the ſpring of the preceding year, as it was now of this; which to Jeruſalem was a journey of about four months, as Ezra performed it, ch. vii. 9. but might take up longer time for ſuch a body of people to do it in, being larger than that with him; wherefore after they had viſited their reſpective cities, and ſettled their affairs there, they came to Jeruſalem on the 7th month, or September, and kept the feaſt of Tabernacles, and then they returned to their cities again, the winter ſeaſon being an improper time to begin the building of the temple; having given money to workmen to purchaſe materials with, and no doubt left a ſufficient number to clear away the rubbiſh, and get things ready by the returning ſpring to ſet about the work: in the ſecond month; the month Ijar, as Jarchi obſerves, anſwering to part of April and May, having, as may be ſuppoſed, kept the paſſover the month before: began Zerubbabel, the ſon of Shealtiel, and Jeſhua the ſon of Jozadak; the prince, and the high prieſt: and the remnant of their brethren, the prieſts and Levites, and all they that were come out of the captivity unto Jeruſalem; whoſe names and numbers are given in the preceding chapter: and appointed the Levites from 20 years old and upwards, to ſet forward the work of the houſe of the Lord; to put men to work upon it, and direct them what to do, and urge them to attend cloſely to it; ever ſince David's time the Levites were employed at 20 years of age, when before not till 30, or 25; ſee 1 Chron. xxiii. 24.

℣. 9. Then ſtood Jeſhua, with his ſons, &c.] Not Jeſhua the high-prieſt before-mentioned, but Jeſhua the Levite, ch. ii. 40. and his brethren, Kadmiel and his ſons, the ſons of Judah together; the ſame with Hodaviah, ch. ii. 40. to ſet forward the workmen in the houſe of God; to give them orders to begin and lay the foundation, and haſten and animate them to it: the ſons of Henadad with their ſons and their brethren the Levites; two of this man's ſons are mentioned in Neh. iii. 18, 24. and x. 9.

℣. 10. And when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the Lord, &c.] The maſons, whoſe work it was, ℣. 7. they ſet the prieſts in their apparel with trumpets; theſe were ſet in a proper place by the prince and the high-prieſt, in their prieſtly garments, with trumpets in their hands to blow with, as the foundation was laying: and the Levites the ſons of Aſaph, with cymbals to praiſe the Lord, after the ordinance of David king of Iſrael; theſe were inſtruments of braſs, and made a tinkling ſound, and were by the order of David; and the perſons that made uſe of them; and the ſongs of praiſe they were played upon unto; all by his appointment, as well as harps and pſalteries, which might now be uſed, though not expreſſed; ſee 1 Chron. xv. 16. and xxv. 1. So the Meſſenians, when the walls of their city were raiſed by Epaminondas, and their houſes and temples erected, attended it with ſacrifices and prayer, and with piping and ſinging [b].

℣. 11. And they ſang together by courſe, &c.] They ſang by turns in reſponſes, and anſwered one another, as the word ſignifies; when one company had performed their part, another took theirs: in praiſing and giving thanks to the Lord; for returning them to their own land, and giving them opportunity, ability, and will, to ſet about the rebuilding of the temple of the Lord, and reſtoring the pure worſhip of God: becauſe he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever towards Iſrael; which words are often repeated in Pſ. cxxxvi. and which might be the pſalm the Levites now ſung by reſponſes: and all the people ſhouted with a great ſhout when they praiſed the Lord; to expreſs their joy, in the beſt manner they could, on this ſolemn occaſion: becauſe the foundation of the houſe of the Lord was laid; which gave them hope the temple in due time would be rebuilt, and the ſervice of it reſtored; ſee Job xxxviii. 6, 7.

℣. 12. But many of the prieſts and Levites, and chief of the fathers, who were antient men, &c.] Seventy or eighty years of age: that had ſeen the firſt houſe; the temple built by Solomon, as they very well might, ſince then it had been deſtroyed but 52 years; for the 70 years captivity are to be reckoned from the 4th of Jehoiakim when it began, and which was 18 years before the deſtruction of the temple; the beginning of the next clauſe, when in the foundation, according to the Hebrew accents, is to be connected with this, that had ſeen the firſt houſe; not when firſt founded, for that was 500 years ago, but in its foundation; they ſaw it ſtanding upon its foundation, in all its glory, and ſo the Septuagint verſion; and we may read on, when this houſe was before their eyes, wept with a loud voice; ſeeing what it was like to be by the foundation now laid, and was in their ſight as nothing in compariſon of the former; ſee Hagg. ii. 3. but Aben Ezra connects this clauſe as we do, when the foundation of this houſe was laid; not but that the dimenſions of this houſe ſtrictly taken were as large as the former; ſee ch. vi. 3, 4. but not the courts and appendages to it; beſides what might affect them, there was no likelihood of its being ſo richly decorated with gold and ſilver as the former temple, and many things would be wanting in it, as the Urim and Thummim, &c. and many ſhouted aloud for joy; of the younger ſort, who had never ſeen the grandeur of the firſt temple, and were highly delighted with the beginning of this, and the hope of ſeeing it finiſhed.

℣. 13. So that the people could not discern the noise of the shout of joy, from the noise of the weeping of the people, &c.] That is, not clearly and distinctly, they were so mixed and confounded together, and made such a jarring and discord: for the people shouted with a loud shout, and the noise was heard afar off; the shouting being of young people, whose voice was strongest, and they the most numerous, the noise of shouting prevailed over the noise of weeping; and it was heard farther, and at a distance appeared more distinctly to be the noise of shouting, that of weeping not reaching so far; though Jarchi is of opinion, that the noise of weeping was heard farther than the noise of shouting, which is not likely.

CHAP. IV.

THE contents of this chapter are the offer the Samaritans made to the Jews, to assist them in building the temple, which having refused, they gave them all the trouble they could, ℣. 1—6. and a letter of theirs to Artaxerxes, king of Persia, full of accusations of them, ℣. 7—16. and the answer of Artaxerxes to it, giving orders to command the Jews to cease building the temple, ℣. 17——22. which orders were accordingly executed, and the work ceased till the 2d year of Darius, ℣. 23, 24.

℣. 1. Now when the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin, &c.] The Samaritans, as appears from ℣. 2, 10. heard that the children of the captivity; the Jews, who had been in captivity 70 years, and were just come out of it, and still were not quite free, but under the jurisdiction and controul of the king of Persia: builded the temple unto the Lord God of Israel; that they were going about it, and had laid the foundation of it, which might soon come to their ears, the distance not being very great. Josephus [c] says they heard the sound of the trumpets, and came to know the meaning of it.

℣. 2. Then they came to Zerrubbabel, and the chief of the fathers, &c.] These they addressed, as knowing that if they could not prevail with them, they could never succeed in their design; and these were no doubt the principal of the Samaritans that applied: and said unto them, let us build with you; that is, the temple, they proposed to join with them, and assist them in it; which proposal at first sight might seem very agreeable and welcome, and would have been so had they been sincere, but they were not; they hoped by getting among them, to have sown discord among them, and disunited them; and so by these or other means to have retarded the building; or if it went forward, that they might have a claim to it as theirs, at least as to set up their own idols in a part of it; the reasons they gave follow: for we seek your God as ye do; which was false, for they did not worship him alone, but with idols, nor in the same manner as the Jews did: and we do sacrifice unto him; but even that could not recommend them to the Jews, since they ought not to sacrifice even to the Lord himself, but at Jerusalem: there is a various reading here; the textual reading is, we do not sacrifice; that is, to idols; the marginal reading is, we sacrifice to him, which we follow; Aben Ezra takes in both, perhaps most rightly: we do not sacrifice to any other, but to him; which was also false: since the days of Esarhaddon, king of Assur, who brought us up hither; to Samaria, from Babylon, and other places; see 2 Kings xvii. 24.

℣. 3. But Zerubbabel, and Jeshua, and the rest of the chief of the fathers, said unto them, &c.] The prince and high-priest, and chief of the people: you have nothing to do with us, to build an house to our God; being neither of the same nation, nor of the same religion: but we ourselves together will build to the Lord God of Israel; we and we only, who are together as one man, united in one body of people, and in the same religious sentiments, being Israelites; we separately, without admitting strangers among us, will build a temple to the God of Israel: as king Cyrus, the king of Persia, hath commanded us; thereby letting them know that they acted by his authority, and the commission they had from him only concerned themselves, and not others.

℣. 4. Then the people of the land weakened the hands of the people of Judah, and troubled them in building;] By threatening them, or by dissuading the workmen from going on, by endeavouring to hinder their having materials from the Tyrians and Zidonians, or money out of the king's revenues to bear the expences as ordered; see ch. vi. 4.

℣. 5. And hired counsellors against them, to frustrate their purpose, &c.] Either to advise and persuade the king of Persia's officers in those parts not to supply them with money, or to influence the great men at his court to get the edict revoked: and this they did all the days of Cyrus, king of Persia; who though the hearty friend and patron of the Jews, yet being engaged in wars abroad with the Lydians and Scythians, and leaving his son as vice-roy in his absence, who was no friend unto them, the work went on but slowly, attended with interruptions and discouragements: even until the reign of Darius, king of Persia; who was Darius Hystaspis, between whom and Cyrus were Cambyses the son of Cyrus, and Smerdis the impostor, who pretended to be Smerdis, the brother of Cambyses; a space of about 15 years.

℣. 6. And in the reign of Ahasuerus, in the beginning of his reign, &c.] According to Jarchi, this was Ahasuerus the husband of Esther; but, as most think [d], was Cambyses, the son and successor of Cyrus; so Josephus [e]; who was an enemy to the Egyptians; and fearing the Jews might take part with them, was no friend to them; their enemies therefore took the advantage of the death of Cyrus, and the first opportunity after Cambyses reigned in his own right: and wrote they unto him an accusation against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem; full of hatred and enmity, spite and malice, charging them as a turbulent, disobedient, and rebellious people.

℣. 7. And in the days of Artaxerxes, &c.] The same with Ahasuerus, in the preceding verse; and who who also is Cambyses, which is his name in heathen authors, Artaxerxes being a common name to the kings of Persia; though some [f] think this was Smerdis, the magician and impostor, who was between Cambyses and Darius; but as he reigned but seven months, it is not very likely that he should be wrote unto, and an answer received from him; besides he sent to every nation he ruled over [g], and so to the Jews, and proclaimed to them freedom from tribute and the militia for three years, to ingratiate himself to them: wrote Bishlam, Mithredath, Tabeel, and the rest of their companions; or his company; for Jarchi thinks only one person is meant; that Mithredath Tabeel is the name of one of the adversaries of Judah; and that Bishlam is an appellative, and signifies that he wrote in peace, or in a way of salutation and greeting; but they seem to be the names of governors in the cities of Samaria under the king of Persia; these wrote to Artaxerxes, king of Persia; instigated by the Samaritans: and the writing of the letter was written in the Syrian tongue, and interpreted in the Syrian tongue; or Chaldee, of which Ezra gives a copy in the Chaldee language; the meaning either is, that it was written both in Syriac letters and in the Syriac language; for sometimes words are written in one language and in the character of another, as the Syriac is sometimes written in Hebrew characters, and the Hebrew in Roman; or else there was a postscript added to this letter, explaining some things in it, which also was written in the same language: some take [h] the word Nishtevan, rendred written, to be the name of a province on the borders of the country beyond Euphrates, whose figure and characters were in high esteem, and fit to write in to kings; but the words and language were Syrian, and needed interpretation.

ver. 8. Rehum the chancellor, and Shimshai the scribe, wrote a letter against Jerusalem to Artaxerxes the king in this sort.] This means the same letter as before; which, according to Jarchi, was sent in the name of Mithredath Tabeel and his company, was indited by Rehum, master of words or sense, and written by Shimshai the scribe, whom he makes to be a son of Haman [i]; but it was written rather in all their names.

ver. 9. Then wrote Rehum the chancellor, and Shimshai the scribe, and the rest of their companions, &c.] Who all signed the letter; namely, the governors of the following nations; the Dinaites, the Apharsathchites, the Tarpelites, the Apharsites, the Archevites, the Babylonians, the Susanchites, the Dehavites, and the Elamites; which were colonies from several parts of Chaldea, Media, and Persia, and were settled in the several cities of Samaria, as several of their names plainly shew, as from Persia, Arech, Babylon, Shushan, and Elimais; some account for them all, but with uncertainty; according to R. Jose [k], these were the Samaritans who first were sent out of five nations, to whom the king of Assyria added four more, which together make the nine here mentioned, see 2 Kings xvii. 24.

ver. 10. And the rest of the nations whom the great and noble Asnapper brought over, &c.] The river Euphrates: and set in the cities of Samaria; placed there in the room of the Israelites carried captive; this Asnapper was, according to Jarchi and others [l], Senacherib; but with Grotius, Salmaneser; rather he was Esarhaddon, the son of the former, and grandson of the latter; so Dr. Prideaux [m]; though he might be only some commander of the Assyrian monarch, who carried them over by his orders: and the rest that are on this side the river; the river Euphrates: and at such a time; which may respect the date of the letter, which, no doubt, was expressed, though not here given; or this, as some think, was the same with our &c. something following, unto king Artaxerxes greeting, or something like that; though David de Pomis [n] takes it to be the general name of the people beyond the river.

ver. 11. This is the copy of the letter they sent unto him, even unto Artaxerxes the king, &c.] Which Ezra brought with him from Babylon, and is contained in the five following verses: thy servants the men on this side the river, and at such a time; this was the inscription of the letter, or the beginning of it.

ver. 12. Be it known unto the king, &c.] The intent of this letter was, that it might be known to the king what follows: that the Jews which came up from thee to us, are come unto Jerusalem; this they observe partly out of contempt of the Jews, having been lately captive in Babylon, and partly to insinuate what ingratitude they were guilty of; that having got their liberty, and come to Jerusalem, they made use of it to the king's detriment: building the rebellious and the bad city; as they suggest it had been to kings, even his predecessors, in former times, ver. 15. and have set up the walls thereof, and joined the foundations; which was a falsehood; for the most they had done was setting up the walls of their houses in Jerusalem, and laying the foundation of the temple; as for the walls of the city, they had not as yet done any thing unto them.

ver. 13. Be it known now unto the king, &c.] And let it be seriously and thoroughly considered by him and his counsellors: that if this city be builded, and its walls set up again, then will they not pay toll, tribute, and custom; being able to defend themselves against the king's forces, sent to reduce them to their obedience; these three words take in all sorts of taxes and levies on persons, goods, and merchandize: and so thou shalt endamage the revenue of the kings; not only his own, but his successors; this they thought would be a very striking and powerful argument with him.

ver. 14. Now because we have maintenance from the king's palace, &c.] Have posts under the king, to which salaries were annexed, by which they were supported, and which they had from the king's exchequer; or salt [o], as in the original, some places of honour and trust formerly being paid in salt; hence, as Pliny [p] observes, such honours and rewards were called salaries: and it was not meet for us to see the king's dishonour; to see any thing done injurious to his crown and dignity, to his honour and revenues, when we are supported by him; this would be ungrateful as well as unjust: therefore have we sent and certified the king; of the truth of what is before related; and for the further confirmation of it, refer him to the antient records of the kingdom, as follows.

℣. 15. That ſearch may be made in the book of the records of thy fathers, &c] That is, his predeceſſors in the Babylonian monarchy; though, as the Medes and Perſians were included in that, and joined the Babylonians in their wars with others, and particularly with the Jews; the records of the Medes and Perſians might alſo be applied to: ſo ſhalt thou find in the book of the records, and know, that this city is a rebellious city, and hurtful unto kings and provinces, and that they have moved ſedition within the ſame of old time; againſt the king of Babylon, particularly in the times of Jehoiakim and Zedekiah: for which cauſe was this city deſtroyed; as it was by Nebuchadnezzar; ſee 2 Kings xxiv. 1. 20. and xxv. 1. 9.

℣ 16. We certify the king, that if this city be builded again, and the walls thereof ſet up, &c.] As it formerly was, and now attempted, as they ſuggeſt: by this means thou ſhalt have no portion on this ſide the river; the river Euphrates; intimating that the Jews would not only ſhake off his yoke, and refuſe to pay tribute themſelves, but would ſeize on all his dominions on that ſide the river, and annex them to their own.

℣. 17. Then ſent the king an anſwer unto Rehum the chancellor, and to Shimſhai the ſcribe, &c.] This affair, upon examination, being found to be of importance, the king of Perſia thought fit to ſend an anſwer to the above letter, which was doing them an honour, and gave them the power and authority they wiſhed to have: and to the reſt of their companions that dwelt in Samaria; in the kingdom, province, and cities of Samaria: and unto the reſt beyond the river; the river Euphrates, the reſt of the nations before-mentioned, ℣. 9, 10. Peace, and at ſuch a time; that is, all health and proſperity, &c.

℣. 18. The letter which ye ſent unto us, &c.] The plural number is uſed, being now become courtly for kings thus to ſpeak of themſelves: hath been plainly read before me; by ſuch that underſtood both the Syrian and Perſian languages; the letter was written in the Syrian language, and the king being a Perſian, it was neceſſary it ſhould be interpreted and explained to him.

℣. 19. And I commanded, and ſearch hath been made, &c.] In the records of his predeceſſors, whether Chaldeans or Perſians: and it is found, that this city of old time hath made inſurrection againſt kings, and that rebellion and ſedition have been made therein; and yet this could not be carried higher than to the times of Zedekiah and Jehoiakim, as before obſerved, which was not 100 years ago, unleſs the rebellion of Hezekiah againſt the king of Aſſyria could be thought to be in theſe records, 2 Kings xviii. 7. and yet from hence it is concluded, as if in ages paſt they had been guilty of rebellion and ſedition, and even always.

℣. 20. There have been mighty kings alſo over Jeruſalem, which have ruled over all countries beyond the river, &c.] As David and Solomon; and the account of theſe they had in their records, ſee 2 Sam. viii. 1 Kings iv. 21. 24. and toll, tribute, and cuſtom was paid unto them; as appears from the places referred to; and this ſerved to ſtrengthen the inſinuation made to the king, that if theſe people were ſuffered to go on building, he would loſe his tribute and taxes in thoſe parts.

℣. 21. Give ye now commandment to cauſe theſe men to ceaſe, &c.] From building: and that this city be not builded, until another commandment ſhall be given from me; he might ſuſpect that this caſe, in all its circumſtances, was not truly ſtated, and that hereafter he might ſee reaſon to recede from the preſent orders he gave; and the rather, as by ſearching, and perhaps on his own knowledge, muſt have obſerved, that his father Cyrus had ſhewn favour to the Jews, and had not only ſet them at liberty, but had encouraged them to rebuild their temple; which might be what they were about, and was the caſe, and nothing elſe, except their houſes to dwell in.

℣. 22. Take heed now that ye fail not to do this, &c.] To put his orders into execution, and at once, without any loſs of time, oblige the Jews to deſiſt from rebuilding the walls of their city, which he was told they were doing, though a great falſehood: why ſhould damage grow to the hurt of the kings? of him and his ſucceſſors, to be deprived of their toll, tribute, and cuſtoms, and to have inſurrections, mutinies, and rebellions in the dominions belonging to them.

℣. 23. Now when the copy of king Artaxerxes letter was read before Rehum, and Shimſhai the ſcribe, and their companions, &c.] By him or them to whom it was particularly directed: they went up in haſte to Jeruſalem unto the Jews; not only in obedience to the king's command, but from an eagerneſs of ſpirit to put a ſtop to the proceedings of the Jews, to whom they had an averſion, inſtigated by the Samaritans: and made them to ceaſe by force and power; from going on with the building of the temple, which they reckoned a part of the city, and within their commiſſion; this they did by ſhewing the power and authority they had under the king's hand, and by the forces they brought with them to compel them to it, ſhould they refuſe to obey; or however, they threatened them highly what they would do, if they did not deſiſt.

℣. 24. Then ceaſed the work of the houſe of God, which is at Jeruſalem, &c.] How far they had proceeded is not ſaid, whether any farther than laying the foundation of it; though probably, by this time, it might be carried to ſome little height; however, upon this it was diſcontinued: ſo it ceaſed unto the ſecond year of the reign of Darius king of Perſia; not Darius Nothus, as ſome think, for from the firſt of Cyrus to the ſixth of his reign, when the temple was finiſhed, was upwards of 100 years; yea, according to ſome, about 140; which would carry the age of Zerubbabel, who both laid the foundation of the temple, and finiſhed it, and the age of thoſe who ſaw the firſt temple, to a length that is not probable; but this was Darius Hyſtaſpis, who ſucceeded Cambyſes the ſon of Cyrus, there being only between, the ſhort uſurpation of Smerdis for ſeven months.

CHAP. V.

THIS chapter relates, how that the people of the Jews were ſtirred up by the prophecies of Haggai and Zechariah to ſet about the building of the temple again, notwithſtanding the orders to the contrary from the deputy-governors of the king of Perſia; nor could the preſent ones cauſe them to ceaſe from it; though it muſt be owned they behaved towards them in a better manner than the former ones did, ℣. 1—5. and who, upon the answers received from the Jews, wrote a letter to Darius, to know the truth of things; and in which they seem to state fairly the case of the Jews, as they had it from them, so far as they understood it, ℣. 6—17.

℣. 1. Then the prophets, Haggai the prophet, and Zechariah the son of Iddo, &c.] The grandson of Iddo; for he was the son of Barachiah, Zech. i. 1. prophesied unto the Jews that were in Judah and Jerusalem, in the name of the God of Israel; this they both did in the second year of Darius; the one began in the sixth month, and the other in the eighth month of the year, Hag. i. 1. Zech. i. 1. even unto them; or against them, as De Dieu; reproving them for their sloth and neglect of building the temple, when they were careful enough to raise up goodly houses for themselves to dwell in; and for being intimidated by the command of the king of Persia, which only forbid the building of the city, that is, the walls of it, but not the temple any more than their own houses; and besides, there was now a new king, from whom they had not so much to fear.

℣. 2. Then rose up Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, &c.] Whose spirits were stirred up and quickened by the ministry of the prophets, the Lord accompanying it by his spirit, Hag. i. 12. 14. and began to build the house of God which is at Jerusalem; to go on with the building of it; for they had laid the foundation before, and perhaps had carried it up to some little height at least, before they ceased from it, ch. ii. 10. and with them were the prophets of God helping them; with words of counsel, comfort, and exhortation, directing and encouraging them, and promising them protection and success; these are the prophets before named.

℣. 3. At the same time came to them Tatnai, governor on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, and their companions, &c.] These were new governors and officers under the king of Persia in those parts, the old ones, Rehum, Shimshai, &c. being either dead, or removed upon this new king coming to the throne: these came to the Jews, and said thus unto them, Who hath commanded you to build this house, and to make up this wall? for it seems by this time they had raised up the walls of the temple from its foundation to some height; for of these it must be understood, see ℣. 8. 9. for it can hardly be thought they were as yet inclosing it with a wall round about it; now they asked them by what authority they did this? who set them to work? and what were their names? for that this question was asked, though not here expressed, is clear from ℣. 10. and to which an answer is given in the next verse.

℣. 4. Then said we unto them after this manner, &c.] In answer to their questions; namely, Ezra and other Jews replied; for though Ezra is said after this to come from Babylon in the 7th year of Artaxerxes, he might go thither on some business, and then return again at that time; some indeed think these are the words of Tatnai and those with him; so Ben Melech, which seems to be favoured by ℣. 10. and by reading the words with an interrogation, as we do; Aben Ezra says they are either the words of the builders, or of the scribes, the secretaries that came to question them; but they are the words of the former, as order requires, or otherwise no answer would be returned, at least as expressed; and the next clause may be read without an interrogation, and the sense be, that they told them not only that they acted according to an edict of Cyrus king of Persia, for this was said, as appears from ℣. 13, but they declared what were the names of the men that did make this building; or employed them in it, namely, Zerubbabel, Jeshua, and the chief men of the Jews; they made no scruple of telling them who they were; neither ashamed of their masters nor of their work, nor afraid of any ill consequences following hereon.

℣. 5. But the eye of their God was upon the elders of the Jews. &c.] He in his providence looked favourably at them, smiled upon them, encouraged them in the work by his good spirit, and by the prophets, and gave them success, and protected and defended them, see 2 Chron. xvi. 9. Zech. iii. 9. and iv. 10. that they could not cause them to cease, till the matter came to Darius; they were not intimidated by what the governour and those with him said to them, but went on in their work; nor did the governor attempt to interrupt them, they having referred him and their cause to Darius for the truth of what they had said, and for farther information from him: and then they returned answer by letter concerning this matter; that is, Tatnai and those with him sent a letter to Darius about this affair, to which they had an answer, which are both related in this and the following chapters.

℣. 6. The copy of the letter that Tatnai, governor on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, and his companions the Apharsachites, which were on this side the river, &c.] Which is thought by some to be one of the nations mentioned, ch. iv. 9. the name being pretty near alike to two of them; but perhaps might be a distinct colony in those parts Tatnai was governor of: these sent unto Darius the king; and is as follows.

℣. 7. They sent a letter unto him, wherein was written thus, &c.] Or this was the inscription of it: Unto Darius the king, all peace; wishing him all kind of happiness and prosperity.

℣. 8. Be it known unto the king, &c.] This seems to have been the usual form of beginning a letter to a king in those days, ch. iv. 12. that we went into the province of Judea; which from a kingdom was reduced to a province, and was become a part of the Babylonian, now Persian, monarchy, see ch. ii. 1. to the house of the great God; as the Jews called the Lord their God; and even the heathens had a notion that there was one supreme God, though they worshipped inferior ones; and some had a notion that Jehovah the God of the Jews was he: which is builded with great stones; marble stones, as Jarchi [q], stones of rolling, as it may be rendered; which, according to Aben Ezra, were so large and heavy, that they could not be carried, but were obliged to roll them: and timber is laid in the walls; cedar wood, as Aben Ezra interprets it, for beams, for flooring and raftering; or rather, is put upon the walls, for the lining and wainscotting of them, which was done with cedar-wood: and this work goeth fast on, and prospereth in their hands; and unless timely prevented, will soon be finished.

℣. 9. Then asked we those elders, &c.] The elders of the province of Judea; the chief men of it: Who commanded you to build this house, and to make up these walls? see ℣. 3.

℣. 10. We asked their names also, &c.] The names

names of the elders, thoſe that ſet men about this work: to certify that we might write the names of the men that were the chief of them; take the names of them in writing, that they might with certainty acquaint the king who they were, and that if it was neceſſary they might be called to an account for what they were doing.

℣. 11. And thus they returned us anſwer, &c.] To the purpoſe and in the manner following: ſaying, We are the ſervants of the God of heaven and earth; ſignifying that they were doing his work, in obedience to his will, and to whom they were accountable: and build the houſe that was builded theſe many years ago; even 500 years ago, or thereabout; ſo that they were not erecting a building where there was none before, but were rebuilding what was in ruins: which a great king of Iſrael builded and ſet up; king Solomon, who was a great king for wiſdom, honour, riches, peace, proſperity, and extent of his kingdom.

℣. 12. But after that our fathers had provoked the God of heaven unto wrath, &c.] By their idolatries; which accounts for it, how it was that they who were the ſervants of the great God of heaven and earth, and this temple built for the honour of his name, were not preſerved by him; but they were carried captive, and this houſe left deſolate: it was for their ſins for which he (God) gave them into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon the Chaldean, who deſtroyed this houſe, and carried the people away into Babylon; ſee 2 Chron. xxxvi. 19, 20.

℣. 13. But in the firſt year of Cyrus the king of Babylon, &c.] That is, the firſt year he was king of Babylon, having taken it, otherwiſe he was king of Perſia many years before: the ſame king Cyrus made a decree to build this houſe of God; ſee ch. i. 1, 2, 3, 4.

℣. 14, 15. And the veſſels alſo of gold and ſilver of the houſe of God, &c.] Of which, and of what is ſaid concerning them, and particularly of the delivery of them to Sheſhbazzar, whom Cyrus made governor of Judah, and ordered him to carry them to Jeruſalem, and build the temple there, and put them in it, ſee ch. i. 7—11.

℣. 16. Then came the ſame Sheſhbazzar, and laid the foundation of the houſe of God which is in Jeruſalem, &c.] Which makes it clear, that by Sheſhbazzar is meant Zerubbabel; for he it was that laid the foundation of the temple, or at leaſt by whoſe order it was laid, ſee Zech. iv. 9. and ſince that time even until now; from the 1ſt of Cyrus to the 2d of Darius, a ſpace of about 18 years, and juſt 70 from the deſtruction of the temple: hath it been in building, and yet it is not finiſhed; the work going on ſlowly, not without interruption and intermiſſion, through the enmity of the Samaritans unto them, who had made falſe repreſentations of them; but theſe men, Tatnai and thoſe with him, as the Jews gave them a very particular account of things, as above, ſo they fairly and fully related them in this their letter to the king.

℣. 17. Now therefore, if it ſeem good to the king, let there be ſearch made in the king's treaſure-houſe, which is there at Babylon, &c.] Where were the archives of the kingdom, where the laws, decrees, edicts, and proclamations, and other things relating to the ſtate were laid up, that recourſe might be had to them upon occaſion: whether it be ſo, that a decree was made of Cyrus the king, to build this houſe of God at Jeruſalem; which the Jews affirmed was made by him, and upon which they proceeded: and let the king ſend his pleaſure to us concerning this matter; whether the Jews ſhould be allowed to go on with the building of their temple, and finiſh it, or whether they ſhould be reſtrained from it; ſignifying they were ready to do his will and pleaſure either way, as he thought fit.

CHAP. VI.

DARIUS, on receiving the letter from his officers in Samaria, ſearched for the decree of Cyrus, and found it, and which he confirmed, ℣. 1—7. and made a freſh decree, and ordered expences to be given out of his tribute for the building of the temple, and for the ſacrifices of it; and that whoſoever altered it ſhould be hanged on the timber of his own houſe, and imprecated a curſe on thoſe that ſhould deſtroy the houſe of God, ℣. 8—12. upon which the building went on, and was finiſhed, ℣. 13, 14, 15. and the temple was dedicated to God in a ſolemn manner, ℣. 16, 17, 18. and the paſſover was kept by all the people, ℣. 19—22.

℣. 1. Then Darius the king made a decree, &c.] To make enquiry after the edict of Cyrus, to ſearch the public records for it: and ſearch was made in the houſe of the rolls; or books [r], in a public library or muſeum: where the treaſures were laid up in Babylon; where things of worth and value were repoſited; not only gold, ſilver, jewels, and precious ſtones, and things rare and curious, but all ſorts of writings relating to the monarchy and the dominions belonging to it; but it ſeems it could not be found here, and therefore the king ordered ſearch to be made elſewhere.

℣. 2. And there was found at Achmetha, &c.] Which Jarchi and Aben Ezra take to be the name of a veſſel in which letters and writings were put for ſafety; but it was no doubt the name of a place; the Vulgate Latin verſion has it Ecbatana; and ſo Joſephus [s]; which was the name of a city in Media, where the kings of that country had their reſidence in the ſummer-time [t]; for it has its name from heat [u]; the Perſian kings dwelt at Shuſhan in the winter, and at Ecbatana in the ſummer [w]; hence they are compared by Ælian [x] to cranes, birds of paſſage, becauſe of their going to and from the above places: in the palace that is in the province of the Medes, here was found a roll; which was the decree of Cyrus, which perhaps he took with him when he went thither: and therein was a record thus written; as follows.

℣. 3. In the firſt year of Cyrus the king, the ſame Cyrus the king made a decree concerning the houſe of God at Jeruſalem, Let the houſe be builded, &c.] See ch. i. 1—4. Iſ. xliv. 28. the place where they offered ſacrifices; to God in times paſt, ever ſince it was built by Solomon: and let the foundations thereof be ſtrongly laid; ſo as to bear and ſupport the building erected on them, as the word ſignifies: the height height thereof 60 cubits; which were 30 more than the height of Solomon's temple, 1 Kings vi. 2. tho' 60 leſs than the height of the porch, which was 120, 2 Chron. iii. 4. and which ſome take to be the heighth of the whole houſe; and hence it may be obſerved what Herod ſaid [y], that the temple then in being wanted 60 cubits in height of that of Solomon's: and the breadth thereof 60 cubits; whereas the breadth of Solomon's temple was but 20, 1 Kings vi. 2. but ſince it cannot reaſonably be thought that the breadth ſhould be equal to the height, and ſo very diſproportionate to Solomon's temple; many learned men underſtand this of the extenſion of it as to length, which exactly agrees with the length of the former temple, 1 Kings vi. 2.

℣. 4. With three rows of great ſtones, &c.] Which Jarchi interprets of the walls of it, and theſe ſtones of marble; and ſo Ben Melech: and a row of new timber; of cedar wood upon the rows of ſtone, ſee 1 Kings vi. 36. or for the lining and wainſcotting the walls: and let the expences be given out of the king's houſe; treaſury, or exchequer; but it does not appear that this part of the decree was obſerved, at leaſt hitherto; but the Jews built at their own expence, and perhaps did not exactly obſerve the directions given as to the dimenſions of the houſe.

℣. 5. And alſo let the golden and ſilver veſſels, &c.] See ch. i. 7—11. and which confirms what the Jews ſaid to Tatnai, ch. v. 14, 15.

℣. 6. Now therefore Tatnai, governor beyond the river, &c.] The river Euphrates, that ſide of it towards the land of Iſrael; Joſephus [z] calls this man, maſter of the horſe: Shethar-boznai, and your companions the Apharſachites, which are beyond the river, be ye far from thence; keep at a diſtance from the Jews, and give them no diſturbance, nor interrupt them in their work of building of the temple, but mind your own buſineſs and government.

℣. 7. Let the work of this houſe of God alone, &c.] Suffer them to go on with it, and don't hinder them; it looks, by theſe expreſſions, as if he had ſome ſuſpicion or hint given him, that they were inclined to moleſt them, or that there were ſome that ſtirred them up to it, and were deſirous of it: let the governor of the Jews, and the elders of the Jews, build this houſe of God in his place; where it formerly ſtood; that is, go on with the building of it.

℣. 8. Moreover, I make a decree, what ye ſhall do to the elders of theſe Jews, for the building of this houſe of God, &c.] This muſt be conſidered as an additional decree of Darius, which was peculiarly made by him, in which more was granted in favour of the Jews, and as an encouragement to them to go on with the building of the temple; though Joſephus [a] ſays, this is no other than a confirmation of the decree of Cyrus; for, according to him, all that is here granted to them, or threatened to others, from hence to the end of ℣. 12. was contained in the decree: that of the king's goods, even of the tribute beyond the river; what was collected out of his dominions on that ſide the river Euphrates, towards the land of Iſrael: according to Herodotus [b], this Darius was the firſt of the kings of Perſia that exacted tribute; under Cyrus and Cambyſes only preſents were brought; but he impoſed a tribute, and was therefore called καπηλος, an huckſter, as Cambyſes had the name of Lord, and Cyrus that of father; the ſame writer gives an account of the ſeveral nations he received it from, and the particular ſums, which in all amounted to 14,560 Euboic talents of gold; among whom are mentioned all Phœnicia and Syria, called Paleſtine, the tribute of which parts is the tribute beyond the river here referred to: and this king was well diſpoſed to the Jewiſh nation, temple, and worſhip before he was king, if what Joſephus [c] ſays is true, that while a private man, he vowed to God, that if he ſhould be king, he would ſend all the ſacred veſſels that were in Babylon to the temple at Jeruſalem: and out of the above tribute, it is ordered, that forthwith expences be given unto theſe men, that they be not hindered; from going on with the building, for want of money to buy materials, and pay the workmen.

℣. 9. And that which they have need of, both young bullocks, and rams, and lambs, for the burnt-offerings of the God of heaven, &c.] All which were uſed for burnt-offerings, ſee Lev. i. wheat, ſalt, wine, and oil; wheat, or fine flour, for the Minchah or meat-offering; ſalt, for every offering; wine, for the drink-offerings; and oil, to be put upon the meat-offerings, ſee Lev 2. according to the appointment of the prieſts which are at Jeruſalem, let it be given them day by day without fail; for the daily ſacrifice, and the meat and drink-offerings which attended it, Exod. xxix. 38—41.

℣. 10. That they may offer ſacrifices of ſweet ſavours unto the God of heaven, &c.] Such as will be acceptable to him, Gen. viii. 21. and pray for the life of the king, and of his ſons; prayer being wont to be made at the time of the morning and evening-incenſe; and the Jews uſed to pray for other people beſides themſelves, and eſpecially when deſired, and particularly for kings and civil magiſtrates, to whom they were ſubject, ſee Jer. xxix. 7. 1 Tim. ii 1, 2. the ſons of Darius Hyſtaſpis, for whoſe life, as well as his own, he would have prayer made, were, according to Herodotus [d], three by his firſt wife, the daughter of Gobryas, before he began to reign, the eldeſt of which was Artobazanes; which ſons muſt be here meant, ſince this was towards the beginning of his reign; he had afterwards four more by Atoſſa the daughter of Cyrus, the eldeſt of which was Xerxes, who ſucceeded him: many of the heathens had an high opinion of the God of the Jews, and of their prayers to him for them; even the emperor Julian [e] ſtiles him the beſt of all the Gods, and deſired the Jews to pray to him for the welfare of his kingdom; nor need it ſeem ſtrange that Darius ſhould deſire the ſame, ſince he was a devout prince; his father Hyſtaſpes is ſuppoſed by ſome to be the ſame that was one of the moſt famous among the Perſian Magi, or miniſters in ſacred things; and Darius himſelf had ſo great a veneration for the men of that ſacred order, that he commanded that it ſhould be put upon his ſepulchral monument, that he was maſter of the Magi [f]; and by his familiarity with the prieſts of Egypt, and learning their divinity, had the honour, whilſt alive, to have deity aſcribed to him [g].

℣. 11. Alſo I have made a decree, that whoſoever ſhall alter this word, &c.] Act contrary to this command, will not obey it, but as much as in him lies changes and revokes it: let timber be pulled down down from his houſe, and being ſet up, let him be hanged thereon; that is, let a beam be taken from it, and a gallows or gibbet made of it, and hang him on it: and let his houſe be made a dunghil for this; be pulled down, and never rebuilt more, ſee the note on Dan. iii. 2. 9.

℣. 12. And the God that hath cauſed his name to dwell there, &c.] Whoſe name is not only called upon there, and that called by his name; but who grants his preſence, and cauſes his Shekinah, or divine majeſty, to dwell there, as in Solomon's temple, which Darius had ſome knowledge of: deſtroy all kings and people; let them be who they will, high or low: that ſhall put to their hand to alter and to deſtroy this houſe of God, which is at Jeruſalem; this he ſaid to deter from hindering the building of it now, and from attempting to deſtroy it hereafter: I Darius have made a decree, let it be done with ſpeed; be carried immediately into execution, eſpecially with reſpect to the diſburſement for the building of the temple, and for the ſacrifices of it.

℣. 13. Then Tatnai, governor on this ſide the river, Shethar-boznai, and their companions, &c.] Having received and read the above letter: according to that which Darius the king had ſent, ſo they did ſpeedily; acquainted the Jews with what the king had written; were ſo far from hindering the work going forward, that they encouraged it; and made diſburſements to them out of the king's tribute, and furniſhed them with every thing neceſſary for ſacrifice; and this they did immediately, without delay.

℣. 14. And the elders of the Jews builded, &c.] Went on with the building of the temple: and they proſpered through the propheſying of Haggai the prophet, and Zechariah the ſon of Iddo; or grandſon, as before; being animated and encouraged by them; and as they foretold and promiſed it would be, ſo it was; they had ſucceſs in their work, the Lord over-ruling the heart of Darius the king and his council in their favour: and they builded, and finiſhed it; that is, the temple: according to the commandment of the God of Iſrael; by the above prophets, who ſpoke to them, and propheſied in his name: and according to the commandment of Cyrus, and Darius, and Artaxerxes king of Perſia; the commandment of Cyrus is in ch. i. 1. that of Darius in this, ℣. 8. but who Artaxerxes is, and his commandment, is not eaſy to ſay; he cannot be the Artaxerxes between Cyrus and Darius, but one that followed the latter; beſides, he was a hinderer of the building, ch. iv. 21—24. ſome think this was Xerxes the ſon and ſucceſſor of Darius, and who might be partner with his father in the empire at this time, and ſo is joined with him in this commandment; which is more probable, than that he ſhould be his grandſon Artaxerxes Longimanus, in whoſe reign the temple, it is ſuppoſed, was beautified and ornamented, though the exterior building of it was before finiſhed; and ſo he is ſpoken of by anticipation; and ſtill more plauſible, than that he ſhould be, with others, Artaxerxes Mnemon, the ſon of Darius Nothus; but after all, I am moſt inclined to think with Aben Ezra, that he is Darius himſelf; and the words to be read, Dariús, that is, Artaxerxes king of Perſia; Artaxerxes being, as he obſerves, a common name of the kings of Perſia, as Pharaoh was of the kings of Egypt; though this is by ſome rejected [h]; and who goes by this name in the continuance of this hiſtory, in whoſe ſeventh year, the year after this, Ezra went up to Jeruſalem, and in the 20th of his reign, Nehemiah, ch. vii. 1—7. Neh. ii. 1. and I find Dr. Lightfoot [i] was of the ſame mind; and according to Diodorus Siculus [k], the kings of Perſia were called by the name of Artaxerxes after Mnemon; and ſo they might before; Cambyſes is ſo called in ch. iv. 7. Herodotus [l] ſays the name ſignifies a mighty warrior.

℣. 15. And this houſe was finiſhed on the third day of the month Adar, &c.] The 12th month of the year with the Jews, and anſwers to part of our February and part of March: which was in the ſixth year of the reign of Darius the king; four years after the decree came forth.

℣. 16. And the children of Iſrael, &c.] Thoſe of the ten tribes that remained after the body of the people were carried captive, or came with the Jews at their return: the prieſts and the Levites, and the reſt of the children of the captivity; thoſe of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin: kept the dedication of this houſe of God with joy; they ſet it apart for ſacred uſe and ſervice, with feaſting and other expreſſions of joy and gladneſs, as follows.

℣. 17. And offered at the dedication of this houſe of God, 100 bullocks, 200 rams, 400 lambs, &c.] Hecatombs of various ſorts, which were always reckoned grand ſacrifices, even among heathens, of which Homer ſometimes ſpeaks; ſome of theſe were for burnt-offerings, and others peace-offerings, by way of thankfulneſs to God for the finiſhing of the temple; part of which, belonging to the offerers, they feaſted upon it with great gladneſs of heart: and for a ſin-offering for all Iſrael, 12 he-goats, according to the number of the tribes of Iſrael; for though the ten tribes were carried captive by Salmaneſer, yet, as before obſerved, there were ſome of them that remained in the land, and others that went and returned with the two tribes; and therefore a ſin-offering was made for them all, for the typical expiation of guilt contracted ſince they had been in an heathen land, and temple-ſervice had ceaſed.

℣. 18. And they ſet the prieſts in their diviſions, and the Levites in their courſes, for the ſervice of God, which is at Jeruſalem, &c.] All in their proper claſſes and courſes, to do the work of the temple at Jeruſalem in their turns: as it is written in the book of Moſes; ſee Numb. iii. 6. and viii. 11, 14, 15. from hence it is plain the Pentateuch was not written by Ezra, as ſuſpected by Spinoſa [m], but by Moſes; ſee the argument of the book of Geneſis.

℣. 19. And the children of the captivity kept the paſſover upon the 14th day of the firſt month.] The month Niſan or Abib, which was the month following that in which the temple was finiſhed, ℣. 15. this paſſover was kept at the exact time the law commanded, Exod. xii. 2. 6.

℣. 20. For the prieſts and the Levites were purified together, all of them were pure, &c.] They were all to a man pure, and all purified as one man; all were of one mind to purify themſelves, and took care to do it, and did it with as much diſpatch as if only one man was purified; ſo that they were more generally prepared for ſervice now than in the times of Hezekiah, 2 Chron. xxix. 34. and xxx. 3. and and killed the paſſover for all the children of the captivity, and for their brethren the prieſts, and for themſelves; which ſeems to have been done by the Levites, for themſelves and for the prieſts, and for all the people, who were not ſo pure as the prieſts and Levites; or otherwiſe they might have killed it themſelves, Exod. xii. 6. as Bochart [n] thinks.

℣. 21. And the children of Iſrael, which were come again out of captivity, &c.] The tribes of Judah and Benjamin, with ſome of the ten tribes mixed with them: and all ſuch as had ſeparated themſelves unto them, from the filthineſs of the heathen of the land, to ſeek the Lord God of Iſrael, did eat; ſuch of the Gentiles in the dominions of Babylon, and came with the Jews from thence, who were enlightened into the knowledge and worſhip of the true God, and not only renounced their idolatry, here called filthineſs, but were circumciſed, and embraced the religion of the Jews, and ſo were proſelytes of righteouſneſs, as they call them; or otherwiſe they would not have been allowed to eat of the paſſover, as they did, Exod. xii. 48.

℣. 22. And kept the feaſt of unleavened bread ſeven days with joy, &c.] Which immediately followed upon the paſſover, Exod. xii. 18, 19. for the Lord had made them joyful; the building of the temple being finiſhed, and the ſervice of it reſtored to its original purity: and turned the heart of the king of Aſſyria unto them, to ſtrengthen their hands in the work of the houſe of God, the God of Iſrael; by giving them leave to go on in building the temple, and by encouraging and aſſiſting them in it till they had finiſhed it; this was Darius Artaxerxes, who, though called king of Perſia, was alſo king of Aſſyria, being poſſeſſed of the Aſſyrian monarchy, as his predeceſſors were upon the taking of Babylon, and the ſame is therefore called alſo the king of Babylon, Neh. xiii. 6. God, the God of Iſrael, who has the hearts of all men in his hands, and ſo the hearts of kings, and can turn them at his pleaſure, inclined his heart to do them good, which was matter of joy unto them, ſee ch. vii. 27.

CHAP. VII.

IN this chapter we have the lineage and character of Ezra deſcribed, ℣. 1—6. his expedition to Jeruſalem, and of many others with him, ℣. 7—10. a copy of the commiſſion king Artaxerxes gave him to execute, ℣. 11—26. and his thankfulneſs, 27, 28.

℣. 1. Now after theſe things, &c.] The finiſhing of the temple, and the dedication of it, and keeping the paſſover: in the reign of Artaxerxes king of Perſia; in the 7th year of his reign, ℣. 7, 8. who is the ſame with Darius in the preceding chapter; ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra; ſee the note on ch. vi. 14. Ezra the ſon of Seraiah; the high-prieſt, ſlain by Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. lii. 24. 27. this Ezra was a younger ſon of his, brother to Joſedech, and uncle to Joſhua, who were high-prieſts in ſucceſſion; his pedigree is carried in the aſcending line up to Aaron, in this and the four following verſes; only ſix generations, for brevity-ſake, are omitted, between Azariah and Meraioth, which may be ſupplied from 1 Chron. vi. 7—10. ſee the notes there.

℣. 6. This Ezra went up from Babylon, &c.] A ſecond time; for that he went up with Zerubbabel is clear from Neh. xii. 1. and is plainly intimated, ch. v. 4. and he was a ready ſcribe in the law of Moſes, which the Lord God of Iſrael had given; the meaning is, not that he had a quick hand in writing out copies of it, but was well verſed in the knowledge of it; had ſtudied it thoroughly, well inſtructed in it, and was abundantly qualified to teach it others; he was an eminent doctor of the law; ſo ſcribes, in the New Teſtament, who are the ſame with the lawyers, were ſuch as were teachers of the law; the word here uſed in the Arabic language ſignifies to be expert, as Jarchi [o] learned from one of their doctors: and the king granted him all his requeſt, according to the hand of the Lord his God upon him; either upon Ezra, giving him favour with the king, and ſo ſucceſs and proſperity; or it may denote the divine influence of the God of Ezra upon the heart of the king, moving him to grant what he aſked of him, even every thing he deſired: he ſeems to have been ſent upon an embaſſy to the king from the chief men at Jeruſalem; perhaps the governors of Syria had not ſo fully made the diſburſements the king in his decree had required them to make, ſince the following commiſſion chiefly reſpects ſuch things; and he was ſent on that errand to acquaint the king with it, as well as to perſuade thoſe that remained to return, and to obtain leave for it.

℣. 7. And there went up ſome of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Perhaps ſome of the ten tribes, as well as others of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin; who, notwithſtanding the edict of Cyrus, choſe to remain in Babylon, and in the countries of it, until they ſaw how things would go in Judea; and hearing that the temple was finiſhed, and that thoſe that had returned had built them houſes in their ſeveral cities, and proſpered, thought fit to return alſo: and of the prieſts, and the Levites, and the ſingers, and the porters, and the Nethinims, unto Jeruſalem; to take their places, and execute their offices in the temple now built; for of the Levites eſpecially, ſome of which were ſingers, and others porters, and of the Nethinim, there were but few that went up with Zerubbabel: now this journey of theirs was taken in the 7th year of Artaxerxes the king; that is, of Darius Artaxerxes, and this was the year after the temple was finiſhed; though it is thought by many learned men, and not without ſome ſhew of reaſon, that Artaxerxes Longimanus is meant.

℣. 8. And he came to Jeruſalem in the fifth month, &c.] With the above company; this was the month Abib, anſwering to part of July and part of Auguſt: which was in the ſeventh year of the king; as in the preceding verſe.

℣. 9. For upon the firſt day of the firſt month began he to go up from Babylon, &c.] The month Niſan, anſwering to part of March and part of April; this was new year's day: and on the firſt day of the fifth month came he to Jeruſalem; the 1ſt of the month Ab, as in the preceding verſe; ſo that he was juſt four months on his journey: according to the good hand of his God upon him; his power and providence, which gave him and his company company health and ſtrength, ſupplied them with every thing neceſſary, directed, protected, and defended them, and brought them in ſafety to their journey's end.

℣. 10. For Ezra had prepared his heart to ſeek the law of the Lord, &c.] To attain to the knowledge of it, that he might be maſter of it, and expert in it, and know what was not to be done, and what to be done; he had ſet his heart upon this, bent his ſtudies this way, and taken a great deal of pains in ſearching into it, in reading of it, and meditating on it: and to do it; he was not only concerned to get the theory of it, but to put it in practice, to exerciſe himſelf in it, that it might be habitual to him; and the rather, as his view and intentions were not merely for the ſake of himſelf, but to teach in Iſrael ſtatutes and judgments; and therefore it was not only neceſſary that he ſhould have a large and competent knowledge of the laws, moral, ceremonial, and civil, but that he ſhould act according to them himſelf, that ſo by his example, as well as by his inſtructions, he might teach the people.

℣. 11. Now this is the copy of the letter that the king Artaxerxes gave unto Ezra the prieſt, &c.] This title relating to his office is juſtly given him, ſince he was the ſon of an high-prieſt, and lineally deſcended from Aaron, as the above account of his pedigree ſhews: the ſcribe, even a ſcribe of the words of the commandments of the Lord, and of his ſtatutes to Iſrael; the doubling of the word ſcribe ſhews that he was very wiſe and learned in the law, in the commandments and ſtatutes of it the Lord gave to Iſrael; not only in the language of it in which it was written, but in the matter and ſubſtance of it, in the things contained in it; for dibre ſignifies things as well as words.

℣. 12. Artaxerxes king of kings, &c.] Having ſeveral kings and kingdoms ſubject and tributary to him; for this was not merely a proud haughty title which the eaſtern kings [p] aſſumed, particularly the Perſians; for after Cyrus they were ſo in fact, who took this title alſo, and had it put on his ſepulchral monument, "Here I lie, Cyrus, king of kings [q];" this title was given to Grecian kings, particularly Agamemnon is called king of kings [r], he being general at the ſiege of Troy, under whom the reſt of the kings fought; if this was Darius Hyſtaſpis, of him Cyrus dreamt that he had wings on his ſhoulders, with one he covered Aſia, and with the other Europe [s]: Unto Ezra the prieſt, a ſcribe, of the law of the God of heaven; of which titles ſee in the preceding verſe: perfect peace, and at ſuch a time; the word perfect belongs to Ezra's title as a ſcribe, ſignifying that he was a moſt learned and compleat ſcribe or teacher of the law of God; peace is not in the text, and the phraſe at ſuch a time reſpects the date of the letter, though not expreſſed, or is only an et cætera, ſee the note on ch. iv. 10.

℣. 13. I make a decree, &c.] Which, according to the laws of the Medes and Perſians, when ſigned, might not be changed, Dan. vi. 8. that all they of the people of Iſrael, and of his prieſts, and Levites in my realm; who remained there, and took not the benefit of the edict of Cyrus, which gave them leave to go; but neglecting the opportunity, it ſeems as if they could not now go out of the realm without a freſh grant, which is hereby given: which are minded of their own free will to go up to Jeruſalem, go with thee; this decree did not oblige them to go whether they would or no; for they might, notwithſtanding this, continue if they pleaſed; it only gave them leave to make uſe of the preſent opportunity of going along with Ezra, if they choſe it.

℣. 14. Foraſmuch as thou art ſent of the king, and of his ſeven counſellors, &c.] Such a number the kings of Perſia uſed to have from the times of Darius Hyſtaſpis, who was choſen out of ſeven nobles to be king, and ever after the Perſian kings had ſeven counſellors privileged, as thoſe nobles were, Eſther i. 14. and Ezra had the honour to be ſent with a commiſſion from this king and his ſeven counſellors, to enquire concerning Judah and Jeruſalem; the inhabitants thereof, whether they had knowledge of, and behaved according to the law of thy God which is in thine hand; a copy of which he had with him, and was very expert in and converſant with, and could readily and at once paſs judgment, whether they acted according to it or not.

℣. 15. And to carry the ſilver and gold, which the king and his counſellors have freely offered unto the God of Iſrael, whoſe habitation is in Jeruſalem.] In the temple built there; for the ſervice of which, either for purchaſing and procuring veſſels that were wanting in it, or for ſacrifices to be offered in it, the king and his nobles had made a voluntary contribution, and entruſted and ſent Ezra with it.

℣. 16. And all the ſilver and gold that thou canſt find in all the province of Babylon, &c.] Not that he might take it wherever he found it, whether the owners of it were willing he ſhould have it or not; but whatever was freely offered by them, as Jarchi, that he was allowed to take, whatever he could get in that way: with the free-will-offering of the people; of the people of the Jews, who thought fit to continue in the province: and of the prieſts, offering willingly for the houſe of their God, which is in Jeruſalem; thoſe free-will-offerings, whether of the natives of Babylon, or of any of the Jewiſh nation, for the ſervice of the temple at Jeruſalem, he had leave and a commiſſion to carry with him.

℣. 17. That thou mayeſt buy ſpeedily with this money, &c.] Thus freely contributed by one and another: bullocks, rams, lambs; which were for burnt-offerings: with their meat-offerings, and their drink-offerings; which always went along with the burnt-offerings, according to the law of Moſes; and which the king ſeemed to have a right knowledge of, being, no doubt, inſtructed by Ezra, or ſome other Jew in his court: and offer them upon the altar of the houſe of your God which is in Jeruſalem; the altar of burnt-offering in the temple there.

℣. 18. And whatſoever ſhall ſeem good to thee, and to thy brethren, &c.] The prieſts, that he ſhould think fit to take in to his aſſiſtance in this work: to do with the reſt of the ſilver and gold; which ſhould be left after the ſacrifices were offered up: that do after the will of your God; as they ſhould be directed by him, or was preſcribed by him in the law.

℣. 19. The veſſels alſo that were given thee for the ſervice of the houſe of thy God, &c.] Theſe were veſſels of ſilver, baſons of gold, and veſſels of fine copper; not what formerly belonged to the temple, they were delivered by Cyrus to Sheſhbazzar; but what the preſent king and his counſellors freely offered fered at this time, see ch. viii. 25, 26. those deliver thou before the God of Jerusalem; perfect and compleat, the full number of them, as the word signifies [t]; meaning not to be delivered before him, or in his presence, as a witness thereof, but that they should be dedicated and devoted to his service, who was worshipped in the temple at Jerusalem, and by the inhabitants of it; he seems as if he thought him a topical deity, the God of that particular place, which was the notion of the heathens, see 1 Kings xx. 23. though he also speaks of him as the God of heaven.

℣. 20. And whatsoever more shall be needful for the house of thy God, which thou shalt have occasion to bestow, &c.] For the beautifying and ornamenting the temple, ℣. 27. bestow it out of the king's treasure-house; where the money collected by tribute, tax, and custom was deposited; his exchequer, as it may be called, see ch. vi. 8.

℣. 21. And I, even I Artaxerxes the king, do make a decree to all the treasurers which are beyond the river, &c.] The receivers of his tribute, tax, and custom beyond the river Euphrates, on that side towards the land of Israel: that whatsoever Ezra the priest, the scribe of the law of the God of heaven; see ℣. 12. shall require of you, it be done speedily; which seems at first a grant at large for whatsoever he should want or demand, but is limited and restrained by what follows.

℣. 22. Unto 100 talents of silver, &c.] Which amounted to 35,300 pounds sterling; these, according to Jarchi, were to buy the offerings or sacrifices with: and 100 measures of wheat; or cors, the same measure with the Homer, each of which held 10 ephahs, or 75 wine-gallons, 5 pints, and upwards; these, according to the same writer, were for meat-offerings, made of fine flour, or rather bread-offerings, as they may be called: and to 100 baths of wine; which was the same measure in liquids as the Ephah in things dry, a tenth part of the Cor or Homer, and held seven wine-gallons five pints, and upwards [u]; these were for the drink-offerings: and to 100 baths of oil; the same measure as before; these were to mix in the meat-offerings: and salt without prescribing how much; because it was used in all offerings, and was cheap, and therefore no measure is fixed, but as much as was wanting was to be given, see Lev. ii. 1—13.

℣. 23. Whatsoever is commanded by the God of heaven, &c.] In the law given by Moses to the people of Israel: let it be diligently done, for the house of the God of heaven; for the service of it, particularly sacrifices: for why should there be wrath against the realm of the king and his sons? through the neglect of the service of God in the temple, and by reason of the default of the king's treasurers.

℣. 24. Also we certify you, that touching any of the priests and Levites, singers, porters, Nethinims, or ministers of this house of God, &c.] The king had a right and perfect knowledge of the distinct offices and services of those persons, see ℣. 7. it shall not be lawful to impose toll, tribute, or custom upon them; that they might be the less incumbered with the affairs of life, and be more at leisure to attend divine service, and do it the more readily and freely; it was usual with the heathens to except ecclesiastics from taxes, tributes, and imposts; so the priests in Egypt [w], and the Druids here in Britain [x].

℣. 25. And thou, Ezra, after the wisdom of thy God, that is in thine hand, &c.] Which he had a large share of from the Lord, and could readily make use of to good purpose; and this may be meant of the law of God made with the highest wisdom, and to know and observe which is an instance of wisdom in men, Deut. iv. 6. set magistrates and judges, which may judge all the people that are beyond the river, all such as know the laws of thy God; such as God, in his great wisdom, directed to in his wise law to be appointed over the people, to judge righteous judgment; to inform them in all matters of controversy that might arise among them, and decide them according to it, and lead them into a greater and better knowledge of it, Deut. xvi. 18. and xvii. 9. Jarchi takes the word for set to be a comparative, and the sense to be, that the wisdom of Ezra was greater than the judges that judged the people, than them that knew the law: and teach ye them that know them not; such people that were ignorant thereof; though the above writer interprets this of ignorant judges, "the judge that knows not to judge, make him know judgment to do it."

℣. 26. And whosoever will not do the law of thy God, and the law of the king, &c.] Either the judge who delays judgment, or does not execute it according to the law of God, and of the king; or the people, that don't obey the law of God in matters of religion, and the law of the king in civil things, Judea being now a province of the Persian empire; though some think the law of the king only refers to this law or decree of the king, which gave the Jews power to execute their own laws: let judgment be executed speedily upon him; immediately, without delay, according to the nature of his crime: whether it be unto death; if guilty of a capital crime, deserving death, let him be put to death: or to banishment; from his native country to a foreign distant land; or to rooting out [y], as the word signifies; an utter extirpation of him and his family, a destroying him root and branch; or, as Jarchi expresses it, a rooting him out of the world, his seed and family: or to confiscation of goods; to payment of mulcts and fines: or to imprisonment; for such a term of time; all according to the breach of what law he may be guilty of; thus far the king's decree.

℣. 27. Blessed be the Lord God of our fathers, &c.] This is Ezra's thanksgiving to God for the above decree: which hath put such a thing as this in the king's heart; which he rightly took to be of God, who wrought in him to will and to do: to beautify the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem; to provide for the ornamenting of it, for vessels in it, as well as for sacrifices; for as for the building of it, that was finished.

℣. 28. And hath extended mercy unto me, before the king and his counsellors, and before all the king's mighty princes, &c.] Before Artaxerxes, his seven counsellors, ℣. 14. and the nobles of his realm, in being appointed by them to carry their free-will-offerings to Jerusalem, and the king's commands to his treasurers, with leave to take as many of the Jews with him as were willing to go: and I was strengthened as the hand of the Lord my God was upon upon me; animated to undertake this work, and execute this commiſſion, being under the influence of divine favour and protection: and I gathered together out of Iſrael, chief men to go up with me; he went about in the ſeveral parts where Iſraelites dwelt, and perſuaded ſome of the principal men among them to go along with him to Jeruſalem, ſhewing them the king's decree, which gave them leave; and their names and numbers are deſcribed in the next chapter.

CHAP. VIII.

IN this chapter we are told who and how many went up with Ezra to Jeruſalem, ℣. 1—14. the gathering of them together at a river, from whence he ſent to Babylon for Levites to come to him, who did, ℣. 15—20. the proclaiming a faſt for a ſafe and proſperous journey, ℣. 21, 22, 23. the delivery of the veſſels and money given him into the hands of prieſts, to take the care and charge thereof, ℣. 24—30. their ſafe arrival at Jeruſalem, where they depoſited the gifts in the temple, offered ſacrifices to God, and delivered the king's commiſſions to his lieutenants and governors, ℣. 31—36.

℣. 1. Theſe are now the chief of their fathers, and this is the genealogy of them, &c.] Which follows from hence to the end of ℣. 14. that went up with me from Babylon; with Ezra the prieſt and ſcribe, the writer of this book: in the reign of Artaxerxes the king; that is Darius Hyſtaſpis, in the 7th year of his reign, ſee ch. vii. 1. 7. though many think Artaxerxes Longimanus is meant.

℣. 2. Of the ſons of Phinehas; Gerſhom: of the ſons of Ithamar; Daniel, &c.] Not Daniel the prophet, he was of the blood royal, and of the tribe of Judah; this was a prieſt, a deſcendant of Ithamar, as Gerſhom was of Eleazar in the line of Phinehas: of the ſons of David; Hattuſh; perhaps the ſame with him in 1 Chron. iii. 22. who was a deſcendant of David the king; theſe three men ſeem to have come alone without any of their families, at leaſt they are not mentioned, nor their numbers given, as the reſt that follow be.

℣. 3. Of the ſons of Shechaniah, of the ſons of Pharoſh, &c.] Who is ſo deſcribed, to diſtinguiſh him from another Shechaniah, ℣. 5. Zechariah: and with him were reckoned by genealogy of the males, 150; males only were reckoned, not women and children; though that there were ſuch that went up is clear from ℣. 21. from hence to the end of ℣. 14. an account is given of the number of the males that went up with Ezra, who were chiefly, if not altogether, ſons of thoſe that went up with Zerubbabel; ſuch of them as were left there behind, and now returned, at leaſt a great number of them, ſee ch. ii. it is particularly remarked of the ſons of Adonikam, ℣. 13. that they were the laſt of them; not that they were the laſt that came in to go with Ezra, or were backward and dilatory, but the laſt with reſpect to the firſt of his ſons that were gone before, and ſeem with them to be the whole of his family; the number of all that went up under their reſpective heads amounts to 1496.

℣. 15. And I gathered them together to the river that runneth to Ahava, &c.] From whence alſo the river bore the ſame name; or that from the river, ſee ℣. 21. and may be the ſame with Adiabene, a country in Aſſyria, which had its name from the river Adiava: and there abode we in tents three days; or pitched their camp; this was the place of their rendezvous: and I viewed the people, and the prieſts; muſtered them, took the number of them, and what tribe and families they were of: and found there none of the ſons of Levi; excepting the prieſts.

℣. 16. Then ſent I for Eliezer, for Ariel, for Shemaiah, and for Elnathan, and for Jarib, and for Elnathan, and for Nathan, and for Zechariah, and for Meſhullam, chief men; alſo for Joiarib, and for Elnathan, men of underſtanding.] Theſe were all in the camp, in ſome part of it, to whom Ezra ſent meſſengers to come unto him; three of them are of the ſame name; the firſt nine were men of chief note, rank, and dignity in their family, and the other two were noted for men of good ſenſe, and that could ſpeak to a caſe well, and ſo fit to be ſent on ſuch an affair as they were.

℣. 17. And I ſent them with commandment unto Iddo the chief, at the place Caſiphia, &c.] Not a place by the Caſpian ſea, and near the Caſpian mountains, as Munſter, which was too far off to go and return in the time they muſt, ſee ch. vii. 9. and viii. 15. 31. but as Jarchi, a place in Babylon ſo called, a village near it, or a pariſh or ſtreet in it; where Ezra knew lived many of the Levites and Nethinim, and where Iddo was the chief of the Levites, and over them both: and I told them what they ſhould ſay unto Iddo, and to his brethren the Nethinims, at the place Caſiphia; but Iddo was not one of the Nethinim; for he was chief of the Levites, and by his authority many of them were ſent as well as of the Nethinim; but none of the latter were over the Levites, for they were ſervants to them, ℣. 20. but, according to Jarchi, the Nethinim are not at all intended in this clauſe, who reads the words, to Iddo and Achio, (the name of a man with him; perhaps it may be better rendered, to Iddo and his brother) who were appointed, or ſettled, in the place Caſiphia; and with him De Dieu agrees, and ſo the Syriac verſion, who dwelt in Caſiphia: that they ſhould bring unto us miniſters for the houſe of our God; both Levites to be ſingers and porters there, and the Nethinim to wait on them.

℣. 18. And by the good hand of our God upon us, &c.] Favouring their deſigns and orders, protecting thoſe that were ſent, and inclining thoſe they were ſent to, to uſe their intereſt and authority with thoſe that were under them, and making them willing alſo to agree to what was propoſed to them: they brought us a man of underſtanding of the ſons of Mahli, the ſon of Levi, the ſon of Iſrael; an Iſraelite, of the tribe of Levi, in the line of Mahli a ſon of Merari, the third ſon of Levi: and Sherebiah; or rather even Sherebiah; ſo Aben Ezra; for he is the underſtanding man that is meant, and deſcribed by his pedigree: with his ſons and his brethren, 18; all together made this number.

℣. 19. And Haſhabiah, and with him Jeſhaiah of the ſons of Merari, &c.] Theſe were of the ſame diviſion of Levites as Sherebiah: his brethren and their ſons, 20; theſe 38, with thoſe they came with, were all Levites; the Nethinim follow.

℣. 20. Alſo of the Nethinims, whom David and the princes had appointed for the ſervice of the Levites, &c.] To wait upon them, and miniſter to them, as they did to the prieſts; ſome think theſe were the ſame with the Gibeonites, whom Joſhua gave to the ſervice of the ſanctuary, and David confirmed; but others are of opinion theſe were different from them, and an addition to them: 220 Nethinims: all of them were expreſſed by name; in the hiſtory that Iddo ſent of them to Ezra; and ſo the names of the Levites, though not here expreſſed, only the names of thoſe they came with.

℣. 21. Then I proclaimed a faſt there, at the river Ahava, &c.] After the meſſengers to Iddo were returned with thoſe they brought with them: that we might afflict ourſelves before our God; humble themſelves before him for their ſins, confeſs them, and declare their repentance of them, and aſk forgiveneſs for them: to ſeek of him a right way for us; to take from thence towards Jeruſalem, to be directed by him in it; either by a prophet, or by a viſion in a dream, as Aben Ezra; or rather by the guidance of his providence; this they ſought in prayer by the river-ſide, where it had been uſual with them, and ſince has been, to perform religious exerciſes, ſee Ezek. i. 1. and iii. 15. Acts xvi. 13. hence Tertullian [z] calls the prayers of the Jews orationes littorales: they ſought not ſo much which was the ſhorteſt and eaſieſt way for them to travel in, as which was the ſafeſt: and for our little ones, and for all our ſubſtance; for the ſafe conveyance of them; this ſhews, that though males only are numbred, as before, yet they had their wives and children with them; for little ones cannot be ſuppoſed without women to take care of them.

℣. 22. For I was aſhamed to require of the king a band of ſoldiers and horſemen, &c.] Which he might have had, only aſking for them; ſo great was the intereſt he had in the king's favour: to help us againſt the enemy in the way; the Arabs, Samaritans, and others, that might lie in wait for them, to rob them of their ſubſtance: becauſe we had ſpoken unto the king; of the ſpecial favour of God to them, his ſingular providence in the protection of them: ſaying, The hand of our God is upon all them for good, that ſeek him; that pray unto him, ſerve and worſhip him; his hand is open to them to beſtow all needful good upon them, temporal and ſpiritual, and his power and providence are over them, to protect and defend them from all evil: but his power and his wrath is againſt all them that forſake him; his word, his ways and worſhip; his powerful wrath, or the ſtrength and force of it, is exerted againſt them, and they are ſure to feel the weight and dreadful effects of it: and now all this being ſaid to the king, after this, to deſire a guard to protect them, it would look as if they had not that favour in the ſight of God, and did not believe what they had ſaid, but diſtruſted his power and providence towards them; therefore, rather than reflect any diſhonour on God, they choſe to expoſe themſelves to danger, ſeeking his face and favour, and relying on his goodneſs and power.

℣. 23. So we faſted, and beſought our God for this, &c.] Sought the Lord by faſting and prayer for a good journey, and preſervation in it: and he was entreated of us; accepted their prayer, as Jarchi, ſo that they came ſafe to Jeruſalem.

℣. 24. Then I ſeparated twelve of the chief of the prieſts, &c.] That were in company with him; ſo that it ſeems there were more than the two mentioned, ℣. 2. very probably their families, or ſome of their brethren were with them: Sherebiah, Haſhabiah, and ten of their brethren with them; theſe men named were Levites, and not prieſts, ℣. 18, 19. and therefore the copulative and muſt be ſupplied; and Sherebiah, &c. or with the 12 prieſts, Sherebiah, &c. and ten Levites more with them; ſo that the number of prieſts and Levites were equal, and in all 24.

℣. 25. And I weighed unto them the ſilver, and the gold, and the veſſels, &c.] When he delivered them to them; this he did as a proof of his own integrity and faithfulneſs, and as a ſecurity againſt any charge or accuſation of embezzling any part of them, and to ſet them an example; and alſo that they might be under no temptation of acting ſuch a part, and might be vindicated ſhould they be charged with it: even the offering of the houſe of our God; what was freely offered for the ſervice of it: which the king and his counſellors, and his lords, and all Iſrael there preſent had offered; as free-will-offerings, ſee ch. vii. 15, 16.

℣. 26. I even weighed unto their hand 650 talents of ſilver, &c.] Which, according to Scheuchzer [a], amount to 975,000 imperials, and of our money 2,229,450 pounds ſterling: and ſilver veſſels 100 talents; which came to 35,300 pounds, or 50,000 imperials; according to Jarchi, there were 100 veſſels, and every veſſel weighed a talent, and ſo Aben Ezra, which, with Brerewood [b], was 375 pounds: and of gold 100 talents; which, according to Scheuchzer [c], were equal to 1,222,000 ducats of gold; the value of gold now is above 14 and a 3d to the value of ſilver, by which may be judged the difference between 100 talents of gold and 100 talents of ſilver; according to David de Pomis [d], there were two ſorts of talents; common talents, which weighed 60 pounds, and the talent of the ſanctuary, which weighed double to that.

℣. 27. Alſo 20 baſons of gold, of 1000 drams, &c.] Which were upwards of 1000 pounds of our money; for biſhop Cumberland ſays [e], the Perſian Daric Drachma, or dram, weighed twenty ſhillings and four-pence; and, according to Dr. Bernard, it exceeded one of our guineas by two grains, ſee the note on 1 Chron. xxix. 7. and two veſſels of fine copper, precious as gold; which perhaps is the ſame with the Indian or Perſian braſs Ariſtotle [f] ſpeaks of, which is ſo bright and pure, and free from ruſt, that it cannot be known by its colour from gold; and that there are among the cups of Darius ſuch as cannot be diſcerned whether they are braſs or gold but by the ſmell: the Syriac verſion interprets it by Corinthian braſs, which was a mixture of gold, ſilver, and copper, made when Corinth was burnt, and which is exceeding valuable; of which Pliny [g] makes three ſorts, very precious, and of which he ſays, it is in value next to, and even before ſilver, and almoſt before gold; but this ſort of braſs was not as yet in being: Kimchi [h] interprets the word here of its colour, being next to the colour of gold.

℣. 28. And I ſaid unto them, Ye are holy unto the Lord, the veſſels are holy alſo, &c.] As they were dedicated and ſet apart to holy ſervice, ſo the veſſels were ſacred to holy uſes, and therefore not to be converted to any other: and the ſilver, and the gold are a free-will-offering unto the Lord God of your fathers; and therefore not to be made uſe of but in his ſervice.

℣. 29. Watch ye, and keep them, &c.] The veſſels, the gold, and the ſilver, that they be not hurt and diminiſhed: until ye weigh them before the chief chief of the prieſts and the Levites, and chief of the fathers of Iſrael at Jeruſalem, in the chambers of the houſe of the Lord; that is, until they had delivered them in full weight, as they had received them, in the preſence of thoſe perſons as witneſſes, and into their hands, in order to be laid up in the chambers and treaſuries of the temple.

℣. 30. So took the prieſts and the Levites, &c.] The 12 prieſts and 12 Levites, mentioned in ℣. 24. the weight of the ſilver and the gold, and the veſſels, to bring them to Jeruſalem unto the houſe of our God; this they undertook to do, and did.

℣. 31. Then we departed from the river of Ahava, on the 12th day of the firſt month, to go unto Jeruſalem, &c.] The month Niſan, anſwering to part of March and part of April; this was two days before the paſſover began: and the hand of our God was upon us; guiding, directing, and protecting them by his providence: and he delivered us from the hand of the enemy, and of ſuch as lay in wait by the way; either by intimidating them, that they dared not attack them, or by directing them to take a different road, whereby they eſcaped them, ſee ℣. 22.

℣. 32. And we came to Jeruſalem, and abode there three days.] Before they went about any buſineſs, delivered what was committed to them for the uſe of the temple, and the commiſſions to the king's officers; as it was but proper they ſhould have ſome reſt after ſuch a fatiguing journey.

℣. 33. Now on the 4th day, &c.] After their arrival at Jeruſalem: was the ſilver and the gold, and the veſſels weighed in the houſe of our God; the temple, that it might be ſeen and known, that the exact weight which had been depoſited with them was now faithfully delivered: this was done by the hand of Meremoth the ſon of Uriah the prieſt, and with him was Eleazar the ſon of Phinehas; theſe were prieſts: and with them was Jozabad the ſon of Jeſhua, and Noadiah the ſon of Binnui, Levites; two prieſts and two Levites; for ſince there were of both that were charged with the above things, it was proper there ſhould be ſome of both, when weighed, that they might be witneſſes of their fidelity.

℣. 34. By number, and by weight of every one; &c.] They were delivered in by tale and weight, which exactly agreed to the number and weight in which they received them: and all the weight was written at that time; an account was taken in writing, and laid up, that it might not only be known hereafter what free-will-offerings had been made in Babylon, but that it might be a voucher for the fidelity and integrity of thoſe that brought them, ſhould it ever be called in queſtion.

℣. 35. Alſo the children of thoſe that had been carried away which were come out of the captivity, &c.] Namely, thoſe that now came along with Ezra: offered burnt-offerings unto the God of Iſrael; by way of thankfulneſs for their deliverance from captivity; and for their ſafe journey: twelve bullocks for all Iſrael; according to the number of the tribes; and there might be ſome of every tribe that now came up: 96 rams, 77 lambs; theſe and the bullocks were burnt-offerings: twelve he-goats for a ſin-offering; according to the number of the twelve tribes, alſo to make atonement for ſins they had been guilty of: all this was a burnt-offering unto the Lord; excepting the twelve he-goats, which were a ſin-offering.

℣. 36. And they delivered the king's commiſſions unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors on this ſide the river, &c.] The governors of the provinces of Syria, Paleſtine and Judea, which were on that ſide of Euphrates the land of Iſrael was: and they furthered the people, and the houſe of God; or lifted them up [h], eaſed them of all burdens, and freed them from all impediments, and aſſiſted them and furniſhed them with every thing, as the decree of Artaxerxes enjoined them; and provided every thing as they required for ornamenting the temple, and for the ſacrifices of it; all which is to be underſtood of the king's lieutenants and governors, who obeyed his commands.

CHAP. IX.

EZRA being informed by ſome of the princes, who complained unto him, of the marriages of many of the Iſraelites with the people of the land, the Canaanites and others, was greatly grieved and diſtreſſed, ℣. 1—5. upon which he made a confeſſion of their ſins to God, with great ſhame, ſorrow and contrition, and deprecated the evils which they deſerved, ℣. 6—15.

℣. 1. Now when theſe things were done, &c.] When the captives with Ezra had refreſhed themſelves, and weighed the money and veſſels they brought, and put them into the hands of proper perſons, and offered ſacrifices, and delivered the king's commiſſions to his lieutenants and governors, and ſhewn his own: the princes came to me; ſome of the nobles of Iſrael, the moſt religious of them, who were concerned at the corruptions that were among them, though not a ſufficient number to reform them: ſaying, the people of Iſrael, and the prieſts, and the Levites have not ſeparated themſelves from the people of the land; but joined with them, though not in idolatrous practices, yet by marrying with them, which might lead them into them: doing according to their abominations; not ſerving idols as they did, but imitating them in their marriages: even of the Canaanites, the Perizzites, the Jebuſites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Egyptians, and the Amorites; affinity with many of theſe was forbidden by an expreſs law, Deut. vii. 1, 3. all but the Moabites, Ammonites, and Egyptians, and from theſe for the ſame reaſon they were to abſtain; namely, leſt they ſhould be drawn into idolatry; that the prieſts and Levites ſhould do this, who ought to have known the law, and inſtructed the people better, was very ſad and ſhocking.

℣. 2. For they have taken of their daughters for themſelves, and for their ſons, &c.] Some that were widowers not only took wives to themſelves of the above nations, either when they were at Babylon, where many of theſe nations alſo were, or rather ſince their return; but they took for their ſons alſo, yea ſome that had wives took heatheniſh ones to them, ſee Mal. ii. 13, 14, 15. ſo that the holy ſeed; ſuch as the Lord had ſeparated from other nations, choſen them to be an holy people above all others, and devoted them to his ſervice and worſhip:

worſhip: have mingled themſelves with the people of thoſe lands; before mentioned, by marrying with them: yea, the hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this treſpaſs; they were the firſt that went into it, were ringleaders of it, who ſhould by their authority and example have reſtrained others; or they were in this firſt treſpaſs[i]; which was the firſt groſs and capital one the people fell into after their return from the captivity.

℣. 3. And when I heard this thing, I rent my garment and my mantle, &c.] Both inward and outward garments, that which was cloſe to his body, and that which was thrown looſe over it; and this he did in token of ſorrow and mourning, as if ſomething very dreadful and diſtreſſing, ſee Job i. 20. and pluckt off the hair of my head, and of my beard; did not ſhave them, and ſo tranſgreſſed not the law in Lev. xix. 27. but plucked off the hair of them, to ſhew his extreme ſorrow for what was told him; which has frequently been done by mourners on ſorrowful occaſions in various nations, ſee Iſ. xv. 2. So in the additions to Eſther, ch. xiv. 2. ſhe is ſaid to fill every place of joy with the tearings of her hair; and Lavinia in Virgil[k]; ſeveral paſſages from Homer[l], and other writers, both Greek and Latin, are mentioned by Bochart[m], as inſtances of it: and ſat down aſtoniſhed; quite amazed at the ingratitude of the people, that after ſuch favours ſhown them, in returning them from captivity unto their own land, and ſettling them there, they ſhould give into practices ſo contrary to the will of God.

℣. 4. There were aſſembled unto me every one that trembled at the words of the God of Iſrael, &c.] That had a reverence for the word of God, and the things contained in it; feared to break the laws of God, and trembled at his judgments, which they might apprehend would come upon tranſgreſſors, ſee Iſ. lxvi. 2. becauſe of the tranſgreſſion of thoſe that had been carried away; into Babylon, and were now returned, and which was an aggravation of their tranſgreſſion: and I ſat aſtoniſhed until the evening-ſacrifice; or until the ninth hour, as the Syriac verſion, which was about our three o'clock in the afternoon, at which time the evening-ſacrifice was offered; perhaps it was in the morning when Ezra firſt received his information from the princes.

℣. 5. And at the evening-ſacrifice I roſe up from my heavineſs, &c.] The ſigns and tokens of it, particularly ſitting on the ground; or from my faſting[n], having eaten nothing that day, it being early in the morning when he was told the above caſe: and having rent my garment and my mantle; which he had done before, and ſtill kept them on him in the ſame caſe: fell upon my knees, and ſpread out my hands unto the Lord my God; in the poſture, and with the geſture of an humble ſupplicant.

℣. 6. And ſaid, O my God, &c.] Here begins the the prayer of Ezra, and that with faith in God as his Covenant-God, even when he was about to make confeſſion of ſin, and repentance for it; that prayer is right which is put up in faith, and that repentance genuine which is accompanied with faith, and flows from it: I am aſhamed, and bluſh to lift up my face to thee, my God; a true ſight and ſenſe of ſin cauſes ſhame and bluſhing, and never more than when a man is ſenſible of his covenant-intereſt in God, and of his grace and favour to him, particularly in the forgiveneſs of his ſin, ſee Ezek. xvi. 61, 63. for our iniquities are increaſed over our head; ariſen and ſwelled like mighty waters, which ſeemed to threaten an overwhelming of them: and our treſpaſs is grown up unto the heavens; being done in an open, public and inſolent manner, and in ſuch numbers, that they were, as it were, piled up in heaps, reaching to heaven, and calling down vengeance from thence. Ezra includes himſelf as being one of the ſame nation; and theſe ſins being ſo common, were become national ones, which involved all the individuals, and expoſed them to the divine reſentment.

℣. 7. Since the days of our fathers have we been in a great treſpaſs unto this day, &c.] The ſins they were guilty of had been long continued in, which was an aggravation of them: and for our iniquities have we, our kings, and our prieſts, been delivered into the hand of the kings of the lands; the ten tribes and their king into the hand of the king of Aſſyria, the kings of Judah, Jehoiakim, Jeconiah and Zedekiah, into the hands of the king of Babylon, with the prieſts and people: to the ſword, to captivity, and to a ſpoil; ſome were ſlain with the ſword, others carried captive, and the houſes of them all plundered and ſpoiled: and to confuſion of face, as it is this day; being filled with ſhame when they reflected on their ſins, the cauſe of thoſe evils; and beſides, the captivity of the ten tribes continued, and of many others, which expoſed them to ſhame among their neighbours.

℣. 8. And now for a little ſpace, grace hath been ſhewed from the Lord our God, &c.] It was but a ſmall time ſince the Lord firſt began to ſhew favour to them, ſo that they ſoon after began to revolt from him; which argued the ſtrange propenſity of their minds to that which is evil, and from which they could not be reſtrained by the recent goodneſs of God unto them: to leave us a remnant to eſcape; out of captivity, from whence a ſmall number were graciouſly and ſafely returned to their own land: and to give us a nail in his holy place; a fixed ſettlement in the land of Judea, the holy land the Lord had choſen, and in the temple, the holy place ſacred to his worſhip; or a prince of their own, Zerubbabel, to be the governor of them, under whom they might enjoy ſettled happineſs and proſperity, ſee Iſ. xxii. 23. Zech. x. 4. that our God may lighten our eyes; refreſh our ſpirits, chear our ſouls, and give us light and gladneſs, ſee 1 Sam. xiv. 27. and give us a little reviving in our bondage; for they were ſtill in ſome degree of bondage, being in ſubjection, and tributaries to the kings of Perſia; but yet being returned to their own land, it was as life from the dead unto them, at leaſt it was giving them a little life, liberty and joy.

℣. 9. For we were bondmen, &c.] To the Chaldeans when in Babylon, which was more than the Jews in the times of Chriſt would own, John viii. 33. yet our God hath not forſaken us in our bondage; had not left them to continue in it always: but hath extended mercy unto us in the ſight of the kings of Perſia; moved them to have pity and compaſſion on them, and releaſe them: to give us a reviving; whilſt in captivity, they were as in their graves, and like the dry bones in Ezekiel's viſion, but revived upon the proclamation of Cyrus, and the encouragement he gave them to return to their own land: to ſet up the houſe of our God, and re- pair the deſolations thereof; both to rebuild the temple, and to reſtore the worſhip of it: and to give us a wall in Judah and in Jeruſalem; not to ſet up the walls of Jeruſalem, and of other cities, which as yet was not done; but rather the walls of their houſes, which they had rebuilt; they had walled houſes given them in Judah and Jeruſalem; though the word ſignifies an hedge or fence, ſuch as is about gardens and vineyards, and may denote the protection of the kings of Perſia, which was a fence to them againſt the Samaritans, and others; and eſpecially the hedge of divine providence about them, which guarded and defended them, ſee Job, i. 10.

℣. 10. And now, O our God, what ſhall we ſay after this? &c.] What apology or excuſe can be made for ſuch ingratitude? what can be ſaid in favour of ſuch a people? what kindneſs can be expected to be ſhewn to a people who had behaved in ſo baſe a manner? for we have forſaken thy commandments; particularly thoſe which related to marriages with people of other nations.

℣. 11. Which thou haſt commanded by thy ſervants the prophets, &c.] Moſes, and Joſhua, and others, ſee Deut. vii. 3. Joſh. xxiii. 12. Judg. ii. 2. ſaying, the land unto which ye go to poſſeſs it; meaning the land of Canaan: is an unclean land, with the filthineſs of the people of the lands, with their abominations, which have filled it from one end to another with their uncleanneſs; which is to be underſtood not of their idolatries only, but of their inceſtuous marriages, and impure copulations, on which account the Lord ſpewed out the old inhabitants of it; for which reaſon the Jews ought to have been careful not to have defiled it again by ſimilar practices; ſee Lev. xviii.

℣. 12. Now therefore give not your daughters unto their ſons, nor take their daughters unto your ſons, &c.] That is, in marriage, ſee Deut. vii. 3. where the prohibition is expreſſed in the ſame language: nor ſeek their peace, and their wealth for ever; that is, as long as they continue in their idolatries and impurities, ſee Deut. xxiii. 6. that ye may be ſtrong, and eat the good of the land, and leave it for an inheritance to your children for ever; that they might be ſtrengthened and eſtabliſhed in the land into which they were brought, and enjoy all the good things it produced, and leave their children in the poſſeſſion of it, to hold at leaſt until the Meſſiah came, ſee Iſ. i. 19.

℣. 13. And after all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great treſpaſs, &c.] As famine, ſword, peſtilence and captivity, for their idolatries and other heinous ſins: ſeeing that thou our God haſt puniſhed us leſs than our iniquities deſerve; for they deſerved eternal puniſhment, whereas it was temporal puniſhment that was inflicted, and this moderate, and now ſtopped; the ſenſe is, according to Aben Ezra, "thou haſt refrained from writing ſome of our ſins in the book of remembrance, and thou haſt let them down below in the earth, according to the ſenſe of, thou wilt caſt all their ſins into the depths of the ſea;" but Jarchi better, "thou haſt refrained thyſelf from exacting of us all our ſins, and haſt exacted of us beneath our ſins (or leſs than they deſerve) and haſt not taken vengeance on us according to all our ſins:" and haſt given us ſuch deliverance as this; from captivity, which they now enjoyed.

℣. 14. Should we again break thy commandments, and join in affinity with the people of theſe abominations? &c.] That are guilty of abominable idolatries, and of all uncleanneſs: wouldſt thou not be angry with us till thou hadſt conſumed us; it might be juſtly expected: ſo that there ſhould be no remnant nor eſcaping? any left or ſuffered to eſcape the wrath of God, but all conſumed by it.

℣. 15. O Lord God of Iſrael, thou art righteous, &c.] And would appear to be ſo, ſhould Iſrael be entirely cut off, and utterly conſumed for their iniquities: for we remain yet eſcaped, as it is this day; that they remained yet eſcaped out of captivity, and eſcaped the wrath and vengeance of God, was not owing to any deſerts of theirs, but to the grace and mercy of God, who had not ſtirred up all his wrath as their ſins deſerved: behold, we are before thee in our treſpaſſes; to do with us as ſeems good in thy ſight; we have nothing to plead on our behalf, but caſt ourſelves at thy feet, if ſo be unmerited favour may be ſhown us: for we cannot ſtand before thee becauſe of this; this evil of contracting affinity with the nations; we can't defend ourſelves; we can't plead ignorance of the divine commands; we have nothing to ſay for ourſelves, why judgment ſhould not be paſſed upon; we leave ourſelves in thine hands, and at thy mercy.

CHAP. X.

UPON Ezra's prayer and confeſſion, it was propoſed by Shechaniah, that thoſe who had married ſtrange wives, ſhould put them away with their children, which they ſwore to do, ℣. 1—5. and proclamation was made throughout the land for all to meet at Jeruſalem in three days time, and accordingly they did, ℣. 6—9. when, at the exhortation of Ezra, all agreed to it, and perſons were appointed to ſee it done, and the work was finiſhed in the ſpace of three months, ℣. 10—17. and a liſt of the names of thoſe is given, who had married ſuch wives, and now put them away; of the prieſts, ℣. 18—22. of the Levites, ℣. 23, 24. of the other Iſraelites, ℣. 24—44.

℣. 1. Now when Ezra had prayed, and when he had confeſſed, weeping, &c.] Had confeſſed the ſins of the people in prayer and ſupplication, with many tears: and caſting himſelf down before the houſe of God; in the outward court before the temple, his face turned towards it, where he lay proſtrate: there aſſembled to him out of Iſrael a very great congregation of men, and women, and children; it was quickly ſpread abroad both in Jeruſalem, and places adjacent, that ſuch a great man, a commiſſioner from the king of Perſia, and a prieſt of the Jews, was in the utmoſt diſtreſs, rending his garments, and plucking off his hair, and was crying and praying in a vehement manner; which brought a great concourſe of people, who concluded ſome great ſins were committed, and ſore judgments were coming upon them: for the people wept very ſore; being affected with his confeſſions, cries, and tears, and fearing wrath would come upon them for their ſins.

℣. 2. And Shechaniah the ſon of Jehiel, one of the ſons of Elam, anſwered and ſaid unto Ezra, &c.] This man ſeems to be one of thoſe that now came with Ezra from Babylon, ſee ch. viii. 3, 5. we have treſpaſſed againſt our God, and have taken ſtrange wives of the people of the land; not that he had taken any himſelf, being but juſt come into the land, nor is his name in the liſt of thoſe that had; but inaſmuch as many of the nation, of which he was a part, and his own father, and ſeveral of his uncles had, ℣. 26. he expreſſes himſelf in this manner: yet now there is hope in Iſrael concerning this thing; of a reformation of this evil, and of pardon for it.

℣. 3. Now therefore let us make a covenant with our God, &c.] Renew our covenant with him, and lay ourſelves under freſh obligation by promiſe and oath, and unanimouſly agree to put away all the wives, and ſuch as are born of them; he means all the ſtrange wives, ſuch marriages being unlawful; and ſuch wives might the more eaſily be put away, ſince bills of divorce were in frequent uſe with the Jews, and the children of ſuch alſo being illegitimate; and the rather they were to be put away, leſt they ſhould corrupt other children, or get into the affections of their fathers, which might lead on to receive their mothers again, and eſpecially this was to be done as a puniſhment of their ſin: though no doubt but a proviſion was to be made, and was made, for the maintenance both of wives and children: according to the counſel of my Lord; either of Ezra, whom he honours with this title, being a ruler under the king of Perſia; or of the Lord God, according to his will declared in his words which is his counſel: and of thoſe that tremble at the commandment of our God; feared to break it, and dreaded the effect of ſuch a breach; and who no doubt would follow the counſel of the Lord, and join in their advice to act according to the propoſal made: and let it be done according to the law; as that directs in ſuch caſes.

℣. 4. Ariſe, &c.] From the ground, where he lay proſtrate: for this matter belongeth unto thee; as a prieſt and ſcribe of the law, well verſed in it, and therefore could direct what was to be done according to it; and as a ruler under the king of Perſia, and a commiſſioner of his, to enquire whether the law of God was obſerved by the Jews, ch. vii. 14. and ſo had authority to put the law in execution: we alſo will be with thee; to help and aſſiſt in the reformation of this evil: be of good courage, and do it; don't deſpair of going thro' it, though there may be ſome oppoſition to it; begin and doubt not of ſucceeding.

℣. 5. Then aroſe Ezra, &c.] From the ground where he lay: and made the chief prieſts, and the Levites, and all Iſrael to ſwear, that they ſhould do according to this word; he took an oath of all that were preſent, to do what was propoſed, namely, to put away ſtrange wives and their children: and they ſware; by means of which they were kept to their word of promiſe, an oath being a ſolemn, ſacred thing.

℣. 6. Then Ezra roſe up from before the houſe of God, &c.] Departed from thence: and went into the chamber of Johanan the ſon of Eliaſhib; who was of the family of the high-prieſt. Eliaſhib was grandſon of Joſhua the high-prieſt, and ſucceeded his father Joiakim as ſuch; but though Johanan was never high-prieſt, being a younger ſon, however he was a perſon of note, and had a chamber in the temple, whither Ezra went, either to adviſe with the princes and elders in it, ℣. 8. or to refreſh himſelf with food: and when he came thither, he did eat no bread, nor drink water; or rather not yet had he eat bread[o], as ſome render it; that is, not till he came thither, from the time he firſt heard of the evil the people had committed; which very probably was early in the morning, and it was now evening: for he mourned for the tranſgreſſion of them that had been carried away; into captivity, but were now returned from it, and it grieved him the more, that after ſuch kindneſs ſhown them, they ſhould be guilty of ſuch an evil.

℣. 7. And they made proclamation, &c.] By the voice of an herald: throughout Judah and Jeruſalem, unto all the children of the captivity; who were returned from it: that they ſhould gather themſelves together unto Jeruſalem; within a time after mentioned.

℣. 8. And that whoſoever would come within three days, &c.] Or at the end of three days, as Jarchi; this was the ſpace of time allowed, and which was pitched upon for the quick diſpatch of this affair, to prevent any ſchemes that might be formed to obſtruct it, and leſt thoſe who had agreed to it, and promiſed to aſſiſt in it, ſhould repent and go from their word: according to the counſel of the princes, and of the elders; for though Ezra had a commiſſion at large from the king of Perſia, to enquire into and reform all abuſes, he choſe not to act of himſelf, but to have the opinion and conſent of the ſenate of the nation; this he prudently did to avoid their envy, and that he might have leſs oppoſition, and better ſucceſs: his ſubſtance ſhould be forfeited; or devoted[p] to ſacred uſes, to be put into the treaſury of the temple, and uſed in the ſervice of it, and therefore never to be returned: and himſelf ſeparated from the congregation of thoſe that had been carried away; into captivity, but now returned from it; that is, ſhould be excommunicated from them as a church, and be no more reckoned of the body politic, or a freeman of Iſrael, and ſo deprived of all privileges both in church and ſtate.

℣. 9. Then all the men of Judah and Benjamin, &c.] And ſuch of the 10 tribes that returned and dwelt among them: gathered themſelves together unto Jeruſalem within three days; the time fixed; which they were the more careful to obſerve, ſince it was enjoined by the authority of princes and elders, and the puniſhment in caſe of diſobedience very ſevere: it was the ninth month, on the 20th day of the month; the month Ciſleu, which anſwers to part of November and part of December, ſo that the 20th day muſt be in the beginning of December; this was almoſt five months after Ezra came to Jeruſalem: and all the people ſat in the ſtreet of the houſe of God; the ſtreet which led to the temple, the eaſt-ſtreet, 2 Chron. xxix. 4. tho' ſome think this was the court of the people, called a ſtreet, becauſe it lay open, not yet walled in; and, according to Joſephus[q], it was in an upper room of the temple, in which Ezra was, perhaps the ſame with the chamber of Johanan, ℣. 6. trembling becauſe of this matter; they were met about;

about; ſome that were guilty, not knowing what puniſhment would be inflicted on them, and others that were not, yet dreaded the wrath of God, leſt that ſhould break out upon the whole congregation for it: and for the great rain; which now fell, and which they interpreted as a token of the divine diſpleaſure; for though it was in winter-time, yet not with them a time of rain, for the former rain had fallen a month before; ſo that this being unuſual and unexpected, they underſtood it as betokening evil to them.

℣. 10. And Ezra the prieſt ſtood up, &c.] In the midſt of the aſſembly to make his ſpeech, acquainting them with the reaſon of their meeting together: and ſaid unto them, ye have tranſgreſſed; the law of God in the following inſtance: and have taken ſtrange wives; of the people of the land and others, idolatrous perſons: to increaſe the treſpaſs of Iſrael; to add to former iniquities, which had been the cauſe of the captivity.

℣. 11. Now therefore make confeſſion to the Lord God of your fathers, &c.] Of their ſin, and expreſs their deteſtation of it, and repentance for it: and do his pleaſure; obey his will, and particularly in this caſe: and ſeparate yourſelves from the people of the land; the Canaanites, &c. have no fellowſhip with them, make no covenants, contracts and alliances with them for the future: and from the ſtrange wives; they had taken, put them away.

℣. 12. Then all the congregation anſwered and ſaid with a loud voice, &c.] That they might be heard, and to ſhew that they were willing and ready to comply with what was propoſed: as thou haſt ſaid, ſo muſt we do; being convinced of their ſin, they ſaw it was a duty incumbent on them to put away their ſtrange wives, and that there was a neceſſity of it, to avert the wrath of God from them.

℣. 13. But the people are many, &c.] Who have been guilty of this evil: and it is a time of much rain, and we are not able to ſtand without; in the ſtreet, becauſe of the rain: neither is this a work of one day or two; to enqure into this affair, who they are that have taken ſtrange wives, and to perſuade or oblige them to put them away: for we are many that have tranſgreſſed in this thing; in marrying ſtrange wives.

℣. 14. Let now our rulers of all the congregations ſtand, &c.] Let the great Sanhedrim, or court, of judicature at Jeruſalem, be fixed and continued, and others: and let all them which have taken ſtrange wives in our cities, come at appointed times; to the court at Jeruſalem, at certain and fixed known times of their ſittings there for this purpoſe: and with the elders of every city, and the judges thereof; the principal magiſtrates of it, who were to teſtify that upon ſearch and enquiry thoſe were the men, and all the men in their city, that had taken ſtrange wives, and that they had put them away according to the order of the princes and elders; and this they propoſed to be done in every city, and the account to be brought to the Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem, who were to ſit at certain times till this affair was finiſhed: until the fierce wrath of our God for this matter be turned from us; which it ſeems had broke out in ſome inſtances, and they feared would do yet more, unleſs this ſtep was taken, whereby they hoped it would be averted.

℣. 15. Only Jonathan the ſon of Aſahel, and Jahaziah the ſon of Tikvah, were employed about the matter, &c.] To ſee that this affair was conducted in the manner propoſed; that the magiſtrates of every city brought the perſons that had been delinquents, in their turns, of which they gave them notice, and took the account of them as they came: and Meſhullam, and Shabbethai the Levite helped them; aſſiſted them in this work; the other two perhaps were prieſts, and both theſe Levites; and theſe four were the only perſons appointed over this matter, as the phraſe in the preceding clauſe may ſignify; though Jarchi interprets it to a quite contrary ſenſe, that they were the only perſons that oppoſed and objected to it; and ſo Dr. Lightfoot[r] underſtands it, and renders it, ſtood againſt this matter; in which they were ſeconded by the two Levites, and the ſenſe is very probable.

℣. 16. And the children of the captivity did ſo, &c.] Put away their ſtrange wives: and Ezra the prieſt, with certain chief of the fathers, after the houſe of their fathers, and all of them by their names were ſeparated; from all their other buſineſs, and gave themſelves up to attend to this wholly: and ſat down in the firſt day of the 10th month; the month Tebeth, which anſwers to part of December and January; this was 10 days after the aſſembly of all the people met and broke up: theſe took their places in the great court, and there ſat to examine the matter; the accounts brought in from the ſeveral cities by the magiſtrates thereof, and recorded them.

℣. 17. And they made an end with all the men that had taken ſtrange wives, &c.] Finiſhed their enquiry and examination of them: by the firſt day of the firſt month; the month Niſan, anſwering to part of March and April; ſo that they were three months about this work.

℣. 18. And among the ſons of the prieſts there were found that had taken ſtrange wives, &c.] So that it need not be wondered at, that this evil ſhould ſpread among the people, when thoſe who underſtood the law, and ſhould have inſtructed the people in it, ſet ſuch an example: namely, of the ſons of Jeſhua the ſon of Jozadak; who was the high-prieſt; and perhaps for this fault of his in not reſtraining his ſons from ſuch unlawful marriages, is he repreſented in filthy garments, Zech. iii. 3. and his brethren, Maaſiah, and Eliezer, and Jarib, and Gedaliah; theſe were the brethren of Jeſhua.

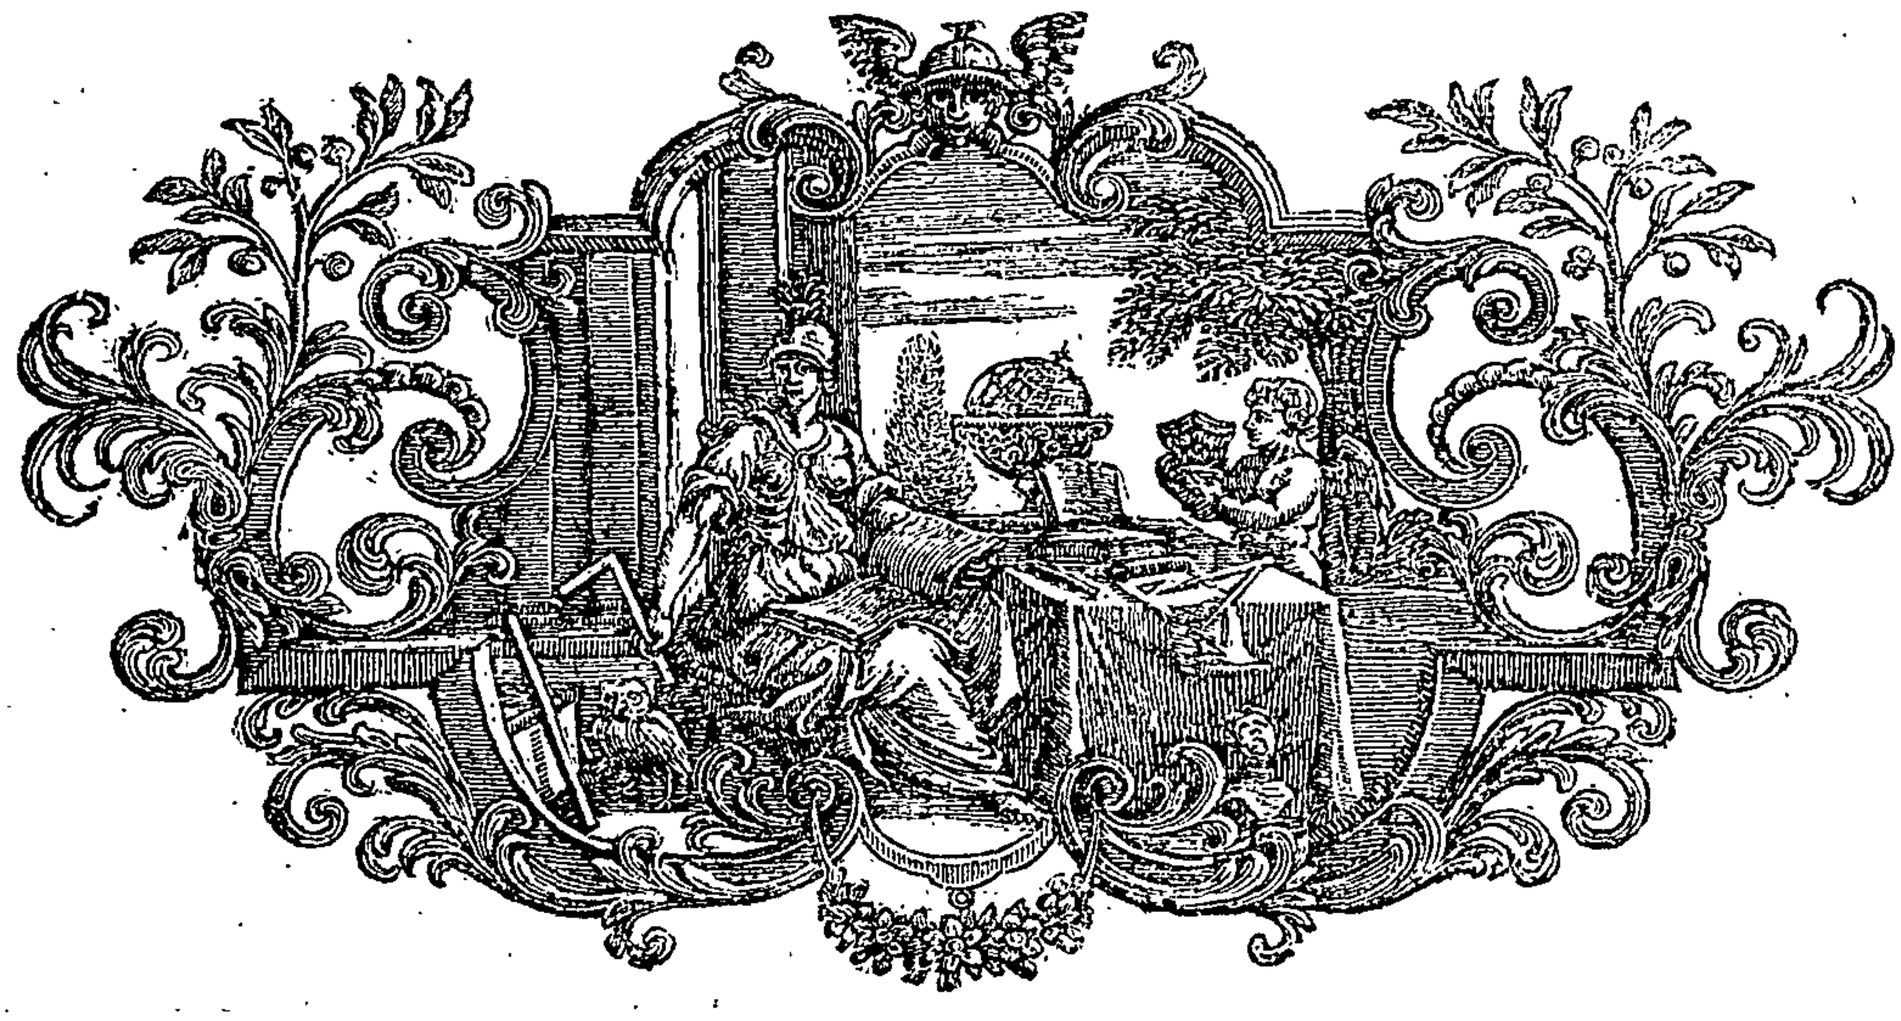
℣. 19. And they gave their hands that they would put away their wives, &c.] They propoſed to do it, and actually did it: and being guilty; of which they were fully convinced: they offered a ram of the flock for their treſpaſs; to make atonement for it, and thereby ſet an example to others to do the like. Aben Ezra obſerves, that we don't find that the treſpaſs-offering was a mulct to ſuch who married ſtrange wives, and conjectures, that it was the advice of the chief men to do it. From hence, to the end of ℣. 43. is a liſt of the men that had married ſtrange wives, and put them away; thoſe in ℣. 20, 21, 22. were prieſts; in ℣. 23, 24. Levites, and thoſe of them who were ſingers or porters; the reſt were Iſraelites: and it is a very common diſtinction in Rabbinical writers, to diſtinguiſh the Jews into prieſts, Levites, and Iſraelites; of theſe we know no more than their names; ſome of the heads of the families may be obſerved in ch. 2.

[r] Works, vol. 1. p. 144.

℣. 44. All these had taken strange wives, &c.] In all about 113: and some of them had wives by whom they had children; and yet they put them away, which made it the more difficult for them to do; and those that had none, it is thought to be a mark of God's displeasure at such marriages. No mention being made of the children being put away, as Shechaniah proposed, ℣. 3. it may be concluded they were not, but were taken care of to be educated in the true religion, and entered proselytes at a proper time; and the rather, as Ezra gave no orders about their putting away, ℣. 11.



The

The Book of NEHEMIAH.

THIS book is, by the authors of the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions, called the ſecond book of Ezra, it being a continuation of the ſame hiſtory, and was by the Jews reckoned as one book with Ezra; Kimchi on Iſ. ix. 7. calls it Ezra, ſo the Talmud [a]; and it has been quoted by chriſtian writers under his name; ſee the argument of the book of Ezra; but not as if it was wrote by him; for it is a clear caſe it was wrote by Nehemiah, whoſe name it bears, as appears from ℣. 1. and throughout Nehemiah ſpeaks of himſelf under the firſt perſon; and the ſtile alſo is very different from that of Ezra, being plainer and eaſier than his. It has always had a place in the canon of ſcriptures, both with Jews and Chriſtians; and is of uſe to ſhew the fulfilment of the prophecy of Zechariah, and eſpecially of Daniel concerning the building of the wall of Jeruſalem in troubleſome times; to carry on the hiſtory of the Jews, and deſcribe the ſtate of the church in thoſe times, what oppoſition was made to it, and what enemies it had, and what muſt be expected when any work of God is ſet about; it is the laſt of the hiſtorical books that was written, as is thought, and contains an hiſtory of the ſpace of about 12 years, from the 20th of Artaxerxes to the 32d of his reign, ſee ch. i. 1. and ii. 1. and xiii. 6.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter relates how that Nehemiah, being at Shuſhan in Perſia, and meeting with ſome Jews, enquired of the ſtate of Jeruſalem, of which having a melancholy account, he betook to mourning, faſting and prayer, ℣. 1—4. and his prayer is recorded, ℣. 5—11.

℣. 1. The words of Nehemiah the ſon of Hachaliah, &c.] Or his tranſactions and deeds; for Dibre ſignifies things done, as well as words ſpoken; who Hachaliah his father was, is not known; the Arabic verſion adds the high-prieſt, without any foundation; though ſome have thought that Nehemiah was a prieſt, from a paſſage in 2 Maccab. i. 18, &c. and from ſigning and ſealing the covenant at the head of the prieſts, ch. x. 1. but he rather ſeems to be of the tribe of Judah, ſee ch. ii. 3, 5. and Nehemiah may be the ſame that went up with Zerubbabel, and returned again, and then became the king's cup-bearer; tho' ſome are of another opinion, ſee the note on Ezra ii. 2. and it came to paſs in the month Chiſleu; the 9th month, as the Arabic verſion; of which ſee Ezra x. 9. in the 20th year; not of Nehemiah's age, for if he went up with Zerubbabel, he muſt be many years older; but in the 20th year of the reign of Artaxerxes, ch. ii. 1. as I was in Shuſhan the palace; a city in Perſia, the royal ſeat of the kings of it; as Ecbatana was in the ſummer-time, this in the ſpring, as Cyrus made it, according to Xenophon [b]; but others ſay [c], it was their ſeat in winter, and this was the ſeaſon now when Nehemiah was with the king there; for Chiſleu was a winter-month, anſwering to part of November and of December; of Shuſhan, ſee the note on Dan. viii. 2. to which may be added, what a traveller of the laſt century ſays [d] of it, "we reſted at Valdac, once the great city Suſa, but now very ruinous; it was firſt built by Tythonus, and his ſon Memnon, but enlarged by Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes; in the building whereof Memnon was ſo exceeding prodigal, that, as Caſſiodorus writeth, he joined the ſtones together with gold — ſuch was the beauty and delectableneſs of it for ſituation, that they called it Suſa, which in the Perſian tongue ſignified a lily, but now it is called Valdac, becauſe of the poverty of the place;" and it is generally ſuppoſed to have its name from the abundance of lilies about it; but Dr. Hyde [e] gives another ſignification of its name, he ſays the Perſians called it سوسن Sus, which ſignifies liquorice, but for what reaſons he ſays not. There is a city now called Shuſtera, and is thought by ſome travellers to be built at leaſt very near where Shuſhan formerly ſtood [f].

℣. 2. That Hanani, one of my brethren, &c.] Either in natural relation, ch. vii. 2. or being a Jew of the ſame nation and religion; ſo Jarchi interprets it, one of my companions or acquaintance: he and certain men of Judah; who came from thence to Shuſhan on ſome account or another: and I aſked them concerning the Jews that had eſcaped, which were left of the captivity; who were returned from it to their own land; he enquired of their health and proſperity, in what circumſtances they were, whether proſperous or adverſe, whether they flouriſhed, or were in diſtreſs: and concerning Jeruſalem; whether it was rebuilt, the houſes and walls of it, and in what condition it was.

℣ 3. And they ſaid unto me, the remnant that are left of the captivity there in the province, &c.] In Judea, now reduced to a province of the Perſian empire: are in great affliction and reproach; haraſſed and diſtreſſed, calumniated and vilified by their enemies the Samaritans: the wall of Jeruſalem alſo is broken down, and the gates thereof are burnt with fire; that is, its wall and gates were in the ſame condition in which Nebuchadnezzar had left them, for ſince his times as yet they had never been ſet up; for this is not to be underſtood of what was lately done by their adverſaries, which is not at all probable.

℣. 4. And it came to paſs when I heard theſe words, &c.] This ſad and melancholy account of things: that I ſat down and wept, and mourned certain days; ſat down upon the ground in duſt and aſhes, after the manner of mourners, and wept bitterly, and mourned in a moſt ſorrowful manner, ſee Job ii. 8, 12, 13. and faſted and prayed before the God of heaven; that made it, and dwells in it.

℣. 5. And ſaid, I beſeech thee, O Lord God of heaven, &c.] He prayed not to the hoſt of heaven, the ſun in it, as the Perſians, but to the God of it, in a humble ſupplicant manner: the great and terrible God; who is to be feared, and had in reverence of all his creatures, becauſe of his greatneſs and glory, being God over all, bleſſed for ever, and his name holy and reverend: that keepeth covenant and mercy for them that love him, and obſerve his commandments; who keep them from a principle of love to him; to thoſe he has made gracious promiſes in his covenant, which he truly and faithfully performs; and the conſideration of theſe perfections in God, animates and encourages good men in prayer to him.

℣. 6. Let thine ear be now attentive, &c.] To his prayer, as in ℣. 11. and thine eyes open; to behold with pity and compaſſion the diſtreſſed caſe of Jeruſalem, and the Jews in it: I pray before thee now, day and night, for the children of Iſrael thy ſervants; this he had continued to do ever ſince he heard of their trouble and calamity: and confeſs the ſins of the children of Iſrael, which we have ſinned againſt thee, both I and my father's houſe have ſinned; he conſidered ſin as the cauſe of all this evil that had befallen his people, and confeſſes it with ſorrow and humiliation, and not their ſins only, but his own perſonal and family ſins.

℣. 7. We have dealt very corruptly againſt thee, &c.] Corrupted his covenant, laws, and precepts, as well as themſelves, ways, and works; all which were againſt the Lord, contrary to his nature, mind, and will: and have not kept the commandments, nor the ſtatutes, nor the judgments, which thou commandedſt thy ſervant Moſes; the laws, moral, ceremonial, and judicial.

℣. 8. Remember, I beſeech thee, the word that thou commandedſt thy ſervant Moſes, &c.] To publiſh and declare to the children of Iſrael, Deut. xxviii. 64. and xxx. 3, 4, 5. ſaying, if ye tranſgreſs; the law of God: I will ſcatter you abroad among the nations; as now they had been among the Aſſyrians, Chaldeans, Medes and Perſians.

℣. 9. But if ye return unto me, and keep my commandments, and do them, &c.] Return by repentance, and as a proof of the genuineneſs of it, yield obedience to the commands of God, and continue therein: though there were of you caſt out unto the uttermoſt part of the heaven; that is, the uttermoſt parts of the earth, the moſt diſtant regions; ſo called, becauſe at the extreme parts of the horizon, according to our apprehenſion, the heavens and earth touch each other; ſo that what is the uttermoſt part of the one, is ſuppoſed to be of the other: yet will I gather them from thence, and will bring them unto the place that I have choſen to ſet my name there; that is, to Jeruſalem, where the temple was built, and his name was called upon.

℣. 10. Now theſe are thy ſervants, and thy people, &c.] Meaning thoſe that were in Jeruſalem and Judah, gathered out of ſeveral countries, and returned to Jeruſalem: whom thou haſt redeemed by thy great power, and by thy ſtrong hand; touching and moving the heart of Cyrus to proclaim liberty to them.

℣. 11. O Lord, I beſeech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy ſervant, &c.] To the prayer of Nehemiah, put up at this time: and to the prayer of thy ſervants, who deſire to fear thy name; the prayer of the Jews in Judea, whoſe deſire was to worſhip the Lord in his temple, according to his will: and proſper, I pray thee, thy ſervant this day; meaning himſelf, who was to wait on the king of Perſia that day, and if he had opportunity intended to lay the caſe of the Jews before him, and therefore intreats he might meet with ſucceſs: and grant him mercy in the ſight of this man; king Artaxerxes, who was but a man, and whoſe heart was in the hands of God, and he could eaſily move him to pity and compaſſion towards his poor people the Jews: for I was the king's cupbearer; in the execution of which office he was often in the king's preſence, and hoped to have an opportunity of ſpeaking to him in the behalf of the Jews; this with the Perſians was reckoned a very honourable office [g]. A ſon of Prexaſpes, a very honourable man, was made cupbearer to Cambyſes; and ſo it was with the Greeks and Romans [h]; and the poets not only make Ganymedes to be Jupiter's cupbearer [i], but even Vulcan himſelf is put into this office [k].

CHAP. II.

NEHEMIAH being ſorrowful in the king's preſence, the reaſon of it was aſked by the king, which he declared, and then took the opportunity to requeſt of the king, that he might be ſent to Jeruſalem to rebuild it, which was granted him, ℣. 1—8. upon which he ſet out, and came to Jeruſalem, to the great grief of the enemies of Iſrael, ℣. 9—11. and after he had been three days in Jeruſalem, he privately took a ſurvey of it, to ſee what condition it was in, unknown to the rulers there, ℣. 12—16. whom he afterwards exhorted to riſe up and build the wall of the city, which they immediately ſet about, ℣. 17, 18. not regarding the ſcoffs and taunts of their enemies, ℣. 19, 20.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs in the month Niſan, in the 20th year of Artaxerxes, &c.] It was ſtill but in the 20th year of his reign; for though Niſan or March was the firſt month of the year with the Jews, and from whence the reigns of their kings were dated[l]; yet with other nations, Tiſri or September was the beginning of the reigns of their kings[m]; ſo that Chiſleu or November being ſince, ſee ch. i. it was no more in Niſan or March than the 20th of the ſaid king's reign, and was three or four months after Nehemiah had firſt heard of the diſtreſs of his people; which time he either purpoſely ſpent in faſting and prayer on that account, or until now his turn did not come about to exerciſe his office, in waiting upon the king as his cupbearer: but now it was that wine was before him; the king; it was brought and ſet in a proper place, from whence it might be taken for his uſe: and I took up the wine, and gave it to the king; according to Xenophon[n], the cupbearer with the Perſians and Medes uſed to take the wine out of the veſſels into the cup, and pour ſome of it into their left-hand, and ſup it up, that if there was any poiſon in it, the king might not be hurt, and then he delivered it to him upon three fingers[o]: now I had not been before-time ſad in his preſence; but always pleaſant and chearful, ſo that the ſadneſs of his countenance was the more taken notice of.

℣. 2. Wherefore the king ſaid unto me, why is thy countenance ſad, ſeeing thou art not ſick? &c.] He had no diſorder upon him to change his countenance, and make him ſorrowful, and therefore aſks what ſhould be the reaſon of it: this is nothing elſe but ſorrow of heart; this is not owing to any bodily diſeaſe or pain, but ſome inward trouble of mind; or wickedneſs of heart[p], ſome ill deſign in his mind, which being conſcious of, and thoughtful about, was diſcovered in his countenance; he ſuſpected, as Jarchi intimates, a deſign to kill him, by putting poiſon into his cup: then I was very ſore afraid; leſt the king ſhould have ſuſpicion of an ill deſign on him; or leſt, ſince he muſt be obliged to give the true reaſon, he ſhould not ſucceed in his requeſt, it being ſo large, and perhaps many about the king were no friends to the Jews.

℣. 3. And I ſaid unto the king, let the king live for ever, &c.] Which ſome think he ſaid to take off the king's ſuſpicion of his having a deſign upon his life, though it ſeems to be a common ſalutation of the kings in thoſe times, ſee Dan. vi. 6, 21. why ſhould not my countenance be ſad, when the city, the place of my fathers ſepulchres lieth waſte, and the gates thereof are conſumed with fire? a man's native place, and where his anceſtors lie interred, being always reckoned near and dear, the king and his nobles could not object to his being concerned for the deſolations thereof.

℣. 4. Then the king ſaid unto me, for what doſt thou make requeſt? &c.] The king ſuppoſed that there was a meaning in thoſe looks and words of his, that he had a favour to aſk of him, and therefore encourages him to it; or the king of himſelf moved this, as being deſirous of doing any thing for him he would propoſe, to make him eaſy: ſo I prayed to the God of heaven; ſecretly, in an ejaculatory way, giving him thanks for thus diſpoſing the king's heart towards him, and intreating he might be directed what to aſk, and in a proper manner, and that he might ſucceed.

℣. 5. And I ſaid unto the king, if it pleaſe the king, and if thy ſervant have found favour in thy ſight, &c.] He ſubmits what he had to ſay wholly to the pleaſure of the king, and puts it upon his unmerited favour, and not on any deſert of his own: that thou wouldſt ſend me unto Judah unto the city of my fathers ſepulchres, that I may build it; the wall of it, and the houſes in it; the favour was, that he might have leave to go thither, and ſet about ſuch a work, for which he was ſo much concerned.

℣. 6. And the king ſaid unto me, the queen alſo ſitting by him, &c.] Which it ſeems was not very common for the queens of Perſia to dine with the kings their huſbands; though this may be obſerved, not ſo much for the ſingularity of it, as for the providence of God in it, that ſo it ſhould be, ſhe having a good reſpect for Nehemiah, and the Jewiſh nation, and forwarded the king in his grant to him: if this king was Darius Hyſtaſpis, this his queen was Atoſſa, daughter of Cyrus[q], who might be the more friendly to the Jews, on account of her father's great regard unto them: for how long ſhall thy journey be? and when wilt thou return? what time would he aſk to do this buſineſs in? this ſhows the king had a great reſpect for him, and was loth to part with him, at leaſt for any great length of time: ſo it pleaſed the king to ſend me; when he promiſed to return unto him, not in 12 years, which was the time of his government in Judea, but in a leſſer ſpace, perhaps a year at moſt, ſince in leſs than two months the wall of Jeruſalem was finiſhed; and it may be, that he then returned to the king of Perſia, who ſent him again under the character of a governor, finding it was for his intereſt to have ſuch a man in thoſe parts.

℣. 7. Moreover, I ſaid unto the king, let letters be given me to the governors beyond the river, &c.] The river of Euphrates, on that ſide of it towards the land of Judea: that they may convey me over till I come into Judah: furniſh him with proviſions, and a guard to protect him.

℣. 8. And a letter unto Aſaph the keeper of the king's foreſt, &c.] The foreſt or mountain of Lebanon, which becauſe of its odoriferous and fruit-bearing trees, was more like an orchard or paradiſe, as this word ſignifies, and ſo it is tranſlated in Eccl. ii. 5. Cant. iv. 13. and at the extreme part of it, it ſeems there was a city called Paradiſus[r]; ſuch an officer as here, was among the Romans, called Saltuarius[s], and is now among us: that he may give me timber to make beams for the gates of the palace which appertaineth to the houſe; not the king's palace near the temple, for that might have occaſioned ſuſpicion in the king, that his view was to ſet up himſelf as king in Judea; but for the gates of the courts adjoining to the temple, and of the wall of the outward court, and of the wall which was to encompaſs the mountain of the houſe, the whole circumference of it: and for the wall of the city; to make gates of in various places for that, where they ſtood before: and for the houſe which I ſhall enter into; and dwell in during his ſtay at Jeruſalem: and the king granted me; all the above favours: according to the good hand of my God upon me; the kind providence of God, which wrought on the heart of the king, and diſpoſed it towards him, and over-ruled all things for good.

℣. 9. Then I came to the governors beyond the river, &c.] Who theſe governors were, whether the ſame who were in the ſecond year of this king's reign 18 years ago, Tatnai and Shethar-boznai, is not certain: now the king had ſent captains of the army, and horſemen with me; both to do him honour, and for his ſafety; and coming thus attended, muſt ſerve to recommend him to the governor, who received him from them at the river Euphrates, and conducted him to Judah.

℣. 10. When Sanballat the Horonite, &c.] Who either preſided at Horonaim, or ſprung from thence, a city of Moab, Iſ. xv. 5. and Tobiah the ſervant, the Ammonite; who was formerly a ſlave, but now raiſed from a low, mean eſtate, to be governor in the land of Ammon, though ſtill a vaſſal of the king of Perſia: heard of it, it grieved them exceedingly, that there came a man to ſeek the welfare of the children of Iſrael; to which the Moabites and Ammonites were always averſe, and ever bore an hatred to Iſrael, and envied every thing that tended to their happineſs.

℣. 11. So I came to Jeruſalem, and was there three days.] Before he entered on any buſineſs, reſting himſelf from the fatigue of the journey, and receiving the viſits of his friends, as Ezra before him did, ch. viii. 32.

℣. 12. And I aroſe in the night, I and ſome few men with me, &c.] Both the ſeaſon of the night, and the ſmall number of men to accompany him, were choſen for greater ſecreſy, that the buſineſs he came upon might not as yet be known, and ſo no ſchemes formed to obſtruct or diſcourage: neither told I any man what God had put in my heart to do at Jeruſalem; he was ſatisfied, that what he had in view was from the Lord, who had ſtirred him up to it, but thought it prudent for the preſent to conceal it, until things were prepared to put it in execution: neither was there any beaſt with me, ſave the beaſt that I rode upon; he only rode perhaps on a mule, being not yet recovered quite from the fatigue of his journey, and for the ſake of honour; the reſt went on foot, that there might be no noiſe made, and ſo paſs on unheard and unobſerved.

℣. 13. And I went out by night, by the gate of the valley, &c.] Where that formerly ſtood, for the gates had been burnt, and were not as yet rebuilt; this was the gate that led to the valley of Jehoſhaphat, according to ſome; or rather to the valley of dead bodies, through which the brook Kidron ran, ſee 2 Chron. xxvi. 9. Jer. xxxi. 4. it is the gate through which Chriſt went to Calvary; it led to Shiloh, Bethoron, and Galan: even before the dragon-well; ſo called from its winding about, juſt as a crooked winding river is called ſerpentine; though ſome think here ſtood an image of a dragon, either in wood, or ſtone, or braſs, out of the mouth of which the water flowed from the well; and others, that ſince the deſolations of Jeruſalem, ſerpents or dragons had their abode here: and to the dung-port; by which they uſed to carry the dung out of the city, and by which they went to Joppa, the ſea, and all the weſtern parts: and viewed the walls of Jeruſalem; in what condition they were, what was neceſſary to be wholly taken down, and where to begin to build: it muſt have been a moon-light night, or he could not have taken a view; for to have carried torches or lamps with them, would have diſcovered them: and the gates thereof were conſumed with fire; nothing of them remained.

℣. 14. Then I went on to the pool of the fountain, and to the king's pool, &c.] That led to the fountain Siloah or Gihon, ſo called; it was the way to the potter's field, to Bethlehem, Hebron, Gaza, and Egypt. Rauwolff ſays[t], there is ſtill ſtanding on the outſide of the valley Tyropæum, (which diſtinguiſhes the two mounts Zion and Moriah) the gate of the fountain, which hath its name, becauſe it leadeth towards the fountain of Siloah, called the king's pool: but there was no place for the beaſt that was under me to paſs; becauſe of the heaps of rubbiſh that lay there.

℣. 15. Then went I up in the night by the brook, &c.] The brook Kidron: and viewed the wall; that was on that ſide: and turned back; did not go quite round the wall, the way perhaps being obſtructed with rubbiſh, and was unpaſſable, or he had not time to do it: and entered by the gate of the valley, and ſo returned; into the city, the ſame way he went out of it, ℣. 13.

℣. 16. And the rulers knew not whither I went, or what I did, &c.] The rulers of the city of Jeruſalem, who ſeem to be officers of the king of Perſia, ſince they are diſtinguiſhed from Jewiſh rulers, in the next clauſe: neither had I as yet told it to the Jews; what he came about and deſigned to do: nor to the prieſts, nor to the nobles, nor to the rulers; the principal men among the Jews, both eccleſiaſtical and civil: nor to the reſt that did the work; of building and repairing neither; thoſe that were employed in it, nor thoſe that overlooked it.

℣. 17. Then ſaid I unto them, &c.] The prieſts and princes of the Jews: you ſee the diſtreſs that we are in; lie open to our enemies, and expoſed to their inſults: how Jeruſalem lieth waſte, and the gates thereof are burnt with fire, ch. i. 3. and ii. 3, 13. come, and let us build up the wall of Jeruſalem, that we be no more a reproach; to their neighbours about them, who ſcoffed at them as a defenceleſs people, and frequently came in upon them, and ſpoiled and plundered them of their goods and ſubſtance.

℣. 18. Then I told them of the hand of my God which was good upon me, &c.] Of the kind providence vidence of God in exalting him in the court of the king of Perſia, in giving him an opportunity of laying the ſad caſe of Jeruſalem before him, and in inclining his heart to ſhew favour to him, and grant his requeſt: as alſo the king's words that he had ſpoken to me; what paſſed between them on this ſubject, the commiſſion he gave him, and the letters he ſent by him to his governors on this ſide the river: and they ſaid, let us riſe up and build; encouraged by this account of things, they propoſed to ſet about the work immediately: ſo they ſtrengthened their hands for this good work; animated and encouraged one another to proceed to it at once with chearfulneſs, and to go on in it with ſpirit and reſolution.

℣. 19. But when Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the ſervant the Ammonite, and Geſhem the Arabian, &c.] This third man might be both an Arabian by birth, and governor of ſome part of Arabia near Judea: heard it; of their beginning to build: they laughed us to ſcorn, and deſpiſed us; as very ſilly people, that undertook what they could never perform: and ſaid; adding threatenings to their ſcoffs: what is this thing that ye do? do ye know what ye are about? have ye any authority to do it? it is unlawful, you will certainly ſuffer for it: will ye rebel againſt the king? the king of Perſia; it will be deemed rebellion and treaſon, and you'll be taken up and treated as rebels and traitors; take care what you do, be it at your peril if you proceed.

℣. 20. Then anſwered I them, and ſaid unto them, &c.] With much ſpirit and boldneſs, not at all intimidated by their ſcoffs or threats: the God of heaven, he will proſper us; whom we ſerve, and under whoſe protection we are, who will ſupply us with every thing we want, and ſucceed this undertaking, in whoſe name we engage in it, and on whom we depend, and we care not what man can do to us: therefore we his ſervants will ariſe and build; in ſpite of all oppoſition, difficulties, and diſcouragements: but you have no portion, nor right, nor memorial in Jeruſalem; no part of the city belonged to them; they had no juriſdiction there; they had no name there, nor their anceſtors, in times paſt; nor had they done any thing to perpetuate their memory in it: in ſhort, they had nothing to do with them, neither in religious nor in civil things; and it was beſt for them to mind their own affairs where they preſided, and not trouble themſelves about theirs.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter contains the names of the builders of the wall of Jeruſalem, the order in which they worked, where they began, and where they ended, which was the ſheep-gate, ℣. 1—32.

℣. 1. Then Eliaſhib the high-prieſt roſe up with his brethren the prieſts, &c.] This was the grandſon of Jeſhua or Joſhua the high-prieſt, his father's name was Joiakim, ch. xii. 10. being high-prieſt, and riſing firſt, he ſet a good example both to the prieſts and to the people, and ſerved no doubt greatly to animate and encourage them: and they built the ſheep-gate; ſo called, becauſe the ſheep were led through it to the temple, and near it was the ſheep-market, where they were ſold, and the ſheep-pool, where the ſacrifices were waſhed; and this being near the temple, and for the ſervice of it, the prieſts undertook that; not that they laboured with their hands at it, though it is poſſible ſome of them might; but they were at the expence of it, employed labourers, and paid them, and directed them, and had the overſight of them: this gate was to the ſouth of the city; and Rauwolff [u] ſays, it was ſtill ſtanding by Moriah, the mountain of the temple, which the Turks have taken to themſelves, and built on it a Turkiſh moſque or temple. — Near the gate, you ſee ſtill, he ſays, the ſheep-pond, which is large and deep, wherein the Nethinim uſed to waſh the beaſts, and then gave them to the prieſts; it is ſaid [w], to lead to the mount of Olives, to Bethany, to Jericho, the deſert, and all the eaſt-country to Jordan: they ſanctified it; this being for ſacred uſe, and they ſacred perſons; and this the firſt part of the building, they prayed for a bleſſing on it, and in it on the whole work undertaken, of which this was the firſt-fruits: and ſet up the doors of it; and ſo finiſhed it: even unto the tower of Meah they ſanctified it, unto the tower of Hananeel; ſo far they built, and what they built they ſanctified. The tower of Meah, or a hundred, as the word ſignifies, might be ſo called, either becauſe it was 100 cubits from the ſheep-gate on one ſide, and as many from the tower of Hananeel on the other ſide, ſtanding between both; or becauſe it was 100 cubits high: theſe two towers perhaps were firm and ſtrong, and needed no repair, ſince no mention is made of any; though they ſeem to me to be one and the ſame tower; ſee Jer. xxxi. 38. Zech. xiv. 10.

℣. 2. And next unto him builded the men of Jericho, &c.] The poſterity of thoſe that formerly inhabited that city; theſe began where Eliaſhib and the prieſts ended, and went on from thence: and next to them; or rather to him, the high-prieſt: builded Zaccur the ſon of Imri; who probably was the chief of the men of Jericho.

℣. 3. But the fiſh-gate did the ſons of Haſſenaah build, &c.] So called, becauſe fiſh was brought from the ſea-coaſts through it, and near it was the fiſh-market; this alſo was ſouthward, according to Dr. Lightfoot [x]; others ſay northward; ſome ſay it led to the ſea of Galilee, Jordan, and all the eaſt and north-country: but it is moſt likely to be weſtward towards the Mediterranean ſea, Tyre and Joppa, from whence fiſh were brought; and Rauwolff ſays [y], it is ſtill ſtanding towards the weſt, behind mount Sion, and over-againſt mount Gihon, ſee 2 Chron. xxxiii. 14. he alſo ſays, this gate was called the gate of Hebron, becauſe the road of Hebron went through it, which is about ſeven or eight hours walking diſtant from it: who alſo laid the beams thereof, and ſet up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof; completely finiſhed it.

℣. 4. And next unto them repaired Meremoth, the ſon of Uriah, the ſon of Koz, &c.] And the men under him; ſee Ezra viii. 33. this part of the wall on which they worked, was not wholly demoliſhed, only weakened, and therefore did not rebuild it, but repaired and ſtrengthened it, and this phraſe is uſed all along afterwards: and next unto them repaired Meſhullam, the ſon of Berechiah, the ſon of Meſhezabeel: and next unto them repaired Zadok, the ſon of Baana; but who they were cannot be ſaid.

℣. 5. And next unto them the Tekoites repaired, &c.] The inhabitants of Tekoa, a city in the tribe of Judah; ſee Amos i. 1. but their nobles put not their necks to the work of their Lord; either of Nehemiah, as ſome, or rather of the Lord, and prince appointed over their families, as Aben Ezra, to whom they would not be ſubject; though it ſeems beſt with Jarchi, to underſtand it of the Lord their God, by whoſe command this work was begun; but they refuſed to give any aſſiſtance to it with their purſes or preſence, but withdrew from it, as refractory oxen withdraw their necks from the yoke. This is obſerved to their diſgrace, when the common people of their city were ready to work, and did.

℣. 6. Moreover the old gate repaired Jehoiada, the ſon of Paſeah, and Meſhullam the ſon of Beſodaiah, &c.] Which ſome think was ſo called, becauſe it led to the old city Salem. Dr. Lightfoot [a] thinks it is the ſame with the ſecond or bird-gate, Zeph. i. 10. According to Vatablus, it was the gate of the old pool, Iſ. xxii. 11. or rather perhaps it was the gate of the old wall Joſephus ſpeaks of [b]; it led to the north of the land: they laid the beams thereof; as in ℣. 3.

℣. 7. And next unto them repaired Melatiah the Gibeonite, and Jadon the Meronathite, the men of Gibeon and Mizpah, &c.] Which places were both in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 25, 26. and one of theſe men was of the one place, and the other of the other: unto the throne of the governor on this ſide the river; where the governor of thoſe parts under the king of Perſia had his ſeat, and now Nehemiah; but, according to Aben Ezra, Ciſſe, rendered throne, is the name of a man who was the governor.

℣. 8. Next unto him repaired Uzziel the ſon of Harhaiah, of the goldſmiths, &c.] Or Tzorephim, which, according to Jarchi, was the name of a family ſo called from their trade and buſineſs: next unto him alſo repaired Hananiah the ſon of one of the apothecaries; or confectioners, which alſo might be the name of a family ſo called for the ſame reaſon: and they fortified Jeruſalem unto the broad wall; which reached from the gate of Ephraim to the corner-gate, which was broken down by Joaſh, king of Iſrael, but was rebuilt ſo ſtrong by Uzziah, king of Judah, that it ſtood firm to this time; wherefore theſe men repaired up to it, but left that as they found it; ſee 2 Chron. xxv. 23. and xxvi. 9. were not careful to repair it, it not wanting any repair.

℣. 9. And next unto them repaired Rephaiah, the ſon of Hur, the ruler of the half part of Jeruſalem;] That city belonging partly to the tribe of Judah, and partly to the tribe of Benjamin; one part of it was under a governor that was of the tribe of Judah, as this man ſeems to be; and the other part under one of the tribe of Benjamin; ſee ℣. 12.

℣. 10. And next unto him repaired Jedaiah, the ſon of Harumaph, over-againſt his houſe, &c.] That part of the wall which ſtood right againſt his houſe; and to take this part he could not well object to it, and it might be reaſonably thought he would take care to repair it well, and make it ſtrong for his own ſafety: and next unto him repaired Hattuſh, the ſon of Haſhabniah; but who he was is not known.

℣. 11. Malchijah the ſon of Harim, and Haſhub the ſon of Pahath-moab, &c.] The fathers of theſe were heads of families that came out of captivity with Zerubbabel, Ezra ii. 6, 32. repaired the other piece; or ſecond piece, below and next to that which Hattuſh repaired, the laſt builder mentioned: and the tower of the furnaces; near to which were furnaces for the baking of bread, or of bricks.

℣. 12. And next unto him repaired Shallum, the ſon of Halloeſh, &c.] So called, as Ben Melech ſays, from his being an inchanter of ſerpents, or a wiſe prudent counſellor: the ruler of the half part of Jeruſalem; of the other half; ſee ℣. 9, he and his daugheers; who were rich widows or heireſſes, and employed men to build at their own expence; he ſeems to have had no ſons.

℣. 13. The valley-gate repaired Hanun, &c.] Of which ſee ch. ii. 13. and the inhabitants of Zanoah; a city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 34. they built it, and ſet up the doors thereof, &c. ſee ℣. 3. and 1000 cubits on the wall to the dung-gate; that is, they repaired the wall to ſuch a length from the valley-gate to the dung-gate; ſee ch. ii. 13.

℣. 14. But the dung-gate repaired Malchiah the ſon of Rechab, &c.] If this was one of the Rechabites, they were forbid to build houſes, Jer. xxxv. 7. but perhaps though they might not build private houſes for themſelves to dwell in, they might be employed in building walls and fortreſſes for public ſecurity; though it is more probable that this man was not of that family: the ruler of part of Beth-haccerem; or of the tract of Beth-haccerem, a place between Tekoah and Jeruſalem; ſee Jer. vi. 1. he built it, and ſet up the doors thereof; &c. as in ℣. 3.

℣. 15. But the gate of the fountain, &c.] Of which ſee ch. ii. 14. repaired Shallum, the ſon of Colhozeh, the ruler of part of Mizpah; of a tract, diſtrict, town, or city ſo called; perhaps that in the tribe of Benjamin; ſee ℣. 7. he built it, and covered it; roofed it, which is not ſaid of any of the other gates, whether becauſe of the fountain at it: and ſet up the doors thereof, &c. finiſhed it compleatly: and the wall of the pool of Siloah by the king's garden; which was formerly without the wall, on the weſt, but afterwards taken in by Manaſſeh, who built it; ſee 2 Chron. xxxiii. 14. and from hence the king's garden was watered: and unto the ſtairs that go down from the city of David; Zion, which was built on an eminence, from which they went down by ſteps into the lower city Acra.

℣. 16. After him repaired Nehemiah the ſon of Azbuk, the ruler of the half part of Bethzur;] A ſtrong fortified place in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 58. unto the place over-againſt the ſepulchres of David; where he and his family, and the kings of his race were buried, which remained to this time untouched by the Babylonians, and to many ages after; ſee Acts ii. 29. and to the pool that was made; not a natural, but an artificial one, which was made by Hezekiah, 2 Kings xx. 20. and unto the houſe houſe of the mighty; where was a garriſon of ſoldiers in former times for defence.

℣. 17. After him repaired the Levites, Rehum the ſon of Bani, &c.] Who was one of them, as he that follows was another: next unto him repaired Haſhabiah, the ruler of the half part of Keilah; a city of the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 4. in his part; either with the men of that part of Keilah under his juriſdiction, or at the expence of that part of it.

℣. 18. After him repaired their brethren, &c.] Either the brethren of the two before named particularly, or the Levites their brethren in general, as Jarchi: Bavai, the ſon of Henadad, the ruler of the half part of Keilah; the other half of that place.

℣. 19. And next to him repaired Ezer, the ſon of Jeſhua, the ruler of Mizpah, &c.] Either of another Mizpah, or of the other half of Mizpah, ℣. 15. another piece; or a ſecond piece; one of the two pieces; for another is mentioned in the next verſe: over againſt the going up to the armoury, at the turning of the wall; the weſtern wall towards the ſouth, near to which was a place where armour was laid up; perhaps the ſame with the tower of David, to which there is an alluſion in Cant. iv. 4.

℣. 20. After him Baruch the ſon of Zabbai, earneſtly repaired the other piece, &c.] Towards and next to the Ezer that laſt builder mentioned had repaired; and this he did earneſtly, or in anger, as the word ſignifies, being angry with himſelf or others, that there was any backwardneſs ſhown to the work; and therefore, with all haſte and eagerneſs imaginable attended to it: from the turning of the wall; ſee the preceding verſe: unto the door of the houſe of Eliaſhib the high-prieſt; of whom ſee ℣. 1. now either his houſe was upon the wall, or that part of the wall that was right againſt the door of his houſe is here meant.

℣. 21. After him repaired Meremōth the ſon of Uriah, the ſon of Koz, another piece, &c.] He had wrought before in another part, ℣. 4. but having finiſhed that, he ſets his hand a ſecond time to the work: from the door of the houſe of Eliaſhib, even to the end of the houſe of Eliaſhib; the door of his houſe ſeems to have been at one end of it, and from that end to the other was a conſiderable length; he being a great man, the high-prieſt, had a large houſe.

℣. 22. And after him repaired the prieſts, the men of the plain.] Either of the plain of Jericho, where, in after-times at leaſt, there was a ſtation of the prieſts, or of the plain about Jeruſalem; thoſe alſo aſſiſted in the repairs of the wall.

℣. 23. After him, &c.] The laſt of the prieſts before-mentioned: repaired Benjamin, and Haſhub, over againſt their houſe; as much of the wall as the length of their houſe, or houſes, were: after him repaired Azariah the ſon of Maaſeiah, the ſon of Ananiah, by his houſe; as far as that reached.

℣. 24. After him repaired Binnui the ſon of Henadad, another piece, &c.] Beginning where Azariah ended: unto the turning of the wall, even unto the corner; the corner where the wall turned from the ſouth to the eaſt.

℣. 25. Palal the ſon of Uzai, over againſt the turning of the wall, &c.] Who dwelt there, and ſo repaired what was right againſt him: and the tower which lieth out from the king's high houſe: which might be built for proſpect, or his upper houſe: that was by the court of the priſon; and we often read in Jeremiah of the court of the priſon being in or near the king's houſe, ſee ch xxxii. 2. after him, Pedaiah the ſon of Paroſh; went on from hence with the repair.

℣. 26. Moreover, the Nethinims dwelt in Ophel, &c.] An high tower upon the wall, in this part of it, ſee 2 Chron. xxvii. 3. theſe were ſervants to the Levites, and repaired here, where their dwellings were: unto the place over againſt the water-gate toward the eaſt; and as one part of their work was to fetch water for the temple, they were here very properly ſituated; it led to the king's garden, the valley of Jehoſhaphat, and from thence a plain way to Bethany: and the tower that lieth out; from the wall.

℣. 27. After them the Tekoites repaired another piece, &c.] Having finiſhed what they undertook in another part of the wall, ℣. 5. they engage in this part of it; which ſhews their great zeal and diligence, when their nobles were ſo backward to it, and withdrew from it: over againſt the great tower that lieth out; the ſame as in the preceding verſe: even unto the wall of Ophel; from right againſt the great tower unto the wall the Tekoites repaired.

℣. 28. From above the horſe-gate repaired the prieſts, &c.] So called, either becauſe near it were ſtables for horſes; or through it horſes were led to be watered at the brook Kidron, to which it was near; or to be exerciſed in the valley; Joſephus[c] ſpeaks of the Hippic, or horſe-tower, which might be near it: every one over againſt his houſe; for it ſeems there was a row of houſes in which the prieſts dwelt, and each of them repaired as much of the wall as was right againſt his houſe.

℣. 29. After them repaired Zadok the ſon of Immer, over againſt his houſe, &c.] After the laſt of the prieſts, this begun where they ended, and repaired as far as his houſe reached; and being, perhaps, a perſon of ſome note, his houſe might be a large one: after him repaired alſo Shemaiah, the ſon of Shemaiah, the keeper of the eaſt-gate; that is, of the temple; for the gates of the city having been burnt ſo long, it cannot be thought there ſhould be a keeper of any of them.

℣. 30. After him repaired Hananiah the ſon of Shelemiah, and Hanun the ſixth ſon of Zalaph, another piece, &c.] This laſt man had ſix ſons; but only his youngeſt ſon wrought at this work, which is obſerved to his great commendation: after him repaired Meſhullam the ſon of Berechiah, over againſt his chamber; the ſame as in ℣. 4. who having finiſhed what he engaged in there, took his part where his chamber was, and repaired over againſt that.

℣. 31. After him repaired Malchiah, the goldſmith's ſon, &c.] Or the ſon of Tzoreph, as ſome, ſo called from his buſineſs: unto the place of the Nethinims, and of the merchants: he repaired up to the place where theſe dwelt: over againſt the gate Miphkad; where ſome think was an houſe of viſitation or correction; and others, where the Sanhedrim ſat, tried cauſes, and exerciſed juſtice: and to the going up of the corner; from the eaſt to the north.

℣. 32. And between the going up of the corner unto the ſheep-gate, &c.] Where the building firſt began, and where it now ended: repaired the goldſmiths ſmiths and the merchants; or druggiſts; which was done at their expence; and ſo the wall all round, with the gates of it, were rebuilt and repaired, which was all done in 52 days, ch. vi. 15.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter relates, how the Jews, whilſt building, were mocked by their enemies, to which no anſwer was returned but by prayer to God, and they went on notwithſtanding in their work, ℣. 1—6. and how that their enemies conſpired againſt them, to hinder them by force of arms, ℣. 7—12. to oppoſe which, both ſpiritual and temporal weapons were made uſe of, ſo that the work was ſtill carried on, ℣. 13—23.

℣. 1. But it came to paſs, that when Sanballat heard that we builded the wall, &c.] Or were building it; for as yet it was not finiſhed, ſee ℣. 6. he was wroth, and took great indignation; inwardly, though outwardly he pretended to treat the work with contempt, as if it never would be accompliſhed, which yet he feared: and mocked the Jews; as a ſet of fooliſh builders, and unable to finiſh what they had begun.

℣. 2. And he ſpake before his brethren, &c.] Tobiah the Ammonite, and Geſhem the Arabian, and perhaps ſome other governours of the king of Perſia in thoſe parts: and before the army of Samaria; which, and the inhabitants of it, were implacable enemies of the Jews: and ſaid, What do theſe feeble Jews? what do they pretend to do, or what can they do? will they fortify themſelves? by building a wall about their city; can they think they ſhall ever be able to do this, or that it will be allowed? will they ſacrifice? meaning not their daily ſacrifice, as Jarchi, that they had done a long time, but for the dedication of their building, as Aben Ezra: will they make an end in a day? they ſeem to be in as great a hurry and haſte as if they meant it; and indeed unleſs they can do it very quickly, they never will; they'll ſoon be ſtopped: will they revive the ſtones out of the heaps of the rubbiſh which are burnt? where will they find materials? do they imagine that they can make burnt ſtones firm and ſtrong again, or harden the duſt and rubbiſh into ſtones, or make that which is as if dead, alive? to do this is the ſame as to revive a dead man, and they may as well think of doing the one as the other; burnt ſtones being reckoned as dead, as Aben Ezra obſerves.

℣. 3. Now Tobiah the Ammonite was by him, &c.] Who was one of his brethren he ſpake before, ℣. 2. and he ſaid; in the like contemptuous and ſcoffing manner: even that which they build, if a fox go up, he ſhall break down their ſtone wall; ſignifying not only, that it was ſo low that a fox could eaſily get up to it, or leap over it; but that the materials were ſo bad, and the work ſo poorly done, that the weight of a fox would break it down; of which creatures, many were thereabout, ſince Jeruſalem was deſolate, ſee Lam. v. 18.

℣. 4. Hear, O our God, for we are deſpiſed, &c.] Here begins the prayer of Nehemiah, who had been informed of what theſe men ſaid in contempt of him, and his builders, to whom he ſent no anſwer, but applied to God: and turn their reproach upon their own head; as they have deſpiſed and reproached us, let them be deſpiſed and reproached by their neighbours: give them for a prey in the land of captivity; let them be carried captive, as we have been, and become a prey and booty to their enemies.

℣. 5. And cover not their iniquity, and let not their ſin be blotted out from before thee, &c.] Let it not go unpuniſhed, and even let it not be pardoned; which is ſpoken, not from a private ſpirit of revenge, but from a public ſpirit for the glory of God, and his juſtice; and not as a mere imprecation, but as a prophecy of what would be the caſe, in like manner as many of David's petitions in the pſalms; and for this there was a good foundation, ſince God had threatened the Moabites and Ammonites with utter deſtruction: for they have provoked thee to anger before the builders; by deſpiſing his people, and mocking at the work the Lord had called them to; and this they did publickly, and on purpoſe to diſcourage the workmen.

℣. 6. So built we the wall, &c.] Went on in building it, notwithſtanding their ſcoffs and threats: and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof; it was carried all round the city to half the height of it: for the people had a mind to work; their heart was in it, they had a good will to it, and they made haſte to finiſh it.

℣. 7. And it came to paſs that when Sanballat, and Tobiah, and the Arabians, &c.] Who were under and influenced by Geſhem the Arabian: and the Ammonites; over whom Tobiah was governor: and the Aſhdodites; who were of Aſhdod or Azotus, one of the principalities of the Philiſtines, who were always enemies to the Jews: heard that the walls of Jeruſalem were made up; or the length of them went up[d]; that is, the height of them; that they roſe up high apace, and were got up to, or almoſt to their proper height: and that the breaches began to be ſtopped; for the walls were not all thrown down by the Chaldeans, but breaches made here and there, which were now repaired: then they were very wroth; and could not avoid ſhewing it; before they mocked them, as attempting what they could not go through with, but now perceiving the work went on with great ſucceſs, they were enraged.

℣. 8. And conſpired all of them together, &c.] All the above men and people entered into a confederacy and combination: to come and to fight againſt Jeruſalem; to bring an army with them, and by force cauſe the Jews to deſiſt; the Jews[e] pretend they came to war, and brought with them an army of 180,000 men, which is not probable: and to hinder it; the building of the walls of it; or to make a wandering for him[f]; for Nehemiah, or the people, or both, to cauſe them to ſtray from their work, to fright them from it, that they might become like men at their wits end, not knowing what to do, where to turn themſelves, or what courſe to ſteer, but to wander about as perſons out of their ſenſes; ſo Aben Ezra. De Dieu joins this clauſe to the next verſe, to cauſe every one of them to wander, we prayed, &c.

[d] עלתה ארוכה aſcendiſſet longitudo, Montanus; ſo Cocceius in rad. ארך. [e] Pirke Eliezer, c. 38.
[f] לעשות לו תועה ad faciendum ei errorem, Montanus; ei aberrationem, Genevenſes; vagationem & palationem, alii apud De Dieu.

℣. 9. Nevertheleſs, we made our prayer unto our God, &c.] Spread their caſe before him in prayer, intreating direction and help from him: and ſet a watch againſt them day and night, becauſe of them; to give notice of their approach, that they might prepare to defend themſelves; though they prayed to God, and truſted in him for deliverance, they did not neglect the uſe of means.

℣. 10. And Judah ſaid, &c.] Several of the men of Judah: the ſtrength of the bearers of burdens is decayed; through much labour, in carrying heavy loads of ſtone and timber to the builders, and yet more through fear of the enemy: and there is much rubbiſh; which ought to be removed, but that the labourers were ſo weak that they could not do it: ſo that we are not able to build the wall; to finiſh it before the enemy comes to attack us.

℣. 11. And our adverſaries ſaid, they ſhall not know, &c.] Our deſigns upon them: neither ſee; or perceive what we are about to do: till we come in the midſt of them; with an army ſuddenly, at an unawares, and unexpected: and ſlay them; they being unarmed, and not prepared to defend themſelves: and cauſe the work to ceaſe; as it muſt in courſe, the builders being ſlain.

℣. 12. And it came to paſs when the Jews that dwelt by them, &c.] Near Samaria, Arabia, and Aſhdod, and had intelligence of their deſigns: came, they aid to us ten times; that is, they came to them at Jeruſalem, and often told them, as this phraſe ten times, ſignifies, ſee Gen. xxxi. 7. from all places whence ye ſhall return unto us; they will be upon you, come which way you will, ſo that ye are in the utmoſt danger: or from all places; where you are repairing and rebuilding: return to us; that ye may enjoy peace and proſperity with us under Sanballat, &c. and eſcape the wrath and fury you are now expoſed to; or from all places we come, that ye may return to us; ſo De Dieu; theſe Jews, though they pretended to be friends to their brethren, yet ſeemed to be in friendſhip with their enemies, and ſought to diſcourage them, and weaken their minds, and cauſe them to ceaſe building.

℣. 13. Therefore ſet I in the lower places behind the wall, &c.] Where the wall was loweſt, and the enemy could more eaſily break it down, or get over it: and on the higher places; where the wall was higher; or rather on the towers upon the walls, as the word ſignifies the tops of rocks, which are dry and ſmooth, ſee Ezek. xxiv. 2, 8. I even ſet the people after their families; according to their rank, number, ſtrength, and valour: with their ſwords, their ſpears, and their bows; with weapons they could uſe both near, and at a diſtance.

℣. 14. And I looked, &c.] Took a view of the people, and obſerved, that they were in their proper place, and ſufficiently armed, and alſo whether the enemy was coming: and roſe up and ſaid unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the reſt of the people; who were under their nobles and rulers, as their captains and commanders: be not ye afraid of them; of their enemies, their numbers, and their threats: remember the Lord which is great and terrible; who is greater than they, and is to be feared and truſted in by his people, and is terrible even to the kings of the earth: and fight for your brethren, your ſons and your daughters, your wives and your houſes; intimating, that they were in danger of loſing all that was near and dear, valuable and precious to them, if they did not fight for them; and therefore it became them to quit themſelves like men, and be ſtrong.

℣. 15. And it came to paſs when our enemies heard it was known unto us, &c.] What they intended, as might be reported to them from the preparations made by the Jews to receive them, and defend themſelves: and God had brought their counſel to nought; which was to come upon them ſecretly and unawares; but being diſcovered, they dropped their deſign, and their ſcheme came to nothing: ſo that we returned all of us to the wall, every man to his work; to that part of it where he wrought, in order to finiſh it.

℣. 16. And it came to paſs from that time forth, &c.] That they were thus alarmed of danger from their enemies: that the half of my ſervants wrought in the work; of building the wall; his domeſtic ſervants, his guards, or mighty men, as Jarchi, men of war, the ſoldiers: and the other half of them held both the ſpears, the ſhields, and the bows; ſome offenſive, others defenſive weapons; ſome to fight with at a diſtance, others near at hand: and the habergeons; coats of mail, which they took and cloathed themſelves with: and the rulers were behind all the houſe of Judah; the Jews that were working at the wall, to animate and encourage them, protect and defend them.

℣. 17. They which builded on the wall, &c.] That laid the morter and ſtones upon it, and timber where it was neceſſary: and they that bore burdens; that carried the morter, ſtones and timber to the builders, and ſerved them: with thoſe that laded; which prepared the above for them, and laid them on their ſhoulders: every one with one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon; which is not to be underſtood ſtrictly and literally, for without both hands they could not well perform either of the above works; but proverbially, ſignifying, that they were intent on both working and fighting, and were ready and prepared to do the latter, as well as the former, having weapons lying by them, or girt about them, as is explained in the following verſe.

℣. 18. For the builders had every one his ſword girded by his ſide, and ſo builded, &c.] Thus accoutred he wrought, and was prepared for either ſervice: and he that ſounded the trumpet was by me; to give the alarm of war, that every one might lay aſide his work, and prepare for the battle: this officer ſtood by Nehemiah, that when he found it neceſſary, might give him orders to ſound his trumpet, for the men to gather to him.

℣. 19. And I ſaid unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the reſt of the people, &c.] See the note on ℣. 14. the work is great and large; the building of the wall all around the city of Jeruſalem: and we are ſeparated upon the wall one far from another; ſome at work on one part of it, and ſome at another, ſo that the diſtance between one another, at leaſt in the farther part, was very conſiderable.

℣. 20. In what place therefore ye hear the ſound of the trumpet, &c.] Be it what part of the wall ſoever they were at work, even the moſt diſtant: reſort ye thither to us; to Nehemiah, and the half of his ſervants armed, where the trumpet was blown; that was to be the place of rendezvous: our God ſhall fight for us; and give us victory over our enemies; none have any reaſon to be intimidated, when they ſhall hear the ſound of the trumpet.

℣. 21. So we laboured in the work, &c.] Of building the wall: and half of them held the ſpears; and other weapons before mentioned, ℣. 16. from the riſing of the morning, till the ſtars appeared; that is, from morning to evening, the ſpace of time the builders and labourers worked.

 that

℣. 22. Likewiſe at the ſame time ſaid I unto the people, &c.] That were at work upon the wall: let every one with his ſervant lodge within Jeruſalem; every builder had a ſervant, or a lad, as the word ſignifies, to wait upon him, to bring morter or ſtone, or what he wanted; and ſome of theſe builders, with their lads, came out of the country-towns and villages in the morning, and returned at night; now Nehemiah propoſed for the ſafety of the city, and its walls, that for the preſent they would lodge in Jeruſalem: that in the night they may be a guard unto us, and labour on the day; might help to protect them in the night, ſhould they be ſurprized with the enemy, and be ready for their work in the day-time.

℣. 23. So neither I, nor my brethren, &c.] The nobles and rulers: nor my ſervants; his domeſtic ſervants that waited upon him: nor the men of the guard which followed me; his body-guard, which attended him as a commiſſioner of the king of Perſia for ſtate and grandeur: none of us put off our clothes; at night when they laid themſelves down to ſleep, but laid in them, that they might be ready upon an alarm made: ſaving that every one put them off for waſhing; not for common waſhing becauſe dirty, but for waſhing on account of ceremonial uncleanneſs, which required waſhing both of bodies and garments, ſee Lev. xv. 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, &c. and the Vulgate Latin verſion expreſſes it by baptiſm, as the apoſtle calls ſuch ceremonial ablutions in Heb. vi. 2. and ix. 10. It is in the margin of our bibles, every one went with his weapon for water; when he went to Siloam, or any other place, for water, he took a weapon with him to defend himſelf upon occaſion; which is no bad ſenſe of the words. Noldius[g] renders the words, every one with his weapon (and) water; both were at his bolſter, ready, if wanted, ſee 1 Sam. xxvi. 11, 12.

CHAP. V.

IN this chapter is a complaint of the poor againſt the rich for oppreſſion of them, ℣. 1—5. for which Nehemiah being angry, reproved them, and made them promiſe, and ſwear to it, to make reſtitution, ℣. 6—13. and ſet them an example himſelf, taking nothing of them during his 12 years government, ſupporting himſelf and his at his own expences, ℣. 14—19.

℣. 1. And there was a great cry of the people, and of their wives, &c.] Thoſe of the poorer ſort: againſt their brethren the Jews; the rich that oppreſſed them; and this cry or complaint was made to Nehemiah for redreſs.

℣. 2. For there were that ſaid, we, our ſons, and our daughters are many, &c.] Not that they complained of the number of their children, for a numerous offspring was always reckoned a bleſſing with the Jews; but this they obſerved to ſhew that their families, being large, required a conſiderable quantity of food to ſupport them: therefore we take up corn for them, that we may eat, and live; that is, they were obliged to take it at an exorbitant price, which is the thing complained of; or otherwiſe they muſt ſtarve, the rich taking the advantage of their poverty, and preſent dearth.

℣. 3. Some alſo there were that ſaid, we have mortgaged our lands, vineyards, and houſes, &c.] Made them over to others, put them into their hands as pledges for money received of them: that we may buy corn; for the ſupport of their families: becauſe of the dearth; or famine, which might be occaſioned by their enemies lying in wait and intercepting all proviſions that might be brought to them; for this ſeems not to be the famine ſpoken of in Hagg. i. 10, 11. for that was ſome years before this, and for a reaſon which now was not.

℣. 4. There were alſo that ſaid, &c.] Who tho' they were able to buy corn for their families without mortgaging their eſtates: yet ſay they, we have borrowed money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards; for tho' the prieſts, Levites, and Nethinim were exempted from it, yet not the people in common; and ſome of theſe were ſo poor, that they could not pay it without borrowing upon their eſtates, and giving large uſury for it, ſee Ezra vi. 8. and vii. 24.

℣. 5. Yet now our fleſh is as the fleſh of our brethren, &c.] We are of the ſame nature, nation, ſtock and religion: our children as their children; are circumciſed as they, and have a right to the ſame privileges in church and ſtate: and lo, we bring into bondage our ſons and daughters to be ſervants; ſhall be obliged to it, unleſs relieved: and ſome of our daughters are brought into bondage; already ſold to be ſervants, as they might in caſe of the poverty of parents, Exod. xxi. 7. and ſome were ſometimes taken to be bondmen in payment of their parents debts, 2 Kings iv. 1. neither is it in our power to redeem them, for other men have our lands and vineyards; as pledges for money borrowed.

℣. 6. And I was very angry when I heard their cry, and theſe words.] Their complaint expreſſed in this manner; it not only raiſed pity and compaſſion in his breaſt towards theſe poor diſtreſſed people, but indignation at the rich that oppreſſed them.

℣. 7. Then I conſulted with myſelf, &c.] What was to be done, what method to be taken to redreſs ſuch grievances: and I rebuked the nobles, and the rulers; who were the men that monopolized the corn in this dear ſeaſon, and ſold it at an extravagant price, and had got the lands, vineyards, and houſes of the poor mortgaged to them, and to whom they had lent money on uſury: and ſaid unto them, you exact uſury every one of his brother; which was contrary to the expreſs law of God, Exod. xxii. 25. and which even the Indians[h] ſtrictly obſerved, who neither let out money, nor took any upon uſury: and I ſet a great aſſembly againſt them; either of the poor that were oppreſſed, who brought in their accuſations and complaints againſt them, or a large body of the people, who were not guilty, to hear them, that the delinquents might be put to public ſhame; or he called a large court of judicature, and ſet them to examine theſe allegations, and to do juſtice.

[g] Ebr. Concord. Partic. p. 322.

[h] Ælian. Var. Hiſt. l. 4. c. 1.

℣. 8. And I ſaid unto them, &c.] The nobles, and rulers, and other rich perſons that exacted uſury of the poor: we after our ability; ſpeaking of himſelf in the plural number, which now obtained in the court of Perſia; or of Zerubbabel, Ezra, and others, who, according as their worldly circumſtances, having been captives, would admit of: have redeemed our brethren the Jews, which were ſold unto the heathen; not that they had given a ranſom for them to Cyrus, or any other king of Perſia, which would be contrary to the prophecies concerning their redemption, Iſ. xlv. 13. and lii. 3. but ſuch who had ſold themſelves to particular perſons in Babylon, who without being redeemed, could not take the advantage of the liberty granted by Cyrus, and his ſucceſſors; and it may be, there were others alſo in the like circumſtances in other neighbouring nations, that had been redeemed this way. The Jewiſh canon [i] now is, he that ſells himſelf, and his children, to Gentiles, they don't redeem; but they redeem the children after their father's death; which the commentators [k] explain of the third time that he ſells himſelf: and will you even ſell your brethren? their lands and vineyards mortgaged to them, and even their perſons: or ſhall they be ſold unto us? muſt we be obliged to buy them, and to redeem them: then they held their peace, and found nothing to anſwer; being convinced they had done wrong, by the arguments uſed, to which they could make no reply.

℣. 9. Alſo I ſaid, it is not good that ye do, &c.] The meaning is, that it was very bad; it is a meioſis, by which more is intended than is expreſſed: ought ye not to walk in the fear of our God; in reverence of him and his law, and according to that: becauſe of the reproach of the heathen our enemies; whoſe mouths will be open to reproach the true religion, and the good ways of God; and ſay, theſe are the men that pretend to fear God, and ſerve him, and yet break his law, and uſe their brethren ill, ſee Rom. ii. 24.

℣. 10. I likewiſe, and my brethren, and my ſervants, might exact of them money and corn, &c.] For our maintenance, in conſideration of the ſervices done by us, which would appear but reaſonable, but this we decline for the ſake of eaſing our poor brethren: I pray you let us leave off this uſury; and not exact it, as has been too much, and too long uſed.

℣. 11. Reſtore, I pray you, even this day, their lands, their vineyards, their olive-yards, and their houſes, &c.] Which they had made over to them for corn they had had, or money they borrowed of them; it is intreated that an immediate reſtitution be made, and the rather, if what Aben Ezra obſerves is true, that this was the year of releaſe, when debts were not to be exacted, but forgiven, Deut. xv. 1, 2, 3. alſo the hundredth part of the money, and of the corn, the wine, and the oil, that ye exact of them; the hundredth part of the money might be what they took for uſury, as the Romans did in after-times, even ſo much a month; ſo that if the loan was 100 pounds, a pound was given every month for it, and ſo 12 pounds in the year; and the hundredth part of the corn, wine, and oil might be the hundredth part of thoſe fruits of the earth, which the rulers demanded for their ſalary, ſee ℣. 15.

℣. 12. Then ſaid they, we will reſtore them, &c.] The lands, vineyards, olive-yards, and houſes: and will require nothing of them; not the hundredth part of the fruits of the earth by way of ſalary: ſo will we do as thou ſayeſt; they approved of his propoſal, and readily agreed to it: then I called the prieſts, and took an oath of them, that they ſhould do according to this promiſe; not that the prieſts were delinquents, they were not charged with any thing of this kind, nor were they the men that promiſed reſtitution; but the prieſts were called to adminiſter the oath to the nobles, and rulers, and rich men, to oblige them the more to keep their word; an oath being ſacred, prieſts in an holy office, were made uſe of to give it, that it might be the more ſolemn, and the more ſtrictly regarded.

℣. 13. Alſo I ſhook my lap, &c.] The fore-ſkirts of his garment, ſhaking the duſt out of them, as a ſymbol of what follows; a like rite was uſed in the caſe of peace and war, the choice of either, by the Romans, as propoſed by their ambaſſadors to the Carthaginians, as having either in their boſom to ſhake out [l]: and ſaid, ſo God ſhake out every man from his houſe, and from his labour; what he has got by his labour: that performeth not his promiſe; confirmed by an oath: even thus be he ſhaken out, and emptied; of all that he has in the world, and out of the world too, as Jarchi adds: and all the congregation ſaid, Amen; ſo let it be, even thoſe that had taken pledges and uſury, as well as others: and praiſed the Lord; that had given them ſuch a governor to direct, adviſe, and exhort them to their duty, and had inclined their hearts to attend thereunto: and the people did according to this promiſe; they punctually kept it, and the oath they had ſworn.

℣. 14. Moreover from the time that I was appointed to be their governor in the land of Judah, &c.] That is, by the king of Perſia, which was not done when he was firſt ſent into Judea; but very probably when he had finiſhed the wall in 52 days, he returned to Perſia, and gave the king an account of his ſucceſs, and how things ſtood in thoſe parts, when he judged it neceſſary to ſend him again in the character of a governor, and which was ſtill within the ſame year, as follows: from the 20th year, even unto the 32d year of Artaxerxes, that is, 12 years; ſee ch. xiii. 6. I and my brethren have not eaten the bread of the governor; which was fit and proper for him, and uſed to be given him; neither he, nor thoſe that aſſiſted him in the government, the principal men he brought along with him, and put into poſts and places under him.

℣. 15. But the former governors that had been before me, were chargeable to the people, &c.] Between him and Zerubbabel, for Ezra was no governor; according to the Jewiſh chronology [m], when Ezra came to Jeruſalem, Zerubbabel returned to Babylon, and there died, and his ſon Methullam was in his ſtead, and after him ſucceeded Hananiah his ſon: and had taken of them bread and wine, beſides 40 ſhekels of ſilver; which amounted to between four and five pounds, and this they had every day: yea, even their ſervants bare rule over the people; required a ſalary, or at leaſt perquiſites of them, which the governors connived at: but ſo did not I, becauſe of the fear of God; neither took any thing himſelf of the people, nor ſuffered his ſervants; becauſe the fear of God was upon his heart, and before his eyes, and therefore could not allow himſelf to oppreſs the poor.

℣. 16. Yea, alſo I continued in the work of this wall, &c.] Of building the wall of Jeruſalem; here he gave his conſtant attendance to direct and encourage the workmen, and ſee that they kept to to their work, and did it well: neither bought we any land; neither he nor the principal men with him, though they could have bought it cheap, but they choſe not to take the advantage of the poverty of the people: and all my ſervants were gathered thither unto the work; all were employed in it, taking no wages for their work, being maintained at his expence.

℣. 17. Moreover, there were at my table 150 of the Jews and rulers, &c.] Every day at his own coſt, which muſt be conſiderable to provide for ſuch a number, and of ſuch rank: beſides thoſe that came unto us from among the heathen that are about us; who were proſelytes, and came thither to worſhip, or on a civil account, to give intelligence, and take directions.

℣. 18. Now that which was prepared for me daily, was one ox, and ſix choice ſheep, &c.] Or fat ones; of beef and mutton a conſiderable quantity, abundantly ſufficient for his gueſts and ſervants, and ſhows what a good table he kept: alſo fowls were prepared for me; what number is not ſaid: and once in ten days ſtore of all ſorts of wine; the country afforded; that is, either once in ten days his ſtock of wine was renewed, or a more liberal entertainment was made, a banquet of wine, Eſth. v. 6. yet for all this required not I the bread of the governor; the ſalary that uſed to be given him, but did this at his own expence out of his eſtate in Judea; or what he had got by his office as cup-bearer to the king of Perſia, the ſalary of which perhaps was continued: becauſe the bondage was heavy upon the people; the tribute of the king of Perſia, and their labour and expence in building the walls of the city.

℣. 19. Think upon me, my God, for good, according to all that I have done for this people.] He expected not any recompence from the people, but from the Lord; and from him not in a way of merit, but of grace and good-will, who forgets not what is done for his name's ſake, Heb. vi. 10.

CHAP. VI.

SANBALLAT and his brethren hearing the wall was finiſhed, ſent to Nehemiah to have a meeting with him at a place named, which he refuſed, ℣. 1—2. then they ſent him a terrifying letter, ſuggeſting that he, and the Jews with him, would be treated as rebels, ſince their intention, as reported, was to make him king, which letter he regarded not, ℣. 3—9. then they employed ſome that pretended to be prophets, to adviſe him to flee to the temple for ſafety, which he rejected, ℣. 10—14. and ſo the work went on and was finiſhed, though there was a ſecret correſpondence carried on between their enemies, and ſome falſe brethren among themſeves, ℣. 15—19.

℣. 1. Now it came to paſs, when Sanballat and Tobiah, and Geſhem the Arabian, and the reſt of our enemies heard that I had builded the wall, &c.] Quite finiſhed it: and that there was no breach left therein; but all was made up firm and ſtrong: though at that time I had not ſet up the doors upon the gates; not upon all of them, though ſome might by the particular builders of them; and they all of them might be ready made, though not as yet put upon the hinges.

℣. 2. Then Sanballat, and Geſhem ſent unto me, &c.] Meſſengers: ſaying, come, let us meet together in ſome one of the villages; in Cephirim, which Jarchi takes to be the name of a place, perhaps the ſame with Cephirah, a city in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 26. in the plain of Ono; which was in the ſame tribe, ſee 1 Chron. viii. 12. they might pretend a friendly meeting to accommodate differences between them, or to converſe together about the general intereſt of the king of Perſia in thoſe parts: but they thought to do me miſchief; to kill him, or at leaſt to confine him; this he either conjectured from their general character and behaviour, or he had intelligence of their deſign.

℣. 3. And I ſent meſſengers unto them, &c.] He did not ſhow any open contempt of them, nor did he even return anſwer by the meſſenger that came from them, but ſent ſome of his own people to them: ſaying, I am doing a great work; was about an affair of great importance, very buſy, and not at leiſure to give them a meeting: ſo that I cannot come down; Jeruſalem being built on an eminence, and the place propoſed to meet at in a plain, going thither is expreſſed by coming down: why ſhould the work ceaſe, whilſt I leave it, and come down to you? ſignifying that it would ceaſe if he left it; and it being of greater conſequence than any thing they could have to converſe about, he argues it would be wrong to relinquiſh it on ſuch an account; this was the reaſon he thought fit to give, but was not the only, nor the principal reaſon which is ſuggeſted in the preceding verſe.

℣. 4. Yet they ſent unto me four times after this ſort, &c.] Being very deſirous of getting him into their hands, and therefore were very preſſing and importunate: and I anſwered them after the ſame manner; every time as before, he being as much bent on finiſhing the work, as they were to divert him from it.

℣. 5. Then ſent Sanballat his ſervant unto me in like manner, the 5th time, &c.] In his own name, neither Tobiah nor Geſhem joining with him, he being more ſolicitous and anxious to get him into his hands than any of them; and it may be, as ſome think, pretending more friendſhip for him than the reſt, and therefore writes alone, as if they knew nothing of his writing: with an open letter in his hand; which having in it an intimation of Nehemiah being guilty of treaſon, any one that would might read it, and ſo ſpread the defamation.

℣. 6. Wherein was written, it is reported among the heathen, &c.] Among the ſeveral neighbouring nations; it was an affair that was not whiſpered about among a few only; it was common talk, it was in every body's mouth in divers nations: and Gaſhmu ſaith it; the ſame with Geſhem the Arabian; he affirms it, and will abide by his aſſertion, and engages to make good what he ſays; he mentions him by name, who he knew would not be offended with him for making uſe of it, and who doubtleſs agreed that he ſhould; that Nehemiah might not think this was the talk of ſome of the lower rank of the people, but even was averred by no leſs than the king's governor in Arabia: that that thou and the Jews think to rebel; that they had formed a ſcheme, and were taking meaſures to raiſe a rebellion againſt the king of Perſia, and revolt from him: for which cauſe thou buildeſt the wall; the wall of Jeruſalem, for their ſecurity againſt any force that might be ſent to quell them: that thou mayeſt be their king, according to theſe words; written in this epiſtle, and reported among the heathens.

℣. 7. And thou haſt alſo appointed prophets to preach of thee at Jeruſalem, &c.] This he ſaid to cover what he and Tobiah had been doing, tampering with, corrupting and hiring the prophets to diſcourage him, and put him upon methods, whereby the work would ceaſe: ſaying, there is a king in Judah; beſides Artaxerxes, whoſe yoke they were caſting off, having got a king of their own, and among them: and now ſhall it be reported to the king, according to theſe words; ſuch a report as this, and in thoſe very words, will ſoon reach the ears of the king of Perſia: come now therefore, and let us take counſel together; contrive the beſt method to put a ſtop to this report, if a falſe one, and to wipe off the reproach that is upon thee, and may affect us; and thus partly terrifying him, and partly pretending friendſhip to him, hoped to get him into his hands.

℣. 8. Then I ſent unto him, &c.] Whether a letter, or a meſſenger, is not ſaid: ſaying, there are no ſuch things done as thou ſayeſt; that there was any ſcheme formed to rebel, and make him king, or that prophets were appointed to declare him ſuch: but thou feigneſt them out of thine own heart; in ſhort, that they were no other than lies of his own inventing.

℣. 9. For they all made us afraid, &c.] Or you all, as Aben Ezra interprets it; or all the heathen nations, as Jarchi; this was the deſign of all thoſe ſcandalous reports, to intimidate them, and with this they pleaſed themſelves, as follows: their hands ſhall be weakened from the work, that it be not done; this they hoped would be the effect of thoſe reports ſent to them: now therefore, O God, ſtrengthen my hands; and let them not have what they will, and hope for; according to Aben Ezra, theſe words are directed to Sanballat, that if he was a friend, as he pretended, that inſtead of weakening, he would ſtrengthen his hands by a ſincere reconciliation; ſo Vatablus; but they are an addreſs to God, ſuch ſhort ejaculations being uſual with Nehemiah.

℣. 10. Afterward I came unto the houſe of Shemaiah the ſon of Delaiah, the ſon of Mehetabeel, who was ſhut up, &c.] Either in his own houſe, or in a chamber in the temple, as if he had given himſelf up to meditation, faſting, and prayer; or as he might ſuggeſt to Nehemiah, for his ſafety, and ſo deſigned it as an example to him; this man might be a prieſt of the courſe of Delaiah, 1 Chron. xxiv. 18. or however he was a perſon Nehemiah had a good opinion of, and came to him on the letters ſent to him by his enemies, to conſult with him, and the reſt, ſince they had ſuggeſted that he had appointed prophets to ſpeak of him as a king: and he ſaid, let us meet together in the houſe of God, within the temple, and let us ſhut the doors of the temple; this looks as if he was in his own houſe, or if in a chamber of the temple, that he thought that was not ſecret and ſafe enough, and therefore propoſed going within the temple, into the holy place, where none but prieſts might go: for they will come to ſlay thee; meaning his enemies, Sanballat and his companions: yea, in the night they will come to ſlay thee; that very night, and therefore no time ſhould be loſt in providing for his ſafety.

℣. 11. And I ſaid, ſhould ſuch a man as I flee? &c.] The king's commiſſioner, who had the conducting and management of the whole affair of building the wall of Jeruſalem, on whom it wholly depended; for ſhould he abſent himſelf, the people would depart, and leave their work, and the city and wall be left defenceleſs, which was what was hoped for from this ſcheme; and who had expreſſed ſuch confidence in God, and had had ſuch ſucceſs: and who is there that being as I am; in ſuch a poſt, and in ſuch circumſtances, and on whom ſo much depended: would go into the temple to ſave his life? or where there was little reaſon to be believe it would be preſerved long, ſhould he take ſuch a ſtep as that: I will not go in; as being neither lawful, nor honourable, nor ſafe.

℣. 12. And lo, I perceived that God had not ſent him, &c.] Becauſe he adviſed to that which was againſt the cauſe of God, and true religion: but that he pronounced the prophecy againſt me; for by fleeing, as he adviſed, it would ſeem that he was guilty of the crimes of rebellion and treaſon he was charged with; and leaving the people, as they would in courſe break up, he himſelf could not be long in ſafety, no, not in the temple: for Tobiah and Sanballat had hired him; this he found out afterwards, on purpoſe to intimidate him, and take ſuch meaſures as that thereby he would loſe his character, and his influence.

℣. 13. Therefore was he hired, that I ſhould be afraid, and do ſo, and ſin, &c.] By diſtruſting the power and providence of God to protect him, and by going into ſuch a part of the temple, which he, being no prieſt, had no right to go into: and that they might have matter for an evil report, that they might reproach me; as a rebel and traitor againſt the king, which had been reported of him, and which would be ſtrengthened by ſuch a ſtep.

℣. 14. My God, think thou on Tobiah and Sanballat, according to theſe their works, &c.] Their wicked counſels and ſchemes, and not only confound and diſappoint them, but reward them as they deſerve: and on the propheteſs Noadiah; whom Aben Ezra takes to be the ſame with Shemaiah, becauſe he ſaid, נועד let us meet, &c. ℣. 10, but no doubt it is the name of a woman, a falſe propheteſs, and was hired, and in the ſame ſcheme with Shemaiah: and the reſt of the prophets that would have put me in fear; and ſo put him on leaving the people, and the work he was engaged in, and flee for his ſafety; it ſeems there were more than are by name mentioned, who ſought to diſcourage and intimidate him.

℣. 15. So the wall was finiſhed in the 25th day of the month Elul, &c.] The ſixth month anſwering to part of Auguſt and part of September: in 52 days; which Aben Ezra reckons from the time that Sanballat ſent his letter to Nehemiah, when no more were wanting than to ſet the doors upon the gates, ℣. 1. but rather theſe, with Jarchi, muſt be reckoned from the time the building was begun; which reckoning back from the 25th of Elul, it will appear it was begun the third day of the fifth month Ab; nor need this be thought incredible, conſidering the number of workmen, their ardour and diligence in building, and that the walls were not wholly built all around, only repaired, and breaches made up, and much of the old old materials were made uſe of, which were at hand; and ſtone unhewed, and eſpecially being attended with the bleſſing of God, which ſucceeded the undertaking: nor are there wanting examples ſimilar to this; and as it is obſerved by many from Curtius [x], the walls of new Alexandria, which were ſixty furlongs in length, or more than ſeven miles, were finiſhed in 17 days; if Nicephorus [y] is to be credited, the high walls which ſurrounded Conſtantinople, and were twenty miles in circumference, were finiſhed in two months time. Joſephus is not to be regarded, who contrary to the ſcriptures ſays [z], this wall of Jeruſalem was two years and four months in building.

℣. 16. And it came to paſs, that when all our enemies heard thereof, &c.] That the wall was finiſhed: and all the heathen that were about us ſaw theſe things; the neighbouring nations, who not only heard with their ears, but ſaw with their eyes what was done: they were much caſt down in their own eyes; through ſhame and confuſion, becauſe of their own ſcoffs and jeers; through grief and vexation at the unexpected ſucceſs of the Jews, and through the fear of them that was fallen upon them, as Jarchi notes: for they perceived that this work was wrought of our God; his ſpecial providence and bleſſing attending it, as appeared by its being ſo ſoon effected.

℣. 17. Moreover in thoſe days, &c.] While the wall was building: the nobles of Judah ſent many letters to Tobiah, and the letters of Tobiah came unto them; letters paſſed between them frequently, they informing him how things went on at Jeruſalem, and he adviſing them to what was detrimental to the true intereſt of their nation; ſuch falſe friends had Nehemiah about him, and yet the work ſucceeded under him; which ſhewed it the more to be of God.

℣. 18. For there were many in Judah ſworn unto him, &c.] To Tobiah, who not only in a private manner correſponded with him by letters, but bound themſelves by an oath to him to be true to his intereſt, and do as he ſhould adviſe them: becauſe he was the ſon-in-law of Shechaniah, the ſon of Arah; of a family that came up with Zerubbabel from the captivity, Ezra ii. 5. and very probably of conſiderable note: and his ſon Johanan had taken the daughter of Meſhullam the ſon of Berechiah; a very eminent perſon, concerned in building the wall, ch. iii. 4, 30.

℣. 19. Alſo they reported his good deeds before me, &c.] Recommended him as a very worthy man, deſerving of reſpect and notice by Nehemiah, and to be taken into his friendſhip, and admitted to converſation with him, whoſe counſel and advice might be of ſervice: and uttered my words to him; reported both what he ſaid and did; for the word uſed ſignifies both words and actions: and Tobiah ſent letters to put me in fear; perceiving by the intelligence of his friends, that Nehemiah would have nothing to ſay to him, nor to do with him, he threatened him.

CHAP. VII.

NEHEMIAH having built the wall, and ſet up the doors, appointed two perſons to take the charge of the city, and ſet watches for the ſafety of it, and to take ſpecial care about opening and ſhutting the gates of it, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and concerned he was for the peopling of it, and having found a regiſter of the firſt comers to it, gives their names, ℣. 4—69. and ſome account of the free-will-offerings made for the work they came about, ℣. 70—73.

℣. 1. Now it came to paſs when the wall was built, and I had ſet up the doors, &c.] Which was not done when Sanballat ſent his firſt letter, but now was, ch. vi. 1. and the porters and the ſingers, and the Levites were appointed; not to attend the doors of the gates of the wall, but to return to their ſervice in the temple, who had been employed in one thing or another, whilſt the wall and gates were building and repairing; ſee ch. iii. 17.

℣. 2. That I gave my brother Hanani, &c.] Who firſt brought him the melancholy account of the ſtate of Jeruſalem, ch. i, 2. and Hananiah the ruler of the palace; the king's palace, in which the vice-roy of the king of Perſia dwelt, and now Nehemiah; to theſe two men he gave charge over Jeruſalem; committed it to their care during his abſence, who may be ſuppoſed now to return to Perſia, as he had promiſed ch. ii. 6. for he was a faithful man; this is ſaid of Hananiah, and given as a reaſon why ſuch a truſt was committed to him; Hanani's character was well known, and his journey from Jeruſalem to Shuſhan was a full proof of his hearty concern for the intereſt of it: and feared God above many; Hananiah was exemplary in his fear of God, few were equal to him, and none exceeded him; or of many days, as Jarchi; of a long time he had feared the Lord, and ſerved him many years.

℣. 3. And I ſaid unto them, let not the gates of Jeruſalem be opened until the ſun be hot, &c.] Or until the heat of the day, or near noon; at leaſt not till the ſun had been up ſome time, and ſhone out clearly, and cauſed much heat; that if any enemies were near, or lying in wait, they might be diſcovered, and the inhabitants alſo up and ready to defend themſelves: and while they ſtand by; according to Aben Ezra, Hanani and Hananiah were to be preſent at the opening and ſhutting of the gates, and ſo Grotius; but theſe being the chief rulers, it is not likely; but rather thoſe whom they appointed to look after them, theſe were to ſtand by whilſt their ſervants did it; they were not to leave it wholly to them, but to ſee it done themſelves: let them ſhut the doors, and bar them; or lay hold [a] on them, handle them to ſee whether they are ſhut faſt or no: and appoint watches of the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, every one in his watch, and every one to be over-againſt his houſe; no foreigners were to be of the watch, only inhabitants, and thoſe every one in their turn, and to be placed over-againſt where they dwelt; and ſo it might be thought would be the more careful and diligent in their watch.

℣. 4. Now the city was large and great, &c.] The circumference of it, all within the wall; for that was built on its old foundation, and incloſed as much ground as ever it did: Hecataeus [b], an heathen heathen writer, says the circumference of Jerusalem was fifty furlongs, which was more than six miles; but Josephus [c] makes the circuit of it but 33 furlongs: but the people were few therein; in comparison of the largeness of the place; for tho' there were 42,360 that came up at first with Zerubbabel, and many more with Ezra, yet a great number chose to settle in the towns and cities in the country, Jerusalem being in such a desolate condition: and the houses were not builded; some were, but they were but few, many of them still lay in ruins.

℣. 5. And my God put into mine heart, &c.] Every good motion in him, and whatever he thought of that was conducive to the good and welfare of Jerusalem, Nehemiah always ascribed it to God; see 2 Cor. iii. 5. to gather together the nobles, and the rulers, and the people, that they might be reckoned by genealogy; that their number might be known, and of what families they were, and in what cities they formerly dwelt; and this was not only of use for the present purpose of Nehemiah, but was of service hereafter to shew the pedigree of families, and that it might be clearly known from whence the Messiah sprung: and I found a register of the genealogy of them which came up at the first; from Babylon to Jerusalem, along with Zerubbabel, as appears from ℣. 7. and this was of great use to him, whereby he would know not only their names and number, but to what city they belonged, and who to the city of Jerusalem, that they might be called upon to come, and rebuild their houses, and take up their residence there: and found written therein; the names of the persons and families after-mentioned.

℣. 6. These are the children of the province that went up out of the captivity, &c.] Who were of the province of Judea, as it was now reduced, and came up out of the captivity of Babylon through the edict of Cyrus; see Ezra ii. 1. where the same preface is given to the list of names as here; and from hence to the end of ℣. 69. the same account is given of persons and families as there, with some little difference of numbers and names; in some instances there are more in this list, in others fewer, which may be thus accounted for; that list was made in Babylon, when upon the edict of Cyrus the Jews, who intended to go up with Zerubbabel, gave in their names, and they were registered; but this was made when they came to Jerusalem; now some of those that gave in their names, changed their minds, and tarried in Babylon, and some might die by the way which makes the numbers fewer in some instances; and others who did not give in their names at first, but being better disposed towards their own country, followed after and joined those which were returning, and increased the number of others; to which may be added what Abendana observes, that in Ezra an account is given of those that came out of the captivity by the companies, in which they came not genealogized, and had a mixture of persons of other families in them, and some that had no genealogy; but afterwards when they were genealogized according to their families, a register of their genealogies was made, and is what Nehemiah now found, and here gives; and as for difference of names, that may be owing to the carelessness of copiers, or to the different pronunciation of names, or some men might have two names; the matter is of no great moment.

℣. 70. And some of the chief of the fathers gave unto the work, &c.] Of building the city and the temple, and for that service, Ezra ii. 68. the Tirshatha gave to the treasure 1000 drams of gold; each of which was one pound sterling, and so amounted to so many pounds: of these dracmons, or darics, a Persian coin, mention is made in Ezra ii. 69. they were golden staters or shekels, and had their name, as is said, not from Darius, the father of Xerxes, though it is certain, from Herodotus [d], that he coined golden money; but from some other king of the same name, more ancient [e], which must be Darius the Mede; and if they are the same with the Adarcon in Ezra viii. 27. as they seem to be, then those in 1 Chron. xxix. 7. were pieces of money not so called in the times of David, but of Ezra, the writer of that book: whether this Tirshatha was Zerubbabel, or Nehemiah, is not easy to say, since this donation is not the same with that in Ezra, not made at the same time, nor are the gifts the same, nor the persons that gave them. Zerubbabel was Tirshatha when the Jews came out of Babylon, and Nehemiah now: fifty basons; which were vessels, in the which the blood of the sacrifices was received, and out of which it was sprinkled: 530 priests garments; which were laid up in the wardrobe, and used on occasion.

℣. 71. And some of the chief of the fathers gave to the treasure of the work, &c.] To be put into the treasure, out of which the expences of the temple, and service of it were defrayed: 20,000 drams of gold; which were so many pounds of our money, and somewhat more; for according to bishop Cumberland [f], a dram of gold was of the value of 20 shillings and four-pence: and 2200 pounds of silver; the maneh, or pound, with the Jews was of the value of 60 shekels, Ezek. xlv. 12. and so is reckoned by our Brerewood [g] to be of our money seven pounds and ten shillings; he reckoning a shekel at half a crown, whereas it was little more than two shillings and four pence; and so sixty of them, or a maneh, came to about 7 pounds; wherefore this sum here was seven times so many pounds of silver.

℣. 72. And that which the rest of the people gave was 20,000 drams of gold, &c.] Worth as many pounds of our money, and somewhat more: and 2000 pound of silver; of which see the preceding note: and 67 priests garments; having been so long in Babylon, and no use of sacrifices, and so not of garments to minister in, no care was taken to provide any; which seems to be the reason why so many were given, when they returned to their own land, and sacrificed.

℣. 73. So the priests and the Levites, and the porters, and the singers, and some of the people, and the Nethinim, and all Israel dwelt in their cities, &c.] The same is said in Ezra ii. 70. see the note there: and when the seventh month came, the children of Israel were in their cities; the month Tisri answering to part of September, in which month was the feast of tabernacles; at this time of the year they were in their cities when they came forth out of Babylon, and so they were now; see Ezra iii. 1.

CHAP. VIII.

EZRA being desired to bring forth the book of the law, read it to the people and others, expounded it to them, ℣. 1—8. and Nehemiah exhorted the people to express joy and gladness on this occasion, which they did, ℣. 9—12. and observing the feast of tabernacles was in the law commanded to be observed, they kept it very strictly and joyfully, ℣. 13—18.

℣. 1. And all the people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that was before the water-gate, &c.] A large and commodious street for such a company of people, which led to the water-gate, of which see ch. iii. 26. hither the people gathered with great unanimity, zeal, and affection: and they spoke unto Ezra the scribe; the same who is called Ezra the priest, and scribe of the law of God, and said to be a ready one, Ezra vii. 6, 11, 12. who came to Jerusalem 13 years before this time; but very probably returned to Babylon again, and was lately come from thence: to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel; to observe what was commanded in it, and which he had ordered to be read particularly every seventh year at the feast of tabernacles, Deut. xxxi. 10, 11. which was now drawing near, though this was not the precise time of reading it; hence some have thought this year was the sabbatical year; see ch. v. 11.

℣. 2. And Ezra the priest brought the law before the congregation, &c.] Having a perfect copy of it, which the people knew, and therefore desired him to bring it; he brought it either out of his own case or chest, or out of the temple where it was laid up; some restrain this to the book of Deuteronomy; this he produced in sight of the whole assembly: both of men and women; adult persons of each sex, who met promiscuously; though Grotius thinks the women had a separate place: and all that could hear with understanding; all under age, who yet were capable of hearing the law read to some advantage to them: upon the first day of the seventh month; the month Tisri, answering to part of September and October; this was a high day, for not only the first of every month was a festival, but the first of the seventh month was the feast of blowing of trumpets, Lev. xxiii. 24. and besides, this was new year's day, the first day of their civil year, as the first of Nisan was of their ecclesiastical year, and was of greater antiquity than that; and so Jarchi says, this was the first day of the year; to which may be added, that this was the day on which the altar was first set up, on the Jews return from captivity, Ezra iii. 6.

℣. 3. And he read therein, &c.] Some passages in it here and there, which it was necessary the people should have knowledge of; for it can hardly be thought he began and read on just in the order in which it was; this he did before the street; at the top of it, at one end of it: that was before the water-gate; which looked directly to that: from the morning until mid day; from the rising of the sun to noon, so that he must read six hours; but very probably was relieved at times by the men, with him after-mentioned: before the men and the women, and those that could understand; see ℣. 2. and the ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law; to the hearing of it read, and to the things contained in it; hence Maimonides [h] gathers, that as soon as the reader begins the reading of the law, it is not lawful to speak about any thing, not even the constitutions of the law, but silently to attend to what is read.

℣. 4. And Ezra the scribe stood upon a pulpit of wood, which they had made for the purpose, &c.] Or to speak out of, as the Syriac and Arabic versions; this, in the Hebrew text, is called a tower [i], partly because of its height, and partly because in the form of one; and also for its largeness, considering the use it was for; for it was so large as to hold fourteen men, as appears by what follows: a pulpit of wood was made for the king in the court, to read the law from [k]; though, according to Jacob Leo, it was a throne like an high tower, see the note on 2 Kings xi. 14. the pulpits, in the Jewish synagogues, made after the same manner as Aben Ezra observes, are called by the same [l] name: and beside him stood Mattithiah, and Shema, and Aneiah; and Urijah, and Hilkiah, and Maaseiah, on his right hand; and on his left hand, Pedaiah, and Mishael, and Malchiah, and Hashum, and Hashbadana, Zechariah, and Meshullam; in all thirteen; there were six on his right, and seven on his left, who stood here, not merely in honour to him, and as approvers and supporters of the truth of what he read, but to relieve him when weary.

℣. 5. And Ezra opened the book in the sight of all the people, (for he was above all the people), &c.] So plainly seen by them, and what he did, and the more easily heard, for which purpose the pulpit was made for him to stand in, and when he opened it, all the people stood up; that they might the better hear the law read, as well as in honour and reverence of it; the Jews say [m], that from the times of Moses to Rabban Gamaliel, they learned the law only standing; but after his death a disease came into the world, and they learned it sitting; and now it is a canon with them, that it is not necessary to stand at the reading of the law [n].

℣. 6. And Ezra blessed the Lord the great God, &c.] Before he began to read in the book of the law, he addressed himself to God in a short prayer, wholly in the benedictory way; ascribing blessing, honour, and glory to him, celebrating his being and perfections, setting forth his greatness and his excellency, who was the author and giver of the law he was about to read; and this he the rather did, that what he read might be the more carefully attended to, and come with the greater authority, weight, and influence on those that heard it; and so Maimonides [o] says, it is the custom with the Jews, in their synagogues, for the reader, after he has opened the book, and looked out the place he reads, to say this blessing, "Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the world, who hath chosen us out of all people, and hath given us his law; blessed art thou, O Lord, who hast given us the law; and all the people answer, Amen;" as they they now did, as follows: and all the people answered, Amen, amen; repeating the word, to declare their hearty assent to what Ezra had expressed; the Jews have many rules concerning pronouncing the Amen, that it must not be too quick, curt, and short, nor with too high a voice [p]: with lifting up their hands; a prayer-gesture, to which the apostle refers, 1 Tim. ii. 8. and they bowed their heads, and worshipped the Lord with their faces to the ground; expressing hereby the awful sense they had of the Divine Being, and their profound adoration of him.

℣. 7. Also Jeshua, and Bani, and Sherebiah, Jamin, Akkub, Shabbethai, Hodijah, Maaseiah, Kelita, Azariah, Jozabad, Hanan, Pelaiah, and the Levites, &c.] That is, others of them besides those named; for they seem all to be Levites, unless they can be thought to be priests, and so the Levites are distinguished from them; but the former seems evident from ch. ix. 4, 5, 6. these also caused the people to understand the law; as well as Ezra; from whence it is plain, that he did not only read the law, but gave the sense of it, especially where there was any seeming difficulty, and these men were assisting in the same work: and the people stood in their place; to hear the law read and explained; they did not move from their first station, but continued in it from morning to noon; they were both attentive and constant.

℣. 8. So they read in the book, &c.] Ezra and those with him; he first began to read and expound, and when weary they relieved him, and did the same: in the law of God distinctly; which was the book they read in, and which they read plainly and intelligibly, so as to be heard and understood; this seems to respect the clear and distinct pronunciation of the words of it, and not the explanation or meaning of it, which is after expressed; some think the sense is, that they first read it in Hebrew, and then translated it into Chaldee, that the people might better understand it, being just come out of Babylon, where they had been used to the Chaldee language; but though this was a practice in aftertimes, it does not seem to have obtained so early, or that there was a necessity of it: and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading; not hereby how to read it, but chiefly to understand what was read, that they might clearly know their duty to God and men: the Talmudists [q] give the meaning of the text thus; by the law of God they understand the scripture, by the phrase distinctly, the Targum or translation of it into Chaldee, by the sense, the verses or the accents, and by the reading, the distinction of the accents; some think, from hence came the practice of reading the law in the synagogues every sabbath day, Acts xiii. 15. and xv. 21.

℣. 9. And Nehemiah which is the Tirshatha, &c.] Or governor, as Zerubbabel had been, and now Nehemiah, see Ezra ii. 63. and Ezra the priest and scribe; see ℣. 1, 2. and the Levites that taught the people; see ℣. 7. said unto all the people, This day is holy unto the Lord your God; being both the new moon and the feast of blowing of trumpets: mourn not, nor weep; which was unsuitable to a festival, and especially such an one as this, in which trumpets were to be blown, and gladness to be shewn, Numb. x. 10. for all the people wept, when they heard the words of the law; perceiving they had not kept it, but had broke it in many instances, and so liable to the wrath and judgment of God in case of disobedience.

℣. 10. Then he said unto them, &c.] Nehemiah the Tirshatha or governor: go your way; to their own houses, and refresh themselves; it being noon, and they had stood many hours attentive to the reading and expounding of the law: eat the fat, and drink the sweet; not a common meal, but a feast, consisting of the richest provisions, the best of food and liquors: and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared; for the poor, who had no food at home provided for them; the widow, fatherless, and stranger, who at festivals were to partake of the entertainment, Deut. xvi. 11. for this day is holy unto our Lord: neither be you sorry; confirming what the Levites had said and exhorted to, ℣. 9. for the joy of the Lord is your strength; to rejoice as the Lord commanded them on such days as these, was a means both of increasing their bodily strength and their inward strength, and of fitting them the more to perform their duty to God and men with chearfulness, which sorrow and heaviness made unfit for; and the joy which has the Lord for its object, and comes from him, is the cause of renewing spiritual strength, so as to run and not be weary, walk and not faint, in the ways of God.

℣. 11. So the Levites stilled all the people, &c.] Made them quiet and easy, being backed by the governor: saying, Hold your peace; refrain from weeping and mourning: for the day is holy; a festival, set apart for joy and gladness: neither be ye grieved; inwardly; as they were not to show any signs of sorrow outwardly, so they were not to cherish grief inwardly.

℣. 12. And all the people went their way to eat and to drink, &c.] Freely and chearfully: and to send portions; to the poor, who had nothing to eat and drink: and to make great mirth; with music, vocal and instrumental: because they had understood the words that were declared unto them; the meaning of the several laws read and explained unto them, whereby they better understood their duty, and in what instances and in what manner it was to be performed; how much more reason is there for joy and gladness, when the gospel, and the doctrines of it, are clearly known and understood? Ps. lxxxix. 15.

℣. 13. And on the second day were gathered together, &c.] The second day of the month, and of the new year, the day after the feast of blowing of trumpets, and after the law had been read and explained: the chief of the fathers of all the people; heads of tribes and families: the priests and the Levites; who, though they were instructors of others, needed to be taught themselves, of which they were sensible: and therefore came unto Ezra the scribe, even to understand the words of the law; some things in it, which, upon reading the day before, they observed had some difficulty in them, and which they did not clearly and thoroughly understand; and therefore applied to Ezra, a ready scribe in the law, for better information, and that they might be better able to teach the people; which was highly commendable in them.

℣. 14. And they found written in the law which the

the Lord had commanded by Moſes, &c.] The children of Iſrael, to be obſerved by them; either by hearing it read the day before, or by converſation with Ezra, they perceived it was enjoined in the law, particularly in Lev. xxiii. 39—43. Deut. xvi. 13. that the children of Iſrael ſhould dwell in booths, in the feaſt of the ſeventh month; which was the ſame month, and this the ſecond day of it, and therefore the time drew near for keeping it; for it was to begin the 15th.

℣. 15. And that they ſhould publiſh and proclaim in all their cities, and in Jeruſalem, &c.] That is, as Jarchi interprets it, by ſupplying it thus, and they commanded that they ſhould publiſh, &c. Ezra and thoſe with him gave orders that heralds ſhould proclaim in all cities where the Jews dwelt that the feaſt of tabernacles would be kept, and they ſhould prepare for it; and which ſeems to be the true ſenſe, ſince it is not written in the law that ſuch a proclamation ſhould be made; but this was an order of their own, thereby to give notice of it, that all might be provided: Go forth unto the mount, and fetch olive-branches, and pine-branches, and myrtle-branches, and palm-branches, and branches of thick trees, to make booths, as it is written; in Lev. xxiii. 40. where the three firſt of theſe ſeem to be called boughs of goodly trees; though the Jews [r] commonly underſtand them of pome-citrons, of which the Syriac verſion here interprets the myrtle-branches; and by them are meant the citron-branches, with the leaves and fruit, and which the Jews make abſolutely neceſſary to the keeping of the feaſt, and for beautiful ones will give a large price; ſome of them go every year to Spain, and buy as many as they can, and diſpoſe of them wherever Jews live [s]: and thoſe branches were to be fetched, not properly ſpeaking to make the booths of, which were made of boards and planks, but for the decoration of them; and it was not neceſſary, according to Aben Ezra, that ſome of each of theſe ſhould be gathered for that purpoſe, but of any ſort of them; for he interprets the words disjunctively olive-branches, or pine-branches, or myrtle-branches, &c. theſe, according to the common notion of the Jews, were tied up in little bundles, and carried in the hand, which they call Lulabs; and they obſerve [t], the thick branches were for them, which included the reſt; now theſe they were to fetch from the mount of Olives, and other mountains about Jeruſalem; near to which alſo there was a place called Motza [u], whither they went, and gathered the willows of the brook mentioned in Lev. xxiii. 39.

℣. 16. So the people went forth, and brought them, &c.] Went out of Jeruſalem to the mountains adjacent, and fetched in branches of the ſaid trees, one or another: and made themſelves booths, every one upon the roof of his houſe; which were flat, Deut. xxii. 8. and they might be made any where, ſo be it they were open to the air: and in their courts, and in the courts of the houſe of God; the common people, in the court-yards belonging to their houſes, and the prieſts and Levites in the courts of the temple, the yards or open places adjoining to them: and in the ſtreet of the water-gate; which led to that, and ſeems to have been a very large ſtreet, in which many booths might be built, ch. iii. 26. ſee ℣. 3. and in the ſtreet of the gate of Ephraim; which led to the gate through which the road lay to the tribe of Ephraim, ſee 2 Kings xiv. 13. none were erected without the walls of the city, for fear of the enemy.

℣. 17. And all the congregation of them that were come again out of captivity, made booths, &c.] Theſe came to Jeruſalem, and made them booths there; for there only was this feaſt kept, ſee John vii. 2. 10. and ſat under the booths; there they dwelt during the ſeven days of it, in commemoration of their anceſtors dwelling in booths in the wilderneſs, ſee Lev xxiii. 42, 43. for ſince the days of Jeſhua the ſon of Nun unto that day, had not the children of Iſrael done ſo; Joſhua obſerved it, when he had brought and ſettled the people of Iſrael in the land of Canaan; and it had been obſerved ſince, before this time, as appears from 1 Kings viii. 2. 65, 66. Ezra iii. 4. but not ſo, with ſuch exactneſs, with ſuch zeal and affection, with ſuch a regard to the law of God, as to read it every day of the feaſt, as in the next verſe, and with ſuch joy and gladneſs; wherefore there is no reaſon to ſuſpect a corruption in the text, as a learned man [w] does, who ſuppoſes that Jeſhua is put for Joſiah: and there was very great gladneſs; that they were reſtored unto and ſettled in their land, had the book of the law, and the knowledge of it, and were directed and enabled to obſerve it.

℣. 18. Alſo day by day, from the firſt day unto the laſt day, he read in the book of the law of God, &c.] That is, Ezra; this was done by him every day during the feaſt, whereas, only the firſt and laſt days were the holy convocations on which it ſeems to have been read: and they kept the feaſt ſeven days, and on the eighth day was a ſolemn aſſembly, according to the manner; preſcribed in Lev. xxiii. 39.

CHAP. IX.

IN this chapter we have an account of a faſt kept by the Jews, which was obſerved, as by outward acts of humiliation, ſo by confeſſion of ſin, reading the law, and worſhipping the Lord, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and of a long prayer that the Levites made, in which they celebrate the divine perfections, take notice of various inſtances of the goodneſs of God to the people of Iſrael, acknowledge their manifold tranſgreſſions, obſerve the Lord's correction of them for them, in which they own he was righteous, ℣. 4—38.

℣. 1. Now in the 24th day of this month, &c.] The ſeventh month, the month Tiſri or September, two days after the feaſt of tabernacles was ended: the children of Iſrael were aſſembled with faſting, and with ſackclothes, and earth upon them; which were all outward tokens of mourning and humiliation, ſee Joel i. 8. 14. 1 Sam. iv. 12. which they could not ſhow during the feſtival; but that being over, they return to it, ſee ch. viii. 9.

℣. 2. And the ſeed of Iſrael ſeparated themſelves from all ſtrangers, &c.] Such as were genuine Iſraelites, of the ſeed of Abraham, who had married wives of the Gentiles, ſtrangers to the commonwealth of Iſrael, either before the reformation by Ezra, not being then diſcovered, or had fallen into this evil ſince; but now, on the reading of the law, were were convinced of it, and ſo ſeparated themſelves from ſuch wives, which was a proof of the truth of their repentance: and ſtood and confeſſed their ſins, and the iniquities of their fathers; particularly their taking of ſtrange wives, which their fathers had alſo done, and ſet them a bad example, which they had followed; of ſtanding and confeſſing, ſee Luke xviii. 13.

℣. 3. And they ſtood up in their place, &c.] In the outward court of the temple, where men uſed to ſtand when they prayed and confeſſed their ſins: and read in the book of the law of the Lord their God; that they might the better know the mind and will of God, and do their duty: this they did one 4th part of the day; the ſpace of three hours, from ſunriſing, or ſix o' clock in the morning, to the time of the morning-ſacrifice, which was about nine o' clock: and another 4th part they confeſſed; the goodneſs of God to them, and the ſins they had been guilty of: and worſhipped the Lord their God; bowed down before him in prayer and ſupplication, and ſo ſpent three hours more, which reached to noon or 12 o' clock; and from thence to 3 o' clock, about the time of the evening-ſacrifice, and from thence to ſun-ſetting, or 6 o' clock, and ſo ſpent the whole day in the above exerciſes alternately.

℣. 4. Then ſtood up upon the ſtairs of the Levites, &c.] On an aſcent; an elevated place where the Levites uſed to ſtand when they ſung at the time of ſacrifice, and where they might be ſeen and heard by the people: Jeſhua and Bani, Kadmiel, Shebaniah, Bunni, Sherebiah, Bani, and Chenani; who ſeem to be all Levites, ſee ch. viii. 7. and cried with a loud voice unto the Lord their God; praying with great fervency, and making bitter lamentation for the ſins of the people and their own.

℣. 5. Then the Levites, Jeſhua, &c.] Or, then the Levites, even Jeſhua: and Kadmiel, Bani, Haſhabniah, Sherebiah, Hodijah, Shebaniah, and Pethahiah; the ſame as before, with a little variation of their names, and perhaps ſome of them might have two names: and ſaid; to the men that ſtood and confeſſed their ſins, ℣. 2. ſtand up; for tho' they are before ſaid to ſtand, yet, through ſhame and confuſion of face, and awe of the Divine Majeſty, might be fallen on their faces to the ground: and bleſs the Lord your God for ever and ever; for all the great and good things he had done for them, notwithſtanding their ſins; and particularly for his pardoning grace and mercy they had reaſon to hope for: and bleſſed be thy glorious name, which is exalted above all bleſſing and praiſe; the glory of which name, nature, and perfections of his cannot be ſet forth by the higheſt praiſes of men, and the largeſt aſcriptions of bleſſing and honour to him.

℣. 6. Thou, even thou art Lord alone, &c.] Whoſe name alone is Jehovah, the one only true and living God: thou haſt made heaven, the heaven of heavens with all their hoſt; the airy and ſtarry heavens, and the ſun, moon, and ſtars in them, and the third heaven, the ſeat of God, angels, and ſaints: the earth and all things that are therein; men, beaſts, trees, metals, minerals, &c. the ſeas and all that is therein; fiſhes, ſea-plants, &c. ſee Acts iv. 24. and thou preſerveſt them all; they conſiſt in thee, and are upheld in their being by thee, Heb. i. 3. Col. i. 17. Pſ. xxxvi. 6. and the hoſt of heaven worſhippeth thee; not the ſun, moon, and ſtars, only in their way, Pſ. cxlviii. 2, 3. but the angels chiefly, Heb. i. 6.

℣. 7. Thou art the Lord the God, who didſt chooſe Abram, &c.] From among the Chaldeans, and out of his father's family: and broughteſt him forth out of Ur of the Chaldees; by calling him from thence, of which ſee Gen. xi. 28. 31. and xii. 1. to which may be added what Amama [x] on that place obſerves; that ſome think that the ſacred fire, which the Chaldeans worſhipped, was kept in this city, from whence it was called Ur, that being worſhipped by them and by the Aſſyrians under the name of Ur [y]: and gaveſt him the name of Abraham; which was changed when the covenant of circumciſion was given him, Gen. xvii. 5.

℣. 8. And foundeſt his heart faithful before thee, &c.] A true believer in his word and promiſes, Gen. xv. 6. and cloſely attached to the fear of him, and obſervance of his commands, as abundantly appeared in the trial of him, in offering up his ſon, Gen. xxii. 1, 2. 12. and madeſt a covenant with him, to give the land of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Jebuſites, and the Girgaſhites, to give it, I ſay, to his ſeed; not to him perſonally, but to his poſterity, at leaſt including and chiefly deſigning them; of which covenant ſee Gen. xv. 18—21. and haſt performed thy words, for thou art righteous; in all his ways and works, faithful to his promiſe, a covenant-keeping God, and who kept and fulfilled this covenant, aſſiſting Joſhua to conquer the land of Canaan, and put Iſrael into the poſſeſſion of it.

℣. 9. And didſt ſee the affliction of our fathers in Egypt, &c.] The hard bondage in which their lives were made bitter; and was not a mere ſpectator of it, but looked upon them in it with pity and compaſſion, and ſent them a deliverer, Exod. ii. 23. and iii. 7. and heardeſt their cry by the Red ſea; which was before them, and the rocks on both ſides of them, and the hoſt of Pharaoh behind, preſſing upon them, when he heard them, and wrought ſalvation for them, Exod. xiv. 10. 13.

℣. 10. And ſhewedſt ſigns and wonders upon Pharaoh, and on all his ſervants, and on all the people of his land, &c.] By inflicting the ten plagues upon them: for thou knoweſt that they dealt proudly againſt them; behaved haughtily to them, and deſpiſed them, ſee Exod. xviii. 11. ſo didſt thou get thee a name, as it is this day; diſplayed his power on Pharaoh, and his goodneſs to Iſrael, the fame of which reached all over the world, and continued to that day, ſee Exod. ix. 16.

℣. 11. And thou didſt divide the ſea before them, ſo that they went through the midſt of the ſea on dry land, &c.] That is, the Iſraelites, ſee Exod. xiv. 21. and their perſecutors thou threweſt into the deeps; with great eaſe, and with indignation, meaning the Egyptians, that purſued hotly after them, and were thrown into the ſea: as a ſtone into the mighty waters; where they ſunk and periſhed, ſee Exod. xv. 4. 10

℣. 12. Moreover, thou leddeſt them in the day by a cloudy pillar, &c.] The Iſraelites, to ſhelter them from the heat of the ſun in a dry and barren wilderneſs: and in the night by a pillar of fire, to give them light in the way wherein they ſhould go; thro' a trackleſs deſart, ſee Exod. xiii. 21, 22.

℣. 13. Thou cameſt down alſo upon mount Sinai, &c.] By ſome viſible tokens of his preſence, as a cloud, fire, ſmoke, &c. which muſt be underſtood conſiſtent with his omniſcience, ſee Exod. xix. 18. and ſpakeſt with them from heaven; the decalogue or ten commandments, Exod. xx. 1, &c. and gaveſt them right judgments, and true laws, good ſtatutes ſtatutes and commandments; both judicial and ceremonial, which were of excellent uſe to them in their civil and eccleſiaſtical polity; theſe were not ſpoken to Iſrael, but given to Moſes on the mount, to be delivered to them.

℣. 14. And madeſt known unto them thy holy ſabbath, &c.] Which was not made known to others, and was peculiar to the Jewiſh nation, and a privilege granted to them, to have reſt corporal and ſpiritual, typical of the reſt in Chriſt: and commandeaſt them preccpts, ſtatutes, and laws, by the hand of Moſes thy ſervant; moral, ceremonial, and judicial, ſuch as other nations had not, Deut. iv. 8.

℣. 15. And gaveſt them bread from heaven for their hunger, &c.] To ſatisfy that, meaning the manna, Exod. xvi. 3, 4. and broughteſt forth water for them out of the rock, for their thirſt; to quench it; this was done both quickly after they came out of the land of Egypt, and a little before their entrance into the land of Canaan, ſee Exod. xvii. 6. Numb. xx. 8. 11. and promiſedſt them that they ſhould go in to poſſeſs the land which thou hadſt ſworn to give them; which oath was made to them and to their fathers alſo, ſee Numb. xiv. 30. Deut. i. 8.

℣. 16. But they and our fathers dealt proudly, &c.] Behaved in a haughty manner towards God, their kind benefactor: and hardened their necks; refuſed to take the yoke of his law, as refractory oxen, that withdraw their necks from the yoke: and hearkened not to thy commandments; to do them, though they promiſed they would, Exod. xxiv. 7.

℣. 17. And refuſed to obey, &c.] Though exhorted, admoniſhed, and threatened, ſuch was their obſtinacy: neither were mindful of thy wonders that thou didſt among them; in delivering them at the Red Sea, in raining manna about them, and giving them water out of the rock; but hardened their necks; ſee the preceding verſe: and in their rebellion appointed a captain to return to their bondage; they not only propoſed it, but determined upon it, which is reckoned the ſame as if they had done it, ſee Numb. xiv. 4. but thou art a God ready to pardon, gracious and merciful, ſlow to anger, and of great kindneſs; as he had proclaimed his name before Moſes, and as the whole of his conduct towards the people of Iſrael abundantly ſhewed, ſee Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7. and forſookeſt them not; when in the wilderneſs, where otherwiſe they muſt have periſhed, but ſtill fed and protected them, notwithſtanding their provocations.

℣. 18. Yea, when they had made them a molten calf, &c.] In imitation of the Apis, or ox of the Egyptians: and ſaid, This is thy God that brought thee out of Egypt; or the image of thy God, as the Arabic verſion, ſee Exod. xxxii. 4. and had wrought great provocations; of all which nothing was greater than idolatry.

℣. 19. Yet thou in thy manifold mercies forſookeſt them not in the wilderneſs, &c.] Where no ſupply could be had, if he had caſt them off, ſee ℣. 17. the pillar of the cloud departed not from them by day, to lead them in the way; which if it had, they would have been ſcorched by the heat of the ſun: neither the pillar of fire by night, to ſhew them light, and the way wherein they ſhould go; or otherwiſe they would have loſt their way, and not have known which way to have gone.

℣. 20. Thou gaveſt alſo thy good ſpirit to inſtruct them, &c.] In the knowledge of the laws delivered to them; the ſpirit of prophecy, according to Ben Melech, and which Aben Ezra interprets of the ſpirit put upon the 70 elders, Numb. xi. 17. 25. and withheldeſt not thy manna from their mouth; all the while they were in the wilderneſs, until they came to Canaan's land; called the Lord's manna, becauſe prepared by him, and given by him to them; a part or portion and gift from the Lord, as Ben Melech, from whence it had its name, ſee Exod. xvi. 15. and gaveſt them water for their thirſt; which ſeems to have reſpect to the laſt rock ſtricken for them, after their many provocations in the wilderneſs, Numb. xx. 11.

℣. 21. Yea, forty years didſt thou ſuſtain them in the wilderneſs, ſo that they lacked nothing, &c.] As not for food, ſo neither for raiment, as follows: their clothes waxed not old, and their feet ſwelled not; of which ſee Deut. viii. 4.

℣. 22. Moreover, thou gaveſt them kingdoms and nations, &c.] The two kingdoms of Sihon and Og, and the ſeven nations of Canaan: and didſt divide them into corners; or corner; into every corner of the land of Canaan, ſo that they poſſeſſed the whole of it, a few cities excepted; Jarchi interprets it of one corner, that they might not be mixed with the people of the land, but be all together in one place; but Aben Ezra underſtands it of the Canaanites, of their being divided and ſcattered into corners, when they fled from the Iſraelites; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt: ſo they poſſeſſed the land of Sihon, and the land of the king of Heſhbon; or even, or namely[z], the land of the king of Heſhbon; for Sihon was king of Heſhbon, and ſo the land the ſame: and the land of Og king of Baſhan; thoſe lands both lay on the other ſide Jordan, and were poſſeſſed by the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh.

℣. 23. Their children alſo multipliedſt thou as the ſtars of heaven, &c.] Fulfilling the promiſe made to Abraham, Gen. xv. 5. and xxii. 17. Deut. i. 10. their number when they came out of Egypt, and juſt before they entred into the land of Canaan, being upwards of 600,000 men, beſides women and children, Exod. xii. 37. Numb. xi. 21. and xxvi. 51. and broughteſt them into the land, concerning which thou hadſt promiſed to their fathers, that they ſhould go in to poſſeſs it; the land of Canaan, promiſed to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and their ſeed, into which the Lord brought them by Joſhua; he was the inſtrument, but the thing was of God.

℣. 24. So the children went in and poſſeſſed the land, &c.] Not the fathers of the Iſraelites that came out of Egypt, they died in the wilderneſs, all excepting two, but their children, which ſeems to be the reaſon of this manner of expreſſion, ſee Numb. xiv. 30—33. and thou ſubduedſt before them the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites; by means of Joſhua, the general of the armies of Iſrael; there is an elegant paranomaſia in the word for ſubdue, and the Canaanites, which cannot be expreſſed in our language: and gaveſt them into their hands, with their kings, and the people of the land, that they might do with them as they would; no leſs than 31 kings, ſee Joſh. xii. 9—24.

℣. 25. And they took ſtrong cities, &c.] Such as, in an hyperbolical way, are ſaid to be walled up to heaven, Deut. i. 28. and a fat land; of a good and fruitful ſoil, abounding with all good things, Deut. viii. 7, 8. and poſſeſſed houſes full of all goods; ready built and furniſhed for them, both with good proviſions and good furniture: wells digged; to ſupply them with water: vineyards, and oliveyards, and fruit-trees in abundance; which they planted not: and they did eat, and were filled, and became became fat; in body, though in mind became wanton and wicked; they made their hearts fat, or ſtupid, as Aben Ezra interprets it, ſee Deut. xxxii. 15. Iſ. vi. 10. and delighted themſelves in thy great goodneſs; not in praiſing the Lord for it, and uſing it to his honour and glory, but indulged themſelves to luxury and intemperance; though it may be underſtood of a lawful pleaſure in the enjoyment of the great affluence they were brought into, which laſt agrees with what follows.

℣. 26. Nevertheleſs, they were diſobedient, and rebelled againſt thee, &c.] Notwithſtanding all theſe favours and mercies beſtowed upon them, which was great ingratitude: and caſt thy law behind their backs; as of no account, and unworthy of their regard; that which they ſhould have had continually before their eyes, as the rule and guide of their actions, they caſt behind them, not caring to look into it, and read it: and ſlew thy prophets which teſtified againſt them, to turn them to thee; the prophets that bore a teſtimony againſt their ſins, admoniſhed them of them, called heaven and earth to record againſt them ſhould they continue in them, and all to turn them from them by repentance to the Lord; thoſe they were ſo wroth with on this account as to ſlay them, ſee Matt. xxiii. 37. Acts vii. 52. and they wrought great provocations; ſerving Baalim and Aſhtaroth, and other gods of the nations, than which nothing was more provoking to the Lord.

℣. 27. Therefore thou deliveredſt them into the hand of their enemies, who vexed them, &c.] As the kings of Meſopotamia, Moab, Canaan, and others: and in the time of their trouble, when they cried unto thee; as they uſually did, Judg. iii. 9. 15. and iv. 3. and vi. 6, 7. thou heardeſt them from heaven; and according to thy manifold mercies, thou gaveſt them ſaviours, who ſaved them out of the hands of their enemies; ſuch were the judges, Othniel, Ehud, Barak, Gideon, &c. and this was done for them, not on account of their merits, but the abundant unmerited mercy of the Lord towards them.

℣. 28. But after they had reſt, &c.] From their enemies, enjoyed their liberty, and were in proſperity: they did evil again before thee; relapſed into idolatry: therefore lefteſt thou them in the hand of their enemies, ſo that they had the dominion over them; as the Philiſtines had for the ſpace of forty years, Judg. xiii. 1. yet when they returned and cried unto thee, thou heardeſt them from heaven, and many times didſt thou deliver them, according to thy mercies; this was their caſe frequently in the times of the judges; they ſinned and fell into the hands of their enemies, then they repented, and cried to God for help, and he had compaſſion upon them, and ſaved them.

℣. 29. And teſtifiedſt againſt them, &c.] By ſending prophets to them, to admoniſh them of their ſins, and remind them of their duty: that thou mighteſt bring them again unto thy law; to regard it, and walk according to it: yet they dealt proudly; with an haughty air rejected the counſel of God: and hearkened not unto thy commandments; yielded not obedience to them: but ſinned againſt thy judgments; tranſgreſſed his laws, which were ſo juſt, righteous, reaſonable, and equitable: which if a man do, he ſhall live in them; or by them, in the land of Canaan, ſee Lev. xviii. 5. and withdrew the ſhoulder, and hardened their neck, and would not hear; like oxen, that wriggle and ſtruggle, and draw back, and will not admit the yoke upon them.

℣. 30. Yet many years didſt thou forbear them, &c.] Throughout the reigns of ſeveral kings, ſuch was God's long-ſuffering towards them: or, thou didſt draw upon them; that is, his mercy, as Jarchi interprets it; he drew it out of his heart, and prolonged it towards them: and teſtifiedſt againſt them by thy ſpirit in thy prophets; who reproved and admoniſhed them, as they were moved by the Holy Spirit of God in them, who ſpoke in his name, and what he ſuggeſted to them: yet they would not give ear; to what the prophets ſaid, and the ſpirit of God in them: thereſore gaveſt thou them into the hand of the people of the lands; people that were lords of many countries, as the Aſſyrians and Chaldeans.

℣. 31. Nevertheleſs, for thy great mercies ſake, &c.] For the diſplaying of that, and the glorifying of it, which is ſo large and exceeding abundant: thou didſt not utterly conſume them, nor forſake them; ſome were left in the land, and thoſe that were carried captive found favour in the eyes of thoſe that carried them away, and were ſuffered to live, and many of them now had returned to their own land: for thou art a gracious and merciful God; of which they had abundant proof and evidence.

℣. 32. Now therefore our God, the great, the mighty, and the terrible God, who keepeſt covenant and mercy, &c.] The ſame titles Nehemiah gives to the Lord, ch. i. 5. and it may be reaſonably thought the whole prayer is his compoſure, which was delivered by him to the Levites: let not all the trouble ſeem little before thee; as if it was not enough; let it be judged ſufficient, and no more be added, but mercy ſhewn; Aben Ezra thinks the word little is not to be connected with trouble, but with the neareſt antecedent mercy, and ſo Guſſetius[z]; as if the ſenſe was, let not thy mercy be ſmall with thee, but let it be largely extended along with all the trouble, or at the time when trouble of every kind comes upon us, on our kings, on our princes, and on out prieſts, and on our prophets, and on our fathers, and on all thy people, ſince the times of the kings of Aſſyria unto this day; but this ſenſe is not clear, and makes it have reſpect to times to come; whereas, it relates to time paſt, and to all the trouble and affliction they had met with from the Aſſyrian kings, from the time they invaded their land, and carried them captive, until this very time.

℣. 33. Howbeit, thou art juſt in all that is brought upon us, &c.] They own the juſtice of God, could not complain of any wrong done them; and had he ſhewn them no mercy at all, it was but what they deſerved: for thou haſt done right, but we have done wickedly; he had done according to the truth of his word of promiſe, he had faithfully kept it, but they had tranſgreſſed his righteous law.

℣. 34. Neither have our kings, our princes, our prieſts, nor our fathers kept thy law, &c.] All ranks of men, from the higheſt to the loweſt, had ſhewn no regard, nor yielded obedience to the holy law of God; nor hearkened unto thy commandments, and thy teſtimonies wherewith thou didſt teſtify againſt them; moral and ceremonial, which were a teſtification of the will of God to them, and a teſtimony againſt them if they obſerved them not.

℣. 35. For they have not ſerved thee in their kingdom, &c.] When in it, whether of Iſrael or of Judah, and when in the moſt flouriſhing circumſtances: and in thy great goodneſs that thou gaveſt them; amidſt all the proſperity and affluence of good things they enjoyed, which was an obligation upon upon them to ſerve the Lord: and in the large and fat land which thou gaveſt before them; the land of Canaan, a land flowing with milk, which lay open for them, their enemies being driven out before them, ſee ℣. 25. neither turned they from their wicked works; their idolatries more eſpecially.

℣. 36. Behold, we are ſervants this day, &c.] For though they had leave to return to their land, and rebuild their city and temple, yet they were ſtill in ſubjection to the kings of Perſia: and for the land thou gaveſt unto our fathers, to eat the fruit thereof, and the good thereof, behold, we are ſervants in it; though the rightful owners and proprietors of it by the gift of God to their anceſtors, to hold it and enjoy the good of it, and yet were obliged to pay tribute for it to the kings of Perſia, all excepting prieſts and Levites; ſee Ezr. vi. 8. and vii. 20. 24.

℣. 37. And it yieldeth much increaſe unto the kings whom thou haſt ſet over us, becauſe of our ſins, &c.] Though a very fruitful land, and brought forth much, yet not for them, but for foreign kings, that had the ſovereignty over them, and enacted much toll, tribute, and cuſtom from them, which greatly leſſened the profit of the earth to them: alſo they have dominion over our bodies; and could oblige them to work for them, and do any ſervice they ſhould command: and over our cattle, at their pleaſure; to carry burdens for them, or ride poſt with them: and we are in great diſtreſs; being ſervants and tributaries to a foreign power.

℣. 38. And becauſe of all this, &c.] Of all this diſtreſs, and that it might be removed, and be clear of it; or in all this diſtreſs and evil, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra, in the midſt of it all: we make a ſure covenant; or faithfully promiſe to obſerve the law of God, and particularly put away ſtrange wives, and not intermarry with the people of the land: and write it; that it may remain and be a teſtimony againſt them ſhould they break it, being their own hand-writing: and our princes, Levites, and prieſts ſeal unto it; as witneſſes of it, and thereby binding themſelves to obſerve the ſame things; their names that ſealed are given in the next chapter.

CHAP. X.

IN this chapter we have the names of the perſons that ſigned and ſealed the covenant mentioned in the laſt, ℣. 1—27. and the things they agreed unto and promiſed to perform; in general to obſerve the law of God, in particular not to marry with the people of the land, to keep the ſabbaths weekly and yearly, to pay annually the third part of the ſhekel for the ſervice of the temple, to bring into it the wood-offerings, firſt-fruits, firſt born, and tithes, ℣. 28—39.

℣. 1. Now thoſe that ſealed were, &c.] That ſealed the covenant, made ch. ix. 38. Nehemiah the Tirſhatha, the ſon of Hachaliah; the governor of the Jews: and Zidkijah; who ſeems alſo to have been a prince, ſince without, it could not be ſaid it was ſealed by their princes, ch ix. 38. though ſome think both theſe were prieſts, and then the princes muſt be ſuppoſed to be among the chief of the people, ℣. 14. from hence to the end of the 27th their names follow; the names of the prieſts, ℣. 2—8. who were in all 21; no mention is made either of Eliaſhib the high-prieſt, nor of Ezra the prieſt and ſcribe; ſome think the former had not behaved well in his office, and that the latter was either ſick, or returned to Babylon, or however hindered by ſome providence or another, ſince we hear of him both a little before and after, ch. viii. 2. 13. and xii. 36. then the names of the Levites, ℣. 9—13. in all 17, moſt of which we have met with in this book before; next follow the names of the chief of the people, ℣. 14—27. their number in all 44; and their names may be obſerved in the liſt of thoſe that came out of Babylon with Zerubbabel; the whole number of thoſe that ſealed, princes, prieſts, Levites, and chief of the people, were 84.

℣. 28. And the reſt of the people, &c.] That did not ſign and ſeal: the prieſts, the Levites, the porters, the ſingers, the Nethinims; the porters and ſingers were Levites; but thoſe ſo called were ſuch as waited upon the prieſts, as the Nethinim were perſons that waited on them: and all they that had ſeparated themſelves from the people of the lands, unto the law of God; proſelytes, who had renounced heatheniſm, and embraced the true religion, had received the law of God, and profeſſed to walk according to it: their wives, their ſons, and their daughters, every one having knowledge, and having underſtanding; of the nature of the covenant, and the things contained in it, of what was required of them, and of what they promiſed, of the nature of an oath they entered into, and of the ſin of perjury.

℣. 29. They clave to their brethren, their nobles, &c.] Who had ſigned and ſealed the covenant, they declared their approbation of it, attended to it, and ratified what they had done in their name: and entred into a curſe, and into an oath, to walk in God's law, which was given by Moſes the ſervant of God; they bound themſelves with an oath that they would keep the law of God, and added a curſe or imprecation on themſelves to it ſhould they break it; or, according to Piſcator, they went into the ſpace between the two pieces of the calf, which they cut aſunder for the confirmation of the covenant, and ſo they curſed themſelves if they ſhould break it, ſee Jer. xxxiv. 18. and to obſerve and do all the commandments of the Lord our God, and his judgments and his ſtatutes; all the laws, moral, ceremonial, and judicial; this they engaged to do in general; ſome particulars follow.

℣. 30. And that we would not give our daughters unto the people of the land, nor take their daughters for our ſons, &c.] Intermarry with them as they had done, and were prone to do, and even did after this, ch. xiii. 23.

℣. 31. And if the people of the land bring ware, &c.] Any thing to be ſold, any ſort of goods, that being ſold might be taken away, as the word ſignifies: or any victuals on the ſabbath-day, to ſell; any thing to make food of; wheat or barley, as Aben Ezra interprets it; the ſame word is rendered corn in Gen. xlii. 1. ſee the note there; to ſell which was not lawful on the ſabbath-day, ſee Amos viii. 5. that we would not buy it of them on the ſabbath, or on the holy day; any feſtival, as the feaſt of the paſſover, pentecoſt, and tabernacles: and that we would leave the 7th year; the ground untilled in that year, the vines unpruned, and the fruits fruits of the earth which ſprung of themſelves, for the poor to gather, Lev. xxv. 4—7. and the exaction of every debt; that they would not demand the payment of any debt on the 7th year, as the law required they ſhould not, Deut. xv. 2.

℣. 32. Alſo we made ordinances for us, &c.] Laws among themſelves, binding them to that which the laws of God did not: to charge ourſelves yearly with the third part of a ſhekel, for the ſervice of the houſe of our God; the particulars of which follow in the next verſe; for the defraying of which there uſed to be a treaſury in the temple; but now there was none, and therefore they took this method to aſſeſs themſelves; and being poor, inſtead of the half ſhekel, which in ſome caſes was required, they only charged themſelves with the third part of one; though Aben Ezra thinks this was ſuperadded to the half ſhekel, and was paid over and above that; according to Brerewood [a], it was of the value of ten-pence of our money; Waſerus [b] has given us the figure of one of theſe coins, with this inſcription, a third part of a ſhekel of Iſrael.

℣. 33. For the ſhew-bread, &c.] To defray the expences of the 12 loaves, which every week were ſet on the table of ſhew-bread, Lev. xxiv. 5—9. and for the continual meat-offering, and for the continual burnt-offering; for the daily ſacrifice morning and evening, which always had a meat-offering along with it, Exod. xxix. 38—42. of the ſabbaths, and of the new moons; on which were additional ſacrifices, Numb xxviii. 9—15. and for the ſet feaſts; of paſſover, pentecoſt, and tabernacles; in which alſo were offered other ſacrifices, beſides the daily one, Numb. xxviii. 16—31. and xxix. 1—39. and for the holy things; which were both by way of thankſgiving to God, and that they might feaſt and rejoice together: and for the ſin-offerings, to make an atonement for Iſrael; for the whole body of the people, and ſo were made at the public expence: and for all the work of the houſe of our God; whatever elſe was neceſſary, that is not mentioned.

℣. 34. And we caſt the lots among the prieſts, the Levites, and the people, &c.] The prieſts and Levites were in one lot, and the people in another, as Aben Ezra: for the wood-offering; for providing wood to burn upon the altar continually, concerning which Maimonides [c] thus writes; "what is the wood-offering? there was a time fixed for families to go out unto the foreſts, and bring in wood of diſpoſition (to be laid in order on the altar;) and the day when it came to the turn of a family to bring the wood, they offered up free-will-burnt-offerings, which were called a wood-offering; and it was to them as a good day, (or feſtival) and they were forbid to mourn, faſt, or do any work on it;" and he obſerves, that if a ſingle perſon brought wood of his own free-will, he was obliged to the ſame; and Joſephus [d] ſpeaks of a feaſt called Ξυλοφοριᾳ, when it was cuſtomary for all to bring wood to the altar, to keep alive the ſacred fire, that it might not go out, which, according to him, was on the 14th of the month Lois, or Auguſt; but this was not the buſineſs of all the people, lots were caſt, as here ſaid, who ſhould do it, and when: to bring it into the houſe of our God; the temple, where there was a place called the wood-room, into which the wood was brought after it had been wormed by the prieſts [e]: after the houſes of our fathers; or families on whom the lot fell to do it: ſome render it, into the houſe of our fathers, meaning the ſame as before; the temple ſo called, becauſe they built it, and worſhipped God in it; ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra: at times appointed, year by year; as the lot directed; theſe, according to the Jewiſh doctors [f], were nine times in the year; on the firſt of Niſan (or March) the ſons of Arach, of the tribe of Judah, brought the wood; on the 20th of Tammuz (or June) the poſterity of David, of the tribe of Judah; on the 5th of Ab (or July) the children of Paroſh, of the tribe of Judah; on the 7th of the ſame month, the ſons of Jonadab the ſon of Recab; on the 10th of the ſame month, the poſterity of Senaah, of the tribe of Benjamin; on the 15th of the ſame month, the children of Zattu, and with them the prieſts and Levites, and all who were of an uncertain tribe, &c. on the 20th of the ſame month, the poſterity of Pachath-Moab, of the tribe of Judah; on the 20th of Elul, (or Auguſt) the children of Adin, of the tribe of Judah; on the 1ſt of Tebeth (or December) the poſterity of Paroſh again brought the wood: to burn upon the altar of the Lord our God, as it is written in the law; the wood ſhould be burnt upon it, and fire kept on it continually, Lev. vi. 12, 13. for this refers only to that, the wood-offering is no where ſpoken of in the law.

℣. 35. And to bring the firſt-fruits of our ground, &c.] Not that they caſt lots to do this, but they bound themſelves with an oath, according to the law, to do it; this is the firſt of all the fruits of the earth, Exod. xxiii. 19. though Aben Ezra reſtrains it to the ſheaf of the firſt-fruits, and to the two wave-loaves, Lev. xxiii. 10. 17. and the firſt-fruits of all fruit of all trees; which, as Aben Ezra obſerves, their wiſe men reſtrain to the ſeven kinds only, mentioned in Deut. viii. 8.

℣. 36. Alſo the firſt-born of our ſons and of our cattle, &c.] Such as were unclean, as Aben Ezra notes, as the aſs, &c. and are diſtinguiſhed from clean ones mentioned in the following clauſe; now both theſe, their ſons, and this ſort of cattle, were to be redeemed by a price paid to the prieſts: as it is written in the law, Exod. xiii. 2. 13. Numb. xviii. 15, 16. and the firſtlings of our herds, and of our flocks; clean cattle, which were to be offered, Numb. xviii. 17, 18. to bring to the houſe of our God, unto the prieſts that miniſter in the houſe of our God; a price for the one ſort, and the other for ſacrifice.

℣. 37. And that we ſhould bring the firſt-fruits of our dough, &c.] According to the law in Numb. xv. 20, 21. and our offerings; their heave-offerings, Numb. xviii. 8. 11. and the fruit of all manner of trees; bore by them on the 4th year after their planting, Lev. xix. 23, 24. of wine and oil; to which Aben Ezra reſtrains the fruit of the trees, ſee Numb. xviii. 12. all theſe they were to bring unto the prieſts, to the chambers of the houſe of our God; there to be laid up for the uſe of it; and oil and wine were frequently uſed in ſacrifices: and the tithes of our ground unto the Levites, that the ſame Levites might have the tithes in all the cities of our tillage; the tenth part of the produce of their agriculture every where throughout the land, ſee Numb. xviii. 21.

℣. 38. And the prieſt the ſon of Aaron, ſhall be with the Levites, when the Levites take tithes, &c.] There was always to be a prieſt with the Levites at ſuch ſuch times, to take notice what quantity they received, that they might not be under any temptation, or lie under any ſuſpicion of defrauding the prieſts of their due, who were to have a part in the tithes, as follows: and the Levites ſhall bring up the tithe of the tithes unto the houſe of our God, to the chambers into the treaſure-houſe; which were in the court of the prieſts for that purpoſe; for out of the tithes of the Levites there was another tithe or tenth part taken, and given to the prieſts, ſee Numb. xviii. 26—30.

CHAP. XI.

THIS chapter treats of the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, thoſe of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, who ſettled there by lot, or of their own accord, their names and numbers, ℣. 1—9. and of the prieſts and Levites who dwelt there, ℣. 10—19. and of the reſt of the people, prieſts, and Levites that dwelt in the other cities and villages of Judah and Benjamin, ℣. 20—36.

℣. 1. And the rulers of the people dwelt at Jeruſalem, &c.] Where it was proper they ſhould, being the metropolis of the nation, both for the performance of their offices, and to protect and defend it, as well as to ſet an example to the people, and encourage them to dwell there alſo: the reſt of the people alſo caſt lots to bring one of ten, to dwell in Jeruſalem the holy city; ſo called, becauſe of the temple and the worſhip of God in it; and ſo it is called by Julian the emperor [g]; and ſome [h] have thought that the Cadytis of Herodotus [i] is the ſame with Jeruſalem, which had its name from קדשה, holy, and is now called by the Turks Cuds, that is, holy [k]: now, though it was the chief city, and the place of public worſhip, yet the people were not forward of ſettling in it, partly becauſe of the rage of the enemy, which this city was the butt of, and partly becauſe it was more to their wordly advantage to dwell in the country, and where they could have better ſupplies; they conſulted their own eaſe, ſafety, and profit; wherefore this method was taken to oblige ſome to dwell in it, by taking one out of ten by lot, that there might be a ſufficient number to rebuild the houſes of it, repeople and defend it: and nine parts to dwell in other cities; to which they belonged, or where they pleaſed, any where in the land of Iſrael.

℣. 2. And the people bleſſed all the men that willingly offered themſelves to dwell at Jeruſalem.] Who were not taken by lot, but of their own accord ſettled at Jeruſalem; they praiſed them for it, and wiſhed them all happineſs and proſperity, ſince they denied themſelves of eaſe and profit for the ſake of the public good; and it is this which makes the difference between the liſt of the inhabitants of Jeruſalem in 1 Chron. ix. 2. &c. and this here, that takes in all that ſettled there, whether voluntarily or by lot; this only ſuch as were fixed by the lot, and of them only thoſe who were of greateſt note and eſteem, as Jarchi obſerves, and ſo it follows.

℣. 3. Now theſe are the chief of the province that dwelt in Jeruſalem, &c.] That is, of Judea, reduced to a province by the king of Babylon, and now a province of the Perſian monarchy: but in the cities of Judah dwelt every one in his poſſeſſion in their cities; in which they or their anceſtors had formerly dwelt: to wit, Iſrael; the people in general of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and ſuch of the other tribes that returned with them: the prieſts, and the Levites, and the Nethinims, and the children of Solomon's ſervants; of whom ſee Ezra ii. 55. 58.

℣. 4. And at Jeruſalem dwelt certain of the children of Judah, and of the children of Benjamin, &c.] It belonging partly to one tribe and partly to the other, and ſo inhabited by both, as it originally was, Joſh. xv. 63. and xviii. 28. of the children of Judah; Athaiah; called Uthai, 1 Chron. ix. 4. whoſe lineage is traced through Uzziah, Zechariah, Amariah, Shephatiah, Mahalaleel, of the children of Perez; a ſon of Judah, ſee 1 Chron. ix. 4.

℣. 5. And Maaſeiah, &c.] Who ſeems to be the ſame with Aſaiah, 1 Chron. ix. 5. and whoſe genealogy is carried up through Baruch, Colhozeh, Hazaiah, Adaiah, Joiarib, Zechariah, to Shiloni; perhaps the ſame with Shelah, another ſon of Judah, ſee 1 Chron. ix. 5.

℣. 6. All the ſons of Perez that dwelt at Jeruſalem, were 468 valiant men] And ſo well qualified to defend the city againſt its enemies.

℣. 7. And theſe are the ſons of Benjamin, &c.] That were of that tribe, and inhabited Jeruſalem, namely, that follow: Sallu the ſon of Meſhullam; who from him is traced up through Joed, Pedaiah, Kolaiah, Maaſeiah, Ithiel, to Jeſaiah.

℣. 8. And after him, &c.] That is, Sallu: were Gabbai and Sallai; in all 928; there were more of the tribe of Benjamin than of the tribe of Judah, they having perhaps a greater ſhare in the city, or were better diſpoſed to dwell in it.

℣. 9. And Joel the ſon of Zichri was their overſeer, &c.] Or chief governor of the city: and Judah the ſon of Senuah, was ſecond over the city; or the deputy-governor of it; ſo Pitholaus is called an under-governor in Jeruſalem by Joſephus [l].

℣. 10, 11. Of the prieſts, &c.] Who dwelt in Jeruſalem, of whom the ſame account is given in theſe two verſes as in 1 Chron. ix. 10, 11. only Seraiah here is called Azariah there.

℣. 12. And their brethren that did the work of the houſe, were 822, &c.] That offered the ſacrifices, burnt incenſe, ſet on the ſhew-bread, lighted the lamps, &c. and Adaiah the ſon of Jeroham; ſee 1 Chron. ix. 12. whoſe genealogy is traced here through through Pelaliah, Amzi, Zechariah, Paſhur, to Malchiah.

℣. 13. And his brethren, chief of the fathers, 242, &c.] That is, the brethren or relations of Adaiah: and Amaſhai; called Maaſeiah, 1 Chron. ix. 12. whoſe lineage is traced here through Azareel, Ahaſai, Meſhillemoth, to Immer.

℣. 14. And their brethren mighty men of valour, 128, &c.] The brethren of Adaiah and Amaſhai, who were able men to do the work of their office as prieſts, and men of courage to fight the enemy, and defend the city upon occaſion: and their overſeer was Zabdiel, the ſon of one of the great men; or the ſon of Hagedolim, or Gedolim as ſome, who take it to be the proper name of a man.

℣. 15. Alſo of the Levites, &c.] Who dwelt in Jeruſalem: Shemaiah the ſon of Haſhub; traced from him through Azrikam and Haſhabiah to Bunni; theſe were of the ſons of Merari, the third ſon of Levi, ſee 1 Chron. xi. 14.

℣. 16. And Shabbethai, and Jozabad of the chief of the Levites, &c.] Along with Shemaiah; theſe had the overſight of the outward buſineſs of the houſe of God; who had the care of the repairs of the temple, and of getting in the wood for the altar, as Jarchi, and collecting the third part of the ſhekel, to purchaſe things with for the uſe of the temple.

℣. 17. And Mattaniah the ſon of Micha, the ſon of Zabdi, the ſon of Aſaph, &c.] Zabdi is called Zichri in 1 Chron. ix. 15. was the principal to begin the thankſgiving in prayer; he was the precentor, or led the ſong at the time of the daily ſacrifice, in which prayer was alſo made, as in many of the ſongs, hymns, and pſalms of David: and Bakbukiah the ſecond among his brethren; he was the next ſinger, or deputy to Mattaniah; perhaps the ſame that is called Bakbaker, 1 Chron. ix. 15. and Abda the ſon of Shammua; called Obadiah the ſon of Shemaiah, 1 Chron. ix. 16. the ſon of Galal, the ſon of Jeduthun; one of the three principal ſingers.

℣. 18. All the Levites in the holy city, were 284.] Who had their reſidence there, ſee ℣. 1.

℣. 19. Moreover, the porters, Akkub, Talmon, and their brethren that kept the gates, were 172.] Of whom ſee 1 Chron. ix. 17. 18.

℣. 20. And the reſidue of Iſrael, of the prieſts and the Levites, &c.] All of them, beſides thoſe that dwelt at Jeruſalem: were in all the cities of Judah, every one in his inheritance; the Iſraelites, in the cities, houſes, and eſtates enjoyed by their anceſtors, and the prieſts and Levites in the cities given out of the ſeveral tribes.

℣. 21. But the Nethinims dwelt in Ophel, &c.] An high place or tower on the wall of Jeruſalem, ſee 2 Chron. xxvii. 3. and Ziha, and Giſpa were over the Nethinims; had the overſight of them, and took care that they did their work; they were ſuch themſelves, but the principal of them, ſee Ezra ii. 43.

℣. 22. The overſeer alſo of the Levites at Jeruſalem was Uzzi, the ſon of Bani, &c.] He was the ſuperviſor of them, that looked after them that they did their work in miniſtring to the prieſts, as they had occaſion for them; this man's genealogy is farther traced through Haſhabiah and Mattaniah, to Micha, the ſon of Aſaph, ℣. 17. of the ſons of Aſaph, the ſingers were over the buſineſs of the houſe of God; which, according to Jarchi, was to take care of the repairs of the temple and other things; but one would think rather that part of the ſervice of the houſe which lay in ſinging the ſongs of it is reſpected.

℣. 23. For it was the king's commandment concerning them, &c.] Either of king David, as ſome, ſee ch. xii. 24. or rather of the king of Perſia: that a certain portion ſhould be for the ſingers, due for every day; he ſettled a daily ſalary for them, to be paid out of his treaſury; having perhaps a peculiar reſpect for ſuch ſort of men, being a lover of muſic, by means of which they had a ſettled habitation in Jeruſalem.

℣. 24. And Pethahiah the ſon of Meſhezabeel, of the children of Zerah, the ſon of Judah, &c.] The twin-brother of Pharez, Gen. xxxviii. 30. was at the king's hand in all matters concerning the people; to ſpeak for them to the king, as Jarchi; when they had a favour to aſk of him, a petition to preſent to him, he delivered it for them, and by him the king returned the anſwer.

℣. 25. And for the villages with their fields, &c.] The cities and villages in the country, an account of the inhabitants of them next follows: ſome of the children of Judah dwelt at Kirjath-arba, and in the villages thereof; the ſame with Hebron, Joſh. xv. 54. and at Dibon; the ſame with Dimonah, Joſh. xv. 22. and at Jekabzeel and in the villages thereof; the ſame with Kabzeel, one of the uttermoſt cities of the tribe of Judah ſouthward, Joſh. xv. 21. of which city was Benaiah, one of David's worthies, 2 Sam. xxiii. 20. from hence to the end of ℣. 30. mention is made of various cities and towns in the tribe of Judah, inhabited by the men of it, which are to be met with in Joſh. xv. excepting Jeſhua and Mekonah, ℣. 26. 28. of which we no where elſe read.

℣. 31. The children alſo of Benjamin, from Geba, dwelt at Michmaſh, &c.] Geba was a city on the ſouthern border of Benjamin. Joſh. xviii. 24. and Michmaſh on the northern, of which ſee 1 Sam. xiii. 2. in this and the four following verſes are the names of ſeveral cities in the tribe of Benjamin, inhabited by the men of that tribe, as Aija, the ſame with Ai, that lay on the eaſt of Bethel, here alſo mentioned, ſee Joſh. vii. 2. Anathoth, the birthplace of Jeremiah the prophet, Jer. i. 1. Nob, a city of the prieſts, 1 Sam. xxi. 1. and xxii. 19. Ananiah is no where elſe mentioned; Hazor is to be diſtinguiſhed from another of this name in the tribe of Naphtali, Joſh. xix. 36. Ramah, a place well known in Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 25. Gittaim, of which ſee 2 Sam. iv. 3. Hadid, the ſame with Adida, which lay in a plain, 1 Maccab. xii. 38. Zeboim, a valley of this name, is read in 1 Sam. xiii. 18. Neballat we read of no where elſe; of Lod and Ono, ſee 1 Chron. viii. 12. and the valley of craftſmen, or Choraſin, 1 Chron. iv. 14.

℣. 36. And of the Levites, were diviſions in Judah, and in Benjamin.] They were ſcattered about, ſome here and ſome there, in both theſe tribes, for the better inſtruction of the people.

CHAP. XII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the chief of the prieſts and Levites in the days of Zerubbabel, Jeſhua, Joiakim, Eliaſhib, and Nehemiah, ℣. 1—26. of the dedication of the wall of Jeruſalem, and of the joy expreſſed on that occaſion, ℣. 27—43. and of the appointment of ſome perſons over the treaſuries for the prieſts, Levites, ſingers, and porters, ℣. 44—47.

℣. 1. Now theſe are the prieſts and the Levites that went up with Zerubbabel the ſon of Shealtiel, and Jeſhua, &c.] Who went up from the captivity in Babylon to Jeruſalem with them; the one was the prince, the other the high-prieſt, the ſame with Joſhua the high-prieſt. Zech. iii. 1. the names of the prieſts are given in this and the ſix following verſes: Seraiah, Jeremiah, Ezra; not Jeremiah the prophet, who cannot be thought to live ſo long as through the captivity; but Ezra may be Ezra the prieſt and ſcribe, who might come up with Zerubbabel to Jeruſalem, and return to Babylon again, and from thence come again as he did, in the ſeventh year of Artaxerxes, Ezra vii. 1. 6, 7. tho' this by ſome [m] is not thought very probable.

℣. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Amariah, Malluch, Hattuſh, &c.] Whoſe names are among the ſealers of the covenant, ch. x. 3, 4. Malluch is afterwards called Melicu, ℣. 14. Shechaniah, called Shebaniah, ℣. 14. and ſo in ch. x. 4. Rehum, who, by tranſpoſition of letters, is Harim, ℣. 15. and ſo in ch. x. 5. Meremoth, called Meraioth, ℣. 15. Iddo, Ginnetho, read Ginnethon, ℣. 16. ſo in ch. x. 6. Abijah; there was a courſe of a prieſt of this name, of which Zechariah the father of John the Baptiſt was, Luke i. 5. Miamin, Maadiah, Bilgah; the firſt two are called Miniamin and Moadiah, ℣. 17. Shemaiah, Joiarib, Jedaiah, Sallu; called Sallai, ℣. 20. Amok, Hilkiah, Jedaiah: theſe were the chief of the prieſts, and of their brethren in the days of Jeſhua; heads of courſes; or however, prieſts of the greateſt note in the times of Jeſhua the high-prieſt.

℣. 8. Moreover the Levites, &c.] Who lived in the ſame times: were Jeſhua, Binnui, Kadmiel, Sherebiah, Judah, and Mattaniah; moſt of theſe are made mention of in ch. viii. 7. and x. 9, 10. and xi. 15. 17. the laſt of them is ſaid to be over the thankſgiving, he and his brethren; he was the præcentor, or had the directing and conducting of the ſongs of the temple, particularly the thankſgiving-ſong at the daily ſacrifices; Jarchi takes the word here uſed to be the name of a muſical inſtrument.

℣. 9. Alſo Bakbukiah and Unni, &c.] Two other Levites; the firſt is mentioned in ch. xi. 17. their brethren, were over againſt them in the watches; the Levites were divided into 24 wards, and theſe were placed one againſt another, 1 Chron. xxiii. 6. and xxvi. 12.

℣. 10, 11, And Jeſhua begat Joiakim, Joiakim alſo begat Eliaſhib, and Eliaſhib begat Joiada, and Joiada begat Jonathan, and Jonathan begat Jaddua.] This is an account of the high-prieſts in ſucceſſion in the ſecond temple, the firſt ſix of them; and if Jaddua, the laſt-mentioned, is the ſame with Jaddus, as Joſephus [n] ſuppoſes, who went forth in his pontifical robes to meet Alexander the great returning from his conqueſts of Tyre and Gaza, from whom he obtained many favours, and whom he had into the temple, and ſhewed him the prophecy of Daniel concerning himſelf; this paragraph muſt be written by another hand, and not Nehemiah, ſince it can hardly be thought he ſhould live ſo long; and as to his times, this account of him, or the hiſtory of his own times, ſeems not to have gone through the prieſthood of Eliaſhib, the third of thoſe high-prieſts, ſee ch. xiii. 28. and to reach no farther than to the 32d of Darius Hyſtaſpis, ch. xiii. 6. this fragment therefore might be inſerted by ſome godly man under a divine direction in after-times, as we have ſeveral inſertions in the books of Moſes and Joſhua of the like kind; and particularly in 1 Chron. iii. 19. &c. where the genealogy of Zerubbabel is carried down beyond the times of the Maccabees, and ſo could not be placed there by Ezra.

℣. 12—21. And in the days of Joiakim, were prieſts, the chief of the fathers, &c.] This was the ſon and ſucceſſor of Jeſhua, or Joſhua, the firſt high-prieſt of the ſecond temple; the principal men of the prieſthood in his time were as follow, and who were the ſons, or however the deſcendants of the prieſts in the time of his father before-mentioned: theſe were Meraiah, Hananiah, Meſhullam, Jehohanan, Jonathan, Joſeph, Adna, Helkai, Zechariah, (the prophet of that name) Meſhullam, Zichri, Piltai, Shammua, Jehonathan, Mattenai, Uzzi, Kallai, Eber, Haſhabiah, Nethaneel; in all 20, whereas there are 22 named, as in his father's days, there being no ſons or deſcendants from two of them, namely, Hattuſh and Miamin.

℣. 22. The Levites in the days of Eliaſhib, &c.] The third prieſt of the ſecond temple: Joiada; he was the ſon of Eliaſhib, and the fourth high-prieſt: and Johanan; the ſame with Jonathan, ℣. 11. and whom Joſephus [o] alſo calls Joannes: and Jaddua; the ſame as in ℣. 10. in the days of each of theſe were recorded chief of the fathers; the principal men among the Levites: alſo the prieſts, to the reign of Darius the Perſian; thought to be Darius Codomannus, the laſt king of the Perſian monarchy, whom Alexander conquered; and if ſo, this verſe muſt be inſerted after the death of Nehemiah, and as the next verſe alſo ſeems to be; for theſe two verſes interrupt the natural order of the relation: an account is given of the prieſts in the times of Joiakim, ℣. 12—21. theſe verſes being inſerted, the account goes on, ℣. 24. &c. of the chief of the Levites in the times of Joiakim only.

℣. 23. The ſons of Levi, the chief of the fathers, were written in the book of the chronicles, &c.] Some think this refers to 1 Chron. ix. 14. &c. until the days of Johanan the ſon of Eliaſhib; from whence Dr. Lightfoot [p] concludes, that the Chronicles were written by Ezra in the times of this Johanan.

℣. 24. And the chief of the Levites, &c.] Here the thread of the hiſtory of Nehemiah, interrupted by the inſertion of the two preceding verſes, is carried from the prieſts to the Levites in the times of the the third high-prieſt: Haſhabiah, Sherebiah, and Jeſhua the ſon of Kadmiel; theſe were ſingers, ſince it follows: with their brethren over againſt them, to praiſe and to give thanks, according to the commandment of David the man of God, ward over againſt ward; which office of theirs they performed by turns in courſes, as David under a divine direction ordered, ſee 1 Chron. xxiii. 5. 36.

℣. 25. Mattaniah, and Bakbukiah, Obadiah, Meſhullam, Talmon, Akkub, were porters, &c.] At the gates of the temple, ſee 1 Chron. ix. 15, 16, 17. keeping the ward, at the threſholds of the gates; of the temple, where they ſtood and watched; or at the collection of the gates, meaning either where the people were gathered together, or where money gathered was laid up; and ſo ſome render it, the treaſuries of the gates; unleſs a place called Aſuppim ſhould be meant, 1 Chron. xxvi. 15. 17.

℣. 26. Theſe were in the days of Joiakim the ſon of Jeſhua, the ſon of Jozadak, &c.] Who was high-prieſt in Babylon, and whoſe grandſon was now high-prieſt in the time referred to: and in the days of Nehemiah the governor; the writer of this book: and of Ezra the prieſt, the ſcribe; who was cotemporary with him.

℣. 27. And at the dedication of the wall of Jeruſalem, &c.] In which many prieſts and Levites aſſiſted, and ſeems to be the reaſon of the above account of them; the dedication of the wall takes in the whole city, gates and houſes, ℣. 30. and if a new houſe was to be dedicated, much more a new city, and eſpecially the holy city, in which ſtood the temple of the Lord, ſee Deut. xx. 5. this dedication was made by prayer and ſongs of praiſe, as follow, and no doubt by ſacrifices, and was kept as a feſtival; and indeed, according to the Jewiſh writers [q], it was annually obſerved on the 7th of Elul, or Auguſt; it was on the 25th of that month that the wall was finiſhed, ch. vi. 15. but the gates were not ſet up, and all things for the dedication were not ready till Elul, or Auguſt following; and then all being finiſhed, they made and obſerved the 7th of that month as a feſtival: they ſought the Levites out of all their places, to bring them to Jeruſalem, to keep the dedication with gladneſs; to aſſiſt in the ſolemnity of the day both with vocal and inſtrumental muſic, as follows: both with thankſgiving, and with ſinging; with ſongs of praiſe and thankfulneſs vocally, that they had been able, notwithſtanding all the malice of their enemies, to build the wall in ſo ſhort a time; or with a ſong, perhaps the 30th pſalm was ſung on this occaſion: with cymbals, pſalteries, and with harps; ſome playing on one, and ſome on another, which were the three principal inſtruments of muſic uſed by them, ſee 1 Chron. xv. 16.

℣. 28. And the ſons of the ſingers gathered themſelves together, &c.] Such of the Levites that were ſingers, and their ſons that were trained up as ſuch; both out of the plain country round about Jeruſalem; the plain of Jordan by Jericho, and the plain of Saron and Lydda: and from the villages of Netophathi; ſee 1 Chron. ix. 16. here they dwelt, when not in their courſes, to miniſter in the temple; but on this public occaſion were ſummoned together.

℣. 29. Alſo from the houſe of Gilgal, &c.] Which likewiſe was in a champain country in the plains of Jericho, Deut. xi. 30. Joſh. v. 9, 10. and out of the fields of Geba; which was a Levitical city in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xxi. 17. and Azmaveth; the ſame with Beth-azmaveth, ch. vii. 28. where it follows Anathoth and Netophah, as it does in Ezra ii. 24. and was very probably in the tribe of Benjamin: for the ſingers had builded them villages round about Jeruſalem; that they might be near it, to do their duty when required; by which it appears that the ſaid places were near Jeruſalem.

℣. 30. And the prieſts and the Levites purified themſelves, &c.] By waſhing their bodies and their clothes, perhaps by ſprinkling the water of purification on them, ſee Numb. viii. 6, 7. 21. and xix. 9.

℣. 31. Then I brought up the princes of Judah upon the wall, &c.] Which was ſo broad as to walk upon it, and there was a proceſſion of the princes on it at its dedication, and here is deſcribed the manner of it; the princes of Benjamin muſt be included here: and appointed two great companies of them that gave thanks; he divided the people who were met together to praiſe God on this occaſion into two companies: whereof one went on the right hand upon the wall; that is, on the ſouthern part of it: towards the dung-gate; of which ſee ch. ii. 13. ſome Jewiſh writers, as Jarchi and Ben Melech, give a different ſenſe of שתי תודות, which we render two companies, and take them to be two euchariſtical loaves of leavened bread, with which a rite or ceremony was performed at the enlargement of a court or city; at the utmoſt boundary of which thoſe were carried, and one was eaten and the other burnt [r]; which rite is thus deſcribed by Maimonides [s], "How do they add to a city? the Sanhedrim make two euchariſtical ſacrifices, and they take the leavened bread in them, and the Sanhedrim go after the two euchariſtical ſacrifices, which follow one another, and they ſtand with harps, and pſalteries, and cymbals at every corner, and at every ſtone in Jeruſalem, and ſay, I will extol thee, for thou haſt liſted up, &c. (Pſ. xxx.) until they come to the end of the place they conſecrate, there they ſtand and eat the thankſgiving loaf, one of the two, and the other is burnt."

℣. 32. And after them went Hoſhaiah, and half of the princes of Judah.] The other half of them, with Hoſhaiah at the head of them.

℣. 33. And Azariah, Ezra, and Meſhullam.] Not Ezra the prieſt and the ſcribe, for he has another place aſſigned him in this proceſſion, ℣. 36. but this ſeems to be one of the princes.

℣. 34. Judah and Benjamin, &c.] Not the tribes, but the names of the two princes, as Jarchi: and Shemaiah and Jeremiah; who were two others.

℣. 35. And certain of the prieſts ſons with trumpets, &c.] To blow with on this occaſion; for theſe the prieſts ſounded: namely, Zechariah the ſon of Jonathan, the ſon of Shemaiah, the ſon of Mattaniah, the ſon of Michaiah, the ſon of Zaccur, the ſon of Aſaph; not the Levite, but a prieſt of this name.

℣. 36. And his brethren, &c.] The brethren of Zechariah, the prieſt's ſon, and ſuch are thoſe that follow: Shemaiah, and Azarael, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nethaneel, and Judah, Hanani, with the muſical inſtruments of David the man of God; which were invented by him, and ordered by him to be uſed in religious ſervice, under the divine direction: and Ezra the ſcribe before them; for he being a prieſt alſo, and a man of great eminence, was placed at the head of them in this proceſſion.

againſt them, of which ſee ch. ii. 14. and which was to the ſouth of the dung-gate: they went up; that is, one of the two companies, that which took to the right on the wall, ℣. 31. with which theſe words are to be connected: by the ſtairs of the city of David; which went up to the city of Zion, built on an eminence: at the going up of the wall, above the houſe of David; where the wall was higher, and there was an aſcent to it: even unto the water-gate eaſtward; of which ſee ch. iii. 26. and viii. 16. turning from the ſouth to the eaſt, and ſo drew nigh the temple.

℣. 38. And the other company of them that gave thanks, went over againſt them, &c.] On the left hand, on the northern part of the wall: and I after them; Nehemiah, he brought up the rear of his company, as Ezra led the van of his: and the half of the people upon the wall; the chief of them, for all could not walk upon it: from beyond the tower of the furnaces; where they baked their bread, or their bricks, ſee ch. iii. 11. even unto the broad wall; where the wall was broader than common, for ſome reaſon or another, ſee ch. iii. 8.

℣. 39. And from above the gate of Ephraim, &c.] The gate which led to the tribe of Ephraim, where that tribe formerly dwelt, ſee ch. viii. 16. and above the old gate; of which mention is made, ch. iii. 6. and above the fiſh-gate, and the tower of Hananeel, and the tower of Meah, even unto the ſheep-gate; of all which ſee ch. iii. 1, 2. and they ſtood ſtill in the priſon-gate; which was not a gate of the city, but of the court of the priſon, ch. iii. 25. which was near both the king's palace and the temple, ſee Jer. xx. 1, 2. and xxxii. 2.

℣. 40. So ſtood the two companies of them that gave thanks in the houſe of God, &c.] Having made their proceſſion on the wall in different ways, they met in the temple, that is, in the great court of it, for no other would hold them: and I, and the half of the rulers with me; Nehemiah, and the other half with Hoſhaiah, ℣. 32.

℣. 41. And the prieſts, &c.] They ſtood there alſo, whoſe names follow: Eliakim, Maaſeiah, Miniamin, Michaiah, Elioenai, Zechariah, and Hananiah, with trumpets; to ſound on this occaſion.

℣. 42. And Maaſeiah, and Shemaiah, and Eleazar, and Uzzi, and Jehohanan, and Malchijah, and Elam, and Ezer, &c.] Theſe ſeem to be all prieſts that blew the trumpets: and the ſingers ſang loud, with Jezrahiah their overſeer; theſe were the Levites, that ſung the ſongs of praiſe vocally, and raiſed their voices very high, Jezrahiah being præcentor, who led the tune, as well as played on inſtruments.

℣. 43. Alſo that day they offered great ſacrifices, and rejoiced, &c.] Or many ſacrifices, as Ben Melech interprets it; and theſe perhaps of the larger ſort of cattle, oxen; and which, at leaſt many of them, being peace-offerings, the people feaſted on them, ſo that it was a feſtival-day: for God had made them rejoice with great joy; on account of the wall being ſet up all around, and ſo were in greater ſafety from their enemies: the wives alſo and the children rejoiced; while the prieſts blew the trumpets, and the ſingers ſung and played on their inſtruments, the women and children gave loud ſhouts for joy: ſo that the joy of Jeruſalem was heard even afar off; as at the laying of the foundation of the temple, Ezra iii. 13.

℣. 44. And at that time were ſome appointed over the chamber for the treaſuries, &c.] On the ſelf-ſame day the dedication was; whilſt the people were in a good diſpoſition, and a ſuitable frame for ſuch ſervice, certain perſons from among the prieſts were appointed to be overſeers of the chambers fixed upon for treaſuries, to lay up ſafe in them the following things, and take care of them, that they were put to the uſe for which they were deſigned: for the offerings, for the firſt-fruits, and for the tithes, to gather into them out of the fields of the cities, the portions of the law for the prieſts and Levites; what by the law of God were aſſigned them for their maintenance, and which the people had lately bound themſelves to bring in, ch. x. 35—39. for Judah rejoiced for the prieſts, and for the Levites that waited; at the temple, and performed their ſervices there; they were ſo pleaſed with their miniſtrations that day, that they were determined to take care of them, and provide well for them, and that nothing ſhould be wanting to them, enjoined by the law of God, and that they might not be obliged to dwell in fields and villages for the ſake of their living, ℣. 28, 29. and ch. xiii. 10.

℣. 45. And both the ſingers and the porters kept the ward of their God, and the ward of their purification, &c.] The ſingers kept their turns in courſe in the temple, and were not wanting to officiate on all occaſions, beſides morning and evening-ſervices; and the porters they diligently kept the gates of the temple, that no impure perſon or thing in a ceremonial ſenſe entered: according to the commandment of David and Solomon his ſon; who made very good rules and orders relative to the better and more regular performance of ſervice by them; ſee 1 Chron. xxv. 1, &c. and xxvi. 1, &c. 2 Chron. viii. 14.

℣. 46. For in the days of David and Aſaph of old there were chief of the ſingers, &c.] Perſons appointed over the reſt to inſtruct them, and ſee that they did their work aright, as beſides Aſaph, Haman, and Jeduthun, and their ſons, 1 Chron. xxv. 2—8. and ſongs of praiſe and thankſgiving unto God; ſuch were made by them, ſome under divine inſpiration, which bear the names of David and Aſaph, as may be obſerved in the book of Pſalms.

℣. 47. And all Iſrael in the days of Zerrubbabel, and in the days of Nehemiah, gave the portions of the ſingers, and the porters every day his portion, &c.] Whilſt theſe two men governed they did their duty, and punctually paid the Levites their dues at the proper ſeaſon: and they ſanctified holy things unto the Levites; ſet them apart for their uſe, and brought them to them, their offerings, firſt-fruits, and tithes: and the Levites ſanctified them unto the children of Aaron; the Levites ſet apart the tenth part of the tithes, and delivered them to the prieſts, and ſo each had what belonged to them.

CHAP. XIII.

THIS chapter relates the reformation of various abuſes crept in among the Jews by Nehemiah, who removed the Moabites and Ammonites, mixed with them, ℣. 1, 2, 3. threw the houſhold-goods of Tobiah out of a chamber of the temple, and reſtored it to its former uſe, ℣. 4—9. took care that the Levites had their portion given them which had been kept from them, ℣. 10—14. prevented the the prophanation of the ſabbath by ſelling goods on that day, ℣. 15—22. and put a ſtop to the marrying of ſtrange wives, which had prevailed again among them, ℣. 23—31.

℣. 1. On that day, &c] Not when the wall of the city was dedicated, nor quickly after; for it cannot be thought that people ſhould be ſo corrupted ſo ſoon as this chapter ſhews; but when Nehemiah had governed them twelve years, and had been at Babylon, and was returned again, as appears from ℣. 6. compared with ch. ii. 1, 6. and vii. 2. they read in the book of Moſes in the audience of the people; for from the time of the reading of the law by Ezra, ch. viii. it became a cuſtom to read the law publickly: and therein was found written, that the Ammonite and the Moabite ſhould not come into the congregation of the Lord; that is, be admitted to marry with any of the people of Iſrael; ſee the note on Deut. xxiii. 3.

℣. 2. Becauſe they met not the children of Iſrael with bread, &c] The ſame reaſon is given, and what follows in this verſe is obſerved in Deut. xxiii. 4, 5. ſee the notes there.

℣. 3. Now it came to paſs when they had heard the law, &c.] Or the law concerning the Ammonite and the Moabite, and which included other nations alſo, and forbad marriage with them: that they ſeparated from Iſrael all the mixed multitude; all of theſe, and other nations, they had contracted affinity with.

℣. 4. And before this, &c.] Before the above law was read, and obſerved and acted upon: Eliaſhib the prieſt; whom ſome take to be a common prieſt; ſo biſhop Uſher [a]; but he ſeems rather to be the high-prieſt by comparing it with ℣. 28. having the overſight of the chamber of the houſe of our God; which has led ſome to the notion of his being a common prieſt; but chamber may be put for chambers, and thoſe for the whole houſe or temple, which the high-prieſt had the greateſt concern in, and overſight of: was allied to Tobiah; the ſervant and Ammonite, an inveterate enemy of the Jews, ch. ii. 10, 20. having married a daughter of Shecaniah, and his ſon a daughter of Meſhullam, who were both prieſts, and ſo as it ſeems related to Eliaſhib, ch. vi. 18.

℣. 5. And he had prepared for him a great chamber, &c.] In the temple, by throwing together ſeveral chambers, as Piſcator obſerves: where afore-time they laid the meat-offerings, the frankincenſe, and the veſſels, and the tithes of the corn, the new wine and the oil, which was commanded to be given to the Levites, and to the ſingers, and the porters, and the offerings of the prieſts; ſee ch. x. 37, 38, 39. and xii. 44.

℣. 6. But in all this time was not I at Jeruſalem, &c.] Nehemiah, who was abſent all the while theſe things were done by Eliaſhib, or otherwiſe they would not have been ſuffered: for in the 32d year of Artaxerxes, king of Babylon, came I unto the king from Jeruſalem; after he had governed there 12 years, to whom he came to give an account of affairs there; this was not Xerxes, as ſome [b] have thought, for he reigned but 21 years; but Darius Hyſtaſpis, who reigned 36 years, according to Ptolemy's canon, and with which Herodotus [c] agrees; he is called king of Babylon, becauſe that, with the whole empire, was in the hands of the king of Perſia, as it had been from the times of Cyrus: and after certain days obtained I leave of the king; to return to Jeruſalem again; not after five years, as Dr. Prideaux [d] thinks; for it is not likely that Nehemiah would ſtay ſo long ere he aſked leave of the king to return to Jeruſalem, which was ſo much his care, and on whoſe proſperity his heart was ſo much ſet; rather at moſt it was but a full year he ſtaid ere he got leave to return, as Vatablus and Piſcator interpret it; in which ſenſe the phraſe of certain days is uſed in Lev. xxv. 29. and in other places quoted by the laſt-mentioned interpreter.

℣. 7. And I came to Jeruſalem, &c.] Through the king's leave, and with a commiſſion from him: and underſtood of the evil that Eliaſhib did for Tobiah; was informed of the mal-adminiſtration of his office: in preparing him a chamber in the courts of the houſe of God; whereby it was prophaned and polluted.

℣. 8. And it grieved me ſore, &c.] That ſuch a ſacred place ſhould be converted to common uſe, and to that of an heathen, and of an enemy to the Jews and their religion: therefore I caſt forth all the houſhold-ſtuff of Tobiah out of the chamber; as being chief magiſtrate, and acting by commiſſion under the king of Perſia, and to regulate every thing amiſs, according to the Jewiſh laws, as well as thoſe of the king, his power being, no doubt, as large as Ezra's, ch. vii. 25, 26. by houſhold-ſtuff is meant what is moveable in the houſe, as chairs, tables, veſſels for dreſſing, eating, drinking, &c. there are various opinions about this with the antients [e].

℣. 9. Then I commanded, and they cleanſed the chambers, &c.] By which it appears there were more than one, or that ſeveral were thrown into one; which was done not only by waſhing them, but as this was a ceremonial uncleanneſs, contracted by the habitation of an heathen in them, their purification might be by the water of ſeparation, Numb. xix. 9. and thither brought I again the veſſels of the houſe of God, with the meat-offering, and the frankincenſe; replaced them where they were before.

℣. 10. And I perceived that the portion of the Levites had not been given them, &c.] The tithes, being removed to ſome other place might be converted to another uſe; or the people ſeeing what was done by Eliaſhib neglected to bring them in, as judging they would not be properly diſpoſed of; and beſides, the Levites had deſerted their ſtation upon this: for the Levites and the ſingers that did the work were fled every one to his field; to look after their country-farms, or to get their living by agriculture, ſince there was no care taken of them at Jeruſalem; ſee ch. xii. 28, 29.

℣. 11. Then I contended with the rulers, &c.] The eccleſiaſtical rulers, the prieſts that were appointed over thoſe chambers, ch. xii. 44. he expoſtulated with them warmly, and chode them ſeverely for their conduct: and ſaid, why is the houſe of God forſaken? no care being taken of the maintenance of the miniſters of it, contrary to the promiſe made ch. x. 37. and I gathered them together; the Levites and ſingers that were diſperſed in the countries round about: and ſet them in their place; in the temple, and in the courſe of their miniſtry there.

℣. 12. Then brought all Judah the tithe of corn, and the new wine, and the oil, into the treaſuries.] When they ſaw a reformation made, and things were going in their proper channel, and a right uſe would be made of their tithes, theſe given to proper perſons, who were now re-inſtated in their office.

℣. 13. And I made treaſurers over the treaſuries, &c.] New ones, ſince the others appointed were either dead or unfaithful to their truſt, ch. xvii. 44. Shelemiah the prieſt, and Zadok the ſcribe; who alſo was a prieſt, as Ezra was both prieſt and ſcribe; one that beſides his office as a prieſt was expert in the law, and capable of inſtructing others: and of the Levites, Pedaiah, and next to them was Hanan the ſon of Zaccur, the ſon of Mattaniah, for they were counted faithful; had a good report of all that knew them, for men of fidelity and uprightneſs, and ſo fit for ſuch a truſt: and their office was to diſtribute unto their brethren; to deliver to them their ſhare in the tithes, firſt-fruits, &c.

℣. 14. Remember me, O my God, concerning this, &c.] Not in a way of ſtrict juſtice, as if he thought he merited any thing at the hand of God for what he had done; but in a way of grace and mercy, that he would graciouſly accept thereof, as done for the honour of his name, and overlook all failings and infirmities therein, ſee ℣. 22. and wipe not out my good deeds that I have done for the houſe of my God, and for the offices thereof; for the ſupport of the worſhip of God in the temple, and for the regulating of the wards and courſes in it, both prieſts and Levites, and for the maintenance of them; which being done from a right principle, love to God, and with a right view, the glory of his name, might be truly reckoned good works; and which he deſires might not be wiped or blotted out of the book of his remembrance, ſee Hoſ. vi. 10.

℣. 15. In thoſe days ſaw I in Judah ſome treading wine-preſſes on the ſabbath, &c.] Which was not a work of neceſſity, and ſo did not drive away the ſabbath, as the Jews expreſs themſelves, but might have been deferred to another day: and bringing in ſheaves; of wheat, it being the time of wheat-harveſt: and lading aſſes; with goods to be carried from place to place, and ſold on that day; this was contrary to the expreſs law, for the aſs was to reſt, Deut. v. 14. as alſo wine, grapes, and figs; it being the time of ingathering the fruits of the earth: and all manner of burdens, which they brought into Jeruſalem on the ſabbath-day; beſides thoſe borne on aſſes, others were carried on mens ſhoulders; this was contrary to the law of the ſabbath, which required that both men and beaſts ſhould have reſt: and I teſtified againſt them in the day wherein they ſold victuals; that is, the ſabbath-day; and if it was not lawful to ſell food, then not any thing elſe; ſo far from it, that according to the Jewiſh canons [f], ſuch that were in partnerſhip might not diſcourſe together of what they ſhould ſell or buy on the morrow, the day after the ſabbath; and ſo far from gathering and carrying grapes and figs, that a man might not go into his gardens and fields to ſee what were wanting, or how the fruits were: now Nehemiah admoniſhed the Jews of theſe evils they committed, and teſtified againſt them as breakers of the law, and called heaven and earth to teſtify againſt them ſhould they go on to violate it.

℣. 16. There dwelt men of Tyre alſo therein, which brought fiſh, &c.] From Tyre and Zidon, and the parts adjacent; theſe they brought from Joppa, and from thence to Jeruſalem, and had houſes or lodgings near the fiſh-gate or fiſh-market, where they ſold them: and all manner of ware; or merchandiſe, which being a trading city, they had from all nations: and ſold on the ſabbath-day unto the children of Judah, and in Jeruſalem; or even in Jeruſalem, the holy city, where ſtood the temple, and where the worſhip of God was kept, and where the magiſtrates lived, who ſhould have been terrors to evil-doers: indeed, the law of the ſabbath was not binding on theſe Tyrians, but then they tempted the Jews to break it, by bringing their ware to ſell.

℣. 17. Then I contended with the nobles, &c.] The rulers of the city, the civil magiſtrates, ſharply reproved them for their neglect of duty: and ſaid unto them, what evil thing is this that ye do, and prophane the ſabbath-day? by ſuffering ſervile works to be done in it, and things ſold on it.

℣. 18. Did not your fathers thus, &c.] Profane the ſabbath in like manner: and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon our city? ſuffered them to be carried captive into a ſtrange land, and their city deſtroyed for their ſins, and for this of ſabbath-breaking among the reſt, ſee Jer. xvii. 21—27. Ezek. xx. 16, 21, 24. yet ye bring more wrath upon Iſrael by prophaning the ſabbath; additional judgments to thoſe that had been already upon them for the ſame evil with others.

℣. 19. And it came to paſs, that when the gates of Jeruſalem began to be dark before the ſabbath, &c.] Or were ſhaded [g]; that is, as Jarchi interprets it, when the ſhadows of the eve of the ſabbath were ſtretched out upon the gates; the ſabbath did not begin till ſun-ſetting, and the ſtars appeared; but before that, as the ſun was declining, the ſhadows through the houſes in Jeruſalem, and mountains about it, ſpread themſelves over the gates: and when it was duſkiſh, and as ſoon as it was ſo, I commanded that the gates ſhould be ſhut, and charged that they ſhould not be opened till after the ſabbath; until ſun-ſetting the next day: and ſome of my ſervants ſet I at the gates, that there ſhould be no burden brought in on the ſabbath-day; the porters being not to be truſted, being liable to be bribed and corrupted, which he knew his ſervants were not; and therefore, ſince it might be neceſſary on a few occaſions to open the gates to let ſome perſons in and out, and eſpecially ſuch who dwelt near, and came to worſhip, he placed his ſervants there to take care, that none were admitted that had any burdens upon them.

℣. 20. For the merchants and ſellers of all kind of ware, &c.] The Tyrians particularly, ℣. 16. lodged without Jeruſalem once or twice; one ſabbath-day or two, not being able to get into the city, ſuch ſtrict watch and care being taken to keep the gates ſhut; this they did, hoping the Jews would come out to them and buy their goods, tho' they were not admitted to bring them within the city.

℣. 21. Then I teſtified againſt them. &c.] Againſt their continuance there, and threatened them, and called called heaven and earth to witneſs what he would do to them, if they did not depart: why lodge ye about the wall? of the city, waiting an opportunity to get in, and tempting the Jews to come out and buy their ware: if ye do ſo again, I will lay hands on you; beat them, or ſlay them, at leaſt impriſon them: from that time forth came they no more on the ſabbath; finding there was no likelihood of getting into the city, and that they were liable to be taken up and puniſhed.

ẏ. 22. And I commanded the Levites, that they ſhould cleanſe themſelves, &c.] From all ceremonial uncleanneſs, that they might be fit in a ceremonial ſenſe to perform the duties of the office on the ſabbath-day: and that they ſhould come and keep the gates, to ſanctify the ſabbath-day; not the gates of the city, his ſervants were placed there, nor was this the work of the Levites, and much leſs did this require a particular purification to fit for it; but the gates of the temple, that no impure perſon might enter there; and on that day it required the greater diligence, becauſe of the number of people that came to worſhip: remember me, O my God, concerning this alſo; with reſpect to his care to have the ſabbath kept holy, as well as his concern for the honour of the houſe of God, and the maintenance of his miniſters, ẏ. 14. and ſpare me according to the greatneſs of thy mercy; he deſired to be dealt with, not according to any merits of his own, but according to the abundant mercy of God; that he would kindly and graciouſly vouchſafe to accept any good that he had done for his mercy-ſake, and forgive whatever was amiſs in him.

ẏ. 23. In thoſe days alſo I ſaw Jews that married wives of Aſhdod, of Ammon, and of Moab.] Aſhdod or Azotus, as it is called in Acts viii. 40. was one of the five cities of the Philiſtines; which, though none of the ſeven nations with whom marriage was forbid, yet it was very unfit and improper to marry with them, Judg. xiv. 3. This place was a mart of the Arabians [h], where they ſold their goods, to which the Jews might reſort, and thereby be enſnared into ſuch marriages; and which with the Ammonites and Moabites were unlawful, ẏ. 1.

ẏ. 24. And their children ſpake half in the ſpeech of Aſhdod, &c.] Which they learned of their mothers, ſo that it was a mixed language they ſpoke, partly Jewiſh and partly Philiſtine; but ſome refer this not to their ſpeech, but to the number of their children; that half of them, which Jarchi interprets, many of them, ſpoke in the language of Aſhdod, even as many as were moſt with their mothers, and chiefly brought up by them: and could not ſpeak in the Jews language; not at all, or ſo much as to be underſtood well, which inclines to the laſt ſenſe: but according to the language of each people; their mothers were of, whether of Aſhdod, or of Ammon, or of Moab.

ẏ. 25. And I contended with them, &c.] Argued with them, faithfully admoniſhed them, and ſharply reproved them: and curſed them; aſſuring them that the curſe of God would come upon them, unleſs they repented. Aben Ezra interprets it of excommunicating them, either with Cherem or Niddui, which were two ſorts of excommunication among the Jews; but it is a queſtion, whether as yet thoſe were uſed by them: and ſmote certain of them; ordered them to be beaten with rods or ſcourges, as tranſgreſſors of the law: and plucked off their hair; or ordered it to be plucked off by the executioner that ſmote them; which ſort of puniſhment, as it was painful, it was diſgraceful and ignominious, ſee Iſ. l. 6. and made them ſwear by God, ſaying, ye ſhall not give your daughters unto their ſons, nor take their daughters unto your ſons, or for yourſelves; not intermarry with them; this they had ſworn to before, ch. x. 29, 30.

ẏ. 26. Did not Solomon king of Iſrael ſin by theſe things? &c.] By marrying ſtrange wives, by whom he was drawn into idolatry, 1 Kings xi. 3, 4. yet among many nations was there no king like him; as not for grandeur and riches, ſo not for wiſdom, and yet was enſnared by his idolatrous wives: who was beloved of God; alluding to his name Jedidiah, which ſignifies beloved of the Lord, 2 Sam. xii. 24, 25. and God made him king over all Iſrael; which was a proof of his love to him, and ſo he was under the greater obligation to ſerve him, and him only, and yet his heart, through his wives, was turned after other gods: even him did outlandiſh women cauſe to ſin; and if ſo great and wiſe a man was inticed by them to idolatry, much more may you, and therefore it was very dangerous to marry with them.

ẏ. 27. Shall we then hearken unto you to do all this great evil, &c.] To ſuffer it to be done, and connive at it, and not puniſh for it: to tranſgreſs againſt our God; his law, his mind, and will: in marrying ſtrange wives? forbidden by him, Deut. vii. 1, 3. 1 Kings xi. 1, 2.

ẏ. 28. And one of the ſons of Joiada, the ſon of Eliaſhib the high-prieſt, &c.] A grandſon of the high-prieſt; for the high-prieſt here is Eliaſhib, according to our verſion, and not Joiada his ſon, according to Dr. Prideaux [i]; the perſon deſigned, Joſephus [k] makes to be Manaſſeh, the brother of Jaddua the high-prieſt: was ſon-in-law to Sanballat the Horonite; married a daughter of his, who was the avowed enemy of the Jewiſh nation; and for whom, according to the ſame writer, Sanballat obtained leave of Alexander to build a temple on mount Gerizzim; but this is to protract the age of Nehemiah and Sanballat to too great a length; beſides, Eliaſhib ſeems to have been now high-prieſt, and not even his ſon Joiada, and much leſs Jaddua, a grandſon of Joiada: therefore I chaſed him from me; drove him from his court, ſuffered him not to miniſter at the altar; baniſhed him from the city, as Jarchi, and even from the land of Judea.

ẏ. 29. Remember them, O my God, &c.] The prieſts, and puniſh them: becauſe they have defiled the prieſthood; by marrying ſtrange wives, and rendering themſelves unfit to officiate in it: and the covenant of the prieſthood, and of the Levites; made with Levi, Aaron, and Phinehas, ſee Numb. xxiv. 11—13. of the corruption of which, complaint is made, Mal. ii. 4—8.

ẏ. 30. Thus cleanſed I them from all ſtrangers, &c.] Both people and prieſts from ſtrange wives, obliging them to put them away, or flee their country: and appointing the wards of the prieſts and the Levites, every one in his buſineſs; to do the work of their office in their courſes and turns.

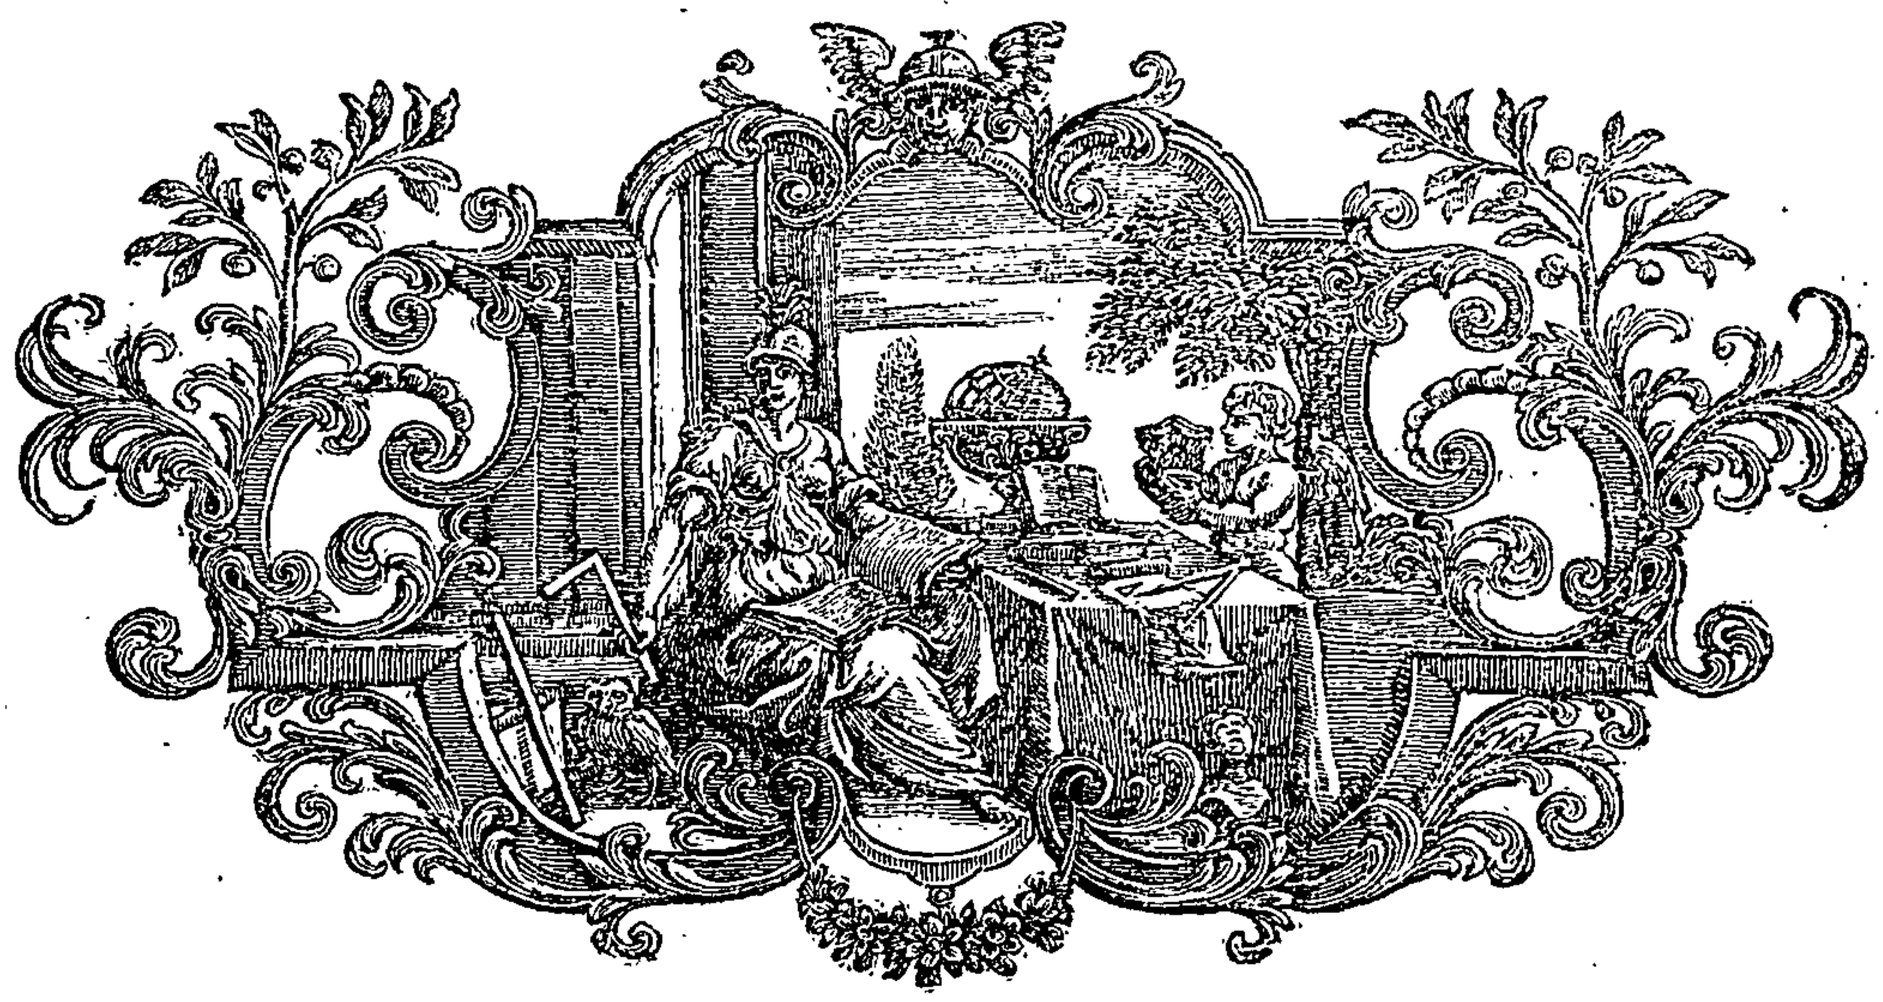
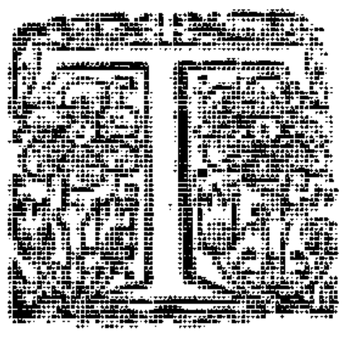
appointed to receive the wood that was brought at the times, and by the perſons fixed, and lay it up in its proper place, and carry it to the altar when wanted: and for the firſt-fruits; to receive and take care of them, and diſtribute them to the perſons to whom they belonged: remember me, O my God, for good; to bleſs him with all good things, temporal and ſpiritual, to keep him faithful, to make him uſeful in church and ſtate, and protect him from all his enemies: or rather this may reſpect what goes before, that as to the wood-offering and the firſt-fruits, that God would graciouſly remember him as to them, ſince the one was as neceſſary to the altar, as the other was to thoſe that miniſter at it.



The

The Book of ESTHER.



THIS book has its name from the perſon, who is the principal ſubject of it; it is by Clemens of Alexandria [a] called the book of Mordecai alſo; it is commonly called in the Hebrew copies, Megillat Eſther, the volume of Eſther; and ſometimes in the Jewiſh writings only Megillah, by way of eminency, the volume. It was written, according to the Talmudiſts [b], by the men of the great ſynagogue compoſed by Ezra; and ſome think it was written by Ezra himſelf [c]; but Aben Ezra is of opinion it was written by Mordecai, ſince he was concerned in, and had perfect knowledge of all things related in it; which is rejected by Spinoſa [d], who conceits that this, and the books of Daniel, Ezra, and Nehemiah, were written by one and the ſame hiſtorian long after the times of Judas Maccabæus: as to the canonical authority of it, it has been generally received by Jews and chriſtians; our wiſe men, ſays Maimonides [e], openly and plainly affirm of the book of Eſther, that it was dictated by the Holy Spirit; ſo Aben Ezra on ch. vi. 6. and he himſelf [f] affirms, that "all the books of the prophets, and all the Hagiographa (or holy writings) ſhall ceaſe in the days of the Meſſiah, except the volume of Eſther; and lo, that ſhall be as ſtable as the pentateuch, and as the conſtitutions of the oral law, which ſhall never ceaſe." Though the verſions of other books of ſcripture might not be read in the ſynagogues, verſions of this book might to thoſe who did not underſtand Hebrew [g]; and ſo Luther [h] ſays, the Jews more eſteem the book of Eſther than any of the prophets. Whence Mr. Baxter [i] had that notion, I can't deviſe, that the Jews uſed to caſt to the ground the book of Eſther before they read it, becauſe the name of God was not in it: nor is that any objection to its authenticity, ſince the hand and providence of God may be moſt clearly ſeen in it; in raiſing Eſther to ſuch grandeur, and that for the deliverance of the people of the Jews, and in counter-working and bringing to nought the plots of their enemies, and in ſaving them: nor that it is not quoted in the New Teſtament; it is ſufficient there is no diſagreement between them, yea an entire agreement, particularly in the account of the captivity of Jeconiah, which is expreſſed almoſt in the ſame words in ch. ii. 6. as in Matt. i. 11, 12. It ſtands in Origen's catalogue [k] of the books of the Old Teſtament; nor is it any material objection that it appears not in the catalogue of Melito [l], ſince in that liſt is comprehended under Ezra not Nehemiah only, but Eſther alſo, which Jerom [m] mentions along with it. This book is not only of uſe to the Jews, as it ſhews the original and foundation of a feaſt of theirs, ſtill kept up by them, the feaſt of Purim, and makes for the glory of their nation, and therefore it is no wonder it ſhould be ſo highly eſteemed by them; but ſerves to ſhew the ſingular providence of God in taking care of his people in adverſity, in humbling the proud, and exalting the lowly, and ſaving thoſe that pray to him, and truſt in him; it furniſhes out various inſtructions in the conduct of the ſeveral perſons herein mentioned; it is a hiſtory but of ten or eleven years at moſt, from the third of Ahaſuerus, to the twelfth of his reign, ch. i. 3. and iii. 7.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter relates, how that Ahaſuerus, a great king of Perſia made a feaſt, firſt for the grandees of his kingdom, and then for his people, as his queen did for the women, v. 1—9. who being ſent for by him, and ſhe refuſing to come, was, by the advice of one of his counſellors lors divorced from him, and an order made and publiſhed throughout his dominions, that every man ſhould bear rule in his own houſe, ℣. 10—22.

℣. 1. Now it came to paſs in the days of Ahaſuerus, &c.] Who he was is not eaſy to ſay; almoſt all the kings of Perſia are ſo named by one or another writer. He cannot be the Ahaſuerus in Dan. ix. 1. he was Aſtyages, the father of Cyaxares or Darius the Mede; but this muſt be one who had his royal palace in Shuſhan, which was never the royal city of the Medes, but of the Perſians only; nor does he ſeem to be the Ahaſuerus in Ezra iv, 6. who is thought to be Cambyſes, the ſon and ſucceſſor of Cyrus; ſince, according to the canon of Ptolemy, he reigned but eight years, whereas this Ahaſuerus at leaſt reigned twelve, ch. iii. 7. though indeed ſome account for it by his reigning in his father's life-time; beſides, Cambyſes was always an enemy to the Jews, as this was not; and yet this way go many of the Jewiſh writers [n]; and ſo a very learned man, Nicolaus Abram [o]; according to biſhop Uſher [p], this was Darius Hyſtaſpis, who certainly was a friend to the Jewiſh nation; but he is rather the Artaxerxes of Ezra and Nehemiah; and ſo ſays the Midraſh [q]. Dr. Prideaux [r] thinks, Ahaſuerus was Artaxerxes Longimanus, which is the ſenſe of Joſephus [s], and who is thought by many to be the Artaxerxes in the foreſaid books. Capellus [t] is of opinion, that Darius Ochus is meant, to which biſhop Patrick inclines; but I rather think with Vitringa [u], and others [w], that Xerxes is the Ahaſuerus that was the huſband of Eſther here ſpoken of; ſo the Arabic writers [x]; and as he was the ſon and ſucceſſor of Darius Hyſtaſpis, if he is meant by Artaxerxes in the preceding books, the hiſtory of which is carried to the 32d year of his reign, Neh. xiii. 6. and who reigned but four years more; this book of Eſther ſtands in right order of time to carry on the hiſtory of the Jewiſh affairs in the Perſian monarchy; and Mr. Broughton [y] owns, that the name of Xerxes in Greek, agrees with Achaſuerus in Hebrew; and in ch. x. 1. his name is Achaſhreſh, which, with the Greeks, is Axeres or Xerxes [z]: this is Ahaſuerus, which reigned from India even unto Ethiopia; properly ſo called; the Ethiopians had been ſubdued by Cambyſes the ſon and ſucceſſor of Cyrus [a], and the Indians by Darius Hyſtaſpis the ſon of Xerxes [b]; and both, with other great nations, were retained in ſubjection to him [c]; and many of both, as well as of other nations, were with him in his expedition into Greece [d]: over 127 provinces; there were now ſeven provinces more under his juriſdiction, than were in the times of Darius the Mede, Dan. vi. 1.

℣. 2. That in thoſe days, when the king Ahaſuerus ſat on the throne of his kingdom, &c.] Not only was placed upon it, but ſettled in it; after Xerxes had ſubdued Egypt, in the ſecond year of his reign [e], and enjoyed great peace and tranquility: which was in Shuſhan the palace; that is, the throne of his kingdom was in Shuſhan, the royal city of the kings of Perſia; of which ſee the notes on Neh. i. 1. and Dan. viii. 2.

℣. 3. In the third year of his reign, he made a feaſt unto all his princes, and his ſervants, &c.] The nobles and officers in his court; on what account this was, cannot be ſaid with certainty, whether the firſt day of it was his birth-day, or the day of his coming to the throne, on which day Xerxes uſed to make a feaſt annually, as Herodotus relates [f]: the power of Perſia and Media; the mighty men therein, the potentates thereof; or the army, the principal officers of it: the nobles and princes of the provinces being with him. The firſt word Aben Ezra declares his ignorance of, whether it is Hebrew or Perſic; Jarchi interprets it governors; and the perſons intended by both ſeem to be the deputy-governors of the 127 provinces who were preſent at this feaſt. Xerxes having reduced Egypt, meditated a war with Greece, to which he was preſſed by Mardonius, a relation of his; upon which he ſummoned the chief men of his kingdom, to have their advice about it [g], which perhaps was taken at this time; for it was in the third year of his reign he reſolved upon the war, and began to make preparations for it; and it was uſual at banquets and feaſts, that the Perſians debated their moſt important affairs [h].

℣. 4. When he ſhewed the riches of his glorious kingdom, &c.] Xerxes was the fourth king of the Perſian monarchy, and was far richer than all that went before him, all their riches coming into his hands, Dan. xi. 2. and now that prophecy began to be fulfilled, that by his ſtrength, through his riches, he ſhould ſtir up all againſt the realm of Grecia; which he began to do in the third year of his reign, and for which theſe his nobles might be called together, as to have their advice, ſo to animate them to come in the more readily into the expedition, by ſhowing them the riches he was poſſeſſed of; for to none of the kings of Perſia does this largeneſs of riches better belong than to Xerxes: and the honour of his excellent majeſty; the grandeur he lived in, the pomp and ſplendor of his court; he was the moſt grand and magnificent of all the kings of the Medes and Perſians [i]: and this he did many days, even 180 days; to which ſeven more being added, as in the following verſe, it made 187, the ſpace of full ſix months; though ſome think the feaſt did not laſt ſo long, only ſeven days, and that the 180 days were ſpent in preparing for it; but the Perſian feaſts were very long, large, and ſumptuous. Dr. Frye [k] ſays, this cuſtom of keeping an annual feaſt 180 days: ſtill continues in Perſia. Cheus [l] a Chineſe emperor, uſed frequently to make a feaſt which laſted 120 days; tho' it can't be well thought that the ſame individual perſons here were feaſted ſo long, but when one company was ſufficiently treated, they removed and made way for another; and ſo it continued ſucceſſively ſuch a number of days, as here related, which was ſix months, or half a year; a year then in uſe conſiſting of 360 days, as was common with the Jews, and other nations, and ſo the Perſians [m].

℣. 5. And when theſe days were ended, &c.] The 180, in which the nobles, princes, and great men of the kingdom were feaſted: the king made a feaſt unto unto

unto all the people that were preſent in Shuſhan the palace, both unto great and ſmall; of every age, rank, ſtate and condition of life; theſe were the common people, whether inhabitants of the city or country-people there on buſineſs, whether natives or foreigners; according to the Targum, there were Iſraelites there, but not Mordecai and his family; yea, it is ſaid in the Midraſh [n], that they were all Jews, and that their number was 18,500; but this is not probable; it is very likely there were ſome Jews among them, as there were many in the army of Xerxes, when he made his expedition into Greece, according to the poet Choerilus [o]; which is not to be wondered at, ſince there were ſo many of them in his dominions, and they men of valour and fidelity, and to whoſe nation he was ſo kind and favourable: and this feaſt was kept ſeven days in the court of the garden of the king's palace; which no doubt was very large, and ſufficient to hold ſuch a number as was aſſembled together on this occaſion, when there was not room enough for them in the palace. There is in hiſtory an account of a Perſian king that ſupped with 15,000 men, and in the ſupper ſpent 40 talents [p].

℣. 6. Where were white, green and blue hangings, &c.] Or curtains of fine linen, as the Targum, which were of theſe ſeveral colours; the firſt letter of the word for white is larger than uſual, to denote the exceeding whiteneſs of them. The next word is carpas, which Ben Melech obſerves is a dyed colour, ſaid to be green. Pauſanias [q] makes mention of Carpaſian linen, and which may be here meant; the laſt word uſed ſignifies blue, ſky coloured or hyacinth: faſtened with cords of fine linen and purple, to ſilver rings, and pillars of marble; theſe pillars are ſaid, in the Targum, to be of divers colours, red, green, and ſhining yellow and white, on which the ſilver rings were fixed, and into them were put linen ſtrings of purple colour, which faſtened the hangings to them, and ſo made an incloſure, within which the gueſts ſat at the feaſt: the beds were of gold and ſilver; the couches on which they ſat, or rather reclined at eating, as was the manner of the eaſtern nations; theſe, according to the Targum, were of lambs wool, the fineſt and the ſofteſt, and the poſts of them were of gold, and their feet of ſilver. Such luxury obtained among the Romans in after-times [r]: theſe were placed in a pavement of red and blue, and white and black marble; which according to ſome are the porphyrite, parian, alabaſter and marble of various colours; the marble of the Perſians is of four colours, white, black, red and black, and white and black [s]; but others take them to be precious ſtones, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra; the firſt is by the Targum interpreted cryſtal, by others the emerald, one of which Theophraſtus [t] ſpeaks of, as four cubits long, and three broad, which might be laid in a pavement; the third is, by Bochart [u], ſuppoſed to be the pearl; and in the Talmud [w], it it ſaid to be of ſuch a nature, that if placed in the middle of a dining-room, will give light in it as at noonday, which ſeems to be what is called Lychnites; to which Lucian [x] aſcribes a like property: nor need all this ſeem ſtrange, ſince great was the luxury of the eaſtern nations. Philoſtratus [y] ſpeaks of a temple in India paved with pearls, and which he ſays all the Barbarians uſe in their temples; particularly it is ſaid [z], that the roofs of the palaces of Shuſhan and Ecbatana, the palaces of the kings of Perſia, ſhone with gold and ſilver, ivory and amber; no wonder then that their pavements were of very valuable and precious ſtones: and from hence it appears, that the Lithroſtrata, the word here uſed by the Septuagint, or teſſerated pavements, were in uſe 400 years before the times of Sylla, where the beginning of them is placed by Pliny [a]; there was a Lithoſtraton in the ſecond temple at Jeruſalem, by us rendered the pavement, John xix. 13. perhaps the ſame with the room Gazith, ſo called from its being laid with hewn ſtone. Ariſteas [b], who lived in the times of Ptolemy Philadelphus, teſtifies, that the whole floor of the temple was a Lithoſtraton, or was paved with ſtone: it is moſt likely therefore that theſe had their original in the eaſtern country, and not in Greece, as Pliny [c] ſuppoſed.

℣. 7. They gave them drink in veſſels of gold, the veſſels being divers one from another, &c.] In the pattern and workmanſhip of them, though of the ſame metal, which diverſity made the feſtival the more grand; earthen cups, with the Perſians, were reckoned very mean; when a king would diſgrace a man, he obliged him to uſe earthen cups [d]. The Targum repreſents theſe veſſels to be the golden veſſels of the temple at Jeruſalem, Nebuchadnezzar carried away; which could not be, ſince they had been delivered by Cyrus to Zerubbabel, Ezra i. 7—10. and royal wine in abundance, according to the ſtate of the king; ſuch as the king was able to give, the beſt he had, and that in great plenty; the wine the kings of Perſia uſed to drink, as Strabo [e] relates, was Chalybonian wine, or wine of Helbon, as it is called, Ezek. xxvii. 18. ſee the note there; but by the wine of the kingdom, as it may be rendered, is meant wine of the country; the wine of Schiras is reckoned the beſt in Perſia [f].

℣. 8. And the drinking was according to the law, none did compel, &c.] According to the law Ahaſuerus gave to his officers next mentioned, which was not to oblige any man to drink more than he choſe; the Targum is, "according to the cuſtom of his body;" that is, as a man is able to bear it, ſo they drank: ſome [*] read it, the drinking according to the law, let none exact; or require it to be, according to the cuſtom then in uſe in Perſia; for they were degenerated from their former manners, and indulged to intemperance, as Xenophon [g] ſuggeſts: the law formerly was not to carry large veſſels into feaſts; but now, ſays he, they drink ſo much, that they themſelves muſt be carried out, becauſe they can't go upright: and ſo it became a law with the Greeks, at their feſtivals, that either a man muſt drink or go out [h]; ſo the maſter of a feaſt, at which Empedocles was, ordered either that he ſhould drink, or the wine be poured on his head [i]; but ſuch force or compulſion Ahaſuerus forbad; and thus with the Chineſe now, they force none to drink, but modeſtly invite them [k]: for ſo the king had appointed to all the officers of his his houſe, that they ſhould do according to every man's pleaſure; to let them have what wine they would, but not force them to drink more than was agreeable to them.

℣. 9. Alſo Vaſhti the queen made a feaſt for the women, &c.] For it was not cuſtomary with the Perſians, nor other eaſtern nations, to admit of women to their feſtivals [m], but they feaſted by themſelves. Who Vaſhti was, is not known with any certainty. Biſhop Uſher, who takes Ahaſuerus to be Darius Hyſtaſpis, thinks Vaſhti was Atoſſa, the daughter of Cyrus, whom he married. The Targumiſt ſays, ſhe was the daughter of Evil-merodach, the ſon of Nebuchadnezzar. Her name ſeems to be the ſame with Veſta, a deity worſhipped by the Perſians, as Xenophon [n], and ſignifies vehement fire, which was in great veneration with them; and therefore this queen is moſt likely to be of Perſian original: ſhe kept her feaſt in the royal houſe which belonged to Ahaſuerus; her gueſts not being ſo many, there was room enough in the king's palace for them, and where it was more decent for them to be, than in the open air in the garden, and expoſed to the ſight of men.

℣. 10. On the ſeventh day, &c.] Of the feaſt, the laſt day of it, which the Rabbins, as Jarchi obſerves, ſay was the ſabbath-day, and ſo the Targum: when the heart of the king was merry with wine; when he was intoxicated with it, and knew not well what he ſaid or did; and the diſcourſe at table ran upon the beauty of women, as the latter Targum; when the king aſſerted there were no women ſo beautiful as thoſe of Babylon, and as a proof of it, ordered his queen to be brought in: he commanded Mehuman, Biztha, Harbona, Bigtha, and Abagtha, Zethar, and Carcas, the ſeven chamberlains, that ſerved in the preſence of Ahaſuerus the king; or eunuchs, as the word is ſometimes rendered; and ſuch perſons were made uſe of in the eaſtern countries to wait upon women, and ſo were proper to be ſent on the king's errand to the queen.

℣. 11. To bring Vaſhti the queen before the king, &c.] Not againſt her will, or by force; but they were ſent to let her know it was the king's pleaſure, that ſhe ſhould come to him immediately: with the crown royal; that is, upon her head, to make her look the more grand and majeſtic: to ſhew the people and the princes her beauty; for ſhe was fair to look upon; which was not wiſely done, neither was it comely nor ſafe.

℣. 12. But the queen refuſed to come at the king's commandment by his chamberlains, &c.] Even tho' he ſent by them again, as the Targum; and ſo ſays Joſephus [o]; which might not purely ariſe from pride in her, and contempt of him, but becauſe ſhe might conclude he was drunk, and knew not well what he did; and therefore had ſhe come at his command, when he was himſelf and ſober, he might blame her for coming, nay uſe her ill for it, and eſpecially if ſhe was to come naked, as ſay the Jews [p]; and beſides it was contrary to the law of the Perſians, as not only Joſephus [q], but Plutarch [r] obſerves, which ſuffered not women to be ſeen in public; and particularly did not allow their wives to be with them at feaſts, only their concubines and harlots, with whom they could behave with more indecency; as for their wives, they were kept out of ſight, at home [s]; and therefore Vaſhti might think it an indignity to be treated as an harlot or concubine: therefore was the king very wroth, and his anger burned in him; which was the more fierce, as he was inflamed with wine.

℣. 13. Then the king ſaid to the wiſe men that knew the times, &c.] Aſtrologers, as Aben Ezra, that knew the fit time for doing any thing; or that had knowledge of ancient times, hiſtorians, well read in hiſtory, and knew things that had happened ſimilar to this: for ſo was the king's manner towards all that knew law and judgment; it was cuſtomary with him in any caſe of difficulty to have the opinion and advice of thoſe that were expert in the law, and well underſtood right and wrong. Theſe are called by Herodotus [t], the king's judges.

℣. 14. And the next unto him, &c.] That ſat next to the king, and was the chief in dignity and authority under him, was Carſhena; and ſo every one in their rank and order, as next mentioned: Shethar, Admatha, Tarſhiſh, Meres, Marſena, and Memucan; who, according to the latter Targum, were of different countries; the 1ſt of Africa, the 2d of India, the third of Idumea, the 4th of Egypt, the 5th of Reſen, Gen. x. 12. which is framed out of Marſena, who is dropped, and the laſt of Jeruſalem, ſaid to be Daniel; though the former Targum makes him to be Haman: the ſeven princes of Perſia and Media; which cuſtom of having ſeven counſellors with the kings of Perſia, aroſe from the ſeven princes that ſlew Smerdis the pretender, and made Darius Hyſtaſpis king, the father of Xerxes: which ſaw the king's face; were intimate and familiar with him, often in his preſence; yea, might go into it when they pleaſed, without the ceremony of being introduced; which privilege the above perſons reſerved to themſelves, when they placed Darius on the throne, as Herodotus relates [u]: and which ſat the firſt in the kingdom; next to the king, and were aſſiſting to him in the adminiſtration of government, ſee Ezra vii. 14.

℣. 15. What ſhall we do unto the queen Vaſhti, according to law, &c.] The king deſired to know what law was provided in ſuch a caſe as her's, and what to be done according to it: becauſe ſhe hath not performed the commandment of the king by the chamberlains? as this was the crime, diſobedience to his commands, he would have thoſe who had knowledge of the law, conſider what puniſhment was to be inflicted on her for it, according to former laws, uſages and cuſtoms, or as reaſon and juſtice required; and it being a feſtival, and they heated with wine, was no objection to a conſultation on this head; for it was the manner of the Perſians at feſtivals, and when inflamed with wine, to conſult and determine about matters of the greateſt moment [w]; yea, reckoned their counſels and decrees firmer than when made when they were ſober [x]; ſo the ancient Germans [y].

℣. 16. And Memucan anſwered before the king and the princes, &c.] Who was the laſt, and perhaps the leaſt and the youngeſt of the counſellors; it being appointed by the king, according to the latter Targum, that when his counſellors ſat, the leaſt ſhould give their counſel firſt; juſt as puiſne judges, and the youngeſt peers with us, give their opinion in a caſe firſt: Vaſhti the queen hath not done wrong to the king only, but alſo to all the princes, and

and to all the people that are in all the provinces of the king Ahaſuerus; he means, by ſetting a bad example to their wives, as after explained; it is an exaggeration of her crime, and made with a deſign to incenſe the king the more againſt her.

℣. 17. For this deed of the queen ſhall come abroad unto all women, &c.] It will ſoon be ſpread all over the king's dominions, and reach the ears of the wives of all his ſubjects, and become their general talk every where: ſo that they ſhall deſpiſe their huſbands in their eyes; make light of their authority, refuſe ſubjection to them, ſlight their commands, and neglect to yield obedience to them, and ſo not give them the honour that is due unto them: when it ſhall be reported, the king Ahaſuerus commanded Vaſhti the queen to be brought in before him, and ſhe came not; was diſobedient to his commands, refuſed to go along with the chamberlains ſent by the king to fetch her.

℣. 18. Likewiſe ſhall the ladies of Perſia and Media ſay this day unto the king's princes, which have heard of the deed of the queen, &c.] From henceforward they'll give a like anſwer to their huſbands, when they lay their commands upon them, as Vaſhti has to the king; they'll tell them to their faces they'll not obey their orders: thus ſhall there ariſe too much contempt and wrath; there will be in wives a general contempt of their huſbands, which will cauſe diſcord and ſtrife, quarrels, wrath and anger; contempt on one part, wrath on the other, and contention between both.

℣. 19. If it it pleaſe the king, let there go a royal commandment from him, &c.] Not only a proclamation made, but a law enacted and publiſhed by royal authority: and let it be written among the laws of the Perſians and Medes, that it be not altered; for ſo it was, that when a law was made, and ſigned, and ſealed, and regiſtered among the laws of the kingdom, it remained unalterable, Dan. vi. 8, 15. this precaution Memucan took for his own ſafety; for had the king acted upon his advice, without paſſing it into a law in ſuch form, he might change his mind, and recal Vaſhti, who would not fail of venting her wrath upon the counſellor, and ſo he be in danger of loſing his life for it: that Vaſhti come no before king Ahaſuerus; but be entirely divorced, never to be received any more: and let the king give her royal eſtate unto another that is better than ſhe; or to her companion [z]; that was with her in the houſe of the women in the ſeraglio; one that was fairer, as the Targum, or of a better diſpoſition than her; let her be made queen, and enjoy all the honour, and dignity, and marks of royalty Vaſhti did; her throne, her crown, and royal apparel, as it is interpreted in an ancient Jewiſh writing [a].

℣. 20. And when the king's decree which he ſhall make, ſhall be publiſhed throughout all his empire, &c.] As it was proper it ſhould, ſince the report of the queen's deed would be made every where: for it is great; the empire conſiſting of 127 provinces, ℣. 1. Aben Ezra and Abendana interpret it, though it is great, yet the decree ſhould be publiſhed throughout; the latter obſerves, that this may reſpect the king's decree; and ſo the Targum is, "for his decree is great;" it reſpecting a matter of great importance, and relating to a great perſonage, and would have great effect on the minds of perſons, when it was obſerved, that one ſo great was treated in this manner: and therefore all the wives ſhall give to their huſbands honour, both to great and ſmall; ſpeaking reſpectfully to them, yielding a ready and chearful obedience to all their commands; which would be done to princes and peaſants, to high and low, to every rank of men.

℣. 21. And the ſaying pleaſed the king and the princes, &c.] The king, and the other ſix princes and counſellors approved of the propoſal, and unanimouſly agreed to it: and the king did according to the word of Memucan; paſſed a law according to his advice, and ſigned and ſealed it, and regiſtered it among the laws of the kingdom, not to be revoked.

℣. 22. For he ſent letters unto all the king's provinces, &c.] The 127 provinces, ℣. 1. which, according to the Targum, were written and ſealed with his own ſeal; which is very probable: into every province according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language; that is, theſe letters were written in the language, and in the characters in which that language was written, uſed in each of the provinces to which theſe letters were ſent, that they might be eaſily read and underſtood by all: the ſum of which was, that every man ſhould bear rule in his own houſe; be prince, lord, and maſter there, and his commands obeyed, not only by his children and ſervants, but by his wife alſo: and that it ſhould be publiſhed according to the language of every people; but as this is expreſſed, or at leaſt implied in the firſt clauſe of this verſe, it ſhould rather be rendered, and that he ſhould ſpeak according to the language of his people; and ſo is the latter Targum; it ſeems as if a man, who had married a woman in another country, in complaiſance to her had neglected his own native tongue, and uſed hers in the family, by which means he loſt, or ſeemed to loſe his authority in it: now to guard againſt this, this part of the law was made; and, according to Jarchi, the huſband was to compel his wife to learn and ſpeak his language, if ſhe was a foreigner; to which agrees the firſt Targum, which paraphraſes the whole thus, "that a man rule over his wife, and oblige her to ſpeak according to the language of her huſband, and the ſpeech of his people;" and in after-times, Bahram Gaur forbid any other language, beſides the Perſian, to be uſed within his port, either in ſpeaking or writing [b].

CHAP. II.

BY the advice of the miniſters of king Ahaſuerus, fair virgins were ſought for throughout his dominions, and brought to his chamberlain, the keeper of the women, among whom was Eſther, a Jewiſh virgin, ℣. 1—8. who found favour with the chamberlain, and afterwards with the king, who made her queen inſtead of Vaſhti, and a feaſt on that account, ℣. 9—18. Mordecai, to whom Eſther

Eſther was related, and according to whoſe advice ſhe acted, ſitting in the king's gate, diſcovered a conſpiracy againſt the king, which he now made known to Eſther, ℣. 19—23.

℣. 1. After theſe things, when the wrath of king Ahaſuerus was appeaſed, &c.] Which went off with his wine, and ſo was quickly after, a few days at moſt; unleſs this can be underſtood as after the expedition of Xerxes into Greece, from whence he returned to Shuſhan, in the 7th year of his reign; and if he is the Ahaſuerus here meant, he married Eſther that year, ℣. 16. and it ſeems certain, that after his expedition he gave himſelf up to his amours, and in his way at Sardis he fell in love with his brother's wife, and then with his daughter [b]: he remembered Vaſhti; her beauty, and was grieved, as Jarchi obſerves, that ſhe was removed from him; and ſo Joſephus ſays [c], that he paſſionately loved her, and could not bear parting with her, and therefore was grieved that he had brought himſelf into ſuch difficulties: the Targumiſts carry it farther, and ſay, that he was wroth with thoſe that adviſed him to it, and ordered them to be put to death, and that they were: and what ſhe had done; that it was a trivial thing, and not deſerving of ſuch a ſentence as he had paſſed upon her; that it was not done from contempt of him, but from modeſty, and a ſtrict regard to the laws of the Perſians: and what was decreed againſt her; that ſhe ſhould come no more before him, but be divorced from him; the thought of which gave him great great pain and uneaſineſs.

℣. 2. Then ſaid the king's ſervants that miniſtered unto him, &c.] Fearing that if Vaſhti ſhould be reſtored, vengeance would be taken on them; or however to remove the grief and melancholy of the king, they gave the following advice: let there be fair young virgins ſought for the king; that he might enjoy them, and chooſe one of them, the moſt agreeable to him, and put her in the room of Vaſhti.

℣. 3. And let the king appoint officers in all the provinces of his kingdom, &c.] Who beſt knew where beautiful virgins might be found in their reſpective provinces, in which they dwelt: that they may gather together all the fair young virgins unto Shuſhan the palace; the metropolis of the kingdom, where was the royal palace: to the houſe of the women, unto the cuſtody of Hege the king's chamberlain, the keeper of the women; in which houſe it ſeems were two apartments, one for the virgins before they were introduced to the king, the other for them when they were become his concubines, which had a keeper alſo; but this Hege ſeems to have been over the whole houſe, ℣. 14. it was not only uſual with the eaſtern people, as with the Turks now, for great perſonages to have keepers of their wives and concubines, but with the Romans alſo [d]: and let their things for purification be given them; ſuch as oil of myrrh, ſpices, &c. to remove all impurity and ill ſcent from them, and make them look ſmooth and beautiful.

℣. 4. And let the maiden which pleaſeth the king be queen inſtead of Vaſhti, &c.] Have the royal eſtate that was taken from Vaſhti, given to her, the crown royal ſet on her head, &c. and the thing pleaſed the king, and he did ſo; appointed officers in all his provinces to ſeek out the moſt beautiful virgins, and bring them to his palace; ſo with the Chineſe now, the king never marries with any of his kindred, though ever ſo remote; but there is ſought throughout his kingdom a damſel of 12 or 14 years, of perfect beauty, good natural parts, and well inclined to virtue; whence, for the moſt part, the queen is the daughter of ſome artiſan; and in their hiſtory [e], mention is made of one that was the daughter of a maſon.

℣. 5. Now in Shuſhan the palace was a certain Jew, &c.] Not one of the tribe of Judah, for he was afterwards called a Benjaminite; but was ſo called, becauſe he was of the kingdom of Judah, which conſiſted of both tribes. Jarchi ſays, all that were carried captive with the kings of Judah were called Jews among the nations, though of another tribe: whoſe name was Mordecai, the ſon of Jair, the ſon of Shimei, the ſon of Kiſh, a Benjamite; who was among thoſe that came with Zerubbabel from Babylon to Jeruſalem, and returned to Perſia again, Ezra ii. 2. Neh. vii. 7. though ſome think this was another Mordecai; ſee the note on Ezra ii. 2. who deſcended not from Kiſh, the father of Saul, but a later and more obſcure perſon.

℣. 6. Who had been carried away from Jeruſalem, &c.] Which, according to ſome [f], is to be connected, not with Mordecai, but with Kiſh, his great grandfather; and indeed otherwiſe Mordecai muſt be now a very old man, and Eſther his couſin-german, they being brothers children, muſt be at an age, one would think, not to be reckoned among young virgins, and not be ſo amiable as ſhe is repreſented; and indeed, according to the former Targum, ſhe was 75 years of age, which is not credible; and yet this, and more ſhe muſt be, to be equal to Mordecai, if he was carried captive, as follows: with the captivity which had been carried away with Jeconiah king of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away; which was eleven years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, for ſo long Zedekiah reigned after that captivity of Jeconiah: hence Sir John Marſham [g] makes this affair of Eſther to be within the time of the Babyloniſh captivity, and places Ahaſuerus her huſband between Darius the Mede and Cyrus, contrary to hiſtory and ſcripture, ſee Dan. vi. 28.

℣. 7. And he brought up Hadaſſah (that is Eſther) his uncle's daughter, &c.] Her Hebrew name was Hadaſſah, which ſignifies a myrtle, to which the Iſraelites, and good men among them, are ſometimes compared, Zech. i. 8. Her Perſian name was Eſther, which ſome derive from Satar, to hide, becauſe hidden in the houſe of Mordecai, ſo the former Targum, and by his advice concealed her kindred: or rather ſhe was ſo called by Ahaſuerus, when married to him, this word ſignifying in the Perſian language a ſtar [h]; and ſo the latter Targum ſays, ſhe was called by the name of the ſtar of Venus, which in Greek is ἀστήρ; though it is ſaid [i], that the myrtle, which is called Hadaſſah in Hebrew, is in the Syriac language Eſta; ſo Aſa in the Talmud [k] ſignifies a myrtle; and, according to Hillerus [l], Eſther ſignifies the black myrtle, which is reckoned the moſt excellent; and ſo Ameſtris, according to him, ſignifies the ſole myrtle, the incomparable one.

Xerxes had a wife, whose name was Ameſtris, which Scaliger thinks is as if it was חמ אסתר, and the ſame with Eſther; but to this are objected, that her father's name was Otanes, and her cruelty in the mutilation of the wife of Maſiſtis, her huſband's brother, and burning alive 14 children of the beſt families of the Perſians, as a ſacrifice to the infernal gods; and beſides, Xerxes had a ſon by her marriageable, in the ſeventh year of this reign [m], the year of Ahaſuerus, in which he married Eſther: but it is obſerved by ſome, that theſe things are confounded with the deſtruction of Haman's family, or told by the Perſians to obliterate the memory of Eſther, from whom they paſſed to the Greek hiſtorians: for ſhe had neither father nor mother; according to the former Targum, her father died and left her mother with child of her, and her mother died as ſoon as ſhe was delivered of her: and the maid was fair and beautiful; which was both the reaſon why ſhe was taken and brought into the king's houſe, and why Mordecai took ſo much care of her: whom Mordecai, when her father and mother were dead, took for his own daughter; loved her, and brought her up as if ſhe had been his daughter, and called her ſo, as the Targum. The Rabbins, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra obſerve, ſay, he took her in order to make her his wife; and ſo the Septuagint render it; though perhaps no more may be intended by that verſion, than that he brought her up to woman's eſtate. Joſephus [n] calls him her uncle; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion, his brother's daughter; but both are miſtaken.

℣. 8. So it came to paſs, when the king's commandment and decree was heard, &c.] In the ſeveral provinces of his kingdom: and when many maidens were gathered unto Shuſhan the palace, to the cuſtody of Hegai; Joſephus [o] ſays, there were gathered to the number of 400: that Eſther was brought alſo unto the king's houſe, to the cuſtody of Hegai, the keeper of the women; by force, as Aben Ezra and the former Targum, and ſo the word is ſometimes uſed.

℣. 9. And the maiden pleaſed him, &c.] Not the king, into whoſe preſence ſhe was not yet introduced, but the chamberlain; her beauty and her behaviour recommended her to him, and he concluded within himſelf that ſhe was the perſon that of all would be acceptable to the king: and ſhe obtained kindneſs of him; had favours ſhown others had not: and he ſpeedily gave her her things for purification; as oil, ſpices, &c. that ſhe might be the ſooner fitted to be had into the king's preſence: with ſuch things as belonged to her; food and drink from the king's table; the Targum interprets it gifts, as chains and royal apparel: and ſeven maidens which were given her, out of the king's houſe; to wait upon her the ſeven days of the week, as the ſame Targum: and he preferred her and her maids unto the beſt place of the houſe of the women; removed her and them to it, which was the moſt ſplendid, had large, airy, and pleaſant rooms.

℣. 10. Eſther had not ſhewed her people nor her kindred, &c.] What nation or family ſhe was of; it not being aſked, ſhe was under no obligation to declare it; and being born in Shuſhan, as very probable, ſhe was taken to be a Perſian: for Mordecai had charged her, that ſhe ſhould not ſhew it; leſt ſhe ſhould be deſpiſed and ill treated on that account; fearing if the king knew it, he would not marry her, as Aben Ezra; or rather, as the ſame writer thinks, that ſhe might keep the law of God privately, obſerve the ſabbath, &c.

℣. 11. And Mordecai walked every day before the court of the womens houſe, &c.] Being one of the court, and in an high poſt, as Aben Ezra thinks, he might walk there without being examined, and called to an account for it: to know how Eſther did; to enquire of her health and proſperity, or peace, the word here uſed ſignifies, even all ſorts of it: and what ſhould become of her; or was done to her, whether ſhe was well uſed, or as yet introduced to the king, how it fared with her, and what befel her.

℣. 12. Now when every maid's turn was come to go in to king Ahaſuerus, after that ſhe had been 12 months, according to the manner of women, &c.] That were prepared in the houſe of the women to be preſented to the king for his liking; for it ſeems that theſe virgins came in turns to him, according to the time they had been in the houſe; as did the wives of the kings of Perſia, as Herodotus relates [p]: for ſo were the days of their purifications accompliſhed; that is, in the ſpace of 12 months, which were thus divided: to wit, ſix months with oil of myrrhe; which Ben Melech interprets of muſk: and ſix months with ſweet odours; the former was uſed to make the ſkin ſmooth and ſoft, and theſe to remove all ill ſcents thro' ſweat, or any other cauſe: and with other things for the purifying of women; by bathing, rubbing, &c. and ſuch a ſpace of time was obſerved not only for the thorough purification of them, but partly was of ſtate and grandeur, and partly that it might be a clear caſe they were not with child by another, before they came to the king.

℣. 13. Then thus came every virgin unto the king, &c.] When her 12 months were up, and ſhe was purified in the manner before obſerved: whatſoever ſhe deſired was given her, to go with her out of the houſe of the women unto the king's houſe; whatever ſhe demanded the chamberlain was obliged to furniſh her with, or grant it to her, whether for ornament, as jewels, rich apparel, &c. or for attendance; whatever prince or peer ſhe required to accompany her to the king, was to be obtained for her, as the Targum; and every thing for mirth, all kinds of ſongs, or inſtruments of muſic, as Jarchi.

℣. 14. In the evening ſhe went, and on the morrow ſhe returned into the ſecond houſe of the women, &c.] Or the other apartment of the houſe of the women, where were kept thoſe the king had made his concubines or ſecondary wives. Aben Ezra interprets it the ſecond time, and ſo the Targum by again: to the cuſtody of Shaaſhgaz the king's chamberlain, which kept the concubines; of which the kings of Perſia had a great number; Darius, whom Alexander conquered, had 360 [q]: ſhe came in unto the king no more, except the king delighted in her, and that ſhe was called by name; but remained ſhut up in the houſe, and might not lie with, nor be married to another man.

℣. 15. Now when the turn of Eſther the daughter of Abihail, &c.] For this was her father's name, and not Aminadab, as the Septuagint verſion: the uncle of Mordecai, who had taken her for his daughter; which makes it quite clear that Mordecai was not Eſther's uncle, as Joſephus, but her own couſin: now now when her turn was come to go in unto the king; which the virgins under purification took by turns, ℣. 14. she required nothing but what Hegai the king's chamberlain, the keeper of the women, appointed; what he ordered her to have, or to do, she submitted to, being in his hands, and so obeyed his orders; but more she asked not, either for ornament or attendance, being not at all solicitous whether the king liked her or not; for it was not of choice, but by constraint she went unto him; nor needed she any thing to recommend her, her virtue, modesty and beauty were sufficient: and Esther obtained favour of all them that looked upon her; when she came to court, the eyes of all were attracted to her; all admired her beauty, her innocent and modest look, and her graceful mien and deportment.

℣. 16. So Esther was taken unto king Ahasuerus, into his house royal, &c.] Did not return on the morrow to the house of the women, as those who only became the king's concubines did, ℣. 14. but she was taken to be his wife, and designed for his queen, and so was retained in his palace, and placed in an apartment suitable to the dignity she was about to be advanced unto: and this was done in the tenth month, which is the month Tebeth; and answers to part of December and part of January; not the 12th month Adar, as the Septuagint version, and so Josephus [q], contrary to the original text: either that law had not obtained among the Persians, or the king thought himself not bound by it, which forbid marriage at any other time than the beginning of the vernal equinox [r]: in the 7th year of his reign; and the divorce of Vashti being in the third year of his reign; it was four years before Esther was taken by him; who, if Xerxes, it may be accounted for by his preparation for, and engagement in a war with Greece, which took him up all this time; and from whence he returned in the seventh year of his reign, at the beginning of it, and married Esther at the close of it, see ℣. 1. as may be suggested.

℣. 17. And the king loved Esther above all the women, &c.] The virgins he made his concubines, as next explained; though Jarchi interprets it of married women, for such he supposes were gathered and brought to him, as well as virgins: and she obtained grace and favour in his sight more than all the virgins; who had been purified, and in their turns brought to him: so that he set the royal crown upon her head, and made her queen instead of Vashti; declared her queen, and gave her all the ensigns of royalty: so it was usual with the eastern kings, to put a crown or diadem on the heads of their wives at the time of marriage, and declare them queens [s].

℣. 18. Then the king made a great feast unto all his princes and servants, even Esther's feast, &c.] A feast to all his nobles, courtiers, and ministers of state, on account of his marriage with Esther; which, according to the Greek version, was held seven days; but, according to Josephus, it lasted a whole month [t]: and he made a release to the provinces; of taxes and tribute due to him, as was the custom of the kings of Persia when they came to the throne, as Herodotus [u] relates; so Smerdis the magus that mounted the throne after Cambyses, pretending to be his brother, released them for three years to come [w]; and Grotius says, kings used to do it at their marriage, but gives no instance of it: and gave gifts; according to the latter Targum, to the provinces, all of them, that he might be sure that the people of Esther shared his favours, who were as yet unknown; but rather these gifts were given to his nobles, or it may be to Esther; so the former Targum, "he gave to her a gift and portion:" according to the state of the king; his royal ability and munificence, and suitable to his grandeur; and it was usual with the Persian kings to give to their wives whole cities for one thing or another, as for necklaces, hairlaces, shoes, &c. [x] Socrates [y] speaks of a whole country in Persia called the Queen's girdle, and another her Headdress.

℣. 19. And when the virgins were gathered together the second time, &c.] Some think this second collection is, that which was made when Esther was taken and brought to the keeper of the women, called the second, in reference to a former collection of them, made when Vashti was taken and made queen; but as there is no proof of any such collection then made, rather the case was this, such was the lust of the king, though he had a queen he loved, and a multitude of concubines, yet a second collection of virgins was made for his gratification: then Mordecai sat in the king's gate; or court, being an officer in it, promoted by the interest of Esther, though not as yet known to be a relation of her's; so θυρὼξ in Xenophon [z] is used of the court of the king of Persia, as the Ottoman or Turkish court is now called the Port.

℣. 20. Esther had not shewed her kindred nor her people, as Mordecai had charged her, &c.] As not before, so neither since she was made queen, see ℣. 10. though, according to the Targums, she was urged to it by the king himself: for Esther did the commandment of Mordecai, like as when she was brought up with him; which shewed great humility in her, notwithstanding her advancement, great respect to him, and a sense of gratitude for the kindness he had shown; and this charge to her was still continued by Mordecai, partly that she might not fall into contempt, and partly to prevent hatred and envy to the Jewish nation, through her promotion; but chiefly so it was ordered in providence, the proper time being not yet come.

℣. 21. In those days, while Mordecai sat in the king's gate, &c.] Being, as before observed, an officer at court: two of the king's chamberlains, Bigthan and Teresh, of those that kept the door; of the inner court, as Aben Ezra, of the doors of his bed-chamber; perhaps they were the chief of his body-guards, as the Septuagint version; in aftertimes, such officers were about the chambers of great personages as their guards [a]: these were wroth, and sought to lay hand on the king Ahasuerus; to poison him, as Jarchi and both the Targums; however, to take away his life by some means or another. Gorionides [b] says, their design was, while the king was asleep, to cut off his head, and carry it to the king of Greece; there being at that time great wars between the kingdom of Greece, and the kingdom of Persia, which exactly agrees with the times of Xerxes, and with this part of his reign, about the seventh year of it; what was was the occaſion of this wrath is not ſaid, it is thought to be either the divorce of Vaſhti, whoſe creatures they were, or the marriage of Eſther, and particularly the promotion of Mordecai, fearing they ſhould be turned out of their places; ſo the former Targum.

℣. 22. And the thing was known to Mordecai, &c.] But by what means does not appear; the Jewiſh writers ſay [c], theſe two men were Tarſians, and ſpoke in the Tarſian language, which they thought Mordecai did not underſtand; but he being ſkilled in languages over-heard them, and underſtood what they ſaid; but, according to Joſephus [d], it was diſcovered to him by Barnabazus, a ſervant of one of the chamberlains; the latter Targum ſays, it was ſhewed unto him by the Holy Ghoſt: who told it unto Eſther, and Eſther certified the king thereof in Mordecai's name; whoſe name ſhe mentioned, partly as a voucher of the truth of what ſhe reported, and partly to ingratiate Mordecai to the king, that he might be ſtill yet more promoted in due time.

℣. 23. And when inquiſition was made of the matter, it was found out, &c.] That theſe two men had entered into a conſpiracy to take away the king's life; full proof and evidence were given of it: therefore they were both hanged on a tree; Joſephus [e] ſays, they were crucified; but hanging was frequent among the Perſians, as Grotius obſerves, and better agrees with the word here uſed: and it was written in the book of the Chronicles before the king; in a diary kept by the king's order, in which memorable events were ſet down, and might be done in the preſence of the king, as well as the book lay open before him to read at any time; and this is obſerved to agree with the manner of Xerxes, who is reported [f] to ſit on a throne of gold to behold a ſea-fight between the Grecians and Perſians, and had ſeveral ſcribes by him to take down whatever was done in the fight.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter gives an account of the promotion of Haman, and of the mortification of him by Mordecai, who refuſed to bow to him, upon which he vowed revenge on him, and on all his people the Jews, ℣. 1—6. for which purpoſe, through a falſe repreſentation of them, he obtained letters of the king, and ſent to the deputies of all the provinces to deſtroy them all on a certain day fixed, ℣. 7—15.

℣. 1. After theſe things, &c.] After the marriage of Eſther, and the diſcovery of the conſpiracy to take away the king's life; five years after, as Aben Ezra obſerves, at leaſt more than four years, for ſo it appears from ℣. 7. did king Ahaſuerus promote Haman the ſon of Hammedatha the Agagite; whom both the Targums make to deſcend from Amalek, and to be of the ſtock or family of Agag, the common name of the kings of Amalek; and ſo Joſephus [g]; but this is not clear and certain; in the apocryphal Eſther, he is ſaid to be a Macedonian; and Sulpitius the hiſtorian ſays [h], he was a Perſian, which is not improbable; and Agag might be the name of a family or city in Perſia, of which he was; and Aben Ezra obſerves, that ſome ſay he is the ſame with Memucan, ſee ch. i. 14. and advanced him, and ſet his ſeat above all the princes that were with him; erected a throne for him higher than the reſt, either of his own princes and nobles, or ſuch as were his captives, ſee 2 Kings xxv. 28. It was the cuſtom of the kings of Perſia, which it is probable was derived from Cyrus, to advance thoſe to the higheſt ſeats they thought beſt deſerved it: ſays he to his nobles, let there be ſeats with you as with me, and let the beſt be honoured before others;— and again, let all the beſt of thoſe preſent be honoured with ſeats above others [i].

℣. 2. And the king's ſervants that were in the king's gate, &c.] Or court, all his courtiers: for it can't be thought they were all porters, or ſuch only, that bowed and reverenced Haman; gave him divine honours as to a deity; for ſuch were given to the kings of Perſia [k], and might be given to their favourites, and ſeems to be the caſe; for though Haman might not erect a ſtatue of himſelf, or have images painted on his clothes, as the Targum and Aben Ezra, for the Perſians did not allow of ſtatues and images [l]; yet he might make himſelf a god, as Jarchi, and require divine worſhip, with leave of the king, which he had, yea an order for it: for the king had ſo commanded concerning him; which ſhows that it was not mere civil honour and reſpect, for that in courſe would have been given him as the king's favourite and prime miniſter by all his ſervants, without an expreſs order for it; this therefore muſt be ſomething uncommon and extraordinary: but Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence; which is a farther proof that it was not mere civil honour that was required and given; for that the Jews did not refuſe to give, and that in the moſt humble and proſtrate manner, and was admitted by them, 1 Sam. xxi. 8. 2 Sam. xiv. 4 and xviii. 28. 1 Kings i. 16. nor can it be thought that Mordecai would refuſe to give it from pride and ſullenneſs, and thereby riſque the king's diſpleaſure, the loſs of his office, and the ruin of his nation; but it was ſuch kind of reverence to a man, and worſhip of him, which was contrary to his conſcience, and the law of his God.

℣. 3. Then the king's ſervants which were in the king's gate, &c.] Obſerving the behaviour of Mordecai towards Haman from time to time: ſaid unto Mordecai, why tranſgreſſeſt thou the king's commandment? of giving reverence to Haman, which they knew he could not be ignorant of.

℣. 4. Now it came to paſs, when they ſpake daily unto him, &c.] Putting him in mind of his duty to obey the king's command, ſuggeſting to him the danger he expoſed himſelf to, preſſing him to give the reaſons of his conduct: and he hearkened not unto them; regarded not what they ſaid, and continued diſobedient to the king's order, and diſreſpectful reſpectful to Haman: that they told Haman to ſee whether Mordecai his matters would ſtand; they informed Haman that Mordecai refuſed to give him reverence as the king had ordered; this they did to try whether ſuch a conduct would be ſuffered and bore with; and whether Mordecai would perſevere in it when taken notice of: for he had told them that he was a Jew; which was all the reaſon he gave why he would not reverence Haman; and a reaſon ſufficient; becauſe, by a fundamental law of his religion, he was not to worſhip mere man, but God only: and this confirms what has been before obſerved; for this would have been no reaſon for refuſing civil reſpect and honour, but was a ſtrong one for denying religious worſhip and reverence; and no wonder that the Jews ſhould refuſe it, when even the Grecians, though heathens, refuſed to give the Perſian kings the divine honours they required [m]; yea, the Athenians put Timagoras to death for proſtrating himſelf in ſuch a manner to Darius [n]; for the Perſian kings were, as Ariſtotle ſays [o], called Lord and God, and ſaid to hear and ſee all things.

℣. 5. And when Haman ſaw that Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence, &c.] For after the information given him, he obſerved and watched him, to ſee whether he bowed and did him reverence or no: then was Haman full of wrath; exceedingly diſpleaſed and angry; it was ſuch a mortification to him he could not bear.

℣. 6. And he thought ſcorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone, &c.] That would not be a ſufficient gratification of his revenge; he was too low and mean a perſon only to reak his vengeance on; nothing ſhort of his whole nation would ſatisfy him: for they had ſhewed him the people of Mordecai; that they were the Jews; for Mordecai had told the king's ſervants that talked with him on the ſubject, that he was a Jew, and gave that as a reaſon why he could not and would not reverence Haman: wherefore Haman ſought to deſtroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahaſuerus, even the people of Mordecai; and that not merely to be revenged on Mordecai, but becauſe he plainly ſaw, that both by his example, and upon the ſame principle with him, they would all to a man refuſe to give him reverence; and therefore he was reſolved to root them out of the whole empire, that he might not be mortified by them.

℣. 7. In the firſt month, that is the month Niſan, &c.] Which was the 1ſt month of the ſacred year of the Jews, by divine appointment, Exod. xii. 2. and xiii. 4. there called Abib, and anſwers to part of February and part of March; from hence it is clear this book was written by a Jew, and very probably by Mordecai: in the 12th year of king Ahaſuerus; four years and near two months after his marriage of Eſther, ch. ii. 16. they caſt pur, that is, the lot, before Haman; being a Perſian word, it is explained in Hebrew a lot, the word ſignifying ſteel in the Perſian language; Reland [p] conjectures that this was that ſort of lot called Sideromantia: who caſt this lot is not ſaid; whether Haman himſelf, or one of his ſervants; perhaps a diviner; the latter Targum calls him Shimſhai the ſcribe: from day to day, and from month to month, to the 12th month, that is the month Adar; which anſwers to part of January and part of February; ſo that the lot was caſt for every month and every day of the month throughout the year, to find out which was the moſt lucky month, and which the moſt lucky day in that month to deſtroy the Jews in; and none could be found till they came to the laſt month, and the 13th day of that month, ℣. 13. the providence of God ſo over-ruling the lot, that there might be time enough for the Jews, through the mediation of Eſther to the king, to prevent their deſtruction; ſo in other nations the heathens had their lucky and unlucky days [q].

℣. 8. And Haman ſaid unto king Ahaſuerus, &c.] Or had ſaid [r], as ſome chuſe to render it; nor indeed is it likely, that Haman ſhould caſt lots to know when would be a proper time to deſtroy the Jews, until he he had got leave of the king to do it: There is a certain people ſcattered abroad, and diſperſed among the people in all the provinces of thy kingdom; for though many of the Jews returned to their own land on the proclamation of Cyrus, yet others remained, being well ſettled as to worldly things, and not having that zeal for God and his worſhip as became them, and not caring to be at the trouble and expence of ſuch a journey, and eſpecially thoſe of the 10 tribes; now Haman, through contempt of them, mentions them not by name, only deſcribes them as a ſcattered inſignificant people: and their laws are different from all people; concerning their diet and obſervation of days, and other things; ſo Empedocles, an heathen, obſerves [s] of the Jews, that they were a ſeparate people from all others in thoſe things, for he ſays, "They ſeparated not only from the Romans, but even from all men; for having found out an unmixed way of living, they have nothing common with men, neither table nor libations, nor prayers, nor ſacrifices, but are more ſeparate from us than the Suſians or Bactrians, or the more remote Indians:" neither keep they the king's laws; and no doubt he had a ſpecial reſpect to the non-obſervance of the king's command to give him reverence; and in like manner the Jews are repreſented by heathen writers, as by Tacitus [t], Juvenal [u], and others: therefore it is not for the king's profit to ſuffer them: that is, to dwell in his dominions; he got nothing by them, and they might be prejudicial to his ſubjects, and poiſon them with their notions; and ſince they were not obedient to the laws of the kingdom, it was not fit and equitable that they ſhould be continued in it.

℣. 9. If it pleaſe the king, let it be written, that they may be deſtroyed, &c.] That is, a law made, ſigned and ſealed, for their deſtruction, and letters written and ſent every where, ordering it to be put in execution: and I will pay 10,000 talents of ſilver to the hands of thoſe who have the charge of the buſineſs, to bring it into the king's treaſury; this he propoſed to prevent any objection that might be made from the loſs of tribute paid by this people to the king; and this was a very large ſum for him to pay out of his own eſtate, it being near four millions of our money; it is computed by Brerewood [x] at 3,750,000 pounds; for as to what is ſuggeſted by ſome, that he intended to repay himſelf out of the ſpoil of the Jews, it may he obſerved, that according to the king's letter, they that were employed ployed in deſtroying the Jews were to have the ſpoil for a prey or booty to themſelves, ℣. 13. Now this ſum of money he propoſed not to put into the hands of them that ſhould ſlay the Jews, but into the hands of the king's receivers of the dues, that they might lay it up in the king's treaſury or exchequer.

℣. 10. And the king took his ring from his hand, and gave it unto Haman, the ſon of Hammedatha the Agagite, the Jews enemy.] As a token of his affection for him, and a mark of honour to him; with the Perſians[w] for a king to give a ring to any one, was a token and bond of the greateſt love and friendſhip imaginable; and it may be this was given to Haman, to ſeal with it the letters that were or ſhould be written, giving order for the deſtruction of the Jews. It ſeems as if as yet Eſther had not acquainted the king who her kindred and people were; or it can hardly be thought he would have ſo eaſily come into ſuch a ſcheme, or ſo highly favoured an enemy of her people.

℣. 11. And the king ſaid unto Haman, the ſilver is given unto thee, &c.] The 10,000 talents of ſilver Haman propoſed to pay into the treaſury, were returned to him, or the king out of his great munificence refuſed to take them: the people alſo, to do with them as ſeemeth good unto thee; that is, the people of the Jews; he gave him full power to do with them as he thought fit, and who breathing revenge upon them, would not ſpare them.

℣. 12. Then were the king's ſcribes called, on the 13th day of the 1ſt month, &c.] The month Niſan, ℣. 9. after Haman had leave and power from the king to deſtroy the Jews, and his ring given him in token of it; the king's ſcribes or ſecretaries of ſtate were called together on that day, to write the letters for that purpoſe: and there was written according to all that Haman had commanded; whatever he would have done; he had an unlimited power to do what he pleaſed, and he made uſe of it, and directed the ſcribes what they ſhould write: unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors that were over every province; the deputy-governors of the 127 provinces, ch. i. 1. and to the rulers of every people, of every province; it ſeems there were different people in every province, which had their rulers; and theſe were ſent to: according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language; and letters were written in the language and character of the language each people ſpoke, that they might be underſtood by them: in the name of king Ahaſuerus was it written, and ſealed with the king's ring. All this Haman took care to have done ſo early as the 13th of Niſan, though the execution was not to be until the 13th of Adar, eleven months after; partly that there might be time enough to ſend the letters every where, even to the moſt diſtant parts; and chiefly, leaſt Ahaſuerus ſhould change his mind, and be prevailed upon to revoke his grant; and it may be, either to keep the Jews in continual dread, or cauſe them to flee.

℣. 13. And the letters were ſent by poſt into all the king's provinces, &c.] Or by the runners[x]; by which it ſeems as if theſe letters were carried by running footmen, men ſwift of foot; or rather they were running horſes, on which men rode poſt with letters, and which the Perſians called Angari; a ſcheme invented by Cyrus, for the quick diſpatch of letters from place to place, by fixing horſes and men to ride them at a proper diſtance, to receive letters one from another, and who rode night and day[y], as our poſt-boys do now; and nothing could be ſwifter, or done with greater ſpeed; neither ſnow, nor rain, nor heat, nor night, could ſtop their courſe, we are told[z]: the purport of theſe letters was, to deſtroy, to kill, and to cauſe to periſh, all Jews, both young and old, little children and women, in one day, even upon the 13th day of the 12th month, which is the month Adar; ſee ℣. 7. The orders were to deſtroy, by any means whatſoever, all the Jews, of every age and ſex, all in one day, in all the provinces which are here named, that they might be cut off with one blow: and to take the ſpoil of them for a prey; to be their own booty; which was propoſed to engage them in this barbarous work, to encourage them in it to uſe the greater ſeverity and diſpatch.

℣. 14. The copy of the writing, for a commandment to be given in every province, was publiſhed unto all people, &c.] Not only letters were ſent to the governors, but a copy, or the ſum of the contents of them, was publiſhed by heralds, or ſtuck up as with us, in various places, that it might be publickly known by the common people every where: that they ſhould be ready againſt that day; and fall upon the people of the Jews, and ſlay them, and ſeize on their goods as a prey.

℣. 15. The poſt went out, being haſtened by the king's command, &c.] Both to ſet out and make as much diſpatch as poſſible: and the decree was given in Shuſhan the palace, by the king, and with the advice of his courtiers: and the king and Haman ſat down to drink; at a banquet which perhaps Haman had prepared, in gratitude to the king for what he had granted him, both being highly delighted with what had been done: but the city Shuſhan was perplexed; the court was agreed, but the city was divided, as the former Targum ſays, with the joy of ſtrange nations, and the weeping of the people of Iſrael, there being many Jews in the city; with whom no doubt there were many in connection, through affinity or friendſhip, or commerce, that were concerned for them; or however, were ſhocked at ſuch a barbarous ſcheme; and which they knew not where it would end, and how far they themſelves might be involved in it, when once a mob had ſuch a power granted to them.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter relates the mourning of Mordecai, and of the Jews in every province, on account of the edict to deſtroy them, ℣. 1—3. The information Eſther had of it, and what paſſed between her and Mordecai, through Hatach, a chamberlain, by whom he put her upon making a requeſt to the king in their favour, ℣. 4—8. to which ſhe at firſt objected, becauſe of a law in Perſia which forbids any to come to the king unleſs called, ℣. 9—12. but being preſſed to it by Mordecai, ſhe agreed, and ordered a general faſt among the Jews, ℣. 13—17.

℣. 1. When Mordecai perceived all that was done, &c.] By the king, at the inſtigation of Haman, againſt the Jews; which he came to the knowledge of, either by ſome of the courtiers or by common fame, or on the ſight of the edicts which were publiſhed in Shuſhan; though the Jews think it was made known to him in a ſupernatural way, either by Elijah, as the former Targum[x], or by the Holy Ghoſt, as the latter: Mordecai rent his cloaths, both behind and before, according to the ſame Targum; and this was a cuſtom uſed in mourning, not only with the Jews, but with the Perſians alſo, as Herodotus[y] relates: and put on ſackcloth with aſhes; upon his head, as the former Targum; which was uſual in mourning, even both; Job. ii. 8. 12. Dan. ix. 3. and went out into the midſt of the city; not Elam the province, as Aben Ezra, but the city Shuſhan: and cried with a loud and bitter cry; that all the Jews in the city might be alarmed by it, and enquire the reaſon of it, and be affected with it; and a clamorous mournful noiſe was uſed among the Perſians, as well as others, on ſad occaſions.[z]

℣. 2. And came even before the king's gate, &c.] Or court, that Eſther might if poſſible be made acquainted with this dreadful calamity coming upon her people: for none might enter into the king's gate clothed with ſackcloth; or appear in ſuch a dreſs at court, where nothing was admitted to damp the pleaſures of it.

℣. 3. And in every province whitherſoever the king's commandment and his decree came, &c.] For deſtroying the Jews on ſuch a day, in every place where they were to be found: there was great mourning among the Jews, and weeping, and wailing; which continued all day: and many lay in ſackcloth and aſhes; all night; made uſe of no other bed to lie on, nor clothes to cover them with.

℣. 4. So Eſther's maids and her chamberlains came and told it her, &c.] Her maids of honour and eunuchs that attended her, which they might tell her merely as a piece of news, there being ſomething ſhocking in it to tender minds; or perhaps nothing more than that Mordecai was in ſackcloth; and they might have obſerved by ſome incidents or another, that there was ſome connection between Mordecai and Eſther, and that ſhe had a peculiar reſpect for him: then was the queen exceedingly grieved; even tho' ſhe might not know the whole of the matter; but perceiving whatever it was it greatly affected Mordecai, with whom ſhe ſympathized: and ſhe ſent raiment to clothe Mordecai, and to take away his ſackcloth from him; that ſo he might appear at court, and ſhe get better intelligence of the cauſe of all this: but he received it not; refuſing to be comforted, or appear chearful under ſuch melancholy circumſtances.

℣. 5. Then called Eſther for Hatach, one of the king's chamberlains, whom he had appointed to attend upon her, &c.] Which, according to the Targum, was Daniel[a]; but it is not likely that Daniel ſhould have lived to this time; however, this officer was not only entruſted with the care of the queen by the king, but ſhe had alſo an high opinion of him, and therefore employed him in this affair: and gave a commandment to Mordecai, to know what it was, and why it was; what was the reaſon of his appearing in ſackcloth, and why he did not receive the cloaths ſhe ſent him.

℣. 6. So Hatach went forth to Mordecai, unto the ſtreet of the city, &c.] Where he was, in a public manner, expreſſing his grief and ſorrow: which was before the king's gate; that led to the royal palace.

℣. 7. And Mordecai told him of all that had happened unto him, &c.] How that, for refuſing to reverence Haman, he was incenſed againſt him, and againſt all the Jews for his ſake; and had vowed revenge on them, and had formed a ſcheme for the ruin of them: and of the ſum of money that Haman had promiſed to pay to the king's treaſuries for the Jews, to deſtroy them; the 10,000 talents of ſilver he propoſed to pay into the king's exchequer in lieu of the Jews tribute; which Mordecai obſerves, to ſhew how bent he was upon the deſtruction of the Jews, and cared not what it coſt him to gain his point; and perhaps Mordecai as yet might not know that the king had remitted it.

℣. 8. Alſo he gave him the copy of the writing of the decree that was given at Shuſhan to deſtroy them, &c.] Which had now been publiſhed in the city; by which means Mordecai had had a ſight of it, and had tranſcribed it; ſee ch. iii. 14. to ſhew it unto Eſther, and to declare it unto her; what Haman intended againſt the people of the Jews; as the Targum adds: and to charge her; in his name; whoſe charges ſhe had always regarded, both before and ſince ſhe was queen; or in the name of God: that ſhe ſhould go in unto the king to make ſupplication unto him, and to make requeſt before him for her people; ſignifying there was a neceſſity of doing it ſpeedily, and of urging her requeſt with great earneſtneſs and importunity, ſince it was not the life of a ſingle perſon, but the lives of a body of people, and her own, that lay at ſtake.

℣. 9. And Hatach came and told Eſther the words of Mordecai.] Both the caſe of the Jews, and the cauſe of it, and what he would have her do at this critical juncture.

℣. 10. Again Eſther ſpake unto Hatach, &c.] For there was no other way of correſponding and converſing, but by an eunuch; the wives of kings being altogether under their watch and care: and gave him commandment unto Mordecai; to go unto him, and what he ſhould ſay to him from her, which is as follows:

℣. 11. All the king's ſervants and the people of the king's provinces do know, &c.] Not only the princes and courtiers, but all the king's ſubjects, the meaneſt of them; there is ſcarce a perſon throughout the whole empire, to whom the following law is not known; this is ſaid, to ſhew how notorious it was: that whoſoever, whether man or woman, ſhall come unto the king into the inner court, who is not called, there is one law of his to put him to death; according to the former Targum, Haman got this law to be made now, to prevent any application to the king about this affair; but then it would not have been ſo univerſally known as before declared; and it appears that there was ſuch a law among the Medes, made by Dejoces, that none ſhould go into the king's preſence, but all ſhould be done by meſſengers[b]; and this was altered among the Perſians, for the ſeven princes that ſlew Smerdis made an agreement, that whoever of them was choſen king, the reſt ſhould have the liberty of going unto him when they pleaſed, without a meſſenger to introduce them[c]; it ſeems by this account it was death to go into the inner parlour, where the king uſually was, without leave, or being called; this was made both for the king's ſafety, and for awe and reverence reverence of his majesty, and to prevent any insinuations into him by ill designing persons: except such to whom the king shall hold out the golden sceptre, that he may live; which, whether he would or no, was very precarious; so that a person ran a great risque to go in uncalled: but I have not been called to go in unto the king these thirty days; which looked as if the king had not that fond affection for her he formerly had; and therefore there was greater danger in going in to him uncalled, and the less hope of success.

℣. 12. And they told to Mordecai Esther's words.] The messengers she sent to him.

℣. 13. Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, &c.] Gave in charge to the messengers what they should say to Esther from him, by way of reply: Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews; signifying that her being queen, and in the king's palace, would be no protection to her; and she would be no safer there than the Jews elsewhere, since they had no greater enemies any where than in the king's court; and it was or would be known of what nation she was, and therefore must not expect to escape the fury of the enemy.

℣. 14. For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, &c.] And will not speak to the king in favour of the Jews, because of the danger she would be exposed to in doing it: then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; Mordecai seemed confident of it, that by some means or another the Jews would be delivered; if not through the intercession of Esther, yet from some other quarter, or by some other hand: but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed; for such neglect of the people of God when in distress, want of pity to them, and not exerting herself as she might in their behalf; so that seeing she and her family must perish, it was better to perish in a good cause than in a bad one: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this? he intimates that he believed that the providence of God had raised her to that dignity, that she might be an instrument of saving his people in the time of their distress; and this he said to encourage her to make the experiment.

℣. 15. Then Esther bade them return Mordecai this answer,] which follows, and was sent by the messengers she sent the above to him.

℣. 16. Go, gather together all the Jews that are present in Shushan, &c.] To acquaint them with what follows; but not to continue in a body together, which might cause suspicion of an ill design in them; according to the latter Targum, 12,000 chosen priests were found in it; but that must be an exaggeration of their number; it can hardly be thought there were so many Jews in all there: and fast ye for me; that is, pray for her, that she might have courage to go in to the king, and meet with success; for prayer was the principal thing, fasting only an accessary to it, and as fitting for it, and expressive of affliction and humiliation of soul: and neither eat nor drink three days, night nor day; it was to be a continued fast unto the third day; as Aben-ezra interprets it, they were not to eat at evening, but fast two whole days, and two whole nights, until the third day came, on which Esther went in to the king, ch. v. 1. I also and my maidens will fast likewise; in the same manner, and as long; these maids of honour were either proselytes, perhaps of her making, or Jewish ladies, she being allowed by the king to choose whom she pleased: and so will I go in unto the king, which is not according to the law; or afterwards, or and then[d], when they, and she and her maids, had fasted and prayed so long, then she was determined in the strength of the Lord to go into the king's presence with her petition, though it was contrary to law: and if I perish, I perish; signifying, that she readily and cheerfully risqued her life for the good of her people; and if such was the pleasure of God, that she should lose it, she was content, and acquiesced in his will, leaving herself entirely in his hands, to dispose of her as he thought fit.

℣. 17. So Mordecai went his way, &c.] About the business he was directed to; the word used having sometimes the signification of passing over or transgressing, Jarchi interprets it of Mordecai's transgressing the command, by fasting on a festival; the letter being written on the 13th of Nisan, ch. iii. 12. the next day was the passover, on which he supposes the fast began; and the three days were, the 14th, 15, and 16th of the month, and belonged to the feast of the passover and of unleavened bread; so the Targum: and did according to all that Esther had commanded him; got the Jews together, and kept a fast three days; according to the Midrash[e], they were the 13th, 14th, and 15th of Nisan.

CHAP. V.

THIS chapter gives an account of Esther's going in to the king, and of his holding out the golden sceptre to her, on which she invited him and Haman to a banquet of wine that day, and to another the next day, ℣. 1.—8. which highly delighted Haman; and he went to his house and family with great joy, and yet chagrined at Mordecai's not bowing to him; wherefore, at the advice of his wife and friends, he erected a gallows to hang him upon, proposing to get a grant for it from the king the next day; ℣. 9—14.

℣. 1. Now it came to pass on the third day, &c.] Of the fast; though the former Targum paraphrases it the third day of the passover, the 16th of Nisan, see the note on ch. iv. 17. though it is probable this was nearer the time fixed for the destruction of the Jews, see ch. viii. 9. yet the Jews have fixed the fast of Esther on that very day, the 13th of Adar[f]: that Esther put on her royal apparel; in order to go in to the king, and appear before him; which to do in a mournful habit, such as she had on when fasting, was not proper; for then she put off her crown royal, as is intimated in the additions to the book of Esther, ch. xix. 11. and as was usual for princes to do in times of mourning[g]; but now she ſhe put it on, as both Ben Gorion[h] and the latter Targum affirm: and ſtood in the inner court of the king's houſe, over againſt the king's houſe; into which none might go but ſuch as were called; yet Eſther being queen, the keepers of the door could not forbid her, as Aben Ezra obſerves: and the king ſat upon his royal throne, in the royal houſe, over againſt the gate of the houſe; ſo that he could ſee whoever came in at it, into the inner court.

℣. 2. And it was ſo when the king ſaw Eſther the queen ſtanding in the court, that ſhe obtained favour in his ſight, &c.] Which no doubt was of God, who has the hearts of kings in his hand, and turns them as he pleaſes; the king had not called her for thirty days paſt, or more, which ſhewed coolneſs of affection to her, and now ſhe tranſgreſſed a law by coming uncalled for, which might have provoked his wrath; and for a leſſer matter than this was Vaſhti divorced; but yet his mind was inclined to her, and ſhe appeared very amiable and pleaſing to him: and the king held out to Eſther the golden ſceptre that was in his hand; as a token of his well pleaſedneſs in her, and acceptance of her; and that no harm ſhould come to her for tranſgreſſing the law: So Eſther drew near, and touched the top of the ſceptre; as acknowledging his kindneſs, and her thankfulneſs for it, as well as ſubjection and obedience to him.

℣. 3. Then ſaid the king unto her, What wilt thou, queen Eſther? &c.] He ſuppoſed ſhe had ſome buſineſs with him, ſome ſuit to make to him, by her coming in in this manner: and what is thy requeſt? ſignifying he was ready to grant it, be it what it would: it ſhall be even given thee to the half of the kingdom; as it was uſual with the Perſian kings to give their wives cities for certain purpoſes, ſee the note on ch. ii. 18. here Ahaſuerus, out of his great affection to Eſther, offers half of his dominions, his 127 provinces; meaning that he would grant her any thing, and every thing that was reaſonable, and even magnificent; it is an hyperbolical and courtly way of ſpeaking, and which has been uſed in after times, and in other countries; ſee Mark, vi. 23.

℣. 4. And Eſther anſwered, If it ſeem good unto the king, &c.] She humbly ſubmits it to his pleaſure, ſuggeſting it would be exceeding grateful to her, could it be granted: let the king and Haman come this day unto the banquet that I have prepared for him; for the king; and ſuppoſing it would be acceptable to him, and the rather engage him to come to it, ſhe invited his favourite; and chiefly, that ſhe might have an opportunity of accuſing him before the king to his face, and when alone.

℣. 5. Then the king ſaid, Cauſe Haman to make haſte, that he may do as Eſther hath ſaid, &c.] That is, he ordered ſome of his ſervants to make haſte and acquaint Haman with the queen's invitation, and to preſs him to make haſte to comply with it: ſo the king and Haman came to the banquet that Eſther had prepared; which was wiſely done, to prepare for what ſhe had to ſay to the king, when chearful with wine, and when ſhe had her adverſary with him alone.

℣. 6. And the king ſaid unto Eſther at the banquet of wine, &c.] For ſuch it ſeems the banquet was ſhe prepared; it was not properly a meal, neither dinner nor ſupper, but a drinking-bout; or however, it was at that part of the banquet in which wine was drank, that the king accoſted Eſther, when he began to be chearful with it. The Perſians at their meals had two courſes; the firſt conſiſted of meats, &c. at which they drank water, the other of fruits, when they drank wine; Ælianus[i] ſays, the Perſians, after they are filled with food, indulge themſelves in drinking wine: What is thy petition? and it ſhall be granted thee: and what is thy requeſt? even to the half of the kingdom it ſhall be performed; by which it appears he retained the ſame affection for Eſther, and the ſame diſpoſition to ſhew her kindneſs. See ℣. 3.

℣. 7. Then anſwered Eſther and ſaid, My petition and my requeſt is;] What ſhe ſhould for the preſent make; the principal one ſhe had to aſk, for wiſe reaſons, ſhe ſtill deferred.

℣. 8 If I have found favour in the ſight of the king, &c.] Or, ſeeing ſhe had; for it was a clear caſe ſhe had, both by his holding out the golden ſceptre to her, and by accepting her invitation to her banquet: and if it pleaſe the king to grant my petition, and to perform my requeſt; as he had been ſo gracious as to promiſe in ſuch a large and liberal manner as before expreſſed: let the king and Haman come to the banquet that I ſhall prepare for them; the Targum ſays, in the evening; but from ℣. 12. it appears to be on the morrow; and which agrees with what follows: and I will do to-morrow as the king hath ſaid; make her petition and requeſt to him; which ſhe had deferred, partly in hope of ſtill increaſing his affection to her, and partly to prepare him to expect ſomething of moment and importance to be aſked of him. Jarchi reſtrains this to what he ſuppoſes the king had often importuned her to tell, namely, who were her people and her kindred.

℣. 9. Then went Haman forth that day, joyful, and with a glad heart, &c.] From court to his own houſe: but when Haman ſaw Mordecai in the king's gate, that he ſtood not up, nor moved for him; did not ſhew him the leaſt degree even of civil reſpect; which he refuſed to do, partly leſt it ſhould be interpreted an adoration of him, and partly becauſe it was well known to him he had formed a ſcheme for the deſtruction of him and all his people; and the rather he refuſed it to him, as Eſther was about to make interceſſion with the king to revoke his decree, of the ſucceſs of which he had no doubt; and therefore had nothing to fear from him, but treated him with the utmoſt contempt, as he deſerved: he was full of wrath againſt Mordecai; it was a ſad mortification to him, and a great allay of that joy and elation of mind on account of the favour he was in; not with the king only, but the queen alſo, as he imagined.

℣. 10. Neverthelеſs Haman reſtrained himſelf, &c.] From ſhewing any outward reſentment to Mordecai, from laying hands upon him or taking revenge on him, as being too much below him to avenge himſelf on a ſingle perſon, when the whole body of the people Mordecai belonged to would ſhortly feel the power of his hand for ſuch inſolent treatment of him: and when he came home, he ſent and called for his friends, and Zereſh his wife; who, the Targum ſays, was the daughter of Tatnai, the governor on the other ſide the river, Ezra, v. 3.

℣. 11. And Haman told them of the glory of his riches, &c.] Of the multitude of them; which he did partly in a way of oſtentation, and partly, if he could, to make his mind eaſy under the mortification he received from Mordecai; and it may be, chiefly chiefly to aggravate his rudeneſs and ill behaviour towards him, a man of ſo much wealth: and the multitude of his children; he had ten, as we learn from ch. ix. 10. but the former Targum enlarges them beyond credit, to the number of 208, beſides his ten ſons, and Shimſhai the ſcribe; ſuch were had in great eſteem with the Perſians who had many children; to ſuch the king uſed to ſend gifts annually[k]: and all the things wherein the king had promoted him; the high offices of honour and truſt he had put him into: and how he had advanced him above the princes and ſervants of the king. See ch. iii. 1.

℣. 12. Haman ſaid moreover, &c.] To all which he added, and what ſeemed to delight him moſt of all, or however was a new additional honour done him: Yea, Eſther the queen did let no man come in with the king unto the banquet that ſhe had prepared, but myſelf; which he judged was doing him ſingular honour; and, by the joint affection of the king and queen to him, he thought himſelf eſtabliſhed in his dignity and grandeur: and to morrow am I invited unto her alſo with the king; had been invited, not by a meſſenger, but by the queen herſelf, which was a double honour.

℣. 13. Yet all this availeth me nothing, &c.] Is not equal or ſufficient for me; it gives me no ſatisfaction and contentment: ſo long as I ſee Mordecai the Jew ſitting at the king's gate; not riſing up to bow unto him; this ſingle circumſtance ſpoiled all his joy and pleaſure.

℣. 14. Then ſaid Zereſh his wife, and all his friends unto him, &c.] His wife very probably firſt moved it, and all his friends preſent approved of it and united in it: Let a gallows be made of 50 cubits high; that the perſon hanged thereon might be ſeen at a diſtance, and ſo be a greater reproach to him, and a terror to others, to take care they were not guilty of the ſame offence: Cartalo was ordered by his father to be fixed to the higheſt croſs in the ſight of the city[l]; and it was uſual for croſſes to be erected very high[m], both for that purpoſe, and for greater infamy and diſgrace[n]: and to-morrow ſpeak thou unto the king that Mordecai may be hanged thereon; get a grant from him for it; of which they made no doubt, ſince Haman had ſuch an intereſt in him, and had already obtained an order to deſtroy all Jews in his dominions: then go thou in merrily with the king unto the banquet; eaſed of the burden of his mind, and honoured to be a gueſt with the royal pair: and the thing pleaſed Haman, and he cauſed the gallows to be made; but it was for himſelf, as it proved in the iſſue. See ch. vii. 10.

CHAP. VI.

AHASUERUS not being able to ſleep in the night, ordered the book of records to be brought and read to him, where a fact of Mordecai's was regiſtred, and upon enquiry, it appeared that nothing had been done to him for it, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and Haman being in the outward court, was ordered in, with whom the king conſulted what ſhould be done to the man the king delighted to honour; to which Haman gave anſwer, and was bid to do as he ſaid, ℣. 4—10. which he did, but went home after it confounded and ſorrowful, and told his mournful caſe to his wife and friends, who plainly foreſaw his downfal, ℣. 11—14.

℣. 1. On that night could not the king ſleep, &c.] The night after he had been at Eſther's banquet, which it might be thought would rather have cauſed ſleep; and therefore Jarchi calls it a miracle; and no doubt it was owing to the over-ruling providence of God, and not to anxious thoughts about his neglect of Eſther ſo long, nor what ſhould be her requeſt to him, nor jealouſy of any amorous intrigue with Haman, nor of any conſpiracy of theirs againſt his life: and he commanded to bring the book of records of the chronicles; the diaries or journal, in which memorable facts were recorded; this he did to divert himſelf, and paſs away time; though here alſo the providence of God was ſpecially concerned; for otherwiſe he might have ſent for any of his wives and concubines, or ſinging men and women, to have diverted him: and they were read before the king; until the morning, until it was time to riſe, as appears by what follows.

℣. 2. And it was found written, &c.] Upon reading, and in which there was alſo a peculiar hand of providence, directing to the reading of that part of them, in which the affair of Mordecai was regiſtered; and if what the latter Targum ſays is true, it was the more remarkable, that when Shimſhai the ſcribe, who was ordered to bring the book and read, and who, according to the former Targum, was Haman's ſon, ſeeing what was recorded of Mordecai, turned over the leaves of the book, being unwilling to read it; but the leaves rolled back again, and he was obliged to read it: that Mordecai had told of Bigthana and Tereſh, two of the king's chamberlains, the keepers of the door, who ſought to lay hand on the king Ahaſuerus; ſee ch. ii. 21. and it was uſual in ſuch diaries to record the names of perſons, who, by any actions, had deſerved well of the king, that they might be rewarded as there was an opportunity for it; and ſuch, in the Perſian language, were called Oroſangæ, as Herodotus relates [o].

℣. 3. And the king ſaid, What honour and dignity hath been done to Mordecai for this? &c.] He judged it an action worthy of regard, and what ought to be rewarded, as it was the ſaving of his life; but had forgot whether any royal favour had been ſhewn to the perſon for it: then ſaid the king's ſervants that miniſtred unto him; the lords of his bed-chamber then in waiting: there is nothing done for him; not on that account, nothing more than what he had; he had an office at court before, but was not advanced to any thing higher on this account.

℣. 4. And the king ſaid, Who is in the court, &c.] Being in haſte to confer ſome honour on Mordecai for what he had done: now Haman was come into the outward court of the king's houſe; tho' it was early in the morning, being eager to get to the ſpeech of the king before he was engaged in any buſineſs, to obtain a grant from him: to hang Mordecai on the gallows that he had prepared for him; of which he made no doubt of having, and therefore had prepared for it.

℣. 5. And the king's ſervants ſaid unto him, Behold, hold, Haman ſtandeth in the court, &c.] In the outward court; for into the inward court none might enter without being called, for which he was waiting: and the king ſaid, Let him come in; into his bed-chamber; and it was of God, no doubt, that Haman ſhould be on the ſpot at this very time, when the king was in the humour to do honour to Mordecai, and by him.

℣. 6. So Haman came in, &c.] But was prevented ſpeaking to the king about the buſineſs he came upon by the following ſpeech of the king: What ſhall be done unto the man whom the king delighteth to honour? he mentions not the name of any man, that he might the more freely, and unbiaſſedly, and diſintereſtedly give his advice; nor might the king know of any reſentment of Haman to Mordecai: (Now Haman thought in his heart, To whom would the king delight to do honour more than to myſelf?) who had been advanced above all the princes and nobles of the realm, and was now in ſuch high honour both with the king and queen, with whom he was to be at a banquet that day; and he might conclude, that by putting this queſtion to him, he could have in view none but himſelf: Aben Ezra obſerves, that ſome from hence gather, that this book was written by the ſpirit of prophecy, becauſe none could know the thoughts of the heart but God; but though he believes it to be written by the Holy Ghoſt, yet, as he obſerves, Haman might diſcloſe this thought of his heart to his friends afterwards.

℣. 7. And Haman anſwered the king, &c.] At once, being very prompt to ſuggeſt the honours he hoped to have done to himſelf: for the man whom the king delighteth to honour; let the following things be done.

℣. 8. Let the royal apparel be brought which the king uſeth to wear, &c.] Not a whole ſuit of clothes, but a ſingle garment; the purple robe, as both the Targums, ſuch as kings wore; that which Cyrus appeared in public in was half purple, and half white, and no other perſon beſides might wear ſuch an one [p]; it was a capital crime with the Perſians to wear any of the king's apparel; Trebazus, an intimate of Artaxerxes, having begged an old gown of him, it was granted, on condition that he would not wear it, it being contrary to the laws of Perſia; but he, regardleſs of the order, appeared in it at court; which affront to the king was ſo reſented by the Perſians, that they were for puniſhing him rigorouſly, according to the law, had not Artaxerxes declared, that he had ordered him to appear in that dreſs as his fool [q]; hence Artabanus, though uncle to Xerxes, was very unwilling to obey his orders, to put on his royal robes, ſit on his throne, and ſleep on his bed [r]; ſo that this was a daring propoſal in Haman, which he would never have ventured to have made, had it not been for the great confidence he had in the king's favour: and the horſe that the king rideth upon; the kings of Perſia, as Herodotus [s] relates, had horſes peculiar to them, and thoſe were Niſæan horſes, which were brought from Armenia, as Strabo ſays [t], and were remarkable for their beauty [u]; and if the ſame law obtained in Perſia as did in Judea, no man might ride on the king's horſe any more than ſit on his throne, or hold his ſceptre [w]; and perhaps this horſe here was not propoſed for the perſon to ride on, but to be led in ſtate before him; and though it is afterwards ſaid that Mordecai rode on horſeback, yet it might not be on the king's horſe, which might be only led; and what follows ſeems to confirm it: and the crown royal which is ſet upon his head; or, let it be ſet, &c. not on the head of the man, but on the head of the horſe; and ſo Aben Ezra; and which ſenſe is countenanced by the Targum, and by the Syriac verſion, and is approved of by Vatablus and De Dieu; and which the order of the words require, the horſe being the immediate antecedent; and no mention is made of the crown afterwards, as ſet on the head of Mordecai; nor would Haman have dared to adviſe to that, nor could it be granted; but this was what was wont to be done, to put the crown royal on the head of a horſe led in ſtate; and this we are aſſured was a cuſtom in Perſia [x], as it is with the Ethiopians to this day [y]; and ſo with the Romans, horſes drawing triumphal chariots were crowned [z]; which Tertullian calls [a] public horſes with their crowns.

℣. 9. And let this apparel and horſe be delivered to the hand of one of the king's moſt noble princes, &c.] The one, that they may array the man withal whom the king delighteth to honour; and the other to be led in ſtate before him: and bring him on horſeback through the ſtreet of the city; on another horſe, that all might ſee what honour was done him: and proclaim before him; as before Joſeph, when advanced next to Pharaoh, Gen. xli. 43. this was not to be done by an herald, but by a nobleman, to whom the apparel and horſe were to be delivered, and was done by Haman, ℣. 11. Thus ſhall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour; theſe were the words ſaid in the proclamation, ſignifying this was the man the king delighted to honour, and this the manner in which he would have it done.

℣. 10. Then the king ſaid to Haman, Make haſte, &c.] And without delay go into the royal treaſury, or wardrobe, as the Targum adds: and take the apparel; the royal robe, the purple one, or one of the precious purple robes; and then, as the ſame Targum, go to the king's ſtable, and take thence the king's horſe, that ſtands in the chief place in the ſtable, whoſe name is Shiphregaz; but how the Targumiſt came by the name of it, I know not; however, it was not unuſual for kings to give a name to their favourite horſe, as Alexander the great did to his called Bucephalus, and even for all kings of Perſia, as Darius Hyſtaſpis [b]: as thou haſt ſaid, and do even ſo to Mordecai the Jew, that ſitteth at the king's gate; the perſon he meant this honour for he deſcribes by name, by nation, and by office, that there might be no miſtake: let nothing fail of all that thou haſt ſpoken; the king objected not to any thing that had been propoſed, and inſiſted on it, that every thing be done punctually by Haman as he had adviſed, and from which he could not with honour recede; though nothing could be more mortifying to him to do, to a man he came to court to get a grant to hang on a gallows he had prepared.

℣. 11. Then took Haman the apparel, and the horſe, &c.] The one out of the wardrobe, the other out of the ſtable, and the crown alſo no doubt, though no mention is made of it, ſince the king king made no objection to it, yea, commanded that nothing fail of what had been ſpoken; but this was included in the pomp and ſtate of the led horſe: and brought him on horſeback through the ſtreet of the city; the moſt grand and public part of it, thus arrayed, and in this ſtate: and proclaimed before him, Thus ſhall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour; ſee the note on ℣. 9.

℣. 12. And Mordecai came again to the king's gate, &c.] To attend his poſt and office at court; which confirms what has been already hinted, that he was in ſome office in the court, which this phraſe is expreſſive of, and not a porter at the gate; for it is not probable he ſhould return to ſuch a ſtation, after ſo much honour had been done him; and much leſs that he returned to his ſackcloth and faſting, as Jarchi and the former Targum; ſince he might reaſonably conclude things were taking a turn in his favour, and that of his people; though as yet he knew not what ſucceſs Eſther had had, to wait for which he returned to court: but Haman haſted to his houſe; puſhed forward as faſt as he could: mourning; at his ſad diſappointment: and having his head covered; through grief and ſorrow, confuſion and ſhame; ſo Demoſthenes, being hiſſed, went home with his head covered [c], as confounded and aſhamed to be ſeen [d].

℣. 13. And Haman told Zereſh his wife, and all his friends, every thing that had befallen him, &c.] How he was prevented ſpeaking to the king on the errand he went; inſtead of which, he had the mortification of being obliged to do the honour to Mordecai which he thought would never have been given to any but himſelf, and ſo related the whole affair as above: then ſaid his wiſe men; before called his friends; perhaps they were magicians and ſooth-ſayers he kept in his houſe, to adviſe with about the proper methods and times of advancing himſelf, and deſtroying his enemies: and Zereſh his wife unto him; who joined with the wiſe men in giving her opinion, and who ſet up for a knowing woman, and of whom Haman thought highly: if Mordecai be of the ſeed of the Jews; as it was ſaid he was; and therefore Haman had vowed and plotted revenge on the people of the Jews for his ſake: before whom thou haſt begun to fall; as he did, by being obliged to execute the king's will in doing him ſo much honour: thou ſhalt not prevail againſt him; to get him hanged, or his people deſtroyed, though he had prepared a gallows for the one, and had got an edict for the other: but ſhalt ſurely fall before him; which might be concluded from his being ſet above him, who would not fail of uſing his power and intereſt to cruſh him, who had ſhewed himſelf to be ſuch an implacable enemy to him; or they might have ſome knowledge of the hiſtory of the Jews, and of what wonderful things God often did for them, in defeating the deſigns of their enemies, and in raiſing them up from a low to an high eſtate.

℣. 14. And while they were yet talking with him, &c.] About theſe things, and giving their opinion of the iſſue of them, upon the preſent appearance of them: came the king's chamberlains, and haſted to bring Haman unto the banquet that Eſther had prepared; the time appointed for it being very near, or quite up, and Haman being backward and dilatory, having no ſtomach to go to it, and perhaps fearing worſe things were coming upon him he ſhould hear of there.

CHAP. VII.

ESTHER, being ſolicited by the king to tell him her petition, aſks for her life and the lives of her people, who were ſold to be deſtroyed, ℣. 1—4. the king, amazed at her requeſt, enquires who was the perſon that dared to do ſo vile a thing; and was told by her, it was Haman there preſent, ℣. 5, 6. on which the king went out into the garden in wrath, and returning, found Haman on Eſther's bed, which ſtill more incenſed him; and being told that Haman had prepared a gallows for Mordecai, the king ordered that he himſelf ſhould be hanged upon it, which was done accordingly, ℣. 7—10.

℣. 1. So the king and Haman came to banquet with Eſther the queen.] Or, to drink with her [e], that is, wine; for in the next verſe it is called a banquet of wine; ſo they did according to the invitation the queen had given them, ch. v. 8.

℣. 2. And the king ſaid again to Eſther on the ſecond day, at the banquet of wine, &c.] This was the third time he put the following queſtion to her, being very deſirous of knowing what ſhe had to aſk of him; and it was of God that this was kept upon his mind, and he was moved to ſolicit her petition, or otherwiſe it would not have been ſo eaſy for her to have introduced it: What is thy petition, queen Eſther? and it ſhall be granted thee: and what is thy requeſt? and it ſhall be performed, even to the half of my kingdom; ſee ch. v. 3. 6.

℣. 3. Then Eſther the queen anſwered and ſaid, &c.] Not rolling herſelf at the king's knees, as Severus [f] writes; but rather, as the former Targum, lifting up her eyes to heaven, and perhaps putting up a ſecret ejaculation for direction and ſucceſs: if I have found favour in thy ſight, O king; as ſhe certainly had heretofore, and even now: and if it pleaſe the king, let my life be given me at my petition; not riches, nor honour, nor any place, or poſt at court, or in any of the king's dominions for any friend of her's, was her petition; but for her own life, that that might not be taken away, which was included in the grant the king had made to Haman, though ignorantly, to ſlay all the Jews, ſhe being one of them: and my people at my requeſt; that is, the lives of her people alſo, that was her requeſt; her own life and her people's were all ſhe had to aſk.

℣. 4. For we are ſold, I and my people, to be deſtroyed, to be ſlain, and to periſh, &c.] She makes uſe of theſe ſeveral words, to expreſs the utter deſtruction of her and her people, without any exception; not only the more to impreſs the king's mind with it, but ſhe has reſpect to the preciſe words of the the decree, ch. iii. 13. as ſhe has alſo to the 10,000 talents of ſilver Haman offered to pay the king for the grant of it, when ſhe ſays, we are ſold, or delivered to be deſtroyed: but if we had been ſold for bond-men, and bond-women, I had held my tongue; ſhould never have aſked for deliverance from bondage, but have patiently ſubmitted to it, however unreaſonable, unjuſt, and afflictive it would have been; becauſe it might have been borne, and there might be hope of deliverance from it at one time or another; though it is ſaid, ſlaves with the Perſians were never made free [g]; but that being the caſe, would not have been ſo great a loſs to the king, who would have reaped ſome advantage by their ſervitude; whereas, by the death of them, he muſt ſuſtain a loſs which the enemy was not equal to, and which he could not compenſate with all his riches; which, according to Ben Melech, is the ſenſe of the next clauſe: although the enemy could not countervail the king's damage; or, for the enemy cannot, &c. the 10,000 talents offered by him, and all the riches that he has, are not an equivalent to the loſs the king would ſuſtain by the death of ſuch a multitude of people, from whom he received ſo large a tribute; but this the enemy regarded not; and ſo Jarchi interprets it, the enemy took no care of, or was concerned about the king's damage; but there is another ſenſe, which Aben Ezra mentions, and is followed by ſome learned men, who take the word for enemy to ſignify diſtreſs, trouble, and anguiſh, as in Pſ. iv. 1. and cxix. 143. and read the words, for this diſtreſs would not be reckoned the king's damage [h], or loſs; though it would have been a diſtreſs to the Jews to have been ſold for ſlaves, yet the loſs to the king would not be ſo great as their death, ſince he would receive benefit by their ſervice.

℣. 5. Then the king Ahaſuerus anſwered and ſaid unto Eſther the queen, &c.] The words in the original text lie thus, and the king Ahaſuerus ſaid, and he ſaid to Eſther the queen; which doubling of the word does not ſignify, as Jarchi ſuggeſts, that before he ſpoke to her by a meſſenger, or middle perſon, but now he knew ſhe was of a royal family, he ſpoke to her himſelf; but it is expreſſive of the ruffle of his mind, and the wrath and fury he was in, that he ſaid it again and again, with a ſtern countenance and great vehemence of ſpeech: who is he? and where is he? who is the man? and where does he live? that durſt preſume in his heart to do ſo; that has boldneſs, impudence, and courage enough to perpetrate ſo vile an action: or that has filled his heart [i]; the devil no doubt filled his heart to do it, ſee Acts v. 3. but the king had either forgot the decree he had granted, and the countenance he had given him to execute it; or if he remembred it, he was now enraged that he ſhould be drawn in to ſuch an action by him; and perhaps till now was ignorant of Eſther's deſcent, and knew not that ſhe would be involved in the decree.

℣. 6. And Eſther ſaid, The adverſary and enemy is this wicked Haman, &c.] Who was not only an enemy to her and her people, but an adverſary to the king, by adviſing and perſuading him to that which was to the loſs of his revenues, as well as of his reputation; alſo, ſhe pointed at him, and gave him his juſt character; her charge of wickedneſs upon him, as it was true, it was honourably made to his face before the king, of which, if he could, he had the opportunity of exculpating himſelf: then Haman was afraid before the king and the queen; gave viſible ſigns of his confuſion, conſternation, and trouble of mind, by the fall of his countenance, his pale looks, his trembling limbs, and quivering lips, being ſtruck dumb, and not able to ſpeak one word for himſelf.

℣. 7. And the king ariſing from the banquet of wine in his wrath, went into the palace-garden, &c.] Not being able to bear the ſight of Haman, who had done ſuch an injury both to himſelf and to the queen; as alſo that his wrath might ſubſide, and he become more compoſed and ſedate, and be able coolly to deliberate what was fitting to be done in the preſent caſe: and Haman ſtood up to make requeſt for his life to Eſther the queen; hoping that her tender heart might be wrought upon to ſhew mercy to him, and be prevailed on to intreat the king to ſpare his life; and this requeſt he made in the moſt ſubmiſſive manner: for he ſaw that there was evil determined againſt him by the king; he perceived it both by the king's countenance, by the rage he went out in, and by the threatning words which he very probably uttered as he went out.

℣. 8. Then the king returned out of the palace-garden, into the place of the banquet of wine, &c.] Being a little cooler, and more compoſed in his mind, ſee ch. i. 5. and Haman was fallen upon the bed whereon Eſther was; not the bed ſhe lay on to ſleep in the night; (for it cannot be thought that it was a bed-chamber in which the banquet was) but on the bed or couch on which ſhe ſat or reclined at the banquet, as was the cuſtom in the eaſtern countries; now, by, or near this, as the word may be rendered, Haman fell down, even at the feet of the queen, begging for mercy; and ſome think he might embrace her feet or knees, as was the cuſtom of the Greeks and Romans as they were ſupplicating [k]; and ſo it ſeems to have been with the Jews, ſee 2 Kings iv. 27. and being in this poſture, it might appear the more indecent, and give the king an opportunity to ſay as follows: then ſaid the king, Will he force the queen alſo before me in the houſe? that is, raviſh her; not that he really thought ſo; it was not a time nor place for ſuch an action; nor can it be thought that Haman, in ſuch terror and confuſion he was in, could be ſo diſpoſed; and beſides there were others preſent, as the next clauſe ſhews: but this he ſaid, putting the worſt conſtruction on his actions, and plainly declaring his opinion of him, that he thought him a man capable of committing the vileſt of crimes, and that his ſupplications were not to be regarded: as the word went out of the king's mouth, they covered Haman's face; the ſervants preſent, as a man unworthy to ſee the light; and they took what the king ſaid to amount to a ſentence of condemnation, and that it was his will he ſhould die; and they covered his face, as condemned malefactors uſed to be; which was a cuſtom among the Greeks and Romans, of which many inſtances may be given [l]; though Aben Ezra ſays, it was the cuſtom of the kings of Perſia, that their ſervants covered the face of him the king was angry with, that he might not ſee his face any more, which was well known in the Perſian writings.

℣. 9. And Harbonah, one of the chamberlains, ſaid before the king, &c.] One of the ſeven chamberlains, ſee ch. i. 10. his name, with Joſephus [y], is Sabouchadas: behold alſo the gallows 50 cubits high, which Haman had made for Mordecai, who had ſpoken good for the king, ſtandeth in the houſe of Haman; this man perhaps had ſeen it there, when he went with others to fetch Haman to the banquet, ch. vi. 14. the ſin of Haman is aggravated by preparing a gallows for a man before he was accuſed to the king, or condemned, or had a grant for his execution, and for a man that had well deſerved of the king for diſcovering a conſpiracy againſt him, and whom now the king had delighted to honour: then the king ſaid, Hang him thereon; immediately, being ready prepared; the king's word was enough, being a ſovereign and tyrannical prince.

℣. 10. So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai, &c.] Not within his houſe, ℣. 9. but more probably in his court-yard, in the ſight of his family and friends; or it may be, the gallows was taken from thence, and ſet up without the city, where he was hanged; for ſo 'tis ſaid in the additions of the book of Eſther, ch. xvi. 18. that he was hanged without the gates of Shuſhan, ſee Pſ. vii. 15, 16. then was the king's wrath pacified; having inflicted puniſhment on ſuch a wicked counſellor of his, and the contriver of ſuch miſchief.

CHAP. VIII.

THIS chapter relates the gifts Ahaſuerus gave to Eſther and Mordecai, ℣. 1, 2. the ſuit Eſther made to him to reverſe the letters for the deſtruction of the Jews, ℣. 3—6. which, though it could not be formally granted, was in effect done by letters ſent to the Jews, giving them power to riſe in their own defence, and ſlay their enemies, ℣. 7—14. the conſequence of which, and the advancement of Mordecai, were matter of great joy to the Jews, ℣. 15, 16, 17.

℣. 1. On that day did the king Ahaſuerus give the houſe of Haman the Jews enemy, unto Eſther the queen, &c.] That and all the goods in it, and eſtate belonging to it; which being confiſcated to the king, he gave to Eſther, who would have been the ſufferer had his ſcheme taken place; ſo the Targum adds, "and the men of his houſe, and all his treaſures, and all his riches:" and Mordecai came before the king; was introduced into his preſence, became one of his privy counſellors, one of thoſe that ſaw the king's face, and ſat firſt in the kingdom, ch. i. 14. for Eſther had told what he was unto her; what relation he ſtood in to her; her uncle, according to the Vulgate Latin verſion, and ſo Aben Ezra and Joſephus; but wrongly, for ſhe was his uncle's daughter; ſo that they were brother's children, or own couſins, ſee ch. ii. 7.

℣. 2. And the king took off his ring which he had taken from Haman, and gave it unto Mordecai, &c.] Which, with the Perſians, was a token of the ſtrongeſt affection and ſtricteſt friendſhip [z]; the Targum calls it his ſignatory ring, that with which he ſigned laws, edicts, letters, patents, &c. and ſo hereby made him keeper of the ſeals: and Eſther ſet Mordecai over the houſe of Haman; appointed him her ſteward of the eſtate of Haman, the king had given her.

℣. 3. And Eſther ſpake yet again before the king, &c.] Went into his preſence, without being called for as before, with a new petition: and fell down at his feet, and beſought him with tears; the more to work upon his affections, and move him to grant her requeſt; which ſhe might be the more encouraged to hope for, through the ſucceſs ſhe had already had: to put away the miſchief of Haman the Agagite, and his device that he had deviſed againſt the Jews; to revoke, aboliſh, and make void a miſchievous ſcheme Haman had deviſed againſt the Jews, to root out the whole nation of them in the Perſian empire.

℣. 4. Then the king held out the golden ſcepter towards Eſther, &c.] As a token that ſhe had not incurred his diſpleaſure by coming into his preſence without leave, and that ſhe was admitted to ſpeak and make her requeſt; ſee ch. v. 2, 3. ſo Eſther aroſe and ſtood before the king; ſhe roſe from the ground on which ſhe lay proſtrate, and ſtood upon her feet, in an humble manner to make her ſpeech, and preſent her petition to the king.

℣. 5. And ſaid, if it pleaſe the king, and if I have found favour in his ſight, and the thing ſeem right before the king, and I be pleaſing in his eyes, &c.] This heap of phraſes, which ſignify much the ſame thing, are uſed to work upon the king's affections, and to ſhew how ſubmiſſive ſhe was to his will: let it be written to reverſe the letters deviſed by Haman the ſon of Hammedatha, the Agagite, which he wrote to deſtroy the Jews which are in all the king's provinces; ſhe wiſely takes no notice of any concern the king had in them, but ſuggeſts as that ſhe looked upon them as forged by Haman, who put the king's name and ſeal to them, without his knowledge and conſent.

℣. 6. For how can I endure to ſee the evil that ſhall come unto my people, &c.] I can't bear it; it will break my heart; I ſhall die to ſee all my people maſſacred throughout the realm; the thought of it is ſhocking and ſhuddering, to ſee it intolerable: or how can I endure to ſee the deſtruction of my kindred? the ſame thing in different words, and ſomewhat more expreſs and explanative; ſhe explains the evil coming upon her people of the utter deſtruction of them, not barely an oppreſſion, but an extermination of them; and ſhe makes uſe of a word expreſſive of their relation to her, as more indearing, being her kindred; ſhe and they being as it were of the ſame family, and with whom ſhe could not but ſympathize in diſtreſs.

℣. 7. Then the king Ahaſuerus ſaid unto Eſther the queen, and to Mordecai the Jew, &c.] Who was preſent at the ſame time, either at the deſire of Eſther, or by virtue of his office, being now one of thoſe that ſaw the king's face, ℣. 1. behold I have given Eſther the houſe of Haman; ſee the note on ℣. 1. and him they have hanged upon the gallows; which he had prepared for Mordecai, ch. vii. 10. becauſe he laid his hand upon the Jews; intended to do ſo, and had prepared for it, and wrote letters ordering their deſtruction on ſuch a day; now as the king had ſhewn favour to Eſther and Mordecai, and and had punished Haman for contriving mischief against them and the Jews, which was publickly known, the people would be fearful of doing any thing against them, lest they should incur the king's displeasure; and therefore might make themselves easy about this matter; but however to give them all the satisfaction he could, he directs them to do as follows.

℣. 8. Write ye also for the Jews as it liketh you, &c.] Whatever may be thought fit and proper for their safety and security: in the king's name, and seal it with the king's ring; as the former letters were: for the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's ring, may no man reverse; which is a reason both for the writing and sealing of the present letters in this manner, and why the former could not be reversed; nor does it appear that they were, but that in virtue of them the people had power to rise and kill the Jews on the day appointed if they durst, or were so disposed; and these impowered the Jews to rise in their own defence, and kill all that made any attempts upon them, for which they had the royal authority; and these letters coming after the other, though they did not formally reverse them, which might not be done, yet rendered them ineffectual.

℣. 9. Then were the king's scribes called at that time, &c.] As they were to write the former letter, ch. iii. 12. in the 3d month, that is the month Sivan, on the 23d day thereof; which answers to part of May, and part of June; this was two months and ten days after the writing of the former letters; so long the Jews had been in distress by reason of them, and was a just rebuke upon them for not returning to their own land when they might, as well as for other sins: and it was written (according to all that Mordecai commanded) to the Jews; Mordecai dictated to the scribes, and ordered what they should write; and which were sent to the Jews in the first place, partly to ease them of their present distress, and partly that they might prepare against that time for their defence, for which they had sufficient time, it being now more than nine months to it: and to the lieutenants, and the deputies, and the rulers of the provinces, which are from India unto Ethiopia, 127 provinces; the letters were directed to the same magistrates, in the several provinces as the former, giving orders to them, that notwithstanding them they were to suffer the Jews to defend themselves, and not punish them for what should be done by them in self-defence; see ch. i. 1. and ii. 12. unto every province according to the writing thereof, and unto every people after their language, and to the Jews according to their writing, and according to their language; some provinces spoke the Persian language, and used the character of it, others Chaldee, others Syriac, &c. and wrote in the usual characters, as the Jews did in Hebrew, and in the characters of that language; and now these letters were written in the language and character of the people of the several provinces they were sent to, that they might be easily read and understood.

℣. 10. And he wrote in the king Ahasuerus his name, and sealed it with the king's ring, &c.] Which gave the letters authority, and made them irreversible, and for this Mordecai had the king's order, ℣. 8. and sent letters by posts; by runners or couriers: on horseback; that rode on horses that were racers, that ran swiftly: and riders on mules, camels, and young dromedaries; which were all different creatures, and swift ones, according to our version, especially the latter; see Jer. ii. 23. which were a kind of camels, but swifter, and would go more than 100 miles a day [a]; and as Diodorus Siculus says [b], not less than 1500 furlongs: though it may be only one sort are meant, namely mules, for the next word Abashteranim in the Persian language signifies mules [c], and so Aben Ezra interprets it, and likewise Kimchi and Ben Melech; and the last words may be rendered sons of mares, so David de Pomis; that is, such mules as are gendered by he-asses and mares; and so the same writer observes, that the word in the Arabic language signifies mares; and such mules that come from them he says are stronger than those that come from she-asses; so that the whole may be rendered to this sense, riders on mules, (which in the Persian language are called Abashteranim), namely, such as are sons of mares; and which, according to Aelianus [d] and Pliny [e] are the swiftest; though the Persians had camels swifter than are common elsewhere, called revatrie, the goer, which trot as fast as an horse can gallop [f].

℣. 11. Wherein the king granted the Jews which were in every city to gather themselves together, &c.] In some part of the city they should chuse, and remain in a body, being sufficiently armed: and to stand for their life; to defend themselves, and fight for their life, should any attack them, or attempt to take it away; in such case they might act offensively, so as to destroy, to slay, and to cause to perish all the power of the people and province that would assault them; every army of them, or as many as should join in a body to attack them, any mighty or powerful mob; and not men only, but both little ones and women, and to take the spoil of them for a prey; the same words are used, and the same power is given them as were to their enemies, ch. iii. 13. not that they made use of it to the utmost extremity, it is certain they did not in one point, in taking the spoil, ch. ix. 10, 15, 16. and since they spared that, it is highly probable they spared women and children.

℣. 12. Upon one day, in all the provinces of king Ahasuerus, namely, upon the 13th day of the 12th month, which is the month Adar;] The day appointed and fixed in the former letters for the destruction of the Jews, ch. iii. 13.

℣. 13. The copy of the writing for a commandment, to be given in every province was published to all people, &c.] A copy of the letters sent to the governors of provinces; the sum and substance of them was published by an herald, or fixed in public places, that all might know the contents thereof; and take care not to assault the Jews, as it would be to their peril: and that the Jews should be ready against that day to avenge themselves on their enemies; Abendana thinks this is to be restrained to those that were of the seed of Amalek, who were their principal enemies; but no doubt it includes all that should rise up against them.

℣. 14. So the posts that rode upon mules and camels went out, &c.] Or on the mules, which in the Persian language were called Abashteranim; see ℣. 10. being hastened and pressed on by the king's commandment; who gave them a special order to make what haste they could, that the Jews might have time to prepare prepare for their defence, and their enemies be the more intimidated: and the decree was given at Shushan the palace; the king's counsellors agreeing to it, and perhaps signing it, as they did the former; see ch. iii. 15.

℣. 15. And Mordecai went out from the presence of the king, &c.] And walked or rode about in the city to shew himself to his friends: in royal apparel of blue and white; such as the Persian kings wore, and were not allowed to any other, as Xenophon writes[g]: and with a great crown of gold; a coronet, such as princes and nobles wear; the latter Targum calls it a great golden chain, and such the eastern kings used to give to their favourites; see Dan. v. 29. and with a garment of fine linen, and purple; this must be an inner garment, since it is distinct from the royal robe before mentioned; though as the word signifies a wrap, or roll, it may design a turbant, which was a roll of linen wrapped about the head; and such was the Persian diadem, according to Curtius[h], which was of a purple colour, mixed with white; and so the Septuagint version is, and a diadem of fine linen, of a purple colour; and if so, the crown of gold was not worn on his head, nor is it likely it should be allowed, but was carried before him, see the note on ch. vi. 8. and the city of Shushan rejoiced and was glad; not only the Jews in it, but the native inhabitants of it, that had any sense of humanity, expressed their joy at the sight of Mordecai thus arrayed; that so good a man was advanced at court, and so bad a man as Haman was displaced and put to death; see Prov. xxix. 2.

℣. 16. And the Jews had light, &c.] Prosperity, as opposed to the darkness of adversity in which they had been, see Is. viii. 22. and ix. 1. 2. or lightsomeness and chearfulness of spirit, as explained by the two next words: and gladness and joy; at the good news of their deliverance, so unexpected by them; thus light is explained by gladness, Ps. xcvii. 11. and honour; among men; from their neighbours, who before were held in contempt, as a people doomed to destruction.

℣. 17. And in every province, and in every city, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, &c.] As they did to every province in the realm, and to every city in the province, where there were any Jews: the Jews had joy and gladness, a feast and a good day; they expressed their joy on this occasion by keeping a festival, which in their language is called a good day; and such an one is annually kept by them unto this day, on account of their deliverance; of which see ch. ix. 27, 28. and many of the people of the land became Jews; or were proselyted, as both the Targums and Jarchi interpret it; they embraced the Jewish religion, and submitted to the rites and ceremonies of it; were circumcised, as in the Septuagint version, and so were proselytes of righteousness; and indeed no other could they be, dwelling in their own land; many of them very probably were serious in it, observing the wonderful manner in which the Jews were delivered; wherein manifestly appeared to them the providence of God, the hand of the supreme being, and from hence concluded their God must be the true God, and they his favourite people, and their religion righteest; though others might only do it to gain the favour of Esther and Mordecai, who had now such great power and influence at court: for the fear of the Jews fell upon them; lest they should be slain by them, in virtue of this new edict.

CHAP. IX.

IN this chapter we have an account of the Jews gathering together on the day fixed for their destruction to defend themselves, which they did in all the provinces, and smote their enemies; ℣. 1—5. In Shushan the palace they slew the ten sons of Haman and 500 men on that day, ℣. 6—11. and at the request of the queen they were allowed the next day to hang up his sons, when they slew 300 men more, ℣. 12—15. in the provinces they slew 75,000, and those in one day only, and the following days they kept as a festival, but they in Shushan kept the two days following; ℣. 16—19. and which two days were established by Esther and Mordecai as festivals, to be observed as such in future ages, by the name of the days of Purim, ℣. 20—32.

℣. 1. Now in the 12th month, that is the month Adar, on the 13th day of the same, &c.] Of which see ch. iii. 13. when the king's commandment and his decree drew near to be put in execution; even both his commandments and decrees, the one impowering the enemies of the Jews on that day to destroy them, and the other impowering the Jews to act both defensively and offensively against their enemies: in the day that the enemies of the Jews hoped to have power over them; by virtue of the first decree of the king; and notwithstanding the second, they might hope to have it because of their superior numbers: though it was turned to the contrary, that the Jews had rule over them that hated them; it proved the reverse, partly through the second decree in favour of the Jews, and partly through the fear of them that fell upon their enemies; because the court was on their side, and the officers every where, and especially their God filled them with courage, and their enemies with terror.

℣. 2. The Jews gathered themselves together in their cities, throughout all the provinces of king Ahasuerus, &c.] Wherever they lived: to lay hand on such as sought their hurt; who not only threatned them what they would do on this day, but were risen up in arms in quest of them: and no man could withstand them, for the fear of them fell upon all people; when they understood that Haman was hanged, and Mordecai the Jew advanced, and that the queen herself was a Jew, and that the Jews had the royal grant to act both defensively and offensively; and no doubt but the panic was of God.

℣. 3. And all the rulers of the provinces, and the lieutenants, and the deputies, and officers of the king, blessed the Jews, &c.] Countenanced them and encouraged them, and gave them all assistance in their power; power; extolled them, as the word ſignifies, lifted them them up, and ſpoke well of them, or praiſed them, as the Targum: becauſe the fear of Mordecai was upon them; he being now chief miniſter, they might fear, if they took part with the enemies of the Jews againſt them, they might be turned out of their places.

℣. 4. For Mordecai was great in the king's houſe, &c.] Not only over Eſther's affairs, but was one of the king's counſellors, and was the chief miniſter of ſtate: and his fame went out throughout all the provinces; what a favourite he was of the king, as well as a relation of the queen, and how wiſe and juſt his adminiſtrations were: for this man Mordecai waxed greater and greater; was more and more in the king's favour, and had offices of honour and truſt heaped upon him, and increaſed both in wealth and power.

℣. 5. Thus the Jews ſmote all their enemies with the ſtroke of the ſword, and ſlaughter, and deſtruction, &c.] Some with ſwords, and others with clubs and ſtaves; as the Targum; and ſuch like ſlaughtering weapons of deſtruction: and did what they would unto thoſe that hated them; being then entirely at their will, and under their power.

℣. 6. And in Shuſhan the palace the Jews ſlew and deſtroyed 500 men.] Not in the royal palace; where it cannot be thought the Jews had ſo many enemies, or ſuch a bloody ſlaughter of them ſhould be made there; but in the city, where the palace was: and this may ſeem ſomewhat wonderful, that there ſhould ſo many riſe there againſt the Jews, ſo near the court, now altogether in the intereſt of the Jews; but theſe were men no doubt of Haman's faction, and enraged at his diſgrace and death, and headed by his ten ſons, who took the advantage of the decree to avenge his death; the Targum ſays, theſe were princes of the houſe of Amalek.

℣. 7. 8. 9. 10. And Parſhandatha, and Dalphon, and Aſpatha, and Poratha, and Adalia, and Aridatha, and Parmaſhta, and Ariſai, and Aridai, and Vajezatha, the ten ſons of Haman the ſon of Hammedatha, the enemy of the Jews, ſlew they, &c.] Along with the 500 men, at the head of which they were: but on the ſpoil laid they not their hands; though they were allowed by the edict to do it, ch. viii. 11. but this they did not, that it might appear that they did not take away their lives from a covetous deſire of their eſtates, but purely in ſelf-defence; and they might do this, the more to ingratiate themſelves to the king, to whom the goods and eſtates of theſe men would be confiſcated.

℣. 11. On that day the number of thoſe that were ſlain in Shuſhan the palace, was brought before the king.] Either by order of the king, that he might know how many enemies the Jews had in the city, and how many of his ſubjects had been ſlain; or officiouſly by others, with an intention to irritate the king againſt the Jews.

℣. 12. And the king ſaid unto Eſther the queen, &c.] After the account had been brought in to him: The Jews have ſlain and deſtroyed 500 men in Shuſhan the palace; the Targum adds, of the ſeed of Amalek: and the ten ſons of Haman; which very probably were all he had; though the Targum, in ℣. 14, makes mention of 70 ſons that Zereſh his wife fled with: what have they done in the reſt of the king's provinces? that could not be ſaid; but it might be concluded, that if ſo many were ſlain in Shuſhan, the number muſt be great in all the provinces: now what is thy petition? and it ſhall be granted thee: or what is thy requeſt further? and it ſhall be done; if this was not ſufficient and ſatisfactory, whatever elſe ſhe ſhould aſk for ſhould be granted.

℣. 13. Then ſaid Eſther, If it pleaſe the king, &c.] For ſhe was all ſubmiſſion to his will: let it be granted to the Jews which are in Shuſhan; for no farther did ſhe deſire the grant to be extended: to do to-morrow alſo according to this day's decree; one Targum makes the requeſt only that they might keep the morrow as a feſtival, but the other more rightly, to do according to the decree of this day; which was, to ſlay as many of their enemies as roſe up againſt them; and whereas many might flee and hide themſelves, who were implacable enemies of the Jews, Eſther moves for a grant that the decree might be continued for the next day, that theſe might be found out and ſlain; in which ſhe fought the glory of divine juſtice, in their righteous deſtruction, and the peace of the people of God, and not private revenge, or to indulge malice: and let Haman's ten ſons be hanged upon the gallows; on which their father was; this was deferred, though they were already ſlain, for their greater reproach, and for a terror to others, not to injure the people of God; and it was uſual with the Perſians to hang perſons on a gallows, or fix them to a croſs, after they were dead; as Polycrates was by Oroites[i], and Bagapates by Paryſatis[k].

℣. 14. And the king commanded it ſo to be done: and the decree was given at Shuſhan, &c. That the Jews might have leave to ſeek out and ſlay the reſt of their enemies in Shuſhan, on the 14th day, in like manner as they had on the 13th: and they hanged Haman's ten ſons; on the ſame gallows very probably their father was hanged; the Targum gives us the diſtance between each perſon hanged thereon.

℣. 15. For the Jews that were in Shuſhan, gathered themſelves together, on the fourteenth day alſo of the month Adar, &c.] As they had on the 13th: and ſlew 300 men at Shuſhan; the Targum adds, of the family of Amalek; but there is no reaſon to confine it to them; it reſpects all ſuch as were the enemies of the Jews, and roſe up againſt them; ſo that the whole number ſlain in Shuſhan were 800 perſons, beſides the ſons of Haman: but on the prey they laid not their hand; ſee the note on ℣. 10.

℣. 16. But the other Jews that were in the king's provinces, gathered themſelves together, &c.] In a body, in their reſpective provinces and cities: and ſtood for their lives; defended themſelves againſt thoſe that attacked them: and had reſt from their enemies; that ſelf ſame day; all being deſtroyed by them, and none daring to appear againſt them: and ſlew of their foes 75,000 men; that is, in all the provinces put together: but they laid not their hands on the prey; ſee the note, ℣. 10.

℣. 17. On the 13*th day of the month Adar*, &c.] This belongs to the preceding verſe; and the meaning is, that on this day the Jews gathered together and ſlew ſo many thouſand of their enemies as before related: and on the 14*th day of the ſame, reſted they, and made it a feaſt of gladneſs*; rejoicing that they were delivered out of the hand of their enemies, who hoped and expected on that day to have made an utter end of them; according to the Jewiſh

Jewiſh canons[l], mourning and faſting on this day were forbidden, but feaſting and gladneſs were to be multiplied.

℣. 18. But the Jews that were at Shuſhan aſſembled together on the 13th day thereof, and on the 14th day thereof, &c.] Of the month Adar; that is, they gathered together to defend themſelves, and deſtroy their enemies, on both theſe days, having the decree renewed for the 14th they had for the 13th: and on the 15th day of the ſame they reſted, and made it a day of feaſting and gladneſs; as the Jews in the provinces did on the 14th.

℣. 19. Therefore the Jews of the villages, that dwelt in the unwalled towns, made the 14th day of the month Adar a day of gladneſs and feaſting, &c.] Jarchi obſerves that thoſe in the villages, who are they that don't dwell in walled towns, obſerved the 14th, and they in towns ſurrounded with walls the 15th, as Shuſhan; and this circumvallation, he ſays, muſt be what was from the days of Joſhua; according to the Jewiſh canons, every place that was walled from the days of Joſhua the ſon of Nun, whether in the land of Iſrael or out of it, though not now walled, they read (i. e. the book of Eſther) on the 15th of Adar, and this is called a walled town; but a place which was not walled in the days of Joſhua, though now walled, they read in the 14th, and this is called a city; but the city Shuſhan, though it was not walled in the days of Joſhua, they read on the 15th, becauſe in it was done a miracle[m]; and each of theſe was kept as a day of public rejoicing for their great deliverance and freedom from their enemies: and a good day; as the Jews uſually call the ſeveral days of the paſſover, pentecoſt, and tabernacles: and of ſending portions one to another; expreſſive of mutual joy, and congratulating one another upon the happineſs they ſhared in; ſee Rev. xi. 10. and particularly this may reſpect ſending gifts to the poor, who had not that to rejoice and make merry with, others had; ſee Neh. viii. 10. though theſe ſeem to be diſtinct from them, ℣. 22.

℣. 20. And Mordecai wrote theſe things, &c.] The tranſactions of thoſe two days, and the cauſes of them, as well as the following letter; ſome conclude from hence, that he was the pen-man of the book; and ſo he might be, but it does not neceſſarily follow from hence: and ſent letters unto all the Jews that were in all the provinces of the king Ahaſuerus, both nigh and far; ſuch as were near the city Shuſhan, and thoſe that were at the greateſt diſtance from it; theſe were more eſpecially the things he wrote.

℣. 21. To ſtabliſh this among them, &c.] That it might be a ſettled thing, and annually obſerved in all future generations, what they had now done: that they ſhould keep the 14th day of the month Adar, and the 15th day of the ſame, yearly; as the former had been obſerved by the Jews in the provinces, and both by thoſe in Shuſhan, ℣. 17, 18, 19. as feſtivals in commemoration of their great deliverance; hence the 14th of Adar is called the day of Mordecai, being eſtabliſhed by him; 2 Maccab. xv. 37.

℣. 22. As the days wherein the Jews reſted from their enemies, &c.] Having ſlain all thoſe that roſe up againſt them, and aſſaulted them: and the month which was turned unto them from ſorrow to joy, and from mourning unto a good day; for in this month Adar, on the 13th day of it, they expected to have been all deſtroyed, which had occaſioned great ſorrow and mourning in them; but beyond their expectation, in the ſame month, and on the ſelf-ſame day of the month, they had deliverance and freedom from their enemies; which was matter of joy, and made this day a good day to them: that they ſhould make them days of feaſting and joy; keep both the 14th and 15th days of the month as feſtivals, eating and drinking, and making all tokens of joy and gladneſs, though not in the Bacchanalian way, in which they now obſerve them; for they ſay[n], a man is bound at the feaſt of Purim to exhilarate or inebriate himſelf until he does not know the difference between curſed be Haman and bleſſed be Mordecai: and of ſending portions one to another; and theſe now conſiſt of eatables and drinkables; and according to the Jewiſh canons[o], a man muſt ſend two gifts to his friend, at leaſt; and they that multiply them are moſt commendable; and thoſe are ſent by men to men, and by women to women, and not on the contrary: and gifts to the poor; alms money, as the Targum, to purchaſe food and drink with, nor may they uſe it to any other purpoſe; tho' ſome ſay they may do what they will with it[p]; and a man muſt not give leſs than two gifts to the poor; theſe are called the monies of Purim[q].

℣. 23. And the Jews undertook to do as they had begun, and as Mordecai had written unto them.] They engaged to keep theſe two days as feſtivals annually, as they had at this time done; not in a religious but in a civil way, not as parts of religious worſhip, and as additions to and innovations of the law, but by way of commemoration of a civil benefit which they had received; and yet we find in after times that this was ſcrupled by ſome as an innovation; for we are told[r] that there were 85 elders, and more than 30 of them prophets, who were diſtreſſed about this matter, fearing it was an innovation.

℣. 24. Becauſe Haman the ſon of Hammeda tha the Agagite, the enemy of all the Jews, had deviſed againſt the Jews to deſtroy them, &c.] Had formed a deſign to exterminate them from the whole Perſian empire in one day: and had caſt Pur, (that is, the lot) to conſume them, and to deſtroy them; had caſt lots to find out what would be the moſt lucky day in the year for him to do it on, and the moſt unlucky and unfortunate to the Jews; and, according to the lot, the 13th of Adar was pitched upon; this and the following verſe give the reaſons for obſerving the above two days as feſtivals.

℣. 25. But when Eſther came before the king, &c.] To requeſt of him her life, and the life of her people: he commanded by letters, that his wicked device which he deviſed againſt the Jews, ſhould return upon his own head; that whereas his wicked ſcheme was to deſtroy all the Jews, the king, by his ſecond letter, gave orders that the Jews ſhould have liberty to defend themſelves, and deſtroy their enemies which roſe up againſt them; and the friends and party of Haman were entirely cut off: and that he and his ſons ſhould be hanged on the gallows; which he had prepared for Mordecai; not that they were ordered to be hanged together, nor were they; Haman was hanged before on the 23d day of the month, but his ſons not till the ℣. 26. Wherefore they called these days Purim, after the name of Pur, &c.] The lot; because of the lots cast by Haman; see ch. iii. 1. Therefore for all the words of this letter; in obedience to what Mordecai wrote in his letter to the Jews, and because of the things contained in it: and of that which they had seen concerning this matter; with their own eyes, in the several provinces where their enemies rose up to assault them, but were destroyed by them: and what had come unto them; by report; as the fall of Haman, and advancement of Mordecai, and the favours shewn to Esther and her people; all this belongs to the following verse, containing the reasons of the Jews appointment and engagement to observe the days of Purim.

℣. 27. The Jews ordained, and took upon them, and upon their seed, and upon all such that joined themselves unto them, &c.] Who became proselytes to their religion; that is, they appointed the above two days as festivals, and engaged for themselves, for their children, and all proselytes, to observe them as such; and one of their canons [s] runs thus, "all are obliged to read the Megillah (the book of Esther, which they always read on those days) priests, Levites, Nethinim, Israelites, men, women, and proselytes, and servants made free, and they train up little ones to read it:" so as it should not fail; of being observed, so as no man should transgress it, or pass it over: that they should keep these two days; the 14th and 15th of the month Adar or February: according to their writing; in this book, the book of Esther, which was to be read, as Aben Ezra; written in the Hebrew character, as the Targum; that is, in the Assyrian character, as Jarchi; the square character as they call it: and according to their appointed time every year; whether simple or intercalated, as Aben Ezra observes: in an intercalary year, the Jews have two Adars, and though they keep the feast of Purim on the 14h of the first Adar, yet not with so much mirth, and call it the lesser Purim; but in the 2d Adar, they observe it with all its ceremonies [t]; so in their canon, they don't keep Purim, but in Adar that is next to Nisan or March, that redemption might be near redemption; the redemption of Mordecai, near the redemption of Moses [u].

℣. 28. And that these days should be remembered, and kept throughout every generation, every family, every province, and every city, &c.] And accordingly these days are commemorated by them now, and by all their families, and all in their families capable of it; and these words, every province, and every city, are used, as Aben Ezra observes, lest a man should think he was not bound to keep this feast where there were no Jews; for let him be where he may, he is obliged to keep it: and that these days of Purim should not fail among the Jews; or the observance of them be neglected and cease: nor the memorial of them perish from their seed; neither the memorial of them, nor of the reason of keeping them; wherefore on those days they read the whole book of Esther, fairly written on a roll of parchment, and are careful that none omit the reading of it; rather, they say [w], the reading and learning the law should be omitted, and all commands and service, than the reading this volume, that so all might be acquainted with this wonderful deliverance, and keep it in mind.

℣. 29. Then Esther the queen, the daughter of Abihail, and Mordecai the Jew, wrote with all authority, &c.] Strongly pressing the observance of this festival; before, Mordecai only recommended it, but now the queen gave a sanction to it, and laid her obligation on the Jews to observe it; perhaps some of the Jews were backward to it, or neglected to observe it, and therefore Esther and Mordecai joined in a letter to them, to press them to it: the Jewish chronologer [x] says, this was written the year following; the former Targum is, they wrote this whole volume, and the strength of the miracle, or set the miraculous deliverance in the strongest light, with this view, to confirm this second letter of Purim; that it might have its weight and influence upon them, to engage them to keep it, as the latter Targum adds; that when it was an intercalary year, they might not read the Megillah (or book of Esther) in the first Adar, but in the second Adar.

℣. 30. And he sent letters unto all the Jews, &c.] That is, Mordecai did, signed in the queen's name, and his own: to the 127 provinces of the kingdom of Ahasuerus; among which was Judea, that was become a province, first of the Chaldean, now of the Persian empire, see Ezra v. 8. to whom also these letters were sent, directing and ordering the Jews there to observe these days, who were also concerned in the deliverance wrought: with words of peace and truth; exhorting them to live in peace with one another, and their neighbours, and to constancy in the true religion; or wishing them all peace and prosperity in the most loving and sincere manner.

℣. 31. To confirm these days of Purim in their times appointed, &c.] The 14th and 15th of Adar: according as Mordecai the Jew, and Esther the queen had enjoined them; in the letters written and signed by them both: and as they had decreed for themselves, and for their seed; see ℣. 27. the matters of their fastings and their cry; in commemoration of their deliverance from those distresses and calamities which occasioned fastings and prayers during the time of them; and to this sense is the former Targum; though it is certain the Jews observe the 13th day, the day before the two days, as a fast, and which they call the fast of Esther [y], and have prayers on the festival days peculiar to them; but the sense Aben Ezra gives seems best, that as the Jews had decreed to keep the fasts, mentioned in Zech. vii. 5. so they now decreed to rejoice in the days of Purim.

℣. 32. And the decree of Esther confirmed these matters of Purim, &c.] As a festival to be observed by the Jews in future generations: and it was written in the book; either in this book of Esther; or in the public acts and chronicles of the kings of Persia; or in a book by itself, now lost, as Aben Ezra thinks, as many others are, we read of in scripture, as the books of the Chronicles of the kings of Israel and Judah, &c.

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter is very ſhort, and juſt makes mention of a tribute Ahaſuerus laid on his realm, ℣. 1. refers to the Perſian chronicles, both for the greatneſs of him, and of Mordecai, and is cloſed with the character of the latter, ℣. 3.

℣. 1. And the king Ahaſuerus laid a tribute on the land, and upon the iſles of the ſea.] Which include all his dominions, both on the continent, and on the ſea, the Ægæan ſea; though Aben Ezra thinks it regards ſuch as were not under his government, but ſtood in fear of him, of whom he demanded tribute. If Ahaſuerus was Xerxes, perhaps his exchequer might be drained by his wars with the Grecians, which put him upon this; though ſome underſtand this of his renewing the taxes and tribute, which he remitted upon his marriage with Eſther, ch. ii. 18.

℣. 2. And all the acts of his power, and of his might, &c.] As Xerxes was a very mighty and powerful prince: and the declaration of the greatneſs of Mordecai, whereunto the king advanced him; the hiſtory of that, and which tended not a little to the greatneſs, dignity and proſperity of the king himſelf, and his whole kingdom: are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Media and Perſia? to which the reader is referred by the writer of this book, the which were in being in his times, but now loſt: had they been preſerved, they might have been of great uſe to lead into the hiſtory of the Medes and Perſians, which for want of them is very dark and intricate; the writer of this book having nothing farther to do with it, than as it related to the affairs of the Jews.

℣. 3. For Mordecai the Jew was next unto Ahaſuerus, &c.] The ſecond man in the kingdom, the principal of the counſellors, and prime miniſter of ſtate: and great among the Jews; highly reſpected by them, in great honour and eſteem with them, for which there was great reaſon: and accepted of the multitude of his brethren; or of many, of moſt, of the greateſt part of them; for let a man be ever ſo deſerving, there are ſome that will envy his greatneſs, cavil at every thing done by him, and ſpeak evil of him without any juſt reaſon: ſeeking the wealth of his people; their good, their welfare and happineſs, temporal and ſpiritual: and ſpeaking peace to all his ſeed; not only to his family, but to all the Jews who were of the ſame ſeed with him, the ſeed of Abraham; either ſpeaking to them in an humble and condeſcending manner, being very humane, affable, and courteous; or ſpeaking for them to the king, aſking of him for them what might conduce to their peace, proſperity and happineſs. No mention is made in this hiſtory of the death and burial, either of Mordecai or Eſther; but the author of Cippi Hebraici ſays [z], that Mordecai was buried in the city of Shuſhan, and that all the Jews in thoſe parts aſſemble at his grave on the day of Purim, and ſing ſongs, playing on tabrets and pipes, rejoicing that there was a miracle wrought; and the ſame writer ſays [a], they do the like at that time at the grave of Eſther, half a mile from Tzephat, read this book that bears her name, eat, drink and rejoice. Benjamin of Tudela ſays [b], they were both buried before a ſynagogue, at a place called Hamdan.

J O B.

THIS book, in the Hebrew copies, generally goes by this name, from Job, who is however the ſubject, if not the writer of it. In the Vulgate Latin verſion it is called the book of Job; in the Syriac verſion, the writing of Job; and in the Arabic, the writing or book of Job the juſt. In ſome Hebrew bibles it ſtands between the book of Proverbs and the Song of Solomon; but, according to the Talmudiſts [a], it ſhould ſtand between the Pſalms of David and the Proverbs of Solomon. Some have made a queſtion of it, whether there ever was ſuch a man as Job, and ſuppoſe this book not to be a real hiſtory, or to contain matters of fact, but to be written under fictitious names, and to be parabolical, and that it is deſigned to ſet forth an example of patience in ſuffering affliction; and ſome of the Jewiſh writers [b] affirm, that Job never was in being, and that this book is a parable, apologue, or fable; and to this Maimonides [c] himſelf inclines; but this opinion is juſtly rejected by Aben Ezra, Peritſol, and others; for that there was ſuch a man, is as certain as that there were ſuch men as Noah and Daniel, with whom he is mentioned by the prophet Ezekiel, ch. xiv. 14. and the teſtimony of the apoſtle James is full to this purpoſe, who ſpeaks of him as a perſon well known, and not to be doubted of; of whom, and of whoſe patience, the Jews he writes to had heard much, Jam. v. 11. beſides, the names of the countries where he and his friends lived, the account given of his family, and of his ſubſtance, both before and after his afflictions, ſhew it to be a real hiſtory. Learned men are not agreed about the ſignification of his name; according to Jerom [d], it ſignifies a magician, taking it to be the ſame with אוב ob; and ſome Jewiſh writers [e] place him with Balaam and Jethro, as the counſellors of Pharaoh againſt the Iſraelites, for which he was afflicted: the ſame ancient father renders the word grieving and howling; others, as Spanheim [f], derive it from יאב, to love or deſire, and ſo it ſignifies deſire or delight, and is the ſame with Deſiderius or Eraſmus; hence Job is called by Suidas [g] τερποθήλος, exceeding deſirable; but Hillerus [h] deriving it from the ſame root, makes it to ſignify juſt the reverſe, without deſire, or not deſirable; and ſuppoſes it to be a compound of יאו deſire, and אי not; but the generality of writers derive it from איב, to be at enmity, and ſo it ſignifies one that is expoſed to the hatred and enmity of men, or one that is a hater and enemy of wicked men; or, as Schmidt interprets it, a man zealous for God, and ſhewing hatred to wickedneſs and wicked men on his account. Who Job was, it is not eaſy to ſay; not the ſame with Jobab, of the race of Eſau, as ſome, Gen. xxxvi. 33. Ariſteas [k] ſays, he was a ſon of Eſau himſelf by his wife Beſſara, and was firſt called Jobam; nor the ſame with Job a ſon of Iſſachar, Gen. xlvi. 13. nor was he a deſcendant of Abraham by Keturah; but rather ſprung from Uz, the firſt-born of Nahor, brother of Abraham, Gen. xxii. 21. who gave name to the country where Job lived, as Buz his brother did to that of which Elihu was, and as Cheſed, another brother of Uz, did to the Chaſdim or Chaldæans, who were both near to Job. It is alſo not agreed in what time Job lived; Maimonides [l] ſays, of their writers ſome place him in the times of the patriarchs, ſome in the times of Moſes, others in the times of David, and others ſay, that he was of the wiſe men of Babylon; and ſome add, that he was of them that came out of the captivity there, and had a ſchool at Tiberias, as ſay the Talmudiſts [m], who give very different accounts of him: ſome ſay he was in the times of the judges; others in the times of the queen of Sheba; and others in the times of Ahaſuerus; but the more general opinion is, and indeed the more probable, that he was born when the Iſraelites went down into Egypt, and that he was dead when they came from thence [n]: in ſhort, they place him almoſt in all the ages from Abraham to the Babyloniſh captivity, and after it; and even Luther [o] was of opinion, that he lived in the times of of Solomon, for which there is no more reaſon than for the reſt: it ſeems moſt probable that he lived before Moſes [p], at leaſt before the giving of the law to him, ſince no mention is made of it in this book, nor any reference to it; whereas there is to things more ancient, as the general deluge, the burning of Sodom, &c. the law concerning ſacrifices only to be offered by prieſts, was not as yet given; for Job offered ſacrifices as being the head of his family, and ſo did his three friends, ch. i. 5. and xlii. 8. The length of his life beſt agrees with the times before Moſes, for in his time the age of man was reduced to 70 years; whereas Job muſt live 200 years or more, ſince he lived 140 after his reſtoration: add to this, that this book ſeems to have been written before any idolatry was in the world, but the worſhip of the ſun and moon, ch. xxxi. 25, 26. and before there were any writings divinely inſpired, ſince there is no appeal to any in the whole controverſy between Job and his friends; but the appeal is made to men of years and wiſdom, and to traditions of former times, ch. v. 1. and viii. 8, 9, 10. and xv. 18. and xxi. 29. According to Dr. Owen [q], Job lived 350 years after the diſperſion at Babel, about A. M. 2100. It is alſo greatly controverted who was the writer of this book; ſome aſcribe the writing of it to Iſaiah the prophet; others to Solomon, as Luther [r]; others to one of the prophets who was an Idumæan; but moſt to Moſes, ſo the Jews [s] ſay, that he wrote his own book, the ſection of Balaam and Job. Some think that he wrote it when in Midian, for the comfort and encouragement of the Hebrews afflicted in Egypt at that time, and who might hope to be delivered out of their afflictions, as this good man was delivered out of his; and this, 'tis ſuppoſed, accounts for the uſe of many Arabic words in it; Midian being in Arabia, where Moſes having lived ſome years, had mixed their language with his own. Some are of opinion, that he met with this book when in thoſe parts, which he found either in the Arabic or Syriac language, and tranſlated it into Hebrew [t] for the uſe of the Iſraelites; and others think it was written by Job's friends, and particularly by Elihu, which is concluded from ch. xxxii. 15, 16. but it is moſt probable that it was written by Job himſelf, or at leaſt compiled from his Diary or Adverſaria kept by him, or from thoſe of his friends, or from both, and that it was written in the language it is now in: but be it written by whom it may, there is no doubt to be made of the divine authority of it; as appears from the ſublimity of the ſtile, the ſubject-matter of it, its agreement with other parts of the ſacred writings, and particularly from a quotation of a paſſage out of ch. v. 13. by the apoſtle Paul, 1 Cor. iii. 19. ſee alſo ch. vi. 17. compared with Heb. xii. 5. The deſign of it is not only in general to aſſert and explain the doctrine of providence, as Maimonides obſerves; but in particular to ſhew, that though good men are afflicted, yet ſooner or later they are delivered out of their afflictions; and that it becomes them to bear them patiently, and not murmur at them; nor complain of God on account of them, whoſe ways and works are unſearchable, and who gives no account of his matters to men, but is ſovereign, wiſe, and juſt in all he does; and whatſoever is done by him iſſues in the good of his people, as well as in his own glory, as the event ſhews. This book may be conſidered either as an hiſtory of the life of Job, in which an account is given of him in his proſperity; of his afflictions, and how they came upon him; of a viſit paid him by his friends, and of the diſcourſes that paſt between him and them, and of his reſtoration to greater affluence than he enjoyed before: or as a drama or dialogue conſiſting of divers parts, and in which various ſpeakers are introduced, as God, Satan, Job, his wife and friends; or as a diſpute, in which Job's three friends are the opponents, himſelf the reſpondent, Elihu the moderator, and God the umpire, who ſettled and determined the point in queſtion. It contains many uſeful things in it concerning the Divine Being, and the perfections of his nature, his wiſdom, power, juſtice, goodneſs and ſovereignty; concerning the works of creation and providence; concerning original ſin, and the corruption of mankind; concerning redemption by Chriſt, and good works to be done by men; and concerning the reſurrection of the dead, and eternal life. Some think Job was a type of Chriſt in his afflictions and ſufferings; in his patience under them, and deliverance out of them; in his exaltation to an high pitch of happineſs and proſperity; and in his interceſſion for his friends. He is in many things worthy of imitation, though in others to be blamed, and not followed; and on the whole, this book of his may be read with great pleaſure and profit.

CHAP. I.

IN this chapter Job, the ſubject of the whole book, is deſcribed by his native country, by his name, by his religious character, and by his family and his ſubſtance, ℣. 1 — 3. a particular relation is given of his children feaſting together, and of Job's conduct during that time, ℣. 4, 5. of a diſcourſe which paſſed between God and ſatan concerning him, the iſſue of which was that ſatan obtained leave of God to afflict Job in his outward affairs, ℣. 6—12. then follows an account of his ſeveral loſſes, of his oxen, ſheep, camels, aſſes and ſervants by the Sabeans, Chaldeans, and fire from heaven, and of his ſons and daughters by the fall of the houſe in which they were, through a violent wind, ℣. 13—19. and the chapter is concluded with the agreeable behaviour of Job in the midſt of all this, ℣. 20—22.

℣. 1. There was a man in the land of Uz, whoſe name was Job, &c.] Of the ſignification of his name, ſee the argument of the book. The place where he dwelt had its name not from Uz, a deſcendant of Shem, Gen. x. 23. but from Uz, a ſon of Nahor, brother to Abraham, Gen. xxii. 21. unleſs it can be thought to be ſo called from Uz, of the children of Seir, in the land of Edom; ſince we read of the land of Uz along with Edom, or rather of Edom as in the land of Uz, or on the borders ders of it, Lam. iv. 21. the Targum calls it the land of Armenia, but rather it is Arabia; and very probably it was one of the Arabias Job lived in, either Petræa or Deserta, probably the latter; of which Uz or Ausitis, as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin version read it, was a part; the same with the Æsitæ of Ptolemy[u]; and it is said to be near the land of Canaan[w], for in Arabia Felix the Sabeans lived; and certain it is, that this country was near to the Sabeans and Chaldeans, and to the land of Edom, from whence Eliphaz the Temanite came: and as this very probably was a wicked and an idolatrous place, it was an instance of the distinguishing grace of God, to call Job by his grace in the land of Uz, as it was to call Abraham in Ur of the Chaldeans; and though it might be distressing and afflicting to the good man to live in such a country, as it was to Lot to live in Sodom; yet it was an honour to him, or rather, it was to the glory of the grace of God that he was religious here, and continued to be so, see Rev. ii. 13. and gives an early proof of what the apostle Peter observed, that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation, he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him; that is, through Christ, Acts x. 34, 35. Job, as he is described by his name and country, so by his sex, a man; and this not so much to distinguish his sex, nor to express the reality of his existence as a man, but to denote his greatness; he was a very considerable, and indeed an extraordinary man; he was a man not only of wealth and riches, but of great power and authority, so the mean and great man are distinguished in Is. ii. 9. see the account he gives of himself in ch. xxix. 7—10. by which it appears he was in great honour and esteem with men of all ranks and degrees, as well as he was a man of great grace, as follows: and the man was perfect; in the same sense as Noah, Abraham, and Jacob were; not with respect to sanctification, unless as considered in Christ, who is made sanctification to his people; or with regard to the truth, sincerity, and genuineness of it; or in a comparative sense, in comparison of what he once was, and others are; but not so as to be free from sin, neither from the being of it, which no man is clear of in this life, nor from the actings of it in thought, word, and deed, see ch. ix. 20. 30, 31. or so as to be perfect in grace; for though all grace is seminally implanted at once in regeneration, it opens and increases gradually; there is a perfection of parts, but not of degrees; there is the whole new man, but that is not arrived to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; there are all and every grace, but not one perfect, not knowledge, nor faith, nor hope, nor love, nor patience, nor any other: but then as to justification, every good man is perfect; Christ has compleatly redeemed his people from all their sins; he has perfectly fulfilled the law in their room and stead; he has fully expiated all their transgressions, he has procured the full remission of them, and brought in a righteousness which justifies them from them all; so that they are free from the guilt of sin, and condemnation by it, and are in the sight of God unblameable, irreproveable, without fault, all fair and perfectly comely; and this was Job's case: and upright; to whom was shewn the uprightness of Christ, or to whom the righteousness of Christ was revealed from faith to faith, and which was put upon him, and he walked in by faith, see ch. xxxiii. 23. moreover, Job was upright in heart, a right spirit was renewed in him; and though he was not of the nation of Israel, yet he was, in a spiritual sense, an Israelite indeed, in whom there was no guile, the truth of grace, and the root of the matter being in him, ch. xix. 28. and he was upright in his walk and conversation before God, and also before men; upright in all his dealings and concerns with them, in every relation he stood, in every office and character he bore: and one that feared God; not as the devils, who believe and tremble; nor as carnal men, when the judgments of God are in the earth, hide themselves in fear of him; nor as hypocrites, whose fear or devotion is only outward, and is taught by the precept of men; but as children affectionately reverence their parents: Job feared God with a filial and godly fear, which sprang from the grace of God, and was encouraged and increased by his goodness to him, and through a sense of it; it was attended with faith and confidence of interest in him, with an holy boldness and spiritual joy, and true humility; and comprehended the whole of religious worship, both public and private, internal and external: and eschewed evil; or departed from it[x], and that with hatred and loathing of it, and indignation at it, which the fear of God engages unto, Prov. viii. 13. and xvi. 6. he hated it, as every good man does, as being contrary to the nature and will of God, abominable in itself, and bad in its effects and consequences; and he departed from it, not only from the grosser acts of it, but abstained from all appearance of it, and studiously shunned and avoided every thing that led unto it; so far was he from indulging to a sinful course of life and conversation, which is inconsistent with the grace and fear of God.

v. 2. And there were born unto him, &c.] By his wife, in lawful wedlock, who was now living, and after mentioned: seven sons, and three daughters; next to his religious character, his graces, and spiritual blessings, and as the chief of his outward mercies and enjoyments, his children are mentioned; and which are indeed blessings from the Lord, and such as good men, and those that fear the Lord, are sometimes blessed with, see Ps. cxxvii. 3, 4, 5. and cxxviii. 3, 4. and to have a numerous offspring was always esteemed a very great favour and blessing, and as such was reckoned by Job; who, having so many sons, might hope to have his name perpetuated by them, as well as his substance shared among them; and having so many daughters, he might please himself with the thought of marrying them into families, which would strengthen his friendship and alliance with them; just the same number of sons and daughters had Bacchæus, the third king of Corinth[y].

v. 3. His substance also was 7000 sheep, &c.] For which he must have a large pasturage to feed them on, as well as these would produce much wool for cloathing, and flesh for food; this part of his substance or possessions is mentioned first, as being the largest, and most useful and profitable: and 3000 camels; creatures fit to carry burdens, and travel with, and were greatly valued on that account, especially in the deserts of Arabia, near to which Job lived; and that not only because they were strong for this purpose, but because they could endure much thirst and want of water for a long long time; see the note on Lev. xi. 4. it seems by this, that Job carried on a commerce, and traded in distant parts, whither he sent the produce of his lands and cattle, and trafficked with them: these camels might not only be he-, but she-camels also, according to the Septuagint version, which might be kept for breeding, and for their milk: Aristotle observes [z], some of the inhabitants of the Upper Asia used to have camels, to the number of 3000, the exact number here mentioned; and by the number of these creatures the Arabians estimated their riches and possessions [a]; and so sheep are by the Greeks called μηλα, as it is thought, from the Arabic word ملا, mala, to be rich [b]; the riches of other people, and of particular persons, as of Geryon, Atlas, and Polyphemus, are represented as chiefly consisting of their flocks, and also of their herds [c], as follows: and 500 yoke of oxen; to plow his land with, of which he must have a large quantity to employ such a number in, see 1 Kings xix. 19. and 500 she-asses; which must be chiefly for their milk; and no doubt but he had a considerable number of he-asses also, tho' not mentioned, which, as well as the others, were used to ride on, and also to plow with, in those countries; it may be rendred only asses as by some, and so may include both: Aristæus, Philo, and Polyhistor [d] give the same account of Job's substance in the several articles as here: and a very great houshold: this must be understood of his servants only, since his children are before taken notice of; and the same phrase is rendered great store of servants, Gen. xxvi. 14. and in the margin, husbandry or tillage, large fields and farms; and the sense comes to much the same, whether it is taken the one way or the other; if great store of servants, he must have large farms and many fields to employ them in; and if a large husbandry, and much ground for tillage, he must have many servants to manure and cultivate them: now these several articles are mentioned, because, in those times and countries, as has been observed, the substance of men chiefly lay in them, and according to them they were reckoned more or less rich; not but that they had gold and silver also, as Abraham had, Gen. xiii. 1. and so had Job, ch. xxxi. 24. but these were the principal things: so that this man was the greatest of all the men of the east; that lived in Arabia, Chaldea, and other eastern countries; that is, he was a man of the greatest wealth and riches, and of the greatest power and authority, and was had in the greatest honour and esteem: now these temporal blessings are observed, to shew that grace and earthly riches are compatible, that they may, and sometimes do, meet in the same person; as also to point at the goodness of God, in bestowing such blessings on this good man, thereby fulfilling the promise made to godliness and godly men, which respects this life, and that which is to come; and they are mentioned chiefly for the sake of the loss of these things after related, whereby the greatness of his loss and of his afflictions would be the more easily perceived, and his patience in bearing them appear the more illustrious; for by how much the greater was his substance, by so much the greater were his losses and trials, and the more remarkable his patience under them.

℣. 4. And his sons went and feasted in their houses every one his day, &c.] It appears by this, that Job's sons were grown up to men's estate, that they were from him, and were for themselves, and carried on a separate business on their own accounts, and had houses of their own, and perhaps were married; and being at some distance from each other, they met by appointment at certain times in their own houses, and had friendly and family entertainments in turn; for such were their feasts, not designed for intemperance, luxury, and wantonness, for then they would not have been encouraged, nor even connived at by Job; but to cherish love and affection, and maintain harmony and unity among themselves, which must be very pleasing to their parent; for a pleasant thing it is for any, and especially for parents, to behold brethren dwelling together in unity, Ps. cxxxiii. 1. besides, these feasts were kept, not in public houses, much less in houses of ill fame, but in their own houses, among themselves, at certain seasons, which they took in turn; and these were either at their time of sheep-shearing, which was a time of feasting, 1 Sam. xxv. 2. 36. or at the weaning of a child, Gen. xxi. 8. or rather on each of their birth-days, which in those early times were observed, especially those of persons of figure, Gen. xl. 20. and the rather, as Job's birth-day is called his day as here, Job iii. 1. and sent and called for their three sisters, to eat and to drink with them; not to make a feast in their turn, but to partake of their entertainment; which, as is commonly observed, shewed humanity, kindness, tenderness, and affection in them to their sisters, to invite them to take part with them in their innocent and social recreations, and modesty in their sisters not to thrust themselves into their company, or go without an invitation; these very probably were with Job, and went to the feasts with his leave, being very likely unmarried, or otherwise their husbands would have been invited also.

℣. 5. And it was so, when the days of their feasting were gone about, &c.] When they had been at each others houses in turn; when the rotation was ended: something like this is practised by the Chinese, who have their co-fraternities, which they call the brotherhood of the month; this consists of thirty, according to the number of days therein, and in a circle they go every day to eat at one anothers house by turns; if one man has not convenience to receive the fraternity in his own house, he may provide it at another man's, and there are many public houses very well furnished for this purpose [e]: Job's sons probably began at the elder brother's house, and so went on according to their age, and ended with the younger brother; so when they had gone through the circuit, as the word [f] signifies, and the revolution was over, and they had done feasting for that season, or that year, that Job sent and sanctified them; not that he did or could make them holy, by imparting grace, or infusing holiness into them; at most he could only pray for their sanctification, and give them rules, precepts, and and inſtructions about holineſs, and exhortations to it; but here it either ſignifies, that being at ſome diſtance from them, he ſent meſſengers or letters to them, to ſanctify and prepare themſelves for the ſacrifices he was about to offer for them; either by ſome rites and ceremonies, as by waſhing themſelves, and abſtinence from their wives, which were ſometimes uſed as preparatory to divine ſervice, Gen. xxxv. 2, 3. Exod. xix. 10, 11. 14, 15. or by faſting and prayer; or perhaps no more is intended by it, than an invitation of them to come and attend the ſolemn ſacrifice which he, as the head of the family, would offer for them; ſo, to ſanctify people, is ſometimes to invite, to call and gather them to holy ſervice, ſee Joel ii. 15, 16. and ſo the Targum renders it, "Job ſent and invited them:" and roſe up early in the morning; of the laſt of the days of feaſting; he took the firſt opportunity, and that as early as he could; which ſhews the eagerneſs of his ſpirit for the glory of God, and the good of his children, loſing no time for his devotion to God, and regard for his family; this being alſo the fitteſt time for religious worſhip and ſervice, ſee Pſ. v. 3. and was uſed for ſacrifice, Exod. xxix. 39. and offered burnt-offerings according to the number of them all; either of his ten children, or only his ſeven ſons, ſince they only are next mentioned, and were the maſters of the feaſt: this was before the law of the prieſthood was in being, which reſtrained the offering of ſacrifice to thoſe in the office of prieſts, when before, every head of a family had a right unto it; and this cuſtom of offering ſacrifice was before the law of Moſes, it was of divine inſtitution, and in uſe from the time of the fall of man, Gen. iii. 21. and iv. 3, 4. and viii. 20. and was by tradition handed down from one to another, and ſo Job had it; and which was typical of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, to be offered up in the fulneſs of time for the expiation of ſin; and Job no doubt, by faith in Chriſt, offered up thoſe burnt-offerings for his ſons, and one for each of them, thereby ſignifying, that every one ſtood in need of the whole ſacrifice of Chriſt for the atonement of ſin, as every ſinner does: for Job ſaid, It may be that my ſons have ſinned; not merely as in common, or daily ſins of infirmity; for Job ſo full well knew the corruption of human nature, that a day could not paſs without ſin in thought, word, or deed; but ſome more notorious or ſcandalous ſin; that in the midſt of their feaſting and mirth, they had uſed ſome filthy, or frothy, and unſavoury, and unbecoming language; had dropped ſome impure words or impious jeſts, or done ſome actions which would reflect diſhonour on God and true religion, and bring an odium on themſelves and families: now Job was not certain of this, he had had no inſtruction or intelligence of it; he only ſurmiſed and conjectured it might be ſo; he was fearful and jealous leſt it ſhould: this ſhews his care and concern, as for the glory of God, ſo for the ſpiritual welfare of his children, though they were grown up and gone from him, and is to be conſidered in favour of his ſons; for by this it is evident, they were not addicted to any ſin, or did not live a vicious courſe of life; but that they were religious and godly perſons; or otherwiſe Job would have had no doubt in his mind about their conduct and behaviour: the particular ſin he feared they might have been guilty of follows: and curſed God in their hearts; not in the groſſeſt ſenſe of the expreſſion, ſo as to deny the being of God, and wiſh there was none, and conceive blaſphemy in their hearts, and utter it with their lips; but whereas, to bleſs God, is to think and ſpeak well of him, and aſcribe that to him which is his due; ſo to curſe him, is to think and ſpeak irreverently of him, and not to attribute to him what belongs unto him; and thus Job might fear, that his ſons, amidſt their feaſting, might boaſt of their plenty, and of the increaſe of their ſubſtance, and attribute it to their own diligence and induſtry, and not to the providence of God, of which he feared they might ſpeak ſlightingly and unbecomingly, as perſons in ſuch circumſtances ſometimes do, ſee Deut. xxxii. 15. Prov. xxx. 9. Mr. Broughton renders it, and little bleſſed God in their hearts; not bleſſing him as they ſhould was interpretatively curſing him: the Hebrew word uſed, properly and primarily ſignifies to bleſs [g], and then the meaning is either, that his ſons had ſinned, but took no notice of it, nor were humbled for it, but bleſſed God, being proſperous and ſucceſsful, as if they had never ſinned at all, ſee Zech. xi. 1. Sanctius adds the negative particle not, as if the meaning was, that they ſinned, and did not bleſs God for their mercies as they ſhould, Deut. viii. 10. but this is too daring and venturous to make ſuch an addition; though this is favoured by the Targum, as in ſome copies, which paraphraſes it, "and have not prayed in the name of the Lord in their hearts:" and becauſe the word is uſed at parting, and taking a farewel of friends, Cocceius thinks it may be ſo uſed here, and the ſenſe to be, that they ſinned, and took their leave of God, and departed from him; but rather, as the word Elohim is uſed of ſtrange gods, of falſe deities, Exod. xviii. 11. Job's fears might be, leſt his ſons ſhould have been guilty of any idolatrous action, at leaſt of bleſſing the gods of the Gentiles in their hearts, ſince feaſting ſometimes leads to idolatry, Exod. xxxii. 6. but the firſt ſenſe ſeems beſt, with which the Septuagint verſion agrees, "it may be my ſons in their mind have thought evil things againſt the Lord:" thus did Job continually; or all thoſe days [h]; that is, after every ſuch circuit and rotation of feaſting, or after every feaſt-day kept by them, he offered ſacrifices for them; or every year [i], as ſome interpret the phraſe, the feaſts, and ſo the ſacrifices, being annual; all this is obſerved, partly further to deſcribe the piety of Job, his affection for his family, and concern for their ſpiritual good, and the glory of God, and partly as a leading ſtep to an after event, ℣. 18, 19.

℣. 6. Now there was a day, when the ſons of God came to preſent themſelves before the Lord, &c.] This is generally underſtood of the angels, as in ch. xxxviii. 7. who may be thought to be ſo called, becauſe of their creation by the father of ſpirits, and their likeneſs to God in holineſs, knowledge, and wiſdom, and being affectionate and obedient to him; as alſo on account of the grace of election, and confirmation in Chriſt beſtowed upon them, as well as becauſe, in their embaſſies and meſſages to men, they repreſent God, and ſo may be called Gods, and children of the Moſt High, for a like reaſon the civil magiſtrates are, Pſ. lxxxii. 6. to which may be added, their conſtituting with the ſaints the family of God in heaven and earth: theſe, as they ſtand before God, and at his right hand and left, as the hoſt of heaven, in which poſture Micaiah

Micaiah ſaw them in viſion, 1 Kings xxii. 19. ſo they may be ſaid to go forth from ſtanding before the Lord of all the earth into the ſeveral parts of all the world, to do the will and work of God aſſigned them, Zech. vi. 5—8. and then having done their work, return again, and preſent themſelves before the Lord, to give an account of what they have done, and to receive freſh orders from him, being ready to do his pleaſure in every thing he ſhall command them, which is what is here ſuppoſed; though ſome think theſe were only the company or band of angels which were ſet as a guard about Job, his perſon, family, and ſubſtance, who now appeared before the Lord, to give an account of him, his affairs, and circumſtances, as required of them: and Satan came alſo among them; which word ſignifies an adverſary, as in 1 Kings xi. 14. but does not deſign here a man-adverſary as there, or one that envied Job's proſperity, as Saadiah Gaon thinks, but an evil ſpirit, the old ſerpent, the devil, as in Rev. xii. 9. who is an implacable and bitter enemy to men, eſpecially to Chriſt and his people; and ſo has this name from his hatred of them, and oppoſition to them: Origen [k] obſerves, that this word, tranſlated into the Greek language, is αντικειμενος, an adverſary; but R. Levi [l] derives it from שטן, to decline or turn aſide,; and ſo Suidas ſays [m], Satan, in the Hebrew language, is an apoſtate; and Theodoret [n] mentions both, that it ſignifies either an adverſary or an apoſtate; the firſt derivation is beſt: knowing the end of the above meeting, that it was with reſpect to Job, and therefore he came with an intent to contradict what they ſhould ſay of him, and to accuſe him before God; he came among them as one of them, tranſforming himſelf into an angel of light, as he ſometimes does; or he came, being ſent for, and obliged to come, to give an account of himſelf, and of what he had been doing in the world, in order to be reproved and puniſhed: but though the ſtream of interpreters run this way, I cannot ſay I am ſatisfied with it; for ſetting aſide the paſſages in this book in queſtion, angels are no where called the ſons of God; for beſides, this being denied of them in the ſenſe that Chriſt is, they are repreſented as ſervants, yea, as ſervants to the ſons of God, miniſtring ſpirits to the heirs of ſalvation; they call themſelves the fellow-ſervants of the ſaints, and of their brethren, but do not ſay that they are ſons of the ſame family, or fellow-heirs, or their brethren, Heb. i. 5. 14. Rev. xix. 10. and xxii. 9. moreover, they always ſtand in the preſence of God, and behold his face, be they where they will, Matt. xviii. 10. Luke i. 19. nor is there any particular day aſſigned them for the ſervice of God; for tho' they are under the moral law, ſo far as it is ſuitable to their nature, yet not under the ceremonial law, to which the obſervance of days belonged; and beſides, they have no reſt night nor day, but continually ſerve God, and glorify him, ſaying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty: and if this preſentation of themſelves to God is ſuppoſed to be in heaven, as where elſe ſhould it be? it is not poſſible that Satan could come among them; he is fallen from heaven, being caſt down from thence, nor can he, nor ever will he be able to find a place any more there, ſee Luke x. 18. 2 Pet. ii. 4. Rev. xii. 8. 9. it ſeems better therefore to underſtand this of the people of God, of profeſſors of religion, who, earlier than the times of Job, were diſtinguiſhed from the men of the world by this character, the ſons of God, Gen. vi. 2. ſuch that were truly godly being ſo by adopting grace, and which was made manifeſt by their regeneration by the Spirit of God, and by their faith in Chriſt, and all were ſo by profeſſion: now theſe aſſembled themſelves together, to preſent themſelves, their bodies and ſouls before the Lord, which was but their reaſonable ſervice; as to pray unto him, and praiſe him, to offer ſacrifice, and perform every religious exerciſe enjoined in thoſe times; the apoſtle uſes the like phraſe of the ſaints ſocial worſhip, Rom. xii. 1. now for this there was a day; tho' I very much queſtion whether any ſabbath, or much leſs a ſeventh-day-ſabbath, was as yet inſtituted; but inaſmuch as men agreed together to call on the name of the Lord, or to worſhip him in a ſocial way, Gen. iv. 26. as it was neceſſary that a place ſhould be appointed to meet at, ſo a time fixed by conſent and agreement; even as now, the ſeventh-day-ſabbath being abrogated, Chriſtians agree to meet on the firſt day of the week, called the Lord's day, in imitation of the apoſtles of Chriſt; and on one of theſe days thus fixed and agreed on was the above meeting, at which Satan came among them, as he frequently does in the aſſembly of the ſaints, to do what miſchief he can; by ſnatching away the word from inattentive hearers, and by directing the eye to ſuch objects, and putting ſuch things into the mind, as divert from the ſervice of God; or by ſuggeſting to the ſaints themſelves, that what is attended to does not belong to them, with many other things of the like kind: the Targum interprets this day of the day of judgment, at the beginning of the year, and the ſons of God of angels, as do other Jewiſh writers.

℣. 7. And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, Whence comeſt thou? &c.] This queſtion is put, not as ignorant of the place from whence he came; for the omniſcient God knows all perſons and things, men and angels, and theſe good and bad, where they are, from whence they come; and what they do, ſee Gen. iii. 9. and iv. 9. but it is put either as being angry with him, and reſenting his coming among the ſons of God, and chiding him for it, as having no proper buſineſs there, like the queſtion in Matt. xxii. 12. or rather in order to lead on to another, and to bring out from him what he intended to have expreſſed by him, of what he had ſeen and taken notice of in the place from whence he came, and particularly concerning Job: how God and ſpirits converſe together we are not able to ſay; but no doubt there is a way in which God talks with ſpirits, even with evil ones, as well as good ones, and in which they ſpeak to him; and ſo this does not at all affect the reality of this narrative: then Satan anſwered the Lord and ſaid, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it; this he ſaid as ſwaggering and boaſting, as if he was indeed the God of the whole world, the prince and king of it, and had and exerciſed a ſovereign dominion over it, and as ſuch had been making a tour thro' it, and taking a ſurvey of it, ſee Matt. iv. 8. and as if he was at full liberty to go where he pleaſed, and was under no controul, when he was in chains of darkneſs, and could go no where, nor do any thing without divine permiſſion; could not touch Job, nor his ſubſtance, nor, as in the days of Chriſt, ſo much as enter into a herd of ſwine without leave: likewiſe this may denote the diſquietude and reſtleſsneſs of this evil ſpirit, who could not abide long in a place, but moving to and and fro, ſeeking reſt, but finding none, Matt. xii. 43. as alſo his diligence and indefatigableneſs in doing and ſeeking to do miſchief, going about like a roaring lion, ſeeking whom he may devour, taking all opportunities of doing injury, ſowing his tares while men are aſleep and off their guard, 1 Pet. v. 8. Matt. xiii. 25. and ſo the firſt word here uſed ſignifies a diligent ſearch, and is rendered by ſome, and particularly by Mr. Broughton, from ſearching about the earth °, and from walking in it; and ſo the Targum, "from going about in the earth, to ſearch the works of the children of men, and from walking in it;" and it points at the place of Satan's abode, the earth, with the circumambient air, Eph. ii. 2. and the extent of his influence, which reaches not to heaven, and to the ſaints there, out of which he is caſt, and can never re-enter, but to the earth only, and men on it; and here no place is free from him; he and his angels are roving about every where, city and country; publick and private places, mens own houſes, or the houſe of God, are not exempt from them; and therefore all here need to watch and pray, leſt they enter into temptation, Matt. xxvi. 41. Schultens interprets the word of Satan going through the earth with great force and violence, whipping and ſcourging miſerable mortals.

℣. 8. And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job, &c.] Or, Haſt thou put thine heart on my ſervant [p]; not in a way of love and affection to him, to do him any good or ſervice, there being an original and implacable enmity in this old ſerpent to the ſeed of the woman; but rather, his heart was ſet upon him in a way of deſire to have him in his hands, to do him all the miſchief he could, as the deſire of his heart was toward Peter, Luke xxii. 31. but the ſenſe of the queſtion is, ſince thou ſayeſt thou haſt been walking up and down in the earth, haſt thou not taken notice of Job, and caſt an eye upon him, and wiſhed in thine heart to have him in thine hands to do him hurt? I know that thou haſt; haſt thou not contrived in thine heart how to attack him, tempt him, and draw him from my ſervice, and into ſins and ſnares, in order to reproach and accuſe him? thou haſt, but all in vain; and ſo it is a ſarcaſm upon Satan, as well as an expreſſion of indignation at him for ſuch an attempt upon him, and as anticipating his accuſation of Job; for it is as if he ſhould farther ſay, I know he is in thine eye, and upon thine heart, now thou art come with a full intent to accuſe and charge him; ſo Jarchi, "leſt thou ſet thine heart, &c. ſo as to have a good will to accuſe him;" he had, but the Lord prevents him, by giving a high character of him in theſe and the following words: here he calls him my ſervant; not a ſervant of men, living according to the luſts and will of men, and their cuſtoms and forms of worſhip, ſuperſtition, and idolatry; nor a ſervant of ſin and the luſts of the fleſh; nor of Satan, who boaſted of the whole earth being his; but the Lord's ſervant, not only by creation, but by ſpecial choice, by redemption, by efficacious grace, and the voluntary ſurrender of himſelf to the Lord under the influence of it; and by his chearful and conſtant obedience, he anſwered this character; and the Lord here claims his property in him, acknowledges him as his ſervant, calls him by name, and gives an high and honourable account of him: that there is none like him in the earth; or in the land; in the land of Uz, ſo Obadiah Sephorno; whatever there were in other countries, there were none in this, being in general idolaters; or in the land of the people of the heathen nations, as the Targum; or rather in the whole earth, where Satan had been walking: and, very probably, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, were now dead; Job being, as it ſhould ſeem, between them and the times of Moſes; and though there might be many godly perſons then living, who were like to him in quality, being partakers of the ſame divine nature, having the ſame image of God upon them, and the ſame graces in them, and a ſimilar experience of divine things, yet not upon an equality with him; he exceeded them all in grace and holineſs; and particularly, none came up to him for his patience in ſuffering affliction, though this was often tried; as Moſes excelled others in meekneſs, and Solomon in wiſdom; Job was an eminent ſaint and ſervant of the Lord, a father in his family, a pillar in his houſe, like Saul among the people, taller in grace and the exerciſe of it; and this is a reaſon why he could not but be taken notice of by Satan, who has his eye more eſpecially on the moſt eminent ſaints, and envies them, and ſtrikes at them; and ſo the words are by ſome rendered, for there is none like him [q]; or rather, they may be rendered, but there is none like him [r]; and ſo are oppoſed to the accuſations and charges Satan was come with againſt him: a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and eſcheweth evil? ſee the note on ℣. 1. here the character there given is confirmed by the Lord in the expreſs words of it.

℣. 9. Then Satan anſwered the Lord, and ſaid, Doth Job fear God for nought?] Satan does not deny any part of Job's character, nor directly charge him with any one ſin; which ſhews what a holy man Job was, how exact in his life and converſation, that the devil could not alledge any one thing againſt him; nor does he deny that he feared the Lord; nay, he owns it, only ſuggeſts there was a private reaſon for it; and this he dares not affirm, only puts it by way of queſtion, giving an innuendo, which is a wretched way of ſlander many of his children have learned from him: he inſinuates that Job's fear of God, and ſerving him, was not for nought, or freely [s], it was not out of love to him, or with any regard to his will, or his honour and glory, but from ſelfiſh principles, with mercenary views, and for worldly ends and purpoſes: indeed no man fears and ſerves the Lord for nought and in vain, he is well paid for it; and godlineſs has a great gain along with it, the Lord beſtoweth every thing, both in a temporal and ſpiritual way, on them that fear him; ſo that eventually, and in the iſſue, they are great gainers by it; and they may lawfully look to theſe things, in order to encourage them in the ſervice and worſhip of God, even as Moſes had reſpect to the recompence of reward; when they dont make theſe, but the will and glory of God, the ſole and chief cauſe and end thereof; but the intimation of Satan is, that Job's fear was merely outward and hypocritical, not cordial, hearty, and diſintereſted, but was entirely for his own ſake, and for what he got by it; and this he ſaid, as if he knew better than God himſelf, the ſearcher of hearts, who had before given ſuch an honourable character of him. Sephorno phorno obſerves, that he ſuppoſes that his fear was not a fear of the greatneſs of God, a reverence of his divine Majeſty, but a fear of puniſhment; or what we call a ſervile fear, and not a filial one.

℣. 10. Haſt not thou made an hedge about him, &c.] A fence, a wall of protection all around him? he had; he encompaſſed him about with his love as with a ſhield, a hedge which could not be broken down by men or devils; he ſurrounded him with his almighty power, that none could hurt him; he guarded him by his Providence, he cauſed his angels to encamp about him; yea, he himſelf was a wall of fire around him; the Targum interprets it the word of God: ſo thick was the hedge, ſo ſtrong the fence, that Satan could not find the leaſt gap to get in at, to do him any injury to his body or mind, without the divine permiſſion; which he envied and was vexed at, and maliciouſly ſuggeſts that this was the motive of Job's fear of the Lord; and indeed it was an obligation upon him to fear him, but not the ſole cauſe of it: and about his houſe; not the houſe in which he dwelt; though Satan could have gladly pulled down that about his ears, as well as that in which his children were; but it deſigns his family, who were alſo by Providence protected in their perſons and eſtates, and preſerved from the temptations of Satan, at leaſt from being overcome by them, and even at the times of their feaſting before mentioned; this fence was about his ſervants alſo, ſo that Satan could not come at and hurt any one that belonged to him, which was a great grief and vexation of mind to him: and about all that he hath on every ſide; his ſheep, his camels, his oxen, and his aſſes; for otherwiſe theſe would not have eſcaped the malice and fury of this evil ſpirit they afterwards felt; but as theſe were the gifts of the providence of God to Job, they were guarded by his power, that Satan could not hurt them without leave: thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands; not only what he himſelf perſonally wrought with his own hands, but was done by his ſervants through his direction, and by his order; the culture of his fields, the feeding and keeping of his flocks and herds; all ſucceeded well; whatever he did, or was concerned in, proſpered: and his ſubſtance is increaſed in the land; or broke out [t]; like a breach of waters; ſee 2 Sam. v. 20; exceeded all bounds; his riches broke forth on the right hand and on the left, and flowed in, ſo that there were ſcarce any limits to be ſet to them; he abounded in them; his ſheep brought forth thouſands; his oxen, camels, and aſſes, ſtood well, and were ſtrong to labour; and his wealth poured in upon him in great plenty; all which was an eye-ſore to Satan, and therefore would inſinuate that this was the ſole ſpring and ſource of Job's religion, devotion, and obedience.

℣. 11. But put forth thine hand now, &c.] Withdraw thine hand of providence, power, and protection, with which thou haſt covered and ſcreened him; and, inſtead of that, ſend [u] forth thine afflicting hand, not barely in a way of chaſtiſement and correction, but in wrath and vengeance, conſuming and deſtroying all he had; and this he deſires might be done now, immediately, without delay, whilſt Job was in the midſt of his proſperity; for Satan was in haſte to have miſchief done to him, being an object of his great hatred and enmity: ſome, inſtead of now, render it, I pray thee [w], as being an intreaty of Satan, and an importunate one, and which he was eagerly deſirous of obtaining; well-knowing that no hurt could be done to Job without leave from God, or his doing it himſelf: the Vulgate Latin verſion is, put forth thine hand a little, as if its being exerted but a little, or a ſmall touch of it, would be ſufficient to diſcover Job's hypocriſy; but Satan doubtleſs knew Job better than this ſuggeſts, and that ſuch was his integrity, that a ſmall trial would not affect him; and beſides, he immediately adds: and touch all that he hath; which was not a ſlight touch, but an heavy one, reaching to all his family and ſubſtance, and to his perſon too, and the health of it at leaſt; as appears by the proviſo or ſaving clauſe put in by the Lord afterwards, when he gave leave to ſmite him: and he will curſe thee to thy face; or, if he does not curſe thee to thy face [x]; then let it be ſo and ſo with me, worſe than it now is; let me have my full damnation; for the words are an imprecation of the devil, wiſhing the worſt of evils to himſelf, if Job, in ſuch circumſtances, did not curſe God to his face; that is not only openly and publickly, but impudently; ſignifying that he would fly in his face, like a man paſſionate, furious, and enraged, and like thoſe wicked perſons, hungry and hardly beſtead, that would fret and curſe their king and their God, Iſ. viii. 21. or, like thoſe men who, under their pains and ſores, blaſphemed him that had power over them; Rev. xvi. 10. or like thoſe carnal profeſſors, whoſe words were ſtout againſt God, Mal. iii. 13. 19. in ſuch like paſſionate expreſſions Satan inſinuates Job would break out againſt God, murmuring at and complaining of his providence, arraigning his wiſdom, righteouſneſs, and holineſs, in his dealings with him: or, if he does not bleſs thee to thy face [y], as it may be rendered; that is, either he will bid thee farewell [z], and apoſtatize from thee, ſee the note on ℣. 5. as ſometimes nominal profeſſors do, when affliction and tribulation come upon them, they are offended, and drop their profeſſion, Matt. xiii. 21. or, as others, if he hath not bleſſed thee to thy face; [a] then let it be thus with me, that is, it will be then a clear caſe, that Job in times paſt had only bleſſed God to his face, or outwardly; he had only honoured him with his lips, but his heart was far from him, and his fear towards him, taught by the precept of men, as is the character of hypocrites, Iſ. xxix. 13. this Satan wickedly inſinuates; one of the Targums is, "if he does not provoke thee to the face of thy Word;" Ben. Melech interprets על פניך by thy life, and takes it to be the form of an oath.

℣. 12. And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, behold all that he hath is in thy power, &c.] This he ſaid not as angry and diſpleaſed with Job, or as entertaining any ill opinion of him through the ſuggeſtions of Satan, nor as gratifying that evil ſpirit; but in order to convince and confound him, and to try the grace of Job, that he might ſhine the brighter; and it may be obſerved, that the Lord alone had the ſovereign diſpoſe of all that Job had, and that Satan could have no power over him or his, but what was given him: only upon himſelf put not forth thine thine hand; thus the Lord reſtrained Satan, who could do nothing without his leave, and limits and bounds the preſent affliction of his ſervant to his family and eſtate; reſerving his perſon and the health of it for another temptation and trial: ſo Satan went forth from the preſence of the Lord; the Targum adds, with power, authority, liberty of acting; not from his general preſence, which is every-where, from whence there is no going; nor from his gracious preſence, in which he had not been; and much leſs his glorious preſence in heaven, from whence he had been caſt long ago; but from the place where the ſons and people of God worſhipped, and where he granted his preſence to them, and from converſing with God there: as ſoon as Satan had got leave, he at once went forth to execute what he had permiſſion to do, glad at heart he had ſo far ſucceeded; and eager upon doing all the miſchief he could to a man that was the butt of his malice, and the object of his envy and hatred; the ſad effects and conſequences of which follow.

℣. 13. And there was a day, &c.] Which according to the Targum was the firſt day of the week, but this is not certain, nor material; nor can it be ſaid whether it was the day following that, Satan had leave to do what he would with Job's ſubſtance, nor how long this was after that; for though Satan was no doubt eager upon it, and in haſte to do miſchief; yet beſides its requiring ſome time to get the Sabeans and Chaldeans to march out of their own country into Job's, ſo he would contrive and fix upon the moſt proper time to anſwer his ends and purpoſes, which was when his (Job's) ſons and daughters were eating, and drinking wine in their eldeſt brother's houſe; it ſhould rather be rendered, in the houſe of their brother, the firſt-born; that is, of Job; for בכור relates not to brethren, but to parents, as Guſſetius obſerves [a]: this was either the beginning of a new turn, or rotation of their feaſting with each other, which might begin with the elder brother; or this was his birthday; ſee ℣. 4, 5. and this was the day Satan pitched upon to bring all the following calamities and diſtreſſes upon Job; partly that they might fall with the greater weight upon him, and more ſenſibly affect him, coming upon him whilſt his family was feaſting; and whilſt he was pleaſing himſelf with the thoughts of having brought up his children to men's and women's eſtate, and of the affluent circumſtances they were in; and of the unity, harmony, and love that ſubſiſted amongſt them, of which their preſent feaſting together was a proof; and partly that theſe afflictions might the more look like the judgments of God upon him, juſt as the men of the old world were eating and drinking when the flood came and deſtroyed them all, Luke xvii. 27. and for the ſame reaſons theſe were all brought upon him in one day, to cruſh him the more; and that it might be thought the hand of God was in it, in a way of wrath and vengeance, and ſo irritate him to curſe him to his face, which was what Satan aimed at; ſee Iſ. xlvii. 8, 9. Rev. xviii. 7, 8.

℣. 14. And there came a meſſenger unto Job, &c.] Not a meſſenger of Satan, as Jarchi, or one of his angels, or evil ſpirits; though this is a ſenſe which is embraced not only by ſome Jewiſh Rabbins, but by ſeveral of the antient Chriſtian writers, as Sanctius on the place obſerves; and ſuch they ſuppoſe the other meſſengers after mentioned were; but both this and they were ſervants of Job, who eſcaped the calamity that came upon the reſt of their fellow-ſervants: and ſaid, the oxen were plowing; the 500 yoke of oxen Job had ℣. 3. which were all out in the fields, and employed in plowing them; and to plow with ſuch was uſual in thoſe times and countries, as it now is in ſome places; ſee 1 Kings xix. 19. and the aſſes feeding beſide them; beſide the oxen, where they were plowing, in paſture-ground, adjoining to the arable land; and beſide the ſervants that were plowing with the oxen: at their hands [b]; as it may be literally rendered, juſt by them, under their eye and care; or in their places [c]; where they ſhould be, and where they uſed to feed [d]; theſe were the 500 aſſes male and female reckoned among Job's ſubſtance, ℣. 3. which were brought hither to feed, and ſome for the ſervants to ride on; this plowed land being at ſome diſtance from Job's houſe; and others to carry the ſeed that was to be ſown here: now the ſituation and employment of theſe creatures are particularly mentioned, to ſhew that they were in their proper places, and at their proper work; and that what befel them was not owing to the want of care of them, or to the indolence and negligence of the ſervants.

℣. 15. And the Sabeans fell upon them, &c.] Or, Sheba fell [e]; that is, as Aben Ezra and Simeon Bar Tzemach ſupply it, an hoſt of the Sabeans, or a company of them; theſe were not the deſcendants of that Sheba, that ſprung from Ham, Gen. x. 7. nor of him that came from Shem, ℣. 28. but from Sheba, the ſon of Jokſhan, a ſon of Abraham by Keturah, who with the reſt of her ſons were ſent into the eaſt-country, the country of Job; and theſe Sabeans, who deſcended from the ſame, were his near neighbours, Gen. xxv. 3, 6. they were the inhabitants of one of the Arabia's, it is generally ſaid Arabia Felix; but that is not likely, ſince it was a very plenriful country, the inhabitants of which had no need to rob and plunder others; and beſides was at a great diſtance from the place of Job's habitation, and lay to the ſouth, and not the eaſt; though Strabo [f] indeed ſays, that the Sabeans inhabited Arabia Felix, and made excurſions into Syria, which agrees with theſe Sabeans; but rather Arabia Deſerta, as Spanheim [g] has abundantly proved, a barren place; hence we read of Sabeans from the wilderneſs, Ezek. xxiii. 42. the inhabitants of which lived upon the plunder of others; and theſe being naturally given to ſpoil and rapine, were fit perſons for Satan to work upon, as he does in the children of diſobedience; into whoſe hearts he put it to make ſuch a deſcent on Job's fields, and carry off his cattle, as they did; they fell upon his oxen and aſſes at once and unawares, in a body, in an hoſtile and furious manner: and took them away; as a booty; they did not kill them, but drove them off the ground, and led them into their own country for their uſe and ſervice: yea, they have ſlain the ſervants with the edge of the ſword; who were plowing with the oxen, and looking after the aſſes, and who might make an oppoſition though in vain; this was an addition to Job's affliction, that not only his cattle were carried ried off, but his ſervants were ſlain, who were born in his houſe, or bought with his money: and I only am eſcaped alone to tell thee; this ſingle ſervant was preſerved, either by the ſpecial providence of God, in kindneſs to Job, that he might know of a certainty, and exactly, and what had befallen him, and how it came to paſs, which men are naturally deſirous of; or elſe as it is generally thought through the malice and cunning of ſatan, that the tidings might the ſooner be brought to him, and more readily be believed by him, and ſtrike him with the greater ſurprize, a ſervant of his own running with it, whom he knew, and could believe; and he appearing with the utmoſt concern of mind, and horror in his countenance.

℣. 16. While he was yet ſpeaking, there came alſo another, &c.] Another meſſenger, one of Job's ſervants, from another part of his fields where his ſheep were grazing, and was one of thoſe that kept them; he came with another piece of bad news, even before the other had finiſhed his whole account; and the ſame is obſerved of all the other meſſengers that follow: ſo Satan ordered it, that all Job's afflictions ſhould come upon him at once, and the news of them be brought him as thick and as faſt as they could, to ſurprize him the more into ſome raſh expreſſions againſt God; that he might have no intermiſſion, no breathing time; no time for prayer to God to ſupport him under the affliction, and ſanctify it unto him; no time for meditation upon, or recollection of paſt experiences of divine goodneſs, or of promiſes that might have been uſeful to him; but they came one upon the back of another, to hurry him into ſome indecent carriageand behaviour towards God, being conſidered by him as his judgments upon him: and ſaid, the fire of God is fallen from heaven; which the ſervant thought, or ſatan put it into his mind to ſay, that it came immediately from God, like that which deſtroyed Nadab and Abihu and the murmurers in the camp of Iſrael, Lev. x. 2. Numb. xi. 1. or as it is commonly thought, is ſo called, becauſe a moſt vehement one, as a vehement flame is called the the flame of the Lord, Cant. viii. 6. this being ſuch a fire as was never known, ſince the fire that came down from heaven and deſtroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities of the plain. I am inclined to think it was a prodigious flaſh or flaſhes of lightening; for as thunder is the voice of God, ſo lightening, which accompanies it, may be called the fire of God; and this agrees with the phraſeology of the paſſage; it comes from heaven, or the air, and falls upon the earth, and ſtrikes creatures and things in it; and which, as it is the effect of natural cauſes, ſatan might be permitted to join them together and effect it; and this was done, and the news of it expreſſed in ſuch language as to make Job believe, that God was againſt him, and become his enemy, and that the artillery of heaven was imployed to his hurt, and to the ruin of his ſubſtance: and hath burnt up the ſheep, and the ſervants, and conſumed them; as the fire or lightening which came down from heaven and conſumed the captains, and their fifties, in Elijah's time, 2 Kings i. 10, 12. and ſuch like effects of lightening are often to be obſerved, both with reſpect to men and cattle; theſe were the 7000 ſheep Job was poſſeſſed of, ℣. 3. and which were all deſtroyed at once, with the ſervants that kept them, excepting one; creatures very increaſing, and very uſeful both for food and cloathing, and alſo uſed for ſacrifice; and it is thought that ſatan's end in the deſtruction of theſe was, that Job might conclude from hence, that his ſacrifices were not acceptable to God, and therefore it was in vain to ſerve him; which he hoped by this means to bring him to expreſs in a paſſionate manner to God: and I only am eſcaped alone to tell thee; ſee the note on ℣. 15.

℣. 17. While he was yet ſpeaking, there came alſo another, &c.] Another meſſenger from another part of Job's poſſeſſions where his camels were, and this before the laſt meſſenger had told his ſtory out: and ſaid, the Chaldeans made out three bands, and fell upon the camels, and have carried them away; theſe were the 3000 camels as in ℣. 3. and perhaps they were in three ſeparate companies and places, 1000 in each, and therefore the Chaldeans divided themſelves into three bands; or appointed three heads [f], as it may be rendered; there were three bodies of them under ſo many leaders and commanders, and this was done, that they might the more eaſily take them; and they diffuſed or ſpread themſelves [g], as the word ſignifies, upon or about the camels; they ſurrounded them on all ſides, or otherwiſe, theſe being ſwift creatures, would have run away from them: theſe Chaldeans or Chaſdim were the deſcendants of Cheſed, a ſon of Nahor, who was brother to Abraham, Gen. xxii. 20, 22. who ſettled in the eaſt-country, not far from Job: and this agrees with the character that Xenophon [h] gives of the Chaldeans, at leaſt of ſome of them in after-times; that they lived upon robbing and plundering others, having no knowledge of agriculture, but got their bread by force of arms; and ſuch as theſe Satan could eaſily inſtigate to come, and carry off Job's camels: yea, and ſlain the ſervants with the edge of the ſword, and I only am eſcaped alone to tell thee; ſee the note on ℣. 15.

℣. 18. While he was yet ſpeaking, there came another, &c.] A ſervant of one of Job's ſons, who was in waiting at the feaſt before mentioned, and here again repeated: and ſaid, thy ſons and thy daughters were eating, and drinking wine in their eldeſt brother's houſe; ſee the note on ℣. 13.

℣. 19. And behold, there came a great wind from the wilderneſs, &c.] Moſt probably from the wilderneſs of Arabia, winds from ſuch places being generally very ſtrong, Jer. iv. 11, 12. as this was, and is called a great one, a very ſtrong and bluſtering one; and being ſo, and becauſe of the effects of it, and being an uncommon and extraordinary one, as what follows ſhows, a behold, is prefixed to the account, exciting attention and wonder: and ſmote the four corners of the houſe; which ſhows it to be an unuſual wind, it blowing from all parts and on all ſides; and was either a whirlwind, which whirled about this houſe; or ſatan with his poſſe of devils with him, took the advantage of the ſweep of it, as it came by this houſe, and with all their force and ſtrength, might and main, whirled it about it; otherwiſe ſatan has no power to raiſe winds, and allay them at pleaſure; God only creates them, holds them in his fiſts, and brings them out of his treaſures; and this wind blowing from the deſert, the devil and his angels took the opportunity, and with ſuch violence whirled it about the houſe that it fell, as follows: and it fell upon the young men, and they are dead; not upon Job's ſons only, but upon his daughters alſo, the the word uſed takes in both; and Mr. Broughton renders it, and it fell upon the young folk: this was the ſoreſt affliction of all, and which ſatan reſerved to the laſt, that if the others did not ſucceed to his wiſh, this might; and a very trying, grievous one it was, to loſe all his children at once in ſuch a manner, and at ſuch a time; his children, which were parts of himſelf, whom he had taken ſo much care of in their education, who had been as olive-plants about his table, and now brought up to mens and womens eſtates, comfortably ſettled in the world, and living in great peace and harmony among themſelves, and not one of them left to comfort him under his other afflictions; and theſe taken away not by any diſtemper of body, which would have prepared him for the ſtroke, but by a violent death; and which had the appearance of the hand and judgment, wrath and vengeance of God; and whilſt they were feaſting together in mirth and gaiety, however innocent, and not in a ſerious frame of ſpirit, or having any ſerious turn upon their minds for death and eternity, of which they had no thought; had they been in the houſe of God attending religious worſhip, or though in their own houſes, yet either in their cloſets praying, or elſe converſing about ſpiritual things with one another, it would have greatly taken off of the affliction; but to be ſnatched into eternity at once, and in this manner, muſt be cutting to Job; though there is no reaſon to think that this was for any ſin of theirs, or through any diſpleaſure of God to them, but was permitted purely on Job's account, for the trial of his faith, patience, ſincerity and integrity; and here, as in the former inſtances, only one ſervant was ſpared to bring the ſad tidings: and I only am eſcaped alone to tell thee; ſo that all the ſervants in the houſe, excepting this, periſhed in the ruins of it, as well as Job's ſons and daughters, ſee the note on ℣. 15. It is a notion of ſome Jewiſh writers, as Simeon bar Tzemach obſerves, that theſe ſeveral meſſengers as ſoon as they had delivered their meſſage died, and ſo all that Job had was delivered into the hands of ſatan, and nothing left; but this ſeems contrary to ch. xix. 16. It may be obſerved that Ariſteas, an heathen writer, as quoted by Alexander Polyhiſtor [i], another heathen writer, gives an account of theſe ſeveral calamities of Job, juſt in the ſame order in which they are here. It may be obſerved from all this, that no character ever ſo great and high can ſecure perſons from afflictions, even grievous ones; Job had an high and honourable character given and confirmed by God himſelf, yet ſo ſorely afflicted; and let men be the beloved of God, his choſen and precious, his covenant-people, the redeemed of the Lamb, righteous and godly perſons, the ſons and heirs of God, yet neither, and all of theſe, exempt them from afflictions; and thoſe that befal them are many, frequent and continued, and come from different quarters, from men good and bad, and from devils, and all by the permiſſion and according to the will of God. And this ſhews us the uncertainty of all outward enjoyments, gold, ſilver, cattle, houſes, lands, children, friends and relations, all periſhing, and ſometimes ſuddenly taken away: and it may be obſerved among all Job's loſſes, he did not loſe any thing of a ſpiritual nature, not one ſpiritual bleſſing; though he loſt all his outward mercies, yet not the God of his mercies; not his covenant-intereſt in him, nor his ſhare in his love, favour and acceptance, which all ſtill continued; he did not loſe his intereſt in a living redeemer; his children were all dead, but his redeemer lived, and he knew it; he did not loſe the principle of grace in him, the root of the matter was ſtill with him; nor any one particular grace, not his faith and confidence in God, nor his hope of eternal life, nor his love and affection to God, and deſire after him; nor his patience and humility; nor his integrity, faithfulneſs and honeſty, which he retained and held faſt; nor any of his ſpiritual riches which are durable; he had riches in heaven, where thieves cannot break through and ſteal, a better and a more enduring ſubſtance there, an inheritance incorruptible, reſerved in the heavens: his conduct under all this follows.

℣. 20. Then Job aroſe, &c.] Either from table, being at dinner, as ſome think, in his own houſe; it being the time that his children were feaſting in their eldeſt brother's houſe; or from the buſineſs in which he was employed, which he left off on hearing this news; or from his ſeat, or chair of ſtate, in which he ſat; or rather the phraſe only ſignifies, that he at once, with ſtrength of body, and vigour of mind, which were not loſt, as often they are in ſuch caſes, went about the following things with great compoſure and ſedateneſs. It is indeed generally obſerved, that there is an emphaſis to be put on the word then, which may be as well rendered and, as if Job ſat and heard very ſedately, without any perturbation of mind, the loſs of his ſubſtance; but when tidings were brought him of the death of his children, then he aroſe as being greatly moved and diſtreſſed; but it ſhould be obſerved till now there was no ſtop or intermiſſion in the meſſengers, but before one had done ſpeaking, another came and began to tell his ſtory, and ſo there was no opportunity, as well as not the occaſion, of ariſing and doing what follows; and which he did, not through the violence of his paſſion, or exceſs of grief, but as common and ordinary things, which were uſed to be done in that country for the loſs of relations, and in token of mourning for them: and rent his mantle; or cloak [k], as Mr. Broughton; but whether this was an outward garment, as each of theſe ſeem to be, if the ſame with ours, or an interior one, as ſome think, it is not very material to know; both were rent by Ezra upon a mournful occaſion, Ezra ix. 3. and it was uſual to rend garments for deceaſed relations, or when they were thought to be ſo, ſee Gen. xxxvii. 29, 34. though ſome think that this was on the account of the blaſphemous thoughts the devil now ſuggeſted into his mind, being ſolicitous to gain his point, and work upon him to curſe God; upon which he rent his garment to ſhew his reſentment and indignation at the thought of it, as the Jews uſed to rend their garments at hearing of blaſphemy; but the firſt ſenſe is beſt: and ſhaved his beard; either he himſelf, or his ſervant by his orders; and which was done among the eaſtern nations as a ſign of mourning, ſee Iſ. xv. 2. Jer. xvi. 6. and xlviii. 37. and among the Greeks, as appears from Homer [l]; nor was this contrary to the law in Deut. xiv. 1. where another baldneſs, not of the head, but between the eyes, is forbidden for the dead; beſides, this was before that law was in being, and had it been, Job was not bound by it, being not of the Iſraelitiſh nation: ſome, as Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and other Jewiſh writers, ters, interpret this of his plucking or tearing off the hair of his head; but this neither agrees with the ſenſe of the word here uſed, which has the ſignification of ſhearing or mowing, rather than of tearing or plucking, nor with the firmneſs and compoſure of Job's mind, who betrayed not any effeminacy or weakneſs; and though he ſhewed a natural affection for the loſs of his ſubſtance, and children, as a man, and did not affect a ſtoical apathy, and brutal inſenſibility, yet did not give any extraordinary vent to his paſſion: he behaved both like a man, and a religious man; he mourned for his dead, but not to exceſs; he ſorrowed not as thoſe without hope, and uſed the common tokens of it, and rites attending it; which ſhews that mourning for deceaſed relations, if done in moderation, is not unlawful, nor complying with the rites and cuſtoms of a country, in ſuch caſes, provided they are not ſinful in themſelves, nor contrary to the revealed and declared will of God: and fell down upon the ground; in veneration of God, of his holineſs and juſtice, and as ſenſible of his awful hand upon him, and as being humbled under it, and patiently ſubmitting to it; he did not ſtand up, and curſe God to his face, as Satan ſaid he would, but fell upon his face to the ground; he did not curſe his king and his God, and look upwards, ſee Iſ. viii. 21. but proſtrated himſelf to the earth in great humility before him; beſides, this may be conſidered as a prayer-geſture, ſince it follows: and worſhipped; that is, God, for who elſe ſhould he worſhip? he worſhipped him internally in the exerciſe of faith, hope, love, humility, patience, &c. and he worſhipped him externally by praiſing him, and praying to him, expreſſing himſelf as in the next verſe: afflictions, when ſanctified, humble good men, cauſe them to lie low in the duſt, and bring them near to God, to the throne of his grace, and inſtead of arraigning his providence, and finding fault with his dealings, they adore his majeſty, and celebrate his perfections.

℣. 21. And ſaid, naked came I out of my mother's womb, &c.] Either literally, where he was conceived and lay, and from whence he came into the world, though he afterwards wiſhes he never had, or had died as ſoon as he did, ch. iii. 10—12. and ſo it is expreſſive of his birth, and the circumſtance of it; or figuratively, his mother-earth, from whence the firſt man ſprang, and ſo all his poſterity with him, being as he of the earth, earthly, ſee Eccl. xii. 7. which ſenſe is mentioned by Jarchi and Aben Ezra; but the firſt ſenſe ſeems beſt: the nakedneſs referred to is not of the mind or ſoul, being deſtitute of righteouſneſs and holineſs, with which the following clauſe will by no means agree, but nakedneſs of body; and therefore as ſoon as a child is born, one of the firſt things done to it is to wrap it in cloaths provided for it, ſee Ezek. xvi. 4. Luke ii. 7. and alſo a being without the things of this life; the apoſtle's words are a proper comment on theſe, and explain them, and perhaps theſe are referred to by him, we brought nothing into this world, 1 Tim. vi. 7. this ſhews the neceſſity of the early care of providence over us, and what reaſon we have to be thankful for unknown mercies at the time of birth, and in the ſtate of infancy, Pſ. xxii. 9. and lxxi. 6. and what obligations children lie under to parents, and what benefits they receive from them at their firſt entrance into the world, and which they ſhould religiouſly requite when thro' old age they ſtand in need of their aſſiſtance, 1 Tim. v. 4. and this may alſo ſerve to abate the pride of man, who will have no reaſon to boaſt of his riches, nor of his fine cloaths, when he conſiders his original nakedneſs; and more eſpecially the uſe of it may be, and which ſeems to be the uſe Job made of it, to make the mind eaſy under the greateſt loſſes. Job conſidered he did not bring his ſubſtance, his ſervants, and his children into the world with him; and now they were taken from him, he was but as he was when he came into the world, and not at all the worſe; he knew how to be abaſed, and to abound, and in both was content: and naked ſhall I return thither; not into his mother's womb in a literal ſenſe, which was impoſſible, John iii. 4. but to the earth, and to the duſt of it, Gen. iii. 19. Eccl. xii. 7. pointing to it with his finger, on which he now lay; meaning that he ſhould go to the place appointed for him, the grave, the houſe of all living, ch. xxx. 23. and ſo the Targum here has it, "to the houſe of the grave," where he ſhould lie unſeen, as in his mother's womb, till the reſurrection-morn; which would be a kind of a regeneration of him, when he ſhould be delivered up from thence, and enjoy a ſtate of happineſs and glory: he ſhould deſcend into the grave as naked as he was born, reſpecting not ſo much the nakedneſs of his body, as being ſtripped of all worldly enjoyments, ſee Eccl. v. 15. and he ſays this in his preſent view of things; he thought once he ſhould have died in his neſt, ch. xxix. 18. in the midſt of all his proſperity, and left a large ſubſtance to his children; but now all was taken away, and for the preſent had no hope or expectation of a reſtoration, as afterwards was; but whereas he was now naked and bare of all, he expected he ſhould continue and die ſo: or this is ſaid with reſpect to the common caſe of men, who it is certain cannot carry any thing out of the world with them, either riches or honour, but muſt leave all behind them, 1 Tim. vi. 7. Pſ. xlix. 16, 17. which may ſerve to looſen the minds of men from worldly things, not to ſet their eyes and hearts upon them, nor to put their truſt and confidence in them; and good men may part with them, eſpecially at death, with pleaſure, ſince they will have no farther uſe of them, and will have a better, and a more enduring ſubſtance in their ſtead: the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; all outward enjoyments, all the good things of this world are the Lord's, and at his diſpoſe; the earth, and the fulneſs of it; kingdoms, nations, countries, houſes and lands; the beaſts of the field, and cattle on a thouſand hills; the gold and ſilver, and all the riches of the earth: and theſe are the gifts of his providence to the ſons of men; nor have they any thing but in a way of giving and receiving; and even what they enjoy, thro' diligence and induſtry, is owing to the bleſſing of God; and who gives not in ſuch ſort as that he loſes his property in what is given; this he ſtill retains, theſe are talents which he puts into the hands of men to uſe for themſelves and others, and for which they are accountable to him; and they are but ſtewards, with whom he will hereafter reckon, and therefore has a right to take away when he pleaſes; and both Job aſcribes to God, not only the giving, but the taking away: he does not attribute his loſſes to ſecond cauſes, to the Sabeans and Chaldeans, to the fire from heaven, and the wind from the deſert, but to God, whoſe ſovereign will and over-ruling hand were in all; theſe were but the inſtruments of Satan, and he had no power but what was given from God; and therefore to the counſel of his will who ſuffered

it, Job refers it, and for that reaſon ſits down ſatisfied and quiet. This is all to be underſtood of temporal things only; for of ſpiritual things it cannot be ſaid, that God gives and takes away; ſuch gifts are without repentance, and are irreverſible, Rom. xi. 29. the Targum is, "the Word of the Lord hath given, and the Word of the Lord, and the houſe of his judgment hath taken away;" the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions add, "as it pleaſed the Lord; ſo it is done:" bleſſed be the name of the Lord; for all his bleſſings and mercies; for all the gifts of nature and providence that had been beſtowed, which could not be claimed, and of which he knew himſelf unworthy; and for the continuance of them ſo long with him; goodneſs and mercy had followed him all the days of his life hitherto, and ſtill he had mercies to bleſs God for; his wife was ſtill with him, he had ſome ſervants left, his own life was ſpared; he continued as yet in health of body, and therefore could ſing of mercy as well as judgment; nor is there any ſtate on earth a man can be in, but there is ſomething to bleſs God for; wherefore the apoſtle's exhortation will always hold good; in every thing give thanks; 1 Theſſ. v. 18. beſides the name, the nature, the perfections of God are always the ſame, and therefore always to be celebrated, and bleſſing, honour and glory are to be aſcribed to him continually, in every ſtate and condition of life; wherefore the Arabic verſion adds, from henceforth, and for ever, which agrees with Pſ. lxxii. 19. and thus Job, inſtead of curſing God bleſſes him, and proves the devil to be a liar, as he was from the beginning; and ſhews his ſuperiority over him through the power of divine grace; this evil one could not touch him, he was overcome by him, and his deſigns defeated.

℣. 22. In all this Job ſinned not, &c.] Not that he was without ſin, he was conſcious to himſelf of it, and owns it, ch. ix. 20, 30, 31. but in all the above things he did or ſaid, he ſinned not; not in his rending his garments, in ſhaving his head, and laying himſelf proſtrate on the ground, which were done as common uſages in ſuch caſes, and not through exceſs of paſſion; nor in any thing that dropped from his lips, which were ill becoming the character he bore as a religious man; and though he might be guilty of ſome failings and imperfections, as the beſt of men are, even in doing the beſt of things, yet he ſinned not that ſin the devil ſaid he would, that is, curſe God to his face; there was nothing of this, nor like it, but the reverſe of it in all he ſaid and did: nor charged God fooliſhly; or gave not folly to him[m]; did not aſcribe it to him, did not arraign his wiſdom, nor charge him with folly; though there might be ſome things he could not account for, or ſee into the reaſons of them, he knew the Lord could; he conſidered that he was a God of knowledge, the only and all-wiſe God, and did all things after the counſel of his will, and to anſwer the beſt ends and purpoſes, and therefore he ſubmitted all to his wiſdom; nor did he himſelf ſpeak fooliſhly of him, arraigning his juſtice and holineſs, as if he had done wrong to him; he knew there was no unrighteouſneſs in God, nor in any of his ways and works, and that he had a right to do what he would with his own, to give and take it away at his pleaſure: he ſpoke nothing that was unſavoury[n], as the word ſignifies; nothing contrary to right reaſon and true religion; nothing unſuitable unto, or unbecoming him as a man, as a religious man, as in connection with God, a ſervant of his, and one that feared him. The Arabic verſion is, nor blaſphemed God; and the Targum, "neither did he ſet in order words of blaſphemy before God;" he did not curſe God, as Satan ſaid he would, neither in heart and thought, nor in words; this is a teſtimony of him given by the Lord himſelf, the ſearcher of hearts, and who only could give ſuch a teſtimony of him; and which, as Cocceius obſerves, is a proof of the divine authority of this book.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter gives an account of a ſecond trial of Job's conſtancy and integrity, the time and occaſion of it, ℣. 1—3. the motion made for it by Satan, which being granted, he ſmote him from head to foot with ſore boils, which he endured very patiently, ℣. 4—8. during which ſad affliction he is urged by his wife to give up his integrity, which he bravely reſiſted, ℣. 9, 10. and the chapter is concluded with an account of a viſit of three of Job's friends, and of their conduct and behaviour towards him, ℣. 11—13.

℣. 1. Again, there was a day, when the ſons of God came to preſent themſelves before the Lord, &c.] When good men, profeſſors of religion, met together by agreement to worſhip the Lord; the Targum calls them companies of angels, interpreting the words of them, and of their ſtanding before the Lord, as moſt interpreters do; how long this time of their meeting was from the former, cannot be ſaid, probably but a few days, a week or fortnight at moſt; the Targum ſays, it was on the day of the great judgment, and which, as in ch. i. 6. was at the beginning of the year; ſo that according to this, and other Jewiſh writers, there was a whole year between this and the former meeting, and ſo between the firſt and ſecond trial of Job; but this is not likely, ſince Satan would never give him ſo much breathing time; nor can it be thought that Job's friends ſhould ſtay ſo long before they paid him a viſit, which was not till after this day: and ſatan came alſo among them to preſent himſelf before the Lord; being either obliged to it upon a ſummons to appear before God, and give an account of what he had been doing on the earth, and eſpecially to Job; or rather he came willingly, ſeeking an opportunity to continue his charge againſt Job, and to accuſe him afreſh, and get his commiſſion enlarged to do him more miſchief, which he could not do without a freſh grant.

℣. 2. And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, whence cameſt thou? &c.] The ſame queſtion is put to him, and the ſame anſwer is returned by him as in ch. i. 7. ſee the notes there.

℣. 3. And the Lord ſaid unto ſatan, haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job, that there is none like him, &c.] The ſame with this is alſo before put unto unto Satan, and the ſame character given of Job, which is here continued and confirmed, with an addition to it; for Job was no loſer, but a gainer in his character by his afflictions and trials: and ſtill he holdeth faſt his integrity. The firſt man Adam was made upright, but by ſinning he loſt his integrity, and ſince the fall there is none in man naturally; it is only to be found in regenerate and renewed perſons, who have right ſpirits renewed in them; by which principle of grace wrought in them, they become upright in heart, and walk uprightly. The word uſed ſignifies perfection [o], which Job had not in himſelf, but in Chriſt; though it may denote the truth and ſincerity of his grace, and the uprightneſs of his walk, and the ſimplicity of his converſation, the biaſs of his mind, and the tenour of his conduct and behaviour towards God and men; this principle he retained, this frame and diſpoſition of ſoul continued with him, and he acted up to it in all things; he held faſt his faith and confidence in the Lord his God, and he profeſſed his cordial love and ſincere affection for God, and his filial fear and reverence of him; and this he did ſtill, notwithſtanding all the aſſaults and temptations of ſatan, and all the ſore afflictions and trials he met with; an inſtance this of perſevering grace, and of the truth of what Job after expreſſes, ch. xvii. 9. and this he did, even ſays the Lord to ſatan, although thou movedſt me againſt him, to deſtroy him without cauſe; not that Satan could work upon God as he does upon men, both good and bad, eſpecially the latter; nor could he ſo work upon him as to cauſe him to change his mind and will, who is unchangeable in his nature and purpoſes; but the ſenſe is, he made a motion to him, he propoſed it, requeſted and intreated, and did not barely propoſe it, but urged it with importunity, was very ſolicitous to have it done; and he prevailed and ſucceeded according to God's own determinate counſel and will, though only in part; for he moved him to deſtroy him, himſelf, his body, if not his ſoul; for this roaring lion ſeeks to devour men, even the ſheep and lambs of Chriſt's flock: or to ſwallow him up [p], as the word ſignifies; that he might be delivered to him, who would make but one morſel of him, ſwallow him up alive, as a lion, any creature, or any other beaſt of prey. Mr. Broughton renders it, to undo him; and we ſay of a man, when he has loſt his ſubſtance, that he is undone; and in this ſenſe Job was deſtroyed or undone, for he had loſt his all: and this motion was made without cauſe, there was no juſt reaſon for it; what ſatan ſuggeſted, and the calumny he caſt upon Job, was not ſupported by him, he could give no proof nor evidence of it; and it was in the iſſue and event in vain, as the word [q] may be rendered; for he did not appear, notwithſtanding all that was done to him, to be the man Satan ſaid he was, nor to do the things, or ſay the words, ſatan ſaid he would.

℣. 4. And ſatan anſwered the Lord, and ſaid, &c.] Satan would not as yet own that Job was the man the Lord had deſcribed; but ſtill would ſuggeſt, that he was a ſelfiſh and mercenary man, and that what had been done to him was not a ſufficient trial of his integrity; the thing had not been puſhed far and cloſe enough to diſcover him; he had loſt indeed his ſubſtance, and moſt of his ſervants, and all his children, but ſtill he had not only his own life, but his health and eaſe; and ſo long as he enjoyed theſe he would ſerve God, tho' only for the ſake of them: and therefore, ſays he, as it is uſually and proverbially ſaid, ſkin for ſkin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life; the Targum is, "member for member;" which the Jewiſh commentators, many of them, explain thus, that if a man's head or his eyes are in danger, he will lift up his hand or his arm, and expoſe that in order to ſave the other; but the word is generally uſed of the ſkin, and ſo it may in this ſenſe; and mean the ſkin of his hand, as a ſhield for the ſkin of his head or eye, as Guſſetius obſerves [r]: ſome underſtand it of the ſkins of others for his own ſkin, which he will part with, that he may keep that; nay he'll give all that he is poſſeſſed of for the preſervation of his life, ſo dear is that unto him; meaning either the ſkins of beaſts, in whom the principal ſubſtance of men conſiſted in thoſe times and countries, and whoſe ſkins ſlain for food, and in ſacrifice, might be of worth and value, and uſed in traffick; or, as others think, money cut out of leather made of ſkins, is meant, which a man would part with, even all ſuch money he had in the world, and even his ſuppellex, or all the goods of his houſe, for to ſave his life: or the ſenſe is, that Job would not only give the ſkin of his beaſts, even of all that he had, for his own ſkin, but the ſkins of his ſervants, nay, his of own children, provided he could but keep his own ſkin; and hereby Satan ſuggeſts, that Job did not regard the loſs of his cattle, nor of his ſervants, nor even of his children, ſo long as he had his own life and health; and thus repreſents him as a lover of himſelf, and as cruel and hard-hearted, and without natural affections to his children; the contrary to which is very manifeſt from ch. i. 5. or rather this deſigns his own ſkin, and may be rendered, ſkin upon ſkin, or ſkin even unto ſkin, or ſkin within ſkin [s]; for man has two ſkins, an inward and an outward one, called the cutis and cuticula, derma and epidermis; the latter is of a whitiſh colour, and is properly the covering of the ſkin, is very thin, and void of ſenſation [t], which may be raiſed up by a bliſter, and taken off without pain; but the other is reddiſh, and very ſenſible of pain, and cannot be taken off without putting a man to the moſt exquiſite miſery; and yet a man will part with both his ſkins, and if he had ever ſo many; or be willing to be put to the greateſt torment, rather than part with his life: and to this one point all the above ſenſes, and others given by interpreters, tend, namely, to obſerve how precious the life of man is to him; and if this was all that Satan meant, it is very true; but he ſeems to inſinuate ſomething more, and that is, that any man, and ſo Job, tho' reckoned a good man, would not only part with all the ſkins he had, and all the ſubſtance he was poſſeſſed of, to ſave his life, but he would part with his God, and his religion, and the profeſſion of it, for the ſake of it, which is falſe; for there is ſomething more valuable than life to good men; they reckon the loving-kindneſs of God better than life, and would ſooner loſe their lives than riſque the danger of loſing their intereſt in it; and are willing to part with their lives for the ſake of God, and true religion, for the ſake of Chriſt, and his goſpel, and for his cauſe and intereſt, as many have done.

℣. 5. But put forth thine hand now, and touch his bone and his fleſh, &c.] That is, his body, which conſiſted of fleſh and bones; theſe are the conſtituent parts of the body, and which diſtinguiſh it from ſpirit, Luke xxiv. 39. this is the motion made by Satan for a ſecond trial of Job's integrity; he moves that God would take off his hand of providence over him, which ſecured his health unto him, and ſtretch his hand of power upon him, and fill his fleſh with diſeaſes, and his bones with rottenneſs; or break them, and touch him to the quick, to the marrow, which gives exquiſite pain; or by his bone may be meant him himſelf [u]: and he will curſe thee to thy face; he will fly in thy face, arraign thy providence, and call in queſtion thy wiſdom, juſtice, truth, and faithfulneſs: or he'll bleſs thee [w], and take his farewel of thee [x], and have nothing more to do with thee or religion; if he does not do this, for ſomething is to be underſtood, the words being an imprecation, let me be in a worſe condition than I am at preſent; let me not have the liberty of ranging about in the earth, to do the miſchief I delight in; let me be bound, and caſt into the bottomleſs pit before my time, or be thrown into the lake burning with fire and brimſtone, where I know I muſt be for ever.

℣. 6. And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, Behold, he is in thine hand, &c.] Well may a behold be prefixed to this, it being matter of wonder and aſtoniſhment that a ſaint and ſervant of God ſhould be permitted to be in the hand of Satan; which yet muſt not be ſo underſtood; as if he was off of, and no more upon the heart of God; or as if he was out of the hands of God, and out of the hands of Chriſt; or as if he was become Satan's property, and a child of his; for neither of theſe can be true of a good man: nothing can ſeparate him from the love of God; not Satan and all his principalities and powers; nor can men or devils pluck them out of his hands, nor out of the hands of his ſon; nor can thoſe who are the children of God be any more the ſervants of ſin, or the vaſſals of Satan; or in other words, nor can any of them be a child of God one day, and a child of the devil the next, which is the divinity of ſome men: nor is the ſenſe of this paſſage, that Satan had leave to do with Job as he pleaſed, for then he would have utterly deſtroyed him; but the power granted him was a limited one, as follows: but ſave his life; or ſoul [y]; which ſome underſtand of his rational ſoul, that which remains after death, and which Maimonides [z] obſerves, Satan has no power over; and according to ſome, the meaning is, don't diſturb his mind to diſtraction, ſo as to deprive him of his ſenſes, and of the exerciſe of his rational powers, which through the influence of Satan men have ſometimes loſt; ſee Mark v. 4, 5. this is barred againſt in the permiſſion granted; for otherwiſe it would not have been a proper trial of Job's integrity; for, ſhould he have been deprived of his reaſon, and uttered ever ſuch bad things, it would have been no proof of his inſincerity; as may be obſerved in good men in a delirium, they will utter bad words, and do or attempt to do bad things, which is not to be aſcribed to their want of grace, but to their want of reaſon: but rather life is meant; not Job's ſpiritual life, for that was in no danger of being loſt; all the devils in hell can't deprive a truly good man of his ſpiritual life; grace in him is a well of living water, ſpringing up to eternal life; he can never die the ſecond death; his life is hid with Chriſt in God, and is bound up in the bundle of life with the Lord his God, who ſo is out of the reach of Satan; but corporal life, which the devil by permiſſion may take away, and is ſaid to have the power of death, which by leave he exerciſed over men, but here he is reſtrained from it: Job's life muſt be ſpared, that it might fully appear he got the victory over Satan, and ſtood in his integrity; and that he might ſtill glorify God in a courſe of afflictions he was yet to endure, in the exerciſe of his faith, hope, love, patience, humility, ſubmiſſion, and reſignation of his will to God; and beſides, his appointed time was not come, he had many more days, months, and years, the number of which were with God, to live in the world, as he accordingly did.

℣. 7. So went Satan forth from the preſence of the Lord, &c.] With leave and licence, with power and authority, as the Targum; having got his commiſſion enlarged on a freſh grant, to do more miſchief to Job, he departed directly and immediately, being eager to put in execution what he had a permiſſion to do; ſee the note on ch. i. 12. and ſmote Job with ſore boils, from the ſole of his foot unto his crown; with hot and burning ulcers, ſuch as were inflicted on the Egyptians in the plague of the boils and blains, called the botch of Egypt, ſee Exod. ix. 10, 11. Deut. xxviii. 27. it is in the original text with a bad boil, or the worſt [a]; it was as it were but one boil; they ſtood ſo thick and cloſe together, that they were as one, reaching from head to foot, and ſpreading all over his body, ſo that there was no part free; he was full of ſores as Lazarus, and to him may be applied what is ſaid in a figurative ſenſe of the Jews, Iſ. i. 6. and this boil or boils were of the worſt ſort, and moſt hot and angry, and gave the moſt exquiſite pain, and what Job was ſmitten with at once; they did not riſe up in pimples and puſtules at the firſt, and gradually gathered and came to an head, but he was at once covered with burning ulcers at their height, and with running ſores; this was done by Satan, through divine permiſſion; who, when he has leave, can inflict diſeaſes on the bodies of men, as he did in the days of Chriſt on earth, ſee Matt. xvii. 15, 18. Luke xiii. 16. ſome Jewiſh writers, as R. Simeon, ſay, that the devil heated the air, and thereby cauſed an inflammation in Job's blood, which broke out in boils; but then this would have affected others beſides him: many are the conjectures of learned men [b] about this diſeaſe of Job's, ſome taking it to be the leproſy [c], others the ſcurvy, others an eriſypelas, &c. Bolducius reckons up no leſs than fourteen diſeaſes that are attributed to him, collected from his own words, ch. vii. 5. and xvi. 13, 15, 16. and xix. 20. and xxx. 16, 17, 18, 19. a late learned writer [d] thinks it was the ſmall-pox.

℣. 8. And he took him a potſherd to ſcrape himſelf withal, &c.] His mouth was ſhut, his lips were ſilent, not one murmuring and repining word came from him, amidſt all this anguiſh and miſery he muſt be in; much leſs any thing that looked like curſing curſing God and blaſpheming him, as ſome are ſaid to do, becauſe of their pains and their ſores, Rev. xvi. 11. but Job bore his with the utmoſt patience; he took a piece of a broken pot, which perhaps lay in the aſhes among which he ſat, and ſcraped himſelf with it; either as ſome think to allay the itching, or rather to remove the purulent matter that ran from his boils; which he uſed inſtead of linnen rags to wipe them with, having no Chirurgeon to come near him, to mollify his ulcers with ointment, to ſupple them with oil, and lay healing plaſters upon them; there were none to do any of theſe things for him; his maids and his ſervants, and even his wife, ſtood at ſome diſtance from him; the ſmell of him might be ſo nauſeous, that it was intolerable, he was obliged to do what was done himſelf, which is here mentioned; though it ſeems ſomething ſtrange and unnatural, conſidering his caſe; Schmidt thinks that this ſcraping was done by him as a rite and ceremony uſed by mourners in thoſe times and countries, and which Job would not omit though his body was full of ſores: and he ſat down among the aſhes; which was often done in caſes of mourning and humiliation, ſee Jonah iii. 6. Matt. xi. 21. and which Job did to humble himſelf under the mighty hand of God upon him; whether theſe aſhes were without or within doors is not certain; ſome think they were without, and that he had no houſe to dwell in, nor bed to lie on, nor couch to ſit upon, and therefore was obliged to do as he did; but the contrary is evident from ch. vii. 13. and xix. 15. others ſay, that his diſeaſe being the leproſy, he was obliged to ſit alone and without; but it is not certain that that was his diſeaſe; and beſides, the law concerning lepers did not as yet exiſt; and had it, it would not have been binding on Job, who was not of the Iſraelitiſh nation: the vulgar notion that Job ſat upon a dunghil without the city, has no other foundation than the Septuagint verſion of this paſſage, which is a wrong one; for his ſitting in aſhes, there might be a reaſon in nature, and it might be choſen on account of his diſeaſe; for aſhes are a drier, and an abſterſive of ulcers, and Galen[f] ſays they are uſed in freſh wounds to ſtop the courſe of the blood.

℣. 9. Then ſaid his wife unto him, &c.] The Jews[g], who affect to know every thing, ſay, that Job's wife was Dinah, the daughter of Jacob, as the Targum, but this is not very likely; however, we may obſerve that polygamy had not obtained in theſe early times; Job had but one wife, and very probably ſhe is the ſame that after all this bore him ten children more; ſince we never read of her death, nor of his having any other wife, and might be a good woman for any thing that appears to the contrary; and Job himſelf ſeems to intimate the ſame, though ſhe was in the dark about this providence, and under a ſore temptation on that account; and therefore ſays to her huſband, Doſt thou ſtill retain thine integrity? not as blaming him for inſiſting and leaning on his integrity, and juſtifying, and not humbling himſelf before God, when he ſhould rather confeſs his ſins and prepare for death; for this is contraty to the ſenſe of the phraſe uſed, ℣. 3. where Job is applauded by the Lord himſelf for holding faſt his integrity; nor will Job's anſwer comport with this ſenſe of her words; nor did ſhe ſpeak as wondering that he ſhould ſtill retain it amongſt ſo many ſore temptations and afflictions; though indeed perſevering grace is a marvellous thing; but then he would never have blamed her for ſuch an expreſſion: nor ſaid ſhe this as upbraiding and reproaching him for his religion and continuance in it, and mocking at him, and deſpiſing him on that account, as Michal did David; but as ſuggeſting to him there was nothing in religion, and adviſing him to throw up the profeſſion of it; for he might eaſily ſee, by his own caſe and circumſtances, that God had no more regard to good men than to bad men, and therefore it was in vain to ſerve him; the temptation ſhe laboured under was the ſame with that good man's, Aſaph, Pſ. lxxiii 11—14. curſe God, and die; which is uſually interpreted, curſe God and then deſtroy thyſelf; or utter ſome ſuch blaſphemous words, as will either provoke him to deſtroy thee, or will make thee liable to be taken notice of by the civil magiſtrate and put to death for it; or do this in revenge for his hand upon thee, and then die; or, though thou dieſt; but theſe are all too harſh and wicked to be ſaid by one that had been trained up in a religious manner, and had been ſo many years the conſort of ſo holy and good a man: the words may be rendered, bleſs God and die[h]; and may be underſtood either ſarcaſtically, go on bleſſing God till thou dieſt; if thou haſt not had enough of it, take thy fill of it, and ſee what will be the iſſue of it; nothing but death; wilt thou ſtill continue bleſſing God and dying? ſo ſome[i] render the words referring to what he had ſaid in ch. i. 21. or elſe really and ſincerely, as adviſing him to humble himſelf before God, confeſs his ſins, and pray[k] unto him that he would take him out of this world, and free him from all his pains and ſorrow; or rather, the ſenſe is, bleſs God; take thy farewell of him[l]; bid adieu to him and all religion, and ſo die; for there is no good to be hoped for on the ſcore of that, here or hereafter; or at leaſt not in this life: and ſo it amounts to much the ſame as before; and this ſenſe is confirmed by Job's anſwer, which follows.

℣. 10. But he ſaid unto her, Thou ſpeakeſt as one of the fooliſh women ſpeaketh, &c.] The wicked and prophane women of that age; he does not ſay ſhe was one of them, but ſpake like them; which intimates that ſhe was a good woman, and had always been thought to be ſo; but now ſpake not like herſelf, and one of her profeſſion, but like carnal perſons: Sanctius thinks Job refers to the Idumean women, who, like other heathens, when their god, did not pleaſe them, or they could not obtain of them what they deſired, would reproach them, and caſt them away from them, throw them into the fire, or into the water, as the Perſians are ſaid to do; and ſo Job's wife, becauſe of the preſent afflictive providence, was for caſting off God and all religion; in this ſhe ſpake and acted like thoſe wicked people after obſerved, ch. xxi. 14, 15. and like thoſe carnal profeſſors among the Jews in later times, Mal. iii. 14. this was talking fooliſhly, and Job's wife ſpake after this fooliſh manner, which he reſented: what? this he ſaid as being angry with her, and having indignation at what ſhe ſaid; and therefore, in this quick, ſhort, and abrupt manner, reproves her for her folly: ſhall we receive good good at the hand of God, and ſhall we not receive evil? as all good things temporal and ſpiritual, the bleſſings of providence; and all natural, though not moral evil things, even all afflictions which ſeem, or are thought to be evil, come from the mouth of God, and are according to his purpoſe, counſel, and will; ſo they are all diſpenſed by the hand of God, and ſhould be kindly, chearfully, readily, and willingly received, the one as well as the other; ſee Lam. iii. 38. Jam. i. 17. Amos, iii. 6. Job ſuggeſts that he and his wife had received many good things from the Lord, many temporal good things, as appears from ch. i. 2, 3. they had their beings in him, and from him; they had been preſerved in them by him; they had had an habitation to dwell in, and ſtill had; God had given them food and raiment, wherewith it became them to be content; they had had a comfortable family of children until this time, and much health of body, Job till now, and his wife ſtill, for ought appears; of their former happy circumſtances, ſee ch. xxix. and beſides theſe outward mercies, they had received God as their covenant-God, their portion, ſhield, and exceeding great reward; they had received Chriſt as their living redeemer; they had received the Spirit, and his grace, the root of the matter was in them; they had received juſtifying, pardoning, and adopting grace, and a right unto, and meetneſs for eternal life, which all good men receive of God; and therefore ſuch muſt expect to receive evil things, or to partake of afflictions, ſince God has appointed theſe for them, and has told them of them, that they ſhall befall them; and beſide they are for their profit and advantage; and the conſideration of the good things that have been received, and are now enjoyed, as well as what they have reaſon to believe they ſhall enjoy in heaven to all eternity, ſhould make them ready and willing to bear evil things quietly and patiently; ſee Heb. xi. 26. Luke xvi. 26. ſo Achilles in Homer,[m] repreſents Jove as having two veſſels full of gifts, one of good things, the other of evil, and ſometimes he takes and gives the one, and ſometimes the other: in all this did not Job ſin with his lips; not in what he ſaid to his wife, it was all right and good; nor under the whole of his affliction hitherto, he had not uttered one impatient, murmuring, and repining word at the hand of God; the tongue, though an unruly member, and under ſuch providences apt to ſpeak unadviſedly, was bridled and reſtrained by Job from uttering any thing indecent and unbecoming: the Targum, and many of the Jewiſh writers obſerve, that he ſinned in his heart, but not with his lips; but this is not to be concluded from what is here ſaid; though it is poſſible there might be ſome riſings of corruptions in his heart, which, by the grace of God that prevailed in him, were kept under and reſtrained from breaking out.

℣. 11. Now when Job's three friends heard of all this evil that was come upon him, &c.] Of the loſs of his ſubſtance, ſervants, and children, and of his own health; the news of which ſoon ſpread in the adjacent countries, Job being a perſon of great note, and his calamity ſo very extraordinary and uncommon: who theſe three friends were is after obſerved; they living at ſome diſtance from him, held a correſpondence with him, and he with them, being good men; and now act the friendly part in paying him a viſit under ſuch circumſtances: Prov. xvii. 17. they came every one from his own place; from the country, city, town, or habitations where they lived; whether they walked or rode is not ſaid, their names are as follow: Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite; the firſt of theſe, Eliphaz, was either from Teman, a city in Edom, on the borders of Arabia Deſerta, as the Targum; or a deſcendant of Teman, a grandſon of Eſau; not Eliphaz the ſon of Eſau, Gen. xxxvi. 11. as the Targum on that place ſays; for he was the father of Teman, from whom this Eliphaz ſprang: the ſecond, Bildad, was a deſcendant from Shuah, a ſon of Abraham, by Keturah, Gen. xxv. 2. whoſe poſterity with geographers are called Sauchites, Sauchæans, Sacceans, and ſettled in Arabia Deſerta, from whence Bildad came: the third, Zophar the Naamathite, who he was, and why ſo called, is not certain; there is nothing but conjectures concerning him; it is moſt probable that he lived in Arabia Deſerta, or on the borders of it, near to Job's country and that of his other two friends[n]; there was a Naamath in the land of Uz, which was Job's country according to Fretelius[o]: the Septuagint verſion calls Eliphaz the king of the Temanites, and Bildad the tyrannus, or governor of the Sauchæans, and Zophar king of the Minæans[p]: for they had made an appointment together; upon hearing of Job's trouble, they got together, and fixed upon a time and place to meet together and proceed on in their journey to Job's houſe: to come to mourn with him, and to comfort him; the firſt word ſignifies to move to him[q], not as Sephorno explains it, to go with him from place to place, that he might not lay hands on himſelf; but rather, as the Latin interpreter of the Targum, to move their heads at him; as perſons to ſhew their concern for, and ſympathy with the afflicted, ſhake their heads at them: the meaning is, that they came to condole his misfortunes, and to ſpeak a word of comfort to him under them; and no doubt but they came with a real and ſincere intent to do this, though they proved miſerable comforters of him; ch. xvi. 2.

℣. 12. And when they lift up their eyes afar off, &c.] Either when at ſome diſtance from Job's houſe, and he being without in the open air, as ſome think; or as they entered his houſe, he being at the farther part of the room, or in another farther on, which they could ſee into: and knew him not; at firſt ſight; until they came nearer to him, his garments being rent, and his head ſhaved, and his body covered all over with boils; ſo that he was ſo deformed and diſfigured that they could not know him at firſt, and could ſcarcely believe him to be the ſame perſon: they lifted up their voice and wept; they wept and cried aloud, being greatly affected with the ſight of him, and their hearts ſympathizing with him under his afflictions, being his cordial friends, and of that diſpoſition, to weep with thoſe that weep: and they rent every one his mantle; or cloak; in token of mourning, as Job had done before, ch. i. 20. ſee the note thereon: and ſprinkled duſt upon their heads, towards heaven; that is, they took up handfulls of duſt from off the ground, and threw it up in the air over their heads, which fell upon them and covered them; which was another rite or ceremony uſed by mourners, as Jarchi obſerves, and ſhewed the vehemence of their affections and paſſions, and the confuſion they were in at ſeeing their friend in ſuch a miſerable condition; ſee Joſh. vii. 6. Ezek. xxvii. 30. Lam. ii. 10.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter we have an account of Job's curſing the day of his birth, and the night of his conception; ℣. 1—3. firſt the day, to which he wiſhes the moſt extreme darkneſs, ℣. 4, 5. then the night, to which he wiſhes the ſame, and that it might be deſtitute of all joy, and be curſed by others as well as by himſelf, ℣. 6—9. the reaſons follow, becauſe it did not prevent his coming into the world, and becauſe he died not on it, ℣. 10—12. which would, as he judged, have been an happineſs to him; and this he illuſtrates by the ſtill and quiet ſtate of the dead, the company they are with, and their freedom from all trouble, oppreſſion, and bondage, ℣. 13—19. but however, ſince it was otherwiſe with him, he deſires his life might not be prolonged, and expoſtulates about the continuance of it, ℣. 20—23. and this by reaſon of his preſent troubles, which were many and great, and came upon him as he feared they would, and which had made him uneaſy in his proſperity, ℣. 24—26.

℣. 1. After this opened Job his mouth, &c.] In order to ſpeak, and began to ſpeak of his troubles and afflictions, and the ſenſe he had of them; for though this phraſe may ſometimes ſignify to ſpeak aloud, clearly, and diſtinctly, and with great freedom and boldneſs, yet here it ſeems to deſign no more than beginning to ſpeak, or breaking ſilence after it had been long kept: he ſpake after his firſt trial and bleſſed the name of the Lord, and upon his ſecond, and reproved his wife for her fooliſh ſpeaking; but upon the viſit of his three friends, and during the ſpace of ſeven days, a profound ſilence was kept by him and them; and when he perceived that they choſe not to ſpeak to him, and perhaps his diſtemper alſo decreaſed, and his pain ſomewhat abated, he broke out into the following expreſſions: and curſed his day; he did not curſe his God, as Satan ſaid he would, and his wife adviſed him to: nor did he curſe his fellow-creatures, or his friends, as wicked men in paſſion are apt to do, nor did he curſe himſelf, as prophane perſons often do, when any evil befals them; but he curſed his day; not the day on which his troubles came upon him, for there were more than one, and they were ſtill continued, but the day of his birth, as appears from ℣. 3. and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions add here, in which he was born; and what is meant by curſing it, may be learnt from his own words in the following verſes, the ſubſtance of which is, that he wiſhed either it had never been, or he had never been born; but ſince that was impoſſible, that it might be forgotten, and never obſerved or had in eſteem, but be buried in oblivion and obſcurity, and be branded with a black mark, as an unhappy day for ever: the word[s] ſignifies, he made light of it, and ſpoke ſlightly and contemptibly of it; he diſeſteemed it, yea deteſted it, and could not bear to think of it, and deſired that it might be diſreſpected by God and men; ſo that there is no need of ſuch queſtions, whether it is in the power of man to curſe? and whether it is lawful to curſe the creature? and whether a day is capable of a curſe? the frame of mind in which Job was when he uttered theſe words is differently repreſented; ſome of the Jewiſh writers will have it, that he denied the providence of God, and thought that all things depended upon the ſtars or planets which rule on the day a man is born, and therefore curſed his ſtars; whereas nothing is more evident than that Job aſcribes all that befel him to the purpoſe and providence of God, ch. xxiii. 14. ſome ſay he was in the utmoſt deſpair, and had no hope of eternal life and ſalvation, but the contrary to this is clear from ch. xiii. 15, 16, 18. and xix. 25, 26, 27. and many think he had loſt all patience, for which he was ſo famous; but if he had, he would not have been ſo highly ſpoken of as he is in Jam. v. 11. it is true indeed there may be a mixture of weakneſs with reſpect to the exerciſe of that grace at this time, and which may appear in ſome after expreſſions of his; yet were it not for theſe and the like, as we could not have ſuch an idea of his ſorrows and afflictions, and of that quick ſenſe and perception he had of them, ſo neither of his exceeding great patience in enduring them as he did; and beſides what impatience he was guilty of, was not only graciouſly forgiven, but he thro' the grace of God was enabled to conquer; and patience had its perfect work in him, and he perſevered therein to the end; though after all he is not to be excuſed of weakneſs and infirmity, ſince he is blamed not only by Elihu, but by the Lord himſelf; yea Job himſelf owned his ſin and folly, and repented of it, ch. xl. 4, 5. and xlii. 6.

[q] כי גדל הכאב מאד quod creverat dolor valde, Pagninus, Montanus; ſo Mercerus, Schultens, Michaelis, and the Targum. [s] Opponitur verbum קלל verbo כבד; ſignificat ſe pronunciaſſe diem inglorium, Codurcus.

℣. 2. And Job ſpake, and ſaid, &c.] Or anſwered and ſaid [t], though not a word was ſpoken to him by his friends; he anſwered to his own calamity, and to their ſilence, as Schmidt obſerves; and this word is ſometimes uſed when nothing goes before, to which the anſwer is, as many Jewiſh writers obſerve, as in Exod. xxxii. 27. Deut. xxvi. 5. and xxvii. 14. Jarchi interprets it, he cried, and ſo ſome others [u] render it: from henceforwards to ch. xlii. 6. this book is written in a poetical ſtile, in Hebrew metre as is thought, which at preſent is pretty much unknown, even to the Jews themſelves; ſome have been of opinion, that the following diſcourſes between Job and his friends were not originally delivered in metre, but were put into this form by the penman, or writer of the book; but of this we cannot be certain; in the Targum in the king of Spain's bible it is, and Job ſung and ſaid.

℣. 3. Let the day periſh wherein I was born, &c.] Here begins Job's form of curſing his day, and which explains what is meant by it; and it may be underſtood either of the identical day of his birth, and then the ſenſe is, that he wiſhed that had never been, or in other words, that he had never been born; and though theſe were impoſſible, and Job knew it, and therefore ſuch wiſhes may ſeem to be in vain, yet Job had a deſign herein, which was to ſhew the greatneſs of his afflictions, and the ſenſe he had of them: or elſe of his birth-day, as it returned year after year; and then his meaning is, let it not be kept and obſerved with any ſolemnity, with feaſting and other expreſſions of joy, as the birth-days of great perſonages eſpecially were, and his own very probably had been, ſince his children's were, ch. i. 4. but now he deſires it might not be ſo for the future, but be entirely diſregarded; he would have it periſh out of his own memory, and out of the memory of others, and even be ſtruck out of the calendar, and not be reckoned with the days of the month and year, ℣. 6. both may be intended, both the very day on which he was born, and the yearly return of it: and the night in which it was ſaid, There is a man-child conceived; that is, let that night periſh alſo; he wiſhes it had not been, or he had not been conceived, or for the future be never mentioned, but eternally forgotten: Job goes back to his conception, as being the ſpring of his ſorrows; for this he knew as well as David, that he was ſhapen in iniquity, and conceived in ſin, ſee ch. xiv. 4. but rather, ſince the particular night or time of conception is not ordinarily, eaſily, and exactly known by women themſelves, and much leſs by men; and more eſpecially it could not be told what ſex it was, whether male or female that was conceived, and the tidings of it could not be brought by any; it ſeems better with Aben Ezra to render the word [w], there is a man-child brought forth, which uſed to be an occaſion of joy, John xvi. 21. and ſo the word is uſed to bear or bring forth, 1 Chron. iv. 17. ſee Jer. xx. 15. and according to him, it was a doubt whether Job was born in the day or in the night; but be it which it will, if he was born in the day, he deſires it might periſh, and if in the night, he wiſhes the ſame to that; though the words may be rendered in a beautiful and elegant manner nearer the original, and the night which ſaid, a man-child is conceived [x]; repreſenting, by a proſopopœia, the night as a perſon conſcious of the conception, as an eye-witneſs of it, and exulting at it, as Schultens obſerves.

℣. 4. Let that day be darkneſs, &c.] Not only dark, but darkneſs itſelf, extremely dark; and which is to be underſtood not figuratively of the darkneſs of affliction and calamity; this Job would not wiſh for, either for himſelf, who had enough of that, or for others; but literally of groſs natural darkneſs, that was horrible and dreadful, as ſome [y] render it: this was the reverſe of what God ſaid at the creation, Let there be light, and there was, and he called it day; but Job wiſhes his day might be darkneſs, as the night; either that it had been always dark, and never become day, or in its return be remarkably dark and gloomy: let not God regard it from above; that is, either God who is above, and on high, the High and Holy One, the Moſt High God, and who is higher than the higheſt, and ſo this is a deſcriptive character of him; or elſe this reſpects the place where he is, the higheſt heaven, where is his throne, and from whence he looks and takes notice of the ſons of men, and of all things done below: and this wiſh muſt be underſtood conſiſtent with his omniſcience, who ſees and knows all perſons and things, even what are done in the dark, and in the darkeſt days; for the darkneſs and the light are alike to him; and as conſiſtent with his providence, which is continually exerciſed about perſons and things on earth without any intermiſſion, even on every day in the year; and was it to ceaſe one day, hour, or moment, all would be diſſolved, and be thrown into the utmoſt confuſion and diſorder: but Job means the ſmiles of his providence, which he wiſhes might be reſtrained on this day; that he would not cauſe his ſun in the heavens to ſhine out upon it, nor ſend down gentle and refreſhing ſhowers of rain on it; in which ſenſe he is ſaid to care for and regard the land of Canaan, Deut. xi. 11, 12. where the ſame word is uſed as here; or the ſenſe is, let it be ſo expunged from the days of the year, that when it is ſought for, and if even it ſhould be by God himſelf, let it not be found; or let him not ſeek [z] after it, to do any good upon it: neither let the light ſhine upon it; the light of the ſun, or the morning-light, as the Targum, much leſs the light at noon-day; even not the diurnal light, as Schmidt interprets it, in any part of the day: light is God's creature, and very delightful and deſireable; the beſt things, and the moſt comfortable enjoyments, whether temporal, ſpiritual, or eternal, are expreſſed by it; and on the other hand, a ſtate of darkneſs is the moſt uncomfortable, and therefore the worſt and moſt diſmal things and ſtates are ſignified by it.

℣. 5. Let darkneſs and the ſhadow of death ſtain it, &c.] Let there be ſuch darkneſs on it as on perſons when dying, or in the ſtate of the dead; hence the ſoreſt afflictions, and the ſtate of man in unregeneracy are compared unto it, Pſ. xxiii. 4. Iſ. ix. 2. let there be nothing but foul weather, dirt, and darkneſs in it, which may make it very uncomfortable and undeſireable; ſome render the word, let darkneſs and the ſhadow of death redeem it [a], challenge and claim it as their own, and let light have no ſhare or property in it: let a cloud dwell upon it; as on mount Sinai when the law was given given; a thick dark cloud, even an aſſemblage of clouds, ſo thick and cloſe together, that they ſeem but one cloud, which cover the whole heavens, and obſcure them, and hinder the light of the ſun from ſhining on the earth; and this is wiſhed to abide not for an hour or two, but to continue all the day: let the blackneſs of the day terrify it; let it be frightful to itſelf; or rather, let the blackneſs be ſuch, or the darkneſs of it ſuch groſs darkneſs, like that as was felt by the Egyptians; that the inhabitants of the earth may be terrified with it, as Moſes and the Iſraelites were at mount Sinai, at the blackneſs, tempeſt, thunders, and lightnings there ſeen and heard: as ſome underſtand this of black vapours exhaled by the ſun, with which the heavens might be filled, ſo others of ſultry weather and ſcorching heat, which is intolerable: others render the words, let them terrify it as the bitterneſſes of the day [a]; either with bitter curſings on it, or through bitter calamities in it; or, as thoſe who have a bitter [b] day, as in the margin of our bibles, and in others.

℣. 6. As for that night, &c.] The night of conception; Job imprecated evils on the day he was born, now on the night he was conceived in, the returns of it: let darkneſs ſeize upon it; let it not only be deprived of the light of the moon and ſtars, but let an horrible darkneſs ſeize upon it, that it may be an uncommon and a terrible one: let it not be joined unto the days of the year; the ſolar year, and make one of them; or, let it not be one among them [c], let it come into no account, and when it is ſought for, let it not appear, but be found wanting; or let it not joy or rejoice among the days of the year [d], as Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and others interpret it, or be a joyful one, or any thing joyful done or enjoyed in it: let it not come into the number of the months; meaning not the intercalated months, as Sephorno, nor the feaſts of the new moon, as others; but let it not ſerve to make up a month, which conſiſts of ſo many days and nights, according to the courſe of the moon; the ſenſe both of this and the former clauſe is, let it be ſtruck out of the calendar.

℣. 7. Lo, let that night be ſolitary, &c.] Let there be no company for journeys, or doing any buſineſs; no meetings of friends, neighbours, or relations on it, for refreſhment, pleaſure, and recreation, after the buſineſs of the day is over, as is frequently done; let there be no aſſociations of this kind, or any other: in the night it was uſual to have feaſts on various accounts, and eſpecially on account of marriage; but now let there be none, let there be as profound a ſilence as if all creatures, men and beaſts, were dead, and removed from off the face of the earth, and nothing to be heard and ſeen on it: or, let it be barren or deſolate [e], ſo R. Simeon bar Tzemach interprets it, and refers to Iſ. xlix. 21. that is, let no children be born in it, and ſo no occaſion for any joy on that account, as follows; let it be as barren as a flint [f]: let no joyful voice come therein; which ſome even carry to the nocturnal ſinging of ſaints in private or in public aſſemblies, and to the ſongs of angels, thoſe morning-ſtars in heaven; but it ſeems rather to deſign natural or civil joy, or ſinging on civil accounts; as on account of marriage, and particularly on account of the birth of a child, and eſpecially his own birth, and even any expreſſions of joy on any account; and that there might not be ſo much as the crowing of a cock heard, as the Targum has it.

℣. 8. Let them curſe it that curſe the day, &c.] Their own day, either their birth-day, or any day on which evil befals them; and now ſuch as are uſed to this, Job would have them, whilſt they were curſing their own day, to throw ſome curſes upon his; or that curſe the day-light in general, as adulterers and murderers, who are ſaid to rebel againſt the light, ſee ch. xxiv. 13. 17. and as ſome Ethiopians, who lived near Arabia, and ſo known to Job, who ſuppoſed there was no God, and uſed to curſe the ſun when it roſe and ſet, as various writers relate [g], called by others [h] Atlantes; or it may deſign ſuch perſons who were hired at funerals, to mourn for the dead, and who, in their doleful ditties and dirges, uſed to curſe the day on which the perſon was born whom they lamented; or it may be rather the day on which he died; hence it follows: who are ready to raiſe up their mourning; who were expert at the buſineſs, and who could raiſe up a howl, as the Iriſh now do, or make a lamentation for the dead when they pleaſed; ſuch were the mourning women in Jer. ix. 17, 18. and thoſe that were ſkilful of lamentation, Amos v. 16. ſome render the words, who are ready to raiſe up Leviathan [i], and interpret it either of the whale, which, when raiſed up by the fiſhermen, they are in danger of their veſſels being overſet, and their lives loſt, and then they curſe the day that ever they entered into ſuch ſervice, and expoſed themſelves to ſuch danger; or of fiſh in general, and of fiſhermen curſing and ſwearing when they are unſucceſsful: ſome underſtand this of aſtrologers, magicians, and inchanters, raiſing ſpirits, and particularly the devil, who they think is meant by Leviathan; but it ſeems beſt with a little alteration from Guſſetius, and Schultens after him, to render the words thus, "let the curſers of the day fix a name upon it; let thoſe that are ready to any thing, call it, the raiſer up of Leviathan;" that is, let ſuch who either of themſelves are uſed to curſe days, or are employed by others to do it, brand this night with ſome mark of infamy; let them aſcribe all dreadful calamities and diſmal things unto it, as the ſource and ſpring of them; which may be ſignified by Leviathan, that being a creature moſt formidable and terrible, of which an account is given in the latter part of this book; but many Jewiſh writers [k] render it mourning, as we do.

℣. 9. Let the ſtars of the twilight thereof be dark, &c.] Either of the morning or evening-twilight; both may be meant, rather the latter, becauſe of the following clauſe; the ſenſe is, let not theſe appear to adorn the heavens, and to relieve lieve the darkneſs of the night, and make it more pleaſant and delightful, as well as to be uſeful to travellers and ſailors: let it look for light, but have none; that is, either for the light of the moon and ſtars, to ſhine in the night till day-break, or for the light of the ſun at the time when it ariſes; but let it have neither; let the whole time, from ſun-ſetting to ſun-riſing, from one twilight to another, be one continued groſs and horrible darkneſs; here, by a ſtrong and beautiful figure, looking is aſcribed to the night: neither let it ſee the dawning of the day; or, let it not ſee the eye-lids of the morning [l], or what we call peep of day; here, in very elegant language, the dawn of morning-light is expreſſed, which is like the opening of an eye and its lids, quick and vibrating, when light is let in and perceived; or this may be interpreted of the ſun, the eye of the morning and of light, and of its rays, which when firſt darted, are like the opening of the eye-lids.

℣. 10. Becauſe it ſhut not up the doors of my mother's womb, &c.] Or of my belly [m], or womb; which Aben Ezra interprets of the navel, by which the infant receives its food and nouriſhment before it is born, and which, if cloſed, he muſt have died in embryo; but rather it is to be underſtood of his mother's womb, called his, becauſe he was conceived and bore in it, and was brought forth from it; and the ſenſe is, that he complains of the night, either that it did not cloſe his mother's womb, and hinder the conception of him, as Gerſom, Sephorno, Bar Tzemach, and others, and is the uſual ſenſe of the phraſe of cloſing the womb, and which is commonly aſcribed to God, Gen. xx. 17, 18. 1 Sam. i. 5, 6. which Job here attributes to the night, purpoſely avoiding to make mention of the name of God, that he might not ſeem to complain of him, or directly point at him; or elſe the blame laid on that night is, that it did not ſo ſhut up the doors of his mother's womb, that he might not have come out from thence into the world, wiſhing that had been his grave, and his mother always big with him, as Jarchi, and which ſenſe is favoured by Jer. xx. 17. a wiſh cruel to his mother, as well as unnatural to himſelf: nor hid ſorrow from mine eyes; which it would have done, had it done that which is complained of it did not; had it, he could not have perceived it experimentally, endured the ſorrows and afflictions he did from the Chaldeans and Sabeans, from Satan, his wife, and friends; and had never known the trouble of loſs of ſubſtance, children, and health, and felt thoſe pains of body and anguiſh of mind he did; theſe are the reaſons of his curſing the day of his birth, and the night of his conception.

℣. 11. Why died I not from the womb? &c.] That is, as ſoon as he came out of it; or rather, as ſoon as he was in it, or from the time that he was in it; or however, whilſt he was in it, that ſo he might not have come alive out of it; which ſenſe ſeems beſt to agree both with what goes before and follows after; for ſince his conception in the womb was not hindered, he wiſhes he had died in it; and ſo ſome verſions render it to this ſenſe [n]: why did I not give up the ghoſt when I came out of the belly? ſince he died not in the womb, which was deſireable to him, he wiſhes that the moment he came out of it he had expired, and is diſpleaſed becauſe it was not ſo, ſee Jer. xx. 17. Hoſ. ix. 11. thus what is the ſpecial favour of providence to be taken out of the womb alive, and preſerved, he wiſhes not to have enjoyed, ſee Pſ xxii. 9.

℣. 12. Why did the knees prevent me, &c.] Not of the mother, as Jarchi, but of the midwife, who received him into her lap, and nouriſhed and cheriſhed him, waſhed him with water, ſalted, and ſwaddled him; or it may be of his father, with whom it was uſual to take the child on his knees as ſoon as born, ſee Gen. l. 23. which cuſtom obtained among the Greeks and Romans [o]; hence the goddeſs Levana [p] had her name, cauſing the father in this way to own his child; his concern is, that he did not fall to the ground as he came out of his mother's womb, and with that fall die; and that he was prevented from falling by the officious knees of the midwife; that he was not ſuffered to fall, and be left there, without having any of the uſual things done to him for the comfort and preſervation of life, which was ſometimes the caſe, Ezek. xvi. 4. or why the breaſts that I ſhould ſuck? ſince a miſcarrying womb was not given, and death did not ſeize him immediately upon birth, but all proper care was taken to prevent it, he aſks, why was there milk in the breaſts of his mother or nurſe to ſuckle and nouriſh him? why were there not dry breaſts, ſuch as would afford no milk, that ſo he might have been ſtarved? thus he wiſhes the kindeſt things in nature and providence had been withheld from him.

℣. 13. For now ſhould I have lien ſtill, and been quiet, &c.] Signifying, that if the above had been his caſe, if he had died as ſoon as born, or quickly after, then he would have been laid in the grave, where he would have lain as ſtill as on a bed; for ſuch is the grave to dead bodies, as a bed is to thoſe that lie down and ſleep upon it; a place of eaſe and quiet, where there is freedom from all care and thought, from all trouble, anxiety, and diſtreſs; nay, more ſo than on a bed, where there is often toſſing to and fro, and great diſquietude, but none to the body in the grave, that is ſtill and ſilent, where there is no uneaſineſs nor diſturbance, ſee ch. xvii. 13. Iſ. lvii. 2. I ſhould have ſlept; ſoundly and quietly, which perſons do not always upon their beds; ſometimes they cannot ſleep at all, and when they do, they are frequently diſtreſſed with uneaſy thoughts, frightful dreams, and terrifying viſions, ch. iv. 13, 14. and vii. 14. but death is a ſound ſleep until the reſurrection-morn, which Job had knowledge of, and faith in, and ſo conſidered the ſtate of the dead in this light; death is often in ſcripture expreſſed by ſleeping, Dan. xii. 2. John xi. 11. 1 Cor. xv. 18. 20. 51. which refers not to the ſoul, which in a ſeparate ſtate is active and vigorous, and always employed; but to the body, which, as in ſleep, ſo in death, is deprived of the ſenſes, and the exerciſe of them; on which account there is a great likeneſs between ſleep and death, and out of which a man awakes briſk and chearful, as the ſaints will at the time of their reſurrection, which will be like an awaking out of ſleep: then had I been at reſt; from all toil and labour, from all diſeaſes and pains of body, from all troubles of whatſoever kind, and particularly from thoſe he now laboured under, ſee the note on ℣. 17.

℣. 14. With the kings and counſellors of the earth, &c.] From whom he might deſcend, he being a perſon of great diſtinction and figure; and ſo, had he died, he would have been buried in the ſepulchres of his anceſtors, and have lain in great pomp and ſtate: or rather, this he ſays, to obſerve that death ſpares none, that neither the power of kings, who have long hands, nor the wiſdom of counſellors, who have long heads; can ſecure them from death; and that after death they are upon a level with others; and even he ſuggeſts, that children that die as ſoon as born, and have made no figure in the world, are equal to them: which built deſolate places for themſelves; either that rebuilt houſes and cities that had lain in ruins, or built ſuch in deſolate places, where there had been none before, or formed colonies in places before uninhabited; and all this to get a name, and to perpetuate it to poſterity: or rather ſepulchral monuments are meant, ſuch as the lofty pyramids of the Egyptians, and ſuperb mauſoleums of others; which, if not built in deſolate places, yet are ſo themſelves, being only the habitations of the dead, and ſo they are called the deſolations of old, Ezek. xxvi. 20. and this is the ſenſe of many interpreters [q]; if any man deſires, ſays Vanſleb [r], a proſpect and deſcription of ſuch antient burying-places, let him think on a boundleſs champain, even, and covered with ſand, where neither trees, nor graſs, nor houſes, nor any ſuch thing is to be ſeen.

℣. 15. Or with princes that had gold, &c.] A large abundance of it whilſt they lived, but now being dead, were no longer in the poſſeſſion of it, but on a level with thoſe that had none; nor could their gold, whilſt they had it, preſerve them from death, and now, being dead, it was no longer theirs, nor of any uſe unto them; theſe princes, by this deſcription of them, ſeem to be ſuch who had not the dominion over any particular place or country, but their riches lay in gold and ſilver, as follows: who filled their houſes with ſilver; had an abundance of it, either in their coffers, which they hoarded up, or in the furniture of their houſes, which were much of it of ſilver; they had large quantities of ſilver-plate, as well as of money; but theſe were of no profit in the hour of death, nor could they carry them with them; but in the grave, where they were, thoſe were equal to them, of whom it might have been ſaid, ſilver and gold they had none.

℣. 16. Or as an hidden untimely birth, &c.] Or hid, as one born out of time, as Mr. Broughton reads it; the Septuagint uſe the ſame word as the apoſtle does, when he ſays the like of himſelf, 1 Cor. xv. 8. the word has the ſignification of falling [s], and deſigns an abortive, which is like to fruit that falls from the tree before it is ripe; and this may be ſaid to be hidden, either in the belly, as the Targum, or however from the ſight of man, it being not come to any proper ſhape, and much leſs perfection; now Job ſuggeſts, that if he had not lain with kings, counſellors, and princes, yet at leaſt he ſhould have been as an abortion, and that would have been as well to him: then I had not been; or ſhould have been nothing, not reckoned any thing; ſhould not have been numbered among beings, but accounted as a non-entity, and ſhould have had no ſubſiſtence or ſtanding in the world at all: as infants which never ſaw light; and if not like an untimely birth, which is not come to any perfection, yet ſhould have been like infants, which, though their mothers have gone their full time with them, and they have all their limbs in perfection and proportion, yet are dead, or ſtill-born, their eyes have never been opened to ſee any light; meaning not the light of the law, as the Targum, but the light of the ſun, or the light of the world, ſee Eccl. vi. 3, 4, 5. infants uſed to be buried in the wells or caves of the mummies [t].

℣. 17. There the wicked ceaſe from troubling, &c.] At death, and in the grave; ſuch who have been like the troubled ſea, that cannot reſt, have always been either deviſing or doing miſchief whilſt living, in the grave can do neither; there is no work nor device there; ſuch who are never eaſy, and cannot ſleep unleſs they do miſchief, when dead have no power to do any, and are quite ſtill and inactive; ſuch who have been troublers of good men, as prophane perſons by their ungodly lives, falſe teachers by their pernicious doctrines and blaſphemies, cruel perſecutors by their hard ſpeeches, bitter calumnies and reproaches, and ſevere uſage; thoſe, when they die themſelves, ceaſe from giving farther trouble, or when the righteous die, they can diſturb them no more; yea, a good man at death is not only no more troubled by wicked men, but no more by his own wicked heart, nor any more by that wicked one Satan; there and then all theſe ceaſe from giving him any farther moleſtation: and there the weary be at reſt; wicked men, either who here tire and weary themſelves with committing ſin, to which they are ſlaves and drudges, and eſpecially with perſecuting and troubling the ſaints, ſhall reſt from ſuch acts of ſin and wickedneſs, of which they will be no more capable; or elſe good men, who are weary of ſin, and long to be rid of it, to whom it is a burden, and under which they groan, and are weary of the troubles and afflictions they meet with in the world; and what with one thing and another are weary of their lives, and deſire to depart and be with Chriſt; theſe at death and in the grave are at reſt, their bodies from toil and labour, and from all painful diſorders and preſſing afflictions, and from all the oppreſſions and vexations of wicked and ungodly men; their ſouls reſt in the arms of Jeſus, from ſin and all conſciouſneſs of it, from the temptations of Satan, from all doubts and fears, and every ſpiritual enemy, by whom they can be no more annoyed: ſome render the words, there reſt the labours of ſtrength [u]; ſuch toils are over that break the ſtrength of men; or the labours of violence [w], which are impoſed upon them through violence, by cruel and imperious men; but at death and in the grave will ceaſe and be no more, even labour of all ſorts; ſee Rev. xiv. 13.

℣. 18. There the priſoners reſt together, &c.] Are at eaſe, as Mr. Broughton renders the words; ſuch who whilſt they lived were in priſon for debt, or were condemned to the gallies, to lead a miſerable life; or ſuch who ſuffered bonds and impriſonment for the ſake of religion, at death their chains are knocked off, and they are as much at liberty, and enjoy as much eaſe, as the dead that never were priſoners; and not only reſt together with thoſe who were their fellow-priſoners, but with thoſe who never were in priſon, yea with thoſe who caſt them into it; for there the priſoners and thoſe that impriſoned them are upon a level, enjoying equal eaſe and and liberty: they hear not the voice of the oppreſſor; or exactor [x]; neither of their creditors that demanded their debt of them, and threatened them with a priſon, or that detained them in it; nor of the jail-keeper that gave them hard words as well as ſtripes; nor of cruel taſk maſters, who kept them to hard ſervice in priſon, and threatened them ſeverely if they did not perform it, like the taſk-maſters in Egypt, Exod. v. 11, 13. but in the grave, the bluſtering, terrifying voice of ſuch, is not heard.

℣. 19. The ſmall and great are there, &c.] Both as to age, and with reſpect to bulk and ſtrength of body, and alſo to eſtate and dignity; children and men, or thoſe of low and high ſtature, or in a mean or more exalted ſtate of life, as to riches and honour, theſe all come to the grave without any difference, and lie there without any diſtinction [y]: little and great are there all one; as Mr. Broughton renders the words, ſee Rev. xx. 12. the ſervant is free from his maſter; death diſſolves all relations among men, and takes away the power that one has legally over another, as the huſband over the wife, who at death is looſed from the law and power of her huſband, Rom. vii. 2. and ſo parents over their children, and maſters over their ſervants; there the maſter and the ſervant are together, without any ſuperiority of the one to the other: the conſideration of all the above things made death and the ſtate of the dead in the grave appear to Job much more preferable than life in his preſent circumſtances; and therefore, ſince it had not ſeized on him ſooner, and as ſoon as he before had wiſhed it had, he deſires it might not be long ere it came upon him, as in the following verſes.

℣. 20. Wherefore is light given to him that is in miſery, &c.] That labours under various calamities and afflictions, as Job did, being ſtript of his ſubſtance, deprived of his children, and now in great pain of body and diſtreſs of mind; who, ſince he died not ſo ſoon as he wiſhed he had, expoſtulates why his life is protracted; for that is what he means by light, as appears from the following clauſe, even the light of the living, or the light of the world; which, though ſweet and pleaſant to behold to a man in health, yet not to one in pain of body and anguiſh of mind, as he was, who choſe rather to be in the dark and ſilent grave; this he repreſents as a gift, as indeed life is, and the gift of God: the words may be rendered, wherefore does he give light [z]; that is God, as ſome [a] ſupply it, who is undoubtedly meant, though not mentioned through reverence of him, and that he might not ſeem to quarrel with him; the principle of life is from him, and the continuance and protraction of it, and all the means and mercies by which it is ſupported; and Job aſks the reaſons, which he ſeems to be at a loſs for, why it ſhould be continued to a perſon in ſuch uncomfortable circumſtances as he was in; though theſe, with reſpect to a good man as he was, are plain and obvious; ſuch are continued in the world under afflictions, both for their own good, and for the glory of God, that their graces may be tried, their ſins purged away or prevented, and they made more partakers of divine holineſs; and be weaned from this world, and fitted for another, and not be condemned with the world of the ungodly: and life unto the bitter in ſoul; whoſe lives are embittered to them by afflictions, comparable to the waters of Marah, and to wormwood and gall, which occaſion bitterneſs of ſpirit in them, and bitter complaints from them; ſee ch. xiii. 26. and xxiii. 16. and xxvii. 2.

℣. 21. Which long for death, but it cometh not, &c.] Who earneſtly deſire, wiſtly look out, wiſh for, and expect it, and with open mouth gape for it, as a hungry man for his food, or as the fiſh for the bait, or the fiſhermen for the fiſh, as ſome obſerve the word may ſignify; but it comes not to their wiſh and expectation, or ſo ſoon as they would have it; the reaſon is, becauſe the fixed time for it is not come, otherwiſe it will certainly come at God's appointed time, and often in an hour not thought of: death is not deſireable in itſelf, being a diſſolution of nature, or as it is the ſanction of the law, or the wages of ſin, or a penal evil; and though it is and may be lawfully deſired by good men, that they may be free from ſin, and be in a better capacity to ſerve the Lord, and that they may be for ever with him; yet ſuch deſires ſhould be expreſſed with ſubmiſſion to the divine will, and the appointed time ſhould be patiently waited for, and ſhould not be deſired merely to be rid of preſent afflictions and troubles, which was the caſe of Job, and of thoſe he here deſcribes; ſee Rev. ix. 6. and dig for it more than for hid treaſures; which are naturally hid in the earth, as gold and ſilver ore, with other metals and precious ſtones; or which are of choice concealed there from the plunder of others; the former ſeems rather to be meant, and in digging for which great pains, diligence, and induſtry are uſed, ſee Prov. ii. 4, 5. and is expreſſive of the very great importunity and ſtrong deſire of men in diſtreſſed circumſtances after death, ſeeking diligently, and preſſing importunately for it; the ſin of ſuicide not being known, or very rare, in that early time, or however was ſhunned and abhorred even by thoſe that were moſt weary of their lives: ſome render it, who dig for it out of hid treaſures [b]; out of the bowels of the earth, and the loweſt parts of it, could they but find it there; but the Targum, Jarchi, and others, underſtand it comparatively, as we do.

℣. 22. Which rejoice exceedingly, &c.] Or, which joy till they do ſkip again, as Mr. Brougton renders it, and to the ſame purport, others [d]; are ſo elated as to ſkip and dance for joy: and are glad when they can find the grave; which is to be underſtood either of thoſe who dig in the earth for hid treaſure, ſuch as is laid there by men; when they ſtrike and hit upon a grave where they expect to find a booty; it being uſual in former times to put much riches into the ſepulchres of great perſonages, as Sanctius on the place obſerves; ſo Hyrcanus opening the ſepulchre of David, found in it 3000 talents of ſilver, as Joſephus [e] relates: or rather, this is ſaid of the miſerable and bitter in ſoul, who long for death, and ſeek after it; who, when they perceive any ſymptoms of its near approach, are exceedingly pleaſed, and rejoice at it; as when they obſerve the decays of nature, or any diſorder and diſeaſe upon them which threaten with death; for this cannot be meant of the dead carrying to the grave, who are inſenſible of it, and of their being put into it.

℣. 23. Why is light given to a man whoſe way is hid, &c.] Some of the Jewiſh writers connect this this with the preceding verſe, thus; who rejoice and are glad when they find a grave for a man, &c. but it ſhould be obſerved that ſuch are ſaid to rejoice at finding a grave, not for others, but for themſelves; the words ſtand in better connection with ℣. 20, from whence the ſupplement is taken in our verſion and others; and ſo it is a continuation or repetition of the expoſtulation, why light and life, or the light of the living, ſhould be given to perſons as before deſcribed, and here more largely; and Job himſelf is principally deſigned, as is generally thought, whoſe way, according to him, was hid from the Lord, neglected and not cared for by him, but overlooked and ſlighted, and no regard had to the injuries done him, as the church alſo complains, Iſ. xl. 27. or from whom the way of the Lord was hid; his way in the preſent afflictive diſpenſations of providence, the cauſes and reaſons of which he could not underſtand; not being conſcious of any notorious ſin committed, indulged, and continued in, that ſhould bring theſe troubles on him: or the good and right way was hid from him in which he ſhould walk; he was at a loſs to know which was that way, ſince by his afflictions he was ready to conclude that the way he had been walking in was not the right, and all his religion was in vain; and according to this ſenſe he laboured under the ſame temptation as Aſaph did, Pſ. lxxiii. 13, 14. or his way of eſcape out of his preſent troubles was unknown to him; he ſaw no way open for him, but ſhut up on every ſide: or there was no way for others to come to him, at leaſt they cared not for it; he who had uſed to have a large levee, ſome to have his counſel and advice, and to be inſtructed by him, others to aſk relief of him, and many of the higheſt rank and figure to viſit, careſs, and compliment him; but now all had forſaken him, his brethren and acquaintance, and his kinsfolk and familiar friends kept at a diſtance from him, as if they knew not the way to him: and whom God hath hedged in? not with the hedge of his power, providence, and protection, as before; but with thorns and afflictions, and in ſuch manner as he could not get out, or extricate himſelf; all avenues and ways of eſcape being blocked up, ſee Lam. iii. 7, 9. Hoſ. ii. 6. though after all, the words may be conſidered as a conceſſion, and as deſcriptive of a man the reverſe of himſelf, and be ſupplied thus; indeed light may be given to a man; a mighty man, as the word [e] ſignifies, a man ſtrong, hale, and robuſt; whoſe way is hid, or covered [f]; who is hid in the ſecret of God's preſence, and in the pavilion of his power; who dwells in his ſecret place, and under the ſhadow of the Almighty, Pſ. xxxi. 20. and xci. 1. who is under the ſhelter of his providence, preſerved from diſeaſes of body, and protected from the plunder and depredations of enemies, and enjoys great affluence and proſperity, as his three friends about him did, and whom he may point at: and whom God hath hedged in; as he had formerly ſet a hedge about him in his providence, though now he had plucked it up; ſee ch. i. 10.

℣. 24. For my ſighing cometh before I eat, &c.] Or, before my bread, or food [g]; before he ſat down to eat, or had taſted of his food, there were nothing but ſighing and ſobbing, ſo that he had no appetite for his food, and could take no delight in it; and whilſt he was eating his tears mingled with it, ſo that theſe were his meat and his drink continually, and he was fed with the bread and water of affliction; and therefore what were light and life to ſuch a perſon, who could not have the pleaſure of one comfortable meal? and my roarings are poured out like the waters; he not only wept privately and in ſecret, and cried more publickly both to God and in the preſence of men, but ſuch was the force and weight of his affliction, that he even roared out, and that like a lion; and his afflictions, which were the cauſe of theſe roarings, are compared to waters and the pouring of them out; for the noiſe theſe water-ſpouts made, and for the great abundance of them, and for their quick and frequent returns, and long continuance, one wave and billow rolling upon another.

℣. 25. For the thing which I greatly feared is come upon me, &c.] Some refer this to his fears about his children, leſt they ſhould ſin and offend God, and bring down his judgments on them, and now what he feared was come to paſs, ch. i. 5. others take in all his ſorrows and troubles; which, thro' the changeableneſs of the world, and the uncertainty of all things in it, and the various providences of God, he feared would come upon him at one time or another; and this he mentions to juſtify his expoſtulation, why light and life ſhould be continued to ſuch a man, who, by reaſon of his fear and anxiety of mind, never had any pleaſure in his greateſt proſperity, deſtruction from the Almighty being a terror to him; ch. xxxi. 23. but I think it is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe that a man of Job's faith in God, and truſt in him, ſhould indulge ſuch fears to ſuch a degree; nor indeed that he could ever entertain ſuch a thought in him, nor even ſurmiſe that ſuch ſhocking calamities and diſtreſſes ſhould come upon him as did: but this is to be underſtood not of his former life, in proſperity, but of the beginning of his afflictions; when he heard of the loſs of one part of his ſubſtance, he was immediately poſſeſſed with a fear of loſing another; and when he heard of that, he feared the loſs of a third, and even of all; then of his children, and next of his health: and that which I was afraid of is come unto me; which deſigns the ſame, in other words, or a new affliction; and particularly, the ill opinion his friends had of him: he feared that through theſe uncommon afflictions he ſhould be reckoned an ungodly man, an hypocrite; and as he feared, ſo it was; this he perceived by the ſilence of his friends, they not ſpeaking one word of comfort to him; and by their looks at him, and the whole of their behaviour to him.

℣. 26. I was not in ſafety, &c.] This cannot refer to the time of his proſperity; for he certainly then was in ſafety, God having ſet an hedge about him, ſo that none of his enemies, nor even Satan himſelf, could come at him to hurt him: neither had I reſt, neither was I quiet; which alſo was not true of him before his afflictions, for he did then enjoy great peace, reſt, and quietneſs; he lay in his neſt at eaſe, and in great tranquillity; and thought and ſaid he ſhould die in ſuch a ſtate, ſee ch. xxix. 18. &c. nor is the ſenſe of theſe expreſſions, that he did not take up his reſt and ſatisfaction in outward things, and put his truſt and confidence in his riches, and yet trouble came upon him; but this relates to the time of the beginning of his troubles troubles and afflictions, from which time he was not in ſafety, nor had any reſt and peace; there was no intermiſſion of his ſorrows; but as ſoon as one affliction was over, another came: yet trouble came; ſtill one after another, there was no end of them; or, as Mr. Broughton renders it, and now cometh a vexation; a freſh one, a ſuſpicion of hypocriſy; and upon this turns the whole controverſy, managed and carried on between him and his friends in the following part of this book.

CHAP. IV.

JOB's ſore afflictions, and his behaviour under them, laid the foundation of a diſpute between him and his three friends, which begins in this chapter, and is carried on to the end of the 31ſt; when Elihu ſtarts up as a moderator between them, and the controverſy is at laſt decided by God himſelf. Eliphaz firſt enters the liſt with Job, ℣. 1. introduces what he had to ſay in a preface, with ſome ſhew of tenderneſs, friendſhip, and reſpect; ℣. 2. obſerves his former conduct in his proſperity, by inſtructing many, ſtrengthening weak hands and feeble knees, and ſupporting ſtumbling and falling ones, ℣. 3, 4. with what view all this is obſerved may be eaſily ſeen, ſince he immediately takes notice of his preſent behaviour, ſo different from the former, ℣. 5. and inſults his profeſſion of faith and hope in God, and fear of him, ℣. 6. and ſuggeſts that he was a bad man, and an hypocrite; and which he grounds upon this ſuppoſition, that no good man was ever deſtroyed by the Lord; for the truth of which he appeals to Job himſelf, ℣. 7. and confirms it by his own experience and obſervation, ℣. 8—11. and ſtrengthens it by a viſion he had in the night, in which the holineſs and juſtice of God, and the mean and low condition of men are declared, ℣. 12—21. and therefore it was wrong in Job to inſinuate any injuſtice in God or in his providence, and a piece of weakneſs and folly to contend with him.

℣. 1. Then Eliphaz the Temanite anſwered and ſaid,] When Job had done curſing his day, and had finiſhed his doleful ditty on that ſubject, then Eliphaz took the opportunity of ſpeaking, not being able to bear any longer with Job and his behaviour under his afflictions: Eliphaz was one of Job's three friends that came to viſit him, ch. ii. 11. very probably he might be the ſenior man, or a man of the greateſt authority and power; a moſt reſpectable perſon, had in great eſteem and reverence among men, and by theſe his friends, and therefore takes upon him to ſpeak firſt; or it may be it was agreed among themſelves that he ſhould begin the diſpute with Job; and we find, that in the cloſe of this controverſy the Lord ſpeaks to him by name, and to him only, ch. xlii. 7. he anſwered; not that Job directed his diſcourſe to him, but he took occaſion, from Job's afflictions and his paſſionate expreſſions, to ſay what he did; and he ſaid not any thing by way of condolence or conſolation, not pitying Job's caſe, nor comforting him in his afflicted circumſtances, as they required both; but reproaching him as a wicked and hypocritical man, not acting like himſelf formerly, or according to his profeſſion and principles, but juſt the reverſe: this was a new trial to Job, and ſome think the ſoreſt of all; it was as a ſword in his bones, which was very cutting to him; as oil caſt into a fiery furnace in which he now was, which increaſed the force and fury of it; and as vinegar to an opened and bleeding wound, which makes it ſmart the more.

℣. 2. If we aſſay to commune with thee, wilt thou be grieved? &c.] Eliphaz ſpeaks in the name of himſelf and his two friends, who had doubtleſs conſulted together, and compared their ſentiments of Job; which appearing to be the ſame, they formed a plan and ſcheme in which they ſhould attack him, and the part which each ſhould take, and the order in which they ſhould proceed: theſe words are ſaid, either as ſeemingly doubting whether they ſhould ſpeak or be ſilent; for they may be rendered, ſhall we try, or attempt, to drop or ſpeak a word to thee; to enter into a converſation with thee? or, ſhall we take up a diſcourſe, and carry it on with thee, who art grieved already? or art weary and heavy laden, and bore down with the burden of affliction, with ſorrows and troubles; or art impatient [h] under them; we fear, ſhould we, that thou wilt be more grieved and burdened, and become more impatient; and therefore know not well what to do: or elſe, as ſuppoſing and taking it for granted that he would be grieved and burdened, and made more reſtleſs and uneaſy, impatient and outrageous, yet they had determined to enter into a debate with him; for ſo the words are by ſome rendered, ſhould we ſpeak a word unto thee; or, againſt thee [i]; even ſhould the leaſt word be ſpoken againſt thee, thou wilt be weary [k], or burdened, or grieved, or take it ill: we know thou wilt; yet, nevertheleſs, we muſt not, we cannot, we will not forbear ſpeaking: or elſe interrogatively, as our verſion and others, wilt thou be grieved? we deſire thou wouldſt not, nor take it ill from us, but all in good part; we mean no hurt, we deſign no ill, but thy good, and beg thou wilt hear us patiently: this ſhews how great a man Job had been, and in what reverence and reſpect he was had, that his friends beſpeak him after this manner in his low eſtate; however, this was artifice in them, to introduce the diſcourſe, and bring on the debate after this ſort: but who can withhold himſelf from ſpeaking? be it as it will; Eliphaz ſuggeſts, though Job was already and greatly burdened, and would be more ſo, and break out into greater impatience, yet there was a neceſſity of ſpeaking, it could not be forborn; no man could refrain himſelf from ſpeaking, nor ought in ſuch a caſe, when the providence of God was reflected upon, and he was blaſphemed and evil ſpoken of, and charged with injuſtice, as was ſuppoſed; in ſuch circumſtances, no good, no faithful man, could or ought to keep ſilence; indeed, when the glory of God, the honour of the Redeemer, and the good of ſouls require it, and a man's own reputation with reſpect to his faithfulneſs lies at ſtake, ſilence ſhould not be kept, let the conſequence be as it may; but how far this was the caſe, may be conſidered.

℣. 3. Behold, thou haſt inſtructed many, &c.] This

This is introduced with a behold, either as a note of admiration, that ſuch a man, who had inſtructed others, ſhould act the part he now does; or as a note of attention to Job himſelf, and all others that ſhould hear and read this, to obſerve it, and well conſider it, and make the proper uſe of it; or, as a note of aſſeveration, affirming it to be true and certain, notorious and unqueſtionable, as no doubt it was: Job was the inſtructor, a great man, and yet condeſcended to teach and inſtruct men in the beſt things, as did alſo Abraham, David, Solomon, and others; and a good man, and ſo fit to teach good things, as every good man is, and who, according to his ability, the gift and meaſure of grace received, ſhould inſtruct others; and a man of great gifts he was, both in things natural, civil, and religious; one that could ſpeak well, and to the purpoſe, and ſo was apt and able to teach; and ſuch ſhould not diſuſe and hide their talents: the perſons he inſtructed were not only his own family, his children and ſervants, as Abraham before him did; but others who attended him, and waited for his counſel and advice, his words and doctrine, as for the rain, and latter rain, and which dropped and diſtilled as ſuch, ſee ch. xxix. 15, 21, 22, 23. and theſe were many; his many ignorant neighbours about him, or many profeſſors of religion, as there might be, and it ſeems there were in this idolatrous country; and many afflicted ones among theſe, which is uſually the caſe: Job had many ſcholars in his ſchool, of different ſorts, that attended on him; and theſe he inſtructed in the knowledge of the true God, his nature, perfections, and works; and of the living Redeemer, his perſon, office, grace, and righteouſneſs; and of themſelves, the impurity of their nature through original ſin, he was acquainted with; their impotency and inability to purge themſelves, to atone for ſin, and to juſtify and make themſelves acceptable to God; as well as he inſtructed them in the worſhip of God, and the manner of it, their duty to him and to one another, and to all their fellow-creatures: ſome render it, thou haſt corrected, or reproved many[l]; he had taught the afflicted to be patient under their afflictions, and had reproved them for their impatience; and the deſign of Eliphaz is to upbraid him with it, as in Rom. ii. 21. thou that didſt correct others for their unbecoming behaviour under afflictions, art thy ſelf guilty of the ſame; turpe eſt doctori, cum culpa redarguit ipſum: and thou haſt ſtrengthened the weak hands; either ſuch as hung down through want of food, by giving it to them, both corporal and ſpiritual, which ſtrengthens mens hearts, and ſo their hands; or through ſluggiſhneſs, by exhorting and ſtirring them up to be active and diligent; or through fear of enemies, eſpecially ſpiritual ones, as ſin, Satan, and the world; by reaſon of whoſe numbers and ſtrength good men are apt to be diſpirited, and ready to caſt away their ſpiritual armour, particularly the ſhield of faith and confidence in God, as faint-hearted ſoldiers in war, to which the alluſion is: and theſe were ſtrengthened by telling them that all their enemies were conquered, and they were more than conquerors over them; that the victory was certain, and their warfare accompliſhed, or would quickly be: or elſe, whoſe hands were weak through a ſenſe of ſin and danger, and being in expectation of the wrath and vengeance of God; and who were ſtrengthened by obſerving to them that there was a Saviour appointed and expected, a living Redeemer, who would ſtand upon the earth in the latter day, and ſave them from their ſins, and from wrath to come; ſee Iſ. xxxv. 3, 4. or rather, ſuch whoſe hearts and hands were weak through ſore and heavy afflictions, whom Job ſtrengthened by ſhewing them that their afflictions were of God; not by chance, but by appointment, and according to the ſovereign will of God; that they were for their good, either temporal, ſpiritual, or eternal; and that they would not continue always, but have an end; and therefore ſhould be patiently bore, ſee Heb. xii. 11, 12.

℣. 4. Thy words have upholden him that was falling, &c.] Or ſtumbling[m]; that was ſtumbling at the providence of God in ſuffering good men to be afflicted, and wicked men to proſper; which has been the ſtumbling-block of God's people in all ages; ſee Pſ. lxxiii. 2, 3. or that was ſtumbling and falling off from the true religion by reaſon of the revilings and reproaches of men, and their perſecutions for it; which is ſometimes the caſe, not only of nominal profeſſors, Matt. xiii. 21. but of true believers, though they don't ſo ſtumble and fall as to periſh: or elſe being under afflictions themſelves, were ready to ſink under them, their ſtrength being ſmall; now Job was helped to ſpeak ſuch words of comfort and advice to perſons in any and every of theſe circumſtances, as to ſupport them and preſerve them from falling, and to enable them to keep their place and ſtation among the people of God. The Targum interprets it of ſuch as were falling into ſin; the words of good men to ſtumbling and falling profeſſors, whether into ſin, or into affliction by it, are often very ſeaſonable, and very uſeful, when attended with the power and ſpirit of God: and thou haſt ſtrengthened the feeble knees; that were tottering and trembling, and bending, and not able to bear up under the weight of ſin, which lay as an heavy burden, too heavy to bear; or of afflictions very grievous and intolerable; to ſuch perſons Job had often ſpoken words that had been uſeful to alleviate their troubles, and ſupport them under them. It may be obſerved, that the caſes and circumſtances of good men in early times were much the ſame as they are now; that there is no temptation or affliction that befals the ſaints, but what has been common; and that Job was a man of great gifts, grace, and experience, and had the tongue of the learned, to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to every weary ſoul, in whatſoever condition they were: and all this ſo very laudable in him, is not obſerved to his commendation, but to his reproach; to ſhew that he was not a man of real virtue, that he contradicted himſelf, and did not act according to his profeſſion and principles, and the doctrines he taught others, and was an hypocrite at heart; though no ſuch concluſion follows, ſuppoſing he had not acted up altogether to his principles and former conduct; for it is a difficult thing for any good man to act entirely according to them, or to behave the ſame in proſperity as in adverſity; or to take that advice themſelves in affliction, and follow it, they have given to others, and yet not be chargeable with hypocriſy. It would have been much better in Eliphaz and his friends to have made another uſe of Job's former conduct and behaviour, namely, to have imitated it, and endeavoured to have comforted, ſtrengthened, and upheld him in in his preſent diſtreſſed circumſtances; inſtead of that he inſults him as follows.

℣. 5. But now it is come upon thee, and thou fainteſt, &c.] The affliction and evil that he feared ch. iii. 25 or rather the ſame trials and afflictions were come upon him as had been on thoſe whom he had inſtructed and reproved, and whoſe hands and hearts he had ſtrengthened and comforted; and yet now thou thyſelf fainteſt, or art weary [z], or art bore down and ſinkeſt under the burden, and beareſt it very impatiently [a], quite contrary to the advice given to others; and therefore it was concluded he could not be a virtuous, honeſt, and upright man at heart, only in ſhew and appearance. Bolducius renders the words, God cometh unto thee, or thy God cometh; very wrongly, though the ſenſe may be the ſame; God cometh and viſits thee by laying his afflicting hand upon thee: it toucheth thee, and thou art troubled; ſuggeſting that it was but a touch, a ſlight one, a light affliction; thereby leſſening Job's calamity and diſtreſs, or making little and light of it, and aggravating his impatience under it, that for ſuch a trial as this he ſhould be ſo exceſſively troubled, his paſſions ſhould be ſo violently moved, and he be thrown into ſo much diſorder and confuſion, and be impatient beyond meaſure; no bounds being ſet to his grief, and the expreſſions of it; yea, even to be in the utmoſt conſternation and amazement, as the word [b] ſignifies.

℣. 6. Is not this thy fear, &c.] The fear of God, that which is of him, comes from him, is a grace of his implanted in the hearts of his people at converſion, and is increaſed and encouraged, and drawn forth into freſh exerciſe through the grace and goodneſs of God diſplayed; for a ſlaviſh fear, or a fear of puniſhment, of wrath and damnation, is not the true grace of fear, which may be in unregenerate men, and even in the devils; but this lies in a reverential affection for God on account of his goodneſs, and in a carefulneſs not to offend him on that account; in an hatred of ſin, and a departure from it; in an attendance on the worſhip of God, and is ſometimes put for the whole of it; and is accompanied with faith in God, joy in the Holy Ghoſt, humility of ſoul, and holineſs of heart and life: now Job profeſſed to have this fear of God in his heart, and was thought to have it; this was his general character, ch. i. 1. but in his preſent caſe and circumſtances, Eliphaz aſks what was become of it, where it was now, and in what it appeared? and jeers him about it, as if he ſhould ſay, does it lie in this, in fainting and ſinking under afflictions, in being troubled and terrified, and thrown into a conſternation by them, and in breaking out into ſuch raſh expreſſions of God and his providence? is it come to this at laſt, or rather to nothing at all? for he ſuggeſts either that Job never had the true grace of fear in him, contrary to the character given of him, and confirmed by God himſelf, ch. i. 1, 8. and ii. 3. or that he had caſt it off, and it was gone from him, and left, ch. xv. 4. which can never be, where it once is, it being the great ſecurity againſt a final and total apoſtacy from God, Jer. xxxii. 40. or that what he had was merely hypocritical, like that which is taught by the precept of men, was only in appearance, and not in reality, as his conduct now ſhowed; for had he had the true fear of God before his eyes, and on his heart, he could never have curſed the day of his birth, nor arraigned the providence of God, and charged him with injuſtice, as he ſuppoſed he did; whereby his fear, his piety, his religion he had profeſſed, appeared to be juſt nothing at all [c]: it follows, thy confidence; that is, in God; for Job profeſſed none in any other, in any creature or creature-enjoyment, ch. xxxi. 24. this when right is a ſtrong act of faith and truſt in the Lord, a thorough perſuaſion and full aſſurance of intereſt in him as a covenant-God, and in his love and favour, and in Chriſt as the living Redeemer, and of the truth of the work of grace upon the heart, and of the certainty of the performance of it; alſo a holy boldneſs in prayer to God, and a firm and aſſured belief of being heard and anſwered; as well as an open and courageous profeſſion of him before men, without any fear of them; for all this Job had been famous, and now he is aſked where it all was? and what was become of it? how it appeared now? and intimates he never had any, or had caſt it away, and that it was come to nothing; as was concluded from the raſh expreſſions of his lips, and from the ſinkings of his ſpirit under his preſent afflictions; but Job's truſt and confidence in God and in Chriſt ſtill continued; ſee ch. xiii. 15. and xix. 25. thy hope; which alſo is a grace wrought in the heart, in regeneration; is of things unſeen and future, yet to be enjoyed either here or hereafter; and that which is right has Chriſt for its object, ground, and foundation, and is of ſingular uſe to keep up the ſpirits of men under afflictive providences: and Eliphaz obſerving Job to be very impatient under them, enquires about his hope; and intimates that what he had profeſſed to have was the hope of the hypocrite, and not real, and was now come to nothing; hope that is true, though it may become low, it cannot be loſt; nor was Job's, eſpecially with reſpect to ſpiritual and eternal things; ſee ch. xiv. 7, 14. and xix. 25, 26, 27. and the uprightneſs of thy ways? before God and men, walking uprightly in the ways of God, according to the revelation of his will made unto him, and acting the juſt and upright part in all his dealings with men; and for which he was celebrated, and is a part of the character before given of him, ch. i. 1, 8. and ii. 3. but it is inſinuated by Eliphaz, that there was nothing in it; it was only in ſhew, in appearance, it was not from the heart; or it would not be thus with him as it was, nor would he behave in the manner he now did: ſome read the words as in the margin, and in ſome copies of our bible, is not thy fear thy confidence? and the uprightneſs of thy ways thy hope? and with ſome little variation Mr. Broughton; is not thy religion thy hope, and thy right ways thy confidence? that is, didſt thou not hope and expect, and even wert thou not confident of it, that becauſe of thy fear of God, and of the uprightneſs of thy ways before men, that thou ſhouldſt not only be increaſed in thy worldly ſubſtance, but be preſerved and protected in the enjoyment of it? and were not theſe the reaſons which induced thee to be religious, and make ſuch a ſhew of it? ſuggeſting, that he was only religious from mercenary views, and ſelfiſh principles, and ſo tacitly charges him with what the devil himſelf did, ch. i. 9. and this way go many Jewiſh and Chriſtian interpreters [d]: ſome render the words much in the ſame way, but but to a better ſenſe, and more in favour of Job, and by way of inſtruction and comfort to him: ſhould not thy fear be thy confidence, and thy hope, and the uprightneſs of thy ways [a]? ſhouldſt thou not take encouragement from thy fear of God, and the uprightneſs of thine heart and ways, to expect deliverance and ſalvation, and not faint and ſink as thou doſt? or is not this the cauſe of all thine impatience, thy fear of God, truſt and hope in him, and thine integrity? concluding thou ſhouldſt have been dealt with after another manner for the ſake of theſe things, and therefore art ready to think thou art hardly dealt with by God, having deſerved better treatment; thus making Job to think highly of himſelf, and to entertain wrong notions of God; ſo Schmidt; but the firſt ſenſe I have given of the words, ſeems beſt.

℣. 7. Remember, I pray thee, who ever periſhed being innocent? &c.] Here Eliphaz appeals to Job himſelf, and deſires him to recollect if ever any one inſtance had fallen under his obſervation, in the whole courſe of his life; or it had ever been told him by credible perſons, that an innocent man, by whom he means not one entirely free from ſin original or actual, for he knew there was no ſuch perſons in the world, ſince the fall of Adam, but a truly good and gracious man, who was not guilty of any notorious and capital crime, or did not live a vicious courſe of life; if he ever knew or heard of any ſuch perſons that periſhed; which cannot be underſtood of eternal ruin and deſtruction, which would be at once granted, that ſuch as theſe deſcribed can never periſh in ſuch a ſenſe, but have everlaſting life; nor of a corporal death, which is ſometimes the ſenſe of periſhing, ſince it is notorious that innocent and righteous perſons ſo periſh or die, ſee Eccl. vii. 15. Iſ. lvii. 1. and could it be meant of a violent death, an anſwer might have been returned; and Eliphaz perhaps was not acquainted with it himſelf, that that innocent and righteous perſon Abel thus periſhed by the hands of his brother: but this is rather to be underſtood of periſhing by afflictions, ſore and heavy ones, not ordinary but extraordinary ones; and which are, or look like the judgments of God on men, whereby they loſe their all, their ſubſtance, their ſervants, their children, as well as their own health, which was Job's caſe; and therefore if no parallel inſtance of an innocent perſon ever being in the like caſe, it is inſinuated that Job could not be an innocent man: or where were the righteous cut off? ſuch as are truly righteous in the ſight of God, as well as before men, who have the gift of righteouſneſs beſtowed on them, and live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly; in what age or country was it ever known that ſuch perſons, in their family and ſubſtance, were cut off by the hand and providence of God, and abandoned and forſaken by him, and reduced to ſuch circumſtances, that there could be no hope of their ever being in proſperous ones again? and Job now being in ſuch a forlorn and miſerable caſe and condition, it is ſuggeſted, that he could not be a righteous man: but admitting that no ſuch inſtance could be produced, Eliphaz was too haſty and premature in his concluſion; ſeeing, as it after appeared, Job was not ſo cut off, abandoned and forſaken by God, as not to riſe any more; for his latter end was greater than his beginning: and beſides, innocent and righteous perſons are often involved in the ſame calamities as wicked men are, and their afflictions are the ſame; only with this difference, to the one they are the proper puniſhment of ſin, to the other they are fatherly chaſtiſements and trials of their grace, and iſſue in their good; the Targum explains it of ſuch perſons, as Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, none ſuch as they periſhing, or being cut off.

℣. 8. Even as I have ſeen, &c.] Here he goes about to prove by his own experience, the deſtruction of wicked men; and would intimate, that Job was ſuch an one, becauſe of the ruin he was fallen into: they that plow iniquity, and ſow wickedneſs, reap the ſame; figurative expreſſions, denoting that ſuch who deviſe iniquity in their hearts, form and plan ſchemes of it in their minds, ſignified by plowing iniquity, and who were ſtudious and diligent to put into practice what they deviſed; who took a great deal of pains to commit ſin, and were conſtant at it, expreſſed by ſowing wickedneſs; theſe ſooner or later eat the fruit of their doings, are puniſhed in proportion to their crimes, even in this life, as well as hereafter, ſee Hoſ. viii. 7. and x. 13. Gal. vi. 7, 8. though a Jewiſh commentator [b] obſerves, that the thought of ſin is deſigned by the firſt phraſe; the endeavour to bring it into action by the ſecond; and the finiſhing of the work, or the actual commiſſion of the evil, by the third; the puniſhment thereof being what is expreſſed in the next verſe; the Targum applies this to the generation of the flood.

℣. 9. By the blaſt of God they periſh, &c.] They and their works, the plowers, ſowers and reapers of iniquity; the alluſion is to the blaſting of corn by eaſt-wind, or by mildew, &c. having uſed the figures of plowing and ſowing before; and which is as ſoon and as eaſily done as corn, or any thing elſe, is blaſted in the above manner; and denotes the ſudden and eaſy deſtruction of wicked men by the power of God, ſtirred up by his wrath and indignation, becauſe of their ſins; who when he blows a blaſt on their perſons, ſubſtance and families, they periſh at once: and by the breath of his noſtrils are they conſumed; meaning his wrath and anger, which is like a ſtream of brimſtone, and kindles a fire on the wicked, which are as fuel to it, and are ſoon conſumed by it; the alluſion is to breath in a man's noſtrils, and the heat of his wrath and fury diſcovered thereby: ſome think this refers to Job's children being deſtroyed by the wind, ſee Iſ. xi. 4.

℣. 10. The roaring of the lion, and the voice of the fierce lion, &c.] Which Aben Ezra interprets of God himſelf, who is compared to a lion; who not only by his voice terrifies, but in his wrath tears the wicked in pieces, and deſtroys them, and ſo is a continuation of the preceding account; and others, as R. Moſes and R. Jonah, whom he mentions, take this to be a continuation of the means and methods by which God deſtroys wicked men ſometimes, namely, by beaſts of prey; this being one of his ſore judgments he threatens men with, and inflicts upon men, ſee Lev. xxvi. 22. Ezek. xiv. 21. and in this they are followed by ſome chriſtian interpreters, who render the words at or by the roaring of the lion, and by the voice of the fierce lion, by the teeth of the young lions [c], they the the wicked are broken, ground to pieces, and utterly deſtroyed; but it is better with Jarchi, Ben Gerſom, and others, to underſtand it of kings and princes, of the mighty ones of the earth, tyrannical and oppreſſive rulers and governors; comparable to lions of different ages, becauſe of their grandeur and greatneſs, their power and might, their cruelty and oppreſſion in their ſeveral different capacities; ſignifying, that theſe do not eſcape the righteous judgments of God: the Targum interprets the roaring of the lion of Eſau, and the voice of the fierce lion of Edom; and another Jewiſh writer [d] of Nimrod, the firſt tyrant and oppreſſor, the mighty hunter before the Lord; but theſe are too particular; wicked men in power and authority in general are here, and in the following clauſes, intended, ſee Jer. iv. 7. and l. 17. Nahum ii. 11, 12, 13. 1 Tim. iv. 17. and the ſenſe is, that ſuch plowers and ſowers of iniquity as are like to fierce and roaring lions, are eaſily and quickly deſtroyed by the Lord: and the teeth of the young lions are broken; the power of ſuch mighty ones to do miſchief is taken away from them, and they and their families are brought to ruin; the teeth of lions are very ſtrong in both jaws; they have 14 teeth, four inciſors or cutters, four canine or dog teeth, ſix molares or grinders.

℣. 11. The old lion periſheth for lack of prey, &c.] Or rather the ſtout and ſtrong lion [c], that is moſt able to take the prey, and moſt ſkilful at it, yet ſuch ſhall periſh for want of it; not ſo much for want of finding it, or of power to ſeize it, as of keeping it when got, it being taken away from him; ſignifying, that God oftentimes in his providence takes away from cruel oppreſſors, what they have got by oppreſſion, and ſo they are brought into ſtarving and famiſhing circumſtances. The Septuagint renders the word by myrmecoleon, or the ant-lion, which Iſidore [f] thus deſcribes, "it is a little animal, very troubleſome to ants, which hides itſelf in the duſt, and kills the ants as they carry their corn; hence it is called both a lion and an ant, becauſe to other animals it is as an ant, and to the ants as a lion," and therefore can't be the lion here ſpoken of; though Strabo [g] and Ælianus [h] ſpeak of lions in Arabia and Babylon called ants, which ſeem to be a ſpecies of lions, and being in thoſe countries, might be known to Eliphaz. Megaſthenes [i] ſpeaks of ants in India as big as foxes, of great ſwiftneſs, and get their living by hunting: and the ſtout lion's whelps are ſcattered abroad; or the whelps of the lioneſs [k], theſe are ſcattered from the lion and lioneſs, and from one another, to ſeek for food, but in vain; the Targum applies this to Iſhmael, and his poſterity; Jarchi, and others, to the builders of Babel, ſaid to be ſcattered, Gen. xi. 8. rather reference may be had to the giants, the men of the old world, who filled the earth with violence, which was the cauſe of the flood being brought upon the world of the ungodly. Some think that Eliphaz has a regard to Job in all this, and that by the fierce lion he deſigns and deſcribes Job as an oppreſſor and tyrant, and by the lioneſs, his wife, and by the young lions, and lion's whelps, his children; and indeed, tho' he may not directly deſign him, yet he may obliquely point at him, and ſuggeſt, that he was like to the men he had in view, and compares to theſe creatures, and therefore his calamities righteouſly came upon him.

℣. 12. Now a thing was ſecretly brought to me, &c.] From reaſon and experience, Eliphaz proceeds to a viſion and revelation he had from God, ſhewing the purity and holineſs of God, and the frailty, weakneſs, folly and ſinfulneſs of men, by which it appears that men cannot be juſt in the ſight of God, and therefore it muſt be wrong in Job to inſiſt upon his innocence and integrity. Some indeed have thought, that this was a mere fiction of Eliphaz, and not a real viſion; yea, ſome have gone ſo far as to pronounce it a diabolical one, but without any juſt foundation; for there is nothing in the manner or matter of it, but what is agreeable to a divine viſion or to a revelation from God; beſides, tho' Eliphaz was a miſtaken man in the caſe of Job, yet was a good man, as may be concluded from the acceptance of a ſacrifice for him by the Lord, which was offered for him by Job, according to the order of God, and therefore could never be guilty of ſuch an impoſture; nor does Job ever charge him with any falſhood in this matter, who doubtleſs would have been able to have traverſed and expoſed him; add to all this, that in his diſcourſe annexed to and continued along with this account, ſtands a paſſage, which the Apoſtle has quoted as of divine inſpiration, 1 Cor. iii. 19. from ch. v. 13. When Eliphaz had this viſion, whether within the ſeven days of his viſit to Job, or before, ſome time ago, which he might call to mind on this occaſion, and judging it appoſite to the preſent caſe, thought fit to relate it, is not certain, nor very material to know: it is introduced after this manner, a thing or word, a word of prophecy, a word from the Lord, a revelation of his mind and will, which was hidden and ſecret, and what before he was not ſo well acquainted with; this was brought unto him by the Spirit of God, or by a meſſenger from the Lord, ſent on this occaſion, and for this purpoſe; and the manner in which it was brought was ſecretly or by ſtealth, as Mr. Broughton and others [l] render it; it was ſtolen unto him, or ſecretly brought, as the Targum, and we, and others [m]; it was in a private way or manner; or ſuddenly, as ſome others [n], at unawares, when it was not expected by him: it may have reſpect to the ſtill and ſilent manner in which it was revealed to him, there was ſilence, and he heard a voice, a ſtill one, a ſecret whiſper; or to the almoſt inviſible perſon that revealed it, whoſe image he ſaw, but could not diſcern his form and likeneſs; or it may be to the diſtinguiſhing favour he enjoyed, in having this revelation particularly made to him, and not to others; he heard this word, as it were, behind the curtain, or vail, as the Jews [o] ſay, explaining this paſſage: mine ear received a little of it; this revelation was made, not by an impulſe upon his ſpirits, but vocally, a voice was heard, as after declared, and Eliphaz was attentive to it; he liſtened to what was ſaid, and catched at it, and took it in with much delight and pleaſure, tho' but a ſmall part of it, as his capacity was able to retain it; or it was but a ſmall part of the will of God, an hint of his only, as ſome interpret it [p]. Schultens has ſhewn, from the uſe of a word near this in the Arabic language, that it ſignifies a ſtring of ℣. 13. In thoughts from the viſions of the night, &c.] Whilſt Eliphaz was thinking of, and meditating upon divine things, or whilſt he was revolving in his mind ſome night-viſions he had, before this was made unto him, ſee Dan. ii. 29. in meditation the Lord is often pleaſed to make known more of his mind and will to his people; and this is one way in which he was wont to do it in former times, in a viſion either in the day, as ſometimes, or in the night, as at others, and as here, ſee Numb. xii. 6. when deep ſleep falleth on men; on ſorrowful men, as Mr. Broughton renders it; ſuch who have been laborious all the day, and getting their bread with ſorrow and trouble, and are weary; who as ſoon as they lie down fall aſleep, and ſleep falls on them, and to ſuch it is ſweet, as the wiſe men ſays, Eccl. v. 12. now it was at ſuch a time when men ordinarily and commonly are aſleep, that this viſion was had.

℣. 14. Fear came upon me, and trembling, &c.] Not only a dread of mind, but trembling of body; which was often the caſe even with good men, whenever there was any unuſual appearance of God unto them by a voice, or by any repreſentation, or by an angel; as with Abraham in the viſion of the pieces, and with Moſes on mount Sinai, and with Daniel in ſome of his viſions, and with Zechariah, when an angel appeared and brought him the tidings of a ſon to be born to him; which ariſes from the frailty and weakneſs of human nature, a conſciouſneſs of guilt, a ſenſe of the awful majeſty of God, and an uneaſy apprehenſion of what may be the conſequences of it: which made all my bones to ſhake; not only there was inward fear and outward tremor of body, but to ſuch a degree, that not one joint in him was ſtill; all the members of his body ſhook, and every bone was as if it was looſed, which are the more firm and ſolid parts, as is common in any conſiderable tremor.

℣. 15. Then a ſpirit paſſed before my face, &c.] Which ſome interpret of a wind[q], a bluſtering wind, that blew ſtrong in his face; and ſo the Targum renders it, a ſtormy wind, ſuch an one as Elijah perceived when the Lord ſpoke to him, tho' he was not in that, 1 Kings xix. 11. or ſuch a whirlwind, out of which the Lord ſpake to Job, ch. xxxviii. 1. or rather as Jarchi, an angel, an immaterial ſpirit, one of Jehovah's miniſtring ſpirits, clothed in an human form, and which paſſed and repaſſed before Eliphaz, that he might take notice of it: the hair of my fleſh ſtood up; erect, through ſurprize and dread; which is ſometimes the caſe, when any thing aſtoniſhing and terrible is beheld; the blood at ſuch times making its way to the heart, for the preſervation of that leaves the external members of the body cold, and the ſkin of the fleſh, in which the hair is, being contracted by the impetuous influx of the nervous fluid, cauſes the hair to ſtand upright, particularly the hair of the head, like the prickles of hedge-hogs[r]; which has been uſual at the ſight of an apparition[s].

℣. 16. It ſtood ſtill, &c.] That is, the ſpirit, or the angel in a viſible form; it was before going to and fro, but now it ſtood ſtill right againſt Eliphaz, as if it had ſomething to ſay to him, and ſo preparing him to attend to it; which he might do the better, it ſtanding before him whilſt ſpeaking to him, that he might have the opportunity of taking more notice of it: but notwithſtanding this advantageous poſition of it, I could not diſcern the form thereof; what it was, whether human or any other: an image was before mine eyes; he ſaw ſomething, ſome appearance and likeneſs, but could not tell what it was; perhaps the fear and ſurprize he was in hindered him from taking in any diſtinct idea of it, or that particular notice of it, ſo as to be able to form in his own mind any ſuitable notion of it, or to deſcribe it to others: there was ſilence both in the ſpirit or image, which ſtanding ſtill, made no ruſhing noiſe, and in Eliphaz himſelf, who kept in his breath, and liſtened with all the attention he could to it; or a ſmall low voice, as Ben Melech interprets it: ſo it follows, and I heard a voice; a diſtinct articulate voice or ſound of words, very audibly delivered by the ſpirit, or image that ſtood before him: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 17. Shall mortal man be more juſt than God? &c.] Poor weak, frail, dying man, and ſo ſinful, as his mortality ſhews, which is the effect of ſin; how ſhould ſuch a man be more righteous than God? who is ſo originally and eſſentially of himſelf, completely, perfectly, yea, infinitely righteous in his nature, and in his works, both of providence and grace; in chaſtizing his people, puniſhing the wicked, and beſtowing favours upon his friends, even in their election, redemption, juſtification, pardon, and eternal happineſs: yea, not only prophane wicked ſinners can make no pretenſions to any thing of this kind, but even the beſt of men, none being without ſin, no not man in his beſt eſtate; for the righteouſneſs he had then was of God, and therefore he could not be more juſt than he that made him upright. This comparative ſenſe, which our verſion leads to, is more generally received; but it ſeems not to be the ſenſe of the paſſage, ſince this is a truth clear from reaſon, and needed no viſion or revelation to diſcover it; nor can it be thought that God would ſend an angelic ſpirit in ſuch an awful and pompous manner, to declare that which every one knew, and no man would contradict; even the moſt ſelf-righteous and ſelf-ſufficient man would never be ſo daring and inſolent, as to ſay he was more righteous than God; but the words ſhould be rather rendered, ſhall mortal man be juſtified by God, or be juſt from God? or with him, or before him[t], in his ſight, by any righteouſneſs in him, or done by him? ſhall he enter into his preſence, ſtand at his bar, and be examined there, and go away from thence in the ſight, and account of God, as a righteous perſon of himſelf? no, he cannot; now this is a doctrine oppoſed to carnal reaſoning, and the common ſentiments of men, a doctrine of divine revelation, a precious truth: this is the ſtring of pearls Eliphaz received, ſee ℣. 12. that mortal man is of himſelf an unrighteous creature; that he can't be juſtified by his own righteouſneſs in the ſight of God; and that he muſt look and ſeek out for a better righteouſneſs than his own, to juſtify him before God; and this agrees with Eliphaz's interpretation of the viſion, ch. xv. 14. with the ſentiments of his friend Bildad, dad, who ſeems to have ſome reſpect to it, ch. xxv. 4. and alſo of Job himſelf, ch. ix. 2. and in like manner are we to underſtand the following clauſe: ſhall a man be more pure than his maker? even the greateſt and beſt of men, ſince what purity was in Adam, in a ſtate of innocence, was from God; and what good men have in a ſtate of grace, is from the grace of God and blood of Chriſt, without which no man is pure at all, and therefore can't be purer than him from whom they have it: or rather be pure from, or with, or before his maker [u], or be ſo accounted by him; every man is impure by his firſt birth, and in his nature-ſtate, and therefore can't ſtand before a pure and holy God, who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity; or go away from his preſence, and be reckoned by him a pure and holy creature of himſelf; nor can any thing that he can do in a moral or ceremonial manner, cleanſe him from his impurity; and therefore it is neceſſary he ſhould apply to the grace of God, and blood of Chriſt, for his purification.

℣. 18. Behold, he put no truſt in his ſervants, &c.] Some think the divine oracle or revelation ends in the preceding verſe, and that here Eliphaz makes ſome uſe and improvement of it, and addreſſes Job, and argues with him upon it, with a view to his caſe and circumſtances; but rather the account of what the oracle ſaid, or was delivered by revelation, is continued to the end of the chapter, there being nothing unworthy of God, either in the matter or manner of it: and here Eliphaz himſelf is addreſſed, and this addreſs uſhered in with a behold, as a note of admiration, aſſeveration and attention; it being ſomewhat wonderful and of importance, ſure and certain, and which deſerved to be liſtened to, that God, the maker of men and angels, did not, and does not, put any truſt or confidence in his ſervants; meaning not the prophets in particular, as the Targum, though they are in an eminent ſenſe the ſervants of God; nor righteous men in general, as Jarchi and others, who tho' heretofore ſervants of ſin, yet thro' grace become ſervants of righteouſneſs, and of God; but as men who dwelt in houſes of clay, are oppoſed to them, and diſtinguiſhed from them in the next verſe, they muſt be underſtood of angels, as the following clauſe explains it; who always ſtand before God, miniſtring unto him, ready to do his will, and to do it in the moſt perfect manner creatures are capable of; they go forth at his command into the ſeveral parts of the world, and execute his orders; they worſhip him, and celebrate his perfections, aſcribing honour and glory, wiſdom, power and bleſſing to him; and this they do chearfully, conſtantly and inceſſantly. Now though God has intruſted theſe ſervants of his with many meſſages of importance, both under the Old and New Teſtament-diſpenſation; yet he has not truſted them with the ſalvation of men, to which they are not equal, but has put it into the hands of his Son; nor indeed did he truſt them with the ſecret of it, ſo as to make them his counſellors about it; no, Chriſt only was the wonderful counſellor in this affair, the counſel of peace, or that reſpecting the peace and reconciliation of men was only between him and his Father; God was only in and with Chriſt, and not angels reconciling men, or drawing the plan of their reconciliation; and when this ſecret, being concluded on and ſettled, was revealed to angels, it is thought by ſome to be the reaſon of ſo many of them apoſtatizing from God; they chuſing rather to have nothing to do with him, than to be under the Son of God in human nature: but beſides this, there are many other things God has not truſted the angels with, as his purpoſes and decrees within himſelf, and the knowledge of the times and ſeaſons of the accompliſhment of them, particularly the day and hour of judgment; tho' the ſenſe here rather ſeems to be this, that God does not, and did not truſt them with themſelves; he knew their natural weakneſs, frailty, mutability, how liable they were to ſin and fall from him, and therefore he choſe them in Chriſt, put them into his hands, and made him head over them, and ſo confirmed and eſtabliſhed them in him; and as it may be rendered, did not put ſtability or firmneſs [w] in them, ſo as to ſtand of themſelves; or perfection in them, as ſome render it [x], which cannot be in a creature, as it is in God: and his angels he charged with folly; that is comparatively, with reſpect to himſelf, in compariſon of whom all creatures are fooliſh, be they ever ſo wiſe; for he is all-wiſe, and only wiſe; angels are very knowing and intelligent in things natural and evangelical, but their knowledge is but imperfect, particularly in the latter; as appears by their being deſirous of looking into thoſe things which reſpect the ſalvation of men, and by learning of the church the manifold wiſdom of God, 1 Pet. i. 12. Eph. iii. 10. or by folly is meant vanity, weakneſs, and imperfection [y], a liableneſs to fall, which God obſerved in them; and which are in every creature in its beſt eſtate, and were in Adam in his ſtate of innocence, and ſo in the angels that fell not, eſpecially previous to their confirmation by Chriſt, ſee Pſ. xxxix. 5. and ſo the ſenſe is the ſame with the preceding clauſe: ſome render it by repeating the negative from that, and he putteth not glorying or boaſting in his angels [z]; he makes no account of their duties and ſervices, ſo as to glory in them; it is an humbling himſelf to regard them; or he puts nothing in them that they can boaſt of, ſince they have nothing of themſelves, all from him, and therefore cannot glory as though they had received it not. Others obſerve, that the word has the ſignification of light, and differently render the paſſage; ſome, though he putteth light in his angels [a], makes them angels of light, comparable to morning-ſtars, yet he puts no truſt in them; and what they have is from him, and therefore not to be compared with him, nor can they glory in themſelves; or, he putteth not light, or not clear light into them [b]; that which is perfect, and free from all manner of darkneſs; ſuch only is in himſelf the Father of lights, with whom it dwells in perfection, and there is no ſhadow of turning in him: ſome would have this underſtood of the evil angels, whom God charged with folly; but this is too low a term, a phraſe not ſtrong enough to expreſs their ſin and wickedneſs, who are not chargeable only with imprudence, but with rebellion and treaſon againſt God; nor does this ſenſe agree with parallel places, ch. xv. 14, 15, 16. and xxv. 4, 5. and beſides, the beauty of

of the compariſon of them with men would be loſt, and the ſtrength of the argument with reſpect to them would be ſadly weakened, which we have in the following verſe.

℣. 19. How much leſs on them that dwell in houſes of clay, &c.] Meaning men, but not as dwelling in houſes, in a proper ſenſe, made of clay dried by the ſun, as were common in the eaſtern countries; nor in mean cottages, as diſtinguiſhed from cedar, and cieled houſes, in which great perſonages dwelt, for this reſpects men in common; nor as being in the houſes of the grave, as the Targum, Jarchi, and others, which are no other than duſt, dirt, and clay; for this regards not the dead but the living; but the bodies of men are meant, in which their ſouls dwell; which ſhews the ſuper-excellency of the ſoul to the body, and its independency upon it, being capable of exiſting without it, as it does in the ſeparate ſtate before the reſurrection; ſo bodies are called tabernacles, and earthen veſſels, and earthly houſes, 2 Pet i. 13, 14. 2 Cor. iv. 7. and v. 1. and bodies of clay, ch. xiii. 12. ſo the body is by Epictetus [c] called clay elegantly wrought; and another heathen writer [d] calls it clay ſteeped in, or macerated and mixed with blood: being of clay denotes the original of bodies, the duſt of the earth; and the frailty of them, like brittle clay, and the pollution of them, all the members thereof being defiled with ſin, and ſo-called vile bodies, and will remain ſuch till changed by Chriſt, Phil. iii. 21. now the argument ſtands thus, if God put no truſt in angels, then much leſs in poor, frail, mortal, ſinful men; he has no dependance on their ſervices, whoſe weakneſs, unprofitableneſs, and unfaithfulneſs he well knows; he puts no truſt in their purpoſes, and reſolutions, and vows, which often come to nothing; nor does he truſt his own people with their ſalvation and juſtification, or put theſe things upon the foot of their works, but truſts them and the ſalvation and juſtification of them with his Son, and puts them upon the foot of his own grace and mercy: and if he charges the holy angels with folly, then much more, (for ſo it may be alſo rendered) will he charge mortal ſinful men with it, who are born like the wild aſs's colt, and are fooliſh as well as diſobedient, even his choſen ones, eſpecially before converſion; or thus, if ſo ſtands the caſe of angels, then much leſs can man be juſt before him, and pure in his ſight: the weakneſs, frailty, and pollution of the bodies of men are further enlarged on in ſome following clauſes: whoſe foundation is in the duſt; meaning not the lower parts of the body, as the feet, which ſupport and bear it up; rather the ſoul, which is the baſis of it, referring to its corruption and depravity by ſin; though it ſeems chiefly to reſpect the original of the body, which is the duſt of the earth, of which it conſiſts, and to which it will return again, this being but a poor foundation to ſtand upon, Gen. ii. 7. and iii. 17. Eccl. xii. 7. for the ſenſe is, whoſe foundation is duſt, mere duſt, the particle ב being redundant, or rather an Arabiſm: which are cruſhed before the moth? that is, which bodies of men, or houſes of clay founded in the duſt; or, they cruſh them; or which or whom they cruſh [e]; either God, Father, Son, and Spirit, as ſome; or the angels, as others; or diſtreſſes, calamities, and afflictions, which ſenſe ſeems beſt, by which they are cruſhed before the moth or worm [f]; that is, before they die, and come to be the repaſt of worms, ch. xix. 26. or before a moth is deſtroyed, as ſoon, or ſooner [g] than it is; ſo a man may be cruſhed to death, or his life taken from him, as ſoon as a moth's; either by the immediate hand of God, as Ananias and Sapphira, or by the ſword of man, as Amaſa by Joab; or rather, like a moth [h], as eaſily and as quickly as a moth is cruſhed between a man's fingers, or by his foot: ſome, as Saadiah Gaon, and others render it, before Arcturus [i], a conſtellation in the heavens, ch. ix. 9. and take the phraſe to be the ſame as that, before the ſun, Pſ. lxxii. 17. and to denote the perpetuity and duration of their being cruſhed, which would be as long as the ſun or Arcturus continued, that is, for ever; but either of the above ſenſes is beſt, eſpecially the laſt of them.

℣. 20. They are deſtroyed from morning to evening, &c.] That is, thoſe that dwell in houſes of clay before deſcribed; the meaning is, that they are always expoſed to death, and liable to it every day they live; not only ſuch who are perſecuted for the ſake of religion, but all men in common, for of ſuch are both the text and context; who have always the ſeeds of mortality and death in them, that is continually working in them; and every day, even from morning to evening, are innumerable inſtances of the power of death over men; and not only ſome there are, whoſe ſun riſes in the morning and ſets at evening, who are like graſs in the morning, gay and green, and by evening cut down and withered, live but a day, and ſome not that; but even it is true of all men comparatively ſpeaking, they begin to die the day they begin to live; ſo that the wiſe man takes no notice of any intermediate time between a time to be born and a time to die, Eccl. iii. 2. ſo frail and ſhort is the life of man; his days are but as an hand's breadth, Pſ. xxxix. 5. they periſh for ever; which is not to be underſtood of the ſecond or eternal death which ſome die; for this is not the caſe of all; thoſe that believe in Chriſt ſhall not periſh for ever, but have everlaſting life; but this reſpects not only the long continuance of men under the power of death until the reſurrection, which is not contradicted by this expreſſion; but it ſignifies that the dead never return to this mortal life again, at leaſt the inſtances are very rare; their families, friends, and houſes, that knew them, know them no more; they return no more to their worldly buſineſs or enjoyments, ſee ch. vii. 9, 10. and x. 21. without any regarding it; their death; neither they themſelves nor others expecting it ſo ſoon, and uſing no means to prevent it, and which, if made uſe of, would not have availed, their appointed time being come; or without putting [k], either without putting light into them, as Sephorno, which can only be true of ſome; or without putting the hand, either their own or another's, to deſtroy them, being done by the hand of God, by a diſtemper of his ſending, or by one providence or another;

another; or without putting the heart to it, which comes to the ſenſe of our verſion; though death is ſo frequent every day, yet it is not taken notice of; men do not lay it to heart, ſo as to conſider of their latter end, and repent of their ſins, and reform from them, that they may not be their ruin; and this is and would be the caſe of all men, were it not for the grace of God.

℣. 21. Doth not their excellency which is in them, go away? &c.] Either the ſoul which is in them, and is the moſt excellent part of them; this, tho' it dies not, yet it goes away and departs from the body at death; and ſo do all the powers and faculties of it, the thoughts, the affections, the mind and memory, yea, all the endowments of the mind, wiſdom, learning, knowledge of languages, arts, and ſciences, all fail at death, 1 Cor. xiii. 8. Pſ. cxlvi. 8. and ſo likewiſe all that is excellent in the body, the ſtrength and beauty of it depart, its ſtrength is weakened in the way, and its comelineſs turned into corruption: or, as it may be rendered, which is with them [l]; and ſo may likewiſe denote all outward enjoyments, as wealth and riches, glory and honour, which a man cannot carry with him, do not deſcend into the grave with him, but then go away: a learned man [m] renders the words, is not their excellency removed which was in them? and thinks it refers to the corruption of nature, the loſs of original righteouſneſs, and of the image of God in man, which formerly was his excellency in his ſtate of innocence, but now, through ſin and the fall, is removed from him; and this, indeed, is the cauſe, the ſource and ſpring of his frailty, mortality, and death; hence it follows: they die even without wiſdom; that dies with them, or whatſoever of that they have goes away from them at death; wiſe men die as well as fools, yea, they die as fools do, and multitudes without true wiſdom, not being wiſe enough to conſider their latter end; they die without the wiſdom which ſome are made to know, in the hidden part, without the fear of God, which is real wiſdom, or without the knowledge of Chriſt, and of God in Chriſt, which is the beginning, earneſt, and pledge of life eternal. Now then ſince man is ſuch a frail, mortal, fooliſh and ſinful creature, how can he be juſt before God, or pure in the ſight of his Maker? which is the thing deſigned to be proved and illuſtrated by all this; and here ends the divine oracle, or the revelation made to Eliphaz, when he had the viſion before related.

CHAP. V.

IN this chapter Eliphaz goes on to prove, and farther confirm and eſtabliſh what he had before aſſerted, that not good men, but wicked men only are afflicted of God, at leaſt greatly, ſo as to have their ſubſtance wholly deſtroyed and periſh, which was Job's caſe; and this partly from the caſe, ſtate, and ſentiments of all the ſaints, ℣. 1, 2. and from his own obſervation and experience, ℣. 3, 4, 5. and then he proceeds to give ſome advice; and ſeeing afflictions do not come by chance, but are of God, it is right in ſuch circumſtances for a man to ſeek to the Lord for pardon and ſalvation, and commit his cauſe unto him, ℣. 6, 7, 8. who does many great things in a providential way to the good of man in general, and to the diſappointment of wicked crafty men, and to the ſerving of the poor in particular, ℣. 9—16. ſo that it is beſt patiently to bear the afflicting hand of God, and it is an happineſs to be corrected by him, ſince he delivers ſuch out of all their troubles, and preſerves them from many evils, and beſtows many good things on them; which would be Job's caſe particularly, if he behaved according to the advice given, and which is left with him to conſider of, ℣. 17—27.

℣. 1. Call now, if there be any that will anſwer thee, &c.] That is, call upon God, which, if ſeriouſly, and not ironically ſpoken, was good advice; God is to be called upon, and eſpecially in times of trouble; and invocation is to be made in faith, in ſincerity, and with fervency, and to be accompanied with confeſſion of ſin, and repentance for it; and ſooner or later God hears and anſwers thoſe that call upon him; but Eliphaz ſuggeſts, that if Job did call upon him, it would be in vain, he would not hear him, he going upon the ſame maxim that the Jews did in Chriſt's time, God heareth not ſinners, John ix. 31. or call upon him to give him an oracle from heaven, to favour him with a viſion and revelation, and ſee if he could get any thing that would confront and confute what he had delivered as coming that way; which, if it could be done by him, would appear to be a falſhood and an impoſture, ſince one revelation from God is not contradicted by another: or elſe the ſenſe is, call over the catalogue and liſt of good men that have been from the beginning of the world, and ſee if there be any that anſwers to thee [n], whoſe caſe, character, and behaviour correſpond with thee; if ever any of them was afflicted as thou art, or ever behaved with ſo much indecency. impatience, murmuring, and blaſphemy againſt God as thou haſt done; that ever opened his mouth. and curſed the day of his birth, and reflected upon the providence and juſtice of God as thou haſt, as if thou wert unrighteouſly dealt with: or rather, call now, and ſummon all creatures together, angels and men, and get any one of them to be thy patron, to defend thy cauſe, and plead for thee, to give a reply to what has been ſaid, from reaſon, experience, and revelation: and ſhouldſt thou obtain this, which is not likely, lo, there is one that can anſwer thee [o], as ſome render the words, meaning either God or himſelf; thus Eliphaz inſults Job, and triumphs over him, as being entirely baffled and conquered by him, by what he had related as an oracle and revelation from heaven: and to which of the ſaints wilt thou turn? or look, or have reſpect [p], that will be of any ſervice to thee? meaning either the divine perſons in the Godhead, ſometimes called Holy Ones, as in Joſh. xxiv. 19. Prov. ix. 10. and xxx. 3. Hoſ. xi. 12. the Holy Father, the Holy Son, and the Holy Spirit, who may and ſhould be turned and looked unto; God the Father, as the God of providence and grace for all good things; Jeſus Chriſt his Son, as the Redeemer and Saviour for righteouſneſs, neſs and eternal life; the Bleſſed Spirit, as a ſanctifier to carry on and finiſh the work of grace; but it is ſuggeſted, it would be in vain for Job to turn and look to any of theſe, ſince he would be rejected by them as a wicked man, nor would any of them plead his cauſe: or elſe the holy angels, as the Septuagint expreſs it, and who are called ſaints and holy ones, Deut. xxxiii. 2. Dan. viii. 13. Zech. xiv. 5. and it is aſked, which of thoſe he could turn or look to, and could expect relief and protection from? ſignifying, that none of theſe would vouchſafe to converſe with him, nor take him under their care, nor undertake to plead his cauſe: or rather holy men, ſuch as are ſanctified or ſet apart by God the Father, to whom Chriſt is made ſanctification, and in whoſe hearts the Holy Spirit has wrought principles of grace and holineſs, and who live holy lives and converſations; and it is inſinuated, that ſhould he turn and look to theſe, he would find none of them like him, nor in the ſame circumſtances, nor of the ſame ſentiments, or that would take his part and plead for him; but that all to a man would appear of the ſame mind with Eliphaz, that none but wicked men were afflicted by God as he was, and that he was ſuch an one, and that for the reaſon following: the papiſts very abſurdly produce this paſſage in favour of praying to departed ſaints, when not dead but living ones are meant, and even turning to them is diſcouraged; and beſides, this would contradict another tenet of the papiſts, that the Old Teſtament-ſaints, until the coming of Chriſt were in a ſort of purgatory called Limbus patrum, and therefore uncapable of helping ſaints on earth that ſhould apply unto them.

℣. 2. For wrath killeth the fooliſh man, &c.] Not one that is an ideot, and deſtitute of common ſenſe, and has no underſtanding in things natural and civil; but a wicked man, who has no knowledge of things divine and ſpiritual, and ſo fooliſh; which is the character of every natural man, and of God's people before converſion; and even of ſome profeſſors, who are fooliſh virgins, and carry the lamp of a religious profeſſion without the oil of grace; and ſuch an one Eliphaz took Job to be, whom ſooner or later the wrath of the Lord, as the Targum interprets it, which is revealed from heaven, and comes down upon the children of diſobedience, would conſume like devouring fire: or this may be underſtood of the wrath and paſſion of ſuch men themſelves, which ſometimes riſes in them to ſuch an height, as that they die in a fit of it; or do thoſe things which bring them to death, either by the hand of God, or by the civil magiſtrate: and envy ſlayeth the ſilly one; one that is ſimple and void of underſtanding, and is eaſily perſuaded and drawn into ſin, either by his own heart, or by evil men, or by the temptations of Satan; and in whoſe heart envy at the proſperity of others dwells, and which inſenſibly preys upon him, eats up his own ſpirits, and is rottenneſs to his bones, and crumbles them into duſt, Prov. xiv. 30. or the word may be rendered jealouſy, or zeal [q], as it ſometimes is, and may ſignify the jealouſy of the Lord, zeal for his own glory, which he ſometimes ſtirs up as a man of war, and which ſmoaks againſt wicked men, and conſumes them as fire, ſee Iſ. xlii. 13. Pſ. lxxix. 5. Deut. xxix. 20. Eliphaz by all this would repreſent and inſinuate, that Job was ſuch a man, hot, paſſionate, and angry with God and his providence, and envious at the proſperity of others, particularly his friends; and ſo was a fooliſh and ſilly man, in whoſe breaſt wrath and envy reſted, and would be his ruin and deſtruction, as he was already under ſlaying and killing providences.

℣. 3. I have ſeen the fooliſh taking root; &c.] Such fooliſh wicked men as before deſcribed; thoſe Eliphaz had obſerved to proſper in the world, and increaſe in riches, and even to have attained to a ſeeming ſtability and firmneſs, as if they would ever continue in ſuch happy circumſtances, ſee Jer. xii. 2. Pſ. xxxvii. 35, 36. by this he would obviate an objection, that here might be raiſed, and made againſt the aſſertion he was proving, that wicked men are afflicted and puniſhed of God for their ſins; whereas it is notorious, that they are not in trouble as other men, but in very proſperous and flouriſhing circumſtances; this he grants is their caſe for a while, as he had obſerved, but in a ſhort time they paſs away, they and their ſubſtance diſappear, and are no more ſeen, as follows: but ſuddenly I curſed his habitation; not that he wiſhed ill to him, or imprecated evils upon him; for curſing and bitterneſs only fit the mouths of wicked men, and not good men, among whom Eliphaz muſt be allowed to be; but he immediately thought within himſelf, as ſoon as he ſaw the flouriſhing ſtate of the wicked, that the curſe of the Lord was in their houſes, as in Prov. iii. 33. that they and all they had were under a curſe, and that God had given them what they had with a curſe, and had curſed all their bleſſings; which makes the difference between a good man and a wicked man; the one has what he has, his cottage and his ſmall ſubſtance with a bleſſing; the other his pleaſant habitation, as the word [r] here uſed ſignifies, his ſtately palace, rich furniture, and large eſtates with a curſe; or he prognoſticated, he foreſaw, and could foretell, and that without pretending to an extraordinary ſpirit of prophecy, that in a ſhort time the curſe of God would light upon him, and upon his houſe, ſee Zech. v. 3, 4.

℣. 4. His children are far from ſafety; &c.] From outward ſafety, from evils and dangers, to which they are liable and expoſed, not only from men, who hate them for their fathers ſake, who have been oppreſſors of them, or from God, who viſits the iniquity of the fathers upon the children; and from ſpiritual and eternal ſafety or ſalvation, or from ſalvation in the world to come, as the Targum, they treading in their fathers ſteps, and imitating their actions: and they are cruſhed in the gate; or openly, publickly, as Aben Ezra and others; or in the courts of judicature whither they are brought by thoſe their parents had oppreſſed, and where they are caſt and have no favour ſhown them; or literally by the falling of the gate upon them; and perhaps ſome reference is had to Job's children being cruſhed in the gate or door of the houſe, through which they endeavoured to get when it fell upon them and deſtroyed them; the Targum is, "and are cruſhed in the gates of hell, in the day of the great judgment:" neither is there any to deliver them; neither God nor man, they having no intereſt in either, or favour with, partly on account of their fathers ill-behaviour, and partly on account of their own; and ſad is the caſe of men when it is ſuch, ſee Pſ. l. 21.

℣. 5. Whoſe harveſt the hungry eateth up; &c.] This

This is to be underſtood of the fooliſh rich man before deſcribed, as taking root and flouriſhing; though he ſows, and reaps and gathers in his harveſt, and fancies he has goods laid up for many years, to be enjoyed by him, yet he is taken away by death, and another eats what he has gathered; either his hungry heirs, that he has kept bare, and without the proper neceſſaries of life; or the poor whom he has oppreſſed, who, driven by hunger, ſeize upon his harveſt, and eat it up, whether he be alive or dead: Sephorno interprets this of the wicked man himſelf, who ſhould eat up his own harveſt, and not have enough to ſatisfy him, the curſe of God being upon his land; and another learned interpreter [s] thinks the ſenſe is, that ſuch ſhould be the curſe of God on the fields of wicked men, that they ſhould produce no more than what was uſually left to the poor, and therefore ſhould have no need to gather it: and taketh it even out of the thorns; that is, either the hungry man takes the harveſt out of the thorns, among which it grows, ſee Matt. xiii. 7. or which he had gotten through the thorns, as Mr. Broughton renders it; that is, the owner, through many difficulties; and hunger will break through many to get at it; or though his harveſt being got in, is incloſed with a thorn hedge, the hungry man gets through it, and takes it out from it, ſurrounded by it; the above-mentioned Jewiſh writer underſtands this alſo of the wicked man, who takes his own harveſt out from among the thorns, ſo that there is nothing left for the poor and his friends, as it is meet there ſhould: the word [t] for thorns has alſo the ſignification of armour, particularly of ſhields; hence the Targum is, "and armed men with warlike arms ſhall take it away;" to which agrees the Vulgate Latin verſion, "and the armed men ſhall take it away;" that is, ſoldiers ſhould forage, ſpoil, and deſtroy it: and the robber ſwalloweth up their ſubſtance; the houſe-robber, who breaks in and devours all at once, and makes a clear riddance of it; ſome render it the hairy man [u], either that neglects his hair, as beggars, or ſuch that live in deſart places, as robbers, that they may appear the more terrible; or that take care of it, and nouriſh it, and tie it up in locks, and behind their heads, as Bar Tzemach and Ben Melech obſerve they do in Turkey; others tranſlate it the thirſty [w], and ſo it anſwers to the hungry in the preceding clauſe, and deſigns ſuch who thirſt, and gape after, and covet the ſubſtance of others, and greedily catch at it, and ſwallow it up at once, at one draught, as a thirſty man does a large quantity of liquor, ſee Prov. i. 12, 13. this may have ſome reſpect to the Sabæans and Chaldeans, that ſwallowed up Job's ſubſtance, and took away his cattle from him at once, and were no other than bands of robbers; and the uſe of the word for a thief or a robber, as we take it, is confirmed by a learned man [x], who derives it from the Arabic word صمم, which ſignifies to ſmite with a club or ſtone.

℣. 6. Although affliction cometh not forth of the duſt, &c.] Or rather, for or indeed [y], this being a reaſon ſhewing that wicked men are juſtly afflicted and puniſhed; ſeeing their afflictions come not from the creatures, though they may be inſtruments, but from God for the ſins of men: the word for affliction alſo ſignifies iniquity or ſin, the cauſe of affliction, as well as affliction the fruit of ſin; and ſo does the word in the following clauſe; and Aben Ezra underſtands both, not of natural but moral evil, and ſo do others [z]; both ſenſes may be taken in: ſin does not come from God, the Maker of the duſt of the earth, he is not the author of ſin, nor does this ſpring out of the duſt which he has made; good things, as Schmidt obſerves, come out of the earth for the uſe of man as well as beaſts, bread, and wine, and oil, and all the neceſſaries of life; the precious things produced by the influence of the ſun and moon, the precious things of the everlaſting hills, and of the earth, and the fulneſs of it; indeed, the earth was curſed for the ſin of men, but this is taken off; and however it is not owing to the ſoil, or to the air and climate in which a man lives that he is ſinful; for though there may be national vices, or ſome ſins peculiar to, or more predominant in one nation than in another, yet this is not to be attributed to ſuch cauſes; for all ſin is from a man's ſelf, and proceeds out of his own evil heart, which is deſperately wicked and evil continually, and from whence all the impure ſtreams of ſin flow, ſee Matt. xv. 19. and ſo afflictions are not to be aſcribed to ſecond cauſes, ſuch as the things before-mentioned, or Job's loſſes by the Sabeans and Chaldeans; nor did he place them to that account, but to the hand of God; nor to chance and fortune, or to be reckoned fortuitous events, as if they were chance-productions, ſpontaneous things that ſpring up of themſelves, and not under the direction of an all-wiſe providence; but they are to be conſidered as of God, and as of his appointment, and directed by his ſovereign will and pleaſure, and over-ruled for his glory; who has fixed what they ſhall be, of what kind and ſort, what the meaſure of them, to what pitch they ſhall riſe, and how long they ſhall laſt: neither doth trouble ſpring out of the ground; the ſame thing as before in different words, neither ſin the cauſe of trouble, the effect of ſin; ſin may very fitly be expreſſed by a word [a], which ſignifies trouble, becauſe it is both troubleſome, weariſome, and offenſive to God, and brings trouble to the bodies and ſouls of men here and hereafter. Here Eliphaz begins to lower the tone of his voice, and to ſpeak to Job in a ſeemingly more kind and friendly manner, obſerving to him the ſpring of afflictions, and giving him advice how to behave under them.

℣. 7. Yet man is born unto trouble, &c.] Or but [b], after the negative follows the poſitive part of the aſſertion; before we have what is denied as the cauſe of affliction, here what it is affirmed to be, or what it is to be aſcribed unto, even to the appointment of God for ſin: to be born to it, is to be appointed to it, as all men are appointed to death, and to every thing previous and that leads on to it; and it ſignifies that affliction or trouble ſprings from the birth-ſin of man, from original ſin, the ſin of the firſt parent, and of his nature; as all ſins ariſe from hence, and are ſtreams from this fountain of pollution, ſo all diſorders and diſeaſes of body, all diſtreſſes and anguiſh of mind, and and death in every ſenſe, corporal, ſpiritual, and eternal; and theſe are the lot and portion, the eſtate and inheritance of the ſons of men by nature, what they are born unto, and are full of, ſee ch. xiv. 1. the ſame word is here uſed as in the preceding verſe, and ſignifies labour, miſchief, the miſchief of ſin, improbity, wickedneſs, moral evil; and man may be ſaid to be born to ſin, inaſmuch as he is conceived, ſhapen, and born in it; and as he is born at once into a ſinful ſtate, and ſins as ſoon as born, goes aſtray from the womb, is a tranſgreſſor from thence, and the imagination of his heart evil from his infancy and youth upwards, he becomes a ſlave to ſin, and is a home-born one; not that he is laid under a neceſſity of force to ſin, or his will compelled to it; for he ſins moſt freely, is a voluntary ſlave to it; he ſerves divers luſts as pleaſures, and gives up himſelf to work all iniquity with greedineſs; but there is ſuch a connexion between his birth, the circumſtances of it, and ſin, that ſin is the certain conſequence of it, and immediately, naturally, and neceſſarily follows upon it; that is, by a neceſſity of conſequence, though not of coaction or force; it is as natural for man to ſin, as it is for a thirſty man to covet and drink water; or, as for an Ethiopian to be born black, and a leopard with ſpots; or, as it follows, as the ſparks fly upward; which they do naturally and neceſſarily when coals are blown, and which are here called the ſons of coals [c]; and to theſe, troubles and afflictions, the fruits and effects of ſin, may be aptly compared; not only for the neceſſity of them, it is if needs be they are, but for the nature of them, being fiery and troubleſome, hence called fiery trials, and ſignified by fires and flames of fire, 1 Pet. iv. 12. Iſ. xxiv. 15. and xliii. 2. and alſo for the number of them, being many, and very grievous: ſome interpret this of flying fowls, of young vultures, as the Septuagint; of young eagles, as others; Aben Ezra makes mention of this ſenſe, as if it was, as a fowl is born to flie, ſo man is born to labour; to labour in the law, according to the Targum; or to labour for his bread; or rather, to labour and ſorrow; that is, to affliction and trouble: a learned man [d] thinks the phraſe, according to the uſe of it in the Arabic language, deſigns the more rapid caſt of a dart, of the vibration of it, which is very quick.

℣. 8. I would ſeek unto God, &c.] Or truly [e], certainly, doubtleſs, I do ſeek unto God, verily I do ſo; for ſo the words are introduced in the original text, and expreſs what Eliphaz had done when under afflictions himſelf; for he was not without them, though he had not them to ſuch a degree as Job had; and when he was under them, this was the courſe he took; he ſought unto God by prayer to ſupport him under them, to ſanctify them to him, and to deliver him out of them; and this he propoſes for Job's imitation, and ſuggeſts, that if he was in his caſe, this would be the firſt ſtep he ſhould take; and good advice this is, nothing more proper for a man, eſpecially a ſaint, than when afflicted of God, to ſeek unto him, to ſeek his face and his favour, to intreat his gracious preſence, and the diſcoveries of his love, that he may ſee that it is not in wrath, but in love, he afflicts him; to ſubmit unto him, humble himſelf before him, acknowledge his ſins, and implore his pardoning grace and mercy; to intreat him to help him in this time of need, to exerciſe the graces of faith and patience, and every other; to deſire counſel and advice how to behave under the preſent trial, and to be made acquainted with the reaſons, ends, and uſes of the diſpenſation, as well as to beg for ſtrength to bear up under it, and in his own time to grant deliverance from it: and unto God would I commit my cauſe; or direct my word or ſpeech [f] to him; that is, in prayer, as Sephorno adds; I would, as if he ſhould ſay, make known my caſe to him, tell him the whole of it, and pour out my ſoul before him; and then I would leave it with him, and not wrangle, quarrel, and contend with him, but ſay, here am I, let him do what ſeemeth good unto him: ſome render the words, truly or indeed I ſhall diſcourſe concerning God, and order my ſpeech about deity [g]; I ſhall no longer inſiſt on this ſubject, but drop it, and hereafter treat of God, his nature, being, and perfections, and particularly his works; though theſe are rather obſerved in the following verſes, as ſo many arguments to engage Job to ſeek the Lord, and leave his caſe and cauſe to him.

℣. 9. Which doeth great things, &c.] The things of creation are great things, the making of the heavens and the earth, and all therein, by the word of the Almighty, out of nothing, and which is a diſplay of great power, wiſdom, and goodneſs; the things of providence are great things, which God is always doing; as the upholding all things in being by the word of his power, governing the whole univerſe, ordering all things in it, ſupplying and feeding all creatures, men and beaſts; and eſpecially the things of grace are great things, the covenant of grace, and its bleſſings, redemption by Jeſus Chriſt, the work of grace upon the heart, the quickening and enlightening dead and dark ſinners, taking away their hearts of ſtone and giving them hearts of fleſh, and conſtantly ſupplying them with his grace for the finiſhing of it; the conſideration of all which is a great encouragement to ſeek the Lord in time of need, as well as of what follows concerning them: and unſearchable; the things of nature; many of them are ſuch as puzzle the greateſt philoſophers, who are not able, with all their ſagacity and penetration, to find out the cauſes and reaſons of them; and in providence the way of God is often in the deep, and is not to be tracked and followed; and the diſpenſations of his grace to the ſons of men are ſo ſovereign and diſtinguiſhing, that it made the apoſtle ſay, ſpeaking of them, O the depth, &c. Rom. xi. 33. and there are ſome things not to be enquired into, nor can they be ſearched out; ſecret things belong to God, as his purpoſes relating to the eternal ſtate of particular perſons, and the times and ſeaſons of various future events, as the day of judgment, &c. marvellous things; in nature, as the formation of man and all creatures; in providence, and it may be, reſpect may be had to the wonders done in Egypt, and the marvellous things in the field of Zoan, the plagues plagues of Egypt, and the deliverance of Iſrael, and their paſſage through the Red Sea; which were things done much about this time, or before it, as ſome think, and of which Eliphaz might have heard, and were freſh in his memory; and wonderful things are done in grace, as the effects of marvelous loving kindneſs: and thoſe without number; the works of God are manifold, and not to be counted; the ſtars of heaven, the fowls of the air, the beaſts of the field, and cattle on a thouſand hills, the fiſhes of the ſea, ſmall and great, ſee Pſ. civ. 25. to which may be added, thoſe animalcules, of which 1,000,000,000 do not exceed the bigneſs of a ſmall grain of ſand, as they may be ſeen thro' a microſcope [h]; the various things done every day in providence, the ſpecial bleſſings of goodneſs, and the kind thoughts of the heart of God, which if one attempt to reckon up, they are more than can be numbered, Pſ. xl. 5.

✡. 10. Who giveth rain upon the earth, &c.] Not upon the land of Iſrael only, as the Targum and Jarchi, ſee Deut. xi. 11. but upon the whole earth; this is particularly mentioned as being of God, and which none of the vanities of the Gentiles can give; and it is a free gift of his, which tarries not for the deſert of men, and is beſtowed on the godly and ungodly; and is a great bleſſing of goodneſs, which enriches the earth, makes it fruitful, and through it, it produces plenty of good things for man and beaſt: and ſendeth water upon the fields; or out-places [i]; places without cities, and towns, ſuch as gardens, fields, and deſarts, where ſhowers of rain are ſent of God to water them, many of which are not under the care of man, but are under the providence of God; the Targum and Jarchi interpret this of Gentile lands, as diſtinct from the land of Iſrael, to whom God gives rain, and to the other ſends it; ſome render it, upon the ſtreets [k], that is, upon perſons that lie in the ſtreets, and have no houſes to dwell in, and to whom rain in hot and dry countries was welcome.

✡. 11. To ſet up on high thoſe that be low, &c.] Not the low plants, which, through rain, are made to run up on high, though there is a truth in that; but huſbandmen and gardeners, and ſuch-like perſons, in low circumſtances, who, by means of ſhowers of rain, which make their gardens, fields, and lands fruitful, are raiſed to enjoy good eſtates, and large poſſeſſions: that thoſe which mourn may be exalted to ſafety; or are black [l], that are clothed in black, as a token of mourning; or whoſe faces are black with famine, ſee Lam. iv. 8. and v. 10. or are in very diſtreſſed circumſtances, and black through poverty, as the Targum, and mourn over and grieve at their ſad and deplorable caſe; thoſe, through rain and fruitful ſeaſons, are brought out of ſuch an uncomfortable ſituation, and put into a better condition of life, where they are as in a fortreſs, out of the reach of ſuch ſad calamities: ſome connect the words with the following, that in order to do this, to raiſe up the humble and exalt mourners, he diſappoints the devices of the crafty, &c.

✡. 12. He diſappointeth the devices of the crafty, &c.] Or, it diſappointeth; that is, the rain, as ſome Jewiſh commentators [m] interpret it, and the whole paragraph to this ſenſe; the rain coming upon the earth makes it fruitful, and cauſes it to produce a plentiful crop, whereby the ſchemes of crafty men are diſappointed, who in a time of drought withold the corn, and enhance the price of it, and diſtreſs the poor; and this in order to make a penny of them, according to Amos viii. 4. 6. but through the rain falling are not able to gain their end, but are obliged to bring out their corn, and ſell it at a low price, and ſo are taken in their own craftineſs; their counſel becomes brutiſh, and they are brought into bad circumſtances themſelves, and the poor ſaved from being ground and oppreſſed by them, and have hope for the future of plenty of proviſions, to the confuſion and aſtoniſhment of their oppreſſors: but the Targum interprets this of the Egyptians, cunningly deviſing miſchief againſt the Iſraelites, without ſucceſs; and not amiſs, ſince that affair might be well known to Eliphaz, and he might have it in view: the fact was this, a new king of Egypt, after the death of Joſeph, obſerving the great increaſe of the people of Iſrael in his dominions, and fearing, in caſe of a war, they ſhould join the enemy, and get out of the land by ſuch an opportunity, calls his nobles, courtiers, and counſellors together, to form ſome wiſe ſchemes how to diminiſh them; and the firſt was, to ſet taſk-maſters over them, and afflict them with hard bondage, but this ſucceeded not; for the more they were afflicted the more they multiplied and grew; another decree was, to order the midwives to kill the male children of the Iſraelites, and ſave alive the females; but the midwives, fearing God, obeyed not the order, and the people ſtill multiplied; and then a third project was formed, to caſt every ſon born to the Iſraelites into the river, and drown them; but notwithſtanding this they were preſerved, as Moſes, and doubtleſs many others; the people increaſed ſo, that they went out of Egypt 600,000 men; this was a recent thing, it may be in the times of Eliphaz, and which he might eaſily call to mind: and he might alſo have reſpect to a more remote caſe, that of the builders of Babel, who deviſed a ſcheme to build a tower, whoſe top ſhould reach to heaven, and ſecure them from a diſperſion of them throughout the earth; when God deſcended in the diſplay of his power and providence, confounded their language, ſo that they were obliged to deſiſt from their enterprize, and were ſcattered throughout the earth, which by their ſcheme they thought to have prevented: this may be applied to wicked, crafty men in common, who deviſe ſchemes to commit ſin, and gratify their luſts, to get for themſelves riches and honour, and to do miſchief to others, which God in his providence breaks, fruſtrates, and makes of none effect; and to falſe teachers, that walk in craftineſs, lie in wait to deceive, and make uſe of cunningly deviſed fables, coin new doctrines, invent new forms of worſhip, and appoint new ordinances, and contrive different ways and methods of ſalvation; all which is fooliſhneſs with God, and to ſuch perſons the following verſe is applied by the apoſtle Paul: and this may likewiſe reſpect wicked princes and potentates, with their counſellors and wiſe politicians, who in former, as well as in later times, have formed deſigns againſt their neighbours, and to the hurt of the intereſt intereſt of true religion particularly; but have been baffled and confounded by divine providence, of which as there were many inſtances in Iſrael of old, ſo in our Britiſh Iſrael of late: ſo that their hands cannot perform their enterpriſe; what their heads have contrived, what they have reſolved and determined upon, and what they have begun to effect, but could not go on with; or, bring it ſoundly to paſs, as Mr. Broughton renders it; that is, could not compleat it, or bring it to perfection; and indeed not able to do any thing [n], as ſome tranſlate the word, not any thing of what they deviſed and contrived; it ſignifies that which is, which has a being and ſubſtance, and ſolidity in it [o], but nothing of this kind could be done; it is ſometimes rendered wiſdom, and ſound wiſdom, Prov. ii 7. Mic. vi. 9. and ſo it is here by ſome [p], and may ſignify, that though their counſels were deeply laid, and wiſely formed, according to the beſt rules of wiſdom and prudence, they yet are not able to bring them to paſs; which ſhews the infinitely ſuperior wiſdom of God, and his over-ruling providence, and which therefore muſt be a great encouragement to ſeek unto him, and leave every cauſe and caſe with him.

℣. 13. He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs, &c.] As beaſts are taken in a pit, or birds in a ſnare or net, or with bird-lime; ſo theſe crafty men, who are wiſe in their own opinion, and really ſo in things natural, civil, and worldly, or however, to do evil, are entangled and taken in their own ſchemes; they fall into the pit they have digged for others, and are ſnared in the works of their own hands, as Haman and his ſons were hanged on the gallows he prepared for Mordecai: or, by their own craftineſs [q], by the crafty ſchemes they themſelves have formed; ſo ſometimes thoſe very things crafty men deſign to prevent, are brought about by the very means they make uſe of; thus Joſeph's brethren deſigned to prevent the accompliſhment of his dreams, which portended their ſubjection to him, by ſelling him to the Iſhmaelites, who carried him to Egypt, where, in proceſs of time, he was made governor of the land, and where his brethren became obedient to him; with which fact Eliphaz might be acquainted, it being not long before his time: ſo the Jews, to prevent the Romans taking away their city and nation, contrived to put Chriſt to death, and did, whereby they brought the wrath of God upon them, executed by thoſe very perſons; the ſame they did alſo, to prevent the ſpread of his fame and glory in the world, and that he might not be believed on as the Saviour of men, whereas, hereby he became the Saviour of them; and he a crucified Chriſt, being preached to the world by his miniſters, the ſavour of his knowledge has been diffuſed in every place, his glory great in all the earth, and will be more ſo: the Targum applies this to the wiſe men of Pharaoh, and the apoſtle Paul to the Jewiſh doctors and wiſe philoſophers of the Gentiles, 1 Cor. iii. 19. which quotation proves the authority of this book: and the counſel of the froward is carried headlong; that is, the counſel or well-contrived ſchemes of the crafty and wiſe before-mentioned, who twiſt and wind about, as the word [r] here uſed ſignifies, that there is no tracing their meaſures, and finding out the ſpring of them, nor the ends they have in view; yet theſe are ſometimes carried on to execution in a raſh and precipitate manner, and ſo miſcarry; and like a man that is had to a precipice, and is thrown down from thence, and is deſtroyed at once, ſo are their counſels and ſchemes daſhed to pieces in a moment by the providence of God: or, is haſtened [s]; too much haſte is made to accompliſh it, and ſo it comes to nought, through an over eagerneſs to have it done at once; not waiting a fit opportunity for the accompliſhment of it.

℣. 14. They meet with darkneſs in the day-time, &c.] Which may denote their infatuation in things the moſt plain and clear, and which are obvious to every one's view, even to ſuch as are of much meaner capacities than themſelves; and ſo it ſometimes is, that the greateſt politicians, men of the greateſt ſagacity and penetration, capable of forming and conducting the wiſeſt counſels, yet blunder in things plain and eaſy to every one; which muſt be imputed to their being given up to a judicial blindneſs of mind by the Lord, who deſtroys the wiſdom of the wiſe, and brings to nothing the underſtanding of the prudent; or this may ſignify the defeat of their counſels, when they are in the higheſt pitch of eſteem among men, as Ahithophel's counſel was as the oracle of God; or the deſtruction of ſuch perſons and their ſchemes when they are in the meridian of their glory, who being in high and ſlippery places, come to deſolation in a moment: and grope in the noon day as in the night; which intends the ſame as before; this was threatened to the Jews in caſe of diſobedience, and was fulfilled in them, Deut. xxviii. 29. Iſ. lix. 9, 10. a learned man renders it, as the night they grope, or feel, at noon-day [t]; as the Egyptians felt darkneſs when it was noon, and when light was in all the dwellings of the Iſraelites, Exod. x. 22, 23. this may be applied to the caſe of many in a land of goſpel-light, who are in darkneſs, walk in darkneſs, and are darkneſs itſelf; though the light of the glorious goſpel ſhines all around them on others, and know no more of divine and ſpiritual things than the Gentiles, but grope or feel about like perſons blind, and in the dark as much as they, Acts xvii. 27. nay, they not only have the great things of the goſpel hid from them, and Satan blinds their minds leſt this light ſhould ſhine into them, but they run into darkneſs [u], as the words of the firſt clauſe may be rendered; thoſe lucifugæ, ſuch as the Jews were, and the deiſts now are, run from the light of divine revelation, and love darkneſs, and which is the aggravation of their condemnation, John iii. 19, 20.

℣. 15. But he ſaveth the poor, &c.] Who are ſo in a literal ſenſe, and whom the Lord ſaves with a temporal ſalvation; theſe being the butt of the crafty, wiſe, and cunning, on whom their eyes are, for whom they lay ſnares, and lie in wait to draw them in; and theſe being helpleſs and without friends, God takes notice of them, appears for them, and ariſes for their help, and ſaves them: from the ſword; of their enemies, drawn againſt them, and ready to be ſheathed in them: from their mouth; from their reproaches, calumnies, detraction, and evil ſpeaking; or from the ſword, their mouth [w], as ſome; or from the ſword of their mouth [x], as others; or which comes comes out of it; whoſe mouths and tongues are as ſharp ſwords, which deſtroy their credit and reputation, and threaten them with ruin; the Targum is, "from the ſlaughter of their mouth:" and from the hand of the mighty; their mighty enemies, that are mightier than they; the Targum is, "from the hand of a mighty king;" ſuch an one as Pharaoh, which the ſame paraphraſe makes mention of in the preceding verſe, and from whom the poor Iſraelites were delivered: this may be applied to the poor in a ſpiritual ſenſe, who are poor in ſpirit, and are ſenſible of their ſpiritual poverty, whom the Lord looks unto, has a regard for, and ſaves them from the ſword of avenging juſtice; that being awaked againſt the man, his fellow, and ſo warded off from them, and from the mouth of a curſing and condemning law, and from Satan the accuſer of the brethren; and of wicked men, whoſe tongue riſing up in judgment againſt them, he condemns; and from the hand of Satan the ſtrong man armed, and who is ſtronger than they; and of all their ſpiritual enemies.

℣. 16. So the poor hath hope, &c.] Who obſerving this and that and the other poor man crying to the Lord and ſaved, hopes that he may be ſaved by him alſo; and having had experience of ſalvation out of one trouble or more, even out of ſix troubles, as in a following verſe, entertains a comfortable hope he ſhall be ſaved out of the ſeventh, or whatſoever he is in: the word[y] uſed ſignifies one that is weak and feeble, attenuated, and exhauſted of his ſtrength, wealth, and ſubſtance; and may be applied to one ſpiritually poor, and in a very deſtitute and forlorn condition in himſelf; and yet, through the revelation of the grace and mercy of God to him, has hope of ſafety in Chriſt, the ſtrong hold and hope ſet before him to flee unto; and of ſalvation by him, it being in him, and for the chief of ſinners, and altogether free; and of eternal life through him, as being promiſed of God, that cannot lie; the free gift of God through Chriſt, and in his hands to diſpoſe of: and iniquity ſtoppeth her mouth; that is, iniquitous men; very wicked men, who are iniquity and wickedneſs itſelf; theſe ſhall ſtop their mouths through ſhame at what they have ſaid concerning the poor that God ſaves, ſee Mic. vii. 9, 10. and through admiration at the goodneſs of God, in ſaving them, Iſ. lii. 15. having nothing to ſay againſt the ways and diſpenſations of divine providence they are apt to quarrel with, Pſ. cvii. 40, 41, 42. and eſpecially at the laſt day, ſuch ſhall have their mouths ſtopped, and ſhall not be able to open them againſt the Lord or his people, being convinced of their hard ſpeeches which they have ſpoken againſt them, Jude, ℣. 15. and will be like the man at the feaſt without a wedding-garment, ſpeechleſs, or muzzled, and his mouth ſtopped, Matt. xxii. 12.

℣. 17. Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth, &c.] Reproves, rebukes, convinces by his word, which is profitable for correction of men's minds and manners; and by his meſſengers, the prophets and miniſters, who are ſent as reprovers of the people, and to rebuke them ſharply, that they may be found in their principles, and ſober in their converſation; and by his Spirit, which makes the correction of the word and miniſters effectual, and who reproves and convinces of ſin, righteouſneſs and judgment; and ſometimes this is done by afflictive providences, by blows as well as words, which are the rod of correction God makes uſe of with his children; for this is not the correction of a judge reproving, condemning, and chaſtiſing malefactors and criminals, but of a father correcting his children, in love, in judgment, and in meaſure, for faults committed; Prov. iii. 12. ſo God's corrections are for ſin, to bring his people to a ſenſe of it, to humiliation and repentance for it, and to an acknowledgment of it; and often for remiſſneſs in duty, private or publick, and when they ſet too high a value on the creature, and creature-enjoyments, truſt in them, and glory of them, to the neglect of the beſt things: now ſuch perſons are happy who are corrected by God in this manner; for theſe corrections are fruits and evidences of the love of God to them, and of their relation to God as children; he grants them his preſence in them, he ſympathizes with them, ſupplies and ſupports them under them, and delivers out of them; he makes them work for their good, ſpiritual and eternal; by theſe he prevents and purges ſin, tries and brightens their graces; makes them more partakers of his holineſs; weans them from this world, and fits them for another: and this account is introduced with a behold, as a note of attention, exciting it in Job and others; thereby ſuggeſting that it was worthy of notice and regard, and a matter of moment and importance; and as a note of admiration, it being a wonderful thing, a mere paradox with natural men eſpecially, and contrary to all their notions of things, that an afflicted man ſhould be a happy man, who generally reckon good men to be unhappy men, becauſe of their afflictions, reproaches, and perſecutions; and as a note of aſſeveration, affirming the truth and certainty of the aſſertion, and which is confirmed by after teſtimonies, and by the experience of the ſaints, Pſ. xciv. 12. and cxix. 67, 71. the Targum reſtrains this to Abraham; but it is true of every good man whom God afflicts in a fatherly way: therefore deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Almighty; who is able to ſave and to deſtroy, to take off his hand, or lay it heavier if not regarded, to bear up his people under all their afflictions, or to deliver them out of them; or of Shaddai[z], God all-ſufficient, who has a ſufficiency in himſelf, and needs not any thing from his creatures; whoſe grace is ſufficient for his people, to ſupply them in all their ſtraits and difficulties; or of him who is all-nouriſhing, who has breaſts of conſolation to draw out to his people in diſtreſs, the word[a] uſed coming from one that ſignifies a pap, or breaſt, as ſome think; hence mention is made of the bleſſings of the breaſt, when he is ſpoken of under this character, Gen. xlix. 25. now this chaſtiſing of his is not to be underſtood of chaſtiſement in a way of vindictive wrath and juſtice, and as a proper puniſhment for ſin, for this is laid on Chriſt, the ſurety of his people, Iſ. liii. 5. and to inflict this on them would be a depreciating the ſatisfaction of Chriſt, be contrary to the juſtice of God, and to his everlaſting and unchangeable love; but this is the chaſtening of a father, and in love, and for the good of his people, in which he deals with them as with children: the word ſignifies inſtruction[b]; affliction is a ſchool of inſtruction, in which the ſaints learn much of the mind and will of God, and more of his love, grace, and kindneſs to them; and are enriched with a larger larger experience of divine and ſpiritual things: and therefore ſuch chaſtening ſhould not be deſpiſed or rejected, as nauſeous and loathſome, as the word ſignifies: indeed no affliction is joyous; the bread of affliction, and water of adverſity, are not palatable or grateful to fleſh and blood; yea, are even a bitter and diſagreeable potion, as the cup of ſorrow was to the human nature of Chriſt; but yet ſhould not be rejected, but drank, for the ſame reaſon he gives, it being the cup given by his heavenly father; John xviii. 11. nor ſhould it be deſpiſed as uſeleſs and unprofitable, as the word is uſed in Pſ. cxviii. 22. ſeeing afflictions are of great uſe for humiliation for ſin, for the increaſe of grace and holineſs; the chaſtening of the Father of ſpirits is for profit now, and works a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, Heb. xii. 10. 2 Cor. iv. 17. this paſſage ſeems to be referred to by Solomon, Prov. iii. 11. and is quoted by the apoſtle, in Heb. xii. 5. where he uſes a word [c] by which he tranſlates this, which ſignifies to make little of; and as on the one hand afflictions ſhould not be magnified too much, as if there were none, nor ever had been any but them; ſo, on the other hand, they ſhould not be ſlighted and overlooked, and no notice taken of them, as if they were trifling and inſignificant, and anſwered no end or purpoſe; the hand of God ſhould be obſerved in them, and acknowledged; and men ſhould humble themſelves under his mighty hand, and quietly and patiently bear it; and, inſtead of deſpiſing, ſhould bleſs him for it, it being for their good, and many ſalutary ends being anſwered by it.

℣. 18. For he maketh ſore, and bindeth up, &c.] Or, though he maketh ſore, yet he bindeth up [d]; as a chirurgeon, who makes a wound the ſorer by probing and opening it, to let out the matter and make way for his medicine, and then lays on the plaiſter, and binds it up: ſo God cauſes grief and puts his people to pain, by diſeaſes of body, or by making breaches in their families and eſtates, and ſuch like cutting providences; and then he binds up their breach, and heals the ſtroke of their wound, and in the iſſue makes all whole again: ſo in ſpiritual things; he cuts and wounds, and gives pain and uneaſineſs, by the ſharp two edged ſword of the word, and by his ſpirit making uſe of it; and lays open all the corruption of nature, and brings to repentance and humiliation for all tranſgreſſions; and then pours in the oil and wine of pardoning grace and mercy, and binds up the wounds that are made: he woundeth, and his hands make whole; or heal [e]; the ſame thing is meant, expreſſed by different words; and the whole ſuggeſts, that every afflicted man, and particularly Job, ſhould he behave well, and as he ought, under the afflicting hand of God, would be healed, and become ſound and whole again, in body, mind, family, and eſtate; for, though God for the preſent cauſed grief, yet he would have compaſſion, ſince he did not willingly grieve the children of men; did not do it for his own pleaſure, but for their good; as a ſkilful chirurgeon cuts and wounds in order to heal; ſee Deut. xxxii. 39. Hoſ. vi. 1. Lam. iii. 32. 33.

℣. 19. He ſhall deliver thee in ſix troubles, &c.] Behaving as before directed; ſeeking unto God, committing his cauſe and caſe to him, and leaving it with him; and not deſpiſing the chaſtening of the Lord, but receiving and bearing it, with reverence, patience, and ſubmiſſion: and then the ſenſe is, that God would deliver out of whatſoever troubles he was or ſhould be in, though they were ever ſo many; a certain number being put for an uncertain one, Pſ. xxxiv. 19. yea, in ſeven there ſhall no evil touch thee; which is a number expreſſive of multitude and of perfection, and ſo may denote the multitude and fulneſs of afflictions: the tribulations of God's people are many, through which they paſs to heaven, and there is a meaſure of them to be filled up; and when they are come to the height, and the meaſure is fully up, then the Lord puts a ſtop to them, and delivers out of all their troubles; and in the midſt of them all, ſo preſerves them, that no evil ſhall ſo much as touch them; not the evil of puniſhment; for, though thoſe troubles and afflictions that attend them are evil things, in a natural or civil ſenſe, they are diſagreeable and diſtreſſing, yet they are not the effect of vindictive juſtice; there is not a drop of wrath and vengeance in them; and though they do come upon them and unto them, upon their perſons and families, yet not ſo as to do any real hurt, or as to deſtroy them; ſee Pſ. xci. 10. ſome think that ſeven particular troubles are meant, hereafter mentioned, as Jarchi; as famine, war, an evil tongue, deſtruction, dearneſs of proviſion, the beaſts of the earth, and the ſtones of the field.

℣. 20. In famine he ſhall redeem thee from death, &c.] In a time of extreme want of proviſions, God ſo cares for his own dear people, that they ſhall not be ſtarved to death by the famine; ſo in the famine in Egypt, which the Targum takes notice of, in the times of Abraham, and of Iſaac, and of Jacob, and the patriarchs, there was food provided for them, ſo that they and their families were ſuſtained, and periſhed not for lack of the neceſſaries of life: God ſometimes goes out of his ordinary way, and works wonders for his poor and needy in diſtreſs, when they cry unto him; ſee Iſ. xli. 17, 18. and in war from the power of the ſword; or, from the hands of the ſword [f]; from ſwords in hand, when drawn, and men are ready to puſh with them with all their force; as he delivered and preſerved Abraham from the ſword of the four kings, when he waged war with them; and the Iſraelites, in the war of Amalek, in the times of Moſes, which the Targum here refers to; and David from the hurtful ſword of Goliah, and others with whom he was concerned in war: and ſo the Lord covers the heads of his people in the day of battle oftentimes, when multitudes fall on their right hand and on their left.

℣. 21. Thou ſhalt be hid from the ſcourge of the tongue, &c.] Of Satan, as Jarchi, the accuſer of the brethren; or rather, from the evil tongue of wicked men, their ſlanders, calumnies, and reproaches; the tongue is a ſmall weapon, but it is a cutting one; it is like a ſcourge or whip, with which wicked men ſtrike hard: the enemies of Jeremiah encouraged one another to ſmite him with their tongue, ch. xviii. 18. and a ſad thing it is to be under the laſh of ſome men's tongues, and a great mercy it is to be delivered from them: God does ſometimes hide his people, and keeps them ſecretly as in a pavilion, from the ſtrife of tongues; Pſ. xxxi. 20. he either reſtrains the tongues of men, lays lays an embargo on them, and will not ſuffer them to ſay that evil of his people which Satan and their wicked hearts prompt them to; or, if they are ſuffered to defame and ſpeak evil of good men, yet they do it in ſuch a romantic way, and ſo overcharge and load it, that it is not credited by any what they ſay, even by thoſe of their own party; ſo that the characters of God's people ſuffer not by their lies and calumnies: ſome render it, when the tongue wanders about [g]; walks through the earth, and ſpares none, all ranks and degrees of men; God hides his people from being hurt by it, ſee Pſ. lxxiii. 9. Aben Ezra interprets the word rendered tongue, of a nation or people; and ſo it may be underſtood of one nation entering into another, paſſing through it, and making deſolations in it; as the Scythians, Gauls, Goths, Huns, and Vandals, have done in different ages; and that, in ſuch a time of calamity, God has his hiding-places in providence, for the protection and ſafety of his people: but the Targum interprets it of an evil tongue, and particularly of the tongue of Balaam: neither ſhalt thou be afraid of deſtruction when it cometh; meaning either of peſtilence, which is the deſtruction that waſtes at noon-day, Pſ. xci. 6, 10 which, when it comes into a nation or neighbourhood, ſhall not come nigh the good man, and infect him; or if it does, ſhall not carry him off; and if it does that, it carries him home to heaven and happineſs, and therefore he has no reaſon to be afraid of it: or of a general calamity; as when there is a complication of judgments in a nation, or in the world in general, as war, famine, peſtilence, earthquakes, &c. as if all were juſt falling to pieces and into ruin; and yet even then the ſaints have no cauſe to fear; ſee Pſ. xlvi. 1, 2, 3. 4. or the deſtruction of the whole world at the laſt day, when the heavens and earth, and all therein, ſhall be burnt up; for then good and righteous men will be ſafe with Chriſt, and dwell with him in the new heavens and the new earth, which ſhall be prepared for them; ſee 2 Pet. iii. 10—13. the Targum refers this to the deſtruction of the Midianites.

℣. 22. At deſtruction and famine thou ſhalt laugh, &c.] Not deride and deſpiſe them, and make a jeſt of them; for good men have a reverence and awe of the righteous judgments of God upon them, when they are in the world, Pſ. cxix. 120. but the ſenſe is, that ſuch ſhall reckon themſelves ſafe and ſecure amidſt ſuch calamities, proviſion being made for their protection and ſuſtenance; and be chearful and comfortable, putting their truſt and confidence in the Lord, as Habakkuk was, in a time of great diſtreſs, when all the neceſſaries of life were cut off from the ſtall, the herds, the flocks, and the fields; Hab. iii. 17, 18, 19. juſt as a man that is in a good harbour, or has a good houſe over his head, laughs at bluſtering ſtorms and winds [h], or thinks himſelf ſecure, and ſo is chearful and pleaſant amidſt all the noiſe that is about him, ſee Hab. i. 10. neither ſhalt thou be afraid of the beaſts of the earth; either literally taken, beaſts of prey, that wander about in the earth, noiſome and pernicious ones; which are one of God's ſore judgments which he threatens the diſobedient with, and promiſes the obedient he will rid them of; and therefore they have no reaſon to be afraid of them, ſee Ezek. xiv. 21. Lev. xxvi. 6. 22. ſome think ſerpents are particularly deſigned, which creep upon the earth, and whoſe food is the duſt of the earth, with all other poiſonous animals, between which and men there is an antipathy; and yet good men need not be afraid of theſe; ſee Mark xvi 18. Acts xxviii. 3, 4, 5. or figuratively, cruel and barbarous men, thieves and robbers, as Jarchi; or rather fierce and furious perſecutors, and particularly the beaſts of Rome, pagan and papal; tho' the literal ſenſe is to be preferred; the Targum interprets this of the camp of Og, comparable to the beaſts of the earth.

℣. 23. For thou ſhalt be in league with the ſtones of the field, &c.] So as to receive no hurt from them, by walking among them, and even barefoot, which was uſual in the eaſtern countries, ſee Pſ. xci. 12. or by their being in the field, ſo as to hinder the increaſe of them; but on the contrary, even from ſuch fields as were ſtony ground, a large crop has been produced, and ſo rather receive benefit by them, as men do from thoſe with whom they are in league; and may therefore likewiſe ſignify, that theſe ſtones ſhould be uſeful in being boundaries or fences about their fields, and land-marks in them, which ſhould not be removed: many interpreters take notice of a ſenſe that Pineda gives of theſe words, and which Cocceius calls an ingenious one, that it refers to a cuſtom in Arabia, which may be called Scopeliſm, and was this; a man's enemies would lay ſtones in his field, and theſe ſignified, that if any attempted to till and manure thoſe grounds where they were laid, ſome evil would befal him by the means of thoſe perſons who laid the ſtones there; and which ſtones were thought to be ominous and formidable; ſomething like it is in 2 Kings iii. 19, 25. and ſo the ſenſe is, that a good man had nothing to fear from ſuch ſtones, he being in league with them; and this malicious practice is thought to have had its origin in Arabia Petræa [i]; but the firſt ſenſe ſeems beſt: and the beaſts of the field ſhall be at peace with thee; a covenant being made with them, as in Hoſ. ii. 18. meaning either literally, the beaſts of the field; and theſe either the ſame as before, wild beaſts, or beaſts of prey; or rather, in diſtinction from them, tame beaſts, as cows and horſes, which ſhould be ſo far from doing any hurt, as ſometimes is done by theſe tame creatures, that they ſhould be very ſerviceable in tilling fields and drawing carriages, and the like: or elſe figuratively, men comparable to ſuch creatures; and ſo the ſenſe may be, that when a man's ways pleaſe the Lord, and he behaves according to his mind and will, particularly under afflictions, even his enemies are made to be at peace with him; Prov. xvi. 7. the Targum interprets this of the Canaanites, comparable to the beaſts of the field.

℣. 24. And thou ſhalt know that thy tabernacle ſhall be in peace, &c.] Not a place of religious worſhip, though the Targum renders it an houſe of doctrine or inſtruction; for we read not of any ſuch but the tabernacle of Moſes, erected in the wilderneſs, and which was indeed about, or little after, the times of Job; but it cannot be reaſonably thought he did or could attend there; nor the tabernacle of his body, now in great pain and anguiſh, in which there were no reſt nor ſoundneſs, being filled with ſore boils and burning ulcers; but his dwelling-houſe, which was built as a tent or tabernacle: ſuch were the houſes of the eaſtern people, made to move from place to place, for the ſake of paſturage for their flocks and herds, in which their wealth conſiſted; ſo Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob dwelt dwelt in tabernacles; and hence in after-times more firm, fixed, and ſtable dwellings were ſo called; David calls his palace the tabernacle of his houſe, Pſ. cxxxii. 3. though this alſo includes all that dwelt in his houſe, his family; and the meaning is, that ſhould he behave aright under the afflicting hand of God, his family ſhould live in concord, harmony, and love; there ſhould be no diſcord, animoſity, and contention among them, but they ſhould be at peace and in unity among themſelves; as indeed Job's children were whilſt he had them, and before this calamity came upon him; and that alſo they ſhould be ſecure from enemies, and dwell unmoleſted by them; and be in the utmoſt ſafety, enjoying all kind of proſperity, inward and outward, temporal and ſpiritual; which the word peace includes, as uſed in eaſtern countries, whoſe common ſalutation was, peace be with thee; thereby wiſhing all kind of happineſs: or the words may be rendered, peace ſhall be thy tabernacle[i]; as is a good man's tabernacle: he dwells in God, who is all love, all peace, in whom there is no wrath or fury; he dwells by faith in Chriſt, who is his peace, his peace-maker, and peace-giver; and in whom he has peace amidſt all the tribulation he meets with in the world; the peace of God, which paſſes all underſtanding, keeps and guards him in Chriſt as in a garriſon, ſafe and ſecure; and he enjoys much peace, as the fruit of the ſpirit, ariſing from a view of intereſt in the blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt; and when he dies he enters into peace, and dwells and abides in it as his everlaſting manſion, Iſ. lvii. 2. now all this Eliphaz ſays, Job, behaving well, ſhould know; that is, have an experience of it; ſhould really enjoy it, and find it in fact true what he aſſerted: and thou ſhalt viſit thy habitation, and ſhalt not ſin; meaning not his wife, as ſome interpreters, Jewiſh and Chriſtian, underſtand it; and ſo in the Talmud[k], the word being rendered ſhe that tarried at home, Pſ. lxviii. 12. which is a deſcription of a good houſewife, that keeps at home and minds the affairs of her family; but rather it deſigns the ſame as his tabernacle in the preceding clauſe, his dwelling-houſe, and ſignifies a fine, fair, and beautiful one; a ſpacious and goodly building, and well ſtored with rich houſhold-goods; and including his family alſo: and to viſit this is to take care of his family, rule and govern them well, protect and defend them, and provide all things neceſſary for them; as well as to inſpect into the affairs of his houſe, enquire, examine, and ſee how things are managed; to know the ſtate, condition, and circumſtances it is in; which is looking well to the ways of his houſhold: and this he ſhould do, and not ſin; not that a man, even a good man, can ſo conduct himſelf always in his family, as not to be guilty of any ſin at all, but not of ſin in common, or continually; at leaſt not any groſs and notorious ones: the ſenſe is, that he ſhould not ſin himſelf whilſt making ſuch a viſit and enquiry, by an undue heat, by exceſſive anger, by raſh and paſſionate expreſſions, things not being entirely to his mind; or be the cauſe of ſin in others, by provoking his children to wrath, by threatening and menacing his ſervants in a ſevere, boiſterous, and bluſtering manner; but reproving both, as there may be occaſion, in a mild and gentle way; or elſe not ſin by conniving at it and not correcting for it, which was the fault of Eli: Ben Gerſom thinks Eliphaz tacitly ſuggeſts, and ſtrikes at Job's indulgence to his children; and ſo Sephorno: the word uſed having the ſignification of wandering and ſtraying, ſome take the ſenſe to be this; that he ſhould have a ſure and certain dwelling-place to come into, and abide in, and ſhould not wander about[l], or be as a ſtroller and vagabond in the earth: though this has ſometimes been the caſe of good men; as of the godly in the times of the Maccabees, who wandered in deſarts and mountains, in caves and dens of the earth; and even of the diſciples of Chriſt, who had no certain dwelling-place; yea of Chriſt himſelf, who had not where to lay his head: rather, ſince the word ſignifies to miſs the mark, and ſo be diſappointed; in which ſenſe it is uſed in Judg. xx. 16. the ſenſe may be, that when he viſited his habitation he ſhould find nothing amiſs or wanting, but every thing ſhould anſwer his expectations and wiſhes, ſo Aben Ezra; and Mr. Broughton renders it, ſhalt not miſproſper; and others, ſhalt not be fruſtrated[m]; baulked, diſappointed of thine ends and views, deſigns, hopes, and wiſhes.

℣. 25. Thou ſhalt know alſo that thy ſeed ſhall be great, &c.] Not his ſeed ſown in the earth, and the increaſe of that, but his children, as the next clauſe explains it, as Bar Tzemach well obſerves; and deſigns either their greatneſs in worldly things, in wealth and riches, in honour and dignity, in power and authority, or elſe their numbers; for the word may be rendered much or many[n], a multitude of children being reckoned a great temporal bleſſing; but this ſeems rather intended in the following words: and thine offspring as the graſs of the earth; as numerous as the ſpires of graſs, which can no more be told than the ſtars of the heavens, or the ſand of the ſea, by which the ſame thing, a numerous progeny, is ſometimes illuſtrated: this is to be underſtood not of his immediate offſpring, but his deſcendants in ſucceſſive ages and generations, and which ſhould be as beautiful as the graſs of the earth when in its verdure; pointing at the comelineſs of their perſons, their honour and dignity raiſed unto, the largeneſs of their ſubſtance, the greatneſs of their proſperity, and flouriſhing circumſtances they ſhould be in; though it may alſo denote the original of them, amidſt all, being of the earth and earthy, and their frailty and fading condition; for which reaſon all fleſh is ſaid to be as graſs, and men are frequently compared unto it, ſee Pſ. xc. 5, 6. and cii. 4. and ciii. 15. Iſ. xl. 6, 7, 8.

℣. 26. Thou ſhalt come to thy grave in a full age, &c.] Or, go into thy grave[o], which is repreſented as a houſe to enter into and dwell in; and ſo the wiſe man calls it man's long home, and Job his houſe, and which is appointed for all living, Eccl. xii. 5. Job xvii. 13. and xxx. 23. for all men muſt die, and ſo come to the grave, good men as well as bad, the righteous and the wicked: this is not to be underſtood literally, for the dead cannot go or come to their graves, but are carried thither, as Stephen was, and all are; but it denotes their willingneſs to die, who chuſe to be abſent from the body, that they may be preſent with the Lord, and are deſirous to depart this world, and be with him, as the apoſtle Paul was; and therefore chearfully give give up the ghoſt, and reſign their ſouls into the hands of Chriſt, deſiring him to receive them; and rejoice when they obſerve the grave is near, and ready for them; whilſt others have their ſouls demanded and required of them, and are forced to death and the grave againſt their wills, and are driven away in their wickedneſs: now this, with reſpect to good men, is ſaid to be in a full age, not in abundance, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, in an abundance or fulneſs of wealth and honour, and with great pomp and ſplendor, which is not the caſe of all good men, but of very few; nor in the full time which God has determined and appointed men ſhould live, which may be called the fulneſs of time; for in this every man comes to the grave, good and bad, young and old; no man dies before or lives beyond it, ſee Job xiv. 5. but in the full age of men, or the common term of man's life; the higheſt which he uſually attains unto, which is threeſcore years and ten, and at moſt fourſcore, Pſ. xc. 10. and ſuch who die before this, are ſaid to die before their time, the uſual term of life; who die before the midſt of this, are ſaid not to live out half their days, Eccl. vii. 17. Pſ. lv. 23. but he that arrives to this, dies in a good old age, and has filled up his days, which men, at moſt, ordinarily live: Mr. Broughton renders it, in luſty old age, enjoying great health, ſtrength, and vigour; and ſo Nachmanides takes the word to be compounded of כ as and לח moiſt, lively, ſtrong, and luſty; as if the ſenſe was, that Job ſhould die indeed in old age, but when old, be as hearty as a young man in his full ſtrength, and whoſe bones are moiſtened with marrow; as was the caſe of Moſes, whoſe eyes were not dim, nor his natural force or radical moiſture abated, Deut. xxxiv. 7. but the word denotes extreme decrepit old age [p], coming from the root in the Arabic language, which ſignifies to be of an auſtere, rugged, wrinkled, contracted countenance [q], which is uſually the caſe of old men: now this is to be underſtood, not as if every good man arrives to ſuch an age, or that none but good men do; for certain it is, that ſome good perſons, as Abijah, die in their youth, and many wicked men live to a great age, ſee Eccl. vii. 15. but Eliphaz here ſpeaks ſuitably to the legal diſpenſation under which he was, in which temporal bleſſings were promiſed to good men, as ſhadows of ſpiritual things, and this of long life was a principal one, ſee Pſ. xci. 16. Eph. vi. 2, 3. this is illuſtrated by the following ſimile: like as a ſhock of corn cometh in, in his ſeaſon; there is a very great reſemblance between ripe corn and old age; corn, when it is in its full ear, and ripe, its ears will hang down; the ſtalks being dry and withered, are weak, and not able to bear the weight of them; ſo old men ſtoop, their knees bend, the ſtrong men bow themſelves, being unable to bear the weight of the body: fields of corn, ripe for the harveſt, look white, and ſo the hairs of a man's head in old age; the almond-tree flouriſhes, which when in full bloom, is a lively emblem of the hoary head: and there is a great likeneſs between ripe corn, and ſhocks and ſheaves of it, and a good old man; a good man is comparable to a corn of wheat that falls into the ground, to which Chriſt compares himſelf, John xii. 24. and to wheat he compares his ſaints, Matt. xiii. 30. for their choiceneſs, excellency, purity, and ſolidity; and theſe, like a corn of wheat, grow up gradually in grace, in ſpiritual light, knowledge, faith, and experience, and at length come to maturity; the good work is performed and perfected in them, and they come to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt; and then they are cut down with the ſcythe or ſickle of death, which is the proper time, like corn in his ſeaſon; which, if cut before it is ripe, would not be fit for uſe, and if it ſtood longer, would ſhed and come to nothing: and then, as corn when cut down and reaped, is put up in ſhocks and ſheaves, which are lifted up from the earth, and made to aſcend, as the word [r] ſignifies, and are laid in carts and waggons, and carried home with expreſſions of joy, (hence we read of the joy of harveſt) and are laid up in the barn or granary; ſo the ſaints are carried by angels, the reapers, into Abraham's boſom, as Lazarus was, into heaven, and as all the elect will be gathered by the angels at the harveſt, the end of the world; attended with their ſhouts and acclamations, and with expreſſions of joy from goſpel-miniſters, who now go forth bearing the precious ſeed of the word, and ſow it in tears, but then ſhall return with joy, bringing their ſheaves with them, ſee Matt. xiii. 30. 39. and xxiv. 31. Pſ. cxxvi. 5, 6. 2 Theſ. ii. 19, 20.

℣. 27. Lo this, we have ſearched it, &c.] This is the concluding part of Eliphaz's firſt oration or ſpeech to Job; and in order to engage his attention to it, obſerves, that what he had ſaid was not his own ſingle opinion, but the ſentiment of the reſt of his friends; and that it was the reſult of laborious and diligent inveſtigation; that they had ſearched the records of former times, and enquired of antient people, as well as had made the ſtricteſt obſervations on things during their courſe of life; and the ſum and amount of all was what he had declared, and which they had found to be ſure and certain, the truth of the matter; that it is an undoubted truth, which ſhould not be diſputed and called in queſtion, but to be held as a firſt principle, which was this; that wicked men are puniſhed for their ſins, and that good men are never greatly afflicted, at leaſt not to ſuch a degree, as to be ſtripped of all the neceſſaries of life, and to be in a moſt deſolate and periſhing condition; and ſince this had been ſo thoroughly inveſtigated by them, and ſuch a probatum eſt was written upon it, he exhorts Job to hear it; agree to it, believe it, receive it, and make a proper uſe of it, as he hoped he would: and know thou it for thy good; or for thyſelf [s]; take it to thyſelf, as belonging to thee, as ſuitable to thy caſe; apply it to thyſelf, learn ſome leſſons from it, and make good uſe of it; which is what is propoſed by all that has been ſaid.

CHAP. VI.

THIS and the following chapter contain Job's anſwer to the ſpeech of Eliphaz in the two foregoing; he firſt excuſes his impatience by the greatneſs of his afflictions, which, if weighed by good and impartial hands, would be found to be heavier than the ſand of the ſea, and which words were wanting to expreſs, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and the reaſon why they were ſo heavy is given, they being the arrows and terrors of the Almighty, ℣. 4. and by various ſimilies, he ſhews that his moans and complaints under them need not ſeem ſtrange and unreaſonable, ℣. 5, 6, 7. and what had been ſaid not being convincing to him, he continues in the ſame ſentiment and diſpoſition of mind, and wiſhes to be removed by death out of his miſerable condition, and gives his reaſons for it, ℣. 8—13. and though his caſe was ſuch as required pity from his friends, yet this he had not from them, but repreſents them as deceitful, and as having ſadly diſappointed him, and therefore he neither hoped nor aſked for any thing of them, ℣. 14—23. and obſerves that their words and arguments were of no force and weight with him, but hurtful and pernicious, ℣. 24—27. and in his turn gives them ſome exhortations and inſtructions, and ſignifies, that he was as capable of diſcerning between right and wrong as they, with which this chapter is concluded, ℣. 28—30.

℣. 1. But Job anſwered and ſaid.] Though Eliphaz thought his ſpeech was unanſwerable, being, as he and his friends judged, unqueſtionably true, and the fruit of ſtrict, laborious, and diligent ſearch and enquiry; or, then Job anſwered [t], as the ſame particle is rendered, ch. iv. 1. after he had heard Eliphaz out; he waited with patience until he had finiſhed his diſcourſe, without giving him any interruption, though there were many things that were very provoking, particularly in ch. iv. 5, 6, 7. and v. 2. and when he had done, then he made his reply; and this was no other than what every man has a right unto, to anſwer for himſelf when any charge or accuſation is brought againſt him; when his character is attacked, or his good name, which is better than precious ointment, is taken from him; and is what all reaſonable men, and the laws of all civilized nations allow of.

℣. 2. Oh that my grief were thoroughly weighed, &c.] Or, in weighing, weighed [u], moſt nicely and exactly weighed; that is, his grievous affliction, which cauſed ſo much grief of heart, and which had been ſhewn in words and geſtures; or his wrath and anger [w], as others render it; not his anger againſt Eliphaz, as Sephorno, but as before, meaning the ſame thing, his affliction; which either, as he underſtood, was the fruit and effect of the wrath and anger of God, who treated him as an enemy; or rather, that wrath, anger, and reſentment raiſed in his own mind by thoſe afflictive providences, and which broke out in hot and paſſionate expreſſions, and for which he was blamed as a fooliſh man, ch. v. 2. or elſe the complaint [x], the groans and moans he made under them; or the impatience [y] he was charged with in bearing of them; and now he wiſhes, and ſuggeſts, that if they were well weighed and conſidered by kind and judicious perſons, men of moderation and temper, a great allowance would be made for them, and they would eaſily be excuſed; that is, if together with his expreſſions of grief, anger, and impatience, his great afflictions, the cauſe of them, were but looked into, and carefully examined, as follows: and my calamity laid in the balances together; that is, his affliction, which had a being, as the word ſignifies, as Aben Ezra obſerves, was not through the prepoſſeſſions of fear as before, nor merely in fancy as in many, or as exaggerated, and made greater than it is, which is often the caſe; but what was real and true, and matter of fact; it was what befel him, had happened to him, not by chance, but by the appointment and providence of God; and includes all his misfortunes, the loſs of his cattle, ſervants, and children, and of his own health; and now to be added to them, the unkindneſs of his friends: and his deſire is, that theſe might be taken up, and put together in the ſcales, and being put there, that the ballances might be lifted up at once, and the true weight of them taken; and the meaning is, either that all his exceſſive grief, and paſſionate words, and extravagant and unwarrantable impatience, as they were judged, might be put into one ſcale, and all his afflictions in another, and then it would be ſeen which were heavieſt, and what reaſon there was for the former, and what little reaſon there was to blame him on that account; or however, he might be excuſed, and not be bore hard upon, as he was; to this ſenſe his words incline in ch. xxiii. 2. or elſe by his grief and calamity he means the ſame thing, his grievous afflictions, which he would have put together in a pair of ballances, and weighed againſt any thing that was ever ſo heavy, and then they would appear to be as is expreſſed in the following verſe. Job by all this ſeems deſirous to have his caſe thoroughly canvaſſed, and his conduct thoroughly examined into, and to be well weighed and pondered in the ſcale of right reaſon and ſound judgment, by men of equal and impartial characters; but he tacitly ſuggeſts, that his friends were not ſuch, and therefore wiſhes that ſome third perſon, or other perſons, would undertake this affair.

℣. 3. For now it would be heavier than the ſand of the ſea, &c.] Or ſeas [z]; all ſand is heavy in its own nature, Prov. xxvii. 3. eſpecially the ſand of the ſea, that which is immediately taken out of it; for that on the ſhore is lighter, being dried by the winds and heat of the ſun, but the other is heavier, through the additional weight of water; and much more eſpecially, how heavy muſt all the ſand of the ſea be, and of all the ſeas that are in the world; yet Job ſuggeſts by this hyperbolical expreſſion, exaggerating his caſe, that his affliction was heavier vier than it all, a moſt intolerable and inſupportable burden; the afflictions of God's people are but light when compared with what their ſins deſerve, with the torments of the damned in hell, with the ſufferings of Chriſt in their room and ſtead, and with everlaſting happineſs, the eternal weight of glory, 2 Cor. iv. 17. but in themſelves they are heavy, and preſs hard; they are ſo to fleſh and blood, and eſpecially unleſs everlaſting arms are put under men, and they are ſupported and upheld with the right hand of God's righteouſneſs; they are heavy when attended with the hidings of God's face, and a ſenſe of his wrath and diſpleaſure, which was Job's caſe, ſee ch. xiii. 24. and xxiii. 2, 3. ſome render it more copious or numerous [a], and indeed the word has this ſignification, as in Numb. xx. 20. and the metaphor is more frequently uſed to expreſs a multitude, even what is innumerable, Hoſ. i. 10. yet the notion of heavineſs beſt agrees with the preceding figure of weighing in balances, and therefore at leaſt is not to be excluded; ſome learned men take in both, as the ſenſe of the word, the number of afflictions, and the bulk and weight of them: therefore my words are ſwallowed up; either by his friends, as Kimchi, who catched at them, and put a wrong conſtruction on them, without thoroughly examining the true ſenſe of them; as men that ſwallow down their food greedily, don't chew it, nor take the true taſte of it, and ſo are no judges whether it is good or bad; but this ſenſe ſeems to have no connexion with what goes before; rather they were ſwallowed up by himſelf, and the meaning either is, that ſuch was the weight and preſſure of his afflictions, that he wanted words to expreſs it; his words failed him, as the Targum; or they come ſhort, as Mr. Broughton renders it; they were not ſufficient to ſet forth and declare the greatneſs of his troubles; or he faultered in his ſpeech, he could not ſpeak out plainly and diſtinctly, becauſe of his grief and ſorrow, ſee Pſ. lxxvii. 4. what he had ſaid was delivered amidſt ſighs and ſobs, through the heavineſs of the calamity on him; they were but half-words, attended with groanings that could not be uttered; by which he would ſignify, that though his friends had charged him with ſpeaking too much and too freely, he had not ſpoken enough, nor could he, by reaſon of the greatneſs of his affliction; and alſo to excuſe his preſent anſwer, if it was not delivered with that politeneſs and fulneſs of expreſſion, with that eloquence and ſtrength of reaſoning and diſcourſing he at other times was capable of: or rather the words may be rendered, therefore my words break out with heat [b]; in a vehement manner, in a hot and paſſionate way I am blamed for; but this is to be imputed to the heavy burden of affliction and ſorrow upon me; which if conſidered, ſome allowances would be made, and the charge be alleviated.

ver. 4. For the arrows of the Almighty are within me, &c.] Which are a reaſon proving the weight and heavineſs of his affliction, and alſo of his hot and paſſionate expreſſions he broke out into; which deſigns not ſo much outward calamities, as famine, peſtilence, thunder and lightning, which are called the arrows of God, Deut. xxxii. 23, 24. Ezek. v. 16. Pſ. xci. 5, 6. and xviii. 13, 14. all which had attended Job, and were his caſe; being reduced to extreme poverty, had malignant and peſtilential ulcers upon him, and his ſheep deſtroyed by thunder and lightning; and which were like arrows, that came upon him ſuddenly, ſecretly, and at unawares, and very ſwiftly; theſe arrows flew thick and faſt about him, and ſtuck in him, and were ſharp and painful, and wounded and ſlew him; for he was now under ſlaying circumſtances of providence; but rather theſe mean, together with his afflictions, the inward diſtreſſes, grief, and anguiſh of his mind ariſing from them, being attended with a keen ſenſe of the divine diſpleaſure, which was the caſe of David, and is expreſſed in much the ſame language, Pſ. xxxviii. 1, 2. Job here conſiders his afflictions as coming from God, as arrows ſhot from his bow; and as coming from him, not as a father, in a way of paternal chaſtiſement and love, dealing with him as a child of his, but accounting him as an enemy, and ſetting him up as a mark or butt to ſhoot at, ſee ch. vii. 20. and xvi. 12, 13, 14. yea, not only as the arrows of a ſtrong and mighty man, expert in archery, who ſhoots his arrows with great ſtrength and ſkill, ſo that they miſs not, and return not in vain, ſee Pſ. cxx. 4. and cxxvii. 4. Jer. l. 9. but as being the arrows of the Almighty, which come with force irreſiſtible, with the ſtretching and lighting down of his arm, and with the indignation of his anger intolerable: the poiſon whereof drinketh up my ſpirit; alluding to the cuſtom of ſome people, that uſed to dip their arrows in poiſon, or beſmear them with it; ſo the Perſians, as Jarchi obſerves, and Heliodorus [c] reports of the Ethiopians, that they dipped their arrows in the poiſon of dragons, and which made them inflammatory, and raiſed ſuch an heat, and ſuch burning pains, as were intolerable; and now, as ſuch poiſon preſently infected the blood, and penetrated into and ſeized the animal ſpirits, and inflamed and ſoon exhauſted them; ſo the heat of divine wrath, and a ſenſe of it, which attended the arrows of God, his afflictions on Job, ſo affected him, as not only to take away his breath, that he could not ſpeak, as in the preceding verſe, or rather, as to cauſe thoſe warm and hot expreſſions to break out from him, but even to eat up his vital ſpirits, and leave him ſpiritleſs and lifeleſs; which was Heman's caſe, and ſimilar to Job's, Pſ. lxxxviii. 3, 4, 5. the terrors of God do ſet themſelves in array againſt me; the Lord is ſometimes compared to a man of war in arms, ſtirring up his wrath and jealouſy, Exod. xv. 3. Iſ. xlii. 13. and in this light he was viewed by Job, and ſo he apprehended him, as coming forth againſt him, and which was terrible; and his terrors were like an army of ſoldiers ſet in battle-array, in rank and file, ready to diſcharge, or diſcharging their artillery upon him; and which ſometimes deſign the inward terrors of mind, of a guilty conſcience, the terrors of God's judgment here, or of a future judgment hereafter, of death and hell, and eternal damnation, through the menaces and curſes of the law of God tranſgreſſed and broken; but here afflictive providences, or terrible things in righteouſneſs, which ſurrounded him, attacked him in great numbers, and in a hoſtile, military way, with great order and regularity, and which were frightful to behold; perhaps regard may be alſo had to thoſe ſcaring dreams and terrifying viſions he ſometimes had, ſee ch. vii. 14, 15.

ture, and the other has a ſufficiency of provender; but when they are in want of food, the one will bray, and the other will low, which are tones peculiar to thoſe creatures, and expreſs their mournful complaints; wherefore Job ſuggeſts, that ſhould he make no moan and complaint in his ſorrowful circumſtances, he ſhould be more ſtupid and ſenſeleſs than thoſe brute creatures: and he may have ſome reſpect to the different circumſtances of himſelf and his friends; he himſelf, when he was in proſperity, made no complaints, as the wild aſs brays not, and the ox lows not, when they have both food enough; but now, being in diſtreſs, he could not but utter his ſorrow and trouble, as thoſe creatures when in lack of food; and this may ſerve as an anſwer to his different conduct now and formerly objected to him, ch. iv. 3, 4, 5. and ſo his friends; they lived in great tranquillity and proſperity, as Aben Ezra obſerves, and roared and grieved not, which doubtleſs they would, were they in the ſame circumſtances he was; though it became them, as things were, to have uttered words of condolence to their friend in diſtreſs, inſtead of ſharp reproofs and hard cenſures.

℣. 6. Can that which is unſavoury be eaten without ſalt? &c.] As any ſort of pulſe, peas, beans, lentiles, &c. which have no ſavoury and agreeable taſte unleſs ſalted, and ſo many other things; and are diſagreeable to men, and diſreliſhed by them, and more eſpecially things bitter and unpleaſant; and therefore Job intimates, it need not ſeem ſtrange that the wormwood and water of gall, or the bread of adverſity, and water of affliction, he was fed with, ſhould be ſo diſtaſteful to him, and he ſhould ſhew ſuch a nauſea of it, and an averſion to it, and complain thereof as he did: tho' ſome apply this to the words and ſpeeches of Eliphaz, and his friends he perſonated, which with Job were inſipid and fooliſh talk, and very unſuitable and diſagreeable to him, yea, loathed and abhorred by him, not being ſeaſoned with the ſalt of prudence, grace, and goodneſs, ſee Col. iv. 6. or is there any taſte in the white of an egg? none at all. The ſame things are deſigned by this as the former. Mr. Broughton renders it, the white of the yolk; and Kimchi ſays [d], it ſignifies, in the language of the Rabbins, the red part of the yolk, the innermoſt part; but others, from the uſe of the word in the Arabic language, interpret it of the froth of milk [e], which is very taſteleſs and inſipid: but the firſt of the words we render white, always ſignifies ſpittle; and ſome of the Jewiſh writers [f] call it the ſpittle of ſoundneſs, or a ſound man, which has no taſte, in diſtinction from that of a ſick man which has; and the latter word comes from one which ſignifies to dream; and Jarchi obſerves, that ſome ſo underſtand it here; and the whole is by ſome rendered, is there any taſte or ſavour in the ſpittle of a dream or drowſineſs [g]; ſuch as flows from a perſon aſleep, or in a dream; and ſo may fitly expreſs the vain and empty words, as the Septuagint tranſlate the phraſe, of Job's friends, in his eſteem, which to him were no other than the words of ſome idle and dreaming perſon, or were like the dribble of a fool or madman, as David mimicked, 1 Sam. xxi. 13. and it is obſerved [h], that the word ſpittle, is very emphatically uſed, ſince it is uſeleſs in judging of different taſtes, and mixed with food, goes not into nouriſhment, as the white of an egg.

℣. 7. The things that my ſoul refuſed to touch, are as my ſorrowful meat.] Meaning either the above things, that which is unſavoury, and the white of an egg, or any other food, which in the time of his proſperity he would not touch with his fingers, much leſs eat, but now was glad of, and were his conſtant food in his preſent ſorrowful circumſtances; the ſenſe given by ſome Jewiſh writers [i] is, that what he diſdained to touch or wipe his hands with formerly, he was glad to make uſe of as a table-cloth to eat his bread of ſorrow upon; but it rather intends the inſipid and diſagreeable words of his friends, their doctrines, inſtructions and exhortations they gave him, but were refuſed and rejected by him; and which he before compares to unſavoury food, the white of an egg, or the ſpittle of a dreaming man, or the dribble of a fool; and which were as much loathed and nauſeated by him, as his food that was lothed by him [k], either becauſe of his want of appetite, or becauſe of the badneſs of it, ſuch as were corrupt and rotten, and even as the excrements of food [l]; thoſe he refuſed to receive, with as much indignation as he could ſuch ſort of food offered him; and therefore we find, that notwithſtanding all that had been ſaid to him, he continued in the ſame ſentiment and diſpoſition of mind, to deſire death rather than life, as follows.

℣. 8. And that I might have my requeſt, &c.] Or that it might come [m]; that it might go up to heaven, enter there, and come into the ears of the Lord, be attended to, admitted and received by him, ſee Pſ. xviii. 6. or come to Job, be returned into his boſom, be anſwered and fulfilled; the ſame with the deſire that cometh, which is, when the thing deſired is enjoyed, Prov. xiii. 12. or that what he had requeſted would come, namely, death, which is ſometimes repreſented as a perſon that looks in at the windows, and comes into the houſes of men, and ſeizes on them, Jer. ix. 21. and this is what Job wiſhes for; this was his ſole requeſt; this was the thing, the one thing that lay uppermoſt in his mind, and he was moſt importunately ſolicitous for: and that God would grant me the thing that I long for; death, as the following words explain it; this is not deſirable by nature, but contrary to it; it is itſelf a penal evil, the ſanction and curſe of the law; it is an enemy, and a very formidable one, the king of terrors; and tho' a very formidable one, is deſired by good men from a principle of grace, and with right views, to be rid of ſin, and to be with Chriſt; yet it often is done by men in melancholy, ſullen, and humorous fits, when they can't have what they would, as in Rachel, Elijah, and Jonah, Gen. xxx. 1. 1 Kings xix. 4. Jonah, iv. 8, 9. and becauſe of ſore troubles and afflictions, which was the preſent caſe of Job; though it muſt be ſaid that it was not, as is frequently the caſe with wicked men, thro' the horrors of a guilty conſcience, which he was free of; and he had faith, and hope of comfort in another world, and in ſome degree he ſubmitted to the will and pleaſure of God; tho' preſſed with too much eagerneſs, importunity and paſſion: and it it may be obſerved, that Job did not make requeſt to men, to his ſervants, or friends about him, to diſpatch him, as Abimelech and Saul did; nor did he lay hands on himſelf, or attempt to do it, as Saul, Ahitophel, and Judas: the wretched philoſophy of the Stoicks was not known in Job's time, which not only makes ſelf-murder lawful, but commends it as an heroic action; no, Job makes his requeſt to the God of his life, who had given it to him, and had maintained it hitherto, and who only had a right to diſpoſe of it; he aſks it as a favour, he deſires it as a gift, he had nothing elſe to aſk, nothing was more, or ſo deſirable to him as death.

℣. 9. Even that it would pleaſe God to deſtroy me, &c.] Not with an everlaſting deſtruction of body and ſoul; for deſtruction from the almighty was a terror to him, ch. xxxi. 23. but with the deſtruction of the body only; not with an annihilation of it, but with the diſſolution of it, or of that union there was between his ſoul and body: the word [n] uſed ſignifies to bruiſe and beat to pieces; his meaning is, that his body, his houſe of clay in which he dwelt, might be cruſhed to pieces, and beat to powder, and crumbled into duſt; and perhaps he may have regard to his original, the duſt of the earth, and his return to it, according to the divine threatening, Gen. iii. 19. a phraſe expreſſive of death; and ſo Mr. Broughton renders it, to bring me to the duſt, to the duſt of death, Pſ. xxii. 15. that he would let looſe his hand, and cut me off; he had let looſe his hand in ſome degree already; he had given his ſubſtance and his body into the hand of Satan; his own hand had touched him, but he had only gone ſkin deep, as it were; he had ſmote him in his eſtate, in his family, and in the outward parts of his body; but now he deſires that he would ſtretch out his hand farther, and lift it up, and give a heavier ſtroke, and pierce him more deeply; ſtrike through his heart and liver, and make an end of him, as Mr. Broughton tranſlates the word, and diſpatch him at once; cut him off like the flower of the field by the ſcythe, or like a tree cut down to its root by the ax, or cut off the thread of his life, Iſ. xxxviii. 12.

℣. 10. Then ſhould I yet have comfort, &c.] Either before death, and in the midſt of all his pains and ſorrows, being in view of it as near at hand, and ſure and certain; could he but be aſſured of its near approach, he could exult in his afflictions; it would be an alleviation of his trouble, that he ſhould be ſoon out of it; and he would ſit and ſing upon the brink of eternity, and ſay, O death where is thy ſting? O grave where is thy victory? his ſufferings being juſt at an end, and being comfortably perſuaded of a happy future ſtate, and a glorious reſurrection, ſee ch. xix. 25, 26, 27. or after death, when deſtroyed and cut off by it; and he hereby ſignifies, as if he expected no comfort on this ſide death and the grave; that is, no temporal comfort, his comforts were gone, his ſubſtance, his children and health, and he had no hope of the reſtoration of them, Eliphaz had ſuggeſted; but he believed, that though he now had his evil things, as Lazarus ſince, yet after death ſhould be comforted with the preſence of God, in which is fulneſs of joy; with the diſcoveries of his love, as a broad river to ſwim in; with a glory that ſhould be on him, and revealed in him, with which the ſufferings of this preſent time are not to be compared; and with the company of angels, and glorified ſaints, as well as be freed from all bodily diſorders and pains, and death itſelf, from all ſin and ſorrow, from ſatan's temptations, divine deſertions, doubts, and fears: yea, I would harden myſelf in ſorrow; meaning either upon the firſt news of death's being near at hand, he would harden himſelf againſt all pains and pangs of death; when thoſe ſhould beſet him around, and he ſhould find trouble and ſorrow through them, he would not regard them, but moſt chearfully and patiently bear them, and moſt courageouſly go through them, not at all intimidated by them, or by death, and the moſt terrible agonies of it: or though I ſhould be hot, burn, or be burnt in ſorrow or pain [o], as ſome render it; or parched with pain, as Mr. Broughton; though I ſhould be ſtill more and more inflamed with theſe burning ulcers upon me, or be dried up with a burning fever, or my body caſt into a fire, and be ſcorched and burnt in the flames of it, I ſhould not value it; I could bear the moſt excruciating pains, and ſharpeſt torments, could I but be aſſured I ſhould die. Some obſerve, that the word ſignifies to leap [p]; and ſo the Septuagint render it; and then the ſenſe is, that he ſhould leap for joy, as men do when they are elevated at good news, or poſſeſs what is exceeding grateful to them, was it certain to him he ſhould die quickly; and ſo the Targum interprets it of exultation. The word in the Arabic language, as a good judge [q] of it obſerves, is uſed of the pranſing and pawing of a horſe, which makes the ground to ſhake; he ſtrikes with his foot, and which as done in the midſt of a battle, mocking at fear, at the ratling quiver, and glittering ſpear and ſhield, is moſt beautifully deſcribed in Job xxxix. 21—25. in like manner Job ſuggeſts, he ſhould rejoice in the view of death, and mock at the fear of it: or this may reſpect the happineſs he ſhould enjoy after death; for in the Syriac and Arabic verſions, the words are rendred, and I ſhall be perfected in virtue; and the word uſed has the ſignification of ſolidity, confirmation, ſtability and perfection; and to this ſenſe it is rendered by ſome [r], though to different purpoſes; and after this ſuffering-ſtate is over, the ſaints will be eſtabliſhed, ſettled and perfected in all virtue, in knowledge, holineſs and happineſs: therefore let him not ſpare; laying on his blows thicker and heavier, till he has beat me to pieces, and utterly deſtroyed me, a petition the reverſe of David's, Pſ. xxxix. 13. his deſire is to have it done quickly and thoroughly, neither to ſpare him any longer, nor abate in meaſure, but ſtrike him immediately, and that effectually, ſo as to diſpatch him at once: for I have not concealed the words of the holy one; that is, of God, as ſome [s] ſupply it, whoſe name is holy, who is holy in his nature, and in all his works, and is eminently glorious in the perfection of his holineſs; for tho' there are holy men and holy angels, there are none holy as the Lord: his words are the doctrines delivered out by him concerning Chriſt the promiſed ſeed, and ſalvation by him, which were ſpoken of by the mouth of all the prophets from the beginning of the world, of which Job had knowledge, ch. xix. 25. ſee Gen. iii. 15. Luke

Luke i. 70, 71. and the duties of religion enjoined men in thoſe early times; which Sephorno refers to the laws and commandments given to the ſons of Noah; of which ſee the note on Gen. ix. 4. Here every thing is included, both with reſpect to doctrine and practice, then revealed unto the ſons of men, all which Job had a ſpecial regard unto; he embraced, profeſſed and practiſed them; he did not hide them from himſelf, or ſhut his eyes to the evidence of them, and ſmother within him the light he had; nor did he conceal them from others, but communicated the knowledge of them among his neighbours, as far as he could reach; he was not aſhamed to profeſs the true religion of God; he held faſt, and did not deny the faith in the midſt of a dark and heatheniſh country; and he acted up to his profeſſion and principles in his life and converſation: now having a teſtimony of a good conſcience within him, that he through the grace of God had acted a ſincere and upright part in the affair of religion; and having knowledge of a living Redeemer, and faith in him, and in his juſtifying righteouſneſs, he was not afraid of death, come when it would, and in whatſoever ſhape; and whereas his friends had ſuggeſted, that he was a hypocrite, and a wicked man, his conſcience bore witneſs to the contrary; and to let them know they were miſtaken in him, he ſignifies he was not afraid to die, yea, he deſired it; he cared not how ſoon he left the world, and appeared before God, the judge of all, ſince the truth of grace was in him, and the righteouſneſs of Chriſt upon him, and he had not through the courſe of his profeſſion of religion departed wickedly from his God, his truths and ordinances. Some [u] read this in connexion with the firſt clauſe, putting the reſt in a parentheſis; this is yet my comfort, (though or when I am burned or parched with pain, and he ſpares not) that I have not concealed the words of the holy one.

℣. 11. What is my ſtrength that I ſhould hope? &c.] For a perfect reſtoration of health, ſuggeſted by Eliphaz; ſince it was ſo ſadly weakened by the preſent affliction, which made death more deſirable than life lengthened out in ſo much weakneſs, pain and ſorrow; or that I ſhould bear [w], ſuch a weight and heavy load that lay upon him, and cruſhed him, and to which his ſtrength was not equal; or continue and endure [x]: what is mine end, that I ſhould prolong my life? what end can be anſwered by living, or deſiring a long life? his children were gone, and none left to take care of and provide for; his ſubſtance was taken away from him, ſo that he had not to ſupport himſelf, nor to be uſeful to others, to the poor; he had loſt all power, authority and influence among men, and could be no more ſerviceable by his counſel and advice, and by the adminiſtration of juſtice and equity as a civil magiſtrate; and as to religious matters, he was reckoned an hypocrite and a wicked man by his friends, and had loſt his character and intereſt as a good man; and ſo for him to live could anſwer no valuable end, and therefore he deſires to die; for what is here, and in the two following verſes, ſaid, contain reaſons of his above requeſt.

℣. 12. Is my ſtrength the ſtrength of ſtones? &c.] Is it like ſuch eſpecially which are foundation and corner-ſtones that ſupport a building? or like a ſtone-pillar that will bear a prodigious weight? no, it is not: or is my fleſh of braſs? is it made of braſs? or is it like to braſs for hardneſs, or for ſuſtaining any weight laid on it? it is not; and therefore it can't bear up under the ponderous load of afflictions on it, but muſt ſink and fail; it is but fleſh and blood, and that fleſh like graſs, weak and feeble; and therefore death is better than life laden with ſuch an inſupportable burden.

℣. 13. Is my help in me? &c.] Or my defence [y], as ſome; is it not in my power to defend myſelf againſt the calumnies and reproaches caſt upon me? it is; and though I have no help in myſelf to bear my burdens, or extricate myſelf out of my difficulties, yet I have the teſtimony of a good conſcience within me, that ſupports me; and I have the ſtrength and force of reaſon and argument on my ſide, to defend me againſt all objectors: and is wiſdom driven from me? either ſound doctrine, the law [z], or rather the goſpel, the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, revealed in the words of the Holy One before mentioned; or wiſdom in the hidden part, the fear of God which is wiſdom, true grace in the heart, which when once implanted can never be driven out; or natural reaſon and underſtanding, of which he was not bereaved; for though his body was thus ſorely afflicted, he retained his reaſoning and intellectual faculties. The words, in connection with the former, may be read, what if help is not with me, is wiſdom alſo driven quite from me [a]? does it follow, becauſe I am not able to help myſelf out of this afflicted and diſtreſſed condition in which I am, that I am deprived of my reaſon? or be it that I am ſuch a weak impotent creature, and even diſtracted as you take me to be, ſhould I not then rather be pitied than inſulted: ſo ſome [b] connect the words following.

℣. 14. To him that is afflicted, pity ſhould be ſhewed from his friend, &c.] An afflicted man is an object of pity, one that is afflicted of God; either inwardly with a wounded ſpirit, with a ſenſe of God's diſpleaſure, with divine deſertions, with the arrows of the almighty ſticking in him, the poiſon thereof, drinking up his ſpirits; or outwardly with diſeaſes of body, with want of the neceſſaries of life, with loſs of near relations, as well as ſubſtance, which was Job's caſe; or afflicted by Satan, ſhot at, ſifted and buffeted by him, diſtreſſed by his temptations, ſuggeſtions and ſolicitations; or afflicted by men, reproached and perſecuted for righteouſneſs-ſake: in all ſuch caſes and circumſtances, pity ſhould be ſhewed; which is an inward affection of the mind, a ſympathy of ſpirit, a ſenſible feeling of the afflictions of others; and which is expreſſed by geſtures, motions and actions, as by viſiting them in their affliction, ſpeaking comfortably to them, and relieving their neceſſities according to ability, and as the caſe requires: and this may be expected from a friend, and what the law of friendſhip requires, whether it be in a natural and civil ſenſe, or in a religious and ſpiritual one; the union between friends being ſo near and cloſe, that they are as it were one ſoul, as David and Jonathan were; and as the people of God, members of the ſame body are, ſo that if one ſuffers, all the reſt do, or ſhould ſuffer and ſympathize with it: and though this duty is not always always performed, at leaſt as it ſhould be by natural and ſpiritual friends, yet this grace is always ſhewn by God, our beſt of friends, who pities his children; and by Chriſt, who is a friend that loves at all times; a brother born for adverſity, and that ſticks cloſer than any brother, and cannot but be touched with the feeling of the infirmities of his friends: the words may be rendered, to him that is melted [c]; afflictions are like a furnace or fining-pot for the melting of metals, and are called the furnace of afflictions; and ſaints are the metal, which are put into it; and afflictions alſo are the fire, or fiery trials, which heat and melt, and by which means the droſs of ſin and corruption is removed, and the graces of the ſpirit are tried and made the brighter; though here it rather ſignifies the melting of the heart like wax or water thro' the affliction; and denotes the anguiſh and diſtreſs, the trembling and fears a perſon is in through it, being overwhelmed and borne down by it, which was Job's caſe: or he that melts pity, or whoſe pity melts, or melts in pity to his friend, he forſakes [d], &c. that is, he that fails in pity, is deſtitute of compaſſion, and ſhuts up the bowels of it to his friend in diſtreſs, has not the fear of God before his eyes; and this ſenſe makes Job himſelf to be the friend in affliction, and Eliphaz, and thoſe with him, the perſons that are deficient in their mercy, pity and compaſſion. Some render the words [e], ſhould reproach be caſt on him that is afflicted, as that he forſakes the fear of the Almighty? the word for pity is ſo uſed in Prov. xiv. 34. and the reproach on Job was, that he had caſt off the fear of God, ch. iv. 6. and xv. 4. this grieved him moſt of all, and added to his affliction, and of which he complains, as very cruel uſage; and very cutting it was, that he ſhould be reckoned a man deſtitute of the fear of God, and that becauſe he was afflicted by him; though rather the following words, but he forſaketh the fear of the Almighty, are a charge upon his friend Eliphaz for not ſhewing pity to him in his affliction, which was tacitly forſaking the fear of God. Job here recriminates and retorts the charge of want of the fear of God on Eliphaz himſelf; for to ſhew mercy to an afflicted friend is a religious act, a part of pure and undefiled religion, a branch of the fear of God; and he that neglects it, is ſo far wanting in it, and acts contrary to his profeſſion of God, of fear of him, and love to him, ſee James i. 26. 1 John iii. 17. or otherwiſe he forſakes, &c. [f]

℣. 15. My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brook, &c.] Meaning his three friends perſonated by Eliphaz, who were of the ſame ſentiments with him, and behaved towards Job as he did: theſe were his brethren, not by birth, by blood; nor by country, but by the profeſſion of the ſame religion of the one true and living God, in oppoſition to the idolatrous people among whom they dwelt; and this their relation to him is an aggravation of their perfidy and treachery, unfaithfulneſs and deceit, by which is meant their baulking and diſappointing him in his expectations; when they came to viſit him as friends, he might reaſonably expect they came to condole and ſympathize with him, and comfort him; but inſtead of this, they reproached him, and grieved him, and were miſerable comforters of him; and this he illuſtrates by the ſimile of a brook, which he enlarges upon in the following verſes: theſe friends and brethren of his he compares to a brook, not that was fed by a ſpring which continues, but filled with falls of water and melting ſnows from the hills, with which it is ſwelled, and looks like a large river for a while, but when theſe fail, it is ſoon gone; hereby repreſenting his friends in his ſtate of proſperity, who looked big, and promiſed long and laſting friendſhip, but proved in a time of adverſity unfaithful and deceitful; and ſo it denotes the fickleneſs and inconſtancy of their friendſhip: and as the ſtream of brooks they paſs away; or paſs by [g], as a ſtream of water, fed by many brooks, or flows of water like unto many brooks, which run with great rapidity and force, and are quickly gone and ſeen no more; thus his friends as ſuch paſſed by him, and were of no uſe to him any more than the prieſt and Levite were to the man that fell among thieves, Luke x. 30, 31, 32.

℣. 16. Which are blackiſh by reaſon of the ice, &c.] When frozen over they look of a blackiſh colour, and is what is called a black froſt; and theſe either deſcribe Job and his domeſticks, as ſome [h] think, whom Eliphaz and his two friends compared to the above ſtreams of water, paſſed away from, or paſſed by and neglected, and ſhewed no friendſhip to; who were in black, in mournful and rueful circumſtances, through the ſevere hand of God upon them; the word is rendered, thoſe which mourn, ch. v. 11. or rather the friends of Job compared to foul and troubled waters frozen over, which cannot be ſo well diſcerned, or which were black through being frozen; and which deſcribes the inward frame of their minds, the foulneſs of their ſpirits, the blackneſs of their hearts, though they outwardly appeared otherwiſe, as follows: and wherein the ſnow is hid; or on whom the ſnow falling, and lying on heaps, hides [i], or covers; ſo Job's friends, according to this account, were, though black within as a black froſt, yet white without as ſnow; they appeared in their looks and words at firſt as candid, kind and generous, but proved the reverſe.

℣. 17. What time they wax warm they vaniſh, &c.] The ice and the ſnow, which when the weather becomes warm, they melt away and diſappear; and in like manner he ſuggeſts, his friends ceaſed to be friends to him in a time of adverſity; the ſun of affliction having looked upon him, they deſerted him, at leaſt did not adminiſter comfort to him: when it is hot they are conſumed out of their place; when it is hot weather, and the ſun has great ſtrength, then the waters which ſwelled thro' the floods and fall of rain and ſnow, and which when frozen looked black and big, as if they had great depth in them, were quickly dried up, and no more to be ſeen in the place where they were; which ſtill expreſſes the ſhort duration of friendſhip among men, which Job had a ſorrowful experience of.

℣. 18. The paths of their way are turned aſide, &c.] That is, the waters when melted by the heat of the ſun, and the warmth of the weather, run ſome ſome one way, and ſome another, in little ſtreams and windings, till they are quite loſt, and the tracks of them are no more to be ſeen; denoting that all appearance of friendſhip was quite gone, and no traces of it to be found: they go to nothing, and periſh; ſome of them are loſt in little meanders and windings about, and others are exhaled by the heat of the ſun, and go into Tohu, as the word is, into empty air; ſo vain, and empty, and periſhing were all the comforts he hoped for from his friends; though ſome underſtand this of the paths of travellers in the deſarts, being covered in the ſand, and not to be ſeen and found; of which ſee Pliny[z].

℣. 19. The troops of Tema looked, &c.] A city in Arabia, ſo called from Tema a ſon of Iſhmael, Gen. xxv. 15. theſe troops or companies were travelling ones, either that travelled to Tema, or that went from thence to other places for merchandiſe, ſee Iſ. xxi. 13, 14. theſe as they paſſed along in their caravans, as the Turks their ſucceſſors now do, looked at thoſe places, where in the winter-time they obſerved large waters frozen over, and covered with ſnow, and expected to have been ſupplied from thence in the ſummer-ſeaſon, for the extinguiſhing of their thirſt: the companies of Sheba waited for them; another people in Arabia, which went in companies through the deſarts, where being in great want of water for their refreſhment, waited patiently till they came to thoſe places, where they hoped to find water to relieve them, which they had before marked in the winter-time.

℣. 20. And they were confounded becauſe they had hoped, &c.] When they came to the places, where they hoped to find water, finding none were aſhamed of their vain hope, and reflected upon themſelves for being ſo fooliſh as to raiſe their expectations upon ſuch a groundleſs ſurmize: they came thither, and were aſhamed; which is the ſame thing expreſſed in different words; and aptly enough deſcribes Job's diſappointment in not meeting with that relief and comfort he expected from his friends, to whom he makes application of all this in the following words.

℣. 21. For now ye are nothing, &c.] Once they ſeemed to be ſomething to him; he thought them men wiſe, good, and religious, kind, bountiful, and tender-hearted; but now he found them otherwiſe, they were nothing to him as friends or as comforters in his diſtreſs; the Cetib, or ſcripture, is as we read, and is followed by many; but the marginal reading is, now ye are to it[a]; that is, ye are like to it, the brook whoſe waters he had been deſcribing; ſo Jarchi interprets it; Mr. Broughton very agreeably takes in both, ſo now ye are become like that, even nothing; as that deceitful brook is no more, nor of any uſe to travellers, fainting through thirſt; ſo ye are like that, of no uſe and advantage to me in my affliction: ye ſee my caſting down; from a ſtate of proſperity to a ſtate of adverſity; from the pinnacle of honour, from being the greateſt man in the eaſt, a civil magiſtrate, and the head of a flouriſhing family, to the loweſt degree of diſgrace and diſhonour; from wealth and riches to want and poverty; as well as ſaw the inward dejection of his mind, through the poiſoned arrows of the Almighty within him: and ye are afraid; of the righteous judgments of God, taking theſe calamities to be ſuch, and fearing the ſame or the like ſhould fall on them, ſhould they keep him company; or however ſhould they patronize and defend him; and afraid alſo of being too near him, leſt his breath, and the ſmell of him ſhould be infectious, and they ſhould catch a diſtemper from him; or leſt he ſhould be expenſive and troubleſome to them.

℣. 22. Did I ſay, bring unto me, &c.] Or, give unto me[b]; did I invite you to come to me, and bring in your hands preſents for me, to ſupport me under my neceſſitous circumſtances? or give a reward for me of your ſubſtance? did I ever aſk any thing of you? if I had, it would have been but your duty to have given freely to me in my deplorable circumſtances; and it might have been expected you would have given without aſking, ſeeing my neceſſities ſo great: or did I deſire you to communicate out of the great wealth and abundant riches you are poſſeſſed of to others on my behalf, to plead my cauſe among men, and to get a favourable ſentence upon me, that I might not be traduced as a wicked man by cenſorious tongues? had I ever been troubleſome to you in any reſpect, you might have been provoked to uſe me ill; but ſince nothing of this kind has ever been requeſted of you, you might have foreborne ill language and hard words; which are often given to beggars; for when a man is fallen into decay, and becomes troubleſome by his importunity, twenty things are raked up by his friends againſt his character; as that he has been lazy and indolent, or laviſh and extravagant, &c. to ſave their money, and excuſe them from acts of charity; but this was not the caſe here.

℣. 23. Or deliver me from the enemies hand? &c.] Or, out of the hand of ſtraitneſs[c]; out of tribulation and difficulties with which he was preſſed on every ſide: or redeem me from the hand of the mighty; fetch back his cattle out of the hands of the Sabæans and Chaldeans, either by force of arms, as Abraham brought back Lot, and all his goods, when taken and carried away by the four kings, or by giving a ranſom-price for them. Job had aſked no ſuch favour of them; he had not troubled them with any ſuch ſuits, and therefore they had no reaſon to uſe him in the manner they did, as he apprehended; it would be ſoon enough to flout and fling at him, when he applied to them for any relief.

℣. 24. Teach me, and I will hold my tongue, &c.] Job having made his defence, and which he thought a ſufficient one to acquit him of the charge againſt him; yet to ſhew that he was not ſtubborn and inflexible, but was open to conviction, and ready to attend and hearken to what might be further ſaid, deſires to be taught and inſtructed in the way of his duty; ſuggeſting that upon being convinced of his miſtakes, he ſhould ingenuouſly acknowledge them: good men are deſirous of being taught both of God and men; they are not above inſtruction, or think themſelves wiſer than their teachers; they are willing to receive knowledge, not only from their ſuperiors, but from their equals, and even from thoſe that are inferior to them, as Job from his friends, though they had been unkind to him, and bore very hard upon him; and he promiſes that whilſt they were ſpeaking he would be ſilent, and not noiſy, and clamorous, nor interrupt nor contradict them; but would patiently and attentively liſten to what they ſaid, and ſeriouſly conſider ſider it, and weigh it well in his mind; and ſhould he be convinced thereby, would no longer continue his complaints unto God, nor murmur at his providences; and would ceaſe reflecting on them his friends, and no more charge them with deceit, perfidy, and unkindneſs; and by his ſilence would acknowledge his guilt, and not pertinaciouſly ſtand in an evil matter, but lay his hand on his mouth; hold his tongue, as our Engliſh phraſe is, a Græciſm[z]; that is, be ſilent, as in Hebrew; and even take ſhame to himſelf, and in this way confeſs his iniquity, and do ſo no more: and cauſe me to underſtand wherein I have erred; not that he allowed that he was in an error; for all that he ſays, both before and after, ſhews that he thought himſelf free from any; only, that whereas there was a poſſibility that he might be in one, he ſhould be glad to have it pointed out; for he would not willingly and obſtinately continue therein: error is common to human nature; the beſt of men are liable to miſtakes; and thoſe are ſo frequent and numerous, that many of them eſcape notice; who can underſtand his errors? Pſ. xix. 12. wherefore wiſe and good men will eſteem it a favour to have their errors diſcovered to them, and their miſtakes rectified; and it becomes men of capacity and ability to take ſome pains to do this, ſince he that converts one that has erred, whether in principle or practice, ſaves a ſoul from death, and covers a multitude of ſins; James, v. 19, 20. Job is deſirous, that if he had imbibed or uttered any error in principle, any thing unbecoming the Divine Being, contrary to his perfections, or to the holy religion which he profeſſed; or was guilty of any in practice, in his conduct and behaviour, eſpecially under the preſent providence, that it might be clearly made out unto him, and he ſhould at once frankly and freely own it, retract, and relinquiſh it.

℣. 25. How forcible are right words! &c.] That are according to right reaſon; ſuch as may be called ſtrong reaſons, or boney arguments, as in Iſ. xli. 21. there are ſtrength and weight in ſuch words, reaſonings, and arguments; they bring evidence and conviction with them, and are very powerful to perſuade the mind to an aſſent unto them, and have great influence to engage to a profeſſion or practice of what they are uſed for; ſuch are more eſpecially the words of God, the ſcriptures of truth, the doctrines of the goſpel; theſe are right words, ſee Prov. viii. 6, 8, 9. they are not contrary to right reaſon, although above it; and are agreeable to ſanctified reaſon, and received by it; they are according to the perfections of God, even his righteouſneſs and holineſs, and according to the law of God, and in no wiſe repugnant to it, which is the rule of righteouſneſs; and they are doctrines according to godlineſs, and are far from encouraging licentiouſneſs; and they are all ſtrictly true, and muſt be right: and there is a force and ſtrength in thoſe words; they come with weight, eſpecially when they come in demonſtration of the ſpirit and power of God; they are mighty through God, for the pulling down the ſtrong holds of ſin, Satan, and ſelf, and for the bringing of men to the obedience of Chriſt; to the quickening dead ſinners, enlightening dark minds, ſoftening hard hearts; renewing, changing, and transforming men into quite another temper and diſpoſition of mind they formerly had; for the comforting and relieving ſouls in diſtreſs, and ſaints under affliction; and have ſo very wonderful an influence on the lives and converſations of thoſe to whom they come, not in word only, but in power and in the Holy Ghoſt, as to teach them to deny all ſin and ungodlineſs, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly: or, how forcible are the words of an upright man[a]! that is ſincere, impartial, and faithful; which Job ſuggeſts his friends were not: ſome think Job has reſpect to his own words, and render the clauſe, what hardneſs, or harſhneſs, have right words[b]! ſuch as he believed his own were, and in which there were nothing hard and harſh, ſharp and ſevere, or which might give juſt offence; ſuch as his curſing the day in which he was born, or charging his friends with treachery and deceit: but rather, he tacitly reflects upon the words and arguments of his friends; intimating, that though there is force and ſtrength in right words, theirs were neither right nor forcible, but partial and unjuſt, and weak and impotent; which had no ſtrength of reaſoning in them, nor carried any conviction with them, as follows: but what doth your arguing reprove? their arguments they had uſed with him had no ſtrength in them; they were of no avail; they did not reprove or convince of any evil he had been guilty of, or any miſtake he had made; they were weak, impertinent, and uſeleſs, and fell with no weight upon him, nor wrought any conviction in him.

℣. 26. Do ye imagine to reprove words, &c.] Or with words; with bare words, without any force of reaſoning and argument in them? put a parcel of words together without any ſenſe or meaning, or however without any cogency in them, and think to run me down with them? or is your ſcheme and device only, and which you purſue, to catch at and lay hold on ſome words of mine uttered in my diſtreſs, and make me an offender for a word, or for a few words, ſuppoſing they have been raſhly and paſſionately ſpoken? have ye no facts to charge me with, before or ſince theſe calamities befel me? is the charge of hypocriſy and want of the fear of God to be ſupported by producing ſome haſty expreſſions, without pointing at one ſingle action in my life and converſation? and the ſpeeches of one that is deſperate, which are as wind; that is, do ye imagine to reprove them? or, are your thoughts wholly and ſolely intent on them? are theſe only the ſtrong reaſons you have to produce to fix the ſin of hypocriſy upon me? for by him that is deſperate he means himſelf; not that he deſpaired of his everlaſting ſalvation; he was far from deſpair; he was a ſtrong believer, and determined, that though he was ſlain, he would truſt in the Lord; he was well aſſured he ſhould be juſtified, both here and hereafter; and full well knew that his Redeemer lived, and that though he died, he ſhould riſe again and be happy in the viſion of God for ever: but he deſpaired of a reſtoration to outward happineſs, which Eliphaz had ſuggeſted, ſhould he behave well; but alas, his condition was forlorn and miſerable, and there was no hope with him of being better; his children were dead, his ſubſtance in the hands of robbers, his health ſo extremely bad that he had no expectation of a recovery to his former ſtate; and therefore it was very unkind and ungenerous to lay hold upon and aggravate the ſpeeches of ſuch an one, and improve them againſt him; and eſpecially as they were only for refreſhment[c], as ſome chuſe to render the words, ſee ch. xxxii. 20. they were uttered to give vent to his ſorrow ſorrow and grief, and not with any ill deſign againſt God or men; or the ſenſe of the whole is, that they imagined that their words were right and fit to reprove with, and that there were force and ſtrength in them, and had a tendency to work conviction and bring to confeſſion; but as for the words of Job they treated them as wind; as idle, vain, and empty, and uſeleſs and fruitleſs as the wind.

℣. 27. Yea, ye overwhelm the fatherleſs, &c.] Meaning himſelf; who was like a fatherleſs child, ſtripped of all his mercies, of his children, his ſubſtance, and his health; and was in a moſt miſerable, helpleſs, and forlorn condition; and moreover, deprived of the gracious preſence and viſible protection of his heavenly father, being given up for a while into the hands of Satan; and now it was unkind and barbarous to overwhelm ſuch a man, who was overwhelmed with overmuch ſorrow already: or, ye cauſe to fall upon the fatherleſs; either their wrath and anger, as the Targum and many others [d], inſtead of doing him juſtice; or a wall, or any ſuch thing, to cruſh him, as Aben Ezra; or a lot, as Simeon Bar Tzemach; ſee Joel iii. 3. or rather a net, or a ſnare to entrap him in, ſeeking to entangle him in talk, ſo Mr. Broughton, which agrees with what follows: and ye dig a pit for your friend; contrive miſchief againſt him; ſought to bring him to ruin; and which is aggravated by his having been their old friend, with whom they lived in ſtrict friendſhip, and had profeſſed much unto, and ſtill pretended to have reſpect for; the alluſion is to digging of pits for the catching of wild beaſts: ſome render it, ye feaſt upon your friend [e]; ſo the word is uſed in 2 Kings, vi. 23. Job xli. 6. this ſenſe is taken notice of by Aben Ezra and Bar Tzemach; and then the meaning is, you rejoice at the miſery of your friend; you mock him and that, and inſult him in his diſtreſs, with which the Septuagint verſion agrees; which was cruel uſage.

℣. 28. Now therefore be content, &c.] Or, may it now pleaſe you [f]; Job addreſſes them in a reſpectful manner, and intreats them they would be ſo kind as to look favourably on him, and entertain better thoughts of him; and give a freſh and friendly hearing of his caſe, when he doubted not he ſhould be acquitted by them of the charge of iniquity, and that his cauſe would appear to be a righteous one: look upon me; upon my countenance; and ſee if you can find any traces of fear and falſhood, of diſhoneſty and hypocriſy, of ſhame and bluſhing; and obſerve if there is not all the appearance of an honeſt mind, of a good conſcience within, that has nothing to fear from the ſtricteſt examination; or look upon my body, covered all over with boils and ulcers, and ſee if there is not occaſion for thoſe expreſſions of grief, and thoſe heavy complaints that I have made; or rather, look upon me with an eye of pity and compaſſion, with affection, favour, and benevolence, and not bear ſo hard upon me: for it is evident unto you, if I lie; or, it is before your faces [g]; ſhould I attempt to deceive you by telling you a parcel of lies, you would ſoon diſcern the falſhood in my countenance; you would eaſily find it out in my words, which would iſſue in my ſhame and confuſion; I could not expect to go undetected by men of ſuch ſagacity and penetration; but I am not afraid of the moſt diligent ſcrutiny that can be made into my words and actions.

℣. 29. Return, I pray you, &c.] From the ill opinion you have of me, and from your hard cenſures, and entertain other ſentiments concerning me: or it may be, upon theſe words of Job his friends might be riſing up as uſual to take their leave of him, and break off converſation with him; and therefore he intreats they would return to their ſeats and reſume the debate, and give a friendly hearing of his caſe: let it not be iniquity; either let it not be reckoned an iniquity to return and go on hearing his caſe; or he intreats that they would take care not to ſin in their anger and reſentment againſt him, nor go on to charge him with iniquity: or it may be rendered, there is no iniquity [h]; that is, it ſhould be found that there was no ſuch iniquity in him as he was charged with; not that he was free from all ſin, which no man is, but from that which his friends judged he was guilty of, hypocriſy: yea, return again; he moſt earneſtly importunes them to return and patiently hear him out: my righteouſneſs is in it; in the whole of this affair before them, and which was the matter of controverſy between them; meaning, not his juſtifying righteouſneſs before God, but the righteouſneſs of his cauſe before men; he doubted not but, when things were thoroughly ſearched into, that his righteouſneſs would be as clear as the light, and his judgment as the noon-day; that he ſhould appear to be a righteous man, and his cauſe a juſt one; and ſhould ſtand acquitted and free from all charges and imputations.

℣. 30. Is there iniquity in my tongue? &c.] Meaning in his words; either thoſe which he uttered when he curſed the day on which he was born, or in charging his friends with unkindneſs and falſhood; otherwiſe the tongue is a world of iniquity, and the beſt of men are apt to offend both God and men in word: cannot my taſte diſcern perverſe things? which is to be underſtood not of his natural taſte, which very probably thro' his diſeaſe might be greatly vitiated, and incapable of reliſhing his food as in time of health, and of diſtinguiſhing good from bad; but of his intellectual taſte, or of his ſenſe and reaſon, his rational and ſpiritual taſte; he had his ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern good and evil; he could diſtinguiſh between right and wrong that was ſaid or done, either by himſelf or others; he had the uſe of his rational powers and faculties, and therefore not to be treated as a mad or diſtracted man, but as one capable of carrying on a converſation, of opening his true caſe, and defending himſelf; ſee ch. xii. 11.

CHAP. VII.

IN this chapter Job goes on to defend himſelf in an addreſs to God; as that he had reaſon to complain of his extraordinary afflictions, and wiſh for death; by obſerving the common caſe of mankind, which he illuſtrates by that of an hireling, ℣. 1. and juſtifies his eager deſire of death by the ſervant and hireling; the one earneſtly deſiring the ſhadow, and the other the reward of his work, ℣. 2. by repreſenting his preſent ſtate as exceeding deplorable, even worſe than that of the ſervant and hireling, ſince they had reſt at night, when he had none, and were free from pain, whereas he was not, ℣. 3—5. by taking notice of the ſwiftneſs and ſhortneſs of his days, in which he had no hope of enjoying any good, ℣. 6, 7. and ſo thought his caſe hard; and the rather, ſince after death he could enjoy no temporal good: and therefore, to be deprived of it whilſt living gave him juſt reaſon of complaint, ℣. 8—11. and then he expoſtulates with God for ſeting ſuch a ſtrict watch upon him, giving him no eaſe night nor day, but terrifying him with dreams and viſions, which made life diſagreeable to him, and death more eligible than that, ℣. 12—16. and repreſents man as unworthy of the divine regard, and below his notice to beſtow favours on him, or to chaſtiſe him for doing amiſs, ℣. 17, 18. and admitting that he himſelf had ſinned, yet he ſhould forgive his iniquity, and not bear ſo hard upon him, and follow him with one affliction after another without intermiſſion, and make him the butt of his arrows; but ſhould ſpare him and let him alone, or however take him out of the world 19—21.

℣. 1. Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth?] There is a ſet time for his coming into the world, for his continuance in it, and for his going out of it; this is to man on earth, with reſpect to his being and abode here, not in the other world or future ſtate: not in heaven; there is no certain limited time for man there, but an eternity; the life he will enter into is everlaſting; the habitation, manſion, and houſe he will dwell in, are eternal; ſaints will be for ever with Chriſt, in whoſe preſence are pleaſures for evermore: nor in hell; the puniſhment there will be eternal, the fire will be unquenchable and everlaſting, the ſmoke of the torments of the damned will aſcend for ever and ever; but men's days and time on earth are but as a ſhadow, and ſoon gone; they are of the earth, earthly, and return unto it at a fixed appointed time, the bounds of which cannot be paſſed over: this is true of mankind in general, and of Job in particular; ſee ch. xiv. 1, 5, 14. Eccl. iii. 1, 2. the word Enoſh[l], here uſed, ſignifies, as is commonly obſerved, a frail, feeble, mortal man; Mr. Broughton renders it ſorrowful man; as every man more or leſs is; even a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with griefs, is attended with them, has an experience of them: this is the common lot of mankind; and if any thing more than ordinary is inflicted upon them, they are not able to bear it; and theſe ſorrows death at the appointed time puts an end to, which makes it deſirable: now, ſeeing there is a ſet time for every man's life on earth, and there was for Job's, of which he was well aſſured; and, by all appearance of things, and by the ſymptoms upon him, this time was near at hand; therefore it ſhould not be thought a criminal thing in him, conſidering his extraordinary afflictions, and which were intolerable, that he ſhould ſo earneſtly wiſh the time was come; though in his more ſerious thoughts he determined to wait for it: ſome render the words, is there not a warfare for men on earth[k]? the word being ſo rendered elſewhere, particularly in Iſ. xl. 2. every man's ſtate on earth is a ſtate of warfare; this is frequently ſaid by the Stoic philoſophers[l]; even ſo is that of natural and unregenerate men, who are often engaged in war with one another, which ariſe from the luſts which war in their members; and eſpecially with the people of God, the ſeed of the woman, between whom and the ſeed of the ſerpent there has been an enmity from the beginning; and with themſelves, with the troubles of life, diſeaſes of body, and various afflictions they have to conflict and grapple with: and more eſpecially the life of good men here is a ſtate of warfare, not only of the miniſters of the word, or perſons in public office, but of private believers; who are good ſoldiers of Chriſt, enter volunteers into his ſervice, fight under his banners, and quit themſelves like men; theſe have many enemies to combat with; ſome within, the corruptions of their hearts, which war againſt the ſpirit and law of their minds, which form a company of two armies in them, militating againſt each other; and others without, as Satan and his principalities and powers, the men of the world, falſe teachers, and the like: and theſe are properly accoutred for ſuch ſervice, having the whole armour of God provided for them; and have great encouragement to behave manfully, ſince they may be ſure of victory, and of having the crown of righteouſneſs, when they have fought the good fight of faith; even tho' they are but frail, feeble, mortal, ſinful men, but fleſh and blood, and ſo not of themſelves a match for their enemies; but they are more than ſo thro' the Lord being on their ſide, Chriſt being the captain of their ſalvation, and the Spirit of God being in them greater than he that is in the world; and beſides, it is only on earth this warfare is, and will ſoon be accompliſhed, the laſt enemy being death that ſhall be deſtroyed: now this being the common caſe of man, to be annoyed with enemies, and always at war with them, if beſides this, uncommon afflictions befal him, as was Job's caſe, this muſt make life burdenſome, and death, which is a deliverance from them, deſireable; this is his argument: ſome chuſe to render the words, is there not a ſervile condition for men on earth[m]? the word being uſed of the miniſtry and ſervice of the Levites, Numb. iv. 3, 4. all men by creation are or ought to be the ſervants of God; good men are ſo by the grace of God, and willingly and chearfully ſerve him; and though the great work of ſalvation is wrought out by Chriſt for them, and the work of grace is wrought by the Spirit of Chriſt in them, yet they have work to do in their day and generation in the world, in their families, and in the houſe of God; and which, though though weak and feeble in themſelves, they are capable of doing, through Chriſt, his ſpirit, power, and grace: and this is only on earth; in the grave there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge; when the night of death comes, no man can work; his ſervice, eſpecially his toiſome ſervice, is at an end; and as it is natural for ſervants to wiſh for the night, when their labours end, Job thought it not unlawful in him to wiſh for death, which would put an end to his toils and labours, and when he ſhould have reſt from them: are not his days alſo like the days of an hireling? the time for which a ſervant is hired, whether it be for a day or for a year, or more, it is a ſet time; it is fixed, ſettled, and determined in the agreement, and ſo are the days of man's life on earth; and the days of an hireling are few at moſt, the time for which he is hired is but ſhort; and ſuch are the days of men in this world, they are but few indeed; ſee ch. x. 5, 20. and xiv. 1. and as the days of an hireling are days of toil and labour and ſorrow, ſo are the days of men, evil as well as few; his few days are full of trouble, Gen. xlvii. 9. Job xiv. 1. all this and what follows is ſpoken to God, and not to his friends, as appears from ℣. 7, 8, 14, 17—21.

℣. 2. As a ſervant earneſtly deſireth the ſhadow, &c.] Either the ſhadow of ſome great rock, tree, or hedge, or any ſhady place to ſhelter him from the heat of the ſun in the middle of the day, which in thoſe eaſtern countries is hot and ſcorching; and very burdenſome and fatiguing it is for ſervants and labourers to work in fields and vineyards, or in keeping herds and flocks in ſuch countries, and at ſuch a time of the day; to which the alluſion is in Cant. i. 7. Iſ. xxv. 4. and xxxii. 2. Matt. xx. 12. Wherefore they gape for, or pant after ſome ſhady place for refreſhment, as the word [n] uſed ſignifies; or for the ſhadow of the evening, or the ſun-ſetting, when the longeſt ſhadow is caſt, Jer. vi. 4. and when the work of a ſervant is ended, and he retires to his houſe for refreſhment and reſt: and ſince now ſuch a ſhadow in either ſenſe is deſireable, and not unlawful to wiſh for, Job ſuggeſts it ought not to be charged as a crime in him, that he ſhould importunately deſire to be in the ſhadow of death, or in the grave, where the weary are at reſt; or to have the night come on him, when he ſhould ceaſe from all his toil and labour, ſorrows and pains: and as an hireling looketh for the reward of his work; or for his work [o]; either for new work, what was ſet him being done, or rather for the finiſhing of it, that he might have reſt from it; or for the reward, the hire due to him upon its being done; ſo Job intimates he deſired death with the ſame view, that he might ceaſe from his works, which ſhould follow him, and when he ſhould have the reward of the inheritance, not in a way of debt but of grace: nor indeed is it ſinful to look or have reſpect unto the recompence of reward, in order to engage to go through ſervice more chearfully, or to endure ſufferings more patiently, ſee Heb. xi. 26. for though the hireling is an emblem of a ſelf-righteous perſon, that works for life and expects it as the reward of his work, and of falſe-teachers and bad ſhepherds, that take the care of the flock for filthy lucre-ſake, ſee Luke xv. 19. John x. 12. yet hiring is ſometimes uſed in a good ſenſe, of good men, that are hired and allured by gracious promiſes and divine encouragements to labour in the Lord's vineyard, and may expect their reward; ſee Matt. xx. 1, 2, 8.

℣. 3. So am I made to poſſeſs months of vanity, &c.] This is not a reddition or application of the above ſimilies of the ſervant and hireling; for that is to be underſtood, and to be ſupplied at the end of the preceding verſe; that as thoſe looked for the ſhadow and payment of hire, ſo Job looked for, and earneſtly deſired death, or to be removed out of the world; beſides, the things here inſtanced in don't anſwer; for Job, inſtead of having the refreſhing ſhadow had months of vanity, and inſtead of reſt from his labours had nothing but weariſome nights, and continual toſſings to and fro; whereas the ſleep of a labouring man is ſweet to him; and having laboured hard all day, the night is a time of reſt to him; but ſo it was not with Job; wherefore this ſo refers to the common ſtate and condition of mankind, in which Job was, with an addition of extraordinary afflictions upon him: the time of his afflictions, tho' but ſhort, ſeemed long, and therefore is expreſſed by months; and ſome months might have paſſed from the time his calamities began to the preſent; ſince it muſt be ſome time before his friends heard of them, and more ſtill before they could meet together and agree upon their coming, and were actually come to him; as alſo ſome time was ſpent in ſilence, and now in converſation with him; the Jews [p] make them to be 12 months: and theſe months were months of vanity, or empty [q] ones; ſuch as winter-months, empty of all joy, and peace, and comfort; times in which he had no pleaſure, no eaſe of body or of mind; deſtitute of the good things of life, and of the preſence of God and communion with him; and full of trouble, ſorrow, and diſtreſs: and theſe were given him for an inheritance [r]; were his lot and portion, which he received as an inheritance from his parents, in conſequence of original ſin, the ſource of all the troubles and miſeries of human life, in common with other men; and which were allotted him by his heavenly father, according to his ſovereign will and pleaſure, as all the afflictions of the Lord's people are, the inheritance bequeathed them by their Father, and the legacy of their Redeemer: and wearijome nights are appointed to me; one after another, in ſucceſſion; in which he could have no ſleep nor reſt, thro' pain of body and diſtreſs of mind; and ſo became the more weary, through long lying down and toſſings to and fro, through groans and tears, and much watching; and theſe were prepared for him in the purpoſes of God, and appointed to him in his counſels and decrees; ſee ch. xxiii. 14. or they prepared or appointed [s]; that is Elohim, the three divine perſons.

℣. 4. When I lie down I ſay, When ſhall I ariſe, &c.] Or, then I ſay, &c. [t] that is, as ſoon as he laid himſelf down in his bed, and endeavoured to compoſe himſelf to ſleep, in order to get reſt and refreſhment; then he ſaid within himſelf, or with an articulate voice, to thoſe about him, that ſat up with him; oh that it was time to riſe; when will it be morning, that I may riſe from my bed, which is of no manner of ſervice to me, but rather increaſes wearineſs? and the night be gone? and the day dawn and break; or night or evening be meaſured, ſured, as in the margin, or meaſures itſelf[u]; or that he, i. e. God, or it, my heart, meaſures the evening[w], or night; lengthens it out to its full time: to a diſcompoſed perſon, that cannot ſleep, the night ſeems long; ſuch count every hour, tell every clock that ſtrikes, and long to ſee peep of day; theſe are they that watch for the morning, Pſ. cxxx. ℣. 6. and I am full of toſſings to and fro unto the dawning of the day; or, unto the twilight; the morning-twilight; though ſome underſtand it of the twilight or evening of the next day, ſee 1 Sam. xxx. 17. and interpret the toſſings to and fro, of the toils and labours of the day, and of the ſorrows and miſeries of it, lengthened out to the eve of the following day; but rather, they are to be underſtood either of the toſſes of his mind, his diſtreſſed and perplexed thoughts within him he was full of; or of the toſſes of his body, his frequent turning himſelf upon his bed, from ſide to ſide, to eaſe him; and with theſe he was filled, or ſatiated[x]; he had enough and too much of them; he was glutted and ſated with them, as a man is with over much eating, as the word ſignifies.

℣. 5. My fleſh is clothed with worms and clods of duſt, &c.] Not as it would be at death, and in the grave, as Schmidt interprets it, when it would be eaten with worms and reduced to duſt; but as it then was, his ulcers breeding worms, or lice, as ſome[y]; theſe ſpread themſelves over his body: ſome think it was the vernicular or pedicular diſeaſe that was upon him, and the ſcabs of them, which were all over him like one continued cruſt, were as a garment to him; or thoſe ſores of his, running with purulent matter, and he ſitting and rolling himſelf in duſt and aſhes, and this moiſture mingling therewith, and clotted together, formed clods of duſt, which covered him all over; a diſmal ſpectacle to look upon! a precious ſaint in a vile body! my ſkin is broken; with the boils and ulcers, in all parts, and was parched and cleft with the heat and breaking of them: and become loathſome; to himſelf and others; exceeding nauſeous, and extremely diſagreeable both to ſight and ſmell: or liquified[z]; moiſtened with corrupt matter flowing from the ulcers in all parts of his body; the word in Arabic ſignifies a large, broad, and open wound, as a learned man[a] has obſerved; and it is as if he ſhould ſay, whoever obſerves all this, this long time of diſtreſs night and day, and what a ſhocking figure he was, as here repreſented, could blame him for wiſhing for death in the moſt paſſionate manner?

℣. 6. My days are ſwifter than a weaver's ſhuttle, &c.] Which moves very ſwiftly, being thrown quick and faſt to and fro; ſome verſions render it a racer[b], one that runs a race on foot, or rides on horſeback, agreeable to ch. ix. 25. where, and in the next verſe to it, other ſimilies are uſed, to ſet forth the ſwiftneſs and fleetineſs of man's days; as they alſo are elſewhere repreſented, as ſwift as a tale told, a word expreſſed, or a thought conceived, Pſ. xc. 9. and ſo here, by the Septuagint, are ſaid to be ſwifter than ſpeech, though wrongly tranſlated: this is to be underſtood, not of his days of affliction, diſtreſs, and ſorrow; for theſe in his apprehenſion moved but ſlowly, and he could have been glad that they had gone on faſter; but either his days in common, or particularly his days of proſperity and pleaſure, theſe were ſoon over with him; and which he ſometimes wiſhed for again, ſee ch. xxix. 1—5. and are ſpent without hope; not without hope of happineſs in another world, but without hope of being reſtored to his outward felicity in this; which Eliphaz had given him ſome hint of, but he had no hope concerning it; ſee ch. v. 24, 25, 26. and vi. 11, 12. and xix. 10.

℣. 7. O remember that my life is wind, &c.] Or, breath[c]; man's life is in his breath, and that breath is in his noſtrils, and therefore not to be accounted of, or depended on; man appears by this to be a poor, frail creature, whoſe life, with reſpect to himſelf, is very precarious and uncertain; it is but as a vapour, an air-bubble, full of wind, eaſily broken and diſſipated, and ſoon vaniſhes away; it is like the wind, noiſy and bluſterous, full of ſtir and tumult, and, like that, ſwiftly paſſes and ſweeps away, and returns not again: this is an addreſs to God; and ſo ſome[d] ſupply it, O God, or O Lord, remember, &c. not that forgetfulneſs is in God, or that he needs to be reminded of any thing; but he may ſeem to forget the frailty of man when he lays his hand heavy on him; and may be ſaid to be mindful of it, when he mercifully takes it off: what Job here prays for, the Lord often does, as he did with reſpect to the Iſraelites, Pſ. lxxviii. 39. mine eye ſhall no more ſee good; meaning, not ſpiritual and eternal good, here and hereafter; he knew he ſhould, after this life, ſee his living Redeemer even with the eyes of his body, when raiſed again; that he ſhould ſee him as he is, not through a glaſs, darkly, but face to face, in all his glory; and that for himſelf, and not another, and even ſee and enjoy things he had never ſeen before: but his ſenſe is, that he ſhould ſee or enjoy no more temporal good; either in this world, being without hope of any, or in the grave, whither he was going and would ſhortly be; and therefore intreats that ſome mercy might be ſhewn him whilſt he lived; to which ſenſe the following words incline.

℣. 8. The eye of him that hath ſeen me ſhall ſee me no more, &c.] Or the eye of ſight[e]; the ſeeing eye, the moſt acute and quick-ſighted eye; ſo Mr. Broughton renders it, the quick eye[f]: this is to be underſtood as after[g] death, that then the ſharpeſt eye ſhould not ſee him, he would be out of the reach of it; which muſt be taken with a limitation; for men after death are ſeen by the eyes of the omniſcient God, their ſouls, be they in heaven or in hell, and their bodies in the grave; and as for good men, ſuch as Job, they are at once with him in his immediate preſence, beholding and beheld by him; and they are ſeen by angels, whoſe care and charge their ſouls become immediately upon death, and are carried by them into heaven, where they are fellow-worſhippers with them; and they are ſeen by glorified ſaints, to whoſe company they are joined; for if the rich man in hell could ſee Abraham, and Lazarus in his boſom, then much more do the ſaints ſee one another: but the meaning is, that when a man is dead, he is ſeen no more by men on earth, by his relations, friends, and acquaintance; the conſideration of which is a cutting cutting ſtroke at parting, ſee Acts xx. 25, 38. the ſtate of the dead is an inviſible ſtate, and therefore called in the Greek tongue Hades, unſeen; ſo the dead will remain with reſpect to the inhabitants of this world, till the reſurrection, and then they ſhall ſee and be ſeen again in the ſame bodies they now have; for this is no denial of the reſurrection of the dead, as ſome Jewiſh writers charge Job with, and infer from this and ſome following paſſages: thine eyes are upon me, and I am not; am a dead man, a phraſe expreſſive of death, and of being in the ſtate of the dead, or however of being no more in this world, ſee Gen. v. 24. and xlii. 36. Jer. xxxi. 15. not that the dead are non-entities, or are reduced to nothing; this is not true of them, either with reſpect to ſoul or body; their ſouls are immaterial and immortal, and exiſt in a ſeparate ſtate after death, and their bodies, though reduced to duſt, are not annihilated; they return to earth and duſt, from whence they came; but ſtill they are ſomething, they are earth and duſt, unleſs theſe can be thought to be nothing; and this duſt is taken care of and preſerved, and will be gathered together, and moulded, and framed, and faſhioned into bodies again, which will endure for ever: nor is the meaning, that they are no where; the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect are in heaven, in paradiſe, in a ſtate of life, immortality and bliſs; and the ſouls of the wicked are in their own place, in the priſon of hell, reſerved with devils, to the judgment of the great day; and the bodies of both are in the graves till the day of the reſurrection; but they are not, and no more in the land of the living, in their houſes and families, in their ſhops and buſineſs, and places of trade and merchandiſe, or in the houſe of God ſerving him there, according to their different ſtations. And this Job aſcribes to God, thine eyes are upon me; meaning not his eyes of love, favour, and kindneſs, which had reſpect unto him; and yet notwithſtanding this, as it did not ſecure him from afflictions, ſo neither would it from death itſelf; for though his eyes were upon him in ſuch ſenſe, yet he would not be[a], or ſhould die; but rather his angry eyes, the frowns of his countenance, which were now upon him, and might be diſcerned in the diſpenſations of his providence towards him, by reaſon of which he was not as he was before; not fit for any thing, as Sephorno underſtands it; or ſhould he frown upon him, one angry look would ſink him into the ſtate of the dead, and he ſhould be no more, who looks on the earth, and it trembles, Pſ. civ. 32. Mr. Broughton renders it as a petition, let thine eyes be upon me, that I be no more; that is, let me die, the ſame requeſt he made in ch. vi. 8, 9. but it ſeems beſt to interpret it of the eyes of God's omnipreſence and providence, which are on men in every ſtate and place; and the ſenſe be, either as granting, that though the eyes of men ſhould not ſee him after death, yet the eyes of God would be upon him when he was not, or in the ſtate of the dead; or elſe, that ſhould he long defer doing him good, it would be too late, he ſhould ſoon die, and then, though he ſhould look after him, and ſeek for him, he ſhould not be in the land of the living, according to ℣. 21. or this may denote the ſuddenneſs of death, which comes to a man in a moment, as Bar Tzemach obſerves, in the twinkling of an eye; nay, as ſoon as the eye of God is upon a man, that is, as ſoon almoſt as a man appears in the world, and the eye of divine providence is upon him, he is out of it again, and is no more; ſee Eccl. iii. 2.

℣. 9. As the cloud is conſumed and vaniſheth away, &c.] Which being diſperſed by the wind, or broke up by the ſun, is never ſeen, or returns more; for though the wiſe man ſpeaks of clouds returning after the rain, this is not to be underſtood of the ſame clouds, but of ſucceeding ones, Eccl. xii. 2. ſo pardon of ſin is expreſſed by the ſame metaphor, to ſhew that ſin thereby is no more, no more to be ſeen or remembered, Iſ. xliii. 25. and xliv. 22. the Targum renders it as ſmoke, by which the ſhortneſs and conſumption of mens days are expreſſed, Pſ. cii. 3. but by the ſimile of a cloud here, is not ſo much deſigned the ſudden diſappearance of of life, as the irrevocableneſs of it when gone, as the reddition or application following ſhews: ſo he that goeth down to the grave ſhall come up no more; the grave is the houſe or long home that all muſt go to, it being the appointment of God that all ſhould die, or be in the ſtate of the dead; which is meant by the grave, ſince all are not interred in the earth; and this, as here is frequently expreſſed, as if it was man's act, being hither brought; and when it deſigns an interment in the earth, it is with great propriety called a going down; and however that be, yet the ſtate of the dead is a ſtate of humiliation, a coming down from all the grandeur, honour, and glory of the preſent ſtate, which are all laid in the duſt; and when this is man's caſe, he comes up no more from it, that is, of himſelf, by his own power; none but Chriſt, who is God over all, ever did this; or none naturally, or by the laws of nature, for nothing ſhort of almighty power can effect this; it muſt be done in an extraordinary way, and is no leſs than a miraculous operation; nor will this be done until the general reſurrection of the juſt and unjuſt, when all that are in their graves ſhall come forth, the one to the reſurrection of life, and the other to the reſurrection of damnation; excepting in ſome few inſtances, as the Shunamite's ſon, the man that touched the bones of the prophet Eliſha, the daughter of Jairus, the widow of Naim's ſon, Lazarus, and thoſe that roſe at our Lord's reſurrection; this is farther explained in the following verſe.

℣. 10. He ſhall return no more to his houſe, &c.] In a literal ſenſe, built or hired by him, or however in which he dwelt; and if a good man, he'll have no deſire to return to that any more, having a better houſe, an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens; or in a figurative ſenſe, either his body, the earthly houſe of his tabernacle, an houſe of clay, which has its foundation in the duſt; to this he ſhall not return until the reſurrection, when it will be rebuilt, and fitted up for the better reception and accommodation of him; or elſe his family, to whom he ſhall not come back again, to have any concern with them in domeſtic affairs, or in part of the buſineſs of life, as David ſaid of his child when dead, I ſhall go to him, but he ſhall not return to me, 2 Sam. xii. 23. neither ſhall his place know him any more; the place of his office, or rather of his habitation; his dwelling-houſe, his farms and his fields, his eſtates and poſſeſſions, ſhall no more know, own and acknowledge him as their maſter, proprietor and poſſeſſor, theſe coming at his death into other hands, who now are regarded as ſuch; or the inhabitants of the place, country, country, city, town, village, and houſe in which he lived, ſhall know him no more; no more being ſeen among them he will ſoon be forgotten; out of ſight, out of mind [b].

℣. 11. Therefore I will not refrain my mouth, &c.] From ſpeaking and complaining; ſeeing, beſides the common lot of mankind, which is a ſtate of warfare, ſorrow and trouble, and is as much as a man can well grapple with, extraordinary afflictions are laid upon me, which make life inſupportable; and ſeeing I enjoy no good in this preſent life, and am ſhortly going where no temporal good is to be expected, and ſhall never return to this world any more to enjoy any; therefore I will not be ſilent, and forbear ſpeaking my mind freely, and uttering my juſt complaint, for which I think I have ſufficient reaſon: or I alſo will not refrain my mouth [c]; in turn, as a juſt retaliation, ſo Jarchi; ſince God will not refrain his hand from me, I will not refrain my mouth from ſpeaking concerning him; ſince he ſhews no mercy to me, I'll utter my miſerable complaints, and not keep them to myſelf; this was Job's infirmity when he ſhould have held his peace, as Aaron, and been dumb and ſilent as David, and been ſtill, and have known, owned and acknowledged the ſovereignty of God, and not vented himſelf in paſſion as he did: I will ſpeak in the anguiſh of my ſpirit; or in the ſtraitneſs [d] of it; he was ſurrounded on all ſides with diſtreſs, the ſorrows of death compaſſed him about, and the pains of hell got hold upon him; he was like one pent up in a narrow place, in a cloſe confinement, that he could not get out of, and come forth from; and he felt not only exquiſite pains of body from his boils and ſores, but great anguiſh of ſoul; and therefore he determines to ſpeak in and of [e] all this, to give vent to his grief and ſorrow, his paſſion and reſentment: I will complain in the bitterneſs of my ſoul; his afflictions were like the waters of Marah, bitter ones, very grievous and diſagreeable to fleſh and blood, and by which his life and ſoul were embittered to him; and in and of [f] this he determines to complain, or to utter in a complaining way what he had been meditating on, as the word [g] ſignifies; ſo that this was not an haſty and precipitate action, but what upon deliberation he reſolved to do; to pour out his complaint before God, and leave it with him, in a ſubmiſſive way, would not have been amiſs, but if he complained of God and his providence, it was wrong: why ſhould a living man complain; not even a wicked man, of the puniſhment of his ſin, and much leſs a good man of fatherly chaſtiſements? We ſee what the will of man is, what a ſtubborn and obſtinate thing it is, I will, I will, I will, even of a good man when left to himſelf, and not in the exerciſe of grace, and under the influence of it; the complaint follows, by way of expoſtulation.

℣. 12. Am I a ſea, or a whale, &c.] Like the reſtleſs ſea, to which very wicked, profligate and abandoned ſinners are compared, that are continually caſting up the mire and dirt of ſin and wickedneſs; am I ſuch an one? or like the raging ſea, its proud waters and foaming waves, to which fierce and furious perſecutors, and tyrannical oppreſſors are compared; did I behave in ſuch a manner to the poor and diſtreſſed in the time of proſperity? nay, was I not the reverſe of all this, kind and gentle to them, took their part, and reſcued them out of the hands of thoſe that oppreſſed them? ſee ch. xxix. 12—17. or like its toſſing waves, which attempt to paſs the bounds that are ſet to them; am I ſuch an one that have tranſgreſſed the laws of God and men, which are ſet as boundaries to reſtrain the worſt of men? and am I a whale, or like any great fiſh in the ocean, the dragon in the ſea, the leviathan, the piercing and crooked ſerpent? an emblem of cruel princes, as the kings of Egypt and Aſſyria, or antichriſt, Iſ. xxvii. 1. ſee Pſ. lxxiv. 13, 14. The Targum is, "as the Egyptians were condemned to be drowned in the Red-ſea, am I condemned? or as Pharaoh, who was ſuffocated in the midſt of it for his ſin, ſince thou ſetteſt a watch over me?" or, as another Targum, "am I as the great ſea, which is moved to extreme parts, or the leviathan, which is ready to be taken?" or elſe the ſenſe is, have I the ſtrength of the ſea, which ſubſiſts notwithſtanding its waves are continually beating, and which carries ſuch mighty veſſels upon it, and would bear down all before it, if not reſtrained? or of a whale, the leviathan, whoſe flakes of fleſh are joined together, and his heart as firm as a ſtone, and as hard as a piece of the nether milſtone, and laughs at the ſpear, the ſword, and the dart? no, I have not; I am a poor, weak, feeble creature, whoſe ſtrength is quite exhauſted, and not able to bear the weight of the chains and fetters of afflictions upon me; or rather the principal thing complained of, and which he illuſtrates by theſe metaphors, is, that he was bound with the cords of afflictions, and compaſſed with gall and travail, and hedged in hereby, that he could not get out, as the church ſays, Lam. iii. 5, 7. or could not get releaſed from his ſorrows by death, or otherwiſe; juſt as the ſea is ſhut up with bars and doors, that its waves can come hitherto, and no farther; and as the whale is confined to the ocean, or ſurrounded with veſſels and armed men in them, when about to be taken; and thus it was with Job, and of this he complains: that thou ſetteſt a watch over me; which Jarchi and others underſtand of Satan; and though in his hands, he was not ſuffered to take away his life; but beſides him may be meant all his afflictions, calamities and diſtreſſes, in which he lay fettered and bound, in which he was ſhut up as in a priſon, and by which he was watched over and guarded; and from which he could make no eſcape, nor get a releaſe.

℣. 13. When I ſay, my bed ſhall comfort me, &c.] When he thought within himſelf, that he would lie down upon his bed and try if he could get a little ſleep, which might comfort and refreſh him, and which he promiſed himſelf he ſhould obtain by this means, as he had formerly had an experience of: my couch ſhall eaſe my complaint; he concluded, that by lying down upon his couch, and falling aſleep, it would give ſome eaſe of body and mind; that his body would at leaſt for ſome time be free from pain, and his mind compoſed, and ſhould ceaſe from complaining for a while; which interval would be a relief to him, and of conſiderable ſervice. Some render it, my couch ſhall burn [h]; be all on fire, and torture me inſtead of giving eaſe; and ſo may have reſpect to his burning ulcers.

℣. 14. Then thou ſcareſt me with dreams, &c.] Not with dreams and viſions being told him, as were by Eliphaz, ch. iv. 13. but with dreams he himſelf dreamt; and which might ariſe from the force of his diſtemper, and the pain of his body, whereby his ſleep was broken, his imagination diſturbed, and his fancy roving, which led him to objects as ſeemed to him very terrible and dreadful; or from a melancholy diſpoſition his afflictions had brought upon him; and hence in his dreams he had diſmal apprehenſions of things, very diſtreſſing and terrifying; or from Satan, in whoſe hands he was, and who was permitted to diſtreſs and diſturb him, at ſuch ſeaſons; all which he aſcribes to God, becauſe he ſuffered it ſo to be: and now theſe dreams not only hindered ſound ſleep, and getting that eaſe and refreſhment he hoped for from thence, but even they were frightful and ſcaring to him, ſo that inſtead of being the better for his bed and his couch, he was the worſe; theſe dreams added to his afflictions, and in them he ſuffered much, as Pilate's wife is ſaid to do, Matt. xxvii. 19. and terrifieſt me thro' viſions; ſpectres, apparitions, and ſuch like things being preſented to his fancy, whilſt ſleeping and dreaming, which filled him with terror, and ſorely diſtreſſed him; ſo that he could receive no benefit hereby, but rather was more fatigued and weakened.

℣. 15. So that my ſoul chuſeth ſtrangling, &c.] Not to ſtrangle himſelf, as Ahitophel did, or to be ſtrangled by others, this being a kind of death inflicted on capital offenders; but rather, as Mr. Broughton renders it, to be choaked to death by any diſtemper and diſeaſe, as ſome are of a ſuffocating nature, as a catarrh, quinſey, &c. and kill in that way; and indeed death in whatſoever way is the ſtopping of a man's breath; and it was death that Job choſe, let it be in what way it would, whether natural or violent; ſo weary was he of life through his ſore and heavy afflictions: and death rather than my life; or than my bones[l]; which are the more ſolid parts of the body, and the ſupport of it, and are put for the whole and the life thereof; or than theſe bones of his, which were full of ſtrong pain, and which had nothing but ſkin upon them, and that was broken and covered with worms, rottenneſs and duſt; the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, and my bones death; that is, deſired and choſe death, being ſo full of pain, ſee Pſ. xxxv. 10.

℣. 16. I loath it, &c.] Or them[k], either his life which was a wearineſs to him, or his bones, which were ſo painful and nauſeous; or rather, I am become loathſome, to himſelf, to his ſervants, and to his friends, and even his breath was ſtrange to his wife; or being ulcerated, I pine and waſte away[l], and muſt in courſe be quickly gone: I would not live always; no man can or will; there is no man that lives but what ſhall ſee death, Pſ. lxxxix. 48. Job knew this, nor did he expect or deſire it; and this was not his meaning, but that he deſired he might not live long, or to the full term of man's life, yea, that he might die quickly; and indeed to a good man to die is gain, and to depart out of the world, and be with Chriſt, is far better than to continue in it. And had Job expreſſed himſelf without paſſion, and with ſubmiſſion to the divine will, what he ſays would not have been amiſs: let me alone; or ceaſe from me[m]; from afflicting him any more, having as great a weight upon him as he could bear, or greater than he could well ſtand up under; or from ſupporting him in life, he wiſhes that either God would withdraw his afflicting hand from him, or his preſerving hand; either abate the affliction, or diſmiſs him from the world: for my days are vanity; a breath[n] or puff of wind; a vapour, as Mr. Broughton renders it, that ſoon vaniſhes away; days empty of all that is good, delightful and pleaſant, and full of evil, trouble and ſorrow, as well as fleeting, tranſitory, and ſoon gone, are as nothing, yea leſs than nothing and vanity.

℣. 17. What is man, that thou ſhouldeſt magnify him? &c.] Man in his beſt eſtate, in his original ſtate, was but of the earth, earthly; a mutable creature, and altogether vanity; ſo that it was wonderful God ſhould magnify him as he did, raiſe him to ſuch honour and dignity, as to ſet him over all the works of his hands, and beſtow peculiar marks of his favour upon him in Eden's garden; but man in his low and fallen eſtate, being, as the word here uſed is generally obſerved to ſignify, a frail, feeble, weak and mortal creature, yea, a ſinful one; it is much more marvellous, that God ſhould magnify him, or make him great, that is, any of the human race, as he has ſome, ſo as to ſet his heart upon them, as Jarchi connects this with the following clauſe; to think of them and provide for them in his purpoſes and decrees, in his council and covenant, to chooſe any of them to grace here, and glory hereafter: he has magnified them, by eſpouſing them to his Son, whereby they ſhare with him in his glory, and in all the bleſſings of his goodneſs; through the incarnation of Chriſt, by means of which the human nature is greatly advanced and honoured; and by their redemption thro' Chriſt, whereby they are raiſed to an higher dignity, and reſtored to a greater eſtate than they loſt by the fall; by clothing them with the rich robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, comparable to the gold of Ophir, and raiment of needle-work; and by adorning them with the graces of the bleſſed Spirit; and in a word, by taking them into his family, making them his children and his heirs, rich in grace, and heirs of the kingdom of heaven, and kings and prieſts unto him; taking them as beggars from the dunghil, to ſit among princes, and to inherit the throne of glory. The words may be underſtood in a different ſenſe, and more agreeable to the context, and to the ſcope of Job's diſcourſe, as they are by ſome[o], of God's magnifying men by afflicting them; according to which man is repreſented as a poor, weak, ſtrengthleſs creature, a worm and clod of the earth; and the Lord, as the mighty God, as of great and infinite power and ſtrength, between whom there is no manner of proportion; God is not a man that they ſhould come together, or as if on equal foot; nor man a match for God; to wreſtle with principalities and powers, which are not fleſh and blood, is too much for men of themſelves, and how much leſs able are they to contend with God? Now Job by this ſuggeſts, that his thought and ſentiment of the matter was, and in which he has a particular view to himſelf, and his own caſe; that as on the one hand it was a demeaning the might and majeſty of God, by making himſelf a combatant with man; ſo on the other hand it was doing man too much honour, as if he was

was one of more importance and consequence, and more mighty and powerful than he is; whereas he is unworthy of the divine notice in any respect, either to bestow his favours, or lay his afflicting hand upon him; compare with this 1*Sam.* xxiv. 14. Hence a late learned writer [p], agreeable to the use of the word in the Arabic language, renders it, what is mortal man that thou shouldst wrestle with him? strive and contend with him as if he was thy match, when thou couldst at one blow, and even at a touch, dispatch him at once? and that thou shouldst set thine heart upon him? have an affection for him, love him, delight in him, highly value and esteem him; it is wonderful that God should have such a regard to any of the sons of men; and yet it is certain that he has, as appears by the good things he has provided and laid up for them in covenant, by sending his Son to die for them, by calling and quickening them by his Spirit and grace, and drawing them with loving-kindness to himself; by taking continual care of them, and keeping them as the apple of his eye: though these words may be interpreted agreeable to the other sense, that thou shouldst set thine heart upon him? or towards him, to afflict him and chastize him with afflictions, so Bar Tzemach; or to stir up himself against him, as Sephorno; and the above late learned writer chuses to render them, that thou shouldst set thine heart against him [q]? and so the Hebrew [r] particle is used in many other places; see Ezek. xiii. 2. and xxi. 3. compare with this Job xxxiv. 14, 15 where R. Simeon Bar Tzemach thinks, Elihu has respect to this passage of Job, and reproves him for it.

℣. 18. And that thou shouldst visit him every morning, &c.] That is, daily, continually, as Aben Ezra interprets it; either in a way of love, grace, and mercy; so God has visited men, by raising up and sending his Son to be a redeemer of them; the Son of God has visited them, as the day-spring from on high, by his incarnation and appearance in this world; see Luke i. 68, 78. and the Lord visits them, by calling them by his grace, see Acts xv. 14. by communing and conversing with them in a free and friendly manner; by helping right early, and by renewing his mercies to them every morning, all which is matter of admiration: or else the word may be taken in a different sense, as it sometimes is, either for punishing man for sin, as in Exod. xx. 5. Jer. v. 9. or for chastizing the Lord's people, which is a visiting them, though in a fatherly way, and in love, and which is often and frequently down, even every morning, see Ps. lxxxix. 32, 33. and lxxiii. 14. and so the sense agrees with the former, though by some given with this difference thus, what is man that thou shouldst magnify him? or make him great both in things temporal and spiritual, as he had made Job in the time of his prosperity, which he may have respect unto; having been the greatest man in all the east, with respect to both characters, whereby it was plain he had interest in the love and affections of the heart of God; and yet, notwithstanding nevertheless, thou visitest him [s], with afflictions and chastisements continually; which may seem strange, and look like a contradiction, that thou shouldst: and try him every moment? by afflictive providences; in this way the Lord often tries the faith and patience, the fear and love, the hope and humility of his people, and all other graces, whereby they appear and shine the brigher, which was Job's case, see ch. xxiii. 10. and which he doubtless had in view in all he had said, and more particularly expostulates about in the following verses.

℣. 19. How long wilt thou not depart from me, &c.] From wrestling and contending with him, and afflicting of him; the Lord was too hard a combatant for Job, and therefore he chose to be rid of him, and was impatient of it; or look off from me [t]; so Mr. Broughton renders it, how long wilt thou not look from me? this is to be understood not of a look of love, which Job would never have desired to have averted from him; but a frowning and angry look, such as the Lord put on in this dispensation of his providence towards him; the allusion may be to that sharp and constant look, which antagonists in wrestling have upon each other whilst conflicting together, and so the metaphor before used is still carried on: nor let me alone till I swallow down my spittle? Some think Job has reference to his disease, which affected his throat, that being so dried up, or having a quinsy in it, that he could not swallow his spittle, or it was with great difficulty he did it; or rather it is a proverbial expression, signifying that his afflictions were incessant, that he had no respite nor intermission, had not space enough given him to swallow down his spittle, or take his breath, as in ch. ix. 18. so Schultens observes, that with the Arabians this was a proverbial form of speech, when they required time for any thing, give me time to swallow my spittle; or when they had not proper time, or any intermission, used to say, you won't give me time to swallow my spittle; and one being asked a multitude of questions, replied, suffer me to swallow my spittle, that is, give me time to make an answer: or the sense is, that his antagonist in wrestling with him held him so fast, and kept him so close to it, and so twisted him about, and gave him fall upon fall, so that he had no time to swallow his spittle; or he so collared him, and griped him, and almost throttled him, that he could not swallow it down; all which intends, how closely and incessantly Job was followed with one affliction upon another, and how severe and distressing they were to him.

℣. 20. I have sinned, &c.] Some render it, if I have sinned [w]; be it so that I have, as my friends say, yet since there is forgiveness with thee, why should I be so afflicted as I am? but there is no need of such a supplement, the words are an affirmation, I have sinned, or I am a sinner; not that he owned that he had been guilty of any notorious sin, or had lived a sinful course of life, on account of which his afflictions came upon him, as his friends suggested; but that he was not without sin, was daily guilty of it as men, even the best of men ordinarily are; and being a sinner was not a match for a holy God; he could not contend with him, nor answer him for one sin of a thousand committed by him in thought, word, or deed; and therefore desires him to desist and depart from him, see Luke v. 8. what shall I do unto thee? this he said, not as one in distress of mind on account of sin, and under the load of the guilt of it, enquiring what he must do to make satisfaction for it, how and what way he could be saved from it; for he knew that nothing done by him in a ceremonial way by sacrifices, nor in a moral way by the performance of duties, could take away sin, or atone for it, or save him from it; he knew this was

The reading which we follow, and is followed by the Targum, and by moſt intepreters, Jewiſh and Chriſtian, is a correction of the ſcribes, and one of the eighteen places corrected by them; which is no argument of the corruption of the Hebrew text, but of the contrary; ſince this was only placed in the margin of the bible, as the Maſorites afterwards did with their various readings, ſhewing only what was their ſenſe of this, and the like paſſages; and as an inſtruction how in their opinion to underſtand them, ſtill retaining the other reading or writing; and which, according to Aben Ezra, may be rightly interpreted, and is, ſo that I am a burden to thee[c]; and which is followed by ſome, ſignifying as Job thought at leaſt, that he was ſo offenſive to him that he could not bear him, but treated him as an enemy; was weary of him, as God is ſaid to be of ſinners and their ſins, and of the ſervices and duties of carnal profeſſors, ſee Iſ. i. 14. and xliii. 24. ſo Abendana interprets it, "thou haſt ſet me for a mark unto thee, as if I was a burden to thee."

℣. 21. And why doſt thou not pardon my tranſgreſſion, &c.] Or lift it up[d]; every ſin is a tranſgreſſion of the law of God, and the guilt of it upon the conſcience is a burden too heavy to bear, and the puniſhment of it is intolerable; pardon lifts up and takes away all manner of ſin, and all that is in ſin; it takes off the load of ſin from the conſcience, and eaſes it, and looſens from obligation to puniſhment for it, which comes to paſs in this manner: Jehovah has taken or lifted up ſin from his people, and has put and laid it, or cauſed it to meet on his Son, by the imputation of it to him; and he has voluntarily taken it on himſelf, and has bore it, and has taken it away by his blood and ſacrifice, which being applied to the conſcience of a ſinner, lifts it up and takes it from thence, and ſpeaks peace and pardon to him; it wholly and entirely removes it from him, even as far as the eaſt is from the weſt; and for ſuch an application, Job expoſtulates with God, with whom there was forgiveneſs, and who had proclaimed himſelf a God pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin; and which he does when he both removes the guilt of it from the conſcience, and takes away all the effects of it, ſuch as afflictions and the like; in which latter ſenſe Job may well be underſtood, as agreeing with his caſe and circumſtances: and take away mine iniquity? or cauſe it to paſs away[e] from him, by applying his pardoning grace and mercy to his conſcience, and by removing his afflicting hand from him: for now ſhall I ſleep in the duſt; having ſin pardoned, and the hand of God removed; I ſhall depart out of the world in peace, lie down in the grave, and reſt quietly till the reſurrection; there being in the bed of duſt no toſſings to and fro as now, nor a being ſcared with dreams and terrified with night-viſions. Mr. Broughton renders it, whereas I lie now in the duſt; as if it referred to his preſent caſe, ſitting as a mourner in duſt and aſhes, and his fleſh clothed with clods of duſt; or in a figurative ſenſe, lying in the duſt of ſelf-abhorrence; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt: and thou ſhall ſeek me in the morning, but I ſhall not be; meaning not in the morning of the reſurrection, for then he will be found; but it is a figurative way of ſpeaking, as Bar Tzemach obſerves, juſt as one goes to viſit a ſick man in a morning, and he finds him dead, and he is not any more in the land of the living: many interpreters underſtand this as Job's ſenſe, that he ſhould quickly die; he could not be a long time in the circumſtances he was; and therefore if the Lord had a mind to beſtow any good thing on him in the preſent life, he muſt make haſte to do it; ſince in a ſhort time he ſhould be gone, and then if he ſought for him, it would be too late, he ſhould be no more: but the ſenſe is this, that when he lay down in the duſt, in the grave, he ſhould be ſeen no more on earth by any man, nay not by the eye of God himſelf; ſhould the moſt early and the moſt diligent ſearch be made for him. Mr. Broughton takes it to be a petition and requeſt to die, rendering the words, "why doſt thou not "quickly ſeek me out, that I ſhould be no more?" and to which others[f] agree.

CHAP. VIII.

IN this chapter Bildad enters the lists with Job, proceeding upon the same plan with Eliphaz, he reproves him for his long and loud talk, ℣. 1, 2. asserts the justice of God in his providence, of which the taking away of Job's children by death for their transgression, was an instance and proof, ℣. 3, 4. and suggests, that if Job who had not sinned so heinously as they had, and therefore was spared, would make his submission to God, and ask forgiveness of him, and behave for the future with purity and uprightness, he need not doubt but God would immediately appear and exert himself on his behalf, and bless him and his with prosperity and plenty, ℣. 5—7. for this was his ordinary way of dealings with the children of men, for the truth of which he refers him to the records of former times, and to the sentiments of ancient men, who lived longer, and were more knowing than he and his friends, on whose opinion he does not desire him to rely, ℣. 8—10. and then by various similies used by the ancients, or taken from them by Bildad, or which were of his own inventing and framing, are set forth the short-lived enjoyments, and vain hope and confidence of hypocrites and wicked men; as by the sudden withering of rushes and flags of themselves, that grow in mire and water, even in their greenness, before they are cut down, or cropt by any hand, ℣. 11—13. and by the spider's web, which can't stand and endure when leaned upon and held, ℣. 14, 15. and by a flourishing tree destroyed, and seen no more, ℣. 16—19. and the chapter is concluded with an observation and maxim, that he and the rest of his friends set out upon, and were tenacious of; that God did not afflict good men in any severe manner, but filled them with joy and gladness; and that he would not long help and prosper wicked men, but bring them and their dwelling-place to nought; and this being the case of Job, he suggests that he was such an one, ℣. 20—22.

℣. 1. Then answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said.] This was the second of Job's friends that came to visit him, ch. ii. 11. and is mentioned next to Eliphaz there, and takes his turn in this controversy in the same order; which no doubt was agreed upon among themselves, as well as the part each should bear, and the general sentiment they should pursue, which was the same in them all. Some have observed, that Job's friends were like the messengers that brought him the tidings of his losses, before one had done speaking another came; and so as soon as one of his friends had delivered his discourse, and before Job could well finish his reply, up starts another to charge him afresh, as here Bildad did, who said as follows.

℣. 2. How long wilt thou speak these things? &c.] Either what he had delivered in the third chapter in cursing the day of his birth, and wishing for death, in which sentiments he still continued, and resolutely defended; or those expressed in the two preceding chapters, in answer to Eliphaz; this he said, as wondering that he should be able to continue his discourse to such a length, and to express himself with such vehemence, when his spirits might be thought to be so greatly depressed by his afflictions, and his body enfeebled by diseases; or as angry with him for his blasphemy against God, as he was ready to term it, his bold and daring speeches of him, and charge of unrighteousness on him, and for his disregard to what Eliphaz had said, his contempt of it, and opposition to it; or as impatient at his long reply, wanting him to cease speaking, that he might return an answer, and therefore breaks in upon him before he had well done, see ch. xviii. 2. or as despising what he had said, representing it as idle talk, and as mere trifling; and so some render the words, how long wilt thou trifle after this sort[g]? or throw out such nonsense and fabulous stuff as this? and how long shall the words of thy mouth be like a strong wind? blustering, boisterous and noisy, to which passionate words, expressed in a loud and sonorous manner, may be compared; and so we say of a man in a passion and rage, that he storms. Bildad thought that his speeches were hard, and rough, and stout against God, and very indecent and unbecoming a creature to his maker, and not kind and civil to them his friends; and yet they were like wind, vain and empty, great swelling words, but words of vanity; they were spoken, and seemed big, but had nothing solid and substantial in them, as Bildad thought.

℣. 3. Doth God pervert judgment? &c.] In his dealings with men in the way of his providence; no, he does not; here Bildad opposes himself to Job, who he thought had charged God with injustice in dealing with him, and his children, in the manner he had done: the same thing is intended in the following question, doth the Almighty pervert justice? for judgment and justice are the same, and often go together in scripture, as being done either by God or men, when righteousness is executed by them, and this is never perverted by the Lord; there is no unrighteousness in him, neither in his nature, nor in his ways and works, either of providence or of grace; he is the judge of all the earth, that does and will do right; to subvert a man in his cause, he approves not of in others, and will never do it himself; to justify the wicked, and condemn the just, are both an abomination to him, and therefore neither of these can ever be thought to be done by him; for though he justifies the ungodly, he does not justify their ungodliness, nor them in it, but from it, and that by the perfect righteousness of his Son; whereby the law is fulfilled, and justice satisfied, and so he is just whilst he is the justifier of him that believes in Jesus; though he is gracious and merciful, he is also righteous, and will not clear the guilty, or pardon sin without satisfaction to his justice; and such as are truly just or righteous, he never condemns here or hereafter; he may afflict them, but he delivers them out of their afflictions, nor are they ever forsaken by him; and, on the contrary, he punishes wicked men in this world, and in that to come, as he has the angels that sinned, the old world, Sodom and Gomorrah, and many others, and all wicked men will be punished with everlasting destruction; yea, even so strict is his punitive justice, that the sins of his own people being laid and found on his Son as their surety, he has most severely ſeverely puniſhed him for them; he awoke the ſword of juſtice againſt him, ſpared him not, but delivered him to death for us all; and tho' he forgives the iniquities of his children, he takes vengeance on their inventions, and chaſtizes them for their ſins, that they may not be condemned with the world; and, on the other hand, he is not unrighteous to forget their work and labour of love, which he rewards in a way of grace, as well as it is a righteous thing with him to render tribulation to them that trouble them: the righteouſneſs of God is known by the judgments he executes on wicked men, and eſpecially will be manifeſt in his judgments on Antichriſt; and though the juſtice of God in the courſe of his providence, in ſome inſtances, may not now be ſo clear, his judgments will be made manifeſt, and eſpecially at the great day of judgment, when every thing ſhall be brought to account, and God will judge the world in righteouſneſs; all which we may be aſſured of, is and will be executed by him, from the conſideration of his nature and perfections, and particularly from the name he goes by in this paſſage, being El, the mighty God, who is able to ſave and to deſtroy, to ſave the righteous, and deſtroy the wicked; and is Shaddai, all-ſufficient, ſtands in need of nothing; nor can he receive any thing that is not his own, and therefore uncapable of being bribed to the perverſion of juſtice and judgment.

℣. 4. If thy children have ſinned againſt him, &c.] As no doubt they had, and as Bildad thought, in a very notorious manner, and therefore were righteouſly puniſhed for them; this inſtance is produced as a proof of God's not perverting, but doing juſtice, and the rather, becauſe it was on account of this, that it was ſuppoſed that Job charged, or was ready to charge God with injuſtice; this was ſo far from it, that it was a righteous thing to do it, if or ſeeing his children had ſinned; or becauſe they have ſinned, or though they have ſinned, as the words [h] are by ſome differently rendered; and either way ſhews that God did not pervert juſtice, but acted agreeably to it. Mr. Broughton renders them, as thy children have ſinned againſt him, ſo hath he ſent them into the hand of their treſpaſs; as a righteous retaliation for it: that Job's children had ſinned, there is no queſtion to be made of it; they were born in ſin, though born of godly parents; and though they had a religious education, yet no doubt were guilty of ſin in their younger years, as well as when grown up; and even though good men, as there may be reaſon to conclude, they were, yet daily ſinning, for there are none without ſin; and alſo it is true, that all ſin is againſt God, contrary to his nature and will, a breach and tranſgreſſion of his law, and an act of hoſtility againſt himſelf, and a trampling under foot, or at leaſt a neglect, of his legiſlative power and authority, which is an aggravation of it; yet it does not appear that Job's children were guilty of any notorious ſins, or atrocious crimes, or lived a ſinful courſe of life, for which the judgments of God came upon them; nor is it a clear caſe that they were taken away by death in the manner they were, on account of their ſins, but rather purely for the trial of Job's integrity, faith and patience: and he have caſt them away for their tranſgreſſion; or by the hand of it [i]; by means of it, becauſe of it, being provoked with it. Bildad repreſents them as abandoned ſinners, as caſtaways and reprobates, rejected of God with abhorrence, and utterly ruined. Some render it, hath ſent them into the hand of their tranſgreſſion [k], or treſpaſs; that is, delivered them up to the power and dominion of ſin, gave them up to their hearts luſts, and to vile affections, to do things not convenient, and which they purſued to their ruin; the Targum is, "he ſent them into the place of their tranſgreſſion [l];" into hell, which their tranſgreſſions deſerved, and for which they were fitted by them. Some a little more mildly render the words, he ſent them away [m]; that is, diſmiſſed them out of the world, took them out of it by death; which diſmiſſion is ſometimes in peace, as good old Simeon prayed for, and ſometimes in wrath, as Saul was taken away, ſee Luke ii. 29. Hoſ. xiii. 11. the latter is the meaning here.

℣. 5. If thou wouldſt ſeek unto God betimes, &c.] Here Bildad ſeems to think more mildly, and ſpeak more kindly to Job, that though he had ſinned, yet not in ſo groſs a manner as his children, ſince he was ſpared, and they were not; and therefore if he would apply himſelf to God, and ſupplicate his grace and mercy, and live a godly life, it might yet be well with him, and he be reſtored to his former or to better circumſtances; his ſenſe is, that he would adviſe him, as Eliphaz had done before, ch. v. 8. to ſeek unto God by prayer, as the Targum adds, and of which it is explained in the next clauſe, and that he would do this betimes, or in the morning [n]; which is a proper time for prayer, and was one of the ſeaſons good men in former times made uſe of for that purpoſe; ſee Pſal. v. 3. and lv. 17. or that he would ſeek him in the firſt place, and above all things, take the firſt opportunity to do it, without any procraſtination of it, and that with eagerneſs and earneſtneſs, with his whole heart and ſoul; for God is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him, and thoſe that ſeek him early ſhall find him: and make thy ſupplication to the Almighty; not pleading any merit of his own, as deſerving of any bleſſing on account of what he had done; but aſk what he ſhould as a favour, as a free gift, in a way of grace and mercy, as the word [o] ſignifies; call for the pity of the Almighty, as Broughton renders it.

℣. 6. If thou wert pure and upright, &c.] By which he tacitly intimates that he was neither; though the character given of him is, that he was perfect and upright, feared God and eſchewed evil, and which is confirmed by God himſelf, and even after he had been tried by ſore afflictions. Bildad's meaning is, if he was pure in heart, and upright in his life and converſation, then things would be well with him. Men's hearts are naturally impure; no man is pure of himſelf, or can make his heart pure; nor is there any good man that is ſo pure, as to be entirely free from ſin; but ſuch are pure in heart, who have clean hearts created, and right ſpirits renewed in them; or have new hearts and new ſpirits given them; have their hearts ſprinkled from an evil conſcience, and ſo keep the faith in a pure conſcience; having their hearts purified by faith in the blood of Chriſt, whoſe blood cleanſes from all ſin; and in this ſenſe Job was pure, having an intereſt in a living Redeemer, and in his blood, and a partaker of his grace; and that he was was upright is before teſtified of him, though now called in queſtion, an if being put upon it, as well as on the former, having in the courſe of his life walked uprightly, according to the will of God revealed unto him: ſurely now; directly at once, without delay, as Sephorno interprets it; it need not be doubted of, verily ſo it would be: he would awake for thee; who though he neither ſlumbers nor ſleeps, yet ſeems to be aſleep when he ſuffers his people to be afflicted, diſtreſſed, and oppreſſed, and therefore they cry unto him to awake to their judgment, and their cauſe; ſee Pſ. vii. 8. and xxxv. 23. and xliv. 23. the ſenſe is, that he would ſtir up and exert himſelf, and ſhew himſelf ſtrong on his behalf, and appear to be on his ſide, and work deliverance and ſalvation for him; or awake his mercy, grace, and goodneſs, as ſome Jewiſh commentators [c] interpret it; that is, beſtow his favours upon him: and make the habitation of thy righteouſneſs proſper; which ſome underſtand of his body, the earthly houſe of his tabernacle, which if his ſoul was pure and upright that dwelt in it, might be called the habitation of righteouſneſs; which, were this the caſe, would become healthful that was now covered with worms, and clods of duſt: others interpret it of the ſoul, as Aben Ezra and Ben Gerſom, the ſeat of righteouſneſs, and of all the graces of the ſpirit; which is in a proſperous condition, when theſe graces are in lively exerciſe, and the preſence of God, and the light of his countenance, and communion with him are enjoyed; but rather his dwelling houſe in a literal ſenſe, and all his domeſtic affairs are here meant; and it is ſignified that all would be again in peace and proſperity, and he ſhould enjoy great plenty of good things ſhould he behave well; and here is a tacit intimation as if his habitation had not been an habitation of righteouſneſs, but had been filled with the mammon of unrighteouſneſs, with goods ill gotten, ſuch as were obtained by rapine and oppreſſion, and neither he nor his family righteous; a very unjuſt and iniquitous inſinuation: the Targum paraphraſes it, and ſhall make the beauty of thy righteouſneſs perfect [f]; but Job had a more beautiful righteouſneſs than his own, his was but as rags, and neither pure nor perfect; even the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is perfect and beautiful, and makes ſuch ſo, that are arrayed with it; ſee Pſ. l. 2. Ezek. xvi. 14.

℣. 7. Though thy beginning was ſmall, &c.] When he firſt ſet out in the world; and which though it greatly increaſed, and he was the greateſt man in all the eaſt, yet Bildad ſuggeſts, ſhould he behave well, that was comparatively ſmall to what it would be with him hereafter; and which was fact, for he had double of what he before enjoyed; ſo Mr. Broughton renders the words, and thy former ſtate ſhould be little to thy latter: or rather the ſenſe and meaning is, though thy beginning ſhould be ſmall [g]; be it ſo that it is; or rather that though he ſhould begin again in the world with very little, as indeed at preſent he had nothing to begin with, and when he did, it was but with little; one gave him a piece of money, and another an ear-ring of gold: yet thy latter end ſhould greatly increaſe; as it did, for the Lord bleſſed his latter end, and he had more than at the beginning, even double to what he had in his moſt flouriſhing circumſtances; ſee ch. xlii. 11, 12, &c. Bildad ſeems to have ſpoken under a ſpirit of prophecy, without being ſenſible of it, and not imagining in the leaſt that ſo it would be in fact; for he only affirms it on ſuppoſition of Job's good behaviour for the future, putting it entirely upon that condition, which he had no great expectation of it ever being performed.

℣. 8. For enquire, I pray thee, of the former age, &c.] With reſpect to the truth of what he had ſaid, or ſhould ſay; he does not deſire Job to take his word for it, but enquire how it was in former times; by which it would appear, that when good men have been in affliction and trouble, and have behaved well under it, as became them, they have been delivered out of it, and have been afterwards in more flouriſhing and comfortable circumſtances, as Noah, Abraham, Lot, and others; and that wicked men and hypocrites, though they have flouriſhed for a while, yet deſtruction has ſooner or later come upon them, and they have utterly periſhed, as the deſcendants of Cain, the builders of Babel, and the men of Sodom, and others; whereas good and upright men are never caſt away by the Lord, no inſtance can be given of it; all which would appear, if enquiry was made into what had happened in the former age; not the firſt age, as the Septuagint verſion, the age or generation in which the firſt man and woman lived; for who were their fathers, mentioned in the next clauſe? but the age or generation preceding that in which Job and his friends lived; and the knowledge of things done in that might with ſome application and diligence be more eaſily obtained: and prepare thyſelf to the ſearch of their fathers; of the fathers of the men of the former age, who lived in the age preceding that, and from whom their poſterity had received the knowledge of many things by tradition, as they had received from their fathers that lived before them, and ſo upwards; things being handed down in a traditionary way from father to ſon; and though theſe fathers were dead, yet by their traditions that were preſerved, they were capable of teaching and inſtructing men; and their ſayings and ſentiments deſerved regard, and were had in much eſteem; but yet being uninſpired and fallible men, were not to be received without examination; for though truth is of the greateſt antiquity, and to be revered on that account, yet error is almoſt as old as that; and therefore great care is to be taken how any thing is received purely upon the ſcore of antiquity; and great pains, diligence, and circumſpection are neceſſary to a due ſearch of the fathers, and coming at their ſenſe and ſentiments; and ſo as to diſtinguiſh between truth and error, and get a true knowledge of facts done in antient times; ſuch a ſearch is to be made in like manner as one would ſearch for gold and ſilver, and hidden treaſures.

℣. 9. For we are but of yeſterday [h], &c.] Which is not to be underſtood ſtrictly of the day laſt paſt, but of a ſhort ſpace of time backward; and eſpecially when compared with the ante diluvian fathers, who lived the far greater part of them upwards of 900 years; otherwiſe Bildad and his two friends were men in years; Eliphaz ſays, that with them were the gray-headed and very aged men, much older than the father of Job, and Elihu ſpeaks of himſelf as a young man, and of them as very old; ſee ch. xv. 10. and xxxii. 6. and know nothing; which is not to be taken in an abſolute ſenſe, for they knew much of the things of nature, providence, and grace; they were men of great underſtanding in things natural, civil, and religious, as appears by their diſcourſes; but in a comparative ſenſe, or when compared with the long-lived patriarchs, triarchs, who through the length of their days had much time and opportunity to make their obſervations on things, to learn the arts and ſciences, and improve themſelves in all uſeful knowledge, human and divine; for which reaſon Job is ſent to enquire of them; whereas they had been but a little while in the world, and knew but little, to whom might be applied that ſaying as now to men ſince, ars longa, vita brevis; and eſpecially they knew nothing as it is to be known, or nothing perfectly, or in comparſon of the ſaints in heaven; for they that know moſt here, know but in part, ſee through a glaſs darkly; but in the other world, they ſee face to face, and know as they are known. Moreover Bildad might ſay this of himſelf, and his friends, in a modeſt manner, having learned to know themſelves, their weakneſs, and their folly; and the firſt and great leſſon of wiſdom is to become fools in mens own apprehenſion, in order to be truly wiſe, having the like ſenſe of themſelves as Agur had, Prov. xxx. 2. ſee 1 Cor. iii. 18. or rather this might be ſaid as being the ſenſe of Job concerning them, who had a very mean and indifferent opinion of them; ſee ch. xii. 2. and xiii. 2. and therefore Bildad would not have him take their ſenſe of things but enquire of perſons older and wiſer: becauſe our days upon earth are a ſhadow; man's time is rather meaſured by days than by months and years, being ſo ſhort; and theſe are called days on earth, to diſtinguiſh them from the days of heaven, which are one everlaſting day, in which there is no night of darkneſs, either in a literal or figurative ſenſe, and which will never end; but the days of this life are like a ſhadow, dark and obſcure; full of the darkneſs of adverſity and trouble, as well as greatly deficient in the light of knowledge; there is nothing in them ſolid and ſubſtantial; the greateſt and beſt things of this life are but a vain ſhow; in heaven there is a better and more enduring ſubſtance: every thing is mutable and uncertain here; man is ſubject to a variety of changes in his mind and body, in his family and ourward eſtate and circumſtances: and life itſelf is but a vapour, which appears a while and ſoon vaniſhes away; or rather like a ſhadow, that declines, is fleeting, and quickly gone; ſee 1 Chron. xxix. 15.

℣. 10. Shall not they teach thee, and tell thee, &c.] That is, the men of the former age, and their fathers before them, Job is directed to enquire of, and to prepare for a ſearch into their records and traditions; from whom he might reaſonably expect to be taught and told things that would be very inſtructive and uſeful to him in his preſent circumſtances: and utter words out of their heart? ſuch as were the effect of mature judgment and long obſervation, and which they had laid up in their hearts, and brought out from their treaſure there; and, with the greateſt faithfulneſs and ſincerity, had either committed them to writing, or delivered them in a traditionary way to their poſterity, to be communicated to theirs; and which might be depended upon as true and genuine, being men of probity, uprightneſs, and ſingleneſs of heart; who declared ſincerely what they knew, and ſpoke not with a double heart, having no intention to deceive, as it cannot be thought they would impoſe upon their own children; and therefore Job might ſafely receive what they uttered, and depend upon it, as truth and fact: and what they ſaid, as Jarchi obſerves, is as follows; or what follows Bildad collected from them, and ſo might Job, and think he heard them ſaying, as Piſcator ſupplies the text, what is expreſſed in the next verſes, if not in their words, yet as their ſenſe.

℣. 11. Can the ruſh grow up without mire? &c.] No, at leaſt not long, or ſo as to lift up his head on high, as the word ſignifies[a]; the ruſh, or bulruſh, which ſeems to be meant, delights in watry places, and has its name in Hebrew from its abſorbing or drinking up water; it grows in moiſt and watry clay, or in marſhy places, which Jarchi ſays is the ſenſe of the word here uſed; the Septuagint underſtands it of the paper-reed, which, as Pliny[b] obſerves, grows in the marſhy places of Egypt, and by the ſtill waters of the river Nile: can the flag grow without water? or the ſedge[c]; which uſually grows in moiſt places, and on the banks of rivers; this, unleſs in ſuch places, or if without water, cannot grow long, or make any very large increaſe, or come to maturity; ſo ſome[d] render it, if the ruſh ſhould grow up without, &c. then it would be with it as follows.

℣. 12. Whilſt it is yet in its greenneſs, &c.] Before it is come to its full height, or to a proper ripeneſs; when as yet it has not flowered, or is about it; before the time uſual for it to turn and change; it being without moiſture, water, or watry clay, will change; and not cut down by the ſcythe, or cropt by the hand of man, it withereth before any other herb; of itſelf; rather ſooner than ſuch that don't require ſo much moiſture; or in the ſight and preſence of them, they looking on as it were, and deriding it; a poetical repreſentation, as Schultens obſerves: next follows the accommodation of theſe ſimilies to wicked and hypocritical men.

℣. 13. So are the paths of all that forget God, &c.] Who forget that there is a God; he is not in all, and ſcarce in any of their thoughts, and they live without him in the world; who forget the works of God, of creation, and providence, in which there is a glorious diſplay of his being and perfections; who forget the benefits and bleſſings of his goodneſs they are every day partakers of, and are not thankful for them; and who forget the word, worſhip, and ordinances of God, and follow after and obſerve lying vanities, idols, and the works of men's hands, and worſhip them, being unmindful of the rock of their ſalvation: now ſuch men, as well as the hypocrites in the next clauſe, are like bulruſhes and flags, or ſedge, being unfruitful, uſeleſs, and unprofitable; and, for their ſenſuality and worldly mindedneſs, ſtanding in the mire and clay of an unregenerate ſtate, and of carnal and worldly luſts; and though, eſpecially the latter, may carry their heads high in a profeſſion of religion, and make a fair ſhew in the fleſh whilſt it is a time of outward proſperity with them, but when tribulation ariſes on the account of religion, they are preſently offended, and apoſtatize; being deſtitute of the true grace of God, and not having the root of the matter in them, they wither of themſelves; they ſoon drop their profeſſion in the view of all good men, comparable to herbs and green graſs, which abide in their their verdure, when the other are gone and are seen no more: and the hypocrites hope shall perish; who are either the same with those before described, who being in prosperous circumstances, forget the God of their mercies they make a profession of, like Jeshurun of old; or different persons, as Bar Tzemach thinks, the former designing open profane sinners, these secret ones, under the appearance of good men: an hypocrite is one whose inside is not as his outside, as the Jews say; who is outwardly righteous but inwardly wicked, has a form of godliness but not the power of it, a name to live but dead; that makes a shew of religion and devotion, attending the worship and ordinances of God in an external way, as if he had great delight in him and them, when his heart is removed far from him: and such have their hope for the present, of being in the favour of God, and of future happiness, which is founded on their outward prosperity, their esteem among men, and more especially their external righteousness, and profession of religion; but this will perish, even both the ground of their hope, their riches and righteousness, which come to nothing, and the hope that is built thereupon sinks into despair; if not in life, as it sometimes does, yet always at death, see ch. xi. 20. and xxvii. 8. Bildad seems to have Job in view here, whom he esteemed an hypocrite.

℣. 14. Whose hope shall be cut off, &c.] The same thing as before, expressed in different words, and repeated for the certainty of it; signifying that it should be of no manner of use, should be wholly lost, and issue in black despair: the word has the signification of loathing, and is differently rendered, either, whom his hope shall loath[e], or, who shall loath his hope[f]; he shall fret and teaze, and vex himself that he should be such a fool to entertain such a vain hope, or to place his hope and confidence in such vain things, finding himself most sadly disappointed: and whose trust shall be a spider's web; or a spider's house[g]; and such its web is to it; having made it, it incloses itself in it, and dwells securely: very fitly is the hope and confidence of an hypocrite compared to a spider's web, which is a very nice and curious piece of workmanship, as are the outward works of righteousness, done by hypocrites, they are wrought out and set off to the best advantage, to be seen of men; yet very slight and thin, and will bear no weight, such are the best works of carnal professors, they make a fine appearance but have no substance, don't flow from principles of grace, nor are done in the strength of Christ, or to the glory of God; are but splendida peccata, as one calls them, and fall infinitely short of bearing the weight of the salvation of the soul: as the spiders web is spun out of its own bowels, so the works of such persons are wholly of themselves; they are their own, done without the grace of God and spirit of Christ; and such webs are not fit for garments, are too thin to cover naked souls; insufficient to shelter from divine wrath and vengeance; can't bear the besom of justice, one stroke of which will sweep them all away; and though they may think themselves safe incloſed in them as in a house, they will find themselves in the issue wretchedly mistaken; for there is no shelter, safety, and security, in such cobwebs; there is none but in Christ and his righteousness.

℣. 15. He shall lean upon his house, &c.] Either the spider or the hypocrite, or the hypocrite as the spider; that is, that which is the ground of his confidence, which is as the spider's house, on that he shall depend, either on his riches and outward prosperity, which he promises himself a long continuance of, and from whence he concludes himself to be high in the favour and good-will of God; or on his works of righteousness, his outward profession of religion, attendance on external worship, and a round of duties performed by him; in these he trusts, on these he depends, in such webs he enwraps himself, in such a house he dwells, and imagines himself safe; which is only making flesh his arm, leaning upon a broken reed, and building an house upon the sand: the Septuagint version is, if he prop up his house, by repeated outward acts of religion: but it shall not stand; whether it be riches, these are uncertain things, of no continuance; there are no riches durable, but the unsearchable riches of Christ and his grace; or whether it be a man's own righteousness, which he endeavours to establish, or make to stand, as the phrase is, in Rom. x. 3. but in vain; it is but a sandy foundation to build on; or the hope and confidence laid upon it is like a house built on the sand, and when rain falls, floods come, and winds beat upon it, it falls; and great is the fall of it, Matt. vii. 26, 27. he shall hold it fast; as the worldling does his wealth, his gold, and his silver; but it is snatched out of his hand, by one providence or another, or however at last death obliges him to part with it; and the self-righteous man holds fast his righteousness, it is his own, he is fond of, an house of his own building, and can't bear to have it demolished; an idol of his own setting up, and to take it away is to take away his gods; and what has he more? wherefore he holds it as fast as he can, and will not let it go till he can hold it no longer; or, he shall fortify himself in it[h], as in a castle or strong hold, which he thinks impregnable, yet will soon and easily be battered down by divine justice: but it shall not endure; gold perishes, riches come to nought, wealth is no enduring substance, nor is a man's righteousness lasting; only Christ's righteousness is everlasting; true grace endures to eternal life, and issues in it; but external gifts, speculative and rational knowledge, and a mere profession of religion, fail, cease, and vanish away.

℣. 16. He is green before the sun, &c.] Which some understand of the rush or flag, of which a farther account is given, as setting forth more fully the case of wicked men and hypocrites; but to either of these do not agree the situation of it in a garden, the shooting forth of its branches, and the height of it, and its striking its roots deep in stoney places: Cocceius interprets it of the herb or grass before which the flag withers, ℣. 12. but the same objections, or most of them, lie against that also; rather, from the description of it, a tall, large tree is designed, to which hypocrites in their most flourishing circumstances are compared, and yet come to nothing, Ps. xxxvii. 35, 36. that is green in its leaves, and looks beautiful, so they in a profession of religion, which is like green leaves without fruit; they make in it a fair shew in the flesh, take up and trim the lamp of a profession, and retain it bright and fair for a time; or, like a tree full of sap, ſap, or juicy[l]; or, as Mr. Broughton renders it, juiceful; denoting, not a fulneſs of the ſpirit and his grace, or of faith, hope, love, &c. and of righteouſneſs and goodneſs, but of outward proſperity, having as much as heart could wiſh, and great plenty of good things laid up for many years: and this tree is ſaid to be green and juicy before the ſun; either in the preſence, and through the influence of it, as hypocrites flouriſh, even in a religious way, while the ſun of proſperity ſhines upon them, and no longer; or openly and publickly, in the ſight of all men, as this phraſe is uſed, 2 Sam. xii. 11, 12. and as ſuch men do, in the view of all men, profeſſors and profane, doing all they do to be ſeen of men, and before whom they are outwardly righteous, and reckoned good men; or, before the ſun riſes, as the Targum and Aben Ezra, ſo hypocrites flouriſh, before the ſun of perſecution ariſes and ſmites them, becauſe of their profeſſion, and then they drop it; ſee Matt. xiii. 6, 21. and his branch ſhooteth forth in his garden; or over[k] it; and branch may be put for branches, which in a flouriſhing tree ſpread themſelves to cover a conſiderable piece of ground: Mr. Broughton renders it, and his ſuckers ſprout over his orchard; all which may denote the increaſe of a wicked man, in his family, in his wealth and ſubſtance, and particularly in his poſterity, which are as branches and ſuckers from him; and Bildad, if theſe are his own words, may have reſpect to Job, and to his large ſubſtance and number of children he had in his proſperity, when he had an hedge ſet about him, and was incloſed as in a garden: and whereas the church of God is ſometimes compared to a garden, Cant. iv. 12. it agrees very well with hypocrites, who have a place there, and are called hypocrites in Sion, where they have a name, and flouriſh for a while: many interpreters, both Jewiſh[l] and Chriſtian[m], interpret this, and what follows, of truly righteous and good men under afflictive providences, who notwithſtanding continue, and are not the worſe, but the better for them; their leaf of profeſſion is always green, and withers not; and that before the ſun, even of adverſity and affliction; and though that beats upon them, and ſmites them ſeverely, they are like green olive trees, or the cedars of God, full of ſap, full of the grace of God, and continually ſupplied with it; and ſo patiently endure temptation and affliction, bear the heat and burden of the day, and are not careful in the year of drought; ſee Cant. i. 6. Pſ. lii. 8. Jer. xvii. 8. ſuch are planted in the garden and houſe of the Lord by himſelf, and ſhall never be rooted up; where their branches ſpread and they grow in grace and in the knowledge of all divine things, and are filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs.

℣. 17. His roots are wrapped about the heap, &c.] The heap of ſtones where the tree ſtands; it ſtrikes its roots among them, and implicates and twiſts them about them, and ſecures itſelf and grows up notwithſtanding them: and this expreſſes the ſeeming ſtable ſtate and condition of hypocrites for a ſeaſon, who not only flouriſh, but ſeem to take root; and who maintain their ground amidſt ſome difficulties; this fitly agrees with, and deſcribes ſuch hearers of the word, and profeſſors of religion, comparable to the ſeed ſown on ſtoney ground, Matt. xiii. 5, 6, 20. 21. and he ſeeth the place of ſtones; or, the houſe of ſtones[n]; a houſe built of ſtones, high and ſtately; yet this tree riſes higher than that, overtops and overlooks it; and is repreſented as viewing it thoroughly, or looking down upon it, and all around it, being ſo high and ſo ſpreading; the Targum renders it implicateth the houſe of ſtones; platteth, as Mr. Broughton, or twiſts about them, and ſo many of the Jewiſh writers; but this ſeems to be deſigned in the former clauſe: all this ſuits very well with good men, whoſe roots are wrapped about the fountain[o], as the words may be rendered; about the love of God, in which they are rooted and grounded, and are like trees planted by rivers of water, the river of divine love, which refreſhes, revives, and makes them fruitful; and about Chriſt, the fountain of gardens and well of living waters; in whom they are rooted and built up, increaſe, flouriſh, and are eſtabliſhed; and though they are among ſtones, and attended with many difficulties, yet they abide and ſurmount all; believe in hope againſt hope, and ſee and enjoy, yea even dwell in the houſe of ſtones, the church of God, built on a rock, againſt which the gates of hell cannot prevail.

℣. 18. If he deſtroy him from his place, &c.] If the ſun when he is riſen ſtrikes the tree with ſuch vehement heat that it withers and utterly periſhes from the place where it grew; or roots it up, ſo the Targum and Nachmanides; or, if God deſtroys the hypocrite from his place, or he is by one means or another removed out of the garden, the church, being deteſted and rejected by good men; or from all his worldly enjoyments, his honour, credit, and eſteem with men, which are all precarious, fickle, and inconſtant; or out of the world, being cut down as a cumber-ground: then it ſhall deny him, ſaying, I have not ſeen thee; that is, either the tree ſhall deny that it ever was planted in ſuch a place, or rather, the place ſhall deny that the tree ever was planted there; the ſenſe is, that it ſhall be ſo utterly deſtroyed, that neither root nor branch ſhall be left, nor any thing to ſhew that it ever grew there; its place ſhall know it no more, ſee ch. vii. 10. and xx. 9. or God ſhall deny the hypocrite, and ſay he never ſaw him nor knew him; he never belonged to him, nor was under his care; he never looked upon him with a look of love, grace, and mercy; he never had any delight and pleaſure in him, nor regarded him as one of his; he was no tree of his planting, watering, and keeping, ſee Matt. vii. 23. this ſeems moſt difficult to accommodate to a good man, and thoſe who carry it that way ſeem to be moſt puzzled with this; ſome render it, ſhall he be ſwallowed; or, ſhall any one ſwallow him up[p]; deſtroy, or root him out of his place? none ſhall: the root of the righteous cannot be moved, nor they from that; not from the everlaſting love of God, in which they are rooted, nor from Chriſt, in whom they are fixed: others underſtand this of the digging up of a tree, and tranſplanting it to another place, where it grows as well, or better; and ſo the people of God, though they have many ſtripping providences, and are removed from place to place, and from one condition to to another, ſo that their former ſtate and place know them no more; yet all things work together for their good.

℣. 19. Behold, this is the joy of his way, &c.] Of the ſtate and condition of the hypocrite, who, whilſt he is in outward proſperity, exults and rejoices, but his joy is but ſhort, it is but for a moment, ch xx. 5. and this is what it comes to at laſt, and iſſues in, even entire deſtruction from his place; which, becauſe it may ſeem ſtrange and wonderful, and is worthy of notice and conſideration, as well as to expreſs a certainty of it, the word behold is prefixed; though this alſo is underſtood by ſome, of good men who have much ſpiritual joy in their preſent ſtate and condition, be it what it will; they have joy and peace in believing, even joy unſpeakable, and full of glory; they have joy in the Lord, and in his ways in which they walk, when they have trouble in the world; they rejoice and even glory in tribulation, and are chearful be they where they will, though removed from their native place and country; and eſpecially this will be their caſe, when they are tranſplanted from earth to heaven, the better and heavenly country: and out of the earth ſhall others grow; in their room and ſtead; where the tall, flouriſhing tree once ſtood, but now utterly deſtroyed, other trees ſhould grow; ſignifying, either the children of the hypocrites and wicked men, that ſhould ſpring up in their place and imitate them, and come to the ſame end; or rather, ſuch as were ſtrangers to them, that ſhould inherit their ſubſtance and eſtates; and it may be good men that ſhould ſucceed them, and come into the poſſeſſion of all their wealth, even ſuch as were before in mean circumſtances, and ſo may be ſaid to come out of the earth: it may be rendered, out of another duſt or earth ſhall they grow[q]; ſignifying, that the wicked ſhould be utterly deſtroyed, they and theirs; and that ſuch as were of another family, and as it were of another earth and country, ſhould ſtand in their place; ſee ch. xxvii. 16, 17. this may be interpreted of good men, who, though they die, others are raiſed up in their ſtead; God will have a ſeed to ſerve him, as long as the ſun and moon endure; tho' they are forced to fly from their native place, being perſecuted to ſtrange cities, or removed into the heavenly regions, yet God raiſes up others to fill up their places, and oftentimes out of other families, even of the ungodly, to ſupport his cauſe and intereſt; and underſtanding the whole of truly righteous perſons, ſeems beſt to connect the ſenſe with the following words.

℣. 20. Behold, God will not caſt away a perfect man, &c.] A ſincere, upright, good man; one that is truly gracious; who, though he is not perfect in himſelf, yet in Chriſt; and though not with reſpect to ſanctification, which is as yet imperfect in him, yet with reſpect to juſtification, being perfectly juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and all his ſins pardoned for his ſake: ſuch an one God will never caſt away; not out of his ſight, being engraven on the palms of his hands, nor out of his heart's love; or will not loath[r] him, as the Targum, or reject him with abhorrence and contempt; he will not caſt him out of his covenant, which is ordered in all things and ſure; nor out of the hands of his Son, where he has put him, and from whence none can pluck; nor out of his family, where the ſon abides for ever; or ſo as to periſh eternally, this would be contrary to his love, to his fore-knowledge, and to his covenant; ſo far is he from it, that he has the greateſt regard for ſuch, delights in them, admits them to nearneſs to himſelf, ſets them as a ſeal on his heart, keeps them as the apple of his eye, and preſerves them ſafe to his kingdom and glory: neither will he help the evil doers; meaning, not every one that does evil, or ſins, but ſuch who live in ſin, make a trade of ſinning, are frequent and conſtant in the commiſſion of it; ſuch God will not help, or take by the hand[s], in order to deliver from evil, as Gerſom obſerves; to help them out of miſchief and trouble their ſins have brought upon them; or to ſtrengthen them, ſupport, and uphold them in their preſent circumſtances; and much leſs, ſo as to admit them to fellowſhip and communion with him: theſe words, with what follow, are Bildad's concluſion upon the ſayings and ſentiments of the antients, which may be ſuppoſed, and are thought by ſome, to end at the preceding verſe.

℣. 21. Till he fill thy mouth with laughing, and thy lips with rejoicing.] Directing himſelf to Job; and ſuggeſting, that if he was a perfect, ſincere, and upright man, God would not caſt him away utterly, but help him out of his preſent circumſtances, and reſtore him to proſperity; and not leave him, until he had filled his heart with ſo much joy, that his mouth and lips being alſo full of it, ſhould break forth in ſtrong expreſſions of it, and in the moſt exulting ſtrains, as if it was a time of jubilee with him; ſee Pſ. cxxvi. 2. but Bildad tacitly inſinuates that Job was not a perfect and good man, but an evil-doer, whom God had caſt away and would not help; and this he concluded from the diſtreſſed circumſtances he was now in; which was no rule of judgment, and a very unfair way of reaſoning, ſince love and hatred are not to be known by outward proſperity and adverſity, Eccl. ix. 1. Bar Tzemach interprets laughing as at his own goodneſs, and rejoicing as at the evil of the wicked.

℣. 22. They that hate thee ſhall be clothed with ſhame, &c.] The Chaldeans and Sabeans, who had plundered him of his ſubſtance, when they ſhould ſee him reſtored to his former proſperity, beyond all hope and expectation, and themſelves liable to his reſentment, and under the diſpleaſure of providence: the phraſe denotes utter confuſion, and ſuch as is viſible as the cloaths upon a man's back; ſee Pſ. cxxxii. 18. and the dwelling-place of the wicked ſhall come to nought; or, ſhall not be[t]; ſhall be no more; be utterly deſtroyed, and no more built up again; even ſuch dwelling-places they fancied would continue for ever, and perpetuate their names to the lateſt poſterity; but the curſe of God being in them, and upon them, they come to nothing, and are no more: thus ends Bildad's ſpeech; Job's anſwer to it follows.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

THIS and the following chapter contain Job's anſwer to Bildad, and in this he aſſerts the ſtrict juſtice of God; which is ſuch, that no man can be juſt in his ſight, not being able to anſwer to one charge, or for one ſin, of a thouſand he is guilty of, ℣. 1—3. and that ſuch are his wiſdom and power, that the moſt daring man cannot expect to ſucceed in an oppoſition to him, ℣. 4. inſtances are given of his power in the works of nature and providence, ℣. 5—10. notice is taken of the imperceptibleneſs of his actions and motions, and of his ſovereignty in all his ways, ℣. 11, 12. and of his fierce wrath and anger, which is ſuch as obliges the proudeſt of men to ſtoop under him; and therefore Job choſe not to contend in a judicial way with him, but in a ſuppliant manner would intreat him, ſince his hand was ſo heavy upon him, ℣. 13—21. he affirms, in direct oppoſition to Bildad and his friends, and inſiſts upon it, that God afflicts both the righteous and the wicked; yea, gives the earth to the latter when he ſlays the former, ℣. 22—24. he then obſerves the ſhortneſs of his days, and complains of his heavy afflictions, ℣. 25—28. and concludes, that it was in vain for him to expect his cauſe to be heard before God, there being no daysman between them; and wiſhes that the dread of the divine majeſty might be taken from him, and then he would freely and without fear ſpeak unto him, ℣. 29—35.

℣. 1. Then Job anſwered and ſaid,] Without taking notice of Bildad's harſh expreſſions and ſevere cenſures, or his unfriendlineſs to him; he enters directly into the argument, grants ſome things, confutes others, and defends himſelf and his conduct.

℣. 2. I know it is ſo of a truth, &c.] That is, that God is juſt, and does not pervert juſtice and judgment, as Bildad had obſerved, ch. viii. 3. Job was a man of great natural parts and capacity; he had a large ſhare of knowledge of things, natural, civil, and moral; and he was a good man, in whom the true light of grace ſhined; and being enlightened by the ſpirit of wiſdom and revelation, in the knowledge of divine things, he knew much of God, of his being and perfections, and of the methods of his grace, eſpecially in the juſtification of men, as appears by various paſſages in this chapter; he knew that God was juſt and holy in all his ways and works, whether of providence or grace; and this he kept in ſight amidſt all his afflictions, and was ready to acknowledge it: he knew this of a truth; that is, moſt certainly; for there are ſome truths that are ſo plain and evident that a man may be aſſured of, and this was ſuch an one with Job; he had no need to be inſtructed in this article; he was as knowing in this point, as well as in others, as Bildad or any of his friends; nor did he need to be ſent to the ancients to enquire of them, or to prepare himſelf for the ſearch of the fathers, in order to acquire the knowledge of this, to which Bildad had adviſed: yet, though this was ſo clear a point, about which there was no room for farther conteſt; but then the matter is, how ſhould man be juſt with God? if not angels, if not man in his beſt eſtate, in which he was vanity when compared with God; then much leſs frail, feeble, mortal, ſinful men, even the beſt of men, conſidered in themſelves, and with reſpect to their own righteouſneſs: for, to be juſt, is not to be ſo through an infuſion of righteouſneſs and holineſs into men, which in the beſt of men is their ſanctification and not their juſtification; but this is a law-term, and ſtands oppoſed to condemnation, and ſignifies a man's being adjudged and pronounced righteous in a judiciary way; ſo a man cannot be adjudged, reckoned, or accounted by God upon the foot of works of righteouſneſs done by him; ſince his beſt works are imperfect, not anſwerable to the law, but very defective, and ſo not juſtifying; are oppoſite to the grace of God, by which, in an evangelic ſenſe, men are juſtified; theſe would encourage boaſting, which is excluded in God's way of juſtifying ſinners; and could juſtification be by them, the death of Chriſt would be in vain, and there would have been no need of him and his juſtifying righteouſneſs: eſpecially, it is a certain thing, that a man can never be juſt, or juſtified with God, in ſuch a way, or through any righteouſneſs wrought out by him; that is, either, he is not and cannot be juſt in compariſon of God; for, if the inhabitants of the heavens are not pure in his ſight, the holy angels; and if man, at his beſt eſtate, was altogether vanity when compared with him, what muſt ſinful mortals be? or not be juſt at his bar; ſhould he mark their iniquities, enter into judgment with them, or an action againſt them, ſummon them before him to anſwer to charges he has to exhibit; they could not ſtand before him, or go off acquitted or diſcharged: or in his account; for his judgment is according to truth; he can never reckon that a perfect righteouſneſs which is an imperfect one: or in his ſight; for, though men may be juſt in compariſon of others, or at an human bar, in an human court of judicature, and in the account of men, and in their ſight, to whom they may appear outwardly righteous, as well as in their own ſight; yet not in the ſight of God, who ſees all things, the heart and all in it, every action, and the ſpring of it; ſee Pſ. cxliii. 2. Rom. iii. 20. in this ſenſe, a man can only be juſt with God thro' the imputation of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, accounting that to him, putting it upon him, and cloathing him with it, and ſo reckoning and pronouncing him righteous through it; and which is entirely conſiſtent with the juſtice of God, ſince by it the law is fulfilled, magnified, and made honourable, and juſtice ſatisfied; ſo that God is juſt, whilſt he is the juſtifier of him that believes in Jeſus, Rom. iii. 26.

℣. 3. If he will contend with him, &c.] If God will contend with man, ſo Sephorno; enter into a controverſy with him, litigate and diſpute the point in law, whether he is juſt or no, man cannot anſwer to the allegations he will produce; or if man ſhould contend with God, a potſherd ſtrive with its maker, to what purpoſe would it be? he could never avail himſelf by ſuch a procedure; the match is unequal, there is no ſtriving or contending with God in a judicial way: he cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand; which ſome underſtand, that God will not anſwer men; he will not vouchſafe to give an anſwer to ſuch that plead with him, or talk with him of his judgments in providence, or pretend to vindicate themſelves, their ways, and their works, before him; but this ſenſe ſeems contrary to Jer. xii. 1, 5.

Ezek. xviii. 25. but the meaning is, that man cannot answer God; either not one man out of a thousand, that is, none at all; unless, by one of a thousand, is meant the interpreter, one among a thousand, even the Messiah, the chiefest among ten thousand; the one man of a thousand, Solomon found upon search; see Job xxxiii. 23. Cant. v. 10. Eccl. vii. 28. he indeed has made himself responsible for his people, as their surety, and was able to answer for them; and he has answered for them, and made satisfaction for their sins; it was exacted, or required, that is, a full payment of their debts, or a plenary Satisfaction for their sins, and he answered; according to Is. liii. 7. but rather the sense is, that a man cannot answer, either one time of a thousand [u], or one argument to one article exhibited, or to one objection or charge of a thousand brought against him by the law or justice of God; that is, for one sin of a thousand he has committed; so Mr. Broughton renders it, to one thing of a thousand [w]; this suggests that the sins of men are numerous; their debts are many, they are more than ten thousand talents, which they are not able to answer to, or pay off, no not one of them; their iniquities are more than the hairs of their head, they cannot be understood or reckoned: and now a man cannot answer for one of a thousand, or the millions of sins he is guilty of; he cannot deny them, he cannot excuse them, he cannot make satisfaction for any one of them; they are committed against an infinite Being, and require an infinite satisfaction, which man cannot give; they are violations of a law, and injuries to divine justice, that no man is able to atone for; whatever obedience he is capable of, or does perform, God has a prior right unto it, and therefore can never answer for former transgressions; this being the case, sinful man cannot be just with God upon the foot of his works, which is the thing this observation is made to illustrate: man's obedience is so short, and God's commandment or law so very broad, that these two can never be brought to meet, agree together, or answer to one another; and therefore it may be strongly concluded that a man is justified, if ever he is justified at all in the sight of God, by faith in Christ and his righteousness, without the deeds of the law, Rom. iii. 28.

v. 4. He is wise in heart, &c.] Originally, essentially, truly, really, and perfectly so; he is the only, and the allwise God; his understanding is infinite; he is able to traverse all the schemes of men, in things civil or religious, and disappoint all their devices; for though there be ever so many of them, or be ever so deeply laid, the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand; for there is no wisdom, understanding, or counsel against him; and therefore it is in vain to contend with him: he is so wise and knowing, that he sees and knows all that is in man, or is done by him, whether in public or in private; there is not a thought in his heart, nor a word on his tongue, nor an action in his life and conversation, but what he is thoroughly acquainted with; and every one of these he will bring into judgment: how therefore is it possible that sinful men should be just in the sight of such a wise and holy Being, upon the score of his own righteousness? and mighty in strength; he is the most mighty; he is the Almighty; he has a mighty arm and strong hand; and unless a man had a strong arm like him, his own right hand can never save him, or his own righteousness justify him; wherefore, to what purpose is it for a feeble man to contend and strive with him? and since he is not a man, as he is, how should they come together in judgment? and what a vain thing must it be to set a time for it, since, if we speak of strength, lo he is strong? see v. 19, 32. and ch. xl. 9—14. who hath hardened himself against him, and hath prospered? either by behaving proudly and insolently to him, as Pharaoh, Sennacherib, and others, by speaking hard words against him, as the Jews in the times of Malachi; and such hard speeches ungodly sinners utter against God, Christ, his gospel, ordinances, people, ways, and worship, of which they will be convinced, and for which they will be condemned at the last judgment; and by bold and daring acts of sin, running upon the thick bosses of his buckler, giving themselves up to commit all uncleanness with greediness, and making a covenant with hell and an agreement with death, and so think themselves safe and secure at all events; but such never prospered and succeeded as they promised themselves, but came to ruin and destruction: or had peace [x], or found quietness, as Mr. Broughton: there is no peace to wicked men, true, solid peace, either here or hereafter; when they cry peace, or promise themselves much of it, destruction comes; and if God sets home the guilt of sin upon their consciences, the load of it is intolerable; it sinks them into despair, and what then will be the worm that dieth not?

v. 5. Which removeth the mountains, &c.] This and what follow are instances of the power of God, and are full proofs of his being mighty in strength; and may be understood, either literally, not only of what God is able to do if he will, but of what he has done; and history [y] furnishes us with instances of mountains being removed from one place to another; and Scheuchzer [z] makes mention of a village in Helvetia, called Plurium, which, in 1618, was covered with the sudden fall of a mountain, and swallowed up in the earth, with 1800 inhabitants, and not the least trace of it to be seen any more; and in the sacred scriptures is a prediction of the mount of Olives being removed from its place, one half to the north and the other to the south, Zech. xiv. 4. and Josephus [a] gives a relation much like it, as in fact; besides, Job may have respect to what had been done in his times, or before them, and particularly at the universal deluge, which covered the tops of the highest mountains and hills, and very probably washed away some from their places: or else it may be understood proverbially, of the Lord's doing things marvellous and surprising, and which are impossible and impracticable with men; see Matt. xvii. 20. 1 Cor. xiii. 2. or rather figuratively, of kingdoms and mighty kings, as the Targum, comparable to mountains for their height and strength, who yet are removed by God at his pleasure; see Zech. iv. 7. Rev. xvi. 20. and they know not; when they are removed, and how it is done; it is imperceptible; either the mountains are not sensible of it, or the inhabitants of the mountains, as Bar Tzemach; or men, the common sort of men, the multitude, as Gersom: R. Saadiah Gaon interprets interprets it of removing the men of the mountains, and they know it not: which overturneth them in his anger; for the ſins of men, which was the caſe of the old world: Mr. Broughton renders it, that men cannot mark how he hath removed them out of their place in his anger.

℣. 6. Which ſhaketh the earth out of her place, &c.] Can do it, and will do it at the laſt day, when it ſhall be utterly broken down, clean diſſolved, and reel to and fro like a drunkard, and be removed as a cottage, and which John in a viſion ſaw flee away from the preſence of him that ſat upon the throne, Iſ. xxiv. 19, 20. Rev. xx, 11. for this cannot be underſtood of earthquakes in common, which are only partial, and don't remove the earth out of its place, only ſhake ſome parts of it; and this may alſo refer to the time of the flood, when the earth received ſome change and alteration in its ſituation, as Mr. Burnet in his Theory of the Earth obſerves; and the apoſtle Peter ſuggeſts ſomething of this kind, when he diſtinguiſhes the preſent earth from the former, which he ſays ſtood out of the water and in it, but the preſent earth not ſo, but is reſerved for fire, 2 Pet. iii. 5, 6, 7. and the pillars thereof tremble; the center or lower parts of it, ſee Pſ. lxxv. 3.

℣. 7. Which commandeth the ſun, and it riſeth not, &c.] Either he could do it if he would, by a word ſpeaking, as he ordered it to ſtand ſtill in the times of Joſhua, and cauſed the ſhadow to return ten degrees it had gone back in the dial of Ahaz, in the times of Hezekiah; or elſe the ſenſe is, it riſes not at any other time and place but when and where he commands it; or he commands it not to riſe in the ſame place at one time of the year as at another, and it riſes not; or this may be underſtood of eclipſes, or of its being covered with clouds in tempeſtuous weather for a conſiderable time together, when it ſeems as if it was not riſen: ſome think this reſpects the three days darkneſs in Egypt, when the Iſraelites were there, which was a little before, or about the time of Job; or rather, it refers to the general flood, in the times of Noah, when it rained forty days and forty nights, during which time the ſun appeared not, and ſo ſeemed as if it was not riſen; ſee Amos, viii. 9. Herodotus[b] relates, from the memoirs of the Egyptians, that the ſun roſe four times out of its uſual courſe; twice it roſe where it now ſets, and twice it ſet where it now riſes: and ſealeth up the ſtars; either by the light of the ſun in the day-time, which hides them that they are not viſible, or by dark clouds and tempeſtuous weather in the night; ſuch a ſeaſon as that was in which the apoſtle Paul and the mariners with him were, when neither ſun nor ſtars appeared for many days, Acts xxvii. 20. and ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, and "ſealeth up the ſtars with clouds;" this may alſo refer to the time of the flood, during the rain of forty days and nights, Gen. vii. 4—12. or to the annual motion of the ſun through the Ecliptic, which makes the point of the ſun's riſing and ſetting vary, and is the reaſon why ſome ſtars appear in ſummer and are ſealed up in winter, and others that are ſeen in winter are not viſible in ſummer; and ſo Cocceius interprets it.

℣. 8. Which alone ſpreadeth out the heavens, &c.] The expanſe, or what we commonly tranſlate firmament; but has its name in the Hebrew language, from its being expanded, ſpread, and ſtretched out, over the earth and all around it; and ſeems chiefly to deſign the æther or atmoſphere, which is a fine, thin matter and ſubſtance ſpread around us, and which is ſometimes ſpread with clouds; this is ſaid to be ſtretched out like a curtain and a tent to dwell in, tents being made of curtains ſpread out, Iſ. xl. 21. and the alluſion may be to a military tent, the pavilion of a general of an army, as Pineda obſerves, from whence Jehovah plays his artillery upon his enemies, thunder, lightening, hailſtones, and coals of fire; ſee Pſ. xviii. 11—14. this reſpects not ſo much the firſt creation, or ſpreading of the air or the heavens, as the continuance thereof; God continues to ſpread them, or to keep them ſpread, that they may not be rolled up as a ſcroll, or folded up as a garment, as they will be, Heb. i. 12. and this he does alone, without the help of any creature, angels or men; any piece of tapeſtry or carpet, that is large, is not eaſily ſpread alone; but what power muſt the vaſt expanſe of the heavens require, to be ſpread alone and continued ſo? nothing leſs than infinite; ſee Iſ. xliv. 24. ſome render it which boweth the heavens[c], as the ſame word is rendered in Pſ. xviii. 9. which he does when he fills them with clouds, ſo that they ſeem to hang low, and to be inclined towards the earth: and treadeth upon the waves of the ſea[d]; which he did at the firſt creation, when the waters that covered the face of the earth were, by his order, collected into one place, and there ſhut up, and reſtrained from overflowing the earth; and which reſtraint, as it is an act of power over them, is deſigned by treading upon them, and a continued act may be the rather meant here; ſee Gen. i. 8, 9. Job xxxviii. 10, 11. Jer. v. 22. and when the waves of it are lifted up as high as they ſometimes are, by ſtrong and ſtormy winds, the Lord on high is mightier than they, he treads upon them and repreſſes them; he rules their raging, ſtills their noiſe, and makes them ſmooth, calm, and quiet, Pſ. lxv. 7. and lxxxix. 9. and xciii. 3, 4. this none but God can do: the Egyptian hieroglyphic of doing a thing impoſſible, was a man's walking upon water[e]; the heathens choſe not to deſcribe even their god of the ſea, Neptune, by walking on it, as being too great for him, but by ſwimming[f]; of Chriſt's walking upon the ſea, ſee Matt. xiv. 25. it may be rendered, the high places of the ſea; the waves of it, when mounted to a great height by the wind; ſo Mr. Broughton, the high waves of the ſea, ſee Pſ. cvii. 25, 26. there is a copy, as the leſſer Maſorah obſerves, which reads, upon the high places of the cloud[g], ſee Iſ. xiv. 14. and Gerſom interprets theſe high places, of the heavens, and of God's giving rain from thence.

℣. 9. Which maketh Arcturus, &c.] By which is meant not a ſingle ſtar, but a collection of ſtars, as Bar Tzemach and Ben Melech, a conſtellation; hence we read of Arcturus and his ſons, ch. xxxviii. 32. Aben Ezra underſtands it of the ſeven ſtars, but theſe are thought to be meant by the Pleiades, after mentioned; this conſtellation is about the Arctic or northern pole, in the tail of the bear, appears in the beginning of September, and brings ſtormy weather, when winter is at hand[h]: Orion, and Pleiades; the former of theſe alſo is not a ſingle ſtar, but a conſtellation; by the help of a teleſcope no leſs than 200 are numbered, and in Hebrew brew it is called Ceſil; hence the month Ciſleu has its name, which anſwers to part of November and part of December, at which time this conſtellation is ſeen, and is attended with ſtormy weather; hence Virgil calls it Nimboſus Orion[i]: and the latter are what we call the Seven Stars, ſometimes by writers called Vergiliæ, becauſe they appear in the ſpring; and have their name of Pleiades from ſailing, becauſe at this time of year mariners go out with their ſhips; though ſome ſay this conſtellation is not favourable to them, cauſing rains and tempeſts[k]; theſe three divide the whole year: and the chambers of the ſouth; the ſtars in the ſouthern hemiſphere, about the Antarctic, or ſouthern pole; and called chambers, as Aben Ezra obſerves, becauſe hidden, and are not ſeen by thoſe in the other hemiſphere, as if they were in a chamber: now the making of theſe is rightly aſcribed to God, who made all the ſtars, Gen. i. 16. though this may rather regard the continuance of them in their being, who calls them by name, brings out their hoſt by number, directs their courſe, keeps them in their orbs, and preſerves their influence.

℣. 10. Which doth great things paſt finding out, &c.] In heaven and earth; great as to quantity and quality, not to be thoroughly ſearched out ſo as to tell their numbers, nor explain and expreſs the nature of them to the full; even what he has done, and does in creation, providence and grace: yea, and wonders without number; ſuch as are amazing to men, who cannot account for them, and ſo many, that they cannot number them. The ſame things are ſaid by Eliphaz, ch. v. 9. where ſee the note; and which Job here repeats to ſhew, that he agreed with him, and was ready to own what was truth, whenever expreſſed by him or his friends, and eſpecially ſuch as made for the glory of the divine Being.

℣. 11. Lo, he goeth by me, and I ſee him not, &c.] This is expreſſive of the inviſibility of God; for though the angels in heaven always behold his face, and men in the works of creation, may ſee his eternal power and Godhead, and other perfections of it diſplayed therein; and ſaints by faith have a comfortable and delightful view of him, of his countenance, his love, grace and mercy in his word and ordinances, and eſpecially in the face and perſon of Chriſt, the image of the inviſible God, and will in heaven moſt clearly ſee him as he is, in the greater diſplay of his glory, and his grace; yet his eſſence is inviſible, not only not to be ſeen with corporeal eyes, but not to be comprehended in the mind: he paſſeth on alſo, but I perceive him not; this going and paſſing on, as aſcribed to God, muſt be underſtood in conſiſtence with his omnipreſence; he cannot be thought to move from place to place who is every where, who fills heaven and earth with his preſence, and there is no going from it: local motion cannot be ſaid of him; but this reſpects the operations of his providence; he is continually working all around us, by ſupporting us in being, and ſupplying us with what we want, and ſo is near us, and yet we ſee him not: Job experienced the bounties of his providence, as well as the bleſſings of his grace in the time of his proſperity, and now he felt the weight of his afflicting hand upon him; but yet as to his eſſence, he could not ſee him; he was ſenſible that he was nigh him, and had a concern in all that befel him, but he could neither ſee nor comprehend him, nor account for his dealings with him: he had paſſed by him in his ſtate of nature, and had looked graciouſly on him, and had ſaid unto him live; he had paſſed on from him, and hid his face ſo that he could not ſee him, nor find him backward nor forward, on the right-hand, nor on the left, where he uſed to work, ſee ch. xxiii. 3, 8, 9.

℣. 12. Behold, he taketh away, &c.] There are ſome things God never takes away from his people; he never takes away his love from them, he always reſts in that towards them, let them be in what condition they will; he never takes away his grace from them, when once beſtowed on them, or wrought in them; he never takes away his ſpecial gifts of grace, particularly the unſpeakable gift of his ſon Chriſt Jeſus, which is that good part when choſen, which ſhall not be taken away; nor any of the ſpiritual bleſſings wherewith they are bleſſed in Chriſt; theſe are irreverſible and irrevocable: but temporal bleſſings he takes away at pleaſure; ſo he had taken away the children, the ſervants of Job, his ſubſtance, wealth, and riches, and alſo his bodily health, to which he may have a particular reſpect; yea, when it pleaſes him, he takes a man out of the world, as the Targum and Gerſom interpret it: who can hinder him? he does what he pleaſes in heaven and earth; his will is irreſiſtible, his power is uncontroulable; there is no turning his mind, nor ſtaying his hand, nor turning it back; when he works, none can let or hinder. Mr. Broughton tranſlates it, who ſhall make him reſtore[l]? if a man takes away what he has no right to, he may be obliged by law to reſtore it; but whatever God takes away he has a right unto, be it relations and friends, health or wealth; if he pleaſes he can reſtore, and does; and as he did to Job, to whom he after gave twice as much as he had before; but then he is not obliged to do it, none can force him to it: who will ſay unto him, what doſt thou? not one that knows what God is, or that knows himſelf a creature of his; no perſon will chuſe or dare to aſk what God does, or why he does this and not another thing, or why this in the manner he does it; for he gives no account of his matters to the ſons of men, nor is he obliged to it, and it would be inſolent in them to require it, ſee ch. xxxiii. 13. Dan. iv. 35. this expreſſes his ſovereignty.

℣. 13. If God will not withdraw his anger, &c.] Or God will not withdraw his anger[m]; he is angry, or at leaſt ſeems to be angry with his own people, in their apprehenſion, when he afflicts them and hides his face from them, or does not immediately appear to their relief and aſſiſtance; but this does not always laſt, he does not retain or keep anger for ever; but ſhews great mercies to them, and with everlaſting kindneſs has mercy on them, by diſcovering his love to them, applying his pardoning grace and mercy, and comforting them with the conſolations of his Spirit; but then he is angry with the wicked every day, for their continual tranſgreſſions; and he never withdraws his anger from them, neither here nor hereafter, but puniſhes them with everlaſting deſtruction, and caſts them into everlaſting fire, to which his wrath and anger are compared: the conſequence of which is, the proud proud helpers do ſtoop under him; or the helpers of pride[n], or helpers of proud men; proud, wicked and ungodly men, who combine together and help one another againſt God, his people, cauſe and intereſt; men of power, rule and government, as Aben Ezra explains it; civil magiſtrates, men in authority, who inſtead of being terrors to evil doers, encourage them, and help them forward in their wickedneſs; but though both thoſe that help, and thoſe that are holpen, may continue for a while, and be ſupported, yet they ſhall ſooner or later fall under the mighty hand of God, his power and wrath, and be cruſhed by it. Some regard may be had either to the giants, the men of the old world, who filled the earth with violence, and were ſwept away with the flood; or rather to the builders of Babel, who helped one another to build a tower to make them a name, and ſecure themſelves, and in oppoſition to God; but he being angry with them, made them deſiſt, and they bowed under him. Some render it, the helpers of Rahab; that is, of Egypt[o], Rahab being a name of Egypt, Pſ. lxxxvii 4. Iſ. li. 9. The devils are meant, whoſe ſin was pride, and by which they fell, and which they have endeavoured to promote and cheriſh among men; but theſe proud ſpirits are caſt out of heaven and into hell, where they are reſerved in chains of darkneſs to the great judgment; and are obliged, whether they will or no, to ſtoop to the Lord, and even to the Son of God in human nature, which their proud ſtomachs cannot well bear; but are forced to it, the anger of God lying upon them, and his wrath, which will never be withdrawn from them.

℣. 14. How much leſs ſhall I anſwer him, &c.] Who is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength, and has done and does the many things before related; who is inviſible, paſſes by, and onwards inſenſibly; ſo that there is no knowing where to ſpeak to him, or how to guard againſt him, ſince he can come on on every ſide, at an unawares, and unſeen; and who is a ſovereign Being, who can do, and does, whatever he pleaſes; and therefore there is no ſuch thing as diſputing any point with him, or calling him to an account for any thing done by him: and if the great men of the earth, proud and haughty tyrants, and thoſe prouder ſpirits, if poſſible, the infernal principalities and powers, are obliged to bend and ſtoop to him; how ſhould ſuch a poor, weak, feeble creature as Job was, enter the liſts with him, contend with God, and argue with him about his diſpenſations, or anſwer to any argument, objection, charge or article exhibited againſt him; here Job ſpeaks humbly and meanly of himſelf, as he in the whole context before ſpeaks highly of God, between whom there was no compariſon: and chuſe out my words to reaſon with him? ſuggeſting, that ſhould he pick out words the moſt fit and proper to be uſed, and put them together in the moſt exact order, and which had the greateſt force of perſuaſion and ſtrength of reaſoning in them, yet they would be of no avail with God; theſe could have no influence upon him to turn his mind, or alter either his purpoſes or his providences; and therefore concluded it was beſt for him to be ſilent and make no reply; but if he ſaid any thing, to do it in a ſupplicating way, as follows.

℣. 15. Whom, though I were righteous, yet would I not anſwer, &c.] This is not to be underſtood of the righteouſneſs of his cauſe, that Job made no ſuppoſition of, but ſtrongly aſſerted and determined to hold it faſt as long as he lived; nor of his evangelic righteouſneſs, the righteouſneſs of faith he was acquainted with, even the righteouſneſs of his living Redeemer, by which he knew he was, and ſhould be juſtified; and by which righteouſneſs he could, and did anſwer God as every believer may, who making mention of this righteouſneſs, and of this only, ſuch an one may plead the righteouſneſs of Chriſt with God as his juſtifying one, and hold it up againſt all charges brought againſt him; yea, by preſenting this to God by faith, he anſwers all the demands of the law of God, both with reſpect to the precepts and penalty of it, it being magnified and made honourable hereby, and all that the juſtice of God can require, and with which it is entirely ſatisfied; yea, this righteouſneſs will anſwer to God for him in a time to come, in the laſt judgment: but Job ſpeaks of his own legal and civil righteouſneſs, as a good man, and a good magiſtrate; as the latter, he put on righteouſneſs, and it clothed him; as the former, having grace, the root of the matter in him, as he calls it, it taught him to live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly; he was a man that feared God, and eſchewed evil; and his ſenſe is, that though he ſhould ſo well behave in every reſpect, and ſo order his converſation aright before men, that they could have nothing to lay to his charge, yet he would not bring ſuch a righteouſneſs before God, and pretend to anſwer him with it; for he knew that ſuch a righteouſneſs is no righteouſneſs in the ſight of God, in the eye of his law, and in the account of divine juſtice, being not only imperfect but impure; not only rags, but filthy ones, attended with many ſins, as well as imperfection; wherefore no good man will put his cauſe before God on ſuch an iſſue, however he may before men; nay, Job ſeems to carry this point yet farther, that though he had a ſinleſs righteouſneſs of his own, and were as righteous as Adam before his fall, or the holy angels in heaven, yet he would not inſiſt upon ſuch a righteouſneſs before God, or pretend to anſwer him with it; for he knew that the inhabitants of the heavens, and ſo man in his paradiſe on earth, in his beſt eſtate, were not pure in his ſight, but chargeable with folly and imperfection, in compariſon of him: and when he ſays he could not anſwer him, his meaning is not, that he would not anſwer to a queſtion that was aſked him, but that he would not anſwer him in a judicial way; that if he ſhould prefer a bill againſt him, he would not put in an anſwer to it, tho' he knew nothing by himſelf, and could not charge himſelf with any thing wrong in thought, word, or deed; yet if God charged him with it, he would not reply againſt him, he would not contradict him, he would not anſwer again, or litigate the point with him, but give it up; becauſe, though he might not know he had done any thing amiſs, or there was imperfection in him, yet God who was greater than his heart, and knows all things, is the heart-ſearching and rein-trying God, he knew better than he did, and therefore was determined to ſubmit to him, and be ſet down by him what he was: but I would make ſupplication to my judge; that is, to God the judge of the whole earth; and who is particularly the judge of his own people, their patron and defender, fender, their judge and law-giver, who will ſave them; for though he is a juſt God, and a righteous judge, yet a ſaviour; and it is one of the privileges of his people, that they can come to him, not only as the God of all grace, and as their God and Father in Chriſt, but to him as to God the judge of all, Heb. xii. 23. and lay their caſe before him, and intreat his protection; and this Job choſe to do rather than contend with him; for by ſupplication, prayer is meant, as it frequently is in both Teſtaments; and it ſignifies ſuch prayer as conſiſts of petitions for grace and mercy, or for things to be beſtowed in a way of grace and mercy; not according to merit, but mercy; not for works of righteouſneſs done, but through the favour and good-will of God; and which prayer is put up in a humble ſupplicant manner, acknowledging a man's unworthineſs, that he is not deſerving of the leaſt of mercies, nor expects any on account of any worth or worthineſs in him, or his ſervices; and in ſuch a way a man prevails more with God, and is moſt likely to ſucceed than by contending with him in a judicial way. Jacob had power with God and prevailed, but it was by weeping and ſupplication, ſee Hoſ. xii. 4. ſo Mr. Broughton reads the words, "I would crave pity of my judge." Some render it, my adverſary [p], the oppoſite party in a court of judicature, whom he would not conteſt with, but ſupplicate, and in the way make up matters with him. Job ſeems reſolved to take ſuch a method Chriſt adviſes to in civil caſes, Matt. v. 24, 25.

℣. 16. If I had called, and he had anſwered me, &c.] Mr. Broughton reads the words, if I cry, will he anſwer me? as if Job had ſome doubt upon his mind, whether God would vouchſafe to anſwer him, though he ſhould make his ſupplication to him, as he propoſed; ſeeing he had ſo ſorely afflicted him, and ſtill continued his hand upon him; or the words may be rendered, though I have called, and he has anſwered [q], in times paſt. Job was a praying perſon, he had often prayed to God in his cloſet, and in his family, for himſelf, and for his children, and for his friends, and he had found God to be a God hearing and anſwering prayer, but ſeems to queſtion whether he would anſwer him now, if he did pray to him: yet would I not believe that he had hearkened unto my voice, or would hearken [r], at this time, and under the preſent circumſtances; or ſhould he, the mercy would be ſo great, that he could hardly believe it; ſo ſometimes through joy men can't believe what they hear and ſee, as the apoſtles, when Chriſt appeared to them after his reſurrection; or as it was with the Jews returned from Babylon, they were like them that dream, they could ſcarcely tell whether their deliverance was a real fact, or whether they only dreamed of it, ſee Luke xxiv. 41. Pſ. cxxvi. 1. ſo Job intimates, that ſhould he pray to God, and be heard and delivered, it would be ſo aſtoniſhing and tranſporting, that at firſt he ſhould not be able to give credit to it; or however he ſhould not believe that it was for his prayers and ſupplications, for any worth and value, virtue and efficacy there was in them, that he was heard; but it muſt be purely for his mercy-ſake, for the ſake of the mediation of Chriſt, and becauſe theſe prayers were the breathings of his own Spirit: or elſe the ſenſe is, that though he had heard and anſwered him formerly, when he prayed in a ſupplicating way, yet if he ſhould contend with him in a judicial way, and inſiſt upon his own righteouſneſs, and preſent his ſupplication to God on that account, he could never expect to be heard; and indeed he could not believe he ſhould be heard on any account, ſo long as his preſent ſufferings laſted; which ſeems to be the ſenſe of what follows, where he gives his reaſons for ſuch belief, or rather unbelief.

℣. 17. For he breaketh me with a tempeſt, &c.] Which riſes ſuddenly, comes powerfully, and carries all before it irreſiſtibly; hereby ſignifying the nature of his preſent ſore afflictions, which came upon him at once, preſſed him down, and utterly deſtroyed him, againſt which there was no ſtanding: perhaps he may have ſome reference to the ſtorm of wind that blew down the houſe, by which his children were deſtroyed. Schultens renders it, a burning tempeſt [s], ſuch as is common in the eaſtern countries, which Thevenot [t] often makes mention of; which kills a man at once, and his fleſh becomes as black as a coal, and comes off of his bones, and is plucked off by the hand that would lift him up; with which a man is broken to pieces indeed, to which Job may allude: and multiplieth my wounds without cauſe; referring, it may be, to the many boils and ulcers upon his body; though it may alſo reſpect the multiplicity of ways in which he had wounded or afflicted him, in his perſon, in his family, and in his ſubſtance, and which he ſays was done without cauſe; not without a cauſe or reaſon in God, who does nothing without one, though it may not be known to men; particularly in afflicting men, it is not without cauſe or reaſon; if he puniſhes men, it is for ſin; if he rebukes and chaſtizes his people, it is for their tranſgreſſions; to bring them to a ſenſe of them, to humble them for them, to bring them off from them, or to prevent them, or purge them away, and to try their graces, wean them from the world, and fit them for himſelf: but Job's afflictions were without any ſuch cauſe intimated by his friends; it was not hypocriſy, nor any notorious ſin or ſins he had been guilty of, and ſecretly lived and indulged himſelf in, as they imagined. Job here ſuggeſts his innocence, which he always inſiſted upon, and refers his afflictions to the ſovereign will of God, and to ſome hidden cauſe in his own breaſt, unknown to himſelf and others: however, ſo long as he dealt with him after this manner, he could not believe his prayers were heard by him.

℣. 18. He will not ſuffer me to take my breath, &c.] Which ſome thinks refers to Job's diſeaſe, which was either an aſthma, or a quinſey in his throat, which occaſioned great difficulty in breathing: I ſhould rather think, the alluſion is to the hot burning winds in thoſe countries before mentioned, which ſometimes blew ſo ſtrongly as almoſt to take away a man's breath; ſo the above traveller [u] reports, that between Suez and Cairo (in Egypt) they had for a day's time and more ſo hot a wind, that they were forced to turn their backs to it to take a little breath. The deſign of Job is to ſhew, that his afflictions were continued, and were without any intervals; they were repeated ſo faſt, and came ſo thick upon him, one after another, that he had no breathing time; the import of the phraſe is the ſame with that in ch. vii. 19. but filleth me with bitter- bitterneſs; to the full, to ſatiety, to loathing, as a man may be with a bitter potion, with wormwood drink, and water or gall, with bitter afflictions comparable to ſuch, whereby Job's life was embittered to him, ſee Jer. ix. 15. Lam. iii. 15, 19.

℣. 19. If I ſpeak of ſtrength, lo, he is ſtrong, &c.] Or think of it, or betake myſelf to that, and propoſe to carry my point by mere force, as ſome men do by dint of power and authority they are poſſeſſed of; alas! there is nothing to be done this way; I am a poor, weak, feeble creature in body, mind and eſtate; I am not able to contend with ſo powerful an antagoniſt on any account, in any way: God is ſtrong, he is the moſt ſtrong [w], as ſome render it; he is mighty, is the almighty; the weakneſs of God is ſtronger than men; there is no diſputing with God upon the foot of ſtrength: and if of judgment, who ſhall ſet me a time to plead? If I think and propoſe to put things upon the foot of juſtice, to have the cauſe between us iſſued in that way, I cannot expect to ſucceed by right, any more than by might; he is ſo ſtrictly juſt and holy, that no righteouſneſs and holineſs of mine can ſtand before him; he is God, and I a man, and therefore not fit to come together in judgment; and he a pure and holy Being, juſt and true, and without iniquity, and I a ſinful polluted creature; and beſides, there is none ſuperior to him, that I can appeal unto, none that can appoint a place, or fix a time for the hearing of the cauſe between us, or that can preſide in judgment and determine the matter in controverſy; nay, there is not one among the creatures that can be a day's man, an arbiter or umpire; yea not one that can be ſo much as employed as council, that can take the cauſe in hand, and plead it, and be a patron for me, and defender of me; ſo that let me take what courſe I will, I am ſure to be non-ſuited, and worſted, ſee Jer. xlix. 19.

℣. 20. If I juſtify myſelf, &c.] Seek for juſtification by his own righteouſneſs, truſt in himſelf that he was righteous, ſay that he was ſo, and pronounce himſelf a righteous man, what would it ſignify? mine own mouth ſhall condemn me; the words of it being ſinful, vain, idle and frothy; and if a man is to be juſtified and condemned by his words, he may be ſure of the latter: indeed, if any man offend not in word, the ſame is a perfect man, James iii. 2. but let a man be as careful as he can, and keep ever ſuch a guard upon his lips, ſuch is the imperfection of human nature, that though a Moſes, he will ſpeak unadviſedly with his lips, at one time or another, and in many things will offend; which would be his condemnation, if there was no other way to ſecure from it; nay, for a ſinful man to juſtify himſelf, or to ſay that he is a righteous man by his own righteouſneſs, and inſiſt upon this before God, if he is tried upon it he muſt be condemned; yea, ſaying he is ſo is a falſhood, abominable to God, and enough to condemn him; and beſides, a man that knows himſelf, as Job did, muſt be conſcious of much ſin within him, however externally righteous he may be before men; ſo that ſhould he ſay he was righteous, his conſcience would ſpeak, or cauſe his mouth to ſpeak and contradict and condemn him: if I ſay, I am perfect, not in an evangelical ſenſe, as he was; but in a legal ſenſe, ſo as to be free from ſin, which no man that is perfect in a goſpel-ſenſe is; as Noah, Jacob, David, and others, who were ſo, yet not without ſin; if therefore a man ſhould aſſert this, he would not ſay that which was right, but what was perverſe, as might be proved: it ſhall alſo prove me perverſe; to be a wicked man; either he, God ſhall prove, or it, his mouth, as in the preceding clauſe; for to ſay this, is to tell a lie, which to do is perverſeneſs, ſee 1 John i. 8.

℣. 21. Though I were perfect, &c.] Really and truly ſo, not conſcious of any ſin in thought, word or deed; this is only a caſe ſuppoſed: yet would I not know my ſoul; I would not own myſelf to be ſo before God; I would not inſiſt upon ſuch perfection in his preſence, as what would juſtify me before him; ſince I am ſenſible the higheſt perfection of a creature is imperfection when compared with him: or the ſenſe may be, ſhould I ſay I were perfect, I ſhould not know my own ſoul; I ſhould plainly appear to be ignorant of myſelf, as all perfectioniſts are; they don't know their own ſouls, the plague of their hearts, the evil of their thoughts, the vanity of their minds; they don't take notice of theſe things, or don't look upon them as ſinful; they know not the nature of ſin, and the exceeding ſinfulneſs of it: I would deſpiſe my life; even if ever ſo innocent, perfect and juſt; his meaning is, that he would not inſiſt upon the continuance of it on that account; he had no ſuch value for it, ſuch a love of life as to contend with God upon the foot of juſtice about it; nor did he think it worth aſking for, ſo mean an opinion had he entertained of it, ſee ch. vii. 16.

℣. 22. This is one thing, &c.] Or one thing there is [x], in the world, as Jarchi adds; or one meaſure, as the Targum, to good and bad men; one event alike to the righteous, and to the wicked, Eccl. ix. 2. ſo that, as others render it, it is all one [y], whether a man is righteous and perfect, or whether he is not, he is equally liable to be afflicted and diſtreſſed: and this is one thing, very ſingular [z], amazing and aſtoniſhing, and very unaccountable; but ſo it is, and which he differed from his three friends about; as to the juſtice of God, he agreed with them in that; yea, he believed he was righteous in whatever he did, and even in this which was ſo ſtrange and ſurprizing, though he could not account for it: and this is uniform, as Mr. Broughton tranſlates it; either God acts uniformly in what he does, treating all men alike, good and bad men; or Job was uniform in his ſentiments, he was all of a piece, ſteady and conſtant, retaining the ſame ſenſe of things, from which he had not departed, nor could he depart: therefore I ſaid it; with the greateſt confidence and aſſurance, becauſe he believed it, and would ſay it again, ſeeing no reaſon at all to alter his judgment; the thing was quite clear to him, of which he had, at leaſt as he thought, unqueſtionable evidence; and the thing he has reſpect to is as follows: he deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked; this is thought by ſome to be a very bad expreſſion, bordering on blaſphemy, and contrary to the nature and perfections of God, and to the methods of his providence, Gen. xviii. 23—25. and that Job ſpeaks in the perſon of one deſtitute of the grace of God: but nothing is more certain than that this was the real ſentiment of his mind, his firm belief, nor could he be perſuaded to the contrary; indeed it may be underſtood in a good ſenſe: by a perfect man, we are to underſtand a truly good man, one that has received the grace of God in truth, and is perfectly juſtified and pardoned thro' the the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and by a wicked man, one that is under the influence of his luſts, is abandoned to them, and never eaſy but whilſt he is ſerving them, which he is continually doing. Now the deſtruction of theſe is not to be interpreted of everlaſting deſtruction; this indeed will be the caſe of wicked men, but not of perfect and good men: God by his grace has made a difference between them in this world, and ſo he will in the next; the one will go into everlaſting puniſhment, the other into everlaſting life, and will never come together in the ſame place or ſtate; nor will the perfect man be deſtroyed at all in ſuch ſenſe; the grace of God within him, and the righteouſneſs of Chriſt upon him, will eternally ſecure him from everlaſting wrath and ruin: but it is meant of temporal deſtruction; ſometimes indeed a remarkable diſtinction is made between the one and the other in a time of general calamity, as Noah, a perfect man, was ſaved, when the world of the ungodly were deſtroyed by water; and Lot, a righteous man, when Sodom and Gomorrah were conſumed by fire; but frequently they fall together in the ſame common diſtreſs; good and bad men, among the Jews were alike carried captive into Babylon, ſignified by Jeremiah's good and bad figs; of good men, Ezekiel, Daniel, Shadrech, Meſhech and Abednego, are inſtances; though indeed it is on different accounts, and with different views, that the one and the other are deſtroyed with a temporal deſtruction, in their perſons, their health, their families, or in their eſtates; ſuch calamities upon good men are not as puuiſhments for their ſins, as on the wicked, but as fatherly chaſtizements, and for the trial of their graces, for their ſpiritual and eternal good, and that they might not be condemned with the world. Job's view in ſaying this is to obſerve, that a man's ſtate Godward is not to be judged of by his outward circumſtances, whether he is a good man or a bad man, ſince they may both be in the ſame afflictions and diſtreſs, and which he oppoſes to the ſentiments and ſayings of Eliphaz and Bildad, ch. iv. 7. and viii. 20.

℣. 23. If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, &c.] Not Satan, as Jarchi and Bar Tzemach; but any ſore calamity which ſurrounds a man, laſhes, cuts and diſtreſſes him, as a whip or ſcourge; ſuch as any of God's ſore judgments, the ſword, famine, peſtilence, or evil beaſts, which ſometimes come ſuddenly, unawares, unthought of, and unexpected; and are ſometimes only chaſtiſements in love, the ſcourgings of a father, though generally in wrath and hot diſpleaſure, and are an over-flowing ſcourge, which carry all before them; and therefore ſome reſtrain it to wicked men, as the Septuagint verſion; and ſome underſtand it as if they were more mildly and gently dealt with, by being ſuddenly and at once ſlain with ſuch a ſcourge, in their perſons, families and ſubſtance, while others have their afflictions protracted, and linger long under them, as in the next clauſe: he will laugh at the trial of of the innocent; not that are free from ſin entirely; for there are none ſuch, no not new-born infants; though they may be comparatively ſo, yet they are not in an abſolute ſenſe, being conceived in ſin and ſhapen in iniquity: beſides, here it means adult perſons, good men, that are truly gracious, ſincere, upright, harmleſs in their lives and converſations, whoſe afflictions are trials of their faith and patience, and other graces; and when God is ſaid to laugh at them, who ſeems to be deſigned here, this muſt be underſtood conſiſtent with his pity to his people, his ſympathy with them under all their afflictions, he not willingly afflicting or grieving the children of men; nor can it be thought that he has them in deriſion and contempt, or laughs at their calamities, or in reality, as he does at wicked men; but that he carries it ſo oftentimes in the diſpenſations of his providence, as if he made no difference between them, but mocked at the one, as well as the other; ſeemingly giving no heed to their cries; not haſtening to their help and deliverance, but lengthening out their troubles for the trial of their graces; and ſo indeed is greatly delighted with the exerciſe of them under them, and with ſeeing them bear them with ſo much patience, courage and greatneſs of mind and ſubmiſſion to his will. Some interpret this of a wicked man laughing at the calamities of the righteous, as the Ammonites and Edomites rejoiced at the deſtruction of the Jews, the church's enemy at her fall, and as the papiſts will at the witneſſes being ſlain; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt; rather the ſcourge itſelf laughs at the trial of the innocent; ſo Schultens.

℣. 24. The earth is given into the hands of the wicked, &c.] Either the wicked one Satan, as Jarchi and Bar Tzemach, who is the God of this world; or ſome wicked tyrant, as Nimrod, or ſome other known by Job in his time, to whom he may have reſpect; or wicked men in general, who for the moſt part have the greateſt ſhare of the earth, and earthly things, and of power, dominion and authority in it; and this they have of God, the powers that be are ordained by him, and therefore to be obeyed; and what any have of the earth, and the fulneſs of it, they have it from him, whoſe it is, and who has a right to diſpoſe of it, and therefore being given by him, they have a proper right unto it; but then it is only the things of this world which are given them; they have their portion here, and that is their all; wherefore as the giving of theſe is no proof of a man's goodneſs, ſo the taking of them away is no evidence of his wickedneſs; love or hatred are not to be known by theſe things; this is Job's ſcope and drift in this and the preceding verſe: he covereth the face of the judges thereof; not Satan who blinds the minds of ſuch that they ſhould not underſtand juſtice, and do it, as the above Jewiſh writers interpret it; nor the wicked man that is poſſeſſed of riches and wealth, power and authority, who by his ſubſtance bribes the judges, and blinds their eyes, or by his power and authority awes them, keeps them from executing true judgment, or diſcourages perſons fit for ſuch an office, and will not advance them, but lets them lie in, and covers them with obſcurity; or ſuch who are honeſt and faithful, and are not to be bribed and brow-beaten, theſe he either removes from their poſt, and covers their faces with ſhame, or takes them away by death, condemns and executes them as malefactors; it being uſual in former times, as well as in ours, to cover the faces of ſuch as are executed: but rather this is to be underſtood of God, who delivers the earth into the hands of the wicked, ſuffers them to have the rule over it, and permits ſuch things to be done, as already obſerved; and beſides, gives up the judges of the earth to judicial blindneſs, ſo that they cannot diſcern what is right and juſt, and do it, ſee Iſ. xxix. 10. if not, where and who is he? if it is not ſo as I ſay, where is the man, and who is he that can diſprove me, and make me a liar? as Aben Ezra; let him come forth and appear, and confute me, and teach me otherwiſe if he can; or name the place of his abode, and and ſay who he is; or if God does not do this, give the earth into the hands of wicked men, and cover the faces of the judges of it, and ſuffer wicked men to prevail, and the cauſes of good men to be ſubverted, the one to flouriſh, and the other to be cruſhed; who does do it, where is the man that has done or can do it? certain it is, that it is done; and who but that God that ſuperintends all things, ſits in the heavens, and does whatſoever he pleaſes, can do ſuch things as theſe? or could they be done without his will and permiſſion? by ſuch mediums Job proves his aſſertion, that God deſtroys the perfect and the wicked; and therefore by the face of things in providence, no judgment is to be had of a man's character good or bad, and then inſtances in himſelf in the following verſes.

℣. 25. Now my days are ſwifter than a poſt, &c.] Or than a runner [a] in a race, in order to obtain the prize; or than one that rides poſt, or runs on foot to carry a meſſage, ſuch as were Cuſhi and Ahimaaz; and ſuch are generally ſwift of foot, or ride on ſwift horſes, who are ſo employed; and yet Job ſays his days were ſwifter, or paſſed away more ſwiftly than ſuch; meaning either his days in general; or rather particularly his proſperous days, as Mr. Broughton interprets it; theſe no ſooner came, but they were gone: they flee away; like a ſhadow, or a dream, or a tale that is told: they ſee no good; or he ſaw, perceived, or enjoyed no good in them; not but that he did ſee and enjoy much good, even much temporal good, which is what is intended; but this was no ſooner had, than it was taken away, that it was as if it had never been; the evil days of trouble and ſorrow, in which he had no pleaſure, came ſo quick upon him.

℣. 26. They are paſſed away as the ſwift ſhips, &c.] Thoſe that are lighteſt built, and run ſwifteſt. Bar Tzemach thinks, ſuch veſſels as are rowed with oars are meant, which may be called ſhips of will or deſire [b], as the words may be rendered, becauſe they may be rowed at pleaſure, and be carried to any place where and when a men thinks fit; whereas thoſe that are not, depend upon the wind, and that muſt be waited for; or they deſign ſuch ſhips that are ſo ſwift in their motion, that they arrive to the haven as ſoon as man can well wiſh for and deſire. Some render it pirate ſhips, or ſhips of enmity [c]; ſuch as are deſigned for ſpoil and plunder, and which are light ones, not loaded with goods, and therefore move ſwiftly: the Targum is, "ſhips burdened with precious fruits;" and the Vulgate Latin verſion is, "ſhips carrying apples:" now ſhips loaded with ſuch ſort of goods, with periſhing commodities, are obliged to make their port as ſoon as poſſible. Some leave the word untranſlated, and call them ſhips of Ebeh [d]; which, according to Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and others, is either the name of a place, or of a river in Arabia, which ran with a rapid ſtream, and in which ſhips were carried with great celerity. Bolducius relates from a traveller of his acquaintance, who finiſhed his travels in 1584, that he ſaw ſuch a river about Damaſcus, not far from the ſepulchre of Job; but that muſt be the river Chryſorrhoas, now called Barrady; but there were two rivers of this name Ebeh; one near Cuſa, and another in Waſith, a country of Babylon, as Golius obſerves [e]. Others takes the word to have the ſignification of reed or papyrus, which grew on the banks of the Nile; and of which ſhips were made, ſee Iſ. xviii. 1. and render the words ſhips of reeds or of papyrus [f], and which being light, were very ſwift: as the eagle that haſteth to the prey; the eagle is the ſwifteſt of birds, and therefore perſons and things exceeding ſwift are compared unto them, ſee Hab. i. 8. Lam. iv. 19. and it flies the moſt ſwiftly when being hungry, and in ſight of its prey, and is neareſt to it, and flaps upon it, which is the thing referred to, and ſo may be rendered, that flies upon the prey [g]. Job uſes theſe metaphors, which are the moſt appoſite, to ſhew how fleeting his days of proſperity were, and how ſoon gone: and a climax may be obſerved in the words; a runner, tho' he runs ſwiftly, a ſhip moves faſter than he, and an eagle, juſt about to ſeize its prey, flies ſwifter than that.

℣. 27. If I ſay, I will forget my complaint, &c.] The cauſe of it, the loſs of his children, ſervants, ſubſtance and health, and endeavour to think no more of theſe things, and ceaſe complaining about them, and attempt to bury them in oblivion, and change his note: I will leave off my heavineſs; his melancholy thoughts, words, airs and looks; or forſake my face [h], put on another countenance, a more gay and chearful one; the Jewiſh commentators generally interpret it, my anger, either at the diſpenſations of providence, or at his friends: and comfort myſelf; that things were not worſe with him than they were; or ſtrengthen [i] himſelf, as the word is rendered in Amos v. 9. againſt his fears, and troubles, and dejection of mind, determining to take heart, and be of good courage, and not ſink, and ſuccumb, and faint under his burdens: none but God, Father, Son and Spirit can give comfort to diſtreſſed ones, whether on temporal or ſpiritual accounts; but good men may make uſe of means for comfort, ſuch as hearing the word, reading the ſcriptures, prayer, meditation and converſation with good men.

℣. 28. I am afraid of all my ſorrows, &c.] That they would return upon him, and ſurround him, and overwhelm him, ſo that he ſhould not be able to ſtand up againſt them, or under them; that they would increaſe and continue with him, and ſo he ſhould never be releaſed from them: I know that thou wilt not hold me innocent; a ſudden apoſtrophe to God as near him; the meaning is not, that he was confident that God would not juſtify him but condemn him in a ſpiritual ſenſe; Job did not deſpair of his everlaſting ſalvation, he knew and believed in his living Redeemer; he knew he ſhould be acquitted and juſtified by his righteouſneſs, and not be condemned with the world; but he was certain of this, as he thought, that God would neither cleanſe [k] him, as ſome render the word, from the worms his fleſh was clad with, and from the filthy boils and ulcers he was covered with; nor clear him ſo, as that he ſhould appear to be innocent in the ſight and judgjudgment of his friends; but go on to treat him as if he was a guilty perſon, by continuing his afflictions on him, even unto death; he had no hope of being freed from them, and ſo of being cleared from the imputation of his friends, who judged of him by his outward circumſtances.

v. 29. If I be wicked, why then labour I in vain?] If he was that wicked perſon, that hypocrite, Bildad and his other friends took him to be, it was in vain for him to make his ſupplications to God, as they adviſed him; ſo Gerſom gives the ſenſe of the words; ſince God hears not ſinners, ſuch as live in ſin, regard iniquity in their hearts, and practice it in their lives, at leaſt ſecretly, as it was ſuggeſted Job did; if he was ſuch an one, it muſt be all loſt labour to pray to God to ſhew favour to him, and deliver him out of his troubles, ſince he might reaſonably expect he would ſhut his eyes, and ſtop his ears at ſuch a man, and regard not his cries; ſeeking to him muſt be in vain; prayer may be fitly enough expreſſed by labour, it is a ſtriving and wreſtling with God, and eſpecially when it is conſtant, importunate and fervent: but rather the ſenſe is, that if he was a wicked man in the account of God, or was dealt with as one; if God would not hold him innocent, as he aſſerts in the latter part of the preceding verſe, then it was a vain thing to labour the point in the vindication of himſelf; ſince he could never think of ſucceeding againſt God, ſo wiſe and powerful, ſo holy, juſt and pure. The word if is not in the orignal text, and may be left out, and the words be rendered, I am wicked[l]; not in any notorious manner, as having lived a ſcandalous life, or been guilty of ſome groſs enormities, as his friends inſinuated, but in common with other men; he was born a ſinner, had been a tranſgreſſor from the womb; and though he was renewed and ſanctified by the Spirit of God, yet ſin dwelt in him, and thro' the infirmity of the fleſh he was daily ſinning in thought, word or deed; nor did he expect it would be otherwiſe with him whilſt in this world; yea, it was impoſſible for him to be without ſin, as Bar Tzemach obſerves to be the ſenſe of the phraſe; and therefore if God would not clear him, or hold him innocent, unleſs he was entirely free from ſin, as it was labouring in vain to attain to ſuch perfection, ſo it muſt be to no purpoſe, and is what he chiefly intends, to attempt to vindicate himſelf before God: or I ſhall be wicked, or ungodly[m]; I ſhall be treated, as ſuch not only by his friends, who would reckon him a very wicked man ſo long as thoſe afflictions continued on him, let him ſay what he would; but by the Lord himſelf, who he believed would never releaſe him from them as long as he lived, which in the eye of men would be a tacit condemnation of him; ſo the Targum, "I ſhall be condemned," and therefore it was labour in vain, ſtriving againſt the ſtream, to go about to vindicate himſelf; nor was it poſſible that he could make himſelf out ſo clear and pure and perfect, that ſuch an holy being as God was, could find no fault in him, in whoſe ſight the heavens, and the inhabitants of them, were not clean; this is farther evinced in the following words.

v. 30. If I waſh myſelf with ſnow-water, &c.] As it came from heaven, or flowed from the mountains covered with ſnow, as Lebanon, ſee Jer. xviii. 14. or was kept in veſſels for ſuch uſe, as being judged the beſt for ſuch a purpoſe; ſo it was uſed by the ancients[n], as being what whitens the ſkin, and ſtrengthens the parts by contracting the fibres, and hindering perſpiration: it ſignifies in a figurative ſenſe, that let him take what methods he would to cleanſe himſelf from ſin, they were all in vain, his iniquity would be ſeen, and remain marked before God; and indeed there is nothing that a man can do that will make him pure and clean in the ſight of an holy God; this is not to be done by ceremonial ablutions, ſuch as might be in uſe in Job's time, before the law of Moſes was given, and to which he may have ſome reference; theſe only ſanctified to the purifying of the fleſh, or only externally, but could not purify the heart, ſo as to have no more conſcience of ſin; nor by moral duties, not by repentance, as Sephorno; a fountain, a flood, an ocean of tears of humiliation and repentance, would not waſh away ſin; if inſtead of ten thouſand rivers of oil, ſo many rivers of briniſh tears could be produced, they would be of no avail to cleanſe the ſinner; nor any works of righteouſneſs done by man, for theſe themſelves need waſhing in the blood of the Lamb; for nothing ſhort of the blood of Chriſt, and the grace of God, can do it: and make my hands never ſo clean; the hands are what men work with, Eccl. ix. 10. and ſo may deſign good works, which are ſometimes called clean hands; ſee Pſ. xxiv. 6. compared with Pſ. xv. 1, 2. and may be ſaid to be ſo, when they are done well, from a pure heart, and faith unfeigned, without ſelfiſh and ſordid views, with a ſingle eye to the glory of God; which is doing them as well, and making the hands as clean as well can be; yet theſe are of no avail with reſpect to juſtification before God, and acceptance with him, or with regard to ſalvation, which is all of grace, and not of works, be they what they will; ſome render the words, and cleanſe my hands with ſope[o], which cleanſes them beſt of any thing, ſee Jer. ii. 22.

v. 31. Yet ſhalt thou plunge me in the ditch, &c.] In the filthy ditch of ſin, the pit wherein is no water, the horrible pit, the mire and clay, in which all unregenerate men are, and to which hypocrites return, as the ſwine to its wallowing in the mire; and in which impurity ſelf-righteous perſons are, and are ſooner or later made to appear, notwithſtanding all their outward righteouſneſs, holineſs, purity and perfection they boaſt of; and though Job was neither of theſe, not an unregenerate man, nor an hypocrite, nor a ſelf-righteous perſon; yet he knew that in compariſon of the perfect purity and holineſs of God, he ſhould appear exceedingly impure; and that God would treat him as ſuch, and hold him out to the view of others as the filth of the world, and the offſcouring of all things, by continuing his afflictions, from whence it would be concluded that he was the moſt impure perſon; and indeed by the ditch may be meant the ditch of afflictions, as Sephorno, either his preſent ones continued, his filthy ulcers and ſcabs, with which his body was covered all over, or new afflictions he would bring him into, where he would ſink in deep mire, there being no ſtanding, Pſ. lxix. 2. ſome underſtand this of the grave, the ditch or pit of corruption, into which he ſhould be caſt, and there putrify and rot; but the other ſenſes ſeem beſt: and mine own clothes ſhall abhor me; not his clothes in a literal ſenſe; either whilſt living, his filthy ulcers being being ſuch, that were his clothes ſenſible of them, they would loathe and abhor to touch him, and cover him; or when dead, his ſepulchral garments, his ſhroud, or winding-ſheet, would diſdain to cover ſuch a filthy body, overſpread with worms and duſt; or as Vatablus paraphraſes it, clothes don't become a dead body; or as Mr. Broughton, "when I go naked to the grave, as though my clothes ſothed me:" but the words are rather to be underſtood figuratively, either of ſome of his friends that were as near and as cloſe to him as his clothes, or had been, but now were eſtranged from him, and loathed, and abhorred him, ſee ch. xix. 13—19. or better, of his beſt works of righteouſneſs, which he put on as a robe, ch. xxix. 14. and which are a covering to the ſaints before men, and are ornamental to them, though not juſtifying in the ſight of God; and indeed in themſelves, and compared with the holy law, and holy nature of God, are imperfect and impure; and if God was to enter into judgment with men, they would be ſo far from juſtifying them in his ſight, or rendering them acceptable to him, that they would cauſe them to be abhorred by him, as all ſelf-righteouſneſs, and ſelf-righteous perſons are, ſee Prov. xxi. 27. Luke xvi. 14. and xviii. 14. yea, even the beſt works of men are but dung in the judgment of a good man himſelf, what then muſt they be in the account of God? Phil. iii. 8. Job here, and in the preceding and following verſes, has moſt exalted ideas of the purity, holineſs and majeſty of God, ſo that no creature, nor creature-holineſs, be they ever ſo perfect, can ſtand before him, or be pure in his ſight.

℣. 32. For he is not a man as I am, &c.] For though the parts and members of an human body are ſometimes aſcribed to him, yet theſe are to be underſtood by an anthropopathy, ſpeaking after the manner of men, there being ſomething in him, which in a figurative ſenſe anſwers to theſe; otherwiſe we are not to conceive of any corporeal ſhape in him, or that there is any likeneſs to which he is to be compared: he is a ſpirit infinite, immortal, immenſe, inviſible, pure and holy, juſt and true, and without iniquity; whereas Job was but a man, a finite, feeble, mortal creature, and a ſinful one; and therefore there being ſuch a vaſt diſparity between them, it was in vain to litigate a point with him, to plead his cauſe before him, or attempt to vindicate his innocence; the potſherds may ſtrive and contend with the potſherds of the earth their equals, but not with God their creator, who is an over-match for them; he ſees impurity where man ſees it not, and can bring a charge againſt him and ſupport it, where he thought there was none, and therefore it is a vain thing to enter the liſts with him: that I ſhould anſwer him; not to queſtions put by him, but in a judicial way to charges and accuſations he ſhould exhibit; no man in this ſenſe can anſwer him, for one of a thouſand he may bring, and men are chargeable with; wherefore Job once and again determines he would not pretend to anſwer him, as he knew he could not, ſee ℣. 3, 14, 15. and we ſhould come together in judgment; in any court of judicature, before any judge, to have the cauſe between us heard, and tried, and determined; for in what court of judicature can he be convened into? or what judge is there above him, before whom he can be ſummoned? or is capable of judging and determining the cauſe between us? there is the high court of heaven, where we muſt all appear, and the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, before which we muſt all ſtand; and God is the judge of all, to whom we muſt come, and by whoſe ſentence we muſt be determined; but there is no court, no judge, no judgment ſuperior to him and his; there is no annulling his ſentence, or making an appeal from him to another; there is no coming togther at all, and much leſs alike[p], as ſome render it, or upon equal terms; the difference between him and his creatures being ſo vaſtly great.

℣. 33. Neither is there any day's-man betwixt us, &c.] Or one that reproves[q]; who upon hearing a cauſe reproves him that is found guilty, or is blame-worthy, or has done injury to another; but there is no ſuch perſon to be found among angels or men, capable of this, ſuppoſing, as if Job ſhould ſay, I ſhould appear to be the injured perſon; or there is no umpire or arbitrator[r], to whom the caſe between us can be referred; for, as Bar Tzemach obſerves, he that ſtands in ſuch a character between two parties, muſt be both more wiſe and more mighty than they; but there is none among all beings wiſer and mightier than God: that might lay his hand upon us both; and reſtrain them from uſing any violence to one another, as contending perſons are apt to do; and compromiſe matters, ſettle and adjuſt things in difference between them, ſo as to do juſtice to both, and make both parties eaſy, and make peace between them. Herodotus[s] makes mention of a cuſtom among the Arabians, "when they enter into covenants and agreements with each other, another man ſtands in the midſt of them both, and with a ſharp ſtone cuts the inſide of the hands of the covenanters near the larger fingers; and then takes a piece out of each of their garments, and anoints with the blood ſeven ſtones that lie between them; and whilſt he is doing this calls upon a deity, and when finiſhed the covenant-maker goes with his friends to an hoſt or citizen, if the affair is tranſacted with a citizen; and the friends reckon it a righteous thing to keep the covenant." To which, or ſome ſuch cuſtom, Job may be thought to allude. Now, whereas Chriſt is the day's-man, umpire and mediator between God and men, who has interpoſed between them, and has undertaken to manage affairs relating to both; in things pertaining to God, the glory of his juſtice, and the honour of his law, and to make reconciliation for the ſins of men, and to make peace for them with God by the blood of his croſs; which he has completely done, being every way qualified for it, inaſmuch as he partakes of both natures, and is God and man in one perſon, and ſo could put his hand on both, and make both one; or bring them who were at variance to an entire agreement with each other, upon ſuch a bottom, as even the ſtrict juſtice of God cannot object unto. Now, I ſay, Job muſt not be underſtood as if he was ignorant of this, for he had knowledge of Chriſt as a redeemer and ſaviour, and ſo as the mediator and peace-maker; the Septuagint verſion renders it as a wiſh, O that there was a mediator between us! and ſo it may be conſidered as a prayer for Chriſt's incarnation, and that he would appear and do the work of a mediator he was appointed to, which Job plainly ſaw there was great need of; or, as others[t], there is no day's-man yet; there will be one, but as yet he is not come; in due time he will,

will, which Job had faith in and full assurance of: but there is no need of such versions and glosses; Job is here not speaking of the affair of salvation, about which he had no doubt, he knew his state was safe, and he had an interest in the living Redeemer, and blessed Mediator; but of the present dispensation of providence, and of the clearing of that up to the satisfaction of his friends, so that he might appear to be an innocent person; and since God did not think fit to change the scene, there was none to interpose on his behalf, and it was in vain for him to contend with God.

℣. 34. Let him take his rod away from me, &c.] Not his government over him, of which the rod or sceptre is an ensign, Job did not want to be freed from that; but his rod of affliction, or stroke, as the Targum, the stroke of his hand, which tho' a fatherly chastizement, lay heavy upon him, and sunk his spirits; so that he could not, whilst it was on him, reason so freely about things as he thought he could if it was removed, and for which he here prays: and let not his fear terrify me; not the fear of him as a father, which is not terrifying, but the fear of him as a judge; the terror of his majesty, the dread of his wrath and vengeance, the fearful apprehensions he had of him as a God of strict justice; that would by no means clear the guilty, yea, would not hold him innocent, tho' he was with respect to the charge of his friends; being now without those views of him as a God gracious and merciful; to these words Elihu seems to have respect, ch. xxxiii. 6, 7.

℣. 35. Then would I speak, and not fear him, &c.] With a servile fear, though with reverence and godly fear; meaning either at the throne of grace, having liberty of access, boldness of spirit, and freedom of speech through Christ the mediator, and in the view of his blood, righteousness and sacrifice; for when the rod of his law, and the terror of his justice are removed, and his grace and favour in Christ shewn, a believer can speak boldly and freely to God, and not be afraid before him: but rather Job's sense is, that were the rod of his anger taken off, and the dread of his majesty, which so awed him that he could not tell his case as it was, and use the arguments he might to advantage; he should speak without fear, and so as to defend himself, and make his cause to appear to be just; to this the Lord seems to refer in ch. xxxviii. 3. and xl. 7. being bold and daring expressions, for which Job blushed when made sensible of it, ch. xlii. 5, 6. but it is not so with me; there was no day's-man between the Lord and him; the rod was not taken off his back, nor the dread and terror of the Almighty removed from him; and so could not speak in his own defence, as otherwise he might: or it was not so with him as his friends thought of him; he was not the wicked, hypocritical man they took him to be, or as the afflictive dispensations of God made him to appear to be, according to their judgment of them: or the words may be rendered, I am not so with myself [u]; that is, he was not conscious to himself that he was such a person they judged him; or such were the troubles and afflictions that were upon him, that he was not himself, he was not compos mentis, and so not capable on that account, as well as others, of pleading his own cause: or I am not right in or with myself [w]; not in his right mind, being distracted with the terrors of God, and the arrows of the Almighty that stuck in him; or he was not righteous in himself; for though he was clear of hypocrisy he was charged with, he did not pretend to be without sin, or to have such a righteousness as would justify him before God; and therefore desires things might be put upon the foot of grace, and not of strict justice.

CHAP. X.

JOB here declares the greatness of his afflictions, which made him weary of his life, and could not help complaining; entreats the Lord not to condemn him, but shew him the reason of his thus dealing with him, ℣. 1, 2. and expostulates with him about it, and suggests as if it was severe and not easily reconciled to his perfections, when he knew he was not a wicked man, ℣. 3—7. he puts him in mind of his formation and preservation of him, and after all destroyed him, ℣. 8—12, and represents his case as very distressed; whether he was wicked or righteous it mattered not, his afflictions were increasing upon him, ℣. 13—17. and all this he observes, in order to justify his eager desire after death, which he renews, ℣. 18, 19. and intreats, since his days he had to live were but few, that God would give him some respite before he went into another state, which he describes, ℣. 20, 21, 22.

℣. 1. My soul is weary of my life, &c.] And yet nothing of a temporal blessing is more desirable than life; every man, generally speaking, is desirous of life, and of a long life too; soul and body are near and intimate companions, and are usually loth to part; but Job was weary of his life, willing to part with it, and longed to be rid of it; he lothed it, and so it may be here rendered [x], he would not live always, ch. vii. 15, 16. his soul was uneasy to dwell any longer in the earthly tabernacle of his body, it being so full of pains and sores; for this weariness was not through the guilt of sin pressing him sore, or through the horror of conscience arising from it, so that he could not bear to live, as Cain and Judas; nor through indwelling sin being a burden to him, and a longing desire to be rid of it, and to be perfectly holy, to be with Christ in heaven, as the apostle Paul, and other saints, at certain times; or through uneasiness at the sins of others, as Isaac and Rebekah, Lot, David, Isaiah, and others; nor on the account of the temptations of Satan, his fiery darts, his buffetings and siftings, which are very distressing; but on account of his outward afflictions, which were so very hard and pressing, and the apprehension he had of the anger and wrath of God, he treating him, as he thought, very severely, and as his enemy, together with the ill usage of his friends. The Targum renders it, "my soul is cut off in my life;" or I am dying whilst I live;

I live a dying life, being in ſuch pain of body, and diſtreſs of mind; and ſo other verſions [y]: I will leave my complaint upon myſelf; not that he would leave complaining, or lay it aſide, though ſome [z] render it to this ſenſe; rather give a looſe to it, and indulge it, than attempt to eaſe himſelf, and give vent to his grief and ſorrow by it; but it ſhould be upon himſelf, a burden he would take upon himſelf, and not trouble others with it; he would not burden their ears with his complaints, but privately and ſecretly utter them to himſelf; for the word [a] uſed ſignifies meditation, private diſcourſe with himſelf, a ſecret and inward bemoaning of his caſe; but he did not continue long in this mind, as appears by the following clauſe: or ſince I can do no other but complain; if there is any blame in it, I'll take it wholly upon myſelf, complain I muſt, let what will be conſequence of it, ſee ch. xiii. 13. though the phraſe may be rendered, as it is ſometimes, within myſelf, ſee Hoſ. xi. 8. [b] and then the ſenſe may be, ſhall I leave my inward moan within myſelf, and no longer contain? I'll give myſelf vent; and though I have been blamed for ſaying ſo much as I have, I'll ſay yet more: I will ſpeak in the bitterneſs of my ſoul; as one whoſe life is made bitter, againſt whom God had wrote and ſaid bitter things, and had brought bitter afflictions upon him, which had occaſioned bitter complaints in him, as well as he had been bitterly uſed by his friends; and amidſt all this bitterneſs, he is determined to ſpeak out his mind freely and fully; or to ſpeak of the bitterneſs [c] of his ſoul, and declare by words what he in his mind and body endured.

℣. 2. I will ſay unto God, do not condemn me, &c.] Not that he feared eternal condemnation; there is none to them that are in Chriſt, and believe in him as Job did; Chriſt's undertakings, ſufferings, and death ſecure his people from the condemnation of law and juſtice; nor indeed are the afflictions of God's people a condemnation of them, but a fatherly chaſtizement, and are in order to prevent their being condemned with the world; yet they may look as if they were, in the eyes of the men of the world, and they as very wicked perſons; and ſo the word may be rendered, do not account me wicked [d], or treat me as a wicked man, by continuing thine afflicting hand upon me; which as long as it was on him, his friends would not believe but that he was a wicked man; wherefore, as God knew he was not ſuch an one as they took him to be, he begs that he would not uſe him as ſuch, that ſo the cenſure he lay under might be removed; and though he was condemned by them, he intreats that God would make it appear he was not condemned by him: and whereas he was not conſcious to himſelf of any notorious wickedneſs done by him, which deſerved ſuch uſage, he farther prays, ſhew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me; afflictions are the Lord's controverſy with his people, a ſtriving, a contending with them; which are ſometimes ſo ſharp, that were they continued long, the ſpirits would fail before him, and the ſouls that he has made: now there is always a cauſe or reaſon for them, which God has in his own breaſt, though it is not always known to man, at leaſt not at firſt, or as ſoon as the controverſy or contention is begun; when God afflicts, it is either for ſin, to prevent it, or purge from it, or to bring his people to a ſenſe of it, to repent of it, and forſake it, or to try their graces, and make them more partakers of his holineſs; and when good men, as Job, are at a loſs about this, not being conſcious of any groſs iniquity committed, or a courſe of ſin continued in, it is lawful, and right, and commendable to enquire the reaſon of it, and learn, if poſſible, the end, deſign and uſe of ſuch diſpenſations.

℣. 3. Is it good unto thee that thou ſhouldeſt oppreſs? &c.] This God does not approve of in others; he dehorts men from it, he threatens to puniſh thoſe that do ſo, and to be a ſwift witneſs againſt them; he promiſes to ariſe to the help of the oppreſſed, and to be a refuge for them, and therefore will never do the ſame himſelf; it can never be pleaſant to him, nor right and juſt in his ſight, nor is it of any advantage to him: Job here ſuggeſts, that his afflictions were an oppreſſion to him, and indeed no affliction is joyous, but grievous; and ſometimes the hand of God preſſes hard and ſore, but then there is no injury nor any injuſtice done, as the word [e] here uſed ſignifies; and he intimates alſo, as if God took ſome ſeeming delight and pleaſure in thus oppreſſing him, and therefore expoſtulates with him about it, as if ſuch conduct was not fit and becoming him, not agreeable to his perfections, and could afford neither pleaſure nor profit. This, and what follows in this verſe, are expoſtulations too bold and daring, and in which Job uſes too much freedom with the Almighty, and in which he is not ſo modeſt as in the preceding verſe: that thou ſhouldſt deſpiſe the work of thine hands? which he tacitly inſinuates he did. Job means himſelf, who as to his body, and the ſeveral members of it, were the work of God's hands, curiouſly and wonderfully made by him, as is afterwards expreſſed; and as to his ſoul, and the powers and faculties of it, they were his make, who is the Father of ſpirits; and moreover, as a new man he was made by him, was the workmanſhip of God, and a curious piece indeed, created after his image in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; and he was in every ſenſe the work of his hands, or the labour of his hands [f]; wrought with great care and labour, even with the palms of his hands, as is the word [g] uſed; and could Job think that God deſpiſed ſuch a work? he who upon a ſurvey of his works ſaid they were all very good; who forſakes not the work of his hands, nor deſpiſes the day of ſmall things, could never do this; nor are afflictions to be interpreted in ſuch a manner, as if God was indifferent unto, ſlighted and thought meanly of what he himſelf has wrought; ſince theſe are ſo far from having ſuch a meaning, that they flow from that great reſpect he has for his own work, and are for the good of it: and ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked? either the counſel of the wicked one Satan, who moved God to afflict him in the manner he had; or of the Sabeans and Chaldeans, who throve and proſpered, notwithſtanding the injury they had done him; or of his friends, who conſulted to brand his his character with hypocriſy; or rather, of wicked men in general, on whoſe counſel God may be thought to ſhine, when it ſucceeds, and God ſeems to ſmile upon them in his providence, and they are in proſperous circumſtances, and have what heart can wiſh, when good men are greatly afflicted; which ſometimes has been a temptation, and greatly diſtreſſing to the latter; ſee Pſ. lxxiii. 2—14. Jer. xii. 1, 2. but this is not always the caſe; the counſel of the froward is ſometimes carried headlong, the counſel of the wiſe counſellors of Pharaoh is made brutiſh, and that of Ahitophel was defeated by him; and whenever he ſeems to countenance it, it is to anſwer ſome ends of his glory.

℣. 4. Haſt thou eyes of fleſh? &c.] God has eyes, but not fleſhly ones; he has eyes of love, grace, and mercy, which are always upon his people for good, and are never withdrawn from them; and he has eyes of diſpleaſure and wrath on ſinful men, to deſtroy them; theſe are not made of fleſh, or like the eyes of fleſh and blood, or of men; fleſhy eyes cannot ſee at any great diſtance, and only in one place at a time, and only one object after another; they cannot ſee in the dark, and what they are, and only outward objects; and in theſe they are ſometimes deceived, and at length fail: but the eyes of God ſee all things, at the greateſt diſtance; he looks down from heaven and beholds all the children of men on earth, and all their actions; his eyes are in every place, beholding the evil and the good; he can ſee in the dark as well as in the light, the darkneſs and the light are both alike to him; he beholds not only outward actions, and viſible objects, but the hearts of men, and all that is in them; nor is he ever deceived, nor will his ſight ever fail: though Job perhaps may mean carnal eyes; that is, evil ones, as eſpecially envious ones are; is thine evil? Matt. xx. 15. that is, envious; and it is as if Job ſhould ſay, Doſt thou envy me my former proſperity and peace, that thou ſearcheſt ſo narrowly into my conduct to find iniquity in me, and take advantage againſt me? or ſeeſt thou as man ſeeth? look with hatred and envy, as one man does upon another: ſo ſeemed the diſpenſations of God towards Job, as if he did, as he ſuggeſts.

℣. 5. Are thy days as the days of man? &c.] No, they are not: not ſo few; the days of the years of man's life in common are threeſcore years and ten; but a thouſand years with the Lord are but as one day; his days are days, not of time, but of eternity: nor ſo mutable, or he ſo mutable in them; man is of one mind to-day, and of another to-morrow; but the Lord is in one mind one day as another; he is the Lord that changes not; immutable in his nature, purpoſes, promiſes, and affections: but Job ſuggeſts as if his diſpenſations towards him ſhewed the contrary; one day ſmiling upon him, and heaping his favours on him, and the next frowning on him, and ſtripping him of all: but this was a wrong way of judging; for though God may change the diſpenſations of his providence towards men, and particularly his own people; his nature changes not, nor does he change his will, his purpoſes and deſigns, nor his love and affection: are thy years as man's days? as few as they, or fail like them? no, he is the ſame, and his years fail not; and has the ſame good will to his people, in adverſe, as well as in proſperous diſpenſations of his providence: ſome underſtand all this in ſuch ſenſe, in connection with what follows, as if Job had obſerved, that ſince God was omniſcient, and knew and ſaw all perſons and things, his eyes not being like men's eyes, eyes of fleſh; and ſince he was eternal, and wanted not for time, there was no need for him to take ſuch methods as he did with him, through afflictive providences, to find out his ſin; ſince, if he was guilty, it was at once known to him; nor need he be in ſuch haſte to do it, ſince his time was not ſhort; as it is with an envious and ill-natured man, who is for loſing no time to find out and take an advantage of him he bears an ill-will unto.

℣. 6. That thou enquireſt after mine iniquity, and ſearcheſt after my ſin?] Narrowly examined every action of his life, to find ſomething amiſs in them; and took notice of every weakneſs and infirmity, and aggravated it, to make it appear as ſinful as it could be, and watched every halting and failing, that he might have ſomething againſt him as a reaſon why he afflicted him; dealing with him as if there was no Meſſiah, no Mediator, Redeemer, and Saviour, provided, appointed, and promiſed; and as if there was no forgiveneſs of ſin through him, for him; ſin pardoned for his ſake is covered, that when it is ſought for it ſhall not be found; ſo that when it is not pardoned, or not thought to be ſo, it lies open, and upon enquiry to be found, charged and puniſhed for; ſee ch. vii. 21. this ſearch and enquiry ſeems to have been made by afflictions; at leaſt Job imagined, that the deſign of God in them was to put him upon the rack and bring him to a confeſſion of ſin, and in this way find an occaſion againſt him: now ſuch a method as this, Job thought, was unbecoming the greatneſs, majeſty, and perfections of God; and was quite needleſs, ſince his eyes were not human, nor ſhort-ſighted, that obliged him to pore and pry into things, but were omniſcient, and could ſee at once whether there was any evil way in him or no; nor was he as men, ſhort-lived, which obliged him to make uſe of his time while he had it, to get an advantage of another; and beſides, ſuch a method of acting ſeemed to him very extraordinary, when he full well knew he was an innocent perſon, as follows.

℣. 7. Thou knoweſt that I am not wicked, &c.] Or, in, or upon thy knowledge[a] it is that I am not wicked; it is a thing well known, quite clear and manifeſt, without making ſuch a ſearch and enquiry: not that he thought himſelf without ſin, and could appeal to the omniſcience of God for the truth of that; for he had confeſſed before that he was a ſinner, and wicked, as to his nature and birth and the many infirmities of life; ſee ch. vii. 20. and ix. 29. but that he was not that wicked perſon, and an hypocrite, as his friends took him to be, and as might be concluded from the ſore afflictions that were upon him; he did not live in ſin, nor indulge himſelf in a vitious courſe of life; ſin had not the dominion over him, and he had not ſecretly cheriſhed any reigning iniquity, and lived in the commiſſion of it: and for the truth of this he could appeal to the ſearcher of hearts; and yet he ſo cloſely purſued, and ſo ſtrictly examined him, as if he ſuſpected he was thus guilty: and there is none that can deliver out of thine hand; that is, out of his afflicting hand, until he pleaſe to releaſe him from it himſelf; for this is not to be underſtood of deliverance from the avenging hand of juſtice, from hell and wrath, and everlaſting deſtruction; for there is one that can and does deliver his people from from ſin and Satan; from the world, the law, its curſes and condemnation, and from wrath to come; and ſo from the hands of juſtice, having made full ſatisfaction to it: but what Job obſerves that God knew, was, that neither he himſelf, nor any angel, nor man, nor any creature, could take him out of his hand in which he was; and therefore ſuggeſts, not only that his condition was extremely bad, diſtreſſed, and miſerable, but that there was no neceſſity for God to be ſo quick upon him, and ſo ſtrict in his inquiry into him; nor of incloſing him about on all hands with afflictions, ſince there was no danger of his eſcaping from him, or of others aſſiſting him in, and facilitating ſuch an attempt: and this he full well knew; for ſo the words are in connection with the preceding; and thou knoweſt that there is none, &c. [b] as well as with what follows, as ſome think.

℣. 8. Thine hands have made me, and faſhioned me together round about, &c.] This and what follow are an illuſtration of, and an enlargement upon the work of God's hands, made mention of in ℣. 3. and ſuggeſt reaſons why it ſhould not be deſpiſed by him, as well as confirm what was juſt now ſaid, that none could deliver him out of his hands; ſince his hands had made him, and therefore had ſuch power over him as none elſe had: and the whole ſeems deſigned to move to pity and compaſſion of him; for not he himſelf, nor his parents, but God only had made him; he was his workmanſhip only, and a curious piece it was, which his hands of power and wiſdom had nicely formed; for, though the Son and Spirit of God are not to be excluded from the formation of man, yet it ſeems a too great ſtrain of the words to interpret hands of them, as ſome do; and much leſs are they to be underſtood literally, of the hands of the Son of God, appearing in an human form at the creation of man, ſince ſuch an appearance is not certain; nor is Job ſpeaking of the formation of the firſt man, but of himſelf: the firſt word [c], rendered made, has the ſignification of labour, trouble, grief, and care; and is uſed of God after the manner of men, who, when things are done well by them, take a great deal of pains, and are very ſolicitous and careful in doing them; and from hence is a word which is ſometimes uſed for an idol, as Gerſom obſerves, becauſe much labour and ſkill are exerciſed to form it in the moſt curious and pleaſing manner; many interpreters, as Aben Ezra obſerves, from the uſe of the word in the Arabic language, explain it of God's creating the body of man with nerves, by which it is bound, compacted, and ſtrengthened [d]; and the latter word denotes the form and configuration of it, the beautiful order and proportion in which every part is ſet; and the whole is intended to obſerve the perfection of the human body, and the exquiſite ſkill of the author of it; and what pity is it that it ſhould be ſo marred and ſpoiled! and this is ſaid to be made and faſhioned together, or all at once; the ſeveral parts of it being in the ſeed, in the embryo, all together, tho' gradually formed or brought into order; or rather, this denotes the unity and compactneſs of the ſeveral members of the body, which are ſet in their proper place, and joined and fitted together, by joints and bands, and by that which every joint ſupplieth: and this is done round about, on all ſides, in every part; or, as Mr. Broughton renders it, in every point; the whole of it, and every member, even the moſt extreme and minute, are curiouſly formed and faſhioned by the Lord; or rather, thine hands are together round about me; embracing, ſuſtaining, and preſerving him ever ſince he was made: yet thou doſt deſtroy me; this body ſo extremely well wrought, by boils or ulcers; or ſwallow me [e], as a lion, to which he compares him, ℣. 16. or any other ravenous and large creature, ſee Lam. ii. 2, 5. ſome connect the words more agreeable to the accents, yet thou doſt deſtroy me together round about [f]; or on every ſide, as in ch. xix. 10. having ſmitten him with boils from the crown of the head to the ſole of the feet, and ſtripped him of his ſubſtance and his family all at once; and ſo it denotes utter deſtruction: ſome read the words interrogatively, and wilt thou deſtroy or ſwallow me [g]? after thou haſt taken ſo much pains, and been at ſuch labour and trouble, ſpeaking after the manner of men, to make ſuch a curious piece of work, and yet with one ſtroke deſtroy it and daſh it in pieces, or ſwallow it up as a morſel at once.

℣. 9. Remember, I beſeech thee, that thou haſt made me as the clay, &c.] Not of the clay, though man was made originally of the duſt of the earth, and the bodies of men are houſes of clay, earthen veſſels, and earthly tabernacles, but as the clay; either as the clay is wrought in the hand of the potter, and worked into what form, and made into what veſſel he pleaſes, ſo are men in the hand of God, made by him in what form, and for what uſe and end he thinks fit; or rather, this denotes not the likeneſs of the operation, but the likeneſs of the matter of the human body to clay: not for the impurity of it; for though man is in a ſtate and condition comparable to the mire and clay, this he has brought himſelf into by ſin, and not the Lord; he made man upright, but man has made himſelf ſinful and polluted; but for the brittleneſs of it; as a veſſel made of clay is brittle and eaſily broke to pieces, and cannot bear much weight, or any heavy ſtroke; ſo the body of man is weak and frail, and feeble; its ſtrength is not the ſtrength of ſtones, and its fleſh braſs, but clay: and this Job humbly intreats the Lord would remember, and that now [h]; immediately; and deal mildly and mercifully with him, ſince he was not able to bear the weight of his hand, which would ſoon cruſh him and break him to pieces; not that God forgets this, for he remembers man's frame and compoſition, that he is but duſt; that he is fleſh, and a wind or vapour that paſſes away: but he may ſeem to do ſo, when he ſorely afflicts and his hand lies heavy, and he does not remove it, but continues it, and rather increaſes the affliction; and therefore, as the Lord allows his people to put him in remembrance, Job here deſires that he would ſhew himſelf in his providential dealings with him, that he was mindful of his natural frailty and infirmity; ſee ch. vii. 12. Pſ. lxxviii. 3. and lxxxix. 47. and ciii. 14. and wilt thou bring me into duſt again? to the duſt of death; to the original of which he was made; and that ſo ſoon, and at once; or, and unto duſt wilt return me? as Mr. Broughton and others [i], according to the original ſentence, duſt thou art, and unto duſt duſt ſhalt thou return, Gen. iii. 19. and which Job expected, and will be the caſe of all men, Eccl. xii. 7. and therefore he thought that this might ſuffice, that it was enough that he ſhould die in a little while through the courſe of nature, and therefore deſires he might have ſome reſpite and eaſe whilſt he did live; he could not ſee there was any occaſion to preſs him ſo hard, and follow him ſo cloſe with afflictions one after another, or be ſo rough with him and quick upon him; ſince in a ſhort time his brittle clay would break of itſelf, and he ſhould drop into the duſt and lie mouldering there, as it was of old decreed he ſhould.

℣. 10. Haſt thou not poured me out as milk, &c.] Expreſſing, in modeſt terms, his conception from the ſeed of his parents, comparable to milk, from being a liquid, and for its colour: and crudled me like cheeſe? that of the female being mixed with, and heated by the male, is hardened like the curd of which a cheeſe is made, and begins to receive a form as that, and becomes an embryo: and naturaliſts [k] make uſe of the ſame expreſſions when ſpeaking of theſe things; and in this way moſt interpreters carry the ſenſe of the words; but Schultens obſerves that milk is an emblem of purity and holineſs, ſee Lam. iv. 7. and ſo this may reſpect the original pure formation of man, who came out of his Maker's hands a pure, holy, and upright creature, made after his image and in his likeneſs, created in righteouſneſs and holineſs, and ſo, like milk, pure and white; or rather, the regeneration and ſanctification of Job perſonally, and which might be very early, as in Jeremiah, John the Baptiſt, and others; or however, he was filled and adorned with the gifts and graces of the Spirit of God, was waſhed and cleanſed, and ſanctified and juſtified; and had his converſation in the world, in all ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, being preſerved from groſs enormities in life; was a man that feared God and eſchewed evil, and had not only the form of godlineſs, but the power of it; and was eſtabliſhed and confirmed in and by the grace of God, and was ſtrong in the exerciſe of it; and from hence he argues with God, ſhould ſuch a veſſel of grace, whom he had made ſo pure and holy, and had ſo conſolidated and ſtrengthened in a ſpiritual and religious way, be cruſhed and deſtroyed at once.

℣. 11. Thou haſt clothed me with ſkin and fleſh, &c.] The bones with fleſh, which is the undergarment, and the fleſh with ſkin, which is the upper; which is artificially compoſed of curious little arteries, veins, nerves, and glands, through which the blood continually circulates, and through innumerable pores, and tranſpires, of which pores 125,000 may be covered with a ſmall grain of ſand [l], amazing! Timæus Locrus [m] calls them inviſible little mouths; ſee Ezek. xxxvii. 6. the order of generation ſeems to be obſerved; after the ſemen is hardened and conſolidated, the inward parts are formed, and then the outward parts, the fleſh and ſkin, to protect and defend them; and ſo are compared to cloaths which are without a man, and put about him; Porphyry [n] calls the body the cloathing of the ſoul; ſee 2 Cor. v. 4. the ſpiritual cloathing of Job was the righteouſneſs of his living Redeemer, who was to partake of the ſame fleſh and blood with him, and ſtand on the earth in the fulneſs of time, and work out and bring in a righteouſneſs for him, conſiſting of his obedience in life in the days of his fleſh, and of his ſufferings and death, or blood, by which he and every believer are juſtified before God; and with which being cloathed, ſhall not be found naked: and haſt fenced me with bones and ſinews; the bones are ſaid by philoſophers [o] to be the fences of the marrow, and the fleſh the covering of them; the bones are the ſtrength and ſtability of the human body; the ſinews or nerves bind and hold the ſeveral parts of it together, and are of great uſe for its ſtrength and motion: the bones, ſome of them are as pillars to ſupport it, as thoſe of the legs and thighs; and others are of uſe to act for it, offenſively and defenſively, as thoſe of the hands and arms; and others are a cover and fence of the inward parts, as the ribs: Guſſetius [p] ſeems inclined, could he have found an inſtance of the word being uſed for making a tent, which it has the ſignification of, to have rendered the words, "with bones and ſinews, thou haſt given me the form of a tabernacle; or, thou haſt made me to be a tent; ſo the human body is called a tabernacle, 1 Cor. v. 1. and 2 Pet. i. 13, 14. the ſkin and fleſh being like veils or curtains, which cover; the bones are in the room of ſtakes, and the nerves inſtead of cords, the breaſt and belly a cavity: in a ſpiritual ſenſe, a believer's ſtrength lies in the grace of Chriſt, in the Lord, and in the power of his might; his defence is the whole armour of God provided for him, particularly the helmet of ſalvation, the ſhield of faith, and the breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs, with which he is fenced and protected from every ſpiritual enemy; and will God ſuffer ſuch an one to be deſtroyed, whom he hath taken ſuch care of, both in a natural and ſpiritual manner?

℣. 12. Thou haſt granted me life and favour, &c.] Or lives [q]; natural life; both in the womb, where and when he was quickened, and at his birth, when he was brought into the world, and began to live in it; the rational ſoul may be intended, by which he lived; which, when created and infuſed into man, and united to his body, he becomes a living man; it is the preſence of that which cauſes life, and the abſence or removal of that which cauſes death; and this is a grant or gift from God, who gives to all his creatures life and breath, and all things; ſee Job xxxiii. 4. Acts xvii. 25. and is a favour alſo; a mercy, the chief of mercies; it is more than meat; yea all a man has he will give for his life: beſides this, Job had a ſpiritual life, a principle of it implanted in him; God had quickened him when dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; the ſpirit of life from Chriſt had entered into him, and he was become a living ſpiritual man: this likewiſe was a grant from God, a freegrace-gift of his; it is he that gives the living water, and gives it freely, or it would not be grace; for it is a favour which flows from the free grace and good will of God; it is owing to the great love wherewith he loves men, that he quickens them; his time is a time of love, and ſo of life; and eternal life is the conſequent of this, and is inſeparably connected with it; and Job had an intereſt in it, a right unto it, and a meetneſs for it; he had knowledge of it, faith in it, and hope of enjoying it, and knew that after death he ſhould live this life; ſee ch. xix. 26, 27. and this is a gift of God through Chriſt, owing to his good pleaſure, the fruit of his favour and and loving-kindneſs: though by favour may be meant ſomething diſtinct from life; either the care of him in the womb, and the taking of him out from thence, which are ſometimes obſerved as ſingular mercies and favours; ſee Pſ. xxii. 9. and lxxi. 6. or the beauty and comelineſs of his body, ſuch as was on Moſes, David, and others; ſee Prov. xxxi. 30. or rather, it intends in general all the temporal bleſſings of life, food and raiment, every thing neceſſary for the comfort and ſupport of life; and which are all mercies and favours, and what men are undeſerving of; and eſpecially ſpiritual bleſſings, or the bleſſings of grace; and the word here uſed is often uſed for grace and mercy, and may ſignify the ſeveral graces of the Spirit beſtowed in regeneration, as faith, hope, love, &c. which are all the gifts of God, and the effects of his favour and good-will; as alſo the bleſſings of juſtifying, pardoning, and adopting grace; all which Job was favoured with, as well as with ſupplies of grace from time to time, and the freſh diſcoveries of the favour and loving-kindneſs of God to him, which is better than life: and thy viſitation hath preſerved my ſpirit; kept him alive, in a natural ſenſe, while in the womb, as Jarchi, where he was in a wonderful manner nouriſhed; and when he came out from thence, expoſed to many difficulties and dangers, and during his helpleſs and infant-ſtate, and amidſt a variety of troubles throughout the whole of his life thitherto; and which was owing to God's viſitation of him in a way of mercy every morning; and which was no other than his providence or daily care of him, and concern for him; and ſo Mr. Broughton renders it thy providence[r], and ſo ſome others: likewiſe he preſerved his ſoul or ſpirit in a ſpiritual ſenſe, in Chriſt Jeſus, in whoſe hands he put him; he hid his life in him, and bound it up in the bundle of life with him; he kept him by his power as in a garriſon, and preſerved him ſafe to his kingdom and glory; and this is to be aſcribed to his viſitation of him in a way of grace, through the redemption of Chriſt, and the effectual vocation of the bleſſed Spirit, and the conſtant ſupplies of grace vouchſafed from time to time; the Targum is, thy remembrance; for it is owing to God's remembrance of his people that he viſits them, either in providence or grace; and when he viſits them with his providence, or with his gracious preſence and protection, it is plain he remembers them: now, ſince God had favoured him with ſuch bleſſings of nature, providence, and grace, he reaſons with him about his preſent circumſtances; that, after all this, ſurely he would not deſtroy him and cut him off; at leaſt he knew not how well to reconcile paſt favours with ſuch hard and ſevere uſage as he thought he met with from him.

℣. 13. And theſe things thou haſt hid in thine heart, &c.] Meaning, either the mercies and favours he had indulged him with; theſe he ſeemed to conceal and ſuppreſs the memory of, as if they had never been, by a different conduct and behaviour; or rather, theſe he had laid up in his mind and memory, and had full knowledge and remembrance of; though he dealt with him in the manner he did, he could not forget his former favours to him, which, when compared with his preſent dealings, were very unlike: or it may be beſt to underſtand theſe things of his afflictions and troubles, which, notwithſtanding his being the work of his hand ſo curiouſly formed, and notwithſtanding all his temporal and ſpiritual mercies, he had in his heart purpoſed, and decreed in his mind, and laid up in his treaſures, in order to be brought forth in due time, and to exerciſe him with; theſe were the things he had appointed for him, and many ſuch things were with him, as it follows: I know that this is with thee; either that he was not ignorant and forgetful of what he had done in a kind way; or rather, that he had this in his mind, and it was an eternal purpoſe of his to afflict him in the manner he had done: ſome connect theſe words with the following verſe, as if the ſenſe was, theſe are what thou haſt hid in thine heart, and this is what I know is with thee, If I ſin, &c[s].

℣. 14. If I ſin, then thou markeſt me, &c.] Or obſerveſt me[t]; that is, he took notice of his ſins, ſtrictly inquired into them and all the circumſtances of them, watched the motions and progreſs of them, and carefully laid them up, in order to bring them out againſt him another day, and afflict or puniſh him for them; or he ſet a watch about him, kept him in[u], and incloſed him on every ſide with affliction, as if he was in a watch or priſon, as Gerſom; or, wilt thou keep me[w]? that is, in ſuch cloſe confinement: Guſſetius[x] renders it, If I have offered a ſacrifice for ſin, as the word is ſometimes uſed; ſignifying, that though he ſhould, as no doubt he did, offer ſacrifice for himſelf, as it is certain he did for his children, yet even that was not regarded by the Lord; he ſtill marked and obſerved him and his ſins, and would not forgive him, or abſolve him from his ſins, as follows; ſee ch. vii. 12. and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity; clear him of it, and diſcharge him from it; pronounce him innocent, or pardon him; but on the contrary, hold him guilty, and deal with him as ſuch in a rigorous way; or wilt not cleanſe or purify me, as the Targum and others[y], but let me continue, or treat me as an impure perſon, not fit for communion or converſe.

℣. 15. If I be wicked, wo is me, &c.] In this world, and to all eternity; afflictions will abide me here, and everlaſting wrath hereafter: theſe are the woes that belong to a wicked man; that is, a prophane and abandoned ſinner, that lives in ſin, and gives up himſelf to all manner of wickedneſs; the Targum is, "deſtruction to me from the great judgment;" utter ruin is my portion, as it is of all wicked and unrighteous perſons, Iſ. iii. 11. and if I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head; live a holy life and converſation, be righteous in the ſight of men, and behave ſo as not to know any thing by himſelf, nor to be conſcious of living in any known ſin; yet he could not take any comfort from it, or have any pleaſure in it, or ſpeak peace to himſelf on account of it, or glory in it and make his boaſt of it; or lift up his head before God with boldneſs and confidence, who is ſo pure and holy, and his eyes ſo quick in diſcerning the ſins of men: a good man derives his peace and comfort, not from his own righteouſneſs, but from the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and puts his confidence in in that only; he bluſhes, and is aſhamed of his own; and cannot, nay dare not liſt up his head, as Mr. Broughton, the Tigurine verſion, and others render it, thro' ſhame, being ſenſible that nothing of his own can ſtand before an holy God, or give him joy, peace, and pleaſure there; the Targum adds, before the ungodly; but this a man may do before men, when he cannot before God: I am full of confuſion; being in ſuch a dilemma; let him be what he would, he was ſure to have affliction, ſorrow, and diſtreſs, ſo that he knew not what to ſay or do; or reproach[y], which he was loaded with by his friends, and was occaſioned by his afflictions, they judging from thence that he was a wicked man, and juſtly puniſhed for his ſins; the word uſed ſignifies a burning heat, ſuch as a man feels in his breaſt, and which fluſhes in his face, when he is filled with anger or with ſhame: therefore ſee thou mine affliction; not with his eye of omniſcience, that he knew he did, but with an eye of pity and compaſſion, and deliver him from it; or, I am full with ſeeing mine affliction, as Jarchi; or, I am one that ſees affliction[z]; that has an experience of it; ſees it all around me, and nothing elſe, Lam. iii. 1. am a ſpectator[a] of it, as ſome render it; but not a mere ſpectator, but one that has a ſenſible feeling of it: ſome take this, and the former clauſe both to be an addreſs to God, and render them, be ſatisfied with confuſion, and behold my affliction, as Broughton and others[b]; let the preſent calamity and confuſion I am in be ſufficient; let no more be laid upon me; be content with what has been done, and pity me, and do not lay thine hand heavier upon me, and add to my afflictions, as he thought he did, by what follows.

v. 16. For it increaſeth, &c.] That is, the affliction increaſeth; which is a reaſon why pity ſhould be ſhown him, ſeeing his troubles inſtead of abating were growing upon him; he had as much, or more than he could well bear, and yet more was added to it; ſo that he was an object of compaſſion: or, it liſteth itſelf up[c]; theſe proud waves of affliction riſe, ſwell, and lift themſelves on high, and threaten to overwhelm and utterly deſtroy; ſome render it as a wiſh, oh, that it increaſed[d]; that it would come to its height, and quickly and at once put an end to this miſerable life of mine: Job's affliction was a lingering one, it proceeded ſlowly; he wiſhed it would make more haſte, and become ſtronger, and ſoon diſpatch him; ſee ch. vi. 9. thou hunteſt me as a fierce lion; as the ramping ſhakal, as Mr. Broughton; the lion rampant, that is hungry, fierce, and ravenous, that purſues its prey with great eagerneſs, and never leaves till it comes up to it, when it ſeizes and devours it at once; or it, the affliction, hunteth me, purſues me cloſely, and will not leave, but threatens deſtruction to me; or rather, thou, that is God, who is often in ſcripture compared to a lion, particularly when afflicting, or about to aflict the ſons of men; ſee Iſ. xxxviii. 13. Hoſ. v. 14. and xiii. 7, 8. ſome[e] interpret the words, as if Job was compared to a lion hunted by men, at which darts were caſt, for which nets were prepared, and pits were dug: according to this ſenſe Job was dealt with as if, in the time of his proſperity, he had been like a fierce and cruel lion, preying upon and oppreſſing others; now the Lord was taking methods with him, both to reſtrain him from hurting others, and to chaſtize him for what he had done to them: but it would be much better to conſider this in a light more agreeable to Job's character, as a good man, a righteous one, who is as bold as a lion, and fears nothing, Prov. xxviii. 1. and ſuch an one was Job; and in his proſperity lifted up his head and walked boldly, and conſequently not fearing the frowns of men, nor the malice of Satan; but now this lion was hunted by the Lord himſelf, and compaſſed with his net, ch. xix. 6. and to this ſenſe is the verſion of Schultens, connecting the words with the preceding clauſe, him therefore who walked high as a lion, thou humbleſt; he who before carried his head high, being afraid of none, is now hunted down, and lies low enough, proſtrate and diſtreſſed: and again thou ſheweſt thyſelf marvellous upon me; or, thou returneſt[f] and ſheweſt, &c. after he had afflicted him in one way, he returned and afflicted him in another; and he not only repeated his afflictions, but deviſed new ways of afflicting him, uncommon ones, ſuch as raiſed admiration in all beholders, as things rare and uncommon do: Job's afflictions were ſurpriſing ones; to be ſtripped at once of his ſubſtance, ſervants, children, and health; and it might be more wonderful to ſome, that God, ſo gracious and merciful as he is, ſhould afflict in ſuch a ſevere and rigorous manner; and eſpecially that he ſhould afflict ſo good a man, one ſo juſt and upright as Job was, in ſuch a way: and it was even marvellous to Job himſelf, who was at a loſs to account for it, not being conſcious to himſelf of any groſs enormity he had committed, or of a ſinful courſe of life, or of any one ſin he had indulged to, wherefore God ſhould come forth againſt[g] him as an enemy, in ſo terrible a manner: ſo ſome render the particle.

v. 17. Thou reneweſt thy witneſſes againſt me, &c.] Not the devils, as ſome, nor Job's friends, as others; but rather afflictions, which were daily renewed, and frequently repeated, new troubles coming continually one upon another; which were brought as freſh witneſſes againſt him, which made the ſuit tireſome to him, the trial to laſt the longer, which he wiſhed was at an end; that the deciſive ſentence might be pronounced and executed, and he be diſpatched at once; but inſtead of that the affair was protracted by bringing in one witneſs after another, or one affliction upon the back of another, which were brought as witneſſes before him[h], as ſome render it; either to accuſe him, and convince of ſin, or as proofs of God's indignation againſt him, as in the next clauſe; or they were witneſſes againſt him with the prophane world, and even with his friends, who from hence concluded he muſt have been, and was a wicked man, that had ſo many and ſuch great afflictions laid upon him, and theſe continued and repeated; of which they judged theſe were full and ſufficient proofs and teſtimonies. Schultens renders it, thy incurſions, and interprets it of inſtruments of hunting, as nets and the like, to which afflictions may be compared: and increaſeſt thine indignation upon me; the tokens of it, by increaſing afflictions, and the ſenſe of it in his mind; for from his afflictions, and the increaſe of them, he judged of the indignation of God

God upon him, or against him [b], and the increaſe of it; as theſe were daily renewed, and were greater and greater, ſo was the ſenſe he had of the wrath and diſpleaſure of God againſt him; ſee ch. vi. 4. changes and war are againſt me; or with me, or upon me [c]; by changes are meant the various afflictive providences which attended him, which were repeated, or ſucceeded one another in their turns; great changes he had undergone in his eſtate and ſubſtance, from the greateſt man in the eaſt now become the pooreſt; in his family, his ſervants, and children being deſtroyed; in his body, being covered with boils; and in his mind, being filled with a ſenſe of God's diſpleaſure, and under the hidings of his face: and war was againſt him on every ſide, not only the law in his members was warring againſt the law of his mind, his corruptions working powerfully under his afflictions; and he was conflicting with Satan, and his principalities and powers; but even his friends were at war with him, yea God himſelf in his opinion counted and treated him as an enemy. Job was in a warfare-ſtate, and his afflictions came upon him like troops, and charged him one after another; or his afflictions were like an army [d], as the word may be rendered, many and numerous; and theſe were either repeated, or new ones ſucceeded others; different afflictions in their turns came upon him, and particularly an army of worms were continually running to and fro upon him; ſee ch. vii. 5. the word is rendered an appointed time, ch. vii. 1. and ſo ſome take it here, and may ſignify that all the changes and viciſſitudes in life he paſſed through, the various afflictions that came upon him, were at the ſet and appointed time, as well as there was an appointed time for him on earth, until his laſt change came.

v. 18. Wherefore then haſt thou brought me forth out of the womb? &c.] Into this world; this act is rightly aſcribed by Job to the Lord, as it is by David, Pſ. xxii. 9. and lxxi. 6. which kind act of God Job complains of, and wiſhes it had never been, ſeeing his life was now ſo miſerable and uncomfortable; here he returns to his former complaints, wiſhes, and expoſtulations, expreſſed with ſo much vehemence and paſſion in v. 3. and for which his friends blamed him, and endeavoured to convince him of his error in ſo doing; but it does not appear, that their arguments carried any force in them with him, or had any effect upon him; he ſtill continues in the ſame mind, and by repeating juſtifies what he had ſaid; and thought he had ſufficient reaſon to wiſh he had never been born, that he had died in the womb, ſince his afflictions were ſo very great and increaſing, and ſince God purſued him as a fierce lion; and, according to his ſenſe of things, his indignation againſt him appeared more and more, and his life was a continued ſucceſſion of trouble and diſtreſs: and that I had given up the ghoſt; that is, in the womb, and had never been brought out of it, at leaſt alive; or it may be rendered not as a wiſh, but as an affirmation, I ſhould have given up the ghoſt; or, ſo or then I ſhould have expired [e]; if ſuch care had not been taken of me, if God had not been ſo officious to me as to take me out of my mother's womb at the proper time, I ſhould have died in it, and that would have been my grave; and which would have been more eligible than to come into the world, and live ſuch a miſerable life as I now live: and no eye had ſeen me; no eye would have ſeen him, had he not been taken out of the womb; or however if he had died directly, would not have ſeen him alive; and an abortive or ſtill-born child few ſee, or care to ſee; and had he been ſuch an one, he had never been ſeen in the circumſtances he now was; and by this he ſuggeſts, that he was now ſuch a ſhocking ſight as was not fit to be ſeen by men, and which would have been prevented, had he died in the womb.

v. 19. I ſhould have been as though I had not been, &c.] For though it cannot be ſaid abſolutely of ſuch an one, an abortive or untimely birth, that it is a non-entity, or never exiſted; yet comparatively it is as if it never had a being; it being ſeen by none or very few, it having had no name, nor any converſation among men; but at once buried, and buried in forgetfulneſs, as if no ſuch one had ever been; ſee Eccleſ. vi. 3, 4, 5. This Job wiſhed for, for ſo ſome render it, oh, that I had been, as tho' I had never been [f]; and then he would have never been involved in ſuch troubles he was, he would have been free from all his afflictions and diſtreſſes, and never have had any experience of the ſorrows that now ſurrounded him: I ſhould have been carried from the womb to the grave; if he had not been brought out of it, the womb had been his grave, as in Jer. xx. 17. or if he had died in it, and had been ſtill-born, he would quickly have been carried to his grave; he would have ſeen and known nothing of life and of the world, and the things in it; and particularly of the troubles that attend mortals here: his paſſage in it and through it would have been very ſhort, or none at all, no longer than from the womb to the grave; and ſo ſhould never have known what ſorrow was, or ſuch afflictions he now endured; ſuch an one being in his eſteem happier than he; ſee Eccl. iv. 3.

v. 20. Are not my days few? &c.] They are ſo, the days of every man are but few; ſee ch. xiv. 1. Pſ. xc. 10. the remainder of Job's days were but few; conſidering the courſe of nature, and eſpecially the ſore afflictions he had on him, it could not be thought his days on earth were many; in all likelihood, according to human probability, he had but a few days to live: or are not my days a ſmall little thing [g]? it is as an handsbreadth, as nothing before God, Pſ. xxxix. 5. ceaſe then; that is, from afflicting him; ſince he had ſo ſhort a time to live, he requeſts there might be ſome intermiſſion of his trouble; that he might have ſome intervals of comfort and refreſhment, that not all his days, which were ſo few, ſhould be ſpent in grief and ſorrow: ſome connect this with the preceding clauſe, and which is moſt agreeable to the accents, ſhall not the fewneſs of my days ceaſe [h]? I have but a few days, and theſe few days will ſoon ceaſe; therefore give me ſome reſpite from my afflictions; and ſo the Targum, "are not my days ſwift and ceaſing?" and let me alone; don't follow me with afflictions, or diſturb and diſtreſs me with them; but take off thine hand, that I may have ſome reſt and eaſe; ſee ch. vii. 10. or put from from me; thine anger, as Kimchi, or thine army, as Junius and Tremellius; or thy camp, as Cocceius; that is, decamp from me, remove thy troops, the changes and war that are againſt me, by which I am beſieged, ſurrounded, and ſtraitened; let me be delivered from them: that I may take comfort a little; that he might have ſome breathing-time, ſome reſpite from his troubles, ſome refreſhment to his ſpirit, ſome reviving to his fainting ſoul, ſome renewing of ſtrength, before he departed this life; ſee Pſ. xxxix. 13. ſo Aben Ezra and Gerſom render it: that I may be ſtrengthened; or that his heart might gather ſtrength.

℣. 21. Before I go whence I ſhall not return, &c.] Before he went out of the world, the way of all fleſh, to the grave his long home, from whence there is no return to this world, and to the buſineſs and affairs of it; to a man's houſe, his family and his friends, to converſe with them as before, there will be no return until the reſurrection, which Job does not here deny, as ſome have thought; it was a doctrine he well underſtood, and ſtrongly aſſerts in ch. xix. 26, 27. but this muſt be underſtood in the ſame ſenſe as in ch. vii. 9, 10. even to the land of darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death; which deſcribes not the ſtate of the damned, as ſome Popiſh interpreters carry it; for Job had no thought nor fear of ſuch a ſtate; but the grave, which is called a land, or country, it being large and ſpacious, and full of inhabitants; a land of darkneſs, a very dark one, where the body ſeparated from the ſoul is deprived of all light; where the ſun, moon, and ſtars are never ſeen; nor is there the leaſt crevice that light can enter in at, or be ſeen by thoſe that dwell in thoſe ſhades, which are the ſhadow of death itſelf; deadly ſhades, thick and groſs ones, the darkeſt ſhades, where death itſelf is, or dead men are, deſtitute of light and life; where no pleaſure, comfort, and converſation, can be had; and therefore a land in itſelf moſt undeſirable:

℣. 22. A land of darkneſs, as darkneſs itſelf, &c.] Not merely like it, but truly ſo; as groſs thick darkneſs, like that of Egypt, that might be felt; even blackneſs of darkneſs, which is as dark as it poſſibly can be; not only dark, but darkneſs, extremely dark: and of the ſhadow of death; which is repeated for the illuſtration and confirmation of it, as having in it all kind of darkneſs, and that to the greateſt degree: without any order, or orders[1]; or viciſſitudes and ſucceſſions of day and night, ſummer and winter, heat and cold, wet and dry; or revolutions of ſun, moon, and ſtars, or of the conſtellations, as Aben Ezra; and whither perſons go without any order, either of age, ſex, or ſtation; ſometimes a young man, ſometimes an old man, and the one before the other; ſometimes a man, ſometimes a woman; ſometimes a king, prince, and nobleman, and ſometimes a peaſant; ſometimes a rich man, and ſometimes a poor man; no order is obſerved, but as death ſeizes them they are brought and laid in the grave, and there is no order there; the bones and duſt of one and the other in a ſhort time are mixed together, and there is no knowing to whom they belong, only by the omniſcient God: and where the light is as darkneſs; were there any thing in the grave that could with any propriety be called light, even that is nothing but darkneſs; darkneſs and light are the ſame thing there: or when it ſhineth it is darkneſs[k]; that is, when the ſun ſhines brighteſt here, as at noonday, it is entire darkneſs in the grave; no light is diſcerned there, the rays of the ſun cannot penetrate there; and could they, there is no viſive faculty in the dead to receive them; all darkneſs is in thoſe ſecret places.

CHAP. XI.

IN this chapter Zophar the Naamathite, Job's third friend, attacks him, and that with great acrimony and ſeverity, and with much indecency; he charges him not only with loquacity, and vain babling, but with lying, and with ſcoffing at God, and good men, ℣. 1, 2, 3. which he attempts to ſupport by ſome things Job had ſaid, miſrepreſented by him, ℣. 4. and wiſhes that God would take him in hand, and convince him of the wiſdom of the divine proceedings with him, and of his lenity and mercy to him, ℣. 5, 6. and then diſcourſes of the unſearchableneſs of God in his counſels, and conduct; of his ſovereignty, and of his power, and of the vanity and folly of men, ℣. 7—12. and as his friends before him, having inſinuated that Job was guilty of ſome heinous ſin, or ſins, and eſpecially of hypocriſy, adviſes him to repentance and reformation, and then it would be well with him; and he ſhould enjoy much comfort, peace, and ſafety, even to old age, ℣. 13—19. and concludes it ſhould go ill with the wicked man and the hypocrite, ſuch as he ſuggeſts Job was, ℣. 20.

℣. 1. Then anſwered Zophar the Naamathite, &c.] The third of Job's friends, that came to viſit him, ch. ii. 11. ſee the note there; and who perhaps might be the youngeſt, ſince his turn was to ſpeak laſt; and he appears to have leſs modeſty and prudence, and more fire and heat in him, than his other friends; though he might be the more irritated by obſerving, that their arguments were baffled by Job, and had no manner of effect on him, to cauſe him to recede from his firſt ſentiments and conduct: and ſaid; as follows.

℣. 2. Should not the multitude of words be anſwered? &c.] Zophar inſinuates, that Job was a mere babler, a talkative man, that had words, but no matter, ſaid a great deal, but there was nothing in what he ſaid; that his words were but wind, yea in effect that he was a fool, who is commonly full of words, and is known by the multitude of them; and whereas he might think to bear down all before him in this way, and to diſcourage perſons from giving him an anſwer; this Zophar ſuggeſts ſhould not be the caſe, nor would he be deterred hereby from giving one, which he now undertook: ſome ſupply it, as Bar Tzemach, ſhould not a man of a multitude of words[l], &c. a verboſe man, a dealer in many words, and nothing elſe, ſhould not he be anſwered? if he uſes nothing but words, and there's no argument in them, they ſeem not to deſerve ſerve an anſwer, unleſs it be to ſhew the emptineſs of them, expoſe a man's folly, and pull down his pride and vanity: and ſhould a man full of talk be juſtified? or, a man of lips[t], an eloquent man, or one that affects to be ſo; a man of a fine ſpeech, who artfully colours things, and makes a ſhew of wiſdom and truth, when there are neither in what he ſays; is ſuch a man to be juſtified? he would ſeem to be in his own eyes at leaſt, if not in the eyes of others, if not anſwered; he would be thought to have carried his point, to have had the better of the argument, and to have got the victory by dint of words, and power of oratory; for this is not to be underſtood of juſtification before God; for as no man is heard and accepted by him for his much ſpeaking, as was the opinion of the heathens, ſo neither are any juſtified on account of their many words, any more than their many works; ſince, in a multitude of words, there are often not only much folly and weakneſs, but vanities and ſins, Prov. x. 19. Eccl. v. 7. there is indeed a ſenſe in which a man is juſtified by his words, Matt. xii. 37. when he confeſſes Chriſt, and profeſſes to be juſtified by his righteouſneſs, and believes in that, and pleads it as his juſtifying righteouſneſs; he is juſtified by that righteouſneſs which is contained in the confeſſion and profeſſion of his faith; but this is not here meant.

℣. 3. Shou'd thy lies make men hold their peace, &c.] By which he means, either lies in common, untruths wilfully told, which are ſins of a ſcandalous nature, which good men will not dare to commit knowingly; and to give a man, eſpecially ſuch a man, the lie, is very indecent; and to charge a man falſely with it is very injurious: or elſe doctrinal ones, errors in judgment, falſhoods concerning God and things divine; which not only are not of the truth, for no lie is of the truth, but are againſt it; and indeed where the caſe is notorious in either ſenſe, men ſhould not be ſilent, or be as men deaf and dumb, as the word[u] ſignifies, as if they did not hear the lies told them, or were unconcerned about them, or connived at them: David would not ſuffer a liar to be near him, nor dwell in his houſe, Pſ. ci. 7. a common liar ought to be reproved and rejected; and doctrinal liars and lies ſhould be oppoſed and reſiſted; truth ſhould be contended for, and nothing be done againſt it, but every thing for it: it is criminal to be ſilent at either ſort of lies; nor ſhould the bold and bluſtering manner in which they are told frighten men from a detection of them, which perhaps is what may be hinted at here[w]; ſome render the words[x], ſhould thine iniquity frighten men? they are not ſo ſtrong and nervous as to appear unanſwerable, and deter men from undertaking a reply unto them: and when thou mockeſt, ſhall no man make thee aſhamed? here Job is repreſented as a mocker of God, which is inferred from ch. x. 3. and at his friends, and the arguments they uſed, and the advice they gave, which is concluded from his words, in ch. vi. 25, 26. and as one hardened, who was not, and could not be made aſhamed of what he had ſaid againſt either, by any thing that had been offered for his reproof and conviction: to make a mock of God, or a jeſt of divine things, or ſcoff at good men, is very bad; indeed it is the character of the worſt of men; and ſuch ſhould be made aſhamed, if poſſible, by expoſing their ſin and folly; and if not here, they will be covered with ſhame hereafter, when they ſhall appear before God, the Judge of all, who will not be mocked, and ſhall ſee the ſaints at the right hand of Chriſt, whom they have jeered and ſcoffed at: but this was not Job's true character; he was no mocker of God nor of good men; in this he was wronged and injured, and had nothing of this ſort to be made aſhamed of.

℣. 4. For thou haſt ſaid, &c.] What follows is produced to ſupport the charge, eſpecially of lying, which ſeems to be founded on what he had ſaid in ch. vi. 10, 30. My doctrine is pure; free from error, unadulterated, unmixed, not blended with heatheniſh principles and human doctrines; but tending to purity of heart and life, as every word of God, and doctrine that comes from him is pure, yea very pure, like ſilver purified ſeven times; and ſuch was Job's doctrine which he received from God, took[y] up and profeſſed, taught and delivered to others, ſo far as was agreeable to the will of God, and the revelation he had then made: and it appears that Job had very clear and ſublime notions of God, of his being and perfections, of his works of nature, providence, and grace; of Chriſt his living Redeemer, of redemption and juſtification by him, and of the reſurrection of the dead; and had purer and better notions of divine things than his friends had, and ſpoke righter things of God than they did, God himſelf being witneſs, ch. xlii. 7, 8. ſome interpret this of the purity of his life and converſation: he is farther charged with ſaying: and I am clean in thine eyes; ſpeaking to God, as Jarchi obſerves; and indeed ſo he was, and every believer is, in an evangelic ſenſe; as to the new man, which is created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, is without ſin, and cannot commit it; and as waſhed from all ſin in the blood of Chriſt, and as cloathed with his righteouſneſs, in which the ſaints are faultleſs before the throne, and are unblameable and irreproveable in the ſight of God: but Zophar's meaning is, that Job had aſſerted that he was entirely free from ſin in himſelf, was wholly without it, and did not commit any; and had appealed to God, as knowing it to be true; and which he ſeems to have grounded on what he had ſaid, ch. x. 7. through a miſtake of his ſenſe; which was not that he was free from ſin entirely, but from any groſs, notorious ſin, or from a wicked courſe of living, and particularly from the ſin of hypocriſy, his friends ſuggeſted he was guilty of; otherwiſe he confeſſes himſelf a ſinner, and prays for the pardon of his ſins, and diſclaims perfection in himſelf; ſee ch. vii. 20, 21. and ix. 20, 30, 31. and indeed there is no creature in itſelf clean in the ſight of God, either angels or men; every man is naturally unclean; no good man is without ſin, without the being, indwelling, and commiſſion of it; nor will any truly gracious man ſay he is; he knows otherwiſe, and acknowledges it; he that ſays he is, muſt be an ignorant man, or a vain and phariſaical man; yea, muſt not ſay the truth: ſome have ſuſpected the firſt part of the words to be Job's, and I am clean; and the other Zophar's, explaining explaining them; that is, in thine eyes[z]; in his own apprehenſion, as if he had a high and conceited opinion of himſelf.

℣. 5. But O that God would ſpeak, &c.] To Job, and ſtop his mouth, ſo full of words; convict him of his lies, reprove him for his mocks and ſcoffs, and make him aſhamed of them; refute his falſe doctrine and oppoſe it, and ſhew him his folly and vanity in imagining it to be pure, and in conceiting himſelf to be free from ſin, and even in the ſight of God himſelf: Zophar ſeems by this wiſh to ſuggeſt, that what his friends had as yet ſpoke had had no effect upon Job, and ſignified nothing; and that he deſpaired of bringing him to any true ſenſe of himſelf and his caſe, but that God only could do it; and therefore he intreats he would take him in hand, and ſpeak unto him; as he had by his providences in afflicting him, ſo by his Spirit in teaching and inſtructing him; and he adds: and open his lips againſt thee; or rather, with thee, or to thee[a]; converſe with thee; ſpeak out his mind freely; diſcloſe the ſecrets of his wiſdom, as in the next verſe, and that for thy good; fully convince thee of thy ſins, miſtakes, and follies: for, notwithſtanding all the heat and warmth of Zophar's ſpirit, yet, being a good man, as it cannot be thought he ſhould wilfully and knowingly ſlander Job, and put a falſe gloſs on his words, ſo neither could he deſire any hurt or injury to be done him, or that God would deal with him as an enemy; only convince and reprove him for his ſin, and juſtify himſelf and his own conduct, which he imagined Job had arraigned.

℣. 6. And that he would ſhew thee the ſecrets of wiſdom, &c.] Either of ſound doctrine, in oppoſition to his own doctrine he had ſuch a vain opinion of; and then he would ſee, as he thought, that it was not ſo pure, as he imagined it to be: the goſpel, and the doctines of it are the wiſdom of God, the produce of it, and in which it is diſplayed; as in the doctrines of election to grace and glory, of redemption by Chriſt, of juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and pardon by his blood; by which all the divine perfections are glorified, the juſtice and holineſs of God, as well as his grace and mercy: and there are ſecrets or myſteries in this wiſdom of God, 1 Cor. ii. 6, 7. Matt. xiii. 11. or myſterious doctrines, which, though revealed, yet the modus, or manner of them, is not to be ſearched out and underſtood; ſuch is the trinity of perſons in the Godhead, the union of the two natures in Chriſt, the ſaints union to God and communion with him, the reſurrection of the dead, &c. and theſe and ſuch like them are only ſhewn by the Lord; men cannot come at them of themſelves, by their own natural reaſon and underſtanding; it is God that reveals them, in his word, and by his Spirit, and gives his people an increaſing knowledge of them, 1 Cor. ii. 9, 10. Pſ. xxv. 14. and and cxix. 18. or it may be rather the ſecrets of the wiſdom of divine providence, in the government of the world, and the ordering of all things in it according to the counſel of God, may be here meant; there is a great diſplay of the wiſdom of God in providence, and there are ſecrets in it indiſcoverable by creatures; his ways are paſt finding out, they are in the deep waters, and his footſteps are not known, nor to be traced; though ſometimes he makes his judgments manifeſt, and his mind in them; and what he does now which men know not, he ſhews them hereafter; eſpecially his own people, and particularly when in the ſanctuary of the Lord, and in the way of their duty, when every thing appears right and beautiful, they before were ready to complain of; ſee Rom. xi. 33. and then it is ſeen: that they are double to that which is! or to wiſdom[b]; as the word is rendered, in Prov. ii. 7. that is, to human wiſdom; and then the ſenſe is, that the ſecrets of divine wiſdom diſplayed, whether in the doctrines of grace or in the methods of providence, being ſhown and made manifeſt, would appear to be double; that is, vaſtly, yea infinitely to exceed the wiſdom of men; and that theſe which men are apt to arraign as weak and wrong, are the effects of the higheſt wiſdom, or they then appear ſo to a man of wiſdom[c]; ſo the ſupply may be made, as is in Mic. vi. 9. or elſe the ſenſe is, were Job let in to the ſecret wiſdom of God more, and into the purity and holineſs of his law, which ſome underſtand by that which is, or wiſdom, and render it according to the law[d]; and ſee what that requires, and how much ſhort he comes of it, and what and how many were his tranſgreſſions and violations of it; it then would be plain to him, that the puniſhment that God, in wiſdom, and according to his righteous law, might inflict upon him, would be double; or greatly, yea infinitely exceed thoſe afflictions he was now exerciſed with, and therefore he had no reaſon to complain; to which agrees what follows: know therefore that God exacteth of thee leſs than thine iniquities deſerve; or puniſhes, afflicts, or chaſtiſes, leſs than the deſerts of ſin; ſee Ezr. ix. 13. ſome render it, God exacteth of thee ſomething of thine iniquity; ſo Junius and Tremellius; according to which verſion the ſenſe is, that ſins are debts, and theſe many; and that payment of part of the debt of puniſhment for them is only required, which is not truth; for, though there is a debt of puniſhment due to juſtice for ſin, yet it is not part of it only that is required of the ſinner, but the whole, if any; for indeed no part of it is exacted of God's people, ſince the whole has been exacted of Chriſt, and he has anſwered and paid the whole debt, and blotted out the hand-writing againſt them; wherefore the word uſed has rather the ſignification of forgetfulneſs, and may be rendered, either God hath cauſed, or ſuffered thee to forget part of thine iniquity[e]; or thou couldſt never ſay that thou wert clean in his eye, and free from ſin; or, God himſelf has forgot part of thine iniquity[f]; in that he has afflicted thee ſo mildly, and with ſo much lenity; or, hath forgotten thee for thine iniquity[g]; forſook him, hid his face from him, laid his hand on him, and ſorely chaſtiſed him, ſo that he ſeemed to be forgotten by him, or he to forget to be gracious to him; all which were owing to his ſins, theſe were the cauſes of it; or, will condemn thee for thine iniquity[h].

℣. 7. Canſt thou by ſearching find out God?] God is not to be found out by human ſearch; that there is a God, may be found out by enquiring into the book of nature, by conſidering the creatures that are made, who all proclaim ſome firſt cauſe or maker of them, who is God; but then it cannot be be found out what God is, his nature, being, and perfections: an heathen philoſopher[h] being aſked by a certain king what God was, required a day to give in his anſwer; when that was up he deſired a ſecond, and ſtill went on aſking more; and being demanded the reaſon of his dilatorineſs, replied, the more he had conſidered the queſtion, the more obſcure it was to him: the world by wiſdom, or the wiſer part of the heathen world, knew not God; though they knew there was one, they knew not who and what he was; and therefore in ſome places altars were erected to the unknown God: and tho' ſome of the perfections of God may be inveſtigated from the works of nature, ſuch as the power, wiſdom, and goodneſs of God, Rom. i. 19, 20. yet not all his perfections, ſuch as his grace, mercy, &c. proclaimed and diſplayed in Chriſt; nor indeed his counſels, purpoſes, and decrees, which lie in his eternal mind, are the thoughts of his heart, the deep things of God, which none but the Spirit of God ſearches, knows, and reveals; and ſince Zophar's requeſt was, that God ſhould ſhew to Job the ſecrets of wiſdom, theſe may be meant here, either evangelical wiſdom, the wiſdom of God in a myſtery hid in his heart from everlaſting, and the myſterious truths and doctrines of it, things which eye has not ſeen, nor ear heard, nor has it entered into the heart of man to conceive of; theſe are not to be found out by human ſearch, but are by the revelation of God; or elſe the reaſons of the proceedings of God in providence, which are out of the reach of men, dark, intricate, myſterious, unſearchable, and paſt finding out: canſt thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? to the uttermoſt of his nature and perfections; all his attributes, the laſt of them, and the extremity thereof: that God is perfect and entire, wanting nothing, and is poſſeſſed of all perfections may be found out, or otherwiſe he would not be God; but his eſſence and attributes being infinite, can never be traced and comprehended by finite minds; there are ſome perfections of God we have no idea of, but are loſt in confuſion and amazement as ſoon as we think of them and reaſon about them, as his eternity and immenſity particularly; for, when we have rolled over in our minds millions and millions of ages, we are as far off from eternity as when we began; and when we have pervaded all worlds, and every ſpace and place, we have got no further into immenſity than at firſt; we are confounded when we think of a being without beginning and without bounds, unoriginated and unlimited; yea, even it is but a ſmall part of the works of God in creation that is known by men, or of God in and by them; nay, by divine revelation, which gives the cleareſt and moſt enlarged view of him, whereby he has proclaimed his name, a God gracious and merciful, &c. yet it is only his back-parts that are ſhewn, not his face; it is only through a glaſs, darkly, we now ſee; indeed, in the other world, we ſhall ſee him face to face, and as he is, yet then never comprehend his eſſence: and, after all, it is only in Chriſt that God is to be found, to ſaving purpoſes; in him, is the moſt glorious diſplay of him; being the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; and not only all his perfections are in him, as a divine perſon, but they are glorified by him as Mediator; every ſtep in ſalvation is taken in Chriſt, and every bleſſing of grace comes through him; what of the divine preſence and communion with God is enjoyed, is by him; and he will be the medium of the enjoyment of God, and of all the glory and happineſs of the ſaints in the world to come.

℣. 8. It is as high as heaven; what canſt thou do? &c.] Or, is higher than the heavens[i]; either the wiſdom of God and the ſecrets of it; the perfection of his wiſdom, by which he has made the heavens; or evangelical wiſdom, hid in his heart, and which the higheſt of creatures, the angels, come at the knowledge of only by revelation; and therefore, what can man do to find it out, unleſs God reveals it? or wiſdom diſplayed in dark providences, which can never be accounted for until the judgments of God are made manifeſt: or elſe, he that is God, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, is higher than the heavens; the heaven is his throne on which he ſits, and therefore he muſt be higher than that; the heavens, and heaven of heavens, cannot contain him; he fills up the infinite ſpace beyond them; how is it poſſible therefore to find him out, to comprehend him? deeper than hell; what canſt thou know? meaning, neither the grave nor the place of the damned, for both which Sheol is ſometimes uſed, but the centre or loweſt part of the earth; there is a depth in God, in his eſſence, in his thoughts, in his wiſdom, diſplayed in nature, providence, and grace, that is unfathomable; we can know nothing of it, but what he is pleaſed to make known; ſee Pſ. xcii. 5. Rom. xi. 33. the Targum of the verſe is, "in the heighth of heaven, what canſt thou do? in the law which is deeper than hell, what canſt thou know?"

℣. 9. The meaſure thereof is longer than the earth, and broader than the ſea.] Length is generally aſcribed to the earth, and width to the ſea; the ends of the earth are uſed for a great diſtance, and the ſea is called the great and wide ſea; ſee[k] Pſ. lxxii. 1. and civ. 25. but God and his perfections, particularly his wiſdom and underſtanding, are infinite, Pſ. cxlvii. 5. and will admit of no dimenſions; as his love, ſo his wiſdom, has an heighth which cannot be reached, a depth that cannot be fathomed, and a length and breadth immeaſurable; ſee Eph. iii. 18. from hence it appears that God is omniſcient, omnipreſent, and incomprehenſible; and ſince he is to be found in Chriſt, and in him only, it is in vain for us to ſeek for him elſewhere: next the ſovereignty of God is diſcourſed of.

℣. 10. If he cut off, &c.] The horns, power, dominion, and authority of the wicked; or the ſpirits of princes, or kingdoms and ſtates, whole nations, as he did the ſeven nations of Canaan; or families, as Job's, his ſervants, and his children; or particular perſons, by diſeaſes, or by judgments, by famine, ſword, and peſtilence; there is none can hinder him; he'll do what he pleaſes: or, as others render it, if he changes[l]; if he makes revolutions in governments, changes in families, and in the eſtates of men, as in Job's; or changes men's countenances by death, and ſends them out of time into eternity, there is no oppoſing him: or, if he paſſes through[m], as the word is ſometimes uſed; ſee Iſ. viii. 8. if he comes out of his place to puniſh the inhabitants of the earth, and goes through a kingdom and nation, making or ſuffering to be made devaſtations every where, as he went through the land of Egypt and ſmote all the firſt-born in it, there there is no ſtopping him: or, if he paſſes on [n], or from hence, or goes away; ſee 1 Sam. xi. 3. or departs from a people or particular perſon, even his own people, and hides his face from them, and is long, at leaſt as they think, before he returns; who can behold him, or find him out, or cauſe him to ſhew himſelf? ſee Job xxiii. 3, 8, 9. and xxxiv. 29. or, if he ſubverts [o] and overturns things, or ſhould reduce the world and all things in it to a chaos, as at the deluge, or as he overturned the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, or ſhould ſet on fire the whole courſe of nature, and burn up the whole world and all in it, and reduce it to aſhes, as he will; there is none can ſtay his hand, and obſtruct him in his deſigns and meaſures: and ſhut up; ſhould he do ſo; ſhut up in a civil ſenſe, either in a priſon, as Gerſom, or in the hands of an enemy, by giving them unto them, to be incloſed and ſtraitened by them, there is none can deliver; Pſ xxxi. 8. Deut. xxxii. 30. or to ſhut them up as he did Noah in the ark, by protecting them by his power and providence, and ſo appear to be on their ſide, and for them; who then can be againſt them? or what does it ſignify if any are, if the Lord ſhuts them up and keeps them cloſe? or in a ſpiritual ſenſe, if he concludes men in ſin, and ſhuts them up in unbelief, and under the law; who but himſelf can ſet them free? or, if good men are ſhut up in their frames, and ſtraitened in their ſouls, that they cannot come forth in the lively exerciſe of grace, and free diſcharge of duty; there is no opening for them till he pleaſes, Iſ. lxxxviii. 8. Job xii. 14. or gather together, then who can hinder him? either gathers them into one place, in a civil ſenſe; or in a gracious manner, with great mercies and everlaſting kindneſs to himſelf, to have communion with him; to his Son, to participate of the bleſſings of his grace, and to his church and people, to enjoy all ſpiritual privileges with them; or, gathers men at and by death; ſee ch. xxxiv. 14, 15. and as he will gather them at the laſt day, even all nations, before him, the tares, and burn them and his wheat, and put them into his garner; and when he does any and every of theſe things, who can hinder him or turn him back from doing what he pleaſes: Job ſays much the ſame in ch. ix. 12. the Targum is, "if he paſſes through and ſhuts up the heavens with clouds, and gathers armies, who can turn him back?"

℣. 11. For he knoweth vain men, &c.] Or, men of vanity [p], as all men are; men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree a lie, and they are both lighter than vanity, Pſ. lxii. 9. and the Lord knows them, and knows them to be ſo; he knows all men, and all that is in them; he knows the vanity of their minds, and the vain thoughts that are in them; all their vain and idle words, and their vain lives and converſations; and therefore it is no wonder he does the above things at his pleaſure: he ſeeth wickedneſs alſo; the wickedneſs of their hearts and lives, their ſecret and open wickedneſs, their wicked thoughts, words, and actions; or, men of wickedneſs; even wicked men; they are all ſeen by him; nothing is or can be hid from him; he is God omniſcient, the ſearcher of the hearts, and trier of the reins of the children of men: will he not then conſider it; ſo as to puniſh or correct for it? he will: or, he does not conſider [q]; he ſeems as if he did not; as if he took no notice of wicked men, and of their wickedneſs, becauſe he does not immediately puniſh or correct for it; or, he has no need to take any time to conſider thereof, he ſees and knows at once what it is, and what men are: Gerſom reads this clauſe in connection with the former; he ſees the men of wickedneſs, and him who does not conſider the ways of the Lord; or, the man does not conſider that God ſees him; ſo Ben Melech.

℣. 12. For vain man would be wiſe, &c.] Or hollow [r], empty man; empty of all that is good, though full of all unrighteouſneſs; without God, the knowledge, love, and fear of him; without Chriſt, the knowledge of him, faith in him, and love to him; deſtitute of the Spirit, and of his grace, having no good thing in him: yet ſuch a man would be wiſe; not deſirous of true wiſdom, but would be thought to be wiſe; he conceits himſelf that he is very wiſe, and he would fain have others think ſo of him; or is, or may, or will be wiſe [s]; may be made wiſe by the chaſtiſements of God through afflictions, being ſanctified to him by the grace of God; though he is a vain man, and alſo is what is after ſaid of him; afflicting diſpenſations are ſometimes teaching ones, and in the ſchool of afflictions many uſeful leſſons are learnt, whereby men become wiſer; ſee Pſ. xciv. 12. though ſome underſtand the word in a very different ſenſe, and interpret it bold, audacious, proud, and haughty; man takes heart [t] and lifts up himſelf againſt God, ſtretches out his hand, and hardens his heart againſt him: though man be born like a wild aſs's colt; fooliſh and ſtupid, without underſtanding of divine and ſpiritual things; given to luſt and wantonneſs, to ſerve divers luſts and pleaſures; not ſubject to the yoke of the law of God, ſtubborn, refractory, and untameable, but by the grace of God; the aſs, and eſpecially the wild aſs, and the colt of one, being a very ſtupid creature, and a very luſtful and wanton one, chuſes to be free, will not bear the yoke, but ranges about in deſart places; ſee Job xxxix. 5. Jer. ii. 23, 24. ſome render the words, and a wild aſs's colt is, or may be born a man [u]; that is, one that is by his firſt birth, and by his life and converſation, like a wild aſs's colt, is or may be born again, and be made a new man, as Jarchi alſo interprets it, and ſo become a wiſe, knowing, and good man, which is a great truth; but whether the truth in this text, is not ſo clear: the Targum ſeems to incline this way; "a refractory youth that grows wiſe ſhall become a great man."

℣. 13. If thou prepare thine heart, and ſtretch out thine hands towards him;] In this and the following verſes Zophar proceeds to give ſome advice to Job; which, if taken, would iſſue in his future happineſs, but otherwiſe it would be ill with him; he adviſes him to pray to God with an heart prepared for ſuch ſervice; ſo ſome render the laſt clauſe in the imperative, ſtretch out thine hands [w] towards him; that is, towards God; for, though not expreſſed, is implied, whoſe immenſity, ſovereignty, and omniſcience, Zophar had been diſcourſing of; and, though ſtretching out the hands is ſometimes a geſture of perſons in diſtreſs and mournful circumſtances, thereby ſignifying their grief and ſorrow, row, and of other in great danger, in order to lay up any thing for ſafety; and of conquered perſons reſigning themſelves up into the hands of the conqueror; and of ſuch who are deſirous of being in friendſhip, alliance, and aſſociation with others; yet it is alſo ſometimes uſed as for the whole of religious worſhip, Pſ. xliv. 20. ſo particularly for prayer, Pſ. lxxxviii. 9. and this was what all Job's friends adviſed him to, to humble himſelf before God, to pray for the forgiveneſs of his ſins, and for the removal of his afflictions and deliverance from them; ſee ch. v. 8. and viii 5, 6. in order to which it is proper the heart ſhould be prepared; as it is requiſite it ſhould be to every good work by the grace of God, ſo to this: and then may it be ſaid to be prepared for ſuch ſervice, when the Spirit of God is given as a ſpirit of grace and ſupplication, whereby the heart is impreſſed with a ſenſe of its wants, and ſo knows what to pray for; and arguments and fit words are put into the mind and mouth, and it knows how to pray as it ſhould; and is enabled to approach the throne of grace with ſincerity, fervency, and in the exerciſe of faith, being ſprinkled from an evil conſcience by the blood of Jeſus, and reſigned to the divine will, in all its petitions it is directed to make: now this is the work of God, to prepare the heart; the preparation of the heart, as well as the anſwer of the tongue, is from the Lord; he is prayed to for it, and it is affirmed he will do it, Prov. xvi. 1. 1 Chron. xxix. 18. Pſ. x. 17. but it is here repreſented as if it was man's act, which is ſaid not to ſuggeſt any power in man to do it of himſelf; at leaſt this is not the evangelic ſenſe of ſuch phraſes; for Zophar might be of a more legal ſpirit, and not ſo thoroughly acquainted with the evangelic ſtile; but this might be ſaid to ſhow the neceſſity of ſuch a preparation, and to ſtir up to a concern for it, and to expect and look for it from and by the grace of God.

℣. 14. If iniquity be in thine hand, &c.] For, as the heart muſt be prepared for the ſtretching out of the hand in prayer to God, ſo it is not any hand that is to be ſtretched out or lifted up unto God; not hands full of blood, or defiled with ſin, but holy hands; ſee Iſ. i. 15. 1 Tim. ii. 8. it is not ſaid, if iniquity be in thine heart, or on thy conſcience, put it far away; for ſin cannot be put away out of the heart, it will have a place there as long as we live; tho' it ſhould not be regarded, cheriſhed, and nouriſhed there; if ſo, God will not hear prayer, Pſ. lxvi. 18. and nothing can put away or remove afar off guilt from the conſcience, but the blood of Jeſus; which, being ſprinkled, purifies the heart and purges the conſcience from dead works; but it is ſaid, if it is in thine hand, which is the inſtrument of action, and may ſignify the commiſſion of ſin, and a ſeries and courſe of ſinning, which Job's friends ſuſpected he was privately guilty of; and therefore adviſe him to leave off ſuch a ſinful courſe, and abſtain from all appearance of evil, and live a holy and godly converſation: and let not wickedneſs dwell in thy tabernacles; in any room or apartment of his houſe; ſome reſtrain this, and iniquity in the former clauſe, to ill-gotten goods, obtained by rapine and oppreſſion, which he is adviſed to reſtore to thoſe that had been injured by him; but there is no need to limit it to any ſin: beſides, wickedneſs may be put for wicked men, and the ſenſe be, that, as he ſhould not indulge to any iniquity himſelf, ſo neither ſhould he ſuffer wicked men to dwell in his houſe, but make a general reformation in himſelf and in his family.

℣. 15. For then ſhalt thou lift up thy face without ſpot, &c.] Either before men, being in all good conſcience, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord, blameleſs, exerciſing a conſcience void of offence towards God and men; and ſo be able to ſay as Samuel did, Whoſe aſs have I taken? &c. 1 Sam. xii. 3. or rather before God, as in ch. xxi. 26. uſing an holy boldneſs and an humble confidence with him at the throne of grace, in the view of the blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of his living Redeemer he had knowledge of, as every true believer may; who, though he is not without ſpot in himſelf, yet, being waſhed in the blood of Chriſt, and cloathed in his righteouſneſs, he is all fair, and without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; and may ſtand before the throne without fault, and appear before God, and in his ſight unblameable and irreproveable: yea, thou ſhalt be ſtedfaſt; firm and ſolid, rooted and grounded in the love of God; having a firm perſuaſion of Intereſt in it, and that nothing ſhall ſeparate from it; being built on the foundation of Chriſt, and eſtabliſhed in the exerciſe of faith on him; the affections being ſteady towards him, and fixedly ſet on divine and heavenly things; continuing ſtedfaſt in the doctrines of grace, and not carried about with ſtrange doctrines, or every wind of doctrine; as well as conſtant and immoveable in the work of the Lord, always employed in his ſervice, and doing his will, from which nothing can move; not reproach, affliction, and perſecution; and to be thus ſteady and fixed is a great privilege: and ſhalt not fear; evil tidings of evil times; of wars and rumours of wars, famine, peſtilence, earthquakes, and other judgments; of changes and revolutions in kingdoms and ſtates, or of what is coming upon the world, according to promiſe and prophecy, the heart being fixed and well eſtabliſhed, truſting in the Lord; nor be afraid of evil men or devils, or any enemies whatever, nor of death, the king of terrors, that being one of the believer's bleſſings, and a friend of his; nor of hell and damnation, or the ſecond death, or wrath to come; from all which the ſaints are ſecure.

℣. 16. Becauſe thou ſhalt forget thy miſery, &c.] Former afflictions and diſtreſſes; having an abundance of proſperity and happineſs, and long continued; and ſo, in proceſs of time, the miſeries and diſtreſſes before endured are forgotten; thus it was with Joſeph in his advanced ſtate, and therefore he called one of his ſons Manaſſeh, Gen. xli. 51. and as it is with convinced and converted perſons and believers in Chriſt, who, under firſt convictions and awakenings, are filled with ſorrow and diſtreſs, on a view of their miſerable eſtate by nature; but when Chriſt is revealed to them as their Saviour and Redeemer, and the love of God is ſhed abroad in their hearts, and they have faith and hope in Jeſus, and a comfortable view of heaven and happineſs, and eternal life by him, they forget their ſpiritual poverty, and remember their miſery no more, unleſs it be to magnify the riches of the grace of God; ſee Prov. xxxi. 6, 7. and remember it as waters that paſs away; either the waters of the ſtream in a river, which, when gone, are ſeen and remembered no more; or as waters occaſioned by floods in the winter-ſeaſon, which when over, and ſummer is come, are gone and are no more diſcerned; and as they paſs from the places where they were, ſo from the minds of men: or it may be, reſpect is had to the waters of Noah's flood, which, according to the divine promiſe and oath, ſhould no more go over the earth; and being paſt and gone, and no fear or danger of their returning, are forgotten.

℣. 17. And thine age ſhall be clearer than the noon-day, &c.] That is, the remainder of his days; the latter part of his life, which was yet to come, ſhould be no more attended with the darkneſs of adverſity; but the light of proſperity ſhould ſhine upon him, and exceed the light of the ſun at noon-day: the phraſe is expreſſive of the wonderful change there ſhould be in his ſtate and circumſtances; ſee Iſ. lviii. 10. thou ſhalt ſhine forth; like the riſing ſun, or as when it breaks forth out of a cloud; in a temporal ſenſe, it may be underſtood of his enjoying health, wealth, and friends, the candle of the Lord ſhining upon him, as in days paſt; and in a ſpiritual ſenſe, of his being favoured with the light of God's countenance, the ſun of righteouſneſs riſing upon him, with healing in his wings; the graces of the ſpirit being brightened, and in lively exerciſe, and a large ſhare of ſpiritual light and knowledge being given: the word uſed has a contrary ſenſe, and ſignifies darkneſs and obſcurity, and may be rendered although thou art, or haſt been, or mayeſt be dark[x]; under dark and afflictive providences, as he had been, and ſtill was; and in darkneſs of ſoul, under the hidings of God's face; yet thou ſhalt be as the morning; whoſe light breaks forth ſuddenly, and makes every thing gay and chearful; eſpecially a morning without clouds, when it is bright and clear, and is increaſing more and more: by this metaphor is ſignified, that Job would at once emerge out of his darkneſs, afflictions, and trouble, and have abundance of joy and comfort, which would be increaſing in every ſenſe; ſee Prov. iv. 18.

℣. 18. And thou ſhalt be ſecure, &c.] From coming into like darkneſs, difficulties, and diſtreſs again, and from every evil and enemy; nothing ſhall come nigh to diſturb and hurt, nothing to be feared from any quarter, all around: or, ſhalt be confident[y]; have a ſtrong faith and full aſſurance of it, in the love of God, in the living Redeemer, and in the promiſes which reſpect the life that now is, and that which is to come: becauſe there is hope; of the mercy of God, of ſalvation by Chriſt, and of eternal glory and happineſs, as well as of a continuance of outward proſperity; faith and hope mutually aſſiſt each other; faith is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, and hope of better and future things on a good foundation encourages faith and confidence: yea, thou ſhalt dig about thee; to let in ſtakes for the pitching and fixing of tents to dwell in, and for more commodious paſturage; or for wells of water, for the ſupply both of the family and the flocks; or rather, for ditches and trenches to ſecure from thieves and robbers, or for drains to carry off floods of water: and thou ſhalt take thy reſt in ſafety; lie down on the bed and ſleep in the night-ſeaſon in peace and quietneſs, having nothing to fear; being well intrenched, and ſecure from depredations and inundations; and more eſpecially, being hedged about and protected by the power and providence of God; ſee Pſ. iii. 5. and iv. 8. the Targum is, "thou ſhalt prepare a grave, and lie down, and ſleep ſecure."

℣. 19. Alſo, thou ſhalt lie down, and none ſhall make thee afraid, &c.] Either lie down on his bed, as before, or by his flocks, and where they lie down, and none ſhould diſturb him or them; not thieves and robbers, ſuch as the Chaldeans and Sabæans had been to him, nor lions, bears, and wolves: yea, many ſhall make ſuit unto thee; make their ſupplications, preſent their requeſts and petitions for relief under neceſſitous circumſtances, or for protection from the injuries and inſults of others; as the poor and needy, the widow and fatherleſs, had done to him in times paſt, when in his proſperity, and when he was a friend unto them, and the father of them; ſee Prov. xix. 6. or, the great ones[z] ſhall make ſuit to thee; to have his favour and friendſhip, his counſel and advice, his company and converſation; he ſhould be applied unto and courted by men of all ſorts, which would be no ſmall honour to him; ſee Pſ. xlv. 12.

℣. 20. But the eyes of the wicked ſhall fail, &c.] Either through grief and envy at Job's proſperity, and with looking for his fall into troubles again; or rather, through expectation of good things for themſelves, and for deliverance out of trouble, but all in vain; ſee Lam. iv. 17. and they ſhall not eſcape; afflictions and calamities in this life, nor the righteous judgment, nor wrath to come: or, refuge ſhall periſh from them[a]; there will be none to betake themſelves unto for ſafety; in vain will they ſeek it from men; refuge will fail them, and no man care for them; and in vain will they fly to rocks and mountains to fall upon them: and their hope ſhall be as the giving up of the ghoſt; it is with them, as when a man is juſt expiring, and it is all over with him, and there is no hope of his reviving; ſo the hope of wicked men is a dying hope, a loſt hope; it is not hope, but deſpair; their hope is gone, and they are loſt and undone; and if they retain their hope in life, when they come to die they have none; though the righteous has hope in his death, their hope dies with them, if not before them: or, their hope is the giving up of the ghoſt[b]; all they have to hope and wiſh for is death, to relieve them from their preſent troubles and agonies they are in; and ſometimes are left amidſt their guilt, deſpair, and horror, to deſtroy themſelves: now Zophar by all this would ſuggeſt, that ſhould not Job take his advice, he would appear to be ſuch a wicked man, whoſe eyes would fail for his own help, and would not eſcape the judgments of God here and hereafter, and would die without hope, in black deſpair; or at leaſt without any hope that would be of any avail.

CHAP.

CHAP. XII.

IN this and the two following chapters Job makes answer to Zophar's discourse in the former; who having represented him as an ignorant man, he resents it, and begins his defence with a biting sarcasm on him and his friends, as being self-conceited, and having an high opinion of their own wisdom, as if none had any but themselves, ℣. 1, 2. and puts in his claim for a share with them, as being not at all inferior to them. ℣. 3. and then refutes their notions, that it always goes well with good men, and ill with bad men; whereas the reverse is the truth, ℣. 4—6. and which they might learn from the brute creatures; or he sends them to them, to observe to them, that the best things they had knowledge of concerning God and his providence, and of his wisdom therein, were common notions, that every one had, and might be learned from beasts, birds, and fishes; particularly, that all things in the whole universe are made by God, and sustained by him, and are under his direction, and at his disposal, ℣. 7—10. and such things might as easily be searched, examined, and judged of, as sounds are tried by the ear, and food by the mouth, ℣. 11. and seeing it is usual among men, at least it may be expected that men in years should have a considerable share of wisdom and knowledge, it might be strongly inferred from thence, without any difficulty, that the most perfect and consummate wisdom was in God, ℣. 12, 13. whence he passes on to discourse most admirably and excellently of the wisdom and power of God in the dispensations of his providence, in a variety of instances; which shews his knowledge of his perfections, ways, and works, was not inferior to that of his friends, ℣. 14—25.

℣. 1. And Job answered and said,] In reply to Zophar, and in defence of himself, what is recorded in this and the two following chapters.

℣. 2. No doubt but ye are the people, &c.] Which is said not seriously, meaning that they were but of the common people, that are generally ignorant, and have but little knowledge, at least of things sublime, especially in matters of religion; wherefore, tho' they took upon them to be his teachers, and dictators to him, and censors of him, they were not above the rank, but in the class of people of low and mean understandings; see John, vii. 49. this sense indeed agrees with what is after said, who knoweth not such things as these? but since Job compares himself with them, and asserts he is not inferior to them, it supposes them to have a degree of knowledge and understanding of things somewhat above the common people; wherefore these words are to be taken ironically, exposing their vanity and self-conceit: ye are the people; the only, and all the people in the world of importance and consequence for good sense and wisdom; the only wise and knowing folk, the men of reason and understanding; all the rest are but fools and asses, or like the wild ass's colt, as Zophar had said, and which Job took as pointing to him; so the word in the Arabic language[c] signifies, the more excellent and better sort of people; or, ye are the only people of God, his covenant-people, his servants; that are made acquainted with the secrets of wisdom, as none else are: and wisdom shall die with you; you have all the wisdom of the world, and when you die it will be all gone; there will be none left in the world: thus he represents them as monopolizers and engrossers of wisdom and knowledge, full of it in their own ceit, allowing none to have any share with them: and by all this he not only upbraids them with their vanity and self-conceit, but puts them in mind, that, as wise as they were, they must die; and that, though their wisdom with respect to them, or any use they could make of it in the grave, where there is none, would die too; or that their wisdom was but the wisdom of the world, which comes to nought; yet there would be wisdom still in the world, and that which is true, which God makes known to men, even the wisdom of God in a mystery, the wisdom hid in himself; and who has the residue of the Spirit and his gifts to instruct men in it, and qualify them to be teachers of others; by which means, though men, even the best of men die, yet the word of God, the means of true wisdom and knowledge, will always abide.

℣. 3. But I have understanding as well as you, &c.] A natural understanding, or an understanding of natural things, which distinguishes a man from a brute; and a spiritual understanding, an understanding enlightened by the Spirit of God, which is naturally dark as to divine things; but he had an understanding given him, to know himself, his state and condition by nature; to know God, his love and grace to men, and, as his covenant-God; to know Christ his living Redeemer, who should stand on the earth in the latter day, both to be his Redeemer and his Judge; to know his intereſt in him, and in the blessings of grace, and glory by him: or, I have an heart as well as you[d]; a wise and an understanding one; a new heart, and a right spirit; an heart to fear and serve the Lord, a sincere and upright one, and devoid of hypocrisy and deceit; and as good an one as theirs: I am not inferior unto you; he was indeed as to estate and substance, being now reduced; though he had been, in that sense, the greatest man in all the East; but in wisdom and knowledge, in gifts and grace: thus a modest man, when oppressed and insulted by the speeches of over-bearing men, may be obliged and see it necessary to say some things of himself, in his own vindication, which he otherwise would not; see 2 Cor. xi. 16. and xii. 11. or, I am not falling before you; or by you[e]; as one intimidated, conquered, and yielding; I stand my ground, and will not give way or submit to you, or allow you to have the superiority of me: or, I am falling no more than you; they took him for an apostate from God, and the fear of him, and the true religion he had professed, which Job denies; he held fast his integrity; and though he was fallen into calamities and afflictions, he was not fallen from God; from his fear of him, faith in him, and love and obedience to him; he was a holy, good good man, a perſevering ſaint; and though he had ſlips and falls in common with good men, yet fell not finally and totally, or was an apoſtate from the faith: yea, who knoweth not ſuch things as theſe? or, with whom are not as theſe[f]? the things you have been diſcourſing of, which you would fain have paſs for the ſecrets of wiſdom, deep and myſterious things, hid from vulgar eyes, which none have and know but yourſelves, are common things, what every one is poſſeſſed of, and underſtands as well as you; that there is a God that has made the world, and governs it; that he himſelf is unſearchable, infinite and incomprehenſible; a ſovereign Being that does according to his will and pleaſure, and ſees and knows all things, and does all things well and wiſely, and according to the counſel of his will: though ſome think Job has reference not to what Zophar had been diſcourſing concerning the infinity and wiſdom of God, but to the thing or things in diſpute between them, or to the aſſertions of his friends; that it is always well with good men, and ill with bad men, or that wicked men only are puniſhed and afflicted, and particularly what Zophar concluded his ſpeech with, ℣. 20. Now theſe were vulgar notions, which the common people had taken up, and were vulgar errors, as he proves in the following verſes, by giving inſtances of good men being afflicted, and of bad men being in proſperity.

℣. 4. I am as one mocked of his neighbour, &c.] That is, according to Sephorno, if I knew not, or denied thoſe things you have been ſpeaking of concerning God, his immenſity, ſovereignty and wiſdom, I ſhould be derided by all my friends and acquaintance; but rather the ſenſe is, Job inſtances in himſelf as a proof, that good men are afflicted by God in this life; he was once in a very proſperous condition, when he was careſſed by all, but now was fallen into ſuch low and miſerable circumſtances, as to be the ſcorn and contempt of his friends and neighbours; and even his being mocked, was no ſmall part of his afflictions; to endure cruel mockings has been the common lot of good men in all ages, and is reckoned one part of their diſtreſſes and ſufferings for righteouſneſs-ſake, Heb. xi. 36. and to be mocked by a neighbour, or a friend[g], as it may be rendered, greatly aggravates the affliction, ſee Pſ. lv. 12, 13. which was Job's caſe; his friends that came to comfort him mocked at him, at leaſt ſo he underſtood them, and interpreted what they ſaid unto him, ſee ch. xvi. 20. and what made it ſtill the heavier to bear, he was mocked by ſuch a neighbour or friend, who calleth upon God, and he anſwereth him; he was mocked at not by prophane men only, but by a profeſſor of religion, one that made it his conſtant buſineſs to pray to God, and by the proſperity he was in, and the good things he enjoyed, he ſeems to be anſwered; or rather Job means himſelf who was mocked, and ſo this is introduced to aggravate the ſin of his friends, as well as to prove his point, and alſo to throw off a charge that had been brought againſt him. It was an aggravation of their ſin in mocking him, that he was a praying man; one that made a conſcience of daily calling upon God for the conſtant ſupplies of life, for his gracious preſence, for help in time of need, for diſcoveries of pardoning grace and mercy, and for deliverance out of his troubles; and who had in many inſtances received anſwers of prayer from God; and this being his character, and this the conſtant work and buſineſs of his life, and being heard and anſwered of God in times paſt, ſhewed him to be a good man, and yet an afflicted one; and this alſo ſerved to wipe off the reproach, and remove the charge which they tacitly inſinuated, and ſometimes ſpoke out, that he reſtrained prayer before God; but he was ſo far from it, that the ſcornful uſage of his friends made him ply the throne of grace the more frequently, ſee ch. xviii. 20. and from this ſingle inſtance of himſelf, he paſſes on to conſider it as a general caſe, as what uſually befals good and gracious men: the juſt upright man is laughed to ſcorn; or the juſt perfect man[h]; that is, perfectly juſt; no man is ſo of himſelf; none of Adam's poſterity are righteous, no not one; nor is any man truly juſt, perfectly righteous in himſelf, but in Chriſt; and even ſuch a man does not do good without ſinning; only the man Chriſt Jeſus is righteous in ſuch ſenſe; but then all that are made righteous by the imputation of his righteouſneſs to them, are perfectly juſtified from all things, and are become the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect and compleat in him: the character here deſigns ſuch who are really righteous, truly gracious, are upright in heart, ſincere ſouls, who have the truth of grace in them, and walk uprightly; theſe become a prey, a laughing ſtock to wicked men, as Noah, Lot, and others, before the times of Job, had been, which he may have reſpect unto.

℣. 5. He that is ready to ſlip with his feet, &c.] Not into ſin, though this is often the caſe of good men, but into calamities and afflictions; and Job means himſelf, and every juſt upright man in the like circumſtances: or he that is prepared or deſtined to be among them, that totter and ſtagger in their feet[i]; that can't ſtand upon their feet, but fall to the ground; which may deſcribe man in declining and diſtreſſing circumſtances; or that is appointed to be the laughing-ſtock of ſuch as are unſtable in the word and ways of God; double-minded men, hypocrites, and formal profeſſors, that totter and ſtagger at every thing they meet with diſagreeable to the fleſh: with ſuch, a poor afflicted ſaint is laughed to ſcorn; he is as a lamp deſpiſed in the thought of him that is at eaſe; who are in affluent circumſtances, enjoy great proſperity, live in plenty, and are not in trouble as others; their hearts are at eaſe: now with ſuch, poor good men are had in great contempt; they are deſpiſed at heart, in the thoughts of ſuch perſons, if they don't in words expreſs it; they are like a lamp juſt going out, which is neglected, and looked upon as uſeleſs; or like a torch burnt to the end, when it is thrown away; and thus it is with men, whilſt the lamp of proſperity burns clear and bright, they are valued and had in eſteem, but when their lamp becomes dim, and is almoſt, or quite extinguiſhed, they are deſpiſed, ſee Pſ. cxxxiii. 3, 4. ſome apply this to Chriſt, who was a lamp or light, a great one, but deſpiſed of men, and even as a light; they loved darkneſs rather than light; and eſpecially by the Phariſees, who were at eaſe, ſettled on their lees, that truſted in themſelves that they were righteous, and deſpiſed others; and this is true of goſpel-miniſters, though bright and burning burning lights, and even of every good man, in whom the true light of grace, and of the goſpel, ſhines, and eſpecially when under afflictive circumſtances. Some, inſtead of a lamp deſpiſed, read, for or becauſe of calamity deſpiſed [k]; ſo Aben Ezra, which conveys the ſame ſenſe, that an afflicted man is deſpiſed for his affliction; and this being the caſe of good men, confutes the notion of Job's friends, that it always goes well with ſuch; and their other notion of its going ill with bad men, is refuted in the following verſe.

℣. 6. The tabernacles of robbers proſper, &c.] Such as the Chaldeans and Sabeans, who had robbed Job of his ſubſtance, and filled their houſes with the ſpoils of others, and lived in the greateſt fulneſs and proſperity, and whom he might have in his view; and the like is what has been ſince obſerved by good men, and has been a trial and temptation to them, not knowing well how to reconcile this to the juſtice and wiſdom of God in providence, yet ſo it is, a fact that cannot be denied, ſee Pſ. lxxiii. 2, 3, 12. Jer. xii. 1, 2. and they that provoke God are ſecure; all ſin is abominable to God, contrary to his nature, will and law, and ſo provoking; yet there are ſome ſins that are more provoking than others, as idolatry, blaſphemy, murder, theft, robbery, rapine and oppreſſion, and the like, as well as attended with more aggravating circumſtances; and yet many who are guilty of ſuch enormous crimes, and God-provoking iniquities, are ſecure, live in the greateſt tranquility and ſafety, free from the incurſions, invaſions, and inſults of others: their houſes, as Job elſewhere ſays, are ſafe from fear, ch. xxi. 9. into whoſe hand God bringeth abundantly; an abundance of the good things of this world, who have as much or more than heart can wiſh; whoſe belly is filled with hid treaſure, whoſe grounds and fields bring forth plentifully, that they have no room to beſtow their fruits; this, as it is an aggravation of their ſin in provoking the God of their mercies, who is ſo liberal and bountiful to them, ſo it is the more full and expreſs for the point in hand Job is confuting. Some, as Aben Ezra and Ben Gerſom, underſtand this of idol-makers and idol-worſhippers, and render the words, who makes a god with his hand, or carries a god in his hand [l], and worſhips it; which others interpret of his doing what he will with God, having him, as it were, in his hand, or reckoning his hands his God, and thinks to do what he pleaſes [m].

℣. 7. But aſk now the beaſts, and they ſhall teach thee, &c.] And ſo the fowls of the air, and the fiſhes of the ſea, in this and the following verſe; from thoſe inſtructions may be learnt, or inſtances taken, and examples given, which may illuſtrate and confirm the ſame things that had been treated of: either what had been juſt now confuted, that it is always well with good men, and ill with with bad men; the reverſe of which had been affirmed and proved, that good men are afflicted, and wicked men proſper; ſomething like to which may be ſeen in the creatures, and learned of them; thus thoſe creatures that are the moſt harmleſs and innocent, and moſt uſeful and beneficial, are a prey to others, as ſheep and lambs to lions, wolves and bears, whilſt they range about foreſts, fields and plains, fearleſs and unmoleſted; and doves and turtles to hawks and vultures; and the leſſer fiſh to the greater, by whom they are devoured, ſee Hab. i. 13, 14. and moreover, theſe creatures which are moſt uſeful and profitable, or are for pleaſure and delight, fall more to the ſhare of wicked men than good men; when droves of cattle, and flocks of ſheep are obſerved, and the queſtion is put, to whom do they belong, the anſwer for the moſt part muſt be given, to ſuch and ſuch wicked men; and if the gold and ſilver, and other valuable things the earth produces, ſhould be enquired about whoſe they are? it muſt be ſaid, that they are generally ſpeaking the property of the men of the world; the prophane part of it; or if the fowls of the air, and fiſhes of the ſea, could ſpeak when aſked the queſtion, whoſe food they commonly were? the anſwer would be of the carnal, ſenſual and voluptuous men: or rather this may refer to what Job firſt takes notice of in this anſwer of his, that his friends repreſented what they ſaid as uncommon things, deep myſteries, and out of the reach of the vulgar, and which did not fall under common obſervation; whereas Job ſuggeſts, he was as well acquainted with them as they were, yea they were ſuch that almoſt every body knew; nay they might be learnt from the creatures, to which Job here ſends them for inſtruction; the beaſts, birds and fiſhes all proclaim that they did not make themſelves, nor did their fellow-creatures, but ſome firſt cauſe, who is God; that they are ſuſtained, ſupported and provided for by him, and are governed, directed and diſpoſed of as he pleaſes, and ſo furniſhes out documents of his ſovereignty, wiſdom, power and providence: and the fowls of the air, and they will tell thee; the ſame things; that God made them, and that they are dependent on him, and are fed and cared for by him, ſee Matt. vi. 26.

℣. 8. Or ſpeak to the earth, and it ſhall teach thee, &c.] Or aſk a ſprig of the earth [n], any ſhrub, or tree, or whatſoever grows out of it, and they will all unite in this doctrine, that they are raiſed and preſerved by the power of God, and are ſo many inſtances of his wiſdom, power and goodneſs: and the fiſhes of the ſea ſhall declare unto thee; as mute as they are, they'll proclaim this truth, that God is the mighty maker, and wiſe diſpoſer of them.

℣. 9. Who knoweth not in all theſe, &c.] Or by or from all theſe [o] creatures; what man is there ſo ſtupid and ſenſeleſs, that does not diſcern, or cannot learn, even from irrational creatures, the above things, even what Zophar had diſcourſed concerning God and his perfections, his power, wiſdom and providence? for by the things that are made, the inviſible things of God are clearly ſeen and underſtood, even his eternal power and Godhead, Rom. i. 20. particularly it may be known by theſe, and who is it that does not know thereby, that the hand of the Lord hath wrought this? made this viſible world, and all things in it, to which Job then pointed as it were with his finger, meaning the heavens, earth, and ſea, and all that in them are, which were all created by him: hence he is called the former and maker of all things; and which are all the works of his hand, that is, of his power, which is meant by his hand, that being the inſtrument of action. This is the only place where the word Jehovah is uſed in this book by the diſputants.

℣. 10. In whose hand is the soul of every living thing, &c.] Of every animal, of every brute creature, as distinct from man; in the next clause: the life of every one of them is from him, and it is continued by him as long as he pleases, nor can it be taken away without his leave; two sparrows, which are not worth more than a farthing, not one of them falls to the ground, or dies without the knowledge and will of God, Matt. x. 29. of the soul or spirit of beasts, see Eccl. iii. 21. and the breath of all mankind; the breath of man is originally from God, he at first breathed into man the breath of life; and though this is in his nostrils, which makes him of little account, yet it would not continue there long, was it not in the hand, and under the care and providence of God; the breath of a king, as well as the heart of a king, is in the hand of the Lord; the breath of that great monarch Belshazzar, king of Babylon, was in the hand of God, Dan. v. 23. and so is the breath of every peasant; and as when he takes away the breath of other creatures, they die and return to the dust; such is the case of man when God takes away his breath; all our times are in his hand, to be born, to live and die, all is at his dispose: or the spirit of all the flesh of men [p], or of all mens flesh; his rational soul, as distinguished from his flesh or body, this is from God, supported in its being by him, and ever will be, being immortal, and will never die.

℣. 11. Doth not the ear try words? &c.] Articulate sounds; and the mind by them judges whether what is expressed and designed by them is right or wrong, true or false, to be received or rejected; so such that have spiritual ears to hear, try the words of God and men, the wholesome words of Christ, and those of false teachers, which eat as a canker; and by their spiritual judgment can distinguish between the one and the other, discern those that differ, and approve those that are excellent, by bringing them to the standard of the word, the balance of the sanctuary, the scriptures of truth: and the mouth taste his meat? and judge of it, whether good or bad, savoury or unsavoury, and so receive or reject it: thus such who have their taste changed, and relish spiritual things, can distinguish between the meat that perishes, and that which endures to everlasting life, even Christ, whose flesh is meat indeed; and those that have tasted that the Lord is gracious, and to whose taste the fruits of Christ, and the doctrines of grace are sweet; these will desire the sincere milk of the word, and that strong meat in it, which belongs to discerning and experienced souls; and will feed by faith upon the pure word of the gospel, and mix it with it, and reject all others. Job by this would signify, that the things his friends had been discoursing of, and which they thought were such deep and wonderful things, were as easy to be searched and found out, tried and judged of as sounds by the ear, or food by the taste; and it may be also, that hereby he suggests that his doctrine if it was impartially examined and tried by proper judges, it would appear as plain as any thing tried by the ear, or tasted by the mouth. Some think that Job intends by this, that from the senses of hearing and tasting in men, might be inferred the omniscience of God, his knowledge of all things, and his quick discernment of men, and their actions, since he that planted the ear, shall he not hear? he that formed the eye, shall not he see? Ps. xciv. 9. Some versions read the whole, doth not the ear try words, as the mouth tastes his meat [q]? as in ch. xxxiv. 3. Saadiah Gaon connects these words with the following, as the ear tries words, &c. so with the antient is wisdom.

℣. 12. With the antient is wisdom, &c.] Meaning not himself, who was not very ancient; tho' some think Eliphaz so understood him, hence those words of his in ch. xv. 9, 10. rather, as others, Job tacitly wishes that some ancient man, with whom wisdom was, would undertake to examine the affair between him and his friends, and judge of it, and decide the point; or, as others, he has respect to Bildad's advice to search the fathers, and learn their sentiments, and be determined by them; to which he replies, that though it will be allowed that wisdom is with them, for the most part, yet their judgment of things is no farther to be regarded, than as it agrees with the wisdom of God, and the revelation he has made of his will; tho' it seems best of all to consider these words as an adagy or proverbial sentence generally agreed to, that it often is, as it might be expected it should, though it is not always, that men well advanced in years are wise; that as they have lived long in the world, they have learned much by observation and experience, and have attained to a considerable share of wisdom and knowledge in things, natural, civil and religious: and in length of days is understanding; the understandings of men are improved and enriched, and well stored with useful science, having had the opportunity of much reading, hearing and conversation; by this Job would suggest, that if his friends had more knowledge of hidden and recondite things, beyond common people, which yet they had not, it was not so wonderful, since they were aged men, and had lived long in the world; or rather it may be that this is mentioned, to observe, that from hence, seeing it is so among men, that ancient men have, or it may be expected they should have a considerable share of wisdom and understanding; it may be most easily and strongly concluded, that God, who is the ancient of days, has the most perfect and consummate wisdom and knowledge, which is asserted in the following verse.

℣. 13. With him is wisdom and strength, &c.] Not with the ancient and long-lived man, but with God, who has made the whole universe, and in whose hand, and at whose dispose all creatures are, ℣. 9, 10. with him wisdom is originally, essentially and inderivatively, as the fountain and fulness of it; he is the only and all-wise God; his wisdom is displayed in making the world, and all things in it, in the beautiful manner they are set, and in their subserviency to each other; in all the dispensations of his providence, having all a bathos, a depth of wisdom and knowledge in them, being all according to the counsel of his will; and in the work of redemption and salvation by Christ, in which he has abounded in all wisdom and prudence; in finding out and appointing a Redeemer, mighty and strong, equal to the work; in contriving and bringing it about, in such a manner as to glorify all his perfections; hence the gospel, which is the publication of this grace, is called the wisdom of God: and with him is wisdom to communicate to his people, to direct them how to behave under every providence, in every station of life, in the church, church, and in the world, ſee Jam. i. 5. and he has ſtrength, which he has ſhown in making the world out of nothing, in upholding it, and all things in it in being, in executing his deſigns, decrees and purpoſes, in fulfilling his promiſes, and in ſupporting and ſtrengthening his people under all their trials and exerciſes, to withſtand every enemy, and perform every duty; ancient men, tho' they may increaſe in wiſdom, they decline in ſtrength, but God has both, in infinite perfection: he hath counſel and underſtanding; his decrees and purpoſes wiſely formed within himſelf, are his counſels of old, and which are truly and punctually performed in time; his plan of peace, reconciliation and ſalvation by Chriſt, may, with propriety, be called the counſel of peace between them both; and the goſpel, and the ſeveral doctrines of it are the whole counſel of God, and ſo are the ordinances of it; and beſides theſe, by which he counſels and adviſes his people, he has counſel with him, and which he gives unto them by his Spirit, for which they bleſs his name; and ſo even did Chriſt as man and mediator, Pſ. xvi. 7. he has counſel to give, and does give in things temporal, relating to the common affairs of life, and in things concerning the good and welfare of immortal ſouls; all which comes from him who is wonderful in counſel, and excellent in working, Iſ. xxviii. 29. and he has an underſtanding that is infinite and unſearchable; he has an underſtanding of himſelf, his nature, perfections and perſons of all his creatures, and of all things paſt, preſent, and to come; the ſame things are ſaid of Chriſt, the wiſdom of God, Prov. viii. 14. Job having obſerved theſe things of God, paſſes on to diſcourſe moſt admirably and excellently of the power and wiſdom of God in various inſtances, eſpecially in the diſpenſations of his providence, by which he appears to have known the ſecrets of wiſdom, and not ſo ignorant as repreſented by Zophar.

℣. 14. Behold, he breaketh down, and it cannot be built again, &c.] Which ſome reſtrain to the tower of Babel; but though the builders of it were obliged to deſiſt from building, it does not appear that it was broken down, but ſeems to have continued many ages after: others more probably refer it to the deſtruction of Sodom, as Sephorno, which was an utter deſtruction, a perpetual deſolation, and that city never was rebuilt to this day; and the ſame may be obſerved of many other cities that have had their foundations razed up, and have never been rebuilt, Thebes, Tyre, &c. and as will be the caſe of Rome, or the great city of Babylon, when once deſtroyed; yea, this has been true of kingdoms and ſtates, ſuch as Jeremiah was to root out, pull down, and deſtroy; that is, by propheſying of their deſtruction, as the Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, and others, whoſe names and nations are no more, ſee Jer. i. 10. and xxv. 27. and the four monarchies broken down and deſtroyed, and made as the chaff of the ſummer threſhing-floor, by the kingdom of Chriſt, Dan. ii. 35, 44. and may be exemplified in particular perſons and families; in Job and his family, the Lord broke him with breach upon breach; he broke him in his eſtate and ſubſtance; he broke down the hedge about him, and expoſed him to thieves and robbers that plundered him of his ſubſtance; he broke down his family, that had been ſo largely and happily built up, by taking away his children by death; and he broke his conſtitution by diſeaſes, afflictions and ſorrows, to which Job may have here reſpect, when he at this time never expected to have his loſſes in his ſubſtance, and in his family, and in his health, repaired, as they were; nor could it have been done without the will and pleaſure of God; and oftentimes when ſuch breaches are made, there is no reparation; a man's wealth, and health, and family are never built up again: he ſhutteth up a man, and there can be no opening; if he ſhut up a man in a priſon, there's no opening the doors of it to let out unleſs he pleaſes; whether it be the priſon of ſin, in which all are concluded, in the fetters, and with the cords of which they are held, and will continue, unleſs thoſe ſhackles are broken off by powerful and efficacious grace, and the Lord proclaims liberty to the captives, and the opening of the priſon to them that are bound, and gives it; or whether it be the priſon of the law, in which ſinners are ſhut up, and held as condemned malefactors; there is no deliverance from it but by Chriſt, who has redeemed his people from the curſe and condemnation of it; and by his Spirit, as a ſpirit of adoption, who delivers them from the bondage of it, and makes them free indeed; or whether it be the priſon of afflictions, ſtraits and difficulties in life, with which even good men are ſurrounded, being bound in fetters, and holden in cords of affliction; there is no opening for them, or getting out of them, unleſs the Lord breaks their bands aſunder, and brings them out of darkneſs and diſtreſs, as out of priſon-houſes, and ſo opens and makes a way for their eſcape; or whether he ſhuts them up, and they are ſo ſtraitened in their ſouls, that they cannot come forth in the free exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty, as it was with Heman, when he ſaid, I am ſhut up, and I cannot come forth; and as it was with David, when he prayed, bring my ſoul out of priſon, that I may praiſe thy name, ſee Pſ. lxxxviii. 8. and cxlii. 7. there is no opening for them till the Spirit of the Lord opens their hearts and their graces, and brings them forth into exerciſe; and where he is there is liberty: or if he ſhuts up a man in the grave, as the Targum paraphraſes it, brings him to the houſe appointed for all living, and locks him up in it; there can be no opening for him till the reſurrection-morn, when Chriſt, who has the keys of hell and death, will unlock the graves, and the dead ſhall come forth, as Lazarus did at his call: or if he ſhuts upon a man[r], as the words may be rendered; ſhuts the gates of heaven upon a man, as the door into the marriage-chamber of the Lamb will be ſhut upon and againſt the fooliſh virgins, as well as prophane ſinners, there can be no opening, cry as long as they will; and as God ſhut the door of Eden, or the earthly paradiſe, againſt Adam, when he drove him out, to which Sephorno refers this paſſage; or if the Lord ſhuts up a man in hell, there is no opening, no way of eſcape from thence. We read of ſpirits in priſon, which is to be underſtood not of the limbus or purgatory of the papiſts, but of hell; and theſe ſpirits are the diſobedient in the times of Noah, who dying, or being ſwept away with the flood, were caſt into hell, where they have lain ever ſince, and will lie unto the judgment of the great day; between the place of the damned, and of the happy, in Abraham's boſom, is a great gulph, that there is no paſſing

ỳ. 15. Behold, he with-holdeth the waters, and they dry up, &c.] Or lays a reſtraint in or on the waters'; either in the ocean, as he did at the creation, when he gathered the waters that were upon the face of the earth into one place, and reſtrained them there, even in the decreed place he broke up for them, called the ſea, and ſet bars and doors to keep them within bounds, whereby the places they left became dry, and the dry land appeared, called earth; and ſo at the time of the flood, when the waters which covered the earth, and drowned the world, were called off again, the face of it was dry, and ſo it remains, the waters of the great ocean being reſtrained from overflowing it; and alſo when God rebukes the ſea, and ſmites the waves of it, or with-holds the ebbing and flowing of the tides, brooks and rivers of water dry up; ſee Nahum i. 4. Zech. x. 11. or elſe this may be underſtood of God's with-holding and reſtraining the waters in the clouds, and not ſuffering them to let down rain on the earth; when not only brooks dry up, as the brook Cherith did, where Elijah abode for ſome time, but the fruits of the earth, trees, plants and herbs dry up, wither and die; ſee 1 Kings xvii. 7. Joel i. 19, 20. and this is an emblem in a ſpiritual ſenſe of God's with-holding the word and ordinances, the waters of the ſanctuary, the means of grace, and of fruitfulneſs; which when he does, the conſequence of it is barrenneſs and unfruitfulneſs in kingdoms, cities, towns, families, and particular perſons; and of his with-holding the communications of his grace, often compared to water in ſcripture, even from his people; the effect of which is, that they are in withering circumſtances, the things that revive ſeem ready to die, though they ſhall not; love waxes cold, faith is ready to fail, and hope and ſtrength ſeem periſhing from the Lord: he ſendeth them out, and they overturn the earth; as at the time of the flood, when the fountains of the great deep were broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened, and ſuch vaſt quantities of water iſſued out, as overflowed the whole world, by which it was overturned; and as the apoſtle Peter ſays, periſhed, 2 Pet. iii. 5, 6. though this is alſo true of inundations that may have been ſince, which though not univerſal as that, yet ſo far as they have reached have overturned all in their way, and carried off the fruits of the earth, the habitations of men, and men themſelves; whole countries, cities and towns have been carried away by the waters of the ſea, or ſunk into it, particularly all that ſpace where now is the Atlantic ſea, as Pliny[t], from Plato, relates. It is well when the grace of God flows, and overflows, and ſuperabounds abounding ſin, and overpowers and overcomes carnal, earthly and ſenſual luſts, and reigns where ſin did, and teaches to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and to mortify the members on the earth.

ỳ. 16. With him is ſtrength and wiſdom, &c.] Which is repeated from ỳ. 13. though different words are uſed, but expreſſive of the ſame things; of the greateſt ſtrength, might and power of God, as the above inſtances ſhew, and of his moſt conſummate, ſolid and ſubſtantial wiſdom, as appears by what follows: the deceived and the deceiver are his; the wiſdom, knowledge, ſagacity and penetration into affairs, which the one has not, and the other has, are from him; he with-holds them from the one, who are ſimple and void of underſtanding, and ſo are eaſily impoſed upon, and deceived, and he gives them to others, who make an ill uſe of them, and deceive their fellow-creatures. Some are deceivers in civil things, in the buſineſs and affairs of life, who circumvent, trick, cheat and defraud their neighbours in buying and ſelling, uſing deceitful weights and meaſures, and by many other artful methods; others are deceivers in religious affairs, ſuch are falſe teachers, deceitful workers, that lie in wait to deceive; their intention is to deceive, they do it knowingly, and on purpoſe; they walk in craftineſs, and handle the word of God deceitfully; there were many of theſe in the times of the apoſtles that had then entered into the world, but never more than now; the great impoſtor and deceiver of all is Satan, to whom Jarchi reſtrains the words, who beguiled Eve, and indeed deceives the whole world, Rev. xii. 9. Multitudes are deceived by him, as well as by his emiſſaries, falſe teachers, and by their own hearts luſts; and even God's elect themſelves, whilſt in a ſtate of unregeneracy, bear this character of deceived, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures, Tit. iii. 3. Now theſe are his the Lord's; which Mr. Broughton interprets, from him, by him, and for him; the wit, wiſdom, ſubtlety and ſagacity of deceivers are from him; gifts of nature, in themſelves good, beſtowed on them by him; the ill uſe they make of it is from themſelves, and owing to the vitioſity of their nature; nay, it is not only by his permiſſion, but according to his ordination and will, that there are ſuch perſons in the world: in ſome caſes they appear not only to have leave or permiſſion, but an order to ſeduce, as to the lying ſpirit ſent forth to ſeduce Ahab, 2 Kings xxii. 20—25. yea, the princes of Noph being deceived, and they ſeducing Egypt, it is aſcribed to the Lord's mingling a perverſe ſpirit in the midſt thereof, Iſ. xix. 13, 14. nay, when a prophet is deceived, God himſelf is ſaid to deceive that prophet, Ezek. xiv. 9. ſo much is there of the permiſſive and efficacious will of God in this matter; not that he is the author of error and deceit, or infuſes theſe into men, only the orderer, diſpoſer and over-ruler of theſe things to ſome purpoſes of his; he has power over them, and counter-works them when he pleaſes; he can, and does reſtrain them, and ſtops them, that they ſhall proceed no farther then he wills; falſe teachers would, if poſſible, deceive the very elect, but they cannot, and the reaſon is, God hinders them; Satan can go on no longer deceiving the world, than it is the pleaſure of God; a notorious inſtance of hindering and reſtraining him may be ſeen in Rev. xx. 3, 8. and all the deceptions that are ſuffered to be among men, they are all wiſely ordered and over-ruled to good purpoſes, ſo as to iſſue well; the deception of our firſt parents was ſuffered and willed, that the grace of God might be diſplayed in the ſalvation of men; errors and hereſies are, and muſt be, for the trial and diſcovery of ſound believers, that they which are approved might be manifeſt; and men that like not to retain God in their knowledge, reject both the light of nature and revelation, are left in righteous judgment to a reprobate mind, to give heed to ſeducing ſpirits, and are given up to ſtrong deluſions to believe a lye, that they might be damned, ſee 1 Cor. xi. 19. Rom. i. 28.

28. 2 Theſſ. ii. 10—12. Now all this ſhews the infinite and conſummate wiſdom of God; it is brought to prove, not only that he knows deceivers, and all their arts and tricks, through which men are deceived by them, as Aben Ezra interprets it, and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it; but he is the fountain of all that wiſdom and knowledge in them, ſuperior to others, which they abuſe, nor can they uſe it without his leave; and he can and does counter-work them, and reſtrains them as he pleaſes, and makes all to work for, and iſſue in his own glory.

℣. 17. He leadeth counſellors away ſpoiled, &c.] Such who have the greateſt ſhare of knowledge and wiſdom in civil things, and are capable of giving advice to others, and are very uſeful in common-wealths, in cities, towns and neighbourhoods; wherefore it is a judgment on a people when ſuch are removed, Iſ. iii. 3. theſe God can ſpoil at once of all their wiſdom and knowledge, and render them unfit to give advice and counſel to others; or he can confound their ſchemes, diſappoint their devices, carry their counſel headlong, and make it of none effect, and ſo ſpoil them of their ends and views, and of their fame, credit and reputation: and maketh the judges fools; men of great parts, abilities and capacities, whereby they are qualified to ſit upon the bench, preſide in courts of judicature, and judge in all matters of controverſy that come before them; and it is a happineſs to a country to have ſuch perſons, as it is a judgment to have them removed, ſee Iſ. iii. 2. yet God can take away the wiſdom of ſuch men, deprive them of their natural abilities, and ſo infatuate them, that they ſhall not be able to underſtand a cauſe, but paſs a fooliſh ſentence, to their own ſhame and diſgrace, as well as to the injury of others; ſee Iſ. xl. 23.

℣. 18. He looſeth the bonds of kings, &c.] Not with which they themſelves may be bound, being taken priſoners, or being ſo before made kings, and brought from thence to reign, as in Eccl. iv. 14. but that which they bind on their ſubjects, a yoke of bondage, tyranny and oppreſſion; ſo that to looſe their bond, is to looſe their ſubjects from it, and free them from their arbitrary and deſpotic power, and from the burthens they lay upon them: unleſs rather it ſhould be underſtood of looſing their girdles, as an emblem of their government, ungirding them, or unkinging them, ſtripping them of their royal power and authority, called a looſing of their loins, Iſ. xlv. 1. and this power God has over ſuch great perſonages, as to ſet up kings, and remove them at his pleaſure, Dan. ii. 21. which ſhows that ſtrength and power, as well as wiſdom, are with him; this may reſpect Chedorlaomer caſting off the yoke of Nimrod, and the kings of Canaan caſting off the yoke of Chedorlaomer, and being looſed from it, Gen. xiv. 1, 4. and girdeth their loins with a girdle; not with a royal girdle, as an enſign of government; ſee Iſ. xi. 5. and xxii. 21. which he looſes, and ſtrips them of, but another inſtead of that; he girds them with the girdle of a ſervant or traveller; the alluſion being to the cuſtom in thoſe eaſtern countries, where they wore long garments, for ſervants to gird them up, when they waited on their maſters, or when men went long journeys, ſee Luke xvii. 7, 8. and ſo may ſignify, that kings ſometimes become ſervants, or go into captivity, and there be uſed as ſuch, as they ſometimes are; the Vulgate Latin verſion is, he girds their reins with a rope.

℣. 19. He leadeth princes away ſpoiled, &c.] Of their principalities and dominions, of their wealth and riches, and of their honour and glory; or prieſts [u], as ſome chuſe to render the word, againſt whom God has indignation for their ſins, and leads them into captivity with others; ſo the Septuagint verſion, he leads the prieſts captives; for no office, ever ſo ſacred, can protect wicked men, ſee Lam. ii. 6. Jer. xiv. 18. and from theſe ſometimes the law periſhes, and they are ſpoiled of their wiſdom and knowledge, and made unfit to inſtruct the people, and ſo of their credit and reputation among them. Sephorno interprets it of the prieſts ſpoiled of their propheſying, they propheſying falſe things to kings: and overthroweth the mighty; the mighty angels from heaven when they ſinned, and mighty men on earth, kings and princes, whom he puts down from their ſeats of majeſty and grandeur. Sephorno interprets this of kings, whoſe ways are perverted, by being led by falſe prophets, as Ahab was. Some [w] underſtand this of eccleſiaſtical men, mighty in word and doctrine, well grounded in theology, yet their wiſdom being taken away from them, they turn aſide into wicked paths, practices and principles, and fall from their ſtedfaſtneſs in truth and holineſs.

℣. 20. He removeth away the ſpeech of the truſty, &c.] Speech is proper to mankind, and a benefit unto them, whereby they can converſe together, and communicate their minds to each other; this is the gift of God, he gives to men in common the faculty of ſpeaking; to ſome the tongue of the learned, to ſpeak divers tongues, either in an ordinary, or in an extraordinary manner; and he that gives, can take away; he that made man's mouth or lip, can make it ſpeechleſs, as he does at death; when he takes away man's breath, he takes away his ſpeech; the ſtate of the dead is a ſtate of ſilence; and ſometimes he does it whilſt living, by ſtriking dumb, as he did Zechariah, the father of John the Baptiſt; and even without ſo doing, as in the builders of Babel, he took away the ſpeech they had, and gave them another; and ſometimes he ſuffers not men to ſpeak what they would, but what is contrary to their inclinations and deſires, as in Balaam, who would willingly have curſed Iſrael, but could not. Now that God ſhould take away by any means the ſpeech of liars, and faithleſs perſons, as Ananias and Sapphira, by ſtriking them dead; and of falſe teachers, deceivers, and bold blaſphemers of God, and of his Son, and of the bleſſed Spirit, whoſe mouths ought to be ſtopped, is no wonder; but it ſeems ſtrange, that he ſhould remove the ſpeech of truſty or faithful [x] men, that ſpeak the truth, and are to be credited and believed: and as the preceding words are underſtood of eccleſiaſtic perſons, theſe may be continued concerning them; and the character agrees with miniſters of the word, who are entruſted with the rich treaſure of it; that is put in earthen veſſels, and committed to the truſt of faithful men; who appear to be ſuch when they ſpeak the word faithfully, declare the whole counſel of God, and keep back nothing profitable to men; when they ſpeak plainly, with-without ambiguity, and ſincerely, without mixing or adulterating it; and are faithful as to God, who has appointed them, and put them into the miniſtry, ſo to the ſouls of men under their care: now God ſometimes takes away the ſpeech of theſe, not by changing their voice, or ordering them, inſtead of the gracious promiſes of the goſpel, to deliver out the menaces and threatenings of the law; but either by commanding them to be dumb and ſilent, and ſpeak no more to an incorrigible and rebellious people; as Ezekiel was bid to propheſy no more to the houſe of Iſrael, and the apoſtles to preach no more to the Jews; or by ſuffering them to be ſilenced by the edicts of wicked princes, and their violent perſecutions of them, ſo that the teachers of men are removed into corners, and not to be ſeen or heard; and alſo by death, when their faces are no more ſeen, and their ſpeech no more heard. Some, both Jewiſh and Chriſtian interprets, derive the word here uſed from the root נאם to ſpeak, and render it ſpeakers or orators[y]; ſo Mr. Broughton tranſlates the words, he bereaveth the orators of lip; he takes away their eloquence from them, deprives them of their ſpeaking well, and ſtrips them of their natural and acquired abilities, by which they have become good ſpeakers; and ſuch who uſe their talents well in this way are beneficial to a commonwealth, and it is a loſs when they are removed, or their ſpeech removed from them, ſee Iſ. iii. 3. and taketh away the underſtanding of the aged; or elders[z], as Mr. Broughton, either in age or office; elders in age, with whom underſtanding, reaſon, judgment, counſel and wiſdom, by all which the word is interpreted, may be thought to be, and it is expected they ſhould, and oftentimes are, though not always; yet all this, God can take away, and does when he pleaſes, and they become like children in underſtanding; through the infirmities of old age their memories fail them, their reaſon is impaired, their underſtanding and judgment are weakened, and they become unfit to give advice themſelves, and are eaſily impoſed on, and drawn aſide by others, as may be obſerved in Solomon, the wiſeſt of men, when he was grown old. This is to be underſtood of the natural underſtanding in things natural and civil, but not of the ſpiritual underſtanding, which is never taken away, but rather increaſed in old age; the true light of grace ſhines more and more unto the perfect day; it is a gift of God without repentance, which he never revokes and removes: it may intend the natural taſte[a], as the word may be rendered; this is often and generally taken away from the aged, as in old Barzillai, who could not taſte what he eat and drank, as to diſtinguiſh and reliſh it, 2 Sam. xix. 35. but not the ſpiritual taſte, of the Lord as gracious, of the good word of God, and the fruits of divine grace; the taſte and ſavour of which remain with the people of God in old age: or this may deſign men in office, either civil magiſtrates, called ſenators, the elders of the people, judges and counſellors, who inſtead of being taught more wiſdom, which their offices require, ſometimes become infatuated, their underſtanding of civil things is taken away from them, their wiſe counſels become brutiſh, and they like children; or eccleſiaſtic perſons, elders of churches, who having talents for publick uſefulneſs, either neglect them, or make an ill uſe of them, and therefore are taken away from them; their right arm is dried up, and their right eye darkened, Matt. xxv. 28, 29. Zech. xi. 17.

℣. 21. He poureth contempt upon princes, &c.] Not on good princes, ſuch as rule in righteouſneſs, and decree judgment, and govern their ſubjects according to good laws, in a mild and gentle manner, and anſwer to their name of free, liberal, beneficent and munificent. Theſe, as there is an honour due unto them, it is the will of God they ſhould have it; much leſs are princes, in a figurative ſenſe meant, good men, the children of God, who are born of him the King of kings, and ſo princes in all the earth; but, in a literal ſenſe, bad princes that oppreſs their ſubjects, and rule them with rigour, and perſecute good men; ſuch as roſe up againſt Chriſt, as Herod and Pontius Pilate; perſecutors of the ſaints, as the Roman emperors, and the antichriſtian princes in the papacy; theſe God ſometimes brings into contempt with their ſubjects, depoſes them from their government, reduces them to a mean, abject and ſervile ſtate; or they die a ſhameful death, as Herod was eaten with worms, and many of the heathen emperors died miſerable deaths; and the vials of God's wrath will be poured out upon all the antichriſtian ſtates, and their princes: pouring denotes the abundance of ſhame they are put to, as if they were clothed and covered with it, it being plentifully poured out like water, or as water was poured upon them, which is ſometimes done by way of contempt, ſee Pſ. cvii. 40. and weakeneth the ſtrength of the mighty; the ſtrength of men, hale and robuſt, by ſending one diſeaſe or another upon them, which takes it away from them; or by the mighty are meant, men in power and authority; kings, as the Targum paraphraſes it, mighty monarchs, whoſe ſtrength lies in their wealth and riches, in their fortreſſes and powerful armies; all which God can deprive them of in an inſtant, and make them as weak as other men. Some render it, and looſeneth the girdle of the mighty[b], the ſame as looſening the loins of kings, Iſ. xiv. 1. ungirding them, and taking away their power and authority from them, rendering them unfit for buſineſs, or unable to keep their poſts, and defend their kingdom.

℣. 22. He diſcovereth deep things out of darkneſs, &c.] The deep things of God, his own deep things which lie in his heart, wrapt up in darkneſs impenetrable to creatures, and which could never be known, unleſs he had diſcovered them; ſuch as the thoughts of his heart, which are very deep, Pſ. xcii. 5. the deep things of God, which the Spirit of God only knows, ſearches and reveals, 1 Cor. ii. 10, 11. even his thoughts of peace, and good things for his people, which are many and precious, are known to himſelf, and made known to them, or otherwiſe muſt have remained in darkneſs, and out of their reach, being as high as the heavens are from the earth; the decrees and purpoſes of God, which he hath purpoſed in himſelf, are deep things in his own breaſt, and lie concealed in darkneſs there, until diſcovered by the accompliſhment of them; ſuch as his decrees of election in Chriſt, redemption by him, and effectual vocation by his grace; all which are revealed and made known by the execution of them: the love of God to his people, which lay hid in his heart from everlaſting; this is diſcovered by the gift and miſſion of his Son; in in the regeneration and quickening of his people, and of which he makes ſtill larger diſcoveries to them in the courſe of their lives: likewiſe the myſteries of the Goſpel, unknown to natural men, even the wiſe and prudent, only known to ſuch to whom it is given to know them, to whom they are revealed by the Father of Chriſt, and by the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of the myſtery of God, and of the Father, and of Chriſt; reſpecting the perſons in the Godhead, the grace of each perſon, the incarnation of Chriſt, the union of the two natures in him, redemption and juſtification by him, regeneration by the Spirit of God, union to Chriſt, and communion with him, and conformity to him in ſoul and body, now and hereafter: likewiſe the ſecrets of his providence, in which there is a great depth of his wiſdom and knowledge, and is in great obſcurity; his path is in the great waters, and his footſteps are not known; his judgments are unſearchable, and his ways paſt finding out, but ere long they will be made manifeſt, and lie open to view. There are alſo the deep things of others, which he diſcovers, as the depth of ſin in the deceitful heart of man, which none knows as himſelf; and which lie hid there, until they are diſcovered in the light of the divine Spirit, who convinces of them, enlightens the underſtanding to behold thoſe ſwarms of luſts and corruptions it never diſcerned before; and then a man comes to ſee and know the plague of his own heart, he was before a ſtranger to; alſo the depths of Satan, his deep-laid ſchemes, his wiles and ſtratagems, to draw into ſin, and ſo to ruin; theſe are unknown to natural men, but ſaints are made acquainted with them, ſo that they are not altogether ignorant of his devices, Rev. ii. 24. 2 Cor. ii. 11. likewiſe the ſecret plots, counſels and combinations of wicked men, which they lay deep, and ſeek to hide from the Lord, being formed in the dark; but he ſees and knows them, diſcovers and confounds them: to which may be added all the wicked actions of men done in the dark, but cannot be hid from God, with whom the darkneſs and the light are both alike; and who, ſooner or later, brings them to light, even the hidden things of darkneſs, and makes manifeſt the counſels of the heart, as he will do more eſpecially at the day of judgment, to which every ſecret thing will be brought: and bringeth to light the ſhadow of death; not only life and immortality, as by the goſpel, but death, and the ſhadow of it, even deadly darkneſs, the groſſeſt of darkneſs; ſuch who are darkneſs itſelf he makes light, and out of the darkneſs in them commands light to ſhine, as in the firſt creation; to them that ſit in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death, he cauſes a great light to ariſe, the light of the goſpel, and the light of grace, yea, Chriſt himſelf, the light of the world; he calls and brings them out of it into marvellous light, out of the dark dungeon and priſon of ſin and unbelief, to the enjoyment of ſpiritual light and life here, and to everlaſting light and glory hereafter.

℣. 23. He increaſeth the nations, and deſtroyeth them, &c.] As he did before the flood, when the earth was filled, and all over peopled with them, but at the flood he deſtroyed them at once. Sephorno interprets it of the ſeven nations in the land of Canaan, which were increaſed in it, and deſtroyed, to make way for the Iſraelites to inhabit it; and this has ſince been verified in other kingdoms, large and populous, and brought to deſtruction, particularly in the four monarchies, Babylonian, Perſian, Grecian and Roman, and will be in the antichriſtian ſtates and nations of the world: he enlargeth the nations, and ſtraiteneth them again; or ſtretcheth or ſpreadeth out the nations [c], as he did all over the earth before the deluge, and then moſt remarkably ſtraitened them, when they were reduced to ſo ſmall a number as to be contained in a ſingle ark: or leads them [d]; that is, governs them, as Mr. Broughton renders the word, rules and over-rules them, as large as they are; or leads them into captivity, as ſome Jewiſh writers [e], as the Iſraelites; though they have been enlarged, and became numerous, as it was promiſed they ſhould, yet have been led into captivity, firſt the ten tribes by the Aſſyrians, and then the two tribes by the Chaldeans; the Targum is, he ſpreadeth out a net for the nations, and leadeth them, that is, into it, ſo that they are taken in it, ſee Ezek. xii. 13.

℣. 24. He taketh away the heart of the chief of the people of the earth, &c.] The people of the earth are the common people, the chief or heads [f] of them, as it may be rendered, are kings, princes and generals of armies; whoſe hearts may be ſaid to be taken away, when they are diſpirited, and deprived both of courage and conduct; have neither valour nor wiſdom, neither fortitude of mind, nor military ſkill to defend themſelves and their people againſt their enemies. Sephorno interprets this of Sihon and Og, whoſe ſpirits the Lord hardened, and made their hearts obſtinate to war with Iſrael, Deut. ii. 30. but it may be better underſtood of the Iſraelites, and the heads of them, when they were diſcomfited by the Amalekites, quickly after their coming out of Egypt, ſee Numb. xiv. 45. about which time Job lived: and the rather, ſince it follows, and cauſed them to wander in a wilderneſs where there is no way; no track, no beaten path to follow, to be a guide to them, and direct their way; in ſuch a wilderneſs the Iſraelites wandered near forty years, ſee Pſ. cvii. 40.

℣. 25. They grope in the dark without light, &c.] Like blind men, as the men of Sodom, when they were ſtruck with blindneſs; or they grope, or feel the dark, and not light [g], as the Targum; as the Egyptians did when ſuch groſs darkneſs was upon them, as might be felt: and he maketh them to ſtagger like a drunken man; that has loſt his ſight, his ſenſes, and his feet, and knows not where he is, which way to go, nor how to keep on his legs, but reels to and fro, and is at the utmoſt loſs what to do; all this is ſaid of the heads or chief of the people, in conſequence of their hearts being taken away, and ſo left deſtitute of wiſdom and ſtrength.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIII.

JOB begins this chapter, by obſerving the extenſiveneſs of his knowledge, as appeared from his preceding diſcourſe, by which it was evident he was not leſs knowing than his friends, ℣. 1, 2. and therefore would have nothing to do with them as judges in his cauſe, but would appeal to God, and debate the matter before him, and leave it to his deciſion, ſince he could expect no good from them, ℣. 3, 4. and all the favour he intreats of them is, that they would for the future be no longer ſpeakers, but hearers, ℣. 5, 6, 13, 17. he expoſtulates with them about their wicked and deceitful way of pleading for God, and againſt him, ℣. 7, 8. and in order to ſtrike an awe upon them, ſuggeſts to them, that they were liable to the divine ſcrutiny; that God was not to be mocked by them, that he would ſurely reprove them for their reſpect of perſons, and deſires them to conſider his dreadful majeſty, and what frail creatures they were, ℣. 9—12. then he expreſſes his confidence in God, that he ſhould be ſaved by him, notwithſtanding the afflictive circumſtances he was in, ℣. 14, 15, 16. and doubted not he ſhould be able ſo to plead his cauſe, as that he ſhould be juſtified, if God would but withdraw his hand, and take off his dread from him, ℣. 18—22. he deſires to know what his ſins were, that he ſhould hide his face from him, and treat him with ſo much ſeverity, who was but a poor, weak, feeble creature, ℣. 23, 24, 25. and concludes with a complaint of the bitterneſs and ſharpneſs of his afflictions, with which he was conſumed, ℣. 26—28.

℣. 1. Lo, mine eye hath ſeen all this, &c.] Or all thoſe things[h] he had been diſcourſing of, concerning the wiſdom and power of God, and his friends alſo; ſome of theſe he had ſeen inſtances of, he had been an eye-witneſs of them, and could give an ocular teſtimony to them; and others he had diſcerned with the eyes of his underſtanding, being opened and enlightened, and had a clear and diſtinct view of them, ſo that he had ſeen and knew as much of theſe things as any of them had. Some[i] interpret it all other things, pertaining to the ſame ſubject; by what he had ſaid, it might be concluded he knew more; this was but a ſample or ſpecimen of his knowledge, which, when obſerved, it might be perceived what an underſtanding he had in ſuch divine things: the words are indeed abſolute, my eye hath ſeen all things[k], which muſt not be taken in the largeſt and comprehenſive ſenſe of all things to be ſeen, heard and underſtood; for tho' Job's knowledge was very great, yet it did not take ſo great a compaſs as this; many things in nature his eye had not ſeen, others in providence he could not diſcern, and but a ſmall portion of God, of his nature, perfections, ways and works was known by him, as he himſelf confeſſes elſewhere, ch. xxvi. 14. this therefore muſt be limited and reſtrained to the ſubject-matter in hand, and to what he and his friends had been treating of: mine ear hath heard; ſome things he had knowledge of by the report of others, from his fore-fathers, his anceſtors, men of capacity and probity, that could be credited, and ſafely depended on, and even ſome things by revelation from God; for if Eliphaz his friend had an heavenly viſion, and a divine revelation, which his ear received a little of, why may it not be thought that Job alſo was ſometimes favoured with viſions and revelations from God, whereby he became more intimately acquainted with divine and ſpiritual things? and underſtood it; that is, what he had ſeen and heard; ſome things may be ſeen, and yet not known what they are; and other things may be heard, and not underſtood; but Job had an underſtanding of what he had ſeen with his own eyes, or had received by revelation, human or divine: and all this is introduced with a lo or behold; not as a note of admiration at his knowledge, though the things known by him were wonderful, but as a note of attention to them, and to his remark on them, and as expreſſive of the certainty of his ſight, hearing and underſtanding of theſe things.

℣. 2. What ye know, the ſame do I know alſo, &c.] Concerning God and his perfections, his ſovereignty, holineſs, juſtice, wiſdom, power, goodneſs, &c. and concerning his providences, and his dealings with men in an ordinary, or in an extraordinary way: I am not inferior unto you; as might be collected from the preceding diſcourſe; ſee the note on ch. xii. 3.

℣. 3. Surely I would ſpeak to the Almighty, &c.] Or therefore I would ſpeak[l], ſince he knew as much as his friends, and they knew no more than he, if ſo much, he would have no more to do with them, they ſhould not be his judges; nor would he be determined by them, but would appeal to God, and plead his own cauſe before him, by whom he doubted not he ſhould be candidly heard; he knew that he was the judge of all the earth, and would do right; and that he ſat on a throne judging righteouſly, and would maintain his right and his cauſe; that he would judge him according to his righteouſneſs and integrity, of which he was conſcious, and would paſs a juſt deciſive ſentence in his favour, and give the cauſe for him againſt his friends, as he afterwards did; for this is not to be underſtood of ſpeaking to him in prayer, though that is a ſpeech either of the heart or of the tongue, or of both, to God; and which he allows of, yea delights in, and which is a wonderful condeſcenſion; and therefore it may be uſed with boldneſs and freedom, and which gracious ſouls are deſirous of; and the conſideration of God being almighty, or all-ſufficient, is an argument, motive and inducement to them to ſpeak or pray unto him, ſince he is able to do all things for them, they want or deſire of him; but here it is to be underſtood of ſpeaking to him, or before him, in a judicial way, at his bar, before his tribunal, he ſitting as a judge to hear the cauſe, and decide the controverſy between Job and his friends. Some render it, I would ſpeak for the Almighty, and deſire to reaſon for God[m]; ſeeing he knew ſo much of him; not ſpeak againſt him, as his friends ſuggeſted he had, but for him, on behalf of his ſovereignty, juſtice, holineſs, wiſdom and ſtrength, as he had done, and would do yet more; by which he would have it known, that as he had as much knowledge as they, he was as zealous as zealous as any of them to plead for God, and defend him, and promote his honour and glory to the uttermoſt; but the other ſenſe is beſt: and I deſire to reaſon with God; not at the bar of his juſtice, with reſpect to the juſtification of his perſon by his own righteouſneſs; ſo no man can reaſon with God, as to approve himſelf juſt with him; nor will any ſenſible man deſire to enter into judgment with him on that foot; a poor ſenſible ſinner may reaſon with God at the throne of grace, and plead for pardoning mercy and juſtifying grace thro' the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and from the declarations, proclamations and promiſes of grace through him; but of neither of theſe ſorts of reaſonings are the words to be underſtood, but of debating the matter in controverſy between Job and his friends before God, that he might hear it, and decide it; this was what Job was deſirous of, of having the cauſe brought before him, the caſe ſtated and pleaded, and reaſoned on in his preſence; this he ſignifies would be a pleaſure to him; he ſhould delight to have it ſo, as the word [n] here uſed may be interpreted.

℣. 4. But ye are forgers of lies, &c.] This is a hard and very harſh ſaying; Job was now in a paſſion, provoked by his friends, and retorts upon them what they had charged him with, ch. xi. 3. ſo, often in controverſies and diſputes between good men undue heats ariſe, and unbecoming words drop from their lips and pens; to tell lies is a bad thing, but to forge them, to tell a ſtudied, premeditated lie, is dreadfully ſhocking, contrary to the grace of God, and which good men cannot allow themſelves in, it is the character of bad men, ſee Iſ. lxiii. 8. Pſ. cxix. 69. but it may be Job may not deſign lies in a ſtrict and proper ſenſe, but falſhoods and untruths; for though no lie is of the truth, yet every untruth is not a lie; becauſe a man may deliver an untruth, not knowing it to be ſo, but taking it for a truth, ſpeaks it, without any deſign to impoſe upon, and deceive others. Doctrinal lies may be intended, ſuch as the falſe prophets told, whereby they made the hearts of the righteous ſad, and were the untempered morter they daubed with, Ezek. xiii. 10, 22. and the word here uſed has the ſame ſignification, and may be rendered, daubers of lies [o]; that colour over things, and make falſhoods look like truths, and deliver them for ſuch, and like others ſpeak lies in hypocriſy: now thoſe here referred to were theſe, that God did not afflict good men, at leaſt in any very ſevere manner, and that Job, being thus afflicted, was a bad man, and an hypocrite; both theſe Job charges as lies: ye are all phyſicians of no value; or idol-phyſicians [p]; not that pretended to the cure of idols, but were no better than idols themſelves, and underſtood no more how to cure than they, than an heathen deity, the god of phyſic Æſculapius, or any one that might be reckoned ſuch; but was no other than an image of wood or ſtone, and ſo could not be poſſeſſed of the faculty of healing, and ſuch were Job's friends; an idol is nothing, and is good for nothing, and ſuch were they as phyſicians, they were idol-phyſicians, like the idol-ſhepherd, Zech. xi. 17. of no value at all: the Rabbins [q] ſay, the word uſed ſignifies a nerve or ſinew of the neck, which when broken is incurable; and ſuch phyſicians were they, that could do him no ſervice, no more than cure a broken neck; this is to be underſtood of them, not as phyſicians of his body, that they pretended not to be; he was greatly diſeaſed from head to foot, and had no hope of a recovery of his health, nor did they pretend to preſcribe for him, nor does he reproach them on that account; but as phyſicians of his ſoul, afflicted and diſtreſſed, they came to adminiſter comfort to him under his afflictions, but they were miſerable comforters, as he elſewhere calls them, ch. xvi. 2. inſtead of acting the part of the good Samaritan, and pouring in oil and wine into his wounds, they poured in vinegar, and made them bleed and ſmart the more, and added affliction to his affliction; inſtead of healing, they wounded him yet more and more; and inſtead of binding up his wounds, opened them wider, and gave him ſenſible pain; inſtead of giving him the cordials of the goſpel, they gave him the corroſives of the law; and inſtead of pointing out unto him the gracious promiſes of God, for the ſupport of his afflicted ſoul, they loaded him with charges of ſin, and ſet him to work by repentance and reformation to obtain the forgiveneſs of them: they ſaid many good things, but miſapplied them, being ignorant of the caſe, and ſo were phyſicians of no value; as ſuch are who are ignorant of the nature and cauſes of a diſeaſe, and therefore make wrong preſcriptions, though the medicines they preſcribe may in themſelves be good: indeed, in ſoul-caſes, or for the healing of the diſeaſes of the ſoul, which are natural and hereditary, epidemical and univerſal, nauſeous and loathſome, and of themſelves mortal, all phyſicians are of no value; but Jeſus Chriſt, who is the only phyſician of ſouls, the able, ſkilful and infallible one, that cures all fully and freely that apply unto him; bodily phyſicians are of no uſe in ſuch caſes, nor merry companions, nor legal preachers, who direct to ſupple the wounds with tears of repentance, and bind them up with rags of a man's own righteouſneſs; Chriſt is the only Saviour, his blood the balſam that heals every wound, and his righteouſneſs that affords peace, joy and comfort to afflicted minds, and delivers from thoſe weights and preſſures of mind, with which they are bowed down.

℣. 5. And that ye would altogether hold your peace, &c.] Since what they ſaid of him was not true, nor any thing to the purpoſe, or that tended to the comfort of his afflicted ſoul, but the reverſe; and therefore he could have wiſhed they had never broke ſilence, but continued as they were the firſt ſeven days of their viſit; and now, ſince they had ſpoken, and had done no good by ſpeaking, but hurt, he deſires for the future they would be ſilent, and ſay no more: and it ſhould be your wiſdom; it would be the greateſt evidence of it they could give; they had ſhown none by ſpeaking; it would be a proof of ſome in them, ſhould they hold their peace; a very biting expreſſion this! ſee Prov. xvii. 28.

℣. 6. Hear now my reaſoning, &c.] Job intreats his friends, that they would be no longer ſpeakers but hearers; that they would vouchſafe to ſit ſtill, and hear what he had to ſay; though he was greatly afflicted, he had not loſt his reaſon, wiſdom was not driven out from him, ch. vi. 13. he had ſtill with him his reaſoning powers, which he was capable of making uſe of, and even before God, and deſires deſires that they would attend to what he had to ſay on his own behalf: and hearken to the pleadings of my lips; he was capable of pleading his own cauſe, and he was deſirous of doing it before God as his judge; and begs the favour of his friends to be ſilent, and hear him out, and then let judgment be given, not by them, but by God himſelf.

℣. 7. Will you ſpeak wickedly for God? &c.] As he ſuggeſts they did; they ſpoke for God, and pleaded for the honour of his juſtice, by aſſerting he did not afflict good men, which they thought was contrary to his juſtice; but then, at the ſame time, they ſpoke wickedly of Job, that he being afflicted of God was a bad man, and an hypocrite; and this was ſpeaking wickedly for God, to vindicate his juſtice at the expence of his character, which there was no need to do; and ſhewed that they were poor advocates for God, ſince they might have vindicated the honour of his juſtice, and yet allowed that he afflicted good men, and that Job was ſuch an one: and talk deceitfully for him? or tell lies for him, namely, thoſe juſt mentioned, that only wicked men, and not good men, were afflicted by him, and that Job was a bad man, and an hypocrite.

℣. 8. Will ye accept his perſon? &c.] Accepting or reſpecting perſons ought not to be done in judgment by earthly judges; which is done when they give a cauſe to one through favour and affection to his perſon, becauſe rich, or their friend, and againſt another, becauſe otherwiſe; and ſomething like this Job intimates his friends did in the preſent caſe; they only conſidered what God was, holy, juſt, wiſe and good in all he did, and ſo far they were right, and too much reſpect cannot be given him; but the fault was, that they only attended to this, and did not look into the cauſe of Job itſelf, but wholly neglected it, and gave it againſt him, he being poor, abject and miſerable, on the above conſideration of the perfections of God; which looked like what is called among men acceptation, or reſpect of perſons: will ye contend for God? it is right to contend for God, for the being of God againſt atheiſts, for the perfections of God, his ſovereignty, his omniſcience, omnipreſence, &c. againſt thoſe that deny them, for his truths and doctrines, word, worſhip and ordinances, againſt the corrupters of them; but then he and thoſe are not to be contended for in a fooliſh and imprudent manner, or with a zeal, not according to knowledge, much leſs with an hypocritical one, as was Jehu's; God needs no ſuch advocates, he can plead his own cauſe, or make uſe of perſons that can do it in a better manner, and to better purpoſe.

℣. 9. Is it good that he ſhould ſearch you out? &c.] That is, God; ſearching is aſcribed to him after the manner of men; not that he is ignorant of perſons or things he ſearches after, or exerciſes that application, diligence and induſtry, and takes thoſe pains which are neceſſary in men to find out any thing; when he makes ſearch, it is not on his own account, but others; at leaſt it is only to ſhew his knowledge of perſons and things, and to make men known to others, or things to them themſelves; and is here to be underſtood in a judicial ſenſe, as it frequently is the caſe, ſo it was here, a man that is firſt in his own cauſe, as the wiſe man ſays, Prov. xviii. 17. ſeemeth juſt; to himſelf and others; it looks upon the repreſentation he makes of things, as if he was in the right: but his neighbour cometh and ſearcheth him; traverſes his arguments in his own vindication, and ſhews the fallacy of them; ſo Job's friends making the worſt of his cauſe, and the beſt of their own, ſeemed right in their own eyes; but God, who is the ſearcher of hearts, and who knows all things, could ſee through their coverings of things, and could not be deceived by them, but would find them out, and expoſe them; as he did afterwards, when he gave judgment againſt them, and declared they had not ſaid that which was right, as his ſervant Job had, ch. xlii. 7, 8. and therefore it was not to their profit and advantage, and to their honour and credit, to be ſearched out by him, or to run the riſque of it, as they did, which is the amount of this queſtion: or as one mocketh another, do ye ſo mock him? men may be mocked by their fellow-creatures, either by words or geſtures, as good men uſually are in all ages, eſpecially the prophets of the Lord, and the miniſters of his word; or they may be deceived and impoſed upon by the falſe gloſſes and colourings of artful men, as ſimple men are deceived by the fair ſpeeches of falſe teachers, which is no other than an illuſion of them, or mocking them: in the firſt ſenſe God may be mocked, though he ſhould not; there have been, and will be ſuch bold and daring creatures as to mock at his promiſes, and his providence, to mock at his word, ordinances, and miniſters, which is interpreted by him a mocking and deſpiſing himſelf; but in the latter ſenſe he cannot be mocked, and it is a vain thing to attempt it; be not deceived, God is not mocked, Gal. vi. 7. he ſees through all the fallacious reaſonings of men; he judges not according to outward appearance; he ſees and knows the heart, and all the views and deſigns of men, and can detect all their ſophiſms and falſe gloſſes; he is not be deceived by ſpecious pretences of doing ſuch and ſuch actions for his glory, as caſting out good men, and their names, or traducing their characters that he may be glorified, or killing them to do him ſervice, Iſ. lxvi. 5. John xvi. 2. he is not to be flattered as one man may flatter another; to do this with him, is to mock him, he is not to be mocked in this way.

℣. 10. He will ſurely reprove you, &c.] Or in reproving he will reprove you[r]; he will certainly do it, it may be depended upon, and be expected; he will never ſuffer ſin to go unreproved and uncorrected; he will do it to the purpoſe, with ſharpneſs and ſeverity, as the nature of the crime requires; he reproves by his Spirit, and it is well for men when he thoroughly, and in a ſpiritual and ſaving way, reproves them by him, and convinces them of ſin, righteouſneſs and judgment; and he reproves by his word, which is written for reproof and correction; and by his miniſters, one part of whoſe work it is to rebuke and reprove men for bad practices, and bad principles; and in ſome caſes they are to uſe ſharpneſs, and which when ſubmitted to, and kindly taken, it is well; and ſometimes he reproves by his providences, by afflictive diſpenſations, and that either in love, as he rebukes his own children, or in wrath and hot diſpleaſure, as others, which is here deſigned; and as it is always for ſin he rebukes men, ſo particularly he rebukes for the following, as might be expected: if ye do ſecretly accept perſons; acceptance of perſons in judgment is prohibited by God, and is is highly reſented by him; yea, even the acceptance of his own perſon to the prejudice of the character of an innocent man; which ſeems to be what Job has reſpect unto, as appears from ℣. 8. and ſome verſions render it, if ye accept his face [a]; and though this may be done not openly and publickly, but in a covert and ſecret manner, under diſguiſe, and with ſpecious pretences to the honour and glory of God.

℣. 11. Shall not his excellency make you afraid, &c.] To commit ſin, any ſin, and particularly that juſt mentioned, which they might expect to be reproved for; there is an excellency in the name of God, which is fearful and dreadful, and in the nature and perfections of God, his power, juſtice, and holineſs, in which he is glorious and tremendous, and ſhould deter men from ſinning againſt him; and there is an excellency in his works of nature and providence, which are wondrous, and ſhew him to be near at hand, and can at once, if he pleaſes, take vengeance for ſin: or ſhall not his height [b], &c. his ſublimity, his ſuperiority to all beings; he is the moſt high God, higher than the higheſt among men, he is above all gods, all that are ſo called; and therefore all the inhabitants of the earth ſhould ſtand in awe of him, and not ſin: or ſhall not his lifting up [c]? &c. on a throne of judgment, as the Targum adds; he is the judge of the whole earth, and will judge his people, and right their wrongs; he ſits on a throne high, and lifted up, judging righteouſly; and will maintain the cauſe of the innocent, and avenge himſelf on thoſe that injure them, and therefore it muſt be a fearful thing to fall into his hands: ſome render it, ſhall not his burning [d]; or flaming fire, &c. as Jarchi obſerves, and apply it to hell-fire, and the everlaſting burnings of the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone; and which are very terrible, and may well affright men from ſinning againſt God; but the firſt ſenſe ſeems to be beſt: and his dread fall upon you? the dread of men, of powerful and victorious enemies, is very terrible, as was the dread of the Iſraelites which fell upon the inhabitants of Canaan, Joſh. ii. 9. but how awful muſt be the terror of the great and dreadful God, when that falls upon men, or his terrible wrath and vengeance are revealed from heaven, and threaten every moment to fall upon the tranſgreſſors of his law, upon thoſe that mock him, and injure his people.

℣. 12. Your remembrances are like unto aſhes, &c.] Either of things they put Job in remembrance of, the mementos which they had ſuggeſted to him; ſee ch. iv. 7. or the things which they had brought forth out of their memories, the inſtances they had given of what had been in the world, the arguments, objections, and reaſonings, they had made uſe of in this controverſy; their memorable ſentences [e], as ſome render it, were of no more moment and importance than aſhes, and eaſily blown away like them; or whatſoever was memorable in them, or they thought would perpetuate their memory hereafter, as their houſes and lands, and towns and cities, called by their names, theſe memorials ſhould periſh, Pſ. xlix. 11. and ix. 6. or their wealth and riches, their honour and glory, their learning, wiſdom, and knowledge, all ſhould fade, and come to nothing; the memory of the juſt indeed is bleſſed, the righteous are had in everlaſting remembrance, becauſe of their everlaſting righteouſneſs; but as for any thing elſe, that may be thought to be a remembrance of man, it is but as aſhes, of little worth, ſoon gone, and often trampled upon; and men ſhould remember, that they are but duſt and aſhes, as Aben Ezra [f] obſerves, even in their beſt eſtate, in compariſon of the excellency of God before ſpoken of; and as Abraham confeſſed in the preſence of God, Gen. xviii. 27. your bodies to bodies of clay; that is, are like to bodies of clay, to ſuch as are made of clay after the ſimilitude of human bodies; and ſuch are the bodies of men themſelves, they are of the earth earthly, they are houſes of clay, which have their foundation in the duſt; earthen veſſels, and earthly houſes of this tabernacle, poor mean frail brittle things, are cruſhed before the moth, and much more before the Almighty; the word is by ſome rendered eminencies, the moſt eminent men; what is moſt eminent in them are like to eminences of clay [g], or heaps of dirt: ſome interpret this as the former expreſſion, of their words, reaſonings, arguments, and objections; which though great ſwelling words, were vain and empty, mere bubbles, and though reckoned ſtrong reaſonings, unanſwerable arguments, and objections, had no ſtrength in them, but were to be eaſily thrown down like hillocks of clay; and though thought to be like ſhields, or high and ſtrong fortreſſes, as ſome [h] take the word to ſignify, yet are but clayey ones.

℣. 13. Hold your peace, let me alone, &c.] Or, ceaſe from me [i], from ſpeaking to me, or hindering me from ſpeaking. Job might perceive by ſome motions of his friends, that they were about to interrupt him; and therefore he deſires they would be ſilent, and let him go on: that I may ſpeak; or and I will ſpeak, and let come on me what will; either from men, or from God himſelf; a good man, when he knows his cauſe is good, and he has truth on his ſide, is not careful or concerned what reproach may be caſt upon him, or what cenſures from men he may undergo; or what perſecutions from them he may endure; none of theſe things move him from his duty, or can ſtop his mouth from ſpeaking the truth; let him be threatened with what he will, he cannot but ſpeak the things which he has ſeen and heard, and knows to be true; as for what may come upon him from God, that he is not ſolicitous about; he knows he'll lay nothing upon him but what is common to men, will ſupport him under it, or deliver him from it in his own time and way, or however make all things work together for his good: ſome render it, and let ſomething paſs by me, or from me [k]; that is, ſomewhat of his grief and ſorrow, whilſt he was ſpeaking and pouring out his complaints before God; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt.

℣. 14. Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth, &c.] Or bite my lips, to keep in my words, and refrain from ſpeaking? I will not do it: and put my life in my hand? or, expoſe it to danger by a forced ſilence; when I am ready to burſt, and muſt if I don't ſpeak; I will not thus endanger my life; it is unreaſonable I ſhould, I'll ſpeak my mind freely and fully, that I may be refreſhed; ſo Sephorno pborno interprets it of Job's putting his hand to his mouth, that he might be ſilent; and of putting a forcible reſtraint upon himſelf, that he might not declare what was upon his mind; ſee ℣. 19. but others, as Bar Tzemach, take the ſenſe to be, what is the ſin I have committed, that ſuch ſore afflictions are laid upon me; that through the pain and diſtreſs I am in, I am ready to tear off my fleſh with my teeth, and my life is in the utmoſt danger? and ſome think he was under a temptation to tear his own fleſh, and deſtroy himſelf; and therefore argues why he ſhould be thus hardly dealt with, as to be expoſed to ſuch a temptation, and thrown in ſuch deſpair, which yet he laboured againſt; but rather the meaning is, in connexion with the preceding verſe, let whatſoever will come upon me, at all events, I will take my fleſh in my teeth, and I will put my life in my hand [l]; I will expoſe myſelf to the greateſt dangers, which is the ſenſe of the laſt phraſe in Judg. xii. 3. 1 Sam. xix. 5. and xxviii. 21. Pſ. cxix. 109. come life, come death, I'll not fear; I am determined to ſpeak out my mind, let what will be the conſequence; and with this bold and heroic ſpirit agrees what follows.

℣. 15. Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him, &c.] There is a double reading of theſe words; the Keri, or marginal reading, is לו in him, which we follow; the Cetib, or textual reading is לא not, which many follow, and render the words, lo he will ſlay me, I ſhall not hope; or, I have no hope, or do not expect [m]; that is, any other than to be ſlain or die; and this agrees with various expreſſions of his elſewhere, that he had no hope of any long continuance of life, or of reſtoration to health and outward happineſs again, but expected to die quickly; ſee ch. vi. 11. and vii. 21. and x. 20. and xix. 10. but I will maintain mine own ways before him; or to his face [n]; though I die on the ſpot inſtantly, I'll ſtand by it, and make it appear that the ways I have walked in are right, that I have behaved as a ſincere upright man, a man fearing God, and eſchewing evil; a character which God himſelf has given of me, and I have not forfeited it: I will argue or prove [o] it before him, as it may be rendered; that my life and converſation has been agreeable to my profeſſion of him; that my ways have been according to his revealed will, and my walk as becoming the character I bear; and this I'll maintain and ſupport, as long as I live; I'll never depart from this ſentiment, or let go my integrity to my lateſt breath; ſee ch. xxvii. 5, 6. but the marginal reading ſeems beſt, yet will I truſt in him [p]? verily I will, though I am under cutting and ſlaying providences, under ſore afflictions, which may be called killing and ſlaying, or death itſelf; though there is an addition of them, one affliction upon another, and ſorrow upon ſorrow; though I am killed continually, all the day long, or dye by inches; yea though in the article of death itſelf, yet even then will I truſt and hope: God only is the object of truſt and confidence, and not a creature, or any creature-enjoyment, or creature-act; and great encouragement there is to truſt in him, ſeeing in him is everlaſting ſtrength, to fulfil his promiſes, to help in time of need, and to ſave with an everlaſting ſalvation; he is to be truſted in at all times, in times of affliction, temptation, deſertion, and death itſelf: it may be rendered [q], I will hope in him, ſince there is mercy and plenteous redemption with him, and he delights in thoſe that hope in his mercy; his eye is upon them, and his heart is towards them: or I will wait for him, or expect him [r]; wait for deliverance by him, wait all the days of his appointed time, till his change come; wait for the hope of righteouſneſs by faith, expect all needful grace from him now, and eternal glory and happineſs hereafter: but notwithſtanding his truſt was alone in God for time and eternity, yet, ſays he, I will maintain mine own ways before him; that I am not an hypocrite, or have behaved as a bad man; but have acted under the influence of grace, according to his mind and will revealed.

℣. 16. He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation, &c.] Job though he aſſerted the integrity of his heart and life, yet did not depend on his ways and works for ſalvation, but only on the Lord himſelf; this is to be underſtood not of temporal ſalvation, though God is the author of that, and it is only to be had of him, yet Job had no hope concerning that; but of ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, which God the father has contrived, determined, and reſolved on, and ſent his ſon to effect; which Chriſt being ſent is the author of by his obedience, ſufferings, and death; and in him, and in his name alone is ſalvation; and every ſoul ſenſible of the inſufficiency of himſelf and others to ſave him, will reſolve, as Job here, that he, and he only, ſhall be his ſaviour, who is an able, willing, and complete one; ſee Hoſ. xiv. 3. and the words are expreſſive of faith of intereſt in him. Job knew him to be his ſaviour, and living redeemer, and would acknowledge no other; but claim his intereſt in him, now and hereafter, and which was his greateſt ſupport under all his troubles; ſee ch. xix. 26, 27. Pſ. xxvii. 1. for an hypocrite ſhall not come before him; a hypocrite may come into the houſe of God, and worſhip him externally, and ſeem to be very devout and religious; and he ſhall come before the tribunal of God, and ſtand at his bar, to be tried and judged; but he ſhall not continue in the preſence of God, nor enjoy his favour, or he ſhall not be able to make his cauſe good before him; and indeed he does not care to have himſelf examined by him, nor ſhall he be ſaved everlaſtingly, but undergo the moſt ſevere puniſhment, Matt. xxiv. 51. Job here either has reſpect to his friends, whom he cenſures as hypocrites, and retorts the charge upon they brought on him; or he has reference to that charge, and by this mean clears himſelf of it, ſince there was nothing he was more deſirous of than to refer his caſe to the deciſion of the omniſcient God, and righteous judge; which if he was an hypocrite he would never have done, ſince ſuch can never ſtand ſo ſtrict and ſevere an examination.

℣. 17. Hear diligently my ſpeech, &c.] Or, in hearing hear [s]; meaning, not only that his friends would attentively hear him, but continue to hear him; that they would hear him out what he had to ſay farther: upon his expreſſing himſelf with ſo much faith and confidence in God, they might riſe up from their ſeats and be preparing to be gone, as not having patience to hear a man talk ſo confidently who they thought was a bad man and an hypocrite; hypocrite; or they might attempt to interrupt him while ſpeaking, and therefore he deſires they would be ſtill, and patiently and diligently hear what he had more to ſay: and my declaration with your ears; that is, that they would liſten to it attentively, when he doubted not but he ſhould make his caſe as clear as the ſun, and ſet it in ſuch a point of view, as that it would appear moſt plainly to be right, and he to be a juſt man.

℣. 18. Behold now, I have ordered my cauſe, &c.] Or judgment[t]; that is, he had looked over his cauſe afreſh, had reviewed the ſtate of his caſe, had conſidered it in every light, had drawn a plan of it, had digeſted it in a proper manner, and had arranged his reaſons and arguments in vindication of himſelf in a regular form; and had them at hand, and could readily and eaſily come at them on occaſion, to vindicate himſelf; and, upon the whole, could ſay in the ſtrongeſt manner, and could draw this concluſion, I know that I ſhall be juſtified; which, though it may primarily reſpect the caſe in diſpute between him and his friends, and the charge of wickedneſs and hypocriſy brought againſt him by them, from which he doubted not he ſhould upon a fair hearing be acquitted by God himſelf, yet it may include his whole ſtate of juſtification, God-ward, in which he was and ſhould continue; and ſo may reſpect, not only the juſtification of his cauſe before men, as it was ordered and managed by him, but alſo the juſtification of his perſon before God, of which he had a full aſſurance; having ordered his cauſe aright, ſettled matters well, and proceeded upon a good plan and foundation; which to do, is not to put juſtification upon the foot of purity of nature at firſt birth, and a ſober life and converſation from youth upward, and a perfection of good works arrived unto, as imagined; nor upon a comparative righteouſneſs with reſpect to other men, even profane and ungodly perſons; nor upon repentance, and ſincere though imperfect obedience; nor upon an external belief of evangelic truths, and a ſubmiſſion to goſpel-ordinances: but ſuch order their cauſe well, and rightly conclude their juſtification, who ſee and own themſelves to be tranſgreſſors of the law of God, behold and acknowledge their own righteouſneſs to be inſufficient to juſtify them, view the righteouſneſs of Chriſt revealed in the goſpel, in its glory, excellency, and ſuitableneſs, and lay hold upon it as their juſtifying righteouſneſs; and obſerving that the word of God declares, that thoſe that believe in Chriſt are and ſhall be juſtified, and finding in themſelves that they do with the heart believe in Chriſt for righteouſneſs, hence they moſt comfortably and moſt ſenſibly conclude that they are juſtified perſons; for this knowledge is of faith, and this faith the faith of aſſurance; it is not barely for a man to know that there is righteouſneſs in Chriſt, and juſtification by it, but that there is righteouſneſs in him for himſelf, and that he is the Lord his righteouſneſs; for the words may be rendered, I know that I am righteous; or, am juſtified[u]; juſtification is a paſt act in the mind of God; it is preſent, as it terminates on the conſcience of a believer; it is future, as it will be notified at the day of judgment before angels and men; ſee Iſ. xlv. 25.

℣. 19. Who is he that will plead with me, &c.] Enter the liſts with him; diſpute the point, and try the ſtrength of his arguments he had to plead for his own juſtification: thus Chriſt, the head of the church, and the ſurety of his people, is repreſented as ſpeaking when he had by his obedience and ſufferings made ſatisfaction for them, by bringing in an everlaſting righteouſneſs, and was, as their public and federal head, juſtified and acquitted, Iſ. l. 4—9. and much the ſame words are put into the mouth of a believer in him, and are expreſſed by him, Rom. viii. 33, 34. who ſtands acquitted from all charges that men or devils, friends or foes, the law or juſtice of God, the devil and his own unbelieving heart, at any time, can bring againſt him. Job well knowing the uprightneſs of his heart and life, the juſtneſs of his cauſe depending between him and his friends, boldly challenges them to come forth, and try it with him; or rather he ſeems deſirous that God himſelf would take the caſe in hand, and plead with him; he was ready to engage with him, and in the preſence of his friends, and in their hearing; and doubted not of being acquitted before God, and at his bar; ſo ſatisfied was he of his own innocence as to the things charged upon him: for now if I hold my peace, I ſhall give up the ghoſt; his ſenſe ſeems to be, that if he was not allowed to ſpeak for himſelf, and plead his cauſe, and have a hearing of it out, he could not live, he could not contain himſelf, he muſt burſt and die; nor could he live under ſuch charges and calumnies, he muſt die under the weight and preſſure of them; though ſome think that this not only expreſſes his eagerneſs and impatience to have his cauſe tried fairly before God, but contains in it an argument to haſten it, taken from the near approach of his death: for now, in a little time, I ſhall be ſilent[w]; be in the ſilent grave: I ſhall expire; or die; and then it will be too late; therefore if any will plead with me, let them do it immediately, or I ſhall be ſoon gone, and then it will be all over: or rather the ſenſe is, I challenge any one to reaſon the matter, and diſpute the point with me; and I promiſe that if the cauſe goes againſt me, now will I be ſilent; I'll not ſay one word more in my vindication: I will dye; or ſubmit to any death, or any ſort of puniſhment, that ſhall be pronounced upon me; I'll patiently endure it, and not complain of it, or object to the execution of it; ſo Sephorno.

℣. 20. Onely do not two things unto me, &c.] This is an addreſs not to Zophar as in the place of God, as ſome, but to God himſelf; by this it appears, that tho' in modeſty he does not mention him, yet he it is, he has the chief, if not the ſole regard unto in the preceding verſe; for his deſire was to ſpeak to the Almighty and reaſon with God, and have nothing more to do with his friends, ℣. 3, 4, 5. but before any pleadings begin on either ſide, he is deſirous of ſettling and fixing the terms and conditions of the diſpute; he requeſts that two things might be granted him, which are mentioned in the next verſe: then will I not hide myſelf from thee; thro' fear or ſhame, but boldly appear before God, and come up even to his ſeat, and plead with him face to face.

℣. 21. Withdraw thine hand far from me, &c.] His afflicting hand which preſſed him; this he deſires might be removed, or otherwiſe he could not have have the command of himself, make use of his reasoning faculties, recollect his arguments, and give them in their due force and strength; for afflictions of body affect the soul and memory, understanding and judgment; this is one of the things he would have agreed unto before the dispute was entered on; the other follows: And let not thy dread make me afraid; the terrors of his law, or the dreadful apprehensions of his wrath; he desires to be freed from all slavish fear of God, that now possessed his mind thro' the severity of his dispensations towards him, behaving as if he was his enemy; or he deprecates his appearance in any external visible way and manner, which might be affrighting to him, and so hinder freedom of speech in his own defence; these two things are before requested, ch. ix. 34, 35. which should they be granted, he proposes as follows.

℣. 22. Then call thou, and I will answer, &c.] Either call him by name in open court, and he would answer to it; or arraign him at the bar, and exhibit charges against him, and he would make answer to them and clear himself; his sense is, that if God would take upon him to be plaintiff, and accuse and charge him with what he had to object to him, then he would be defendant, and plead his own cause, and shew that they did not of right belong unto him: or let me speak, and answer thou me: or he would be plaintiff, and put queries concerning the afflictions he was exercised with, or the severity of them, and the reason of such usage, and God be the defendant, and give him an answer to them, that he might he no longer at a loss as he was for such behaviour towards him: this is very boldly said indeed, and seems to savour of irreverence towards God; and may be one of those speeches for which he was blamed by Elihu, and by the Lord himself; tho' no doubt he designed not to cast any contempt upon God, nor to behave ill towards him; but in the agonies of his spirit, and under the weight of his affliction, and to shew the great sense he had of his innocence, and his assurance of it, he speaks in this manner; not doubting but let him have what part he would in the debate, whether that of plaintiff or defendant, he should carry the cause, and it would go in his favour; and though he proposes it to God to be at his option, to chuse which he would take, Job stays not for an answer, but takes upon him to be plaintiff, as in the following words.

℣. 23. How many are mine iniquities and sins?] Whether of ignorance or presumption, thro' mistake or wilfulness, voluntary or involuntary, sins of omission or commission, secret or open, or of heart, lip or life; for by this heap of words he uses in this and the next clause, he means all sorts of sins be they what they would; he desires to know what they were, both with respect to quality and quantity, how great[i] they were, what heinous and capital crimes he had been guilty of, that such sore afflictions were laid upon him; and how many they were, as they were suggested to be by his friends, and who indeed call them infinite, ch. xxii. 5. and as they might seem to be from the many afflictions endured by him, which were supposed to be for sins; tho' as Schultens observes, such an interrogation has the force of a diminution and negation, as that of the Psalmist; how many are the days of thy servant? Ps. cxix. 84. that is, how few are they? or rather none at all; namely of light and joy, of pleasure and comfort; so Job represents by this, his sins to be but few[k] in comparison of what his friends surmised, or might be concluded from his afflictions; and indeed none at all of a capital nature and such as were of a deep dye, attrocious and enormous crimes; only such as were common to good men, who all have their frailties, infirmities, and imperfections, there being not a just man that does good and sins not: Job did not pretend to be without sin, but he was not sensible of any notorious sin he could be charged with, nor was he conscious of allowing himself in any known sin, or of living and walking therein, which is inconsistent with the grace of God; moreover as he knew his interest in his living Redeemer and surety, to whom, and not to himself his sins and transgressions were imputed; he might ask how many iniquities and sins are to me[l]? as the words may be literally rendered; that is, which are to be reckoned to me, to be placed to my account? none at all; see 2 Cor. v. 19. Ps. xxxii. 1, 2. make me to know my transgression and my sin: not that he was ignorant of sin, of the nature and demerit of it, as unregenerate men are, who know not the plague of their own hearts, in-dwelling sin, internal lusts, nor the exceeding sinfulness of sinful actions, nor the effect and consequences of sin, pollution, guilt, the wrath of God, the curse of the law, and eternal death; at least do not know it as to be affected with a sense of it, to have a godly sorrow for it, repent of it, confess it and forsake it; such knowledge as this, is from the Spirit of God, and which Job had; but his meaning is, that if he could not be charged with many sins, as might seem to be the case, yet if there was but one that could be produced, and was the reason of his being afflicted after this manner, he desires to know what that was, that he might upon conviction of it, acknowledge it, repent of it, relinquish it, and guard against it; he desires to have a copy of his indictment, that he might know what he stood charged with, for what he was arraigned, condemned, and punished, as it was thought he was; this he judged a reasonable request, and necessary to be granted, that he might answer for himself.

℣. 24. Wherefore hidest thou thy face,] Not from his cry, because of his sore and grievous afflictions, as Bar Tzemach; nor from helping and saving him from his troubles, as Sephorno; nor from looking on his right ways, as Jarchi; but from his person, withdrawing the manifestation of his face and favour; witholding the discoveries of his love; and denying him the light of his countenance, and sensible communion with him, and enjoyment of him, he had been indulged with; Job formerly had seen the face of God, enjoyed his presence, and walked in fellowship with him; but now he had withdrawn himself from him, and he knew not where to find him; see ch. xxiii. 2, 8, 9. a greater blessing cannot be had, than the gracious presence of God; nothing gives more pleasure when enjoyed, and nothing more grievous to good Men when it is witheld; oftentimes sin is the cause of it, but not always, as in this instance of Job; the end of the Lord in all his afflictions both inward and outward, was to try his patience, his integrity, and faithfulness; but as Job was for the present ignorant of it, he desires to know the reason of this the Lord's behaviour towards him; as it is what all good men should do in the like circumstances, nothing being more afflicting and distressing to them, and even intolerable; see Ps. x. 11. xiii. 1. and lxxxviii. 14. some think here is an allusion to the behaviour of judges towards such as were condemned by them, they were prejudiced diced againſt, and would neither hear nor ſee them; or to a rite and cuſtom in former times, as Pineda obſerves, when judges at the time of pronouncing ſentence on a malefactor, uſed to draw a curtain between them; or to the covering of the face of the criminal, ſee ch. ix. 24. and holdeth me for thine enemy? Job had been an enemy to God, as all men are in a ſtate of nature, yea enmity itſelf, as is ſhewn by their wicked works; but he was now reconciled unto God, the enmity of his heart was ſlain, and he had laid down his weapons of rebellion, and ceaſed committing hoſtilities againſt God, and was become ſubject to him and to his law, through the power of efficacious grace; a principle of love, which is the fruit of the Spirit in regeneration was implanted in him; and he was a true and ſincere lover of God, one that feared him, and truſted in him; whoſe faith worked by love, and ſo appeared to be of the right kind; and therefore ſince he was conſcious to himſelf, that he loved God, with all his heart, loved his word, his ways and worſhip, his people and all that belonged to him, it was cutting and grievous to him, to be thought and accounted, or dealt with as an enemy to him; for ſo he interpreted his conduct towards him; as he afflicted him, he took it to be in anger and fury, and hot diſpleaſure; and as he hid his face from him, he ſuppoſed it was in great wrath, viewing him in this light as his enemy.

℣. 25. Wilt thou break a leaf driven to and fro? &c.] A leaf that falls from a tree in autumn, and withers, and is rolled up, and driven about by the wind, which it cannot reſiſt, to which Job here compares himſelf; but it is not to be underſtood of him with reſpect to his ſpiritual eſtate; for being a good man, and one that truſted in the Lord, and made him his hope, he was, as every good man is, like to a tree planted by rivers of water, whoſe leaf withers not, but is always green, and does not fall off, as is the caſe of carnal profeſſors, who are compared to trees in autumn, which caſt their leaves and rotten fruit; ſee Pſ. i. 3. Jer. xvii. 7. 8. Jude ver. 12. but in reſpect to his outward eſtate, his frailty, weakneſs, and feebleneſs, eſpecially as now under the afflicting hand of God; ſee Iſ. lxiv. 6. ſo John the Baptiſt, on account of his being a frail mortal man, a weak feeble creature, compares himſelf to a reed ſhaken with the wind, Matt. xi. 7. now to break ſuch an one, was to add affliction to affliction, and which could not well be borne; and the like is ſignified by the next clauſe, and wilt thou purſue the dry ſtubble? which can't ſtand before the wind, or the force of devouring fire; this alſo reſpects not Job in his ſpiritual eſtate, with regard to which he was not like to dry ſtubble or chaff, to which wicked men are compared; Pſ. i. 4. but to ſtanding corn and wheat in the full ear; and not only to green graſs which is flouriſhing, but to palm trees, and cedar trees of the Lord, which are full of ſap, to which good men are like; but he deſcribes him in his weak and afflicted ſtate, toſſed to and fro like dry ſtubble; and no more able to contend and grapple with an incenſed God, than dry ſtubble can withſtand devouring flames; this he ſays partly to ſuggeſt that it was below the divine being to ſet his ſtrength againſt his weakneſs; as David ſaid to Saul, after whom is the king of Iſrael come out? after a dead dog, after a flea, 1 Sam. xxiv. 14. which words Bar Tzemach compares with theſe; and partly to move the divine pity and commiſeration towards him; who uſes not to break the bruiſed reed, nor quench the ſmoaking flax.

℣. 26. For thou writeſt bitter things againſt me, &c.] Meaning not ſins and rebellions, taken notice of by him, when his good deeds were omitted, as Jarchi; ſin is indeed an evil and a bitter thing in its own nature, being exceeding ſinful and abominable, and its effects and conſequences; being what provokes God to anger moſt bitterly, and makes bitter work for repentance; as it did in Peter, who, when made ſenſible of it, wept bitterly; ſooner or later, ſin, tho' it is a ſweet morſel rolled about in the mouth for a while, yet in the iſſue proves the gall of aſps within, bitter and diſtreſſing; and this God alſo puts down in the book of his remembrance, yea writes it as with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond; but that cannot be meant here, ſince Job was enquiring after his ſins, aſking what and how many they were, and would not allow of any being committed by him that were heinous and notorious; wherefore afflictions are rather here intended, which are bitter and grievous, and not joyous, and eſpecially ſuch as Job was afflicted with; ſee Ruth i. 22. and theſe were written by the Lord in the book of his eternal purpoſes and decrees, and were the things he performed, which were appointed for Job, as he full well knew, and as all the afflictions of God's people are; and beſides they were written in a judiciary way, and ſo againſt him; they were, as he apprehended, the ſentence of a judge, written down, and read, and pronounced, and according to it inflicted, and that with great deliberation as things are written, and in order to continue, as what is written does; and ſo denotes that a ſevere decree was gone forth againſt him, with deſign, and was and would be continued: and makeſt me to poſſeſs the iniquities of my youth; which had been committed thro' weakneſs and ignorance; and which, it might have been thought, would not have been taken notice of and animadverted on; or rather, which Job concluded had been forgiven and forgotten, according to the tenor of the covenant of grace, and would never have been brought into account any more; and yet theſe were not only remembered by the Lord, at leaſt ſeemingly, by the afflictions that were endured; but they were by him brought to Job's remembrance, and the guilt of them charged upon him, and ſtared him in the face, and loaded his conſcience, and filled him with reproach and ſhame as Ephraim. Jer. xxxi. 19. and which is deprecated by the Pſalmiſt; Pſ. xxv. 7. and what aggravated this caſe and made it the more diſtreſſing, was, that in Job's apprehenſion it was to continue with him as an inheritance, as the word [m] ſignifies, which abides with men in their families for ever; and ſome reſpect may be had to the corruption of nature, which is hereditary, and remains with men from their youth upwards.

℣. 27. Thou putteſt my feet alſo in the ſtocks, &c.] Which is one kind of puniſhment of offenders, and a preſervation of them from making their eſcape; and is a ſecurity and reſervation of them for farther puniſhment ſometimes; and ſo Job looked upon his afflictions as a puniſhment for he knew not what, and with which he was ſo ſurrounded and incloſed, that there was no getting out of them, any more than a man can whoſe feet are ſet faſt in the ſtocks; and that he was here kept for greater afflictions ſtill, which he dreaded. Aben Ezra interprets it, thou putteſt my feet in lime; and this is followed by others [n], ſuggeſtſuggeſting as a man's ſteps in lime, are marked and eaſily diſcerned, ſo were his by the Lord; but this ſeems to be foreign from the mind of Job, who would not make ſuch a conceſſion as this, as if his ſteps taken amiſs were ſo viſible: and looketh narrowly into all my paths; ſo that there was no poſſibility of eſcaping out of his troubles and afflictions; ſo ſtrict a watch was kept over him; ſee chap. vii. 12. according to Ben Gerſom, this refers to the ſtocks, it keeps all my ways; kept him within from going abroad about the buſineſs of life, and ſo may refer to the diſeaſe of his body, his boils and ulcers, which kept him at home, and ſuffered him not to ſtir out of doors; but the former ſenſe is beſt: thou ſetteſt a print upon the heels of my feet; either it, the ſtocks, made a mark upon his heels, with which they were preſſed hard, as Gerſom; or rather God ſet one upon them, afflicting him very ſorely and putting him to an excruciating pain, ſuch as is felt by criminals, when heavy blows are laid upon the ſoles of their feet, to which the alluſion may be; or elſe the ſenſe is, that he followed him cloſely by the heels, that whenever he took a ſtep, it was immediately marked and obſerved by the Lord, as if he trod in his ſteps, and ſet his own foot in the mark that was left.

℣. 28. And he as a rotten thing conſumeth &c.] This by ſome Jewiſh writers[z] is referred to, and connected with the driven leaf, and dry ſtubble, Job compares himſelf to ℣. 25. and ſo the ſenſe is, that his body, which for its frailty and weakneſs, is compared to ſuch things, is like any rotten thing, a rotten tree, as Ben Melech; or any thing elſe that is rotten, that is conſuming and waſting away, as Job's body was, being clothed with worms, and clods of duſt: as a garment that is moth-eaten; a woollen garment, which gathers duſt, out of which moths ariſe; for duſt, in wool and woollen garments produces moths, as Ariſtotle[a] and Pliny[b] obſerve; and a garment eaten by them, ſlowly, gradually, and inſenſibly, yet certainly, decays, falls to pieces, becomes uſeleſs, and not to be recovered; ſuch was Job's body, labouring under the diſeaſes it did, and was every day more and more decaying, crumbling into duſt, and juſt ready to drop into the grave; ſo that there was no need, and it might ſeem cruel, to lay greater and heavier afflictions on it: ſome interpreters make this he to be God himſelf, who ſometimes is as rotteneſs and a moth to men, in their perſons, families, and eſtates; ſee Hoſ. v. 12.

CHAP. XIV.

JOB having turned himſelf from his friends to God, continues his addreſs to him in this chapter; wherein he diſcourſes of the frailty of man, the ſhortneſs of his life, the troubles that are in it, the ſinfulneſs of it, and its limited duration, beyond which it cannot continue; all which he makes uſe of with God, that he would not therefore deal rigorouſly with him, but have pity on him, and ceaſe from ſeverely afflicting him, till he came to the end of his days, which could not be long, ℣. 1—6. he obſerves of a tree, when it is cut down to the root, yea, when the root is become old, and the ſtock dies, it will, by means of being watered, bud and ſprout again, and produce boughs and branches; but man, like the failing waters of the ſea, and the decayed and dried-up flood, when he dies, riſes not, till the heavens be no more, ℣. 7—12. and then he wiſhes to be hid in the grave till that time, and expreſſes hope and belief of the reſurrection of the dead, ℣. 13—15. and goes on to complain of the ſtrict notice God took of his ſins, of his ſevere dealings with men, deſtroying their hope in life, and removing them by death; ſo that they ſee and know not the caſe and circumſtances of their children they leave behind, and whilſt they live have continual pain and ſorrow, ℣. 16—22.

℣. 1. Man that is born of a woman, &c.] Man, Adam; not the firſt man ſo called, for he was made and created out of the duſt of the earth, and not born of a woman; the woman was made out of him, and not he of her; earthly man, as Mr. Broughton tranſlates it, as every deſcendant of Adam is; as is the earthy, ſuch are they that are earthy, every one of which is born of a woman; yet not as oppoſed unto and diſtinguiſhed from the heavenly one, or the Lord from heaven, for he alſo as man was made and born of a woman: this, though a proper deſcription of all mankind, there being none but what are born of a woman, ſee Matt. xi. 11. yet Job chiefly deſigns himſelf; for having ſpoken of his waſting circumſtances in which he was, in the laſt verſe of the preceding chapter, goes on in this to treat of his frailty and mortality, and to improve it into an argument with God for pity and mercy, as appears from ℣. 3. where he ſpeaks of himſelf in the firſt perſon, as here in the third, and all along: he may have reſpect in this clauſe to Eve, the mother of all living, from whom all deſcend, and of whom, in a ſenſe, they may be ſaid to be born; or elſe to his immediate parent, he and every man being born of a woman; no man, but the firſt, ever came into the world in any other way; there is one that came into the world without an earthly father, and that is our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but none without a mother; nor he, who indeed was born of a virgin, and ſo in an extraordinary and miraculous manner; and this is obſerved, not ſo much on account of natural deſcent, or to denote that, as being reckoned from the mother, ſhe having ſo great a concern in the production of man, conceiving, bearing, and bringing him forth; nor to remark the ſinfulneſs of nature, though one born of a ſinful woman, muſt needs be ſo too, ſince this is expreſſed clearly in a following verſe; but the weakneſs and frailty of man; as is the creature that generates, ſuch is that that is generated; creatures born of ſtrong ones, are ſtrong, and of weak ones, weak; a creature born of a lion, is a ſtrong one; and man, born of a woman, muſt be weak and feeble, and no wonder he is ſhort-lived, as follows: is of few days; or ſhort of days[c]; comes ſhort of the days he might have lived if man had never ſinned; and comes ſhort of the days the firſt man did live, and which thoſe before the flood generally lived, who moſt of them lived upwards of nine hundred years; whereas now, and ever ſince the times of Moſes, and about which Job lived, the days of the years of

of man are but threeſcore and ten; and ſuch are ſhorter of days ſtill, who live not more than half this time, who are cut off in the bloom and prime of life, the days of whoſe youth are ſhortened, who die in their youth, or in their childhood and infancy; and ſuch eſpecially are ſhort of days who are carried from the womb to the grave, or die as ſoon as born; and thoſe that live the longeſt, their days are but few, when compared with the days of eternity, or with thoſe, men ſhall live in another world, either good men in heaven, or wicked men in hell, which will be for ever; and eſpecially with reſpect to God, with whom one day is as a thouſand years, and a thouſand years as one day, and therefore the days and age of man are as nothing before him. Job has here alſo a reſpect to himſelf, whoſe days in his own apprehenſion were very few, and juſt at an end, and therefore craves pity and compaſſion, ſee ch. x. 20. and what aggravates the ſhortneſs of mans days is, as it follows: and full of trouble; man is born to it, being born in ſin; ſin and trouble go together, where there is ſin, there is trouble; ſin entered into the world, and death by it, with the numerous train of afflictions and miſeries which iſſue in it: all men have their troubles, ſome of one ſort, and ſome of another; wicked men are not indeed in trouble as other men, as good men are; they have not the ſame ſort of trouble, yet are not exempt from all; they are full of commotion [d], diſquietude and uneaſineſs, as the word ſignifies; they are reſtleſs, and ever in motion; they are like the troubled ſea that cannot reſt, but is continually caſting up mire and dirt; ſome are of ſuch tempers and diſpoſitions, that they can't ſleep unleſs they do miſchief; and though they are many of them proſperous in their wordly circumſtances, there are others that are reduced to poverty and diſtreſs, are attended with diſeaſes and diſorders, pains and ſores, and blaſpheme that God that that has power over them; and theſe are of all men the moſt miſerable, having no intereſt in God, in his loving-kindneſs, nor any enjoyment of his preſence, and ſo nothing to ſupport them in, and carry them through their troubles; and though they are generally without any ſenſe of ſin or danger, have no remorſe of conſcience, and their hearts are hardened; yet at times they are full of trembling [e], as ſome render the words; are ſeized with a panic through the judgments of God that are upon them, or are coming upon them, or when death is made the king of terrors to them: and good men they have their troubles; beſides thoſe in common with others, they have inward troubles ariſing from the vanity of their minds and thoughts, the impurity of their hearts, and the power of indwelling ſin in them, and eſpecially from the breaking forth of it in words and deeds; from the weakneſs of their graces, from the hidings of God's face, and the temptations of Satan: in ſhort, Job's meaning is, that men in the ordinary courſe of things meet with ſo much trouble, that there is no need of any extraordinary afflictions to be laid on them, ſuch as his were.

℣. 2. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down, &c.] As the flower comes from the earth, ſo does man; as it comes out of the ſtalk, ſo man out of his mother's womb; as the flower flouriſhes for a while, and looks gay and beautiful, ſo man whilſt in youth, in health and proſperity. Job doubtleſs has reſpect to his own caſe before his troubles came upon him, when he was poſſeſſed of all that ſubſtance, which made him the greateſt man of the eaſt; when his children were like olive-plants around his table, and his ſervants at his command, and he in perfect health of body: and as a flower flouriſhes for a little while, and then withers; no ſooner is it come to its full blow, but preſently decays; ſuch is the goodlineſs of man, it fades away whenever God blows a blaſt upon it; yea he is eaſily and quickly cut down by death, like a beautiful flower cut with the knife, or cropped by the hand, or trampled upon by the foot, ſee Pſ. ciii. 15. and xc. 5, 6. Iſ. xl. 6, 7. he fleeth alſo as a ſhadow, and continueth not; either as the ſhadow of the evening, which is loſt when night comes on; or the ſhadow on a dial-plate, which is continually moving on; or, as the Jewiſh Rabbins ſay, as the ſhadow of a bird flying, which ſtays not, whereas the ſhadow of a wall, or of a tree, continues: a ſhadow is an empty thing, without ſubſtance, dark and obſcure, variable and uncertain, declining, fleeting and paſſing away; and ſo fitly reſembles the life of a man, which is but a vapour, a bubble, yea as nothing with God; is full of darkneſs, of ignorance, and of adverſity, very fickle, changeable, and inconſtant, and at moſt but of a ſhort continuance.

℣. 3. And doſt thou open thine eyes on ſuch an one, &c.] So frail and feeble, ſo ſhort-lived and ſorrowful, ſo ſoon and eaſily cut down and deſtroyed: and by opening of his eyes, is not meant his providential care of men; whoſe eyes indeed are every where, run to and fro throughout the earth, and are careful of, and provident for all ſorts of men, which is very wonderful, Pſ. viii. 4. nor the diſplays of his ſpecial grace and favour towards his own peculiar people, on whom his eyes of love, grace and mercy are opened, and are never withdrawn from them, which is marvellous loving-kindneſs; but the exerciſe of rigorous juſtice in puniſhing, afflicting and chaſtizing with ſo much ſeverity, as Job thought to be his own caſe; the eyes of God, as he thought, were ſet on him for evil, and not for good; he looked wiſtly on him, and in a very frowning manner; he ſharpened his eye upon him, as the phraſe is, ch. xvi. 9. and as ſome render the word [f] here, looked narrowly into all his ways, and watched every motion and every ſtep he took, and purſued him with great eagerneſs, and uſed him with great ſtrictneſs in a way of juſtice, which he a poor, weak creature was not able to bear; which ſenſe is confirmed by what follows: and bringeth me into judgment with thee? by this it appears Job has a view to himſelf all along, and to the procedure of God againſt him, which he took to be in ſtrict juſtice, and that was what he was not able to bear; he was not a match for God, being ſuch a frail, weak, ſinful, mortal creature; nor was God a man as he was, that they ſhould come together in judgment, or be fit perſons to contend together upon the foot of ſtrict juſtice; ſinful man can never be juſt with God upon this bottom, or be able to anſwer to one objection or charge of a thouſand brought againſt him; and therefore as every ſenſible man will deprecate God's entering into judgment with him, ſo Job here expoſtulates with God, why he ſhould bring him into judgment with him; when as he fled to his grace and and mercy, he ſhould rather ſhew that to him, than in a rigorous manner deal with him.

℣. 4. Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? &c.] Either produce a clean perſon from an unclean one? it is not to be expected that one perfectly free from ſin, ſhould be generated by, or brought out of one that is defiled with it; which is the caſe of all men: the firſt man, though made upright, ſinned, and by ſinning defiled himſelf, and all human nature in him; and ſo thoſe that immediately deſcended from him were polluted likewiſe, and ſo on in all generations, every man being conceived and ſhaped in iniquity; ſo that it is not poſſible that man that is born of a woman, ſinful and unclean, ſhould be clean himſelf, or be free from ſin; by which it is manifeſt, that the ſinfulneſs of human nature is unavoidable; it is natural and neceſſary, and cannot be otherwiſe, ſuch being the caſe and circumſtances of immediate parents, from whom men deſcend; and that this is the caſe of all men that come into the world by ordinary and natural generation; there is none righteous or pure from ſin: no not one; and things being ſo, Job thought it hard that he ſhould be ſingled out, and ſo ſeverely chaſtized, when the ſinfulneſs of nature was from and by his birth, and was natural and unavoidable, and when there was not a ſingle perſon on earth free from it. There never was but one inſtance of one clean being brought out of an unclean perſon, and that was our Lord Jeſus Chriſt of the virgin Mary; which was not in the ordinary way of generation, but by a ſupernatural and extraordinary production of his human nature, through the power of the Holy Ghoſt, whereby it eſcaped the original contagion and pollution of mankind: or elſe in conſequence of this the ſenſe is, who can bring forth or produce a good work from an impure perſon? or how can it be expected that a man that is defiled with ſin ſhould do a good work perfectly pure? for there is not even a juſt and good man that doth good and ſinneth not; and much leſs is it to be looked for, that men in a mere ſtate of nature, that are as they come into the world, ſinful and impure, ſhould ever be able to perform good works; it may as well be thought that grapes are to be gathered of thorns, or figs of thiſtles; men muſt be born again, created in Chriſt Jeſus, have faith in him, and the Spirit of God in them, ere they can do that which is truly good from right principles, and with right views; and man at moſt and beſt muſt be an imperfect creature, and deficient in his duty, and cannot bear to be ſtrictly examined, and rigorouſly proſecuted: or the meaning is, who can make [g] an unclean man a clean one, no not one; a man can't make himſelf clean by any thing he can do, by his repentance and humiliation, by his good works, duties and ſervices; none can do this but God; and to this ſenſe ſome render the words, who can—is there one [h]? there is, that is, God, he can do it, and he only: tho' men are exhorted to cleanſe themſelves, this does not ſuppoſe a power in them to do it; this is only deſigned to convince them of the neceſſity of being cleanſed, and to awaken a concern for it; and ſuch as are made ſenſible thereof will apply to God to purge them, and make them clean, and create a clean heart within them; and this God has promiſed to do, and does do; he ſprinkles the clean water of his grace, and purifies the heart by faith in the blood of Jeſus, which cleanſes from all ſin, and is the fountain opened to waſh in, for ſin and uncleanneſs: the Targum is, "who can give a clean thing out of a man that is defiled with ſins, except God who is one, and can forgive him?" none can pardon ſin but God, or juſtify a ſinner beſides him; and he can do both in a way of juſtice, upon the foot of the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt.

℣. 5. Seeing his days are determined, &c.] Or cut out [i], exactly and preciſely, how many he ſhall live, and what ſhall befal him every day of his life; whoſe life, becauſe of the ſhortneſs of it, is rather meaſured by days than years: the number of his months are with thee; before him, in his ſight, in his account, and fixed and ſettled by him: thou haſt appointed his bounds that he cannot paſs; the boundaries of his life, the period of his days, beyond which he cannot go; the term of man's life is ſo peremptorily fixed by God, that he cannot die ſooner, nor live longer than he has determined he ſhould; as the time of a man's birth, ſo the time of his death, is according to the purpoſe of God; and all intervening moments and articles of time, and all things that befal a man throughout the whole courſe of his life, all fall under the appointment of God, and are according to his determinate will; and when God requires of man his ſoul, no one has power over his ſpirit to retain it one moment; yet this hinders not the uſe of means for the preſervation and comfort of life, ſince theſe are ſettled as well as the end, and are under the divine direction: the word for bounds ſignifies ſometimes ſtatutes [k]; tho' not to be underſtood of laws appointed by God, either of a moral or ceremonial nature; but here it ſignifies ſet, ſtated, appointed times [l]. Seneca [m] ſays the ſame thing; "there is a boundary fixed for every man, which always remains where it is ſet, nor can any move it forward by any means whatſoever."

℣. 6. Turn from him that he may reſt, &c.] From this ſhort-lived afflicted man, whoſe days are limited, and will ſoon be at an end, meaning himſelf; not that he deſires he would withdraw his gracious preſence, nothing is more agreeable than this to a good man, and there is nothing he more deprecates than the withdrawment of it; beſides, this was Job's caſe, and one part of his complaint, ch. xiii. 24. nor to with-hold his ſupporting preſence, or his providential care of him, without which he could not ſubſiſt, but muſt die and drop into the duſt; though ſome think this is the ſenſe, and render the words, turn from him, that he may ceaſe [n]; to be, or to live, and ſo a wiſh for death, that he might have reſt in the grave from all his labours, pains and ſorrows: but rather the meaning is, that he would turn away from afflicting him in this extraordinary manner; ſince according to the ordinary courſe of things he would meet with many troubles and afflictions, and had but a little time to live, and therefore intreats he would take off his hand which preſſed him ſorely, and grant him a little reſpite: or look off from him [o]; not turn away his eye of love, grace, and mercy, that is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe; that was what he wanted, that God would look upon him, and have compaſſion on him under his affliction, and abate it; but that he

he would turn away his angry, frowning countenance from him, which he could not bear; he had opened his eyes upon him, ℣. 3. and looked very sternly, and with great severity in his countenance, on him, and it was very distressing, and even intolerable to him; and therefore begs that he would take off his eye from him, that he might have rest from his adversity, that he might have some ease of body and mind, some intervals of peace and pleasure: or that he might cease [p] from murmuring, as Aben Ezra; or rather from affliction and trouble; not that he expected to be wholly free from it in this life, for man is born to it, as he full well knew; and the people of God have always their share of it, and which abides and waits for them while in this world; but he desires he might be rid of that very sore and heavy affliction now upon him; or that it might cease [q], the affliction he laboured under, which would be the case if God would turn himself, remove his hand, or look another way, and not so sharply upon him: till he shall accomplish as an hireling his day; an hireling, as if he should say, that is hired for any certain time, for a year, or more, or less, he has some relaxation from his labours, time for eating and sleeping to refresh nature; or he has some time allowed him as a respite from them, commonly called holy-days; or if he is hired only for a day, he has time for his meals; and if his master's eye is off of him, he slackens his hand, and gets some intermission from his labour; wherefore at least Job begs, that God would let him have the advantage of an hireling. Moreover, to accomplish his day, is either to do the work of it, or to get to the end of it; every man has work to do whilst in this world, in things natural, civil and religious, and is the work of his day or generation, and what must be done while it is day; and a good man is desirous of finishing it; to which the recompence of reward, though it is not of debt, but of grace, is a great encouragement, as it is to the hireling: or till as an hireling he shall will, or desire with delight and pleasure [r] his day; that is, his day to be at an end, which he wishes and longs for; and when it comes is very acceptable to him, because he then enjoys his rest, and receives his hire: so as there is a fixed time for the hireling, there is for man on earth; and as that time is short and laborious, so is the life of man; and at the close of it, the good and faithful servant of the Lord, like the hireling, in some sense rests from his labours, and receives the reward of the inheritance, having served the Lord Christ; which makes this day a grateful and acceptable one to him, what he desires, and with pleasure waits for, being better than the day of his birth; and especially when his life is worn out with trouble, and he is weary of it through old age, and the infirmities thereof, those days being come in which he has no pleasure. Job therefore intreats that God would give him some intermission from his extraordinary troubles, till his appointed time came, which then would be as welcome to him as the close of the day is to an hireling, see ch. vii. 1, 2.

℣. 7. For there is hope of a tree if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, &c.] That is, if it be cut down to the root, and only the stump of the root is left in the ground, as the tree in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, yet the owner of it may entertain a hope that it is not utterly destroyed, but will bud out again; or change [s] its state and condition, and become flourishing again; or renew [t] itself, and its strength, and put out new shoots and branches; either it will rise up into a new body, as the laurel, as Pliny [u] relates, or produce new sprouts as the willow, alder-tree, and others; for this is not true of every tree, though it may be of many; for it is [w] reported of the cypress-tree, when cut down, it never sprouts out any more, unless in one place, in Ænaria; but since this is the case of some, it is sufficient to Job's purpose: and that the tender branch thereof will not cease; from shooting out; or its suckers will not cease [w]; which may be observed frequently to grow out of the roots of trees, even of those that are cut down, such as above-mentioned.

℣. 8. Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, &c.] Lies long there, and is become dry, and seems to be consumed, on which account there may be the less hope of its flourishing: and the stock thereof die in the ground; which may make it still more improbable; for this is not to be understood with some interpreters [x] of the stock or trunk of the tree cut down, and lying along on the earth, and in the dust of it; though it may be observed, that even such a stock or trunk, separated from the root, and as it lies along, will sprout again, as particularly in elms: but it may rather mean, since it is said to be in the ground, that part of the stock or stump left in the ground, from whence the roots part and spread in the earth; and even though this dies, or at least so seems, yet there being still life and vigour in the roots, they send forth suckers.

℣. 9. Yet through the scent of water it will bud, &c.] As soon as it smells it, or perceives it, is sensible of it, or partakes of its efficacy; denoting both how speedily, and how easily, at once as it were, it buds forth thro' the virtue either of rain-water that descends upon it, or river-water by which it is planted, or by any means conveyed unto it; particularly this is true of the willow, which delights in watry places; and when it is in the circumstances before described, will by the benefit of water bud out again, even when its stock has been seemingly dead: and bring forth boughs like a plant; as if it was a new plant, or just planted; so the Vulgate Latin version, as when it was first planted; or as a plant that sends forth many branches: the design of this simile is to shew, that man's case is worse than that of trees, which when cut down sprout out again, and are in the place where they were before; but man, when he is cut down by death, rises up no more in the same place; he is seen no more in it, and the place that knew him, knows him no more; where he falls he lies until the general resurrection; he rises not before without a miracle, and such instances are very rare, and never either before or at the resurrection, but by the omnipotence of God; whereas a tree, in the above circumstances, sprouts out of itself, according to its nature, and in virtue of a natural power which God has put into it; not so man [y].

℣. 10. But man dieth, and wasteth away, &c.] All men, every man, Geber the mighty man, the strong man; some die in their full strength; the wise

wiſe man, notwithſtanding all his wiſdom and knowledge, and even ſkill in the art of medicine; the rich man with all his riches, with which he cannot bribe death, nor keep it off; the great and the honourable, emperors, kings, princes, nobles, all die, and their honour is laid in the duſt; yea, good men die, though Chriſt has died for them; even thoſe that are the moſt uſeful and beneficial to men, the prophets of the Lord, and the miniſters of his word; and it is no wonder that wicked men ſhould die, though they put the evil day far from them, make an agreement with death, or bid it defiance, their wickedneſs ſhall not deliver from it; all men have ſinned, and death paſſes on them, it is appointed for them to die; not their ſouls, which are immortal, but their bodies, which return to duſt, and are only the mortal part; death is a diſunion or ſeparation of ſoul and body: and now when this is made, the body waſteth away in the grave, and becomes rottenneſs, duſt, and worms, and does not by the ſtrength of nature ſpring up again, as a tree does; though ſome underſtand, by an inverſion of the phraſes, a waſting before death through diſeaſes, as if the words were to be read, but man waſteth away and dieth [z]; he is enervated by ſickneſs, his ſtrength is weakened in the way, and when he dies there is none left in him; he is cut off [a], as ſome chuſe to render it, or cut down as a tree is; but then there is no force or natural ſtrength in him to riſe again, as in a tree: yea, man giveth up the ghoſt, and where is he? not in the ſame place he was; not in his houſe and habitation where he lived; nor in his family, and among his friends, with whom he converſed, nor in the world, and on the earth where he did buſineſs; he is indeed ſomewhere, but where is he? his body is in the grave, his ſoul where is that? if a good man, it is in the preſence of God, where is fulneſs of joy; it is with Chriſt, which is far better than to be here; it is with the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect; it is in Abraham's boſom, feaſting with him and other ſaints; it is in heaven, in paradiſe, in a ſtate of endleſs joy and happineſs: if a wicked man, his ſoul is in hell, in the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone, with the devil and his angels, and other damned ſpirits; in a priſon, from whence there is no releaſe, and in the uttermoſt miſery and diſtreſs, baniſhed from the divine preſence, and under a continual ſenſe of the wrath of God.

℣. 11. As the waters fail from the ſea, &c.] The words may be rendered either without the as, and denote diſſimilitude, and the ſenſe be, that the waters go from the ſea and return again, as with the tide: and the flood decays and dries up; and yet is ſupplied again with water: but man lieth down, and riſeth not again; or elſe with the as, and expreſs likeneſs; as the waters when they fail from the ſea, or get out of lakes, and into another channel, never return more; and as a flood occaſioned by the waters of a river overflowing its banks, never return into it more; ſo man when he dies, never returns to this world any more. The Targum reſtrains this to the Red Sea, and the parting of that and the river Jordan, and the drying up of that before the ark of the Lord, and the return of both to their places again.

℣. 12. So man lieth down, &c.] Or and, or but man lieth down [b]; in the grave when he dies, as on a bed, and takes his reſt from all his labours, toil and troubles, and lies aſleep, and continues ſo till the reſurrection-morn: and riſeth not; from off his bed, or comes not out of his grave into this world, to the place where he was, and to be engaged in the affairs of life he was before, and never by his own power; and whenever he will riſe, it will be by the power of God, and this not till the laſt day, when Chriſt ſhall appear in perſon to judge the world; and then the dead in Chriſt will riſe firſt, at the beginning of the thouſand years, and the wicked at the end of them: till the heavens be no more, they ſhall not awake, nor be raiſed out of their ſleep; for ſo the words are to be read, not in connexion with thoſe that go before, but with the laſt clauſes; though the ſenſe is much the ſame either way, which is, that thoſe who are fallen aſleep by death, and lie ſleeping in their graves, and on their beds, theſe ſhall neither awake of themſelves, nor be awaked by others, till the heavens be no more; that is, never, ſo as to awake and ariſe of themſelves, and to this natural life, and to be concerned in the buſineſs of it; which ſometimes ſeems to be the ſenſe of this phraſe, ſee Pſ. lxxxix. 29. Matt. v. 18. or as ſome render it, till the heavens are wore out, or waxen old [c]; as they will like a garment, and be folded up, and laid aſide, as to their preſent uſe, Pſ. cii. 26. or till they ſhall vaniſh away and be no more, as to their preſent form, quality and uſe, though they may exiſt as to ſubſtance; and when this will be the caſe, as it will be when the judge ſhall appear, when Chriſt ſhall come a ſecond time to judge the world; then the earth and heaven will flee away from his face, the earth and its works ſhall be burnt up, and the heavens ſhall paſs away with great noiſe; and then, and not till then, will the dead, or thoſe that are aſleep in their graves, be awaked by the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God, and they ſhall be raiſed from their ſleepy beds, awake and ariſe, ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to ſhame and everlaſting contempt.

℣. 13. And that thou wouldſt hide me in the grave, &c.] The houſe appointed for all living, which ſome underſtand by the chambers in Iſ. xxvi. 20. The cœmetaries or dormitories of the ſaints, where they lie and ſleep until the indignation of God againſt a wicked world is over and paſt; or in Hades, the ſtate of the dead, where they are inſenſible of what is done in this world, what calamities and judgments are on the inhabitants of it, and ſo are not affected and grieved with theſe things; or in ſome cavern of the earth, in the utmoſt receſſes of it, in the very centre thereof, if poſſible; his wiſh is, to be buried alive, or to live in ſome ſubterraneous place, free from his preſent afflictions and miſery, than to be upon earth with them: that thou wouldſt keep me ſecret; ſo that no eye ſhould ſee him, that is, no human eye; for he did not expect to be hid from the ſight of God, be he where he would, before whom hell and deſtruction, or the grave are, and have no covering; and not only be ſecret, but ſafe from all trials and troubles, oppreſſions and oppreſſors; eſpecially as he may mean the grave, where the wicked ceaſe from troubling, and the weary are at reſt; the keys of which Chriſt keeps in his hands, and locks and unlocks, and none but him; and where he has laid up his jewels, the precious duſt of his ſaints, and where they and that that will be preſerved as hidden treaſure: until thy wrath be paſt; either with reſpect to others, an ungodly world, to puniſh whom God ſometimes comes out of his place in great wrath and indignation; and to prevent his dear children and people from being involved in common and publick calamities, he takes them away before-hand, and hides them in his chambers, Iſ. xxvi. 19, 20. and lvii. 1. or with reſpect to himſelf, as to his own apprehenſion of things, who imagined that the wrath of God was upon him, being ſeverely afflicted by him; all the effects of which he ſuppoſed would not be removed until he was brought to the duſt, from whence he came, and until his body was changed at the reſurrection; till that time there are ſome appearances of the diſpleaſure of God againſt ſin: and then follows another petition, that thou wouldſt appoint me a ſet time, and remember me; either for his going down to the grave, and being hid there, for which there is an appointed time; for as that is the place appointed for man, it is appointed for man to go unto it, and the time when, as appears from ℣. 5. or his coming out of the grave, for his reſurrection from thence, which alſo is fixed, even the laſt day, the day God has appointed to judge the world in righteouſneſs by Chriſt, at which time the dead will be raiſed; tho' of that day and hour no man knows: unleſs he ſhould mean a time for deliverance from his afflictions, which alſo is ſet; for God, as he ſettles the bounds of an affliction, how far it ſhould go, and no farther, ſo likewiſe the time when it ſhould end; and either of theſe Job might call a remembering of him, who thought himſelf, in his preſent caſe, as a dead man, out of mind, as thoſe that lie in the grave, remembered no more.

℣. 14. If a man die, &c.] This is ſaid not as if it was a matter of doubt, he had before aſſerted it; as ſure as men have ſinned, ſo ſure ſhall they die; nothing is more certain than death, it is appointed by God, and is ſure; but taking it for granted, the experience of all men, and the inſtances of perſons of every age, rank and condition teſtifying to it; the Targum reſtrains it to wicked men, "if a wicked man die:" ſhall he live again? no, he ſhall not live in this earth, and in the place where he was, doing the ſame buſineſs he once did; that is, he ſhall not live here; ordinarily ſpeaking, the inſtances are very rare and few; two or three inſtances there have been under the Old Teſtament, and a few under the New; but this is far from being a general and uſual caſe, and never through the ſtrength of nature, or of a man's ſelf, but by the mighty power of God: or it may be anſwered to affirmatively, he ſhall live again at the general reſurrection, at the laſt day, when all ſhall come out of their graves, and there will be a general reſurrection of the juſt, and of the unjuſt; ſome will live miſerably, in inexpreſſible and eternal torments, and wiſh to die, but cannot, their life will be a kind of death, even the ſecond death; others will live comfortably and happily an endleſs life of joy and pleaſure with God, Father, Son and Spirit, angels and glorified ſaints: hence, in the faith of this is the following reſolution, all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come; there is an appointed time for man on earth when he ſhall be born, how long he ſhall live, and when he ſhall die, ſee ch. vii. 1. and xiv. 5. or of my warfare[d], for the life of man, eſpecially of a good man, is a ſtate of warfare with many enemies, ſin, Satan, and the world; at the end of which there will be a change; for not a change of outward circumſtances in this life is meant; for though there was ſuch a change befel Job, yet he was, eſpecially at this time, in no expectation of it; and though his friends ſuggeſted it to him, upon his repentance and reformation, he had no hope of it, but often expreſſes the contrary: but either a change at death is meant; the Targum calls it a change of life, a change of this life for another; death makes a great change in the body of a man, in his place here, in his relations and connexions with men, in his company, condition and circumſtances: or elſe the change at the reſurrection, when this vile body will be changed, and made like unto Chriſt's; when it will become an incorruptible, glorious, powerful and ſpiritual body, which is now corruptible, diſhonourable, weak and natural; and till one or other of theſe ſhould come, Job is determined to wait, to live in the conſtant expectation of death, and to be in a readineſs and preparation for it; in the mean while to bear afflictions patiently, and not ſhew ſuch marks of impatience as he had done, nor deſire to die before God's time, but whenever that ſhould come, quietly and chearfully reſign himſelf into the hands of God; or this may reſpect the frame and buſineſs of the ſoul in a ſeparate ſtate after death, and before the reſurrection, believing, hoping and waiting for the reſurrection of the body, and its union to it, ſee Pſ. xvi. 10.

℣. 15. Thou ſhalt call, and I will anſwer thee, &c.] Either at death, when the ſoul of man is required of him, and he is ſummoned out of time into eternity, and has ſometimes previous notice of it; though not by a prophet, or expreſs meſſenger from the Lord, as Hezekiah had, yet by ſome diſeaſe and diſtemper or another, which has a voice, a call in it to expect a remove ſhortly; and a good man that is prepared for it, he anſwers to this call readily and chearfully; death is no king of terrors to him, he is not reluctant to it, yea deſirous of it; intreats his diſmiſſion in peace, and even longs for it, and rejoices and triumphs in the views of it: or elſe at the reſurrection, when Chriſt ſhall call to the dead, as he did to Lazarus, and ſay, come forth; and when they ſhall hear his voice, even the voice of the archangel, and ſhall anſwer to it, and come forth out of their graves, the ſea, death, and the grave being obliged to deliver up the dead that are therein; though ſome think this refers to God's call unto him in a judicial way, and his anſwers to it by way of defence, as in ch. xiii. 22. but the other ſenſes ſeem more agreeable to the context: thou wilt have a deſire to the work of thine hands; meaning his body, which is the workmanſhip of God, and a curious piece of workmanſhip it is, wonderfully and fearfully made, and curiouſly wrought; and though it may ſeem to be marred and ſpoiled by death, yet God will have a deſire to the reſtoration of it at the reſurrection to a better condition; even the bodies of his people, and that becauſe they are veſſels choſen by him, given to his Son, redeemed by his blood, united to his perſon, and ſanctified by his Spirit, whoſe temples they are, and in whom he dwells: wherefore upon theſe conſiderations, it may be reaſonably ably ſuppoſed, that Father, Son and Spirit have a deſire to the reſurrection of the bodies of the ſaints, and in which they will have a concern; and from which it may be concluded, it will be certainly effected, ſince God is a rock, and his work is perfect, or will be, both upon the bodies and ſouls of his people; and the work of ſanctification will not be properly compleated on them, until their vile bodies are changed, and made like to the glorious body of Chriſt; which muſt be very deſireable to him, who has ſuch a ſpecial love for them, and delight in them. Some render the words with an interrogation, wilt thou deſire to deſtroy the work of thine hands[e]? ſurely thou wilt not; or, as Ben Gerſom, "is it fit that thou ſhouldſt deſire to deſtroy the work of thine hands?" ſurely it is not becoming, it cannot be thought that thou wilt do it; but the former ſenſe is beſt.

℣. 16. For now thou numbereſt my ſteps, &c.] Or but now[f], at this preſent time thou ſeemeſt to have no deſire to me, or affection for me, but the reverſe. Job was in a pretty good frame of mind a little before, having in view his laſt change, and the glorious reſurrection; but on a ſudden he returns to his former complaints of God, and here of the rigour and ſtrictneſs of his juſtice in marking his ſteps, and correcting him for his ſin; ſo very uncertain are the beſt of frames: the outward converſation of men, whether good or bad, is often in ſcripture expreſſed by walking, and the actions of men, good or evil, are the ſteps taken therein; here they ſignify evil ones, irregular ſteps, ſteps out of the way of God's commandments, aberrations, ſtrayings from thence, falſe ſteps; theſe Job ſuppoſed God not only had knowledge of, as he has of all the ways, paths, and goings of men, but took very exact notice of his wrong ſteps; looked very narrowly to his paths, as in ch. xiii. 27. and ſtrictly marked them; yea, told them one by one, that he might miſs none, and make up a large account, which he put down in his book, in order to produce againſt him; in which Job was miſtaken: he thought God dealt with him, as he does with wicked men, whoſe evil actions are not only known and obſerved, but are counted and put down in the book of his remembrance, which will be opened at the laſt day, and produced againſt them; but God has blotted out of his book the ſins of his people, and will remember them no more; he has a book of remembrance for their good works, words and thoughts, but none for their evil ones: doſt thou not watch over my ſin? of error, infirmity and weakneſs; obſerve it, mark it in a ſtrict and rigorous way, which, when God does, who can ſtand before him? or watch for my ſin[g]? as Jeremiah's enemies watched for his halting; ſo Job here repreſents God very wrongly, as if he watched for an opportunity againſt him, to take the advantage of it, and ſeverely chaſtize him: or thou doſt not wait for my ſin[h]; that is, the puniſhment of it, as many of the Jewiſh writers[i] carry the ſenſe; which is, that God did not defer the puniſhment of ſin, or give him any reſpite or breathing time, but as ſoon as ever he committed any offence, immediately, at once, he was rough with him, and uſed him with great ſeverity. Aben Ezra inſerts the word only, as explanative of the meaning of the words, thus, thou watcheſt only over my ſin, or doeſt not mark and obſerve anything but my ſins; not my good deeds, only my evil ones; which is a wrong charge, for God takes notice of the good works of his people, and rewards them in a way of grace, though not of debt, as well as of their evil works; and chaſtizes for them in a fatherly way: others render the words to this ſenſe, what is not; or of no moment or conſequence, thou keepeſt for me in mind and memory, as ſin[k]; that which is not ſin, or at leaſt not known to me to be ſin, or however ſomething very trifling, ſcarce to be called a ſin, yet I am dealt with for it as if a very heinous one; or I am afflicted for I know not what, or, which is all one, for what is not known to me. Some take the words to be a petition, do not obſerve my ſin[l]; or mark it ſtrictly, or keep it in mind, or reſerve it againſt another time, but hide thy face from it, and remember it no more, nor never againſt me.

℣. 17. My tranſgreſſion is ſealed up in a bag, &c.] Denoting either the hiddeneſs of it, as in Hoſ. xiii. 12. not from God; nor in ſuch ſenſe, ſealed up, as ſin is by the ſacrifice and ſatisfaction of Chriſt, who has thereby removed it out of the ſight of divine juſtice; ſo that when it is ſought for it ſhall not be found, nor any more ſeen, which is the ſenſe of the phraſe in Dan. ix. 24. where the words, to make an end of ſin, may be rendered, to ſeal them up; but this Job would not have complained of; he means it was hid as in a bag from himſelf, or he knew not what it was; the tranſgreſſion was ſealed up from him, he was intirely ignorant of, and unacquainted with what it was, for which he was ſeverely afflicted: or elſe his ſenſe is, that God had taken ſtrict notice of his tranſgreſſions, and had, as it were, put them up in a bag, and ſet a ſeal upon it, that none might be loſt, but might be ready to be produced againſt him another day; in alluſion, as it is thought, to bills of indictment put up in bags ſealed, to be brought into courts of judicature at a proper time, for which they are reſerved: and thou ſeweſt up mine iniquity; in the bag in which it is ſealed; not only did he ſeal up the bag, but ſewed a cloth over it thus ſealed, for greater ſecurity: or thou ſeweſt to mine iniquity[m], or adds iniquity to iniquity, as in Pſ. lxix. 27. as arithmeticians do, who add one number to another until it becomes a great ſum; thus God, according to Job, tacked and joined one ſin to another, till it became one large heap and pile, reaching to the heavens, and calling for vengeance; or, as Sephorno interprets it, joined ſins of ignorance to ſins of preſumption; or rather ſewed or added the puniſhment of ſin to ſin, or puniſhment to puniſhment; the Targum is, "my tranſgreſſion is ſealed up in a book of remembrances, and thou haſt joined it to my iniquities."

℣. 18. And ſurely the mountain falling, cometh to nought, &c.] Job here returns to his former ſubject of the irreparable ſtate of man at death, which he illuſtrates by various other ſimilies, as before; and firſt by a mountain falling, which may be ſuppoſed, and has been fact, and when it does, it comes to nought; it crumbles into duſt, and where it falls there it lies, and never riſes up to a mountain, or to the height it had, any more; or it withers[n], as ſome render it, the plants, herbs and trees that grow upon it wither away, ſee Nahum, i. 4. or or it is diſſolved, or flows [o], and ſpreads itſelf over the face of the green earth it covers, and deſtroys with its duſt and ſand, which is never more gathered up to form a mountain again; ſo man, like unto a mountain, as kingdoms, and ſtates, and kings, and princes, and great men are; the Targum inſtances in Lot; as a man may be ſaid to be, that is in good health of body, and in proſperous circumſtances in his family; when he falls, as he does by death, which is expreſſed by falling, 2 Sam. iii. 38. he comes to nought, he is not any more in the land of the living, nor in the place and circumſtances in which he was before: and the rock is removed out of his place; from the mountain, of which it was a part; or elſewhere, by earthquakes, by force of winds, or ſtrength of waters; and which, when once removed, is never returned to its place any more; ſo man, who in his full ſtrength ſeems like a rock immoveable, when death comes, it ſhakes and moves him out of his place, and that never knows him any more.

℣. 19. The waters wear the ſtones, &c.] Either by continual running in them, or conſtant dropping upon them [p]; and the excavations or hollow places they make are never filled up again, theſe impreſſions are never effaced, nor the ſtones reduced to their ancient form; ſo man, though he may have the ſtrength of ſtones, yet the waters of afflictions will gradually wear him away, and bring him to the duſt of death, and where he muſt lie till the heavens be no more: thou waſheſt away the things which grow out of the duſt of the earth; herbs, plants and trees, which a violent inundation of water tears up by the roots, and carries away, and they are never reſtored to their places any more. The word סְפִיחֶיהָ, which we render, the things which grow out, the ſpontaneous productions of the earth, as in Lev. xxv. 5. Aben Ezra interprets of floods of water; and ſo Schultens, from the uſe of the word [q] in the Arabic language, tranſlates it, their effuſions; that is, the effuſions of waters before-mentioned, the floods and inundations of them overflow, and waſh away the duſt of the earth; not only that which is on the ſuperficies of it, the ſoil of it; but, as the ſame learned man obſerves, they plow and tear up the earth itſelf, and carry it away, and it is never repaired; ſo men at death are carried away as with a flood, and are no more, ſee Pſ. xc. 5. and or ſo [r] thou deſtroyeſt the hope of man, not the hope of a good man about his eternal ſtate, and of enjoying eternal happineſs; which is the gift of God's grace, which is without repentance, never revoked, called in, or taken away or deſtroyed; it is built upon the promiſe of God, who cannot lie; it is founded on the perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and tho' it may be brought low, it is never loſt; the hope of carnal men, in an arm of fleſh, in the creature and creature-enjoyments, is indeed deſtroyed; and ſo is the hope of external profeſſors of religion, that is formed on their own works of righteouſneſs, and profeſſion of religion; but of this Job is not ſpeaking, but of the hope of man of living again in this world after death; for this is a reddition or application of the above ſimilies uſed to illuſtrate this point, the irreparable ſtate of man at death, ſo as that he ſhall never return to this life again, and to the ſame ſtate and circumſtances of things, as before; and next follows a deſcription of death, and the ſtate of the dead

℣. 20. Thou prevaileſt for ever againſt him, &c.] God is an overmatch for man, in any thing, in every thing; there is no contending with him, or ſtanding againſt him; he is ſtronger than he, and always prevails; there is no withſtanding any diſeaſe, and the force of it, when he ſends it; it is a meſſenger and ſervant of his, it goes at his command, and does what he bids it do; and all the art and power of man cannot reſiſt it, or hinder what God would have done by it; and ſo death itſelf is irreſiſtible; what's ſtronger than death? it is a king that reigns with a deſpotic power; it reigns irreſiſtibly, victoriouſly, and triumphantly; it prevails over all men, in all ages, and will do to the end of the world; no man has power over his ſpirit to retain it one moment, when death comes to ſeparate it from the body: and this prevalence of God by death over men, will be for ever; the grave is man's long home, to which he is brought by death, and he will never return from it more, to come again into this world, and be about the buſineſs of it as now; and he paſſeth out of the world, and is ſeen no more in it; death is a going the way of all fleſh, a departure out of this life, and to it man never uſually returns more; he goes to Hades, to the inviſible place, and makes his appearance no more here; ſee Pſ. xxxvii. 35, 36. thou changeſt his countenance at death; the forerunners of death will change a man's countenance, pains and diſeaſes of body; by theſe God makes man's beauty to conſume like the moth; the fear of death will change a a man's countenance, as the hand-writing on the wall did Belſhazzar's; even ſuch who have outbraved death, and pretended to have made a covenant and agreement with it, yet when the king of terrors is preſented to them, they are ſeized with a panic, their hearts ache, and their countenances turn pale; but O! what a change is made by death itſelf, which for this reaſon is repreſented as riding on a pale horſe; Rev. vi. 8. when the roſy florid looks of man are gone, his comelineſs turned into corruption, his countenance pale and meagre, his eyes hollow and ſunk, his noſe ſharp pointed, his ears contracted, and jaws fallen, and his complexion altered, and ſtill more when laid in the grave, and he is turned to rottenneſs, duſt and worms: and ſendeth him away; giveth him a diſmiſſion from this world; ſendeth him out of it, from his houſe, his family, friends and acquaintance: his birth is expreſſed often by his coming into the world, and his death by going out of it; for here he has no continuance, no abiding, no reſt; and yet there is no remove, till God gives him diſmiſſion by death, then he ſends him away from hence; ſome in wrath, whom he ſends to take up their abode with devils and damned ſpirits; others in love, to prevent their being involved in evils coming upon the earth, and to be in better company, with God and Chriſt, with angels, and the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect: Maimonides interprets this of Adam [*], who when he changed the object of his countenance, and looked on the forbidden fruit, was ſent out of Paradiſe.

℣. 21. His ſons come to honour, &c.] Or are multiplied, [s] ſee Nahum, iii. 15. their families increaſe like a flock, become very numerous, which was reckoned a great bleſſing; or become heavy [t]; being loaded with gold and ſilver, with riches and honour, raiſed to great grandeur and dignity, and poſſeſſed of much wealth and large eſtates: and he knoweth it not; the man whoſe countenance is changed and
