℣. 6. But I am a worm, and no man, &c.] Chriſt calls himſelf a worm, not becauſe of his original, for he was not of the earth earthy, but was the Lord from heaven; nor becauſe of his human nature, man being a worm, and the ſon of man ſuch, Job xxv. 6. and becauſe of his meanneſs and low eſtate in that nature, in his humiliation; nor to expreſs his humility, and the mean thoughts he had of himſelf, as David, his type, calls himſelf a dead dog, and a flea, 1 Sam. xxiv. 14. but on account of the opinion that men of the world had of him; ſo Jacob is called a worm, Iſa. xli. 14. not only becauſe mean in his own eyes, but contemptible in the eyes of others. The Jews eſteemed Chriſt as a worm, and treated him as ſuch; he was loathſome to them and hated by them; every one trampled upon him and trod him under foot as men do worms; ſuch a phraſe is uſed of him in Heb. x. 29. there

[w] לא דמיה לי non eſt ſilentium mihi, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius; intermiſſio, Cocceius; quies, Gejerus; ceſſatio, quies, aut ſilentium, Michaelis.

[x] Non eſt mihi ſimilitudo, Guſſetius, p. 193.

there is an agreement in ſome things between the worm and Chriſt in his ſtate of humiliation; as in its uncomelineſs and diſagreeable appearance; ſo in Chriſt the Jews could diſcern no form nor comelineſs wherefore he ſhould be deſired; and in its weakneſs, the worm being an impotent, unarmed, and defenceleſs creature; hence the Chaldee paraphraſe renders it here a weak worm; and though Chriſt is the mighty God, and is alſo the ſon of man whom God made ſtrong for himſelf, yet there was a weakneſs in his human nature, and he was crucified through it, 2 Cor. xiii. 4. and it has been obſerved by ſome, that the word תולעת here uſed ſignifies the ſcarlet-worm, or the worm that is in the grain or berry with which ſcarlet is dyed; and like this ſcarlet-worm did our Lord look, when by way of mockery he was clothed with a ſcarlet robe; and eſpecially when he appeared in his dyed garments, and was red in his apparel, as one that treadeth in the wine-fat; when his body was covered with blood when he hung upon the croſs, which was ſhed to make crimſon and ſcarlet ſins as white as wool. When Chriſt ſays he was no man, his meaning is, not that he was not truly and really man, for he aſſumed a true body and a reaſonable ſoul; he partook of the ſame fleſh and blood with his children, and was in all things made like unto his brethren, excepting ſin; but that he was a man of no figure, he bore no office, and had no title of honour; he was not a Rabbi, nor a member of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim; he had no ſhare of government, either in the civil or eccleſiaſtic ſtate; he was a carpenter's ſon, and a carpenter; nor was he treated as a man, but in the moſt inhuman manner; he was deſpiſed and rejected of men, he was called a madman, and ſaid to have a devil. A reproach of men; he was reproached by men, as if he had been the worſt of men; the reproaches of God and of his people all fell on him, inſomuch that his heart was broken with them; ſee Pſal. lxix. 7—12, 19, 20. and it was reckoned a reproach to men to be ſeen in his company, or to be thought to belong to him, and be a diſciple of his; hence ſome who believed he was the Meſſiah, yet would not confeſs him, becauſe they loved the praiſe of men more than the praiſe of God, John xii. 42, 43. And deſpiſed of the people; rejected with contempt as the Meſſiah, refuſed with ſcorn as the ſtone of Iſrael, diſallowed of men, and ſet at nought by them; by the people are meant the people of the Jews, his own people and nation; which contempt of him they ſignified both by geſtures and words, as in the following verſes.

℣. 7. All they that ſee me, laugh me to ſcorn, &c.] To the afflicted pity ſhould be ſhewn; but inſtead of pitying him in his diſtreſſes they laughed at him; this muſt be underſtood of the ſoldiers when they had him in Pilate's hall, and of the Jews in general when he hung upon the croſs; ſome particular perſons muſt be excepted, as John the beloved diſciple, the mother of our Lord, Mary Magdalene and ſome other women, who ſtood afar off beholding him. They ſhoot out the lip, or open with the lip[y], they made mouths at him, they put out their lips, or gaped upon him with their mouths, and in a way of ſport and paſtime made wide mouths and drew out their tongues, as in Job xvi. 10. Iſa. lvii. 4. They ſhake the head, ſaying; in a way of ſcorn and deriſion, as in Lam. ii. 15. This was fulfilled in the Jews, Matt. xxvii. 39.

℣. 8. He truſted on the Lord, that he would deliver him, &c.] Not that they ſpoke in a deriding way of the object of his truſt, for as impious as they were, this they did not do; but of his truſt in the Lord, which they looked upon to be a falſe one, as would appear by his not being delivered as he truſted; but his confidence was a well-grounded one, though jeered at by theſe men, and he was delivered in the Lord's own time and way from all his enemies, and out of all his troubles. Let him deliver him, ſeeing he delighted in him; this is another ironical, ſarcaſtic flout, not at God, but at Chriſt, and at his profeſſion of truſt in God, his claim of intereſt in his favour, and of relation to him as being the Son of his love in whom he was well-pleaſed; he always was the delight of his Father; he expreſſed his well-pleaſedneſs in him at his baptiſm, and transfiguration on the mount; he took pleaſure in him whilſt he was ſuffering and dying in the room and ſtead of his people; and he delivered him, raiſed him from the dead, and brought him into a large place, becauſe he delighted in him, Pſal. xviii. 19. Theſe very words were ſaid by the Jews concerning Chriſt, as he hung upon the croſs, Matt. xxvii. 43.

℣. 9. But thou art he that took me out of the womb, &c.] The Papiſts affirm, that there was ſomething miraculous in the manner of Chriſt's coming into the world, as well as in his conception; that his conception of a virgin was miraculous is certain, being entirely owing to the wonderful and myſterious overſhadowing of the Holy Ghoſt, and which was neceſſary to preſerve his human nature from the contagion of ſin, common to all that deſcend from Adam by ordinary generation; that ſo that individual of human nature might be proper to be united to the Son of God, and that it might be a fit ſacrifice for the ſins of men; but otherwiſe in all other things, ſin only excepted, he was made like unto us; and it is a clear caſe, that his mother bore him the uſual time, and went with him her full time of nine months, as women commonly do; ſee Luke i. 56. Matt. i. 18, 20, 24. Luke ii. 5, 6. and it is as evident that he was born and brought forth in the ſame manner other infants are, ſeeing he was preſented to the Lord in the Temple, and the offering was brought for him according to the law reſpecting the male that opens the womb, Luke ii. 22, 23. and the phraſe that is here uſed, is expreſſive of the common providence of God which attends ſuch an event, every man being as it were midwifed into the world by God himſelf; ſee Job x. 18. Pſal. lxxi. 6. though there was, no doubt, a peculiar providence which attended the birth of our Lord, and makes this expreſſion more peculiarly applicable to him; ſince his mother Mary when her full time was come, was at a diſtance from the place of her reſidence, was in an inn, and in a ſtable there, there being no room for her in the inn, and ſo very probably had no women about her to aſſiſt her, nor any midwife with her; and there was the more viſible appearance of the hand of God in this affair, who might truly be ſaid to take him out of the womb: Thou didſt make me hope when I was upon my mother's breaſts; which may be underſtood of the expectation and hope, common to infants, which have not the uſe of reaſon, with all creatures, whoſe eyes wait upon the Lord, and he gives them their meat in due ſeaſon; and here may regard the ſudden and ſuitable proviſion viſion of milk in the mother's breaſt, to which there is in the infant a natural deſire, and an hope and expectation of. The words may be rendered, as they are by ſome, thou didſt keep me in ſafety, or make me ſafe and ſecure [z], when I was upon my mother's breaſt: this was verified in Chriſt at the time Herod ſought to take away his life; he was then in his mother's arms, and ſucked at her breaſt; when the Lord in a dream acquainted Joſeph with Herod's deſign, and directed him to flee with the young child and his mother into Egypt, where they were kept in ſafety till the death of Herod. This ſenſe of the words frees them from a difficulty, how the grace of hope, or of faith and confidence, can, in a proper ſenſe, be exerciſed in the infant-ſtate; for though the principle of grace may be implanted ſo early, yet how it ſhould be exerciſed when there is not the due uſe of reaſon, is not eaſy to conceive; if, therefore, the words are taken in this ſenſe, the meaning muſt be, that he was cauſed to hope as ſoon as he was capable of it, which is ſometimes the deſign of ſuch a phraſe; ſee Job xxxi. 18. unleſs we ſuppoſe ſomething extraordinary in Chriſt's human nature, which ſome interpreters are not willing to allow, becauſe he was in all things like unto us excepting ſin; but I ſee not, that ſeeing the human nature was an extraordinary one, was perfectly holy from the firſt of it, the grace of God was upon it as ſoon as born, and it was anointed with the Holy Ghoſt above its fellows, why it may not be thought to exerciſe grace in an extraordinary manner, ſo early as is here expreſſed, literally underſtood.

[y] פטירו בשפה hiatum fecerunt labiis ſuis, Grotius; they make a mow with their lip, Ainſworth.

℣. 10. I was caſt upon thee from the womb, &c.] Either by himſelf, truſting in God, hoping in him, and caſting all the care of himſelf upon him; or by his parents, who knew the danger he was expoſed to, and what ſchemes were laid to take away his life; and therefore did, in the uſe of all means they were directed to, commit him to the care and protection of God: the ſenſe is, that the care of him was committed to God ſo early; and he took the care of him and gave full proof it; Thou art my God from my mother's belly: God was his covenant-God from everlaſting, as he loved his human nature, choſe it to the grace of union, and gave it a covenant-ſubſiſtence; but he ſhewed himſelf to be his God in time, and that very early, calling him from the womb, and making mention of his name from his mother's belly, and preſerving him from danger in his infancy; and it was his covenant-intereſt in God, which, though mentioned laſt, was the foundation of all his providential care of him and goodneſs to him. Now all theſe early appearances of the power and providence of God, on the behalf of Chriſt as man, are ſpoken of in oppoſition to the ſcoffs and flouts of his enemies about his truſt in God, and deliverance by him, and to encourage his faith and confidence in him; as well as are ſo many reaſons and arguments with God yet to be with him, help and aſſiſt him, as follows.

℣. 11. Be not far from me, &c.] Who had been ſo near unto him, as to take him out of the womb, and to take the care of him ever ſince; this is to be underſtood not with reſpect to the omnipreſence of God, who is every where, and is not far from any of us; but of his gracious preſence, which was now withdrawn from Chriſt, and he was filled with a ſenſe of divine wrath, and with ſorrow and diſtreſs; and alſo of his powerful and aſſiſting preſence which he had promiſed, and Chriſt expected, and believed he ſhould have, as he had: the reaſons for it follow; For trouble is near; Satan was marching towards him with his principalities and powers, to attack him in the garden and on the croſs; Judas, one of his own diſciples, was at hand to betray him; a multitude with ſwords and ſtaves were about to ſeize him; the ſins and chaſtiſement of his people were juſt going to be laid upon him; the ſword of juſtice was awaked againſt him, ready to give the blow; the hour of death was near, he was brought to the duſt of it, as in ℣. 15. A ſecond reaſon is given, For there is none to help; none among his diſciples: one of them was to betray him, another to deny him, and all to forſake him and flee from him, as they did; nor any among the angels in heaven; for though they miniſtred to him in the wilderneſs, and ſtrengthened him in the garden, there were none near him on the croſs, that it might be manifeſt that ſalvation was wrought out alone by him, Iſai. lxiii. 5. and, indeed, if any of theſe had been willing to have helped him, it was not in their power to do it, none but God could; and therefore he applies to him, who had promiſed and was as good as his word, Iſai. xlix. 8.

℣. 12. Many bulls have compaſſed me, &c.] By whom are meant the chief prieſts, elders, ſcribes, and Phariſees among the Jews, and Herod and Pontius Pilate among the Gentiles, comparable to bulls for their fierceneſs, rage, and fury againſt Chriſt, Pſal. ii. 1, 2. and for their puſhing at him with their horns of power and authority, and for their trampling him under their feet, his perſon and offices; theſe compaſſed him about at his apprehenſion, arraignment, trial, and condemnation; and there were many of them to one child, Jeſus: Strong bulls of Baſhan have beſet me round; Baſhan was a very fruitful country, in which cattle of various ſorts, and bulls among the reſt, were fed and fattened; ſee Deut. xxxii. 14. Ezek. xxxix. 18. bulls are noted for their ſtrength in other writers [a]. Hence great men, who abounded in riches and power, and uſed them to the oppreſſion of the poor, are compared to the kine of Baſhan, Amos iv. 1. and a very fit name this was for the kings and princes of the earth; for Caiaphas, Annas, and the chief prieſts, that lived upon the fat of the land, who beſet Chriſt around, and employed all their power and policy to take him and bring him to death; nor is it unuſual with heathen writers [b] to compare great perſonages to bulls.

℣. 13. They gaped upon me with their mouths, &c.] Either by way of deriſion and contempt, Job xvi. 10. or belching out blaſphemy againſt him, or rather, with the greateſt vehemency, crying out crucify him, crucify him; and this they did as a ravening and roaring lion, when it has got its prey and rejoices, Amos iii. 4. and being in ſuch hands, and encompaſſed about with ſuch enemies, as Chriſt was in the garden, in the high prieſt's hall, and in Pilate's judgment hall, is a third reaſon or argument uſed by him with God his Father, to be near to him and not far from him.

℣. 14. I am poured out like water, &c.] This may refer to Chriſt's ſweat in the garden, when through his agony or conflict with Satan, and his vehemency in prayer, and the preſſure on his mind, in a view of his people's ſins, and the wrath of God for them, and the accurſed death he was about to undergo on that account; ſweat in great abundance came from all parts of his body, and not only ſtood in [z] מבטיחי tu me tutum feciſti, Cocceius; ſo Michaelis.

[a] Fortes tauri, Virgil. Georgic. l. 1. v. 65. Ovid. Metamorph. l. 9. fab. 1.

[b] Homer. Iliad. 2. v. 48. Horat. Satyr. l. 1. ſatyr. 3. v. 110.

in large drops, but fell to the ground like great drops of blood; ſo that his body was all covered with water, or rather ſeemed to be diſſolving into water, or elſe to the quantity of tears he ſhed both there and elſewhere; his ſorrow was great even unto death, which vented itſelf in floods of tears; his prayers were offered up with ſtrong crying and tears; his head was, as Jeremy wiſhed his might be, as waters, and his eyes a fountain of tears, yea, his whole body ſeemed to be bathed with them: or elſe to the ſhedding of his blood, and the pouring out his ſoul unto death for his people, which was voluntarily done by himſelf, or by his enemies; which they ſhed like water, and made no account of it, Pſal. lxxix. 3. Some have thought this reſpects the opinion ſome had of him, even ſome of his own diſciples, when he was dead; all their hopes of his being their redeemer and Saviour being gone, he was as water ſpilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up; ſee 2 Sam. xiv. 14. but rather, the phraſe intends his being quite diſpirited, his heart failing, his ſoul ſorrowful unto death, his hands feeble, his knees weak like water, and he juſt ready to faint and die; ſee Joſhua vii. 5. and Ezek. vii. 17. And all my bones are out of joint; not through the ſtretching of his body on the croſs, which ſeems to be deſigned in ℣. 17. but as it is with perſons in a panic, their joints ſeem to be looſed, and their bones parting aſunder, their legs tremble, no member can perform its office, but as if every one was diſlocated and out of its place; ſee Pſalm. vi. 2. My heart is like wax, it is melted in the midſt of my bowels; as wax melts before the fire, ſo did the heart of Chriſt at the wrath and fury of God, which was poured forth like fire upon him; and which he had a ſenſe of, when in the garden and on the croſs, bearing the ſins of his people, and ſuſtaining the puniſhment due unto them; for it was not becauſe of his enemies, nor merely at the preſence of God, and his righteous judgments, which is ſometimes the caſe; ſee 2 Sam. xvii. 10. Pſal. lxviii. 2. and xcvii. 5. but at the apprehenſion of divine wrath and feeling the ſame as the ſurety of his people; and what an idea does this give of the wrath of God? for if the heart of Chriſt, the lion of the tribe of Judah, melted at it, what heart can endure, or hands be ſtrong, when God deals with them in his wrath? Ezek. xxii. 14.

℣. 15. My ſtrength is dried up like a potſheard, &c.] The radical moiſture of his body was dried up through his loſs of blood and ſpirits, and through the violent fever upon him, brought on him by his being hurried from bar to bar; and which generally attends perſons under a panic, in conſternation and fear of danger and death, and at crucifixion; or this was occaſioned by the inward ſorrow and diſtreſs of his mind, which affected his body and dried his bones, as a broken ſpirit is ſaid to do, Prov. xvii. 22. and chiefly it was brought upon him through the ſenſe he had of the wrath of God, which like fire dried up his ſtrength, juſt as a potſheard burnt in a furnace; which expreſſes his doloroous ſufferings, which were typified by the paſſover-lamb being roaſted with fire, and the manna being baked in pans. And my tongue cleaveth to my jaws; ſo that he could not, or rather, would not ſpeak; this phraſe ſometimes ſignifying ſilence, Job xxix. 10. Ezek. iii. 26. Thus Chriſt anſwered not a word to the charges of the falſe witneſſes before the high prieſt, nor to the accuſations of the chief prieſts and elders before Pilate; nor did he open his mouth when he was led to be crucified, neither againſt the law and juſtice of God; nor againſt his people for whom he ſuffered; nor againſt his enemies who uſed him cruelly; when he was reviled he reviled not again; but rather, this was occaſioned by thirſt, through the violent fever that was upon him; ſee Lam. iv. 4. Hence when he hung upon the croſs, he ſaid, I thirſt, John xix. 28. And thou haſt brought me into the duſt of death; meaning either death itſelf, which brings to the duſt, and which is ſignified in this pſalm by going down to it, ℣. 29. or the grave, where the body crumbles into duſt, and where it is covered with duſt, and therefore is ſaid to ſleep in the duſt of the earth, Dan. xii. 2. and accordingly the Targum renders it here, thou haſt ſhut me up in the houſe of the grave: now Chriſt both died and was laid in the grave, though he did not lie there ſo long as to corrupt and pulverize, yet he might be truly ſaid to be laid in the duſt: and this is attributed to God, to his counſel, diſpoſal, and providence; and even whatever was done to Chriſt antecedent to his death, and which led on to it, were what God's hand and counſel had determined to be done; and though it was with wicked hands the Jews took Chriſt and uſed him in the manner after related, and crucified and ſlew him, he was delivered to them by the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God; and by theſe he was delivered into the hands of juſtice, and brought to death itſelf, Acts ii. 23. and iv. 27, 28.

℣. 16. For dogs have compaſſed me, &c.] By whom are meant wicked men, as the following clauſe ſhews; and ſo the Chaldee paraphraſe renders it, the wicked who are like to many dogs; and to theſe ſuch are often compared in ſcripture, Matt. vii. 6. Rev. xxii. 15. and it may be the Roman ſoldiers, who were Gentiles, may be chiefly intended, whom the Jews uſed to call dogs, Matt. xv. 26. theſe aſſembled together in Pilate's hall, and ſurrounded Chriſt, and made ſport with him; to theſe were committed the execution of him, they crucified him, and ſat around him watching him whilſt on the croſs, as they alſo did when in the grave: ſome have thought the dregs of the Jewiſh people are deſigned, the common people, ſuch as Job ſays, he would not ſet with the dogs of his flock, Job xxx. 1. who encompaſſed Chriſt on the croſs, wagging their heads at him; though I ſee not but that all of them, even the chief among them, the high prieſt, Sanhedrim, ſcribes and Phariſees, may be intended; who are ſo called becauſe of their impurity in themſelves; for their avarice and covetouſneſs, being greedy dogs that could never have enough; and for their impudence, calumnies, malice, and envy againſt Chriſt: the alluſion ſeems to be to hunting dogs, who, when they have got the creature they have been in purſuit of, ſurround it and fall upon it. Chriſt, in the title of this pſalm, is called Ajeleth Shahar, the morning-hind, who was hunted by the Jews, and at laſt ſurrounded and taken by them. The aſſembly of the wicked have encloſed me; the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, the chief prieſts and elders, who aſſembled together to conſult his death, before whom he was brought when taken; and in the midſt of whom he was ſet and examined, and by them unanimouſly condemned; and who, notwithſtanding all their pretenſions to religion, were a ſett of wicked men: and alſo the whole congregation of the Jews, the body of the people, who were united in their requeſt for his crucifixion and death; and who in great numbers got together, and in a circle ſtood around him when on the croſs, inſulting him. They pierced my hands and my feet; by nailing them to the croſs, which, though not related by the evangeliſts, is plainly ſuggeſted in John xx. 25, 27. and is referred to in other paſſages of ſcripture, Zech. xii. 10.

Rev.

Rev. i. 7. and clearly points at the kind of death Chriſt ſhould die; the death of the croſs, a ſhameful and painful one. In this clauſe there is a various reading; in ſome copies in the margin it is, as a lion my hands and my feet, but in the text, they have dug or pierced my hands and my feet; both are joined together in the Targum, biting as a lion my hands and my feet; as it is by other interpreters [c]; and Schultens [d] retains the latter, rendering the preceding clauſe in connexion with it thus, "the aſſembly of the wicked have broken me to "pieces, as a lion, my hands and my feet." In the Targum, in the King of Spain's Bible, the phraſe, as a lion, is left out. The modern Jews are for retaining the marginal reading, though without any good ſenſe, and are therefore ſometimes charged with a wilful and malicious corruption of the text; but without ſufficient proof, ſince the different reading in ſome copies might be originally occaſioned by the ſimilarity of the letters ר and ו; and therefore finding it in their copies, or margin, ſometimes כארו and ſometimes כארי have choſe that which beſt ſuits their purpoſe, and is not to be wondered at; however their maſoretic notes, continued by them, ſufficiently clear them from ſuch an imputation, and direct to the true reading of the words; in the ſmall Maſorah on the text it is obſerved that the word is twice uſed as here pointed, but in two different ſenſes; this is one of the places, the other is Iſa. xxxviii. 13. where the ſenſe requires it ſhould be read as a lion: wherefore according to the authors of that note it muſt have a different ſenſe here, and not to be underſtood of a lion; the larger Maſorah, in Numb. xxiv. 9. obſerves the word is to be found in two places, in that place, and in Pſal. xxii. 16. and adds to that, it is written כארו they pierced; and Ben Chayim confirms [e] this reading, and ſays, he found it ſo written in ſome correct copies, and in the margin כארי; and ſo it is written in ſeveral manuſcripts; and which is confirmed by the Arabic, Syriac, Ethiopic, Greek, and Vulgate Latin verſions; in which it is rendered, they dug my hands and my feet; and ſo took it to be a verb and not a noun; ſo Apollinarius in his metaphraſe; and which is alſo confirmed by the points; though taking כארי for a participle, as the Targum, that reading may be admitted, as it is by ſome learned men [f], who render it digging or piercing, and ſo has the ſame ſenſe, deriving the word either from כאר or כור, which ſignify to dig, pierce, or make hollow; and there are many inſtances of plural words which end in י, the ם omitted, being cut off by an apocope; ſee 2 Sam. xxiii. 8. 2 Kings xi. 4, 19. Lam. iii. 14. Ezek. xxxii. 30. and either way the words are expreſſive of the ſame thing, and manifeſtly point to the ſufferings of Chriſt, and that kind of death he ſhould die, the death of the croſs, and the nailing of his hands and feet to it, whereby they were pierced. This paſſage is ſometimes applied by the Jews [g] themſelves to their Meſſiah.

℣. 17. I may tell all my bones, &c.] For what with the ſtretching out of his body on the croſs, when it was faſtened to it as it lay on the ground, and with the jog of the croſs when, being reared up, it was fixed in the ground, and with the weight of the body hanging upon it, all his bones were diſjointed and ſtarted out; ſo that could he have ſeen them, he might have told them, as they might be told by the ſpectators who were around him; and ſo the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions render it, they have numbered all my bones; that is, they might have done it: the Targum is, I will number all the ſcars of my members, made by the blows, ſcourges, and wounds he received. They look and ſtare upon me; meaning not his bones, but his enemies; which may be underſtood either by way of contempt, as many Jewiſh interpreters explain it: ſo the ſcribes and elders of the people, and the people themſelves, looked and ſtared at him on the croſs, and mocked at him, and inſulted him; or by way of rejoicing, ſaying, Aha, aha, our eye hath ſeen, namely, what they deſired and wiſhed for, Pſal. xxxv. 21. Such a ſight as was enough to have moved an heart of ſtone, made no impreſſion on them; they had no ſympathy with him, no compaſſion on him, but rejoiced at his miſery: this ſtaring agrees with their character as dogs.

℣. 18. They part my garments among them, &c.] Such as died the death of the croſs were crucified naked [h], and their clothes were the perquiſites of the executioners; there were four ſoldiers concerned in the crucifixion of Chriſt, and theſe parted his garments into four parts, and every one took his part. And caſt lots on my veſture; which was a ſeamleſs coat, wove from the top to the bottom; and therefore, not willing to rent it, they caſt lots upon it, who ſhould have it; all this was exactly fulfilled in Chriſt, John xix. 23, 24.

℣. 19. But be not thou far from me, O Lord, &c.] See the note on ℣. 11. O my ſtrength; Chriſt as God is the mighty God, the almighty; as mediator, he is the ſtrength of his people; but as man, God is his ſtrength; he is the man of his right hand, whom he has made ſtrong for himſelf, and whom he has promiſed his arm ſhall ſtrengthen, Pſal. lxxx. 17. and lxxxix. 21. and therefore he addreſſes him in this manner here, ſaying, Haſte thee to help me; his help was alone in God his ſtrength; there were none that could help him but he, and he ſeemed to ſtand afar off from helping him, ℣. 1, 11. and his caſe being ſo diſtreſſed, as is repreſented in the preceeding verſes, it required haſte.

℣. 20. Deliver my ſoul from the ſword, &c.] Wicked men, whoſe tongues were as a ſharp ſword, reproaching and blaſpheming him, and bearing falſe witneſs againſt him; and crying out, Crucify him, crucify him; ſee Pſal. xvii. 12. and lvii. 4. Prov. xxv. 18. or any inſtrument of violence, as the iron bar with which the legs of the malefactors crucified with him were broken, which he eſcaped; and the ſpear which pierced his ſide, after he had commended his ſoul or ſpirit into the hands of his Father; or a violent death; for though his death had the appearance of one, he was taken in a violent manner, and adjudged to be put to death, and was crucified, yet his life was not taken away by men; he laid it down, and gave up his breath himſelf. My darling from the power of the dog, or my only one [i]; meaning his life or ſoul, as before; ſo called, not becauſe there is but one ſoul in the body, but becauſe it was dear and valuable to him; and hence we render it darling, an only one being uſually

[c] Amamæ Antibarb. Bibl. p. 743. [d] Origin. Heb. l. 1. c. 12. ſ. 8. vid. Jacob. Alting. Diſſert. Philolog. 5. ſ. 27—34. [e] In Maarcath ארכ fol. 10 2. ad Calc. Buxtorf. Bibl. [f] Pocock. Miſcell. c. 4. p. 59, 60. Pfeiffer. Exercitat. 8. ſ. 37. Carpzov. Critic. Sacr. p. 838, 839. Alting. ut ſupra, ſ. 48, 49. [g] Peſikta in Yalkut, par. 2. fol. 56. 4. [h] Vid. Lipſium de cruce, l. 2. c. 7. p. 81. [i] יחידתי unicam meam, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Tigurine verſion, Cocceius, Junius & Tremellius, uſually the darling of its parents; ſo a man's life is dear to him, all that he has will he give for it, Job ii. 4. Chriſt's life was a more precious life than any man's, and peculiarly his own, in ſuch ſenſe as another man's is not his own; and his ſoul alſo was an only one, it was not polluted with original ſin, as the ſouls of other men are; it was pure and holy: the word here uſed is ſometimes rendered deſolate and ſolitary; ſee Pſal. xxv. 16. and lxviii. 6. and it may have this ſenſe here, and be tranſlated my lonely or ſolitary one[k], he being forſaken by God, and deſerted by his diſciples; his ſoul was in darkneſs, ſorrow, and diſtreſs, wherefore he prays it might be delivered from the power of the dog; either Satan is ſo called for his malice and envy, who had put it into the heart of Judas to betray him, and had filled the Phariſees with envy at him, and who through it delivered him to Pilate; or the impure, cruel, and wicked Roman ſoldiers, and in ſhort all his crucifiers; called in the plural number dogs, in ℣. 16. ſee the note there.

℣. 21. Save me from the lion's mouth, &c.] Either the devil, who is as a roaring lion, whom Chriſt overcame both in the garden and on the croſs, and deſtroyed him and his works; or all his wicked enemies, eſpecially the moſt powerful of them, who were in greateſt authority, as the chief prieſts and elders; ſo rulers and civil magiſtrates, who are cruel and unmerciful, are compared to lions, Prov. xxviii. 15. 2 Tim. iv. 17. For thou haſt heard me from the horns of the unicorns; ſome read this as a prayer like the former, hear thou me[l], &c. that is, deliver me; but according to our verſion it expreſſes what God had done, that he had heard him and ſaved him; and is uſed as a reaſon or argument with him, that he would regard alſo his other petitions: or it may have reſpect to what follows, that ſince God had heard him, and delivered him out of the hands of his moſt powerful enemies, therefore he would declare his name and praiſe him; for the unicorn being a very ſtrong creature, and its ſtrength lying much in its horn, with which it puſhes and does miſchief; ſee Numb. xxiii. 22. Job xxxix. 9—12. Deut. xxxiii. 17. Chriſt's ſtrong and potent enemies are intended here; ſuch as Satan and his principalities and powers, the Sanhedrim of the Jews, Herod, Pontius Pilate, and others, from whoſe power he was freed when raiſed from the dead. According to Pliny[m], the Monoceros or unicorn, is the fierceſt of wild beaſts; in its body like a horſe, it has the head of an hart and feet of an elephant, the tail of a bear, makes a great bellowing; has one black horn riſing up in the middle of the forehead, of two cubits long; it is denied that it was ever taken alive, which agrees with Job xxxix. 9, 10. ſee the note there.

℣. 22. I will declare thy name unto my brethren, &c.] Not thoſe who were more nearly related to him according to the fleſh; for though there were ſome who believed in him, and to whom he declared the name of God, as James and Joſes, and Judas and Simon, Matt. xiii. 55. yet there were others that did not believe on him, John vii. 3, 5. nor thoſe more remotely related to him, as all the Jews, who were his brethren and kinſmen alſo according to the fleſh; to theſe indeed he came and preached, but they received him not; but rather his apoſtles, whom he called his brethren, even after his reſurrection, and to whom he appeared and declared the name of God, Matt. xxviii. 10. John xx. 17. and the five hundred brethren by whom he was ſeen at once, may be alſo included; and even all true believers in him, who through his incarnation, being their Goel and near kinſman, ſtands in ſuch a relation to them, and through their adoption into his Father's family, his Father being their Father, and his God their God; which is manifeſted in regeneration, and evidenced by their doing the will of God, which is believing in Chriſt, Matt. xii. 49, 50. By the name of God, is meant, not any one of the names by which he is known, as God Almighty, Jehovah, &c. if any of theſe could be thought to be deſigned, the New Teſtament-name and title of God as the Father of Chriſt would bid fair for it; but rather, the perfections of God, which appear in Chriſt, and were glorified in the work of redemption; or God himſelf; or elſe his goſpel, Acts ix. 15. and which Chriſt declared and manifeſted to his diſciples, both before and after his reſurrection, John xvii. 6, 8. Acts i. 3. which latter ſeems here to be referred unto. In the midſt of the congregation will I praiſe thee; meaning not the congregation of the Jews, their ſynagogue, or temple, where he often attended on public worſhip, and preached and praiſed the Lord; but rather the company of his diſciples, among whom he ſung an hymn the night he was betrayed, and with whom he converſed by times for forty days after his reſurrection: unleſs the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born in heaven is intended, in the midſt of which he praiſed the Lord, when he aſcended on high, led captivity captive, and received gifts for men; though it ſeems beſt to underſtand this of the church of God, particularly among the Gentiles, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, where Chriſt in his members ſings the praiſe of electing, redeeming, and calling grace; ſee Pſal. xviii. 49. compared with Rom. xv. 9. This is a proof of ſinging of pſalms and hymns in goſpel-churches, and of its being a duty to be publickly performed by the members of them; who may expect the preſence of Chriſt in the midſt of his church, ſeeing he here promiſes to be there: theſe words are applied to Chriſt in Heb. ii. 12.

℣. 23. Ye that fear the Lord, praiſe him, &c.] By whom are meant, not the proſelytes among the Gentiles, as diſtinct from the Jews, which is the ſenſe of ſome Jewiſh interpreters[n]; but all the people of God, whether Jews or Gentiles, who have the grace of filial and godly fear put into their hearts, with which they worſhip God, and walk before him in all holy converſation; which is not a fear of wrath, or a diſtruſt of divine goodneſs; but is a reverential affection for God, and is conſiſtent with the greateſt degree of faith, the ſtrongeſt expreſſions of ſpiritual joy and holy courage: it includes the whole worſhip of God, internal and external; and ſuch who have it in their hearts, and before their eyes, are called upon by Chriſt to praiſe the Lord for him, for the unſpeakable gift of his love; that he has not ſpared his Son, but delivered him up for them, to undergo ſo much ſorrow, and ſuch ſufferings as before related, to obtain ſalvation for them; and that he has delivered him out of them, raiſed him from the dead, and has given him glory. All ye the ſeed of Jacob glorify him; not the natural, but ſpiritual ſeed of Jacob, who walk in the ſteps of the faith of that man of God; theſe are exhorted to glorify the Lord with their bodies and ſpirits, which are his, being redeemed with the precious blood of Chriſt; by believing in him, glorying

[k] Solitariam meam, Piſcator, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth.
[l] עניתני exaudi me, Muis, Gejerus, Michaelis.
[m] Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 21.
[n] Midraſh Tillim, Jarchi & Aben Ezra in loc.

glorying in him, and offering praiſe unto him. And fear him all ye the ſeed of Iſrael; who are the ſame with the ſeed of Jacob, Jacob and Iſrael being two names of the ſame perſon; and deſign not Iſrael, according to the fleſh, but according to the Spirit; the whole Iſrael of God, the all ſpiritual ſeed of Iſrael, who are juſtified in Chriſt, and are ſaved in him; they are the ſame with them that fear the Lord, and are here ſtirred up to exerciſe the grace of fear upon him; to fear him only, and not men, though ever ſo mighty and powerful, as before deſcribed in ℣. 12, 13, 16, 20, 21. and that not only becauſe of his power and greatneſs; but becauſe of his grace and goodneſs, as ſhewn forth in Chriſt Jeſus.

℣. 24. For he hath not deſpiſed nor abhorred the affliction of the afflicted, &c.] That is, Chriſt, who was afflicted by men, both by their tongues, and by their hands; by devils, by the temptations of Satan; for Chriſt ſuffered being tempted, though he was not overcome; and by his attacks upon him, both in the garden and on the croſs; and by the Lord himſelf, Jehovah his Father, who laid on him the iniquity and chaſtiſement of his people, bruiſed him, and put him to grief; awoke the ſword of juſtice againſt him, and ſpared him not: his afflictions were many, both in body and ſoul; in body, being ſcourged, buffeted, bruiſed, pierced, racked and tortured on the croſs; in ſoul, being made exceeding ſorrowful, and an offering for ſin; ſuſtaining his Father's wrath, and ſeeing and enduring affliction by the rod of it; ſee Iſa. liii. 4, 7. now, though his afflictions and ſufferings were deſpiſed by men, and he was deſpiſed and abhorred on account of them; yet not by his Father, he took pleaſure in them, and in him as ſuffering for his people; not ſimply conſidered, as if he delighted in his ſufferings as ſuch, but as they were agreeable to his counſel and covenant, and brought about the ſalvation of his choſen ones: he accepted them in the room and ſtead of his people; the ſacrifice of Chriſt was of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to him; he was well pleaſed with his righteouſneſs, his law being magnified and made honourable by it; and his death was precious in his ſight, being the propitiation for the ſins of his people; ſo far was he from deſpiſing and abhorring the afflictions of his Son. And this is mentioned as a reaſon or argument for praiſe and thankſgiving in them that fear the Lord; ſince God has looked upon the redemption-price his Son has paid for them ſufficient; has not deſpiſed, but accepted of it as the ranſom of their ſouls: ſome render the words, the prayer of the afflicted; ſo the Targum, and the Septuagint verſion, and the verſions that follow that; which agrees with the next words: Neither hath he hid his face from him; when men did, as aſhamed of him, Iſa. liii. 3. for though he forſook him for a while, and in a little wrath hid his face from him for a moment, that he might bear the whole curſe of the law for us; yet he returned again, and did not hide his face from him for ever. But when he cried unto him, he heard; cried, not only on account of his crucifiers, that God would forgive them; but on account of himſelf, that he would not be afar off from him; that he would take his ſpirit or ſoul into his hands, into which he committed it; that he would deliver him from the power of death and the grave, and looſe their bands; in all which he was heard, Heb. v. 7.

℣. 25. My praiſe ſhall be of thee in the great congregation, &c.] Or, my praiſe is from thee[o]; not that he ſhould have praiſe of God, as he had, when he was received up into heaven, and ſet down at the right hand of God; but that God ſhould be the object of his praiſe, as he was the cauſe of it; his ſalvation and deliverance of him, and reſurrection from the dead, and exaltation of him, were the occaſion and matter of it: the place where Chriſt determined to praiſe the Lord, is the great congregation; either his apoſtles, who, though a little flock, yet, on account of their extraordinary office and gifts, and peculiar privileges, were the greateſt congregation that ever was in the world; or the five hundred brethren to whom Chriſt appeared at once after his reſurrection; or elſe the whole church under the goſpel-diſpenſation; in the midſt of which Chriſt is, and who in the members of it praiſes the the name of the Lord; and this eſpecially will have its accompliſhment at the latter day, when great multitudes will be converted, and the voice of praiſe and thankſgiving will be among them, Rev. vii. 9, 10. and xi. 15, and xiv. 1, 2. and xix. 1, 5, 6. I will pay my vows before them that fear him; either thoſe which he made in the council and covenant of grace, when he engaged to become a ſurety for his people, to aſſume their nature, to ſuffer and die for them, to redeem them from ſin and miſery, and bring them nigh to God, and ſave them with an everlaſting ſalvation; all which he has openly done; ſee Pſal. xxxi. 19. or thoſe which he made in ℣. 21. that he would declare the name of the Lord unto his brethren, and ſing praiſe unto him in the midſt of the church; compare with this Pſal. cxvi. 12—14.

℣. 26. The meek ſhall eat and be ſatisfied, &c.] Such who, being made throughly ſenſible of ſin, look upon themſelves the chief of ſinners and the leaſt of ſaints; and being truly convicted of the inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs, wholly truſt to, and rely on the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and being acquainted with their impotency and inability to do any good thing of themſelves, aſcribe all to the grace of God, and have no dependence on any thing done by them; who are willing to be inſtructed and reproved by the meaneſt ſaint; are not eaſily provoked to wrath; patiently bear indignities and affronts, and are gentle unto all men: theſe ſhall eat the fat, and drink the ſweet of Chriſt the bread of life; they ſhall eat of his fleſh by faith, which is meat indeed; they ſhall find the word, and eat it; feed on the wholeſome words of Chriſt, the words of faith and good doctrine, and ſhall be ſatisfied, or filled: other food is not ſatisfying; it proves gravel, aſhes, and wind; it is not bread, and ſatisfies not; but ſuch as hunger and thirſt after Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, and are poor in their own eyes, meek and humble; theſe are filled with good things to ſatisfaction, Matt. v. 6. Luke i. 53. Jarchi interprets theſe words of the time of the redemption, and the days of the Meſſiah. They ſhall praiſe the Lord that ſeek him; in Chriſt, with their whole heart; who being filled by him, and ſatisfied, bleſs the Lord for their ſpiritual food, and comfortable repaſt, as it becomes men to do for their corporal food, Deut. viii. 10. Your heart ſhall live for ever; this is an addreſs of Chriſt to them that fear the Lord, the ſeed of Jacob and Iſrael; the meek ones, and that ſeek the Lord, his face and favour, and who eat and are ſatisfied; ſignifying, that they ſhould be revived and refreſhed, ſhould be chearful and comfortable; ſhould live by faith on Chriſt now, and have eternal life in them; and ſhould live with him for ever hereafter, and never die the ſecond death.

℣. 27. All the ends of the world ſhall remember and turn unto the Lord, &c.] That is, all the elect of

[o] מאתך παρα σε, Sept. a te, Pagninus, Montanus, Rivetus, Cocceius, Ainſworth.

of God among the Gentiles, who live in the furthermoſt parts of the world, for whom Chriſt is appointed to be their ſalvation, and whom he calls to look to him for it; theſe ſhall remember the Lord whom they have forgotten, and againſt whom they have ſinned, how great and how good he is; they ſhall be put in mind of their ſins and iniquities committed againſt him, and call to mind their latter end; and conſider, that after death will come judgment, to which they muſt be brought; they ſhall be appriſed of the grace and goodneſs of God in Chriſt, in providing and ſending him to be the Saviour of loſt ſinners, by his ſufferings and death, at large deſcribed in this pſalm; which will encourage them to turn unto the Lord, ſince they may hope for full pardon of ſin, through his blood and ſacrifice; and to turn from their idols, and from all their evil ways, and from all dependence on themſelves or on creatures, to truſt in, and ſerve the living God in faith and fear; which turning is uſually brought about under, and by the miniſtry of the word; which is appointed to turn men from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God; and has this effect, when it is attended with the Spirit and power of God; for converſion is not the work of man, neither of miniſters nor of men themſelves, but of God, in which men are at firſt paſſive; they are turned, and then, under the influence of grace, become active, and turn to the Lord, by believing in him, and ſo cleave unto him: and likewiſe remembrance of the above things is not owing to themſelves, but to the Spirit of God, who puts them into their minds; and which is very neceſſary and eſſential to converſion, even as a remembrance of paſt things is neceſſary to a reſtoration after backſlidings, which is a ſecond converſion. And all the kindreds of the nations ſhall worſhip before thee; not only externally, by praying before the Lord, and attending on his word and ordinances; but internally, in ſpirit and in truth, which worſhippers the Lord ſeeks; ſuch ſpiritual worſhip being ſuitable to his nature, and ſuch worſhippers believers in him are; this muſt be underſtood of ſome of all nations, kindred and tongues, whom Chriſt has redeemed by his blood, and calls by his grace; ſee Zech. xiv. 16, 17.

℣. 28. For the kingdom is the Lord's, &c.] Not the kingdom of nature and providence, though that is the Lord Chriſt's; but the kingdom of grace, the mediatorial kingdom: this was Chriſt's by the deſignation and conſtitution of his Father from eternity; the government of the church was always upon his ſhoulders during the Old Teſtament-diſpenſation; when he came into this world, he came as a King, though his kingdom being not of this world, it came not with obſervation; but upon his aſcenſion to heaven, whither he went to receive a kingdom and return, he was made or declared Lord and Chriſt, and was exalted as a Prince, as well as a Saviour; and in conſequence of his being ſet down at the right hand of God, he ſent forth the rod of his ſtrength, his goſpel, into the Gentile world, which was ſucceeded to the converſion of multitudes of them, among whom he has had a viſible kingdom and intereſt ever ſince; and which will more abundantly appear in the latter day, when he ſhall be King over all the earth; and now this is a reaſon why ſo many, in the diſtant parts of the world, and among all the kindreds of the nations, ſhall remember, turn to him, and worſhip him. And he is the governor among the nations; he rules in the hearts of ſome by his Spirit and grace, and over others with a rod of iron.

℣. 29. All they that be fat upon earth, &c.] Rich men, who abound in worldly ſubſtance, are in very flouriſhing and proſperous circumſtances, of whom for the moſt part this is literally true; yea, by theſe ſometimes are meant princes, rulers, the chief among the people in power and authority, as well as in riches; ſee Pſal. lxxviii. 31. Iſai. x. 16. the phraſe may deſign ſuch who are in proſperous circumſtances in their ſouls, in ſpiritual things, in faith, comfort, and ſpiritual joy, Pſal. xcii. 14. but the former ſenſe is beſt: Jarchi inverts the words, they ſhall eat, i. e. the meek ſhall eat, all the fat of the earth, and worſhip; which may be underſtood of the ſpiritual bleſſings of grace, which converted perſons ſhall feed and live upon, Pſal. lxiii. 5. the alluſion may be to the fat parts of the earth, and what grows thereon, made ſo by aſhes, which the word uſed has the ſignification of; for ſome lands are fattened by aſhes being ſtrowed upon them [p]; but rather, the rich and great men of the earth are intended, who yet are but duſt and aſhes. They ſhall eat, and worſhip; for as in the firſt times of the goſpel, not many mighty and noble were called, yet ſome were; ſo more eſpecially, in the latter day, many of this ſort will be called, even kings and queens; who will not live upon their titles of honour, their grandeur and glory, but upon Chriſt and his goſpel, and will fall down before him, and ſerve and worſhip him; ſee Pſal. lxxii. 10, 11. Iſa. xlix. 7, 23. and lx. 3, 16. All they that go down to the duſt ſhall bow before him; ſuch as are in mean circumſtances of life; ſo that both rich and poor ſhall ſerve him; or who are mean in their own eyes, ſit in the duſt of ſelf-abhorrence, and put their mouths in the duſt, are in a low condition, out of which the Lord raiſes them, Pſal. cxiii. 7, 8. the Targum paraphraſes it, who go down to the houſe of the grave; that is, the dead; and then the ſenſe is, that Chriſt is the Lord, both of the dead and living, and that thoſe that are under the earth, and are reduced to duſt, as well as they that live and are fat upon it, ſhall bow the knee to Chriſt, when raiſed again, who is the judge of quick and dead; ſee Rom. xiv. 9. Phil. ii. 10, 11. And none can keep alive his own ſoul; as no man can quicken himſelf when dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; ſo when he is made alive, he cannot preſerve his life, nor nouriſh himſelf, nor make himſelf lively and comfortable, nor cauſe his heart to live, as in ℣. 26. but by eating the fleſh, and drinking the blood of Chriſt, feeding and living upon him by faith: though ſome take the ſenſe to be, that ſuch as are before deſcribed as converted perſons, will not ſeek to ſave their lives, but will freely lay them down and part with them for Chriſt's ſake; but rather the meaning is, that ſo univerſal will the kingdom of Chriſt be, as that high and low, rich and poor, will be bowing to him; whoever are his enemies, and will not have him to rule over them, will be brought before him and ſlain, and none of them will be able to ſave themſelves; ſo the Targum, he will not quicken, or keep alive the ſoul of the wicked; or as Jarchi interprets it, "he will have no "mercy on them, to keep their ſouls alive from "hell."

℣. 30. A ſeed ſhall ſerve him, &c.] That is, Chriſt ſhall always have a ſeed to ſerve him in every age; age; a remnant according to the election of grace; ſee Rom. ix. 29. ſo that as the former verſes ſpeak of the amplitude of Chriſt's kingdom, through the calling of the Gentiles, theſe words and the following expreſs the duration of it: and this ſeed either means Chriſt's ſeed; ſo the Septuagint verſion, and others that follow it, render it, my ſeed; the ſpiritual ſeed and offspring of Chriſt, which the Father has given him, and which ſhall endure for ever, Iſa. liii. 10. Pſal. lxxxix. 29, 30. or elſe the church's ſeed, which comes to the ſame thing; not the natural ſeed of believers, but a ſucceſſion of godly men in the church, who are born in her, and nurſed up at her ſide; ſee Iſa. lix. 21. ſuch ſhall, and do, in every age ſerve Chriſt, willingly and chearfully, in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, without ſlaviſh fear, and yet with reverence and godly fear The Chaldee paraphraſe is, the ſeed of Abraham ſhall ſerve before him; but this ſeed deſigns not the Jews only, but the Gentiles alſo, and chiefly: It ſhall be accounted to the Lord for a generation; of his people, his children whom he accounts of, reckons and eſteems as ſuch; or the ſeed ſhall be reckoned to the Lord, as belonging to him, unto generation; that is, in every generation [q], throughout all ages, to the end of time; ſo the Targum, to an after generation; or, a generation to come.

[p] Effoetos cinerem immundum jactare per agros, Virgil. Georgic. l. 1. v. 79.

℣. 31. They ſhall come, &c.] One generation after another; there ſhall always be a ſucceſſion of regenerate perſons, who ſhall come to Chriſt, and to his churches; and a ſucceſſion of goſpel-miniſters among them, who ſhall come forth, being ſent and qualified by Chriſt. And ſhall declare his righteouſneſs; either the faithfulneſs of God, in fulfilling his promiſes; eſpecially thoſe which reſpect the miſſion of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him, as Zacharias did, Luke i. 68—73. or rather, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is revealed in the goſpel, and makes a moſt conſiderable part of the declaration of it, and is publiſhed by goſpel-miniſters in all ages, as the only juſtifying righteouſneſs before God; and that Unto a people that ſhall be born; in ſucceſſive generations; that ſhall be brought upon the ſtage of time and life; or that ſhall be born again; for to ſuch only, in a ſpiritual and ſaving way, is the righteouſneſs of Chriſt declared, revealed, and applied, by the bleſſed Spirit, through the miniſtry of the word: it is added, That he hath done this; wrought this righteouſneſs; ſo Jarchi; that is, is the author of it; is become the end of the law for it; has finiſhed it, and brought it in; or elſe all the great things ſpoken of in this pſalm, relating to the Meſſiah, his ſufferings, death, and reſurrection, and the calling of the Gentiles; all which are the Lord's doings, and are what is declared in the goſpel: the Targum is, the miracles which he hath done; the Septuagint verſion, and thoſe that follow it, connect this clauſe with the preceding, thus, to a people that ſhall be born, whom the Lord hath made; made them his people, created them in Chriſt, and formed them for himſelf.

PSALM XXIII.

A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm was written by David, either when he was in diſtreſſed circumſtances, being perſecuted by Saul, and was in the foreſt of Hareth, 1 Sam. xxii. 5. as ſome think [r]; wherefore he comforts himſelf with the Lord's being his ſhepherd, ſo that he ſhould not want; nor would he fear, was he in worſe circumſtances than he at preſent was; or rather, when he was ſettled upon the throne of Iſrael, and in the moſt proſperous and flouriſhing ſtate of his reign, as the latter part of the pſalm ſhews; he ſpeaks not in his own perſon only, but in the name of all believers; for Chriſt, who is the ſhepherd ſpoken of, is a common ſhepherd to all the ſaints, who are all the ſheep of his paſture, as well as David; and the prophet here makes uſe of ſimilies very familiar with him; he having been a ſhepherd himſelf, and knew what it was to do all the parts of that office, which are herein expreſſed; and very pertinently does this pſalm follow the former; for as there Chriſt is propheſied of as laying down his life for the ſheep, as the good ſhepherd does; and of his being brought again from the dead, as the great ſhepherd of the ſheep, as Chriſt has been; ſo here of his performing his office as ſuch, in all its parts, to the great comfort, refreſhment, and ſafety of his people.

℣. 1. The Lord is my ſhepherd, &c.] This is to be underſtood not of Jehovah the Father, and of his feeding the people of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, as the Targum paraphraſes it, though the character of a ſhepherd is ſometimes given to him, Pſal. lxxvii. 20. and lxxx. 1. but of Jehovah the Son, to whom it is moſt frequently aſcribed, Gen. xlix. 24. Iſa. xl. 11. Ezek. xxxiv. 23. and xxxvii. 24. Zech. xiii. 7. John x. 11, 14. 1 Pet. ii 25. and v. 4. This office he was called and appointed to by his Father, and which through his condeſcending grace he undertook to execute, and for which he is abundantly qualified; being omniſcient, and ſo knows all his ſheep and their maladies, where to find them, what is their caſe, and what is to be done for them; and being omnipotent, he can do every thing proper for them; and having all power in heaven and in earth, can protect, defend, and ſave them; and all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge being in him, he can guide and direct them in the beſt manner; wherefore he is called the great ſhepherd, and the chief ſhepherd, and the good ſhepherd. David calls him my ſhepherd; Chriſt having a right unto him, as he has to all the ſheep of God, by virtue of his Father's gift, his own purchaſe, and the power of his grace; and as owning him as ſuch, and yielding ſubjection to him, following him as the ſheep of Chriſt do whereſoever he goes; and alſo as expreſſing his faith of intereſt in him, affection for him, and joy becauſe of him: and from thence comfortably concludes, I ſhall not want; not any thing, as the Targum and Aben Ezra interpret it; not any temporal good thing, as none of Chriſt's ſheep do, that he in his wiſdom ſees proper and convenient for them; nor any ſpiritual good things, ſince a fulneſs of them is in him, out of which all their wants are ſupplied; they cannot want food, for by him they go in and out and find paſture; in him their bread is given them, where they have enough and to ſpare, and their waters are ſure unto them; nor clothing, for he is the Lord their their righteouſneſs, and they are clothed with the robe of his righteouſneſs; nor reſt, for he is their reſting-place, in whom they find reſt for their ſouls, and are by him led to waters of reſt, as in the following verſe: the words may be rendered, I ſhall not fail, or come ſhort [s]; that is, of eternal glory and happineſs; for Chriſt's ſheep are in his hands, out of which none can pluck them, and therefore ſhall not periſh, but have everlaſting life, John x. 27, 28, 29.

[q] לדור In quacunque generatione, Noldius, p. 236. N° 1076.

[r] Jarchi & Kimchi.

℣. 2, He maketh me to lie down in green paſtures, &c.] Or paſtures of tender graſs [t]; this is one part of the ſhepherd's work, and which is performed by Chriſt, Ezek. xxxiv. 14. John x. 9. by theſe green paſtures may be meant the covenant of grace, its bleſſings and promiſes, where there is delicious feeding; likewiſe the fulneſs of grace in Chriſt, from whence grace for grace is received; alſo the fleſh and blood, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice of Chriſt, which faith is led unto, and lives upon, and is refreſhed and invigorated by; to which may be added the doctrines of the goſpel, with which Chriſt's under-ſhepherds feed his lambs and ſheep, there being in them milk for babes and meat for ſtrong men; and likewiſe the ordinances of the goſpel, the goodneſs and fatneſs of the Lord's houſe, the feaſt of fat things, and breaſts of conſolation: here Chriſt's ſheep are made to lie down, denoting their ſatiety and fulneſs; they having in theſe green paſtures what is ſatisfying and repleniſhing; as alſo their reſt and ſafety, theſe being ſure dwellings and quiet reſting-places, even in the noon of temptation and perſecution; ſee Cant. i. 7. He leadeth me beſide the ſtill waters, or waters of reſt and quietneſs [u]; not to rapid torrents, which by reaſon of the noiſe they make, and the ſwiftneſs of their motion, the ſheep are frighted, and not able to drink of them; but to ſtill waters, pure and clear, and motionleſs, or that go ſoftly, like the waters of Shiloah, Iſa. viii. 6. and the leading to them is in a gentle way, eaſily, as they are able to bear it; ſo Jacob led his flock, Gen. xxxiii. 14. and Chriſt leads his, Iſa. xl. 11. by theſe ſtill waters may be deſigned the everlaſting love of God, which is like a river, the ſtreams whereof make glad the hearts of his people; theſe are the waters of the ſanctuary, which riſe to the ancles, knees, and loins, and are as a broad river to ſwim in; the pure river of water of life Chriſt leads his ſheep to, and gives them to drink freely of: alſo communion with God, which the ſaints pant after, as the hart pants after the water-brooks, and Chriſt gives acceſs unto; moreover he himſelf is the fountain of gardens, and well of living waters, and ſtreams from Lebanon; and the graces of his Spirit are alſo as rivers of living water, all which he makes his people partakers of; to which may added, that the ſcriptures, and the truths of the goſpel, are like ſtill, quiet, and refreſhing waters to them, and are the waters to which thoſe that are athirſt are invited to come, Iſa. lv. 1. and in the immortal ſtate Chriſt will ſtill be a ſhepherd, and will feed his people, and lead them to fountains of living water where they ſhall ſolace themſelves for ever, and ſhall know no more ſorrow and ſighing, Rev. vii. 17.

℣. 3. He reſtoreth my ſoul, &c.] Either when backſlidden, and brings it back again when led or driven away, and heals its backſlidings; or rather, when fainting, ſwooning, and ready to die away, he fetches it back again, relieves, refreſhes, and comforts with the diſcoveries of his love, with the promiſes of his word, and with the conſolations of his Spirit, and ſuch like reviving cordials, ſee the note on Pſal. xix. 7. He leadeth me in the paths of righteouſneſs; in the plain paths of truth and holineſs, in which men, though fools, ſhall not err; in right ones, though they ſometimes ſeem rough and rugged to Chriſt's ſheep, yet are not crooked; there is no turning to the right hand or the left; they lead ſtraight on to the city of habitation; and they are righteous ones, as paths of duty are, and all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord be; moreover, Chriſt leads his by faith, to walk on in him and in his righteouſneſs, looking through it, and on account of it, for eternal life; ſee Prov. viii. 20. and all this he does for his name's ſake; for his own glory and the praiſe of his grace, and not for any merits or deſerts in men.

℣. 4. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the ſhadow of death, &c.] Which deſigns not a ſtate of ſpiritual darkneſs and ignorance, as ſitting in the ſhadow of death ſometimes does, ſince the pſalmiſt cannot be ſuppoſed to be at this time or after in ſuch a condition; ſee Iſa. ix. 2. Matt. iv. 13, 16. Luke i. 79. nor deſertion or the hidings of God's face, which is ſometimes the caſe of the people of God, and was the caſe of the pſalmiſt at times; but now he expreſsly ſays, the Lord was with him; but rather, ſince the grave is called the land of the ſhadow of death, and the diſtreſſes perſons are uſually in under apprehenſions of immediate death, are called the terrors of the ſhadow of death; ſee Job x. 21, 22. and xxxviii. 17. and xxiv. 17. the caſe ſuppoſed is, that ſhould his ſoul draw nigh to the grave, and the ſorrows of death compaſs him about, and he ſhould be upon the brink and borders of eternity, he ſhould be fearleſs of evil, and ſing, O death, where is thy ſting! O grave, where is thy victory! though it ſeems beſt of all to interpret it, of the moſt ſevere and terrible affliction, or dark diſpenſation of Providence, it could be thought he ſhould ever come under, Pſal. xliv. 19. and cvii. 10, 14. Jer. xiii. 16. The Targum interprets it of captivity, and Jarchi and Kimchi, of the wilderneſs of Ziph, in which David was when purſued by Saul; and the latter alſo, together with Ben Melech, of the grave, and of a place of danger and of diſtreſs, which is like unto the grave, that is, a place of darkneſs; and Aben Ezra, of ſome grievous calamity, which God had decreed to bring into the world. Suidas [w] interprets this phraſe, of danger leading to death; afflictions attend the people of God in this life; there is a continued ſeries of them, ſo that they may be ſaid to walk in them; theſe are the way in which they walk to heaven, and through which they enter the kingdom; for though they continue long, and one affliction comes after another, yet there will be an end at laſt; they will walk and wade through them, and come out of great tribulations; and in the midſt of ſuch dark diſpenſations, comparable to a dark and gloomy valley, covered with the ſhadow of death, the pſalmiſt intimates what would be the inward diſpoſition of his mind, and what his conduct and behaviour: I will fear no evil; neither the evil one Satan, who is the wolf that comes to the flock to kill and to deſtroy, and the roaring lion that ſeeks whom he may devour, ſince ſince the Lord was his ſhepherd, and on his ſide; nor evil men, who kill the body and can do no more, Pſal. xxvii. 1, 2, 3. nor any evil thing, the worſt calamity that could befal him, ſince every thing of this kind is determined by God, and comes not without his knowledge and will, and works for good, and cannot ſeparate from the love of Chriſt; ſee Pſal. xlvi. 1—4. For thou art with me; ſheep are timorous creatures, and ſo are Chriſt's people; but when he the ſhepherd is with them, to ſympathize with them under all their afflictions, to revive and comfort them with the cordials of his love and promiſes of his grace, to bear them up and ſupport them with his mighty arm of power, to teach and inſtruct them by every providence, and ſanctify all unto them; their fears are driven away, and they paſs through the dark valley, the deep waters, and fiery trials, with courage and chearfulneſs; ſee Iſa. xli. 10. and xliii. 1, 2. Thy rod and thy ſtaff, they comfort me; not the rod of afflictions and chaſtiſements, which is the ſenſe of ſome Jewiſh [x] as well as chriſtian interpreters; though theſe are in love, and the ſaints have often much conſolation under them; but theſe are deſigned by the valley of the ſhadow of death, and cannot have a place here; but rather the rod of the word, called the rod of Chriſt's ſtrength, and the ſtaff of the promiſes and the proviſions of God's houſe, the whole ſtaff and ſtay of bread and water, which are ſure unto the ſaints, and refreſh and comfort them. The Targum interprets the rod and ſtaff, of the word and law of God; and thoſe interpreters who explain the rod of afflictions, yet by the ſtaff underſtand the law; and Jarchi expounds it, of the mercy of God in the remiſſion of ſin, in which the pſalmiſt truſted: the alluſion is to the ſhepherd's crook or ſtaff, as in other places; ſee Micah vii 14 Zech. xi. 7. which was made uſe of for the telling and numbering of the ſheep, Lev. xxvii. 32. Jer. xiii. 33. Ezek. xx. 37. and it is no ſmall comfort to the ſheep of Chriſt, that they have paſſed under his rod, who has told them, and that they are all numbered by him; not only their perſons, but the very hairs of their head; and that they are under his care and protection: the ſhepherd with his rod, ſtaff, or crook, directs the ſheep where to go, puſhes forward thoſe that are behind, and fetches back thoſe that go aſtray; as well as drives away dogs, wolves, bears, &c. that would make a prey of the flock; and of ſuch uſe is the word of God, attended with the power of Chriſt and his Spirit; it points out the path of faith, truth, and holineſs, the ſaints ſhould walk in; it urges and ſtirs up thoſe that are negligent to the diſcharge of their duty, and is the means of reclaiming backſliders, and of preſerving the flock from the ravenous wolves of falſe teachers: in a word, the preſence, power, and protection of Chriſt, in and by his goſpel and ordinances, are what are here intended, and which are the comfort and ſafety of his people, in the worſt of times and caſes.

[s] לא אחסר non deficiam, Pagninus, Montanus. in folds of budding graſs, Ainſworth. [u] מי מנוחת aquas requietum, Pagninus, Montanus; quietum, Vatablus, Michaelis; vel quietis, Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth; αμπαυμαλος, Apollinar. [t] דשא teneræ herbæ, Piſcator, Amama, Gejerus, Michaelis; [w] In voce σκια.

℣. 5. Thou prepareſt a table before me, &c.] In a providential way, granting a ſufficiency, and even an affluence of temporal good things; the providence of God, lays and ſpreads a table for his people in the wilderneſs, and ſets them down at it, and bids them welcome to it; ſee Pſal. lxxviii. 19. and in a way of grace, the Lord making large proviſions in his houſe for them, called the goodneſs and fatneſs of his houſe, and a feaſt of fat things; and under the goſpel-diſpenſation, the table of the Lord, on which are ſet his fleſh and blood for faith to feed upon; ſee Prov. ix. 2. and alſo in heaven, the joys of which are compared to a feaſt, and the enjoyment of them to ſitting at a table, and which are prepared by the Lord for his people, from the foundation of the world; and of which they have ſome foreſight and foretaſte in this world; ſee Luke xxii. 30. and all this In the preſence of my enemies; they ſeeing and envying the outward proſperity of the ſaints, whenever they enjoy it, and their liberty of worſhipping God, hearing his word, and attending on his ordinances, none making them afraid; as they will ſee, and envy, and be diſtreſſed at a more glorious ſtate of the church yet to come, Rev. xi. 12. and even as it ſhould ſeem from the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, the glory and happineſs of the ſaints in the other world will be ſeen, or by ſome way or other known by wicked men; which will be an affliction to them, and an aggravation of their miſery; tho' here it ſeems chiefly to regard the preſent life. Some have thought there is an alluſion to princes, who, having conquered others, eat and feaſt at a well-ſpread table in the preſence of the conquered, and they being under it; ſee Judges i. 7. Thou anointeſt my head with oil; giving him an abundance of good things, not only for neceſſity, but for pleaſure and delight; eſpecially pouring out largely upon him the oil of gladneſs, the Spirit of God and his graces, the anointing which teaches all things, and filling him with ſpiritual joy and comfort; for this refers not to the anointing of David with material oil for the kingdom, by Samuel, whilſt Saul was living, or by the men of Judah, and afterwards by all the tribes of Iſrael, when Saul was dead. The alluſion is to the cuſtom of the eaſtern countries at feaſts, to anoint the heads of the gueſts with oil; ſee Eccl. ix. 7, 8. Matt. vi. 17. It was uſual to anoint the head, as well as other parts of the body, on certain occaſions; hence that of Propertius [y]: and in the times before Homer [z], it was uſual both to waſh and anoint before meals, and not the head only, but the feet alſo; which, though Pliny [a] repreſents as luxurious, was in uſe in Chriſt's time, Luke vii. 38, 46. and it is ſpoken of as an ancient cuſtom by Ariſtophanes [b] and his Scholiaſt, for daughters to anoint the feet of their parents after they had waſhed them; which may ſerve to illuſtrate the paſſage in the goſpel; ſee Eccl. ix. 8. My cup runneth over; denoting an affluence of temporal good things, and eſpecially of ſpiritual ones, which was David's caſe. Such who are bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings in Chriſt, to whom the grace of the Lord has been exceeding abundant, and the Lord himſelf is the portion of their cup, their cup may be ſaid to run over indeed.

℣. 6. Surely goodneſs and mercy ſhall follow me, &c.] Either the free grace, love, favour, and mercy of God in Chriſt, which endures continually, and is always the ſame from everlaſting to everlaſting; or the effects of it; and theſe either temporal good things, which flow from the goodneſs and mercy of God, and not the merits of men; and which are in great mercy and loving-kindneſs beſtowed on his people, and which follow them: they do not anxiouſly ſeek after them; but ſeeking the kingdom

[x] Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 9 2. Jarchi & Kimchi in loc.
[y] Terque lavet noſtras ſpica ciliſſa comas, l. 4. eleg. 6. v. 74.
[z] Iliad. 10. v. 577, 578. Odyſſ. l. 3. v. 466. & l. 8. v. 454. & l. 10. v. 450.
[a] Nat. Hiſt. l. 13. c. 3.
[b] Veſpes, p. 473, 516, 517.

kingdom of God and his righteouſneſs, theſe are added to them, they truſting in the Lord, and he caring for them: or ſpiritual good things, which ariſe from the mere grace and mercy of God; ſuch as the bleſſings of the covenant, the ſure mercies of David, the diſcoveries and inſtances of the love of God, and the proviſions of his houſe, which follow them, being undeſerving of them; and even when they have backſlidden from the Lord, and in times of diſtreſs, when his grace is ſufficient for them; and of all this the pſalmiſt had a comfortable aſſurance, depending upon the promiſe of God, arguing from the bleſſings he had already beſtowed, and from the conſtant care he takes of his people, having in view his unchangeableneſs and faithfulneſs, the firmneſs of his covenant, and the irreverſibleneſs of the bleſſings of it: the words may be rendered only goodneſs and mercy, &c. [c] nothing but mere mercy and kindneſs; for though afflictions do attend the children of God, yet theſe are in mercy and love; there is no fury in the Lord againſt them; there is nothing comes in wrath to them, throughout the whole courſe of their lives; wherefore it is added, All the days of my life; the mercies of God are new every morning, they continue all the day long; temporal goodneſs abides as long as life laſts, and ends with it; and ſpiritual bleſſings are for ever, they are the gifts of God which are without repentance. And I will dwell in the houſe of the Lord for ever; which may denote his conſtant attendance on the public worſhip of God, of which he had been deprived in time paſt, being driven out from it, but now he enjoyed it, and believed he ever ſhould; or it may deſign his being a member of the church of God, and a pillar in the houſe and temple of the Lord, that ſhould never go out; ſee Rev. iii. 12. or it may regard the aſſurance he had of dwelling in the houſe not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens, Chriſt's Father's houſe, in which are many manſions, ſure dwellings, and quiet reſting-places for his people, and that to all eternity. The Targum interprets it, of the houſe of the ſanctuary; and Kimchi expounds the whole verſe in a petitionary way, may goodneſs and mercy, &c.

PSALM XXIV.

A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm is thought by ſome of the Jewiſh writers [d], to have been wrote when the ark was brought from the houſe of Obed Edom, to the city of David, and put into the place prepared for it by him, 2 Sam. vi. 17. to which reference is ſuppoſed to be had in ℣. 7—10. or after that David had built an altar in the threſhing-floor of Araunah the Jebuſite, and had knowledge of the hill Moriah, as the place where the ſanctuary was to be built; called the Hill of the Lord, and his holy place, ℣. 3. however, it was certainly written by David, under the inſpiration of the Spirit of God; and is a prophecy of Chriſt, and of the goſpel-church, and deſcribes the members of it.

℣. 1. The earth is the Lord's and the fulneſs thereof, &c.] The whole univerſe, all the terraqueous globe, both land and water, and the circumambient air, and all that is therein; the fiſhes of the ſea, the fowls of the air, the beaſts of the field, all plants and vegetables that ſpring out of the earth, and metals and minerals in the bowels of it; all which are the riches of the Lord the earth is full of, Pſal. civ. 24. ſee Pſal. l. 10, 11, 12. The world, and they that dwell therein; the habitable world, and the dwellers on it, rational and irrational. Theſe words may be interpreted of Chriſt, who is Lord of all; he made the world, and has a right and claim to all things in it; for the ſame perſon is here ſpoken of as in the preceding pſalm, under the character of a ſhepherd; and this ſhews him to be very fit and proper for ſuch an office, ſeeing he cannot fail of feeding and protecting his ſheep; nor can they want any good thing, ſince the fulneſs both of nature and of grace is with him; and hence it is, that all things are theirs, whether the world, or things preſent, or things to come; and though they ſeem to have nothing, yet poſſeſs all things, they poſſeſſing him whoſe all things are. The apoſtle makes uſe of this paſſage of ſcripture, to prove, explain, and direct in the uſe of chriſtian liberty, with reſpect to the free uſe of creatures, they all being the Lord's; and therefore good, and to be received with thankſgiving: and yet, inaſmuch as there is a variety of them, ſuch ſhould be abſtained from, when to uſe them ſerves to embolden evil men in their wicked ways, or offend and grieve weak Chriſtians, 1 Cor. x. 25, 26, 28.

℣. 2. For he hath founded it upon the ſeas, &c.] Or with them, as ſome interpret [e] the particle עַל; he hath founded the earth and ſeas together, and both upon nothing; and yet are ſtable and firm; or by the ſeas [f], near unto them, at the ſide of them; which, though higher than the earth, are wonderfully bounded by the power of God, ſo as not to return and cover the earth; ſee Job xxxviii. 8—11. Pſal. civ. 5—9. ſo the particle is uſed in Pſal. i. 3. and xxiii. 2. Some have thought that the firſt earth, which Peter ſays was ſtanding in the water, and out of the water, 2 Pet. iii. 5. was made in the form of an egg, and that the waters were under the earth, and the earth was as a cruſt or ſhell over them, until the deluge came; and this cruſt then broke in, and formed the ſea; and ſo it was literally true, that the earth was founded upon, or over the waters. And eſtabliſhed it upon the floods; the floods of the ſeas, or rivers of water running to and fro in it: this ſhews the ground and foundation of Chriſt's right and claim to the earth, and all that is in it; which is not by reaſon of his Father's gift to him as Mediator, but by virtue of his concern in creation, the world, and all things in it, being made and eſtabliſhed by him; in him do all things conſiſt, Col. i. 16, 17.

℣. 3. Who ſhall aſcend into the hill of the Lord? &c.] Though the Lord has a claim in general to the whole world, and all its fulneſs; yet there is a particular part of it, or ſpot in it, which is his ſpecial and peculiar property, and that is his church and people; for though ſome reference may be had, in this paſſage, to mount Moriah, and the hill of Zion,

[c] אך nil niſi, Junius & Tremellius; certe vel tantum, Cocceius. [d] Aben Ezra & Kimchi. [e] R. Moſes in Aben Ezra in loc. [f] על ימים juxta maria, Vatablus, Gejerus, Amama; ſo Kimchi & Ben Melech.

Zion, on which the temple was afterwards built, and is called the hill of the Lord, where he deſired to dwell, Pſal. lxviii. 15, 16. yet the church is myſtically intended, and is ſo called on account of its viſibility, through a profeſſion of faith in Chriſt, and for its immoveableneſs, being built on him. And who ſhall ſtand in his holy place? the ſame with the hill of the Lord; the temple being to be built upon it, where the Lord took up his reſidence, and was worſhipped, and holineſs becomes the houſe of God for evermore: the import of theſe queſtions is, who is a proper perſon to be an inhabitant of Zion, or a member of a goſpel-church? and the anſwer to them is in the following verſe, in which is a deſcription much like that which is given of of one hundred forty and four thouſand ſeen with the Lamb on mount Zion, Rev. xiv. 1, 4, 5. compare with this Pſal. xv.

℣. 4. He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart, &c.] Though clean hands are mentioned firſt, as being more obvious to view, and better known, and more ſubject to the cognizance and obſervation of others; yet a pure heart is firſt in being and in order; from whence cleanneſs of hands, when right and real, ſprings: no man has a pure heart naturally and of himſelf: the heart is deſperately wicked; the imagination of the thoughts of it is evil continually; the mind and conſcience are defiled with ſin; nor can any man make his heart clean, or ſay he is pure from ſin; but it is God that creates a clean heart, and renews a right ſpirit within men, and purifies the heart by faith, which is led to the blood of ſprinkling, which purges the conſcience, and cleanſeth it from all ſin; and from this purity of heart flows purity of life and converſation, ſignified by clean hands; the hand being the inſtrument of action; holy actions, or good works, performed from a principle of grace, are meant: the phraſe is expreſſive of a holy, harmleſs, and innocent converſation, waſhing the hands being uſed to denote innocence, Matth. xxvii. 24. Pſal. xxvi. 6. and lxxiii. 13. not a converſation entirely free from ſin, nor by which a man is juſtified before God; for though he waſh his hands ever ſo clean, they will not be pure in his ſight, and will need waſhing in the blood of the Lamb; but it denotes a converſation upright in general, and declares a man righteous in the ſight of men, and diſtinguiſhes him from one of a diſſolute life, whoſe hands are full of blood, and defiled with ſin. Who hath not liſt up his ſoul unto vanity; or ſet his heart upon [g], and deſired vain things, as the phraſe is ſometimes uſed, Deut. xxiv. 15. Jer. xxii. 27. that is, the vain things of this world; as the riches, honours, pleaſures and profits of it; or has not ſerved other gods, the idols of the Gentiles, which are lying vanities, but has lift up his ſoul to God, and ſerved him only: or who hath not received his ſoul in vain [h]; from the hands of God, but loves him with all his ſoul, believes with the heart in Chriſt for righteouſneſs, being ſanctified by the Spirit of God; and ſo the deſire of his ſoul is to his name, and the remembrance of him. The keri, or marginal reading according to the points, is, who hath not liſt up my ſoul to vanity [i]; that is, has not taken the name of God in vain, or ſwore falſly by his name; his ſoul being put for his name or himſelf, and by which he is ſaid ſometimes to ſwear, Jer. li. 14. Amos vi, 8. and this ſenſe the Jewiſh interpreters [k] generally give into. The Targum ſeems to take in both the writing of the text and the marginal reading, as it often does, and renders the words, who hath not ſworn in vain, to the condemnation of his ſoul; though ſometimes to his own diſadvantage, yet not to the hurt of others; ſee Pſal. xv. 4. it follows, Nor ſworn deceitfully; by bearing falſe witneſs againſt any man; or by cheating him out of his ſubſtance through a falſe oath.

℣. 5. He ſhall receive the bleſſing from the Lord, &c.] Or who receives [l]; the future for the preſent; and ſo is a continuation of the deſcription of a perſon proper to enter and abide in the church of God, as the following verſe ſeems to require; even one who has received every ſpiritual bleſſing in Chriſt in general, ſpecial grace out of his fulneſs; particularly the bleſſing of pardon, as alſo adoption, and a right to eternal life; though it may be, that the following clauſe is explanative of this. And righteouſneſs from the God of his ſalvation; from Chriſt, who is God his Saviour, the author of ſalvation; and who has brought in an everlaſting righteouſneſs, which is in him, and is a gift of his grace, and is received from him by faith, and is a great bleſſing indeed; it ſecures from condemnation and death, and entitles to eternal life.

℣. 6. This is the generation of them that ſeek him, &c.] The perſons above deſcribed are ſuch, who in every age are the generation of the children of God, and are accounted by him for a generation; they are ſuch that ſeek him, in the firſt place, with their whole hearts, and in Chriſt, where they find him. That ſeek thy face, O Jacob. Selah. by the face of God is meant the favour of God, the diſcoveries of his love, the light of his countenance, than which nothing is more deſirable to gracious ſouls, or more ſought after by them; and by Jacob, is meant the God of Jacob; and ſo Apollinarius has it in his metaphraſe; ſee Pſal. x. 1. unleſs Chriſt ſhould be intended, one of whoſe names is Iſrael, Iſa. xlix. 3. or the words may be ſupplied, as they are by ſome Jewiſh writers [m], this is Jacob; or the perſons before deſcribed are the ſeed of Jacob, and who are called by his name: and it may be obſerved, that the church of God often bears the ſame name, Iſa. xliii. 1. and xliv. 1, 5. and then the ſenſe is, the perſons whoſe characters are given above are fit to aſcend, and ſtand in the holy hill of God, are Iſraelites indeed, in whom there is no guile.

℣. 7. Liſt up your heads, O ye gates, &c.] By which the gates of hell are not meant; nor are the words to be underſtood of the deſcent of Chriſt thither, to fetch the ſouls of Old Teſtament-ſaints from thence; who the papiſts dream were detained in an apartment there, as in a priſon, called by them limbus patrum; ſeeing theſe immediately, upon their ſeparation from the body, were in a ſtate of happineſs and glory, as the parable of the rich man and Lazarus ſhews; and ſince Chriſt, at his death, went, in his human ſoul, immediately into heaven, or paradiſe, where the penitent thief was that day with him: nor do the words deſign the gates of heaven, and Chriſt's aſcenſion thither, ſhut by the ſins of men, and opened by the blood of Chriſt, by which he entered himſelf, and has made way for all his people; though this ſenſe is much preferable to the former. The Jewiſh interpreters underſtand the phraſe of the gates of the temple, which David prophetically ſpeaks of as to be opened, when it ſhould be built and dedicated by by Solomon, and when the ark, the ſymbol of Jehovah's preſence, was brought into it, and the glory of the Lord filled the houſe; ſo the Targum interprets this firſt clauſe of the gates of the houſe of the ſanctuary; though the next, of the gates of the garden of Eden; but the words are better interpreted in a myſtical and ſpiritual ſenſe, of the church of God, the temple of the living God, which is ſaid to have gates, Iſa. lx. 11. and is itſelf called a door, Cant. viii. 9. where the open door of the goſpel is ſet, or an opportunity of preaching the goſpel given, and a door of utterance to the miniſters of the word, and the doors of mens hearts are opened to attend to it; and indeed, the hearts of particular believers, individual members of the church, may be intended, or at leaſt included in the ſenſe of the paſſage; ſee Rev. iii. 20. and it may be obſerved, that the new Jeruſalem is ſaid to have gates of pearl, through which Chriſt, when he makes his glorious appearance, will enter in his own glory, and in his Father's, and in the glory of the holy angels. And be ye lift up, ye everlaſting doors; or the doors of the world[n]; which ſome underſtand of the kingdoms and nations of the world, and of the kings and princes thereof, as called upon to open and make way for, and receive the goſpel of Chriſt into them, and to ſupport and retain it; but it is beſt to interpret it of the church and its members, whoſe continuance, perpetuity, and duration, are here intimated, by being called everlaſting doors; which may be ſaid to be lift up, as it may reſpect churches, when thoſe things are removed, which hinder communion with Chriſt; as their ſins, which ſeparate between them and their God, and the wall of unbelief, behind which Chriſt ſtands; and ſleepineſs, drowſineſs, coldneſs, lukewarmneſs, and indifference; ſee Iſa. lix. 2. Cant. ii. 9. and v. 2. and when public worſhip is cloſely and ſtrictly attended on, as the miniſtration of the word and ordinances, prayer to God, which is the lifting up the heart with the hands to God, and ſinging his praiſe: and as it may reſpect particular believers; theſe doors and gates may be ſaid to be lifted up, when their hearts are enlarged with the love of God; the deſires and affections of their ſouls are drawn out towards the Lord, and the graces of the Spirit are in a lively exerciſe on him; and when they lift up their heads with joy in a view of Chriſt coming to them. This muſt not be underſtood as if they could do all this of themſelves, any more than gates and doors can be thought to open and lift up themſelves. And the King of glory ſhall come in; the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, called the Lord of glory, 1 Cor. ii. 8. James ii. 1. who is glorious in himſelf, in the perfections of his divine nature, as the Son of God; being the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; and in his office as Mediator, being full of grace and truth, and having a glory given him before the world was; and which became manifeſt upon his reſurrection, aſcenſion to heaven, and ſeſſion at God's right hand; and particularly he is glorious as a King, being made higher than the kings of the earth, and crowned with glory and honour; and ſo the Targum renders it, מלך יקירא; the glorious King; and he is moreover the author and giver, the ſum and ſubſtance of the glory and happineſs of the ſaints: and now, as the inhabitants of Zion, and members of the church, are deſcribed in the preceding verſes, an account is given of the King of Zion in this and the following; who may be ſaid to come into his churches, when he grants his gracious preſence, ſhews himſelf through the lattices, and in the galleries of ordinances, in his beauty and glory; takes his walks there, and his goings are ſeen, even in the ſanctuary; and where he dwells as King in his palace, and as a Son in his own houſe; and he may be ſaid to come into the hearts of particular believers, when he manifeſts himſelf, his love and grace unto them, and grants them ſuch communion, as is expreſſed by ſupping with them, and by dwelling in their hearts by faith.

[g] לא נשא נפשו non inhiat, aut intentus eſt, Vatablus, Amama; ſo Gejerus, Michaelis. [h] So Pagninus. [i] Animam meam, Montanus, Vatablus, Hillerus. [k] Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Kimchi & Ben Melech in loc, [l] ישא qui accipit, Cocceius. [m] Aben Ezra, Kimchi & Ben Melech in loc.

℣. 8. Who is this King of glory? &c.] Which queſtion is put by the church, or particular believers; not through ignorance, as the daughters of Jeruſalem, Cant. v. 9. or the Phariſees, when Chriſt made his public entrance into Jeruſalem, Matt. xxi. 10. much leſs in pride and haughtineſs, in ſcorn and deriſion, as Pharaoh, Exod. v. 1. and the Capernaites, John vi. 42. but as wondring at the glories and excellencies of his perſon, and as deſirous of knowing more of him. The anſwer to the queſtion is, The Lord ſtrong and mighty; he whoſe name alone is Jehovah; the moſt high in all the earth; the everlaſting I AM; Jehovah our righteouſneſs; the mighty God, even the Almighty; the Son of man, whom God has made ſtrong for himſelf: his ſtrength and might have been ſeen in the creation of all things out of nothing, in upholding all things by his power, in the redemption of his people, in the reſurrection of himſelf, in diſpoſſeſſing the ſtrong man armed, out of the hearts of his choſen ones, in the government of his church, and the care of all his ſaints, and in keeping them from a final and total falling away. From the firſt of theſe words, which is only here uſed, Mars, becauſe of his ſtrength, has the name of Azizus; which name of his Julian[o] makes mention of, and very probably Heſus, alſo a deity of the ancient Gauls, ſpoken of by the poet[p], and by Lactantius[q]; but to none does it belong as to our Jehovah. The Lord mighty in battle; as he was when he was upon the croſs; when he made an end of ſin, ſpoiled principalities and powers; aboliſhed death, and deſtroyed him that had the power of it; and as he will be at the laſt day, when the kings of the earth ſhall make war with him, and he ſhall overcome them; when the beaſt and falſe prophet ſhall be taken, and caſt alive into the lake of fire; and the remnant ſhall be ſlain with the ſword of his mouth; ſee Rev. xvii. 14. and xix. 11—21. and who is now the Captain of ſalvation to his people, their leader and commander; who furniſhes them with weapons of warfare, which are mighty through God; who teaches their hands to war, and their fingers to fight the good fight of faith; and makes them more than conquerors through himſelf that has loved them.

℣. 9. Lift up your heads, O ye gates, &c.] This is repeated on account of the backwardneſs and negligence of churches, and particular believers, to open and let Chriſt in; as may be ſeen in the caſe of the church in Cant. v. 2, 3. as well as the more to ſet forth the greatneſs and glory of Chriſt, about to make his entrance, and to command a proper awe and reverence of him: ſome think reſpect is had to the twofold coming of Chriſt; firſt into the ſecond temple, and next at the laſt judgment; though rather, the certainty of his coming, in a ſpiritual manner, to his church and people, is here deſigned.

℣. 10.

[n] פתחי עולם oſtia mundi, Gejerus, Schmidt.

[o] Orat. 4. in ſolem, p 281.

[p] Teutates horrenſque feris altaribus Heſus. Lucan.

[q] De Falſ. Relig. l. 1. c. 31.

℣. 10. Who is this King of glory? &c.] This is repeated, becauſe of the preceding words, and in order to have a further account of this glorious perſon, as follows, The Lord of hoſts, he is the King of glory. Selah. he who is the Lord of Sabaoth, the Lord of the armies, both of the heavens and the earth; at whoſe diſpoſe and controll all things are in both worlds, above and below: this is the great and glorious perſon that condeſcends to dwell in his churches, and in the hearts of his people; and this honour have all his ſaints.

PSALM XXV.

A pſalm of David.

THIS is the firſt of the pſalms which is written in an alphabetical order, or in which the firſt word of every verſe begins with the letters of the Hebrew alphabet in order, though it is not ſtrictly and regularly obſerved; the reaſon of this manner of writing is not very obvious; the [r] Jews confeſs their ignorance of it; it may be to engage the attention to what is ſaid, or to aſſiſt the memory in laying it up, and retaining it there. The occaſion of the pſalm ſeems to be the troubles David was in on account of an unnatural rebellion raiſed againſt him by ſome of his ſubjects, at the head of which was his own ſon Abſalom; he ſpeaks of himſelf as in a net, and in great affliction, diſtreſs and trouble, by reaſon of his enemies, ℣. 15, 16, 17, 18. and as being brought to a ſenſe of his former ſins, for which he deſires pardon, ℣. 7, 11.

℣. 1. Unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my ſoul.] Either in prayer, as the Chaldee paraphraſe adds [s]; and denotes ſincere, affectionate, hearty prayer to God, a drawing nigh to him with a true heart; for unleſs the heart is lifted up, the lifting up of the eyes or hands in prayer is of no avail; ſee Lam. iii. 41. or by way of offering to the Lord, as ſome Jewiſh writers [t] interpret it; David not only preſented his body in public worſhip, but his ſoul alſo as a living ſacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which was his reaſonable ſervice; or elſe as a depoſitum, which he committed into the hands of God, to be under his care and protection; and then the ſenſe is the ſame with Pſal. xxxi. 5. [u] the phraſe is ſometimes uſed to expreſs earneſt and vehement deſire after any thing; ſee the note on Pſal. xxiv. 4. and may here intend the very great deſire of the pſalmiſt after communion with God; which is elſewhere by him expreſſed by panting after him, and by thirſting for him in a dry and thirſty land, Pſal. xlii. 1. and lxiii. 1. the deſires of his ſoul were not to vain things, the vanities and idols of the Gentiles, but to God only, and to the remembrance of his name.

℣. 2. O my God, I truſt in thee, &c.] He claims his intereſt in God, and expreſſes his faith and confidence in him, in the midſt of all his troubles; ſee the note on Pſal. vii. 1. Let me not be aſhamed; meaning of his truſt in God, by being diſappointed of the help, deliverance, and ſalvation from him, which he truſted in him for; and the believer, as he has no reaſon to be aſhamed of God, the object of his truſt; ſo neither of the act of his hope, or truſt in him; nor ſhall he; for hope makes not aſhamed; ſee Pſal. cxix. 116. Rom. v. 5. Let not mine enemies triumph over me; either his temporal enemies, his ſubjects that were riſen up againſt him; or his ſpiritual enemies, Satan, and the men of the world, who rejoice and triumph when the ſaints are forſaken by God; and they are ready to ſay, as David's enemies did of him, there is no help, or ſalvation for him in God, Pſal. iii. 2. and when they fall into their hands, or fall by them.

℣. 3. Yea, let none that wait on thee be aſhamed, &c.] David not only prays for himſelf, but for other ſaints, as it becomes the people of God to do; for them they waited on the Lord in public worſhip, attended his houſe and ordinances, and waited on him for the diſcoveries of his love, the enjoyment of his gracious preſence, and were looking for his ſalvation, for the Meſſiah; for thoſe the pſalmiſt prays, that they might not be aſhamed of their expectation and hope, by the delay of thoſe things, or the denial of them. Let them be aſhamed which tranſgreſs without cauſe; or act treacherouſly without cauſe [w]; as David's ſubjects did, who were riſen up in rebellion againſt him, and acted the perfidious part, contrary to their allegiance, and without any juſt reaſon, they not being ruled with rigour, and oppreſſed; but were guided and governed by him according to the laws of God, in the integrity of his heart, and by the ſkilfulneſs of his hands; he being a king that reigned in righteouſneſs, and a prince that decreed judgment: and ſuch are thoſe who are now riſen up againſt our rightful ſovereign king George [x], a parcel of perfidious, treacherous wretches; ſome of them who were in the laſt rebellion, and obtained his father's pardon; others that have partook yearly of his royal bounty, for the inſtruction of their children; and all have enjoyed the bleſſings of his mild and gentle government; and therefore are without cauſe his enemies: and for ſuch we ſhould pray, as David did for his enemies, that they might be aſhamed; that they may fail in their attempts and deſigns, and be brought to deſerved puniſhment; ſee Pſal. vii. 4. or Let tranſgreſſors be aſhamed, and be empty [y]; in a ſtate of emptineſs and want; loſe their wealth, honour, and credit.

℣. 4. Shew me thy ways, O Lord, &c.] Either thoſe which the Lord himſelf took and walked in; as thoſe of creation and providence, in which he has diſplayed his power, wiſdom, and goodneſs; and which are deſirable to be known by his people, and require divine inſtruction and direction; and particularly his ways of grace, mercy and truth, and the methods he has taken for the ſalvation of his people, both in eternity and in time; or thoſe ways which he orders and directs his people to walk in; namely, the paths of duty, the ways of his worſhip and ordinances; a greater knowledge of which good men deſire to have, as well as more grace to enable them to walk more cloſely and conſtantly in them. Teach me thy paths; a petition the ſame with the other, in different words.

℣. 5.

[r] Kimchi in loc. [s] So Kimchi & Ben Melech. [t] R. Moſeh in Aben Ezra in loc. [u] Midraſh Tillim. [w] הבוגדים qui perfide agunt, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Michaelis; ſo Amama & Ainſworth. [x] This was written December 2, 1745. [y] ריקם in ſtatu vacuitatis ac egeſtatis, Guſſetius, p. 790.

℣. 5. Lead me in thy truth and teach me, &c.] Meaning the word of God, the ſcriptures of truth, and the goſpel, which is the word of truth, and truth itſelf, John xvii. 17. and the ſenſe is, either that God would lead him by his Spirit more and more into all truth, as contained in his word; or that he would lead him by it and according to it, that he might form his principles and his conduct more agreeable to it, which is the ſtandard and rule of faith and practice: which leading is by teaching; and reaſons urged for granting all the above petitions follow, For thou art the God of my ſalvation; who, in infinite wiſdom, contrived the ſcheme and method of it in his Son, and by him effected it, and by his Spirit had made application of it to him: and ſince the Lord had done ſuch great things for him, he hoped the requeſts he had made would be granted: he adds, On thee do I wait all the day; or continually, in publick and in private, attending to all the duties of religion, yet not truſting in them, but in the Lord; and therefore he intreated, he might not be aſhamed of his hope and expectation, for deliverance and ſalvation.

℣. 6. Remember, O Lord, thy tender mercies and thy loving-kindneſſes, &c.] Not the providential mercy and kindneſs of God, in the care of him in his mother's womb, at the time of his birth, in his nurture, and education, and in the preſervation of him to the preſent time; but the ſpecial mercy, grace, and love of God in Chriſt: the ſenſe of the petition is the ſame with that of Pſal. cvi. 4. which are expreſſed in the plural number, becauſe of the largeneſs and abundance of it, and becauſe of the various acts and inſtances of it; the Lord is rich and plenteous in mercy, abundant in goodneſs; his love is exceeding great, and numerous are the ways and methods in which it is declared, both in eternity and in time; and though he can never forget his love, nor the people whom he loves, for they are engraven on his hand, and ſet as a ſeal on his heart; yet he ſometimes ſeems, by the conduct of his providence, as if he did not remember it, and had no tender affection for them; and their unbelief is ready to ſay, the Lord has forgotten to be gracious; and the deſign of ſuch a petition as this, is to intreat a freſh diſcovery and application of the grace, mercy, and loving kindneſs of God, and which he allows his people to put him in remembrance of. For they have been ever of old; meaning not only from the time of his birth, and in after-appearances of God for him, nor the favours ſhewn to the people of Iſrael in former times, at the Red ſea, and in the wilderneſs and elſewhere, and to the patriarchs from the beginning of the world; but the love of God from everlaſting, which appears in the choice of his people in Chriſt, before the foundation of the world, in the everlaſting covenant of grace made with him, and in the ſetting of him up as the mediator of it, and in putting his people into his hands, with all grace and ſpiritual bleſſings for them before the world began; and which love as it is from everlaſting it is to everlaſting, and remains invariably the ſame.

℣. 7. Remember not the ſins of my youth, &c.] Original ſin, in which he was born, and the breakings forth of corrupt nature in infancy, he brought into the world with him, together with all the youthful luſts and vanities, to which that age is addicted; and ſometimes the ſins of youth, are in ſome perſons remembered by God, and puniſhed in old age; and if not, they are brought to remembrance through the diſpenſations of Providence; and the people of God are chaſtiſed for them then, and are ready to fear it is in a way of wrath; ſee Job xiii. 26. which the pſalmiſt here deprecates; for this is not ſaid in order to extenuate his ſins, they being but youthful follies, imprudencies, and inadvertencies, ſins committed through ignorance, when he had not the knowledge of things he now had; nor as if he had lived ſo holy a life, that there were no ſins of his to be taken notice of, but what he had committed in his younger days; but rather, this is to be conſidered as a confeſſion of his having ſinned from his youth upwards unto that time, as in Jer. iii. 25. and therefore intreats that God would not remember his ſins, ſo as to correct him for them in wrath and hot diſpleaſure; neither the ſins he had formerly been guilty of, nor thoſe of a later date; which he next mentions. Nor my tranſgreſſions; his more notorious and glaring ones; ſuch as murder and adultery, in the caſe of Uriah and Bathſheba, and which now ſtared him in the face; and on account of theſe, and as a chaſtening for them, this unnatural rebellion of his ſon's, which was now raiſed againſt him, was ſuffered to befal him, as had been foretold to him, 2 Sam. xii. 11. According to thy mercy remember thou me, for thy goodneſs-ſake, O Lord; he pleads no merit, nor goodneſs of his own, but calls himſelf upon the mercy, grace, and goodneſs of God; in which he was certainly right; and on that account, prayed and hoped for deliverance from his preſent troubles, and for diſcoveries of the pardon of his ſins unto him, which is what he means by remembring him.

℣. 8. Good and upright is the Lord, &c.] He is eſſentially, originally, and independently good of himſelf in his own nature, and he is providentially good to all his creatures; and he is in a way of ſpecial grace and mercy good to his own people: and he is upright, juſt in himſelf, righteous in all his ways and works, and faithful in all his promiſes; and the conſideration of theſe excellent perfections of his, encouraged the pſalmiſt to entertain an holy confidence, that his petitions, reſpecting inſtruction and guidance in the ways of the Lord, ℣. 4, 5, would be heard and anſwered, notwithſtanding his ſins and tranſgreſſions. Therefore will he teach ſinners in the way; ſuch who are in ſinful ways, he will teach them by his word and Spirit the evil of their ways, and bring them out of them, and to repentance for them; and he will teach them his own ways, both the ways and methods of his grace, in ſaving ſinners by Chriſt, and the paths of faith and duty, in which he would have them walk; ſee Pſal. li. 13.

℣. 9. The meek will he guide in judgment, &c.] Or the miſerable[z] and afflicted; ſuch as ſee themſelves to be wretched and miſerable, loſt and undone; and cry out, What ſhall we to do to be ſaved? and who are meek and lowly, are humbled under a ſenſe of their ſins, are poor in ſpirit, and of broken and contrite hearts; theſe the Lord will guide by his Spirit into the truth, as it is in Jeſus; even the great truth of ſalvation by him; and in the way of his judgments, ſtatutes, and ordinances; and will give them a true judgment, and a right diſcerning of things that differ; and he will lead them on in judgment, or gently; ſee Jer. x. 24. into every truth of the goſpel by degrees, and as they are able to bear them. And the meek will he teach his way; of juſtifying ſinners by the righteouſneſs ouſneſs of his Son; for ſuch who are humble and confeſs their ſins and unworthineſs, and throw themſelves on the mercy of God in Chriſt, are declaratively juſtified by the Lord, when the proud boaſting Phariſee is an abomination to him.

[z] עניים miſeros, Gejerus, Michaelis.

℣. 10. All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth, &c.] By which are meant, not the paths in which the Lord would have his people walk; though theſe are good and gracious, right and true; his commandments are not grievous, his yoke is eaſy, and burden light; his ways are ways of pleaſantneſs, and his paths paths of peace: but rather, the paths in which the Lord himſelf walks; not his paths of providence, though theſe are mercy and truth to his own people; every ſtep he takes is in a way of goodneſs and kindneſs to them, and in truth and faithfulneſs to his promiſes; but the ways and methods he has taken towards the ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation of his people; as in his counſels and purpoſes, in which there is a large diſplay of his grace and mercy; in the choice of them in Chriſt, as veſſels of mercy, and which is of grace, and not of works; in determining to ſend his Son to die for them, which ſprings from the tender mercy of our God; in reſolving to call them by his grace, and to adopt them into his family, and at laſt to glorify them; all which proceed from his merciful loving-kindneſs; and all theſe his counſels of old, are faithfulneſs and truth, ſince they can never be fruſtrated, but are always accompliſhed: as alſo in his covenant, which ſprings from grace, is built upon mercy, and contains the ſure mercies of David, and is ever fulfilled; the faithfulneſs of God is engaged to keep it, and its promiſes are yea and amen in Chriſt: and likewiſe the ſteps he has taken in Chriſt, the mediator of the covenant, who is full of grace and truth; mercy appears in the miſſion of him, and redemption by him; and truth in fulfilling the promiſe of him; and both mercy and truth meet together in him: and ſo they do in the various bleſſings of grace, which come by him; as particularly juſtification and pardon of ſin, in both which there is a diſplay of grace and mercy; and alſo of the truth of holineſs and juſtice: and the mercy and truth of God appear in theſe paths of his, unto ſuch as keep his covenant and his teſtimonies; by which are deſigned, not the covenant of works, and the precepts of the law, which are ſometimes called the teſtimonies of God, becauſe they teſtify what is his will that ſhould be done: but theſe are broke, and not kept perfectly by any; nor is it any favour or high privilege, to be ſhewn this covenant and the duties of it, as is ſuggeſted of the covenant here meant, as appears from ℣. 14. wherefore the covenant of grace muſt be intended, which is made with Chriſt, and his people in him; and the teſtimonies are the promiſes of it, which teſtify of the grace, mercy, truth, and faithfulneſs of God; and the keeping of theſe is done by faith: faith lays hold on the covenant, its bleſſings and promiſes, and claims an intereſt in them, as David did, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. ſee Iſa. lvi. 4, 6. and it keeps or retains its hold; it will not let go its hold of the covenant and its teſtimonies, but aſſerts its intereſt, even when things are at the worſt with it; and it holds faſt the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end; and to ſuch all the ſteps the Lord takes, appear to be in mercy and truth.

℣. 11. For thy name-ſake, O Lord, pardon mine iniquity, &c.] Which to do, is one of the promiſes and bleſſings of the covenant. The pſalmiſt may have reference to his ſin with Bathſheba, as Kimchi obſerves; ſince it was foretold to him, that on account of that ſin, evil ſhould ariſe to him out of his own houſe, 2 Sam. xii. 11. meaning, that his ſon ſhould riſe up in rebellion againſt him; which was now the caſe, and which no doubt brought afreſh this ſin to his mind; and the guilt of it lay heavy upon his conſcience; and therefore he prays for an application of pardoning grace and mercy: or he may have reſpect to original ſin, the ſin of his nature, which ſo eaſily beſet him; the loathſome diſeaſe his loins were filled with; the law in his members, warring againſt the law of his mind; and which, a view of every actual ſin, led him to the conſideration and acknowledgement of, as did that now mentioned, Pſal. li. 4, 5. or, iniquity may be put for iniquities, and the ſenſe be, that he deſired a manifeſtation of the pardon of all his ſins; for when God forgives ſin, he forgives all iniquities: and David here prays for pardon in a way of mercy, and upon the foot of ſatisfaction; for he prays, that God would mercifully pardon [a], as the word ſignifies; or, according to his tender mercies, blot out his tranſgreſſions, and cleanſe him from his ſins; or that he would be propitious [b] to him; or forgive him in a propitiatory way, or through the propitiation of Chriſt, whom God had ſet forth in his purpoſes and promiſes to be the propitiation for the remiſſion of ſins; and therefore he intreats this favour for his name-ſake; not for his own merits and good works, but for the Lord's ſake, for his mercy-ſake, or for his Son's ſake; ſee Iſa. xliii. 25. compared with Eph. v. 32. The argument or reaſon he urges is, For it is great; being committed againſt the great God, againſt great light and knowledge, and attended with very aggravating circumſtances; or much [c], he being guilty of many ſins; his ſins were great, both as to quality and quantity: this ſeems to be rather a reaſon againſt, than a reaſon for the pardon of ſin; it denotes the ſenſe the pſalmiſt had of his iniquity, and his importunity for the pardon of it; juſt as a perſon, ſenſible of the violence and malignity of his diſeaſe, intreats the phyſician with the greater eagerneſs and importunity to do his utmoſt for him; ſee Pſal. xli. 4. or the words may be rendered, though it is great [d]: ſo Aben Ezra underſtands them; "though it is ſo very heinous and provoking, yet ſince forgiveneſs is with thee, and thou haſt promiſed it in covenant, and haſt proclaimed thy name, a God gracious and merciful, pardon it;" unleſs the words are to be connected, as they are by ſome Jewiſh [e] interpreters, with the phraſe thy name-ſake, for it is great; that is, thy name is great, and that it may appear to be ſo, as it is proclaimed, forgive mine iniquity.

℣. 12. What man is he that feareth the Lord? &c.] That is, how happy a man is he! and one that fears the Lord, is one that has the fear of God put into his heart, as a bleſſing of the covenant of grace before ſpoken of; who fears the Lord, not on account of the puniſhment of ſin, but under the influence of the pardon of it, and for his goodneſs-ſake; who loves the Lord, truſts in him, is careful not to offend him, hates ſin, and avoids it, and has a ſtrict regard to the worſhip of God in all its parts and branches, and performs it in fear; or who who ſerves the Lord with reverence and godly fear. The deſcription of this man's happineſs follows in this and the next verſe; Him ſhall he teach in the way that he ſhall chooſe; either which the man that fears God ſhall chooſe, which is the way of truth and duty, Pſal. cxix. 30, 173. or the way which God preſcribes to him, and is well-pleaſing in his ſight, who teaches to profit, and leads in the way his people ſhould go; and a great happineſs it is, for a man to have his ſteps ordered by the Lord, and his goings directed by him.

[a] סלחת mercifully pardon; ſo Ainſworth. [b] ἱλασῃ, Sept. propitiaberis, V. L. propitius eſto, Muſculus. [c] רב multum, V. L. multa, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion. [d] בי quamvis, Gejerus, Schmidt. [e] Vide Abendanæ Not. in Miclol Yophi in loc.

℣ 13. His ſoul ſhall dwell at eaſe, &c.] Or in goodneſs [c], enjoying an affluence of good things, of ſpiritual bleſſings in Chriſt, in whom he dwells by faith; and where he has peace and ſafety, amidſt all the troubles, afflictions, and exerciſes he meets with; and where with godlineſs he has contentment, which is great gain indeed; for though he may ſeem to have nothing, he poſſeſſes all things; and has all things given him richly to enjoy, even all things pertaining to life and godlineſs; and at death, when his ſoul is ſeparated from his body, it ſhall enter into reſt, and be in perfect peace; it ſhall lie in Abraham's boſom, and in the arms of Jeſus, during the night of the grave, until the reſurrection morn, when the body will be raiſed and united to it, and both will dwell in perfect happineſs to all eternity. And his ſeed ſhall inherit the earth; that is, thoſe who tread in the ſame ſteps, and fear the Lord as he does; theſe ſhall poſſeſs the good things of this world, which is theirs, in a comfortable way, as their Father's gift, as covenant-mercies, and in love; though it may be but a ſmall portion that they have of them; or rather, they ſhall inherit the new heavens and earth, wherein will dwell only righteous perſons, meek ones, and ſuch as fear the Lord, Matt. v. 5. 2 Pet. iii. 13. and this they ſhall inherit for a thouſand years, and afterwards the land afar off, the better country, the ultimate glory to all eternity.

℣. 14. The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him, &c.] The ſecret of his purpoſes with them; as his purpoſe according to election; his reſolution to redeem his choſen ones by his Son; his deſign to call them by his grace; his predeſtination of them to the adoption of children, and eternal life; which are the deep things of God, the Spirit of God reveals; and all which are made manifeſt to them in effectual vocation: and the ſecret of his providences is with them; ſome are made known to them that fear the Lord, before they come to paſs; as the deſtruction of Sodom and Gomorrah to Abraham, with many other inſtances in the Old Teſtament; ſee Amos iii. 7. and what is the book of the Revelation, but a revelation of the ſecrets of Providence, from the time of Chriſt and his apoſtles, to the end of the world? ſome they obſerve and take notice of whilſt they are performing, and ſee the gracious deſigns of God in them, for their good and his glory; and though ſome of his ways of providence are paſt finding out, and his footſteps are not known as yet; hereafter his judgments will be made manifeſt, and the whole ſcene will be opened to the ſaints, and be clear to their view: the ſecret of his love, free grace, and favour is with them, which was in his heart from everlaſting, and lay hid in his thoughts, which are as much higher than ours, as the heavens are higher than the earth; and which is made manifeſt in regeneration, and then ſhed abroad in the hearts of his people: ſecret communion with God is enjoyed by thoſe that fear him, which is what the world knows nothing of, and the joy that reſults from it, is what a ſtranger intermeddles not with; the Lord has his chambers and ſecret places, into which he brings them, and where they dwell. The ſecret of his goſpel is with them; and the myſteries of it, which were kept ſecret ſince the world began; as the myſtery of a Trinity of perſons in the Godhead; the union of the two natures in Chriſt; the regeneration of the Spirit; the union of the ſaints to Chriſt, and their communion with him; the calling of the Gentiles; the reſurrection of the dead, and the change of living ſaints. And he will ſhew them his covenant; the covenant of grace, which was made with Chriſt for them from eternity, is made known to them in time; when they are called by the grace of God, and made partakers of the grace of the covenant, then the Lord reveals himſelf as their covenant-God and Father; ſhews them that his Son is their ſurety, mediator, redeemer, and Saviour; puts his Spirit into them to implant covenant-grace in them, to ſeal up the bleſſings of it to them, and bear witneſs to their intereſt in them, as pardon, juſtification, and adoption; and to apply the exceeding great and precious promiſes of it to them.

℣. 15. Mine eyes are ever towards the Lord, &c.] Not only as the God of nature and providence, for his daily ſupport and ſupply, in which ſenſe the eyes of all creatures wait upon him; but as his covenant-God and Father, having the eyes of his underſtanding opened to ſee and know him as ſuch, and the eye of his faith directed to him, to believe in him, and make him his hope and truſt; and his eye was ſingle to him; it was to him, and him only, that he looked; and it was conſtant, it was ever to him, he ſet the Lord always before him; and ſuch a look was well-pleaſing to God: it may alſo reſpect the lifting up of his eyes to God in prayer for all mercies temporal and ſpiritual, and his prayer was the prayer of faith; as follows: For he ſhall pluck my feet out of the net; of the corruption of nature, and the luſts of it, as Aben Ezra interprets it; by which the ſaints are ſometimes enſnared and taken captive, and out of which they cannot make their eſcape of themſelves; but there is a deliverance from it by Jeſus Chriſt their Lord: or out of the temptations of Satan, called his devices, and wiles, and the ſnares of the devil; and as the Lord knows how to deliver his out of temptations, he does deliver them in his own time: or rather, out of the nets and ſnares laid for him by wicked men; as by his ſon Abſalom, Achitophel, and others, in which his feet were as a bird in the ſnare of the fowler; but he believed the net, or ſnare, would be broken, and he ſhould eſcape, as he did.

℣. 16. Turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me, &c.] Or look unto me, or upon me [f]; which ſuggeſts, that the Lord had turned himſelf, and hid his face from him; and expreſſes a deſire, that he would look upon him with a look of love and mercy, and ariſe to help and deliver him out of the hands of his enemies; he pleads no merits nor works of righteouſneſs of his, but caſts himſelf upon the mercy of God. For I am deſolate and afflicted; or alone and poor [g]; not that he was quite alone, and had none with him; for though he was obliged obliged to quit his palace, and the city of Jeruſalem, yet he was accompanied by his ſervants, and a large number of his people; and could not be poor, in a literal ſenſe, being king of Iſrael; yet he put no truſt in men, nor in riches, but wholly depended on the Lord, as if he had none with him, nor any thing to ſubſiſt with: and his caſe was indeed very deplorable, and called for pity and aſſiſtance; his own ſon was riſen up againſt him, and the hearts of the men of Iſrael went after him; and he was obliged to flee from the city, and leave his houſe and family.

[c] בטוב in bono, Pagninus, Montanus, Muſculus, Junius & Tremellius, &c. ſo Ainſworth.

[f] פנה אלי reſpice ad me, Montanus, Muſculus, Junius & Tremellius, &c.

[g] יחיד ועני ſolitarius & pauper, Junius & Tremellius; & miſer, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth.

℣. 17. The troubles of my heart are enlarged, &c.] His enemies being increaſed, which troubled him; the floods of ungodly men made him afraid; the waters of affliction were come into his ſoul, and ſpread themſelves, and threatened to overwhelm him: or it may be rendered, as by ſome, troubles have enlarged my heart [h]; made him wiſer, increaſed his knowledge and experience; ſee Pſal. cxix. 67, 71. but the former ſeems better to agree with what follows. O bring thou me out of my diſtreſſes; or ſtraits [i]; for the enlargement of his troubles was the ſtraitning of his heart; and therefore he applies to the Lord to bring him out of his afflicted circumſtances, in which he was penned up, as in a ſtrait place, on every ſide, and which were ſuch that he could not free himſelf from; but he knew that God could deliver him.

℣. 18. Look upon mine affliction and my pain, &c.] The affliction, was the rebellion of his ſubjects againſt him, at the head of which was his own ſon; and the pain, was the uneaſineſs of mind it gave him; or the labour [k], as the word may be rendered; the toil and fatigue of body he was exerciſed with, he flying from place to place; and he deſires that God would look upon all this with an eye of pity and compaſſion to him, and ariſe to his help and deliverance; as he looked upon the affliction of the children of Iſrael in Egypt, and delivered them, Exod. iii. 7, 8. Deut. xxvi. 7. And forgive all my ſins; or lift up, bear, or take away [l], as the word ſignifies: ſins are burdens, and they lay heavy at this time on David's conſcience, being brought to mind, by the affliction he laboured under, not only his ſin with Bathſhebah, but all others; and theſe were on him as a heavy burden, too heavy to bear; wherefore he intreats that the Lord would lift them off, and take them away from him, by the freſh diſcoveries of pardoning grace to him. The ſins of God's people are removed from them to Chriſt, by his Father, on whom they have been laid by his act of imputation; and he has bore them, and all the puniſhment due unto them, and has taken them away, and made an end of them; and through the application of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, they are cauſed to paſs from the conſciences of the ſaints, and are removed as far from them as the eaſt is from the weſt; and this is what the pſalmiſt here deſires, and this he requeſts with reſpect to all his ſins; well knowing, that if one was left upon him, it would be an inſupportable burden to him.

℣. 19. Conſider mine enemies, &c.] Or look [m] upon them; but with another kind of look; ſo as he looked through the pillar of fire upon the Egyptians, and troubled them, Exod. xiv. 24. with a look of wrath and vengeance. The arguments he uſes are taken both from the quantity and quality of his enemies, their number and their nature. For they are many; the hearts of the people of Iſrael, in general, being after Abſalom, 2 Sam. xv. 12, 13, and ſo the ſpiritual enemies of the Lord's people are many; their ſins and corruptions, Satan, and his principalities and powers, and the men of this world. And they hate me with cruel hatred; like that of Simeon and Levi, Gen. xlix. 7. their hatred broke out in a cruel manner, in acts of force and cruelty; and it was the more cruel, inaſmuch as it was without cauſe: and ſuch is the hatred of Satan and his emiſſaries againſt the faithful followers of Chriſt; who breathe out cruelty, thirſt after their blood, and make themſelves drunk with it; even their tender mercies are cruel, and much more their hatred.

℣. 20. O keep my ſoul, &c.] Or life [n], which was in danger, his enemies ſeeking for it; wherefore he applies to God that gave it, and who had hitherto held him in it, to preſerve it. God is the keeper of his people in a ſpiritual ſenſe; they cannot keep themſelves from ſin, Satan, and the world; but he is able to keep them from falling, and therefore they pray to him that he would keep them; and they have reaſon to believe they ſhall be kept by his power, through faith unto ſalvation. And deliver me; as out of the hands of his preſent enemies; ſo from all evil, from the evils of the world, from the evil one, Satan, from the evil of ſin, and out of all affliction and troubles. Let me not be aſhamed; for I put my truſt in thee; ſee the note on ℣. 2.

℣. 21. Let integrity and uprightneſs preſerve me, &c.] Meaning either his own, as in Pſal. vii. 8. and xxvi. 1, and then the ſenſe is, either that God would preſerve him, ſeeing he had acted the faithful and upright part in the government of the people of Iſrael, and they had rebelled againſt him without a cauſe; ſee Pſal. lxxviii. 72. or that thoſe might be continued with him, that he might not be led aſide by the corruptions of his heart, and the temptations of Satan, and by the provocations of his rebellious ſubjects, to act a part diſagreeable to his character, as a man of integrity and uprightneſs; but that theſe remaining with him, might be a means of keeping him in the ways of God, Prov. xiii. 6. or elſe the integrity and uprightneſs of God are deſigned, which are no other than his goodneſs and grace to his people, and his faithfulneſs in his covenant and promiſes, or his loving-kindneſs and his truth; ſee Pſal. xl. 11. For I wait on thee; in the uſe of means for deliverance and ſafety; the Targum is, for I truſt in thy word.

℣. 22. Redeem Iſrael, O God, out of all his troubles.] David was not only concerned for himſelf, but for the whole nation of Iſrael, which was involved in trouble through this unnatural rebellion of his ſon, and many of his ſubjects; and no doubt he may have a further view to the redemption of the church of God, the ſpiritual Iſrael, by the Meſſiah; and his ſenſe may be, that God would ſend the promiſed Redeemer and Saviour, to redeem his people from all their iniquities; from the law, its curſes and condemnation; to ranſom them out of the hands of Satan, that is ſtronger than they; and to deliver them from all their enemies, and from death itſelf, the laſt enemy, which will put an end to all their troubles, Iſa. xxxv. 10.

[h] הרחיבו dilataverunt cor meum, Vatablus; reddiderunt cor meum latius, Guſſetius, p. 786. [i] ממצוקותי ab anguſtiis meis, Pagninus, Junius & Tremellius; ſo Muſculus, Piſcator, Michaelis. [k] עמלי laborem meum, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, &c. [l] ושא Heb. tolle, Piſcator; aufer, Michaelis. [m] ראה vide, Pagninus, Montanus, Muſculus, Cocceius, Michaelis; aſpice, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; intuere, Gejerus. [n] נפשי animam meam h. e. vitam meam, Gejerus.

PSALM

PSALM XXVI.

A pſalm of David.

THE occaſion of this pſalm ſeems to be, the quarrel between Saul and David, the former liſtening to calumnies and reproaches caſt upon the latter, and perſecuting him in a violent manner. The argument of it is the ſame, in a great meaſure, with the ſeventh pſalm, and is an appeal made to God, the Judge of the whole earth, by the pſalmiſt, for his innocence and integrity; Theodoret thinks it was written by David when he fled from Saul.

℣. 1. Judge me, O Lord, &c.] Meaning, not that God would enter into judgment with him, in reſpect to the juſtification of his perſon in his ſight, which he knew was not by his own righteouſneſs and integrity, but by the righteouſneſs of God; but his view is, to the juſtification of his cauſe before men; and particularly to the difference between Saul and him; and intreats that God would interpoſe, take his cauſe in hand, judge between them, and vindicate him. For I have walked in mine integrity; or perfection [o]; not that he thought himſelf free from ſin; this would be contrary to the complaints, confeſſions and petitions frequently made by him; but that in the affair with which he was accuſed, of ſeeking Saul's hurt, 1 Sam. xxiv. 9. he was quite innocent: by his integrity he means, the purity of his intentions and deſigns; the uprightneſs of his conduct, the ſimplicity and ſincerity of his converſation towards all men, and eſpecially his fidelity to his prince; but though he knew nothing by himſelf, and could not charge himſelf with any wrong action in this reſpect, and therefore ought to be acquitted before men; yet he did not expect hereby to be juſtified in the ſight of God. I have truſted alſo in the Lord; not in himſelf, in the ſincerity of his heart, and the uprightneſs of his life; nor did he truſt to the goodneſs of his cauſe; but he committed it to the Lord, who judgeth righteouſly; and truſted in him, that he ſhould not be aſhamed and confounded: this ſhews from whence his integrity ſprung, even from faith unfeigned; for where that is true and genuine, there are works of righteouſneſs, and integrity of life. Therefore I ſhall not ſlide; theſe words may be connected with the former, thus; I have truſted alſo in the Lord, that I ſhall not ſlide [p]; that is, ſhall not fail in judgment, or loſe the cauſe; but ſhall ſtand and carry it, and not be confounded or condemned. Our verſion ſupplies the word therefore, making theſe words to be an inference from the former, that becauſe he truſted in the Lord, therefore he ſhould not ſlide, ſlip and fall; not but that true believers may not only have their feet well nigh ſlipt, but altogether; yea fall, and that ſometimes into great ſins, to the breaking of their bones; but then they ſhall not totally and finally fall; for they ſtand by faith, and are kept through it by the power of God. The words may be conſidered as a prayer, Let me not ſlide [q]; being ſenſible of his own weakneſs, and of the neceſſity of being upheld in his uprightneſs, and in the ways of the Lord by him, that his footſteps might not ſlip; for though he walked in his uprightneſs, he was not ſelf-ſufficient, and ſelf-confident, but dependent on the Lord.

℣. 2. Examine me, O Lord, &c.] His cauſe, his integrity, and truſt in the Lord, as ſilver and gold are examined by the touchſtone, the word of God, which is the ſtandard of faith and practice. And prove me; or tempt me [r]; as Abraham was tempted by the Lord; and his faith in him, and fear of him, and love to him, were proved to be true and genuine. Try my reins and my heart; the thoughts, deſires, and affections of it, as gold and ſilver are tried in the furnace; and ſo God ſometimes tries the faith and patience of his people by afflictive providences; and this examination, probation, and trial, are made by him, not for his own ſake, who knows the hearts and ways of all men; but for the ſake of others, to make known, either to themſelves or others, the truth of grace that is in them, and the uprightneſs of their hearts and ways; and it was on this account the pſalmiſt deſired to paſs under ſuch an examination.

℣. 3. For thy loving-kindneſs is before mine eyes, &c.] The ſpecial loving-kindneſs of God, ſhewn in the choice of him in Chriſt, in the proviſion of a Saviour for him, and in the effectual vocation of him; which loving-kindneſs is unmerited, free, and ſovereign, is from everlaſting and to everlaſting; it is better than life, excellent beyond expreſſion, and marvelous: and this may be ſaid to be before his eyes; becauſe it was now in ſight; he had a comfortable view of intereſt in it, and was perſuaded nothing ſhould ſeparate him from it; it was upon his heart, ſhed abroad in it, and he was affected with it; it was in his mind, and in his thoughts, and they were employed about it; he had it in remembrance, and was comfortably refreſhed with it: and this he mentions as the reaſon of his laying his cauſe before the Lord, as the ground of his truſt in him, and why he deſired to be examined, proved, and tried by him. And I have walked in thy truth; by faith in Chriſt, who is the truth of all promiſes, prophecies, types, and figures; in the word of truth, by abiding by it, and walking according to it; and in the truth of worſhip, in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord; and to walk herein, he uſed himſelf to, and was conſtant in, as the word [s] ſignifies: and nothing more engages to walk on in Chriſt, as he has been received, and to walk as becomes his goſpel, and in all holy converſation and godlineſs, than the love of God manifeſted to the ſoul; this being ſet continually before our eyes, encourages faith and hope, and influences a holy life, and chearful obedience to the will of God.

℣. 4. I have not ſat with vain perſons, &c.] Or men of vanity [t]; who are full of it; who are addicted to the vanities of the world; who purſue the riches, honours, pleaſures, and profits of it; which is no other than walking in a vain ſhew: whoſe thoughts, words, and actions are vain; who are vainly puffed up in their fleſhly mind, and walk in the vanity of it; who take the

[o] בתמי in perfectione mea, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; ſo the Targum, Ainſworth. [p] לא אמעד me non vacillaturum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [q] Ne nutare me patiaris, Gejerus. [r] נסני tenta me, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, &c. [s] התהלכתי ambulavi indeſinenter & ſedulo, Gejerus; ſo Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [t] עם מתי שוא cum hominibus vanitatis, Gejerus; Michaelis.

the name of God in vain, and whoſe common diſcourſe is fooliſh, frothy, light, and empty; and who are men of a vain converſation, and are raſh, imprudent, and deceitful: men of bad principles may very well go by this name, who are vain and unruly talkers, and whoſe doctrines are doctrines of vanity, and no other than vain babbling; and alſo men guilty of idolatrous practices, who obſerve lying vanities, and worſhip them, and lift up their ſouls unto them; with ſuch vain men, in any of theſe ſenſes, the pſalmiſt would have nothing to do; he would not keep company with them, nor have any communion, conſultation, and converſation with them; it may be, he may have ſome reſpect to the men that were about Saul, to whom ſuch a character agreed; or he may ſay this, and what follows, to remove a calumny caſt upon him and his friends; as if they that were with him were ſuch men as here deſcribed, and in the next verſe. Neither will I go in with diſſemblers; or hidden or unknown perſons [u], who lie in private lurking-places, to murder the innocent, or ſecretly take away the good names and characters of men, and it is not known who they are; or who commit ſin ſecretly; go into ſecret places to do their works in the dark, and hide themſelves to do evil; as the Targum, Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, interpret it; who love darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds are evil; or who cover themſelves with lying and flattering words, that it is not known what their real intentions be; they ſpeak one thing, and mean another; are an aſſembly of treacherous men: ſuch are all deceitful workers, who lie in wait to deceive, and walk in craftineſs; and hypocrites, who have the form of religion, but are ſtrangers to the power of it; and who are to be turned away from, and avoided; the houſes, aſſemblies, cabals, and company of ſuch, are to be ſhunned; ſee Gen. xlix. 6. Jer. ix. 2. or ſuch as are ſigned or marked; that is, infamous perſons [w].

℣. 5. I have hated the congregation of evil-doers, &c.] That do hurt to the perſons, characters or properties of men; and who meet together in bodies, to conſult and form ſchemes to do miſchief, and have their aſſemblies to encourage each other in it; theſe, their works and actions the pſalmiſt hated, though not their perſons; and ſhewed his diſplicency at them, and diſlike and diſapprobation of them, by abſenting from them; ſee Jer. xv. 17. And will not ſit with the wicked; ungodly and unrighteous men, ſons of Belial; for with ſuch, what fellowſhip and concord can there be? 2 Cor. vi. 14, 15. the word [x] ſignifies reſtleſs and unquiet perſons, who cannot reſt unleſs they do miſchief; are like the troubled ſea, continually caſting up mire and dirt, Iſa. lvii. 20, 21. now, by all this, the pſalmiſt means not, that good men ſhould have no manner of converſation with the men of the world: for then, as the apoſtle ſays, we muſt needs go out of the world, 1 Cor. v. 9, 10. Converſation in civil things, in matters of trade and buſineſs, is lawful; though all unneceſſary converſation in things of civil life is to be ſhunned; no more ſhould be had, than what natural relation, and the buſineſs of life require; but all converſation in things criminal is to be avoided; company is not to be kept with them, ſo as to join them in any thing ſinful; this is to harden them in their evil ways, and it brings into danger and into diſgrace: a man is known, and is judged of by the company that he keeps; and evil communications corrupt good manners.

℣. 6. I will waſh my hands in innocency, &c.] The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, among innocent perſons; men of a holy, harmleſs life and converſation; with theſe he determined to converſe in common, and not with ſuch as before deſcribed; or the ſenſe is, that he would waſh his hands, in token of his innocence, integrity, and uprightneſs he had before ſpoke of, and of his having nothing to do with ſuch evil men as now mentioned; ſee Deut. xxi. 6, 7. Matth. xxvii. 24. hands are the inſtrument of action, and to waſh them may deſign the performance of good works, Job ix 30. and to do this in innocency, or purity, may ſignify the performance of them from a pure heart, a good conſcience, and faith unfeigned; and particularly may have ſome reſpect to the lifting up of holy hands in prayer to God, previous to public worſhip; there ſeems to be an alluſion to the prieſts waſhing their hands before they offered ſacrifice, Exod. xxx. 19, 20, 21. So will I compaſs thine altar, O Lord; frequent the houſe of God, where the altar was, and conſtantly attend the worſhip and ordinances of God; the work of the altar being put for the whole of divine ſervice; the altar of burnt-offering is here meant, which was a type of Chriſt; ſee Heb. xiii. 10. reference is had to the prieſts at the altar, who uſed to go round it, when they laid the ſacrifice on the altar, and bound it to the horns of it, at the four corners, and there ſprinkled, and poured out the blood; compare Pſal. xliii. 4. in order to which they waſhed their hands, as before; and in after-times it was uſual with the heathens [y] to waſh their hands before divine ſervice.

℣. 7. That I may publiſh with the voice of thankſgiving, &c.] Or cauſe to hear with the voice of confeſſion [z]: the meaning is, that the view of the pſalmiſt in compaſſing the altar of God in the manner he propoſed, was not to offer upon it any ſlain beaſt; but to offer the ſacrifices of praiſe upon that altar, which ſanctifies the gift, and from whence they come with acceptance to God; even for all mercies, both temporal and ſpiritual, and that with a confeſſion and acknowledgment of ſin, and unworthineſs; all this is agreeable to the will of God; it is well-pleaſing in his ſight, what glorifies him, and is but our reaſonable ſervice. And tell of all thy wondrous works; of creation and providence; and eſpecially of grace and redemption; this is the buſineſs of ſaints in God's houſe below, and will be their employment in heaven to all eternity. Jarchi on the place ſays, that this ſong of praiſe has in it what relates to future times, to Gog, to the days of the Meſſiah, and to the world to come.

℣. 8. Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy houſe, &c.] Meaning the tabernacle, for as yet the temple was not built; which was an habitation for the ſaints, where they choſe to dwell, and reckoned it their happineſs, and was the habitation of the Lord himſelf: the ſanctuary was built for that purpoſe; and between the cherubim, over the mercy-ſeat, he took up his reſidence; hence it follows, follows, And the place where thine honour dwelleth; or glory[a]: when the tabernacle was ſet up, the glory of the Lord filled it, as it did the temple, when it was dedicated, Exod. xl. 34, 35. The pſalmiſt expreſſes his love to this place, in oppoſition to the congregation of evil-doers, which he hated, ℣. 5. and to remove a calumny from him, that being among the Philiſtines, and at a diſtance from the houſe of God, his affections were alienated from it; whereas it was his greateſt concern that he was debarred the privileges of it; ſee Pſal. xlii. 1, 2. and lxiii. 1. 1 Sam. xxvi. 19. beſides, he had ſhewed his great regard to it by his conſtant attendance before his exile, as he did after it, Pſal. xlii. 3. and lv. 14. and it was out of pure love to the worſhip of God, and with real pleaſure and delight, that he did attend; and not through cuſtom, and in mere form, Pſal. cxxii. 1. and lxxxiv. 1, 2, 10. The Lord's houſe is loved by his people, becauſe of his word and ordinances, which are miniſtred there, and becauſe of his preſence in it: or elſe what was typified by the tabernacle is here deſigned; either the tabernacle of Chriſt's human nature, called the true tabernacle, Heb. viii. 2. in which the fulneſs of the Godhead dwells; which the Son of God, the brightneſs of his Father's glory, inhabits; and in the redemption and ſalvation wrought out in it, the glory of all the divine attributes is diſplayed; and Chriſt incarnate is the mercy-ſeat from which God communes with his people, and is their way of acceſs unto him, and whereby they have fellowſhip with him; and who is loved by the ſaints ſincerely, above all creatures and things, and in the moſt ardent and affectionate manner: or heaven itſelf, of which the tabernacle was a figure, Heb. ix. 24. which is the habitation of the holineſs and glory of God, and in which are many manſions or dwelling-places for his people; and is the continuing city they ſeek, the heavenly and better country they are deſirous of, and where their hearts and affections are; becauſe there their God, their Saviour, and their treaſure be; which ſenſe ſeems to be confirmed by what follows.

[u] עם נעלמים cum occultis, Vatablus, Michaelis; abſconditis, Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth. [w] Vide Scultens de def. Hod. ling. Heb. ſ. 188. [x] רשע ſignificat inquietum eſſe, ceu patet ex Iſa. xlviii. 22. Gejerus. [y] —— pura cum veſte venito, & manibus puris ſumite fontis aquam, nunc lavabo ut rem divinam faciam, Tibull. l. 2. eleg. 1. Plautus in Aulular. act. 3. ſc. 6. vide Homer. Odyſſ. 12. v. 336, 337. [z] בקול תודה voce confeſſionis, Montanus, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth.

℣. 9. Gather not my ſoul with ſinners, &c.] Profligate and abandoned ones, ſuch as are notoriouſly profane, and who live and die impenitent ones; otherwiſe all men are ſinners: the ſenſe is either, that he deſires that he might not, by any means, be brought into the company of ſuch perſons, be joined unto them, and have a converſation with them, which would be uncomfortable, diſhonourable and dangerous; or that God would not deſtroy him with them, and puniſh him as he did them; and that he might not die the death of the wicked, nor be gathered with them at death: death is often expreſſed by a man's being gathered to his people, and to his fathers; ſee 2 Kings xxii. 20. the body is gathered to the grave, the ſoul returns to God that gave it, and has its place aſſigned by him; the ſouls of the righteous are gathered into heaven, Chriſt's garner; the ſouls of the wicked into hell; the pſalmiſt deprecates being gathered with them. Nor my life with bloody men; that thirſt after blood, lie in wait for it, ſhed it, and are drunk with it, as the antichriſtian party; theſe God abhors and deteſts; nor ſhall they live out half their days, and their end is miſerable.

℣. 10. In whoſe hands is miſchief, &c.] Every abominable wickedneſs; as idolatry, adultery, murder, &c. the word ſignifies, and is ſometimes uſed for miſchief conceived in the mind, artificially deviſed and contrived there; here miſchief committed, the hand being the inſtrument of action, and intends whatever is prejudicial to the perſon, character, and properties of men. And their right-hand is full of bribes; whereby the eyes of judges are blinded, the words of the righteous perverted, mens perſons reſpected, and judgment wreſted, Deut. xvi. 19.

℣. 11. But as for me, I will walk in mine integrity, &c.] In which he had hitherto walked, ℣. 1. or it may expreſs his faith, that after he was gathered by death, he ſhould walk in uprightneſs and righteouſneſs, in purity and perfection, with Chriſt in white, and behold the face of God in righteouſneſs; ſee Iſa. lvii. 1, 2. Redeem me; from the vain converſation of the wicked, from all troubles, and out of the hands of all enemies. And be merciful unto me; who was now in diſtreſs, being perſecuted by Saul, and at a diſtance from the houſe of God: this ſhews, that mercy is the ſource and ſpring of redemption, both temporal and ſpiritual; and that the pſalmiſt did not truſt in, and depend upon his preſent upright walk and converſation, but in redemption by Chriſt, and upon the mercy of God in Chriſt.

℣. 12. My foot ſtandeth in an even place, &c.] Or in a plain[b]; in a ſure place; on Chriſt the ſure foundation, and who is the plain way and path to eternal life; ſee Pſal. xxvii. 11. or in the ways and worſhip of God, preſcribed by his word; and ſo denotes ſtedfaſtneſs and continuance in them. In the congregations will I bleſs the Lord; in the aſſemblies of the ſaints, in the churches of Chriſt below, and in the great congregation above, in the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born; where it is the work of ſaints now, and will be hereafter, to praiſe the Lord, for all his mercies temporal and ſpiritual.

PSALM XXVII.

A pſalm of David.

THE Septuagint interpreters add to this title, before he was anointed. David was anointed three times, firſt when a youth in his father's houſe; but this pſalm could not be written before that time, becauſe he had not had then any experience of war, nor could be in any immediate apprehenſion of it, as here ſuggeſted; he was anointed a ſecond time, after the death of Saul at Hebron, by the men of Judah; before that time indeed he had been haraſſed by Saul, and diſtreſſed by the Amalekites, and was driven from the public worſhip of God, to which he has a reſpect, ℣. 4. and he was a third time anointed by the elders of Iſrael, king over all Iſrael; and between the death of Saul and this unction, there was a war between the houſe of David and the houſe of Saul; but what is referred to is not certain, nor is it of moment, ſince theſe words are neither in the Hebrew text, nor in the Chaldee

[a] כבודך gloria tua, Muſculus, Piſcator; tabernaculum gloriæ tuæ, Junius & Tremellius, Cocceius, Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth.
[b] במישור in plano, Muſculus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Michaelis; in planitie, Gejerus.

Chaldee paraphraſe. Theodoret is of opinion this pſalm was written by David when he fled from Saul, and came to Abimelech the prieſt.

℣. 1. The Lord is my light and my ſalvation; whom ſhall I fear? &c.] The Targum in the king of Spain's Bible explains it, the Word of the Lord is my light; and ſo Ainſworth cites it; that is, Chriſt the eternal Word, in whom was life, and that life was the light of men, John i. 4. and the pſalmiſt is not to be underſtood of the light of nature and reaſon, with which the Logos, or Word, enlightens every man that comes into the world; nor merely in a temporal ſenſe, of giving him the light of proſperity, and delivering him from the darkneſs of adverſity; but of the light of grace communicated to him by him who is the ſun of righteouſneſs, and the light of the world; and by whom ſuch who are darkneſs itſelf, whilſt in an unregenerate ſtate, are made light, and ſee light: all the light which is given to men at firſt converſion is from Chriſt; and all the after-communications and increaſe of it are from him; as well as all that ſpiritual joy, peace and comfort they partake of, which light ſometimes ſignifies, Pſalm xcvii. 11. and which the pſalmiſt now had an experience of; enjoying the light of God's countenance, and having diſcoveries of his love, which made him fearleſs of danger and enemies: and ſuch who are made light in the Lord, have no reaſon to be afraid of the prince of darkneſs; nor of the rulers of the darkneſs of this world; nor of all the darkneſs, diſtreſs and perſecutions they are the authors of; nor of the blackneſs of darkneſs reſerved for ungodly men; for their light is an everlaſting one, and they are made meet to be partakers of the inheritance with the ſaints in light: and the more light they have, the leſs fear; and what made the pſalmiſt ſtill more fearleſs, was that Chriſt was his ſalvation; by the light which the Lord was to him, he ſaw his need of ſalvation, he knew that his own righteouſneſs would not ſave him; he was made acquainted with the deſign and appointment of the Lord, that Chriſt ſhould be ſalvation to the ends of the earth; he had knowledge of the covenant of grace, and faith in it, which was all his ſalvation, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. Salvation was revealed to the Old Teſtament-ſaints, in the promiſes, ſacrifices, types and figures of that diſpenſation; and they looked through them to him for it, and were ſaved by him, as New Teſtament-believers are; and they had faith of intereſt in Chriſt, and knew him to be their Saviour and Redeemer, as did Job, and here the pſalmiſt David: and ſuch who know Chriſt to be their ſalvation need not be afraid of any perſon or thing; not of ſin, for tho' they fear, and ſhould fear to commit it, they need not fear the damning power of it, for they are ſaved from it; nor of Satan, out of whoſe hands they are ranſomed; nor of the world, which is overcome by Chriſt; nor of the laſt enemy, death, which is aboliſhed by him; nor of hell, and wrath to come, for he has delivered them from it. The Lord is the ſtrength of my life; of whom ſhall I be afraid? meaning not of his natural life, though he was the God of his life, who had given it to him, and had preſerved it, and upheld his ſoul in it; but of his ſpiritual life: Chriſt is the author of ſpiritual life, he implants the principle of it in the hearts of his people, yea he himſelf is that life; he lives in them, and is the ſupport of their life; he is the tree of life, and the bread of life, by which it is maintained; and he is the ſecurity of it, it is bound up in the bundle of life with him, it is hid with Chriſt in God; and becauſe he lives, they live alſo; and he gives unto them eternal life, ſo that they have no reaſon to be afraid that they ſhall come ſhort of heaven and happineſs; nor need they fear them that kill the body and can do no more; nor any enemy whatever, who cannot reach their ſpiritual life, nor hurt that, nor hinder them of the enjoyment of eternal life.

℣. 2. When the wicked, even mine enemies and my foes, came upon me, &c.] They are wicked men, men of malignant ſpirits, and evil-doers, who are the enemies and foes of the people of God, and who hate them with an implacable hatred, and do every thing they can to diſtreſs and afflict them; and ſuch enemies David had, who were many and mighty; and theſe came upon him, or approached againſt him [c], they drew near to him to make war with him, as the word ſignifies [d]; they attacked him in an hoſtile manner; and their view was, as he ſays, to eat up my fleſh, as they eat bread, Pſalm xiv. 4. to devour him at once, to make but one morſel of him, to deſtroy his life, to ſtrip him of his ſubſtance, to take away his wives and children, as the Amalekites at Ziklag, 1 Sam. xxx. 1—6. They ſtumbled and fell; the Lord put ſtumbling blocks in their way, and retarded their march, and hindered them from executing their deſigns; and they fell into the hands of David, and were ſubdued under him, or fell by death; and theſe paſt inſtances of divine goodneſs the pſalmiſt calls to mind, to keep up his heart and courage, and animate and ſtrengthen him againſt the fears of men, of death and hell.

℣. 3. Though an hoſt ſhould encamp againſt me, &c.] An hoſt of the ungodly, as the Targum; though ever ſo many of them, even ten thouſands of them, as in Pſal. iii. 6. ſhould beſet him on every ſide. My heart ſhall not fear; for not only the angels of the Lord encamped about him, as they do about all that fear the Lord; but ſalvation was appointed for walls and bulwarks about him; yea the Lord himſelf was a wall of fire around him, and he was kept as in a garriſon by the power of God. Though war ſhould riſe againſt me; in all its terrible ſhapes: in this will I be confident; either in this war, in the midſt of it; or in this that he had expreſſed, ℣. 1. that the Lord was his light, his ſalvation, and the ſtrength of his life; ſo the Jewiſh writers [e]: or as others [f], in this one thing, deſired in the next verſe; but either of the former ſenſes is beſt, eſpecially the latter of them. Saints need not be afraid, though there is a war within them between the fleſh and ſpirit; and though without are fightings with Satan and his principalities and powers; ſince they may be confident of victory, and that they are more than conquerors, through Chriſt that has loved them.

℣. 4. One thing have I deſired of the Lord, &c.] Not to be returned to Saul's court; nor to his own houſe and family; nor to have an affluence of worldly riches and honours; but to have conſtant abode in the houſe of the Lord; an opportunity of attending continually on the publick worſhip of God; which is excuſed and neglected by many, and is a wearineſs to others, but was by the pſalmiſt preferred to every thing elſe; he being now deprived of it, as it ſeems. That will I ſeek after; by inceſſant prayer, until obtained; importunity and perſeverance in prayer are the way to ſucceed, ſucceed, as appears from the parable of the widow and unjuſt judge. That I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord all the days of my life; not in heaven, Chriſt's Father's houſe, where he dwells, and where the ſaints will dwell to all eternity; though to be clothed upon with the houſe from heaven is very deſirable; rather, in the church of the living God, which is the houſe of God, and pillar of truth, where true believers in Chriſt have a place and a name, and are pillars that will never go out; but here the place of divine worſhip ſeems to be meant, where the Lord granted his preſence, and where to dwell, the pſalmiſt counted the greateſt happineſs on earth; he envied the very ſparrows and ſwallows, that built their neſts on the altars in it; and reckoned a day in it better than a thouſand elſewhere; and to have the privilege of attending all opportunities in it, as long as he lived, is the ſingular requeſt he here makes: the ends he had in view follow. To behold the beauty of the Lord, or the delight and pleaſantneſs of the Lord [g]; to ſee the prieſts in their robes, and doing their office, as typical of Chriſt the great high prieſt; and the Levites and ſingers performing their work in melodious ſtrains, prefiguring the churches in goſpel-times, ſinging to the Lord with grace in their hearts, and the four and twenty elders, and one hundred and forty-four thouſand, with the Lamb on Mount Zion, ſinging the ſong of redeeming love; and all the tribes and people of Iſrael, aſſembled together to worſhip God, repreſenting the church of Chriſt as a perfection of beauty, having the beauty of the Lord upon her, and made perfectly comely through his comelineſs; as it is a moſt delightful ſight, to ſee a company of ſaints attending goſpel-worſhip, meeting together to ſing, and pray, and hear the word, and wait upon the Lord in all his appointments; to ſee them walking in the faith and fellowſhip of the goſpel, and according to the order of it; this is next to the deſireable ſight of the bride, the Lamb's wife, in the new Jeruſalem-ſtate, having the glory of God upon her: moreover it was a pleaſant ſight to a believer in thoſe times, to behold the ſacrifices of ſlain beaſts, which were figures of the better ſacrifice of Chriſt, the Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world; to which may be added other things that were to be ſeen by prieſts; as the ark of the Lord, which had the two tables in it, typical of Chriſt, the fulfilling end of the law for righteouſneſs; and the table of ſhew-bread, which pointed out Chriſt the bread of life, and his perpetual interceſſion for his people; and the golden-candleſtick, a type of the church, holding forth the word of life to others; with many other things, which, with an eye of faith, the ſaints of thoſe times could look upon with delight and pleaſure: alſo the preſence of the Lord may be intended by his beauty, than which nothing is more deſirable to the people of God, even to behold his ſmiling countenance, to ſee his face, and enjoy his favour, and to have fellowſhip with him, and with one another; and particularly the beauty and glory of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt may be deſigned, repreſented by the Shekinah, or glory, which filled both the tabernacle and the temple; who being the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and fairer than the children of men, and altogether lovely and full of grace, is a very deſirable object to be beheld by faith. And to enquire in his temple; to ſeek the face of the Lord, to conſult him in matters of difficulty and moment; to ſearch after the knowledge of divine things, and to aſk for bleſſings of grace, for which he will be inquired of by his people, to beſtow them on them.

[c] בקרב עלי cum appropinquaverint adverſum me, Pagninus; ſo Gejerus. Tremellius; ſo Piſcator & Ainſworth. [d] Belligerantibus contra me, Junius & [e] Jarchi, Kimchi & Aben Ezra in loc. [f] Some in Aben Ezra in loc.

℣. 5. For in the time of trouble he ſhall hide me in his pavilion, &c.] This, with what follows, is given as a reaſon, why the pſalmiſt deſired to dwell in the houſe of the Lord; becauſe he conſidered it as a pavilion or booth, as the word [h] ſignifies, in which he ſhould be hid by the Lord, in times of trouble and diſtreſs, either through the heat of perſecution, or of inward anxiety of mind, cauſed by the working of a fiery law; the alluſion being, as ſome think, to the ſhepherd's tent or booth, into which he ſometimes takes a poor ſheep, and protects it from the ſcorching heat of the ſun at noon: and of ſuch uſe is the tabernacle of the Lord; ſee Iſai. iv. 6. In the ſecret of his tabernacle ſhall he hide me; alluding either to the tents of generals of armies, who receive into them thoſe whom they would protect from the inſults and injuries of others; or rather, to the moſt holy place in the tabernacle, called the ſecret place, Ezek. vii. 22. typical of Chriſt, the hiding-place of his people, in whom their life is hid, and where it is ſafe and ſecure. He ſhall ſet me up upon a rock; where he would be above and out of the reach of his enemies; meaning Chriſt, comparable to a rock for its height, he being higher than the kings of the earth, than the angels in heaven, than the heavens themſelves, and much more than the ſons of men; ſee Pſal. lxi. 2. and for ſhelter and ſafety, he being a munition of rocks, a ſtrong tower, a place of defence, and rock of refuge; and for firmneſs, ſolidity, and ſtrength, he being able to bear the whole weight of the building of the church, and every believer laid upon him; and for duration, he being more immoveable than rocks and mountains; ſo that ſuch who are ſet up upon him, are in the moſt ſafe and ſecure ſtate imaginable.

℣. 6. And now ſhall mine head be lifted up, &c.] That is, when brought into the houſe of the Lord, hid in the ſecret of his tabernacle, and ſet upon the rock Chriſt; by this phraſe he means, either that he ſhould be then reſtored to his former happy and comfortable condition, as it is uſed in Gen. xl. 13. or, that he ſhould overcome all his enemies, and triumph over them, being exalted, as he adds, Above mine enemies round about me; ſo that not only they ſhould not be able to come at him, but ſhould be ſubdued under him. Therefore will I offer in his tabernacle ſacrifices of joy; attended with ſhouting and ſounding of trumpets: in alluſion to the blowing of trumpets at the time of ſacrifice, Numb. x. 10. Sacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving, with a joyful heart, for mercies received, offered up publickly in the houſe of the Lord, are here intended. I will ſing, yea I will ſing praiſes unto the Lord; for whom praiſe waits in Zion, to whom it is due; he being the Father of mercies, the God of all comfort, and the author and giver of all bleſſings, temporal and ſpiritual.

℣. 7. Hear, O Lord, when I cry with my voice, &c.] Which is to be underſtood of prayer, and that in the time of diſtreſs; and of vocal prayer, as diſtinguiſhed from mental prayer; and the phraſe denotes the vehemency and intenſeneſs of it: and the requeſt is, that the Lord would hear it; not only as he is omniſcient and omnipreſent, and ſo hears the prayers of all good and bad; but as a God

[g] נעם יהוה amænitatem Jehovæ, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth; ſuavitatem Jehovæ, Cocceius, Michaelis. [h] בסכה in tugurio ſuo, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Michaelis.

God gracious and merciful, who ſometimes very quickly hears, and anſwers in a gracious way, and ſometimes ſeems to turn a deaf ear, to ſhut out the prayers of his people, and cover himſelf with a cloud, that they ſhould not paſs through, or, however, defers an anſwer to it for a little while; yet, ſooner or later, he always ſhews himſelf a God hearing prayer. Have mercy alſo upon me; by delivering him out of his temporal diſtreſſes, and by forgiving his iniquities. And anſwer me; by ſpeaking a word in ſeaſon; commanding off the affliction he lay under, and by ſaying to him, that his ſins were forgiven him.

℣. 8. When thou ſaidſt, Seek ye my face, &c.] To ſeek the face of the Lord, is to attend his houſe and ordinances, where he grants his preſence; and with this view to enjoy his gracious preſence, and the light of his countenance, not being content with bare attendance without it; it is to ſeek the Lord himſelf, and communion with him through Chriſt, the brightneſs of his glory, and the angel of his preſence; for the right way of ſeeking the Lord is in Chriſt, who is the way of acceſs to him, and of acceptance and fellowſhip with him; and that by prayer and ſupplication for his ſake, and with all the heart and ſoul; and this the Lord calls upon his people to do, in his word, in his providences, and by his Spirit, moving upon their hearts, and inclining them to it, as follows. My heart ſaid unto thee, Thy face, Lord, will I ſeek; it is an encouragement to believers to ſeek the Lord when he calls them to it; for it is a command with promiſe, that they ſhall find him, ſee his face, and enjoy his favour; and he never ſays to any, Seek ye my face, in vain; and they always find it good for them to draw nigh to him: and as it is the beſt way of ſeeking God, when the heart is engaged in it, ſo it is a token for good; and it looks as though the Lord had a mind to manifeſt himſelf, and grant the favour ſought for, when he inclines the hearts of his people to pray unto him for it; and this the pſalmiſt makes mention of as taking encouragement from it, to hope and believe that the Lord would hear and anſwer him, and have mercy on him; becauſe he had bid him ſeek his face, and he found his heart ready to do it.

℣. 9. Hide not thy face far from me, &c.] Yea, not at all from him; for the word far is not in the text: this is ſometimes the caſe of the beſt of men, and was of the pſalmiſt at times, and might be now, notwithſtanding his ſtrong expreſſions of faith and joy in the preceding verſes; for frames are very changeable things; and this caſe is conſiſtent with the everlaſting and unchangeable love of God to his people; though they are ready to impute it to wrath and anger, and is what is very cutting and grievous to them; and therefore deprecate it as the pſalmiſt does here, Put not thy ſervant away in anger; either caſt him not away from thy preſence, as being angry with him, though there is juſt reaſon for it; or ſuffer him not to go away angry, fretting, and murmuring: he makes mention of his relation to God as a ſervant, as he was; not only by creation as a man, and by his office as a king, but by efficacious grace as a converted man; and this only as deſcriptive of himſelf, and as acknowledging his dependence on the Lord, and his obligation to him; but not as a reaſon why he ſhould be regarded by him, for he knew he was but an unprofitable ſervant. Thou haſt been my help, leave me not, neither forſake me; which requeſt, as the reſt, he might put up in faith; for God will not leave his people deſtitute of his preſence finally and totally; nor to themſelves and the corruptions of their hearts, nor to the temptations of Satan; nor will he forſake the work of his hands, the work of grace upon their hearts; or ſo forſake them as that they ſhall periſh: and that the Lord would not leave nor forſake him in ſuch ſenſe, the pſalmiſt had reaſon to conclude; ſince he had been his help in times paſt, a preſent help in time of trouble; and his arm was not ſhortened, his power was the ſame to help as ever, and ſo were his inclination and will; ſince he could alſo call unto him, and upon him, as follows: O God of my ſalvation; the author both of his temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal ſalvation; and what might he not hope for from him? ſalvation includes all bleſſings, both for ſoul and body, for time and eternity.

℣. 10. When my father and my mother forſake me, &c.] Which is not to be underſtood ſtrictly and literally of his parents, that were in that near relation to him according to the fleſh, nor of any thing that had paſt; not of his parents leaving him to ſhift for himſelf, after having brought him up; nor of his father being unmindful of him, when Samuel came to anoint one of his ſons to be king; nor of any ſlight and neglect of him by them when perſecuted by Saul; nor of their inability to help him then; ſee 1 Sam. xxii. 3, 4. but this is to be underſtood of ſomething ſuppoſed yet to come; and it ſeems beſt to interpret it of his neareſt and deareſt friends, his cloſeſt adherents, beſt counſellors, and moſt firm allies; that when they ſhould fail and drop him, his God would not leave him: the deſign of it is to ſet forth the love and care of God, as ſuperior to that of the moſt affectionate friends; ſee Iſai. xlix. 14, 15, 16. Then the Lord will take me up; like a foundling in the ſtreet, and ſuch are called in the Talmudic language; perſons gathered up [i]; and ſo the words may be rendered here, then the Lord will gather me [k]; into his arms and boſom, and under the wings of his protection, and at laſt to himſelf in glory.

℣. 11. Teach me thy way, O Lord, &c.] Of providence, grace, and duty; ſee the note on Pſal. xxv. 4. And lead me in a plain path; as the path of truth is to thoſe that underſtand and find knowledge; and as the way of holineſs is, even to ſuch who in other things are fools, but ſhall not err therein, Prov. viii. 9. Iſai. xxxv. 8. or the path of righteouſneſs, in which Chriſt, the wiſdom of God, and ſhepherd of his people, leads them, Pſal. xxiii. 3. Prov. viii. 20. Becauſe of mine enemies, or thoſe that obſerve me; who eyed him as Saul did, 1 Sam. xviii. 9. and waited for his halting, as Jeremiah's familiars did for him; and lay in wait to deceive him, and lead him out of the way, as falſe teachers do; and come upon him at an unawares, and take every advantage againſt him, as Satan does.

℣. 12. Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies, &c.] It is a dreadful thing for a man to be given up to his own heart's luſts, and to be delivered up into the hands of Satan; who would fain have even the people of God themſelves in his hands, that he might diſtreſs them at pleaſure, if not deſtroy them; and alſo to be ſuffered to fall into the hands of wicked men, whoſe tender mercies are cruel. For falſe witneſſes are riſen up againſt me; laying to his charge, that he ſought to take away from Saul his crown and kingdom, and even his life, 1 Sam. xxiv. 9. And ſuch as breathe out cruelty;

[i] T. Bab. Kidduſhin, fol. 69. 1. Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth.

[k] יאספני colliget me, Pagninus, Montanus; collegit me, Muſculus, Vatablus, cruelty; as Doeg the Edomite, whoſe tongue was as a ſharp razor, and by whoſe hands fourſcore and five prieſts were ſlain, on account of David's being ſupplied with bread by Ahimelech; the word is in the ſingular number; ſee Pſal. lii. 1—4. and 1 Sam. xxii. 18. compare with this clauſe Acts ix. 1. and Horace's phraſe, Spirabat amores [l].

℣. 13. I had fainted, &c.] When falſe witneſſes roſe up againſt him, and threatened to take away his life, and the life of his friends, in the moſt barbarous and cruel manner: the people of God are ſubject to faintings, in the preſent ſtate of things, by reaſon of afflictions; becauſe of the nature, number and continuance of them; and eſpecially when they apprehend them to be in wrath and ſore diſpleaſure; and on account of their ſins, and the corruptions of their hearts; fearing leſt there ſhould be no pardon for them; or that the true work of grace is not in them; or that they ſhall fall, to the diſhonour of the name of God, and to the reproach of his cauſe and intereſt; or that they ſhall periſh eternally: likewiſe, by reaſon of Satan's temptations, which are ſometimes ſo grievous, that if Chriſt did not pray for them, their faith would fail; and alſo on account of the hidings of God's face, which they cannot bear: they are ſometimes ready to faint in the way of their duty, in the courſe of their profeſſion, becauſe of the difficulties and diſcouragements, reproaches and perſecutions they meet with; and ſometimes in the expectation of bleſſings, and of the fulfilment of promiſes, and of anſwers of prayer, which have been long deferred. This clauſe is not in the original text, but is a ſupplement of our tranſlators; and it is generally agreed, there is a defect of expreſſion, which muſt be ſupplied in ſome way or other: the Jewiſh interpreters generally refer it to the preceding words; one ſupplies thus [m], thoſe falſe witneſſes would have roſe up againſt me, and conſumed me; another [n] after this manner, mine enemies had almoſt got the dominion over me; a third [o], I had almoſt periſhed at their ſayings; and a fourth [p], and they would have deſtroyed me. Perhaps it may be as well ſupplied from Pſal. cxix. 92. I ſhould then have periſhed in mine affliction; it follows, Unleſs I had believed to ſee the goodneſs of the Lord in the land of the living; both the providential goodneſs of the Lord, in ſupplying him with the neceſſaries of life, and in delivering him out of the hands of his enemies; and his ſpecial goodneſs, which he has laid up in his covenant, and in his Son; even all ſpiritual bleſſings in Chriſt, in whom he cauſes all his goodneſs to paſs before his people. The pſalmiſt believed that he ſhould ſee; that is, enjoy all theſe, or whatever was needful for him; all the good things of life, all ſpecial favours; as ſupports under afflictions, views of pardoning grace, under a ſenſe of ſin, ſtrength againſt Satan's temptations, and deliverance out of them; the diſcoveries of the love of God, and the light of his countenance, after deſertions, and divine refreſhments in his houſe, from his word and ordinances; and at laſt all the glories of the other world; and faith in theſe things, is the beſt antidote againſt faintings. By the land of the living may be meant, either the land of Canaan, where the living God was worſhipped, and living ſaints dwelt, in oppoſition to other lands, the habitations of men dead in ſins; and at a diſtance from which David now might be; or elſe the world in general, in oppoſition to the place and ſtate of the dead; or, as ſome think, heaven, or the life of the world to come, as Kimchi expreſſes it; and ſo Apollinarius paraphraſes it, "I ſhall ſee "the bleſſed God with my eyes in the land of the "bleſſed." The word לולא rendered unleſs, is one of the fifteen words which are extraordinarily pointed in the Hebrew Bible.

℣. 14. Wait on the Lord, &c.] This, with what follows, is ſpoken by the pſalmiſt either to himſelf or to others, or it may be to both, upon the rich experience he declares in the preceding verſe: it becomes believers to wait on the Lord for the common bleſſings of life, for even the eyes of all wait upon him for their daily food; and for the light of his countenance, when it is withdrawn from them, for he will return again at the ſet time; and for anſwers of prayer, which will be given ſooner or later; and for the performance of his promiſes, which are yea and amen in Chriſt: they ſhould wait upon him in his houſe and ordinances conſtantly, with reverence and godly fear; they ſhould wait upon him as ſervants on their maſters, obſerve his orders, and diligently execute them; and, as beggars for their alms, they ſhould knock and wait at wiſdom's gates, tell their caſe and wait, take repulſes and wait, and when they ſucceed, give thanks. It is good to wait upon the Lord; many are the favours and bleſſings ſuch receive now, and eye has not ſeen what God has prepared for them that wait for him. Be of good courage; the ſaints have need of courage, conſidering the enemies they have to grapple with; the corruptions of their own hearts, the enemies of a man's own houſe; the worſt of all; Satan, and his principalities and powers, and men of the world, and a world of them: and they have great reaſon, notwithſtanding, to be of good courage, ſince God is for them; Chriſt is the Captain of their ſalvation; the holy Spirit, that is in them, is greater than he that is in the world; angels encamp around them; they are provided with the whole armour of God; they are engaged in a good cauſe, are ſure of victory, and ſhall wear the crown of righteouſneſs; and it follows, And he ſhall ſtrengthen thine heart; that is, the Lord will do it, as he has promiſed to them that wait on him, Iſa. xl. 31. and xli. 10. or let thine heart be ſtrengthened; as the Septuagint render it; and ſo the Chaldee paraphraſe, ſtrengthen thine heart; taking it for an exhortation; as indeed it ſeems to be by what goes before and follows; ſee Joſh. i. 6, 9. Wait, I ſay, on the Lord; this is repeated, to expreſs the importance of this duty, and to encourage to it.

PSALM XXVIII.

A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm, Aben Ezra ſays, David either compoſed himſelf, or one of the ſingers for him; the former ſeems moſt likely; and it might be made by him when he was perſecuted by Saul, or or when delivered from him; or at leaſt when he had faith and hope that he ſhould be delivered: the pſalm conſiſts of two parts, petitions and thanksgivings.

[l] Carmin. l. 4. ode 13. v. 19. [m] Jarchi. [n] Aben Ezra. [o] Kimchi. [p] Abendana, Not. in Miclol Yophi in loc.

℣. 1. Unto thee will I cry, &c.] This denotes the diſtreſs the pſalmiſt was in, fervency and ardour in prayer, reſolution to continue in it, and ſingularity with reſpect to the object of it; determining to cry to the Lord only; to which he was encouraged by what follows. O Lord my rock; he being a ſtrong tower and place of defence to him, in whom were all his ſafety, and his truſt and confidence, and in whom he had an intereſt. Be not ſilent to me; or deaf [q]; perſons that do not hear are ſilent, and make no anſwer; as the Lord ſeems to be, when he returns no anſwer to the cries of his people; when he does not ariſe and help them; when he ſeems not to take any notice of his and their enemies, but ſtands at a diſtance from them, and as if he had forſaken them; ſee Pſal. xxxix. 12. and xxxv. 22, 23. and l. 3, 21. Iſa. lxv. 6. the words may be conſidered, as they are by ſome, as an addreſs to Chriſt his rock, his advocate and interceſſor; that he would not be ſilent, but ſpeak for him, and preſent his ſupplications to God, with the much incenſe of his mediation; ſee 1 Sam. vii. 8. Leſt if thou be ſilent to me, I become like them that go down into the pit; either like ſuch that fall into a ditch, and cannot help themſelves out, and they cry, and there is none to take them out from thence; or like ſuch that die in battle, and are caſt into a pit, and there buried in common with others; which David might fear would be his caſe, through Saul's violent purſuit after him; or leſt he ſhould be like the dead, who are not regarded, and are remembered no more; or leſt he ſhould really die by the hands of his enemies, and ſo be laid in the grave, the pit of corruption; or be in ſuch diſtreſs and deſpair, as even the damned in hell be, the pit out of which there is no deliverance.

℣. 2. Hear the voice of my ſupplications; &c.] Which proceed from the Spirit of grace and of ſupplication, and are put up in a humble manner, under a ſenſe of wants and unworthineſs, and on the foot of grace and mercy, and not merit. When I cry unto thee; as he now did, and determined he would, and continue ſo doing, until he was heard. When I lift up my hands toward thy holy oracle; the Holy of holies, in the tabernacle and in the temple, which was ſometimes ſo called, 1 Kings vi. 23. compared with 2 Chron. iii. 10. where were the ark, the mercy-ſeat and Cherubim, between which the Lord dwelt, and gave reſponſes to his people; or heaven itſelf, which the Holy of holies was a figure of; where is the throne of God, and from whence he hears the prayers of his people directed to him; or elſe Chriſt himſelf, who is the moſt holy, and the debir, or oracle, who ſpeaks to the Lord for his people; and by whom the Lord ſpeaks to them again, and communes with them. The oracle had its name, debir, from ſpeaking. Lifting up of the hands is a prayer-geſture, and here deſigns the performance of that duty to God in heaven, through Chriſt; ſee Lam. iii. 41. 1 Tim. ii. 8. it was frequently uſed, even by the heathens, as a prayer-geſture [r]; ſee Pſal. cxli. 2.

℣. 3. Draw me not away with the wicked, &c.] That is, with thoſe who are notoriouſly wicked; who are inwardly and outwardly wicked; whoſe inward part is very wickedneſs, and who ſell themſelves, and give up themſelves to work wickedneſs: the ſenſe is, that God would not ſuffer him to be drawn away, or drawn aſide by wicked men, but that he would deliver him from temptation; or that he would not give him up into their hands, to be at their mercy; who he knew would not ſpare him, if they had him in their power; or that he might not die the death of the wicked, and periſh with them; ſee Pſal. xxvi. 9, 10. And with the workers of iniquity; who make it the trade and buſineſs of their lives to commit ſin; and which may be applied, not only to profane ſinners, but to profeſſors of religion, Matth. vii. 23. ſince it follows, Which ſpeak peace to their neighbours, but miſchief is in their hearts; hypocrites, double-minded men, who have a form of godlineſs, but deny the power of it; pretend to religion, and have none; and ſpeak fair to the face, but deſign miſchief and ruin; as Saul and his ſervants did to David, 1 Sam. xviii. 17, 22.

℣. 4. Give them according to their deeds, &c.] According to the demerit of them, which is death, even death eternal. And according to the wickedneſs of their endeavours; for though wicked men do not always ſucceed; yet their want of ſucceſs does not excuſe their wickedneſs. Give them after the work of their hands; ſee 2 Tim. iv. 14. Render to them their deſert; what their iniquities, in thought, word, and deed, deſerve: ſuch petitions are not contrary to that chriſtian charity, which the goſpel recommends; nor do they ſavour of a ſpirit of revenge, which is condemned by the word of God; for it ſhould be obſerved, that theſe things are ſaid with reſpect to men given up to a reprobate mind; and that the pſalmiſt does not ſeek to avenge himſelf, nor to gratify his own mind; but he ſought the glory of God, and moreover ſpoke by a prophetic ſpirit, knowing what was the will of God in this caſe; ſee ℣. 5. and therefore theſe petitions of his are not to be drawn into an example in common and ordinary caſes.

℣. 5. Becauſe they regard not the works of the Lord, &c.] Neither the work of creation, as if there was no firſt cauſe of all things; nor the work of providence, taking no notice either of the judgments or of the mercies of God; as though they believed that God had forſaken the earth, and would do neither good nor evil; and ſtill leſs the work of redemption, which in covenant, promiſe, and prophecy, was appointed for the Meſſiah to work out; and as for the work of the Spirit of God upon the ſoul, they had no notion of that, of the nature and neceſſity of it; the things of the Spirit of God being fooliſhneſs to them, and undiſcernible by them; ſee Iſa. v. 12. Perhaps the pſalmiſt may have ſome regard to his being anointed by Samuel, according to the will of God, and to the victory which he obtained over Goliath, and over others, which juſtly gained him great eſteem among ſome, and created envy in others; and alſo the wonderful protection of him from time to time; the Chaldee paraphraſe is, becauſe they do not underſtand the law of the Lord. It follows, Nor the operation of his hands; in which his hand was ſo very apparent, that nothing leſs could be ſaid, than that this was the finger of God; wherefore, He ſhall deſtroy them, and not build them up; that is, they ſhall ſhall be irrecoverably loſt; they ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction; there will be no help or remedy for them: ſome [s] underſtand this as a prayer, that God would deſtroy them in ſuch a manner, and render it, let him deſtroy them, &c. [t]

[q] אל תחרש ne obſurdeſcas, Vatablus, Tigurine verſion, Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth, Junius & Tremellius, Michaelis. [r] Duplices manus ad ſidera tendit — & paulo poſt — & ambas ad cœlum tendit palmas, Virgil. Æneid. 10. vid. Æneid. 2. Ad cœlum manibus ſublatis, Horat. Satyr. l. 2. ſatyr. 5. v. 97. Cœlo ſupinas ſi tuleris manus, Ib. Carmin. l. 3. ode 23. v. 1. Et pandere palmas ante Deum delubra, Lucretius l. 5. prope finem. Δὴ χεῖρα ἀνασχών, Homer. Iliad. 5. v. 174.

℣. 6. Bleſſed be the Lord, &c.] Which muſt be underſtood, not as invoking, nor as conferring a bleſſing on him, neither of which can be done by a creature; nor does he ſtand in need of any, he being El-ſhaddai, God all-ſufficient, God over all, bleſſed for ever; but as aſcribing all bleſſedneſs to him, congratulating his greatneſs and happineſs, and giving him praiſe and glory for mercies received; and particularly for the following. Becauſe he hath heard the voice of my ſupplications; what he had prayed for, ℣. 2. an anſwer was quickly returned, even whilſt he was ſpeaking, Iſa. lxv. 24. though this may be an expreſſion of faith, being fully perſuaded and aſſured that he was heard, and would be anſwered, and may be ſaid by a prophetic ſpirit; knowing that what he had humbly aſked for would be granted; ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi underſtand it, in a way of prophecy.

℣. 7. The Lord is my ſtrength, &c.] That is, the author both of natural and ſpiritual ſtrength; that gave him ſtrength of body, and fortitude of mind, to bear up under all the exerciſes he was tried with; the ſtrength of his life, ſpiritual and temporal, and of his ſalvation; the ſtrength of his heart under preſent diſtreſſes, and who he knew would be ſo in the hour of death, when his heart and ſtrength would fail. And my ſhield; to protect and defend him; as were the love, power, and faithfulneſs of God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, his power and fulneſs, his blood, righteouſneſs and ſalvation. My heart truſted in him; in the Lord as his ſtrength and ſhield; not in any creature, nor in his own ſtrength and righteouſneſs; but in the Lord God, in whom are righteouſneſs and ſtrength; and it is plain, he did not truſt in his own heart, ſince his heart truſted in the Lord; and which ſhews, that his truſt was an hearty one, his faith was a faith unfeigned, he believed with the heart unto righteouſneſs. And I am helped; this was the fruit of his truſt, even a gracious experience of divine aſſiſtance: ſaints are helpleſs in themſelves, and are alſo as to the help of man; God is the only helper of them; he helps them out of all their troubles; in whatſoever he calls them unto, and to what they want; and the help he affords is ſometimes quick, and always ſeaſonable; and ſometimes by means, and ſometimes without them. Therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth; that is, in the Lord, the ground of which was the help he had from him; and this joy was very great, a joy unſpeakable, and full of glory; it was not carnal, but ſpiritual, a heart-joy, joy in the Holy Ghoſt. And with my ſong will I praiſe him; praiſe is due to God, what glorifies him, and is acceptable to him; it becomes the ſaints, is comely for them, and it is pleaſant work to them, when grace is in exerciſe; ſee Pſal. lxix. 30, 31. this may be underſtood of one of his ſongs, and one of the beſt of them, and of one better than this, as a Jewiſh writer [u] obſerves.

℣. 8. The Lord is their ſtrength, &c.] The ſtrength of his people, mentioned in the next verſe; not only the ſtrength of David in particular, but of all his people in general; ſee Pſal. xxxvii. 39. And he is the ſaving ſtrength of his anointed; meaning either himſelf, as before, who was anointed by Samuel, king of Iſrael, and therefore had not invaded and thruſt himſelf into an office he had no call and right unto; or the Meſſiah, the Lord's anointed, whom he heard, helped, and ſtrengthened in the day of ſalvation, and delivered him from the power of death and the grave, and raiſed him from thence, and gave him glory; ſee Pſal. xx. 6.

℣. 9. Save thy people, &c.] The pſalmiſt begins the pſalm with petitions for himſelf, and cloſes it with prayers for the people of God; whom God has choſen for his people, taken into covenant to be his people, and given them to his Son as ſuch; theſe he has reſolved to ſave, and has appointed Chriſt, and ſent him into the world to be the Saviour of them, and to them he makes known and applies the great ſalvation by his Spirit; ſo that this prayer was a prayer of faith, as are alſo the following petitions. And bleſs thine inheritance; the people whom the Lord has choſen for his inheritance, and has given to Chriſt as his portion, and are his peculiar poſſeſſion; and theſe he bleſſes with all ſpiritual bleſſings, with grace here, and glory hereafter, as is requeſted. Feed them alſo; as the ſhepherd does his flock, by leading them into green paſtures, by giving them the bread of life, by nouriſhing them with the word and ordinances, by the means of his miniſtring ſervants, who are undershepherds appointed to feed the ſaints with knowledge and underſtanding. And lift them up for ever; above their enemies, and out of the reach of them; bear and carry them now, as the ſhepherd does his lambs, in his arms and boſom; and raiſe them out of their graves, and give them the dominion in the morning of the reſurrection, and cauſe them to reign as kings and prieſts with Chriſt, as they ever will.

PSALM XXIX.

A pſalm of David.

IN the Vulgate Latin verſion is added, at the finiſhing of the tabernacle; ſuggeſting that this pſalm was compoſed at that time, and on that occaſion: not at the finiſhing of the tabernacle by Moſes, but at the finiſhing of the tent or tabernacle which David made for the ark in Zion, 2 Sam. vi. 17. The title in the Arabic verſion is, "a prophecy concerning the incarnation, ark and tabernacle." In the Septuagint verſion, from whence the Vulgate ſeems to have taken the clauſe, it is at the exodion, exit, or going out of the tabernacle; that is, of the feaſt of tabernacles; and which was the eighth day of the feaſt, and was called עצרת which word the Septuagint render ἐξοδιον, the word here uſed, Lev. xxiii. 36. Numb. xxix. 35. though it was on the firſt of the common days of this feaſt that this pſalm was ſung, as Maimonides [w] ſays. Some think it was compoſed when the pſalmiſt was in a thunder-ſtorm, or had lately been in one, which he in a very beautiful manner deſcribes. Kimchi thinks thinks it refers to the times of the Meſſiah; and it may indeed be very well interpreted of the goſpel, and is very ſuitable to goſpel-times.

[s] Kimchi in loc. vid. Aben Ezram in loc. Moſeh in Aben Ezra in loc. [t] יהרסם deſtruat eos, Vatablus; ſo the Arabic verſion. [u] R. [w] Hilchot Tamidin, c. 10. f. 11.

℣. 1. Give unto the Lord, O ye mighty, &c.] The Targum refers this to the angels, "give praiſe be-"fore the Lord, ye companies of angels, ſons of "the mighty;" theſe are mighty ones, and excel all other creatures in ſtrength; and are the ſons of the mighty, or of God; it is their duty and their buſineſs to glorify and to worſhip him and his Son Jeſus Chriſt, as they do continually; but rather, the princes and great men of the earth are here meant, who are ſo called, Pſal. lxxxii. 1, 6, 7. and lxxxix. 6, 7. 1 Cor. i. 26. and theſe, as they receive much honour and glory, both from God and man; and becauſe they are apt to ſeek their own glory, and aſcribe too much to themſelves, are called upon particularly to give glory to God; and the more, inaſmuch as they may be the means of engaging their ſubjects, by their influence and example, to do the ſame, and who may be included in them; for this is not to be underſtood of them excluſive of others, as appears from Pſal. xcvi. 7, 8, 9. moreover, all the ſaints and people of God may be intended, who are all princes and kings; and may be ſaid to be mighty, eſpecially thoſe who are ſtrong in faith; and theſe are they who give moſt glory to God. Give unto the Lord glory and ſtrength; give glory to Jehovah the Father, by celebrating the perfections of his nature; by commending the works of his hands, the works of creation; by acquieſcing in his providential diſpenſations; by returning thanks to him for mercies received, temporal and ſpiritual; particularly for ſalvation by Chriſt, and above all for Chriſt himſelf; by exerciſing faith in him as a promiſing God; by living becoming his goſpel, and to the honour of his name: give glory to the Son of God, by aſcribing all divine perfections to him, by attributing ſalvation to him, and by truſting in him alone for it: give glory to the Spirit of God, by aſſerting his deity, by referring the work of grace and converſion to him, and by depending upon him for the performance of the good work begun: give ſtrength to each perſon, by acknowledging that power belongs to them, which is ſeen in creation, redemption, and effectual vocation; or elſe ſtrength may mean the ſame thing as praiſe and glory; ſee Pſal. viii. 2. compared with Matt. xxi. 16. and both may deſign ſtrong praiſe and glory, expreſſed in the ſtrongeſt and with the greateſt vigour and vehemency of ſpirit.

℣. 2. Give unto the Lord the glory due to his name, &c.] Or the glory of his name [x]; which is ſuitable to his nature, agreeable to his perfections, and which belongs unto him on account of his works. Worſhip the Lord in the beauty of holineſs; the Lord is only to be worſhipped, and not any creature, angels, or men; not Jehovah the Father only, who is to be worſhipped in Spirit and in truth; but the Son of God, and the Holy Ghoſt alſo, being of the ſame nature, and poſſeſſed of the ſame perfections; and that with both internal and external worſhip; and in true holineſs, in which there is a real beauty: holineſs is the beauty of God himſelf, he is glorious in it; it is the beauty of angels, it makes them ſo glorious as they are; and it is the beauty of ſaints, it is what makes them like unto Chriſt, and by which they are partakers of the divine nature; and in the exerciſe of holy graces, and in the diſcharge of holy duties, ſhould they worſhip the Lord; unleſs this is to be underſtood of the place of worſhip, the ſanctuary, or holy place in the tabernacle; or rather, the church of God, which holineſs becomes; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt.

℣. 3. The voice of the Lord is upon the waters, &c.] What follows concerning thunder, the voice of the Lord, gives ſo many reaſons why he ſhould have glory given him and be worſhipped; the heathens [y] paid their devotion to thunder and lightning: but this ſhould be done to the author of them; which may be literally underſtood of thunder, and is the voice of the Lord; ſee Pſal. xviii. 13. Job xl. 9. and which is commonly attended with large ſhowers of rain, Jer. x. 13. and is very terrible upon the waters, and has its effect there, Pſal. civ. 7. and this is the rather mentioned, becauſe that there is a God above who is higher than the mighty, who are called upon to give glory to him; and becauſe that thunder has been terrible to kings and great men of the earth: or this may be figuratively interpreted of the voice of Chriſt in the goſpel, which reaches to many nations and people, compared to waters, Rev. xvii. 15. The diſciples had a commiſſion to preach it to all nations, and the ſound of their words went into all the world, Rom. x. 18. The God of glory thundereth; this ſhews that thunder may be meant by the voice of the Lord, who is glorious in himſelf, and in all his works; and may be applied to the goſpel of Chriſt, who is the Lord of glory, and whoſe miniſters, at leaſt ſome of them, are ſons of thunder; ſee 1 Cor. ii. 8. Mark iii. 17. The Lord is upon many waters; that is, his voice is, as before, which is thunder; and that this belongs to God, the heathens were ſo ſenſible of, that they called their chief deity Jupiter Tonans [z].

℣. 4. The voice of the Lord is powerful, &c.] Or with power [a]; as thunder, in the effect of it, ſhews; and ſo is the goſpel, when it comes, not in word only, but is attended with the power of God to the converſion and ſalvation of ſouls; it is then quick and powerful, Heb. iv. 12. and the word of Chriſt perſonal, when here on earth, was with power, Luke iv. 32. The voice of the Lord is full of majeſty; Chriſt in his ſtate of humiliation ſpake and taught as one having authority; and now in the miniſtration of his goſpel by his ſervants he goes forth with glory and majeſty, Pſal. xlv. 3, 4.

℣. 5. The voice of the Lord breaketh the cedars, &c.] Such an effect thunder has upon the talleſt, ſtrongeſt, and largeſt trees, as to break them into ſhivers. Yea, the Lord breaketh the cedars of Lebanon; a mountain in the north part of the land of Judea, ſo called from its whiteneſs, both by reaſon of the ſnow with which ſome part of it is covered in ſummer, as Tacitus obſerves [b]; and partly from the colour of the earth that has no ſnow on it, which looks as white as if it was covered with white tiles, as Maundrel [c] ſays; and where the goodlieſt cedars grow; and to which may be compared proud, haughty, lofty, and ſtout-hearted ſinners, who are broken, brought down, and laid low by the voice of Chriſt in his goſpel, his power attending it. The Targum renders it, the Word of the Lord.

℣. 6.

[x] כבוד שמו gloriam nominis ejus, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Michaelis. [a] בכח in potentia, Pagninus, Montanus; cum potentia, Cocceius, Michaelis; with able power, Ainſworth.
[y] Pauſan. Arcad. ſive l. 8. p. 503. [z] Horat. Epod. l. 5. ode 2. v. 29. Martial. l. 2. ep. 95. [b] Hiſt. l. 5. c. 6.
[c] Travels, p. 176.

℣. 6. He maketh them alſo to ſkip like a calf, &c.] That is, the cedars, the branches being broken off, or they torn up by the roots, and toſſed about by the wind; which motion is compared to that of a calf that leaps and ſkips about. Lebanon and Sirion, like a young unicorn; that is, theſe mountains move and ſkip about through the force of thunder, and the violence of an earthquake attending it; ſo hiſtorians report, that mountains have moved from place to place, and they have met and daſhed againſt one another [c]. Sirion was a mountain in Judea near to Lebanon, and is the ſame with Hermon; which was called by the Sidonians Sirion, and by the Amorites Shenir, Deut. iii. 9. This may regard the inward motions of the mind, produced by the goſpel of Chriſt under a divine influence; ſee Iſa. xxxv. 6 and xl. 4—8.

℣. 7. The voice of the Lord divideth the flames of fire.] Or cutteth with flames of fire [d]; that is, the thunder breaks through the clouds with flames of fire, or lightning, as that is ſometimes called, Pſal. cv. 32. and with which it cleaves aſunder trees and maſts of ſhips, cuts and hews them down, and divides them into a thouſand ſhivers. Some refer this, in the figurative and myſtical ſenſe, to the giving of the Law on mount Sinai [e], on which the Lord deſcended in fire, and from his right hand went a fiery law; but rather, this may be applied to the cloven or divided tongues of fire which ſat upon the diſciples on the day of Pentecoſt, as an emblem of the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit beſtowed on them; though it ſeems beſt of all, as before, to underſtand this of the voice of Chriſt in the goſpel, which cuts and hews down all the goodlineſs of men, and lays them to the ground, Hoſ. vi. 5. and is of a dividing nature, and lays open all the ſecrets of the heart, Heb. iv. 12. and through the corruption of human nature, is the occaſion of dividing one friend from another, Luke xii. 51, 52. and like flames of fire it has both light and heat in it; it is the means of enlightning mens eyes to ſee their ſad eſtate, and their need of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; and of warming their ſouls with its refreſhing truths and promiſes, and of inflaming their love to God and Chriſt, and of ſetting their affections on things above, and of cauſing their hearts to burn within them.

℣. 8. The voice of the Lord ſhaketh the wilderneſs, &c.] The ground of it, the trees in it, and the beaſts that harbour there; and cauſes them to be in pain, and to bring forth their young, as the [f] word ſignifies, and as it is rendered in the next verſe; all which effects thunder produces, and may myſtically ſignify the preaching of the goſpel among the Gentiles, and the conſequence of it. The Gentile world may be compared to a wilderneſs, and is called the wilderneſs of the people, Ezek. xx. 35. the inhabitants of it being ignorant, barren, and unfruitful; and the converſion of them is expreſſed by turning a wilderneſs into a fruitful land, Iſa. xxxv. 1, 2, 6, 7. and xli. 18, 19. and the goſpel being ſent thither, has been the means of ſhaking the minds of many with ſtrong and ſaving convictions, which made them tremble and cry out, What ſhall we do to be ſaved? The Lord ſhaketh the wilderneſs of Kadeſh; which was the terrible wilderneſs that the children of Iſrael paſſed through to Canaan's land; the ſame with the wilderneſs of Zin, Numb. xxxiii. 36. and was called Kadeſh, from the city of that name, on the borders of Edom, Numb. xx. 1, 16. the Targum paraphraſes it, "The word of the Lord ſhaketh the wilder-"neſs of Rekam;" in the Targum in the king's Bible it is, "makes the ſerpents in the wilderneſs "of Rekam to tremble;" but that thunder frightens them, I have not met with in any writer.

℣. 9. The voice of the Lord maketh the hinds to calve, &c.] Which being timorous creatures, the bringing forth of their young, which is naturally very painful and difficult, is leſſened and facilitated by thunder; they being either ſo frighted with it, that they feel not their pains; or their pains being haſtened by it, become more eaſy; and naturaliſts obſerve, that the time of bringing forth their young is at that ſeaſon of the year when thunder is moſt frequent; ſee Job xxxix. 1—4. Thunder has a like effect on ſheep, and makes them abortive [g]: this may be applied to the goſpel, which is the means of bringing forth ſouls to Chriſt by his churches and miniſters; who may very fitly be compared to hinds for their love and lovelineſs, their ſwiftneſs and readineſs to do the will of Chriſt; and their eager deſires after communion with him, Prov. v. 19. Pſal. xviii. 33. and xlii. 1. And diſcovereth the foreſts; or maketh bare [h]; by beating off the leaves and branches of trees, and them to the ground; or by cauſing the wild beaſts that frequent them to retire to their holes and dens; which effects are produced by thunder: and this aptly agrees with the goſpel, which is a revelation of ſecrets, of the thickets, and deep things of God; of his council, covenant, mind and will; and of the myſteries of his grace to the ſons of men, and generally to babes, or men of their capacities; and of its ſtripping them of all their own righteouſneſs and dependence on it. And in his temple doth every one ſpeak of his glory; either in heaven, where angels and glorified ſaints are continually employed in ſpeaking of his glorious name, nature, and works; or in the temple, or tabernacle at Jeruſalem, where the Levites ſtood to praiſe the Lord morning and evening, and where the tribes went up to worſhip, and to give thanks unto the Lord. 1 Chron. xxiii. 30. Pſal. cxxii. 4. or the church of God, which is the temple of the living God, whither ſaints reſort, and where they dwell, and ſpeak of the glory of God, of his divine perfections, and of his works of creation and providence; and of the glory of the perſon of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; and of the glorious work of grace begun in their ſouls by the bleſſed Spirit; for hither ſuch as have heard the voice of Chriſt, and have felt the power of it, and have found it to be a ſoul-ſhaking, an heart-breaking, and an illuminating voice, come, and declare it to the glory of the grace of God.

℣. 10. The Lord ſitteth upon the flood, &c.] Noah's flood; which is always deſigned by the word here uſed: the Lord ſat and judged the old world for its wickedneſs, and brought a flood upon them, and deſtroyed them; and then he abated it, ſent a wind to aſſwage the waters, ſtopped up the windows of heaven, and the fountains of the great deep, and reſtrained rain from heaven; and he now ſits upon the confluence of waters in the heavens, at the time of a thunder-ſtorm, which threatens with an overflowing flood; and he remembers his covenant, and reſtrains them from deſtroying the earth any any more: and he ſits upon the floods of ungodly men, and ſtops their rage and fury, and ſuffers them not to proceed to overwhelm his people and intereſt; and ſo the floods of afflictions of every kind, and the floods of Satan's temptations, and of errors and hereſies, are at his control, and he permits them to go ſo far, and no further. Yea, the Lord ſitteth King for ever; he is King of the whole world, over angels and men, and even the kings of the earth; and he is alſo King of ſaints, in whoſe hearts he reigns by his Spirit and grace; and the goſpel-diſpenſation is more eminently his kingdom, in which his ſpiritual government is moſt viſible; and this will more appear in the latter-day-glory, when the Lord ſhall be King over all the earth; and after which the Lord Chriſt will reign with his ſaints here a thouſand years, and then with them to all eternity, and of his kingdom there ſhall be no end.

[c] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 83. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 9. c. 11. [d] חצב להבות אש cædit cum flammis ignis, Cocceius, Gejerus. [e] Jarchi in loc. [f] יחיל parturire faciet, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Michaelis; dolore parturientis afficit, Piſcator. [g] Ariſtot. Hiſt. Animal. l. 9. c. 3. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 47. [h] ויחשף & denudat, Muſculus, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Gejerus; ſo Cocceius, Michaelis, Ainſworth.

℣. 11. The Lord will give ſtrength unto his people, &c.] His ſpecial people, his covenant-people, whom he has choſen for himſelf; theſe are encompaſſed with infirmities, and are weak in themſelves; but there is ſtrength for them in Chriſt: the Lord promiſes it unto them, and beſtows it on them, and which is a pure gift of his grace unto them; this may more eſpecially regard that ſtrength, power, and dominion, which will be given to the people of the moſt High in the latter day; ſince it follows, upon the account of the everlaſting kingdom of Chriſt. The Lord will bleſs his people with peace; with internal peace, which is peculiar to them, and to which wicked men are ſtrangers; and which ariſes from a comfortable apprehenſion of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, of pardon by his blood, and atonement by his ſacrifice; and is enjoyed in a way of believing; and with external peace in the latter day, when there ſhall be no more war with them, nor perſecution of them; but there ſhall be abundance of peace, and that without end; and at laſt with eternal peace, which is the end of the perfect and upright man; and the whole is a great bleſſing.

PSALM XXX.

A pſalm and ſong, at the dedication of the houſe of David.

THIS is the firſt time that a pſalm is called a ſong; ſome pſalms are called by one name, ſome by another, and ſome by both, as here; and ſome are called hymns: to which diſtinction of them the apoſtle refers in Eph. v. 19. A pſalm was ſung upon muſical inſtruments, a ſong with the voice; it may be this pſalm was ſung both ways: the occaſion of it was the dedication of David's houſe: the Targum interprets it of the houſe of the ſanctuary, the temple; and ſo moſt of the Jewiſh commentators [i]; which might be called his houſe, becauſe it was his intention to build it; his heart was ſet upon it, he provided materials for it, and gave his ſon Solomon the form of it, and a charge to build it; and, as is thought, compoſed this pſalm to be ſung, and which was ſung by the Levites at the dedication of it: others, as Aben Ezra, are of opinion, it was his own dwelling-houſe, made of cedar, which he dedicated according to the law of Moſes, with ſacrifices and offerings, prayer and thankſgiving, 2 Sam. v. 11. and vii. 2. Deut. xx. 5. ſo Apollinarius calls it, a new houſe David built; but ſince there is nothing in the whole pſalm that agrees with the dedication, either of the temple, or of David's own private houſe, it ſeems better, with other interpreters, to underſtand it of the purgation of David's houſe from the wickedneſs and inceſt of his ſon Abſalom, upon his return to it, when the rebellion raiſed by him was extinguiſhed; which might be reckoned a new dedication of it; ſee 2 Sam. xx. 3. and to a deliverance from ſuch troubles this pſalm well agrees. Theodoret interprets it of the reſtoration of the human nature by Chriſt, through his reſurrection from the dead.

℣. 1. I will extol thee, O Lord, &c.] Or lift thee up on high [k]. The Lord is high in his name, he is the moſt High; and in his nature, there is none beſides him, nor like unto him; and in place, he dwells in the high and holy place; he is above all, angels and men; he is above all gods; he is the King of kings, and Lord of lords; he cannot be higher than he is: to extol him, therefore, is to declare him to be what he is; to exalt him in high praiſes of him, which the pſalmiſt determined to do, for the following reaſons. For thou haſt lifted me up; or drawn me up, or out [l]; from the pit of nature; the low eſtate of unregeneracy; the pit wherein is no water; the horrible pit, the mire and clay of ſin and miſery, in which all men, whilſt unconverted, are; and out of which they cannot lift themſelves, being ſtrengthleſs, yea dead in ſin: this is God's work; he takes out of this pit, he draws out of it by his efficacious grace; he raiſes up the poor out of the duſt, and lifts up the beggar from the dunghil; and this is an inſtance of his grace and mercy, and requires a new ſong of praiſe: or this may regard ſome great fall by ſin, from which he was reſtored, through the grace and power of God; or deliverance from great troubles, compared to waters, out of which he was drawn, Pſal. xviii. 16. and was lifted up above his enemies; and agrees very well with his being brought to his palace and throne again, upon the defeat of Abſalom. And haſt not made my foes to rejoice over me; as Satan does over unregenerate ſinners, when he poſſeſſes their hearts, and keeps the houſe and goods in peace; and as the men of the world do over fallen ſaints, when forſaken by the Lord, and afflicted by him, and are under the frowns of his providence; but the conſpirators againſt David were not ſuffered to ſucceed and rejoice over him, which they otherwiſe would have done; and for this he praiſes the Lord.

℣. 2. O Lord, my God, I cried unto thee, &c.] In the time of his diſtreſs and trouble; and whither ſhould he go but unto his covenant-God and Father? And thou haſt healed me; either of ſome bodily diſeaſe that attended him; for the Lord is the phyſician of the body, as well as of the ſoul; and that either immediately, or by giving a bleſſing to means uſed; and the glory of ſuch a mercy ſhould be given to him: or elſe of ſoul-diſeaſes, which which are natural and hereditary, epidemical, nauſeous, mortal, and incurable, but by the grace of God, and blood of Chriſt; and the healing of them either reſpects the pardon of them at firſt converſion; for healing diſeaſes, and forgiving iniquities, ſignify one and the ſame thing; or elſe freſh diſcoveries and applications of pardoning grace, after falls into ſin, which are an healing backſlidings, and reſtoring comforts; and this is God's work; none can heal but himſelf, and he does it effectually, univerſally, and freely, and which calls for thankfulneſs, Pſal. ciii. 1—3. or this may be underſtood in a civil ſenſe, of reſtoring him to his houſe, his throne and kingdom, and the peace of it.

[i] Jarchi, Kimchi, & Abendana, [k] ארוממך ſuperexaltabo te, Cocceius; elevabo te, Michaelis. [l] דליתני me ſurſum extraxiſti, Cocceius; ſo Michaelis; thou haſt drawn up me, Ainſworth.

℣. 3. O Lord, thou haſt brought up my ſoul from the grave, &c.] When his life being in danger, was near unto it, Job xxxiii. 22, 28. otherwiſe the ſoul dies not, nor does it lie and ſleep in the grave; or thou haſt brought up my ſoul from hell [m]; that is, delivered him from thoſe horrors of conſcience, and terrors of mind by reaſon of ſin, which were as hell itſelf unto him; ſee Pſal. cxvi. 3. Jonah ii. 2, 4. Thou haſt kept me alive; preſerved his corporal life when in danger, and maintained his ſpiritual life; and quickened him by his word, under all his afflictions, and kept him from utter and black deſpair. That I ſhould not go down to the pit; either of the grave or hell. There is in this clauſe a keri and a cetib; a marginal reading, and a textual writing: according to the latter it is, from them that go down to the pit; which ſome verſions [n] follow; that is, thou haſt preſerved me from going along with them, and being where, and as they are: our verſion follows the former; the ſenſe is the ſame.

℣. 4. Sing unto the Lord, O ye ſaints of his, &c.] Such to whom he has been gracious and merciful, and has bleſſed with pardoning grace, and juſtifying righteouſneſs, adoption, and a right to eternal life; and who are holy, godly perſons; in whoſe hearts principles of grace and holineſs are formed; and who are kind and bountiful to others; all which the word [o] here uſed ſignifies: and theſe are the Lord's; they are ſet apart for him, and they are ſanctified by him; and therefore ſhould ſing his praiſes, both vocally, and with melody in their hearts. And give thanks at the remembrance of his holineſs; which is eſſential to him, and in which he is glorious; and which appears in all his ways and works of providence and grace, and both in the redemption and ſanctification of his people; and beſides this, there is the holineſs of Chriſt, which is imputed to his ſaints, and the ſanctification of the Spirit, which is wrought in them; and at the remembrance of each of theſe, it highly becomes them to give thanks to the Lord, ſince hereby they are made meet to be partakers of his kingdom and glory.

℣. 5. For his anger endureth but a moment, &c.] Anger is not properly in God, he being a ſimple, uncompounded, immoveable and unchangeable being; nor is it ever towards his people in reality, unleſs anger is diſtinguiſhed from wrath, and is conſidered as conſiſtent with his everlaſting and unvariable love to them; but only in their apprehenſion, he doing thoſe things which in ſome reſpects are ſimilar to thoſe which men do when they are angry; he turns away from them and hides his face, he chides, chaſtiſes, and afflicts, and then they conclude he is angry; and when he returns again and takes off his hand, manifeſts his pardoning love, and comforts them, then they underſtand it that his anger is turned away from them; for in this improper ſenſe of it, and as his children conceive of it, it is but for a moment, or a very ſhort time; he forſakes them but for a moment, and their light afflictions endure no longer, Iſa. liv. 7, 8. 2 Cor. iv. 17. In his favour is life; by which is meant his free love and favour in Chriſt towards his people; and deſigns either the duration of it, that it lives and always is, even when he ſeems to be angry, and that it laſts as long as life does, yea to all eternity; neither death nor life can ſeparate from it; or the object of it, God delighting not in the death but the life of a ſinner; or rather the effects of it, it is what makes the preſent life to be properly life, and really comfortable; without it men may be ſaid rather to be dead than to live, notwithſtanding all enjoyments; and therefore it is better than life, abſtracted from it, Pſal. lxiii. 3. it quickens the ſoul in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and makes grace lively; it invigorates faith, encourages hope, and makes love to abound, and it iſſues in eternal life. Weeping may endure for a night; the alluſion is to the time when afflictions are uſually moſt heavy and preſſing upon perſons, when they moſt feel them, or however, are free from diverſion, and at leiſure to bemoan themſelves; and may point at the ſeaſon of weeping, and cauſe of it, the night of affliction, or of darkneſs and deſertion, and denotes the ſhort continuance of it; weeping is here repreſented as a perſon, and as a lodger, for the word may be rendered lodge [p]; but then it is as a wayfaring man, who continues but for a night; ſee Iſa. xvii. 14. But joy cometh in the morning; alluding to the time when all nature is freſh and gay, when man riſes chearful from his reſt, darkneſs removes, light breaks forth, and the ſun riſes and ſheds its beams, and every thing looks pleaſant and delightful; moreover, the mercies of God are new every morning, which cauſe joy, and call for thankfulneſs; and eſpecially it is a time of joy after weeping and darkneſs, when the ſun of righteouſneſs ariſes with healing in his wings; as it will be to perfection in the reſurrection-morn, when the dead in Chriſt will riſe firſt, and be like to him, and reign with him for evermore.

℣. 6. And in my proſperity, &c.] Either outward proſperity, when he was ſettled in his kingdom, and was acknowledged king by all the tribes of Iſrael, and had gotten the victory over all his enemies, and was at reſt from them round about; or inward and ſpiritual proſperity, having a ſpiritual appetite for the word, being in the lively exerciſe of grace, growing in it, and in the knowledge of Chriſt; favoured with communion with God, having freſh diſcoveries of pardoning grace and mercy, corruptions being ſubdued, the inward man renewed with ſpiritual ſtrength, and more fruitful in every good word and work. This being the caſe, I ſaid, I ſhall never be moved; ſo in outward proſperity men are apt to ſing a requiem to themſelves, and fancy it will always be thus with them, be in health of body, and enjoying the affluence of temporal things, and ſo put away the evil day in one ſenſe and another from them; and even good men themſelves are ſubject to this infirmity, Job xxix. 18—20. and who alſo, when in comfortable frames of ſoul, and in proſperous circumſtances in ſpiri-

tual

[m] מן שאול ab inferno, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth. [n] So Sept. V. L. Pagninus, Muſculus, Gejerus, Michaelis, Ainſworth. [o] חסידיו quos ipſe benignitate proſequitur, Junius & Tremellius; ſo Tigurine verſion. [p] ילין diverſetur, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; lodgeth, Ainſworth.

tual things, are ready to conclude, it will always be thus with them, or better. Indeed they can never be moved as to their ſtate and condition with reſpect to God; not from his heart, where they are ſet as a ſeal; nor out of the arms of Chriſt, and covenant of grace; nor out of the family of God; nor from a ſtate of juſtification and grace; but they may be moved as to the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty, in which they vary; and eſpecially when they are ſelf-confident, and depend upon their own ſtrength for the performance of theſe things, and for a continuance in ſuch frames, which ſeems to have been David's caſe; and therefore he corrects himſelf, and his ſenſe of things, in the following verſe.

℣. 7. Lord, by thy favour thou haſt made my mountain to ſtand ſtrong, &c.] The pſalmiſt found himſelf miſtaken, and acknowledges it; that as it was not owing to his own merit that he enjoyed the proſperity that he did, ſo neither was the continuance of it owing to his goodneſs, power, and ſtrength, but to the free grace and favour of God; as the church of God is compared to a mountain, and the ſeveral individuals of believers are like to mount Zion; ſo the ſoul of a child of God may be called his mountain, which is made ſtrong by the Lord as to its ſtate in Chriſt, being ſet on him, the rock of ages, and ſure foundation, where it is ſafe and ſecure; and as to its grace, whenever it is in any ſtrong exerciſe, which is altogether owing to the favour of God, and continues as long as he pleaſes. Thou didſt hide thy face, and I was troubled; the Lord may hide his face from his people, and yet their ſtate be ſafe; their mountain ſtands ſtrong in that reſpect; yet this generally produces a change of frames; it gives trouble, and faith and hope become feeble and languid in their acts and exerciſes; this ſhews the changeableneſs of frames, that they are not to be depended upon; that they are entirely owing to the pleaſure of God, and that rejoicing only ſhould be in him: very likely ſome regard is had to the affair of Abſalom's rebellion, which came unawares, unthought of, when David was in the greateſt proſperity and ſecurity.

℣. 8. I cried to thee, O Lord, &c.] In his trouble, when the Lord had hid his face from him, and he was ſenſible that he had departed from him; he was not ſtupid and unaffected with it; nor did he turn his back upon God, and ſought to others; but he cried after a departing God, which ſhewed love to him, and ſome degree of faith in him, by looking again towards his holy temple, and waiting upon him until he returned. And unto the Lord I made ſupplication; in the moſt humble manner; intreating his grace and mercy, and that he would again ſhew him his face and favour.

℣. 9. What profit is there in my blood? &c.] Should that be ſhed, and he die by the hands of his enemies, through divine permiſſion: death is not profitable to a man's ſelf by way of merit; it does not atone for ſin, ſatisfy juſtice, and merit heaven; even the death of martyrs, and of ſuch who ſhed their blood, died in the cauſe of Chriſt, and for his ſake, is not meritorious; it does not profit in ſuch ſenſe: there is profit in no blood but in the blood of Chriſt; by which peace is made, pardon procured, and redemption obtained. Indeed death is conſequentially profitable to good men; it is an outlet of all ſorrows and afflictions, and the inlet of joy and happineſs; it is the ſaints paſſage to heaven, and upon it they are immediately with Chriſt, and reſt from their labours: nor is there profit in the blood of the ſaints to them that ſhed it; for when inquiſition is made for it, vengeance will be taken on them who have ſhed it, and blood will be given them to drink, as will be particularly to antichriſt: nor is there any profit in it to the Lord himſelf; which ſeems to be what is chiefly deſigned, ſince it is uſed by the pſalmiſt as an argument with him in prayer, that he might not be left by him, and to his enemies, ſo as to periſh, ſince no glory could accrue to God by it from them; they would not give him thanks for it, but aſcribe it to themſelves, and ſay their own hand had done it; ſo far, the pſalmiſt ſuggeſts, would his death be from being profitable to God, that it would rather be a loſs to the intereſt of religion; ſince he had not as yet fully reſtored religion, and ſettled the pure worſhip of God in order, and made the preparations for the building the houſe of God, he intended. God may be glorified in the death of his people; either by their dying in the faith of intereſt in him; or by ſuffering death for his name-ſake; but, in a ſtrict ſenſe, there is nothing either in life or death in which man can be profitable unto God; ſee Job xxii. 2, 3. and xxxv. 7, 8. ſome underſtand this of life; becauſe the life is in the blood: as if the ſenſe was, of what advantage is life to me? it would have been better for me if I had never been born, had had no life and being at all, if I muſt for ever be baniſhed from thy preſence, and go down to the pit of hell, which they ſuppoſe is deſigned in the following phraſe. When I go down to the pit; though the grave ſeems rather to be meant, and the former ſenſe is beſt. Shall the duſt praiſe thee? that is, men, whoſe original is duſt, being reduced to duſt again, as the body at death, when laid in the grave, and corrupted there is; this lifeleſs duſt, cannot praiſe the Lord: the ſoul indeed dies not with the body; nor does it ſleep in the grave with it; nor is it un-employed in heaven; but is continually engaged in the high praiſes of God: but the ſenſe of the pſalmiſt is, that ſhould he die, and be buried, and be reduced to duſt, he ſhould no more praiſe the Lord in the land of the living, among men, to the glory of divine grace and goodneſs; ſo that this revenue of his glory would be loſt. Shall it declare thy truth? either the truth of the goſpel, which lies in the word of God; or rather the faithfulneſs of God in the performance of his promiſes; ſee Pſal. xl. 10. Iſa. xxxviii. 18, 19.

℣. 10. Hear, O Lord, and have mercy upon me, &c.] By lifting up the light of his countenance again upon him; by manifeſting and applying his pardoning grace to him, and by delivering him out of all his afflictions. Lord, be thou my helper; in this time of trouble; for he knew that vain was the help of man; and he was entirely in the right to betake himſelf to the Lord, who was able to help him, when none elſe could.

℣. 11. Thou haſt turned for me my mourning into dancing, &c.] This, with what follows, expreſſes the ſucceſs he had in ſeeking the Lord by prayer and ſupplication; there was a ſudden change of things, as it often is with the people of God; ſometimes they are mourning by reaſon of ſin, their own and others; or on account of afflictions; or becauſe of ſpiritual decays; or through the temptations of Satan; or, as it was the caſe of the pſalmiſt now, becauſe of the hidings of God's face; but this mourning is exchanged for joy and gladneſs, when the Lord diſcovers his pardoning love, revives his work in their ſouls, takes off his afflicting hand from them, rebukes the tempter, and delivers out of

of his temptations, and ſhews himſelf, his grace and favour. Thou haſt put off my ſackcloth; which was uſed in mourning for relations, and in times of calamity and diſtreſs, and as a token of humiliation and repentance, Gen. xxxvii. 34. Eſth. iv. 1. Jonah iii. 8. And girded me with gladneſs; by theſe phraſes the ſame thing is ſignified as before; ſee Iſa. lxi. 3.

℣. 12. To the end that my glory may ſing praiſe to thee, &c.] Meaning either his ſoul, the more noble and glorious part of him; or the members of his body, his tongue, which is the glory of it, and with which he glorified God; ſee Pſal. xvi. 9. compared with Acts ii. 26. this was the end that was to be anſwered, by changing the ſcene of things; and which was anſwered. O Lord my God, I will give thanks unto thee for ever; to the end of life, as long as he had a being, and to all eternity, Pſal. civ. 33. Jerom interprets the whole pſalm of the reſurrection of Chriſt.

PSALM XXXI.

To the chief muſician, a pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm, according to Arama, was compoſed by David when in Keilah; but, according to Kimchi and others, when the Ziphites propoſed to deliver him up into the hands of Saul; and who, upon their ſolicitations, came down and ſurrounded him with his army, from whom in haſte he made his eſcape, and to which he is thought to refer in ℣. 22. Theodoret ſuppoſes it was written by David when he fled from Abſalom, and that it has ſome reſpect in it to his ſin againſt Uriah, in that verſe.

℣. 1. In thee, O Lord, do I put my truſt, &c.] Not in any creature, but in the Lord Jehovah; the Targum, in thy Word; the eſſential Logos, or Word, which was in the beginning with God, and was God, and ſo an equal object of faith, truſt, and confidence, as Jehovah the Father: this act includes a truſting all with God, body and ſoul, and the welfare of them, in time, and to eternity; and a truſting him for all things, both of providence and grace, and for both grace and glory, and is a continued act; for the pſalmiſt does not ſay, I have truſted, or I will truſt, but I do; and this was a very conſiderable thing to do in this time of his diſtreſs: the Lord is to be truſted in at all times. Let me never be aſhamed; neither in this world, nor in that to come. The believer has no reaſon to be aſhamed of any thing in this life but ſin, and the imperfection of his own righteouſneſs, and his truſt in it; not of the Lord, in whom he truſts; nor of his Word, or Son, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in whom he believes as his Saviour and Redeemer; nor of the Spirit, and his work of grace upon him; nor of his faith, hope, truſt and confidence in them; nor of the goſpel, the means of faith, and of the ſupport of it; nor of the reproaches, afflictions, and ſufferings, he endures for the ſake of Chriſt and his goſpel; nor of his ordinances and his people; nor will he be aſhamed hereafter at the coming of Chriſt, when he will appear in his righteouſneſs, be clothed with white robes, have palms in his hands, and ſhall ſtand at his right hand, and be received into glory. Deliver me in thy righteouſneſs; not in his own, by which he knew there was no acceptance with God, no juſtification before him, nor any deliverance and ſalvation from ſin and death; but by the righteouſneſs of God, which the Son of God has wrought out, God the Father accepts of and imputes, and the Spirit of God reveals and applies; by this there is deliverance from ſin, its guilt, and damning power, and from the curſes and condemnation of the law, and from wrath to come, and from the ſecond death.

℣. 2. Bow down thine ear to me, &c.] Which is ſaid after the manner of men, who, when they give attention, and liſten to any thing, ſtoop, and incline the ear; and this for God to do, as he ſometimes does, is wonderful condeſcending grace! Deliver me ſpeedily; which ſhews that he was in great danger, and his caſe required haſte: the Lord does help right early, and is ſometimes a preſent help in time of need, and delivers at once, as ſoon as the mercy is aſked for. Be thou my ſtrong rock; for ſhelter and ſecurity from enemies, as well as to build his everlaſting ſalvation on, and to ſtand firmly upon, and out of danger. For an houſe of defence to ſave me; both for an houſe to dwell in, the Lord being the dwelling-place of his people in all generations, and a ſtrong habitation to which they may continually reſort; and for protection and ſafety, their place of defence in him being the munition of rocks, a ſtrong-hold, and a ſtrong tower from the enemy.

℣. 3. For thou art my rock and my fortreſs, &c.] What he prayed for he knew him to be, and to have been in times paſt, and could claim his intereſt in him; and therefore intreats, that he would appear to be to him what he was in himſelf, and what he had been to him. Therefore for thy name-ſake lead me, and guide me; either as a ſhepherd does his flock, gently, as they are able to bear it; into the green paſtures of the word and ordinances, and beſide the ſtill waters of divine love, and to the overflowing fountain, and fulneſs of grace in himſelf; or as a general leads and guides his army; Chriſt being a leader and commander of the people, and the great Captain of their ſalvation, and who being at the head of them, they fear no enemy; or as a guide leads and directs ſuch as are ignorant, and out of the way. The pſalmiſt deſires the Lord would lead him in the way of truth, and paths of righteouſneſs, according to his word; and guide him with his counſel, and by his Spirit, that ſo he might walk in the way in which he ſhould go; and this he intreats he would do for his name-ſake; not for any merit or worthineſs in him; but for the glory of his own name, and for the honour of his free grace and mercy, for which the Lord often does many things; he defers his anger, he purges away the ſins of his people, he forgives their tranſgreſſions, and remembers their ſins no more, for his name's-ſake.

℣. 4. Pull me out of the net that they have laid privily for me, &c.] The Ziphites, and Saul, and his men; the former intending treacherouſly to betray him, and the latter encompaſſing him about, in order to take him; and ſuch was his danger and difficulty, that he ſaw none but God could deliver him; him; and he it is that breaks the nets of men, and the ſnares of the devil, which they ſecretly lay for the people of God, that they may ſtumble, and fall, and be taken, and delivers them out of them. For thou art my ſtrength; the author, giver, and maintainer, both of his natural and ſpiritual ſtrength; and who was able, and was only able, to pull him out of the net, and extricate him out of the difficulties in which he was.

℣. 5. Into thine hand I commit my ſpirit, &c.] Either his life, as to a faithful Creator and preſerver, who was the God of his life, gave him it, and upheld his ſoul in it; or his ſoul, and the eternal ſalvation of it, which he committed into the hand of the Lord his Redeemer, where he knew it would be ſafe, and out of whoſe hands none can pluck; or this he might ſay, as apprehenſive of immediate death, through the danger he was in; and therefore commits his ſpirit into the hands of God, to whom he knew it belonged, and to whom it returns at death, and dies not with the body, but exiſts in a ſeparate ſtate, and would be immediately with him. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt uſed the ſame words when he was expiring on the croſs, and ſeems to have taken them from hence, or to refer to theſe, Luke xxiii. 46. Thou haſt redeemed me, O Lord God of truth; which may be underſtood, either of the temporal redemption of his life from deſtruction in times paſt, which encouraged him to commit his life into the hands of God now, who was the ſame, and changed not; or of ſpiritual and eternal redemption from ſin by the blood of Chriſt, and which the pſalmiſt ſpeaks of as if it was paſt, though it was to come, becauſe of the certainty of it; juſt as Iſaiah ſpeaks of the incarnation and ſufferings of Chriſt, Iſa. ix. 6. and liii. 4—6. and of which he was aſſured, becauſe the Lord, who had provided, appointed, and promiſed the Redeemer, was the God of truth, and was faithful to every word of promiſe; and Chriſt, who had engaged to be the Redeemer, was faithful to him that appointed him; and having an intereſt therefore in this plenteous redemption, by virtue of which he was the Lord's, he committed himſelf into his hands.

℣. 6. I have hated them that regard lying vanities, &c.] Soothſaying and divination, as Aben Ezra and others think; made uſe of by kings, and generals of armies, to know when it was proper to go out to war, and what ſucceſs they ſhould have; ſee Ezek. xxi. 21—23. Hoſ. iv. 12. but ſuch men and their practices David abhorred; he took no ſuch methods when in diſtreſs, but applied to the Lord, and truſted in him; or rather, idol-gods, as Jarchi and others, who are vanity, and the work of errors, and are nothing in the world; ſee Jon. ii. 8. all will-worſhip and ſuperſtition may be included in this phraſe, which being not according to the will and word of God, is worſhipping in vain, and carries off from true ſpiritual worſhip; and ſo is a lying vanity, and to be deteſted, and the abettors of it: as alſo all errors and hereſies; theſe are great ſwelling words of vanity, and are lies in hypocriſy; and likewiſe all immorality and wickedneſs, which ſpring from the vanity of the mind, and promiſe much liberty and pleaſure, but deceive, and therefore lying; yea, all worldly enjoyments, are vanity and vexation of ſpirit, and are fallacious and deceitful when truſted in; and indeed every falſe truſt and confidence may come under this name; ſuch as truſt in riches, in wiſdom and knowledge, in carnal deſcent and privileges, in a moral and legal righteouſneſs, and even in a bare profeſſion of true religion, and a ſubjection to goſpel-ordinances; for there is no true object of truſt, no Redeemer and Saviour, but the Lord: now ſuch as regard thoſe lying vanities, are they that look to them, love them, embrace them, and put their confidence in them; and ſuch are to be hated; not their perſons, but their principles and practices, and they themſelves are to be ſhunned and abſtained from. But I truſt in the Lord; the God of truth, that cannot lie, deny himſelf, nor deceive; who is unchangeable, and without any variableneſs, or ſhadow of turning.

℣. 7. I will be glad, and rejoice in thy mercy, &c.] Both becauſe of the nature of it, which is large and abundant, free and ſovereign, from everlaſting to everlaſting, and is communicated in and through Chriſt, and is a good ground of hope and truſt; and becauſe of the effects of it, or what it has produced; for to it are owing the covenant of grace, and all the ſure mercies of it; the miſſion of Chriſt, and redemption by him; regeneration, and the forgiveneſs of ſins, and even eternal life and glory; beſides a multitude of bleſſings, deliverances, and ſalvations in providence; on account of all which, there is great reaſon for joy and gladneſs; of which the following are particulars. For thou haſt conſidered my trouble; inward, ariſing from indwelling ſin, doubts and fears, deſertions and darkneſs, and Satan's temptations; and outward, from the world, and the men of it, and by reaſon of bodily afflictions: now the Lord looks upon the troubles of his people, and upon them in them, with an eye of pity and compaſſion; he ſympathizes with them; he conſiders the nature of their trouble, their weakneſs to bear it, and the beſt way, means, and time to deliver out of it; he working all things after the counſel of his own will; ſee Exod. iii. 7. Thou haſt known my ſoul in adverſities; that is, the Lord had took notice of him, approved of him, loved him, had viſited him, and made known his love to him, and owned him for his own, and had choſen him in the furnace of affliction; a time and ſeaſon, when oftentimes friends and acquaintance are ſhy, and will not look upon men, know them and own them; but the Lord does otherwiſe, and which is another reaſon of joy and gladneſs in his mercy.

℣. 8. And haſt not ſhut me up into the hand of the enemy, &c.] When in Keilah, in the wilderneſs of Ziph and Maon, and encompaſſed about by Saul and his army, 1 Sam. xxiii. 7, 13, 14, 24, 25, 26. nor does the Lord ſuffer his people to be ſhut up under the power of ſin and Satan, ſo that they cannot come forth in the exerciſe of grace, and the diſcharge of duty; but he brings their ſouls out of priſon, that they may praiſe his name. Thou haſt ſet my feet in a large room; at full liberty from his enemies; Saul and his army being called off from purſuing him, by tidings of an invaſion by the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. xxiii. 27—29. and this is the caſe of the ſaints when they are brought to Chriſt, to walk by faith at large on him; when grace is drawn forth into exerciſe, and ſpiritual knowledge is increaſed, and they are delivered from their enemies; or, however, can look upon them as conquered ones, and are ſure of victory over them, and at laſt of an entire deliverance from them; ſee Pſal. iv. 1. and xviii. 19. and cxviii. 5.

℣. 9. Have mercy upon me, O Lord, for I am in trouble, &c.] A ſudden change of caſe and frame this! and ſo it is with the people of God, as ſoon as out of one trouble, they are in another; theſe are what are appointed for them, and lie in their path-way to heaven, and are neceſſary; and under them it is quite right to betake themſelves to the Lord, who is a merciful God; and it is beſt to caſt themſelves upon his mercy, having no merit of their own to plead with him; and they may freely tell him all their diſtreſſes, as the pſalmiſt here does, and hope for grace and mercy to help them in time of need. Mine eye is conſumed with grief; expreſſed by tears; through the multitude of which, by reaſon of trouble, his ſight was much hurt; according to Jarchi, the word ſignifies, that his ſight was ſo dim as is a man's when he puts a glaſs before his eyes, to ſee what is beyond the glaſs: this ſhews that the invention of ſpectacles was before the year 1105; for in that year Jarchi died; and proves it more early than by other writer has pretended to [a]; for the commonly received opinion is, that they were invented at the latter end of the 13th, or beginning of the 14th century; but the apoſtle, as A-Lapide thinks, reſpects them, in 1 Cor. xiii. 12. and they are mentioned by Plautus [b], who lived almoſt two hundred years before the birth of Chriſt: the ſame Jarchi obſerves on Pſal. vi. 7. Yea, my ſoul and my belly; perhaps he could not eat his food, or digeſt it, which brought upon him internal diſorders, and even brought his ſoul or life into danger.

are

℣. 10. For my life is ſpent with grief, and my years with ſighing, &c.] Which ſhews the continuance of his troubles, and that his whole life had been, as it were, an uninterrupted ſeries of ſorrows. My ſtrength faileth becauſe of mine iniquity; this opens the ſource and ſpring of all his grief and trouble; his ſin, and the ſin of his nature, in which he was conceived and born; indwelling ſin, which remained and worked in him; and it may be alſo, the ſin of unbelief, which beſet him, and prevailed in him, notwithſtanding the inſtances of divine goodneſs, the declarations of grace, the diſcoveries of love, and the exceeding great and precious promiſes he had made to him; as alſo his daily ſins and infirmities, and very likely ſome great backſlidings, which had brought grief of ſoul upon him, and which grief affected the ſeveral parts of his body. Sin was the cauſe of the failure of natural ſtrength in Adam and his poſterity; of diſeaſes and death, by which their ſtrength is weakened in the way, and was the cauſe of impairing moral ſtrength in men to do that which is good, and has a very great influence on the ſpiritual ſtrength of the Lord's people, in the exerciſe of grace. And my bones are conſumed; which are the firmeſt and ſtrongeſt parts of the human body, and the ſupport of it.

℣. 11. I was a reproach among all mine enemies, &c.] This is a common caſe of the people of God; and though it may be the leaſt of their afflictions, yet it is not grateful to the fleſh; and it is as it is made: under divine ſupports ſaints rejoice, and take pleaſure in reproaches, that they are counted worthy to bear them, and eſteem them as great riches; at other times they ſeize and feed upon their ſpirits, and are ready to break their hearts. But eſpecially among my neighbours; who knew him, and knew he did not deſerve to be ſo treated; and who ought, as neighbours, to have loved him, and done all good offices to him; ſo that this is an aggravation, both of their ſin and his diſtreſs. And a fear to mine acquaintance; not that they were afraid that he ſhould do them any miſchief; but they were afraid to own him, and to do him any ſervice; unleſs the ſenſe is, that they were afraid that evil would befal him, that he ſhould not eſcape with his life; which, though it may expreſs the affectionate concern of his friends, yet ſhews the danger he was expoſed to. They that did ſee me without, fled from me; as if he had ſomething very peſtilential and infectious about him.

℣. 12. I am forgotten as a dead man out of mind, &c.] Either by his friends, being out of ſight, out of mind; as even the neareſt relations and acquaintance are, in proceſs of time, when dead, Eccl. ix. 5. or by the Lord; which ſhews the weakneſs of his faith, the uncomfortable frame he was in, through darkneſs and deſertion; ſee Pſal. lxxxviii. 5. Iſa. xlix. 14—16. I am like a broken veſſel; or a periſhing veſſel [c]; or a veſſel of perdition [d]: the Septuagint verſion renders it a loſt veſſel [e]; one entirely uſeleſs, wholly loſt, and irrecoverably ſo; like a broken veſſel, which can never be put together again, Iſa. xxx. 14. Jer. xix. 11. a moſt ſad apprehenſion he had of himſelf, as if his caſe was deſperate, and he a veſſel of wrath; compare with this Rom. ix. 22.

℣. 13. For I have heard the ſlander of many, &c.] Both enemies and neighbours. Fear was on every ſide; his enemies were a Magor Miſſabib to him, Jer. xx. 3. encompaſſed him around, ſo that he was in fear from every quarter. While they took counſel together againſt me; how to apprehend him, and what to do with him. They deviſed to take away my life; nothing ſhort of that would ſatisfy; but life is in the hand of God; men may deviſe, but God diſappoints, and his counſel ſtands; hence the pſalmiſt was encouraged, after all, to truſt in him, in this time of imminent danger, as follows.

℣. 14. But I truſted in thee, O Lord, &c.] His faith revived again under all the diſcouraging views he had of things, and was exerciſed upon the Lord; he committed himſelf to him, believing he was able to help him in his time of trouble, and deliver him. I ſaid, Thou art my God; he claimed his covenant-intereſt in him, and uſed it as an argument with him to have regard unto him, and as a ſupport to his faith in his preſent diſtreſs; ſee the note on Pſal. vii. 1.

℣. 15. My times are in thy hand, &c.] And not in the hand of his enemies; as his time of life and death, which was only by the direction and appointment of God, was in his power, and fixed by him; nor could his enemies take away his life before his time, and without the will of his covenant-God: the time of his coming to the throne, and what was gone over him during his reign hitherto, 1 Chron. xxix. 30. and all his times of trouble in it; times of proſperity and of adverſity; of darkneſs, deſertion, and temptation; and of joy, peace, and comfort; theſe were all in the hands of the Lord, at his diſpoſe, and ordered by him for the good of his ſervant, and for the glory of his own name; and this was a quieting conſideration to the pſalmiſt under his preſent trials and exerciſes; the Targum is, the times of my redemption. Deliver me from the hand of mine enemies, and from them that perſecute me; a good man has many enemies, and even his very goodneſs creates him ſuch; for wicked men are enemies to all that is good; and thoſe are perſecuting ones, in one way or other; either by

[a] See Chambers's Dictionary on the word SPECTACLES. [b] Vid. Ainſworth's Lat. Dict. in voce Conſpicill. & Panciroll. rer. memorab. par. 2. tit. 15. & Salmuth. in ib. p. 263.
[c] ככלי אבד ſicut vas periens, Montanus, Coccejus, Gejerus. [d] So Ainſworth. [e] V. L. Pagninus, Muſculus, Piſcator.

by words or deeds; and deliverance out of their hands is by the Lord, who ſometimes gives his people reſt from adverſity, and ſuffers not the rod of the wicked to continue on them; and therefore it is beſt to apply to him for it.

℣. 16. Make thy face to ſhine upon thy ſervant, &c.] In which he prays for the gracious preſence of God, the manifeſtations of himſelf unto him, the diſcoveries of his love, the enjoyment of him in Chriſt, communion with him, the comforts of his ſpirit, and the joys of his ſalvation; ſee Numb. vi. 25, 26. Save me for thy mercies ſake; not for any merit and righteouſneſs of his own, but for the ſake of the grace and goodneſs of the Lord; which is putting ſalvation, whether temporal or ſpiritual, upon its right foot and foundation; which is never wrought out by, or is for works of righteouſneſs done by men, but according to the grace and mercy of God.

℣. 17. Let me not be aſhamed, O Lord, &c.] The ſame petition as in ℣. 1. For I have called upon thee; who is nigh unto all that call upon him in truth, and is rich unto them, and has promiſed to help and ſave them; which ſhould he not do, not only he would be made aſhamed, but the promiſe of God would ſeem to fail: for the pſalmiſt does not plead any duty of his, nor make a merit of his prayers; but has reſpect to the promiſe and faithfulneſs of God. Let the wicked be aſhamed; as they will be, ſooner or later, of their wickedneſs, and of their falſe truſt and confidence; of their being incenſed againſt Chriſt, and their rage againſt his people, and perſecution of them. And let them be ſilent in the grave; as all are that are there; and the ſenſe is, let them be brought to the grave, where they will be ſilent, or ceaſe[f]; that is, from their evil words and works, and particularly from troubling the ſaints, Job iii. 17.

℣. 18. Let the lying lips be put to ſilence, &c.] Being convicted of the lies told by them, and ſo ſilenced and confounded; or being cut off and deſtroyed, as all ſuch will be in the Lord's own time, Pſal. xii. 3. It is very likely the pſalmiſt may have reſpect either to Doeg the Edomite, who loved lying rather than righteouſneſs; or to others that were about Saul, who lying ſaid to him that David ſought his hurt, even to take away his kingdom, and his life, Pſal. lii. 3. 1 Sam. xxiv. 9. Which ſpeak grievous things proudly and contemptuouſly againſt the righteous; meaning himſelf; not that he thought himſelf righteous in the ſight of God by any righteouſneſs of his own, but by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to him; ſee Pſal. cxliii. 2. Rom. iv. 6. Though he may have regard here to the righteouſneſs of his cauſe before men, and aſſert himſelf righteous, as he might with reſpect to the grievous things, the hard and lying ſpeeches, which were ſpoken againſt him, in a proud, haughty and contemptuous manner. And it is no unuſual thing for ſuch falſe charges to be brought againſt righteous men; nay ſuch hard ſpeeches were ſpoken by ungodly men againſt Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, himſelf, Jude 15. The Targum interprets it of reproaches.

℣. 19. O how great is thy goodneſs, &c.] Not the natural and eſſential goodneſs of God; for tho' that is large and abundant, yea infinite, as every perfection of his is, yet it cannot with propriety be ſaid to be laid up and wrought out; but rather the effects of his goodneſs, and not thoſe which appear in providence, for they, though very large and plenteous, are common to all, and are not reſtrained to them that fear the Lord, and truſt in him; but ſuch as are diſplayed in a way of ſpecial grace and favour to his own people, and which the pſalmiſt ſaw his intereſt in and was affected with; and which ſupported his faith under his preſent troubles, and appeared to be ſo great both for quality and quantity, that he could not well ſay how great the bleſſings of his goodneſs were. Which thou haſt laid up for them that fear thee; both grace and glory; the bleſſings of grace were laid up in God's heart, in his thoughts and purpoſes, from everlaſting; and in Chriſt, in whom the fulneſs of all grace dwells; he was prevented with the bleſſings of goodneſs, and his people were bleſſed in him with all ſpiritual bleſſings, and had all grace given them in him before the world was; and theſe were likewiſe laid up in the covenant of grace, ordered in all things and ſure; eternal glory is the hope and crown of righteouſneſs laid up in heaven, where it is reſerved for the ſaints who are heirs of it: and the laying up of all this goodneſs ſhews it to be a treaſure, riches of grace, and riches of glory; and that it is an hidden treaſure, and riches of ſecret places, which are out of the view of carnal men, and not perfectly ſeen and enjoyed by the people of God themſelves as yet; and alſo that it is ſafe and ſecure for them, and can never be loſt; and it expreſſes the paternal care of God, his great love and affection for them, to lay up ſo early ſo much goodneſs for them: and this is ſaid to be for them that fear him, not naturally but by his grace; for the fear of God is not in man naturally, but is put there by the grace of God; and ſuch who have it are thoſe who are brought to a true ſight and ſenſe of ſin, ſo as to loath it and forſake it; for the fear of the Lord is to hate evil, and by it men depart from it, and becauſe of it cannot ſin as others do; ſuch have an humble ſenſe of themſelves, their own inſufficiency and weakneſs, and truſt in the grace of God and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; they have a filial reverence of God, and worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth: but now this fear of the Lord is not the cauſe of goodneſs being laid up for them, for that only is the will of God; and beſides the fear of God is a part of the goodneſs which is laid up in promiſe in the covenant of grace, Jer. xxxii. 39, 40. and it is the goodneſs of God diſplayed in the bleſſings of it, ſuch as pardon of ſin, &c. which influences, promotes, and increaſes the fear of God, Hoſ. iii. 5. Pſal. cxxx. 4. but, goodneſs being manifeſted to and beſtowed upon them that fear the Lord, it appears eventually to be laid up for them. Which thou haſt wrought for them that truſt in thee, before the ſons of men; by which may be meant the work of redemption, in which the goodneſs of God greatly appears; in calling and appointing Chriſt unto it, in ſending him to effect it, in ſtrengthening him as man and mediator to do it; and in the work itſelf, in which many things are wrought, the law is fulfilled, juſtice ſatisfied, a righteouſneſs brought in, peace made, pardon procured, and everlaſting ſalvation obtained. And whereas this is ſaid to be wrought for them that truſt in the Lord; it is not to be underſtood as if truſting in the Lord was the cauſe of this work being wrought out, which is the love of God and grace of Chriſt; but inaſmuch as thoſe that truſt in the Lord have openly an intereſt in redemption, and they that believe in Chriſt ſhall be ſaved; therefore it clearly appears in the iſſue of things to be wrought out for them. The phraſe, before the ſons of men, may be connected either with the goodneſs wrought, wrought, and ſo ſignifies that the work of redemption was done in a moſt public manner, openly before men, even the enemies of God's people; nor was it in the power of men and devils to hinder it; or elſe with truſting in the Lord, and ſo is expreſſive of a public profeſſion of faith and confidence in the Lord before men, which ought to be done: moreover this goodneſs wrought may include the good work of grace upon the ſoul; and the Lord's fulfilling the good pleaſure of his goodneſs in the hearts of his people, and the work of faith with power on them; and alſo the many deliverances of them out of afflictions and temptations, and the many ſalvations from their enemies, he works for them in the earth, before the ſons of men.

[f] Verbum eſt דמם quod ſignificat ceſſare ab aliquo opere, vel ſermone, Pſal. iv. 5. Gejerus.

℣. 20. Thou ſhalt hide them in the ſecret of thy preſence, &c.] That is, thoſe that fear the Lord and truſt in him; and therefore they are called his hidden ones, Pſalm lxxxiii. 3. theſe the Lord preſerves in times of trouble and danger, and when his indignation is out againſt others; and ſo the Targum is, in the time of thine anger; ſee Iſa. xxvi. 20. the preſence of God is their protection, he himſelf is a wall of fire round about them, his favour compaſſes them as a ſhield, and they are kept as in a garriſon by his power; ſee Pſal. xci. 1. and that from the pride of man, which otherwiſe would at once oppreſs, bear them down, and deſtroy them, Pſal. cxxiv. 1—5. Thou ſhalt keep them ſecretly in a pavilion from the ſtrife of tongues; which are as a ſharp ſword, and from whence proceed devouring words, ſuch contradiction of ſinners as Chriſt endured; not that the ſaints are kept free from the reproaches of men, from the laſh of their tongues, but from being hurt by them; and ſometimes through the ſtrivings and contentions of men with one another, they privately eſcape and are preſerved, as the apoſtle Paul was, Acts xxiii. 9, 10.

℣. 21. Bleſſed be the Lord, &c.] A form of thankſgiving, in which the pſalmiſt calls upon himſelf and others to bleſs and praiſe the Lord for the ſingular mercy granted him, expreſſed in the next clauſe; ſee the note on Pſal. xviii. 46. For he hath ſhewed me his marvelous kindneſs in a ſtrong city; either in the city Keilah, ſo Jarchi; a city which had gates and bars, where Saul thought he had David ſafe, and he could not eſcape his hands; but notwithſtanding that, and though the inhabitants of that place intended to deliver him up, yet he was marvelouſly ſaved; as he alſo was from the Ziphites; and when Saul and his army had encompaſſed him about, by a ſurprizing incident, a meſſenger coming to Saul juſt as he was about to ſeize him, informing him that the Philiſtines had invaded the land, 1 Sam. xxiii. 7—29. Or the city of Jeruſalem, which was fortified both by nature and art, whither he was brought and placed as king, and enjoyed reſt from all his enemies round about him, 2 Sam. v. 6—9. and vii. 1. Or this may ſpiritually deſign the church of God, which is called a ſtrong city, being built on Chriſt the Rock, and having ſalvation for walls and bulwarks, Iſa. xxvi. 1. where the Lord diſplays his banner of love, makes diſcoveries of his marvelous kindneſs, and commands his bleſſing for evermore. Some render it as in a ſtrong city [g], and take the ſenſe to be, that he was ſafe through the kindneſs of God ſhewed to him in the ſalvation of him, as if he was in a fortified city [h], and this was marvelous in his eyes, as every inſtance of providential goodneſs is to the people of God; eſpecially his loving-kindneſs ſhewed in ſpiritual things, in chooſing them in Chriſt, ſaving them by him, regenerating them by his Spirit, and taking them into his family; which love is free and ſovereign, diſtinguiſhing, unchangeable, from everlaſting to everlaſting; and ſo wonderful and aſtoniſhing; and which was hid in God until revealed; and ſometimes the manifeſtations of it are withdrawn, and then it is ſhewed again, and freſh diſcoveries of it are made, and effects of it applied, and the bleſſings of it beſtowed, which occaſion thankfulneſs.

℣. 22. For I ſaid in my haſte, &c.] When he made haſte to get away for fear of Saul, 1 Sam. xxiii. 26. and ſo the Targum renders it, I ſaid when I ſought to flee away; or elſe he ſaid this haſtily and raſhly, in the hurry of his mind, being in the utmoſt confuſion and diſtreſs, as in Pſal. cxvi. 11. I am cut off from before thine eyes; his caſe was very bad, he was reduced to the utmoſt extremity, and his faith was as low; he thought it was all over with him, and there was no way of eſcape, nor hope of it; and that he was like a branch cut off, ready to be caſt into the fire; that he was cut off from the houſe of God, and from communion with him; that he would never look upon him more, and he ſhould never enjoy his preſence: this inſtance of weakneſs and unbelief is mentioned to illuſtrate the goodneſs of God, and to make his kindneſs appear to be the more marvelous in the ſalvation of him; ſo ſometimes the Lord ſuffers his people to be in the utmoſt diſtreſs, and their faith to be at the loweſt ebb, when he appears to their help, and makes it manifeſt that their ſalvation is by his own arm, and of his own good will, and not by them, or for any goodneſs of theirs. Nevertheleſs, thou heardeſt the voice of my ſupplications when I cried unto thee; for though faith was very low, and unbelief ſtrongly prevailed, yet he was not ſo far gone as to leave off praying; for though he ſaw no rational way of eſcape, and feared the Lord would take no notice of him; yet he knew that nothing was impoſſible with him, and therefore he ſtill looked up to him, as Jonah did when he thought himſelf in a like condition, Jonah ii. 4. and ſuch was the grace and goodneſs of God, that he did not deſpiſe but regard his prayer, though attended with ſo much weakneſs and unbelief.

℣. 23. O love the Lord, all ye his ſaints, &c.] To whom his goodneſs extends; who are favoured with the bleſſings of his grace, as pardon, peace, and righteouſneſs; and who particularly are ſanctified by his Spirit, and have principles of grace and holineſs wrought in their hearts: theſe, even all of them, are called upon to love the Lord, having that grace implanted in their ſouls; that is, to expreſs it, not by words, but by deeds, under a ſenſe of the love and kindneſs of God to them; and to join with the pſalmiſt in an affectionate reverence of him, truſt in him, and thankfulneſs to him, on account of his marvelous kindneſs ſhewed him. For the Lord preſerveth the faithful; ſuch as truſt in him, believe in Chriſt, and are faithful to his word and ordinances, abide by them, and keep cloſe with his people; theſe he not only preſerves in a providential way, but he preſerves them in a way of ſpecial grace; he keeps them from evil, as the Targum; from the evil of ſin; from a total and final falling away by it; from the evil of the world, ſo as not to be drawn off from Chriſt and his ways, either by its frowns or flatteries; and from the evil one, Satan, from being deſtroyed by him and [g] בעיר מצור ut in civitate munita, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Michaelis.

[h] Aben Ezra, Kimchi & Ben Melech in loc.

and his temptations; and theſe are preſerved ſafe to the kingdom and glory of Chriſt, by the mighty power of God: ſome render the words, the Lord keepeth faithfulneſs[i]; he will never ſuffer his own faithfulneſs to fail; he is a covenant-keeping God, and is always true to his word and promiſe. And plentifully rewardeth the proud doer; ſuch as all ſelf-righteous perſons are, and all that ſpeak grievous things proudly and contemptuouſly againſt the truly righteous, ℣. 18. who bear hard upon them, and oppreſs them; and ſuch as antichriſt and his party, who exalts himſelf above all that is called God; but in what thoſe deal proudly, God is above them, an over-match for them, and he ſets himſelf againſt them; he reſiſts them, and will reward them according to their works.

℣. 24. Be of good courage, and he ſhall ſtrengthen your heart, &c.] See the note on Pſal. xxvii. 14. by this inſtance of God's wonderful kindneſs to the pſalmiſt, he would have the ſaints take heart, and be of good chear, even in the greateſt diſtreſſes, ſince their caſe cannot be worſe than his was; and yet he had deliverance out of it. All ye that hope in the Lord; for the eye of the Lord is on ſuch, and he takes delight in them, Pſal. xxxiii. 18. and cxlvii. 11. The Targum is, who hope for, or truſt in the word of the Lord; the eſſential Word, the promiſed Meſſiah.

PSALM XXXII.

A pſalm of David, Maſchil.

THIS is the firſt of the pſalms that bears this title: ſome think it is the name of a muſical inſtrument, on which this pſalm was ſung; others the firſt word of a ſong, to the tune of which it was ſung, as Aben Ezra; ſome ſay, it is ſo called, becauſe it was explained by an interpreter, as Jarchi; and the Rabbins[k] ſay, that every pſalm that is called Maſchil, was dictated by an interpreter: the Targum renders it a good underſtanding; and the word properly ſignifies inſtruction, or cauſing to underſtand[l]; and it may be the apoſtle has ſome reference to this title in 1 Cor. xiv. 15. It is an inſtructive pſalm; a didaſcalic ode, as Junius renders it: it gives an account how the pſalmiſt was inſtructed under a diſpenſation of providence; and was brought to a ſenſe of ſin, and acknowledgment of it; and was favoured with a diſcovery of pardoning grace; and in it he takes upon him to inſtruct others, ℣. 8, 9. and does inſtruct in the doctrine of the pardon of ſin by the grace of God.

℣. 1. Bleſſed is he whoſe tranſgreſſion is fargiven, &c.] Or lifted up[m]; bore and carried away: ſin is a tranſgreſſion of the law; the guilt of it charged upon the conſcience of a ſinner is a heavy burden, too heavy for him to bear, and the puniſhment of it is intolerable: forgiveneſs is a removal of ſin, guilt, and puniſhment. Sin was firſt taken off, and transferred from the ſinner to Chriſt, the ſurety; and was laid upon him really and judicially, as the ſins of the people of Iſrael were put upon the ſcapegoat typically; and was bore by him, both guilt and puniſhment, and taken away, finiſhed, and made an end of; and by the application of his blood and ſacrifice, it is taken away from the ſinner's conſcience; it is cauſed to paſs from him, and is removed afar off, as far as the eaſt is from the weſt; it is ſo lifted off from him as to give him eaſe and peace, and ſo as never to return to the deſtruction of him; wherefore ſuch a man is a happy man; he has much peace, comfort, calmneſs, and ſerenity of mind now, can appear before God with intrepidity, and ſerve him without fear; no bill of indictment can hereafter be found againſt him; no charge will be exhibited, and ſo no condemnation to him. The ſame is expreſſed, though in different words, in the next clauſe. Whoſe ſin is covered; not by himſelf, by any works of righteouſneſs done by him; for theſe are a covering too narrow; nor by excuſes and extenuations; for proſperity and happineſs do not attend ſuch a conduct, Prov. xxviii. 13. but by Chriſt; he is the mercy-ſeat, the covering of the Law; who is the covert of his people from the curſes of it, and from the ſtorm of divine wrath and vengeance, due to the tranſgreſſions of it; his blood is the purple covering of the chariot, under which the ſaints ride ſafe to heaven; the lines of his blood are drawn over crimſon and ſcarlet ſins, by which they are blotted out, and are not legible; and being clothed with the robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, all their ſins are covered from the eye of divine juſtice; not from the eye of God's omniſcience, which ſees the ſins of all men, and beholds thoſe of his own people; and which he takes notice of, and corrects for, in a fatherly way; but from vindictive juſtice, they are ſo hid as not to be imputed and charged, nor the ſaints to be condemned for them; ſuch are unblameable and unreproveable in the ſight of God, and are all fair in the eyes of Chriſt; and their ſins are cauſed to paſs away from themſelves, and they have no more ſight and conſcience of them; and tho' ſought for at the laſt day, they will not be found and brought to light, nor be ſeen by men or angels. There is ſomething unſeemly, impure, nauſeous, abominable, and provoking in ſin; which will not bear to be ſeen by the Lord, and therefore muſt be covered, or the ſinner can never ſtand in his preſence and be happy.

℣. 2. Bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, &c.] Or does not think of it[n]; with reſpect unto men, at leaſt to the hurt of them; his thoughts are thoughts of peace, and not of evil; their ſins and iniquities he remembers no more; he does not charge them with them, he does not reckon them, or place them to their account, having imputed them to his Son; ſee 2 Cor. v. 19. The apoſtle Paul interprets this as inclufive of the imputation of righteouſneſs without works; even of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, in which the bleſſedneſs of a man lies, Rom. iv. 6—8. for ſuch an one is accepted with God, is juſtified in his ſight, and is ſecure from condemnation and wrath; it is well with him at all times, in life, at death, and at judgment; he is an heir of eternal life, will enter into it, and be for ever glorified. And in whoſe ſpirit there is no guile; for being thoroughly convinced of ſin, he is ſincere in his repentance for it, it, without deceit and hypocriſy in his confeſſion of it; as David, the apoſtle Paul, and the publican were, when they acknowledged themſelves ſinners; his faith, in looking to Chriſt for pardon and righteouſneſs, is from the heart, and is unfeigned, and ſo is his profeſſion of it before God, angels, and men; and whatever hypocriſy and guile are remaining in the old man, there is none in the new ſpirit put into him; in the new man, which is created in him, and which ſinneth not: as the other phraſes are expreſſive of pardon and juſtification, this points at internal ſanctification, and which ſerves to compleat the deſcription of the happy man; ſuch an one as David himſelf was; and this happineſs he illuſtrates from his own experience in the following verſes.

[i] אמונים fidelitatem, Gejerus; or fidelities, Ainſworth. [k] Elias Levita in Tiſhbi, p. 271. [l] משכיל erudiens, Muſculus, Munſter, Vatablus, Montanus; informans, Gejerus; an inſtructing pſalm, Ainſworth. [m] Verbum נשא elevavit quandoque idem eſt ac condonavit, Gejerus; נשוי ablata eſt, Piſcator, Cocceius. [n] יחשב cogitat, Piſcator; cogitando reputavit, Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth.

℣. 3. When I kept ſilence, &c.] Was unthoughtful of ſin, unconcerned about it, and made no acknowledgment and confeſſion of it to God, being quite ſenſeleſs and ſtupid; the Targum adds, from the words of the law; which ſeems to point at ſin as the cauſe of what follows. My bones waxed old; through my roaring all the day long; not under a ſenſe of ſin, but under ſome ſevere affliction, and through impatience in it; not conſidering that ſin lay at the bottom, and was the occaſion of it; and ſuch was the violence of the diſorder, and his uneaſineſs under it, that his ſtrength was dried up by it, and his bones ſtuck out as they do in aged perſons, whoſe fleſh is waſted away from them; ſee Pſal. cii. 3, 5.

℣. 4. For day and night thy hand was heavy upon me, &c.] Meaning the afflicting hand of God, which is not joyous, but grievous, and heavy to be borne; eſpecially without his gracious preſence, and the diſcoveries of his love: this continued night and day, without any intermiſſion; and may deſign ſome violent diſtemper; perhaps a fever; ſince it follows, My moiſture is turned into the drought of ſummer. Selah. that is, the radical moiſture in him was almoſt dried up, as brooks in the ſummer-ſeaſon; his body was parched, as it were, with the burning heat of the diſeaſe; or with an apprehenſion of the wrath of God under it, or both: and ſo he continued until he was brought to a true ſenſe of ſin, and an acknowledgment of it, when he had the diſcoveries of pardoning love, as is expreſſed in the next verſe. The Septuagint, and Vulgate Latin verſions read, I am turned into diſtreſs, through a thorn being fixed; and ſo Apollinarius paraphraſes the words, "I am become miſerable, becauſe "thorns are fixed in my ſkin;" reading קוץ for קיץ; and which Suidas[o] interprets ſin, that being like the thorn, unfruitful and pricking; ſee 2 Cor. xii. 7.

℣. 5. I acknowledged my ſin unto thee, &c.] The ſin of Adam, in which he was concerned; original ſin, the corruption of his nature, the ſin that dwelt in him, his private and ſecret ſins, which none knew but God and himſelf; even all his ſins, which were many, with all their aggravated circumſtances; wherefore he uſes various words to expreſs them by, in this and the following clauſes; as ſin, iniquity, and tranſgreſſions; the ſame that are uſed in the doctrine of pardon in the preceding verſes; his confeſſion being of the ſame extent with pardon: and all theſe he calls his own; as nothing is more a man's own than his ſins are; and theſe the pſalmiſt acknowledged to the Lord; or made, or will make known[p] to him: not that any ſin is unknown to God, even the moſt ſecret ones; but they may be ſaid to be made known to God, when a ſinner makes a ſincere and hearty acknowledgment of them before him, and expreſſes his own ſenſe of them; how that they are with him, and ever before him, what knowledge rather he has of them, how much he is affected with them, and concerned for the commiſſion of them; and ſuch an acknowledgment the Lord expects and requires of his people, Jer. iii. 12, 13. And mine iniquity have I not hid; by retaining it as a ſweet morſel under his tongue; for he not only acknowledged it, but forſook it; or by not confeſſing it, as Achan; for non-confeſſion of ſin is hiding it; or by denying it, as Gehazi, Ananias and Sapphira; or by palliating and extenuating it; or by caſting the blame on others, as did Adam and his wife; ſee Job xxxi. 33. or by covering it with a guiſe of ſanctity and religion. I ſaid, I will confeſs my tranſgreſſions unto the Lord; not unto men, though in ſome caſes confeſſion of ſin is to be made to men; a confeſſion of it in general is to be made to the churches, and adminiſtrators of ordinances, in order to admiſſion into a church-ſtate, and to the ordinances of Chriſt, Matth. iii. 6. Acts ii. 37, 41. and in caſe of private offences, faults are to be confeſſed one to another, and forgiveneſs granted; and in caſe of public offences, a confeſſion ſhould be made to a church publickly; partly for the ſatisfaction of the church, and partly for the glory of divine grace; but confeſſion is not to be made to a prieſt, or to a perſon in a miniſterial character, in order for abſolution; but to the Lord only, againſt whom ſin is committed, and who only can pardon it: and this the pſalmiſt ſaith in his heart he would do, and did do it; he not only confeſſed facts, but the fault of them, with their evil circumſtances, and that he juſtly deſerved puniſhment for them; and this he did from his heart, with abhorrence of the ſins committed by him, and in faith, with a view to the pardoning mercy of God in Chriſt. And thou forgaveſt the iniquity of my ſin. Selah. that is, either the guilt of his ſin, which he took away from him; or the puniſhment of it, which he delivered him from: moreover, this phraſe may denote the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, and ſo may both expreſs the ſenſe which the pſalmiſt had of it, and exalt the grace of God in the forgiveneſs of it; by which muſt be meant, a freſh manifeſtation, and application of pardon to his ſoul: now, when confeſſion of ſin, and remiſſion of it, are thus put together, the ſenſe is not that confeſſion of ſin is the cauſe of pardon; it is not the moving cauſe of it, that is the grace and mercy of God; nor the procuring and meritorious cauſe of it, that is the blood of Chriſt: it is not for the ſake of a ſinner's confeſſion of ſin, but for Chriſt's ſake, that ſin is forgiven; but this is the way in which it is enjoyed; and ſuch as truly repent of ſin, and ſincerely confeſs it, are the perſons to whom the Lord manifeſts his forgiving love; ſuch may expect it, Prov. xxviii. 13. 1 John i. 9.

℣. 6. For this ſhall every one that is godly pray unto thee, &c.] Meaning either, that the ſucceſs he had met with in acknowledging his ſin, would encourage others alſo to take a like ſtep, and make their ſupplications to the Lord alſo; or that every godly perſon ſhould pray to God for the ſame bleſſing of pardoning grace likewiſe. Pardon of ſin is to be prayed for; not only Moſes, David, Daniel, and other Old Teſtament-ſaints, prayed for it; but Chriſt has directed his diſciples and followers, under der the goſpel-diſpenſation, to do the ſame, Luke xi. 4. and which muſt be underſtood of praying for the manifeſtation of it to their conſciences; for God has by one eternal act forgiven all treſpaſſes at once, for Chriſt's ſake; nor can any new act of pardon ariſe in the mind of God, or a freſh one paſs in the court of heaven, nor the blood of Chriſt be ſhed again for the remiſſion of it. Moreover, godly men will, in this ſenſe, pray for it, as they have daily occaſion to do: a godly man is a man that is created after the image of God, is born of him, and is poſſeſſed of internal, powerful godlineſs, and has all things pertaining to it; and particularly has a godly ſorrow for ſin, and the fear of God in his heart, and before his eyes: and ſuch a man is a praying one; having the ſpirit of grace, he has the ſpirit of ſupplication, and prays with the ſpirit and with the underſtanding; and his praying for the pardon of ſin ſhews that he is not without it, but daily commits it, and ſo needs freſh diſcoveries of forgiving love: and which he prays for in a time when thou mayſt be found; which is to be underſtood, not of any particular ſtated times of prayer, as morning, noon, and night; for the throne of grace is always open, and God is to be found, and grace and mercy with him at all times; and much leſs does this reſpect a day of grace for particular perſons, which, if improved, and the opportunity taken, they may have pardon; but if neglected till it is over, then there is no pardon for them; for there is no ſuch day of grace: the whole goſpel-diſpenſation is a day of grace; and that will not be over until all the elect of God are gathered in; and until then it is, and will be, now is the accepted time, now is the day of ſalvation; but it deſigns a time of need, of ſoul-diſtreſs, in which, when perſons call upon God in truth, and ſeek him with their whole heart, he is found by them, and they find grace and mercy with him to relieve them in their diſtreſs; the Targum is, "in an acceptable "time." Surely in the floods of great waters they ſhall not come nigh unto him; that is, unto the godly man; not but that afflictions, which are comparable to great floods of waters, do reach godly perſons; but not ſo as to overwhelm them and deſtroy them; they are delivered out of them. The phraſe ſeems to denote ſafety in the greateſt calamities; that though even a deluge of vengeance and awful judgments ſhould come upon the world, yet the godly man is ſafe; his place is the munition of rocks; he is in the hands of Chriſt, and is incloſed in the arms of everlaſting love, from whence he can never be taken by men or devils: the Targum interprets theſe waters of many people; and adds, ſo as to do any evil, or hurt.

[o] In voce αναιδια. [p] אודיעך cognoſcere feci te, Pagninus, Montanus; ſo Muſculus, Vatablus; ſo Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, & Gejerus, to the ſame purport.

℣. 7. Thou art my hiding-place, &c.] In time of trouble; ſee Pſal. xxvii. 5. ſo Chriſt is ſaid to be, Iſa. xxxii. 2. Thou ſhalt preſerve me from trouble; not from having it; for in this world the ſaints muſt have tribulation, and through it enter the kingdom, but from being ſwallowed up with it; the Lord will bring them ſafe out of it, and of them it ſhall be ſaid, theſe are they that came out of great tribulation, Rev. vii. 14. Thou ſhalt compaſs me about with ſongs of deliverance. Selah. or gird with gladneſs, as in Pſal. xxx. 11. the meaning is, that God would give him abundant reaſon for praiſe and thankfulneſs; and an opportunity of attending him with ſongs of praiſe for deliverance out of the hands of his enemies, and from trouble; and that both in his houſe below, where the ſaints, his loving people and faithful ſubjects, would join with him, in the midſt of whom he ſhould ſtand encompaſſed with their ſongs of praiſe; or in heaven above, where he ſhould ſing the ſong of Moſes, and of the Lamb, and be ſurrounded with the hallelujahs of angels and glorified ſaints; Aben Ezra interprets theſe ſongs of the voices of angels.

℣. 8. I will inſtruct thee, &c.] Or cauſe thee to underſtand [q]. Theſe are by many thought to be the words of the Lord, who gives to a man an underſtanding of ſpiritual things; he inſtructs by his providence, and even by afflictive diſpenſations of providence; and by his word, which is written for the learning of men, and is profitable for doctrine and inſtruction in righteouſneſs; and by the miniſters of it, who are therefore called inſtructors in Chriſt; and by his Spirit, when he inſtructs effectually and to purpoſe; by him he inſtructs men in the knowledge of themſelves, and of himſelf in Chriſt, and of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation by Chriſt; and leads into all truth as it is in Jeſus; and opens the underſtanding, to underſtand the ſcriptures, and the doctrines contained in them. And teach thee in the way which thou ſhalt go; the path of duty, from whence men are apt to wander; when the Lord hedges up the way they would go with thorny providences, and by his miniſters, word and Spirit, directs them in the right way; ſaying, this is the way, walk in it; and the way of truth, which is clearly pointed to in the ſcriptures of truth, and by the Spirit of truth; and alſo the way of life and ſalvation by Chriſt, revealed in the goſpel, and which the preachers of it ſhew to the ſons of men. I will guide thee with mine eye; as a maſter guides his ſcholar; or as mine eye [r]; with as much care and tenderneſs as if thou wert the apple of mine eye; ſee Deut. xxxii. 10. Zech. ii. 8. or the words may be rendered, I will counſel, or give counſel; as he does, who is wonderful in counſel, and that by his Son, who is the wonderful Counſellor; and by his word and teſtimonies, which are the delight of his people, and the men of their counſel; Mine eye is upon thee [s]; as the eye of the Lord is upon the righteous, to watch over them for good, to provide for them, guide and direct them. Theſe words may very well be conſidered as the words of David, in which he determines to act a part, agreeable to the title of the pſalm, Maſchil; which ſignifies inſtructing, or cauſing to underſtand; and as he thought himſelf bound in duty to do, under the influence of the grace and mercy he had received from the Lord, in the forgiveneſs of his ſins; and which he elſewhere reſolved to do in a like caſe, and which is an inſtance parallel to this, Pſal. li. 13. he here promiſes to inſtruct men in the way of attaining to the bleſſedneſs he had been ſpeaking of, by directing them to take the ſteps he did; namely, to go to the Lord, and acknowledge and confeſs their ſins before him, when they might expect to find pardoning mercy and grace, as he did; and to teach them the way of their duty upon this, to fear the Lord and his goodneſs, and to ſerve him in righteouſneſs and holineſs all the days of their lives; and to guide them with his eye; by declaring to them the gracious experiences he had been favoured with, by telling them what he himſelf had ſeen and known.

℣. 9.

[q] אשכילך intellectum tibi dabo, V. L. Muſculus; intelligere faciam te, Pagninus, Montanus; ſo Ainſworth. [r] עיני איעצה עליך conſulam tibi ſicut oculo meo, Druſius. [s] Conſulam, ſuper te eſt oculus meus, Cocceius, Gejerus, Ainſworth; ſo the Targum.

ỿ. 9. Be ye not as the horſe, or as the mule, which have no underſtanding, &c.] The deſign of this exhortation is to direct men how to behave under the inſtructions given; not as brutes, which have no rational faculties, but as men; that they ſhould not ſhew themſelves thoughtleſs, ſtupid, and unteachable, as theſe animals, or worſe than they; nor ſtubborn and obſtinate, refractory and untractable, reſolving not to be taught, ſtopping the ear, and pulling away the ſhoulder; nor ill-natured and miſchievous; not only hating inſtruction, caſting away the Law of the Lord, but kicking and ſpurning at, and perſecuting ſuch who undertake to inſtruct them; as theſe creatures ſometimes attempt to throw their riders, and when down, kick at them. Whoſe mouth muſt be held in with bit and bridle, leſt they come near unto thee; to do miſchief, bite or kick; or becauſe they do not come near to thee[t]; and that they may come near, and be brought into ſubjection, and become obedient; therefore ſuch methods are uſed; ſee Jam. iii. 3. there is in the words a tacit intimation, that men are commonly, and for the moſt part, like theſe creatures, ſtupid, ſtubborn, and miſchievous; and therefore ſevere methods are uſed by the Lord, ſore chaſtenings, to humble and inſtruct them; ſee Jer. xxxi. 18, 19. the mule, more eſpecially, is remarkable for its ſtupidity[u]; and though the horſe is docible, yet he is ſometimes ſtubborn and refractory.

ỿ. 10. Many ſorrows ſhall be to the wicked, &c.] Who will not be inſtructed and reformed, but are like the horſe and mule, without underſtanding; many outward ſorrows or afflictions attend them; loathſome and conſuming diſeaſes come upon their bodies, by intemperance and debauchery; and they and their families are brought to a piece of bread, through their vicious courſes; and inward ſorrows, horror and terror of mind ſeize them, when their conſciences are at any time awakened, and are open to conviction; when a load of guilt lies on them, what remorſe of conſcience do they feel? and what ſevere reflections do they make? and how are they pierced through with many ſorrows? And though indeed, for the moſt part, wicked men have their good things in this life, and are in proſperous circumſtances, and are not in trouble, as other men; yet what they have is with a curſe; and they have no true peace, pleaſure, and ſatisfaction in what they enjoy; they are under the wrath of God, and the curſes of a righteous Law; and everlaſting deſtruction is prepared for them in the other world, when they will have many ſorrows indeed; their worm will not die, and the fire of divine fury will not be quenched; there will be for ever indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguiſh, upon every ſoul of man that does evil. But he that truſteth in the Lord; not in his wealth and riches, in his wiſdom and ſtrength, in himſelf, and his own righteouſneſs; for ſuch are wicked perſons; but in the Lord: in his righteouſneſs to juſtify him, in his blood to pardon him, in his ſtrength to ſupport him, and in his grace to ſupply him with every thing neceſſary for him. Mercy ſhall compaſs him about; not only follow him and overtake him, but ſurround him; he ſhall be crowned with loving-kindneſs and tender mercies: the phraſe denotes the abundance of mercies that ſhall be beſtowed upon him here and hereafter, as both grace and glory.

ỿ. 11. Be glad in the Lord, &c.] The Targum renders it, in the word of the Lord; in Chriſt the eſſential word; in him as the Lord their righteouſneſs, and becauſe of his righteouſneſs imputed to them, by which they become righteous; and in him as their Saviour and Redeemer, and becauſe of the ſalvation which he has wrought out for them; ſee Iſa. lxi. 10. And rejoice, ye righteous; in the Lord, as before; for this is not a carnal, but ſpiritual joy, which is here exhorted to, the ſame as in Phil. iv. 4. and righteous ones who are excited to it, are ſuch who are not righteous in appearance only, or in their own conceit, or by the deeds of the Law, or in and of themſelves; for there is none righteous this way: but who are made righteous by the obedience of Chriſt, and are righteouſneſs itſelf in him; under a ſenſe of which grace they live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly; and theſe have great reaſon to rejoice and be glad. And ſhout for joy all ye that are upright in heart; who have the truth of grace, and the root of the matter in them, oil in the veſſels of their hearts, with their lamps; whoſe faith is unfeigned, whoſe hope is without hypocriſy, and whoſe love is without diſſimulation; and who worſhip the Lord in ſpirit and in truth, and draw nigh to him with true hearts, and call upon him in the ſimplicity of them; theſe ought to rejoice, and even ſhout for joy, becauſe of the grace that is wrought in them, and beſtowed upon them, and the glory they ſhall be partakers of; for both grace and glory are given to theſe, and no good thing is withheld from them; the end of theſe upright ſouls is peace; and when they have done their work, they ſhall lie down and reſt in their beds, and each one ſhall walk in his uprightneſs, Pſal. lxxxiv. 11. and xxxvii. 37. Iſa. lvii. 2.

PSALM XXXIII.

THOUGH this pſalm has no title to it, it ſeems to be a pſalm of David, from the ſtile and matter of it; and indeed begins with the ſame words with which the preceding pſalm is ended. Theodoret is of opinion it was written by David as a prophecy concerning Hezekiah, as a ſong to be ſung by the people after the deſtruction of the Aſſyrian army.

ỿ. 1. Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous, &c.] See the note on Pſal. xxxii. 11. For praiſe is comely for the upright; it becomes them; it is their duty; they are bound unto it by the mercies and favours they have received; ſhould they not give praiſe to God, the ſtones of the wall would cry out, and rebuke them for their ingratitude: it is beautiful, and looks lovely in them; it is an ornament to them, and is, in the ſight of God, of great eſteem: it is very acceptable to him; and when grace is in exerciſe, and their hearts in tune, being ſenſibly touched and impreſſed with the goodneſs of God, it is deſireable by them, and is pleaſant and delightful to them.

ỿ. 2. Praiſe the Lord with harp, &c.] An inſtrument David was well ſkilled in the uſe of, the inventer of which was Jubal, Gen. iv. 21. Sing unto him with the pſaltery; the name of this inſtrument is in the Hebrew language nebel: the account account which Joſephus [w] gives of this, and of the former, is, "the harp is extended with ten ſtrings, "and is ſtricken with a quill; the nabla, or pſal-"tery, has twelve ſounds, and is played upon with "the fingers;" ſome make this and the next to be the ſame, And an inſtrument of ten ſtrings; and read them together thus, with the pſaltery of ten ſtrings; and ſo the Targum, Septuagint, and other verſions [x]: but it ſeems from Joſephus that it was not a ſtringed inſtrument, but had holes, and thoſe twelve; and beſides is diſtinguiſhed from the inſtrument of ten ſtrings, Pſal. xcii. 3. it was in the form of a bottle, from whence it had its name.

[t] בל קרב אליך quia non accedunt ad te, Grotius.

[u] Mule, nihil ſentis — Catullus.

℣. 3. Sing unto him a new ſong, &c.] One newly compoſed on account of late mercies received; and as the mercies of God are new every morning, there ought to be a daily ſong of praiſe to him; and ſo a new ſong is a continual ſong, as Chriſt is called the new and living way, Heb. x. 20. becauſe he is the ever-living way; or the conſtant and only one, which always was, is, and will be. Or it may denote ſome famous and excellent ſong, as a new name is an excellent name, an unknown and unſpeakable one; ſee Rev. ii. 17. compared with Rev. xiv. 2, 3. or reſpect may be had to the New Teſtament-diſpenſation, in which old things are paſſed away, and all things become new; a new covenant is exhibited, a new and living way opened, and new ordinances inſtituted, and at the end of it there will be new heavens and a new earth; and ſo here is a new ſong made mention of, as ſuited to it. Play ſkilfully with a loud voice; either with the quill upon the harp, and the inſtrument of ten ſtrings; or with the fingers upon the pſaltery, at the ſame time, vocally, and aloud, expreſſing the new ſong.

℣. 4. For the word of the Lord is right, &c.] The revealed word of God: the law of God is right; its precepts are holy, juſt and good; its ſanction or penalty is righteous; it is impartial unto all; it is juſt in condemning the wicked, and in acquitting believers on the account of Chriſt's perfect righteouſneſs, by which it is magnified and made honourable: the goſpel-part of the word is right; it publiſhes right and good things; it directs to the right way, to heaven and happineſs; it makes men right when it works effectually in them; it engages them to walk in right ways; and its doctrines are right or plain to them that have a ſpiritual underſtanding given them; and all this is matter of joy and praiſe. And all his works are done in truth; his works of creation are done in the truth of things, with the utmoſt exactneſs and accuracy, and are a wonderful diſplay of his power, wiſdom, and goodneſs; his works of providence are according to the counſel of his own will, and are done in the wiſeſt and beſt manner; and his work of redemption is a proof of his veracity and faithfulneſs to his covenant-oath and promiſe; and his work of grace upon the hearts of his people, is truth in the inward parts; and which, as he has promiſed to carry on and finiſh, he is faithful and will do it; in ſhort, his way of acting both towards the godly and ungodly, agrees with his promiſes to the one, and his threatnings to the other, and ſo is in truth; and the whole of this is a reaſon why the ſaints ſhould praiſe the Lord.

℣. 5. He loveth righteouſneſs and judgment, &c.] Or righteous judgment [y]; he delights in the adminiſtration of it himſelf, Jer. ix. 24. and he is well pleaſed with acts of righteouſneſs done by others, when done according to his word, from love to him, by faith in him, and with a view to his glory; eſpecially he loves the righteouſneſs of his Son, being ſatisfactory to his law and juſtice, and his people, as clothed with it; and he delights in the condemnation of ſin in the fleſh of Chriſt, and in the righteous judgment of the world, and the prince of it, by Chriſt. The earth is full of the goodneſs of the Lord; of the providential goodneſs of God, of which all creatures partake; and of the ſpecial goodneſs or grace of God manifeſted in Chriſt Jeſus; it was full of it particularly when Chriſt was here on earth, who is full of grace and truth; and when the goſpel of the grace of God was preached every where by his apoſtles, according to his order, and appeared to all men; and ſo it will be eſpecially in the latter day, when multitudes will be called by grace and converted, and when the earth will be full of the knowledge of the Lord; and ſtill more when it will become a new earth wherein only righteous men will dwell.

℣. 6. By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, &c.] The aerial and ſtarry heavens, and the heaven of heavens, the third heaven, the ſeat of the divine majeſty, and the habitation of angels and glorified ſaints; theſe were made even out of nothing, not out of any pre-exiſtent matter, nor were they eternal; and being made are creatures, and ſo not to be worſhipped, neither they nor their hoſts after mentioned; angels, ſun, moon, and ſtars, theſe were made by the word of God, the eſſential Word of God, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who often goes by this name, John i. 1, 14. Heb. iv. 12. 1 John v. 7. Rev. xix. 13. and very fitly agrees with him, who ſpoke for all his people in the council and covenant of grace, and undertook to be their ſurety; is the Word ſpoken of by all the holy prophets ſince the beginning of the world; is the interpreter of his Father's mind and will, of which he muſt be capable, ſince he lay in his boſom; and now he ſpeaks for his ſaints in heaven, whoſe advocate he is; and eſpecially he may be ſo called becauſe he ſo often ſpake on the ſix days of creation, and ſaid, let this and the other thing be, and it was ſo; and to him, as the Word of God, is the creation of all things frequently aſcribed, John i. 1—3. Heb. xi. 3. 2 Pet. iii. 5. and particularly the heavens, Heb. i. 10. This is a proof of the deity of Chriſt, and of the dignity of his perſon; and ſhews how fit he is to be the Saviour of men; how ſafe the ſaints are in his hands; and that he ought to be truſted in, adored and worſhipped. And all the hoſt of them by the breath of his mouth; by the hoſt of the heavens are meant the angels of heaven, who dwell in the third heaven, and are the militia of it; they are called the heavenly hoſt, Luke ii. 13. theſe are under Jehovah, as their Lord and King, and are the army among whom he does according to his will, 1 Kings xxii. 19. Dan. iv. 35. theſe attended him whenever he has made any remarkable appearance; and they have been employed by him againſt his enemies, and in defence of his people, about whom they incamp, 2 Kings xix. 35. Matt. xxvi. 53. Gen. xxxii. 1, 2. Pſal. xxxiv. 7. The ſun, moon, and ſtars, are the hoſt of the next heaven, theſe are ranged in their proper order by the Lord, and he keeps the muſter-roll of them, Iſa. xl. 26. Pſal. cxlvii. 4. and theſe are uſed by him as his militia; the ſtars in their courſes fought againſt Siſera, Judg. v. 20. and the winged tribe are the hoſt of the lower heaven; and even the lower claſs of theſe, as the locuſts and graſhoppers, go forth forth in bands and troops, and incamp in the hedges, and at the command of God paſs through and devour whole countries, Prov. xxx. 27. Nah. iii. 17. Pſal. cv. 34, 35. and all theſe are made by the breath or ſpirit [z] of Jehovah's mouth; that is, by the Spirit of God, the third perſon in the Trinity; a name which is ſuitable to him who is breathed forth, and proceeds from the Father and the Son, and to whom creation is aſcribed, Gen. i. 2. Job xxxiii. 4. and xxvi. 13. and which is no inconſiderable proof of his deity; and ſhews that he muſt be equal to the work of ſanctification, which he begins and carries on. Now though the creation of the heavens is attributed to the Word, and the hoſt of them to the Spirit, yet we are not to ſuppoſe that one perſon took one part, and another perſon another part of the creation; but they were all, Father, Word, and Spirit, jointly concerned in the whole.

[w] Antiq. l. 7. c. 12. ſ. 3.

[x] Vid. Jarchum in loc. & R. Moſem in Aben Ezra in loc.

[y] צדקה ומשפט judicium Juſtum, Gejerus.

℣. 7. He gathereth the waters of the ſea together as an heap, &c.] Which was done on the third day of the creation, by means of which the dry land appeared, Gen. i. 9, 10. when the waters of the ſea were piled up as an heap, and ſtood higher than the earth, as they now do; and which is a wonderful inſtance of the power and providence of God, to bound them and preſerve the earth from being overflowed by them, Job xxxviii. 9—11. He layeth up the depth in ſtore-houſes; that is, large quantities of water, for which he has his treaſure-houſes, as for the wind, hail and ſnow, Pſal. cxxxv. 7. Job xxxviii. 16, 22. and theſe are the clouds of heaven above, and the fountains of the great deep below, which the Lord opens and ſtops at his pleaſure; ſee Gen. vii. 11. and viii. 2.

℣. 8. Let all the earth fear the Lord, &c.] That is, all the men that dwell upon the face of the earth. As it follows, Let all the inhabitants of the world ſtand in awe of him; which fear and awe deſign a reverence of the divine majeſty, whoſe divine perfections are ſo manifeſt in the works of creation; and a carefulneſs not to offend him, into whoſe hands it muſt be a fearful thing to fall; and the whole worſhip of him, which is often in ſcripture expreſſed by the fear of him: and this is to be underſtood either as what is the duty of all men; for to fear God and keep his commandments, is the whole duty of man, Eccl. xii. 13. and which is incumbent on all men, in conſideration of his being the creator of them; and the obligation to it is yet more increaſed through his providential care of them and goodneſs to them; and ſtill more ſhould be found in them, ſeeing he will be the judge of them, and has a deſpotic and uncontrolable power over them; and what is it that he cannot do who has done all this before related? though none can fear him aright but ſuch who have the grace of fear put into their hearts by the Spirit of God: or elſe this may be prophetically ſaid, as what will be in the latter day, when not only the Jews ſhall fear the Lord and his goodneſs, Hoſ. iii. 5. but when the fulneſs of the Gentiles, being brought into the church, it ſhall fear and be enlarged; yea all nations ſhall fear the Lord and glorify his name, and come and worſhip before him, Iſa. lx. 5—8. Rev. xv. 4.

℣. 9. For he ſpake, and it was done, &c.] Or it was [a], it came into being by a word ſpeaking, almighty power going along with it; ſee Gen. i. 3, 6, 7, 9, 11, 14, 15, 20, 24. He commanded, and it ſtood faſt; every created thing continued in its being; not only all things were produced into being by his all-commanding word and power, nutu Jovis, as Maximus Tyrius ſpeaks [b]; but by the ſame all things are upheld and conſiſt, Heb. i. 3. Col. i. 17. The poet [c] uſes the ſame word of God in the creation of things; and is the phraſe in Gen. i. 3. admired by Longinus [d]: or this may refer to the implantation of the grace of fear in the hearts of his people; for as he ſpeaks life into them in regeneration, commands light to ſhine in their dark hearts, and ſays to them when in their blood, live; ſo by the mighty power of his word he commands the fear of him in them, and it continues.

℣. 10. The Lord bringeth the counſel of the heathen to nought, &c.] The pſalmiſt having taken notice of the works of creation, in order to excite the ſaints to praiſe, proceeds to obſerve the providence of God, and particularly that branch of it which lies in diſappointing the deſigns of wicked men; it is wickedneſs which they conſult and deviſe, and this is againſt the Lord's people, his cauſe and intereſt, and ſo againſt himſelf; and though their ſchemes are formed and contrived with a great deal of ſubtlety, yet they are commonly blaſted; whether laid by particular perſons, as by Ahithophel againſt David; or by nations, whole bodies of men, as of the Egyptians and Aſſyrians againſt Iſrael; and of Jews and Gentiles againſt Chriſt and his cauſe. He maketh the devices of the people of none effect; the ſame thing is expreſſed here as before in different words, for the farther confirmation of it, and that it might be attended to. This is the Lord's doing, he is omniſcient, and knows all the ſecret plots and deſigns of men; and he is omnipotent, and counter-acts them, and confounds them in all their meaſures; and is faithful to his people, cauſe, and intereſt.

℣. 11. The counſel of the Lord ſtandeth for ever, &c.] By which are meant, not the doctrines of the goſpel, nor the ordinances of it; though theſe will ſtand firm, and remain to the end of the world; but the purpoſes and decrees of God, which are wiſely formed in himſelf, are eternal and infruſtrable, and relate to all things in providence and grace. The Lord does all things according to the counſel of his will in the government of the world, and in the ſalvation of men: the choice of perſons to everlaſting life is according to it; and ſo are their redemption, effectual vocation, and glorification. The thoughts of his heart to all generations; which, with reſpect to his own people, are thoughts of peace, grace and mercy; theſe are many, and within himſelf, were very early, even from all eternity, and have their ſure and certain effect, Iſa. xiv. 24. ſee Prov. xix. 21. Iſa. xlvi. 10.

℣. 12. Bleſſed is the nation whoſe God is the Lord, &c.] Who have an intereſt in ſuch a wonder-working God, both in creation and in providence, and eſpecially in grace: which, though it may have a principal regard to the nation of Iſrael, whoſe God he was in a very diſtinguiſhing manner, yet muſt not be limited to them; for he is the God of the Gentiles alſo: this nation is the choſen generation, the holy nation and peculiar people, both among Jews and Gentiles; and the Lord is the God of theſe; not only as the God of nature and providence, but as the God of all grace; who muſt be happy, ſince he is their portion and exceeding great reward; nor ſhall they want any good thing, nor need they fear any evil; they are on on the heart of God, and cannot be ſeparated from his love; they are engraven on the palms of his hands, and ſhall be helped, ſtrengthened, and upheld with the right hand of his righteouſneſs; all things work together for their good; and this God of theirs will be their God and guide unto death; they may expect every needful good thing now, and all glory and happineſs hereafter. And the people whom he hath choſen for his own inheritance; not Iſrael only, but the Gentiles alſo; not all mankind, but a peculiar people, whom the Lord has choſen out of the world to be his poſſeſſion, and who are his jewels and peculiar treaſure; theſe are happy, being the Lord's portion, and the lot of his inheritance; and he chooſes an inheritance for them, adopts and begets them unto it, and makes them meet to be partakers of it.

[z] רוח פיו ſpiritu oris ejus, V. L. Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth. [a] ויהי & fuit, Pagninus, Montanus, Muſculus, Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth. [b] Diſſert. 25. [c] Juſſit & extendi campos, &c. Ovid. Metamorph. l. 1. fab. 1. v. 43. [d] De Sublimi.

℣. 13. The Lord looketh from heaven, &c.] Where his throne and temple are, upon the earth and men, and things in it, as follows: He beholdeth all the ſons of men; the evil and the good; which is contrary to the ſenſe of many wicked men, who imagine he takes no notice of what is done here below; but his eye is upon all, upon all the workers of iniquity, how ſecret ſoever they may be; and not only his eye of providence is upon good men, but his eye of love, grace and mercy; and he has a ſpecial and diſtinct knowledge of them: agreeable to this are ſome expreſſions of heathen writers; ſays one [e], "the eye of God ſees all things;" ſays another [f], "there is a great God in heaven, who ſees "all things, and governs."

℣. 14. From the place of his habitation, &c.] Which is heaven, that is, the habitation of his holineſs, and of his glory, Iſa. lxiii. 15. He looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth; good and bad; and not the nation of Iſrael only, but the Gentile world, whom in former times he overlooked, but under the goſpel-diſpenſation viſits in a way of mercy; by ſending his Son to die for them, by ſpreading his goſpel among them, by calling them by his grace, by planting churches in the midſt of them, and by continuing his word and ordinances with them.

℣. 15. He faſhioneth their hearts alike, &c.] The Lord is the former and faſhioner of the heart, ſpirit, or ſoul of man, even of all hearts and ſpirits; whence he is called the father of ſpirits, Heb. xii. 9. ſee Zech. xii. 1. and he is the former of them alike; which ſeems to intimate as if all ſouls were alike, as they are made by the Lord; and it may be, the difference there appears to be between them afterwards may be owing to the make and conſtitution of their bodies, to their education, and different ſituation, circumſtances and advantages in life, whereby the hearts of ſome may be more opened and enlarged than others. Some render it together or altogether [g]; which muſt not be underſtood of time, as if they were all made at once, but of equality; the one was made by him as well as the other; he is the faſhioner of one and all of them, every whit of them; they are wholly faſhioned by him, and all that is in them, all the powers and faculties of the ſoul; and by him only, and not by the inſtrumentality of another; for ſouls are created, not generated; they are produced out of nothing, and not out of pre-exiſtent matter, as bodies; parents contribute ſomewhat to the bodies of their children, but not any thing to their ſouls. God only is the God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, Numb. xvi. 22. ſome tranſlate the word ſingly [h]; one by one, one after another in the ſeveral ages of time; for he continues to faſhion them, and is always doing it; ſee Zech. xii. 1. And he forms the hearts of his own people anew for himſelf, for his own glory; he forms Chriſt in them, and every grace of his Spirit; he forms them into one, and knits and unites them together in love, and makes them like to one another; for as face anſwers to face in water, ſo do the hearts and experiences of the ſaints one to another, Prov. xxvii. 19. all which he does wholly and alone; and ſince he faſhions the hearts of all men in every ſenſe, he muſt know them, which is the deſign of this expreſſion; he knows the hearts of wicked men, and all the wickedneſs that is in them; he knows the hearts of good men, the worſt that is in them, and alſo the beſt, which he himſelf has put there. He conſidereth all their works; the works of evil men, not only their more open ones, but their more ſecret ones, and will bring them into judgment; and the works of good men, even their good works, which he will remember and reward in a way of grace.

℣. 16. There is no king ſaved by the multitude of an hoſt, &c.] He may be at the head of an numerous army, and yet not get the victory over a leſſer one, nor eſcape ſafe, but be taken by it: there have been ſuch inſtances; and if he is ſaved, or gets the victory, it is not owing to the multitude with him, but to the Lord that gives ſalvation to kings, Pſal. cxliv. 10. Hence it appears that even ſuch men need ſalvation themſelves, and cannot ſave themſelves, though they have ever ſo many at command, and therefore are not to be truſted in; ſalvation is only of the Lord. A mighty man is not delivered by much ſtrength; as Goliath, with his great ſtrength, could not deliver himſelf out of the hands of David, a ſtripling; wherefore the mighty man ſhould not glory in his might.

℣. 17. A horſe is a vain thing for ſafety, &c.] Though it is prepared for the day of battle, and is a very warlike creature, and of great ſervice in war, yet ſafety only is of the Lord, Prov. xxi. 31. this is put for all kinds of military preparations which men are apt to truſt in, but ſhould not, for they are a lie [i], as the horſe is here ſaid to be; that is, deceives and diſappoints when truſted to; in like manner the olive is ſaid to lie, Hab. iii. 17. when hope of fruit from it is diſappointed; ſo fundus mendax in Horace [k]. Neither ſhall he deliver any by his great ſtrength; in the time of battle; either by fighting for him, or fleeing with him.

℣. 18. Behold, the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, &c.] Not with dread of his wrath or diſtruſt of his grace, or for ſiniſter ends and ſelfiſh views, but with a godly fear; by which men hate evil, depart from it, are careful not to offend God by it, but to ſerve and worſhip him; on ſuch is not only his eye of providence to protect from danger, to ſupply with the neceſſaries of life, but of love and grace; he looks upon them with delight and pleaſure; his eye is upon them to watch over them for good, to guard them from every enemy, and from all evil, and to communicate to them every needful meaſure of grace. Upon them that hope in his mercy; not his abſolute mercy, but his ſpecial mercy in Chriſt; which appears in the proviſion of him as a Saviour, in the miſſion of him into this world, [e] παντα ιδων διος οφθαλμος, &c. Heſiod. opera & dies, l. 1. v. 263.

[f] εστι μεγας εν ουρανω, &c. Sophoclis Electra, v. 174, 175.
[g] יחד ſimul, Muſculus, Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth.
[h] χαλαμουας, Sept. ſigillatim, V. L.
[i] שקר mendacium, Pagninus, Montanus; fallax, V. L. Spem mentita ſeges, Ib. Epiſt. l. 1. ep. 7. v. 87.
[k] Epod. l. 1. ode 16. ver. 45. Carmin. l. 3. ode 1. v. 30.

world, and redemption by him; and is diſplayed in regeneration, the pardon of ſin, and eternal life: and ſuch that hope in it are they that ſee themſelves miſerable creatures, and in need of it; and who are encouraged to hope in it from the plenty and abundance of it in the heart of God; and from the many inſtances of it among men, and even ſome the chief of ſinners; and they do hope in it for the forgiveneſs of their ſins, and for ſalvation and eternal glory; and on theſe the eye of the Lord is, as before.

℣. 19. To deliver their ſoul from death, &c.] Not a corporal death, for the ſoul dies not, and is never in any danger of death; and ſhould life, or the whole man, be intended here, yet thoſe that fear the Lord, and hope in his mercy, are not exempted and ſecured from a corporal death, but die as other men; though ſometimes indeed they are remarkably preſerved from death, and even in a time of general calamity; but a ſpiritual death is meant, which while in a ſtate of nature they are under, but being quickned at converſion they live ſpiritually, and are preſerved from dying any more in this ſenſe; and alſo from an eternal death, which ſhall never hurt them, nor have any power over them. And to keep them alive in famine; not corporal, though the Lord does give meat to them that fear him, and ſometimes in a miraculous way provides for them; as by ſending ravens to feed them, and by increaſing the cruiſe of oil; ſee Iſa. xli. 17, 18. but ſpiritual, a famine of hearing the word of the Lord; the Lord prepares a place for his church and people in the wilderneſs, where they are privately nouriſhed with the word and ordinances, and their ſouls kept alive, Rev. xii. 6, 14.

℣. 20. Our ſoul waiteth for the Lord, &c.] This, and what follows, are the words of the church expreſſing her expectation, faith, and joy, by reaſon of what is ſuggeſted in the preceding verſes. She ſignifies her expectation of good by waiting for the Lord; either for his coming in the fleſh, and ſalvation by him; for which the patriarchs, prophets, and all the old Teſtament-ſaints waited, Gen. xlix. 18. Iſa. xxv. 9. and ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, Our ſoul waiteth for the redemption of the Lord; or for his ſpiritual coming, his appearance to them, and gracious preſence with them, he having been for ſome time abſent; and it is right and good ſo to do, and in the iſſue proves advantageous, Iſa. viii. 17. Lam. iii. 26. and this being ſoul-waiting, it denotes the heartineſs, ſincerity, and earneſtneſs of it. He is our help, and our ſhield; the Lord is the help of his people in time of trouble, when none elſe is or can be; and he is a preſent one, and helps right early, and at the beſt ſeaſon: and he is their ſhield, who encompaſſes them about with his love and favour, and keeps them by his power in the greateſt ſafety; all which encourages their waiting upon him, and expectation of good things from him.

℣. 21. For our heart ſhall rejoice in him, &c.] Not in ſin, nor in themſelves and in their boaſtings, all ſuch rejoicing is evil; but in the Lord, in his word; as the Targum is, in the eſſential Word of God, Chriſt Jeſus; in his perſon, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation; and this joy is heart-joy, inward joy, real joy, joy in the holy Ghoſt; and is unſpeakable and full of glory. This is what the pſalmiſt calls upon the ſaints to do, in the beginning of the pſalm; and ſo his end in compoſing it is anſwered. Becauſe we have truſted in his holy name; that is, in himſelf, who is holy, juſt, and good; and ſo faithful to every word of promiſe, to every engagement of his, and therefore to be truſted in: and hence it appears, that the joy before ſpoken of, is the joy of faith.

℣. 22. Let thy mercy, O Lord, be upon us, &c.] That is, an application of it in its effects: it is a prayer for a communication of grace and mercy to help in a time of need; and for a diſcovery of pardoning grace and mercy; and it is a prayer of faith; for the mercy of the Lord is upon his people in great plenty, and it continues; and they have reaſon to believe it ever will, Pſal. ciii. 17. According as we hope in thee; not according to any merits of theirs, but according to the meaſure of grace, of the grace of hope which God had beſtowed on them, and encouraged them to exerciſe on him, in expectation of finding grace and mercy with him.

PSALM XXXIV.

A pſalm of David, when he changed his behaviour before Abimelech: who drove him away, and he departed.

THE author of this pſalm is expreſſed by name; and the time and occaſion of it are plainly intimated: it was compoſed by David, when he changed his behaviour before Abimelech; not Abimelech the prieſt, ſometimes called Abimelech, 1 Chron. xviii. 16. to whom David went alone for bread, pretending he was upon a private buſineſs of the king's; to which ſenſe the Syriac verſion inclines, rendering the words, when he went to the houſe of the Lord, and gave the firſt-fruits to the prieſts. But this Abimelech was king of Gath, the ſame with Achiſh, 1 Sam. xxi. 10. who either had two names; or this of Abimelech, as it ſhould ſeem, was a common name to all the kings of the Philiſtines; ſee Gen. xx. 2. and xxvi. 8. as Pharaoh was to the Egyptian kings, and Cæſar to the Roman emperors: the name ſignifies a father-king, or my father-king, or a royal father; as kings ſhould be the fathers of their country: before him David changed his behaviour, his taſte, ſenſe, or reaſon: he imitated a mad-man; behaved as if he was out of his ſenſes, ſcrabbling on the doors of the gates, and letting his ſpittle fall down upon his beard; for he being known and made known by the ſervants of the king, he was in great fear of loſing his life, being in the hands of an enemy, and who he might juſtly fear would revenge the death of their champion Goliath; wherefore he took this method to get himſelf deſpiſed and neglected by them, and eſcape out of their hands: and which ſucceeded; for Abimelech, or Achiſh, ſeeing him behave in ſuch a manner, treated him with contempt, was diſpleaſed with his ſervants for bringing him into his preſence, and ordered them to take him away, or diſmiſs him; which is here expreſſed by this phraſe, who drove him away, with ſcorn and indignation; and he departed to the cave of Adullam, glad at heart he had eſcaped ſuch danger: upon which, under a ſenſe of divine goodneſs, and by the inſpiration inſpiration of the Spirit of God, he compoſed the following pſalm; ſee 1 Sam. xxi. 10—15. and xxii. 1.

℣. 1. I will bleſs the Lord at all times, &c.] That is, aſcribe bleſſing, give honour, praiſe, and glory to him, both as the God of nature and providence, for every temporal mercy; and that every day, and at all times in the day; ſince theſe are renewed every morning, and continue all the day long: and as the God of grace, for all ſpiritual bleſſings; and that continually, becauſe theſe laſt always; they are irreverſible, unchangeable, and without repentance; yea, ſaints have reaſon to bleſs God in times of adverſity as well as proſperity, ſince it might have been worſe with them than it is; they have a mixture of mercy in all, and all things work together for their good. His praiſe ſhall continually be in my mouth; not the praiſe of which God is the author, but of which he is the object; which is due unto him, and is given him on account of the perfections of his nature, and the works of his hands, and the bleſſings of his providence and grace; this, the pſalmiſt ſays, ſhould be in his mouth: his meaning is, that he ſhould not only retain in his heart a grateful ſenſe of the divine favours, but ſhould expreſs it with his lips; ſhould both make melody in his heart to the Lord, and vocally ſing his praiſe; and that continually, as long as he lived, or had any being, Pſal. cxlvi. 2.

℣. 2. My ſoul ſhall make her boaſt in the Lord, &c.] Not in men, nor in any outward enjoyment, nor in any works of righteouſneſs, but in the Lord; in the word of the Lord, as the Targum; in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; in his wiſdom, ſtrength, riches, righteouſneſs, redemption, and ſalvation; in intereſt in him, and communion with him: and this is not tongue, but ſoul-boaſting; and not flaſhy and ſelfiſh, but ſolid, ſpiritual, and hearty; and with all the powers and faculties of the ſoul; ſee 1 Cor. i. 29, 30, 31. The humble ſhall hear thereof; either of the deliverance the pſalmiſt had out of the hands of his enemies; or of his bleſſing and praiſing the Lord for the ſame, and making his boaſt in him as the God of his ſalvation; or of both: of theſe humble ones, ſee the note on Pſal. x. 12. And be glad; for ſuch rejoice with them that rejoice, and are glad at heart that others ſhare in the goodneſs and grace of God; and alſo becauſe by ſuch an inſtance of the divine power and kindneſs, they are encouraged to hope that he will, in his own time, deliver them out of their afflictions and diſtreſſes alſo.

℣. 3. O magnify the Lord with me, &c.] The pſalmiſt invites the humble ones, who he knew would rejoice at the goodneſs of God to him, to join with him in aſcribing greatneſs to the Lord, which is meant by magnifying him; for he cannot be made great by men, only declared how great he is, and that can only be done in an imperfect manner. And let us exalt his name together; by proclaiming him to be the moſt High; by making mention of his glorious perfections and works, that he be exalted; and by praiſing him in the higheſt ſtrains; or by having the high praiſes of him in their mouths; and there is more pleaſure, as well as more glory brought to God, by doing this in a ſocial way, or by a number of ſaints joining together in ſuch ſervice.

℣. 4. I ſought the Lord, and he heard me, &c.] Not that he ſought the Lord publickly in his houſe and ordinances, for he was now at Gath; but privately by prayer and ſupplication; and that not vocally but mentally; for he was in the midſt of the ſervants of the king of Gath; yet earneſtly, diligently, and with his whole heart, being in great diſtreſs; when it was right to ſeek the Lord, and which ſhewed him to be a good man; and the Lord heard and anſwered even his ſilent groans, which could not be uttered. And delivered me from all my fear; of being ſeized on by Achiſh, king of Gath, and of loſing his life for killing Goliath: and many are the fears of God's people, both from within and from without, by reaſon of ſin, Satan, and the world; but the Lord ſaves them out of the hands of all their enemies, grants them his preſence, and ſhews them their intereſt in himſelf, which ſcatters all their fears.

℣. 5. They looked to him and were lightened, &c.] That is, the humble ones, ℣. 2. and ſo this is a reaſon why they ſhould join in praiſing and magnifying the Lord; theſe looked up to God in prayer and by faith, when in diſtreſſed and uncomfortable circumſtances, for help and deliverance, and a ſupply of every needful good thing; and they were enlightened; ſo the Targum renders it, their faces were enlightened, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret it, in oppoſition to what follows: they muſt have been enlightened before they could look, but by looking to the Lord more light was gained: this chiefly deſigns the light of joy, peace, and comfort, which is had in a way of believing: ſome render the word and flowed [1], as a river does, that is, to the Lord, as in Jer. xxxi. 12. So Kimchi and Ben Melech explain the word; and it denotes both the numbers of them that looked up to the Lord in their diſtreſs, and the ſwiftneſs of their motion to him, and their earneſtneſs and fervour of mind; ſo faith is not only a looking to Chriſt, but a going forth unto him. And their faces were not aſhamed; having what they prayed and looked for, and what they hoped and believed they ſhould have; namely, deliverance and ſalvation, and ſo peace and pleaſure.

℣. 6. This poor man cried, &c.] Singling out ſome one perſon from among the humble who was remarkably delivered; it is the common caſe of the people of God to be poor and afflicted, and in their afflictions they cry unto the Lord to be ſupported under them, and delivered out of them: or this may be underſtood of David himſelf, who was poor, not with reſpect to outward things, but in ſpirit; was much afflicted, and eſpecially greatly diſtreſſed when in the court of Achiſh; at which time he cried unto the Lord, as was his uſual way, and that internally, as Moſes did, Exod. xiv. 15. Some think Jeſus Chriſt is intended by this poor man, who was poor in temporals, though rich, and Lord of all; and was greatly afflicted, both in body and ſoul; and who, in the days of his fleſh, offered up prayers and ſupplications, with ſtrong crying and tears, Heb. v. 7. And the Lord heard him, and ſaved him out of all his troubles; ſo the Lord always heard his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and eſpecially in the day of ſalvation, and delivered him out of all his troubles, both of body and ſoul, when he raiſed him from the dead, and gave him glory; and he heard David his ſervant, as he often did; particularly when at Gath, and made way for his eſcape from thence; and from whence he came ſafe to the cave of Adullam; and the Lord hears all his poor and afflicted ones, when they cry unto him, and in the iſſue ſaves them from all their troubles, by reaſon of a body of ſin and death, the temptations of Satan, and the perſecutions of men.

℣. 7.

[1] ונהרו & confluunt, Junius & Tremellius, Michaelis; & inſtar fluvii irruerint, Piſcator, Amama; & confluxerunt, Gejerus.

℣. 7. The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, &c.] By whom may be meant, either the uncreated angel, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the angel of God's preſence, and of the covenant, the Captain of ſalvation, the leader and commander of the people; and whoſe ſalvation is as walls and bulwarks about them; or as an army ſurrounding them: or a created angel may be intended, even a ſingle one, which is ſufficient to guard a multitude of ſaints, ſince one could deſtroy at once ſuch a vaſt number of enemies, as in 2 Kings xix. 35. or one may be put for more, ſince they are an innumerable company that are on the ſide of the Lord's people, and to whom they are joined; and theſe may be ſaid to encamp about them, becauſe they are an hoſt or army; ſee Gen. xxxii. 1, 2. Luke ii. 13. and are the guardians of the ſaints, that ſtand up for them and protect them, as well as miniſter to them. And delivereth them; out of the hands of all their enemies. David had a guard, an army of theſe about him, in the court of Achiſh, who preſerved him from being ſeized on, and receiving any hurt there; and who brought him from thence in ſafety: there is no doubt but he here ſpeaks his own experience.

℣. 8. O taſte, and ſee that the Lord is good, &c.] He is eſſentially, infinitely, perfectly, immutably, and ſolely good in himſelf; and he is communicatively and diffuſively good to others; he is the author of all good, but not of any evil, in a moral ſenſe; this chiefly regards his ſpecial grace and goodneſs through Chriſt: all the divine perſons in the Godhead are good; the Father is good, he has good deſigns towards his people, has provided good things for them, made good promiſes to them, and beſtows good gifts on them: the Son is good; the good Shepherd that has laid down his life for the ſheep; he is the fountain of all grace and goodneſs to his churches, and to particular believers; he has wrought a good work for them, the work of redemption, and he ſpeaks a good word on their behalf in the court of heaven: the Spirit is good; he works good things in the hearts of the ſons of men, and ſhews good things unto them; and gracious ſouls, ſuch as the pſalmiſt here calls upon, are capable of taſting and diſcerning how good the Lord is in ſome meaſure; ſee Pſal. cxix. 103. Cant. ii. 3. 1 Pet. ii. 2, 3. Whilſt unregenerate, their taſte is vitiated, and remains unchanged, and ſin is what they feed upon with pleaſure, and ſo diſreliſh every thing that is good; but in converſion a new taſte is given, ſo as to have a ſaving, experimental knowledge of the grace and goodneſs of God in Chriſt, an application of it to them; and in ſuch manner as to live upon it, and be nouriſhed by it; and though this is not a ſuperficial taſte of things, like that of hypocrites, nor a ſingle one only, being frequently repeated; yet it is but a taſte in compariſon of the enjoyment of it in the heavenly ſtate; and every taſte now influences and engages truſt in the Lord, as follows. Bleſſed is the man that truſteth in him; ſee the note on Pſal. ii. 12. the Targum renders it, that truſt in his Word.

℣. 9. O fear the Lord, ye his ſaints, &c.] Who are ſanctified by his Spirit, and ſo are openly and manifeſtatively his; theſe are exhorted to fear the Lord with reverence and godly fear; and great reaſon there is why they ſhould fear him, ſince he is King of ſaints, and fear is due to him from them; and ſeeing they have received many inſtances of grace and goodneſs from him, and therefore ſhould fear him for his goodneſs-ſake; and beſides they, and they only, know him, and have the grace of fear in them, and ſo only can exerciſe it on him. For there is no want to them that fear him; not in ſpirituals, ſince ſo much goodneſs is laid up for them; the heart of God is towards them, his ſecret is with them, his eye is upon them, and the ſun of righteouſneſs ariſes on them; and both grace and glory are given to them; nor in temporals, ſince godlineſs, or the fear of God, has the promiſe of this life, as well as of that which is to come.

℣. 10. The young lions do lack, and ſuffer hunger, &c.] According to Apollinarius, "the needy rich, "whom famine preſſes;" ſee Job iv. 10, 11. But they that ſeek the Lord; by prayer, diligently, with their whole heart, and in the ſincerity of their ſouls; the Targum is, that ſeek the doctrine of the Lord; that ſeek inſtruction from him, and to be taught by him: theſe ſhall not want any good thing; which God has purpoſed to beſtow upon them, which he has promiſed unto them, and provided for them; nor any thing that ſhall be for their good.

℣. 11. Come, ye children, &c.] Meaning either his own children, thoſe of his own family, judging it his duty to inſtruct them, and bring them up in the fear of the Lord; or his ſubjects, to whom he ſtood in the relation of a father, as every king does; or all his hearers, as thoſe who attended the prophets are called the children, or ſons of the prophets; or young people in common may be deſigned, who ſhould be taught betimes their duty to God and men: unleſs the children of God in general are here meant; or particularly the leaſt among them, called babes and little children, who are little in their own eyes, are modeſt and humble; and who, as they need inſtruction, are moſt forward to receive it; and the word come does not ſo much deſign local motion, a drawing near to hear, as readineſs to hear, and a cloſe attention of mind; as follows. Hearken unto me; as unto a father, giving good doctrine and wholeſome advice; Prov. ii. 1, 2. and iv. 1, 2. I will teach you the fear of the Lord; which he had ſo often ſpoken of, and ſo many good things are promiſed to them that have it, and even in the context: this the pſalmiſt could not give, nor can any man, only teach it, ſhew the nature of it, in what it lies, how it ſhews itſelf, and what are the effects it produces: this is the firſt leſſon to be taught and learned; for it is the beginning of wiſdom; it includes all grace, and every duty, and regards the whole worſhip of God, and the manner of it.

℣. 12. What man is he that deſireth life? &c.] Every man deſires life, even a natural life; it is more deſirable than all things in it; eſpecially an healthful life, without which the bleſſings and mercies of life cannot be comfortably enjoyed; and ſtill more a life of proſperity; life, with an affluence of good things, and even a long one: though it may be rather that a ſpiritual life is here meant, and a comfortable one; a life free from the remorſes of a guilty conſcience, from the fear of hell, damnation, and wrath; from the bondage of the Law, and the dread of death; a life of faith on Chriſt, and communion with him; and a life of ſobriety, righteouſneſs, and holineſs; and perhaps it may be beſt of all to underſtand it of eternal life, which is life eminently and emphatically; it follows, And loveth many days; that is, good ones; as they are interpreted in 1 Pet. iii. 10. not of this life, for the the days of it are evil, and eſpecially when they are lengthened out; the days of old age, Eccl. xii. 1. unleſs the days of the Son of man, the days of enjoying the preſence of God in his houſe and ordinances, ſhould be intended; though rather, the good and many days of eternity, even length of days, for ever ever and ever, in which will be fulneſs of joy, and never-ceaſing and never-fading pleaſures. That he may ſee good; there is good to be ſeen and enjoyed in this life, which if the ſaints did not believe they ſhould ſee and enjoy, they would often faint; and this good lies in the participation of the bleſſings of grace, and in fellowſhip with Father, Son, and Spirit: but the great and laſting good to be ſeen and enjoyed, is in the world to come, when God ſhall be all in all, be ſeen as he is, and the ſaints ſhall inherit all things.

℣. 13. Keep thy tongue from evil, &c.] This, and what follows in this and the next verſe, point at the things wherein the fear of God ſhews itſelf; and ſuggeſt, that thoſe who have it, and which is known by theſe fruits, ſhall enjoy the deſirable and good days before mentioned. The tongue is an inſtrument of much evil, an unruly member, and needs reſtraint; and it is from evil, and not from good, it is to be kept; from evil-ſpeaking of God, from curſing and ſwearing; from evil-ſpeaking of men, reproaching and reviling them; from filthy ſpeaking, from all obſcene and unchaſte words, and from all lying ones; for where ſuch evil-ſpeaking is indulged, the fear of God cannot be in that man. And thy lips from ſpeaking guile; hypocritical and deceitful words, ſpeaking with flattering lips and a double heart; ſome ſpeak bad words in common converſation, through an evil habit and cuſtom; and ſome ſpeak good words with an ill deſign; and in neither of them is the fear of God before their eyes, nor in their hearts.

℣. 14. Depart from evil, &c.] This denotes that evil is near to men; it keeps cloſe to them, and ſhould be declined and ſhunned: and it regards all ſorts of evil; evil men, and their evil company; evil things, evil words and works, and all appearance of evil; and the fear of the Lord ſhews itſelf in an hatred of it, and a departure from it, Prov. viii. 13. and xvi. 6. And do good; not only acts of beneficence to all in neceſſitous circumſtances, but every good work; whatever the word of God directs, or ſuggeſts ſhould be done; and which ſhould be done from right principles of faith and love, and to right ends, the glory of God, and the good of his intereſt; and Chriſt ſhould be looked and applied unto for grace and ſtrength to perform; all which are evidences of the true fear of God. Seek peace, and purſue it; in the world, and with all men, as much as poſſibly can be; in neighbourhoods, cities and ſtates, and in the churches of Chriſt, and with the ſaints, as well as with God through Chriſt; and which in every ſenſe is to be purſued after with eagerneſs, and to be endeavoured for with diligence; ſee Rom. xii. 18. and xiv. 19. Heb. xii. 14.

℣. 15. The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, &c.] Theſe are the ſame with them that fear the Lord, and do good; not that they become righteous in the ſight of God, or are juſtified before him, by their fear of him, and by their good works; but theſe are the fruits and effects of grace, ſhewing them to be righteous perſons; for it is only by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt that men are righteous before God: and upon theſe the eyes of the Lord are; not only his eye of providence, to watch over them, protect them, and ſupply them with good things; but his eye of love; with complacency and delight he looks upon them, as clothed with the righteouſneſs of his Son; and it is with pleaſure he looks upon them, that being well-pleaſing in his ſight; ſeeing by it the Law is magnified and made honourable; nor does he ever withdraw his eyes from them, Job xxxvi. 7. And his ears are open unto their cry; for though they are righteous, they are ſometimes in diſtreſs; their afflictions are many; the good days they are to ſee are hereafter; and at thoſe times they cry unto the Lord; which is to be underſtood of prayer, and of the vehemency and fervency of it, when they have the ear of God, and he ſhews himſelf to be a God hearing and anſwering prayer.

℣. 16. The face of the Lord is againſt them that do evil, &c.] Not againſt every one that ſins; for the righteous are not without ſin; they have ſin in them, and they do no good without it; but againſt them that live in ſin, whoſe courſe of life is a ſeries of wickedneſs, and they are workers of iniquity; and have no ſenſe of ſin, nor ſorrow for it, go on in it without ſhame or fear; againſt theſe the face of the Lord is, he ſhews his reſentment, and ſtirs up his wrath. For the Lord to be againſt a man is dreadful; a fearful thing it is to fall into his hands as a God of vengeance; there is no ſtanding before him when once he is angry: and to have the face of God againſt a man is intolerable, when it is to deſtroy, and To cut off the remembrance of them from the earth; ſo that they ſhall be no more thought of, nor ſpoken of, but with contempt and reproach; an everlaſting mark of infamy being upon their names; ſee Prov. x. 7.

℣. 17. The righteous cry, &c.] The word righteous is not in the original text, but is rightly ſupplied in our verſion, as it is in the Targum, and by Jarchi; and ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve, that theſe words are not to be connected with the preceding verſe, but with the verſe before that; and they are indeed an amplification of the laſt clauſe of it; and the cry of the righteous is meant, to which the ears of the Lord are open; though Aben Ezra thinks, that theſe words are to be underſtood of them that do evil, and of their cry to the Lord, when they turn from their evil ways; but the former ſenſe is beſt. And the Lord heareth, and delivereth them out of all their troubles; their inward troubles, through the workings of corruption in their hearts; through the violent aſſaults of Satan, the blaſphemous thoughts he injects into them, and his ſolicitations of them to ſin; and through divine deſertions, and their outward troubles; through afflictions of body, loſſes of eſtate and friends, and the reproaches and perſecutions of men; out of all theſe the Lord ſooner or later delivers his people who cry unto him.

℣. 18. The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, &c.] Who are preſſed and bore down with afflictions, by the ſorrow of heart under which their ſpirits are broken, Prov. xv. 13. or with a ſenſe of ſin and ſorrow for it, for which their hearts ſmite them, and they are wounded by it, and broken with it: to theſe the Lord is nigh; not in a general way only, as he is to all men, being God omnipreſent, but in a ſpecial manner; he comes and manifeſts himſelf to them in a gracious way, pours in the oil and wine of his love, and binds up their broken hearts; yea, comes and dwells with them: he does not paſs by them and neglect them, much leſs make the breach worſe; he does not break the bruiſed reeds, but he heals their breaches. And ſaveth ſuch as be of a contrite ſpirit; not in a legal, but in an evangelical way; who are humbled under a ſenſe of ſin, and melted down in true repentance, under a view of the love and grace of God; and are poor and mean in their own own eyes: to theſe the Lord has reſpect; the ſacrifices of a broken and contrite ſpirit are not deſpiſed by him, but accepted through faith in Chriſt; and ſuch he ſaves with an everlaſting ſalvation in him.

℣. 19. Many are the afflictions of the righteous, &c.] This may be underſtood of ſome one particular righteous perſon, ſince the ſingular number is here made uſe of; whereas the plural is always uſed before, when the righteous are made mention of; and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt may be deſigned, who is eminently and emphatically the righteous; he is righteous both as God and man, and as Mediator, in the diſcharge of every branch of his office; and his afflictions were many, which he endured from men, from devils, and from God himſelf: many were the afflictions of his body, which he bore when buffeted, ſcourged, and crucified; and many were the afflictions of his ſoul, when he bore the ſins of his people, endured the wrath of God for them, and was forſaken by him; though none of theſe were for any ſins of his own, but for the ſins of others; and out of them all the Lord delivered him at laſt, and ſet him at his own right hand: or this may be underſtood of every one of the righteous; who, though they are juſtified from ſin, and are ſaved from wrath, yet have many afflictions; which are evils in themſelves, as the word [m] may be rendered, and are very troubleſome and diſtreſſing; and theſe are great and grievous for quality, and many and abundant for quantity; though no more than it is the will of God ſhould be, and not one too many. But the Lord delivereth him out of them all; as Chriſt was, and all his people will be; if not in this life, by giving reſpites and intervals, as he ſometimes does; yet hereafter, when the righteous are completely delivered out of all their trials and exerciſes, ſo as that they ſhall never return more upon them. The word tranſlated afflictions, as it ſignifies evils, may be ſafely interpreted of moral evils, as well as of evils of afflictions: it is the ſame word that is uſed for moral evil in ℣. 21. and then the ſenſe is, that many are the ſins committed by righteous perſons; for there are none without ſin, in many things they all offend; yet they ſhall not periſh by them, but they ſhall be delivered from them; as, from the dominion of them by the power of grace, and from the guilt of them by the blood of Chriſt, and from condemnation for them through his righteouſneſs; ſo hereafter from the very being of them, and all moleſtation and diſturbance by them.

℣. 20. He keepeth all his bones; not one of them is broken.] This is literally true of Chriſt, in whom the type of the paſſover-lamb had its accompliſhment, and this paſſage alſo; ſee Exod. xii. 46. John xix. 31—36. and ſeems better to agree with him than with any of his members, ſince the bones of many of them have been broken by one accident or another; and eſpecially many of the martyrs of Jeſus have had all their bones broken upon the rack or wheel; wherefore, to underſtand theſe words of them, might tend to create uneaſineſs and deſpondency in the minds of ſuch, who by any means have their bones broken; as if they were not righteous perſons: this promiſe not being fulfilled in them: and to interpret this of the Lord's keeping the bones of his people in the grave, and in the reſurrection putting them together again; this is no other than what will be done to the wicked; it ſeems therefore beſt to underſtand the whole of Chriſt; and it looks as if this paſſage was had in view as fulfilled in John xix. 36. ſince a ſcripture is referred to; but if it is interpreted of the righteous in general, it muſt be with a limitation; as that their bones are all kept by the Lord, and not one is broken without his knowledge and will; and that they are not broken finally, but reſtored again perfect and whole in the reſurrection, and ſo will continue to all eternity: the phraſe, without entering into particulars, may in general deſign the care of Providence over the righteous; with this compare Matth. x. 29, 30.

℣. 21. Evil ſhall ſlay the wicked, &c.] Meaning either the evil they deſigned againſt the righteous, ſhall return and fall upon their heads, to their own ruin; or the evil of affliction, which to them is the evil of puniſhment, both here and hereafter, from which they will have no deliverance in the end; though the righteous have from their afflictions, being not properly puniſhments, but chaſtiſements for ſin, and are but for a time; or elſe the evil of ſin, which is the cauſe of death corporal and eternal. And they that hate the righteous ſhall be deſolate; or ſhall be guilty [n]; be found ſo; or ſhall be condemned, or damned, as the Targum renders it. All wicked men hate the righteous, both Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, and his people; and that becauſe they are righteous, and do not run into the ſame exceſs of wickedneſs with them; theſe will be arraigned at the day of judgment, and will be convicted of all their hard ſpeeches which they have ſpoken againſt Chriſt and his members; and will be pronounced guilty, and will be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction.

℣. 22. The Lord redeemeth the ſoul of his ſervants, &c.] Who are made ſo by his grace in the day of his power, and are willing to ſerve him, and do ſerve him with their minds, readily and chearfully; and the ſoul of theſe, which is the more noble part of them, and is of more worth than a world, the redemption of which is precious, and requires a great price, the Lord redeems; not that their bodies are neglected, and not redeemed; but this is mentioned as the principal part, and for the whole; and this redemption is by the Lord, who only is able to effect it, and which he has obtained through his precious blood; and here it ſeems to denote the application of it in its effects; that is, the forgiveneſs of ſin, juſtification, and ſanctification, ſince it reſpects ſomething that is continually doing. And none of them that truſt in him ſhall be deſolate; or be guilty [o], or condemned, or damned; becauſe they are juſtified from all the ſins they have been guilty of, through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus; and having believed in him, they ſhall not be damned, according to Mark xvi. 16. and they ſhall be far from being deſolate, and alone, and miſerable; they ſhall ſtand at Chriſt's right-hand, be received into his kingdom and glory, and be for ever with him.

[m] רעות mala, Pagninus, Montanus, Muſculus, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth. Cocceius; reatum habebunt, Schmidt; damnabuntur, Gejerus; ſhall be condemned as guilty, Ainſworth. לא non rei fiunt, Cocceius; non punientur, Gejerus; ſhall not be condemned as guilty, Ainſworth.

[n] יאשמו rei fiunt, [o] יאשמו

PSALM

PSALM XXXV.

A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm ſeems to have been written by David, when he was perſecuted by Saul; and when many falſe charges were brought againſt him by his courtiers; and when he was the ſcorn and deriſion of the people; the ſubject of it is pretty much of the ſame kind with the ſeventh pſalm, and might be written about the ſame time that was, and on the ſame occaſion; and it may be applied to the church and people of God in like caſes. There is a paſſage in it, ℣. 19. which our Lord ſeems to refer to and apply to himſelf, John xv. 25. and ſome interpret the whole of it concerning him. The Arabic verſion calls it a prophecy of the incarnation; though there does not appear any thing in it applicable to that.

℣. 1. Plead my cauſe, O Lord, with them that ſtrive with me, &c.] Meaning Saul and his courtiers; concerning whom he elſewhere deſires that the Lord would judge between them, plead his cauſe, and deliver him; as he accordingly did, and maintained it, and the righteouſneſs of it, 1 Sam. xxiv. 12—15. Pſal. ix. 4. So Chriſt pleaded not his own cauſe as man, but committed himſelf to him that judgeth righteouſly; and his people leave their cauſe with him, who is their advocate, and is able to plead it thoroughly; and does plead it againſt wicked and ungodly men, who unrighteouſly charge them; againſt Satan the accuſer of the brethren, who ſtands at their right hand to reſiſt them; and againſt their own hearts, and the ſins of them, which luſt and war againſt them, and condemn them. Fight againſt them that fight againſt me; ſo the Lord is ſometimes repreſented as a man of war, and Chriſt as a warrior fighting for the ſaints; and ſafe are they on whoſe ſide he is; but miſerable all ſuch who are found fighters againſt him and his; for none ever oppoſed him and proſpered.

℣. 2. Take hold of ſhield and buckler, &c.] Defenſive weapons; not that the Lord ſtands in need of any of theſe to defend himſelf with: but the ſenſe is, that he would be as theſe to David; as he was to him, and is to all his people; namely, their ſhield and buckler: he gives unto them the ſhield of ſalvation; he encompaſſes them about with his favour as with a ſhield, and keeps them by his power ſafe from all their enemies. And ſtand up for mine help; for which the Lord ariſes, and ſtands by his people, and againſt their enemies, delivering them out of their hands.

℣. 3. Draw out alſo the ſpear, &c.] An offenſive weapon; expreſſive of the vengeance which God ſometimes takes of the enemies of his people, when he bends his bow, ſhoots his arrows, whets his glittering ſword, and his hand takes hold of judgment. And ſtop the way againſt them that perſecute me: that they might not overtake him; God can hinder, and he ſometimes does hinder perſecutors from overtaking his people in their ſtraits; and as he hedges up their way with thorns, that they cannot proceed as they have begun, ſo he hedges up the way of their enemies; interpoſes himſelf and his power, and is a wall of fire about them; a wall for the defence and ſecurity of his ſaints, and a wall of fire for the conſumption of thoſe that riſe up againſt them. The words may be rendered, draw out the ſpear and ſword, to meet thoſe that perſecute me[p]; for סגיר is a noun, and ſignifies a ſword ſhut up in its ſcabbard; from whence ſagaris comes, which is one kind of a ſword. Say unto my ſoul, I am thy ſalvation: Chriſt is the ſalvation of his people; he is the only perſon appointed, provided, promiſed, and ſent to be the Saviour; and he is the alone author of ſalvation; it is wrought out by him, and it is in him, and in him only; and therefore he is called their ſalvation, and the ſalvation of God: and they are intereſted in the ſalvation which is in him; it was deſigned, prepared, and wrought out for them, and for them only; and it is applied unto them by the Spirit, and they ſhall perfectly enjoy it to all eternity: and yet ſometimes they are at a loſs about their intereſt in it, and deſire it might be made known unto them, which was the caſe of the pſalmiſt here; they, as he, ſee their neceſſity of it, and that there is no comfort nor ſafety without it; they are wonderfully delighted with the excellency of it, that it is ſo great in itſelf, ſo ſuitable to them, ſo compleat and perfect, and of an everlaſting duration; yet, what through the hidings of God's face, the temptations of Satan, the greatneſs of their ſins, and the prevalence of unbelief, they cannot tell how to believe their intereſt in it; yet moſt earneſtly deſire the Lord would ſhew it to them, and aſſure them of it; which favour, when granted, is by the witneſſings of the Spirit to their ſpirits, that they are the children of God, and the redeemed of the Lamb: and this is ſaid particularly to them; it is not a diſcovery of ſalvation by Chriſt in general, that they have before, but it is a ſaying to their ſouls, that it is theirs; and when this is ſpoken home to the ſoul by the Spirit of God, it is effectual; and removes unbelief at once, and fills with joy unſpeakable and full of glory.

℣. 4. Let them be confounded, and put to ſhame, that ſeek after my ſoul, &c.] This petition and what follows, which ſeem to be by way of imprecation, are to be conſidered as prophecies of what would be, and as expreſſions of faith that ſo it ſhould be; and are not to be drawn into examples, and to be imitated by private perſons; nor are they contrary to thoſe evangelical rules, which require men to love their enemies, and pray for them; to give place to wrath, and not meditate vengeance, nor take it: and ſo it was with David's enemies. Saul, who hunted after his ſoul or life to take it away, was filled with ſhame and confuſion, when David, having cut off the ſkirt of his garment, held it up to him; by which he was convinced that his life was in his hands, and he did not take it away, though he was ſeeking after his: and ſo it will fare with the enemies of Chriſt, the Jews; who ſought to take away his life, and did take it away, when they ſhall ſee him come in the clouds of heaven, whom they have pierced; and in like manner will it be with the enemies of all his people, whom nothing will content but their lives, when they ſhall ſee the lambs they have worried and butchered, on Chriſt's right hand and they on the left; and to the ſheep, ſaid, Come ye bleſſed; and to them, Go, ye curſed. Let them be turned back and brought to confuſion, that deviſe my hurt; as Saul did David's, even even when he made the moſt ſpecious ſhew of affection and reſpect unto him, as well as when he more openly perſecuted him; and more than once was he turned back with ſhame, and departed home; ſee 1 Sam. xxiv. 22. and xxvi. 25. The Jews, that came to apprehend Chriſt, together with the Roman ſoldiers, and who had deviſed and intended his hurt, went backward and fell to the ground with ſhame and confuſion, when having aſked them who they ſought, and they had replied, told them, he was the perſon; and how often has it been, that when wicked men have deviſed deceitful matters againſt the members of Chriſt, that their counſel has been carried headlong, they have not been able to perform their enterprizes; a hook has been put in their noſe, and a bridle in their jaws, and they have been turned back the way they came, with ſhame and diſgrace.

[p] So Grotius, Amama, Ainſworth, and ſome in Mollerus.

℣. 5. Let them be as chaff before the wind, &c.] As they are; ſee Pſal. i. 4. and let the angel of the Lord chaſe them; either a good angel, who is the Lord's, his creature that miniſters unto him, and is ready to obey his orders; and who, as he encamps about the ſaints and protects them, ſo he is able to deſtroy their enemies; as one angel in a night deſtroyed all the firſt-born in Egypt, and another the whole army of the Aſſyrians, Exod. xii. 29. 2 Kings xix. 35. an angel of the Lord, who is ſwift to fly, and ſo to chaſe and overtake, and able to execute whatever is the will of the Lord: or elſe an evil angel, who is the Lord's, being made by him, though not made evil by him; and who is under his reſtraints, and can do nothing but by his permiſſion; and who ſometimes is employed by the Lord, as the executioner of his wrath upon wicked men; is ſuffered to diſtreſs and torture their conſciences in this life, and hereafter drag them into everlaſting burnings, prepared for the devil and his angels.

℣. 6. Let their way be dark and ſlippery, &c.] In which they run before the angel, chaſing and purſuing them; ſo that they know not where they are, at what they ſtumble, whither to flee, nor how to ſtand; the ways of wicked men are as darkneſs, they know not in what condition they are, and whither they are going; and utter darkneſs, even blackneſs of darkneſs, is reſerved for them: but here it means a calamitous, uncomfortable, fickle, and unſtable ſituation in this life; ſee Jer. xxiii. 11, 12. The alluſion is to ſome of the valleys in the land of Paleſtine, which were dark, and the roads in them very ſmooth and ſlippery, as travellers in thoſe parts have obſerved [q]. And let the angel of God perſecute them; ſee the note on the preceding verſe.

℣. 7. For without cauſe have they hid for me their net in a pit, &c.] This is ſaid in alluſion to the cuſtom of digging pits, and putting nets into them for the catching of wild beaſts; and covering them with ſtraw or duſt, or ſuch like things, as Jarchi obſerves, that they might not be diſcerned; and which intends the ſecret and crafty methods taken by David's enemies to enſnare him and deſtroy him; though he had given them no cauſe to uſe him in ſuch a manner; which is an aggravation of their ſins, and a reaſon of the above imprecations, as well as of what follows: and in the ſame manner, and without any juſt cauſe, Chriſt and his members have been treated by wicked men, and therefore their damnation is juſt, and will be inevitable; Which without cauſe they have digged for my ſoul; which is added for further explanation-ſake, and to aggravate their ſin, and to ſhew the juſtneſs of their puniſhment.

℣. 8. Let deſtruction come upon him at unawares, &c.] Or a ſtorm [r], ſuch as is cauſed in the eaſtern countries by a ſouth-wind, very ſudden, violent, and deſtructive [s]: the ſingular number being here uſed, ſome Jewiſh commentators, as Kimchi, have thought Saul is particularly meant; and ſome chriſtian interpreters have been of opinion that Judas is intended: the imprecations here may be compared with thoſe which reſpect him, Pſal. cix. 6, 7, 8. Though this may regard every one of the enemies of David, or of Chriſt and his people, whoſe ruin and deſtruction will come upon them unawares; ſee 1 Theſſ. v. 3. Rev. xviii. 7, 8. And let his net that he hath laid catch himſelf; a figurative expreſſion, agreeable to the alluſion before made, and which is explained in the next clauſe. Into that very deſtruction let him fall, which he had deſigned and contrived for others; ſo Haman was hanged on the ſame gallows he had prepared for Mordecai; and ſo it often is in the courſe of Providence, that the wicked fall into the ſame calamity they have intended and endeavoured to bring others into; ſee Pſal. vii. 15, 16. and ix. 15, 16.

℣. 9. And my ſoul ſhall be joyful in the Lord, &c.] Not in the deſtruction of his enemies, but in the God of his ſalvation; the Targum is, In the word of the Lord; the eſſential Word of God, the promiſed Meſſiah, Saviour, and Redeemer. Chriſt is the object of a believer's joy; he rejoices in his perſon, as he is the mighty God, able to ſave him, and to keep what he has committed to him, and to preſerve him from falling; as he is God and man in one perſon, and ſo fit to be a mediator between God and man; and as he is a prophet to inſtruct him, a prieſt to expiate his ſin and make interceſſion for him, and as a king to rule over, protect, and defend him; and as he ſtands in the relations of a father, huſband, brother, and friend: he rejoices in what he has done and is doing; in that this Word is made fleſh, and has obtained eternal redemption, and now appears in the preſence of God, as an advocate and interceſſor: it follows, It ſhall rejoice in his ſalvation; that which Jehovah the Father has determined upon, provided for, and has formed the ſcheme of; that which Jehovah the Son undertook to accompliſh, and now has finiſhed; and that which Jehovah the Spirit, had made a diſcovery and application of unto the pſalmiſt, in anſwer to his requeſt in ℣. 3. This filled him with ſo much joy, as it does every believer that has a view of intereſt in it; ſeeing hereby the law is fulfilled, juſtice is ſatisfied, ſin is atoned for, the pardon of it is procured, an everlaſting righteouſneſs is brought in, and a ſolid foundation laid for hope of eternal glory and happineſs.

℣. 10. All my bones ſhall ſay, &c.] So, in a figurative ſenſe, vexation and diſquietude are aſcribed to the bones, Pſalm. vi. 2. and xxxviii. 3. and ſometimes joy and gladneſs, Pſal. li. 8. His ſoul is ſaid to rejoice in the former verſe; and here his bones are ſaid to ſhew forth the praiſes of the Lord; and both together deſign the whole man, as heart and fleſh in Pſal. lxxxiv. 2. and the bones being the ſtrength of the body, may denote his ſaying what follows, with all his might, and with all his ſtrength, and with the utmoſt fervency of ſpirit. Lord, [q] See Maundrel's Travels, p. 7.

[s] See Thevenot, Tavernier, &c.
[r] שואה tumultuoſa calamitas, Cocceius; ſo Ainſworth; tumultus, Vatablus.

Lord, who is like unto thee; on account of the perfections of his nature, which appear in the ſalvation and deliverance of his people: there is none like unto him for his wiſdom, holineſs, power, grace, and mercy; for his foreknowledge, wiſdom, and counſel, in forming the ſcheme of ſalvation; for his holineſs and juſtice, which are glorified by it; for his might and power in effecting it; and for his grace, mercy, goodneſs, and faithfulneſs ſhewn in keeping covenant with his people; in pardoning and paſſing by their iniquity and tranſgreſſion, and in condeſcending to take notice of his poor and needy, to deliver them as follows; ſee Pſal. cxiii. 5—8. Which delivereth the poor from him that is too ſtrong for him; yea, the poor and the needy, from him that ſpoileth him? in which words the pſalmiſt doubtleſs reſpects himſelf and his own caſe, who was poor and afflicted, and ſtood in need of help when he was perſecuted by Saul, who was his enemy, too ſtrong for him, and who ſought to ſpoil and ruin him, but the Lord delivered him out of his hands; ſee Pſal. xviii. 17. They agree with the caſe of all the Lord's poor and needy, who are ſo not only in a temporal ſenſe, as they commonly be; and in ſuch ſenſe as all mankind are, though every one is not ſenſible of his ſpiritual poverty through ſin; having neither food nor raiment, nor any thing to procure them with, and yet think themſelves rich and increaſed with goods: but in the beſt ſenſe, being poor in ſpirit and rich in faith; theſe have enemies ſtronger than they. Sin is ſometimes repreſented as a perſon, their antagoniſt that fights againſt them, wars with them, prevails over them ſometimes, and carries them captive: ſin is too ſtrong for a man without the grace of God; nay, it was too ſtrong for Adam in innocence, and ſpoiled him of the image of God, ſtripped him of his righteouſneſs, and marred all the glory and honour in which he was; and it is too ſtrong for a man that has the grace of God, when left to himſelf: but the Lord delivers his people from it; they are redeemed from it, and ſaved from puniſhment for it by the blood of Chriſt; and they are freed from the power and dominion of it, by the Spirit and grace of Chriſt at converſion, and at death they are delivered from the being of it. Satan is the ſtrong man armed, and is an over-match for the poor and needy; but Chriſt the mighty God is ſtronger than he, and has ranſomed them out of the hands of him that was ſtronger than they; and the prey, or they that were made a ſpoil by him, are taken out of the hands of the mighty, and the lawful captive is delivered: they are, indeed, aſſaulted by his temptations, in which he would be too many for them, but that they are ſtrengthened againſt him by the Lord, and are enabled to withſtand him; who, in the iſſue, flees from them; nor can he do as he pleaſes with them, nor re-aſſume his power over them he once had, nor lead them captive at his will as he once did: God is on their ſide; Chriſt is their patron and defender, that pleads their cauſe againſt him; the Spirit that is within them is greater than he that is in the world; angels are all around them, and in a little while theſe poor and needy will be in heaven, and out of his reach, and ſo of every oppreſſor and perſecutor; now they are the weak things of this world, and their enemies are the mighty ones and too ſtrong for them, who ſpoil them of their good name and character, and ſometimes of their goods and property; but the Lord does, and will deliver them out of their hands, and enter them into reſt, where the wicked ceaſe from troubling.

℣. 11. Falſe witneſſes did riſe up, &c.] Againſt David, ſaying he ſought the hurt of Saul, 1 Sam. xxiv. 9. as did againſt David's antitype, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Matt. xxvi. 59—61. and againſt his apoſtles, Acts xxiv. 5, 6. and very frequently do they riſe up and bear falſe witneſs againſt his people, which is a very heinous crime. They laid to my charge things that I knew not; ſuch as David was not conſcious of, never thought of doing, much leſs attempted to do; as the taking away of Saul's life, the contrary of which appeared by his cutting off his ſkirt only when he was in his hands, and taking away his ſpear from his bolſter when he could have taken off his head; and ſuch were the things laid to the charge of the Meſſiah, David's ſon, who knew no ſin, nor did any; and the like are exhibited againſt his members, who go through good report and bad report, and whoſe good converſation is falſly accuſed by malicious men.

℣. 12. They rewarded me evil for good, &c.] For the good David did in killing Goliath, and ſlaying his ten thouſands of the Philiſtines, and thereby ſaving his king and country; Saul and his courtiers envied him, and ſought to ſlay him: ſo our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, for all the good he did to the Jews, by healing their bodies of diſeaſes, and preaching the goſpel to them for the benefit of their ſouls, was rewarded with reproaches and perſecutions, and at laſt with the ſhameful death of the croſs; and in like manner are his people uſed; but this is an evil that ſhall not go unpuniſhed; ſee Prov. xvii. 13. It is added, To the ſpoiling of my ſoul; or to the bereaving of it[1]; cauſing it to be fatherleſs; that is, to the bereaving it of its joy, peace, and comfort; ſo fatherleſs is put for comfortleſs, John xiv. 18. or to the taking away of his ſoul, which being ſeparated from the body, its companion is left alone, as one that is fatherleſs.

℣. 13. But as for me, when they were ſick, &c.] Or under any diſorder or diſtreſs of body or mind, when any misfortune or infirmity attended them; meaning Saul and his courtiers, before David was perſecuted by them. My clothing was ſackcloth; that is, he was grieved, and mourned for them, it being uſual to put on ſackcloth in time of mourning; ſee Gen. xxxvii. 34. I humbled my ſoul with faſting; on the account of them, giving up himſelf to prayer for them, as follows. And my prayer returned into mine own boſom; that is, he prayed privately and heartily for them, as for himſelf; he was conſtant in it, his heart was in it, and he took delight in it, and he was heard and anſwered; unleſs the ſenſe ſhould be, that his prayer was ſlighted by them, and ſo returned back to himſelf, as a preſent deſpiſed is returned; but however it was not without its effect, the good for which he prayed for them was returned by the Lord unto him.

℣. 14. I behaved myſelf as though he had been my friend, or brother, &c.] Meaning either Saul or Doeg the Edomite, or ſome ſuch evil man; ſomewhat like this he ſays of Ahithophel, Pſal. xli. 9. and lv. 13. and Arama thinks he is meant here; as Chriſt of Judas, whom he called friend, when he came to betray him; and who not only eat with him at table of his bread, but was ſteward of his family, and carried the bag, Matt. xxvi. 50. John xiii. 29. I bowed down heavily, as one that mourneth for his mother; or as a mother that mourneth for her ſon, as Jarchi interprets it, whoſe affections are very ſtrong; and thus Chriſt wept over Jeruſalem,

[1] שכול orbitatem, Montanus, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth.

Jeruſalem, and had a tender concern for and ſympathy with the Jews, his implacable enemies, and wept over them, and prayed for them, Luke xix. 41. Matt. xxiii. 37. Luke xxiii. 34.

℣. 15. But in mine adverſity they rejoiced, &c.] Or at my halting [u], either by means of falling into ſin; good men are ſubject to ſlips and falls, and that to the diſlocating or breaking of their bones, which cauſe them to go halting all their days; wicked men watch for their halting, as Jeremiah's familiars did for his, Jer. xx. 10. and rejoice at it; ſee Pſal. xxxviii. 16, 17. or by falling into ſome misfortune or calamity; hence we render it adverſity, and may deſign ſome affliction or other, as in Mic. iv. 6. Zeph. iii. 19. at which wicked men rejoice; ſee Ezek. xxv. 23. ſo David's enemies rejoiced at his afflictions; and the enemies of his ſon and antitype, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, were glad when Judas offered to betray him to them; more ſo when they had got him into their hands; and moſt of all when he was condemned and crucified: and ſo do the enemies of his people, as the Philiſtines ſported with Samſon when he was in his adverſity, and as the antichriſtian party will rejoice and ſend gifts one to another, when the two witneſſes are ſlain; but the ſaints have a gracious God, who knows their ſouls in adverſity; a ſympathizing high-prieſt, who is touched with a feeling of their infirmities; and fellow-ſaints that are afflicted with them in all their afflictions, and bear a part of their burdens. And gathered themſelves together; not to pity him, but to inſult him; not to help him in his diſtreſs, but to add to it. Yea, the abjects gathered themſelves together againſt me; mean perſons, the refuſe and ſcum of the earth; ſuch as Job deſcribes, Job xxx. 1—8. the word may be rendered ſmitten [w], either in ſpirit, as in Iſa. lxvi. 2. they pretending ſorrow of heart for his troubles; or rather ſmitten in body, in their feet, as Mephiboſheth was; yet as lame as they were, and notwithſtanding their lameneſs, they got together to rejoice at David's halting: or it may be beſt of all to underſtand it of their being ſmitten of God and afflicted; and the ſenſe may be, that though the hand of God was upon them, this did not deter them from gathering together to inſult David in his afflictions; ſome render the word ſmiters [x], that is, with their tongues, and ſo the Targum, the wicked who ſmite with their words; ſee Jer. xviii. 18. and ſuch ſort of perſons were they that gathered together againſt Chriſt: it is true indeed, that ſome of them were men of rank and figure, were the princes of this world, as Herod and Pontius Pilate, and the Jewiſh rulers, Acts iv. 27, 28. compared with Pſal. ii. 1, 2. but the greater part of them were the meaner ſort of people; particularly the Roman ſoldiers that gathered about him, and ſported with him in Pilate's hall, and that ſurrounded him with ſcoffs when upon the croſs; theſe alſo were literally ſmiters of him, both with words, and with their hands, and are ſo called, Iſa. l. 6. And I knew it not; David knew his enemies, or he could not have ſhewn ſo much concern for them, as he did in the preceding verſes; but either he knew not of their gathering together againſt him, until he ſaw them in great numbers about him; or he was not conſcious to himſelf of any evil he had done them, that ſhould be the reaſon of it; and this was the caſe of his ſon the Meſſiah, he knew who they were that gathered about him, even thoſe that blindfolded him, and bid him propheſy who ſmote him; but he knew no ſin he had done why he ſhould be treated in the manner he was. They did tear me, and ceaſed not; not their own garments, as ſome ſupply it, pretending great grief of heart for him; nor their mouth with laughing at him, as others; ſee ℣. 21. but either his character and reputation, with hard ſayings and reproachful words, or his fleſh with blows; and this they did inceſſantly; and which was literally true of Chriſt, whoſe enemies tore his fleſh, by plucking off the hair, by buffeting and ſcourging him, and by piercing his hands and his feet with nails, when they crucified him; and they ceaſed not, even after death, to pierce his ſide with a ſpear.

℣. 16. With hypocritical mockers in feaſts, &c.] That is, the abjects gathered themſelves together with ſuch; theſe may deſign Saul's courtiers, his paraſites and flatterers, and who were hypocrites in religion alſo, and made it their buſineſs at Saul's table, and in their banquettings and revellings, to mock at David; and who were hypocritical mockers of or for a piece of bread [y], as it may be rendered; the ſame word is uſed for a paſty, or cake, and for flatterers; and they uſed at their feaſts to throw a paſty baked with honey to paraſites [z]; for the word מעוג ſignifies a cake, or a piece of bread, 1 Kings xvii. 12. and the ſenſe may be, that they mocked at David as wanting a piece of bread, and that he had brought himſelf to one; or elſe thoſe, and they that gathered with them eſpecially, mocked at David for the ſake of a meal; or for a piece of bread; ſee Prov. xxviii. 27. and ſuch ſort of men were the enemies of Chriſt, the ſcribes and Phariſees, hypocrites to God, flatterers of men, who loved feaſts, and the uppermoſt places there, and whoſe God was their belly; and who were mockers of Chriſt, derided his doctrine, and ſcoffed at his perſon, eſpecially when he hung upon the croſs. They gnaſhed upon me with their teeth; in indignation and contempt; as Stephen's enemies did on him, Acts vii. 54.

℣. 17. Lord, how long wilt thou look on? &c.] And behold theſe injuries and inſults, and not ariſe to help and ſave. The pſalmiſt firmly believed the omniſcience of God, and was well aſſured he ſaw all that was done; but he was ready to conſider him only as a ſpectator; or however, ſeems impatient until he aroſe and ſhewed himſelf ſtrong on his behalf; ſee ℣. 22, 23. Reſcue my ſoul from their deſtructions, my darling from the lions; his ſoul and his darling mean the ſame; either his life, than which nothing is dearer to a man; or his ſoul, his more noble part, and which was now alone, or ſolitary, as the word [a] uſed ſignifies; being forſaken of God and men, and was deſolate and afflicted, as it is rendered Pſal. xxv. 16. or his whole perſon, which was among men comparable to lions, for their ſtrength and ſavageneſs, who breathed out nothing but cruelty and deſtruction; from which he deſires he might be reſcued, or returned to the quiet poſſeſſion of his own houſe, and the houſe of God: the words are much the ſame ſame with thoſe of the Meſſiah in Pſal. xxii. 20, 21. ſee the notes there.

[u] בצלעי in claudicatione mea, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth. [w] נכים percuſſi, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Cocceius. [x] So Ainſworth. [y] לעגי מעוג ſubſannatoribus ſubcineritii panis, Vatablus; ſubſannantes propter placentam, Piſcator; ſcoffers for a cake of bread, Ainſworth; hence a paraſite, a table-companion, or trencher-friend, is uſed for a flatterer, vid. Suidam in voce παρασιτος. [z] Weemſe's Chriſt. Synag. l. 1. c. 6. ſ. 8. p. 209. of the moral law, l. 2. c 9. p. 310. [a] יחידתי ſolitariam meam, Piſcator, Gejerus, Schmidt, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth.

℣. 18. I will give thee thanks in the great congregation, &c.] This is the reſolution the pſalmiſt came unto; the promiſe he made, that ſhould he be delivered from his enemies, he would give God thanks in the moſt public manner; that is, he would acknowledge God to be the author of the mercy, and himſelf unworthy of it; and would aſcribe glory, honour, bleſſing, and thankſgiving to him, in the midſt of the church and people of God; they joining with him in it, when he ſhould be reſtored to an attendance with them he before prays for. I will praiſe thee among much people; meaning the ſame as before, the people of God meeting together for ſolemn worſhip; the great congregation of all, and the much people will be the ſaints in heaven, when they ſhall be gathered together, and ſing the ſong of Moſes and the Lamb. The words will bear to be applied to the Meſſiah, ſee Pſal. xxii. 22.

℣. 19. Let not them that are mine enemies wrongfully rejoice over me, &c.] The word wrongfully is to be joined not to the word rejoice, but to the word enemies; and the ſenſe is, that they were his enemies wrongfully, for falſe reaſons, unjuſt cauſes, or without any cauſe that was juſt; as follows. Neither let them wink with the eye that hate me without a cauſe; ſuch were David's enemies, particularly Saul, Pſalm vii. 4. and ſuch were the enemies of Chriſt: this laſt clauſe is thought to be referred to by him, and applied to himſelf, John xv. 25. and the whole of this is ſaid of him and by him, Pſal. lxix. 4. ſee alſo Pſal. cix. 3—5. Theſe were the Jews, of whom he came, among whom he was, and who had no reaſon to be his enemies, and to hate him; ſince he was harmleſs and inoffenſive in his life and converſation among them; went about doing a great deal of good to them, both for ſoul and body, and always expreſſed the moſt tender concern for them: they had reaſons for their hatred and rejection of him, but not juſtifiable ones; ſuch as the meanneſs of his perſon and ſtate in their view, the doctrines he preached relating to his Deity, divine Sonſhip, and the diſtinguiſhing grace of God; and his inveighing againſt the ſins and vices which prevailed among them; and ſuch are the enemies of his people, who hate them, though they are the quiet in the land, as is ſaid in the next verſe; and are harmleſs and inoffenſive in their behaviour towards men: theſe are hated for Chriſt's ſake; and becauſe he has choſen, and called them out of the world; and becauſe of their principles, which are diſtinguiſhing, and their practices, which are good: now the pſalmiſt intreats that ſuch might not be ſuffered to go on rejoicing over him, and at his calamities, but that he might be delivered out of all troubles, and out of their hands; and that they might not have any reaſon to wink with their eyes in a ſcornful and deriding way to him, and as expreſſing their pleaſure to one another at his diſtreſſes; ſee Prov. vi. 12, 13. and x. 10.

℣. 20. For they ſpeak not peace, &c.] Meaning to himſelf, or any good man; as Joſeph's brethren could not to him, Gen. xxxvii. 4. ſuch were the men David had to do with, Pſal. cxx. 6, 7. and ſuch were the enemies of Chriſt, who could not give him a good word, nor ſpeak one to him, John x. 20. and ſuch are the enemies of his people, who breathe out nothing but threatnings and ſlaughter, and not any thing that tends to peace, to promote and maintain it. Some verſions, as the Septuagint, and they that follow that, render it, they do ſpeak peace to me; but then it was in an hypocritical way, as in Pſal. xxviii. 3. and as the Jews did to Chriſt, Matth. xxii. 16, 17. for it follows. But they deviſe deceitful matters againſt them that are quiet in the land; meaning not the wicked, as Kimchi thinks; the rich, who live at eaſe and in quietneſs, having as much as heart can wiſh, with whom, as he renders it, David's enemies deviſed miſchief in a deceitful way; but the righteous of the earth, as the Targum; ſuch as David and his men were, who deſired to live peaceable and quiet lives under Saul's government; and had no intention to diſturb his government, or wreſt the crown from him; and as the Meſſiah, David's ſon, was, the humble one in the earth; as the Arabic verſion renders it in the ſingular number; a character that well agrees with Chriſt, who ſhewed great humility in coming into this world, and during his ſtay in it; it was a ſtate of humiliation with him, and in which he behaved in the moſt lowly and humble manner; he was the quiet one in the land; he ſtrove not, nor cried, nor was his voice heard in the ſtreet; he was not noiſy and clamorous, quarrelſome and litigious; but all the reverſe; he bore all inſults, reproaches and ſufferings, patiently and quietly: and ſuch are his people, ſo far as they are influenced by his grace and Spirit; they are quiet and peaceable in kingdoms, cities, and neighbourhoods, and in the churches of God; and yet the wicked are continually plotting againſt them, and deviſing things to their hurt.

℣. 21. Yea, they opened their mouth wide againſt me, &c.] In laughter, ſcorn, and deriſion; ſee Pſal. xxii. 7, 8. And ſaid, Aha, aha; a word expreſſive of joy; and the doubling it ſhews the greatneſs of it. Our eye hath ſeen it; what their heart wiſhed for; namely, the diſtreſs of him, whoſe enemies they were.

℣. 22. This thou haſt ſeen, O Lord, &c.] The inſults and deriſions of theſe men, and the injuries they did to him, whom they hated. God is omniſcient, and ſees all things, all the evil wicked men do to him; and he will requite them in his own time; ſee Pſal. x. 14. Keep not ſilence; meaning at his prayers; that he would not be as one deaf and dumb, turning his ears from his cries, and giving no anſwer to his requeſts; ſee Pſal. xxviii. 1. and xxii. 2. O Lord, be not far from me; meaning not as to his general preſence, in which ſenſe he is not far from any, Acts xvii. 27. but with reſpect to his gracious preſence and appearance to him for help and deliverance; ſee Pſal. xxii. 1.

℣. 23. Stir up thyſelf, and awake, &c.] Who ſeemed to be aſleep in the apprehenſions of the pſalmiſt, and to take no notice of his diſtreſſes, and the inſults of his enemies; ſee Pſal. xliv. 23. He adds, To my judgment, even to my cauſe; that is, to plead it and maintain it, and avenge him of his enemies, as in ℣. 1. making uſe of his covenant-intereſt in him, as a plea for it to engage him to do it, ſaying, My God, and my Lord; ſee Pſal. xxii. 1.

℣. 24. Judge me, O Lord my God, according to thy righteouſneſs, &c.] Either that righteouſneſs of his, by which he juſtifies his people, which Chriſt has wrought out, God has accepted of, and imputes; and which, though revealed in the goſpel, was witneſſed to by the Law and prophets, and was known to the ſaints under the Old-Teſtament, and particularly to David; ſee Rom. iv. 6. or the perfection of his juſtice, his eſſential righteouſneſs diſplayed in all his works and actions, and in the government of the world; according to this the pſalmiſt deſired to be judged; not with reſpect to his perſon before God, but with reſpect to his cauſe before men, by delivering him from his enemies, and taking vengeance on them: thus Chriſt alſo was judged according to the ſtrict juſtice, or righteouſneſs of God; for as ſin was righteouſly condemned in his fleſh, being imputed to him, and found upon him; ſo he was, according to the juſtice of God, acquitted, diſcharged, and juſtified in the Spirit, when he aroſe from the dead; and afterwards righteous judgment was executed on his enemies the Jews, when wrath came upon them to the uttermoſt: and his people are alſo dealt with according to the righteouſneſs of God; who acts as a righteous God, as juſt and faithful in forgiving their ſins, on account of the blood of Chriſt being ſhed for it; and in juſtifying their perſons by his righteouſneſs, and by giving them the crown of righteouſneſs laid up for them; and at laſt by rendering tribulation to them that have troubled them. And let them not rejoice over me; meaning his enemies, as in ℣. 15, 19. that is, let them not go on to rejoice; let them have no occaſion for it, but deliver me out of their hands.

the

℣. 25. Let them not ſay in their hearts, Ah, ſo would we have it, &c.] Or we have what our ſouls wiſhed for and deſired: the ſenſe of the petition is the ſame with Pſal. xxvii. 12. Let them not ſay, We have ſwallowed him up; as roaring lions ſwallow down their prey, to which he had compared them, ℣. 17. and as wicked men eat up the Lord's people as they eat bread, Pſal. xiv. 4.

℣. 26. Let them be aſhamed and brought to confuſion together, &c.] In a body, as one man; as they gathered together againſt him, ℣. 15. ſo he intreats they might together be brought to ſhame and confuſion, they not being able to execute their deſigns; their ſchemes being broken, their counſels defeated, and they expoſed to contempt. That rejoice at mine hurt; the ſame with his adverſity, or halting, ℣. 15. Let them be clothed with ſhame and diſhonour that magnify themſelves againſt me; let them be covered with it, as a man is with a garment; who magnified themſelves, opened their mouths in great ſwelling words of vanity againſt him, vaunted and bragged over him, as in their power, and at their will.

℣. 27. Let them ſhout for joy, and be glad, that favour my righteous cauſe, &c.] The cauſe of David was a righteous cauſe, he having done no iniquity, or any thing criminal againſt Saul his enemy, who perſecuted him; and there were ſome that favoured his cauſe, as Jonathan, Saul's ſon, and a few others of rank and figure; but the greateſt part were mean and deſpicable, 1 Sam. xxii. 2. and ſo the cauſe of Chriſt and of his people, which is one, is a righteous cauſe, which no one need to be aſhamed of, and is worth ſuffering for; though thoſe that favour it, are for the moſt part the poor and baſe and weak things of the world: but when this cauſe proſpers they rejoice and are glad, as they do at the happineſs of every particular ſaint; for if one member is honoured, all the reſt rejoice with it. Yea, let them ſay continually, the Lord be magnified; let them continually aſcribe greatneſs, give honour and glory to him, which hath pleaſure in the proſperity of his ſervant; meaning either himſelf, who was a ſervant of the Lord, not only by creation but by grace; and who had his times both of temporal and ſpiritual proſperity; which were owing to the good will and pleaſure of God, and to the delight and complacency he had in him, being a man after his own heart, raiſed up to fulfil his will; and ſince this proſperity did not ariſe from any deſert of his, he would have all the glory of it given to God: or elſe he intends the Meſſiah, his antitype, who as mediator, is the ſervant of the Lord; of his chooſing, calling, and ſending; whoſe commands he diligently and faithfully obeyed; from whom he had his work, and alſo his reward: his proſperity lies in the work of redemption ſucceeding in his hands; in his exaltation at the right hand of God; and in the ſpread of his goſpel in the world, and the efficacy of it to the conviction of ſinners; and in the eſtabliſhment and increaſe of his kingdom and intereſt; on which account, the Lord's name is to be magnified and glorified, who delights in him as his ſervant, and in his proſperity; and the rather this is to be done, ſince the ſaints have an intereſt in him as a Prince and a Saviour: or any one of the ſervants of the Lord may be underſtood; or however it is applicable to any one of them, who, through the power of divine grace upon them, are made willing to ſerve the Lord with reverence and godly fear; who are his Hephzi-bah, in whom is all his delight and pleaſure; who rejoices over them to do them good: and hence flows all the ſpiritual proſperity they enjoy, on account of which glory is to be given to God by them and all the ſaints that know it, Pſal. xxxiv. 1, 2.

℣. 28. And my tongue ſhall ſpeak of thy righteouſneſs, &c.] In vindicating his cauſe and bringing his enemies to ſhame and confuſion, as well as of the glory and excellency of that righteouſneſs of his, by which he was juſtified in his ſight, and from whence his inward peace and proſperity flowed; And of thy praiſe all the day long; for the many mercies, temporal and ſpiritual, he was every day favoured with.

PSALM XXXVI.

To the chief muſician, a pſalm of David, the ſervant of the LORD.

THIS title which the pſalmiſt takes to himſelf, regards him not only as a creature, every man being the ſervant of the Lord as ſuch, of right, though not in fact; but as a king, he being a miniſter of God for good to good men, and for evil to evil men; and alſo may reſpect him as a renewed man; and it is here uſed in oppoſition to and diſtinction from the wicked, who are the ſervants of ſin and Satan, of whom he ſpeaks in this pſalm. The Syriac and Arabic verſions in their titles ſuggeſt that this pſalm was written when David was perſecuted by Saul, and which is the ſenſe of ſome interpreters; but R. Obadiah thinks Ahithophel is deſigned by the wicked man in it; and ſo it was penned on account of Abſalom's rebellion.

℣. 1. The tranſgreſſion of the wicked ſaith within my heart, &c.] Which is repreſented as a perſon ſpeaking within him; not that the tranſgreſſion of the wicked was really in him; ſin was in him, and ſin of the ſame kind and nature with the wicked man's; but he taking notice of and conſidering the wicked wicked man's ſinful courſe of life, and his daring impieties, conceived in his own mind, and concluded from hence, that there is no fear of God before his eyes; no reverential affection for him, but enmity to him; no godly filial fear, but at moſt only a ſlaviſh fear, a fear of puniſhment; no holy and humble fear of him, but pride and wickedneſs; no fiducial and obediential fear, but all the reverſe; no true worſhip of him, either internally or externally: there can be no fear of God in any unregenerate man's heart, becauſe it is not of nature but of grace, and is what is implanted at firſt converſion; there is in ſome an appearance of it, where it is not really, whoſe fear is taught by the precept of men; and in others there may be ſome awe of the divine Being, and trembling at the thought of a future judgment, ariſing from the dictates of nature, the light of revelation, and the enjoyment of a religious education; but in ſome there is no fear of God at all, and they are bold and daring enough to aſſert it themſelves, as the unjuſt judge did, Luke xviii. 4. Such as the atheiſt, the common ſwearer, the debauchee and epicure, who give up themſelves to all manner of wickedneſs, contemn revelation, deſpiſe the word of God, and regard no day nor manner of worſhip; and this notwithſtanding the majeſty of God, at whoſe preſence they tremble not, and notwithſtanding the goodneſs of God, which ſhould induce them to fear him, and notwithſtanding the judgment of God on others, and even on themſelves; ſee Jer. iii. 8. Luke xxiii. 40. and notwithſtanding the future awful judgment which they put far away or diſbelieve. The Targum is, tranſgreſſion ſaith to the wicked within my heart; and Jarchi's note upon the text is this, "this text is to "be tranſpoſed thus, It is in my heart, that tranſ-"greſſion, which is the evil imagination, ſays to "the wicked man, that there ſhould be no fear of "God before his eyes; and the phraſe in the "midſt of my heart, is as if a man ſhould ſay, ſo it "ſeems to me." The Septuagint verſion, and thoſe that follow it, render the words thus, the tranſgreſſor ſaid, that he might ſin in himſelf, there is no fear of God before his eyes. Guſſetius [b] interprets before his eyes, before the eyes of God himſelf, who is ſo good a Being, that the ſinner fears no puniſhment from him, but will pardon all his ſins.

℣. 2. He flattereth himſelf in his own eyes, &c.] There are many ſelf-flatterers; ſome on account of their worldly eſtate, that they are out of the reach of God and men, and regard neither; and that as they have much goods laid up, they ſhall enjoy them many years, and ſo never think of dying, nor of another world: others on account of their eternal ſtate, pleaſing themſelves with their own purity, goodneſs, and righteouſneſs: ſome flatter themſelves either that their ſins are not ſins, or they are ſmall ones; or they are no other than what multitudes commit; or they are not ſeen and known, and that God himſelf ſees them not, or takes no notice of them; and that they ſhall go on with impunity, ſentence againſt them being not ſpeedily executed; and others that there is no God, will be no judgment, nor future ſtate. Until his iniquity be found to be hateful, or, to find his iniquity and to hate [c] that which is good, as the word may be rendered; that is, he flatters himſelf, or ſpeaks ſmooth things to himſelf, and endeavours to work himſelf up into the belief of the above things; that he may find, embrace, and indulge his luſts with a quiet conſcience, and hate God, good men, and every thing that is good; the Targum is, "that he "may find ſins and hate doctrine" or inſtruction. Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret the words another way "that the holy and bleſſed God may find out "his iniquity to hate him;" ſee Gen. xliv. 16. which God may be ſaid to do, when he charges the guilt of ſin upon the conſcience, and puniſhes for it; and expoſes both the ſinner and his ſins to the world; thereby teſtifying his hatred of him and his ſins; and which ſhould have been hateful to him, as they are to all good men.

℣. 3. The words of his mouth are iniquity and deceit, &c.] Not only ſinful, but ſin itſelf; his mouth is full of curſing and bitterneſs, of filthy and unchaſte words, of corrupt communication, lying deceit and flattery; out of the abundance of the wickedneſs of his heart his mouth ſpeaketh; and which ſhews the badneſs of it, and proves all that is ſaid before of him. He hath left off to be wiſe, and to do good; by which the pſalmiſt ſeems to intend one that had been a profeſſor of religion, who, beſides the light of nature he had acted contrary to, had had the advantage of a divine revelation, and had been enlightned into the knowledge of divine things, and had done many things externally good, particularly acts of beneficence; but now had dropped his profeſſion of religion, denied the truths he had been enlightned into, and ceaſed from doing good; otherwiſe a natural man underſtandeth not, and though he is wiſe to do evil, to do good he has no knowledge.

℣. 4. He deviſeth miſchief upon his bed, &c.] He caſts about in his mind on his pillow, when at leiſure from all employment; and conſults and contrives ſchemes how to compaſs his luſts, and to do injury to others, without doing which he cannot ſleep. He ſetteth himſelf in a way that is not good; in an evil way, which he chooſes and delights in, and determines to continue in, he leaving the paths of righteouſneſs to walk in the ways of darkneſs: he abhorreth not evil; which is to be abhorred both becauſe of its nature and effects; ſee Rom. xii. 9. but on the contrary he loves it, takes pleaſure in doing it, and in them that commit it: thus by his thoughts, words, and actions, he appears to be devoid of the fear of God.

℣. 5. Thy mercy, O Lord, is in the heavens, &c.] Meaning either the general mercy of God the earth is full of, and extends to all creatures; to which it is owing that wicked men before deſcribed, are not conſumed; and which reaches up to the heavens [d], as the words are by ſome rendered, as their ſins do; ſee Pſal. lvii. 10. or the ſpecial mercy of God, and regards not the objects of it, creatures in heaven; for there are none there proper objects of mercy; but the ſeat of it, the heart of God who is in heaven; or the repoſitory of it, the covenant of grace, which is full of the ſure mercies of David; and of mercy there was a moſt glaring inſtance, when the Son of God was ſent down from heaven, to obtain ſalvation for ſinful men; or it may denote the original of it, the heaven, being as Aben Ezra obſerves ſome Jewiſh interpreters ſay, the fountain of mercy, and the ſpring of truth; or the greatneſs and abundance of it, it being as high as heaven, yea, above it; ſee Pſal. ciii. 11. and cviii. 4. And thy faithfulneſs reacheth unto the clouds; which lies in the execution of his purpoſes, whoſe counſels of old were faithfulneſs and truth; and in keeping his covenant and promiſes; he never changes changes his mind nor forgets his word: he is a God of truth and cannot lie; he knows the end from the beginning; no unforeſeen event can turn up to hinder the performance of what he has purpoſed and promiſed, and he is able to perform; nor does ever any of the good things he has ſpoken of fail: though his faithfulneſs ſometimes ſeems to be not only to the clouds, but in them, and out of ſight; providences ſeem to claſh with promiſes, which make unbelief to ſay, Doth his promiſe fail for evermore? yet though we believe not, he abides faithful, Pſal. lxxvii. 8. 2 Tim. ii. 13.

[b] Ebr. Comment. p. 488. [c] So Pagninus. [d] בהשמים uſque ad cœlos, Pagninus, Muſculus, Muis, Piſcator, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Kimchi & Noldius, p. 164. N° 744. & Ainſworth.

ẏ. 6. Thy righteouſneſs is like the great mountains, &c.] Or, the mountains of God; ſo called for their excellency, as the cedars of God, Pſal. lxxx. 10. or as Guſſetius[e] obſerves, the greateſt and higheſt mountains, which are here meant, reaching above the clouds and the region of the air, are the pillars of the palace of God, and a part of it; and therefore called his mountains with great propriety, to which his righteouſneſs is compared: that is, either the righteouſneſs of God in the government of the world, which is ſometimes like the high mountains, not to be reached and accounted for in the preſent ſtate of things, though always is, and is immoveable as they are; or the righteouſneſs of God, by which he juſtifies ſinners, which may be ſaid to be as the mountains of God, becauſe of the dignity of his perſon, who has wrought it out; and becauſe of the clear manifeſtation of it, the goſpel, and ſo viſible, as high mountains; and becauſe of the immoveableneſs and duration of it. Thy judgments are a great deep; both in a way of providence, many of them being at preſent not to be traced, though ere long they will be made manifeſt; and in a way of grace, ſuch as the choice of ſome and the leaving of others, the rejection of the Jews, and the call of the Gentiles; ſee Rom. xi. 33. O Lord, thou preſerveſt man and beaſt; in a providential way, upholding each in their being, and ſupplying them with the neceſſaries of life: ſome underſtand this figuratively, of God's ſaving Jews and Gentiles, wiſe and unwiſe, and particularly thoſe who, through humility and modeſty, as Jarchi ſays, compare themſelves to beaſts, becauſe of their ignorance and ſtupidity, Prov. xxx. 2. Pſal. lxxiii. 22.

ẏ. 7. How excellent is thy loving kindneſs, O God, &c.] Which has appeared to men and not angels, to ſome and not others; to the chief of ſinners, who are by nature children of wrath as others; in chuſing, redeeming, and calling them, taking them into his family, and making them heirs of eternal glory; and all this of his ſovereign good will and pleaſure, there being nothing in them that could move him to it; which loving kindneſs was in his heart from everlaſting, and will never change in him, nor depart from them; and hence it muſt be moſt excellent and precious: therefore the children of men put their truſt under the ſhadow of thy wings: not all men; for all have not faith, only ſome, to whom it is given to believe, and who know the Lord and his loving-kindneſs; by which they are induced and encouraged to truſt in him, to betake themſelves to him for mercy and protection, which they find in him: the alluſion is either to the hen that gathers her chickens under her wings, and protects them in time of danger, and ſo it expreſſes both the paternal affection of God to his people, and the protection of them; or elſe to the wings of the cherubim over the mercy-ſeat, between which the Lord ſat and communed with his people, and ſhewed mercy and favour to them, which encouraged them to truſt in him.

ẏ. 8. They ſhall be abundantly ſatisfied with the fatneſs of thy houſe, &c.] By his houſe is meant the church of God, of his building, and where he dwells; by the fatneſs of it the proviſions there, the word and ordinances, and the bleſſings of grace which they hold forth; and eſpecially Chriſt, the fatted calf, the bread of life, whoſe fleſh is meat indeed, and whoſe blood is drink indeed, and which make a feaſt of fat things; and theſe they that truſt in the Lord, are welcome to eat and drink of abundantly, and to abundant ſatisfaction; ſee Matt. v. 6. Pſal. xxii. 26. And thou ſhalt make them drink of the river of thy pleaſure; the love of God, whoſe ſtreams make glad the city of God; or the fulneſs of grace, which is in Chriſt, out of which believers draw with joy, and drink with pleaſure; or eternal glory and happineſs, enjoyed in the preſence of God, in which is fullneſs of joy, and at whoſe right hand are pleaſures for evermore; a never ceaſing torrent of them.

ẏ. 9. For with thee is the fountain of life, &c.] Or lives[f]: God himſelf is the fountain of living waters; this is a reaſon proving the happineſs of thoſe that truſt in the Lord, and that they ſhall enjoy the above things; becauſe with God the object of their truſt is the fountain of life; not only of natural life, from whom they have it, and by whom it is ſupported, but of ſpiritual life, being quickened by him when dead in ſin, by virtue of which they live by faith on Chriſt, and alſo of eternal life; and the phraſe denotes, that life is originally in God as in its fountain, and that both the fullneſs of it is with him, and the freeneſs of it in the communication of it to others, as well as its continuance and duration. In thy light ſhall we ſee light; God is light itſelf, the Father of lights, and the former of it in every ſenſe; in the light of his countenance, and the diſcoveries of his love, they that truſt in him ſee light, or enjoy comfort; and in the light of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, the ſun of righteouſneſs and light of the world, they ſee the face of God, and enjoy his favour, and behold the glory and excellency of Chriſt himſelf; and in the light of the divine Spirit, who is a Spirit of wiſdom and revelation, they ſee their ſins exceeding ſinful, their righteouſneſs as nothing, and a preciouſneſs in the blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt; and in the light of the divine word, they ſee the truths of the goſpel in their native ſimplicity and excellency, and the duties of religion to be performed by them; and in the light of faith, which is the gift of God, they have at leaſt a glimpſe of the unſeen glories of the other world; and when the beatific viſion ſhall take place, they ſhall ſee no more darkly through a glaſs, but face to face, even God himſelf, as he is in Chriſt.

ẏ. 10. O continue thy loving-kindneſs to them that know thee, &c.] That is ſpiritually and experimentally; and ſuch are they that truſt in him and love him: and theſe are the objects of the love of God; not that their knowledge, faith, or love, are the cauſe of his love to them; but theſe things deſcribe and point at manifeſtly the objects of it; and this requeſt regards the open diſcovery of it unto them: for the love of God itſelf always continues, though the manifeſtations of it are not always the ſame; and it is for the enlargement and continuance of [e] Ebr. Comment. p. 66.

[f] מקור חיים vena vitarum, Montanus.

of them, the pſalmiſt here prays: for it may be rendered, draw out thy loving-kindneſs [g]; that is, to a greater length; make a larger and clearer diſcovery of it, that the height and depth, and length and breadth of it, may be more diſcerned. And thy righteouſneſs unto the upright in heart; who are ſincere and without guile; who have new hearts created and right ſpirits renewed in them, and have truth in the inward parts; and unto and upon ſuch is the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and where it always continues, for it is an everlaſting one; but here it means a clearer and conſtant revelation of it from faith to faith; unleſs it ſhould rather intend the righteouſneſs of God in protecting his people from the inſults of their enemies, and the continual exertion of it for that purpoſe.

℣. 11. Let not the foot of pride come againſt me, &c.] Meaning ſome proud enemy, ſuch an one as Ahithophel, of whom R. Obadiah expounds it, who lift up his heel againſt him; and is applicable to any haughty enemy of Chriſt and his people, and particularly to antichriſt, the man of ſin, that exalts himſelf above all that is called God. And let not the hand of the wicked remove me; either from the houſe of God; or from his throne, that high ſtation and dignity in which he was placed.

℣. 12. There are the workers of iniquity fallen, &c.] Either in the pit they dug for others; or into hell, where they ſhall be turned at laſt; ſee the notes on Pſal. v. 5. and vi. 8. They are caſt down, and ſhall not be able to riſe; which will be the caſe of Babylon when fallen, Rev. xviii. 21. and this diſtinguiſhes the falls of the wicked from thoſe of the righteous; for though the righteous fall, whether into ſin, or into any calamity, they riſe again, not ſo the wicked; ſee Pſal. xxxvii. 24. Mic. vii. 8. and thus as the pſalm begins with the tranſgreſſion of the wicked, it ends with their ruin.

PSALM XXXVII.

A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm, it is very probable, was written at the ſame time, and upon the ſame occaſion, with the former; and deſcribes the different ſtates of good and bad men; and is full of exhortations, inſtructions, and advice to the people of God; intermixed with various encouraging promiſes. A late learned writer [h] thinks it was written for Mephiboſheth's conſolation under Ziba's calumny.

℣. 1. Fret not thyſelf becauſe of evil-doers, &c.] The ſaints may be grieved at them and for them, becauſe of their evil doings, and may be angry with them for them; yet are not to ſhew any undue warmth, at leaſt in an indecent way, by calling them opprobrious names; for the words may be rendered, do not ſhew thyſelf warm or angry [i], in a ſinful way; or fret not at their outward proſperity, as it is explained ℣. 7. The Targum adds, to be like them, which agrees with ℣. 8. Neither be thou envious againſt the workers of iniquity; that is, at their preſent temporal happineſs; ſee Pſal. lxxiii. 3. The Targum adds, as before, to be joined with them; which ſenſe ſome parallel places ſeem to incline to, Prov. iii. 31. and xxiii. 17.

℣. 2. For they ſhall ſoon be cut down like the graſs, and wither as the green herb.] Which in the morning looks green, gay, and flouriſhing, and in the evening is cut down and then fades away; ſee Pſal. xc. 5, 6. and ſo the wicked proſper and flouriſh for a while, and then they periſh with all their honour, riches, and wealth; ſo that their happineſs is a very ſhort-lived one, and therefore need not be envied and fretted at.

℣. 3. Truſt in the Lord, &c.] Not in men, who are fading and periſhing like the green graſs and tender herb; nor in riches, which are very uncertain things; but in the Lord, in whom is everlaſting ſtrength; and with whom are riches and honour, yea durable riches and righteouſneſs; truſt in him both for things temporal and ſpiritual, for ſoul and body, for time and eternity; the way to have peace and quietneſs of mind under all diſpenſations, is to exerciſe faith on a promiſing God. The Targum is, truſt in the Word of the Lord, in the eſſential Word of God, the promiſed Meſſiah. And do good; in general, all good actions, in faith, and as the fruits and effects of it, without truſting to them, but in the Lord; doing them in his ſtrength, and with a view to his glory; or in particular, acts of beneficence to the poor, to which the encouragement follows. So ſhalt thou dwell in the land; either in the land of Canaan, a continuance in which depended upon the obedience of the people of the Jews to the commands of God; ſee Iſa. i. 19. Eph. vi. 1, 2. or rather in the good land which is afar off, the heavenly and better country, which thoſe that truſt in the Lord, and have that faith in Chriſt which works by love, ſhall dwell in to all eternity. And verily thou ſhalt be fed; either temporally, ſhall have food and raiment, even all the neceſſaries of life; or ſpiritually, with the word and ordinances, and with Chriſt the bread of life now; and hereafter ſhall be fed by him, the Lamb in the midſt of the throne, and by him led to fountains of living water: ſome read the words as an exhortation, and render them, feed truth [k], i. e. teach it, as Abraham taught his houſhold, and as faithful paſtors feed with knowledge and underſtanding; or feed by faith [l], as the juſt live by it; or as the Targum renders it, be ſtrong in faith, as Abraham was, Rom. iv. 20. or rather, feed upon truth [m], the word of truth, the goſpel of ſalvation, and the ſeveral truths and doctrines of it, which are food for faith, and nouriſh up to everlaſting life.

℣. 4. Delight thyſelf alſo in the Lord, &c.] In the perſons in God, Father, Son, and Spirit; in the perfections of God, his power, goodneſs, faithfulneſs, wiſdom, love, grace and mercy; in his works of creation, providence, and redemption; in his word, his goſpel, the truths and ordinances of it; in his houſe, and the worſhip of it; and in his people, the excellent in the earth, in whom was all the delight of the pſalmiſt; and each of theſe afford a field-field of delight and pleaſure, to attend unto, contemplate, and meditate upon. And he ſhall give thee the deſires of thine heart; ſuch as are according to the will of God, and for the good of his people; ſuch as relate to communion with him, and to the communication of more grace from him, and to the enjoyment of eternal glory.

[g] משך trahe, Pagninus, Montanus; extende, Vatablus, Piſcator; protrahe, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis. [h] Delaney's Life of King David, vol. 2. p. 219. [i] תתחר ne accendaris ira, Junius & Tremellius; ne exardeſcas, Gejerus, Michaelis. [k] רעה אמונה paſce veritatem, Pagninus, Montanus. [l] Paſcere fide, Junius & Tremellius, Cocceius. [m] Paſce te veritate, Gejerus; ut alimentum tuum, Guſſetius, Ebr. Comment. p. 942. feed on faith, Ainſworth.

℣. 5. Commit thy way unto the Lord, &c.] Or thy works, as in Prov. xvi. 3. that is, all the affairs and buſineſs of life, which are a man's ways in which he walks; not that men ſhould ſit ſtill, be inactive, and do nothing, and leave all to be done by the Lord; but ſhould ſeek direction of God in every thing engaged in, and for ſtrength and aſſiſtance to perform it, and go on in it, and depend upon him for ſucceſs, and give him all the glory, without truſting to any thing done by them: or, as ſome render the words, reveal thy way unto the Lord [n]; not that God is ignorant of the ways of men, and of their affairs, and of their wants and neceſſities, but it is their duty to aſk, and it is his delight to hear; they may come and uſe freedom with him, and tell him their whole caſe, and leave it with him, believing he will ſupply all their need: or, as others render it, roll thy way on the Lord [o]; ſee Pſal. lv. 22. meaning not the burden of ſin, nor the weight of affliction, but any affair of moment and importance, that lies heavy upon the mind; it is an eaſe to the mind to ſpread it before the Lord, who ſympathizes with his people, ſupports them under and brings them through their difficulties. And he ſhall bring it to paſs; as he does whatever he has appointed and determined ſhall be and whatever he has promiſed, and whatever will be for his own glory and his peoples good.

℣. 6. And he ſhall bring forth thy righteonſneſs as the light, &c.] That is, the good man having committed his cauſe to him that judgeth righteouſly, he will, in his own time, clearly make it appear, that it is a righteous one, both to himſelf and others, in whatſoever obſcurity it may have lain. And thy judgment as the noon day; the ſame as before, unleſs rather the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is the believer's by imputation, and is a juſtifying one in the judgment of God, ſhould be meant; ſee Micah vii. 9. and the phraſes may denote not barely the revelation of it in the goſpel, but the more clear manifeſtation of it to the believer himſelf, from faith to faith; or as it will be ſtill more clearly revealed and declared at the day of judgment, when thoſe who are clothed with it ſhall ſhine as the ſun in the kingdom of their Father, and be clear of all thoſe charges and imputations which they have lain under in this life.

℣. 7. Reſt in the Lord, &c.] Or be ſilent to the Lord [p]; be ſtill and know that he is God; quietly ſubmit to his will, and acquieſce in all the diſpenſations of his providence: it does not deſign a ſtupid indolence, or a ſtoical apathy, that we ſhould be like ſtocks and ſtones, without any concern at the hand of God upon us; nor an entire ſilence under afflictions; we ſhould own that they are of God, and that we are deſerving of them; we ſhould pray to him to ſanctify them, to ſupport under them, and deliver out of them; we ſhould bleſs his name that they are no worſe, and that they are any ways uſeful to us; and we ſhould ſpeak to others of the divine goodneſs experienced under them; but this ſtands oppoſed to an arraigning or murmuring at the providence of God, and intends a patient bearing the hand of God, and a reſignation of will to his will; for it follows, And wait patiently for him; for the enjoyment of him, help from him, and deliverance by him. Fret not thyſelf becauſe of him who proſpereth in his way, becauſe of the man who bringeth wicked devices to paſs; this explains the ſenſe of ℣. 1. it being often an additional uneaſineſs to the people of God under affliction, when they obſerve the proſperity of men that go on in a ſinful way, and have all or more than heart can wiſh; and whatever they contrive and deviſe, though wicked and criminal.

℣. 8. Ceaſe from anger, &c.] Either at theſe wicked men who are ſo proſperous, or at God, who for the preſent ſuffers it; ſee Jonah iv. 9. Prov. xix. 3. And forſake wrath; which is anger wrought up to a greater degree; and the rather to be ſhunned and avoided, as being very diſagreeable to the character of a good man. Fret not thyſelf in any wiſe to do evil; evil may be done by fretting at the proſperity of wicked men, or by imitating them, doing as they do, in hope of being proſperous as they are; from which the pſalmiſt diſſuades by reaſons following.

℣. 9. For evil doers ſhall be cut off, &c.] Tho' they flouriſh for a while, they ſhall be cut down like the graſs or flower of the field, or they ſhall be cut off as branches from a flouriſhing tree; they ſhall be cut off from the earth, and rooted out of it by death or ſome deſolating judgment; ſee Prov. ii. 22. and therefore not to be envied and fretted at. But thoſe that wait upon the Lord ſhall inherit the earth; ſuch who attend his word, worſhip, and ordinances; obey his commands, truſt in his grace and mercy; or, as the Targum, truſt in the Word of the Lord; who wait upon him for the manifeſtations of himſelf, for the performance of his promiſes, for anſwer of prayer, for ſupplies of grace, and live in the expectation of the heavenly glory; theſe ſhall have for their inheritance, not the land of Canaan, a land flowing with milk and honey, which the obedient Jews enjoyed; but either this world and the neceſſaries of it, which ſuch perſons have the promiſe of, a right unto through Chriſt, are heirs of, and do enjoy what they do with a bleſſing; or elſe the new earth after this, in which only righteous ones, thoſe that wait upon the Lord, and truſt in him, will dwell; unleſs the heavenly country, the good land afar off is meant, often called an inheritance.

℣. 10. For yet a little while and the wicked ſhall not be, &c.] Not that they ſhall be annihilated or reduced to nothing, becauſe non-entities have no place nor being any where; when they die they ſhall lift up their eyes in hell; their bodies will riſe again at the laſt day; they ſhall ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, and go into everlaſting puniſhment; but they ſhall be no more in the world, and in the ſame flouriſhing and proſperous circumſtances they were: and this their deſtruction will be in a ſhort time, very quickly. Yea, thou ſhalt diligently conſider his place and it ſhall not be; his dwelling place, called after his own name, to perpetuate the memory of him; ſee Job vii. 10. and xx. 9. an inſtance of this the pſalmiſt gives of his own knowledge, ℣. 35, 36.

℣. 11. But the meek ſhall inherit the earth, &c.] See the note on ℣. 9. of this character ſee the note on Pſal. xxii. 26. Our Lord ſeems to refer to this paſſage paſſage in Matt. v. 5. And ſhall delight themſelves in the abundance of peace; of ſpiritual peace enjoyed in a way of believing, ariſing from a comfortable view of intereſt in the blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt; and of all happineſs and proſperity in the kingdom of Chriſt here on earth, at which time there will be abundance of peace, Pſal. lxxii. 7. or of eternal peace in the world to come, which will be a ſtate of uninterrupted and unſpeakable peace; ſee ℣. 37. all which afford inconceivable delight and pleaſure; and therefore ſuch have no need to fret and be envious, at the fading happineſs of wicked men.

[n] גלל αποκαλυψον, Sept. revela, V. L. Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo the Targum, Coccius, Gejerus, Michaelis.
[o] Devolve ſuper Jehovam, Tigurine verſion. [p] דום ליהוה tace Domino, Pagninus, Montanus; ſile, Muſculus, Piſcator, Tigurine verſion, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth.

℣. 12. The wicked plotteth againſt the juſt, &c.] Forms ſchemes to make him uneaſy, uncomfortable, and unhappy; And gnaſheth upon him with his teeth; which expreſſes his malice and hatred, as David's enemies did upon him, Pſal. xxxv. 16. and Stephen's, Acts vii. 54.

℣. 13. The Lord ſhall laugh at him, &c.] Have him and his plots in deriſion, confound his ſchemes, and diſappoint him of his deſigns, bring him into calamity and laugh at it; ſee Pſal. ii. 4. Prov. i. 26. For he ſeeth that his day is coming; either the day of the Lord, which he has appointed to judge the world in; and which comes ſuddenly, at unawares, as a thief in the night, and is known unto the Lord though to none elſe; or the day of the wicked man's ruin and deſtruction, to which he is appointed, and which is the ſame; and ſo the Targum is, the day of his calamity; which the Lord obſerves is haſtening on, when he will be for ever miſerable.

℣. 14. The wicked have drawn out the ſword, &c.] That is, out of the ſcabbard; they drew upon the righteous, in order to ſheath it in them; or they ſharpened the ſword, as Aben Ezra obſerves ſome interpret the word; it may be literally rendered, opened the ſword [q], which before lay hid in the ſcabbard; And have bent their bow; having put the arrow in it in order to ſhoot. The former expreſſion may deſign the more open, and this the more ſecret way of acting againſt the righteous; and their view in both is to caſt down the poor and needy, who are ſo, both in a temporal and ſpiritual ſenſe; to cauſe ſuch to fall either into ſin, or into ſome calamity or another; And to ſlay ſuch as be of upright converſation; who walk according to the rule of the word of God, and as becomes the goſpel of Chriſt: nothing leſs than the blood and life of theſe men will ſatisfy the wicked; and it is an aggravation of their wickedneſs, that they ſhould attempt to hurt men of ſuch character, who are poor and needy, holy, harmleſs, inoffenſive, and upright; and this points at the reaſon why they hate them, and ſeek their ruin, becauſe of the holineſs and uprightneſs of their lives; ſee John xv. 19, 20. 1 Pet. iv. 3, 4.

℣. 15. Their ſword ſhall enter into their own heart, &c.] As Saul's did into his, 1 Sam. xxxi. 4. And their bows ſhall be broken; the meaning is, that their efforts ſhall be fruitleſs, and their attempts in vain; the miſchief they have contrived and deſigned for others, ſhall fall upon themſelves; ſee Pſal. vii. 15. and therefore the ſaints ſhould not be fretful and envious.

℣. 16. A little that a righteous man hath, &c.] It is the portion of the righteous, for the moſt part, to have but little of this world's goods; ſome indeed have been rich, as Abraham, Lot, David, Joſeph of Arimathea, and others; but generally ſpeaking, the wicked have the largeſt ſhare of worldly things, and the righteous but little, and are as having nothing comparatively; and yet their little, is better than the riches of many wicked; not that a little is better than much, or that poverty is better than riches, or a poor man better than a rich man; but the compariſon is between a righteous man and a wicked man; the emphaſis lies there: and the ſenſe is, that a righteous man's little, is better than a wicked man's much; the righteous have a right to what they have, through Chriſt, who is heir of all things, but not the wicked; they have what they have in love and with a bleſſing, not ſo the wicked; they are contented in their ſtate and condition, when the wicked are never ſatisfied; they poſſeſs and enjoy what they have, even all they have, when God oftentimes does not give the wicked an heart to eat and drink of what they are poſſeſſed, but a ſtranger eats it; they have the preſence of God with them, and that makes a little ſweet and to go a great way; and they live without any anxious, diſtreſſing, carking care, not ſo the wicked; and ere long the tables will be turned, and they will have their good things, and the wicked their evil things; ſee Prov. xvi. 8. and xv. 16, 17. wherefore they have no need to fret under preſent circumſtances, nor envy the happineſs of wicked men. Arama interprets it, of a little help that a righteous man has, better than the riches of many wicked; and Guſſetius [r] underſtands all this not of the ſmallneſs and largeneſs of the ſubſtance of different perſons, but of their numbers, the one ſmall the other large; and Jarchi, that the ſenſe is, that a few perſons with the righteous, which was the caſe of Abraham and Gideon, are better and ſucceed more than the multitude of many wicked perſons; and the church ſhould be content with a ſmall number of believers, and not draw in a multitude of wicked men into their communion.

℣. 17. For the arms of the wicked ſhall be broken, &c.] That is, their ſword-arm, with which they have drawn it; and ſo ſhall not be able to ſtrike with it; and with which they have bent their bows, but ſhall not be able to ſhoot: and this proves what is before ſuggeſted, that their efforts ſhall be fruitleſs; or their ſubſtance ſhall be taken away from them, in which they truſted, and wherein their ſtrength lay; and this confirms what had been juſt ſpoken, that the righteous man's little, is better than the wicked man's much; and which is further confirmed by what follows. But the Lord upholdeth the righteous; both in a providential way, by ſupporting them in their being, ſupplying their need, preſerving them from dangers, and bearing them up under all their afflictions; and in a ſpiritual way, by maintaining the principle of grace and life in them, by furniſhing them with all ſpiritual bleſſings, by ſuſtaining them in times of temptation, and by ſecuring them ſafe from their enemies; upholding them ſo as that they ſtand in the grace of God now, and ſhall ſtand before Chriſt with confidence hereafter; and ſhall not fall here finally and totally, nor in the day of judgment. The Targum is, The word of the Lord upholdeth the righteous.

℣. 18. The Lord knoweth the days of the upright, &c.] Not only how long they ſhall live, and ſo fill up their days, the number of them, as Aben Ezra interprets it; but the nature of their days, whether proſperous or adverſe; and cauſes both to work together for their good; and he knows the work of their days, as Jarchi explains it, the actions done done by them in faith and love, and to his honour and glory, and which he approves and accepts of in Chriſt; ſee Pſal. i. 6. And their inheritance ſhall be for ever; in heaven, which is an eternal and never-fading one, Heb. ix. 15. 1 Pet. i. 4. and therefore they ought not to fret and be envious.

[q] חרב פתחו aperuerunt gladium, Gejerus. Ebr. Comment. p. 213, 475.

℣. 19. They ſhall not be aſhamed in the evil time, &c.] Of affliction and perſecution, or of old age, or in the day of judgment, when it will go ill with others; ſee 1 John ii. 28. And in the days of famine they ſhall be ſatisfied; whether it is underſtood figuratively of a famine of hearing the word, or literally of a proper famine of bread and water: theſe, God will provide for them, as he did for Elijah, and they ſhall be ſure unto them, and therefore let them not fret nor envy.

℣. 20. But the wicked ſhall periſh, &c.] In a time of famine, in an evil day, and particularly at the day of judgment: for this is to be underſtood, not merely of being in bodily diſtreſs and want; nor of periſhing by death, common to the righteous and the wicked; nor of being in a loſt, periſhing condition, as all men by nature are, but of eternal perdition in hell. And the enemies of the Lord ſhall be as the fat of lambs, they ſhall conſume; that is, either they ſhall conſume away as the fat of lambs burnt upon the altar, which evaporates, or as lambs fattened on purpoſe to be killed, and ſo prepared for the day of ſlaughter; in like manner the wicked, who have waxed fat and kicked, will be deſtroyed; they being the enemies of God, yea, enmity to him, to Father, Son, and Spirit, to the goſpel and ordinances of Chriſt, and to his people, and will be treated as ſuch. Some render the word, like the excellency of paſtures [s]; the graſs of the field, which is cut down and withers preſently; ſee ℣. 2. Into ſmoke ſhall they conſume away, or with [t] it; that is, as it; ſee Pſal. lxviii. 1, 2. or in ſmoke [u]; in the ſmoke of eternal torments, or hell, as the Targum.

℣. 21. The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again, &c.] Whilſt the wicked live, they are ſcandalous; they live by borrowing, which was always reckoned mean; ſee Deut. xxviii. 12, 44. Prov. xxii. 7. and what is worſe, as they borrow they do not deſign to repay; they take no care nor thought about that, but live upon what they borrow: for this either expreſſes their incapacity that they cannot pay; or the evil diſpoſition of their mind, which rather ſeems to be the ſenſe, that they will not pay. But the righteous ſheweth mercy, and giveth; which not only argues capacity and ability, but a kind, merciful, and tender ſpirit to perſons in diſtreſs, and is expreſſive of a generous action.

℣. 22. For ſuch as be bleſſed of him, &c.] Not of the righteous man; for he bleſſes them that curſe and perſecute him, and deſpitefully uſe him; but of the Lord, as the Syriac verſion expreſſes it; or by the Word of the Lord, as the Targum; both in a providential way, for it is the bleſſing of the Lord that makes rich, and puts into a capacity to give to others; and in a way of grace, with an intereſt in God as a covenant-God in Chriſt; and with the bleſſings of grace in him, with a juſtifying righteouſneſs, pardon of ſin, and a right to eternal glory. The Septuagint verſion, and thoſe that follow that, render the words actively, ſuch as bleſs him; either ſuch as bleſs the righteous, who are bleſſed alſo, Gen. xii. 3. or rather, ſuch as bleſs the Lord, as the righteous do, for all their bleſſings temporal and ſpiritual they receive from him; theſe Shall inherit the earth; ſee the note on ℣. 9. And they that be curſed of him; not of the righteous man, but of the Lord, according to the tenour of his righteous law, which they have broken: Shall be cut off; out of the land of the living; many of them in the midſt of their days, and ſhall everlaſtingly periſh.

℣. 23. The ſteps of a good man are ordered by the Lord, &c.] Or of a man [w]; ſuch a man as is bleſſed of the Lord; the ſteps which he takes in life are ordered by the Lord, both with reſpect to things temporal and ſpiritual: his good conduct is not of himſelf, it is a bleſſing of the Lord; who directs and keeps the feet of his ſaints, and inclines them to take ſuch ſteps, and purſue ſuch methods, which he ſucceeds and proſpers. And he delighteth in his way; which he knows and approves of, guides and directs him in; ſee Pſal. i. 6.

℣. 24. Though he fall, &c.] Into temptation, and by it into ſins, and theſe very great ones; from a lively and comfortable exerciſe of grace, and a degree of ſtedfaſtneſs in the doctrine of grace: He ſhall not be utterly caſt down; becauſe he is in the arms of everlaſting love, and in the hands of Chriſt Jeſus; is on him as the ſure foundation, and is kept by the power of God through faith unto ſalvation, and ſo ſhall not periſh, but have everlaſting life. For the Lord upholdeth him with his hand; with the right hand of his righteouſneſs, and keeps him from falling finally and totally; ſee Iſa. xli. 10. and the note on ℣. 17.

℣. 25. I have been young, and now am old, &c.] The pſalmiſt makes mention of his age, which takes in the whole compaſs of his life, to command attention to what he was about to ſay; which was founded upon a long experience and obſervation of things; and was as follows. Yet have I not ſeen the righteous forſaken; though afflicted of God, and perſecuted by men, yet not forſaken; though poor and needy, and often in neceſſitous circumſtances, yet God in his providence appeared for them, in one way or another; and ſo as Apollinarius paraphraſes it, "I never knew a juſt man entirely "needy;" for ſuch might be forſaken by men, and even by their deareſt friends and relations, yet not by the Lord: they might indeed at times think themſelves forſaken of him, and their enemies might conclude and ſay they were, and yet this was not their caſe, Iſa. xlix. 14. Pſal. lxxi. 10, 11. and though they may be forſaken by him for a while, yet not utterly; he will not leave them and forſake them for ever, Iſa. liv. 7. Heb. xiii. 5. Nor his ſeed begging bread; they being righteous alſo, which muſt be ſuppoſed; otherwiſe, as good men have wicked children, theſe, through their wickedneſs may come to poverty, to beggary, as they ſometimes do; tho' a diſtinction may be made between being poor and beggars; the ſeed of the righteous may be the one, and not the other: beſides, there is a difference between aſking bread of others, in ſome few inſtances, and conſtantly begging bread from door to door, in which laſt ſenſe the pſalmiſt muſt be underſtood here; for otherwiſe he himſelf, in ſome caſes, had aſked bread, as of Abimelech at Nob,

[s] כיקר נריס ſicut pretioſum pratorum, Muis; ſo ſome in Piſcator; vel gloria, Michaelis. Gejerus, Tigurine verſion; ſo Ainſworth. hominis, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

[t] בעשן cum fumo, Montanus, Muſculus, Michaelis.

[w] גבר

Nob, and of Nabal, &c. as did alſo Elijah of the widow of Sarepta: and though there might have been inſtances of ſome of the poſterity of the righteous who got their bread by begging at the door, as in the caſe of Lazarus; yet David had never obſerved any ſuch inſtance during the time of his life, which ſhews that ſuch inſtances are very rare; whereas among wicked men, and their offspring, the caſe is frequent and common. Again, it may be obſerved, that the pſalmiſt is ſpeaking in the context of righteous men that are liberal, and give to the poor freely and largely; and it is ſeldom if ever known, that they or their children come to want and poverty. Once more, the word forſaken may be repeated in this clauſe, thus; nor his ſeed begging bread forſaken [x]; or ſeeking it in vain, and finally deſtitute of it; though they have been ſo reduced as to beg their bread, they have not been forſaken; they have had it, bread ſufficient to ſupport life, as Apollinarius paraphraſes it; their bread has been given and their water ſure; ſee Iſa. xli. 17, 18. In an ancient Midraſh [y], or expoſition of the Jews, the ſenſe is thus given: "Although his "ſeed and his ſons are begging bread, yet I "have not ſeen the righteous man, their father for-"ſaken, becauſe of his fear of the bleſſed God."

℣. 26. He is ever merciful and lendeth, &c.] He ſympathizes with the poor in diſtreſs, and ſhews mercy to miſerable objects; not only by words, but deeds: and this is his conſtant diſpoſition and conduct; of which his lending, as well as giving to perſons in neceſſity, is an inſtance; and which ſhews capacity, and is a proof of the obſervation of the pſalmiſt, that ſuch are never forſaken, nor left to beg their bread: ſo far from it, that they have to lend and give to others. And his ſeed is bleſſed; either his ſeed ſown, his alms-deeds, which are bleſſed to him and his, and to them to whom he miniſters, as Jarchi explains it; ſee 2 Cor. ix. 6, 10. or rather, his offſpring, who are bleſſed of God with things temporal for his ſake; and are bleſſed by men, who ſay of them, theſe are the poſterity of ſuch and ſuch liberal perſons.

℣. 27. Depart from evil, and do good, &c.] Depart from evil-doers, and their evil ways; join not with them, nor fret and be envious at them; but do acts of beneficence, and all good works; ſince righteous men, and their ſeed, are not forſaken, but bleſſed of God; ſee the note on Pſal. xxxiv. 14. And dwell for evermore; or thou ſhalt dwell for evermore [z]; ſee ℣. 3. that is, in everlaſting habitations, in the houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, Luke xvi. 9. 2 Cor. v. 1. The Targum is, that thou mayeſt dwell in everlaſting life.

℣. 28. For the Lord loveth judgment, &c.] Righteouſneſs, or righteous actions, when done according to his will, from love, in faith, and to his glory; ſee Pſal. xi. 7. or to miniſter judgment to the people, and to render to every man according to his works. And forſaketh not his ſaints; his holy ones, who are called with an holy calling, are created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, and have principles of grace and holineſs wrought in them; or whom he proſecutes with his favour and goodneſs, with his everlaſting love and mercy, with ſpiritual bleſſings, with the bleſſings of juſtification, pardon, adoption, and a right to eternal life: theſe he never forſakes, not their perſons, neither in life nor at death, nor at judgment; nor does he ever forſake the work of his own hands in them; but performs it until the day of Chriſt: nor will he ever ſo forſake them, as that they ſhall periſh through the ſtrength of ſin, the temptations of Satan, or the ſnares of the world. They are preſerved for ever; from the dominion and damning power of ſin, from being devoured by Satan, from a total and final falling away, and from being hurt of the ſecond death: they are preſerved in Chriſt, in whoſe hands they are, and by the power of God, ſafe to his kingdom and glory, into which they ſhall have an abundant entrance. But the ſeed of the wicked ſhall be cut off; out of the earth, in the midſt of their days, like withered branches; and be caſt into everlaſting burnings.

℣. 29. The righteous ſhall inherit the land, &c.] See ℣. 9, 11. And dwell therein for ever; as in ℣. 27.

℣. 30. The mouth of the righteous ſpeaketh wiſdom, &c.] Or meditateth wiſdom [a]; that is, utters the wiſdom he has been meditating upon; ſee Pſal. xlix. 3. he meditates and ſpeaks of the wiſdom of God, which appears in the works of creation, providence, and grace; and of Chriſt, who is wiſdom itſelf, and the wiſdom of God eſſentially; and who, as Mediator, has the Spirit of wiſdom reſting on him, the treaſures of wiſdom hid in him, and is made wiſdom to his people: and righteous men meditate upon, and ſpeak of the glories of his perſon, the fulneſs of his grace, and the works of his hands; as alſo of the goſpel, which is the wiſdom of God, myſterious, hidden, ancient wiſdom, ordained before the world for their glory; and likewiſe of that internal wiſdom, and experience of divine grace, the Lord has made them to know in the hidden part; which lies in the knowledge of themſelves, and in a ſpiritual, experimental, and ſaving knowledge of Chriſt, and the way of ſalvation by him; and his mouth delivers out wiſe ſayings, and uſeful inſtructions, fetched out of the word of God, and founded on experience and obſervation. And his tongue talketh of judgment; of the judgment which the righteous God ordinarily miniſters in a providential way; and of his extraordinary and awful judgments, which have been, or are in the earth; theſe he takes notice of for his own uſe, and obſerves them to others for their inſtruction; and alſo of the laſt judgment, the judgment to come, which he ſpeaks of as ſure and certain, as univerſal and inevitable, and at which he muſt appear before God: and he talks of judgment or righteouſneſs; that is, of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; he makes mention of this only, as his juſtifying righteouſneſs before God; he rejoices and glories in it, and deſires to be found in it living and dying, and at judgment; and whatſoever things are honeſt, juſt, pure, and of good report, he thinks and ſpeaks of them, and inſtructs his family, his children and ſervants in them, that they may do them; ſee Gen. xviii. 19.

℣. 31. The law of his God is in his heart, &c.] Which may be underſtood of the moral Law, which was written in the heart of Adam at his creation, and continued there during his ſtate of innocence, but was greatly obliterated by ſin: there are ſome remains of it in fallen man, even in the very Gentiles; who, tho' without the Law, do ſome things contained in it, which ſhews the work of it to be written in them; tho' in ſome it is ſcarcely legible, having loſt all diſtinction between good and evil: but [x] Juſtum non vidi derelictum, & ſemen juſti quærens panem non vidi derelictum; ſo Hopfnerus, Titelmannus, Lorinus, Franzius apud Gejerum; fruſtra quærens panem, & finalitur deſtitutum, Michaelis. [y] Vajikra Rabba, ſ. 35. fol. 175. 2.

[z] ושכן לעולם & habitabis in ſeculum, Pagninus, Vatablus, Piſcator; ſo Aben Ezra & Kimchi. [a] יהגה μελετησει, Sept. meditabitur, V. L. ſo Muſculus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Michaelis.

but in regeneration the law of God is re-inſcribed, according to the promiſe of the covenant of grace, Jer. xxxi. 33. and ſuch have a real knowledge of the ſpirituality and perfection of it; of the impoſſibility of juſtification by it; and of Chriſt being the fulfilling end of it: and they have a ſtrong affection for it; they love it; and delight in it after the inward man, and ſerve it with their minds; in which lies part of their conformity to Chriſt, and is a branch of their character as good men; ſee Pſal. xl. 8. Iſa. li. 7. moreover, the word תורתו, here uſed, ſignifies any doctrine or inſtruction, and is ſometimes uſed for the doctrine of the goſpel, Iſa. ii. 3. and xlii. 4. and may have this ſenſe here, and the meaning be; that that has a place in the hearts of righteous men, dwells richly there, and works effectually in them; and particularly, the doctrine of grace which relates to covenant-intereſt in God; for it is the law or doctrine of his God that is in his heart. None of his ſteps ſhall ſlide; not that he ſhall never ſlip nor fall; for that is ſuppoſed ℣. 24. but he ſhall never finally and totally go out of the paths of truth, holineſs and righteouſneſs: the Lord keeps the feet of his ſaints, and orders their ſteps, and directs them in the way they ſhould go, and preſerves them in it; and enables them to walk uprightly, according to the rule of the divine word, and in all his commandments and ordinances; and to hold on and out unto the end: or the clauſe may be rendred, it, the Law, ſhall not cauſe his ſteps to ſlide [b]; neither the Law of God, nor the goſpel of Chriſt, but ſhall guide him in the right way, and be a lamp unto his feet, and a light unto his path.

℣. 32. The wicked watcheth the righteous, &c.] All his motions and ſteps, his works and actions; he watches for his halting, and to take all opportunities and advantages againſt him; ſee Jer. xx. 10. And ſeeketh to ſlay him; murder his reputation, deſtroy his ſubſtance, and take away his life: ſome underſtand it of the devil, who watches the ſaints, obſerves their failings, accuſes them before the throne, and ſeeks to devour them, 1 Pet. v. 8.

℣. 33. The Lord will not leave him in his hand, &c.] Or power; but will in his own time deliver him from all the reproach, affliction, and perſecution he endures by him; as he will alſo deliver him out of all the temptations of Satan. Nor condemn him when he is judged; by the wicked man: he will not join in the ſentence, but reverſe it, and condemn the tongue that riſes up in judgment againſt him, and ſave him from him; ſee Pſal. cix. 31. and Iſa. liv. 17. nor will the Lord condemn him when he is judged by him at the laſt judgment; but will acquit him before men and angels, and introduce him into his kingdom and glory.

℣. 34. Wait on the Lord, &c.] In the way of his appointments and ordinances; where may be learned, the deſign of his providences, and of the proſperity of the wicked, and their end, Pſal. lxxiii. 16—18. and in a providential way, for the performance of his promiſes, in which he never fails; and patiently bear whatever he is pleaſed to lay upon them; waiting for a deliverance out of every affliction, which will be in his own time. The Chaldee paraphraſe is, "truſt in the word of the Lord." And keep his way; which he has pointed out in his word, and has directed his people to walk in; though tempted by Satan to turn aſide to the right-hand or the left; though wicked men reproach, perſecute, and ſeek to pervert it; and though a narrow and rough way, yet keep conſtantly in it, in which there is both pleaſure and profit; good comes of it, and in it peace is had, and the preſence of God enjoyed. And he ſhall exalt thee to inherit the land; that is, ſhall raiſe out of a low and uncomfortable ſituation of life, to a more comfortable one; or however, hereafter, to dwell in the new heavens and new earth, to reign with Chriſt upon his throne, and to enjoy the eternal inheritance. When the wicked are cut off; as in ℣. 9, 22, 28. Thou ſhalt ſee it; with joy and pleaſure; not as exulting in the deſtruction of the wicked, ſimply conſidered; but as the glory of divine juſtice is diſplayed therein; ſee Pſal. lii. 5, 6.

℣. 35. I have ſeen the wicked in great power, &c.] Meaning ſome particular perſon inveſted with great power, in great authority among men, one of the ſpiritual wickedneſſes in high places; ſuch a man as Haman in Ahaſuerus's court; and though the pſalmiſt does not chuſe to mention his name, he doubtleſs had him in his mind; as either Saul, or Doeg the Edomite, or Ahithophel, or ſome ſuch man, who was in an exalted ſtation of life; and it may be when he himſelf was in low and diſtreſſed circumſtances: the word uſed [c] ſignifies one formidable and terrible, ſtriking terror to all around; of whom others are afraid, as Aben Ezra interprets it, Iſa. xxix. 20. and xlix. 25. And ſpreading himſelf like a green bay-tree; or like one that grows up out of the earth of itſelf, and is in its native ſoil, and very flouriſhing; and the metaphor denotes an increaſe of riches and honour, and a ſeemingly ſettled ſtate in the enjoyment of ſuch outward felicity; ſo Jarchi interprets it משריש, taking root; as well as ſuch a man's glorying in, and boaſting of his affluence and fullneſs; ſee Pſal. lxxiii. 12. Jer. xii. 1, 2. Pſal. xlix. 6. Aben Ezra explains it of a wicked man's openly committing iniquity, declaring his ſin as Sodom, and glorying in his ſhame; but rather it denotes a man in great authority and eſteem, as a man crowned with laurels, and in a very exalted and triumphant ſtate.

℣. 36. Yet he paſſed away, &c.] At once, on a ſudden; either his riches and honour, which, in one hour, came to nought, by one providence or another; or he himſelf by death, in the midſt of all his proſperity, and whilſt bleſſing himſelf in it, his ſoul was required of him; and ſo the Targum is, he ceaſed from the world; he went out of it unawares: the laurel, or bay-tree, very quickly grows old [d]. And lo, he was not; he was not reduced to nothing; he did not become a non-entity, though he might wiſh himſelf to be ſo; it being better for him if he had never been born; but he was not in the land of the living, in hell he lift up his eyes. Yea, I ſought him, but he could not be found; in the place where he formerly was, that knowing him no more; he could not be found on earth, from whence he was gone; nor in heaven, where no place is found for ſuch wicked men; he was gone to his own place, as is ſaid of Judas, and of whom Jerom interprets the whole of this paſſage.

℣. 37. Mark the perfect man, &c.] None are ſo in themſelves, not the moſt holy man upon earth; for though all grace is implanted at once in regeneration; the ſeed of grace of every kind is caſt into the heart at once; yet it opens and ſpreads, and gradually increaſes; nor is any grace in its exerciſe perfect; not faith, nor hope, nor love; ſin ſin is in the beſt of men, and all ſtand in need of freſh ſupplies of grace. None of the ſaints ever affirmed, that they had arrived to perfection, but have diſclaimed it: one ſaint may indeed attain to a greater degree of grace and knowledge than another, and in a comparative ſenſe be perfect; and there is a perfection of parts, though not of degrees, in all; the new man is formed in all its parts, though theſe are not grown to their full perfection: and whereas perfection often denotes truth and ſincerity, ſuch may be ſaid to be perfect, that is, ſincere, who have received the grace of God in truth, have the truth and root of the matter in them; ſo Noah, Job, and others, are ſaid to be perfect men; but not ſimply and abſolutely in themſelves, but as in Chriſt Jeſus; who has obtained complete redemption, perfectly fulfilled the Law for them, fully expiated their ſins, procured the entire pardon of them, and brought in an everlaſting righteouſneſs; by which they are juſtified from all ſin, and are perfectly comely, and a perfection of beauty, through the comelineſs of Chriſt put upon them. And behold the upright; the man that is upright in heart and converſation, who has a right ſpirit renewed in him, and the uprightneſs of Chriſt ſhewed unto him; or, in other words, who has the truth of grace within him, and the righteouſneſs of Chriſt upon him: ſuch men are to be marked, obſerved, viewed and conſidered, as rare and uncommon men; and to be imitated and and followed in the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty; and eſpecially the end of ſuch perſons is to be marked and beheld, as follows. For the end of that man is peace; ſuch a man now enjoys a conſcience-peace, which paſſes the underſtanding of worldly men; and which he poſſeſſes in Chriſt, and from him, amidſt a variety of tribulations, ariſing from a view of intereſt in his blood and righteouſneſs; and, generally ſpeaking, goes off the ſtage of life, if not triumphing, yet reſigned to the will of God, and in a ſerene and tranquil frame of ſpirit; and even deſiring to be gone, and to be with Chriſt, and to have leave, with good old Simeon, to depart in peace; and as ſoon as they are departed, they enter into peace, into the joy of their Lord, into his preſence, where is fulneſs of joy, and pleaſures for evermore; ſee Numb. xxiii. 10.

[b] תמעד אשריו non vacillat greſſus ejus, Cocceius.

[c] עריץ terrificum, Montanus, Vatablus; terribilem aut formidabilem, Gejerus, Michaelis; daunting, terrible, Ainſworth.

[d] Seneſcit velociter, Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 16. c. 44.

℣. 38. But the tranſgreſſors ſhall be deſtroyed together, &c.] This is to be underſtood of obſtinate and continued tranſgreſſors, who live and die in their tranſgreſſions; ſee Prov. xi. 3. otherwiſe all men are tranſgreſſors in Adam, and ſinned and fell with him in his tranſgreſſion; and are juſtly called tranſgreſſors from the womb; and are guilty of actual tranſgreſſions, nor are any clear from them; and are arraigned, convinced, and judged by the Law as tranſgreſſors; and for many of theſe Chriſt died, and makes interceſſion; and who are converted, and turned from their tranſgreſſions; and theſe are pardoned, and ſaved, and not deſtroyed: but ſtubborn and perverſe tranſgreſſors are deſtroyed: not only with a temporal deſtruction of their ſubſtance, and of their names, and they themſelves are rooted out of the earth; but with an everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and the glory of his power; for this ſeems to refer to the day of judgment, when all the wicked will be together; and ſhall in a body ſtand at Chriſt's left-hand, and be bid to go, ye curſed into everlaſting fire, and ſhall be turned into hell at once, and together. The end of the wicked ſhall be cut off; meaning either their poſterity, as the word is rendered in Pſal. cix. 13. or their hope and expectation of good things here and hereafter; when the righteous man receives the end of his faith, hope and expectation, even the ſalvation of his ſoul; but theſe ſhall be diſappointed and fruſtrated of their end; ſee Prov. xxiii. 18. or their laſt end is cutting off from the preſence and ſight of God, utter ruin and deſtruction; and ſo it ſtands oppoſed to the end of the perfect and upright man, which is eternal peace and happineſs.

℣. 39. But the ſalvation of the righteous is of the Lord, &c.] Both their temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal ſalvation; particularly the latter, which is originally of the Lord, and ſprings from the thoughts, purpoſes, and reſolutions of his heart: it is of him freely, of his rich grace, and abundant mercy; and it is of him fully and compleatly; it is an entire ſalvation of ſoul and body; includes all bleſſings of grace, and glory in it; it is to the uttermoſt, and from all ſin, and every enemy; and it is of him only; there is no ſalvation in any other; and the glory of it is to be aſcribed to him, even to Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit; for all the three divine perſons have a concern in it: the determination, contrivance and ſettlement of it, is of Jehovah the Father; the impetration or effecting of it, is of Jehovah the Son; and the application of it, is of Jehovah the Spirit; ſee the note on Pſal. iii. 8. He is their ſtrength in the time of trouble; by reaſon of the hidings of God's face, the temptations of Satan, the prevalence of corruptions, the weakneſs of grace, and the many afflictions that befal them from God and men; the Lord he is their ſtrong hold and munition of rocks, whither they betake themſelves, and find ſuccour, protection and ſafety; he puts underneath everlaſting arms, bears them up, and upholds them with the right-hand of his righteouſneſs; and is the ſtrength of their hearts, of their lives, and of their ſalvation.

℣. 40. And the Lord ſhall help them, &c.] In their diſtreſs, and out of their troubles, when none elſe can, and they themſelves cannot; and that ſeaſonably, and ſometimes with means, and ſometimes without. And deliver them; out of all their afflictions, which he does ſooner or later; if not in life, yet at death. He ſhall deliver them from the wicked; this is repeated both for confirmation and explanation-ſake, ſhewing who they are the Lord will deliver his people from, even from wicked and unreaſonable men; he will not leave them in their hands now to do with them as they ſhall think fit; and he will free them from them to all eternity in the other world, where they ſhall ceaſe from giving them any trouble. And ſave them, becauſe they truſt in him; not that there is any ſaving virtue in faith, or in truſting in the Lord; the ſaving virtue is in the Lord, the object of faith and truſt; but inaſmuch as the Lord has appointed ſalvation to be through faith, or has made that the means of receiving and enjoying ſalvation, and the bleſſings of it, and has declared, that he that believeth ſhall be ſaved, he does accordingly ſave all ſuch perſons; wherefore bleſſed are they that truſt in him. The Chaldee paraphraſe is, "he ſhall redeem them be-"cauſe they truſt in his Word."

PSALM

PSALM XXXVIII.

A pſalm of David to bring to remembrance.

THIS pſalm was compoſed by David under ſome ſore affliction, and when in great diſtreſs of mind by reaſon of ſin, perhaps his ſin with Bathſheba; and was written as a memorial of his ſenſe of ſin, of his great afflictions, and deliverance from them; and therefore is ſaid to be to bring to remembrance, or to refreſh his memory with the ſaid things. Kimchi and Ben Melech think the pſalm was made for the ſake of ſuch as are in diſtreſs, to put them in mind and teach them how to pray. The Targum calls the pſalm, "a good remem-"brance concerning Iſrael;" and Jarchi ſays it was to remember the diſtreſs of Iſrael before the Lord, and that it is ſaid with reſpect to all Iſrael; though others think the word lehazcir is the name of a pſalm-tune; and Aben Ezra was of opinion that it was the firſt word of ſome pleaſant poem. The Septuagint verſion adds, "concerning the ſab-"bath," as if it was wrote to put perſons in mind of that day; whereas there is nothing in the whole pſalm that has any ſuch tendency.

℣. 1. O Lord, rebuke me not in thy wrath, &c.] This and the following clauſe are the ſame as in Pſal. vi. 1. only inſtead of wrath there it is anger; ſee the note there.

℣. 2. For thine arrows ſtick faſt in me, &c.] Meaning either words with which as a father the Lord rebuked him; and which were ſharp and cutting, entered into him and abode with him, and gave him much pain and uneaſineſs; and by which he concluded that his rebukes were in wrath and hot diſpleaſure; ſuch as thoſe in 2 Sam. xii. 11. ſo the words of men are compared to arrows, Pſalm lvii. 4. and lxiv. 3. or outward afflictions, attended with inward trouble of ſoul; for as judgments are the arrows of God, ſuch as famine, peſtilence, &c. Ezek. v. 16. Pſal. xci. 5, 6. Deut. xxxii. 21, 42. ſo the chaſtening diſpenſations of providence, under which the people of God themſelves are, are ſo called, becauſe they oftentimes come ſwiftly, ſuddenly, and at unawares, and are very pungent and diſtreſſing; and ſometimes ſtick faſt and continue long, by reaſon of which they are inwardly wounded, and conceive of God as ſorely diſpleaſed with them; ſee Job vi. 4. And thy hand preſſeth me ſore; the afflicting hand of God, which lay heavy upon him; and is a mighty hand when laid on ſuch worms as mortal ſinful men are, who cannot bear up under it, unleſs they have divine ſupports; ſee Job xix. 21. This is by ſome ſuppoſed to be ſome bodily diſeaſe inflicted on him; ſome have thought of the leproſy, which was a ſtroke from the hand of God; but this is not likely, ſince he muſt have been depoſed and ſhut up; the Jews indeed ſay[e] that he was a leper ſix months, and that the divine preſence was taken from him; a late learned man[f] thinks it was the ſmall pox, from the unſoundneſs of his fleſh, the ſoreneſs of the diſeaſe, the ſtench of it, temporary blindneſs, and his friends ſtanding aloof from him; though perhaps no other than affliction of mind for ſin, comparable to the diſeaſe deſcribed, is meant.

℣. 3. There is no ſoundneſs in my fleſh, becauſe of thine anger, &c.] Such was the nature of the affliction the pſalmiſt laboured under, and which he took to be an effect of the anger of God towards him, that the whole frame of nature was affected with it, and from the crown of the head to the ſoles of the feet, there was no health or ſoundneſs, as in Iſa. i. 6. where the ſame word is uſed as here; ſome think the word[g] here uſed has the ſignification of man; and that the ſenſe is, that through the violence of the diſtemper he had not ſo much as the form of a man, as his antitype in Iſa. lii. 14. and as this led him to a view of his ſins, as the cauſe of his affliction, he was ſo far from thinking himſelf ſound and whole, or perfect in a ſpiritual ſenſe, that he ſaw he was all over diſeaſed with ſin, and that in his fleſh dwelt no good thing. Neither is there any reſt in my bones, becauſe of my ſin; or peace[h] there; ſin breaks the believer's reſt, and diſturbs his peace; nor can he, in a view of it, find any reſt in himſelf, nor in any creature, nor in any ſervice or duty, only in Jeſus Chriſt, his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice.

℣. 4. For mine iniquities are gone over mine head, &c.] Like an inundation of waters, as the waves and billows of the ſea; for the waters to come up to the neck or chin ſhews great danger; but when they go over the head, the caſe is deſperate, and a perſon is ſinking and drowning; compare with this Pſal. lxix. 1, 2. the ſimile may denote both the number and weight of ſins, and alſo ſignifies the overwhelming diſtreſs the pſalmiſt was in, under a view of them. As an heavy burden they are too heavy for me; the guilt of ſin upon the conſcience, without a view of pardon, lies heavy indeed, and makes a man a burden to himſelf, as it did Job, chap. vii. 20, 21. yea, ſin is not only grieving and afflicting to pardoned ones, and who know they are pardoned, but it is a burden to them under which they groan; nor is it poſſible for any ſo to bear it as to ſatisfy and make atonement for it; none but Chriſt could ever do this, and he has done it; nor is there any relief for burdened ſouls, but by looking to a ſin-bearing and ſin-atoning Saviour, and by caſting the burden upon him who invites them to him for reſt.

℣. 5. My wounds ſtink, and are corrupt, &c.] Meaning his ſins, which had wounded him, and for which there is no healing but in a wounded Saviour, and by his ſtripes we are healed, Iſa. liii. 5. where the ſame word is uſed as here; Chriſt's black and blue ſtripes and wounds, as the word ſignifies, are the healing of ours, both of ſins, and of the effects of them; which, to a ſenſible ſinner, are as nauſeous and loathſome as an old wound that is feſtered and corrupt. Becauſe of my fooliſhneſs; as all ſin ariſes from fooliſhneſs, which is bound in the hearts of men, and from whence it ariſes, Mark vii. 22. perhaps the pſalmiſt may have reſpect to his folly with Bathſheba, which had been the occaſion of all the diſtreſs that is ſpoken of both before and afterwards.

℣. 6.

[e] In R. Obadiah in loc. [f] Delaney's Life of King David, vol. 2. p. 146. [g] אין מתם non ſupereſt amplius ulla forma ſeu figura hominis, Amama; ſo Joſeph Kimchi. [h] אין שלום non (eſt) pax, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Muſculus, Coccius, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth.

℣. 6. I am troubled, &c.] Diſcompoſed and perplexed in mind; his thoughts were diſturbed and irregular, and in the utmoſt confuſion and diſtreſs: this trouble was not only on account of the affliction that was upon him, but chiefly becauſe of his ſin; and which was increaſed by the view he had of the diſpleaſure of God, concluding he was come forth againſt him in wrath and fury. I am bowed down greatly; not in his body, at leaſt not in that only, as if he was bowed together by his diſorder, that he could not lift himſelf up; for he is ſaid to walk in the next clauſe: or rather, he bowed down his head as a bullruſh voluntarily, and through ſorrow and ſhame could not lift it up before the Lord; though it may chiefly deſign the preſſure of his mind, that his ſoul was caſt down within him, and with all his ſpiritual reaſonings he could not erect himſelf; it is the Lord that raiſeth up thoſe that are bowed down in this ſenſe; ſee Pſal. xlii. 5, 6, 11. and cxlv. 14. I go mourning all the day long; or I go black, or in black [i]; meaning either that his ſkin was black, through the diſeaſe upon him, and the trouble that was in him, Job xxx. 30. or that he was clothed in black garments, as a token of mourning; as white garments were of joy and chearfulneſs, Eccl. ix. 7, 8. and he was blacker ſtill in his own apprehenſion, by reaſon of inward corruptions and outward tranſgreſſions, which appeared in a very black hue, attended with aggravating circumſtances; ſee Cant. i. 5. Pſal. li. 7.

℣. 7. For my loins are filled with a loathſome diſeaſe, &c.] The word here uſed has the ſignification of burning [k]; and the Targum renders it, my loins are filled with burning; a burning fever was upon him, or there was an inflammation in thoſe parts; a hot burning ulcer, which might be nauſeous; and ſo was true in both ſenſes. Aben Ezra interprets it, abominable and vile; ſomething not fit to be mentioned; and ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech. The word is rendered ſometimes lightly eſteemed; as in 1 Sam. xviii. 23. and Jarchi thinks it has this ſenſe here; and the meaning is, that he was vile in his own eyes, and mean in his own eſteem. Doubtleſs the pſalmiſt has reference to ſomething more than a bodily diſeaſe; at leaſt not to that only, but to the diſeaſe of his ſoul alſo, ſin, which has the nature of a diſeaſe; it is an hereditary one, which is derived from one to another by propagation; it is univerſal, and reaches to all men, and to all the parts of the body and powers of the ſoul; it is a complication of diſorders; it is in its own nature mortal, and ever incurable but by Chriſt; and, as here, it is a loathſome one; it is loathſome to God, and to all ſenſible ſinners: and when the pſalmiſt ſays his loins were filled with it, it may ſignify, that it was an internal diſorder that was in him; ſin that dwelt in him, a law in his members; and may denote the aboundings of ſin in him, the ſwarms of corruptions that were in him; as alſo the pain it gave him, and the quick ſenſe he had of it. And there is no ſoundneſs in my fleſh; which is repeated, ſee ℣. 3. partly for confirmation-ſake, and partly to ſhew the continued ſenſe of it, as perſons under a diſorder are continually making mention of it.

℣. 8. I am feeble, &c.] Both in body, natural ſtrength being weakened by the affliction, and dried up like a potſherd by the heat of the diſtemper; and in ſoul, being weak in the exerciſe of faith and other graces. The word is uſed of Jacob, fainting at and diſbelieving the news of his ſon Joſeph, being alive, Gen. xlv. 26. And ſore broken; in his conſtitution with the diſeaſe, and in his mind with trouble; eſpecially for his ſin, and under a ſenſe of the divine diſpleaſure; his bones were broken by his fall, and his heart broken with a ſenſe of ſin, Pſal. li. 8, 17. I have roared by reaſon of the diſquietneſs of my heart; which was like the raging of the ſea, as the word [l] rendered diſquietneſs, here ſignifies; and to which the uneaſineſs and reſtleſsneſs of wicked men is ſometimes compared, Iſai. v. 30. and lvii. 20. and ſo great was the diſquietude of this good man under affliction, and ſenſe of ſin and wrath, that he had no reſt night nor day; and could not forbear crying out, in a very hideous manner, like the roaring of a lion.

℣. 9. Lord, all my deſire is before thee, &c.] To be delivered from his afflictions, to have a diſcovery and application of pardoning grace, and to have communion with his God: the deſire of his ſoul was unto theſe things; and it was ſome ſatisfaction to him, that it was before the Lord, and known unto him, before whom all things are naked and open. And my groaning is not hid from thee; under the weight of his affliction, the burden of his ſin, and which he expreſſed in prayer to the Lord, and which is often done with groanings which cannot be uttered: but even theſe are known and underſtood by the Lord.

℣. 10. My heart panteth, &c.] Or goes about [m]; runs here and there and finds no reſt; as Aben Ezra interprets the word from the Targum he cites; though the Targum we have renders it, my heart ſhakes with fear, or dread, as perſons in a fever. Jarchi interprets the word, ſurrounded with grief; it denotes the panting or palpitation of the heart, through ſorrow and dread, and the failing of it even as at death. My ſtrength faileth me, or forſakes me [n]; bodily ſtrength and ſpiritual ſtrength; the ſtrength of faith, hope, and confidence. As for the light of mine eyes, it alſo is gone from me; which is often the caſe of perſons under bodily diſorders, their eyes grow dim, and ſight fails them; and this might be true in a ſpiritual ſenſe of the pſalmiſt, who had loſt ſight of God as his covenant-God; of his intereſt in his love, in the bleſſings of his grace, and in eternal ſalvation, and was walking in darkneſs, and ſaw no light.

℣. 11. My lovers and my friends ſtand aloof from my ſore, &c.] As if it was a plague-ſore, leſt they ſhould be infected with it; or becauſe they could not bear the ſtench of his wounds, and the loathſomeneſs of his diſeaſe, or to ſee him in his agonies, and hear his roaring and his groans, ℣. 2, 3, 5, 7, 8, 9. or as taking his caſe to be deſperate, as if he was juſt dying and no help could be given him, ℣. 10. If it was the leproſy, as ſome Jewiſh writers have affirmed, the word נגע tranſlated ſore, being uſed for the plague of the leproſy; they were obliged by the ceremonial law to keep at a diſtance from from him: but this rather ſeems to be voluntary, and to proceed from neglect and contempt. Theſe lovers and friends were ſuch for whom David had had an affection, and had been friendly to, and therefore it was ungrateful in them to act the part they did; and ſuch who had pretended love and friendſhip to him in his health and proſperity, but now had deſerted him, which is a common caſe; ſee Job xix. 13, 14, 19. Pſal. lxix. 8. and lxxxviii. 18. Afflictions try mens friends; and as that is a time when friendly viſits are moſt wanting and moſt uſeful, ſo it is an aggravation of the affliction, and makes it the heavier when ſuch are denied. And my kinſmen ſtand afar off; that were near to him by the ties of nature, or friendſhip.

[i] קודר atratus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis. [k] R. Joſeph Kimchi & Abendana. נקלה ardore, Pagninus, Vatablus; ardens ulcus, Muſculus, ſo ſome in Vatablus; toſtione, Piſcator; aduſtione, Gejerus; ſo the Targum; aduſto, Guſſetius, Ebr. Comment. p. 742. [l] מנהמת præ fremitu, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius, Gejerus, ſo Piſcator, Cocceius, Michaelis. [m] מחרחר circuivit, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus. [n] עזבני dereliquit me, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Muſculus, Cocceius.

℣. 12. They alſo that ſeek after my life, &c.] His avowed and implacable enemies, whom nothing would ſatisfy but the taking away of his life: theſe came too near him; for theſe, he ſays, lay ſnares for me, as Satan does for the ſouls of men, as the Jews did for Chriſt, and as wicked men do for the ſaints, Pſal. cxxiv. 7. And they that ſeek my hurt ſpeak miſchievous things; to the injury of his character and reputation; And imagine deceits all the day long; contrive artful ſchemes to deceive; ſee Pſal. xxxv. 20.

℣. 13. But I as a deaf man heard not, &c.] He acted the part of a deaf man, and made as if he did not hear the miſchievous things his enemies ſpoke; as Saul, when the ſons of Belial ſpoke againſt him and deſpiſed him, 1 Sam. x. 27. and as our Lord when his enemies accuſed him, Matt. xxvii. 12, 13, 14. And I was as a dumb man, that openeth not his mouth; made no reply to what they ſaid, and did not render railing for railing; in which Chriſt was the antitype of him, Iſai. liii. 7. 1 Pet. ii. 23. and iii. 9.

℣. 14. Thus I was as a man that heareth not, &c.] Any thing that is ſaid unto him; he took no more notice of it than if he had never heard it; but bore all the railings and calumnies of men with calmneſs and patience. And in whoſe mouth are no reproofs; as if he had nothing to ſay for himſelf, in vindication of his character, and to the refutation of his enemies; as if he had no arguments to make uſe of, for the conviction and reproof of his adverſaries.

℣. 15. For in thee, O Lord, do I hope, &c.] That he would plead his cauſe againſt his accuſers and revilers, and who ſought his hurt; that he ſhould be delivered out of their hands, and out of all his afflictions; that he ſhould be healed of his diſeaſes, both of ſoul and body under which he laboured; and ſhould again enjoy the light of God's countenance, and have the diſcoveries of his pardoning grace and mercy; and this was the reaſon why he was ſo calm and quiet amidſt the unkindneſſes of his friends, and the cruel uſage of his enemies. Thou wilt hear, or anſwer, O Lord my God; in the midſt of all his diſtreſſes of body and mind, he had not given up his intereſt in God, as his God and Father; which is the great bleſſing of the covenant of grace, and which ever continues; and is the great ſupport of believers, under whatſoever they meet with in ſoul and body, from friends or foes; this his God the pſalmiſt believed would not only hear his cries in his ſore diſtreſs, but hear the reproaches of his enemies, and anſwer them in a providential way in his own time, by terrible things in righteouſneſs to their conviction and confuſion; and therefore he himſelf was ſilent.

℣. 16. For I ſaid hear me, &c.] This he had expreſſed in prayer to God; he had committed his cauſe to him, and intreated him that he would hear and anſwer him; giving this as a reaſon, Leſt otherwiſe they ſhould rejoice over me; at his misfortunes and calamities, at the continuance of his trouble and diſtreſs, both of body and mind. When my foot ſlippeth; as it ſometimes did through the corruptions of nature, the temptations of Satan, and the ſnares of the world; which is more or leſs the caſe of all the people of God, who are all ſubject to ſlips and falls, though they ſhall not finally and totally fall away. They magnify themſelves againſt me; that is, his enemies exulted and triumphed over him: this was what he found by experience; and therefore makes uſe of it as an argument with God, that he would hear and anſwer, and deliver him out of his trouble, and preſerve him from falling.

℣. 17. For I am ready to halt, &c.] Meaning either that there was a proneneſs in him to ſin; ſee Jer. xx. 10. or that he was ſubject to affliction and adverſity, as the ſame word is rendered in Pſal. xxxv. 15. and the words are either a reaſon and argument uſed with the Lord, to hear and keep his foot from ſlipping, that ſo his enemies might not rejoice over him, and magnify themſelves againſt him; as they would do ſhould he fall into ſin or into any calamity, both which he was liable to: or they are a reaſon why he was ſo calm and quiet under the ill uſage he met with from friends and enemies, becauſe he was ready for halting, or prepared[o] for it; he conſidered that he was born for trouble and adverſity; that God had appointed him to it, and it was appointed for him, and therefore he was quiet under it; ſee Job v. 6, 7. and xxiii. 14. he was prepared to meet it; he expected it, it being the common lot of God's people; and therefore when it came upon him, it was no ſtrange thing to him. The Septuagint verſion, and thoſe that follow that, render the words, I am ready for ſcourges; and Jerom, applies them to Chriſt, who was ready to undergo ſcourges, ſufferings, and death itſelf for his people. And my ſorrow is continually before me; that is, for his ſin, which was ever before him, ſtared him in the face, lay heavy on his conſcience, and appeared very terrible and loathſome to him; his ſorrow for it was without intermiſſion, and was a godly ſorrow, a ſorrow for ſin, as committed againſt a God of love, grace, and mercy: or he may mean, that his affliction, which was grievous to him, was continually upon him night and day: our Lord himſelf, David's antitype, was a man of ſorrows all his days.

℣. 18. For I will declare mine iniquity, &c.] Either to men, to eaſe his mind, juſtify God in his proceedings with him, and for their caution and admonition; or rather to God, againſt whom he had ſinned, and who only could pardon him; with a view to which, he was determined to make a free and open confeſſion of it before him: I will be ſorry for my ſin, or careful[p] about it; that is, how he committed it for the future: true repentance for ſin produces a carefulneſs to abſtain from all appearance of it; ſee 2 Cor. vii. 10, 11.

℣. 19. But mine enemies are lively, &c.] Or living[q], or live; not in a ſpiritual ſenſe; for they had no lively hope, nor living faith, but were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; nor merely in a natural ſenſe

[o] נכון paratus, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis. Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Gejerus, Michaelis, Ainſworth. Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius.

[p] אדאג ſolicitus erò, Montanus; ſo

[q] חיים viventes, Pagninus, Montanus, Muſculus, ſenſe or corporally, ſo David was living himſelf; but in great proſperity and worldly happineſs, and ſo were briſk and chearful, and lived a merry and jocund life. And they are ſtrong; not only hale and robuſt in body, but abounded in riches and wealth, which are the ſtrength of wicked men. And they that hate me wrongfully are multiplied; that is, ſuch as hated him without a cauſe, and made lies, and falſhoods, the reaſons of it; theſe increaſed in numbers, or in their outward ſtate and circumſtances; ſee Pſal. lxxiii. 4, 5, 7, 12. and lxix. 4.

℣. 20. They alſo that render evil for good are mine adverſaries, &c.] See the note on Pſal. xxxv. 12. Becauſe I follow the thing that good is, or follow good; a good God, whom his ſoul followed hard after, Pſal. lxiii. 8. the good ſhepherd of the ſheep, who led him into green paſtures, whither he followed him, Pſal. xxiii. 1, 2, 3. the good Spirit of God his guide, whom he walked after, Rom. viii. 1. good and holy men of God, whom he took for examples and copied after; and every good work, which he purſued with eagerneſs and pleaſure; and all this drew upon him the hatred of his adverſaries.

℣. 21. Forſake me not, O Lord, &c.] Or continue not to forſake; for he ſeems to have been under divine deſertion, and might be under apprehenſions that God had utterly forſaken him; which he intreats he would not, though his friends had forſook him, and his own ſtrength had failed and left him, ℣. 10, 11. O my God, be not far from me; as to his gracious preſence, and with reſpect to help and deliverance, otherwiſe God is not far from any of his creatures, being omnipreſent.

℣. 22. Make haſte and help me, &c.] Or, for my help; his caſe required haſte, and God does help his people when none elſe can, and that right early. O Lord, my ſalvation; by which it appears, that his prayer was a prayer of faith; he ſaw that his ſalvation was in the Lord, and in no other; and though he had been and was in ſuch a low condition, both in ſoul and body, yet his faith was not loſt; that is an abiding grace, and will continue under the influence of the author and finiſher of it, until the end of it is received, the ſalvation of the ſoul. R. Moſes [r] thinks the phraſe make haſte, is to be repeated here, and read thus, Make haſte, O Lord, to my ſalvation.

PSALM XXXIX.

To the chief muſician, even to Jeduthun, a pſalm of David.

SOME take Jeduthun to be the name of a muſical inſtrument, as Jarchi, on which, and others, the firſt word of a ſong, to the tune of which this pſalm was ſung, as Aben Ezra; though it ſeems beſt, with Kimchi and others, to underſtand it, as the name of the chief muſician, to whom this pſalm was ſent to be made uſe of in public ſervice; ſince Jeduthun was, with his ſons, appointed by David to propheſy with harps and pſalteries, and to give praiſe and thanks unto the Lord, 1 Chron. xvi. 41, 42. and xxv. 1, 3. he is the ſame with Ethan [s]. The occaſion of it is thought, by ſome, to be the rebellion of his ſon Abſalom; ſo Theodoret thinks it was written when he fled from Abſalom, and was curſed by Shimei; or rather, it may be ſome ſore affliction, which lay upon David for the chaſtiſement of him; ſee ℣. 9, 13. and the argument of the pſalm ſeems to be much the ſame with that of the preceding one, as Kimchi obſerves.

℣. 1. I ſaid, &c.] That is, in his heart; he purpoſed and determined within himſelf to do as follows; and he might expreſs it with his mouth, and ſo his purpoſe became a promiſe. I will take heed to my ways; as every good man ſhould; that is, to all his actions, conduct, and converſation: it becomes him to take heed what ways he walks in; that they are the ways of God, which he directs to; that they are the ways of Chriſt, which he has left an example to follow in; and that they are according to the word of God; that he walks in Chriſt, the way of ſalvation, and by faith on him; that he chooſes, and walks in the way of truth, and not error; and in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord, blameleſs; and in the path of holineſs, in which, though fools, they ſhall not err: and it is alſo neceſſary that he ſhould take heed that he does nothing, either by embracing error, or going into immorality, by which the ways of God, and Chriſt, and truth, are evil-ſpoken of, blaſphemed and reproached; and that he does not depart out of theſe ways, nor ſtumble, ſlip, and fall in them. That I ſin not with my tongue; which is a world of iniquity, and has a multitude of vices belonging to it; not only in profane men, but in profeſſors of religion; whom it becomes to take heed that they ſin not with it, by lying one to another, by angry and paſſionate expreſſions, by corrupt communication, filthineſs, fooliſh talking, and jeſting, which are not convenient; by whiſpering, tale-bearing, back-biting, and by evil-ſpeaking one of another: particularly there are vices of the tongue, which the ſaints are liable to under afflictive providences, and ſeem chiefly deſigned here; ſuch as envious expreſſions at the proſperity of others; words of impatience under their own afflictions, and murmurings at the hand of God upon them; ſuch as theſe, the pſalmiſt determined, within himſelf, to guard againſt; in order to which he propoſed to take the following method. I will keep my mouth with a bridle; that is, bridle his tongue, that being an unruly member, and to be kept in with bit and bridle, like an unruly horſe; ſee James i. 26. and iii. 2, 3, 4, 5, 8. While the wicked is before me; or againſt me [t]; meaning either whilſt Ahithophel and Abſalom were conſpiring and rebelling againſt him, and Shimei was curſing him, under which he behaved with great ſilence, calmneſs, and patience; ſee 2 Sam. xv. 25, 26. and xvi. 5—12. or whilſt he had the flouriſhing condition of wicked men in his view, and was meditating on it; or rather, when any one of them came to viſit him in his affliction, he was determined to be wholly ſilent, that they might have no opportunity of rejoicing over him, nor of reproaching him, and the good ways of God: and indeed it is proper for the people of God to be always ways upon their guard, when they are in the preſence of wicked men; and be careful what they utter with their lips, who watch their words to improve them againſt them, and the religion they profeſs.

[r] In Aben Ezra & R. Joſeph Kimchi in R. David Kimchi in loc.

[s] Vid. Hiller. Onomaſtic. ſacr. p. 513, 805.

[t] לנגדי adverſum me, V. L. contra me, Cocceius; ſo the Targum.

℣. 2. I was dumb with ſilence, &c.] Quite ſilent, as if he had been a dumb man, and could not ſpeak; ſo he was before men, eſpecially wicked men, and under the afflicting hand of God; ſee ℣. 9. thus he put his reſolution into practice. I held my peace, even from good; that is, he ſaid neither good nor bad: this expreſſes the greatneſs of his ſilence; he did not chooſe to open his lips, and ſay any thing that was good, leſt evil ſhould come out along with it: though this may be conſidered as carrying the matter too far, even to a criminal ſilence; ſaying nothing of the affliction he laboured under as coming from the hand of God, and of his own deſert of it; nor praying to God for the removal of it, nor giving him thanks for his divine goodneſs in ſupporting him under it, and making it uſeful to him; though it ſeems rather to have reſpect to his ſilence concerning the goodneſs of his cauſe before men; he ſaid not one word in the vindication of himſelf; but committed his cauſe to him that judgeth righteouſly. The Targum and Jarchi interpret it of his ſilence and ceſſation from the words of the Law: he ſaid nothing concerning the good word of God; which ſenſe, could it be admitted, the words in Jer. xx. 9. might be compared with theſe and the following. And my ſorrow was ſtirred; this was the iſſue and effect of his ſilence; his ſorrow being pent up, and not let out and eaſed by words, ſwelled and increaſed the more; or the ſorrow of his heart was ſtirred up at the inſults and reproaches of his enemies, as Paul's ſpirit was ſtirred up by the ſuperſtition and idolatry of the city of Athens, Acts xvii. 16.

℣. 3. My heart was hot within me, &c.] Either with zeal for God; or rather with envy at the proſperity of wicked men, and with impatience at his own afflictions. While I was muſing, the fire burned; not the fire of the divine word, whilſt he was meditating upon it, which cauſed his heart to burn within him; nor the fire of divine love, the coals whereof give a moſt vehement flame, when the love of God is ſhed abroad in the heart, and the thoughts of it are directed by the Spirit of God to dwell in meditation on it; but the fire of paſſion, anger, and reſentment, whilſt meditating on his own adverſity, and the proſperity of others. Then ſpake I with my tongue; and ſo broke the reſolution he had made, ℣. 1. he ſpoke not for God, though to him; not by way of thankfulneſs for his grace and goodneſs to him, in ſupporting him under his exerciſes; but in a way of complaint, becauſe of his afflictions; it was in prayer he ſpoke to God with his tongue, and it was unadviſedly with his lips, as follows.

℣. 4. Lord, make me to know mine end, &c.] Not Chriſt, the end of the Law for righteouſneſs, as Jerom interprets it; nor how long he ſhould live, how many days, months and years more; for though they are known of God, they are not to be known by men; but either the end of his afflictions, or his latter end, his mortal ſtate, that he might be more thoughtful of that, and ſo leſs concerned about worldly things, his own external happineſs, or that of others; or rather, his death; ſee Job vi. 11. and his ſenſe is, that he might know death experimentally; or that he might die: this he ſaid in a ſinful, paſſionate way, as impatient of his afflictions and exerciſes; and in the ſame way the following expreſſions are to be underſtood. And the meaſure of my days, what it is; being deſirous to come to the end of it; otherwiſe he knew it was but as an hand's-breadth, as he ſays in the following verſe. That I may know how frail I am; or what time I have here; or when I ſhall ceaſe to be [u]; or, as the Targum is, when I ſhall ceaſe from the world; ſo common it is for the ſaints themſelves, in an angry or impatient fit, to deſire death; ſee Job vii. 15, 16. Jonah iv. 8. and a very rare and difficult thing it is to wiſh for it from right principles, and with right views, as the apoſtle Paul did, Phil. i. 23.

℣. 5. Behold, thou haſt made my days as an hand-breadth, &c.] Theſe words, with the following clauſe, are the pſalmiſt's anſwer to his own enquiries; or rather a correction of his enquiry and impatience, ſhewing how needleſs it was to aſk ſuch queſtions, and be impatient to die, when it was ſo clear and certain a caſe, that life was ſo ſhort; not a yard or ell, but an hand-breadth, the breadth of four fingers; or at moſt a ſpan of time was allowed to man, whoſe days are few, like the ſhadow that declineth, and the graſs that withers; by which figurative expreſſions, the brevity of human life is deſcribed, Pſal. cii. 11. and ciii. 15. and this is the meaſure made, cut out, and appointed by the Lord himſelf, who has determined the years, months, and days of man's life, Job xiv. 5. And mine age is as nothing before thee; in the ſight of God, or in compariſon of his eternity; not ſo much as an hand-breadth, or to be accounted as an inch, but nothing at all; yea, leſs than nothing, and vanity; ſee Iſa. xl. 17. that is, the age or life of man in this world, as the word [w] uſed ſignifies; for otherwiſe the age or life of man, in the world to come, is of an everlaſting duration; but the years of this preſent life are threeſcore and ten ordinarily ſpeaking; an hundred and thirty are by Jacob reckoned but few; and even a thouſand years with the Lord are but as one day, Pſal. xc. 4, 10. Verily every man at his beſt ſtate is altogether vanity. Selah. as vanity may ſignify ſin, emptineſs, folly, falſhood, fickleneſs, and inconſtancy; for man is a very ſinful creature, empty of all that is good; fooliſh as to the knowledge of divine things; he is deceiving and deceived, his heart is deceitful and deſperately wicked; and he is unſtable in all his ways: he is all vanity [x], as the words may be rendered; all that he has, or is, or is in him, is vanity; his body, in the health, beauty, and ſtrength of it, is ſubject to change; and ſo are his mind, his memory, his judgment and affections, his purpoſes and promiſes; and ſo are his goods and eſtate, his riches and honours; yea, all the vanity that is in the creatures, that is, in the vegetable and ſenſitive creatures, yea that is in the whole world, is in him; who is a microcoſm, a little world himſelf: and this is true of every man, even in his beſt ſettled [y] eſtate; when he ſtood the moſt firm, as the word uſed ſignifies: it is true of men of high and low degree, of the wiſe, knowing, and learned, as well as of the illiterate and ignorant, Pſal. lxii. 9. Rom. i. 21, 22. even of thoſe that are in the moſt proſperous circumſtances, in the greateſt eaſe and affluence,

[u] מה חדל אני quanti ævi ego, Montanus; quamdiu mundanus ero, Vatablus; quam brevis temporis ſim, Muſculus. [w] חלדי vitale ævum meum, Cocceius; my worldly time, Ainſworth. Montanus, Gejerus, Michaelis, Muſculus, Cocceius; ſo Ainſworth. [x] כל הבל univerſa, vel omnis vanitas, Pagninus, Montanus, Cocceius; quamlibet firmus conſiſtere videatur, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus; though ſettled, Ainſworth; ſo Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [y] נצב ſtans, Pagninus, affluence; Luke xii. 16—19. David himſelf had an experience of it, 2 Sam. vii. 1. and xii. 11. yea, this is true of Adam in his beſt eſtate, in his eſtate of innocence; for he was even then ſubject to change, as the event has ſhewn; and being in honour, he abode not long; and tho' upright, became ſinful, and came ſhort of the glory of God. indeed, the ſpiritual eſtate of believers in Chriſt is ſo well ſettled, as that it cannot be altered; nor is it ſubject to any vanity. Of the word Selah, ſee the note on Pſal. iii. 2.

℣. 6. Surely every man walketh in a vain ſhew, &c.] Or in an image [z]; not in the image of the Lord, as the Targum; in the image in which God created man, for that is loſt; nor in that which is enſtamped on men in regeneration; for every man does not walk in that; rather in the image of fallen man, in which every man is born and walks: or in a ſhadow [a]; or like one; to which the days of man's life are often compared, 1 Chron. xxix. 15. Pſal. cii. 11. and cxliv. 4. and who, for the moſt part, buſies himſelf in ſhadowy and imaginary things; agreeable to all which the poet ſays [b], "I "ſee that we who live are nothing elſe but ima-"ges, and a vain ſhadow." Some [c] interpret it of the ſhadow of death; and others [d] of darkneſs itſelf; and it fitly expreſſes the ſtate of unregeneracy and darkneſs, in which every man walks without the grace of God; and which will end in utter darkneſs, if that does not prevent it; and which is called a walking in the vanity of the mind, Eph. iv. 17. Here it ſeems rather to intend the outward ſhew, pomp, and grandeur of every great man; of emperors, kings, princes, nobles, and the great men of the world; which is all a vain ſhew, a glittering appearance for a while, a glory that paſſeth away, and will not deſcend after them when laid in the grave, and oftentimes laſts not ſo long. Surely they are diſquieted in vain; about vain things, as riches and honours, which are fickle and unſtable; and ſometimes in vain are all the carking cares and diſquietude of the mind, and toil and labour of the body, which are here referred to, to obtain theſe things; ſome riſe early, and ſit up late, and yet eat the bread of ſorrow; and if they gain their point, yet do not find the pleaſure and ſatisfaction in them they promiſed themſelves, and expected. He heapeth up riches, and knoweth not who ſhall gather them; according to Jarchi, the metaphor ſeems to be taken from a man that has been plowing and ſowing, and reaping and laying up the increaſe of the field in heaps, and yet knows not who ſhall gather it into the barn, ſeeing he may die before it is gathered in; compare with this Luke xii. 16—19. or the meaning is, when a man has amaſſed a prodigious deal of wealth together, he knows not who ſhall enjoy it, whether a ſon or a ſervant, a friend or a foe, a good man or a bad man, a wiſe man or a fool, Eccl. ii. 18, 19.

℣. 7. And now, Lord, what wait I for? &c.] Look for, or expect in this view of things; not long life, ſince the days of man are ſo ſhort, and his age as nothing; not help from man, ſince he is altogether vanity; not riches and honour, ſince they are ſuch poor, fading, periſhing things; but the glories of another world, and the enjoyment of the Lord himſelf, both in this and that. My hope is in thee; the pſalmiſt now returns to himſelf, and comes to his right mind, and to a right way of judging and acting; making the Lord the object of his hope and truſt, expecting all good things, grace and glory alone from him; and this is the hope which makes not aſhamed.

℣. 8. Deliver me from all my tranſgreſſions, &c.] Which were the cauſe and occaſion of all his diſtreſſes, inward and outward; and the deliverance prayed for includes a freedom from the dominion of ſin, which is by the power of efficacious grace; and from the guilt of ſin, which is by the application of the blood of Chriſt; and from obligation to puniſhment for it, or deliverance from wrath to come, which is through Chriſt's being made a curſe, and enduring wrath in the room and ſtead of his people; and from the very being of ſin, which, though it cannot be expected in this life, is deſirable: and the pſalmiſt prays that he might be delivered from all his tranſgreſſions; knowing that if one of them was left to have dominion over him, or the guilt of it to lie upon him, and he be obliged to undergo due puniſhment for it, he muſt be for ever miſerable. Make me not the reproach of the fooliſh; of a Nabal; meaning not any particular perſon; as Eſau, according to Jarchi; or Abſalom, as others; but every fooliſh man, that is, a wicked man; ſuch who deny the being and providence of God, make a mock at ſin, and ſcoff at the ſaints: and the ſenſe of the pſalmiſt is, that the Lord would keep him from ſinning, and deliver him out of all his afflictions, on account of which he was reproached by wicked men.

℣. 9. I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, &c.] This refers either to his former ſilence, before he broke it, ℣. 1, 2. or to what he after that came into again, when he had ſeen the folly of his impatience, the frailty of his life, the vanity of man, and all human affairs, and had been directed to place his hope and confidence in the Lord, ℣. 5—7. or to the preſent frame of his mind, and his future conduct, he had reſolved upon; and may be rendered, I am dumb; or will be dumb, and will not open my mouth [e]; that is, not in a complaining and murmuring way againſt the Lord, but be ſtill, and know, or own that he is God. Becauſe thou didſt it; not becauſe thou haſt made me, as Auſtin reads the words, and as the Arabic verſion renders them, becauſe thou haſt created me; though the conſideration of God being a Creator lays his creatures under obligation as to ſerve him, ſo to be ſilent under his afflicting hand upon them; but the ſenſe is, that the pſalmiſt was determined to be patient and quiet under his affliction, becauſe God was the author of it; for though he is not the author of the evil of ſin, yet of the evil of affliction; ſee Amos iii. 6. and it is a quieting conſideration to a child of God under it, that it comes from God, who is a ſovereign Being, and does what he pleaſes; and does all things well and wiſely, in truth and faithfulneſs, and in mercy and loving-kindneſs: this ſome refer to the rebellion of Abſalom, and the curſing of Shimei, 2 Sam. xii. 11. and xvi. 10, 11. or it may refer to the death of his child, 2 Sam. xii. 22, 23. or rather, to ſome ſore affliction upon himſelf; ſince it follows,

℣. 10. Remove thy ſtroke away from me, &c.] The pſalmiſt ſtill conſiders his affliction as coming from the hand of God, as his ſtroke upon him, and which lay as an heavy burden on him, and which God only could remove; and to him he applies

[z] בצלם in imagine, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Piſcator, Cocceius, Michaelis. [a] In umbra, Gejerus; inſtar umbræ, Muſculus; vid. Hackman. præcidan. ſacr. tom. 1. p. 82. [b] ορω γαρ ημας, Sophoclis Ajax, v. 125, 126. [c] Doneſh in Jarchi in loc. [d] Jarchi & Kimchi in loc. & R. Jonah in Miclol Yophi in loc.
[e] לא אפתח non aperiam, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator, Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth.

plies for the removal of it, who is to be ſought unto by his people to do ſuch things for them; nor is ſuch an application any ways contrary to that ſilence and patience before expreſſed. I am conſumed by the blow of thine hand; meaning either that his fleſh was conſumed by his affliction, which came from the hand of God, or he ſhould be conſumed if he did not remove it: he could not bear up under it, but muſt ſink and die; if he continued to ſtrive and contend with him, his ſpirit would fail before him, and the ſoul that he had made; and therefore he intreats he would remember he was but duſt, and remove his hand from him; for this is a reaſon enforcing the preceding petition.

℣. 11. When thou with rebukes doſt correct man for iniquity, &c.] The pſalmiſt illuſtrates his own caſe before ſuggeſted, by the common caſe and condition of men, when God corrects them; which he has a right to do, as the Father of ſpirits, and which he does with rebukes; ſometimes with rebukes of wrath, with furious rebukes, rebukes in flames of fire, as the men of the world; and ſometimes with rebukes of love, the chaſtenings of a Father, as his own dear children; and always for iniquity, whether one or another; and not the iniquity of Adam, is here meant, but perſonal iniquity: and correction for it is to be underſtood of ſome bodily affliction, as the effect of it ſhews. Thou makeſt his beauty to conſume away like a moth; that is, ſecretly, ſuddenly, and at once; as a moth eats a garment, and takes off the beauty of it; or as eaſily as a moth is cruſhed between a man's fingers; ſo the Targum; "he melts away as a moth, whoſe "body is broken:" the Vulgate Latin, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic verſions, and ſo the metaphraſe of Apollinarius read, as a ſpider which deſtroys itſelf. The word rendered beauty takes in all that is deſirable in man; as his fleſh, his ſtrength, his comelineſs, his pleaſantneſs of countenance, &c. all which are quickly deſtroyed by a diſtemper of the body ſeizing on it; wherefore the pſalmiſt makes and confirms the concluſion he had made before; Surely every man is vanity. Selah. ſee the note on ℣. 5.

℣. 12. Hear my prayer, O Lord, &c.] Which was, that he would remove the affliction from him, that lay ſo hard and heavy upon him. And give ear unto my cry; which ſhews the diſtreſs he was in, and the vehemency with which he put up his petition to the Lord. Hold not thy peace at my tears; which were ſhed in great plenty, through the violence of the affliction, and in his fervent prayers to God; ſee Heb. v. 7. For I am a ſtranger with thee; not to God, to Chriſt, to the Spirit, to the ſaints, to himſelf, and the plague of his own heart, or to the devices of Satan; but in the world, and to the men of it; being unknown to them, and behaving as a ſtranger among them; all which was known to God, and may be the meaning of the phraſe with thee; or reference may be had to the land of Canaan, in which David dwelt, and which was the Lord's, and in which the Iſraelites dwelt as ſtrangers and ſojourners with him, Lev. xxv. 23. as it follows here. And a ſojourner, as all my fathers were; meaning Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and their poſterity; ſee Gen. xxiii. 4. and xxxv. 27. Pſal. cv. 23. as are all the people of God in this world: this is not their native place; they belong to another, and better country; their citizenſhip is in heaven; their Father's houſe is there, and there is their inheritance, which they have a right unto, and a meetneſs for: they have no ſettlement here; nor is their reſt and ſatisfaction in the things of this world: they reckon themſelves, whilſt here, as not at home, but in a foreign land; and this the pſalmiſt mentions, to engage the Lord to regard his prayers, ſince he has ſo often expreſſed a concern for the ſtrangers and ſojourners in the land of Iſrael.

℣. 13. O ſpare me, &c.] Or look from me[f]; turn away thy fierce countenance from me; or ceaſe from me[g], and let me alone; as in Job x. 20. from whence the words ſeem to be taken, by what follows. That I may recover ſtrength; both corporal and ſpiritual. Before I go hence; out of this world by death. And be no more; that is, among men in the land of the living; not but that he believed he ſhould exiſt after death, and ſhould be ſomewhere, even in heaven, though he ſhould return no more to the place where he was; ſee Job x. 20, 21. when a man is born, he comes into the world; when he dies, he goes out of it; a phraſe frequently uſed for death in ſcripture; ſo the ancient heathens called death abitio, a going away[h].

PSALM XL.

To the chief muſician, a pſalm of David.

JARCHI interprets this pſalm of the Iſraelites, and of their deliverance and ſong at the red ſea. The title of it, in the Syriac verſion, is, "A pſalm "of David according to the letter, when Shemaiah "brought the names of thoſe who miniſter in the "houſe of the Lord;" ſee 1 Chron. xxiv. 6. according to Kimchi, the ſubject of this pſalm is the ſame with that of the two preceding; and R. Obbadiah thinks it was compoſed by David, when he was recovered of a leproſy; but though it might be wrote by David, it was not written concerning himſelf, or on his own account, but of another. The title of this pſalm is ſomewhat different from others in the order of the words; whereas it is uſually put A pſalm of, or for David; here it is, For David, a pſalm; and may be rendered, as Ainſworth obſerves, A pſalm concerning David[i]; not literally, but typically underſtood; not concerning David himſelf, but concerning his antitype and ſon, who is called by his name, Ezek. xxxvii. 24, 25. Hoſ. iii. 5. and that it is to be interpreted of him, is evident, from the application of ℣. 6, 7, 8. unto him by the apoſtle in Heb. x. 5—9. and the whole of it is applicable to him; ſome apply it to Jeremiah in the dungeon, and others to Daniel in the den, as Theodoret obſerves.

℣. 1.

[f] השע ממני reſpice aliorſum a me, Gejerus; averte viſum a me, Michaelis.
[g] Deſine a me, Pagninus; deſiſte a me, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius; ceſſa a me, Vatablus.
[h] Feſt. Pomp. apud Schindler. Lexic. col. 440.
[i] So Ainſworth.

℣. 1. I waited patiently for the Lord, &c.] Or waiting I waited [i]; which denotes continuance, conſtancy, and patience; and which Chriſt exerciſed in the garden, when he ſubmitted himſelf entirely to the will of God; and on the croſs, when he continued in ſure hope and firm expectation of his help and aſſiſtance, though he was for a while forſaken by him; ſee Iſai. l. 7, 8, 9. And he inclined unto me, and heard my cry; both in the garden, by delivering him from fear of death, and on the croſs, by upholding, helping, and aſſiſting him, by carrying him through his ſufferings and death, and raiſing him from the dead; ſee Iſai. xlix. 8. Heb. v. 7.

℣. 2. He brought me up alſo out of an horrible pit, &c.] Which, with the following phraſe, Out of the miry clay, expreſſes the ſtate and condition Chriſt was in at the time of his bloody ſweat, his crucifixion, and his lying in ſheol, the pit or grave, ſometimes rendered hell, which theſe figurative phraſes fitly ſignify; when it is obſerved, that he was made ſin, and had the ſins of all his people on him; and as the type of Joſhua, was clothed with their filthy garments, he might be truly ſaid to be in the miry clay; and alſo that he was made a curſe for them, and bore the wrath of God in their room and ſtead; and was forſaken by his God and Father, and ſo endured both the puniſhment of loſs and ſenſe, and what was tantamount to the ſufferings of the damned in hell; ſee Pſal. lxix. 1, 2. to which may be added, the noiſy inſults of malignant men, and the infernal fiends, who ſurrounded him on the croſs; when he was in an horrible, or noiſy pit, as the words may be rendered [k], the alluſion being to ſubterraneous caverns or pits, in which the falls of water make ſo horrible a noiſe, as is intolerable; or to deep pits, into which any thing caſt makes a great ſound: and the iſſue of all this was, that he was laid in the pit of the grave, and held under the power, and with the cords of death; from all which he was delivered, when he was raiſed from the dead, juſtified in the Spirit, and glorified in the human nature by his God and Father. And ſet my feet upon a rock; on mount Zion in heaven, whither he was carried up after his reſurrection; where he will remain until his ſecond coming, being ſet down at the right hand of God, in a moſt ſtable, firm, and unalterable ſtate, as well as an honourable one; for he will die no more, and death ſhall no more have dominion over him. And eſtabliſhed my goings; in treading the path of life, which was ſhewn him at his reſurrection; in paſſing through the air, the territory of Satan, at his aſcenſion; and in his entrance into his glory, and making his way to his Father's right-hand and throne.

℣. 3. And he hath put a new ſong in my mouth, even praiſe to our God, &c.] Sung by him in the midſt of the great congregation of angels and ſaints, upon his reſurrection, aſcenſion, and ſeſſion at the right-hand of God; ſee Pſal. xxii. 22, 25. when he went to his God and ours, to his Father and ours; and in which ſong he is joined by all his people above and below, Rev. v. 9—13. Many ſhall ſee it, and fear, and ſhall truſt in the Lord; even all the elect of God, as many as are ordained to eternal life; the many whoſe ſins Chriſt bore, for whom he became a ranſom, whom he juſtifies and brings to glory: theſe all ſee him in the horrible pit and miry clay, in his ſtate of humiliation, as bearing their ſins, and the puniſhment due unto them; as wounded bruiſed and crucified; as riſing again for their juſtification; and as on mount Zion crowned with glory and honour; and a multitude of harpers with him, ſinging the new ſong: theſe ſee the ſalvation he has wrought out, the glory, fulneſs, and ſuitableneſs of it, and their intereſt in it; and they fear not with a fear of hell and damnation, which is inconſiſtent with the truſt after mentioned; but with a godly and filial fear, which ariſes from, and is encouraged by the grace and goodneſs of God, their faith in the ſufferings, death, and reſurrection of Chriſt Jeſus, and which render him a proper object of truſt and confidence; for he is ſo, both as ſuffering, crucified and ſlain, and as riſen again, and exalted at the Father's right-hand, Gal. ii. 20. 1 Pet. i. 22.

℣. 4. Bleſſed is the man that maketh the Lord his truſt, &c.] For ſuch are ſafe and ſecure in him, are poſſeſſed of all bleſſings of grace through him, have peace in their own ſouls now, and ſhall enjoy eternal happineſs with him hereafter. And reſpecteth not the proud; ſuch as the Phariſees, and all ſelf-righteous perſons, who truſt in themſelves and their own righteouſneſs, ſubmit not to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and deſpiſe others; to theſe, ſuch who truſt in Chriſt have no reſpect; they neither eſteem them, nor imitate them. Nor ſuch as turn aſide to lies; to idols, the lying vanities of the Gentiles; or to any doctrines injurious to the perſon, office, blood, righteouſneſs, ſacrifice, and grace of Chriſt; which are no other than lies, and which thoſe who believe in Chriſt have no reſpect to, but abhor both them and the abettors of them.

℣. 5. Many, O Lord my God, are thy wonderful works which thou haſt done, &c.] This is the new ſong, as Aben Ezra rightly obſerves, which is ſaid in ℣. 3. to be put in the mouth of the Meſſiah; who ſometimes ſpeaks in the plural number, being the repreſentative of his people, and ſometimes in the ſingular; for it is the ſame perſon that ſpeaks here, who is continued ſpeaking in the next verſe, and following; and which are applied to Chriſt, Hab. x. 5. the works here ſaid to be done, and to be many and wonderful, are not the creation of the world, the dividing of the ſea, and feeding the people of Iſrael forty years in the wilderneſs, as Jarchi interprets them; but the incarnation of Chriſt, redemption by him, the reſurrection of him from the dead; regeneration and converſion, and the preſervation of the ſaints from the evil of the world, ſafe to the kingdom and glory of God; all which, as they are many and various, and diſplay the manifold wiſdom and grace of God; ſo they are marvellous, and will be the ſubject of the wonder of ſaints to all eternity. And thy thoughts which are to us-ward; that is, the decrees of God, as Aben Ezra truly explains them; the purpoſes, counſels, and intentions of God; which, though mentioned laſt, are before his works, and are the ſpring of them: theſe were in the mind of God from everlaſting, were unknown till revealed, were thoughts of peace, and not of evil, and are unfruſtrable, and ever fulfilled, and are manifold, precious and amazing, Pſal. cxxxix. 17. and theſe were concerning all the elect of God as conſidered in Chriſt, and members of his; and therefore he ſays to us-ward; and all the works before mentioned were done to them, or for them, and on their account; and ſo Jarchi

[i] קוה קויתי expectando expectavi, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Muſculus, Rivetus, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth.
[k] מבור שאון e ciſterna ſonitus, Pagninus, Montanus; ſtrepitus, Vatablus, the Targum & Kimchi; and to the ſame purpoſe Muſculus, Cocceius, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; out of the pit of ſounding calamity, Ainſworth.

Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret the phraſe, becauſe of us, or for our ſakes; even the incarnation, ſufferings, death and reſurrection of Chriſt, and the thoughts of them, were for them. They cannot be reckoned up in order to thee; or there is none can order them unto thee[l]; there is no power in man to do it, as Aben Ezra obſerves; or there is none like unto thee, as Jarchi and the Oriental verſions; ſee Exod. xv. 11. Pſal. lxxxix. 7. Iſa. xl. 18, 25. though this ſenſe ſeems to break in upon the account of the wonderful works and thoughts of God, which are ſtill deſigned in the following clauſe. If I could declare and ſpeak of them, they are more than can be numbered; that is, by men: from this general account of the many and wonderful works and thoughts of God, the Meſſiah paſſes on to take notice of one particular deſign and work of the Lord, the redemption of his people by the ſacrifice of himſelf.

℣. 6. Sacrifice and offering thou didſt not deſire, &c.] Theſe were deſired, willed, and appointed by God, and that very early, even from the times of our firſt parents; and, when performed aright, were acceptable to God, quite down to the times of the Meſſiah: indeed, when offered without faith in Chriſt, and with a wicked mind, to merit any thing at the hand of God, they were always abominable to him; and he likewiſe ever preferred love to himſelf, and of the neighbour, obedience to the commands of the moral law, and works of mercy to men, before all the ſacrifices of the ceremonial law, 1 Sam. xv. 22. Hoſ. vi. 6. Mark xii. 33. nor were theſe ever in ſuch eſteem with him, as the ſacrifices of a broken and contrite heart, or of praiſe and thankſgiving, Pſal. li. 16, 17. and lxix. 30, 31. nor were they ever regarded by him, but as they reſpected Chriſt; nor were they ever deſigned to cleanſe from ſin, and take it away, but to lead to the propitiatory ſacrifice of Chriſt: but none of theſe ſenſes have place here: the meaning of the words is, that it was not the will of God, at the time this paſſage refers to, that legal ſacrifices ſhould continue any longer; and that they ſhould not be offered up, even by good men, in the beſt manner, and to the beſt ends and purpoſes; the time being come that a better ſacrifice ſhould be offered, which was the ſum and ſubſtance of them, and was prefigured by them. Mine ears haſt thou opened; or dug, or bored[m]; in alluſion, as is thought by many, to Exod. xxi. 6. though the phraſe rather ſignifies the formation and excavation of the ear; or the preparing and fitting it for its uſe; that is, to hearken to the will of his heavenly Father, to become man, offer himſelf a ſacrifice, and ſuffer and die in the room of his people; to which he became obedient, taking upon him the form of a ſervant, when found in faſhion as a man; and was obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs; ſee Iſa. l. 4—6. in Heb. x. 5. the words are rendered as by the Septuagint, but a body haſt thou prepared me; and with it the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions agree; and ſo Apollinarius, "fleſh of mortal "generation;" a part of the body being put for the whole; and which indeed is ſuppoſed: for unleſs a body had been prepared for him, his ears could not have been opened; and it was in the body, in human nature, that he was the obedient ſervant; and this is to be underſtood, not only of a preparation of this body, in the purpoſes, counſel, and covenant of God; but chiefly of the formation of it in the womb of the Virgin, where it was curiouſly wrought and prepared by the Holy Ghoſt, that he might have ſomething to offer, and in it become, as he did, an offering and a ſacrifice to God, of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour. Burnt-offering and ſin-offering haſt thou not required; any longer; this body being prepared for the Meſſiah to be offered up in.

℣. 7. Then ſaid I, &c.] As in the council and covenant of peace, when and where he declared his willingneſs to come into the world, and make ſatisfaction for the ſins of his people; ſo when the fulneſs of time was come for his appearance in human nature he repeated the ſame; for of the time of his coming into the world are theſe words interpreted, Heb. x. 5. when ſacrifice and offering God would not have any longer continued, and when a body was prepared him, then he ſaid, Lo, I come; O Father; as Apollinarius, in his metaphraſe, adds; that is, freely, and without compulſion; immediately, at once, without any delay; and he himſelf, and not another; and this not by change of place, but by aſſumption of nature; taking the body, or human nature prepared for him, and uniting it to himſelf; to which the word lo is prefixed as a note of attention and admiration; the incarnation of Chriſt being a wonderful affair, and of the utmoſt moment and importance. In the volume of the book it is written of me; either in the book of divine predeſtination, in the purpoſes and decrees of God, Pſal. cxxxix. 16. or in the book of the ſcriptures; either in general, John v. 39. Luke xxiv. 27, 44. or particularly in the book of the pſalms, Pſal. i. 1, 2. and ii. 2, 6, 7. or rather in the book of the Law, the five books of Moſes; ſince theſe were the only books or volumes that were compoſed at the writing of this pſalm; and it has reſpect not to Deut. xviii. 15. nor chap. xvii. 18. nor Exod. xxi. 6. but rather Gen. iii. 15. and ſeeing the coming of Chriſt into the world was not only appointed of God, agreed unto by Chriſt, but was propheſied of, and penned down in the ſacred writings; therefore at the appointed time he came, freely and willingly. This book is called a volume, or roll, alluding to the manner of writing formerly; when what was wrote was finiſhed, it was rolled about a ſtick in the manner of a cylinder; and in this form is the book of the Law with the Jews to this day; ſee the note on Luke iv. 17.

℣. 8. I delight to do thy will, O my God, &c.] This he came down from heaven to do, and this he did do, by preaching the goſpel, and working miracles; and above all, by obtaining eternal redemption for his people, which he effected by fulfilling the Law, becoming a ſacrifice, and ſuffering and dying in their room; all which were the will of God, and grateful to him, and in doing which Chriſt took the utmoſt delight and pleaſure, John iv. 34. Luke xii. 50. Yea, thy law is within my heart; either the whole moral law, under which he was, as man, and the ſurety of his people; and which was written upon his heart, and which he perfectly obeyed; or that particular law, injunction, and command laid upon him by his Father, to offer himſelf a ſacrifice, and lay down his life for men; which he agreed to, had it in his mind, his heart was ſet upon it, and he chearfully complied with it, John x. 18. and xiv. 31.

℣. 9. I have preached righteouſneſs in the great congregation, &c.] Not the righteouſneſs which the [l] אין ערוך אליך non eſt qui ordinet apud te, Pagninus; none can count them in order to thee, Ainſworth.

[m] ברית fodiſti, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Gejerus, Michaelis; perfodiſti, Tigurine verſion, Muſculus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; perforaſti, Cocceius.

the Law requires men to do; but the righteouſneſs which Chriſt himſelf wrought out, for the juſtification of them that believe; this he was a preacher, as well as the author of, and is part of the glad tidings he was anointed to preach, Iſa. lxi. 1. and the word [n] here uſed ſignifies, for the moſt part, the publiſhing of good tidings; and this our Lord did publickly, before all the people, in the ſynagogues of the Jews, and in the temple, whither the people in great numbers reſorted; eſpecially at the three great feſtivals in the year, the feaſts of paſſover, pentecoſt, and tabernacles, when all the males were obliged to appear, and made up a great congregation indeed; ſee John ii. 23. and v. 1, 14. and viii. 2. and xviii. 20. Lo, I have not refrained my lips, O Lord, thou knoweſt; Chriſt appeals to his divine Father, the ſearcher of hearts, and trier of reins, for the truth of this; that he had not laid any reſtraint upon his lips, nor kept back any thing in his miniſtry that was profitable; but had taught the way of God in great integrity and ſincerity; had opened his mouth, and ſpoke freely and fully, and uſed great plainneſs of ſpeech.

℣. 10. I have not hid thy righteouſneſs within my heart, &c.] Meaning not the eſſential righteouſneſs of God, though that was abundantly declared in the wounds, ſufferings, and death of Chriſt; and which was the end indeed of his being a propitiation for ſin, Rom. iii. 25, 26. but his own righteouſneſs, as before, which he wrought out, and brought in; and which is called the righteouſneſs of God his Father, becauſe it is approved of by him, and accepted with him, and which he imputes to all his people. I have declared thy faithfulneſs, and thy ſalvation; that is, the faithfulneſs of God in executing all his purpoſes, counſels and decrees, which are ſaid to be faithfulneſs and truth; and in fulfilling his covenant and promiſes, relating to the redemption and ſalvation of men by Chriſt; and in the miſſion of Chriſt into this world on that account; and in the accompliſhment of all the prophecies of the Old Teſtament concerning him; and in making good all the particular promiſes of ſupport, help, and ſtrength, made to the Meſſiah himſelf: and by his ſalvation is meant, that which is of God the Father's appointing, continuing and ſettling, in the council and covenant of grace; which he ſent his Son to be the author of, and which he has obtained; and is the great doctrine of the goſpel preached by himſelf, and his faithful miniſters, Luke xix. 9, 10. Mark xvi. 16. I have not concealed thy loving-kindneſs and thy truth from the great congregation; or in the great congregation, as the Targum. By the loving-kindneſs of God is deſigned, both his love to Chriſt, which was before the foundation of the world, and continued in his loweſt ſtate of humiliation, and which our Lord was far from concealing, but gave openly inſtances of it, John xvii. 24. and x. 17. and v. 20—23. and his love to his people; and which he declared to be the ſame with that which he is loved with, and inſtances in the gift of himſelf to them by his Father, as the great evidence of it, John xvii. 23. and iii. 16. and by truth is intended the goſpel in general, which came by Chriſt, was preached by him, which he bore witneſs to, to do which was one end of his coming into the world; and this was not concealed by him, who is truth itſelf; but was fully and plainly declared by him, as it had not been before, John i. 17. and xviii. 37.

℣. 11. Withhold not thou thy tender mercies from me, O Lord, &c.] This is a petition of Chriſt to his Father, when in the midſt of his ſorrows and ſufferings, before related; and particularly when he hid his face from him, and withheld the diſcoveries of his tender and affectionate love. Let thy loving-kindneſs and thy truth continually preſerve me; as he had promiſed; of which promiſe ſome notice is given, Iſa. xlix. 8. in the fulfilment of which the loving-kindneſs, truth, and faithfulneſs of God, would appear. Some read theſe words as expreſſive of faith in theſe things, thou wilt not withhold, &c. thy loving-kindneſs and thy truth ſhall continually preſerve me [o].

℣. 12. For innumerable evils have compaſſed me about, &c.] Like floods of water all around him; ſee Pſal. xviii. 4, 5. Jonah ii. 5. theſe are the evils of puniſhment inflicted on him, as the ſurety and Saviour of his people; ſuch as the ſorrows and griefs he bore all his days; the cruel mockings and ſcourges he endured; his being buffeted, and ſpit upon; his head crowned with thorns, and his hands and feet pierced with nails; inſulted by men and devils; crucified between two thieves, and ſo died the ſhameful and painful death of the croſs. Mine iniquities have taken hold upon me; not any committed by him; he was conceived, born, and lived without ſin, knew none, nor did he any; but the ſins of his people, which were imputed to him, laid upon him, and which he voluntarily took and bore; and which he reckoned as his own, and was reſponſible for them; theſe, when he hung upon the croſs, came upon him from all quarters, and he bore them in his own body upon the tree. So that I am not able to look up; or cannot ſee [p]; either the end of theſe iniquities, they being ſo numerous, as is after related; or he could not bear to look upon them, they were ſo filthy and nauſeous, and he ſo pure and holy; or he could not behold his Father's countenance, which theſe ſins that were upon him ſeparated him from, and cauſed to be hid from him; or like one preſſed down with the guilt of ſin, as the poor publican was, could not ſo much as lift up his eyes to heaven, Luke xviii. 13. They are more than the hairs of mine head; as they muſt needs be, ſince they were the iniquities of all the elect of God, of the whole general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, written in heaven, Iſa. liii. 6. Therefore my heart faileth me; as man; ſee Pſal. xxii. 14. though being ſupported by his divine nature, and by his divine Father and eternal Spirit, he failed not, nor was he diſcouraged, Iſa. xlii. 4. this is ſaid to ſhew the truth of the human nature, the greatneſs of mens ſins, the ſtrictneſs of divine juſtice, and what ſtrength was neceſſary to accompliſh man's ſalvation.

℣. 13. Be pleaſed, O Lord, to deliver me, &c.] From the innumerable evils which compaſſed him about; from ſinful men, and from devils, ſignified by the ſword, dog, and lion, Pſal. xxii. 20, 21. and from the power and dominion of death and the grave; all which was done when he was raiſed from the dead, and as the fruit and effect of God's well-pleaſedneſs in him, and with what he did and ſuffered; ſee Pſal. xxii. 8. and xviii. 19. O Lord, make haſte to help me; ſee the note on Pſal. xxii. 19.

℣. 14. Let them be aſhamed and confounded together, &c.] As they will be at the laſt day, when they

[n] בשרתי ευηγγελισαμην, Sept. evangelizavi, Schmidt, Michaelis; I have preached the glad tidings of juſtice, Ainſworth. [o] לא תכלא non cohibebis, Gejerus, Michaelis; יצרוני cuſtodient me, Vatablus, Gejerus, Michaelis. [p] לראות לא יכלתי non potui videre, Pagninus, Montanus, Muſculus; cernere, Cocceius; intueri, Gejerus.

they ſhall ſee him whom they have pierced, come in the clouds of heaven, in his own and his Father's glory, and in the glory of the holy angels. That ſeek after my ſoul to deſtroy it; that is, his life, as did Herod in his infancy, and the ſcribes and Phariſees, chief prieſts and elders of the people of the Jews, frequently, and at laſt accompliſhed what they ſought after. Let them be driven backward; as thoſe were who came with Judas into the garden to apprehend him, John xviii. 6. And put to ſhame that wiſh me evil; as did the Jews, who ſought all opportunities to enſnare him, and that they might have to accuſe him to the Roman governor; and who earneſtly deſired his crucifixion, and vehemently wiſhed his death; ſee Pſal. xli. 5.

℣. 15. Let them be deſolate for a reward of their ſhame, &c.] Of their ſhameful wiſhes, words and actions, as they were: their habitations in Jeruſalem were deſolate, and ſo was their houſe or temple there, and their whole land, and they themſelves were ſtripped of every thing, when Jeruſalem was taken and deſtroyed; ſee Matth. xxiii. 38. Acts i. 20. That ſay unto me, Aha, aha; words expreſſive of joy, Pſal. xxxv. 21, 25. exulting at his miſeries and ſufferings on the croſs, Matth. xxvii. 39—44. ſo the Targum, "we have rejoiced at his "deſtruction, with joy at his affliction."

℣. 16. Let all thoſe that ſeek thee, &c.] In the firſt place, with their whole hearts, earneſtly and diligently, in Chriſt, and under the influences of his Spirit, for pardon, righteouſneſs, communion, larger meaſures of grace, and for honour, glory, immortality, and eternal life. Rejoice and be glad in thee; as their covenant-God, the Father of their mercies, the God of all comfort and ſalvation; who pardons their ſins, clothes them with the robes of righteouſneſs, and garments of ſalvation, and accepts their perſons in Chriſt; all which is matter of joy and gladneſs: Chriſt is concerned for the joy of his people, John xv. 11. the Targum is, they ſhall, or let them rejoice, and be glad in thy word; in himſelf, the eſſential Word, in whom there is always ground and reaſon of joy and gladneſs; becauſe of his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice. Let ſuch as love thy ſalvation; either Chriſt, who is God's ſalvation, Gen. xlix. 18. Iſa. xlix. 6. Luke ii. 29, 30. and who is loved by his people, univerſally, ſuperlatively, and ſincerely; or the ſalvation of him, his deliverance from the grave, reſurrection from the dead, and exaltation; the benefits of which believers ſhare in, and ſo have reaſon to love it: or the ſalvation he is the author of, which is loved by thoſe that know it; partly becauſe agreeable to the divine perfections, the glory of God is great in it; and partly becauſe it is ſo full and complete in itſelf, and ſo ſuitable to them. Say continually, The Lord be magnified; let this be their conſtant employment in this world, as it will be for ever in the next, to aſcribe greatneſs to God; or greatly to praiſe him, becauſe of the great ſalvation wrought out for them.

℣. 17. But I am poor and needy, &c.] As Chriſt was literally, 2 Cor. viii. 9. and in a ſpiritual ſenſe, when deſerted by his Father, forſaken by his diſciples, and ſurrounded by his enemies; and had the ſins of his people, the curſe of the Law, and the wrath of God upon him. Yet the Lord thinketh upon me; thinketh good for me, as the Targum; or thinks highly of me; has me in great eſteem, though deſpiſed of men, and in ſuch a ſuffering ſtate. Thou art my help and my deliverer; he believed he ſhould have what he prayed for, ℣. 13. ſee Iſa. l. 7, 8, 9. Make no tarrying, O my God; which is a repetition of the requeſt in ℣. 13.

PSALM XLI.

To the chief muſician, a pſalm of David.

IN this pſalm is a propheſy concerning Chriſt, and concerning Judas Iſcariot, as runs part of the title in the Syriac verſion; and in the Arabic verſion, it is called a prophecy concerning the incarnation, and the ſalutation of Judas; and certain it is that the ninth verſe is to be underſtood of him, and of his betraying Chriſt into the hands of his enemies, ſince it is cited and applied to him by our Lord himſelf, John xiii. 18. ſo that having ſuch a ſure rule of interpretation, we may ſafely venture to explain the whole pſalm of Chriſt, which treats both of his humiliation and exaltation; for it neither agrees with David wholly, nor with Hezekiah, to whom ſome aſcribe it, as Theodoret remarks.

℣. 1. Bleſſed is he that conſidereth the poor, &c.] Not the poor of the world in common, nor poor ſaints in particular, but ſome ſingle poor man; for the word is in the ſingular number, and deſigns our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who, in the laſt verſe of the preceding pſalm, is ſaid to be poor and needy; and ſo read the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions here; who became poor for our ſakes, that we might be enriched by his poverty; being born of poor parents, educated in a mean manner, and in public life was miniſtred to by others: the word [q] here uſed ſignifies one that is attenuated, weak, and exhauſted either of his ſubſtance or ſtrength, or both; as Chriſt was in his ſtate of humiliation, when he was emptied of his riches, and though Lord of all had not where to lay his head; and whoſe ſtrength was dried up like a potſherd, when he ſuffered on the croſs; and indeed at beſt he was encompaſſed with weakneſſes and infirmities: and in this his low eſtate he is to be wiſely conſidered, or attended to with wiſdom and underſtanding; and he may be ſaid wiſely to conſider him, who conſiders how great a perſon he is, that came into ſuch a low eſtate for us; not a mere man, but above angels and men, that has all the perfections of deity in him, is the eternal Son of God, truly and properly God, and the Creator of all things, and Governor of the univerſe; which conſideration will engage to and encourage faith and hope in him, lead to adore his wonderful grace, and to admire his condeſcenſion and humility in becoming poor and weak; as alſo who conſiders that the poverty of Chriſt was for our ſakes, and that we might be made rich with the riches of grace and glory; and conſiders it ſo as not to be offended with it; ſee Matt. xi. 6. and xiii. 57. and which may ſerve to ſupport us under all meanneſs and infirmity, and in whatſoever eſtate ſaints may come into; and likewiſe who conſiders him in his offices offices which he exerciſed in that his eſtate as the apoſtle and high-prieſt of our profeſſion; and him in his exalted ſtate in heaven; ſee Heb. xii. 3. and iii. 1. and vii. 4. and viii. 1. in a word, he wiſely conſiders him, who believes in him as his Saviour, prizes him as the pearl of great price, cleaves cloſe unto him, and follows him wherever he goes; who deſires to know more of him, is concerned for his honour, intereſt, kingdom and glory, and pities his poor members, and freely and bountifully communicates to them; and ſo the Targum, "bleſſed is "the man that wiſely conſiders the afflictions of "the poor, that he may have mercy on him;" and ſuch an one is an happy man, and the following things ſaid of him prove him to be ſo. The Lord will deliver him in time of trouble; or in the evil day[r]; out of all his trouble, temporal and ſpiritual, of body and ſoul; in every time of affliction, private and perſonal; or in a time of public calamity; perhaps reference may be had to the time of Jeruſalem's deſtruction, which was a time of great tribulation, Matt. xxiv. 21. when thoſe who did not conſider Chriſt in his poor and low eſtate, but deſpiſed and rejected him, were deſtroyed; and ſuch as did, were ſaved from that calamity: and it may alſo include the day of judgment, which is the evil day, unto which the wicked are reſerved, and when they will be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction; but then thoſe that conſider Chriſt, and believe in him, will be ſaved from wrath. Some[s] take theſe words, with what follows in the two next verſes, as a prayer, and as delivered by him that viſits the ſick, for his comfort; and ſo Joſeph Kimchi interprets it of an honourable man viſiting a ſick man, and inſtructing and comforting him with ſuch words as theſe, that the Lord will deliver him, &c[t].

[q] דל tenuem, Montanus, Coccius; attenuatum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; the poor weakling, Ainſworth.

℣. 2. The Lord will preſerve him and keep him alive, &c.] Amidſt a thouſand deaths, to which he is expoſed for making a profeſſion of his faith in Chriſt; ſee 2 Cor. i. 10. and iv. 10, 11. and vi. 9. or this may refer to his ſpiritual life, which is hid and preſerved in Chriſt, in whom he believes; and is ſafe and ſecure, becauſe Chriſt lives he ſhall live alſo, and ſhall never die the ſecond death, nor be hurt by it, but ſhall have everlaſting life. And he ſhall be bleſſed upon the earth; with temporal bleſſings; for whatever he has, be it more or leſs, he has it with the bleſſing of God, and as a bleſſing of the covenant, and in love, and ſo is a bleſſing indeed: and with ſpiritual bleſſings; with peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and a right and title to eternal glory and happineſs; and he will be bleſſed in the new earth, in which righteouſneſs will dwell, and where he will dwell, live and reign with Chriſt a thouſand years. And thou wilt not deliver him into the will of his enemies; not into the will of Satan, that roaring lion who would devour him if he might; nor of wicked men, and furious perſecutors, whoſe wrath the Lord makes to praiſe him; and the remainder of it is reſtrained by him; ſome read theſe words as a prayer, do not thou deliver him, &c. ſee Pſal. xxvii. 12. ſo Pagninus, Montanus, Junius and Tremellius, Ainſworth, and others.

℣. 3. The Lord will ſtrengthen him upon the bed of languiſhing, &c.] When on a ſick bed, or a death-bed, where he lies languiſhing and ready to expire; when his natural ſtrength, ſpirits, and heart fail him, then the Lord ſtrengthens him with ſtrength in his ſoul; and is the ſtrength of his heart and his portion for ever. The Targum is, "the "Word of the Lord ſhall help him in his life, and "ſhall appear to him on the bed of his illneſs, to "quicken him." Thou wilt make all his bed in his ſickneſs; or all his bed thou haſt turned or wilt turn in his ſickneſs[u]; meaning, not the recovery of him from a bed of ſickneſs to a ſtate of health, which is the ſenſe given by many; much leſs a turning him from a ſtate of eaſe and reſt into trouble and diſtreſs; but making him eaſy and comfortable on a bed of ſickneſs; which, in a literal ſenſe, is done when a ſick perſon's bed is turned or made, or he is turned upon it from ſide to ſide; ſo the Lord, by the comforts of his Spirit, makes a ſick and death-bed eaſy to them that believe in Chriſt, and often puts that triumphant ſong into their mouths in their dying moments, O death, where is thy ſting, &c. 1 Cor. xv. 55. and this is the peaceful end and bliſsful ſtate of ſuch who wiſely conſider Chriſt and believe in him; whoſe poor and low eſtate, through the ſins of his people on him, the inſults of his enemies, and the treachery of one of his diſciples, is deſcribed in the following verſes.

℣. 4. I ſaid, Lord, be merciful unto me, &c.] See the note on Pſal. xl. 11. Heal my ſoul; not that it was diſeaſed with ſin in ſuch ſenſe as the ſouls of other men are; but it is to be underſtood as a petition for comfort whilſt bearing the ſins of others, and which Chriſt as man ſtood in need of when in the garden, and on the croſs; ſo healing ſignifies comfort in trouble, as in Iſa. lvii. 18. Mal. iv. 2. For I have ſinned againſt thee; or unto thee, or before thee, as the Targum; not that any ſin was committed by him in his own perſon, but he having all the ſins of his people on him, which he calls his own, Pſal. xl. 12. he was treated as a ſinner, and as guilty before God, Iſa. liii. 12. and ſo the words may be read, for I am a ſinner unto thee[w]; I am counted as one by thee, having the ſins of my people imputed to me; and am bound unto thee, or under obligation to bear the puniſhment of ſin; or thus, For I have made an offering for ſin unto thee[x], ſo the word is uſed, Lev. vi. 26. and ix. 15. and ſo it might be rendered in Lev. v. 7, and 11. and perhaps may be better rendered ſo in Lev. iv. 3. and be underſtood, not of the ſin of the anointed prieſt, but of his offering a ſacrifice for the ſoul that ſinned through ignorance, ℣. 2. which offering is directed to: and then the ſenſe here is, heal me, acquit me, diſcharge me, and deliver me out of this poor and low eſtate in which I am; for I have made my ſoul an offering for ſin, and thereby have made atonement for all the ſins of my people laid upon me; and accordingly he was acquitted and juſtified, 1 Tim. iii. 16.

℣. 5. Mine enemies ſpeak evil of me, &c.] That is, the Jews, who were enemies to his perſon, people, doctrines and ordinances, and would not have him to reign over them; theſe ſpake evil of him, charged him with being a glutton and a winebibber; ſaid he had a devil, and was a Samaritan; imputed his miracles to diabolical influence; branded his doctrine with blaſphemy, and ſpoke againſt his religion and worſhip, and wiſhed him ill, ſaying, When ſhall he die? they had a good-will to aſſaſſinate him privately, but upon mature deliberation they conſulted and determined to take what advantage they could againſt him, and deliver him up to the Roman governor; they feared ſhould he go on and ſucceed, through his doctrines and miracles, as he did, it would go ill with them, and they they concluded could he be brought to death, it would clearly appear to the common people that he was not the Meſſiah; though this was the very thing he came into the world for, and which he himſelf was very deſirous of; becauſe hereby, and hereby only, the ſalvation of his people could be brought about; and though this was a thing foretold in prophecy, yet it ſeems as if Chriſt's enemies the Jews, and Satan himſelf, were ignorant of it, and of its virtue and uſe to ſave men; however, though it was an ill wiſh in them it was well for us that he did die, though the conſequence is not as they wiſhed. And his name periſh? that is, the fame of his doctrine and miracles, the memory of him and his worthy deeds, particularly his goſpel, which ſo fully expreſſes the glory of his perſon and grace; yea, he himſelf, for they hoped that upon his death he would come into general diſgrace, that his name would never be mentioned but with reproach, that his goſpel would be no more preached, and that he would be accurſed of God and men: in all which they were ſadly diſappointed; for upon his reſurrection, from the dead, he had a name given him above every name; his memory became precious to thouſands; an ordinance was appointed to remember him to the end of the world in all his churches; his goſpel was ordered to be preached to all the world as it was, and he himſelf is bleſſed for evermore.

[r] ביום רעה in die mala, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Muſculus. [s] Vid. R. David Kimchium in loc. [t] הפכת verſaſti, Pagninus, Montanus; vertiſti, Vatablus; ita vertes, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth; δεμνια οι μεϛεθηκεν, Apollinarius. [u] לך tibi, Pagninus, Montanus, Cocceius. [w] Obtuli ſacrificium pro peccato, Guſſetius, Ebr. Comment. p. 249, 923.

℣. 6. And if he come to ſee me, &c.] Meaning any one of his enemies, when they came, as pretended, to pay him a friendly viſit. A late learned writer[w] interprets this of Abſalom, who viſited his father when he had the ſmall-pox, which he thinks after mentioned, of which his enemies expected he would die, when Abſalom pretended great concern for his life; though he, with others, were plotting againſt him, ſhould he live, to deſtroy him. He ſpeaketh vanity; lies and falſhoods, in a hypocritical manner, with a double heart; his mouth and his heart not agreeing together; ſee Matth. xxii. 16. His heart gathereth iniquity to itſelf; amaſſes to itſelf greater treaſures of wickedneſs ſtill, though that itſelf is deſperately wicked, and very wickedneſs: this is to be underſtood of the enemies of Chriſt obſerving his words and actions, and laying them up, with a wicked intention, againſt a proper time. When he goeth abroad, he telleth it; as in the inſtances concerning giving tribute to Cæſar, deſtroying the temple, and ſaying he was the Son of God, Matth. xxii. 17, 18. compared with Luke xxiii. 2. John ii. 19, 21. compared with Matth. xxvi. 60, 61. John v. 17, 18. compared with John xix. 5.

℣. 7. All that hate me, whiſper together againſt me, &c.] That is, they privately conſpired againſt him; ſee Matth. xxii. 15. John xi. 53. Matth. xxvi. 3, 4. Againſt me do they deviſe my hurt; not only to take away his name and credit, but his life.

℣. 8. An evil diſeaſe, ſay they, cleaveth faſt unto him, &c.] Not any bodily one, of which they might hope he would die; much leſs any foul diſeaſe, the diſeaſe of ſin; but, as the phraſe may be rendered, a word of Belial[x]; that is, a wicked charge or accuſation; a charge of ſin brought againſt him by the ſons of Belial, as of blaſphemy and ſedition, which they concluded would be faſtened upon him, and ſtick by him, and in which they ſhould ſucceed to their wiſhes; or elſe the ſhameful puniſhment, the death of the croſs inflicted on him, which they fancied would fix an indelible mark of infamy and ſcandal on him, ſince curſed is he that hangeth on a tree. And now that he lieth, let him riſe up no more; inaſmuch as he was dead, of which they had full proof, and was laid in the grave, his tomb watched, and the ſtone rolled to it ſealed; they thought all was ſafe, and it was all over with him, that he would never riſe again, as he had given out, and his diſciples uncapable of committing a fraud they afterwards accuſed them with: this, according to the above learned writer; ſee ℣. 6. was ſaid by Abſalom, as he thinks Ahithophel is the perſon deſigned in the following verſe.

℣. 9. Yea, mine own familiar friend, &c.] Or, the man of my peace[y]; who did live peaceably with him, and ought always to have done ſo; whom he treated as his friend, as the reſt of the apoſtles; calling him to that high office, and ordaining him to it, and qualifying him for it; and whom he called by the name of friend, when he came to betray him; Judas is meant. In whom I truſted; with the bag and the money in it, both for the ſuſtenance of his own family, the apoſtles, and for the relief of the poor, John xii. 6. and xiii. 29. Which did eat of my bread; of his bread in common with the reſt of the apoſtles; and who was eating with him when he gave the ſign who ſhould betray him; and who ſeems to have eat of the bread in the Lord's ſupper; even this ſame perſon hath lifted up his heel againſt me; by ſupplanting him, dealing hypocritically with him, and betraying him into the hands of his enemies: the metaphor is either taken from an unruly horſe throwing his rider, and then ungenerouſly ſpurning at him, and trampling on him; or from wreſtlers, who ſeek to ſupplant and trip up each other's heels; which ſhews the ingratitude, baſeneſs, and treachery of Judas; ſee John xiii. 18.

℣. 10. But thou, O Lord, be merciful unto me, and raiſe me up, &c.] Not from a bed of illneſs, nor from a ſtate of poverty and want; but from the dead: it was by the will of his divine Father that he ſuffered death, and it was to him he made ſatisfaction and reconciliation for the ſins of his people, by his ſufferings and death; and therefore it was but a reaſonable requeſt, that having done this, he ſhould be raiſed from the dead: beſides, his Father had promiſed it, and he had believed it; ſo that this prayer was a prayer of faith, founded upon a divine promiſe; and the reſurrection of Chriſt is for the moſt part aſcribed to God the Father, as his act; though not to the excluſion of the Son, who had power, as to lay down his life, ſo to take it up again; and though the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead is not only an act of power, but alſo of juſtice; he having paid his peoples debts, atoned for their ſins, and ſatisfied law and juſtice, it was but right and equitable that he ſhould be diſcharged from the priſon of the grave, and ſet free; yet here it is requeſted as an act of mercy, grace, and kindneſs; for by doing it, it would appear that his Father's wrath was taken away from him, and that he had turned himſelf from the fierceneſs of his anger to him, and that he was well pleaſed with his righteouſneſs and ſacrifice; beſides, it was giving him glory, as well as rolling away the reproach he lay under; and however, it was in mercy to his body the church, whom he repreſented, ſince it was for their juſtification; nay, their regeneration is influenced by it; and ſo is the reſurrection ſurrection of their bodies, of which Chriſt's reſurrection is the pledge and pattern. The end Chriſt had in view in making the requeſt follows. That I may requite them; not him, Judas, laſt mentioned; for juſtice purſued and overtook him; he deſtroyed himſelf, and was gone to his own place, before Chriſt's reſurrection from the dead; but them, the Jews, as a body; his enemies that ſpoke ill of him, wiſhed ill to him, conſpired againſt him, to take away his life, and did bring him to the duſt of death: and this his requital of them after his reſurrection, was either of good for evil, by ordering his diſciples to preach his goſpel, firſt at Jeruſalem, to thoſe very perſons who were concerned in his death, many of whom were converted, baptized, and added to the church; or of evil, for their evil to him, which had its accompliſhment in part, at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and will more fully at the day of judgment, when they that have pierced him ſhall ſee him come in the clouds of heaven.

[w] Delaney's Life of King David, vol. 2. p. 157, 158.

[x] דבר בליעל verbum Belijahal; Montanus, Muſculus, Cocceius, Gejerus.

[y] איש שלומי vir pacis meæ, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis.

℣. 11. By this I know that thou favoureſt me, &c.] Or delighteſt in me[z]; as he did, both as his Son and his ſervant; in his obedience, ſufferings, and death, whereby his counſels were accompliſhed, his covenant ratified, and the ſalvation of his people procured; and which delight and well-pleaſedneſs in him was the ground of his deliverance from the power of death and the grave; ſee Pſal. xviii. 19. and xxii. 8. the token by which Chriſt knew this, was, Becauſe mine enemy doth not triumph over me; Judas could not; he was too ſhort-lived, he was quickly taken off, and all the woes fell upon him, imprecated on him, Pſal. cix. 6—10. nor the Jews; for though they were highly delighted when they had faſtened him to the croſs, and when he was dead, and laid in the grave; yet they could not ſing their jubilee-ſong over him, until the third day was paſt; for they knew he had given out, that he ſhould riſe again the third day; on which day he did riſe, and his apoſtles preached that he was alive, and through him the reſurrection of the dead, to their great grief, vexation, and mortification: nor did Satan, the enemy of Chriſt, perſonal and myſtical, triumph over him; not in the wilderneſs, where, after he had tempted him, he was obliged to leave him; nor in the garden, and his agony there, where he was ſtrengthened by an angel; nor even on the croſs; for on that Chriſt himſelf triumphed over Satan and his principalities, whom he ſpoiled, and deſtroyed the devil and all his works; and, at his aſcenſion to heaven, led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men, in token of triumph, and went forth, in the miniſtration of the goſpel, conquering, and to conquer; turning men from the power of Satan, and cauſing his ſervants to triumph in him, whilſt they were in every place diffuſing the ſavour of his knowledge.

℣. 12. And as for me, thou upholdeſt me in mine integrity, &c.] In the innocence of his nature, being free from ſin original and actual; in the uprightneſs of his life and converſation before God and men; and in the perfection of his obedience, and ſacrifice, whereby he brought in a perfect righteouſneſs, made complete atonement, and obtained full ſalvation and redemption for his people: and, becauſe of all this, Jehovah the Father upheld him in his ſufferings, as man and Mediator, that he failed not, and was not diſcouraged: or rather the ſenſe is, that by ſeveral things which turned up in providence, as the diſagreement of the witneſſes, declaration of his judge, and the confeſſion of Judas his betrayer, he was cleared of the charges brought againſt him, and his innocence was maintained, and he upheld in it; but eſpecially this was done by raiſing him from the dead, when he was openly acquitted, diſcharged and juſtified, and declared to be the holy One of God, 1 Tim. iii. 16. Pſal. xvi. 10. And ſetteſt me before thy face for ever; after his reſurrection, he was introduced into the preſence of his Father, and was made glad with his countenance; where he ſits before him as the angel of his preſence, and appears in the preſence of God in the behalf of his people; is the Lamb in the midſt of the throne, as though he had been ſlain; where his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, are ever in view for their acceptance, and where he ever lives to make interceſſion for them; for here he will continue until the time of the reſtitution of all things.

℣. 13. Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] Which is ſaid, either by the Meſſiah, on account of the delight his Father had in him; the favour he had ſhewn him in raiſing him from the dead, maintaining his innocence, and exalting him at his own right-hand; and for all the bleſſings of grace the whole Iſrael of God enjoyed through him: or elſe by the church, who is meant by Iſrael, the Lord is the God of in a covenant-way; who hearing ſuch things done to her Lord and head, breaks out into an exclamation of praiſe, and aſcribes bleſſing and glory to God for them, which is due to him. From everlaſting, and to everlaſting; that is, throughout all ages, world without end, Eph. iii. 21. Amen, and Amen; which word, as Kimchi obſerves, ſignifies confirmation; and the doubling of it is for the greater confirmation of what is expreſſed. Here ends the firſt part of the book of pſalms, which is divided into five parts by the Jews[a].

PSALM XLII.

To the chief muſician, Maſchil, for the ſons of Korah.

OF the word Maſchil, ſee the note on the title of the 32d pſalm. Korah was he who was at the head of a conſpiracy againſt Moſes and Aaron, for which ſin the earth opened its mouth, and ſwallowed alive him and his company, and fire devoured two hundred and fifty more; the hiſtory of which is recorded in Numb. xvi. yet all his poſterity were not cut off, Numb. xxvi. 11. ſome were in David's time porters, or keepers of the gates of the tabernacle, and ſome were ſingers; ſee 1 Chron. vi. 33. and ix. 19. 2 Chron. xx. 19. and to the chief muſician was this pſalm directed for them to ſing; for they were not the authors of it, as ſome[b] have thought; but moſt probably David himſelf compoſed it; and it ſeems to have been written by him, not as perſonating the captives in Babylon, as Theodoret, but on his own account, when he was perſecuted by Saul, and driven out by men from abiding [z] חפצת בי complacuiſti in me, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; delectaris me, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius.

[a] Midraſh Tillim, fol. 2. 1. Kimchi præfat. in pſal. [b] So R. Moſes in Muis, Guſſetius, Ebr. Comment. p. 918, & others.

abiding in the Lord's inheritance, and was in a ſtrange land among the heathen, where he was reproached by them; and every thing in this pſalm agrees with his ſtate and condition; or rather, when he fled from his ſon Abſalom, and was in thoſe parts beyond Jordan, mentioned in this pſalm; ſee 2 Sam. xvii. 24—27. ſo the Syriac inſcription, the ſong which David ſung in the time of his perſecution, deſiring to return to Jeruſalem.

ℵ. 1. As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, &c.] Either through a natural thirſt that creature is ſaid to have; or through the heat of the ſummer-ſeaſon; and eſpecially when hunted by dogs, it betakes itſelf to rivers of water, partly to make its eſcape, and partly to extinguiſh its thirſt, and refreſh itſelf. The word here uſed denotes the cry of the hart, when in diſtreſs for water, and pants after it, and is peculiar to it; and the verb being of the feminine gender, hence the Septuagint render it the hind; and Kimchi conjectures, that the reaſon of it may be, becauſe the voice of the female may be ſtronger than that of the male; but the contrary is aſſerted by the philoſopher [c], who ſays, that the male harts cry much ſtronger than the females; and that the voice of the female is ſhort, but that of the male is long, or protracted. Schindler [d] gives three reaſons why theſe creatures are ſo deſirous of water; becauſe they were in deſart places, where water was wanting; and another, that being heated by deſtroying and eating ſerpents, they coveted water to refreſh themſelves; and the third, when followed by dogs, they betake themſelves into the water, and go into that for ſafety. So panteth my ſoul after thee, O God; being perſecuted by men, and deprived of the word and worſhip of God, which occaſioned a vehement deſire after communion with him in his houſe and ordinances: ſome render the words, as the field, or meadow deſires the ſhower, &c. [e] or thirſts after it when parched with drought; ſee Iſa. xxxv. 7. Pſal. lxiii. 1. and by theſe metaphors, one or the other, is expreſſed the pſalmiſt's violent and eager thirſt after the enjoyment of God in public worſhip.

ℵ. 2. My ſoul thirſteth for God, for the living God, &c.] Who is ſo called, in oppoſition to the idols of the Gentiles, which were lifeleſs ſtatues; and who is the author, giver, and maintainer of natural life; and who has promiſed and provided eternal life in his Son; and is himſelf the fountain of life, and the fountain of living waters, and a place of broad rivers and ſtreams; particularly his loving-kindneſs, which is better than life, is a pure river of water of life, the ſtreams whereof make glad the ſaints; and hence it is that the pſalmiſt thirſted after God, and the diſcoveries of his love; ſaying, When ſhall I come and appear before God? meaning not in heaven, as deſiring the beatific viſion; but in the tabernacle, where were the worſhip of God, and the ark, the ſymbol of the divine preſence, and where the Iſraelites appeared before him, even in Zion; ſee Pſal. lxxxiv. 7.

ℵ. 3. My tears have been my meat day and night, &c.] That is, he could not eat for ſorrow, like Hannah, 1 Sam. i. 7, 8. or whilſt he was eating tears fell in plenty, and they were as common, day and night, as his food, and mixed with it [f]; ſee Pſal. lxxx. 5. While they continually ſay unto me, his enemies the Philiſtines, Where is thy God? theirs were to be ſeen and pointed at, as the hoſt of heaven, the ſun, moon, and ſtars, and idols of gold, ſilver, braſs, wood and ſtone; wherefore they aſk where was his? but David's God was inviſible; he is in the heavens, and does what he pleaſes, Pſal. cxv. 2, 3. or the ſenſe is, that if there was ſuch a God, he believed in and profeſſed, and he was his ſervant, ſurely he would never have ſuffered him to fall into ſo much diſtreſs and calamity, but would have appeared for his relief and deliverance; and therefore tauntingly, and by way of reproach, aſk where he was.

ℵ. 4. When I remember theſe things, &c.] Either the reproaches of his enemies; or rather his paſt enjoyments of God in his houſe, he after makes mention of. I pour out my ſoul in me; that is, he had no life nor ſpirit in him, but was quite overwhelmed with diſtreſs and anguiſh; or he poured out his ſoul in prayer to God, that it might be with him as in times paſt. For I had gone with the multitude, I went with them to the houſe of God; the place of public worſhip, whither he had often gone with great pleaſure and delight; and which added thereto, there were many that went along with him; or whom he had cauſed to go [g], had brought along with him; which is the ſenſe of the word, only uſed here and in Iſa. xxxviii. 15. as Dr Hammond from R. Tanchum and Aben Walid, has ſhewn: a good man will not only attend divine worſhip himſelf, but will bring others with him; but now, he could neither go alone, nor in company, the remembrance of which greatly affected his mind; ſee Pſal. cxxxvii. 1. With the voice of joy and praiſe; the people ſinging pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs. With a multitude that kept holy-day; as eſpecially on the three great feſtivals in the year, the feaſts of paſſover, pentecoſt, and tabernacles, when all the males of Iſrael appeared before God together, and which was a large multitude; and a delightful ſight it was to behold them, when they were all engaged in religious worſhip at once.

ℵ. 5. Why art thou caſt down, O my ſoul? &c.] The pſalmiſt corrects himſelf, as being too much depreſſed in ſpirit with his preſent circumſtances, and expoſtulates with himſelf; adding, And why art thou diſquieted in me? which ſuggeſts, that the dejections of God's people are unreaſonable ones; ſin itſelf is no juſt cauſe and reaſon of them; for though it is very diſagreeable, loathſome, and abhorring, troubleſome and burdenſome to a ſpiritual man, and is ingenuouſly confeſſed, and heartily mourned over, and is matter of humiliation; yet no true reaſon of dejection; becauſe there is forgiveneſs of it with God; the blood of Chriſt has been ſhed for the remiſſion of it; it has been bore and done away by him; nor is there any condemnation for it to them that are in him; and though it rages, and threatens to get the aſcendant; yet it is promiſed it ſhall not have the dominion over the ſaints; neither the nature of it, being great, as committed againſt God himſelf, nor the multitude of ſins, nor the aggravated circumſtances of them, are juſt cauſes of dejection, ſince the blood of Chriſt cleanſes from all ſin; nor are Satan and his temptations; he is indeed an enemy, very powerful, ſubtle and terrible; he is the ſtrong man armed, the old ſerpent, and a roaring lion; and his temptations are very troubleſome and grieving; and it becomes the ſaints to be upon their guard againſt him and them; but they have no reaſon to be be caſt down on account hereof; for God, who is on the ſide of his people, is mightier than he; Chriſt is ſtronger than the ſtrong man armed, and the divine Spirit who is in them is greater than he that is in the world: Satan is under divine reſtraints, and can go no further in tempting than he is ſuffered, and his temptations are over-ruled for good; beſides, good armour is provided for the chriſtian to fight againſt him with, and in a ſhort time he will be bruiſed under his feet: nor are the hidings of God's face a ſufficient reaſon of dejection; for though ſuch a caſe is very diſtreſſing, and gives great trouble to thoſe that love the Lord; nor can they, nor does it become them to ſit eaſy and unconcerned in ſuch circumſtances, as they are great trials of faith and patience; yet it is the experience of the people of God in all ages: ſome good ends are anſwered hereby, as to bring ſaints to a ſenſe of ſins, which has deprived them of the divine preſence, to make them prize it the more when they have it, and to be careful of loſing it for the future. Beſides, the love of God continues the ſame when he hides and chides; and he will return again, and will not finally and totally forſake his people; and in a little while they ſhall be for ever with him, and ſee him as he is; and though by one providence or another they may be deprived for a while of the word, worſhip, and ordinances of God, he that provides a place for his church, and feeds and nouriſhes her in the wilderneſs, can make up the lack of ſuch enjoyments by his preſence and Spirit. The means and methods the pſalmiſt took to remove his dejections and diſquietudes of mind, are as follow. Hope thou in God; for the pardon of ſin; for which there is good ground of hope, and ſo no reaſon to be caſt down on account of it; for ſtrength againſt Satan's temptations, which is to be had in Chriſt, as well as righteouſneſs; and for the appearance of God, and the diſcoveries of his love, who has his ſet time to favour his people, and therefore to be hoped, and quietly waited for. Hope is of great uſe againſt caſtings-down; it is an helmet, an erecter of the head, which keeps it upright, and from bowing down: it is an anchor of the ſoul, ſure and ſtedfaſt, and is of great ſervice in the troubles of life, and againſt the fears of death. For I ſhall yet praiſe him for the help of his countenance; or the ſalvations of his countenance [h]; which implies that the pſalmiſt believed, notwithſtanding his preſent circumſtances, that he ſhould have ſalvation upon ſalvation; ſalvation of every kind; or a full and complete one, which ſhould ſpring, not from any merits of his, but from the free grace and favour of God, expreſſed in his gracious countenance towards him; and alſo intimates, that the light of his countenance would be ſalvation to him [i] now; and that his conſummate happineſs hereafter would lie in beholding his face for evermore: all which would give him occaſion and opportunity of praiſing the Lord. Now ſuch a faith and perſuaſion as this is a good antidote againſt dejections of ſoul, and diſquietude of mind; ſee Pſal. xxvii. 13.

[c] Ariſtot. Hiſt. Animal. l. 4. c. 11. [d] Lexic. Pentaglott. col. 68. ſo Kimchi. [e] Sept. & Symmachus apud Druſium. [f] — lachrymæque alimenta fuere, Ovid. Metamorph. l. 10. fab. 1. v. 75. [g] אדרם deducebam, Tigurine verſion; aſſumebam mihi illos, Michaelis; efficiebam eos in ſocietatem collectos ſocios eſſe mihi, Guſſetius, p. 180.

℣. 6. O my God, my ſoul is caſt down within me, &c.] Which the pſalmiſt repeats, partly to ſhew the greatneſs of his dejection, though he had not loſt his view of intereſt in God as his covenant-God; and partly to obſerve another method he made uſe of to remove his dejection and refreſh his ſpirits; and that was by calling to mind paſt experiences of divine goodneſs. Therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan; the country round about it, or rather beyond it; which was at the fartheſt parts of the land of Canaan, where David was obliged to flee, and where he had often met with God. And of the Hermonites; who inhabited the mountain of Hermon; or the Hermonian mountains, as the Targum; ſee Pſal. cxxxiii. 3. a mountain upon the border of the land of Iſrael eaſtward, and which was very high; Cocceius thinks the Geſhurites are meant; ſee 1 Sam. xxvii. 8. here alſo the Lord had appeared to him, and for him. And from the hill Mizar; or the little hill [k]; which might be ſo in compariſon of Hermon. The above interpreter thinks Zoar is meant, which Lot ſo called, Gen. xix. 20, 22. which was near Sodom and Gomorrah: Kimchi thinks it might be Zior, mentioned in Joſh. xv. 54. but be it what, or where it will, in this little hill David enjoyed the divine preſence; or was indulged with ſome remarkable favour; from all which he concludes, he had no juſt reaſon to be dejected and diſquieted in his mind: and right it is for the people of God to call to mind paſt experiences, and make mention of them; partly for the glory of divine grace, and to expreſs their gratitude to God, and their ſenſe of his goodneſs; and partly to chear and refreſh their own ſpirits, and prevent dejection and deſpondency: and delightful it is to call to mind, how, at ſuch a time, and in ſuch a place, the Lord was pleaſed to manifeſt his love, apply ſome gracious promiſe, or deliver from ſome ſore temptation or diſtreſs: all which muſt tend to encourage faith and hope. The Jewiſh writers differently interpret theſe words; Jarchi, of David's remembrance of the wonderful works God did for the people of Iſrael of old, in drying up the river Jordan, and giving them the Law on mount Sinai, a little hill, in compariſon of ſome others: Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, underſtand them as a reaſon of his dejection, when he remembered how the Iſraelites came from thoſe ſeveral parts to the ſolemn feaſts at Jeruſalem, which he was now deprived of; and the Targum paraphraſes them of the inhabitants of thoſe places, and of the people that received the Law on mount Sinai, remembring God; and ſo Arama thinks beyond Jordan is mentioned, becauſe the Law was given there; and by the hill Mizar he underſtands Sinai: and ſome chriſtian interpreters conſider them as a reaſon why David's ſoul was caſt down in him, he being in ſuch places as here mentioned, at a diſtance from his own houſe, from Jeruſalem, and the place of divine worſhip, and ſo render the words, becauſe that I remember thee, &c. [l]

℣. 7. Deep calleth unto deep at the noiſe of thy water-ſpouts, &c.] By which are meant afflictions, comparable to the deep waters of the ſea, for their multitude and overwhelming nature; ſee Pſal. lxix. 1, 2. Iſa. xliii. 2. theſe came pouring down, one after another, upon the pſalmiſt: as ſoon as one affliction was over, another came, as in the caſe of Job; which is ſignified by one calling to another, and were clamourous, troubleſome, and very grievous and diſtreſſing. All thy waves and and thy billows are gone over me; with which he ſeemed to be covered and overwhelmed, as a ſhip is at ſea. It may be obſerved, that the pſalmiſt calls afflictions God's water-ſpouts, and his waves and his billows; becauſe they are appointed, ſent ordered ordered, and over-ruled by him, and made to work for the good of his people: and now, though theſe might ſeem to be a juſt cauſe of dejection; yet they were not, as appears from the following verſe.

[h] ישועות פניו ſalutes faciei ipſius, Cocceius; ſo Michaelis. [i] Salutes ſunt facies ejus, De Dieu. [k] מצער מהר de monte modico, V. L. Muſculus; parvo, Pagninus, Vatablus; ſo Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [l] על—כן propterea quod, Tigurine verſion, Piſcator, Muis; quia, Noldius, p. 727, N° 1790.

℣. 8. Yet the Lord will command his loving-kindneſs in the day-time, &c.] Which is a tender affection in God towards his people, ſprings from his ſovereign will and pleaſure, is from everlaſting, is ever the ſame, never removes from them, and is better than life; the effects of which are all ſpiritual bleſſings, grace and glory: and this the Lord commands, when he ſends it forth with power, makes a clear manifeſtation, and home-application of it to them; when he commands his covenant, or beſtows covenant-bleſſings on them; when he commands his ſtrength, or gives them ſtrength to bear up under afflictions; when he commands deliverances for Jacob, or works ſalvation for them; and when he commands bleſſings temporal and ſpiritual on them, eſpecially life for evermore; ſee Pſal. cxi. 9. and lxviii. 29. and xliv. 4. and cxxxiii. 3. and this is done in the day-time; either, as ſome interpret it, in a fit and ſeaſonable time, in God's appointed time, who has his ſet time to favour his people, and ſhew his loving-kindneſs to them; or openly and publickly, ſo as themſelves and others may ſee the ſalvation of the Lord; or continually; for mercy, goodneſs, and loving-kindneſs, follow them all the days of their lives; yea, are from everlaſting to everlaſting: and theſe words may be read either in the paſt tenſe, as ſome do, yet the Lord hath commanded[m], &c. and ſo reſpect what had been, and relate to the former experiences and manifeſtations of the love of God, with which the pſalmiſt encourages himſelf under his preſent afflictions; or in the future, as in our verſion; and ſo they are an expreſſion of faith as to what would be hereafter, that the Lord would appear again, and ſhew him his face and favour. And in the night his ſong ſhall be with me; ſignifying hereby, that he ſtrongly believed he ſhould have occaſion of ſinging praiſe to God in the night-ſeaſon, though he was now in ſuch mournful circumſtances: he calls it his ſong; that is, the Lord's ſong; becauſe the matter of it are his loving-kindneſs, and the bleſſings ſpringing from it; becauſe the Lord himſelf is the ſubject of it; his perfections, his works, his ſalvation and glory; and becauſe he gives ſongs in the night, and puts them into the mouths of his people; ſee Iſa. xii. 2. Job xxxv. 10. and the pſalmiſt ſays it would be with him, in his heart, and in his mouth, and be his conſtant companion wherever he was, lying down, or riſing up; and that in the night; either figuratively underſtood of affliction and diſtreſs, out of which he would be delivered, and ſo be compaſſed about with ſongs of deliverance; or literally, it being a time of leiſure to call to mind the ſalvation and mercies of the day, and be thankful for them; ſee Pſal. lxxvii. 6. and cxix. 62. Acts xvi. 25. And my prayer unto the God of my life; natural, ſpiritual, and eternal; being the author, giver, and preſerver of each; and this is no inconſiderable mercy, to have ſuch a God to pray unto in a time of diſtreſs; as well as in a time of ſalvation, to go to, and make known requeſts with thankſgiving; which ſeems to be intended here, ſince it is joined with a ſong. Prayer and praiſe go together, the object of which are not lifeleſs idols, that cannot ſave; but the living God, who is a God hearing and anſwering prayer, and does not deſpiſe the prayer of the deſtitute. The prayer of the pſalmiſt follows.

℣. 9. I will ſay unto God my rock, &c.] A name frequently given to the eternal God, Father, Son, and Spirit, Deut. xxxii. 4, 31. 1 Cor. x. 4. 2 Sam. xxiii. 2, 3. ſee the note on Pſal. xviii. 2. Why haſt thou forgotten me? ſee the note on Pſal. xiii. 1. Why go I mourning becauſe of the oppreſſion of the enemy? meaning perhaps Saul; though it may be applied to any ſpiritual enemy, ſin, Satan, and the world; who are very oppreſſive and afflicting, and occaſion continual mourning to the children of God.

℣. 10. As with a ſword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me, &c] The reproaches of his enemies were grievous and cutting to him, as if a ſword pierced through the marrow in his bones, which being very ſenſible, gives exquiſite pain. There is a various reading here: ſome copies, as Vatablus obſerves, read ב in, or with, and others כ as, which ſeems to be the trueſt; and our tranſlators ſupply as to make the ſenſe, though they read with; but ſome[n] only read as; and the ſenſe is, the reproaches caſt upon the pſalmiſt were as a ſword cutting and killing; and theſe reproaches were as follow. While they ſay daily unto me, Where is thy God? ſee the note on ℣. 3.

℣. 11. Why art thou caſt down, O my ſoul? &c.] The ſame expoſtulation as in ℣. 5. and ſo is what follows, Why art thou diſquieted within me? and the ſame argument and means are made uſe of to remove dejection and diſquietude. Hope thou in God: for I ſhall yet praiſe him; ſee the note there; to which is added a new argument, taken from the grace and goodneſs of God, and covenant-intereſt in him. Who is the health of my countenance, and my God; as the bodily health of man is ſeen in the countenance, and for the moſt part to be judged of by it; ſo is the ſpiritual health of the ſaints, and which they have from the Lord; when he, as the Sun of righteouſneſs, ariſes upon them with healing in his wings, he, by his gracious preſence, makes their countenances chearful, fills them with joy unſpeakable and full of glory, and cauſes them to lift up their heads with an holy boldneſs and confidence, and without ſhame and fear: or as it may be rendered, who is the ſalvations of my countenance[o]; that is, who is, or will be the author of full and complete ſalvation to me; which will be ſo public and open, ſo clear and manifeſt, as to be beheld by myſelf and others; and this the pſalmiſt mentions, in order to remove his preſent dejections; and beſides, this God of ſalvation he believed was his covenant-God, and would be ſo even unto death; and therefore he had no juſt reaſon to be dejected and diſquieted.

PSALM XLIII.

THIS pſalm is without a title; but may well enough be thought to be one of David's: and the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, and Syriac verſions call it a pſalm of David, and the latter latter adds, when Jonathan told him that Saul intended to kill him; and certain it is, that it was wrote by the ſame perſon, at the ſame time, and upon the ſame occaſion as the preceding; ſeeing ſome of the ſame expreſſions are uſed in it; and ſome take this and the preceding to be but one pſalm, and this might be written with that on account of the rebellion of his ſon Abſalom.

[m] יצוה præcepit, Tigurine verſion; mandavit, Hammond; ſo Aben Ezra and others.
[n] כרצח ως σφαγην, Symmachus in Druſius; ut occiſio, Pagninus, Amama; ſo Aben Ezra interprets it.
[o] ישועת ſalutes, Pagninus, Montanus, Cocceius, Michaelis.

℣. 1. Judge me, O God, &c.] The Targum adds, with the judgment of truth; ſee Rom. ii. 2. And plead my cauſe; which was a righteous one; and therefore he could commit it to God to be tried and judged by him, and could put it into his hands to plead it for him; ſee the note on Pſal. xxxv. 1. Againſt an ungodly nation; meaning either the Philiſtines, among whom he was; or his own nation, when they joined his ſon Abſalom in rebellion againſt him: ſome underſtand it of the great numbers that were with Saul, when he was perſecuted by him. O deliver me from the deceitful and unjuſt man; either Abſalom, who, under pretence of a vow he had vowed in Hebron, got leave of David to go thither, and then engaged in a conſpiracy againſt him; or Ahithophel, who had been his friend and acquaintance, but now joined with Abſalom. It is true of Saul, who, under pretence of friendſhip, ſought his ruin, and to whom he expreſſed himſelf almoſt in the ſame words here uſed; ſee 1 Sam. xviii. 17, 25. and xxiv. 12, 15.

℣. 2. For thou art the God of my ſtrength, &c.] Who being the ſtrong and mighty God, was able to deliver and ſave him, as well as to plead his cauſe; and was the author and giver of ſtrength natural and ſpiritual to him; and was the ſtrength of his heart, life and ſalvation; and is a good reaſon why he committed his cauſe unto him. Why doſt thou caſt me off? This is the language of unbelief; it being what was not in reality, only in appearance: the pſalmiſt was ready to conclude he was caſt off and rejected of God, becauſe he was afflicted and left in a deſolate condition by him, and he did not immediately ariſe to his help and deliverance, and had withdrawn the light of his countenance from him; but God does not caſt off or reject any of his people; they always continue in his love, and in his covenant, and in the hands of his Son; they are always in his ſight and family, and ſhall never periſh eternally; and whoever caſts them off, or caſts them out, he will not. Why go I mourning becauſe of the oppreſſion of the enemy? ſee the note on Pſal. xlii. 9.

℣. 3. O ſend out thy light and thy truth, &c.] By light is meant, not the Law, as Arama; but rather, as ſome Jewiſh [p] interpreters underſtand it, the Meſſiah, the Sun of righteouſneſs, and light of the world; who is the author of all light, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal; and whoſe coming into the world is often ſignified by being ſent into it. The Spirit of God alſo is the enlightener of men, both at firſt converſion and afterwards, and is ſent down into their hearts as a comforter of them, by being the Spirit of adoption. The goſpel of Chriſt is a great and glorious light, which, with the Holy Ghoſt, is ſent down from heaven; though perhaps here rather may be meant the light of God's countenance, the diſcoveries of his favour and loving-kindneſs, which produce light, life, joy, peace, and comfort: and by truth may be meant, either Chriſt himſelf, who is the truth; or the goſpel, the word of truth; or rather, the faithfulneſs of God in the fulfilment of his promiſes; and ſo the words are a petition that God would ſhew forth his loving-kindneſs, and make good his word, which would be of the following uſe: Let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles; that is, to the place of public worſhip, where the tabernacle was, the hill where it was, which ſeems to be mount Zion; and is called holy; not that there was any real holineſs in it; only relative, becauſe of the worſhip of God in it: and the tabernacle is called tabernacles, becauſe of the holy place, and the moſt holy place in it; the one being the firſt, the other the ſecond tabernacle, as in Heb. ix. 2, 3. and this hill and tabernacles repreſented the church and ordinances of God, to which ſuch who are poſſeſſed of light and truth are led.

℣. 4. Then will I go unto the altar of God, &c.] Which was in the tabernacle, either of burnt-offerings, or of incenſe, there to offer up the ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving for mercies received. The altar under the goſpel diſpenſation is Chriſt, on which ſuch ſacrifices being offered, are acceptable to God, Heb. xiii. 10, 15. Unto God my exceeding joy; as over the mercy-ſeat, upon a throne of grace, and as his covenant-God; or this is exegetical of the altar, which is Chriſt, God over all, bleſſed for ever; and who is the object of the unſpeakable joy of his people, in his perſon, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation. Yea, upon the harp will I praiſe thee, O God, my God; the harp is a muſical inſtrument, uſed in that part of public worſhip which concerned the praiſe of God under the former diſpenſation, and was typical of that ſpiritual melody made in the hearts of God's people when they ſing his praiſe; ſee Rev. v. 8. and xiv. 2.

℣. 5. Why art thou caſt down, O my ſoul? &c.] See the notes on Pſal. xlii. 5, 11.

PSALM XLIV.

To the chief muſician, for the ſons of Korah, Maſchil.

IT is not certain who was the writer of this pſalm, nor when it was written, and to what time it belongs: ſome have thought it was compoſed by one of the Babyloniſh captivity, and that it gives an account of the church and people of God in thoſe times; but what is ſaid ℣. 17, 18, 20. does not ſeem to agree with Dan. ix. 5, 6, 10, 11, 13. It is moſt likely it was written by David; and to him the Targum aſcribes it; though it does not reſpect his times; ſince what is ſaid in ℣. 9—14. cannot agree with them; yet he being a prophet might, under a prophetic influence, ſpeak of future times, and perſonate the church in them. Some are of opinion, that he prophetically ſpeaks of the times of the Maccabees and of Antiochus, when the church and people of God ſuffered much for the true religion, and abode ſtedfaſt in it; ſo Theodoret: but rather, the whole may be applied to the times of the New Teſtament, ſince ℣. 22. is cited by the apoſtle Paul, Rom. viii. 36. and is applied to his times, and as deſcriptive of the ſuffering ſtate and condition of the church church then; and which ſeems to be the guide and key for the opening of the whole pſalm.

[p] Midraſh Tillim, & Jarchi in loc.

℣. 1. We have heard with our ears, O God, &c.] The church being in diſtreſs, calls to mind the paſt favours of God to his people, in order to encourage her faith and hope; and this expreſſion, delivered in ſuch a form, ſhews the clearneſs, evidence, and certainty of what was heard; and which was heard not only as a tradition from father to ſon; but being recorded in the writings of Moſes and the prophets, and theſe things read both in private and in public, were heard with the ear. Our fathers have told us, what works thou didſt in their days, in the times of old; ſuch as the ſigns and wonders in Egypt, the ſlaying of the firſt-born there, and the bringing of the people of Iſrael from thence with a mighty hand and ſtretched-out arm; which fathers were uſed to tell in the ears of their ſons, and ſons ſons; and of which there were memorials continued in future ages, which led children to aſk their parents the meaning of them; when they informed them of the wondrous works of providence done in former times, and by which means they were handed down from age to age; ſee Exod. x. 2. and xii. 26. and xiii. 8.

℣. 2. How thou didſt drive out the heathen with thy hand, &c.] Of power; that is, the Canaanites, as the Targum; the ſeven nations which inhabited the land of Canaan before the children of Iſrael came into it, Deut. vii. 1. And plantedſt them; not the Canaanites elſewhere; but, as the ſame Targum explains it, the houſe of Iſrael in their land; which, like a vine, was removed from one place, and planted in another; and the ſettlement of the children of Iſrael in the land of Canaan is frequently expreſſed by this metaphor, Exod. xv. 17. Pſal. lxxx. 8. Iſa. v. 1, 7. Jer. ii. 21. How thou didſt afflict the people; the Egyptians, according to Arama; rather the Canaaniti ſh nations, by wars and deſolating judgments. And caſt them out; that is, the ſame nations out of their land; though ſome render this clauſe, and didſt ſend them out; the captive Iſraelites, as Arama; or didſt propagate them [q]; meaning the people of Iſrael; who being like a vine planted in the land, ſent out its boughs and branches, and became very flouriſhing and fruitful; ſee Pſal. lxxx. 9—11. and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, and thou confirmedſt them; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt, agreeable to which is the Targum, thou haſt broken the nations, and haſt conſumed them; and that all this was the Lord's work, appears by what follows.

℣. 3. For they got not the land in poſſeſſion by their own ſword, &c.] There were many things which ſhew, that the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan was not of the Iſraelites themſelves, but of the Lord; as their paſſing over into it thro' Jordan as on dry land; the manner in which Jericho, the firſt city of it, was taken, and the ſmiting of the Iſraelites by the men of Ai. Neither did their own arm ſave them; from their enemies, and deliver them into their hands: they were too apt to aſcribe things to their own righteouſneſs, merit and power; but ſuch methods were taken by the Lord as to prevent ſuch attributions to themſelves; ſee Deut. viii. 16, 17. and ix. 3—6. But thy right-hand, and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance; the mighty power of God, his ſtretched-out arm in their favour, and which aroſe from his pure good-will to them. Becauſe thou hadſt a favour unto them; was well-pleaſed, and took delight in them; choſe them to be a ſpecial people to himſelf, above all people on the face of the earth.

℣. 4. Thou art my king, O God, &c.] Beſides the favours God had done for his people in time paſt, the church takes notice of her intereſt in God as her king, who was able to protect and defend her, and to deliver her out of all her diſtreſſes, in order the more to ſtrengthen her faith and hope in him; and claiming her intereſt in him, ſhe draws nigh to him with an holy boldneſs, and deſires him as a king, that, by a word of his, (for where the word of a king is, there is power) he would Command deliverances for Jacob; not literally, but myſtically underſtood; the ſpiritual Jacob, and people of God; all Iſraelites indeed, in whom there is no guile; meaning herſelf and members: the bleſſing deſired is deliverances, or ſalvations; ſo called, becauſe the deliverance or ſalvation the Lord commands, grants, and works out for his people, is of different kinds, both ſpiritual and temporal, and is a deliverance from various things; from ſin, Satan, the preſent evil world, wrath to come, and all enemies; and out of various temptations and afflictions, and which follow ſucceſſively one upon another; and at laſt it is complete and perfect.

℣. 5. Through thee will we puſh down our enemies, &c.] The Chaldee paraphraſe renders it, through the Word; the eſſential Word of God, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is the church's King and God, and has wrought out complete deliverance and ſalvation for his people; and he is the horn of ſalvation, by which, though weak in themſelves, they puſh down their enemies, which are many and mighty, and they are more than conquerors over them: the metaphor is taken from creatures puſhing with their horns thoſe that oppoſe them, and in defence of themſelves; and there ſeems to be an alluſion to Deut. xxxiii. 17. Through thy name will we tread them under that riſe up againſt us; in the name of the Lord the ſaints ſet up their banners, and in his name they come forth and fight with their ſpiritual enemies, that riſe up againſt them, as ſin, Satan, and wicked men; and in the name, and through the power of the Lord, they tread them down as mire in the ſtreets; and ere long Satan will be wholly bruiſed under them; and the antichriſtian party ſhall be trodden down by them, and be as aſhes under the ſoles of their feet; ſee Rom. xvi. 20. Mal. iv. 3.

℣. 6. For I will not truſt in my bow, &c.] In any carnal weapon, in any creature-help and aſſiſtance, or in an arm of fleſh, but in the word of the Lord, and in his name; ſee Pſal. xx. 7. Neither ſhall my ſword ſave me; that is, I will not aſcribe ſalvation to it; the church's weapons are not carnal but ſpiritual; not the ſword of the civil magiſtrate, but the ſword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; Chriſt's kingdom being not of this world, is not ſupported and defended by worldly means, or carnal weapons.

℣. 7. But thou haſt ſaved us from our enemies, &c.] Spiritual ones, and not we ourſelves; and therefore will not truſt in ourſelves, nor in any thing of ours, but in the Lord, and give him the glory of ſalvation. And haſt put them to ſhame that hated us; the men of the world, the ſeed of the ſerpent, and the ſerpent himſelf, when his works were deſtroyed, and his principalities and powers ſpoiled by Chriſt upon the croſs; hence the following boaſting of the Lord, and glorying in him.

℣. 8.

[q] יהשלחם has autem germinare feciſti, Tigurine verſion; propagaſti ipſos, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth; but rejected by Guſſetius, Ebr. Comment. p. 859.

℣. 8. In God we boaſt all the day long, &c.] Or as the Targum, in the Word of the Lord, in Chriſt, who is God over all, and who of God is made to his church and people wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption; ſo that there is always matter of glorying and boaſting in him. And praiſe thy name for ever and ever; in this world, as long as life continues; and in the other world to all eternity; both for the works of providence and of grace; for deliverances commanded, and for ſalvation from all enemies wrought out. Selah; of this word ſee the note on Pſal. iii. 2.

℣. 9. But thou haſt caſt off, &c.] This, with what follows to ℣. 17. deſcribe the deſolate and afflicted ſtate of the church under the goſpel-diſpenſation, in ſome parts and ages of it; and in the light in which it was viewed by the church, previous to the encouragement ſhe took from the conſideration of favours and benefits formerly beſtowed, and of her covenant-intereſt in God, related in the preceding verſes. She looked upon herſelf as caſt off, becauſe afflicted and perſecuted, and the Lord did not ariſe to her immediate help and deliverance; this may regard the ten perſecutions under Rome pagan; ſee the note on Pſal. xliii. 2. And put us to ſhame; before men, at the taking of the ark, as Arama; rather for their faith in God, and boaſting of him, when he did not appear for them, but ſuffered them to continue in their afflictions and diſtreſſes; which occaſioned their enemies to triumph over them, and ſay unto them, Where is your God? and alſo before God, who being forſaken by him, could not come before him with that holy boldneſs and confidence they were wont to do; ſee Cant. ii. 14. And goeſt not forth with our armies; as the generaliſſimo of them; ſee 1 Sam. viii. 20. Judg. iv. 14. not leading them forth, and going before them; not teaching their hands to war and their fingers to fight; nor inſpiring them with courage and valour; nor giving ſucceſs and victory to them as formerly; but ſeeing that Chriſtians, at leaſt in the firſt ages of chriſtianity, had no armies in a literal ſenſe, this may rather be underſtood of the non-ſucceſs of the goſpel in ſome period of it, and of the power and prevalence of antichriſt, the man of ſin. The goſpel-miniſtry is a warfare; the preachers of it are good ſoldiers of Chriſt under him; their weapons are not carnal, but ſpiritual; great ſucceſs attended the word in the firſt times of the goſpel; Chriſt went forth with his armies conquering and to conquer; and multitudes were ſubdued by him, and became ſubjects of him; but in ſome ages there has been but little ſucceſs, few have believed the report of the goſpel and been converted by it; Chriſt's miniſters have laboured in vain, Satan's kingdom, though attacked, yet not weakned, nor Chriſt's kingdom enlarged, but rather all the reverſe; antichriſt has been ſuffered, as to make war with the ſaints, ſo to prevail and overcome, and will do ſo, Rev. xiii. 4, 7. and xi. 7. but it will not be always the caſe, Chriſt will go forth with his armies, and make great conqueſts again, Rev. xi. 15. and xvii. 14. and xix. 11—16. this may refer to the wars of the Papiſts with the Waldenſes and Albigenſes, who were vanquiſhed by the former.

℣. 10. Thou makeſt us to turn back from the enemy, &c.] In the times of Eli, according to Arama; but may be underſtood of ſome of the viſible members of the church, and profeſſors of religion, not being valiant for the truth, and deſerting the cauſe of God and Chriſt, by reaſon of tribulation and perſecution ariſing becauſe of the word. And they which hate us ſpoil for themſelves; by ſeizing on the goods and ſubſtance of thoſe they perſecuted; enriching themſelves by confiſcating their eſtates and poſſeſſions to their own uſe; or by ſpoiling others of them, they deceived with their corrupt doctrines and ſoul-deſtroying principles, whereby they became ſlaves to the antichriſtian party; this may reſpect the ſame wars as before.

℣. 11. Thou haſt given us like ſheep appointed for meat, &c.] To be butchered, and then eaten as ſheep are; and therefore are called the flock of ſlaughter, Zech. xi. 4, 7. as the church was, not only under the ten perſecutions of Rome pagan, but through the butcheries and maſſacres of Rome papal; who have worried many of Chriſt's ſheep, have eat their fleſh and drank their blood, and have become drunken with it; it has been their meat and drink to perſecute the ſaints of the moſt High. And haſt ſcattered us among the heathen; the pagan world, as the firſt chriſtians were, who were ſcattered up and down in the gentile world every where; ſee 1 Pet. i. 1. or the papacy, who are ſometimes called Gentiles, Rev. xi. 2. becauſe much of the Gentile idolatry is introduced into the popiſh religion; and among theſe many of the true members of Chriſt and of his church have been carried captive and ſcattered; and ſuch will be found there a little before the deſtruction of Babylon, and will be called out from thence; ſee Rev. xiii. 10. and xviii. 4.

℣. 12. Thou ſelleſt thy people for nought, &c.] So God, when he is ſaid to deliver up his people into the hands of their enemies, is ſaid to ſell them to them; ſee Judg. ii. 14. and iii. 8. and iv. 2. and ſelling them for nought ſuggeſts, that in their apprehenſions he had no eſteem of them and value for them; juſt as men when they have any perſon or thing to diſpoſe of they have no regard unto, but chooſe to be rid of, will part with it for nothing; and as it follows, And doſt not increaſe thy wealth by their price; get nothing by the bargain. This muſt be underſtood after the manner of men, and in the opinion of the church, and not as in reality; no otherwiſe than as it has been true, that God has ſuffered ſome of his people to be in the bondage and ſlavery of myſtical Babylon, called Egypt, one part of whoſe wares and merchandiſes are ſlaves and ſouls of men, Rev. xi. 8. and xviii. 13.

℣. 13. Thou makeſt us a reproach to our neighbours, &c.] Which is the common lot of chriſtians: Chriſt and his apoſtles have given reaſon for the ſaints in all ages to expect it, and have fortified their minds to bear it patiently, yea to eſteem it an honour, and greater riches than the treaſures of the antichriſtian Egypt. A ſcorn and a deriſion to them that are round about us; being always repreſented as mean and deſpicable, and reckoned ignorant and accurſed, and as the filth of the world, and the offſcouring of all things.

℣. 14. Thou makeſt us a by-word among the heathen, &c.] Among the papiſts, as the Jews were among the Gentiles, Deut. xxviii. 37. Jer. xxiv. 9. calling them ſchiſmatics, heretics, fanatics, and what not. A ſhaking of the head among the people; by way of indignation, ſcorn and contempt; ſee Pſal. xxii. 7. and cix. 25.

℣. 15. My confuſion is continually before me, &c.] Meaning that which is the occaſion of it. And the ſhame of my face hath covered me; not by reaſon of ſin, which is often the cauſe of confuſion and ſhame in God's people; ſee Jer. iii. 25. Dan. ix. 8. but on account of what follows.

℣. 16.

℣. 16. For the voice of him that reproacheth and blaſphemeth, &c.] That is, Antichriſt, to whom a mouth ſpeaking blaſphemies has been given, and which he has opened in blaſphemy againſt God, attributing that to himſelf which belongs to God; blaſpheming his name, his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven; ſee Rev. xiii. 5, 6. 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. By reaſon of the enemy and avenger; which are very proper characters of Antichriſt, who is the enemy of Chriſt and of his people, and breathes out vengeance againſt them; as the ſame titles are alſo given to the ſcribes and phariſees, the implacable enemies of Chriſt, Pſal. viii. 2.

℣. 17. All this is come upon us, &c.] Not by chance, but according to the purpoſe and counſel of God; not for ſin, and as a puniſhment of it, but for Chriſt's ſake and his goſpel; for a profeſſion of faith in him, and for the trial of it. Yet have we not forgotten thee; not the being and perfections of God, on which they often meditated, eſpecially as diſplayed in the affair of ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt; nor the works of God, which were remembered to encourage faith and hope in their preſent circumſtances, ℣. 1. nor the benefits and favours beſtowed upon them by him; nor his word, worſhip and ordinances; their reproach, afflictions, and perſecutions, did not move them from the hope of the goſpel, and the ſervice of God. Neither have we dealt falſly in thy covenant; by diſbelieving their intereſt in God as their covenant-God; by diſregarding or not coming to and making uſe of Chriſt the mediator of it; and by calling in queſtion their intereſt in the bleſſings and promiſes of the covenant; for nothing can be more called dealing falſly in or with reſpect to the covenant of grace than unbelief about it; which remains firm and ſure notwithſtanding all the afflictions that may come on ſuch who are intereſted in it: moreover, as this may reſpect the formal exhibition of the covenant under the goſpel-diſpenſation, by the miniſtry of the word, and the adminiſtration of ordinances; the ſenſe may be, that though the church and her members met with ſo much reproach and perſecution from men, yet did not drop nor deny any of the truths of the goſpel, nor corrupt the ordinances of Chriſt, nor neglect an attendance on them; but were virgins, pure and incorrupt in doctrine and practice, and followed the Lamb whitherſoever he went.

℣. 18. Our heart is not turned back, &c.] To its original hardneſs, blindneſs, and bondage, to its former ſin and folly, to cheriſh, gratify, and fulfil its luſts and deſires; not from God, from love to him, faith in him, and deſires after him; nor from his worſhip and ſervice; their trials had no ſuch influence upon them as to cauſe them to apoſtatize from God, neither in heart, nor in action. Neither have our ſteps declined from thy way; from the way of his commandments, from the paths of holineſs, truth and faith, being directed and guided therein by the counſel of the Lord, and kept and preſerved by his power.

℣. 19. Though thou haſt ſore broken us in the place of dragons, &c.] Where men, comparable to dragons for their poiſon and cruelty, dwell; particularly in Rome, and the Roman juriſdiction, both pagan and papal, the ſeat of Satan the great red dragon, and of his wretched brood and offſpring, the beaſt, to whom he has given his power; here the ſaints and followers of Chriſt have been ſorely afflicted and perſecuted, and yet have held faſt the name of Chriſt, and not denied his faith; ſee Rev. ii. 13. and xii. 3. the wilderneſs is the habitation of dragons; and this is the name of the place where the church is ſaid to be in the times of the papacy, and where ſhe is fed and preſerved for a time, and times, and half a time, Rev. xii. 6, 14. And covered us with the ſhadow of death; as the former phraſe denotes the cruelty of the enemies of Chriſt's church and people, this their diſmal afflictions and forlorn ſtate and condition; ſee Pſal. xxiii. 4. Iſa. ix. 2. and may have ſome reſpect to the darkneſs of popery, when it was at the height, and the church of Chriſt was covered with it, there being very little appearances and breakings forth of goſpel-light any where. According to Arama, the place of dragons denotes the captivity of Egypt, which is the great dragon; and the ſhadow of death, he ſays, was a name of Egypt in ancient times, as ſay the Rabbins; and obſerves that ℣. 25. explains this; ſee Gen. iii. 14.

℣. 20. If we have forgotten the name of our God, &c.] As Antichriſt, and the antichriſtian party did in thoſe times, Dan. xi. 36, 37. Or ſtretched out our hands to a ſtrange God; as not to any of the heathen deities under the pagan perſecutions, ſo not to any images of gold, ſilver, braſs and wood, under the papal tyranny; not to the virgin Mary, nor to angels and ſaints departed; nor to the breaden God in the maſs, never heard of before; ſee Dan. xi. 38, 39. Rev. ix. 21.

℣. 21. Shall not God ſearch this out? &c.] Undoubtedly he would, was it ſo, and expoſe it, and puniſh for it; as he will the Balaamites and children of Jezebel, Rev. ii. 18—23. this ſeems to be an appeal to God for the truth of all that the church had ſaid concerning her ſtedfaſtneſs and integrity under the moſt trying exerciſes. For he knoweth the ſecrets of the heart; whether the heart is turned back, or there is any inclination to apoſtatize from God, or his name is forgotten in it; as well as whether in fact the hand has been ſtretched out, or prayer made to a ſtrange God, Jer. xvii. 9, 10.

℣. 22. Yea, for thy ſake are we killed all the day long, &c.] Theſe words are cited by the apoſtle Paul in Rom. viii. 36. and are applied to his times, ſhewing the then cloſe attachment of the ſaints to Chriſt, and their ſtrong love and affection for him; and they have the ſame ſenſe here, being an inſtance and proof of the church's integrity and faithfulneſs in the cauſe of God, amidſt the ſoreſt afflictions and perſecutions; for the truth of which ſhe appeals to the ſearcher of hearts; and had their accompliſhment in the ten perſecutions under the heathen emperors, and under the papal tyranny; and may be underſtood of their being threatned with death, being in danger of it, and expoſed unto it continually, 1 Cor. xv. 31. 2 Cor. iv. 10, 11, 12. or of their being in ſuch troubles and afflictions which may be called death, 2 Cor. i. 8, 9, 10. and xi. 23. or of the actual ſlaying them: and what was done to many of the members of the church, ſhe attributes to herſelf, becauſe of the union between them; and for the ſake of the worſhip of the true God, becauſe they would not worſhip the gods of the heathens, nor the image of the beaſt, multitudes of them were put to death; and that all the day long, and every day, and that for a long ſeries and courſe of time, or continually; and indeed ever ſince the goſpel-day or diſpenſation began, this killing work has been more or leſs, and it will continue during the reign of Antichriſt, until the meaſure of his iniquity is filled up, and the afflictions of the ſaints are accompliſhed.

compliſhed. We are counted as ſheep for the ſlaughter; or as ſheep of ſlaughter[q]; ſee Zech. xi. 4, 7. that is, either as ſheep to be ſlaughtered for food, their enemies delighting to eat their fleſh and drink their blood; ſee the note on ℣. 11. or for ſacrifice, they reckoning it doing God good ſervice to take away their lives, as though they ſacrificed a lamb or a ſheep unto him; and which, like ſheep, they have patiently endured: this is the account made of them, not by the Lord, in whoſe ſight their death is precious; nor by the ſaints, with whom their memory is dear; but by their furious perſecutors, among whom they are as ſheep among wolves; ſee 1 Cor. iv. 13.

℣. 23. Awake, why ſleepeſt thou, O Lord? &c.] Not that ſleep properly falls upon God: the keeper of Iſrael neither ſlumbers nor ſleeps; his eyes are always upon his people; he never withdraws them from them, and he watches over them night and day: but ſometimes he ſeems and is thought to be aſleep; as when wicked men flouriſh and triumph over the righteous, and go on in ſin with impunity; when their judgment ſeems to linger, and their damnation to ſlumber, though it does not; and when the ſaints are under ſore afflictions, and the Lord ſeems to diſregard them, and does not appear for their deliverance; and when things are as when the diſciples were in a ſtorm, and Chriſt was aſleep, to whom they ſaid, Careſt thou not that we periſh? And the Lord may be ſaid to awake, and it is what is here prayed for, when he ſtirs up himſelf and takes vengeance on his enemies, as he will ere long on Antichriſt and his followers; and when he takes in hand the cauſe and judgment of his people, and pleads it thoroughly, and delivers them out of the hands of all their oppreſſors, and gives them the dominion and kingdom under the whole heaven; ſee Iſa. li. 9. Pſalm lxxviii. 65, 66. and xxxv. 23. Ariſe; to revenge the blood of his people, and to have mercy on his Zion. Caſt us not off for ever; as he might ſeem to do, by ſuffering their enemies to triumph over them; but in reality he does not; much leſs with loathing and abhorrence, as the word[r] uſed ſignifies, ſince his church is his Hephzibah, in whom he delights; and ſtill leſs for ever, ſince his love to them is from everlaſting to everlaſting, and they ſhall be for ever with him; ſee the note on Pſalm xliii. 2.

℣. 24. Wherefore hideſt thou thy face? &c.] See Pſalm x. 1. and xiii. 1. And forgetteſt our affliction and our oppreſſion? Not that the Lord does really forget either the perſons of his people, which he cannot, ſince they are engraven on the palms of his hands, and a book of remembrance is written for them: nor the afflictions of his people; he knows their ſouls in adverſity; he chooſes them in the furnace of affliction; he makes all afflictions work together for good, and delivers out of them. But becauſe deliverance is not immediately wrought, and they ſometimes continue long under their afflictions and oppreſſions, they ſeem to be forgotten by him, as during the ten perſecutions and the long reign of Antichriſt.

℣. 25. For our ſoul is bowed down to the duſt, &c.] Which may ſignify great declenſion in ſpiritual things, much dejection of mind, and little exerciſe of grace, Pſalm cxix. 25. Lam. iii. 29. or a very low eſtate in temporals; ſubjection to their enemies; they ſetting their feet upon their necks, and obliging them to lick the duſt of them: and even it may ſignify nearneſs to death itſelf; ſee Joſh. x. 24. Iſa. xlix. 23. Pſalm xxii. 16. Our belly cleaveth to the earth; as perſons that lie proſtrate, being conquered and ſuppliants.

℣. 26. Ariſe for our help, &c.] Or, ariſe our help[s]. God is the help of his people, and he is a preſent help in time of trouble; and he is the only one; and he can help and does, when none elſe can. And redeem us for thy mercies-ſake; not for the ſake of her integrity and faithfulneſs; nor for her ſufferings for Chriſt's ſake; but for his grace and mercy ſake, which is the ſource and ſpring of redemption or deliverance, both temporal and ſpiritual; and to that the ſaints aſcribe it, and not to any merit of theirs, or works of righteouſneſs done by them.

PSALM XLV.

To the chief muſician upon Shoſhannim, for the ſons of Korah, Maſchil, a ſong of loves.

THERE are ſome things in this title we have met with already in other pſalms; as the direction, To the chief muſician, for the ſons of Korah; and one of its names, Maſchil. The word ſhoſhannim, according to Kimchi and Ben Melech, is the name of a muſical inſtrument, on which this pſalm was ſung; an inſtrument of ſix ſtrings, as Junius: but Aben Ezra thinks it was the firſt word of a ſong, to the tune of which it was ſung; though others are of opinion that it points at the perſons, the ſubjects of this pſalm, and may be rendered, Concerning Shoſhannim; that is, as the Targum interprets it, concerning thoſe that ſit in the ſanhedrim of Moſes; and Jarchi's note is, for the glory of the diſciples of the wiſe men, comparable to lilies; for ſo this word ſignifies, and may be tranſlated, concerning the lilies[t]; that is, concerning Chriſt and his church, who are manifeſtly the ſubject of this pſalm, and are compared to lilies, Cant. ii. 1, 2, 16. and v. 13. and vi. 2, 3. This pſalm is called a ſong of loves, an epithalamy or marriage-ſong, ſetting forth the mutual love of Chriſt and his church; or a ſong of the beloved ones[u], or friends; of Chriſt, who is the beloved and friend of his church; and the church, who is the beloved and friend of Chriſt; ſee Iſa. v. 1. and the word here uſed being in the feminine gender, ſome have ſupplied the word virgins, and render it thus, a ſong of the beloved virgins[w]; ſung by them on account of the marriage between Chriſt and his church, who are the companions of the bride, mentioned in ℣. 14. and friends and lovers of the bridegroom; ſee Cant. i. 3. John iii. 29. The writer of this pſalm is not mentioned; it was not written by the ſons of Korah, as ſay the Targum and Syriac verſion; but moſt probably by David, [q] בצאן טבחה ut pecus mactationis, Montanus, Vatablus; ſo Muſculus, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis, Ainſworth.

[r] אל תונח ne abjicias cum faſtidio, Gejerus.
[s] עזרתה לנו auxilium noſtrum, Cocceius, Gejerus.
[t] על ששנים de liliis, Tigurine verſion.
[u] שיר ידידת canticum amicarum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; amatarum, Cocceius.
[w] Dilectarum ſeu de dilectis Chriſto virginibus, Michaelis; a ſong of the well-beloved virgins, Ainſworth.

David, though not concerning his ſon Solomon, as ſome have thought; who, though wiſer than all men, is never ſaid to be fairer; nor was he a warrior, as the perſon is repreſented; nor was his throne and kingdom for ever and ever; nor he the object of worſhip; nor was his marriage with Pharaoh's daughter ſo commendable a thing; nor is ſhe ever praiſed, as the queen herein mentioned is: but the perſon who is ſpoken of is the Meſſiah, as is owned by ſeveral Jewiſh writers: the Targum interprets the ſecond verſe of the King Meſſiah; and Ben Melech ſays, he is meant by the King in ℣. 1. Aben Ezra obſerves, that this pſalm is ſaid concerning David, or concerning the Meſſiah his ſon, for ſo is his name, Ezek. xxxvii. 26. and Kimchi expreſly ſays, it is ſpoken concerning the Meſſiah; and Arama affirms, that all agree that it treats of him.

℣. 1. My heart is inditing a good matter, &c.] What is valuable and excellent, concerning the excellency of Chriſt's perſon, of his kingdom, of his love to the church, and of the church itſelf; what is pleaſant and delightful, comfortable, uſeful and profitable: this his heart was inditing; which ſhews that it was under the ſanctifying influences of the holy Spirit, and denotes the fervour of it; it boiling up, as the word [x] ſignifies; being heated by the fire of the divine Spirit, whereby it was hot within him, and cauſed him to ſpeak with his tongue; and alſo the abundance that was in it, it bubbling up [y], as ſome chooſe to render it; from whence this good matter flowed like water out of a fountain. I ſpeak of the things which I have made touching the king; the King Meſſiah; the King of the whole world, and of the kings of it, and of the ſaints in it; over whom he reigns in a ſpiritual manner, and in righteouſneſs; concerning whom this pſalm or poem was compoſed by David under divine inſpiration, and which he here delivers: My tongue is the pen of a ready writer; or as [z] one; ſuch an one as Ezra was, Ezra vii. 6. that writes ſwiftly and compendiouſly; ſuggeſting, that as he was full of matter, he freely communicated it, being moved by the holy Spirit, who ſpake by him, and whoſe word was in his tongue; which made him ſo ready and expert in this work. The alluſion is to ſcribes and notaries, and ſuch like perſons, that are extremely ready and ſwift in the uſe of the pen. The word for pen is derived either from עוף which ſignifies to fly [a], and from whence is a word uſed for a flying fowl; yet we are not to imagine that here it ſignifies a pen made of a bird's quill, as now in common uſe with us; for this did not obtain until many hundred years after David's time. It ſeems that Iſidore of Seville, who lived in the ſeventh century, is the firſt perſon that makes mention of penna, a pen, as made of the quill of a bird [b]; but rather the pen has its name in Hebrew, if from the above root, from the velocity of it, as in the hand of a ready writer; or rather it may be derived from עטה to ſharpen, in which ſenſe it ſeems to be uſed, Ezek. xxi. 15. and ſo a pen has its name from the ſharp point of it: for when the ancients wrote, or rather engraved on ſtone, braſs, lead and wood, they uſed a ſtyle or pen of iron; ſee Job xix. 24. Jer. xvii. 1. ſo when they wrote on tables of wood covered with wax, they uſed a kind of bodkin made of iron, braſs or bone; ſee the note on Hab. ii. 2. and when upon the rind and leaves of trees, and on papyrus and parchment, they made uſe of reeds, particularly the Egyptian calamus or reed; and the word here is tranſlated calamus or reed by the Targum, Septuagint, and all the Oriental verſions. Now as the Jews had occaſion frequently to copy out the book of the Law, and other writings of theirs, their ſcribes, at leaſt ſome of them, were very expert and dextrous at it; but whether the art of ſhort-hand was to any degree in uſe among them, is not certain, as it was in after-times among the Romans; when they uſed marks, ſigns and abbreviations, which ſeems to have laid the foundation of the above art, and had its riſe, as is ſaid, from Cicero himſelf, though ſome aſcribe it to Mecænas [c]: and in Martial's time it was brought to ſuch perfection, that, according to him, the hand could write ſwifter than a man could ſpeak [d].

℣. 2. Thou art fairer than the children of men, &c.] Here begins the pſalm, and this is an addreſs to the King-Meſſiah, the ſubject of it, commending him for his beauty and comelineſs; which is not to be underſtood of his divine beauty or his glory, as the only begotten of the Father, in which he is the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; for this admits of no compariſon, nor is the beauty of angels and men to be mentioned with it; but of the beauty of his human nature, both in body and ſoul, which being the immediate produce of the holy Spirit, and without ſin, and full of wiſdom, grace and holineſs, muſt tranſcend that of any or all the ſons of Adam. They are all deformed by ſin; and whatever ſpiritual beauty there is in any of them, they have it from Chriſt; they are comely through his comelineſs; the outward beauty of men is vain and deceitful, and ſoon periſhes; but Chriſt is ever the ſame, and he is eſteemed of by all that know him, as exceeding precious, altogether lovely, and tranſcendently excellent and glorious. The Hebrew word here uſed is doubled in its radicals, which denotes the exceeding great fairneſs and beauty of Chriſt, eſpecially as Mediator, and as full of grace and truth. It follows, Grace is poured into thy lips; by which is meant the matter of his ſpeech, or the goſpel preached by him; thoſe words of grace, as Kimchi on the text expreſſes himſelf; or gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth, Luke iv. 22. The goſpel of the grace of God was given him to preach; it was put into his mouth, and that in great abundance; it was given at ſundry times and in divers manners, and by piece-meal to the prophets before him; but it was poured into his lips, and he was abundantly qualified for preaching it, by having the Spirit without meaſure given him; and ſo was poured out in a graceful manner, with great authority, and as never man before him ſpake, in doctrines of grace, gracious invitations, precious promiſes, excellent prayers, and even words of eternal life; ſee Cant. v. 13. Therefore God hath bleſſed thee for ever; or, becauſe [e] God hath bleſſed thee thee for ever; in his human nature, with the grace of union to the Son of God, and with all the gifts and graces of the Spirit of God; and as Mediator, with all ſpiritual bleſſings, with grace and glory for his people. Hence all his comelineſs, grace and gracefulneſs.

[x] רחש ebullit, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth. Munſter. [y] Eructavit, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Muſculus, [z] So the Targum, Tigurine verſion, Gejerus, & Michaelis. [a] Vid. Kimchi Sepher Shoraſh. rad. עוף. [b] Origin. l. 6. c. 13. [c] Vid. Kipping. Antiq. Roman. l. 2. c. 4. p. 554. [d] Currant verba licet, manus eſt velociter illis: nondum lingua ſuum, dextra peregit opus, Martial. Epigr. l. 14. ep. 189. of the origin of ſhort-hand with the Romans, and amongſt us, with other curious things concerning writing, and the matter and inſtruments of it, ſee a learned treatiſe of Mr Maſſey's, called, The origin and progreſs of Letters, p. 144, printed 1763. [e] על־כן eo quid, Tigurine verſion; propterea quod, Muſculus, Piſcator; quia, Gejerus.

℣. 3. Gird thy ſword upon thy thigh, O moſt mighty, &c.] As Chriſt is, the mighty God, even the Almighty, and which appears by his works of creation and providence; by the redemption of his people; by his care and government of them; by ſuccouring them under all their temptations and afflictions; by ſtrengthning them for every ſervice, duty and ſuffering; by pleading their cauſe, and ſupplying their wants; by preſerving them to his kingdom and glory; by raiſing them from the dead at the laſt day, and by introducing them into the poſſeſſion of the heavenly inheritance. This mighty One is called upon to gird on his ſword; by which is meant either the ſword of the Spirit, the word of God; which is ſharp in convincing of ſin, reproving for it, and threatning on account of it, as well as in refuting error and hereſy; and a two-edged one, conſiſting of Law and Goſpel, and which Chriſt made uſe of to great purpoſe, againſt Satan in the wilderneſs, and againſt the Scribes and Phariſees; and which he will make further uſe of in the latter day, againſt the man of ſin, and his followers. Or elſe the power of Chriſt, which, as the leader and commander of his people, and the captain of their ſalvation, is called upon to exert, by preparing to engage with, and by deſtroying his and their enemies; and which he did put forth when the year of the redeemed was come, which was the day of vengeance in his heart; when he combated with and deſtroyed Satan, and ſpoiled his principalities and powers; when he aboliſhed death itſelf, and took away ſin the ſting of it, and the law, the ſtrength of ſin; overcame the world, and delivered his people from it, and out of the hand of every enemy. It is added, with thy glory and thy majeſty; which may be connected either with the phraſe and moſt mighty, and ſo be expreſſive of the glory and majeſty of Chriſt, as the mighty God; or with his ſword, as an emblem of his authority and majeſty as a King, and may denote the glory of his goſpel and of his power; or may point at the end of his girding his ſword upon his thigh, which was to ſhew forth the glory of his majeſty, or to obtain honour and glory: though the word gird may be ſupplied and repeated, and ſo make a diſtinct propoſition, gird with thy glory and thy majeſty; which was done when he was raiſed from the dead, and had glory given him; was crowned with it, and had the glory put upon him he had with his Father before the world was.

℣. 4. And in thy majeſty ride proſperouſly, &c.] Not literally, as was propheſied of him he ſhould, and as he did, Zech. ix. 9. Matt. xxi. 7, 9, 16. but myſtically and ſpiritually, either in the chariots of angels up to heaven, Pſalm lxviii. 17, 18. or on the white horſe of the goſpel, with his bow and arrows after-mentioned, conquering and to conquer, Rev. vi. 2. and where he rides in his majeſty, ſhewing forth his glory both as a divine perſon and as Mediator; and which is very conſpicuous in the goſpel, and the miniſtry of it; and alſo proſperouſly, as he did in the firſt preaching of the word by the apoſtles, when it was made the power of God to ſalvation to multitudes, and the Lord cauſed them to triumph in Chriſt every where; and as he will in the latter day, when the Jews will be converted, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles brought in. Becauſe of truth, and meekneſs, and righteouſneſs; either becauſe he himſelf is truth, the truth of all types, promiſes, prophecies and doctrines; or becauſe of the goſpel of truth which comes by him; or on account of his truth and faithfulneſs in fulfilling his own engagements, and the promiſes of his Father: and becauſe of the meekneſs which was ſo apparent in him, in taking upon him the form of a ſervant; in his carriage to ſinners, and converſation with them; in miniſtring to his diſciples; in his conduct towards his enemies; and in ſeeking not his own glory, but his Father's: and becauſe of righteouſneſs, the holineſs of his nature, the purity of his life and actions; and becauſe of the righteouſneſs he is the author of to his people, and of his righteous adminiſtration of his offices, eſpecially as a King. And thy right hand ſhall teach thee terrible things; or thy power, which the right hand is a ſymbol of, ſhall perform terrible things; as it did in the work of redemption, by conquering and deſtroying the enemies of his people, and of himſelf; and as it does in the converſion of men, which makes terrible work in their conſciences, as the inſtances of the three thouſand, of Saul, and of the jailor ſhew; and as it has in his judgments on his enemies the Jews, in the utter ruin of their nation, city and temple; and will do on all the antichriſtian powers in the latter day. The Targum paraphraſes it, "The Lord ſhall teach thee to do terrible things "with thy right hand[f]."

℣. 5. Thine arrows are ſharp in the heart of the king's enemies, &c.] Meaning either the Jews, who were the implacable enemies of Chriſt, and who would not have him to reign over them; in the midſt of whom were ſent his arrows, of the ſword, famine and peſtilence, and which were very ſharp, and made ſad havock among them, and cauſed ſuch a time of tribulation as was not before, or has been ſince, Matt. xxiv. 21. or elſe the doctrines of the goſpel. The ſcriptures are the quiver out of which they are taken; the goſpel is the bow into which they are put, and out of which they are ſhot; and miniſters are the archers that draw the bow at a venture and ſhoot them; and which are compared to arrows for their ſwift, ſudden and ſecret motion, and for their piercing and penetrating power and efficacy: and theſe are Chriſt's, which he is the author of, and which he makes uſe of to good purpoſe, by ſtriking the hearts of his people with them, who in their ſtate of unregeneracy are enemies to him; which appears by their wicked works, and as they were when he died for them, and reconciled them to God; by means of which arrows fixed in them, and with which their hearts are pricked and wounded, they ſubmit unto him, ſignified by the next clauſe: whereby the people fall under thee; acknowledge themſelves ſinners; fall down at his feet; humbly implore his grace and mercy; ſubmit to his righteouſneſs; depend on him alone for ſalvation; adore him, and give him the glory of it, as well as become ſubject to his laws and ordinances. This is to be underſtood of thoſe who are God's covenant-people, whom he has given to Chriſt, and he has redeemed by his blood; and particularly the Gentiles, who were not a people, but now openly are, in diſtinction from the Jews, the enemies of the King-Meſſiah.

℣. 6.

[f] Dextra mihi Deus, &c. Virgil. Æneid. 10. prope finem.

℣. 6. Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, &c.] This verſe and the following are cited in Heb. i. 8, 9. and applied to the Son of God, the ſecond perſon in the Trinity; and therefore are not an apoſtrophe to the Father, as ſome have ſaid; nor will they bear to be rendered, thy throne is the throne of God, or thy throne is God; or be ſupplied thus, God ſhall eſtabliſh thy throne. But they are ſpoken of the Son of God, who is truly and properly God, the true God and eternal Life; as appears by the names by which he is called, as Jehovah, and the like; by his having all divine perfections in him; by the works which he has wrought, and by the worſhip which is given unto him; and to whom dominion is aſcribed, of which the throne is an emblem, Gen. xli. 40. And this his government is either general, over angels, good and bad, and over men, even wicked men, and over the greateſt among men, the kings of the earth; or ſpecial, over his own church and people, and which is exerciſed by his Spirit and grace in them; by his word and ordinances among them; and which will be in a glorious manner in the latter day; and in heaven, though not in the ſame manner as now, and that to all eternity: for to this government duration for ever and ever is attributed; Chriſt will have no ſucceſſor, he will die no more; nor can his government be ſubverted or taken out of his hands, or he be removed from his throne by any of his enemies, or by all of them; and though his kingdom will be delivered up to the Father, it will not ceaſe, it is an everlaſting one. The ſceptre of thy kingdom is a right ſceptre; meaning either the goſpel, which is the golden ſceptre of mercy and grace, ſtretched out and held forth for the encouragement of ſenſible ſinners; and is a ſceptre of righteouſneſs, as it directs to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt for juſtification, and encourages works of righteouſneſs to be done by men: or rather the righteous adminiſtration of Chriſt's government is meant, the ſceptre being an emblem of dominion and government, Gen. xlix. 10. Num. xxiv. 17.

℣. 7. Thou loveſt righteouſneſs, &c.] Either righteous perſons, whom his countenance beholds, on whom his eyes are, and from whom they are never withdrawn, and with whom he is exceedingly delighted: or righteous things; a righteous adminiſtration of government; faithfulneſs and integrity in whatſoever he is intruſted with, or appointed to by his Father; all righteous actions which the law requires, as appeared in the whole courſe of his life; and by working out a righteouſneſs for his people, and by encouraging them in works of righteouſneſs; and as alſo will appear by judging the world in righteouſneſs at the laſt day, and by giving the crown of righteouſneſs to his righteous ones. And hateſt wickedneſs; which was manifeſt not only by his inveighing againſt it and dehorting from it, and by his ſeverity exerciſed towards delinquents; but by ſuffering for it, and aboliſhing it, and by chaſtizing his own people on account of it. Therefore God, thy God; or becauſe[g] God, thy God; who is the God of Chriſt, as Chriſt is man; who prepared and formed his human nature, ſupported it in ſuffering, and glorified it, and to whom Chriſt prayed, and whom he believed in, loved and obeyed as ſuch: Hath anointed thee with the oil of gladneſs above thy fellows; who though he is called God, ℣. 6. and is truly ſo, yet was not anointed as ſuch, but as man and Mediator, to the office of Prophet, Prieſt and King; and not with material oil, but with the holy Ghoſt, his gifts and graces; ſee Acts x. 38. called the oil of gladneſs, in alluſion to the uſe of oil at feaſts and weddings, for the delight and refreſhment of gueſts, and particularly of the oil of lilies, oleum ſuſinum, ſo ſome[h] tranſlate it; well known to the Hebrews, who inhabited Syria and Paleſtine, where red lilies grew, of which this was made, and had in great eſteem; and becauſe of its effects in the human nature of Chriſt, filling it with alacrity and chearfulneſs to go through the work he came about. This unction refers to the time of his conception and birth, and alſo to the time of his baptiſm; and the phraſe, above thy fellows, denotes the abundance of the Spirit's grace, his having it without meaſure, and in a tranſcendent manner to any of the ſons of men, even his own people; for theſe, and not angels, nor the princes of the earth are meant, neither of which are his fellows; but the ſaints, who are of the ſame nature with him, of the ſame family he is the head of, of the ſame dignity through him, being made kings and prieſts by him, partakers of the ſame Spirit and grace; and will be companions with him, and ſit on the ſame throne with him to all eternity. The Targum, in the king of Spain's Bible, begins the verſe thus; "But thou, O King-Meſſiah, becauſe thou "loveſt, &c."

℣. 8. All thy garments ſmell of myrrh, and aloes, and caſſia, &c.] Either his human nature, as anointed with the oil of gladneſs, and filled with the graces of the Spirit, ſignified by the holy anointing oil in the tabernacle, of which the things mentioned were ingredients, Exod. xxx. 23, 24. or the garments of ſalvation and robe of righteouſneſs, wrought out by him for his people, which are well-pleaſing and acceptable to his Father, and of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour, being agreeable to his law and juſtice; and alſo to himſelf, as they are put upon his people; ſee Cant. iv. 11. And likewiſe to them who rejoice at being clothed with them, and deſire to be found in them: or elſe his people themſelves, who are ſometimes compared to a clothing and to garments, Iſa. xlix. 18. whoſe perſons are to God as the ſmell of a field, whom the Lord has bleſſed; and whoſe ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe are ſweet odours to him, through the mediation of his Son. Out of the ivory palaces; ſee Cant. vii. 4. 1 Kings xxii. 39. Amos iii. 15. meaning the places from whence theſe garments were taken, the wardrobe; or from whence Chriſt came, and where he appears; as heaven, the palace of the great King, from whence he came down, whither he is gone, and from whence he is expected again; and the human nature of Chriſt, in which he tabernacled on earth, and was pure and clear from ſin; and his churches, which are his temples and palaces, where he grants his preſence. Or it may be rendered, more than the ivory palaces[i], and ſo be expreſſive of the excellency of Chriſt's garments above them; and denote the purity of his human nature, the ſpotleſsneſs of his righteouſneſs, and the comelineſs of his people. Whereby they have made thee glad; or, wherein or from whence[k]; in which palaces the churches, the ſaints make Chriſt glad, by ſpeaking of his glory; by aſcribing glory to him; and by the exerciſe of grace upon him, with which his heart

[g] על–כן propterea quod, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus, Piſcator, Gejerus; quia, Rivet. Noldius, p. 727, N° 1730.
[h] Vid. Schacchi Elæochriſm. l. 1. c. 27, & 28.
[i] מן היבלי שן præ palatiis eburneis, Cocceius, Gejerus.
[k] מנ׳ unde, Montanus, Muſculus, Muis, Noldius, p. 629, N° 1664.

heart is raviſhed, Cant. iv. 9, 10, 11. Or for which [l]; garments of ſalvation, and robe of righteouſneſs; they being clothed with them, and rejoicing in them, cauſe joy and gladneſs in Chriſt: or more than they, or theirs that make thee glad [m]; meaning his fellows and their garments, his being more odorous than theirs.

℣. 9. Kings daughters were among thy honourable women, &c.] Or maids of honour [n]; who filled and adorned the King's court, and made a ſplendid appearance there, the ſame with the virgins, the companions of the bride, in ℣. 14. and deſign truly gracious ſouls, believers in Chriſt, who are his precious ones [o], as the word may be rendered; the excellent in the earth, in whom is all his delight; the precious ſons of Zion, comparable to fine gold; his portion, his jewels, his peculiar treaſure, and the apple of his eye: and ſince they have been precious to him, they have been honourable, as they are, both by birth and marriage, being born of God, and eſpouſed to Chriſt; by their character, kings and prieſts; and by their company being among princes, and eſpecially by their having communion with Father, Son, and Spirit: and among theſe are kings daughters; yea, they are all of them the ſons and daughters of the King of kings; not by their firſt birth, by which they were mean, baſe, and diſhonourable, wretched and miſerable, and children of wrath, as others; but by their ſecond birth, or regeneration, through being born from above, and of God, to an incorruptible inheritance; and ſo are clothed and fed like the daughters of kings, and have the attendance of ſuch, angels to wait upon them and guard them; and through adopting grace, which regeneration is the evidence of, by virtue of which ſome of the children of men become the ſons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty; and through their marriage to the King's Son, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt: the words may be rendered, Kings daughters were in thy precious things [p]; that is, were arrayed with them; meaning either the graces of the Spirit, comparable to gems, pearls, jewels, and precious ſtones; ſee Cant. i. 10. or elſe the rich robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and garments of ſalvation, with which believers being clothed, are as a bridegroom decked with ornaments, and as a bride adorned with jewels, Iſa. lxi. 10. and this agrees with what follows. Upon thy right-hand did ſtand the queen in gold of Ophir; by whom is meant the church, whoſe title is a queen, being the bride, the Lamb's wife: wherefore, becauſe he is King, ſhe is queen; for this title ſhe has, not of herſelf; it is founded not in her own right, but upon her relation to Chriſt, being married to him; and ſo is expreſſive of relation to him, union with him, and of privilege and dignity through him; ſhe ſharing with him in all he has, even in his kingdom and government, reigning with him, and on the ſame throne: her being on his right-hand, ſhews the honour ſhe is advanced unto; yet ſtanding may denote ſubjection to him as her Lord and head; and being ſo cloſe by him, may ſuggeſt her fidelity and inviolable attachment to him, and ſtrict adherence to his perſon, cauſe and intereſt; as well as her protection from him, being held and upheld by his right-hand; and her reception of favours from thence, and her enjoyment of his preſence, at whoſe right-hand are pleaſures for evermore. Her dreſs is gold of Ophir; a place famous for gold, 1 Kings ix. 28. ſee the note there; with which the cloaths of great perſonages uſed to be embroidered; ſo Eſther is ſaid [q] to put on her royal apparel, adorned with the good gold of Ophir: here it means, that the queen's, or church's clothing, was of wrought gold, as in ℣. 13. and intends the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, with which ſhe is arrayed, comparable to it for its richneſs, purity, luſtre, glory, and duration.

℣. 10. Hearken, O daughter, and conſider, and incline thine ear, &c.] Theſe words are either ſpoken by the prophet, the author of the pſalm; or by the King, the bridegroom himſelf; or, as others think, by Jehovah the Father, whoſe daughter the church is; unleſs it ſhould be rather thought to be an addreſs of the honourable women, the King's daughters, the virgins and companions of the bride, delivered by them to her under the character of the daughter of Zion, the King's daughter, as ſhe is called, ℣. 13. to hearken, incline her ear, and liſten to her Lord and King, to his goſpel, and the doctrines of it, which are his voice and words, and to all his precepts and commands; and to conſider, ſee, and behold the goodneſs of God unto her, the greatneſs, excellencies and glories of her huſband; to look to him by faith, as he is held forth in the word and ordinances, and to him only, and that conſtantly, which is well-pleaſing to him. Forget alſo thine own people, and thy father's houſe; Chriſt is to be preferred before natural relations; converted perſons are not to have fellowſhip with carnal men, though ever ſo nearly related; former ſuperſtitions, whether Jewiſh or heatheniſh, are to be buried in forgetfulneſs; ſinful ſelf, and righteous ſelf, are to be denied for Chriſt's ſake; and the world, and all things in it, are to be treated with neglect and contempt by ſuch who cleave to him. The Targum interprets this of the congregation of Iſrael hearing the Law, beholding the wonderful works of God, and forgetting the idolatrous practices of their anceſtors.

℣. 11. So ſhall the King greatly deſire thy beauty, &c.] Which lies in the comelineſs or righteouſneſs of Chriſt put upon her; in the holineſs of Chriſt reckoned to her; in being waſhed from all ſin in the blood of Chriſt; in the graces of the Spirit, being implanted in her, in which the beauty of holineſs lies; in the ſalvation ſhe is intereſted in, and beautified with; in enjoying the order and ordinances of Chriſt's houſe, and in having the preſence of God and Chriſt with her: and this beauty is not natural, nor acquired by her, but what is given her; it is not an outward, but an inward beauty; nor is it fictitious, but real; it is perfect through the comelineſs of her Lord upon her; and it is durable as the olive tree: and this is greatly deſired by Chriſt, who delights in her, and to behold her countenance; ſeeks after her company, and will have her where he is, that ſhe may behold his glory, and he may behold her beauty. For he is thy Lord; not only by creation, but by redemption, and in right of marriage, as well as on account of other relations he ſtands in to her, as Father, Head, King, and Maſter; and it is her privilege that he is her Lord, as well as her duty to own the relation; ſince, though he is a ſovereign Lord, he is no tyrannical one, but governs with gentleneſs, and he has all power to protect her, and all fulneſs to ſupply her wants; and on account of his being her Huſband, Lord, and Head, he has a right of worſhip from her, as follows. And worſhip thou him; both

[l] Propter quod, Muis.
[m] Præ iis, Junius & Tremellius; magis quam eorum, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth
[n] ביקרותיך inter nobiles tuas, Tigurine verſion. tibus tuis, Montanus, Gejerus; ſo ſome in Vatablus.
[o] Heb. pretioſas, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth.
[p] In pretioſitatibus
[q] Targum Sheni in Eſther v. 1.

both internally, by the exerciſe of faith, hope and love upon him; and externally, by praying to him, praiſing of him, and attending on all his ordinances, and doing every thing in a religious way, in his name, according to his word, and by his authority; and ſuch worſhip ſhould be in ſpirit and in truth, in ſincerity, and without hypocriſy, in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, and with reverence and godly fear.

ℵ.12. And the daughter of Tyre ſhall be there with a gift, &c.] That is, among the honourable women in the king's court and palace: it is a prophecy of the converſion of the Tyrians, and their admiſſion into a goſpel church ſtate, which had its accompliſhment in the times of Chriſt and his apoſtles, Mark vii. 24. and iii. 8. Acts xxi. 3, 4. compare with this Pſal. lxxxvii. 4. and though Tyre is only mentioned, it being, as Kimchi on this place obſerves, near to the land of Judea; yet all other Gentiles are meant, to whom the goſpel ſhould come to the converſion of them, and thereby become members of churches; where they are, with a gift, of themſelves to the churches; ſee 2 Cor. viii. 5. joining themſelves to them, to walk with them, and ſerve the Lord with one conſent; and with the gift or offering of praiſe and thankſgiving, for the grace and bleſſings of it beſtowed upon them; and with a free donation out of their ſubſtance, to ſupport a goſpel-church-ſtate, its miniſters, and the intereſt of religion; ſee Iſa. xxiii. 18. the alluſion may be to Exod. xxiii. 15. Even the rich among the people ſhall intreat thy favour; either ſuch as are rich, in a literal ſenſe, both among the inhabitants of Tyre, who were a very wealthy people, Iſa. xxiii. 8. and among other Gentiles, eſpecially in the latter day, when kings ſhall be the church's nurſing fathers, and bow down to her, Iſa. xlix. 23. or ſuch who are ſo in a ſpiritual ſenſe, enriched by Chriſt with all ſpiritual bleſſings, and who are particularly rich in faith, and heirs of a kingdom; theſe ſhall intreat the favour of the queen the church; not pray unto her, or worſhip her in a religious way; for God is only the object of ſuch worſhip; but do thoſe things by which they would ſhew, that they valued her friendſhip, and would gain her good will; as alſo acknowledge any former injury done her by them, and intreat her forgiveneſs; and particularly deſire to have communion with her, and ſhare in her prayers.

ℵ. 13. The king's daughter is all-glorious within, &c.] The King's daughter is the ſame with the queen, ℵ. 9. the church, who is the King's daughter, the daughter of the King of kings, through adopting grace, by marriage to Chriſt the King's ſon, and by regeneration, or being born of God: and ſhe is all-glorious within; within doors, in the inner chamber of the King, where being brought, ſhe enjoys ſuch communion with him as reflects a glory upon her; in his banqueting-houſe, where his banner over her is love, and where her members enjoy fellowſhip with one another, and this in harmony, unity and love; which make her look amiable, pleaſant, beautiful and glorious: or within the hearts of her members, through the internal graces of the Spirit wrought there: the work of grace is an inward work; it has its ſeat in the heart or ſpirit of man, and is a glorious one, in its author, original, and uſefulneſs; it is the workmanſhip of the Spirit, and a curious piece it is; it is the image of Chriſt upon the ſoul, a partaking of the divine nature; it is pure and ſpotleſs; it is clear of all ſin, there is no ſin in it, nor any comes from it; it is the ſaints meetneſs for glory; it is the pledge, earneſt and beginning of it; it is all-glorious, and ſo are the perſons that are the ſubjects of it, as born of God: there is nothing glorious in the old man, or corrupt nature; but in the new man, or work of grace upon the ſoul, every thing is glorious, and it will iſſue in eternal glory and happineſs: or all-glorified within[r]; like any houſe or building, to which the church is ſometimes compared, particularly the tabernacle or temple, which were glorious withinſide, being greatly adorned, and having many glorious things therein; as the church is with the graces of the Spirit, and with the word and ordinances, and the preſence of God in them. Her cloathing is of wrought gold; this is different from internal grace, which is ſometimes ſpoken of as a cloathing, 1 Pet. v. 5. Col. iii. 12. ſince that is deſigned in the preceding clauſe; and yet this does not intend the outward converſation-garments of the ſaints, which, though ornamental, are not ſo glorious as to be ſaid to be of wrought gold; and yet not the robes of immortality and glory are meant; but the robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, which he has wrought out for his church, the Father imputes unto her, and beſtows upon her, and faith receives at his hand, and puts it on as a cloathing, to appear in before God; and this may be ſaid to be of wrought gold; becauſe rich and valuable, ſplendid and glorious, ſubſtantial and durable.

ℵ. 14. She ſhall be brought unto the King in raiment of needle-work, &c.] Not in her ſins, and under the ſenſe and guilt of them; as ſouls are brought to Chriſt, at firſt converſion, under the drawings of the Father's grace; nor in the rags of her own righteouſneſs; but in the robe of righteouſneſs, and garments of ſalvation, the change of raiment Chriſt has put upon her, having before this cauſed her iniquities to paſs from her; or in the ſhining robes of immortality and glory: for this introduction of the church to Chriſt, her King, head, and huſband, will be upon the firſt reſurrection; when ſhe being as a bride adorned and prepared for her huſband, will be brought unto him, and preſented to him by himſelf, a glorious church, without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing: and ſhe will be introduced, either by the angels, who will be employed in gathering the elect from the four winds; or by the miniſters of the goſpel, who, at the general harveſt, in the end of the world, will bring their ſheaves with them; thoſe ſouls they have been the inſtruments of converting, comforting, and ripening for glory; who will be their joy, and crown of rejoicing then; theſe will be brought in ſeveral companies, which joining together, will make up the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, that will then be preſented to Chriſt: or by Jehovah the Father, who, as he brought Eve to Adam, when he had formed her of his rib, and had prepared her as a help meet for him; ſo when all the elect of God are formed by divine grace, and are prepared as a bride for the bridegroom, he will then bring them unto him, and they ſhall be with him where he is, and behold his glory; which is what he prays his Father for, John xvii. 24. The virgins her companions that follow her ſhall be brought unto thee; ſuch who are betrothed as chaſte virgins to Chriſt, who ſtrictly and chaſtely adhere unto him, love him in the ſingleneſs of their hearts; are incorrupt in faith and worſhip, and of pure and upright converſations; ſee Rev. xiv. 4. theſe are the companions of the church, who are partakers partakers of the ſame grace, enjoy the ſame privileges, and ſhare in the common ſalvation; and, as they are partners together in ſufferings, they will be in glory: theſe follow the footſteps of the flock, walk after the church in the path of doctrine and duty; are followers of her, as ſhe is of the Lord, in the word and ordinances, and in the exerciſe of faith and patience; theſe, even every one, ſhall be brought unto the King, not one ſhall be loſt, or left behind; whither they ſhall be brought, and the manner in which, are expreſſed in the following verſe.

[r] כבודה honorata, Junius & Tremellius; glorificata, Guſſetius, p. 362.

℣. 15. With gladneſs and rejoicing ſhall they be brought, &c.] With joy unſpeakable, and full of glory in themſelves, becauſe of what they ſhall be delivered from; from all outward troubles and afflictions; from all inward diſtreſſes, darkneſs, doubts and fears; from ſin, Satan, and all ſpiritual enemies; and becauſe of what they ſhall enjoy, communion with God, angels and ſaints, the viſion of God in Chriſt, conformity to him, perfect knowledge, complete holineſs and happineſs, and a glory both upon their ſouls and bodies: they ſhall alſo be brought with the joy of Chriſt's faithful miniſters, who will rejoice in that day that they have not run, nor laboured in vain; and with the joy of all the holy angels; and with the joy of Chriſt the King himſelf, who always rejoiced in them and over them; yea, with the rejoicing of Father, Son, and Spirit: the Father will rejoice to ſee thoſe brought in, whom he has loved with an everlaſting love, has choſen in Chriſt, given to him, and whom he ſent his Son to redeem: the Son of God will rejoice to ſee thoſe preſented to him, whom he has loved and betrothed to himſelf; who are the purchaſe of his blood, and the travail of his ſoul; who are his jewels, treaſure, and portion: and the Holy Spirit will rejoice to ſee thoſe brought to glory, whom he has been the convincer, comforter, and ſealer of; whom he has been at work upon, and has wrought them up for this ſelf-ſame thing: They ſhall enter into the King's palace; into heaven, the palace of the King Meſſiah, the King of kings, and King of ſaints; where are manſions preparing for them, ſuitable to their high birth and character, as the daughters of a king; and where they ſhall enter, not merely to ſee it and go out again, but to dwell in it with their Lord, Head, and Huſband for evermore; and that as in their own palace, upon the foot of their relation to Chriſt, intereſt in him, right and meetneſs by him.

℣. 16. Inſtead of thy fathers ſhall be thy children, &c.] This is an addreſs, not to the church, the queen, the King's daughter, ſpoken to and of in the preceding verſes, but to the King Meſſiah himſelf, who was of the Jewiſh fathers, according to the fleſh, Rom. ix. 4, 5. and though he was rejected by that people, yet he had children; not only the apoſtles, who are ſometimes ſo called, whom he ſet on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael, in a doctrinal way, and ſent into all the world to preach his goſpel; and which being attended with his mighty power, made them triumphant conquerors every where; but alſo a numerous progeny among the Gentiles: all the elect of God are his children, and he ſtands in the relation of the everlaſting Father to them, they being given unto him as ſuch; and he being concerned in their adoption, by which they become children, and in their regeneration, by which they appear to be ſuch. Here the children of God, ſcattered abroad in the Gentile world, as diſtinct from the Jews, ſeem to be meant. Whom thou mayeſt make princes in all the earth; theſe children are princes, being the ſons of a King; they look like princes, and have the ſpirit of ſuch; they are treated as princes, fed, clothed, and attended on as ſuch; and are, as princes, heirs of a kingdom: but then, they are not ſo originally, they are made princes; not by themſelves, but by Chriſt, and who even makes them kings and prieſts unto God and his Father, and that In all the earth; not with reſpect to earthly things: they are not made the princes of this world; but while they are on earth, they are tranſlated into the kingdom of Chriſt, and have a kingdom which never can be moved; and beſides, they ſhall reign with Chriſt on earth a thouſand years: moreover, this may have reſpect to the ſeveral parts of the world where they ſhall be, even in all parts of the world, eſpecially in the latter day; ſee Iſa. xliii. 5, 6.

℣. 17. I will make thy name to be remembered in all generations, &c.] Theſe are the words of the pſalmiſt, ſpoken to the King Meſſiah, declaring what he would do with reſpect to him; cauſe his name, that is, not any particular name or title of his, but rather his goſpel, the good matter he had endited concerning him; or he himſelf to be remembered, deſired, loved, thought of, called upon, and praiſed in all ſucceeding generations; and which he did by penning of this pſalm, which has been the occaſion of the remembrance of Chriſt's name in all ages, to the preſent time; and of its being remembered by us now, and the ſame uſe it will have in time to come; ſee 2 Pet. i. 13, 15. Therefore ſhall the people praiſe thee for ever and ever; becauſe of the excellencies of his perſon; and particularly becauſe of his greatneſs and glory as a King; as well as for all mercies temporal and ſpiritual they have from him; and this is but juſt, meet, and lovely, and is, and will be their employment, as long as they live in this world, and to all eternity. This muſt be underſtood, not of all people, but of God's choſen and covenant-people; thoſe that are given to Chriſt to be his people, and whom he has redeemed and purified to himſelf, a peculiar people; and particularly his people among the Gentiles: and ſo the Targum interprets it of ſuch that are proſelytes.

PSALM XLVI.

To the chief muſician, for the ſons of Korah, a ſong upon Alamoth.

THE word Alamoth is thought by ſome, as Aben Ezra, to be the beginning of a ſong, to which this pſalm was ſet; and by others, a high tune, ſuch as virgins expreſs; and by others, the name of muſical inſtruments, as Jarchi and Kimchi; which ſeems moſt likely, ſince it is mentioned with other inſtruments of muſic in 1 Chron. xv. 19—21. and may not unfitly be rendered virginals, from the ſound of them being like the ſhrill voice of virgins, which this word ſignifies; though others chuſe to render it of hidden things, things [s], making it to deſign the ſubject-matter of the pſalm, the ſecret counſels and purpoſes of God, both in a way of love and grace to his people, and of judgment to his enemies. Some think this pſalm was occaſioned by the victories which David obtained over the Ammonites and Moabites, and other neighbouring countries; and others are of opinion, that it was penned on account of the ſiege of Jeruſalem by Sennacherib being raiſed, in the times of Hezekiah: but it ſeems rather to be a prophecy of the church in goſpel-times, and is applicable to any time of confuſion and diſtreſs the nations of the world may be in through any kind of calamity, when thoſe that truſt in the Lord have no reaſon in the leaſt to be afraid. Kimchi ſays, this pſalm belongs to future times; either to the gathering of the captives, or to the war of Gog and Magog; to which alſo R. Obadiah refers it, and Jarchi interprets it of time to come: according to the Targum, it was written by the ſons of Korah, when their father was hid from them, and they were delivered.

℣. 1. God is our refuge and ſtrength, &c.] That is, Chriſt, who is God as well as man, is the refuge for ſouls to fly unto for ſafety; as for ſenſible ſinners, in a view of danger, wrath, and miſery, ſo for ſaints, in every time of diſtreſs; typified by the cities of refuge under the legal diſpenſation; ſee the note on Pſal. ix. 9. and he it is from whom they have all their ſpiritual ſtrength, and every renewal and ſupply of it, to exerciſe grace, perform duties, withſtand enemies, bear the croſs patiently, ſhew a fortitude of mind under the ſoreſt diſtreſſes, and hold on and out unto the end: in ſhort, he is the ſtrength of their hearts, under the greateſt trials, of their lives, amidſt the greateſt dangers; and of their ſalvation, notwithſtanding all their enemies. A very preſent help in trouble; whether inward or outward, of ſoul or body; the Lord helps his people under it to bear it, and he helps them out of it in the moſt proper and ſeaſonable time: they are poor helpleſs creatures in themſelves; nor can any other help them but the Lord, who made heaven and earth; and he helps preſently, ſpeedily, and effectually: in the Hebrew text it is, he is found an exceeding help in trouble [t]; in all kind of trouble that the ſaints come into, the Lord has been found, by experience, to be an exceeding great helper of them; moreover, he is eaſily, and always to be come at, and found by them for their help.

℣. 2. Therefore will not we fear, &c.] The conſideration of the Lord's being the refuge, ſtrength, and help of his people, in all times of trouble and diſtreſs, has a great influence on their faith and confidence, and makes them intrepid and fearleſs in the midſt of the greateſt dangers: nor indeed have they any reaſon to be afraid of men or devils, ſince the Lord is on their ſide; nor ſhould they indulge a ſlaviſh fear on any account whatever. Though the earth be removed; or changed [u], as to its poſition or fruitfulneſs; or whatever changes, viciſſitudes, and revolutions may be in the kingdoms, nations, and among the inhabitants of the earth, through wars and deſolations made thereby. And though the mountains be carried into the midſt of the ſea; ſo the deſtruction of kingdoms, empires, and cities, is expreſſed by a like phraſe; as of Babylon, Jer. li. 25. and of the Roman and pagan empire, Rev. vi. 12—14. and of the city of Rome, Rev. viii. 8.

℣. 3. Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, &c.] The noiſe of which cauſes mens hearts to fail them for fear, Luke xxi. 25, 26. Though the mountains ſhake with the ſwelling thereof. Selah. All theſe figurative expreſſions denote the hurlyburlies, confuſions and diſorders that have been, or will be in the world; amidſt all which the people of God have no reaſon to fear; for it is always well with the righteous, let it go how it will with others. The paſſage may be applied to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the wars preceding it, and the diſperſion of the Jews upon it; when true believers in Chriſt, found him to be their refuge, ſtrength and help in that time of trouble, ſuch as never was the like, and were ſafe and without fear; and Aben Ezra, a Jewiſh commentator, thinks it is right to interpret this pſalm concerning the wars of Jeruſalem: moreover, theſe words may be applied to any other time of calamity, through war or perſecution, that has been ſince; as alſo to any that is to come; as to the ſlaying of the witneſſes, the hour of temptation that will try all that are upon the earth; and even to the day of judgment, when heaven and earth ſhall flee away from the face of the Judge; when the heavens ſhall be folded up as a garment, and the earth, and all that is therein ſhall be burnt up, and the whole world of the ungodly ſhall be thrown into the utmoſt panic, the ſaints will be ſafe with Chriſt, and ever happy with him; and, in the worſt of times in this world, God is always their covenant-God, their ſhield, portion, and exceeding great reward; Chriſt is their Redeemer and Saviour, their city of refuge, and ſtrong hold; and though they may be plundered of their goods and property, they have a better and a more enduring ſubſtance in heaven; an eſtate, an inheritance there, that can never be taken away; and even, ſhould their enemies kill the body, that is the utmoſt they can do; their ſouls are ſafe in the hands of Chriſt; their life is hid with him, and when he ſhall appear, they ſhall appear with him in glory; and therefore they may well ſay, we will not fear [w].

℣. 4. There is a river, &c.] The alluſion is either to the river Kidron, which ran by Jeruſalem; or to the waters of Shiloah, which by different courſes and branches, ran through the city of Jeruſalem, and ſupplied the ſeveral parts of it with water, to the joy and comfort of its inhabitants: but the words are to be underſtood in a figurative ſenſe, as applicable to goſpel-times; and this river either deſigns the goſpel, the ſtreams of which are its doctrines, which are living waters that went out from Jeruſalem, and which publiſh glad tidings of great joy to all ſenſible ſinners; or the Spirit and his graces, which are compared to a well, and rivers of living water, in the exerciſe of which the ſaints have much joy and peace; or elſe the Lord himſelf, who is a place of broad rivers and ſtreams to his people, and is both their refreſhment and protection; or rather his everlaſting love to them is here intended; ſee Pſal. xxxvi. 8. Ezek. xlvii. 5. Rev. xxii. 1. The head of this river is the heart of God, his ſovereign good-will and pleaſure; the channel through which it runs is Chriſt Jeſus; the riſe of it was in eternity, when, like a river that runs under ground, it flowed ſecretly, as it does before

[s] על עלמות υπες των κρυφιων, Sept. pro arcanis, V. L.
[t] נמצא מאד inventum valde, Michaelis.
[u] בהמיר cum mutabit, Pagninus; etiamſi permutarit, Vatablus; ſi commutaret, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth.
[w] Si fractus illabatur orbis, &c. Horat. Carmin. l. 3. ode 3. v. 7.

before effectual vocation; when it breaks up and appears in large ſtreams and flows, and ſo it proceeds running on to all eternity. It is a river that is unfathomable, and cannot be paſſed over; it has heights and depths, and lengths and breadths, which cannot be fully comprehended: as for the quality of it, it is a pure river, clear as cryſtal; free of all diſſimulation in the heart of God, and clear of all motives and conditions in the creature. Its water is living water; which quickens dead ſinners, revives drooping ſaints, ſecures from the ſecond death, and gives eternal life; it makes all fruitful about it, or that are planted by it. The ſtreams whereof ſhall make glad the city of God; the ſtreams of this river are eternal election; the covenant of grace, its bleſſings and promiſes; the proviſion and miſſion of Chriſt as a Saviour, and redemption by him; juſtification, pardon, adoption, regeneration, perſeverance in grace, and eternal life; called ſtreams, becauſe they flow from the fountain of divine love; and becauſe of the rapidity, force and power of the grace of God, in the application of them in converſion, which carries all before it; and becauſe of the abundance, continuance and freeneſs of them, and the gratefulneſs and acceptableneſs of them to thoſe who ſee the worth of them, and their intereſt in them; ſee Cant. iv. 15. and theſe, when made known and applied, make glad the hearts of God's people under a ſenſe of ſin and guilt, under divine deſertions, the temptations of Satan, and the various afflictions they meet with; for theſe are intended by the city of God, as the church is often called, becauſe of his building, and where he dwells, and where the ſaints are fellow-citizens. And the ſame are ſignified by the holy place; being an holy temple to God, conſiſting of holy perſons, ſuch who are ſanctified by the Spirit of God, and live holy lives and converſations; and by the tabernacles of the moſt High; being the dwelling-places of God, Father, Son, and Spirit. All which is a reaſon why the ſaints ſhould not fear in the worſt of times.

℣. 5. God is in the midſt of her, &c.] The church and people of God; not merely by his eſſence, power and providence, as he is in the midſt of the world; but by his gracious preſence, and which always continues, though not always perceived; and is a ſufficient antidote againſt all fear of men and devils. She ſhall not be moved; tho' the earth may, and when it is, ℣. 2. neither from the heart of God, on which his people are ſet as a ſeal; nor from the hands of Chriſt, from whence they can never be plucked; nor from the covenant of grace, which is immoveable; nor off of the rock Chriſt, on which they are built; nor from the ſtate of grace, of juſtification, adoption and ſanctification, in which they ſtand; nor out of the world, by all the cunning and power of Antichriſt. God ſhall help her, and that right early; or when the morning looks out [x]. When it is night with the church, it is the hour and power of darkneſs with the enemies of it; and this is the time of the reign of Antichriſt, whoſe kingdom is a kingdom of darkneſs: but the morning cometh, and alſo the night; the former being about to break forth, and the latter to be at an end; yea, at even-tide it ſhall be light: and the Lord will be a ſuitable, ſeaſonable, and timely help to his people; for though weeping endures the night, joy comes in the morning.

℣. 6. The heathen raged, &c.] As they did at Chriſt's firſt coming, againſt him, his goſpel, and his people; and which continued during the three firſt centuries; and then the pagan kingdoms belonging to the Roman empire were removed; ſince then another ſort of heathens, the Papiſts, have raged, in violent perſecutions and bloodſhed of the ſaints and martyrs of Jeſus, and will rage again, about and at the downfal of Babylon; ſee Rev. xi. 18. and xvi. 10. The kingdoms were moved; either from their pagan or papal religion, and became ſubject to Chriſt. So it was at the downfal of Rome, pagan; and ſo it will be at the downfal of Rome, papal; when the kings of the earth ſhall hate the whore, make her deſolate, and burn her fleſh with fire. Or they ſhall be deſtroyed; that is, thoſe that ſhall be gathered together in Armageddon, to make war with the Lamb; ſee Rev. xvi. 14, 16. and xvii. 14. and xix. 15, 20, 21. He uttered his voice, the earth melted; like wax, as the inhabitants of the earth do at the voice of his thunder, and as Antichriſt will at the breath of his mouth; and all within the Romiſh juriſdiction, ſignified by the earth, as it often is in the book of the Revelation, when the voice of the mighty angel ſhall be heard, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, Rev. xviii. 1, 2, 9, 10, 11, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19.

℣. 7. The Lord of hoſts is with us, &c.] The Targum is, The Word of the Lord of hoſts. He whoſe name is Immanuel, which is, by interpretation, God with us; who is King of kings, and Lord of lords; who has all creatures in heaven and earth at his command, whom all the hoſts of angels obey; he is on the ſide of his people, and therefore they have nothing to fear from all the hoſts and armies of men; ſeeing more are they that are for them, than they that are againſt them. The God of Jacob is our refuge. Selah; as in the former clauſe, the argument againſt fear of men, is taken from the power of God, and the extent of his dominion; here it is taken from the grace of God, and his people's covenant-intereſt in him: for by Jacob is meant the church of God, and all true believers, who are Iſraelites indeed; the Lord is the refuge and ſhelter of ſuch in all times of diſtreſs and trouble, and therefore they need not fear; ſee the note on ℣. 1.

℣. 8. Come, behold the works of the Lord, &c.] Of nature and grace, eſpecially thoſe of providence; both in a way of judgment, as in this verſe; and of mercy, as in the following. Theſe words are an addreſs of the pſalmiſt to his friends, as Apollinarius ſupplies it; or of the church to the fearful among them, who were diſmayed at the commotions and diſturbances that were in the world, ℣. 2, 3. and who are encouraged to truſt in the Lord, from the conſideration of his works, particularly his providential diſpenſations. What deſolations he hath made in the earth; in the land of Judea, at the time of the deſtruction of the city and temple of Jeruſalem, foretold by Moſes, Deut. xxxii. 22—25. by Daniel, chap. ix. 26, 27. and by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Matt. xxiii. 38. and xxiv. 2. Luke xix. 43, 44. and which deſolations being the fulfilling of prophecy, may ſerve to ſtrengthen the faith of God's people, that whatſoever he has ſaid ſhall come to paſs; and that ſeeing he made ſuch deſolations among the Jews, for their rejection of the Meſſiah, what may not be expected will be made in the antichriſtian ſtates, for their oppoſition to him? and beſides, are a confirmation firmation of the truth of his being come; ſince after his coming theſe deſolations, according to Daniel, were to be made; nor was the ſceptre to depart from Judah till he came, nor the ſecond temple to be deſtroyed before he was in it. Moreover, theſe deſolations may refer to thoſe that have been made in the Roman empire, upon the blowing of the trumpets; the firſt four of which brought in the Goths, Huns and Vandals, into the weſtern part of it, which made ſad ravages and devaſtations in it; ſee Rev. viii. 7—12. and the fifth and ſixth brought in the Saracens and Turks into the eaſtern part of it, which ſeized and demoliſhed it, and made dreadful havock among men; ſee Rev. ix. 1—19. Likewiſe the deſolations that will be made in the antichriſtian ſtates, may be here intended; when the ſeven vials of God's wrath will be poured out upon them, Rev. xvi. when the kings of the earth will hate the whore, and make her deſolate, Rev. xvii. 16. and all her plagues ſhall come upon her in one day, Rev. xviii. 8, 9. And a view of theſe deſolations, even in prophecy, may ſerve to chear the hearts of God's people under the preſent reign of Antichriſt, and under all the rage, fury, and oppreſſion of antichriſtian powers, ſince they will all in a little time become deſolate. This will be the Lord's doing, and it will be wondrous in our eyes.

[x] לפנות בקר reſpiciente mane, Pagninus; ad proſpectum auroræ, Muſculus; at the looking forth of the morning, Ainſworth; i. e. ſpeedily and quickly, as Suidas interprets it in voce πρωι.

℣. 9. He maketh wars to ceaſe unto the ends of the earth, &c.] As at the birth of Chriſt, the Prince of Peace, in the times of Auguſtus Cæſar, when there was a general peace in the world, tho' it did not laſt long; and in the times of Conſtantine, ſignified by ſilence in heaven for half an hour, Rev. viii. 1. when for a while there was a ceſſation from wars and perſecution; and as will be in the latter day, and which is here chiefly deſigned; when nations ſhall learn war no more, and Chriſt's kingdom will take place; of which and its peace there ſhall be no end, Iſa. ii. 4. and ix. 6, 7. Pſal. lxxii. 7. The conſideration of which may ſerve to relieve diſtreſſed minds under terrible apprehenſions of preſent troubles and publick calamities. He breaketh the bow, and cutteth the ſpear in ſunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire; that is, chariots, or carts [y], or waggons, in which, as Aben Ezra obſerves, arms and proviſion were carried for the uſe of ſoldiers; the Targum renders it round ſhields [z]: and the deſtroying of all theſe military weapons and carriages, is a token of peace and of war's being cauſed to ceaſe, there being no more uſe for them; with this compare Ezek. xxxix. 8, 9. It was uſual to burn the arms of enemies taken in war [a].

℣. 10. Be ſtill, and know that I am God, &c.] Theſe words are thought by ſome to be ſpoken by the Lord to the nations of the world, to ceaſe from war, as the Targum renders the words; or from going up any more againſt Jeruſalem, as Jarchi interprets them; and that they were ſpoken to them before the breaking of their bows, &c. as Aben Ezra obſerves; or that they are an exhortation to them to ceaſe from their evil works, and know that the Lord is God, and has power to raiſe up and to make low; which is Kimchi's ſenſe of the words: but they are rather a continuation of the church's addreſs to the fearful among them, as before to behold the works of the Lord, ſo here to hearken to what he ſays, as follows, Be ſtill; not that they ſhould be like ſtocks and ſtones, ſtupid, indolent, and unconcerned at the commotions that were in the earth, and be unaffected with the judgments of God, and be wholly ſilent and inactive; but that they ſhould not be fearful, nor fretful and impatient, or reſtleſs and tumultuous; but be quiet and eaſy, reſigned to the will of God, and live in an aſſured expectation of the appearance of divine providence in their favour. And know; own and acknowledge that he is God, a ſovereign Being that does whatſoever he pleaſes; that he is unchangeable in his nature, purpoſes, promiſes and covenant; that he is omnipotent, able to help them and deliver them at the laſt extremity; that he is omniſcient, knows their perſons, caſes and troubles, and how and where to hide them till the ſtorm is over; that he is the all-wiſe God, and does all things after the counſel of his own will, and makes all things work together for good to them; and that he is faithful to his word and promiſe, and will not ſuffer them to be overpreſſed and bore down with troubles. Who further ſays for their encouragement, and is to be hearkened to in it; I will be exalted among the heathen; with or in the converſion of the Gentiles; when the kingdoms of this world ſhall become Chriſt's, and all nations ſhall come and worſhip before him, Rev. xi. 15, 17. and xv. 4. Or in the deſtruction of the Gentiles; the Papiſts, the antichriſtian ſtates; which will cauſe great rejoicings, hallelujahs, and attributions of honour and glory to him, Rev. xvi. 5, 6. and xix. 1, 2. ſo Jarchi interprets the words, I will be exalted, בנקמתי in my vengeance; that I will take upon the heathen. I will be exalted in the earth; now Chriſt is exalted in heaven at the right hand of God, ere long he will be exalted in the earth, where he was deſpiſed and rejected, crucified and ſlain; he will be King over all the earth; his dominion will be from one end of it to the other; his tabernacle will be among men; and his people, as kings and prieſts, will reign with him on earth; by whom he, and he alone, will be exalted in the dignity of his perſon and offices, and eſpecially in his kingly office, Zech. xiv. 9. and ix. 10. Rev. xxi. 3. and v. 10. Iſa. ii. 17. The conſideration of which may ſerve to remove fears and diſmayings of mind under preſent troubles.

℣. 11. The Lord of hoſts is with us, &c.] The Targum paraphraſes it, the Word of the Lord of hoſts, as in ℣. 7. and the ſame words are here repeated, to comfort thoſe that were fearful and unbelieving, with which the church then comforted herſelf.

PSALM XLVII.

To the chief muſician, a pſalm for the ſons of Korah.

THIS pſalm is thought by ſome to be written on occaſion of the ark being brought from the houſe of Obed Edom to the city of David, to the place he had prepared for it; which was was attended with ſinging and dancing, with ſhouting, and the ſound of a trumpet, 2 Sam. vi. 12—16. but it rather ſeems to be penned on account of the aſcenſion of Chriſt to heaven, prophetically ſpoken of in this pſalm; and of the ſpread of the goſpel, and the conqueſts it made in the gentile world upon Chriſt's aſcenſion; as the whole pſalm ſhews: and even Aben Ezra and Kimchi apply it to the times of the Meſſiah; and ſo do ſome of their moſt ancient writers, who particularly interpret ℣. 5. of him, as may be ſeen in the note upon it.

[y] עגלות plauſtra, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Muſculus, Gejerus, Michaelis. [z] So the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic and Arabic verſions. [a] Vid. Lydium de re militari, l. 6. c. 4. p. 229, 230.

℣. 1. O clap your hands, all ye people, &c.] Meaning the Gentiles more eſpecially; ſee Pſal. cxvii. 1. compared with Rom. xv. 9, 10, 11. who had reaſon to rejoice and be glad, ſince the aſcended Lord and King here ſpoken of, was given to be their Saviour, was the propitiation for their ſins, and had given himſelf a ranſom-price for them; and now the goſpel was preached among them, by an order from him after his reſurrection; and upon his aſcenſion, gifts were beſtowed on his apoſtles, qualifying them for it; when many of them were converted by it, and were made partakers of the ſame grace and privileges with the Jews that believed in Chriſt, and were formed into goſpel-churches. Wherefore they are called upon to declare their joy and gladneſs, by clapping their hands; which is a geſture expreſſive of exultation and joy; ſee Pſal. xcviii. 8. Iſa. lv. 12. Nahum iii. 19. It was uſed at the unction and coronation of a king, 2 Kings xi. 12. and ſo very proper to be uſed on occaſion of the Meſſiah being made or declared Lord and Chriſt, as he was at his aſcenſion, Acts ii. 36. Shout unto God with the voice of triumph; as when triumphs are made on account of victories obtained, which was now the caſe; Chriſt having conquered ſin, Satan, and the world, by his ſufferings and death, and having ſpoiled principalities and powers, made a ſhew of them, openly triumphing over them, when he aſcended on high, and led captivity captive; and he having ſent his apoſtles into the gentile world with his goſpel, they were cauſed to triumph in him wherever they came. And now theſe external actions of clapping hands, and ſhouting with the voice, are expreſſive of inward ſpiritual joy; which thoſe among the people who were conquered by the grace of God, and had a ſight of their aſcended Lord and Saviour were filled with: and who are exhorted to expreſs it in this manner, unto God; not to angels, nor to men, no not to miniſters, who brought the joyful tidings to them; but to God, either to God the Father, for all their temporal and ſpiritual bleſſings; eſpecially for the unſpeakable gift of his Son, to ſuffer and die for them: or to the Son of God, God manifeſt in the fleſh; God that was gone up with a ſhout, ℣. 5. and was now at the right hand of God, crowned with glory and honour; who, by the ſufferings of death, had obtained eternal redemption for them.

℣. 2. For the Lord moſt high is terrible, &c.] Chriſt is not only the Son of the higheſt, but he himſelf is the moſt high God, God over all, bleſſed for ever. He is higher than the higheſt, than the angels in heaven, or any of the ſons of men on earth. He is the high and lofty One, that dwells in the high and lofty place. And even this character agrees with him as the aſcended Lord and King in his human nature; he is aſcended on high, is ſet down on the right hand of the Majeſty on high. He is highly exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour; he is made higher than the heavens, and than the kings of the earth are; angels, authorities, and powers are ſubject to him. And this is a reaſon, exciting all the people to joy and gladneſs. And he is terrible to his enemies, being the lion of the tribe of Judah; who will rule the nations with a rod of iron, and break them in pieces as a potter's veſſel: and ſo he will be when he ſhall come in the clouds of heaven, and deſcend from thence, in flaming fire, to take vengeance on thoſe who have deſpiſed and rejected him; and at the ſame time will be glorious to, and admired by them that believe in him. His appearance, which will be terrible to others, will be matter of joy to them. Tho' the word uſed may be rendered as it is in Pſal. cxi. 9. reverend or to be feared [b], as he is; ſee Iſa. viii. 13, 14. both on account of his goodneſs, as the Redeemer and Saviour of his people, Hoſea iii. 5. and of his greatneſs, being equal with God, and King of ſaints. As it follows; He is a great king over all the earth; as he muſt needs be, ſince he is the great God and our Saviour; and is King of kings, and Lord of lords. He is now King of Zion, and head over all things to the church; and ere long the kingdoms of this world will become his, and he will take to himſelf his great power and reign, and ſhall be King over all the earth openly and viſibly; he ſhall be one, and his name One, Zech. xiv. 9. Mal. i. 14. which is another reaſon for joy and gladneſs among the people.

℣. 3. He ſhall ſubdue the people under us, and the nations under our feet.] As Joſhua, his type, ſubdued the Canaanites; and as David, another type of him, ſubdued the Syrians, Moabites, and others: the Jews from theſe words expect that in the times of the Meſſiah they look for, the Gentiles in a literal ſenſe will be ſubdued by him, and become ſubject to them; but theſe, and all other expreſſions of the like kind, are to be underſtood in a ſpiritual ſenſe; ſuch as Iſa. xlix. 23. and lx. 10, 12, 14. and which will have their accompliſhment in the latter day, in the ſubjection of the Gentiles to the word and ordinances of the goſpel adminiſtered in his churches: though the paſſage here refers to the times following the aſcenſion of Chriſt to heaven, when he went forth in the miniſtry of his apoſtles conquering and to conquer; and which he made uſe of to cauſe the people to fall under him, and to be willing to be ſaved by him; to ſubmit to his righteouſneſs, and to his ordinances, the ſceptre of his kingdom; and which was cauſing them to triumph, and ſubduing the people under them, who through the goſpel preached by them became obedient by word and deed; and which was an occaſion of joy even to the conquered ones.

℣. 4. He ſhall chooſe our inheritance for us, &c.] Either a portion in this life; God knows what is beſt for his people, and therefore they ſhould leave it with him who can make a better choice for them than for themſelves: an heathen [c] once gave this advice, "give thyſelf wholly to the will and diſpoſal of the celeſtial ones; for they who are uſed "to give good things eaſily, can alſo chooſe the "fitteſt." Or the heavenly inheritance, ſo called in alluſion to the land of Canaan, ſubdued and poſſeſſed by the Iſraelites, in which Chriſt is greatly concerned; his people are predeſtinated to the adoption of children, that is, to the inheritance they are adopted adopted to by him, in whom they obtain it; thro' his death they receive the promiſe of eternal inheritance, he being the teſtator of that will of their heavenly father which bequeaths it to them; it is his righteouſneſs which gives them a title to it, and through his grace they have a meetneſs for it, and he will at laſt introduce them into it; all which is a reaſon for joy and gladneſs in them. The Arabic verſion renders it, he hath choſen us an inheritance for himſelf; ſo the Lord's people are, Deut. xxxii. 9. Chriſt aſked them of his Father, and he gave them for his inheritance, he having choſen them as ſuch, and greatly delighted he is with them, Pſal. ii. 8. and xvi. 6. The excellency of Jacob whom he loved. Selah. the ſaints, who are in his eſteem, the excellent in the earth, and who will be in the latter day an eternal excellency, Pſal. xvi. 3. Iſa. lx. 15. even the whole church, conſiſting of Jews and Gentiles, the ſpiritual Jacob or Iſrael of God, whom Chriſt has loved with an everlaſting love, and therefore has choſen them for his portion and peculiar treaſure; as Jacob in perſon was loved when Eſau was hated.

[b] נורא reverendus, Junius & Tremellius; timendus eſt, Cocceius; venerandus, Michaelis.

[c] Socrates apud Valer. Maxim. l. 7. c. 2. extern. 1.

℣. 5. God is gone up with a ſhout, &c.] That is, the Son of God, who is truly and properly God equal to the Father, having the ſame perfections; God manifeſt in the fleſh, the Word that was made fleſh and dwelt among men on earth; who in the next clauſe is called Lord or Jehovah, being the everlaſting I am, which is, and was, and is to come; he having done his work on earth he came about, went up from earth to heaven in human nature, really, locally, and viſibly, in the ſight of his apoſtles, attended by angels, and with their ſhouts and acclamations, which are here meant. The Lord with the ſound of the trumpet; which circumſtance, though not related in the account of Chriſt's aſcenſion in the New Teſtament, yet inaſmuch as the angels ſay he ſhall deſcend in like manner as he aſcended, and that it is certain he will deſcend with a ſhout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God; ſo that if his aſcent was as his deſcent will be, it muſt be then with a ſhout, and the ſound of a trumpet, Acts i. 10. 1 Theſſ. iv. 16. This text is applied to the Meſſiah by the ancient Jewiſh writers [d].

℣. 6. Sing praiſes to God, &c.] That is gone up with a ſhout, Chriſt Jeſus, our aſcended Lord and King, as the apoſtles did at the time of his aſcenſion, Luke xxiv. 52, 53. Sing praiſes, ſing praiſes unto our King, ſing praiſes; who was then made Lord and Chriſt, declared king of ſaints, and crowned with glory and honour; the repetition of the phraſe ſing praiſes, denotes frequency, conſtancy, fervency, and great devotion in the performance of this ſervice; and that the aſcenſion of Chriſt, the occaſion of it, is of the greateſt moment and importance, and requires it to be performed in ſuch a manner.

℣. 7. For God is the king of all the earth, &c.] Or the king of all the earth is God [e]; the ſame that is aſcended into heaven, and is king of ſaints, even Chriſt Jeſus; and ſo he will appear to be, eſpecially in the latter day; ſee the note on ℣. 2. Sing ye praiſes with underſtanding; or as De Dieu renders it, to him that underſtandeth, that is, to God the only wiſe, whoſe underſtanding is infinite; even to Chriſt who, as God, knows all things; and as man and mediator is of quick underſtanding, and has all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge in him; ſo R. Obadiah, ſing of him who underſtands; or, ſing ye praiſes, O every one that underſtandeth [f]; that is, how to ſing, as every one does not; this is the ſenſe of Aben Ezra and Kimchi; or with underſtanding, as we render it; with underſtanding of what is ſung. The apoſtle Paul ſeems to refer to this paſſage in 1 Cor. xiv. 15. The Targum renders it, with a good underſtanding.

℣. 8. God reigneth over the heathen, &c.] He reigned over Iſrael under the former diſpenſation, and now he reigns over the Gentiles under the goſpel-diſpenſation; as appears by the numerous inſtances of converſion among them in the firſt ages of chriſtianity; and by the many churches that were planted by the means of the apoſtles; and by the deſtruction of the Roman pagan empire under the ſixth ſeal, Rev. vi. 12—14. and xii. 7—10. and which will ſtill more appear by the deſtruction of Rome papal, when all the heathens ſhall periſh out of the land; and by the fulneſs and forces of the Gentiles being brought into a ſubmiſſion to him; all which are reaſons to ſing praiſes to him. God ſitteth upon the throne of his holineſs; or his holy throne, which is heaven; on the right hand of the throne of the majeſty in the heavens; on his Father's throne; having done his work on earth he is received up into heaven, and is ſet down on a throne at the right hand of God, an honour which none of the angels have: he has ceaſed from his work and entered into his reſt, and ſits and ſees of the travail of his ſoul; all which is matter of joy to his people, and a reaſon why they ſhould ſing praiſes; and the rather, ſince they are ſet down with him in heavenly places: or this may be underſtood of his ſitting on the throne of judgment to judge the world in righteouſneſs at the laſt day, it following upon his reign over the Gentiles; though the other ſenſe beſt agrees with his immediate aſcenſion to heaven.

℣. 9. The princes of the people are gathered togegether, &c.] Not againſt Chriſt, as at his firſt coming, but to him and to his church and people; even the great men of the earth, the kings and princes of it, as they will in the latter day; ſee Iſa. xlix. 23. and lx. 3, 10, 11. Rev. xxi. 24. or this may mean the ſaints in general, who are all of them the princes of his people, and are ſet among princes, yea are kings and prieſts unto God; ſome render it, the willing or voluntary ones of his people [g]; the ſame word is here uſed as in Pſal. cx. 3. where it is rendered willing, and deſigns ſuch who are made willing to be ſaved by Chriſt, ſubmit to his righteouſneſs, and be ſubject to his word and ordinances. Even the people of the God of Abraham; whom the God of Abraham has choſen for his people, taken into covenant, given to his Son, and who are redeemed by his blood, and effectually called by his grace; and who, though Gentiles, belong to the ſame covenant, and the ſame covenant-God as Abraham did, and have the bleſſing of Abraham upon them; and are indeed his ſpiritual ſeed, being Chriſt's. The Targum is, the people that believe in the God of Abraham. The words may be rendered in connexion with the former clauſe, gathered together, unto the people of the God of Abraham [h]; and ſo denote the aſſociation of the Gentiles converted, with the believing Jews, as was at the firſt times of the goſpel, and will be at the latter day, 1 Cor. xii. 13. Gal. iii. 28, 29. Iſa. lx. 4. For the ſhields of the earth belong unto God; that is, is, the rulers of the earth, as the word is rendered in Hoſ. iv. 18. who are as a ſhield and a protection to their ſubjects; theſe are ſet up and put down by the Lord at his pleaſure; and their hearts are in his hands, and he can convert them when he pleaſes, and gather them to his Son, and into his churches; or as Jarchi interprets it, "he has power in his "hands to protect as with a ſhield all that truſt in "him;" ſafety is of the Lord; the protection of the world and of the church is from him who is King over all the earth. He is greatly exalted; that is, Chriſt, who has all power in heaven and in earth; he is highly exalted at the right hand of God, angels, authorities and powers being ſubject to him.

[d] Bemidbar Rabba, ſ. 15. fol. 218. 1. [e] So Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Michaelis. [f] משכיל זמרו canite, intelligens, Montanus; i. e. unuſquiſque, Vatablus. [g] נדיבי עמים voluntarii populorum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius. [h] So Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Gejerus.

PSALM XLVIII.

A ſong and pſalm for the ſons of Korah.

THIS pſalm is intitled a ſong-pſalm, a pſalm to be ſung vocally; or a ſong and pſalm to be ſung both vocally and inſtrumentally, and is one of the ſpiritual ſongs the apoſtle ſpeaks of Eph. v. 19. It was occaſioned, as ſome think, by David's ſpoiling the Philiſtines, 2 Sam. v. 17—21. or as others, by the deliverance of the people from the Moabites and Ammonites in the times of Jehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. xx. 27, 28. or as others, by the deliverance of the inhabitants of Jeruſalem from Sennacherib in the times of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xix. 34, 35. though as Kimchi, a celebrated Jewiſh commentator, owns, it belongs to the times of the Meſſiah, as the other preceding pſalms; and treats of his greatneſs, and of the praiſe and glory due to him, and gives large encomiums of his church.

℣. 1. Great is the Lord, &c.] The ſame that in the foregoing pſalm is ſaid to be gone up to heaven with a ſhout, to ſit on the throne of his holineſs, to reign over the heathen, and to be king over all the earth; who is great, and the Son of the Higheſt; the great God and our Saviour; great in his perſon as God-man, God manifeſt in the fleſh, his Father's fellow and equal; and in the perfections of his nature, being of great power, and of great wiſdom, and of great faithfulneſs, and of ſtrict holineſs and juſtice, and of wonderful grace and goodneſs; great in his works of creation and providence; in his miraculous operations when on earth, and in the work of man's redemption and ſalvation; great is he in all his offices, a great prophet riſen in Iſrael, a great high-prieſt over the houſe of God, a Saviour, and a great one, and the great ſhepherd of the ſheep. And greatly to be praiſed, in the city of our God; the city of Jeruſalem, the city of ſolemnities, where was the worſhip of God, and where the tribes went up to worſhip, and God was preſent with his people; and where the great Lord of all ſhewed himſelf to be great; here Chriſt the great Saviour appeared, even in the temple, when a child, where Simeon and Anna ſaw him, and ſpoke great things of him; where he at twelve years of age diſputed with the doctors, and ſhewed his great wiſdom; here when grown up he wrought many of his great miracles, and taught his doctrines; here he entered in great triumph, attended with the ſhouts, acclamations, and hoſannas of the people; here he eat his laſt paſſover with his diſciples; and in a garden near it was he taken and brought before the Sanhedrim, aſſembled at the high-prieſt's palace at Jeruſalem; and then tried and condemned at the bar of Pilate; when being led a little way out of the city he was crucified on mount Calvary; and on another mount, the mount of Olives, about a mile from it, he aſcended to heaven; and here in this city he poured forth the Spirit in an extraordinary manner on his diſciples at the day of Pentecoſt, as an evidence of his aſcenſion; and from hence his goſpel went forth into all the world; and therefore was greatly to be praiſed here, as he was by his diſciples, church and people, Acts ii. 46, 47. Jeruſalem is a figure of the goſpel-church, which is often compared to a city, Iſa. xxvi. 1. and lxii. 12. of which ſaints are citizens and fellow-citizens of each other; this is a city built on Chriſt the foundation; is full of inhabitants when together and conſidered by themſelves; is governed by wholeſome laws, enacted by Chriſt its King, who has appointed officers under him to explain and enforce them, and ſee that they are put in execution; and has many privileges and immunities belonging to it; and this is the city of God, of his building and of his defending, and where he dwells; it is, as in ℣. 2. the city of the great King, the King Meſſiah, and where he diſplays his greatneſs; here he appears great and glorious, ſhews his power and his glory; is ſeen in the galleries and through the lattices of ordinances, in his beauty and ſplendor; here he grants his gracious preſence, and beſtows his favours and bleſſings; and is therefore greatly to be praiſed here, as he is by all his people on the above accounts. Even in the mountain of his holineſs; as mount Zion is called on account of the temple built upon it, and the worſhip of God in it; and a fit emblem it was of the church of Chriſt, which, as that is, is choſen and loved of God, and is his habitation, is impregnable and immoveable, and conſiſts of perſons ſanctified by God the Father, in the Son, and through the Spirit.

℣. 2. Beautiful for ſituation, &c.] This, and what follows, are ſaid of the city of God, the city of Jeruſalem, which was delightfully ſituated on an eminence, in a wholeſome air; the brook Kidron gliding by it, the water of Siloah running through it, or at leaſt through ſome parts of it; fields and gardens adjoining to it, and mountains all around it: and ſo the church of Chriſt is built upon him, the rock; the river of divine love runs by it, the ſtreams whereof make it glad; the green paſtures of the word and ordinances are in it; and ſalvation is as walls and bulwarks about it; and ſo healthful is it, that the inhabitants have no reaſon to ſay they are ſick, ſince the people that dwell therein have their iniquities forgiven, Iſai. xxxiii. 24. The joy of the whole earth; that is, the city of Jeruſalem, Lam. ii. 15. eſpecially it was ſo when Chriſt, whoſe birth near it was matter of great joy to all people; when he who is the deſire of all nations was in it; and when the goſpel went out from it unto the whole earth, and cauſed joy wherever it came in power, and with the Holy Ghoſt: and the church of Chriſt, particularly in the latter day, will be an eternal excellency, and a joy of many generations, Iſa. lx. 15. and even now the whole world has reaſon to rejoice and be glad, becauſe of the church of Chriſt in it, who are the light of the world and the ſalt of the earth, and on whoſe account the world continues, and the men of it enjoy the bleſſings they do. Is mount Zion; or by mount Zion; Jeruſalem was near it, and beautifully ſituated by it. On the ſides of the north; Jeruſalem was north of Zion, as Zion was ſouth of Jeruſalem; likewiſe the temple was on the north part of mount Zion, Iſai. xiv. 13. the altar and altar-gate were on the north-ſide of the temple, and there were the tables on which the ſacrifices were ſlain, Ezek. viii. 5. and xl. 35—40. and on the north ſide of the altar was the creature to be offered killed, Lev. i. 11. and perhaps ſome reference is here had to the church of Chriſt in the latter day, which for many years paſt has been chiefly in our northern part of the world: hence the proteſtant doctrine is by the papiſts called the northern hereſy; and it will be tidings out of the north that ſhall trouble the man of ſin, or ſome agent of his, to come forth with fury, and plant the tabernacles of his palace between the ſeas, in the glorious holy mountain, Dan. xi. 44, 45. The city of the great King; of Chriſt the King of kings; ſee the note on Pſal. xlvii. 2. and xlviii. 1.

world

℣. 3. God is known in her palaces for a refuge.] As there were palaces in Jeruſalem; ſee ℣. 13. and Pſal. cxxii. 7. ſo there are in the church of Chriſt; every place in it is a palace fit for a king; and every one that has truly a name and a place there, are kings and prieſts unto God: and here God is a refuge both for ſaints and ſinners to fly unto; ſee the note on Pſal. xlvi. 1. and is known to be ſo; the miniſters of the goſpel being here appointed to direct and encourage ſouls to flee to Chriſt for refuge, who is the hope ſet before them in the everlaſting goſpel, preached by them to lay hold upon; and all that do flee to him know, by experience, that he is a refuge for them; and as all the people of God do in every time of diſtreſs, and when all refuge fails them elſewhere.

℣. 4. For lo, the kings were aſſembled, &c.] As the princes of the Philiſtines to ſeek for David, when in the ſtrong hold of Zion, 2 Sam. v. 17. as the Ethiopians in the time of Aſa, 2 Chron. xiv. 9. and the Moabites and Ammonites in the times of Jehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. xx. 1. and the kings of Syria and Iſrael in the times of Ahaz, Iſai. vii. 1. and Sennacherib with his princes, who, in his eſteem, were kings, in the times of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 17. which are inſtances of the kings of the nations gathering together againſt Zion, the city of Jeruſalem, and people of the Jews, who were typical of the church of Chriſt; and that without ſucceſs, and to their own confuſion and deſtruction; though this ſeems to refer to the latter day of the goſpel-diſpenſation, when all the kings of the earth, Pagan, Papal, and Mahometan, will be gathered together at the inſtigation of Satan, to the battle of the great day of the Lord God Almighty, in a place called Armageddon, where they will be defeated by Chriſt the King of kings, Rev. xvi. 13, 14, 16. and xix. 19—21. Jarchi and Kimchi interpret the paſſage of Gog and Magog gathering together to fight againſt Jeruſalem, with which compare Rev. xx. 8, 9. They paſſed by together; either to the battle, as Jarchi explains it; or they paſſed by Jeruſalem, the city of our God, the church, without entering into it, or doing it any hurt.

℣. 5. They ſaw it, &c.] Either the city, or the power of God, as Aben Ezra; or, as Jarchi, God himſelf going forth to fight againſt the nations. This refers to the power Chriſt will take to himſelf, and ſhew forth, by reigning in his church, and protecting it, which will not only be viſible to the ſaints, but to the nations of the world; and to the brightneſs of Chriſt's coming in his ſpiritual reign, with the luſtre of which Antichriſt will be deſtroyed, Rev. xi. 17, 18, 2 Theſſ. ii. 8. and to the glorious ſtate of the church, ſignified by the riſing of the witneſſes, and their ſtanding on their feet, and aſcending to heaven, which will be ſeen by their enemies, Rev. xi. 11, 12. and to the deſtruction of Rome, the ſmoke of whoſe burning, the kings of the earth, that have committed fornication with her, will ſee and lament, Rev. xviii. 8, 9, 10. And ſo they marvelled; at the glory of the church, the ſecurity of it, the power of Chriſt in it and over it, and at the deſtruction of myſtical Babylon; ſee Iſa. lii. 14, 15. and xiii. 8. Jer. li. 41. They were troubled; as Herod and all Jeruſalem were, upon hearing of the birth of Chriſt, Matt. ii. 3. ſo theſe kings will be, upon ſeeing the coming and power of Chriſt in the latter day, the invincibleneſs of his church, and their own immediate and utter ruin: this will be the time of the howling of the ſhepherds, both civil and eccleſiaſtical, when all hands will be faint, and every man's heart will melt, Zech. xi. 2. Iſa. xiii. 6, 7. And haſted away; fled for fear of the great King at the head of his armies, in the defence of his church and people: and as the kings of the earth alſo at the deſtruction of Rome will flee and ſtand afar off, for fear of her torment, Rev. xviii. 10.

℣. 6. Fear took hold upon them there, &c.] That is, either when they came up to the city, and paſſed by it, and ſaw what they did; or, as Kimchi obſerves, in the place where they thought to have made a great ſlaughter; that is, in Armageddon, Rev. xvi. 16. ſo upon the ſlaughter of the ſeven thouſand names of men, or men of name and renown, ſuch as the kings here aſſembled, the remnant will be affrighted, Rev. xi. 13. And pain, as of a woman in travail; this figure is made uſe of elſewhere, when the deſtruction of Babylon and the coming of Chriſt are ſpoken of; ſee Iſai. xiii. 8. 1 Theſſ. v. 2, 3.

℣. 7. Thou breakeſt the ſhips of Tarſhiſh, with an eaſt wind.] This is either another ſimile, expreſſing the greatneſs of the dread and fear that ſhall now ſeize the kings of the earth; which will be, as Kimchi obſerves, as if they were ſmitten with a ſtrong eaſt-wind, which breaks the ſhips of Tarſhiſh; and to the ſame purpoſe is the note of Aben Ezra; who ſays, the pſalmiſt compares the pain that ſhall take hold upon them, to an eaſt-wind in the ſea, which breaks the ſhips; for by Tarſhiſh is meant, not Tarteſſus in Spain, nor Tarſus in Cilicia, or the port to which the prophet Jonah went and took ſhipping; but the ſea in general: or elſe this phraſe denotes the manner in which the antichriſtian kings, and antichriſtian ſtates, will be deſtroyed; juſt as ſhips upon the ocean are daſhed to pieces with a ſtrong eaſt-wind: or it may deſign the loſs of all their riches and ſubſtance brought to them in ſhips; hence the lamentations of merchants, and ſailors, and ſhipmaſters, Rev. xviii. 15—19.

℣. 8. As we have heard, ſo have we ſeen, &c.] Theſe are the words of the people of God making their obſervations on the above things; and ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi underſtand them of the people of Iſrael; and the former referring them to the war of Gog and Magog, paraphraſes them thus; "the Iſraelites ſhall ſay in that day, as we have "heard the prophets, who propheſied of the fall of "Gog and Magog; ſo have we ſeen in the city of "the Lord of hoſts." The words may be underſtood, ſtood, either of facts which have been reported and heard to have been done in time paſt, to which others will correſpond, and will be ſeen to do ſo in the latter day; as for inſtance, as it has been heard that God inflicted plagues upon Egypt; ſo it will be ſeen, that he will pour out the vials of his wrath upon the great city, which is ſpiritually called Egypt and Sodom: as it has been heard, that God brought his people Iſrael out of Egypt with a mighty hand; ſo it will be ſeen, that he will deliver his people from the captivity and tyranny of the man of ſin, and will call them out from Babylon a little before the deſtruction of it: as it has been heard, that Pharaoh and his hoſt were drowned in the red ſea; ſo it will be ſeen, that Babylon ſhall be thrown down like a millſtone caſt into the ſea, and be found no more: as it has been heard, that literal Babylon is deſtroyed; ſo it will be ſeen, that myſtical Babylon will be deſtroyed alſo: and as it has been heard, that the kings of the nations, at ſeveral times, have gathered themſelves together againſt Jeruſalem, without effect; ſo it will be ſeen, that the kings of the earth will aſſemble together againſt the church of Chriſt; but, as ſoon as they ſhall come up to her, and look upon her, they ſhall be aſtoniſhed, and flee with the utmoſt conſternation, fear and dread, and be utterly ruined: or elſe the ſenſe is, as it has been heard, from the promiſes and prophecies delivered out from time to time, that God will grant his preſence to his church and people, and will be the protection of them, and will deſtroy all his and their enemies; ſo, it has been ſeen, that theſe have been fulfilled, more or leſs, in all ages; in the latter day their accompliſhment will be full and manifeſt, even in the city of the Lord of hoſts; of the hoſts of heaven and earth, of all armies above and below; and therefore the church muſt be ſafe under his protection. In the city of our God; the covenant-God of his people; wherefore, as the former title declares his power, this ſhews his love and affection, and both together ſecure the happineſs of the ſaints: wherefore it follows, God will eſtabliſh it for ever. Selah. not only particular believers, of which the church conſiſts, are eſtabliſhed on the foundation, Chriſt; but the church itſelf is built on him, the rock againſt which the gates of hell cannot prevail; yet as they are not always in a ſettled and conſtant condition, ſo neither is that, being ſometimes toſſed with the tempeſts of afflictions and perſecutions, and ſometimes in one place, and ſometimes in another; but in the latter day it will be eſtabliſhed on the top of the mountains; and which is a deſirable thing by all the ſaints, and what they ſhould, as many do, earneſtly pray for; and which God will do in his own time; and then it ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever, and be a tabernacle that ſhall not be taken down; not one of its ſtakes ſhall be removed, nor any of its cords broken, Iſa. ii. 2. and lxii. 7. Pſal. lxxxvii. 5. Iſa. xxxiii. 20.

℣. 9. We have thought of thy loving-kindneſs, O God, &c.] Jarchi interprets it, we have waited for thy loving-kindneſs; to ſee thy ſalvation; and ſome, as Ben Melech obſerves, explain it of hope and expectation; as if the ſenſe was, we have hoped for thy loving-kindneſs; ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, and the word uſed has the ſignification of tarrying, 1 Sam. xiv. 9. God has his ſet time to favour his Zion, and till that time comes, it is right in them to be hoping, expecting, and waiting for it. The Chaldee paraphraſe is, we have eſteemed thy goodneſs; it being very excellent, exceeding valuable, and better than life itſelf; but other Jewiſh writers, as Menachem, Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, render it as we do, we have thought, &c. The loving-kindneſs of God towards his people in Chriſt, is a very delightful and profitable ſubject to dwell in meditation upon, to conſider the objects, inſtances, cauſe, and nature of it; and ſerves greatly to encourage faith and hope, to draw out love to God, and engage to a ready and chearful obedience to his will; and this is ſometimes done in public, as well as in private converſation, and in the cloſet; as follows. In the midſt of thy temple; the church of Chriſt, which is of his building, where he dwells, and grants his preſence, and is often called the temple of God in the New Teſtament, in alluſion to Solomon's temple; ſee 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. 2 Cor. vi. 16. Eph. ii. 21. here the word of God is preached, his ordinances adminiſtred, and his preſence granted; which are inſtances of his loving-kindneſs, and lead his people to think of it; and particularly when the faithful miniſters of the goſpel make mention of it, and the ordinance of the ſupper is adminiſtring, which is intended to bring to remembrance the love of God and Chriſt: moreover, in the latter day, to which this pſalm belongs, the temple of God will be opened, Rev. xi. 19. and xv. 5. that is, the true worſhip of God will be reſtored, and pure and undefiled religion freely exerciſed; the goſpel will be clearly and fully preached; and the ordinances adminiſtred as they were firſt delivered, which will lead the ſaints to think of the loving-kindneſs of God unto them; and particularly when they ſhall ſee the angels with the ſeven vials, the executioners of God's wrath on the antichriſtian ſtates, go forth from the temple to pour them out upon them, Rev. xv. 6. and xvi. 1.

℣. 10. According to thy name, O God, ſo is thy praiſe unto the ends of the earth, &c.] That is, as he himſelf is in the perfections of his nature, which are diſplayed in the works of his hands, throughout the whole creation; ſo is, or ought his praiſe to be: or rather, as in the latter day his name will be great in all the earth, Mal. i. 11. ſo will his praiſe be; and as his name will be one, Zech. xiv. 9. he will be one Lord, there will be one faith and one baptiſm; his worſhip, word, and ordinances will be uniformly obſerved and attended to; ſo will be his praiſe: all the ſaints will unite together in giving glory to him: he, and he alone, ſhall be exalted. Moreover, his goſpel is his name, Acts ix. 15. and that in the latter day will be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, Rev. xiv. 8. and multitudes, both of Jews and Gentiles, will be converted, and from the uttermoſt parts of the earth will be heard ſongs of praiſe and glory unto him, Iſa. xxiv. 15, 16. Thy right-hand is full of righteouſneſs; of all ſpiritual bleſſings for his people; and particularly of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which God accepts of, imputes unto, and liberally beſtows upon them: and it is alſo full of punitive juſtice, which he inflicts on his and their enemies; his right-hand teaches him terrible things, and theſe terrible things he does in righteouſneſs; all his works are in righteouſneſs, which the right-hand, being the inſtrument of action, is a token of. Moreover, Chriſt is the right-hand of God; he is the man of his right-hand, and as dear to him as his right-hand; he is the right-hand of his righteouſneſs, by which he upholds his people; and this right-hand of his is full of righteouſneſs; he does nothing elſe but righteouſneſs; he is the author and donor donor of it to his people, and will execute righteouſneſs upon his enemies; in righteouſneſs he will make war with them, Rev. xix. 11. and which is greatly the ſenſe of this paſſage, as appears by the following verſe.

℣. 11. Let mount Zion rejoice, &c.] The church in general; ſee ℣. 1, 2. Heb. xii. 22. Rev. xiv. 1. Let the daughters of Judah be glad; particular churches; and ſo the Targum renders it, the congregations of the houſe of Judah; or particular believers; ſuch as are called the daughters of Jeruſalem, and the daughters of Zion, Cant. iii. 10, 11. theſe are exhorted to joy and gladneſs, at the loving-kindneſs of God, at the ſpread of his name and glory to the ends of the earth, and at his righteouſneſs his right-hand is full of; and as it follows, Becauſe of thy judgments; executed on the antichriſtian kings, ℣. 4—7. and on all the antichriſtian ſtates, and on the whore of Babylon, and thoſe who have committed fornication with her; ſee Rev. xix. 1, 2.

℣. 12. Walk about Zion, and go round about her, &c.] Theſe words are either an addreſs to the enemies of the church, ſarcaſtically delivered; calling upon them to come, and ſurround, and beſiege Zion, and ſee what the iſſue and conſequence of it will be, even the ſame as that of the kings, ℣. 4—6. or to the builders of Zion, as Jarchi obſerves, to come and take a ſurvey of it, and ſee what repairs were neceſſary; or rather to the ſaints, to the daughters of Judah before mentioned, to take a view of the ſtrength and defence of the church, for their own comfort and encouragement, and to report the ſame to others for theirs alſo; for by walking around it, may be obſerved the foundation, the rock and eminence on which it is built, Chriſt Jeſus; the wall of it, the Lord himſelf, a wall of fire; the entrance into it, Chriſt the gate of righteouſneſs; the fortreſs and ſtrong-hold of it the ſame; and the guards about it, the watchmen on its walls, the miniſters of the goſpel, and an innumerable company of angels, that in a circle ſurround both miniſters and people; ſee Rev. vii. 11. Tell the towers thereof; ſee 2 Chron. xxvi. 9. Iſai. xxxiii. 18. the Lord himſelf is the tower of his people, high and ſtrong, which ſecures and defends them from all their enemies, Pſal. xviii. 2. and lxii. 3. Prov. xviii. 10. the miniſters of the goſpel, who are immoveable, and are ſet for the defence of it, Jer. vi. 27. the ſcriptures of truth, which are like a tower built for an armoury, out of which the ſaints are furniſhed and provided with proper armour, whereby they are able to engage with falſe teachers, and to overcome the evil one, Cant. iv. 4. and the ordinances of the goſpel, the church's two breaſts, ſaid to be as towers, Cant. viii. 10. ſome render the words, tell in the towers[1]; publiſh on the houſe-tops, declare in the high-places of the city, in the moſt public manner, the great things of the goſpel, which relate to the glory of Chriſt and his church.

℣. 13. Mark ye well her bulwarks, &c.] Such as the free favour of God in Chriſt; which is not only as a ſhield, but as a bulwark to the church; his everlaſting love, electing grace, the covenant of grace, with its bleſſings and promiſes, all which are more immoveable than rocks and mountains; and eſpecially the power of God, which ſurrounds his church, as the mountains did Jeruſalem; and by which they are kept and preſerved as in a garriſon, Pſal. cxxv. 2. 1 Peter i. 5. Alſo ſalvation by Chriſt; his righteouſneſs, ſacrifice and ſatisfaction, which God has appointed for walls and bulwarks, and which make the city, the church, a ſtrong and impregnable one, Iſa. xxvi. 1. Likewiſe the Spirit of God, and his operations and influences, which are a ſtandard againſt the enemy's flood of oppoſition and perſecution; and who being in his church and people, is greater than he that is in the world, Iſa. lix. 19. 1 John iv. 4. Some render the words, ſet your hearts on her ſtrength, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; that is, on Chriſt, who is the ſtrength of the poor and needy in their diſtreſs; the ſtrength of their hearts, of their lives, and of their ſalvation, and the ſecurity of the church. Others render them, ſet your hearts on her armies, as the Targum is; her volunteers, her ſoldiers, who endure hardneſs as good ſoldiers of Chriſt, fight the Lord's battles, and are more than conquerors through him; and a lovely ſight it is to behold them, with Chriſt at the head of them; ſee Rev. xix. 14. Conſider her palaces; for Jehovah, Father, Son and Spirit, have their dwelling-places in Zion; and here, beſides apoſtles, prophets, evangeliſts, and ordinary miniſters of the Word, who are rulers and officers ſet in the firſt place, every ſaint is a prince and a king; and has a place and a name here, better than that of ſons and daughters of the greateſt potentate on earth; every dwelling-place in mount Zion is a palace. That ye may tell it to the generation following; that is, the beauty and glory, ſtrength and ſafety of the church; and even all that is ſpoken of her in this pſalm, as well as what follows: this is the end propoſed, by taking a circuit round Zion, and making the above obſervations on it.

℣. 14. For this God is our God for ever and ever, &c.] Who is ſpoken of throughout the whole pſalm, as greatly to be praiſed, as well as is known in Zion, as the ſtability, ſecurity and protection of her. This is ſaid as pointing unto him as if viſible, as Chriſt is God manifeſt in the fleſh, now in goſpel-times, to which this pſalm belongs; as diſtinguiſhing him from all others, from the gods of the Gentiles, rejected by the people of God; as claiming an intereſt in him as their covenant-God; as exulting in the view of ſuch relation to him; as ſuggeſting how happy they were on this account; and eſpecially ſince this relation will always continue, being founded in an everlaſting covenant, and ariſing from the unchangeable love of God. He will be our guide, even unto death; the Lord orders the ſteps of the righteous, holds them by the right hand, and guides them with his counſel and in judgment: Chriſt, the great ſhepherd of the flock, feeds them, as the antitype of David, according to the integrity of his heart, and guides them by the ſkilfulneſs of his hands; he guides their feet in the ways of peace, life and ſalvation, by himſelf; he leads them into green paſtures, beſides the ſtill waters, and unto fountains of living waters: the Spirit of the Lord leads them to the fulneſs of Chriſt; guides them into all truth, as it is in him; directs them into his and his Father's love, and leads them on to the land of uprightneſs. And this guide is an everlaſting one; even unto death, or in death, or above death[k]; ſo as not to be hurt of the ſecond death. He guides not only to the brink of Jordan's river, but thro' the deep waters of it, and never leaves till he has landed them ſafe on the ſhores of eternity: and ſome, as Aben Ezra, render the word as if it was עולמית for ever; and others, as Abendana obſerves, render it ſecretly; the Lord ſometimes leading his people in ways dark and hidden to

[1] מגרליה in turribus ejus, Sept. in turribus ejus, V. L.

[k] על מות ſuper mortem, Montanus; ſupra mortem, Cocceius, Guſſetius, Michaelis; ſo Syr. verſ. in ipſa morte, Pfeiffer, Dub. Vex. loc. 66 to them: and others give the ſenſe of it, as in the days of youth; that is, God is the guide of his people in old age as in youth; he is always their guide, and ever will be: to which ſenſe incline R. Moſes in Aben Ezra, others in Kimchi and Abendana, and as alſo Jarchi and the Chaldee paraphraſe; but Kimchi and Ben Melech render it as we do, unto death, or unto our death.

PSALM XLIX.

To the chief muſician, a pſalm for the ſons of Korah.

ABEN EZRA ſays, this pſalm is a very excellent one, ſince in it is explained the Light of the world to come, and of the rational and immortal ſoul; and Kimchi is of opinion, that it reſpects both this world and that which is to come: and indeed it treats of the vanity of truſting in riches; of the inſufficiency of them for the redemption of the ſoul; of the ſhort continuance of worldly honour and ſubſtance; of the certainty of death, and of the reſurrection of the dead. And the deſign of it is to expoſe the folly of truſting in uncertain riches, and to comfort the people of God under the want of them.

℣. 1. Hear this, &c.] Not the law, as ſome Jewiſh writers [1] interpret it, which was not deſirable to be heard by thoſe that did hear it; it being a voice of wrath and terror, a curſing law, and a miniſtration of condemnation and death; but rather אחוויתא דא this news, as the Targum; the good news of the goſpel; the word of this ſalvation; the voice from heaven; the word not ſpoken by angels, but by the Lord himſelf: or זאת החכמה this wiſdom, as Kimchi interprets it; which the pſalmiſt was about to ſpeak of, ℣. 3. alſo the parable and dark ſaying he ſhould attend unto and open, ℣. 4. and indeed it may take in the whole ſubject-matter of the pſalm. All ye people; not the people of Iſrael only, but all the people of the world, as appears from the following clauſe; whence it is evident, that this pſalm belongs to goſpel-times; in which the middle wall of partition is broken down, and there is no difference of people; God is the God both of Jews and Gentiles; Chriſt is the Saviour and Redeemer of one as well as of the other; the Spirit of God has been poured out upon the latter; the goſpel has been ſent into all the world, and all are called upon to hear it. Give ear, all ye inhabitants of the world, or of time; ſo the word is rendered age, the age of a man, Pſal. xxxix. 5. The inhabitants of this world are but for a time; wherefore Ben Melech interprets the phraſe by אנשי דומן men of time, the inhabitants of time; it is peculiar to the moſt High to inhabit eternity, Iſa. lvii. 15. Under the goſpel-diſpenſation there is no diſtinction of places; the goſpel is not confined to the land of Judea; the ſound of it is gone into all the world, and men may worſhip God, and offer incenſe to his name in every place; and whoever fears him in any nation is accepted of him.

℣. 2. Both low and high, &c.] Or both the ſons of Adam, and the ſons of men. By the ſons of Adam, are meant the multitude of the people, as Ben Melech explains it; the common people, the meaner ſort, the baſe things of this world; and ſuch are they, generally ſpeaking, who are called by grace under the goſpel-diſpenſation: and by the ſons of men, are meant the princes, nobles, and great men of the earth; men of high birth and illuſtrious extraction: ſo Adam is rendered, the mean man, and Iſh, the word here uſed, the great man, in Iſa. ii. 9. And tho' not many, yet ſome of this ſort are called by grace; and all of them have a peculiar concern in many things ſpoken of in this pſalm; ſee ℣. 12, 16, 17, 20. Rich and poor together; theſe are called upon to hearken to what is after ſaid, that the one may not be elated with, and truſt in their riches, and that the other may not be dejected on account of their poverty; and ſeeing both muſt die, and meet together at the judgment-day; and inaſmuch as the goſpel is preached to one as to another; and for the moſt part the poor hear it, receive it, and are called by it.

℣. 3. My mouth ſhall ſpeak of wiſdom, &c.] Or wiſdoms [m], of Chriſt, who is ſo called, Prov. i. 20. and ix. 1. He being as a divine perſon the wiſdom of God, and the only wiſe God; and having all the treaſures of wiſdom in him, as man and Mediator: of him the prophet ſpake, and of him the apoſtles, and all goſpel-miniſters ſpeak; of the glories of his perſon, of the fulneſs of his grace, and of his wonderful works; eſpecially of that of redemption and ſalvation by him, in which there is an abounding of wiſdom and prudence. Or the goſpel may be meant, and all the truths of it, in which there is a glorious diſplay of divine wiſdom; it is the wiſdom of God in a myſtery; hidden and ancient wiſdom; and which, when truly underſtood, makes a man wiſe unto ſalvation; ſee 1 Cor. ii. 6, 7. And the meditation of my heart ſhall be of underſtanding; or underſtandings [n]; and this is in order to the former; what the heart meditates the mouth ſpeaks. If the heart meditates on underſtanding, the mouth will ſpeak of wiſdom; and a man ſhould think before he ſpeaks, eſpecially the miniſters of the goſpel: they ought to meditate on the word of God, the goſpel, and the truths of it, that their profiting may appear to all; that they may underſtand divine things themſelves, and deliver them out to the underſtanding of others: their concern ſhould be, that through meditation they may have a good treaſure of wiſdom and knowledge in their hearts, that out of it they may bring forth things pleaſant and profitable unto others.

℣. 4. I will incline mine ear to a parable, &c.] In which way of ſpeaking the doctrines of the goſpel were delivered out by Chriſt, Matt. xiii. 3, 35. Wherefore the prophet, perſonating his apoſtles and diſciples, ſignifies that he would liſten thereunto, that he might attain to the knowledge thereof, and communicate it to others. I will open my dark ſaying upon the harp; the ænigmas, riddles, and myſteries of the goſpel, being underſtood by the miniſters of it, are opened and explained in a very pleaſant and delightful manner; they are made clear and evident, and are as a lovely ſong upon an harp; ſee Ezek. xxxiii. 32.

℣. 5.

[1] Midraſh Tillim in loc. Yalkut Simeoni, par. 2. fol. 106. 2. Coccius, Gejerus, Michaelis.

[m] חכמות ſapientias, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus.

[n] חבונות intelligentias, Pagninus, Montanus.

ỿ. 5. Wherefore ſhould I fear in the days of evil, &c.] This is the principal thing that all are before called to hearken to. This is the wiſdom and underſtanding the pſalmiſt had been meditating upon, and was about to utter; this is the parable he inclined his ear to, and the dark ſaying he would open; namely, that a ſaint has nothing to fear in the worſt of times; which is a riddle to a natural man. Aben Ezra interprets the days of evil, of the days of old age, as they are called, Eccleſ. xii. 1. which bring on diſeaſes, weakneſs and death; in which a good man has no reaſon to fear; as that he ſhould want the neceſſaries of life, ſince they that fear the Lord ſhall want no good thing; or that he ſhould not hold out to the end, ſeeing God, who is the guide of youth, is the ſtaff of old age, and carries to hoary hairs, and will never leave nor forſake: and though the wicked man in old age has reaſon to be afraid of death and eternity at hand, the ſaint has not; but may ſing on the borders of the grave, O death, where is thy ſting! &c. Alſo days in which iniquity abounds, and error and hereſy prevail, are days of evil; and though the good man may fear he ſhall be led aſide by the ill example of ſome, or by the craft of others; yet he need not, ſince the foundation of God ſtands ſure, and he knows them that are his, and will take care of them and preſerve them. Moreover, times of affliction and perſecution are evil days; ſee Epheſ. v. 16. and vi. 13. and ſuch will be the hour of temptation, that ſhall try the inhabitants of the earth, Rev. iii. 10. Yet the righteous man need not fear, ſince it is always well with him, let his caſe and circumſtances be what they will. Yea, the day of death, and the day of judgment, are days of evil to wicked men; and therefore they put them away far from them, Amos vi. 3. but believers have reaſon to rejoice at them, the day of their death being better than the day of their birth; and the day of judgment will be the time of the glorious appearing of Chriſt to them. It is added, when the iniquity of my heels ſhall compaſs me about; that is, the ſins of life and converſation; heels denote ſteps, and the word is ſometimes ſo rendered, as in Pſal. lvi. 6. and iniquity intends ſin committed in walking; and ſo deſigns not original ſin, as ſome have thought, but actual ſins and tranſgreſſions: and theſe may be ſaid to compaſs the ſaints about, when they are chaſtiſed for them, and ſo are brought to a ſenſe and acknowledgment of them, and to be humbled for them; and then they have nothing to fear in a ſlaviſh way, ſince theſe chaſtiſements are not in wrath, or in a way of vindictive juſtice, or puniſhment for ſin; but the fruits of love and favour. Or the ſenſe may be, when death, the fruit of iniquity, the wages of ſin, ſurrounds and ſeizes upon me; בסופי in my end, as the Targum; in my laſt days, at the heel or cloſe of them, I will not fear: the ſaint has no reaſon to fear, when he walks through death's dark valley; for death is aboliſhed as a penal evil, its ſting is took away, and its curſe removed. Some render the words, when the iniquity of my ſupplanters ſhall compaſs me about [o]; meaning his enemies, who either lay in wait for him privately, and endeavoured to ſupplant him; or that purſued him cloſely, and preſſed upon his heels, juſt ready to deſtroy him; yet even then he ſignifies he ſhould not fear: and then the ſenſe is the ſame with Pſal. xxvii. 1, 2, 3. to which agree the Syriac and Arabic verſions, which render it, the iniquity of mine enemies; or, when my enemies ſurround me: and it may be literally rendered, when iniquity ſurrounds me at my heels [p]; that is, when men, who are iniquity itſelf, encompaſs me, are at my heels, ready to ſeize me, I will not fear.

ỿ. 6. They that truſt in their wealth, &c.] In their outward force, power and ſtrength; their horſes, chariots and armies; ſee Pſal. xxxiii. 16. and xx. 7. Iſa. xxxi. 1. or in their worldly goods and ſubſtance; which ſeems to be the ſenſe of the word here, as appears from ỿ. 10. To truſt in them, is to ſet the eye and heart upon them; or to take up reſt in them, to depend on them, to the neglect of divine providence, with reſpect to future living in this world; and to expect eternal happineſs hereafter, becauſe favoured with many earthly enjoyments here: ſo to do is evil. Wherefore the Targum is, Wo to the wicked that truſt in their ſubſtance. And it is alſo very weak and fooliſh to truſt in riches, ſince they are uncertain, are here to-day and gone to-morrow; and are unſatisfying, he that has much would ſtill have more: nor can they deliver from evil, from preſent judgments, from the ſword, the peſtilence, and famine; nor from death, nor from the future judgment, and wrath to come; and are often injurious to the ſpiritual and eternal welfare of men; ſee 1 Tim. vi. 9, 10, 17. Mark x. 24. And boaſt themſelves in the multitude of their riches; of their acquiſition of them by their own diligence and induſtry; and of their having them becauſe of ſome peculiar virtue and excellency in themſelves; and of the abundance of them. Such rejoicing and boaſting is evil; ſince riches are the gifts of God, the bleſſings of his providence; and are often beſtowed on perſons neither wiſe nor diligent, and much leſs deſerving; ſee Jer. ix. 23. The whole may be applied to the Romiſh Antichriſt and his followers, who truſt in and boaſt of their temporal riches, which in one hour will come to nought, Rev. xviii. 7, 17. and of the treaſure of the church, of merit, and works of ſupererogation; with all which they cannot redeem one ſoul from ruin and deſtruction, as follows:

ỿ. 7. None of them can by any means redeem his brother, &c.] That is, with their ſubſtance or riches, as the Targum and Jarchi ſupply. Some, according to the order of the words in the original, render them, a brother redeeming cannot redeem a man, or any one [q]: but, as Aben Ezra obſerves, אח a brother, is the effect, and איש a man, is the efficient. The Targum is, His brother that is a captive, a man redeeming cannot redeem with his ſubſtance; or by any means redeem. Indeed a rich man may redeem his brother from debt, or from a priſon, into which he is caſt for it, by paying his debts for him; or from thraldom and bondage, being taken captive and becoming a priſoner of war, by giving a ranſom for him. This he may do with reſpect to man; but with reſpect to God, he cannot with all his riches pay the debts he owes to the law and juſtice of God; nor free him from his bondage to ſin, Satan, and the law, by whom he is held a captive. The ſenſe here is, that he cannot redeem him from death; he cannot, with all his money, ſecure him from dying; nor when dead, bring him back from the grave; and much leſs deliver him from eternal death, or wrath to come; this only God can do, ſee ỿ. 15. Nor give to God a ranſom for him; a ranſom to redeem from ſin, and ſo from the curſe of the law and eternal ternal death, muſt be given to God, againſt whom ſin is committed, the Lawgiver that is able to ſave and deſtroy; whoſe law is tranſgreſſed by it, and muſt be fulfilled; and whoſe juſtice is affronted and injured, and muſt be ſatisfied; and who is the creditor to whom men are debtors, and therefore the payment muſt be made to him. Hence our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Redeemer of his people, paid the ranſom-price to God, and offered himſelf a ſacrifice to him; ſee Epheſ. v. 2. Rev. v. 9. But this ranſom is not of man's giving, but of God's; it is of his finding out in his infinite wiſdom: he ſet forth and ſent forth Chriſt to be the ranſom or propitiation [r], as the word here uſed ſignifies; and Chriſt came to give his life and himſelf a ranſom for many, and is the propitiation for their ſins: and this is a ſufficient one, a plenteous redemption, and there needs no other, nor is there any other; there were typical atonements under the law, but there is no real atonement, propitiation or ranſom, but by the precious blood of Chriſt; not by corruptible things, as ſilver and gold; with theſe a man cannot give to God a ranſom for himſelf, or for his brother.

[o] עון עקבי iniquitas ſupplantatorum meorum, Gejerus; inſidiatorum meorum, ſome in Vatablus. [p] Iniquitas oppreſſorum, i. e. iniquiſſimi mei oppreſſores ambiunt me, Gejerus. [q] So Cocceius; and ſome in Michaelis.

℣. 8. For the redemption of their ſoul is precious, &c.] Or heavy [s]; it is, as Jarchi obſerves, heavier than their ſubſtance: it is too weighty a matter for the richeſt man in the world to engage in; he is not equal to it; his riches are not an equivalent to the redemption of a ſoul which has ſinned, and which is of more worth than the whole world; what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul? or another for him? all the ſubſtance of his houſe would be utterly deſpiſed. It requires a greater price for the redemption of it than gold and ſilver, and therefore it is impoſſible to be obtained by any ſuch means; and which may be the ſenſe of the word here, as Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it; and ſo it is uſed for that which is rare, difficult, yea impoſſible, not to be found or come at, in 1 Sam. iii. 1. Dan. ii. 10, 11. The only price of redemption of the ſoul is the precious blood of Chriſt; his life is the ranſom-price, yea he himſelf, 1 Peter i. 18, 19. Matt. xx. 28. 1 Tim. ii. 6. nor is the redemption of the ſoul poſſible upon any other foot. And it ceaſeth for ever; that is, the redemption of the ſoul; it muſt have ceaſed, it could never have been accompliſhed, had not Chriſt undertook it and performed it; he has obtained eternal redemption, and in him we have it, and in no other. Or the words may be rendered, and he ceaſeth for ever; the brother whoſe ſoul or life is to be redeemed, he dies; ſee Pſal. xii. 1. and dies the ſecond and eternal death, for ought his brother can do for him, with all his riches: or he that attempts to redeem him, he leaves off for ever [t]; ſee Pſal. xxxvi. 3. whether he will or no, as Jarchi obſerves; he ceaſes from redeeming his brother; he finds he cannot do it; his endeavours are vain and fruitleſs. Some join and connect theſe words with the following, and it ceaſeth for ever, that he ſhould ſtill live for ever, &c. that is, it is impoſſible that ſuch an one by ſuch means ſhould live for ever. Guſſetius [u] renders and interprets the words quite to another ſenſe, But the redemption of their ſoul ſhall come; the true redemption-price by Chriſt; and which being once paid and perfectly done, ceaſeth for ever, and ſhall never be required more; ſo that he for whom it is made, ſhall live for ever, as in the next verſe; which is a truly evangelic ſenſe.

℣. 9. That he ſhould ſtill live for ever, &c.] Or though he ſhould live, &c. [w] Though the rich man ſhould live ever ſo long, a thouſand years twice told, as in Eccleſ. vi. 6. yet he could not in all this time, with all his riches, redeem his brother; and at laſt muſt die himſelf, and ſo muſt his brother too, as his own experience and obſervation may aſſure him, ℣. 10. Or the meaning is, he cannot ſo redeem his brother, or give to God a ranſom for him, that he ſhould live a corporal life for ever, and never die; ſince all men die, wiſe men and fools, rich and poor; and much leſs that he ſhould live and enjoy an eternal life, as the Targum; a life of happineſs and bliſs hereafter, which is not to be obtained by gold and ſilver, but is the pure gift of God. And not ſee corruption; the grave, the pit of corruption, the houſe appointed for all living: or the judgment of hell, according to the Chaldee paraphraſe.

℣. 10. For he ſeeth that wiſe men die, &c.] This is a reaſon convincing the rich man, that with all his riches he cannot redeem his brother from death; ſince he muſt ſee, by daily and conſtant experience, that none are exempted from dying, no not even the wiſe man; and therefore not the rich, ſince wiſdom is better than riches, and is ſaid to give life, Eccleſ. vii. 12. and yet wiſe men die, yea Solomon, the wiſeſt of men died. Worldly wiſe men, ſuch who are wiſer in their generation than the children of light, know how to get money and eſtates, and to provide for futurity, and yet cannot ſecure themſelves from death: men that are wiſe in natural things, know the ſecrets of nature, the conſtitution of human bodies, what is proper to preſerve health and life, as philoſophers and phyſicians, and yet cannot deliver themſelves from death: wiſe politicians, prudent magiſtrates, inſtructers of mankind in all the branches of uſeful knowledge, who are profitable to themſelves and others, and are the moſt deſerving to live becauſe of uſefulneſs, yet theſe die as well as others: ſuch as are ſpiritually wiſe, wiſe unto ſalvation, who know themſelves, and know Chriſt, whom to know is life eternal; and the wiſeſt among them, ſuch as are capable of teaching others the hidden and myſterious wiſdom of God; even theſe wiſe men and prophets do not live for ever. The Targum interprets this of wicked wiſe men, adjudged to hell; or as it is in the king's Bible, "the wicked wiſe men, who die the ſecond "death;" ſee Rev. ii. 11. and xx. 6. and xxi. 8. and are adjudged to hell. Likewiſe the fool and the brutiſh perſon periſh; the worldly fool, who truſts in his riches, and boaſts of them; his ſoul is at once required of him. The atheiſtical fool, who ſays there is no God, no judgment, no future ſtate; has made a covenant with death, and with hell is at an agreement; this covenant does not ſtand, he dies, and finds himſelf dreadfully miſtaken: the fool that is ſo immorally, who makes a mock at ſin, a jeſt of religion, and puts away the evil day far from him; his great wickedneſs to which he is given, ſhall not deliver him from death. Every man is become brutiſh in his knowledge; but there are ſome among the people more brutiſh than others, who are as natural brute beaſts, and ſhall utterly periſh in their own corruptions. The wiſe good man dies, but periſhes not; he inherits eternal life; but the wicked fool and brute not only periſh by death, but are puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction in ſoul and body. And leave their wealth to

[r] כפרו propitiationem ſuam, Pagninus, Montanus. Montanus, Vatablus. [s] יקר gravis, De Dieu, Michaelis. [t] חדל deſinet, [u] Ebr. Comment. p. 345, [w] ויחי etiamſi vivat, Gejerus.

to others; they cannot carry it with them, ſo that it will be of no ſervice to them after death any more than at it: if the judge could be bribed by gold, as he cannot, they will not have it with them to do it; they came into the world naked, and ſo they will go out, and carry nothing with them, but leave all behind them; either to their babes, their children and heirs, Pſal. xvii. 14. or to ſtrangers, they know not who; and if they do, they do not know whether they will be wiſe men or fools, or what uſe they will make of it, Pſal. xxxix. 6. Eccleſ. ii. 18, 19.

ỿ. 11. Their inward thought is, that their houſes ſhall continue for ever, &c.] This is the thought of their hearts, what they ſecretly imagine, and conclude within themſelves; either that their families, which may be meant by their houſes, ſee 2 Sam. iii. 1. ſhall continue in ſucceeding ages to the end of the world, to inherit their poſſeſſions, and perpetuate their name; though often ſo it is, that great families become extinct, and the ſeed of the wicked is cut off: or that their magnificent buildings, which they have erected to dwell in, and for their honour and glory, ſhall abide for ever; though in a little time, ſo it is by one means or another, like the buildings of the temple, not one ſtone is left upon another. Or the words may be rendered, in the midſt of them (their heirs to whom they leave their wealth) their houſes ſhall remain for ever, ſo Aben Ezra; that is, ſo they fancy they will; but this is not always true, for fine houſes and large eſtates belonging to them, often paſs into other hands and families. The word קרבם rendered their inward part, by a tranſpoſition of two letters in it, may be read קברם their graves, as Aben Ezra, Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve; and to this ſenſe the Targum, Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic verſions render the words: and then the meaning is, that of all the houſes they have built or been poſſeſſed of, they have only one left, and that is the grave; in which they ſhall dwell until the reſurrection, and therefore is called a long home, Eccleſ. xii. 5. ſee Job xvii. 13. and xxx. 23. And their dwelling-places to all generations; which ſignify the ſame as before. They call their lands after their own names; as Egypt was called Mizraim, Ethiopia was called Cuſh, and Paleſtine Canaan, from men who were the firſt poſſeſſors of them, Gen. x. 6. Or they proclaim their names throughout the land [x]; they ſeek to get a name, and ſpread and continue it in all parts of the world; being unconcerned about their names being written in heaven, or about having an houſe not made with hands eternal there.

ỿ. 12. Nevertheleſs, man being in honour, abideth not, &c.] Or Adam: and ſome underſtand this of the firſt man Adam, who was created and crowned with glory and honour; but it did not abide with him, nor he in that: ſo ſome Jewiſh writers [y] interpret it. But whether the words will admit of this ſenſe or no, the general view of the pſalmiſt, which is to ſhew the inconſtancy and inſtability of worldly honour, may be exemplified in the caſe of the firſt man; he was in honour, he was created after the image and likeneſs of God, and ſo was the glory of God, being his image; he was in friendſhip with God, as many inſtances ſhew, and had dominion over all the creatures below; he had much knowledge of God, and communion with him, and was a pure, holy, and upright creature; but he continued not long in this ſtate of honour and glory; he lodged not a night [z], as the words may be rendered; ſee Gen. xxviii. 11. and as they are by ſome, who conclude from hence, that Adam fell the ſame day in which he was created; and which is the ſenſe of the above Jewiſh writers, who ſay, he was driven out of paradiſe the evening of that day: but though he might ſtand longer, and the word is ſometimes uſed of a longer continuance; ſee Pſal. xxv. 13. yet by the account in Geneſis, it looks as if he continued in his ſtate of honour but a ſhort time. He is like the beaſts that periſh; becoming mortal in his body, and brutiſh and ſtupid in his underſtanding. Or, he is like the beaſts, they periſh, or are cut off [a]; the word being in the plural number, which ſhews that not a ſingle individual perſon is meant, but men in general; or however, ſuch of the ſons of Adam that come to honour: theſe do not abide long in it, their honour is a very ſhort-lived one, ſometimes it does not laſt their lives: they that are in high places, are in ſlippery ones, and are often caſt down from the pinnacle of honour in a moment; and if their glory does abide with them throughout the day of life, yet it ſhall not lodge with them in the night of the grave; thither their glory ſhall not deſcend after them, ỿ. 17. and when they die, they periſh like the beaſts; as they are like them in life, ſtupid, brutiſh and ignorant, ſo in death; as the beaſt dies, ſo do they, Eccleſ. iii. 19. as the one dies without any thought of or preparation for death, ſo do the other; as the one carries nothing along with it, ſo neither do the other: as beaſts that die of themſelves, for ſuch are here meant, as Junius well obſerves, are good for nothing but to be caſt into the ditch; ſo are wicked men, notwithſtanding all their riches and honour; yea, it is worſe with them than with the beaſts, ſince after death comes judgment, and after that the ſecond death, the wrath of God.

ỿ. 13. This their way is their folly, &c.] This their laſt end becoming like the beaſts that periſh, which is the iſſue and event of all their confidence, ambition, and honour, ſhews the folly of their lives and conduct: or this their courſe of life, in truſting to their riches; boaſting of their wealth; pleaſing themſelves with the thoughts of the continuance of their houſes and dwelling-places to all generations; and calling their lands after their own names; all proclaim their folly. Or, as ſome render the words, this their way is their hope or confidence [b]; they place all their hope and confidence in their riches and honour, which is but a vain hope, and a fooliſh confidence. Yet their poſterity approve their ſayings. Selah; they are of the ſame ſentiments with their fathers; they ſay the ſame things, and do the ſame actions; tread in their ſteps, and follow the ſame track; though there have been ſuch innumerable inſtances of the vanity and inconſtancy of all worldly riches and grandeur.

ỿ. 14. Like ſheep they are laid in the grave, &c.] They are not in life like ſheep, harmleſs and innocent; nor reckoned as ſuch for the ſlaughter, as the people of God are; unleſs it be that they are like them, brutiſh and ſtupid, thoughtleſs of death, and unconcerned about their eſtate after it; and ſo die and go into the grave, like natural brute beaſts, made to be taken and deſtroyed, 2 Pet. ii. 12. or rather like ſheep that have been grazing in good paſture paſture in the day-time, at night are put into a dark and narrow pinfold; ſo wicked rich men, having lived in great abundance and plenty in the day of life, when the night of death comes, they are put into the dark and narrow grave. And it is further to be obſerved, that the compariſon is not to ſheep prepared for ſlaughter, and killed for food; for theſe are not laid in a ditch, to which the grave may anſwer; but, as Junius obſerves, to thoſe that die of themſelves; to rotten ſheep, and who are no other than carrion, and are good for nothing but to be caſt into a ditch; ſo wicked men are laid in the grave; but as to be laid in the grave is common to good and bad after death, rather the words ſhould be rendered, like ſheep they are laid in hell [c]; as the word is in Pſal. ix. 17. a place of utter darkneſs and miſery, where the wicked rich man was put when he died, Luke xvi. 19, 22, 23: Death ſhall feed on them; or rule them [d]; as ſhepherds rule their flocks, in imitation of whom kings govern their ſubjects; the ſame word is uſed of both; and ſo death is repreſented as a king, or rather as a tyrant reigning over the ſons of men; even over kings and princes, and the great men of the earth, who have reigned over others; ſee Rom. v. 14. or ſhall feed them [e], as the ſhepherd feeds the ſheep; not by leading them into green paſtures, into the Elyſian fields; but where a drop of water cannot be obtained to cool the tongue; into utter darkneſs, where are weeping, wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth; into the apartments of hell, and habitations of devils, to be gueſts with them, and live as they do: or ſhall feed on them; as the wolf on the ſheep, devouring their ſtrength, and conſuming their bodies, Job xviii. 13. but as this is no other than what it does to every one, rather the ſecond, or an eternal death is here meant; the wrath of God, the worm that is always gnawing, eating and conſuming, and never dies. And the upright ſhall have dominion over them in the morning; the upright are ſuch to whom the uprightneſs, or righteouſneſs of Chriſt is ſhewn or imputed, and who have right ſpirits renewed, and principles of grace and holineſs formed in them, and walk uprightly in their lives and converſations; theſe, in the morning of the reſurrection-day, when Chriſt the Sun of righteouſneſs ſhall ariſe, when the light of joy and gladneſs ſhall break forth upon his coming, at the beginning of the day of the Lord, which will laſt a thouſand years; they, the dead in Chriſt, riſing firſt, ſhall, during that time, reign with him as kings and prieſts; when the wicked, being deſtroyed in the general conflagration, ſhall become the footſtool of Chriſt, and be like aſhes under the ſoles of the feet of his people; and the kingdom, the dominion, and the greatneſs of the kingdom under the whole heaven, ſhall be given to the ſaints; ſee 1 Theſſ. iv. 16. Rev. xx. 5, 6. Mal. iv. 2, 3. Dan. vii. 27. and though this is a branch of the happineſs and glory of the people of God, yet it is here mentioned as an aggravation of the miſery of the wicked, who, in another ſtate, will be ſubject to thoſe they have tyrannized over here. And their beauty ſhall conſume in the grave from their dwelling; or their form [f] and figure; diſeaſes often deſtroy the beauty of a man, death changes his countenance, and makes a greater alteration ſtill; but the grave takes away the very form and figure of the man; or, as it is in the keri, or margin of the Hebrew text, and their rock ſhall conſume [g]; that is, their riches, which are their rock, fortreſs, and ſtrong city, and in which they place their truſt and confidence; theſe ſhall fail them when they come to the grave, which is their dwelling, and is the houſe appointed for all living: and ſeeing it is ſo, rather this ſhould be underſtood of hell [h], which will be the everlaſting manſion of wicked men, and in which they will be puniſhed in ſoul and body for ever; though rather the ſenſe is, when their rock, i. e. Chriſt, ſhall come to conſume the grave, and deſtroy its power; when he, I ſay, ſhall come out of his habitation, heaven, then ſhall the righteous have the dominion, 1 Theſſ. iv. 16.

[x] So Piſcator, Gejerus, Michaelis. [y] Bereſhit Rabba, ſ. 11. fol. 9. 1. 2. Pirke Eliezer, c. 19. [z] בל ילין non pernoctabit, Montanus, Amama; ſo Ainſworth. [a] נדמו exciſi ſunt, Montanus. [b] כסל למו eſt fiducia ipſorum, Cocceius, Gejerus; ſtolida fiducia vel ſpes, Michaelis.

℣. 15. But God will redeem my ſoul from the power of the grave, &c.] The pſalmiſt expreſſes his faith, that though he ſhould die, and for a while be under the power of the grave, yet he ſhould be redeemed from it in the reſurrection; which to the ſaints will be the day of redemption, Eph. iv. 30. their bodies then will be redeemed from mortality, weakneſs, corruption, and diſhonour, which attend them now, and in the grave; and which will be in conſequence of the redemption both of their ſouls and bodies, through the blood of Chriſt; ſee Hoſ. xiii. 14. or the words may be rendered, but God will redeem my ſoul from the power of hell; and ſo the Targum, "David ſaid by the ſpirit of "prophecy, but God will redeem my ſoul from "the judgment of hell;" that is, will keep and preſerve from the ſecond death, from being hurt by it, or from its having any power over him; and Chriſt, who is the Redeemer of his people, and who being God over all, is an able and mighty one, has redeemed the ſouls of his from wrath to come, hell, or the ſecond death, by deſtroying ſin, the cauſe of it, by ſatisfying the Law, the miniſtration of it, and by aboliſhing death itſelf; all which he has done by giving himſelf a ranſom-price for them, whereby he has procured the redemption which rich men, with all their gold and ſilver, could never obtain for themſelves or others. The reaſon why the pſalmiſt believed Chriſt would do this for him, follows. For he ſhall receive me. Selah. or, for he hath received me [i]; into his arms of love, into his grace and favour; which he does openly at converſion, and in effectual vocation; men being drawn to Chriſt by the cords of love, come to him, and are received by him, who caſts none out; and the argument from hence is very ſtrong, that ſuch whom Chriſt receives by his grace, he will redeem from the grave, or raiſe at the laſt day to the reſurrection of life: or, for he will receive me; as he does the ſouls of his people to glory at death, when, during their ſeparate ſtate, they will be happy with him, and takes their bodies into his care and cuſtody; from whence it may be ſtrongly concluded, he will raiſe them up again at the reſurrection-morn, and then will receive them ſoul and body to himſelf, and preſent them to his Father, and introduce them into his kingdom and glory; wherefore, as in ℣. 5. the good man has no reaſon to fear any thing in the day of evil; for when it goes ever ſo ill with others, it is well with him. The Targum in the king's Bible is, is, "he will lead me into his part or portion in the "world to come."

[c] לשאול in inferno, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth. [d] ירעם reget eos, Vatablus. [e] Paſcet eos, Muſculus, Tigurine verſion, Gejerus, Cocceius. [f] צורם figura eorum, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; forma eorum, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [g] צורם auxilium eorum, Sept. V. L. Eth. Ar. robur illorum, Muſculus; petra illorum, Cocceius. [h] שאול infernus, Muſculus, Junius & Tremellius, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth. [i] יקחני ſuſcepit me, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus, Muſculus, Gejerus.

ỿ. 16. Be not thou afraid when one is made rich, &c.] Who before was poor, or not ſo rich; but now become ſo, either by inheritance, or by his own diligence and induſtry, through the permiſſion of providence. This is to be underſtood, not of a good man, from whom oppreſſion is not to be feared; but it may be hoped he will do good with his riches, by relieving the poor, and miniſtring to the ſupport of the intereſt of religion, and uſing what power and authority he may have in defence of it: but it is to be interpreted of a wicked man; of one who neither fears God, nor regards man; who makes an ill uſe of his riches, power, and authority, to the oppreſſion of the poor, and the perſecution of the ſaints, and who ſeeks to be feared, when he is not loved; ſee Prov. xxviii. 12, 28. and xxix. 2. but the people of God ſhould not be afraid when this is the caſe, ſince God is their ſtrength, their light, and their ſalvation; and ſince wicked men can go no further than permitted, and at moſt can do no more than kill the body; ſee Pſal. xxvii. 1—3. Matt. x. 28. theſe words are an apoſtrophe of the pſalmiſt, either to his own ſoul, or to the ſaints, and every particular believer. When the glory of his houſe is increaſed; either the ſame with riches, ſo called, Gen. xxxi. 1. Rev. xxi. 24, 26. becauſe men are apt to glory in them, and for the moſt part obtain honour and glory from men by them; or children, and an increaſe of them, and eſpecially when they come to honour; as alſo the advancement of themſelves to high places of honour and truſt; as well as additional buildings, large, ſtately edifices, to make them look great, and perpetuate their names.

ỿ. 17. For when he dieth, he ſhall carry nothing away, &c.] Such men, with all their riches and honour, muſt die; therefore why ſhould men be afraid of them? or wherein are they to be accounted of, whoſe breath is in their noſtrils? nor can they carry either of them with them; their riches will be of no profit to them after death, when they will be upon a level with the poor, who will have nothing to fear from them; ſee 1 Tim. vi. 7. His glory ſhall not deſcend after him; either into the grave, the pit of corruption, the lower part of the earth, where kings, princes, counſellors and peaſants, are all alike, Job iii. 14, 15, 19. or into hell, where are no titles of honour, nor reſpect of perſons; no Pharaoh king of Egypt, or Sennacherib king of Aſſyria there; but plain Pharaoh, &c. ſee Ezek. xxxii. 31, 32.

ỿ. 18. Though while he lived, he bleſſed his ſoul, &c.] Praiſed and extolled himſelf on account of his acquiſitions and merit; or proclaimed himſelf an happy man, becauſe of his wealth and riches; or fooliſhly flattered himſelf with peace, proſperity, and length of days, and even with honour and glory after death. And men will praiſe thee when thou doſt well to thyſelf; or but [k] men will praiſe thee, &c. both rich and poor, all wiſe men; when, as the Jewiſh interpreters [l] generally explain the word, a man regards true wiſdom and religion, and is concerned for the welfare of his ſoul more than that of his body; or when thou thyſelf doeſt well; that is, to others, doing acts of beneficence, communicating to the neceſſities of the poor; or rather, when thou doeſt well to thyſelf, by enjoying the good things of life, taking his portion, eating the fruit of his labour, which is good and comely; ſee Eccl. v. 18—20. and vi. 1, 2. and xi. 9.

ỿ. 19. He ſhall go to the generation of his fathers, &c.] Be gathered to them at death; or to the dwelling-place of his fathers [m]; either the grave, or hell, or both; the habitation of his wicked anceſtors: unleſs the words be rendered, as they are by ſome, though he ſhall come to the age of his fathers [n]; live as long as they have done; yet he muſt die at laſt, and leave all behind, as they have done. They ſhall never ſee light; neither he nor his fathers; they ſhall never ſee the light of the ſun any more, nor return to the light of the living, but ſhall lie in the dark and ſilent grave until the reſurrection; or rather, they ſhall never enjoy eternal light, glory, and happineſs. The ultimate ſtate of glory is ſometimes expreſſed by light, John viii. 12. Col. i. 12. this the people of God, ſuch who are made light in the Lord, and are the children of the day, ſhall ſee; but wicked men ſhall not; they will be caſt into outer darkneſs, where are weeping, wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth.

ỿ. 20. Man that is in honour, &c.] A wicked man; as the Targum; ſee the note on ỿ. 12. And underſtandeth not; from whence his riches and honour come, and what uſe he ſhould make of them, and for what end he has them; or that underſtandeth not ſpiritual things, which relate to the ſalvation of his ſoul; who does not know God in Chriſt, nor the way of ſalvation by Chriſt; nor has any experience of the work of the Spirit of God upon his ſoul; nor has any ſpiritual underſtanding of the doctrines of the goſpel; nor knows himſelf, his ſtate and condition, and what true happineſs is, Is like the beaſts that periſh; ſee the note on ỿ. 12.

PSALM L.

A pſalm of Aſaph.

THIS pſalm is called a pſalm of Aſaph; either becauſe it was compoſed by him under divine inſpiration, ſince he was a prophet and a ſeer, 1 Chron. xxv. 2. 2 Chron. xxix. 30. or becauſe it was delivered to him to be ſung in public ſervice, he being a chief muſician; ſee 1 Chron. xvi. 7. and ſo it may be rendered, a pſalm for Aſaph; or unto Aſaph [o]; which was directed, ſent, and delivered to him, and might be wrote by David; and, as Junius thinks, after the angel had appeared to him, and he was directed where he ſhould build an altar to the Lord, 1 Chron. xxi. 18. The Targum, Kimchi, and R. Obadiah Gaon, interpret this pſalm of the day of judgment; and Jarchi takes it to be a prophecy of the future redemption by their expected Meſſiah; and indeed it does refer to the times of the goſpel-diſpenſation; for it treats of the calling of the Gentiles, of the abrogation of legal ſacrifices, and of the controverſy the Lord would have with the Jews for retaining them, and [k] ויודך atque celebraverint te, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [l] Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Kimchi & Ben Melech in loc.

[m] עד—דור ad habitationem, Gejerus. [n] Uſque ad ætatem, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [o] לאסף ipſi Aſaph, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus; Aſapho, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth.

and rejecting pure, ſpiritual, and evangelical worſhip.

℣. 1. The mighty God, &c.] In the Hebrew text it is El, Elohim, which Jarchi renders the God of gods; that is, of angels, who are ſo called, Pſal. viii. 5. and xcvii. 7. ſo Chriſt, who is God over all, is over them; he is their Creator, and the object of their worſhip, Heb. i. 6, 7. or of kings, princes, judges, and all civil magiſtrates, called gods, Pſal. lxxxii. 1, 6. and ſo Kimchi interprets the phraſe here Judge of judges. Chriſt is King of kings, and Lord of lords, by whom they reign and judge, and to whom they are accountable. The Targum renders it the mighty God, as we do; which is the title and name of Chriſt in Iſa. ix. 6. and well agrees with him, as appears by his works of creation, providence, and redemption, and by his government of his church and people; by all the grace, ſtrength, aſſiſtance and preſervation they have from him now, and by all that glory and happineſs they will be brought unto by him hereafter, when raiſed from the dead, according to his mighty power. It is added, Even the Lord, hath ſpoken; or Jehovah. Some have obſerved, that theſe three names, El, Elohim, Jehovah, here mentioned, have three very diſtinctive accents ſet to them, and which being joined to a verb ſingular דבר, hath ſpoken; contains the myſtery of the Trinity of perſons in the unity of the divine Eſſence; ſee Joſh. xxii. 22. though rather all the names belong to Chriſt the Son of God, and who is Jehovah our Righteouſneſs, and to whom, he being the eternal Logos, ſpeech is very properly aſcribed. He hath ſpoken for the elect in the council and covenant of grace and peace, that they might be given to him; and on their behalf, that they might have grace and glory, and he might be their Surety, Saviour, and Redeemer. He hath ſpoken all things out of nothing in creation: he ſpoke with Moſes at the giving of the Law on mount Sinai: he, the angel of God's preſence, ſpoke for the Old Teſtament-ſaints, and ſpoke good and comfortable words unto them: he hath ſpoken in his own perſon here on earth, and ſuch words, and with ſuch authority as never man did; and he has ſpoken in his judgments and providences againſt the Jews; and he now ſpeaks in his goſpel by his miniſters: wherefore it follows, And called the earth from the riſing of the ſun unto the going down thereof; which may be conſidered as a preface, exciting attention to what is after ſpoken, as being of moment and importance; ſee Deut. xxxii. 1. or as calling the earth, and ſo the heavens, ℣. 4. to be witneſſes of the juſtneſs and equity of his dealings with the Jews, for their rejection of him and his goſpel; ſee Deut. iv. 26. or rather, as a call to the inhabitants of the earth to hear the goſpel, which had its accompliſhment in the times of the apoſtles; when Chriſt having a people, not in Judea only, but in the ſeveral parts of the world, from eaſt to weſt, ſent them into all the world with his goſpel, and by it effectually called them through his grace; and churches were planted every where, to the honour of his name; compare with this Mal. i. 11.

℣. 2. Out of Zion the perfection of beauty God hath ſhined.] Or ſhall ſhine[p]; the paſt for the future, as Kimchi obſerves; or the perfection of the beauty of God hath ſhined out of Zion[q]; that is, Chriſt; he is the perfection of beauty; he is fairer than the children of men; he is more glorious than the angels in heaven: as Mediator, he is full of grace and truth, which makes him very lovely and amiable to his people: he is the expreſs image of his Father's perſon; and the glory of all the divine perfections is conſpicuous in his work of ſalvation, as well as in himſelf: now as he was to come out of Zion, Pſal. xiv. 7. that is, not from the fort of Zion, or city of Jeruſalem; for he was to be born at Bethlehem; only he was to be of the Jews, and ſpring from them; ſo he ſhone out, or his appearance and manifeſtation in Iſrael was like the riſing ſun; ſee Mal. iv. 2. Luke i. 78, 79. and the love and kindneſs of God in the miſſion and gift of him, appeared and ſhone out in like manner, Tit. iii. 4. or elſe the goſpel may be meant, which has a beauty in it: it is a glorious goſpel, and holds forth the beauty and glory of Chriſt. All truth is lovely and amiable, eſpecially evangelical truth: it has a divine beauty on it; it comes from God, and bears his impreſs; yea, it is a perfection of beauty: it contains a perfect plan of truth, and is able to make the man of God perfect; and this was to come out of Zion, Iſai. ii. 3. and which great light firſt aroſe in Judea, and from thence ſhone out in the Gentile world, like the ſun in all its luſtre and glory, Tit. ii. 11. or, according to our verſion, God hath ſhined out of Zion; which, as Ben Melech on the text obſerves, is the perfection of beauty; ſee Lam. ii. 15. by which is meant the church under the goſpel-diſpenſation, Heb. xii. 22. which, as in goſpel-order, is exceeding beautiful; and as its members are adorned with the graces of the Spirit, by which they are all glorious within; and eſpecially as they are clothed with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and ſo are perfectly comely through the comelineſs he hath put upon them; and here it is that Chriſt, who is the great God, and our Saviour, ſhines forth upon his people, grants his gracious preſence, and manifeſts himſelf in his ordinances, to their great joy and pleaſure.

℣. 3. Our God ſhall come, &c.] That is, Chriſt, who is truly and properly God, and who was promiſed and expected as a divine perſon; and which was neceſſary on account of the work he came about; and believers claim an intereſt in him as their God; and he is their God in whom they truſt, and whom they worſhip: and this coming of his is to be underſtood, not of his coming in the fleſh; for though that was promiſed, believed, and prayed for, as theſe words are by ſome rendered, may our God come[r]; yet at his firſt coming he was ſilent, his voice was not heard in the ſtreets, Matth. xii. 19. nor did any fire or tempeſt attend that: nor is it to be interpreted of his ſecond coming, or coming to judgment; for though that alſo is promiſed, believed, and prayed for; and when he will not be ſilent, but by his voice will raiſe the dead, ſummon all before him, and pronounce the ſentence on all; and the world, and all that is therein, will be burnt with fire, and a horrible tempeſt rained upon the wicked; yet it is better to underſtand it of his coming to ſet up his kingdom in the world, and to puniſh his profeſſing people for their diſbelief and rejection of him; ſee Matth. xvi. 28. Heb. x. 37. And ſhall not keep ſilence; contain himſelf, bear with the Jews any longer, but come forth in his wrath againſt them; ſee ℣. 21, 22. and it may alſo denote the great ſound of the goſpel, and the very public miniſtration of it in the Gentile world, at

[p] הופיע emicabit, Tigurine verſion; vel effulgebit, Vatablus; illuceſcet, Amama, Grotius. [q] So De Dieu.
[r] יבא veniat, Junius & Tremellius; ſo Ainſworth.

at or before this time, for the enlargement of Chriſt's kingdom in it. A fire ſhall devour before him; meaning either the fire of the divine word making its way among the Gentiles, conſuming their idolatry, ſuperſtition, &c. or rather the fire of divine wrath coming upon the Jews to the uttermoſt; and even it may be literally underſtood of the fire that conſumed their city and temple, as was predicted, Zech. xi. 1. Matth. xxii. 7. And it ſhall be very tempeſtuous round about him; the time of Jeruſalem's deſtruction being ſuch a time of trouble as has not been ſince the world began, Matt. xxiv. 21.

℣. 4. He ſhall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, &c.] To hear what he ſhall ſay, when he will no longer keep ſilence; and to be witneſſes of the juſtice of his proceedings; ſee Iſai. i. 2. Deut. iv. 26. The Targum interprets this of the angels above on high, and of the righteous on the earth below; and ſo Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, explain it of the angels of heaven, and of the inhabitants of the earth. That he may judge his people; not that they, the heavens and the earth, the inhabitants of either may judge his people; but the Lord himſelf, as in ℣. 6. and this deſigns not the judgment of the whole world, nor that of his own covenant-people, whom he judges, when he corrects them in love, that they might not be condemned with the world; when he vindicates them, and avenges them on their enemies, and when he protects and ſaves them; but the judgment of the Jewiſh nation, his profeſſing people, the ſame that Peter ſpeaks of, 1 Pet. iv. 17.

℣. 5. Gather my ſaints together unto me, &c.] Theſe words are ſpoken by Chriſt to the heavens and the earth; that is, to the angels, the miniſters of the goſpel, to gather in, by the miniſtry of the word, his elect ones among the Gentiles; ſee Matt. xxiv. 30. called his ſaints, who had an intereſt in his favour and loving-kindneſs, and were ſanctified or ſet apart for his ſervice and glory. Thoſe that have made a covenant with me by ſacrifice; or, who have made my covenant by, or on ſacrifice [s]; the covenant of grace, which was made with Chriſt from everlaſting, and which was confirmed by his blood and ſacrifice; this his people may be ſaid to make with God in him, he being their head, ſurety, and repreſentative: now theſe covenant-ones he will have gathered in to himſelf by effectual vocation, which is uſually done by the miniſtry of the word; for this is not to be underſtood of the gathering of all nations to him, before him as a Judge; but of his ſpecial people to him as a Saviour, the Shiloh, to whom the gathering of the people was to be, Gen. xlix. 10. Iſai. xxvii. 12, 13. and lvi. 8. Zech. x. 8.

℣. 6. And the heavens ſhall declare his righteouſneſs, &c.] That is, either the heavens ſhall bear witneſs to his juſtice and equity in judging his people; or the angels, the miniſters of the goſpel, ſhall declare his juſtifying righteouſneſs, which is revealed in it, to the ſaints and covenant-ones, they ſhall be a means of gathering in: or rather the juſtice of Chriſt in the deſtruction of the Jews, ſhall be atteſted and applauded by angels and men, juſt as the righteouſneſs of God in the deſtruction of the antichriſtian powers is celebrated by the angel of the waters, Rev. xvi. 5, 6. For God is judge himſelf. Selah. and not another, or by another; and therefore his judgments muſt be juſt and righteous, ſeeing he is juſt and true, loves righteouſneſs, and is righteous in all his ways and works.

℣. 7. Hear, O my people, &c.] This is an addreſs to the people of the Jews, whom God had choſen to be his people above all others, and who profeſſed themſelves to be his people; but now a Lo-ammi was about to be written upon them, being a people uncircumciſed in heart and ears, refuſing to hear the great prophet of the church, him that ſpake from heaven. And I will ſpeak; by way of accuſation and charge, and in judgment againſt them for their ſins and tranſgreſſions. O Iſrael, and I will teſtify againſt thee; or to thee [t]; to thy face produce witneſſes, and bring ſufficient evidence to prove the things laid to thy charge. I am God; even thy God; which is an aggravation of their ſin againſt him, and is the reaſon why they ſhould hearken to him; ſee Pſal. lxxxi. 10, 11, 12.

℣. 8. I will not reprove thee for thy ſacrifices, &c.] For the neglect of them; this they were not chargeable with; and had they omitted them, a charge would not have been brought againſt them on that account, ſince theſe were not what God commanded when he brought them out of Egypt, Jer. vii. 22. and were now abrogated; and when they were in force, acts of mercy, kindneſs and beneficence, were preferred unto them, Hoſ. vi. 6. Or thy burnt-offerings, to have been continually before me; or, for thy burnt-offerings are continually before me [u]; ſo far were they from being reproveable for not bringing their ſacrifices, that they were continually offering up before the Lord even multitudes of them, though to no purpoſe, being offered up without faith, and in hypocriſy; and could not take away ſin, and make atonement for it; and beſides, ought now to have ceaſed to be offered, Chriſt the great ſacrifice being now offered up, as he was in the times to which this pſalm belongs; ſee Iſai. i. 14. Mic. vi. 6, 7. Heb. x. 3, 4, 14. wherefore it follows,

℣. 9. I will take no bullock out of thy houſe, &c.] That is, will accept of none; ſuch ſacrifices being no more agreeable to the will of God, Heb. x. 5, 6, 8. the bullock is mentioned, that being a principal creature uſed in ſacrifice; as alſo the following, Nor he-goats out of thy folds; the reaſons follow.

℣. 10. For every beaſt of the foreſt is mine, &c.] By creation and preſervation; and therefore he ſtood in no need of their bullocks and he-goats. And the cattle upon a thouſand hills; meaning all the cattle in the whole world.

℣. 11. I know all the fowls of the mountains, &c.] God not only knows them, but takes care of them; not a ſparrow falls to the ground without his knowledge, and all the fowls of the air are fed by him, Matt. x. 29. and vi. 26. and therefore needed not their turtle-doves and young pigeons, which were the only fowls uſed in ſacrifice. And the wild beaſts of the field are mine; which are mentioned in oppoſition to domeſtic ones, ſuch as they had in their houſes or folds, ℣. 9.

℣. 12. If I were hungry, I would not tell thee, &c.] Or ſay to thee [w]; aſk for any thing; for the world is mine, and the fulneſs thereof; with which, was the former his caſe, he could ſatisfy himſelf; ſee Pſal. xxiv. 1.

℣. 13. Will I eat the fleſh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats?] That is, expreſs a pleaſure, take delight delight and ſatisfaction in ſuch kind of ſacrifices, which can never take away ſin: no, I will not; wherefore other ſacrifices, more agreeable to his nature, mind, and will, and to the goſpel-diſpenſation, are next mentioned.

[s] So Pagninus. [t] כך tibi, V. L. Vatablus; ſo Ainſworth. [u] So Tigurine verſion, Vatablus, Piſcator, Cocceius, and Ainſworth. [w] לא אמר לך non dicam tibi, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Muſculus; non dicerem tibi. Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Michaelis.

℣. 14. Offer unto God thankſgiving, &c.] Which is a ſacrifice, ℣. 23. Pſal. cxvi. 17. Heb. xiii. 15. and the Jews ſay [x], that all ſacrifices will ceaſe in future time, the times of the Meſſiah, but the ſacrifice of praiſe; and this ſhould be offered up for all mercies temporal and ſpiritual; and unto God, becauſe they all come from him; and becauſe ſuch ſacrifices are well-pleaſing to him, and are no other than our reaſonable ſervice, and agreeable to his will; and then are they offered up aright, when they are offered up through Chriſt, the great High-prieſt, by whom they are acceptable unto God, and upon him the altar, which ſanctifies every gift, and by faith in him, without which it is impoſſible to pleaſe God. Some render the word confeſſion [y]; and in all thankſgivings it is neceſſary that men ſhould confeſs their ſins and unworthineſs, and acknowledge the goodneſs of God, and aſcribe all the glory to him; for to him, and him only, is this ſacrifice to be offered: not to man; for that would be to ſacrifice to his own net, and burn incenſe to his drag. And pay thy vows unto the moſt High; meaning not ceremonial ones, as the vow of the Nazarite; nor to offer ſuch and ſuch a ſacrifice, ſince theſe are diſtinguiſhed from, and oppoſed unto the ſacrifices of the ceremonial Law before mentioned; and much leſs monaſtic ones, as the vow of celibacy, and abſtinence from certain meats at certain times; but moral, or ſpiritual and evangelical ones; ſuch as devoting one's ſelf to the Lord, and to his ſervice and worſhip, under the influence, and in the ſtrength of grace; ſignified by ſaying, I am the Lord's, and by giving up ourſelves to him and to his churches, to walk with them in all his commands and ordinances, to which his love and grace conſtrain and oblige; ſee Iſai. xliv. 5. 2 Cor. viii. 5. and particularly by them may be meant, giving God the glory and praiſe of every mercy and deliverance, as was promiſed previous to it; hence thoſe are put together, Pſal. lxv. 1. This ſcripture does not oblige to the making of vows, but to the payment of them when made; ſee Eccl. v. 4, 5. and may refer to every thing a man lays himſelf in a ſolemn manner under obligation to perform, eſpecially in religious affairs.

℣. 15. And call upon me in the day of trouble, &c.] This is another part of ſpiritual ſacrifice or worſhip, which is much more acceptable to God than legal ſacrifices. Invocation of God includes all parts of religious worſhip, and particularly deſigns prayer, as it does here, of which God, and he only, is the object; and which ſhould be performed in faith, in ſincerity, and with fervency; and though it ſhould be made at all times, in private and in public; yet more eſpecially ſhould be attended to in a time of affliction, whether of ſoul or body, whether of a perſonal, family, or public kind, Jam. v. 13. and the encouragement to it is, I will deliver thee; that is, out of trouble: as he is able, ſo faithful is he that hath promiſed, and will do it. The obligation follows, And thou ſhalt glorify me; by offering praiſe, ℣. 23. aſcribing the glory of the deliverance to God, and ſerving him in righteouſneſs and true holineſs continually.

℣. 16. But unto the wicked God ſaith, &c.] By whom are meant, not openly profane ſinners; but men under a profeſſion of religion, and indeed who were teachers of others, as appears from the following expoſtulation with them: the ſcribes, Phariſees, and doctors among the Jews are deſigned; and ſo Kimchi interprets it of their wiſe men, who learned and taught the Law, but did not act according to it. It ſeems as if the preceding verſes reſpected the truly godly among the Jews, who believed in Chriſt, and yet were zealous of the Law; and retained legal ſacrifices; as ſuch there were, Acts xxi. 20. and that theſe words, and what follow, are ſpoken to hypocrites among them, who ſat in Moſes's chair, and ſaid, and did not; were outwardly righteous before men, but inwardly full of wickedneſs, deſtitute of the grace of God, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt. What haſt thou to do to declare my ſtatutes? the laws of God, which were given to the people of Iſrael; ſome of which were of a moral, others of a ceremonial, and others of a judicial nature; and there were perſons appointed to teach and explain theſe to the people, as the prieſts and Levites: now ſome of theſe were abrogated, and not to be declared at all in the times this pſalm refers to; and as for others, thoſe perſons were very improper to teach and urge the obſervance of them, when they themſelves did not keep them; and eſpecially it was wrong in them to declare them to the people, for ſuch purpoſes as they did, namely, to obtain life and righteouſneſs by them. Or that thou ſhouldeſt take my covenant in thy mouth? which is to be underſtood, not of the covenant of works made with Adam, and now broke; nor of the pure covenant of grace, as adminiſtred under the goſpel-diſpenſation, of which Chriſt is the Mediator, and the goſpel a tranſcript, ſince both were rejected by theſe perſons; but the covenant at mount Sinai, which was a typical one; and being in ſome ſenſe faulty, was now antiquated, and ought to have ceaſed; and therefore theſe men are blamed for taking it in their mouths, and urging it on the people: and beſides, they had no true ſight of, and faith in the thing exhibited by it; and moreover were not ſtedfaſt, nor did they continue in it, like their fathers before them, Pſal. lxxviii. 37. Heb. viii. 7, 8, 13.

℣. 17. Seeing thou hateſt inſtruction, &c.] Or correction [z]; to be reproved or reformed by the ſtatutes and covenant they declared to others; they taught others, but not themſelves, Rom. ii. 21—23. or evangelical inſtruction, the doctrines of grace, and of Chriſt; for, as concerning the goſpel, they were enemies, Rom. xi. 28. and ſince they were haters of that, they ought not to have been teachers of others. And caſteſt my words behind thee; the doctrines of the goſpel, which they deſpiſed and rejected with the utmoſt abhorrence, as loathſome, and not fit to be looked upon, and into; and alſo the ordinances of it, the counſel of God, which they rejected againſt themſelves, Acts xiii. 45, 46. Luke vii. 30.

℣. 18. When thou ſaweſt a thief, then thou conſentedſt with him, &c.] Or didſt run with him [a]; joined and agreed with him in the commiſſion of the ſame things; which was literally true of the Scribes and Phariſees: they devoured widows houſes, and robbed them of their ſubſtance, under a pretence of long prayers; they conſented to the deeds of Barabbas, a robber, when they preferred him him to Jeſus Chriſt; and they joined with the thieves on the croſs in reviling him: and in a ſpiritual ſenſe, they ſtole away the word of the Lord, every man from his neighbour; took away the key of knowledge from the people, and put falſe gloſſes upon the ſacred writings. And haſt been a partaker with adulterers; theſe teachers of the law were guilty both of theft and adultery, Rom. ii. 21, 22. they are called by our Lord an adulterous generation, Matt. xii. 39. and they were ſo in a literal ſenſe; ſee John viii. 4—9. and in a figurative one, adulterating the word of God, and handling it deceitfully.

[x] Vajikra Rabba, fol. 153. 1. & 168. 4. [y] תורה confeſſionem, Montanus, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth. [z] מוסר correctionem, Vatablus; correptionem, Gejerus. [a] רץ עמו συνετρεχες αυτω, Sept. currebas cum eo, V. L. ſic Eth. Syr. Targum, ſo Vatablus, Muſculus, Piſcator, Ainſworth.

℣. 19. Thou giveſt thy mouth to evil, &c.] To ſpeak evil things againſt Chriſt, his doctrines, ordinances, miniſters and people; and to deliver out evil doctrines, pernicious to the ſouls of men. And thy tongue frameth deceit; puts and joins together deceitful words in a very artful manner, by which ſimple and unſtable minds are beguiled.

℣. 20. Thou ſitteſt, &c.] Either in the chair of Moſes, or on the ſeat of judgment, in the great ſanhedrim of the nation; or, as Aben Ezra paraphraſes it, in the ſeat of the ſcornful. And ſpeakeſt againſt thy brother; even to paſs ſentence upon him, to put him to death for profeſſing faith in Chriſt, Matt. x. 21. Thou ſlandereſt thine own mother's ſon; the apoſtles and diſciples of Chriſt, who were their brethren and kinſmen according to the fleſh; and even our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, who was bone of their bone, and fleſh of their fleſh.

℣. 21. Theſe things haſt thou done, &c.] Theſe evil works, as the Targum; which they had done over and over again without remorſe, with the greateſt pleaſure, and with promiſes of impunity to themſelves. This is a confirmation of the charge made by the omniſcient God, who ſaw and knew all their actions. And I kept ſilence; ſpoke not by terrible things in righteouſneſs, deferred the execution of judgment, exerciſed forbearance and patience, and gave ſpace to repent; which being deſpiſed, they were hardened yet more and more in ſin; ſee Eccleſ. viii. 11. Rom. ii. 4, 5. This refers to the ſpace of time between the crucifixion of Chriſt, and the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch an one as thyſelf; either that he did not ſee the things committed by them in ſecret, as the things before mentioned, theft, adultery, ſlander and detraction, commonly are; becauſe they could not ſee ſuch actions done by others: or that he took pleaſure in them, as they did, and that he approved of their crucifixion of Jeſus of Nazareth, and of their contempt of his goſpel, and of the perſecution of his followers. But I will reprove thee; not verbally by the miniſtry of the word, much leſs effectually and ſavingly by his Spirit; nor in a way of fatherly correction and chaſtiſement, but by ſore judgments; by ſending the Roman armies to burn their city and temple, and carry them captive. And ſet them in order before thine eyes; that is, their ſins, and thereby fully confute their vain imagination, that either he did not take notice of them, or elſe approved of them. This ſignifies a formal proceſs againſt them, as in a court of judicature; bringing in a regular charge and accuſation againſt them, and an orderly diſpoſition of their ſins, as to time, place and circumſtances, committed by them; and a ſtrong evidence, or thorough conviction of them, ſo as not to be denied and gainſayed by them: or a ſetting them in battle array, as in Job vi. 4. in rank and file; ſins being what war againſt men, and bring upon them utter ruin and deſtruction; as the ſins of the Jews fought againſt them, and deſtroyed them; ſee Jer. ii. 19.

℣. 22. Now conſider this, &c.] The evils that had been committed, and repent of them; for repentance is an after-thought and reconſideration of ſin, and humiliation for it; that the Lord was not like them, not an approver of ſin, but a reprover for it; and what would be their latter end, what all this would iſſue in, in caſe of impenitence. Ye that forget God; that there is a God, his being, perfections, word, works, and benefits. Leſt I tear you in pieces; as a lion, leopard or bear; ſee Hoſea xiii. 7, 8. which was accompliſhed in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; when both their civil and eccleſiaſtical ſtate were torn in pieces; their city and temple levelled with the ground, and not one ſtone left upon another; and they ſcattered about in the earth. And there be none to deliver; which denotes their utter and irreparable ruin, till the time comes they ſhall turn to the Lord; ſee Iſa. xlii. 22.

℣. 23. Whoſo offereth praiſe, &c.] Which is exhorted to, ℣. 14. ſee the note there. Glorifieth me; celebrates the divine perfections, gives God the glory of all mercies; which honours him, and is more grateful and well-pleaſing to him than all burnt-offerings and ſacrifices. And to him that ordereth his converſation aright; according to the rule of God's word, and as becomes the goſpel of Chriſt; who walks inoffenſively to all, circumſpectly and wiſely in the world, and in love to the ſaints; in wiſdom towards them that are without, and in peace with them that are within; who is a follower of God, of Chriſt, and of his people; and who lives ſo as to glorify God, and cauſe others to glorify him likewiſe: or that chooſes for himſelf the right way, as Aben Ezra, the right way to eternal life; and the ſenſe is, he that puts or ſets his heart upon it, and is in purſuit after the evangelical way of life. To him will I ſhew the ſalvation of God; or, cauſe to ſee or enjoy it [b]; not only temporal ſalvation from time to time, but ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation; to ſee intereſt in it, and to poſſeſs it; and particularly Chriſt, the author of it, who is the ſalvation of God's providing, appointing and ſending, and whoſe glory is greatly concerned therein; ſee Iſa. lii. 10. Luke ii. 25, 30.

PSALM LI.

To the chief muſician, a pſalm of David, when Nathan the prophet came unto him, after he had gone in to Bathſheba.

THE occaſion of this pſalm was the ſin of David with Bathſheba, ſignified by going in to her; an euphemiſm for lying with her; which ſin was a very aggravated one, ſhe being another man's wife, and the wife of a ſervant and ſoldier of his, who was at the ſame time expoſing his life for for his king and country's good; and David beſides had many wives, and was alſo king of Iſrael, and ſhould have ſet a better example to his ſubjects; and it was followed with other ſins, as the murder of Uriah, and the death of ſeveral others; with ſcandal to religion, and with ſecurity and impenitence in him for a long time, until Nathan the prophet was ſent to him of God, to awaken him to a ſenſe of his ſin; which he immediately acknowledged, and ſhewed true repentance for it: upon which, either whilſt Nathan was preſent, or after he was gone, he penned this pſalm; that it might remain on record, as a teſtification of his repentance, and for the inſtruction of ſuch as ſhould fall into ſin, how to behave, where to apply, and for their comfort. The hiſtory of all this may be ſeen in the 11th and 12th chapters of the ſecond book of Samuel.

[b] אראנו videre faciam eum, Montanus, faciam ut is fruatur, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

℣. 1. Have mercy upon me, O God, &c.] David, under a ſenſe of ſin, does not run away from God, but applies unto him, and caſts himſelf at his feet, and upon his mercy; which ſhews the view he had of his miſerable condition, and that he ſaw there was mercy in God, which gave him hope; and upon his bended knees, and in the exerciſe of faith, he aſks for it. According to thy loving kindneſs; not according to his merits, nor according to the general mercy of God, which carnal men rely upon; but according to his everlaſting and unchangeable love in Chriſt; from which as the ſource, and through whom as the medium, ſpecial mercy comes to the children of men. The acts of ſpecial mercy are according to the ſovereign will of God: he is not moved to mercy, neither by the merits nor miſery of men, but by his free grace and favour; it is love that ſets mercy to work: this is a moſt glaring gleam of goſpel-light, which none of the inſpired writers beſides, except the apoſtle Paul, ſaw, Eph. ii. 4. Titus iii. 4, 5. According unto the multitude of thy tender mercies, blot out my tranſgreſſions; for his ſin was complicated, attended with many others; and beſides, upon a view of this, he was led to obſerve all his other ſins; and particularly the corruption of his nature, his original ſin, which he mentions, ℣. 5. Theſe he deſires might be blotted out; out of the book of account, out of God's debt-book; that they might not ſtand againſt him, being debts he was not able to pay or make ſatisfaction for; and out of the table of his own heart and conſcience, where they were ever before him, and ſeemed to be engraven; that they might be cauſed to paſs from him, and he might have no more conſcience of them; or that they might be blotted out, as a cloud by the clear ſhining of the ſun of righteouſneſs, with the healing of pardoning grace in his wings; or that they might be wiped away, as any filth is wiped from any perſon or thing; and all this according to the multitude of his tender mercies. The mercy of God is plenteous and abundant; he is rich in it, and various are the inſtances of it; and it is exceeding tender, like that of a father to his children, or like that of a mother to the ſon of her womb; and from this abundant and tender mercy ſprings the forgiveneſs of ſin, Luke i. 77, 78. The pſalmiſt makes mention of the multitude of the mercies of God, becauſe of the multitude of his ſins, which required a multitude of mercy to forgive, and to encourage his hope of it.

℣. 2. Waſh me thoroughly from mine iniquity, &c.] Which ſuppoſes defilement by ſin, and that very great, and ſuch as none can remove but the Lord himſelf; who, when he takes it in hand, does it effectually and thoroughly; ſee Ezek. xxxvi. 25. David's ſin had long lain upon him, the filth of it had as it were eat into him, and ſpread itſelf over him, and therefore he needed much waſhing; waſh me much, all over, and thoroughly: And cleanſe me from my ſin; which only the blood of Chriſt can do, 1 John i. 7. The pſalmiſt makes uſe of three words to expreſs his ſin by, in this and the preceding verſe; פשע which ſignifies rebellion, as all ſin has in it rebellion againſt God the lawgiver, and a contempt of his commandments; עון perverſeneſs, crookedneſs, ſin being a going out of the plain way of God's righteous law; and חטאת a miſſing the mark; going beſides it, or not coming up to it: and theſe he makes uſe of to ſet forth the malignity of ſin, and the deep ſenſe he had of the exceeding ſinfulneſs of it; and theſe are the three words uſed by the Lord in Exod. xxxiv. 7. when he declares himſelf to be a ſin-forgiving God; ſo that David's ſin came within the reach of pardoning mercy.

℣. 3. For I acknowledge my tranſgreſſions, &c.] Before God and man. Acknowledgment of ſin is what the Lord requires, and promiſes forgiveneſs upon, and therefore is uſed here as a plea for it; and moreover the pſalmiſt had done ſo before, and had ſucceeded in this way, which muſt encourage him to take the ſame courſe again; ſee Pſal. xxxii. 5. And my ſin is ever before me; ſtaring him in the face; gnawing upon his conſcience, and filling him with remorſe and diſtreſs; ſo that his life was a burden to him: for though God had put away ſin out of his own ſight, ſo that he would not condemn him for it, and he ſhould not die; notwithſtanding as yet it was not cauſed to paſs from David, or the guilt of it removed from his conſcience.

℣. 4. Againſt thee, thee only, have I ſinned, &c.] All ſin, though committed againſt a fellow-creature, being a tranſgreſſion of the law, is againſt the Lawgiver; and indeed begins at the neglect or contempt of his commandment, as David's ſin did, 2 Sam. xii. 9. and being committed againſt God, that had beſtowed ſo many favours upon him, was a cutting conſideration to him, which made his ſorrow appear to be of a godly ſort; wherefore he makes his humble and hearty confeſſion to the Lord, and who only could forgive his ſin. And done this evil in thy ſight; for with reſpect to men it was ſecretly done; and was only known to God, with whom the darkneſs and the light are both alike. That thou mighteſt be juſtified when thou ſpeakeſt, and be clear when thou judgeſt; not that David committed this ſin that God might be juſt, and pure, and holy; but this was the event and conſequence of it: God, by taking notice of it, reſenting it, and reproving for it, appeared to be a righteous Being, and of purer eyes than to behold ſin with pleaſure; ſee Exod. ix. 27. Or theſe words may be connected with his acknowledgment and confeſſion of ſin; which were done to this end and purpoſe, to juſtify God in his charge of it upon him, and in threatning him with evils on account of it, by the mouth of Nathan the prophet: or with his petitions for pardoning grace and mercy; that ſo he might appear to be juſt to his promiſe, of forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin, to humble penitents; and particularly that he might appear to be juſt and faithful to his Son, in forgiving giving ſin for his ſake; whom he had ſet forth, in his purpoſes and promiſes, to be the propitiation for ſin, to declare his righteouſneſs, Rom. iii. 25, 26. ſee Rom. iii. 4.

℣. 5. Behold, I was ſhapen in iniquity, &c.] This cannot be underſtood of any perſonal iniquity of his immediate parents; ſince this reſpects his wonderful formation in the womb, in which both he and they were wholly paſſive, as the word here uſed is of that form; and is the amazing work of God himſelf, ſo much admired by the pſalmiſt, Pſal. cxxxix. 13—16. and cannot deſign any ſinfulneſs then infuſed into him by his Maker, ſeeing God cannot be the author of ſin; but of original ſin and corruption, derived to him by natural generation: and the ſenſe is, that as ſoon as ever the maſs of human nature was ſhaped and quickned, or as ſoon as ſoul and body were united together, ſin was in him, and he was in ſin, or became a ſinful creature. And in ſin did my mother conceive me; by whom cannot be meant Eve; for though ſhe is the mother of all living, and ſo of David, yet could not, with any propriety, be ſaid to conceive him: this only could be ſaid of his immediate parent, not even of his next grandmother, much leſs of Eve, at the diſtance of almoſt three thouſand years. Nor does the ſin in which he was conceived, intend any ſin of his parents, in begetting and conceiving him, being in lawful wedlock; which acts cannot be ſinful, ſince the propagation of the human ſpecies by natural generation, is a principle of nature implanted by God himſelf; and is agreeable to the firſt law of nature, given to man in a ſtate of innocence, Increaſe and multiply. Marriage is the inſtitution of God in paradiſe; and in all ages has been accounted honourable in all, when the bed is undefiled. Nor does it deſign his being conceived when his mother was in profluviis, of which there is no proof, and is a mere imagination, and can anſwer no purpoſe; much leſs that he was conceived in adultery, as the contenders for the purity of human nature broadly intimate; which ſhews how much they are pinched with this text, to give into ſuch an interpretation of it, at the expence of the character of an innocent perſon, of whom there is not the leaſt ſuggeſtion of this kind in the holy ſcriptures; but on the contrary, ſhe is repreſented as a religious woman, and David valued himſelf upon his relation to her as ſuch, Pſal. lxxxvi. 16. and cxvi. 16. Beſides, had this been the caſe, as David would have been a baſtard, he would not have been ſuffered to enter into the congregation of the Lord, according to the law, in Deut. xxiii. 2. whereas he often did with great delight, Pſal. xlii. 4. and lv. 14. Moreover, it is beſide his ſcope and deſign to expoſe the ſins of others, much leſs his own parents, whilſt he is confeſſing and lamenting his own iniquities: and to what purpoſe ſhould he mention theirs, eſpecially if he himſelf was not affected by them, and did not derive a corrupt nature from them? Nor is the ſin he ſpeaks of any actual ſin of his own, and therefore he does not call it as before, my iniquity and my ſin; though it was ſo, he having ſinned in Adam, and this being in his nature; but iniquity and ſin, it being common to him with all mankind. Hence we learn the earlineſs of the corruption of nature; it is as ſoon as man is conceived and ſhapen; and that it is propagated from one to another by natural generation; and that it is the caſe of all men: for if this was the caſe of David, who was born of religious parents, was famous for his early piety, and from whoſe ſeed the Meſſiah ſprung, it may well be concluded to be the caſe of all. And this corruption of nature is the fountain, ſource and ſpring of all ſin, ſecret and open, private and public; and is mentioned here not as an extenuation of David's actual tranſgreſſions, but as an aggravation of them; he having been, from his conception and formation, nothing elſe but a maſs of ſin, a lump of iniquity; and in his evangelical repentance for them, he is led to take notice of and mourn over the corruption of his nature, from whence they aroſe. The heathens themſelves affirm, that no man is born without ſin [c].

℣. 6. Behold, thou deſireſt truth in the inward parts, &c.] With delight and pleaſure, as the word [d] ſignifies: meaning either Chriſt, the truth and the life, formed and dwelling in the hearts of his people; or the goſpel, the word of truth, which has a place there; and particularly that branch of it which proclaims pardon to ſenſible ſinners, and is the ground of hope within them: or elſe a true and hearty confeſſion of ſin, which David now made; or rather internal holineſs and purity of heart, in oppoſition to the corruption of nature before acknowledged: this is what is agreeable to the nature of God, is required by his holy Law, and is wrought in the hearts of his people in regeneration; and this is truth, real, and not imaginary, genuine and unfeigned; where it is, there is a true ſenſe of ſin, a right ſight of Chriſt, unfeigned faith in him, ſincere love to him, hope in him without hypocriſy, and a reverential fear of God upon the heart; the inward parts are the ſeat of all this, and in the exerciſe of it the Lord takes great delight and pleaſure. And in the hidden part thou ſhalt make me to know wiſdom; either Chriſt, the wiſdom of God; or the goſpel, and particularly that part of it which concerns the pardon of ſin; or a true knowledge of ſin, and of the way of life and ſalvation by Chriſt, which is the trueſt and higheſt wiſdom: and the phraſe hidden or ſecret, may either denote the nature of the wiſdom made known, which is hidden wiſdom, the wiſdom of God in a myſtery; or the manner in which it is made known; it is in a hidden way, privately, and ſecretly, and indiſcernibly like the wind, by the Spirit and grace of God; or the ſeat and ſubject of it, the hidden part, as we ſupply it; the hidden man of the heart. David begins to riſe in the exerciſe of his faith in the grace of God, thou ſhalt make me to know, &c. unleſs the words ſhould be rendered as a prayer, as they are by ſome, make me to know [e], &c. and as are the following.

℣. 7. Purge me with hyſſop, &c.] Or thou ſhalt purge me with hyſſop [f]; or expiate me; which was uſed in ſprinkling the blood of the paſchal lamb on the door-poſts of the Iſraelites in Egypt, that the deſtroying angel might paſs over them, Exod. xii. 22, 23. and in the cleanſing of the leper, Lev. xiv. 4—7. and in the purification of one that was unclean by the touch of a dead body, &c. Numb. xix. 6, 18. which the Targum on the text has reſpect to; and this petition of the pſalmiſt ſhews, that he ſaw himſelf a guilty creature, and in danger of the deſtroying angel, and a filthy creature like the leper, and deſerving to be excluded from the ſociety of the ſaints, and the houſe of God; and that

[c] Nam vitiis nemo ſine naſcitur — Horat. Sermon. l. 1. ſatyr. 3.

[d] חפצת delectaris, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; delectatus es, Cocceius; ſo Ainſworth.

[e] תודיעני notam mihi fac, Gejerus.

[f] תחטאני purificabis me, Pagninus, Montanus; expiabis me, Vatablus, Muſculus, Cocceius, Gejerus.

that he had reſpect not hereby to ceremonial ſprinklings and purifications, for then he would have applied to a prieſt; but to the ſprinkling of the blood of Chriſt, typified thereby; and therefore he applies to God to purge his conſcience with it; and as Suidas [g] from Theodoret obſerves, hyſſop did not procure remiſſion of ſins, but has a myſtical ſignification, and refers to what was meant by the ſprinkling of the blood of the paſſover; and then he ſays, And I ſhall be clean; thoroughly clean; for the blood ſprinkled on the heart by the Spirit, clears it from an evil conſcience, purges the conſcience from dead works, and cleanſes from all ſin. Waſh me; or thou ſhalt waſh me [h]; alluding to the waſhing at the cleanſing of a leper, and the purification of an unclean perſon, Lev. xiv. 8. Numb. xix. 19. but had in view the fountain of Chriſt's blood, in which believers are waſhed from all their ſins, Zech. xiii. 1. Rev. i. 5. And I ſhall be whiter than ſnow; who was black with original corruption, and actual tranſgreſſions; but the blood of Chriſt makes not only the converſation-garments white that are waſhed in it; but even crimſon and ſcarlet ſins as white as wool, as white as ſnow, and the perſons of the ſaints without ſpot or blemiſh, Rev. vii. 14. Iſai. i. 18. Eph. v. 25—27. whiter than the ſnow, is a phraſe uſed by Homer [i], and others, to deſcribe what is exceeding white.

℣. 8. Make me to hear joy and gladneſs, &c.] Which he had not heard for ſome time; ſin had ſadly broke in upon, and interrupted his ſpiritual peace and joy; for though the love and favour of God cannot be loſt; yet his ſenſible preſence, which puts joy and gladneſs into the heart, may; and tho' an intereſt in Chriſt ever continues, and union to him is always the ſame; yet a view of intereſt in him, which fills with joy unſpeakable and full of glory, and communion with him, may not be had for a time: and though juſtification by his righteouſneſs, from whence flows much peace, is an invariable bleſſing; yet the comfortable perception of it may be taken away: and though ſalvation by Chriſt is a certain thing; yet the joy of it may be loſt for a ſeaſon; which was now the caſe of the pſalmiſt: and when he deſires that God would cauſe him to hear joy and gladneſs, his meaning is, that he might have that made known unto him; namely, the forgiveneſs of his ſins, which would give him joy; not by an articulate voice from heaven, which he did not expect; nor by an angel from thence, which was not uſual; but by the prophet, who as yet might not have declared to him that God had put away his ſin; or if he had, he might deſire to have it repeated, for his fuller aſſurance, and greater joy; or by his Spirit, in an impulſe on his mind, ſaying to him, thy ſins are forgiven thee; which would give him great joy, fulneſs of it, even what is inconceivable and inexpreſſible, ſignified by theſe two words, joy and gladneſs. That the bones which thou haſt broken may rejoice; a backſliding believer is not only like a bone out of joint, Gal. vi. 1. but his falls are ſometimes both to the bruiſing of him, and to the breaking of his bones; of which when he is ſenſible, the quick ſenſe of his ſin is as the pain of a broken bone; ſee Pſal. xxxviii. 3, 6, 8, 9. and here the breaking of them is aſcribed to God; not that he is the cauſe or occaſion of falling into ſin, which breaks the bones, Jam. i. 13. but of afflictions, corrections and chaſtiſements for ſin, which are ſometimes expreſſed by this phraſe, Iſai. xxxviii. 13. Lam. iii. 4, 16. and which David was threatned with, and gave him great uneaſineſs; and of the menaces and threatnings of the law, which being let into his conſcience, worked wrath and terror there; and alſo of that true contrition of heart, and brokenneſs of ſpirit, which the Lord produces, and can only cure, by the diſcoveries of pardoning grace; which affects the whole frame of nature, the report of which makes the bones fat, and all of them to ſay, Who is a God like unto thee! Prov. xv. 30. Pſal. xxxv. 9, 10.

℣. 9. Hide thy face from my ſins, &c.] In whoſe ſight they were committed, being now aſhamed of them himſelf, and aſhamed that any ſhould ſee them, and eſpecially his God; and being filthy and nauſeous, he knew they muſt be abominable to him, who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity; and being breaches of his law, muſt be offenſive to him, and provoke the eyes of his glory; and were ſuch that he knew would not bear the examination of juſtice; and that if God was ſtrict to mark them, he could not ſtand before him: moreover, in this petition the pſalmiſt deprecates a ſevere chaſtiſement of them, which is ſometimes expreſſed by ſetting ſins before him, Pſal. xc. 8. and intreats the pardon of them, or oblivion and non-remembrance of them, that they might be caſt behind his back, and into the depths of the ſea. And blot out all mine iniquities; as in ℣. 1. here repeated, to ſhew his deep ſenſe of them, and his great importunity for the forgiveneſs of them; and adds the word all, including all his other ſins, with thoſe he had lately committed; for he knew, that if any one was left unpardoned, he could never anſwer for it.

℣. 10. Create in me a clean heart, O God, &c.] Which was now defiled with ſin, and of which being convinced, he was led more and more to ſee the impurity of his heart and nature, from which all his evil actions flowed; and being ſenſible that he could not make his heart clean himſelf, and that this was the work of God, and a work which required creating power, he intreats it of him: for as the firſt work of converſion is no other than a creation, or a production of ſomething new, which was not before; ſo the reſtoring of a backſlider, as it goes by the ſame name, it requires the ſame power; and as the implantation of grace at firſt, and particularly of faith, is a work of almighty power; ſo the ſame power muſt be put forth to bring it into exerciſe, after falls into ſin; that it may afreſh deal with the heart-purifying blood of Chriſt, which only can make it clean, and is what is here meant. And renew a right ſpirit within me; by which is deſigned, not the holy Spirit of God [k]; for he is the renewer; nor the ſpirit or ſoul of man as to its eſſence; but with reſpect to the qualities of it: and here it ſignifies a renewing of the inward man, or an increaſe of grace, and cauſing it to abound in act and exerciſe; and intends a ſpirit of uprightneſs and integrity, in oppoſition to diſſimulation and hypocriſy; a ſpirit prepared and ready [l] to every good work, Matt. xxvi. 41. one firm [m] and unmoved from obedience to the Lord, by ſin, temptations and ſnares; a heart fixed, truſting in the Lord, and comfortably aſſured of an intereſt in pardoning grace and mercy.

℣. 11.

[g] In voce υσσωπος.
[h] תכבסני lavabis me, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Muſculus, Cocceius.
[i] Iliad. 10. v. 437. So Martial. l. 7. epigr. 27. Ovid. Amor. l. 3. eleg. 6.
[k] Vid. Zohar in Gen. fol. 107. 3.
[l] נכון paratum ſeu promptum, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth.
[m] Firmua, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius.

℣. 11. Caſt me not away from thy preſence, &c.] As abominable; as a veſſel in which he had no pleaſure; with indignation and wrath; as one that is angry with another, cannot bear him in his ſight, but bids him be gone from him. Nothing is more deſirable to a child of God than the preſence of God; and nothing gives him more ſenſible pain than his abſence; and even to be deprived of, or denied the means of enjoying his preſence, the word and ordinances, makes them very uneaſy: to be utterly, and for ever deprived of it, is the caſe of the damned in hell, and is the puniſhment of loſs they ſuſtain; and on the other hand, the happineſs of the ſaints in heaven is to enjoy it without interruption. The people of God are never caſt away from his favour, or out of his heart's love; but they may for a while be without his gracious preſence, or not ſee his face, nor have the light of his countenance, nor ſenſible communion with him, which is here deprecated. David might call to mind the caſe of Cain, Gen. iv. 14, 16. or rather the more recent one of Saul, whom the Lord rejected, and from whom he departed upon his ſinning, and which he might fear would be his caſe, 1 Sam. xxviii. 15. And take not thy holy Spirit from me; or the Spirit of thine holineſs; the third perſon in the Trinity; ſo called, not becauſe this epithet of holy is peculiar to him; for it is uſed alſo of the Father, and of the Son, John xvii. 12. Pſal. xvi. 10. but becauſe he is equally holy with them, and is the author of holineſs in his people, which is therefore called the ſanctification of the Spirit, 1 Pet. i. 2. and without whom, David knew, that purity and holineſs of heart and ſpirit he had deſired, could not be renewed and increaſed in him; and therefore deprecates the taking of him away; which ſhews that he was not as yet removed from him, notwithſtanding he had fallen into great ſins; and his ſenſe of ſin, and confeſſion of it, and his fervent application for pardoning grace, and purity of heart, abundantly prove it. The Spirit of God is a gift of his, which is without repentance, and where he once is as a Spirit of regeneration and ſanctification, he ever abides: his external gifts may be taken away; but internal grace is an incorruptible ſeed, and always continues. By ſin the Spirit of God may be grieved, ſo as to withdraw his gracious influences, and his powerful operations may not be felt; and this is what is here deprecated. The Targum interprets this of the ſpirit of prophecy which David had, by which he compoſed pſalms and ſongs prophetic of Chriſt, and of goſpel-times, and which was not taken away from him; ſee 2 Sam. xxiii. 1, 2.

℣. 12. Reſtore unto me the joy of thy ſalvation, &c.] Not temporal, but ſpiritual and eternal; and deſigns either Chriſt himſelf, who is God's ſalvation, of his appointing and providing, in the view of whom, as ſuch, David had much ſpiritual joy; or the ſalvation he was to work out, which God the Father had contrived the ſcheme of in him, had covenanted with him to do, and had appointed his people to: ſalvation itſelf, is a ſure thing, and can never fail, being founded upon the purpoſe and counſel of God, which ſhall ever ſtand; and is ſecured in the covenant of grace, which can never be removed; and is now compleatly wrought out by Chriſt, and is applied by his Spirit to the heirs of it, who ſhall certainly and fully enjoy it; otherwiſe the glory of all the three perſons in it would be loſt: but the joy of it may be interrupted and diſcontinued for a while, through falls into ſin, as this caſe of David, and the caſe of Peter, ſhew; and therefore a reſtoration of it is deſired, by ſhewing a freſh intereſt in this ſalvation; and particularly by an application of pardoning grace and mercy; ſee Pſal. xxxv. 3, 9. and li. 8. And uphold me with thy free Spirit; or let thy free Spirit uphold me[n]; the ſame with the holy Spirit of God; called free, becauſe he is a moſt free and munificent giver: he gives his grace, and beſtows his gifts ſeverally, as he pleaſes, and liberally, and upbraids not; and becauſe he is freely given of God; his graces are freely given, as faith, hope, love, &c. and becauſe he frees them to whom he is given from the bondage of ſin and corruption, and makes them Chriſt's free men, and delivers them into the liberty of the children of God; and ſo is a Spirit of adoption, in oppoſition to a ſpirit of bondage, by which they have freedom and boldneſs to call God their Father; and by whom alſo they have liberty of ſoul at the throne of grace, and can freely make known their requeſts, and ſpread their caſes before God; ſee Rom. viii. 15, 16. 2 Cor. iii. 17. alſo he may be ſo called, becauſe he makes the ſaints ready and willing to obey the will of God, and to run with chearfulneſs the way of his commandments; and is moreover a princely Spirit [o], or beneficent, as ſome chooſe to render the words; and which becomes ſuch who are ſet among princes, and are made kings and prieſts unto God: and with this Spirit the pſalmiſt deſires to be upheld, to be ſtrengthned by it, to do the will and work of God, that ſo he might not ſtumble and fall into ſin as he had done; that he might be ſtayed, ſupported, and comforted with it, as the holy Spirit of promiſe; that ſo he might not faint and ſink under his preſent ſenſe of ſin, and the guilt of it; and that he would be not only a guide unto him in the ways of God; but that he would hold up his goings in them, that ſo he might walk both at liberty and in ſafety. The Targum interprets this alſo of the ſpirit of prophecy.

℣. 13. Then will I teach tranſgreſſors thy ways, &c.] David was a prophet, as well as a king; ſee Acts ii. 30, and taught men the fear of the Lord, Pſal. xxxiv. 11. and inſtructed them in his ways, as he here promiſes he would; by which are meant, either the ways which God preſcribes and directs men to walk in, as the paths of faith, holineſs and truth, and the ways of his commandments; or which he himſelf has walked in; meaning not the ways of his providence, which are ſometimes paſt finding out; but the ways of his grace, the ſteps and methods he has taken in the ſalvation of men, by forming the ſcheme of it, by chooſing unto it, by making a covenant with his Son, and appointing him to effect it; and particularly his ways and methods in receiving and pardoning backſliders, when returned by repentance to him; and who may be meant by tranſgreſſors here: and then the ſenſe is, that David, upon his being received and pardoned, would teach others like himſelf, how graciouſly God had dealt with him; how plenteous he is in mercy; how ready to forgive, and how faithful to his promiſes; and ſo encourage them to go to him, and acknowledge their tranſgreſſions, and ſeek pardoning grace at his hands, who does abundantly pardon, and whoſe ways are not as theirs; ſee Iſa. lv. 7—9. And ſinners ſhall be converted unto thee; or that ſinners may be converted unto thee [p]; this

[n] So Vatablus, Piſcator, Cocceius, Gejerus, Schmidt. V. L. Tigurine verſion; munifico, ſo ſome in Vatablus. Tremellius, Gejerus, Michaelis.

[o] רוח נדיבה πνευματι ηγεμονικω, Sept. ſpiritu principali, [p] יחטאיבך ut peccatores convertantur, Junius & Trethis being the end of teaching by the word, and the means of the converſion of profane and unregenerate ſinners, through the power of divine grace; though rather this ſeems to be underſtood of the converſion of God's own people after backſlidings, and not of firſt converſion; ſee Luke xxii. 32. Jam. v. 19, 20.

℣. 14. Deliver me from blood-guiltineſs, &c.] Or from bloods [q]; meaning not the corruption of nature; ſee Ezek. xvi. 6. though to be rid of that, and to be free from the guilt and condemnation of it, is very deſirable, Rom. vii. 24. but either from capital puniſhment in his family, the effuſion of blood and ſlaughter in it, threatned him on account of his ſin, 2 Sam. xii. 10. ſo the Targum is, "deliver me from the judgment of ſlaying or killing;" or rather, from the guilt of the blood of Uriah, and other ſervants of his he had been the occaſion of ſhedding, and was chargeable with, being acceſſary thereunto, 2 Sam. xi. 15—17. and xii. 9. which lay heavy upon his conſcience, preſſed him on every ſide, as if he was in priſon, and brought upon him a ſpirit of bondage to fear; and therefore he prays to be delivered from it, by the application of pardoning grace, which would be like proclaiming liberty to the captive. O God, thou God of my ſalvation; who has contrived it for his people, choſen them to it, ſecured it for them in covenant, and provided his Son to be the author of it, and ſends his Spirit to apply it. The pſalmiſt knew, that being God he could pardon his ſin, remove his guilt, and free him from obligation to puniſhment, which none elſe could; and being the God of his ſalvation, and his covenant-God, he had reaſon to hope and believe he would. And my tongue ſhall ſing aloud of thy righteouſneſs; goodneſs, grace, and mercy in forgiving ſin; for righteouſneſs ſometimes deſigns clemency, goodneſs, and mercy; ſee Pſal. xxxi. 1. and faithfulneſs in making good the divine promiſe to forgive ſuch who are ſenſible of ſin, and repent of it, acknowledge it, and aſk for mercy; or the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, well known to David, Rom. iv. 6. which juſtifies from all ſin, removes the guilt of it, and fills the ſoul with joy and gladneſs, Iſai. lxi. 10.

℣. 15. O Lord, open thou my lips, &c.] The Targum adds, in the Law; which were ſhut with a ſenſe of ſin, with ſhame of it, and ſorrow for it; and though they were in ſome meaſure opened in prayer to God for the forgiveneſs of it, as appears by various petitions in this pſalm; yet he ſtill wanted a free ſpirit and boldneſs at the throne of grace, which the believer has when his heart is ſprinkled from an evil conſcience by the blood of Chriſt; and eſpecially his lips were ſhut as to praiſe and thanksgiving; the guilt of ſin had ſealed up his lips, that he could not ſing the praiſes of God as he had formerly done; and only a diſcovery of pardoning grace could open them, and for this he prays. And my mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy praiſe; the praiſe of his mercy, grace, goodneſs, truth, and faithfulneſs, in pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs; ſee Pſal. ciii. 1—3.

℣. 16. For thou deſireſt not ſacrifice, &c.] Legal ſacrifice; for there was no ſacrifice appointed under the Law for murder and adultery. Elſe would I give it; he would gladly have offered it up. Thou delighteſt not in burnt-offering; at leaſt ſuch kind of ſacrifices, though they were of divine appointment, and at that time in full force and uſe; yet they were not the only and principal ſacrifices God deſired and delighted in; nor were they at all acceptable to him without faith in Chriſt, and a humble ſenſe of ſin; and when offered in the beſt manner, yet ſpiritual obedience, acts of mercy, and ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving, were more pleaſing to him, 1 Sam. xv. 15, 22. Hoſ. vi. 6. Pſal. lxix. 30, 31. wherefore the pſalmiſt propoſed to offer praiſe in the preceding verſe, and adds what follows.

℣. 17. The ſacrifices of God are a broken ſpirit, &c.] That is humbled under a ſenſe of ſin; has true repentance for it; is ſmitten, wounded, and broken with it, by the word of God in the hand of the Spirit, which is a hammer to break the rock in pieces; and that not merely in a legal, but in an evangelical way; grieving for ſin as committed againſt a God of love; broken and melted down under a ſenſe of it, in a view of pardoning grace; and mourning for it, whilſt beholding a pierced and wounded Saviour: the ſacrifices of ſuch a broken heart and contrite ſpirit are the ſacrifices God deſires, approves, accepts of, and delights in. A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not deſpiſe; but regard, and receive with pleaſure; ſee Pſal. cii. 17. the Lord binds up, and heals ſuch broken hearts and ſpirits, Pſal. cxlvii. 3. Iſa. lxi. 1. he is nigh to ſuch perſons, looks upon them, has reſpect unto them, and comes and dwells among them, Pſal. xxxiv. 18. Iſa. lxvi. 1, 2. and lvii. 15.

℣. 18. Do good in thy good pleaſure unto Zion, &c.] This, and the following verſe, are thought, by a Spaniſh Rabbi mentioned by Aben Ezra, to have been added by one of the holy men that lived in the time of the Babyloniſh captivity; though rather it is thought, by the latter, to be wrote by David, under a ſpirit of prophecy, concerning times to come; and ſo Kimchi thinks they are prophetical of future things; of the deſtruction of the firſt and ſecond temple, and of the acceptableneſs of ſacrifices in the times of the Meſſiah: and by Zion is meant the church, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, Heb. xii. 22. Rev. xiv. 1. and the good prayed for includes all the good and glorious things ſpoken of the church of Chriſt in the latter day; ſuch as an increaſe of its numbers, the bringing in the fulneſs of the Gentiles, the converſion of the Jews, and the kingdoms of this world becoming the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Chriſt; the ſpread of the goſpel all over the world, the purity of goſpel-doctrine, worſhip, and ordinances, the ſpirituality of religion, the power of godlineſs, and an abounding of brotherly love, and the like. The good pleaſure of God, in which this is deſired to be done, may denote either עת רצון the acceptable time; or time of good pleaſure; the goſpel-diſpenſation ſo called, Iſai. xlix. 8. 2 Cor. vi. 2. in which it has been foretold, and may be expected theſe things ſhall be done; or elſe the cauſe, ſource, and ſpring of them, which is the ſovereign good-will and pleaſure of God, from whence flow all the bleſſings of grace and goodneſs. Build thou the walls of Jeruſalem; not literally taken; for theſe do not appear to have ſtood in need of being repaired or rebuilt in David's time; but the church of God, which is a ſpiritual houſe, built up of lively ſtones, true believers; which may be ſaid to be more and more built up by an addition of ſuch unto it: it is as a city compact together, whoſe walls are ſalvation, and its gates praiſe, Iſa. xxvi. 1.

[q] מדמים de ſanguinibus, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus, Muſculus; ſo Ainſworth.

1. and lx. 18. of the wall of the new Jeruſalem; ſee Rev. xxi. 12, 18, 19.

℣. 19. Then ſhalt thou be pleaſed with the ſacrifices of righteouſneſs, &c.] Which muſt be different from the legal ones he deſired not, and did not delight in, ℣. 16. but deſign ſacrifices under the goſpel-diſpenſation, as the word then ſhews, which connects this verſe with the preceding: and in the firſt place intend the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which is of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to God; and his righteouſneſs, with which he is well pleaſed, becauſe the law is magnified and made honourable by it; and next the ſaints themſelves, who preſent their bodies to him a holy, living, and acceptable ſacrifice, they being accepted with him in Chriſt the beloved; as alſo their good works, particularly acts of charity and beneficence, with which ſacrifices God is well pleaſed; and eſpecially the ſpiritual ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving, which are acceptable to him through Jeſus Chriſt; as all are that are offered in faith through him, and from love, and with a view to the glory of God; ſee Eph. v. 2. Rom. xii. 1. Heb. xiii. 15, 16. With burnt-offering, and whole burnt-offering; the difference between theſe two, according to Aben Ezra and Kimchi, was, that the עולה olah, or burnt-offering, was the daily ſacrifice; and the additional ones, which were of beaſts and birds, Lev. i. and the כליל calil, was the meat-offering of the prieſts, which was wholly conſumed, Lev. vi. 22, 23. though this alſo is ſometimes uſed of beaſts, 1 Sam. 7, 9. and both may ſignify love to God, and to our neighbour; or a man's devoting himſelf to the Lord in the flames of love, as a whole burnt-offering to him, and which is better than all burnt-offerings, Mark xii. 33. Then ſhall they offer bullocks upon thine altar; or calves[r]; meaning the calves of the lips, Hoſ. xiv. 2. interpreted the fruit of the lips, even giving thanks to the name of God, Heb. xiii. 16. which ſacrifices of praiſe being offered up on the altar Chriſt, come with acceptance before God, Heb. xiii. 10, 16. Iſa. lvi. 7.

PSALM LII.

To the chief muſician, Maſchil, A pſalm of David, when Doeg the Edomite came and told Saul, and ſaid unto him, David is come to the houſe of Ahimelech.

OF the title Maſchil, ſee the note on Pſal. xxxii. The occaſion of this pſalm is here related, the hiſtory of which is in 1 Sam. xxi. 7. and xxii. 8, 9, 10, 18, 21, 22. The ſum of it is this; David having fled from Saul, came to Ahimelech the prieſt at Nob, and deſired bread and a ſword of him, which were given him, Doeg the Edomite being preſent at the ſame time. Sulpicius Severus [s] calls him a Syrian, following the Greek verſion of 1 Sam. xxi. and xxii. and ſo does Joſephus [t], through a miſtake of the letter ר for ד, an Aramite inſtead of an Edomite; ſee the note on 1 Sam. xxi. 7. and xxii. 9. this man obſerved what was done for David by the prieſt; and when Saul complained to his captains, that they all conſpired againſt him, and no man was ſorry for him, or ſhewed him the intrigue between David and his ſon; Doeg ſtood up and related what, and more than what he had heard and ſeen paſs between David and Ahimelech; upon which Saul ſent for the prieſt, and all his father's houſe with him, and charged him with treaſonable practices; and though he ſolemnly proteſted his innocency, Saul would not believe him, but ordered his footmen to fall upon him, and upon all the prieſts with him; but they refuſing, he commanded Doeg to do it, who accordingly did, and ſlew eighty-five prieſts, and deſtroyed all in the city of Nob, men, women, children, and ſucklings, oxen, aſſes and ſheep; only Abitub, the ſon of Ahimelech, eſcaped, who fled to David, and reported the whole affair; upon which he penned this pſalm: in which he has reſpect not only to the then preſent caſe, but to future times, Doeg being a type of Antichriſt, the man of ſin; in his name, which ſignifies anxious and ſolicitous [u], as he was to gain the king's favour, and obtain wealth and honour; ſo is Antichriſt to graſp all power, civil and eccleſiaſtical, and to get worldly honour and riches: in the country he was of, being an Edomite; and it is eaſy to obſerve, that Edom is the name which the Jews commonly give to the Roman empire, in which Antichriſt has his ſeat and power: in his religion, being a proſelyte of the Jews, and was at an act of devotion, detained before the Lord, when he ſaw and heard what paſſed between David and Ahimelech; ſo Antichriſt appeared with the maſk of religion, roſe up out of the church, and ſat in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelf as though he was God: in his office, the chiefeſt of the herdmen, or mighteſt among the ſhepherds of Saul; ſo Antichriſt calls himſelf princeps paſtorum, the chief of paſtors; aſſuming to himſelf the title which belongs to Chriſt, the chief ſhepherd and biſhop of ſouls: and laſtly, in his cruelty in ſlaying the prieſts of the Lord. Antichriſt is notorious for ſhedding and drinking the blood of the ſaints, the faithful confeſſors and witneſſes of Jeſus Chriſt. In this pſalm David upbraids him with his glorying in his wickedneſs, and checks it, by obſerving that the grace and goodneſs of God to his people ever endures, ℣. 4. charges him with deviſing miſchief, and loving it, ℣. 2—4. and foretels his everlaſting ruin and deſtruction, ℣. 5. which will be ſeen by the righteous with pleaſure, who will have juſt reaſon to inſult over him, ℣. 6, 7. and the pſalm is concluded with an account of the happy condition, and comfortable frame of ſoul the pſalmiſt was in, in a view of all his troubles and enemies; he was flouriſhing in the church of God, truſted in the mercy of God for ever, and determined always to praiſe him and wait upon him, which is good for the ſaints to do, ℣. 8, 9.

℣. 1. Why boaſteſt thou thyſelf in miſchief? &c.] Or in evil [w]; in that which is ſinful; to glory in riches, wiſdom and ſtrength, which are not in themſelves evil, is wrong; and to rejoice in ſuch boaſtings, all ſuch rejoicing is evil; to be a doer of miſchief, or ſin, is bad; to make a ſport of it, worſe; but to glory in it, and boaſt of it when done, is worſer ſtill: to be boaſters of evil things, is the character of Antichriſt and his followers, 2 Tim.

[r] פרים vitulos, V. L. Pagninus, Tigurine verſion, Muſculus. c. 12. f. 1, 4.
[s] Sacr. Hiſt. l. 1. p 43.
[t] Antiq. l. 6.
[u] A rad. דאג ſolicitus, anxius fuit, Buxtorf.
[w] ברעה in malo, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius, Gejerus.

2 Tim. iii. 2. who not only boaſt of their merit, their good works, and works of ſupererogation, and of their riches, and honour, and grandeur, ſaying, I ſit as a queen, Rev. xviii. 7. but of their wickedneſs in ſhedding the blood of the ſaints, thinking thereby they do God good ſervice, and merit heaven, and eternal happineſs; as Doeg boaſted of his ſlaughter of the prieſts, and of his gaining the king's favour by it. O mighty man! referring either to his office, being the chief of Saul's herdmen, and ſet over his ſervants, 1 Sam. xxi. 7. and xxii. 9. or ironically, to the mighty deed he had done, in ſlaying the unarmed prieſts, and putting to death the very ſucklings at the breaſt, and even the innocent ſheep, oxen and aſſes; or to his great wickedneſs and power to commit it; though man has no power and free-will to that which is good, yet he has to that which is evil; ſo the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and the Eaſtern verſions, render it, O thou! mighty in wickedneſs; and to the ſame purpoſe the Targum paraphraſes it, mighty to ſhed innocent blood; and the note of Aben Ezra is, mighty to do evil. A learned writer [x] thinks this relates to Saul, and deſcribes him as a man of power and dignity. The character well agrees with the little horn and Romiſh beaſt, Dan. vii. 20. Rev. xiii. 2, 4, 7. The goodneſs of God endureth continually; that is, the love, grace, and mercy of God; this is obſerved as what is the matter of the ſaints boaſting, in oppoſition to the wicked boaſting of Doeg; they glory in the love of God, and in that they know him who exerciſeth loving-kindneſs, which is the ſource of all the bleſſings of grace and goodneſs; and in Chriſt, through whom all are communicated to them; and in him, as made every bleſſing to them, wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption: they aſcribe the whole of their ſalvation, and all they have, to the grace of God, and glory in nothing as of themſelves, and as though not received of the Lord. Moreover, the pſalmiſt may take notice of this, as what was his ſupport under all the perſecutions he endured from men; that he had an intereſt in the grace and goodneſs of God, which is immutable and everlaſting, invariably the ſame in all ſtates and conditions; and that he was encompaſſed about with the favour of God as with a ſhield; and that it was not in the power of his moſt implacable enemies to ſeparate him from the love of God; and therefore it was egregious folly in Doeg to boaſt himſelf in miſchief; for be he as mighty as he might, he could not prevent his ſharing in the divine goodneſs, which always continues.

℣. 2. Thy tongue deviſeth miſchiefs, &c.] Abundance of miſchiefs, in a variety of ways, againſt many perſons, even all good men. What properly belongs to the heart is here aſcribed to the tongue; becauſe, as Aben Ezra obſerves, it is the interpreter and diſcoverer of the thoughts of the heart: out of the abundance of that the tongue ſpeaks and declares the miſchief it has deviſed. Doeg intended miſchief to David, when he ſpoke to Saul, 1 Sam. xxii. 9, 10. ſo Antichriſt deviſes miſchiefs againſt the ſaints of the moſt High, to wear them out, and thinks to change times and laws, Dan. vii. 25. Like a ſharp razor, working deceitfully; that is, his tongue was like a razor; the razor is but a ſmall inſtrument, and the tongue is but a little member: the razor is a ſharp and cutting one, and ſo is the tongue; and therefore compared to a ſharp ſword, Pſal. lvii. 4. ſee Jer. xviii. 18. the razor takes off the beard cleanly and wholly; Doeg's tongue was the cauſe of the utter ruin of Abimelech's family and the city of Nob; and as a razor may be ſaid to work deceitfully, when it turns aſide in the hand of him that uſeth it, and with the hair takes off more than it ſhould, even ſkin and fleſh, or cuts the man's throat; ſo, in a deceitful and inſidious manner did Doeg work the deſtruction of Abimelech and the prieſts of the Lord.

℣. 3. Thou loveſt evil more than good, &c.] Indeed not good at all; ſuch comparatives being ſtrong negatives; ſee Pſal. cxviii. 8, 9. a wicked man loves evil, and nothing elſe; his carnal mind being enmity to all that is good. And lying, rather than to ſpeak righteouſneſs; as appears by his affirming that Abimelech enquired of the Lord for David, when he did not, 1 Sam. xxii. 10, 15. and by ſuffering ſome things to paſs for truths which were falſhoods, when it lay in his power to have diſproved them: and ſuch a lover of lies is Antichriſt; ſee 1 Tim. iv. 2. 2 Theſſ. ii. 11. Selah; of this word, ſee the note on Pſal. iii. 2.

℣. 4. Thou loveſt all devouring words, &c.] Or words of ſwallowing up [y]; ſuch as lies, calumnies, and detractions are, which devour the characters and reputations of men, and are the cauſe ſometimes of their utter ruin and deſtruction; of the devouring and blaſphemous words of Antichriſt ſee Rev. xiii. 5, 6. O thou deceitful tongue; as in ℣. 2.

℣. 5. God ſhall likewiſe deſtroy thee for ever, &c.] As a juſt retaliation for the miſchief done to others; or, therefore God ſhall deſtroy [z], &c. even body and ſoul in hell, with an everlaſting deſtruction, which will be the caſe of every wicked man, and particularly of the antichriſtian party, Rev. xiv. 10, 11. the word is uſed of breaking down the houſe in which the leproſy was, Lev. xiv. 45. and denotes the utter extinction of Doeg's family, and the irrecoverable ruin of Antichriſt, Rev. xviii. 21. He ſhall take thee away; as fire from the hearth, Iſai. xxx. 14. or as burning coals from the altar. a word from the root here uſed ſignifies a cenſer: and the meaning is, that as his tongue was a fire, and ſet on fire of hell, and he was as a burning coal, he was fit for nothing but to be caſt into everlaſting burnings. And pluck thee out of thy dwelling-place; tent, or tabernacle [a]; referring to the tents of ſhepherds, he being the chief of Saul's ſhepherds; or to ſome ſtately palace he had built for himſelf to dwell in, upon his advancement at court; or rather, to the tabernacle of the Lord, where he had been an hypocritical worſhipper; but now ſhould be cut off from the church of God, as a rotten member, and caſt out of the tabernacle of Jacob, Mal. ii. 12. whilſt David flouriſhed as an olive tree in the houſe of the Lord, ℣. 8. And root thee out of the land of the living. Selah. in retaliation for his rooting out Abimelech's family, and the inhabitants of Nob; ſo in like manner he and his ſhould be deſtroyed root and branch, and not ſee the goodneſs of the Lord in the land of the living, nor enjoy eternal life in the world to come. The Targum renders the word Selah here for ever, as in ℣. 3.

℣. 6. The righteous alſo ſhall ſee, &c.] The Targum adds, the puniſhment of the wicked; particularly what is before predicted of Doeg. The judgments of God upon the ungodly, as they are certain,

[x] Delany's Life of King David, vol. 1. p. 119.

[y] דברי בלע verba abſorptionis, Vatablus, Gejerus, Schmidt.

[z] גם διὰ τοῦτο, Sept. propterea, V. L. idcirco etiam, Piſcator; ideo etiam, Michaelis.

[a] מאהל de tabernaculo, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Muſculus; e tentorio, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius.

certain, ſo they will be viſible, either in this world, or in that to come, Rev. xv. 4. Iſai. lxvi. 24. And fear; the Targum adds, from before the Lord; not with a ſlaviſh fear, with a dread of the ſame puniſhment, from which they are free, through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to them, by which they are denominated righteous ones; tho' the judgments of God on others ſtrike them with ſolemn awe and reverence, Pſal. cxix. 120. but with a filial, godly fear; with a fear of God for his goodneſs to them, in delivering them out of the hands of wicked men, which engages them more and more to fear the Lord, and to ſerve and worſhip him; ſee Rev. xv. 4. And ſhall laugh at him; at Doeg; and ſo at any other wicked man, when they ſee the vengeance of God upon him, Pſal. lviii. 10. not that they rejoice at that barely conſidered in itſelf, or as it is an evil and miſchief to wicked men; for that does not become them, Prov. xxiv. 17, 18. but as it is expreſſive of the care of God over them, and love to them, in avenging their enemies; and more eſpecially as the glory of divine juſtice is diſplayed therein; ſee Rev. xviii. 20. and xix. 1, 2. for all this will be eminently fulfilled in the deſtruction of Antichriſt.

℣. 7. Lo, this is the man that made not God his ſtrength, &c.] The Targum renders it, that made not the Word of the Lord his ſtrength. Theſe are the words the righteous would ſay, when they ſhould ſee the deſtruction of Doeg: See the man, the mighty man, and his end; what all his ill-gotten honour and riches are come to; and what his wickedneſs, deceit and cruelty, have brought upon him. The righteous make the Lord their ſtrength, put their truſt in him, in whom is everlaſting ſtrength; do all they do in his ſtrength; fly to him as their ſtronghold, as the word [b] may be rendered; thither they run and are ſafe: but the rich man's wealth is his ſtrong city, Prov. xviii. 10, 11. there he thinks himſelf ſafe, and places his confidence in it, as follows: But truſted in the abundance of his riches; ſee the note on Pſal. xlix. 6. ſo the antichriſtian whore is repreſented as boaſting of her riches and honour, and truſting in them, that they would always continue, Rev. xviii. 7. like the fool in Luke xii. 19, 20. And ſtrengthned himſelf in his wickedneſs; encouraged and hardened himſelf in ſin, gave up himſelf to it; and, by an obſtinate continuance in it, ſtrengthned the vicious habits contracted; ſtretched out his hand againſt God, and ſtrengthned himſelf againſt the Almighty; went on in a daring manner, promiſing himſelf impunity; and as if his wickedneſs was his ſtrength, his ſafeguard and protection: or in his mammon, his wealth and ſubſtance, as the Targum interprets it; and ſo R. Saadiah Gaon [c], and with which the Syriac verſion agrees; and then the ſenſe is the ſame with the other clauſe. But alas! what are all ſuch forces of ſtrength, when wrath comes forth from the Lord of hoſts? Job xxxvi. 18, 19. Prov. xi. 4.

℣. 8. But I am like a green olive-tree in the houſe of God, &c.] Or rather, it ſhould be ſupplied, I ſhall be [d]; ſince David was at this time an exile from the houſe of God: and this expreſſes his faith and confidence, that, notwithſtanding his preſent troubles, he ſhould be reſtored again, and be in a very flouriſhing condition, in the church of God; which is here meant by the houſe of God: it being of his building, and where he dwells, and where to have a place, is the great privilege of the ſaints; they are planted there by the Lord himſelf, and ſhall never be rooted up; they are fixed there, and ſhall never go out; which was David's confidence, Pſal. xxiii. 6. and where he believed he ſhould be as a green olive-tree; which is a very choice and fruitful tree, has fatneſs in it, produces an excellent oil; is beautiful to look at; delights in hot climates and ſunny places; is found on mountains, we read of the mount of Olives; is ever green and durable, and its leaves and branches are ſymbols of peace: all which is applicable to truly righteous perſons and believers in Chriſt; who are the excellent of the earth, are filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs; are fat and flouriſhing; have the oil of grace, the anointing which teacheth all things; are a perfection of beauty, made perfectly comely through Chriſt's comelineſs; thrive under him, the Sun of righteouſneſs; grow in the mountain of the Lord's houſe, the church: their grace is incorruptible, their leaf withers not; they are rooted in Chriſt, and ever continue; they are the ſons of peace, and their laſt end will be eternal peace. Now as ſuch, David was aſſured he ſhould be, when his enemy would be rooted up out of the land of the living, and caſt like a dry and worthleſs branch into everlaſting burnings; the ground of which confidence follows: I truſt in the mercy of God for ever and ever; the mercy of God is not only an encouragement to truſt, but the object of it; not the abſolute mercy of God, but the grace and goodneſs of God in Chriſt Jeſus, which endures continually, ℣. 1. and ſo does hope in it, which never makes aſhamed, but abides to the end. The pſalmiſt ſeems to have reſpect to the mercy promiſed him, that he ſhould ſit upon the throne. This he believed, and therefore was aſſured he ſhould be in the flouriſhing circumſtances in the houſe of God, before mentioned.

℣. 9. I will praiſe thee for ever, &c.] Both in this world, as long as he lived, and had a being in it; and in the world to come, to all eternity. This is a reſolution reſpecting what he would do, when he ſhould be in the happy condition he was confident of. Becauſe thou haſt done it; the Targum interprets it, the revenge of my judgment; meaning the vengeance of God on Doeg; and to the ſame ſenſe Aben Ezra and Kimchi: though it may refer to the comfortable and happy condition he ſhould be in, ℣. 8. and which he wholly aſcribes to the grace and goodneſs of God, and not to any merits of his own, and therefore determines to praiſe him for it. And I will wait on thy name; on the Lord himſelf, in his houſe and ordinances, for his preſence and freſh ſupplies of grace and ſtrength, when he ſhould be reſtored. Or the ſenſe is, that in the mean while he would wait patiently on the Lord, until he had accompliſhed what he had promiſed, and David believed. For it is good before thy ſaints; the ſenſe is, either that it is good to wait upon the Lord and for him; which appears to be ſo to all the ſaints, by the comfortable experience they have had of it, Iſa. xl. 31. Lam. iii. 26. or the name of the Lord is good unto them, pleaſant, delightful and comfortable, as proclaimed, Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7. ſee Cant. i. 3. and alſo Rev. xv. 4.

[b] מעוז arcem ſuam, Coccеius; preſidium, munimentum, Michaelis. [c] Apud Kimchi in loc. [d] Ero, Piſcator, Coccеius, Gejerus.

PSALM

PSALM LIII.

To the chief muſician, upon Mahalath, Maſchil, a pſalm of David.

THE word mahalath is only uſed here and in Pſal. lxxxviii. Some, with Aben Ezra, take it to be the firſt word of a ſong, to the tune of which this pſalm was ſet; others, with Jarchi, that it is the name of a muſical inſtrument on which it was ſung; a hollow inſtrument, of the ſame nature with nechiloth, Pſal. v. Though it may relate to the argument or ſubject-matter of the pſalm, and be rendered, concerning ſickneſs or infirmity [e]; and as Jarchi obſerves, ſome interpret it, concerning the ſickneſs or weakneſs of Iſrael, when the temple was deſtroyed. But it ſeems much better to underſtand it of the ſickneſs and diſeaſe of ſin, and the weakneſs following upon that, to which all mankind are ſubject; ſince the pſalm manifeſtly treats of the general corruption and depravity of human nature. This pſalm is the ſame with Pſal. xiv. and is expreſſed in the ſame words, with ſome little difference; the reaſon of its repetition is variouſly conjectured. Some think that the compiler of the book of Pſalms, obſerving various readings in it occaſioned by copying, thought fit to inſert it both ways; but it is moſt likely to be compoſed by David himſelf, at different times, and it may be on different occaſions, and with different views. Some think the former, namely Pſal. xiv. was written concerning Nabal, and this concerning Doeg; according to Jarchi, that was concerning Nebuchadnezzar, this concerning Titus Veſpaſian; or, as others think, Antiochus Epiphanes. Kimchi is of opinion that this pſalm, being placed between one that relates to Doeg, and another that refers to the Ziphites, points at the likeneſs there is between the caſe of David and the Meſſiah; that as David had many who ſought to enſnare him, yet God rewarded them, and eſtabliſhed him in the kingdom; ſo it will be with the Meſſiah: but it is much more reaſonable with others to conclude, that it is repeated either becauſe of the importance of it; becauſe that as the former may refer to the corruption of the Jews in the times of David, this to the corruption of men in the times of Chriſt and his apoſtles, and under the goſpel-diſpenſation, until the ſecond coming of Chriſt, eſpecially under the reign of Antichriſt. The argument of the pſalm, according to the Syriac verſion, is concerning Ahithophel, who gave counſel to Abſalom to purſue his father David and kill him: and, according to the Arabic verſion, it is a prophecy concerning Babel and Sennacherib; ſo Theodoret: but rather concerning myſtical Babylon, and the man of ſin.

℣. 1. The fool hath ſaid in his heart, There is no God, &c.] The Targum adds, of whom is revenge; or there is no God to puniſh and avenge the wicked. Corrupt are they; the Chaldee paraphraſe is, the wicked have corrupted their ways; as all fleſh had done in the old world, Gen. vi. 12. And have done abominable iniquity; iniquity is the abominable thing that God hates, and makes men abominable in his ſight; in Pſal. xiv. 1. it is read, abominable works: the Targum paraphraſes the words, they are far from good, for iniquity is found in them; ſee Rev. xxi. 8, 27. There is none that doth good; ſee the note on Pſal. xiv. 1.

℣. 2. God looked down from heaven upon the children of men, &c.] In Pſal. xiv. 2. it is read, the Lord or Jehovah; in every thing elſe there is an agreement in this verſe; ſee the note there. To ſee if there were any that did underſtand; the Targum is, that were underſtanding in the law; it doubtleſs means underſtanding in divine and ſpiritual things. That did ſeek God; the above paraphraſe is, ſeeking doctrine from before the Lord.

℣. 3. Every one of them is gone back, &c.] From God, and the way of his commandments. In Pſal. xiv. 3. it is, they are all gone aſide; ſee the note there. What follows in this verſe is the ſame as there.

℣. 4. Have the workers of iniquity no knowledge? &c.] In Pſal. xiv. 4. it is, have all the workers, &c. There are none of them but what have, unleſs given up to judicial blindneſs, and hardneſs of heart, to believe a lie, as Antichriſt and his followers, 2 Theſſ. ii. 10, 11. Who eat up my people, as they eat bread; and drink their blood, and are drunken with it, Rev. xvii. 6. They have not called upon God; but upon their idols, upon the Virgin Mary, and ſaints departed. In Pſal. xiv. 4. it is, upon the Lord.

℣. 5. There were they in great fear, where no fear was, &c.] Before; neither of God nor man, nor any dread of puniſhment, but the utmoſt ſecurity, Rev. xviii. 7, 8, 10. For God hath ſcattered the bones of him that encampeth againſt thee; either againſt Chriſt, or againſt his church and people; who ſet themſelves againſt the perſon, office and grace of Chriſt, and ſeek to diſtreſs and deſtroy his intereſt: the bones of ſuch God will ſcatter; that is, he will deſtroy Antichriſt and his armies, which are his ſtrength, as the bones are the ſtrength of the human body; and make ſuch a carnage of them, that the fowls of the air ſhall eat their fleſh, and their bones ſhall be ſcattered here and there; ſee Rev. xix. 17—21. So the Targum, "for God "ſcatters the ſtrength of the armies of the wicked." Kimchi interprets it of the bones of the nations that ſhall encamp againſt Jeruſalem, in the days of Gog; ſee Rev. xx. 8, 9. and Aben Ezra obſerves, that thee reſpects either God or the Meſſiah. Thou haſt put them to ſhame; this is either an addreſs of the pſalmiſt unto God, declaring what he had done; or rather, of God the Father to his Son Chriſt Jeſus; and ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech ſay, this refers to the Meſſiah: and it may be expreſſive of the ſhame and confuſion that Antichriſt and his followers will be thrown into, when they ſhall make war with the Lamb, and he ſhall overcome them, Rev. xvii. 14. Becauſe God hath deſpiſed them; or rejected them as reprobates; given them up to a reprobate mind; and being ungodly men, has before ordained them to this condemnation. The Targum is, "for the Word of the Lord hath re-"jected them;" as filthy, loathſome and abominable, and caſt them alive into the lake of fire, Rev. xix. 20.

℣. 6. O that the ſalvation of Iſrael were come out of Zion! &c.] Or, who will give [f] out of Zion the ſalvation of Iſrael. The Targum adds, except the Lord; and this is a requeſt to him for it: and as

[e] על מחלת de miſeria, Tigurine verſion, vel infirmitate; ſo Ainſworth.

[f] מי יתן quis dabit, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

as in Pſal. xiv. 7. it may be a wiſh for the firſt coming of Chriſt, to work out ſalvation for his people; here it may be expreſſive of the deſire of the church for his coming in a ſpiritual manner, in the latter day, to take to himſelf his great power and reign; to deſtroy Antichriſt, and deliver his people from bondage and oppreſſion by him; when the Gentiles ſhall be gathered in, the Jews will be converted, and all Iſrael ſaved; ſee Rom. xi. 25, 26. It is in the original text, ſalvations [g]; denoting the complete ſalvation of the church; when all her enemies will be deſtroyed, and all peace and proſperity ſhall be enjoyed by her. When God bringeth back the captivity of his people; who have been carried into it by Antichriſt, Rev. xiii. 10. Jacob ſhall rejoice, and Iſrael ſhall be glad; for now the kingdoms of this world will become Chriſt's; the marriage of the Lamb will be come, and the bride made ready, through the calling of the Gentiles, and the converſion of the Jews; which will occaſion the four and twenty elders, the repreſentatives of the chriſtian church, to give thanks to the Lord God Almighty, and cauſe many voices to be heard in heaven, expreſſing great joy on this occaſion, Rev. xi. 15, 16, 17, 18. and xix. 1—7.

PSALM LIV.

To the chief muſician, on Neginoth, Maſchil, a pſalm of David, when the Ziphim came and ſaid to Saul, Doth not David hide himſelf with us?

OF the word neginoth, ſee the note on the title of Pſal. iv. and of maſchil, the note on the title of Pſal. xxxii. The occaſion of writing this pſalm were the diſcoveries the Ziphim or Ziphites made to Saul, of David being in their neighbourhood; which they did twice, as appears from 1 Sam. xxiii. 14, 19. and xxvi. 1. Which of theſe gave occaſion to the pſalm is not certain; it is very likely that it was compoſed after both had been made. Theſe Ziphim were the inhabitants of a city called Ziph, which was in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 55. near to which was a wilderneſs, which had its name from the city, in which David was when they came to Saul with this news of him.

℣. 1. Save me, O God, by thy name, &c.] That is, by himſelf, by his power, and of his grace and goodneſs; the Lord's name is often uſed for himſelf. David in his diſtreſs applies to his God for ſalvation and deliverance, who only could give it; which was right; and his prayer was remarkably heard and anſwered: for when Saul came down upon the firſt diſcovery, and beſet David and his men all around, juſt as he was about to ſeize the prey, tidings came to him of the invaſion of the Philiſtines; which obliged him directly to quit his purſuit of David, and return in haſte for the defence of his country, 1 Sam. xxiii. 26, 27, 28. and upon the ſecond diſcovery, when Saul came again to take him, Saul was delivered into the hands of David, who could have took away his life if he would; but he only took his ſpear and cruiſe of water by his bolſter, as a proof of his being in his power, 1 Sam. xxvi. 12. Of ſuch avail is the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man. This prayer is ſuitable enough to David's Antitype and Son, the Meſſiah; ſee Pſal. lxix. 1. Heb. v. 7. and eſpecially to ſenſible ſinners; who, being made acquainted with their loſt and periſhing condition, enquire the way of ſalvation; and finding it is not by works, but by Chriſt alone, apply in that way for it, and deſire that God would ſave them by his Son; who is his name, in whom his name is, and whoſe name Jeſus, a Saviour, is of God's giving; and this name is a ſtrong tower, whither ſuch ſouls, ſenſible of danger, flee and are ſafe; nor is there any other name in which ſalvation is, and which is therefore exceeding precious, and like ointment poured forth; ſee Exod. xxiii. 21. Matth. i. 21. Prov. xviii. 10. Acts iv. 12. Cant. i. 3. Or, for thy name's ſake [h]; for the ſake of the glory of his divine perfections; which was diſplayed in the deliverance of David, and more abundantly in the ſalvation of loſt ſinners; ſuch as the wiſdom, power, faithfulneſs, juſtice, grace and mercy of God. Such a petition ſhews that man cannot ſave himſelf; that no creature, none but God can ſave him; and that a ſenſible ſinner deſires to be ſaved in ſuch a way, that God may be glorified. And judge me by thy ſtrength; David, though innocent, had many charges laid againſt him; his enemies were lively and ſtrong; he puts his cauſe into the hands of the Lord, his ſtrong Redeemer, who was able to plead it thoroughly againſt thoſe that ſtrove with him; ſo Chriſt, his antitype, committed his cauſe to him that judgeth righteouſly, 1 Pet. ii. 23. and ſo ſhould every believer.

℣. 2. Hear my prayer, O God, &c.] The pſalmiſt firſt puts up his petitions, and then deſires to be heard; his diſtreſs, and the fervency of his ſpirit, not ſuffering him to obſerve order. Give ear to the words of my mouth; for the prayer which was conceived in his mind, and inwrought there by the Spirit of God, was expreſſed vocally.

℣. 3. For ſtrangers are riſen up againſt me, &c.] Meaning ſuch as Doeg the Edomite, or heathen ſoldiers, that Saul had hired and took into his army, who were aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael; and ſuch as theſe roſe up againſt David's antitype, the Meſſiah, Pſal. ii. 1, 2. Acts iv. 27. Or rather the Ziphim, who were of his own nation, yea of his own tribe, yet uſed him as barbarouſly as the very heathens would have done, or worſe; and who, though notwithſtanding they were of Iſrael, might not be Iſraelites indeed, but ſtrangers to an inward experience of divine and ſpiritual things: for men may be profeſſors of religion, and yet be ſtrangers to God in Chriſt, to Chriſt himſelf, and the way of ſalvation by him, and communion with him; to the Spirit of God, and the operations of his grace on the heart; to themſelves, their own hearts, and their ſtate and condition by nature; to the goſpel of Chriſt, and to the people of God; and theſe are ſometimes the moſt violent perſecutors of good and ſpiritual men. And oppreſſors ſeek after my ſoul; or life [i], to take it away; as did Saul and his army; who are the mighty or ſtrong ones [k], as the word here uſed ſignifies; ſee 1 Sam. xxiv. 11. and as

[g] ישועות ſalutes, Pagninus, Montanus, Cocceius; ſo Ainſworth. Tremellius, Piſcator, Gejerus, Amama, Michaelis.
[h] בשמך propter nomen tuum, Junius & Tremellius, Michaelis.
[i] נפשי vitam meam, Junius & Tremellius, Michaelis.
[k] עריצים fortes, V. L. Pagninus, Muſculus, Gejerus; præpotentes, Vatablus.

as the Jewiſh ſanhedrim, Scribes and Phariſees, ſought after the ſoul or life of Chriſt, to take that away, as they did. They have not ſet God before them. Selah. they did not conſider themſelves as under the omniſcient eye of God; they did not ſet his word before them, as the rule of their conduct, but caſt it behind their backs; nor did they regard his providential mercies and favours, as a motive to engage them to obedience to him, but deſpiſed them; they had not the fear of God before their eyes, nor in their hearts, nor any concern for his glory; and therefore did the wicked things they did againſt his ſervant.

℣. 4. Behold, God is mine helper, &c.] This being a matter of wonder to be helped in ſo extraordinary a manner, and a ſure and certain caſe, and what was deſerving the attention of others; for the encouragement of their faith and hope in like caſes, a behold is prefixed unto it: and what is here ſaid is true of David's Son the Meſſiah, and is expreſſed by him in much the ſame language, Iſa. l. 9. and of all the ſaints whom the Lord helps, as at firſt converſion, out of the pit wherein is no water, out of the horrible pit, the mire and clay of nature's darkneſs, ignorance and unbelief; ſo out of all their afflictions and temptations, and out of the hands of all their enemies; he helps in the exerciſe of grace, and in the diſcharge of duty; and he helps to all mercies temporal and ſpiritual, needful for them; which help is quick and preſent, ſeaſonable and ſuitable, always ſufficient; and is what they have reaſon to expect both from what he has ſaid to them in promiſe, and from what he has done for them. The Lord is with them that uphold my ſoul; that miniſtred to his ſuſtenance, as Abigail did, and that gathered to him and joined him, and expoſed their lives in the defence of him; theſe the Lord was with, bleſſed, protected, and afforded them his gracious preſence. Such there were with Chriſt; who followed him in the regeneration; who miniſtred to him of their ſubſtance, whom God rewarded in a way of grace; and he bleſſes them that bleſs his, and do good to them; they being the excellent in the earth, in whom is his delight, the apple of his eye, and his jewels. Or the ſenſe is, that the Lord is he that upheld his ſoul; not only the chief of his upholders, but the only one: ſo R. Moſes [l] interprets it, that he is the alone upholder, and is inſtead of all upholders, and anſwers to them all; who upheld his ſoul in life, and followed him with his goodneſs: as when God is ſaid to be the firſt, and with the laſt, the meaning is, that he is the firſt and the laſt, Iſa. xli. 4. ſee Pſal. cxviii. 7. ſo he upheld the ſoul of Chriſt in the wilderneſs, and in the garden, and on the croſs; ſee Iſa. xlii. 1. And he upholds all his people in a providential way in their beings, and ſupplies them with all the neceſſaries of life; and in a ſpiritual way, maintaining their ſpiritual life, ſupplying them with all grace, bearing them up under all trials, holding up their goings in his ways, and preſerving them to the end.

℣. 5. He ſhall reward evil unto mine enemies, &c.] That eyed him as Saul did; that obſerved his haunts, where he reſorted, and who were with him, as the Ziphites did under Saul's direction; as the word [m] here uſed for enemies ſignifies: the miſchief they had deviſed for him, he believed would be returned upon their own heads; the pit they digged, they would fall into themſelves; and the net they had ſpread for others, their own feet would be taken in. This was true as of David's enemies, ſo of Chriſt's, the wicked Jews, who narrowly watched him to take every advantage againſt him. Cut them off in thy truth; root and branch, as Saul, and his family and his courtiers quickly were, according to the truth of promiſes made to David, and of threatnings unto them.

℣. 6. I will freely ſacrifice unto thee, &c.] Not legal ſacrifices; no, nor freewill-offerings the law gives directions about, though the alluſion is to them; but the freewill-offerings of his mouth, Pſal. cxix. 108. the ſacrifices of praiſe and thanksgiving, on account of help, ſalvation, and deliverance, as appears from the following clauſe; which he determines to offer, not by conſtraint, but willingly; not by force, but of a ready mind; freely, and with all his heart. The ſacrifice of his antitype is himſelf, his ſoul and body, as in union with his divine perſon; and this was offered up to God, againſt whom man has ſinned, and whoſe juſtice muſt be ſatisfied; and this was done freely and voluntarily: he gave himſelf an offering; he laid down his life of himſelf, and that for ſinners. The ſacrifices of his people are their prayers and praiſes, their acts of beneficence, and the preſentation of their ſouls and bodies in divine ſervice; all which they do freely, under the influence of divine grace. I will praiſe thy name, O Lord; which explains what is meant by ſacrificing; this is what is due to the Lord, and comely in his people. For it is good; either the name of God; and therefore to be praiſed. He himſelf is good, as he is, both in a way of providence and of grace; and it is good, both pleaſantly and profitably good, to ſing praiſes to him, Pſal. cxlvii. 1.

℣. 7. For he hath delivered me out of all trouble, &c.] As he deſired, 1 Sam. xxvi. 24. that is, out of all his preſent trouble; not that he had no more afterwards; for as ſoon as one trouble is gone, generally ſpeaking, another comes; but as God delivered him out of his preſent diſtreſs; ſo he believed he would deliver him out of all his afflictions in future times. And mine eye hath ſeen his deſire upon mine enemies; or revenge, as the Targum ſupplies it; not that he delighted in the deſtruction of his enemies, but in the juſtice of God glorified thereby, and in the goodneſs of God to him, in delivering him from them; ſee Rev. xviii. 20.

PSALM LV.

To the chief muſician, on Neginoth, Maſchil, a pſalm of David.

THE occaſion of this pſalm was either the perſecution of Saul, or the conſpiracy of Abſalom. Some think it was written when David underſtood that the inhabitants of Keilah would deliver him into the hands of Saul, 1 Sam. xxiii. 12, 13. and others, when the Ziphites attempted a ſecond time to do the ſame, 1 Sam. xxvi. 1. but ſince a ſingle perſon is ſpoken of that magnified himſelf againſt him, ℣. 12, 13. and Ahithophel ſeems to be deſigned; it may be thought rather to be written on on account of Abſalom's rebellion, and Ahithophel's counſel againſt him; who is conſidered by many chriſtian interpreters as a type of Judas, the betrayer of our Lord; and indeed there are many things in this pſalm, if not the whole, which may be truly applied to Chriſt, as will be ſeen in the following expoſition of it.

[l] Apud Aben Ezram in loc. [m] לשוררי obſervatoribus meis, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Michaelis.

℣. 1. Give ear to my prayer, O God, &c.] Which was for that which is juſt and right, and equitable to be given, as the word [n] uſed ſignifies; being promiſed in the covenant of grace, ratified and confirmed by the blood of Chriſt. Not only David was a man much given to prayer, as well as was the ſweet pſalmiſt of Iſrael; but the Meſſiah, as man, was much, and often engaged in this work, in the days of his fleſh, Luke vi. 12. Heb. v. 7. And hide not thyſelf from my ſupplication; made for mercies and bleſſings, which ſpring from the free grace and goodneſs of God, which is the ſenſe of the word [o] here uſed; and ſuch are all mercies, whether temporal or ſpiritual; for none are merited by men: and from his ſupplication for ſuch things, the pſalmiſt deſires, that as he would not be as one deaf to him, ſo that he would not hide his eyes, or refuſe to look upon him, and deny his requeſts; ſee Iſa. i. 15.

℣. 2. Attend unto me, and hear me, &c.] So as to anſwer, and that immediately and directly, his caſe requiring preſent help. I mourn in my complaint; or in my meditation [p]; ſolitary thoughts, and melancholy views of things. Saints have their complaints, on account of their ſins and corruptions, their barrenneſs and unfruitfulneſs, and the decay of vital religion in them; and becauſe of the low eſtate of Zion, the declining ſtate of the intereſt of Chriſt, and the little ſucceſs of his goſpel; and they mourn, in theſe complaints, over their own ſins, and the ſins of others, profeſſors and profane, and under afflictions temporal and ſpiritual, both their own and the church's. Chriſt alſo, in the days of his fleſh, had his complaints of the perverſeneſs and faithleſsneſs of the generation of men among whom he lived; of the frowardneſs, pride, and contentions of his diſciples; of the reproaches, inſult, and injuries of his enemies; and of the dereliction of his God and Father; and he often mourned on account of one or other of theſe things, being a man of ſorrows, and acquainted with griefs. And make a noiſe; not only with ſighs and groans, but in ſo loud a manner as to be called roaring; ſee Pſal. xxii. 1. and xxxviii. 8.

℣. 3. Becauſe of the voice of the enemy, &c.] Of Abſalom, as Arama; or of Ahithophel, who gave out, he would ſmite the king only, 2 Sam. xvii. 2. and ſo of any ſpiritual enemy, as ſin, Satan, and the world, when they threaten dominion and tyranny; and of the ſcribes and Phariſees reproaching Chriſt, as being a Samaritan, and having a devil, and doing his miracles by his aſſiſtance; menacing, inſulting, and triumphing over him, when on the croſs. Becauſe of the oppreſſion of the wicked; of Abſalom or Ahithophel, as Arama; who conſpired againſt David, and obliged him to quit his palace, and the city of Jeruſalem; and is applicable to the troubles which ſurround the people of God, from every quarter, by wicked men, and to our Lord's being incloſed by them at the time of his crucifixion, Pſal. xxii. 12, 13, 16. For they caſt iniquity upon me; laid things to his charge he knew not: ſo wicked men falſly accuſe the good converſation of the ſaints; and ſo the Jews imputed crimes to Chriſt he was innocent of; as immorality, ſedition, blaſphemy, &c. And in wrath they hate me; as they do all the people of God, becauſe choſen and called, and ſeparated from them; and ſo they did Chriſt, and with a mortal hatred, though without a cauſe.

℣. 4. My heart is ſore pained within me, &c.] At the civil war in his kingdom; at the battle likely to enſue, between his forces and Abſalom's, and at the iſſue of it; ſee Jer. iv. 19. this was true of Chriſt in the garden, when his ſoul was exceeding ſorrowful unto death, and he was in pain, as a woman in travail, as the word [q] here uſed ſignifies; and on the croſs, when his heart, like wax, melted in the midſt of his bowels. And the terrors of death are fallen upon me; ſee 2 Sam. xv. 14. thus it was with the human nature of Chriſt, when he deſired, if poſſible, the cup might paſs from him.

℣. 5. Fearfulneſs and trembling are come upon me, &c.] Fear and dread of mind, and trembling of body. And horror hath overwhelmed me; or covered me [q]; he was in the utmoſt conſternation and ſurprize, at what he apprehended would be the iſſue of things; ſo Chriſt in the garden is ſaid to be ſore amazed, Mark xiv. 33. all which terror, fearfulneſs, trembling, and horror, aroſe from a ſenſe of ſin imputed to him, even of all the ſins of his people, the filth of which muſt be nauſeous to him, and the guilt thereof preſſing upon him; and from a feeling of the wrath of God, and the curſe of the law, which he endured in the room and ſtead of his people: and this ſhews the truth of his human nature, and the weakneſs and inſufficiency of that, without his divine nature to have performed the great work of redemption; alſo the evil of ſin, the exceeding ſinfulneſs of it, and the ſtrictneſs of divine juſtice; and likewiſe the wonderful love of Chriſt in becoming a ſurety for his people, and what eaſe and pleaſure they may take; all the pain, the trembling and horror, were his, and all the joy is theirs.

℣. 6. And I ſaid, Oh, that I had wings like a dove, &c.] The pſalmiſt pitches upon this creature, partly to ſuggeſt, that his enemies purſuing him were like the ravenous hawk, and he like the harmleſs, innocent, and trembling dove; and partly becauſe of its ſwiftneſs in flying. Aben Ezra thinks the dove is mentioned, becauſe it is ſociable with men, and who ſend letters by them for quick diſpatch, of which inſtances may be given [r]. This wiſh is expreſſed ſuitable to his character and caſe. The church is ſometimes compared to a dove for its innocence, modeſty, chaſtity, purity, affection, inconſolableneſs for the loſs of its mate, and for its fearfulneſs, Cant. ii. 14. and iv. 1. and vi. 9. and ſo is Chriſt, Cant. v. 12. who was typified by Jonah, whoſe name ſignifies a dove; and on whom the Spirit of God deſcended as a dove, at his baptiſm; and by whom he was filled with his dove-like graces. For then would I fly away; ſo David deſired to flee, and did flee with good ſpeed and haſte from Abſalom his ſon, 2 Sam. xv. 14. Pſal. iii. title. Arama obſerves of the dove, that, when weary with flying with one wing, it reſts that, and flies with the other, and ſo has ſtrength to to fly continually without ſtopping, which he ſuppoſes to be the reaſon why the wing of a dove is deſired. So every ſenſible ſinner deſires to flee from ſin and ſinners, and from wrath to come; from avenging juſtice, to Chriſt the city of refuge; ſo Chriſt, under the terrors of death, in his human nature, in a view of the law's curſe and wrath, deſired the cup might paſs from him, and he might flee and eſcape death, though with ſubmiſſion to the divine will. And be at reſt; ſafe and ſecure from the conſpirators, as David was; and as a ſinner is that has fled to Chriſt; in whom is reſt from the burden and guilt of ſin, from the wrath, curſe, and condemnation of the law, and under all afflictions, whether of body or mind; and not in the world, and worldly enjoyments; nor in the law, and the works of it: and as Chriſt is; not by eſcaping death, but through dying, and having done his work has ceaſed from it, and is entered into his reſt; which was the joy ſet before him, that animated him as man to endure the croſs, and deſpiſe the ſhame; here alſo true believers, weary of the world, deſire to be, enjoying that reſt which remains for the people of God.

[n] תפלתי orationem meam, i. e. ſecundum judicium; ſo Arama. [o] תחנתי my ſupplication for grace, Ainſworth. [p] בשיחי in meditatione mea, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth. [q] תכסני operuit me, Pagninus, Montanus, Gejerus, Michaelis; operit, Cocceius; obtegit, Junius & Tremellius; obtexit, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth. [r] Vid. Ælian Var. Hiſt. l. 9 c. 2.

℣. 7. Lo, then would I wander far off, and remain the wilderneſs. Selah.] So David did when he fled from Abſalom, 2 Sam. xv. 23, 27, 28. and xvi. 1, 2. ſo gracious ſouls deſire to be; not in the wilderneſs of the people; but to be ſolitary as in a wilderneſs, clear of the company of wicked men, as Jeremy wiſhed for, Jer. ix. 2. and that they might be more at leiſure for, and given up unto ſpiritual devotion, and be ſecure from their enemies: and as this may be applied to Chriſt, it ſhews the wickedneſs, cruelty, and barbarity of the men of that generation among whom he lived; that he choſe rather to be in the wilderneſs, among wild beaſts, than to dwell among them, Matt. xvii. 17. Iſa. liii. 8. ſome apply this to the ſtate of the primitive church under Jewiſh perſecution, when it fled from Judea, and ſettled in the wilderneſs of the Gentiles; the preachers of the word being ſcattered abroad by the windy ſtorm and tempeſt of perſecution, and the goſpel taken from the Jews, and carried to a nation bringing forth the fruit of it, where it has remained ever ſince. With this may be compared the ſtate of the church under Rome pagan, in Rev. xii. 6, 13, 14.

℣. 8. I would haſten my eſcape from the windy ſtorm and tempeſt.] Of an army of rebellious ſubjects, bearing down all before them, and threatning with utter ruin and deſtruction; ſo a powerful army of enemies invading a country, is ſignified by a ſtorm and tempeſt, Iſa. xxviii. 2. and xxxii. 2. and may be expreſſive of the ſtorm and tempeſt of divine wrath and vengeance, the ſenſible ſinner haſtens his eſcape from, by fleeing to Chriſt; and of the blowing and furious winds of perſecution, which the church, Chriſt's dove, flees from, by getting into the clefts of the rock, and the ſecret places of the ſtairs, Cant. ii. 14. and of the ſtorms of divine wrath and juſtice that fell upon Chriſt as the ſurety of his people; from which the human nature, ſeized with fearfulneſs, trembling, and horror, deſired an haſty eſcape.

℣. 9. Deſtroy, O Lord, &c.] Or ſwallow up [s], as Pharaoh and his hoſt were ſwallowed up in the red ſea; or as Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, were ſwallowed up in the earth; ſo all the enemies of Chriſt and his church will be deſtroyed; and death, the laſt of them, will be ſwallowed up in victory, Iſa. xxv. 8. The Targum interprets it, deſtroy, or ſcatter their counſel; but this ſeems to be intended in the next clauſe. And divide their tongues; as at the confuſion of languages at Babel, to which the alluſion is: this had its accompliſhment in Abſalom's counſellors, according to David's wiſh, 2 Sam. xv. 31. and xvii. 14. and in the Jewiſh ſanhedrim in Chriſt's time, and in the witneſſes they produced againſt him, Luke xxiii. 51. Mark xiv. 59. and of which there is an inſtance in the council of the Jews, held on account of the apoſtle Paul, Acts xxiii. 7. For I have ſeen violence and ſtrife in the city; in the city of Jeruſalem, now left by David, and poſſeſſed by Abſalom, by whom violence was done to David's wives, through the advice of Ahithophel; and ſtrife, contention, and rebellion were fomented among the people: this David ſaw, underſtood, and perceived, by the intelligence brought him from time to time: and in the times of Chriſt the kingdom of heaven ſuffered violence in this place, and he endured the contradiction of ſinners againſt himſelf.

℣. 10. Day and night they go about it, upon the walls thereof, &c.] That is, violence and ſtrife go about the walls of it continually; men of violence and contention are the only watchmen of it: a city muſt be ſadly guarded that has no better watch than this. Miſchief alſo and ſorrow are in the midſt of it; it was full of wickedneſs within and without; the city, as Aben Ezra obſerves, was like a circle; violence and ſtrife were as a line round about it, and miſchief and ſorrow the center of it: and theſe two commonly go together; where miſchief is, ſorrow follows.

℣. 11. Wickedneſs is in the midſt thereof, &c.] All manner of wickedneſs; abominable wickedneſs; wickedneſs as arrived to its higheſt pitch, and as having filled up its meaſure; ſee Ezek. ix. 4. Zech. v. 7, 8. Deceit and guile depart not from her ſtreets; where truth was fallen, and equity could not enter, Iſa. lix. 14. for theſe are contrary the one to the other, and are incompatible; where the one prevails, the other muſt give way. This whole account ſhews the aboundings of ſin in Jeruſalem at this time, and that it was openly and publickly committed, and contains ſo many reaſons of the imprecations in ℣. 9.

℣. 12. For it was not an enemy that reproached me, &c.] An open and avowed one; a Moabite or a Philiſtine; ſuch an one as Goliath, who curſed him by his gods; but one of his own country, city, court, and family, who pretended to be a friend; his ſon Abſalom, according to Arama: ſo it was not one of the ſcribes and Phariſees, the ſworn enemies of Chriſt, who rejected him as the Meſſiah, and would not have him to reign over them, that reproached him, but one of his own apoſtles. Then I could have borne it; reproach from an enemy is to be expected, and may be patiently endured; and when it is for righteouſneſs ſake, ſhould be accounted an happineſs, and rejoiced at; but the reproaches of one that has been thought to be a friend, are very cutting, wounding, heart-breaking and intolerable, Pſal. lxix. 7, 8, 20. the calumnies and reproaches of the ſcribes and Phariſees were borne by Chriſt with great patience, and were anſwered with great calmneſs and mildneſs, Matt. xi. 19. and xii. 24, 25. John viii. 48, 49. Or, I would have lift up [t]; that is, my hand, and defended myſelf; I ſhould have been upon my guard, ready to receive the blow, or to have put it off, off, or repelled it. Neither was it he that hated me; openly, but ſecretly in his heart. That did magnify himſelf againſt me; made himſelf a great man, and ſet himſelf at the head of the conſpiracy and oppoſition againſt him, and ſpoke great ſwelling words, in way of raillery and reproach. Then I would have hid my ſelf from him; as David did from Saul, when he became his enemy, 1 Sam. xx. 24. and xxiii. 19. and xxiv. 1. and as Chriſt from the Jews, John viii. 59. but as for Judas, he knew the place he reſorted to; and therefore eaſily found him, John xviii. 2. the ſenſe may be, that he would have ſhunned his company, refuſed converſation with him; much leſs would he have admitted him to his privy councils, by which means he knew all his affairs, and there was no hiding and concealing things from him.

[s] בלע degluti, Montanus, Tigurine verſion; abſorbe, Piſcator, Gejerus, Michaelis: ſo Ainſworth. [t] ואשא

℣. 13. But it was thou, &c.] The Targum is, but thou Ahithophel; of whom the words are literally to be underſtood, and ſo they are in the Talmud [u]; and myſtically and typically of Judas. A man, mine equal; a man, and not a beaſt, nor a devil; but a man, from whom humanity, kindneſs and tenderneſs might have been expected; though both Ahithophel and Judas acted the part of a devil; and the latter is expreſsly called one, John vi. 70. Mine equal; or like unto me; as the Targum. Ahithophel was not equal to David in dignity, as the king of Iſrael; nor in gifts, as the ſweet pſalmiſt of Iſrael; nor in grace as he; but as a man, a mortal dying man: kings and ſubjects are of the ſame blood, equally liable to death, and in the grave will be manifeſtly on a level: or rather the ſenſe is, that he was in his eſteem and affection as himſelf; he was his friend that he loved as his own ſoul: ſo Judas could not be in every ſenſe equal to Chriſt, who is Jehovah's fellow, and thought it no robbery to be equal with God. Indeed as a man he was like unto him; a frail, mortal man, though not ſinleſs as Chriſt. The word כערכי may be rendered according to my appointment [w], ordination, or conſtitution; Judas being a man appointed and ordained to be an apoſtle of Chriſt with the reſt: or, according to my eſteem [x]; being had in great eſteem and familiarity with Chriſt: or, according to my order [y], rank and claſs; being taken into his family, admitted to his table, where he ſat down and eat with him, as if he was his equal. My guide; or governor [z]. Ahithophel was not governor over David; but was made a governor by him: he was one of his dukes or nobles, as the word is rendered in Gen. xxxvi. 15. was raiſed to great dignity by him; perhaps was chief miniſter of ſtate: it is certain he was his counſellor, and his counſel was with him as the oracle of God, 1 Chron. xxvii. 33. 2 Sam. xvi. 23. he was his guide in civil affairs; he was directed by his advice, and it may be was preſident of his privy council. Judas was not only the guide of them to Chriſt who took him, Acts i. 16. but when the apoſtles were ſent out two by two before the face of Chriſt, to preach where he himſelf ſhould come, Judas was ſent alſo, Mark vi. 7. Luke x. 1. And mine acquaintance; one well known to him, as Ahithophel was to David, and Judas to Chriſt, his friend and companion, in whom he confided, and who eat of his bread; and all theſe characters are ſo many aggravations of his treachery and wickedneſs.

℣. 14. We took ſweet counſel together, &c.] Not in religious matters; for in theſe the teſtimonies of the Lord were David's counſellors, Pſal. cxix. 24. but in civil things: hearty counſel is one branch of friendſhip, and which greatly ſweetens it, Prov. xxvii. 9. as this may be applied to Chriſt and Judas, it may denote the mutual delight and pleaſure they had, the one in communicating, the other in receiving a notional knowledge of the goſpel, and the myſteries of it, which are the counſel of God, Acts xx. 27. for if hearers may hear the word gladly, as Herod did, and receive it with joy, as did the ſtony-ground-hearers, and yet be deſtitute of the grace of God; why may not Judas, and other preachers devoid of true grace, be thought to receive and preach the doctrines of the goſpel in a ſpeculative way, with ſome kind of delight and pleaſure? ſo profeſſors of religion take ſweet counſel together, when they communicate to each other what light and knowledge they have in the myſteries of the goſpel, and converſe about experience, and the myſteries and ſecrets of internal godlineſs, and give and take advice in ſpiritual things; and ſad it is when any one of theſe drop their profeſſion, and turn reproachers, ſcoffers or perſecutors. And walked unto the houſe of God in company; David with his royal family and courtiers, and Ahithophel among the reſt; where he delighted to go, and that with a multitude. So Chriſt and Judas often went to the temple together, with the reſt of the diſciples, who heard many an excellent ſermon from his mouth: all which are farther aggravations of ſin and guilt. And ſo ſuch perſons, who have walked together to the houſe of God and in it, have attended together on public worſhip, and walked together in holy fellowſhip; when any of theſe forſake the aſſembling of themſelves together, ſcoff at religion, ſpeak evil of ordinances, reproach the ſaints, or perſecute them, it is very ſhocking, cutting, and grieving indeed.

℣. 15. Let death ſeize upon them, &c.] Ahithophel and his accomplices, Judas and the men with him; as a mighty man, as the king of terrors, and ſhake them to pieces. Or, let him exact upon them [a]; as a creditor upon the debtor, and demand the debt of puniſhment for ſin: or let him come upon them at an unawares; let them not die a natural, but a violent death. The Targum mentions Doeg and Ahithophel. And let them go down quick into hell; as Korah, Dathan and Abiram went down quick or alive into the earth; ſo let theſe men die and deſcend into the grave in their full ſtrength; and accordingly Abſalom and Ahithophel died ſudden and violent deaths, 2 Sam. xvii. 23. and xviii. 9. and ſo did Judas, Matt. xxvii. 5. and the beaſt and falſe prophet, another part of the antitype, will be taken and caſt alive into the lake of fire, Rev. xix. 20. For wickedneſs is in their dwellings; and dwells in them; wherever they go or ſojourn, this goes and abides with them, being the reigning principle in their hearts and lives. And among them; in the midſt of them; their inward part is very wickedneſs. The Targum is, in their bodies. But rather the ſenſe is, in their hearts; wickedneſs was both in their houſes and in their hearts, and is the reaſon of the imprecation on them; which ariſes not from a revengeful ſpirit, but from a zeal for the glory of God; and is to be conſidered as [u] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 106. 2. Pirke Abot, c. 6. ſ. 3. [w] Secundum diſpoſitionem, ſc. ordinationem & conſtitutionem meam, Calvinus in Michaelis. [x] Juxta eſtimationem meam, Vatablus, Gejerus, Michaelis; qui par mihi eſtimatus eſt, Piſcator. [y] Secundum ordinem meum, Mollerus. [z] אלופי dux meus, Pagninus, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; princeps meus, Cocceius. [a] ישוד exigat debitum, Pagninus, aget vel agat exactorem, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Gejerus, Amama.

as a prophecy of what would be, and not to be drawn into an example for private Chriſtians to act by.

ẏ. 16. As for me, I will call upon God, &c.] Not upon a creature, on idols and images, on angels or ſaints departed; but upon God, in his time of trouble, for ſalvation and deliverance from enemies; who is able to ſave. This is to be underſtood of calling upon God in prayer; as the next verſe explains it, and the Targum here renders it; tho' ſometimes invocation of the name of God takes in the whole of divine worſhip. And the Lord ſhall ſave me; which confidence was founded partly upon his promiſe to deliver ſuch that call upon him in the day of trouble, Pſal. l. 15. and partly upon his power, whoſe hand is not ſhortened that it cannot ſave. The Targum is, "the Word of the Lord ſhall "redeem me."

ẏ. 17. Evening and morning, and at noon will I pray, &c.] Theſe being the ſtated times of prayer with the Jews, and which continued to after-ages, Dan. vi. 10. Theſe times, they ſay [b], were fixed by Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob: the morning-prayer by Abraham, according to Gen. xxii. 3. the prayer of the minchah by Iſaac, according to Gen. xxiv. 63. and the evening-prayer by Jacob, according to Gen. xxviii. 11. The prayer of the evening was at the time of the evening-ſacrifice, to which it is compared, Pſal. cxli. 2. This was at the ninth hour, at which time Peter and John went up to the temple to pray; and Cornelius prayed in his own houſe, Acts iii. 1. and x. 30. The prayer of the morning was at the time of the morning daily ſacrifice, and was about the third hour of the day; at which time the apoſtles met together for prayer on the day of Pentecoſt, Acts ii. 1, 15. and that at noon was at the ſixth hour of the day; at which time Peter went up to the houſe-top to pray, Acts x. 9. And now tho' we are not tied down to theſe exact and preciſe times of prayer, yet this teaches us, that we ought to pray frequently and conſtantly, and that a day ſhould not paſs without it; and the morning and evening ſeem to be very proper ſeaſons for it, ſeeing the mercies of the Lord are new every morning; and we ſhould be thankful for them and the mercies of the night paſt, and implore divine protection and grace for the day following; and at evening we ſhould expreſs our thankfulneſs for the mercies of the day, and commit ourſelves and families into the hands of God, who is Iſrael's keeper, that neither ſlumbers nor ſleeps. And cry aloud; denoting the diſtreſs he was in, the fervency of his prayer, and the importunity of it. And he ſhall hear my voice; this he might be aſſured of, from the general character of God, as a God hearing prayer, and from his own ſpecial and particular experience of the truth of it, and from the promiſes made unto him.

ẏ. 18. He hath delivered my ſoul in peace from the battle that was againſt me, &c.] That is, God had preſerved his life, and delivered him ſafe and ſound from many a battle which was fought againſt him; and might ſeem at firſt to go againſt him; and had given him peace and reſt from all his enemies before the preſent trouble came upon him, 2 Sam. vii. 1. wherefore he believed, that he who had delivered him in time paſt, would deliver him again; this is the reaſoning of faith, 2 Cor. i. 9, 10. 2 Tim. iv. 17, 18. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions render the laſt clauſe, from them that draw nigh unto thee; and the Syriac verſion renders it, by way of petition, deliver my ſoul from them that know me; and the Targum, "leſt evil ſhould come unto me." For there were many with me; either enemies fighting with him; and ſo this is mentioned to ſet forth the more the power of God in his deliverance: or friends, who were on his ſide; all Iſrael and Judah, who loved David and prayed for him, as Jarchi interprets it: or the angels of God, as Aben Ezra; who being for the Lord's people, are more than they that are againſt them, 2 Kings vi. 16. or God, Father, Son and Spirit; and if he is for us, who ſhall be againſt us, Rom. viii. 31. The Targum is, "for in many afflictions his Word was for my "help."

ẏ. 19. God ſhall hear and afflict them, &c.] That is, either he ſhall hear the prayers of his ſervant, imprecating evils upon his enemies, ẏ. 9, 15. and ſhall bring them down upon them, in anſwer to his requeſts; or it may be rendered, God ſhall hear and anſwer them [c]; he ſhall hear their blaſphemies, and take notice of their wickedneſs, and anſwer them by terrible things in righteouſneſs. Even he that abideth of old. Selah. or is the inhabitant of eternity [d], Iſa. lvii. 15. the eternal God, from everlaſting to everlaſting, who was before all creatures and before all time, and will ever remain the ſame, out of whoſe hands there is no eſcaping. The Targum is, "and he inhabiteth the heavens from of "old to everlaſting." Of the word ſelah, ſee the note on Pſal. iii. 2. Becauſe they have no changes; Kimchi renders it, who hath no changes; taking למו to be the ſame with לו and interprets it of God; connecting it with the former clauſe, That he that abideth of old, hath no changes. There is no variableneſs nor ſhadow of turning with him; he never changes his mind, nor alters his counſel, whether it be for good or evil; and yet wicked men fear him not. But rather this is to be underſtood of ſinners, as the Targum paraphraſes it, "who are "not of old, and who do not change their evil "way;" who have no changes in their hearts, not in their lives, but continue in their natural and ſinful eſtate, without any impreſſion of the power and grace of God upon them. Or they have no changes in their worldly circumſtances, from good to bad, as Aben Ezra explains it; things go well with them, and they are not in trouble as other men; they are at eaſe and quiet, and are ſettled on their lees; ſee Job x. 17. Pſal. lxxiii. 4, 5. Jer. xlviii. 11. Or they have no regard to their laſt change by death; and are not afraid of that, as Jarchi interprets it; they put away this evil day far from them; think nothing about it, as if it would never be, and as if they had made an agreement with it, that this change ſhould never come upon them, Job xiv. 14, 20. Therefore they fear not God; do not ſerve and worſhip him now, and are not afraid of his judgments here or hereafter; no change being made in their hearts, nor any alteration in their ſecular affairs for the worſe; but having much goods laid up for many years, and ſentence againſt their evil works not being ſpeedily executed, their hearts are hardened, and they live ſecure in ſin.

ẏ. 20. He hath put forth his hands, &c.] The pſalmiſt returns and deſcribes, in this and the following verſe, the cruelty, perfidy and hypocriſy of his falſe friend; who had ſtretched forth his hands againſt ſuch as be at peace with him, or he pretended to be at peace with. So Ahithophel put forth his hands againſt David, by whom he had been admitted mitted into his privy-council, and there had taken ſweet counſel together, by entring into a conſpiracy and rebellion againſt him, and by forming a ſcheme to ſmite the king only, 2 Sam. xvii. 1, 2. and Judas, tho' he did not lay hands on Chriſt himſelf, yet he gave his enemies a ſign by which they might know him, and ſeize him, and hold him faſt, as they did; and him Chriſt calls the man of his peace, Pſal. xli. 9. they being at peace when he lift up his heel againſt him. He hath broken his covenant; of friendſhip that was made between them; he proved falſe and treacherous, broke through his engagements, and violated his faith.

[b] Yalkut Simeoni in loc.

[c] ויענם & reſpondeat illis, Cocceius.

[d] וישב קדם & incola antiquitatis, vel æternitatis, Gejerus.

℣. 21. The words of his mouth were ſmoother than butter, &c.] Such were the words of Ahithophel, when in counſel with David; and ſuch the words of Judas, when he ſaid to Chriſt, hail, maſter, and kiſſed him. But war was in his heart; even a civil war, rebellion againſt his prince; that was what Ahithophel meditated in his heart; and nothing leſs than to take away the life of Chriſt was deſigned by Judas. The words may be rendered, they were divided [c]; that is, his mouth and his heart: his mouth was butter, and his heart war; the one declared for peace, when the other intended war; ſee Jer. ix. 8. His words were ſofter than oil; at one time full of ſoothing and flattery. Yet were they drawn ſwords; at another time ſharp and cutting, breathing out threatning and ſlaughter, deſtruction and death.

℣. 22. Caſt thy burden upon the Lord, &c.] Theſe are either the words of the holy Ghoſt to David, according to Jarchi; or of David to his own ſoul in diſtreſs, and may be directed to any good man in like circumſtances. The word rendered burden ſignifies a gift, and ſo the words are tranſlated by many, Caſt thy gift upon the Lord [f]; what he has given in a way of providence and of grace, acknowledge him to be the author of it; pray for a continuance of mercies, and for freſh ſupplies, and expect them; and alſo what he gives in a way of trial, the croſs, with all afflictions and troubles: which ſenſe ſeems moſt agreeable to the context; and theſe may be ſaid to be the gift of God, as the cup of ſorrow Chriſt drank of is ſaid to be given him by his Father, John xviii. 11. Theſe are given by the Lord to bring his people to a ſenſe of ſin, and acknowledgment of it; to humble them for it, and cauſe them to return from it; and to try their graces: and then do they caſt them upon him, when they acknowledge them as coming from him; wait the removal of them in his time; deſire a ſanctified uſe of them, and expect deliverance from them by him. Or the ſenſe is, whatever thou deſireſt ſhould be given thee by the Lord, caſt it on him; that is, leave it with him to do as he pleaſes, who works all things after the counſel of his own will. The Targum renders it, "caſt thy hope up-"on the Lord;" as an anchor on a good bottom, to which hope is compared, Heb. vi. 19. This is done when perſons make the Lord the object of their hope, and expect all from him they hope to enjoy here and hereafter. The Septuagint verſion is, caſt thy care upon the Lord; of thy body, and all the temporal concerns of thy family, and every thing relating thereunto; and of thy ſoul, and its everlaſting welfare and ſalvation; ſee 1 Pet. v. 7. But Jarchi, Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret the word by משאך thy burden, which is learnt from the uſe of it in the Arabic language. The Rabbins did not know the meaning of the word, till one of them heard an Arabian merchant ſay [g], "Take up "יהביך thy burden, and caſt it upon the camels." The burden here meant, is either the burden of afflictions, which is ſometimes very heavy; ſee Job vi. 2, 3. and xxiii. 2. no affliction is joyous but grievous; but ſome are heavier in their own kind and nature than others, and become ſo thro' the multiplicity of them, as in the caſe of Job; or thro' the long continuance of them, and eſpecially when attended with the hidings of God's face, or with the temptations of Satan: or elſe the burden of ſin and corruption, which is an heavy burden, and a very diſagreeable one; under which the ſaints groan, and by which they are hindered in running their chriſtian race, and which they are like to carry with them to their graves; their only relief under it is to look to Chriſt, who has bore it and took it away; which may be meant by caſting it on the Lord. And he ſhall ſuſtain thee; in being, both natural and ſpiritual; and ſupply with all things neceſſary both to the temporal and ſpiritual life, and ſupport under all trials and difficulties. He ſhall never ſuffer the righteous to be moved; to be ſhaken and ſtagger ſo as to fall, eſpecially totally and finally; for the words may be rendered, he ſhall never ſuffer the righteous to be moved for ever [h]; or ſo to be moved by their afflictions as to deſert the cauſe in which they are engaged; nor ſhall they ever be moved by men or devils, or any thing whatever, from their ſpiritual eſtate, in which they are by grace; nor from the love of God and covenant of grace; nor out of the hands of Chriſt; nor from their ſtate of juſtification, adoption and ſanctification.

℣. 23. But thou, O God, ſhalt bring them down, &c.] Ahithophel and his accomplices in the conſpiracy againſt David, Judas and the wicked Jews concerned in Chriſt's death; and did not believe in him. Into the pit of deſtruction, or corruption [i]; either the grave, where bodies being put corrupt and putrify; or hell, where the wicked are puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction; ſee ℣. 15. Bloody and deceitful men ſhall not live out half their days; ſuch as Ahithophel and Abſalom, Judas, and the murderers of our Lord: or, do not halve their days [k]; do not come up to the half of the ordinary term of man's life, which is threeſcore years and ten. The Jews ſay [l], that all the years of Doeg were but thirty four, and of Ahithophel thirty three; and probably Judas might be about the ſame age. Or the ſenſe is, that generally ſpeaking, ſuch ſort of men die in the prime of their days, and do not live half the time that, according to the courſe of nature, they might live; and which they promiſe themſelves they ſhould, and their friends hoped and expected they would. But I will truſt in thee; the Lord, that he would hear and ſave him, ſupport him under his burden, ſupply him with his grace, and every thing needful, and not ſuffer him to be moved; and that he ſhould live to fill up the meaſure of his days, do the will and work of God, and then be received to glory.

[c] חלקו διεμερισθησαν, Sept. diviſi ſunt, V. L. Hammond. [f] יהבך donum tuum, Montanus; quicquid dat tibi, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [g] T. Bab. Roſhhaſhanah, fol. 26. 2. Megillah, fol. 18. 1. Bereſhit Rabba, ſ. 79. fol. 69. 4. [h] לעולם in æternum, Muſculus, Guſſetius, p. 460. perpetuo, Tigurine verſion, Lutherus, Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth. [i] שחת corruptionis, Vatablus, Muſculus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth; approved by Guſſetius, p. 850. [k] יחצו dividiabunt, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [l] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 69. 2. & 106. 2. & Gloſſ. in Pirke Abot, c. 5. ſ. 19.

PSALM

PSALM LVI.

To the chief muſician, upon Jonath-elem-rechokim, Michtam of David, when the Philiſtines took him in Gath.

THE words Jonath-elem-rechokim are by our tranſlators left untranſlated. Aben Ezra takes them to be the beginning of a ſong; and others think they are the name of a muſical inſtrument: but they ſeem rather to deſign the ſubject-matter of the pſalm, and may be rendered, Concerning the mute dove among them that are afar off [m], or in far places [n]; and refer to David, who, when he wrote this pſalm, was among the Philiſtines, who were aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, afar off from God and his law, and from righteouſneſs; and when David was there, he was at a diſtance from his native country, his father's houſe, the king's court, and, what gave him moſt concern, from the houſe and worſhip of God; and here he was as a mute dove. He may be compared to a dove for his innocence in the caſe of Saul; and to a ſilly dove, for his acting the part of a fool or madman before Achiſh king of Gath; and was mute to what the ſervants of Achiſh ſaid, and was dumb before the Lord, who had ſuffered him to fall into their hands, and into this diſtreſs he was now in. They are alſo applicable to Chriſt, who is comparable to a dove for his harmleſſneſs, innocence, meekneſs and humility; and was as a mute one before Pontius Pilate the Roman governor, when his enemies accuſed him, and he anſwered not a word; and when among the Roman ſoldiers, who mocked at him and reviled him, and he reviled not again; and when he was led to be crucified, he opened not his mouth either againſt God or man. They may be alſo applied to the church of God, which is often called a dove in Cant. iv. 1. and v. 2. and vi. 9. and is in the wilderneſs, and among wicked men, that are afar off from God, and is ſilent under all afflictions and perſecutions; ſee Cant. ii. 14. The Targum paraphraſes the words thus; "concerning "the congregation of Iſrael, which is like to a ſi-"lent dove, at the time they are removed afar off "from their cities." Moreover, the words may be applied to any truly gracious ſoul, that is ſenſible of ſin, and mourns as a dove for it; has fled to Chriſt, as doves to their windows; and is harmleſs and humble; and living among men, aliens from God, is vexed and afflicted by them, yet patiently bears all that is ſaid and done unto it. The fact which occaſioned the writing of this pſalm, is related in 1 Sam. xxi. 10—15. Of the word michtam, ſee the note on the title of Pſal. xvi. and Guſſetius [o] is of opinion, that every pſalm that has this title belongs to Chriſt.

℣. 1. Be merciful unto me, O God, &c.] For David could expect no mercy at the hands of men, among whom he was, whoſe tender mercies were cruel; he being at Gath, the city of Goliath, whom he had ſlain, and whoſe ſword he had now with him; and among his brethren and friends, who he might juſtly fear would revenge his death upon him: wherefore he betakes himſelf to God and pleads, not any merit or righteouſneſs of his own, but implores the grace and mercy of God; and he might expect to find grace and mercy in this his time of need, ſince there is mercy with the Lord; he is plenteous in it, diſtributes it freely, delights in ſo doing, and does it conſtantly; his mercy endures for ever, it is from everlaſting to everlaſting on them that fear him. For man would ſwallow me up; the Targum renders it iſbi, a wicked man: it may be underſtood of ſome one man, ſome great man, as Achiſh king of Gath; or rather, Saul king of Iſrael, who breathed and panted after his ruin and deſtruction, as the word [p] ſignifies; who ſought to eat up his fleſh, to take away his life, and utterly ruin him: or collectively of many, ſince it appears by the following verſe, that he had many enemies who were deſirous to ſwallow him up. This he mentions as an aggravation of his diſtreſs, and as a reaſon why he hoped the Lord would be merciful to him; and that he, being God, would not ſuffer man to prevail; ſee 2 Chron. xiv. 12. He fighting daily oppreſſeth me; this ſhews that Saul is more eſpecially intended, who was continually with his army purſuing him, and ſometimes ſurrounded him and his men, and reduced him to great diſtreſs. This may be applied to the Old Man, the corruptions of nature, and the luſts of the fleſh, which are continually warring againſt the ſoul, oppreſs it, bring it into captivity, and threaten to ſwallow it up.

℣. 2. Mine enemies would daily ſwallow me up, &c.] For not one man only, but many were his enemies; who obſerved and watched him, and were eagerly deſirous of his ruin. The believer has many enemies, ſin, Satan, and the world, ſeeking to devour and deſtroy him, tho' they cannot. For they be many that fight againſt me, O thou moſt High; he appeals to God, who dwells on high, and ſees all things, for the truth of this, that he had many enemies, both at Gath and in Iſrael; as well as applies to him for help, he being higher than they. Some render the words, for they be many that fight againſt me from on high [q], or highly [r], proudly and haughtily. Aben Ezra gives a very different ſenſe, "I "have many angels on high that fight for me." But מרום marom, is an epithet of God, as in Pſal. xcii. 8. Mic. vi. 6. and ſo it is interpreted by Jarchi and Kimchi; and alſo by the Targum, which renders it, O God moſt High; and adds, "whoſe "throne is on high;" which is approved by Guſſetius [s].

℣. 3. What time I am afraid, &c.] It was a time of fear with him now; he was afraid of Achiſh king of Gath, 1 Sam. xxi. 12. ſo believers have their times of fear; about their intereſt in the love, and grace, and covenant of God; about their ſins and corruptions, and the prevalence of them, fearing they ſhall periſh by them; and about their enemies, who are many, lively and ſtrong. I will truſt in thee; truſt and confidence in the Lord is the the beſt antidote againſt fears; who is unchangeable in his love, in whom is everlaſting ſtrength, and who is faithful and true to every word of promiſe; and therefore there is great reaſon to truſt in him, and not be afraid.

[m] De columba muta procul inter alienos conſtituta, Muſculus; inter longinquos, Piſcator, Pfeiffer. [n] Remotis, Pagninus, Montanus, Munſter, Vatablus; ſo Ainſworth. [o] Ebr. Comment. p. 410. [p] שאפני anhelus perſequitur me, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; anhelat in me, Cocceius; contra me, Gejerus. [q] מרום a ſublimi, Junius & Tremellius; ex alto, Cocceius; ſo Arab. verſ. and Michaelis. [r] Elato animo, Muſculus; ſo ſome in Vatablus; ſuperbe, Gejerus. [s] Ebr. Comment. p. 783.

℣. 4. In God I will praiſe his word, &c.] Or praiſe him for his word; for the whole ſcripture that was then in being; for thoſe teſtimonies which were David's counſellors in times of difficulty and diſtreſs; and particularly for ſome word of promiſe made unto him, which he was perſuaded would be fulfilled, and in which he gloried and made his boaſt of, and on which his faith and hope were built; and this he did, and determined to do, in the ſtrength of the Lord, and by the aſſiſtance of his grace. In God I have put my truſt; either in times paſt, and was not aſhamed or confounded; or now, as he determined he would in the preceding verſe. I will not fear what fleſh can do unto me; or continue to fear any or all of my enemies; tho' I have been afraid of them, I will ſhake off theſe fears, truſting in the Lord, and depending on his word. Or, what can fleſh do unto me [t]? which is as graſs, and the goodlineſs thereof as the flower of the field. Poor, frail, mortal man! what can he do againſt me, if God be for me? And therefore why ſhould I fear? Men may contrive ſchemes, form weapons, and attempt many things againſt the ſaints, but can execute nothing, except permitted by the Lord; and the utmoſt they can do, when ſuffered, is to kill the body.

℣. 5. Every day they wreſt my words, &c.] Form, faſhion and ſhape them at their pleaſure; conſtrue them, and put what ſenſe upon them they think fit. The word [u] is uſed of the formation of the human body, in Job x. 8. They put his words upon the rack, and made them ſpeak what he never intended; as ſome men wreſt the ſcriptures to their own deſtruction, 2 Pet. iii. 16. and as the Jews wreſted the words of Chriſt, John ii. 19. Matt. xxvi. 60, 61. The word has alſo the ſenſe of cauſing vexation and grief, Iſa. lxiii. 10. and ſo it may be rendered here, my words cauſe grief [w]; to his enemies; becauſe he had ſaid in the preceding verſes, that he would truſt in the Lord, and praiſe his word, and not be afraid of men; juſt as the Sadducees were grieved at the apoſtles preaching, thro' Jeſus, the reſurrection of the dead, Acts iv. 1, 2. Or they cauſed grief to himſelf; for becauſe of theſe, his enemies reproached him, curſed him, and diſtreſſed him. The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin render it, they curſed my words; or deſpiſed them, as the Ethiopic and Arabic verſions; all their thoughts are againſt me for evil; their counſels, ſchemes and contrivances were all formed to do him all the hurt and miſchief they could.

℣. 6. They gather themſelves together, &c.] And meet in ſome one place, to contrive ways and means to do hurt, and then aſſemble together again to put them in execution; as did the Jews with reſpect to Chriſt, Matt. xxvi. 3, 4. Acts iv. 27, 28. Aben Ezra ſuppoſes a various reading without any reaſon; and that, inſtead of יגורו which Jarchi renders they lodge, and the Septuagint, and the verſions following that, they ſojourn, it ſhould be read יגורו they aſſemble in troops; becauſe they were many: but the ſenſe is, they ſtay [x], or continue in ſome certain place; they hide themſelves; the Targum adds, in ambuſh; they lay in wait, and cauſed others to lie in wait for him, in order to take him; as did Saul and his men, and the ſervants of the king of Gath. They mark my ſteps; they obſerved where he went, that they might ſeize him; or they obſerved his heels, as the old ſerpent did the Meſſiah's, that he might bruiſe them; or they watched for his halting, as Jeremiah's familiars did for his. When they wait for my ſoul; to take away his life, to deſtroy him; ſee Pſal. cxix. 95. they wanted not a will to do it, they only waited for an opportunity. The Targum is, "as they waited, "they did to my ſoul:" or rather, after they had hoped for my ſoul [y]; when they had entertained hopes of taking him, this animated them to do the above things.

℣. 7. Shall they eſcape by iniquity? &c.] Shall ſuch iniquity as this, or perſons guilty of it, go unpuniſhed, or eſcape righteous judgment, and the vengeance of God? No; and much leſs ſhall they eſcape by means of their iniquity; by their wicked ſubtilty, or by any evil arts and methods made uſe of, by making a covenant with death, and an agreement with hell; or eſcape becauſe of their iniquity; or be delivered becauſe of the abominations done by them, as they flatter themſelves, Jer. vii. 10. Some underſtand theſe words, not as referring to the eſcape of David's enemies, but of himſelf; and render them, either by way of petition, becauſe of iniquity, the iniquity of his enemies before deſcribed, deliver me from them; or deliver them [z], meaning his heels they marked, and his ſoul they waited for: or by way of aſſertion or interrogation, becauſe of iniquity there ſhall be; or ſhall there be a deliverance to them [a]? his heels and his ſoul; or from them, his enemies. Tho' others chooſe to render the words thus; becauſe of their iniquity, there ſhall be a caſting of them away [b] by the Lord, and from his preſence, with loathing and contempt, as ſons of Belial; reprobate ſilver, rejected of the Lord; which agrees with what follows: In thine anger, caſt down the people, O God; Saul's courtiers, or the ſervants of Achiſh king of Gath, or both, who were in high places but ſlippery ones; and ſuch are ſometimes brought down to deſtruction in a moment, by that God from whom promotion comes; who putteth down one, and ſets up another, and which he does in wrath and anger.

℣. 8. Thou telleſt my wandrings, &c.] Not his ſins; tho' theſe are aberrations or wandrings from the ways of God's commandments; yet theſe are not told by the Lord: he takes no account of them; the number of them is not kept by him; they are blotted out, caſt behind his back, and into the depths of the ſea; though ſometimes his people think they are told and numbered by him, Job xiv. 16. and xxxi. 4. but David's removes and flights from place to place are meant, through Saul's purſuit of him, as a partridge on the mountains. Some writers reckon twelve of theſe removes. The Targum renders it, "thou numbereſt the days of my wandring;" that is, the days of his pilgrimage and ſojourning in this world: the number of our days, and months and years, in which we wander about in this uncertain ſtate of things, is with the Lord, Job xiv. 5. Put thou my tears into thy bottle; the alluſion is to lachrymatories, or tear-bottles, in which ſurviving relatives dropped their tears for their deceaſed friends, [t] So Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis. p. 628. They painfully form and frame my words, Ainſworth.

[u] יעצבו fingunt mea verba, Cocceius, Guſſet.

[w] Dolore afficient, Montanus, Gejerus, Vatablus, Commorabuntur, Montanus; ſimul ipſi morantur, Vatablus; ſo Guſſetius, p. 166.

[x] Vid. Guſſet. Ebr. Comment. p. 361.

[y] Ipſis

[z] על און פלט למו ob iniquitatem eorum eripe me, Schmidt; illos, Gejerus; ipſis, De Dieu, eſt liberatio, Cocceius; evaſio erit eis? Pagninus, Vatablus; ereptio erit eis? Piſcator.

[a] Ipſis

[b] Abjectio erit iis, Hammond.

friends, and buried them with their aſhes, or in their urns; ſome of which tear-bottles are ſtill to be ſeen in the cabinets of the curious. A deſcription of which is given by Gejerus [c], from Olaus Wormius; and who alſo from Cotovicus relates, that the grave of M. Tullius Cicero was dug up in the iſland of Zacynthus, A.D. 1544. in which were found two glaſs urns; the larger had aſhes in it, the leſſer water: the one was ſuppoſed to contain his aſhes, the other the tears of his friends: and as this was a cuſtom with the Romans, ſomething like this might obtain among the Jews; and it is a ſaying with them [d], "Whoever ſheds tears for a good man (de-"ceaſed) the holy bleſſed God numbers them, and "puts them into his treaſures, according to Pſal. "lvi. 8." which ſhews, that they thought that reference is here had to funeral tears. The meaning of the text is, that God would take notice of David's afflictions and troubles, which had cauſed ſo many tears, and remember them, and deliver him out of them: theſe being deſired to be put into a bottle was, that they might be kept and reſerved; not to make atonement for ſin; for as a thouſand rivers of oil cannot expiate one ſin, could they be come at; ſo neither as many rivers of briniſh tears, could they poſſibly be ſhed: nor to obtain heaven and happineſs; for there is no compariſon, nor proportion between the ſufferings of the ſaints, and the glory that ſhall be revealed in them; though there is a connexion of grace through the promiſe of God between them: but rather, that they might be brought forth another day and ſhewn, to the aggravation of the condemnation of wicked men, who by their hard ſpeeches, and ungodly actions, have cauſed them. Are they not in thy book? verily they are; that is, the tears and afflictions of his people. They are in his book of purpoſes; they are all appointed by him, their kind and nature, their meaſure and duration, their quality and quantity; what they ſhall be, and how long they ſhall laſt; and their end and uſe: and they are in his book of providence, and are all overruled, and cauſed to work for their good; and they are in the book of his remembrance; they are taken notice of and numbered by him, and ſhall be finiſhed; they ſhall not exceed their bounds. Theſe tears will be turned into joy, and God will wipe them all away from the eyes of his people.

℣. 9. When I cry unto thee, &c.] In prayer. Then ſhall mine enemies turn back; great is the ſtrength of prayer; the effectual fervent prayer of the righteous avails much againſt their enemies: when Moſes lift up his hands, Iſrael prevailed: the caſes of Aſa, Jehoſhaphat, and Hezekiah prove it; this David was aſſured of, and knew it to be true by experience, his prayer being often the prayer of faith in this reſpect. This I know; for God is for me; he knew that when he prayed his enemies would flee; becauſe God was on his ſide, who is greater than they; or by this he knew that God was for him, and was his God, by hearing his prayers, and cauſing his enemies to turn back: or however, let things go how they will, this he was aſſured of, that he had a covenant-intereſt in God, and who would be his God and guide even unto death.

℣. 10. In God will I praiſe his word, &c.] Theſe words are repeated from ℣. 4. and for the greater certainty of the thing, and to ſhew his fixed reſolution to do it, and his ſtrong affection for the Lord and his word, they are doubled. In the Lord will I praiſe his word; in the former clauſe the word Elohim is made uſe of, which the Jews ſay, denotes the property of juſtice, and in the latter Jehovah, which with them is the property of mercy; and accordingly the Targum paraphraſes the words, "in the attribute of the juſtice of God "will I praiſe his word; in the attribute of the "mercies of Jehovah will I praiſe his word;" and to the ſame ſenſe Jarchi: that is, whether I am in adverſity or proſperity, receive evil or good things from the hand of the Lord; yet will I praiſe him: I will ſing of mercy and of judgment, Pſal. ci. 1. or rather, the one may denote the grace and goodneſs of a covenant-God in making promiſes, and the other his truth and faithfulneſs in keeping them; on account of both which he is worthy of praiſe. The word his is not in either clauſe in the original text, and they may be rendered, in God will I praiſe the word; in the Lord will I praiſe the word; in and by the help, aſſiſtance, and grace of Jehovah the Father, will I praiſe the eternal and eſſential Word his Son. The Targum renders it his Memra; a word often uſed in it for a divine perſon, the eternal Logos; the lovelineſs of his perſon, the love of his heart to his people, the fulneſs of grace that is in him, the offices he ſuſtains on their account, and the virtue of his blood, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice, render him praiſe-worthy in their eſteem.

℣. 11. In God have I put my truſt, &c.] See the note on ℣. 4. I will not be afraid what man can do unto me; the ſame with fleſh in ℣. 4. and is oppoſed to God in whom he truſted; and it ſuggeſts that he was not, and would not be afraid of the greateſt of men, as well as of the meaneſt; ſee the note on ℣. 4. Arama diſtinguiſhes between fleſh and man; the former, he ſays, means the Philiſtines, and the latter Saul and his army.

℣. 12. Thy vows are upon me, O God, &c.] Which he had made to him in the time of his diſtreſs and trouble, and which he looked upon himſelf under obligation to perform; they were debts upon him he ought to pay off; they were with him; they were freſh in his mind and memory; he had not forgot them, which is often the caſe when trouble is over; and he found his heart inclined to make them good. I will render praiſes unto thee; which explains what he meant by his vows; namely, ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving to the Lord: when he was in diſtreſs, he had vowed and promiſed, that if the Lord would deliver him, he would praiſe his name, and give him all the glory; and now he reſolves to fulfil what he had promiſed.

℣. 13. For thou haſt delivered my ſoul from death, &c.] From imminent danger of death, when in the hands of the Philiſtines; not that the ſoul can die; that is immortal; but he means his perſon, on which account he determines to render praiſe to God: moreover, this may include the deliverance of his ſoul from a moral or ſpiritual death, in which he was by nature, being conceived in ſin, and ſhapen in iniquity; from which he was delivered by regenerating grace, when he was quickened, who before was dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; and ſo delivered, as that this death ſhould no more come upon him; the grace of God in him being a well of living water, ſpringing up unto eternal life: and it may alſo be underſtood of deliverance from eternal death, by Chriſt, who has redeemed his people from the curſe of the law, and delivered them from wrath to come; ſo that they ſhall never be hurt of the ſecond death; that ſhall have no power

[c] De Ebr. Luctu, c. 12. ſ. 5.

[d] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 105. 2.

er over them; but they ſhall have eternal life; all which is matter of praiſe and thankſgiving. Wilt not thou deliver my feet from falling? that is, thou wilt deliver them; for this way of ſpeaking ſtrongly affirms; or haſt thou not delivered them [e]? thou haſt, and wilt ſtill deliver, or keep from falling. The people of God are ſubject to falling; God is the only keeper of them; and they have reaſon to believe, that he will keep them from a final and total falling away; becauſe of the great love which he has for them, the gracious promiſes of preſervation he has made unto them, and his power, which is engaged in keeping of them; and becauſe they are put into the hands of Chriſt, who is able to keep them, and who has an intereſt in them, and an affection for them; and becauſe of the glory of all the three divine perſons concerned in the ſaints preſervation; and this is another reaſon for rendering praiſes unto the Lord; the end of which follows. That I may walk before God in the light of the living; to walk before God, is to walk as in his ſight, who ſees and knows all hearts, thoughts, words and actions; with great circumſpection, and caution, and watchfulneſs; to walk according to the word and will of God, in all his ways, commands, and ordinances; and ſo the Arabic verſion, that I may do the will of the Lord; and ſo as to pleaſe him, as Enoch did, who walked with him, and whoſe walking with him is interpreted by pleaſing him, Heb. xi. 5, 6. agreeable to which the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, render the words, that I may pleaſe before the Lord; or do what is acceptable in his ſight. Moreover, to walk before the Lord is to walk in the light of his countenance, to have his preſence, enjoy his favour, and be bleſſed with communion with him. In the light of the living? that is, to walk as an enlightned and quickned perſon, as the children of the light; and to walk in the light of the goſpel, and as becomes that; and to walk in Chriſt the light, and by faith on him; and ſuch ſhall have the light of life, John viii. 12. a phraſe the ſame with this here; and deſigns the light of the heavenly glory, and of the new Jeruſalem-church-ſtate, in which the nations of them that are ſaved ſhall walk, Rev. xxi. 23,24. Some Jewiſh [f] writers interpret this of paradiſe.

PSALM LVII.

To the chief muſician, Al-taſchith, Michtam of David, when he fled from Saul in the cave.

SOME think the words Al-taſchith are the beginning of a ſong, to the tune of which this was ſet, as Aben Ezra; others, that they are taken from Deut. ix. 26. they ſignifying deſtroy not [g]; others, that they refer to what David ſaid to Abiſhai, when he would have ſlain Saul, deſtroy him not, 1 Sam. xxvi. 9. but that was an affair that happened after this pſalm was penned: they ſeem rather to be words which were frequently uſed by David in the time of his diſtreſs; who often ſaid unto the Lord, either in an ejaculatory way, or vocally, or both, do not deſtroy me, or ſuffer me to be deſtroyed; of which he was in great danger, as appears from ℣. 4, 6. and therefore prefixed theſe words in the title of the pſalm, in memorial of the inward anguiſh of his mind, and of what his mouth then uttered; and to this agrees the Chaldee paraphraſe, "concerning the trouble at the time when "David ſaid, do not deſtroy." Of the word Michtam, ſee the note on Pſal. xvi. The occaſion and time of writing this pſalm, were David's fleeing from Saul in the cave; or rather into [h] the cave, as it ſhould be rendered; for it was after that Saul was gone that David and his men came out of the cave; but he fled hither for fear of Saul; and whilſt he was here, Saul, with three thouſand men, came to the mouth of the cave, and he himſelf went into it; which muſt have put David and his men into a very great panic, there being no retreat, nor any human poſſibility of an eſcape, but muſt expect to fall into the hands of the enemy, and be cut to pieces at once. This cave was in Engedi, 1 Sam. xxiv. 1—3. of which Le Bruyn [i] ſays, it is on the top of a very high hill, and is extremely dark; which agrees with the account in the above place, ſince it was on the rocks of the wild goats Saul ſought David, and coming to the ſheep-cotes there, went into the cave where David was.

℣. 1. Be merciful unto me, O God, &c.] Or be gracious to me [k]; which words are repeated by him. Be merciful, or gracious unto me; to ſhew the greatneſs of his diſtreſs, the eagerneſs, vehemency, and importunity he uſed in prayer; his caſe requiring a ſpeedy anſwer, and immediate relief; and that he expected only from the mercy and grace of God; ſee the note on Pſal. lvi. 1. For my ſoul truſteth in thee; or in thy word; as the Targum; and in thee only, both as the God of providence, and the God of grace; and a great act of faith this was to truſt in the Lord in ſuch circumſtances; and it was not a bare profeſſion of truſt, but it was hearty and ſincere; his ſoul truſted in the Lord; he truſted in him with all his heart and ſoul, and truſted him with his ſoul or life: and this he makes a reaſon or argument for mercy; ſeeing, as the mercy of the Lord is an encouragement to faith and hope; ſo the Lord has declared, that he takes pleaſure in thoſe that hope and truſt in it; wherefore mercy may be expected by ſuch. Yea, in the ſhadow of thy wings will I make my refuge; or I will hope [l]; the meaning is, that he would betake himſelf to the power and protection of God, and make him his refuge from the enemy: the alluſion is either to the hen, or any other bird covering its young with its wings, when a bird of prey is near, till that is gone; or to the Cherubim, whoſe wings overſhadowed the mercy-ſeat, between which the glory of God dwelt; and ſo the Targum, "in the ſhadow "of thy Shekinah, or glorious majeſty, will I "truſt;" which agrees with his applying to the mercy-ſeat, or to God on a throne of grace and mercy: and here he determines to abide, Until theſe theſe calamities be overpaſt; the ſtorm of them was over, which was very black and threatning. The Targum is, "until the tumult is over;" and ſo the Syriac verſion; until Saul and his men were gone, of whom he was afraid. The Septuagint verſion, and thoſe that follow it, render the words until ſin paſſeth away; the cauſe of theſe troubles; unleſs ſin is put for ſinful men; and ſo the ſenſe is as before; ſee Iſa. xxvi. 20.

[e] An non eripuiſti? Piſcator, Gejerus; nonne liberaſti? Michaelis. [f] Yalkut Simeoni, par. 2. fol. 108. 3. Targum in Pſal. lvii. 2. [g] אל-תשחת ne diſperdas, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; ne perdas, Tigurine verſion, Muſculus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis. [h] במערה in ſpeluncam, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c. in ſpecum, Tigurine verſion. [i] Voyage to the Levant, ch. 51. p. 199. [k] חנני gratiam fac mihi, Junius & Tremellius, Cocceius; ſo Piſcator, Ainſworth. [l] אחסה ſperabo, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; ſpero, Tigurine verſion, Muſculus, Michaelis.

℣. 2. I will cry unto God moſt high, &c.] To remember him in his low eſtate, and who is higher than the higheſt, than Saul and his mighty men with him. This epithet David no doubt made uſe of, to encourage his faith in the Lord, who is above all, and can do all things; as follows. Unto God that performeth all things for me; in a providential way, having made him, upheld him in being, fed and cloathed him, preſerved him, and followed him with his goodneſs all his days; and in a way of grace he performed all his purpoſes concerning him, all his promiſes unto him, and was performing, and would perfect the work of grace in him ſee Pſal. cxxxviii. 8. Phil. i. 6. The Targum adds a fable by way of paraphraſe on the text, "who "commanded, or prepared a ſpider, to perfect in "the mouth of the cave a web for me;" ſo it is in the king's Bible; as if, when he was in the cave, God ſo ordered it in his providence, that a ſpider ſhould ſpin a web over the mouth of it, which prevented his perſecutors from ſearching for him in it; but the ſcripture is ſilent in this matter. Such a ſtory is reported of Felix biſhop of Nola in eccleſiaſtical hiſtory [m].

℣. 3. He ſhall ſend from heaven, and ſave me, &c.] His angel, as the Targum adds; or his angels, as Kimchi; who are miniſtring ſpirits, ſent forth by him, to encamp about his people, and guard them, as they did Jacob when in fear of Eſau, Gen. xxxii. 1, 2. or to deliver them out of trouble, as Peter when in priſon, Acts xii. 7. or rather the ſenſe may be, that David did not expect any help and deliverance in an human way, by means of men on earth; but he expected it from above, from heaven, from God above, and which he believed he ſhould have; and he might have a further view to the miſſion of Chriſt from heaven to ſave him, and all the Lord's people; and which he may mention, both for his own comfort, and for the ſtrengthening of the faith of others in that important article. From the reproach of him that would ſwallow me up. Selah. meaning Saul; ſee Pſal. lvi. 1, 2. The Targum renders it, "he hath "reproached him that would ſwallow me up for "ever;" and to the ſame ſenſe the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Syriac verſions; diſappointed them, and filled them with reproach, ſhame and confuſion. God ſhall ſend forth his mercy and his truth; ſhall manifeſt and diſplay the glory of theſe his perfections, his mercy and grace, his truth and faithfulneſs, in his deliverance and ſalvation; and which are remarkably glorified in ſalvation by Chriſt Jeſus; and who himſelf may be called his grace and his truth [n], as the words may be rendered; he being the Word of his grace, and truth itſelf, and full of both, and by whom, when ſent forth, grace and truth came, John i. 14, 17. it may alſo intend a conſtant ſupply of grace, whereby God would ſhew forth the truth of his promiſes to him.

℣. 4. My ſoul is among lions, &c.] Not literally underſtood; though ſuch there might be in the wilderneſſes where he ſometimes was; but figuratively, men comparable to lions, for their ſtoutneſs, courage, ſtrength, fierceneſs and cruelty; meaning not his own men, as ſome think, who were fierce, and of keen reſentment againſt Saul, and would fain have killed him when he was in the cave, had they not been reſtrained by David, 1 Sam. xxiv. 4, 7. but Saul, and thoſe with him, who were three thouſand choſen men, ſtout, courageous, fierce and furious. It is uſual in ſcripture to deſcribe powerful princes, and eſpecially perſecuting ones, by the name of lions, Prov. xxviii. 15. Jer. l. 17. 2 Tim. iv. 17. Achilles, in Homer [o], is compared to a lion for his cruelty. The ſoul of Chriſt was among ſuch, when he was apprehended by the band of men that came with Judas to take him; when he was in the high-prieſt's hall buffeted and ſpit upon; and when he was in the common hall of Pilate ſurrounded by the Roman ſoldiers; and when he was incircled on the croſs with the crowd of the common people, prieſts and elders, Matth. xxvi. 55, 67. and xxvii. 27, 39, 41. Pſal. xxii. 12, 13, 21. and ſo the ſouls of his people are often among lions, perſecuting men, and Satan and his principalities, who is compared to a roaring lion, 1 Pet. v. 8. and among whom they are as wonderfully preſerved as Daniel in the lions den. And I lie even among them that are ſet on fire; of hell, as the tongue is ſaid to be in James iii. 6. by the devil, who ſtirred up Saul againſt David, filled him with wrath and fury, ſo that he breathed out nothing but flaming vengeance, threatning and ſlaughter againſt him; and by wicked men his courtiers, who kindled and ſtirred up the fire of contention between them; among theſe incendiaries, as Junius renders the word [p], David was, who inflamed the mind of Saul againſt him, which he ſuggeſts in 1 Sam. xxiv. 10. Even the ſons of men, whoſe teeth are ſpears and arrows; whoſe words, formed by means of their teeth, were very devouring ones, Pſal. lii. 4. were very piercing and wounding; calumnies, detractions, and backbitings, ſpeaking againſt him when abſent and at a diſtance may be meant; ſee Prov. xxx. 14. And their tongue a ſharp ſword; ſee the note on Pſal. lii. 2. and there was a ſort of ſwords called linguæ, becauſe in the ſhape of a tongue [q].

℣. 5. Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens, &c.] That is, ſhew thy ſelf to be God, that ſitteſt in the heavens, and art higher than they, by ſaving me, and diſappointing mine enemies; that I, and thoſe that are with me, may magnify the Lord, and exalt his name together. The Targum is, "be thou exalted above the angels of heaven, "O God." Let thy glory be above all the earth; that is, above all the inhabitants of the earth, as the Chaldee paraphraſe: let the glory of God in my deliverance be ſeen by all that dwell upon the earth; for by how much the lower and more diſtreſſed his caſe and condition were, by ſo much the more would the glory of God be diſplayed in bringing him out of it. Nothing lies nearer the hearts of the people of God than his glory; this is more deſirable than their own ſalvation: David breathes after the one, when he ſays nothing of the other, that being uppermoſt; though his meaning is, that the one might be brought about by the other.

℣. 6.

[m] Vid. Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 4. c. 23. col. 611. Gejerus, Michaelis

[n] חסדו ואמתו gratiam & veritatem ſuam, Cocceius.

[o] Iliad. 24. v. 40, 41.

[p] להטים incendiarios, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; flammantes, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth, Cocceius, Vatablus, Muſculus.

[q] A. Gell. Noct. Attic. l. 10. c. 25.

℣. 6. They have prepared a net for my ſteps, &c.] They laid ſnares for him, as the fowler does for the bird, in order to take him. It denotes the inſidious ways uſed by Saul and his men to get David into their hands; ſo the Phariſees conſulted together how they might intangle Chriſt in his talk, Matt. xxii. 15. My ſoul is bowed down; dejected by reaſon of his numerous enemies, and the crafty methods they took to enſnare and ruin him; ſo the ſoul of Chriſt was bowed down with the ſins of his people, and with a ſenſe of divine wrath becauſe of them; and ſo their ſouls are often bowed down; or they are dejected in their ſpirits, on account of ſin, Satan's temptations, various afflictions, and divine deſertions. The Targum renders it, "he "bowed down my ſoul;" that is, the enemy; Saul in particular. The Septuagint, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, they bowed down my ſoul; the ſame that prepared a net for his ſteps; every one of his enemies; they all were the cauſe of the dejection of his ſoul: the Syriac verſion leaves out the clauſe. They have digged a pit before me, into the midſt whereof they are fallen themſelves. Selah. contriving and ſeeking to find out the places where David's haunt was, Saul got into the very cave where he and his men were; and had his ſkirt cut off, when his life might as eaſily have been taken away, 1 Sam. xxiii. 22, 23. and xxiv. 3, 4. ſee Pſal. vii. 15, 16. and ix. 15.

℣. 7. My heart is fixed, O God, &c.] Firm and ſure, truſting in the Lord, believing that he ſhould be ſaved by him out of his troubles; ſee Pſal. ci. 1. and cxii. 7, 8. ſo in a ſpiritual ſenſe, a heart fixed and eſtabliſhed, or that is firm and ſure, is one that is aſſured of its ſalvation by Chriſt; rooted and grounded in the love of God, firmly built on the foundation, Chriſt, and has its affections ſet on him; and is unmoved, from the hope of the goſpel, and the doctrines of it, by whatſoever it meets with in the world. It may be rendered, my heart is prepared, or ready[r]; that is, according to ſome, to receive good or evil, proſperity or adverſity, at the hand of God; to which ſenſe is Jarchi's note, "my heart is faithful with "thee in the meaſure of judgment, and it is faith-"ful with thee in the meaſure of mercy." That is, whether I am chaſtiſed with judgments, or followed with mercies, my heart is firm and true to God. The Targum is, "my heart is prepared "for thy law, O Lord; my heart is prepared for "thy fear;" that is, it is prepared for the worſhip and ſervice of God; it is ready to every good work; it is prepared to pray unto him, and to wait for an anſwer, which are both from the Lord, Prov. xvi. 1. Pſal. x. 17. and particularly to ſing praiſe unto him, as follows. My heart is fixed; this is repeated, to ſhew the vehemency of his ſpirit, and the certainty of the thing. I will ſing and give praiſe; for the ſalvation wrought for him, and which he was ſure of; and before he had finiſhed this pſalm, or while he had compoſed it, did enjoy it.

℣. 8. Awake up, my glory, &c.] Meaning his ſoul, whom Jacob calls his honour, Gen. xlix. 6. it being the moſt honourable, glorious, and excellent part of man; is the breath of God, of his immediate production; is a ſpirit incorporeal and immortal; is poſſeſſed of glorious powers and faculties; had the image of God inſtamped upon it, which made man the glory of God, 1 Cor. xi. 7. and has the image of Chriſt on it in regenerated perſons; and is that with which God and Chriſt are glorified; and is, upon all accounts, of great worth and value, even of more worth than the whole world: and this ſometimes in the ſaints is as it were aſleep, and needs awaking; not in a literal ſenſe; for it is uncapable of natural ſleep, being incorporeal; but in a figurative and ſpiritual ſenſe as when grace is dormant, and not in exerciſe; when the ſoul is backward to, and ſlothful in duty, unconcerned about divine things, and lukewarm and indifferent to them; which is occaſioned by prevailing corruptions and worldly cares; and ſometimes it becomes dull, and heavy, and inactive, through an overpreſſure by ſorrows and troubles, as the diſciples of Chriſt were found ſleeping for ſorrow, Luke xxii. 45. which ſeems to have been the caſe of the pſalmiſt here; he had been in great diſtreſs, his ſoul was bowed down, ℣. 6. he had hung his harp upon the willow, and could not ſing one of the Lord's ſongs in the place and circumſtances he was in; but now he calls upon his ſoul, and arouſes all the powers and faculties of it, and ſtirs up himſelf to the work of praiſe, juſt as Deborah did, Judg. v. 12. ſome by his glory underſtand his tongue, as in Pſal. xvi. 9. compared with Acts ii. 26. and Pſal. xxx. 12. and ſo may deſign vocal ſinging here, as inſtrumental muſic in the next clauſe. Awake, pſaltery and harp; which, by a proſopopeia, are repreſented as perſons; as if they were animate, ſenſible, and living: theſe had been laid aſide for ſome time as uſeleſs; but now the pſalmiſt determines to take them up and employ them in the ſervice of praiſing God: theſe are fitly put together, becauſe pſalms were ſung to harps; and ſo with the Greeks a pſalm is ſaid to be properly the ſound of the harp[s]. I my ſelf will awake early; in the morning, when ſalvation and joy come; and ſo ſoon cauſe his voice to be heard, as in prayer, ſo in praiſe; or I will awaken the morning; ſo Jarchi: be up before the ſun riſes, the morning appears, or day dawns: this is taking the wings of the morning, and even preventing that. The Targum is, "I will awake to the morning-"prayer."

℣. 9. I will praiſe thee, O Lord, among the people, &c.] Either among the people of Iſrael, as Aben Ezra, when the ſeveral tribes meet together; and ſo it denotes the public manner in which he would praiſe God for his ſalvation: or among the Gentiles, as the following clauſe ſhews. I will ſing unto thee among the nations; the apoſtle Paul ſeems to have reference to this paſſage in Rom. xv. 9. which he produces as a proof of the Gentiles glorifying God for his mercy in ſending the goſpel among them, and calling them by his grace; by which they appeared to be his choſen and redeemed ones; and in forming them into goſpel-churches, among whom his praiſe was ſung: for this ſuppoſes ſomething to be done among the Gentiles, which ſhould occaſion praiſe; and here the pſalmiſt perſonates the Meſſiah, who in his miniſters and members praiſe God for his wonderful mercy to the Gentile world, as follows.

℣. 10. For thy mercy is great unto the heavens, &c.] Which denotes the exceeding greatneſs and largeneſs of it; as it is in the heart of God, who is plenteous in mercy; as it is expreſſed in the covenant of grace, where are ſtores of it; as it is ſhewn forth in the choice of perſons to eternal life; in the miſſion of Chriſt into this world to die for them; in the regeneration of them, the pardon of their ſins, and eternal life: and this mercy is not only extended to perſons in the ſeveral parts of the earth, earth, but is as high as the heaven above it, Pſal. ciii. 11. And thy truth unto the clouds; the faithfulneſs of God in performing his purpoſes and his promiſes; or the goſpel, and the doctrines of it, which contain the deep things of God; unleſs Chriſt himſelf ſhould be meant, who is the truth which ſprung out of the earth, Pſal. lxxxv. 11. is now aſcended unto heaven, and is higher than the heavens; and whoſe exaltation and glory may be deſigned in the following verſe.

[r] נכון paratum, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

[s] Scholia in Ariſtoph. Aves, p. 551.

℣. 11. Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens, &c.] As Chriſt now is at the Father's right hand, and who is God over all, bleſſed for ever. Let thy glory be above all the earth; as it is above all the men on earth and angels in heaven. This is repeated from ℣. 5. ſee the note there, and ſhews the vehemency of his deſire after theſe things, and how much his heart was ſet upon them.

PSALM LVIII.

To the chief muſician, Al-taſchith, Michtam of David.

According to the Syriac verſion, this pſalm was written when Saul threatened the prieſts, becauſe they did not ſhew him where David was, when they knew it. Dr Lightfoot thinks, that the title Al-taſchith refers to David's not deſtroying Nabal, as he threatened; and that the venom of Nabal's tongue in reviling him, and the deafneſs of his ears in not attending to the meſſengers that told their errand wiſely, are deſigned in this pſalm; and in which the pſalmiſt propheſies of his ſudden death, before the pots for his feaſt could be warmed by the thorns under them, and whilſt he was lively and jovial. Jarchi is of opinion that it was compoſed after David had been in the trench where Saul lay, and took away the ſpear and cruiſe, and went his way, and called to Abner, ſaying, Anſwereſt thou not? which is as if he ſhould ſay, Haſt thou it not in thy power now to convince Saul, and ſhew him that he purſues me without cauſe, ſince, if I would, I could have ſlain him? Kimchi ſays it was written on account of Abner, and the reſt of Saul's princes, who judged David as a rebel againſt the government, and ſaid it was for Saul to purſue after him to ſlay him; for if they had reſtrained him, Saul would not have purſued after him; and indeed they ſeem to be wicked judges who are addreſſed in this pſalm; Do not deſtroy. Arama ſays, it declares the wickedneſs of Saul's judges.

℣. 1. Do ye indeed ſpeak righteouſneſs, O congregation? &c.] Of the mighty, as in Pſal. lxxxii. 1. the judges of the land, who were many, and therefore called a congregation, as it is neceſſary they ſhould; for being many, they are not ſo eaſily bribed; and beſides, one may ſee that in a cauſe which another does not. The word ſignifies a ſheaf [t]; and ſo it is by ſome rendered, to which a bench or aſſembly of judges may be compared; becauſe conſiſting of many, and a ſelect body, who ſhould unite together in a ſentence or decree, and act uprightly, like a ſheaf of wheat ſtanding upright; ſee Gen. xxxvii. 7. ſome think the word has the ſignification of dumbneſs, or ſilence; ſo Jarchi and R. Moſes [u]; as Elem in the title of the fifty-ſixth pſalm, and render it, do ye indeed ſpeak dumb juſtice? or the dumbneſs of juſtice [w]; or are you dumb, or your mouth ſilent, when ye ſhould ſpeak righteouſneſs? and ſo the pſalmiſt accuſes them for their criminal ſilence, in not contradicting Saul and his courtiers when they ſpake againſt him; and for not adviſing him to another kind of conduct towards him. All men ought to ſpeak that which is right and truth; but eſpecially judges on the bench, who are to judge the people with juſt judgment, Deut. xvi. 18. but here this is doubted of, and called in queſtion; at leaſt their ſincerity in giving judgment: yea, it is denied; for this interrogation carries in it a ſtrong denial; and the meaning is, that they did not ſpeak righteouſneſs, or that which was juſt and right in the cauſe of David, when before them. Do ye judge uprightly, O ye ſons of men? no, they did not; they were unjuſt judges. The pſalmiſt calls them the ſons of men, as in 1 Sam. xxvi. 19. in diſtinction from God the Judge of all, and to put them in mind of their frailty and mortality; for though they were gods by office, they were but men, and ſhould die like men, and be accountable to the ſupreme Judge for all their proceedings in judgment here, Pſal. lxxxii. 1, 6, 7.

℣. 2. Yea, in heart ye work wickedneſs, &c.] So far were they from ſpeaking righteouſneſs, and judging uprightly. The heart of man is wickedneſs itſelf; it is deſperately wicked, and is the ſhop in which all wickedneſs is wrought; for ſinful acts are committed there, as well as by the tongue and hand, as follows. This phraſe alſo denotes their ſinning; not with precipitancy, and through ſurpriſe; but with premeditation and deliberation; and their doing it heartily, with good will, and with allowance, and their continuance and conſtant perſiſting in it. Ye weigh the violence of your hands in the earth; they were guilty of acts of violence and oppreſſion, which, of all men, judges ſhould not to be guilty of; whoſe buſineſs it is to plead the cauſe of the injured and oppreſſed, to right their wrongs, and to protect and defend them: theſe they pretended to weigh in the balance of juſtice and equity, and committed them under a ſhew of righteouſneſs; they decreed unrighteous decrees, and framed miſchief by a law; and this they did openly, and every where, throughout the whole land.

℣. 3. The wicked are eſtranged from the womb, &c.] Which original corruption of nature accounts for all the wickedneſs done by men: they are conceived in ſin, ſhapen in iniquity, and are tranſgreſſors from the womb; they are alienated from God, and from that godly life which is agreeable to him, and he requires; and from the knowledge and fear of him, and love to him; and they deſire not the knowledge of him nor his ways; they are far from his law, and averſe to it; and ſtill more ſo to the goſpel of Chriſt; the doctrines of which, as well as the great things written in the law, are ſtrange things to them; and they are aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, eſtranged from the people of God, know nothing of them, neither of their joys, nor of their ſorrows. They go aſtray as ſoon as they be born, ſpeaking lies; they are wicked from their infancy, from their youth upward; and ſin, ſin, which is meant by going aſtray, as ſoon as they are capable of it, and which is very early. Sin ſoon appears in the temper and actions of men; they go out of God's way, and turn every one to their own way, and walk in the broad road which leads to deſtruction: and particularly they are very early guilty of lying; as ſoon as they can ſpeak, and before they can ſpeak plain, they liſp out lies, which they learn from their father the devil, who is the father of lies; and ſo they continue all their days ſtrangers to divine things, going aſtray from God, the God of truth, continually doing abominations, and ſpeaking lies; which continuance in theſe things makes the difference between reprobate men and God's elect; for though the latter are the ſame by nature as the former; yet their natures are reſtrained, before converſion, from going into all the ſins they are inclined to; and if not, yet at converſion a ſtop is put to their progreſs in iniquity.

[t] אלם e manipulo, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; e manipulo juſtitiæ, Cocceius. [u] In Aben Ezra in loc. [w] So Varenius, Reinbech, Michaelis.

ẏ. 4. Their poiſon is like the poiſon of a ſerpent, &c.] Either their wrath and fury, as the word [x] may be rendered, againſt God, his people, and even one another, is like that of a ſerpent when irritated and provoked; or their miſchievous and devouring words are like the poiſon of aſps under their lips, Rom. iii. 13. or the malignity of ſin in them is here meant, which, like the poiſon of a ſerpent, is latent, hid, and lurking in them; is very infectious to all the powers and faculties of the ſoul, and members of the body; and is deadly and incurable, without the grace of God and blood of Chriſt. They are like the deaf adder that ſtoppeth her ear; the adder is a kind of ſerpent, in Hebrew called Pethen; hence the ſerpent Python. This is not deaf naturally, otherwiſe it would have no need to ſtop its ear, but of choice; and naturaliſts [y] obſerve, that it is quicker of hearing than of ſight. Jarchi indeed ſays, when it grows old it becomes deaf in one of its ears, and it ſtops its other ear with duſt, that it may not hear the voice of the charmer; though others ſay [z], it ſtops one ear with its tail, and lays the other to the ground; but theſe ſeem fabulous. David ſpeaks of it figuratively, that it acts as if it was deaf, regarding no enchantments, but bites notwithſtanding; theſe having no influence on it, which, if they had any, could not be hindered by its deafneſs; and he compares wicked men to it, who are wilfully deaf to all good counſel and advice given them [a].

ẏ. 5. Which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, &c.] Or that uſe inchantments, to inchant ſerpents, by muttering certain words, or by magical ſongs; by which means, it is ſaid, that they have been drawn out of their holes, or cauſed to fly, or have become ſtupified, and have loſt their poiſon, and even burſt aſunder; as Bochart [b] relates from Pliny, Ælianus, Lucan, Iſidore, Virgil, Ovid, Horace and others: but an aſp is unmoved by inchantments, and they are of no avail againſt its bites and poiſon [c]. Nor do theſe words ſuppoſe, that the pſalmiſt approved of inchantments, or affirms the virtue of them to be real, but rather ſuggeſts the contrary: he only takes his ſimilitude from the ſeeming deafneſs and diſregard of ſerpents to inchantments, to ſet forth the obſtinacy of wicked men, and their reſolution to continue in their wicked ways; like the ſerpent that diſregards men Charming never ſo wiſely; being wiſe, ſkilful [d], or made wiſe in inchanting inchantments; one very learned and expert in the art; or in aſſociating aſſociations, ſkilful [e]: who makes a conſort of magical words to obtain his point, as ſome think; or becauſe by his inchantments, he aſſociates and gathers many ſerpents together, and tames them; or becauſe he does this by ſociety and fellowſhip with the devil; methods no ways approved of by the pſalmiſt, only alluded to. It may perhaps better be rendered, which will not hearken to the voice of the eloquent, putting things together ever ſo wiſely; the word is uſed for an eloquent orator, Iſa. iii. 3. Such goſpel-miniſters are, who are mighty in the ſcriptures. The voice of the goſpel is a charming voice; it publiſhes good news, and glad tidings; it is a voice of love, grace and mercy, of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by Chriſt; and is wiſely charmed when it gives no uncertain ſound, is all of a piece, and is faithfully preached, as it was by the apoſtles of Chriſt; who, as wiſe men, laid him as the foundation of eternal life and ſalvation; and eſpecially as it was preached by Chriſt himſelf, who ſpake as never man did: and yet, ſuch were the hardneſs and obſtinacy of the wicked Jews, that they ſtopped their ears to his miniſtry, nor would they ſuffer others to attend upon it; and ſo it is now: which ſhews the inſufficiency of the beſt means of themſelves, and the neceſſity of powerful and efficacious grace, to work upon the hearts of men.

ẏ. 6. Break their teeth, O God, in their mouth, &c.] From the deſcription of the wicked, the pſalmiſt paſſes to imprecations on his enemies; whom he repreſents as cruel and blood-thirſty, and as being ſtronger than he; and therefore he applies to God, who could, as he ſometimes did, ſmite his enemies on the cheek-bone, and break the teeth of the ungodly; which is done by taking the power and inſtruments of hurting from them: and it may be by their teeth in their mouth may be meant, their malicious words, calumnies and detractions; teeth being the inſtrument of ſpeech; and by breaking them, preventing the miſchief deſigned by them. Break out the great teeth of the young lions, O Lord: Saul was the old lion; his princes, nobles and courtiers the young ones; whoſe jaw-teeth were as knives to devour David and his men, unleſs plucked out; or God in his providence ſhould interpoſe, and hinder the performance of their miſchievous and cruel deſigns; and who could eaſily deſtroy them by his blaſt, and by the breath of his noſtrils, Job iv. 9, 10.

ẏ. 7. Let them melt away as waters which run continually, &c.] Let them be diſheartened, and their courage fail them, and let there be no ſpirit left in them, Joſh. vii. 5. or let them be unſtable as water, that is continually running, ever upon the flux and motion; let them never be ſettled, but always changing in their ſtate and circumſtances, Gen. xlix. 4. or let them come to nought, as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions; which is the caſe of water that runs over or runs away: or let them be deſpiſed, as Jarchi, and the Arabic, Syriac and Ethiopic verſions; being uſeleſs and unprofitable, as water is when paſſed and gone: or let their ruin and deſtruction be as ſwift as the gliding water; let them be brought to deſolation in a moment;

Job

[x] חמת Θυμος, Sept. furor, V. L.

[a] Vid Gataker. Adverſaria, c. 8. p. 70, &c.

[b] Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 2. c. 6. col. 390.

[c] Ælian. de Animal. l. 1. c. 54.

[d] חובר חבריב מחכם incantantis incantationem periti, Vatablus; vel incantationes exercitati ac peritiſſimi, Michaelis; of him that is made wiſe, Ainſworth.

[e] Jungentis conjunctiones docti, Montanus; conſociantis ſocietates ſerpentum, Michaelis.

[y] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 23.

[z] Iſidor. Hiſpal. Origin. l. 12. c. 4.

Job xxiv. 18. and let it be irrecoverable, as water running over the cup, and ſcattering itſelf, is ſpilt upon the ground, and cannot be gathered up, 2 Sam. xiv. 14. The Targum is, "let them melt in their "ſins as water." When he bendeth his bow to ſhoot his arrows, let them be as cut in pieces; either when the wicked man bends his bow to ſhoot his arrows againſt the righteous; when he deviſes miſchief againſt him, ſhoots out bitter words, and attempts to do hurt unto him; let it be as if the ſtring of his bow and his arrows were all cut to pieces; let all his deſigns, words and actions be without effect, and let not his hand perform his enterprize: or when God bends his bow againſt the wicked, ſo Jarchi; and prepares the inſtruments of death for them, and ordains his arrows againſt the perſecutors, Pſal. vii. 12, 13. Let then his and his peoples enemies be cut off, as the tops of the ears of corn; as the word uſed ſignifies, Job xxiv. 24. The words may be rendered, let him (God) direct his arrows; as the tops of the ears of corn are cut off[f]; ſo let them be.

℣. 8. As a ſnail which melteth, let every one of them paſs away, &c.] As a ſnail when it comes out of its ſhell liquefies, drops its moiſture, and with it makes a path, from whence it has its name שבלול in the Hebrew language; and ſo the Targum here, "as the ſnail moiſtens its way;" which moiſtneſs it gradually exhauſts, and melts away, and dies: ſo the pſalmiſt prays, that every one of his enemies might die in like manner. Some think reference is had to the ſnail's putting out its horns to no purpoſe when in danger, and apply it to the vain threatnings of the wicked; a ſtrange difference this, between a roaring young lion, ℣. 6. and a melting ſnail. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions render it, as wax which melteth; ſee Pſal. lxviii. 2. Like the untimely birth of a woman, that they may not ſee the ſun; ſee Job iii. 16. The Targum is, "as an abortive and a "mole, which are blind and ſee not the ſun." So Jarchi renders it a mole, agreeable to the Talmud[g]. Or, let them not ſee the ſun[h]; let them die, and never ſee the ſun in the firmament any more; nor Chriſt, the ſun of righteouſneſs; nor enjoy the favour of God, and the light of his countenance; nor have the light of life, or eternal glory and happineſs; ſee Pſal. xlix. 19.

℣. 9. Before your pots can feel the thorns, &c.] Which is ſoon done; for as dry thorns make a great blaze, ſo they give a quick heat; the pots ſoon feel them, or the water in them ſoon receives heat from them. From imprecations the pſalmiſt proceeds to propheſy, and foretels the ſudden deſtruction of wicked men, which would be before a pot could be heated with a blaze of thorns. The Targum is, "before the wicked become tender, "they harden as the thorn:" that is, they never become tender, or have any tender conſciences, but are hardened in ſin from their infancy. Some render the words, before your thorns grow up to a briar or bramble[i]; little thorns become great ones, tender thorns hard ones, as Jarchi; that is, as he interprets it, before the children of the wicked are grown up, they are deſtroyed; thoſe ſons of Belial, who are like to thorns thruſt away, 2 Sam. xxiii. 6. Others, as Aben Ezra, before they underſtand; that is, wiſe and knowing men; that your thorns are a bramble; or from leſſer ones are become greater; and ſo denotes, as before, the ſuddenneſs and quickneſs of their deſtruction, as follows: He, that is, God, ſhall take them away as with a whirlwind; not to himſelf, as Enoch; nor to heaven, whither Elijah went up by a whirlwind; but out of the land of the living, and as with a tempeſt, to hell, where ſnares, fire and brimſtone are rained upon them; ſee Job xxvii. 20, 21. Pſal. xi. 6. Both living, and in his wrath; when in health and full ſtrength, and ſo go quick to hell; as Korah and his company alive into the earth; and all in wrath and ſore diſpleaſure: for the righteous are alſo taken away; but then it is from evil to come, and to everlaſting happineſs; and through many tempeſtuous providences, which are in love, and for their good, do they enter the kingdom: and thoſe that are alive at Chriſt's coming, will be caught up to meet him in the air; but the wicked are taken away as in a whirlwind, alive, and in wrath.

℣. 10. The righteous ſhall rejoice when he ſeeth the vengeance, &c.] Before imprecated and foretold; the puniſhment inflicted by the Lord, to whom vengeance belongs, in a way of vindictive wrath; for what befals the wicked in an afflictive way, is in wrath, and as a vengeance upon them: and as the judgments of God are ſometimes manifeſt, are to be ſeen, they are obſerved by the righteous, who rejoice at them; not as evils and miſeries ſimply conſidered, nor from a private affection; but as the glory of divine juſtice is diſplayed therein, and the goodneſs of God is ſhewn to them, by delivering them out of their hands; ſee Rev. xviii. 20. and xix. 1, 2, 3. He ſhall waſh his feet in the blood of the wicked; which denotes the great deſtruction of the wicked, and the abundance of blood that ſhall be ſhed; ſee Rev. xiv. 20. and the entire victory the ſaints ſhall have over them, and their ſecurity from them, Pſal. lxviii. 21—23. as well as the ſatisfaction, and pleaſure and refreſhment, as it were, they ſhall have in their deſtruction; ſignified by their feet being waſhed in their blood, inſtead of being waſhed in water, uſual in the eaſtern countries; becauſe of the glory of the divine perfections appearing therein. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions read his hands.

℣. 11. So that a man ſhall ſay, &c.] Any man, and every man eſpecially, that is obſerving, wiſe and knowing; he ſhall conclude from ſuch a diſpenſation of things, from God's dealing with the wicked, after this manner: Verily, there is a reward for the righteous; or fruit[k] for them: they have the fruits of divine love, the bleſſings of an everlaſting covenant; and the fruit of Chriſt, the tree of life, which is ſweet unto their taſte, as are the benefits of his death, his word and ordinances; and the fruits of the Spirit, his ſeveral graces wrought in their ſouls; and the fruits of righteouſneſs, the effect of which is peace; and is a reward they receive in, though not for keeping the commands of God; and they gather fruit unto eternal life, which is the recompence of reward, the reward of the inheritance, the great reward in heaven, which remains for them; and which they ſhall have, not for their own righteouſneſs-ſake, but for the ſake of Chriſt's righteouſneſs; from which they are denominated righteous perſons, and which gives them a right and title to it: ſo that this is a reward, not of debt as due to them, and to be claimed by them on

[f] כמו יתמללו concidantur, ſuccidantur inſtar ſpicarum, Michaelis.
[g] T. Bab. Moed Katon, fol. 6. 2.
[h] בל חזו שמש ne videant ſolem, Pagninus, Montanus.
[i] Tigurine verſion.
[k] פרי fructus, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

on account of any thing they have done; but of grace, ſtreaming through the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt. Verily, he is a God that judgeth in the earth; that there is a God, is known by the judgments that he executeth; and that he judgeth in the earth, and is the Judge of all the earth, who will do right, may be concluded from the vengeance inflicted on wicked men; and he will one day judge the world in righteouſneſs, by him whom he has ordained to be Judge of quick and dead. The words in the Hebrew text are in the plural number, אלהים שפטים Gods that judge; which Kimchi and Ben Melech ſay, is on account of honour; or as they, with Aben Ezra, interpret it, of the angels: but theſe are not judges in the earth; rather it is expreſſive of a Trinity of perſons in the Godhead, Father, Son, and Spirit. The Father is the Judge of all, though he does not execute judgment; but has committed it to the Son, who is Judge of quick and dead; and the Spirit judges, reproves and convinces the world of ſin, righteouſneſs, and judgment.

PSALM LIX.

To the chief muſician, Al-taſchith, Michtam of David; when Saul ſent, and they watched the houſe to kill him.

THE hiſtory of Saul's ſending meſſengers to watch the houſe of David, and to kill him when he roſe in the morning, is in 1 Sam. xix. 11. which was the occaſion of his writing this pſalm; though the title of the Syriac verſion of it is, "David ſaid or compoſed this, when he heard that "the prieſts were ſlain by Saul:" and in the ſame is added, "but unto us it declares the converſion "of the Gentiles to the faith, and the rejection of "the Jews." And which perhaps is deſigned in ℣. 5, 13. and ſome interpreters are of opinion, that the whole pſalm is to be underſtood of Chriſt, of whom David was a type, eſpecially in his ſufferings; and there are ſome things in it, which better agree with him than with David, as particularly his being without ſin, ℣. 3.

℣. 1. Deliver me from mine enemies, O my God, &c.] David had his enemies in his youth, notwithſtanding the amiableneſs of his perſon, the endowments of his mind, his martial atchievements, his wiſe behaviour and conduct, and the preſence of God with him; yea, it were ſome of theſe things that made Saul his enemy, who, by his power and authority, made others; ſee 1 Sam. xviii. Chriſt had his enemies, though he went about doing good, both to the bodies and ſouls of men continually; the chief prieſts, Scribes and Phariſees, were his implacable enemies, and even the people of the Jews in general: and the church of God, and members of it, whom David may repreſent, have their enemies, ſin, Satan, and the world; and as David and Chriſt, ſo the church has a covenant-God to go unto, from whom deliverance from enemies may be deſired and expected. Defend me from them that riſe up againſt me; or, ſet me on high above them[l]; out of their reach, as David was protected from Saul and his men, who roſe up in an hoſtile manner againſt him; and as Chriſt was, when raiſed from the dead, and exalted at his Father's right hand; and as the ſaints are in great ſafety, dwelling on high, where their place of defence is the munition of rocks; and therefore it matters not who riſe up againſt them.

℣. 2. Deliver me from the workers of iniquity, &c.] See the note on Pſal. vi. 8. And ſave me from bloody men; ſuch as Saul ſent to kill David, as appears from the title of the pſalm; and ſuch as were concerned in the death of Chriſt; and ſuch are the enemies of God's people, the followers of the man of ſin. The heap of words, the various expreſſions uſed in a way of petition, in this and the preceding verſe, ſhew the diſtreſs the pſalmiſt was in, and whom he perſonates; his importunity, earneſtneſs, and fervency in prayer.

℣. 3. For lo, they lie in wait for my ſoul, &c.] As the men did that watched his houſe, when Saul ſent to kill him; ſo the Jews ſought and lay in wait to take away the life of Chriſt; and very often was it the caſe of the apoſtle Paul, that he was in danger of his life, through the lying in wait of the Jews; ſo Satan makes uſe of cunning devices, ſtratagems and wiles, to ruin the ſouls of God's people, if poſſible; and falſe teachers lie in wait to deceive them. The emphaſis lies upon the word ſoul, which is ſo precious, and the redemption of which has coſt ſo much, even the blood of Chriſt. The mighty are gathered againſt me; or, dwell by me; ſee Pſal. lvi. 6. around his houſe, the ſoldiers that Saul ſent; and ſuch were the enemies of Chriſt, Pſal. lxix. 4. the chief prieſts, ſcribes and elders, men of great authority and influence among the people; the kings of the earth and rulers, Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and people of the Jews, Acts iv. 26, 27. yea Satan, and his principalities and powers; and who are alſo thoſe againſt whom the ſaints wreſtle, and would be too mighty for them, were it not that God, and Chriſt, and the holy Spirit, and the holy angels, are on their ſide. Not for my tranſgreſſion, nor for my ſin, O Lord; as the cauſe of ſuch uſage and treatment. David was not without original ſin, in which he was conceived and born; nor without inward corruptions, of which he often complained; nor without actual tranſgreſſions, and ſome very groſs ones, and which he owned and confeſſed, and prayed for the pardon of: but in the caſe of Saul, there was no tranſgreſſion nor iniquity in him, as he declared to him himſelf, and appeals to God for the truth of it, 1 Sam. xxiv. 11. Pſal. vii. 3, 4, 5. One of the words here uſed ſignifies rebellion[m]; of this he was not guilty; he never entred into any treaſonable meaſures, nor committed any treaſonable practices, nor conſpired againſt the life and crown of his ſovereign; in this reſpect he was quite clear and innocent. Chriſt, his antitype, was intirely without ſin, without original or actual tranſgreſſion; he had no ſin in his nature, nor committed any in his life; he had none inherent in him, only the ſins of his people imputed to him; and therefore the uſage he met with from men was very cruel and unjuſt. And as for the ſaints, though they are not free from ſin, original and actual, yet in the caſe for which they ſuffer reproach, and are perſecuted by men, they are not criminal; criminal; they have done nothing to deſerve ſuch uſage; they do not ſuffer as evil doers, but as Chriſtians, 1 Pet. iv. 15, 16.

[l] משגבני ſtatue me in loco alto, i. e. tuto, Vatablus; and to the ſame ſenſe, Piſcator, Cocceius, Michaelis, Gejerus.
[m] פשעי rebellionem meam, Gejerus, Michaelis.

℣. 4. They run and prepare themſelves without my fault, &c.] Or, without ſin in me; or without puniſhment in them; ſo the ſame word is rendered, 1 Sam. xxviii. 10. They run, in an hoſtile manner, againſt me, as the Syriac verſion adds; or like dogs up and down, about the city, to find him and kill him; ſee ℣. 7, 14. Or this may denote their readineſs and ſwiftneſs to ſhed blood, Prov. i. 16. and prepare themſelves with weapons, with inſtruments of death, as the men did that were ſent to kill him; and as the band of men that came with Judas to take Chriſt, prepared themſelves with ſwords and ſtaves. The Targum is, "they order or ordain "war;" which they proſecuted without any occaſion of it from him, and with impunity in them. Wherefore it follows, Awake to help me; or to meet me[n]; ſee Gen. xlvi. 29. Exod. iv. 14, 27. with ſuccour and ſupplies, and to deliver out of the hands of enemies. The Lord, though he neither ſlumbers nor ſleeps, yet ſeems to be aſleep, when he does not ariſe to help his people, but ſuffers the enemy to prevail; and when he ſeems to take no notice of their caſe, but hides his eyes, and ſhuts them as a man aſleep. Hence the following petition, And behold; the diſtreſs the pſalmiſt was in, and the wickedneſs and malice of his enemies againſt him.

℣. 5. Thou therefore, O Lord God of hoſts, &c.] Of the armies in heaven, the angels, and of all the inhabitants of the earth; who are all under him, and at his diſpoſe, and can do among them and with them whatſoever he pleaſes. The God of Iſrael; of the people of Iſrael, literally underſtood; and myſtically of all the elect of God, Jews and Gentiles. The former epithet is expreſſive of his power, this of his grace and goodneſs in a covenant-way; and both encouraged the pſalmiſt to addreſs him on the following account: Awake to viſit all the heathen; either the wicked Iſraelites that roſe up againſt David, and ſought to take away his life, who behaved like heathens towards him, and were accounted as ſuch by him; and the petition is, that God would ariſe and puniſh them, every one of them, according to their deſerts: or elſe the Gentiles, properly ſo called, whom he deſires the Lord would viſit, either in a way of grace, by ſending the goſpel to them, and taking out of them a people for his name, as he did, Acts xv. 14. foreſeeing by a ſpirit of prophecy, that the Jews would be rejected for their ill uſage of the Meſſiah; ſee the note on the title of the pſalm: or in a way of puniſhment for their idolatry and impiety; and particularly the antichriſtian ſtates and powers, called the heathen, and Gentiles, and nations of the earth, Pſal. x. 16. Rev. xi. 2, 18. may be here meant; whom God will viſit for their idolatry, blaſphemy and bloodſhed. Be not merciful to any wicked tranſgreſſors. Selah. that are perfidiouſly and abominably wicked, as Judas Iſcariot, the Romiſh Antichriſt. The Targum renders it, princes of a lie; that ſpeak lies in hypocriſy, and are given up to believe a lie, as the followers of Antichriſt. God is merciful to wicked men and to tranſgreſſors, but not to wicked tranſgreſſors; apoſtates may be meant, ſuch as deal perfidiouſly and treacherouſly, as the word [o] uſed ſignifies; who ſin wilfully and knowingly, after they have received the knowledge of the truth; ſin againſt light and evidence, and obſtinately and wickedly perſiſt therein; who ſin the ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt, the ſin unto death, which is not to be prayed for, 1 John iv. 16. or otherwiſe, this may ſeem to be contrary to the command and example of Chriſt, Matt. v. 44. Luke xxiii. 34. Of ſelah, ſee the note on Pſal. iii. 2.

℣. 6. They return at evening, &c.] It was at evening Saul ſent meſſengers to watch David's houſe, that they might take him in the morning; but miſſing him, perhaps after a fruitleſs ſearch for him all the day, returned at evening to watch his houſe again; or they might come, and go and return the firſt evening. So it was night when Judas ſet out from Bethany, to go to the chief prieſts at Jeruſalem, to covenant with them, and betray his Maſter; and it was in the night he did betray him, after he had eat the paſſover at evening with him. Or, let them return [p], as in ℣. 14. with ſhame and confuſion, as David's enemies, when they found nothing but an image in the bed, which they reported to Saul; and as Judas returned to the chief prieſts with confuſion and horror. Or, they ſhall return [q]; which being prophetically ſaid, had its accompliſhment, both in the enemies of David and of Chriſt; and will be true of all the wicked, who will return from their graves and live again, and give an account of themſelves at the evening of the day of the Lord, which is a thouſand years; in the morning of which day, the dead in Chriſt will riſe, but the reſt will not riſe till they are ended. They make a noiſe like a dog; which is a very noiſy creature, and eſpecially ſome of them, which are always yelping and barking; tho' indeed there are ſome that are naturally dumb and cannot bark: ſuch there are in the Weſt Indies, as we are told [r]; and to which the alluſion is in Iſa. lvi. 10. and which may ſerve to illuſtrate the paſſage there: but thoſe referred to here are of another kind; and this noiſe of theirs either reſpects their bark in the night, as ſome dogs do continually, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi; or to their howling, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions. Wicked men are compared to dogs, Matt. vii. 6. Rev. xxii. 15. and particularly the enemies of Chriſt, Pſal. xxii. 16, 20. in alluſion either to hunting dogs, who make a noiſe all the while they are purſuing after the game; or hungry ravenous ones, who make a noiſe for want of food; and this character agrees not only with the Roman ſoldiers, who were Gentiles, and whom the Jews uſed to call by this name, Matt. xv. 26. but the Jews alſo, even their principal men, as well as the dregs of the people, who were concerned in the death of Chriſt; and may be truly ſaid to make a noiſe like dogs, when they cried, Away with this man, and releaſe unto us Barabbas, crucify him, crucify him; for which they were inſtant and preſſing with loud voices, and their voices prevailed, Luke xxiii. 18, 21, 23. And go round about the city; as Saul's meſſengers very probably, when they found David had made his eſcape from his houſe, ſearched the city round in queſt of him; and there was much going about the city of Jeruſalem, at the time of our Lord's apprehenſion, trial and condemnation; after he was taken in the garden, they went with him firſt to Annas's houſe, then to Caiaphas's, then to Pilate's, and then to Herod's, and back again to Pilate's, and from thence thence out of the city to Golgotha. The alluſion is ſtill to dogs, who go thro' a city barking [s] at perſons, or in queſt of what they can get; ſo informers and accuſers may be called city-dogs, as ſome ſort of orators are by Demoſthenes [t].

[n] לקראתי in occurſum meum, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Gejerus, Michaelis. [o] בגדי perfide agentibus, Junius & Tremellius. [p] ישובו revertantur, Gejerus, Schmidt. [q] Convertentur, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus; ſo Sept. Syr. Ar. [r] P. Martyr. Decad. Ocean. decad. 1. l. 3. & de Inſulis Occid. Ind. Vid. Ignatii Epiſt. ad Epheſ. p. 124.

℣. 7. Behold, they belch out with their mouth, &c.] Bark like dogs, ſo Aben Ezra; or bubble out [u], as a fountain bubbles out with water; ſo they caſt out their wickedneſs in great abundance; ſee Jer. vi. 7. the phraſe denotes the abundance of evil things, and wicked ſpeeches that came out of their mouths, which ſhewed the naughtineſs of their hearts; ſo David's enemies bluſtered and threatned what they would do to him could they find him; and Chriſt's enemies poured out their wicked charges of blaſphemy and ſedition againſt him, in great plenty, and without proof. Swords are in their lips; the words of their lips were like ſharp ſwords; ſee Pſal. lv. 24. and lvii. 4. threatning the moſt ſevere and cruel things: or, beſides their lips, and what they belched out with their mouths, they took ſwords in their hands in a literal ſenſe; as Saul's meſſengers did to kill David, and as Judas and his band of men, who came to take Chriſt as a thief, with ſwords and ſtaves, Matth. xxvi. 55. For who, ſay they, doth hear? what they uttered with their mouths and lips, in a bluſtering and threatning manner; though they were overheard by men, who carried what they ſaid and deſigned to do, to Michal, David's wife. The meaning may be, they would ſay what they pleaſed, and did not care who heard them, having nothing to fear from any, they having their orders from the king; ſee Pſal. xii. 4. and ſo the Targum, "behold they "belch out with their mouths words which are "ſharp as ſwords, and with their lips ſaying, We "ſhall prevail; for who is he that hears, and can "puniſh?" Aben Ezra's note is, "they thought "that God did not hear their counſels;" and therefore the next words are in direct oppoſition to them; but ſo to think is monſtrous ſtupidity and brutiſhneſs, Pſal. xciv. 4—9. ſome take the words to be the words of David, complaining that the civil magiſtrate, none of the judges, took notice of, or puniſhed ſuch who belched out their lies and calumnies againſt him, ſaying, For who doth hear? no man.

℣. 8. But thou, O Lord, ſhalt laugh at them, &c.] Diſappoint their counſels, hinder them from performing their enterprize; ſend them back with ſhame and confuſion, and expoſe them to the laughter and deriſion of others; as Saul's meſſengers were, when inſtead of David they found an image in the bed, with a pillow of goat's hair for its bolſter, 1 Sam. xix. 16. the ſame is ſaid as here with reſpect to the enemies of Chriſt, Pſal. ii. 4. Thou ſhalt have all the heathen in deriſion; either David's enemies, who, though Iſraelites, yet acted like heathens to him, as in ℣. 5. or the Gentiles that were gathered together againſt Chriſt, Pſal. ii. 1—4. or the Antichriſtian ſtates and powers, who will be triumphed over at the time of their ruin, Rev. xviii. 20. and even all the wicked at the laſt day, Prov. i. 26.

℣. 9. Becauſe of his ſtrength will I wait upon thee, &c.] Either becauſe of the ſtrength of Saul, who was ſtronger than David, he determined to wait upon the Lord for ſalvation and deliverance from him; or becauſe of the ſtrength of the Lord, which he expected from him, and therefore would wait upon him for it. The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, and alſo the Chaldee paraphraſe, render the words, my ſtrength will I keep for thee; or with thee. I aſcribe all my ſtrength unto thee; I expect every ſupply of it from thee, and put my truſt and confidence in thee for it: ſo did Chriſt as man, and had ſtrength from the Lord, according to his promiſe, Iſa. l. 7, 9. Pſal. lxxxix. 21. and lxxxvi. 17. and ſo every believer, Iſa. xlv. 24. and xl. 31. For God is my defence; or my high refuge; or high tower [w]; ſee Pſal. ix. 9. and xlvi. 7. where he was defended and exalted, as is petitioned ℣. 1. and was ſafe and ſecure from every enemy.

℣. 10. The God of my mercy ſhall prevent me, &c.] Or of my grace, or goodneſs, as the Targum; ſee 1 Pet. v. 10. God is gracious in himſelf, and he has treaſured up a fulneſs of grace in Chriſt: he is the donor of all the bleſſings of grace in the covenant; and the author of all internal grace in the hearts of his people; and who ſupplies them with more grace as they want it; and he is the Father of all temporal and ſpiritual mercies. The cetib, or writing, is חסדו his mercy; the keri, or reading, is חסדי my mercy; grace, or mercy, is the Lord's; it is his own, which he diſpoſes of as he pleaſes; being given and applied, it is the believer's: all the grace and mercy in the heart of God, in his Son, and in his covenant, is the ſaints, which he keeps for them with Chriſt for evermore; the God of my mercy, or grace, is the ſame with my merciful, or my gracious God; who prevents his people, as he does the Meſſiah, with the bleſſings of his goodneſs, Pſal xxi. 3. It may be rendered, hath prevented me; and denote the antiquity of his love, being before his peoples to him, and the early proviſions of his grace and mercy for them: or doth prevent me; expreſſing the freeneſs of it; he not waiting for any duties, ſervices, or conditions to be performed, but beſtows his grace and mercy, notwithſtanding much unworthineſs: or ſhall prevent me; deſigning the ſeaſonable and timely application of mercy preventing his fears, as it ſometimes does the prayers of his people, Iſa. lxv. 24. God ſhall let me ſee my deſire upon mine enemies; expreſſed in the following verſes, ℣. 11—15. or vengeance upon them; as the Targum paraphraſes it; ſee Pſal. lviii. 10.

℣. 11. Slay thou not, &c.] Though they deſerved to be ſlain, and the Lord ſeemed as if he was about to ſlay them, who was able to do it; he ſeemed to be whetting his glittering ſword, and his hand to take hold of vengeance ready to execute it; wherefore interceſſion is made to ſpare them, which agrees with Chriſt's petition on the croſs, Luke xxiii. 34. The Targum adds, immediately; ſlay them not directly, and at once; give them ſpace for repentance; and ſo the Jews had: for it was forty years after the death of Chriſt ere their deſtruction was: or the meaning may be, ſlay them not utterly; deſtroy them not totally: and ſo it was; for though multitudes were ſlain during the ſiege of Jeruſalem, and at the taking of it; yet they were not all ſlain; there were many carried captive, and ſent into different parts of the world, whoſe poſterity continue to this day. The reaſon of this petition is, Leſt my people forget; the Syriac verſion renders it, leſt they ſhould forget my people; or my people ſhould be forgotten. David's people, the Jews by birth and religion, though not

[s] Κυνης ανα πολιν ωρυονται. Theocrit. Idyll. 2. v. 35.

[t] Apud Salmuth. in Pancirol. Memorab. Rer. par. 2. tit. 2. p 97.

[u] יביעון ſcaturient, Montanus; copioſe eructant, Gejerus. Vatablus, Piſcator, Gejerus, Michaelis, all to the ſame purport.

[w] משגבי vice arcis ſublimis, Tigurine verſion; Vatablus, not as yet his ſubjects, unleſs in deſignation and appointment; and Chriſt's people according to the fleſh: now if theſe had all been ſlain at once, they had been forgotten, like dead men out of mind: or Chriſt's ſpecial and peculiar people; his choſen, redeemed, and called ones, who truly believe in him, and are real Chriſtians; and then the ſenſe is, if full vengeance had been taken of the Jews at once, and they had been cut off root and branch, ſo that none of them remained, Chriſt's people would have forgot them, and the vengeance inflicted on them for their rejection of the Meſſiah; but now they are a continued and laſting inſtance of God's wrath and diſpleaſure on that account, and they and their caſe cannot be forgotten. The Arabic verſion renders it, leſt my people forget the law; its precepts and ſanction, its rewards and puniſhments. Scatter them by thy power; or let them wander up and down like fugitives and vagabonds in the earth, as Cain did, and as the Jews now do, being diſperſed in the ſeveral parts of the world; and which was done by the power of God, or thro' the kingdom of God coming with power upon that people, Mark ix. 1. or by thine army [x]; the Roman army, which was the Lord's, being permitted by him to come againſt them, and being made uſe of as an inſtrument to deſtroy and ſcatter them, Matt. xxii. 7. And bring them down; from their excellency, greatneſs, riches and honour, into a low, baſe, mean and poor eſtate and condition, in which the Jews now are. O Lord, our ſhield; the protector and defender of his people, whilſt he is the deſtroyer and ſcatterer of their enemies.

℣. 12. For the ſin of their mouth, and the words of their lips, &c.] The words may be read as one propoſition, the words of their lips are the ſin of their mouth [y]; they ſpeak nothing but evil; whatever they ſay is ſin; out of the abundance of their evil hearts their mouths ſpeak: or for the ſin of their mouth and lips; becauſe of the calumnies caſt by them on the Meſſiah, traducing him as a ſinful man, a blaſphemer, a ſeditious perſon, and even as one that had familiarity with the devil. Let them even be taken in their pride; in their city and temple, of which they boaſted, and prided themſelves in; and ſo they were: or for their pride in rejecting the Meſſiah, becauſe of his mean deſcent and parentage, and becauſe his kingdom was not with outward pomp and obſervation; and being vain boaſters of their carnal privileges, and works of righteouſneſs, they refuſed to ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of God, and were neither ſubject to the law of God, nor to the goſpel of Chriſt. And for curſing and lying which they ſpeak; for curſing the Meſſiah, pronouncing him accurſed, and treating him as ſuch, by hanging him on a tree; and for lying againſt him, ſaying, that he was a Samaritan, and had a devil, and caſt out devils by Beelzebub; and that he was a deceiver of the people, and a wicked man: for theſe things they were taken in their beſieged city, as is here imprecated.

℣. 13. Conſume them in wrath, conſume them, &c.] The repetition of the requeſt ſhews the ardour and vehemency of the mind of the petitioner, and the importunity in which he put up the petition; and ſuggeſts, that the perſons deſigned were guilty of very great ſins, deſerving of the wrath of God, and which came upon them to the uttermoſt, 1 Theſſ. ii. 16. That they may not be; either any more in the land of the living; be utterly extinct, having no being in this world, Jer. xxxi. 15. or that they might not be in the glory and grandeur, in the honour, dignity and felicity they once were in; which beſt ſuits the preſent ſtate of the Jews; and this ſenſe better agrees with what follows. And let them know that God ruleth in Jacob, unto the ends of the earth. Selah. this is to be underſtood of the Meſſiah, who is God over all, bleſſed for ever, and is the ruler in Iſrael, King of ſaints; reigns over the houſe of Jacob, in his church, and among his people, wherever they are; even to the ends of the earth, where he has had, or will have ſome that are ſubject to him: for his dominion will be from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth, Pſal. lxxii. 8. and this his government is known to men good and bad, by the judgments which he executeth; and particularly it is apparent, that he is made Lord and Chriſt, and that he is come in his kingdom, and with power, by the vengeance taken on the Jewiſh nation.

℣. 14. And at evening let them return, &c.] What in ℣. 6. is related as matter of fact, is here, and in the following clauſes, expreſſed by way of imprecation; and what is there taken notice of as their ſin, is here wiſhed for as their puniſhment; unleſs it can be thought that this ſhould refer to the converſion and return of the Jews in the evening of the world, and to their humiliation and mourning for piercing Chriſt, and to their very diſtreſſed and uncomfortable condition they will be in, until they have ſatisfaction that their ſins are forgiven them; ſee the note on ℣. 6.

℣. 15. Let them wander up and down for meat, &c.] Like hungry dogs. And grudge if they be not ſatisfied; or murmur and howl as dogs when hungry, and can find nothing to eat: or when they ſhall not be ſatisfied, and ſhall lodge [z]; when they ſhall get nothing to ſatisfy their hungry appetite, and ſhall go to bed without a ſupper, and lie all night without food. The Targum is, "they "ſhall wander about to ſeize the prey to eat, and "will not reſt till they are ſatisfied, and will lie all "night;" that is, in queſt of prey.

℣. 16. But I will ſing of thy power, &c.] In creating all things out of nothing; in upholding all things in being; in the redemption of his people; in their converſion and vocation; in the preſervation of them to eternal happineſs; in the performance of his promiſes to them; in the deſtruction of their enemies; and in their protection: Yea, I will ſing aloud of thy mercy in the morning; of providential mercies, which are new every morning; and of ſpecial mercy in the heart of God, in the covenant of his grace, in redemption, in regeneration, in the pardon of ſin, and in eternal life and ſalvation. For thou haſt been my defence; as in ℣. 9. ſee the note there. And refuge in the day of my trouble; whither he fled, and found protection and ſafety; ſee the note on Pſal. ix. 9.

℣. 17. Unto thee, O my ſtrength, will I ſing, &c.] That is, to God, whom he made his ſtrength, and put his truſt in for ſtrength, and from whom he received it; and he therefore determined to ſing praiſe to him for it, and give him the glory of it. For God is my defence; as before in ℣. 9, 16. And the God of my mercy; ſee the note on ℣. 10.

[x] בחילך exercitu tuo, Michaelis, Vatablus. Tigurine verſion; famelici pernoctabunt, Michaelis.

[y] So Gejerus, Schmidt.

[z] ויליגנו nec ſatiati cubabunt,

PSALM LX.

To the chief muſician, upon Shuſhan Eduth, Michtam of David, to teach, when he ſtrove with Aram Naharaim, and with Aram Zobah, when Joab returned, and ſmote of Edom in the valley of Salt, twelve thouſand.

THE words Shuſhan Eduth are thought, by Aben Ezra, to be the beginning of a ſong, to the tune of which this pſalm was ſet; though others, as he obſerves, take them to be the name of a muſical inſtrument, on which it was ſung. Some take Shuſhan to be an inſtrument of ſix chords, an hexachord; and Eduth, which ſignifies a teſtimony, to be the title of the pſalm, it being a teſtimony, or laſting memorial of the victory obtained over the Syrians and Edomites; tho' rather they may be conſidered as expreſſing the ſubject-matter of the pſalm; and ſo the Targum interprets them, "concerning the antient teſtimony of "the ſons of Jacob and Laban;" referring to Gen. xxxi. 47. they may be rendered, as they are by ſome, concerning the lily of the teſtimony [a]; and be applied to the goſpel, the teſtimony of our Lord Jeſus, the pure, lily-white, and unblemiſhed teſtimony it bears to him, his perſon, office, and grace; and particularly to ſalvation as alone in him, and to which witneſs is borne in this pſalm, ℣. 11, 12. The pſalm is a Michtam, or golden pſalm of David, and its uſe is to teach. It is of the inſtructive kind, and teaches where help and ſalvation are to be expected; ſee Col. iii. 16. it was written when David ſtrove, or fought with Aram Naharaim, the Syrians of Meſopotamia, which lay between the two rivers, Tygris and Euphrates, from whence is the name; hence the Septuagint render it Meſopotamia of Syria; and the Targum is, "he "made war with Aram, which is by Euphrates;" and at the ſame time David alſo fought with Aram Zobah, or the Syrians of Zobah, as they are called in 2 Sam. x. 6. with Joſephus [b], Zobah is the ſame with Sophene; but wrongly, as is thought by learned men [c]: for though this is a name which ſome part of Syria goes by in Mela [d]; and Ptolemy [e] makes mention of a place of this name; yet that was beyond Euphrates, and in Armenia; whereas this muſt be nearer the land of Iſrael; for it is ſaid [f] that Aram Zobah is the country of Syria, which David ſubdued, and joined to the land of Iſrael; concerning which the Jews ſo often ſay, that in ſome things it was the ſame with it: according to Hillerus [g], it is the ſame country which the Arabians call Kinnoſrina, the chief city of which is Haleb, or Aleppo; and R. Benjamin Tudelenſis [h], making mention of Haleb, ſays, this is Aram Zobah. Moreover, this pſalm was written when Joab returned, and ſmote of Edom, in the valley of ſalt, twelve thouſand; the valley of ſalt was near the dead ſea, and upon the borders of Idumea; the battle fought here by Joab was either the ſame with the former, or different from it, at or about the ſame time; and accounts ſeemingly different from this are given in 2 Sam. viii. 13. 1 Chron. xviii. 12. in the firſt of theſe the number is ſaid to be eighteen thouſand Syrians, and the victory is aſcribed to David; and in the latter the ſame number as there, but ſaid to be Edomites, as here, and the ſlaughter aſcribed to Abiſhai. The note of R. Abendana [i], for the reconciling of this, is worth tranſcribing: "Our Rabbins of bleſſed memory ſay there were two battles; that Abiſhai, the ſon of Zeruiah, ſlew eighteen thouſand, and after that Joab came and ſmote of them twelve thouſand; and this is what is ſaid; and Joab returned, &c. the ſenſe is, he returned after Abiſhai: and in the book of Samuel the battle is aſcribed to David, becauſe he was the root or chief (i. e. under whom Joab and Abiſhai fought) but R. David Kimchi writes, that there were between them all eighteen thouſand only; that Abiſhai began the battle, and ſmote of them ſix thouſand, and after that, Joab returned, and ſmote of them twelve thouſand; but of a truth the wiſe R. Joel Ben Sueb gives the right ſenſe of this affair, which is this; When David was fighting with the Syrians of Naharaim and Zobah, it was told him that Edom was come out to meet him, and help the Syrians; and then he veiled himſelf in prayer, and ſaid this pſalm; and Joab turned from the army, and went to meet the Edomites, that they might not paſs over to help the Syrians, and join them, and he ſmote of them twelve thouſand; and David was left fighting with the Syrians of Naharaim and Zobah, and ſubdued them under him, and he turned to help Joab; and Abiſhai, the ſon of Zeruiah was over the army, and he ſmote of them eighteen thouſand, and they were in all thirty thouſand, according to our Rabbins of bleſſed memory; and the text in 2 Sam. viii. 13. ſhould be inverted and explained thus; "when "he returned from ſmiting the Syrians, he got "him in the valley of ſalt a name; for his fame "went abroad, becauſe he ſmote there eighteen "thouſand, and this was in Edom." The Targum very wrongly renders it, "and there fell of "the armies of David and Joab twelve thouſand." The title of this pſalm, in the Syriac verſion, is, "which David gave out, ſaying, if I ſhould come "into the hands of Saul, I ſhall periſh; and he "fled, and thoſe that were with him: but to us it "declares the converſion of the Gentiles, and the "rejection of the Jews." The former part of which is quite foreign; but the latter ſeems to be right; for reference is had to both in this pſalm, and to Chriſt, the banner diſplayed, or enſign lift up, and to his dominion over Jews and Gentiles in the latter day, and to that ſalvation which is alone in him.

℣. 1. O God, thou haſt caſt us off, &c.] What is ſaid in this verſe, and the two following, are by ſome applied to times paſt; to the diſtreſs of the people of Iſrael by their neighbours in the times of the judges; to their being ſmitten by the Philiſtines, in the times of Eli and Samuel; and to the victory they obtained over them, when Saul and his ſons were ſlain; and to the civil wars between the houſe of Saul and David; but rather the whole belongs to future times, which David, by a prophetic ſpirit, was led to on the occaſion of the victory obtained,

[a] Super roſa teſtimonii, Tigurine verſion; ſuper flore teſtimonii, Muſculus. [b] Antiq. l. 7. c. 5. ſ. 1. and l. 8. c. 7. ſ. 6. [c] Vid. Hudſon. Not. in ibid. [d] De Orbis Situ, l. 1. c. 6. [e] Geograph. l. 5. c. 13. [f] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Cetubot, fol. 25. 1. [g] Onomaſt. Sacr. p. 586. [h] Itinerar. p. 59. [i] In Miclol Yophi in loc.

tained, when before this the nation had been in bad circumſtances. This refers to the caſting off of the Jews as a church and nation, when they had rejected the Meſſiah and killed him, perſecuted his apoſtles, and deſpiſed his goſpel; of which ſee Rom. xi. 15, 19—21. Thou haſt ſcattered us; as they were by the Romans among the ſeveral nations of the world, and among whom they are diſperſed to this day; or thou haſt broken us [k], as in Pſal. lxxx. 12. not only the walls of their city were broken by the battering rams of the Romans, but their commonwealth, their civil ſtate were broke to pieces by them. Jarchi applies this to the Romans: his note is this; "when Edom fell by his "hand (David's) he foreſaw, by the holy Ghoſt, "that the Romans would rule over Iſrael, and de-"cree hard decrees concerning them." Thou haſt been diſpleaſed; not only with their immorality and profaneneſs, with their hypocriſy and inſincerity, with their will-worſhip and ſuperſtition, and the obſervance of the traditions of their elders; but alſo with their rejection of the Meſſiah, and contempt of his goſpel and ordinances. O turn thy ſelf to us again; which prayer will be made by them, when they ſhall become ſenſible of their ſins, and of their ſtate and condition, and ſhall turn unto the Lord; and when he will turn himſelf to them, and turn away iniquity from them, and all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, Rom. xi. 25, 26. or thou wilt return unto us [l]; who before were caſt off, broken, and he was diſpleaſed with; or others to us.

℣. 2. Thou haſt made the earth to tremble; thou haſt broken it, &c.] As is frequently done by an earthquake; which, whatever natural cauſes there may be of it, is always to be aſcribed to God. The ancient heathens [m] were of opinion, that all earthquakes were of God. This reſpects not the whole earth, but the land of Iſrael only; and ſo the Targum, "thou haſt moved the land of Iſrael, thou "haſt ſhaken and rent it;" and it does not deſign a natural earthquake in it, but a figurative one; a ſhaking and rending of their civil and church-ſtate; ſee Heb. xii. 26, 27. Heal the breaches thereof; for it ſhaketh; which will be done in the latter day, when they ſhall return into their own land, and be reſtored as at the beginning, Iſa. xxx. 30.

℣. 3. Thou haſt ſhewed thy people hard things, &c.] As to have their city and temple burnt, multitudes of them ſlain, and the reſt carried captive, and put into the hands of cruel lords and hard maſters, and made a proverb, a taunt, and a curſe in all places; and all this done to a people that were the Lord's by profeſſion, who called themſelves ſo, though now a lo-ammi; and theſe were hard things to fleſh and blood, yet no other than what they deſerved. Thou haſt made us to drink the wine of aſtoniſhment; or of trembling [n], Iſa. li. 17. that is, to endure ſuch troubles as made them tremble, and aſtoniſhed and ſtupified them; took away their ſenſes, and made them unfit for any thing, being ſmitten with madneſs, blindneſs, and aſtoniſhment of heart, as is threatened them, Deut. xxviii. 28. ſee Rom. xi. 7, 8.

℣. 4. Thou haſt given a banner, &c.] The word נס is, by Jarchi, taken to ſignify temptation or trial [o]; and he interprets it of many troubles which they had, that they might be tried by them, whether they would ſtand in the fear of God, and ſo conſiders theſe words as a continuation of the account of the diſtreſſes of the people of Iſrael; but they are rather to be conſidered as declaring a peculiar bleſſing and favour beſtowed upon ſome among them, who are here deſcribed, when the reſt were involved in the greateſt calamities, ſignified by a banner or enſign given them; by which is meant, not ſo much David literally, and the victory he obtained over the Syrians and Edomites, of which the banner diſplayed might be a token; but the Meſſiah, who is ſaid to be given for a banner, or ſet up as an enſign for the people, Iſa. xi. 10. for the gathering of them to him, to prepare them for war, and animate them to fight the good fight of faith, and oppoſe every enemy; to direct where they ſhould ſtand to be on duty, where they ſhould go, and whom they ſhould follow; and is expreſſive of the victory over ſin, Satan, and the world, they have through him: and this is given to them that fear thee; who have the grace of fear put into their hearts; who fear the Lord and his goodneſs, and ſerve him with reverence and godly fear; who worſhip him both inwardly and outwardly, in ſpirit and in truth, whether among Jews or Gentiles; though the former may be chiefly intended; ſuch as old Simeon, Anna the propheteſs, and others, to whom Chriſt was made known; and eſpecially the apoſtles of Chriſt, and thoſe to whom their miniſtry became uſeful; whoſe buſineſs it was to diſplay this banner, ſet up this enſign, and hold out this flag; as it follows: That it may be diſplayed becauſe of the truth. Selah. not becauſe of the truth of Abraham, as the Targum; nor becauſe of the truth, ſincerity and uprightneſs of thoſe that fear the Lord; but becauſe of his own truth and faithfulneſs in the performance of his promiſes made concerning the diſplaying of this banner; or the ſending of his Son into the world, and the preaching of his goſpel in it; ſee Rom. xv. 8.

℣. 5. That thy beloved may be delivered, &c.] Some think that theſe words expreſs the effect or end of the banner being diſplayed; but becauſe of the word Selah at the end of the preceding verſe, which makes ſo full a ſtop; rather they are to be conſidered in conſtruction with the following clauſe. By the Lord's beloved ones are meant, not ſo much the people of Iſrael, who were loved and choſen by the Lord above all people on the face of the earth; as the elect of God, both among Jews and Gentiles, who are the choſen of God, and precious, and are loved of him with a free, ſovereign, everlaſting and unchangeable love; theſe are the beloved of Father, Son, and Spirit; who falling into a ſtate of condemnation and death in Adam, and being under the power of ſin, and involved in the guilt and filth of it, and being fallen into the hands of many enemies, ſin, Satan, and the world; ſtood in need of deliverance out of all this, which they could not work out of themſelves, nor any creature for them; wherefore, that they might be delivered, the following requeſt is made. Save with thy right hand; from ſin, the cauſe of damnation; from the law, which threatens with condemnation and death; from Satan, that would devour and deſtroy; and from all their enemies; from wrath to come, from hell and the ſecond death; or from going down to the pit of corruption. The perſons for whom this petition is put up are not only David himſelf; but all the beloved ed ones; and theſe God has appointed unto ſalvation; Chriſt is the Saviour of them, and to them ſalvation is applied in due time by the Spirit, and in a little while they will be in the full poſſeſſion of it: and this is wrought out by the right hand of the Lord; either by his mighty power, the ſaving ſtrength of his right hand, who is mighty to ſave; or by his Son, the man of his right hand, made ſtrong for himſelf, who is able to ſave to the uttermoſt; and by whom God has determined to ſave, and does ſave all his people: or the words may be rendered, ſave thy right hand, thy Benjamins [p], who are as near and dear to thee as thy right hand, being his myſtical ſelf, to whom ſalvation is brought by him, Iſa. lxiii. 1, 5. And hear me; in ſo doing, he ſuggeſts he would hear and anſwer him; his prayers would be ended and accompliſhed; this being the ſum of them, his own ſalvation, and the ſalvation of the Lord's beloved ones. The cetib, or writing of this clauſe is, hear us; the keri, or reading of it is, hear me.

[k] פרצתנו rupiſti nos, Montanus, Michaelis; diſrupiſti, Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth. [l] תשובב לנו reverteris ad nos, Pagninus, Montanus; reduces ad nos, Guſſetius, p. 836. [m] A. Gell. Noct. Attic. l. 2. c. 28. [n] תרעלה tremoris, Muſculus, Vatablus, Amama; trepidationis, Michaelis; horroris, Gejerus. [o] So Yalkut Simeoni in loc. par. 2. fol. 103. 1.

℣. 6. God hath ſpoken in his holineſs, &c.] Or in his holy place [q]; in heaven, the habitation of his holineſs and of his glory; or in the houſe of the ſanctuary, as the Targum; in the tabernacle, in the holy place by Urim and Thummim; and in the moſt holy place by his ſacred oracle, from between the mercy-ſeat: or by his holy ones, as the Arabic verſion; by his holy prophets, Samuel and Nathan, by whom he ſpoke to David concerning the kingdom; and by his holy Spirit dictating this pſalm, and the reſt unto him; and by his Son, his holy One, by whom he has ſpoken in theſe laſt times unto his people, to which this pſalm has reference: or it may be underſtood of the perfection of his holineſs in which he has ſpoken, and by which he has ſwore; not only to David literally, concerning the extent of his dominion, the perpetuity and ſtability of it; but to David's ſon and antitype, the Meſſiah, concerning his ſeed, poſſeſſion, and inheritance, Pſal. lxxxix. 19, 20, 35, 36. and ii. 8, 9. I will rejoice; at the holineſs of the Lord, which is matter of joy to the ſaints, eſpecially as that is diſplayed and glorified in ſalvation by Chriſt, Pſal. xcvii. 12. and at what he ſaid in his holineſs to David, concerning his temporal kingdom, and the duration of it; becauſe he knew that what he ſaid he would perform; and at what was ſpoken to him by the Meſſiah, in council and covenant, concerning his ſeeing his ſeed, and prolonging his days; which was the joy ſet before him, which carried him through his ſorrows and ſufferings, Heb. xii. 2. wherefore he believed his kingdom ſhould be enlarged, both among Jews and Gentiles, as follows. I will divide Shechem; a city in mount Ephraim, Joſh. xx. 7. and ſo was in the hands of Iſhboſheth the ſon of Saul; as the valley of Succoth, Gilead, Ephraim and Manaſſeh after mentioned, and all the tribes of Iſrael were, but Judah, 2 Sam. ii. 4, 9. but becauſe of God's promiſe, David believed that they would be all in his poſſeſſion; ſignified by dividing, as a land is divided for an inheritance when conquered, Joſh. xiii. 7. or this is ſaid in alluſion to the dividing of ſpoils in a conquered place; and ſo the Targum, "I will divide the "prey with the children of Joſeph, that dwell in "Shechem;" and as Shechem was the ſame with Sychar, near to which our Lord met with the Samaritan woman, and converted her, and many others of that place, then might he be ſaid to divide the ſpoils there, John iv. 5, 29, 41, 42. And mete out the valley of Succoth; with a meaſuring line, ſo taking poſſeſſion of it, 2 Sam. viii. 2. Zech. ii. 1—4. Succoth was near to Shechem, Gen. xxxiii. 17, 18. and was in the tribe of Gad, and in a valley, Joſh. xiii. 27. there was a Succoth in the plain of Jordan, 1 Kings vii. 46. it ſignifies booths, tents, or tabernacles, and may myſtically ſignify the churches of Chriſt, wherein he dwells and exerciſes his dominion.

℣. 7. Gilead is mine, &c.] This is particularly mentioned, becauſe over this Abner made Iſhboſheth king, 2 Sam. ii. 9. and is the place to which the Jews ſhall be brought in the latter day, when converted, Zech. x. 10. It was a country that abounded with paſtures fit for feeding cattle, Num. xxxii. 1. Cant. iv. 1. and may point out thoſe green paſtures, where Chriſt makes his flocks to lie down and reſt. And Manaſſeh is mine; Ephraim alſo is the ſtrength of mine head: theſe two were alſo under Saul's ſon when David firſt came to the throne, but afterwards became his, as was promiſed him, and he believed, 2 Sam. ii. 9. and v. 1—3. And the concord and harmony of the people of God among themſelves, and under David their Prince, the King Meſſiah, are ſignified by Judah and Ephraim being one in the hand of the Lord; and by the ceaſing of the envy of the one, and of the vexation of the other, Ezek. xxxvii. 19, 24. Iſa. xi. 13. Ephraim was more numerous and populous than Manaſſeh, and abounded with mighty men, which are the ſtrength of a prince, and therefore called here the ſtrength of his head. Judah is my lawgiver; manifeſtly referring to Gen. xlix. 10. which furniſhed out perſons fit to be counſellors in enacting laws, and proper to be employed in the execution of them. The great Lawgiver is Chriſt himſelf, who came of this tribe, Iſa. xxxiii. 22. All this is expreſſive of dominion over the whole land of Judea, Ephraim and Manaſſeh, with the places mentioned with them; the houſe of Joſeph being, as Aben Ezra obſerves, in the north part of it, and Judah in the ſouth. Next mention is made of the ſubjection of the Gentiles, and dominion over them.

℣. 8. Moab is my waſh-pot, &c.] To waſh hands and feet in: and ſo the Syriac verſion, and Moab the waſhing of my feet; a veſſel for low and mean ſervice, and ſo denotes the ſervile ſubjection of the Moabites to David; ſee 2 Sam. viii. 2. and as the words may be rendered, the pot of my waſhing [r]. Great numbers of the Moabites might be at this time ſervants to the Iſraelites, and to David and his court particularly; and might be employed as the Gibeonites were, to be drawers of water to fill their pots, in which they waſhed their hands and feet, and their bathing veſſels, in which they bathed themſelves: Aben Ezra explains it, "I will waſh their "land as a pot;" and ſo may not only ſignify the very great ſubjection of the Gentiles, even the chief among them, to Chriſt and his church, Iſa. xlix. 23. and lx. 14. but as Moab was begotten and born in uncleanneſs, and his poſterity an unclean generation; it may deſign the waſhing, cleanſing, ſanctifying and juſtifying of the Gentiles in the name of Chriſt, and by his Spirit, 1 Cor. vi. 11. Over Edom will I caſt out my ſhoe; as a token of poſſeſſing their land, Ruth iv. 7. ſo ſome: or of ſubduing them; putting the feet on which the ſhoe is, upon the necks of them, Joſh. x. 24. So Kimchi interprets interprets it, "the treading of my foot;" to which the Targum agrees, paraphraſing it thus; "upon "the joint of the neck of the mighty men of Edom, "I have caſt my ſhoe." It may allude to a cuſtom [s] in confirming a bargain, or taking poſſeſſion, to pluck off the ſhoe in token of it. נעלי may be rendered my glove; as it is by the Targum on Ruth iv. 7, 8. for as the ſhoe incloſes and binds the foot, ſo the glove the hand: and the alluſion may be thought to be to a cuſtom uſed by kings, when they ſat down before any ſtrong city to beſiege it, to throw in a glove into the city; ſignifying, they would never depart from the city until they had took it. Hence the cuſtom, which ſtill continues, of ſending a glove to a perſon challenged to fight. And indeed the cuſtom of caſting a ſhoe was uſed by the emperor of the Abyſſines, as a ſign of dominion [t]. Take the phraſe in every light, it ſignifies victory and power; that he ſhould be in Edom as at home, and there pluck off his ſhoe, and caſt it upon him; either to carry it after him, as ſome think, which was the work of a ſervant, to which the Baptiſt alludes, Matt. iii. 11. or rather, to clean it for him; for as Moab was his waſh-pot, to waſh his hands and feet in; Edom was his ſhoe-cleaner, to wipe off and remove the dirt and duſt that was upon them [u]; all which denotes great ſubjection: and this was fulfilled in David, 2 Sam. viii. 14. and may refer to the ſpread of the goſpel in the gentile world, and the power accompanying that to the ſubduing of many ſinners in it, carried thither by thoſe, whoſe feet were ſhod with the preparation of the goſpel of peace. Philiſtia, triumph thou becauſe of me; ſome take this to be an ironical expreſſion, like that in Eccl. xi. 9. ſo R. Moſes in Aben Ezra, and alſo Kimchi. Triumph now as thou uſedſt to do, or if thou canſt: but rather they are ſeriouſly ſpoken, ſeeing they had reaſon to rejoice and be glad, becauſe they had changed hands and maſters for the better, being ſubject to David, 2 Sam. viii. 1. with this compare Pſal. cviii. 9. and may very well be applied to the Gentiles, ſubdued and conquered by Chriſt, who triumph in him; and becauſe delivered out of the hands of ſin, Satan, and the world, thro' his victorious arms.

[p] הושיעה ימינך Cocceius. [q] בקדשו in ſanctuario ſuo, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus; in ſancto ſuo, V. L. Muſculus, [r] סיר רחצי olla lotionis meæ, Pagninus, Montanus, Michaelis, Gejerus; ſo Tigurine verſion, Muſculus, Vatablus.

℣. 9. Who will bring me into the ſtrong city? &c.] Which ſome underſtand of Rabbah of the Ammonites, which Joab beſieged, and ſent to David to come and take it in perſon, 2 Chron. xii. 26, 29. The Targum interprets it of Tyre, which was a ſtrong fortified city, Ezek. xxvi. 4, 11. It rather ſeems to be the ſame with Edom, or the metropolis of the Edomites; ſince it follows: Who will lead me into Edom? which was ſituated in the clefts of the rock, and on the height of the hill, Jer. xlix. 6. but is myſtically to be underſtood of the city of Rome, the great and mighty city, as it is often called in the book of the Revelation, chap. xi. 8. and xvii. 18. and xviii. 10. whoſe deſtruction is certain, being predicted; and after which there have been deſires raiſed in the hearts of God's people in all ages; and particularly juſt before the time, God will put it into the hearts of the kings of the earth to burn it with fire; who are here perſonated by David, as deſirous of entring into it in triumph to deſtroy it, Rev. xvii. 16.

℣. 10. Wilt not thou, O God? &c.] This is an anſwer to the queſtion, and is made by putting another, which tacitly contains in it an affirmation, that God would do it. He has foretold the deſtruction of the Romiſh Antichriſt; he has ſaid it ſhall be: he is faithful to his purpoſes, predictions and promiſes; he is able to effect it; ſtrong is the Lord that judgeth Babylon, Rev. xviii. 10. He will put it into the hearts of the kings of the earth to hate her; he will encourage them to reward her double; he will give her blood to drink, becauſe ſhe is worthy; her deſtruction will be according to his righteous judgment, and will be irretrievable; he will call upon all his people to rejoice at it; whoſe ſhoutings on this occaſion will be like thoſe of perſons that enter into a conquered city in triumph. Which haaſt caſt us off; who ſeemed in former times to have caſt off his people, when they were killed all the day long; accounted as ſheep for the ſlaughter; were ſlain in great numbers in the Low Countries; burnt here in England; maſſacred in France and Ireland: eſpecially God ſeemed to have caſt off his people, and to have had no regard to his intereſt, when Antichriſt ſo prevailed, that all the world wondered after the beaſt. And thou, O God, which didſt not go forth with our armies; but ſuffered the antichriſtian beaſt to make war with the ſaints, and to overcome and kill them; and which was the caſe in many pitched battles with the Waldenſes and Albigenſes before the Reformation, and with the Proteſtants in Germany ſince. But this will not be always the caſe; he whoſe name is the Word of God, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, will fight with the antichriſtian powers, and overcome them, and make his people more than conquerors over them; and his having formerly ſeemed to have caſt them off, and not going forth with their armies, will ſerve as a foil, to ſet off the glorious and complete victory that will at laſt be obtained.

℣. 11. Give us help from trouble, &c.] To have trouble is the common lot of all men, but eſpecially of the people of God. They have ſome troubles which others have not, ariſing from indwelling ſin, Satan's temptations, and the hidings of God's face; and as for outward troubles, they have generally the greateſt ſhare of them, which are certain to them by the appointment of God, and the legacy of Chriſt; tho' they are needful and for their good, and lie in their way to heaven. But perhaps here is particularly meant the time of trouble, which will be a little before the deſtruction of Antichriſt; which will be great, and none like it; will be the time of Jacob's trouble, tho' he ſhall be ſaved out of it, Jer. xxx. 7. This will be the time of the ſlaying of the witneſſes, the hour of temptation, that will try the inhabitants of the chriſtian world; and when the ſaints, as they do in all their times of trouble, will ſeek to the Lord for help, in whom it is, and who has promiſed it, and gives it ſeaſonably, and which is owing wholly to his own grace and goodneſs; and therefore it is aſked that he would give it. For vain is the help of man; or the ſalvation of man [w]; man himſelf is a vain thing; vanity itſelf, yea lighter than vanity; even man at his beſt ſtate, and the greateſt among men; and therefore it is a vain thing to expect help and ſalvation from men, for indeed there is none in them; only in the Lord God is the ſalvation of his people, both temporal and ſpiritual.

℣. 12. Through God we ſhall do valiantly, &c.] Or, through the Word of the Lord, as the Targum; Chriſt,

[s] Elias in Tiſhbi, fol. 267. [t] R. Immanuel apud Caſtell. Lex. Polyglott. col. 2342. [u] Vid. Bynæum de Calceis Heb. l. 2. c. 8. Guſſet. Ebr. Comment. p. 520. [w] תשועת אדם ſalus hominis, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

Chriſt, whoſe name is the Word of God, appearing at the head of his armies, in a veſture dipped in blood, and with a ſharp ſword proceeding out of his mouth, will inſpire his people to fight valiantly under him; and who, in his name and ſtrength, will get the victory over all their enemies, the beaſt, falſe prophets and kings of the earth, and all under them; ſee Rev. xix. 11—21. For he it is that ſhall tread down our enemies; as mire in the ſtreet, or as grapes in a wine-preſs; even kings, captains, mighty men, and all the antichriſtian nations and ſtates; the beaſt, falſe prophet, and Satan himſelf, Rev. xix. 15, 18, 19, 20. and xx. 2, 10. and ſo there will be an end of all the enemies of Chriſt and his people; after which they will ſpend an endleſs eternity together, in joy, peace and pleaſure. The victory is wholly aſcribed to God the Word; it is not they that ſhall do valiantly, that ſhall tread down their enemies; but he by whom they ſhall do valiantly, ſhall do it; even the mighty הוּא He, to whom was promiſed, in Eden's garden, the bruiſing the head of the ſerpent, and all enemies, Gen. iii. 15. and who has the ſame name here as there.

PSALM LXI.

To the chief muſician, upon Neginath, a pſalm of David.

NEGINATH is either the beginning of a ſong, as Aben Ezra; or the muſical note or tune of one: or rather, the name of a muſical inſtrument, which was touched by the hand, or with a quill or bow. It is the ſingular of neginoth, uſed in the title of Pſal. iv. ſee the note there. This pſalm was written by David, when at the end of the earth, or land of Judea, as appears from ℣. 2. either when he was fighting with the Syrians, as R. Obadiah, and ſo was compoſed about the ſame time with the former; or when he was in the land of the Philiſtines, being obliged to fly there from Saul, as Kimchi and others: or rather, after he himſelf was king, ſince mention is made of the king in it; and when he fled from his ſon Abſalom, and paſſed over to the other ſide of Jordan, and came to Mahanaim, 2 Sam. xvii. 22, 24. where very probably he wrote this pſalm. In it reſpect is had to the Meſſiah, as in ℣. 2, 6. tho' Arama thinks it was compoſed after the prophecy came to Nathan, that David ſhould not build the temple; ſee ℣. 4.

℣. 1. Hear my cry, O God, &c.] Being in diſtreſs; and which was vocally expreſſed with great fervency and importunity. Attend unto my prayer; which was made by him, and not for him; inwrought in his heart by the Spirit of God, and put up by him with a true heart and full aſſurance of faith, and related to his own caſe in particular. Aben Ezra thinks that the former word deſigns public prayer, vocally and openly expreſſed; and that this intends prayer in the heart, or mental prayer: both the Lord hears and attends unto, and is here requeſted; which is marvellous grace and condeſcenſion in him.

℣. 2. From the end of the earth will I cry unto thee, &c.] Where he now was, as is obſerved on the title of the pſalm; ſee the note there: tho' he was diſtant from his own houſe, and from the houſe of God, he did not reſtrain prayer before him, but continued to cry unto him, and determined to do ſo; and as the people of God are ſometimes forced to flee to diſtant parts, they have a God ſtill to go to, who is a God afar off, as well as at hand. It may be the pſalmiſt may perſonate the church in goſpel-times, throughout the whole world, even at the further parts of it, in the iſles afar off, where men may and do lift up holy hands to God without wrath and doubting. When my heart is overwhelmed; or covered [x]; with grief and ſorrow for any trouble, outward or inward, and ready to ſink, and fail and die. Sometimes the ſaints are overwhelmed with a ſenſe of ſin, are preſſed down with the weight and burden of its guilt; their faces are covered with ſhame and confuſion; and their hearts are ſwallowed up and overwhelmed with overmuch ſorrow, both at the number of their ſins, and at the aggravated circumſtances of them; and eſpecially when they are without a view of pardoning grace and mercy, Pſal. xxxviii. 4, 10. and xl. 12. Lam. iii. 42, 43. and ſometimes they are overwhelmed with afflictive providences; the Lord cauſes all his waves and billows to go over them, and they are juſt ready to ſink; and did he not ſtay his hand, and ſtop contending with them, the ſpirit would fail before him, and the ſouls that he has made, Pſal. xlii. 6, 7. Iſa. lvii. 16. and ſometimes with divine deſertions, which cauſe a deliquium of ſoul, and throw them into fainting fits, Cant. v. 6. and ſometimes thro' unbelieving frames; and did not the Lord appear to them, and ſtrengthen their faith, and remove their unbelief, they would ſink and die away, Pſal. lxxvii. 2, 3, 7, 8, 9. and xxvii. 13. And at all ſuch times it is right to cry unto the Lord, and make the following requeſt to him: Lead me to the rock that is higher than I; not the land of Iſrael, as Kimchi thinks, the pſalmiſt being now in the low lands of the Philiſtines; nor Jeruſalem, and the fort and hill of Zion; he being now at the extreme and lower parts of the land: this ſenſe is too low. Some think that ſome great difficulty is meant; which ſeemed inſuperable, and like a rock inacceſſible, which he could not get up to, and upon, and get over; and therefore deſires the Lord would lead him up it and over it, before whom every rock, mountain and hill, becomes a plain, Zech. iv. 7. but rather Chriſt is meant, the rock of Iſrael, the rock of our ſalvation, and our refuge. He is higher than David, and all the kings of the earth; higher than the angels in heaven, and than the heavens themſelves, Heb. vii. 26. and who by his height is able to protect and defend his people from all their enemies; and by the ſhade he caſts to refreſh and comfort them; and by the ſufficiency in him to ſupply all their wants; for he is as a rock impregnable, and well ſtored, Iſa. xxxiii. 16. and xxxii. 2. And here gracious ſouls deſire to be led by the Spirit of God always, and eſpecially when in diſtreſſing circumſtances; and he does lead them to his blood for pardon and cleanſing, and to his righteouſneſs for juſtification and acceptance with God, and to his fulneſs for freſh ſupplies.

℣. 3. For thou haſt been a ſhelter for me, &c.] Or refuge [y], from avenging juſtice; a hiding-place and covert from the ſtorms and tempeſts of divine wrath; wrath; a ſhadow and a ſcreen from the heat of Satan's fiery darts, and the blaſt of his terrible temptations, Iſa. xxv. 4. And a ſtrong tower from the enemy; from Satan the devouring lion, from furious perſecutors, and every other enemy; ſee Prov. xviii. 10. and this experience the pſalmiſt had of protection from the rock in former times, made him deſirous of being led to it now.

[x] בעטף quum tegitur, Michaelis. [y] מחסה aſylum, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus; perfugium, Cocceius; refugium, Michaelis.

℣. 4. I will abide in thy tabernacle for ever, &c.] Under the protection of the Lord, as in a ſhepherd's tent, or as in one belonging to a general of an army, where are fulneſs and ſafety; ſee the note on Pſal. xxvii. 5. or elſe the tabernacle of the congregation is meant; the houſe of God, the place of divine and public worſhip, where he deſired and determined always to continue, Pſal. xxiii. 6. or elſe the tabernacle which was prefigured by that below, where he knew he ſhould dwell to all eternity. Kimchi, by for ever, underſtands a long time; and Jarchi explains it both of this world and of the world to come; which is true, underſtanding the tabernacle of the church below, and the church above. I will truſt in the covert of thy wings. Selah. or, in or into the ſecret of thy wings [z]; this he determined to make his refuge for the preſent time, and whilſt in this world; ſee the note on Pſal. lvii. 1.

℣. 5. For thou, O God, haſt heard my vows, &c.] Or my prayers, as the Septuagint and other verſions. Vows are ſo called, becauſe it was uſual to make vows in trouble, when prayer was made to the Lord for help and deliverance, Pſal. lxvi. 13, 14. and cxxxii. 1, 2. This is a reaſon why the pſalmiſt was encouraged to put his truſt in the Lord; becauſe his prayers were heard by him; or he was ſure they would be, as he had intreated, ℣. 1. The paſt is put for the future, as Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve; and it may be becauſe of the certainty of his prayers being heard; and which may be concluded, from the Lord's declaring himſelf a God hearing prayer, from the prevalent mediation of Chriſt, from the aſſiſtance and interceſſion of the Spirit, and from the exerciſe of faith in prayer, and the divine promiſes; or whilſt he was crying to God, an anſwer was returned, and he was delivered out of his troubles, Iſa. lxv. 24. Dan. ix. 20, 21, 23. Another reaſon follows: Thou haſt given me the heritage of thoſe that fear thy name; not the land of Iſrael, as Aben Ezra and Jarchi; which was given for an inheritance to the poſterity of Abraham, Pſal. cv. 11. and which was never more fully in their poſſeſſion than in the times of David: nor the tabernacle or ſanctuary of the Lord, as Kimchi; where he deſired to dwell, ℣. 4. and now had his requeſt granted: but the heavenly glory, the incorruptible inheritance, the inheritance of the ſaints in light, prefigured by them both; which is the gift of God their Father to them his children; comes to them thro' the death of Chriſt the teſtator; is not of the law, and the works of it; is not acquired nor purchaſed: but is owing to the free grace of God; to predeſtinating grace, as the fource of it; to juſtifying grace, thro' the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, as the right unto it; and to regenerating and ſanctifying grace, as the meetneſs for it. Wherefore it manifeſtly belongs to thoſe that fear the name of the Lord, himſelf, his perfections, particularly his goodneſs; who adore and admire, ſerve and worſhip him, internally and externally; not with a ſlaviſh fear, but with a filial, godly fear. The Targum renders it, "Thou "haſt given an inheritance to them that fear thy "name;" that in the king's Bible is, "an inhe-"ritance in the world to come;" ſo the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and the Oriental verſions; and which ſenſe is given by Aben Ezra. It may be underſtood of them that fear the Lord, being the inheritance itſelf; as they are of Chriſt, David's ſon and antitype, and who is deſigned in the next verſe; ſee Deut. xxxii. 9. Pſal. ii. 8. and xvi. 6.

℣. 6. Thou wilt prolong the king's life, &c.] Or add days to the days of the king [a]. Meaning either himſelf, who, tho' his life was in danger by fighting with the Syrians and Edomites, or rather thro' the conſpiracy of his ſon; yet was aſſured that he ſhould yet live many years more, and eſpecially in his poſterity; and that his kingdom would be eſtabliſhed for ever, as was promiſed him, 2 Sam. vii. 12—16. Or rather, the King Meſſiah, ſo the Targum: and Kimchi obſerves, that if this pſalm reſpects the captivity, the king is the King Meſſiah: it may be underſtood of his life as man; who, tho' he died, roſe again, and lives for evermore; and that, as to the glory of God the Father, ſo to the good of his people, for whom he makes interceſſion; and of the continuance of his ſpiritual ſeed, in whom he may be ſaid to live, and his days be prolonged, Iſa. liii. 10. and of the duration of his kingdom, of which there will be no end. For it is an everlaſting one, as follows: And his years as many generations; he living, and his poſterity and kingdom continuing age after age. The Targum is, "his years as the generations of this world, "and the generations of the world to come."

℣. 7. He ſhall abide before God for ever, &c.] Or ſit [b]; or may he ſit: Being raiſed from the dead, he was received up to heaven, into the preſence of God, and ſat down at his right hand; where he abides for ever, a Prieſt upon his throne, having an unchangeable prieſthood, Heb. vii. 24. And prepare mercy and truth, which may preſerve him; which, if literally underſtood of David, is a prayer that the Lord would ſhew him favour and kindneſs, and perform his promiſes to him, whereby his life would be preſerved from the plots and conſpiracies of his enemies, and his kingdom be eſtabliſhed; or that he might be exalted to exerciſe mercy towards his ſubjects, and adminiſter juſtice, or execute the judgment of truth among them; which would make for the preſervation of his perſon, and the ſupport of his throne and government, Prov. xx. 28. But as the words may be applied to the Meſſiah, they are to be underſtood, not of the preſervation of his corporal life whilſt here on earth; but either of the preſervation of his people, in whom he lives, thro' the mercy and truth of God, expreſſed in the exertion of his power, by which they are preſerved unto the heavenly kingdom and glory; or of the ſecurity of his kingdom, which, not being of this world, is not ſupported by worldly power and policy, but in a ſpiritual manner and by ſpiritual means; ſuch as mercy, or grace and truth; that is, the doctrines of grace and truth, which came by Chriſt, and are preached by his miniſters, and are the means of continuing, promoting and preſerving his kingdom and intereſt in the world. Or the words may be rendered, may mercy and the truth of manna keep thee; the true manna, Chriſt; ſee John vi. 32. or mercy and and truth, as the manna, keep thee [c]; as that was kept in the golden pot, Exod. xvi. 33. or rather, as that kept and ſuſtained the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs.

[z] בסתר in abſcondito, Pagninus, Montanus; in occultum, Junius & Tremellius. [a] ימים על ימי מלך תוסיף dies ſuper dies regis adjicies, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [b] ישב ſedebit, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus, Muſculus, Cocceius, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth; vel ſedeat, Vatablus, Gejerus, Amama.

℣. 8. So will I ſing praiſe unto thy name for ever, &c.] Or conſtantly; and not only in this world, but in that to come, for the favours before mentioned; for hearing his prayers; giving him a goodly heritage; prolonging the king's life; and preparing mercy and truth to preſerve him. That I may daily perform my vows; which is done by praiſing the Lord, giving him the glory of all mercies, as vowed and promiſed; ſee Pſal. l. 14. The Targum adds, "in the day of the redemption of Iſ-" rael, and in the day that the King Meſſiah ſhall" be anointed, that he may reign."

PSALM LXII.

To the chief muſician, to Jeduthun, a pſalm of David.

CONcerning Jeduthun, ſee the note on the title of pſalm thirty-ninth. Kimchi thinks this pſalm was written concerning the captivity; and Jarchi על הרחוקות concerning the decrees and judgments made againſt Iſrael by their enemies; and ſo ſome of their ancient expoſitions [d]; but it ſeems to have been compoſed by David when in diſtreſs, either through Saul and his courtiers, or by reaſon of the conſpiracy of Abſalom. Theodoret takes it to be a prophecy of the perſecution of Antiochus in the times of the Maccabees.

℣. 1. Truly my ſoul waiteth upon God, &c.] In the uſe of means, for anſwers of prayer, for performance of promiſes, and for deliverance from enemies, and out of every trouble: or is ſilent [e], as the Targum; not as to prayer, but as to murmuring; patiently and quietly waiting for ſalvation until the Lord's time come to give it; being ſubject to him, as the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions; reſigned to his will, and patient under his afflicting hand: it denotes a quiet, patient waiting on the Lord, and not merely bodily exerciſe in outward ordinances; but an inward frame of ſpirit, a ſoul-waiting on the Lord, and that in truth and reality, in oppoſition to mere form and ſhew; and with conſtancy waiteth, and only [f] on him, as the ſame particle is rendered in ℣. 26. and ſo Aben Ezra here. From him cometh my ſalvation; both temporal, ſpiritual and eternal, and not from any creature; the conſideration of which makes the mind quiet and eaſy under afflictive providences: the contrivance of everlaſting ſalvation is from the Father, the impetration of it from the Son, and the application of it from the Spirit.

℣. 2. He only is my rock and my ſalvation, &c.] The rock on which the church is built, and every believer; and which was David's ſafety, ſhelter and ſhade, and which made him eaſy in his preſent ſtate; and he was the author of his ſalvation, and the rock and ſtrength of it, Pſal. xcv. 1. He is my defence; or refuge; ſee Pſal. ix. 9. and xlvi. 7. and lix. 9, 17. I ſhall not be greatly moved; or, with much motion, as Kimchi; or with great motions, as Jarchi: he could not be moved off of the rock on which he was built; nor out of the city of refuge, whither he had betook himſelf for ſafety; and though he might be troubled in ſpirit, and ſhaken in mind, and ſtaggered in his faith, and fall from ſome degree of ſtedfaſtneſs of it; yet not fall ſo as to be utterly caſt down, or finally and totally, and ſo as to periſh eternally. Aben Ezra interprets it, ſhall not be moved into the great deep; into the abyſs or bottomleſs pit; and ſo ſome of the ancient Midraſſes expound רבה of hell [g]; but much better is the Targum, "I ſhall not be moved in a day of "great affliction;" ſee Acts xx. 23. 1 Theſſ. iii. 3.

℣. 3. How long will ye imagine miſchief againſt a man? &c.] Againſt a good man, as the Targum; or againſt any Iſraelite, as Kimchi; or rather he means himſelf, a ſingle man, a weak man, and an innocent one; which aggravated their ſin, in deviſing his hurt, and contriving ways to take away his life, as did Saul and his courtiers; and Abſalom, and thoſe that were with him. R. Jonah, from the Arabic language, interprets the word here uſed of putting, or drawing out the tongue to a great length; that is, multiplying words, as lies and calumnies, in agreement with the next verſe; but Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and Kimchi, explain it as we do, of deviſing miſchief. The Targum is, "how "long do ye rage againſt a good man?" Ye ſhall be ſlain all of you; this is a further aggravation of their folly, ſince it would iſſue in their own ruin; the miſchief they deviſed for him would fall upon themſelves. Some underſtand this דרך תפלה by way of prayer; as Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech, "may ye be ſlain all of you:" there is a double reading of theſe words; Ben Napthali, who is followed by the eaſtern Jews, reads them actively, ye ſhall ſlay; with which agree the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions; and ſo the Targum, "ye ſhall become "murderers all of you." Ben Aſher, who is followed by the weſtern Jews, reads paſſively, as we do, ye ſhall be ſlain; and which is approved by Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and others. As a bowing wall ſhall ye be, and as a tottering fence; which are eaſily and ſuddenly puſhed down; and ſo theſe ſimilies denote the eaſy, ſudden, and certain deſtruction of thoſe men; ſee Iſa. xxxvi. 13. though ſome connect the words with the men againſt whom miſchief was imagined by his enemies, who was like a bowing wall and a tottering fence; and ſo are expreſſive of his weakneſs, and of the eaſy deſtruction of him; and read the words, ye ſhall be ſlain all of you, in a parentheſis; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt.

℣. 4. They only conſult to caſt him down from his excellency, &c.] Either from the excellency of God, from his greatneſs, and from his height, as Kimchi; or from his grace, as the Arabic verſion; that is, they conſulted to diſcourage him from looking to God, his rock and fortreſs, and from truſting in him; or rather, from his own excellency, from that high eſtate of dignity and honour he was advanced to, or deſigned for, namely, his kingly office. Saul and his courtiers conſulted how

[c] Vid. Hackman. Præcidan. Sacr. tom. 1. p. 71.
[d] Vid. Yalkut Simeoni in loc.
[e] דומיה filet, Pagninus, Munſter, Cocceius; ſilens, Montanus, Tigurine verſion; ſo the Targum.
[f] אך tantum, Pagninus, Montanus, Muſculus; tantummodo, Junius & Tremellius, Schmidt.
[g] Vid. Jarchi & Yalkut Simeoni in loc.

how to prevent his coming to the throne, and Abſalom and Ahithophel how to pull him down from it, and ſeize his crown and kingdom; which latter beſt agrees with the expreſſion here. They delight in lies; in making and in ſpreading them, in order to hurt his character, and give his ſubjects an ill opinion of him; and thereby alienate their affections from him, and weaken their allegiance and obedience to him; ſee Rev. xxii. 15. They bleſs with their mouth; ſaying, God bleſs the king, or ſave the king. But they curſe inwardly; they curſe the king in their hearts, and when by themſelves in private, when they imagine nobody hears them; ſee Eccl. x. 20. Selah; ſee the note on Pſal. iii. 2.

℣. 5. My ſoul, wait thou only upon God, &c.] Be ſilent and ſubject to him, acquieſce in his providences, reſt in him patiently and quietly, wait for his ſalvation; ſee the note on ℣. 1. perhaps ſome new temptation might ariſe, and David's ſoul began to be uneaſy and impatient; for frames are very changeable things; and therefore he encourages it to be ſtill and quiet, and patiently wait on the Lord, and on him only. For my expectation is from him; or my hope, as the Targum; the grace of hope is from the Lord, and the thing hoped for is from him; he is the author and the object of it; and his word of promiſe encourages to the exerciſe of it; or my patience; as the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions. The grace of patience is from the Lord; the means of it is his word; and it is exerciſed, tried and increaſed by afflictions ſent and ſanctified by him; and expectation is nothing elſe than theſe graces in exerciſe, a waiting patiently for things hoped for. Old Teſtament-ſaints expected the firſt coming of Chriſt; New Teſtament-ſaints expect his ſecond coming; and all expect good things from him in time and eternity; nor ſhall their expectation fail and periſh; and therefore is a reaſon why their ſouls ſhould wait only on the Lord.

℣. 6. He only is my rock and my ſalvation, &c.] See the note on ℣. 2. He is my defence; theſe epithets of God are repeated, to ſtrengthen his faith and hope in him, and to encourage a patient waiting upon him. I ſhall not be moved; neither greatly, nor at all; his faith gets freſh ſtrength and vigour, the more he conſiders God as his rock, ſalvation, defence and refuge; ſee the note on ℣. 2.

℣. 7. In God is my ſalvation, &c.] Or upon God[h]; he that is God over all has took it upon him to ſave me; he is the author of ſalvation to me; and it is in him ſafe and ſecure, and I ſhall be ſaved in him with an everlaſting ſalvation. And my glory; the author of all his temporal glory, honour and dignity; and of all his ſpiritual glory, which lay in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt put upon him, and in the grace of God wrought in him; and of the eternal glory he was waiting for; and beſides, God was the object of his glorying, of whom he boaſted, and in whom he gloried; ſee Pſal. iii. 3. The rock of my ſtrength, and my refuge is in God; not only his ſtrength, as well as his righteouſneſs and refuge; but the firmneſs and ſecurity of his ſtrength were in God, who is the rock of ages, in whom is everlaſting ſtrength.

℣. 8. Truſt in him at all times; ye people, &c.] Of the houſe of Iſrael, as the Targum; or of God, as Aben Ezra; all that are Iſraelites indeed, and are the Lord's covenant-people; theſe are exhorted and encouraged to truſt in him; not in a creature, nor in any outward thing, in riches, wiſdom, ſtrength, birth, privileges, the law, and the works of it; in their own righteouſneſs, in their hearts, in themſelves or in others; but in the Lord only, both for temporal and ſpiritual bleſſings: the Targum is, in his Word; his eſſential Word, by whom the world was made, and who, in the fulneſs of time, was made fleſh, and dwelt among us, and who is a proper object of truſt; in him ſhould the people of God truſt; in his perſon for acceptance with God, in his righteouſneſs for juſtification, in his blood for pardon, in his grace for ſupply, and in his ſtrength for ſupport, deliverance, and ſalvation, and that at all times: there is no time excepted; there is not a moment in which the Lord is not to be truſted in: he is to be truſted in, in adverſity, as well as in proſperity; in times of affliction, when he is preſent, and will not forſake; in times of temptation, when his grace is ſufficient for them; and in times of darkneſs, when he will ariſe and appear unto them. Pour out your heart before him; as Hannah did, 1 Sam. i. 15. and as water is poured out, Lam. ii. 19. it means the deſires of the heart, the complaints of the ſoul, the whole of their caſe which they ſhould ſpread before the Lord, and make known unto him; ſee Pſal. cii. title, and cxlii. 2. the phraſe denotes the abundance of the heart, and of its requeſts, and the freedom with which they ſhould be made to the Lord; for thro' the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt, a believer may come to the throne of grace with boldneſs and liberty, and there freely tell the Lord all his mind, and the whole that is in his heart. God is a refuge for us. Selah. to whom the ſaints may have recourſe in all their times of trouble, and where they find ſafety and plenty, Iſa. xxxiii. 16.

℣. 9. Surely men of low degree are vanity, &c.] Or ſons of Adam[i]; of the earthly man; of fallen Adam; one of his immediate ſons was called Hebel, vanity; and it is true of all his ſons; but here it deſigns only one ſort of them; ſuch as are poor and low in the world; mean men, as the phraſe is rendered in Iſa. ii. 9. ſee the note on Pſal. xlix. 2. theſe are ſubject to ſinful vanity; their thoughts are vain, their affections vain, their minds vain, their converſation vain, ſinful, fooliſh, fallacious, and inconſtant. The wicked poor are, generally ſpeaking, of all perſons, the moſt wicked; and therefore, though they are the multitude, they are not to be truſted in. The Arabic verſion is, they are as a ſhadow, fleeting and unſtable, no ſolidity in them; the Syriac verſion, as a vapour, that ſoon paſſeth away, like the breath of the mouth, and ſo not to be accounted of. And men of high degree are a lie; or ſons of men; of איש the great man[k], as it is rendered in Iſa. ii. 9. noblemen, men of high birth, fortune, rank, and quality; theſe are a lie, fallacious and deceitful: they talk of their blood, as if it was different from the reſt of mankind; but trace them up to their original Adam, and it is a lie. All men are made of one blood, Acts xvii. 26. their riches promiſe them peace and pleaſure, and long life, but do not give thoſe things, Luke xii. 16—20. their honour is fickle and inconſtant; they are ſet in high places, and thoſe are ſlippery ones; they are brought to deſolation in a moment, and and if they continue in them till death, their glory does not deſcend after them, Pſal. xlix. 17. and lxxiii. 18. they make promiſes of great things to thoſe who apply to them, but rarely perform, and are by no means to be confided in. This diſtinction of high and low degree is obſerved in Jam. iii. 9, 10. To be laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter than vanity; take a pair of balances, and put men both of high and low degree together in one ſcale, and vanity in the other, vanity will weigh heavieſt; the ſcale in which men are will go up, as the word [l] here uſed ſignifies: they are in the balances to aſcend; or being put in the balances, they will aſcend, and the ſcale in which vanity is will go down; for take them altogether, they are lighter than that: the word lighter is not in the text, but is rightly ſupplied, as it is by Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech. This laſt clauſe, according to the accents, may be beſt rendered thus; being put in the balance, they muſt aſcend; they are lighter than vanity together. The Targum is, "if "they ſhould take the ſons of men in a balance, "and weigh their fates, they themſelves would be "lighter than nothing, as one;" or than vanity together.

[h] על אלהים ſuper Deo, Montanus, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſuper Deum, Vatablus, Cocceius. [i] בני אדם filii Adam, Muſculus, Michaelis; nati plebeio homine, Junius & Tremellius; plebeii, Gejerus; ſons of baſe men, Ainſworth. [k] בני איש nati præſtante viro, Junius & Tremellius; ſons of noble men, Ainſworth. Vid. Schindler. col. 214.

℣. 10. Truſt not in oppreſſion, &c.] Either in the power of oppreſſing others; ſee Iſa. xxx. 12. or in riches gotten by oppreſſion, which being put into a man's hand by his friend, he keeps, and will not return them; ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret it of mammon unlawfully obtained; mammon of unrighteouſneſs, or unrighteous mammon; ſee Jer. xvii. 11. And become not vain in robbery; in riches gotten by open rapine and theft; and men become vain herein when they boaſt of ſuch riches, place their confidence in them, and think to make atonement for their ſins by burnt-ſacrifices purchaſed with them, Iſa. lxi. 8. If riches increaſe; in a lawful way, in ſuch manner as the fruits of the earth do, as the word [m] uſed ſignifies: if they increaſe in great abundance from a little, as from one grain of corn many proceed; and inſenſibly, as the ſeed ſown grows up, a man knows not how, through diligence, and the bleſſing of God from heaven. Set not your heart upon them; your affections on them; they are enſnaring, they are apt to take the heart from God, to draw off the affections from Chriſt, and things above, to choak the word, and lead into many temptations and hurtful luſts; let not your hearts be elated, or lifted up with them; be not high minded, or filled with pride and vanity on account of them; nor put any truſt in them, for they are uncertain things. Jarchi interprets it of the increaſe of the riches of others; ſee Pſal. xlix. 16, 17.

℣. 11. God hath ſpoken once, &c.] One word of his is more to be confided in, and depended on, than all the men and things in the world. The meaning is not that God hath only ſpoke once; he has ſpoke often; he ſpoke all things out of nothing in creation; he ſpoke all the words of the law at mount Sinai; he ſpoke by the prophets under the Old Teſtament-diſpenſation, and by his Son in the laſt days, and ſtill by the miniſters of the goſpel: but the ſenſe is, that what God has once ſpoken ſtands; it is irreverſible and immutable; it is firm, ſure, and unalterable; he does not repent, he cannot lie, nor will he alter the thing that is gone out of his lips; and therefore his word is to be truſted to, when men of high degree are a lie. Twice have I heard this; that is, many times, as Kimchi explains it: the Targum refers this, and the preceding clauſe, to the delivery of the law: "one law God "ſpake, and twice we heard it from the mouth of "Moſes the great ſcribe;" but the meaning is, that the pſalmiſt had heard of two things, and was well aſſured of the truth of them, and which were the foundation of his truſt and confidence; one is mentioned in this verſe, and the other in the next; the firſt is, That power belongeth unto God; great power, even almighty power, as appears from the creation of all things out of nothing, the preſervation of them in their beings, the government of the world, the redemption of his people by Chriſt, the work of grace upon their hearts by his Spirit, the perſeverance of the ſaints, their deliverance from their enemies, and the deſtruction of them. The ancient Cabaliſts [n] among the Jews have endeavoured, from this paſſage, to eſtabliſh a Trinity in unity, they ſpeak of "three ſuperior Sephirot, or "numbers; and of them it is ſaid, God hath ſpoken "once, twice have I heard this; once and twice, lo, "the three ſuperior numbers, of whom it is ſaid, "one, one, one, three ones; and this is the mean-"ing of God hath ſpoken once, twice have I heard "this; this in it makes them one."

℣. 12. Alſo unto thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy, &c.] This is the other thing the pſalmiſt had heard, and was aſſured of, and which encouraged his hope and truſt in the Lord; that mercy belonged to him, Pſal. cxxx. 7. as appears, not only from the common bounties of his providence, daily beſtowed upon his creatures; but from the ſpecial gift of his Son, and of all ſpiritual mercies and bleſſings in him; from the regeneration of the Lord's people, the pardon of their ſins, and their eternal ſalvation. For thou rendereſt to every man according to his work; and which is a reaſon proving that both power and mercy belong to God; power in puniſhing the wicked according to their deſerts, and mercy in rewarding the ſaints, not in a way of merit, or of debt, but of grace. Some interpret the words, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi obſerve, though thou rendereſt, &c. that is, God is gracious and merciful, though he is alſo juſt and righteous in rendering to every man as his work is, whether it be good or evil.

PSALM LXIII.

A pſalm of David, when he was in the wilderneſs of Judah.

THIS pſalm was compoſed by David, either when he was perſecuted by Saul, and obliged to hide himſelf in deſart places, as in the foreſt of Hareth, the wilderneſſes of Ziph, Maon and Engedi, 1 Sam. xxii. 5. and xxiii. 14, 24, 25. and xxiv. 1. all which were in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 55, 62. or when his ſon Abſalom rebelled againſt him, which obliged him to flee from Jeruſalem, and go the way of the wilderneſs, where Ziba and Barzillai ſent him food, left his young men

[l] לעלות aſcendant, Pagninus, Cocceius; ſo Muſculus, Junius & Tremellius, &c. Montanus; effloreſcunt, Cocceius; germinant, fructificant, Amama.

[m] נוב cum pullulaverit,

[n] Tikkune Zohar, Correct. 38. fol. 82. 1.

men that were with him ſhould faint there, 2 Sam. xv. 23. and xvi. 2. and xvii. 29. The Septuagint verſion, and thoſe that follow that, call it the wilderneſs of Idumea, or Edom, as the Arabic verſion; and ſo the Chaldee paraphraſe, "in the wilderneſs "which was on the border of the tribe of Judah;" as Edom was, Joſh. xv. 21. ſo the Meſſiah, David's ſon, was in a wilderneſs, where he was tempted by the devil, and where he was hungry and thirſty in a literal ſenſe, as David was here in a ſpiritual ſenſe, as the pſalm ſhews, Matt. iv. 1, 2. and the church of God, whom David ſometimes perſonates, is ſaid to be in a wilderneſs, where ſhe is fed for a time, and times, and half a time, even during the whole reign of the antichriſtian beaſt, Rev. xii. 14. and indeed all the ſaints are, at one time or another, in a deſart condition, and whilſt they are here, are in the wilderneſs of the people, Hoſ. ii. 14. Ezek. xx. 35.

℣. 1. O God, thou art my God, &c.] Not by nature only, or by birth, nor merely as an Iſraelite and ſon of Abraham; but by grace through Chriſt, and in virtue of an everlaſting covenant, the bleſſings and promiſes of which were applied unto him; and he, by faith, could now claim his intereſt in them, and in his God as his covenant-God; who is a God at hand and afar off, was his God in the wilderneſs of Judea, as in his palace at Jeruſalem. The Targum is, "thou art my ſtrength." Early will I ſeek thee; or I will morning thee [o]; I will ſeek thee as ſoon as the morning appears; and ſo the Targum, "I will ariſe in the morning before "thee;" it has reſpect to prayer in the morning, and to ſeeking God betimes, and in the firſt place; ſee Pſal. v. 3. and lv. 17. or diligently [p]; as a merchant ſeeks for goodly pearls, or other commodities ſuitable for him; ſo Aben Ezra ſuggeſts, as if the word was to be derived, not from שחר the morning, but from סחר merchandize; and thoſe who ſeek the Lord both early and diligently ſhall find him, and not loſe their labour, Prov. ii. 4, 5. and viii. 17. Heb. xi. 6. My ſoul thirſteth for thee; after his word, worſhip, and ordinances; after greater knowledge of him, communion with him, and more grace from him; particularly after pardoning grace and juſtifying righteouſneſs; ſee Pſal. xlii. 1, 2. Matt. v. 6. My fleſh longeth for thee; which is expreſſive of the ſame thing in different words; and denotes, that he moſt earneſtly deſired, with his whole ſelf, his heart, ſoul and ſtrength, that he might enjoy the preſence of God. In a dry and thirſty land, where no water is; ſuch was the wilderneſs of Judea, where he now was, and where he was deſtitute of the means of grace, of the ordinances of God's houſe, and wanted comfort and refreſhment for his ſoul, which he thirſted and longed after, as a thirſty man after water in a deſart place.

℣. 2. To ſee thy power and thy glory, &c.] Either the ark, as the Jewiſh writers generally interpret it; the ſymbol of God's preſence and glory, and which is called his ſtrength and his glory; ſee Pſal. lxxviii. 61. and cxxxii. 8. or rather, the Lord Chriſt, who is the power of God, as well as the wiſdom of God; by whom he made the world, and upholds it; by whom he has redeemed his people, and keeps and preſerves them; and whoſe power is ſeen in the efficacy of the word and ordinances: and who is alſo the glory of God; he is the brightneſs of his Father's glory; his glory is the glory as of the only begotten of the Father; he has the ſame glorious nature, perfections, names, homage and worſhip; and the glory of all the divine attributes is diſplayed in the work of ſalvation and redemption he has wrought out; and this glory is to be ſeen, thro' the glaſs of the word and ordinances, in the houſe of God. Hence it follows; So as I have ſeen thee in the ſanctuary; where he comes and bleſſes his people, and manifeſts himſelf unto them, as he does not unto the world; where his goings are ſeen, and his footſteps traced, Pſal. lxviii. 24. The pſalmiſt calls to mind former experiences in the ſanctuary; and theſe ſtimulate him to an eager deſire of freſh taſtes of the grace of God, and clearer views of his power and glory. Or, as in a dry and thirſty land, my ſoul longed and thirſted for thee, ſo have I deſired to ſee thee in the ſanctuary; or ſo I ſee thee there as if in the ſanctuary.

℣. 3. Becauſe thy loving-kindneſs is better than life, &c.] For life without the love of God is nothing elſe than death: a man that has no ſhare in the love of God, is dead while he lives; all the enjoyments of life, health, riches, honour, friends, &c. are nothing without the love of God; the meaneſt temporal bleſſings with it, are preferable to the greateſt without it, Prov. xv. 17. it laſts longer than life, and therefore muſt be better than that; death cannot ſeparate from it; it continues to all eternity. And that the ſaints prefer it to this natural life, appears by their readineſs to lay it down for the ſake of Chriſt and his goſpel, in which the loving-kindneſs of God is ſo richly manifeſted unto them; to which may be added, that it is the love of God which gives to his people ſpiritual life, and which iſſues in eternal life, and therefore muſt be better than a temporal one. The Targum is, "for better is thy kindneſs, which thou "wilt do for the righteous in the world to come, "than the life which thou giveſt the wicked in this "world." My lips ſhall praiſe thee; that is, for thy loving-kindneſs, and becauſe it is better than life, and any enjoyment of it.

℣. 4. Thus will I bleſs thee while I live, &c.] With his whole heart and ſoul, as he had ſought after him, and as under a ſenſe of his loving-kindneſs; and as he now praiſed him with his lips, ſo he determined to do as long as he had life and being; by proclaiming his bleſſedneſs, by aſcribing bleſſing and honour to him, and by giving him the glory of all mercies temporal and ſpiritual. I will lift up my hands in thy name; not againſt his enemies, againſt thoſe that fought againſt him, as Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it, but unto God in heaven; and that not as a geſture uſed in ſwearing, but either in bleſſing, as Aben Ezra obſerves; ſo the high-prieſt lift up his hands when he bleſſed the people; or in prayer, or in both, ſo Jarchi's note is, to pray and to praiſe; ſee the note on Pſal. xxviii. 2. The Targum is, "in the name of "thy Word; I will ſpread out my hands in prayer "for the world to come;" that is, in the name of the Meſſiah, the eſſential Word, in whoſe name prayer is to be made, and whereby it becomes prevalent and ſucceſsful; ſee John xiv. 13, 14. and xvi. 23, 24, 26. This is a prayer-geſture; ſee the note on Pſal. xxviii. 2.

℣. 5. My ſoul ſhall be ſatisfied as with marrow and fatneſs, &c.] When he ſhould return to the houſe of the Lord, and partake of the proviſions of it, called the fatneſs of his houſe, Pſal. xxxvi. 8. ſee the note there. The phraſe denotes the abundance of ſpiritual refreſhment and delight in the word word and ordinances, and the great ſatisfaction had in them; and may have ſome regard to benefits ariſing from prayer, as well as other ordinances. Fat was not to be eaten under the legal diſpenſation, and therefore not to be literally taken; but in the typical and ſpiritual ſenſe which David underſtood, and therefore reſpects that, or otherwiſe he would ſpeak contrary to the law of God: he refers to thoſe ſpiritual good things which they typified, and give ſpiritual pleaſure and ſatisfaction. And my mouth ſhall praiſe thee with joyful lips; ſuch a full meal, ſuch a rich entertainment, calls for abundant thankfulneſs; which is here ſignified by the mouth praiſing the Lord, and doing this with lips of ſhouting, expreſſions of joy, ſongs of praiſe, jubilee-ſongs. The alluſion is to the uſe of muſic and ſinging at feſtivals; ſee Iſa. v. 12.

[o] אשחרך ſub auroram quæro te, Piſcator.

[p] Studioſiſſimè, Gejerus, Michaelis.

℣. 6. When I remember thee upon my bed, &c.] Or beds [q]; ſeeing he lay in many, as Kimchi obſerves, being obliged to flee from place to place. The ſenſe is, that when he was on his bed in the night-ſeaſon, when alone, and free from worldly cares and fatigues, and called to mind the love of God to him, the paſt experience of his kindneſs, his promiſes to him, and the fulfilment of them; that he ſhould then be delightfully entertained, abundantly ſatisfied, and his mouth be filled with ſongs of praiſe. And meditate on thee in the night-watches; which the Jewiſh writers on the text ſay, were three, as they were with the Jews, but with the Romans four; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 25. and the night in the times of Homer [r] was divided into three parts: the night-ſeaſon is a very proper one for meditation, on the perfections, providences, promiſes, word and works of God; and which is very delightful and profitable, when attended with the preſence, Spirit, and grace of God. The Targum is, "in the watches I will meditate on thy "word."

℣. 7. Becauſe thou haſt been my help, &c.] Or, that thou haſt been my help [s]; and ſo the words may be conſidered as the ſubject of his meditation in the night-watches, at leaſt as a part of it; and as what gave him a great deal of pleaſure to reflect upon, how the Lord had been in times paſt a preſent help to him in time of trouble. Therefore in the ſhadow of thy wings will I rejoice; meaning under the protecting power of God, where he knew he was ſafe, and therefore had reaſon to rejoice. The alluſion is to the chirping of chickens under the wing of the hen; ſee Pſal. lvii. 1. and lxi. 4. The Targum is, "in the ſhadow of thy ſhekinah will I re-"joice;" referring it may be to the ſhekinah, or preſence of God between the cherubim, whoſe wings overſhadowed the mercy-ſeat.

℣. 8. My ſoul followeth hard after thee, &c.] In a way of duty, and in the uſe of means; as prayer, meditation, &c. tho' at a diſtance from the houſe of God, and worſhip of it; that he might not loſe ſight of him; that he might know more of him, and have more communion with him; being drawn after him with the cords of love, and ſtrongly affected to him. Or, my ſoul cleaveth after thee, or to thee [t]; not to the world, and the things of it; not to that which is evil, but to that which is good, even the ſummum bonum; not to the creature, but to the Lord; which is expreſſive of union to him, even ſuch an one as is between man and wife, who cleave to each other, and are one fleſh, Gen. ii. 24. and as is between head and members, vine and branches; ſee 1 Cor. vi. 17. and of communion in the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty. To cleave to the Lord, is to hold to him the head; to exerciſe the graces of faith, hope and love upon him; and to follow him in his ways and worſhip; to abide by his truths; to attend his ordinances; to keep cloſe to his people, and to adhere firmly to his cauſe and intereſt; ſee Acts xi. 23. The Targum is, "my ſoul cleaveth after thy "law." Thy right hand upholdeth me; that he fell not through the ſnares laid for him, and the ſtumbling-blocks thrown in his way; that he ſtood and bore up under all his afflictions, temptations and difficulties; that he was enabled to follow hard after the Lord, and cleave unto him; this ſupported, ſupplied and protected him, even the mighty power and grace of God. In what a happy, comfortable, and ſafe condition muſt the pſalmiſt be! his ſoul following hard after the Lord; and the Lord holding and ſuſtaining him with his right hand! and how vain muſt be the attempts of his enemies againſt him! whoſe deſtruction is next predicted.

℣. 9. But thoſe that ſeek my ſoul to deſtroy it, &c.] Meaning his life; for as for his ſoul, that was immaterial and immortal, and could never be deſtroyed by man: but as for his natural life, his enemies laid ſnares for that, and ſought to take it away, and nothing leſs would ſatisfy them. Shall go into the lower parts of the earth; not the grave, whither the righteous go as well as the wicked; beſides, by their being the portion of foxes, as follows, it ſeems that they ſhould have no burial; but hell is meant, the bottomleſs pit. Some take it to be a prayer, as Kimchi and Ben Melech; may they go, or let them go, &c. ſee Pſal. lv. 15. The alluſion may be thought to be to the death of Korah and his company.

℣. 10. They ſhall fall by the ſword, &c.] As Saul, his ſons, and mighty men did, 1 Sam. xxxi. 4, 5, 6. or, they ſhall make him pour out [u]; that is, his blood, by the hands or means of the ſword; meaning either ſome principal enemy, as Saul in particular, or every one of his enemies; who ſhould be thruſt with the ſword, their blood let out, and they ſlain: ſo Antichriſt, the enemy of David's ſon, will be put to death in this manner, Rev. xiii. 10. They ſhall be a portion for foxes; falling in deſolate places where foxes run, and ſo become the food of them, and have no other burial. The foxes hunt after dead carcaſes, and will find them out where they are, in holes and ditches; as appears from the caſe of Ariſtomenes, related by Pauſanias [w]: ſo the followers of Antichriſt, their fleſh will be eaten by the fowls of heaven, Rev. xix. 17, 18.

℣. 11. But the king ſhall rejoice in God, &c.] Not Saul, as R. Obadiah; as if David wiſhed him well, and that he might have reaſon to rejoice in God, tho' he ſought his hurt; which ſenſe is rejected by Aben Ezra: but either David, who ſpeaks of himſelf as king, being anointed by Samuel, and who, upon the death of Saul, was ſo in fact; and who rejoiced, not merely at the deſtruction of his enemies, for he lamented the death of Saul, 2 Sam. i. 17. but in God, in his grace and goodneſs to him, and in his power and juſtice ſhewn in the vengeance taken on them. Or rather, the King Meſſiah, who rejoiced rejoiced in God becauſe of the good of his people, their converſion and ſalvation, and their deliverance from their enemies, Pſal. xxi. 1. Luke x. 21. Every one that ſweareth by him ſhall glory; not by David, tho' ſuch a form of ſwearing was uſed; ſee 2 Sam. xv. 21, or, to him; and ſo deſcribes his faithful ſubjects ſwearing allegiance to him: but rather by the Lord, in whom the king ſhould rejoice; and deſigns the worſhippers of him; ſwearing by him, being ſometimes put for the whole worſhip and ſervice of God, Deut. vi. 13. The heathens uſed to ſwear by their deities, and their chief was called Jupiter Horcius, becauſe he preſided over oaths [x]: Or elſe that the King Chriſt ſhould rejoice in God; and intends ſuch as believe in him and confeſs him; ſee Iſa. xlv. 23. compared with Rom. xiv. 11. And every ſuch an one will glory, not in themſelves, nor in any thing of theirs, but in Chriſt, in his grace and righteouſneſs, and in what he is unto them. But the mouth of them that ſpeak lies ſhall be ſtopped; ſuch as Saul's courtiers, who invented and ſpread lies of David; but now upon the death of Saul, and David's advancement to the throne, would be ſilent; their mouths being ſtopped either by death, or thro' fear: and ſo all the followers of Antichriſt, that make and believe a lie, will have their mouths ſtopped, when caſt into the lake of fire, Rev. xxi. 8.

[q] יצועי ſtratis meis, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator, Cocceius; ſo Junius & Tremellius, Ainſworth. [r] Iliad. 10. v. 252, 253. [s] כי quod, Muſculus, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth. [t] דבקה אחריך adhæſit poſt te, Montanus, Gejerus; tibi adhæſit, Tigurine verſion; ſo Piſcator, Michaelis. [u] ינירהו fundere facient eum, Montanus; ſo Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Schmidt. [w] Meſſenica ſive l. 4. p. 251.

PSALM LXIV.

To the chief muſician, A pſalm of David.

THIS pſalm is applied by R. Obadiah, to Haman and Mordecai. The enemy is Haman, the perfect man ſhot at is Mordecai; about whom Haman communed with his friends to lay ſnares for him, and ſearched diligently for occaſions againſt him and his people, which iſſued in his own deſtruction. The ancient Midraſh [y] of the Jews, applies it to Daniel, when caſt into the den of lions; and Jarchi ſuppoſes that David, by a ſpirit of prophecy, foreſaw it, and prayed for him who was of his ſeed; and that every thing in the pſalm beautifully falls in with that account: Daniel is the perfect man aimed at; the enemy are the princes of Darius's court, who conſulted againſt him, communed of laying ſnares for him, and gained their point, which proved their own ruin. But the pſalm literally belongs to David, by whom it was compoſed. The Arabic verſion calls it a pſalm of David, when Saul perſecuted him; and the Syriac verſion refers it to the time when Gad ſaid to him, Abide not in the hold, 1 Sam. xxii. 5. He is the perfect man, who was upright and innocent as to what he was charged with in reſpect to Saul; who is the enemy, from the fear of whom he deſires his life might be preſerved; and who with his courtiers took counſel againſt him, and laid deep ſchemes to deſtroy him, but at laſt were deſtroyed themſelves. Moreover, the pſalm may very well be applied to the Meſſiah, the ſon of David, and who was his antitype, and eſpecially in his ſufferings: He is the perfect man in the higheſt ſenſe; the Jews were the enemies that took counſel, and ſearched for occaſions againſt him, and accompliſhed their deſigns in a good meaſure; for which wrath came upon them to the uttermoſt. The pſalmiſt alſo may be very well thought to perſonate the church and people of God; who in all ages have had their enemies and their fears; againſt whom wicked men have deviſed miſchief, and levelled their arrows of perſecution; tho' no weapon formed againſt them ſhall proſper.

℣. 1. Hear my voice, O God, in my prayer, &c.] The prayer of the pſalmiſt was vocal, and expreſſed in a mournful manner, with groans and cries, as the word [z] uſed ſignifies, and with great ardour and fervency; his condition, by reaſon of his enemies, being very diſtreſſing, and therefore he is very eager and earneſt that he might be heard. Preſerve my life from fear of the enemy; David had his enemies, Saul and his courtiers, and was afraid of them; Chriſt had his enemies, the wicked Jews, who ſought his life before the time, and therefore he walked no more in Jury till near the time; and whoſe human nature was ſometimes poſſeſſed of the fears of death, though they were ſinleſs ones: the church and people of God have their enemies; as the men of the world, who revile, reproach and perſecute them; Satan their adverſary, who goes about ſeeking to devour them; and their own corruptions and luſts, which war againſt their ſouls; and death, the laſt enemy, which is ſo to human nature, tho' by the grace of Chriſt friendly to the ſaints. And the people of God have their fears of theſe enemies; they are afraid of men, their revilings and perſecutions, tho' they have no reaſon, ſince God is on their ſide; and of Satan, whoſe fiery darts and buffetings are very diſtreſſing, tho' if reſiſted he will flee; and of their own corruptions, leſt they ſhould one day periſh by them; or at leaſt, leſt they ſhould break out, to the wounding of their ſouls, and the diſhonour of God: and ſome of them, thro' fear of death, are all their lifetime ſubject to bondage; which fears, tho' they are not the ſaints excellencies, but their infirmities, yet are conſiſtent with the grace of God; and under the power and influence of theſe fears, they apprehend ſometimes their life to be in danger; and therefore pray to the God of their life, who has given them it, and is the preſerver of it, that he would preſerve their natural life, as he does; as alſo their ſpiritual life, which is preſerved by him; is bound up in the bundle of life with the Lord their God, and is hid with Chriſt in God.

℣. 2. Hide me from the ſecret counſel of the wicked, &c.] The word uſed denotes both the place where wicked men meet together for conſultation; ſee Gen. xlix. 6. Pſal. i. 1. and the counſel itſelf they there take; from the bad effects of which the pſalmiſt deſired to be hid and preſerved. So Saul and his courtiers ſecretly took counſel againſt David, and the Jews againſt Chriſt, and that very privily and ſecretly; ſee Matt. xxvi. 3. and xxvii. 1. From the inſurrection of the workers of iniquity; their noiſe, rage and tumult; ſee Pſal. ii. 1, 2. The former phraſe denotes their ſecret machinations and deſigns, and this their open violence; and the perſons that entred into ſuch meaſures, are no no other than evil-doers and workers of iniquity; though they might be under a profeſſion of religion, as David's enemies, and the Jews who were Chriſt's enemies were, Matt. vii. 22, 23. and who are further deſcribed in the next verſes.

[x] Euripidis Medea, v. 170. Vid. Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 5. c. 10.
[y] Apud Jarchium & Yalkut Simeoni in loc.
[z] בשיחי in querimonia mea, Tigurine verſion; in oratione mea gemebunda, Gejerus; ſo Michaelis.

℣. 3. Who whet their tongue like a ſword, &c.] Uſe cutting, wounding, killing and devouring words; on which they ſet an edge, and make them keener and keener, to hurt and ruin the characters and reputations of good men, and grieve and diſtreſs their minds. And bend their bows to ſhoot their arrows, even bitter words; ſuch are the falſe doctrines of heretical men, which are roots of bitterneſs, that defile ſome and trouble others; ſuch are the oaths and curſes of profane ſinners, whoſe mouths are full of curſing and bitterneſs; and ſuch are the blaſphemies of Antichriſt againſt God, againſt his tabernacle, and againſt them that dwell therein; and ſuch are the hard ſpeeches ſpoken by ungodly ſinners againſt Chriſt and his people; theſe are like arrows ſhot from a bow, and full of deadly poiſon. The Targum is, "they ſtretch out "their bows, they anoint their arrows with deadly and bitter poiſon." There ſeems to be an alluſion to fixing letters by arrows, and ſo ſhooting or directing them where it was deſired they ſhould fall and be taken up; ſo Timoxenus and Artobazus ſent letters to one another in this way, at the ſiege of Potidæa[a]: and after the ſame manner the Jews ſay[b], Shebna and Joab ſent letters to Sennacherib, acquainting him, that all Iſrael were willing to make peace with him; but Hezekiah and Iſaiah would not ſuffer them.

℣. 4. That they may ſhoot in ſecret at the perfect, &c.] Meaning himſelf, who tho' not without ſin, and far from perfection in himſelf, in the ſight of God and with reſpect to his righteous law, which was exceeding broad; and therefore he ſaw an end of all perfection, and deſired that God would not enter into judgment with him; but yet, in the caſe of Saul, he was quite clear and innocent, and without fault. Likewiſe the Meſſiah, of whom David was a type, may be meant; who has all the perfections of the divine and human nature in him, and is without ſin, holy, harmleſs, pure and undefiled: and it may be applied to the church and people of God, who, tho' they are not perfect in themſelves, far from it, ſin being in them, and their graces weak; unleſs it be in a comparative ſenſe; yet they are perfect in Chriſt Jeſus, their ſouls being clothed with his righteouſneſs, and ſo are the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect. And this character may alſo reſpect the truth and ſincerity of grace in them, and the uprightneſs of their hearts and converſation; and ſuch as theſe, wicked men level their arrows at, and direct their ſpite and venom againſt, and that in the moſt private and ſecret manner. Suddenly do they ſhoot at him; as unſeen by him, ſo unawares to him. And fear not; neither God nor judgment to come. Though ſome underſtand this of the perfect, who, though ſhot at in this manner, are intrepid and courageous, and have no fear of their enemies; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt, which deſcribes perſons that neither fear God, nor regard man.

℣. 5. They encourage themſelves in an evil matter, &c.] Or ſtrengthen him[c]; that is, Saul, by making uſe of arguments and reaſonings, to induce him to go on in his wicked perſecution of David; or, they ſtrengthened and hardened themſelves in their wickedneſs, as Saul's courtiers, and the enemies of Chriſt did, and as all wicked men do, when they obſerve the ſentence againſt them is not ſpeedily executed, Eccl. viii. 11. They commune of laying ſnares privily; that is, they converſed together, and conſulted how to lay ſnares for the perfect man in the moſt private manner, that they might entrap him and deſtroy him. They ſay; Who ſhall ſee them? either the ſnares laid, or the perſons that laid them? None; no not even God himſelf; ſee Pſal. x. 11, 14.

℣. 6. They ſearch out iniquities, &c.] The Targum adds, "to deſtroy the juſt." Either occaſions againſt them, by charging them with ſin and ſuborning falſe witneſſes againſt them, as did the enemies both of David and Chriſt; they ſought for proper time and opportunity of committing the iniquities they were bent upon, and even ſearched for new ſins, being inventers of evil things, Rom. i. 30. They accompliſh a diligent ſearch; diligently ſearched out the perfect man, and found him; and alſo falſe witneſſes againſt him, and carried their point; which was eſpecially true with reſpect to Chriſt. Both the inward thought of every one of them, and the heart is deep; being full of cunning, craftineſs and wickedneſs, ſo as not to be ſearched out and fully known; ſee Pſal. v. 9. Jer. xvii. 9.

℣. 7. But God ſhall ſhoot at them with an arrow, &c.] With one or other of his four judgments; famine, peſtilence, ſword, and wild beaſts, Ezek. xiv. 24. which he brings upon wicked men; and may be compared to arrows, as they are, Ezek. v. 16, 17. Pſal. xci. 5, 6. Deut. xxxii. 41, 42. becauſe they move ſwiftly. The judgment of wicked men lingereth not, tho' it may ſeem to do ſo; and becauſe they often come ſuddenly and at an unawares, when men are crying, Peace, peace; and becauſe they are ſharp and piercing, penetrate deep, and ſtick faſt, and wound and kill; they are not arrows of deliverance, unleſs to the Lord's people, who, by his judgments on the wicked, are delivered from them; but deſtroying ones, 2 Kings xiii. 17. Pſal. cxliv. 6. when God draws the bow and ſhoots, execution is done. This is ſaid in oppoſition to what wicked men do, ℣. 3, 4. and in juſt retaliation; they ſhoot at the perfect, and God ſhoots at them. Suddenly ſhall they be wounded; with the wound of an enemy, with the chaſtiſement of a cruel one, with a deadly wound that ſhall never be healed; not with the arrow of God's word, but with the ſtroke of his hand; which comes ſuddenly, falls heavy, and makes the wound incurable.

℣. 8. So ſhall they make their own tongue to fall upon themſelves, &c.] The evil things they have wiſhed for, threatened unto and imprecated on others, ſhall come upon themſelves; the curſes they have curſed others with, ſhall come upon themſelves; the pit they have dug for others, they fall into. So Haman, to whom ſome apply the pſalm, was hanged on the gallows he made for Mordecai; and the accuſers of Daniel, to whom others apply it, were caſt into the ſame den of lions they procured for him; and Babylon, who has been drunk with the blood of the ſaints, ſhall have blood given her to drink. All that ſee them ſhall flee away; not being able to help them, nor to bear the horrible ſight, and fearing the ſame judgments ſhould fall on themſelves; ſee Num. xvi. 34. Rev. xviii. 10, 15. Or, they ſhall move themſelves[d]; ſhake their heads in a way of deriſion, as Jarchi interprets it; or or ſkip for joy, as the word is rendered in Jer. xlviii. 27. and then it muſt be underſtood of the righteous; who ſeeing the vengeance on the wicked, rejoice, as in Pſal. lii. 6. and lviii. 10. tho' as they are afterwards particularly mentioned, others ſeem to be deſigned. The word is uſed for lamenting and bemoaning one's ſelf, in Jer. xxxi. 18. and ſo may be applied to the friends of the wicked, lamenting and bemoaning their ruin, and their being bereaved of them, Rev. xviii. 9, 11.

[a] Herodot. Urania, ſive l. 8. c. 128. [b] Deraſh R. Aba in Kimchi in Pſal. xi. 2. [c] יחזקו למו firmant illi, Muis. [d] ינועדו amovebunt ſe, Montanus; commovebuntur, Vatablus.

℣. 9. And all men ſhall fear, &c.] Either God himſelf, or his judgments; they ſhall be affrighted at them, learn righteouſneſs by them, worſhip God, and give glory to him: they ſhall fear him as King of ſaints, his judgments being made manifeſt; not with a ſlaviſh fear, but with reverence and godly fear; ſee Rev. xi. 13. and xv. 4. And ſhall declare the work of God; the puniſhments inflicted on wicked men; his work of juſtice and judgment, which is his work, his ſtrange work; for there is no evil of puniſhment but the Lord has done it, Iſa. xxviii. 21. Amos iii. 6. For they ſhall wiſely conſider of his doings; conſider that it is done by him, and done well and wiſely, after the counſel of his own will; and ſo conſider it as to be admoniſhed, and take warning and caution by it. This is the uſe men in general ſhould make of ſuch diſpenſations of providence; the uſe the righteous in particular make of them follows:

℣. 10. The righteous ſhall be glad in the Lord, &c.] They rejoice at the vengeance executed on the wicked; but then their joy centers in the Lord: it is not at the ruin of the wicked, ſimply conſidered, but becauſe of the glory of God's juſtice diſplayed therein, and of his grace and mercy to them. They rejoice in the Lord, becauſe of what he is unto them, and becauſe of what he has done for them; becauſe of his righteouſneſs they are clothed with, from whence they are denominated righteous ones; and becauſe of the ſalvation he has wrought out for them; and they are the more affected with it, when they ſee the calamities, woes and deſtruction of wicked men; ſee the note on Pſal. xxxii. 11. And ſhall truſt in him; who is known by his judgments he executes on the wicked; and the more he is known, be it in what way it will, the more is he truſted in, Pſal. ix. 10, 16. The Targum paraphraſes it, "and ſhall truſt in his Word;" either in his word of promiſe, or rather in his eſſential Word, Chriſt. And all the upright in heart ſhall glory; not in men, nor in themſelves, nor in any creature, or creature-enjoyments; nor in their wiſdom, ſtrength, riches, nor righteouſneſs; but in Chriſt, in his wiſdom, righteouſneſs and ſtrength; in whom all the ſeed of Iſrael are juſtified and glory; and in what he is to them, and has done for them; of the upright in heart, ſee the note on Pſal. xxxii. 11.

PSALM LXV.

To the chief muſician, A pſalm and ſong of David.

SOME copies of the Septuagint, and Vulgate Latin verſions, read "a ſong of Jeremiah and "Ezekiel, ſung by the people of the captivity, "when they were about to come out;" and ſome copies have Haggai: but though it is poſſible it might be ſung upon that occaſion, it is certain it was not then compoſed, but was written by David, as the genuine title ſhews: as for Jeremiah, he was not carried captive to Babylon, and Ezekiel died before the return of the people from it; nor is there any thing in the pſalm relating to that captivity. The title of it indeed, in the Arabic verſion, is concerning the captivity of the people; which it ſeems to have taken from ſome Greek copy; and Kimchi and Arama interpret it of the captivity of the people of the Jews; but then they mean their preſent captivity, and their deliverance from it. According to the title of it in the Syriac verſion, the occaſion of it was the bringing up of the ark of God to Sion; and Aben Ezra is of opinion that David compoſed the pſalm at that time; or that one of the ſingers compoſed it at the building of the temple, and which he thinks is right, and perhaps is concluded from ℣. 1, 3. and who alſo ſays it was compoſed in a year of drought; but it rather ſeems to have been written in a year of great plenty, as the latter part of it ſhews; and the whole ſeems to reſpect the fruitful, flouriſhing, and happy ſtate of the church in goſpel-times, for which it is a ſong of praiſe.

℣. 1. Praiſe waiteth for thee, O God, in Sion, &c.] Who dwells in Sion, as Jarchi interprets it; and ſo the Targum; whoſe Shekinah, or glorious Majeſty, is in Sion; ſee Pſal. lxxvi. 2. or elſe Sion, which deſigns no other than the church of God, and which is ſo called under the goſpel-diſpenſation, Heb. xii. 22. Rev. xiv. 1. is the place where praiſe waits for God, that being the city of our ſolemnities, as well as the city of the great King; and not only a houſe of prayer but of praiſe, where the ſacrifices, both of prayer and praiſe, are offered to God through Chriſt with acceptance: and praiſe may be ſaid to wait for him here, becauſe it is due to him here, as ſome render it, on account of many bleſſings and privileges of grace here enjoyed, through the word and ordinances; and becauſe the people of God wait upon him here with their tribute of praiſe, which is comely in them to bring, and is agreeable and acceptable to him; and becauſe it remains, abides, and continues here; or, in other words, the ſaints are continually praiſing the Lord here, giving thanks to him always for all things, Pſal. lxxxiv. 4. Eph. v. 20. ſome render the words praiſe is ſilent for thee[c]; becauſe there is no end of it, as Jarchi obſerves; or becauſe of the greatneſs of the works of the Lord, praiſe cannot reach him, as Ben Melech expreſſes it. The greateſt ſhouts, and loudeſt acclamations of praiſe, are but ſilence in compariſon of what ought, if it could be expreſſed, on account of the nature, perfections, and works of God. The Targum is, "before thee praiſe is "reputed as ſilence." In the king of Spain's Bible it is, "the praiſe of angels is reputed before thee "as ſilence;" perhaps it may be beſt rendered, to thee belong, or are due, ſilence and praiſe[f]: there ought to be firſt a ſilent and quiet waiting upon God for mercies wanted, and which he has promiſed to give; and when they are beſtowed, praiſe ſhould be rendered unto him. Guſſetius[g] gives the ſenſe of the words, and renders them, "praiſe, which is "thine

[c] לך דמיה תהלה tibi ſilet laus, Pagninus, Vatablus.
[g] Ebr. Comment. p. 193.

[f] Tibi ſilentium eſt & laus, Piſcator, Gejerus;

" thine image, which bears a likeneſs to thee, ſhall " be paid in Sion." And unto thee ſhall the vow be performed; that is, of praiſe and thankfulneſs for deliverance and ſalvation, made in a time of trouble and diſtreſs; ſee Pſal. lxvi. 13, 14.

℣. 2. O thou that heareſt prayer, &c.] So as to anſwer it ſooner or later, in one way or another, and always in the fitteſt time, and in the beſt way; ſo as to fulfil the requeſts, and ſupply the wants of men, ſo far as may be for their good, and God's glory; which is a proof of the omnipreſence, omniſcience, and all-ſufficiency of God; who can hear the prayers of his people in all places at the ſame time, and knows all their perſons and wants, and what is moſt proper for them, and can and does ſupply all their needs, and cauſes all grace to abound towards them; and it alſo ſhews his wondrous grace and condeſcenſion, to liſten to the cries, and regard the prayers of the poor and deſtitute. Unto thee ſhall all fleſh come; being encouraged by the above character of him. All ſorts of perſons may come to him; men of all nations, of every rank and degree, condition and circumſtance; there is no bar unto, nor bounds about the throne of grace; the way to it lies open through the Mediator; and all ſenſible ſinners ſhall, and do come thither, tho' they are but fleſh, frail and mortal, corrupt and ſinful creatures, and know themſelves to be ſo; and they that come aright come through Chriſt, the new and living way, in his name, and in the faith of him, and of being heard for his ſake, and under the gracious influences of the ſpirit of grace and ſupplication: it may be conſidered as a prophecy of the calling of the Gentiles, and of their calling upon God through Chriſt, and of their coming to God in his houſe, which was to be, and is an houſe of prayer to all people, Iſai. lvi. 7. Zech. viii. 21, 22, 23.

℣. 3. Iniquities prevail againſt me, &c.] Or are mightier than I [h]; this may be underſtood, either of the iniquities of others, his enemies; their words of iniquities [i]; or iniquitous words, as in the Hebrew text; their calumnies, reproaches, falſe charges and accuſations, which prevailed againſt David in Saul's court; or rather his own iniquities, inward luſts, indwelling ſins, as well as open tranſgreſſions, which he conſiders as his enemies, as numerous and powerful, too mighty for him, which warred againſt him, and ſometimes got the aſcendant of him, and threatened him with utter ruin and deſtruction; but amidſt all this he ſpies atonement and pardon through the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt, as follows. As for our tranſgreſſions, thou ſhalt purge them away; not only his own, but others, which Chriſt has done by the ſacrifice of himſelf; and when his blood is applied to the conſcience of a ſenſible ſinner, it purges it from all his ſins, Heb. i. 3. and ix. 14. it may be rendered, thou ſhalt expiate them, or make atonement for them [k]; which Chriſt, our propitiation, has done: this was the work appointed him, which he undertook, came into the world to do, and has performed, Dan. ix. 24. Heb. ii. 17. and ix. 26. or thou ſhalt cover them; with the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; or forgive them for the ſake of them, Pſal. xxxii. 1, 2.

℣. 4. Bleſſed is the man whom thou chooſeſt, &c.] In eternity; both to grace and glory; for ſuch have true faith in Chriſt given them, called the faith of God's elect, and ſhall never periſh: they are effectually called by the grace of God, and are juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and ſhall be glorified; or in time, for there is a choice in time, as the fruit, effect, and evidence of the eternal choice, and is no other than effectual vocation; ſee John xv. 19. 1 Cor. i. 26. and happy are thoſe who are both choſen and called; both election and vocation are to grace and glory, and ſpring from the good-will and pleaſure of God; and the Targum in the king of Spain's Bible is, " bleſſed " is the man in whom thou art well-pleaſed." And cauſeſt to approach unto thee; the ſame Targum ſupplies " unto the fear of thee;" or unto thy fear and worſhip. The perſons whom God has choſen for himſelf are, in their ſtate of nature, at a diſtance from him by reaſon of ſin; and thro' the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt, by which atonement is made, they are brought nigh to him; and in the faith of Chriſt the Mediator, their hearts are engaged to approach unto God, and come with boldneſs to his throne, and aſk grace and mercy of him; and thro' the grace of Chriſt they have nearneſs to him, and communion with him, Eph. ii. 13, 18. and iii. 12. That he may dwell in thy courts; or he ſhall dwell [l]; the man that is choſen of God, and brought nigh by Chriſt; he ſhall not only come into the houſe of God, and tread in his courts, but he ſhall dwell there, ever abide, and never go out. We ſhall be ſatisfied with the goodneſs of thy houſe; even all that are like this man, choſen by the grace of God, redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, brought into the houſe of God, and have a place and a name there, better than that of ſons and daughters of men: by the houſe of God we are to underſtand the church of God; and by the goodneſs of it, the proviſions of grace in it, the word and ordinances, and the bleſſings of grace held forth in them, and eſpecially Chriſt the bread of life, whoſe fleſh is meat indeed, and whoſe blood is drink indeed; of which true believers may eat, and do to full ſatisfaction; and bleſſed are they that have ſuch food, and appetites for it, and are filled with it. The Targum paraphraſes it, " the righteous ſhall ſay, we ſhall " be ſatisfied with the goodneſs of thy houſe." It follows, Even of thy holy temple; which means the ſame as the houſe of God; namely, the church; ſee Eph. ii. 21. Some, as Aben Ezra obſerves, interpret it, thou holy One in thy temple; as if it was an addreſs to God, and a deſcription of him as in his temple.

℣. 5. By terrible things in righteouſneſs wilt thou anſwer us, &c.] Not by afflictive diſpenſations of providence, which, though diſagreeable to fleſh and blood, and are ſometimes terrible to good men, when they apprehend the wrath of God in them, and look upon them as puniſhments for ſin; yet theſe are conſiſtent with the love of God to them, are for their ſpiritual good, and when viewed in this light, they rejoice and glory in them; but as afflictions are not prayed for, nor to be prayed for, there being no direction for it, nor example of it, they cannot be conſidered as anſwers of prayer; but the Lord anſwers his people in this way, by inflicting judgments on their enemies: by ſuch terrible things did he anſwer the Iſraelites at the Red ſea in the wilderneſs, and in the land of Canaan, Deut. x. 17, 21. Pſal. cvi. 21, 22. and lxvi. 5, 6. and in this way will he anſwer his people in the deſtruction of Antichriſt and his followers, Rev. vi. 9. and xvi. 6. and xviii. 8. and xix. 20. Moreover, over, by terrible things may be meant things ſtupendous, marvellous, and even miraculous; and by ſuch things does God ſometimes anſwer his people, in deſtroying their enemies and ſaving them; and which are ſo called, becauſe they inject horror and terror into their enemies, and fill them with fear and reverence of God: and which are done in righteouſneſs; in faithfulneſs to his promiſes made to his people; in the exerciſe of his vindictive juſtice upon their enemies; in goodneſs, grace, and mercy to them, as righteouſneſs ſometimes ſignifies, as in Pſal. li. 14. and not for their righteouſneſs, who do not preſent their ſupplications to him for the ſake of that; but for the righteouſneſs of his Son, for the ſake of which they are heard and anſwered. O God of our ſalvation; not only temporal, but ſpiritual and eternal; which he has reſolved upon, and choſe his people to, and has ſettled the way and manner of, in which it ſhould be brought about; has ſecured it in covenant for them, promiſed it in his word, ſent his Son to obtain it, and his Spirit to give knowledge, and make application of it; and from this character of his, and the concern he has in ſalvation, it may be concluded he will anſwer the prayers of his people for their good. Who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth; of all that dwell upon the continent, to the uttermoſt parts of the habitable world. And of them that are afar off upon the ſea; not only in ſhips upon the ſea, but upon iſlands in the ſea; and ſo the Targum, "and of the iſlands of the ſea, "which are afar off from the dry land;" and Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it in the ſame manner; ſuch as are the iſles in which we live: this ſeems to refer to goſpel-times, in which the Lord is not only the confidence or hope of Iſrael, but of the Gentiles alſo; who are encouraged to hope in the Lord, and put their confidence in him, ſeeing with him there is forgiving mercy, and plenteous redemption; hath appointed Chriſt to be his ſalvation to the ends of the earth; has ſent his goſpel into all the world declaring this; and Chriſt in it encourages all the ends of the earth to look unto him for ſalvation; and multitudes upon the continent, and in different iſles, have been enabled to hope in him.

[h] מני præ me, Muis, Michaelis. [i] דברי עונת verba iniquitatum, Montanus, Vatablus, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth. [k] תכפרם propitiaberis, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus; expiabis, Vatablus, Gejerus, Michaelis. [l] ישכן habitabit, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Muſculus.

℣. 6. Which by his ſtrength ſetteth faſt the mountains, &c.] In the firſt creation and formation of them, when they were ſettled on their baſis ſo firmly that they are rarely removed, and when they are, it is ſomething extraordinary. Some underſtand this of the Lord's preparing the mountains with the rain of his ſtrength, for the bringing forth of herbs and graſs for the ſervice of man and beaſt, and of his adorning them with trees; and the Targum is, "who prepareſt food for the wild goats of the mountains;" others interpret them of kingdoms and communities, comparable to mountains, Jer. li. 25. Zech. iv. 7. Rev. xvii. 9. but theſe are not ſet faſt, they are not firm and ſtable, but in a courſe of time are removed, and give way to others; rather the church of God is meant; ſee Iſa. ii. 2. where the ſame phraſe is uſed as here; and mountains may ſignify particular churches, or indeed particular believers; for all that truſt in the Lord are like to mountains, Pſal. cxxv. 1. and theſe are ſet faſt in the everlaſting love of God, by which their mountain is made to ſtand ſtrong; in eternal election, which is the foundation of God that ſtands ſure; in the covenant of grace, which is more immoveable than hills and mountains; and on Chriſt the rock, againſt whom the gates of hell can never prevail; and who are ſo eſtabliſhed, ſettled, and kept by the power of God, that they cannot be removed by the moſt boiſterous ſtorms and winds of the world's perſecutions, Satan's temptations, or their own ſins and corruptions. Being girded with power; not the mountains, but God himſelf; whoſe power, like himſelf, is infinite, and appears in the works of his hands, of nature, providence and grace: the alluſion is to a mighty man girded for battle; or for the performance of great undertakings.

℣. 7. Which ſtilleth the noiſe of the ſeas, the noiſe of their waves, &c.] By a word ſpeaking; as our Lord did when here on earth, and which was a proof and evidence of his eternal power and Godhead. Theſe figurative expreſſions are interpreted by the next clauſe. And the tumult of the people; of wicked men, who foam and rage againſt the people of God, and are like a troubled ſea that cannot reſt; but God can ſay to theſe proud waters, which threaten to go over their ſouls, Peace, be ſtill; he can ſtop their oppoſition, quell their inſurrections, reſtrain their wrath, and make them peaceable and quiet; wherefore the ſaints have no reaſon to be afraid of them, Pſal. xlvi. 2, 3. and lxxvi. 10. and cxxiv. 1—5.

℣. 8. They alſo that dwell in the uttermoſt parts are afraid at thy tokens, &c.] The tokens of his wrath and diſpleaſure at wicked men, ſeen in the puniſhments inflicted on them, which cauſe them to fear and tremble. Some interpret them of the ſun, moon, and ſtars, which are ſet for ſigns, as the word[m] uſed ſignifies; and which declare the glory of God to the uttermoſt parts of the earth, and ſtrike men with awe and reverence of him; and others of thunder and lightning, which are ſometimes very dreadful and terrible. Moreover, the word[n] ſignifies ſigns and wonders, marvelous things, miraculous operations; and may be underſtood of thoſe that were wrought in the firſt times of the goſpel, for the confirmation of it; ſome of which were wrought in the uttermoſt parts of the earth; or however, were heard of there and believed; which cauſed them to receive the goſpel with all reverence, not as the word of man, but as the word of God. Thou makeſt the outgoings of the morning and of the evening to rejoice; ſome interpret this of the morning and evening-ſacrifices; others of the ſun that goes forth in the morning, and rejoices as a ſtrong man to run his race, and of the moon and ſtars that appear in the evening, and both give pleaſure and delight to the inhabitants of the earth; others of men who go forth in the morning chearfully to their labour, and of the beaſts that go out in the evening to ſeek their prey, Pſal. xix. 5. and civ. 20—23. but it ſeems better to underſtand it of the riſing of the ſtars before the ſun in the morning, and the appearance of them after the moon is up in the evening; or of the riſing and ſetting ſun; of the eaſt and weſt, which include the whole world, and the inhabitants of it; who are made to rejoice at the coming of the goſpel among them, which brings the good news and glad tidings of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation by Chriſt, whereby his name becomes great, and is praiſed among the Gentiles; ſee Mal. i. 11.

℣. 9. Thou viſiteſt the earth, and watereſt it, &c.] So the Lord looked upon the earth, quickly after its formation, before rain came upon it, and he watered the whole face of the ground, Gen. ii.

[m] מאותיך a ſignis tuis, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

[n] A ſignis & prodigiis tuis, Michaelis.

ii. 5, 6. ſo he cared for the land of Judea in particular, and watered it with the rain of heaven, Deut. xi. 11, 12. ſee 2 Sam. xxi. 1—14. to which ſome think reference is had here; and ſo he viſits and waters the whole earth in general, at certain times and ſeaſons, Acts xiv. 16, 17. this may be applied to the church and people of God in goſpel-times, who are his huſbandry, and the good ground on which the ſeed falls and is received, and brings forth fruit; and are comparable to the earth that drinks in the rain that comes oft upon it, and brings forth herbs meet for thoſe that dreſs it, and receives a bleſſing from God, Heb. vi. 7. thus the Lord viſited his people, by the miſſion of his Son to redeem them, whoſe coming was as the rain, the former and latter to the earth, Luke i. 68, 78. Hoſ. vi. 3. ſo he viſited the Gentile world, by the preaching of the goſpel by his apoſtles, whoſe doctrines dropped as the rain, and diſtilled as the dew and ſmall rain on the tender herb, and as ſhowers on the graſs; and ſo made a wilderneſs a pool of water, and the dry land ſprings of water, Acts xv. 14. Deut. xxxii. 2. Iſa. xl. 18. and in like manner he viſits particular perſons in converſion, and waters them with the graces of his Spirit, by which he regenerates, quickens, and ſanctifies them, and makes them fruitful, Iſa. xliv. 3. John iii. 5. and iv. 14. and vii. 37, 38. Thou greatly enricheſt it with the river of God, which is full of water; not Shiloah nor Jordan; but the clouds which are full of rain, which falling upon the earth, impregnate it with rich particles, which make it very fertile and fruitful; ſo the Targum, "with a multitude of fruits thou enricheſt it out "of the river of God, which is in heaven, which "is full of rain:" this may myſtically denote the river of God's everlaſting love, which is full of the bleſſings of grace, and which flowing upon his people, makes them fruitful, and enriches them with the riches of grace and glory; ſee Pſal. xlvi. 4. Thou prepareſt them corn, when thou haſt ſo provided for it; or becauſe thou haſt ſo prepared it[o]; that is, the earth being diſpoſed and prepared by the Lord, watered and enriched with the rain of heaven, produces corn in great plenty for the inhabitants of the earth; which may ſpiritually deſign either the fruitfulneſs of the ſaints, whoſe hearts are diſpoſed and prepared by the grace of God to receive the ſeed of the word, which brings forth fruit in them; or the bread-corn, that wheat of the goſpel, and Chriſt the ſum and ſubſtance of it, which is of God's preparing for his people, and by which they are nouriſhed and made comfortable; ſee Zech. ix. 17.

℣. 10. Thou watereſt the ridges thereof abundantly, &c.] Kimchi calls them the eminences of the earth, the little hills, the higher parts of ploughed land; thoſe which lie between furrow and furrow ſeem to be meant, which being watered with rain become lower, and are made fruitful: theſe may denote ſuch as are lifted up with their own imaginary purity and righteouſneſs; and who, when the grace of God takes hold upon them, are humbled, and confeſs themſelves the chief of ſinners, and the leaſt of ſaints, renounce their own righteouſneſs, and ſubmit to Chriſt's. Thou ſettleſt the furrows thereof; or thou cauſeſt the rain to deſcend into the furrows thereof[p]; which fills them, and makes them fruitful; and may deſign humble ſouls, whom the Lord fills with his good things, and makes them fruitful in every good work. Thou makeſt it ſoft with ſhowers; which through drought is become like iron and braſs, and, without large and heavy ſhowers, as the word[q] uſed ſignifies, and theſe repeated, it is ſo hard, that no impreſſions can be made upon it, nor any thing ſpring out of it; and ſuch is the hard heart of man, which God only can make ſoft by the means of his word, through the energy of his Spirit, and the efficacy of his grace; which coming in great abundance, like large ſhowers of rain, removes the hardneſs of the heart, makes it ſuſceptible of divine impreſſions, and of receiving the ſeed of the word, whereby it becomes fruitful. Thou bleſſeſt the ſpringing thereof; the tender blade, when it firſt peeps out of the earth; this the Lord nouriſhes and cheriſhes; he preſerves it from the nipping froſts, by covering it with ſnow; he waters it with the dews of heaven, and warms it with the beams of the ſun; he cauſes it to grow, and brings it to perfection: ſo the Lord takes great notice of the ſpringing and buddings forth of grace, of the firſt acts and exerciſes of it in young converts, and takes care of them; and as he will not hurt them himſelf, nor break the bruiſed reed, nor quench the ſmoaking flax; ſo he takes care that others ſhould not; ſee Cant. vi. 11. vii. 11. and ii. 15. he gives them more grace, and ſtrengthens what they have; cauſes it to grow, and brings it on to perfection. The word here uſed is the ſame by which Chriſt, the branch, is expreſſed, Zech. iii. 8. and vi. 12. and as the Lord has bleſſed him with the bleſſings of goodneſs; ſo he bleſſes all the branches which are in him, John xv. 4, 5. Eph. i. 3.

℣. 11. Thou crowneſt the year with thy goodneſs, &c.] The whole circling year, from one end of it to the other; particularly that ſeaſon of it when the harveſt is gathered in; the ſeed being ſown, the earth watered, the ſpringing of it bleſſed, and the corn brought to perfection, the year is crowned with a plentiful harveſt: this may denote the acceptable year of the Lord, the year of the redeemed, the whole goſpel-diſpenſation, Iſa. lxi. 2. and lxiii. 4. in certain ſeaſons and periods of which there have been great gatherings of ſouls to Chriſt; at the firſt of it multitudes were converted in Judea, and in the Gentile world, which were the firſt-fruits of the Spirit; and in all ages there have been more or leſs inſtances of this kind; and in the latter day there will be a large harveſt, when the Jews will be converted, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles brought in. And thy paths drop fatneſs; the heavens, as Jarchi interprets it; or the clouds, as Kimchi; which are the chariots and horſes of God, in which he rides, and are the duſt of his feet, Pſal. civ. 3. Hab. iii. 15. Nah. i. 3. and theſe drop down rain upon the earth, and make it fat and flouriſhing; and may myſtically deſign the miniſtration of the goſpel, and the adminiſtration of ordinances; which are the paths in which the Lord goes forth to his people, and directs them to walk in, and in which he meets them with a fulneſs of bleſſings, and ſatisfies them as with marrow and fatneſs.

℣. 12. They drop upon the paſtures of the wilderneſs, &c.] As well as upon the ploughed land, and turn them into a fruitful field; which may denote the Gentile world, whither the goſpel was ſent by Chriſt, and preached by his apoſtles; and whoſe doctrines dropped as the rain, and proſpered to the thing whereunto they were ſent, and made this wilderneſs wilderneſs as the garden of God. And the little hills rejoice on every ſide; or joy girds the hills; or they are girded with joy [r]; or gird themſelves with joy, as the Targum; being covered on all ſides with graſs, herbs and trees: theſe may denote the churches of Chriſt, and little hills of Sion, who rejoice when the intereſt of Chriſt flouriſhes, Pſal. lxviii. 14, 15. and xiv. 7.

[o] כי כן תכינה quia ſic paraſti eam, Pagninus; ſo Cocceius, Vatablus. [p] נחת גרוריה deſcendere ſapis pluviam in ſulcos ejus, Vatablus. [q] ברביבים guttis grandioribus, Piſcator.

℣. 13. The paſtures are clothed with flocks, &c.] Of ſheep, which are ſo thick, that there is ſcarce any thing to be ſeen upon the paſtures but them; which look as if they were clothed with them: theſe may intend the multitude of converts, ſignified by the flocks of Kedar, and rams of Nebaioth; which gathering about the church, and joining to her, ſhe clothes herſelf with them as with an ornament, Iſa. lx. 7, 8. and xlix. 18. it may be rendered the rams clothe, or cover the flocks [s]; or the flocks are clothed, or covered with the rams, as expreſſive of their copulation with them; and ſo the Targum, "the rams aſcend upon the flocks;" which ſenſe is favoured by the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, and Arabic verſions. The valleys alſo are covered over with corn; being made very fruitful with the rain, and bringing forth in great abundance; ſo humble ſouls are the moſt fruitful ones. They ſhout for joy, they alſo ſing; that is, the paſtures, hills and valleys, being laden with all kind of fruit for the uſe of man and beaſt, for neceſſity and pleaſure, which occaſion joy to the inhabitants of the earth: this may be expreſſive of the joy that will be among men, when the intereſt of Chriſt will be in a more flouriſhing condition in the latter day; ſee Iſai. xlix. 13. and lv. 9—13.

PSALM LXVI.

To the chief muſician, A ſong or pſalm.

THIS pſalm does not bear the name of David in the title of it, yet is generally thought to be one of his; but becauſe the plural number is uſed in it, which is not ſo common in David's pſalms, Aben Ezra is of opinion, it is not his, but wrote by the ſingers. This is not a ſufficient objection: and beſides, from ℣. 13. to the end, the ſingular number is uſed. The Arabic verſion aſcribes it to David, and that verſion makes the ſubject-matter of it to be concerning the reſurrection; as do the Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Vulgate Latin verſions. The title of the Syriac verſion is, "concerning ſacrifices and burnt-offerings, and the "incenſe of rams; the ſpiritual ſenſe intimates "to us the calling of the Gentiles, and the preaching, i. e. of the goſpel;" which comes neareſt the truth: for the pſalm reſpects goſpel-times, and the church of Chriſt under the New Teſtament, ſpread throughout the world, and eſpecially as it will be in the latter day; ſee ℣. 1, 4. and ſo in Yalkut Simeoni on the pſalm, it is ſaid to be a pſalm for time to come, and agrees with Zeph. iii. 9. I will turn to the people a pure language, &c. Kimchi ſays, it is a pſalm concerning the gathering of the captives of Iſrael; and ſo Jarchi and Obadiah expound it; and Theodoret ſays, David wrote this pſalm for the captives in Babylon.

℣. 1. Make a joyful noiſe unto God, &c.] The Creator of the ends of the earth; the Provider for all his creatures; and the Diſpenſer of the bleſſings of grace, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, to men in all countries. The Meſſiah may well be thought to be intended, ſince the pſalm refers to goſpel-times; who is God over all, bleſſed for ever; to whom a joyful noiſe, ſhouts and acclamations, are to be made by all his ſubjects, true believers in him, in all lands, as to their King; ſee Num. xxiii. 21. who is aſcended on high, has led captivity captive; received gifts for men, and gives them to them; is enthroned on his Father's right hand, is crowned with glory and honour; where he reigns, and muſt reign, till all enemies are put under his feet; when his kingdom will be from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth: and upon the deſtruction of his enemies, and the enlargement of his kingdom in the latter day, voices will be heard in heaven, the church; and ſuch joyful noiſes as are here exhorted and directed to, Rev. xix. 1—7. and xi. 15, 16, 17. and xv. 3, 4. Moreover, ſuch acclamations are ſuitable to him, as a victorious conqueror; who, at his death, overcame ſin, Satan, the world, and death itſelf; and by the miniſtry of the goſpel, went forth conquering, and to conquer; and has ſubdued many people in all nations, and cauſed his miniſters to triumph in him in every place; and who, by his Spirit and grace, ſtill continues to bring ſouls to a ſubjection to him, to diſpoſſeſs Satan from them, to ſet up his throne in their hearts, and reign there, and to make them more than conquerors through himſelf that has loved them: of which there will be more numerous inſtances in the latter day; and all ſuch are under great obligations to make a joyful noiſe unto him, or to expreſs their joy and thankfulneſs in loud ſinging of his praiſes. All ye lands; that is, all the inhabitants of the earth, as the Targum; not Judea, to which ſome reſtrain it, but the whole earth: for Chriſt is the Saviour of ſome, in all countries, of the children of God, that are ſcattered abroad throughout the whole world, for whom he is a propitiation. The goſpel has been ſent to all nations, and preached to every creature; ſome in all lands have been converted, and made partakers of the bleſſings and privileges of the goſpel, and therefore have reaſon to be glad and make a joyful noiſe; and the more ſo, inaſmuch as they were in a ſtate of great darkneſs and ignorance before, without Chriſt, without hope, and without God in the world.

℣. 2. Sing forth the honour of his name, &c.] Meaning not any particular names of the Meſſiah, ſuch as in Iſa. ix. 6. and vii. 14. or his name Jeſus, a Saviour; though they are all honourable and glorious, and furniſh out ſufficient matter for a ſong: but rather that, by which he was made known to the ſons of men, his goſpel; ſee Acts ix. 15. Which is a glorious goſpel; the truths of which may be expreſſed in a ſong of praiſe, to the honour and glory of Chriſt, and to the inſtruction and profit of men, Coloſſ. iii. 16. Or rather, Chriſt himſelf is meant; his name often deſigns himſelf, Matt. xii. 21. Pſal. ix. 10. Prov. xviii. 10. There is a glory that is due unto him, and ought to be given given him; which is done when all divine perfections and works are aſcribed to him, divine worſhip is paid him, and the glory of ſalvation given him; which may be done in pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs. Make his praiſe glorious; let the high praiſes of him be in your mouths; give him the moſt excellent praiſe; praiſe him in the beſt manner. This is done when we ſing his praiſe with grace in our hearts in exerciſe; when we with one mind and mouth glorify him; and when we honour him, the Son, as we honour the Father.

[r] וגיל גבעות תחגרנה colleſque exultatione accinguntur, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth; accinxerunt ſe, Pagninus; accingent ſe, Montanus. [s] מרחים arietes, Sept. arietes, V. L.

℣. 3. Say unto God, &c.] Or, concerning God [t], as ſome; or, before God, as the Targum; ſay to him as follows, in pſalms and hymns of praiſe: How terrible art thou in thy works! or reverend [u]! to be feared and reverenced with a godly fear on account of them; ſuch as the works of nature and providence, which are ſtupendous and marvellous, fearfully and wonderfully wrought; and eſpecially thoſe of grace and redemption, in which the goodneſs of Chriſt is manifeſt, and for which he is to be feared: unleſs rather his judgments upon his enemies are here meant; who, though he is a Lamb to his own people, is the Lion of the tribe of Judah to them, whom he will break in pieces as a potter's veſſel. It may be read, how terrible, or tremendous, is every one of thy works; ſo Aben Ezra, and alſo Jarchi, who interprets the next clauſe, Through the greatneſs of thy power, thus, "when thou ſheweſt to the world thy power, by "the peſtilence, or ſword, or famine, or lightnings;" Shall thine enemies ſubmit themſelves unto thee; in a lying, flattering and deceitful manner, as the word [w] here uſed ſignifies; ſee the note on Pſal. xviii. 44. or as the above interpreters, "they ſhall, through the greatneſs of fear, confeſs "the lies and tranſgreſſions they have committed." It will be a forced, and not a free confeſſion and ſubmiſſion; Chriſt's enemies, whether they will or no, will be obliged to own that he is Lord, to the glory of God the Father, Phil. ii. 10, 11.

℣. 4. All the earth ſhall worſhip thee, &c.] The Meſſiah, who is equal with God; the Creator of men; the Redeemer of his people; the Head of the church, and King of ſaints; their Lord, and therefore to be worſhipped; with internal worſhip, in the exertiſe of faith, hope and love; and with external worſhip, in the word and ordinances, by prayer and praiſe, public and private. This univerſal worſhip that will be yielded him, will be in the latter day; which ſhews that this pſalm reſpects thoſe times; when Chriſt ſhall be King over all the earth, and his name, worſhip and religion one, Zech. xiv. 9, 16. Rev. xv. 4. And ſhall ſing unto thee; the ſong of Moſes and the Lamb, the Lamb's new ſong, the ſong of redeeming grace; which none but the redeemed ever can ſing aright, Rev. xiv. 3. and xv. 3. They ſhall ſing to thy name; or, they ſhall, or let them ſing thy name [x]; thou ſhalt be the ſubject of their ſong; thy perſon, offices, kingdom, grace and glory: or they ſhall ſing to the honour of thy name, as in ℣. 2. Selah; of this word, ſee the note on Pſal. iii. 2.

℣. 5. Come and ſee the works of God, &c.] Of the Meſſiah, God manifeſt in the fleſh; thoſe divine works which he did when here on earth; his miraculous works, which were proofs of his Deity and Meſſiahſhip; his preaching the goſpel, in ſo divine a manner as never man did; his works of obedience to the law, which were pure and perfect; the everlaſting righteouſneſs he wrought out for the juſtification of his people; and the great work of redemption and ſalvation finiſhed by him, which none but God could ever have effected. This is an invitation to the inhabitants of all lands, where the goſpel ſhould come with power, to take notice of and conſider theſe works of Chriſt, and the glory of his might, wiſdom and grace in them, in order to engage them to ſing his praiſe. He is terrible in his doing toward the children of men; in his vengeance on the Jews, for diſbelieving and rejecting him; in deſtroying Antichriſt, and pouring out the vials of his wrath on the antichriſtian ſtates; and in the everlaſting damnation of the wicked. So that as his other works in the former clauſe deſign thoſe of grace, this doing of his reſpects his work, his ſtrange work of judgment on his enemies; on account of which he is terrible to them, and reverenced by his people.

℣. 6. He turned the ſea into dry land, &c.] The Red-ſea, or ſea of Suph, as the Targum; by cauſing a ſtrong eaſt wind to blow, which made it dry, ſo that the children of Iſrael paſſed through it on dry ground, Exod. xiv. 21, 22. Or he turneth [y]; for tho' the alluſion is to the making the Red ſea dry land, when the Iſraelites paſſed through it; yet it refers to ſomething to be done in the times of Chriſt and the goſpel-diſpenſation. So Chriſt might be ſaid to do this literally, when he walked upon the ſea of Galilee as on dry land, and enabled Peter to do ſo likewiſe, Matt. xiv. 25, 29. and figuratively, when he makes his people walk thro' the ſea of this world, and the waters of afflictions in it, without overflowing them. He is with them, bears them up, and upholds them with his right hand; ſo that they paſs on, as on dry land, till they come ſafe to the ſhores of bliſs and happineſs. They went through the flood on foot; or river [z]; the river Jordan, as the Targum: for this alludes not to the paſſage of the Iſraelites through the ſea, but through Jordan, when they entred into the land of Canaan, Joſh. iii. 17. The words may be rendered according to Kimchi, "they ſhall "paſs thro' the river on foot;" the Targum adds, "the children of Iſrael;" ſo the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic and Arabic verſions. Such things are ſaid in prophecy concerning the people of God in future times; ſee Iſa. xi. 15, 16. and li. 10, 11. So the river Euphrates ſhall be dried up, to make way for the kings of the eaſt, Rev. xvi. 12. There did we rejoice in him; ſtill alluding to the above caſes, when Iſrael paſſed through the Red-ſea, and ſung praiſe to God; and went through Jordan, and ſet up ſtones of memorial, Exod. xv. 1. Joſh. iv. 6, 7. Or, there ſhall we rejoice in him; ſo the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, Syriac and Arabic verſions; only the latter reads in the ſingular, he ſhall rejoice. The Targum is; "I will lead them to the mountain "of his holineſs, there ſhall we rejoice in his "word:" in the eſſential Word, the Meſſiah, as the ſaints do rejoice in him in his houſe, under his word and ordinances; when they ſee the ſalvation wrought out by him, and their intereſt in it; the righteouſneſs he has brought in, and themſelves clothed with it; pardon procured by him, and that applied to them; and when they are favoured with a ſight a ſight of him, and communion with him; ſo will they rejoice in him, when the marriage of the Lamb is come, and the bride is ready; when Antichriſt ſhall be deſtroyed, and they ſhall have got the victory over him; then they ſhall ſtand on the ſea of glaſs, and there ſhall they ſing the ſong of Moſes and of the Lamb, Rev. xix. 7, 8. and xviii. 20. and xv. 2, 3. and when they ſhall have got thro' all their difficulties ſafe to heaven; there ſhall they rejoice in Chriſt, and with him to all eternity.

[t] אמרו לאלהים dicite de Deo, Campenſis apud Gejerum; and ſome in Michaelis. [u] נורא reverendus, Junius & Tremellius. [w] יכחשו mentientur, V. L. Muſculus, Montanus; mendaciter ſe dedunt, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Amama. [x] יזמרו שמך cantent nomen tuum, Gejerus; cantabunt nomen tuum, Michaelis. [y] הפך convertit, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [z] בנהר per fluvium, Gejerus.

℣. 7. He ruleth by his power for ever, &c.] Chriſt is the Ruler in Iſrael, King over his holy hill of Zion; who muſt reign till all enemies are put under his feet. He rules in the kingdom of nature and providence by his power, and does whatſoever he pleaſes; nor can any ſtay his hand. He rules in the kingdom of grace, in the hearts of his people, by his efficacious grace; which makes them willing, in the day of his power, to be ſubject to him; and in the latter day he will take to himſelf his great power and reign, when he will be King for ever. His kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom, it ſhall never be ſubverted nor uſurped; nor will he in it be ſucceeded by another; he will reign to the end of the world, throughout the thouſand years, with his ſaints on earth, and then with them in heaven for evermore. The Targum renders it, "over the world;" over the whole world; for Chriſt will be King over all the earth in the latter day, Zech. xiv. 9. His eyes behold the nations; the antichriſtian ſtates. He ſees all the idolatry and wickedneſs committed in them; and his eyes will be as flames of fire to deſtroy them, when the time is come. The alluſion is to God's looking thro' the pillar of fire and cloud upon the Egyptians in the Red-ſea, and troubling them, Exod. xiv. 24. Let not the rebellious exalt themſelves. Selah. that are rebels againſt Chriſt, would not have him to reign over them; Antichriſt, who exalts himſelf above all that is called God, and all his followers. Or, they ſhall not exalt themſelves[a]: or, as the Targum, "they ſhall not be exalted in themſelves for "ever;" ſee Rev. xviii. 7, 8.

℣. 8. O bleſs our God, ye people, &c.] In all countries, that know the Lord and fear him; aſcribe bleſſing, and honour and glory, to Chriſt our God, on account of his works, actions, perfections, kingdom and power; and becauſe of the deſtruction of thoſe, who are rebels to his government. And make the voice of his praiſe to be heard; far and near, in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs; by ſhoutings, and loud acclamations of joy; ſee Rev. xix. 5, 6. where Chriſt is called our God, and a like exhortation is made as here.

℣. 9. Which holdeth our ſoul in life, &c.] Or, putteth our ſoul in life[b], or among the living. Which is not to be underſtood of infuſing a living ſoul in man, nor of the preſervation of natural life, which is common to all men; but of appointing and ordaining them unto eternal life, as the Targum; and of procuring it for them by Chriſt; and of implanting a principle of ſpiritual life in them, by his Spirit and grace; and of the preſervation of the principle of life, that it be not loſt; and of giving them a right and title to eternal life, and that itſelf: all which are a ſufficient reaſon, and powerful argument, to bleſs our God, and praiſe his name. It follows: And ſuffereth not our feet to be moved; that is, not to be greatly moved; or if moved ſo as to ſlip and fall, yet not ſo as to fall finally and totally; ſee Pſal. lv. 22. and lvi. 12, 13.

℣. 10. For thou, O God, haſt proved us, &c.] And by the experiment found them to be true and faithful; to have the truth of grace, and the root of the matter in them; not reprobate ſilver, or their grace counterfeit grace; but of the right kind, ſolid and ſubſtantial. Thou haſt tried us as ſilver is tried; in a furnace, where it is put and melted by the refiner, and purified from the droſs that attends it. So the Targum, "thou haſt purified us "as the ſilverſmith purifieth the ſilver;" or tries it by melting and purifying it. Thus the Lord puts his people into the furnace of afflictions, and ſits as a refiner and purifier of them; hereby he tries their graces, faith, patience, hope and love, their principles and their profeſſions; refines their graces, and makes them more bright and illuſtrious; removes their droſs and tin, and reforms their manners; and proves them to be good ſilver, and approves of them, and eſteems them as ſuch, even as his peculiar treaſure. From whence it appears, as well as from the following verſes, that afflictions are of God; that they are for the good of his people, and not their hurt; like ſilver they are put into the fire of affliction, not to be deſtroyed and loſt, but to be purged and refined; and that they are not in wrath, but in love: and this with what follows, may reſpect the ſufferings of the ſaints under Rome, pagan and papal; when Chriſt's feet, the members of his myſtical body, were like unto fine braſs, as if they burned in a furnace; when their graces were tried, their works were known, and their perſons proved and approved, Rev. i. 15. and ii. 9, 10—13, 18, 19. ſee Zech. xiii. 9.

℣. 11. Thou broughteſt us into the net, &c.] That is, ſuffered them to be taken in the net of wicked men, which they laid and ſpread for them; whereby they were drawn either into bad principles or bad practices, or into ruinous circumſtances; tho' the Lord does not leave his own people there, but breaks the net or ſnare, ſooner or later, and they eſcape; ſee Pſal. ix. 15. and x. 9. and cxxiv. 6, 7. Jarchi interprets it of a ſtrait place, as in a priſon; and which has often been literally true of the people of God, into which, though they have been caſt by Satan, or by men inſtigated by him, yet, becauſe permitted by the Lord, it is aſcribed to him, Rev. ii. 10. Thou laidſt affliction upon our loins; the Targum renders it a chain: the word ſignifies any thing that is binding and preſſing; it ſeems to be a metaphor, taken from the binding of burdens upon the backs of any creatures. Afflictions often lie heavy upon the ſaints, are very cloſe upon them, and preſs them ſore, even, as they ſometimes think, beyond meaſure; though the Lord ſupports them, and will not ſuffer them to ſink under them.

℣. 12. Thou haſt cauſed men to ride over our heads, &c.] Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it of the kings and nations of the world ruling over Iſrael; and may very well deſign the heathen powers and antichriſtian ſtates tyrannizing over Chriſtian people. The word in the original text is ſingular, a man[c], a frail mortal man; and may be underſtood of the man of ſin and ſon of perdition; who rides upon the heads of men, exalts himſelf above all that is called God, and has exerciſed dominion over the ſaints ſaints in a moſt lawleſs and tyrannical manner. Vitringa, on Iſa. xliii. 2. interprets it of Antiochus Epiphanes, who was a type of Antichriſt, and ſuppoſes the following clauſe to refer to the perſecution of the church in his time. The Targum renders it, a lord of rebuke; that is, either one worthy of rebuke, as Antichriſt is; or one that gives rebukes, delivers out anathemas and excommunications, as he does: though ſome tranſlate the words of the Targum, lords of uſury, or uſurers; a title not unfit for the creatures of Antichriſt. We went through fire and through water; through afflictions compared to fire and water; through fiery trials and overwhelming providences, though not deſtroyed by them, becauſe the Lord was with them; ſee Iſa. xliii. 2. therefore they are ſaid to go thro' them, not to abide in them; nor to ſink under them, and periſh by them: they went chearfully through them for Chriſt's ſake, even the greateſt hardſhips and difficulties, which this phraſe may be expreſſive of. It may have a particular reference to the ſufferings of the ſaints in goſpel-times; to the burning of the martyrs with fire and faggot, who, like Elijah, went up to heaven in a fiery chariot; and to the flood of waters caſt out after the woman, the church, by the dragon; ſee Rev. i. 15. and xii. 15, 16. But thou broughteſt us out into a wealthy place; the Targum is, into largeneſs; or into a large place; ſee Pſal. xviii. 19. and cxviii. 5. This may intend either the ſtate of the church upon the Reformation, or rather, as it will be in the latter day-glory; when there will be a large ſpread of the goſpel, and of the intereſt of Chriſt every where; when the church will be enlarged with converts, and the members of it with the gifts and graces of the Spirit; and which will be a ſtate of great liberty and freedom in the worſhip of God, both inward and outward. The Septuagint verſion renders it, into refreſhment; ſo the Tigurine verſion, and Piſcator; as thoſe times will be times of refreſhing from the preſence of the Lord, which will be every where among his people, in his word and ordinances, and to a great degree; ſee Acts iii. 19. The Arabic verſion, unto reſt; from adverſity, from perſecution: for after this ſtate takes place, there will be no more perſecution; no more fines, impriſonment, racks, and torturing deaths, for the ſake of Chriſt and his goſpel. The word uſed ſignifies a well watered place [d], or land; ſuch as was the land of Canaan, Deut. viii. 7, 8, 9. and ſuch will be the ſtate of the church in the latter-day: the Spirit will be poured down like floods of water upon the dry ground; the doctrines of the goſpel will drop as the rain, and as ſhowers upon the graſs; the ordinances of it will be as green paſtures beſide the ſtill waters; and every believer will be as a watered garden, whoſe ſprings fail not; it will be a time of great plenty and proſperity in ſpiritual things. Ainſworth renders it, to an abundant place; ſo Gejerus: a place abounding with all good things: a wealthy one, as we tranſlate it. And even in a literal ſenſe, this will be the wealthy time of the church; when kings ſhall come into it, and bring their riches and honour there, and uſe them for the good of it, Iſa. xlix. 23. and lx. 3, 11, 16, 17. and then alſo will the ſaints be enriched with every gift, and be rich in grace and in all good works.

[a] אל ירימו למו laudquaquam ſeſe exultabant, Figurine verſion, Muſculus, & Gejerus. V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; ponens, Montanus; qui ponit, Gejerus, Michaelis [illegible], Montanus.

[b] השם qui poſuit, [c] אנוש hominem, Pagninus, Montanus.

℣. 13. I will go into thy houſe with burnt-offerings, &c.] The pſalmiſt here perſonates the ſaints and faithful in thoſe times, who being delivered out of all their troubles, and brought into a large, free, plentiful, and comfortable condition, will come together into the place of public worſhip, and there unite in their ſacrifices of praiſe to God; will come and preſent themſelves as a whole burnt-offering to the Lord; will come with hearts inflamed with love to God and one another, which is more than all whole burnt-offerings and ſacrifices, Mark xii. 33. I will pay thee my vows; thankſgivings promiſed in time of diſtreſs, as follows; ſee Pſal. l. 14.

℣. 14. Which my lips have uttered, &c.] Or opened [e]; publickly and diſtinctly declared; and from which there is no going back; ſee Judg. xi. 33. And my mouth hath ſpoken when I was in trouble; this refers to the time when the people of God were under antichriſtian tyranny and bondage; and when they vowed and promiſed, that if the Lord would deliver them, they would give him all praiſe and glory.

℣. 15. I will offer unto thee burnt-ſacrifices of fatlings, &c.] Of the fatteſt of the flock; that is, of the beſt; ſuch as Abel offered, Gen. iv. 4. With the incenſe of rams; or rams with incenſe [f]; the Targum is, "with ſweet incenſe, the ſacrifice of rams;" Kimchi interprets it of incenſe of the fat of rams. I will offer bullocks with goats. Selah. he propoſed to offer all kind of offerings, to ſhew gratitude and thankfulneſs for the favours received; by all which are meant the calves, or fruit of the lips, the ſacrifices of praiſe, thankſgiving to God, in the name of the whole church and people of God; ſee Rev. xix. 1—7.

℣. 16. Come and hear, all ye that fear God, &c.] Who have a reverential affection for him, and by whom he is worſhipped and ſerved with reverence and godly fear; theſe have good things done for themſelves, and will glorify God for what he does for others: theſe know the nature, worth, and value of the good things the Lord does for the ſouls of men, and hear them with pleaſure and profit; when to tell them to others, is caſting pearl before ſwine, and giving that which is holy to dogs; and therefore only ſuch as fear the Lord are called upon to come and hear what follows. Jarchi interprets this character of proſelytes; ſee Acts xiii. 26. And I will declare what he hath done for my ſoul; not what he had done for God, or offered unto him, or ſuffered for his ſake; nor what God had done for his body in the make and preſervation of it; but what he had done for his ſoul, and the ſalvation of that: what God the Father had done in ſetting him apart for himſelf; in making a ſure, well-ordered, and everlaſting covenant with him in Chriſt; in bleſſing him with all ſpiritual bleſſings in him; in providing for the redemption of his ſoul by him; in pardoning his ſins, juſtifying his perſon, adopting him into his family, and regenerating, quickening, and ſanctifying him: alſo what God the Son had done for him; in engaging to aſſume a true body and a reaſonable ſoul on his account; and to make that ſoul an offering for his ſin, and thereby obtain for him eternal redemption, even the ſalvation of his immortal ſoul: likewiſe what God the Spirit had done for him; in quickening and enlightening his ſoul; in implanting principles of grace and holineſs in it; in ſhewing Chriſt unto him, and bringing near his righteouſneſs, and leading him to him for ſalvation and eternal life; in applying exceeding great and precious promiſes to him, and remembring to him ſuch on which he had had cauſed him to hope; in delivering him out of temptation and troubles, and in carrying on the work of his grace in him hitherto: theſe are things that are not to be concealed in a man's breaſt, but to be told to the church and people of God, to their joy and comfort, and to the glory of divine grace; ſee Mark v. 19.

[d] לרויה ad irriguam. Pagninus, Montanus.

[e] פצו aperuerunt, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Gejerus.

[f] עם קטרת אילים arietes cum incenſo, Gejerus; ſo Campenſis in ibid.

℣. 17. I cried unto him with my mouth, &c.] Crying deſigns prayer, and ſuppoſes diſtreſs; and crying with the mouth denotes vocal, ardent and fervent prayer. And he was extolled with my tongue; at the ſame time the pſalmiſt prayed for deliverance out of his diſtreſſes, he praiſed God for the mercies he had received; and did, as the apoſtle Paul directs, make known his requeſts with thanſgiving, Phil. iv. 6. or he was exalted under my tongue[g]; that is, in his heart, as ſome interpret it; his heart and his mouth went together; and out of the abundance of his heart his tongue ſpoke of the goodneſs, kindneſs, and mercy of God to him. The Targum is, "and his promiſe was under my tongue;" and ſo he was very different from a wicked man, who keeps iniquity under his tongue, as a ſweet morſel, Job xx. 12.

℣. 18. If I regard iniquity in my heart, &c.] There was iniquity in his heart, as there is in every good man's heart, and a great deal too; it is full of it; and it ſhould be regarded in ſome ſenſe, ſo as to guard againſt it, and pray to be kept from it, that it may not break forth into action; and ſo as to loath it, abhor it, and be humbled for it; but not ſo as to nouriſh and cheriſh it, to take delight and pleaſure in it: or if I look upon it[h]; as it may be rendered; that is, with approbation of it, and ſatisfaction in it, and ordered his converſation according to it; or acted the deceitful and hypocritical part in prayer; or had any evil intention in his petitions, to conſume on his luſts what he aſked for. The Lord will not hear me; for the Lord hears not ſinners that delight in ſin, and live in it; neither profane ſinners nor hypocrites; ſee John ix. 31. Job xxvii. 8, 9.

℣. 19. But verily God hath heard me, &c.] So that it was a plain caſe that he had not regarded iniquity in his heart; had not lived a vicious courſe of life, nor was an hypocrite; otherwiſe God would not have heard his prayer; whereas he had, and which is confirmed in the following clauſe. He hath attended to the voice of my prayer; which is an inſtance of the grace and condeſcenſion of God, and ſhewed in what high favour the pſalmiſt was with the Lord, and what regard he had unto him; and therefore could not be the man his enemies repreſented him to be.

℣. 20. Bleſſed be God, which hath not turned away my prayer, &c.] Has not been angry againſt it, ſhut it out, or covered himſelf with a cloud, that it might not paſs through, which ſometimes ſaints have complained of, Pſal. lxxx. 4. Lam. iii. 8, 44. but graciouſly heard and received it. Nor his mercy from me; for that endures for ever, and is from everlaſting to everlaſting on them that fear the Lord, Pſal. ciii. 17. all which require thankfulneſs and praiſe, which is here given.

PSALM LXVII.

To the chief muſician, on Neginoth, a pſalm or ſong.

ACcording to the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, this pſalm is a pſalm of David; and very probably it was written by him, ſince the ſpirit and language of it agree with that ſweet ſinger of Iſrael, though his name is not in the title; wherefore Aben Ezra ſays, we know not who compoſed it; and ſo the inſcription of the Syriac verſion pronounces the ſame uncertain; which adds, "the people ſung it when they brought "David over Jordan;" meaning after Abſalom's rebellion was over, 2 Sam. xix. 41. but what follows better expreſſes the occaſion and intent of it; "but to us it intimates a prophecy in it concerning "the calling of the Gentiles, and the preaching of "the apoſtles; likewiſe concerning the judgments "of the Lord:" and it ſeems indeed to breathe out the deſires of the church after the coming of Chriſt, and ſpiritual bleſſings by him, and the ſpread of the goſpel among the Gentiles, as what would bring forth much fruit in the earth, and be the occaſion of great joy. The ancient Jews[i] apply it לעתיד לבא to future time; the world to come, the times of the Meſſiah: and Kimchi underſtands it of the gathering of the preſent captivity when the Meſſiah comes, and of the deſtruction of Gog and Magog. Of the word Neginoth; ſee the note on the title of Pſal. iv.

℣. 1. God be merciful unto us, and bleſs us, &c.] That is, God of his unmerited mercy, of his rich grace and free favour, bleſs us with the coming of his Son, the promiſed ſeed, in whom all nations are to be bleſſed; and with the bleſſings of peace, pardon and righteouſneſs in him; all which with him ſpring from the tender mercy of God, the riches of his grace, and his great love; than which nothing could be more deſirable to the Old Teſtament-ſaints, who were ſhut up under the Law, until faith came; and though children, they differed nothing from ſervants, being in a ſtate, and under a ſpirit of bondage: for the pſalmiſt ſeems to perſonate the whole church under that diſpenſation: ſome underſtand the words as a prophecy, expreſſing the certainty of what would be; and as the words may be rendered, God will be merciful, or gracious to us[k], and he will bleſs us; as he has promiſed to do. And cauſe his face to ſhine upon us. Selah. that is, grant his gracious preſence, and the diſcoveries of his love; that he would favour with communion with himſelf through Chriſt, and a greater knowledge of him in him; or that he would cauſe him, who is his face, his image, the brightneſs of his glory, to appear and ſhine forth; the great light, the Sun of righteouſneſs, and dayſpring from on high, that was to ariſe and ſhine upon the people of God. The Targum is, "and "cauſe the ſplendor of his face to ſhine with us "always;" there ſeems to be ſome reference to the high-prieſt's form of bleſſing in Numb. vi. 24—26.

℣. 2. That thy way may be known upon earth, &c.] God's way and method of grace, in the ſalvation vation of ſinners; the contrivance of it in Chriſt, the impetration of it by him, and the application of it by his Spirit; and the way of ſinners to him through Chriſt, the way, the truth, and the life, the new and living way to the Father; and the way of life and ſalvation, which is of grace, and by Chriſt alone; and the goſpel which points out this way, and is itſelf called the way of God, Acts xviii. 25. together with the ordinances of it, which are ways of pleaſantneſs, and paths of peace; all this was made known by the apoſtles, and firſt preachers of the goſpel; not only in the land of Judea, but throughout the whole earth. Thy ſaving health among all nations; or thy ſalvation; or thy Jeſus [l]; whoſe name ſignifies a Saviour; and who is the only one, and an able and willing one, and is God's ſalvation, of his appointing, promiſing, and ſending; ſalvation is by him, and by him only; he came to obtain it, and he is the author of it; health is alſo by him, he is the phyſician of ſouls, and his blood the balm that cures every diſeaſe; ſo that he is the Saviour, ſalvation, and ſaving health to his people: this was unknown to the nations of the world until the goſpel came among them, until the grace of God bringing this ſalvation appeared unto them, and ſhone upon them, Titus ii. 11.

[g] תחת לשוני ſub lingua mea, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus, Muſculus, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis. [h] אם ראיתי ſi vidi, Pagninus, Montanus; ſi aſpexi, V. L. ſi conſpexi, Gejerus. [i] Debarim Rabba, ſ. 1. fol. 233. 4. Yalkut Simeoni in loc. [k] יחננו miſerebitur, Gejerus, Schmidt.

℣. 3. Let the people praiſe thee, O God, &c.] Let them have occaſion to praiſe God, the people of the Jews, for the miſſion of Chriſt, and for the bleſſings of grace and peace with him. Let all the people praiſe thee; all the nations of the world, for making known the way of life and grace, and the ſaving health or ſalvation of God unto them: the word uſed ſignifies to confeſs [m]; and ſo the Targum, "the people ſhall confeſs before thee, O God; "all the people ſhall confeſs before thee;" that is, ſhall confeſs their ſins, being made ſenſible of them; and confeſs the true and living God, turning from their idols to ſerve him; and Chriſt to be the only Saviour and Redeemer, being now made known unto them, through the preaching of the goſpel.

℣. 4. O let the nations be glad and ſing for joy, &c.] As they were glad, and did ſing for joy, and glorified God, when Chriſt was made known, and the goſpel was preached unto them, Acts viii. 5, 8. and xiii. 47, 48. For thou ſhalt judge the people righteouſly; meaning not the people of the world at the laſt day, at the general judgment, which will be a righteous one; when God will judge the world in righteouſneſs, according to the ſtrict rules of juſtice and equity by him whom he has ordained, Pſal. xcvi. 13. Acts xvii. 31. but either the righteous judgment which will be executed on the enemies of Chriſt's church and people; particularly on Antichriſt, which will be matter of great joy, Rev. xix. 1, 2. and Kimchi interprets it of the judgment of the nations which ſhall come with Gog and Magog; or elſe the judging and vindicating the Lord's own people, defending their cauſe, righting their wrongs, and ſuffering no weapon to proſper againſt them. And govern the nations upon earth. Selah. or lead them [n]; not to puniſhment, as Kimchi, who interprets this clauſe as the other; but by his grace and Spirit, into the knowledge of his way, and ſaving health; or as a ſhepherd leads his flock into green paſtures, and beſide the ſtill waters; or as a king leads and governs his people, as David guided the people of Iſrael, with the ſkilfulneſs of his hands; ſo Chriſt leads and governs his people, protects and defends them, holds them by his right hand, guides them with his counſel, and then receives them to glory; ſee Pſal. xxiii. 2. and lxxviii. 72. and lxxiii. 24.

℣. 5. Let the people praiſe thee, O God, &c.] This is repeated from ℣. 3. to ſhew the earneſt deſire of the church that it might be ſo; or that there might be an occaſion for it; the ardour of her mind, and fervency of her petitions, and how much ſhe was ſolicitous for the praiſe and glory of God; or to declare the certainty of it, ſhe moſt ſtrongly believing that ſo it would be; as the Targum, the people ſhall confeſs, &c. becauſe of a new favour to be enjoyed, mentioned in the next verſe.

℣. 6. Then ſhall the earth yield her increaſe, &c.] Not literally the land of Iſrael, as in ſome copies of the Targum, and as Kimchi interprets it; ſee Lev. xxvi. 3, 4. but myſtically and ſpiritually the church of God in the times of the Meſſiah, Ezek. xxxiv. 23—27. the word of God preached in the world, is the ſeed ſown in it; converts to Chriſt are the increaſe or fruit of it; and the church is God's huſbandry, where it is yielded or brought forth; and this increaſe is of God, and is owing to the efficacy of his grace attending the miniſtration of the word, 1 Cor. iii. 6. it had its accompliſhment in part in the firſt times of the goſpel, when it was preached by the apoſtles throughout the earth, and brought forth fruit every where, Col. i. 5, 6. and has been fulfilling more or leſs ever ſince, and will appear more abundantly in the latter day; a large increaſe, and a plentiful harveſt of ſouls ſhall be brought in, both Jews and Gentiles: or this may be underſtood of the fruitfulneſs of believers in Chriſt, who may be called earth, becauſe of their common original from the earth with the reſt of mankind; becauſe they are inhabitants of the earth; and becauſe they have earthly, as well as heavenly principles in them; but more eſpecially becauſe they are the good ground on whom the ſeed of the word falls and becomes fruitful; or are the earth which drinks in the rain of the goſpel, and of grace, and brings forth fruit meet for them, by whom it is dreſſed, and receives bleſſing of God, Matt. xiii. 23. Heb. vi. 7. theſe yield the fruits of the Spirit, increaſe in grace, and abound in the exerciſe of it; bring forth fruits meet for repentance, being filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs by Chriſt; for the increaſe and fruit yielded by them are owing to the grace of God, to their ingrafture into Chriſt the vine, and to the influence of the bleſſed Spirit. Some of the ancients underſtand this of the incarnation of Chriſt; ſee Pſal. lxxxv. 11. Iſai. xlv. 8. then the earth is the virgin Mary, who was as to her original of the earth earthly; of whoſe earthly ſubſtance Chriſt took fleſh, and is called the fruit of her womb; yea, the fruit of the earth, Luke i. 42. Iſa. iv. 2. for though he is the Lord from heaven, as to his divine nature, and came down from thence, not by change of place, but by aſſumption of nature; yet, as to his human nature, he was made of a woman, and is the ſeed of the woman, the promiſed ſeed, in whom all nations of the earth were to be bleſſed; and it here follows, And God, even our own God ſhall bleſs us; not as the God of nature and providence only; but as the God of grace, as a covenant-God in Chriſt, in which ſenſe he is peculiarly his peoples own God, ſo as he is not others; and as ſuch he bleſſes them with all ſpiritual bleſſings in Chriſt: or the repetition

[l] ישועתך ſalutem tuam, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. i. e. ſalvatorem cujus nomen erit Jeſus, Gejerus. [m] יודוך confiteantur, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c. Cocceius; deducis, Piſcator. [n] תנחם duces eas, Montanus; deduces, Junius & Tremellius, tition of the word God, with the affix our own, may denote the certainty of the divine bleſſing, the aſſurance had of it, and the great affection of the perſons that expreſs it: and ſome think, becauſe the word is repeated three times in this and the following verſe, reſpect is had to the Trinity of perſons in the Godhead; God the Father bleſſes his people in Chriſt with the bleſſings of juſtification, pardon, adoption, and eternal life: the Son, who is Immanuel, God with us, God in our nature, our own God, God manifeſt in the fleſh; he bleſſes with the ſame bleſſings of grace, peace, and eternal happineſs; he was raiſed up of God as man and Mediator, and ſent to bleſs his people, Acts iii. 26.

℣. 7. God ſhall bleſs us, &c.] The holy Spirit bleſſes with regenerating and renewing grace; with faith, comfort, joy and peace, by ſhedding abroad in the heart the love of the Father and the Son; by applying precious promiſes; by teſtifying adoption; by making meet for heaven and happineſs, and working up for the ſelf-ſame thing eternal glory. And all the ends of the earth ſhall fear him; the one God, Father, Son, and Spirit, the object of religious fear, internal and external; for this includes the exerciſe of that inward grace of filial fear, and the performance of all divine worſhip, publick and private; and which in the latter day will be found among Jews and Gentiles, in all the inhabitants of the earth, even to the ends of it, Hoſ. iii. 5. Rev. xv. 4.

PSALM LXVIII.

To the chief muſician, A pſalm or ſong of David.

THE Targum makes the argument of this pſalm to be the coming of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, and the giving of the law on mount Sinai; in which it is followed by many of the Jewiſh interpreters: but Aben Ezra rejects ſuch an interpretation of it, and thinks that David compoſed it, concerning the war he had with the uncircumciſed nations, the Philiſtines and others, 2 Sam. viii. 1, &c. And ſo the title of the Syriac verſion begins, "A pſalm of David, when the "kings prepared themſelves to fight againſt him:" and Kimchi ſays, it was compoſed on account of Sennacherib's army coming againſt Jeruſalem, in the times of Hezekiah, and ſo delivered by David, under a ſpirit of prophecy concerning that affair; tho' he owns, that ſome of their writers interpret it of the war of Gog and Magog, in the times of the Meſſiah they yet expect. But they are much nearer the truth, who take it that it was written on occaſion of the ark being brought to the city of David; ſeeing it begins with much the ſame words that Moſes uſed when the ark ſet forward in his times, Num. x. 35. and the bringing of which was attended with great joy and gladneſs, 2 Sam. vi. 14, 15. ſuch as the righteous are called upon to expreſs in this pſalm, ℣. 3, 4. And this being a type of Chriſt, and of his aſcending the holy hill of God, may be allowed of; for certain it is, that this pſalm treats of the coming of Chriſt, and of bleſſings by him, and of victory over his enemies; and particularly of his aſcenſion to heaven, as moſt evidently appears from Epheſ. iv. 8, 9. and from prophecies in it, concerning the calling of the Gentiles. Wherefore the latter part of the Syriac inſcription of it is very pertinent; "alſo a prophe-"cy concerning the diſpenſation of the Meſſiah, "and concerning the calling of the Gentiles to "the faith." Jarchi interprets ℣. 31. of the Meſſiah.

℣. 1. Let God ariſe, &c.] Which, as Kimchi obſerves, is either by way of prayer, or by way of prophecy; and in either way the ſenſe is the ſame: for if it is conſidered as a prayer, it is a prayer of faith, that ſo it would be; or if as a prophecy, it is certain that ſo it ſhould be. And this is to be underſtood of the ſame divine perſon, whoſe chariots the angels are; who is ſaid to be the Adonai, or Lord in the midſt of them; and of whom it is propheſied, that he ſhould aſcend to heaven, ℣. 17, 18. even the Meſſiah, who is God over all. And this ariſing, attributed to him, may be interpreted either of his incarnation, his exhibition and manifeſtation in the fleſh; which is ſometimes called in ſcripture, a raiſing of him up, as in Acts iii. 26. and xiii. 23. or of his reſurrection from the dead, as it is interpreted by many of the ancients; which, as it was a certain thing, and previous to his aſcenſion hereafter ſpoken of, ſo it was a proof of his deity; for tho' it was only the man that roſe, who died and was buried, yet as in union with the divine perſon of the Son of God, and who roſe by virtue of that union; and thereby he was declared to be the Son of God with power. Or elſe, rather this is to be underſtood of his ariſing and exerting his power as a man of war, as a mighty and victorious hero, on the behalf of his people, and againſt his enemies; as he did, when he aroſe and met Satan, the prince of the world, and engaged with all the powers of darkneſs; ſee Pſal. xlv. 3, 4. John xiv. 30, 31. and this ſenſe is confirmed by what follows: Let his enemies be ſcattered; let them alſo that hate him flee before him: the ſenſe of theſe two clauſes is the ſame; his enemies, and thoſe that hate him, are the ſame perſons; and to be ſcattered and flee, expreſs the ſame things; for enemies being diſcomfited, flee and ſcatter. Some interpret this of the watch ſet to guard our Lord's ſepulchre; who, upon his riſing from the dead, were filled with great fear and dread, and ſcattered, and fled to the prieſts, to acquaint them with what was done: others, of the Jewiſh nation in general, who were enemies to Chriſt, and hated him, and would not have him to reign over them; againſt whom he roſe up and exerted his great ſtrength; came in his kingdom and power againſt them; poured out his wrath upon them to the uttermoſt; which iſſued in the utter deſtruction of them, as a body politic; and in the intire diſperſion of them in all countries, which remains unto this day. Or rather, the whole is to be applied to Satan, and to his principalities and powers; the profeſſed enemies of Chriſt, perſonal and myſtical; who, when he aroſe and exerted his mighty power in his conflict with them, in the garden and on the croſs, were ſpoiled and diſſipated, and obliged to fly before him; and who at the ſame time overcame the world, made an end of ſin, aboliſhed death, as well as

as deſtroyed him which had the power of it; ſee Num. x. 35.

℣. 2. As ſmoke is driven away, ſo drive them away, &c.] This both deſcribes the character of wicked men, Chriſt's enemies; as their darkneſs and ignorance, their will-worſhip and ſuperſtition, and their deteſtableneſs to God, Rev. ix. 2. Iſa. lxv. 5. and the manner of their deſtruction; which is as eaſily brought about, as ſmoke is driven by the wind; and is as irretrievable, like ſmoke that vaniſheth into air °; ſee Pſal. xxxvii. 20. Iſa. li. 6. As wax melteth before the fire; whereby its conſiſtency, form and ſtrength, are loſt. Reſpect may be had both in this and the foregoing metaphor, to the fire of divine wrath, and the ſmoke of eternal torments; ſince it follows: So let the wicked periſh at the preſence of God; the appearance of Chriſt, either in his awful diſpenſation againſt the Jews, or in the laſt judgment; when the wicked ſhall not be able to ſtand before his face, but ſhall call to the rocks and mountains to hide them from him; and when they ſhall be bid to depart from him, and ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction in ſoul and body, from the preſence of the Lord, and the glory of his power.

℣. 3. But let the righteous be glad, &c.] At the incarnation of Chriſt, which is matter of joy to all people that believe in him; as did Zacharias and Eliſabeth, who were both righteous, and alſo Simeon; and at his reſurrection from the dead, ſince it is for their juſtification, by which they are denominated righteous; as did the diſciples of Chriſt, and as do ſaints in all ages; who know the power of his reſurrection, and the influence it has on the regeneration of their ſouls, the juſtification of their perſons now, and the reſurrection of their bodies hereafter; and at the deſtruction of the enemies of Chriſt and theirs. Let them rejoice before God; in the preſence of him; enjoying communion with him; having views of intereſt in him; as they do when this is the caſe, and as they will when they ſhall appear before him, and ſtand at his right hand at the laſt day, clothed with his righteouſneſs, and having palms in their hands. Yea, let them exceedingly rejoice; as they have juſt reaſon to do, in his perſon, grace, righteouſneſs and ſalvation. All theſe expreſſions denote the greatneſs, frequency, fervency, fulneſs and continuance of their joy. They may be rendered in the future, but the righteous ſhall be glad [p], &c. ſo the Targum.

℣. 4. Sing unto God, &c.] Manifeſt in the fleſh, riſen from the dead, aſcended on high, ſet down at the right hand of his divine Father; having exerted his great ſtrength in their redemption; and therefore ſhould ſing the ſong of redeeming love, with grace and melody in their hearts, unto him. Sing praiſes to his name; to the honour of his name Jeſus, a Saviour, becauſe of the great work of ſalvation wrought out by him; give him all the praiſe and glory of it, which is due unto his name. Extol him that rideth upon the heavens; having aſcended above them, and being higher than they, and ſo is exalted above all bleſſing and praiſe; and uſes his power and greatneſs for the help of his people; ſee Deut. xxxiii. 26. Some chooſe to render the words, prepare the way [q], as John the Baptiſt is ſaid to do, before him, Iſa. xl. 3. for him that rideth through the deſerts, or fields [r]; as he did through the fields of Judea on an aſs, and thro' the nations of the world, in the miniſtry of the word, carried thither by his apoſtles; whereby places, comparable to deſerts for their barrenneſs and unfruitfulneſs, became like the garden of the Lord: or rather, that rideth in the weſt; it being at the weſt end of the tabernacle and temple, where the Cherubim were, on which Jehovah rode, they being his chariot. By his name JAH; or Jehovah; which being a name incommunicable to creatures, and given to Chriſt, ſhews him to be the moſt High; a ſelf-exiſtent being, the immutable and everlaſting I am; which is, and was, and is to come; from whom all creatures receive their being, and are continued in it; and who is alſo Jehovah our righteouſneſs; and by, in, and becauſe of this name, is he to be extolled and magnified. And rejoice before him; ſee the note on ℣. 3.

℣. 5. A father of the fatherleſs, &c.] In a literal ſenſe, ſo as to ſhew mercy to them, take care of them, and protect them; and this is a character which the great God often aſſumes, partly to expreſs his power and providence over ſuch, and partly to ſignify his tenderneſs, mercy, and goodneſs to them; and in which he ſhould be imitated by civil magiſtrates, and by all good men: for it was not only a law in Iſrael, to ſhew regard to ſuch, and take care not to afflict them; but it is alſo a branch of pure, undefiled Chriſtian religion, James i. 27. in attending to which we reſemble the great author of it, who is here intended. Moreover, this may be underſtood in a ſpiritual ſenſe of ſuch, who are deſerted by their friends, or are called to leave father and mother for the ſake of Chriſt and his goſpel; and who are like fatherleſs ones, in an helpleſs condition in themſelves, and are ſenſible of it; and will not truſt in the creature, nor in any works of their own, but apply to Chriſt, where they have help and ſalvation, in whom the fatherleſs find mercy, Hoſea xiv. 3. and who afterwards, when they are without the preſence of Chriſt, and ſenſible communion with him, are like orphans or fatherleſs children; but Chriſt, who is the father of ſuch, will not leave them ſo, will have pity on them, ſhew favour to them, provide every thing needful for them, and will come and viſit them, as in John xiv. 18. where the word orphans or fatherleſs is uſed of Chriſt's diſciples. And a judge of the widows; of ſuch who are widows indeed in a literal ſenſe, and eſpecially that are believers, his elect that cry unto him; ſee Luke xviii. 2, 3, 6, 7. and of ſuch who are ſo in a ſpiritual ſenſe; even of the whole church of Chriſt, who may, even now, be ſaid to be in a widowhood-eſtate, as well as under the former diſpenſation; ſince Chriſt, her bridegroom, is gone to heaven, and who yet, in the mean time, is her judge, protector and defender; and when ſhe is made ready for him, as a bride adorned for her huſband, will come and take her to himſelf, and ſhe ſhall remember the reproach of her widowhood no more, Iſa. liv. 4, 5. Is God in his holy habitation; in heaven, the habitation of his holineſs, where is Chriſt the high and holy One; and has reſpect to the poor and lowly, the fatherleſs and the widow: or in his church, his holy temple, where he dwells and walks, and grants his gracious preſence, and will do to the end of the world, according to his promiſe; or in his holy human nature, ° —— & tenues fugit, ceu fumus in auras. Virgil. Æneid. 5. prope finem.

[p] ישמחו lætabuntur, exultabunt, & gaudebunt, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator, Cocceius, Michaelis.

[q] סלו elevate viam lapidibus, Vatablus; parata viam, Gejerus; make an highway, Ainſworth.

[r] בערבות per deſerta, Hieron. Theodoret. Bugenhagius, aliique in Michaelis; in campeſtribus, Piſcator, Cocceius; in campis, vel per campos, Guſſetius, p. 641; in the deſerts, Ainſworth.

nature, the temple and tabernacle, in which the Godhead dwells.

℣. 6. God ſetteth the ſolitary in families, &c.] Which the Jewiſh writers generally underſtand of an increaſe of families, with children in lawful marriage; ſee Pſal. cxiii. 9. an inſtance of which we have in Abraham and Sarah; from which ſingle or ſolitary ones, when joined in marriage, ſprung a numerous offspring, Iſa. li. 2. Heb. xi. 12. And to this ſenſe the Targum paraphraſes the words; "God is he that joins, couples ſingle ones into a "couple, as one:" ſome copies add, "to build an "houſe out of them;" that is, a family; ſee Ruth iv. 11. But it may be better interpreted of the fruitfulneſs and increaſe of the church with converts, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, even from among the Gentiles; who were before ſolitary, or were alone, without God and Chriſt, and aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael; but being called and converted by the miniſtry of the word, were brought into and placed in goſpel-churches, or families; ſee Iſa. liv. 1. Gal. iv. 26, 27. Eph. ii. 12. Acts xiv. 23. and may be applied to particular perſons, who, before converſion, may be ſaid to be ſolitary or alone; living without God, the knowledge and fear of him, and fellowſhip with him, being alienated from the life of him through ignorance; and without Chriſt, and communion with him, he not dwelling in them, nor they in him; and alſo ſenſual, not having the Spirit, his graces and fruits; being deſtitute of faith, hope and love: and moreover, aliens from the people of God, having no ſociety with them, being in a ſtate of ſolitude and darkneſs, and under the power of ſin and Satan; helpleſs and deſolate, as the word here uſed is rendered, Pſal. xxv. 16. But in effectual calling, ſuch are brought out of this diſmal ſtate, and being drawn with the cords of love by the Spirit, to the Father and the Son, and brought to a ſpiritual acquaintance with them, they are ſet in families, or placed in goſpel-churches; which, as families have a maſter over them, who is Chriſt the Son and firſt-born, of whom they are named; where are ſaints of various ages, ſizes and ſtanding: ſome fathers, ſome young men, and ſome children; where are proviſions ſuitable for them, and ſtewards to give them their portion of meat in due ſeaſon, who are the miniſters of the word; and laws and rules, by which they are directed and regulated, and every thing is kept in good decorum. He bringeth out thoſe which are bound with chains; as Peter and others literally, Acts xii. 5—11. 2 Cor. xi. 23. or rather, it is to be underſtood ſpiritually, of ſuch as are bound with the chains of their own ſins, and are under the power of them, with the fetters of the Law, in which they are held, and who are led and kept captive by Satan; thoſe Chriſt the Son makes free, proclaims liberty to them, ſays to ſuch priſoners, Go forth; and, by the blood of his covenant, ſends them forth, and directs them to himſelf, the ſtrong-hold, as priſoners of hope; ſee Iſa. lxi. 1. and xlix. 9. Zech. ix. 11, 12. The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions render it, he bringeth forth the priſoners with fortitude; ſo Apollinarius, with his great power and ſtrength; and the Syriac verſion, with proſperity: or in a pompous manner, as the Targum. But the words may be better rendered, he bringeth forth the priſoners, either as Ainſworth, into fit (and commodious) places, or rather, into the conveniencies or commodities; that is, of life, ſuch as priſoners are deſtitute of. But the rebellious dwell in a dry land; meaning the Jews, to whom Chriſt came, and whom they rejected, reviled, hated, and would not have him to reign over them, and were a gainſaying and diſobedient people; for which their land was ſmitten with a curſe, and in the time of their wars became a dry land; when famine and peſtilence were every where, and ſuch tribulation as was never known, Iſa. viii. 21, 22. Matt. xxiv. 6, 7, 21. Moreover, the nations of the world, among whom they are diſperſed, are a dry land to them; and even ſuch places as are become fruitful thro' the preaching of the goſpel, are no other to them, who neither do hear it, nor will they hear it; and they are like perſons in a dry and thirſty land, vainly expecting a Meſſiah, who will never come. This may alſo be applied to all that obey not the goſpel of Chriſt, who will be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from his preſence, and ſhall not have a drop of cold water allowed them to cool their tongue. The alluſion may be thought to be to the Jews, that murmured and rebelled againſt God, and vexed his Spirit in the wilderneſs, where their carcaſſes fell; and ſo dwelt in a dry land, and entered not into reſt, or the land of Canaan. The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions render it, in graves; Apollinarius paraphraſes it, "he bringeth the dead out of the graves "to light."

℣. 7. O God, when thou wenteſt forth before thy people, &c.] In the pillar of cloud, and in the pillar of fire, as the Targum adds; and this divine perſon was the Son of God, the Angel of his preſence, in whom his name was, even his name Jah or Jehovah before-mentioned. When thou didſt march through the wilderneſs. Selah. At the head of the Iſraelites, leading, guiding and directing them; providing for them all things neceſſary, and protecting them againſt their enemies. And ſo Chriſt goes before his people, as they paſs through the wilderneſs of this world; and does the like good offices for them, until he, as the great Captain of their ſalvation, brings them ſafe to glory: for what is here ſaid is taken notice of as a reſemblance of what he now does, or has done, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, to which this pſalm belongs; particularly of his marching thro' the wilderneſs of the Gentile world, in the miniſtry of the word by his apoſtles, wherein he went forth conquering and to conquer.

℣. 8. The earth ſhook, &c.] Not only about Sinai, but in other places; ſee Pſal. cxiv. 1, 4, 6, 7. Hab. iii. 6, 10. It may alſo deſign the dread and trembling of the inhabitants of the earth, when they heard of the wonderful things God did for his people, Exod. xv. 14, 15, 16. The heavens alſo dropped at the preſence of God; the Targum ſupplies, dew; to which may be added, quails and manna: tho' it rather ſeems to deſign a large ſhower of rain, which followed the lightning and thunder, when the Law was given. Even Sinai itſelf was moved at the preſence of God, the God of Iſrael: it is ſaid to quake greatly, Exod. xix. 18. The words of this and the preceding verſe, ſeem to be borrowed out of the ſong of Deborah, Judg. v. 4, 5. Like effects followed the promulgation of the Goſpel, even a ſhaking of the heavens and of the earth, as an emblem of the removing of the ceremonial rites and Moſaic ordinances. Let it be obſerved, that Chriſt, who went before the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, and whom they tempted and rebelled againſt, is called the God of Iſrael.

℣. 9. Thou, O God, didſt ſend a plentiful rain, &c.] Not of water literally taken, as when the Iſraelites paſſed thro' the ſea, Pſal. lxxvii. 17. or when when the thundrings and lightnings were on mount Sinai, at the giving of the Law, which are commonly attended with rain, Exod. xix. 16. or in the land of Canaan, which was the land that drank in the water of the rain of heaven, Deut. xi. 11. nor the rain of manna and of quails, as Arama, Exod. xvi. 4. Pſal. lxxviii. 23, 27. but either the effuſion of the holy Spirit, ordinary or extraordinary; that, on the day of Pentecoſt, in conſequence of Chriſt's aſcenſion, propheſied of in this pſalm, was a plentiful one indeed; when the diſciples were filled with the holy Ghoſt, and baptized with it: yea, the ordinary meaſure of the Spirit's grace in converſion, is abundant, and exceeding abundant; it is ſhed abundantly through Chriſt, and ſuperabounds ſin, and may be called, as the words here ſignify, a rain of liberalities [s], or a free and liberal rain; for it comes from the free grace of God, and makes thoſe on whom it deſcends a willing people in their obedience. The Spirit of God is a free Spirit; and where he is, there is liberty, in the exerciſe of grace, and in the diſcharge of duty. Or elſe, the miniſtration of the goſpel [t] is meant; which is compared to rain, Deut. xxxii. 2. Iſa. lv. 9, 10, 11. This eſpecially, in the firſt times of the goſpel, was a very large and plentiful one; it being ſent all over the world, and brought forth fruit in every place: this was alſo a liberal one, flowed from the free grace of God; the ſubject of it is free grace; and the tendency and effect of it are, to make men free from the bondage of the law, and the ſpirit of bondage which that induces. The Targum is, "thou haſt let down the dews of quick-"ning, and the rains of good pleaſure;" grace, or free favour. Whereby thou didſt confirm thine inheritance when it was weary; that is, the church, as the Targum explains it; the inheritance of Chriſt, which he has choſen, the Father has given him, and he poſſeſſes: the people of God, weary with the burdenſome rites and ceremonies of the law; with their own ſins and corruptions, a burden too heavy for them to bear; with the ſins of others, among whom they dwell; with the temptations of Satan, with which they are annoyed; with the perſecutions of the men of the world, which make them weary ſometimes, and faint in their minds; and with the common afflictions of life, which often make them weary of life itſelf. Now, by the plentiful miniſtration of the doctrines of the goſpel, accompanied with the Spirit and grace of God, the hearts of the Lord's people are refreſhed, as the weary, dry and thirſty land, is with a comfortable ſhower of rain; and by it weary ſouls have reſt, or at leaſt are directed by it to Chriſt, where they find it: and as the earth is prepared [u], as the word uſed ſignifies, by rain, for the nouriſhment of plants; ſo is the church by the goſpel, whoſe plants are an orchard of pomegranates, for the reviving and fructifying of thoſe who are planted in it; whereby they appear to be trees of righteouſneſs, and the planting of the Lord; and ſo are confirmed, ſettled, and eſtabliſhed in the houſe of God, and in the truths of the goſpel.

℣. 10. Thy congregation hath dwelt therein, &c.] That is, in the Lord's inheritance, in the midſt of his church and people. The word for congregation, ſignifies beaſts or living creatures [w]: ſome underſtand them of the Gentiles, who, before the goſpel came among them, were comparable to ſuch; but, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, being called and taken out by it, were put among the people of God, and dwelt in his inheritance. Tho' without any limitation, it may be applied to all that are quickned and made alive by the grace of God; to all that are written among the living in Jeruſalem; and particularly to the miniſters of the goſpel, who are ſignified by the four living creatures, in Ezekiel's viſion and in John's Revelation; tho' not to the excluſion of any living believer, who has a name and a place here, and who are fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God. Thou, O God, haſt prepared of thy goodneſs for the poor; bleſſings of goodneſs, ſpiritual bleſſings, bleſſings of grace and of glory; which flow from divine goodneſs, are in themſelves good and in their effects; and theſe were prepared in the covenant of grace and in Chriſt from all eternity; and that for perſons poor and mean, indigent and helpleſs; and ſo the goodneſs of God in preparing them, appears to be free and unmerited. The Targum is, "thou "haſt prepared an hoſt of angels to do good to "the poor of God." Arama interprets it of the manna.

℣. 11. The Lord gave the word, &c.] The word of the goſpel to his apoſtles. He committed the word of reconciliation to them; he intruſted them with it, as a ſacred depoſitum; he gave gifts unto them, qualifying them for the miniſtration of it; he gave them a commiſſion to preach it; and he gave them a door of utterance to ſpeak it as it ſhould be, and an opportunity to publiſh it. The Targum wrongly interprets it of the word of the law. Great was the company of thoſe that publiſhed it; there were in our Lord's time, twelve apoſtles and ſeventy diſciples, who were ſent out to preach the goſpel; and many more in the times of the apoſtles, and ſince. The word for company, ſignifies an army [x]: Chriſt's miniſters are ſoldiers, and war a good warfare; they have weapons which are not carnal, but ſpiritual and mighty through God, and they are made to triumph in Chriſt in every place. And the word rendered, thoſe that publiſhed, is in the feminine gender; not as ſuggeſting that women would be preachers of the goſpel under the New-Teſtament-diſpenſation, for that is forbidden, 1 Cor. xiv. 34. but in alluſion to the cuſtom of women in Iſrael, publiſhing the victories obtained by their armies and generals; ſee 1 Sam. xviii. 7. and it may be, it is uſed to denote the weakneſs of goſpel-miniſters in themſelves, who have the treaſure of the word put into their earthen veſſels, that the power may appear to be of God and not of man; ſo miniſters are called maidens, Prov. ix. 3. and this ſame word is uſed of them in Iſa. xl. 9. And it may be obſerved, that notwithſtanding it is of the ſaid gender, yet it is by the Targum interpreted of men, thus; "but Moſes "and Aaron evangelized the word of God to the "great army of Iſrael." And it may alſo be obſerved, that this word המבשרות which ſignifies a publiſhing of good news, is derived from a root which ſignifies fleſh; denoting, that the good tidings of the goſpel, or of peace and pardon, righteouſneſs, life and ſalvation, publiſhed in it, are by an incarnate Saviour, or through his aſſumption of our fleſh, and ſuffering in it.

℣. 12.

[s] גשם נדבות pluviam munificentiarum, Montanus; vel liberalitatum, Vatablus, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth; to the ſame purpoſe, the Tigurine verſion, Cocceius, Junius & Tremellius. [t] Dicitur de pluvia, Pſal. lxviii. 10 quæ effuſionem Spiritus ſancti, & præconium evangelii deſignat. Stockius, p. 660. [u] כוננתה paraſti eam, Michaelis; præparas, Gejerus. [w] חיתך τα ζωα σου, Sept. animalia tua, V. L. ſo Eth. Syr. Arab. & Cocceius; pecus tuum, Muſculus, and ſome in Vatablus. [x] צבא exercitus, Pagninus, Montanus, Gejerus, Cocceius.

℣. 12. Kings of armies did flee apace, &c.] Or, they fled, they fled [y]; or they flee, they flee. This is either the ſubject-matter of the word publiſhed, the words of the publiſhers ſo ſaying; or the effect of the publication of the goſpel: for though ſome, by theſe kings of armies, underſtand the apoſtles, either fleeing from place to place becauſe of perſecution, or running to and fro, as they interpret the words, to ſpread the goſpel; yet they rather intend the enemies of the goſpel, and the chief of them that oppoſed themſelves to it; namely, the Roman emperors and kings, and who fled before it; particularly at the time of the downfal of paganiſm, when they fled to the mountains and hills, and called upon them to hide them from Chriſt, Rev. vi. 15, 16. And ſhe that tarried at home divided the ſpoil; the church, compared to a woman that keeps at home, Titus ii. 5. who ſhared in the ſpoils taken out of the hands of Satan, and from among the Gentiles, even converted ſouls, brought unto her. What is promiſed to Chriſt, Iſa. liii. 12. is ſaid of the church; ſhe being made more than a conqueror through him, and ſharing in all his victories and ſpoils. It denotes the certain and eaſy ſucceſs of the goſpel-miniſtry, attended with a divine power, and the advantages thereof to the church of Chriſt; this was particularly true of the church in the times of Conſtantine.

℣. 13. Though ye have lien among the pots, &c.] Kimchi takes theſe words to be the words of the women, or of the pſalmiſt addreſſing the Iſraelites going out to war; that though they ſhould lie in a low, dark and diſagreeable place, in the camp, in the open field, expoſed to wind and weather; yet they ſhould be fair and beautiful, and be loaded with gold and ſilver, the ſpoil of the enemy. But Fortunatus Scacchus [z] refers them much better, to the encampment of the Iſraelites in their tents, and to the diſpoſition and order of their army going to battle: the body of the army in the middle, and the two wings, right and left, on each ſide; whoſe glittering armour of gold and braſs, the rays of the ſun ſtriking on them, are fitly reſembled by the colours on the wings and back of a dove. Another learned writer [a] thinks they are an addreſs to the wings of the dove; that is, to the dove itſelf, meaning the holy Spirit, expoſtulating with him how long he would dwell within the limits and borders of the land of Canaan; which was not long after the aſcenſion of Chriſt, for ſoon was the gift of the holy Ghoſt poured down upon the Gentiles. But rather they are an addreſs to the people of Iſrael; intimating, that though they had been in adverſity, and their lives had been made bitter with hard bondage, in morter and in brick, and in all manner of ſervice in the field; and had lain among the brick-kilns and furnaces when in Egypt; and in the times of the Judges had ſuffered much from their neighbours, by whom they were frequently carried captive; and had been in affliction in the times of Saul; yet now in proſperous circumſtances in the times of David, who had conquered their enemies, and enlarged their dominions, and reſtored peace; and eſpecially would be more ſo in the days of Solomon, when they enjoyed great plenty and proſperity, and ſilver was made to be as the ſtones of the ſtreet. Tho' it is beſt of all to apply the words to the church and people of God in goſpel-times; and they may deſcribe their ſtate and condition by nature and by grace, in adverſity and in proſperity: the former in this clauſe, in which there is an alluſion to ſcullions, or ſuch as lie among coppers and furnaces, and are black and ſooty; and ſo it deſcribes the Lord's people before converſion, who are black with original ſin and actual tranſgreſſions; who being tranſgreſſors from the womb, and as long as they live and walk in ſin, and have their converſation with the men of the world, may be ſaid to lie among the pots: and this may alſo be expreſſive of the church of Chriſt being in adverſity, and black with the ſun of perſecution ſmiting her; and ſhe might be ſaid to lie among the pots while the ten heathen perſecutions laſted, and alſo in the reign of Antichriſt; during which time the church is in the wilderneſs, and the witneſſes propheſy in ſackcloth. Yet ſhall they be as the wings of a dove covered with ſilver, and her feathers with yellow gold: alluding to the white, ſilver colour of ſome doves. Such were the white doves Charon of Lampſacum ſpeaks of [b], ſeen about Athos, which were like the white crow, Ovid calls [c], the ſilver fowl with ſnowy wings: and alſo it may be to the time when they become of a golden colour, at which time they are fit for ſacrifice, as the Jews [d] obſerve; or to the different appearances of them, according as the rays of light and of the ſun differently fall upon them. So the philoſopher [e] obſerves, that the necks of doves appear of a golden colour by the refraction of light. And this deſcribes the ſaints and people of God as they are by grace. They are comparable to the dove on many accounts: like doves of the valleys, every one of them mourn for their iniquities; like the trembling and fearful dove, tremble at the apprehenſions of divine wrath, and judgment to come under firſt convictions; and are fearful of their enemies, and of their own ſtate; are humble, modeſt and meek; think the worſt of themſelves, and the beſt of others; flee to Chriſt for refuge, and to ordinances for refreſhment; are chaſte and affectionate to Chriſt, and harmleſs and inoffenſive in their lives and converſations, Ezek. vii. 16. Hoſea xi. 11. Cant. iv. 1. Iſa. lx. 8. Matt. x. 16. Being as the wings of a dove covered with ſilver, may denote the purity of doctrine held by them; the words of the Lord being as ſilver purified ſeven times, Pſal. xii. 6. and the preciouſneſs and ſincerity of their faith, by which they mount up with wings as eagles; and the holineſs of their converſation, being, as becomes the goſpel of Chriſt: and being as the feathers of a dove covered with yellow gold, may denote their being adorned with the graces of the Spirit, as faith, hope and love; which are more precious than gold that periſheth, and are called chains of gold, Cant. i. 10. ſee 1 Pet. i. 7. or their being clothed with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, ſignified by gold of Ophir, and cloathing of wrought gold, Pſal. xlv. 9, 13. or their being enriched with the unſearchable, ſolid, ſubſtantial and durable riches of Chriſt, Rev. iii. 18. And both may deſcribe alſo the proſperous eſtates of the church, either in the firſt ages of Chriſtianity, when ſhe was clothed with the ſun, and had a crown of twelve ſtars on her head, Rev. xii. 1. or in the latter day, when her light will be come, and the glory of the Lord will riſe upon her; when her ſtones will be laid with fair colours, and her foundations with ſapphires; when ſhe ſhall have the glory of God upon upon her, and be as a bride adorned for her huſband, Iſa. lx. 1, 2. and liv. 11, 12. Rev. xxi. 9, 10, 11.

[y] דרון ידרון fugiebant, fugiebant, Pagninus, Montanus; fugerunt, fugerunt, Tigurine verſion, Muſculus. [z] Eleochriſm. Sacr. l. 3. c. 24. [a] Guſſet. Comment. Heb. p. 884. [b] Apud Ælian. Var. Hiſt. l. 1. c. 15. [c] Metamorph. l. 2. fab. 7. [d] Maimon. Iſſure Mizbeach, c. 3. ſ. 2. [e] Ariſtotel. de Color. c. 3. Vid. Lucret. l. 2. v. 800.

℣. 14. When the Almighty ſcattered kings in it, &c.] His inheritance, his congregation, the church, ℣. 9, 10. Which ſome underſtand of his diffuſing, and ſpreading and giving, in large numbers, miniſters and preachers of the goſpel, paſtors and teachers; who are kings and ſpiritual governors, are over churches, and have the rule over them in the Lord: and ſo Jarchi interprets them of the diſciples of the wiſe men. Or they may be underſtood of the Lord's bringing into his churches ſuch as are made kings and prieſts unto God, and in whoſe hearts grace reigns; and even of kings, in a literal ſenſe, who will be brought into the church in the latter day, Iſa. xlix. 23. and lx. 3, 11, 16. ſee ℣. 27, 29. Tho' they may be interpreted of wicked kings, and the deſtruction of them by it [f], the dove, the church of Chriſt; which will be done at the battle of Armageddon, at which time we read of the church being clothed in white, as follows; ſee Rev. xvi. 14, 16. and xix. 8, 14, 18, 19. The name of Almighty well agrees with Chriſt, Rev. i. 8. or Shaddai, who is ſufficient, all-ſufficient; and whoſe grace is ſufficient for his people, 2 Cor. xii. 9. It was white as ſnow in Salmon; a mountain near to Shechem, Judg. ix. 48. which ſeems to have had its name from the ſhady trees upon it; and which alſo, as it ſeems from hence, was ſometimes covered with ſnow; as was Lebanon, ſo called from the whiteneſs of the ſnow on it; and Olympus is called ſnowy by Homer, from the ſnow continually on it [g]: Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it, in darkneſs, or in the ſhadow of death; denoting, as Ainſworth obſerves, light in darkneſs, joy in tribulation: but rather, it may deſign the purity of the church and people of God, through the imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs to them, which is as fine linen, clean and white; and thro' his pardoning blood, whereby their ſcarlet and crimſon ſins are as white as wool, as white as ſnow; and thro' the ſanctifying grace of the Spirit, by which they are waſhed and cleanſed, and made all-glorious within; and thro' the holineſs of their lives and converſations, they hating the garment ſpotted with the fleſh; and waſhing their garments, and making them white in the blood of the Lamb: or they may be ſaid to be ſo, as having got the victory over all their enemies; and eſpecially this will be the caſe, when the kings of the earth will be ſcattered and deſtroyed by the almighty Saviour, Rev. vii. 9. and xix. 14.

℣. 15. The hill of God is as the hill of Baſhan, &c.] The church is the hill of God, an excellent and ſupereminent one, and in which he dwells, as is ſaid in the next verſe; called an hill for its viſibility, and eſpecially as it will be in the latter day, when it will be eſtabliſhed and exalted above the mountains and hills, the kingdoms of this world, Iſa. ii. 2. this is compared to the hill of Baſhan for fertility and fruitfulneſs; hence we read of the kine and bulls, the rams and lambs, and fatlings of Baſhan, and of the oaks thereof, Deut. xxxii. 14. Pſal. xxii. 12. Iſa. ii. 13. Ezek. xxxix. 18. Amos iv. 1. the ordinances of the church are green paſtures, where his people become fat and flouriſhing, Pſal. xxiii. 2. and xcii. 13, 14. An high hill as the hill of Baſhan; or an hill of eminences [h]; it had ſeveral tops, or little hills that roſe up from it; ſo the church of Chriſt, though but one hill or church in general, yet there are ſeveral little hills belong unto it, or particular congregational churches, of which it conſiſts: or a mountain abounding with cheeſe [i]; which fed much cattle, and theſe produced much milk, of which large quantities of cheeſe were made, and ſo is expreſſive of the fruitfulneſs of it.

℣. 16. Why leap ye, ye high hills? &c.] Meaning the kingdoms of this world that lift up themſelves above, and look with contempt upon the intereſt, kingdom, and church of Chriſt; lie in wait for it, leap upon it, inſult over it, and endeavour to cruſh and extirpate it; but all in vain; theſe high hills and mountains are nothing before Zerubbabel King of ſaints; his church is built on a rock, and the gates of hell cannot prevail againſt it; the little ſtone cut out of the mountain without hands will become a great mountain, and fill the whole earth, and break in pieces and conſume the kingdoms of it: the word רצד in the Arabic language, ſignifies to lie in wait, as Jarchi from R. Moſes Hadarſan obſerves; and to look out, and leap upon the prey; ſo R. Hai in Ben Melech ſays it has the ſignification of looking, obſerving, hoping, or waiting, in the Arabic language [k]. This is the hill which God deſireth to dwell in; as in Pſal. cxxxii. 13. the Word of the Lord, as the Targum; the eſſential Word, the Meſſiah: his deſire was towards his church and people, in eternity, in time, and now is; he has choſen and deſired them for his habitation, and in the midſt of them he delights to be, Rev. i. 13. Yea, the Lord will dwell in it for ever; he dwells in his church now by his gracious preſence; he will dwell in the new Jeruſalem-church-ſtate perſonally for the ſpace of a thouſand years; and after that he will dwell with, and among his people to all eternity; ſee Pſal. cxxxii. 14.

℣. 17. The chariots of God are twenty thouſand, &c.] By which are meant the angels, as the following clauſe ſhews; called chariots, becauſe they have appeared in ſuch a form, 2 Kings ii. 11. and vi. 17. and becauſe, like chariots of war, they are the ſtrength and protection of the Lord's people; and becauſe of their ſwiftneſs in doing his work; and becauſe they are for his honour and glory: they are the chariots of God, in which he rides about the world doing his will; they are the chariots in which Chriſt aſcended up to heaven, and in which he will deſcend at the laſt day; and in which he now fetches the ſouls of his people to him at death, and will make uſe of them at the reſurrection to gather them to him, when their bodies are raiſed by him: their number is very great, and in other places is mentioned as greater, Dan. vii. 10. Rev. v. 11. Chriſt ſpeaks of twelve legions of them, Matt. xxvi. 53. there is a multitude of them, and they are ſaid to be even innumerable, Luke ii. 13. Heb. xii. 22. which is obſerved, both for the glory of God, and for the ſafety of his people. Even thouſands of angels; the word for angels is only uſed in this place; Kimchi and Ben Melech take it to be one of the names of angels by which they were called: ſome derive it from a word which ſignifies peaceable and quiet; as expreſſive of the tranquil ſtate in which they are in heaven, always beholding the face of God there: others from a word which ſignifies ſharp, as Jarchi; and ſo refers to their being the executioners of God's wrath and vengeance on men, and alluding to a ſort of chariots with ſharp hooks uſed in war: others from a word which ſignifies to ſecond; theſe being

[f] בה per eam, vel propter eam, Gejerus.
[g] Iliad. 1. v. 420. & 18. v. 615.
[h] הר גבנים mons gibborum, Montanus; vel eminentiarum, Gejerus; monte frequente gibbis, Junius & Tremellius; mons faſtigiorum, Cocceius.
[i] Mons qui caſeis abundat, Tigurine verſion.
[k] Ratzad, inſidiatus fuit, uti prædæ leo, Golius, col. 991. Caſtel. col. 3633.

being the ſecond, or next to God, the chief princes; or, as Aben Ezra, it denotes the number of angels, even two thouſand; ſo the Targum, "the "chariots of God are two myriads, (or twenty "thouſand) of burning fires, two thouſand of angels lead them." The Lord is among them as in Sinai, in the holy place; that is, at the head of them, being their governor and commander, at whoſe beck they are, and ready to do his will; and he was among them when he aſcended to heaven, as it follows, being carried up by them; as he was among them at Sinai, when the law was given; for Chriſt was there then, Acts vii. 38. and attended with ten thouſands of his holy angels, by whom the law was ordained, ſpoken and given, Deut. xxxiii. 2. Acts vii. 53. Gal. iii. 19. Heb. ii. 2. which Sinai is called the holy place, from the preſence of God there, and the law given from it: or elſe the ſenſe is, that Chriſt is among the angels as in Sinai of old; ſo in the holy place, in Sion his holy hill, the church under the goſpel-diſpenſation, where there are an innumerable company of angels, Heb. xii. 22. according to the conſtruction of the word in the Hebrew text, it ſeems as if Sinai was in the holy place, the inſide of it being of cedar, like the Shittim wood that grew about Sinai [l]; or rather, the worſhip commanded and directed to on mount Sinai was performed in it.

℣. 18. Thou haſt aſcended on high, &c.] Which is to be underſtood, not of Moſes aſcending up to the firmament, as the Targum and Jarchi interpret it, of which we no where read; nor of David's going up to the high fortreſſes, as Aben Ezra; nor of God's aſcent from mount Sinai; but of Chriſt's aſcenſion to heaven, as the apoſtle cites and explains it in Eph. iv. 8, 9. which aſcenſion reſpects him as man, was not figurative, as in Gen. xvii. 22. but real and local, from earth to heaven, and was certain and viſible; he was ſeen to go up by angels and men; and becauſe of the certainty of it, it is here expreſſed in the paſt tenſe, though it was then future. Thou haſt led captivity captive; meaning either ſuch who had been captives, in which ſenſe the word is uſed, Pſal. cxxvi. i. and ſo may deſign either thoſe who had been priſoners in the grave, but were ſet free at Chriſt's reſurrection, and went with him in triumph to heaven; or all his people, whom he redeemed by his blood from that captivity and bondage they were in by nature; or rather, thoſe who led them captive are here meant by captivity; ſuch as ſin, Satan, the world, death, and every ſpiritual enemy, whom Chriſt conquered and triumphed over; the alluſion may be to public triumphs, when captives were led in chains, even kings and great men, that had captivated others: the words ſeem to be borrowed out of Judg. v. 12. Thou haſt received gifts for men; the gifts of the holy Spirit, qualifying men for the miniſtry of the goſpel, as they are interpreted by the apoſtle, Eph. iv. 11. theſe Chriſt received from his divine Father in human nature, when he aſcended up to heaven, in order to give them to men; and which he did in a very extraordinary manner on the day of Pentecoſt. The Targum and Syriac verſion render it, thou haſt given gifts to men; and the Arabic verſion, and he gave gifts to men, as the apoſtle, Eph. iv. 8. Yea, for the rebellious alſo; diſobedient and unbelieving [m], as all men are by nature, even God's elect, before converſion, Tit. iii. 3. who are not only called by grace, and have the bleſſings of grace beſtowed upon them; but ſome of them have gifts given them, whereby they are fitted to preach the goſpel to others, as Saul, the blaſphemer, perſecutor, and injurious; and ſome of thoſe among the Jews, that were concerned in the crucifixion of Chriſt: though ſome think the Gentiles are intended, on whom the holy Spirit was poured forth after our Lord's aſcenſion; and ſo the Targum interprets it of the rebellious, who become proſelytes, and return by repentance. That the Lord God might dwell among them; that is, that they, by the gifts and graces of the Spirit beſtowed on them, might become a fit habitation for God; or that they, the rebellious, being now partakers of the grace of God and his gifts, might dwell with the Lord God [n] in his churches; enjoy his divine preſence, and have communion with him in his word and ordinances.

℣. 19. Bleſſed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with benefits, &c.] With all ſpiritual bleſſings, with an abundance of grace, as well as with temporal mercies, for which he is, and ought to be praiſed day by day: ſo Aben Ezra and Kimchi ſupply the text, and ſuppoſe the word bleſſings or goodneſſes to be wanting; though the words may be rendered, bleſſed be the Lord day by day; he will bear us; or carry us [o]; as a father his child, or a ſhepherd his lambs; and ſo he does from the womb, even to hoary hairs; and therefore bleſſing and praiſe ſhould be aſcribed to him; ſee Iſa. xlvi. 3, 4. and lxiii. 9. or he will put a burden upon us [p]; meaning the burden of afflictions: theſe are of the Lord's laying upon his people; and he will lay no more upon them than he will enable them to bear; and will in his own time and way deliver them from them, and be the author of ſalvation to them, as follows; and therefore his name is to be praiſed, 1 Cor. x. 13. the Targum interprets it of the burdenſomneſs of the law; "bleſſed be the Lord "every day, he burdens us, adding precepts un-"to precepts." Even the God of our ſalvation. Selah. the author of temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal ſalvation, as Chriſt is.

℣. 20. He that is our God, &c.] Or God for us [q]; is on our ſide; and is the mighty God, able to ſave to the uttermoſt; is the God of ſalvation; or God for ſalvations [r]; for the obtaining of them for his people, and giving them to them, even of every kind. And unto God the Lord belong the iſſues from death; deliverance from it; Chriſt has aboliſhed it, and him that had the power of it; has delivered himſelf from it, and will deliver all his people from it, though they become ſubject to it, as well as from eternal death; for he has the keys of hell and death in his hands. Some render the words, to God the Lord belong the iſſues, or ways unto death [s]; he has various ways of bringing perſons to death, of deſtroying his and his peoples enemies; and ſo Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and Kimchi interpret it; though the following words ſeem to be oppoſed to theſe: the heathens had a notion, that the power of death belonged to God; hence they had a deity called the god of death, Dites [t].

℣. 21. But God ſhall wound the head of his enemies, &c.] Him who is the chief of his enemies, even even Satan the prince of devils, the god of the world, the father of the wicked Jews, all enemies of Chriſt; to wound, is the ſame as to bruiſe him as in Gen. iii. 15. and ſo the Targum here, "but "God ſhall break the head of his enemies;" diſappoint his ſchemes, blaſt his deſigns, cruſh his power and authority, demoliſh his empire, and eternally deſtroy him with the fire prepared for him and his angels; and the ſame may be applied to the man of ſin, and all other enemies of Chriſt, who is the divine perſon here, and all along ſpoken of; ſee Pſal. cx. 6. And the hairy ſcalp of ſuch an one as goeth on ſtill in his treſpaſſes; by whom may be meant Antichriſt: Jarchi interprets it of Eſau, who was an hairy man, and a figure of Antichriſt; and his hairy ſcalp may denote his fierceneſs and cruelty, appearing like a ſavage beaſt, drinking the blood of the ſaints; and like a thief and a robber, who uſed to let their hair grow long, ſhagged and entangled, to ſtrike terror into men they met with, Job v. 5. and alſo his pride and haughtineſs; he exalting himſelf above all that is called God, and opening his mouth in blaſphemy againſt him: and likewiſe it ſignifies his great power and authority, he having people, kingdoms and nations depending upon him, as hair on the head, and ſubject to him: and of him it may be truly ſaid, that he goes on ſtill in his treſpaſſes; in tyranny, idolatry, ſuperſtition, and will-worſhip; taking no notice of what God ſays by his witneſſes, nor any warning by what the eaſtern empire ſuffered by the Turks and Saracens; ſo as to repent of the works of his hands, of worſhipping idols of gold, ſilver, braſs and wood; nor of his murders, ſorceries, fornications and thefts; but ſtill perſiſting in them, until his, and the ſins of his followers, reach to heaven, Rev. ix. 20, 21. and xviii. 5. but the God-man, Chriſt Jeſus, will give him a deadly wound, of which he ſhall never be healed: this alſo holds true of all that perſiſt in a ſinful courſe of life without repentance; who are workers of iniquity, whoſe lives are one continued ſeries of ſinning; theſe will be puniſhed by Chriſt with everlaſting deſtruction.

[l] Vid. Texelii Phœnix, l. 3. c. 7. p. 281. [m] סוררים απειθουντες, Sept. non credentes, V. L. [n] לשכן ut habitent cum Jah, Jehovah, Piſcator; cum Deo, Gejerus; ut habitent pulchritudinem Dei, Cocceius. [o] יעמס לנו portat nos, Vatablus, Muſculus; bajulat nos, Cocceius. [p] Onus imponit nobis, Lutherus, Gejerus. [q] לנו האל Deus nobis, vel eſt nobis, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Piſcator. [r] אל למושעות Deus ad ſalutes, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [s] למות תוצאות ad mortem exitus, Pagninus, Montanus; mille viæ læthi, Lucan. [t] Macrob. in Somn. Scip. l. 1. c. 11.

℣. 22. The Lord ſaid, &c.] Within himſelf, in his own heart; he reſolved upon it in his mind; or he ſaid it in council and in covenant; he undertook and engaged to do what follows; or he ſpoke of it in promiſe and in prophecy, as what would be done. I will bring again from Baſhan; as he delivered his people from Og king of Baſhan formerly, Numb. xxi. 33—35. ſo he purpoſed and promiſed to ranſom them out of the hands of him that was ſtronger than they; to recover them from the ſtrong man armed, and deliver them from the power of darkneſs, and tranſlate them into his own kingdom, and ſave them from all the bulls of Baſhan; ſee Pſal. xxii. 14. to which text Jarchi refers in the expoſition of this; though ſome underſtand it of the fat and great ones of the earth, of the converſion of kings and princes, Pſal. xxii. 29. I will bring my people again from the depths of the ſea; out of the moſt wretched and deſperate condition, out of the depths of ſin and miſery; out of an helpleſs and hopeleſs ſtate, in which they were through the fall, and their actual tranſgreſſions: the alluſion is to the bringing of the children of Iſrael through the Red ſea, and out of the depths of it, unto dry land: the Targum interprets the whole of the reſurrection of the righteous, whether devoured by wild beaſts, or drowned in the ſea; ſee Rev. xx. 13. ſome interpret the paſſage of the Lord's gathering of his people, in effectual vocation, from the eaſt and from the weſt; from the eaſt, ſignified by Baſhan; and from the weſt, by the depths of the ſea; ſee Iſa. xliii. 5.

℣. 23. That thy foot may be dipped in the blood of thine enemies, &c.] This verſe is in connexion with ℣. 21. the 22d verſe being to be read in a parentheſis: the ſenſe is, that the Meſſiah would ſo wound the head and hairy ſcalp of his peoples enemies, and there ſhould be ſuch a large effuſion of blood, that their feet ſhould be dipped therein, Rev. xiv. 20. ſee the note on Pſal. lviii. 10. And the tongue of thy dogs in the ſame; who ſhould lick it up, as the dogs licked the blood of Jezebel, 1 Kings xxi. 19. 2 Kings ix. 35, 36. and ſo ſuch a carnage will be made of Antichriſt and his followers, that the fowls of the heavens will be called upon to eat the fleſh of kings, captains, and mighty ones, Rev. xix. 17, 18.

℣. 24. They have ſeen thy goings, O God, &c. In ſaving his people, and deſtroying his enemies. Even the goings of my God, my King, in the ſanctuary; The walk and converſation of Chriſt, when he was made fleſh, and dwelt among men; his manner of life and deportment; his works and miracles, his ſufferings, death, and reſurrection from the dead; all which his apoſtles were eye-witneſſes of; as alſo his going up to heaven, which was viſible to angels and men; likewiſe his progreſs and victorious expeditions in Judea, and in the Gentile world, by the miniſtry of the word, in which he went forth conquering, and to conquer; which ſenſe is confirmed by the following words: for Chriſt, who is God over all, the Lord and God of his people, and King of ſaints, is here, as throughout the pſalm, intended. The Targum interprets it of the path or goings of the divine Majeſty upon the ſea, which the houſe of Iſrael ſaw.

℣. 25. The ſingers went before, &c.] The apoſtles and miniſters of the word, the ſweet ſingers of Iſrael, the charmers that charm ſo very wiſely: the goſpel is a joyful ſound; it is like vocal muſic, harmonious and delightful; it is as a very lovely ſong of one that hath a pleaſant voice, as Ezekiel's miniſtry was, Ezek. xxxiii. 32. it is a voice of love, grace, and mercy, of peace, pardon and righteouſneſs, and of eternal life and ſalvation by Chriſt; it is as muſic in the ears of ſenſible ſouls, when ſounded forth, and ſung out clearly and diſtinctly by the faithful miniſters of it. The alluſion ſeems to be to ſingers going before armies, when marching to battle, or returning with victory; ſee 2 Chron. xx. 21, 28. The players on inſtruments followed after; ſo the ſweet ſtrains of the goſpel, the melodious notes, and diſtinguiſhing ſounds of it, as well as the praiſes of God's people, are, in the New Teſtament, ſignified by harps, and mens playing upon them, Rev. v. 8. and xiv. 2. and xv. 2. Amongſt them were the damſels playing with timbrels; or in the midſt of the virgins playing with timbrels"; or beating on tabrets; as women uſed to do when they met their kings returning from the conqueſt of their enemies; ſee 1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7. theſe may be the pure and primitive churches of Chriſt, and the members thereof, rejoicing at the preaching of the goſpel, and praiſing God for the bleſſings of grace in it; in the midſt of which the miniſters of the word ſung the new ſong of goſpel-truths: and who may be compared to damſels ſels or virgins for their beauty and comelineſs thro' Chriſt; for their relation to him, being betrothed unto him; and for their ſtrong and chaſte affection for him; for their incorruptneſs in doctrine and worſhip, and their uprightneſs in their lives and converſation, Rev. xiv. 4. the alluſion may be to Miriam and the women with her at the Red ſea, Exod. xv. 20. and the Targum interprets the whole verſe of Moſes and Aaron ſinging at the Red ſea, and of Miriam and the women playing with timbrels.

" בתוך עלמות in medio puellarum, Pagninus, Montanus; inter puellas, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Cocceius, Gejerus.

℣. 26. Bleſs ye God in the congregations, &c.] This was what they ſaid as they ſung and played; they called upon the churches, and the members of them, and upon one another, to bleſs the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, God manifeſt in the fleſh; not by invoking, or beſtowing a bleſſing on him, which cannot be, and of which he has no need; but by proclaiming him to be God over all, bleſſed for evermore, as he is in himſelf; and the perfections of his nature, by attributing all the bleſſings of nature, grace, and glory to him, in whom they are, and from whom they come; and by exerciſing faith upon him for them particularly, and for pardon, righteouſneſs, ſupplies of grace, and everlaſting ſalvation; and by giving him the glory of all, and aſcribing bleſſing and honour to him on account of them; which ſhould be done openly and publickly, in the ſeveral particular congregated churches of Chriſt; and this ſhews the pſalm ſtill refers to goſpel-times, in which only ſuch churches are. Even the Lord, from the fountain of Iſrael; or the Lord, who is of the fountain of Iſrael [w]; that is, whoſe natural deſcent is from Iſrael, or Jacob, as Chriſt's was according to the fleſh, Rom. ix. 5. though ſome take this to be a deſcription of the poſterity of Jacob, thoſe that go out from the fountain of Iſrael, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi; ſee Iſai. xlviii. 1. ſo the Tigurine verſion, and others; who are called upon to bleſs the Lord: but then it muſt be underſtood, not of the carnal Iſraelites, they rejected the Meſſiah, Jeſus, and called him accurſed; but the ſpiritual ſeed of Jacob, whether Jews or Gentiles; Iſraelites indeed, in whom is no guile. The Targum, and ſo Jarchi, interpret it of the ſeed of Iſrael; compare with this Luke i. 41, 44. the words may be read, for, or becauſe of the fountain of Iſrael [x]: God, who is the fountain of living waters; Chriſt, whoſe blood is the fountain opened for ſin and uncleanneſs; the Spirit, who, in the operations of his grace, is a well, or fountain of living water, ſpringing up unto eternal life; and all ſpiritual bleſſings, and the abundance of them, which the ſpiritual Iſrael of God enjoy, may be deſigned by this phraſe; and ſo be conſidered as the reaſon why God the Lord is to be bleſſed. Some underſtand it of the ſcriptures, from whence all divine knowledge, bleſſing and praiſe are derived; and others of the heart, and the abundance of it, from whence, and not with the lips only, men ſhould bleſs and praiſe the Lord.

℣. 27. There is little Benjamin, with their ruler, &c.] Or who is their ruler [y]; that is, in the congregations or churches, where he was a ruler; or in the proceſſion, the triumphal progreſs of Chriſt in Judea, and in the Gentile world, by the miniſtry of the word; where the ſingers and players of inſtruments, and damſels with timbrels, went in order: for not the tribe of Benjamin is meant, called little, becauſe Benjamin was Jacob's younger ſon; or becauſe it was greatly weakened and reduced at Gibeah, Judg. xx. 48. and was one of the ſmalleſt tribes in Iſrael; and Saul's family, who was the firſt king of Iſrael, the leaſt in that tribe, 1 Sam. ix. 21. though the Targum interprets it of the tribe; and ſo Jarchi; but the apoſtle Paul is here meant, who was of the tribe of Benjamin, Rom. xi. 1. Phil. iii. 5. was a young man when he was converted, Acts vii. 58. as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions have it here; was little in ſtature, as is generally reported of him, and as his name Paul may be thought to ſignify, and might be given him on that account; ſee 2 Cor. x. 10. and was little in his own eyes, leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints, and the chief of ſinners; one born out of due time, and unworthy to be called an apoſtle; as well as he was little and contemptible in the eyes of others; yet he was greatly honoured by Chriſt, had an authority from him, was a ruler in his churches; ſet in the firſt place there, made an apoſtle, and was an apoſtle of the Gentiles, and not a whit behind the very chief of the apoſtles; and he was a principal in this progreſs, and therefore is named firſt: he was a choſen veſſel to bear the name of Chriſt, and carry it into the Gentile world; he travelled and laboured more abundantly than the reſt, and preached the goſpel fully from Jeruſalem round about to Illyricum. The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, render it, there was Benjamin the younger in an extaſy, or trance, as the apoſtle Paul was, Acts ix. 9. and xxii. 17. 2 Cor. xii. 2—4. but our verſion is beſt. The princes of Judah, and their council; or company, as Kimchi; their churches, or congregations over which they preſided, or were the means of gathering; theſe were the apoſtles, ſome of which were of the tribe of Judah, of which tribe Chriſt was, and ſo muſt be thoſe that are called his brethren, Matt. xiii. 55. Acts i. 14. theſe were princes, not only in common with other chriſtians, by adoption and regeneration, but by their office, being apoſtles, and over others in the Lord; and beſides the church at Jeruſalem, where James preſided, there were other churches in Judea, which had ſpiritual guides and governors over them; ſee Heb. xiii. 7, 17. and ſo the Septuagint verſion, and thoſe that follow it, render the words, the princes of Judah, their governors; and ſo Aben Ezra interprets them, and obſerves that regem in Zech. vii. 2. ſo ſignifies; to which the ſenſe of R. Menachem in Jarchi agrees, who renders it their purpled ones; ſo Cocceius; but Guſſetius [z] renders it their ſtoning; who ſtoned thoſe that preached the goſpel to them; ſee Matt. xxi. 35. and xxiii. 37. or ſtoned their enemies, conquered them; or their ſtone [a], the Meſſiah, that ſprung from Judah, Gen. xlix. 24. Pſal. cxviii. 22. The princes of Zebulun, and the princes of Naphtali; the reſt of the apoſtles, who were of Galilee, in which country lay the tribes of Zebulun and Naphtali; ſuch as Peter, Andrew, James and John, Philip and Nathaniel, ſee Matt. iv. 13—21. John i. 44—46.

℣. 28. Thy God hath commanded thy ſtrength, &c.] Which is either an apoſtrophe, or an addreſs to the Meſſiah, as in Pſal. xlv. 7. declaring, that as his God and Father had purpoſed and promiſed to ſend forth, ſo he had ſent forth the rod of his ſtrength out of Sion, Pſal. cx. 1, 2. that is, his goſpel, both into the ſeveral cities of Judea, and into the Gentile world, where it was the power of God

[w] ממקור ישראל qui eſt ex fonte Iſraelis, i. e. natus ex ſemine Iſraelis, Tillius & Vitringa apud Michael. vel propter fontem Iſrael, Gejerus. [x] Ob Cnlus.; ſo Tigurine verſion, Coccius. [y] רדם dominans eos, Pagninus, Montanus, Gejerus; dominator eorum, Muſ- [z] Ebr. Comment. p. 777. [a] Vid. Teelman. Explic. Parabol. p. 312.

God unto ſalvation, both to Jew and Gentile: or elſe theſe words are ſpoken to the churches and congregations, in whom the Lord's name was to be bleſſed; or to the princes, rulers, and governors of them before mentioned, ſhewing that the Lord has made good his promiſe to them, that as their day was, their ſtrength ſhould be; and it was owing to their being ſtrengthened by him that they walked up and down in his name, doing his work, and preaching his goſpel, both to Jews and Gentiles; to which they reply by petition, Strengthen, O God, that which thou haſt wrought for us; which, if underſtood of the apoſtles, princes and rulers, refers to the work of preaching the goſpel, and the ſucceſs of it, deſiring it might be more and more confirmed; and to the ſettlement of chriſtianity, in the pagan world, and alſo to the work of the reformation from popery in later times; compare with this Rev. iii. 2. if of the churches, and the members thereof, it may reſpect the carrying on, and finiſhing the work of grace in them. It is rendered in us by the Septuagint, and others; ſee Iſai. xxvi. 12. for this work ſometimes ſeems to be very low and weak, and needs ſtrengthening, and it is God only that can do it, and he will do it, 1 Pet. v. 10. and this ſhews that the grace of God is not only neceſſary at firſt converſion, but to be continued for the performing of the work of grace until the day of Chriſt.

℣. 29. Becauſe of thy temple at Jeruſalem, &c.] Not the material temple there, which was not in being in David's time, but was built by his ſon, and deſtroyed by Nebuchadnezzar; and though it was rebuilt by Zerubbabel, repaired by Herod, and was the Meſſiah's temple, into which he entered as the Lord and proprietor of it, Mal. iii. 1. yet was quickly after his time demoliſhed, and will never be rebuilt more; but the Meſſiah's ſpiritual temple, of which he is the builder, foundation, and corner-ſtone; the materials of which are believers in him, and it is for his ſervice, worſhip and glory: and becauſe of Jeruſalem [b], as it may be tranſlated; by which alſo the church of Chriſt is meant, which is the heavenly Jeruſalem, the Jeruſalem which is above, and free, the mother of us all, the city of the great King, the place of divine worſhip, and well fortified by the power and grace of God. The words may be rendered above Jeruſalem [c], and connected, either with the preceding verſe, and ſo point at the place, heaven, the temple, and palace of the Meſſiah; from whence ſpiritual health and ſtrength are deſired, and may be expected; or with the following words, and the ſenſe be, from, or out of thy temple in Jeruſalem; even out of the material temple, the goſpel ſhould be preached, as it was by the apoſtles on the day of Pentecoſt; and ſo the word of the Lord went out from thence, and from Jeruſalem into Judea, and ſo into the Gentile world, where it is continued, and will be until the kings of the earth ſhall be converted, as follows. Shall kings bring preſents unto thee; that is, ſuch as ſhould become chriſtians, as Conſtantine and others, in the earlier ages of chriſtianity; who brought their riches and wealth to Chriſt, and into his church, with a deſign for the good and welfare of it, though it proved otherwiſe; and as many will in the latter day, who being converted, will bring preſents to the King Meſſiah, join his churches, and be their nurſing fathers; ſee Pſal. lxxii. 10, 11. Iſai. xlix. 23. and lx. 3, 11, 16. and who will bring their glory and honour, and that of the nations, into the new Jeruſalem-church-ſtate, Rev. xxi. 24, 26. and it will be becauſe of his church and people, and for their good and welfare, as well as for the glory and honour of Chriſt, that thoſe preſents will be brought; and which will not only be theirs, their good things, but themſelves, whom they will preſent to the Lord, as living and acceptable ſacrifices, Rom. xii. 1. the Targum is, "out "of thy temple thou ſhalt receive offerings; "upon Jeruſalem thy ſhekinah dwells; out of "their palaces kings ſhall bring unto thee ſacri-"fices."

℣. 30. Rebuke the company of ſpear-men, &c. Or of the reed [d]; that is, men that uſe and fight with ſpears, like to reeds, as Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it. Aben Ezra ſays, that ſpears are ſo called in the Kedarene, or Arabian language; and the Arabians uſe a ſort of reed for a ſpear, as Mr Caſtel out of Avicenna obſerves [e], and Pliny [f] ſays they are uſed for ſpears: or rather the words ſhould be rendered, rebuke, reſtrain, deſtroy the wild beaſt, or beaſts of the reed [g]; as the Syriac, Septuagint, and Vulgate Latin verſions, and others, render it: the alluſion is to ſuch kind of creatures as lions in the thickets of Jordan; ſee Jer. xlix. 19. and the note there; and the behemoth, that lies under the covert of reeds, Job xl. 21. or as the crocodile in the river Nile, and other rivers of Egypt, which abounded with flags and reeds, in which ſuch creatures lay; ſee Iſa. xix. 6, 7. and xxxv. 6. and xxxvi. 6. perhaps the hippopotamus, or river-horſe, is referred to; ſo may deſign an inſidious, cruel, and tyrannical prince; ſuch an one as Pharaoh king of Egypt, Iſa. xxvii. 1. a type of Antichriſt, and who ſeems to be here meant; for as Rome, for it wickedneſs, cruelty, and idolatry, is ſpiritually called Egypt, Rev. xi. 8. ſo the Roniſh Antichriſt is the beaſt aſcending out of the bottomleſs pit; and is an inſidious creature, lies in wait to deceive, puts on the maſk and vizor of chriſtianity; has two horns, like a lamb in his eccleſiaſtic capacity; lies covered with the reeds of the traditions, inventions, and the doctrines of men; and teaches men to truſt in the ſtaff of a broken reed, in their own merits, and the merits of others. Jarchi interprets it of Eſau, who is like to a wild boar that dwells among the reeds; and the Talmud [h] interprets it of a beaſt that dwells among reeds, and the Gloſs explains it of the nation of Amalek; the Turks, according to ſome, are meant. The multitude of bulls; the ſecular powers of the beaſt of Rome; the antichriſtian ſtates, their kings and princes, comparable to theſe creatures for their great ſtrength, power and authority, and for their fierceneſs and furiouſneſs in perſecuting the people of God: theſe are horned creatures, the ten horns of the beaſt, in his civil and ſecular capacity, with which he puſhes at the ſaints, caſts them down, and tramples upon them; ſee Pſal. xxii. 13. Ezek. xxxix. 18. compared with Rev. xix. 18. With the calves of the people; or the people comparable to calves for their weakneſs, folly, and ſtupidity; theſe are the common people under the government and influence of the kings and princes of the earth; the people, multitudes, nations and tongues, over whom the antichriſtian harlot ſits, rules and reigns: this phraſe ſhews that the whole is to be taken, not in

[b] על ירושלם propter Jeruſchalaima, Junius & Tremellius. [c] Super Jeruſalaim, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus.
[d] חית קנה congregationem calami, Pagninus. [e] Lexic. Polyglott. col. 3376. [f] Nat. Hiſt. l. 16. c. 36.
[g] Feram cannæ, Montanus; beſtiam arundineti, Cocceius; feram vel beſtiam arundinis, Gejerus, Michaelis. [h] T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 118. 2.

in a literal, but figurative ſenſe. Till every one ſubmit himſelf with pieces of ſilver; that is, rebuke them by thy word, or by thy providences, until they become ſenſible of their ſins, repent of them, and ſubmit themſelves to Chriſt; and bring with them their wealth and ſubſtance, and lay it at his feet for the uſe of his intereſt, as a teſtification of their ſubjection to him: but as this is not to be expected from the perſons before deſcribed, at leaſt not from every one of them; the words require another ſenſe, and are to be conſidered as a continued deſcription of the perſons to be rebuked, and may be rendered, even every one that treads with pieces of ſilver [k]; that walks proudly and haughtily, being decorated with gold and ſilver on their garments; ſo the Romiſh Antichriſt is ſaid to be decked, her popes, cardinals and biſhops, with gold and precious ſtones, Rev. xvii. 4. or every one that humbles himſelf for pieces of ſilver [l], as the word is rendered in Prov. vi. 3. that lies down to be trampled upon for the ſake of temporal advantage; and ſo it deſcribes the paraſites and flatterers of the man of ſin, who crouch unto him, take his mark in their hands, or foreheads, that they may be allowed to buy and ſell; all theſe, it is deſired, God would rebuke, not in love, but with flames of fire, as he will ſooner or later; for when the kings of the earth are become chriſtians, as in the preceding verſe, God will put it into their hearts to hate the whore, and burn her fleſh with fire. Scatter thou the people that delight in war; as Antichriſt, and the antichriſtian ſtates do: they take delight in making war with the ſaints, and in ſlaying of them, to whom power has been given ſo to do; with whoſe blood they have been made drunk, and have took as much pleaſure in the ſhedding of it, as a drunken man does in indulging himſelf to exceſs in liquor; but theſe in God's own time ſhall be ſcattered, when Chriſt the Lamb ſhall fight againſt them with the ſword of his mouth, and ſhall utterly deſtroy them; ſee Rev. xiii. 7. and xvii. 6, 14. and xix. 15—21.

℣. 31. Princes ſhall come out of Egypt, &c.] The Vulgate Latin and all the Oriental verſions render it, ambaſſadors. This verſe is a prophecy of the converſion of the Gentiles, under the names of Egypt and Ethiopia; which will be at the ſame time that the kings of the earth will become Chriſtians, and Antichriſt will be deſtroyed. The goſpel is ſaid to be preached in Egypt by Mark the Evangeliſt; and no doubt but there were converſions there in the firſt times of the goſpel; but there will be more in the latter day; ſee Pſal. lxxxvii. 3, 4. and the whole 19th chapter of Iſaiah. Unleſs we underſtand this of kings and princes, that ſhall leave the communion of the church of Rome, which is ſpiritually and myſtically Egypt, and join themſelves with the true churches of Chriſt; ſee Rev. xi. 8. and xviii. 4. The converſion of every ſinner, is a coming out of Egypt; it is a call of them out of darkneſs and bondage, worſe than that of Egypt, into light and liberty, when they are ſet among princes, even the princes of Chriſt's people. Ethiopia ſhall ſoon ſtretch out her hands unto God: the goſpel is ſaid to be preached in Ethiopia by the Evangeliſt Matthew, and alſo by Matthias, who ſucceeded Judas in the apoſtleſhip; by means of whoſe miniſtry there is reaſon to conclude, ſome were converted: and we have an inſtance of a famous Ethiopian, that was converted and baptized by Philip, Acts viii. 27. and who very likely carried the goſpel into this country, and ſpread it: ſo that this prophecy began to have its fulfilment then, but will have a greater hereafter; ſee Pſal. lxxxvii. 4. All men are like Ethiopians, even God's elect, in a ſtate of nature and unregeneracy: they are black with original ſin and actual tranſgreſſions; and can no more remove this blackneſs, than the Ethiopian can change his ſkin, Jer. xiii. 23. They are like them, idolaters, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures, the idols of their own hearts; are in a ſtate of diſtance, afar off from God and Chriſt, and from his people, word and ordinances; and are enemies in their minds by wicked works, yea enmity itſelf, and ſtretch out their hands againſt God; but when they are called and converted, and made ſenſible of their ſtate, then they ſtretch out their hands unto God, as a geſture of ſorrow, Jer. iv. 31. Lam. i. 17. expreſſing their ſorrow for ſin, as committed againſt God, and becauſe of the evil that is in it; and look to Chriſt, and ſtretch out their hands to him, whom they have pierced, and mourn; and as a prayer-geſture, Job xi. 13. For as ſoon as a man is converted, he prays and cries to God for pardoning grace and mercy, and to be cleanſed from his ſin, and to be openly received into his favour, and to enjoy communion with him; and as the geſture of a man in the utmoſt danger, who ſtretches out his hand to lay hold on any thing to ſave him; and ſo a ſinner, ſenſible of its danger, and ſeeing Chriſt and ſalvation in him, it ſtretches out its hand, lays hold on him, and will have him and no other to be its Saviour, and receives his righteouſneſs, and grace out of his fulneſs; and as the geſture of one that is conquered, reſigning up himſelf into the victor's hands, as a token of ſubmiſſion, peace and reconciliation [m]; ſo ſinners, in the day of Chriſt's power upon them, are made willing to ſubmit and give up themſelves to him. In the Hebrew text it is, ſhall make her hands to run unto God [n]; that is, with an offering, gold or ſome treaſure, to bring it unto God; as Aben Ezra, Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it; which may very well be underſtood of the offering of themſelves, as well as of the ſpiritual ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe. The Targum is, "the ſons of Ham ſhall come, the great "men out of Egypt, to be made proſelytes; the "children of Cuſh (or Ethiopia) ſhall run to ſtretch "out their hands in prayer to God." Jarchi's note is, "and then when thou ſhalt deſtroy Eſau (his "poſterity) and the King Meſſiah ſhall ariſe, they "ſhall bring to thee gifts out of Ethiopia." And ſo he owns this to be a prophecy of the Meſſiah; and ſo it is applied to the times of the Meſſiah, and to the nations bringing gifts to him, in the Talmud [o], and other Jewiſh writings [p].

℣. 32. Sing unto God, ye kingdoms of the earth, &c.] Not only the Egyptian and Ethiopian kingdoms, but all the kingdoms of the world; which will now be converted to Chriſt, and become his, even all the papal, pagan and mahometan kingdoms; ſee Rev. xi. 15. Theſe are called upon to ſing ſongs and hymns of praiſe to Chriſt, who is God, for redemption by him, and ſalvation in him; and for their deliverance from all the darkneſs and deluſions, under which they formerly were. O ſing praiſes unto the Lord. Selah. the Lord of all, the Lord

[k] מחרפס gloriantem ſe, Montanus, Vatablus; calcantem, Rivet. [l] Ob fragmina argenti, Gejerus. [m] Vid. Cæſar. Comment. de Bello Gallic. l. 7. c. 48. Oremus pacem & dextras tendamus inermes. Virgil. Æneid. 11. [n] ידיה faciet currere, Pagninus, Montanus, Gejerus, Michaelis. [o] T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 118. 2. [p] Shemot Rabba, ſ. 35. fol. 136. 4.

Lord of lords, the Head of the church, and Saviour of the body; and whom thoſe converted nations will acknowledge to be their Lord and King; and make their homage, and bring their tribute of praiſe to him, for breaking the antichriſtian yokes that were upon them, and freeing them from the tyranny and bondage with which they were oppreſſed: this will be fulfilled in the latter day; ſee Rev. xi. 15, 16, 17. and xv. 2, 3, 4. and xix. 1, 2.

℣. 33. To him that rideth upon the heaven of heavens, which were of old, &c.] Or eaſtward [q]; the firſt, ſecond and third heavens, which were created from the beginning of time by Chriſt himſelf, Pſal. cii. 25. compared with Heb. i. 10. Theſe he rode upon when he aſcended on high, even far above all heavens, as the apoſtle ſays, Epheſ. iv. 10. and ſo above the heaven of heavens, when he was made higher than they, and both Lord and Chriſt; and placed his throne in them, and from thence exerciſes his government over the whole world: and it may be obſerved, that it was from mount Olivet, which was to the eaſt of Jeruſalem, that Chriſt aſcended, and ſo to the eaſtern part of the heavens, Acts i. 12. Zech. xiv. 4. ſee Rev. vii. 2. Lo, he doth ſend out his voice; which is his goſpel, for that is the voice of Chriſt; which he utters by his miniſters, and which his ſheep, his people, hearken unto, and can diſtinguiſh from the voice of a ſtranger. This is a voice of love, grace and mercy; it ſpeaks of righteouſneſs, peace, pardon and ſalvation by him, and is very joyful and comfortable to hear. This he ſent out by his apoſtles into all the earth, after his aſcenſion to heaven; and which he has been, more or leſs, ſending out in one place or another, by his miniſters, ever ſince; and in the latter day will ſend it out more clearly, fully and largely, by a ſett of miniſters he will raiſe up for that purpoſe. And that a mighty voice; or, a voice of ſtrength [r]; a ſtrong and powerful voice, ſuch as the goſpel is, when accompanied with the power and Spirit of God. It is a ſoul-ſhaking and awakening voice; it is an heart-melting and an heart-breaking one; it is a quickning and an enlightning voice; it quickens dead ſinners, gives life unto them, and the entrance of it gives light to dark minds: it is a ſoul-charming and alluring one; it draws to Chriſt, engages the affections to him, and fills with unſpeakable delight and pleaſure. The Targum interprets this of the voice of the Spirit of prophecy; Aben Ezra underſtands this voice as ſaying what follows.

℣. 34. Aſcribe ye ſtrength unto God, &c.] The Meſſiah; by aſſerting him to be the mighty God, even the Almighty; by attributing works of ſtrength and power to him: ſuch as the creation of all things; upholding all things in their being; the redemption and preſervation of his people; the reſurrection of the dead, &c. by applying to him, and exerciſing faith on him for ſpiritual ſtrength, and giving him the glory of it: ſo the Targum, "give "the glory of ſtrength to God." Moreover, this may be underſtood of aſcribing dominion and power to him by the kingdoms of the earth, who are here addreſſed, when they ſhall be converted to him; and who, upon this enlargement of his kingdom, will be congratulated by his people, for taking to himſelf his great power and reigning, Rev. xi. 15, 16, 17. His excellency is over Iſrael; the ſpiritual Iſrael, ſuch who are Iſraelites indeed. Over theſe his glorious Majeſty in his kingdom rules; they are ſubject to him, and acknowledge him for their King; and among them is his ſhekinah, or divine preſence. Or over Iſrael, literally underſtood; when they ſhall, as at this time the prophecy refers to, be all called, converted and ſaved: they ſhall ſeek the Lord their God, and David their King, and he ſhall be Prince over them. And his ſtrength is in the clouds; which are round about him, the chariots in which he rides, and in which he ſhews his ſtrength; by ſending forth from thence the rain of his ſtrength, the terrible lightning and thunder. In theſe he went up to heaven, and in theſe he will come again to judgment. They may be myſtically underſtood of the miniſters of the goſpel, eſpecially in the latter day, who may be compared to clouds for their numbers, they will then be many; for their ſwiftneſs in moving to and fro, and ſpreading the goſpel; and for their being full of the doctrines of grace, comparable to rain; ſee Iſa. v. 6. And the Lord's ſtrength will be ſeen in them, who will greatly ſtrengthen them to do their work; his ſtrength will be made perfect in their weakneſs; the excellency of the power attending their miniſtrations, to the large converſion of ſinners, will appear to be of God, and not of man.

℣. 35. O God, thou art terrible, &c.] In his judgments and acts of vengeance, on Antichriſt and the antichriſtian ſtates; being the Lion of the tribe of Judah, that will break them to pieces as a potter's veſſel: or reverend [s]; to be feared and worſhipped by his ſaints. Out of thy holy places; both out of heaven, the habitation of his holineſs, by angels and glorified ſaints there; and out of all his churches, the ſeveral aſſemblies of them, among whom he is greatly to be feared and adored: the Targum interprets it of the houſe of the ſanctuary. The God of Iſrael is he that giveth ſtrength and power unto his people; his peculiar covenant-people, his Iſrael he is the God of. Theſe are weak, and encompaſſed about with infirmities; he has ſtrength in himſelf for them; he has promiſed it to them, and he gives it to them as a pure gift and unmerited favour of his. It may be underſtood of the great degree of ſtrength that will be given them in the latter day; when a ſmall one ſhall be a ſtrong nation, and the feeble ſhall be as David, and David as God, as the angel of the Lord, Iſa. lx. 21. Zech. xii. 8. and of the dominion and greatneſs of the kingdom under the whole heaven; which will be given to the ſaints of the moſt High, Dan. vii. 27. Bleſſed be God: the pſalm is concluded with an aſcription of bleſſing to the Meſſiah, who is God bleſſed for evermore; and who, as Mediator, is the promiſed ſeed, in whom all nations were to be bleſſed, and now will be; ſee Rev. v. 12, 13.

[q] קדם ab oriente, Pagninus; ad orientem, V. L. ſo Sept. Eth. Syr. Arab. [r] קול עז vocem fortitudinis, Pagninus, Montanus. [s] נורא venerandus, Michaelis.

PSALM

PSALM LXIX.

To the chief muſician, upon Shoſhannim, A pſalm of David.

OF the word ſhoſhannim, ſee the note upon the title of Pſal. xlv. The Targum renders it, "concerning the removal of the ſanhedrim;" which was about the time of Chriſt's death. The Talmudiſts [t] ſay, that forty years before the deſtruction of the temple, the ſanhedrim removed, they removed from the paved chamber, &c. But it can hardly be thought that David propheſied of this affair; nor of the captivity of the people of Iſrael, as the Targum, Aben Ezra, Kimchi, Arama and R. Obadiah interpret it: and ſo Jarchi takes the word ſhoſhannim to ſignify lilies, and applies it to the Iſraelites, who are as a lily among thorns. But not a body of people, but a ſingle perſon is ſpoken of, and in ſorrowful and ſuffering circumſtances; and if the Jews were not blind, they might ſee that they are the enemies of the perſon deſigned, and the evil men from whom he ſuffered ſo much. And indeed what is ſaid of him cannot be ſaid of them, nor of any other perſon whatever but the Meſſiah: and that the pſalm belongs to Chriſt, and to the times of the goſpel, is abundantly evident from the citations out of it in the New Teſtament; as ℣. 4. in John xv. 25. ℣. 9. in John ii. 17. and Rom. xv. 3. ℣. 21. in Matt. xxvii. 34, 38. John xix. 28, 29. ℣. 22, 23. in Rom. xi. 9, 10. ℣. 25. in Acts i. 16, 20. The inſcription of the pſalm in the Syriac verſion is, "a pſalm of David, according to "the letter, when Shemuah (Sheba) the ſon of "Bichri, blew a trumpet, and the people ceaſed "from following after him (David); but the pro-"phecy is ſaid concerning thoſe things which the "Meſſiah ſuffered, and concerning the rejection of "the Jews." And Aben Ezra interprets the laſt verſe of the days of David, or of the days of the Meſſiah.

℣. 1. Save me, O God, &c.] The petitioner is Chriſt; not as a divine perſon, as ſuch he is bleſſed for ever, and ſtands in no need of help and aſſiſtance; but as man, and in diſtreſſed and ſuffering circumſtances. As a prieſt, it was part of his work to intercede, as well as to offer ſacrifice; and though he did not offer a ſin-offering for himſelf, yet he offered up ſupplications, with ſtrong cryings and tears; and as the ſurety of his people, he prayed, in point of right and juſtice, both for himſelf and them; ſee John xvii. 4, 5, 24. The perſon petitioned is God the Father, who was able to ſave him, and always heard him; and did in this petition, Heb. v. 7. which perfectly agrees with ſome petitions of Chriſt, recorded in the New Teſtament, John xii. 27. Matth. xxvi. 39. Theſe ſhew the weakneſs of the human nature, the weight of ſin upon him, and his ſenſe of the wrath of God; and which notwithſtanding, were made with limitations and reſtrictions, and even with a correction. Moreover, this may alſo deſign help and aſſiſtance from his divine Father, which was promiſed him, and he expected and had, in the acceptable time, in the day of ſalvation: and he was ſo ſaved in death, as that he aboliſhed that, and deſtroyed him that had the power of it; and was quickly raiſed from the grave, and thereby ſaved out of it. And this he could have done himſelf, but he would be ſaved in a legal way, in a way of juſtice; and as a point of honour, when he had done the work, he, as a ſurety, engaged to do. The reaſons enforcing this petition follow: For the waters are come in unto my ſoul; the Meſſiah repreſents his caſe, in theſe words and in the following verſe, as like to that of a man ſtanding up to his chin in water, and the waters running into his mouth, juſt ſuffocating him; and that in a miry place, where he could not ſet his feet firm, nor get himſelf out; and even overflowed with the floods, and immerſed in the deep waters, and ſo in the moſt imminent danger. Theſe overwhelming waters may ſignify the floods of ungodly men that encompaſſed him, the aſſembly of the wicked that incloſed him; and the proud waters that went over his ſoul, the Gentiles and people of Iſrael, that were gathered againſt him to deſtroy him; and ſo the Targum interprets it of the camp of ſinners, that preſſed him on every ſide, as water: the whole poſſe of devils may alſo be deſigned, for now was the hour and power of darkneſs; Satan, and his principalities and powers, came in like a flood upon him, to ſwallow him up; innumerable evils, the ſins of his people, came upon him from every quarter, and preſſed him ſore; the curſes of the law fell upon him, which may be compared to the bitter water of jealouſy that cauſed the curſe. Theſe entred into him, when he was made a curſe for his people; and the wrath of God went over him, and lay hard upon him, and came about him like water, into his very ſoul, which made him exceeding ſorrowful, even unto death.

℣. 2. I ſink in deep mire, where there is no ſtanding, &c.] Which ſignifies not deſpair of mind, but difficult and diſtreſſed circumſtances; the Meſſiah now bearing the filthy ſins of his people, and the puniſhment of them, and ſo was got into the horrible pit, the mire and clay; ſee the note on Pſal. xl. 2. I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me; as afflictions are often compared to waters in ſcripture; Chriſt's ſorrows and ſufferings are very aptly ſignified by deep waters and overflowing floods; and therefore rightly called a baptiſm, as by himſelf, Luke xii. 50. when he was as one immerſed in and overwhelmed with water.

℣. 3. I am weary of my crying, &c.] In his diſtreſs; when, bearing the puniſhment both of loſs and ſenſe, he cried unto God; he prayed earneſtly, with great intenſeneſs and fervency of ſpirit; he offered ſupplications, with ſtrong cryings and tears, inſomuch that he calls it a roaring: and whereas there was a ſeeming delay of anſwer to his cries, he cried till he was weary of crying; and yet it is remarkable, that his laſt cry was with a loud voice, which ſurpriſed the centurion; ſee Pſal. xxii. 1, 2. Matt. xxvii. 46. My throat is dried; with crying, ſo that he was hoarſe; or burnt [u], with inward heat of a fever, which uſually attended perſons crucified; ſee Pſal. xxii. 15. Mine eyes fail, while I wait for my God; God the Father was the God of Chriſt, as he was man; he prepared a body for for him, and anointed his human nature with the holy Spirit; he ſupported and upheld him: and as ſuch Chriſt loved him, believed in him, prayed to him, and waited and looked for help and ſalvation from him; this being delayed, his eyes failed with intenſe looking about for it, as well as with grief and tears. Ainſworth obſerves, that failing of the eyes is one of the curſes of the law, Lev. xxvi. 16. Deut. xxviii. 32. and it ſhews how in every thing Chriſt was made a curſe for his people.

[t] T Bab. Avoda Zara, fol. 8. 2. & Roſhhaſhanah, fol. 31. 1, 2.

[u] חרך aduſtum, Montanus, Gejerus, Michaelis; ſo Ainſworth.

℣. 4. They that hate me without a cauſe, &c.] As the Jews did; ſee John xv. 18—25. for he did no injury to the perſons or properties of men; but went about continually doing good, both to their ſouls and bodies; ſo that he merited their higheſt eſteem and love, and not their hatred; and yet they were his implacable enemies; ſee Luke xix. 14, 27. Are more than the hairs of mine head; they were a multitude that came to take him in the garden; and it was the multitude, that the prieſts and phariſees inſtigated to aſk for the releaſe of Barabbas, and the crucifixion of Jeſus; and a vaſt number of people followed him to the croſs, and inſulted him on it; the Gentiles and the people of Iſrael were gathered together againſt him. They that would deſtroy me; as the Jews ſought to do often before his time was come. Being mine enemies wrongfully; without cauſe, as before; or through lies and falſhoods told of him, and ſpread about concerning him: Are mighty; lively and ſtrong, as David's enemies were, Pſal. xxxviii. 19. The great men of the earth, kings and princes, as Herod and Pontius Pilate, and alſo the infernal principalities and powers, who were concerned in contriving thoſe lies, and putting them into the minds of men; for Satan is the father of lies and falſhood. Then I reſtored that which I took not away; by rapine, force and violence, as the word [w] ſignifies; and which was done by others. Thus, for inſtance, Chriſt reſtored the glory of God, of which he was robbed, and which was taken away by the ſin of man; by vailing his own glory, not ſeeking that, but his Father's; and by working out the ſalvation of his people, in ſuch a manner as that all the divine perfections were glorified by it; hence, Glory to God in the higheſt, Luke ii. 14. He ſatisfied juſtice he had never injured, though others had; he fulfilled a law, and bore the penalty of it, which he never broke; and made ſatisfaction for ſins he never committed; and brought in a righteouſneſs he had not taken away; and provided a better inheritance than what was loſt by Adam: and all this was done at the time of his ſufferings and death, and by the means of them.

℣. 5. O God, thou knoweſt my fooliſhneſs, &c.] Not that there was real fooliſhneſs in him, who, as man, from his infancy was filled with wiſdom, and increaſed in it; and as Mediator had the Spirit of wiſdom on him, and the treaſures of wiſdom in him; and as a divine perſon, he is the wiſdom of God, and the only wiſe God; and as in our nature there was no fooliſhneſs in his heart, nor in his words, nor in his actions: but this is to be underſtood, either of what was accounted ſo by others; he and his followers were reckoned fooliſh and illiterate men, and the goſpel preached by him and his apoſtles, was fooliſhneſs to them that periſhed; or of what he was charged with by his enemies; even with immorality, hereſy, blaſphemy and ſedition; of all which he was innocent, and therefore could appeal to his divine Father, who knows all things, that he was clear of all ſuch folly; for it may be rendered, thou knoweſt as to my fooliſhneſs [x], with reſpect to what he was charged with, that there was none in him; or elſe it regards the fooliſhneſs of his people imputed to him, the ſin of Adam, that folly of follies, together with all the fooliſhneſs in the heart, lip, and lives of his people, before and after converſion; theſe were all reckoned to him, and reckoned by him, as his own in ſome ſenſe; and which is confirmed by what follows. And my ſins are not hid from thee; meaning not any committed by him; for then he could not have ſaid what he does in the preceding verſe; but the ſins of his people imputed to him, which he calls his own, as he does in Pſal. xl. 12. ſee the note there: theſe muſt be known to his divine Father, ſince he is God omniſcient, and ſince he laid them upon him, and he made ſatisfaction for them to him; and which he obſerves to inforce his petition, ℣ 1. with this compare Iſa. liii. 11, 12.

℣. 6. Let not them that wait on thee, O Lord God of hoſts, be aſhamed for my ſake, &c.] Of their expectation of redemption and ſalvation by the Meſſiah, they have been waiting upon the Lord for; when they ſhall ſee him in ſuffering circumſtances, and even dead and laid in the grave, without any hope of his riſing again; which was the caſe of the two diſciples travelling to Emmaus, Luke xxiv. 19, 20, 21. whoſe truſt in him, and expectation of him, as the Redeemer of Iſrael, were almoſt gone. The people of God, and believers in Chriſt, are deſcribed by ſuch that wait on the Lord; for the coming of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; who would be in danger of being put to ſhame and in confuſion, when they ſhould ſee him under the power of death and the grave; wherefore in this petition Chriſt addreſſes his divine Father, as the Lord God of hoſts, of armies above and below, as God omnipotent; partly to encourage their truſt and confidence in him, and partly to encourage his own faith as man, that this petition would be anſwered. Let not thoſe that ſeek thee; in the word and ordinances, by prayer and ſupplication, with all their hearts, in Chriſt, in whom the Lord is only to be found, and for life and happineſs. Be confounded for my ſake; that is, through his ſufferings and death, as before. O God of Iſrael; the covenant-God of the ſpiritual Iſrael, whom he has choſen; the Meſſiah redeems, and the Spirit makes Iſraelites indeed.

℣. 7. Becauſe for thy ſake I have borne reproach, &c.] Being reckoned a ſinner, called a deceiver, ſaid to be a Samaritan, and to have a devil; with many other reproaches, which he bore patiently for the ſake of the word and worſhip of God, and for the ſake of the glory of God; which he all along ſought, and to repair the loſs of it, which was ſuſtained through the ſin of man. Shame hath covered my face; when he was ſpit upon by ſome, and ſmote by others with a rod upon his cheek; and when he was blindfolded, and bid to propheſy who ſmote him; ſee Iſa. l. 6.

℣. 8. I am become a ſtranger unto my brethren, &c.] Not only to the Jews in general, who were his own people and nation, to whom he came, and of whom he came; who received him not, hid as it were their faces from him, and rejected him as the Meſſiah; but alſo to ſuch who were ſtill nearer a-kin to him, according to the fleſh, who did not believe in him, John vii. 5. and even in ſome ſenſe to his diſciples and followers; ſome of which having heard ſome doctrines delivered by him not agreeable greeable to them, withdrew from him, and walked no more with him, John vi. 60, 66. yea, to his apoſtles, whom he often called his brethren: one of theſe betrayed him, another denied him with oaths and curſing, and all of them forſook him and fled, when he was taken by his enemies, and about to ſuffer death. And an alien unto my mother's children; which is the ſame as before, in other words. The Targum is, "as the ſon of the Gentiles to my "mother's children;" that is, as an heathen to them; ſee Matt. xviii. 17.

[w] גזלתי rapui, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c. Guſſetius, p. 312.

[x] לאולתי tu noſti ut res ſe habeat quoad ſtultitiam meam,

℣. 9. For the zeal of thine houſe hath eaten me up, &c.] Of the houſe of the ſanctuary, as the Targum; that is, the temple, which was Chriſt's Father's houſe, where he was worſhipped and dwelt; and zeal for his Father, and his glory in it, and indignation againſt thoſe that made it an houſe of merchandiſe, inflamed him; put him upon driving out the buyers and ſellers in it, whereby this paſſage had its accompliſhment, John ii. 14, 17. and this may be applied to the church of God, which is the houſe of God, of his building, and where he dwells; and zeal may deſign the fervent affection of Chriſt for it, for the doctrine, diſcipline, and ſalvation of it. His zeal for the goſpel appeared in his warm and lively preaching it, in his aſſiduity and conſtancy in it; in the weariſome journies he took to ſpread it, in the riſks he run, and dangers he expoſed himſelf to for the ſake of it; in the miracles he wrought to confirm it, and in the care he took to free it from calumny and reproach: his zeal for the worſhip and diſcipline of God's houſe was ſhewn, by his aſſerting the purity of worſhip in ſpirit and truth; by his ſevere inveighing againſt the traditions, ſuperſtition, and will-worſhip of men, and againſt the vices and corruptions of profeſſors of religion, the ſcribes and Phariſees: his zeal for the ſalvation of his people, is eaſily ſeen in his ſuretyſhip-engagements for them; in coming into this world to do the will of him that ſent him; in his early regards unto it, and vehement deſire, even of ſuffering death, in order to accompliſh it, and in his voluntary and chearful ſubmiſſion and obedience, even to the death of the croſs: this zeal of his was according to knowledge, and was cordial, hearty and unfeigned; and this eat him up, enflamed like fire his ſpirit and affections; conſumed his time and ſtrength, and even life itſelf. And the reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me; the ſame perſons that reproached the one reproached the other; and the reproaches of his divine Father were as cutting to him as if caſt on himſelf; it went to his heart that his Father's houſe ſhould be made an houſe of merchandiſe; that his doctrine ſhould be deſpiſed, his worſhip neglected, and his glory leſſened; to have the name of God, his ways and truth, evil ſpoken of, were not pleaſing to him; he took all reproach of this kind to himſelf, and bore it becomingly; and yet ſhewed zeal for his Father's glory, and indignation againſt thoſe that reproached him; ſee Rom. xv. 1—3.

℣. 10. When I wept, &c.] Becauſe of the ſins of his people imputed to him; the hardneſs and unbelief of the Jews that rejected him; their impiety and profaneneſs in polluting the temple with their merchandiſe: he wept at the grave of Lazarus, and over the city of Jeruſalem, on account of the blindneſs of its inhabitants, and the ruin coming upon them; and in his prayers at different times, eſpecially in the garden and on the croſs, which were offered up with ſtrong crying and tears; ſee John xi. 35. Luke xix. 41. Heb. v. 7. And chaſtened my ſoul with faſting; or my ſoul being in faſting[y]. The Targum renders it in the faſting of my ſoul; the word chaſtened is ſupplied from Pſal. xxxv. 13. and ſoul is put for the body, or for the whole perſon. Chriſt faſted forty days and nights in the wilderneſs; and often, through neglect of himſelf, and multiplicity of buſineſs, in preaching, and in healing diſeaſes, was without food for ſome time: he ſeems to have been faſting the day that he ſuffered, when he made atonement for ſin; and ſo anſwered the type on the day of atonement, when every man was to afflict his ſoul with faſting, Lev. xvi. 29. hence the Jews taunting at him gave him gall for his meat, and vinegar for his drink, ℣. 21. and it follows, That was to my reproach; if he eat and drank, he was charged with being a glutton and wine-bibber; and if he wept and faſted, as John his forerunner did, they reproached him with madneſs, and having a devil, Matt. xi. 18, 19. Mark iii. 20, 21. and, as may be reaſonably ſuppoſed, after this manner; "Can this poor creature, that weeps, and mourns, and faſts, be thought to be the Son of God, a divine perſon, as he makes himſelf to be, and his followers believe he is?" and ſo the blind Jews reaſon to this day.

℣. 11. I made ſackcloth alſo my garment, &c.] Though we no where read that Jeſus put on ſackcloth upon any occaſion, yet it is not improbable that he did; beſides, the phraſe may only intend, that he mourned and ſorrowed at certain times, as perſons do when they put on ſackcloth: moreover, as the common garb of his forerunner was raiment of camel's hair, with a leathern girdle; ſo it is very likely his own was very mean, ſuitable to his condition; who, though he was rich, for our ſakes became poor. And I became a proverb to them; a bye-word; ſo that when they ſaw any perſon in ſackcloth, or in vile raiment, behold ſuch an one looks like Jeſus of Nazareth.

℣. 12. They that ſit in the gate ſpeak againſt me, &c.] The princes, magiſtrates and judges, who ſat in the gates of cities, heard and tried cauſes, and executed judgment there; the elders of the city; ſee Ruth iv. 1. Lam. v. 14. Zech. viii. 16. the civil rulers among the Jews are meant; and alſo their eccleſiaſtical ones, the ſcribes and Phariſees that ſat in Moſes's ſeat; though ſome think men of lower characters are deſigned, idle perſons that ſaunter about, and ſit in gate-ways, and corners of ſtreets, and in market-places; ſpending their time like the Athenians, in hearing and telling of news, and prating about this and the other perſon, and their affairs; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt, ſince theſe are rather intended in the next clauſe: now ſuch men of rank and figure ſpoke againſt Chriſt; againſt his perſon as the Son of God, againſt his office as the Meſſiah, againſt his doctrines and ordinances, and againſt his people and followers: or they ſpake together of him[z]; they confabulated and conſulted together, how to ſeize him, and take away his life, as the chief prieſts and elders frequently did; and when they had taken him they gave their voice againſt him, and unanimouſly condemned him, when they ſat in judgment upon him. And I was the ſong of the drunkards; or of them that drink ſtrong drink[a]; be it made of what it will; that is, to exceſs: theſe, whilſt they played ed on their inſtruments of muſic, as the word [b] here uſed ſignifies, ſung ſongs, and Chriſt was the ſubject of them; as Job complains was his caſe, Job xxx. 8, 9. very probably the common people that were employed in taking of Jeſus might have plenty of liquor given them by the prieſts and elders, to encourage them; and this being a feſtival time too, might come at it more eaſily than uſual, and drink more freely; and this might be the caſe of the Roman ſoldiers, when they made Chriſt the ſubject of their mirth and diverſion in Pilate's hall.

[y] בצום נפשי cum eſſet in jejunio anima mea, Muſculus, Cocceius, Gejerus, De Dieu. [z] בי de me, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Gejerus, Michaelis. [a] שחר ſechar, Montanus; ſiceram, Tigurine verſion, Cocceius; potum inebriantem, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Michaelis.

℣. 13. But as for me, my prayer is unto thee, O Lord, &c.] Chriſt betook himſelf to prayer in theſe circumſtances, and not to railing and reviling again: he applied to his divine Father, and committed himſelf to him that judgeth righteouſly, and prayed both for himſelf and for his enemies too; and this he did In an acceptable time; or a time of good-will [c]; which was the time of his ſufferings and death; ſo called, becauſe the good will and pleaſure of God was ſeen therein; in not ſparing his Son, his own, and only begotten Son, his beloved Son, and delivering him up to juſtice and death for the worſt of ſinners; and becauſe at this time the good will of God was done: Chriſt laid down his life by the commandment of his Father, offered himſelf a ſacrifice by the will of God, and hereby the law of God was fulfilled, juſtice ſatisfied, and the work of man's redemption finiſhed; which was the pleaſure of the Lord, that proſpered in his hands; and therefore this muſt be an acceptable time to God. The ſufferings of Chriſt were well-pleaſing to him; the ſacrifice of Chriſt was for a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour; the righteouſneſs of Chriſt was acceptable to him, the law being magnified and made honourable by it: peace was now made by the blood of his croſs; the perfections of God were glorified; his purpoſes executed, his promiſes fulfilled, his covenant confirmed, and his people ſaved; and ſo a proper time for the Mediator to offer up his ſupplications and prayers, in which he was heard, as appears from Iſa. xlix. 8. O God, in the multitude of thy mercy; theſe words, according to the accents in the Hebrew text, ſhould be rendered in connexion with the preceding words, thus: in the time of good will, O God; or in the time of the good will of God, through the multitude of thy mercy; and then the ſenſe is, that the acceptable time was owing to the greatneſs of divine mercy; it was from hence that the day-ſpring from on high viſited men; or Chriſt came in the fleſh, and ſuffered in the room and ſtead of ſinners; in which there was a wonderful diſplay of the abundant mercy of God to men; for otherwiſe there was none ſhewn to the ſurety and Saviour; he was not ſpared, but delivered up; and then it follows, Hear me, in the truth of thy ſalvation; or becauſe of, or by thy true ſalvation [d]; that which God contrived in council, and ſecured in covenant, and ſent his Son to effect, and which he is become the author of, is a true and real ſalvation; not figurative and ſhadowy, as the ſalvation of Iſrael out of Egypt and Babylon were: or becauſe of the truth and faithfulneſs of God, who had promiſed ſalvation to the Meſſiah, that he ſhould be carried through his ſufferings, be raiſed from the dead, and be crowned with glory and honour; and therefore he prays he might be heard on this account, and his prayer follows, and the ſeveral petitions in it.

℣. 14. Deliver me out of the mire, and let me not ſink, &c.] in which he was ſinking, ℣. 2. and accordingly he was delivered out of it, Pſal. xl. 2. even out of all the mire of ſin, the ſins of his people that were upon him, from which he was juſtified when raiſed from the dead; and ſo will appear without ſin, when he comes a ſecond time. Let me be delivered from them that hate me, and out of the deep waters; theſe phraſes deſign the ſame, even the enemies of Chriſt; ſuch that hated him, compared to deep waters: theſe are the floods of the ungodly, and the many waters out of which he was drawn and delivered, Pſal. xviii. 4, 16, 17.

℣. 15. Let not the water-flood overflow me, &c.] The enemy, Satan, that came in like a flood upon him, with his whole poſſe of devils; or the wrath of God, which came upon him like a flood overwhelming him. Neither let the deep ſwallow me up; as Jonah by the whale, and Dathan and Abiram in the earth. And let not the pit ſhut her mouth upon me; either the pit of hell; ſo the Targum interprets it: for Chriſt, when he endured the curſes of the law, and the wrath of God, ſuffered the ſame for kind as the damned in hell; only the mouth of this pit could not be ſhut upon him, or he be continued under ſuch wrath and curſe: or elſe the pit of the grave, where his divine Father left him not, or ſuffered him to be ſo long in it as to ſee corruption; this pit was not ſhut upon him, but he was delivered out of it, and will die no more.

℣. 16. Hear me, O Lord; for thy loving-kindneſs is good, &c.] His loving-kindneſs to him, not only as his Son, but as Mediator; and which is a love of complacency and delight, and was from eternity, and will be to eternity: and this is good, as appears by the effects and evidences of it; ſuch as putting all things into his hands, ſhewing him all that he does, concealing and keeping nothing from him, appointing him to be the Saviour of his people, the head of the church, and the Judge of the world; and this loving-kindneſs ſhewn to him is a reaſon why he might expect to be heard by his God and Father; ſee John xvii. 24. and the loving-kindneſs of God to his people, and the members of Chriſt, is alſo good: it ariſes from the good will and pleaſure of God; it is pleaſantly and delightfully good to the ſaints, who have taſted that the Lord is gracious, and have had his love ſhed abroad in their hearts; it is profitably good unto them; it has prepared and laid up good things for them, both for time and eternity, even all the bleſſings of grace and goodneſs: it has promiſed good things unto them in covenant, and it gives Chriſt, and all good things along with him; it has a good influence on the graces of the Spirit, faith, hope and love, to encourage them; and engages believers to a chearful obedience to all the divine commands; to which may be added the duration of it, it laſts for ever: and it is ſo good, that it is better than any temporal good thing without it; it is better than life, and all the comforts of it, Pſal. lxiii. 3. Turn unto me, according to the multitude of thy tender mercies; his divine Father had turned away his face from him, and turned his fury upon him; he had awoke his ſword of juſtice againſt him, pointed it at him, and thruſt it into him; and now ſatisfaction being made, he deſires he would turn unto him in a way of grace and favour; that he would have reſpect unto him, and look upon him with his paternal countenance, and in a kind and tender manner, as well pleaſed with him, and with his righteouſneſs and ſacrifice. Of the phraſe, according ing to the multitude of thy tender mercies, ſee the note on Pſal. li. 1.

[b] בגינות cantiones ad inſtrumenta muſica, Vatablus; pulſationes, Gejerus. [c] עת רצון tempus beneplaciti, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [d] באמת ישעך per ſalutem tuam veram, Gejerus.

℣. 17. And hide not thy face from thy ſervant, &c.] This is a character that is frequently given to Chriſt as Mediator; he is a ſervant of God's chooſing, calling, and appointing; of his ſending, bringing forth, and ſupporting; who is an obedient, diligent, righteous, and prudent one; who always reverenced and honoured him whoſe ſervant he was, Iſa. xlii. 1. and xliii. 10. and xlix. 1, 3. and lii. 13. and liii. 11. Zech. iii. 8. now, when he was on the croſs, ſuffering in the room and ſtead of his people, his Father hid his face from him; which he here deprecates, and deſires he would not continue to do, ſeeing he was his ſervant, now doing his ſervice, and about to finiſh it, even the great work of man's redemption; and for a reaſon following. For I am in trouble; in ſtraits and difficulties; preſſed on every ſide, incloſed with the aſſembly of the wicked, who were mocking of him, and with the whole poſſe of devils, who were throwing their fiery darts at him; having the ſins of his people, and the curſes of a righteous law on him, and the wrath of God in him; and what increaſed his trouble was, he was forſaken by him. Hear me ſpeedily; or make haſte to hear [e]; and anſwer me; his caſe required haſte; ſee Pſal. xxii. 19.

℣. 18. Draw nigh unto my ſoul, &c.] God his Father, whilſt he was ſuffering, ſtood afar off from him; wherefore he deſires that he would draw nigh to him in the manifeſtations of his love and favour to him; which he did, when he made known to him the way of life, and made him full of joy with his countenance. And redeem it; that is, from the power of the grave; not leave it there, but raiſe him from the dead, and give him glory, as he did. Deliver me, becauſe of mine enemies; that they might not triumph over him, as if being dead, he ſhould riſe no more; and ſo the Targum, "that mine enemies might not lift up themſelves againſt me." Or the meaning is, deliver me from the grave, raiſe me from the dead, that I may requite mine enemies, and take vengeance on them; ſee Pſal. xli. 8, 9, 10, 11.

℣. 19. Thou haſt known my reproach, and my ſhame, and my diſhonour, &c.] A heap of words to expreſs the greatneſs of the contempt that was caſt upon him, and the injury that was done to his perſon and character; which was all known to God: as how he was vilified by wicked words and blaſphemous ſpeeches; how he was expoſed to ſhame and diſhonour by deeds; by ſpitting upon him, buffeting him, veiling his face, ſtripping him of his garments, and ſcourging and crucifying him naked. Mine adverſaries are all before thee; in his ſight: he knew their perſons, the malice and wickedneſs that were in their hearts; and all the evil words that were ſpoken, and the evil actions that were done by them. Or, are all againſt thee [f]; for they that were againſt Chriſt, were againſt his Father.

℣. 20. Reproach hath broken my heart, &c.] This was his caſe when his ſoul was exceeding ſorrowful unto death, and his heart like wax melted in the midſt of his bowels, Matt. xxvi. 38. Pſal. xxii. 14. And I am full of heavineſs; as he was in the garden, Mark xiv. 33. or, very ſick, yea incurably ſick, as the word [g] ſignifies; ſee 2 Sam. xii. 15. Jer. xxx. 12, 15. For what cure is there for a broken heart? And I looked for ſome to take pity, but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none: his diſciples forſook him and fled; the prieſts, ſcribes and common people, that attended him at the croſs, mocked him; the thieves that were crucified with him, reviled him; and his Father hid his face from him; only a few women ſtood afar off and lamented.

℣. 21. They gave me alſo gall for my meat, &c.] Either ſome bitter herb mentioned with wormwood and hemlock, Deut. xxix. 18. Lam. iii. 19. Amos vi. 12. or the gall of ſome animal. The Targum renders it, "the gall of the heads of ſerpents:" the poiſon of ſome ſerpents is in their heads, and the word that is here uſed ſignifies the head; ſee Deut. xxxii. 33. Job xx. 14. This was literally fulfilled in Chriſt, Matt. xxvii. 34. and ſhewed that he bore the curſe of the law; that being given to him for food, which was not fit to be eaten; thereby intimating, that he deſerved not to have the common food and neceſſaries of life; which is the caſe of thoſe, in whoſe place and ſtead he ſuffered: and this may be a rebuke to ſuch who, through fulneſs and affluence, are apt to ſlight and contemn ſome of the good creatures of God, which ought to be received with thankſgiving; let them remember the gall that was given Chriſt for meat. And this may ſerve to reconcile poor Chriſtians to that mean fare and low way of living they are obliged to; though they have but a dinner of herbs, or bread and water, it is better fare than their Lord's; it is not gall. And in my thirſt they gave me vinegar to drink; Chriſt, when on the croſs, was athirſt, which was occaſioned by a fever that uſually attended perſons in his circumſtances; ſee Pſal. xxii. 15. and that this ſcripture might be fulfilled, he ſignified it, ſaying, I thirſt; upon which vinegar was given to him, as all the evangeliſts relate; Matt. xxvii. 48. Mark xv. 36. Luke xxiii. 36. John xix. 28, 29. This ſhews the truth of Chriſt's human nature; that it was a true and real body that he aſſumed, which was ſubject to hunger and thirſt, and was ſupported by food and drink, as our bodies are; alſo the truth of divine revelation; ſince ſuch a minute circumſtance as this, predicted ſo many hundred years ago, ſhould, after ſo long a time, be exactly fulfilled; and likewiſe the truth of the Meſſiahſhip of Jeſus, in whom this, and every thing elſe ſaid of the Meſſiah, in the Law, the Prophets, and the book of Pſalms, were fully accompliſhed; and therefore it may be ſtrongly concluded, that this is he of whom they ſpoke. Moreover, this expreſſes the inhumanity of the enemies of Chriſt, to uſe him in this manner, when he was ſuffering and dying; ſee Prov. xxxi. 6, 7.

℣. 22. Let their table become a ſnare before them, &c.] This and the following imprecations were not the effects of a ſpirit of private revenge; of which there was no appearance in Chriſt, but all the reverſe; who prayed for his enemies, while they were uſing him as above related: but they are prophecies of what ſhould be, being delivered out under the inſpiration of the Spirit of God, Acts i. 16, 20. Wherefore ſome verſions render the words, their table ſhall become a ſnare [h]; and therefore are not to be drawn into an example by us, to favour and and encourage a revengeful ſpirit: and they are very juſt and righteous, according to lex talionis, the law of retaliation; ſince, inaſmuch as they gave Chriſt gall for his meat, and vinegar for his drink, it was but right, that the ſame meaſure ſhould be meted out to them again; and their table-mercies and bleſſings be curſed; that they ſhould have them not in love, but in bitter wrath. Or that they ſhould be left to be overcharged with them, and ſurfeit upon them; and ſo the day of their deſtruction come upon them as a ſnare: or that they ſhould want the common neceſſaries of life, and be tempted to eat what was not lawful; and even their own children, as ſome did; ſee Mal. ii. 2. Luke xxi. 34, 35. Lam. iv. 10. The Targum gives the ſenſe of the words, thus; "Let their table, which they pre-"pared before me, that I might eat before them, "be for a ſnare;" meaning a table ſpread with vinegar and gall. Of the figurative ſenſe of theſe words, ſee my note on Rom. xi. 9. where the apoſtle cites this paſſage, and applies it to the Jews, the enemies of Chriſt. And that which ſhould have been for their welfare, let it become a trap; the word tranſlated, for their welfare, comes from שלם which ſignifies both to be at peace, and to recompenſe; and ſo is differently interpreted. Some think the ſhelamim, or peace-offerings, are meant; ſee Exod. xxiv. 5. and ſo the Targum, "let their "ſacrifices be for a trap, or ſtumbling-block;" as they were, they truſting in them for the atonement of ſin; and ſo neglected the atoning ſacrifice of Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs; which was the ſtumbling-block at which they ſtumbled, and the trap into which they fell, and was their ruin. And it is obſervable, that whilſt they were eating the ſacrifice of the paſſover, they were ſurrounded by the Roman army, and taken as birds in a net, and as beaſts in a trap. Others render the words, to them that are at peace [i], let their table be for a trap; whilſt they are living in ſecurity, and crying, Peace, peace, let ſudden deſtruction come upon them; as it did. But the apoſtle has taught us how to render the word, for a recompence, Rom. xi. 9. as the word differently pointed is in Iſa. xxxiv. 8. The true rendering and meaning of the whole ſeem to be this, let their table become a ſnare before them; and let their table be for recompences unto them, or in juſt retaliation; let the ſame food, or the like unto it, be ſet upon their tables, they gave to Chriſt, and let their table become a trap; for all relate to their table.

[e] מהר עננו feſtina exaudire me, Vatablus. [f] נגדך coram te, vel contra te, Cocceius. [g] ואנושה adeo ut afficiar ægritudine, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; dolui vel ægritudine affectus ſum, Gejerus. [h] יהי erit, Pagninus, Montanus; fiet vel fiat, Gejerus.

℣. 23. Let their eyes be darkned, that they ſee not, &c.] Not literally, the eyes of their bodies; but figuratively, the eyes of their underſtanding; which were ſo darkned, and they given up to ſuch judicial blindneſs, that they could not diſcern the ſigns of the times that the Meſſiah muſt be come, Daniel's weeks being up; could not ſee any glory, excellency, and comelineſs in Chriſt; could not ſee the evidence of the Meſſiahſhip of Jeſus in the miracles he wrought; nor in the prophecies of the Old Teſtament fulfilled in him: that book was a ſealed book unto them; the goſpel, and the doctrines of it, were hid from them, even from the wiſe and prudent among them; yea, alſo thoſe things which belonged to their temporal peace; they were ſo blinded and infatuated, they could not ſee what was for their outward good and happineſs: and in proof of this their blindneſs, the words are cited by the apoſtle in Rom. xi. 7, 10, 25. ſee Matt. xvi. 3. and xi. 25. and xiii. 11, 13. Luke xix. 42. And make their loins continually to ſhake; weaken their loins, in which a man's ſtrength lies, that they may not be able to riſe up againſt their enemies; and that they might not be able to flee and eſcape from them; ſee Deut. xxxiii. 11. or fill them with horror, dread and trembling, as they will be when Chriſt ſhall come in the clouds of heaven; and they ſhall ſee him whom they have pierced, Rev. i. 7. The apoſtle renders the words in Rom. xi. 10. bow down their back alway; ſee the note there.

℣. 24. Pour out thine indignation upon them, &c.] Not a few drops of it only, but a flood of it, ſweeping away and bearing down all before it; which was done when wrath came upon them to the uttermoſt, in the deſtruction of their city, temple and nation, 1 Theſſ. ii. 16. Let thy wrathful anger take hold of them; follow after them, overtake them, ſeize upon them, and hold them faſt, that they may not eſcape. It denotes the ſeverity of God towards them; the fierceneſs and fury of his wrath upon them; and that their deſtruction would be inevitable, and an intire and utter one.

℣. 25. Let their habitation be deſolate, &c.] Which is applied to Judas, Acts i. 20. but not to the excluſion of others; for it muſt be underſtood of the habitations of others; even of their princes and nobles, their chief magiſtrates, high prieſt and other prieſts, ſcribes, and doctors of the law: for the word may be rendered, their palace or caſtle [k], as it is by ſome; and ſo may denote the houſes of their principal men, the members of their ſanhedrim; their houſes great and fair, of which there were many in Jeruſalem when it was deſtroyed; ſee Iſa. v. 9. as well as the habitations of the meaner ſort of people, which all became deſolate at that time; and particularly their houſe, the temple, which was like a palace or caſtle, built upon a mountain. This was left deſolate, as our Lord foretold it would, Matt. xxiii. 38. And let none dwell in their tents; the city of Jeruſalem was wholly deſtroyed, and not a houſe left ſtanding in it, nor an inhabitant of it; it was laid even with the ground, plowed up, and not one ſtone left upon another, Luke xix. 44.

℣. 26. For they perſecute him whom thou haſt ſmitten, &c.] Meaning the Meſſiah, who was not only ſmitten and ſcourged by men, but was ſtricken and ſmitten of God; according to his determinate counſel and foreknowledge, and agreeable to his will and pleaſure; with the rod of his juſtice for the ſatisfaction of it; for the ſins of his people, whoſe ſurety he was. Him the Jews followed with reproaches and calumnies; purſued after his life, and perſecuted him unto death; and which was the cauſe of their ruin and deſtruction; ſee 1 Theſſ. ii. 15, 16. And they talk to the grief of thoſe whom thou haſt wounded; or, of thy wounded ones [l]; not wounded by him, but wounded for his ſake, on his account, and for their profeſſion of faith in his Son Jeſus Chriſt. Theſe, as they were led to the ſlaughter, had trial of cruel mockings, which aggravated their ſufferings, and were very grieving to them; eſpecially ſuch talk as reflected upon their dear Redeemer, for whoſe ſake they were put to death.

℣. 27. Add iniquity to their iniquity, &c.] Let them alone in ſin; ſuffer them to go on in it; lay no reſtraints upon them; put no ſtop in providence in in their way; let them proceed from one evil to another, till they fall into ruin: to their natural and acquired hardneſs of heart, give them up to a judicial hardneſs; that they may do things that are not convenient, and be damned. Suffer them not to ſtop at the crucifixion of the Meſſiah; let them go on to perſecute his apoſtles and followers; to ſhew the utmoſt ſpite and malice againſt the Chriſtian religion; to embrace falſe Chriſts, and blaſpheme the true one; to believe the greateſt lies and abſurdities, and commit the fouleſt of actions; as ſeditions, rapines, murders, &c. as they did whilſt Jeruſalem was beſieged; that they may fill up the meaſure of their ſins, and wrath may come upon them to the uttermoſt, 1 Theſſ. ii. 15, 16. The word עון rendered iniquity, ſometimes ſignifies puniſhment, as in Gen. iv. 13. and, according to this ſenſe of it, the words may be differently rendered, and admit a different meaning; either, give puniſhment for their iniquity [m]; ſo Kimchi; that is, puniſh them according to their deſerts, as their ſins and iniquities require: or, add puniſhment to their puniſhment [n]; to their preſent temporal puniſhment before imprecated, relating to their table-mercies, their perſons and their habitations, add future and everlaſting puniſhment; let them be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction, ſoul and body, in hell. And let them not come into thy righteouſneſs; meaning, not his ſtrict juſtice or righteous judgment; into that they would certainly come; nor was it the will of the Meſſiah they ſhould eſcape it: but either the goodneſs, grace and mercy of God, which is ſometimes deſigned by righteouſneſs, as in Pſal. xxxi. 1. and li. 14. and the ſenſe is, Let them have no ſhare in pardoning grace now, nor obtain mercy in the laſt day; but be condemned when they are judged, Pſal. cix. 7. Or rather, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is called the righteouſneſs of God, that is, the Father; becauſe he approves and accepts of it, and imputes it to his people without works: and ſeeing the Jews ſought for juſtification by their own works, and went about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, and ſubmitted not to Chriſt's, but deſpiſed and rejected it; it was but juſt that they ſhould be excluded from all benefit and advantage by it, as is here imprecated. The Targum is, "and let them not be worthy to come into the congregation of thy righteous ones;" neither here, nor at the laſt judgment; ſee Pſal. i. 5.

[i] לשלומים tranquilli, Gejerus; ſo ſome in Michaelis. [k] טירתם palatium eorum, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Cocceius, Michaelis; caſtella eorum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; palatium vel caſtellum eorum, Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth. [l] חלליך vulneratorum tuorum, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Muſculus; ſo Ainſworth.

℣. 28. Let them be blotted out of the book of life, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of this animal life, or of the catalogue of living ſaints; of their being not written among the living in Jeruſalem, or in the writing of the houſe of Iſrael, Iſa. iv. 3. Ezek. xiii. 9. The Targum is, "let them be blotted out of the book of the memory of the living." Let their names rot and periſh, being buried in everlaſting oblivion. Aben Ezra interprets this book of the heavens; where, he ſays, all things that ſhould come to paſs were written, at the time they were created; ſee Luke x. 20. Heb. xii. 23. But this is the book of divine predeſtination or election, often in the New Teſtament called the Book of Life; in which the names of ſome perſons are written, and others not, Phil. iv. 3. Rev. iii. 5. and xiii. 8. and xvii. 8. and xx. 12, 15. and xxi. 27. ſo called, not with reſpect to the preſent life, and the affairs of it, which belong to the book of providence; but with reſpect to the life of the world to come, or eternal life, as Kimchi explains it. It is no other than God's ordination or fore-appointment of men to eternal life; which being called a book, and names written in it, ſhew that election is perſonal or particular; the exact knowledge God has of his choſen ones, his great care of them, and value for them; his conſtant remembrance of them, and the certainty of their ſalvation; for ſuch whoſe names are written here in reality, can never be blotted out: this would be contrary to the unchangeableneſs of God, the firmneſs of his purpoſes, and the ſafety of his people. Wherefore the deſign of this imprecation is, that thoſe perſons who had, in their own conceits, and in the apprehenſions of others, a name in this book; that it might appear, both to themſelves and others, they had none, by the awful ruin and deſtruction that ſhould be brought upon them. And not be written with the righteous; neither in the book of life with them; by which it appears, that to be blotted out, and not be written, are the ſame: nor in a goſpel-church-ſtate; ſo they were the branches broken off: nor be among them at the reſurrection of the juſt, and in the judgment-day. Kimchi obſerves, that it is the ſame thing in different words; to be blotted out, is the ſame as not to be written.

℣. 29. But I am poor and ſorrowful, &c.] The Meſſiah was poor in a literal ſenſe, as it was foretold he ſhould, Zech. ix. 9. ſo he was in his private life; born of poor parents, and brought up in a mean way: and in his public life, having no certain dwelling place, and miniſtered to by others; and when on the croſs, being ſtripped of his garments; and nothing to eat and drink, but gall and vinegar; and nothing to leave to his mother, but commits her to the care of his beloved diſciple. Tho' this phraſe in general may denote the low eſtate of Chriſt in his humiliation, being in the form of a ſervant, humbled and obedient to death; and the character of ſorrowful well agrees with him, who was a man of ſorrows all his days; and in the garden his ſoul was exceeding ſorrowful, even unto death; and when on the croſs he had ſorrow enough; what with the ſins of his people on him, the flouts and jeers of his enemies at him; the pains of body he endured, the wrath of God, the hidings of his face, and the curſes of his righteous law. After this declaration of his low and diſtreſſed ſtate, a petition follows: Let thy ſalvation, O God, ſet me up on high; meaning either the ſalvation of the Lord's people, ſo called, becauſe concerted and appointed of God, and is what he ſent his Son to effect, and he approves of; this being wrought out, was the way and means of the exaltation of Chriſt; both by his divine Father, who on this account exalted him at his right hand; and by his people, who exalt him in their hearts, and with their tongues, and give him all the glory of their ſalvation. Or elſe this means the ſalvation of Chriſt out of the hands of all his enemies, whom he conquered on the croſs; and particularly death, from which he was ſaved by his reſurrection, and was the firſt ſtep to his exaltation and glory; after which he aſcended on high, and ſat down at the right hand of God; where no mere creature, angels or men, were ever admitted; and where angels, principalities and powers, are ſubject to him. The whole may be rendered thus; though I am poor and ſorrowful, thy ſalvation, O God, will ſet me up on high [o]; and ſo is expreſſive of the Meſſiah's faith in his reſurrection and exaltation, notwithſtanding his ſorrows and ſufferings; on account of which he determines to praiſe the Lord, as follows.

℣. 30. I will praiſe the name of God with a ſong, &c.] The name of God is himſelf, his perfections and and attributes; which are to be praiſed by all his creatures, and eſpecially his ſaints; and here by the Meſſiah, who ſung the praiſe of God with his diſciples at the ſupper, a little before his death; and in the great congregation in heaven, upon his aſcenſion thither, having finiſhed the great work of man's redemption. For as it was no leſſening of his glory, as Mediator, to pray to God when on earth, it is no diminution of it to praiſe him in our nature in heaven; ſee Pſal. xxii. 22. This being ſaid to be done with a ſong, agrees with Heb. ii. 12. and is an inſtance of praiſing God this way, and which could not be prayer-wiſe; as well as is a confirmation of the practice of New-Teſtament-churches ſinging pſalms, hymns and ſpiritual ſongs, by the example of our Lord. And will magnify him with thankſgiving: to magnify, is to make great; but God cannot be greater than he is. He is great above all gods; he is greater than all. But he is magnified when his greatneſs is owned and declared, and that is aſcribed unto him; and particularly when thanks are given to him for favours; for then is he acknowledged by men to be the Father of mercies, the author and giver of them; and that they are unworthy of them, and that all the glory belongs to him. Chriſt, as man, not only prayed, but gave thanks to his Father when on earth, Matt. xi. 25, 26. John xi. 41. nor is it unſuitable to him, as ſuch now in heaven, to give thanks and praiſe, for being heard and helped in a day of ſalvation; or at the time when he wrought out the ſalvation of his people, and glorified all the divine perfections.

[m] תנה עון על עונם da punitionem iniquitatis, Pagninus; appone illis pœnam pro iniquitate, Muis. [n] So Junius & Tremellius. [o] תשגבני elevabit me, Pagninus, Montanus; ſo Gejerus, Michaelis.

℣. 31. This alſo ſhall pleaſe the Lord, &c.] That is, this ſong of praiſe and thankſgiving. The Targum has it, "my prayers;" as if it referred to ℣. 29. but what is expreſſed in ℣. 30. ſeems to be the proper antecedent to this, and which is a ſacrifice; ſee Pſal. l. 14. Heb. xiii. 15. and more acceptable to God than any of the legal ſacrifices, even when they were in force; and much more, now they are abrogated; and eſpecially as offered up by the Meſſiah himſelf, all whoſe offerings are well-pleaſing to God; particularly the offering up of himſelf, which was for a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to him, and in virtue of which all ſpiritual ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe become acceptable unto God. Better than an ox or bullock that hath horns and hoofs; that is, than the beſt of legal ſacrifices; as an ox or bullock was, whoſe horns and hoofs were grown; one of three years old, as Jarchi and Kimchi obſerve: the words may be literally rendered, than an ox, than a bullock, than horns, than hoofs; not only better than an ox or a bullock, but than any creature that has horns and hoofs; that is, than the lawful ſacrifice of any animal whatever, as Junius renders and explains it.

℣. 32. The humble ſhall ſee this, and be glad, &c.] The reſurrection and exaltation of Chriſt, ℣. 29. the meek and humble followers of Chriſt, as his diſciples were, ſaw him riſen from the dead, ſaw him alive, to whom he ſhewed himſelf forty days after his reſurrection; they ſaw his hands, and feet, and ſide, and the prints of the nails and ſpear in them; they ſaw him go up to heaven, to be ſet on high at the right hand of God; and humble believers now ſee him by faith, crowned with glory and honour; and as the diſciples were glad, and rejoiced when they ſaw him again, and when he was parted from them, and went up to heaven, John xx. 20. Luke xxiv. 51, 52, 53. ſo true believers in Chriſt, who have a ſpiritual ſight of a riſen, aſcended and exalted Saviour, are glad and rejoice in him, with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory, 1 Pet. i. 8. they rejoice in the righteouſneſs he has brought in, in the atonement that he has made, and in the ſalvation he has wrought out, which is ſo ſuitable for them; and becauſe they do, or will ſhare in all the bleſſings of his reſurrection, aſcenſion and exaltation; ſuch as regeneration, juſtification, every ſupply of grace, and perſeverance in it, the reſurrection of their bodies, and eternal glorification: and humble ones are ſuch as are humbled under a ſenſe of ſin, and the exceeding ſinfulneſs of it, in a view of their own righteouſneſs, and its inſufficiency to juſtify them before God; they aſcribe all they have and are to the free grace of God; and all boaſting is excluded from them, ſave in Chriſt; they are ſuch that learn of him, who is meek and lowly; and behave humbly before men, eſteem others better than themſelves; and are in their own account the chief of ſinners, and the leaſt of ſaints: and as they are, for the moſt part, afflicted, and ſo ſome render the word [p] here; they are humble under the mighty hand of God, and patiently bear it. And your heart ſhall live that ſeek God; that ſeek his face and favour, his gracious preſence, and communion with him; that ſeek, by prayer and ſupplications, bleſſings from him; that ſeek him in Chriſt, where he is to be found; that ſeek Chriſt and righteouſneſs and ſalvation by him, and that early, earneſtly and diligently; that ſeek the things of Chriſt, the honour of his name, and the good of his intereſt; and who, in a word, are the true and ſpiritual worſhippers of God; theſe ſeek him, and he ſeeks them. The Targum is, "that "ſeek doctrine from before God:" and the hearts of thoſe revived, who were as dead men before, as were the two diſciples travelling to Emmaus, when they found that Chriſt was riſen, Luke xxiv. 17—35. juſt as the ſpirit of old Jacob revived, when he underſtood that his ſon Joſeph was alive, Gen. xlv. 27. ſee Pſal. xxii. 26. John xvi. 22.

℣. 33. For the Lord heareth the poor, &c.] The prayer of the poor, as the Targum; of the poor diſciples of Chriſt, who were together mourning, weeping and praying, when their Lord was dead, and laid in the ſepulchre, Mark xvi. 10. Luke xxiv. 10, 33. this epithet agrees with all the followers of Chriſt, who for the moſt part are literally poor, and are all of them ſo in a ſpiritual ſenſe; they are poor in ſpirit, and are ſenſible of it; they are full of wants, and theſe daily return upon them; wherefore they conſtantly apply to the throne of grace for help in time of need; and the Lord regards them, his eye is upon them, his heart is towards them, his thoughts are about them, his ears are open to their cries, and his hand is ready to ſupply their wants. And deſpiſeth not his priſoners; the ſame diſciples of Chriſt; who being aſſembled together, the doors were ſhut for fear of the Jews, John xx. 19. it may be applied to ſuch who are the Lord's priſoners; that is, for his ſake, in a literal ſenſe, as the apoſtle Paul is called the priſoner of the Lord, Eph. iii. 1. and iv. 1. and there were many, both under the Old, and under the New Teſtament, that ſuffered impriſonment for their profeſſion of religion; and theſe the Lord deſpiſes not, though men may, but highly eſteems and honours; and it may be underſtood myſtically and ſpiritually of ſuch as are, in their nature-ſtate, priſoners of ſin and Satan, and the law, and when called, are priſoners of hope; theſe the Lord has a regard unto, and opens the priſon-doors and ſets them at liberty,

[p] עניים afflicti, Vatablus, Muſculus; miſeri, Gejerus; manſueti ac miſeri, Michaelis.

ty, and directs them to the ſtrong-hold, Iſa. xlix. 9. and lxi. 1. Zech. ix. 11, 12.

℣. 34. Let the heaven and earth praiſe him, &c.] As thoſe, by a proſopopeia, are often called upon to do, to expreſs the greatneſs of the favour enjoyed, and to excite thoſe that are poſſeſſed of it to greater joy and thankfulneſs; ſee Pſal. xcvi. 11—13. Iſa. xliv. 23. and xlix. 13. or the inhabitants of the heavens and earth may be meant, as the angels of heaven; and ſo the Targum interprets it; who, as they praiſed the Lord at the incarnation of Chriſt, Luke ii. 14. ſo doubtleſs they did at his aſcenſion, when he was ſeen and accompanied by them, 1 Tim. iii. 16. Pſal. lxviii. 17, 18. Acts i. 11. and alſo the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect in heaven, who were there when Chriſt was received into it; and the inhabitants of the earth, as the Targum alſo paraphraſes it; of the continent, particularly the Roman empire, when the goſpel was ſent thither, which brought the good news of an incarnate, ſuffering, riſen, aſcended, and exalted Saviour. The ſeas, and every thing that moveth therein; the inhabitants of the iſles in the ſeas, ſuch as ours of Great Britain and Ireland, who waited for the doctrine of the Meſſiah, and to whom he calls to liſten to what he ſays; and which is a ſufficient reaſon for praiſe and thankſgiving in them; even in as many as have ſpiritual life and motion, who are quickened, influenced and moved by the Spirit of God; ſee Iſa. xlii. 4. and xlix. 1.

℣. 35. For God will ſave Zion, &c.] The church of Chriſt, as it is often called; ſee the note on Pſal. ii. 6. this is to be underſtood, not ſo much of the ſalvation of the people of God by Chriſt, from ſin, and Satan, and the world, law, hell and death; as of the preſervation and continuance of the goſpel-church-ſtate, notwithſtanding all the oppoſition and perſecution of the Jews and Gentiles; and eſpecially of the deliverance of the Lord's people in the latter day, from the cruelty, captivity and bondage of Antichriſt, by the deſtruction of him; which will occaſion joy and praiſe, Rev. xviii. 4, 20. and xix. 1, 2. And will build the cities of Judah; erect goſpel-churches in the Roman empire, and in the ſeveral parts of the world; as were in the firſt times of the goſpel, and will be in the latter day, when the cities of God ſhall be yet ſpread abroad through proſperity, Zech. i. 17. of which the ſaints are citizens, and enjoy in them many privileges and immunities: theſe may be ſaid to be built, when they are built upon Chriſt, and on their moſt holy faith; when the members of them are edified and multiplied; when purity of faith, diſcipline and worſhip prevails among them; and though this is uſually by the miniſters of the goſpel, as inſtruments; yet the Lord is the chief builder; for unleſs he builds, in vain do the builders build, Pſal. cxxvii. 1. That they may dwell there, and have it in poſſeſſion; the men of Judah, ſuch as confeſs the name of Chriſt, as the word Judah ſignifies; who profeſs to believe in him with their hearts; theſe have a name and a place, and an inheritance in the churches, and an abiding one; they ſhall never go out, but dwell in the houſe of God for ever; goſpel-churches being erected and built up for their ſakes, and for ſuch ends and purpoſes.

℣. 36. The ſeed alſo of his ſervants ſhall inherit it, &c.] Not their natural, but ſpiritual ſeed, or a ſucceſſion of converts in the churches; ſee Pſal. xlv. 16. Iſai. lix. 21. who are born, not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God; not of corruptible, but incorruptible ſeed, by the word of God, which lives and abides for ever, John i. 13. 1 Pet. i. 23. theſe are the proper and rightful inheritors of the goſpel-church-ſtate, and all its privileges, in all ſucceſſive generations, quite down to the new Jeruſalem-church-ſtate, wherein will dwell only righteous perſons, and whoſe names are in the Lamb's book of life. Aben Ezra's note upon it is, "they ſhall inherit it, they and their children, in the days of "David, or in the days of the Meſſiah." And they that love his name ſhall dwell therein; that love the perſon, goſpel, truths and ordinances of Chriſt; ſee Cant. i. 3. theſe ſhall have an abiding-place in Zion, the church of God; in the cities of Judah, particular congregational churches; and in the city of the new Jeruſalem, where will be the tabernacle of God among men, and he ſhall dwell among them, and they with him.

PSALM LXX.

To the chief muſician, a pſalm of David, to bring to remembrance.

THIS pſalm, according to Kimchi, was compoſed by David when he fled from Saul, or from Abſalom; ſo Theodoret; but if at either of thoſe times, it is moſt likely to be the latter, ſince the following pſalm, it is certain, was penned when he was an old man, ℣. 9. the word tranſlated to bring to remembrance is thought, by Aben Ezra, to be the firſt word of ſome pleaſant ſong; ſee Pſal. xxxviii. The Targum paraphraſes it, "to remember the "uſe of the frankincenſe;" alluding to Lev. ii. 2. Jarchi ſays it ſignifies prayer, and refers to Pſal. xx. 7. 1 Chron. xvi. 4. as inſtances of the uſe of the word in ſuch a ſenſe; and ſo this pſalm is compoſed by the pſalmiſt in a petitionary way, to put the Lord in remembrance of his afflictions, and of his promiſes of help and deliverance, which he prays for; ſee Pſal. cxxxii. 1. Iſa. xliii. 26. and that he would avenge him on his enemies, and ſhew reſpect to his friends; or it was written to refreſh his own memory with his preſent ſtate, and to put him in mind from whence he might expect help and ſalvation. The title of the pſalm in the Arabic verſion is, and ſo in the Vulgate Latin, following the Septuagint, "a remembrance that the "Lord had ſaved him:" and in the Syriac verſion, "A pſalm of David as to the letter, when he ſent "Joab to take Shemuah (Sheba) who rebelled; al-"ſo a ſupplication of the righteous, and even of "Chriſt himſelf." And ſeeing this follows upon the preceding, and may be reckoned an appendix to it, and there are ſome things in it which manifeſtly refer to the latter part of that, and the whole is detached from the fortieth pſalm, with which it agrees, a few words only excepted, which manifeſtly belongs to the Meſſiah; it is right to underſtand this of him; ſee the note on Pſal. xl. 13, 14—17.

℣. 1. Make haſte, O God, to deliver me, &c.] The phraſe, make haſte, is ſupplied from the following lowing clauſe in Pſal. xl. 13. it is, be pleaſed, O Lord, or Jehovah. The Targum renders it to deliver us; very wrongly. Make haſte to help me, O Lord; ſee the note on Pſal. xxii. 19.

℣. 2. Let them be aſhamed and confounded, &c.] In Pſal. xl. 14. it is added, together; ſee the note there. That ſeek after my ſoul; or life, in Pſal. xl. 14. it is added, to deſtroy it; for that was the end of their ſeeking after it. Let them be turned backward, &c. ſee the note on Pſal. xl. 14.

℣. 3. Let them be turned back for a reward of their ſhame, &c.] In Pſal. xl. 15. it is let them be deſolate; which ſeems to reſpect their land and houſes, here their perſons; ſee the note there. That ſay; in the ſaid pſalm it is added, To me; not to his people, but himſelf, Aha, aha; rejoicing at his calamity and diſtreſs. The Targum is, "we are "glad, we are glad;" ſee the note as before, and compare with this Ezek. xxv. 3.

℣. 4. Let all thoſe that ſeek thee, &c.] The Targum is, "that ſeek doctrine (or inſtruction) "from thee." Rejoice, and be glad in thee; the Targum paraphraſes it, "rejoice and be glad in "thy word." And let ſuch as love thy ſalvation ſay continually, Let God be magnified; the Targum is, "let the glory of the Lord be increaſed;" and in Pſal. xl. 16. inſtead of God, it is the Lord, or Jehovah; ſee the note there.

℣. 5. But I am poor and needy, &c.] In Pſal. xl. 17. it follows, yet the Lord thinketh on me; inſtead of which it is here, Make haſte unto me, O God; which repeats for ſenſe the ſame petition as in ℣. 1. Thou art my help and my deliverer; O Lord, make no tarrying; in Pſal. xl. 17. it is, O my God.

PSALM LXXI.

THIS pſalm is without a title, but is thought to be David's: the Septuagint, and Vulgate Latin verſions, and all the Oriental ones, aſcribe it to him; and both the ſubject and ſtile ſhew it to be his. According to the title of the Syriac verſion, it was compoſed by him when Saul made war againſt the houſe of David; but this is not likely, ſince it was written by him in his old age, ℣. 9, 18. rather, according to Kimchi and Arama, it was penned when he fled from his ſon Abſalom: there are ſeveral things in it which incline to this. The Septuagint, and Vulgate Latin verſions, call it "A "pſalm of David, of the ſons of Jonadab, and of "the firſt that were carried captive;" and ſo the Ethiopic and Arabic verſions. Apollinarius ſays the ſons of Jonadab compoſed it; but without any foundation for it; and the Syriac verſion is, it is a prophecy concerning the ſufferings and reſurrection of the Meſſiah; and ſo Jerom and others interpret it. The literal meaning reſpecting David ſeems beſt, though it may be applied to the church, and to any believer in diſtreſs. Theodoret thinks it was written by David in the perſon of the captives in Babylon.

℣. 1. In thee, O Lord, do I put my truſt, &c.] The Targum is, "in thy word;" ſee the note on Pſal. xxxi. 1. Let me never be put to confuſion; or be aſhamed; ſee the note as before.

℣. 2. Deliver me in thy righteouſneſs, &c.] By it, or for the ſake of it [q]; ſee the note on Pſal. xxxi. 1. And cauſe me to eſcape; preſent danger, and out of the hands of enemies, as well as wrath to come, and eternal death; which nothing but the righteouſneſs of God can deliver from, or cauſe to eſcape. Incline thine ear unto me; or bow it; ſee the note on Pſal. xxxi. 2. And ſave me; out of all troubles and afflictions, and from wicked and unreaſonable men.

℣. 3. Be thou my ſtrong habitation, &c.] This is very appoſitely ſaid, when David was driven out of his dwelling-place, and palace at Jeruſalem, by his ſon, as Kimchi obſerves. When God's people have no certain dwelling-place, which is ſometimes their caſe, they always find one in the Lord; particularly in his heart's love; for he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, 1 John iv. 16. and a ſtrong habitation he is: wherefore he is called a ſtrong rock, a ſtrong hold, a ſtrong tower; he is as a wall of fire around his people, a munition of rocks; his ſalvation is as walls and bulwarks, and his power as a garriſon in which they are kept. The pſalmiſt adds, Whereunto I may continually reſort; or may go into daily [r], in times of danger and diſtreſs, for ſafety; the name of the Lord being a ſtrong tower, whither the righteous run, and are ſafe, Prov. xviii. 10. and his perfections, his power, faithfulneſs, loving-kindneſs and unchangeableneſs, being as ſo many ſecret chambers, where they may enter into, and hide themſelves, till calamities are over, Pſal. lvii. 1. Iſai. xxvi. 20. and every day indeed for food, for comfort, for refreſhment and pleaſure, through communion with him; and God in Chriſt is always to be come at: Chriſt is the way of acceſs and acceptance; and through his blood, ſacrifice, and righteouſneſs, the believer has boldneſs to enter into the holieſt of all, and go up to the ſeat of God, the throne of his grace; and even to enter into him himſelf, who has been the dwelling-place of his people in all generations, Pſal. xc. 1. Thou haſt given commandment to ſave me; either to the miniſtring angels, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi interpret it, comparing it with Pſal. xci. 11. or rather to his Son, in the council and covenant of grace and peace; when he enjoined him the ſalvation of his people, which he readily agreed to, and with which David was acquainted, Pſal. xl. 7, 8. of this command our Lord ſpeaks, John x. 18. and xiv. 31. and to which he was obedient, Phil. ii. 8. it may reſpect David's ſalvation from preſent trouble, and his aſſurance of it, believing that the Lord had determined it, and by his mighty power would effect it; ſee Pſal. xliv. 4. For thou art my rock and my fortreſs; ſee Pſal. xviii. 2. and xxxi. 3.

℣. 4. Deliver me, O my God, out of the hand of the wicked, &c.] Meaning Abſalom his ſon, as Arama, who had riſen up in rebellion againſt him; and he may not only intend him, but all thoſe wicked men, that had joined with him: it was David's mercy he had a covenant-God to go to, and could claim his intereſt in him, who had power to deliver him, and from whom he might expect it. Out of the hand of the unrighteous and cruel man; or leavened [s]; a ſour, ill-natured man; one leavened with malice and wickedneſs: perhaps Ahithophel is intended.

[q] בצדקתך propter juſtitiam tuam, Pagninus, Piſcator; ſo Schmidt. [r] לבוא תמיד ut ingrediar jugiter, Pagninus; ſo Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [s] חומץ malitiæ fermento prorſus corrupti, Michaelis, ſecundum Gejerum & Guſſetium; ſo Ainſworth.

tended. It may be applied to any wicked, lawleſs, and tyrannical perſecutor of God's people; and particularly to the lawleſs and wicked one, the man of ſin, the ſon of perdition, Antichriſt, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4, 8.

℣. 5. For thou art my hope, O Lord God, &c.] The object, ground, and foundation of it, even of preſent deliverance, and of future and eternal ſalvation. Thou art my truſt from my youth; in whom he truſted in his youthful days, of which there is an eminent inſtance in 1 Sam. xvii. 33——45.

℣. 6. By thee have I been holden up from the womb, &c.] Supported in being, upheld in life, and ſuſtained with food and raiment, and followed with the mercies and bleſſings of life from thence to this preſent moment; which the pſalmiſt takes notice of, as he does of what goes before and follows after, to encourage his faith and hope in God as to preſent deliverance. Thou art he that took me out of my mother's bowels; ſee the note on Pſal. xxii. 9. the Syriac verſion is, thou art my hope from my mother's bowels; the Arabic verſion, thou art my helper; and the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, thou art my protector: the word is only uſed here, and in Pſal. xc. 10. and is there rendered cut off; the Lord was, as it were, his cutter off [t]; that cut the navel-ſtring, and looſed him from his mother, and ſafely brought him into the world, and preſerved him ever ſince: wherefore he adds, My praiſe ſhall be continually of thee; as the God of nature and providence; and alſo as the God of grace, who had bleſſed him both with temporal and ſpiritual bleſſings; and theſe being continued with him, he determines that God ſhould be the ſubject of his praiſe always. The Targum is, "in thy word my "praiſe is continually."

℣. 7. I am as a wonder unto many, &c.] To the multitude, to the populace, or to the great [u] and mighty; and indeed to both: which reſpects not his wonderful preſervation from the womb, he had before obſerved; nor his being in a wonderful manner raiſed to the throne of Iſrael; nor the wonderful things, and amazing exploits done by him, and victories he obtained; nor the wonderful inſtances of divine grace and goodneſs to him; but rather the forlorn and diſtreſſed ſtate and condition he was now in, being obliged to quit his palace, and flee from the face of his ſon, accompanied only with a few of his ſervants; and ſo was a ſhocking ſight, a ſpectacle, as the apoſtle ſays of himſelf, to others, to the world, to angels, and to men, 1 Cor. iv. 9. ſo the Meſſiah and his children are ſaid to be ſet for ſigns and wonders, Iſai. viii. 18. and Joſhua and his fellows to be men wondered at, Zech. iii. 8. as the ſaints are by themſelves, that they ſhould partake of ſuch favours; and by the angels, that they ſhould be the objects of electing, redeeming, calling, adopting, juſtifying, and pardoning grace; and by the world, that they ſhould chuſe to ſuffer affliction and reproach for Chriſt, bear it with ſo much patience, and be ſupported, and thrive under it; ſee 2 Cor. vi. 8—10. But thou art my ſtrong refuge; or my refuge of ſtrength [w]; his refuge and ſtrength, as in Pſal. xlvi. 1. his refuge to which he betook himſelf, when refuge failed him, and no man cared for him, and which he found to be a ſtrong one, and in it ſafety.

℣. 8. Let my mouth be filled with thy praiſe, &c.] Or thy praiſe ſhall fill my mouth [x]; which ſhews that his heart was affected with the goodneſs of God to him, and that he had a deep impreſſion and ſenſe of it upon him; for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaks; and for the mouth to be filled with the praiſe of God, is to ſpeak largely, publickly, and with great delight, in the praiſe of God, his divine perfections and benefits. And with thy honour all the day; the excellency of his nature, the glory of his majeſty, the honour due unto him, on account of his being, attributes, and bleſſings of providence and grace; a work to be employed in all the day, evening, morning, and at noon: as often as prayer is made to God, praiſe, honour, and glory ſhould be given him; ſince his mercies are new every morning, and they continue all the day long; his goodneſs endures for ever.

℣. 9. Caſt me not off in the time of old age, &c.] The Lord never caſts off, nor caſts away his people, whom he foreknew; they are near unto him; they are on his heart, and are engraven on the palms of his hands; and they ſhall never be removed from his heart's-love, nor out of his arms, nor out of his covenant, and ſhall always be the objects of his care: he bears and carries them to old age, and even to hoary hairs: the Lord had been the guide of David's youth, and his truſt then, ℣. 5. and now he deſires he would be the ſtaff of his old age; at which age he was when Abſalom rebelled againſt him. Forſake me not when my ſtrength faileth; as it does when old age comes on; then the keepers of the houſe tremble, and the ſtrong men bow themſelves, and eſpecially at death, when fleſh and heart fail; but God will never forſake his people, neither in youth, nor in old age, neither in life nor at death.

℣. 10. For mine enemies ſpeak againſt me, &c.] Or ſay unto me [y], what is expreſſed in the following verſe, God hath forſaken him; and ſo theſe words are a reaſon of the above petitions: or mine enemies ſpeak to me; or of me [z]; not good, but evil: and ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, "for "mine enemies ſpeak evil againſt me;" or concerning me. David had his enemies, and many, as Ahithophel, and others, who ſpake againſt him to the people, and thereby drew many with them into rebellion againſt him; and particularly Shimei ſpoke againſt him, and curſed him, calling him a bloody man, a man of Belial, 2 Sam. xvi. 7. And they that lay wait for my ſoul; or life; that laid ſnares for him; or lay in ambuſh, and ſought for an opportunity to take away his life: or they that keep my ſoul, or life [a]; that were his life-guards that were about his perſon for the preſervation of him; and ſo ehe Targum ſeems to underſtand it. Take counſel together; lay ſchemes, and form plots how to deſtroy him, as Ahithophel did, 2 Sam. xvi. 20—23. and xvii. 1—4.

℣. 11. Saying, God hath forſaken him, &c.] Good men may ſeem to others to be forſaken of God; and they themſelves may ſometimes think they are; and they may be forſaken for a ſmall moment, when God withdraws his gracious preſence, or does not afford immediate help; but never finally and totally. This David's enemies concluded, from the diſtreſſed condition he was in, being obliged to leave his family and court, and flee flee from his ſon, and wander up and down with a ſmall retinue; and this they ſaid to one another, to encourage themſelves to lay violent hands upon him, which they thought they might do with eaſe and impunity; wherefore it follows, Perſecute and take him; purſue after him eagerly and diligently; loſe no time; and when come up to him, ſeize upon him, without any fear of God or man. For there is none to deliver him; out of our hands. God will not, for he has forſaken him; and men cannot, for he has not an army ſufficient to defend him or recover him.

[t] גוזי exciſor meus, Gejerus. [u] לרבים multis vel magnis, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth. [w] מחסי עז refugium meum roboris, Gejerus. [x] ימלא פי תהלתך [y] אמרן לי dixerunt mihi, Montanus. [z] De me loquuti ſunt, vel loquuntur, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Gejerus, Michaelis. [a] שמרי נפשי cuſtodientes animam meam, Pagninus, Montanus; cuſtodiebant, V. L.

℣. 12. O God, be not far from me, &c.] God is every where, at hand and afar off, with regard to his being, power and providence; his glorious preſence is in heaven, his gracious preſence is with his people; but when he hides his face, he ſeems to be at a diſtance; and this they cannot bear, and therefore deprecate it; ſee Pſal. x. 1. O my God, make haſte for my help; he knew that his help was in God, and that there was none for him elſewhere; and that he could help him when none elſe could, and was a preſent help in time of trouble; and it being ſuch a time with him, and his caſe deſperate, he deſires the Lord that he would make haſte; and he addreſſes him as his own God, the conſideration of which encouraged his faith and hope in him, and carried in it an argument to help him; ſee Pſal. cxix. 94.

℣. 13. Let them be confounded, &c.] See Pſal. lxx. 2. And conſumed; like ſmoke; ſee Pſal. xxxvii. 20. as Antichriſt will be with the breath of Chriſt's mouth, and the brightneſs of his coming, 2 Theſſ. ii. 8. That are adverſaries to my ſoul; that hated him with a diabolical hatred, as the devil hates the ſouls of men, and who has his name Satan from the word here uſed; all wicked men are Satans, full of enmity againſt God, and all good men; and ſuch were David's enemies, ſpiteful and malicious, and nothing would ſatisfy them but his life. Let them be covered with reproach and diſhonour; as with a garment. That ſeek my hurt; ſee Pſal. xxxv. 26. and cix. 18, 19. as Abſalom and his company; ſo Arama.

℣. 14. But I will hope continually, &c.] For deliverance and ſalvation from preſent outward troubles, for more grace here and glory hereafter: it is the excellency of the grace of hope to be exerciſed in times of affliction and diſtreſs, and with Abraham to believe in hope againſt hope; and then it is that this grace is eminently and remarkably uſeful: it is an anchor to the ſoul when in diſtreſs, which keeps it firm and ſtedfaſt; and an helmet, which covers the head in the day of battle; in the exerciſe of which the believer glories in tribulation: it is an abiding grace, and ſhould be continually exerciſed by thoſe that have it, which is to abound in it; but this muſt be through the power of the holy Ghoſt, Rom. xv. 13. And will yet praiſe thee more and more; or will add to all thy praiſe [b]; to former praiſes and thankſgivings, freſh ones, as his mercies were renewed to him, and he was daily loaded with benefits.

℣. 15. My mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy righteouſneſs, &c.] Both his punitive juſtice in taking vengeance on his enemies, agreeable to the above imprecations; and his faithfulneſs in the performance of promiſes of good things unto him; as alſo his eſſential righteouſneſs diſplayed and glorified in the redemption that is by Chriſt; and particularly the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, accepted of God, and imputed by him; which the pſalmiſt with his mouth declared his faith in, expreſſed his joy at, and ſet forth in a ſtrong manner the glory and excellency of it, and determined to make mention of it, and of that only, as in the following verſe. And thy ſalvation all the day; both temporal and eternal; the glory of both, and praiſe for the ſame. For I know not the numbers thereof; of that righteouſneſs and ſalvation, the numerous bleſſings which are contained in them; ſee Pſal. xl. 5. or though I know not the numbers of them [c]; though he could not fully declare the glories and excellencies of the righteouſneſs and ſalvation of God, and the numerous mercies and rich grace included in them; yet he would attempt to ſet them forth in the beſt way he could, though in a feeble and imperfect manner.

℣. 16. I will go in the ſtrength of the Lord God, &c.] Go on praiſing him, as he had determined to do in the preceding verſes; not in his own ſtrength, knowing that his heart was not always diſpoſed aright, or prepared and fit for ſuch ſervice; and that though the daily continuance of favours required conſtant praiſe; yet he needed always the aids of divine grace to raiſe his affection and ſong: or I will go into the ſtrengths of the Lord God [d]; the power of God is expreſſed in the plural number, to ſhew the greatneſs of it, which is as a garriſon to the believer; ſee 1 Pet. i. 5. a ſtrong-hold, a ſtrong tower, a ſtrong habitation, as in ℣. 3. into which he goes by faith, and is there ſafe, in all times of diſtreſs and danger: or the ſenſe is, that he would go into the houſe of God, the temple and ſanctuary, and in his ſtrength perform the duties of public worſhip there; and it may include all religious actions, private and public, and every ſpiritual undertaking; which ought to be attempted and performed, not in our own ſtrength, but in the ſtrength of the Lord: man is become, thro' ſin, a weak and impotent creature; though he is very hard to be brought to a ſenſe and acknowledgment of his weakneſs; true believers are ſenſible of it, and own it; and ſuch knowing that there is a ſufficiency of ſtrength in Chriſt for them, look and go to him for it; to do otherwiſe, to attempt to do any thing in our own ſtrength, betrays our weakneſs, folly and vanity, and is dangerous, attended with bad conſequences, and never ſucceeds well: the apoſtle Peter is an inſtance of this, Matt. xxvi. 33, 35, 70. I will make mention of thy righteouſneſs, even of thine only; and that before the Lord himſelf: not his own righteouſneſs, which he knew would not juſtify him in his ſight, nor render him acceptable to him; nor furniſh out a plea or argument why he ſhould receive any favour from him; and therefore reſolves not to mention it; but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is the righteouſneſs of God, which he approves of, accepts, and imputes. This is a pure, perfect, and ſpotleſs righteouſneſs, which God is well pleaſed with; honours his law, ſatisfies his juſtice, and ſo juſtifies in his ſight; and renders perſon and ſervice acceptable to him; and therefore with great propriety, pleaſure and boldneſs, may be mentioned unto him; as it ſhould be to Chriſt himſelf alſo; by aſcribing it to him, as the author of it; by expreſſing a deſire to be found in it; to have faith of intereſt in it, and joy on account of it; and by owning him openly and freely, as the Lord our righteouſneſs: and we ſhould make mention of it to others, in praiſe of it; extolling tolling it as the righteouſneſs of God, and not a creature; and ſo ſufficient to juſtify many, even all the ſeed of Iſrael; as the beſt robe of righteouſneſs, better than the beſt of man's, better than Adam's in innocence, or than the angels in heaven; as a law-honouring and juſtice-ſatisfying one, and as an everlaſting one. And we ſhould put ourſelves in mind of it, and, by repeated acts of faith, put it on as our juſtifying righteouſneſs; ſince much of our joy, peace and comfort, depend upon it. And this, and this only, is to be made mention of; it is only in the Lord that there is righteouſneſs: as there is ſalvation in him, and in no other; ſo there is righteouſneſs in him, and in no other; wherefore no other is to be mentioned along with it: juſtification is not partly by Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and partly by our own; but only by his, and thro' faith in it; ſee Rom. ix. 32.

[b] והוספתי על כל תהלתך omnibus laudibus tuis adjiciam, Tigurine verſion. [c] כי quamvis, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Gejerus; ſo Ainſworth. [d] בגבורות in fortitudines, Montanus; in potentias, V. L. Vatablus.

℣. 17. O God, thou haſt taught me from my youth, &c.] The corruption of human nature; the weakneſs and impotence of it, to every thing that is ſpiritually good; and the need of continual ſtrength and grace from Chriſt, to go to him for righteouſneſs and ſtrength, life and ſalvation, and to walk by faith on him; the doctrine of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and the inſufficiency of his own; the will, ways, and worſhip of God; and all the duties of religion, prayer, praiſe, &c. and whoever were the inſtruments, or whatever were the means, of teaching David theſe things, he aſcribes to God. Whether his parents, or the prieſts and Levites, taught him the ſacrifices and ordinances of the law, it was the Lord that bleſſed inſtructions to him; and that taught him by providences and precepts, and by his holy Spirit. And a wonderful bleſſing it is to be taught of God, and not of men, things relating both to doctrine and practice; and it is an addition to it, to be taught theſe things early, as David was from his youth; and therefore the Lord was ſo ſoon the object of his faith and truſt, ℣. 5. and, as Timothy, from a child, was acquainted with the holy ſcriptures, and the things contained in them, which are able to make wiſe unto ſalvation, Iſa. xxix. 13. and liv. 13. 2 Tim. iii. 15. And hitherto have I declared thy wondrous works; not only of nature and providence, but of grace; the treaſuring up of all grace, and the bleſſings of it in Chriſt; the work of redemption by him; the work of regeneration and converſion by his Spirit; and the perſeverance of the ſaints by his grace and ſtrength; which are all wonderful and amazing. And as the pſalmiſt ſaw his intereſt in theſe things, and had an experience of them; he declared them to others for their encouragement, and to the glory of all the three Perſons; ſee Pſal. lxvi. 16. Mark v. 19.

℣. 18. Now alſo when I am old and gray-headed, O God, forſake me not, &c.] A repetition of his requeſt, ℣. 9. with a reaſon annexed to it, ſuggeſted in the following words: Until I have ſhewed thy ſtrength unto this generation; or, thine arm [c]; which ſometimes deſigns the Meſſiah, Iſa. liii. 1. who is the power of God, by whom he made the worlds, and in whom all things conſiſt; and who has wrought out the ſalvation of his people; and is the arm on which they lean, and by which they are upheld. And the pſalmiſt may be thought to deſire that he might be continued a little longer, and be favoured with the preſence of God, and the influences of his Spirit and grace; that he might ſhew forth in prophecy, both by word and writing, to the men of the then preſent age, more things concerning the perſon, office and grace of Chriſt; his ſufferings, death, reſurrection from the dead, and ſeſſion at the right hand of God; things which are ſpoken of in the book of Pſalms. Sometimes the arm of the Lord denotes his power and ſtrength, Pſal. xliv. 3. and ſo it may be taken here; and the next clauſe ſeems to be an explanation of it: And thy power; or even thy power, to every one that is to come; that is, to come into the world, that is to be born into it; namely, the power of God, not only in creating all things out of nothing, and ſupporting what is made; but in the redemption of men; in the converſion of ſinners, and in the preſervation of the ſaints, and in enabling them to hold on and out unto the end: and which is ſhewn forth by the pſalmiſt in what he has committed to writing; and which continue, and will continue to the end of the world, for the inſtruction of thoſe that come into it; ſee Pſal. xxii. 31.

℣. 19. Thy righteouſneſs alſo, O God, is very high, &c.] Or, unto the place on high [f]; it reaches unto heaven, as the mercy, truth and faithfulneſs of God, are ſaid to do, Pſal. xxxvi. 5. and lvii. 10. The righteouſneſs of Chriſt is accepted of with God the Father in heaven; it is in Chriſt, who is there at the right hand of God; and it is higher and infinitely above any righteouſneſs of a creature, angel's or man's. Who haſt done great things; in nature, in forming the world out of nothing, and in upholding all creatures in their beings; in providence, in governing the world, and ordering all things in it for the beſt, and to anſwer the wiſeſt purpoſes; in grace, in the ſalvation of loſt ſinners by Chriſt; in the juſtification of them by his righteouſneſs; and in the atonement and pardon of their ſins, through his blood and ſacrifice; in the regeneration of them by his grace; in making and performing exceeding great and precious promiſes, and in giving them eternal life. O God, who is like unto thee? either for greatneſs or goodneſs; for power or for mercy; for juſtice, truth and faithfulneſs; for the perfections of his nature, or the works of his hands; and to be praiſed, reverenced and adored, as he is; ſee Pſal. lxxxix. 6, 7.

℣. 20. Thou which haſt ſhewed me great and ſore troubles, &c.] Or, made him to ſee [g]; that is, to experience. David had his troubles, and theſe were great, both as to quantity and quality; and very grievous and hard to be borne, and were very trying and afflictive: ſome outward, ſuch as he endured when perſecuted by Saul; and afterwards in his own family, through the inceſt of Amnon, the murder of him by Abſalom, and Abſalom's rebellion againſt him; the curſes of Shimei, and the bickerings of the ſons of Zeruiah; with many others: and ſome inward, ariſing from the corruptions of his heart, the hidings of God's face, and the temptations of Satan. His experience of all which he aſcribes, not to inſtruments or ſecond cauſes, but to God himſelf; who had either laid them upon him, or ſuffered them to befal him, for wiſe ends of his glory, and his ſervant's good. There is in this clauſe and the following, a keri and a cetib; according to the cetib, or writing in the text, it is, who haſt ſhewed us; and ſo the Targum renders it: but according to the keri in the margin, and the points, points, it is as we read; ſo it is in the Septuagint and Oriental verſions, and both may be retained; for David's troubles, and thoſe of other ſaints, are much the ſame. Shalt quicken me again; either raiſe him from ſo great a death of afflictions, in which he ſeemed to be as a dead man, both by himſelf and others, to a more comfortable and happy ſtate and condition, in which he might live more free from vexation and trouble: or, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, quicken him, being dead and lifeleſs, in the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty; which is uſually done by the word and ordinances, and to purpoſe, by the diſcoveries of the love of God, which excite grace, and animate to duty. And this is God's work, and may be called a quickning again, in diſtinction from the firſt quickning, when dead in treſpaſſes and ſins. And ſhalt bring me up again from the depths of the earth; expreſſive of a very low eſtate, either of body or mind, into which he had been brought; ſee Pſal. cxxx. 1. and lxxxviii. 6. Could the pſalm be underſtood of Chriſt, this and the preceding clauſe might be applied to his reſurrection from the dead; ſee Epheſ. iv. 9. and to the reſurrection of the ſaints; on which the faith of Chriſt and his people is exerciſed.

[c] זרועך brachium tuum; V.L. Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, &c. עד uſque in excelſum, Pagninus, Montanus, Gejerus; in altum uſque, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. feciſti me videre, Vatablus, Cocceius, Gejerus; videre & experiri feciſti nos, Michaelis.

[f] מרום

[g] הראיתנו

℣. 21. Thou ſhalt increaſe my greatneſs, &c.] His temporal greatneſs, as he did, by cruſhing the rebellion of his ſon; returning him to his palace and family; and giving him reſt from his enemies all around: and his ſpiritual greatneſs, by favouring him with his preſence; by ſhedding abroad his love in his heart; by enlarging his experience, increaſing his faith, cauſing his love to abound, and him to grow in every grace, and in the knowledge of Chriſt. And comfort me on every ſide; by his Spirit, word and ordinances; by his truths and promiſes; with his rod and ſtaff; and with mercy, grace, and loving-kindneſs. The phraſe denotes the abundance of comfort, which ſhould come as it were from every quarter, and encompaſs him about.

℣. 22. I will alſo praiſe thee with the pſaltery, &c.] An inſtrument of muſic; ſee the note on Pſal. xxxiii. 2. Even thy truth, O my God; that is, his faithfulneſs in fulfilling his promiſes, which is never ſuffered to fail. Unto thee will I ſing with the harp; another inſtrument of muſic; and both typical of the ſpiritual melody in the heart, which believers make in praiſing the Lord, when they ſing the Lamb's new ſong; ſee Rev. xiv. 2, 3. O thou holy One of Iſrael; the God of Iſrael, that dwells among them, and ſanctifies them; and who is eſſentially and perfectly holy in himſelf, and in all his ways and works; the remembrance of which occaſions praiſe and thankfulneſs, Pſal. xcvii. 12.

℣. 23. My lips ſhall greatly rejoice when I ſing unto thee, &c.] Both with vocal and inſtrumental muſic; this is praiſing the Lord with joyful lips, Pſal. lxiii. 5. And my ſoul, which thou haſt redeemed; ſignifying, that it would not be lip labour, or bodily ſervice only that he ſhould perform; but that his heart would go along with his lips in praiſe; and that under a ſenſe of redeeming love, than which nothing can more ſtrongly engage in ſuch work, Pſal. ciii. 1, 2, 3. For the redemption of the ſoul is exceeding precious; being the contrivance of infinite wiſdom, the fruit of divine grace, and owing to the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt.

℣. 24. My tongue alſo ſhall talk of thy righteouſneſs all the day long, &c.] See the note on ℣. 16. For they are confounded; his adverſaries, for whoſe confuſion he prayed, ℣. 13. For they are brought unto ſhame that ſeek my hurt; as Abſalom and Ahithophel, being both brought to a ſhameful end.

PSALM LXXII.

A pſalm for Solomon.

THE title of this pſalm is by ſome rendered, a pſalm of Solomon[h]; as a pſalm לדוד for David, is often rendered a pſalm of David; and ſo make Solomon to be the writer of it: to which the Targum inclines, which paraphraſes it, "by "the hand of Solomon, ſaid in prophecy." But, though Solomon had a gift of divine poetry, as appears by the Song of Songs, compoſed by him; and the Thouſand and Five, he was the author of; and perhaps wrote the 127th Pſalm: yet by the firſt and laſt verſes of this pſalm, it may be concluded, it was not wrote by him, but by David; and very likely, at the cloſe of his days, when he ordered Solomon to be anointed king, and expreſſed his ſatisfaction in it; his prayers and wiſhes then being ended with regard to that affair; ſee 1 Kings xxxiv. 48. And ſo the title in the Syriac verſion is, "a "pſalm of David, when he made Solomon king:" the ſame Kimchi obſerves; it was written for him, and on his account: and it might be ſent to him, and delivered into his hands, to be laid up and kept by him, and be referred to for his uſe at proper times. For it may be rendered, as in the Arabic verſion, to Solomon; which adds, the ſon of David: or elſe it may denote the ſubject of the pſalm, and be read, concerning Solomon[i]; the Meſſiah, the antitypical Solomon; who is often called by this name in the Song of Songs; ſee Cant. iii. 7, 9, 11. and viii. 11. Solomon being a type of him in his wiſdom and riches, and in the peaceableneſs and extent of his kingdom; to which reference is had in this pſalm. But a greater than Solomon is here; that the Meſſiah is the ſubject of it is manifeſt, from the largeneſs of his kingdom, it reaching to the ends of the earth; which was not true of Solomon, ℣. 8. and from the duration of it, it being as long as the ſun and moon endure, ℣. 5, 7, 17. and from the abundance of peace and proſperity in it, which equally laſt, ℣. 3, 7. and from the ſubjection of kings and nations to him, even all of them, ℣. 9, 10, 11. and from the happineſs of his ſubjects; they having protection, deliverance, and ſalvation by him, and all ſpiritual bleſſings in him; which ſhews him to be the promiſed ſeed, in whom all nations ſhould be bleſſed, ℣. 2, 4, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17. and from the honour, praiſe, glory and bleſſedneſs, aſcribed to him, ℣. 15, 17, 18, 19. So Tertullian[k], long ago, obſerved, that this pſalm belongs to Chriſt, and not to Solomon. And that the Meſſiah is intended, many of the Jewiſh writers, both ancient and modern, acknowledge; as appears from the Targum, Talmud, Midraſh, and other ther writings, which will be obſerved in the expoſition of it. Jarchi, though he interprets it of Solomon, yet owns that their Rabbins expound the whole pſalm of the Meſſiah: and Kimchi, who explains it hyperbolically of Solomon, acknowledges that in the proper and literal ſenſe, it is to be underſtood of the Meſſiah; and which is the ſenſe given by his father, R. Joſeph Kimchi. Aben Ezra ſays, this pſalm is either concerning Solomon, or concerning the Meſſiah; but Abarbinel [l] makes no doubt that it is ſaid concerning him. R. Obadiah ſays, it is concerning the coming of the Meſſiah; and to this agrees the title in the Syriac verſion, "and a prophecy concerning the coming of the Meſ-"ſiah, and the calling of the Gentiles."

[h] לשלמה ipſius Selomoh, Vatablus; Salomonis, Cocceius. [i] De Salomone, Muis. [k] Adv. Marcion. l. 5. c. 9.

℣. 1. Give the king thy judgments, O God, &c.] A prayer of David, or of the church he perſonates, to God the Father concerning Chriſt; for he is the King meant; which is the ſenſe of the old Jewiſh ſynagogue: the Targum is, "give the conſtitutions "of thy judgments to the King Meſſiah;" and ſo their Midraſh [m] interprets it He is the King, by way of eminence, as in Pſal. xlv. 1. not only the King of the world, in right of creation and preſervation, in conjunction with his Father, having an equal right with him; but of ſaints, of the church and people of God, by the deſignation and conſtitution of his Father: hence he was promiſed and propheſied of as a King, Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. Ezek xxxvii. 24. Hoſea iii. 5. Zech. ix. 9. and he came into the world as ſuch, though his kingdom did not appear very manifeſt in his ſtate of humiliation; yet at his aſcenſion it did, when he was made and declared Lord and Chriſt; and it is for the manifeſtation of his kingdom, and the glory of it, the pſalmiſt here prays. For by judgments are meant, not the ſtatutes and laws of God, given him to be ſhewn, explained unto and enforced on others, which rather belongs to his prophetic office, or as the rule of his government; nor the judgments of God to be inflicted upon wicked men, which is only one part of his kingly office; but of all power in heaven and in earth, which was given him by his Father upon his reſurrection, and about the time of his aſcenſion, Matt. xxviii 18. and is the ſame with all judgment committed by him to his Son, John v. 22. and which explains the clauſe here, and is the reaſon why it is expreſſed in the plural number here; which takes in the whole of the power and authority, the kingdom and the greatneſs of the kingdom, delivered to Chriſt; and which chiefly lies in the government of the church, which is on his ſhoulders, and is committed into his hand; exerciſed in enacting laws, and delivering out ordinances, to be obſerved by the ſaints, and in the protection and defence of them; and alſo includes his judgment of the world at the laſt day, to which he is ordained and appointed by his Father, and will be managed and conducted by him. And thy righteouſneſs unto the king's ſon; who is the ſame with the King, as Jarchi well obſerves; for only one ſingle perſon is afterwards ſpoken of, and deſigns the Meſſiah; who, as a divine perſon, is the Son of the King of kings, the only begotten of the Father, the true and proper Son of God; and as man, the ſon of David the king. And ſo the Targum, "and thy righteouſneſs to the Son of David the "king;" a known name of the Meſſiah, Matt. i. 1. and xxii. 42. And by righteouſneſs is meant, not the eſſential righteouſneſs of God; this Chriſt has by nature equally with his divine Father, and is not given or communicated to him; but the fulneſs of the graces of the Spirit, and perfection of virtues, which he received without meaſure; whereby, as Mediator, he is abundantly qualified to judge with righteouſneſs, and reprove with equity; and not as other judges do, after the ſight of the eyes, or hearing of the ears; ſee Iſa. xi. 2, 3. Unleſs it can be underſtood of the everlaſting righteouſneſs, which Chriſt has wrought out, called his Father's, becauſe appointed in council and covenant, approved of and accepted by him, and imputed to his people. To work out this righteouſneſs, was not only given to Chriſt in covenant, but he was ſent in the fulneſs of time to do it; and had a power given him as Mediator, to juſtify many with it, Iſa. liii. 11. and which may be here prayed for. Jerom, by the king's ſon, underſtands ſuch as are regenerated, and taken into the adoption of children; and to ſuch the righteouſneſs of God is given. This is a truth, but not the ſenſe of the text.

℣. 2. He ſhall judge thy people with righteouſneſs, &c.] Or, ſo ſhall he judge; or, that he may judge [n], as the Syriac and Arabic verſions; having the judgments and righteouſneſs of God given him, he will be thereby qualified to judge the people of God; ſuch as are ſo, not by creation, but by ſpecial grace; his choſen and covenant-people, the redeemed and purchaſed people of God; and who in effectual vocation, appear to be ſo, and are made his willing people. Theſe Chriſt judges, rules and governs, protects and defends, in a righteous manner; pleads their cauſe, vindicates their right, and avenges them on their enemies, as well as juſtifies them with his own righteouſneſs. And thy poor with judgment; juſtice and equity. Such who are literally poor, and are the Lord's poor, whom he has choſen, and makes rich in faith, and heirs of a kingdom; and with whom Chriſt, when here on earth, was chiefly concerned, and now is; and not with the great men and rulers of the earth: or ſuch who are poor in ſpirit, ſenſible of their ſpiritual poverty; that find themſelves hungry and thirſty, and deſtitute of righteouſneſs, and without money, or any thing to procure either. Or, thine afflicted ones [o]; ſuch as are diſtreſſed in body or mind, with reſpect to things temporal or ſpiritual; oppreſſed by ſin, Satan, and the world. Theſe Chriſt regards, and adminiſters juſtice to in his own time and way; ſee Iſa xi. 4.

℣. 3. The mountains ſhall bring peace to the people, &c.] The people of God, as before. Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret this of the nations, and kings of the nations, comparable to mountains and hills, as in Micah vi. 1, 2. that ſhould make peace with Iſrael in the days of Solomon, and in the days of the King Meſſiah. Jarchi, of the abundance of fruit the mountains and hills ſhould bring forth; ſo that there would be no contention among men about gathering it; but every one would invite his neighbour to partake thereof, according to Zech. iii. 10. and ſo the Midraſh [p]. The Targum explains it of the inhabitants of the mountains; and may be applied to the churches of Chriſt, comparable to the mountains for their firmneſs and ſtability, Iſa. ii. 2. and xi. 9. and xxv. 6. and to the abundance of peace, holineſs and righteouſneſs, that ſhould be found in them in the times of Chriſt; or to the miniſters of the goſpel, whoſe feet are beautiful upon the the mountains, publiſhing peace and ſalvation by Chriſt, Iſa. lii. 7. And the little hills by righteouſneſs; that is, ſhall bring peace, by or with righteouſneſs, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; the effect of which is ſpiritual peace and joy, Rom. v. 1. and xiv. 17.

[l] Maſhmiah Jeſhuah, fol. 78. 2, 3. [m] In Yalkut Simeoni, par. 2. fol. 112. 2. [n] יריץ ut jus dicat, Tigurine verſion; ſo Ainſworth. [o] עניך afflictos tuos, Montanus, Vatablus, Muſculus, Piſcator, Gejerus, Michaelis, Tigurine verſion. [p] In Yalkut Simeoni, ut ſupra.

℣. 4. He ſhall judge the poor of the people, &c.] Of the people of God, whether among Jews or Gentiles; ſee the note on ℣. 2. He ſhall ſave the children of the needy; whoſe parents being needy, they are ſo too, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and in diſtreſſed circumſtances. Such Chriſt ſaves from their ſins; from the curſes and condemnation of the law; from wrath to come, and out of the hands of all their enemies. And ſhall break in pieces the oppreſſor; the tyrant Satan, the god of this world; that has uſurped a power over it; who works in the children of diſobedience, and leads captive the people of God in their unregenerate ſtate: the calumniator, as ſome render the word; the accuſer of the brethren: the defrauder [q], as others; who beguiled our firſt parents, and deceives mankind. Now it was foretold of Chriſt, that he ſhould break his head; and he was manifeſted in the fleſh to deſtroy his works, and him himſelf; and he has broke him and all his ſchemes in pieces, and ſpoiled all his principalities and powers. The Syriac verſion reads tyrants or oppreſſors, in the plural number; and it may include the Jews, who were the perſecutors and oppreſſors of the firſt Chriſtians; and Rome, pagan and papal; Antichriſt, and all the antichriſtian ſtates, which have been, or will be broken to pieces by Chriſt; who will rule them with a rod of iron, and break them in pieces as a potter's veſſel, Rev. ii. 27. and xii. 5. and xix. 15.

℣. 5. They ſhall fear thee, &c.] The King Meſſiah, the judge of the poor, and the deſtroyer of the oppreſſor: either the tyrants and oppreſſors themſelves ſhall fear him, and ſuch who have been aiding and aſſiſting to them; ſee Rev. xi. 11, 13. or rather the people of God, the poor of the people, and children of the needy, judged and ſaved by Chriſt; who ſhall fear the Lord, both internally and externally, in the exerciſe of grace, and in the performance of religious worſhip; in all the parts of it, which are both included in the fear of the Lord; of which there will be many inſtances, both among Jews and Gentiles, in the latter day; ſee Hoſea iii. 5. Iſa. lx. v. Rev. xv. 4. and this they ſhall do, As long as the ſun and moon endure, throughout all generations; or, with the ſun, and before the moon, generation of generations [r]; that is, to the end of the world, till ſun and moon ſhall be no more: ſo long will Chriſt have a ſeed to ſerve him; ſee Pſal. lxxxix. 36, 37.

℣. 6. He ſhall come down like rain upon the mowen graſs, &c.] That is, the King and King's Son, the Meſſiah, whoſe coming is compared to rain and ſhowers of it; ſee Hoſea vi. 3. and may be underſtood of his incarnation; when, like rain, he came down from heaven; not by an illapſe of the human nature, which before was not in him; nor by local motion of his divine perſon, with which that will not agree; but by aſſumption of human nature into union with him, as the Son of God; which was an inſtance of his condeſcending grace: like rain, he had no father as man; ſee Job xxxviii. 28. but was born of a virgin, through the power of the holy Ghoſt; which was very marvellous, like the dew that fell on Gideon's fleece, when the earth about it was dry; which ſome think is here referred to. The word uſed ſignifies alſo a ſhorn fleece of wool; and ſo it is rendered by the Septuagint, and thoſe verſions which follow that: or, ſhorn graſs, ſhorn by locuſts, as the Targum; rather by ſheep, who, as by claſſical writers [s], are ſaid to ſheer the graſs by biting it. Or, like rain upon the fleece [t]; and as the rain is the gift of God to perſons undeſerving, in conſequence of a decree, Job xxviii. 26. ſometimes comes ſuddenly, and is very grateful and refreſhing; ſo Chriſt is the free gift of God to ſinners, and by a decree of his; and his coming was ſuddenly, into his temple, and was welcome to them that looked for him; as he ſtill is to all ſenſible ſinners. Or this may be interpreted of the coming of Chriſt into the hearts of his people, by the communications of his Spirit and grace, which, like rain, came down from heaven; are dependent on the will of God, are free grace-gifts, and given in abundance; and, like rain, refreſh, revive and make fruitful. Or elſe this may be applied to the adminiſtration of Chriſt's offices; as his prophetic office, his goſpel and doctrine being from heaven, like rain, and falling by divine direction, ſometimes in one place, and ſometimes in another; and like it in its effects, ſoftening, quickning and fructifying: and more eſpecially it may reſpect the adminiſtration of his kingly office, ſince he is in the context ſpoken of as a King and Judge, and that in the latter day; whoſe adminiſtrations, though juſt and righteous, yet not cruel and ſevere, but mild and gentle; his commands are not grievous, nor his yoke heavy; though he will rule the wicked with a rod of iron, he holds forth the ſceptre of grace and mercy to his own people; and when his kingdom ſhall come in all its glory, it will be times refreſhing from the preſence of the Lord; and his favour will be as the cloud of the latter rain; ſee Acts iii. 19, 21. Prov. xvi. 15. As ſhowers that water the earth; ſignifying the ſame. The word זרזיף is only in this place, and is uſed in the Talmud [u], in the plural number, for drops of water; and this ſenſe of ſhowers dropping on the earth, is given by the Targum. Kimchi derives it from זרף which, in the Syriac language, ſignifies to cut; and thinks the phraſe is the ſame with the former, as ſhowers on the cut graſs of the earth [w]. But perhaps the word rather deſigns the ſciſſures and gaps of the earth through drought; and the ſenſe is, that Chriſt's coming is like ſhowers of rain upon the dry and parched ground, which are very acceptable to it.

℣. 7. In his days ſhall the righteous flouriſh, &c.] As the graſs of the field, ℣. 16. the dews and rain of grace deſcending upon them; and as a branch, Prov. xi. 28. They being branches in Chriſt the vine, flouriſh and bring forth fruit; and as the palm-tree, Pſal. xcii. 12. which the more it is preſſed with weights, the more it grows; ſo they, the more they are afflicted, as the Iſraelites, the more they grow in grace and experience, and become fruitful in every good word and work; which is owing to their being planted in a good ſoil, in the houſe and courts of the Lord, where the word is preached, and ordinances adminiſtered; to their being rooted and grounded in the love of God and grace of Chriſt; to their being watered continually with the dews of divine favour; enjoying the bright ſhining ſhining of the ſun of righteouſneſs, and the refreſhing gales of the divine Spirit, like the ſouth wind upon them, cauſing their ſpices to flow out. The Targum is, "in his days the righteous ſhall be mul-"tiplied;" when the forces and fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall be brought in, and the nation of the Jews ſhall be born at once: in the latter days of the Meſſiah, all the Lord's people ſhall be righteous; and none but righteous perſons ſhall dwell in the new heavens and earth, Iſa. lx. 21. 2 Pet. iii. 13. This is to be underſtood not of perſons outwardly righteous only; nor that are ſo in their own conceit; nor that ſeek for righteouſneſs by the works of the law, or depend on an external profeſſion of religion; for ſuch never flouriſh, nor grow in grace, who have no grace to grow in: but of ſuch that are juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, have faith in him, and the ſeed of grace implanted in them. This is interpreted of the Meſſiah, by a Jewiſh writer [x]; who obſerves, that in his days the prieſthood ſhall return, and the rod of Aaron ſhall flouriſh. And abundance of peace, ſo long as the moon endureth; alluding, no doubt, to the name of Solomon, which ſignifies peace; and to that peace and proſperity which were enjoyed under his reign, and was a ſhadow of what would be in the times of Chriſt: univerſal peace, in a temporal ſenſe, was in the times of Auguſtus, in which Chriſt was born, and in whoſe reign the temple of Janus was ſhut, a ſure ſign of peace [y]. Spiritual peace was made with God by his blood, and all things were reconciled by him, whether in heaven or in earth; Jew and Gentile were made both one, and reconciled in one body; and abundance of ſpiritual peace is enjoyed by thoſe that believe in Chriſt: they are kept in perfect peace, and filled with it; and in the latter day there will be abundance of peace among the ſaints. There will be no jars nor diſcord among them; no envying nor vexing one another; no animoſities or contentions about religious matters; for they will then ſee eye to eye: and they will be at peace with the men of the world; there will be no more wars in the earth, nor bloodſhed, nor perſecution. And this ſhall endure till there is no moon, till there ſhall be no need of one; as there will not in the new Jeruſalem-ſtate, in which there will be no night.

[q] עושק calumniatorem, Pagninus, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus, Muſculus; fraudatorem, Muis, Cocceius. Eth. Syr. Arab. Apollinarius, Vatablus, & Cocceius. [r] Sic Bab. Yoma, fol. 87. 1. [s] Tondentes gramen oves, Ovid. de Remed. Amor. l. 1. Tondentes gramina lanigeræ pecudes, Lucret. l. 2. [t] על גז ſuper vellus, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus. [u] T. [w] In Sepher Shoraſh. rad. זרזף

℣. 8. He ſhall have dominion alſo from ſea to ſea, &c.] The ſame is ſaid of the Meſſiah in Zech. ix. 10. where he is manifeſtly ſpoken of as here, and regards the extent of his dominion; not over the land of Iſrael only, as ſome think; but over the Gentile world, through the preaching of the goſpel in the ſeveral parts of it; and eſpecially as it will be in the latter day, when the kingdoms of this world will be his, and he will be king over all the earth; ſee Rev. x. 15. Zech. xiv. 9. which cannot agree with Solomon, whoſe dominion reached only to the land of the Philiſtines, to the border of Egypt, 1 Kings iv. 21. but Chriſt's dominion will be, as it follows, And from the river unto the ends of the earth; which, as Kimchi owns, is clear, if applied to the Meſſiah, ſince his government ſhall be over all the world. The note of Aben Ezra on the text is worthy of regard. "If "this is ſaid concerning Solomon, the meaning is, "from the Red-ſea to the ſea of the Philiſtines; and "from the river, this is Euphrates; and the ends of "the earth mean the wilderneſs; (ſee Exod. xxiii. 31.) "and lo, mention is made of the length and breadth "of the land of Iſrael: and if of the Meſſiah, the "ſenſe is, from the ſouth-ſea, which is called the I-"dumean ſea, to the northern ſea, which is the ſea "of the ocean; and from the river, the river that "goes out of Eden at the beginning of the eaſt, "unto the ends of the earth, which is at the end "of the weſt;" though rather the ſenſe is, from the Indian ocean, the great ſea, unto the Mediterranean ſea; and from the river Euphrates to the end of the world. This text is applied to the Meſſiah by many Jewiſh writers [z], ancient and modern.

℣. 9. They that dwell in the wilderneſs ſhall bow before him, &c.] In token of ſubjection to him, reverence and worſhip of him, to whom every knee ſhall bow, Iſa. xlv. 23. The Septuagint verſion, and others, render the word צִיִּים Ethiopians, who dwell in a dry land, parched and burnt with the ſun; and ſo it is a prophecy of their converſion to Chriſt, as in Pſal. lxviii. 31. and lxxxvii. 4. of which there is an inſtance, Acts viii. 27. the word is uſed of the wild beaſts of the field, in Iſai. xiii. 21. to which wicked men, for the malignity of their nature, may be compared; as they are to the wild aſs, to lions, leopards and bears; and yet theſe are ſo tamed by the power of divine grace as to be made ſubject to Chriſt. Kimchi explains it as we do, of the inhabitants of the wilderneſs; and ſo the word is rendered in Pſal. lxxiv. 14. Iſa. xxiii. 13. and inſtances in the Kedarenes; and it may in particular deſign thoſe that dwell in the deſarts of Arabia; and in general the Gentiles, the wilderneſs of the people, who in goſpel times ſhould be brought to the knowledge of Chriſt, and ſubmiſſion to him: and it fitly deſcribes the people of God in an unregenerate ſtate; when they are as barren and unfruitful as the dry and parched ground, and as the heath in the wilderneſs; are in want of proviſion, and have nothing but huſks to feed upon; in perplexity of ways, and know not which to take, or whither they are going; and in very dangerous circumſtances, deſtruction and miſery being in all their ways: in this wilderneſs-ſtate the Lord finds them, as he did Iſrael of old, and leads them about, and brings them to Chriſt; when they ſubmit to him as a Saviour, being willing to be ſaved by him, and him only, and to his righteouſneſs, as their juſtifying-righteouſneſs before God, and to the ſceptre of his kingdom, to his laws and commands, to his goſpel, and the ordinances of it; all which they do not by conſtraint, but willingly. The Targum and Jarchi interpret it, the one of governors of provinces; the other of companies of princes. The Syriac verſion is, the iſles ſhall bow before him; the inhabitants of the iſlands: but this is expreſſed in the following verſe: Aben Ezra thinks maſters of ſhips are meant. And his enemies ſhall lick the duſt; of the earth; which is an inſtance of their great ſubjection to him; ſee Iſa. xlix. 23. Mic. vii. 17. the alluſion is to the cuſtom of the eaſtern people, and which continues to this day with the Turks, that as ſoon as an ambaſſador ſees the Sultan, whether at the window, or elſewhere, he immediately falls down on his knees, and kiſſes the ground [a]. The Jews particularly are the enemies of Chriſt, who rejected him, and would not have him to reign over them; and yet ſome of theſe became obedient to the faith of Chriſt, and more of them, even the whole nation will in the latter day: all that are Chriſt's are, before converſion, enemies

[x] Baal Hatturim in Num. fol. 169. 3. [y] Vell. Paterc. Hiſt. Rom. l. 2. Aurel. Victor. de Vir. Illuſt. Addit. c. 2. de Cæſar. c. 1. [z] Raya Mehimna in Zohar in Exod. fol. 49. 4. Bemidbar Rabba, ſ. 13. fol. 209. 4. Baal Hatturim in Num. fol. 178. 4. R. Nachman. Diſput. cum fratre Paulo, p. 41. [a] Mandevil. Itinerar. c. 7.

mies to him, to his people, to his goſpel and ordinances, to him as a King, and to all his laws and commands; but when his arrows are ſharp in their hearts, they fall under him, and ſubmit to him; throw off the yoke of ſin, Satan, and the world, and own him, and obey him as their King and lawgiver.

℣. 10. The kings of Tarſhiſh and of the iſles ſhall bring preſents, &c.] Tarſhiſh either ſignifies the ſea, as it is ſometimes rendered in the Targum; and then the ſenſe is, the kings of the ſea, that is, of the iſlands of the ſea, as it follows, ſhall be ſubject to the kingdom of Chriſt; and, as a token of it, bring preſents to him, as the Moabites and Syrians did to David, and as ſeveral nations and kings did to Solomon, 2 Sam. viii. 2. 1 Kings iv. 21. or it deſigns a large country inhabited by the Celtæ [b], and ſo is diſtinct from the iſlands; and then the ſenſe is, that kings, both of the continent, and of the iſlands of the ſea, ſhall do homage to the Meſſiah. And the kings of Sheba and Seba ſhall offer gifts; the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Ethiopic, and Arabic verſions render it, the kings of the Arabians and Saba; and ſo Apollinarius, the Arabians and Sabæans, theſe being places in Arabia Felix and Petræa [c]: this will be fulfilled when the kings of the earth ſhall bring their honour and glory into the new Jeruſalem, Rev. xxi. 24. This, and the preceding verſe, are interpreted of the Meſſiah by the ancient Jews [d]; who ſay [e], that all the gifts that Jacob their father gave to Eſau, the nations of the world ſhall return them to the King Meſſiah in time to come, according to the ſenſe of theſe words; where it is not written they ſhall bring; but יְשִׁיבוּ [f] they ſhall return preſents.

℣. 11. Yea, all kings ſhall fall down before him, &c.] Or worſhip him; not with a civil, but religious worſhip; for ſuch worſhip is due to Chriſt, he being God equal with the Father, and ſo to be equally honoured; the Creator of all things, the Redeemer of his people, head and Lord of the church, and whom the angels adore; every part of worſhip is to be given him; internal, which lies in the exerciſe of faith, hope, love, fear, &c. and external, which conſiſts of prayer to him, praiſe of him, preaching in his name, and the adminiſtration of ordinances; and this worſhip is to be performed in the ſame manner as to the Father, in ſpirit and in truth, in righteouſneſs and holineſs, with reverence and godly fear. This is to be underſtood, either literally of the kings of the earth, and which will have its full accompliſhment in the latter day; ſee Iſa. xlix. 23. and lx. 3, 11, 16. or myſtically of ſuch who are made kings unto God the Father by Chriſt; who reign ſpiritually now, through the power of divine grace in their hearts; have the honour, riches, and attendance of kings, and a crown and kingdom prepared for them; and ſhall reign with Chriſt on earth, though under him, at whoſe feet they caſt their crowns: all this ſhews the dignity of Chriſt's perſon and office; that he is the prince of the kings of the earth, the firſt born of God, whom he has made higher than they, and King of kings, and Lord of lords; whoſe princes, and all whoſe ſubjects are altogether kings. This paſſage is allowed to belong to the Meſſiah, both by ancient and modern Jews [g]; and indeed it never was true of Solomon, nor of any other. All nations ſhall ſerve him; which will be in the latter day; ſee Iſa. ii. 2. Rev. xi. 15. and xv. 4. the Jews ſay [h], that in the world to come, or the times of the Meſſiah, all the Gentiles ſhall be voluntary proſelytes.

℣. 12. For he ſhall deliver the needy when he crieth, &c.] Such as are not only in want, but are ſenſible of it, ſee their need of Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him, and cry to him for the ſame, under a ſenſe of their miſery and danger; theſe he delivers out of all their troubles, and out of the hands of all their enemies, and ſupplies all their need. The poor alſo; the poor in ſpirit; who acknowledge their ſpiritual poverty, and apply to him for the true riches; to theſe he gives gold tried in the fire, that they may be rich; he gives them grace here, and glory hereafter. And him that hath no helper; that is in an helpleſs condition; can neither help himſelf, nor can any creature, angel, or man, give him any help: but this being laid on Chriſt, and found in him, is given to him, whereby he is delivered out of a miſerable ſtate into a very comfortable and happy one; and ſuch humane, kind, and tender regard to the needy, poor, and helpleſs, in this great King ſpoken of, is what engages to a chearful ſubjection to him, and worſhip and reverence of him; more of which is expreſſed in the following verſes, as the reaſon of the great eſteem he ſhould be had in.

℣. 13. He ſhall ſpare the poor and needy, &c.] Pity them, have mercy and compaſſion on them, and ſympathize with them; ſuch an one is Chriſt, a merciful King, as well as high-prieſt, who is touched with a feeling of his people's infirmities, and who in his love and pity has redeemed them. And ſhall ſave the ſouls of the needy; not to the excluſion of their bodies, which are alſo his care and charge, are bought with his blood, are preſerved by him, will be raiſed from the dead, and made like his glorious body; but ſouls are mentioned as being the moſt excellent part of man, and which having ſinned, are liable to damnation and the ſecond death; and are therefore the ſpecial objects of redemption and ſalvation; theſe are ſaved by him from all their ſins, and from wrath to come they deſerve; hence his name is called Jeſus, a Saviour.

℣. 14. He ſhall redeem their ſoul from deceit and violence, &c.] From all the ſecret and open deſigns and efforts of their enemies; from deceit, and deceitfulneſs of ſin and its luſts, ſo as that they ſhall not be finally hardened and deſtroyed by it; from the deceitfulneſs of the old ſerpent the devil, and all his cunning wiles and ſtratagems; and from falſe teachers, who lie in wait to deceive, and who would, if poſſible, deceive the very elect, but ſhall not: and from violence; from the violent and tyrannical power of ſin, ſo as that it ſhall not have the dominion over them; from the rage and fury of the men of the world, which is overcome by him; and from Satan, the ſtrong man armed, who is ſtronger than they; from him, the devouring lion, who will not be able to ſnatch them out of Chriſt's hands. And precious ſhall their blood be in his ſight; ſo that he either prevents the ſhedding of it, or when ſhed, avenges it; and dear are ſuch perſons to him; and very acceptable is the ſacrifice of their lives for his ſake, who have the honour to ſuffer martyrdom for him; ſee Pſal. cxvi. 15.

℣. 15.

[b] Hiller. Onomaſt. p. 944. [c] Hiller. ibid. p. 165, 920. [d] Zohar in Gen. fol. 71. 1. [e] Bereſhit Rabba, ſ. 78. fol. 69. 1. Bemidbar Rabba, ſ. 13. fol. 210. [f] Redire facient, vel reddant, Muis. [g] Zohar in Gen. fol. 84. 4. Bemidbar Rabba, ſ. 13. fol. 209. 4. Midraſh Megillat Eſther, fol. 86. 2. R. Iſaac Chizzuk Emunah, par. 1. p. 44. [h] T. Avodah Zarah, fol. 24. 1.

℣. 15. And he ſhall live, &c.] Either the poor and needy man, ſaved and redeemed by Chriſt; he, though dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, ſhall live ſpiritually, be quickened together with Chriſt, and by his Spirit, and live a life of faith and holineſs; and though dead in law, yet, through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, ſhall have the juſtification of life, and live in the ſight of God; and ſo ſhall live comfortably by faith in Chriſt, being filled with joy and peace in believing in him; and though he may loſe his life for Chriſt's ſake, he ſhall find it again, and live eternally with him: or the Meſſiah, the Saviour and Redeemer of the poor and needy; who, though he was to die, and by his precious blood redeem them; yet ſhould live again, and never die more; as he now does live at the right hand of God, where he ever lives to make interceſſion for his people, as well as lives in their hearts, and ſupplies them with all grace, and keeps alive his own work on their ſouls. And to him ſhall be given of the gold of Sheba; or Arabia, as Apollinarius; either to the poor and needy, to whom is given faith, which is more precious than gold that periſheth; or the knowledge of Chriſt, which is preferable to gold and ſilver; and of the doctrines of the goſpel, which are of more value than thouſands of gold and ſilver: alſo the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is the free gift, and is called clothing of wrought gold, and is ſignified by gold of Ophir, Pſal. xlv. 9, 13, moreover, this may include all the riches of Chriſt, his durable and unſearchable riches; his riches of grace and glory, which he beſtows upon his ſubjects; ſo that the poor and needy are not only ſaved and redeemed, and live through him; but are made rich by him, become rich in faith, and heirs of a kingdom: or to the Meſſiah, who had gold preſented to him in his infancy, Matth. ii. 11. though rather it is to be underſtood ſpiritually of the exerciſe of faith upon him, and every other grace, which is as gold tried in the fire; and which, as it comes from Chriſt, it is given to him again. A truly gracious ſoul gives Chriſt the beſt it has: it gives him its whole ſelf, body, and ſoul, its heart and affections, and all its grace, and the glory of all. Prayer alſo ſhall be made for him continually; or he ſhall pray for him [i]; that is, either Chriſt ſhall pray for the poor and needy man; not only ſave and redeem, but make interceſſion for him, as Chriſt does for all he redeems: he prays for them, that they may be enriched with all the bleſſings of grace; that the gold he gives them may be kept; that their faith fail not; that they may be preſerved from the evil of the world, and be with him, where he is to behold his glory: or the poor and needy ſhall pray for Chriſt, for the proſperity of his church, for the increaſe of his intereſt, and the coming of his kingdom: or prayer ſhall be made by him; or through him continually [k]; as the Mediator between God and man, the way of acceſs to God, through whom petitions are offered to him, and become acceptable with him. And daily ſhall he be praiſed; or daily ſhall he bleſs him [l]; either Chriſt ſhall daily bleſs the poor and needy, with ſpiritual bleſſings, as he ſtands in need of them, and even load him with his benefits: or he ſhall bleſs Chriſt, aſcribe bleſſing, honour, praiſe, and glory to him; becauſe of his perfections and excellencies; becauſe of redemption and ſalvation by him; and on account of the various bleſſings of grace, and the daily ſupplies of it he receives from him.

℣. 16. There ſhall be an handful of corn, &c.] By which are not meant the people of Chriſt, compared to corn, or wheat, in diſtinction from hypocrites, ſaid to be as chaff, Matth. ii. 12. who are but few, yet fruitful and flouriſhing; nor the goſpel, ſo called in oppoſition to the chaff of falſe doctrine, Jer. xxiii. 28. nor the bleſſings of grace, ſignified by corn, wine, and oil, Jer. xxxi. 12. but Chriſt, who compares himſelf to a corn of wheat, John xii. 24. for its choiceneſs and purity, and for its uſefulneſs for food; and he may be compared to an handful of it, becauſe of the little account he was made of here on earth, and the little that was expected from him; and on account of the ſmall beginnings of his kingdom, which came not with obſervation, was like a little ſtone cut out of the mountain without hands, and like a grain of muſtard-ſeed: ſo R. Obadiah Gaon [m] interprets theſe words, "an handful of corn; that is, the "Meſſiah ſhall be at firſt as an handful of corn; "but afterwards a multitude of diſciples ſhall grow "as the graſs." In the earth; that is, ſown in the earth: this denotes not Chriſt's being on the earth in the days of his fleſh; but his death and burial, his deſcending into the lower parts of the earth, where he continued a while to anſwer the type of Jonah; and which is repreſented by a corn of wheat falling into the earth and dying, John xii. 24. by which is ſignified, that Chriſt's death was not accidental, but deſigned, as is the ſowing of corn in the earth; and that it was voluntary, and not forced, and was but for a time: for as the corn dies, and lives again, and does not lie always under the clods; ſo Chriſt roſe again; nor could he be held with the cords of death. It is added, Upon the top of the mountains; where corn being ſown, it is very unlikely it ſhould come to any thing; and as little was expected by the Jews from the crucifixion and death of Chriſt: or elſe this may denote the publickneſs of Chriſt's death, it being a fact known to all the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, and many others. The fruit thereof ſhall ſhake like Lebanon; meaning either a large number of ſouls converted, the fruit of Chriſt's death, and of the goſpel-miniſtry; of whom there was a large harveſt, both in Judea and in the Gentile world, in the firſt times of the goſpel, immediately after Chriſt's death and reſurrection; and there will be ſtill a greater in the latter day: or elſe the bleſſings of grace are meant, which come by the death and reſurrection of Chriſt; as righteouſneſs, peace, pardon, and eternal life. The alluſion is to a field of wheat when ripe, and its ears heavy, which, when the wind blows upon it, is ſhaken, ruſtles, and makes a noiſe [n], like the ſhaking of trees, and even of the cedars in Lebanon; it denotes the goodneſs and excellency of the fruit. And they of the city ſhall flouriſh like graſs of the earth; or they ſhall flouriſh out of the city [o]; which the Targum interprets of the city of Jeruſalem; and ſo the Talmud [p], and alſo Jarchi; and was literally true; for the goſpel, after Chriſt's death, was firſt preached in the city of Jeruſalem, and was bleſſed for the converſion of many there, who were fruitful in grace and and good works: it may very well be underſtood of all the citizens of Sion; ſuch who are fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God, who being planted in the houſe of the Lord, flouriſh in the court of our God, and become very fruitful in every good word and work; and flouriſh like graſs of the earth for numbers, for quickneſs of growth, and for verdure and beauty; all which is owing to their being rooted in Chriſt, to his coming down upon them as rain, ℣. 6. to the dews of his grace, and to his ariſing upon them as the ſun of righteouſneſs. The ancient Jews interpreted this paſſage of the Meſſiah: "as the firſt Redeem-"er, they ſay [q], cauſed manna to deſcend, as it is "ſaid, Exod. xvi. 4. ſo the latter Redeemer ſhall "cauſe manna to deſcend, as it is ſaid, there ſhall "be an handful of corn in the earth." Jarchi ſays our Rabbins interpret this of the dainties in the days of the Meſſiah, and the whole pſalm concerning the King Meſſiah.

[i] ויתפלל בעדו & orabit pro eo, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Cocceius. [k] Per ipſum, Genebrardus; per & propter eum, Calvinus apud Michaelim. [l] יברכנהו benedicet ei, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Cocceius. [m] In Viccarſ. in loc. [n] Corpus ut impulſæ ſegetes aquilonibus horret, Ovid. Epiſt. 15. v. 139. [o] מעיר de civitate, V.L. Muſculus, Gejerus; ſo Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Cocceius, Michaelis. [p] T. Bab. Cetubot, fol. 111. 2.

℣. 17. His name ſhall endure for ever, &c.] As a King; for he is chiefly ſpoken of here in his kingly office: not merely the fame of him; for ſo the fame of an earthly king, even of a tyrant, may continue as long as the world does; but the meaning is, that he himſelf ſhould continue in his office for ever: his throne is for ever and ever; of his government there will be no end; his kingdom is an everlaſting one; he ſhall reign over the houſe of Jacob, and on the throne of David, for ever and ever: he ſhall have no ſucceſſor in this his office, any more than in the prieſtly office; which is an unchangeable one, or does not paſs from one to another: his goſpel is his name, Acts ix. 15. and that ſhall endure for ever, or to the end of the world; until all his elect are gathered in, notwithſtanding the violent perſecutions of men, the cunning craft of falſe teachers, and the death of goſpel-miniſters and profeſſors: as long as this is preached, Chriſt's name will endure, ſince he is the ſum and ſubſtance of it; and not only is his name, perpetuated in his goſpel; but alſo in his ordinances, thoſe of baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper, which are adminiſtred in his name, and will be unto his ſecond coming. His name ſhall be continued as long as the ſun; or ſhall be ſonned or filiated [r]; that is, ſhall be continued in his ſons, in his ſpiritual offſpring, as long as the ſun laſts; as the names of parents are continued in their children; ſo the name of Chriſt is, and will be continued in him: he has children which the Lord has given him; a ſeed that he ſhall ſee in all periods of time, to whom he ſtands in the relation of the everlaſting Father; theſe bear his name, are called Chriſtians from him; and theſe his ſeed and offſpring ſhall endure for ever: for though ſometimes their number may be few; yet there are always ſome in the worſt of times; Chriſt has always had ſome to bear his name, and ever will have; and in the latter day they will be very numerous, even as the ſand of the ſea. The Jews take the word Yinnon, here uſed, for a name of the Meſſiah [s], and render the words, before the ſun his name was Yinnon; and ſo the Targum, "before the ſun was, or was created, "(as in the king's Bible) his name was prepared;" or appointed; for they ſay [t], the name of the Meſſiah was one of the ſeven things created before the world was: it is certain that Chriſt was the Son of God, from eternity, or the eternal Son of God: he was ſo before his reſurrection from the dead, when he was only declared, and did not then become the Son of God: he was owned by his divine Father, and believed in as the Son of God by men before that time: he was ſo before his incarnation, and not by that: he, the Son of God, was ſent in human nature, and made manifeſt in it, and was known by David and Solomon, under that relation; and, as ſuch, he was concerned in the creation of all things; and was in the day of eternity, and from all eternity, the only begotten Son of the Father; ſee Pſal. ii. 7. but the verſion and ſenſe which Guſſetius [u] gives ſeem beſt of all; his name ſhall generate, or beget children before the ſun; that is, his name preached, as the goſpel, which is his name, Acts ix. 15. ſhall be the means of begetting many ſons and daughters openly and publickly, in the face of the ſun, and wherever that is. And men ſhall be bleſſed in him; men, and not angels, ſinful men; ſuch as are by nature children of wrath, and curſed by the law of works, yet bleſſed in Chriſt; even all elect men, all that are choſen in him, whether Jews or Gentiles; for he is the ſeed of Abraham, in whom all the nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed, Gen. xxii. 18. as they are with all ſpiritual bleſſings; with redemption, peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and eternal life: they are in him, and bleſſed in him; he is their head and repreſentative, and ſo bleſſed in him; he is the fountain, cauſe, author and giver of all bleſſings; they all come from him, through him, and for his ſake, through his blood, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice. Or, they ſhall be bleſſed in him; that is, his children and ſpiritual offſpring, in whom his name is perpetuated. Or, they ſhall bleſs themſelves in him [w]; reckon themſelves bleſſed in him, and make their boaſt of him, and glory in him. All nations ſhall call him bleſſed; as he is a divine perſon; not only the Son of the bleſſed, but God over all, bleſſed for ever; and as man, being ſet at the right hand of God, crowned with glory and honour, and all creatures, angels and men, ſubject to him; and as Mediator, acknowledging him to be the fountain of all bleſſedneſs to them, and, upon that account, aſcribing all bleſſing, honour, glory, and praiſe unto him.

℣. 18. Bleſſed be the Lord God, &c.] The Meſſiah, who is truly and properly God, Jehovah, Lord of all, and the Lord our righteouſneſs; to whom ſuch a doxology or aſcription of glory and bleſſing properly belongs, ſince all good things are from him, and by him. The God of Iſrael; that brought Iſrael out of Egypt; went before them in the wilderneſs; redeemed and ſaved them, and bore and carried them all the days of old; and in whom all the true Iſrael of God are juſtified, and ſhall be ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation. Who only doth wondrous things; in the creation of all things out of nothing; in the government of the world; and in the redemption and ſalvation of his people; which is a very marvellous thing: as that God ſhould become man, ſuffer and die in the room of men, and ſave them from ſin and ruin; this wondrous thing Chriſt has done alone, and there was none with him.

℣. 19. And bleſſed be his glorious name for ever, &c.] Every name of Chriſt is glorious in itſelf, and precious to his people; like ointment poured forth, as his name Meſſiah, to which the alluſion is [q] Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 63. 2. Midraſh Echa Rabbati, fol. 50. 2. Pirke Eliezer, c. 32. fol. 33. 2. [r] ינון filiabitur, Montanus, Vatablus, Michaelis. [s] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 98. 2. [t] T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 54. 1. Nedarim, fol. 39. 2. Bereſhit Rabba, ſ. 1. fol. 1. 2. [u] Ebr. Comment. p. 511. [w] ויתברכו בו & benedicentes ſibi in eo, Junius & Tremellius; ſo Cocceius, Michaelis, Ainſworth.

is in Cant. i. 3. His name Immanuel, God with us; Jehovah our righteouſneſs, Jeſus a Saviour; as well as what belongs to his royal dignity, King of kings, and Lord of lords; a name above every name that is named in this world, or that to come. And let the whole earth be filled with his glory; as it will be, when his kingdom ſhall be from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth; when the little ſtone cut out without hands, ſhall become a great mountain, and fill the whole earth; when the goſpel ſhall be ſpread all over the world; and the earth be filled with the knowledge of Chriſt, by means of it, as the waters cover the ſea; and when all nations ſhall come and worſhip before him. Amen, and Amen; which word added, is expreſſive of the deſires of the pſalmiſt, that all that he had ſaid might come to paſs; and of his faith, that ſo it would be: and it is repeated, to ſhew the vehemence of his deſires, and the ſtrength of his faith.

℣. 20. The prayers of David the ſon of Jeſſe are ended.] The Septuagint verſion renders it, the hymns. This pſalm is thought by ſome to be the laſt that was written by David, though put in this place; and it is certain, that the pſalms are not always placed in the order of time in which they were written: this being, as is ſuppoſed, made by him in his old age, when Solomon his ſon was appointed and ſet upon his throne by his order; on account of which he compoſed it, with a view to the Meſſiah, the antitype of Solomon. Or, as others, this is the laſt of the pſalms, which were put together and digeſted in order by David himſelf; the reſt that follow being collected by Hezekiah or the Levites. Aben Ezra mentions it as the ſenſe of ſome of their interpreters, "then ſhall be fulfilled the "prayers of the ſon of Jeſſe;" that is, as R. Joſeph Kimchi explains it, when thoſe conſolations are completed, then the prayers of David the ſon of Jeſſe ſhall be fulfilled. The ſenſe is, when all the things ſpoken of in this pſalm, concerning the Meſſiah and his kingdom, ſhould be accompliſhed; then the prayers of David, and ſo of every good man, his hearty wiſhes and deſires, will then be anſwered, and have their full effect, and not till then. This verſe ſeems to be written not by David, for the pſalm itſelf ends with Amen and Amen; but by ſome collector of the Pſalms: it is not in the Arabic verſion, in the room of which is Hallelujah; and in the Syriac verſion it is, the end of the ſecond book. The firſt book of Pſalms ends with the 41ſt Pſalm. The whole is divided into five parts by the Jews; obſerved by Origen [x] and Hilarius [y], and others.

[x] Apud Montfaucon. Prælim. ad Hexapla Origen. p. 78, 79.

[y] Prolog. in Pſalm. p. 33.

The END of the THIRD VOLUME.

The Miſtakes obſerved in this THIRD VOLUME, correct thus.

PAGE 79. col. 2. line 12. read Abaz. P. 80. c. 2. l. 24. r. expiation. P. 117. c. 2. l. 47. r. upon us. P. 127. c. 1. l. 30. r. that Ezer the. P. 133. c. 2. l. 17. dele be. P. 140. c. 2. l. 56. r. paronomaſia. P. 154. c. 1. l. 48. r. father of Xerxes. c. 2. l. 51. d. the colon after 180 days. P. 207. c. 1. l. 21. r. wiſeman. P. 223. c. 2. l. 2. d. not. P. 247. c. 2. l. ult. r. 2000. P. 253. c. 1. l. 43. r. a man. l. 47. r. men. P. 271. c. 2. l. 8. r. conceit. P. 321. c. 1. l. 66. r. out of. P. 331. c. 2. l. 23. r. be the ſeed. P. 335. c. 2. l. 22. r. from the womb. P. 365. c. 2. l. 28. for murmur, r. wonder. P. 451. c. 1. l. 67, 68. r. to hear the voice of it. P. 470. c. 1. l. 46. r. between the day and the night. P. 519. c. 1. l. 39. r. that writer. P. 536. c. 1. l. 25. r. ſorrows for ſin. P. 612. c. 1. l. 17. r. than any other. P. 642. c. 2. l. 41. put the ſemicolon after it; and inſtead of here, r. none but Chriſt. P. 730. c. 1. l. 25. r. in arrows. P. 741. c. 1. l. 9. r. life. P. 751. c. 1. l. 17. r. his popes. P. 763. c. 2. l. 52. r. the Targum. P. 765. c. 1. l. 31. r. aſcribes it.

BOOKS and TRACTS Published by JOHN GILL, D.D.
And Sold by GEORGE KEITH, in Gracechurch-ſtreet.

1. AN Expoſition of the New Teſtament, in three Vol. Folio.

2. An Expoſition of the Prophets of the Old Teſtament, 2 Vols. Folio.

3. An Expoſition of the Song of Solomon, in One Hundred twenty two Sermons. Quarto.

4. The Cauſe of God and Truth. Part I. Being an Examination of the principal Paſſages of Scripture made uſe of by the Arminians in favour of their Scheme, particularly by Dr. Whitby, in his Diſcourſe on the Five Points. In which the Arguments founded on the ſaid Paſſages are anſwered; the Objections taken from them removed; and the genuine Senſe of them given.

5.——Part II. A Vindication of the Argument, founded on ſuch Paſſages of Scripture as prove the Doctrines of Eternal Election, Particular Redemption, Original Sin, Efficacious Grace in Converſion, and the final Perſeverance of the Saints.

6.—— Part III. A Confutation of the Arguments taken from Reaſon againſt thoſe Doctrines.

7.—— Part IV. The Judgment of the ancient Chriſtian Church; or the Senſe of the Chriſtian Writers of the firſt four Centuries concerning them: Wherein are alſo conſidered, the Teſtimonies in favour of the univerſal Scheme produced by Limborch, Gerhard Voſſius, M. Daille, Dr. Whitby, and others.

8. A Vindication of the Cauſe of God and Truth. Part IV. relating to the Senſe of the ancient Chriſtian Writers about ſome Things in controverſy with the Arminians, from the Cavils, Calumnies, and Defamations of Mr Henry Heywood, &c.

9. The Doctrine of the Trinity ſtated and vindicated.

10. The Doctrine of the Reſurrection ſtated and defended.

11. The Doctrine of Juſtification by the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt, ſtated and maintained.

12. The Doctrine of God's everlaſting Love to his Elect, and their eternal Union with Chriſt; together with ſome other Truths, ſtated and defended, againſt Dr. Taylor.

13. The Doctrine of the Saints final Perſeverance, aſſerted and vindicated.

11 FE 59

14. The Doctrine of Predeſtination ſtated, and ſet in a Scripture Light, againſt Mr. Weſley.

15. The Doctrine of Grace cleared from the Charge of Licentiouſneſs.

16. Truth defended: Being an Anſwer to an anonymous Pamphlet, intitled, Some Doctrines on the Supralapſarian Scheme examined.

17. The Prophecies of the Old Teſtament reſpecting the Meſſiah conſidered and proved to be literally fulfilled in Jeſus; containing an Anſwer to the Author of The Scheme of Literal Prophecy, &c.

18. Levi's Urim and Thummim found with Chriſt.

19. Two annual Diſcourſes on the Duty of Prayer and Singing of Pſalms.

20. The Duty of a Paſtor to his People, a Sermon at the Ordination of George Braithwaite, M. A.

21. The Fulneſs of the Mediator, a Sermon preached to the Society that ſupport the Lecture in Devonſhire Square.

22. Chriſt the Saviour from the Tempeſt, a Sermon in Commemoration of the great Storm.

23. An Eſſay on the Original of Funeral Sermons, Orations and Odes.

24. The moral Nature and Fitneſs of Things conſidered, occaſioned by ſome Paſſages in a Sermon of the Rev. Dr. Chandler's.

25. An Anſwer to the Birmingham Dialogue-writer upon the Divinity of Chriſt, Election, Original Sin, Free-will, Irreſiſtible Grace, Imputed Righteouſneſs, Perſeverance and Baptiſm.

26. An Anſwer to the Birmingham Dialogue-writer's Second Part: With a Poſtſcript in anſwer to Mr. Henry Heywood's Introduction to his Tranſlation of Dr. Whitby on Original Sin.

27. The Neceſſity of Good Works unto Salvation, conſidered; in anſwer to Dr Taylor.

28. The Law eſtabliſhed by the Goſpel.

29. The Watchman's Anſwer to the Queſtion, What of the Night?

30. The practical Improvement of the Watchman's Anſwer to the Queſtion, What of the Night?

31. The Glory of the Church in the latter Day.

32. Faith in God and his Word the Proſperity and Eſtabliſhment of his People.

33. The ſure Performance of Prophecy.

34. The quiet and eaſy Paſſage of the People of God through Death to Glory.

35. The glorious State of the Saints in Heaven.

36. Attendance in Places of religious Worſhip, where the divine Name is recorded, encouraged.

37. The Agreement of the Old and New Teſtament.

38. The Neglect of fervent Prayer complained of.

39. The ancient Mode of Baptizing by Immerſion maintained and vindicated.

40. A Defence of the above Vindication of the ancient Mode of Baptizing.

41. The divine Right of Infant-Baptiſm examined and diſproved.

42. The Argument from Apoſtolick Tradition in favour of Infant-Baptiſm, with others in a Pamphlet called The Baptiſm of Infants a reaſonable Service, &c. conſidered; and alſo an Anſwer to a Welſh Clergyman's twenty Arguments: To which are added, The Diſſenter's Reaſons for ſeparating from the Church of England; occaſioned by the ſaid Writer.

43. Antipœdo-Baptiſm: or, Infant-Baptiſm an Innovation. In anſwer to Pœdo-Baptiſm; or, a Defence of Infant-Baptiſm in point of Antiquity.

44. A Reply to Mr. Clarke's Defence of the divine Right of Infant-Baptiſm.

45. The Law in the Hand of Chriſt. A Sermon at Broad-Mead in Briſtol.

46. The Glory of God's Grace diſplayed in its abounding over the Aboundings of Sin. A Funeral Sermon for Mr. John Smith.

47. Job's Creed, or Confeſſion of Faith. A Funeral Sermon for the Rev. Mr. Edward Wallin.

48. The Head of the Serpent bruiſed by the Seed of the Woman. A Funeral Sermon for Mrs. Martha Gifford.

49. A Funeral Sermon on the Death of Eliz. Gill.

50. A Funeral Sermon on the Death of Mrs. Mary Fall.

51. A Funeral Sermon on the Death of Mrs. Ann Brine.

52. A Funeral Sermon on the Death of Mr. Edward Ludlow.

53. A Funeral Sermon on the Death of the Rev. Mr. Samuel Wilſon.

54. A Funeral Sermon on the Death of Benjamin Seward Eſq;

55. Chriſt the Ranſom found. A Sermon on the Death of Mr John Davenport.

56. The mutual Gain of Chriſt and Chriſtians in their Life and Death. A Sermon on the Death of the Rev. Joſeph Stennett D. D.

57. The Superior Happineſs of the Righteous Dead. A Sermon on the Death of the Rev. Mr James Fall.

58. A Confeſſion of Faith required of Chriſtians at their Admiſſion into a Goſpel Church, with Scripture Proofs annexed.

59. The Work of a Goſpel Miniſter. A Charge at the Ordination of ſeveral Miniſters.

60. The Doctrine of the Cherubim opened and explained, in a Sermon preached at the Ordination of the Rev. Mr. John Davis, at Waltham-Abbey.