℣. 33. He ſhall be ſhaven, &c.] His head or beard, where the ſcall was, as Aben Ezra; and ſo Ben Gerſom, who adds, the law is not ſolicitous whether this ſhaving is by a prieſt or no; ſo it ſeems any one might ſhave him: but the ſcall ſhall he not ſhave; that is, the hair that is in it, but that was to continue and grow, that the colour of it might be eaſily diſcerned at the end of ſeven other days; according to the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, he was to ſhave round about it, but not that itſelf; Jarchi ſays, he was to leave two hairs near it [u], that he might know whether it ſpread; for if it ſpread it would go over the hairs, and into the part that was ſhaven; when it would be a clear caſe it was a ſpreading leproſy: now that there might be an opportunity of obſerving this, whether it would or no, the following method was to be taken: and the prieſt ſhall ſhut up him that hath the ſcall, ſeven days more; by which time it would be ſeen, whether there was any increaſe or decreaſe, or whether at a ſtand, and of what colour the hair was, by which judgment might be made of the caſe.

℣. 34. And in the ſeventh day the prieſt ſhall look on the ſcall, &c.] That is, according to Ben Gerſom, on the 13th day from the firſt inſpection of him by the prieſt: and behold, if the ſcall be not ſpread in the ſkin, nor be in ſight deeper than the ſkin; neither appears ſpread on the ſurface of the ſkin, nor to have eaten into the fleſh under it; alſo no thin yellow hair, though it is not expreſſed, for that made a perſon unclean, though there was no ſpreading: then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean; free from a leproſy: and he ſhall waſh his clothes, and be clean; there was no need to ſay, he ſhall waſh them in water, as Aben Ezra obſerves, that is ſuppoſed; and then he was looked upon as a clean perſon, and might go into the ſanctuary, and have converſation with men, both in a civil and religious way, and not defile any thing he ſat upon.

℣. 35. But if the ſcall ſpread much in his ſkin after cleanſing.] After he has been declared clean by the prieſt; for it was poſſible that it might ſpread after this, though ſo much precaution had been

[t] Negaim, c. 10. §. 1.

[u] Miſn. Negaim, c. 10. §. 5.

been uſed, and ſo much time taken to obſerve it: with this compare 2 Pet. i. 9. and ii. 20.

℣. 36. Then the prieſt ſhall look on him. &c.] Again, and which is no leſs than the fourth time; for, notwithſtanding his being pronounced clean, he was ſtill ſubject to the inſpection of the prieſt, if any alteration appeared: if the ſcall be ſpread in the ſkin; which was a certain ſign of a leproſy: the prieſt ſhall not ſeek for yellow hair; or be ſolicitous about that, whether there is any or no, for either one or the other of theſe ſigns were ſufficient to determine the caſe: he is unclean; and ſo to be pronounced.

℣. 37. But if the ſcall be in the ſight at a ſtay, &c.] If in a few days, or in a ſhort ſpace of time after this, it ſhould appear that the ſcall is at a full ſtop, and does not ſpread any farther at all: and that there is black hair grown up therein; which is a ſign of health and ſoundneſs, and ſo of purity; yea, if it was green or red, ſo be it it was not yellow, according to Jarchi, it was ſufficient: the ſcall is healed; from whence it appears, that it had been a leprous ſcall, but was now healed, an entire ſtop being put to the ſpread of it; and though yellow hairs might have appeared in it, yet as Gerſom obſerves, two black hairs having grown up in it, it was a clear caſe that the corruption of the blood had departed, and it had returned to its former ſtate: he is clean, and the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean; he was clean before, and is the reaſon why he pronounces him ſo; wherefore it is not the ſentence of the prieſt, but the truth of his caſe that makes him clean; teaching, as Ainſworth obſerves, that the truth of a man's eſtate, diſcerned by the word and law of God, made the man clean or unclean, and not the ſentence of the prieſt if it ſwerved from the law.

℣. 38. If a man alſo or a woman, &c.] One or the other, for the law concerning leproſy reſpecteth both: have in the ſkin of their fleſh bright ſpots; and them only; not any riſing or ſwelling, nor ſcab nor ſcall, nor bile, nor burning, only bright ſpots, a ſort of freckles or morphew: even white bright ſpots; theſe, Ben Gerſom obſerves, are white ſpots but not plagues; and which were in whiteneſs inferiour to the four ſpecies of the plague of leproſy, the white ſpot, the white ſwelling, and the ſcab of each.

℣. 39. Then the prieſt ſhall look, &c.] Upon the man or woman that has theſe ſpots, and upon the ſpots themſelves, and examine them of what kind they are: and behold, if the bright ſpots in the ſkin of their fleſh be darkiſh white; their whiteneſs is not ſtrong, as Jarchi obſerves; but duſky and obſcure, or contracted[w]; ſmall white ſpots, not large and ſpreading: it is a freckled ſpot that grows in the ſkin; a kind of morphew, which the above writer deſcribes, as a ſort of whiteneſs which appears in the fleſh of a ruddy man: he is clean; from leproſy; this is obſerved, leſt a perſon that is freckled and has a morphew, ſhould be miſtaken for a leprous perſon; as every man that has ſome ſpots, failings, and infirmities is not to be reckoned a wicked man.

℣. 40. And the man whoſe hair is fallen off his head, &c.] That is, from the back part of his head, from the crown of his head toward his neck behind: he is bald; in that ſpot of the head where the hair is fallen off; and it denotes ſuch a baldneſs as is occaſioned by that, for it ſignifies one that had hair but it is fallen off; whereas the baldneſs after ſpoken of, is thought by ſome to be of ſuch who never had any hair; though others will have it, that this intends a perſon bald all over; but it ſeems plain from what follows, that it deſigns one whoſe hair was fallen off behind, and was bald on that part only; and it may be obſerved, that this is only ſaid of a man not of a woman, becauſe, as Aben Ezra remarks, ſhe has much moiſture in her, and therefore her head does not become bald; hair being like to graſs which flouriſhes in moiſt places: yet is he clean; from the leproſy, or from the ſcalls, as Jarchi obſerves, becauſe he is not judged by the ſigns of the head and beard, which are the place of hair, but by the ſigns of leproſy in the ſkin of the fleſh, i. e. by the raw fleſh and ſpreading.

℣. 41. And he that hath his hair fallen off from the part of his head towards his face; &c.] That is, from the crown of his head towards his forehead and temples, the fore-part of his head; and ſo the Miſnic doctors diſtinguiſh baldneſs, which is from the crown of the head deſcending behind to the channel of the neck; and that here mentioned, which is from the crown of the head deſcending to his face and forehead, over-againſt the hair above[x]: he is forehead-bald; to diſtinguiſh him from him that is bald behind: yet is he clean; as the other: theſe caſes are obſerved, that it might not be concluded that every man that ſhed his hair or was bald either before or behind was a leper, becauſe the hair of a leper uſed to fall off from him; if he had not the other ſigns of leproſy, and which were the ſure and true ſigns of it before mentioned.

℣. 42. And if there be, &c.] Or, but if there be, or, when there ſhall be[y], or ſhall appear to be: in the bald head, or in the bald forehead, a white reddiſh ſore; white and red mixed, as the Targum of Jonathan, having ſomething of both colours, neither a clear white nor thorough red; though according to Bochart, it ſhould be rendered à white ſore exceeding bright; ſee the note on ℣. 19. it is a leproſy ſprung up in his bald head, or in his bald forehead; the ſigns of which were raw fleſh and ſpreading; ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah[z], "thoſe two "ſorts of baldneſs defile in two weeks, by two "ſigns, by quick raw fleſh and by ſpreading;" if there was the bright ſpot and no quick fleſh, then he was to be ſhut up ſeven days, and looked upon at the end of them; and if there was either quick fleſh or a ſpreading, he was pronounced unclean, but if neither, he was ſhut up ſeven days more; and if either of the above ſigns appeared he was pronounced unclean, if not he was ſet free.

℣. 43. Then the prieſt ſhall look upon it, &c.] The white reddiſh ſore: and behold, if the riſing of the ſore; or the ſwelling of it: be white reddiſh in his bald head, or in his bald forehead; ſee the note on the preceding verſe: as the leproſy appeareth in the ſkin of the fleſh; as in ℣. 2. having the ſigns of the leproſy there given; any one of them, excepting the white hair, which in this caſe could be no ſign, there being none: Jarchi's note is, according to the appearance of the leproſy, ſaid in ℣. 2. and what is ſaid in it is, it defiles by four appearances, and is judged in two weeks; but not according to the appearance of the leproſy ſaid of the bile, and burning, which were judged in one week; nor according to the appearance of the ſcalls, of the place

[w] כהות contractæ, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[x] Miſn. Negaim, c. 10. §. 10.
[y] וכי ſin autem, V. L. quum autem, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius.
[z] Ut ſupra.

place of hair, which do not defile by the four appearances, the rising or swelling, and the scab of it, the bright spot, and the scab of that.

℣. 44. He is a leprous man, he is unclean, &c.] And so to be pronounced and accounted; only a leprous man is mentioned, there being no leprous women, having this sort of leprosy, their hair not falling off, or they becoming bald usually; unless, as Ben Gersom observes, in a manner strange and wonderful: the priest shall pronounce him utterly unclean; as in any other case of leprosy: his plague is in his head; an emblem of such who have imbibed bad notions and erroneous principles, and are therefore like the leper, to be avoided and rejected from the communion of the saints, Tit. iii. 10. and shews that men are accountable for their principles, as well as practices, and liable to be punished for them.

℣. 45. And the leper in whom the plague is, &c.] Meaning not he only that has the plague of leprosy in his head, but every sort of leper before mentioned in this chapter: his clothes shall be rent; not that he might the more easily put on his clothes without hurting him, as some have thought; or that the corrupt humours might evaporate more freely, for evaporation would rather be hindered than promoted by being exposed to cold; nor that he might be known and better avoided, for his cry after mentioned was sufficient for that; but as a token of mourning: and so Aben Ezra having mentioned the former reason, that he might be known by going in a different habit, adds, or the sense is, as a token of mourning; for he was to mourn for the wickedness of his actions, for for his works came this plague of leprosy upon him; and so the Jews in common understand it, not as a disease arising from natural causes, but as a punishment inflicted by God for sin; wherefore this rite of rending the garments was an emblem of contrition of heart, and of sorrow and humiliation for sin, see Joel ii. 13: and his head bare; or free from cutting or shaving, but shall let his hair grow; and so the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi interpret it; or free from any covering upon it, hat, or cap, or turbant: Ben Gersom observes, that the making bare the head, or freeing it, is taken different ways; sometimes it is used of not shaving the head for thirty days, and sometimes for the removal of the vail, or covering of the head it has been used to; but in this place it can't signify the nourishing of the hair, but that his head ought to be covered: and so Maimonides [a] observes, that a leper should cover his head all the days he is excluded, and this was a token of mourning also; see 2 Sam. xv. 30. and xix. 4. Esth. vi. 12. Jer. xiv. 3, 4: and he shall put a covering upon his upper lip; as a mourner, see Ezek. xxiv. 17. Mic. iii. 7. Jarchi interprets it of both lips, upper and under, which were covered with a linen cloth or vail thrown over the shoulder, and with which the mouth was covered; and this was done, as Aben Ezra says, that the leper might not hurt any with the breath of his mouth: and shall cry, unclean, unclean; as he passed along in any public place, that every one might avoid him, and not be polluted by him: the Targum of Jonathan is, "a herald shall proclaim and say, depart, depart from "the unclean." So every sinner sensible of the leprosy of sin in his nature, and which appears in his actions, should freely confess and acknowledge his uncleanness, original and actual, the impurity of his heart and life, and even of his own righteousness in the sight of God, and have recourse to Christ, and to his blood for the cleansing him from it.

℣. 46. All the days wherein the plague shall be in him, he shall be defiled, &c.] Reckoned an unclean person, and avoided as such: he is unclean; in a ceremonial sense, and pronounced as such by the priest, and was to be looked upon as such by others during the time of his exclusion and separation, until he was shown to the priest and cleansed, and his offering offered: he shall dwell alone; in a separate house or apartment, as Uzziah did, 2 Chron. xxvi. 21. none were allowed to come near him, nor he to come near to any; yea, according to Jarchi, other unclean persons might not dwell with him: without the camp shall his habitation be; without the three camps, as the same Jewish writer interprets it, the camp of God, the camp of the Levites, and the camp of Israel: so Miriam, when she was stricken with leprosy, was shut out of the camp seven days, Numb. xii. 14, 15. This was observed whilst in the wilderness, but when the Israelites came to inhabit towns and cities, then lepers were excluded from thence; for they defiled, in a ceremonial sense, every person and thing in a house they came into, whether touched by them or no. So Bartenora [b] observes, that if a leprous person goes into any house, all that is in the house is defiled, even what he does not touch; and that if he sits under a tree, and a clean person passes by, the clean person is defiled; and if he comes into a synagogue, they make a separate place for him ten hands high, and four cubits broad, and the leper goes in first, and comes out last. The Persians, according to Herodotus [c], had a custom much like this; he says, that if any of the citizens had a leprosy or a morphew, he might not come into the city, nor be mixed with other Persians (or have any conversation with them) for they say he has them, because he has sinned against the sun: and there was with us an ancient writ, called leproso amovendo [d], that lay to remove a leper who thrust himself into the company of his neighbours in any parish, either in the church, or at other public meetings, to their annoyance. This law concerning lepers shews, that impure and prophane sinners are not to be admitted into the church of God; and that such who are in it, who appear to be so, are to be excluded from it, communion is not to be had with them; and that such, unless they are cleansed by the grace of God, and the blood of Christ, shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven; for into that shall nothing enter that defiles, or makes an abomination, or a lie; see 1 Cor. v. 7, 11, 13. Rev. xxi. 27.

℣. 47. The garments also, that the plague of leprosy is in, &c.] Whether this sort of leprosy proceeded from natural causes, or was extraordinary and miraculous, and came immediately from the hand of God, and was peculiar to the Jews, and unknown to other nations, is a matter of question; the latter is generally asserted by the Hebrew writers, as Maimonides [e], Abraham Seba [f], and others [g]; but others are of opinion, and Abarbinel among the Jews, that it might be by the contact or touch of a leprous person. Indeed it must be owned, as a learned man [h] observes, that the

4

[a] Hilchot Tumaat Tzarat, c. 10. §. 6. [b] In Misn. Celim, c. 1. §. 4. so in Misn. Negaim, c. 13. §. 7, 11, 12. [c] Hilchot Tumaat Tzarat, c. 16. §. 10. [d] See the Supplement to Chambers's Dictionary in the word Leprosy. [e] Clio, sive, l. 1. c. 138. [f] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 99. 3. [g] Ramban, Bechai, Isaac Arama & alii, apud Muisium in loc. [h] Scheuchzer. Physica Sacra, vol. 2. p. 326.

the ſhirts and clothes of a leper muſt be equally infectious, and more ſo than any other communication with him; and the purulent matter, which adheres thereunto, muſt needs infect ſuch who put on their clothes; for it may be obſerved, that it will get between the threads of garments, and ſtick like glue, and fill them up, and by the acrimony of it corrode the texture itſelf; ſo that experience ſhows, that it is very difficult to waſh ſuch a garment without a rupture, and the ſtains are not eaſily got out: and it muſt be allowed, that garments may be ſcented by diſeaſes, and become infectious, and carry a diſeaſe from place to place, as the plague often times is carried in wool, cotton, ſilk, or any bale goods; but whether all this amounts to the caſe before us, is ſtill a queſtion. Some indeed have endeavoured to account for it, by obſerving, that wool ill ſcoured, ſtuffs kept too long, and ſome particular tapeſtries, are ſubject to worms and moths which eat them, and from hence think it credible, that the leproſy in clothes, and in ſkins, here mentioned, was cauſed by this ſort of vermin; to which, ſtuffs and works, wrought in wool in hot countries, and in times when arts and manufactures were not carried to the height of perfection as now, might probably be more expoſed [l]; but this ſeems not to agree with this leproſy of Moſes, which lay not in the garment being eaten, but in the colour and ſpread of it: whether it be a woollen garment or a linen garment; and according to the Miſnic doctors [k], only wool and linen were defiled by leproſy; Aben Ezra indeed ſays, that the reaſon why no mention is made of ſilk and cotton, is becauſe the ſcripture ſpeaks of what was found (then in uſe) as in Exod. xxiii. 5. wherefore, according to him, woollen and linen are put for all other garments; though, he adds, or it may be the leproſy does not happen to any thing but wool and linen; however it is allowed, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, that when the greateſt part of the cloth is made of wool or linen, it was defiled by it: the Jewiſh canon is, if the greateſt part is of camels hair, it is not defiled; but if the greateſt part is of ſheep, it is; and if half to half (or equal) it is defiled; and ſo flax and hemp mixed together [l]; the ſame rule is to be obſerved concerning them.

v. 48. Whether it be in the warp, or woof, of linen, or of woollen, &c.] When theſe are wove and mixed together, it ſeems difficult, if not impoſſible, to judge whether the plague of leproſy was in the one or in the other, one would think it ſhould be unavoidably in both; wherefore Caſtalio renders the words, whether in the outer part of it, or in the inner; in the outſide or inſide, or what we call the right ſide or the wrong ſide of the cloth: but to me it ſeems that the warp and woof, whether of linen or woollen, are here diſtinguiſhed not only from garments made of them, but from the cloth itſelf, of which they are made, and even to be conſidered before they are wrought together in the loom; and, according to the Jews, when upon the ſpindle [m]: whether in a ſkin, or any thing made of ſkin; that is, whether in unwrought ſkin, which is not made up in any thing, or in any thing that is made of ſkins, as tents, bottles, &c. but ſkins of fiſhes, according to the Jewiſh traditions, are excepted; for ſo they ſay [n], ſea ſkins, i. e. ſkins of fiſhes, are not defiled by plagues (of leproſy); for which the commentators [o] give this reaſon, that as wool and linen are of things which grow out of the earth, ſo muſt the ſkins be; that is, of ſuch animals as live by graſs, that ſprings out of the earth; but if any thing was joined unto them, which grew out of the earth, though but a thread, that received uncleanneſs, it was defiled.

v. 49. And if the plague be greeniſh, or reddiſh in the garment, or in the ſkin, &c.] Either of theſe two colours were ſigns of leproſy in garments; but it is not agreed whether ſtronger or weaker colours are deſigned; the radicals of both theſe words being doubled, according to ſome, and particularly Aben Ezra, leſſen the ſenſe of them; and ſo our tranſlators underſtand it; but, according to Ben Gerſom, the ſignification is increaſed thereby, and the meaning is, if it be exceeding green or exceeding red; and this is evidently the ſenſe of the Miſnah [p]; garments are defiled by green in greens, and by red in reds, that is, by the greeneſt and reddeſt; the green, the commentators ſay [q], is like that of the wings of peacocks and leaves of palm-trees, and the red like crimſon or ſcarlet; and now theſe garments or ſkins, in which the green or red ſpots appeared, muſt be white, and not coloured or dyed: the canon runs thus [r]; ſkins and garments dyed are not defiled with plagues (of leproſy;) a garment whoſe warp is dyed, and its woof white, or its woof dyed, and its warp white, all goes according to the ſight; that is, according to what colour to the eye moſt prevails, whether white or dyed: either in the warp or in the woof, or in any thing of the ſkin; the ſame held good of theſe as of a garment, or any thing elſe made of them: it is a plague of leproſy; it has the ſigns of one, and gives great ſuſpicion that it is one: and ſhall be ſhewed unto the prieſt; by the perſon in whoſe poſſeſſion it is, that it may be examined and judged of, whether it is a leproſy or no.

v. 50. And the prieſt ſhall look upon the plague, &c.] The green or red ſpot in the garment, &c. and ſhut up it that hath the plague ſeven days; the woollen or linen garment, the warp or the woof, or ſkins, and thoſe things that were made of them.

v. 51. And he ſhall look on the plague on the ſeventh day, &c.] To ſee whether there is any alteration in it in that ſpace of time: if the plague be ſpread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in a ſkin, or in any work that is made of ſkin; the green and red ſpot be ſpread more and more in either of them, whether the colour remains the ſame or not, be changed, the green into red, or the red into green, yet if there was a ſpreading, it was a ſign of leproſy. According to the Jewiſh canon [s], if the plague was green and ſpread red, or red and ſpread green, it was unclean; that is, as Bartenora [t] explains it, if it was red in the bigneſs of a bean, and at the end of the week the red had ſpread itſelf to green; or if at the beginning it was green like a bean, and at the end of the week had ſpread itſelf to the bigneſs of a ſhekel, and the root or ſpread of it was become red: the plague is a fretting leproſy; according to Jarchi, a ſharp and pricking one, like a thorn; which ſignification fication the word has in Ezek. xxviii. 24. Ben Gerſom explains it, which brings a curſe, corruption and oldneſs into the thing in which it is; an old irritated, exaſperated leproſy, as Bochart [a], from the uſe of the word in the Arabic tongue, tranſlates it: it is unclean; and the garment or thing in which it is.

[l] Calmet's Dictionary in the word Leper. [k] Miſn. Celaim, c. 9. §. 1. [l] Ib. Negaim, c. 11. §. 2. [m] Ib. §. 8. [n] Miſn. ib. §. 1. [o] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [p] Ib. §. 4. [q] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [r] Miſn. ut ſupra, §. 3, 4. [s] Ibid. [t] In ib.

℣. 52. He ſhall therefore burn that garment; &c.] That there may be no more uſe of it, nor profit from it; and this was done without the city, as Ben Gerſom aſſerts: whether in warp or woof, in woollen or in linen, or any thing of ſkin, wherein the plague is; all and either of them were to be burnt: for it is a fretting leproſy; ſee the note on the preceding verſe: it ſhall be burnt in the fire; which may teach both to hate the garment ſpotted with the fleſh, and to put no truſt in, and have no dependance on a man's own righteouſneſs, which is as filthy rags, and both are ſuch as ſhall be burnt, and the loſs of them ſuffered, even when a man himſelf is ſaved, yet ſo as by fire, 1 Cor. iii. 15.

℣. 53. And if the prieſt ſhall look, &c.] On the ſeventh day as before, after ſhutting up: and behold, the plague be not ſpread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of ſkin; but is at an entire ſtay, that it may be hoped it is not a fretting leproſy: ſo when men do not proceed to more ungodlineſs, as wicked men commonly do, but there is a ſtop put to their vicious life and converſation, it is an hopeful ſign of future good.

℣. 54. Then the prieſt ſhall command that they waſh the thing wherein the plague is, &c.] The prieſt did not waſh it himſelf, but ordered others to do it; and this was either the part in which the plague was, or the whole garment or ſkin in which it was; which may be typical of the waſhing of the garments of men in the blood of Chriſt, which cleanſes from all ſin, Rev. vii. 14. 1 John i. 7. Zech. xiii. 1: and he ſhall ſhut it up ſeven days more; the garment or ſkin in which the leproſy was, or ſuſpected to be, to ſee what alteration would be made by that time through the waſhing, whether the colour would be altered, or whether it would ſpread any more or not.

℣. 55. And the prieſt ſhall look on the plague after it is waſhed, &c.] That is, on the ſecond 7th day, or 13th day from his firſt inſpection of it: and behold, if the plague has not changed its colour, and the plague be not ſpread, it is unclean, thou ſhalt burn it in the fire; if it remains juſt as it was at firſt, very green or very red, and has not diminiſhed of its colour at all, nor changed from one colour to another, although it ſhould not have ſpread itſelf, yet it is defiled, and to be burnt without the camp, as before; that which ſpreads itſelf here and there, it is to be burnt: it is a fret inward, whether it be bare within or without; that is, whether it be thread-bare on the wrong or right ſide of the garment, the nap being eat off by the leproſy; which ſhows it to be a fretting, eating and corroding one: in the Hebrew text it is, in the baldneſs of the hinder, or in the baldneſs of the fore part; they are the ſame words which are uſed of the baldneſs of the back part and fore part of the head, ℣. 42, 43. the nap being off either of the outer and right ſide of the cloth, or of the inner and wrong ſide, made it look like a bald head, whether before or behind.

℣. 56. And if the prieſt look, and behold, the plague be ſomewhat dark after the waſhing of it, &c.] Is become of a weaker colour, either not quite ſo green, or not quite ſo red as it was, or is contracted, and does not ſpread itſelf, ſee the note on ℣. 6. but is rather become leſs: then he ſhall rend it out of the garment, or out of the ſkin, or out of the warp, or out of the woof; that is, that piece which has the plague in it, and burn it, as Jarchi ſays; that ſo the whole may not be loſt, which is otherwiſe pure, and clean, and free from any infection. The manner of expreſſion confirms what I have obſerved on ℣. 48. that the warp and woof are conſidered as ſeparate things, and, as before they are wove together, or wrought into one garment. This rending out may denote the denying of ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, the parting with right eye and right-hand-ſins, and having no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs.

℣. 57. And if it appear ſtill in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of ſkin, &c.] After the piece has been rent out, in another part of the garment, &c. where before it was not ſeen: it is a ſpreading plague; or leproſy; a flouriſhing one, as the word ſignifies, a growing and increaſing one: thou ſhalt burn that wherein the plague is with fire; according to Aben Ezra, only that part in which the plague was; but Jarchi ſays the whole garment; with whom Ben Gerſom ſeems to agree, who reads the words, thou ſhalt burn it, with that in which the plague is; the whole garment, ſkin, warp or woof, along with the part in which the leproſy is.

℣. 58. And the garment, either warp or woof, or whatſoever thing of ſkin it be, which thou ſhalt waſh, &c.] After it had been ſhut up ſeven days, and viewed by the prieſt again: if the plague be departed from them; upon a review of them: then it ſhall be waſhed the ſecond time, and ſhall be clean; and ſo reckoned even thoroughly clean, and uſed; this denotes the thorough waſhing and cleanſing of ſinners by the blood of Jeſus, ſee Pſ. li. 2. this waſhing was by dipping; and ſo the Targum renders it; and Jarchi obſerves, that all waſhings of garments, which are for dipping, they interpret by the ſame word.

℣. 59. This is the law of the plague of leproſy, &c.] The rules by which it was to be judged of: whether or no it was in a garment of woollen, or linen, either in the warp or woof, or any thing of ſkin; which include every thing in which this ſort of leproſy was: to pronounce it clean, or to pronounce it unclean; either to declare it free from the plague of the leproſy, or as infected with it, and ſo accordingly diſpoſe of it.

[a] Hierozoic, par. 1. l. 2. c. 45. col. 493.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIV.

THIS chapter treats of the purification of lepers, and the rules to be obſerved therein; and firſt what the prieſt was to do for his cleanſing when brought to him, by making uſe of two birds, with cedar-wood, ſcarlet and hyſſop, as directed, ℣. 1—7. what he was to do for himſelf, ſhaving off all his hair, and waſhing his fleſh and clothes in water, ℣. 8, 9. the offerings to be offered up for him, two he-lambs and one ew-lamb, and a meat-offering, with a particular account of the uſe of the blood of the treſpaſs-offering, and of oil put upon the tip of his right ear, the thumb of his right hand, and the great toe of his right foot, ℣. 10—20. but if poor, only one lamb was required, a meat-offering of one tenth deal, and two turtle doves or two young pigeons, and blood and oil uſed as before, ℣. 21—32. next follow an account of leproſy in an houſe, and the ſigns of it, and the rules to judge of it, ℣. 33—48. and the manner of cleanſing from it, ℣. 49—53. and the chapter is cloſed with a recapitulation of the ſeveral laws concerning the various ſorts of leproſy in this and the preceding chapter, ℣. 54—57.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] In order to deliver the ſame to Aaron, who, and the prieſts his ſucceſſors, were chiefly to be concerned in the execution of the law given: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. This ſhall be the law of the leper, in the day of his cleanſing, &c.] Or the rules, rites, ceremonies and ſacrifices to be obſerved therein. Jarchi ſays, from hence we learn that they were not to purify a leper in the night: he ſhall be brought unto the prieſt; not into the camp, or city, or houſe, where the prieſt was, for till he was cleanſed he could not be admitted into either; beſides, the prieſt is afterwards ſaid to go forth out of the camp to him; but he was to be brought pretty near the camp or city, where the prieſt went to meet him. As the leper was an emblem of a polluted ſinner, the prieſt was a type of Chriſt, to whom leprous ſinners muſt be brought for cleanſing; they can't come of themſelves to him, that is, believe in him, except it be given unto them; or they are drawn with the powerful and efficacious grace of God, by which ſouls are brought to Chriſt, and enabled to believe in him; not that they are brought againſt their wills, but being drawn with the cords of love, and through the power of divine grace, ſweetly operating upon their hearts, they move towards him with all readineſs and willingneſs, and caſt themſelves at his feet, ſaying as the leper that came to Chriſt, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean; and it is rich grace to allow them to come near him, and amazing goodneſs in him to receive and cleanſe them.

℣. 3. And the prieſt ſhall go forth out of the camp, &c.] A little without the camp, as Ben Gerſom notes. There have been ſeveral goings forth of Chriſt our high-prieſt; firſt in the council and covenant of grace and peace, when he became the ſurety of his people; then in time by the aſſumption of human nature, when he came forth from his Father, and came into the world to ſave them; next, when he went forth out of the city of Jeruſalem to ſuffer for them; and alſo, when at the time of converſion, he goes forth in queſt of them, and looks them up, and finds them, and brings them home, which may anſwer to the type here; and all ſhews the great readineſs of Chriſt to receive ſinners: and the prieſt ſhall look, and behold, if the plague of leproſy be healed in the leper; that all the ſigns of uncleanneſs are removed, the ſwelling, the ſcab, or bright ſpot, and the white hair in them, and inſtead of that, black hair is grown up. The typical prieſt did not heal, nor could he, the healing was of God; he only looked to ſee by ſigns if the plague was healed; but our antitypical prieſt looks with an eye of pity and compaſſion on leprous ſinners, and they are enabled to look to him by faith, and virtue goes out of him to the healing of their diſeaſes; as he looks upon them in their blood, and ſays to them live, ſo he looks upon them in their leproſy, and touches them, and ſays, I will be thou clean, and they are immediately healed; he is the ſun of righteouſneſs, which ariſes upon them with healing in his wings.

℣. 4. Then ſhall the prieſt command to take for him that is to be cleanſed, &c.] The command is by the prieſt, the taking is by any man, as Ben Gerſom obſerves; any one whom he ſhall command, the leper himſelf, or his friends. Aben Ezra interprets it, the prieſt ſhall take of his own; but he adds, there are ſome that explain it, the leper ſhall give them to him, namely, what follows: two birds alive, and clean; any ſort of birds, to whom this deſcription agrees; for not any particular ſort are pointed out, as ſparrows [w], as ſome render the word, or any other; becauſe either they muſt be clean or unclean; if unclean, then not to be uſed; if clean, then this deſcriptive character is uſed in vain. Theſe were to be alive, taken alive with the hand, and not ſhot dead; and this alſo excepts ſuch as were torn, as Jarchi, or any ways maimed and unſound, and not likely to live; and they were to be clean, ſuch as were ſo according to a law given in a preceding chapter; they were to be none of thoſe unclean birds there mentioned; and according to the Miſnah [x], they were to be alike in ſight and height, and in price and value, and to be taken together; and, by the ſame tradition, they were to be two birds of liberty, that is, not ſuch as were kept tame in cages, but ſuch as fly abroad in the fields. Theſe birds may be conſidered as a type of Chriſt, who compares himſelf to an hen, Matt. xxiii. 37. and birds may denote his ſwiftneſs and readineſs to help his people, his tenderneſs and compaſſion towards them in diſtreſs, and his weakneſs and frailty in human nature, and his meanneſs and deſpicableneſs in the eyes of men; and theſe being alive, the character well agrees with him, who is the living God, the living Redeemer, the Mediator that has life in himſelf, and for his people; and as man, now lives, and will live for evermore, and is the author and giver of life, natural, ſpiritual and eternal. And the birds being clean, may denote the purity and holineſs of Chriſt, and ſo his fitneſs to be a ſacrifice, and his ſuitableneſs as food for his people: and the number two may ſignify either his two natures, divine and human, in both which he lives, lives, and is pure and holy; or his two eſtates of humiliation and exaltation; or his death by the ſlain bird, and his reſurrection by the living bird, of which more hereafter: and the cedar-wood, and ſcarlet, and hyſop; a ſtick of cedar, as Jarchi; it was proper it ſhould be of ſuch a bigneſs, as to be known to be cedar-wood, but was not to be too heavy for the prieſt to ſprinkle with it, as Ben Gerſom; and the ſame writer obſerves, it ought to have a leaf on the top of it, that it might appear to be cedar: according to the Miſnah [y], it was to be a cubit long, and the 4th part of a bed's foot thick: ſcarlet was either wool dyed of that colour, or crimſon, ſo Jarchi; or a ſcarlet thread or line with which the hyſop was bound and faſtened to the cedar-wood; and, according to the above tradition [z], the hyſop was to be neither counterfeit nor wild, nor Greek, nor Roman, nor any that had any epithet to it, but common ſimple hyſop; and, as Gerſom ſays, there was not to be leſs than an handful of it. The ſignification of theſe is variouſly conjectured; according to Abarbinel, they have reſpect to the nature of the leproſy, and as oppoſite to it; that as the two live birds ſignified reſtoration to his former ſtate, when he had been like one dead, ſo the cedar-wood, being incorruptible and durable, ſhewed that the putrefaction of humours was cured, the ſcarlet, that the blood was purged, and hence the true colour of the face returned again, and a ruddy and florid countenance as before; and the hyſop being of a ſavoury ſmell, that the diſagreeable ſcent and ſtench were gone: but others think there is a moral meaning in them, that the cedar being the higheſt of trees, and the ſcarlet colour coming from a worm, and the hyſop the loweſt of plants, ſee 1 Kings iv. 33. the cedar-wood may denote the pride and haughtineſs of ſpirit, the leproſy is the puniſhment of, as in Miriam, Gehazi, Uzziah, and the family of Joab; and the worm that gives the ſcarlet colour, and the hyſop, may ſignify that humility that becomes a leper that is cleanſed, ſo Jarchi: but they will bear a more evangelical ſenſe, and may have reſpect either to Chriſt; the cedar-wood may be an emblem of the incorruption of Chriſt, and of the durable efficacy of his death; the ſcarlet, of his bloody ſufferings, his flaming love to his people expreſſed thereby, and the nature of thoſe ſins and ſinners being of a ſcarlet dye, for whom he ſuffered; and the hyſop, of the purgative nature of his blood, which cleanſes from all ſin: or elſe to the graces of his Spirit; faith may be ſignified by the cedar-wood, which is in ſome ſtrong, and in all precious and durable; love by ſcarlet, of a flaming colour, as ſtrong love is like coals of fire, that give a moſt vehement flame; and hope by hyſop, which is but a lowly, yet lively grace; or faith may be ſet forth by them all, by the cedar-wood, for its continuance, by ſcarlet for its working by love, and by hyſop for its purifying uſe, as it deals with the blood of Chriſt.

[w] צפרים שתי duos paſſeres, V. L.

[x] Negaim, c. 14. §. 5.

℣. 5. And the prieſt ſhall command that one of the birds be killed, &c.] That is, ſhall command another prieſt to kill one of them, or an Iſraelite, as Aben Ezra; and who alſo obſerves, that ſome ſay the leper, or the butcher, as the Targum of Jonathan; the killing of this bird, not being a ſacrifice, might be done without the camp, as it was, and not at the altar, near to which ſacrifices were ſlain, and where they were offered: and this was to be done in an earthen veſſel over running water; this veſſel, according to the Jewiſh traditions [a], was to be a new one, and a fourth part of a log of running water was to be put into it, and then the bird was to be killed over it, and its blood ſqueezed into it, and then a hole was dug, and it was buried before the leprous perſon; and ſo it ſhould be rendred, over an earthen veſſel, as it is in the Tigurine verſion, and by Noldius [b]; for how could it be killed in it, eſpecially when water was in it? the killing of this bird may have reſpect to the ſufferings, death and bloodſhed of Chriſt, which were neceſſary for the purging and cleanſing of leprous ſinners, and which were endured in his human nature, comparable to an earthen veſſel, as an human body ſometimes is; ſee 2 Cor. iv. 7. for he was crucified through weakneſs, and was put to death in the fleſh, 2 Cor. xiii. 4. 1 Pet. iii. 18. and the running or living water mixed with blood, may denote both the ſanctification and juſtification of Chriſt's people by the water and blood which ſprung from his pierced ſide, and the continual virtue thereof to take away ſin, and free from it; or the active and paſſive obedience of Chriſt, which both together are the matter of a ſinner's juſtification before God.

℣. 6. As for the living bird, he ſhall take it, &c.] And diſpoſe of it as after directed; for there was an uſe for that: and the cedar wood, and the ſcarlet, and the hyſop; which were all bound up in one bundle, but whether the living bird was joined to them is a queſtion; according to Jarchi they were ſeparate, the bird by itſelf, and the cedar-wood, &c. by themſelves; they were neither bound together nor dipped together; and Ben Gerſom is very diſtinct and expreſſive; we learn from hence, ſays he, that three were bound up in one bundle, but the living bird was not comprehended in that bundle; but according to the Miſnah [c] they were all joined together, for there it is ſaid, he (the prieſt) takes the cedar-wood, ſcarlet, and hyſop, and rolls them up with the reſt of the ſcarlet thread, and joins to them the extreme parts of the wings and of the tail of the ſecond bird and dips them; and this ſeems beſt to agree with the text, as follows: and ſhall dip them and the living bird, in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water; that is, into the blood of it as mixed with the running water in the earthen veſſel, which together made a ſufficient quantity for all theſe to be dipped into it; whether ſeparately, firſt the living bird, and then the cedar-wood, and ſcarlet, and hyſop, or all together: the bird that was kept alive was a type of Chriſt, who, as a divine perſon always lived, and ever will; he is the living God, and impaſſible: the dipping of this living bird in the blood of the ſlain one, denotes the union of the two natures in chriſt, divine and human, and which union remained at the death of Chriſt; and alſo ſhews that the virtue of Chriſt's blood ariſes from his being the living God: the dipping of the cedar-wood, ſcarlet, and hyſop into the ſame blood, ſignifies the exerciſe of the ſeveral graces of the Spirit upon Chriſt, as crucified and ſlain, and their dealing with his blood for pardon and cleanſing, as faith and hope do, and from whence love receives freſh ardour and vigour.

℣. 7. And he ſhall ſprinkle upon him that is to be cleanſed from the leproſy, ſeven times, &c.] With the hyſop faſtened to the cedar ſtick, with the ſcarlet wool or thread bound about it, dipped into the blood and water in the earthen veſſel; to which the pſalmiſt

[y] Negaim, c. 14. §. 6.
[z] Ibid.
[a] Ib. §. 1.
[b] Ebr. Concord. part. p. 64. No. 318.
[c] Ibid. & Bartenora in Ib.

pſalmiſt alludes, Pſ. li. 7. the Egyptians had a great notion of hyſop, as of a purifying nature, and therefore uſed to eat it with bread, to take off the ſtrength of that [d]: upon what part of the leper this ſprinkling was made, is not ſaid; the Targum of Jonathan ſays, upon the houſe of his face, that is, upon the vail that was over his face: but in the Miſnah [e], it is ſaid to be on the back of his hand; and ſo Gerſom, though ſome ſay it was on his forehead; and ſprinkling was typical of Chriſt's blood of ſprinkling, and of the application of it, and of ſharing in all the bleſſings of it; and this was done ſeven times, to denote the thorough and perfect cleanſing of him, and of every part, every faculty of the ſoul, and every member of the body, and that from all ſin, and the frequent application of it: the laſt mentioned writer ſays, at every ſprinkling there was a dipping, and that the ſenſe is, that he ſhould ſprinkle and dip ſeven times, as Naaman the Syrian leper did in Jordan; but of the waſhing of the leper mention is afterwards made: and ſhall pronounce him clean; from his leproſy, and ſo fit for civil and religious converſation, to come into the camp or city, and into the tabernacle: and ſhall let the living bird looſe into the open field; as a token of the freedom of the leper, and that he was at liberty to go where he pleaſed: the Miſnic doctors ſay [f], when he came to let go the living bird, he did not turn its face neither to the ſea, nor to the city, nor to the wilderneſs, as it is ſaid, but he ſhall let go the living bird out of the city into the open field, as in ℣. 53. the Targum of Jonathan here adds, if the man ſhould be prepared to be ſmitten with the leproſy again, the live bird may return to his houſe the ſame day, and be fit to be eaten, but the ſlain bird he ſhall bury in the ſight of the leper: ſome ſay, if the bird returned ever ſo many times, it was to be let go again: this may be a figure of the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead, and of his juſtification upon it, as the head and repreſentative of his people, and of their free and full diſcharge from guilt, condemnation, and death through him, and of his and their being received up into heaven, and whither their hearts ſhould be directed, in affection, and thankfulneſs for their great deliverance and ſalvation; ſee 1 Tim. iii. 16. Col. iii. 1. 2.

℣. 8. And he that is to be cleanſed ſhall waſh his clothes, &c.] That there may be no remains of the infection in them, and that they might not convey an ill ſcent to others: ſo the converſation-garments of the ſaints are to be waſhed in the blood of the lamb, Rev. vii. 14. and ſhave off all his hair; what is here expreſſed in general, is more particularly declared in the following verſe; the hair of his head, beard, and eyebrows; according to Gerſom, this was done by the prieſt, and ſo Maimonides ſays [g], that none but a prieſt might ſhave him; and yet the text ſeems plainly to aſcribe this, as well as the waſhing of his clothes and himſelf, to the leper that was to be cleanſed; and the ſame writers ſay, that if two hairs were left it was no ſhaving; and ſo ſays the Miſnah [h]: the ſhaving of the lepers hairs ſignified the weakening of the ſtrength of ſin; the mortification of the deeds of the body, through the Spirit, and the laying aſide all ſuperfluity of naughtineſs, and the excreſcences of the fleſh; a parting with every thing that grows out of a man's ſelf, ſin or ſelf-righteouſneſs; a laying a man bare and open, that nothing may lie hid and covered, and eſcape cleanſing: and waſh himſelf in water; which was to be done by dipping in a collection of water, and not in running water, as Gerſom obſerves, in a quantity of water ſufficient to cover the whole body; which, according to the Talmud [i], was 40 ſeahs, and was a cubit ſquare in breadth, and three cubits deep: this may denote the waſhing of ſinful men with the waſhing of regeneration, but more eſpecially with the blood Chriſt, the fountain opened for ſin and uncleanneſs, Zech. xiii. 1. and after that he ſhall come into the camp; into the camp of Iſrael, whilſt in the wilderneſs, and in after-times into the city, where he uſed to dwell; and may ſignify the admittance of ſuch into the church of God again, who appear to be cleanſed from ſin, to have true repentance towards God for it, and faith in the blood of Chriſt: and ſhall tarry abroad out of his tent ſeven days; that is, out of his own tent or houſe, where his wife and family dwelt: this precaution was taken, leſt there ſhould be any remains of his diſorder lurking in him that might endanger his wife and family, eſpecially his wife, with whom he was to have no conjugal converſation as yet; ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah [k], that he was to be ſeparated from his houſe ſeven days, and forbid the uſe of the marriage-bed; and this prohibition, Jarchi thinks is intended in this clauſe, and ſo Maimonides [l], to which agrees the Targum of Jonathan, "he ſhall ſit without the tent of the houſe of his "habitation, and ſhall not come near to the ſide "of his wife ſeven days."

℣. 9. But it ſhall be on the ſeventh day, &c.] after he was firſt brought to the prieſt and cleanſed by the two birds, taken and uſed for him as directed, and he had been ſhaved and waſhed: that he ſhall ſhave all his hair; a ſecond time, whatſoever was grown in thoſe ſeven days: all off his head, and his beard, and his eye-brows; even all his hair he ſhall ſhave off; not only the hair of the parts mentioned, but all other, the hair of his feet alſo, as Aben Ezra notes, who obſerves, that ſome ſay, the hair of his arms, and thighs, and breaſt; and ſo according to the Miſnah [m], this was a ſecond ſhaving, for it is ſaid, "in the ſeventh day he ſhaves "a ſecond time, according to the firſt ſhaving:" he ſhall waſh his clothes, alſo he ſhall waſh his fleſh in water, and he ſhall be clean; this was alſo repeated on the ſeventh, both the waſhing of his clothes, and the dipping of him in water; after which he was accounted clean, and was neither defiled nor defiling, and might go into his own tent or houſe, and into the tabernacle, and offer his offerings, and partake of the privileges of it, at leaſt ſome of them, even the ſame day; according to the tradition he may eat of the tithes, and after ſun-ſet he may eat of the heave-offerings, and when he has brought his atonement he may eat of the holy things [n].

℣. 10. And on the eighth day, &c.] From the leper's firſt appearance before the prieſt, and the day after the above things were done, in the preceding verſe: he ſhall take two he-lambs without blemiſh; the one for a treſpaſs-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and both typical of Chriſt the lamb of God, without ſpot and blemiſh: and

[d] Chæremon apud Porphyr. de abſtinentia, l. 4. §. 6. [e] Ut ſupra. [f] Ib. §. 2. [g] Hilchot Tumaat Tzarat, c. 11. §. 3. [h] Negaim, c. 14. §. 4. [i] T. Bab. Eruvin, fol. 14. 1. 2. [k] Ut ſupra, §. 2. [l] Ut ſupra, §. 1. [m] Ut ſupra, §. 3. [n] Ibid.

and one ew-lamb of the first year without blemish; for a sin-offering, a type of Christ also: and three tenth-deals of fine flour, for a meat-offering, mingled with oil; that is, three tenth-parts of an ephah, or three omers; one of which was as much, or more than a man could eat in a day, see Exod. xvi. 36. there were three of these to answer to and accompany the three lambs for sacrifice, just such a quantity was allotted to the lambs of the daily sacrifice, Exod. xxix. 40. typical likewise of Christ, who is the true bread, and whose flesh is meat indeed: and one log of oil; to be used as after directed: this measure was about half a pint, and is an emblem of the grace and Spirit of God, received by the saints in measure, and is the same with the oil of gladness, poured on Christ without measure, Ps. xlv. 7. John iii. 34.

℣. 11. And the priest that maketh him clean, &c.] By the above rites and ceremonies, and the after-sacrifices offered: shall present the man that is to be made clean, and those things before the Lord; the two he-lambs, and the ew-lamb; and it seems also the meat-offerings, and the log of oil; but these Ben Gersom excepts, and when the leper, with these, is said to be set or presented before the Lord, this must not be understood of his being introduced into the tabernacle, and of his being placed in the court itself; for as yet, as Jarchi says, he was Mechoser Cippurim, one that needed expiation, and therefore, till that was done could not be admitted; but he was set at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; at the eastern gate, which afterwards, when the temple was built, was called the gate of Nicanor, and lay between the court of the women and the court of the Israelites: thus every one that has received favours from the Lord, by restoration of health, or by deliverance from dangers, or be it in whatsoever way it will, should present himself and his sacrifice of praise unto him; and his case should be presented in a public manner before the congregation of the saints by the minister of it, in token of gratitude and thankfulness for mercies received.

℣. 12. And the priest shall take one he-lamb, &c.] One of the he-lambs brought by the leper for his offering: and offer him for a trespass-offering; for though the leprosy itself was a disorder or disease, and not sinful, yet the cause of it was sin, a trespass against God, and therefore a trespass-offering must be offered; which was typical of Christ, whose soul was made a trespass-offering, Is. liii. 10. where the same word is used as here: and the log of oil; before-mentioned: and wave them for a wave-offering before the Lord; heaving of them up and down, moving of them to and fro towards the several parts of the world, east, west, north, and south, even both the log of oil, and the he-lamb for the trespass-offering, and that alive, as Jarchi observes, and so says Maimonides [o].

℣. 13. And he shall slay the lamb, &c.] The priest, or the butcher, as the Targum of Jonathan, the slaughterer, the priest appointed for that service; at which time both the hands of the leper were laid upon it, as says the Misnah [p]; for though the leper might not go into the court as yet, the sacrifice was brought to the door of the tabernacle for him to put his hands on it: so Maimonides [q] relates; the trespass-offering of the leper is brought to the door, and he puts both his hands into the court, and lays them on it, and they immediately slay it: in the place where he shall kill the sin-offering in the holy place; in the court of the tabernacle, on the north side of the altar, as Jarchi observes, see ch. i. 11. and vi. 25. for as the sin-offering is the priest's, so is the trespass-offering; and to be eaten by him and his sons in the holy place, and by none but them, see ch. vi. 26, 29. it is most holy; which is the reason why none else might eat of it, typical of Christ the most holy, whose flesh is only eaten by true believers in him, made priests unto God by him.

℣. 14. And the priest shall take some of the blood of the trespass-offering, &c.] According to the Misnah [r], two priests received the blood of it, one in a vessel and the other in his hand; he that received it in a vessel went and sprinkled it upon the wall (or top, as Maimonides [s],) of the altar; and he that received it in his hand went to the leper, and the leper having dipped himself in the chamber of the lepers, went and stood in the gate of Nicanor: and the priest shall put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot; as was done at the consecration of the high-priest, Exod. xxix. 20. Lev. viii. 24. see the note there: now as the leper stood at the door of the tabernacle without the court, he was obliged to put in his head, his right hand, and his right foot, in order to have the blood put on them by the priest, who was in the court; and these were put in either separately one after another, or together: the tradition runs thus [t], he (the leper) thrust in his head, and (the priest) put (the blood) upon the tip of his ear; his hand, and he put it upon the thumb of his hand; his foot, and he put it upon the great toe of his foot: and the application of the blood to these parts, shewed that the leper had now a right to hear the word of God, to partake of all privileges, to touch any thing without defiling it, and to go into any house or company where he thought fit, he was now at full liberty; more evangelically these things may signify, the sanctification and cleansing of those parts, and of the whole man by the blood of Christ; and particularly, may signify that as the ear is unclean, uncircumcised, and unsanctified in a leprous sinner, and even there are hearing sins in the best of men, the ear is sanctified, and hearing sins removed by the blood of Christ; and as the right hand, being the instrument of action, may denote the evil works of men, and even since the most righteous performances of the best of men are attended with sin, the blood of Christ which cleanses from all sin, had need to be put upon them; and whereas the conversation of men, which the foot may be an emblem of, is sinful and vain, it is by the blood of Christ that they are redeemed from it; and the influence of that blood sprinkled on the conscience, will oblige and constrain men to live and walk soberly, righteously and godly.

℣. 15. And the priest shall take some of the log of oil, &c.] With his right hand, as the Targum of Jonathan adds: and pour it into the palm of his own left hand; but in the original text it is, pour it into the palm of the priest's left hand; and it is a question, whether he or another priest is meant; according to Aben Ezra, the oil was to be poured into the hand of the priest that was cleansing the leper, and which, he thinks, is plain from what follows; but Gersom thinks, it is better to understand it of another priest, since it is not said into his own hand, but into the hand of the priest; and the [o] Hilchot Mechosre Capharah, c. 4. §. 2.

[p] Negaim, c. 14. §. 8.
[q] Ut supra.
[r] Ut supra.
[s] Ut supra, §. 9.

the Miſnah [u] is clear for it, he (the prieſt) takes of the log of oil and pours it into the palm of his fellow (prieſt), but if he pours it into his own palm it is ſufficient.

℣. 16. And the prieſt ſhall dip the right finger, &c.] The finger of his right hand, the fore-finger of it: in the oil that is in his left hand; either that is in his own left hand, or in the left hand of a fellow prieſt: and ſhall ſprinkle of the oil with his finger ſeven times before the Lord; that is, over-againſt the houſe of the holy of holies, as Jarchi, where Jehovah dwelt; but ſtanding at the ſame time at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, which was eaſtward, and ſo he looked weſtward to the holy of holies; ſo ſays the Miſnah [w], on which one of the commentators [x] obſerves, that he did not bring the oil into the temple to ſprinkle it before the vail; but he ſtood in the court, and turned his face to the holy of holies, and ſo ſprinkled upon the floor of the court: and the Jewiſh doctors are very expreſs for it, according to the Miſnah [y], that for every ſprinkling there was a dipping; that as often as he ſprinkled, ſo often he muſt dip his finger in the oil, and not that he might dip his finger once, and of that ſprinkle two or three times; for the finger muſt be dipped ſeven times: this may denote the thankſgiving of the leper for his cleanſing, proceeding from the grace of God, and the Lord's gracious acceptance of it.

℣. 17. And of the reſt of the oil that is in his hand, &c.] That was either in the hand of the prieſt that was cleanſing, or in the hand of his fellow prieſt; ſuch of it as was left after ſome of it had been ſprinkled ſeven times before the Lord: ſhall the prieſt put upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleanſed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot; ſignifying that theſe parts in the leprous ſinner need to be ſanctified by the grace of the Spirit of God, comparable to oil, with which all the Lord's people are anointed, and is that unction they receive from the holy one, their great high prieſt; by this the ear is ſanctified ſo as to hear the word, ſo as to underſtand it and mix it with faith; and the thumb of the right hand having oil put on that, may ſignify that the actions of good men are influenced by the Spirit of God, who works in them both to will and to do, and without whoſe grace they can do nothing in a ſpiritual manner; and the great toe of the right foot, the inſtrument of walking, being anointed with the ſame, may denote that it is through the grace of God ſaints have their converſation in the world, in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, and as becomes the goſpel of Chriſt: the oil was to be put, upon the blood of the treſpaſs-offering; that is, upon the place of the blood of it, as in ℣. 28. which is, as the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, the place in which he put at firſt the blood of the treſpaſs-offering: for the Jewiſh writers obſerve [z], that the log of oil depended on the treſpaſs-offering; for if the blood of the treſpaſs-offering was not firſt ſprinkled, the ſprinkling of the oil was of no avail: this ſhews that the blood of Chriſt is the foundation of men's receiving the grace of the Spirit, and that it is owing to that it is beſtowed upon them; the application of his grace follows redemption by the blood of Chriſt, who gave himſelf to redeem them from all iniquity, and purify unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works; and for whomſoever expiation is made by the blood of Chriſt, they are ſanctified by the Spirit of Chriſt.

℣. 18. And the remnant of the oil that is in the prieſt's hand, &c.] Either in the hand of the prieſt that makes the leper clean, or in the hand of a fellow prieſt; what was left of that after ſome of it had been ſprinkled ſeven times before the Lord, and after other of it had been put upon the ſeveral parts of the leper, as directed in the preceding verſe: he ſhall pour upon the head of him that is to be cleanſed; for the plague of leproſy was ſometimes in the head, ch. xiii. 44. and this may denote either the bleſſings of grace on the head of the righteous, or that a man's head ſhould be ſanctified; he ſhould have pure principles as well as pure practices; and that his head-knowledge ſhould be ſanctified knowledge; ſome have only the form of godlineſs, but deny the power of it: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him before the Lord; by putting the oil on the ſeveral parts, particularly on the head, which was done, as is ſaid in the Miſnah [a], to make atonement; if he puts it, atonement is made, but if he does not put it, there is no atonement made; but one would think rather, the atonement refers to all the prieſt did, both in offering the treſpaſs-offering, and in putting both the blood of that and the oil on the ſeveral parts that are mentioned: this atonement was made for the ſin or ſins which were the cauſe of the man's leproſy: what was done with the reſt of the log of oil is not ſaid; it was the portion of the prieſts, and was for their uſe: Maimonides ſays [b], the reſt of the log of oil is not eaten but in the court by the males of the prieſts, as other the moſt holy things; and that it is unlawful to eat thereof until the prieſt had ſprinkled of it ſeven times, and put it on the above parts; and if one eats he is to be beaten.

℣. 19. And the prieſt ſhall offer the ſin-offering, &c.] This was the ew-lamb, according to the rite of every ſin-offering, as Aben Ezra ſays; and was typical of Chriſt, as all ſuch offerings were, who was made ſin and a ſin-offering for his people: and make an atonement for him that was to be cleanſed from his uncleanneſs; for it ſeems the atonement was not perfected by the treſpaſs-offering and all the preceding rites; but a ſin-offering was neceſſary both on account of moral uncleanneſs, the cauſe of the leproſy, and of ceremonial uncleanneſs by it: and afterward he ſhall kill the burnt offering; the other he-lamb; the burnt-offering for the moſt part following the ſin or treſpaſs-offering as a gift by way of thankfulneſs, atonement being made for ſin by the other offerings; which alſo was typical of Chriſt, as all burnt-offerings were.

℣. 20. And the prieſt ſhall offer the burnt-offering, and the meat-offering upon the altar, &c.] The meat-offering which belonged to that, and went along with it, even one tenth deal of fine flour mingled with oil; but no mention being made of any meat-offering with the other offerings already offered, the treſpaſs-offering and the ſin-offering; ſome ſay, as Aben Ezra obſerves, that the whole meat-offering conſiſting of three tenth deals of fine flour, was offered with the burnt-offering, which muſt be a ſaving to the prieſt, if he only burnt one handful of it, as in other caſes, the reſt falling to his part: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him; theſe offerings ſtill furthering of it, and tending ing to perfect it, and did compleat it: and he ſhall be clean; in a typical and ceremonial ſenſe.

[u] Ib. §. 10. ſo Maimon. Mechoſre Capharah, ut ſupra, & Bartenora, in Miſn. Negaim, ib. [w] Ibid. [x] Bartenora in ib. [y] Ibid. [z] Bartenora in Miſn. Zebachim, c. 4. §. 3. [a] Ut ſupra. [b] Ut ſupra, §. 3.

℣. 21. And if he be poor, and cannot get ſo much, &c.] As three lambs, and three tenth deals of fine flour: then he ſhall take one lamb for a treſpaſs-offering to be waved, to make an atonement; one he-lamb, and was excuſed the other he-lamb for a burnt-offering, and the ew-lamb for a ſin-offering; but a lamb he muſt bring, a type of Chriſt the lamb of God, for without his blood and ſacrifice there is no atonement for rich or poor, but for both thereby: and one tenth deal of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering; inſtead of three tenth deals; this abatement in the ſeveral kinds of offerings was a great indulgence to the poor, and an inſtance of God's goodneſs to them, that they might not be preſſed above meaſure, and yet ſhare the ſame benefits and advantages as the rich: and a log of oil; here was no abatement in this, nor was there need of any, half a pint of oil in a country which abounded with it, might be bought for a ſmall matter: however the grace of the Spirit, ſignified by oil, is to be had freely of Chriſt, and in as large a quantity by a poor man as by a rich man, and is equally neceſſary to the one as to the other, who are all one in Chriſt Jeſus; ſee Gal. iii. 28. Col. iii. 11.

℣. 22. And two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, ſuch as he is able to get, &c.] As good as he can get for his money, or his money he is poſſeſſed of will purchaſe; but if he was not able to purchaſe theſe of the better ſort, the beſt he could get would be acceptable; ſo indulgent, kind, and merciful was God to the poor in this caſe; theſe were inſtead of the other two lambs required of thoſe that were able to bring them, and anſwered all the purpoſes of them: and the one ſhall be a ſin-offering, and the other a burnt offering; one of the turtle-doves or one of the young pigeons ſhould be for the one and the other for the other; ſo that the poor man had as many offerings for his atonement and cleanſing as the rich, and his expiation and purgation were as compleat as theirs.

℣. 23. And he ſhall bring them on the eighth day, for his cleanſing, &c.] Which ſuppoſes him to have gone through all the rites and ceremonies of cleanſing throughout the ſeven days, from his firſt appearance before the prieſt; ſuch as his being ſprinkled with the cedar-wood, hyſop, and ſcarlet, dipped in the blood of the ſlain bird, mixed with running water; the ſhaving off of his hair, and waſhing his fleſh and clothes in water; all which being done, on the eighth day he was to bring his lamb for a treſpaſs-offering, and one tenth deal of fine flour, for a meat-offering, and two turtle-doves or two young pigeons, one for a ſin-offering and the other for a burnt-offering: unto the prieſt, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord; where the rich man alſo and his offerings were preſented; ſee the note on ℣. 11. and from hence to the end of the 31ſt verſe, the ſame rites are enjoined for the cleanſing of the poor leper as the rich one, of which ſee the notes on ℣. 12. to 21. ſignifying that they are not exempt from duty, or abridged of any privilege on account of poverty; the perſons and ſervices of the people of God being equally acceptable to him, whether rich or poor.

℣. 32. This is the law of him in whom is the plague of leproſy, &c.] The former part of the chapter contains an account of the laws, rites, and ceremonies of cleanſing a leper who was able to bear the expences of them: this latter part reſpects ſuch laws, rites and ceremonies that belonged to him: whoſe hand is not able to get that which pertaineth to his cleanſing; as the three lambs and three tenth deals of fine flour, and therefore one lamb, and one tenth deal of fine flour, and two turtles or two young pigeons, were admitted of in the room of them, in conſideration of his poverty. The Jewiſh canons reſpecting the caſes of a poor and rich leper are theſe[c]: if a poor leper offers the ſacrifice of a rich man, it is very well; but if a rich leper offers the ſacrifice of a poor one, it is not ſufficient; if a poor leper offers his ſacrifice and he becomes rich, or if when rich, and he afterwards becomes poor, all goes after the ſin-offering; that is, as they[d] explain it, if a man when he offers his ſin-offering is poor, and ſo his offering is of a turtle or pigeon, though he ſhould become rich he muſt finiſh the offering of the poor, by bringing for a burnt-offering one of the fowls; and ſo if he was rich, and offered the ſin-offering out of the lambs, though he ſhould become poor, he muſt offer the burnt-offering of the ſame; but the treſpaſs-offering is generally pitched upon as the rule in which the poor and the rich were equal: and Maimonides[e] ſays, all goes after the treſpaſs-offering; as if at the time of ſlaying the treſpaſs-offering he is rich, he muſt finiſh the offering of a rich man, but if poor he muſt finiſh the offering of a poor man: it may be obſerved that a great deal of notice is taken of a leper, and ſtrict enquiry made into the nature of leproſy, and the various ſigns of it given; and a great deal to do about the cleanſing and expiation of him; all which ſhews what notice God takes of leprous ſinners, and what a diligent ſcrutiny ſhould be made into the evil nature of ſin, and what a proviſion God has made for the cleanſing and atonement of ſinners by the blood and ſacrifice of his ſon; which is here typified by all ſorts of offerings, the ſin-offering, the treſpaſs-offering, the burnt-offering, and the meat-offering.

℣. 33. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, &c.] At the ſame time as the above laws were delivered concerning the leper, and the cleanſing of him, or however immediately upon that; the affair of the leproſy of houſes, being what belonged to the prieſt to examine into and cleanſe from: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 34. When ye be come into the land of Canaan, &c.] Which as yet they were not come to, being in the wilderneſs, and ſo the following law concerning the leproſy in houſes could not yet take place, they now dwelling in tents, and not in houſes: which I give to you for a poſſeſſion; the Lord had given it to Abraham, and his ſeed, long ago to be their inheritance, and now he was about to put them into the poſſeſſion of it, which they were to hold as their own under God, their ſovereign Lord and King: and I put the plague of leproſy in a houſe of the land of your poſſeſſion; by which it appears that this kind of leproſy was from the immediate hand of God, and was ſupernatural and miraculous, as the Jewiſh writers affirm[f]; nor is there any thing in common, or at leaſt in our parts of the world, that is anſwerable unto it; and from hence hence the ſame writers [g] conclude, that houſes of Gentiles are exempt from it, only the houſes of the Iſraelites in the land of Canaan had it; and they likewiſe except Jeruſalem, and ſay [h], that was not defiled with the plague of leproſy, as it is written, and I put the plague of leproſy in a houſe of the land of your poſſeſſion; for Jeruſalem was not divided among the tribes; and they ſuppoſe whenever it was put into any houſe, it was on account of ſome ſin or ſins committed by the owner; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, and there be found a man that builds his houſe with rapine and violence, then I'll put the plague, &c. though they commonly aſcribe it to evil ſpeaking, which they gather from the caſe of Miriam.

[c] Miſn. Negaim, c. 14. §. 11. 12. [d] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [e] Hilchot Mechoſre Capharah, c. 5. §. 9. [f] Maimonides, Abarbinel, Abraham Seba and others.

℣. 35. And he that owneth the houſe ſhall come, and tell the prieſt, &c.] As ſoon as he obſerves any ſign of leproſy in it, or which gives him a ſuſpicion of it: ſaying, it ſeemeth unto me there is as it were a plague in the houſe; he muſt not ſay expreſly there is one, how certain ſoever he may be of it, becauſe the matter muſt be determined by a prieſt: ſo runs the Jewiſh canon [i], he whoſe the houſe is comes and declares to the prieſt, ſaying, there appears to me as a plague in the houſe; and though he is a wiſe man, and knows that there is a plague certainly, he may not determine, and ſay, there appears to me a plague in the houſe, but there appears to me as it were a plague in the houſe; it looks like one, there is ſome reaſon to ſuſpect it.

℣. 36. Then the prieſt ſhall command that they empty the houſe, &c.] Clear it of all perſons and things; every body was obliged to go out of it; and all the furniture of it, all the houſhold goods in it were to be removed from it: before the prieſt go into it to ſee the plague, that all in the houſe be not made unclean; as would be the caſe ſhould the prieſt view it, and pronounce it unclean before the removal of them; agreeable to which is the Jewiſh tradition [k], before a prieſt comes to ſee the plague, not any thing in the houſe is defiled; but after he is come to ſee it, even bundles of ſticks, and of reeds, are defiled, which are not reckoned under the uncleanneſs to be removed: ſo that this was a kindneſs to the owner of the houſe, that his loſs might not be ſo great, as it otherwiſe would be, if he did not take care to get his goods out, previous to the inſpection of the prieſt: and afterwards the prieſt ſhall go in to ſee the houſe; to examine it, whether the ſigns of leproſy are in it.

℣. 37. And he ſhall look on the plague, &c.] That which is taken or ſuſpected to be one, being pointed unto by the owner of the houſe: if the plague be in the walls of the houſe; for there it chiefly was, if not ſolely; and from hence Gerſom infers, that it muſt be a walled houſe, and that it muſt have four walls, neither more nor fewer; and with this agrees the Miſnah [l], according to which it muſt be four-ſquare; the ſigns of which were, when it appeared, with hollow ſtrakes, greeniſh or reddiſh, which in ſight are lower then the wall: theſe ſigns agree with the other ſigns before given of leproſy in men and garments; the firſt, the hollow ſtrakes, which are explained by being lower in appearance than the wall, a ſort of corroſions or eatings into it, which made cavities in it, anſwer to the plague being deeper than the ſkin of the fleſh in men; and the colours greeniſh or reddiſh, or exceeding green or red, as Gerſhom, are the ſame with thoſe of the leproſy in clothes; and ſome ſuch like appearances are in ſalt-petre walls, or in walls eaten by ſaline and nitrous particles; and alſo by ſulphureous, oily and arſenical ones, as Scheuchzer obſerves [m], and are not only tending to ruin, but unhealthful, as if they had rather been eaten by a canker or ſpreading ulcer; who alſo ſpeaks of a foſſil, called in the German language ſteingalla, that is, the gall of ſtones, by which they are eaſily eaten into, becauſe of the vitriolic ſalt of the fire-ſtone, which for the moſt part goes along with that mineral, which is diſſolved by the moiſt air. Though this leproſy, in the walls of a houſe, ſeems not to have riſen from any natural cauſes, but was from the immediate hand of God; and there have been ſtrange diſeaſes, which have produced uncommon effects on houſes, and other things: in the times of Narſes is ſaid to be a great plague, eſpecially in the province of Liguria, and on a ſudden appeared certain marks and prints on houſes, doors, veſſels and clothes, which if they attempted to waſh off, appeared more and more [n].

℣. 38. Then the prieſt ſhall go out of the houſe, to the door of the houſe, &c.] Hereby ſignifying that it was not fit to be inhabited, and there ſtanding to ſee it ſhut up as follows: and ſhut up the houſe ſeven days; to obſerve what alteration would be made in that time, and which would ſooner be diſcovered in a houſe uninhabited.

℣. 39. And the prieſt ſhall come again the ſeventh day, and ſhall look, &c.] On the ſeventh day from his ſhutting of it up, he ſhall open it again, go into it, and obſerve in what condition it is: and behold, if the plague be ſpread in the walls of the houſe; the hollow ſtrakes are become deeper, or the coloured ſpots are become larger: ſpreading was always a ſign of leproſy, both in the bodies of men, and in garments.

℣. 40. Then the prieſt ſhall command that they take away the ſtones in which the plague is, &c.] In which there appeared any cavities, or the above colours, and theſe ſpreading: in order to put a ſtop thereunto, theſe ſtones were to be drawn or pulled out, as the word ſignifies, in ſuch manner as not to endanger the fall of the houſe, and two ſtones at leaſt were to be taken out; for, as Gerſom ſays, a houſe was not ſhut up unleſs the plague appeared on two ſtones: and they ſhall caſt them into an unclean place without the city; where dead carcaſes were laid, and dung, and filth of every ſort; and being laid in ſuch a place, it would be known that they were unclean, as Aben Ezra obſerves, and ſo would not be made uſe of for any purpoſe.

℣. 41. And he ſhall cauſe the houſe to be ſcraped within round about, &c.] All the walls on each ſide, and at each end, and every ſtone in them; which though they had no appearance on them, yet ſhould there be any infection in them, which as yet was not ſeen, it might be removed, and a ſpread prevented: and they ſhall pour out the duſt that they ſcrape off without the city, into an unclean place; the ſcrapings they were to put into ſome veſſel, and carry them thither, and pour them out, or into a cart, and there ſhoot them, that they might lie with other rubbiſh, and not be made uſe of any more.

℣. 42. And they ſhall take other ſtones, &c.] From elſewhere, ſuch as are ſound and whole: and put them

[g] Miſn. Negaim, c. 12. §. 1. Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [h] T. Bab. Eruvin, fol. 82. 2. Miſn. Negaim, c. 12. §. 4. Gerſom in loc. [i] Miſn ib. §. 5. Jarchi in loc. [k] Miſn. ibid. [l] Ib. §. 1, 2.
[m] Phyſica Sacra, vol. 3. p. 330, 331. [n] Warnefrid de Geſt. Longobard. l. 2. apud Scheuchzer. ib.

them in the place of theſe ſtones; ſuch as will exactly anſwer them, as to number and bigneſs, and ſo fill up the ſpace vacant by the removal of the other, and ſupport the building: and he ſhall take other morter, and plaſter the houſe; the maſter of the houſe was to do this, or take care that it was done; but others by the order of the prieſt, as they took away the tainted ſtones, put others in their room.

ver. 43. And if the plague come again, and break out in the houſe, &c.] In the above ſigns of it: after that he hath taken away the ſtones; which were infected, or ordered them to be taken away: and after he hath ſcraped the houſe; ſo that there ſeemed to be no remains of the plague: and after it is plaſtered; to prevent if poſſible any return of it, but in vain.

ver. 44. Then the prieſt ſhall come and look, &c.] On the ſeventh day of the ſecond week; though, according Maimonides [o], this was at the end of the third ſeven day, or on the 19th day from his firſt inſpection into it; the 7th day being reckoned for the laſt of the firſt week, and the firſt of the ſecond, and ſo on: and behold, if the plague be ſpread in the houſe; after all the above precaution is taken; it is a fretting leproſy in the houſe; like that in the garment, ch. xiii. 51: it is unclean; and ſo not to be inhabited.

ver. 45. And he ſhall break down the houſe, &c.] Order it to be pulled down, and demoliſhed entirely, that is, the prieſt ſhall give ſuch orders; but Gerſom thinks this was to be done by the owner of the houſe, and that he was to do it himſelf, and have no aſſociate with him in it: the ſtone of it, and the timber thereof, and all the morter of the houſe; and, according to the Jewiſh canons, a houſe was not defiled with the plague of leproſy, unleſs it had in it ſtones, and timber, and duſt, or earth; a houſe which had not ſtones, timber and duſt in it, and the plague appeared in it, even if any one after that brought in ſtones, timber and duſt, it was clean [p]: and he ſhall carry them forth out of the city into an unclean place; ſuch materials were not to be made uſe of to rebuild that houſe, or to be employed in the building of any other. This houſe may be an emblem of a viſible church of God on earth, which is often in ſcripture compared to an houſe, as that ſignifies both an edifice and a family, and is ſometimes called the houſe of the living God; and into which ſometimes the leproſy of immorality and prophaneneſs gets and ſpreads, or of errors and hereſies, which creep in unawares, ſpread themſelves gradually, and ſometimes very faſt, and eat as do a canker, and are very troubleſome and defiling; and which God permits to enter in, that they which are approved might be made manifeſt: now when this is the caſe, or there is any appearance of it, the prieſts, the miniſters of the Lord, are to be told of it, who are to examine into it, and rebuke ſharply, as the caſe requires; and care is to be taken, that the infection ſpread not; the tainted ſtones, immoral or heretical perſons, are to be removed from the communion of the church, and others to be put in their room, as may preſent; ſuch as are dug out of the common quarry of nature, and ſeparated from the reſt of the world, and are hewn and ſquared by the Spirit and grace of God, and are become lively ſtones; ſuch are to be added to the church for the ſupport and increaſe of it. Sharp reproofs are to be given to thoſe who are incorrigible, which may be ſignified by the ſcraping of the houſe; and forgiveneſs, tenderneſs, and love that covers a multitude of ſins, are to be ſhewn to thoſe who truly repent, of which plaſtering may be an emblem; but if after all, the above diſorders in principle and practice ſpread, and they appear to be incurable, then the houſe is pulled down, the church-ſtate or candleſtick is removed out of its place. And this may be illuſtrated in two inſtances, firſt in the Jewiſh church, which is ſometimes called the houſe of Iſrael, and in which great corruptions prevailed, eſpecially in the times of Chriſt, and his apoſtles; and all means of reformation then being ineffectual, it was utterly deſtroyed, their eccleſiaſtical ſtate, and all the ordinances of it; the temple, the houſe of God, was demoliſhed, and not one ſtone left upon another, Matt. xxiv. 2. and next in the church of Rome, once a church of God, a temple of his, where antichriſt roſe up and ſat, and has by him been over-ſpread with the leproſy of immorality, falſe doctrine, ſuperſtitious and idolatrous worſhip; and at times God has been emptying it, or removing his own people out of it, and will do ſo again before the utter deſtruction of it, which is haſtening on; when it will be utterly demoliſhed, as Babylon its emblem was, ſo that a ſtone of it ſhall not be taken, either for foundations or for a corner, Jer. li. 26. This alſo may be applied to the earthly houſes of our tabernacles, in which the leproſy of ſin is ſo deeply rooted, that until they are diſſolved, it will never be removed, notwithſtanding all the means made of uſe for the mortification of the deeds of the body.

ver. 46. Moreover, he that goeth into the houſe all the while it is ſhut up, &c.] The utmoſt of which were three weeks, as Jarchi obſerves; during the time a houſe was ſhut up, no man might enter it: if he did, he ſhall be unclean until the evening; might not have any converſation with men until the evening was come, and he had waſhed himſelf; nay, according to the Miſnah [q], if a clean perſon thruſt in his head, or the greateſt part of his body, into an unclean houſe, he was defiled; and whoever entered into a leprous houſe, and his clothes are on his ſhoulder, and his ſandals (on his feet) and his rings on his hands, he and they are unclean immediately; and if he has his clothes on, and his ſandals on his feet, and his rings on his hands, he is immediately defiled, and they are clean.

ver. 47. And he that lieth in the houſe, ſhall waſh his clothes, &c.] Which is more than bare entrance into it, and might be ſuppoſed the more to be infected by it, and therefore obliged to the waſhing of himſelf, and his garments: and he that eateth in the houſe ſhall waſh his clothes; if he ſtayed no longer than whilſt he eat half a piece of wheaten bread he was clean, but not if he ſtayed ſo long as to eat a like quantity of barley bread, and ſat down and eat it with food [r].

ver. 48. And if the prieſt ſhall come in, and look upon it, &c.] That is, on the ſeventh day of the ſecond week of its being ſhut up: and behold, the plague hath not ſpread in the houſe, after the houſe was plaſtered; ſee ver. 42: then the prieſt ſhall pronounce the houſe clean; fit to be inhabited, and ſo no more to be ſhut up, but free for uſe as before: becauſe the plague is healed; the infection being wholly [o] Hilchot Tumaat Tzarat, c. 15. §. 1, 2.

[p] Miſn. Negaim, c. 12. §. 2.
[q] Ib. c. 13. §. 8, 9.
[r] Ibid.

wholly removed by taking out the ſtones, ſcraping and plaſtering the houſe, and ſo an entire ſtop put to the ſpread of it.

℣. 49. And he ſhall take to cleanſe the houſe, &c.] The prieſt, or by his fellow-prieſt, as Aben Ezra, though ſome interpret it of the maſter of the houſe: from hence to the end of ℣. 53. an account is given of the manner of cleanſing a leprous houſe, which is the ſame with that of cleanſing a leprous man, ſee the notes on ℣. 4, 5, 6, 7. The birds here indeed are not deſcribed as alive and clean, but both are plainly implied; and the houſe is ſaid to be cleanſed with the blood of the ſlain bird, as well as with the living bird; and it was the upper door-poſt of the houſe which was ſprinkled ſeven times with it, but there were no ſacrifices offered; in this caſe, as in the cleanſing of the leper, the atonement for it was made by the other rites, which were ſufficient to render it habitable again, and free for uſe, either of the owner or any other perſon.

℣ 54. This is the law for all manner of plague of leproſy and ſcall.] The leproſy in general in the bodies of men, and of that in particular, which was on the head and beard, and went by the name of the ſcall, ch. xiii. 29—37. In this and the two following verſes is a recapitulation of the ſeveral laws and rules relating to leproſy of all kinds, delivered in this and the preceding chapter.

℣. 55. And for the leproſy of a garment, &c.] Of which ſee ch. xiii. 47—59: and of an houſe; largely treated of in this chapter, ℣. 34—48.

℣. 56. And for a riſing, and for a ſcab, and for a bright ſpot.] Which were three ſorts of leproſy in the ſkin of man's fleſh; ſee ch. xiii. 2. and the notes there.

℣. 57. To teach when it is unclean, and when it is clean, &c.] A man, his garment, or his houſe; for it reſpects them all, as Aben Ezra obſerves; which was the buſineſs of the prieſts to teach men, and they by the above laws and rules were inſtructed how to judge of caſes, and by which they were capable of pronouncing perſons or things clean or unclean: this is the law of leproſy; reſpecting every ſort of it, and which is very remarkably enlarged upon.

CHAP. XV.

THIS chapter treats of uncleanneſs by iſſues in men and women; in men, a running iſſue, ℣. 1, 2, 3. which defiles him, and every thing he touches, or that touches him or them, ℣. 4—12. the cleanſing from which is directed to, ℣. 13, 14, 15. and ſeed flowing from him, ℣. 16, 17, 18. in women, their ordinary courſes, ℣. 19—24. or extraordinary ones, ℣. 25—27. and the law for the cleanſing of them, ℣. 28—31. and a recapitulation of the whole, ℣. 32, 33.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, &c.] Aaron is ſpoken to as well as Moſes, becauſe ſome of theſe purifications, after mentioned, depended on the prieſt, as the affair of profluvious men and women, as Gerſom obſerves: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] From whence we learn, ſays the above-mentioned writer, that theſe uncleanneſſes were only uſual among the children of Iſrael, not among the Gentiles; that is, the laws reſpecting them were only binding on the one, and not on the other [t]: when any man; in the Hebrew text it is, a man, a man, which the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes, a young man, and an old man: hath a running iſſue out of his fleſh; what phyſicians call a gonorrhœa, and we, as in the margin of our bibles, the running of the reins: becauſe of his iſſue, he is unclean; in a ceremonial ſenſe, though it ariſes from a natural cauſe; but if not from any criminal one, from a debauch, but from a ſtrain, or ſome ſuch like thing, the man was not defiled, otherwiſe he was; the Targum of Jonathan is, "if he ſees it three times he is unclean;" ſo the Miſnah [u].

℣. 3. And this ſhall be his uncleanneſs in his iſſue, &c.] Or the ſign of it, by which it may be judged whether he is unclean by it or no: whether his fleſh run with his iſſue; or ſalivates, or emits a flow of matter like a ſaliva, or in the manner of ſpittle: or his fleſh be ſtopped from his iſſue; with it, or becauſe of it; becauſe it is groſs, as Jarchi ſays, it cannot come forth freely: it is his uncleanneſs; whether it be one or the other, he is reckoned, on account of it, an unclean perſon. This was an emblem of the corruption and vitioſity of nature, and of all evil things that are in or flow out of the evil heart of man, which are defiling to him; ſee Matt. xv. 18, 19.

℣. 4. Every bed whereon he lieth that hath the iſſue, is unclean, &c.] Which he conſtantly makes uſe of; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, which is peculiar to him, and appointed and appropriated for him to lie upon. Jarchi ſays, every bed that is fit to lie upon, though it is appropriated to another ſervice; but, he adds, the meaning is, which he ſhall lie upon (or continue to lie upon); for it is not ſaid, which he hath laid upon, but which he lieth upon, and is uſed by him continually; according to the Miſnah [w], a man that has an iſſue defiles a bed five ways, ſo as to defile a man, and to defile garments; ſtanding, ſitting, lying, hanging and leaning: and every thing whereon he ſitteth ſhall be unclean; which is appropriated to ſit upon; and ſo the Targum, as before, what is his proper peculiar ſeat, what he is uſed to ſit upon, and is fit for that purpoſe: and it is obſerved by ſome Jewiſh writers [x], that a veſſel that is not fit to ſit upon is excluded, as if a man was to turn up a buſhel, or any other meaſure, to ſit upon it; ſee Tit. i. 15.

℣. 5. And whoſoever toucheth his bed, &c.] Is unclean. According to the Miſnah [y], a bed defiles a man ſeven ways, ſo as to defile garments; ſtanding, ſitting, lying, hanging and leaning, and by touching and by bearing: he ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water; in forty ſeahs of water, as the Targum of Jonathan: and be unclean until the even; be unfit for converſation with other men till the even, tho' both his body and clothes are waſhed.

℣. 6. And he that ſitteth on any thing whereon he ſat that hath the iſſue, &c.] Shall be unclean, even though he does not touch it. Jarchi ſays, though there ſhould be, as he adds, ten things or veſſels one upon another, they all defile becauſe of ſitting, and ſo by lying: ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe him-

[t] So Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Edaiot. c. 5. §. 1.
[u] Zabim, c. 2. §. 4.
[w] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Niddah, c 6. §. 3.
[x] Zabim, c. 1. §. 2. Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.
[y] Zabim, ut ſupra.

himself in water, and be unclean until the even; as in the preceding case.

℣. 7. And he that toucheth the flesh of him that hath the issue, &c.] Shall also be unclean, even any part of his flesh, or member of his body: the Jewish canon is [y], he that toucheth one that has an issue, or he that has an issue touches him, or any one moves him that has an issue, or he moves him, defiles food, and drink, and washing vessels by touching, but not by bearing; and particularly touching the issue itself is instanced in, and such a man's spittle, &c. are defiled: shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even; as before.

℣. 8. And if he that hath the issue spit upon him that is clean, &c.] Not purposely, which is not usual for a man to do, and whenever it is done, nothing is more affronting; but accidentally, when, as Aben Ezra expresses it, he spreads his spittle, and it falls upon a clean person; and under this, as Gersom observes, is comprehended whatever is brought up by coughing, as phlegm, or flows from the nose, or is pressed out of it; and so Maimonides [z]: and this may denote all corrupt communication which proceeds out of the mouth of evil men, whether immoral or heretical, which not only defiles the man himself but those he converses with; for evil communication corrupts good manners: then he shall wash his clothes, &c. as in the foregoing instances.

℣. 9. And what saddle soever he siteth upon that hath the issue, &c.] When he rides upon any beast, horse, ass, or camel, whatever is put upon the creature, and he sits upon it, the saddle, and whatever appertains to it, the housing and girdle: shall be unclean; and not fit for another to use, but be defiling to him as follows.

℣. 10. And whosoever toucheth any thing that was under him shall be unclean until the even, &c.] Either when lying along, or sitting, or riding, as in ℣. 4, 6, 9. various are the traditions of the Jews concerning these things; if one that has an issue and a clean person sit together, in a ship, or on a beam, or ride together on a beast, though their garments don't touch, they are unclean, &c. [a] and he that beareth any of those things shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even; that carries any of the above things from place to place, as his bed, his seat, his saddle, or any thing on which he has lain, sat, or rode.

℣. 11. And whomsoever he toucheth that hath the issue, &c.] Not only he that touched him that had the issue, but whomsoever, and indeed whatsoever he touched, as the Targum of Jonathan, the Septuagint, and Arabic versions, were unclean; see the note on ℣. 4; and hath not rinsed his hands in water; which is to be understood, not of the man that is touched, but of him that toucheth; and is interpreted by the Jewish writers, generally of bathing the whole body; according to Aben Ezra, the simple sense is, every clean person, whom he that hath an issue touches and hath rinsed his hands, he is indeed unclean, but not his garments; and if his hands are not rinsed his garments are unclean, and this is as he that touches all that is under him; wherefore it follows: he shall wash his clothes, &c. that is, if a man is touched, as the Targum of Jonathan, and not a thing, as directed and prescribed in the above cases instanced in; all which are designed to instruct men to abstain from conversation with impure persons in doctrine and practice.

℣. 12. And the vessel of earth that he toucheth which hath an issue shall be broken, &c.] That it might not be made use of afterwards; which was ordered, that they might be careful what they touched who were in such circumstances: according to Gersom an earthen vessel received no uncleanness but from the middle, though he owns the law does not distinguish between the middle and the outside; wherefore Jarchi is of opinion, that if the back or outside of it was touched, it was unclean, and to be broken: and every vessel of wood shall be rinsed in water; and after that be used: what should be the reason why an earthen vessel, defiled by touching should be broken, and a wooden vessel defiled in the same way should not, but be rinsed and cleansed, when an earthen vessel might as well be rinsed and fit for use as that, is not easy to say; it depended upon the will of the lawgiver: according to Ainsworth, the one may signify the destruction of reprobate persons, the other, the cleansing of penitent sinners.

℣. 13. And when he that hath an issue is cleansed of his issue, &c.] That is, it is ceased from him, as the Targum of Jonathan, and Jarchi explain it; for otherwise, according to the ceremonial law, he was not yet cleansed, until he had done every thing next prescribed; but when he perceived there was an entire stop put to his disorder: then he shall number to himself seven days for his cleansing; by which time it would appear, whether he was thoroughly rid of it or no; and these seven days, as Jarchi observes, must be seven pure days, quite free from pollution, and continued in a constant course, without interruption; for, as Gersom says, if he saw any impurity in any one of these days it did not come into the account; nay, according to Maimonides [b], he must begin to number again from the day of the last appearance: and wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in running water; typical of the fountain opened in Christ to wash in for sin and uncleanness, even the fountain of his blood, which cleanses from all sin; and in which both the persons and garments of the saints are washed and made white: and shall be clean; in a ceremonial sense; as all that are washed from their sins in the blood of Christ, are clean in a spiritual and evangelical sense.

℣. 14. And on the eighth day, &c.] Having on the seventh done as before directed: he shall take to him two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons; of his own, or purchase them; this was the meanest offering that was brought, and of the least expence, and which, in other cases, the poorer sort were allowed to bring, but here it was the offering of poor and rich: and come before the Lord unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; not into the tabernacle, where he was not admitted till the sacrifice was offered, and atonement made; but he was to stand at the door of the tabernacle, at the eastern gate; and so fronting the west, where stood the holy of holies, the place of the divine majesty, he is said to come before the Lord, presenting himself to him to be cleansed: and give them unto the priest; the two doves or pigeons, to be offered for him according to the usual rites.

℣. 15. And the priest shall offer them, the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, &c.] As in the the case of a poor lying-in woman,

2

[y] Zabim, c. 5. §. 1, 7. c. 4. §. 4. 5. 7.

[z] Hilchot Metame Mishcab, c. 1. §. 16.

[a] Misn. Zabin, c. 3. §. 1. &

[b] Hilchot Mechosre Capharah, c. 3. §. 1.

man, and of a poor leper, ch. xii. 8. and xiv. 22. and the prieſt ſhall make atonement for him before the Lord, for his iſſue; which, though not in itſelf ſinful, yet might be occaſioned by ſin, for which the atonement was made: or however, it was a ceremonial uncleanneſs, and therefore a ceremonial expiation muſt be made for it, typical of the atonement by the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt, by which all kind of ſin is expiated and removed.

℣. 16. And if any man's ſeed of copulation go out from him, &c.] Not in lawful cohabitation, nor voluntarily, but involuntarily, as Aben Ezra obſerves; not through any diſorder, which came by an accident, or in any criminal way, but through a dream, or any luſtful imagination; what is commonly called nocturnal pollution [c]: then he ſhall waſh all his fleſh in water, and be unclean until the even; and ſo the Egyptian prieſts, when it happened that they were defiled by a dream, they immediately purified themſelves in a laver [d]; ſo the Jewiſh prieſts did when the like happened to them aſleep in the temple [e]; ſee Deut. xxiii. 10, 11.

℣. 17. And every garment, and every ſkin, &c.] Or that is made of ſkin, which a man wears, or lies upon, ſee ch. xiii. 48. whereon is the ſeed of copulation; or on any other, for, as Gerſom ſays, there is the ſame law concerning the reſt of veſſels, ſeeing, this is a principal uncleanneſs and defiles veſſels; and perhaps the law makes mention of theſe, becauſe it is more apt to be found on them: ſhall be waſhed with water, and be unclean until the even; ſee Jude, ℣. 23.

℣. 18. The woman alſo with whom man ſhall lie with ſeed of copulation, &c.] It ſeems to reſpect any congreſs of a man and woman, whether in fornication or adultery, or lawful marriage, and particularly the latter; for though marriage is honourable and holy, and carnal copulation in itſelf lawful, yet ſuch is the ſinfulneſs of nature, that as no act is performed without pollution, ſo neither that of generation, and by which the corruption of nature is propagated, and therefore required a ceremonial cleanſing: they ſhall both bathe themſelves in water, and be unclean until the even; ſo Herodotus [f] reports, that as often as a Babylonian man lay with his wife, he had uſed to ſit by conſecrated incenſe, and the woman did the ſame; and in the morning they were both waſhed, and did not touch any veſſel before they had waſhed themſelves; and he ſays, the Arabians did the like; and the ſame hiſtorian relates [g] of the Egyptians, that they never go into their temples from their wives unwaſhed; ſee Exod. xix. 15. 1 Sam. xxi. 4.

℣. 19. And if a woman have an iſſue, &c.] Having finiſhed, as Aben Ezra obſerves, what was to be ſaid of the male, now the ſcripture begins with the female, whoſe iſſue, of a different ſort is thus deſcribed: and her iſſue in her fleſh be blood; or, blood be her iſſue in her fleſh; not in any part of her, but in that which by an Euphemiſm is ſo called, in the ſame ſenſe as the phraſe is uſed of men, ℣. 2. and ſo it diſtinguiſhes it from any flow of blood elſewhere, as a bleeding at the noſe, &c. ſhe ſhall be put apart ſeven days; not out of the camp, nor out of the houſe, but might not go into the houſe of God: whoſoever toucheth her ſhall be unclean until the even; the ſame as one that had touched a man that had an iſſue, ℣. 7. the pollution of the one reached to the ſame things as that of the other; and ſo in the Miſnah [h], they are put together, and the ſame is aſcribed to the touch of the one as of the other; it may be underſtood of every thing as well as of every perſon.

℣. 20. And every thing that ſhe lieth upon in her ſeparation ſhall be unclean, &c.] During her being apart from her huſband, with whom ſhe might be, and do all offices for him, but not lie with him; and whatſoever ſhe lay upon during this time, bed or couch, and the clothes upon them, were unclean: every thing alſo that ſhe ſitteth upon ſhall be unclean; chair, ſtool, &c. as is the caſe of a man, ℣. 4.

℣. 21. And whoſoever toucheth her bed, &c.] The ſame thing that is ſaid of a profluvious man, and ſo in the two following verſes.

℣. 22. And whoſoever toucheth any thing that ſhe ſat upon, &c.] Which was appropriated to her to ſit upon, as the Targum of Jonathan, which was her proper and peculiar ſeat, what ſhe uſually ſat upon; ſuch were obliged to waſh their clothes and bathe, as in all the above caſes.

℣. 23. And if it be on her bed, or on any thing whereon ſhe ſitteth, &c.] That is, if any perſon or thing ſhould be upon her bed or ſeat; a veſſel on her bed, or a veſſel upon a veſſel, as Aben Ezra expreſſes it: when he toucheth it; that perſon or thing that ſhould be on her bed or ſeat, as well as touch her bed or ſeat: ſhall be unclean until the even; in a ceremonial ſenſe; ſo defiling was a woman in ſuch circumſtances, and to whom the ſcriptures often compare unclean perſons and things: and Pliny [i] ſpeaks of menſtrues as very infectious, or worſe, to various creatures and things in a natural way.

℣. 24. And if any man lie with her at all, &c.] Not preſumptuouſly but ignorantly, as Aben Ezra obſerves; for he was guilty of cutting off, that lay with her wilfully, Lev. xx. 18. and her flowers be upon her; or, her ſeparation [k], her monthly courſes not being ceaſed: he ſhall be unclean ſeven days; and be excluded from all converſation civil and religious: and all the bed whereon ſhe lieth ſhall be unclean; that and every thing upon it; and this uncleanneſs alſo laſted ſeven days, as Aben Ezra notes, and defiled others, though it is not written.

℣. 25. And if a woman have an iſſue of her blood many days out of the time of her ſeparation, &c.] Not an ordinary but an extraordinary one, not within that time, but out of it, and which continued three days at leaſt; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, and ſometimes many years; as the poor woman Chriſt cured, which ſhe had had twelve years, Matt. ix. 20. ſee the note there: or if it run beyond the time of her ſeparation; beyond the ſeven days of her ſeparation, and ſo out of the uſual way and time of it; whereby it appears to be ſomewhat extraordinary and unuſual: all the days of the iſſue of her uncleanneſs ſhall be as the days of her ſeparation; all the while it was upon her, be it ever ſo many days or years, ſhe was kept apart from her huſband, and in all reſpects in the ſame condition and circumſtances, as in the ſeven days of her ſeparation becauſe of her monthly courſes: ſhe ſhall be unclean; as long as it is upon her, and neither be

[c] —— & noctem flumine purgas. Perſ. Satyr. 2.
[d] Chæremon. apud Porphyr. de abſtinentia, l. 4. c. 7.
[e] Miſn. Tamid. c. 1. §. 1. c. 5. §. 6. 7.
[f] Clio, ſive, l. 1. c. 198.
[g] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 64.
[h] Zabim,
[i] Nat. Hiſt. l. 7. c. 15.
[k] נדתה menſtruum ejus, Pagninus, Montanus; ſeparatio ejus, Druſius.

be admitted to her husband's bed, nor to the house of God, which made her condition a very deplorable one.

℣. 26. Every bed whereon she lieth all the days of her issue shall be unto her as the bed of her separation, &c.] As defiled and as defiling as that, ℣. 20, 21. and whatsoever she sitteth upon shall be unclean, as the uncleanness of her separation; as such were when she was in that condition, see ℣. 20.

℣. 27. And whosoever toucheth those things shall be unclean, &c.] Her bed and seat; the Septuagint version is, that toucheth her, see ℣. 19. and shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even, let it be observed, that in all the above passages, where it is said, he shall bathe himself in water, the Targum of Jonathan adds, in forty seahs or pecks of water; for this was done by dipping the body all over.

℣. 28. But if she be cleansed of her issue, &c.] The disease is healed, or a stop is put to it; there are no signs of it remaining: then she shall number to herself seven days; from the time she observed it to cease: and after that she shall be clean; having bathed herself according to the usual manner of unclean persons, for their cleansing; when she would be fit to be admitted to her husband, though not as yet into the tabernacle, until she had offered her offering next directed to.

℣. 29. And on the eighth day, &c.] From the cessation of her issue, and the healing of it, at least from the time she began to number for her cleansing: she shall take unto her two turtles, or two young pigeons; the same as the man that had an issue was obliged to bring. Now this is to be understood not of a woman that had an ordinary issue, or her monthly courses; for this would have been both troublesome and expensive to have brought every month, but of a woman that had laboured under an extraordinary one; though some think every menstruous woman was obliged to this offering: and bring them unto the priest, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; whither the man that had an issue brought his, ℣. 14. see the note there.

℣. 30. And the priest shall offer the one for a sin-offering, &c.] As in the case of a man that had an issue, the offerings of one and the other were the same, and for the same purpose; there being a legal uncleanness in their case, atonement must be made by sacrifice, typical of the atonement of Christ, who by himself has purged our sins. The design of these several laws concerning uncleanness by issues, was to set forth the filthiness of sin arising from the corruption of human nature; particularly the pollution of fleshly lusts, and the necessity of purification from them by the grace of God, and blood of Christ, and of holiness of heart and life, in order to a near approach to God, particularly in public worship, as the next words suggest.

℣. 31. Thus shall ye separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness, &c.] Or because of it, and whilst they are in it, as from other persons, even their nearest relations, and from the house of God, as the next clause shews; or teach them, by observing the above laws and rules, to separate themselves, and that they be careful and cautious to keep themselves apart whilst in such impurities; and the children of Israel are only made mention of, because these laws are only binding upon them, with their proselytes and servants, free or not free [l], but not upon Gentiles; see the note on ℣. 2: that they die not in their uncleanness, when they defile my tabernacle that is among them; from whence it appears, that men and women, in the above circumstances, might not go into the tabernacle; and it was chiefly to prevent their access to it, that these laws were given, for the greater reverence and honour of it; and that for such persons to enter there was a pollution of it, and the punishment was cutting off, or death; and for one to die in his impurity without purification and sacrifice, was a dreadful thing, and to be deprecated, and to be guarded against by an observance of the above laws. But the Jews now say [m], that forasmuch as the reason of these precepts was, because such persons were forbid to enter into the temple, that being destroyed, all these precepts of uncleanness are ceased also.

℣. 32. This is the law of him that hath an issue, &c.] In this and the following verse is a recapitulation of the several laws in this chapter, as of a man that has a gonorrhœa: and of him whose seed goeth from him, and is defiled therewith; involuntarily, that suffers a nocturnal pollution.

℣. 33. And of her that is sick of her flowers, &c.] Her monthly courses, for these are a sickness, ch. xx. 18. and make a woman languid and faint, as the word is rendered, Lam. i. 13. or to be in pain [n] as some render it here; and pains are reckoned among the signs of them by the Misnic doctors [o]: and of him that hath an issue, of the man, and of the woman; of both, whether the one or the other: and of him that lieth with her that is unclean; though her own husband.

CHAP. XVI.

THIS chapter treats of the day of atonement, and of the rites, sacrifices and services of it, directs when Aaron should come into the holy of holies, ℣. 1, 2. and in what habit he should then appear, and with what offerings both for himself, and for the people, ℣. 3—10. and that having slain his own sin-offering, and that for the people, he should offer incense before the mercy-seat, and sprinkle that with the blood of both, ℣. 11—15. and by these offerings make atonement for the holy place, the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, ℣. 16—19. and having done this, he was to take the live goat, lay his hands on it, confess over it, and put upon it all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and then send it away by a fit man into the wilderness, ℣. 20, 21, 22. upon which he was to put off his linen garments, wash his flesh, and put them on again, and offer the burnt-offering for himself, and for the people, ℣. 23, 24, 25. also he that let go the goat, and he that carried and burnt the sin-offerings without the camp, were to wash themselves and clothes also, ℣. 26, 27, 28. the observance of this day, once a year, which was on the 10th of the 7th month, as a day of affliction and atonement, was to be a statute for ever to the children of Israel, ℣. 29—34.

℣.

[l] Misn. Zabim, c. 2. §. 1.
[n] והדווה & dolentis, Montanus.
[m] Leo Modena's History of rites, customs, &c. of the present Jews, par. 1. c. 8.
[o] Misn. Niddah, c. 9. §. 8.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes after the death of the two ſons of Aaron, &c.] That is, either immediately after their death, and ſo this chapter would have ſtood in its natural order next to the 10th; or elſe after the above laws concerning uncleanneſs on various accounts were delivered out, deſigned to prevent the people entring into the tabernacle defiled, whereby they would have incurred the penalty of death; wherefore, as Aben Ezra obſerves, after the Lord had given cautions to the Iſraelites, that they might not die, he bid Moſes to caution Aaron alſo, that he might not die as his ſons died; theſe were Nadab and Abihu: when they offered before the Lord, and died; offered ſtrange fire, and died by flaming fire, as the Targum of Jonathan; or fire ſent down from heaven, as Gerſom, by lightning; ſee ch. x. 1, 2.

℣. 2. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, ſpeak unto Aaron thy brother, &c.] Who was the high-prieſt; and what is here ſaid to him was binding on all high-prieſts in ſucceſſion from him: that he come not at all times into the holy place; or holineſs [p], which was holineſs itſelf, or the moſt holy place, as diſtinguiſhed from that which was ſometimes called the holy place, where ſtood the incenſe-altar, the ſhew-bread-table, and the candleſtick, into which Aaron went every day, morning and evening, to do the ſervice there enjoined him; but into the holy of holies here deſcribed, as appears by the after deſcription of it, he might not go at all times, or every day, or when he pleaſed, only once a year on the day of atonement; though, according to the Jewiſh writers, he went in four times on that day, firſt to offer incenſe, a ſecond time to ſprinkle the blood of the bullock, a third time to ſprinkle the blood of the goat, and a fourth time to fetch out the cenſer; and if he entered a fifth time, he was worthy of death [q]. Some have obſerved [r], that this reſpected Aaron only, and not Moſes; that though Aaron might not go in when he pleaſed, and only at a time fixed, yet Moſes might at any time, and conſult the Lord upon the mercy-ſeat, ſee Exod. xxv. 22. Pauſanias makes mention of ſeveral heathen temples which were opened but once a year, as the temples of Hades Dindymene, and Eurymone [s], and particularly the temple of Minerva, into which only a prieſt entered once a year [t]; which perhaps was in imitation of the Jewiſh high-prieſt: within the vail, before the mercy-ſeat, which is upon the ark; this is a deſcription of the holy place, into which the high-prieſt might not go at any time, or at pleaſure; it was within the vail that divided between the holy place, and the moſt holy, where ſtood the mercy-ſeat, which was a lid or covering to the ark, at the two ends of which were the cherubim, the ſeat of the divine majeſty; which was a type of heaven for its holineſs, being the habitation of the holy God, Father, Son and Spirit, and of holy angels, and holy men, and where only holy ſervices are performed; and for its inviſibility, where dwells the inviſible God, where Chriſt in our nature is at preſent unſeen by us, and the glories of which are not as yet to be beheld; only faith, hope and love enter within the vail, and have to do with unſeen objects there; and alſo for what are in it, as the ark and mercy-ſeat, types of Chriſt, through whom mercy is communicated in a way of juſtice, he being the propitiation and the fulfilling end of the law for righteouſneſs. And this caution was given to Aaron, that he die not; by appearing in the preſence of God without his leave and order: for I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy-ſeat; this one would think ſhould be a reaſon why he ſhould not die, when he came into the moſt holy place, becauſe there was the mercy-ſeat, and Jehovah on it; and beſides the cloud of incenſe on it, he went in with, for ſo many underſtand by the cloud, the cloud of incenſe: thus Aben Ezra ſays, the ſenſe is, that he ſhould not enter but with incenſe, which would make a cloud, and ſo the glory not be ſeen, leſt he ſhould die: and Jarchi obſerves, that the Midraſh, or the more myſtical and ſubtle ſenſe is, he ſhall not go in but with the cloud of incenſe on the day of atonement; but the more ſimple meaning, or plain ſenſe of the words is, as the ſame writer notes, that whereas he did continually appear there in the pillar of cloud; and becauſe his Shekinah or glorious Majeſty is revealed there, he is cautioned not to uſe himſelf to go in, i. e. at any time; with which agrees the Targum of Jonathan, "for in my cloud the glory of my She-"kinah, or divine Majeſty ſhall be revealed upon "the mercy-ſeat." And this being the caſe, ſuch a glory being there, though wrapt up in a cloud and thick darkneſs, it was dangerous to enter but by divine order.

℣. 3. Thus ſhall Aaron come into the holy place, &c.] The moſt holy place; and this was after he had offered the daily ſacrifice of the morning, and had performed the reſt of the ſervice then done, as Gerſom obſerves; ſuch as burning the incenſe and trimming the lamps, for no offering preceded the daily ſacrifice: with a young bullock for a ſin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering; which were both for himſelf and his family; and ſuch were the weakneſs, imperfection and inſufficiency of the levitical prieſthood, and prieſts, that they were obliged firſt to offer for their own ſins, and then for the ſins of the people: the meaning is not, as Aben Ezra ſays, that he ſhould bring the bullock into the holy place, only that he ſhould firſt give of his own a bullock for a ſin-offering, to atone for himſelf, and for the prieſts; nor could it be the body of the bullock he brought, only the blood of it into the moſt holy place, where he entered not without blood, firſt with the blood of the bullock, and then with the blood of the goat; for the body of the bullock for a ſin-offering, was burnt without the camp, and the body of the ram for the burnt-offering, was burnt upon the altar of burnt-offering; ſee Heb. ix. 7, 12.

℣. 4. He ſhall put on the holy linen coat, &c.] Which he wore in common with other prieſts: and he ſhall have the linen breeches upon his fleſh; upon thoſe parts of his body, which are more ſecret, and leſs honourable fleſh, meaning the ſame, as in ch. xv. 2: and ſhall be girded with a linen girdle, and with the linen mitre ſhall he be attired; as the other prieſts were; which were an emblem of the purity and holineſs of Chriſt, whereby he became a proper and ſuitable high-prieſt, to make atonment for ſin, he having none in himſelf; and of his mean eſtate of humiliation, afflictions and ſufferings, whereby he expiated ſin, and made reconciliation for iniquity; the high-prieſt on the day of atonement not appearing in his golden garments, as the Jews call others worn by him, becauſe there were ſome ſome gold in them, as being unſuitable to a day of affliction and humiliation, but in garments of flax, a meaner dreſs; and which alſo were an emblem of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and his ſaints, called fine linen, clean and white; which is wrought out by him as the author it, is in him as the ſubject of it, and worn by him as the Lord our righteouſneſs, and in which, as the juſtified head and repreſentative of his people, he entered into heaven to ſhew it to his Father, and plead it with him: theſe are holy garments; and to be uſed only in ſacred ſervice: there were four more holy garments beſides theſe worn by the high-prieſt, as the breaſt-plate, the ephod, the robe, and the plate of gold, and which alſo were put on at certain times on this day, as at the offering of the morning and evening ſacrifice, and at the ſlaying and offering of the ſeveral creatures on this day [u], ſee ℣. 23, 24: therefore ſhall he waſh his fleſh in water, and ſo put them on; by dipping, and that in forty ſeahs of water, as the Targum of Jonathan; and this he did as often as he changed his garments, which were no leſs than five times on this day. The tradition is [w], no man goes into the court for ſervice, even tho' clean, until he has dipped himſelf; the high-prieſt dips five times, and ſanctifies, i. e. waſhes his hands and feet ten times on that day, and all are done in the holy place, over the houſe of Parvah, excepting this only, that is, firſt here: Jarchi on the text obſerves, on this day, he (the high prieſt) is bound to dipping at every change, and five times he changes, and to two waſhings of his hands and feet at the laver: this waſhing may be either an emblem of Chriſt's baptiſm, which he ſubmitted to before he entered on his public miniſtry, and was by dipping; or rather, of his being cleared, acquitted, and juſtified from all ſin, upon his reſurrection from the dead, after he had made atonement for it, and before his entrance into heaven; as he had no ſin of his own he needed not the waſhing of regeneration, or the water of ſanctifying grace to be ſprinkled on him, to cleanſe him from it: but inaſmuch as he had ſin imputed to him, and which he took upon him, to make atonement for, it was proper and neceſſary, when he had made it, that he ſhould be juſtified in the Spirit, that ſo he might enter into heaven without ſin imputed, as he will appear without it when he comes a ſecond time.

[p] אל קדיש ad ſanctitatem, Pagninus, Montanus. [q] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Celim, c. 1. §. 9.
[r] Maimon. in Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 11. §. 1. So Tikkune Zohar, correct. 18. fol. 28. 1. [s] Eliac 2. ſive, l. 6. p. 392. Bœotica, ſive, l. 9. p. 578. Arcadica, ſive, l. 8. p. 522. [t] Ib. Arcadica, p. 531.

℣. 5. And he ſhall take of the congregation of the children of Iſrael, &c.] With whom only the high prieſt had to do on the day of atonement; as Chriſt our high prieſt has only with the Iſrael of God, the elect, given him by the father, for whom he offered up himſelf, and for whoſe ſins he made reconciliation: two kids of the goats for a ſin-offering; the one of which was killed, and the other let go alive, and both were but one offering, typical of Chriſt in both his natures, divine and human, united in one perſon; and who was made ſin, and became a ſin-offering for his people: and one ram for a burnt-offering; a type of Chriſt, mighty to ſave, this creature being a ſtrong one; and of his dolorous ſufferings, this offering being burnt; and of God's gracious acceptance of his ſacrifice, which was of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to him; the burnt-offering following by way of thankſgiving for atonement made by the ſin-offering graciouſly accepted by the Lord.

℣. 6. And Aaron ſhall offer his bullock for the ſin-offering, which is for himſelf, &c.] That is, bring it into the court, and preſent it before the Lord, in order to its being ſlain and ſacrificed; for as yet it was not killed, and ſo could not be offered on the altar, ſee ℣. 11. the place where the bullock was ſet was between the porch and the altar, his head in the ſouth, and his face to the weſt, and the prieſt ſtood in the eaſt, and his face to the weſt, and laid both his hands upon him, and confeſſed his ſins, and his family's [x]: and this is ſaid to be for himſelf; not to atone for him, which is afterwards expreſſed, but which ſhould come of him or from him, and not from the congregation, as Jarchi explains it; or as the Targum of Jonathan more clearly, which is of his own money, wholly at his own expence, and not the peoples: and make atonement for himſelf, and for his houſe; for himſelf, for his own perſonal ſins, and for his family's ſins, thoſe of his wife and children; and it may be extended to all the prieſts of the houſe of Aaron; and ſome ſay to the Levites alſo, as Aben Ezra notes, though he diſapproves of it: by this it appears, that Chriſt the antitype of Aaron, is a more perfect and excellent prieſt than he, who needed not to offer up ſacrifice, firſt for his own ſins, and then for his peoples, for this he did once, when he offered up himſelf, Heb. vii. 27. and which was for his whole family, and them only, the elect of God, conſiſting of Jews and Gentiles; part of which is in heaven, and part on earth, and both were reconciled, or atonement made for them, by the blood of Chriſt; whoſe houſe and family men appear to be, when they believe and hope in him, and hold faſt their faith and hope; and who are made by him prieſts as well as kings to God; ſee Eph. iii. 15. Heb. iii. 6. Rev. i. 6.

℣. 7. And he ſhall take the two goats, &c.] The ſin-offering for the people, a proper emblem of Chriſt, this creature being clean and fit for food, denoting the purity of Chriſt, and his being ſuitable and wholeſome food, as his fleſh is to the faith of his people; and becauſe comely in its going, as Chriſt was in his going from everlaſting, and in his coming into this world, travelling in the greatneſs of his ſtrength; and even by reaſon of its having ſomething in it unſavoury and offenſive, and which made it the fitter emblem of Chriſt, as a ſurety of his people; for though he had no ſin inherent in him and natural to him, yet he appeared in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and had ſin imputed to him, which rendered him obnoxious to divine juſtice: the number of theſe goats was two, typical either of the two natures in Chriſt; his divine nature, in which he is impaſſible, and lives for ever, which may be ſignified by the goat preſented alive and let go; and his human nature, in which he ſuffered and died, and may be fitly repreſented by the goat that was ſlain; or elſe of the two eſtates of Chriſt before and after his reſurrection, his being put to death in the fleſh and quickened in the Spirit; or rather, this may ſignify the twofold conſideration of Chriſt as mediator, one with reſpect to his divine Father, to whom he made ſatisfaction by his death; and the other with reſpect to Satan, with whom he conflicted in life, and to whoſe power he was ſo far delivered up, as not only to be tempted, and haraſſed by him, but through his inſtigation, to be brought to the duſt of death; ſee the note on ℣. 10. and theſe two goats, according to the Jewiſh writers [y], were to be alike in ſight or colour, in ſtature and in value, and to be taken together: Chriſt, the antitype of them, is the ſame dying and riſing; the ſame that died, roſe again from the dead; the ſame that ſuffered, is glorified; and

3

[u] Miſn. Yoma, c. 3. §. 4, 6. [w] Ib. §. 3. [x] Miſn. Yoma, c. 3. §. 8. [y] Ib. c. 6. §. 1.

and the ſame that went up to heaven, will come again in like manner: and preſent them before the Lord, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; at the eaſt of the court, and the north of the altar, as the Miſnah [y]; ſo that their faces were towards the weſt, where the holy of holies, the ſeat of the divine Majeſty was, and ſo ſaid to be before the Lord, or over-againſt where he dwelt: this preſentation may have reſpect to the death of Chriſt, when he preſented himſelf to God as an offering and a ſacrifice; and which was done publickly in the ſight of great multitudes, and on the behalf of the whole congregation of the Lord's people, and before him againſt whom ſin is committed, and to whom ſatisfaction is given.

℣. 8. And Aaron ſhall caſt lots upon the two goats, &c.] Which ſhould be ſlain, and which ſhould be kept alive, and let go: the manner of caſting lots, according to the Miſnah [z], was this; the high prieſt went to the eaſt of the court, to the north of the altar, the Sagan (or deputy prieſt) at his right hand, and Roſh Beth Ab, (or the chief of the houſe of the fathers) on his left hand, and the two goats were there; and there was a veſſel (box or urn, called Calphi) and in it were two lots of box-tree; the high-prieſt ſhook the Calphi (or urn) and took out the two lots; one, on which was written, for the Lord, and the other, on which was written, for Azazel; if that came up on the right hand, the Sagan ſaid to him, my lord high-prieſt, lift up thy right hand on high; and if that on the left hand came up, Roſh Beth Ab ſaid to him, my lord high-prieſt, lift up thy left hand on high: he put them upon the two goats and ſaid, a ſin-offering for the Lord; and they anſwered after him, bleſſed be the Lord, may the glory of his kingdom be for ever and ever: now theſe lots, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, were alike, not one greater than another; and they were of the ſame matter, for if one had been of ſtone and the other of wood, they might have been known by feeling, and ſo the lots would not have been legal: and the ſame is obſerved by Maimonides [a], that though they might be of any matter, of wood, or ſtone, or metal, yet one might not be great, and the other ſmall, and the one of ſilver, and the other of gold, but both alike, for the reaſon before given: one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the ſcape-goat; one had written upon it, as in the above account, for the Lord, and the other had written upon it, for Azazel; directing that the goat on which the lot for the Lord fell, was to be ſlain and offered up for a ſin-offering to him; and the other, on which the lot for Azazel fell, was to be kept alive and let go: now, however caſual and contingent the caſting of a lot may ſeem to men, it is certain to God, the diſpoſal of it is of him, and according to his determination, Prov. xvi. 33. and this, in the myſtical ſenſe, here denotes, that the ſufferings and death of Chriſt were according to the determinate counſel and fore-knowledge of God, and ſo were foretold in the ſcriptures, and came to paſs according to his appointment, will, and command, as was alſo his reſurrection from the dead, John x. 18. ſee Acts ii. 23. and iv. 28. 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4. and likewiſe his conflict with Satan, John xiv. 30, 31.

℣. 9. And Aaron ſhall bring the goat on which the Lord's lot fell, &c.] Alluding to the manner of taking out the lot by the high-prieſt, who, when he took it out, lifted it up with his hand, and then let it down, and put it on the head of the goat; after which he brought it to the altar to be ſacrificed: and offer him for a ſin-offering; an offering for the ſins of the people, as a type of Chriſt, who made his ſoul an offering for ſin for his people; but this was not done by Aaron until he had brought and killed the ſin-offering for himſelf; after which, we read of killing this ſin-offering for the people, ℣. 11, 15. wherefore ſome take this offering here, to be no other than a ſetting apart or devoting the goat for this ſervice.

℣. 10. But the goat on which the lot fell to be the ſcape-goat, &c.] Or for Azazel, of which more hereafter in the latter part of the verſe: ſhall be preſented alive before the Lord; this ſeems to be a ſecond preſentation; both the goats were preſented before the Lord before the lots were caſt, ℣. 7. but this was afterwards, when one of the goats, according to the lot, being preſented was ordered to be killed for a ſin-offering, and the other according to the lot not being preſented alive, was ordered to remain ſo: to make an atonement with him; to make an atonement for the ſins of the people of Iſrael along with the other, for they both made one ſin-offering, ℣. 6. and this, though ſpared alive for a while, yet at length was killed; and how, the Jewiſh writers relate, as will be after obſerved: and to let him go for a ſcape-goat into the wilderneſs; or, unto Azazel into the wilderneſs; which ſome underſtand of a mountain in the wilderneſs called Azazel, to which the Targum of Jonathan has reſpect, which paraphraſes the word, "to "ſend him to die in a place ſtrong and hard, "which is in the wilderneſs of Zuck;" and ſo Saadiah Gaon, Jarchi, Kimchi and others; and one in Aben Ezra ſays, it was near mount Sinai; but as it is rightly obſerved by ſome, was this the name of a mountain, Moſes would have called it the mountain Azazel, as he does other mountains by their names: nor is there any account of any ſuch mountain in thoſe parts, by ſuch who have travelled in it, and if near Sinai, it was a long way to ſend it from Jeruſalem; and for which there ſeems to be no reaſon, ſince there were many deſerts between thoſe two places: Aben Ezra ſuggeſts, there is a ſecret or myſtery in the word Azazel, and ſays, you may know it and the myſtery of his name, for he has companions in ſcripture; and I will reveal to you, ſays he, part of it by a hint, when you are the ſon of 33, you may know its meaning, that is, by reckoning 33 verſes from ℣. 8. where this word is firſt mentioned, which will fall on ch. xvii. 7. they ſhall no more offer unto devils; and ſo R. Menachem interprets Azazel of Samael, the angel of death, the devil, the prince that hath power over deſolate places: there are ſeveral chriſtian writers of great note, that underſtand this of the devil, as Origen [b], among the ancients, and of the moderns, Cocceius [c], Witſius [d], and Spencer [e], who think that

[y] Miſn. Yoma, c. 3. §. 8.
[z] Ib. c. 3. §. 9. & c. 4. §. 1.
[a] Hilchot Yom Hacipputim, c. 3. §. 1.
[b] Contr. Celſ. l. 6. p. 305.
[c] Comment. in Heb. 9. §. 25, &c.
[d] De Oeconom. Fœderum, l. 4. c 6. §. 71, 72, 73.
[e] De Leg. Heb. l. 3. Diſſert. 8. c. 1. §. 2. and of the ſame mind was our Engliſh poet †, that Azazel was a Dæmon.

† His mighty ſtandard: that proud honour claimed that by these two goats, is signified the twofold respect of Christ our mediator; one to God, as a judge, to whom he made satisfaction by his death; the other to the devil, the enemy with whom he conflicted in life; who, according to prophecy, was to be delivered up to Satan, and have his heel bruised by him; and who was to come, and did come into the wilderness of this world, and when Jerusalem was a desert, and became a Roman province; and who was led by the Spirit into the wilderness of Judea, in a literal sense, to be tempted of the devil, and had a sore conflict with him in the garden, when he sweat, as it were, drops of blood; and upon the cross, when he submitted to the death of it; during which time he had the sins of all his people on him, and made an end of them, so as to be seen no more; all which agrees with ℣. 21, 22. of which see more there; and it must be owned, that no other sense seems so well to agree with the type as this; since the living goat had all the sins of the people on him, and was reckoned so impure, that he that led him into the wilderness stood in need of washing and cleansing, ℣. 21, 26. whereas, when Christ was raised from the dead, he was clear of all sin, being justified in the Spirit; and in his resurrection there was no impurity, nor could any be reckoned or supposed to belong to him, as Witsius well observes, no, not as the surety of his people; nor in his resurrection, was he a sin-offering, as this goat was; nor could his ascension to heaven, with any propriety, be represented by this goat being let go into the wilderness: as for the notion of Barabbas, as Origen [f], being meant by Azazel, or the rebellious people of the Jews, carried into the wilderness, or into captivity by Nebuchadnezzar, and which is the sense of Abarbinel, and in which he is followed by many christian writers, they need no confutation.
Azazel, as his right, a cherub tall.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, B. 1. l. 533, 534.

℣. 11. And Aaron shall bring the bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself, &c.] In the same manner, and is to be understood in the same sense, as in ℣. 6. and shall make atonement for himself and for his house; by a confession of words, as the Targum of Jonathan adds, and which Jarchi calls, the second confession; for the same was made, and in the same words as before, see the note on ℣. 6. and shall kill the bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself; which was a type of Christ; the creature itself was, being strong for labour, and patient in bearing the yoke; Christ had a laborious service to perform, the work of man's redemption, and he was strong for it, able to go through it, and did not only readily take upon him the yoke of the law, and became obedient to every command of his divine Father, but even to death itself, the death of the cross; the kind of sacrifice was a sin-offering, and such Christ in soul and body was made for his people; in order to which, as this sacrifice, he was put to death, the use of which was, to atone for all the sins of his mystical self, his body, the church; for all his family, his children, the priests of the Lord.

℣. 12. And he shall take a censer, &c.] A fire-pan, a sort of chafing-dish or perfuming pot; this was a golden one, as appears from Heb. ix. 4. hence Christ, the angel of God's presence, our interceding high-priest, is said to have such an one, Rev. viii. 3. and so Josephus says [g], it was a golden one the high-priest used on the day of atonement; with which agree the Misnic doctors [h], who say, on other days he took off the coals with a silver one, and poured them into a golden one, but on this day he took them off with a golden one: full of burning coals of fire from off the altar before the Lord; these were bright, lively coals, not smoaking and half extinct; and they were taken from off the altar of burnt-offering, from the western side of it, as Jarchi says, which was towards the holy of holies, where the Lord had his dwelling: these burning coals denoted the sufferings of Christ, which were properly punishments for the sins he bore, flowed from the wrath of God, comparable to fire, were the curses of a fiery law, and equal to the sufferings of the wicked, often expressed by fire; they were many, and very painful and excruciating, though no ways inconsistent with the love of God to him as his son, for they were endured by him as the surety of his people, and by which he expressed his flaming love and affection for them: he himself is altar, sacrifice, and priest, the altar which sanctifies the gift; and the coals as on the altar, denote the sufferings of Christ, as upon him, which he was able to bear; and the taking off the coals, signifies the cessation of his sufferings; and the altar, coals, and taking of them off being before the Lord and in his sight, shew that Christ, as a divine person, is, and always was before him; that his sufferings were ever in view, being appointed and foretold by him, and when endured were grateful to him, a sacrifice of a sweet smelling savour; and that the cessation of them was in his presence, and according to his will; and Christ now is the lamb in the midst of the throne, as though he had been slain, where, as such, he is always beheld with pleasure and acceptance by the Lord: and his hands full of sweet incense beaten small; both his hands, as Aben Ezra, two handfuls of this he took and put into a cup: of this sweet incense and its composition, see Exod. xxx. 34—37. this was small itself, but on the evening of the day of atonement it was put into the mortar again, as Jarchi says, and beaten very small, and so was, as expressed in the Misnah [i], small of small; this may represent the intercession of Christ our high-priest for his people; for as the prayers of the saints are set before the Lord as incense, Ps. cxli. 2. so the intercession and mediation of Christ in favour of the acceptance of their prayers is signified by much incense, Rev. viii. 3. and which is always acceptable to God, and may well be expressed by sweet incense: handfuls of it, may denote the largeness of his intercession, being for all the elect of God, and for all things for them they stand in need of; and the infinite perfection and virtue of his person, blood, righteousness, and sacrifice, to make his intercession effectual: and being beaten small, may signify his intercession made for particular persons, and those the meanest, and for particular things of every sort they want; as well as it may point at the fragrance and acceptance of Christ's mediation on such accounts, the incense being more fragrant the smaller it is beaten: and bring it within the vail; not the incense only, but the burning coals of fire also, the one in one hand, and the other in the other hand; so the Misnah [k]; they brought out to him (the high-priest) the cup and the censer; he took his handful and put it into the cup, a large one according to its largeness, and a small one according to its smallness, and so was its measure; he took the censer in his right hand, and the cup in his left, and went into the sanctuary, until he came between the two vails which divide between the holy and holy

2

[f] In Lev. Homil. 10. c. 16. fol. 82.
[g] Antiq. l. 3. c. 8. §. 3.
[h] Misn. Yoma, c. 4. §. 4.
[i] Ib.
[k] Ib. c. 5. §. 1.

holy of holies: this was typical of Chriſt our high-prieſt, who is entered within the vāil into the holieſt of all, with his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, where he ever lives to make interceſſion for us; not that Chriſt is conſidered in heaven as in a ſuffering ſtate, for he is in a moſt exalted one; but the virtue and efficacy of his ſufferings and death always continue, and which he ever improves on the behalf of his people, by interceding for them; and their faith and hope enter within the vail, and deal with him as having ſuffered for them.

℣. 13. And he ſhall put the incenſe upon the fire before the Lord, &c.] Both the incenſe and burning coals of fire being carried within the vail, the incenſe was put upon the coals, and ſo it burned before the Lord, whoſe ſeat was between the cherubim; and from whence it appears, that this was done, not without but within the vail: the Sadducees under the ſecond temple would have it, that the incenſe was put upon the fire without the vail, wherefore the high-prieſt on the evening of this day, was ſworn by the meſſengers of the ſanhedrim, not to make any alteration in what they ſhould ſay to him; and this oath was given him in the houſe of Abtines, where the incenſe was made, with a ſpecial reſpect to that, ſince it being within the vail, they could not ſee it performed: the manner of his performance of this part of his ſervice is thus related; he went in between the vails, till he came to the north; when he was come to the north, he turned his face to the ſouth; he went on his left hand near the vail, till he came to the ark; he put the cenſer between the two bars, and heaped the incenſe upon the top of the coals, and the whole houſe was filled with the ſmoke; he then went out backwards, and prayed a ſhort prayer in the outward houſe, (the holy place) and he did not continue long in prayer leſt the people of Iſrael ſhould be frighted [l]: the prayer he made is given us by the Jews [m]: now the incenſe being put upon the coals, may denote the fervor and ardency of Chriſt's interceſſion, and that his ſufferings are the foundation of it, on which it proceeds, and are what give it a grateful odour, or make it acceptable to the Lord: and this was done, that the cloud of the incenſe may cover the mercy-ſeat that is upon the teſtimony; where was the ſhekinah, or glorious majeſty of God, and which was not to be ſeen, and therefore to be covered after this manner; which ſhews, that there is no acceſs to God but as upon a ſeat of mercy, and a throne of grace; and even that there is no coming to him upon that, but through the mediation and interceſſion of Chriſt: that he die not; as his ſons did, boldly intruding where, and doing what they ſhould not: there is no approaching to God as an abſolute God, and live; but through Chriſt the mediator, and his interceſſion, believers may draw nigh and ſee the face of God in Chriſt, and live, as Jacob did, Gen. xxxii. 33.

℣. 14. And he ſhall take of the blood of the bullock, &c.] When the high-prieſt ſlew the bullock, the blood was received in a baſon, and given to another prieſt, that he might keep ſtirring it on a four-ſquare bench in the temple, that ſo it might not thicken and congeal [n], but by a continual motion might become thin and liquid, and fit for ſprinkling; and this was doing whilſt the high-prieſt was gone into the moſt holy place to offer the incenſe; which being done, he came out again and took the baſon of blood out of the hand of the prieſt, and went in a ſecond time, and did with it as follows: and ſprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy-ſeat, eaſtward; with his right finger, or fore finger, as the Targum of Jonathan; and the blood ſprinkled with it did not fall upon the mercy-ſeat, as our verſion ſeems to intimate, but it was ſprinkled over-againſt it, towards the upper part of it. Aben Ezra ſays, that according to their interpreters, upon the face of the mercy-ſeat, as the words may be literally rendered, ſignifies above, between the two bars, and here it was the high-prieſt ſtood; for, according to the Miſnah [o], he went in to the place where he had gone in, and ſtood in the place where he had ſtood, and then ſprinkled, that is, in the ſame place where he had been and offered the incenſe; ſee the note on the preceding verſe; and here he ſtood, not with his face to the eaſt, for then his back muſt have been to the mercy-ſeat, but he ſtood with his face to the eaſtern part of the mercy-ſeat, and there ſprinkled the blood upwards: and before the mercy-ſeat ſhall he ſprinkle of the blood with his finger ſeven times; beſides the firſt ſprinkling that was upward, and thoſe downward; ſo ſays the Miſnah [p], he ſprinkled of it (the blood) once above, and ſeven times below; the ſame Jarchi obſerves; and the tradition adds, and he did not look in ſprinkling neither above nor below; that is, he did not look to the mercy-ſeat, nor was there any need of it, ſince the blood did not reach the mercy-ſeat, but fell upon the ground; it was enough that it was done before it, and over-againſt it, and with a reſpect unto it; or otherwiſe, had it fallen on it, it would have been beſmeared with it, and would not have been ſo comely and decent: the myſtery of this was to repreſent the blood of Chriſt, and perfect purification and atonement by it, and that mercy and juſtice are reconciled to each other, and agree together in the forgiveneſs of ſinners; and that there is no mercy but in a way of juſtice, no remiſſion of ſin, no juſtification of perſons, no ſalvation for any of the ſons of men, but through the blood of Chriſt, and the compleat atonement made thereby.

℣. 15. Then ſhall he kill the goat of the ſin-offering that is for the people, &c.] That upon which the lot came for the Lord, ℣. 9. the high-prieſt having ſprinkled the blood of the bullock, came out of the moſt holy place, and went into the court of the tabernacle to the altar of burnt-offering, and on the north ſide of that ſlew the goat for the ſin-offering, the place where all ſuch were killed; ſee ch. i. 11. and vi. 25. This was a type of Chriſt, of his being ſlain, and made an offering for the ſins of his people: and bring his blood within the vail; it being received into a baſon, as before the blood of the bullock was, he took it, and with it went in a third time into the moſt holy place: and do with that blood as he did with the blood of the bullock, and ſprinkle it upon the mercy-ſeat, and before the mercy-ſeat; it ſhould be rendered toward the mercy-ſeat, as it is by Noldius [q]; ſee the note on the preceding chapter.

℣. 16. And he ſhall make an atonement for the holy place, &c.] Even the holy of holies, as Aben Ezra interprets it, into which the high-prieſt entered with blood for that purpoſe; the Targum of Jonathan adds, by a verbal confeſſion, that is, of ſin; but atonement was not made in that wy way, but by the blood of the bullock and goat, which was ſprinkled towards the mercy-ſeat, above above and below: and this was made because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins; which heap of words shows how many and hainous the sins of the people of Israel were, being defections from God, rebellions against him, transgressions of his law, and which brought pollution and guilt upon them which could only be expiated by blood; and though the people of Israel did not enter so much as into the holy place, where the priests at times went, and much less into the holiest of all, yet their sins in some sense entered there, and came before the Lord that dwelt there; as the sins of men do even reach up to heaven itself, and cry for wrath and vengeance; and so made the Israelites unworthy of such a favour, as for the Lord to dwell among them in that most holy place, in so solemn a manner; and for their high-priest to enter there, and consult the oracle of God for them, and make intercession on their account, to which atonement was necessary; even as men by their sins render themselves unworthy of entering into this heavenly state, nor can they without the atonement and sacrifice of Christ; and to this purification of the patterns of heavenly things, and of the heavenly things or places themselves, the apostle refers, Heb. ix. 23, 24: and so shall he do for the tabernacle of the congregation that remaineth among them, in the midst of their uncleanness; that is, the court of the tabernacle where the Israelites were admitted, and where they often came in their uncleanness, either ignorantly or presumptuously, and yet notwithstanding the tabernacle remained among them; but it was necessary that atonement should be made for the uncleanness in it, and around it, that it might continue, and they might have the privilege of coming into it, and worshipping in it. This shews that there are sins of holy things, and which attend the most solemn service, which are committed in the sanctuary of the Lord, and whilst waiting upon him in his house and ordinances, which must be expiated and removed. The same rites were observed in making the atonement for this part of the sanctuary, as for the most holy place, particularly by sprinkling the blood in like manner, only elsewhere; so says Jarchi, as he sprinkled of them both within, that is, of the blood of the bullock, and of the goat, within the vail, once above, and seven times below; so he sprinkled, by the vail without, of both of them, once above, and seven times below.

[l] Miſn. Yoma, c. 5. §. 1. c. 5. §. 3. [m] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [n] Miſn. Yoma, c. 4. §. 3. [o] Ib. [p] Ibid. [q] Concord. Ebr. partic. p. 704. N°. 2013.

℣. 17. And there shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] Not any of the priests, as Aben Ezra, no not in the holy place where they ministred, nor in the court of the tabernacle, nor in any of the courts, nor indeed any of the people: all places were cleared when he the high-priest goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out; this in the mystery of it was to signify, that atonement for sin is made only by Christ our high-priest, he himself, and no other, bore our sins, and he himself purged them away, or by his sacrifice alone expiated them; his own arm wrought salvation, and of the people there were none with him to help and assist him; when he the shepherd was smitten by the sword of justice, the sheep were scattered, all his disciples forsook him and fled; there were none to appear for him, or stand by him, or in the least to lend an assisting hand in the great work in which he was engaged; he is the only Mediator, between God and man, both of redemption and of intercession; he is the alone Saviour, to him only are sinners to look for salvation, and he is to have all the glory; he had no partner in the work, and he'll have no rival in the honour of it: and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household; his whole family, and all the priests, by the bullock of his sin-offering, as Aben Ezra observes, and by carrying in the blood of it within the vail, and sprinkling it there: and for all the congregation of Israel; by the goat of their sin-offering, as the same writer notes, and doing with the blood of that, as with the blood of the bullock; all typical of the atonement of Christ for his mystical self the church; for the whole family and household of God; for the general assembly and church of the first-born, whose names are written in heaven.

℣. 18. And he shall go out unto the altar that is before the Lord, &c.] The golden altar, the altar of incense, which stood in the holy place without the vail, over-against the most holy place, where Jehovah dwelt, and so is said to be before him; of this altar the Misnah [r] understands it, and so do Jarchi and Ben Gersom; and according to Exod. xxx. 10. once a year Aaron was to make an atonement on the horns of it, with the blood of the sin-offering, which plainly refers to this time, the day of atonement; but Aben Ezra is of opinion, that the altar of burnt-offering is meant; and bishop Patrick is inclined to think so too, because he supposes the high-priest's going out signifies his coming from the sanctuary, where the golden altar was, and which had been cleansed, ℣. 16. and because, if the altar of burnt-offering is not here meant, no care seems to be taken of its cleansing; but it should be observed, that the holy place, ℣. 16. means the holy of holies, and not the holy place where the altar of incense stood; and that the altar of burnt-offering was atoned for and cleansed, when the tabernacle of the congregation was, in which it stood, and from which this altar is manifestly distinguished, ℣. 20. wherefore the reason given for the altar of burnt-offering holds good for the altar of incense, since if that is not intended, no care is taken about it; add to this, that the last account of the high-priest was, that he was in the most holy place, and not the holy place, ℣. 17. out of which he now came into the holy place, where the altar of incense was: and make an atonement for it; where incense was daily offered up, signifying the prayers of the saints, which having many failings and imperfections in them, yea many sins and transgressions attending them, need atonement by the blood of Christ, of which this was a type: and shall take of the blood of the bullock, and of the blood of the goat; mixed, as the Targum of Jonathan paraphrases it; and so Jarchi asks, what is the atonement of it? he takes the blood of the bullock, and the blood of the goat, and mixes them together: the account given of this affair, in the Misnah [s] is; he poured the blood of the bullock into the blood of the goat, and then put a full bason into an empty one, that it might be well mixed together: and having so done, he did as follows, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about; upon the four horns which were around it; and it is asked in the Misnah [t], where did he begin? at the north-east horn, and so to the north-west, and then to the south-west, and (ended) at the south-east; at the place where he began with the sin-offering on the outward altar, there there he finiſhed on the inward altar, and as he went along he put the blood on each horn, which was the atonement for the altar.

[r] Yoma, c. 5. §. 5. [s] Ibid. §. 4. [t] Ut supra.

℣. 19. And he ſhall ſprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger ſeven times, &c.] This was done with his right finger, or fore finger, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſeven times to denote the perfect cleanſing of the altar with it. Jarchi obſerves, that after he, the high-prieſt, had put the puttings (of blood) upon the horns of it, he ſprinkled of it ſeven ſprinklings on the top of it: the Miſnah ſays [u] upon the pure place of it, that is, upon a place of it, from whence the coals and aſhes were removed, and where the gold appeared: and cleanſe it, and hallow it from the uncleanneſs of the children of Iſrael; by ſprinkling the blood upon it; Jarchi's note is, and cleanſe it from what was paſt, and hallow it for time to come.

℣. 20. And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, &c.] That is, the holy of holies, by carrying in the blood of the bullock, and of the goat there, and ſprinkling them as before obſerved: and the tabernacle of the congregation; the great court where the people met, and where the altar of burnt-offering ſtood: and the altar; the altar of incenſe in the holy place; and ſo all the parts of the tabernacle were reconciled and atoned for, even the holy of holies, the holy place, and the court of the people: all the work of the day of atonement, we are told [w], was done according to the order preſcribed, and that if any thing was done before another, it was doing nothing: thus, for inſtance, if the blood of the goat went before (or was ſprinkled before) the blood of the bullock, he muſt return and ſprinkle of the blood of the goat after the blood of the bullock; and if before he has finiſhed the puttings (of the blood) within, the blood is poured out, (that is, at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering) he ſhall bring other blood, and return and ſprinkle anew within, and ſo in the temple, and at the golden altar, for every atonement is by itſelf: he ſhall bring the live goat; that which remained alive after the other was ſlain, as it was to do, according to the lot that fell upon it, ℣. 10. this was brought to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, whither the high-prieſt went, and performed the following rites.

℣. 21. And Aaron ſhall lay both his hands on the head of the live goat, &c.] In this order, as the Targum of Jonathan ſays, his right-hand upon his left-hand on the head of the live goat; this was done in the name of the people, hereby transferring their ſins, and the puniſhment of them, to it: and confeſs over him all the iniquities of the children of Iſrael, and all their tranſgreſſions in all their ſins; which takes in all their ſins, greater or leſſer, ſins of ignorance and preſumption, known or not known [x], even all ſorts of ſin, and all of them: the form of confeſſion uſed in after-times was this [y]; O Lord, thy people, the houſe of Iſrael, have done perverſely, have tranſgreſſed and ſinned before thee. O Lord, expiate now the iniquities, tranſgreſſions and ſins, in which thy people, the houſe of Iſrael, have done perverſely, tranſgreſſed and ſinned before thee, as it is written in the law of Moſes thy ſervant (Lev. xvi. 30.) and it is added, and the prieſts and people that ſtood in the court, when they heard the name Jehovah go out of the mouth of the high-prieſt, they bowed, and worſhipped, and fell upon their faces, and ſaid, bleſſed be God, let the glory of his kingdom be for ever and ever: putting them upon the head of the goat; that is, the iniquities, tranſgreſſions and ſins of the people of Iſrael before confeſſed, and that by confeſſion of them, with impoſition of hands; and which was typical of the imputation of the ſins of the people of God to Chriſt, of the Lord laying, or cauſing to meet on him the iniquities of them all, and of his being made ſin by imputation for them: and ſhall ſend him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderneſs; whether the wilderneſs of Judea, or what other is intended, is not certain. The Targum of Jonathan calls it the wilderneſs of Zuck; which according to the Miſnah [z], was three miles from Jeruſalem, at the entrance of the wilderneſs; and whereas in another Miſnah [a], inſtead of Beth-chadudo, Beth-horon is mentioned, which is ſaid alſo to be three miles from Jeruſalem: it is not an improbable conjecture of Dr. Lightfoot [b], that the goat was ſent in the way to Beth-horon, which was the ſame diſtance from Jeruſalem as the other place was, in the northern coaſt of Judea, and had very rough hills about it, and a narrow paſſage to it. The man, by whom he was ſent, was one fit for the purpoſe, that knew the way to the wilderneſs, and was acquainted with it; a man of years and underſtanding, and of a diſpoſition ſuitable for ſuch a ſervice; the Septuagint verſion renders it one that was ready; and the Targums, one that was prepared to go, or appointed, and got ready; Jarchi ſays, the day before; but the Targum of Jonathan, a year ago; perhaps it deſigns one, that being once appointed, was continued, and ſo was uſed to it from time to time, and conſtantly did it: the phraſe properly ſignifies a man of time or opportunity [c]; Aben Ezra finds fault with thoſe who render it a wiſe man, but obſerves, that ſome of their Rabbins ſay it was a prieſt that led the goat to the wilderneſs, which he approves of: according to the Miſnah [d], all were fit for this ſervice (formerly common and unclean,) but what the high-prieſt did (afterwards) was fixed, and they did not ſuffer an Iſraelite to lead him (i. e. a common Iſraelite, one that was not a prieſt); according to the Talmud [e], even a ſtranger, and an unclean perſon, was fit for this ſervice. In the myſtical ſenſe, by this fit man, or man of opportunity, is not meant, according to Abarbinel, Nebuchadnezzar, who led the children of Iſrael into the wilderneſs of the people, into the Babyloniſh captivity; but rather, if it could be underſtood of Chriſt being ſent, and carried into the wilderneſs of the Gentile world, upon his reſurrection and aſcenſion to heaven, the apoſtle Paul might be thought of; who was a choſen veſſel to carry his name there, and was eminently the apoſtle of the Gentiles: but ſeeing by Azazel, to whom this goat was let go, ſatan ſeems to be meant; if, as ſome think [f], Chriſt was baptized on the day of atonement, and on that day was led by the Spirit to the wilderneſs of Judea, there to be tempted of the devil, that might be conſidered as a very ſingular accompliſhment of the type; and the Jews ſeem to expect the Meſſiah on the day of atonement:

[u] Yoma, c. 5. §. 6. [w] Ibid. §. 7. [x] Vid. Maimon. Hilchot Teſhubah, c. 1. §. 2. [y] Miſnah Yoma, c. 6. §. 2. [z] Ibid. §. 8. [a] Miſn. Hieroſ. c. 6. §. 9. fol. 43. 2. [b] Chorograph. Cent. on Matth. c liv. Vid. ib. c. xix. [c] אישׁ עתּי viri opportuni, Montanus; viri tempeſtivi, Tigurine verſion. [d] Ut ſupra, §. 3. [e] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 66. 1, 2. [f] Jackſon & alii, apud Patrick in loc.

ment [g]: or rather, as Witsius [h] obſerves, the hand of the fit man may denote the power that roſe up againſt Chriſt, namely the Gentiles and the people of Iſrael, and particularly Pilate, who took care that Chriſt, burdened with the croſs, an emblem of the curſe, ſhould be led without the gate, where he had his laſt conflict with the devil; ſee the note on ℣. 10. This is applied to Pilate by Origen [i].

℣. 22. And the goat ſhall bear upon him all their iniquities, unto a land not inhabited, &c.] Where it would never be ſeen, and from whence it would never return more; and ſo was a proper type of Chriſt, who has borne all the ſins of all his people in his own body on the croſs, and all the puniſhment due unto them; and ſo has made full ſatisfaction for them, and has removed them from them, as far as the eaſt is from the weſt, and out of the ſight of avenging juſtice; ſo that when they are ſought, they ſhall not be found, nor ſhall they ever return unto them, or be brought againſt them any more; ſee Iſ. liii. 12. 1 Pet. ii. 24. Zech. iii. 9. Pſ. ciii. 12. Jer. l. 20: and he ſhall let go the goat in the wilderneſs; that is, the man that was appointed to have him thither; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "and the man ſhall let go the goat "into the wilderneſs of Zuck; and the goat ſhall "go upon the mountains of Beth Chadure (or Cha-"dudo), and a tempeſtuous wind from the Lord "ſhall drive him down, and he ſhall die." The manner of conducting this whole affair was this; they made for him a cauſey (i. e. for the man that had the goat committed to his care, to have it out of the court, and out of the city) becauſe of the Babylonians, who would pluck him by the hair, and ſay get out, be gone, get out, be gone. The nobles of Jeruſalem accompanied him to the firſt booth, for there were ten booths from Jeruſalem to Zuck, which were 90 furlongs, ſeven and a half to every mile; at every (i. e. 12 miles) at every booth they ſaid to him, lo food, lo water, and they accompanied him from booth to booth, excepting the laſt of them; for there was not one went with him to Zuck, but ſtood afar off, and obſerved what he did: what did he do? he parted a ſcarlet line, half of it he bound to the rock, and half of it he bound between his horns (the goat's) and puſhed him backwards, and he rolled and went down, but before he came half way down the mountain he was daſhed to pieces; then he (the man) went and ſat under the laſt booth until it was dark—they ſaid to the high-prieſt, the goat is got to the wilderneſs; but from whence did they know that the goat was got to the wilderneſs? they made watch-towers or beacons, and they waved linen cloths, and ſo knew when the goat was come to the wilderneſs [k]. But the ſcripture is entirely ſilent about the death of this goat, though it no doubt died in the wilderneſs, only ſays that it was let go, and was at liberty to go where it would; intimating that the people of Iſrael were free from all their ſins, and they ſhould be no more ſeen nor remembered; typical of the deliverance and freedom of the people of God from all their ſins by Chriſt. This affair was imitated by ſatan among the heathens, particularly the Egyptians, as has been obſerved by many out of Herodotus [l]; who relates, that they uſed to imprecate many things upon the head of a beaſt ſlain for ſacrifice, and then carried it to market, where were Grecian merchants, to whom they ſold it; but if there were none, they caſt it into the river, execrating the head after this manner, that if any evil was to befal either themſelves that ſacrificed, or all Egypt, it might be turned upon that head. And on account of this cuſtom, which obtained among all the Egyptians, no one among them would ever taſte the head of any animal; which Plutarch [m] alſo affirms, who ſays, that having made an execration upon the head of the ſacrifice, and cut it off, formerly they caſt it into the river, but now they give it to ſtrangers. And a like cuſtom obtained among other nations, as the Maſſilians and Grecians [n].

℣. 23. And Aaron ſhall come into the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] Having been into the moſt holy place a fourth time, as the Jews ſay, to fetch out the cenſer and the incenſe-cup; wherefore the Jewiſh writers obſerve, that this verſe is not in its proper place; ſo Jarchi from the Rabbins ſays, the whole ſection is in its order, excepting this, which was after the ſacrifice of his burnt-offering, and the burnt-offering of the people; and the burning the inwards of the bullock and the goat, which were done without in the golden garments; and then he dipped himſelf, and waſhed his hands and feet, and ſtripped and put on the white garments, and went in to fetch the incenſe-cup and the cenſer, with which he offered in the inmoſt place (the holy of holies): and ſhall put off the linen garments which he put on when he went into the holy place; the holy of holies, that is, as Jarchi interprets it, after he had brought it (the cenſer) out, then he cloathed himſelf with the golden garments for the daily evening ſacrifice; and this was the order of the ſervices (on the day of atonement) the daily morning ſacrifice (was performed) in the golden garments; the ſervice of the bullock and of the goat, and the incenſe of the cenſer, in the white garments; and his ram, and the ram of the people, and ſome of the additions, in the golden garments; and the bringing out of the incenſe-cup and the cenſer, in the white garments; and the reſt of the additions, and the daily evening ſacrifice, and the incenſe of the temple, on the inward altar, in golden garments; and the order of the ſcripture, according to the ſervices, ſo it was: and ſhall leave them there; in one of the chambers of the tabernacle, as afterwards, in the temple, where they were laid up, never to be uſed more, as ſay the Jewiſh writers, Ben Gerſom, and others; hence we learn, ſays Jarchi, that they were obliged to be laid up, and he, the high prieſt, might not miniſter in theſe four garments on another day of atonement.

℣. 24. And he ſhall waſh his fleſh with water in the holy place, &c.] In the court of the tabernacle of the congregation, where, as Aben Ezra ſays, they ſpread fine linen for him; Jarchi ſays, it was a place on the roof of the houſe of Parvah, where all the dippings and waſhings were made, except the firſt; ſee the note on ℣. 4. and this waſhing was no other than the dipping of his whole body in water; and if our Lord was baptized on this day, as ſome have thought, before obſerved, whoſe baptiſm was by dipping, Matt. iii. 16, 17. there will appear in this, a great likeneſs between the type and the antitype: and put on his garments and come forth; put on his golden garments, and come out of the place where he had waſhed himſelf, to the court, where was the altar of burnt-offering: all which

[g] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 19. 2. [h] De Oeconomia Fœder. l. 4. c. 6. §. 72. [i] In Levit. Homil. 10. c. 16. fol. 82. [k] Yoma, c. 6. §. 4, 5, 6, 8. [l] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 39. [m] De Iſide & Oſir. [n] Vid. Outram. de Sacrificiis, l. 1. c. 22. §. 14.

which may be an emblem of Chriſt's putting off the pure and ſpotleſs garment of the fleſh, in which he appeared in a low eſtate, and made atonement for ſin; and of his burial, which the waſhing of the fleſh may point at, being what was uſed of the dead, and which waſhing in baptiſm is a figure of; and of his reſurrection from the dead, when God gave him glory, and he appeared in a glorious body, ſignified by his golden garments put on again: and offer his burnt-offering, and the burnt-offering of the people; his ram, and the people's ram, and the bullock of the people, and their ſeven lambs, as it is written, Numb. xxix 8. ſo Aben Ezra, firſt his own, and then the people's, which order was before obſerved in the ſin-offerings: and make an atonement for himſelf, and for the people; which, though properly made by the ſin-offerings, and the carrying the blood of them into the moſt holy place, yet theſe were the compleating of it, being the laſt of the ſervices peculiar to the day of atonement: the ſervice performed by the high-prieſt after the ſending away the goat into the wilderneſs was this; he read this ſixteenth chapter of Leviticus, and ch. xxiii. 27—32. if he read in linen garments, he waſhed his hands and his feet, he ſtripped himſelf, went down and dipped himſelf, and came up and wiped himſelf; then they brought him the golden garments, and he put them on, and waſhed his hands and his feet, and went out and offered his ram, and the people's ram, and the ſeven perfect lambs of a year old; then he waſhed his hands and his feet, and ſtripped and went down and dipped, and came up and wiped himſelf; then they brought to him the white garments, and he put them on, and waſhed his hands and his feet, and went in (to the holy of holies) to fetch out the incenſe-cup and the cenſer; then he waſhed his hands and his feet, and ſtripped, and went down and dipped, and came up and wiped himſelf; then they brought him the golden garments, and he put them on, and he waſhed his hands and his feet, and went in (to the holy place) to offer the evening-incenſe, and to trim the lamps; and then he waſhed his hands and his feet, and ſtripped; and they brought him his own garments (what he uſually wore when out of ſervice) and he put them on; and they accompanied him to his houſe, where he made a feaſt for his friends, becauſe he was come out of the ſanctuary in ſafety [o]: where, it ſeems, ſometimes ſome died, and others became ſick by getting cold through frequent ſhifting of their clothes and waſhing, and wearing thin linen garments.

℣. 25. And the fat of the ſin-offering ſhall he burn upon the altar.] The brazen altar of burnt-offering, and ſo ſays Jarchi, on the outward altar; for of the inward (i. e. the altar of incenſe) it is written, ye ſhall not offer upon it ſtrange incenſe, nor a burnt-offering, nor a meat-offering; and this fat he explains to be what was on the inwards of both the bullock and the goat; and ſo ſays Aben Ezra, the fat of the bullock for the ſin-offering, and the fat of the goat for a ſin-offering, and alſo the fat of the kid of the goat, which was a ſin-offering for the prieſt, Numb. xxix. 11. this fat was burnt at the ſame time the burnt-offerings were offered in the preceding verſe.

℣. 26. And he that let go the goat for the ſcape-goat, &c.] Or unto Azazel, who or what Azazel is, ſee the notes on ℣. 10, 21. for the goat and Azazel are different, not the ſame, nor to be confounded as they are in our verſion: ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water; in 40 ſeahs of water, according to the Targum of Jonathan; ſo unclean was this perſon reckoned by what he had to do with the goat ſent away by him; which in a typical and ceremonial ſenſe, had all the ſins of the people of Iſrael on it: and he and his garments were defiled as ſoon as he could be ſaid to be letting go; and that was, as Gerſom ſays, as ſoon as he was out of the city; for as long as he was in the city he was in the place from whence the motion was made, but as ſoon as he was out of it, he was in the way, and then he began to be in that motion, and might be then called, he that let him go; and from that time the clothes he had on were defiled; according to the Miſnah [p], from the time he was got without the walls of Jeruſalem: and afterwards he ſhall come into the camp; of Iſrael, whilſt in the wilderneſs, and into the city in after-times, and ſo into the ſanctuary, and enjoyed all civil and religious privileges as another man: and ſomething like this obtained among the heathens, as has been obſerved by many learned men, particularly out of Porphyry [q]; who ſays, all divines agree in this, that ſuch ſacrifices as were offered for averting evils were not to be touched, but ſuch needed purifications; nor might any ſuch an one go into the city, nor into his own houſe before he had waſhed his clothes and his body in a river or in a fountain: all this may be an emblem of thoſe who were concerned in having Chriſt without the gates of Jeruſalem to be crucified, and who afterwards, being ſenſible of their ſin, not only had forgiveneſs of it and were waſhed from it in the blood of Chriſt, but being baptized in water, were admitted into the church of God, Acts ii. 37. 38. and in general may ſhew the nature of ſin, that ſuch who have any thing to do with any who have it on them, though only in a ceremonial way, are defiled by it, and need waſhing; and alſo the imperfection of ceremonial rites and ſacrifices to take away ſin.

℣. 27. And the bullock for the ſin-offering, and the goat for the ſin-offering, &c.] The one for Aaron and his family, the other for the people of Iſrael, of which ſee ℣. 5, 6, 9, 11, 15. whoſe blood was brought in to make an atonement in the holy place; the holy of holies, where it was brought and ſprinkled, as directed in ℣. 14, 15. ſhall one carry forth without the camp; by command, as Aben Ezra obſerves, by the order of the high-prieſt; and perhaps more than one was employed to carry out thoſe carcaſes, they being too large for one man, and as it ſeems from a following clauſe; and the Targum of Jonathan is, "they ſhall be carried "out on ſtaves by the hands of the junior prieſts;" ſo Jarchi ſays [r], four men carried two ſtaves, two before and two behind, and they went ſtaff by ſtaff, and the bullock and the goat were upon them, and they carried them one upon another: this was done after the high-prieſt had done to them what was neceſſary; for ſo it is ſaid, he went to the bullock and to the goat that were to be burnt; he ript them up and took out their inwards, and put them in a bowl, and offered them on the top of the altar; and cut them with cuttings (made inciſions into the fleſh of them, but did not part it) and ordered them to be carried out to the place of burning, which was without the camp of Iſrael, and afterwards without the city of Jeruſalem: the myſtery

[o] Miſn. Yoma, c 7. §. 3, 4. Miſn. Yoma, c. 6. §. 7. [p] Ib. c. 6. §. 6. [q] De abſtinentia, l. 2. c. 44. [r] In myſtery of this, and the application of it to Chriſt, ſetting forth the nature and place of Chriſt's ſufferings, are fully and largely expreſſed by the apoſtle in Heb. xiii. 11, 12, 13. and they ſhall burn in the fire their ſkins, and their fleſh, and their dung; the prieſts, as Aben Ezra; for there were more than one concerned, as in carrying them out, ſo in the burning of them: the high-prieſt was not concerned in it, for whilſt theſe were burning he was reading, as obſerved on ℣. 24. ſo that he that ſaw the high-prieſt when he was reading, ſaw not the bullock and the goat when they were burnt; and he that ſaw the bullock and the goat burnt, ſaw not the high-prieſt when he read; not becauſe it was not lawful, but becauſe the way was diſtant, and the buſineſs of both was done together [s]: this was done in a place called the place of aſhes [t], where the aſhes of the altar of burnt-offering were carried; ſee the notes on ch. iv. 11, 12.

℣. 28. And he that burneth them ſhall waſh his clothes, and bathe his fleſh in water, &c.] In forty ſeahs of water, as the Targum of Jonathan; that is, every one of thoſe that burnt them, as Aben Ezra obſerves; for theſe being ſin-offerings and had a connexion with the ſins of men, for whom they were offered, the perſons concerned in the carrying and burning of them were equally defiled, and needed waſhing, as the man that led and let go the goat into the wilderneſs: and afterwards he ſhall come into the camp; and have the liberty of converſation with men in civil and religious things, but not till evening, ſo long he was defiled, and according to the Miſnah [u], from the time they got without the walls of the court; and after waſhing and bathing, and when the evening was come, they were clean, and might go where they pleaſed.

℣. 29. And this ſhall be a ſtatute for ever unto you, &c.] As long as the Aaronical prieſthood was in being, and the Levitical diſpenſation laſted, until the true Meſſiah came and put an end to all theſe rites and ceremonies; until that time this ſervice was to be performed by the high-prieſt in ſucceſſion every year: that in the ſeventh month; the month Tiſri, as the Targum of Jonathan explains it, which anſwers to part of our September, and was the ſeventh month from the month Abib or Niſan, anſwering to part of our March; which was appointed the firſt month, upon the Iſraelites coming out of Egypt in that month, and for that reaſon; otherwiſe this ſeventh month, or Tiſri, was the firſt month of the year before, and indeed continued to be ſo notwithſtanding, with reſpect to things civil: on the tenth day of the month; on which day the Jews ſay [w], Moſes deſcended from the mount the ſecond time, with the tables of the law, and the tidings of forgiveneſs of the ſin of the calf; wherefore this day is thought to be appointed a day of affliction and humiliation for that and all other ſins, and for the atonement of them, and on this day the jubilee trumpet was blown, ch. xxv. 9. ye ſhall afflict your ſouls; not only by humiliation of the heart for ſin, and by repentance of it, and by turning from their evil ways, but by corporal faſting, which is chiefly meant by the affliction of their ſouls; ſo the Targum of Jonathan explains it, by abſtaining from eating and from drinking, and from the uſe of baths, and from anointing, and from the uſe of ſhoes, and of the marriage-bed; and ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah [x], on the day of atonement, eating and drinking, and waſhing, and anointing, and putting on of the ſhoes, and the uſe of the bed are forbidden; —whoever eats the quantity of a groſs date with its kernels, or drinks a mouthful (as much as he can hold in his jaws) is guilty: they don't afflict children on the day of atonement, but they train them up a year or two before, that they may be inured to the command; hence this day in Acts xxvii. 9. is called the faſt: and do no work at all; no bodily work, for it was in that reſpect a ſabbath, as it is afterwards called; the Jewiſh canon is, he that eat and did any work was guilty of two ſins, or was obliged to two ſin-offerings [y]: whether it be one of your own country, or a ſtranger that ſojourneth among you; whether a native of the land of Iſrael, that was born there, and of parents who were Iſraelites, or one that was a proſelyte to the Jewiſh religion, a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, as Ben Gerſom interprets it; this law concerning faſting and abſtinence from all ſervile work on the day of atonement, was binding on the one as on the other.

℣. 30. For on that day ſhall the prieſt make an atonement for you to cleanſe you, &c.] By offering the ſin-offering for them; typical of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, whoſe ſoul was made an offering for ſin, whereby atonement is made for it, and whoſe blood cleanſes from all ſin. Though the word prieſt is not in the text, it is rightly ſupplied, as it is by Aben Ezra, for by no other could a ſacrifice be offered, or atonement made; and on the day of atonement only by the high-prieſt, who was a type of Chriſt our high-prieſt, who has by his ſacrifice made reconciliation for ſin, and by himſelf has purged from it: that ye may be clean from all your ſins before the Lord; which is a general phraſe, as Aben Ezra obſerves, and may be underſtood of ſins of ignorance and preſumption; as Chriſt by his blood and ſacrifice has cleanſed all his people from all their ſins of every ſort, ſo that they ſtand pure, and clean, unblameable, and irreproveable before the throne of God, and in his ſight; ſee Col. i. 22. Rev. xiv. 5.

℣. 31. It ſhall be a ſabbath of reſt unto you, &c.] From all ſervile work, as before obſerved; typical of a ceſſation from the performance of ſinful works, at leaſt from a ſinful courſe of life, and from a dependance on works of righteouſneſs, when a man is brought to believe in Chriſt, and in the atonement which he has made, ſee Heb. iv. 3, 10: and ye ſhall afflict your ſouls by a ſtatute for ever; as long as the ceremonial law, and its ſtatutes and ordinances laſted, which were to be until the time of reformation; and till that time came, once a year, on the day of atonement, they were to keep a ſevere faſt, here called an afflicting of their ſouls; and in this reſpect this day differed from the ſeventh-day ſabbath, which was rather a feſtival than a faſt, and is what led ſome of the heathen writers [z] into that miſtake, that the Jews faſted on the ſabbath day. The time of Chriſt's ſufferings, and of his being a ſacrifice for the ſins of his people, was a time of great affliction to his diſciples; then it was the children of the bridegroom faſted, he being taken from them; and true humiliation for ſin, and repentance of it, are occaſioned and influenced by a view of a ſuffering Saviour, and atonement by him; and this may denote alſo, that ſuch that believe believe in Chriſt, and in his atonement, muſt expect afflictions and troubles in this world.

[s] Miſn. Yoma, c. 7. §. 2. [t] Miſn. Zebachim, c. 5. §. 2. & c. 12. §. 5. [u] Miſn. Yoma, c. 6. §. 7. [w] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 6. p. 19. [x] Miſn. Yoma, c. 8. §. 1. 2. 4. [y] Ibid. § 3.
[z] Martial. l. 4. Epigram. 4. Juſtin. e Trogo, l. 36. Suetonius in vita Octav. Aug. c. 76.

℣. 32. And the prieſt whom he ſhall anoint, &c.] Whom God ſhall anoint, or ſhall be anointed, that ſhall ſucceed in the high prieſthood, as Aaron's ſons did, the eldeſt of them, and none but ſuch were anointed: and whom he ſhall conſecrate; or fill his hands, by putting the ſacrifices into them; ſee the notes on Exod. xxviii. 41. and xxix. 9, 24. by which, and by anointing him, and clothing him with the prieſtly garments, he was conſecrated and inſtalled into his office, in order to miniſter in the prieſt's office, in his father's ſtead; a ſon of an high-prieſt was always preferred to any other, and to him it of right belonged to ſucceed his father in his office: and ſuch an one, thus conſecrated, ſhall make the atonement; on this day of atonement; not a common prieſt, but the high-prieſt only; ſo Jarchi obſerves, this expiation of the day of atonement was not right but by an high-prieſt; for the whole ſection is ſaid concerning Aaron, and therefore it muſt needs be ſaid of an high-prieſt that comes after him, that ſhould be as he was: and ſhall put on the linen clothes, even the holy garments; that is, on the day of atonement; in which clothes all the ſervice peculiar to that day, as it was done by Aaron, ſo it was to be done by all his ſucceſſors.

℣. 33. And he ſhall make an atonement for the holy ſanctuary, &c.] The holy of holies, juſt in the ſame manner as Aaron had done, ℣. 16, 20: and he ſhall make an atonement for the tabernacle of the congregation; the court of the tabernacle, and the holy place, and all in them, as Aaron did, in the places referred to: and for the altar; ſee ℣. 18, 20: and he ſhall make an atonement for the prieſts; for himſelf and for his family, and for all the prieſts, as Aaron did by his bullock of the ſin-offering, ℣. 6, 11, 17: and for all the people of the congregation of Iſrael; the whole body of the Iſraelites, and with them the Levites, as Aben Ezra obſerves, for they are not called prieſts; indeed every prieſt was a levite, but not every levite a prieſt; wherefore theſe were included not among the prieſts, but in the congregation of Iſrael. Theſe ſeveral atonements, according to Ben Gerſom, were ſeparate and diſtinct, and did not hinder one another, or interfere with one another.

℣. 34. And this ſhall be an everlaſting ſtatute unto you, &c.] Which is the third time of its being obſerved, to ſhew that this was a law of conſiderable moment, and to be taken notice of, and ſtrictly and cloſely kept by the prieſts, to whom theſe words are directed, and on whom the chief ſervice of the day lay: to make atonement for the children of Iſrael once a year; namely, on the tenth day of the ſeventh month, or Tiſri, as before directed: and he did as the Lord commanded Moſes; that is, Aaron did, as the Targum of Jonathan, Aben Ezra and Ben Gerſom ſupply it; when the day of atonement came, as Jarchi expreſſes it, he did according to this order, to fulfil the decree of the king, even the King of kings; whoſe will it was that ſuch a day ſhould be yearly obſerved, and ſuch and ſuch rules performed in it; ſo very ſignificant of Chriſt, and of the atonement to be made by him, and which has been made.

CHAP. XVII.

IN this chapter a law is given, ordering all ſorts of perſons, Iſraelites and ſojourners, to bring their ſacrifices to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, on pain of being cut off, ℣. 1—9. and a ſpecial and particular prohibition of ſacrificing to devils is delivered out, ℣. 7. and the eating of blood, and of every thing that dies of itſelf, or is torn with beaſts, is forbidden under the above penalty, ℣. 10—16.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After he had given him the law about the day of atonement, and the rites belonging to it: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto Aaron, and his ſons, &c.] Who were now conſtituted prieſts, the buſineſs of whoſe office it was to offer the ſacrifices of the people, ordinary and extraordinary: and to all the children of Iſrael; who were all under obligation to ſacrifices at certain times; under whom may be comprehended the Levites, who were not prieſts, and the ſtrangers that ſojourned in Iſrael, for theſe are concerned in the following law: and ſay unto them; which is ſpoken to Moſes, who was to ſay what follows to Aaron, and by him to his ſons, and by his ſons to the people of Iſrael, and by them to the ſtrangers: this is the thing which the Lord hath commanded; ordered to be obſerved as his will and pleaſure by every one of them: ſaying; namely, what follows.

℣. 3. What man ſoever there be of the houſe of Iſrael, &c.] Whether high or low, rich or poor: that killeth an ox, or lamb, or goat in the camp; which are particularly mentioned, as Gerſom obſerves, becauſe of theſe the offerings were; for the law reſpects the killing of them not for common food, but for ſacrifice, as appears from the following verſes; for this law was to be a ſtatute for ever, whereas in that ſenſe it was not, and could not be obſerved, eſpecially when they were come into the land of Canaan; nor would it have been decent or convenient to have brought ſuch vaſt numbers of cattle every day to be killed at the door of the tabernacle, and muſt have made the ſervice of the prieſts extremely laborious to kill them, or even to ſee that they were killed aright: or that killeth it out of the camp; which furniſhes out another reaſon againſt the ſame notion, ſince it was not uſual to kill for common food without the camp, but in their own tents within it; whereas to ſacrifice without the camp was commonly done.

℣. 4. And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] Near to which ſtood the altar of burnt-offering to offer it upon, and the prieſts ready for ſuch ſervice: now the Lord would have every ſacrifice brought thither to offer an offering to the Lord before the tabernacle; that it might be offered publickly, and be known to be offered to the Lord, and not to idols or devils, as in a following verſe; and ſo to prevent private idolatry, and private perſons from intruding into the prieſt's office; and this was typical of the acceptance of all ſpiritual ſacrifices in the church of God, through Chriſt the miniſter of the tabernacle, which God pitched, and not man; and who is the door into the houſe of God, where ſuch ſacrifices are publickly to be offered up: blood ſhall be imputed unto that man, he hath ſhed blood; which though it was only the blood of a beaſt, yet being ſhed as a ſacrifice for man, and typical of the blood of Chriſt to be ſhed for man, was ſacred and precious to God; and therefore he reſented the ſhedding of it to any but himſelf, or by any perſon, or in any place but by his appointment; ſuch a man was to be puniſhed as a murderer, idolatry being equally hainous in the ſight of God as murder, ſee Iſ. lxvi. 3: and that man ſhall be cut off from among his people; not merely excommunicated from the church of God, deprived of the privileges of his houſe, but even put to death; for ſuch a man was guilty of blood, that is, of death, and therefore to be put to death either by the hand of the civil magiſtrate, if his caſe was known and came under their cognizance, or by the immediate hand of God by a premature death, which ſeems to be chiefly intended; ſee ℣. 10.

℣ 5. To the end that the children of Iſrael may bring their ſacrifices which they offer in the open field, &c.] Which before the tabernacle was erected they were uſed to offer there, as it was lawful for them to do, and on high places, but now unlawful; though ſometimes this was diſpenſed with by the Lord, and was done by ſome of his prophets, as Samuel, David and Elijah, though not by prieſts: even that they may bring them unto the Lord, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation unto the prieſt; by whom they were to be offered, and by him only, and which is a principal reaſon why they were ordered to be brought thither: and offer them for peace-offerings unto the Lord; which tho' only mentioned, include all others. Theſe are only taken notice of becauſe moſt frequent, and becauſe moſt profitable to the people, having a part of them; wherefore if theſe were to be brought to the tabernacle, which came the neareſt of any to their meals and feaſts in their own houſes, then much more burnt-offerings and ſin-offerings, in which the Lord had ſo great a concern.

℣. 6. And the prieſt ſhall ſprinkle the blood upon the altar of the Lord, &c.] The altar of burnt-offering, ch. i. 5: at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; near to which it ſtood, ſee ch. i. 5: and burn the fat for a ſweet ſavour to the Lord; the fat that covered the inwards, the kidneys, the flanks and caul of the liver; ſee Lev. iii.

℣. 7. And they ſhall no more offer their ſacrifices unto devils, &c.] As it ſeems they had done, which was monſtrouſly ſhocking, and eſpecially by a people that had the knowledge of the true God. Such ſhocking idolatry has been committed, and ſtill is among the Indians both Eaſt and Weſt: when Columbus diſcovered Hiſpaniola, and entered it, he found the inhabitants worſhippers of images they called Zemes, which were in the likeneſs of painted devils, which they took to be the mediators and meſſengers of the great God, the only one, eternal, omnipotent and inviſible [a]; and ſo at Calecut and Pego in the Eaſt-Indies, and in other parts thereof, they ſacrifice to the devil [b]: one can hardly think the Iſraelites would give into ſuch groſs idolatry as this; wherefore by devils may be meant idols in general; for if men do not worſhip God and Chriſt, let them worſhip what they will, it is only worſhipping devils, 1 Cor. x. 20. Rev. ix. 20. and ſo the calves of Jeroboam are called devils, 2 Chron. xi. 15. hence the golden calf alſo, the Iſraelites worſhipped but lately in the wilderneſs, might go by the ſame name; to which ſenſe is the Targum of Jonatham, "and they ſhall not offer again their "ſacrifices to idols, which are like to devils." The word here uſed ſignifies goats, and theſe creatures were worſhipped by the Egyptians, and ſo might be by the Iſraelites, whilſt among them; this is aſſerted by ſeveral writers. Diodorus Siculus ſays [c], they deified the goat, as the Grecians did Priapus, and for the ſame reaſon; and that the Pans and the Satyrs were had in honour by men on the ſame account; and Herodotus [d] obſerves, that the Egyptians paint and engrave Pan as the Greeks do, with the face and thighs of a goat, and therefore do not kill a goat, becauſe the Mendeſians reckon Pan among the gods; and of the Mendeſians he ſays, that they worſhip goats, and the he-goats rather than the ſhe-goats; wherefore in the Egyptian language both Pan and a goat are called Mendes; and Strabo [e] reports of Mendes, that there Pan and the goat are worſhipped: if theſe ſort of creatures were worſhipped by the Egyptians in the times of Moſes, which is to be queſtioned, the Iſraelites might be ſuppoſed to have followed them in it; but if that be true, which Maimonides [f] ſays of the Zabii, a ſet of idolaters among the Chaldeans, and other people, long before the times of Moſes, that ſome of them worſhipped devils, whom they ſuppoſed to be in the form of goats, the Iſraelites might have given in to this idolatry from them, and be the occaſion of this prohibition: after whom they have gone a whoring; idolatry being a ſpiritual adultery, a forſaking God, who had taken them into a conjugal relation, and been as an huſband to them, and cleaving to idols, which were as paramours; ſee Jer. xxxi. 32. Ezek. xvi. 26: this ſhall be a ſtatute for ever unto them throughout their generations; not only this of not ſacrificing to devils, but all before commanded, particularly that they ſhould bring their ſacrifices to the prieſt, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

℣. 8. And thou ſhalt ſay unto them, &c.] To Aaron and his ſons, and to the children of Iſrael, as in ℣. 2: whatſoever man there be of the houſe of Iſrael; belonging to that nation, and to any of its tribes and families, of whatever age; as a young man or an old man, as the Targum of Jonathan; or of whatſoever rank, claſs and condition in life: or of the ſtrangers which ſojourn among you; that is, of the proſelytes among them, not the proſelytes of the gate, who were not admitted to offer ſacrifice on the altar of the Lord; and if they were, they could not for non-compliance with this law be cut off from the Jewiſh church and commonwealth, of which they were no part, only ſuffered to dwell among them, but partook of none of their privileges; but this is to be underſtood of proſelytes of righteouſneſs, ſuch as embraced the Jewiſh religion, and ſubmitted to all the rituals of it, and had communion with the body of the people, and ſhared in all the immunities of their civil and church-ſtate, and ſo liable in caſe of any malpractice to be cut off from them: that offereth a burnt-offering or ſacrifice; any other ſacrifice beſides a burnt-offering, as a ſin-offering, or a treſpaſs-offering, or a peace-offering.

℣. 9. And bringeth it not to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer it unto the Lord, &c.] In a public manner, by one of the prieſts of the Lord; by which it might appear that he did not take upon him to be a prieſt himſelf, nor to offer

[a] P. Martyr. de Angleria, Decad 1. l. 9. Bibliothec. l 1. p. 58, 79.
[b] Vartoman. Navigat. l. 5. c. 2. 23. & l. 6. c. 16. 27.
[c] Geograph. l. 17. p. 551.
[d] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 46.
[e] Bib-
[f] Morch Nevochim, p. 3. c. 46.

offer it to an idol: that man ſhall be cut off from his people; from being one of them, and having communion with them, and ſharing in their privileges; or by death, either by the hand of the civil magiſtrate, or rather by the hand of God; ſo Jarchi, his ſeed ſhall be cut off, and his days ſhall be cut off; that is, he ſhall die childleſs, and in the midſt of his days, a violent and premature death.

℣. 10. And whatſoever man there be of the houſe of Iſrael, &c.] That is by birth an Iſraelite, of every age, ſex or condition, as before: or of the ſtrangers that ſojourn among you; proſelytes of righteouſneſs, for the following law was only obligatory on ſuch, and upon Iſraelites, as appears from its being lawful to give or ſell that which dies of itſelf to a ſtranger, that is, to a proſelyte of the gate, or to an heathen, Deut. xiv. 21: that eateth any manner of blood; that is, as Ben Gerſom interprets it, of beaſts and birds, concerning which the prohibition only is according to him; for as for the blood of others there was no obligation, nor were any guilty on account of them; particularly the blood of fiſhes, and of locuſts, or human blood, the blood of a man's teeth, which a man might ſwallow without being guilty of the breach of this law [g]. Some reſtrain this to the blood of the ſacrifices before treated of; but Jarchi obſerves, leſt any ſhould think, becauſe it is ſaid, it is the blood that maketh the atonement for the ſoul; that a man is not guilty only on account of the blood of ſanctified things, therefore it is ſaid any manner of blood: I will ſet my face againſt that ſoul that eateth blood; ſignifying how greatly he ſhould be provoked thereby, how much he ſhould reſent it, how exceedingly diſpleaſing it would be to him, and what ſeverity might be expected to be exerciſed towards him for it; for dreadful it is to have the face of God ſet againſt a man, ſee Pſ. xxxiv. 16. Maimonides [h] obſerves, that this form of ſpeech does not occur in any third precept beſides theſe two, concerning idolatry or ſacrificing a ſon to Moloch, ch. xx. 3. and eating blood; becauſe eating of blood gives an occaſion to one ſpecies of idolatry, worſhipping of devils, ſee ch. xix. 26: and I will cut him off from among his people; which confirms the above ſenſe of the phraſe of cutting off, as expreſſive of death by the hand of God; ſee the notes on ℣. 4, 9.

℣. 11. For the life of the fleſh is in the blood, &c.] The animal life or ſoul, the life and ſoul of every creature, and even the animal life and ſoul of man; agreeable to which our famous Dr. Harvey, who found out the circulation of the blood, ſays of it, that it is the principal part which firſt appears in generation; is the genital part, the fountain of life, the firſt that lives, and the laſt that dies; the primary ſeat of the ſoul or life, from whence motion and pulſation take their riſe; in which the innate heat is produced, the vital ſpirit is ingenerated, and the life conſiſts [i]; and therefore it is ſpread all over the body, and according to the condition that it is in, ſuch is the health, and ſuch the diſeaſes of the body; yea, the affections of the mind, ſuch as fear, ſhame, joy and anger are diſcovered by it. Hence Antoninus the emperor, more than once, calls the ſoul a vapour or exhalation ariſing out of the blood [k]; and the ſentiments of various Jewiſh writers agree herewith: ſays Aben Ezra, it is a truth, that the ſoul or life, with which man lives, is in the blood of the heart; ſo ſays Jarchi, the ſoul or life depends upon the blood; and Ben Gerſom obſerves, that the blood is the veſſel of the ſoul to carry in it the fundamental heat, and food to the parts of the body; and hence the animal only dies, when the blood is removed: and I have given it unto you to make an atonement for your ſouls; that being the life of the creature, was given for theirs to preſerve them alive, and ſecure them from death their ſins deſerved; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan is, for the ſins of the ſoul; which ſhews that theſe ſacrifices were vicarious, in the room of men, and for the life of them, and to atone for them; and is the reaſon given why blood ſhould not be eaten, at leaſt whilſt theſe typical expiatory ſacrifices were uſed. Ben Gerſom ſeems to intimate, as if it was only the blood of thoſe that was forbidden: his words are, hence we learn, ſays he, that they were not guilty of cutting off, but on account of the blood, which, according to its way, was put upon the altar; and this was the blood of the ſoul, as it ſaith, the blood of the bullock, and the blood of the goat; but the blood that was preſſed out, and the blood of the members, they were not guilty of cutting off, on account of them: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the ſoul; ſo here was life for life, ſoul for ſoul, as Aben Ezra expreſſes it; it was a vicarious ſacrifice and atonement, typical of the ſacrifice and atonement of Chriſt, in the room and ſtead of his people, there being no atonement, no remiſſion of ſins without ſhedding of blood; and the reaſon of the prohibition of eating blood, was to direct to that blood as the atonement for ſin, and to keep up a reverence of it, and a value and eſteem for it; but now ſeeing that blood has been ſhed, and atonement made by it, the end of the law is anſwered, and the reaſon of it ceaſed, and ſo the law itſelf; and as Chriſt's blood is now to be eaten in a ſpiritual ſenſe, the eating of blood in a literal ſenſe, properly dreſſed, is lawful. And indeed, as before obſerved, the law concerning it was never binding upon Gentiles, only on Jews and proſelytes.

℣. 12. Therefore I ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, no ſoul of you ſhall eat blood, &c.] Great or ſmall, as Jarchi obſerves, for the reaſon above given; which though not expreſſed before, was the true reaſon of this law, which had been given before, and now repeated, ſee ch. iii. 17. and vii. 26, 27: neither ſhall any ſtranger that ſojourneth among you eat blood; any proſelyte of righteouſneſs; this is not obſerved before.

℣. 13. And whatſoever man there be of the children of Iſrael, or of the ſtrangers that ſojourn among you, &c.] This form of ſpeaking, which is often uſed in this chapter, is ſtill obſerved, to point out the perſons on whom the law is obligatory, Iſraelites and proſelytes of righteouſneſs: which hunteth and catcheth any beaſt or fowl that may be eaten; that is, clean beaſts and fowls, ſuch as by a former law are obſerved; and this excepts unclean ones, as Jarchi, but includes all clean ones, whether wild or tame, that may be taken and killed, though not taken in hunting; but ſuch are particularly mentioned, becauſe not only hunting beaſts and fowl were common, but becauſe ſuch perſons were more ruſtic and brutiſh, and being hungry, were in haſte for their food, and not ſo careful about the ſlaying of the creatures, and of taking care about their blood: he ſhall even pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with duſt; that it might not be eaten by men,

[g] Hilchot Maacolot Aſurot, c. 6. § 1. p. 302, 303, &c.
[h] Ut ſupra.
[i] De Generatione Animal. Exercitat. 51.
[k] De Seipſo, l. 5. §. 25. & l. 6. §. 11.

nor licked up by beasts, and that there might be kept up a reverend esteem of blood, being the life of the creature; and this covering of it, as Maimonides [l] tells us, was accompanied with a benediction in this form, "blessed art thou, O Lord "our God, the king of the world, who hath sanc-"tified us by his precepts, and hath given com-"mandment to us concerning covering of the "blood:" and the same writer elsewhere [m] gives us another reason of this law, that the Israelites might not meet and feast about the blood, as the Zabians did, who when they slew a beast, took its blood and put it into a vessel, or into a hole dug by them, and sat and feasted around it; see ch. xix. 26.

ver. 14. For it is the life of all flesh, &c.] Of every animal: the blood of it is for the life thereof; for the production, preservation and continuance of life; that on which life depends, as Jarchi observes: therefore I said unto the children of Israel, ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh; of beasts or birds, whose flesh was fit for food; but their blood was not to be eaten for the reasons before given: for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof; which is repeated, that it might be observed and taken notice of, as that in which the force of the reason lay for giving this law: whosoever eateth it shall be cut off; by death, whether he be an Israelite or a proselyte of righteousness; wherefore if this law was now in force, its penalty also would be continued, whereas it is not, and which shows the abrogation of it.

ver. 15. And every soul that eateth that which died of itself, &c.] Through any disease upon it, or by means of any other creature seizing upon it, and worrying it, or was not lawfully killed; if a man eat ever so little of it, even but the quantity of an olive, it was a breach of this law; which is connected with the preceding, there being a similarity between them, because such creatures must have their blood in them, not being regularly let out, and so eating of them would offend against the above law. It is very probable, as Grotius thinks, that Pythagoras took his notion from hence, and strictly enjoined his followers to abstain from all animals that died of themselves, as Laertius [n], and Ælianus [o] relate; and which Porphyry [p] suggests, was what universally obtained among men: or that which was torn; with beasts, though not dead, yet ready to die, and so unfit for food; see the note on Exod. xxii. 31: whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger; a native of Israel, or a proselyte of righteousness; for as for any other stranger, he might eat of it, Deut. xiv. 22: he shall both wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water; in 40 seahs of water, as the Targum of Jonathan, dip himself all over: and be unclean until the evening; and so have no conversation with men in civil or religious things: then shall he be clean; when he has washed his garments, and bathed himself, and the evening is come, and then shall be admitted to society as before; this is to be understood of one who ignorantly eats of the above things, not knowing them to be such; otherwise if he did it presumptuously, he was to be punished.

ver. 16. But if he wash them not, &c.] Neither wash his clothes: nor bathe his flesh; if he is negligent, and does not take care to make use of these ablutions: then he shall bear his iniquity; his guilt shall remain on him, and he shall suffer the punishment the law exposes him to, either by the hand of God, or the civil magistrate, which is due to persons that enter into the sanctuary in their uncleanness, or eat of holy things. For not washing his body the punishment was cutting off, and for not washing his garments, beating, as Jarchi says.

CHAP. XVIII.

IN this chapter the Israelites are directed in general not to imitate the customs and practices of the Egyptians and Canaanites, but to keep the ordinances, statutes and judgments of the Lord, ver. 1—5. and they are instructed particularly to avoid incestuous marriages, ver. 6—18. carnal copulation with a menstruous women, ver. 19. adultery, ver. 20. letting any of their seed pass through the fire to Molech, ver. 21. sodomy, ver. 22. and bestiality, ver. 23. and they are deterred from these things by observing to them the pollution and destruction which they brought on the inhabitants of Canaan, and would bring the same on them should they commit them, ver. 24—30.

ver. 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] He continued speaking to him, after he had delivered to him the laws respecting the day of atonement, and the bringing of the sacrifices to the door of the tabernacle, and particularly concerning the Israelites not worshipping devils, as they had done in Egypt: the Lord proceeds to deliver out others, the more effectually to guard against both the immoral and idolatrous practices of the Egyptians and Canaanites: saying; as follows.

ver. 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, &c.] To the heads of their tribes, that they might deliver to them the following laws; or Moses is bid to publish them among them, either by word of mouth, or by writing, or both: and say unto them, I am the Lord your God; with which they were to be introduced; shewing the right he had to enact and enjoin such laws, since he was Jehovah, the Being of beings, and from whom they received their beings; their sovereign Lord and King, who had a right to rule over them, and command what he pleased; and also the obligation they lay under to him to regard them, and yield a chearful obedience to them, since he was their God, not only that had made them, but had redeemed them out of Egypt; and who had made a covenant with them, and had taken special care of them, and had bestowed many wonderful favours on them; and for this purpose is this phrase often used in this chapter, and very frequently in the next.

ver. 3. After the doings of the land of Egypt, wherein ye dwelt, shall ye not do, &c.] Where they had dwelt many years, and were just come out from thence, and where they had learned many of their evil practices; not only their idolatrous ones referred to in the preceding chapter, which it is certain they followed, Ezek. xx. 7, 8. but also their immoral practices, particularly respecting incestuous marriages, after insisted on, some of which were were eſtabliſhed by a law among them; ſo Diodorus Siculus relates [q], that it paſſed into a law with the Egyptians, contrary to the common cuſtom of all others, that men might marry their own ſiſters; which is one of the inceſtuous marriages taken notice of in this chapter and forbid: and after the doings of the land of Canaan, whither I bring you, ſhall ye not do; which land had been promiſed to their anceſtors and to them long ago, and whither they were now going under divine direction and guidance, to inherit it, and are here particularly warned of the evil practices among them, that they might avoid them: Maimonides [r] ſays, theſe are what our Rabbins call the ways of the Amorites, (the principal people of the nations of the land of Canaan), and which, he adds, are as branches of the magic art; namely, ſuch, which don't follow from natural reaſon, but from magical operation, and depend upon the diſpoſitions and orders of the ſtars, and ſo were neceſſarily led to worſhip them: hence, they ſay, in whatſoever is any thing of medicine, in it is nothing of the way of the Amorites; by which they mean nothing elſe than this, that every thing is lawful in which there appears a natural reaſon for it; and on the contrary, all others are unlawful: but here reſpect is had not to magical operations but to inceſtuous marriages, which prevailed among that people, and which they might have received from their anceſtor Canaan, who learned them from his father Ham, of whom Beroſus [s] writes, that even before the flood he corrupted mankind; aſſerting and putting it in practice, that men might lie with their mothers, ſiſters, daughters, and with males and brutes, or any other, for which he was caſt out by Noah: neither ſhall ye walk in their ordinances; which they ordained, appointed, and ſettled, for they were ſuch a people, the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of, which framed miſchief or wickedneſs by a law, Pſ. xciv. 20. ſo Diodorus Siculus ſays of the inceſtuous marriage before referred to, and which the above writer, Beroſus, derives from Ham their anceſtor, that they are ſaid νομοθετησαι, to paſs into a law; but Aben Ezra puts another ſenſe on theſe words, let no man uſe himſelf to walk in this way until it becomes an ordinance or ſtatute unto him; cuſtom is ſecond nature, and in courſe of time has the force of a law, wherefore bad cuſtoms ſhould be ſtrictly guarded againſt.

[l] Hilchot Shechitah, c. 4. §. 1. [m] Moreh Nevochim, p. 3. c. 46. [n] In Vit. Pythagor. l. 8. p. 588.
[o] Var. Hist. l. 4. c. 17. [p] De Abstinentia, l. 3. §. 18.

℣. 4. Ye ſhall do my judgments, &c.] Which are juſt and right, and according to the rules of juſtice and equity; theſe are things, as Jarchi obſerves, which are ſaid in the law with judgment, or are laws framed with the higheſt reaſon, even by the judgment of God himſelf, whoſe judgment is always according to truth: Aben Ezra thinks, theſe are the judicial laws in Exod. xxi. xxii. xxiii. but though they may include them, they have more particular reſpect to the following laws: and keep mine ordinances; which he had ordained and appointed of his own will and pleaſure, which Jarchi calls the decree of the king, or which he decreed and determined as a king, having abſolute power over his ſubjects to enact and enjoin what he pleaſed; wherefore ſome think theſe refer to ceremonial laws, which depended upon the will of the law-giver, and were not founded in any natural ſenſe or reaſon, wherefore it follows: I am the Lord your God; who had a right to make what laws he pleaſed, being their ſovereign, and which they in gratitude as well as in juſtice ought to obey, he being their God, their covenant-God, who had done great and good things for them.

℣. 5. Ye ſhall therefore keep my ſtatutes and my judgments, &c.] The ſame as before; theſe they were to keep in their minds and memories, and to obſerve them and do them: which if a man do he ſhall live in them; live a long life in the land of Canaan, in great happineſs and proſperity, ſee Deut. xxx. 20. Iſ. i. 19. for as for eternal life, that was never intended to be had, nor was it poſſible it could be had and enjoyed by obedience to the law, which fallen man is unable to keep; but is what was graciouſly promiſed and provided in the covenant of grace before the world was, to come, through Chriſt, as a free gift to all that believe in him, ſee Gal. iii. 11, 12, 21. though ſome Jewiſh writers interpret this of eternal life, as Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and Ben Gerſom: I am the Lord; that has enjoined theſe ſtatutes and judgments, and promiſed life to the doers of them, able and faithful to perform what is promiſed.

℣. 6. None of you ſhall approach to any that is near of kin to him, &c.] Or to all the reſt of his fleſh [t], which together with his make one fleſh, who are of the ſame fleſh and blood with him, and are united together in the bonds of conſanguinity; and ſuch, with reſpect to a man, are his mother, ſiſter, and daughter; his mother, of whom he was born, his ſiſter, who lay in and ſprung from the ſame venter he did, and his daughter, who is his own fleſh; and with reſpect to a woman, her father, brother, and ſon, who are in the ſame degree of relation, and both ſexes are included in this prohibition; for though in the original text it is a man, a man [u], yet as it takes in every man, ſo every woman: hence, as Jarchi obſerves, it is expreſſed in the plural number, do not ye approach, to caution both male and female; and it is alſo underſtood by the Talmudiſts [w], of Gentiles as well as Iſraelites, for they aſk what is the meaning of the phraſe a man, a man? the deſign of it is, they ſay, to comprehend the Gentiles, who are equally cautioned againſt inceſts as the Iſraelites; and indeed the inhabitants of the land of Canaan are ſaid to defile the land, with the inceſts and other abominations hereafter mentioned, and for which they were drove out of it: now when man and woman are forbidden to approach to thoſe of the ſame fleſh and blood with them, the ſenſe is not, that they may not come into each others company, or make uſe of any civil or friendly ſalutations, or have a free and familiar converſation with each other, provided that modeſty and chaſtity be preſerved; but they are not ſo to draw near as to lie with, or have carnal knowledge of one another, in which ſenſe the phraſe is uſed, Gen. xx. 4. Iſ. viii. 3. Ezek. xviii. or to tempt to it or ſolicit it, and as it follows which explains the meaning of it, to uncover their nakedneſs; that is, thoſe parts, which by a contrary way of ſpeaking, are ſo called, which ſhould never be naked or expoſed to view; but ſhould be always covered, as nature teaches to do, and as our firſt parents did, when they perceived themſelves naked, the

[q] Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 23. [r] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 37. [s] Antiq. l. 3. fol. 25.
[t] אל כל שאר בשרו ad omnes reliquias carnis ſuæ, Montanus; ad quaſcunque reliquias carnis ſuæ, Tigurine verſion.
[u] איש איש vir, vir, Montanus, Vatablus, Druſius. [w] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 57. 2. T. Hieroſ. Kiddushin, fol. 58. 2. 3.

and were aſhamed: this phraſe ſignifies the ſame as to lie with another, or have carnal knowledge of them, wherefore the following laws are generally underſtood of inceſtuous marriages; for if ſuch an action is not to be done between perſons ſtanding in ſuch a relation, as here in general and afterwards more particularly deſcribed, then there ought to be no intermarriages between them; and if ſuch marriages are forbidden, and ſuch actions unlawful in a married ſtate, then much more in an unmarried one; wherefore the ſeveral following inſtances are ſo many breaches of the ſeventh command, and ſo many explications and illuſtrations of it, and conſequently of a moral nature, and binding upon all men, Jews and Gentiles: I am the Lord; that gave this caution, and enjoined this prohibition, and would greatly reſent and ſeverely revenge the neglect of it: the particulars follow.

℣. 7. The nakedneſs of thy father, or the nakedneſs of thy mother, ſhalt thou not uncover, &c.] By uncovering a father's nakedneſs is not meant any thing ſimilar to what befel Noah, which Ham beheld with pleaſure, and the other two ſons of Noah ſtudiouſly and with reverence to their father covered; nor any ſodomitical practice of a ſon with his father; as Gerſom interprets it; but the ſame is meant by both phraſes, and the words are by many interpreters thus rendered, the nakedneſs of thy father, that is [x], the nakedneſs of thy mother thou ſhalt not uncover; for what is the mother's is the father's, and uncovering the one is uncovering the other; wherefore the mother only is made mention of in the next clauſe, where the reaſon of this prohibition is given: ſhe is thy mother, thou ſhalt not uncover her nakedneſs; that is, not lie with her, nor marry her, becauſe ſhe is his mother that bore him, of whom he was born, and therefore ought not to become his wife, or be taken into his bed; ſuch a marriage muſt be inceſtuous and ſhocking; ſuch were the marriages of Oedipus with his mother Jocaſta, and of Nero with Agripina; though the words will bear another ſenſe, that a woman may not marry her father, which may be meant by the firſt clauſe, nor a man his mother, intended in the next; and where indeed it is not expreſſed, females in the ſame degree of relation are included with the males, and under the ſame prohibition; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan explains this, a woman ſhall not have to do with her father, nor a man with his mother; as Lot's two daughters had with him, and the Perſians with their mothers; among whom ſuch inceſtuous marriages and copulations were frequent, and eſpecially among their Magi [y], who might not perform their office unleſs they had lain with their mothers, ſiſters, and daughters [z], or were begotten in ſuch inceſt [a]: a man guilty of ſuch inceſtuous copulations was curſed by the law of Moſes, Deut. xxvii. 20. this is contrary to nature, what the brute creation abhors; a camel will not cover its dam: Ariſtotle [b] reports of one who was betrayed into it by his keeper, who after he had diſcovered it, fixed his teeth in him and ſlew him; and he alſo relates of a horſe after that he had ignorantly done the ſame, ran away in great haſte and caſt himſelf down from a precipice headlong.

℣. 8. The nakedneſs of thy father's wife ſhalt thou not uncover, &c.] That is, who is indeed a man's father's wife, but not his own mother, but a ſtepmother or mother-in-law; or otherwiſe this law would coincide with the former; a man lying with ſuch an one is accurſed by the law, Deut. xxvii. 27. ſuch an inceſtuous copulation was that of Reuben with Bilhah, and Abſalom with his father's concubines or ſecondary wives, and ſuch an inceſtuous marriage was that of the Corinthian, 1 Cor. v. 1. and of Antiochus Soter, king of Syria, with Stratonice his mother-in-law [c]: and even it was criminal to do this after a father's death, as Jarchi interprets it; and though ſhe was only betrothed, and not married, and the father dead after ſuch betrothing, as Gerſom; nay, though ſhe was divorced by the father, yet was not lawful for the ſon to have, no not after his death: it is thy father's nakedneſs; being eſpouſed to him, and ſo one fleſh with him; and the ſon and father being one fleſh, ſuch a mixture muſt be unlawful; and ſince then the nakedneſs of a mother-in-law is the father's, then ſurely that of an own mother's muſt be ſo likewiſe, which confirms a ſenſe given of it in the preceding verſe: Cicero [d] exclaims againſt ſuch marriages as incredible and unheard of, as inſtances of unbridled luſt and ſingular impudence.

℣. 9. The nakedneſs of thy ſiſter, &c.] To lie with one in ſo near a relation is exceeding criminal, and for which the law curſes a man, Deut. xxvii. 22. and to marry her is not lawful; for though it was neceſſary for the propagation of mankind that a man ſhould marry his ſiſter, for who elſe could Cain and Abel marry? yet afterwards when there was an increaſe of mankind, and there were people enow remote from each other, it became unlawful for perſons in ſuch near ties of conſanguinity to marry with each other; though the Egyptians did in imitation of Iſis and Oſiris [e], and ſo the Perſians following the example of Cambyſes [f]: the daughter of thy father, or the daughter of thy mother; whether ſhe is a ſiſter both by father and mother's ſide, or whether only by the father's ſide and not the mother's, as Sarah was to Abraham, Gen. xx. 12. or only by the mother's ſide and not the father's: whether ſhe be born at home or born abroad; not whether born and brought up in his and her father's houſe, or born and brought up in another place and province; though there were ſome, as Aben Ezra obſerves, that ſo interpreted it, according to the ſenſe of the word in Gen. l. 23. but rather, the ſenſe is, as that writer gives it, whether born according to the law of the houſe of Iſrael, after eſpouſals and marriage, or without it; that is, whether begotten in lawful marriage or not, whether a legitimate offſpring or ſpurious, born in adultery and whoredom, whether on the father or mother's ſide; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, whom thy father begat of another woman, or of thy mother, or whom thy mother bore or brought forth, of thy father, or of another man; and to the ſame purpoſe Onkelos: even their nakedneſs thou ſhalt not uncover; neither lie with, or have carnal knowledge of, nor marry one or the other.

℣. 10. The nakedneſs of thy ſon's daughter, or of thy daughter's daughter, &c.] A man might not marry his grand-daughter, whether a deſcendant of his ſon or of his daughter, nor any farther off deſcending from him in a right line, not his great grand-daughter, and ſo on; and if he might not marry his grand-daughter, much leſs his own daughter,

[x] ועורות id eſt, nuditatem vel pudenda, Vatablus, Fagius, Piſcator.
[y] Sex. Empir. Pyrrh. l. 3. c. 24.
[z] Patricides apud Selden. de jure natur. Gent. l. 5. c. 11. p. 624.
[a] Nam magus ex matre & gnato naſcatur oportet. Catull. Epigr. 91.
[b] Hiſt. Animal. l. 9. c. 47.
[c] Vid. Julian. in Miſopogon, p. 342, &c.
[d] Orat. 14. pro A. Cluentio Avito.
[e] Diodor. Sicul. l. 1. p. 23.
[f] Herodot. Thalia, ſive, l. 3. c. 31.

ter, as Jarchi obſerves, for the relation is ſtill nearer; therefore that being prohibited, this in courſe muſt, though not mentioned: even their nakedneſs thou ſhalt not uncover; neither debauch nor marry ſuch an one: for their's is thine own nakedneſs; which ſprung from his, being the deſcendants either of his ſon or daughter; the Targum of Jonathan is, "for they are as thy nakedneſs," his own fleſh and blood.

℣. 11. The nakedneſs of thy father's wife's daughter, &c.] Either the daughter of his father by another wife, which ſeems to be countenanced by what follows: begotten of thy father, ſhe is thy ſiſter; but then this coincides with what is prohibited, ℣. 9. the daughter of thy father; that is, by another woman than a man's mother, only with this difference, that there is added, or daughter of thy mother, that is, by another man, than a man's own father; ſo that there is a prohibition of a ſiſter whether by father or mother's ſide; here only as by the father's ſide, and ſo is only a part of that law; and as ſome think, is for the confirmation of it, as Aben Ezra obſerves; or elſe the ſenſe, as he thinks, is, that if a man marries a woman and ſhe has a little daughter by a former huſband, that daughter may not be given in marriage to his ſon; and ſo the Septuagint verſion finiſhes this clauſe firſt, before it gives the other, which it conſiders as diſtinct from it thus, the ſhame of thy father's wife's daughter thou ſhalt not uncover; and then makes a diſtinct law of the latter; ſhe that is begotten of thy father is thy ſiſter, thou ſhalt not uncover her ſhame; but then this laſt falls in with ℣. 9. the Sadducees, as Aben Ezra alſo obſerves, by whom he means the Karaites, interpret it not of a mother's daughter, but of one brought up and educated by a man's father, and ſo is his adopted daughter, whom his ſon might not marry; and thus with the Romans, it is ſaid [g], that adoptive kindred hindered marriage between parents and children altogether; and among brethren ſo far forth as the loſs of freedom did not intervene: ſome underſtand this law in this light, as de Dieu, that in ℣. 9. the ſon of a ſecond marriage is forbidden to marry with an half ſiſter of the firſt marriage, whether ſhe is the father's daughter, that is, which the father had by his deceaſed wife, or the mother's daughter, that is, which his mother had by a deceaſed huſband; but here the ſon of a firſt marriage is forbidden with a half ſiſter of a ſecond marriage, which his mother-in-law has bore to his father, and is therefore called the daughter of thy father's wife, that is, of thy ſtep-mother, but ſo the ſame may be ſaid to be begotten of thy father, and therefore one begotten in a former marriage may not be underſtood; but then as this forbids the marriage of a brother with a ſiſter, that is, of the ſame father, though not of the ſame mother, it falls in with the former law; wherefore ſome [h] have been of opinion, that this law forbids a man to marry the daughter of a woman whom his father has taken to wife, who was his deceaſed brother's wife, upon the law in Deut. xxv. 5. by which marriage ſhe became the father's daughter, and the ſon's ſiſter; wherefore they take the phraſe, begotten of thy father to ſignify being a-kin to thy father; which if it can be eſtabliſhed, makes a diſtinct law: Jarchi obſerves, on this phraſe, the daughter of thy father's wife, "this teaches that "a man is not guilty concerning his ſiſter, that "is by an handmaid or ſtranger; therefore it is "ſaid, the daughter of thy father's wife, namely, "one that was fit for marriage."

℣. 12. Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy father's ſiſter, &c.] His aunt by his father's ſide, an inſtance of which we have in Amram, Exod. vi. 20. and Maimonides ſays [i], an aunt was forbidden whether ſhe was a father's ſiſter in lawful wedlock or in fornication: ſhe is thy father's near kinſwoman; or, the reſt of thy father [k]; the reſidue of his fleſh, one of the ſame fleſh and blood with him; wherefore, as he could not marry her himſelf, ſo his ſon likewiſe was too near a-kin to enter into ſuch a relation with her.

℣. 13. Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy mother's ſiſter, &c.] Which is the ſame relation as before, an aunt by the mother's ſide; wherefore if ſuch a marriage was unlawful, this muſt alſo, and for the ſame reaſon: ſhe is thy mother's near kinſwoman; the ſame phraſeology is uſed here as in the preceding verſe, ſee the note there; and by the ſame rule a woman might not marry her uncle, whether by father or mother's ſide, the relation being the ſame, and this reaches to great uncle and great aunt; inſtances of women marrying their uncles, and men their aunts, among the heathens, have been given, as among the Perſians and Lacedæmonians by Herodotus [l], and among the Romans by Tacitus [m], but were, in his time, new things with the latter.

℣. 14. Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy father's brother, &c.] Which Gerſom underſtands of committing ſodomy with him, on which account he was doubly guilty, partly becauſe of lying with a male, and partly becauſe of uncovering the nakedneſs of his father's brother; but it rather ſeems at firſt ſight as if the ſenſe was, that a woman ſhould not marry her father's brother, that is, her uncle, as a man might not marry his aunt, whether by father or mother's ſide, as in the preceding verſes; but Jarchi directs to a better ſenſe than either, when he aſks, what is his nakedneſs? in anſwer to which he recites the following clauſe as explanative of it: thou ſhalt not approach to his wife; in the uſe of the bed, as the Targum of Jonathan adds, that is, to lie with her, her huſband being living, or to marry her he being dead: ſhe is thine aunt; even as a father's or mother's ſiſter, only they are aunts by blood, this by marriage or affinity: in the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan it is, ſhe is the wife of thy father's brother; and as Aben Ezra, ſhe is accounted as thine aunt, and ſo marriage with her prohibited; and the ſame holds good of a father's brother's wife, which being not mentioned, the ſame writer ſays, we have need of the tradition which expreſſes that; and alſo of a father's ſiſter's huſband; for if marriage with a father's brother's wife is unlawful, then marriage with a father's ſiſter's huſband muſt be ſo too; for a father's ſiſter's huſband ſtands in the ſame degree or line of affinity as a father's brother's wife; and it is a ſure rule, that in whatſoever degree or line of affinity males are forbid to marry females, in the ſame females are forbid to marry males.

℣. 15. Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy daughter-in law, &c.] Shall not lie with her in his ſon's life-time, or marry her after his death: ſhe

[g] Paulus in Moſaic. & Roman. Leg. Collat. tit. 6. a Pithæo. in loc.
[h] Bertram. Lucubrat. Franktal. c. 6. Pool
[i] Hilchot Iſſure Biah, c. 2. §. 5.
[k] שאר אביך reliquiarum patris tui, Tigurine verſion.
[l] Erato, ſive, l. 6. c. 71. Polymnia, ſive, l. 7. c. 224, 239.
[m] Annal. l. 12. c. 5, 6, 7.

2

she is thy son's wife; and so one flesh with him, and who is of the same flesh and blood with his father, and therefore the nearness of the relation forbids such incestuous copulation or marriage: thou shalt not uncover her nakedness; or have carnal knowledge of her, whether in the life or after the death of his son, even then marriage with her is not lawful.

℣. 16. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy brother's wife, &c.] Neither debauch her, nor after the death of the brother marry her, that is, unless he dies without issue; and then, by another law, he was obliged to marry her, Deut. xxv. 5. hence the Targum of Jonathan adds, by way of explanation, "in the life of thy brother, or after "his death, if he has children," but then that law was but an exception from this general rule, and so did not make it void in other respects, but bound it the more strongly; and besides, it was a special and peculiar law to the Jews, until the Messiah came, to make it manifest of what tribe and family he came; and the reason of it ceasing, the law itself is ceased, and so neither binding on Jews nor Gentiles: hence John the Baptist boldly told Herod to his face, that it was not lawful for him to have his brother's wife, Mat. xiv. 3, 4. and even such marriages were condemned by the very heathens: Dionysius Halicarnassensis [n] relates, that Lucius Tarquinius Superbus, his brother being removed by poison, took Tullia to wife, whom his brother Aruntus had before married; but the historian calls it ανοσιον γαμον, an unholy marriage, and abominable both among Greeks and Barbarians: Plutarch also reports [o], that Marcus Crassus married the wife of his deceased brother; but such marriages are condemned by the same writer, as they are by the ancient christians in their councils and canons [p]: now by this same law, if it is not lawful for a man to have his brother's wife, then it is not lawful for her to have her sister's husband; or, in other words, if it is not lawful for a woman to marry two brothers, then it is not lawful for a man to marry two sisters: the case of Jacob will not countenance such a marriage, since he was imposed upon and deceived; and such marriages have also been disapproved by the heathens and christians: Honorius the emperor married two daughters of Stilico, one after another, but the unhappy exit of both sisters, shewed that those marriages were not approved of by God, for they both died immature deaths, leaving no children [q]: it is thy brother's nakedness; that is, his wife is, being by marriage one flesh with him, and his brother being so to him, the relation is too near to intermarry, and more especially, when there is issue by the first, which connects them strongly.

℣. 17. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter, &c.] That is, if a man marries a woman and she has a daughter, which is the man's daughter-in-law, after the death of his wife, he may not marry this daughter; for this daughter is of the same flesh with her mother, who became one flesh with the man she married, and therefore his relation to her daughter is too near to marry her: Jarchi says, if he does not marry the woman, but only deflour her, it is free for him to marry her daughter; but Aben Ezra says, if he has lain with the mother, the daughter is forbidden; however, if he married either of them the other was forbidden; he could not marry them both; neither in the life-time of them both, nor after the death of either of them: neither shalt thou take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter, to uncover her nakedness; not any of her granddaughters, either in the line of her son or daughter; that is, might not lie with either of them, or marry them, and much less then marry her own daughter, these being a further remove from her: for they are her near kinswomen; one or other of them, even every one of them, the rest and residue of her [r], of her flesh, who together made one flesh with her; and therefore not to be married to her husband, either in her life, or after her death: it is wickedness; a very great wickedness, abominable in the sight of God, and to be detested by man as vile and impious; it is whoredom, as the Targum of Jonathan renders it.

℣. 18. Neither shalt thou take a wife to her sister, &c.] Both of them together, as Jarchi; two sisters at one and the same time; so the Targum of Jonathan, "a woman in the life of her sister thou "shalt not take;" that is, in marriage, that sister being his wife; for the sense of the Targumist can never be to take one sister to another, or marry his first wife's sister, whether, as Maimonides [s] says, she was sister by father or mother's side, in marriage or in fornication: to vex her, to uncover her nakedness; two reasons are given, why, though polygamy, or having more wives than one was connived at, yet it was not allowed that a man should have two sisters; partly, because they would be more apt to quarrel, and be more jealous and impatient of one another, if more favour was shewn or thought to be shewn to one more than another; and partly, because it was a filthy and unbecoming action to uncover the nakedness of one, or lie with one so nearly related to his wife: besides her in her life-time; from whence some have concluded, and so many of the Jewish writers [t], that a man might marry his wife's sister after her death, but not whilst she was living; but the phrase in her life-time, is not to be joined to the phrase thou shalt not take a wife; but to the phrases more near, to vex her, in her life-time, or as long as she lived, and to uncover her nakedness by her [u], on the side of her, as long as she lived; for that a wife's sister may be married to her husband even after her death, cannot be lawful, as appears from the general prohibition, ℣. 6. none of you shall approach to him that is near of kin to him; and yet it is certain that a wife's sister is near a-kin to a man; and from the prohibition of marriage with an uncle's wife, with the daughter of a son-in-law, or of a daughter-in-law, ℣. 14, 17. now a wife's sister is nearer of kin than either of these; and from the confusion that must follow in case of issue by both, not only of degrees but appellation of kindred; one and the same man, who as a father of children, and the husband of their mother's sister, stands in the relation both of a father and an uncle to his own children; the woman to the children of the deceased sister, stands in the relation both of a stepmother, and of a mother's sister or aunt; and to the children that were born of her, she stands in the relation both of a mother and an uncle's wife; and the two sorts of children are both brethren and own cousins

2

[n] Hist. l. 4.
[o] In Vita M. Crassi.
[p] Canon. Apostol. can. 19. Concil. Neocæsar. can. 2.
[q] Zonaras, l, 3. apud Zanchium de Sponsalibus, l. 4. c. 1. p. 786.
[r] שארה הנה reliquiæ sunt ipsæ, Tigurine version.
[s] Hilchot Issure Biah, c. 2. §. 9.
[t] Misn. Yebamot, c. 4. §. 13. Vajikra Rabba, §. 22. fol. 164. 1. Pesicta, Ben Gersom in loc. see Nold. part. Concord. Ebr. p. 691.
[u] עליה apud vel prope eam; so על is sometimes used;

cousins by the mother's side, but of this see more on ℣. 16. some understand this of a prohibition of polygamy, rendering the words, thou shalt not take one wife to another; but the former sense is best; polygamy being not expressly forbidden by the law of Moses, but supposed in it, and winked at by it; and words of relation being always used in all these laws of marriage, in a proper and not in an improper sense: there is a pretty deal of agreement between these laws of Moses and the Roman laws; by an edict of Diocletian and Maximian [w], it was made unlawful to contract matrimony with a daughter, with a niece, with a niece's daughter, with a grand-mother, with a great-grand-mother, with an aunt by the father's side, with an aunt by the mother's side, with a sister's daughter, and a niece from her, with a daughter-in-law to a second husband, with a mother-in-law, with a wife or husband's mother, and with a son's wife; and several of these laws are recommended by Phocylydes, an heathen poet, at least in a poem that bears his name; and the marriage of a wife's sister after her death has been condemned by several christian councils [x].

℣. 19. Also thou shalt not approach unto a woman, &c.] Not even a man to his own wife, and much less to another woman: to uncover her nakedness, as long as she is set apart for her uncleanness; in her monthly courses; and the time of her separation from her husband on that account, was seven days, ch. xv. 19. if a man lay with a woman when in such circumstances, they were both to be cut off from their people, ch. xx. 18. and such an action is reckoned among sins, and uncleanness of the worst sort, Ezek. xxii. 10.

℣. 20. Moreover thou shalt not lie carnally with thy neighbour's wife, &c.] Which is adultery, and a breach of the seventh command: to defile thyself with her; not only adultery is a defiling a man's wife, as it it sometimes called, but the adulterer defiles himself: all sin is of a defiling nature, but especially this, which defiles a man both in soul and body, and brings a blot and stain upon his character, which shall not be wiped off, Prov. vi. 32, 33.

℣. 21. And thou shalt not let any of thy seed pass through the fire to Molech, &c.] The name of an image or idol, according to Aben Ezra, who observes, that their wise men interpret it as a general name for every one whom they made to reign over them; and it is right, he says, that it is the abomination of the children of Ammon, and so the same with Milcom, 1 Kings xi. 5. and with Baal, as appears from Jer. v. 31. and they are both of much the same signification, the one signifies a king, the other a lord; and perhaps is the same with the Melicarthus of Sanchoniatho [y], who is also Hercules; to whom Pliny says [z], that the Phœnicians offered human sacrifices every year: of Molech see more in the notes on Jer. vii. 31. and Amos i. 13. by seed is meant children and offspring; and because the word fire is not in the original text, some, as Aben Ezra observes, explain the phrase let to pass through, of their causing them to pass from the law of God to the religion of Molech, or of devoting them to his service and worship; but the word fire is rightly supplied, as it may be from Deut. xviii. 10. and the same writer says, the phrase to pass through, is the same as to burn; but though this they sometimes did, even burn their infants, and sacrificed them to idols, 2 Chron. xxviii. 3. Ps. cvi. 37, 38. Ezek. xvi. 20, 21. yet this seems to be something short of that, and to be done in the manner, as Jarchi and other Jewish writers [a] relate; who say, the father delivered his son to the priests (of Molech) and they made two great fires, and caused the son to pass on foot between the two fires, which was a kind of a lustration, and so of a dedication of them to the idol; though it must be owned, that both were done; yea, that both the phrases of passing through the fire, and of burning, are used promiscuously of the same, see 2 Kings xvi. 3. compared with 2 Chron. xxviii. 3. and also Ezek. xvi. 20, 21. and they might be both done at different times, or the one previous and in order to the other; and perhaps they might cause the child so often and so long to pass through the fire, as that at last it was burnt and destroyed: neither shalt thou prophane the name of thy God; who had given them children, and to whom they ought to have devoted them, and in whose service they should have trained them up to the honour of his name; but instead of that prophaned it, by the above idolatrous and cruel usages: I am the Lord; who would avenge such a prophanation of his name.

℣. 22. Thou shalt not lie with mankind as with womankind, &c.] By carnal knowledge of them, and carnal copulation with them, and mixing bodies in like manner: this is the sin commonly called Sodomy, from the inhabitants of Sodom, greatly addicted to it, for which their city was destroyed by fire: those that are guilty of this sin, are, by the apostle called, abusers of themselves with mankind, 1 Cor. vi. 9. it is abomination; it is so to God, as the above instance of his vengeance shews, and ought to be abominable to men, as being not only contrary to the law of God, but even contrary to nature itself, and what is never to be observed among brute creatures.

℣. 23. Neither shalt thou lie with any beast to defile thyself therewith, &c.] A female one, as Aben Ezra notes, as a mare, cow, or ew, or any other beast, small or great, as Ben Gersom, or whether tame or wild, as Maimonides [b]; and even fowls are comprehended, as the same writers observe: neither shall any woman stand before a beast to lie down unto: that is, stand before a beast, and by a lascivious and obscene behaviour, solicit the beast to a congress with her, and then lie down after the manner of four-footed beasts, as the word signifies, that it may have carnal copulation with her: for a man to lie with a beast is most shocking and detestable, but for a woman to solicit such an unnatural mixture, is most horrible and astonishing: perhaps reference may be had to a most shocking practice among the Egyptians, from among whom the Israelites were lately come, and whose doings they were not to imitate, ℣. 3. and which may account for this law, as bishop Patrick observes: at Mendes in Egypt, a goat was worshipped, as has been remarked on ch. xvii. 7. and where the women

[w] Apud Mosaic. & Roman. Leg. Collat. ut supra.
[x] Concil. Illiber. can. 61. Aurat. can. 17. Auxer. can. 30.
[y] Apud Euseb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 1. p. 38.
[z] Nat. Hist. l. 36. c. 5.
[a] Ben Melech in loc. Kimchii Sepher Shoresh. rad. מלך
[b] Hilchot Issure Biah, c. 1. §. 16.

men used to lie with such creatures, as Strabo [c] and Ælianus [d] from Pindar have related; yea, Herodotus [e] reports, of his own knowledge, that a goat had carnal copulation with a woman openly, in the view of all in his time; and though that creature is a most lascivious and lustful one, yet, as Bochart [f] from Plutarch has observed, when it is provoked by many and beautiful women, is not inclined and ready to come into their embraces, but shews some abhorrence of it: nature in brutes, as that learned man observes, is often more prevalent in them than in mankind: it is confusion; a mixing of the seed of man and beast together, a blending of different kinds of creatures, a perverting the order of nature, and introducing the utmost confusion of beings, from whence monsters in nature may arise.

℣. 24. Defile not you yourselves in any of these things, &c.] In incestuous copulations and marriages, in adultery, corporal and spiritual, and bestiality: for in all these the nations are defiled which I cast out before you; that is, the seven nations of the land of Canaan, which God was about to eject out of their land to make room for the Israelites, and that on account of the above shocking vices which abounded among them; so that in some sense the land they dwelt upon was defiled by them, and called for vengeance on them, as even loathing its inhabitants, as afterwards suggested.

℣. 25. And the land is defiled, &c.] The inhabitants of it, with the immoralities and idolatries before mentioned: therefore I do visit the iniquity thereof upon it; or punish the inhabitants that are on it for their sins: and the land itself vomiteth out her inhabitants; as a stomach loaded with corrupt and bad food it has taken in, nauseates it, and cannot bear and retain it, but casts it up, and never receives it again; so the land of Canaan is represented as loathing its inhabitants, and as having an aversion to them, and indignation against them, and as not being able to bear them, but entirely willing to be rid of them, and throw them out of their places in it, never to be admitted more, being as nauseous and as useless as the cast of a man's stomach; see Rev. iii. 16.

℣. 26. Ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgments, &c.] Before observed to them, whether of a ceremonial nature, and enjoined them according to his sovereign will and pleasure; or of a moral nature, and founded in justice and equity, and so worthy of their regard, and obligatory upon them; as well as in their own nature they recommended themselves to their regard, as being the reverse of those loathsome and abominable things before dehorted from: and shall not commit any of these abominations; such as incest, adultery, idolatry and bestiality, which are in themselves abominable things, execrable to God, and to be detested by men: neither any of your own nation; that belonged to any of their own tribes, or should be born to them in the land of Canaan when they came thither, and were properly natives of it: nor any stranger that sojourneth among you; any proselyte, and especially a proselyte of righteousness, who conformed to the Jewish religion, and had laid himself under obligation to do every thing that was binding upon an Israelite.

℣. 27. For all these abominations have the men of the land done, &c.] The then present inhabitants of Canaan, who dwelt in it before the Israelites came into it; these were guilty of unclean copulations, of incestuous marriages, of fornication and adultery, and of bestiality and idolatry: which were before you; lived in the land before them, had long dwelt there, but now about to be cast out for their sins; and therefore they who were going to succeed them, should take warning by them, lest committing the same sins, they should be cast out likewise: and the land is defiled; see the note on ℣. 25.

℣. 28. That the land spue not you out also, when ye defile it, &c.] By sinning on it, and so rendering it obnoxious to the curse of God, as the whole earth originally was for the sin of man; and so be cast out of it as Adam was out of paradise, and as the Israelites might expect to be cast out of Canaan, as the old inhabitants of it had been: as it spued out the nations that were before you; which for the certainty of it is spoken of as done, though it was as yet future; and what the Lord did, is ascribed to the land, the more to aggravate their crying sins and abominations, for which the land mourned, and which it could not bear.

℣. 29. For whosoever shall commit any of these abominations, &c.] Before particularly forbid, any of them, be it which it will, they all being very heinous and vile, and especially these last mentioned: even the souls that commit them; whether male or female, as Jarchi observes; for the above things concern them both for the most part, however some one, and some another; and though most, if not all the said crimes are committed by the members of the body, yet since under the influence and direction of the soul, the commission of them is attributed to that, and the punishment threatened respects both: shall be cut off from among the people; be removed from their church-state, and deprived of ecclesiastical privileges, and from their civil state, and reckoned no more of the commonwealth of Israel; and if known and convicted, to be punished by the civil magistrate, and if not, by the immediate hand of God.

℣. 30. Therefore shall ye keep mine ordinance, &c.] Whatever the Lord appointed them and commanded, whether contained in this chapter, or elsewhere: that ye commit not any one of these abominable customs; for by attending to the ordinances of God, and a close walking in them, they would be preserved from the commission of such abominable things, and giving in to such detestable customs as before warned against: which were committed before you; by the inhabitants of Canaan; and by the punishment on them for them, they might be deterred from doing the same: and that ye defile not yourselves therein; for though the land is so often said to be defiled, yet properly speaking and chiefly it were the inhabitants that were defiled by their abominable customs; and so would the Israelites also, should they observe the same, and thereby become abominable in the sight of God, and incur his displeasure, and be liable to his vengeance: I am the Lord your God; who had a sovereign authority over them, and a right to give out what commands he pleased, both negative and affirmative; and to whom they were under obligations to obey, as the God of nature and providence, from whom they had their beings, and were supported in them, and as their Covenant-God, who had bestowed special and spiritual favours on them.

CHAP.

[c] Geograph. l. 17. p. 551. [d] De Animal. l. 7. c. 19. [e] Euterpe, sive, l. 2. c. 46. [f] Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 2. c. 53. col. 642.

CHAP. XIX.

THIS chapter contains various laws, ceremonial and moral, tending to the ſanctification of men, in imitation of the holy God, ℣. 1, 2. as concerning the reverence of parents, and obſerving the ſabbaths, ℣. 3. againſt idolatry, ℣. 4. about offering and eating of peace-offerings, ℣. 5—8. concerning harveſt and gleaning of fields and vineyards, ℣. 9, 10. reſpecting the breach of ſeveral of the commandments of the law, as the 8th, 9th, and third particularly, ℣. 11, 12, 13. and others relating to the ill uſage of the deaf and blind, and having reſpect to perſons rich or poor in judgment, and acting the part of a tale-bearer among people, ℣. 14, 15, 16. and bearing hatred and ill will to any of their neighbours, ℣. 17, 18. and others forbidding mixtures in the generation of cattle, ſowing fields, and wearing apparel, ℣. 19. and concerning the puniſhment of a man that lay with a bond-maid, and the offering he ſhould bring for his atonement, ℣. 20, 21, 22. then follow certain laws concerning fruit-trees, when the fruit of them ſhould be eaten, ℣. 23, 24, 25. and concerning eating with blood, uſing enchantments, and obſerving times, and managing the hair of the head and beard, and avoiding to make any marks, prints and cuttings in the fleſh for the dead, ℣. 26, 27, 28. a caution not to proſtitute a daughter to whoredom, and to obſerve the ſabbath, and reverence the ſanctuary of God, and pay no regard to wizards and familiar ſpirits, ℣. 29, 30, 31. to ſhew reverence to ancient perſons, and not to vex and diſtreſs ſtrangers, ℣. 32, 33, 34. and to do no injuſtice in weight and meaſure, ℣. 35, 36. all which inſtructions are to be carefully obſerved, and put in execution, ℣. 37.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] About the ſame, or quickly after he had delivered the above laws to him; and there are many in this chapter, which were before given, and here repeated: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, &c.] They could not be all ſpoke to together, but tribe after tribe, or family after family; or rather the heads of the tribes, and at moſt the heads of families were convened, and the following inſtructions were given to be communicated to their reſpective tribes and families. Jarchi ſays this ſection was ſpoken in the congregation, becauſe the greater part of the body of the law, or the more ſubſtantial parts of it, depend upon it; and indeed all the ten commandments are included in it, with various other laws, both judicial and ceremonial. Aben Ezra remarks, that all the congregation are ſpoke to, to include the proſelytes, becauſe they had been warned of inceſts, as the Iſraelites, in the preceding chapter: and ſay unto them, ye ſhall be holy; a ſeparate people from all others, abſtaining from all the impurity and idolatry they are cautioned againſt in the foregoing chapter, and obſerving the holy precepts expreſſed in this: for I the Lord your God am holy; in his nature, eſſence, originally, independently, immutably and perfectly; and the more holy they were, the more like they would be to him; ſee the notes on ch. xi. 44, 45. where the ſame words are uſed after the laws given, about creatures clean and unclean to be eaten, as here, after thoſe about impure copulations and inceſts.

℣. 3. Ye ſhall fear every man his mother and his father, &c.] This has reſpect to the fifth command, which is the firſt with promiſe, and is here referred to firſt, becauſe a man has his beginning in the world from his parents, and by them he is trained up in the obſervance of all the other laws of God, equally to be reſpected; and the fear of them is not ſervile but filial, joined with love and affection to them, and includes an inward eſteem and reverence of them, an outward reſpect unto them, a readineſs to obey their commands, and giving due and equal honour unto them; ſee the note on Exod. xx. 12. Pythagoras, Phocylides, and other heathens, next to honouring God, exhort to the honour and reverence of parents: and keep my ſabbaths; this is expreſſed in the plural number, becauſe there were various ſabbaths. The ſeventh day-ſabbath, and the ſeventh year-ſabbath, and the jubilee, which was once in ſeven times ſeven years; the ſeventh day-ſabbath is chiefly meant: this follows upon the other, becauſe it lay upon parents to teach their children the obſervance of the ſabbath, and to train them up in it; and indeed the fear of them greatly depends on it, for children that are ſabbath-breakers have ſeldom much reſpect to their parents; and beſides, this ſuggeſts, that though children are to honour, reverence and obey their parents, yet not in any thing that is contrary to the laws of God; and particularly ſhould they ſuggeſt to them, that ſabbaths were not to be obſerved, they ſhould not hearken to them: I am the Lord your God; that gave them their being, parents being but inſtruments, and who had a right to enjoin them what laws he pleaſed; and among the reſt had ordered them to obſerve the ſabbath, and which in gratitude they were obliged unto, as well as in point of duty.

℣. 4. Turn ye not unto idols, &c.] From the one only true and living God, to them that are not gods, as the word uſed ſignifies, who are nothing; for, as the apoſtle ſays, an idol is nothing in the world, 1 Cor. viii. 4. is of no worth and value, of no conſequence and importance, of no avail and uſefulneſs to its devotees; wherefore to turn from the true God to ſuch as theſe, is the greateſt ſtupidity, as well as wickedneſs: or look not at them [g] for help or aſſiſtance, for they are not able to give it; and to look at them ſo as to view them attentively, and conſider their likeneſs, the Jews ſay [h] is forbidden; and even in the heart and mind, as Aben Ezra obſerves, to have reſpect unto them was not right; or in the thoughts, as Gerſom: nor make to yourſelves molten gods; of gold, ſilver, or braſs, melted and caſt into a mould, as the golden calf was, to which reſpect may be had. Theſe laws have a reſpect unto the firſt and ſecond commandments: I am the Lord your God; who only is to be worſhipped, and who has forbid the making and worſhipping any image, molten or graven, and who will therefore reſent idolatry of every ſort, and puniſh for it.

℣. 5. And if ye offer a ſacrifice of peace-offerings unto the Lord, &c.] Which were of three ſorts, a thankſgiving, a vow, and a voluntary offering, ch. vii. 11, 12, 16. the latter ſeems to be here meant, meant, as appears by what follows: ye ſhall offer it at your own will; a voluntary free-will offering, of their own accord, and not by force, as Aben Ezra; and in ſuch offerings they were left to their liberty to offer what they pleaſed, it might be of the flock, or of the herd, a male or a female, ch. iii. 1, 6. The Targum of Jonathan is, "for your "acceptation;" that is, that ſhould be offered, and in ſuch a manner as to be accepted of you with God; which ſenſe is countenanced by ℣. 7. and becomes acceptable, when what follows about eating them is attended to.

[g] אל תפנו ne reſpiciatis, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Druſius.

[h] Peſichta, Maimonides.

℣. 6. It ſhall be eaten the ſame day ye offer it, and on the morrow, &c.] The meaning is, that if it could be, it was righteſt to eat it all up the ſame day it was offered, but if not, the remainder was to be eaten on the morrow, but by no means to be kept any longer; this ſhows that that ſort of peace-offering is intended, which was either a vow or a voluntary offering, ch. vii. 16. and the Jews gather from hence, that ſacrifices were to be ſlain in the day, and not in the night[l]: and if ought remain unto the third, it ſhall be burnt with fire; as it is ordered, ch. vii. 16. that ſo the owner might have no profit by it, and therefore be under no temptation to keep it longer than the fixed time.

℣. 7. And if it be eaten at all on the third day, &c.] Or in eating be eaten[k]; any of it be eaten, the leaſt bit of it: it is abominable; it is as any common thing, as if it was no ſacrifice; yea, as if it was corrupt and putrified fleſh; nay, as what is abominable to God: and therefore it follows, it ſhall not be accepted; of the Lord, but rejected, his will not being attended to.

℣. 8. Therefore every one that eateth it ſhall bear his iniquity, &c.] Be chargeable with ſin, be pronounced guilty, and endure the puniſhment, which is cutting off, ch. vii. 20: becauſe he hath prophaned the hallowed thing of the Lord; the fleſh of the peace-offerings, by keeping it longer than the fixed time for it, when it was liable to corruption and putrefaction; for after the inwards and the fat of them were offered, as Aben Ezra ſays, the fleſh was holy, and to be eaten as an holy thing, and within the time the law required, or otherwiſe it was prophaned and polluted: and that ſoul ſhall be cut off from among his people; be deprived of his civil and religious privileges, or be puniſhed by the hand of the civil magiſtrate, or elſe by the immediate hand of God.

℣. 9. And when ye reap the harveſt of your land, &c.] Of the land of Canaan, when come into it, which having ſown, and it was harveſt, either barley-harveſt or wheat-harveſt, or both, and eſpecially the latter, to which reaping ſeems beſt to agree: thou ſhalt not wholly reap the corner of the field; but a part was to be left for the poor. This follows upon the peace-offerings; and, as Aben Ezra obſerves, as the fat of them was to be given to God, ſo ſomewhat of the harveſt was to be given for the glory of God to the poor and ſtranger. In the Miſnah is a whole treatiſe, called Peah, which ſignifies the corner, in which there are many deciſions concerning this affair; and among the reſt, whereas it is not fixed in the law how large the corner ſhould be, what quantity ſhould be left, how many ears of corn, or what a proportion of the field, this is there determined by the wiſe men, who ſay, they do not leave leſs than a 60th part; for though they ſay there is no meaſure (certain) for the corner, yet the whole is according to the largeneſs of the field, or according to the multitude of the poor, or according to the plenty of the increaſe, ſo that as theſe were, more or leſs were left: and though the place to be left is called a corner, it was a matter indifferent in what part of the field it was; for ſo it follows, they give (or leave) the corner at the beginning of the field, or in the middle[m]; and Ben Gerſom obſerves, that the corner was at the end of the field, where the harveſt is finiſhed; and it is plain where the harveſt is finiſhed, he ſays, the corner ſhould be left; for the law does not preciſely determine, only, that part of the corner ſhould be left to the poor; and it is of no conſequence to the poor, whether it is in the middle of the field, or in the end of it; but Maimonides[n] thinks it was to be left at the end of the field, that the poor might know where to come for it; and in the above treatiſe, the times are alſo ſet, when the poor ſhould come and gather it, which they might not do at any time; and there were three times on a day they had leave to come, in the morning, in the middle of the day, and at the evening ſacrifice[o], i. e. about 3 o'clock in the afternoon; the morning was appointed, as the commentators ſay[p], for the ſake of women that had young children, who were then aſleep, the middle of the day for the ſake of nurſes, and the evening for the ſake of ancient perſons: neither ſhalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harveſt; ears of corn which fall from the hand or ſickle of the reaper, or in gathering the reaps to bind up in ſheaves. In the above treatiſe it is aſked, what is a gleaning? that which falls in reaping; if the reaper reaps his handful, or plucks up an handful, and a thorn ſtrikes him, and it falls out of his hand to the ground, lo, it is the owner's; but if out of the middle of his hand, or out of the middle of the ſickle, it is the poors; if from the further part of his hand, or of the ſickle, it is the owner's; but if from the top of his hand (or tip of his fingers) or the point of the ſickle, it is the poors[q]: and it is further ſaid[r], "two ears are a "gleaning, but three are not," and ſo Jarchi on the text, that is, when three fall together; this is according to the ſchool of Hillel, but according to the ſchool of Shammai, if there were three ears that fell together, they were the poors, if four they belonged to the owner.

℣. 10. And thou ſhalt not glean thy vineyard, &c.] Or cut off the little cluſters which are, as Aben Ezra obſerves, like an infant, as the word ſignifies, infant-cluſters, which were ſmall in compariſon of the large ones, as infants are to men; thoſe which had but a grape or two, or very few upon them, were not to be cut off, but left for the poor: and Gerſom ſays, if the whole vine conſiſted of ſuch cluſters, it all belonged to the poor: neither ſhalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; every particular ſingle grape; theſe were ſuch as were left on the vine after the large cluſters were gathered, and a man upon viewing it again might not gather ſuch as had only a ſingle grape or two upon them; for the Miſnic doctors ſay[s], two grapes or berries makes a peret, (the word here rendered every grape) but three do not; ſo that if there were three grapes upon a cluſter it was the owner's, and might be gathered, but if fewer, then it belonged

[l] Bartenora in Miſn. Zebachim, c. 13. §. 7. & Miſn. Yoma, c. 3. §. 1.
[k] האכל יאכל comedendo, comedetur, Druſius.
[m] Ibid. §. 3.
[n] Hilchot Mattanot Anayim, c. 2. §. 12.
[o] Miſn. Peah, c. 4. §. 5.
[p] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.
[q] Ib. §. 10.
[r] Ib. c. 6. §. 5.
[s] Ibid.

longed to the poor; or this may be underſtood [t] alſo of ſuch ſingle grapes that fell to the ground in gathering, which might not be taken up by the owners, but were to be left to the poor; and, as Gerſom ſays, the grape-gatherers might not put a buſhel under the vines in the time of gathering, to catch the ſingle grapes that fell: thou ſhalt leave them for the poor and ſtranger; for the poor Iſraelite, and the ſtranger that ſojourns with you, as Aben Ezra interprets it; the ſtranger intends a proſelyte, not a proſelyte of the gate, but a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, as Gerſom; and it is a rule laid down by Maimonides [u], that every ſtranger ſpoken of concerning the gifts of the poor, is no other than a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, one that has been circumciſed upon embracing the Jewiſh religion, and agreeing to conform to all the laws and rituals of it; though the ſame writer obſerves, that they don't reſtrain the poor of the Gentiles from theſe gifts, but they are in general included among the poor of Iſrael; and they come and take them, becauſe of the ways of peace; for peace-ſake, to promote peace and harmony among them: I am the Lord your God; that gave them fields and vineyards, and times of harveſt and vintage, and bleſſed them with fruitful ſeaſons, and therefore had a right to require ſuch things of them; and they were in duty and gratitude bound to obſerve his commands; and this ſhows his regard unto, and concern for the poor, and that he is the father and patron of them.

℣. 11. Ye ſhall not ſteal, &c.] Which is the eighth command, ſee Exod. xx. 15. and the note there; though Jarchi thinks ſomething different from that law is here intended; that this is a caution againſt ſtealing of money, that in the decalogue againſt ſtealing of ſouls, or men. And it may be obſerved, that one is expreſſed in the ſingular number, the other in the plural, as here, and takes in more; not the actual thief only, but he that ſees and is ſilent, who, as Aben Ezra obſerves, is even as the thief; and perhaps this follows upon the preceding laws, to ſuggeſt, that he that deprives the poor of the corner of the field, and of the gleaning of the harveſt and vintage, is as if he robbed; and the laſt mentioned writer ſeems to make the force of this depend on that: and Maimonides [w] on the above law obſerves, that he that put a baſket under a vine in the time of gathering grapes, robbed the poor: neither deal falſly; in any reſpect defrauding and over-reaching in trade, and commerce, particularly not being faithful to a truſt committed to them; ſo Aben Ezra reſtrains it to what is depoſited with a man to keep, which he denies he ever had; and he obſerves, that he that knows it, and does not bear witneſs of it, is as he that deals falſly; and ſuch an one, according to a former law, having ſwore falſly, and when convicted, was obliged to reſtore the principal, and add a fifth part, and bring a treſpaſs-offering to make atonement for his ſin likewiſe, ch. vi. 2—7: neither lie one to another; in common ſpeech and converſation, in trade and buſineſs, and particularly by demanding money of a man who never had any thing of him, as Aben Ezra; and who owes him nothing, and yet affirms, with a lie, that he is indebted to him, and inſiſts on payment.

℣. 12. And ye ſhall not ſwear by my name falſly, &c.] Or to a falſhood [x], to any of the above caſes; as that a man has not the depoſitum of another's in his hands, when he has; or that ſuch a man owes him ſo much money, when he does not, or any other falſe thing. Stealing, dealing falſly, lying and falſe ſwearing, are mentioned together, as following one another, and as tending to lead on, the one to the other, as Jarchi obſerves; "if "thou ſtealeſt, this will lead thee on to deal falſly, "and then to lye, and after that to ſwear;" and who further remarks, becauſe it may be thought a man is guilty only becauſe of the proper name (of God he may ſwear by); therefore to comprehend all the ſurnames (or epithets of God, ſuch as gracious, merciful, &c.) it is ſaid, ye ſhall not ſwear by my name falſly; every name which is mine, by which he is called; and ſo Gerſom, any epithet or attribute of his, or any circumlocution by which he is deſcribed, as he that made the heavens, or that dwelleth in the heavens, or liveth for ever and ever, and the like; and the word being of the plural number, ye ſhall not ſwear, takes in, as Aben Ezra thinks, him that cauſes to ſwear, as well as him that ſwears: neither ſhalt thou prophane the name of thy God; through ſwearing falſly by it, or through any raſh or vain oath in common converſation; not only perjury in a court of judicature, but all prophane oaths, curſes, and imprecations are forbidden as breaches of the third command, which this refers to; ſee the note on Exod. xx. 7: I am the Lord; whoſe name is holy, and who can and will revenge every abuſe of it in a prophane way, and to the injury of men.

℣. 13. Thou ſhalt not defraud thy neighbour, neither rob him, &c.] Not defraud him ſecretly, nor rob him openly and by force, as Aben Ezra; not defraud him in buying and ſelling, in retaining wages due to him, and refuſing to return to him what has been committed to truſt, or to repay him what has been borrowed of him: the Vulgate Latin is, thou ſhalt not calumniate him, or get any thing from him, by raiſing a calumny upon him; nor rob him by coming into his houſe, or entering into his fields, and taking away his goods, or his cattle without his will, and in a forcible manner; or by meeting him on the highway and demanding his money, and taking it from him: the wages of him that is hired ſhall not abide with thee all night until the morning; unleſs he that is hired agrees to it; for then it may be kept two or three days, or a week, or for whatſoever time may be agreed upon between them: this muſt be underſtood of one that is hired by the day, whoſe wages are due at night, and who may want his money to buy food for his family, and therefore ſhould not without his conſent be detained from him; and not of one that is hired by the week, or by the year, whoſe wages are not due until the end of the week or year for which he is hired; and the Jewiſh writers [y] obſerve, that this ſcripture ſpeaks of a day-hireling, or a day-labourer, whoſe wages became due at night; as another ſcripture, Deut. xxiv. 15. ſpeaks of a night-hireling, or a night-labourer, whoſe hire is not due until the pillar of the morning ariſes, or the ſun is up, and therefore it muſt be paid him before it goes down; to detain the wages of ſuch, or defraud them of it, is a very crying ſin; ſee Jer. xxii. 13. Jam. v. 4.

℣. 14. Thou ſhalt not curſe the deaf, &c.] Who are naturally ſo, born deaf, or become ſo through ſome

[t] So it is interpreted by R. Sol. Urbin. Ohel Moed, fol. 59. 1. [u] Mattanot Anayim, c. 1. §. 9. [w] Ib. c. 4. §. 16. [x] לשקר ad fallaciam ullam, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth. [y] Vid. Miſn. Bava Metzia, c. 9. §. 11. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. Jarchi & Ben Gerſom in loc.

ſome accident, and cannot hear what is objected to them, and they are curſed for; and ſo cannot reply in their own defence, and remove the calumny caſt upon them, if it be ſuch which is the cauſe of their being curſed; and therefore there is ſomething mean and baſe as well as wicked in curſing ſuch: the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan render it, him that heareth not; and reſpects any abſent perſon who is not within the hearing of the curſe, and ſo equally incapable of anſwering for himſelf, as a deaf man: Gerſom obſerves, that this is a caution not to curſe any Iſraelite; for if we are cautioned, ſays he, not to curſe a deaf man who hears not, and therefore cannot be moved at it, much leſs ſhould we curſe him that is not deaf, from whence quarrels and fightings ariſe: nor put a ſtumbling-block before the blind; to cauſe him to fall; and in this negative is implied, that a man ſhould be ſerviceable and helpful to the blind as much as may be; as to lead, and guide, and direct them in the way, and not put them out of it, as well as not do any thing to cauſe them to ſtumble in it; Jarchi and Ben Gerſom interpret this figuratively, of ignorant perſons impoſed upon by the bad advice of others: on the other hand, agreeable to this ſenſe, Job ſays, he was eyes to the blind, ch. xxix. 15. gave good advice to the ignorant, inſtructed them what ways and methods to take to do themſelves juſtice, or obtain it, which otherwiſe they knew not: but ſhalt fear thy God; who, as Aben Ezra obſerves, can puniſh thee by making thee deaf and blind alſo; by ſtriking them with deafneſs and blindneſs at once; wherefore the awe and fear of God ſhould be on perſons, and make them cautious and fearful how they abuſed thoſe in ſuch circumſtances: I am the Lord; the Lord God, omnipreſent and omniſcient, that hears when the deaf are curſed though they do not; and ſees the ſtumbling blocks laid before the blind, and knows who laid them, though they do not, and will revenge ſuch abuſes and injuries: the apoſtle ſeems to have reſpect to this law in Rom. xiv. 13. 1 Cor. viii. 9, 13.

℣. 15. Ye ſhall do no unrighteouſneſs in judgment, &c.] This is ſaid with reſpect to judges and witneſſes, as Aben Ezra notes; that the one ſhould not bear falſe witneſs in a court of judicature to the perverſion of juſtice, and the other ſhould not pronounce an unrighteous ſentence, juſtifying the wicked and condemning the righteous: thou ſhalt not reſpect the perſon of the poor; that is, in judgment, or in a court of judicature, when a cauſe of his is brought before it; though privately his perſon may be reſpected, and he relieved in his diſtreſs as a poor man; but in a court of juſtice, his perſon and character as a poor man are not to be regarded; the cauſe is not to be given either for him or againſt him on that account, without regard to the juſtice and equity of it; he may be pitied in other reſpects, but in a cauſe between him and another, even a rich man, not pity but juſtice muſt take place, ſee Exod. xxiii. 3. and the note there: nor honour the perſon of the mighty; not fear to put him to ſhame and bluſhing, by giving the cauſe againſt him, if he is in the wrong; his riches, his grandeur, his honour, muſt not come into any account, or have any weight or influence on the court to pervert juſtice: the Jewiſh writers, particularly Maimonides [z], ſuggeſt that there was to be no difference between a rich man and a poor man while their cauſe was trying; that they were to be cloathed either both in a rich habit, or both in a mean one; and that their poſture was to be alike whether ſitting or ſtanding; as well as that no favour ſhould be ſhewn to one more than to another; as that one might have liberty to ſpeak as much and as long as he pleaſed, and the other bid to be ſhort; or the one be ſpoke tenderly to, and the other haſtily: but in righteouſneſs ſhalt thou judge thy neighbour; be he rich or poor, doing juſtice to both, and ſhewing no partiality to either; ſee Prov. xviii. 5.

℣. 16. Thou ſhalt not go up and down as a talebearer among thy people, &c.] The word uſed ſignifies, a merchant, and particularly one that deals in drugs and ſpices, and eſpecially a pedlar in thoſe things, that goes about from place to place to ſell them; and ſuch having an opportunity and making uſe of it to carry ſtories of others, and report them to their diſadvantage, hence it came to be uſed for one that carries tales from houſe to houſe, in order to curry favour for himſelf, and to the injury of others; and ſuch a man is a deteſtable perſon, and ought not to be encouraged, ſee 1 Tim. v. 13. Prov. xi. 13. neither ſhalt thou ſtand againſt the blood of thy neighbour; either by bearing a falſe teſtimony, whereby his blood is in danger of being ſhed when innocent; or by being ſilent, and not bearing a teſtimony for him, whereby the ſhedding of his innocent blood might have been prevented; either way may be interpreted ſtanding againſt it: the Jewiſh writers think, that a man by this law, is bound to do all he can to preſerve the life of his neighbour, when it is by any means in danger, by drowning, or by thieves and wild beaſts, ſo Jarchi: I am the Lord; the juſt and righteous one, who will reſent and puniſh for all unjuſt proceedings in courts of judicature, ſecret tale-bearing, doing any injury to another, or not preventing it when in the power of his hands.

℣. 17. Thou ſhalt not hate thy brother in thine heart, &c.] Although no hatred may be expreſſed either by words or deeds, yet being in the heart, is a breach of the ſixth command, ſee Matt. v. 21, 22. and of this a man may be guilty, when he does not attempt to ſave the life of his neighbour, either by bearing a teſtimony for him, or by delivering from danger, as preſerving him from drowning, from wild beaſts and thieves, as in the preceding verſe; or when he does not reprove him for ſin, as in the next clauſe, but ſuffers him to go on in it to his ruin, either of which by interpretation is an hatred of him: thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy neighbour; for any ſin committed by him, though ſecretly, yet known; which rebuke ſhould be private, and repeated as may be found neceſſary, and given gently in meekneſs and tenderneſs: and not ſuffer ſin upon him; unconvinced of, unrepented of, and perſiſted in, which may prove of fatal conſequence to him; and therefore to let him alone, and go on in it without telling him of it, and reproving him for it, would be ſo far from acting the kind and friendly part, and ſhewing him love and reſpect, that it would be an evidence of hating him at heart, at leaſt it might be ſtrongly ſuſpected: or, and not bear ſin for him [a]; become a partner with him in his ſin, and ſo become liable to bear puniſhment for it; which is a ſtrong reaſon for reproving ſin, in a proper manner, leſt we ſhould be be partakers of other mens ſins; ſee 1 Tim. v. 20, 22.

[z] Hilchot Sanhedrin, c. 21. §. 1, 2, 3.

[a] לא תשא עליו חטא ne feras propter eum peccatum, Tigurine verſion; ſo Sept. Syr. Ar. Targum Jonathan, Aben Ezra, Ainſworth.

℣. 18. Thou ſhalt not avenge, &c.] That is, not avenge ourſelves on him that has done us an ill thing, but leave it to him to whom vengeance belongs, ſee Rom. xii. 19. which is done when a man does an ill thing for another, or denies to grant a favour which he has been denied by another; Jarchi thus illuſtrates it, one ſays to him (his neighbour) lend me thy ſickle? he anſwers, no (I will not); on the morrow (the neighbour comes, who had refuſed, and) ſays to him, lend me thy hatchet; he replies, I will not lend thee, even as thou wouldſt not lend me; this is vengeance: this was reckoned mean and little, a piece of weakneſs with the very heathens [b]: nor bear any grudge againſt the children of thy people; thoſe of the ſame place, city or kingdom; or not obſerve [c] the injury done, take no notice of it, nor lay it up in the mind and memory, but forget it; or not keep [d] or retain enmity, as the Targum of Jonathan ſupplies it; and ſo do an ill turn, or refuſe to do a good one; or if that is done, yet upbraids with the former unkindneſs; for upbraiding with unkindneſs ſhews that a grudge is retained though the ſuit is not denied: but thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf; ſincerely and heartily, as a man loves himſelf, doing all the good to him as a man does to himſelf, or would have done to himſelf, and hindering all the miſchief done to him he would have himſelf preſerved from: Jarchi obſerves, that it was a ſaying of R. Akiba, that this is "the great univerſal "in the law," and it does indeed comprehend the whole of the ſecond table of the law, and is the ſummary of it, and is pretty much the ſame our Lord ſays of it, that it is the ſecond and great commandment, and like unto the firſt, on which two all the law and the prophets hang, Matt. xxii. 37—40. and ſo the apoſtle Paul makes all the laws of the ſecond table to be comprehended in this, Rom. xiii. 9. I am the Lord; the creator of all men, and who has commanded them to love one another, and to whom alone vengeance belongs, and who expects obedience to the above laws of his.

℣. 19. Ye ſhall keep my ſtatutes, &c.] Thoſe which follow, and which are of a different ſort from what are laſt mentioned, of a moral nature, and are planted in the heart, as Aben Ezra ſays; are agreeable to the law and light of nature, and part of the work of the law written on the heart, as the apoſtle calls it, Rom. ii. 15. but the following are of poſitive inſtitution, and depend upon the will of the lawgiver, the reaſons of which are not ſo apparent and manifeſt; and therefore Jarchi calls them the decree of the king, who gives no reaſon for it; ordinances and appointments of a ceremonial kind, which, though there is a meaning in them, and a reaſon for them, yet not clear and plain: thou ſhalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverſe kind; or cauſe them to gender [e]; for cattle do not uſually of themſelves gender with a diverſe kind, unleſs directed and ſolicited to it, as a male of one kind with a female of an other; for inſtance, an horſe with a ſhe-aſs, or an he-aſs with a mare, and even creatures that were like one another yet of different kinds, were not to mix together; as a wolf and a dog, a hound and a fox, goats and roebucks, goats and ſheep, a horſe and a mule, a mule and an aſs, an aſs and a wild aſs; for though they are like one another, they are of different kinds [f]: a creature thus gendered was not forbidden to be uſed, as a mule; and if a clean creature and gendered of clean ones, though of a different kind, it might be eaten, as Maimonides [g] affirms; for not the creature gendered was unlawful for uſe, but the act of cauſing to gender is what is forbidden: the deſign was to preſerve the order of beings, and the nature of creatures as they were at the firſt creation; that there might be no change among them, or any thing taken from or added to what God had made; not to ſeparate what God had joined, or join what God had ſeparated, which to do muſt reflect upon his wiſdom; as alſo, that men and women, as Philo [h] obſerves, might abſtain from unlawful converſe, from unnatural luſts and mixtures; and as Ainſworth thinks, this was to lead Iſrael to the ſimplicity and ſincerity of religion, and of all the parts and doctrines of the law and goſpel in their diſtinct kinds, as faith and works, to mingle which together in our juſtification before God, is forbidden; or rather to teach the ſaints not to mix with the men of the world, in evil converſation, or in ſuperſtitious worſhip; to which may be added, to ſhew that ſpiritual regeneration is not partly of corruptible and partly of incorruptible ſeed, nor partly of the will of man, and partly of the will of God; nor partly of the power of man, and partly of the power of God, but wholly of the Spirit and Grace of God: thou ſhalt not ſow thy field with mingled ſeed; or ſeed of divers ſorts, as wheat and barley, and which, according to the Jews [i], was not mingled unleſs there be two grains of wheat and one of barley, or one of wheat and two of barley; or wheat, and barley, and rye: they alſo include herbs and trees in this law, and make an ingrafture of them, a forbidden mixture; hence, they ſay [k], they do not engraft one tree in another, nor one herb in another, nor a tree in an herb, nor an herb in a tree, of which they give inſtances: and there are various ſorts of ſeeds, herbs, roots, and trees, which are and are not of divers kinds, and ſome that are alike and yet diverſe; for they have a whole treatiſe of ſuch-like things, called Celaim, or divers kinds: as to the myſtical ſenſe, the field may repreſent the church of God, which is not an open but an incloſed field, incloſed by the grace of God, and ſeparated from others by it, well manured and cultivated by the Spirit of God, and through the word and ordinances, as means, in which all manner of fruit and flowers grow, and is the property of Chriſt; ſee Cant. iv. 12, 13, 14. Matt. xiii. 44. the ſeed may ſignify the word or doctrine of the goſpel, ſown by the miniſters of it, ſkilfully and plentifully, which ſhould be pure and unmixed, not contradictory, nor inconſiſtent, but all of a piece; the doctrines of it, as thoſe of election, juſtification, peace, pardon, and ſalvation, are to be repreſented, not as partly of works and partly of grace, but as entirely of the grace of God through Chriſt: or good and bad men may be ſignified by the mingled ſeed; good men who are made ſo by the grace of God, and are the good ſeed, or the good ground which receives it, which hear the word, underſtand it, and bring forth fruit; bad men ſuch as are of bad principles and practices, theſe are not to be mixed together in a church-ſtate; bad men are neither to be received nor retained: neither ſhall a garment mingled

[b] ——— quippe minuti, &c. Juvenal. Satyr. 13.
[c] ולא תשמר & non obſervabis, Montanus.
[d] Non ſervabis, Pagninus, Druſius; neque iram aſſervato; Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[e] תרביע non facies coire, V. L. Pagninus, Druſius.
[f] Miſn. Celaim, c. 1. §. 6.
[g] Hilchot Celaim, c. 9. §. 3.
[h] De ſpecial. leg. p. 784.
[i] Miſn. ut ſupra, §. 9.
[k] Miſn. ib. §. 7, 8.

mingled of linen and woollen come upon thee; for as Joſephus [k] ſays, none but the prieſts were allowed to wear ſuch a garment, and with which the Miſnah [l] agrees; in which it is aſſerted, that the prieſts have no other cloathing to miniſter in in the ſanctuary, but of woollen and linen; which ſeems to be a better reaſon of this prohibition than what Maimonides [m] gives, that it was on the account of idolatrous prieſts who uſed to go cloathed with ſuch a garment, and a metal ring on their fingers: the Jewiſh tradition is, nothing is forbidden on account of divers kinds (i. e. in garments) but wool and flax; camels wool, and ſheeps wool mixed together, if the greater part is camels it is free, but if the greater part is ſheeps wool it is forbidden, if half and half it is forbidden; and ſo flax and hemp mixed together; alſo that nothing is forbidden on ſuch account but what is ſpun and wove [n]: the deſign of this as of the other, ſeems to be in general to caution againſt unnatural luſts and impure mixtures, and all communion of good and bad men, and particularly againſt joining the righteouſneſs of Chriſt with the works of men, in the buſineſs of juſtification: Chriſt's righteouſneſs is often compared to a garment, and ſometimes to fine linen, clean and white; and mens righteouſneſs to filthy rags, Rev. xix. 8. Iſ. lxiv. 6. which are by no means to be put together in the ſaid affair; ſuch who believe in Chriſt are juſtified by the obedience of one and not of more, and by faith in that obedience and righteouſneſs, without the works of the law, Rom. v. 19. and iii. 28. and iv. 6. to join them together is needleſs, diſagreeable, and dangerous.

℣. 20. Whoſoever lieth carnally with a woman, &c.] Has carnal knowledge of her: a man and woman are expreſſed, ſignifying thoſe that are of age, Aben Ezra obſerves, that according to the myſtical expoſition of theſe words, this ſame carnally lying is as of divers kinds, of a free man with a bond woman, and ſo follows upon the above law, and in connexion with it: the woman is deſcribed as one that is a bond-maid; either meaning a Canaanitiſh maid, as Jarchi, or an Iſraelitiſh one, as Aben Ezra, whom her father had ſold, Exod. xxi. 7. betrothed to her huſband; to an Hebrew ſervant, as Jarchi, or who was promiſed marriage, either by her maſter or his ſon, as Aben Ezra, Exod. xxi. 8, 9. and not at all redeemed, or freedom given her; or, redeemed and not redeemed, as Jarchi; or as the Targum of Jonathan, not yet redeemed with an entire redemption (or wholly redeemed) with ſilver, nor a writing of her freedom given her, part of the redemption-price being paid but not the whole; ſo that ſhe was, as Jarchi and Ben Gerſom expreſs it, half a bond-maid and half free: ſhe ſhall be ſcourged; and not he, as the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi remark, though the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, both ſhall be beaten; and the original text does not clearly determine it, whether one or both ſhould be ſcourged, ſince it may be rendered, there ſhall be a ſcourging [o]; and ſeeing both were guilty of ſin, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe that both ſhould be ſcourged, but this is contrary to the ſenſe of the Jewiſh writers; ſo Kimchi [p] obſerves, the word is תהיה in the ſingular number and feminine gender, and not in the plural; wherefore, according to the ſimple ſenſe, ſhe is to be beaten, and not he to be beaten; and this was done with the thong of an ox's hide, as is the ſenſe of the word uſed, according to Gaon, and ſo ſome in Aben Ezra; and ſo it it remarked in the Miſnah [q], all the uncleanneſſes, whether of a man or woman, are alike as to ſtripes and ſacrifice, but with reſpect to a bond-maid, he (i. e. God) hath not made the man equal to the woman as to ſtripes, nor the woman to the man as to ſacrifice: they ſhall not be put to death, becauſe ſhe was not free; otherwiſe adultery was puniſhed with death of both parties, when committed with a woman married to an huſband, Deut. xxii. 22. and ſhe a free woman; but this not being ſo, were not guilty of death, becauſe, as Jarchi ſays, her eſpouſals were no eſpouſals, whereas they would had ſhe been free, and ſo have been guilty of death: this difference the law made between a bond and free-woman, but in Chriſt Jeſus and under the goſpel-diſpenſation there is no difference, Gal. iii. 28.

℣. 21. He ſhall bring his treſpaſs-offering unto the Lord, &c.] To the prieſt of the Lord, to offer it for him; he, and not ſhe, as the Targum of Jonathan, has it; ſee the note on the preceding verſe: unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; where all offerings were to be brought, ch. xvii. 4, 5. even a ram for a treſpaſs-offering; which was the uſual creature for ſuch a ſacrifice, ch. v. 15. 18. and vi. 6. the woman was not obliged to bring any, ſhe being a bond-maid; and ſo having nothing of her own, but what was her maſter's, her circumſtances are conſidered, and ſcourging was ſufficient.

℣. 22. And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him, &c.] By offering his ſacrifice for him, typical of the atoning ſacrifice of Chriſt: with the ram of his treſpaſs-offering before the Lord; preſented before him at the door of the tabernacle, and offered up on his altar: for his ſin which he hath done; or ſinned, which is ſo expreſſed, according to Jarchi, to take in his ſin, whether done ignorantly or preſumptuouſly: and the ſin which he hath done ſhall be forgiven him; upon the atonement made, as all the ſins of God's people are forgiven through Chriſt, upon the foot of his atoning ſacrifice, ſee Heb. ix. 22.

℣. 23. And when ye ſhall come into the land, &c.] The land of Canaan, whither they were now going: and ſhall have planted all manner of trees for food; ſuch that brought forth fruit that was eatable, as figs, grapes, olives, &c. ſo that all ſuch trees as did not bear fruit fit for man's food, came not under the following law; nor ſuch as grew up of themſelves and were not planted; nor ſuch as were planted for any other uſe than for fruit; nor ſuch as were planted by the Canaanites before the Iſraelites came into their land; for ſo ſay the Jews, what were planted for an hedge or for timber are free from the law; and add, at the time our fathers came into the land, what they found planted was free, what they planted, though they had not ſubdued it (the land) was bound: then ye ſhall count the fruit thereof as uncircumciſed; not fit to be eaten but to be taken off and caſt away as the foreſkin of the fleſh: three years it ſhall be as uncircumciſed unto you, it ſhall not be eaten of; which was a proviſion partly for the benefit of fruit-trees newly planted, whoſe fruit, when they firſt bear, gardiners frequently take off betimes, and don't ſuffer them

1

[k] Antiq. l. 4. c. 8. §. 11.
[l] Miſn. ut ſupra, c. 9. §. 1. 8.
[m] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 37.
[n] Celaim, c. 9. §. 1.
[o] בקרת תהיה vapulatio erit, Fagius, Vatablus, Ainſworth; flagellatio adhibetor; Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[p] Sepher Shoraſh. rad. בקר
[q] Ceritot, c. 2. §. 4.

them to grow to any perfection, by which means a tree will grow ſtronger, and will bear more and better fruit another year; and partly for the health of man; which phyſical reaſon is given by Aben Ezra, who obſerves that the fruit that comes unto the third year there is no profit by it, but is hurtful; and chiefly becauſe, as it is proper that the firſt fruits ſhould be given to the Lord before any is eaten, ſo it is right that it ſhould be given ſeaſonably, and when it is brought to its perfection: three years were to be reckoned, as Jarchi and Ben Gerſom ſay, from the time the tree was planted.

℣. 24. But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof ſhall be holy, &c.] Separated and devoted to the ſervice of God, to be given to the prieſt, or to be bought again of him; wherefore the Targum of Jonathan adds, at the end of the verſe, redeemed from the prieſt, a redemption-price being given to the prieſt; and, as Jarchi obſerves, as the tithe was not eaten without the walls of Jeruſalem, but by redemption, even ſo likewiſe this: to praiſe the Lord withal; for his abundant goodneſs in bleſſing and making the trees fruitful, and bringing their fruit unto perfection; and by devoting the firſt fruits to God, his name was praiſed and glorified, as well as by eating them with joy and gladneſs before the Lord in Jeruſalem.

℣. 25. And in the fifth year ſhall ye eat of the fruit thereof, &c.] And ſo in all ſucceeding years as long as the tree laſted and bore: that it may yield unto you the increaſe thereof; may be ſo abundantly bleſſed, and produce ſo large an increaſe as to anſwer the three years want of any fruit from it, and the dedication of the fruit of the fourth year to the Lord: I am the Lord your God; who has promiſed this increaſe, is both able and faithful to make it good.

℣. 26. Ye ſhall not eat any thing with the blood, &c.] Or upon, over, or by the blood [s], for this law ſeems different from that in Gen. ix. 4. and from thoſe in Lev. iii. 17. and vii. 26. and xvii. 10. and is variouſly interpreted by the Jewiſh writers; ſome of not eating fleſh, the blood not being rightly let out of it, as not being thoroughly cleared of it [t], and ſo comes under the notion of things ſtrangled; others of not eating of ſacrifices until the blood ſtands in the baſon [u]; and others of not eating any fleſh whoſe blood is not ſprinkled on the altar, if near the holy place [w]: ſome think it refers to the cuſtom of murderers who eat over the perſon ſlain, that the avengers of the ſlain may not take vengeance on them, ſuppoſing ſomething ſuperſtitious in it, becauſe of what follows [x]; though it rather has reſpect to an idolatrous practice of the Zabians, as Maimonides [y] informs us, who took blood to be the food of devils, and who uſed to take the blood of a ſlain beaſt and put it in a veſſel, or in an hole dug in the earth, and eat the fleſh ſitting round about the blood; fancying by this means they had communion with devils, and contracted friendſhip and familiarity with them, whereby they might get knowledge of future things; ſee the note on Ezek. xxxiii. 25: neither ſhall ye uſe inchantment; ſoothſaying or divination by various creatures, as by the weaſel, birds or fiſhes, as the Talmudiſts [z]; or rather by ſerpents, as the word uſed is thought to have the ſignification of; or by any odd accidents, as a man's food falling out of his mouth, or his ſtaff out of his hand, or his ſon calling after him behind, or a crow kawing to him, or a hart paſſing by him, or a ſerpent on his right hand and a fox on his left, or one ſays, don't begin (any work) to-morrow, it is the new moon, or the going out of the ſabbath [a]: nor obſerve times; ſaying, ſuch a day is a lucky day to begin any buſineſs, or ſuch an hour an unlucky hour to go out in, as Jarchi, taking the word to have the ſignification of times, days, and hours, as our verſion and others; but Aben Ezra derives it from a word which ſignifies a cloud, and it is well known, he ſays, that ſoothſayers view and conſult the clouds, their likeneſs and motion; but ſome of the antient writers, as Gerſom obſerves, derive it from a word which ſignifies an eye, and ſuppoſe that ſuch perſons are intended who hold the eyes of people, caſt a miſt before them, or uſe ſome juggling tricks whereby they deceive their ſight.

℣. 27. Ye ſhall not round the corners of your heads, &c.] The extremities of the hairs of the head, round about, on the forehead, temples, and behind the ears; this is done, as Jarchi ſays, when any one makes his temples, behind his ears, and his forehead alike, ſo that the circumference of his head is found to be round all about, as if they had been cut as with a bowl; and ſo the Arabians cut their hair, as Herodotus [b] reports, ſee the note on Jer. ix. 26. neither ſhalt thou mar the corners of thy beard; by ſhaving them entirely; Jarchi and other Jewiſh writers ſay, there are five of them, two on the right, as Gerſom reckons them, one on the upper jaw, the other on the nether, and two over-againſt them on the left, and one in the place where the nether jaw joins the right to the left, the chin; the ſame obſerves, that it was the manner of idolaters to do the above things; and Maimonides [c] is of opinion, that the reaſon of the prohibition is, becauſe the idolatrous prieſts uſed this cuſtom; but this law does not reſpect prieſts only, but the people of Iſrael in general; wherefore rather it was occaſioned by the Gentiles in common cutting their hair, in honour of their gods, as the Arabians did, as Herodotus in the above place relates, in imitation of Bacchus, and to the honour of him; and ſo with others, it was uſual for young men to conſecrate their hair to idols; but in as much as ſuch practices were uſed on account of the dead, as Aben Ezra obſerves, it ſeems probable enough that theſe things are forbidden to be done on their account, ſince it follows.

℣. 28. Ye ſhall not make any cuttings in your fleſh for the dead, &c.] Either with their nails, tearing their cheeks and other parts, or with any inſtrument, knife, razor, &c. Jarchi ſays, it was the cuſtom of the Amorites, when any one died to cut their fleſh, as it was of the Scythians, as Herodotus [d] relates, even thoſe of the royal family; for a king they cut off a part of the ear, ſhaved the hair round about, cut the arms about, wounded the forehead and noſe, and transfixed the left hand with arrows; and ſo the Carthaginians, who might receive it from the Phœnicians, being a colony of theirs, theirs, uſed to teat their hair and mouths in mourning, and beat their breaſts [e]; and with the Romans the women uſed to tear their cheeks in ſuch a manner that it was forbid by the law of the 12 tables, which ſome have thought was taken from hence: and all this was done to appeaſe the infernal deities, and to give them ſatisfaction for the deceaſed, and to make them propitious to them, as Varro [f] affirms; and here it is ſaid to be made for the ſoul, for the ſoul of the departed, to the honor of it, and for its good, though the word is often uſed for a dead body: now, according to the Jewiſh canons [g], whoſoever made but one cutting for a dead perſon, was guilty, and to be ſcourged; and he that made one for five dead men, or five cuttings for one dead man, was obliged to ſcourging for every one of them: nor print any marks upon you; Aben Ezra obſerves, there are ſome that ſay this is in connexion with the preceding clauſe, for there were who marked their bodies with a known figure, by burning, for the dead; and he adds, and there are to this day ſuch, who are marked in their youth in their faces, that they may be known; theſe prints or marks were made with ink or black lead, or however, the inciſions in the fleſh were filled up therewith; but this was uſually done as an idolatrous practice: ſo ſays Ben Gerſom, this was the cuſtom of the Gentiles in ancient times, to imprint upon themſelves the mark of an idol, to ſhew that they were his ſervants; and the law cautions from doing this, as he adds, to the exalted name, (the name of God): in the Miſnah it is ſaid [h], a man is not guilty unleſs he writes the name, as it is ſaid, Lev. xix. 28. which the Talmudiſts [i] and the commentators [k] interpret of the name of an idol and not of God: I am the Lord; who only is to be acknowledged as ſuch, obeyed and ſerved, and not any ſtrange god whoſe mark ſhould be imprinted on them.

[s] על הדם ſuper ſanguine, Montanus, Munſter; ſuper ſanguinem, Fagius. [t] Joſeph. Antiq. l. 6. c. 6. §. 4. T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 63. 1. [u] Targum Jon. in loc. T. Bab. Sanhedrin, ib. [w] Aben Ezra in loc. [x] Baal Hatturim in loc. [y] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 46. [z] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 66. 1. Jarchi in loc. [a] Kimchi, Sepher Shoraſh. rad. נחש [b] Thalia, ſive, l. 3. c. 8. [c] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 37. Hilchot Obede Cochabim, c. 12. §. 1. [d] Melpomene, ſive, l. 4. c. 71.

℣. 29. Do not proſtitute thy daughter to cauſe her to be a whore, &c.] Not by delaying to marry her, which is the ſenſe the Jews give [l], but it refers to a wicked practice among the Phœnicians or Canaanites, Athanaſius [m] ſpeaks of, whoſe women uſed to proſtitute themſelves in the temples of their idols; and to ſuch filthy ſervices, in a religious way, the Iſraelites in imitation of them, are forbid to expoſe their daughters: ſuch filthy practices, under a notion of religion, were committed at Babylon, Corinth, and other places; ſee the note on Mic. i. 7. leſt the land fall to whoredom, and the land become full of wickedneſs; of the wickedneſs of whoredom both corporal and ſpiritual, fornication and idolatry; both which would be promoted by ſuch abominable practices, and in proceſs of time the land be filled with them.

℣. 30. Ye ſhall keep my ſabbaths, &c.] By attending to the worſhip and ſervice of God on ſabbath-days, they and their children would be preſerved from the idolatry of the Gentiles, and all the filthy practices attending it: and reverence my ſanctuary; and not defile it by ſuch impurities as were committed in the temples of idols; the ſanctuary being an holy place, ſacred to him whoſe name is holy and reverend, and where was the ſeat of his glorious majeſty, and therefore not to be defiled by fornication or idolatry, or by doing any thing in it unſeemly and unbecoming, ſee Mar. xi. 16. and the note there: I am the Lord; who had appointed the obſervance of the ſabbath-day, and dwelt in the ſanctuary, and therefore expected that the one would be kept and the other reverenced, and neither of them polluted.

℣. 31. Regard not them that have familiar ſpirits, &c.] The word uſed ſignifies bottles, and that ſort of diviners here intended go by this name, either becauſe what they ſat on when they divined was in the form of a bottle, or they divined by one, or they were ſwelled and inflated as bottles when they delivered out their anſwers, or ſpoke as out of a bottle or hollow place: hence they are called maſters or miſtreſſes of the bottle; they ſeem to be the ſame with the ventriloquiſts, and ſo the Septuagint verſion here calls them; ſuch whoſe voice ſeemed to come out of their bellies, and even the lower parts of them; and ſuch was the Pythian propheteſs at Delphos, and very probably the maid in the times of the apoſtles, who had a ſpirit of divination, or of Python, Acts xvi. 16. and ſo the words may be rendered here, look not to the Pythons [n], or thoſe who have the ſpirit of Python; ſo Jarchi from the Miſnah [o] interprets the word here uſed Baal Ob, or the maſter of the bottle, this is Python, one that ſpeaks from under his armholes: neither ſeek after wizards; ſuch as pretend to a great deal of knowledge, as the word ſignifies; ſuch as are called cunning men, who pretend to know where loſt or ſtolen goods are, and to tell people their fortunes, and what will befal them hereafter: to be defiled by them; for by ſeeking to them, and believing what is ſaid by them, and truſting thereunto, and expecting events anſwerable to their predictions, they would be guilty of a groſs ſin, and ſo bring pollution and guilt on them; according to the Jewiſh canons [p], ſuch ſort of perſons as are cautioned againſt were to be ſtoned, and they that conſulted them to be reproved: I am the Lord your God; who only is to be regarded and ſought unto for advice and aſſiſtance; ſee Iſ. viii. 19.

℣. 32. Thou ſhalt riſe up before the hoary head, &c.] Or before old age [q], which may be diſcerned by the hoary or grey hairs upon the head; that is, before a grey-headed man, or an old man, and one was reckoned ſo, when he was of 70 years of age; for ſo it is ſaid [r], one of 60 years is arrived to old age, and one of 70 to grey hairs. Fagius relates, that according to the tradition of the Hebrews, a young man was obliged to riſe up when an ancient man was at the diſtance of four cubits from him, and to ſit down again as ſoon as he had paſſed by him, that it might appear it was done in honour of him. And this was not only obſerved among the Jews, but anciently among heathens, who reckoned it abominable wickedneſs, and a capital crime, if a young man did not riſe up to an old man, and a boy to a bearded perſon [s]. Herodotus [t] reports, that the Egyptians agreed in this with the Lacedæmonians, and with them only of the Grecians, that the younger when they met the elder, gave them the way and turned aſide, and when coming towards them roſe up out of their ſeat; ſeat; and this law was enjoined them by Lycurgus, and which Ælianus [u] commends as of all the moſt humane. And this reſpect to ancient perſons is due to them from younger perſons, becauſe of their having been in the world before them, and of their long continuance in it, and becauſe of the favour and honour God has beſtowed upon them in granting them long life, as alſo becauſe of the experience, knowledge and wiſdom they may be ſuppoſed to have attained unto: the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan reſtrain this to ſuch are expert in the law; ſo Jarchi ſays, there is no old man but he that has acquired wiſdom; but it ſeems not to be the intention of this law to limit the reſpect to ſuch only; though it muſt be allowed that ancient perſons, who are wiſe and good, are worthy of ſpecial regard, ſee Prov. xvi. 31: and honour the face of the old man; who for the wrinkles of it, and his withered countenance, might be liable to be deſpiſed. The Targum of Jonathan interprets it, the face of a wiſe man, which agrees with what is obſerved before; and ſo Jarchi, Ben Gerſom, and other Jewiſh writers explain it; and the former aſks, what is this honour? he may not ſit in his place, nor contradict his words. All this may be applied to elders by office, as well as in age, to magiſtrates, maſters and teachers; and particularly, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, this may admoniſh us to give honour to God, who is the ancient of days, who always was, and ever will be: and fear thy God, I am the Lord; who has commanded ſuch reverence of ancient perſons, and will puniſh for any marks of irreverence ſhewn them; and who is himſelf to be feared and reverenced above all, being from everlaſting to everlaſting God, and whoſe name is holy and reverend.

[e] Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 3. c. 7. [f] Apud Servium in Virgil. Æneid. 3. [g] Miſn. Maccot, c. 3. §. 5. [h] Ibid. §. 6. [i] T. Bab. Maccot, fol. 21. 1. [k] Jarchi, Maimon. Bartenora, & Ez Chayim in Miſn. ut ſupra. [l] Targ. Jon. in loc. T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 76. 1. [m] Contra Gentes, p. 21. [n] אל תפני אל אבת ne reſpiciatis ad pythonas, Montanus; ſo Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [o] Miſn. Sanhedrin, c 7. §. 7. [p] Ibid. [q] תפני שיבה ante canitiem, Pagninus; ſo Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [r] Pirke Abot. c. 5. §. 21. [s] Improbitas illo fuit, &c. Juvenal. Satyr. 13. ℣. 53, 54, 55, 56. [t] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 80.

℣. 33. And if a ſtranger ſojourn with you in your land, &c.] Ben Gerſom, and others, underſtand this of a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, who was circumciſed, and in all things conformed to the Jewiſh religion; but it may be interpreted of a proſelyte of the gate, who was not an idolater, ſince he is deſcribed as one ſojourning with them, and indeed of any ſtranger, who for a time was providentially caſt among them: ye ſhall not vex him; with hard and grievous words, upbraiding him with his former ignorance and idolatry, and ſaying unto him, as Jarchi obſerves, yeſterday thou waſt a worſhipper of idols, and now thou comeſt to learn the law: nor diſtreſs him by any means in buſineſs, or with law-ſuits; ſee the note on Exod. xxii. 21.

℣. 34. But a ſtranger that dwelleth with you, ſhall be as one born amongſt you, &c.] Eſpecially if a proſelyte of righteouſneſs; for then he enjoyed the ſame privileges, civil and religious, the Iſraelites did, for there was one law for them both, Exod. xii. 49: and thou ſhalt love him as thyſelf; and ſhew it by doing all the good things for him they would have done for themſelves in like circumſtances: for ye were ſtrangers in the land of Egypt; and therefore knew what hardſhips ſuch were expoſed unto; and it became them to put on bowels of compaſſion, and ſhew pity to thoſe in a like condition, and particularly conſider, as Jarchi ſuggeſts, that they were idolaters there alſo, and therefore ought not to upbraid ſtrangers with their former idolatry: I am the Lord your God; who ſhewed kindneſs to them when ſtrangers in Egypt, and had brought them out of that land, and therefore ought to obey his commands, and particularly in this inſtance.

℣. 35. Ye ſhall do no unrighteouſneſs in judgment, &c.] This is repeated from ℣. 15. and in order to lead on to ſome other laws and inſtructions; tho' Aben Ezra thinks this is ſaid in connexion with the preceding words, and in reference to the ſtranger, agreeable to Deut. i. 16. but Jarchi refers it to what follows concerning weights and meaſures, and obſerves, that a meaſurer is a judge; and if he acts deceitfully, he perverts judgment, and does that which is deteſtable and abominable, and is the cauſe of the five following things ſaid of a judge; he defiles the land, and prophanes the name of God, and cauſes the Shekinah or divine majeſty to remove, or cauſes Iſrael to fall by the ſword, or carries them captive out of their land: in meteyard, in weight, or in meaſure; the firſt of theſe, according to Jarchi, ſignifies the meaſure of land, of fields, &c. and ſo likewiſe of any thing that is meaſured, not only by the rod or line, but by the yard or ell, as cloth and other things, whether broad or narrow that are meaſured in their length; and the ſecond may reſpect the weight of all ſorts of things that are weighed in ſcales, as money in former times, as well as various ſorts of goods; and the laſt has reſpect to the meaſure of both dry and liquid things, by the buſhel, peck, quart, pint, &c.

℣. 36. Juſt balances, juſt weights, &c.] Which were for ſuch ſort of things as were bought and ſold by weight, and theſe were to be according to the cuſtom and uſage which univerſally obtained among them, or were fixed and ſettled by them; they were to be neither lighter nor heavier; they were not to have one ſort to buy with, and another to ſell with, which was not juſt, and was an abomination to the Lord, Prov. xi. 1. for weights, it is in the original text ſtones, for thoſe were formerly uſed in weighing, and were with us: hence it is ſtill in uſe to ſay, ſo much by the ſtone. And according to Maimonides [w], the Jews were not to make their weights neither of iron, nor of lead, nor of the reſt of metals, leſt they ſhould ruſt and become light, but of poliſhed rock, and the like: a juſt ephah, and a juſt hin, ſhall ye have; the firſt of theſe was the meaſure of things dry, as corn, and the like, the latter of things liquid, as oil and wine; the one held three ſeahs or pecks, or ten omers, Exod. xvi. 36. or, according to a nicer calculation, the ephah held 7 gallons, 2 quarts, and half a pint; and the other, according to ſome, held three quarts; but, as more exactly calculated, it held a wine gallon, and a little more than a quart, ſee the note on Exod. xxx. 24. Some Jewiſh writers [x] refer this to words, promiſes and compacts, expreſſed by yea and nay, which they were to abide by; that their yea ſhould be yea, and their nay, nay; that their affirmation ſhould be juſt, and ſo their negation: I am the Lord your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt; and therefore were under great obligations to obſerve his commands, as follows.

℣. 37. Therefore ſhall ye obſerve all my ſtatutes, and all my judgments, &c.] Delivered in this and the preceding chapters, and elſewhere, whether ceremonial, or judicial, or moral, as there were of each, which had been delivered to them; and which are all comprehended in theſe two words, ſtatutes, or ordinances, which were the determinations of his ſovereign will, and of mere poſitive inſtitution; and judgments, which were ſuch laws as reſpected their civil or religious conduct, formed according to the rules

[u] Hiſt. Animal. l. 6. c. 61.

[w] Hilchot Genibah, c. 8. §. 4. loc. Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Sheviith, c. 10. §. 9.

[x] Torath Cohanim apud Yalkut in rules of juſtice and equity; all and every one of which were to be obſerved, taken notice of and regarded, in order to be put in practice, as follows: and do them; act according to them, in civil, moral and religious life: I am the Lord; who enjoined all theſe things, and had a right to do ſo, and expected obedience to them, which it was right and fit that they ſhould give.

CHAP. XX.

IN this chapter ſeveral laws are repeated, enforced with a penalty annexed to them, and the breach of them made capital, to deter from it, as giving ſeed to Molech, ℣. 1—5. going after ſuch that have familiar ſpirits, or are wizards, ℣. 6. by ſhunning which, and other ſins, a regard would be ſhewn to holineſs, ℣. 7, 8. ſuch as curſing parents, ℣. 9. committing adultery, ℣. 10. inceſtuous copulations, and marriages, and beaſtly actions, ℣. 11—21. all which it became the Iſraelites to avoid, leſt when come into the land of Canaan, they ſhould be caſt out of it, as the old inhabitants were for the ſame things, ℣. 22, 23, 24. and therefore, that they might appear to be a diſtinct people from others, they were to put a difference between clean and unclean creatures, ℣. 25, 26. and the chapter is cloſed with a law, making it death for any perſon to have a familiar ſpirit, or to be a wizard, ℣. 27.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After he had delivered the above laws to him in the preceding chapter, he added penalties to many of them, or declared what puniſhment ſhould be inflicted on the tranſgreſſors of them: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Again, thou ſhalt ſay to the children of Iſrael, &c.] The body of the people by their elders, and the heads of their tribes; for the following laws were binding on them all: whoſoever he be of the children of Iſrael, or of the ſtrangers that ſojourn in Iſrael; every one of the people of Iſrael, of whatſoever age, ſex or condition of life; and not they only, but the ſtrangers and proſelytes; and not the proſelytes of righteouſneſs only, but the proſelytes of the gate, who, as well as the others, were to ſhun idolatry, and other impieties and immoralities after mentioned: that giveth any of his ſeed unto Molech; which Aben Ezra interprets of lying with an idolatrous woman, or a worſhipper of Molech, the abomination or idol of the Ammonites, 1 Kings xi. 7. of which ſee ch. xviii. 21. but more than that is here intended, or even than cauſing their ſeed or offſpring to paſs through the fire to Molech, as in the place referred to; more is meant by it than a luſtration of them, or a dedicating them to Molech, by delivering them to his prieſts to lead them between two fires for that purpoſe, but even the ſacrificing of them to him; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan ſeems to underſtand it, which is, "that makes (or ſacrifices) of "his ſeed to Molech to be burnt in the fire:" for that the Phœnicians or Canaanites, whoſe cuſtoms the Iſraelites were in danger of imitating, and therefore cautioned againſt, did ſacrifice human creatures, and theſe the deareſt to them, even their beloved and only-begotten children, to Saturn, is certain, as Porphyry [y] and Euſebius [z] affirm, or to Hercules, as Pliny [a], and both the ſame with Molech, or the ſun: he ſhall ſurely be put to death; by the hand of the civil magiſtrate, which death was to be by ſtoning, as follows: the people of the land ſhall ſtone him with ſtones; that is, the people of the houſe of Iſrael, as both the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; ſuch as lived in that part of the country where the idolater lived, and where he committed the ſin, or was condemned for it; of the manner of ſtoning, ſee the note on Acts vii. 58.

℣. 3. And I will ſet my face againſt that man, &c.] Expreſs reſentment, anger, wrath and indignation at him, ſee Pſ. xxxiv. 16: and will cut him off from among his people; that is, ſuppoſing him to have been guilty of the above horrid crime, and there being not ſufficient evidence given of it by witneſſes, or the magiſtrates negligent in doing their duty; and the matter being known to God the omniſcient, he according to this declaration would deal with him himſelf, and cut him off out of the land of the living, from among his relations, friends and neighbours, by his own immediate hand; otherwiſe the law before provided a penalty, which is death by ſtoning, whereby he would be effectually cut off from his people, and deprived of all natural, civil and religious privileges in this life, and ſent into everlaſting puniſhment in another, unleſs forgiving grace ſhould be vouchſafed: becauſe he hath given of his ſeed to Molech; an iniquity to be puniſhed by the judge, and deſerving of everlaſting wrath and deſtruction: to defile my ſanctuary; not by doing this horrid action in it, but by coming into it having done it; or by offering ſacrifice in another place than where God had commanded, as well as ſuch a ſacrifice as was abominable to him, ſacrifice being to be offered no where but on the altar of the Lord in the ſanctuary. Jarchi interprets this of the congregation of Iſrael, which was ſanctified to the Lord, in the midſt of which this wickedneſs was committed, and with which they were polluted: and to profane my name; by ſacrificing to an idol, when ſacrifice ſhould be offered to God; and ſuch a ſacrifice as would cauſe the name of God, and his holy laws, and true religion to be blaſphemed and evil ſpoken of among the Gentiles, Rom. ii. 23, 24.

℣. 4. And if the people of the land do any ways hide their eyes from the man, &c.] That is, the people of the houſe of Iſrael, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; if the friends, relations and neighbours of ſuch a man, though they know what he is about to do, or has done, yet they ſhut their eyes wilfully, or look another way; or however wink and connive at his wickedneſs, and will not diſcover him, and bear witneſs againſt him; or if a court of judicature, before whom he comes, does not take the evidence of his crime, nor condemn for it, or are negligent in puniſhing him as the law directs, a gift having blinded their eyes, or they careleſs and remiſs in their duty: when he giveth his ſeed unto Molech; a crime ſo heinous and abominable: and kill him not; don't bring witneſs againſt him, ſo as that he may be put to death, or do not upon the evidence given condemn him to death, or do not take care to have ſentence executed, by ſtoning him to death.

℣.

[y] De Abſtinent. l. 2. c. 56.
[a] Nat. Hiſt. l. 36. c. 5.
[z] De laudibus Conſtantin. c. 13 p. 646. Vid. Suidam in voce Σαρδανος.

℣. 5. Then I will ſet my face againſt that man, &c.] That man that ſees him do the fact, and winks at it, or the judge that connives at him, and will not condemn him, as well as the man that has committed the iniquity: and againſt his family; either the family of the witneſs, who could and ſhould have teſtified againſt him, or of the judge negligent of his office, or of the man himſelf, whoſe family muſt be privy to ſo ſhocking an action, and were abettors of it, and aiders and aſſiſters in it; and ſo Onkelos renders it, and his helpers: and will cut him off; the head of the family, whether judge, witneſs, or the criminal himſelf: and all that go a whoring after him; that commit the like idolatry after his example, and encouraged to it by the connivance of others at it: to commit whoredom with Molech; that is, idolatry, which is ſpiritual whoredom, and often ſo called in ſcripture, and with great propriety; for ſince God had eſpouſed theſe people to himſelf, and was their huſband, as he was from the time of his bringing them out of Egypt, and making a covenant with them, Jer. xxxi. 32. and their ſacrificing to and ſerving other gods, being a breach of their matrimonial covenant with him, it was no other than whoredom in a ſpiritual ſenſe, for which he threatens to cut them off: from among their people; by an immature death, even all that were guilty of ſuch abominable actions, or made themſelves acceſſory to them, by any ways conniving at them, either as judges or witneſſes.

℣. 6. The ſoul that turneth after ſuch as have familiar ſpirits, &c.] The man or woman that has reſpect unto them, ſeeks after them, and enquires of them, in order to get knowledge of things: and after wizards; who pretend to tell fortunes, and diſcover loſt and ſtolen goods, ſee the note on ch. xix. 31: to go a whoring after them; for to conſult them is to forſake the Lord, and have recourſe to ſatan and his inſtruments; to relinquiſh their truſt in God, and put confidence in them, and attribute ſuch things to them as only belong to God, even the knowledge of things future; and this is to commit idolatry, which is ſpiritual adultery: I will even ſet my face againſt that ſoul; ſhew like reſentment and indignation as at him that gives his ſeed to Molech: and will cut him off from among his people; in caſe his people do not bear witneſs againſt him, but hide their eyes, and wink at his crimes, or the civil magiſtrate does not condemn and puniſh him; the Targum of Jonathan is, "I will deſtroy him by the peſtilence."

℣. 7. Sanctify yourſelves therefore, &c.] By abſtaining from ſuch impious and idolatrous practices, and ſeparating themſelves from all that gave into them, as well as by obſerving the holy commandments of the Lord; otherwiſe internal ſanctification is not the work of man, but of the Lord himſelf, as in the following verſe: and be ye holy; or a ſeparate people from all others in worſhip and converſation: for I am the Lord your God; who is a holy God, and therefore it became them to be holy, in imitation of him, ch. xix. 2.

℣. 8. And ye ſhall keep my ſtatutes, and do them, &c.] Not only thoſe reſpecting the above things, but all others, which would be a means of preſerving them from ſin, and of promoting holineſs in their lives and converſations: I am the Lord which ſanctify you; who had ſeparated and diſtinguiſhed them from all other people on earth, and who had given them holy laws, as the means of holineſs; and who only could and did ſanctify internally, by his Spirit and grace, ſuch of them as were ſanctified in heart, as well as outwardly.

℣. 9. For every one that curſeth his father or his mother, &c.] Here begins the account of the penalties annexed to the ſeveral laws in the preceding chapter; and that reſpecting the fear and honour of parents being the firſt, is here begun with: ſhall ſurely be put to death; the Targum of Jonathan adds, "by caſting of ſtones," ſtoning being the puniſhment of ſuch tranſgreſſors: he hath curſed his father or his mother; to do either is his ſin, and a capital crime it is: his blood ſhall be upon him; he ſhall be guilty of death, be adjudged unto it, and puniſhed with it, namely, by ſtoning; for as Jarchi obſerves, wherever it is, his blood ſhall be on him, or their blood ſhall be on them, it is to be underſtood of ſtoning.

℣. 10. And the man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, &c.] Which is a breach of the ſeventh command, Exod. xx. 14. even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife; which is only an explanation of the former clauſe; tho' the Jewiſh writers, as Jarchi and Ben Gerſom ſay, this is ſo expreſſed to except the wife of a ſtranger, or a Gentile; but it means, whether a Gentile or an Iſraelite; and which may be confirmed by the inſtance of Phinehas ſlaying a prince of Iſrael, that lay with a Midianitiſh woman: the adulterer and the adultereſs ſhall ſurely be put to death; on account of her that is eſpouſed, by ſtrangling, with a hard napkin within a ſoft one; and on account of her that is married, by caſting ſtones; even both the adulterer and adultereſs, as the Targum: and the Jews ſay [b], ſtrangling was thus performed; they that were ſtrangled were fixed up to their knees in dung, and then they put a hard napkin within a ſoft one, and rolled it about his neck, and one drew it to him this way, and another drew it to him that way, until he expired: and there is no unlawful copulation puniſhed with ſtrangling, according to Maimonides [c], but lying with another man's wife; and who obſerves, that the death which is ſpoken of in the law abſolutely, that is, without ſpecifying any kind of death, is ſtrangling; but ſtoning ſeems rather meant, agreeable to Deut. xxii. 24. John. viii. 5.

℣. 11. And the man that lieth with his father's wife, &c.] Whether ſhe be his mother, or another woman, as the Targum of Jonathan; that is, whether ſhe is his own mother, or a ſtep-mother, or whether he did this in the life-time of his father, or after his death, or whether ſhe was betrothed or married, it mattered not; according to the Jewiſh tradition [d], this is a breach of the law, Lev. xviii. 8. and a man guilty of this, hath uncovered his father's nakedneſs; and which is a foul and ſhameful piece of wickedneſs, the penalty follows: both of them ſhall be put to death; by caſting ſtones on them, as the Targum of Jonathan adds; for, as before obſerved, wherever the following phraſe, their blood ſhall be upon them, is uſed, ſtoning is meant; and ſo, according to the Miſnah [e], all thoſe were to be ſtoned, after mentioned, of whom this phraſe is uſed.

℣. 12. If a man lye with his daughter-in-law, &c.] His ſon's wife, whether in the life-time of his ſon, or after his death, or whether ſhe was eſpouſed or married, according to the above tradition [f]: both of them ſhall ſurely be put to death; it being a breach of the

[b] Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 7. §. 3. [c] Hilchot Iſſure Biah, c. 1. §. 6. [d] Miſn. ut ſupra, § 4. [e] Ibid. [f] Miſn. ut ſupra.

the law in ch. xviii. 15. and this is the penalty annexed to it, even death: they have wrought confusion; have been guilty of a ſhocking and ſhameful mixture, as Jarchi and Ben Gerſom, as well as confounded the degrees of relation and affinity: their blood ſhall be upon them; it being a capital crime, their blood ſhall be ſhed for it; they ſhall be found guilty of death by ſtoning, as the Targum of Jonathan.

℣. 13. If a man lie alſo with mankind, as he lieth with a woman, &c.] Is guilty of the ſin of ſodomy, this is a breach of the law in ch. xviii. 22. both of them have committed an abomination; he that lies, and he that is lain with, both conſenting to perpetrate the abominable wickedneſs; which may well be called an abomination, being contrary to nature, and more than brutiſh, for nothing of that kind is to be found among brutes: they ſhall ſurely be put to death; if he that is lain with is not forced, as Aben Ezra obſerves: their blood ſhall be upon them; be ſlain by ſtoning, as the above Targum.

℣. 14. And if a man take a wife, and her mother, &c.] Marry both the one and the other, or commit uncleanneſs with them, they conſenting to it: it is wickedneſs; abominable wickedneſs, ſhocking and deteſtable; there are other things, which alſo are wicked and not to be done, but this is extremely wicked, wickedneſs to a high degree: they ſhall be burnt with fire, both he and they; the man, the mother, and her daughter, both being married together to him, or both conſenting to his lying with them; otherwiſe, if one of them was firſt his wife, it was not reaſonable that ſhe ſhould be put to death; and therefore ſome interpret they, one of them, as Jarchi obſerves, one or other of them; and ſo Aben Ezra explains it, this or that; if the mother was his wife, the daughter was to be burnt; and ſo on the contrary, if the daughter was his wife, the mother was to be burnt; according to the Targum of Jonathan, they were to be burnt by pouring lead into their mouths: and ſo the manner of burning is deſcribed in the Miſnah[g]; they that are to be burnt are fixed in dung up to their knees, then they put a hard napkin within a ſoft one, and roll it about his neck; one draws it one way, and another another way, until he opens his mouth; then they take hot melted lead, and pour it into his mouth, which goes down into his bowels and burns them. But it was rather done with faggots, of which an inſtance is given: that there be no wickedneſs among you; of ſuch kind, continued, countenanced, and paſs unpuniſhed. This puniſhment was to be inflicted, to deter perſons from it. The law againſt it is in ch. xviii. 17.

℣. 15. If a man lie with a beaſt, &c.] A ſin quite unnatural, exceeding ſhocking and deteſtable, forbid ch. xviii. 23: he ſhall ſurely be put to death; by ſtoning, as the Targum of Jonathan adds; and this is the death ſuch are adjudged to in the Miſnah[h]: and ye ſhall ſlay the beaſt; with clubs, as ſays the Targum of Jonathan; the reaſons given in the Miſnah[i], why the beaſt was to be ſlain are, becauſe ruin came to the man by means of it, and that it might not be ſaid, as it paſſed along the ſtreets, that's the beaſt for which ſuch an one was ſtoned. Aben Ezra ſays, it was to be ſlain, that it might not cauſe others to ſin; and he adds, there are that ſay it was to cover the reproach: no doubt the true reaſon was to deter the more from this deteſtable ſin, that if a beaſt, which was only acceſſory to it, and an inſtrument of it, was put to death, of how much ſorer puniſhment muſt the man that committed it be worthy of, even of eternal wrath and deſtruction, and unleſs repented of and forgiven, muſt be expected by him?

℣. 16. And if a woman approach unto any beaſt, and lie down thereto, &c.] In order that the beaſt may lie with her, and ſolicit it to commit ſuch an action with her, ſee ch. xviii. 23: thou ſhalt kill the woman and the beaſt; the woman by ſtoning, and the beaſt with clubs, as the Targum of Jonathan; and this for the ſame reaſons as before, as well as to prevent monſtrous births: they ſhall ſurely be put to death; both the one and the other, and not ſpared: their blood ſhall be upon them; they are guilty of a capital crime, a crime which deſerves death; this muſt be underſtood of the man that lies with a beaſt, and of the woman; for as for the beaſt itſelf, as it is not capable of ſinning, ſo not of guilt, in a proper ſenſe.

℣. 17. And if a man ſhall take his ſiſter, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter, &c.] Take her to be his wife, or commit leudneſs with her, whether ſhe be his ſiſter by both father and mother's ſide, or whether by one only, either way ſhe is his ſiſter, and it is not lawful to marry her, or lie with her, ſee ch. xviii. 9: and ſee her nakedneſs, and ſhe ſee his nakedneſs; which is not to be underſtood of an immodeſt view, expoſing to each other what ſhould not be ſeen, and pleaſing themſelves with ſuch obſcene ſights, but of the act of lying together, for ſo it is afterwards explained by a phraſe frequently uſed to expreſs that action by; and it denotes, as Aben Ezra obſerves, their mutual conſent and agreement in it: it is a wicked thing; and by no means to be done; it is a breach of a former law, it is a ſcandalous and reproachful thing, and the word is ſometimes uſed for reproach, as in Prov. xiv. 34. and they ſhall be cut off in the ſight of their people; by death, either by the hand of the civil magiſtrate, or by the hand of God, by the peſtilence, as the Targum of Jonathan; Ben Gerſom interprets it, of their dying childleſs, as in ſome following caſes, ℣. 20, 21. he hath uncovered his ſiſter's nakedneſs; or lay with her, which explains a preceding clauſe: he ſhall bear his iniquity; the puniſhment of it, and he alone, as Aben Ezra obſerves.

℣. 18. And if a man ſhall lie with a woman having her ſickneſs, &c.] Her monthly courſes, which make her weak and languid, which is forbidden, ch. xviii. 19. this is not to be underſtood of a man's lying with his wife ignorantly, when in ſuch a condition, for this being the caſe, he was only unclean ſeven days, ch. xv. 24. whereas this made him and her liable to cutting off, as in an after clauſe; but of his lying with her knowing this to be the caſe with her, and of which ſhe could not be ignorant, and therefore both liable to the ſame puniſhment; or elſe of any other man lying with her, or of any man lying with any woman married or unmarried, being in ſuch circumſtances: and ſhall uncover her nakedneſs; that is, have carnal knowledge of her: he hath diſcovered her fountain; from whence her iſſue of blood flows: and ſhe hath uncovered the fountain of her blood; freely and willingly, as Aben Ezra obſerves; for if ſhe had been forced, he alone would have been cut off; but both theſe phraſes put together ſhew agreement in this matter, that they both had knowledge of her caſe, and

[g] Sanhedrin, c. 7. §. 2. [h] Ibid. §. 4. [i] Ibid.

and both conſented to commit the ſin: and both of them ſhall be cut off from among their people; by death, either by the hand of the civil magiſtrate, the caſe being known and proved, or elſe by the hand of God being known, by mortality or the peſtilence, as the Targum of Jonathan, or they ſhould die childleſs; ſee the note on ℣. 17.

℣. 19. And thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy mother's ſiſter, nor of thy father's ſiſter, &c.] an aunt either by mother or father's ſide, againſt which the law is, ch. xviii. 13. for he uncovereth his near kin; as an aunt is to a man, and ſo an uncle to a woman, and both equally criminal; for it is a rule that holds good in all thoſe caſes, though not expreſſed, that what is binding upon one ſex is upon the other, being in the ſame degree of relation, whether of conſanguinity or affinity: they ſhall bear their iniquity; both of them, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, the man and his aunt, and ſo a woman and her uncle; the guilt of their ſin ſhall be upon them, and the puniſhment of it be inflicted on them; either they ſhould be cut off from their people, as before, or be childleſs, as in the following inſtances.

℣. 20. And if a man ſhall lie with his uncle's wife, &c.] His uncle being dead, and he marry her, which is forbid, ch. xviii. 14. he hath uncovered his uncle's nakedneſs; his wife's, which was his, and therefore the kindred too near for a man to marry in, and ſuch a copulation muſt be inceſtuous: they ſhall bear their ſin; both of them, as the Vulgate Latin as before; the puniſhment of it as follows: they ſhall be childleſs; which Jarchi and other Jewiſh writers interpret, if they had any children at this time, that is, by a former marriage, they ſhould die and be buried before them, which was reckoned a great puniſhment, ſee Jer. xxii. 30.

℣. 21. And if a man ſhall take his brother's wife, &c.] To his wife, whether in his life, as the Targum of Jonathan adds, or whether after his death, unleſs, when there is no iſſue, then he was obliged to it by another law, Deut. xxv. 5. which is now ceaſed, and the law in ch. xviii. 16. here referred to, ſtands clear of all exceptions: it is an unclean thing; or a ſeparation [k], from which a man ſhould remove and keep at a diſtance, as from menſtruous women, of whom this word is uſed; and ſo denotes that it is by all means to be avoided, as an abominable and deteſtable thing; and it is obſerved that of all copulations it is only uſed of this: and the Jewiſh writers, as Aben Ezra and others obſerve, that this caſe is ſomewhat like that of a menſtruous woman, who in the time of her ſeparation is unlawful, but when out of it lawful; and ſo in this caſe, a brother's wife might not be taken, he being alive; but after his death, ſhe might, if ſhe had no ſon, according to the law before referred to, but that is now aboliſhed: he hath uncovered his brother's nakedneſs; his wife's, which was his brother's; which through nearneſs of kin, he ought not to have done; and the ſame holds good of a wife's ſiſter, the relation being the ſame: they ſhall be childleſs; they ſhall have none by ſuch a marriage or copulation, and die without any; and as this ſuppoſes the brother's wife to have children by her firſt huſband, or otherwiſe, whilſt the Jewiſh law laſted, it would not have been unlawful to marry her huſband's brother; the meaning may be, that theſe ſhould die before them, or rather, as ſome think, thoſe that might be born of ſuch a marriage ſhould not be reckoned legitimate and ſo not inherit.

℣. 22. Ye ſhall therefore keep all my ſtatutes, &c.] All the ordinances, inſtitutions, and appointments of God, whether obſerved in this chapter or elſewhere, but particularly thoſe concerning inceſtuous marriages and unlawful copulations: and all my judgments, and do them; all the laws and commandments of God, founded in juſtice and judgment, and according to the rules thereof; or elſe, as Aben Ezra, the judgments of puniſhment, or the penalties annexed to the above laws, which were carefully to be obſerved, and put into execution, to deter from the tranſgreſſion of them: that the land, whither I bring you to dwell therein, ſpue you not out; as the ſtomach does its food when it is loathſome and nauſeous to it, and it cannot bear it; ſee ch. xviii. 25, 28.

℣. 23. And ye ſhall not walk in the manners of the nation, which I caſt out before you, &c.] Nation ſeems to be put for nations, for there were ſeven nations caſt out for them; though the Canaanites may be intended, being a general name for the whole: ſome think the Amorites are meant, who were a principal nation, and notorious for their wickedneſs: hence we often meet with this phraſe in Jewiſh writings, the way of the Amorites, as being exceeding bad, and ſo to be avoided, and by no means to be walked in Gen. xv. 16. for they committed all theſe things; were guilty of all the idolatrous inceſts and uncleanneſſes before mentioned, and forbid under ſevere penalties: and therefore I abhorred them; the ſins committed by them, being ſo abominable and deteſtable: their perſons, though the creatures of God, were had in abhorrence by him, and this he ſhewed by caſting them out of the land; and hereby it is ſuggeſted, that, ſhould they, the Iſraelites, be guilty of the like, they alſo would be rejected and abhorred by him: the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan are, "my Word abhorred them," Chriſt, the eternal Word, Pſ. xlv. 7.

℣. 24. But I have ſaid unto you, ye ſhall inherit the land, &c.] Promiſed it unto them, as he had to their fathers Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and alſo to them; or he had ſaid the above things unto them, that they obſerving them, might poſſeſs the land of Canaan, and continue therein, which is the ſenſe of the Targum of Jonathan: the Jews ſay, that the right of inheritance belonged to them, from Shem the ſon of Noah, whoſe portion it was, and which they gather from Melchizedek, being king of Salem, whom they take to be Shem; and they ſay, the Canaanites only dwelt in it to make it better, till they ſhould come and inherit it: and I will give it unto you to poſſeſs it; in whoſe gift it was, and who had a right to diſpoſe of it; and could give them a good title to it, and ſecure them in the poſſeſſion of it: a land that floweth with milk and honey; abounding with all good things, with all the comforts of life, with every thing both for neceſſity and delight; ſee Exod. iii. 8. I am the Lord your God, which have ſeparated you from other people; had choſen them above all people, to be a ſpecial and peculiar people to him; had diſtinguiſhed them by his favours, and had given them particular laws and ordinances, to obſerve and walk according to them, different from all other nations, which it became them carefully to regard.

℣.

[k] נדה ſeparatio, Druſius.

℣. 25. Ye shall therefore put difference between clean beasts and unclean, &c.] The ten clean ones, as Aben Ezra observes, and all the rest that are unclean, according to the law before given, ch. xith, by using the one for food and not the other, and so the Targum of Jonathan, ye shall separate between the beast which is fit for food, and that which is not fit for food: and between unclean fowls and clean; and which the same Targum interprets, what is unfit to eat and what is fit, even all that are particularly mentioned as unclean, and not fit for food, in the chapter referred to; and all the rest not excepted to as clean and fit for food, which was one way and means God made use of to separate them from other nations, and so preserve them from their idolatrous and evil works: and ye shall not make your souls abominable by beast, or by fowl, or by any manner of living thing that creepeth on the ground; that is, by eating them, contrary to the command of God, which would make them abominable in his sight; every sin or transgression of this law being so to him: which I have separated from you as unclean; which by law he had commanded them to abstain from the use of, as unclean and not fit to be eaten.

℣. 26. And ye shall be holy unto me, &c.] Separated from all unclean persons and things, and devoted to his service, and obedient to all his commands, and so live holy lives and conversations, according to his will, and to his honour and glory: for I the Lord am holy; and therefore they, his people, should be like him, and imitate him, and observe those things which are agreeable to his holy nature and will, and yield a chearful obedience to his holy precepts: and have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine; which is a very forcible argument, a strong motive, and which laid them under great obligation to obedience and holiness.

℣. 27. A man also or a woman that hath a familiar spirit, &c.] Or the spirit of python or divination, see ch. xix. 31. such as the damsel had in Acts xvi. 16. a woman is here particularly mentioned, though before included in the above law; because, as Aben Ezra says, such sort of practices were more frequently committed by women; to which Maimonides[l] adds another reason, because men have a natural clemency towards the female sex, and are not easily prevailed upon to put them to death; therefore the law says, thou shalt not suffer a witch to live, Exod. xxii. 18. or that is a wizard; a knowing one, who pretends to a great deal of knowledge of things; as of lost or stolen goods, and even knowledge of things future, and imposes upon persons, and cheats them of their money they give for information: such shall surely be put to death; and not spared through favour and affection: the death they are to be put to follows: they shall stone them with stones; until they are dead; of the manner of stoning, see the note on Acts vii. 58. their blood shall be upon them; they are worthy of death, and they shall suffer it; this phrase following upon the former, the Jews[m] gather from hence, that wherever it is used, it is to be understood of stoning; see the note on ℣. 9.

CHAP. XXI.

THIS chapter respects the priests, the sons of Aaron, and forbids their mourning for the dead, unless in some cases, ℣. 1—6. or their marriage with an whore or a divorced woman, ℣. 7, 8. and the daughters of any of them, to commit fornication, which is made punishable with death, ℣. 9. and it contains particular laws for the high-priest to observe, who was not to mourn for any, even for his parents, ℣. 10, 11. nor to go out of the sanctuary, ℣. 12. nor to marry any woman but a virgin, ℣. 13, 14, 15. and it also directs, that none of the priests having any blemish in them, should be employed in divine service, tho' they might eat of the holy things, ℣. 16—24.

℣. 1. And the Lord said unto Moses, &c.] According to some Jewish writers this was said on the day the tabernacle was set up; no doubt it was delivered at the same time the above laws were given; and as care was taken for the purity and holiness of the Israelites in general, it was necessary that the priests that were concerned in a more especial manner in the service and worship of God, should be holy also, and have some instructions given them to take care and keep themselves from all defilements; and particularly the Jewish writers observe, that this paragraph or section concerning the priests follows upon, and is in connection with the law concerning such as have familiar spirits, and wizards, to teach men, that in matters of doubt and difficulty they should not have recourse to such persons, but to the priests of the Lord: speak unto the priests, the sons of Aaron; the priests, whether elder or younger, whether fit for service, and whether having blemishes or not; for there are some things which concern them, and these are sons, male children of Aaron, as the Targum of Jonathan, and not daughters, as Jarchi and others observe; for they were not obliged to regard the laws and rules here given: and say unto them, there shall none be defiled for the dead among his people; by entering into a tent or house where a dead body lay, by touching it, or by bearing it, or attending it to the grave, or by any expressions of mourning for it, see Numb. xix. 11, 14, 16. that is, for any person in common that were of his people, that were not nearly related to him, as in the cases after excepted; so it was a custom with the Romans, as we are told[n], that such as were polluted by funerals might not sacrifice, which shows that priests were not allowed to attend funerals, which perhaps might be taken from hence; and so Porphyry says[o], that sacred persons and inspectors of holy things should abstain from funerals or graves, and from every filthy and mournful sight.

℣. 2. But for his kin that is near unto him, &c.] For such he might be defiled and mourn, or be where they were, and take care of, and attend their funerals: this clause some take to be general, of which the particulars follow, as Aben Ezra; but others take it to be the first particular excepted, and instanced in, and intends his wife; for it may be rendered, as by some, for his flesh, or the rest of him[p], the other part of himself, his wife, which is

[l] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 37.
[m] Torat Cohanim in Yalcut in loc.
[n] Servius in Virgil. Ænæid. l. xi. ℣. 3.
[o] De Abstinentia, l. 2. c. 50.
[p] לשאר carne sua, Pagninus, Montanus.

is his other ſelf, and one fleſh with him; and ſo Jarchi and others obſerve, there is no fleſh of his, but his wife; and if ſhe is not intended here, ſhe is not expreſſed elſewhere, though muſt be ſuppoſed, becauſe it is allowed the prieſt to defile himſelf for other relations not ſo near; and it is plain from the caſe of Ezekiel, that a prieſt might mourn for his wife; he being forbid it, ſhews his caſe to be an extraordinary one, and that ordinarily it was admitted, otherwiſe there would have been no need of a particular prohibition of him: that is, for his mother, and for his father, and for his ſon, and for his daughter, and his brother; R. Alphes adds [q], and his wife; theſe being all near relations, and for whom natural affection would lead and oblige him to mourn, and ſhew a concern for their death, and to take care of their funeral. This is to be underſtood of common prieſts; for as for the high-prieſt, he might not mourn, or be concerned for either of theſe.

✡. 3. And for his ſiſter a virgin, which is nigh unto him, &c.] That is, his ſiſter by both father's and mother's ſide. as Aben Ezra; though, according to Gerſom, his ſiſter by his father's ſide, and not by his mother's ſide, is meant; but, according to Alphes, by his mother's ſide: perhaps this may ſignify not nearneſs of kin, which is expreſſed by being his ſiſter, but nearneſs of place, for being unmarried, ſhe remained unto her death in her father's houſe: which hath had no huſband; neither betrothed to one, for then ſhe would have been nigh to her huſband, and not her brother, and therefore he might not pollute himſelf for her, as Gerſom obſerves; nor married to him, for ſuch an one he might not defile himſelf, even though ſhe might have been rejected or divorced by her huſband, as the ſame writer ſays: for her may be be defiled; for a pure virgin that had never been betrothed nor married to a man, and had never departed from her father's houſe, and ſo had no huſband to mourn for her, and take care of her funeral, and ſo for all the reſt before mentioned; and which Jarchi ſays is a command, and not a bare ſufferance or allowance, but what he ought and was obliged to do; and ſo it is related of Joſeph [r], a prieſt that his wife died on the evening of the ſabbath, and he would not defile himſelf for her, and his brethren the prieſts obliged him, and made him defile himſelf againſt his will.

✡. 4. But he ſhall not defile himſelf, being a chief man among his people, &c.] Which is not to be underſtood of any lord or nobleman, or any chief ruler or governor of the people; for the context ſpeaks only of prieſts, and not of other perſonages; beſides, ſuch might defile themſelves, or mourn for their dead, as Abraham did for Sarah; nor of any huſband for his wife, for even a prieſt, as has been obſerved, might do this for his wife, and much more a private perſon; nor is there any need to reſtrain it, as ſome Jewiſh writers do, to an adulterous wife, which a huſband might not mourn for, though he might for his right and lawful wife; but there is nothing in the text, neither of an huſband, nor a wife: the words are to be interpreted of a prieſt, and either of him as conſidered as a perſon of eminence, conſequence and importance, and ſo as giving a reaſon why he ſhould not defile himſelf for the dead, becauſe he was a principal perſon among his people to officiate for them in ſacred things; wherefore if he did not take care that he was not defiled for the dead, which might often happen; he would be frequently hindered from doing his office for the people, which would be attended with ill conſequence to them; and therefore the above caſes are only excepted, as being ſuch that rarely happened: or rather the words are to be conſidered as a prohibition of defiling himſelf for any chief [s], or principal man, lord, ruler, or governor among his people; even for ſuch an one he was not to defile himſelf, being no relation of his: to prophane himſelf; make himſelf unfit for ſacred ſervice, or make himſelf a common perſon; put himſelf upon a level with a common private man, and be no more capable of ſerving at the altar, or doing any part of the work of a prieſt than ſuch an one.

✡. 5. They ſhall not make baldneſs upon their head, &c.] For the dead, as Jarchi, Aben Ezra and Ben Gerſom; not ſhave their heads, or round the corners of them, or make baldneſs between their eyes on that account, as thoſe things were forbid the Iſraelites, ſo the prieſts alſo; this and what follow being ſuperſtitious cuſtoms uſed among the heathens in their mournings for the dead; particularly by the Chaldæans, as Aben Ezra obſerves; and ſo by the Grecians, when Hepheſtion, one of Alexander's captains died, he ſhaved his ſoldiers and himſelf, imitating Achilles in Homer [t]; ſo the Egyptians mourning for the loſs of Oſiris, annually ſhaved their heads [u]; and the prieſts of Iſis, mourning for her loſt ſon, are called by Minutius Felix [w] her bald prieſts; ſee ch. xix. 27, 28. Deut. xiv. 1. neither ſhall they ſhave off the corner of their beard; the five corners of it; ſee the note on ch. xix. 27. This the Iſraelites in common might not do, and particularly their prieſts; though the Egyptian prieſts ſhaved both their heads and beards, as Herodotus [x] relates; and ſo they are repreſented in the Table of Iſis [y]: nor make any cuttings in their fleſh; either with their nails, tearing their cheeks and breaſts, or with an inſtrument cutting their fleſh in any part of their bodies, as was the cuſtom of heathen nations; ſuch were made by the Egyptians in their mournings [z]; ſee the note in ch. xix. 28.

✡. 6. They ſhall be holy unto their God, &c.] Sacred to his ſervice, and wholly given up to it, and not intereſt themſelves in things which hindered from it, or made them unfit for it; and ſuch care becomes the miniſters of the word, who ſhould give up themſelves to it, and not entangle themſelves with other affairs; they ſhould be clean, pure and holy that bear the veſſels of the Lord, and miniſter in holy things, and ſhould ſet an example of purity and holineſs to others: and not prophane the name of their God; or cauſe it to be prophaned and evil ſpoken of on their account, or his ſervice to be interrupted, and they who bore his name put upon a level with common perſons through their pollutions: for the offerings of the Lord made by fire; the burnt-offerings, which were offered up to the Lord on the altar of burnt-offering every day, beſides others on divers occaſions: and the bread of their God do they offer; the ſhew-bread, which they ſet every week before the Lord on the ſhew-bread-table;

[q] Sepher Alphes, par. 1. fol. 410. 2.
[r] T. Bab. Zebachim, fol 90. 1.
[s] בעל בעמיו in principe populi ſui, V. L. ſo Peſicta & Ben Melech in loc. & Kimchi Sepher Shoraſh. rad. בעל.
[t] Ælian. Var. Hiſt. l. 7. c. 8.
[u] Julius Firmic. de error. proph. p. 2.
[w] In Octavio, p. 22. Vid. Lactant. de falſ. Relig. l. 1. c. 21.
[x] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 36.
[y] Vid. Pignorii Menſ. Iſiac. liter. S.
[z] Julius Firmicus, ut ſupra.

table, and the meat or bread-offering, the minchah, which they continually offered along with the ſacrifices: or the word and being a ſupplement, may be left out; and ſo this clauſe is put by way of appoſition, and as interpreting the ſin-offering to be the bread of their God, which being wholly burnt on the altar, and devoted to God, was his meat and food, and accepted by him, ſee ch. iii. 11: therefore they ſhall be holy; ſeparate from all others, and abſtain from all impurity both of fleſh and ſpirit, from all uncleanneſs, moral and ceremonial; it being highly fit and proper that the bread of God ſhould be offered by holy perſons.

℣. 7. They ſhall not take a wife that is a whore, or prophane, &c.] By the former is meant a common whore, that proſtitutes herſelf to any one through luſt or for gain; and by the latter one whoſe chaſtity is violated, but either unwillingly, that has been forced and raviſhed, or elſe willingly, being enticed, perſuaded, and prevailed upon, but did not make a practice of it; this ſeems to be the true ſenſe of the words: but the Jewiſh writers underſtand them differently, by a whore they ſuppoſe is meant one that is not an Iſraelitiſh woman, that is not born of an Iſraelite, at leaſt of an Iſraelitiſh woman, as proſelytes or freed perſons; for they ſay there are no whores but ſuch, or one that lies with ſuch perſons ſhe may not marry with; as ſuch as are guilty of cutting off, or any of the nethinim or ſpurious perſons, ſo Jarchi; and by a prophane perſon they think is meant, ſuch as are born of thoſe that are rejected, as the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it; that is, that are either born of inceſtuous marriages, ſuch as are forbid, ch. xviiith, or that are born of thoſe that are rejected in the prieſtood, or whom a prieſt might not marry, as the daughter of a widow, by the high-prieſt, or the daughter of one divorced, by a common prieſt, which is the ſenſe of Jarchi: neither ſhall they take a woman put away by her huſband; which was in theſe, and after-times common for any offence, when the crime of adultery was not pretended; but this always ſuppoſed ſomething bad or amiſs, and made ſuch a woman ſuſpected of having done an unſeemly thing, therefore prieſts were forbidden marrying ſuch perſons: the Targum of Jonathan adds, "or by her huſband's bro-"ther;" and ſo takes in one that has looſed the ſhoe, as the Jews call her, who being left without iſſue, her huſband's brother refuſed to marry her, and therefore ſhe plucked off his ſhoe, and ſpit in his face, ſee Deut. xxv. 7, 8, 9. ſuch an one a prieſt might not marry, according to this paraphraſt, and other Jewiſh writers, and if he did was to be beaten [a]: for he is holy unto his God; ſeparated from common perſons, and devoted to the ſervice of God, and therefore not to be defiled with ſuch ſort of women, or to lie under any ſcandal or reproach through ſuch marriages.

℣. 8. Thou ſhalt ſanctify him therefore, &c.] In thought and word, as Aben Ezra, by thinking and ſpeaking well of him; ſhould eſteem and reckon him a holy perſon, being in a ſacred office, and honour him as ſuch; and do all that can be done, to preſerve him from unholineſs and impurity, and particularly from marrying with improper and unſuitable perſons, ſuch as would bring a ſcandal on him and his ſacred office: this ſeems to be ſpoken to Moſes, and ſo to the civil magiſtrate in ſucceſſion, who were not to ſuffer ſuch marriages to take place in the prieſthood; and were not only to perſuade from it, but to exerciſe their authority, and oblige them to put away ſuch wives, and if they refuſed, to uſe ſeverity; ſo Jarchi, "thou ſhalt "ſanctify him, whether he will or no; if he will "not put her away, beat him and chaſtiſe him "until he does put her away," ſee Ezra ii. 62: for he offereth the bread of the Lord; meaning not the ſhew-bread he ſet in order before the Lord every week, but the various gifts and ſacrifices which were offered to God by him, and were acceptable to him as his food; and therefore he ought to be holy that drew nigh to God, and was employed in ſuch ſervice, ſee ℣. 6: he ſhall be holy unto thee; in thy account and eſtimation, and for thy ſervice to offer holy ſacrifices, and therefore ſhould be careful of his holineſs to preſerve it: for I the Lord which ſanctify you, am holy; in his nature, works and ways, and who had ſeparated them from all other people to be a holy people to him, and therefore they that miniſtred in holy things for them, ſhould be holy likewiſe.

℣. 9. And the daughter of any prieſt, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan reſtrains it to one that is betrothed; but others, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra, whether betrothed or married; and all confeſs, as the former ſays, that the ſcripture does not ſpeak of one that is ſingle or entirely free: but there is no exception in the text; and beſides, the daughter of any man that was betrothed to a man, and guilty of the crime here ſpoken of, was to die, Deut. xxii. 23, 24. and therefore ſuch a law reſpecting the prieſt's daughter would be needleſs; unleſs it can be thought that it was made merely for the ſake of the different kind of death ſhe was to be put to, and that burning was a more terrible one than ſtoning: if ſhe profane herſelf by playing the whore; which brings ſcandal and diſgrace on any perſon, and much more on any one that had the honour of being related to a perſon in ſuch a ſacred office, and the advantage of a more ſtrictly religious education, and had eaten of the holy things in her father's houſe; all which were aggravations of her crime, and made it the more ſcandalous and reproachful to her: ſome render it, when ſhe begins to play the whore [b]; as ſoon as ever it is diſcovered in her, and ſhe is taken in it; even for the firſt fact ſhe commits, ſhe is not to be ſpared, but put to death: ſhe profaneth her father; which is another aggravation of her ſin; ſhe brings him under diſgrace, diſparages his office, and expoſes him to cenſure, reproach, and ridicule, as not having taken care of her education, and taught her better, and kept her under reſtraints; men will upbraid him with it, ſaying, this is a prieſt's daughter that has committed this lewdneſs; or will ſay of him, as Jarchi obſerves, curſed be he that begat her, and curſed be he that brought her up: ſhe ſhall be burnt with fire; not with hot melted lead poured down her mouth, but with faggots ſet about her; ſee the note on ch. xx. 14. no puniſhment is here fixed for the perſon that lay with her, but according to the Jewiſh canons [c], he was to be ſtrangled.

℣. 10. And he that is the high prieſt among his brethren, &c.] Either among his brethren, the prieſts, being in office above them; or among his brethren the Iſraelites, among and over whom he is high-high-prieſt; or, as others render it, the prieſt who is greater than his brethren [d], in an higher office; the Jews ſay [e], the high-prieſt was to be greater than his brethren, in beauty, in ſtrength, in wiſdom, and in riches; and if he had not money enough, all the prieſts were to give him of theirs, every one according to his riches, until he became the richeſt among them all: upon whoſe head the anointing oil was poured; as it was poured upon Aaron at his conſecration, and thoſe that ſucceeded him, Exod. xxix. 7. Lev. viii. 12. and that is conſecrated to put on the garments; the eight garments with which the high-prieſt was cloathed at the time of his conſecration, Lev. viii. 7, 8, 9. and in which he and his ſons are ſaid to be conſecrated, Exod. xxix. 29. in order to which he was to fill his hand; as the phraſe here is, that is, with the fat and right ſhoulder of the ram of conſecration, and with the loaf of bread, and cake of oiled bread, and wafer, Exod. xxix. 22, 23, 24 in all which he was a type of Chriſt, the great high-prieſt, as he is often called, who is greater than his brethren in all the above things, the high-prieſt exceeded his brethren, except in worldly riches; and yet the earth alſo is his, and the fulneſs thereof, as well as he is fairer than the children of men, ſtronger than the ſtrong man armed, and the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge are hid in him; he is anointed alſo with the oil of gladneſs above his fellows; and all his garments ſmell of myrrh, aloes, and caſſia, and is conſecrated an high-prieſt for evermore: of the high-prieſt it is ſaid, he ſhall not uncover his head; that is, on account of the dead; not take off his mitre, or in any ſuch way expreſs mourning for the dead; or ſhall not nouriſh his hair or let it grow, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; and ſo Jarchi interprets it, he ſhall not let the hair grow for mourning; and what is nouriſhing of the hair? when it is let grow more than thirty days: nor rent his clothes; that is, on the ſame account, and therefore Jonathan adds, in the hour of diſtreſs, or mourning for the dead; otherwiſe, in caſe of blaſphemy, he might rend his clothes, ſee Matt. xxvi. 65. and indeed, according to the Jewiſh canons, he might rend his clothes in mourning, only in a different manner from common prieſts; for ſo they ſay [f], "he may not rend "for the dead as other prieſts," as it is ſaid: nor rent his clothes; and if he rends he is to be beaten, but he may rend below over-againſt (or near) his feet; and ſo in the Miſnah [g], an high-prieſt rends below, and a common prieſt above; ſee the note on ch. x. 6.

[a] Miſn. Maccot, c. 3. §. 1. [b] כי תחל לזנות cum cœpit fornicari, Pagninus, Montanus; ſo Tigurine verſion.
[c] Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 10. §. 1. Maimon. Iſſure Biah, c. 1. §. 6.

℣. 11. Neither ſhall he go in to any dead body, &c.] That is, into a tent or houſe where any dead body lies, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret it, for whoever went into ſuch a place were unclean ſeven days; and ſo long therefore an high-prieſt, ſhould he enter there, would be prevented doing the duty of his office, ſee Numb. xix. 14. this was aped and followed by the heathens in after-times; ſo among the Romans, the Flamen Dialis, or high-prieſt of Jupiter might not go into a place where a dead body was burnt or buried, nor touch any [h]; and it was a cuſtom with them, as Servius [i] tells us, to put a branch of cypreſs at the door of a houſe where a dead body was, that an high-prieſt might not enter through ignorance, and be defiled: nor defile himſelf for his father, or for his mother; by entering into the tent or houſe where they lay dead, or by touching them, or attending the funeral of them, or by concerning himſelf about it; and there was no need to mention his ſon or his daughter, his brother or his ſiſter; for if he was not to defile himſelf for any of his parents, much leſs for any of thoſe which are excepted in the caſe of a common prieſt, ℣. 2, 3. the Jews do indeed make one exception in the caſe of an high-prieſt, and that is, that if he meets with a dead body in the way, he was obliged to defile himſelf for it and bury it [k]; and ſo among the Romans, though it was a crime for an high-prieſt to look upon a dead body, yet it was reckoned a greater, if, when he ſaw it, he left it unburied [l].

℣. 12. Neither ſhall he go out of the ſanctuary, &c.] In the time of ſervice, upon any occaſion whatever; otherwiſe, when there was a neceſſity for it, he might go out from thence, though this was rarely done, and only in the night-time: Maimonides [m] ſays, he had a houſe prepared for him in the ſanctuary, called the chamber of the high-prieſt; and it was his honour and his glory, to remain in the ſanctuary all the day, and he did not go out, except to his own houſe, and that only in the night, or an hour or two in the day; and his houſe was in Jeruſalem, and from thence he never removed: but this law reſpects him only in the caſe of his dead; as when any news was brought him of the death of his father, or of his mother, if in his ſervice, he was not to quit it on any account; for we are told [n], that an high-prieſt might offer when mourning, though he might not eat in ſuch a circumſtance, whereas a common prieſt might neither offer nor eat; nor might an high-prieſt go out of the ſanctuary on ſuch an occaſion, if he was not in ſervice, as to follow the dead corpſe or bier, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret it; at leaſt, he was to go no farther than the gate of the city; though even this is not allowed by others, who ſay [o], if the dead were his, he might not go out after it; he might not go out of the door of his houſe, nor out of the ſanctuary, and all the people were to come and comfort him at his own houſe: nor prophane the ſanctuary of his God; by deſerting the ſervice of it, on any account, and particularly on account of the dead, by departing from it to go after them, and by entering into it again before the time, when ſo defiled: for the crown of the anointing oil of his God is upon him; the anointing oil, which was a crown of glory, and gave him a ſuperior dignity to others, which it became him to be careful not to debaſe by any of the above things: or the crown and the anointing oil, ſo ſome [p] ſupply the word and; both the golden plate or the holy crown, as it is ſometimes called, and the anointing oil were upon him, which ſhewed him to be a very dignified perſon, a ſort of king as well as a prieſt, and ſo a type of Chriſt, who is a prieſt upon his throne, Zech. vi. 13. I am the Lord; whoſe high prieſt he is, and who command him all theſe things, and expect to be obeyed in them.

℣. 13. And he ſhall take a wife in her virginity.] One, and not two, or more, as Ben Gerſom obſerves;

[d] So Pagninus, Ainſworth, and others. [e] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 18. 1. Horayot, fol. 9. 1. Cholin, fol. 134. 2. Maimon Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 5. §. 1. & in Miſn Yoma, c. 1. §. 3. & Bartenora in ib. [f] Maimon. Cele Hamikdaſh, c 5. §. 6. [g] Horayot, c. 3. §. 5. [h] Maſſurius Sabinus, apud A. Gell. Noct. Attic. l. 10. c 15. [i] In Virgil. Æneid. l. 3. ℣. 64. atraque cupreſſo. [k] Maimon. Hilchot Ebel. c. 3. §. 8. [l] Servius in Virgil Æneid. l. 6. ad ℣. præcipue pius Æneas, &c. [m] Cele Hamikdaſh c. 5. § 7. [n] Miſn. Horayot, c. 3. §. 5. [o] Maimon. Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 5. §. 5, 6. Vid. Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 2. §. 1. [p] So Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, &c.

ſerves; and ſo Maimonides ſays [q], an high-prieſt might never take two women together; for it is ſaid, a wife, or woman, one and not two; and ſo it is explained in the Talmud [r]; for though polygamy was practiſed by the Iſraelites, and even by the common prieſts, yet theſe writers ſuppoſe, it was by no means allowed to an high-prieſt: among the Egyptians, though they took as many wives as they pleaſed, their prieſts married but one [s]; and ſo a miniſter of the new teſtament is to be the huſband of one wife, 1 Tim. iii. 2. and this wife the high-prieſt was to take, was to be a virgin, one that not only had never known a man, but that was never betrothed to any; yea, according to the Talmudiſts [t], who was not quite ripe for marriage, or the time of her puberty not fully compleated, which was the age of twelve years; within, or ſomewhat before that time, the high-prieſt was to marry her, that it might be out of all doubt, that ſhe was a pure virgin; ſince it is ſaid, in her virginity, within the time of her puberty, before it was quite up: this, by many, is thought to be an emblem of Chriſt and his church; as he was typified by the high-prieſt, ſo the church by the virgin he married, which is eſpouſed to Chriſt as a chaſte virgin, 2 Cor. xi. 2.

℣. 14. A widow, &c.] The high-prieſt might not marry, whether the widow of a prieſt or of an Iſraelite, as Aben Ezra, that is, of any Iſraelite that was not of the prieſthood; and this, whether a widow after eſpouſals, or after marriage, as runs the Jewiſh canon [u]; the meaning is, that if ſhe was betrothed to a man, and that man died before he married her, and ſo was a virgin; yet being betrothed to him was reckoned as his widow; and ſuch an one the high-prieſt might not marry, any more than one that had been left a widow, having been married: though, according to the ſame conſtitutions, if he had betrothed a widow, and after that was appointed an high-prieſt, he might marry her, and an inſtance of it is given in Joſhua the ſon of Gamla: and in the ſame it is obſerved, that an high-prieſt, when his brother dies, muſt ſuffer his ſhoe to be plucked off, and not marry his brother's widow; which, in other caſes, when there was no iſſue, was required: or a divorced woman; whether by a prieſt, or a common Iſraelite; and indeed, if a common prieſt might not marry ſuch a perſon, much leſs an high-prieſt: or prophane; any one born of thoſe that were not fit for prieſts to marry, as the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi; ſee the note on ℣. 7. or an harlot; a common proſtitute: thoſe ſhall he not take; any or either of them, to be his wife; which are forbid in order to maintain the dignity of his office, and a reverence of it: there ſeems to be a gradation in theſe inſtances, he might not marry a widow, which was forbidden no other man; and if not ſuch an one, much leſs a divorced woman, ſtill leſs a prophane perſon, and leaſt of all an harlot: but he ſhall take a virgin of his own people to wife; which phraſe of his own people, did not limit him to his own tribe, and to the fraternity of prieſts in it, as if he was to marry only in it, or the daughter of a prieſt; for the prieſts and Levites being ſcattered in the ſeveral tribes, and having no inheritances in them, were not reſtrained from marrying into other tribes, as the reſt of the tribes were; and ſo an high-prieſt ſometimes married into another tribe, though he took care not to debaſe himſelf, by marrying into a mean family: ſo Jehoiada the high-prieſt, married Jehoſhabeth, the daughter of king Jehoram, 2 Chron. xxii. 11. but by this law he was forbid to marry a virgin of another nation, even though a proſelyteſs and one that was made free, as Gerſom obſerves; a captive virgin, and one that was become a Jeweſs, as Aben Ezra ſays, he was not allowed to marry.

℣. 15. Neither ſhall he prophane his ſeed among his people, &c.] By marrying any ſuch perſons, whereby his children, born of them, would lie under diſgrace, and be unfit to ſucceed him in the prieſthood, or by marrying among mean perſons, or by marrying them to ſuch as were unlawful and would be a diſparagement to them: for I the Lord do ſanctify him; ſeparate him from all others, to the high and ſacred office of the high prieſthood, and am concerned for his honour and holineſs; and therefore it became him to obſerve theſe laws and rules, and abſtain from ſuch diſagreeable marriages.

℣. 16. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After he had ſpoken to him of the holineſs of the prieſts, that they ſhould not defile themſelves, neither with the dead nor with impure marriages, he proceeded to add ſome things concerning blemiſhes in their bodies, which rendered them unfit for the ſervice: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 17. Speak unto Aaron, ſaying, &c.] Who being the high-prieſt, it was incumbent on him, at leaſt, at this time, to ſee that the laws and rules relating to the prieſthood were obſerved; and particularly to examine carefully, who were, and who were not to be admitted to ſerve in it: whoſoever he be of thy ſeed in their generations; or, a man of thy ſeed [w], for this only reſpected his male ſeed, females of his ſeed had no concern in the following laws; but his ſons, in all ſucceſſive ages and generations, to the coming of the Meſſiah had, whether high-prieſts or common prieſts: that hath any blemiſh; in any part of his body, particularly ſuch as are after mentioned: let him not approach to offer the bread of his God; neither go into the holy place, to ſet the ſhew-bread in order there, nor to offer any ſacrifice upon the altar; ſo Joſephus [x] explains this law; that a prieſt ſhould be perfect, and if he laboured under any defect, ſhould not aſcend the altar, nor enter into the temple: this was imitated by the heathens: Romulus ordered that ſuch as were weak and feeble in any part of the body, ſhould not be made prieſts [y]: the Jewiſh prieſts were types of Chriſt, who is holy, harmleſs, without ſpot and blemiſh; and through whoſe blood and righteouſneſs, all who are made prieſts by him, are unblameable, without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; and a goſpel-miniſter, biſhop, or paſtor, ought to be unblemiſhed in his life and converſation, Tit. i. 6, 7. and there are ſome who think that the blemiſhes of the mind and of the life, are rather here meant than thoſe of the body.

℣. 18. For whatſoever man he be that hath a blemiſh, &c.] Let him be otherwiſe ever ſo well qualified for his office, as with reſpect to his parentage, againſt which no objection lies; or, as to his character and abilities, being a man of knowledge and of good manners; and whether theſe blemiſhes

[q] Hilchot Iſſure Biah, c. 17. §. 13.
[r] T. Bab. Yebamot, ibid. Maimon. ut ſupra.
[s] Diodor. Sicul. l. 1. p. 72.
[t] T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 59. 1. de ſemine tuo, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.
[u] Miſn. Yebamot, c. 6. §. 4. c. 6. de Veſtalibus.
[w] אישׁ מזרעך vir
[x] Antiq. l. 3. c. 12. §. 2.
[y] Pompon. Læt de Sacerdot.

blemiſhes be as the Jews [z] call them, fixed, ſettled ones, which have attended them ever ſince they were born, and are likely to attend them as long as they live; or are tranſient ones, only for the preſent, and perhaps, in a ſhort time will be removed; yet it matters not, while theſe blemiſhes are on them, he ſhall not approach; to the altar to offer ſacrifice, or do any part of the prieſtly office, for this phraſe is expreſſive of a ſacerdotal act: the particular blemiſhes unfitting a man for ſuch ſervice follow: a blind man, or a lame; that is blind of one eye, or of both; and is lame of one leg, or of both: or he that hath a flat noſe; which Jarchi explains, whoſe noſe is ſunk between his two eyes, whoſe noſe is ſhort, and crooked, or mutilated: or any thing ſuperfluous; more members than uſual, as ſix fingers on an hand, or two griſtles in an ear, as Ben Gerſom; or whoſe members are not proportionate, as one eye large and the other ſmall, or one thigh or leg longer than the other, ſo Jarchi; the Targum of Jonathan is, "whoſe thigh (or thigh-bone) is out of joint;" and ſo a man draws his foot after him, which is the ſenſe of the Rabbins, as obſerved by Kimchi [a], and Ben Melech from him; and ſo ſuch are not fit to be called the prieſts of the Lord, and much leſs miniſters of his word, who are blind as to the knowledge of divine and ſpiritual things, and walk not as becomes the goſpel of Chriſt; or halt between two opinions, or favour not the things of God, and lay not aſide all ſuperfluity of naughtineſs.

℣. 19. Or a man that is broken-footed or broken-handed, &c. That has any of the bones or joints in his hands and feet broke, or when they are diſtorted, and he is club-footed, or his fingers crooked and cluſtered together; and ſuch a man could not be fit to aſcend the altar, and lay the ſacrifice in order upon it; and may be an emblem of ſuch as are aukward or diſorderly in their walk and converſation, and to every good work and action unfit, and ſo unmeet for their maſter's uſe.

℣. 20. Or crook-backed, &c.] That has a protuberance, or bunch upon his back, one that we commonly call hunch-backed; the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem paraphraſe it, "whoſe eye-"brows lying cover his eyes;" and ſo Jarchi interprets it, the hair of whoſe eyebrows is long and lying; and ſo other Jewiſh writers underſtand it, of ſome deformity about the eyes, the hair of the eyebrows being thick and heavy over them, and ſo hinder the ſight, at leaſt it makes the perſon not ſo ſightly and graceful: it is ſaid [b], he that hath no eyebrows, or but one eyebrow, is the Gibben (the word here uſed) ſpoken of in the law, (Lev. xxi. 20.): or a dwarf; one of a ſmall ſtature, as Aben Ezra, as generally hunch-backed perſons are, and ſo unfit to attend the altar, being ſcarce able to reach up to it, and do the buſineſs of it, as well as muſt make a very mean appearance; but the above Targums underſtand this alſo of ſome blemiſh about the eyes, paraphraſing it, "or he that "has no hair on his eyebrows," juſt the reverſe of the former; Jarchi ſeems to underſtand it, of a thin ſmall film upon the eye; though ſomething of that kind ſeems to be intended in the next clauſe: or that hath a blemiſh in his eye; a mixture, a confuſion, or rather a ſuffuſion in it, as the above Targums; in which, as one of them ſays, the white is mixed with the black, and with which agrees what is ſaid in the Miſnah [c], where it is aſked, what is the confuſion or ſuffuſion? the white which ſpreads in the iris, and enters into the black of the eye; it ſeems to be a white ſpeck in the pupil of the eye, and ſo Jarchi, Kimchi [d], and others interpret it: or be ſcurvy or ſcabbed; both theſe were kinds of ulcers, according to the Jewiſh writers, particularly Jarchi, who ſays of the firſt, that it is a dry ſcab within and without; and of the other, that it is the Egyptian ſcab, which is moiſt without and dry within; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan: or hath his ſtones broken; this is differently interpreted in the Miſnah [e], and by other Jewiſh writers; ſome ſay it ſignifies one that has no teſticles, or only one; ſo the Septuagint and the Jeruſalem Targum: others, whoſe teſticles are broken or bruiſed, ſo Jarchi; or are inflated, ſo Akiba, Aben Ezra, and the Targum of Jonathan; ſome underſtand it of an hernia or rupture, when a man is burſtened: all which may in a moral and myſtical ſenſe ſignify either ſome defect in the underſtanding, or vices in the heart or life, which render unfit for public ſervice in the ſanctuary.

℣. 21. No man that hath a blemiſh of the ſeed of Aaron the prieſt, &c.] Whether an high-prieſt or a common prieſt that has on him any one of the above blemiſhes; and which the Jewiſh writers [f] make to amount to the number of 140, and which they reckon, ſo many in one part of the body and ſo many in another, till they make up the ſaid number; and whoever had any might not come nigh to offer up the ſacrifices of the Lord made by fire; the burnt-offerings on the altar, to which he might not approach, and the meat-offerings and the fat of the incenſe: he hath a blemiſh; in one part of him or another; and though but one, he ſhall not come nigh to offer the bread of his God: this is repeated for the confirmation of it, and to ſhew how determined the Lord was in this matter; and how much he ſhould reſent it in any that ſhould be found guilty of the breach of thoſe rules, and ſo it is deſigned to deter from attempting it.

℣. 22. He ſhall eat the bread of his God, &c.] That part of the ſacrifices which was appropriated by the Lord to the prieſts, for the maintainance of them and their families; for though their natural infirmities diſqualified them for ſervice, yet they did not become hereby impure, either in a moral nor ceremonial ſenſe, and might eat of the ſacrifices, which impure perſons might not; and ſo the tradition is, blemiſhed perſons, whether their blemiſhes are fixed or tranſient, may divide and eat, but not offer [g]; theſe being prieſts, and having no inheritance, nor any way of getting their livelihood, proviſion is made for them that they might not periſh through their defects in nature, which were not voluntary and brought upon them by themſelves, but by the providence of God; and ſuch were allowed to eat both of the moſt holy and of the holy: there were things the prieſts eat of, which were moſt holy, as what remained of the meat-offerings, and of the ſin-offerings, and of the treſpaſs-offerings, which only the males of the prieſts family might eat of, and that only in the holy place; and there were others leſs holy, the lighter holy things, as the Jews call them, as the wave-breaſt, and heave-ſhoulder, and the tithes and firſt-fruits, which were eat of by all in their families, their daughters as well as their ſons, and in their own houſes; now of [z] Miſn Zebachim, c. 12. §. 1. & Becorot, c. 7. §. 1. [a] Sepher Shoraſh. rad. ישרע. [b] Becorot, c. 7. § 2 [c] Ib. c 6. §. 2. [d] Ut ſupra, rad. בלל [e] Ibid. c. 7. §. 5. [f] Maimon. Biath Hamikdaſh, c. 8. §. 17. [g] Miſn. Zebachim, c. 12. §. 1.

of each of these might the blemished priests eat; see Numb. xviii. 9, 10, &c.

℣. 23. Only he shall not go in unto the vail, &c.] So far as to the vail, which divided between the holy and the holy of holies; that is, he shall not go into the holy place which was before the vail; not to set the shew-bread upon the table there, nor to light and trim the lamps in the candlestick, nor to offer incense on the altar of incense, which stood in it: some render it within the vail [h], where only the high-priest might enter once a year; but if he had any blemish on him he might not, nor might such an one be an high-priest: Aben Ezra seems to have some respect to this in his note, "to the "vail he shall not come, that he may be an high-"priest:" nor come nigh unto the altar; as not to the altar of incense in the holy place, so neither to the altar of burnt-offering in the court of the tabernacle, that is, so as to officiate there: but tho' they might not be employed in such sacred service, the Jews in later times have found business for them to employ them in, and that was worming the wood, or searching the wood for worms, which was used in the burning of the sacrifices; for we are told [i], that at the north-east corner (of the court of the women) was the wood-room, where the priests that had blemishes wormed the wood; and whatsoever wood in which a worm was found, was rejected from being laid upon the altar: the reason why he might not go into either place before mentioned, is repeated, because he hath a blemish; either fixed or transient; one of those particularly expressed, or any other; for the Jews suppose there are others implied besides those expressed, which disqualified for service: that he prophane not my sanctuaries; if an high-priest, the holy of holies, if a common priest, the holy place, and the court of the tabernacle: for I the Lord do sanctify them; the vail, to which blemished priests might not go; and the altar, to which they might not come nigh; or rather, the sanctuaries or holy places, where they might not officiate, which God had separated and devoted for sacred uses, and were not to be defiled by any; though Ben Gersom observes, that this has no respect to the sanctuary, for if it had it would have been said, I am the Lord, that sanctify it; but since a plural word is used before, I see not but that with great propriety it is expressed, and with reference thereunto, sanctify them; which he would have understood of holy things, but what he means is not easy to say, unless the holy things such persons might eat of, ℣. 22. which is far fetched.

℣. 24. And Moses told it to Aaron, and to his sons, &c.] What God had said to him concerning the priests defiling themselves for the dead, both common priests and high-priest, and concerning their marriages and their blemishes; that they might be careful not to transgress the laws and rules given them concerning those things: and to all the children of Israel; to the heads of the tribes, and elders of the people, and by them to the whole, that they might know who were fit and who not, to put their sacrifice into their hands, to offer for them: Jarchi thinks this was to warn the Sanhedrim concerning the priests, whose business it was to examine and judge who were fit for service and who not; for so we are told [k], that in the chamber Gazith, or of hewn stone, the great Sanhedrim of Israel sat and judged the priests, and rejected some and received others.

CHAP. XXII.

IN this chapter several laws are delivered out, forbidding the priests to eat of holy things, when in any uncleanness, or at any time what dies of itself, or is torn of beasts, ℣. 1—9. also shewing who belonging to the priests might or might not eat of the holy things, ℣. 10—16. and others requiring that whatever offerings were brought by the children of Israel, they should be perfect and without blemish, ℣. 17—25. and also declaring what age a creature should be of when sacrificed, and the time when thank-offerings were to be eaten, ℣. 26—30. concluding with an exhortation to observe the commands of God, and sanctify him, and not prophane his name, ℣. 31, 32, 33.

℣. 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] Immediately after he had spoken concerning blemishes in priests, and in a continued discourse signifying, that though priests that had blemishes might eat of the holy things, yet neither they, nor even such who had not any, if they were under legal impurity, might eat of them: saying; as follows.

2. Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, &c.] The priests; the children of Israel or the common people are not mentioned, as having no concern in the following laws about eating holy things: that they separate themselves from the holy things of the children of Israel; both from offering their lawful sacrifices, which was the business of their office when pure, and chiefly from eating that part of them which was their due, and was allowed them; neither of these they were to eat, particularly the latter, when they were in any uncleanness, as the following words shew: and that they prophane not my holy name in those things which they hallow unto me; which the children of Israel set apart and devoted to his service; which they would do, by eating their part of them when unclean, and thereby shew little reverence to that holy name to which they were devoted; or which the priests themselves sanctified, by offering them to him; for Jarchi says, this takes in the holiness of the priests themselves; but the former seems best, and is confirmed in the next verse: I am the Lord; who is holy himself, and whose holy things these are, and will be sanctified by those that draw nigh unto him.

℣. 3. Whosoever he be of all your seed among your generations, &c.] Whether male or female, in all succeeding ages, as long as the ceremonial law lasted; for females as well as males of the families of the priests eat of the holy things, provided they had no uncleanness on them, but if they had, they might not: that goeth unto the holy things, which the children of Israel hallow unto the Lord; that approaches to any of the sacrifices which the children of Israel have devoted to the Lord, either to offer them, or even to touch them, and particularly to eat of them; and so Jarchi and Ben Gersom observe, that this going or drawing near is no other than eating; for touching only, a man was not guilty of cutting off: having his uncleanness upon him; through a leprosy, or running issue, or touching any any unclean perſon or thing, as the following words explain it: that ſoul ſhall be cut off from my preſence; excluded from the ſanctuary, and the ſervice of it, where the preſence of God was; or be removed out of the world by death, either by the civil magiſtrate, or by the hand of God, by an immediate death, by the peſtilence, as the Targum of Jonathan: I am the Lord; that will avenge the breach of ſuch a law, able to inflict ſuch puniſhment, and faithful to accompliſh every word of his, whether in a way of threatening or promiſe.

[h] אל הפרכת intra velum, V. L.

[i] Misn. Middot, c. 2. §. 5.

[k] Ibid. c. 5. §. 3.

℣. 4. What man ſoever of the ſeed of Aaron is a leper, &c.] A young, or an old man, as the Targum of Jonathan, and indeed man or woman; for the wives and daughters of the prieſts, if in this, and other circumſtances following, might not eat of the holy things until cleanſed, who otherwiſe might, ſee ch. xiii. 2. Numb. xviii. 13: or hath a running iſſue; a gonorrhœa, whether man or woman, ch. xv. 2, 25: he ſhall not eat of the holy things until he be clean; he might eat of the tithes, but not of the wave-breaſt, or heave-ſhoulder: and whoſo toucheth any that is unclean by the dead; not only that touched the dead, which made unclean, but that touched any perſon or thing that was made unclean by it: or a man whoſe ſeed goeth from him; involuntarily when aſleep, in a dream, and thro' a luſtful imagination, ch. xv. 16.

℣. 5. Or whoſoever toucheth any creeping thing, whereby he may be made unclean, &c.] Jarchi thinks this reſpects the meaſure or quantity of what is touched, as if but the quantity of a lentile or ſmall pea, ſee ch. xi. 31—38: or a man of whom he may take uncleanneſs, whatſoever uncleanneſs he hath; as of a leper, a profluvious, or a dead man; Jarchi interprets it of the latter, and of the quantity which defiles, which is that of an olive; who alſo obſerves, that the phraſe, whatſoever uncleanneſs, includes touching a profluvious man or woman, a menſtruous woman, and a lying-in woman.

℣. 6. The ſoul which hath touched any ſuch, ſhall be unclean until even, &c.] Which is the time fixed by the ſeveral laws for ſuch uncleanneſſes, ſee ch. xi. 31. and xv. 5, 7, 16: and ſhall not eat of the holy things, unleſs he waſh his fleſh with water; in forty ſeahs of water, as the Targum of Jonathan; yea, when the evening is come, he may not eat of the heave or wave-offerings, until he has dipped himſelf all over in water; nor ſhould any eat of the Lord's ſupper under the New Teſtament, but ſuch as are firſt baptized in water.

℣. 7. And when the ſun is down, he ſhall be clean, &c.] Having waſhed himſelf in water, otherwiſe not, though the ſun may be ſet: and ſhall afterwards eat of the holy things; the families of the prieſts lived upon: becauſe it is his food; his common food, his ordinary diet, that by which he ſubſiſts, having nothing elſe to live upon; this being the ordination of God, that he which miniſtred about holy things, ſhould live on them; and theſe being his only ſubſtance, in compaſſion to him they were detained from him no longer than the evening; and this was done, to make him careful how he defiled himſelf, ſince thereby he was debarred of his ordinary meals.

℣. 8. That which dieth of itſelf, or is torn with beaſts, &c.] Whether fowls or beaſts, and even clean ones, which had they been killed in a proper manner, were fit to eat, but dying of themſelves, or torn to pieces by other birds or beaſts of prey, might not, ſee Ezek. xliv. 31: he ſhall not eat to defile himſelf therewith; being impure food, at leaſt in a ceremonial ſenſe, and not fit to be eaten; theſe things were forbid a common Iſraelite, and much leſs might a prieſt eat of them, ſee ch. xvii. 15: I am the Lord; who enjoin this, and expect to be obeyed.

℣. 9. They ſhall therefore keep mine ordinance, &c.] The obſervance of my word, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, of his word of command; either reſpecting the not eating of ſuch creatures that died of themſelves, or were torn by beaſts; or elſe the not eating holy things in uncleanneſs, ſo Jarchi and Gerſom; but Aben Ezra thinks the ſanctuary is referred to, which was to be kept by the prieſts, and which ſeems to agree with what follows: leſt they bear ſin for it; the ſanctuary, by neglecting it, and ſo be charged with the guilt of ſin, and be obliged to bear the puniſhment of it: and die therefore if they prophane it; by going into it in their uncleanneſs, and eating of the moſt holy things there when in ſuch circumſtances, and die by the hand of God, as Jarchi and Ben Gerſom interpret it, as Nadab and Abihu did, and even in like manner by fire; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "leſt they die by flaming fire:" I the Lord do ſanctify them; the prieſts, who were ſeparated from others, and devoted to his ſervice, and therefore ought to be holy; or the holy things ſeparated for the uſe of the prieſts, but not to be eaten in their uncleanneſs; the Arabic verſion renders it, do ſanctify that, the ſanctuary, and therefore it ſhould not be prophaned, but be kept pure and holy.

℣. 10. There ſhall no ſtranger eat of the holy thing, &c.] Any one of the holy things, as the heave-ſhoulder, wave-breaſt, &c. by a ſtranger is not meant one of another nation; though indeed all ſuch were called ſtrangers, and might not eat of theſe things, Eph. ii. 12. but one that was not of the family of a prieſt, though he might be an Iſraelite, and even a Levite; any one that was not of the ſeed of Aaron, as Aben Ezra; any common man or laic, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, excepting thoſe after mentioned: a ſojourner of the prieſts, or an hired ſervant ſhall not eat of the holy thing; by the former is not intended an heathen, a proſelyte of the gate, one that has renounced idolatry, and ſo permitted to live among the Iſraelites, but uncircumciſed, who is often underſtood by one that ſojourneth in the gate, but here an Iſraelitiſh ſojourner; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan expreſsly has it, "a ſon of an Iſraelite, "who is a ſojourner of the prieſts;" not that is a gueſt for a ſhort time, or a boarder with him; for if he may not eat of the holy things, what muſt he live on whilſt with him? but one that dwells in ſome part of his houſe: and by the latter is meant any one that is hired by the day, or week, or year, and when the time is expired is at his liberty; though the Jewiſh writers commonly, and particularly Jarchi, interpret the ſojourner of the ſervant that has his ear bored, and is bought with money, until the year of jubilee, and ſerves for ever; and the hireling of one that is purchaſed for years, and goes out in the ſixth year; but the above objection will lie againſt theſe.

℣. 11. But if the prieſt buy any ſoul with his money, he ſhall eat of it, &c.] Whether any of his own nation, who ſometimes, when become poor, were obliged to ſell themſelves; or a ſtranger, as the Targum of Jonathan; one of another nation, a Canaanitiſh ſervant, as Jarchi. Now theſe being his own purchaſe, and always to abide with him, became part of his family, and ſo might eat of the proviſions of it; and it is from hence the Jews collect, as Jarchi and Gerſom, that his wife might eat of the holy things, becauſe bought with his money; but there is a better reaſon to be given for that, for of whatever family ſhe was before, whether of the prieſts or not, by marriage ſhe became a part, yea a principal of his family, being one fleſh with him, bearing the ſame name, and entitled to all the priviſeges of his houſe. This is extended by ſome Jewiſh writers [1] to cattle, for by any ſoul they underſtood alſo the ſoul of a beaſt, which being bought by the prieſt's money, might eat of the offerings of the tithes: and he that is born in his houſe, they ſhall eat of his meat; whether male or female, as Aben Ezra; theſe are children of handmaids, as Jarchi, that were bought with his money; and theſe children being born of them, became his property, and part of his family, and ſo had a right to the proviſions of his houſe. All this may teach us, that the holy ordinances of the goſpel are not to be adminiſtred to ſtrangers, perſons deſtitute of the grace of God, nor to ſuch as are not of the family or church of God, but to ſuch as are bought and redeemed with the blood of Chriſt, the high-prieſt, and are born again of his Spirit and grace.

℣. 12. If the prieſt's daughter alſo be married to a ſtranger, &c.] Not to an heathen, but to any Iſraelite, that is, a common man, or a layman, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, one that is not a prieſt; but is married either to a Levite, or an Iſraelite, as Jarchi: ſhe may not eat of an offering of the holy things; the heave-ſhoulder or wave-breaſt, &c. being removed into another family by marriage, ſhe is not reckoned of her father's family, and ſo had no more a right to eat of the holy things.

℣. 13. But if the prieſt's daughter be a widow, or divorced, &c.] If her huſband be dead, or if living, and ſhe is put away by him, whether a Levite, or an Iſraelite: and have no child; by him, as the Targum of Jonathan, and Jarchi add, nor is with child by him: and is returned to her father's houſe as in her youth, ſhe ſhall eat of her father's meat; not of all, or any part, only of ſome, of the heave-offering, but not of the ſhoulder or breaſt, which is the tradition of the wiſe men, as Maimonides [m] relates. There are two caſes in this affair excepted by them, which they ſuppoſe are implied in this clauſe; the one is, if ſhe is detained and reſerved for her huſband's brother, according to the law in Deut. xxv. 5. ſhe being without children; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan adds, "and "is not kept or reſerved for her huſband's bro-"ther," which is implied by her being returned to her father's houſe; and the other is, if ſhe is with child; for though ſhe had no children by her huſband, yet if ſhe is pregnant, that made her unlawful to eat of the holy things; for then ſhe is not as in her youth [n]. The Jewiſh canon concerning ſuch a perſon runs thus [o]; the daughter of a prieſt, married to an Iſraelite, may not eat of the heave-offering; if he dies, and ſhe has a ſon by him, ſhe may not eat of the heave-offering; if ſhe is married to a Levite, ſhe may eat of the tithes; if he dies, and ſhe has a ſon by him, ſhe ſhe may eat of the tithes: if ſhe is married to a prieſt, ſhe may eat of the heave-offering; if he dies, and ſhe has a ſon by him, ſhe may eat of the heave-offering; if her ſon by the prieſt dies, ſhe may not eat of the heave-offering; if her ſon by the Levite dies, ſhe may not eat of the tithes; if her ſon by an Iſraelite, ſhe may return to her father's houſe, as it is ſaid Lev. xxii. 13.: but there ſhall no ſtranger eat thereof; as not any one of another nation, ſo not any one of another family beſide the prieſt's, no not the ſon of a prieſt's daughter by an Iſraelite, which ſome think is principally intended; and ſo Aben Ezra remarks this is ſaid of a ſon, if ſhe had any, and upon whoſe account ſhe herſelf might not eat.

℣. 14. And if a man eat of the holy thing unwittingly, &c.] Either not knowing that it is an holy thing, or the heave-offering, or any thing of that kind; or elſe is ignorant of the puniſhment of ſuch an action, as Gerſom obſerves; and this is to be underſtood of any man that was not a prieſt, or was not of the prieſt's family, even any common Iſraelite; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, a man of Iſrael, or an Iſraelite, one of the common people: then he ſhall put a fifth part thereof unto it; a fifth part of the value of what he has eat, to an equivalent for the whole, that is, he ſhall pay the full value for what he has eat, and a fifth part beſides: and ſhall give it to the prieſt, with the holy thing; the meaning is, that he ſhall give the fifth part to the prieſt, with the equivalent for what he has eat; for he could not give the holy thing itſelf, but a compenſation for it; according to Gerſom, he was to give the principal to the prieſt, whoſe the holy thing was he eat of, and the fifth part he might give to what prieſt he would. The Jewiſh canon, concerning this matter, runs thus; he that ignorantly eats the heave-offering, pays the principal, and the fifth part; and the ſame, either he that eats, or drinks, or anoints; and whether the heave-offering be clean or unclean, he pays the fifth, and the fifth of the fifth; and he does not pay the heave-offering but of common things, rightly ordered, and they become an heave-offering, and the compenſation of it; and if the prieſt would forgive, he may not [p].

℣. 15. And they ſhall not prophane the holy things of the children of Iſrael, which they offer unto the Lord] By cauſing or ſuffering ſtrangers to eat of them; ſo Jarchi, referring the words to the prieſts, who ſhould be careful that ſtrangers eat not of ſacred things; or by the ſtrangers themſelves eating them, whereby they were prophaned and uſed as common things.

℣. 16. Or ſuffer them to bear the iniquity of treſpaſs, &c.] The puniſhment of ſin: either the ſtrangers, when they eat their holy things; the holy things belonging to the prieſts, which they permitting them to do, ſuffer them to be liable to the puniſhment incurred thereby, or elſe the prieſts themſelves; ſo the Septuagint verſion renders the word themſelves; and in like manner Jarchi interprets it; and then the ſenſe may be, according to the Targums of Jonathan and Onkelos, that the prieſts ſhall bear the puniſhment of their ſins, "when they ſhall eat the holy things in uncleanneſs," which is what is forbidden them in the former part of the chapter; but this ſeems to be too remote; rather the former ſenſe is beſt: for I the Lord do ſanctify them; both the prieſts, to whom the holy things belong, and the holy things for their uſe, and the uſe of their families, and them only.

℣. 17. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] At the ſame time; for having ſaid many things concerning the holineſs of prieſts, whoſe buſineſs it was

[1] Miſn. Trumot, c. 11. §. 9. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. Hilchot Trumot, c. 6. §. 1.
[m] In Miſn. Yebamot, c. 9. §. 6.
[n] Miſn. Yebamot, c. 7. §. 4. & Bartenora in ib.
[o] Miſn Yebamot, c. 9. §. 6.
[p] Miſn. Trumot, c. 6. §. 1.

was to offer ſacrifices, he adds various things concerning the nature, condition and circumſtances of the ſacrifices they were to offer: ſaying; as follow.

℣. 18. Speak unto Aaron, and to his ſons, &c.] The prieſts, whoſe work it was to offer ſacrifices, and therefore it behoved them to know what kind and ſort were to be offered by them, when brought to them: and unto all the children of Iſrael; who were to bring the ſacrifices, and for whom they were to be offered, and therefore ſhould be acquainted with the nature and kind of what would be acceptable to God, and what not: whatſoever he be of the houſe of Iſrael; this phraſe includes women and ſervants, and even Gentiles, as ſay the Jewiſh writers [q], who may vow vows, and make voluntary gifts, as well as the Iſraelites: or of the ſtrangers in Iſrael; thoſe of other nations that dwelt there, either proſelytes of the gate, or proſelytes of righteouſneſs, ſo Ben Gerſom; and Aben Ezra obſerves, that the text ſpeaks of the ſtranger, becauſe there is ſome reaſon in the vows and free-will-offerings of an Iſraelite and ſtranger, as follows: that will offer his oblation for all his vows, and for all his free-will-offerings, which they will offer unto the Lord for a burnt-offering; the wiſe men, as Aben Ezra obſerves, diſtinguiſh between a vow and a free-will-offering; every vow is a free-will-offering, but every free-will-offering is not a vow; and though theſe were both of them ſorts of peace-offerings, yet they were not received from Gentiles under that notion, but as burnt-offerings, becauſe they were offered in devotion to God, and not to be eaten by Iſraelites; ſo Maimonides [r] ſays, they don't receive from Gentiles but burnt-offerings only, as it is ſaid Lev. xxii. 25. neither from a ſtranger's hand, &c. even burnt-offerings of fowls they receive from a Gentile, though he be an idolater; but they don't receive of them peace-offerings, nor meat-offerings, nor ſin-offerings, nor treſpaſs-offerings; and ſo burnt-offerings, which don't come by way of a vow, or a free-will-offering, they don't receive from Gentiles, as the burnt-offering of a lying-in woman, and the like unto it; a Gentile that brings peace-offerings, they offer them as burnt-offerings, becauſe the heart of the Gentile is towards heaven.

℣. 19. Ye ſhall offer at your own will, &c.] For vows and free-will-offerings were at their own option, and depended on their own will and pleaſure, and when offered ſhould be with a willing mind, and from their whole heart: or for good will to you; as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; or for gracious acceptation, that is, that they might be well pleaſing to God, and acceptable in his ſight, ſo Jarchi; in order to which the following direction was ſtrictly to be obſerved: a male without blemiſh, of the beeves, of the ſheep, and of the goats; bullocks, ſheep and goats, were the only ſorts of beaſts, out of which ſacrifices were taken, and thoſe that were for burnt-offerings were always to be males, and unblemiſhed, ſee ch. i. 3, 10. but for other offerings, as peace-offerings and ſin-offerings, females might be uſed, ſee ch. iii. 1. and iv. 32. Fowls are not mentioned, though burnt-offerings were of them, becauſe it was not required in them, only of beaſts, that they ſhould be males, and without blemiſh; for, as Jarchi obſerves, theſe were not rejected on account of a blemiſh, only for want of a member.

℣. 20. For whatſoever hath a blemiſh, that ſhall ye not offer, &c.] Which is the general rule, the particulars of which are after given, and which has been imitated by the heathens. The Egyptians, as they only ſacrificed the males of beeves, ſo they were very curious in examining them, that they might be entirely pure and perfect [s]; and it was a cuſtom among the Romans, that ſuch ſheep ſhould be choſen for ſacrifice, in which there was nothing wanting [t]; and ſo among the Grecians, Homer [u] ſpeaks of perfect goats offered in ſacrifice to appeaſe the gods: for it ſhall not be acceptable for you; be grateful to God, and accepted by him on their account, if blemiſhed; ſee Mal. i. 8, 13, 14.

℣. 21. And whoſoever offereth a ſacrifice of peace-offering unto the Lord, &c.] This, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, is diſtinguiſhed from a burnt-offering; for though it was to be perfect, and without blemiſh, yet not obliged to be a male as that, ch. iii. 1. This was either by way of thankſgiving for mercies received, ch. vii. 12. or to accompliſh his vow; made in any diſtreſs, that if God would deliver him, then he would offer ſuch a ſacrifice: or a free-will-offering; either on account of favours received, or in order to obtain them: which ſacrifice, whether in beeves or ſheep; whether in bullocks or ſheep, under which are comprehended goats, both being of the flock, ℣. 19: it ſhall be perfect to be accepted; perfect in all its parts, not only in thoſe that are without and obvious to view, but in thoſe that are within: wherefore the Jewiſh writers ſay [w], if it had but one kidney, or the ſpleen was conſumed, it was unfit for the altar; wherefore in order to be an acceptable ſacrifice to God, it was to be compleat in all reſpects: there ſhall be no blemiſh therein; which is repeated for the confirmation of it, and that it might be obſerved. Such ſacrifices were typical of Chriſt, the immaculate Lamb of God, who offered himſelf without ſpot to him, 1 Pet. i. 19. Heb. ix. 14. and ſhews, that no ſacrifice of man's can be ſo acceptable to God as to atone for him, ſince none of theirs are perfect, and without blemiſh.

℣. 22. Blind, or broken, or maimed, &c.] Which is blind of one eye, or both; and ſo the Egyptians, as they would not ſacrifice any of their oxen that had any blemiſhes on them, and were of a different colour, or changed in their form, ſo likewiſe ſuch that were deprived of either of their eyes [x]. Some, as Aben Ezra obſerves, reſtrain that which is broken, to its being broken in the head; but others interpret it of any fracture of the foot, as well as the head, and even of the tail, ſide or rib; though others think, that ſuch fractures as were not open and viſible are excepted, as that of the rib; ſo Gerſom; and with the heathens, as Pliny [y] would have remarked, as they were not uſed to ſacrifice calves brought on mens ſhoulders, ſo neither any thing that halted: that which is maimed, ſome underſtand of that whoſe foot is broken, as Aben Ezra alſo remarks; but the word is by the Septuagint rendered, cut in the tongue; and the Targum of Jonathan, whoſe eye-brows are ſmitten; and Jarchi ſeems to take in both, interpreting it the eye-brow which is cut or broken, and ſo ſo the lip, which is cut or broken: but it is rather to be underſtood more generally of its being maimed or mutilated in any part of it; ſo with the heathens, as Porphyry [z] affirms, beaſts that were mutilated were not to be ſacrificed; and in the Comedian [a], a ſacrifice is objected to, becauſe it had no tail; upon which the Scholiaſt obſerves, that whatever was mutilated, was not offered in ſacred ſervices, nor was any thing imperfect or unſound ſacrificed to the gods; and particularly Servius [b] remarks, if their tongues were cut or ſlit; which illuſtrates the Septuagint verſion, which is obſerved by Grotius: or having a wen; or full of warts, as others; the Targum of Jonathan is, whoſe eyes are ſmitten with a mixture of white and black; and ſo Gerſom interprets it of a like defect in the eye, in the white of the eye; for he ſays, if it was in the black or pupil of the eye, the eye would be blind: or ſcurvy, or ſcabbed; the ſame with thoſe in men, ch. xxi. 20. ſee the note there: ye ſhall not offer theſe unto the Lord; any creatures defective in any of theſe inſtances; three times this is ſaid, as Jarchi obſerves, to make them careful concerning the ſanctification of them, and concerning the ſlaying of them, and concerning the ſprinkling of their blood: nor make an offering by fire of them upon the altar unto the Lord; a burnt-offering on the altar of burnt-offering, or burn the fat of them upon it.

[q] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 13. 2. Bartenora in Miſn. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 5. [r] Hilchot Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 3. §. 2, 3. [s] Herodot. Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 38. [t] Servius in Virgil. Æneid. l. 4. [u] Iliad 1. ℣. 66. [w] Maimon Hilchot Iſſure Mizbeach, c. 2. §. 11. [x] Chæremon. apud Porphyr. de Abſtinentia, l. 4. §. 7. [y] Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 45.

℣. 23. Either a bullock, or a lamb that hath any thing ſuperfluous, or lacking in its parts, &c.] That has either more members than it ſhould have, as five feet, or two griſtles in an ear, as Gerſom ſays, or has fewer than it ſhould have; or, as Jarchi, that has one member longer or ſhorter than another, as the leg or thigh; according to the Targum of Jonathan, that is redundant in its teſticles, or deficient therein; the Septuagint verſion is, that hath its ear, or its tail cut; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion: that thou mayeſt offer for a free-will-offering; for the repair of the ſanctuary or temple, as Jarchi and Gerſom; money, or the value of the ſacrifices, might be given to the prieſts for that uſe, but according to them might not be offered upon the altar: but it rather ſeems to be an exception to the above law, and allows of the ſacrifice of them for a free-will-offering, though not for a vow, as it follows: but for a vow it ſhall not be accepted; becauſe the other was according to a man's will and pleaſure, and he might bring what he would on that account; but when he made a vow that he would offer ſuch a ſacrifice, it muſt be of creatures that were perfect, and without blemiſh.

℣. 24. Ye ſhall not offer unto the Lord that which is bruiſed, or cruſhed, or broken, or cut, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan is, whoſe teſticles are preſſed and bruiſed, and whoſe nerves are corrupted and bruiſed, and ſo moſt Jewiſh writers interpret it: neither ſhall you make any offering thereof in your land; any offering of any ſort, either burnt-offering or peace-offering, or any other; or ye ſhall not do, that is, any ſuch thing as here ſuggeſted, not bruiſe, or cruſh, or break, or cut the teſticles of any creature; ſo the above writers.

℣. 25. Neither from a ſtranger's hand ſhall ye offer the bread of your God of any of theſe, &c.] That is, from a Gentile, a proſelyte of the gate, who had renounced idolatry, and was willing to offer ſacrifice to the true God; but what had ſuch defects and blemiſhes in them as before deſcribed, the prieſt might not take of his hands, and offer on the altar of God; and this is the rather obſerved, becauſe, on the one hand the Gentile might think ſuch ſacrifices would be acceptable, ſince he might have been uſed to offer ſuch to idols; and on the other hand, the prieſt might think ſuch would do well enough for Gentiles, though not for Iſraelites: becauſe their corruption is in them; or they are corrupt through being bruiſed, cruſhed, broken, or cut: and blemiſhes be in them; which ſeems to be added to explain the former, and may have reſpect to all the blemiſhes before named, and whatſoever is included in them; for though there are but 12 here mentioned, the Jews reckon no leſs than 50 [c]: they ſhall not be accepted for you; to make atonement for you; Jarchi ſays, or from you, the prieſts; they ſhall not be accepted of the Lord from their hands, and ſo be of no avail to the offerers, nor to thoſe for whom they are offered.

℣. 26. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] At the ſame time, as before, in a continued diſcourſe, the ſubject being of the ſame kind, relating to ſacrifices: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 27. When a bullock, or a ſheep, or a goat is brought forth, &c.] Thoſe three are only mentioned, becauſe they were only made uſe of in ſacrifice, to which this law refers: then it ſhall be ſeven days under the dam; whether a calf, or a lamb, or a kid of the goats; it was not to be taken from its dam and killed, either for food or ſacrifice, before it was ſeven days old: Fagius ſays, the Hebrews give two reaſons why a creature might not be offered before the 8th day; one is, that a ſabbath might paſs over it, nothing being perfect and conſiſtent without it, that giving, as they ſay [d], perfection and conſiſtence to all the things of the world; and the other, as the heavens and the earth being perfected in ſeven days, a creature which lives ſo long ſeems to be, as it were perfect; but he obſerves, if we enquire after the myſtical ſenſe of it, a better reaſon is to be given, namely, that Chriſt, the type of all the ſacrifices, was not to be offered, or ſuffer death in his infancy, which Herod contrived, but at man's eſtate; and to ſhew that no man is fit to be a propitiatory ſacrifice, through weakneſs and inability, being unable to ſtand before the juſtice of God, only Chriſt, in whom is perfection of ſtrength: and from the eighth day and thenceforth it ſhall be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the Lord; become an acceptable burnt-offering to God; ſo Pliny [e] ſays, that the young of ſheep are fit for ſacrifice on the 8th day, and of an ox on the 30th day; ſee Exod. xxii. 30.

℣. 28. And whether it be cow or ew, &c.] Or an ox or a ſheep [f], for this law, as Aben Ezra ſays, reſpects both male and female, and neither the one nor the other with their young might be ſlain; though Jarchi ſays, the cuſtom is concerning the female, for it is forbidden to ſlay the dam and its ſon, or daughter; but it is not the cuſtom concerning males, wherefore it is lawful to ſlay the father and the ſon: ye ſhall not kill it and her young both in one day; or, it and its ſon [g], the young, whether of a cow or ew, and whether it be male or female; though Gerſom obſerves, that this law takes place only in the dam and its female young, and and not in the father and the ſon; for it is not manifeſt in many animals, who is their father, wherefore he is not guilty of ſtripes; if the father and his ſon are ſlain in one day, even though it is known it is its father: the reaſon of the law ſeems to be, to encourage mercy and pity, and to diſcourage cruelty: hence the Targum of Jonathan is, "and "my people, the children of Iſaael, as our father "is merciful in heaven, ſo be ye merciful on "earth; a cow, or a ſheep, &c.

[z] De Abſtinentia, l. 2. §. 23. [a] Ariſtoph. Acharnenſ. ℣. 784. [b] In Virgil. Æneid. l. 6. [c] Maimon. Hilchot Biath Hamikdaſh, c. 7. §. 1, &c. [d] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 104. 2. [e] Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 51. [f] שור או שה bovem vel pecus, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [g] אתו ואת בנו ipſum & filium ejus, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

℣. 29. And when ye will offer a ſacrifice of thankſgiving unto the Lord, &c.] Which was a ſort of peace-offering, diſtinct from free-will-offerings and vows before ſpoken of: offer it at your own will; juſt what they pleaſed, whether a bullock, a ſheep, or a goat, and whether a male or female; theſe were left to their own option, or for acceptation to you, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi; that is, it was right in them, and they ought to be careful to offer it in ſuch manner, that it might be acceptable to God, by obſerving the rules given concerning it, particularly what follows.

℣. 30. On the ſame day it ſhall be eaten up, &c.] Which is the law concerning it, ch. vii. 15. ſee the note there: ye ſhall leave none of it till the morning; of another day, as the Vulgate Latin verſion adds, and much leſs the fat of them, and the moſt holy things, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, the one being to be burnt upon the altar, the other to be eaten by the prieſts: I am the Lord; who has made this law, and expect it will be obſerved.

℣. 31. Therefore ſhall ye keep my commandments, and do them, &c.] Both prieſts and people, even all the commandments delivered at this time; as well as all others; theſe they were to obſerve and take notice of, and keep them in memory, and put them in practice: I am the Lord; ſee the preceding verſe.

℣. 32. Neither ſhall ye prophane my holy name, &c.] By tranſgreſſing the laws of God, particularly by offering blemiſhed ſacrifices, or before the proper time; or by ſlaying the dam and its young on one day; for, as Aben Ezra obſerves, this is ſaid to the ſons of Aaron: but I will be hallowed among the children of Iſrael; by his prieſts among them, and by them themſelves, conforming to all the precepts, and particularly the laſt mentioned, which reſpects them, and their eating up the peace-offerings the ſame day: I am the Lord which hallowed you; had ſeparated them from all other people, and had given them holy laws to walk by, through the obſervance of which, they would be at leaſt externally holy.

℣. 33. That brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God, &c.] Whereby he ſhewed himſelf to be their covenant-God and Father, who had a kind and gracious regard unto them, and which laid them under obligation to fear, ſerve, and worſhip him as their God: I am the Lord; that hath ſovereign right unto them, and claim upon them, and therefore they ought to be ſubject to his will, and obſerve his laws and ordinances.

CHAP. XXIII.

IN this chapter an account is given of the ſeveral holy days, times, and ſeaſons, appointed by God, under the general names of feaſts and holy convocations; and firſt of the ſabbath, ℣. 1—4. then of the paſſover and feaſt of unleavened bread, ℣. 5—8. to which is annexed, the ſheaf of the firſt fruits, ℣. 9—14. after that of the feaſt of weeks or pentecoſt, ℣. 15—22. and of the feaſt of trumpets, ℣. 23, 24, 25. and of the day of atonement, ℣. 26—32. and of the feaſt of tabernacles, ℣. 33—44.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Much about the ſame time as before; and having delivered to him various laws concerning the holineſs of the people of Iſrael, who were to ſerve him, and of the holineſs of the prieſts, that were to miniſter in holy things to him, and of the purity and perfections of their ſacrifices, he here appoints various times and ſeaſons, for the more ſpecial worſhip and ſervice of him: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, &c.] Speak to them to gather together, and then ſay unto them what follows, they all being obliged to keep the feaſts, and obſerve the ſolemnities hereafter directed to; though it may be the heads of the tribes, and the elders of the people were ſummoned together, and the following things were delivered to them, and by them to the people: concerning the feaſts of the Lord, which ye ſhall proclaim to be holy convocations even theſe are my feaſts; appointed and ordered by God, and to be kept to the honour of his name; theſe are the general names for the particular holy times and ſeaſons, after appointed; they are in general called feaſts, though one of them, the day of atonement, was, ſtrictly ſpeaking, a faſt; yet being a ceſſation from all work, and oppoſed to working days, days of labour and buſineſs, it is comprehended in this general title: nor is it unuſual with other nations to call a faſt a feaſt; ſo Ælianus [h] relates of the Tarentines, that having been beſieged by the Romans, and delivered from them, in memory of their ſufferings appointed a feaſt which was called a faſt: the word uſed has the ſignification of ſtated, fixed, appointed times and ſeaſons, and of convening or meeting together at ſuch times, and that for the performance of ſolemn worſhip and ſervice, which is true of them all; for there are certain times of the week and month fixed for them, and when the people in bodies aſſembled together, and in a ſolemn manner worſhipped the Lord; and theſe are called convocations, becauſe the people were called together at thoſe times by the prieſts, and that with the ſound of a trumpet, Numb. x. 2, 3, 8, 9, 10. and holy becauſe ſeparated from other days, and ſet apart for holy ſervices: the words may be rendered as they are by many [i], the ſolemnities of the Lord, which ye ſhall proclaim holy convocations, theſe are my ſolemnities; times for holy, religious, and ſolemn ſervice, of his appointment and for his glory: Aben Ezra ſeems to underſtand all this of the ſabbath only, which is next mentioned, expreſſed in the plural number, becauſe, as he obſerves, there are many ſabbaths in a year; and indeed the general title of the reſt of the feaſts is afterwards given, ℣. 4.

℣. 3. Six days ſhall work be done, &c.] Or may be done by men, any ſort of lawful work and honeſt labour, for the ſuſtenance of themſelves and families:

[h] Var. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 20.

[i] Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius.

families: but the ſeventh day is the ſabbath of reſt; from all bodily labour, and work of any kind; typical of reſt by Chriſt and in him: an holy convocation; when the people were called to holy exerciſes, to pray and praiſe, and hear the word, and offer ſacrifice: ye ſhall do no work therein; not any at all, ſee Exod. xxxi. 15. and xxxv. 2, 3. it is the ſabbath of the Lord in all your dwellings; other feaſts were kept in the ſanctuary, in the tabernacle or temple, or where they were; but this was not only obſerved there and in their ſynagouges, but in their private houſes, or wherever they were, whether travelling by ſea or land; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan and Aben Ezra interpret it.

℣. 4. Theſe are the feaſts of the Lord, even holy convocations, &c.] What follow beſides the ſabbath mentioned: which ye ſhall proclaim in their ſeaſons; the proper times of the year, the day or days, and month in which they are to be obſerved; theſe were to be proclaimed by the prieſts with the ſound of trumpet, namely what follow, for they are put together, which had been before for the moſt part ſingly delivered.

℣. 5. In the 14th day of the firſt month, &c.] The month Niſan, the ſame with Abib, the month in which the children of Iſrael came out of Egypt, for which reaſon it was made the firſt month in the year, anſwering to part of our March and part of April; and for the ſame reaſon was the paſſover kept at this time, as follows: at even is the Lord's paſſover; that is, that was the time for the keeping the paſſover, even between the two evenings, as it may be rendered; from the 6th hour and onward, as Jarchi, that is, after noon or 12 o'clock; or the middle of the day, as Gerſom, when the ſun began to decline; ſee the note on Exod. xii. 6.

℣. 6. And on the 15th day of the ſame month is the feaſt of unleavened bread unto the Lord, &c.] Which was the day the children of Iſrael went out of Egypt with their dough and leaven, having not time to leaven it; in remembrance of which this feaſt was appointed: ſeven days ye muſt eat unleavened bread; ſee Exod. xii. 15, 18, 19, 20.

℣. 7. In the firſt day ye ſhall have an holy convocation, &c.] That is, on the firſt of the ſeven days of the feaſt of unleavened bread, even the 15th day of the month Niſan; this was ſeparated from the other days of the feſtival, and more particularly devoted to religious exerciſes, ſee Exod. xii. 16. ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein; ſuch as agriculture, or any manufacture or mechanical buſineſs, which they and their ſervants were at other times employed in; but they might bake bread and boil or roaſt their meat, and walk abroad, which they might not do on their ſabbaths; and therefore it is ſo expreſſed as to diſtinguiſh it from the work forbidden on that day.

℣. 8. But ye ſhall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord ſeven days, &c.] A burnt-offering was to be offered unto the Lord on every one of the ſeven days, which were two young bullocks, one ram, and ſeven lambs; beſides a meat-offering, and a goat for a ſin-offering, Numb. xxviii. 19—24. in the ſeventh day is an holy convocation, ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein; as on the firſt day, that was on account of the Iſraelites going out of Egypt; and this is ſaid, on account of Pharaoh and his hoſt being drowned on it; ſee the note on Exod. xii. 16.

℣. 9. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] At the ſame time, for what follow are the other feaſts and holy convocations before ſpoken of: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 10. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, &c.] What is next obſerved, it being incumbent on them to do what is enjoined: when ye be come into the land which I give unto you; the land of Canaan, which God had given by promiſe to their fathers and to them, and which they were now going to inherit: as yet they were in a wilderneſs, where there were no ſowing nor reaping, nor any harveſt; ſo that the following law, though now given, could not take place till they came into the land of Canaan: and ſhall reap the harveſt thereof; the barley-harveſt, which was about this time, the month Niſan, and which had the name of Abib, from the barley being then in the ear, ſee Exod. ix. 31. for the wheat-harveſt was not till ſeven weeks after: then ye ſhall bring a ſheaf of the firſt-fruits of your harveſt unto the prieſt; to do with it as after directed: this is called an omer in the text, which was the tenth part of an ephah, Exod. xvi. 36. and ſo Jarchi interprets it here; according to the Jewiſh writers, when the ſheaf was reaped, the corn was beat out and winnowed, and dried by the fire, and then ground in a mill, and an omer or a tenth part of an ephah of the flour of it was taken, and oil and frankincenſe put upon it, an handful of which being put upon the altar the reſt was the prieſts; and with this pretty much agrees the account Joſephus gives, who ſays, on the ſecond day of unleavened bread, which is the 16th (day of Niſan) of the fruits they have reaped, they take a part; for they don't touch them before, accounting it juſt to honour God firſt, from whom they receive the plenty of theſe things; and bring the firſt-fruits of the barley after this manner, having dried the handful of ears, and bruiſed them, and cleanſed them from the bran, they bring to the altar a tenth part to God, and caſting one handful of it on the altar, they leave the reſt for the uſe of the prieſts; and from thence forward it is lawful to reap publickly and privately [k]: this has been in ſome part imitated by the heathens: the Egyptians, who aſcribe the invention of the fruits of the earth, particularly wheat and barley, to Iſis and Oſiris, in memory of it, and as a teſtimony of their gratitude for it, at the time of harveſt, bring an handful of the firſt ears of corn, and beating themſelves near them, call upon Iſis; and in ſome cities, at the feaſt of Iſis, veſſels of wheat and barley were carried about in great pomp, as Diodorus Siculus [l] relates.

℣. 11. And he ſhall wave the ſheaf before the Lord, &c.] Or the omer of barley; this was done by the prieſt in the tabernacle and temple, where was the preſence of God, and that before the handful of it was put upon the altar; which agitation or waving was, as Gerſom ſays, towards the eaſt; it was moved to and fro, backwards and forwards, upwards and downwards, to make an acknowledgement to the Lord of heaven and earth, that the fruits of the earth and the plentiful harveſt were of him, and to give him the praiſe and glory of it: to be accepted for you; of the Lord, as a thankſgiving to him, for the harveſt now ripe, and the appointed time of it, and the plenty thereof; and that the remainder might be ſanctified and bleſſed to them, and they have leave to gather it in, which they had not till this was done: on the morrow after the ſabbath the prieſt ſhall wave it; not after the ſeventh-day, but after the firſt day of

[k] Antiq. l. 3. c. 10. §. 5.

[l] Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 13.

of the feaſt of unleavened bread, which was a ſabbath, in which no ſervile work was to be done, ℣. 7. and ſo the Targum of Jonathan calls it, the day after the firſt good day of the paſſover, which was the 16th of Niſan, as Joſephus expreſsly ſays, in the place above referred to; and ſo it is generally underſtood by Jewiſh writers [m]: the account given of this affair is this; the meſſengers of the Sanhedrim went out (from Jeruſalem over the brook Kidron to the fields near it) on the evening of the feaſt, (i. e. at the going out of the 15th) and at the beginning of the 16th of Niſan, and bound the ſtanding corn in bundles, that ſo it might be the more eaſily reaped; and all the neighbouring cities gathered together there, that it might be reaped in great pomp; and when it was dark, one ſaid to them, Is the ſun ſet? they ſaid, yes. With this ſickle (ſhall I reap?) they ſaid, yes. In this baſket (ſhall I put it?) they ſaid, yes. If on a ſabbath-day, he ſaid to them, On this ſabbath-day (ſhall I do it?) they ſaid, yes [n]. Theſe queſtions were put and anſwered three times; then they reaped it and put it into the baſkets, and brought it to the court, where they parched it before the fire, to fulfil the commandment of parched corn; then they put it in mills for grinding beans, and took out of it a tenth part (of an ephah) which was ſifted with 13 ſieves; then oil and frankincenſe were poured upon it, being mixed; and it was waved, and brought, and a handful taken and burnt, and the reſt was eaten by the prieſts; and when they had offered the omer, they went out and found the ſtreets of Jeruſalem full of meal and parched corn [o], there being now full liberty to reap what they would: now this ſheaf of the firſt-fruits was typical of Chriſt; it being of barley, may denote the mean eſtate of Chriſt in his humiliation; and but one ſheaf for all the people, may ſignify that Chriſt is the one mediator, ſaviour and redeemer: yet as a ſheaf comprehends many ſtalks and grains, ſo Chriſt has a complication of bleſſings in him; yea, he had all his people repreſentatively in him, when he was offered for the whole body of his myſtical Iſrael, all the children of God ſcattered abroad; the manner of reaping it, by perſons deputed by the Sanhedrim on the eve of a feſtival of the paſſover, in the ſight of much people, without Jeruſalem near Kidron, exactly agrees with the apprehending of Chriſt in the night near Kidron, by perſons ſent from the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, and his ſuffering publickly without the gates of Jeruſalem; it being brought to the prieſts in the court, and threſhed, winnowed, dried, and parched by the fire, and ground in mills, may denote the various dolorous ſufferings of Chriſt, by means of the prieſts and elders of the people; and oil and frankincenſe being put on it, may denote the acceptableneſs of his ſacrifice to God; and the waving of it, his reſurrection from the dead, which was on the very day this ſheaf was waved; who is the firſt fruits of them that ſleep in him, and which ſanctifies the whole body of them, and enſures their reſurrection unto eternal life; ſee 1 Cor. xv. 20, 23.

℣. 12. And ye ſhall offer that day, when ye wave the ſheaf, &c.] Beſides the daily ſacrifice of the morning and evening, and the additional offerings made on every one of the ſeven days of the feaſt of unleavened bread: an he-lamb without bleminiſh of the firſt year, for a burnt-offering unto the Lord; typical of the perfect and immaculate lamb of God, whoſe ſufferings are fitly ſignified by a burnt-offering; and which were endured at the time he became the firſt-fruits of his people, and ſanctified them.

℣. 13. And the meat-offering thereof ſhall be two tenth-deals of fine flour mingled with oil, &c.] The uſual meaſure of flour to a meat-offering was one tenth-deal, Exod. xxix. 40. but here it is doubled: ſome Jewiſh writers ſay [p], one tenth was on account of the lamb that was offered at this time, and the other as was ſuitable for a meat-offering; but the true reaſon ſeems to be, becauſe it was on account of the fruits of the earth and the plenty thereof; and therefore a double meaſure of fine flour mixed with oil was required as a token of gratitude; for thankfulneſs ought to be in proportion to mercies: an offering made by fire unto the Lord for a ſweet ſavour; an handful of it was burnt upon the altar, and was received with acceptance by the Lord, and the reſt was eaten by the prieſts, ch. ii. 2, 3. and vi. 15, 16. and the drink-offering thereof ſhall be of wine, the fourth part of an hin; which was the common quantity for a drink-offering, Exod. xxix. 40. for, as Jarchi obſerves, though the meat-offering was doubled, the drink-offering was not; the reaſon of which ſeems to be, becauſe theſe offerings were on account of the harveſt and not the vintage: the Targum of Jonathan calls it wine of grapes, to diſtinguiſh it from wine that might be made of other things, but not to be uſed in drink-offerings, only the pure juice of the grape.

℣. 14. And ye ſhall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, &c.] That is, they were not allowed to make bread of the new corn, as Aben Ezra and Gerſom explain it; for they were obliged to eat unleavened bread at this time: but it might not be made of the new corn, until the above offering was made; nay, they were not allowed to parch any of the grains of corn, and eat them; yea, even they might not pluck and eat the green ears, though of ever ſo ſmall a quantity. The Jews ſay [q], if it was the quantity of an olive of either of theſe, a man was to be beaten for it: until the ſelf-ſame day that ye have brought an offering unto your God; which includes all the offerings on this account, the offering of the firſt-fruits, the offering of the he-lamb, and the meat-offering and the drink-offering; until theſe were offered up, the new corn might not be eaten in any ſhape: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever throughout your generations; until the Meſſiah came, who is the ſubſtance of theſe ſhadows: in all your dwellings; not at Jeruſalem only, but in the ſeveral parts of the land of Canaan; yea, as Ben Gerſom ſays, whether in the land, or without the land; a later writer ſays, it is forbidden to eat of the new corn at this time, whether bread, parched corn, or green ears, until the beginning of the night of the 18th of Niſan, and in the land of Iſrael, until the beginning of the night of the 17th of Niſan [r].

℣. 15. And ye ſhall count unto you from the morrow after the ſabbath, &c.] Not the ſeventh-day ſabbath in the paſſover-week, nor the whole feaſt of unleavened bread, but the firſt day of it, which was an holy convocation, a ſabbath in which no ſervile work was to be done, ℣. 7. and it was from

[m] Jarchi & Ben Gerſom in loc. Jarchi in Miſn. Succah, c. 3. §. 12. [n] Miſn. Menachot, c. 10. §. 3, 4. [o] Ib. §. 4, 5. [p] Chaſkuni. [q] Maimon. Hilchot Maacolot Aſurot, c. 10. §. 2, 3. [r] Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. c. 489. §. 10; ſo Lebuſh, c. 489. §. 10.

from the day after this, even the 16th of Niſan, that the following count was to be made; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, after the firſt feaſt day of the paſſover; and Joſephus [s] is very clear in it, that Pentecoſt, or the feaſt of weeks, was the 50th day from the 16th of Niſan, when the above offerings were made: from the day that ye brought the ſheaf of the wave-offering; which plainly points out the expreſs day from whence the count was to begin, even on the day when the ſheaf of the firſt-fruits of the barley-harveſt was offered: ſeven ſabbaths ſhall be compleat; or ſeven weeks, that is, 49 days; and hence Jarchi ſays, we learn that the count began from the evening, or otherwiſe the weeks would not be compleat; and Gerſom thinks, the day in which the ſheaf was offered is included in the days counted; for the count began from the day after the firſt of the paſſover, and lo, ſeven days are ſeven weeks of days, which make 49 days.

℣. 16. Even unto the morrow after the 7th ſabbath, &c.] Or weeks, 49 days being counted, the following was the 50th day, or Pentecoſt: ſhall ye number 50 days; from whence this feaſt had the name of Pentecoſt, Acts ii. 1. all in Iſrael were obliged to number thoſe days, except women and ſervants [t]: the manner of doing it was this [u]; on the night of the ſecond (day of the paſſover) after the evening-prayer they began to number; but if any one forgot to number at the beginning of the night, he went and numbered all the night; for the commandment is for every one to number by himſelf, and he ought to number ſtanding, and to bleſs firſt, and number the days and weeks: How? on the 1ſt day he ſays, This is one day, until he comes to 7 days, and then he ſays, This is the 7th day, which is one week; and on the 8th day he ſays, This is the 8th day, which is one week and one day, and ſo till he comes to the 14th; then he ſays, This is the 14th day, which make two weeks; and in this way he numbers, and goes on until the 49th day: and ye ſhall offer a new meat-offering unto the Lord; that is, of new corn, as the Targum of Jonathan, and Jarchi explain it, and this was of wheat; for it was the offering for the wheat-harveſt, which was offered on the 50th day from the offering of the ſheaf or omer of the barley-harveſt.

℣. 17. And ye ſhall bring out of your habitations two wave-loaves of two tenth deals, &c.] Out of their habitations in the land of Canaan; and not out of thoſe without the land, as Jarchi obſerves; and not out of all of them, as Ben Gerſom remarks; though the Vulgate Latin verſion has it, out of all your habitations, but wrongly; and indeed, out of no one particular habitation, becauſe it was at the public expence; but they were brought from ſome part of the country or another, even the quantity of two-tenth parts of an ephah, or two omers of wheaten-flour made into two loaves, which were to be, and were waved before the Lord, and hence ſo called; and are the ſame with the new meat-offering, or rather bread-offering made of the new corn in the preceding verſe, ſo Jarchi: they ſhall be of fine flour; of wheaten flour, the fineſt of it, of which all meat or bread-offerings were made; and this was particularly on account of the wheat-harveſt, and therefore it was proper that the fineſt of the wheat ſhould be uſed on this occaſion; ſee the note on ch. ii. 1. each loaf or cake, according to Maimonides [x], was 7 hands breadths long, 4 hands breadths broad, and 4 fingers high: they ſhall be baked with leaven; the common meat-offering was unleavened, part of which was burnt on the altar, where no leaven might be burnt, Lev. ii. 4, 5, 11. and from hence it may be concluded, that no part of theſe loaves was to be burnt, but the whole of them fell to the ſhare of the prieſts: they are the firſt-fruits unto the Lord; which he claimed as his, and gave unto his prieſts; and it was but right and juſt he ſhould have them, as an acknowledgment of all coming from his hands, and as expreſſive of gratitude for them, and for the ſanctification of the reſt; hence this is called the feaſt of the firſt-fruits of wheat-harveſt, Exod. xxxiv. 22.

℣. 18. And ye ſhall offer with the bread ſeven lambs without blemiſh, of the firſt year, &c.] That is, with the two wave-loaves, the meat or bread-offering: and beſides theſe, and one young bullock, and two rams; in Numb. xxviii. 27. it is two young bullocks, and one ram; and Aben Ezra ſuggeſts, that this was at the will and option of the prieſt, whether one bullock and two rams, or two bullocks and one ram; but according to Maimonides [y], theſe ſacrifices were diſtinct from them; they are ſacrifices of the days, as being a feaſt-day, and theſe belonged to the loaves; ſo that according to him, and ſo he expreſſes it, there were to be offered on this day, beſides the daily ſacrifices, 3 bullocks, 3 rams, and 14 lambs, 20 beaſts in all, for burnt-offerings; and 2 goats for ſin-offerings to be eaten, and 2 lambs for peace-offerings to be eaten; and with this account agrees Joſephus [z], they ſacrifice for burnt-offerings, he ſays, 3 bullocks, and 2 rams, (or, as Dr. Bernard thinks, it ſhould be read 3 rams) and 14 lambs, and 2 goats for ſin-offerings: they ſhall be for a burnt-offering unto the Lord, with their meat-offering, and their drink-offering; each of the ſaid beaſts were offered unto the Lord on the altar of burnt-offering, and burnt thereon; and to every beaſt they offered, there was a meat-offering and a drink-offering: the meat-offering conſiſted of 3 tenth-deals, or omers of fine flour to a bullock, two to a ram, and one to a lamb; and the drink-offering was half an hin of wine to a bullock, the third part of one to a ram, and a fourth part to a lamb, as Jarchi obſerves, which appears from Numb. xxviii. 12, 13, 14: even an offering made by fire of a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord; an acceptable burnt-offering to God.

℣. 19. Then ye ſhall ſacrifice one kid of the goats for a ſin-offering, &c.] Which was for the ſin of the whole congregation, typical of Chriſt, whoſe ſoul was made an offering for ſin; in virtue of which all other ſacrifices become acceptable to God, and believers enjoy the fruits and bleſſings of divine grace: and two lambs of the firſt year for a ſacrifice of peace-offerings; which Gerſom ſays were the moſt holy things, and were only ſlain in the north, and only eaten by males, as the reſt of the holy things, and are the only peace-offerings of the congregation that were offered throughout the whole year.

℣. 20. And the prieſts ſhall wave them with the bread of the firſt-fruits, &c.] The two loaves called the two wave-loaves, ℣. 17. with which were waved the two lambs of the peace-offerings; and theſe alive, as Jarchi and Ben Gerſom intimate. The Jewiſh doctors [a] diſpute, whether in waving, the [s] Antiq. l. 3. c. 10. §. 6.

[t] Maimon. Hilchot Tamidin Umuſaphim, c. 7. §. 24. Aruch, ut ſupra, §. 1. & Lebuſh, ut ſupra, §. 1.
[u] Hilchot Tamidin, &c. c. 8. §. 10.
[x] In Torat Cohenim, apud Yalkut in loc.
[y] Antiq. l. 3. c. 10. §. 6.
[z] Schulchan
[a] Ut ſupra, §. 1.

the lambs were put above the bread, or the bread above the lambs; which ſome reconcile by obſerving, that the bread was put by the ſide of the lambs: for a wave-offering before the Lord; being waved this way and that way, upwards and downwards, and towards the ſeveral quarters of the world, ſhewing that the fruits of the earth were owing to the providential goodneſs of God every where: with the two lambs; not that all the above ſacrifices were waved, or any part of them along with the lambs, but the wave-loaves, and they were waved together, as one wave-offering to the Lord: they ſhall be holy to the Lord for the prieſts; both the loaves and the lambs, theſe were ſeparated and devoted wholly to the Lord, and to be eaten by his prieſts; the peace-offerings of a ſingle perſon were light holy things, as Jarchi ſays; but the peace-offerings of the congregation, as theſe were, are the moſt holy things, and ſo to be eaten only by the prieſts, and by the males only, in the court of the tabernacle.

℣. 21. And ye ſhall proclaim on the ſelf-ſame day, that it may be an holy convocation unto you, &c.] This proclamation was made by the prieſts with the ſound of a trumpet, that the people might obſerve that this 50th day, or day of Pentecoſt, was devoted to ſacred ſervice, and that they were called to holy exerciſes in it: ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein; what was not neceſſary for food, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, but what was neceſſary on that account, as kindling a fire, &c. might be done, ſee ℣. 7, 8. for this was to be kept in like manner as the firſt and ſeventh days of the feaſt of unleavened bread; the general deſign of which was to expreſs thankfulneſs for the appointed weeks of the harveſt, and to honour the Lord with the firſt-fruits of the increaſe of the earth: and the Jews ſay, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, that this 50th day being reckoned from the 16th of Niſan, fell upon the 6th of Sivan, on which day they ſay the law was given, which is another reaſon for the obſervance of it: and it is remarkable, that on this ſame day the word of the Lord went out of Zion, and the law or doctrine of the Lord, even the everlaſting Goſpel, went out of Jeruſalem, publiſhed by the apoſtles of Chriſt to the people of all nations; when they were favoured with the firſt-fruits of the Spirit, after our Lord's aſcenſion to heaven, and receiving gifts for men, which he now in an extraordinary manner beſtowed on his diſciples; and which were the firſt-fruits of all others, after to be given forth in the courſe of time, and of the effuſion of the Spirit in the latter day; and when there was a number of ſouls converted, as the firſt-fruits of after-converſions among Jews and Gentiles; and particularly of the converſion of the Jews in the latter day, and of the harveſt of ſouls in the end of the world, Matt. xiii. 30, 39: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations; ſo long as they dwelt in the land of Canaan, and had their harveſt in it, even until the Meſſiah came, in whom all thoſe types and figures had their accompliſhment.

℣. 22. And when ye reap the harveſt of your land, &c.] This law is repeated from ch. xix. 9, 10. ſee the notes there; and as Aben Ezra obſerves, the feaſt of weeks being the feaſt of the firſt-fruits of the wheat-harveſt, it is repeated here, that they might not forget what God had commanded them to do at that time, namely, to leave ſomewhat for the poor; and the Jewiſh writers [a] obſerve, that this law, being put among the ſolemn feaſts of the paſſover, pentecoſt, and tabernacles, and the beginning of the year, and the day of atonement, teaches, that he that obſerves it, and leaves the corner of the field and the gleanings to the poor, it is as if he built the ſanctuary, and offered his ſacrifices in the midſt of it; but a much better reaſon may be given for it, which was, to teach them that when they expreſſed their thankfulneſs to God, they ſhould exerciſe charity and liberality to the poor.

℣. 23. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] At the ſame time, in a continued diſcourſe, concerning ſome other days, which were to be obſerved in a ſacred manner: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 24. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, &c.] For all the people of Iſrael were concerned in the following precept, and obliged to obſerve it, even prieſts, Levites, Iſraelites, proſelytes, and freed ſervants; though other ſervants, and women, and children, were not obliged to hear the ſound of the trumpets [b], and which were blown not in Jeruſalem only, but in all cities and towns where the Sanhedrim was [c]; and it was the hearing of them the people were bound unto, and not leſs than nine diſtinct ſoundings were they obliged to hear [d]; to which perhaps reſpect is had in Pſ. lxxxix. 15. in the 7th month; the month Tiſri, as the Targum of Jonathan, which was the 7th from the month Niſan or Abib; which was appointed the firſt month of the year, on account of the Iſraelites coming out of Egypt in it; otherwiſe before, this month Tiſri was the firſt, and ſo it ſtill continued for the fixing the years, and ſettling the ſabbatical and jubilee years, and for the planting of trees and herbs [e]: in the firſt day of the month ſhall ye have a ſabbath; not entirely as the weekly ſabbath, in which no manner of work at all was to be done, but in which no ſervile work was to be done; and was obſerved in like manner as the firſt and 7th days of unleavened bread, and the day of pentecoſt, ℣. 7, 8, 21. a memorial of blowing of trumpets; which, according to the Jewiſh writers, was continued from ſun-riſing to ſun-ſetting [f]; but what this blowing of trumpets was a memorial of, it is not eaſy to ſay; ſome think it was in memory of the wars the people of Iſrael had with their enemies the Amalekites and Canaanites, and the victories they obtained over them, and particularly in remembrance of the walls of Jericho falling down at the ſound of rams horns; but then it muſt be by anticipation: it is more commonly received with the Jews [g], that it was on the account of the binding of Iſaac on this day, being delivered thro' a ram being ſacrificed in his ſtead; and on this account, it is ſaid, that the trumpets blown on this day, were made of rams horns, and no other might be uſed [h]; yea, that a ram's head was uſed to be eaten on this day, in remembrance of the ram of Iſaac, and alſo to intimate that the Jews would be the head and not the tail [i]: the Jews alſo ſay, that this day every year, was a ſort of day of judgment, in which God ſat and judged men, and alſo determined determined all events of the following year [k]; and this was attended with blowing of trumpets to ſtrike a terror into them, and put them in mind of the judgment of God, and to induce them to repent of their ſins [l]: and it may be obſerved, that the reſurrection of the dead in order to the laſt general judgment, will be attended with the voice of the archangel and the trumpet of God, 1 Cor. xv. 52. 1 Theſſ. iv. 16. whether this is ſo repreſented in reference to this notion, let it be conſidered: but as this was new year's day, as before obſerved, this ceremony ſeems to have been appointed to expreſs joy for all the mercies and bleſſings of the laſt year; and the rather, as at this time of the year all the fruits of the earth were gathered in, not only the barley and the wheat but the oil and wine, and under ſuch grateful acknowledgment, to expect the divine bleſſing to attend them the following year; and beſides, at this time of the year, it is generally thought by the Jews [m], and by others, that the world was created, and this blowing of trumpets might be in memory of that, and as an emblem of the ſhoutings of the ſons of God, the angels, the morning ſtars, who ſang for joy when the foundations of the earth were laid, Job xxxviii. 6, 7. to which it may be added, this ſeventh month was very memorable for holy ſolemnities, as the day of atonement on the tenth, and the feaſt of tabernacles, which began on the fifteenth, and therefore was uſhered in with blowing of trumpets to make it the more ſignificant, and particularly to put the people in mind to prepare for the day of atonement near at hand; and ſo Gerſom obſerves, that as the ſound of a trumpet ſtrikes men with fear, the deſign of this precept was, to fill the mind with fear, and to excite to repentance and brokenneſs of heart, and humiliation for ſin, and to ſearch their works and actions, and correct what was amiſs, and ſo be ready for the day of atonement; hence Ainſworth thinks, that this was a figure of the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt preaching the baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins; but rather, it ſeems to be an emblem of the goſpel and the miniſtry of it, in the acceptable year of the Lord, or the goſpel-diſpenſation, which is ſometimes ſignified by the blowing of the great trumpet, and by the miniſters of it lifting up their voice like a trumpet, Iſ. xxvii. 13. and lviii. 1. by which ſinners are rouſed and awakened to a ſenſe of their ſin and danger, and to hear a joyful ſound of love, grace, mercy, peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation through Chriſt: the Jews ſay [n], this blowing of trumpets was to diſturb ſatan, when he came to accuſe the Iſraelites; it is certain there is nothing gives him more diſturbance than the pure and powerful preaching of the goſpel, which he endeavours to obſtruct as much as poſſible, and there is nothing like what that brings to ſilence his accuſations, ſee 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. 1 Theſſ. ii. 18. Rom. viii. 33, 34. an holy convocation; on which the people were called together to holy exerciſes; and ſo the Jews obſerve it to this day; for after they return home from attendance to the blowing of the trumpets in their ſynagogues, they ſit down to meat, and ſpend the reſt of the day in hearing ſermons, and in other religious exerciſes [o].

[a] In Torat Cohenim, apud Yalkut in loc. & Jarchi. [b] Maimon. Hilchot Shophar ve Succah, c. 2. §. 1. [c] Ibid. §. 8. [d] Ib. ch. 3. §. 1. Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. No. 590. §. 1. [e] Miſn. Roſh-haſhanah, c. 1. §. 1. [f] Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. c. 588. §. 1. Lebuſh, par. 2. c. 588. §. 1. [g] R. Alphes, par. 1. fol. 346. 2. & Jarchi in loc. [h] Maimon. ut ſupra, c. 1. §. 1. Schulchan Aruch, ib. c. 586. §. 1. [i] Schulchan Aruch, ib. c. 583. §. 2. Lebuſh, ib. 583. §. 2.

℣. 25. Ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein, &c.] Only ſuch as was neceſſary for dreſſing food, but not any manual work, ſuch as ſervants were employed in on other days, as agriculture or any mechanic buſineſs: but ye ſhall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord; a burnt-offering, and what that was, may be ſeen in Numb. xxix. 1—6.

℣. 26. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] This phraſe, which is a kind of preface to each precept, ſeems to be uſed to diſtinguiſh one from another, as the preceding one from the feaſt of pentecoſt; and here, the day of atonement from that of the blowing of the trumpets; and afterwards, the feaſt of tabernacles from the day of atonement; the reaſon why it is not uſed before the feaſt of pentecoſt, ſeems to be, becauſe, as Aben Ezra obſerves, that depended upon the wave-ſheaf, and was reckoned from it: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 27. Alſo on the 10th day of this 7th month, &c.] Tiſri, the ſame as before, anſwering to part of our September, and part of October: there ſhall be a day of atonement; for all the ſins of the year paſt; ſee ch. xvi. 29, 30. it ſhall be an holy convocation unto you; when they ſhould be called together for the exerciſe of holy duties: and ye ſhall afflict your ſouls; their ſouls, by repentance, contrition, and humiliation for ſin, and their bodies by faſting; and, as the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, "by abſtaining from eating and drinking, and the advantage of bathing and wiping, and the uſe of the bed and ſandals;" hence called the faſt, Acts xxvii. 9. ſee the note on ch. xvi. 29. and offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord; a burnt-offering, of which, ſee Numb. xxix. 8—11.

℣. 28. Ye ſhall do no work in that ſame day, &c.] No more than on the weekly ſabbath: for it is a day of atonement, to make atonement for you before the Lord your God; ſee the note on ch. xvi. 30. Aben Ezra's note is, "for you only," that is, for the Iſraelites, and not the Gentiles; but the atonement of Chriſt the antitype of this, was not for the ſins of the Jews only, but for the ſins of the whole world, of all his people in it, 1 Joh. ii. 2.

℣. 29. For whatſoever ſoul it be that ſhall not be afflicted in that ſame day, &c.] That is, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem explain it, which can faſt and does not faſt; for a ſick perſon and a child under nine years of age, were not obliged to faſt on this day [p]: he ſhall be cut off from among his people; by an untimely death, by the hand of God; the Targum of Jonathan ſays, by the peſtilence.

℣. 30. And whatſoever ſoul it be that doeth any work in that ſame day, &c.] Any ſort of work whatever; for, as before obſerved, it was to be kept as ſtrictly as the weekly ſabbath: the ſame ſoul will I deſtroy from among his people; with the peſtilence, as the above Targum; it ſeems to be but another phraſe for cutting them off, and to ſignify the ſame thing.

℣. 31. Ye ſhall do no manner of work, &c.] Which is repeated, that it might be obſerved, and to ſhew how ſtrictly God required this day ſhould be kept, and how careful men ſhould be of breaking the command in this reſpect, and how much he ſhould reſent it if they did it: ſhall be a ſtatute for ever, throughout your generations, in all your dwellings; unto unto the coming of the Meſſiah, who by the atoning ſacrifice of himſelf, would anſwer to this law, and put an end to it.

[k] Miſn. Roſhhaſhanah, c. 1. §. 2. T. Bab. Roſhhaſhanah, fol. 16. 2. [l] Leo Modena's Hiſtory of Rites of the preſent Jews, par. 3. c. 5. §. 7. [m] T. Bab. Roſhhaſhanah, fol. 10. 2. [n] Targum Jon. in Num. 29. 1. R. Alphes, par. 1. fol. 346. 2. T. Bab. Roſhhaſhanah, fol. 16. 2. [o] Leo Modena, ut ſupra. [p] Maimon. Hilchot Shebitat Aſſur, c. 2. §. 8, 10.

℣. 32. It ſhall be unto you a ſabbath of reſt, &c.] See the note on ch. xvi. 31. and this is thought by ſome [q], to be the ſabbath ſpoken of in If. lviii. 13. and ye ſhall afflict your ſouls, in the ninth day of the month at even; the faſt was to begin at the cloſe of the 9th day, and to continue to the end of the 10th; ſo Maimonides [r]: he begins to faſt and afflict himſelf at the evening of the 9th next to the 10th; and ſo at the going out of it he continues in his affliction a little while of the night of the 11th, next to the tenth, which is confirmed by what follows: from even unto even ſhall ye celebrate your ſabbath; which ſome underſtand of the ſabbath in general; but it ſeems to have a particular reſpect to the ſabbath of the day of atonement, which was to laſt from the evening of the 9th to the evening of the 10th day.

℣. 33. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Concerning the feaſt of tabernacles here repeated and enlarged upon: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 34. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, &c.] Giving them directions about keeping a feaſt, in which the whole body of them had a very ſpecial and particular concern: the 15th day of this 7th month; the month Tiſri or September: ſhall be the feaſt of tabernacles for ſeven days unto the Lord; the deſign of which was, partly to give thanks for the fruits of the earth, now all gathered in, ℣. 39. but chiefly to commemorate the dwelling of the children of Iſrael in tents and booths, during their forty years abode in the wilderneſs, ℣. 43. whereby their poſterity in after-times would be led to obſerve the difference between them and their forefathers, who lived in tents or booths, pitched ſometimes in one place, and ſometimes in another, in the open fields, in waſtes, and deſerts; whereas they dwelt in ſpacious cities, fortified towns, and magnificent houſes; and were poſſeſſed of various kingdoms and nations, as was the land of Canaan: the reaſon, the Jews ſay [s], why this feaſt was kept at this time of the year, and not at the ſeaſon when they went out of Egypt and firſt dwelt in booths, as at Succoth, which had its name from thence, Exod. xii. 37. was this; becauſe then the ſummer-ſeaſon began, when men commonly uſed to build tabernacles to ſhelter them from the heat of the ſun, wherefore if the feaſt had been kept at that time, it would not have been known that it was kept at the command of God, and in remembrance of the above circumſtance; but the month Tiſri or September being uſually a cold and rainy ſeaſon in thoſe parts, men were wont to quit their tabernacles and go into their houſes; and ſo it was a plain caſe, that the feaſt was obſerved not for conveniency or through cuſtom, but that it was at the command of God they went out of their houſes into tabernacles at this ſeaſon of the year, in commemoration of the miraculous benefit of dwelling in tents under the clouds of glory: and they alſo ſay, that for this reaſon, it was ordered to begin on the 15th day, becauſe it was on the 15th day of the month (though of another month) they went out of Egypt, and the clouds began to protect and accompany them; and this was enjoined them ſeven days, to teach them that the miraculous benefits of God are always and every day to be remembered: the Jews have a whole treatiſe in their Miſnah, called Succah, the booth or tabernacle; in which they give an account of the form and fabrick, and meaſure of their tabernacles, and of their dwelling and dining in them; and of the branches they carry in their hands, and of the manner of carrying and ſhaking them; and of the pouring out of water at this time, and of their piping and ſinging and other rites and ceremonies attending this feaſt, ſee the note on John vii. 2. beſides the uſes of this feaſt before mentioned, it was typical of ſpiritual and evangelical things, and eſpecially of the incarnation of Chriſt, whoſe human nature is the true tabernacle, in diſtinction from thoſe typical ones, and in which he is expreſly ſaid to tabernacle among us, John i. 14. and it is highly probable, that his incarnation or birth was at the time of this feaſt; at which time the temple of Solomon, a type of Chriſt's body, was alſo dedicated; and this ſeaſon of the year ſuits better than that in which it is uſually placed; and his baptiſm and the time of his death ſhew it; ſee Luke ii. 1, 8. and iii. 22. and as Chriſt, our paſſover, was ſacrificed for us at the exact time of the paſſover, and the firſt-fruits of the ſpirit were given on the very day of pentecoſt, or feaſt of firſt-fruits; ſo it is moſt likely, that Chriſt was born, or firſt began to tabernacle in human nature at the feaſt of tabernacles, which we, in goſpel-times, are to keep, by believing in the incarnate Saviour, and by attending to the goſpel-ordinances he has appointed, to commemorate the benefits of his incarnation, ſufferings, and death, Zech. xiv. 16, 17. moreover, the dwelling of the children of Iſrael in booths in the wilderneſs, and ſo at this feaſt in commemoration of it, may be an emblem of the tabernacles of the ſaints in their preſent wilderneſs-ſtate: this world, through which they are paſſing, is like a wilderneſs to them; their bodies are called tabernacles, which are pitched for a while; and their ſtate and condition here is that of ſojourners, pilgrims, and travellers; yea, theſe tents and tabernacles may be figures of the ſeveral particular churches of Chriſt, in the preſent ſtate of things, which are ſet up for a while for the convenience, comfort, refreſhment, and joy of the ſpiritual Iſrael of God; ſee Pſ. xlvi. 4. and lxxxiv. 1.

℣. 35. On the firſt day ſhall be an holy convocation, &c.] When they ſhould be called together to holy exerciſes, to prayer, praiſing, and reading the law; and at this preſent time they obſerve this day, by riſing early in the morning and going to the ſynagogue, where they ſing and pray much; and every one takes a bundle of branches of palm-tree, olive, &c. in the right-hand, and a pome-citron in the left, and ſays, bleſſed be thou, O Lord our God, the Lord of the world, who has ſanctified us by thy precepts, and hath commanded us to carry the palm-tree bundle; then they ſhake it, and give a great ſhout, according to Pſ. xcvi. 12. all which they frequently repeat on this day, as well as bring out the book of the law, attended with various ceremonies, and read ſome paſſages in it [t]: ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein; as on the firſt and ſeventh days of unleavened bread, the day of Pentecoſt, and of the blowing of trumpets; but what was neceſſary for preparing and dreſſing food might be done.

℣.

[q] R. Alphes, par. 1. Yom Hacippurim, c. 1. fol. 357. 2. Jud. c. 21. p. 447.
[r] Ut ſupra, c. 1. §. 6.
[s] Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 21. p. 447.
[t] Buxtorf. ut ſupra.

℣. 36. Seven days ye ſhall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, &c.] A burnt-offering; what this was, and how many were offered on each day, ſee at large in Numb. xxix. 13—34: on the eighth day ſhall be an holy convocation unto you; as on the firſt day; ſee the note on the preceding verſe: and ye ſhall offer an offering made by fire, unto the Lord; which was different from that on all the other days, being one bullock only, &c. Numb. xxix. 35, 36: it is a ſolemn aſſembly; of all the people, when they were gathered together before the Lord. Some render the word uſed a reſtraint or detention, and interpret it of reſtraining or detaining them from ſervile work, as in the next clauſe; ſo Aben Ezra and Gerſom; but this ſenſe ſeems to make that clauſe unneceſſary, and is never uſed elſewhere where that is: ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein; as on the firſt day.

℣. 37. Theſe are the feaſts of the Lord, &c.] Beſides the ſabbath, as Gerſom obſerves; even the paſſover, the ſeven days of unleavened bread, the day of Pentecoſt, the day of blowing the trumpets, the day of atonement, and the ſeven days of the feaſt of tabernacles: which ye ſhall proclaim to be holy convocations; as they had been directed, ℣. 2: to offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord; which is explained by a burnt-offering, and a meat-offering, which went along with it; a ſacrifice, which the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan call the ſacrifice of holy things; according to Gerſom it was the ſacrifice of the peace-offerings; but rather it ſeems to be the ſacrifice of the ſin-offering, which was ordered along with the reſt in all thoſe feaſts: and drink-offerings; which alſo accompanied with the meat-offerings: every thing upon his day; there being different ſacrifices on one day than on another, every one was to be offered peculiar to the day as was ordered; of which ſee Numb. xxviii. 29.

℣. 38. Beſide the ſabbath of the Lord, &c.] The ſeventh-day ſabbaths, which were of his appointing, and ſacred to his ſervice and worſhip; on which, when any of the feaſts fell, did not hinder the obſervance of them, or the offering of the ſeveral ſacrifices on them; nor were thoſe of the ſabbath to be omitted on the account of them: and beſide your gifts; either of the whole congregation, or of a private perſon, which they thought well to give of their own good-will on theſe feſtivals, over and above the ſacrifices enjoined: and beſide all your vows, and beſide all your free-will-offerings, which ye give unto the Lord; which ſeem to explain what is meant before by gifts.

℣. 39. Alſo in the 15th day of the 7th month, &c.] The month Tiſri or September, the ſame month, and the ſame day of the month before obſerved; only another end and uſe of this feaſt is remarked, which was to give thanks for the fruits of the earth gathered in, as follows: when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land; the barley, wheat, oil and wine, and all others, this being now autumn, when the ſeveral fruits were ripe and gathered: ye ſhall keep a feaſt unto the Lord ſeven days; not different from that before mentioned, but the ſame, one deſign of which is here ſuggeſted, to give thanks for the fruits of the earth: hence this feaſt is ſometimes called the feaſt of ingathering, Exod. xxiii. 16. and xxxiv. 22. as another uſe of it is after mentioned, to commemorate the children of Iſrael dwelling in booths in the wilderneſs: on the firſt day ſhall be a ſabbath, and on the 8th day ſhall be a ſabbath; becauſe, on both there was a ceſſation from ſervile work, ℣. 35, 36.

℣. 40. And ye ſhall take you the boughs of goodly trees, &c.] Which the three Targums interpret, of citrons; and ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra; and the Jews are ſo tenacious of obſerving this, that in thoſe countries where this fruit grows not, they will ſend for it from Spain, where there is plenty of it: the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, ye ſhall take of yours; ſuggeſting theſe boughs muſt be their own, or the bundle of them, with others they call the Lulab, muſt be their own property, and not another's; though it is ſaid[u], if it is a gift it will do, even though it is given on condition to be returned again: branches of palm-trees; which were very common in the land of Judea, and eſpecially about Jericho; ſee John xii. 13. the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem call them Lulabs, which is the name the Jews give to the whole bundle they carried in their hands on this day: and the boughs of thick trees; which the Targum and Jewiſh writers in general underſtand of myrtles, being full of branches and leaves: and willows of the brook; a ſort of trees which delight to grow by brooks and rills of water: theſe, according to the Jewiſh writers, were not taken to make their booths of, though that ſeems to be the uſe of them, from Neh. viii. 15, 16. but to tye up in bundles, and carry in their hands; the citron in their left hand, and a bundle made of the other three ſorts of boughs of trees in the right hand, which they called the Lulab: and ye ſhall rejoice before the Lord your God ſeven days; becauſe of the bleſſings of his goodneſs beſtowed upon them in the plentiful harveſt and vintage they had been favoured with, and in remembrance of paſt mercies, ſhewed to their fathers in the wilderneſs, giving them food and drink, and guiding and protecting them with the pillar of cloud and fire; and at the ſame time alſo, thankful for the different circumſtances they were in, having cities, towns, and houſes to dwell in, and fields and vineyards to poſſeſs, when their fathers lived in a wilderneſs for forty years together; and eſpecially ſuch of them expreſſed their joy before the Lord, who had any knowledge of this being a type of the Meſſiah tabernacling in human nature, they had the promiſe of, to be their ſpiritual redeemer and Saviour: theſe ſeven days are kept by the Jews now, chiefly in carnal mirth, and ſo for ages paſt, as by carrying the above boughs in their hands, and going round about the altar with them, and ſhaking them and crying Hoſanna, and by making uſe of all ſorts of muſic, vocal and inſtrumental, piping, dancing, leaping, ſkipping, and various geſtures, even by perſons of the higheſt rank, and of the greateſt character for ſobriety[w]; and particularly by fetching water from Siloah, when in their own land, and pouring it with wine upon the altar, which was attended with ſuch expreſſions of joy, that it is ſaid, that he who never ſaw the rejoicing of drawing of water, never ſaw any rejoicing in his life[x]: the Jews give this reaſon of the ceremony, becauſe, at this feaſt was the time of the rains, ſee the Targum of Jonathan on ℣. 16. and therefore the holy bleſſed God ſaid, pour water before me, that the rains of the year may be bleſſed unto you[y]; but others have thought there was ſomething more myſterious in it, and that that it had reſpect to the pouring out of the holy ghoſt; for, they ſay [z], the place of drawing water was ſo called, becauſe they drew the holy gheſt, as it is ſaid, ye ſhall draw water with joy out of the wells of ſalvation, Iſ xii. 3. to this our Lord is thought to allude, John vii. 37, 38. ſee the note there: ſome of the ceremonies uſed at this feaſt have been imitated by the Heathens: Strabo [a] ſays, the carrying branches of trees, dances, and ſacrifices were common to the gods, and particularly to Bacchus; and there was ſuch a likeneſs between theſe and the rites of Bacchus, that Plutarch [b] thought the Jews at this time, kept two feaſts to the honour of him; whereas, as biſhop Patrick obſerves, the prophane Bacchanalia of the Gentiles were only a corruption of this feſtival.

[u] Miſn. Succah, c. 3. §. 13. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. R. Alphes, par. 1. Succah, c. 2. fol. 376. 1. Maimon Hilchot Lulab, c. 7. §. 10. c. 13, &c. 8 §. 12, 13, 14, 15. [w] Miſn. Succah, c. 5. §. 1. 4. [y] R. Alphes, par. 1. Roſhhaſhanah, c. 1. fol 346. 2.

℣. 41. And ye ſhall keep it a feaſt unto the Lord ſeven days in the year, &c.] Every year it was to be kept for the ſpace of ſeven days, beginning on the 15th and ending on the 22d of the month Tiſri or September: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever in your generations; until the Meſſiah ſhould come and tabernacle among men, the ſubſtance of this ſhadow, on whoſe coming it was to flee away: ye ſhall celebrate it in the ſeventh month; which is repeated for the confirmation of it, and that no miſtake might be made.

℣. 42. Ye ſhall dwell in booths ſeven days, &c.] So that it ſeems they were not obliged to dwell in them on the eighth day, which was an holy convocation, a ſabbath in which no ſervile work was to be done as the firſt, ℣. 36, 39. The 8th day was a day by itſelf, a ſort of an appendage to the feaſt of tabernacles, when they went into their houſes again, and kept it as an holy day; and perhaps principally in giving thanks for the ingathering of the fruits of the earth, to which this ſeems to be appropriated from ℣. 39. According to the Jewiſh writers, they did not go out of their booths until they had dined in them on this day; and as they went out uſed to ſay, "may it be the will "of God that we may be worthy the next year to "dwell in the booth of Leviathan [c];" that is, to feaſt with the Meſſiah in the world to come. And to thoſe days the Jews have added a ninth, which they call the joy of the law, and which they keep for joy of having finiſhed the reading of the law; which being divided into as many ſections or leſſons as weeks in the year, were ſo ordered to be read as to be finiſhed at this time [d]: all that are Iſraelites born ſhall dwell in booths; the Targum of Jonathan is, "all the males in Iſrael, and even "the little ones, that don't need their mothers, ſit "in the ſhades bleſſing their creator, when they "enter there." And, according to the Miſnah [e], women, ſervants and little ones are free from the booths (i. e. are not obliged to dwell in one) but a little one, who has no need of its mother, is obliged to dwell in the booths: and elſewhere it is ſaid, that ſick perſons, and ſuch as wait upon them, are not obliged, nor meſſengers upon any buſineſs, nor travellers and watchmen in cities, and keepers of gardens and orchards; if ſuch travel, or keep watch in the day, they are obliged to be in them at night, and if in the night, then they are to dwell in them in the day [f]. Jarchi ſays, that every one born in Iſrael comprehends proſelytes, who were bound by this law.

℣. 43. That your generations may know that I made the children of Iſrael to dwell in booths, &c.] Which by the providence of God the Iſraelites were obliged to make for themſelves to dwell in: when I brought them out of the land of Egypt; for the very firſt place they came to, when they departed from thence, was called Succoth, from the booths they there built: I am the Lord your God; who brought them out of Egypt, made them to dwell in booths in the wilderneſs, and enjoined them the obſervance of the feaſt of tabernacles in memory of it, in which he expected to be obeyed.

℣. 44. And Moſes declared unto the children of Iſrael the feaſts of the Lord.] The ſeveral feaſts before recited, the order of them, the manner of obſerving them, and the time.

CHAP. XXIV.

THIS chapter treats of the oil for the lamps, and the ordering of them, ℣. 1—4. of the making of the ſhew-bread-cakes, and the ſetting of them on the table, ℣. 5—9. and an Iſraelite having blaſphemed the name of the Lord, and enquiry being made what ſhould be done to him, he, and ſo any other perſon guilty of the ſame, is ordered to be ſtoned to death, ℣. 10—16. on occaſion of which ſeveral laws are repeated concerning killing a man or a beaſt, or doing injury to any man, ℣. 17—23.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After he had delivered to him the laws concerning the purity of the prieſts, and the perfection of the ſacrifices they were to offer, and concering the feaſts the people were to keep, he ſpoke to Moſes of ſome other things which concerned both people and prieſts: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Command the children of Iſrael, &c.] Moſes was the chief magiſtrate under God, and being clothed with authority from him, had power to command the children of Iſrael to do what the Lord required of them: that they bring unto thee pure oil olive, beaten, for the light; this was to be at the public expence, and it belonged to the community to ſupply the prieſts with oil for the light of the candleſtick in the temple, Exod. xxv. 6. and this oil was not to be any ſort of oil, as train-oil, or oil of nuts, almonds, &c. but oil of olives, and not any ſort of that, but the pureſt, which was the firſt that was taken from them; it ſeems there were three ſorts, the firſt of which was pure, and this beaten in a mortar, and not ground in a mill; ſee the note on Exod. xxvii. 20: to cauſe the lamps to burn continually; the lamps in the golden candleſtick, which were ſeven, Exod. xxv. 37. or the lamp in the ſingular number, as it is in the original text; the weſtern lamp, which is ſaid to be always kept lighted, from which the reſt were lighted when out; though the oil was undoubtedly for the ſupply of the lamps, that they might burn always night and day; or from night to night, as Jarchi; and both on ſabbath-days and working-days, as the Targum of Jonathan.

℣. 3. Without the vail of the teſtimony, &c.] That is, on the outſide of the vail which divided between the holy and holy of holies, and which was

[z] T. Hieroſ. Succah, fol. 55. 1.
[a] Geograph. l. 10. p. 322.
[b] Sympoſ. l. 1. prob. 3.
[c] Lebuſh, par 2. c. 668. §. 5
[d] Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 27. Leo Modena's Hiſtory of the Rites of the Jews, par. 3. c. 7. §. 6.
[e] Miſn. Succah, c. 2. §. 6.
[f] R. Alphes, par. 1. Succah, c. 2. fol. 374. 2. 375. 1.

was before the ark in which the teſtimony or law was: in the tabernacle of the congregation; which the apoſtle calls the firſt, namely, the holy place in which the candleſtick, with its lamps, ſtood, Heb ix. 2: ſhall Aaron order it from the evening unto the morning, before the Lord continually; that is, the lamp or lamps, or candleſtick, in which they were, or the light of them; his buſineſs was, and ſo every prieſt's that ſucceeded him, to ſupply the lamps with oil, to dreſs, trim and ſnuff them, that they might burn clear, and burn always, and that before the Lord, in the preſence of the Lord: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever in your generations; until the Meſſiah ſhould come, the true light, which would put out all ſuch typical ones, and by his goſpel ſpread light in all his churches throughout the world; ſee the notes on Exod. xxvii. 20, 21.

℣. 4. He ſhall order the lamps on the pure candleſtick, &c.] So called, as Jarchi ſuggeſts, for theſe two reaſons, partly becauſe it was made of pure gold, and partly becauſe it was to be kept pure and clean, and free from aſhes, by the prieſt; ſee Exod. xxv. 30: before the Lord continually; which both reſpects the ſituation of the candleſtick, and the work about it, which Aaron was to do continually before and in the preſence of the Lord. Jarchi thinks this ordering reſpects the meaſure of oil for every night, which he ſays, according to the wiſe men, was half a log for every lamp, which was about a quarter of a pint of oil.

℣. 5. And thou ſhall take fine flour, &c.] Of wheat, and the fineſt of it: and take 12 cakes thereof; anſwerable to the 12 tribes, as the Targum of Jonathan, which were typical of the ſpiritual Iſrael of God: two tenth-deals ſhall be in one cake; that is, two tenth parts of an ephah, which were two omers, one of which was as much as a man could eat in one day of the manna; ſo that one of theſe cakes was as much as two men could eat of bread in one day; each cake was 10 hands breadth long, 5 broad, and 7 fingers its horns, or was ſo high [g].

℣. 6. And thou ſhall ſet them in two rows, &c.] The 12 cakes: ſix on a row; not by the ſide of each other, but ſix upon one another: upon the pure table; the ſhew-bread table, ſo called becauſe overlaid with pure gold, and kept clean and bright, Exod. xxv. 24: before the Lord; for this ſtood in the holy place, in the ſame place as the candleſtick did, which has the ſame poſition, ℣. 4. of the myſtical and typical ſenſe of theſe cakes, ſee the note on Exod. xxv. 30.

℣. 7. And thou ſhall put pure frankincenſe upon each row, &c.] Two cups of frankincenſe, in each of which was an handful of it, and which were ſet by each row of the cakes, as Jarchi obſerves: that it may be on the bread for a memorial; or for the bread, inſtead of it, for a memorial of it; that being to be eat by the prieſts, and this to be burned on the altar to the Lord, as follows: even an offering made by fire unto the Lord; not the bread that was after a time taken away, and eaten by the prieſts, but the frankincenſe.

℣. 8. Every ſabbath he ſhall ſet it in order before the Lord continually, &c.] That is, the prieſt or prieſts then miniſtring, who ſhould bring new cakes and place them in the above order, having removed the old ones, which was done in this manner; four prieſts went in, two had in their hands the two rows (of bread), and two had in their hands two cups (of frankincenſe); four went before theſe, two to take away the two rows (of the old bread), and two to take away the two cups (of frankincenſe); and they that carried in ſtood in the north, and their faces to the ſouth; and they that brought out ſtood in the ſouth, and their faces to the north; theſe drew away (the old bread) and they put them (the new), and the hand of the one was over againſt the hand of the other, as it is ſaid, before me continually, Exod. xxv. 30 [h]. that is, at the ſame time the hands of the one were employed in taking away, the hands of the other were employed in ſetting on; ſo that there was always bread upon the table: being taken from the children of Iſrael by an everlaſting covenant; God requiring it of them, and they agreeing to give it, as they did, either in meal or in money; for this was at the expence of the community.

℣. 9. And it ſhall be Aaron's and his ſons, &c.] The twelve cakes of the old bread, when taken off the ſhew-bread-table; theſe were divided between the courſes of the prieſts that carried in and brought out; and the high-prieſt had half from each courſe, ſo that the half was for Aaron or the high-prieſt, and the other half for his ſons, or the prieſts that miniſtred [i]: and they ſhall eat it in the holy place; in the tabernacle or ſome court of it, and not in their own houſes: it is ſaid the ſhew-bread was not eaten ſooner than the 9th day, nor after the 11th; How? it was baked on the evening of the ſabbath, and it was eaten on the ſabbath, the 9th day; if a feaſt day happened to be on the eve of the ſabbath it was eaten on the 10th; if the two feaſt days of the beginning of the year ſo fell, it was eaten on the 11th day [k]: the reaſon why it was only eaten in the holy place is, for it is moſt holy unto him; it was one of the moſt holy things, which were only to be eaten by males, and in the ſanctuary; not as the light holy things, which were eaten in the houſes and families of the prieſts, and by their wives and daughters alſo: of the offerings of the Lord made by fire, by a perpetual ſtatute; not that the bread was a burnt-offering, but the frankincenſe upon it, or by it, and ſo having a connexion with it, the whole is ſaid to be an offering by fire: the one was given to the prieſts of the Lord to eat, and the other was conſumed on the altar; and both were an offering to the Lord; and the frankincenſe being offered by fire unto the Lord, inſtead of the bread, it was reckoned as if that was ſo offered.

℣. 10. And the ſon of an Iſraeliteſh woman, &c.] Whoſe name, and the name of his mother, are afterwards given: whoſe father was an Egyptian; Jarchi ſays this is the Egyptian whom Moſes ſlew, Exod. ii. 12. and ſo others in Abendana: went out among the children of Iſrael; went out of Egypt with them, according to the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo was one of the mixt multitude which came from thence with them, which is not improbable; ſome ſay he went out of Moſes's court of judicature; but it is more likely that the meaning is, he went out of his tent, ſo Aben Ezra, into the midſt of the camp, to claim his rank and place among the people of Iſrael; though the Jewiſh writers, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra, take this phraſe, among the children of Iſrael, to ſignify that he was a proſelyte, and became a Jew, or had embraced the Jewiſh religion in all reſpects: and this ſon of the Iſraeliteſh

[g] Menachot, c. 11. §. 4.
[h] Ibid. §. 7.
[i] Maimon. Hilchot Tamidin, c. 4. §. 12, 14.
[k] Menachot, c. 11. §. 9.

tiſh woman, and a man of Iſrael ſtrove together in the camp; which man of Iſrael, according to the Targum of Jonathan, was of the tribe of Dan, as was the mother of the man he ſtrove with; what they ſtrove about, is not eaſy to ſay; Aben Ezra ſuggeſts, becauſe this ſtands connected with the above laws, as if this man had ſaid ſome things in a reviling way about the ſhew-bread, the oil, and the offerings, and ſo a diſpute aroſe between them, concerning them; but Jarchi ſays, it was about the buſineſs of the camp, and it is more commonly received, that this man claimed a place to fix his tent on in the tribe of Dan, in right of his mother; but the other urged, that the order of fixing tents was according to the genealogies, and with the enſigns of their father's houſe, and therefore he had no right to rank with them, his father being an Egyptian, and perhaps, from words they came to blows, ſee Exod. xxi. 22. though the Jewiſh writers underſtand it, of their contending, at leaſt of its iſſuing in a judiciary way before a court of judicature: ſo it is ſaid, when Iſrael dwelt in the wilderneſs, he (the ſon of the Egyptian) ſought to ſpread his tent in the midſt of the tribe of Dan, and they would not ſuffer it, becauſe the ranks of the children of Iſrael were, every man according to his rank, with the enſigns according to the genealogy of their fathers; and they began and contended in the camp, wherefore they went into the court of judicature, the ſon of the woman of the daughter of Iſrael, and the man, a ſon of Iſrael, who was of the tribe of Dan [c].

℣. 11. And the Iſraelitiſh woman's ſon blaſphemed the name of the Lord, and curſed, &c.] As they were ſtriving together, or when the trial was over, he being caſt, fell into outragious blaſphemies againſt God, who made ſuch laws for the civil polity of Iſrael, and curſed the judges that had given ſentence againſt him; ſo the above Targum; and ſo the Jews generally underſtand by the name blaſphemed, the name Jehovah, which he ſpake out plainly, and which, they ſay, is ineffable, and ought not to be pronounced but by the high-prieſt in the ſanctuary; but this man expreſſed it in its proper ſound, and made uſe of it to curſe the man that ſtrove with him, or the judge that judged him; ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah [d], "a blaſphemer "is not guilty until he expreſſes the name;" but it undoubtedly means blaſpheming God himſelf by whatſoever name: and they brought him unto Moſes; having heard his blaſphemy, to charge him with it before him, or in order to have due puniſhment inflicted on him: as to the matter of conteſt between him and the Iſraelite, that had been decided in a leſſer court of judicature, ſuch an one as had been ſet up by the advice of Jethro; but though there was full proof of his blaſphemy and curſing, which perhaps were expreſſed in open court; they might not know what puniſhment to inflict upon him for ſo horrid a crime, of which, perhaps they had never had an inſtance before, and therefore ſent him to Moſes, to whom the hearing and deciſion of weighty matters belonged; ſee Exod. xviii. 22. and his mother's name was Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan; which is obſerved, as it ſhould ſeem, to ſhew in what tribe this affair happened, and what the quarrel was firſt about, even a place and rank in this tribe.

℣. 12. And they put him in ward, &c.] In ſome priſon, a place known in the camp, as Aben Ezra obſerves: that the mind of the Lord might be ſhewed them; for, though this was a breach of the third command, in which God declares he would not hold ſuch an one guiltleſs; yet no particular puniſhment being expreſſed, it was not a clear caſe whether the Lord would puniſh for it himſelf, by an immediate ſtroke of his hand, or whether by the civil magiſtrate; and if by the latter, in what manner; for though it might be concluded without any heſitation, that he was worthy of death, ſince curſing father or mother was death, Exod. xxi. 17. Lev. xx. 9. and much more blaſpheming God, yet what death to put him to they might be at a loſs about; or if that was underſtood of ſtoning, they might think this deſerved a ſorer puniſhment, and therefore conſulted God about it.

℣. 13. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] From off the mercy-ſeat in the holy of holies, where he had promiſed to meet him and commune with him about any thing he ſhould enquire of him, as he did at this time: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 14. Bring forth him that hath curſed, without the camp, &c.] To ſhew that he had no part nor lot in Iſrael, and that he was unworthy to be a member of their civil community, or of their church-ſtate; and beſides, the place of ſtoning, or where malefactors ſuffered any kind of death, was without the camp, as afterwards without the city, ſee Heb. xiii. 12, 13. let all that heard him lay their hands upon his head; the Targum of Jonathan adds, "and the judges;" ſo Jarchi remarks, that they that heard him are the witneſſes, and the word all comprehends the judges: Maimonides ſays [e] the ſame, and obſerves that hands were laid on no malefactor but the blaſphemer; and this was done to ſhew that the one had bore a faithful teſtimony, and the other had pronounced a righteous ſentence on him; and that he had brought this guilt and puniſhment upon himſelf by his ſin; wherefore it was uſual for them to ſay, as the ſame writers obſerve, "thy blood be upon thine own head, and "we not puniſhed for thy death, which thou haſt "been the cauſe of to thyſelf:" and let all the congregation ſtone him; which Aben Ezra interprets, of the great men of Iſrael; nor can it be thought that every individual of the people could caſt a ſtone at him, but it was to be done by ſome of them, in the preſence of them all, or as many as could conveniently get together to behold it; and this was done to ſhew their deteſtation of the ſin, and to deter from the commiſſion of it: it was the ſame kind of puniſhment that was ordered to be inflicted on him that curſed his father or mother, ch. xx. 9. God the God of mercy requiring no ſorer puniſhment, though it deſerved a greater, for ſuch a ſin againſt himſelf, than againſt a common parent.

℣. 15. And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] On this occaſion, and give them ſome laws and rules concerning the above affair, and other things: ſaying, whoſoever curſeth his God ſhall bear his ſin; which ſome underſtand, of any one of another nation, that curſed the God he uſed to ſerve in his own country; but it can hardly be thought that a law ſhould be made by the one only living and true God, to preſerve the honour and credit of falſe gods, when he is ſo jealous of his

[c] Targum Jon. in loc. [d] Sanhedrin, c. 7. §. 5. [e] Hilchot Obede Cochabim, c. 2. §. 10.

his own glory; and those are spoken of in scripture with the greatest contempt, as dunghil-deities, and are actually cursed, Jer. x. 11. but they are rather to be interpreted of judges and all civil magistrates, who, as Aben Ezra observes, are sometimes called Elohim or gods, Ps. lxxxii. 1, 6. and the rather, as it is probable this man had cursed his judges, and so this is a distinct sin from what follows; and not only the manner of expressing it, but the punishment of it seem to be different; for the phrase to bear his sin, is used where the punishment is not expressly declared, and is by Jarchi and others interpreted of cutting off from his people, but in what way is not certain; whereas the punishment of a blasphemer of God is before and after clearly expressed; see ch. xx. 19.

℣. 16. And he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, &c.] Or, but he that blasphemeth, &c. from whence the Jews gather, that the name Jehovah must be expressed, or it is no blasphemy; so Jarchi; but it is not bare using or expressing the word Jehovah that is blasphemy, but speaking ill and contemptuously of God, with respect to any of his names, titles, and epithets, or of any of his perfections, ways, and works: he shall surely be put to death; no mercy shall be shewn him, no reprieve or pardon granted him: hence it is said [f], there is no atonement for it, by repentance, or chastisements, or the day of atonement: so blasphemy against the holy Ghost is not forgiven, neither in this world nor in that which is to come, Matt. xii. 31, 32. and all the congregation shall certainly stone him; shall have no pity on him, nor spare him, but stone him till he dies: as well the stranger, as he that is born in the land, when he blasphemeth the name of the Lord, shall be put to death; even a proselyte of the gate, a Gentile that sojourned among them, uncircumcised, and did not profess the Jewish religion, as well as a proselyte of righteousness, and an Israelite born; yet, if he blasphemed the God of Israel, was to lose his life without any mercy shewn him.

℣. 17. And he that killeth any man shall surely be put to death.] With the sword, as the Targum of Jonathan adds; which restrains it to any man of the children of Israel, but wrongly; for the original law respects any man whatever, Gen. ix. 6. and so it does here; see the note on Exod. xxi. 12.

℣. 18. And he that killeth a beast shall make it good, &c.] Pay for it, give the value of it, or another as good as that instead of it, as follows: beast for beast; or soul for soul; life for life, that is, a living one for that the life of which is taken away, and one every way as good as that.

℣. 19. And if a man cause a blemish in his neighbour, &c.] Does him any hurt or mischief, causes any mutilation or deformity in him by striking him: as he hath done, so shall it be done unto him; not that a like damage or hurt should be done to him, but that he should make satisfaction for it in a pecuniary way; pay for the cure of him, and for loss of time, and in consideration of the pain he has endured, and the shame or disgrace brought on him by the deformity or mutilation, or for whatever loss he may sustain thereby; see the notes on Exod. xxi. 18, 19.

℣. 20. Breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, &c.] Which is not to be taken strictly or literally, but for the price or value of those, which is to be given in a pecuniary way; see the note on Exod. xxi. 24, 25. as he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him; unless he gives satisfaction, and pays a valuable consideration for it.

℣. 21. And he that killeth a beast, he shall restore it, &c.] The same as in ℣. 18. which is repeated for the confirmation of it, and that it might be observed, though Jarchi takes it to be a different law; before, he says, it speaks of him that kills a beast, here of him that makes any wound or bruise in it, which he must make good; and it must be allowed that the manner of expression is different; there it is, he that smites the soul of a beast so that it dies, here only he that smites a beast, though it dies not, yet having some damage done it, satisfaction must be made: and he that killeth a man, he shall be put to death; or he that smites a man, though he does not kill him, as Jarchi observes, only makes a wound or bruise in him, because it is not said, the soul of a man, as before; but such damages did not require death, but satisfaction in another way, as in ℣. 19.

℣. 22. Ye shall have one manner of law, &c.] Respecting the above things, blaspheming of the name of God, taking away the life of man, or of any beast, and of doing damage to either: as well for the stranger as for one of your own country; the above laws were binding upon proselytes as well as Israelites, and proselytes of the gate as well as proselytes of righteousness, though the Jews commonly restrain it to the latter: for I am the Lord your God; whose name is holy and reverend, and ought not to be blasphemed; and who is the maker and preserver of man and beast, and made these laws respecting them, and expected they should be obeyed, especially by the children of Israel, whose covenant-God and father he was, and they under the greatest obligation to serve and obey him.

℣. 23. And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, &c.] As the Lord had commanded him: that they should bring forth him that had cursed, out of the camp, and stone him with stones; which were the instructions God had given to Moses upon enquiring his mind and will about this matter: and the children of Israel did as the Lord commanded Moses; they took the blasphemer, and led him out of the camp, put their hands on him, and stoned him with stones till he died.

[f] R. Alphes, par. 1. Yoma, c. 1. fol. 261. 1.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXV.

IN this chapter the Iſraelites are directed, when come into the land of Canaan, to obſerve every 7th year as a ſabbatical year, in which there was to be no tillage of the land, and yet there would be a ſufficiency for man and beaſt, ℣. 1—7. and every fiftieth year as a year of jubilee, in which alſo there was to be no tillage of the land, and every man was to return to his poſſeſſion or eſtate, which had been ſold to another any time before this, ℣. 8—17. and a promiſe of ſafety and plenty in the ſeventh year, is made to encourage the obſervance of it, ℣. 18—22. and ſeveral laws and rules are delivered out concerning the ſale of lands, the redemption of them, and their return to their original owner in the year of jubilee, ℣. 23—28. and the ſale of houſes, and the redemption of them, and the difference between thoſe in walled cities and thoſe in villages, with reſpect thereunto, ℣. 29, 30, 31. and alſo concerning the houſes of the cities of the Levites, and the fields of the ſuburbs of them, ℣. 32, 33, 34. to which are added ſome inſtructions about relieving decayed perſons, and lending and giving to them, without taking uſury of them, ℣. 34—38. and other laws concerning the releaſe of ſuch Iſraelites as had ſold themſelves for ſervants to the Iſraelites, in the year of jubilee, ſince none but heathens were to be bondmen and bondmaids for ever, ℣. 39—46. and of ſuch who were ſold to proſelytes, ℣. 47—55.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes in mount Sinai, &c.] Not when Moſes was with the Lord on that mount forty days, but after he came down from thence, even after the tabernacle was ſet up, while the children of Iſrael were encamped about that mountain, and before they took their journey from thence; for they continued ſome time in the wilderneſs of Sinai, and here it was the Lord ſpoke to Moſes; for the words may be rendered by or near mount Sinai [g]; and ſo Joſephus [h] ſays, the following laws were delivered to Moſes, when Iſrael was encamped under mount Sinai: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, &c.] What follows, being what the whole body of the people would be under obligation to obſerve, and therefore muſt be delivered to them all, at leaſt to the heads and elders of the people, and by them to the reſt: when ye come into the land which I give you; the land of Canaan, and until they came thither, the following law concerning the ſabbatical year could not take place; and as Maimonides [i] ſays, it was only uſed in the land of Iſrael, and no where elſe, according to this text, and that both before and after the temple was built: then ſhall the land keep a ſabbath unto the Lord; a reſt from tillage, as it is afterwards explained; and this being according to the will of God, when obſerved would be to his honour and glory, and ſhew that he was the proprietor of the land; and that the Iſraelites held it under him by this tenure, that every ſeventh year they ſhould let it reſt, which would be for the benefit of the land, and preſerve it from being impoveriſhed by continual uſage; and hereby they might learn to depend on the providence of God, and to obſerve that all increaſe is from him; and to conſider the ſtraits and difficulties the poor live in continually, as they in this ſeventh year; and by this means they would be at leiſure to have an opportunity of reading the law, as they did at this time, Deut. xxxi. 10—13. and of meditating upon it, and of giving themſelves up to religious exerciſes, as well as by it they might be led to the typical uſe of it, to look for and expect that ſabbatiſm or reſt, which remains for the people of God. And now this law did not take place as ſoon as they came into the land, for it was to be ſown ſix years, and then was the year of reſt; and indeed not till after Joſhua had ſubdued the whole land, which was ſeven years a doing; nor till they were quite ſettled, and it was divided among them, and every man had his field and vineyard apart, which this law ſuppoſes; wherefore the Jewiſh writers [k] ſay, they were not bound to tithes until the 14th year, and from thence they began to reckon the ſabbatical year; and the 21ſt year they made a ſabbatical year, and the 64th a jubilee, which they make to be the firſt that were kept; and they reckoned this year to commence, not on the firſt of Niſan or March, which was the beginning of the year for eccleſiaſtical things, but on the firſt of Tiſri or September, when the harveſt, and all the fruits of the earth were gathered in; and when on other years they uſed to proceed to ſowing the next month, but were forbid on this; and ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah [l], the firſt of Tiſri is the beginning of the year for the ſabbatical and jubilee years.

℣. 3. Six years thou ſhalt ſow thy field, &c.] Under which is comprehended every thing relating to agriculture, both before and after ſowing, as dunging the land, plowing and harrowing it, treading the corn, reaping and gathering it in; ſee Exod. xxiii. 10: and ſix years thou ſhalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruit thereof; which is not to be reſtrained to vineyards only, but to be extended to olive-yards, orchards and gardens, and to the planting and cultivating of them, and gathering in the fruits of them.

℣. 4. But in the ſeventh year ſhall be a ſabbath of reſt unto the land, &c.] From all tillage of it, from planting and cultivating any ſort of trees in it; and even from digging pits, ditches and caves, as ſay the Jewiſh writers [m]: and this was typical of that reſt which believers enter into under the goſpel-diſpenſation, and of the reſt in the new Jeruſalem-ſtate, and eſpecially in the ultimate glory; not only from the labours of the body, but of the mind through ſin, ſatan, doubts and fears, and through conflicts with various enemies, and when even all ſpiritual labours and ſervices will be at an end but that of praiſe: a ſabbath for the Lord; for his honour and glory, to aſcertain his property in the land, to ſhew the power of his providence, and diſplay his goodneſs in his care of all creatures, without any means uſed by them: thou ſhalt neither ſow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard; under which are comprehended all acts of agriculture, which reſpect the cultivation of vines, olives, figs, &c.

[g] בהר apud ſeu juxta montem, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth, Patrick, &c. [h] Antiq. l. 3. c. 12. §. 3. [i] Hilchot Shemitah Vejobel, c. 4. §. 25. [k] Torat Cohenim apud Yalkut, par. 1, fol. 191. 1. Maimon. ut ſupra, c. 10. §. 2. [l] Roſhhaſhanah, c. 1. §. 1. [m] Torat Cohenim, ut ſupra.

&c. and according to the Miſnah [n], there were ſome inſtruments which it was not lawful to ſell to an artificer in the ſeventh year, ſuch as a plow, with all belonging to it, a yoke, a fan, a ſpade, but he may ſell him a ſcythe, or a ſickle, or a cart, and all its inſtruments; and which the commentators [o] interpret of one that is ſuſpected of working in that year; the houſe of Shammai ſay, an heifer that plowed might not be ſold that year.

℣. 5. That which groweth of its own accord of thy harveſt thou ſhalt not reap, &c.] That which ſprung up of itſelf from grains of corn, ſhed in the harveſt of the preceding year, without any plowing or ſowing; he might reap it, but not as at other times, the whole of it, and gather it as his own property, but only ſomewhat of it in common with others for his preſent uſe: neither gather the grapes of thy vine undreſſed; which was on this year forbid to be dreſſed; the grapes of which he might gather in common with others, but not as in other years, all of them, and as peculiarly his own: the words may be rendered, the grapes of thy ſeparations [p]; either ſuch as in other years he uſed to ſeparate for himſelf, and forbid others gathering them, but now made them common; or which he did not labour in the cultivation of, but abſtained from it: for it is a year of reſt unto the land; which is repeated that it may be obſerved.

℣. 6. And the ſabbath of the land ſhall be meat for you, &c.] That is, that which grew up of itſelf out of the land, or on trees, vines, olives, &c. undreſſed, ſhould be the meat or food on which they ſhould live that year; and this comprehends every thing that is fit for food, and alſo for drink, and for anointing, and even for the lighting of lamps, as in the Miſnah [q]: for thee, and for thy ſervant, and for thy maid; the owner of the fields and vineyards, he and his family, wife, children and ſervants might eat of the fruits of them in common with others; for whereas it is elſewhere ſaid, Exod. xxiii. 11. that the poor of thy people may eat, this is obſerved here, leſt any one ſhould think the rich are forbid eating them, as Jarchi remarks: and for thy hired ſervant, and for the ſtranger that ſojourneth with thee; which the ſame writer interprets of Gentiles; the food of this year was common to maſters and ſervants, to rich and poor, to Iſraelites and Gentiles; all had an equal right unto, and ſhare therein; which might be an emblem of the firſt times of the goſpel, in which all things were had in common, and typical of the communion of ſaints in things ſpiritual; in ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt, common to Jews and Gentiles, high and low, bond and free; in the free and full forgiveneſs of ſins by his blood; and in juſtification by his righteouſneſs, which is unto all, and upon all them that believe, for there is no difference; in the participation of faith, and other graces, which are alike precious, and in the enjoyment of promiſes, privileges and ordinances, and even of eternal life itſelf.

℣. 7. And for thy cattle, and for the beaſts that are in thy land, &c.] The former ſignifies tame cattle, ſuch as were kept at home, or in fields, or were uſed in ſervice, and the latter the wild beaſts of the field: ſhall all the increaſe thereof be meat; for the one, and for the other; Jarchi remarks, that all the time a wild beaſt eats of the increaſe of the field, the cattle may be fed at home; but when it ceaſeth to the wild beaſt of the field, then it ceaſeth to the cattle at home: nay, the Jews are ſo ſtrict in this matter, that they ſay that when there is no food for the beaſts in the field, men are obliged to bring out what they have in their houſes [r], ſee Iſ. xi. 6, 7.

℣. 8. And thou ſhalt number ſeven ſabbaths of years unto thee, &c.] Or weeks of years; and there being ſeven days in a week, and a day being put for a year, ſeven weeks of years made 49 years; the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, and Jarchi, interpret it 7 ſhemittas, or ſabbatical years; and a ſabbatical year being every 7th year, made the ſame number; ſeven times ſeven years; or 49 years, as follows: and the ſpace of the ſeven ſabbaths of years ſhall be 49 years; juſt ſuch a ſpace of years there was between each jubilee, which, as afterwards ſaid, was the 50th year; ſo as there were a 7th day-ſabbath, and a 50th day-ſabbath, the day of Pentecoſt, ſo there were a 7th year ſabbath, or ſabbatical year, and a 50th year-ſabbath.

℣. 9. Then ſhalt thou cauſe the trumpet of the jubilee to ſound, &c.] At the end of forty-nine years, or at the beginning of the fiftieth; or the trumpet of a loud ſound; for here the word jubilee is not, which, according to ſome, was ſo called from the peculiar ſound of the trumpet on this day, different from all others; though others, as Ben Melech, think, and the Jews commonly, that it had its name from the trumpet itſelf, which they ſuppoſe was made of a ram's horn, Jobel, in the Arabic language, ſignifying a ram; but the former reaſon is beſt; though perhaps it is beſt of all to derive it from הוֹבִיל to bring back, reſtore, return, becauſe at this time men were returned to their liberty, eſtates and families, as hereafter expreſſed: on the tenth day of the ſeventh month; the month Tiſri or September, the firſt day of which was the beginning of the year for jubilees [s]; for the computation of the jubilee-year was made from the firſt day of the month, though the trumpet was not blown, and the rights of the year did not begin till the tenth, as Maimonides [t] obſerves: in the day of atonement ſhall ye make the trumpet ſound throughout all your land; which day of atonement was on the tenth day of the ſaid month, and a very proper time it was to ſound the trumpet, that after they had been afflicting themſelves, then to have joy and comfort; and when atonement was made for all their ſins, then to hear the joyful ſound; and when it might be preſumed they were in a good diſpoſition to releaſe their ſervants, and reſtore the poor to their poſſeſſions, when they themſelves were favoured with the forgiveneſs of all their ſins. This ſounding was made throughout all the land of Iſrael; throughout all the highways, as Aben Ezra, that all might know the year of jubilee was come; and this was done by the order of the Sanhedrim, as Maimonides [u] ſays, and who alſo obſerves, that from the beginning of the year, to the day of atonement, ſervants were not releaſed to their own houſes, but did not ſerve their maſters, nor were fields returned to their owners; but ſervants eat, and drank, and rejoiced, and wore garlands on their heads; and when the day of atonement came, the Sanhedrim blew the trumpet, and the ſervants were diſmiſſed to their houſes, and fields returned to their owners.

℣.

---

[n] Sheviith, c. 5. §. 6. [o] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [p] עִנְבֵי נְזִירֶךָ uvas tuarum ſeparationum, Pagninus, Montanus; ſo Druſius & Ainſworth. [q] Sheviith, c. 8. §. 2. [r] Maimon. Hilchot Shemitah Vejobel, c. 7. §. 1. [s] Miſn. Roſhhaſhanah, c. 1. §. 1. [t] In Miſn. ib. [u] Hilchot Shemitah Vejobel, c. 10. §. 10, 14.

2

℣. 10. And ye ſhall hallow the 50th year, &c.] The year following the ſeven ſabbaths of years, or 49 years; and which they were to ſanctify by ſeparating it from all others, and devoting it to the uſes it was to be put to, and the ſervices done on it, and by abſtaining from the tillage of the land, ſowing or reaping, and from the cultivation of vines, olives, &c. and proclaim liberty throughout all the land; to ſervants, both to thoſe whoſe ears were bored, and were to ſerve for ever, even unto the year of jubilee, and then be releaſed; and to thoſe whoſe ſix years were not ended, from the time that they were bought; for the jubilee-year put an end to their ſervitude, let the time they had ſerved be what it would; for this year was a general releaſe of ſervants, excepting bond-men and bond-maids, who were never diſcharged; hence called the year of liberty, Ezek. xlvi. 17. and Joſephus [w] ſays, the word jobel or jubilee ſignifies liberty: unto all the inhabitants thereof; that were in ſervitude or poverty, excepting the above mentioned; from hence the Jews gather, that when the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, went into captivity, the jubilees ceaſed [x], ſince all the inhabitants were not then in it; but that is a miſtake, for the jubilees were continued unto the coming of the Meſſiah, and perhaps never omitted but once, in the time of the Babyloniſh captivity: it ſhall be a jubilee unto you; to the Iſraelites, and to them only, as Aben Ezra obſerves; it was a time of joy and gladneſs to them, eſpecially to ſervants, who were now free, and to the poor, who enjoyed their eſtates again: and ye ſhall return every man unto his poſſeſſion; which had been ſold or mortgaged to another, but now reverted to its original owner: and ye ſhall return every man unto his family; who through poverty had ſold himſelf for a ſervant, and had lived in another family. The general deſign of this law was to preſerve the rights of free-born Iſraelites, as to perſon and property, to prevent perpetual ſervitude, and perpetual alienation of their eſtates; to continue families and eſtates as they were originally, that ſome might not become too rich, and others too poor; nor be blended, but that tribes and families might be kept diſtinct until the coming of the Meſſiah, to whom the jubilee had a particular reſpect, and in whom it ceaſed. The liberty proclaimed on this day was typical of that liberty from the bondage of ſin, ſatan, and the law, which Chriſt is the author of, and is proclaimed by him in the goſpel, Gal. v. 1. Iſ. lxi. 1. a liberty of grace and glory, or the glorious liberty of the children of God: returning to poſſeſſions and inheritances, may be an emblem of the enjoyment of the heavenly inheritance by the ſaints; though man by ſin loſt an earthly paradiſe, and came ſhort of the glory of God, yet through Chriſt, his people are reſtored to a better inheritance, an incorruptible one; to which they are begotten by his Spirit, have a right to it through his righteouſneſs, and a meetneſs for it by his grace, and of which the holy Spirit is the earneſt and pledge, and into which Chriſt himſelf will introduce them. And the returning of them to their families, may ſignify the return of God's elect through Chriſt to the family that is named of him; theſe were ſecretly of the family of God from all eternity, being taken into it in the covenant of grace, as well as predeſtinated to the adoption of children; but by the fall, and through a ſtate of nature by it, they became children of wrath, even as others; yet through redemption by Chriſt, and faith in him, they receive the adoption of children, and openly appear to be of the family of God, 2 Cor. vi. 18. Eph. i. 5. and ii. 3. Gal. iv. 5, 6. and iii. 26. John i 12. and all this is proclaimed by the ſound of the goſpel-trumpet, which being a ſound of liberty, peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, ſalvation, and eternal life by Chriſt, is a joyful one, Pſ. lxxxix. 15. where the alluſion ſeems to be to the jubilee-trumpet.

℣. 11. A jubilee ſhall that 50th year be unto you, &c.] Which clearly ſhows, that not the 49th year was the year of jubilee, as many learned men have aſſerted, chiefly induced by this reaſon, becauſe two years would come together in which were no ſowing and reaping; but that God that could cauſe the earth to bring forth fruit for three years, ℣. 21. could make it bring forth enough for four years; and in order to make their ſentiment agree with this paſſage, they are obliged to make the foregoing jubilee one of the fifty, and begin their account from thence; but this could not be done in the firſt account of the jubilee; of the name, ſee the note on ℣. 9: ye ſhall not ſow; in the year of jubilee, which ſhows alſo that this could not be the 49th year, which of courſe being a ſabbatical year, there would be no ſowing, reaping, &c. and ſo this law or inſtruction would be quite needleſs: neither reap that which groweth of itſelf in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undreſſed; as in the ſabbatical year, ℣. 5. ſee the note there; the ſame with reſpect to theſe things being to be obſerved in the year of jubilee, as in that; and ſo Jarchi obſerves, that the ſame that is ſaid of the ſabbatical year, is ſaid of the jubilee, two holy years being found next to one another, the 49th year the ſabbatical year, and the 50th year the jubilee.

℣. 12. For it is the jubilee, it ſhall be holy, &c.] Men being reſtored to their liberty, poſſeſſions and families, it muſt be matter of joy to them, and therefore this year was to be ſeparated from all others, and devoted to the ends and uſes before mentioned; and men were to live upon the ſpontaneous productions of the earth, without any tillage of land, or cultivation of vines, &c. ye ſhall eat the increaſe thereof out of the field; they were not to reap corn, and gather grapes and olives, and bring them into their barns and ſtorehouſes, as in other years; but were to go out every day into their fields, and gather for preſent uſe, and all were common to all ſorts of men, and to cattle, as in the ſabbatical year; ſee the note on ℣. 7.

℣. 13. In the year of this jubilee, &c.] In the beginning of it, as Aben Ezra, though not on the firſt day of Tiſri, but the 10th day, the day of atonement, when the trumpet was blown: ye ſhall return every man unto his poſſeſſion; which is repeated from ℣. 10. the reaſon of which the Jews ſay is to include gifts, and which, according to them, are like ſales, and returned in the year of jubilee; that is, if a man gave his eſtate in poſſeſſion to another, he returned to it, in the year of jubilee, equally, as if he had ſold it; and therefore they obſerve the ſame phraſe is twice uſed by Moſes, to include gifts [y]; but perhaps the truer reaſon is, becauſe this was a ſpecial

[w] Antiq. l. 3. c. 12. §. 3.
[x] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Eracin, c. 8. §. 1.
[y] Miſn. Becorot, c. 8. §. 10. & Bartenora in ib.

ſpecial buſineſs done at this time, and of great importance; the word return being ſo often uſed, may ſerve to confirm the ſenſe of the word jubilee, given in the note on ℣. 9.

℣. 14. And if thou ſell ought unto thy neighbour, &c.] Any eſtate or poſſeſſion, houſe or land, at any time before the year of jubilee: or buyeſt ought of thy neighbour's hand; of moveable goods, as the Targum of Jonathan interprets it; and ſo other Jewiſh writers [z] reſtrain this to goods which are bought by hand, and delivered from hand to hand; and ſo they think that fields, and ſervants, which they ſay are like to fields, are excluded hereby; but it ſeems to refer to any thing ſaleable, and chiefly to fields and vineyards, as the following verſes ſhew; wherefore Diodorus Siculus, as quoted by Grotius, muſt be miſtaken, when he ſays, it was not counted lawful by the Jews to ſell their inheritance, unleſs he means for ever, ſo indeed they could not: ye ſhall not oppreſs one another; the buyer giving too little, or the ſeller requiring too much; no advantage was to be taken, either of the neceſſity of the one, or the ignorance of the other, but a fair bargain was to be made, and the full value given, neither too much nor too little. The Jews by neighbour underſtand an Iſraelite, and not a Gentile [a]; not that there might be no buying and ſelling at all between Jews and Gentiles, or that the former might oppreſs and defraud the latter, though not an Iſraelite; but lands and inheritances might not be ſold at all to Gentiles, only to Iſraelites.

℣. 15. According to the number of years after the jubilee, thou ſhalt buy of thy neighbour, &c.] That is, reckoning how many years had paſt ſince the laſt jubilee, and how many there were to come to the next, and ſo give as many years purchaſe as were yet to come: and according to the number of years of the fruits he ſhall ſell unto thee; only care was to be taken, that as many years as were ſabbatical ones, which were not years of fruit, ſhould be deducted out of the account by the ſeller; ſince theſe were years the buyer could have no profit by the eſtate, and therefore it was not reaſonable that ſuch years ſhould be reckoned into the purchaſe; and hence the Jewiſh writers gather, that when a man had ſold his field, he could not redeem it in leſs than two years, becauſe a number of years can't be leſs than two, and that if even the buyer agreed to it, it might not be done [b].

℣. 16. According to the multitude of years thou ſhalt increaſe the price thereof, &c.] More was to be aſked and required, and ſhould be given for an eſtate, when, for inſtance, there were 30 years to the year of jubilee, than when there were but 20: and according to the fewneſs of years thou ſhalt diminiſh the price of it; if it wanted but five, or ſix, or ten years unto it, then in proportion, leſs was to be inſiſted upon and given: for according to the number of the years of the fruits doth he ſell unto thee; which alſo muſt be conſidered, how many years of tillage of land, and cultivation of vineyards, &c. there were in the account, and how many ſabbatical years to be deducted; for only according to the number of fruit-years was the eſtate to be valued and ſold.

℣. 17. Ye ſhall not therefore oppreſs one another, &c.] By over or under-rating eſtates: but thou ſhalt fear thy God; and the fear of God being before their eyes, and on their hearts, would preſerve both buyer and ſeller from doing an ill thing, when it was in the power of either, through the neceſſity of the one, or the ignorance of the other, ſee Neh. v. 15: for I am the Lord your God; omniſcient, and knows all that is done in the moſt private and artful manner; and omnipotent and able to puniſh both, which of them either ſhould oppreſs or defraud, ſee 1 Theſſ. iv. 6.

℣. 18. Wherefore ye ſhall do my ſtatutes, and keep my judgments, and do them, &c.] Theſe and all others he enjoined; by which tenure, even obedience to all his commands, moral, ritual and judicial, they were to hold the land of Canaan, and their poſſeſſions in it, which is intended in the next clauſe: and ye ſhall dwell in the land in ſafety; without any fear of enemies, or of the neighbouring nations about them ſeizing upon them, and diſtreſſing them; and Jarchi obſerves, that it was for tranſgreſſing the ſabbatical year that Iſrael was carried captive, which he thinks is intimated in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21. and that the ſeventy years captivity in Babylon were for the ſeventy ſabbatical years that had been neglected.

℣. 19. And the land ſhall yield her fruit, &c.] That is, continually, and even in the ſeventh year, the ſabbath of reſt; for the land, though not manured, plowed and ſowed, nor the vines, olives and fig-trees pruned, yet ſhall yield fruit as in other years, the Iſraelites obſerving the ſtatutes and judgments of God: and ye ſhall eat your fill; feel no want of proviſions, but have fulneſs of every thing as at other times, and never make a ſcanty meal, having ſufficiency and plenty of all things: and dwell therein in ſafety; not fearing enemies, nor being diſturbed by them, nor carried captive.

℣. 20. And ye ſhall ſay, what ſhall ye eat the 7th year? &c.] Such as are of little faith, diſbelieve the promiſe, and diſtruſt the providence of God, and take thought for to-morrow, and indulge an anxiety of mind how they ſhall be provided with food in the ſabbatical year ordered to be obſerved, in which there were to be no tillage of land, nor pruning of trees: behold we ſhall not ſow; that being forbidden: nor gather in our increaſe; neither the barley, nor the wheat, nor the grapes, nor olives, nor figs, into their houſes and barns, to lay up for ſtores, as in other years; though they might go out and gather in for preſent uſe in common with others: now if any ſhould put the above queſtion, as it was very likely ſome would, in ſuch a view of things, the anſwer to it follows.

℣. 21. Then I will command my bleſſing upon you in the 6th year, &c.] Upon their fields, vineyards, and olive-yards, and make them exceeding fruitful, more than in other years; all fruitfulneſs at any time depends upon the bleſſing of God, and follows upon it, but is more viſible and obſervable when there is an exceeding great plenty: and it ſhall bring forth fruit for three years; and thus God bleſſed the 6th year with ſuch a plentiful increaſe as was ſufficient for time to come, until a new crop was gathered in; as he had bleſſed the 6th day with a double portion of manna for the ſupply of the 7th.

℣. 22. And ye ſhall ſow the 8th year, &c.] Sow the land in the 8th year, and likewiſe dreſs their vines, olives, &c. and eat yet of the old fruit; even in the 8th year, of the old fruit of the 6th year, as the Targum of Jonathan adds: until the 9th year; that is, as Jarchi explains it, until the feaſt of tabernacles of the 9th, which was the time that the increaſe of the 8th came into the houſe; for all ſummer

[z] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Bava Metziah, c 4. §. 9. cin, c. 9. §. 1. Maimon. & Bartenora in. ib.

[a] Jarchi in loc.

[b] Miſn. Era-

;

ſummer it was in the field, and in Tiſri or September was the time of gathering it into the houſe; and ſometimes it was neceſſary to provide for four years on the 6th, which was before the ſabbatical year the 7th, for they ceaſed from tilling the ground two years running, the 7th and the jubilee-year; but this ſcripture is ſaid concerning all the reſt of the ſabbatical years: theſe encouraging promiſes, one would have thought, would have been placed more naturally after the account of the ſabbatical year that followed, ℣. 7. but the reaſon of their being inſerted here, ſeems to be, becauſe in the year of jubilee they were neither to ſow nor reap, nor gather in the grapes of the undreſſed vine, as in the ſabbatical year, ℣. 11. wherefore thoſe things are ſaid for encouragement at the one time as at the other; ſince it might eaſily be concluded, that he that could provide for them every ſixth year for three years to come, could once in fifty years provide for four: until her fruits come in, ye ſhall eat of the old ſtore; ſome of which came in in March, as barley, others in May, as the wheat, and others in Auguſt and September, as the grapes, olives, &c. which was the time of ingathering ſeveral fruits of the earth, and of finiſhing the whole.

℣. 23. The land ſhall not be ſold for ever, &c.] That is, the land of Iſrael; the meaning is, any part of it, for that the whole might be ſold or diſpoſed of at once is not to be ſuppoſed, but any one part of it, which was the property of a ſingle man, or belonged to a family; though it might be ſold in caſe of neceſſity, yet not for ever, ſo as never to return to the owner, or his heirs; for if it was ſold for ever it returned in the year of the jubilee: the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan render the word abſolutely, ſimply, properly; a proper abſolute ſale was not to be made, but a conditional one, or for ſo many years, or with a view to its reverſion in the year of Jubilee, and ſo the agreement to be made according to the number of years, as before directed: the word, as Aben Ezra obſerves, ſignifies cutting off, and the ſenſe is, that no land ſhould be ſold entirely, ſo as that the proprietor or his heirs ſhould be wholly cut off from it, or that the entail of it upon the family ſhould be cut off: for the land is mine; as indeed the whole earth is, but the land of Canaan was peculiarly his, which he had choſen above all other lands for the inheritance of his people; out of which he drove the old inhabitants of it for their ſins, and put in his own people to poſſeſs it under him; where he himſelf had his dwelling place, and where he was ſerved and worſhipped, and where the Meſſiah was to be born, and was born, and therefore called Immanuel's land; and which was a figure of the better country, or the heavenly glory and happineſs, which is of God's preparing and giving, and will never be alienated from thoſe whoſe right it is: for ye are ſtrangers and ſojourners with me; as the Gentiles that lived among them were ſtrangers and ſojourners with them, ſo they were with the Lord; he was the original proprietor, they were but tenants at will; though it was both an honour and happineſs to be with him, under any character, to board, and lodge, and dwell with him; and they might well be content to be reckoned not proprietors but ſtrangers and ſojourners, and eſpecially ſuch as had faith and hope in a better inheritance, of which this was only a figure; however, this being their preſent caſe, it was a reaſon good, why they could not for ever diſpoſe of their lands and poſſeſſions any more than a ſojourner or inmate can of a houſe of which he has only a part.

℣. 24. And in all the land of your poſſeſſion, &c.] Which they ſhould poſſeſs in the land of Canaan, whatever part of it any of them ſhould enjoy: ye ſhall grant a redemption for the land; that is, whenever any eſtate in it was ſold through neceſſity, the buyer was obliged to grant a liberty to the ſeller to redeem it when it was in his power to do it, or any of his relations, eſpecially after two years; ſo Jarchi obſerves, he that ſells his poſſeſſion may redeem it after two years, either he himſelf or he that is near a-kin to him, nor can the buyer hinder it; ſee the note on ℣. 15.

℣. 25. If thy brother be waxen poor, &c.] Is brought very low, greatly reduced, and is in mean circumſtances; hence Jarchi ſays, we learn, that no man may ſell his field, unleſs his diſtreſs preſſes him and forces him to it; for, as Maimonides [c] obſerves, a man might not ſell his eſtate to put money into his purſe, or to trade with, or to purchaſe goods, ſervants, and cattle, only food: and hath ſold away ſome of his poſſeſſion; not all of it, as Jarchi remarks; for the way of the earth or cuſtom of the world teaches, that a man ſhould reſerve a field (or a part) for himſelf: and if any of his kin come to redeem it; come to the buyer and propoſe to redeem it, by giving what it was ſold for, or in proportion to the time he had enjoyed it: then ſhall he redeem that which his brother ſold; nor was it in the power of the purchaſer to hinder him, or at his option whether he would ſuffer him to redeem it or no: ſuch an one was an emblem of our goel, our near kinſman and redeemer the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who came in our nature into this world to redeem us, and put us into the poſſeſſion of the heavenly inheritance; nor was it in the power of any to hinder his performance of it, for he is the mighty God, the Lord of Hoſts is his name, Jer. l. 34.

℣. 26. And if the man have none to redeem it, &c.] That is, none of kin that was able or willing to redeem it; otherwiſe no doubt there were perſons in the land able to do it at any time, but none he was in connexion with, or from whom he could expect ſuch a favour: and himſelf be able to redeem it; or if his hand has got, and he has found a ſufficiency for his redemption, as the Targum of Jonathan; not that he has found any thing that was loſt, as Chaſkuni gloſſes it, but by one providence or another, by the bleſſing of God on his trade and buſineſs, is become rich, and it is in the power of his hand to redeem the poſſeſſion he had ſold, he might do it; but, as the ſame writer obſerves, he might not borrow and redeem, but muſt do it with what he had got of his own ſince the time of ſale, and which is alſo the ſenſe of others [d].

℣. 27. Then let him count the years of the ſale thereof, &c.] How many years had paſſed ſince it was ſold, how many it had been in the hands of the purchaſer, and how many were yet to come to the year of the jubilee, by which means the price of redemption might eaſily be ſettled; thus, for inſtance, if the years were alike and there was juſt half the time gone, then half of the price it was ſold at was repaid to the purchaſer; and if not alike, then in proportion to what had paſſed and were to come: and reſtore the overplus unto the man to whom he ſold it; for the years that were yet to come; if, as Jarchi ſays, he has eat of or enjoyed the [c] Hilchot Shemittah Vejobel, c. 11. §. 3.

[d] Miſn. Eracin, c. 9. 1. Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

the fruit of the field three or four years, deduct the price of them from the account, and take the reſt; this is the meaning; and reſtore the overplus, out of the price of the ſale, according to what is eaten, and give it to the buyer: Maimonides [e] explains it thus; that if there were ten years to the year of the jubilee, and the field was ſold for a 100 pieces, if he that bought it has eaten of it three years, then the ſeller that redeems it muſt give him 70 pieces, and he muſt reſtore his field; if he has eaten of it ſix years, he is to give 40 pieces, and the other reſtores him the field: in the Miſnah it is put thus; if he ſell it (his field) to the firſt for 100 pence, and the firſt ſells it to a ſecond for 200, he muſt not reckon but with the firſt, as it is ſaid, unto the man to whom he ſold it: if he ſold it to the firſt for 200, and the firſt ſells it to a ſecond for 100, he ſhall not count but with the laſt, as it is ſaid, to a man, i. e. to the man which is in the midſt of it, or is poſſeſſed of it; nor may he ſell it for a diſtant time, that he may redeem it near, nor when in a bad condition, that he may redeem it when in a good one; nor may he borrow to redeem it, nor redeem it by halves [f]: that he may return to his poſſeſſion; and enjoy it again.

℣. 28. But if he be not able to reſtore it to him, &c.] The overplus, or give him what is in proportion to the time he has had it, and yet to come: then that which is ſold ſhall remain in the hand of him that bought it, until the year of the jubilee; continue in his poſſeſſion, and he ſhall enjoy all the benefit of it till that year comes: and in the jubilee it ſhall go out; out of his hands or poſſeſſion; or he ſhall go out [g], the purchaſer ſhall go out of what he has bought, and ſhall have no more poſſeſſion of it, but it ſhall come into the hands of the ſeller, and that without money, as the Targum of Jonathan adds: and he ſhall return unto his poſſeſſion; the ſeller, and enter upon it and enjoy it as his own property, as before he ſold it.

℣. 29. And if a man ſell a dwelling-houſe in a walled city, &c.] Which was ſo from the days of Joſhua the ſon of Nun, as Jarchi: then he may redeem it within a whole year after it is ſold; any time within the year, he pleaſed, either he or any near of kin to him; and if they would, on the day it was ſold, or any time after within the compaſs of the year, even on the day in which the year ended; in this, ſuch an houſe differed from fields, which could not be redeemed under two years, ſee the note on ℣. 15. within a full year may he redeem it; from the time it was ſold, paying what it was ſold for: this is to be underſtood, Maimonides [h] ſays, of a ſolar year, which conſiſts of 365 days, and within this ſpace of time ſuch an houſe might be redeemed.

℣. 30. And if it be not redeemed within the ſpace of a full year, &c.] Either by the ſeller or any man of kin to him: then the houſe that is in the walled city ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever to him that bought it, throughout his generations; after twelve months were elapſed it was not redeemable by any, but to be held by the purchaſer and his heirs for ever: it ſhall not go out in the jubilee; from the purchaſer or his heirs, to the ſeller or his heirs; for houſes were not like lands, the gift of God, and held under him, but were built by men, and were their abſolute property, and therefore they could diſpoſe of them, and they that bought them could hold them after the above mentioned time; nor was there any danger of confounding tribes and families by retaining them: this law was made to encourage perſons to ſettle in walled towns, to make and keep them populous, and to make owners of them careful not to ſell them: the Jewiſh canon is this; when the day of the 12th month is come, and it (the houſe) is not redeemed, it is abſolutely his, whether he bought it or whether it was given him, as it is ſaid, Lev. xxv. 30. and if in the beginning of the day of the 12th month he (the purchaſer) hides himſelf, that it may be confirmed to him or be his abſolutely; Hillel the elder, ordered that he (the ſeller) ſhould put his money in the chamber (belonging to the Sanhedrim) and break open the door, and go in; and when he would, he (the purchaſer) might come, and take his money [i]; but otherwiſe, if he ſuffers this time to paſs it is irredeemable, nor will the year of jubilee help him: the Jews except the city of Jeruſalem from this law, becauſe, they ſay, that does not belong to any tribe [k].

℣. 31. But the houſes of the villages, which have no walls round about them, &c.] As there were many in the days of Joſhua, the ſcripture ſpeaks of: the Jews ſuppoſe, that ſuch are meant, even though they were afterwards walled: ſhall be counted as the fields of the country; and ſubject to the ſame law as they: they may be redeemed; at any time before the year of jubilee, and if not, then they ſhall go out in the jubilee; to the original owners of them, freely, as Jarchi ſays, without paying any thing for them.

℣. 32. Notwithſtanding the cities of the Levites, &c.] The ſix cities of refuge, and 42 others; theſe and the houſes in them are excepted from the above law, and only they; not ſuch as they might purchaſe elſewhere; wherefore it follows, and the houſes of the cities of their poſſeſſion; which were in cities poſſeſſed by them, and which was their poſſeſſion, and given them as ſuch: may the Levites redeem at any time; they were not reſtrained to a year, as houſes in walled towns, but they might redeem them as they pleaſed or could; and if they did not redeem them within the year, they might redeem them afterwards, even years after, and any time before the year of jubilee; ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah [l], the prieſts and the Levites ſell always, and they redeem always, as it is ſaid, Lev. xxv. 32. on which one of the commentators ſays [m], they ſell always, not as the Iſraelites, who cannot ſell leſs than two years before the jubilee; but the Levites can ſell near the jubilee: and they redeem always; if they ſell houſes in walled cities, they are not confimed at the end of the year, as the houſes of Iſraelites; and if they ſell fields, it is not neceſſary they ſhould remain in the hands of the buyer two years, but they may redeem them immediately if they will: this redemption was peculiar to the Levites; for if an Iſraelite has an inheritance from his father's mother, a Levite, he might not redeem according to the manner Levites did, but according to Iſraelites; and ſo a Levite that inherited from his father's mother, an Iſraelite, was obliged to redeem as an Iſraelite and not as a Levite [n]; for this perpetual redemption reſpected only houſes that were in the cities of the Levites.

℣. 33. And if a man purchaſe of the Levites, &c.] An houſe or city, as Jarchi, and which the following

5

[e] Shemittah, ut ſupra, §. 5. [f] Miſn. Eracin, ut ſupra. [g] ויצא diſcedet emptor, Junius & Tremellius. [h] In Miſn. Eracin, c. 9. §. 3. [i] Miſn. ib. §. 4. [k] T. Bab. Bava Kama, fol. 82. 2. [l] Eracin, c. 9. §. 8. [m] Bartenora in ib. [n] Miſn. ib.

following clauſe confirms, that is, if a common Iſraelite made ſuch a purchaſe, then it was redeemable, but if a Levite purchaſed of a Levite, then, as the ſame writer obſerves, it was abſolutely irredeemable: then the houſe that was ſold, and the city of his poſſeſſion ſhall go out in the year of jubilee; to the original owner of it, as fields and houſes in villages ſold by the Iſraelites: for the houſes of the cities of the Levites are their poſſeſſion among the children of Iſrael; and their only poſſeſſion, and therefore if thoſe, when ſold, were irredeemable, they would entirely be without any; and hence, care is taken they ſhould not; ſo Jarchi obſerves, that the Levites had no poſſeſſion of fields and vineyards, only cities to dwell in and their ſuburbs; wherefore cities were to them inſtead of fields, and their redemption was as that of fields, that ſo their inheritance might not be broken off from them.

℣. 34. But the field of the ſuburbs of their cities may not be ſold, &c.] The ſuburbs to the cities of the Levites reached two thouſand cubits on every ſide of their cities, Numb. xxxv. 5. in which they had fields to keep their cattle in, and theſe belonged to them in common; every Levite had not a particular field to himſelf as his own property, and which is the reaſon why it might not be ſold, nor might they agree together to ſell it, for then they would have nothing to keep their cattle in: the Jewiſh writers generally underſtand this, of changing their fields, ſuburbs and cities: hence, they ſay in the Miſnah, they don't make a field a ſuburb, nor a ſuburb a field, nor a ſuburb a city, nor a city a ſuburb; upon which Maimonides [o] ſays, all agree that the Levites may not change a city, or ſuburb, or field which are theirs, becauſe of what is ſaid, Lev. xxv. 34. and the wiſe men, of bleſſed memory, ſay, the meaning of it is, it ſhall not be changed, for they don't change any thing from what it was before: for it is their perpetual poſſeſſion; and therefore never to be alienated from them, or be ſold to another, or changed and put to another uſe; ſuch care was taken of the miniſters of the ſanctuary, and of their maintenance and ſupport, under the former diſpenſation; and ſuggeſts that they ſhould continue in their ſtations without any alteration, as miniſters of the goſpel ſhould, who ought to give up themſelves to the miniſtry of the word, and prayer, and not entangle themſelves with the affairs of life.

℣. 35. And if thy brother be waxen poor, &c.] An Iſraelite, as Aben Ezra, be reduced to a low eſtate, through afflictions in body, or in family, or through loſſes in trade, or want of buſineſs, or through one providence or another: and fallen in decay with thee; in his worldly ſubſtance: or his hand wavers, or fails [p]; ſo that he cannot ſupport himſelf and his family, has not a ſufficiency, or it is not in the power of his hands to do it; and it is not owing to ſloth and negligence, but to unavoidable want and neceſſity: then thou ſhalt relieve him; not merely by ſympathizing with him, but by communicating to him, and diſtributing to his neceſſities; holding him up that he may not utterly fall, and ſtrengthening his hands, that he may have a ſupply for his preſent wants: though he be a ſtranger or a ſojourner; whether a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, who is circumciſed, and in all things conforms to the true religion; or a proſelyte of the gate, who takes it upon him not to worſhip idols, and eat things that die of themſelves, as Jarchi notes: that he may live with thee; continue in the land of Canaan, and not be obliged to quit it, and be laid under temptations of apoſtatizing from the true religion profeſſed by him, and ſo far as he is come into it, which would bring a worſe death than corporal upon him; or that he may have a livelihood in ſome tolerable manner at leaſt, and even live comfortably and chearfully.

℣. 36. Take thou no uſury of him or increaſe, &c.] Not only give him ſomewhat for his preſent relief, but lend him money to put him in a way of buſineſs, to get his living for the future, without requiring any intereſt for it; ſee the note on Exod. xxii. 25. but fear thy God; who has given this command, and expects to be obeyed; and who is good, and does good, and ſhould be feared for his goodneſs-ſake; and is omniſcient, and knows what is ſecretly exacted, and will not ſuffer any exorbitance of this kind to paſs unpuniſhed: that thy brother may live with thee; which it would be ſtill more difficult for him to do, ſhould uſury and increaſe be taken of him.

℣. 37. Thou ſhalt not give him thy money upon uſury, &c.] Lend him money, expecting and inſiſting upon a large intereſt for it; this is to be underſtood of perſons in poor and neceſſitous circumſtances, of which the text only ſpeaks; otherwiſe, if perſons borrow money to gain by it, to carry on a greater trade, or to make purchaſe with it, it is but reaſonable that the lender ſhould have a ſhare of profit ariſing from thence: nor lend him thy victuals for increaſe; by which it ſhould ſeem that thoſe two words, uſed in the preceding verſe, tho' in the main they ſignify the ſame thing, yet may be diſtinguiſhed, the one as concerning money, the other food; and which latter is not to be given by way of loan to a perſon in want of it, but freely; as for inſtance, if a man gives a poor man a buſhel of wheat, on condition he gives him two for it hereafter, this is lending or giving his victuals for increaſe.

℣. 38. I am the Lord your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, &c.] Where they had been ſtrangers and ſojourners, and therefore ſhould be kind to ſuch in neceſſitous circumſtances, and relieve them, and eſpecially their brethren; and where God had given them favour in the eyes of the Egyptians, and they had lent them jewels of gold and ſilver, and raiment, and therefore they ſhould lend freely to perſons in diſtreſs; and who had brought them out from thence, that they might take upon them his commandments, though they might be grievous, as Jarchi obſerves; and this, it may be remarked, is the preface to the ten commandments: to give you the land of Canaan; freely, a land flowing with milk and honey; and therefore ſince he had dealt ſo bountifully with them, and had given them plenty of good things, they need not grudge giving to their poor brethren, and others in neceſſitous circumſtances: and to be your God; their covenant-God, to bleſs and proſper them, protect and defend them.

℣. 39. And if thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, &c.] The above laws and inſtructions ſeem deſigned to prevent ſuch extreme poverty as obliged to what follows, namely, a brother being ſold ſold either to an Iſraelite or to a ſtranger, by relieving his wants or lending him money; but when theſe were inſufficient to ſupport him, and keep him from ſinking into the loweſt ſtate of diſtreſs and miſery, then he was obliged to be ſold as follows: and be ſold unto thee; either by himſelf, being ready to ſtarve and periſh, or by the Sanhedrim, having ſtolen ſomething, as Aben Ezra obſerves; in ſuch a caſe the civil magiſtrate had a power of ſelling a man, Exod. xxii. 3. thou ſhalt not compel him to ſerve as a bond-ſervant; ſuch as were heathens, and bought of them, or taken in war and made ſlaves of; but an Iſraelite ſold was not to ſerve as they, either with reſpect to matter or manner, or time of ſervice; ſuch as were bondmen were put to the hardeſt ſervice, the greateſt drudgery, as well as what was mean and reproachful, and were uſed in the moſt rigorous and deſpotic manner, and were obliged to ſerve for ever, and were never releaſed; but a brother, an Iſraelite, ſold to another through extreme poverty, was not to be put to any low, mean, baſe, and diſgraceful ſervice, by which it would be known that he was a ſervant, as Jarchi notes; ſuch as to carry his maſter's veſſels or inſtruments after him to the bath, or to unlooſe his ſhoes; but as the ſame writer obſerves, he was to be employed in the buſineſs of the farm, or in ſome handicraft-work, and was to be kindly and gently uſed, rather as a brother than a ſervant, and to be freed in the year of jubilee.

[o] In Miſn. Eracin, c. 9. §. 8.

[p] ומטרת ידיו & nutaverit manus ejus, Montanus, Vatablus, Fagius; vacillabit, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

℣. 40. But as an hired ſervant, &c.] Who is hired by the day, or month, or year; and when his time is up, receives his wages and goes where he pleaſes, and whilſt a ſervant is not under ſuch deſpotic power and government as a ſlave is: and as a ſojourner; an inmate, one that dwells in part of a man's houſe, or boards and lodges with him, and whom he treats in a kind and familiar manner, rather like one of his own family than otherwiſe: he ſhall be with thee; as under the above characters, and uſed as ſuch: this the Jews refer to food and drink, and other things, as they do, Deut. xv. 16. and ſay [q], that a maſter might not eat fine bread, and his ſervant bread of bran; nor drink old wine, and his ſervant new; nor ſleep on ſoft pillows and bedding, and his ſervant on ſtraw: hence, they ſay [r], he that gets himſelf an Hebrew ſervant is as if he got himſelf a maſter: and ſhall ſerve thee unto the year of the jubilee; and no longer; for if the year of jubilee came before the ſix years years were expired, for which he ſold himſelf, the jubilee ſet him free, as Jarchi obſerves; nay, if he ſold himſelf for 10 or 20 years, and that but one year before the jubilee, it ſet him free, as Maimonides ſays [s].

℣. 41. And then ſhall he depart from thee, both he and his children with him, &c.] His ſons and daughters, and his wife alſo, who is included in himſelf: if a man had a wife and children when he ſold himſelf, or married afterwards, with his maſter's conſent, he was obliged to maintain them [t]; though they were not ſold to him, nor properly his ſervants, and ſo had a right to go out with him: and ſhall return unto his own family; his father's family, and that of his near relations, having been out of it during his time of ſervitude, and which the year of jubilee reſtored him to, ℣. 10. and unto the poſſeſſion of his fathers ſhall he return; the eſtate his father left him by inheritance, and which he was obliged to ſell in the time of his poverty, or which fell to him ſince by the death of his father; to this alſo he was reſtored in the year of jubilee, as is expreſſed in the text referred to.

℣. 42. For they are my ſervants, which I brought forth out of the land of Egypt, &c.] The Lord redeemed them out of Egypt, made a purchaſe of them, and had a prior right unto them, and being his ſervants firſt, they cannot be the ſervants of others; his right unto them as ſuch antecedes and prevents any other claim upon them: they ſhall not be ſold as bondmen; or, with, or, according to the ſale of a bondman [u]; in the manner they are ſold, or according to the laws of ſelling of ſervants; not in ſuch a public manner as they are ſold in markets, nor for ſuch purpoſes to be uſed as ſlaves in a rigorous manner, nor ſo as to be retained for ever in ſervitude; not to be ſold by proclamation, as Jarchi obſerves, ſaying, here is a ſervant to be ſold; nor ſhall they ſet him upon the ſtone of ſale; for it ſeems in public places in markets where ſlaves were ſold, there was a ſtone on which they were placed, which ſhewed that they were to be ſold; but now an Iſraelite was not to be ſold in ſuch a manner, ſo Maimonides [w] ſays, but privately in an honourable way.

℣. 43. Thou ſhalt not rule over him with rigor, &c.] As the Egyptians ruled over the Iſraelites and made them to ſerve, Exod. i. 13. where the ſame word is uſed as here, and ſeems deſigned to put them in mind of it, that ſo they might abſtain from ſuch uſage of their brethren, which they had met with from their moſt cruel enemies; it ſignifies tyranny and oppreſſion, treating them with great ſeverity, laying hard and heavy taſks and burdens upon them they could not bear; enjoining them things they could not perform, and ordering them to do what were unneceſſary, and without any limitation with reſpect to time: thou ſhalt fear thy God; that has been good to thee, and has brought thee out of hard and rigorous bondage in Egypt; and which ſhould be remembered with thankfulneſs, and they ſhould fear to offend ſo good a God by uſing a brother cruelly.

℣. 44. Both thy bondmen, and thy bondmaids which thou ſhalt have, &c.] Such it ſeems were allowed them, if they had need of them; but if they had them, they were to be not of the nation of Iſrael, but of other nations; this is an anticipation of an objection, as Jarchi obſerves; if ſo, who ſhall I have to miniſter to me? The anſwer follows, they ſhall be of the heathens that are round about thee, of them ſhall ye buy bondmen and bondmaids; that is, of the Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, and Syrians, as Aben Ezra, that were their neighbours, that lived round about them, of any but the ſeven nations, which they were ordered utterly to deſtroy; wherefore Jarchi obſerves it is ſaid, that are round about thee; not in the midſt of the border of your land, for them they were not to ſave alive, Deut. xx. 16.

℣. 45. Moreover, of the children of the ſtrangers that do ſojourn among you, &c.] The uncircumciſed ſojourners, as they are called in the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, proſelytes of the gate, ſuch of the nations round about who came and ſojourned among them, being ſubject to the precepts given to the ſons of Noah reſpecting idolatry, &c. but were not circumciſed, and did not embrace the Jewiſh religion: of them ſhall ye buy; for bondmen and bond-maids: and of their families that are are with you, which they begat in your land; but, as the Targum of Jonathan adds, are not of the Canaanites; though the Jewish writers [x] say, that one of the nations that lies with a Canaanitish woman, and begets a son of her, he may be bought for a servant; and so if a Canaanitish man lies with one of the nations, and begets a son of her, he may also be bought for a servant: and they shall be your possession; as servants, as bond-men and bond-maids, and be so for ever to them and their heirs, as follows.

[q] Maimon. in Miſn. Kidduſhin, c. 1. §. 2. [r] Ibid. [s] Hilchot Abadim, c. 2. §. 3. [t] Maimon. ib. c. 3. §. 1. [u] מכירת עבד venditione ſervi, Druſius. [w] Hilchot Abadim, c. 1. §. 5.

℣. 46. And ye shall take them as an inheritance for your children after you, &c.] Which they might leave them at their death to inherit, as they did their estates and lands; for such servants are, with the Jews [y], said to be like immoveable goods, as fields, vineyards, &c. to inherit them for a possession; as their property, as any thing else that was bequeathed to them, as negroes now are in our plantations abroad: they shall be your bondmen for ever; and not be released at the year of jubilee, nor before nor after; unless they obtained their liberty, either by purchase, which they might make themselves, or by the means of others, or else by a writing under their master's hand dismissing them from his service [z]; or in case they were maimed by him, then he was obliged to let them go free, Exod. xxi. 26, 27: but over your brethren the children of Israel, ye shall not rule one over another with rigor; which is repeated for the confirmation of it, and for the fuller explanation and description of the persons not to be ruled over with rigor; and that it might be the more taken notice of, and to make them the more careful in the observance of it; and though this peculiarly respects masters treatment of their servants, yet Jarchi thinks it comprehends a prince over his people, and a king over his ministers, whom he may not rule with rigor.

℣. 47. And if a sojourner or stranger wax rich by thee, &c.] An uncircumcised one, as the Targums, a proselyte of the gate, who by living among and trading with the Israelites, might grow rich and wealthy in money, at least so as to be able to purchase an Hebrew servant, though not his lands, which he might not buy: and thy brother that dwelleth by him wax poor; comes into low circumstances, and is reduced to great poverty, even extreme poverty; for only in such a case might he sell himself to an Israelite, and much less to a stranger, if this was not the case. Jarchi suggests, as if the phrase, by thee, points at the cause or occasion of the sojourner or stranger becoming rich, his nearness unto, or cleaving to an Israelite; and so here the phrase, by him, directs to the cause or occasion of the Israelite's becoming poor, his being near and cleaving to the sojourner or stranger: but they seem rather to be used, to shew the reason of the poor Israelite falling into the hands of a rich sojourner; they being near neighbours to one another, and having a familiarity, the following bargain is struck between them: and sell himself unto the stranger or sojourner by thee; the uncircumcised sojourner, as the Targum of Jonathan: or to the stock of a stranger's family; or root [a], one that sprung from a family, originally proselytes; which some understand of one, who though he be descended from such a family, was now rooted among the people of God, and incorporated into the commonwealth of Israel; and yet such an one could not detain an Hebrew servant longer than the year of jubilee; but the Jewish writers generally interpret it of an idolater [b].

℣. 48. After that he is sold, he may be redeemed again, &c.] Though an heathen, sold to an Israelite, was to be a bondman for ever, and could not be released by the year of jubilee, yet an Israelite sold to an heathen might be redeemed before, and if not, he was freed then. The Jewish writers understand this of an obligation upon the man, or his friends, or the congregation, to redeem him, and that immediately, as the Targum of Jonathan, and Jarchi, because of the danger he was in by being in the family of an idolater, lest he be polluted [c], that is, with idolatry; or be swallowed up among the heathens, as Maimonides [d]; but it is plain from ℣. 54. that there was no obligation for an immediate redemption; nor was the person sold in such danger as suggested, since the sojourner to whom he is supposed to be sold, was no idolater, whether a proselyte either of righteousness, or of the gate: one of his brethren may redeem him; which may be taken in a strict and proper sense, for any of his brethren who were in circumstances sufficient to redeem him, or for any near akin to him, as the following words seem to explain it. No mention is made of his father: the reason of which, Abarbinel [e] says, because it can't be thought that a father would suffer his son to be sold, if it was in his power to redeem him, since a father is pitiful to his son.

℣. 49. Either his uncle, or his uncle's son may redeem him, &c.] His father's brother, or his father's brother's son, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan: or any that is nigh of kin unto him of his family, may redeem him; from whence it appears, that it must be a near kinsman that was to be the redeemer, as in another case, the redemption of inheritances; hence the same word goel signifies both a redeemer and a near kinsman: or if he be able, he may redeem himself; who either has found something lost, or inherits the substance of any one deceased of his family, as Aben Ezra observes; that is, since he sold himself, which puts him into a capacity to redeem himself; the Targum of Jonathan adds, "or the hand of the congregation;" for such a redemption was sometimes made at the expence of the public, see Neh. v. 8. Baal Hatturim observes, that the words Ben Dodo, translated his uncle's son, wanting the letter vau as usual, has the same letters with Ben David, which is a known name of the Messiah with the Jews, and which that author seems to have in view; and another Jewish writer [f] expressly says, "this redeemer is "the Messiah, the son of David, of the tribe of "Judah:" and indeed, the whole of this case is applicable to the spiritual and eternal redemption of the people of God by Christ; they through the fall, and in a state of nature, are become poor and helpless, and in a spiritual sense have neither bread to eat, nor clothes to wear, nor money to buy either; and are in debt, owe ten thousand talents, and have nothing to pay, and so are brought into bondage to sin, satan and the law; nor can they redeem themselves from these by power or price; nor can a brother, or the nearest relation, redeem them, or give to God a ransom for them; none but Christ could do this for them, who thro' his incarnation, whereby he became of the same nature, of the ſame fleſh and blood with them, and in all things like unto them, is their goel, and ſo their redeemer, and has obtained eternal redemption for them, not with ſilver and gold, but by his own precious blood.

[x] Torat Cohanim apud Yalkut, par. 1. fol. 195. 1. [y] Maimon. & Bartenora in Misn. Kiddushin, c. 1. §. 3. [z] Misn. Kiddushin, ib. [a] לעקר radici, Vatablus, Piscator. [b] Targum Onk. Jon. Jarchi & Ben Melech, in loc. Kimchi in Sepher Shoresh. rad. עקר [c] Pesikta apud Drusium in loc. [d] Hilchot Abadim, c. 2. §. 7. [e] Apud Muis. Varia Sacra, p. 373. [f] R. Bechai apud Patrick in loc.

℣. 50. And he ſhall reckon with him that bought him, &c.] That is, either the man himſelf ſhould reckon with him, or whoever undertook to redeem him: from the year that he was ſold to him, unto the year of jubilee; and ſo count how many years he had ſerved, and how many were yet to come; and by this it appears, that one thus ſold was not releaſed at the end of ſix years, or the ſabbatical year did not free him: and the price of his ſale ſhall be according to the number of years; whether more or fewer, as after explained: according to the time of an hired ſervant ſhall it be with him; the time of ſervice he had ſerved his maſter ſhall be reckoned, as if he had been hired for ſo much a year; and according to the number of years he had been with him, ſo much per annum was to be deducted from the original purchaſe, and the reſt to be made for his redemption to him that bought him.

℣. 51. If there be yet many years behind, &c.] To the year of jubilee, and more than he had ſerved: according unto them he ſhall give again the price of his redemption, out of the money that he was bought for; ſuppoſe, for inſtance, when a man ſold himſelf, there were 20 years to the year of jubilee, and he ſold himſelf for 20 pieces of money, gold or ſilver, be the value what it will; and when he comes to treat with his maſter about his redemption, or a relation for him, and he has ſerved juſt as many years as there are to the year of jubilee, ten years, then his maſter muſt be paid for the price of his redemption ten pieces of money; but if he has ſerved but five years, and there are 15 to come, he muſt give him 15 pieces; and ſo in proportion, be the years more or fewer, as follows.

℣. 52. And if there remain but few years unto the year of jubilee, &c.] Fewer than what he has ſerved, then the leſs is given for his redemption: thus, for inſtance, in the above ſuppoſed caſe, if he has ſerved fifteen years, and there remain but five to the year of jubilee: then he ſhall count with him, and according unto his years ſhall he give him again the price of his redemption; as in the forementioned caſe, he ſhall give him five pieces of money; and thus the law of juſtice and equity was maintained between the buyer and ſeller, the purchaſer and the redeemer: in a like righteous manner the people of God are redeemed by Chriſt.

℣. 53. And as a yearly hired ſervant ſhall he be with him, &c.] Being redeemable every year, and upon his redemption might quit his maſter's ſervice as an hireling may; and the price of his redemption to be valued according to the years he ſerved, and as if he had been hired for ſo much a year; as well as he was to be treated in a kind and gentle manner, not as a bondman, but as if he was an hired ſervant, as follows: and the other ſhall not rule with rigor over him in thy ſight; the perſon he is ſold unto, his maſter, a ſojourner or ſtranger, he might not uſe an Hebrew he had bought with any ſeverity; for if an Hebrew maſter might not uſe an Hebrew ſervant with rigor, it was not by any means to be admitted in the commonwealth of Iſrael for a proſelyte to uſe one in ſuch a manner, and that openly, in the ſight of an Iſraelite his neighbour; he looking on and not remonſtrating againſt it, or acquainting the civil magiſtrate with it, who had it in his power to redreſs ſuch a grievance, and ought to do it.

℣. 54. And if he be not redeemed in theſe years, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan ſupplies the text as we do, in any of the years from the time of his ſale to the year of jubilee; and ſo Aben Ezra interprets it, in the years that remain to the jubilee; but he obſerves there are others that ſay, by the means of thoſe above mentioned, that is, by his neareſt of kin, or by himſelf; for the word years is not in the text, which may be ſupplied either with years or relations; and ſo the Vulgate Latin, Septuagint, and Oriental verſions read, by theſe means, things or perſons: then he ſhall go out on the year of jubilee; out of the houſe and ſervice of him that bought him; he ſhall go out free and freely, without paying any thing for his freedom, having ſerved his full time unto which he was bought: both he and his children with him; and his wife too, if he had any, who was comprehended in himſelf, and whom, both wife and children, his maſter was obliged to maintain during his ſervitude.

℣. 55. For unto me the children of Iſrael are ſervants, &c.] And therefore not to be perpetual ſervants to men, as thoſe who are bought and redeemed by the blood of Chriſt ſhould not be, 1 Cor. vii. 23. The Targum of Jonathan is, ſervants to my law; ſee Rom. vii. 25. thoſe that are redeemed by Chriſt are alſo ſervants to his goſpel, and obey from their heart the form and doctrine delivered to them: they are my ſervants whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt; where they were in cruel bondage, and made to ſerve with rigor, but now being delivered from thence, were laid under obligation to ſerve the Lord; nor was it his will that others ſhould rule over them with rigor, whether of their own nation or ſtrangers, or that they ſhould be bondmen and bondmaids, or perpetual ſervants to any: I am the Lord your God; their covenant-God, who had been kind to them, particularly in the inſtance mentioned, and would take care that they ſhould not be ill uſed by others, and therefore ought to ſerve him readily and chearfully.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXVI.

IN this chapter, after a repetition of ſome laws againſt idolatry, and concerning keeping ſabbaths, and reverencing the ſanctuary of God, ℣. 1, 2. in order to encourage the Iſraelites to keep the various ſtatutes and commandments in this book, and in the preceding, many promiſes are made of plenty, and peace, and ſafety from enemies, and of the preſence of God with them, ℣. 3—13. and on the contrary, to ſuch as ſhould deſpiſe and break his commandments, the moſt grievous things are threatened, as diſeaſes of body, deſtruction by their enemies, barrenneſs and unfruitfulneſs of land, the ſore judgments of wild beaſts, famine, ſword, and peſtilence, ℣. 14—39. and yet after all, when they ſhould confeſs their ſins, and were humbled for them, the Lord promiſes to remember the covenant he made with their anceſtors, and would deal kindly with them, and not caſt them away, and utterly deſtroy them, ℣. 40—46.

℣. 1. Ye ſhall have no idols, nor graven image, &c.] Some of the Jewiſh writers, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra think, this law againſt idolatry is mentioned on account of the Iſraelite ſold to a ſtranger, ſpoken of in the latter part of the preceding chapter, leſt he ſhould be drawn into idolatry; ſee the note on ch. xxv. 48. but this is rather mentioned as being a principal law, reſpecting the honour and glory of God, and the foundation of all religion and godlineſs, and the breach of it, a capital crime, and which led on to other ſins, and expoſed to the diſpleaſure and reſentment of God, and brought on all the calamities after mentioned in this chapter. Idols here ſignify things of nought, as an idol is nothing in the world, 1 Cor. viii. 4. and a graven image, any likeneſs of man or beaſt cut out of wood or ſtone; and may include any molten image of gold, ſilver or braſs, and then engraven with a tool, as the golden calf was: neither rear you up a ſtanding image; or pillar [g]; an heap of rude ſtones, ſet up pillar-wiſe, not bearing the likeneſs of any creature; otherwiſe graven and molten images were ſtanding ones, but theſe were ſtatues without any figure; ſuch as the Arabians uſed to worſhip; the god Mars, worſhipped in Arabia Petræa, was no other than a black ſtone four-ſquare, unformed, four feet high, and two broad, and was placed on a baſis of gold [h]; neither ſhall ye ſet up any image of ſtone in your land, to bow down unto; any figured ſtone, as the Targum and Aben Ezra interpret it, which had figures and repreſentations of creatures cut in it, in order to bow down unto and worſhip: the word has the ſignification of covering, as they cover a floor with a pavement of ſtones: for I am the Lord your God; who is the alone object of religious worſhip and adoration.

℣. 2. Ye ſhall keep my ſabbaths, &c.] The ſeventh-day ſabbaths, and the ſeventh-year ſabbaths; eſpecially the former are meant, in which religious worſhip was given, to the one true and living God, and therefore the obſervance of them is ſtrictly enjoined; and hence this law follows cloſely upon the former, though Aben Ezra reſtrains it to the ſabbatical years, or ſeventh-year ſabbaths, as he applies the ſanctuary in the following clauſe to the jubilee-year, which is ſaid to be holy, ch. xxvi. 12. ſuppoſing that this refers unto and ſtands in ſtrict connexion with the laws of the preceding chapter, concerning the ſabbatical and jubilee years: and reverence my ſanctuary; by attending in it, and on the worſhip in it, with reverence and godly fear, ſee ch. xix. 30. I am the Lord; who had a right to ſuch religious worſhip, and to command ſuch things, in which he ought to be obeyed, his ſabbaths kept, and ſanctuary reverenced.

℣. 3. If ye walk in my ſtatutes, and keep my commandments, and do them.] Both moral, ceremonial, and judicial, which had been delivered unto them, and now compleatly recorded in this and the preceding book; for what follow in the two next are chiefly repetitions of what are contained in theſe.

℣. 4. Then I will give you rain in due ſeaſon, &c.] The former and latter rain, in the two ſeaſons of the year in which rain uſually fell, and the ſcriptures frequently ſpeak of; and when the land of Iſrael, which required rain, not being watered with a river, as Egypt, was bleſſed with it; the one was at the ſowing of their ſeed, or a little after it, and the other a little before harveſt; and when it was had in thoſe times it was had in due ſeaſon, and hence the word is in the plural number, your rains [i]; unleſs ſhowers of rain are meant: to encourage to keep the commands of God, promiſes of many outward good things are made; and this is the firſt, being a principal bleſſing, and which only God and not all the vanities of the Gentiles could give: and the land ſhall yield her increaſe; which is greatly owing to ſeaſonable ſhowers of rain, by which means the earth brings forth bread to the eater and ſeed to the ſower, corn and graſs for man and beaſt: and the trees of the field ſhall yield their fruit; vines, olives, pomegranates, figs, &c. are meant, with which the land of Iſrael abounded, Deut. viii. 8.

℣. 5. And your threſhing ſhall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage ſhall reach unto the ſowing-time, &c.] Signifying that there ſhould be ſuch plentiful harveſts of barley and wheat, the firſt of which began in March, as would employ them in threſhing them out unto the time of vintage, which may be ſuppoſed to be in the month of July; for on the 29th of Sivan, which was about the middle of June, was the time of the firſt ripe grapes, as appears from Numb. xiii. 20. ſee the note there; and that they ſhould have ſuch quantities of grapes on their vines, as would employ them in gathering and preſſing them until ſeeds-time, which was uſually in October, ſee Amos ix. 13. and ye ſhall eat your bread to the full; which is put for all proviſions; and the meaning is, they ſhould have plenty of food, eat full meals, or however, what they eat, whether little or much, ſhould be ſatisfying and refreſhing to them, having it with a divine bleſſing: and dwell in your land ſafely; would have no need to go out of it into other lands for the ſake ſake of food, and would be in no danger from enemies invading them and carrying off their ſubſtance; plenty without ſafety, would not be ſo great a bleſſing as with it, ſince, though they had it they might be deprived of it, wherefore ſecurity from enemies is promiſed.

[g] מצבה στηλην, Sept. titulos, V. L. titulum, Samar. Ar. pillar, Ainſworth. Vid. Arnob. adv. Gentes, l. 6. p. 232.

[h] Suidas in voce Θευς Αρης.

[i] גשמיכם pluvias veſtras, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

℣. 6. And I will give peace in the land, &c.] Among yourſelves, as Aben Ezra; that as ſafety from enemies is promiſed before, here it is aſſured they ſhould be free from inſurrections and from riots, broils, contentions, and inteſtine wars among themſelves: and ye ſhall lie down, and none ſhall make you afraid; that is, lie down upon their beds, and ſleep quietly and comfortably, and not be in any fear of thieves and robbers breaking in upon them, Pſ. iii. 5. and iv. 8. and I will rid evil beaſts out of the land; out of the land of Iſrael, as the Targum of Jonathan, not out of the world, ſuch as lions, bears, wolves, &c. which were ſometimes troubleſome and miſchievous in the land: neither ſhall the ſword go through your land; either the ſword of the enemy, which if it entered ſhould not be ſuffered to proceed, much leſs to pervade the land and deſtroy the inhabitants of it; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "they that draw the ſword ſhall not "paſs through your land," or the ſword of the Lord, that is the peſtilence, 1 Chron. xxi. 12. as Ainſworth ſuggeſts; though the Jews [k] commonly underſtand it, of the ſword of peace, as they call it, though that is of one that is not an enemy, but paſſes through one country to deſtroy another; which yet is diſtreſſing to the country he paſſes through, as in the caſe of Pharaoh Necho, whom Joſiah went out to meet; though by what follows, it ſeems rather to be the firſt of theſe.

℣. 7. And ye ſhall chaſe your enemies, &c.] Who being overcome in battle, and put to the flight, ſhould be purſued: they ſhall fall before you by the ſword; not by the ſword of one another, as the Midianites did, ſo Jarchi; but rather by the ſword of the Iſraelites, for oftentimes multitudes of the enemy are killed in a purſuit.

℣. 8 And five of you ſhall chaſe 100, &c.] One man chaſe 20: and 100 of you put 10,000 to flight; which, had it been in proportion to the other number, ſhould have been 2000, as in Deut. xxxii. 30. where there is a proportion obſerved; and Abendana obſerves, there are ſome that give the ſenſe of it thus, 100 of you, 100 times five, that is 500, and ſo it comes up to a right computation; but here it ſeems to be a certain number for an uncertain, and only a proverbial expreſſion, ſignifying that a very few, under the bleſſing of divine providence, ſhould get the advantage over a large number, and oblige them to retire, and purſue them cloſely: inſtances we have of large bodies of the enemy being defeated by a ſmall number of Iſraelites, Judg. vii. 21, 22. and even many by a ſingle perſon or two, 1 Sam. xiv. 13, 14. 2 Sam. xxiii. 8—16. and your enemies ſhall fall before you by the ſword; ſee the note on the preceding verſe.

℣. 9. For I will have reſpect unto you, &c.] Look at them with delight and pleaſure, and with a careful eye on them, watch over them to do them good, and protect them from all evil; or turn himſelf to them from all others, having a particular regard for them and ſpecial care of them: and make you fruitful and multiply you; increaſe their number, as he did in Egypt, even amidſt all their afflictions; and much more might they expect this bleſſing in the land of Canaan, when ſettled there, which is the original bleſſing of mankind, ſee Gen. i. 28. and ix. 1. and eſtabliſh my covenant with you; not the new covenant ſpoken of in Jer. xxxi. 31. as Jarchi and other Jewiſh writers [l] ſuggeſt; for that was not to take place but in future time under the goſpel-diſpenſation; but rather the covenant made with them at Sinai, though perhaps, it chiefly reſpects the covenant made with their anceſtors concerning multiplication of their ſeed as the ſtars of heaven and the ſand of the ſea, Gen. xv. 5. and xxii. 17. ſince it follows upon the promiſe of an increaſe of them.

℣. 10. And ye ſhall eat old ſtore, &c.] What is very old, corn of three years old, as Jarchi and Kimchi [m] interpret it; ſuch plenty ſhould they have that it would be ſo long conſuming: and bring forth the old becauſe of the new; out of their barns and granaries, to make room for the new, which they ſhould have great quantities of, and ſcarce know where to beſtow them; and therefore ſhould empty their treaſures and garners of the old, and fill them with new; or they ſhould bring them forth out of their barns into their houſes, to make uſe of themſelves, or into their markets to expoſe to ſale, being under no temptation to withhold againſt a time of ſcarcity in order to make more of it, ſee Prov. xi. 26. now all theſe temporal bleſſings promiſed may be emblems of ſpiritual things, and might be ſo underſtood by ſuch who were ſpiritually enlightened; as of the rain of divine grace, and the bleſſings of it, and of the doctrines of the goſpel ſometimes compared thereunto, Deut. xxxii. 2. Iſ. lv. 10, 11. and of great fruitfulneſs in grace and good works, and of internal peace in the minds of good men, and of their ſafety and ſecurity from ſpiritual enemies; of fulneſs of ſpiritual proviſions, even of things new and old, and which are laid up for them, Cant. vii. 13. thus promiſes of a ſpiritual nature more manifeſtly follow.

℣. 11. And I will ſet my tabernacle amongſt you, &c.] Which God had directed them to make, and they had made, and alſo erected; but here he promiſes to fix and eſtabliſh it among them, that ſo it might continue as a place for the public worſhip of him, and where he would take up his reſidence, and grant them his preſence; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "I will put the Shekinah of "my glory among you:" and my ſoul ſhall not abhor you; though in themſelves, and becauſe of their ſins, loathſome and abominable; the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan are, "my Word ſhall not "abhor you;" and the whole may have reſpect to Chriſt, the Word made fleſh, and tabernacling among them; the tabernacle being a type and emblem of the human nature of Chriſt, in which the fulneſs of the Godhead dwells bodily, and is the true tabernacle which God pitched and not man, John i. 14. Col. ii. 9. Heb. viii. 2.

℣. 12. And I will walk among you, &c.] As they journeyed from place to place, he walked among them, in the tabernacle built for him, ſee 2 Sam. vii. 6. it may be expreſſive of that familiarity and communion which the Lord grants to his people, in and through Chriſt: and will be your God; to provide for them, and ſupply them with all the bleſſings of his goodneſs, both in providence and grace; and to protect and defend them againſt all their enemies, temporal and ſpiritual: and ye ſhall

[k] T. Bab. Taanith, fol. 22. 1. 2. Shoraſh. rad. שבת.

[l] Torat Cohenim, apud Yalkut, ib. fol. 196. 3.

[m] Sepher

ſhall be my people; appear to be a ſpecial and peculiar people of his, choſen, redeemed, and ſanctified by him, and to whom he bore a ſpecial love, and took ſpecial care of; ſee 2 Cor. vi. 16. the Targum of Jonathan of the whole is, "I will make "the glory of my Shekinah dwell among you, and "my Word ſhall be unto you for God the re-"deemer, and ye ſhall be to my name for a peo-"ple of holy ones."

℣. 13. I am the Lord your God, which brought you forth out of the Land of Egypt, &c.] Who, having done that, was able to fulfil the above promiſes; and which may be conſidered as an earneſt and pledge of them, as well as be a motive to the Iſraelites, and an obligation upon them to obey the commandments of God, and walk in his ſtatutes: that ye ſhould not be their bondmen; this was the end of their being brought out of Egypt, that they might be no longer in a ſtate of bondage to the Egyptians, nor to any other, but to ſerve the Lord their God, by whom they were delivered; as thoſe who are redeemed by Chriſt from worſe than Egyptian bondage, from ſin, ſatan, and the law, are redeemed, that they might not be the ſervants of any, but be a peculiar people, zealous of good works to ſerve the Lord Chriſt: and I have broken the bands of your yoke; which faſtened it on their ſhoulders, that is, ſet them at full liberty, from the yoke of all their enemies, particularly the Egyptians, who made their lives bitter in hard bondage, making the yoke of it heavy upon them; as Chriſt has broken the yoke of ſpiritual enemies from off the ſhoulders and necks of his people, Iſ. x. 27. and made you go upright; who before ſtooped under the yoke, as well as were of dejected countenances, but now were made to walk in an erect ſtature, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra, or in liberty, as Onkelos; ſee Gal. v. 1. and with heads lift up and countenances chearful.

℣. 14. But if ye will not hearken unto me, &c.] To his commandments, as the rule of their duty, and to his promiſes, as an encouragement to it, or to his prophets and miniſters, explaining and enforcing his law, and exhorting to a chearful obedience to it; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "if ye "will not hearken to the doctrine of them that "teach my laws;" which was the ſin of the Jews in after-times, for which captivity and other calamities befell them, Jer. vii. 25. and xxv. 3, 4. and xliv. 5. and will not do all theſe commandments; which he had delivered to them by Moſes, whether moral, ceremonial, or judicial, recorded in this book and in the preceding; even all of them were to be reſpected, attended to, and performed, for the law curſes every one that does not do all things it requires, Gal. iii. 10.

℣. 15. And if ye ſhall deſpiſe my ſtatutes, &c.] Which is an aggravated ſin; to be negligent hearers of the commands of God is bad, not to be doers of them worſe, but to treat them with contempt is worſe ſtill: or if your ſoul abhor my judgments; which is worſt of all, to deſpiſe them as if not wiſely or righteouſly made, is a dreadful reflection upon the maker of them; but to abhor them as bad things, not fit to be regarded, but to be had in the utmoſt deteſtation, is ſhocking impiety: ſo that ye will not do all my commandments; nor any of them, but are ſet againſt them, and determined and reſolved on the contrary: but that ye break my covenant; the covenant made with them at Sinai, when they promiſed on their part, that they would hearken and be obedient, Exod. xxiv. 7.

℣. 16. I alſo will do this unto you, &c.] Henceforward follow threatenings of dreadful evils to the tranſgreſſors and deſpiſers of the commandments of God, which thus begin: I will even appoint over you terror, conſumption, and the burning ague, that ſhall conſume the eyes, and cauſe ſorrow of heart; ſome, as Aben Ezra obſerves, take theſe to deſign what may affect the ſeed ſown and the increaſe of it, ſuch as blaſting and mildew, becauſe it follows: ye ſhall ſow in vain; but no doubt, diſeaſes of the body are intended; for what we tranſlate terror, does not ſignify terror of mind, but ſome ſudden, haſty, terrible diſtemper; perhaps the peſtilence, as the Targum of Jonathan; ſome have thought of the falling ſickneſs, as biſhop Patrick, becauſe the word has the ſignification of haſte and precipitance; and the ſecond is a diſeaſe well known among us, and ſo called from its waſting and conſuming nature; Jarchi interprets it of a diſeaſe which ſwells the fleſh, either fills it with tumors and puſtules, the Septuagint calls it the itch; or with wind or water, which has led ſome to think of the dropſy; and the laſt of them ſeems to be rightly rendered a burning ague or fever, though the Septuagint takes it for the jaundice, but that ſeems nor to be ſo threatening, terrible, and dangerous, as what may be here ſuppoſed: now theſe diſeaſes and all others are by the appointment of God, they come and go by his order, and while they continue have the power over perſons, nor can they rid themſelves of them at pleaſure; and theſe have ſuch an effect on perſons ſeized by them, as to cauſe dimneſs of ſight, a hollowneſs of their eyes, which ſink into the head, as well as fill the heart with grief and ſorrow; either thro' preſent pains and agonies, or in a view of future judgment and wrath to come: and ye ſhall ſow your ſeed in vain, for your enemies ſhall eat it; either eat it up for forage before it is ripe, or if ripe and gathered in the barn, ſhould come and beſiege their cities and plunder their granaries.

℣. 17. And I will ſet my face againſt you, &c.] Exert his power, and ſtir up his wrath and indignation againſt them, as enemies of his to cut them off; ſee Pſ. xxxiv. 16. which is the reverſe of having reſpect to them, ℣. 9: and ye ſhall be ſlain before your enemies; as they were ſometimes by the Philiſtines and others: and they that hate you ſhall reign over you; as did the Chaldeans and Babylonians; ſee Pſ. cvi. 41: and ye ſhall flee when none purſueth you; of ſuch puſillanimous ſpirits ſhould they be, and filled with ſuch dread and terror of their enemies, ſo contrary from what is promiſed them on their obedience, ℣. 8.

℣. 18. And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, &c.] If ſuch corrections by diſeaſes of body, and by giving them up into the hands of their enemies, ſhould be ineffectual to reform them, and bring them to obedience to the ſtatutes and commandments of God, but ſhould continue in their diſobedience to him, and rebellion againſt him: then I will puniſh you ſeven times more for your ſins; that is, abundantly more, with ſorer puniſhments, and theſe more frequently repeated.

℣. 19. And I will break the pride of your power, &c.] Which the Targum of Jonathan, and Jarchi interpret of the ſanctuary, which they were proud of, truſted in, and boaſted of; but was broke or deſtroyed, firſt by Nebuchadnezzar, then by the Romans: but it may rather ſignify their country, the glory of all lands for its fruitfulneſs, which for their ſins ſhould become barren, as follows; or the

the multitude of their forces, and the ſtrength of their mighty men of war, in which they put their confidence; it may take in every thing, civil and eccleſiaſtical, they prided themſelves with, and had their dependance on, thinking themſelves ſafe on account of them, but ſhould be broken to ſhivers, and be of no ſervice to them: and I will make your heaven as iron; ſo that neither dew nor rain ſhall deſcend from thence to make the earth fruitful; but, on the contrary, an heat ſhould be reflected, which would parch it, and make it barren: and your earth as braſs; that the ſeed could not be caſt into it, nor any thing ſpring out of it, for the ſervice of man and beaſt, ſo that a famine muſt unavoidably follow.

℣. 20. And your ſtrength ſhall be ſpent in vain, &c.] In endeavouring to till the ground, to plow, or ſow, or to dig about the vines or olives, and prune them: for your land ſhall not yield its increaſe; produce corn, and bring forth graſs, the one for the uſe of men, the other for the uſe of the cattle, and therefore both muſt ſtarve: neither ſhall the trees of the land yield their fruits; ſuch as vines, olives, figs, pomegranates, &c. which were very plentiful in the land of Judea, and on which they much lived, and on which their more comfortable ſubſiſtence at leaſt depended, ſee Hab. iii. 17. all this is the reverſe of ℣. 4, 5, 10.

℣. 21. And if ye walk contrary unto me, &c.] To his mind and will, to his laws, commands and ordinances, ſhewing no regard unto them by a walk and converſation agreeable to them, but neglecting and breaking them continually; or by chance, as the Targum of Jonathan, not with any intention and deſign to obey the Lord, and to honour and glorify him, but in a careleſs and indifferent manner, having no regard to the law of God, only now and then, as it happens, act according to it, but having no concern for the honour and glory of God: and will not hearken unto me; to his voice in his laws and his precepts, or by his prophets, exhorting them to obedience to them: I will bring ſeven times more plagues upon you, according to your ſins; greater and ſorer puniſhments ſtill, and theſe more frequently repeated, and in proportion to their tranſgreſſions of his righteous laws.

℣. 22. I will alſo ſend wild beaſts among you, &c.] Either in a literal ſenſe, as lions, bears, wolves, &c. and ſo is the reverſe of what is promiſed to them on their doing well, ℣. 6. or figuratively, mighty monarchs and cruel oppreſſors, ſuch as were the kings of Aſſyria and Babylon, Jer. l. 17: which ſhall rob you of your children; as the bears, in a literal ſenſe, deſtroyed the children of them in the times of Eliſha, 2 Kings ii. 24: and deſtroy your cattle; the tame beaſts, who often become a prey to the wild ones, as both thoſe of the flock, and of the herd, ſheep and oxen, do to lions, wolves, &c. and make you few in number; or diminiſh them, their number, by bereaving them of their children, and their wealth and ſubſtance, by deſtroying their cattle: and your high ways ſhall be deſolate; or ways, the word high not being in the text, and may ſignify both their public and private ones, which would be all forſaken, none caring to venture to walk in them for fear of beaſts of prey.

℣. 23. And if ye will not be reformed by theſe things, &c.] Corrected and amended by theſe puniſhments, be prevailed upon to return from their evil ways to the Lord, and walk in his commandments, and keep his judgments, and do them: but will walk contrary unto me; ſee the note on ℣. 21.

℣. 24. Then I will alſo walk contrary unto you, &c.] Oppoſing himſelf unto them as their enemy, fighting againſt them in his providence, whetting his ſword, bending his bow, and cauſing the arrows of his wrath and vengeance to fall upon them; or behaving towards them in a careleſs and indifferent manner, not regarding what befel them, ſhewing no peculiar concern for them, or as exerciſing any particular providence over them; but as if every thing came by chance to them, which was the language of their actions, if not of their lips: and will puniſh you yet ſeven times for your ſins; add freſh corrections, and theſe greater than before, and more numerous in proportion to their aggravated tranſgreſſions.

℣. 25. And I will bring a ſword upon you, &c.] War upon them by the ſword of their enemies; they that uſe and kill with the ſword, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; their neighbours that delighted in war, and bore an implacable hatred unto them, and gladly embraced every opportunity of ſhedding their blood, and ravaging their country: that ſhall avenge the quarrel of my covenant; the covenant made with them at Sinai, which they tranſgreſſed, and for which vengeance would be taken on them in this way, God ſo ordering it in his providence, though the enemy meant it not, Iſ. x. 5, 6, 7: and when ye are gathered together within your cities; from the fields and villages, fleeing from the enemy invading and deſtroying, to their fortified towns and cities for ſafety: I will ſend the peſtilence among you; which ſhall deſtroy thoſe that eſcaped the ſword, and thought themſelves ſafe in a ſtrong city, and even the very ſoldiers in the garriſons, who were ſet for the defence of the city: and ye ſhall be delivered into the hand of the enemy; ſo many being taken off by the peſtilence there would not be a ſufficient number to defend the place, and therefore obliged to give it up, by which means thoſe that eſcaped the peſtilence, would fall into the hands of the enemy.

℣. 26. And when I have broken the ſtaff of your bread, &c.] Brought a famine, at leaſt a ſcarcity of proviſions upon them, deprived them of bread, the ſtaff of life, by which it is ſupported; or however made it very ſcarce among them, ſo that they had hardly a ſufficiency to ſuſtain nature, and perhaps the bleſſing of nouriſhment with-held from that; ſee Iſ. iii. 1: ten women ſhall bake your bread in one oven; for want of wood according to Jarchi; or rather through ſcarcity of bread corn, they ſhould have ſo little to bake every week, that one oven would be ſufficient for ten families, which in a time of plenty each made uſe of one for themſelves; and ſo Aben Ezra ſays, it was a cuſtom in Iſrael for every family to bake in an oven by themſelves, which they ate the whole week. Ten is a certain number for an uncertain, and denotes many, as in Zech. viii. 23. Making and baking bread was the work of women in the eaſtern countries, as we find it was particularly among the Perſians [n], and continues to this day among the Moors and Arabs [o]: and they ſhall deliver you your bread again by weight; there being not enough for every one to eat what they pleaſed, but were obliged to a ſtinted allowance, therefore every one in the family ſhould have their ſhare delivered to him by weight; ſee Ezek. iv. 16, 17: and ye ſhall eat, and not be ſatisfied; not having enough to eat to ſatisfaction; or what they did eat, God would with-hold a bleſſing from it for their nouriſhment, the reverſe of ℣. 5, 10.

℣

[n] Herodot. Polymnia, ſive l. 7. c. 187.

[o] Shaw's Travels, p. 241. Ed. 2.

℣. 27. And if ye for all this will not hearken unto me, &c.] To his commands, and to his prophets ſent unto them time after time, and all his corrections and chaſtiſements being ineffectual to reform them, and make them obedient to him: but walk contrary unto me; ſee the note on ℣. 21.

℣. 28. Then I will walk contrary to you alſo in fury, &c.] As in ℣. 24. with this addition, in fury; being greatly provoked, and highly incenſed, that no regard was had to him, neither to his commands, nor to his corrections; and therefore would be determined to ſtir up his wrath, and pour out the fury of his indignation on them, which muſt be terrible: and I, even I, will chaſtize you ſeven times for your ſins; add new, and many more chaſtizements, and that in hot diſpleaſure, for their ſins; and the repetition or doubling of the phraſe, I, even I, will do it, denotes the certainty of it, and that he will do it himſelf, and his hand ſhould be viſible in it; and they ſhould feel the weight of it, and be obliged to own that theſe were puniſhments inflicted by him for their ſins.

℣. 29. And ye ſhall eat the fleſh of your ſons, &c.] Which was fulfilled at the ſiege of Samaria, in the times of Joram, 2 Kings vi. 29. and at the ſiege of Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezzar, Lam. iv. 10. and though there is no inſtance of it at that time in the ſacred records, the Jews [p] tell us of one Doeg ben Joſeph, who died and left a little one with his mother, who was very fond of him; but at this ſiege ſlew him with her own hands, and eat him, with reſpect to which they ſuppoſe Jeremiah makes the lamentation, Lam. ii. 2. and of this alſo there was an inſtance at the laſt ſiege of Jeruſalem by Titus, when a woman, named Mary, of a conſiderable family, boiled her ſon, and eat part of him, and the reſt was found in her houſe when the ſeditious party broke in upon her, as Joſephus [q] relates: and the fleſh of your daughters ſhall ye eat; of which, tho' no inſtances are given, it is as reaſonable to ſuppoſe it was done, as the former. Some of the Jewiſh writers [r] think, that in this prediction is included, that children ſhould eat their parents, as well as parents their children, as in Ezek. v. 10.

℣. 30. And I will deſtroy your high places, &c.] Which Jarchi interprets of towers and palaces; but Aben Ezra of the place of ſacrifices; for on high places, hills and mountains they uſed to build altars and there offer ſacrifices, in imitation of the heathens; ſee the note on Ezek. vi. 13: and cut down your images; called Chammanim, either from Ham, the ſon of Noah, the firſt introducer of idolatrous worſhip after the flood, as ſome have thought; or from Jupiter Ammon worſhipped in Egypt, from whence the Jews might have theſe images; or rather from Chammah, the ſun, ſo called from its heat; ſo Jarchi ſays, there were a ſort of idols placed on the roofs of houſes, and becauſe they were ſet in the ſun, they were called by this name; and Kimchi [s] obſerves they were made of wood, and made by the worſhippers of the ſun, ſee 2 Kings xxiii. 11. but Aben Ezra is of opinion, that theſe were temples built for the worſhip of the ſun, which is the moſt early ſort of idolatry that appeared in the world, to which Job may be thought to refer, ch. xxxi. 26, 27. Some take theſe to be the πυραιθεια, or fire-hearths, which Strabo [t] deſcribes as large incloſures, in the midſt of which was an altar, where the (Perſian) Magi kept their fire that never went out, which was an emblem of the ſun they worſhipped; and theſe, he ſays, were in the temples of Anaitis and Omanus, and where the ſtatue of the latter was in great pomp; which idol ſeems to have its name from the word in the text; and theſe are fitly added to the high places, becauſe on ſuch, as Herodotus [u] ſays, the Perſians uſed to worſhip: and caſt your carcaſſes upon the carcaſſes of your idols; or dunghill gods [w]; ſuch as the beetle, the Egyptians worſhipped, ſignifying, that they and their idols ſhould be deſtroyed together: and my ſoul ſhall abhor you; the reverſe of ℣. 6. and by comparing it with that, this may ſignify the removal of the divine preſence from them, as a token of his abhorrence of them; and ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret it.

℣. 31. I will make your cities waſte, &c.] By ſuffering the enemy to beſiege them, enter into them, and plunder them, and deſtroy the houſes in them, and reduce them to the moſt deſolate condition, as Jeruſalem, their metropolis, was more than once: and bring your ſanctuaries unto deſolation; the temple, ſo called from the ſeveral apartments in it, the court, the holy place, and the moſt holy; or rather both ſanctuaries or temples are intended, the firſt built by Solomon, and deſtroyed by Nebuchadnezzar; the ſecond rebuilt by Zerubbabel, and adorned by Herod, and reduced to aſhes by Titus Veſpaſian: the Jews underſtand this of their ſynagogues, which were many, both in Jeruſalem, and in other parts of their country, but cannot be intended, ſince it follows: and I will not ſmell the ſavour of your ſweet odours; of their incenſe offered on the altar of incenſe; or the ſavour of their offerings, as the Targum of Jonathan, of their burnt-offerings, and the fat of their other offerings burnt on the altar of burnt-offering; ſignifying, that theſe would not be acceptable to him, or he ſmell a ſavour of reſt in them; ſee Gen. viii. 21. now theſe were only offered in the temple, not in ſynagogues.

℣. 32. And I will bring the land into deſolation, &c.] The whole country of Judea, cities, towns, villages, fields, vineyards, &c. through the ravage and plunder of the enemy; and they being driven out of it, and carried captive from it, and ſo the land left untilled, and become barren and unfruitful: and your enemies which dwell therein; having deſtroyed them, or caſt them out, and ſent them into other countries, and took poſſeſſion of theirs in their room: ſhall be aſtoniſhed at it; at the deſolation of the land, that ſuch a fruitful country, a land flowing with milk and honey, ſhould be turned into barrenneſs for the wickedneſs of its inhabitants, and ſhall be amazed at the judgments of God upon them and that.

℣. 33. And I will ſcatter you among the heathen, &c.] As with a fan, Jer. xv. 7. ſo they were at the time of the Aſſyrian and Babyloniſh captivities, ſome were carried to one place, and ſome to another; ſome fled to one place, and ſome to another, and they are at this day ſcattered among the ſeveral nations of the world: and will draw out a ſword after you; draw it out of its ſcabbard, and with with it purſue after them, when fleeing or going whither they ſhould not; as the remainder of the Jews in Judea ſought to go to Egypt, contrary to the will of God, Jer. xlii. 16. ſee ℣. 25: and your land ſhall be deſolate, and your cities waſte; for want of men to till the one, and inhabit the other.

[p] Torat Cohanim in Yalkut, par. 1. fol. 197. 1. [q] De Bello Jud. l. 6. c. 3. §. 4. [r] Torat Cohanim, ib. [s] Sepher Shoraſh. rad. חמם & חמן. [t] Geograph. l. 15. p. 504. [u] Clio, ſive, l. 1. c. 131. [w] גלוליכם ſtercoreorum deorum veſtrorum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius,

℣. 34. Then ſhall the land enjoy her ſabbaths, &c.] The ſabbatical years, or ſeventh-year ſabbaths, when, according to the law in the preceding chapter, it was to reſt from tillage: as long as it lieth deſolate, and ye be in your enemies land; ſo long it ſhould lie uncultivated, at leaſt in part, there not being a ſufficient number left to till it in general, or as it ſhould be; this was the caſe during the 70 years captivity in Babylon: even then ſhall the land reſt, and enjoy her ſabbaths; or complete them, as Aben Ezra; which is a bitter ſarcaſm upon them for their neglect of obſervance of the law concerning the ſabbatical years; but now the land ſhould have its ſabbaths of reſt whether they would or no; and it ſeems as if it was on account of this ſin, as well as others, that they were carried captive; and it is remarkable, if what Maimonides [x] ſays is right, that it was at the going out or end of a ſabbatical year, that the firſt temple was deſtroyed, and the Jews carried captive, and endured a 70 years captivity; which ſome ſay was becauſe they had neglected 70 ſabbatical years; ſee 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21.

℣. 35. As long as it lieth deſolate, it ſhall reſt, &c.] From tillage, neither man nor beaſt working upon it; for which reaſon ſuch a ſpace of time was called a ſabbath: becauſe it did not reſt in your ſabbaths, when you dwelt upon it; they manured and tilled it on the ſeventh years, as on others, neglecting the command which God had given them; and this they did not once or twice, but many times whilſt they were dwellers in the land; which ſeems to confirm pretty much the notion of their having omitted ſo many years, though that cannot be affirmed with certainty; ſee Jarchi on the place.

℣. 36. And upon them that are left alive of you, &c.] In the land of Judea, or rather ſcattered about among the nations, ſuggeſting that theſe would be comparatively few: I will ſend a faintneſs into their hearts in the lands of their enemies; or a ſoftneſs [y]; ſo that they ſhould be effeminate, puſillanimous and cowardly, have nothing of a manly ſpirit and courage in them; but be mean-ſpirited and faint-hearted, as the Jews are noted to be at this day, as biſhop Patrick obſerves; who alſo adds, "it being ſcarce ever heard, that a Jew liſted himſelf "for a ſoldier, or engaged in the defence of his "country where he lives:" and the ſound of a ſhaken leaf ſhall chaſe them; either the ſound of a leaf that falls from the tree, as the Targum of Jonathan, or which the wind beats one againſt another, as Jarchi, which makes ſome little noiſe; even this ſhould terrify them, taking it to be the noiſe of ſome enemy near at hand, juſt ready to fall on them; ſuch poor faint-hearted creatures ſhould they be: and they ſhall flee as fleeing from the ſword; as if there were an army of ſoldiers with their ſwords drawn purſuing them: and fall when none purſueth; fall upon the ground, and into a fit, and drop down as if dead, as if they had been really wounded with a ſword and ſlain, ſee Prov. xxviii. 1, ℣. 37. And they ſhall fall one upon another, &c.] In their hurry and confuſion, every one making all the haſte he can to eſcape the imaginary danger; or a man upon his brother [z]; his friend, as Aben Ezra interprets it, having no regard to relation and friendſhip, every one endeavouring to ſave himſelf. There is another ſenſe which ſome Jewiſh writers [a] give of this phraſe, and is obſerved by Jarchi, which is, that every one ſhall fall for the iniquities of his brother; for all the Iſraelites ſay, they are ſureties for one another; but the former ſenſe is beſt: as it were before a ſword, when none purſueth; as if a ſword was drawn and brandiſhed at them, juſt ready to be thruſt in them, filling them with the utmoſt dread and terror, and yet at the ſame time none in purſuit of them: and ye ſhall have no power to ſtand before your enemies; no heart to reſiſt them, no ſtrength nor ſpirit to oppoſe them, and defend themſelves, but be obliged to ſurrender their cities, themſelves, their families and goods into the hands of the enemy.

℣. 38. And ye ſhall periſh among the heathen, &c.] Not utterly, but great numbers of them, through change of air, and different diet, as Aben Ezra, and through the cruel uſage of their enemies; for there is a body of them which continues unto this day; unleſs this is to be underſtood of the ten tribes, as R. Akiba [b] interprets it, who are ſuppoſed to be entirely loſt and ſwallowed up among the nations where they were carried captive: and the land of your enemies ſhall eat you up; they ſhould die in it through one diſeaſe or another; by the peſtilence, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo be buried in it; in which ſenſe it may be ſaid to eat them up, or conſume them, for the grave ſwallows up and conſumes all that are put into it: Jarchi ſays, this is to be underſtood of thoſe that die in captivity.

℣. 39. And they that are left of you ſhall pine away in their iniquity, in your enemies lands, &c.] Such as were not taken off by any public calamity, as the ſword or peſtilence, ſhould gradually diminiſh and melt away like wax before the fire, and die in and for their iniquities in an enemies country, ſee Ezek. xxiv. 23. and xxxiii. 10: and alſo in the iniquities of their fathers ſhall they pine away with them; or for the iniquities of their evil fathers, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; they treading in their ſteps, and doing the ſame evil deeds, whereby they filled up the meaſure of their fathers ſins, and brought upon them deſerved puniſhment, Matt. xxiii. 32, 33.

℣. 40. If they ſhall confeſs their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan adds, "in the time of their diſtreſs;" which might ſerve to bring their ſins to remembrance, and them to a confeſſion of them, not only of their own ſins, but of their fathers alſo; acknowledging thereby, that they had been guilty of ſinning againſt God for a long courſe of years paſt; and that God had been long-ſuffering towards them, and bore much with them before he brought his judgments on them, which were juſt, and what they righteouſly deſerved; and ſuch a confeſſion Daniel made, ch. ix. 4—8. and the words may as well be rendered abſolute, as conditional or better, and as a prediction of what would be done by them when in captivity and diſtreſs, and they ſhall confeſs their iniquity [c]; with ſhame and ſorrow, with repentance for it, and abhorrence of it; or otherwiſe, if the confeſſion was only verbal and hypocritical,

it

[x] Hilchot Shemitah Vejobel, c. 10. §. 3.
[y] מרך mollitiem, Montanus, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius. Piſcator, Druſius.
[z] איש באחיו vir in fratrem ſuum, Vatablus, Druſius, Piſcator.
[a] Tora: Cohanim apud Yalkut, par. 1. fol. 197. 2.
[b] In Torat Cohanim, ut ſupra.
[c] והתודו & confitebuntur, Pagninus, Montanus.

it would not be acceptable: with their treſpaſs which they treſpaſſed againſt me; along with their own iniquities, and thoſe of their fathers, they ſhould confeſs, their treſpaſs againſt the Lord would be acknowledged by them; which ſeems to deſign ſome particular and grievous ſin committed by them, by which perhaps is meant their idolatry, a capital ſin, directly againſt God, and what thoſe people were prone unto: and that alſo they have walked contrary unto me; to his mind and will, to his laws, commands, ſtatutes and ordinances, diſregarding him and them, as if enemies to him; or by chance; ſee the note on ℣. 21.

℣. 41. And that I alſo have walked contrary unto them, &c.] Shewed no regard unto them, as if he took no care of them, or in a providential way concerned himſelf for them, but let what would befal them; yea, came out in the way of his judgments againſt them, as if he was an enemy to them, ſee the note on ℣. 24: and have brought them into the land of their enemies; ſhould acknowledge the hand of God in it, that he himſelf brought them out of their own country into an enemy's land, as Aſſyria, Babylon, and other nations; and that this was not the chance of war, or owing to the ſuperior power or ſkill of their enemies, but to the juſt judgment of God upon them for their ſins, who on that account delivered them up into the hands of their enemies: if then their uncircumciſed heart be humbled; their fooliſh proud heart, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; it ſignifies a ſinful, wicked, hard and impenitent heart, brought to a ſenſe of ſin, to repentance and humiliation for it. Jarchi interprets it, or if their uncircumciſed heart, &c. as in Exod. ii. 36. and obſerves another ſenſe of the word, perhaps their uncircumciſed heart, &c. not only would in words confeſs their ſins, but be truly humbled at heart for them: and they then accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity; take it well at the hand of God, bear it patiently without murmuring, or thinking themſelves hardly dealt by, but freely owning it is leſs than their iniquities deſerve; or complete and finiſh the puniſhment of their ſins, as Aben Ezra, which upon their humiliation ſhould be put an end to, and ceaſe. Jarchi takes the word in the ſenſe of atonement and pacification, as if by their chaſtiſement, their ſins were expiated [d], and God was pacified toward them: but rather it denotes the free and full pardon of their ſins, manifeſted to them upon their repentance and humiliation for ſin.

℣. 42. Then I will alſo remember my covenant with Jacob, &c.] Would fulfil and make good all that he had promiſed in covenant with Jacob, and his poſterity: the account begins with him, and riſes upwards to Abraham, whereas it uſually begins with Abraham, and deſcends to Jacob; no ſufficient reaſon is given for this alteration, though ſeveral are attempted by the Jewiſh writers [e]: and alſo my covenant with Iſaac, and alſo my covenant with Abraham will I remember; which chiefly reſpects the multiplication of their ſeed, the continuance of them, and the Meſſiah ſpringing from them; which is the mercy promiſed to theſe fathers, and the principal part of the covenant made with them, and which was remembered and performed when God viſited and redeemed his people by him, Luke i. 68—73: and I will remember the land; the land of Judea, and return the Jews to it, and make it fruitful, after he had given it reſt from tillage for many years, which was fulfilled at their return from the captivity of Babylon.

℣. 43. The land alſo ſhall be left of them, &c.] This ſeems to refer to a ſecond time, when this ſhould be the caſe of the land of Judea again, as it was when ſubdued by the Romans, and the Jews were carried captive from it, and ſo it was left by them, as it has been ever ſince: and ſhall enjoy her ſabbaths, while ſhe lieth deſolate without them; ſhall be as in the ſabbatical years, uncultivated, neither plowed nor ſown, nor reaped; and thus the land of Canaan, though once ſo very fruitful, is now deſolate and barren, being without its former inhabitants, and ſo it is like to be until it is reſtored to them again; and they ſhall accept of the puniſhment of their iniquity; that is, when made ſenſible of their ſins, and particularly of their iniquity of rejecting the Meſſiah; they will not think it hard that they have been puniſhed in ſo ſevere a manner, but own the righteous hand of God in it, and be humble under it; and confeſſing their ſins with true ſorrow and repentance for them, looking at him whom they have pierced, and mourn, ſhall have the free and full remiſſion of their ſins applied unto them: becauſe, even becauſe they deſpiſed my judgments, and becauſe their ſoul abhorred my ſtatutes; deſpiſed and abhorred Chriſt, his doctrines and ordinances, which was the reaſon of their being carried captive out of their land, when it was forſaken by them, and lay deſolate as to this day, eſpecially with reſpect to any benefit of it enjoyed by them; and which, when they are ſenſible of, will be a reaſon of their accepting the puniſhment of their iniquity ſo readily, and not murmur at the hand of God upon them, or reflect on his dealings with them, but freely and fully confeſs their ſins, that he may be juſtified in all that he has done.

℣. 44. And yet for all that, &c.] I will have mercy on them, in or through my Word, as the Targum of Jonathan; notwithſtanding their many and great ſins and tranſgreſſions, and the ſad and miſerable condition they were brought into by them, the Lord would have mercy on them and be gracious to them, through Chriſt and for his ſake, and convert and ſave them, ſee Rom. xi. 26, 27. the Jews, as Fagius tells us, wonderfully delight themſelves with this paſſage, and read it with the greateſt joy and pleaſure, and with an elevated voice; concluding from hence that they ſhall certainly return to their own land; and becauſe the firſt word in this verſe is in ſound the ſame as the Germans uſe for an ape, they call this paragraph the golden ape, and ſay, when this ſhall be fulfilled the golden age will take place with them: a very learned man [f] has wrote a diſſertation upon it: when they ſhall be in the land of their enemies; of the Romans and other nations, among whom they have been diſpoſed ever ſince the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Titus: I will not caſt them away, neither will I abhor them, to deſtroy them utterly; for tho' they have been caſt away by the Lord out of their land, and from being his people, and enjoying either the civil or religious privileges they formerly did; and though they have been caſt off with abhorrence, and had in great deteſtation by him, for their ſin of rejecting the Meſſiah, as appears by the puniſhment inflicted on them; yet not ſo as to make an utter end of them as a body of people, for notwithſtanding their diſperſion every where, and their long captivity, they remain a diſtinct people from all all others, which ſeems to forebode ſomething favourable to them: and to break my covenant with them; which he will not do, even his promiſe of the future call and converſion of them, and of their return to their own land: for I am the Lord their God; their covenant-God and a covenant-keeping God, Rom. xi. 27.

[d] Siphri apud Yalkut, ut ſupra. [e] Saadiah Caon apud Aben Ezram in loc. Peſikta & alii. [f] Carpzovius de aurea Judæorum Simia, in Theſaur. Theolog. Philolog. vol. 1. p 344. vid. Pfeiffer. dubia vexata cent. 2. loc. 17. p. 145.

℣. 45. But I will for their ſakes remember the covenant of their anceſtors, &c.] Or rather, remember to them[g], to their good and benefit, for their profit and advantage, not for their deſert and merit, for any worth or worthineſs in them; this covenant reſpects not the covenant made with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, as in ℣. 42. but with their fathers, either at Sinai, or rather in the plains of Moab, Deut. xxix. for it follows: whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt in the ſight of the heathen, that I might be their God; whom he brought out of great bondage and diſtreſs in Egypt, with an high hand and ſtretched out arm, and in the ſight of the Egyptians, who were not able to oppoſe it, yea, becauſe of their plagues, were urgent for it; and in the ſight of all the nations round about, who heard of the wonderful power of God in the deliverance of his people; and this he did that he might appear to be their covenant-God, who had taken them into covenant with him, and had taken them under his care and protection, and would be ſtill their king and their God; and who alſo, in like manner, it may be here ſuggeſted, would deliver the people of the Jews out of their preſent exiled and captive ſtate and condition in the ſight of the whole world, and declare himſelf their covenant-God and father: I am the Lord; whoſe will is ſovereign, whoſe power is uncontroulable, who is a covenant-keeping God, faithful to his promiſes, and able to perform them.

℣. 46. Theſe are the ſtatutes, and judgments, and laws, &c.] Which refer not only to thoſe in this chapter, but in all the preceding chapters in this book, and reſpect them all, whether ceremonial, moral, or judicial, which may be ſignified by theſe three words: which the Lord made between him and the children of Iſrael; the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan are, "between his Word and the children of Iſrael:" in mount Sinai; or near it, in the wilderneſs of it, while the children of Iſrael lay encamped about it: by the hand of Moſes; they were firſt delivered to him, and by means of him to the people.

CHAP. XXVII.

THIS chapter contains various laws concerning vows made unto the Lord, whether of perſons whoſe eſtimation was to be made by the prieſt, according to their age, ſex, and condition, ℣. 1—8. or of beaſts, clean and unclean, good or bad, ℣. 9—13. or of houſes, fields, and lands, the eſtimation of which was to be according to its ſeed, and the time of its being ſet apart, whether from or after the year of jubilee, and the number of years to it, ℣. 14—25. with this exception to the above laws, that no firſtling of the Lord's might be ſanctified, and if an unclean beaſt it might be redeemed, but nothing devoted to the Lord, whether of man, beaſt, or field, might be ſold or redeemed, ℣. 26—29. and the chapter is concluded with ſome laws concerning the redemption or change of tithes, what might or what might not be redeemed or changed, ℣. 30—34.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After he had delivered the body of laws in the preceding chapter, which by the cloſe of the laſt ſeem to have been finiſhed; but here ſome rules and inſtructions concerning vows are given, which a man was not obliged to make, but which he did of his own free will and good pleaſure: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, &c.] This being an affair which only concerned them; for the Jewiſh writers ſay [h], by this phraſe the children of Iſrael, Gentiles are excluded: when a man ſhall make a ſingular vow; an unuſual, an uncommon one, a very diſtinguiſhed one, and even what is wonderful, as the word ſignifies; as when a man through uncommon zeal for God and his ſervice, devotes himſelf, or his children, or his cattle, or his houſes or fields to the Lord: the word man, the Jewiſh writers ſay [i], includes every male, and even a Gentile; yea, it is ſaid all eſtimate and are eſtimated, vow and are vowed, prieſts, and Levites, and Iſraelites, women and ſervants [k]: the perſons ſhall be for the Lord by thy eſtimation; as when a man devoted himſelf or any that belonged to him to the ſervice of the ſanctuary, out of his great zeal for it, as to aſſiſt the prieſts and Levites in the meaner ſort of work, as to carry wood, and draw water, and ſweep the tabernacle, and the like; they were not allowed to do theſe things, partly, becauſe it was not the will of God that any or every Iſraelite ſhould be employed in ſuch menial ſervice, and partly becauſe there were men appointed for ſuch work, as well as to prevent too great a number of perſons in the ſanctuary, which would be troubleſome, and only ſtand in one anothers way; wherefore, on every devoted perſon to ſuch ſervice a value or price was ſet, according to the rules after given, which were to be paid in to the prieſts for the ſervice of the ſanctuary, the repair of the houſe, &c. ſee 2 Kings xii. 4, 5. the word may be rendered agreeable to the accents, according to thy eſtimation of ſouls, (or perſons) the vow ſhall be to the Lord [l]; that is, the price of the perſon devoted, according to the eſtimation of the prieſt, or as ſettled by the Lord in ſome following verſes, ſhall be given to him: the word ſouls being uſed, the Jewiſh doctors underſtand it of eſtimation or value of that on which the ſoul or life depends; thus, for inſtance, if a man ſays, the value of my hand or of my feet be upon me, he ſays nothing; but if he ſays, the value of my head or of my liver be upon me, he gives the whole value, i. e. of himſelf; if he ſays the half of my value be upon me, he gives the half of it; but if he ſays, the value of half of me, he gives the whole value: this is the general rule, that on which the ſoul or life depends pays the whole value [m]; for a man cannot live without his head, head, or without his liver, or when half of himself is taken away.

[g] וזכרתי להם & recordabor eis, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius; erga eos, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [h] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Eracin, c. 1. §. 2. [i] Ut ſupra. [k] Miſn. ib. §. 1. [l] בערכך נפשת ליהוה pro tua æſtimatione animarum, votum erit domino, Reinbeck de accent. Heb. p. 320. [m] Miſn. Eracin, c. 5. §. 2, 3.

℣. 3. And thy estimation shall be, &c.] The estimation of the man himself that vowed, or of the priest for him, was not left to be made by either of them at their pleasure, but was to be made according to the following rules, in proportion to the age a person was of to be estimated: of the male from twenty years old even unto sixty years old; the account begins with these, because men of an age from the one to the other are fittest for labour, and therefore to be set at the highest price, as they are in the next clause: even thy estimation shall be fifty shekels of silver, after the shekel of the sanctuary; a shekel was about half a crown of our money, or somewhat less, so that fifty of these amounted to about six pounds: these shekels were to be of the full weight according to the standard that was kept in the sanctuary, and were the highest price that was set upon any; and this was paid equally by all of the same age, whether rich or poor: hence, it is said, "in estimations there is nothing less than "one shekel nor more than fifty [n]."

℣. 4. And if it be a female, &c.] That is, of the same age, full 20 years of age, and not more than 60: then thy estimation shall be thirty shekels; about three pounds ten shillings of our money, the price of a servant, Exod. xxi. 32. the reason of this difference of estimation between a man and a woman is, because the woman is the weaker vessel, and her labour and service of less importance and worth, such as spinning, washing, &c.

℣. 5. And if it be from five years old, even unto twenty years old, &c.] Not that one of five years old is supposed to vow or to make an estimation, but one grown up, that says, the estimation of this little one, who is five years of age, be upon me; and such an one was bound to pay the value of him, which is as follows: then thy estimation shall be of the male twenty shekels, and for the female ten shekels; which were for the one above two pounds, and for the other more than one pound; these were valued at a less price than the former, partly because, generally speaking, there are more die between the age of five and the age of 20 years than between 20 and 60; and partly, because, within that time they are not capable of so much work and service as in the latter; and it may be observed, that the females of this age are not valued in proportion to the females of the other; the estimation of these being just half that of the males, whereas that of the other is more than half; the reason is, that women above 20 years of age their service bears a better proportion to that of men, than that of young women to young men under twenty.

℣. 6. And if it be from a month old even unto five years old, &c.] That is, if a man devotes his child to the Lord within such an age, and says, the estimation of this my son or my daughter be upon me, then he was to pay the value, as next directed; for one under a month old no estimation was to be made: the Jews say, "one less than a month "old may be vowed, but not estimated [o]:" then thy estimation shall be of the male five shekels of silver; somewhat more than ten shillings: and for the female thy estimation shall be three shekels of silver; about seven shillings, which is the least value put on any; and though the lives of male or female at this age are equally uncertain, and the service of either of little worth when near the full time fixed; yet the preference is given to the male, as being of the more perfect kind, and its life generally most desireable.

℣. 7. And if it be from sixty years old and above, &c.] When man is almost past his labour, and it is high time to leave off business: if it be a male, then thy estimation shall be fifteen shekels; about one pound 15 shillings: and for the female ten shekels; about one pound three shillings; it may be observed that there is not the disproportion between a man and a woman in old age as in youth, with respect to the estimation of them; the reason of which is, because there is but little difference in their labour and service; nay, sometimes the woman is most useful and serviceable; for when a man, through age, is quite worn out and his labour gone, an antient woman is capable of managing the affairs of the family, and is of great use and service, either by directing and adviling, or by doing: so Jarchi observes, when persons come to old age, a woman is nearly to be reckoned as a man, and quotes a proverb of theirs; an old man in a house is a broken potsherd in the house (some interpret the word, a snare or stumbling block, that is in the way); an old woman in a house is a treasure in a house, a good sign in a house [p], of great use in the management of the affairs of the family.

℣. 8. But if he be poorer than thy estimation, &c.] If he is so poor that he is not able to pay the value that is set upon him, according to the rules before given: then he shall present himself before the priest; that has made the estimation, according to the above directions, observing the difference of years, and of male and female; but if a person could not pay the said sums that were appointed, he might apply to the priest, and tell his case: and the priest shall value him; put a price upon him he is able to pay, as follows: according to his ability that vowed shall the priest value him; he was to examine into his circumstances, and as they appeared to him he was to put a value on him, which was to be paid, but not less than a shekel; for if he could not pay that, it was to remain as a debt until he could [q]; and it was the ability of him that made the vow that was to be enquired into, and according to which the estimation was to be made, and not of him that was vowed: so it is said in the Misnah, "ability is regarded in the vower, and years in the vowed, and estimations in the estimated, and according to the time of the estimation: ability in the vower, how? a poor man that estimates a rich man, pays the value of a poor man; and a rich man that estimates a poor man, pays the value of a rich man:—if he is poor and afterwards becomes rich, or rich and afterwards poor, he pays the price of a rich man" [r]; but the sense which Jarchi gives is, that a priest in such a case was to judge according to what a man has, and so order him to pay, but was to leave him so as he might live, a bed and bolster, and working tools, and if he had an ass he might leave him that.

℣. 9. And if it be a beast whereof men bring an offering to the Lord, &c.] That is, if such a creature is devoted, which is of that kind which are used in sacrifice to the Lord, such as bullocks, sheep, goats, rams, and lambs: all that any man giveth giveth of ſuch unto the Lord ſhall be holy; ſhall be ſet apart to ſacred uſes, and not applied to prophane or common uſes, but either were for the uſe of the altar or of the prieſts; or the price of them for the repair of the ſanctuary, according as they were devoted.

[n] Misn. Eracin, c. 2. §. 1. [o] Ib. c. 1. §. 1. [p] T. Bab. Eracin, fol. 19. 1. vid. Yalkut, par. 1. fol. 198. 1. [q] Maimon. Hilchot Eracin, c. 3. §. 4. [r] Misn. Eracin, c. 4. §. 1, 2.

℣. 10. He ſhall not alter it nor change it, &c.] Some think theſe two words ſignify the ſame, but Abarbinel [s] makes them different; according to him, to alter is for one of another kind, as one of the herd for one of the flock, or the contrary; and to change for one of the ſame kind: a good for a bad or a bad for a good; or, as the Targum of Jonathan, "that which is perfect for that which has a "blemiſh in it, or what has a blemiſh in it for "that which is perfect;" a change might not be made neither for the better nor for the worſe, but the creature devoted was to be taken as it was; if not fit for ſacrifice it was to be ſold, and its price put to other uſes; for as Abarbinel [t] obſerves, whatſoever was devoted to ſacred uſe was never to be put to any prophane one; and this was alſo to teach men not to be haſty and fickle in ſuch things, but to conſider well what they did, and abide by it; for if ſuch alterations and changes could be admitted of, a man after he had vowed might through covetuouſneſs repent, and bring a bad one inſtead of a good one, or under pretence of bringing a good one inſtead of a bad one, might bring a bad one and ſay it was good, as Bechai [u] obſerves; even one worſe than he had brought, thinking to impoſe upon the ignorance of the prieſt; and indeed if he was ſincere in it, and had a mind to bring a better than what he had vowed, it was not allowed of; if he made any change, though it was for the better, he was to be beaten, as Maimonides [w] affirms: and if he ſhall at all change beaſt for beaſt; whether of the ſame or of a different kind, or whether for better or worſe: then it and the exchange thereof ſhall be holy; both of them were to be the Lord's, and appropriated to ſacred uſe, of one ſort or another, either for ſacrifice or for the prieſt's family, or the price of it for the repairs of the ſanctuary.

℣. 11. And if it be any unclean beaſt, of which they do not offer a ſacrifice unto the Lord, &c.] Any creature, excepting a dog, the price of which was not to be brought into the houſe of the Lord; beſides oxen, ſheep, goats, rams, and lambs; tho' ſome underſtand it even of ſuch that have blemiſhes on them, and ſo not fit to be offered unto the Lord; ſo Jarchi and others [x]: then he ſhall preſent the beaſt before the prieſt; to be viewed, examined, and judged of as to its worth, and a value put upon it, that it might be ſold or redeemed, as no other but a beaſt might; ſo it is obſerved birds, wood, frankincenſe, and miniſtring veſſels have no redemption, for it is only ſaid a beaſt [y].

℣. 12. And the prieſt ſhall value it, whether it be good or bad, &c.] Put a price upon it according to its worth, as it ſhall appear to him: as thou valueſt it who art the prieſt, ſo ſhall it be; that ſhall be the price at which it ſhall be ſold, not to the owner or devoter of it, for he muſt give more, as appears from the following verſe; but as Jarchi obſerves, to all other men who come to purchaſe it.

℣. 13. But if he will at all redeem it, &c.] The owner of it, or he that has devoted it, if he is determined to have it again at any rate: he ſhall add a fifth part thereof to thy eſtimation; he ſhall give the full price for it, as rated by the prieſt, and for which it might be ſold to another man, and a fifth part of the value of it beſides; this was done that the full price might be paid for it, the prieſt not knowing, as it might be, the worth of it ſo well as the owner; and that the value of conſecrated things might be kept to, and to make men careful how and what they devoted, ſince, though redeemable, they were obliged to pay a large price for them.

℣. 14. And when a man ſhall ſanctify his houſe to be holy unto the Lord, &c.] Shall ſet it apart for ſacred ſervice, devote it to holy uſes, ſo that it may be ſold, and the money laid out in ſacrifices, the repairs of the temple, &c. under this any other goods are comprehended, concerning which the Jews ſay, "he that ſanctifieth his goods, and his wife's dowry is upon him, or he is a debtor; his wife cannot demand her dowry out of that which is ſanctified, nor a creditor his debt; but if he will redeem he may redeem, on condition that he gives the dowry to the wife, and the debt to the creditor; if he has ſet apart 90 pounds and his debt is 100, he may add a penny more, and with it redeem thoſe goods, on condition he gives the wife her dowry and the creditor his debt: whether he ſanctifies or eſtimates his goods, he has no power over his wife's or children's clothes, nor over coloured things, dyed on their account, nor on new ſhoes he has bought for them", [z] &c. again it is ſaid [a], "if any one ſanctified his goods, and there were among them things fit for the altar, wine, oil, and fowls, R. Eliezer ſays, they might be ſold to thoſe that need any of that kind, and with the price of them burnt-offerings might be brought, and the reſt of the goods fell to the repair of the temple": then the prieſt ſhall eſtimate it whether it be good or bad; ſhall examine it of what bigneſs and in what condition it is, whether a large well-built houſe or not, and whether in good repair or not, and accordingly ſet a price upon it: as the prieſt ſhall eſtimate it ſo ſhall it ſtand; according to the price he ſhall ſet upon it, it may be ſold; whoever will give it may purchaſe it, excepting the owner or he that has ſanctified it, he muſt pay a fifth part more, as follows.

℣. 15. And if he that ſanctifieth it will redeem his houſe, &c.] An houſe ſet apart for holy uſes might be redeemed, either by another paying the price ſet upon it by the prieſt, or by the original owner of it, paying a fifth part more; and this was the caſe, whether of houſes in walled cities or in villages: ſo Maimonides ſays, "he that ſanctifies his houſe, whether it be one of thoſe in walled cities, or of thoſe in villages, it may be always redeemed; he that redeems one out of the hand of holineſs (or which has been ſanctified) if it is a houſe in a walled city, and remains in the poſſeſſion of the redeemer 12 months, it is abſolutely his; but if it is a houſe in the villages, and the jubilee comes, and it is in the poſſeſſion of the redeemer, it returns to its owner in the jubilee" [b]: but if the owner of it had a mind to redeem it after he had devoted it, then he ſhall add the fifth part of the money of thy eſtimation unto it, and it ſhall be his; that is, he was to give a fifth part more for the houſe than it was valued at by the prieſt, or than another might have it for; the reaſon of which was, to make men careful how they ſanctified or vowed their houſes or goods, and that it might be certain that the full

[s] Apud Muſc. in loc. [t] Ibid. [u] Apud Muſc. ib. [w] Hilchot Temurah, c. 1. §. 1.
[x] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Menachot, c. 12. §. 1. [y] Miſn. ib. [z] Miſn. Eracin, c. 6. §. 2. 5.
[a] Miſn. Shekalim, c. 4. §. 8. [b] Hilchot Eracin, c. 5. §. 3. 4.

full value was given for it, the worth of which the prieſt might not know ſo well as the owner, and the latter, being willing to give the price ſet by the former, might give ſuſpicion of it; wherefore, in order to have the full price of it with certainty, and to ſet an high value on things devoted, the owner was to give a fifth part more than the eſtimation of it: thus, for inſtance, if an houſe thus devoted, was valued by the prieſt at the price of 100 pounds, the owner was obliged, if he would redeem it, to give an 120.

℣. 16. And if a man ſhall ſanctify unto the Lord ſome part of a field of his poſſeſſion, &c.] That which he enjoyed by inheritance from his father, to diſtinguiſh it from a field of his own purchaſe, as in ℣. 22. and which might be devoted, not all of it but a part of it; partly that he might have ſomething to live upon, or to improve for a livelihood for himſelf and family, and partly that eſtates might not be alienated entirely from their families and tribes in which they were: then thy eſtimation ſhall be according to the ſeed thereof; not according to the field, the goodneſs or badneſs of that, one field being good and another bad, as Jarchi obſerves, but according to the quantity of ſeed which it produced, or rather, which it required for the ſowing of it: an homer of barley-ſeed ſhall be valued at fifty ſhekels of ſilver; which was near ſix pounds of our money; and here we muſt carefully diſtinguiſh between an omer, beginning with an o, and an homer, beginning with an h; not adverting to this has led ſome learned men into miſtakes in their notes on this place, for an omer was the tenth part of an ephah, Exod. xvi. 36. and an ephah is but the tenth part of an homer, Ezek xlv. 11. which makes a very great difference in this meaſure of barley, for an homer of it contained ten ephahs or buſhels; and even according to this account a buſhel of barley is rated very high, for ten buſhels at 50 ſhekels, reckoning a ſhekel half a crown, or them at ſix pounds five ſhillings, are at the rate of 12 ſhillings and ſix pence a buſhel, which is too high a price for barley; wherefore as an ephah, the tenth part of an homer, contained three ſeahs or pecks, and which ſome call buſhels, then an homer conſiſted of 30 buſhels, which brings down the value of it to little more than two ſhillings a buſhel, which is much nearer the true value of barley; but the truth of the matter is, that the value of barley for ſowing is not aſcertained, as our verſion leads us to think; for the words ſhould be rendered, if the ſeed be an homer of barley, it, the field, ſhall be valued at fifty ſhekels of ſilver; if the field take ſo much ſeed to ſow it as the quantity of an homer of barley, then it was to be rated at 50 ſhekels of ſilver; and if it took two homers, then it was to be rated at 100 ſhekels, and ſo on.

℣. 17. If he ſanctify his field from the year of jubilee, &c.] The very year, as Aben Ezra, while it is current, or when it is paſt, and he immediately ſanctifies it for an holy uſe, and one comes to redeem it, as Jarchi ſays, as ſoon as ever it is devoted, and a prieſt has valued it, and there is a purchaſer of it: according to thy eſtimation it ſhall ſtand; what price ſoever the prieſt ſet upon it, that it was to go at, and he that had a mind to purchaſe it might have it for it, unleſs it was he that devoted it, and then he was to give a fifth part more, as afterwards expreſſed.

℣. 18. But if he ſanctify his field after the jubilee, &c.] Some years after it, more or fewer, or it may be, when half way towards another jubilee, or nearer: then the prieſt ſhall reckon unto him the money according to the years that remain, even unto the year of the jubilee; thus, for inſtance, if it only required an homer of barley to ſow it, and the whole value of it from jubilee to jubilee was but 50 ſhekels of ſilver; then ſuppoſing it to be ſanctified in the middle of the 50 years, or at 25 years end, it was to be reckoned at 25 ſhekels, and ſold for that money, and ſo in proportion, reckoning a ſhekel for a year: and it ſhall be abated from thy eſtimation; not the year of jubilee, but a ſhekel for every year was to be deducted from the original value of 50 ſhekels, according to the number of years that had paſſed or were to come.

℣. 19. And if he that ſanctified the field ſhall in any wiſe redeem it, &c.] Is deſirous of it, and determined upon it at any rate, repenting that he had parted with it in this manner: then he ſhall add the fifth part of the money of thy eſtimation to it; the Jeruſalem Targum is, the fifth part of the ſhekels of ſilver; that is, if he has a mind to redeem it, and is reſolved on it, as ſoon as he has ſanctified it, then, beſides the 50 ſhekels of ſilver it is rated at, and might be ſold for to another, he muſt pay a 5th part thereof, that is, ten ſhekels more, for reaſons before given, ℣. 15. and it ſhall be aſſured to him; remain firm and ſtable with him, abide by him, and he in the poſſeſſion of it as his property, ever after, as if he had never ſanctified it.

℣. 20. And if he will not redeem the field, &c.] He that ſanctified it, does not care to give for it the ſettled price of the fifth part beſides, but chuſes it ſhould be diſpoſed of for the uſes he devoted it to: or if he have ſold the field to another man; that is, either the original owner having bought it and ſold it again, or rather the prieſt, the treaſurer, as Jarchi, who had the diſpoſal of it, for the uſes and purpoſes for which it was devoted, when ſold by him: it ſhall not be redeemed any more; it was not in the power of him that ſanctified it to make a purchaſe of it again; the buyer of it might not ſell it to him again, for otherwiſe, by that means he might come at it cheaper than the law directs; beſides, there is another reaſon for it, which is ſuggeſted in the next verſe.

℣. 21. But the field, when it goeth out in the jubilee, &c.] Out of the hand of him that bought it: ſhall be holy unto the Lord, as a field devoted; though it went out of the hand of the purchaſer, it did not return to him that ſanctified or devoted it, but was ſeparated to ſacred uſes for the ſervice of the Lord; for every devoted thing, whether of man, beaſt or field, was moſt holy to the Lord, ℣. 28: the poſſeſſion thereof ſhall be the prieſt's; it did not return to the treaſurer of the ſanctuary, who had ſold it to another for the repair of the temple, as Jarchi obſerves, but as a devoted field it was given to the prieſts, as it is ſaid, every thing devoted in Iſrael ſhall be thine, Numb. xviii. 14. and even this was divided, as he ſays, between the prieſts of that ward or courſe that happened to be on the day of atonement of the jubilee year: but in caſe it never was redeemed, but remained ſanctified in the year of jubilee, the prieſts did not poſſeſs it without paying for it; and ſo the Jewiſh canon runs [c], "the jubilee comes, and the field is "not redeemed, the prieſts enter into it, and pay "the price of it;" on which one of the commentators [d] obſerves, when any one has redeemed it, the money becomes ſacred for the repairs of the temple; and when the jubilee comes, it goes out (i. e.

[c] Miſn. Eracin, c. 7. §. 4.

[d] Bartenora in ib.

(i. e. of the hands of the purchaſer) to the prieſts freely; but if it is not redeemed, the prieſts muſt pay the price of 50 ſhekels, and take it; and if even it was bought by a prieſt before out of the hands of the treaſurer, it went from him to his brethren the prieſts, in the year of jubilee: the rule is this, "if any of the prieſts redeem it, and lo it is in his poſſeſſion, he may not ſay, ſeeing it goes out to the prieſts in the year of jubilee, lo it is in my poſſeſſion, lo it is mine, but it ſhall go out to all his brethren the prieſts" [e].

℣. 22. And if a man ſanctify unto the Lord a field which he hath bought, &c.] With his own money, of ſome perſon in poverty and diſtreſs, who was obliged to ſell it, and which, according to a former law, returned to the original proprietor in the year of jubilee: which is not of the fields of his poſſeſſion; which he has not by inheritance from his fathers. Jarchi obſerves, there is a difference between a field bought, and a field poſſeſſed; for a field bought is not divided to the prieſts in the year of jubilee, becauſe a man can't ſanctify it but until the year of jubilee; for in the year of jubilee it would go out of his hands, and return to the owner; wherefore if he comes to redeem it, he muſt redeem it with the price fixed for the field of poſſeſſion: the Jewiſh doctors are divided about a field bought of a father by a ſon, whether it is a field of purchaſe or of poſſeſſion [f].

℣. 23. Then the prieſt ſhall reckon unto him the worth of thy eſtimation, even unto the year of jubilee, &c.] The prieſt was to eſtimate the field of purchaſe ſanctified, and ſet a price upon it according to the beſt of his judgment, and give it to the perſon that ſanctified it, or whoever would redeem it; and this eſtimate was made, according to the number of years there were to the year of jubilee: and he ſhall give thine eſtimation in that day; the price ſet upon the field by the prieſt immediately, either the ſanctifier, but without adding the fifth part, as in ℣. 19. ſo Maimonides [g] obſerves, or any other purchaſer: as a holy thing unto the Lord; to ſacred uſes, as the repairs of the temple, &c. to which the purchaſe-money was appropriated.

℣. 24. In the year of jubilee, the field ſhall return unto him of whom it was bought, &c.] Not to him that ſanctified it, whether he redeemed it or no; nor to him that bought it of the treaſurer of the temple after it was ſanctified; but to the original proprietor and owner of it, of whom he bought it that ſanctified it, for ſo it follows: even to him to whom the poſſeſſion of the land did belong; which was a poſſeſſion of his he had by inheritance from his fathers, and therefore, according to the law of the year of jubilee, was then to return to him, and could be retained no longer, nor even converted to holy uſes; for as it is ſaid in the Miſnah [h], "a "field of purchaſe goes not out to the prieſts in "the year of jubilee; for no man can ſanctify a "thing which is not his own;" as what he had purchaſed was no longer his than to the year of jubilee, and therefore could not devote it to ſacred uſes for any longer time.

℣. 25. And all thy eſtimation ſhall be according to the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, &c.] The ſhekel kept in the ſanctuary, which was the ſtandard of all ſhekels; not that there was a ſhekel in the ſanctuary different from the common one; for every ſhekel ought to have been as that, of the full weight and worth of it; and the eſtimation was to be according to ſuch a ſhekel, and the money paid in ſuch, even in full weight: twenty gerahs ſhall be the ſhekel; which the Targum of Jonathan calls Meahs or Oboli, one of which was about three-half pence of our money, ſcarce ſo much, and weighed near eleven grains, as biſhop Cumberland [i] has calculated; ſee Ezek. xlv. 12.

℣. 26. Only the firſtlings of the beaſts, &c.] Theſe are excepted from being ſanctified, or ſet apart for ſacred uſes for a very good reaſon, ſuggeſted in the next clauſe: which ſhould be the Lord's firſtling, no man ſhall ſanctify it; it being what he has a claim upon, and ordered to be ſanctified to him by a law previous to this, Exod. xiii. 2. wherefore to ſanctify ſuch a creature, would be to ſanctify what was his before; not merely in a general ſenſe, in which all creatures are his, but in a ſpecial ſenſe, having in a peculiar manner required it as his; and therefore to ſanctify, or vow to him, what was his before, muſt be triſling with him, and mocking of him: whether it be ox, or ſheep; the firſtlings of either of them: it is the Lord's; which he has claimed as his own ſpecial and peculiar property, antecedent to any vow of its owner.

℣. 27. And if it be of an unclean beaſt, &c.] This is to be underſtood, not of the firſtling of unclean creatures in common, which were to be redeemed with a lamb, and not with money, according to the eſtimation of the prieſt, and a fifth part added to that; but of ſuch as were ſanctified, or vowed, for the reparation of the ſanctuary, as Jarchi notes: then he ſhall redeem it according to thine eſtimation; the price the prieſt ſhould ſet upon it, how much it was worth in his judgment: and ſhall add a fifth part of it thereto; to the price ſet upon, a fifth part of that over and above the ſum; this the ſanctifier, or he that made the vow, was obliged to pay, if he thought fit to redeem it: or if it be not redeemed; by him, he does not chuſe to give the price, and the fifth part: then it ſhall be ſold according to thy eſtimation; to another man, without the fifth part, that chuſes to purchaſe it, and then the purchaſe-money was laid out for ſacred uſes.

℣. 28. Notwithſtanding no devoted thing that a man ſhall devote unto the Lord, &c.] This is a different vow from the former, expreſſed by ſanctifying; for though ſanctifying and devoting were both vows, yet the latter had an execration or curſe added to it, by which a man imprecated a curſe upon himſelf, if that itſelf, which he devoted, was put to any other uſe than that for which he devoted it; wherefore this ſort of vow was abſolute and irrevocable, and what was vowed was unalienable, and therefore not to be ſold or redeemed as afterwards expreſſed, whereas things ſanctified might: of all that he hath, both of men and beaſt, and of the field of his poſſeſſion ſhall be ſold or redeemed; but muſt be put to the uſe for which it was devoted. This muſt be underſtood of ſuch as were his own, and he had a right to diſpoſe of; which were in his own power, as Aben Ezra interprets the phraſe, of all that he hath; if of men, they muſt be ſuch as were his ſlaves, which he had a deſpotic power over; ſuch as he could ſell, or give to another, or leave to his children for a perpetual inheritance, ch. xxv. 46. and could diſpoſe of as he pleaſed, and ſo devote to the ſervice of the prieſts: thus Jarchi interprets it of men-ſervants and maid-ſervants, Canaanitiſh ones; and if of beaſts, ſuch as were his own property, and not another's; and if of fields, ſuch as were his poſſeſſion by inheritance.

[e] Miſn. ib. §. 3. [f] Ib. §. 5. [g] Hilchot Eracin, c. 4. §. 26. [h] Ut ſupra.
[i] Of Scripture-weights and meaſures, ch. 4. p. 111.

tance. Some Jewiſh writers, as Abendana, from the phraſe, of all that he hath, gather, that a man might devote only a part of what he had, and not the whole; and ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah, "a man may devote of his flock, and of his herd, of his ſervants and maidens Canaanites, and of the field of his poſſeſſion; but if he devote all of them, they are not devoted" [k], the vow is null and void; and ſo one of the commentators [l] upon it ſays, he may devote ſome moveable things, but not all; ſome of his Canaaniti∫h ſervants and maidens, but not all; ſome part of the field of his poſſeſſion, but not the whole: but a man's children, and Hebrew ſervants, and purchaſed fields, according to the Jewiſh canon, might not be devoted; "if any one devotes his ſon or his daughter, his ſervant or his handmaid that are Hebrews, or the field of his purchaſe, they are not devoted, (or to be reckoned ſo) for no man devotes (or ought to devote) what is not his own" [m]. A commentator [n] excepts his daughter, and ſays, he may devote his daughter, becauſe he may ſell her whilſt a minor, but not an adult virgin; ſee Exod. xxi. 7: every devoted thing is moſt holy unto the Lord; and therefore not to be appropriated to any uſe but his, nor to be meddled with, not even touched or handled by any but the prieſts, as the moſt holy things that were eatable, were only to be eaten by them.

℣. 29. None devoted, which ſhall be devoted of men, ſhall be redeemed, &c.] This is ſaid, not of ſuch men as are devoted to the Lord, as in the preceding verſe; for it is not ſaid here as there, none devoted unto the Lord, but of ſuch as are devoted to ruin and deſtruction, for whom there was no redemption, but they muſt die; nor is it ſaid, which is devoted by men, but of men, or from among men; whether they be devoted by God himſelf, as all idolaters, and particularly the ſeven nations of the land of Canaan, and eſpecially the Amalekites, who therefore were not to be ſpared on any account, but to be put to death, Exod. xxii. 20. Deut. vii. 1, 2. and xx. 16, 17. and xxv. 19. 1 Sam. xv. 3. So in the Talmud [o], this is interpreted of Canaaniti∫h ſervants and handmaids; or whether devoted by men to deſtruction, either by the people of Iſrael, as their avowed enemies they ſhould take in war, whom, and their cities, they vowed to the Lord they would utterly deſtroy, Numb. xxi. 2, 3. and of ſuch Aben Ezra interprets the words of the text; or ſuch as were doomed by the civil magiſtrates to die for capital crimes, by ſtoning, burning, ſtrangling and ſlaying with the ſword. And this ſenſe is given into by many; becauſe the judges kill with many kinds of death, therefore, ſays Cha∫kuni, it is ſaid every devoted thing, as if he ſhould ſay, with whatſoever of the four kinds of death the judges paſs ſentence of deſtruction on a a man, he muſt die that death; ſo Jarchi and Ben Melech interpret it of ſuch as go out to be ſlain, i. e. by the decree of the judges; and if one ſays, his eſtimation, or the price of him be upon me, he ſays nothing, it is of no avail: but ſhall ſurely be put to death; as the ſame writer obſerves, ſo he goes forth to die, he ſhall not be redeemed, neither by price nor eſtimation. The Targum of Jonathan is, "he ſhall not be redeemed with ſilver, "but with burnt-offerings, and holy ſacrifices, and "petitions of mercy, becauſe he is condemned by a "ſentence to be ſlain." And of either, or of all of theſe, may the words be underſtood, and not as they are by ſome, as if Jewiſh parents and maſters had ſuch a power over their children and ſervants to devote them to death, or in ſuch a manner devote them, that they were obliged to put them to death; for though they had power in ſome caſes to ſell, yet had no power over their lives to take them away, or to devote them to death, which would be a breach of the ſixth command, and puniſhable with death; for even a maſter that accidentally killed his ſervant, did not eſcape puniſhment; nay, if he did him any injury, by ſmiting out an eye, or a tooth, he was obliged to give him his freedom, and much leſs had he power to take away his life, or devote him to deſtruction. Some have thought, that it was through a miſtaken ſenſe of this law, that Jephthah having made a raſh vow ſacrificed his daughter; but it is a queſtion, whether he did or no.

℣. 30. And all the tithe of the land, &c.] Of which there were various ſorts, the firſt tithe, the tithe out of the tithe, the ſecond tithe, and the poors tithe, which are generally reduced to three, ſee Tobit i. 7. ſo Maimonides [p] ſays, "after they "had ſeparated the firſt tithe every year, they ſe-"parate the ſecond tithe, as it is ſaid Deut. xiv. "22, 23. and in the third year, and in the ſixth, "they ſeparate the poors tithe, inſtead of the ſe-"cond tithe:" ſo that, properly ſpeaking, there were but two tithes, though commonly reckoned three; the tithes of all eatables were given to the Levites every year, and a tenth part of that given by the Levites to the prieſts, and the ſecond tithe was eaten by the owners; inſtead of which, according to the above writer, in the third and ſixth years it was given to the poor, and called theirs; of this ſecond tithe, Jarchi interprets this law, and ſo does Maimonides [q]: whether of the ſeed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's; is to be given to him as an acknowledgment of his being the proprietor of the land, and that all the increaſe of it is owing to his bleſſing, and therefore is given in way of gratitude to him: the former of theſe takes in all ſorts of corn that is man's food, as wheat and barley; and the latter wine and oil, and all ſorts of fruits that are eatable; for it is ſaid to be a general rule, that whatever is for food, and is preſerved (having an owner, and not being common) and grows up out of the earth, is bound to tithes [r]: it is holy unto the Lord; the firſt tithe was eaten by the prieſts and levites only, and the other before the Lord in Jeruſalem only, and that by clean perſons. Something of this kind obtained among the heathens, it may be in imitation of this, particularly among the Grecians; Piſiſtratus [s] tells Solon, that every one of the Athenians gave a tenth part of his inheritance, not to me, ſays he, who was their governor, but for public ſacrifices, and the common good, and when engaged in war, to defray the charge of it; and ſo by the oracle of Apollo, the Corcyræans were directed to ſend to Olympia and Delphos the tenth part of the produce of their fields [t]; and by the ſame oracle, the iſland of the Syphnians, in which was a golden mine, were ordered to bring the tenth of it to the ſame place [u]. So the Pelaſgi [w] in a time of ſcarcity vowed the tithes of all their increaſe to the gods, and having obtained their wiſh, devoted the tenth of all their fruits and cattle to them.

℣.

[k] Eracin, c. 8. §. 4. Bab. Gittin, fol. 38. 2.
[l] Bartenora in ib.
[m] Ib. §. 5.
[n] Ib. in ib.
[o] T. Bab. Gittin, fol. 38. 2.
[p] Hilchot Maaſer Sheni, c. 1. §. 1.
[q] Hilchot Maaſer, c. 1. §. 2.
[r] Miſn. Maaſerot, c. 1. §. 1.
[s] In Laert. vit. Solon. p. 36.
[t] Pauſan Phocica, ſive, l. 10. p. 624.
[u] Ibid p. 628.
[w] Dionyſ. Halicarnaſſ. apud Euſeb. Evangel. Præpar. l. 4. p. 159.

℣. 31. And if a man will redeem ought of his tithes, &c.] Of his own, and not his neighbours, as Jarchi obſerves; for if he redeemed the tithes of his neighbour, but did not add a fifth part which he was obliged to do if he redeemed his own, as follows: he ſhall add thereunto the fifth part thereof; beſides giving the value for what part of his tithes he redeemed, he gave a fifth part of that ſum over and above; as ſuppoſing the tithe was worth fifty ſhillings, then he gave that, and ten ſhillings more, and ſo in proportion. The uſe of this redemption, as Jarchi ſuggeſts, was, that he might have liberty of eating it in any place; for he underſtands it of the ſecond tithe, as before obſerved, and which was to be eaten at Jeruſalem.

℣. 32. And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, &c.] Of oxen and ſheep, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem; for this law only concerns ſuch, as Maimonides [x] obſerves, for none but clean beaſts were tithed, though the firſtlings of unclean beaſts were to be redeemed: even of whatſoever paſſeth under the rod, the tenth ſhall be holy unto the Lord; which being ſlain, the blood and fat were to be offered on the altar, and the fleſh eaten by the owners, as Jarchi obſerves; who adds, this is not reckoned with the reſt of the gifts of the prieſthood; and we don't find it was given to the prieſts: the rod, under which theſe are ſaid to paſs, is either the ſhepherd's rod, as Aben Ezra, under which they paſſed morning and evening, when led out or brought in, as in Jer. xxxiii. 13. or the rod of the tither: the manner of tithing, as deſcribed by Maimonides, was this; "he gathers all the lambs and all the calves into a field, and makes a little door to it, ſo that two can't go out at once; and he places their dams without, and they bleat, ſo that the lambs hear their voice, and go out of the fold to meet them, as it is ſaid, whatſoever paſſeth under the rod; for it muſt paſs of itſelf, and not be brought out by his hand; and when they go out of the fold, one after another, he begins and counts them with the rod, one, two, three, four, five, ſix, ſeven, eight; nine, and the tenth that goes out, whether male or female, whether perfect or blemiſhed, he marks it with a red mark, and ſays, this is the tithe" [y]: the time of tithing the cattle was on the firſt of Elul or Auguſt; for ſo it is ſaid [z], "the firſt of Elul is the beginning of the "year for the tithing of beaſts;" when they tithed all that were yeaned the preceding year: but we are elſewhere told [a], there were three times for tithing beaſts; 15 days before the paſſover, (which was the laſt of Adar or February) and 15 days before the Pentecoſt, and 15 days before the feaſt of tabernacles, which was the laſt of Elul or Auguſt; and theſe tithings were made for the ſake of thoſe that went up to theſe feaſts, that it might be certain the cattle ſold and eaten were tithed.

℣. 33. He ſhall not ſearch whether it be good or bad, &c.] In a good or bad ſtate of health, fat or lean, perfect or blemiſhed, but take it as it is, be it what it will: neither ſhall he change it; neither for the better nor the worſe, no alteration was to be made, but the beaſt was to be taken as it came: and if he change it at all, then both it and the change ſhall be holy; be ſacred to the Lord, and for his uſe and ſervice; this was done to reſtrain men from making any alteration, ſince if they did, both the one and the other were taken from them; yea, were to be beaten with forty ſtripes, ſave one [b]; whether this change was of the herd with the flock, or of the flock with the herd; or of lambs with goats, or goats with lambs; or of males with females, or of females with males; or of perfect with blemiſhed ones, or of blemiſhed ones with perfect ones: it ſhall not be redeemed; from whence the Jews [c] gather, that a tithe-beaſt was not to be bought and ſold, whether blemiſhed or unblemiſhed.

℣. 34. Theſe are the commandments which the Lord commanded Moſes, &c.] Meaning either what are contained in this chapter, or rather in the whole book, which he delivered to Moſes: for the children of Iſrael; to be obſerved by them, prieſts and people: and theſe were given to him in mount Sinai; either when upon it, or rather when near it, in the wilderneſs of it, after the tabernacle was ſet up, and the Lord ſpake to him out of that; ſee ch. i. 1. and xxv. 1.

[x] Hilchot Becorot, c. 6. §. 1. [y] Ibid. c. 7. §. 1. [z] Miſn Roſhhaſhanah, c. 1. §. 1. [a] Miſn. Becorot, c. 9. §. 1. [b] Miſnah Temurah, c. 1. §. 1, 2. [c] Maimon. Hilchot Becorot, c 6. §. 5, 6.

The Fourth Book of MOSES, called NUMBERS.

THIS Book has its name from the account it gives of the numbers of the children of Iſrael, twice taken particularly; which name it has with the Greeks and Latins, and ſo with the Syriac and Arabic verſions; but with the Jews it is called ſometimes Vajedabber, from the firſt word of it, and the Lord ſpake; and ſometimes Bemidbar, from the fifth word of the firſt verſe, in the wilderneſs, and ſometimes Sepher Pikkudim; or as with Origen [a], Ammeſphékodim, the book of muſters or ſurveys. That it was wrote by Moſes is not to be doubted; and is indeed ſuggeſted by our Lord himſelf, John v. 46. compared with ch. iii. 14. and the references to it, in the New Teſtament, fully aſcertain to us chriſtians, the authenticity of it, as that of our Lord hinted at, and thoſe of the apoſtle in 1 Cor. x. 4. Heb. ix. 13, 14. It contains an hiſtory of the affairs of the Iſraelites, and of their travel in the wilderneſs for the ſpace of 38 years; though the principal facts it relates were done in the ſecond year of their coming out of Egypt, and in the laſt of their being in the wilderneſs; and it is not merely hiſtorical, but gives a particular account of ſeveral laws, ceremonial and judicial, to be obſerved by the people of Iſrael, as well as has many things in it very inſtructive, both of a moral and evangelical nature.

CHAP. I.

IN this chapter orders are given to Moſes to take the number of the children of Iſrael, from 20 years old and upwards, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and the men that were to aſſiſt in this work, one of each tribe are mentioned by name, ℣. 4—16. all which was accordingly done, ℣. 17, 18, 19. and the particular numbers of each tribe are recorded, as they were taken, ℣. 20—44. and the ſum total is given, ℣. 45, 46. the Levites being excepted, who were employed about the tabernacle, and ſo not to be employed in military ſervice, ℣. 47—51. they encamping about that, whilſt the Iſraelites pitched their tents every man by his own camp and ſtandard, ℣. 52, 53, 54.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes in the wilderneſs of Sinai, &c.] Which is different from the wilderneſs of Sin, Exod. xvi. 1. and had its name from the mountain ſo called, on which God gave the law of the decalogue, and where the Iſraelites had been encamped eleven months, Exod. xix. 1, 2: in the tabernacle of the congregation; which had now been ſet up a whole month, and out of which the Lord had delivered to Moſes the ſeveral laws recorded in the preceding book in that ſpace of time, Exod. xl. 17. Lev. i. 1: on the firſt day of the ſecond month; the month Ijar, as the Targum of Jonathan, which anſwers to part of our April, and part of May, and was the ſecond month of the eccleſiaſtical year, which began with Abib or Niſan: in the ſecond year after they were come out of the land of Egypt; that is, the children of Iſrael, who had now been a year and half a month out of it: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Take ye the ſum of all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Excepting the Levites; nor were any account taken of the mixt multitude that came out of Egypt with the children of Iſrael, only of them; and this account was taken, partly to obſerve the fulfilment of the divine promiſe to Abraham concerning the multiplication of his ſeed, and partly that it might be obſerved, that at the end of 38 years from hence, when they were numbered again, there were but three left of this large number, their carcaſſes falling in the wilderneſs becauſe of their ſins; and chiefly, as Aben Ezra obſerves, this ſum was now taken to fix their ſtandards, and for their better and more orderly journeying and encampment; for on the twentieth of this month they ſet forward on their journey from hence, ch. x. 11, 12. the word for the order is in the plural number, take ye, being given both to Moſes and Aaron, who were to take the number, and did, ℣. 3: after their families; into which their their tribes were divided: by the houſe of their fathers; for if the mother was of one tribe, and the father of another, the family was according to the tribe of the father, as Jarchi notes, a mother's family being never called a family, as Aben Ezra obſerves: with the number of their names; of every particular perſon, whoſe name was inſerted in a liſt or regiſter: every male by their poll; or head [b]; for none but males were numbered: the Lord's ſpiritual Iſrael are a numbered people, written in the book of life, told into the hand of Chriſt, and exactly known by him, even by name; yea, all that belong to him are numbered, and the very hairs of their heads.

[a] Apud Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. l. 6. c. 25.

℣. 3. From 20 years old and upwards, &c.] All that had entered into their 20th year, or, as it ſhould rather ſeem, who were full 20 years of age, and all that were above it without any limitation; though ſome limit it to 50 and others to 60 years, when men may be reaſonably excuſed going to war; for to know who were fit for it ſeems to be a principal deſign of this order, as follows: all that are able to go forth to war in Iſrael; who being about to journey, might expect to meet with enemies, with whom they would be obliged to engage in battle; and therefore it was proper to know their ſtrength, and whom to call out upon occaſion: Aben Ezra obſerves, that the phraſe in Iſrael excepts the mixt multitude; thoſe were not of Iſrael, and ſo not numbered, and perhaps not to be truſted or depended upon in war; nor were they muſtered and marſhalled by the ſtandards of the ſeveral tribes; in a myſtical ſenſe, thoſe numbered may ſignify the valiant of Iſrael, the ſame as the young men in 1 John ii. 14. ſee Cant. iii. 7, 8. thou and Aaron ſhall number them by their armies; each tribe making a conſiderable army, ſee the note on Exod. vii. 4. theſe people were now typical of the church of God in its militant ſtate in the wilderneſs, for which they are provided, and prepared, and accoutred.

℣. 4. And with you there ſhall be a man of every tribe, &c.] Excepting Levi, of which Moſes and Aaron were, to aſſiſt in taking the account, and to ſee that it was an exact and perfect one: every one head of the houſe of his fathers; and prince of the tribe he belonged to, as appears from ℣. 16. and ch. vii. where an account is given of the ſame perſons as princes of the tribes that offered at the dedication of the altar, who here aſſiſted in the taking this account: the Targum of Jonathan calls them each a prince, as prince Elizur, &c.

℣. 5. And theſe are the names of the men that ſhall ſtand with you, &c.] Be preſent with Moſes and Aaron when numbering the people; not merely as ſpectators of the affair, and inſpectors of the accounts, but as aſſiſtants in the work; each man in his tribe, being beſt acquainted with the families and houſes in it; and theſe men were not pitched upon by Moſes and Aaron, nor choſen by their reſpective tribes, but were appointed and named by the Lord himſelf, which was doing them great honour: of the tribe of Reuben; or for Reuben [c], for the taking the number of men in this tribe; and ſo of all the reſt, ſee ℣. 44. Elizur the ſon of Shedeur; from hence to the end of ℣. 15. the names of thoſe ſeveral men are given, which were very proper for Moſes and Aaron to know, though of little importance to us; nor the ſignification of their ſeveral names, given by Ainſworth and others; only, as biſhop Patrick obſerves, moſt of them ſhew how much God was in the thoughts of thoſe who impoſed theſe names on their children, ſeveral of them having in them El or Eli, God or my God, and Shaddai, almighty or all-ſufficient: to which may be added, that in ſome of them they ſeem to reſpect the Meſſiah, as Elizur, ſignifying my God the rock; and Shelumiel, may be rendered, God my peace; and Zuriſhaddai, my rock the Almighty, or all-ſufficient; and Pedahzur, the rock redeemeth: nor is there any thing of any moment to be remarked, unleſs the order in which the ſeveral tribes are placed; and firſt the children of Leah beginning with Reuben, the firſt-born; and the reſt, Simeon and Judah, are ranked according to their birth; Levi being omitted, becauſe that tribe was not now numbered, and beſides, Moſes and Aaron were of it; and then Iſſachar and Zebulun; after thoſe the children of Rachel, becauſe of her honour and glory above the handmaids, as Aben Ezra remarks; who further obſerves, that it begins with Ephraim, following Jacob our father, that is, becauſe of the bleſſing of Jacob, who preferred Ephraim the younger to Manaſſeh the elder; and here Ephraim and Manaſſeh are ſet before Benjamin, becauſe they were in the place of Joſeph; and after that the account goes on with Dan, becauſe he was the firſt-born of the handmaids; and after him Aſher, though the ſecond ſon of Zilpah, is placed before Gad, the firſt ſon, becauſe, ſays the ſame Aben Ezra, the Lord knew that he would be the head of thoſe that encamped by the ſtandard of Dan, and ſo is placed next to him; and after him Gad, who was the firſt-born of Leah's handmaid; and Naphtali laſt of all, the ſecond ſon of Bilhah: this order ſeems to be deſigned to ſuit with their encampments, and the form of them.

℣. 16. Theſe were the renowned of the congregation, &c.] The moſt famous and eminent among the people, for their birth and pedigree, or for their excellent qualities of wiſdom, courage, and the like; or the called of the congregation [d], whom God had called by name and ſelected from the reſt of the congregation to the above ſervice, whereby great honour was done them: Aben Ezra ſays, the ſenſe is, that the congregation did nothing until they had called them; with which agrees the note of Jarchi, "who were called to every buſineſs of importance in the congregation": princes of the tribes of their fathers; as Elizur was prince of the children of Reuben, ch. vii. 30. the ſame is there ſaid of the reſt in their reſpective tribes: heads of thouſands in Iſrael; the congregation of Iſrael being divided into thouſands, hundreds, fifties, and tens, by the advice of Jethro, Exod. xviii. 21. each of theſe diviſions had a ruler over them, and thouſands being the higheſt number, theſe princes were chiliarchs, rulers or heads of thouſands.

℣. 17. And Moſes and Aaron took theſe men, &c.] They doubtleſs ſent for them, and acquainted them with the nomination of them, by the Lord himſelf, for ſuch a ſervice; and they took them with them to the place where the number of the people was to be taken: which are expreſſed by their names; in the preceding verſes, and that as declared by the mouth of God himſelf.

℣. 18. And they aſſembled all the congregation together on the firſt day of the ſecond month, &c.] The month Ijar, as the Targum of Jonathan, anſwering to part of April and May: this was done on the ſelf ſelf ſame day the Lord ſpake unto Moſes about this affair, ℣. 1. ſo expeditious were he and Aaron in doing the will of God: and they declared their pedigrees; either Moſes and Aaron, according to Aben Ezra, who enquired when they were born, becauſe of the computation of 20 years; and then their birth was wrote down, as he ſays; or rather, the people declared their pedigrees, of what tribe, family, and houſe they were, who their parents, when born, and ſo of courſe, how old they were; Jarchi interprets it, they brought the books of their genealogies, and witneſſes to confirm the birth of every one of them, to ſhew their genealogy according to their tribe; nor is it at all unlikely, that every family and houſe, or maſter thereof, kept a regiſter of thoſe born to him in it, whereby their age could be aſcertained as well as pedigree: after their families, by the houſe of their fathers, according to the number of their names, from twenty years old and upwards, by their poll; that is, every tribe gave an account of the families in it, every family what houſes were in it, and every houſe what number of males were in it, and of what age; and ſuch were numbered who were twenty years old and upward.

[b] לגלגלתם per capita ſua, Pagninus, &c.
[c] לראובן pro Ruben, Samar. verſ ipſi Reuben, Montanus.
[d] קריאי העדה convocati cœtus, Montanus, Druſius; convocati e cœtu, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

℣. 19. As the Lord commanded Moſes, &c.] In this Moſes and David differed in numbering the people of Iſrael; the one did it by an expreſs command from God, and in obedience to it; the other without one, and againſt his will, 1 Chron. xxi. 1. 7. ſo he numbered them in the wilderneſs of Sinai; where they now were when this order was given, ℣. 1. and from whence they removed the 20th day of this month, ch. x. 11, 12. ſo that in leſs than three weeks time, perhaps much ſooner, this affair was finiſhed; and it may be, that the place of numbering them at this time, is expreſsly obſerved, to diſtinguiſh it from another numbering of them, recorded in this book, which was done in the plains of Moab, ch. xxvi. 2, 3.

℣. 20. And the children of Reuben, Iſrael's eldeſt ſon, &c.] Were numbered firſt, and next to them thoſe of Simeon and Gad, for they were numbered according to the order in which they were to be encamped; for under Reuben's ſtandard were Simeon and Gad, and under Judah's, Iſſachar and Zebulun, and under Ephraim's, Manaſſeh and Benjamin, and under Dan's, Aſher and Naphtali; and according to their order were the tribes numbered: by their generations; or their generations, the birth, deſcent, and pedigree of them: after their families, by the houſe of their fathers; according to the families and houſes to which they belonged: according to the number of the names by their polls, every male from twenty years old and upward; their names were taken down, the number of them counted by their heads, even all the males that were above twenty years of age: all that were able to go forth to war; which phraſe, as it ſuggeſts, that before this age they were not reckoned able bodied men for war, in common, though ſome might; ſo it ſeems to except all infirm perſons, by reaſon of age and otherwiſe: now in all the other account of the numbering of the reſt of the tribes, the ſame forms of expreſſion are uſed as here, only the tribe of Simeon, which is the next, theſe words are left out, by their poll, every male; which being twice obſerved, need not be repeated, ſince by theſe inſtances it might be ſufficiently known, that the number was taken by a poll, and only of males; ſo that from hence to the end of the 43d verſe there is nothing material to obſerve, or any thing different from what is in this verſe, but the particular ſums of each tribe numbered, which ſtand thus: of the tribe of Reuben 46500, of the tribe of Simeon 59300, of the tribe of Gad 45650, of the tribe of Judah 74600, of the tribe of Iſſachar 54400, of the tribe of Zebulun 57400, of the tribe of Ephraim 40500, of the tribe of Manaſſeh 32200, of the tribe of Benjamin 35400, of the tribe of Dan 62700, of the tribe of Aſher 41500, of the tribe of Naphtali 53400; in which may be obſerved the various increaſe of the tribes, agreeable to divine predictions, and according to the ſovereign will and infinite wiſdom of God: Reuben, the firſt-born, did not excel in number, ſix of the tribes having more in number than he: Judah had by far the greateſt increaſe of them all, from whom the chief ruler was to come, and even the king Meſſiah; and in proceſs of time was to become a kingdom of itſelf: Ephraim, the younger ſon of Joſeph was much more fruitful than Manaſſeh, his elder, more than eight thouſand being numbered of the former than of the latter, all which agree with Jacob's prophecies, Gen. xlix. 4, 8, 9, 10, 22. and xlviii. 19, 20. nor had they always the greateſt number who had the moſt ſons at their going down into Egypt; for tho' Simeon, who had then more ſons than Reuben, had at this time a larger poſterity; yet Gad, who had more than Simeon, had now fewer deſcendants; and Dan, who had but one ſon at that time, had now almoſt double the number of Benjamin, who then had ten ſons: and it may be obſerved of other tribes, that their increaſe was not in proportion to the number of the ſons of the patriarchs then; ſee Gen. xlvi. 8, 24.

℣. 44. Theſe are thoſe that were numbered, &c.] Or, as the Targum of Jonathan, theſe are the ſums of the numbers; namely, thoſe before given of the ſeveral reſpective tribes: which Moſes and Aaron numbered, and the princes of Iſrael; being twelve men; for though the tribe of Levi was not numbered, yet Joſeph having a double portion, his two ſons are reckoned as diſtinct tribes; ſo that one out of each tribe made up the number twelve: each one for the houſe of his fathers; for the tribe he belonged to, with which it might reaſonably be ſuppoſed he was beſt acquainted, and could more readily take the number of them.

℣. 45. So were all thoſe that were numbered of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Of all the tribes, excepting Levi, that is, all the ſums of the number of the children of Iſrael; all put together made the ſum total given in the next verſe: by the houſe of their fathers, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war in Iſrael; all in every tribe, family, and houſe, that were above 20 years of age, healthful and ſtrong, and fitfor war.

℣. 46. Even all they that were numbered, &c.] Of whom an account was taken, and their names ſet down in a book or regiſter: were 603550; which was exactly the number of them, when taken about ſeven months before this, when they were aſſeſſed for defraying the expences of the tabernacle, Exod. xxxviii. 26. ſo that it ſhould ſeem not one perſon had died during that time; for though there were three that died a violent death in that compaſs of time, yet two of them were of the tribe of Levi, not now numbered; and the other was not an Iſraelite by the father's ſide; ſee Lev. x. 1, 2. and xxiv. 11, 23. but it is not very probable, among ſuch a vaſt number of people, that not one above 20 years of age ſhould die in that time: ſome therefore therefore are of opinion, that the tribe of Levi was numbered before, though not now; and that there was such an increase in that time among the other tribes as to equal the number of males of 20 years and upwards, in that tribe taken into the service of God, by which they were no losers.

℣. 47. But the Levites, &c.] The tribe of Levi were excepted from this muster, they being employed in a kind of warfare, and therefore not to be engaged in another: after the tribe of their fathers were not numbered among them; the rest of the tribes; the reason follows.

℣. 48. For the Lord had spoken unto Moses, &c.] Not to number the Levites, when he gave him the orders to number the rest of the tribes: this is observed, lest it should be thought that this was what Moses did of himself, out of affection to the tribe he was of, and to spare it, that it might not be obliged to go forth to war when others did; not that they were forbid to engage in war, or that it was unlawful for them so to do, for when necessity required, and they were of themselves willing to engage in it, they might, as appears in the case of the Maccabees, but they might not be forced into it; they were, as Josephus [e] says, exempted from it; and so all concerned in religious service, both among heathens and christians, have always been excused bearing arms: saying; as follows.

℣. 49. Only thou shalt not number the tribe of Levi, &c.] That is, along with the other tribes, for it might be numbered by itself, as it afterwards was, ch. iii. neither take the sum of them among the children of Israel; which confirms what is before observed; now this being the declared will of God clears Moses from all partiality to his own tribe, he doing nothing but what he had a command of God for it.

℣. 50. But thou shalt appoint the Levites over the tabernacle of testimony, &c.] So called from the ark in it, in which was the law of God, which was a testimony of the will of God to his people: and over all the vessels thereof; the candlestick, table, and altars, as Aben Ezra notes: and over all things that belong to it; the vessels of vessels, as the same writer calls them; for the candlestick, shew-bread-table, and the two altars of incense and burnt-offering had vessels appertaining to them: they shall bear the tabernacle and all the vessels thereof; carry them from place to place when needful: and they shall minister unto it; by taking care of the instruments of it and the vessels in it, but not by doing any part of the priestly office in it, as offering sacrifice, burning incense, and the like: and shall encamp round about the tabernacle; they were a sort of camp or army of themselves, and their station was around the tabernacle, which was a kind of royal palace to God the King of kings; so that as they were the king's legion, and to be numbered alone, as Jarchi observes, in the preceding verse, so they were a guard about his palace, and were placed between that and the camp of Israel.

℣. 51. And when the tabernacle setteth forward, &c.] Or was about to set forward; that is, the congregation were about to journey, and take the tabernacle with them, as they always did, when and wherever they journeyed: the Levites shall take it down; unpin it, take the boards and pillars out of their sockets, and the bars out of their places, and the whole into pieces, in order to be put into waggons prepared to carry them, of which mention is made in a following chapter: and when the tabernacle is pitched, the Levites shall set it up; at whatsoever place the congregation encamped and took up their abode for any time: the tabernacle was pitched in the manner as tents are, when the Levites put the several parts together, laid the sockets, put in the boards and the bars, and also the pillars of the court and elsewhere, and hung the hangings upon them; and set the candlestick, table, altars, ark, and all the vessels of the sanctuary in their proper places: and the stranger that cometh nigh; to meddle with or touch the above things, to assist in taking down or setting up the tabernacle, or bearing any of the vessels of it: by a stranger is meant, not one of another nation, nor a proselyte, whether of the gate or of righteousness; but as Aben Ezra interprets it, one that is a stranger from the sons of Levi, who is not of that tribe, even though an Israelite: shall be put to death; either the Sanhedrim or court of judicature shall adjudge and put him to death, as the same writer observes; or he shall die by the hand of heaven, as Jarchi; that is, by the immediate hand of God, or with flaming fire from before the Lord, as the Targum of Jonathan; as Uzzah was smote, and died by the ark of God for touching it, 2 Sam. v. 6, 7.

℣. 52. And the children of Israel shall pitch their tents every man by his own camp, &c.] There were four, unless every tribe was a camp, and so then there were 12 camps, besides the camp of the Levites: the Targum of Jonathan is, "by the house "of his troop," the regiment to which he belonged, every tribe or camp having various troops or regiments in it: and every man by his own standard throughout their hosts; there were four standards and three tribes to each standard, which were placed east, west, north, and south of the tabernacle, as is at large described in the following chapter.

℣. 53. But the Levites shall pitch round about the tabernacle of testimony, &c.] Between the tabernacle and the camps of Israel, to guard the tabernacle and preserve the things in it, and to keep persons from going into it that should not, to pollute or plunder it: these were placed in like manner as the four living creatures round the throne, Rev. iv. 6. where the allusion seems to be to this situation of the Levites: that there be no wrath upon the congregation of the children of Israel; that is, from the Lord, should any of them approach too near, or meddle with and touch what they had nothing to do with, or go where they should not; such wrath as came upon Uzzah for his error and transgression before observed: and the Levites shall keep the charge of the tabernacle of testimony; the several things in it committed to their charge; see ch. iii. 8.

℣. 54. And the children of Israel did according to all the Lord commanded Moses, &c.] Pitched their tents by their own camps and standards; did not come near the tabernacle, but kept at a proper distance from it, and did not meddle with things they had no concern with, and which were peculiar to the Levites: so they did; which is repeated to shew how readily, punctually, and perfectly they observed the command of God with respect to this affair.

CHAP.

[e] Antiq. l. 3. c. 12. §. 4.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter contains the order of the encampment and march of the tribes of Iſrael in their proper places about the tabernacle; the general direction for the ſame is in ℣. 1, 2. the particulars follow; on the eaſt of the tabernacle the camp of Judah was to pitch, and under his ſtandard the tribes of Iſſachar and Zebulun, ℣. 3—9. on the ſouth-ſide of it the camp of Reuben, and under his ſtandard the tribes of Simeon and Gad, ℣. 10—16. then the tabernacle, with the camp of the Levites round it, were next, to ſtand or ſet forward, ℣. 17. and on the weſt ſide the camp of Ephraim, and under his ſtandard the tribes of Manaſſeh and Benjamin, ℣. 18—24. and on the north-ſide the camp of Dan, and under his ſtandard the tribes of Aſher and Naphtali, ℣. 25—31. the ſum total of the numbers of which camps are given, excluſive of the camp of Levi, ℣. 32, 33. and the chapter is concluded with obſerving, that all was done according to the commandment of God, ℣. 34.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, &c.] Very probably after the number of the children of Iſrael was taken, of which in the preceding chapter, and when the congregation of Iſrael with the tabernacle were about to ſet forward on their journey; and therefore directions are here given for their orderly and regular proceeding in it, in what form and manner they ſhould both encamp and march: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Every man of the children of Iſrael ſhall pitch by his own ſtandard, &c.] Or banner, of which there were four, as appears from the following account, under each of which were placed three tribes; and ſo every man of each tribe was to pitch his tent in the tribe he belonged to, and by the ſtandard under which his tribe was marſhalled, and in the rank that he was placed: with the enſigns of their father's houſe; which were either leſſer ſtandards or banners, ſomewhat different from the great ſtandard or banner, which belonged to the camp conſiſting of three tribes, and which were peculiar to their ſeveral families and houſes, and diſtinguiſhed one from another, like flags in different regiments; or theſe were ſigns [f], as the word may be rendered, or marks in the ſtandards or banners, which diſtinguiſhed one from another; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, the ſigns which were marked in their ſtandards: but what they were is not eaſy to ſay; Aben Ezra obſerves, and Abendana from him, that their antients were uſed to ſay, that there was in the ſtandard of Reuben, the form of a man, on account of the mandrakes, Gen. xxx. 14. and in the ſtandard of Judah the form of a lion, becauſe Jacob compared him to one, Gen. xlix. 9. and in the ſtandard of Ephraim the form of an ox, from the ſenſe of thoſe words, the firſtling of his bullock, Deut. xxxiii. 17. and in the ſtandard of Dan the form of an eagle, ſo that they might be like the cherubim the prophet Ezekiel ſaw, ch. i. 10. which is not very likely, ſuch images and repreſentations not being very agreeable, yea, even deteſtable to the people of the Jews in later times, and can hardly be thought to be in uſe with their early anceſtors: others, as Jarchi, fancy that thoſe ſtandards were diſtinguiſhed by their colours, as our flags or enſigns are; which, if they ſtopped here, would not be much amiſs, but they go on, and ſay, that each was according to the colour of his ſtone fixed in the breaſt-plate, ſo that there were three colours in every flag or ſtandard; thus, for inſtance, in the ſtandard of Judah, which is the firſt, were the colours of the three precious ſtones on which were the names of Judah, Iſſachar, and Reuben, namely, the emerald, ſapphire, and diamond; and ſo in the reſt of the ſtandards; but others ſay, the letters of the names of the patriarchs, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, differently diſpoſed of, were on thoſe ſtandards; but rather, one would think, the names of the three tribes under every ſtandard were embroidered on them, which would ſufficiently diſtinguiſh one from another, and direct where each tribe was to pitch; but of thoſe things there is no certainty: far off about the tabernacle of the congregation ſhall they pitch; a mile from it, according to Jarchi, or 2000 cubits, which is ſuppoſed to be a ſabbath-day's journey, Acts i. 12. and this diſtance is gathered from Joſh. iii. 4. and is not improbable.

℣. 3. And on the eaſt-ſide, towards the riſing of the ſun, &c.] Which riſes in the eaſt; or foremoſt of all; for, as Jarchi obſerves, that which is before is called Kedem the eaſt, as the weſt is called behind: ſhall they of the ſtandard of the camp of Judah pitch throughout their armies; the tribes of Judah, Iſſachar and Zebulun formed one camp, which had its name from the principal tribe Judah; and this was divided into various regiments and companies, called armies, who ſeverally pitched under one and the ſame ſtandard. It is ſaid [g] Judah's ſtone was the nophech (which we render an emerald), and his flag was coloured in the likeneſs of the colour of the heavens, and there was formed upon it a lion. Iſſachar's was the ſapphire, and his flag was coloured black, like to black lead, and there were framed upon it the ſun and moon, on account of what is ſaid, 1 Chron. xii. 32. Zebulun's was a diamond, and his flag was coloured white, and there was formed upon it a ſhip, becauſe of what is ſaid, Gen. xlix. 13: and Nahſhon the ſon of Amminadab ſhall be captain of the children of Judah; who had been aſſiſting in numbering the people, and who afterwards offered to the dedication of the altar, ch. i. 2. and vii. 12.

℣. 4. And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbred of them, &c.] As they had been before; and therefore ſuppoſing theſe words to be the words of God, there is no neceſſity of rendering them in the future, as ſome have obſerved; though they ſeem rather to be the words of Moſes, who under every tribe repeats the number, which is exactly the ſame as when taken; and though it was not till twenty days after that they ſet forward according to their order of encampment, not one of them died, which Aben Ezra obſerves as a very wonderful thing; the number of the tribe of Judah were 74,600; ſee ch. i. 27.

℣. 5. And thoſe that do pitch next unto him, ſhall be the tribe of Iſſachar, &c.] Who with Zebulun, after after mentioned, as placed with him under the ſame ſtandard, were the brethren of Judah, by the ſame mother Leah, and ſo fitly put together, as moſt likely to continue in harmony and love; and being the youngeſt ſons of Leah, and brethren of Judah, would without any reluctance or murmuring pitch under their elder brother's ſtandard: and Nethaneel the ſon of Zuar ſhall be captain of the children of Iſſachar; ſee ch. i. 8. and vii. 18.

[f] בְּאֹתֹת in ſignis, Pagninus, Montanus; ſub ſignis, Tigurine verſion; cum ſignis, Junius & Tremellius, Druſius; apud ſigna, Piſcator. [g] Bemidbar Rabba, ſ. 2. fol. 178. 3.

℣. 6. And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered thereof, were 54,400.] Which had been numbred, for it does not appear that there was a freſh account taken; ſee ch. i. 29.

℣. 7. Then the tribe of Zebulun, &c.] He pitched next; though the order of their encampment was not, as it may ſeem, firſt Judah, after him Iſſachar, and below him Zebulun; for Judah lay between theſe two, the one before him, and the other behind him; and it was Iſſachar that was behind, and Zebulun before, as Aben Ezra obſerves; they were pitched on each ſide of the ſtandard of Judah, one on one ſide, and the other on the other ſide: and Eliab the ſon of Helon, ſhall be captain of the children of Zebulun; ſee ch. i. 9. and vii. 24. each tribe had its own captain; nor does it appear that there was a general over thoſe captains, that had the command of the camp conſiſting of three tribes, but Moſes was the generaliſſimo of all the camps.

℣. 8. And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered thereof, were 57,400.] That is, the hoſt of Zebulun; ſee ch. i. 31.

℣. 9. All that were numbered in the camp of Judah, were 186,400 throughout their armies, &c.] The ſum total of the three tribes, which formed that camp: this was the largeſt camp of them all, being near 30,000 more than Dan's, which was the next in number unto it, and therefore placed foremoſt, and as the vanguard to the tabernacle: theſe ſhall firſt ſet forth; in a march, when about to journey; when they ſaw the cloud remove, the prieſts blew with the trumpets, and then the camp of Judah moved firſt, as Jarchi obſerves, and when they went out to fight, Judah went up firſt, Judg. i. 1, 2.

℣. 10. On the ſouth ſide ſhall be the ſtandard of the camp of Reuben, according to their armies, &c.] This camp conſiſted of the tribes of Reuben, Simeon and Gad, which was divided into leſſer bodies, regiments or companies, called armies; and this was placed to the ſouth of the tabernacle, or to the right hand, as Aben Ezra interprets it; this was the right wing of the whole army. Reuben's ſtone, according to the Jewiſh writers [h], was the ſardius, and his flag was coloured red, and there were figured upon it mandrakes. Simeon's ſtone was the topaz, and his flag was coloured green, and on it was figured Shechem. Gad's ſtone was the agate, and his flag was coloured neither black nor white, but mixed, and there was figured upon it a camp or hoſt, on account of what is ſaid Gen. xlix. 19: and the captain of the children of Reuben, ſhall be Elizur the ſon of Shedeur; ſee ch. i. 5, and vii. 30.

℣. 11. And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered thereof, were 46,500.] That is, the hoſt of Reuben, as diſtinct from his camp, of which it was only a part, and of which Elizur was captain; ſee ch. i. 21.

℣. 12. And thoſe which pitch by him ſhall be the tribe of Simeon, &c.] Under his ſtandard, and on one ſide of it; Reuben and Simeon being brothers by the mother, as well as the father's ſide, might well be thought to agree together; and Reuben being the eldeſt brother, and the eldeſt of all Jacob's ſons, Simeon would not grudge to pitch under him: and the captain of the children of Simeon ſhall be Shelumiel the ſon of Zuriſhaddai; of whom ſee ch. i. 6. and vii. 36.

℣. 13. Of his hoſt, &c.] The hoſt of Simeon: and thoſe that were numbered of them were 59,300; the ſame as in ch. i. 23.

℣. 14. Then the tribe of Gad, &c.] Who was placed on the other ſide of Reuben's ſtandard, and according to the former direction he muſt be before, and Simeon behind; and Gad being the eldeſt ſon of Leah's handmaid Zilpah, is fitly placed under Leah's firſt-born, and being the ſon of an handmaid, could not object to his ſituation: and the captain of the ſon of Gad, ſhall be Eliaſaph the ſon of Reuel; who is called Deuel, ch. i. 14. and vii. 42. The letters ר Reſh and ד Daleth being ſimilar, are ſometimes put one for the other, of which there are other inſtances, as in Gen. x. 3, 4. compared with 1 Chron. i. 6, 7.

℣. 15. And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were 45,650.] The hoſt of Gad, as diſtinct from thoſe of Reuben and Simeon, which together formed the camp; ſee ch. i. 25.

℣. 16. And all that were numbered in the camp of Reuben, were 151450, throughout their armies, &c.] Putting his hoſt, and the hoſts of Simeon and Gad together, which was much leſſer than the preceding camp, being 34,500 fewer in number: and they ſhall ſet forth in the ſecond rank; they in journeying moving next to the camp of Judah, and before the tabernacle; for though, while encamped, the camp of Reuben lay on the ſouth, or right ſide of it, yet, when marching, went before it.

℣. 17. Then the tabernacle of the congregation ſhall ſet forward with the camp of the Levites, &c.] Which reached four miles, according to the Targum of Jonathan, as did Judah's. Levi's ſtone, as the Jews ſay [i], was the carbuncle, and his flag was coloured, a third part white, and a third part black, and a third part red, and on it were formed Urim and Thummim: in the midſt of the camp; or camps [k]; between the camps of Judah and Reuben, before mentioned, and thoſe of Ephraim and Dan, which are after ſpoken of: the order in which they moved was this, as Aben Ezra obſerves; the Gerſhonites and Merarites marched between the ſtandard of Judah and the ſtandard of Reuben; and the Kohathites marched, and with them Aaron and his ſons, between the ſtandard of Reuben and the ſtandard of Ephraim: as they encamp, ſo ſhall they ſet forward; this is to be underſtood, according to Aben Ezra, not of the camp of Levi, ſince the ſtandard of Judah was to the eaſt, and the Gerſhonites which were to the weſt of the ſanctuary, and the Merarites in the north, ſet forward together; but of the camps of Iſrael, which ſet forward, not as they were encamped about the tabernacle, for thoſe that were encamped on the ſide of it, in marching went before and behind, but as they were encamped with reſpect to themſelves; firſt marched the ſtandard of Judah, then that of Reuben, which went before, and then thoſe of Ephraim and Dan, which followed; and beſides, as each camp was pitched, ſo it moved; as the camp of Judah, his hoſt marched between thoſe of Iſſachar and Zebulun, and the ſame order the reſt obſerved: every man in his place by their ſtandards; as every individual perſon in the ſeveral tribes were ranked ranked under their reſpective banners, ſo they marched.

[h] Bemidbar Rabba, ib. [i] Ibid. [k] בתוך המחנות in medio caſtrorum, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion; ſo Ainſworth; in medio reliquorum caſtrorum, Junius & Tremellius.

℣. 18. On the weſt ſide ſhall be the ſtandard of the camp of Ephraim, according to their armies, &c.] It was in the rear or behind, conſiſting of his tribe, and of the tribes of Manaſſeh and Benjamin, divided into ſeveral companies, and extended four miles, as the above Targum. The Jewiſh writers ſay [l], that Joſeph's ſtone is the onyx or ſardonyx, and his flag was coloured very black, and on it were figured for the two princes, Ephraim and Manaſſeh, Egypt, becauſe they were born in Egypt; and upon the flag of Ephraim was figured an ox, becauſe of what is ſaid in Deut. xxxiii. 17. and on the flag of the tribe of Manaſſeh was figured an unicorn, becauſe of what is ſaid in the ſame place. Benjamin's ſtone was the jaſper, and his flag was coloured like to twelve colours, and on it was figured a wolf, becauſe of what is ſaid Gen. xlix. 27: and the captain of the ſons of Ephraim, ſhall be Eliſhama the ſon of Ammihud; of whom ſee ch. i. 10. and vii. 48.

℣. 19. And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were 40,500.] Not his camp, but his hoſt, or the army, which conſiſted only of his own tribe; ſee ch. i 33.

℣ 20. And by him ſhall be the tribe of Manaſſeh, &c.] Who though the elder brother to Ephraim, yet Ephraim was preferred to him, and had a ſtandard given him, and his elder brother was directed to pitch by it; and this being agreeable to the prophecy of Jacob, could not well be objected to; and Benjamin, the younger brother of Joſeph, being placed under the ſtandard of a ſon of his, that ſtood in his father's room, could not be offended; and theſe all being the deſcendants of Rachel, might well be thought to agree together, and be very well pleaſed with their ſituation: and the captain of the children of Manaſſeh ſhall be Gamaliel the ſon of Pedahzur; the ſame as in ch. i. 10. and vii. 54.

℣. 21. And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were 32,200.] The hoſt of Manaſſeh; ſee ch. i. 35.

℣. 22. Then the tribe of Benjamin, &c.] He was to pitch under the ſame ſtandard of Ephraim, and on the other ſide of it from that of Manaſſeh; the one being before, and the other behind, and the ſtandard in the middle; ſee the note on ℣. 7: and the captain of the ſons of Benjamin, ſhall be Abidan the ſon of Gideoni; of whom ſee ch. i. 11. and vii. 60.

℣. 23. And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were 35,400.] The leaſt number of all the tribes, excepting the tribe of Manaſſeh; ſee ch. i. 37.

℣. 24. All that were numbered of the camp of Ephraim, were 108,100, throughout their armies, &c.] Which was the ſmalleſt of all the camps, and near 80,000 fewer than the camp of Judah: and they ſhall go forward in the third rank; and which was the firſt following the tabernacle.

℣. 25. The ſtandard of the camp of Dan ſhall be on the north ſide by their armies, &c.] To the left of the tabernacle as encamped, and ſo was the left wing of the grand army; it conſiſted of the tribes of Dan, Aſher and Napthali, in which were ſeveral diviſions and companies, whoſe camp alſo the Targum of Jonathan ſays reached four miles. According to the Jewiſh writers [m], Dan's ſtone was the ligure, and his flag was coloured like to a ſapphire, and there was figured upon it a ſerpent, on account of what is ſaid Gen. xlix. 27. Aſher's ſtone was the tarſhiſh or beryll, and his flag was coloured like to a precious ſtone, with which women adorn themſelves, and on it was figured an olive-tree, on account of what is ſaid Gen xlix. 20. Naphtali's ſtone was the amethyſt, and his flag was coloured like to clear wine, whoſe redneſs is not ſtrong, and on it was figured an hind, on account of what is ſaid of him Gen. xlix. 21: and the captain of the children of Dan, ſhall be Ahiezer the ſon of Ammiſhaddai; who is made mention of in ch. i. 12. and vii. 66.

℣. 26. And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were 62,700.] Which agrees with the account of this tribe in ch. i. 39.

℣. 27. And thoſe that encamp by him ſhall be the tribe of Aſher, &c.] Dan had a ſtandard given him, though the ſon of an hand-maid, being the firſt born of the ſons of the hand-maids, and his tribe being a warlike tribe, and very numerous; and Aſher and Naphtali are placed by him, being the ſons of hand-maids alſo, and could not but contentedly pitch by him, who was the eldeſt of the ſons of the hand-maids; Naphtali being his younger brother by mother's as well as father's ſide, and Aſher the ſecond ſon of Zilpah, Leah's maid: and the captain of the children of Aſher, ſhall be Pagiel the ſon of Ocran; the ſame as in ch. i. 13. and vii. 72.

℣. 28. And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were 41,500.] As they were numbered ch. i. 41.

℣. 29. Then the tribe of Naphtali, &c.] That was to pitch by the ſame ſtandard of Dan, on the other ſide of it: and the captain of the children of Naphtali, ſhall be Ahira the ſon of Enan; who is mentioned ch. i. 15. and vii. 78.

℣. 30. And his hoſt, and thoſe that were numbered of them, were 53,400.] Not that ſome part of the tribe of Naphtali was numbered, which made up the hoſt Ahira was captain of, but the whole of it, who were all numbered that were of twenty years of age and upwards; and the ſame is to be obſerved in all the above places, where this phraſe is uſed; ſee ch. i. 43.

℣. 31. All they that were numbered in the camp of Dan, were 157,600, &c.] Conſiſting of his own tribe, and thoſe of Aſher and Naphtali, which make the largeſt camp next to Judah: they ſhall go hindmoſt with their ſtandards; for though, while encamped, they lay to the north, or the left ſide of the tabernacle, yet when marching, they brought up the rear, and were the rear-guard to the tabernacle; ſo that it had in its van and rear the two largeſt camps, which were wiſely ordered for its ſafety: ſtandards is put for ſtandard, the plural for the ſingular; for there was but one ſtandard to a camp, unleſs this takes in their enſigns, of which they had many.

℣. 32. Theſe are thoſe that were numbered of the children of Iſrael by the houſe of their fathers, &c.] As the number was taken by Moſes and Aaron, aſſiſted by 12 princes of the tribe, who were now conſtituted captains over them, as ſo many hoſts or armies: all thoſe that were numbered of the camp throughout their hoſts; of the four camps, of Judah, Reuben, Ephraim and Dan, throughout the reſpective tribes or hoſts that belonged to each of them, were 603,550, which is exactly the ſum total of them, as taken ch. i. 46. It is a large number, con-

[l] Bemidar Rabba, ut ſupra,

[m] Ibid.

conſidering in how ſhort a time, and that great part of it a ſtate of bondage, from ſeventy perſons, they roſe unto it; but the ſpiritual Iſrael of God, conſiſting of his people of all nations, is a number which no man can number, Rev. vii. 9. beſides, the number of the ſealed ones, of every tribe, ¥. 4—8. Now this encampment of the people of Iſrael was an emblem of the form and order of the ſpiritual Iſrael or church of God, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation. Chriſt in human nanature is the tabernacle, who is in the midſt of his people by his gracious preſence; as the heart and life of the congregation of his ſaints, in whom they all center and terminate, and where he ſits enthroned as king of ſaints; and as the Levites encamped in four ſquadrons next unto the tabernacle, all around it, to theſe anſwer the living creatures in Ezek. i. 5. Rev. iv. 6. which deſign the miniſters of the word, who are in the higheſt place in the church, between Chriſt and the congregation, and are near to him, to be ſupplied by him; then encamped the whole body of the people of Iſrael by their ſtandards, with their enſigns, to whom anſwer the wheels in Ezek. i. 15. and x. 9, and the 24 elders in Rev. iv. 4. all which ſhew the church to be militant, and that there is an order in goſpel-churches, which makes them both comely and terrible, Cant. vi. 4. Col. ii. 5. and may teach every member to abide by his ſtandard, and follow his enſign and enſign-bearer, Iſ. xi. 10. Rev. xiv. 4. 1 Cor. xi. 1.

¥. 33. But the Levites were not numbered among the children of Iſrael, &c.] At this time, not among the Iſraelites, but by themſelves, they being a camp of themſelves: as the Lord commanded Moſes; ch. i. 48, 49.

¥. 34. And the children of Iſrael did according to all that the Lord commanded Moſes, &c.] Formed themſelves into camps, ſo many tribes to a camp, and over each tribe or hoſt appointed a captain, and erected a ſtandard to each camp, by which they pitched as directed, which is next particularly obſerved: ſo they pitched by their ſtandards; every tribe, and every perſon in the tribe, as they were ranked, pitched by the ſtandard to which they belonged: and ſo they ſet forward, after their families, according to the houſe of their fathers; the camps, and the tribes in them, the families in thoſe tribes, and the houſes or leſſer families under them, when they marched, proceeded in this regular order, as they did on the 20th of this month; ſee ch. x. 11, 12.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter an account is given of the genealogy of the prieſts and Levites, and of the gift of the Levites to the prieſts, of the numbering of them, and the ſervice they were to perform; and firſt of the prieſts, the ſons of Aaron, ¥. 1—4 and then of the Levites, as given unto them, to wait upon them, and aſſiſt them, ¥. 5—10. and theſe were taken inſtead of the firſt-born, ¥. 11, 12, 13. and ordered to be numbered, which was done accordingly by their families, ¥. 14—20. and the ſum of each is given, and the particular work aſſigned to them; of the Gerſhonites, ¥. 21—26. of the Kohathites, ¥. 27—32. of the Merarites, ¥. 33—38. the ſum total of them is given, ¥. 39. then the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael, from a month old, are ordered to be numbered, and were, ¥. 40—43. and theſe appearing to be more in number than the Levites, by 273, a direction is given, that the 273 ſhould be redeemed at the rate of five ſhekels apiece, and the money paid to Aaron and his ſons, ¥. 44—48. which was accordingly done, ¥. 49, 50, 51.

¥. 1. Theſe alſo are the generations of Aaron and Moſes, &c.] The deſcendants of them, thoſe of the former, who is named firſt, becauſe the eldeſt, were prieſts, and thoſe of the latter Levites, and who are not very plainly pointed at, but are included among the Amramites, ¥. 27. the poſterity of Moſes being very obſcure, only Levites, and theſe not particularly named, but ſwallowed up among the Kohathites: and the following account was as it ſtood, in the day that the Lord ſpoke with Moſes in mount Sinai; and not altogether as it then was when he ſpoke to him in the wilderneſs of Sinai, for then Aaron had four ſons, but now two of them were dead, as is after obſerved; and it ſeems to be for the ſake of this circumſtance chiefly, that this clauſe is ſo put.

¥. 2. And theſe are the names of the ſons of Aaron, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan adds, diſciples of Moſes, the maſter of the Iſraelites; none of the poſterity of Moſes being expreſsly named; Jarchi obſerves, that the ſons of Aaron are called the generations of Moſes, becauſe he taught them the law; for whoever, he ſays, teaches his neighbour's ſon the law, the ſcripture accounts of him as if he begat him, ſee 1 Cor. iv. 15. Nadab the firſt-born, and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar; as in Exod. vi. 23.

¥. 3. Theſe are the names of the ſons of Aaron, the prieſts that were anointed, &c.] With the holy anointing oil, with which they were anointed when Aaron was, and they only, ſee Exod. xxx. 30. whom he conſecrated to miniſter in the prieſt's office; that is, whom Moſes conſecrated, by anointing them, putting the prieſt's garments on them, offering ſacrifice for them, and filling their hands with ſacrifices, which is the phraſe here uſed for conſecration; ſee Exod. xxix. 1. 5—24.

¥. 4. And Nadab and Abihu died before the Lord, &c.] By flaming fire, as the Targum of Jonathan adds, ſee ch. x. 2. and ſo were not alive at this time when the account of the prieſts and Levites was taken: when they offered ſtrange fire before the Lord in the wilderneſs of Sinai; after the tabernacle was ſet up, and the ſervice of it begun, and quickly after their unction and conſecration: of this ſtrange fire, ſee the note on ch. x. 1. and they had no children; which is obſerved, partly to ſhew the puniſhment of them, and the reproach upon their names, that they died childleſs, and had none to ſucceed them in the prieſthood; for as the Jewiſh writers [n] obſerve, if they had left any behind them, thoſe would have come into the office before Eleazar and Ithamar; and partly to ſhew that all the prieſts in ſucceeding ages ſprung from thoſe next mentioned: and Eleazar and Ithamar miniſtered in the prieſt's office, in the ſight of Aaron their father; in his preſence, under his inſpection, and and by his direction, he ſeeing and obſerving that they did every thing according to the laws delivered by Moſes, relating to the office of the prieſthood; or while he was yet alive, as Aben Ezra, they were concerned with him, and acted under him in the prieſtly office; and ſo the Septuagint verſion renders it, with Aaron their father [o]; but a Jewiſh writer [p] interprets it in a different manner, in the room of Aaron their father; as if it reſpected not any conjunction with him in the then preſent exerciſe of their office in his life-time, but their ſucceſſion in it after his death; but the former ſeems righteſt.

[n] Torat Cohanim apud Ceſeph Miſnah in Maimon. Melachim, c. 1. §. 7. Chaſkuni in loc.

℣. 5. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After he had given him the order for the numbering the children of Iſrael, and for the manner of their encampment and journeying: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 6. Bring the tribe of Levi near, &c.] Separate them from the reſt, ſet them apart for ſpecial ſervice about the ſanctuary, let them have a place nearer to it than the other tribes, or offer them, that is, to the Lord, as in ch. viii. 11. as well as bring them near to Aaron; ſo it follows: and preſent them before Aaron the prieſt; that he may receive them as a gift unto him, as ſervants to wait upon him; and that he may appoint and declare unto them their work, and ſet them about it: that they may miniſter unto him; in guarding the tabernacle, taking care of the veſſels of it, taking it down, carrying it from place to place, and ſetting it up, as there was occaſion for it.

℣. 7. And they ſhall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole congregation, &c.] The charge of Aaron and of all the people of Iſrael, which was to ſecure the ſanctuary from being polluted or plundered: this the Levites were to be employed about, and thereby eaſe the high-prieſt and the other prieſts, and the people of what otherwiſe would have been incumbent on them: before the tabernacle of the congregation; not within it, neither in the holy place, nor in the moſt holy place, where they might not enter, to do any ſervice peculiar thereunto, but at the door of the tabernacle, and in the court of it, and in the rooms and chambers in it: and do the ſervice of the tabernacle; not to offer ſacrifices on the altar of the burnt-offering, which ſtood in the court, and much leſs to burn incenſe on the altar of incenſe, and to trim the lamps, and ſet on the ſhew-bread in the holy place; and ſtill leſs, to enter into the moſt holy place, and do there what was to be done on the day of atonement; but to do all that is before obſerved, and to bring the peoples offerings to the prieſt, and to aſſiſt in ſlaying them; and to keep all prophane and polluted perſons out of it, the tabernacle, as we find in after times; they were porters at it, and ſome of them were ſingers in it, and had the care of various things belonging to it; ſee 1 Chron. ix. 14, 26, 27, 28, 29. and xxiii. 3, 4, 5, 28, 29, 30.

℣. 8. And they ſhall keep all the inſtruments of the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] Take care of them that none be loſt or come to any damage, eſpecially while it was moving, and carried from place to place; then the ſeveral parts of it, as well as the veſſels in it, were committed to their care and charge, the particulars of which ſee in ℣. 25, 26, 31, 36, 37. and the charge of the children of Iſrael, to do the ſervice of the tabernacle; ſee the note on the preceding verſe.

℣. 9. And thou ſhalt give the Levites unto Aaron and to his ſons, &c.] To be their miniſters and ſervants: they are wholly given unto him out of the children of Iſrael; even all of them entirely, none excepted; the whole tribe which were not in the prieſtly office; thoſe were ſeparated from the reſt of the tribes of Iſrael, and appointed for the ſervice of the prieſts: or they were given, given [q]; which is repeated not only to ſhew that they were wholly given, as we render it, but to denote the certainty of it, that they were really given; and eſpecially, to declare the freeneſs of the gift; the prieſts had them as free gifts, nor did they pay them any thing for their ſervice; they were maintained another way, namely, by the tithes of the people; and indeed the prieſts received a tithe out of the tithe of the Levites; ſo far were they from contributing any thing to their ſupport, or in conſideration of the ſervice they did them.

℣. 10. And thou ſhalt appoint Aaron and his ſons, &c.] To the prieſtly office; this was done before, but is renewed for the confirmation of it, and repeated to put them in mind of it, that they be careful to execute it, as follows: and they ſhall wait on their prieſts office; to do what was peculiar to it, both in the holy and in the moſt holy place, at the altar, and within the vail, where the Levites had nothing to do; and this is obſerved that the prieſts might take notice, that by the gift of the Levites to them, they were not excuſed from doing any part of ſervice which was proper to them as prieſts; for they were given them that they might more readily attend their office, and be wholly employed in it; juſt as under the goſpel-diſpenſation, deacons were appointed to take care of the ſecular affairs of the church, that the apoſtles might give up themſelves to the word of God and prayer, Acts vi. 2, 3, 4. and the ſtranger that cometh nigh ſhall be put to death; that comes nigh to perform any part of the prieſt's office peculiar to him, as to offer ſacrifice, burn incenſe, &c. whether he be a common Iſraelite, or even a Levite as Korah was; any that was not a prieſt was reckoned a ſtranger, and ſo to be put to death for intruding into the office, as the above-mentioned perſon was: ſo Aben Ezra interprets it, of any one that came nigh to a prieſt, to be with him or join with him in the execution of his office, whether an Iſraelite or a Levite, he ſhall die: the Targum of Jonathan adds, by flaming fire before the Lord.

℣. 11. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Continued to ſpeak unto him, and give him the reaſon of his appointing the Levites to miniſter to the prieſts and ſerve the tabernacle: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 12. And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Iſrael, &c.] Separated them from others, and ſet them apart for the ſervice of the ſanctuary; this was his own act and deed, and which he did of his own will and pleaſure, who is a ſovereign Being, and might and would do whatſoever he pleaſed, nor ſhould any object unto him, or contradict him: and this he did, inſtead of all the firſt-born that openeth the matrix among the children of Iſrael; he made an exchange of thoſe for the Levites; upon the deſtruction of the firſt-born of Egypt, and ſaving the firſt-born of Iſrael, he challenged the latter as his own in a ſpecial ſenſe, and now he gave up his right to them, and inſtead thereof took the Levites; nor could the people of Iſrael reaſonably object to this, nor [o] Which is approved by Noldius, p. 731. Montanus, Vatablus, Druſius.

[p] Chaſkuni.

[q] נתונים נתונם dati, dati, Pagninus, nor be uneasy at it, but rather be pleased with it; since hereby they were not only freed from the charge of redeeming their first-born, but since they were the Lord's, he might have appointed them to be servants to the priests; and every Israelite would chuse rather, no doubt, to part with a tribe for this service than to have their first-born sons employed in it; and there were none so fit as the tribe of Levi, not only because it was a small tribe, but because the priests were of this tribe, to whom they were to minister; and therefore as there was a connexion between them, the Levites would readily serve them: it is a notion that has obtained both among Jews and christians, that the first-born before this time, were priests in the family, but now the Levites were taken in their room; and Jarchi particularly observes, that when the first-born sinned in the business of the calf, they were rejected, and the Levites, who did not commit idolatry, were chosen in their room; but it does not appear, before the fixing the priesthood in Aaron's family, that the first-born in a family were priests, and officiated as such, but rather the father and head of the family for the whole, or every one for himself, as in Adam's family, he and his two sons; and moreover, it was a late thing and only among the Hebrews, that the first-born were in a peculiar manner the Lord's, not as priests, only to be redeemed, and now the Levites were redeemed in their room; it was not to be priests, but the servants of the priests[r]: therefore the Levites shall be mine; whom he gave to the priests to assist them in their work, which was for him and his glory.

℣. 13. Because all the first-born are mine, &c.] Not merely in a general way, as all creatures are his, but in a special manner as his own, and that for the following reason: for on the day that I smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt, I hallowed unto me all the first born in Israel, both man and beast; that is, sanctified or set them apart as his own special property, or ordered the people of Israel so to do, Exod. xiii. 2. for as when he destroyed the first-born of the Egyptians, he saved the first-born of Israel, he had a special claim upon them as his; and though it was in the night when he destroyed the first-born of Egypt, yet it was the night which preceded that day, and was a part of that day, even the 15th of Nisan, when the instructions were given to sanctify all the first-born; though, as Aben Ezra observes, day signifies time, so that it was at or about the same time that the one and the other were done: mine they shall be; this was declared when they were ordered to be sanctified to him, but now they were to be exchanged for the Levites: I am the Lord; who have sovereign power to do as he would in claiming the first-born, and then in exchanging them for the Levites, and appointing the Levites to minister to the priests, and serve in the tabernacle.

℣. 14. And the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, &c.] At the same time he gave the order, and made the declaration before mentioned, and in the place where now the children of Israel were, and from whence they shortly removed: saying; as follows.

℣. 15. Number the children of Levi, &c.] Who were left out of the general muster of the children of Israel, but now were to be numbered alone, and in a different manner, and for a different purpose, the Lord having a special regard unto them, and special service for them: after the house of their fathers, by their families; into which the tribe was divided; house seems to be put for houses, which were principal ones; and these were divided into families, which branched from them, and according to these, denominated from their fathers, and not their mothers, were they to be numbered; for as the Jewish writers often say, a mother's family is no family; wherefore, if a Levite woman married into any other tribe, as she might, her descendants were not taken into this account, only such whose fathers were Levites, see ch. i. 2. every male, from a month old and upwards shalt thou number them; the reason of this was, because the first-born, for whom they were to be exchanged, were at a month old claimed by the Lord as his, and to be redeemed; and as this numbering was on another account than that of the children of Israel, who were numbered from twenty years of age and upwards, that they might on occasion be called out to war, from which the Levites were exempted, and the numbering of them was for the service of the sanctuary; so from their youth they were to be brought up and trained for this, that they might be fit for it, and enter upon it at a proper age.

℣. 16. And Moses numbered them according to the word of the Lord, &c.] Took the account of all of a month old in the several houses and families of the tribe of Levi; though Moses is only here mentioned, yet it seems from ℣. 39. that Aaron was concerned with him in it; yea, in an after numbering of the Levites who were fit for business from thirty to fifty years of age, the chief of the children of Israel were assisting to him and Aaron, ch. iv. 46. as he commanded; he was obedient to the divine will in all things, and so in this, tho' it was his own tribe and his own posterity, which in all successive ages were to be no other than ministring servants to the priests, and to have no inheritance in the land of Israel.

℣. 17. And these were the sons of Levi by their names, &c.] The immediate offspring and descendants of that patriarch: Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari; these went down with him into Egypt, Gen. xlvi. 11.

℣. 18. And these are the names of the sons of Gershon by their families, &c.] Or to Gershon belonged two families, called after the names of his sons, who were now numbered, namely, Libni and Shimei; and who are elsewhere mentioned as his sons, Exod. vi. 17. and from hence were the families of the Libnites and Shimites, as in ℣. 21.

℣. 19. And the sons of Kohath by their families, &c.] Who was the second son of Levi: Amram, and Izehar, Hebron, and Uzziel; so in Exod. vi. 18. and from whom were named the family of the Amramites, to which Moses and Aaron belonged; and the families of the Izeharites, Hebronites, and Uzzielites, as they are called, ℣. 27.

℣. 20 And the sons of Merari by their families, &c.] The third son of Levi: Mahli and Mushi; the same as in Exod. vi. 19 from whom were denominated the families of the Mahlites and Mushites, who, as the preceding families, were numbered at this time: these are the families of the Levites, according to the house of their fathers; in all eight families.

℣. 21. Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites, and the family of the Shimites, &c.] The first son of Levi: these are the family of the Gershonites; that were now numbered.

℣. 22. Those that were numbered of them, &c.] Of the two families that sprung from Gershon: according to the number of all the males, from a month old old and upwards; in the ſaid families: even thoſe that were numbered of them, were 7500; which was neither the leaſt nor the largeſt number of the ſons of Levi.

[r] Vid. Outram. de sacrificiis, l. 1. c. 4. §. 1, 2, 3.

℣. 23. The families of the Gerſhonites, &c.] The two before mentioned, the Libnites and Shimites: ſhall pitch behind the tabernacle weſtward; this was their ſituation when encamped; they were placed in the rear of the camp of the Levites, between the tabernacle and the camp of Ephraim, which was weſtward alſo, ch. ii. 18.

℣. 24. And the chief of the houſe of the fathers of the Gerſhonites, &c.] Who had the chief authority over them, and the chief direction of them in what they were to do: ſhall be Eliaſaph the ſon of Lael; but who he was, or of which family of the Gerſhonites, whether of the Libnites or Shimites is not ſaid here or elſewhere; nor do the Jewiſh writers, who affect to know every thing, pretend to tell us.

℣. 25. And the charge of the ſons of Gerſhon, &c.] The Libnites and Shimites: in the tabernacle of the congregation; or with reſpect to the things of it, when it was taken down and committed to them; for otherwiſe they had no place in it, nor might they enter into it, or do any ſervice therein: ſhall be the tabernacle and the tent; the former intends not the boards of it, which were the charge of the Merarites, ℣. 36. but the curtains, as Aben Ezra, or the under curtains, as Jarchi calls them, which were made of fine twined linen, Exod. xxvi. 1. and the latter is to be underſtood of the eleven curtains, as Aben Ezra, the curtains of goats hair, which were made for the roof of the tabernacle, as Jarchi obſerves, ſee Exod. xxvi. 7. the covering thereof; made of rams ſkins, and badgers ſkins, which were thrown over the tent, Exod. xxvi. 14. and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; the vail, as Jarchi calls it; not what divided the holy and moſt holy places, for that fell to the charge of the Kohathites, ℣. 31. but the vail or hanging which was at the door of the tent, or which led into the holy place, Exod. xxvi. 36.

℣. 26. And the hangings of the court, &c.] Which formed the great open court that encompaſſed the tabernacle, and was 100 cubits long and 50 broad, Exod. xxvii. 9—13. and the curtain for the door of the court; which was an hanging of 20 cubits, of blue, purple, ſcarlet, and fine twined linen, Exod. xxvii. 16. which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar round about it; this refers to the court, the hangings, and curtains of the door of it, which are ſpoken of; and this court ſurrounded the tabernacle, and the altar which was without the tabernacle, as Aben Ezra obſerves, and which was the altar of burnt-offering that ſtood within this court; for the particle עַל ſometimes ſignifies about[*], and the word סָבִיב around, being joined with it, requires this ſenſe: and the cords of it; which ſeem to be the cords of the court, which faſtened the hangings and curtains to braſs pins, or ſtakes fixed in the ground to keep them tight, that the wind might not move them to and fro; but Jarchi ſays, theſe were the cords of the tabernacle and tent, and not of the court; and indeed the tabernacle had its cords as well as the court, Exod. xxxviii. 18. the cords of the court were in the charge of the Merarites, ℣. 37. for all the ſervice thereof; for that part of the tabernacle and court which the Gerſhonites had in their care and cuſtody.

℣. 27. And of Kohath was the family of the Amramites, &c.] So called from Amram, the firſt ſon of Kohath, and father of Aaron and Moſes; ſo that Moſes and Aaron, and their children, are included in this family: and the family of Izeharites; of which family was Korah, ch. xvi. 1. and the family of the Hebronites, and the family of the Uzzielites; which four families had their names from Kohath's four ſons; ℣. 19. theſe are the families of the Kohathites; which were as many as both the other ſons of Levi.

℣. 28. In the number of all the males from a month old and upwards, were 8600, &c.] Which was the largeſt number of any of the houſes of the Levites; but conſidering it had double the number of families in it, the increaſe was not ſo large in proportion, at leaſt to Gerſhon, whoſe two families wanted but 1100 of theſe four: keeping the charge of the ſanctuary; of the holy and moſt holy places, and the veſſels and inſtruments belonging thereunto; not that the males of a month old were keeping them, but when they were grown up and were capable of it, they had the charge thereof, in which they were inſtructed and trained up from their youth.

℣. 29. The families of the ſons of Kohath, ſhall pitch on the ſide of the tabernacle ſouthward.] Or to the right, which was the more honourable place, excepting the eaſt or front, which was reſerved for Moſes and Aaron, and his ſons, and who were one of theſe families; and is the reaſon why this honour was conferred upon them, as well as they had the more honourable charge, having the holy places and holy things committed to their care; and one from among them was appointed over all the Levites, and the chief of them, as they had alſo when they came into the land of Canaan, almoſt as many cities of refuge as both their other brethren had: their ſituation about the tabernacle was between that and the camp of Reuben, and this accounts for it, how Korah who was of one of the families of the Kohathites, became ſo intimately acquainted with, and joined in a conſpiracy with Dathan and Abiram, who were of the tribe of Reuben, ch. xvi. 1.

℣. 30. And the chief the houſe of the father of the families of the Kohathites, ſhall be Elizaphan the ſon of Uzziel.] The ſame man, who with his brother Miſhael, carried Nadab and Abihu out of the camp, and buried them, Lev. x. 4, 5. he deſcended from the laſt and youngeſt of the families of the Kohathites; and ſome think this was one reaſon at leaſt of Korah's diſſatisfaction, and of his entering into a conſpiracy againſt Moſes and Aaron, becauſe one of a younger family of his houſe was preferred to this dignity before him.

℣. 31. And their charge ſhall be the ark, &c.] That is, when the tabernacle was taken down, and carried from place to place, this, and the following things, were committed to their care and cuſtody, the ark with the mercy-ſeat, and all appertaining thereunto, which were in the holy of holies: and the table, and the candleſtick, and the altars; the table of ſhew-bread, and the candleſtick of pure gold, with its lamps, and the altar of incenſe, all which ſtood in the holy place, and the altar of burnt-offering, which was in the court, for both altars were their charge: and the veſſels of the ſanctuary wherewith they miniſter; all the veſſels which belonged to the above things; for the table, candleſtick and altars, all had veſſels appertaining to them:

[*] Vid. Nold. partic. Ebr. Concord. p. 992.

them: and the hanging; that is, the vail, as Jarchi interprets it, which divided between the holy and the moſt holy place; all the other hangings for the court, and the door of it, and for the door of the tabernacle, were the charge of the Gerſhonites, ℣. 25, 26: and all the ſervice thereof; what belonged to the things in this part of the tabernacle.

℣. 32. And Eleazar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt, &c.] Who was of the firſt of theſe families the Amramites: ſhall be chief over the chief of the Levites; over the three chiefs of the three houſes of the Levites, who were Eliaſaph the ſon of Lael, the chief of the Gerſhonites; and Elizaphan the ſon of Uzziel, the chief of the Kohathites; and Zuriel the ſon of Abihail, the chief of the Merarites: and have the over-ſight of them that keep the charge of the ſanctuary; the Kohathites, who had the care of the things belonging to the holy and moſt holy places; and theſe were particularly under the inſpection of Eleazar, becauſe they were things the prieſts had a ſpecial concern in; ſee ch. iv. 32.

℣. 33. Of Merari were the family of the Mahlites, and the family of the Muſhites, &c.] So called from his two ſons Mahli and Muſhi, ℣. 20: theſe are the families of Merari; the youngeſt ſon of Levi, ℣. 17.

℣. 34. And thoſe that were numbered of them, &c.] Of the above two families: according to the number of all the males from a month old and upward, were 6200; the leaſt number of them all.

℣. 35. And the chief of the houſe of the father of the families of Merari, &c.] I think it ſhould rather be rendered, and the chief of the houſe, that is, of the Merarites, the father to the families of Merari; the common father to them all, having the chief authority and power over them, and ſo in ℣. 24, 30: ſhall be Zuriel the ſon of Abihail; of whom we read no where elſe, nor is it certain of which family he was, whether of the Mahlites or Muſhites: theſe ſhall pitch on the ſide of the tabernacle northward; to the left of it, between that and the camp of Dan.

℣. 36. And under the cuſtody and charge of the ſons of Merari ſhall be the boards of the tabernacle, &c.] Both of the holy, and the moſt holy place, which were the walls of the tabernacle, and which were covered with curtains; theſe when taken down for journeying were committed to the care of the Merarites; and becauſe theſe, with what follow, were a heavy carriage, they were allowed waggons to carry them; and who on this account had more waggons given them than to the Gerſhonites, for the Kohathites had none, ch. vii. 6—9: and the bars thereof; which kept the boards tight and cloſe, ſee Exod. xxvi. 26: and the pillars thereof; the pillars on which the vail was hung, that divided between the holy and moſt holy place, and on which the hanging was put for the door of the vail, Exod. xxvi. 32, 37: and the ſockets thereof; in which both the boards and pillars were put, Exod. xxvi. 19, 32, 37.

℣. 37. And the pillars of the court round about, &c.] Of the great court which went round the tabernacle, on which pillars the hangings were hung: and their ſockets; into which the pillars were put; of both which ſee Exod. xxvii. 9—17: and their pins and their cords; the pins were fixed in the ground, and the cords faſtened the hangings of the court to them, whereby they were kept tight and unmoved by the winds; ſee Exod. xxvii. 19.

℣. 38. And thoſe that encamp before the tabernacle toward the eaſt, &c.] At which was the entrance into the tabernacle: even before the tabernacle of the congregation eaſtward; that is, before the court of the tabernacle, where the people aſſembled together: ſhall be Moſes, Aaron, and his ſons; Moſes the chief ruler, and Aaron the high-prieſt, and his ſons prieſts under him; theſe had the moſt honourable place of all, being at the front of the tabernacle, between that and the camp of Judah. There is an extraordinary prick on the word Aaron, to ſhew, as Jarchi ſays, that he was not in the number of Levites, tho' of the tribe of Levi, being high-prieſt: keeping the charge of the ſanctuary, for the charge of the children of Iſrael; either in their room and ſtead, which otherwiſe they muſt have kept; or rather for their ſafety and ſecurity, keeping out all perſons from entering into the ſanctuary, who had no buſineſs there, that they died not, as it follows: and the ſtranger that cometh nigh ſhall be put to death; that is, whoever came nigh to enter into the holy place, and did, who was no prieſt, tho' an Iſraelite, and even a Levite, or into the moſt holy place, excepting the high-prieſt, it was death unto him, either by the civil magiſtrate, or by the hand of heaven; ſo the Targum of Jonathan.

℣. 39. All that were numbered of the Levites, which Moſes and Aaron numbered at the commandment of the Lord, throughout their families, &c.] Whence it appears, that Moſes was not alone, but Aaron with him in numbering the Levites, and that by the appointment of the Lord. The word Aaron, in the Hebrew text, has a dot on every letter, for what reaſon it is not certain; the word itſelf is left out in the Samaritan and Syriac verſions: all the males from a month old and upward, were 22,000; but by putting the ſums together they amount to 300 more; for of the Gerſhonites there were 7,500, and of the Kohathites 8,600, and of the Merarites 6,200, in all 22,300; which difficulty ſome endeavour to remove, by ſaying, as Aben Ezra obſerves, that the ſcripture takes a ſhort way, mentioning the thouſands, and leaving out the hundreds; but this, he ſays, is not right, nor is it the way of the ſcripture in this chapter; and in an after-account of the firſt-born of the Iſraelites, not only the hundreds are mentioned, but the broken number of 73. Others thinks there is a corruption crept into the text ſome where in the particular numbers, through the inadvertency of ſome copyiſt; and ſuppoſe it to be in the number of the Kohathites, where they fancy שש ſix, is put inſtead of שלש three: but there is no occaſion to ſuppoſe either of theſe, for which there is no foundation, ſince the reaſon why 300 are left out in the ſum total may be, becauſe there were ſo many firſt-born among the Levites, and theſe could not be exchanged for the firſt-born of the other tribes; they, as ſuch, being the Lord's, and one firſt-born could not redeem another; and ſo it is ſaid in the Talmud [t], theſe 300 were firſt born, and there is no firſt-born redeems a firſt-born, or frees from the redemption-price of five ſhekels.

℣. 40. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] After he had taken the number of the Levites: number all the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael, from a month old and upward, and take the number of their names; that they might be compared with the number of the Levites, and the difference between them obſerved.

℣.

[t] T. Bab. Becoroth, fol. 5. 1.

℣. 41. And thou ſhalt take the Levites for me, &c.] For his ſervice, to miniſter to his prieſts, and ſerve in his tabernacle: I am the Lord; who has a right to all, and can claim whom he pleaſes for himſelf in a ſpecial manner, and therefore could, and did take the Levites to himſelf: inſtead of the firſt-born among the children of Iſrael; theſe he had taken to him before, and ordered to be ſanctified unto him, and for whom a redemption-price was paid to his prieſts for the ſupport of them, and the tabernacle-ſervice, and now it was his will to make an exchange of theſe for the Levites: and the cattle of the Levites, inſtead of all the firſtlings among the cattle of the children of Iſrael; every firſtling of clean cattle was the Lord's, and given to his prieſts, and the firſtlings of unclean cattle were redeemed with a lamb, and which were given to the ſame; and now inſtead of theſe he requires the cattle of the Levites; not that they ſhould be deprived of their uſe of them, or that they ſhould be taken and ſacrificed, but that they ſhould be with them devoted to him, and they ſhould poſſeſs them in his right.

℣. 42. And Moſes numbered, as the Lord commanded him, &c.] No doubt aſſiſted by others, tho' not mentioned: all the firſt-born among the children of Iſrael; which ſome think were only thoſe that were born ſince they came out of Egypt, as Bonfrerius, biſhop Patrick, and others.

℣. 43. And all the firſt-born males, &c.] For ſuch only were ordered to be numbered, and not firſt-born females: by the number of names; which were particularly taken: from a month old and upward; for before that time they were not ſanctified to the Lord, nor ſubject to the redemption-price: of thoſe that were numbered of them, were 22,273; ſo that there were 273 more than the Levites.

℣. 44. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After the number was taken, and gave him directions what to do upon it: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 45. Take the Levites inſtead of all the firſt-born among the children of Iſrael, &c.] The Lord had declared before that he had taken them, and now he bids Moſes take them, who had numbered them, and give them to Aaron, inſtead of the firſt-born, whoſe numbers were alſo taken for this purpoſe: and the cattle of the Levites inſtead of their cattle; but not to be given to Aaron and his ſons, or to the prieſts for their uſe, but to remain with the Levites for their uſe, who were now ſeparated from the other tribes, and taken into the ſervice of God; and as they were dedicated to God, ſo their cattle likewiſe for their ſupport as his miniſters: and the Levites ſhall be mine; in a ſpecial manner his, being devoted to his ſervice: I am the Lord; who had a right to do this, and expected to be obeyed in it.

℣. 46. And for thoſe that are to be redeemed, &c.] With money, there being not Levites enow to anſwer to them, and exchange for them: of the 273 of the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael, which are more than the Levites; for the ſum total of the Levites, as given, was but 22,000, whereas the ſum total of the firſt-born of Iſrael were 22,273, ſo that there were 273 more of the latter than of the former; and what was to be done with theſe, next follows.

℣. 47. Thou ſhalt even take five ſhekels apiece by the poll, &c.] Or head; every firſt-born, or his parent for him, was bound to pay five ſhekels, which were about eleven or twelve ſhillings of our money, and which was afterwards ſettled as the price of ſuch a redemption, ch. xviii. 16: after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary ſhalt thou take them; being full weight, according to the ſtandard there kept: the ſhekel is twenty gerahs; ſee the note on Lev. xxvii. 25.

℣. 48. And thou ſhalt give the money wherewith the odd number of them is to be redeemed, &c.] Or the ſuperfluous number, the number of them that exceeded the Levites, namely, 273: the price of their redemption is ordered to be given unto Aaron, and to his ſons; ſince the Levites were taken in lieu of the firſt-born, whoſe redemption-money belonged to the prieſts; and ſeeing the Levites were given to Aaron and his ſons on that conſideration, and there being a deficiency of them to anſwer to the firſt-born, it was but right and juſt that the redemption-price of the ſuperfluous number ſhould be paid to them.

℣. 49. And Moſes took the redemption-money, &c.] Of five ſhekels per head: of them that were over and above redeemed by the Levites; or were more than thoſe redeemed by them. A Levite redeemed a firſt-born, or freed him from the redemption price, being taken in lieu of him: 22000 Levites were anſwerable to 22000 firſt-born of Iſrael; but as there were no more Levites than the above number, there remained 273 firſt-born to be redeemed by money, and it was the redemption money of theſe Moſes took.

℣. 50. Of the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael took he the money, &c.] Or for the firſt-born, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, and ſo the Hebrew particle מאת is ſometimes uſed [u]; for children of a month old or little more could not pay the money, but their parents for them, which was paid by them, and Moſes received it for the ſuperfluous number of 273; but it is a matter of doubt, of whom this was exacted, and by whom paid, and who could be reckoned as this ſuperfluous number, unleſs they were the laſt 273 that were numbered: ſome have thought this was paid out of the public ſtock, which was a ready way of doing it, but whether reaſonable is not ſo manifeſt, ſince theſe firſt-born were the properties of particular perſons; the more commonly received method of doing it with the Jewiſh writers was, according to Jarchi and Abarbinel, and ſo in the Talmud [w], by lot; the former of which deſcribes the manner of doing it thus, 22000 pieces (of paper or parchment) were brought and on them written, a ſon of Levi, or a Levite, and 273 other pieces, and on them were written, five ſhekels; theſe were mixed together and put into an urn or box, and then they were bid to come and take out the pieces, and according as the lot was, they were allowed as redeemed by the Levites, or paid the redemption-money: and as this was a method much in uſe with the Hebrews, it is not improbable: 1365 ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary; which is exactly the number of ſhekels that 273 ſhould pay, reckoning five ſhekels per head; which Jarchi counts thus, for 200 firſt-born 1000 ſhekels, for 70 firſt born 350, and for three firſt-born 15 ſhekels, which in all amounted to about 170 pounds of our money.

℣. 51. And Moſes gave the money of them that were redeemed, &c.] That were redeemed this way, and not by Levites, as in ℣. 49. but by money, paying five ſkekels a-head: unto Aaron and his ſons; to whom the Levites were given; and this money, as a recompence for the deficiency of the number number of them, to anſwer to the firſt-born exchanged for them: according to the word of the Lord; ℣. 48: as the Lord commanded Moſes; ſo did he, being a faithful ſervant in all things in the houſe of God; he did not convert it to his own uſe, or to any other uſe than to what God had appointed it.

[u] Vid. Nold. Partic. Ebr. Concord. p. 579.

[w] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 17. 1.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter relates an order to number the Levites fit for buſineſs, and gives an account of the time and age when they ſhould enter into ſervice, and how long they ſhould continue therein, ℣. 1—3. what their particular ſervice ſhould be; and firſt of the Kohathites, ℣. 4—20. next of the Gerſhonites, ℣. 22—28. and then of the Merarites, ℣. 29—33. after which Moſes and Aaron, with the chief of the congregation, numbered each of them, even as many as were at the age fit for ſervice, as the Kohathites, ℣. 34—37. the Gerſhonites, ℣. 38—41. the Merarites, ℣. 42—45. the ſum total of which is given, ℣. 46—49.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, &c.] After they had taken the number of the Levites, and made an exchange of the firſt-born of Iſrael for them; and now they are ordered to number them a ſecond time, and take out from them ſuch as were fit for ſervice: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Take the ſum of the ſons of Kohath from among the ſons of Levi, &c.] They were to begin with them firſt, and number them: after their families, by the houſe of their fathers; as many as were of the age after mentioned; and the reaſon why they began with Kohath, and not Gerſhon, the eldeſt ſon, as in the former numbering, was; not as Aben Ezra ſuggeſts, becauſe of Moſes and Aaron, who ſprung from him, for that if it had any ſtrength in it would have held good before; but rather, as Chaſkuni and others, becauſe the Kohathites carried the ark and other holy things; though the true reaſon ſeems to be, becauſe of the order obſerved in taking down the tabernacle, and removing the parts of it, and the things in it; and it was moſt proper and reaſonable when they were about to take it down, firſt to take out the ark, table, &c. which was the buſineſs of the Kohathites to carry; next to take down the curtains, coverings, and hangings for the tabernacle and court, and the doors thereof, which were the charge of the Merarites; wherefore, in this order the ſum out of each of them fit for buſineſs were ordered to be numbered.

℣. 3. From 30 years old and upward even until 50 years old, &c.] This is the full time of the Levites ſervice, and the prime ſeaſon of man's life for buſineſs; at 30 years of age he is at his full ſtrength, and when 50 it begins to decline: it is ſaid in the Miſnah [x], "a ſon of thirty years for "ſtrength," upon which one of the commentators [y] makes this remark, that the Levites ſet up the tabernacle and took it down, and loaded the waggons, and carried on their ſhoulders from 30 years and upwards: thus both John the Baptiſt, the fore-runner of Chriſt, and Chriſt himſelf entered into their miniſtry at this age: all that enter into the hoſt; army or warfare; for though the Levites were exempted from going forth to war, yet their ſervice was a ſort of warfare; they were a camp of themſelves about the tabernacle, and part of their work was to watch and guard it, that it was neither defiled nor robbed; in alluſion to this, the miniſtry of the word is called a warfare, and miniſters of the goſpel good ſoldiers of Chriſt, and their doctrines weapons of warfare, 1 Tim. i. 18. 2 Tim. ii. 3. 2 Cor. x. 3, 4, ſome interpret this of the troop, company, or congregation of the Levites, which a man of thirty years of age was admitted into for buſineſs: to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation; not in the ſanctuary, either in the holy place or in the moſt holy place, where they were never allowed to enter, or do any buſineſs in, ſuch as ſacrificing, burning incenſe, &c. but in that part of it which was called the tabernacle of the congregation, or where the people aſſembled on occaſion, and that was the court, which was ſo called, as Jarchi obſerves on Exod. xxix. 32.

℣. 4. This ſhall be the ſervice of the ſons of Kohath, in the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] What follows from hence to the end of ℣. 15. about the moſt holy things; which Aben Ezra interprets, only of the ark, which was indeed a moſt holy thing, and ſtood in the moſt holy place; but there were other holy things, in the care of which the ſervice of the Kohathites lay; as the ſhew-bread-table, the candleſtick, and the altars of incenſe and burnt-offering, and the vail, and the miniſtring veſſels, which Jarchi reckons with it, as more holy than all other things.

℣. 5. And when the camp ſetteth forward, &c.] Upon the cloud's removing, and the trumpets blowing: Aaron ſhall come and his ſons; into the holy place: and they ſhall take down the covering-vail: the vail that divided between the holy and the moſt holy place, which covered all in the holy of holies out of ſight: and cover the ark of teſtimony with it; together with the mercy-ſeat and cherubim on it, that they might not be ſeen nor touched by the Levites when they carried them. Now though the high-prieſt himſelf might not go into the moſt holy place but once a year, on the day of atonement, yet on this occaſion, when the tabernacle was to be taken down, and the things in it to be removed, both he and his ſons might enter without danger; ſince, as biſhop Patrick obſerves, the divine majeſty was gone from thence in the cloud which gave the ſignal for the motion of the camp, and the taking down of the tabernacle.

℣. 6. And ſhall put thereon the covering of badgers ſkins, &c.] Not that which covered the tabernacle, for that was committed to the Gerſhonites, ℣. 25. but a covering made of theſe on purpoſe for the preſent uſe, to preſerve the ark from rain and duſt; and this covering was put not immediately upon the ark, but upon the other coverings that were over the ark, and ſo preſerved the vail as well as the ark: and ſhall ſpread over it a cloth wholly of blue; it is a matter of queſtion, whether this was over the covering of badgers ſkins alſo; if over the latter, as one would think it ſhould be, by the order of the text, how could that be a ſhelter, [x] Pirke Abot, c. 5. §. 21.

[y] Bartenora in ib.

ter from the rain and duſt, which ſeems to be the uſe of it, and therefore ſhould be the outermoſt, as one of the ſame kind was the outermoſt covering of the tabernacle? Aben Ezra obſerves, there were ſome that ſay it was over the covering of badger's ſkin, but it is right in my mine eyes, ſays he, that it was ſpread over the covering vail; if indeed it was for the ſake of honour and dignity, the firſt is right, but the badger's ſkin was on account of rain and duſt: and ſhall put the ſtaves thereof; having been removed whilſt the ark was covering, as Aben Ezra obſerves, or otherwiſe they always remained in their rings, and were never taken out, Exod xxv. 14, 15. but on this occaſion they might, and then be put in again for the carrying of the ark, which was the the uſe of them; though he alſo remarks, that there are ſome that ſay the ſenſe is, they put the ſtaves on the ſhoulders of them that carried it, which is not a deſpicable ſenſe; unleſs rather it is to be underſtood of putting the ſtaves through holes made in the coverings of the ark, and diſpoſing and fitting them in them, for the better carriage of it.

℣. 7. And upon the table of ſhew-bread they ſhall ſpread a cloth of blue, &c.] That that alſo might not be ſeen nor touched by the Levites: and put thereon the diſhes, and the ſpoons, and the bowls, and the covers to cover withal; all which belonged to the ſhew-bread-table; the uſe of which, ſee the note on Exod. xxv. 29. theſe ſeem to be put not immediately upon the table, but upon the blue cloth ſpread over the table: and the continual bread ſhall be thereon; the ſhew-bread is called continual, becauſe it was always on the table; for whilſt the one was removing by a ſett of prieſts, which had ſtood a week, new loaves were placed by another ſett of prieſts: this bread ſeems at this time to be placed alſo upon the table, ſpread with the blue cloth; and from hence it appears, that the Iſraelites had the ſhew-bread in the wilderneſs; for the making of which they might be ſupplied with corn from the neighbouring countries, though they themſelves needed not any, being daily fed with manna.

℣ 8. And they ſhall ſpread upon them a cloth of ſcarlet, &c.] Upon the diſhes and other veſſels belonging to the ſhew-bread-table, and on the ſhew bread itſelf: and cover the ſame with a covering of badgers ſkins; this was clearly the outward covering, and ſeems to confirm the obſervation made in ℣. 6. that the ſame ſort of covering was the outermoſt covering of the ark: and ſhall put in the ſtaves thereof; which belonged to the table, and were made to carry it with on occaſion, from place to place; ſee Exod. xxv. 27, 28. and the ſame phraſe being uſed as here, of the ſtaves of the ark in ℣. 6. ſeems to confirm the ſenſe of them there, that they were taken out and put in upon this occaſion, though otherwiſe fixed.

℣. 9. And they ſhall take a cloth of blue, and cover the candleſtick of the light, and his lamps, &c.] Which had lamps in it, and were continually lighted, and gave light in the holy place: and his tongs, and his ſnuff diſhes, and all the oil-veſſels thereof, wherewith they miniſter unto it; by ſupplying the lamps with oil, and ſnuffing and trimming them.

℣. 10. And they ſhall put it, and all the veſſels thereof, within a covering of badgers ſkins, &c.] Which here alſo was the outermoſt covering; the ark and the ſhew-bread-table had three coverings, but the candleſtick only two, they being more ſacred than that, eſpecially the ark: and ſhall put it upon a bar; the word mot perhaps ſignifies a kind of mat or mattreſs, on which the candleſtick and its veſſels, bundled together in the covering of the badgers ſkins, were laid and carried between men on ſtaves; and ſo the Septuagint render the word ſtaves, as does the Targum of Onkelos.

℣. 11. And upon the golden altar they ſhall ſpread a cloth of blue, &c.] The altar of incenſe, which was overlayed with gold, and therefore called a golden one, to which the alluſion is in Rev. viii. 3: and cover it with a covering of badgers ſkins; after the cloth of blue was ſpread upon it: and ſhall put to the ſtaves thereof; into the rings, both made to bear and carry it, upon occaſion, from place to place.

℣. 12. And they ſhall take all the inſtruments of miniſtry, wherewith they miniſter in the ſanctuary, &c.] The garments in which the prieſts miniſtred in the ſanctuary, which were laid up in proper places, and which they only wore when in ſervice: and put them in a cloth of blue, and cover them with a covering of badgers ſkins; all wrapt up in one bundle: and ſhall put them on a bar; the ſame ſort of carriage on which the candleſtick, and its veſſels, were borne, ℣. 10.

℣. 13. And they ſhall take away the aſhes from the altar, &c.] Having cleared the holy of holies, and the holy place, they were to come forth from thence into the court of the tabernacle, where ſtood the altar of burnt offering, which is here meant, and on which ſacrifices being daily burnt, there were always aſhes to be removed; and which at this time was highly neceſſary to be done, when the tabernacle was taken down, and all belonging to it to be carried away; and though no mention is made of the fire, which was always burning on it, it was doubtleſs preſerved, and care was taken for the carrying it along with the altar, or in a ſeparate veſſel from it. Biſhop Patrick ſuppoſes it might be carried upon the grate.

℣. 14. And they ſhall put upon it all the veſſels thereof, &c.] Upon the altar covered with a blue cloth; on that were to be put every thing belonging to the altar: wherewith they miniſter about it; the prieſts when they offered ſacrifice on it: even the cenſers, the fleſh-hooks, and the baſons, all the veſſels of the altar; of which ſee Exod. xxvii. 3: and they ſhall ſpread upon it a covering of badgers ſkins; to prevent the rains falling upon them, which being all of braſs, would be apt to ruſt: and put to the ſtaves of it; which were made to bear and carry it on ſuch an occaſion as this, Exod. xxvii. 6, 7. No mention is made of the laver, though there is both in the Septuagint and Samaritan verſions; which add, "and they ſhall take a purple "cloth and cover the laver, and its baſe, and ſhall "put it into a covering of ſkin of a blue colour, "and put it upon bearers:" but perhaps the reaſon why this is not mentioned is, becauſe it was carried uncovered; the myſtery of which Ainſworth conjectures was this, that it might be a lively repreſentation of the grace of God in Chriſt, continuing and opened as an ever-ſpringing fountain, where always God's elect, having faith in him, may waſh and purge themſelves in the blood of Chriſt unto forgiveneſs of ſin, ſanctification of the Spirit, and ſalvation; ſee Zech. xiii. 1.

℣. 15. And when Aaron and his ſons had made an end of covering the ſanctuary, &c.) Not the holy place, nor the moſt holy place, for theſe were not covered by them; but the holy things in them, as the Septuagint verſion, the ark, ſhew-bread-table, &c. and all the veſſels of the ſanctuary; all appertaining to thoſe holy things, which are before mentioned, tioned. Jarchi interprets the ſanctuary, or the holineſs, of the ark and altar, and all the veſſels of the ſanctuary, of the candleſtick and the inſtruments of miniſtry: as the camp is to ſet forward; which made the covering of them neceſſary, in order to their being carried as that moved: after that the ſons of Kohath ſhall come to bear it; or rather them, all the holy things, and their veſſels, and that upon their ſhoulders: but they ſhall not touch any holy thing; even in bearing them, neither the ark nor any other, only the ſtaves and bar, on which they were carried: leſt they die: by the immediate hand of God: theſe things are the burden of the ſons of Kohath, in the tabernacle of the congregation; the above things, the ark, &c. which they were to bear on their ſhoulders, and not make uſe of waggons to carry them.

℣. 16. And to the office of Eleazar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt, pertaineth the oil for the light, &c.] The following things, to bear them, according to ſome Jewiſh writers; but rather it was to give the oil for the light, that is, the veſſels, and ſo the veſſels of the oil to the ſons of the Kohathites; agreeable to which are the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, who paraphraſe the words, "and that "which was delivered to Eleazar the ſon of Aaron "the prieſt, the oil for the light, &c." And indeed the words, as they are in the Hebrew text, may be rendered, "and the overſight of Eleazar "the ſon of Aaron the prieſt ſhall be, or let it be, "the oil for the light, &c."[a] the ſame word being ſo rendered in a latter clauſe of this ſame text: he had the inſpection of theſe, and on him lay to ſee to it, that theſe were carried by the Kohathites, the oil for the light of the lamps in the candleſtick; of which ſee Exod. xxvii. 20: and the ſweet incenſe; to burn on the altar of incenſe, Exod. xxx. 34—38: and the daily meat-offering; offered with the lambs morning and evening, Exod. xxix. 40, 44: and the anointing-oil; with which Aaron and his ſons were anointed, the tabernacle and all its veſſels, Exod. xxx. 23—33: and the overſight of all the tabernacle, and of all that therein is, in the ſanctuary, and in the veſſels thereof; the former, the oil for the light, &c. were his immediate overſight and care; but the overſight of theſe by his brother Ithamar, according to the Jewiſh writers.

℣. 17. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, &c.] And gave them a very ſolemn and awful charge about this affair of the Kohathites, it being a very hazardous one they were employed in: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 18. Cut ye not off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites, from among the Levites.] Or give no occaſion, as the Targum of Jonathan; or be not the cauſe of their cutting off, as Jarchi, thro' negligence or inadvertency of theirs, in packing up the above things, and delivering them to them.

℣. 19. But thus do unto them, &c.] As after directed: that they may live and not die; live long, and not die a ſudden and violent death: when they approach unto the moſt holy things; the ark, the ſhew-bread-table, &c. to take them up and carry them: Aaron and his ſons ſhall go in; into the holy and moſt holy places: and appoint them every one to his ſervice, and to his burden; what every one ſhall do, and how they ſhall take them up, and bear them.

℣. 20. But they ſhall not go in to ſee when the holy things are covered, &c.] They were not to be preſent whilſt they were packing up, leſt they ſhould ſee any of them with their eyes; they were not to go in until they were quite covered out of ſight; which may ſignify the hiding of the myſteries of grace in thoſe things under the former diſpenſation, when even the Levites themſelves were not admitted to a ſight of them; ſee Eph. iii. 4, 5: leſt they die; by the immediate hand of God.

℣. 21. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Tho' Aaron is not mentioned here, he was concerned in taking the ſum of the Gerſhonites, as well as of the Kohathites, as appears from ℣. 41: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 22. Take alſo the ſum of the ſons of Gerſhon, &c.] As well as of the ſons of Kohath; for tho' Gerſhon was Levi's eldeſt ſon, yet his poſterity were not excuſed from the ſervice of the tabernacle, and bearing things of it in journeying: throughout the houſes of their fathers by their families; all in their ſeveral houſes, and in the ſeveral families in thoſe houſes, that were of the age next mentioned, were to be numbered.

℣. 23. From 30 years old and upward, until 50 years old ſhalt thou number them, &c.] Take an account how many there are of that age, and ſo fit for ſervice; ſee the note on ℣. 3: to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation; as the reſt of the Levites; ſee ℣. 3.

℣. 24. This is the ſervice of the families of the Gerſhonites, to ſerve, and for burdens, &c.] The former of theſe phraſes Aben Ezra interprets of ſetting up the tabernacle, making the bread, (the ſhew-bread) ſlaying (the ſacrifices) and keeping, that is, watching and guarding the tabernacle; and the latter of what they did when journeying, bearing and carrying the things aſſigned to them, afterwards mentioned.

℣. 25. And they ſhall bear the curtains of the tabernacle, &c.] The ten curtains of fine linen, Exod. xxvi. 1: and the tabernacle of the congregation; the curtains of goat's hair made for a tent over it, as Jarchi, ſee Exod. xxvi. 7: his covering; the covering of rams ſkins dyed red, Exod. xxvi. 14: and the covering of the badgers ſkins that is above upon it; over all the reſt: and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; the eaſtern vail, as Jarchi calls it, which was for the door of the tent that led into the tabernacle, the holy place, Exod. xxvi. 36.

℣. 26. And the hangings of the court, &c.] Which made the great court that ſurrounded the tabernacle, Exod. xxvii. 9. and the hanging for the door of the gate of the court; the eaſtern gate that led into the court, an hanging of 20 cubits, Exod. xxvii. 16. which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar round about; that is, which hangings that formed the court and were round about the tabernacle, and the altar of burnt-offering; ſee the note on ch. xxiii. 26. and their cords; which faſtened the hangings to pins or ſtakes fixed in the ground to keep them tight, that they might not be moved to and fro with the wind: and all the inſtruments of their ſervice; in the court, as the tables on which the ſacrifices were laid, and the hooks, and cords, and pins, on which they were hung and faſtened, as Aben Ezra; ſee Ezek. xl. 39—43. and all that is made for them; for the veſſels of ſervice, or for the tabernacle, or the altar, as the ſame writer intimates: ſo ſhall they ſerve; by bearing them and carrying them.

℣. 27. At the appointment of Aaron and his ſons, &c. As they ſhall order and direct: ſhall be all the ſervice of the ſons of the Gerſhonites; every one of them was to take their ſhare, as Aaron and his ſons ſons ſhould appoint them: in all their burdens, and in all their ſervice; what each of them ſhould carry, and in what they ſhould perform duty: and ye ſhall appoint to them in charge all their burdens; charge them carefully to keep all that were committed to them to bear, that none be loſt, not a pin nor a cord.

[a] So Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Piſcator. [b] לצבא צבא ad militandum militiam, Montanus, Druſius.

℣. 28. This is the ſervice of the families of the ſons of Gerſhon, &c.] Which they ſhould execute when the camp and tabernacle were in motion: in the tabernacle of the congregation; in the court, where they ſhould take up their burdens; or which lie in things reſpecting the tabernacle; this was the part they were to be employed in; namely, in taking care of the hangings of the tabernacle, &c. and their charge ſhall be under the hand of Ithamar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt; the things committed to their care, were delivered by him to them, and they were under his inſpection and direction.

℣. 29. As for the ſons of Merari, &c.] The third and youngeſt ſon of Levi: thou ſhalt number them after their families, by the houſe of their fathers; which is the form of expreſſion uſed of them all.

℣. 30. From thirty years old and upwards, &c.] The Septuagint verſion here, and in ℣. 3, 23. renders it, from 25 years old and upward, agreeable to ch. viii. 24. at the which age the Levites went into the tabernacle, to wait and to learn their buſineſs, but they did not enter upon it till 30: even unto fifty years old ſhalt thou number them; at which age they were diſcharged from buſineſs: every one that entereth into the ſervice, to do the work of the tabernacle of the congregation; the ſame as in ℣. 3. ſee the note there.

℣. 31. And this is the charge of their burden, &c.] What ſhould be committed to their care and charge, and they ſhould bear and carry: according to all their ſervice in the tabernacle of the congregation; which was aſſigned to them as their part, and which was very heavy and cumberſome, and therefore they had waggons allowed them, ch. vii. 8. the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and ſockets thereof; all theſe belonged to the holy and to the moſt holy place; ſee Exod. xxvi. 15—37.

℣. 32. And the pillars of the court round about, and their ſockets, and their pins, and their cords, &c.] Theſe belonged to the court of the tabernacle; the pillars were what the hangings were hung upon, and the ſockets, into which the pillars were ſet, and the pins and cords, with which the hangings were faſtened; ſee Exod. xxvii. 9—19. and with all their inſtruments, and with all their ſervice; what ever elſe were uſed in, and ſerved for the ſupport of this part of the tabernacle: and by name ye ſhall reckon the inſtruments of the charge of their burden; every thing, even the leaſt that were committed to their charge, and they were to bear and carry, either they themſelves, or in waggons, were to be mentioned by name; and not only every board, pillar, and ſocket were to be told out to them, and particularly named, how many they were, to what they belonged, from whence they were taken, and where to be replaced; but every pin, and cord, and the uſe of them, that ſo when they came to ſet up the tabernacle again, there might be nothing wanting in its place to ſecure it, and make it as firm as at firſt: ſuch particular notice and care does God take of all his people, and Chriſt of all committed to him, and ſo ſhould miniſters the word, of all that are their charge, who muſt one day give an account to God, Heb. xiii. 17.

℣. 33. This is the ſervice of the families of the ſons of Merari, &c.] The Mahlites and Muſhites, namely, the ſervice before obſerved, the particulars of which are given: according to all their ſervice in the tabernacle of the congregation; agreeable to what was allotted to them in that part of the tabernacle they were concerned in: under the hand of Ithamar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt; who had the overſight of theſe as well as of the Gerſhonites, as Eleazar had of the Kohathites; though as Eleazar was the chief of the tribe of Levi, it is thought that Ithamar acted under him; ch. iii. 32.

℣. 34. And Moſes and Aaron, and the chief of the congregation numbered the ſons of the Kohathites, &c.] Perhaps theſe chiefs were the ſame with thoſe who were concerned with Moſes and Aaron in numbering all the tribes whoſe names were given, ch. i. 5—16. the Kohathites are begun with, according to the divine direction, and then the Gerſhonites and Merarites in their order; and from hence to the end of ℣. 48. is only an account of the numbering of each of them, as ordered by the Lord, and this account is expreſſed in the ſame terms in them all; there remains nothing to be obſerved but the particular ſums of each of them, the number of the Kohathites from 30 years old even to 50, men able and fit for buſineſs, were 2750. ℣. 36. whereas their number from a month old were 8600, ch. iii. 28. ſo that not a third part of them were at an age for ſervice: the number of the Gerſhonites were 2630, ℣. 40. whoſe number of males in all, were 7500, ch. iii. 22. ſo that they were rather more than a third part who were able bodied men and fit for buſineſs; and the number of the Merarites were 3200, ℣. 44. and as their number of males of a month old and upwards, were 6200, ch. iii. 34. there were more than half of them able and fit men for ſervice; in which, as Ainſworth obſerves, may be ſeen the wiſdom of divine providence, that whereas the ſervice of the Kohathites and Gerſhonites were the lighteſt, and what was committed to them the eaſieſt of carriage, they had the fewer hands of able men to be employed, though their numbers of individuals were the greateſt; and the Merarites who had the ſmalleſt number of males, yet having the heavieſt work to do in carrying burdens, loading and unloading waggons, were ſuperior to the reſt in their number of able-bodied men; and thus God makes good his promiſe, that as the day of his people is their ſtrength ſhall be; whatever work, and ſervice God calls men to, he will fit them for it: the ſum total of the Levites in the ſeveral diviſions of them, who were between 30 and 50 years of age, in which they performed their office, was 8580, ℣. 48. a ſmall number, as the above writer obſerves, of ſuch as warred the ſpiritual warfare in the ſanctuary of God, when the tribe of Judah afforded 74600 for the outward warfare.

℣. 49. According to the commandment of the Lord, they were numbered by the hand of Moſes, &c.] Aaron and the chief of the congregation of Iſrael aſſiſting in it: every one according to his ſervice; called in ℣. 47. the ſervice of the miniſtry, or ſervice of ſervice, which Jarchi interprets, of that part of the ſervice of the Levites, which lay in ſinging the ſong with cymbals and harps; which, he ſays, was a ſervice to another ſervice; though it ſeems to be better explained by Chaſkuni, of their taking down and ſetting up of the tabernacle, which was a ſervice vice incumbent on all the Levites: and according to his burden; called the ſervice of the burden, ¥. 47. which the laſt mentioned writer reſtrains to the ark, table, candleſtick, and altars, which the Kohathites carried on their ſhoulders; but may be extended to what each of them bore and carried when journeying: thus were they numbered of him, as the Lord commanded Moſes; from 30 years old to 50, as Jarchi obſerves; for that was the order given to Moſes by the Lord, which he punctually attended to, as a faithful ſervant in the houſe of God.

CHAP. V.

THIS chapter contains a repetition of ſome former laws, concerning putting unclean perſons out of the camp, ¥. 1—4. making reſtitution in caſe of treſpaſs againſt another, ¥. 5—8. and of giving the offering of all holy things and all hallowed things to the prieſts, ¥. 9, 10. and a new law concerning jealouſy, in a man, of his wife, ¥. 11—14. when ſhe was to be brought to the prieſt, and various rites and ceremonies to be uſed, ¥. 15—23. who was to give her bitter water as a trial of her chaſtity, which, if guilty, would have a ſtrange effect upon her, and make her accurſed, but if not, would not affect her, and ſhe would be free and happy, ¥. 24—31.

¥. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Jarchi ſays, what follows was ſaid on the day the tabernacle was erected, but it ſeems rather to have been delivered after the ſeveral camps were formed, and the people numbered, when thoſe that were unclean were ordered to be caſt out of them: ſaying; as follows.

¥. 2. Command the children of Iſrael, &c.] Not as from himſelf, but from the Lord; deliver out the following as a command of his, to which obedience was required of all the children of Iſrael: that they put out of the camp every leper; there were three camps, Jarchi ſays, in the time of their encampment; between the curtains was the camp of the Shekinah, or the divine majeſty; the encampment of the Levites round about; and from thence to the end, was the camp of the ſtandards, to the four winds, which was the camp of Iſrael; and the leper was to be put out of them all; ſo Ben Gerſom; ſee Lev. xiii. 46. and every one that hath an iſſue; a gonorrhea, man or woman, ſee Lev. xv. 2. 19. according to the above writer, ſuch an one might be in the camp of Iſrael, but was to be put out of the other two camps: and whoſoever is defiled by the dead; by attending the funerals of the dead or touching them, ſee Lev. xxi. 1. and xxii. 4. ſuch an one might go into the camp of the Levites, according to Jarchi and Ben Gerſom; and was to be put out of none but the camp of the Shekinah, or the tabernacle; but the camp of Iſrael ſeems to be meant of them all, out of which they were to be put, as an emblem of the rejection of all impure perſons out of the church of God.

¥. 3. Both male and female ſhall ye put out, &c.] Whether leprous, or profluvious, or defiled by touching a dead carcaſs: by this law Miriam when leprous, was put out of the camp, ch. xii. 14, 15. without the camp ſhall ye put them; which is repeated that it might be taken notice of, and punctually obſerved: that they defile not their camps; of which there were four, the camps of Judah, Reuben, Ephraim, and Dan: in the midſt whereof I dwell; for the tabernacle, which was the dwelling-place of the Lord, was in the midſt of the camps of Iſrael; they were pitched on the four quarters of it; and this is a reaſon why impure perſons were not ſuffered to be in the camp of Iſrael, becauſe of the preſence of God in the tabernacle ſo near them, to whom all impurity is loathſome, and not to be permitted in his ſight; and though this was ceremonial, it was typical of the uncleanneſs of ſin, which is abominable to him, and renders perſons unfit for communion with him, and with his people.

¥. 4. And the children of Iſrael did ſo, and put them without the camp, &c.] Aben Ezra obſerves, that this was done immediately before they journeyed, and that thoſe that were defiled journeyed between the ſtandard of Ephraim and the ſtandard of Dan; but this, he ſays, was by way of conjecture, ſince it is not expreſſed: as the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſo did the children of Iſrael; they were obedient in this particular.

¥. 5. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Or continued to ſpeak to him at the ſame time: ſaying; as follows.

¥. 6. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] Put them in mind of the following law, that they obſerve it; and which is here repeated, becauſe of two new things in it, as Jarchi obſerves, the one relates to confeſſion, teaching that there is no fifth part nor treſpaſs offering by witneſſes, till a man confeſſes the thing; and the other is, concerning taking any thing away by violence from a proſelyte, which is to be given to the prieſts; ſee the original law in Lev. vi. 1—7. when a man or woman ſhall commit any ſin that men commit; or, any of the ſins of men[e], which are commonly done by men, and men are ſubject to through the infirmity of the fleſh, and the temptations of ſatan; or any ſin againſt man[f], ſo ſome, as this referred to is expreſly ſaid to be, ¥. 7. to do a treſpaſs againſt the Lord; for every ſin againſt man is alſo againſt the Lord, being a breach of his command; as David's ſin againſt Uriah was a ſin againſt the Lord, Pſ. li. 4. though the Jews underſtand it particularly of lying and ſwearing falſly, appealing to God, and calling him to be a witneſs to a falſehood; and ſo the Targum of Onkelos ſeems to interpret it: and the perſon be guilty; and knows he is ſo, and even knew it when he took an oath to the contrary; ſee Lev. vi. 3, 4.

¥. 7. Then they ſhall confeſs their ſin which they have done, &c.] The form of which confeſſion, according to Fagius was, O Lord, I am guilty of death, I have deſerved to be ſtoned for this ſin, or to be ſtrangled for this treſpaſs, or to be burnt for this crime, &c. and he ſhall recompenſe his treſpaſs with the principal thereof, and add unto it the fifth part thereof; paying the whole of whatſoever he had in any manner defrauded his neighbour of, to which he was to add a fifth part of that; that is, as Aben Ezra interprets it, if he confeſſes of himſelf, but if there are witneſſes of it he muſt add

[e] מכל חטאת האדם ex omnibus peccatis hominis, Montanus. Tigurine verſion; ſo Patrick.

[f] Ex omnibus peccatis contra hominem, add two fifths, and ſome ſay, a fifth of a fifth: and give it unto him againſt whom he hath treſpaſſed; as a ſatisfaction for the injury done him.

℣. 8. But if a man have no kinſman to recompenſe the treſpaſs to, &c.] This ſuppoſes that if a man ſhould die, againſt whom the treſpaſs is, before the reſtitution is made, then it ſhall be made to his heirs; and if he has none, then it was to be given to the prieſt, as after directed: the Jews [g] generally underſtand this of a proſelyte, that has no heirs, for they ſay, there is no Iſraelite but has kinſmen, a brother or a ſon, or ſome one or other near of kin to him, of his father's family, even up to Jacob: let the treſpaſs be recompenſed unto the Lord, even to the prieſt; that is, let the principal, with the fifth part, which is the recompence for the treſpaſs committed, be given to the prieſt of the Lord, which is the ſame as if it was given to him, he being his miniſter: beſide the ram of the atonement, whereby an atonement ſhall be made for him; which, in this caſe, was ordered to be offered for the expiation of the treſpaſs, ſee Lev. vi. 6, 7. the Jewiſh canon is, "he that takes away any thing by force from a proſelyte, and ſwears to him, and he (the proſelyte) dies, lo, he ſhall pay the principal and the fifth to the prieſts, and the treſpaſs-offering to the altar, as it is ſaid, if a man has no kinſman, &c. when he brings the money and the treſpaſs-offering, and he is dead, the money ſhall be given to his ſons, but the treſpaſs-offering (the ram) ſhall feed until it contracts ſome blemiſh, and then it ſhall be ſold, and the price of it ſhall fall to the free-will-offerings [h]."

℣. 9. And every offering of all the holy things of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Of the holy ſacrifices brought by them to be offered up; that part of them which is elevated, heaved, or waved, as the heave-ſhoulder and wave-breaſt: which they bring unto the prieſt, ſhall be his; what they bring to him to offer for them, ſhall be his, who performs the ſervice, even that part of them which is his due.

℣. 10. And every man's hallowed things ſhall be his, &c.] Which he, by a vow or free-will-offering, ſeparates to holy uſes; theſe are at his own diſpoſe, to give to what prieſt he will, or they are the prieſt's; for what a man devotes to the Lord is to be given to them, or ſuch things as God has hallowed, ſanctified and ſet apart for ſacred uſes, as the firſt-fruits and tithes, they were the prieſts; the Jewiſh writers [i] reſtrain it to tithes: whatſoever any man giveth the prieſt, it ſhall be his; his perſonally, who officiates, or to whom the gift is given, and is not to be divided among the other prieſts in the courſe.

℣. 11. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] At the ſame time, and delivered to him a new law: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 12. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, &c.] It being an affair which concerned them: if any man's wife go aſide, and commit a treſpaſs againſt him; the ſin of adultery, which is a going aſide out of the way of virtue and chaſtity, and a treſpaſs againſt an huſband, a breach of the marriage-covenant with him, a defiling his bed, doing an injury and diſhonour to him, bringing confuſion into his family, and a ſpurious offspring to poſſeſs his ſubſtance: though this is to be underſtood, not of certain adultery, of which there is plain and full proof, for then there would be no occaſion of ſuch a trial, as is afterwards directed to; beſides, her huſband, in ſuch a caſe, might put her away, and even, according to the law, ſhe was to be put to death, Lev. xx. 10. but of her having committed it in the opinion of her huſband, he having ſome ground of ſuſpicion, though he could not be certain of it; and therefore, by this law, was allowed to make trial, that he might find it out, it being at preſent only a ſuſpected caſe, and a doubtful one; and the Jews [k] ſay, "they never gave "the waters to drink but in a doubtful caſe:" and ſo this may be interpreted, of her declining and departing from her huſband's houſe, not keeping at home to mind the affairs of her family, but gadding abroad, and keeping company with another man, or other men; and that after ſhe had been warned and charged by her huſband to the contrary, and ſo had diſobeyed him, and acted contrary to his will; and in that ſenſe had committed a treſpaſs, and ſo had given him ſuſpicion of her unchaſtity, for which he might have ſome reaſon; if, as it is ſaid in the Miſnah [l], he gave her an admonition before two witneſſes, ſaying, have no talk with ſuch a man, and yet ſhe talks with him; or, as the commentators add [m], be not ſecretly or in private with ſuch a one, and yet goes into a private place with him, and ſtays ſo long with him that ſhe may be defiled; this with them rendered her ſuſpected.

℣. 13. And a man lie with her carnally, &c.] That is, is ſuſpected that he has ſo done, not that it is a clear caſe, for it follows: and it be hid from the eyes of her huſband, and be kept cloſe; ſo that it is not known by her huſband, nor by any other; ſhe hath hid herſelf, ſo Ainſworth, being in a private place with another man, though warned to the contrary by her huſband: and there be no witneſs againſt her; of her being defiled, though there may be of her being in private with ſuch a man: neither ſhe be taken with the man; or in the act of uncleanneſs.

℣. 14. And the ſpirit of jealouſy come upon him, &c.] A thought riſes up in his mind, a ſtrong ſuſpicion works in him, which he cannot reſiſt and throw off, but it remains with him, and makes him very uneaſy, that his wife has defiled his bed, as it follows: and he be jealous of his wife, and ſhe be defiled; that his wife is defiled by a man; and which is the real caſe, as it afterwards appears, tho' at preſent he is not certain, only has a ſuſpicion of it: or if the ſpirit of jealouſy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and ſhe be not defiled; it is mere jealouſy and ſuſpicion, without any foundation for it; and his wife proved a chaſte and virtuous woman; yet be it which it would, he being jealous, the following law was to take place, and the following rules to be obſerved.

℣. 15. Then ſhall the man bring his wife unto the prieſt, &c.] Not to the high-prieſt but to a common prieſt, any one then officiating in his courſe; for there was a jealouſy-offering to be offered up before the Lord upon the altar, which none but a prieſt might do; and beſides, the whole proceſs in this affair was to be carried on by him: according to the Miſnah [n], the man brought his wife firſt to the Sanhedrim, or court of judicature in the place where he lived; before whom, as Maimonides [o] ſays, he

[g] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Bava Kama, c. 9. §. 11. Jarchi in loc. [h] Miſn. Bava Kama, ib. [i] Targ. Jon. Siphri & Midraſh in Jarchi in loc. [k] Bemidbar Rabba, §. 9. fol. 195. 2. [l] Sotah, c. 1. §. 1. 2. [m] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [n] Ut ſupra, §. 3, 4. [o] Hilchot Sotah, c. 3. §. 1.

he proved by witneſſes, that he had warned his wife of being in private with ſuch a man, and yet ſhe had done it again; and whereas ſhe inſiſted on her chaſtity, he deſired that the bitter waters might be given her, that the truth might appear; and then they ſent him with two diſciples of the wiſemen, to the great Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem, where the trial was made; who, in order to bring her to a confeſſion endeavoured to terrify her, as they do perſons in capital caſes, and finding this will not do, then they uſed ſmooth words, ſaying, my daughter, perhaps much wine was the occaſion of it, or much laughter, &c. and he ſhall bring her offering for her; not the prieſt, but her huſband, and that whether he is willing or not, as Aben Ezra; who alſo obſerves, that it may be interpreted, with her, or for her ſake, not to make any expiation for any fault of his, that when he firſt obſerved her immodeſty, did not reprove her; for the offering, though brought by him was not his, but his wife's, and not to expiate her ſin, but to bring it to remembrance, as is after expreſſed: the tenth part of an ephah of barley meal; which was an omer, the quantity of manna for one man every day, and the quantity of flour in the daily meat-offering, Exod. xvi. 36. and xxix. 40. only that was of fine wheaten flour, this of barley, the food of beaſts, as the Targum of Jonathan remarks; and R. Gamaliel in the Miſnah [p] ſays, that as her deed was the deed of a beaſt, ſo her offering was the food of a beaſt; and this is obſerved by Jarchi and Aben Ezra on the text, as the reaſon of barley being uſed in this offering: ſome ſay it was a ſymbol of her impudence, others of her being little at home, as the barley is not long under ground [q]; the true reaſon it may be, was for her humiliation, being vile and mean, hence it follows: he ſhall pour no oil upon it, nor put frankincenſe thereon; as uſed to be on meat offerings, denoting their acceptableneſs to God, Lev. ii. 1. the reaſon ſeems to be, becauſe theſe were tokens of joy and gladneſs, whereas this was a mournful affair, to the huſband, that he ſhould have any cauſe of ſuſpicion and jealouſy, to the wife that ſhe ſhould be ſuſpected, and to the whole family on that account: for it is an offering of jealouſy, an offering of memorial, bringing iniquity to remembrance; if guilty of it, and therefore oil and frankincenſe were forbidden in this kind of offering as in a ſin offering, Lev. v. 11.

℣. 16. And the prieſt ſhall bring her near, &c.] Or offer it, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, that is, the offering of jealouſy: and ſet her before the Lord; or it, the offering; for which the Tigurine verſion is more expreſs, "let the prieſt offer that ſacrifice, "and ſet that before the Lord," for the ſetting of the woman before the Lord is ſpoken of in ℣. 18.

℣. 17. And the prieſt ſhall take holy water, &c.] Out of the laver, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra: in an earthen veſſel; which held half a log, and that was but a quarter of a pint, or three egg-ſhells; for no more was aſſigned to a ſuſpected woman, according to the Miſnah [r]. Some ſay only a fourth part: an earthern veſſel was made uſe of, as every thing vile and mean was in this affair: and of the duſt that is in the floor of the tabernacle the prieſt ſhall take, and put it into the water; firſt the water was put in, and then the duſt, as Ben Gerſom obſerves: there was a place a cubit ſquare, where was a marble table, and a ring fixed in it, and when he lifted it up he took duſt from under it, and put it ſo as it might be upon the top of the water [s]; which was uſed, either as the Targum of Jonathan ſuggeſts, becauſe the end of all fleſh is to come to duſt, and ſo to put her in mind of her original and her end; and in like manner the earthen veſſel might ſignify, that ſhe would be broke to pieces as that veſſel; as alſo it might direct her thoughts to the tempter, by the influence of whoſe temptation ſhe had been drawn into this ſin, duſt being the ſerpent's food; and this being taken off the floor of the tabernacle, might add to the veneration of it, and make it more ſolemn and awful to drink of it.

℣. 18. And the prieſt ſhall ſet the woman before the Lord, &c.] In the eaſt of the tabernacle, with her face to the weſt, where was the holy of holies, ſo Ben Gerſom; but not immediately, for they had her from place to place, as Jarchi ſays, till ſhe was weary, and her mind diſturbed, that ſhe might confeſs; and if ſhe ſaid, I am defiled, ſhe rent the writing of her dowry, and went out; but if ſhe ſaid I am pure, they brought her to the eaſtern gate, the gate of Nicanar, for there they made women ſuſpected of adultery to drink the waters [t]: and uncover the woman's head; as a token of her immodeſty and unſubjection to her huſband, and that ſhe might be ſeen by all, to cauſe ſhame in her: according to the Miſnah [u], the prieſt took off her cloaths, and looſed her hair—if ſhe was clothed with white garments, he clothed her with black; if ſhe had on her ornaments of gold, chains, earrings or rings, he took them away from her, that ſhe might be unſeemly, and whoever would might come and look at her: and put the offering of memorial into her hands, which is the jealouſy-offering; to weary her, as Jarchi ſays, that if perhaps her mind was diſturbed ſhe would confeſs; and ſo in the Miſnah [w] it is ſaid, that her huſband put this offering into her hands to weary her; but the true reaſon here ſeems to be, that it might appear to be her own offering: and the prieſt ſhall have in his hand the bitter water that cauſeth the curſe; not that the water was bitter of itſelf, for it was the water out of the laver, and had nothing in it but the duſt of the floor of the tabernacle; though ſome think ſome bitter thing was put into it, ſo Ben Gerſom, as wormwood; but it is ſo called from the effects of it on thoſe that were guilty; it produced ſad effects in them, bitter and diſtreſſing, and made them appear to be accurſed ones, for it was not bitter till it entered, ℣. 24. whereas it was not ſo to the innocent, nor attended with any ſuch conſequence to them; ſo that there was nothing in the water itſelf, but its efficacy was divine and ſupernatural.

℣. 19. And the prieſt ſhall charge her by an oath, &c.] Or give her her oath: and ſay unto the woman, if no man hath lien with thee; beſides her huſband: and thou haſt not gone aſide to uncleanneſs with another inſtead of thy huſband; which is but another phraſe expreſſive of the ſame thing, the ſin of adultery: be thou free from this bitter water that cauſeth the curſe; if this is the caſe, it ſhall produce no bitter effects, or bring any curſe upon thee.

℣. 20. But if thou haſt gone aſide to another inſtead of thy huſband, &c.] Gone aſide from the paths of modeſty and chaſtity, and betook herſelf to another man's bed inſtead of her huſband's: and if thou be defiled; by committing adultery: and ſome man hath lien with thee beſide thy huſband; theſe phraſes are all ſynonymous, and a heap of words words are made uſe of to expreſs the ſin, and that there might be no evaſion of it, and that it might be clear what was intended, this being ſaid on oath.

[p] Sotah, c. 2. §. 1. [q] Apud Muſſ. in loc. [r] Sotah, c. 2. §. 2. Menachot, c. 9. §. 3. [s] Sotah, ib.
[t] Ibid. c. 1. §. 5. [u] Ib. §. 5, 6. [w] Ib. c. 2. §. 1.

℣. 21. Then the prieſt ſhall charge the woman with an oath of curſing, &c.] An oath which has a curſe annexed to it, if taken falſly, which was to be pronounced upon the woman if guilty: and the prieſt ſhall ſay unto the woman; pronouncing the imprecation or curſe upon her, ſhe having taken the oath, ſhould ſhe be guilty of the crime ſuſpected of, and ſhe had ſwore concerning: the Lord make thee a curſe, and an oath among the people; accurſed according to the oath taken; or let this be the form of an oath and imprecation uſed by the people, ſaying, if I have done ſo and ſo, let me be accurſed as ſuch a woman, or let not that happen to me, as did to ſuch a woman, ſo Jarchi: when the Lord doth make thy thigh to rot, and thy belly to ſwell; upon drinking the bitter waters; but though theſe things followed upon that, yet not as the natural cauſe of them, for they are aſcribed to the Lord, and to a ſupernatural and miraculous power of his, which went along with the drinking of them.

℣. 22. And this water that cauſeth the curſe, &c.] Upon the drinking of which the curſe follows, if guilty: ſhall go into thy bowels; and there operate and produce the above effects, which are repeated again to inject terror: to make thy belly to ſwell, and thy thigh to rot; here ends the form of the oath, which begins ℣. 19: and the woman ſhall ſay, amen, amen; ſo be it; let it be as pronounced, if I am guilty; which, as Aben Ezra obſerves, is repeated for the ſake of confirmation; though the Jewiſh writers commonly underſtand it as reſpecting various things, the oath and the curſe, the thing charged with, and the perſons ſuſpected of [x].

℣. 23. And the prieſt ſhall write theſe curſes in a book, &c.] The above curſes imprecated on herſelf by an oath; the words and the letters of them were written at length, in a ſcroll of parchment; and, as ſome ſay alſo, her name, but not her double amen to them [y]: and he ſhall blot them out with the bitter water; waſh them out with it, and into it, or ſcrape them off of the parchment into it.

℣. 24. And he ſhall cauſe the woman to drink the bitter water that cauſeth the curſe, &c.] Having the curſe imprecated upon herſelf, if guilty, ſcraped into it; and this ſhe was obliged to drink, whether ſhe would or no; ſo it is ſaid, if the roll is blotted out, and ſhe ſays I am defiled, the water is poured out, and her offering is ſcattered in the place of aſhes; if the roll is blotted out, and ſhe ſays I will not drink, they force her, and make her drink whether ſhe will or no [z]: and the water that cauſeth the curſe ſhall enter into her, and become bitter; produce the ſad and bitter effects mentioned.

℣. 25. Then the prieſt ſhall take the jealouſy-offering out of the woman's hand, &c.] Which ſhe was obliged to hold in her hand while the above rites and ceremonies were performed; which was very heavy, being an omer of barley-flour, a meaſure about three quarts, which was put into an Egyptian baſket made of ſmall palm-tree-twigs: and this was put into her hands to weary her, as before obſerved, that having her mind diſtreſſed, ſhe might the ſooner confeſs her crime: and ſhall wave the offering before the Lord; backwards and forwards, upwards and downwards, as Jarchi; who alſo obſerves, that the woman waved with him, for her hand was above the hand of the prieſt; ſo the tradition is, "he (her huſband) took her offering out of the Egyptian baſket, and put it into a miniſtring veſſel, and gave it into her hand, and the prieſt put his hand under her's, and waved it [a]": and offer it upon the altar; this was the bringing of it to the ſouth-weſt corner of the altar, as Jarchi ſays, before he took a handful out of it, as in other meat-offerings.

℣. 26. And the prieſt ſhall take an handful of the offering, even the memorial thereof, &c.] For good or evil, according as her works were, as Aben Ezra obſerves; a memorial for good if innocent, and a memorial for evil, if guilty: and burn it upon the altar; as the handful of other meat-offerings uſed to be, Lev. ii. 2: and afterwards ſhall cauſe the woman to drink the water; oblige her to it; having proceeded thus far, and no confeſſion made, namely, an oath taken, the curſes of it written in a ſcroll and ſcraped into the waters, and the jealouſy-offering waved and offered.

℣. 27. And when he hath made her to drink the water, &c.] For as before obſerved, and here by Jarchi again, if ſhe ſays I will not drink it after the roll is blotted out, they oblige her, and make her drink it whether ſhe will or no, unleſs ſhe ſays I am defiled: then it ſhall come to paſs, that if ſhe be defiled, and have done treſpaſs againſt her huſband; or has committed adultery: that the water that cauſeth the curſe ſhall enter into her, and become bitter; the water drank by her, and having the curſes ſcraped into it ſhall enter into her, and operate and produce bitter and dreadful effects: and her belly ſhall ſwell, and her thigh ſhall rot; not through any natural virtue in the water, or what is put into it, either the duſt of the floor of the tabernacle, or the ſcrapings of the parchment-roll, theſe could have no phyſical influence to produce ſuch effects; but they muſt be aſcribed to a ſupernatural cauſe, the power and curſe of God attending this draught. A certain Jewiſh writer [b] ſays, though very falſly, that the prieſt put poiſon into the water, which produced ſuch effects; but then, how could an innocent woman eſcape the effects of it? that muſt be allowed to be miraculous and ſupernatural, was it ſo; but there is no manner of reaſon to believe, that any thing of this kind was put into it. The Jews ſay [c] as ſoon, or before ſhe had made an end of drinking the water, the effects appeared; her face turned pale immediately, her eyes bolted out, and ſhe was filled with veins, her body ſwelled, and they called out, caſt her out, caſt her out, that ſhe may not defile the court. And the text ſeems to intimate, as if the operation was immediate; yea, moreover they ſay [d], that as the waters ſearched her, ſo they ſearched him (the adulterer), becauſe it is ſaid twice, ſhall enter, ſhall enter; and that the ſame effects appeared in him, as in her, but in neither unleſs the huſband was innocent; for if he was not pure from the ſame ſin himſelf, the waters would not ſearch his wife [e]: hence they ſay [f], when adulterers increaſed (under the ſecond temple) the bitter waters ceaſed, according to Hoſ. iv. 14. ſee Matt. xii. 39. This practice has been imitated by the heathens; the river Rhine, according to Julian the emperor [g], tried tried the legitimacy of children; and ſo lakes have been uſed for the trial of perjury and unchaſtity, as the Stygian lake for perjury, and another of the ſame name near Epheſus for unchaſtity; into which, if perſons ſuſpected of adultery deſcended, having the form of an oath hanging about their necks, if they were pure the waters ſtood unmoved, but if corrupt they ſwelled up to their necks, and covered the tablet on which the oath was written [h]. The prieſteſſes of a certain deity being obliged to live a ſingle life, were tried by drinking bullocks blood, upon which, if falſe to their oath, and corrupt, they immediately died, as Pauſanias [i] relates; and Macrobius [k] ſpeaks of ſome lakes in Sicily, the inhabitants called the cups, to which recourſe was had when perſons were ſuſpected of any ill, and where an oath was taken of them; if the perſon ſwore truly, he departed unhurt, but if falſly, he immediately loſt his life in the lake. Philoſtratus [l] relates of a water near Tyana, a city in Cappadocia, ſacred to Jupiter, which the inhabitants call Aſbamæa, which to thoſe that kept their oaths was placid and ſweet, but to perjured perſons the reverſe; it affected their eyes, hands and feet, and ſeized them with dropſies and conſumptions; nor could they depart from the water, but remained by it, mourning their ſad caſe, and confeſſing their perjury: but what comes neareſt to this uſage of the Jews, is a cuſtom at marriages among the ſavages at Cape Breton [m]: at a marriage-feaſt, two diſhes of meat are brought to the bridegroom and bride in two ouragans, (baſons made of the bark of a tree) and the preſident of the feaſt addreſſes himſelf to the bride thus, "and thou that art upon the point of entering into a reſpectable ſtate, know, that the nouriſhment thou art going to take, forebodes the greateſt calamities to thee, if thy heart is capable of harbouring any ill deſign againſt thy huſband, or againſt thy nation: ſhouldſt thou ever be led aſtray by the careſſes of a ſtranger; or ſhouldeſt thou betray thy huſband, and thy country, the victuals contained in this ouragan will have the effects of a ſlow poiſon, with which thou wilt be tainted from this very inſtant; but if, on the other hand, thou remaineſt faithful to thy huſband, and to thy country, if thou wilt never inſult the one for his defect, nor give a deſcription of the other to the enemy, thou wilt find this nouriſhment both agreeable and wholeſome." Now if theſe relations can be credited, then much more this of the bitter waters, for tho' there was ſomething wonderful and ſupernatural in them, yet nothing incredible: and the woman ſhall be a curſe among her people; the time ſhe lives; but then all this while ſhe was looked upon as an accurſed perſon, and deſpiſed and ſhunned by all.

[x] Miſn. ib. §. 5. Targum Jon. & Jeruſ. & Jarchi in loc. [y] Miſnah, ut ſupra, §. 3. [z] Ib. c. 3. §. 3. [a] Ib. §. 1. [b] R. Samuel Tzartzah, Mekor Chayim, fol. 91. 3. [c] Miſn. Sotah, c. 3. §. 4. [d] Ibid. c. 5. §. 1. [e] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 28. 1. Gerſom in loc. [f] Miſn. Sotah, c 2. §. 9. [g] Orat. 2. p. 151. Ep. 16. p. 131.

℣. 28. And if the woman be not defiled, but be clean, &c.] If ſhe is not guilty of adultery, but pure from that ſin: then ſhe ſhall be free; from the effects of the bitter water; they ſhall have no ſuch influence upon her, but ſhe ſhall be as ſound and healthful as ever; nay, the Jewiſh writers ſay more ſo, that if ſhe had any ſickneſs or diſeaſe upon her ſhe would now be freed from it [n]; the Targum of Jonathan has it, her ſplendor ſhall ſhine, the brightneſs and beauty of her countenance: and ſhall conceive ſeed; a man-child, as the ſame Targum; and the Jewiſh writers ſay, if ſhe was barren before, now ſhe would be fruitful; but no more is meant by it than that her huſband ſhould receive her gladly, and ſhe ſhould live comfortably with him hereafter, and the bleſſing of God would be upon her, which would ſtill be a confirmation of her chaſtity.

℣. 29. This is the law of jealouſies, &c.] Which was appointed by God to deter wives from adultery, and preſerve the people of Iſrael, the worſhippers of him, from having a ſpurious brood among them; and to keep huſbands from being cruel to their wives they might be jealous of, and to protect virtue and innocence, and to detect leudneſs committed in the moſt ſecret manner; whereby God gave proof of his omniſcience, that he had knowledge of the moſt private acts of uncleanneſs, and was the avenger of all ſuch. The reaſons why ſuch a law was not made equally in favour of women, as of men, are ſuppoſed to be theſe; becauſe of the greater authority of the man over the woman, which would ſeem to be leſſened if ſuch a power was granted her; becauſe marriage was not ſo much hurt, or ſo much damage came to families by the adultery of men, as of women; becauſe women are more apt to be ſuſpicious than men, and in thoſe times more prone to adultery, through their eager deſire of children, that they might not lie under reproach [o]: when a wife goeth aſide to another inſtead of her huſband, and is defiled; is ſuſpected of going aſide to another man, and is ſuppoſed to be defiled by him.

℣. 30. Or when the ſpirit of jealouſy cometh upon him, and he be jealous over his wife, &c.] See the note on ℣. 14: and ſhall ſet the woman before the Lord; has carried the matter ſo far as to bring his wife to the prieſt or civil magiſtrate, and declare his ſuſpicion, and the ground of it: and the prieſt ſhall execute upon her all this law; he ſhall proceed according to the law, and perform every rite and ceremony required; nor could any ſtop be put to it, unleſs the woman owned ſhe was defiled.

℣. 31. Then ſhall the man be guiltleſs from iniquity, &c.] Which otherwiſe he would not, by conniving at her looſe way of living, and not reproving her for it, and bringing her either to repentance or puniſhment; and retaining and encouraging jealouſy in his mind, without declaring it, and his reaſons for it: the ſenſe of the paſſage ſeems to be, that when a man had any ground for his ſuſpicion and jealouſy, and he proceeded according as this law directs, whether his wife was guilty or not guilty, no ſin was chargeable on him, or blame to be laid to him, or puniſhment inflicted on him: and the woman ſhall bear her iniquity; the puniſhment of it, through the effects of the bitter waters upon her, if guilty; nor was her huſband chargeable with her death, ſhe juſtly brought it on herſelf: or if not guilty, yet as ſhe had by ſome unbecoming behaviour raiſed ſuch a ſuſpicion in him, nor would ſhe be reclaimed, though warned to the contrary, ſhe for it juſtly bore the infamy of ſuch a proceſs; which was ſuch, as Maimonides ſays [p], that innocent women would give all that they had to eſcape it, and reckoned death itſelf more agreeable than that, as to be ſerved as ſuch a woman was; ſee the note on ℣. 18.

[h] Vid. Salden. Otia l. 1. Exercitat. 6. §. 24. [i] Achaica, ſive, l. 7. p. 450. [k] Saturnal. l. 5. c. 19. [l] Vita Apollonii, l. 1. c. 4. [m] Genuine Letters and Memoirs relating to the Iſle of Cape Breton, &c. [n] Maimon. Hilchot Sotah, c. 3. §. 22. [o] Vid. Salden. ut ſupra, §. 19. [p] Moréh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 49. p. 499.

CHAP.

CHAP. VI.

IN this chapter is given the law concerning Nazarites, ℣. 1, 2. which directs what they were to abstain from, from drinking wine, or any strong liquors, from shaving their heads, and defiling themselves with the dead, ℣. 3—8. and in case of a defilement, directions are given what offerings a Nazarite should bring to be offered for him, ℣. 9—12. and when the time of his Nazariteship was up, an account is given of what rites and ceremonies should then be performed, ℣. 13—21. and the chapter is concluded with the form of blessing the children of Israel, to be used by Aaron and his sons, ℣. 22—27.

℣. 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] At the same time, or immediately after the law concerning the woman suspected of adultery, was given; with which the following law concerning Nazarites may be thought to have a close connection, as some Jewish writers observe, women being concerned in it as well as men; and as wine leads to adultery, as Jarchi observes, abstinence from it, which the Nazarite's vow obliged to, and forbearance of trimming and dressing the hair, and a being more strictly and closely devoted to the service of God, were very likely means of preserving from unchastity, and any suspicion of it: saying; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, &c.] Whom the following law only concerned, and not Gentiles; so runs the Jewish canon, "the Gentiles have no Nazariteship, tho' they may bring their vows and free-will-offerings as an Israelite, yet if they vow the vow of a Nazarite, the law of the Nazarite is not obliging on them, or they bound by it; but it is free for them to drink wine, and defile themselves for the dead; for it is written, speak unto the children of Israel[q]": when either man or woman shall separate themselves to vow a vow of a Nazarite; or do a wonderful thing[r]; something unusual and uncommon, and what is out of the way of the men of the world, who give themselves up to pleasure, and have little regard to the worship and service of God; wherefore for a person, a man or woman, to vow abstinence from wine and dress, and from the company of others, and to oblige themselves to strict and close devotion to God, was something singular and surprizing. This is to be understood of such persons who were at their own disposal; for such that were in their minority, and under the power of parents, or were married women, if they vowed, their vows did not stand, and their parents or husbands could disannul them, unless they had consented to them by their silence, when they heard them made, ch. xxx. 3—14. There were various sorts of Nazarites; some were appointed by God, as Samson; some were devoted by their parents, as Samuel; and some by themselves, concerning whom is this law more especially; some were perpetual Nazarites, a Nazarite for life, as the two persons just mentioned; though the Jews distinguish between a Samsonian Nazarite, and a perpetual one[s]; and some were only for a certain time, according as they vowed: to separate themselves unto the Lord; the Targum of Jonathan is, to the name of the Lord; to the honour of his name. Such persons devoted themselves, and set apart their time to serve the Lord in a stricter and purer manner than others, and therefore were had in great account, Lam. iv. 7. Amos ii. 11. they were types of Christ, who, though he was not strictly a Nazarite, but a Nazarene, yet answered to the Nazarites in his being set apart in divine predestination by his Father to the office of mediator; in the sanctification of himself, and devoting himself, his time and service to his Father's glory; and in his being holy and harmless in his life and conversation, and separate from sinners: and they were also emblems of the special people of God, who are a separate people in election, redemption and vocation, and in the intercession of Christ; and as they will be at the last judgment, and to all eternity, and should be now separate from others in their lives and conversations.

℣. 3. He shall separate himself from wine, &c.] Old or new, as Ben Gersom, from drinking it, any of it; not only from an immoderate and excessive drinking of it, which every man should abstain from, but from drinking of it at all, that he might be more free and fit for the service of God; for prayer, meditation, reading the scriptures, and attendance on the worship of God in all its branches, and be less liable to temptations to sin; for, as Aben Ezra observes, many transgressions are occasioned by wine, which, if drank immoderately, intoxicates the mind, and unfits for religious duties, excites lust, and leads on to many vices: and strong drink; any other intoxicating and inebriating liquor besides wine, or any other sort of wines besides such that is made of the fruit of the vine, as wines of pomegranates, dates, &c. or such as are made of barley, as our ale, or of apples and pears called cyder and perry: and shall drink no vinegar of wine, or vinegar of strong drink; all the three Targums paraphrase it, vinegar of new wine, and vinegar of old wine, these operating in like manner as wine and strong drink themselves: neither shall he drink any liquor of grapes; any liquor in which grapes are macerated, as the Targum of Jonathan; or water into which they are squeezed, or which is made of the lees of wine, or is a second sort of wine made of the grapes after they have been pressed, which we call tiff: nor eat moist grapes or dried; which have somewhat of the nature and taste of wine, and produce some of the like effects, and may lead to a desire after drinking it; wherefore this, as other things mentioned are, as Aben Ezra says, a kind of an hedge, to keep at a distance from drinking wine.

℣. 4. All the days of his separation shall he eat nothing that is made of the vine-tree, &c.] Of its leaves, branches, and fruit, especially the latter, put into any sort of food, or infused into any liquor, or mixed with any sauce for food: the days or time of separation were according as the vow was made, for a shorter or longer time; though the Jews[t] say, where the vow is absolutely expressed, ſed, it is always to be underſtood of 30 days, during which time the Nazarite was not to eat or drink of any compoſition that had any thing of the vine in it: from the kernels even to the huſk; the Jews [u] are divided about the two words here uſed, which of them ſignifies the outermoſt part of the grape, and which the innermoſt; Ben Gerſom agrees with us, but it matters not much who are in the right, ſince both are forbidden: by this part of the law, the people of God, who are ſpiritual Nazarites, are taught to live temperately and ſoberly, and to abſtain from all appearance of ſin: it is pretty remarkable what the Jews [w] ſay, that when the ſon of David comes, it will be free for a Nazarite to drink wine on ſabbath-days and feſtivals, though not on week-days; from whence it appears, they ſeem to be conſcious of a change of the ceremonial law in his days.

[q] Misn. Nazir, c. 9. §. 1. Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [r] יפלא mirificaverit, Montanus; si mirandum aliquid fecerit, Munster; and some in Fagius and Vatablus; so Aben Ezra. [s] Misn. Nazir, c. 1. §. 2. [t] Ib. §. 3. & c. 6. §. 3.

℣. 5. All the days of the vow of his ſeparation, &c.] Be the time he has vowed to be a Nazarite, a week, a month, or more, even 1000 days, but not leſs that 30, as Ben Gerſom obſerves: there ſhall no razor come upon his head; he might not ſhave his beard, nor cut off his locks, and ſhave his head, nor cut ſhort his locks with a pair of ſciſſars, nor any with any thing by which the hair may be removed, as Ben Gerſon; nor pluck off his hair with his hands, as Maimonides ſays [x]; but let it grow as long as it would during the time of his ſeparation, which is expreſſed in the latter part of the verſe, until the days be fulfilled, in the which he ſeparateth himſelf unto the Lord; to his ſervice, to which he wholly addicted himſelf as long as his vow continued: he ſhall be holy; ſeparate from other men, and their practices and cuſtoms, and ſpend his time in holy exerciſes, in a religious way, and abſtain from what might be a temptation to ſin, or in the leaſt hinder him in his acts of devotion: and ſhall let the locks of his hair grow; two reaſons Fagius gives of this part of the law, the one is, becauſe of the myſtery of it; letting the hair grow ſignified an increaſe of virtue or grace, as Samſon's ſtrength was increaſed and became very great whilſt his hair was not cut; and ſo ſpiritual Nazarites, whilſt they are in the way of their duty, grow in grace, and in knowledge of God and Chriſt, and all divine things, and grow ſtronger and ſtronger in the Lord, and in the power of his might; and Ainſworth hints at the ſame thing, and alſo ſuppoſes it might be an emblem of the ſubjection of the ſaints to Chriſt, as the letting the hair grow was a ſign of the woman's ſubjection to man: the other is, that it was appointed to take the Iſraelites off of the errors and ſuperſtitions they had imbibed in Egypt, by ordering them to perform thoſe rites and ceremonies to the honour of the true God, which they had uſed in the ſervice of Dæmons; and for this he cites a paſſage out of Cyrill; but it does not appear by any good authority, that ſuch a cuſtom obtained among the Egyptians, or any other Gentiles ſo early; and what were uſed among them in after times, took their riſe from hence, and were imitations of this law; though there ſeems to be no great likeneſs between this law of Nazariteſhip and the cuſtoms of the Heathens, who uſed to conſecrate their hair to their deities, Apollo, Hercules, Bacchus, Minerva, and Diana: what ſeems beſt to agree is what Lucian ſays [y], who obſerves, that young men conſecrate their beards, and let their hair grow, conſecrated from their birth, which they afterwards cut and lay up in veſſels in the temple, ſome of gold, others of ſilver.

℣. 6. All the days that he ſeparateth himſelf unto the Lord, &c.] This phraſe is repeated at every new article and branch of the law of the Nazarites, of which what follows is the third; ſhewing that each part of it, during that time, was ſtrictly to be obſerved: he ſhall come at no dead body; not near to any, not even to be in the ſame place where a dead body lay, nor to touch one, nor to attend the funeral of any, nor be concerned at all about burying the dead; now, as ſuch ſo defiled were unclean ſeven days, and during that time might not go into the tabernacle, the Nazarites were ſtrictly cautioned againſt ſuch pollution, that they might not be detained from the ſervice of God they had devoted themſelves unto; ſee ch. xix. 11, 14, 16.

℣. 7. He ſhall not make himſelf unclean for his father or for his mother, for his brother or for his ſiſter, when they die, &c.] Aben Ezra adds alſo, for his wife, and for his daughter, and for others; what even the prieſts of the Lord, the common prieſts might do, a Nazarite might not, not come near any of his relations when dead, as to touch them, to cloſe their eyes, or waſh their bodies, and provide for their funeral, and attend that, or to be where they were; in this reſpect they were upon a level with the high-prieſt, who was forbid the ſame, which ſhews how ſacred theſe perſons were; ſee Lev. xxi. 1, 2, 3, 11. this may inſtruct ſpritual Nazarites to abſtain from the company and converſation of ſinners, dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and from all dead works and ſinful actions, which, as they are deſerving of death are defiling: becauſe the conſecration of his God is upon his head; or that which ſhews him to be conſecrated to God, and ſeparated to his ſervice, is upon his head, namely, his long hair: the Targum of Jonathan renders it, the crown of his God; ſo Aben Ezra obſerves, that ſome ſay that the word Nazarite is derived from Nezer, a crown, in proof of which this paſſage is produced; and in this reſpect the Nazarites were not only types of Chriſt our king and high-prieſt, who is a prieſt on his throne, and has on his head many crowns, but of the ſaints who are freed from the power and dominion of ſin, and are made kings and prieſts unto God.

℣. 8. All the days of his ſeparation he is holy unto the Lord.] Set apart for his ſervice, ſeparate from all others, eſpecially the dead, and under obligation to abſtain from the above things; from drinking wine, from ſhaving his hair, and from defiling himſelf for the dead, and to be employed in holy and religious exerciſes during the time his vow is upon him.

℣. 9. And if any man die very ſuddenly by him, &c.] In the place where he is, whether houſe or field, a public or private place, in the tent where he is, as Jarchi; there are two words we render, very ſuddenly, which many take to be ſynonimous; and that being of the ſame ſignification, two being uſed increaſe the ſenſe, but others think they have a different meaning: the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan render them, "ſuddenly through ignorance," underſtanding it of a chance-matter, as when one man is killed by another, not wilfully and through malice, but without intention and deſign: Jarchi interprets the firſt of them by violence, and the latter through error or miſtake, and ſo

[u] Miſn. Nazir, c. 6. §. 2. Aben Ezra in loc.
[w] T. Bab. Erubin, fol. 43. 1.
[x] Hilchot Nezirut, c. 5. §. 11.
[y] De dea Syria.

ſo may include both caſes; as when a man dies at once, through the force of a diſeaſe ſeizing him, or he is killed by the violent hands of a man, who ſtabs him in the preſence of a Nazarite; or elſe when this is done ignorantly and through miſtake; be it which way it will if a Nazarite was preſent: and he hath defiled the head of his conſecration; or the conſecration of his head, his Nazariteſhip, that is his hair, he being polluted by the dead, through being where it was: then he ſhall ſhave his head in the day of his cleanſing; which was the ſeventh day from his defilement, as follows: on the ſeventh day he ſhall ſhave it; for ſo many days was a perſon unclean that had touched a body, or had been where one was, and on the ſeventh day he was to be cleanſed, ch. xix. 11, 12. and this was one way of cleanſing the Nazarite, cutting off his locks of hair, which were to grow long, and made him to be a Nazarite; and ſhave his head for his pollution by the dead, put an end to his Nazariteſhip; and he was obliged to begin again, and his hair being polluted, muſt be ſhaved, and new hair grow to make him a Nazarite again: thus by one ſingle breach of the law of God a man becomes guilty of all, and liable to its curſe, and his legal righteouſneſs becomes inſufficient to juſtify him before God, and therefore his own righteouſneſs muſt be renounced by him in the buſineſs of juſtification; and which Ainſworth ſuggeſts, is the myſtery of the Nazarite's head being ſhaved when polluted.

℣. 10. And on the eighth day he ſhall bring two turtles or two young pigeons to the prieſt, &c.] Not a turtle-dove and a young pigeon, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, but two of one of the ſorts, which was the offering of the poorer ſort of child-bearing women at their purification, and of profluvious perſons, men or women, Lev. xii. 8. and xv. 14, 29. and this caſe of the Nazarites being an uncleanneſs, could not be purged away but by ſacrifice; which was typical of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, by which that unclean thing ſin is put away for ever; even the ſins of holy things can be removed in no other way: theſe were to be brought to the prieſt to be offered by him: to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; for being defiled, the Nazarite might not go into the tabernacle, and therefore was to bring his offering to the door of it, where the prieſt received it of him.

℣. 11. And the prieſt ſhall offer the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, &c.] That is, one of the turtles or young pigeons for the one kind of ſacrifice, and one for the other ſort; both being neceſſary, the one to expiate ſin, and the other as a gift to God by way of thankfulneſs for acceptance of the former: and make an atonement for him, for that he ſinned by the dead; by being where the dead body was, which, though not ſinful, in a moral ſenſe, was, in a ceremonial one, and therefore required a ſacrifice to atone for it; and which atonement was made by the ſin-offering, typical of Chriſt, who was made an offering for ſin: and ſhall hallow his head the ſame day; conſecrate himſelf to God afreſh, particularly the hair of his head, let that grow again and begin his Nazariteſhip anew; ſo Jarchi interprets it, to return and begin the account of his Nazariteſhip.

℣. 12. And he ſhall conſecrate unto the Lord the days of his ſeparation, &c.] He was to begin his account again, from the time of his ſhaving his head, and devote as many days to the ſervice of the Lord as what he had vowed before: and ſhall bring a lamb of the firſt year for a treſpaſs-offering; we ſee how much trouble and expence were brought by a ſingle act of pollution, and that involuntary too; how much more need is there of an atoning ſacrifice for the ſins of men, even for all of them, and for which only the ſacrifice of Chriſt is ſufficient? but the days that were before ſhall be loſt; which were before the pollution, how near ſoever the time of Nazariteſhip being at an end was, whether his vow was for thirty days, or a hundred, or a whole year; be it what it will, and the pollution happened on the laſt of thoſe days, all were loſt; he was obliged to begin again, and go thro' the whole time he at firſt vowed; and this was the caſe if he drank the leaſt quantity of wine, or ſhaved ever ſo little of the hair of his head, or was any ways polluted by the dead; and this ſeverity, as it may ſeem, was uſed to make him cautious that he broke not his vow by any means: becauſe his ſeparation was defiled; in the caſe inſtanced in, by the dead, but it was the ſame if he broke the law of Nazariteſhip in any of the other articles of it.

℣. 13. And this is the law of the Nazarite, &c.] This has reſpect either to what goes before; thoſe are the things he is obliged to that vows the vow of a Nazarite; what he is to abſtain from during the time of his vow, and what he is to do in caſe of any defilement; or to what follows after, what is binding upon him, what offerings he is to bring, and what rites and ceremonies are to be obſerved by him when he has finiſhed his vow: when the days of his ſeparation, or Nazariteſhip, are fulfilled; whether more or fewer; when the time is quite up, and he has gone through his vow without any breach of it: he ſhall be brought unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; it is not ſaid by whom he ſhould be brought, whether by himſelf or by the prieſt; the Targum of Jonathan is, "he "ſhall bring himſelf;" that is, preſent himſelf; and ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra; which latter adds, or the prieſt ſhall bring him by command, whether he will or no, to offer his offering.

℣. 14. And he ſhall offer his offering unto the Lord, &c.] The Nazarite was to preſent his offering at the door of the tabernacle, to the prieſt, in order to be offered for him to the Lord: one he-lamb of the firſt year without blemiſh for a burnt-offering; according to the law, manner, and cuſtom of a burnt offering, as Aben Ezra obſerves, which, whether of the herd or of the flock, was to be a male and unblemiſhed, and not more than a year old, Lev. i. 3—10. and one ew-lamb of the firſt year without blemiſh for a ſin-offering; as was the manner and cuſtom of a ſin-offering, to be a female, as is remarked by the ſame writer, ſee Lev. iv. 32. and one ram without blemiſh for peace-offerings; all ſorts of offerings were offered on this occaſion; a ſin-offering, though the vow was performed, and not any miſtake made, or any thing omitted that was known; yet leſt there ſhould be any ſecret and unknown breach of the law of Nazariteſhip committed, a ſin-offering was required: this teaches us that there may be ſecret and unknown ſins committed by the beſt of men, in their moſt ſacred and ſolemn ſervices; and that there is no juſtification before God by the beſt works of men, and that the pureſt and moſt perfect ſtand in need of the atoning ſacrifice of Chriſt: a burnt-offering was to be offered, which uſually followed the ſin-offering, as it did here, though mentioned firſt, ſee ℣. 16. and which was done by way of thankſgiving to God for his acceptance of the ſin-offering: and peace-offerings were, as Aben Ezra obſerves, for joy that he had performed performed his vow: the burnt-offering was wholly the Lord's, the ſin-offering the prieſt had his part of, and the peace-offerings the Nazarite and his friends eat of, and ſo every one had their ſhare in theſe oblations.

℣. 15. And a baſket of unleavened bread, &c.] As at the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons, Exod. xxix. 2. though for peace-offerings for thankſgiving leavened bread was offered, Lev. vii. 13. cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, and wafers of unleavened bread anointed with oil; ten of each ſort, as Jarchi ſays, ten cakes and ten wafers, ſee Exod. xxix. 2. Lev. vii. 12. and their meat-offering, and their drink-offering; which always uſed to attend every ſacrifice.

℣. 16. And the prieſt ſhall bring them before the Lord, &c.] All the above offerings to the altar of burnt-offering, and there preſent them to the Lord in the name of the Nazarite: and ſhall offer his ſin-offering, and his burnt-offering; here they ſtand in the proper order in which they were offered.

℣. 17. And he ſhall offer the ram for a ſacrifice of peace-offerings unto the Lord, &c.] After he had offered the other two: with the baſket of unleavened bread; which went along with that: the prieſt ſhall alſo offer his meat-offering, and his drink-offering; of which he had his part, and were the uſual appendages of other ſacrifices; ſee ch. xxviii. and xxix.

℣. 18. And the Nazarite ſhall ſhave the head of his ſeparation, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan is, "and the Nazarite ſhall ſhave the head of his ſe-"paration without," without the tabernacle, the door of it, where the people aſſembled together; ſo that this was to be done publickly, that it might be known of all, and no offence taken at the Nazarite's drinking wine, and concerning himſelf for the dead, and attending funerals, for by this action it was known that his Nazariteſhip was at an end; and whereas the hair of the Nazarite was conſecrated to the Lord by his vow, and this vow being punctually fulfilled, it was ſacred, and to be preſented to the Lord, and to be of no uſe and ſervice to himſelf or others, and therefore to be all clean ſhaven off; for, as Maimonides [z] ſays, if two hairs only were left, nothing was done, and the command of ſhaving not kept: and ſhall take the hair of the head of his ſeparation; being cut off and ſhaved: and put it in the fire which is under the ſacrifice of the peace-offerings; under the pot or cauldron, as the Targum of Jonathan, in which the ram for the peace-offerings was boiled: this was done in the court of the women in after-times, at the ſouth-eaſt of which was a chamber called the chamber of the Nazarites, where they boiled their peace-offerings, and ſhaved their hair and caſt it under the pot [a]; and this might not be put, as before obſerved, to any other uſe; if any of it was made uſe of in a ſack that was made of hair-cloth, we are told [b] that ſack was to be burnt.

℣. 19. And the prieſt ſhall take the ſodden ſhoulder of the ram, &c.] The left ſhoulder, for the right ſhoulder, which is the heave-ſhoulder of every peace-offering, belonged to the prieſt by another law; and by this law of the Nazarite, he had alſo the other ſhoulder, and ſo had both, which was peculiar to this caſe; the vow of the Nazarite being a very ſacred thing, and he being enabled to perform it, a greater expreſſion of gratitude for it was expected and required of him: this ſhoulder was taken out of the pot in which it was boiled: and one unleavened cake out of the baſket, and one unleavened wafer; one of the ten cakes, and one of the ten wafers, both are mentioned; and which appear by this to be together in the baſket of unleavened bread, from whence they were now to be taken, the reſt having been offered with the other ſacrifices: and ſhall put them upon the hands of the Nazarite; the boiled ſhoulder, and the cake and wafer upon it: after the hair of his ſeparation is ſhaven; and caſt into the fire; for the waving of theſe ſeems to be the laſt and finiſhing part of this whole affair.

℣. 20. And the prieſt ſhall wave them for a wave-offering before the Lord, &c.] Putting his hands under the Nazarite's, as in other caſes where this ceremony was uſed; and ſo moving them to and fro, backwards and forwards, upwards and downwards, teſtifying hereby the goodneſs of God unto him, his ſovereign dominion over him, that all he had depended on him, and was received from him; and that all he did, particularly in keeping his vow of Nazariteſhip, was through his aſſiſtance, and for which he made this grateful acknowledgment by delivering the above, together with what follows, to his prieſt: this is holy for the prieſt, with the wave-breaſt and heave-ſhoulder; beſides theſe which were given him by another law, the wave-ſhoulder of the Nazarite's ram was given him to eat; it was holy, and ſet apart for his uſe, and his only, and it belonged not in common to the courſe of the prieſts then on duty, but to him only that officiated in this peculiar ſervice; and ſo it is obſerved by the Jewiſh writers [c], that the Nazarite's ram and ſome other things were not given to every prieſt, but to him that offered the ſacrifice, as it is ſaid, he ſhall wave—this is holy to the prieſt; upon which it is obſerved, that it follows from hence, that the prieſt that waves is he that eats the ſacrifice: and after that the Nazarite may drink wine; and cut his hair, and ſhave his head, and be defiled for the dead as other perſons, the vow of his Nazariteſhip being fulfilled.

℣. 21. This is the law of the Nazarite, who hath vowed, &c.] The vow of a Nazarite; what he is obliged to do when his Nazariteſhip is up: and of his offering unto the Lord for his ſeparation; of the ſeveral offerings required of him, to offer to the Lord, for and upon his going through his Nazariteſhip, his burnt-offering, ſin-offering, ſacrifice of peace-offerings, his meat-offering and drink-offering; together with the baſket of unleavened bread, cakes and wafers: beſides that that his hands ſhall get; the above offerings were what he was obliged unto by the law of God, even though a poor man; but beſides theſe, it was expected of a man of ſubſtance, that he would voluntarily of himſelf offer more, according to his ability and the length of the time of his Nazariteſhip: according to the vow which he hath vowed, ſo he muſt do after the law of his ſeparation; there were ſome things he was obliged to do by his vow, and as he had vowed, there was a neceſſity upon him to fulfil it; as to abſtain from the things he vowed ſo to do, and that as long a time as he fixed by his vow, and when finiſhed to offer the ſacrifices required of him.

℣. 22. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] At the ſame time perhaps that the above law was given concerning the Nazarites; though why this ſhould

[z] Hilchot Nezirut, c. 8. §. 6.
[a] Miſn. Middoth, c. 2. §. 5. T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 16. 1.
[b] Miſn. Orlah, c. 3. §. 3.
[c] Maimon. in Miſn. Challah, c. 4. §. 9.

ſhould follow upon that, and what connexion there is between the one and the other, it is not eaſy to ſay: the Nazarites were holy perſons, and ſo were the prieſts; and therefore, according to Aben Ezra and others, the law of the one is joined to the law of the other: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 23. Speak unto Aaron, and unto his ſons, &c.] Aaron and his ſons that ſucceeded him in all after generations, being the perſons that were in a publick manner to bleſs the people of Iſrael, they are particularly addreſſed, ſee Deut. x. 8. and xxi. 5. 1 Chron. xxiii. 12. ſaying, on this wiſe ye ſhall bleſs the children of Iſrael; in ſuch manner and with ſuch words as after expreſſed; ſtanding upon an eminence, lifting up their hands on high, ſpreading out their fingers, and raiſing their voices, and pronouncing the bleſſing in the Hebrew language, in the name of Jehovah, with their face towards the people; all which, according to the Jewiſh writers [d], were to be ſtrictly obſerved: ſaying unto them; as follows.

℣. 24. The Lord bleſs thee, &c.] Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit; the word Jehovah being three times uſed, and a different accent put to each word, denoting three diſtinct perſons and one Jehovah, according to Deut. vi. 4. who are each of them concerned in the bleſſing of the Lord's people, the ſpiritual Iſrael of God; Jehovah the Father bleſſes with all ſpiritual bleſſings, with electing, adopting, juſtifying, and pardoning grace, with regenerating and calling, and perſevering grace, and with eternal life: Jehovah the Son bleſſes particularly with redeeming grace, and has a concern in all the other bleſſings; the ſaints are bleſſed with them in him, they are all in his hands, they are procured by him, come through him, and are the gifts of his grace: and Jehovah the Spirit bleſſes as a ſpirit of regeneration and ſanctification, as the ſpirit of faith, as a comforter, as the ſpirit of adoption, and as the earneſt and ſealer of the ſaints unto the day of redemption: and keep thee; from the evil of the world, from the evil one ſatan, from the evil of ſin, and the power, prevalence and dominion of it, and from falling totally and finally by it, and keep in a ſtate of grace unto everlaſting ſalvation.

℣. 25. The Lord make his face to ſhine upon thee, &c.] Cauſe himſelf, the ſun of righteouſneſs to ariſe and ſhine upon them, and give both ſpiritual light and heat unto them; grant his gracious preſence, the manifeſtations of himſelf, communion with him, clearer diſcoveries of his love, of intereſt in him, and an increaſe of ſpiritual light and knowledge of his goſpel, and the truths of it, and of his mind and will: and be gracious unto thee; by granting larger meaſures of grace out of his fulneſs, by leading more abundantly into it, and making freſh and frequent applications of it; grace is often wiſhed for from Chriſt as well as from the Father.

℣. 26. And the Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, &c.] Shew his face and favour, look chearfully on his people, declare himſelf well pleaſed with them in Chriſt, and appear as ſmiling upon them through him, indulging them with viſits of love, reſtoring to them the joys of his ſalvation, and upholding them with his free ſpirit; and ſo cauſing them to walk pleaſantly and comfortably in the ways of God, expecting eternal life and happineſs, as God's free gift through Chriſt: and give thee peace; all outward needful proſperity, internal peace of mind, through the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, the peace-maker and peace-giver, and eternal peace in the world to come.

℣. 27. And they ſhall put my name upon the children of Iſrael, &c.] Call them by his name, the people of the Lord; call upon the name of the Lord to bleſs them, and pronounce the bleſſing on them in the name of the Lord, in or by the name Jehovah, as Jarchi, three times uſed in this form of bleſſing: and I will bleſs them; really and truly bleſs them, bleſs them with bleſſings indeed; with all ſorts of bleſſings, temporal and ſpiritual; with ſolid and ſubſtantial ones, and ſuch are bleſſed, and will remain ſo, their bleſſings are irrevocable and irreverſible; and unleſs the Lord bleſſes, in vain do the prieſts bleſs, or any of his miniſters pronounce a bleſſing; their's lies in words and wiſhes, his in real facts; they can only pray and wiſh for the bleſſing, it is he only that can give it, and can ratify and confirm what they declare and pronounce, according to his revealed word. Some refer the relative them to the prieſts, as if the ſenſe was, I will bleſs the prieſts that bleſs Iſrael, for God will bleſs them that bleſs his people; but Aben Ezra thinks it belongs both to Iſrael, and to the prieſts, that God would confirm and eſtabliſh the bleſſing of the prieſts pronounced on Iſrael, and bleſs the prieſts alſo, who needed the divine bleſſing as well as the people, and being found in the way of their duty, might expect it: the Targum of Jonathan is, "I "will bleſs them in my Word;" his eſſential Word, Chriſt, in whom his choſen ones are bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings, and who is the promiſed ſeed, in whom all nations of the earth ſhall be bleſſed.

CHAP. VII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the preſents brought by the princes of the twelve tribes at the ſetting up of the tabernacle, for the uſe of it, ℣. 1—9. and at the dedication of the altar, and the ſervice of that, ℣. 10, 11. firſt of the prince of the tribe of Judah, ℣. 12—17. then of the prince of Iſſachar, ℣. 18—23. of the prince of Zebulun, ℣. 24—29. of the prince of Reuben, ℣. 30—35. of the prince of Simeon, ℣. 36—41. of the prince of Gad, ℣. 42—47. of the prince of Ephraim, ℣. 48—53. of the prince of Manaſſeh, ℣. 54—59. of the prince of Benjamin, ℣. 60—65. of the prince of Dan, ℣. 66—71. of the prince of Aſher, ℣. 72—77. of the prince of Naphtali, ℣. 78—83. the ſum of all which follows, ℣. 84—88. and the chapter is concluded with a token of God's approbation and acceptance of the whole, ℣. 89.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs on the day that Moſes had fully ſet up the tabernacle, &c.] Not on the very exact day on which it was firſt reared up, for that was on the firſt day of the firſt month of the ſecond year from the coming up of Iſrael out of Egypt, Exod. xl. 17. whereas the following offerings of the princes were not offered, and many other things previous to them recorded in the preceding chapters, were not done, until after the firſt day of the ſecond month of that year, ch. i. 1. though though the Jews say [e] the first of Nisan; or of the first month, was the first for various things, and the first on which the princes offered; but no one particular day can be intended, because the princes were twelve days successively offering their offerings; wherefore the day here, only denotes the time about which it was when this service was performed; when the tabernacle was not only set up, but fully set up, when every thing relating to it was in its proper place and order; when not only it was put together, and all the vessels and instruments of it in their due place, but also when the people of Israel, for whose sake it was erected, that the Lord God might dwell among them, were numbered, and their camps formed and pitched around the tabernacle; and the Levites were taken and numbered also, who were to serve at it, and their place and service were appointed unto them about it; for then, and not till then, was the service of it compleated, and its proper place and situation fixed and settled: and had anointed it; with the holy oil Moses was directed to make, and anoint it with, Exod. xxx. 23—28. Lev. viii. 10: and sanctified it; set it apart for holy use and service, to be an habitation for God, and the place of his worship: and all the instruments thereof; the ark, table, candlestick, &c. both the altars, and all the vessels thereof, and had anointed them, and sanctified them; the altar of incense, and the altar of burnt-offering, and all appertaining thereunto; according to Ben Gersom, this finishing of the whole was at the end of the seven days of consecration of Aaron and his sons, Exod. xxix. 35.

[d] Maimon. Hilchot Neſhiut Cappim, c. 14. §. 11. Gerſom in loc.

℣. 2. That the princes of Israel, &c.] The princes of the twelve tribes of Israel: heads of the house of their fathers; of the several houses and families the tribes were divided into, and took their name from their several ancestors, as is next explained: who were princes of the tribes; the twelve tribes, as before observed: and were over them that were numbered; over the children of Israel that were numbered, ch. i. by which it appears, that these princes are the very same persons that are mentioned by name there, as they are here afterwards; and were with Moses and Aaron, and assisting to them when they took the number of them; but according to the Targum of Jonathan, and Jarchi, these were appointed over them in Egypt; but the former is right: these now offered not sacrifices but gifts; they brought their presents to the Lord for the service of his sanctuary, and set them before him, as follows.

℣. 3. And they brought their offering before the Lord, &c.] Before the tabernacle, as it is afterwards explained, where he had now taken up his habitation: six covered waggons, and twelve oxen; according to the number of the twelve tribes, of which they were princes, two oxen for each waggon, which were to carry the tabernacle, and its vessels, from place to place; and which waggons were covered, not only to hide the things to be put into them from the sight of the people, being sacred, but to preserve them from the rain and dust, and the like; and no doubt, but as they were made of the best materials, so they were covered with rich coverings for the honour of the vessels put into them, being the presents of princes, and in which they joined, and could not be ordinary carriages. The word is rendered litters in Is. lxvi. 20. and by some, coaches; the Targum of Jonathan is, "six waggons yoked," or drawn with a yoke of oxen; and Aben Ezra says, it signifies a kind of oxen which drew waggons; but the Targum of Jonathan, Jarchi, and Ben Gersom interpret it covered, as we do: a waggon for the two of the princes, and for each one an ox; two princes joined in the present of one waggon, which shews it could not be a common waggon, but a rich carriage, and ornamented, as the Targum of Jonathan adds; and each prince presented an ox, so that there was a yoke of them for each waggon: and they brought them before the tabernacle; the Targum of Jonathan says, Moses would not receive them, and therefore they brought them before the tabernable; and so, says Jarchi, Moses received them not at their hands, until it was declared to him by the mouth of the Lord what he should do, as follows.

℣. 4. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] Out of the tabernacle, before which the waggons and oxen were brought: saying; as follows.

℣. 5. Take it of them, &c.] The present of the waggons and oxen, by which it appears that this free-will-offering of the princes was according to his mind and will, and what they were influenced and guided to by his Spirit, and was well-pleasing in his sight, and acceptable to him: that they may be to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; be made use of, and employed in carrying the tabernacle, and the things of it, from place to place, when the Israelites journeyed: and thou shalt give them to the Levites; to ease them, whose business it was to bear and carry the several parts of the tabernacle, and the vessels of it: to every man according to his service; whether lighter or heavier, for such difference there was in the three divisions of the Levites; and according as their work was, they had more or fewer waggons and oxen given them, as it follows.

℣. 6. And Moses took the waggons and the oxen, &c.] Of the princes, as he was directed: and gave them unto the Levites; the Gershonites and Merarites; for as for the Kohathites, they had no part of them, for a reason after given.

℣. 7. Two waggons and four oxen he gave unto the sons of Gershon, &c.] The eldest son of Levi: according to their service; which was to bear and take care of the curtains, coverings, hangings and vails of the tabernacle; and which, when carrying from place to place, it was proper they should be covered from being exposed to rain and dust; and being so many as they were, must be heavy, burdensome and cumbersome, and therefore two waggons, with two yoke of oxen, were given them, to ease them.

℣. 8. And four waggons and eight oxen he gave to the sons of Merari, &c.] All the remaining waggons and oxen, which were double the number given to the Gershonites: according unto their service; being much heavier than theirs, having all the boards, pillars, sockets, pins, cords, &c. to bear and carry: thus Moses was directed of God wisely to dispose of those carriages, in proportion to the services each was employed in; and in a spiritual way, as the day, duty and service of the people of God be, he proportions grace and strength to them to answer thereunto: under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest; under whose care, inspection and direction were both the Gershonites and Merarites, ch. iv. 28, 33. and by whom were delivered, according to the instruction of Moses, the several waggons and oxen, to them.

℣. 9. But unto the sons of Kohath he gave none, &c.] Being all disposed of to the sons of Gershon and Merari: the reason of which follows, because the

[e] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 7. p. 21. Baal Hatturim in loc.

the ſervice of the ſanctuary belonging unto them, was that they ſhould bear upon their ſhoulders; as the ark with the mercy-ſeat, and cherubim, the ſhew-bread-table, the candleſtick, and the two altars; though in after-times we find, the ark was ſome times not only carried by the prieſts, but upon a cart, Joſh. iii. 17. and iv. 10. 2 Sam. vi. 3.

℣. 10. And the princes offered for dedicating of the altar, &c.] For ſetting it apart to ſacred uſe and ſervice, even the altar of burnt-offering; or rather after it had been ſanctified and ſet apart, when it began to be made uſe of for ſacrifice: in the day that it was anointed; with the anointing oil, whereby it was devoted to ſacred ſervice: even the princes offered their offering before the altar; the altar of burnt-offering; they brought their veſſels for the ſervice of it, and the creatures for ſacrifice, and ſet them before it; ſignifying what they meant thereby, that the ſilver and golden veſſels were for the uſe of it, and the beaſts for ſacrifice to be offered up on it: and here Jarchi alſo obſerves, that Moſes would not receive their offering until he knew the mind of God about it, and it was declared to him from himſelf.

℣. 11. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] For before this was ſaid to him, even what follows, Moſes knew not, as the ſame writer obſerves, how they ſhould offer, in what order, whether according to their birth, or whether according to the journeying of their camps, or whether they ſhould offer together, or one after another, one day after another [g]; this affair is ſet in a clear light: they ſhall offer their offering each prince on his day; one on one day, and the other on the next, and ſo on ſucceſſively for twelve days running; and this was ordered for the greater ſolemnity of the ſervice, and that it might be taken notice of, and each have the honour and credit of it; and this was done, not according to the order of their birth, but as their ſtandards were fixed, firſt Judah, and thoſe under him, and ſo the reſt in courſe: for the dedicating of the altar; ſee ℣. 10.

℣. 12. And he that offered his offering on the firſt day, &c.] Was he whoſe ſtandard was pitched firſt, at the eaſt, to the riſing ſun: and this was Nahſhon the ſon of Amminadab, of the tribe of Judah; who was the prince and captain of that tribe, though the title is not here given him, as to the reſt of the princes, this being left to be concluded from his offering firſt; for if they that offered after him were princes, he muſt needs be one; or it may be this title is omitted, becauſe the chief prince, or the prince of the tribe of Judah moſt peculiarly belongs to a greater perſonage, even the Meſſiah, who was to ſpring, and did ſpring from that tribe, 1 Chron. v. 2. and as Baal Hatturim ſays, from Nahſhon; and who alſo obſerves, that Ben Nahſhon is the Meſſiah.

℣. 13. And his offering was one ſilver charger, &c.] Or diſh, like one of thoſe uſed on the ſhew-bread-table to hold the bread in, only they were of gold, this of ſilver, and belonged to the altar of burnt-offering; the uſe of which might be to hold the meat-offering in, as it may ſeem from the latter part of the verſe, or the wave-breaſt or heave-ſhoulder, which belonged to the prieſt: the weight thereof was 130 ſhekels; which were 61 ounces, 4 drams, 1 ſcruple, and 17 grains, [h] worth about 16 pounds and 5 ſhillings of our money: one ſilver bowl of 70 ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary; the ſtandard that was kept in the ſanctuary; this was a leſſer veſſel, and was either for holding the drink-offering; or receiving the blood of the ſacrifices; its weight was 33 ounces, 5 drams and 3 grains, and was worth about 8 pounds and 15 ſhillings of our money: both of them were full of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering; which always attended other ſacrifices after-mentioned, part of which was burnt on the altar of burnt-offering, and the reſt were the perquiſites of the prieſts:

℣. 14. One ſpoon of ten ſhekels of gold, &c.] Its weight was according to the ſhekels, its matter of gold; it weighed 4 ounces, 1 dram and 9 grains, and was worth about 7 pounds and 10 ſhillings of our money: full of incenſe; this looks as if this ſpoon was deſigned for the golden altar of incenſe, which might be at this time alſo dedicated; but Jarchi underſtands it as for the altar of burnt-offering, and obſerves, we never find incenſe belonging to a private perſon, nor to the outward altar, (the altar of burnt-offering) but this only, and which was temporary.

℣. 15. One young bullock, &c.] Of three years old, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem: one ram; of two years old, as the ſame Targums: one lamb of the firſt year, for a burnt offering; of which ſee Lev. i.

℣. 16. One kid of the goats for a ſin-offering.] Though theſe offerings of the princes were by way of thankſgiving, and to expreſs their joy and gladneſs at the erection of the tabernacle, its altars, and the ſervice thereof; yet as this might not be without ſin, which attends the beſt and pureſt performances of men, a ſin-offering was required, teaching us to look to Chriſt, who was made an offering for ſin, for the taking away the ſins of our holy things.

℣. 17. And for a ſacrifice of peace-offerings, &c.] So that here were all ſorts of offerings on this occaſion, meat and drink-offerings, burnt-offerings, ſin-offerings and peace-offerings: and for the latter were brought two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the firſt year; the reaſon why ſo many were brought and uſed for this ſort of ſacrifice, was, becauſe with theſe a feaſt was made, of which not only the prieſts partook, but the princes, and as many of their friends and acquaintance as they thought fit to invite: this was the offering of Nahſhon the ſon of Amminadab; which he offered out of his own ſubſtance, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem paraphraſe it; though ſome have thought, that the preſents and offerings were ſo large, and the princes not ſo very rich, or ſo much above the common people, as may be thought, that therefore they were aſſiſted by the ſeveral tribes they were princes of: and as was this prince's offering, ſo were all the reſt that follow in the order, according to their encampment under the ſeveral ſtandards where they were fixed; and which were offered ſucceſſively every day, the ſabbath-day or days not excepted, theſe being religious ſervices, until the whole twelve were finiſhed; and their preſents and their offerings were exactly the ſame, and the account of them is given in the ſame words; they either agreeing together to make the ſame preſents and offerings, or elſe they were directed to do ſo by the Spirit of God; whereby might be ſignified the common and equal right that they, and the tribes they repreſented, had in the altars, and the benefits ariſing from thence; as thoſe that believe in Chriſt have an altar which is himſelf, they have a joint right to partake of, and have an equal ſhare in the benefits of righteouſneſs, peace, pardon and atonement by him; ſee Heb. xiii. 10. wherefore there there is nothing more particularly to be obſerved from hence to the end of ℣. 83. only that in the ſeveral accounts of the preſents and offerings of each prince, the vowel points in the Hebrew text are omitted, excepting in the names of perſons that offer; which does not at all militate againſt the antiquity of the points, or their being coæval with the conſonants, ſince both in manuſcripts and printed copies, theſe may be left out for brevity-ſake, and quicker diſpatch, and without any detriment, ſince they may be eaſily ſupplied from the firſt inſtance given; and they may be omitted on purpoſe, that theſe accounts might be the more taken notice of as a very wonderful thing, that their preſents and offerings ſhould be exactly alike; ſince the vowels being wanting, the naked letters may the more ſtrike the eye, and lead the mind to advert unto them; and whereas the accents are all along continued, the reaſon of which may be, becauſe the vowels once put, and read, might be more eaſily known, eſpecially by one ſkilful in the Hebrew language, than the ſtops, diſtinctions and diviſions of the text, as a learned man has obſerved [i].

[g] Vid. Siphri apud Yalkut in loc.

[h] Vid. Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 2. p. 366.

℣. 84. This was the dedication of the altar by the princes, &c.] Theſe the preſents they made, and the offerings they offered when the altar firſt began to be made uſe of, after it had been anointed and ſanctified for ſacred ſervice: in the day when it was anointed; this ſhows that it was not the preciſe and exact day of the ſetting up of the tabernacle, and the anointing of the altar, that the above preſents and offerings were brought, ſince they were twelve ſucceſſive days in bringing; but that the ſenſe is, that about that time, or quickly after it was anointed, the princes dedicated it in the manner before deſcribed: twelve chargers of ſilver, twelve ſilver bowls, twelve ſpoons of gold; according to the number of the princes, and the tribes they were princes of; a noble inſtance both of devotion and piety, and of liberality and generoſity; and is a ſtanding example on record to all princes and great perſonages in all ſucceſſive ages, to promote religion and godlineſs, by their own perſonal conduct and behaviour, and to encourage and ſupport it by their generous benefactions and donations: the ſum total of what they contributed is in this and the following verſes given.

℣. 85. Each charger of ſilver weighing 130 ſhekels, each bowl 70, &c.] See the note on ℣. 13. all the ſilver veſſels weighed 2400 ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary; which amounted to 1139 ounces and 4 drams [k], which were worth about 300 pounds of our money.

℣. 86. The golden ſpoons were twelve, full of incenſe, &c.] Which points at the uſe thoſe ſpoons or cups were of, namely, to carry incenſe in them, ſuch as were uſed on the day of atonement [l]: weighing ten ſhekels apiece, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary; ſee the note on ℣. 14. all the gold of the ſpoons was 120 ſhekels; which amounted to 49 ounces, 5 drams, 2 ſcruples, and 8 grains, worth about 75 pounds of our money.

℣. 87. All the oxen for the burnt-offering were 12 bullocks, &c.] According to the number of the princes and their tribes, and ſo, the rams twelve, the lambs of the firſt year twelve, which were alſo for the burnt-offering: with their meat-offering; which always went along with the burnt-offering: and the kids of the goats for a ſin-offering, twelve; thus the twelve princes, and by them the twelve tribes expreſſed their faith in Chriſt, the antitype of thoſe ſacrifices, and their hope of his coming into the world to be a ſacrifice for ſin, and of their atonement, reconciliation, peace, pardon, and ſalvation by him; ſee Acts xxvi. 6, 7.

℣. 88. And all the oxen for the ſacrifice of the peace-offerings were 24 bullocks, &c.] Each prince bringing two: the rams 60, the he-goats 60, the lambs of the firſt year 60; five of each being brought by every prince; ſo that the whole number of beaſts for peace-offerings only, which were to feaſt with, were 204: this was the dedication of the altar after that it was anointed; this clearly ſhews, that it was not the preciſe day the altar was anointed the dedication was made, but ſome little time after; even that the firſt prince brought his preſents and offerings for the dedication of it.

℣. 89. And when Moſes was gone into the tabernacle of the congregation, to ſpeak with him, &c.] With God, to conſult him on ſome affair or another, or to learn whether he had any thing elſe to communicate to him, to be delivered to the children of Iſrael; or whether he had any directions and inſtructions to give him about the preſents and gifts of the princes, ſince this ſeems to be immediately after their offerings: then he heard the voice of one ſpeaking unto him; the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, the voice of the Spirit; but rather the voice of the Shekinah, or Word of God, the eternal Logos, is what was heard; who in the fulneſs of time was to be made fleſh, and dwell among men, and be heard, and ſeen, and handled by them; for as for the voice of the father that was not heard at any time, John v. 37. from off the mercy-ſeat that was upon the ark of the teſtimony, from between the two cherubim; upon the ark in which the law was, called the teſtimony, was the mercy-ſeat; over that were placed two cherubim ſhadowing it, and between theſe was the ſeat of the divine majeſty, which he had now taken, and from hence the voice of him ſpeaking was heard; which as it follows upon the preſents and offerings of the princes, may be interpreted, of the divine approbation and acceptance of them; ſince it was promiſed by the Lord to Moſes, that upon their building a tabernacle for him he would dwell in it; and upon the making a mercy-ſeat with the cherubim over the ark, he would there meet with Moſes, and commune with him; all which being done to his mind he fulfils his promiſe: though it ſeems that at this time Moſes did not go into the moſt holy place, only into the tabernacle of the congregation, the outward ſanctuary, the court of the tabernacle; and there he heard the voice, as Jarchi obſerves, coming out of the moſt holy place, and from the mercy-ſeat there, which was ſo loud, clear, and diſtinct, as to be well heard and underſtood by him; he ſuppoſes the voice went out from heaven to between the two cherubim, and from thence to the tabernacle of the congregation: and he ſpake unto him; what he ſpoke is not ſaid, unleſs it is what follows in the next chapter.

[i] Vid. Pfeiffer. Dubia vexata, cent. 2. loc. 19. p. 147.

[k] Vid. Scheuchzer. ut ſupra.

[l] Miſn. Yoma, c. 4, 4. & 5, 1.

CHAP.

CHAP. VIII.

IN this chapter orders are given for the lighting the ſeven lamps of the candleſtick, ℣. 1—4. and for the conſecration of the Levites to their office, by a purification of them, ℣. 5—8. by a ſeparation of them from the children of Iſrael, and the impoſition of their hands on them, and of the hands of the Levites on the offerings offered for them, ℣. 9—15. and being thus given to the Lord, and claimed as his, inſtead of the firſt-born of Iſrael, they are given to Aaron and his ſons to do ſervice in the tabernacle, ℣. 16—22. and their age at which they were to enter into ſervice and ceaſe from it is fixed, ℣. 23—26.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Whether immediately after the offerings of the princes or at another time, is not certain; Aben Ezra thinks, it was in the night God ſpake unto him, becauſe then the lamps were lighted and burning: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto Aaron, and ſay unto him, &c.] It being his work to light the lamps, though, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, it was not incumbent on an high-prieſt alone to do this, for it alſo belonged to the ſons of Aaron, who were common prieſts, Exod. xxvii. 21. though it is probable that as this was the firſt time of lighting them, it might be done by Aaron himſelf, his ſons attending and aſſiſting him; in which he was an eminent type of Chriſt, the great high-prieſt, who lights the lamps in all his golden candleſticks the churches, and from whom they have all their light and all the ſupplies of it: when thou lighteſt the lamps; which was done at evening, Exod. xxx. 8. pointing at the great light ſet up by Chriſt, the light of the world, in the evening of it, in the laſt days: the ſeven lamps ſhall give light over againſt the candleſtick; the Targum of Jonathan is, "at the time of thy lighting the "lamps over againſt the candleſtick, there ſhall "be ſeven lamps giving light; three on the weſt-"ſide and three on the eaſt-ſide, and the ſeventh "in the middle:" and in the like order Jarchi places them, who obſerves, that the three eaſtward looked over-againſt the middlemoſt, the wicks that were in them; and ſo the three weſtward, the tops of the wicks were over-againſt the middlemoſt: and he alſo obſerves, that the middlemoſt lamp was no other than the body of the candleſtick, and ſo all the reſt of the lamps were over-againſt and looked to that; and this is the ſenſe of Maimonides[m], and other Jewiſh writers; but the truer meaning of the phraſe is, that the ſeven lamps gave light as they were to do, to that part of the holy place that was oppoſite to the candleſtick, the north part of it, where ſtood the ſhew-bread-table, the candleſtick being in the ſouth, Exod. xl. 22, 24. that the table of the Lord might have light, as it was proper it ſhould; and the prieſts might ſee to ſet on and take off the bread, which otherwiſe they could not, there being no window in the place; ſee the note on Exod. xxv. 37.

℣. 3. And Aaron did ſo, he lighted the lamps thereof over againſt the candleſtick, &c.] As God had taken up his reſidence in the moſt holy place, as appears by the voice ſpeaking from off the mercy-ſeat, ch. vii. 89. and ſacrifices were begun to be offered in the outward court on the altar of burnt-offering, it was proper that the ſervice of God in the holy place ſhould alſo be ſet on foot; as placing of the ſhew-bread on the ſhew-bread-table, and burning incenſe on the golden altar of incenſe; which could not well be done until the lamps were lighted, and therefore orders were given for the lighting them, which was accordingly done by Aaron: as the Lord commanded Moſes; Exod. xxv. 37.

℣. 4. And this work of the candleſtick was of beaten gold, &c.] As it is alſo ſaid to be, Exod. xxv. 31, 36. ſee the notes there: unto the ſhaft thereof, unto the flowers thereof was beaten work; of which, ſee Exod. xxv. 31. according unto the pattern which the Lord had ſhewed Moſes; when on mount Sinai with him: ſo he made the candleſtick; that is, ordered it to be made, and took care that it was made exactly to the pattern he had of it; otherwiſe Bezaleel was the artificer; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan here expreſſes him by name.

℣. 5. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] At the ſame time the order about lighting the lamps was given; and this ſection is joined to the former, Aben Ezra thinks, to ſhew that Aaron employed himſelf in lighting the lamps, but in the reſt of the ſervices the Levites helped him, and ſtood before him to do what he commanded them: they were ordered to be taken and given to Aaron before; and they were numbered, and their ſervices appointed to each diviſion of them; and now they are ordered to be ordained and conſecrated to their office: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 6. Take the Levites from among the children of Iſrael, &c.] Among whom they were mixed, as were all the tribes mixed together, as Aben Ezra ſays, before they took their journey from mount Sinai; however, from hence forward, they were diſtinguiſhed from Iſraelites, as they are both in ſcripture and in Jewiſh writings; ſee 1 Chron. ix. 2. though this ſeems to deſign no other but their appointment and ſeparation to their work and ſervice, as miniſters to the prieſts of the Lord; and ſo as Aaron did not aſſume the honour of prieſthood to himſelf, but was called of God, the Levites did not take the honour of their office to themſelves, but had it by the appointment and call of God: and cleanſe them; with water, by ſprinkling the water of purification on them, and by waſhing their bodies and clothes with water; which outward waſhing was a ſign of moral purity, which was neceſſary to their employment in the ſervice of the ſanctuary; for though there was no particular uncleanneſs on them, either ceremonial or moral, but what was common to men; yet it was proper by ſuch outward rites, to put them and others in mind, that they which are employed about holy things ſhould be eminently pure and holy; and as their buſineſs was to carry holy things, to bear the ſacred veſſels of the ſanctuary from place to place when needful, they ought of all men to be clean, Iſ. lii. 11. and in this they were emblems of the miniſters of the word, who ought to be pure as in heart, ſo in life and converſation, and be examples ples of purity to others, 2 Cor. vi. 6. 1 Tim. iv. 12.

[m] Hilchot Beth Habechirah, c. 3. §. 8.

℣. 7. And thus ſhalt thou do unto them to cleanſe them, &c.] Or order Aaron to do unto them; the cleanſing of the Levites was the work of Aaron, either by himſelf or by his order; in which he was a type of Chriſt, who is the refiner and purifier of the ſons of Levi, Mal. iii. 3. ſprinkle water of purifying upon them; or water of ſin [n]; water which purifies from ſin, in a ceremonial ſenſe; and this was water mixed with the aſhes of the red heifer, which was the purification of perſons defiled by the dead, as Jarchi obſerves; and though the law concerning the red heifer, and of making the water of purification, is not made mention of till afterwards, ch. xix. yet it was very probably given before; and the Jews ſay [o], it was on the ſecond of Niſan, on the firſt month, which was the day after the tabernacle was erected, that Eleazar the prieſt burnt the red heifer and ſprinkled all Iſrael; this only ſanctified to the purifying of the fleſh, in a ceremonial ſenſe, but was typical of the blood of Chriſt, which purges the conſcience from dead works; that ſo men may be fitted and qualified, as the Levites were, to ſerve the living God, Heb. ix. 13, 14. and let them ſhave all their fleſh; the hair of their bodies, in all parts thereof; even the beard, as Aben Ezra notes, ſome ſay; yet, not the corners of it; but the whole hair of the body, every where was to be ſhaved off, to denote the moſt perfect purity, and a removal of all ſuperfluity of naughtineſs and excreſcences of the fleſh from them: ſo the Egyptian prieſts uſed to ſhave their whole body every third day, leſt there ſhould be any thing filthy in thoſe that ſerved the gods [p]: this cleanſing of the Levites was after the ſame manner as lepers were cleanſed: and Jarchi obſerves, from one of their writers, that becauſe the Levites gave an atonement for the firſt-born, who committed idolatry, which is called the ſacrifices of the dead, and the leper is called a dead man, they were obliged to ſhaving as the lepers; but Ben Gerſom gives a better reaſon for the ſhaving of them; that it was to put them in mind that they ſhould forſake material (or corporal) things, and employ themſelves in the ſervice of God; ſee Acts vi. 2, 4. 2 Tim. ii. 4. and let them waſh their clothes; and much more their bodies, as Chaſkuni, after the manner of thoſe who were polluted by touching a dead body; typical of the ſaints having their bodies waſhed with pure water, and their garments waſhed and made white in the blood of the lamb, Heb. x. 22, Rev. vii. 14. and ſo make themſelves clean; the Targum of Jonathan adds, in forty ſeahs of water; and according to the ſenſe of that paraphraſe, both the bodies and clothes of the Levites were dipped in water.

℣. 8. Then let them take a young bullock, &c.] Of two years old, as the Jewiſh writers gather from the other in the next clauſe, being called the ſecond; though the wiſemen ſay, one of three years old is fit for ſuch a ſacrifice; nay, others ſay, if four or five years old; but the deciſion is, according to the wiſemen [q]: with his meat-offering, even fine flour mingled with oil; which always went along with a burnt-offering, and conſiſted of three tenth deals of fine flour, and half an hin of oil, ch. xxviii. 12, 14. and another young bullock ſhalt thou take for a ſin-offering; which was the offering for the ſin of the whole congregation of Iſrael, thro' ignorance; and this being for all the Levites, and they being inſtead of the firſt-born of Iſrael, ſuch an offering was required; and though there was no particular ſin charged upon them, but it became neceſſary for their perfect cleanſing and expiation.

℣. 9. And thou ſhalt bring the Levites before the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] Not without it, but within it, in the court of the tabernacle, at leaſt at the door of it, where ſtood the altar of burnt-offering, on which ſacrifices for them were now to be offered: and thou ſhalt gather the whole aſſembly of the children of Iſrael together; the heads of the tribes, and elders of the people, as Aben Ezra interprets this phraſe in Lev. viii. 3. where the whole congregation is ſaid to be aſſembled at the conſecration of the prieſts, as here at the conſecration of the Levites, having a concern therein, as well as to be ſpectators and witneſſes of this ſolemn affair; and no doubt as many of them as could conveniently aſſemble at the door of the tabernacle did, though every individual of that large body of people could not poſſibly do it.

℣. 10. And thou ſhalt bring the Levites before the Lord, &c.] From the door of the tabernacle, to the altar of burnt-offering, where the Lord was in ſome ſenſe preſent to accept the ſacrifices offered to him: and the children of Iſrael ſhall put their hands upon the Levites; as were uſed to be put upon ſacrifices, for the Levites were themſelves offered for an offering of the children of Iſrael, as is expreſſed in the following verſe; by which rite they ſignified that they voluntarily parted with them, and gave them up to the Lord, and transferred their ſervice to them, in which they were to ſerve in their room and ſtead; theſe, according to ſome Jewiſh writers, were the firſt-born of Iſrael that laid their hands on the Levites, a type of the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born; or rather the princes and heads of the tribes who repreſented the whole body. Some think by this rite is ſignified the conſent of the people in the deſignation and appointment of the miniſters of the word to their work and office; but what in the New Teſtament ſeems to anſwer to this, is, the laying of the hands of the preſbytery on miniſters of the word, 1 Tim. iv. 14.

℣. 11. And Aaron ſhall offer the Levites before the Lord, &c.] Or wave [r], them, as a wave-offering, which was moved to and fro, backwards and forwards; not that they were actually ſo waved and moved to and fro by Aaron, which could not be done by him; though it is poſſible he might make ſuch a motion himſelf, and they might do the like after him, thereby ſignifying that they belonged unto the Lord of the whole earth; and ſome think this teſtified their readineſs to ſerve the Lord; to which may be added their conſtant employment in his ſervice, being always in motion, doing one piece of ſervice or another continually; as the people of God, and eſpecially the miniſters of the word ſhould be always abounding in the work of the Lord. Ainſworth ſuppoſes, that the troubles and afflictions of the miniſters of God are figured hereby; for an offering of the children of Iſrael; to the Lord, hereby devoting them to his ſervice: that they may execute the ſervice of the Lord; for them, in their room and ſtead, do what otherotherwiſe they muſt have done; ſee ch. iii. 7, 8. with this compare Iſ. lxvi. 20, 21.

[n] מי חטאת aquas peccati, Montanus; aquam peccati, Piſcator, Druſius; the ſin-water, Ainſworth. [o] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 7. p. 22. Bartenora in ib. [p] Herodot. Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 37. [q] Miſn. Parah, c. 1. §. 2. & 3. [r] והניף & motabit, Tigurine verſion; & faciet elevare, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; & agitabit, Druſius; & agitato, Piſcator.

℣. 12. And the Levites ſhall lay their hands on the heads of the bullocks, &c.] Or on the head [s]; on the head of every one of them, as Aben Ezra, thereby, as it were, transferring their ſins to them, for theſe were to make atonement for them, as the latter part of the verſe ſhews; and this was a figure of the imputation of ſin to Chriſt, and taught that doctrine, and led the faith of the offerers to the ſin-bearing and ſin-atoning Saviour: and thou ſhalt offer the one for a ſin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering unto the Lord; that is, ſhall order to be offered; for not Moſes, but Aaron offered theſe offerings, as Aben Ezra obſerves, of which this is a proof, that Aaron is ſaid to make the atonement for them, ℣. 21. for which purpoſe theſe ſacrifices were offered, particularly the firſt; and the latter, by way of thankſgiving for atonement made by the former: ſo it follows, to make an atonement for the Levites; who could not be admitted to ſervice until their ſins were expiated; as no man is worthy to be employed in the work of God, but ſuch for whom reconciliation for their ſins is made by the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt, by which they are purged from dead works to ſerve the living God.

℣. 13. And thou ſhalt ſet the Levites before Aaron, and before his ſons, &c.] After atonement was made for them, as Aben Ezra obſerves; then they were preſented to Aaron and his ſons, to whom they were given to be their miniſters, and aſſiſtants to them: and offer them for an offering unto the Lord; or, and wave them, &c. as before, that is, order them to be waved; for not Moſes, but Aaron did this, and indeed was done already; and therefore ſhould rather be rendered, as by biſhop Patrick, after thou haſt offered, or waved them.

℣. 14. Thus ſhalt thou ſeparate the Levites from among the children of Iſrael, &c.] By ſprinkling the water of purification upon them; by offering ſacrifices for them; by preſenting them before the Lord, with the hands of the people of Iſrael put upon them; by offering and waving them before the Lord, and by ſetting them before Aaron and his ſons, as their miniſters: and the Levites ſhall be mine; in a ſpecial and peculiar manner devoted to his ſervice, and by him given to his prieſts for that purpoſe; ſo the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, "and the Levites ſhall miniſter before me."

℣. 15. And after that ſhall the Levites go in, &c.] Not into the ſanctuary, where only the prieſts entered, much leſs into the moſt holy place, where only the high-prieſt went, and that but once a year, in neither of which places the Levites had any thing to do, but into the court of the tabernacle: to do the ſervice of the tabernacle of the congregation; to watch there, and to aſſiſt the prieſts at the altar of burnt-offering, to take down the tabernacle, and bear the veſſels of it, and ſet it up, as occaſion required: and thou ſhalt cleanſe them, and offer them for an offering; cleanſe them by ſprinkling the water of purifying on them, and offer them by waving them as before; and indeed this is no new thing which is here obſerved, but what was already done, and therefore ſhould be rendered, when thou ſhalt have cleanſed them, or after thou haſt cleanſed them, &c. and ſo the particle vau is ſometimes uſed [t].

℣. 16. For they are wholly given unto me from among the children of Iſrael, &c.] All of them entirely, and moſt certainly; or given, given [u], which is repeated for the confirmation of it; or becauſe of their being twice given, firſt to the Lord by the children of Iſrael, and then by the Lord to Aaron and his ſons, as Chaſkuni; though Jarchi interprets it of the different parts of their ſervice they were devoted to, given for bearing and carrying the veſſels of the ſanctuary, and given for the ſong, or to be ſingers in the temple: inſtead of ſuch as open every womb, even inſtead of the firſt-born of all the children of Iſrael, have I taken them unto me; ſee the note on ch. iii. 12, 13.

℣. 17. For all the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael are mine, both men and beaſt, &c.] Not only in common with other of his creatures, but in a ſpecial reſpect on account of his ſignal deliverance of them; they were his, as Jarchi expreſſes it by the line of judgment, or rule of juſtice and equity, becauſe he protected them among the firſt-born of the Egyptians, ſaved them when he ſlew theirs, as follows: in the day that I ſmote every firſt-born in the land of Egypt; both of men and beaſts: I ſanctified them for myſelf; claimed them as his own, and ſet them apart for his own uſe, or ordered them to be ſet apart; ſee Exod. xiii. 2.

℣. 18. And I have taken the Levites for all the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael.] Gave up his right in the firſt-born, and inſtead of them took the Levites for his uſe and ſervice; ſee ch. iii. 12.

℣. 19. And I have given the Levites as a gift to Aaron and his ſons, from among the children of Iſrael, &c.] Or I have given the Levites that were given; that is, the Lord gave to Aaron and his ſons the Levites, that were firſt given to him; as they were, when brought before him, and the children of Iſrael laid hands on them, and they were offered before the Lord, ℣. 10, 11: to do the ſervice of the children of Iſrael in the tabernacle of the congregation; to do what otherwiſe they muſt have done, watch and guard the tabernacle, carry the ſacrifices to the prieſts, aſſiſt them at the altar, take down and ſet up the tabernacle, and carry it, and the veſſels of it, from place to place: and to make an atonement for the children of Iſrael; not by offering ſacrifices for them, which was the work of the prieſts, but by being now offered themſelves, ℣. 10, 11, 13. that they themſelves might be the atonement of their ſouls, as Aben Ezra expreſſes it, as well as they were by their ſervice hereafter a means of preſerving the Iſraelites from death; which may be interpreted of making an atonement, which Phinehas is ſaid to do by his deed, though no ſacrifice was offered, ch. xxv. 7, 8, 13. which ſenſe ſeems to be confirmed by what follows: that there be no plague among the children of Iſrael, when the children of Iſrael come nigh to the ſanctuary; by approaching nearer than they ſhould, touching what they ought not, intruding themſelves into ſervice they were not called to, or doing it amiſs, not being inſtructed in it, or inured to it as the Levites were. The phraſe, the children of Iſrael, is five times uſed in this verſe, to denote the love of God to them, as Jarchi obſerves.

℣. 20. And Moſes and Aaron, and all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, &c.] The ſeveral parties concerned in the conſecration of the Levites: theſe did to the Levites according unto all that the Lord commanded Moſes, ſo did the children of Iſrael unto them; which, as Jarchi notes, is ſaid to the praiſe of them that did it, and of what was done by them; them; every thing was done that was ordered, and in the manner in which it was preſcribed; Moſes ſprinkled, or ordered to be ſprinkled, the water of purification on them, and ſet them before the tabernacle, and before the Lord; the children of Iſrael laid their hands on them, and Aaron waved them, and offered the ſacrifices for them.

[s] ל ראש per caput, Tigurine verſion, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, 290, 299. [t] See Noldius, p. 289. [u] נתנים נתנים dati dati, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; ſo Druſius and Ainſworth.

℣. 21. And the Levites were purified, &c.] From ſin, by the ſprinkling of the ſin-water, or water of purification on them, ℣. 7: and they waſhed their clothes; that they might have no defilement about them, neither in their bodies, nor in their garments: and Aaron offered them as an offering before the Lord; a wave-offering, as in ℣. 11: and Aaron made an atonement for them to cleanſe them; by offering the ſacrifices for them, ℣. 12.

℣. 22. And after that went the Levites in, &c.] Into the court of the tabernacle, being at the door of it, when the above rites and ceremonies of their conſecration were performed: to do their ſervice in the tabernacle of the congregation, before Aaron and his ſons; in their preſence, and by their order, as they ſhould direct them: as the Lord had commanded Moſes, ſo did they unto them; Aaron and his ſons did to the then preſent Levites, according to the command of God by Moſes; they exactly obſerved every punctilio of it, and complied with it; and this the ſons of Aaron did continually to the ſons of the Levites, as Aben Ezra remarks, in all ſucceeding ages; when the Levites were conſecrated to their ſervice, the ſame things were done unto them that are here ordered.

℣. 23. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] At the ſame time he gave the inſtructions about the conſecration of the Levites, the time of their entrance on their ſervice, and of leaving it, was fixed: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 24. This is it that belongeth unto the Levites, &c.] The fixed and ſettled time for their ſervice, as is after related: from 25 years old and upward, they ſhall go in to wait upon the ſervice of the tabernacle of the congregation; in ch. iv. 3. the time for the Levites entering on the work of the tabernacle is fixed to 30 years and upward, which Jarchi reconciles thus; at 25 years old the Levite goes in to learn the rites of ſervice, and he learns five years, and when 30 years of age he ſerves; the ſame is obſerved by others [w]; but what Aben Ezra propoſes ſeems much better; at 30 years of age a Levite entered into the ſervice of bearing and carrying burdens; and at 25 years of age he entered into the ſervice of the tent or tabernacle, where he was employed in lighter ſervice, ſuch as opening and ſhutting the doors of the ſanctuary, keeping out ſtrangers and unclean perſons, and ſinging the ſongs of the ſanctuary; but was not concerned till 30 years of age in carrying the veſſels of the ſanctuary on the ſhoulders, as the Kohathites; or in taking down and ſetting up the tabernacle, loading and unloading the waggons, as the Gerſhonites and Merarites; which is the buſineſs aſſigned unto them, and ſpoken of in ch. iv. where the age of 30 years, and upward, is mentioned, as the time of their entrance on it.

℣. 25. And from the age of 50 years they ſhall ceaſe waiting upon the ſervice thereof, &c.] The heavy ſervice of it: and ſhall ſerve no more; by bearing and carrying the veſſels of the ſanctuary upon their ſhoulders, as Jarchi interprets it; this, according to the Jewiſh writers, was only in force whilſt the tabernacle was in the wilderneſs, and was moved from place to place; but when it had a fixed habitation, and that laborious ſervice of bearing and carrying the veſſels of it ceaſed, years made no difference in the Levites, or diſqualified them for ſervice; for it is ſaid [x], that the Levites were not bound by this law, but in the time of the tabernacle; but when it was at Shiloh, and at Jeruſalem, where there was no bearing and carrying upon the ſhoulder, the Levites were not rejected on account of years, only for their voice, when they had loſt that, and could not ſing.

℣. 26. But ſhall miniſter with their brethren in the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] By giving advice, inſtructing younger Levites, and doing lighter ſervice. Jarchi ſays, they ſhall return to ſhutting of doors, ſinging, and loading waggons; but the laſt eſpecially ſeems too burdenſome: the miniſtry of ſuch is explained by the next clauſe, to keep the charge; of the tabernacle, to watch and obſerve that no ſtranger, or unclean perſon enter into it; and this they were capable of, when at the age of fifty, and upwards: and ſhall do no ſervice; heavy and laborious: thus thou ſhalt do unto the Levites touching their charge; diſmiſs them from ſervice when at ſuch an age, or however make their ſervice eaſier; for this reſpects ancient men, as Aben Ezra notes; though it may include both their entrance on their work, and their ceſſation from it.

CHAP. IX.

IN this chapter the command for keeping the paſſover is repeated, and it was accordingly kept, ℣. 1—5. but ſome perſons being defiled and diſqualified for obſerving it, Moſes enquires of the Lord, on their ſolicitation, what ſhould be done in ſuch a caſe, ℣. 6, 7, 8. when it was ordered to be kept by ſuch, and thoſe on journeys, on the 14th day of the 2d month, but not by others, who were to obſerve it, according to its firſt appointment, ℣. 9—14. and an account is given of the appearance of the cloud by day, and fire by night, upon the tabernacle, which directed the children of Iſrael when to journey, and when to pitch their tents, ℣. 15—23.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes in the wilderneſs of Sinai, &c.] Whilſt the people of Iſrael were encamped there, before they took their journey from thence: in the firſt month of the ſecond year, after they were come out of the land of Egypt; the following order was given ſome time in the firſt month of the ſecond year of Iſrael's departure out of Egypt; the preciſe day is not mentioned, it muſt be in the beginning of the month before the 14th day of it, in which the paſſover is ordered to be kept, according to the firſt inſtitution of it; very probably immediately after the ſetting up of the tabernacle, and the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons; and it muſt be before the numbering of the people,

[w] Ben Gerſom in loc. Bartenora in Pirke Abot, c. 5. §. 21. c. 1. §. 6.

[x] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Cholin, people, the fixing of their ſtandards, the appointment of the Levites, and the dedication of them; ſince the order for the numbering of the people was on the firſt day of the ſecond month, ch. i. 1. but the account of them was poſtponed to this time, in order to give a relation of an affair which was not finiſhed until the ſecond month, and therefore the whole is laid together here: ſaying, as follows.

℣. 2. Let the children of Iſrael alſo keep the paſſover, &c.] Though this ordinance was enjoined the people of Iſrael, and obſerved by them at the time of their coming out of Egypt, and had been ſince repeated, Lev. xxiii. 5. yet without a freſh precept, or an explanation of the former, they ſeemed not to be obliged, or might not be ſenſible that they were obliged to keep it, until they came into the land of Canaan, Exod. xii. 25. and therefore a new order is given them to obſerve it: at his appointed ſeaſon; and what that ſeaſon is, is next declared.

℣. 3. In the fourteenth day of this month, &c.] The firſt month, the month Niſan or Abib, anſwering to part of our March: at even ye ſhall keep it, in his appointed ſeaſon; between the two evenings, Exod. xii. 6. and even if it fall on the ſabbath-day, as Jarchi; and this was a ſabbath-day, according to the Jewiſh writers [y]: according to all the rites of it, and according to all the ceremonies thereof; the former of theſe, according to Jarchi, reſpects the lamb, and the requiſites of it, that it ſhould be without blemiſh, a male, and of the firſt year; and the latter, according to him and others, the removal of the leaven, and the ſeven days of unleavened bread, and the eating of the lamb with bitter herbs; they take in no doubt all that were preſcribed by the original law, except the ſprinkling of the blood on the door-poſts, and alſo eating the paſſover in haſte, with their loins girt, and ſhoes on their feet, and ſtaves in their hands; tho' ſome think theſe latter might be obſerved at this time when they were unſettled.

℣. 4. And Moſes ſpake unto the children of Iſrael, that they ſhould keep the paſſover.] The time now drawing nigh for the obſervation of it, it being now almoſt a year ſince their coming out of Egypt.

℣. 5. And they kept the paſſover on the fourteenth day of the firſt month at even, in the wilderneſs of Sinai, &c.] No mention is made of keeping the feaſt of unleavened bread ſeven days, only of the paſſover, which indeed was only enjoined at this time, though the feaſt of unleavened bread uſed to follow it, and did in after-times; but perhaps it would not have been an eaſy matter to have got the flour to make it of, ſufficient for ſo large a body of people, for ſeven days together in the wilderneſs; though they might be able to furniſh themſelves with what was enough for one meal from the neighbouring countries, and eſpecially from Midian, where Jethro, Moſes's father lived, and which was not very far from Sinai, where the Iſraelites now were: according to all that the Lord commanded Moſes, ſo did the children of Iſrael; which is obſerved to their honour; though Jarchi gives this as a reaſon why this book does not begin with this account, as the order of things ſeems to require, becauſe it was to the reproach of the Iſraelites, that all the forty years they were in the wilderneſs they kept but this paſſover only; the reaſon of which was, becauſe of the omiſſion of circumciſion during that time, through the inconveniences of travelling, and the danger of circumciſion in it, without which their children could not eat of the paſſover, Exod. xii. 48.

℣. 6. And there were certain men who were defiled by the dead body of a man, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan, adds, "who died by them ſuddenly," whereby pollution was contracted, ſee ch. vi. 9. though perhaps this was a whole houſe or family, one of which was dead, and ſo all were defiled, being in the place where the dead body was, or had touched it, or been concerned however in the burying of it, and on account of which were unclean ſeven days, and ſo might not eat of any holy things, as the paſſover; and though at the firſt inſtitution there was no ſuch law, yet ſince that time there was, which obliged them, ſee Lev. vii. 20, 21. and it is ſaid [z], that the ſection concerning the red heifer, and ſo of defilement by a dead body, was delivered on the day the tabernacle was erected, even on the firſt day of the firſt month; and tho' recorded in ch. xix. yet was given out before this; and indeed otherwiſe it is not eaſy to conceive how theſe men ſhould know, that the dead body of a man was defiling: that they could not keep the paſſover on that day; as others did, the fourteenth of Niſan, it being, according to the Targum of Jonathan, the ſeventh day of their defilement: and they came before Moſes, and before Aaron, on that day; on the ſelf-ſame day the paſſover was kept, and they were ſenſible of their pollution, which diſqualified for it; and therefore it ſhould rather ſeem to be the firſt day of their pollution, than their laſt; ſince otherwiſe they would doubtleſs have enquired about this matter before the paſſover came; unleſs the time of their pollution was ſo near out, that they thought they might eat it ſafely, on which they deſired advice.

℣. 7. And thoſe men ſaid unto him, &c.] To Moſes, who was the chief magiſtrate, tho' Aaron was the high-prieſt. Jarchi ſays, they were both ſitting together when the men came, and put the queſtion to them, but it was not proper to ſpeak to one after another; for if Moſes knew not, how ſhould Aaron know? ſays he; the more difficult matters were brought to Moſes, and he gave anſwers to them: we are defiled by the dead body of a man; they had touched it, or had been where it was, or at the funeral of it, and ſo were defiled: this they knew was their caſe by a law before mentioned, and which they ſpeak of, not as a ſin purpoſely committed by them, but as what had unhappily befallen them, and they could not avoid; and expreſs their concern, that upon this account they ſhould be deprived of the ordinance of the paſſover; and as this confeſſion ſhows an ingenuous diſpoſition, ſo what follows, a pious, religious, and devotional frame of mind: wherefore are we kept back, that we may not offer an offering of the Lord in his appointed ſeaſon among the children of Iſrael? they ſpeak very honourably of the ordinance of the paſſover, they call it an offering of the Lord, the paſſover-lamb being a ſlain ſacrifice; and this offered to the Lord, by way of thankſgiving, for and in commemoration of their wonderful deliverance out of Egypt, and done in faith of Chriſt the paſſover, to be ſacrificed for them; and it gave them much uneaſineſs that they were debarred by this occaſional and unavoidable uncleanneſs, that was upon them, from keeping it; and what added to [y] Seder Olam Rabba. c. 7.

[z] Chazkuni in loc.

to it was, that they could not obſerve it on the day which the Lord had appointed, and when the whole body of the children of Iſrael were employed in it; for it is no ſmall pleaſure to a good man to obſerve every ordinance of God in the manner, and at the time he directs to, and his people in general are attending to the ſame; and the rather they were urgent in their expoſtulations, becauſe it is ſaid [a], this was the ſeventh and laſt day of their pollution, when they ſhould be clean at evening, and the paſſover was not to be eaten until the evening, and therefore ſo earneſtly expoſtulate why they ſhould be kept back from it.

℣. 8. And Moſes ſaid unto them, ſtand ſtill, &c.] Where they were, Aben Ezra ſays, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and I will hear what the Lord will command concerning you; as it was a ſingular caſe, of which there had been no inſtance before, Moſes would not determine any thing about it of himſelf, but would enquire of the Lord his mind and will concerning it; and for that purpoſe, very probably, went into the moſt holy place, where the Lord had promiſed to meet him and commune with him from off the mercy-ſeat, about any matter of difficulty he ſhould enquire about, Exod. xxv. 22.

℣. 9. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes &c.] From between the cherubim, after he had laid the caſe before him, and he gave him an anſwer: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 10. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, &c.] Not to the men only that came to Moſes for advice, but to the body of the people; for the anſwer of the Lord concerned them all, and carried in it a rule to be obſerved in the like caſe, and others mentioned, in all ſucceeding ages, as long as the paſſover was an ordinance of God: if any man of you; or a man, a man, or any private man; for according to the Jewiſh writers, this law only reſpects private perſons, as thoſe were who were the occaſion of its being made: or of your poſterity; or in your generations [b], or ages; which ſhews that this law reſpected future times, and not the preſent caſe only: ſhall be unclean by reaſon of a dead body; ſee ℣. 6. Maimonides [c] ſays, this only reſpects uncleanneſs by a dead body, and not uncleanneſs by any creeping thing; for ſuch as were unclean by them might ſacrifice, though a private perſon, and eat the paſſover at evening with purity, when he had been cleanſed: yet he ſays elſewhere [d], that ſuch that had iſſues, and menſtruous women, and thoſe that lay with them, and women in childbed, were unclean, and were put off to the ſecond paſſover; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan here adds, "or that has an iſſue, or a leprous perſon:" or be in a journey afar off; which, according to Ben Gerſom, was 15 miles; ſo in the Miſnah [e], and the commentators on it: yet he ſhall keep the paſſover of the Lord; not the firſt but ſecond, according to the directions given in the following verſes.

℣. 11. The fourteenth day of the ſecond month at even they ſhall keep it, &c.] The month Ijar, as the Targum of Jonathan, which anſwers to part of our April and part of May; ſo that there was a month allowed for thoſe that were defiled to cleanſe themſelves; and for thoſe on a journey to return home and prepare for the paſſover, which was not to be totally omitted, nor deferred any longer; and it was to be kept on the ſame day of the month, and at the ſame time of the day the firſt paſſover was obſerved; ſtill the more to keep in mind the ſaving of their firſt-born, and their deliverance out of Egypt at that time: an inſtance of keeping ſuch a paſſover we have in 2 Chron. xxx. 1, 2, &c. and eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs; in the ſame manner as the firſt paſſover was eaten, Exod. xii. 8. only no mention is made of keeping the feaſt of unleavened bread ſeven days, which ſome think thoſe were not obliged unto at this time, only to keep the feaſt of the paſſover.

℣. 12. They ſhall leave none of it unto the morning, &c.] None of the fleſh of the paſſover-lamb, what was left was to be burnt with fire, Exod xii. 10. nor break any bone of it; the ſame was enjoined, Exod. xii. 46. ſee the note there: according to all the ordinances of the paſſover they ſhall keep it; as when obſerved in its time, excepting the feaſt of unleavened bread which followed the firſt paſſover, and thoſe rites which were peculiar to the paſſover, as kept at their firſt coming out of Egypt; as the ſprinkling the blood of the lamb on the door-poſts, eating it in haſte, &c.

℣. 13. But the man that is clean, &c.] Free from any pollution by a dead body, or the like: and is not in a journey; in a diſtant country; for if he was on a journey in his own nation, he ought to return and attend the paſſover, which all the males from the ſeveral parts of the land were obliged unto; wherefore the Vulgate Latin verſion of ℣. 10. is a wrong one; or in a way afar off in your nation; for at whatſoever diſtance they were in their own nation they were bound to appear: and forbeareth to keep the paſſover; the firſt paſſover in the firſt month, the month Niſan, wilfully, through negligence, or not caring to be at the expence and trouble of it, or on any pretence whatſoever: Ben Gerſom interprets it, of one that will not keep neither the firſt nor the ſecond paſſover: even the ſame ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people; either be excommunicated from them, or cut off by death, by the immediate hand of God: becauſe he brought not the offering of the Lord in his appointed ſeaſon: this is the ground and reaſon of the reſentment; it was a breach of the divine command, which required this offering, ingratitude to God being a thank-offering for a ſingular deliverance; and this aggravated by its not being brought at the appointed time, which was the fit time for it: that man ſhall bear his ſin; be chargeable with the guilt of it, and bear the puniſhment of it; he on himſelf, as Aben Ezra notes, he, and he only; not his wife and family, for he being the head and maſter of the family, it lay upon him to provide the paſſover-lamb for himſelf and his houſe.

℣. 14. And if a ſtranger ſhall ſojourn among you, and will keep the paſſover unto the Lord, &c.] Then he muſt become a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, and be circumciſed, or otherwiſe he might not eat of the paſſover, Exod. xii. 48. Ben Gerſom interprets this of the ſecond paſſover, and of a proſelyte that was not obliged to the firſt, he not being then a proſelyte, but became one between the firſt and the ſecond; and ſo Aben Ezra underſtands it of a ſecond paſſover, though he obſerves, that ſome ſay, the firſt is meant: according to the ordinance of the paſſover, and according to the manner thereof, ſo ſhall he do; according to the ſeveral rites and ceremonies, whether of the firſt or ſecond paſſover, that an

[a] Maimon. in Miſn. Peſachim, c. 7. §. 6.
[b] לדרתיכם generationibus veſtris, Pagninus, Montanus; in ætatibus veſtris, Druſius.
[c] In Miſn. ut ſupra, T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 93. 2.
[d] Hilchot Corban Peſach, c. 6. §. 1.
[e] Peſachim, c. 9. §. 2. Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

an Iſraelite was obliged to obſerve, the ſame a proſelyte was to obſerve, and what they were has been already taken notice of: ye ſhall have one ordinance both for the ſtranger, and for him that was born in the land; for a proſelyte and a native of Iſrael; ſee Exod. xii. 49.

℣. 15. And on the day that the tabernacle was reared up, &c.] Which was the firſt day of the firſt month, in the ſecond year of the people of Iſrael's coming out of Egypt, Exod. xl. 1, 2, 17: the cloud covered the tabernacle, namely, the tent of the teſtimony; that part of the tabernacle in which the teſtimony was, that is, where the ark was, in which the law was put, called the teſtimony; and this was the moſt holy place; and over the tent or covering of that was this cloud, which ſettled upon it, as Ben Gerſom thinks, after the ſeven days of the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons; on the 8th day, when it was ſaid unto the people of Iſrael, to day will the Lord appear unto you, Lev. ix. 1, 4. and the glory of the Lord ſhall appear unto you, ℣. 6. and here the Targum of Jonathan calls this cloud, the cloud of glory, becauſe of the glory of God in it; of which ſee Exod. xl. 34—38. and at even there was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire, until the morning; the ſame phænomenon which looked like a cloud in the day-time, appeared like fire in the ſame place in the night-time, throughout the whole of it until morning-light, when it was ſeen as a cloud again: this was a token of the preſence of God with the people of Iſrael, of his protection of them, and being a guide unto them by night and day, whilſt in the wilderneſs; and was a figure of his being the ſame to his church and people, in the preſent ſtate of things; ſee Iſ. iv. 5.

℣. 16. So it was alway, &c.] Night and day, as long as the people of Iſrael were in the wilderneſs, ſee Exod. xiii. 21, 22. Neh. ix. 19. the cloud covered it by day; the phraſe by day, is not in the text, but is eaſily and neceſſarily ſupplied from Exod. xl. 38. and as it is in the Targum of Jonathan, and in the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, and which the following clauſe requires: and the appearance of fire by night; when as a cloud it could not be ſeen, becauſe of the darkneſs of the night; as in the day-time it could not be diſcerned as a body of fire or light, becauſe of the light of the ſun; but being ſeen under theſe different forms, was ſerviceable both by day and night, for the following purpoſes.

℣. 17. And when the cloud was taken up from the tabernacle, &c.] Or went up from it, higher than it was before, yet not out of ſight, but hung as it were hovering in the air over the tabernacle, but at ſome diſtance from it; this was done by the Lord himſelf: then after that the children of Iſrael journeyed; as ſoon as they ſaw the cloud moving upwards, the Levites took down the tabernacle, and each took their poſt aſſigned them in the carriage of it, and the prieſts blew their trumpets mentioned in the next chapter, and the whole camp moved and marched on in their journey: and in the place where the cloud abode, there the children of Iſrael pitched their tents; when it ſtopped and remained without any motion, it was a ſignal to the children of Iſrael to ſtop alſo, and to ſet up the tabernacle, and pitch their tents about it by their ſtandards, and according to the order of encampment which had been given them.

℣. 18. At the commandment of the Lord the children of Iſrael journeyed, &c.] Or mouth of the Lord; not that there was any command in form given, or any audible voice heard, directing when to march; but the removal of the cloud was interpretatively the order and command of God for them to move alſo: and at the commandment of the Lord they pitched; their tents; when the cloud ſtopped, they underſtood that as a ſignal to them, as a token of the will of God that they ſhould ſtop likewiſe; it was to them as an authoritative command which they obeyed: as long as the cloud abode upon the tabernacle, they reſted in their tents; whether a longer or a ſhorter time, as is after expreſſed.

℣. 19. And when the cloud tarried long upon the tabernacle many days, &c.] Or years, for days are ſometimes put for years, and in ſome places the cloud tarried ſeveral years; or however, if it ſtayed but a month or a year in any place, as in ℣. 22. then the children of Iſrael kept the charge of the Lord, and journeyed not; they not only kept watching when it would move, or ſet ſentinels for that purpoſe to obſerve it, but they kept the charge, order, or commandment, which the tarrying of the cloud was a token of, and did not attempt to proceed in their journey until they had an intimation ſo to do by its motion; and all this while, likewiſe the tabernacle being up, they obſerved all the precepts and ordinances of the Lord in the ſervice of it.

℣. 20. And ſo it was, when the cloud was a few days upon the tabernacle, &c.] Or days of number, which were ſo few that they might be eaſily numbered: the Targum of Jonathan interprets them, of the ſeven days of the week, as if the ſenſe was, when the cloud reſted a week on the tabernacle: according to the commandment of the Lord they abode in their tents; during theſe few days, be they a week, or more, or leſs: and according to the commandment of the Lord they journeyed; when it removed from the tabernacle.

℣. 21. And ſo it was when the cloud abode from even unto the morning, &c.] The whole night, during which time they reſted in their beds: and that the cloud was taken up in the morning, then they journeyed; whether at morning or midnight; for ſometimes, as Aben Ezra obſerves, they travelled in the night; whenſoever their ſentinels gave notice that the cloud was taken up, even though at midnight, they aroſe and prepared for their journey; and by this it is evident, that the appearance by day and night was the ſame body called the cloud, though beheld in a different view, in the day-time as a cloud, in the night-time as fire.

℣. 22. Or whether it were two days, or a month, or a year, that the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle, &c.] Sometimes it tarried but half a day, ſometimes a whole day, ſometimes two days, at other times a whole month, and even a year; a full year, as the Targum of Jonathan and Aben Ezra; or a longer time, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, for in one place it tarried eighteen years, as Maimonides ſays [g]; ſome ſay [h] nineteen years, as in Kadeſh Barneah: remaining thereon, the children of Iſrael abode in their tents, and journeyed not; ſo that, as the ſame writer obſerves, it was not becauſe the children of Iſrael loſt their way in the wilderneſs and wandered about, not knowing where they were, or which way they ſhould go; hence the Arabians call the wilderneſs, the wilderneſs of wandering, nor that they were ſo long wandering in it as forty years, but becauſe it was the will of God that they ſhould ſtay ſo long at one place, and ſo long at another, whereby whereby their ſtay in it was protracted to ſuch a length of time, according to his ſovereign will: but when it was taken up they journeyed; though they had continued ever ſo long, and their ſituation ever ſo agreeable.

[g] Moreh Nevoch. par. 3. c. 50. p. 512.

[h] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 8. p. 24.

℣. 23. At the commandment of the Lord they reſted in their tents, &c.] Though ever ſo diſagreeable: and at the commandment of the Lord they journeyed; though the circumſtances might be ſuch, that they could have liked a continuance; but whether agreeable or diſagreeable, they were obedient to the divine will: this, or what is equivalent to it, is frequently obſerved in this paragraph, to ſhew that the Iſraelites, though they were an obſtinate and perverſe people, and muſt in general be deſirous of getting as ſoon as they could into the land of promiſe, yet in this caſe, in all their ſtations and journies, were ſubmiſſive and obedient to the divine will, as all good men ſhould be with reſpect to happineſs; and happy are they who have God to be their guide through it, even unto death: they kept the charge of the Lord, at the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moſes; obſerved the reſt or motion of the cloud, the order and command of God ſignified thereby, as it was made known unto them by the miniſtry and means of Moſes.

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter gives an account of the directions given for making two ſilver trumpets, and of the uſe of them, the ends and purpoſes for which they were to be made, ℣. 1—10. and of the time of taking up of the cloud from the tabernacle, and of the removal of the camp of Iſrael from the wilderneſs of Sinai, and of the order of their march, ℣. 11—28. when Moſes moſt earneſtly preſſed Hobab his brother-in-law to continue with him, ℣. 29—32. and the chapter is cloſed with the prayer of Moſes at the ſetting forward of the ark, and the reſting of it, ℣. 33—36.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] When the following directions concerning the trumpets were given is not certain; it may be at the time when the order of the camps of Iſrael was fixed, and is here recorded before the journeying of them, which was one uſe they were to be put unto, ℣. 2. ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Make thee two trumpets of ſilver, &c.] A metal very valuable and precious, durable, and fit for ſound; only two are ordered, Aaron having but two ſons, Eleazar and Ithamar, who were to blow with them, ℣. 8. for though Moſes's order is, make thee, or for thee, yet not for his own uſe, but for the prieſts to uſe when he ſhould order them: the Targum of Jonathan adds, of what is thine own, as if they were to be made at his own expence; but others ſay, and which is more probable, that they were to be made at the public expence: Joſephus[1] gives a deſcription of them, and ſays, that they were little leſs than a cubit long, the pipe of them narrow, but broader about the mouth to receive the breath, and ended like a bell; they ſeem to be much of the ſhape of our trumpets: theſe trumpets were an emblem of the miniſtry of the goſpel, called the great trumpet, and in the miniſtration of which, the preachers of it are to lift up their voice like a trumpet, to ſhew men their periſhing condition through ſin, and to encourage them as ſuch who are ready to periſh, to come to Chriſt for ſalvation, Iſ. xxvii. 13. and lviii. 1. the goſpel is comparable to ſilver, being fetched out of the mines of the ſacred ſcriptures, pure and free from the droſs of errors and human inventions, will bear to be tried by the ſtandard of the word, and is laſting and durable, yea, the everlaſting goſpel; as well as valuable and precious, containing the unſearchable riches of Chriſt, &c. treaſures of divine truths, comparable to gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones; yea, it is more valuable and precious than ſilver, not to be obtained by that, more profitable and uſeful, more ſatisfying and laſting: the number two, may be applicable to the two diſpenſations, under which the goſpel has been miniſtred, directing to the ſame Saviour, and to the ſame way of ſalvation, by his grace, his blood, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice; and to the two teſtaments, which agree in the ſame truths reſpecting his perſon, offices, obedience, ſufferings, and death; and to the prophets and apoſtles of both diſpenſations and teſtaments, who have united in laying Chriſt as the foundation; and alſo to the two witneſſes that ſtill propheſy in ſackcloth, that is, preach the goſpel and blow the trumpet of it: of an whole piece ſhalt thou make them; of one ſolid maſs of ſilver, beaten with an hammer, as Jarchi, ſuch a piece as the candleſtick was made of in Exod. xxv. 31, where the ſame word is uſed as here, and rendered beaten work: this may denote the pure and unmixed goſpel of Chriſt, having no droſs, nor bad nor baſe metal of human corruptions in it; no jar, diſcord, or contradiction in it, but all in perfect harmony and agreement; and the whole of it, no part of it dropped or concealed; and the miniſtry of it, laboured by thoſe employed in it, who ſtudy to ſhew themſelves workmen that need not be aſhamed: that thou mayeſt uſe them for the calling the aſſembly; the body of the people of Iſrael, either on civil or ſacred accounts, ſee Joel ii. 15, 16. the miniſtry of the goſpel is for the calling and gathering of ſouls to Chriſt, and to his churches; even the remnant of Iſrael, all that are given to Chriſt and redeemed by his blood, whether Jews or Gentiles; theſe are gathered out of the world, which is an act of diſtinguiſhing grace; it is by means of the goſpel-trumpet that they are awakened, and quickened and directed to Chriſt: and for the journeying of the camps; both of the four camps of the Iſraelites, and the camp of the Levites, to direct them when they ſhould ſet forward on a journey: and of like uſe is the miniſtry of the goſpel; ſaints are pilgrims and travellers here; they are paſſing through a wilderneſs, their way is attended with many difficulties; Canaan is the place they are travelling to, and the goſpel is of ſingular uſe to them by the way, both to refreſh them with its joyful ſound, and to direct them in the path in which they ſhould go.

℣. 3. And when they ſhall blow with them, &c.] With both the trumpets, in an even and continued ſound, that is, the ſons of Aaron: all the aſſembly ſhall aſſemble themſelves to thee at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; to hear what was to be ſaid unto them: blowing both the trumpets together was a token that the whole congregation was called to meet together at the tabernacle, the door of

[1] Antiq. l. 3. c. 12. §. 6.

of which was the uſual place of aſſembling; eſpecially on religious accounts, for there alſo the Lord met them, Exod. xxix. 42, 43.

℣. 4. And if they blow but with one trumpet, &c.] With only one of them, or but once, with one ſounding, and that an even one as before: then the princes, which are the heads of the thouſands of Iſrael, ſhall gather themſelves unto thee; and they only or alone, as Aben Ezra: by this token, or by this difference of blowing both trumpets, or only one, it was eaſily known, when the whole congregation or when the princes only were to meet Moſes at the ſame place, the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; and all are to attend divine ſervice, and the miniſtry of the word, even the whole church of God, and all the members of it, high and low, rich and poor, princes and people.

℣. 5. When ye blow an alarm, &c.] Making a broken, uneven, and quavering ſound, which is called a tara-tan-tara: then the camps that lie on the eaſt parts ſhall go forward; the camps of Judah, Iſſachar and Zebulun, which lay to the eaſt of the tabernacle, at the front of it; ſee ch. ii. 3, 5, 7. this was to be the token for their march which was firſt of all; ℣. 14.

℣. 6. When ye blow an alarm the ſecond time, &c.] Another tara-tan-tara: then the camps that lie on the ſouth ſide ſhall take their journey; the camps of Reuben, Simeon and Gad, which were encamped on the ſouth-ſide of the tabernacle, ch. ii. 10, 12, 14. and as Joſephus [k] ſays, at the third ſounding of the alarm, that part of the camp which lay to the weſt moved, which were the camps of Ephraim, Manaſſeh and Benjamin, ch. ii. 18, 20, 22. and at the fourth ſounding, as he ſays, thoſe which were at the north, the camps of Dan, Aſher and Naphtali, ch. ii. 25, 27, 29. which, though not expreſſed in the Hebrew text, are added in the Septuagint verſion, as they are to be underſtood: they ſhall blow an alarm for their journeys; for the journeys of the ſaid camps, as a ſignal or token when they ſhould begin to march.

℣. 7. But when the congregation is to be gathered together, &c.] At the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and not to move in ſeparate camps or bodies one after another: you ſhall blow, but you ſhall not ſound an alarm; blow with an even and uninterrupted ſound, and not with a broken and quavering one; by which the congregation and camps were diſtinguiſhed from one another, the ſame certain ſound being given to each conſtantly, whereby they knew which were called to motion; ſee 1 Cor. xiv. 8. according to Ben Gerſom blowing was a voice drawn out, and joined or continued; an alarm, a voice not joined, but broken.

℣. 8. And the ſons of Aaron the prieſts ſhall blow with the trumpets, &c.] Eleazar and Ithamar, the one with the one and the other with the other, there being at firſt but two, as there were but two prieſts; but in Solomon's time there were 120 prieſts, and as many trumpets, 2 Chron. v. 12. hence Maimonides ſays [l], there were never fewer than two trumpets, nor more than 120: and they ſhall be to you for an ordinance for ever throughout your generations; for they were not only for preſent uſe, for the journeying of the camps in the wilderneſs, but for calling together the aſſembly in after-times, as well as for other uſes next mentioned; which would obtain in future ages till the coming of Chriſt, and even under the goſpel-diſpenſation the myſtical uſe of them continues, the preaching of the everlaſting goſpel.

℣. 9. And when ye go to war in your land againſt the enemy that oppreſſeth you, &c.] That enters in to invade it, to beſiege cities, and diſtreſs the inhabitants of it: then ye ſhall blow an alarm with the trumpets; a tara-tan-tara, with both of them, to call the ſeveral tribes together to join againſt the enemy; or to call them to faſting and humiliation, to repentance and prayer, to ſeek the Lord in the exerciſe of theſe, and cry for help and aſſiſtance, for victory and ſalvation; for, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, by this alarm their hearts would be broken and become contrite, and they would return to the Lord, and he would have mercy on them when they pray unto him; for ſuch a ſound makes a man's heart ſhake and tremble, according to Amos, iii. 6. ſee Jer. iv. 19. this is a third uſe of the trumpets, and in a myſtical ſenſe it may be obſerved, that ſaints are in a militant ſtate, and have many enemies that come in to them to oppreſs them, ſin, ſatan, and the world; and the goſpel calls and encourages them to fight, furniſhes them with armour, and aſſures them of victory, and directs them where to fight and with whom, and bids them endure hardneſs as good ſoldiers of Chriſt: and ye ſhall be remembered before the Lord your God; for a book of remembrance is written for them that fear God, humble themſelves before him, and pray unto him: and ye ſhall be ſaved from your enemies; as Iſrael from their temporal, ſo the people of God from their ſpiritual enemies, being made more than conquerors through him that loved them.

℣. 10. Alſo in the day of your gladneſs, &c.] When they ſhould return from the enemies country conquerors, or have vanquiſhed the enemy that came againſt them into their own land, and ſo would fix a day of rejoicing, like the days of Purim, and the ſeven days when Hezekiah rejoiced, as Aben Ezra obſerves; and ſo any time of rejoicing on account of any extraordinary deliverance and ſalvation: and in your ſolemn days; or feſtivals, as the paſſover, pentecoſt, and tabernacles, which were proclaimed by ſound of trumpet, Lev. xxiii. 2. in the beginnings of your months; their new moons, eſpecially on the firſt day of the ſeventh month, which was a feaſt of blowing of trumpets, Lev. xxiii. 24. ye ſhall blow with the trumpets over your burnt-offerings, and over your peace-offerings; expreſſing joy for the acceptance of them, and eſpecially when they had by faith, a view of the great ſacrifice of Chriſt typified by them: this is a fourth uſe of the trumpets, and may denote the ſpiritual joy had by believers, through the miniſtration of the goſpel, and ordinances of it on the Lord's day, and other ſeaſons, and particularly at the feaſt of the Lord's ſupper, in the view of peace and reconciliation, and atonement made by the ſacrifice of Chriſt: that they may be to you for a memorial before your God; as it were, to put him in mind of the promiſes he has made, and the bleſſings he has laid up as a covenant-God for his people: I am the Lord your God; who had a right to appoint ſuch things to be obſerved by them, and by whom, as their covenant-God, they were laid under obligation to regard them.

℣. 11. And it came to paſs on the 20th day of the 2d month, in the 2d year, &c.] Which was the 20th of the month Iyar, in the 2d year of the coming of the Iſraelites out of Egypt; who, as it appears from hence, compared with Exod. xix. 1. had been

[k] Ut ſupra.

[l] Hilchot Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 3. §. 4.

been in the wilderneſs of Sinai 12 months wanting 10 days; ſo Jarchi and other Jewiſh writers [m], with whom Aben Ezra agrees, who ſays it was near a year: that the cloud was taken up from off the tabernacle of the teſtimony; that part of the tabernacle where the ark of the teſtimony ſtood, even the moſt holy place, over which the cloud was, the token of the divine preſence, and which it covered; but now was taken up from it, and went up higher above it, and was a ſignal for the motion of the camps of Iſrael to ſet forward in their journey towards Canaan's land.

℣. 12. And the children of Iſrael took their journeys out of the wilderneſs of Sinai, &c.] Each of their camps removed from thence, and ſo every one took their journey: and the cloud reſted in the wilderneſs of Paran; which was a ſignal for the camps to reſt and pitch their tents; this was after they had gone three days journey, and were come to Taberah, which, it is probable was in the wilderneſs of Paran; otherwiſe we read of their pitching in the wilderneſs of Paran, after they had been a month at Kibroth-hattaavah, and ſeven days at Hazeroth, ch. xii. 16. ſo they went from one wilderneſs to another; of this wilderneſs ſee the note on Gen. xxi. 21.

℣. 13. And they firſt took their journey according to the commandment of the Lord, &c.] Which was virtually contained in and ſignified by the taking up of the cloud, ſee ch. ix. 18. by the hand of Moſes; by his means and miniſtry, who had informed them, that it was the will of God, that when they ſaw the cloud taken up to ſet forward in their journey, and they were obedient thereunto.

℣. 14. In the firſt place went the ſtandard of the camp of the children of Judah, &c.] Which tribe had the honour to go foremoſt and lead the van, the chief ruler, the Meſſiah being to come of it, as he did; who is king of Iſrael, and has gone forth at the head of them, fighting their battles for them: according to their armies; having, beſides the army of the tribe of Judah, the armies of the tribes of Iſſachar and Zebulun, under his ſtandard: and over his hoſt was Nahſhon the ſon of Amminadab; he was captain-general of the army of the tribe of Judah, as Nathaneel was over the hoſt of the tribe of Iſſachar, ℣. 15. and Eliab over the hoſt of the tribe of Zebulun, ℣. 16. the ſame commanders as were fixed at the time of ſettling the order of their encampment, ch. ii. 3, 5, 7.

℣. 17. And the tabernacle was taken down, &c.] by the Levites, as Aben Ezra, and which appears to be their work, from ch. i. 51. this began to be done by them as ſoon as the cloud was perceived to move upwards, and the camp of Judah was preparing to march; and after Aaron and his ſons had taken the holy veſſels out of the holy and moſt holy place, and had packed up and covered them as directed ch. iv. 5—15. this was an emblem of the taking down of the Jewiſh church-ſtate, the abolition of the ſervice of the ſanctuary, as well as of the changeable condition of the goſpel-church in the wilderneſs, which is not always in one and the ſame place, but is moved from place to place, and that by the miniſters of the word, ſignified by the Levites, who are ſent and carry the goſpel here and there: and the ſons of Gerſhon and the ſons of Merari ſet forward, bearing the tabernacle; the former, the hangings and vail, and the latter, the boards, pillars, ſockets, &c. each of them having waggons for their aſſiſtance: theſe followed immediately after the camp of Judah; next proceeded the ſtandard of Reuben, ℣. 18, 19, 20. having under it the tribes of Simeon and Gad, over which reſpective armies were the ſame captains as in ch. ii. 10, 12, 14. as Reuben ſignifies, behold the ſon, and he had the tabernacle borne before him and the holy things behind him, which way ſoever this camp looked, it had in view what was a type of Chriſt the ſon of God, the object of faith, the ark.

℣. 21. And the Kohathites ſet forward, &c.] After the ſtandard of the camps of Reuben, and between that and the ſtandard of the camp of Ephraim, to which there is an alluſion in Pſ. lxxx. 2. bearing the ſanctuary, or the holy things, as Jarchi, the ark, as Aben Ezra, though not that only which indeed might be eminently called ſo, it ſtanding in the moſt holy place, over which were the mercy-ſeat and cherubim, the reſidence of the divine majeſty; but all the holy things in the holy place, the candleſtick, ſhew-bread-table, and the two altars, the altar of incenſe in the holy place, and the altar of burnt offerings in the court; theſe they bore on their ſhoulders, and had no waggons allowed for their aſſiſtance: and the other did ſet up the tabernacle againſt they came; that is, the ſons of Gerſhon and Merari, who went before between the ſtandard of Judah and the ſtandard of Reuben, carrying the heavier and more cumberſome parts of the tabernacle; which, when Judah pitched their tents, at the ſignal of the cloud, they immediately put together, and erected, and got it ready, by ſuch time as the Kohathites came up to them, that ſo the ark and the other holy things might be at once put into it, and ſet in their proper places: next followed the ſtandard of the camp of Ephraim, under which were Manaſſeh and Benjamin, ℣. 22, 23, 24. over whom were the ſame captains, as in ch. ii. 18, 20, 22.

℣. 25. And the ſtandard of the camp of the children of Dan ſet forward, &c.] Next after that of Ephraim, the laſt of all: which was the rereward of all the camps throughout their hoſt; which brought up the rear, and was fitteſt for that purpoſe, being the moſt numerous, next to that of Judah, which led the van; or the gatherer up of all the camps [n], under which were collected and brought on all that belonged to the other tribes; as all under twenty years of age, which were not taken into the camps, and the women and children, and weak and ſickly perſons, the mixt multitude, and all ſtragglers; theſe were all under the care and charge of this camp, and under the ſtandard of which were Aſher and Naphtali, ℣. 26, 27. over whom were the ſame captains as in ch. ii. 25, 27, 29.

℣. 28. Thus were the journeyings of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Or this was the order of them, as Jarchi; in this form and manner they marched, and a moſt wiſe, beautiful, and regular order it was; firſt the ſtandard of Judah, a camp conſiſting of 186,400 able men fit for war, then followed the Gerſhonites and Merarites with ſix waggons carrying the heavier parts of the tabernacle; next to them the ſtandard of the camp of Reuben, having in it 151,450 warlike men; next to them were the Kohathites, bearing the holy things of the ſanctuary on their ſhoulders, who were followed by the ſtandard of the camp of Ephraim, which was formed of 108100 men fit for military ſervice; and laſt of all the ſtandard of the camp

[m] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 8. p. 23. Abarbinel, &c.

[n] מאסף לכל המחנות colligens omnia caſtra, Montanus, Druſius; vel collector omnium caſtrorum, Fagius, Vatablus; colligens omnia agmina, Tigurine verſion, Munſter.

camp of Dan, which consisted of 157600 men, able to bear arms, and which had under their care all that were not able, which belonged to the other tribes; an emblem of the church of God in its militant state, walking according to the order of the gospel, and in all the ordinances of it, which is a lovely sight to behold, Cant. vi. 4. Is. lviii. 8. Col. ii. 5. thus they marched according to their armies; ranged under their several standards: when they set forward; in their journey through the wilderness; as now, so at all other times, this order was carefully observed by them.

℣. 29. And Moses said unto Hobab, the son of Raguel the Midianite, Moses's father-in-law, &c.] Some think this Hobab was the same with Jethro, whose father's name was Raguel or Reuel; so Jarchi and Ben Gersom; but rather Raguel or Reuel, and Jthro seem to be the same, and was Moses's father-in-law, and this Hobab was the son of him, and brother of Zipporah, Moses's wife; and the same relation is designed, whether the word is rendered his father-in-law or his wife's brother, so Aben Ezra; as it may be either; if the former, then it may be joined to Raguel, if the latter, then to Hobab: Jethro or Raguel, Moses's father-in-law, came to see him as soon as he came to Horeb, and after some short stay with him returned to Midian, and left this his son Hobab, who remained with Moses unto this time; but now, as Israel was about to remove from the wilderness of Sinai, he shewed a disposition to return to his own country, when Moses addressed him in order to persuade him to continue with them: we are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said, I will give it you; that is, the land of Canaan, which God had promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and to their posterity: Moses puts himself among the children of Israel as journeying towards Canaan, with an expectation to possess it; for as yet the decree, as Jarchi observes, was not made, or made manifest, that he should not enter it; or he said this, as others think, because he would not discourage the Israelites nor Hobab, who might argue from thence, that if he, by whom God had brought Israel out of Egypt, and had done such wonders by him, should not enter into the good land, how should they? but as yet Moses himself knew not that he should not enter into it; however, he speaks of it as a certain thing, that God had promised to give it to Israel, and it might be depended upon; and now they were just going to set forward in their journey, in order to take possession of it, he intreats that Hobab would go with them: come thou with us and we will do thee good; by giving him a part of the spoils of their enemies, and a settlement in the land: for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel; and he is faithful, who has promised and will perform.

℣. 30. And he said unto him, I will not go, &c.] Which was a very peremptory answer, he seemed determined, and at a point about it for the present, though it is probable he afterwards changed his mind, like the young man in the parable, Matt. xxi. 29. but I will depart to mine own land, and to my kindred; which were prevailing motives with him, his native country, his relations, and father's house; to this resolution he came, both because of his substance, and because of his family, as Jarchi.

℣. 31. And he said, &c.] That is, Moses, he replied to Hobab, unwilling to take him at his word and go without him: leave us not, I pray thee; or not now, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; at this present time, under our present difficulties, whilst we are in the wilderness; though Jarchi says, the particle נא signifies beseeching or supplication: forasmuch as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness; that this will be our case, that we shall be obliged before we get to the promised land, to pitch our tents in the wilderness, in our passage through it; and thou knowest which are the best and most convenient places for that purpose, and therefore must intreat thee to go with us: and thou mayest be to us instead of eyes; not to shew the way, as Aben Ezra notes, or guide and direct them in the road through the wilderness; for the cloud by day and the fire by night were of that use to them, as well as when it rested, it directed them when and where to pitch their tents; rather to assist with his advice in difficult matters, when they should be in pressing circumstances: the Targum of Jonathan is, "thou hast been dear unto us, as the apple of our eyes, and therefore we cannot part with thee."

℣. 32. And it shall be, if thou go with us, yea it shall be, &c.] This repetition is for the confirmation of it, more strongly assuring him of what follows: that what goodness the Lord shall do unto us, the same will we do unto thee; signifying that whatsoever they enjoyed in the land of Canaan he should have his share with them: the Targum of Jonathan adds, "in the division of the land;" Jarchi says, when the land was divided, the fatness of Jericho was given to the sons of Jethro, to Jonadab the son of Rechab, see Judg. i. 16. from whence however, as well as from other places, Judg. iv. 11, 17. 1 Sam. xv. 6. it appears that the posterity of this man had a settlement in the land of Canaan, and from his silence it may be thought that he was prevailed upon to go along with Moses; or if he departed into his own country, as he said he would, he returned again; at least some of his children did.

℣. 33. And they departed from the mount of the Lord three days journey, &c.] From mount Sinai, so called, because the Lord descended upon it, and gave the law from it; so the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, "from the mount on which the "glory of the Lord (or of his Shekinah or divine "majesty) was revealed." This they left, after they had been near twelve months about it, and travelled three days journey from it before the cloud rested, so as to abide, otherwise it stopped no doubt to give them time to eat their food, and take sleep and rest. The Targum of Jonathan expressly says, they went 36 miles on that day; but according to Bunting [•], Taberah or Kibroth-hattaavah, to which the children Israel first came, and where they abode a month, was but eight miles from Sinai; wherefore the three days journey were not successively one after another, but the first day's journey was to Taberah, where they continued a month; the second day's journey was to Hazeroth, where they stayed seven days; and the third day's journey was to the wilderness of Paran, and there the cloud rested, ℣. 12. and there was their resting-place, for there they continued long, from whence the spies were sent to the good land, and whither they returned after forty days, ch. xiii: and the ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them in the three days journey, to search out a resting-place for them; the ark being carried by the Kohathites, must proceed in the middle of the camps, after the • Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 82.

the camps of Judah and Reuben, and before the camps of Ephraim and Dan, according to the order of the marches of the children of Israel, ℣. 21. wherefore Aben Ezra thinks, that this three days journey was different from all their other journeys; and that in this the ark went before them, which in other journeys was carried in the midst of them; yet others think it may be said to go before, tho' in the middle; just as a general of an army may be said to go before, and lead his army, though he is not directly in the front of it; so the cloud being always over the ark, directing the march, it may be said to go before and point out a convenient place to rest in; for searching can't be properly ascribed to the ark, nor even to the Lord himself, and can only signify pointing out or discovering a proper place to take up their abode in: this ark of the covenant, so called, because the covenant or law was laid up in it, was a type of Christ the end of the law for righteousness, and who is the forerunner of his people, is gone before them to prepare a place for them; and the three days journey may have respect to his resurrection from the dead on the third day for their justification, which is the foundation of their rest, peace and joy.

℣. 34. And the cloud of the Lord was upon them by day, &c.] Not only upon the tabernacle, and upon the ark particularly, but it spread itself in journeying over the whole body of the people, and therefore said to be a covering to them from the heat of the sun, Ps. cv. 39. as well as it was a guide unto them, and a token of the divine presence with them, see Is. iv. 5: when they went out of the camp; or out of the place of their encampment, when they removed from Sinai; and it appears from hence, that it was in the day-time.

℣. 35. And it came to pass when the ark set forward, &c.] Carried by the Kohathites, v. 21. that Moses said; in prayer, as both the Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem express it; and it was a prayer of faith, and prophetical of what would be done, and might serve greatly to encourage and animate the children of Israel in their journeys; for the following prayer was put up not only at this time, but at all times when the ark set forward; and so Ben Gersom says, it was the custom of Moses at whatsoever time the ark was moved, to pray as follows: rise up, Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered; the Jerusalem Targum is, "rise "up now, O Word of the Lord;" and the Targum of Jonathan, "be revealed now, O Word of "the Lord;" the essential Word of God, the Messiah, to whom these words may be applied; either to his incarnation and manifestation in the flesh, his end in which was to destroy all his and his peoples enemies, particularly the devil and his works, Heb. ii. 14, 15. 1 John iii. 8. or to his resurrection from the dead, these words standing at the head of a prophecy of his ascension to heaven, which supposes his resurrection from the dead, Ps. lxviii. 1, 18. at the death of Christ all the spiritual enemies of his people were defeated, scattered, confounded and conquered; satan and his principalities were spoiled, sin was made an end of, death was abolished, and the world overcome; at his resurrection the keepers of the sepulchre fled; and after his ascension wrath came upon the Jewish nation, those enemies of his, that would not have him to rule over them, and they were scattered about on the face of the whole earth, as they are to this day: and let them that hate thee, flee before thee; the same petition expressed in different words, but to the same sense; enemies, and those that hate the Lord, are the same, as their defeat, confusion and destruction are signified by their flight and dispersion; and it may be observed, that those who were the enemies and haters of Israel were reckoned the enemies and haters of God himself; as the enemies of Christ's people, and those that hate them are accounted Christ's enemies, and such that hate him. Perhaps Moses may have a special respect to the Canaanites, whose land was promised unto Israel, and they were going to dispossess them of it, in order to inherit it, and Moses might expect it would be quickly done, at the end of these three days; which brought them to the wilderness of Paran, so near the good land that they sent from thence spies into it, and in all probability they would have then entered the possession of it, had it not been for their complaints and murmurs, and the ill report brought on the good land, on which account they were stopped 38 years in the wilderness.

℣. 36. And when it passed, &c.] The ark, and the cloud over it: he said; Moses stood and prayed, as before, according to the above Targums, in the following manner: return, O Lord, unto the many thousands of Israel; who were six hundred thousand footmen, besides women and children, ch. xii. 21. the import of this petition is, that upon the resting of the ark God would take up his abode with them, grant them his presence, and manifest his love, grace, mercy and goodness unto them; or, as it may be rendered, that he would return the many thousands of Israel; that is, to the land which he had sworn to their fathers, as Ben Gersom interprets it; and who observes that the word return is used, because of the holy fathers who dwelt in the land of Israel; or else, as the same writer further observes, the sense of the petition is, that it might be the will of God to turn the thousands of Israel into myriads, or increase and multiply them ten times more than they were; and so the Targum of Jerusalem is, "bless the myriads, "and multiply the thousands of the children of "Israel." Perhaps Moses, under a spirit of prophecy, might have a farther view, even to the conversion of the Jews in the latter day, when they shall return and seek the true Messiah, and be turned to him, and when all Israel shall be saved.

CHAP.

CHAP. XI.

THIS chapter informs us of the complaints of the people of Iſrael, which brought the fire of the Lord upon them, and conſumed many of them; and which, at the interceſſion of Moſes, was quenched, and the place from thence called Taberah, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and of the luſting of the mixt multitude after fleſh, to increaſe which, they called to mind their food in Egypt; and to ſhew their folly and ingratitude in ſo doing, the manna is deſcribed, ℣. 4—9. and of the uneaſineſs of Moſes, and his complaints of the heavy burden of the people upon him, ℣. 10—15. and to make him eaſy, it is promiſed, that ſeventy of the elders of Iſrael ſhould partake of his ſpirit, and aſſiſt in bearing the burden, ℣. 16, 17. and that the people ſhould have fleſh to ſerve them a whole month, ℣. 18—20. at which laſt Moſes expreſſed ſome degree of unbelief, ℣. 21—23. however God fulfilled his promiſe with reſpect to both. Some of the ſpirit of Moſes was taken and given to ſeventy elders, who propheſied, and two men are particularly taken notice of, who did ſo, ℣. 24—30. quails in great numbers were brought by a wind to the people; but whilſt they were eating them wrath came upon them, and they were ſmitten with a plague, whence the place was called Kibroth-hattaavah, ℣. 31—34. and from thence they removed to Hazeroth, ℣. 35.

℣. 1. And when the people complained, &c.] Or were as complainers [p]; not merely like to ſuch, but were truly and really complainers, the כ Caph here being not a note of ſimilitude, but of truth and reality, as in Hoſ. v. 10. This Hebraiſm is frequent in the New Teſtament, Matt. xiv. 5. John i. 14. Phil. ii. 7. What they complained of is not ſaid, it being that for which there was no foundation; it is generally ſuppoſed to be of their journey; but if they were come but eight miles, as obſerved on ch. x. 33. they could not be very weary; and eſpecially as they were marching towards the land of Canaan, it might be thought they would be fond and eager of their journey. Some think it was for want of fleſh, being weary of manna, and that this was only the beginning of their complaints on that head, which opened more afterwards; but if that is the caſe, one would think that the fire, which conſumed many of them, would have put a ſtop to that. Jarchi ſays, the word ſignifies taking an occaſion, and that the ſenſe is, that theſe men ſought an occaſion how to ſeparate from the Lord; they wanted to return to Egypt again, that was what they were meditating and contriving; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "and the ungodly of the "people were in diſtreſs, and intended and medi"tated evil before the Lord:" it diſpleaſed the Lord; a murmuring, complaining ſpirit is always diſpleaſing to him, when a thankful heart for mercies received is an acceptable ſacrifice; murmurers and complainers God will judge at the great day, Jude, ℣. 14, 15, 16. and the Lord heard it: though it was an inward ſecret complaint, or an evil ſcheme formed in their minds; at moſt but a muttering, and what Moſes had not heard, or had any knowledge of; but God, that knows the ſecrets of all hearts, and every word in the tongue before it is well formed or pronounced, he heard what they complained of, and what they whiſpered and muttered to one another about: and the fire of the Lord burnt among them; from the pillar of fire, or from heaven, ſuch as deſtroyed Nadab and Abihu, the 250 men that had cenſers in Korah's company, and the captains of fifties that came to take Elijah; and might be lightening from heaven, or a burning wind ſent by the Lord, ſuch as is frequent in the eaſtern countries. Thevenot [q] ſpeaks of one in 1658. which deſtroyed at once 20,000 men: and conſumed them that were in the uttermoſt parts of the camp; who very likely were the principal aggreſſors; or it began to arouſe and terrify the body of the people, and bring them to repentance, who might fear it would proceed and go through the whole camp, the hinder part, or rereward of which was the camp of Dan; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan.

℣. 2. And the people cried unto Moſes, &c.] And intreated him to pray for them, being frighted at the fire which conſumed many of them, leſt it ſhould ſpread and become general among them: and when Moſes prayed unto the Lord; as he did, in which he was a type of Chriſt, the mediator between God and man, the advocate of his people, an interceſſor fo tranſgreſſors: the fire was quenched; it ſtopped and proceeded no further; as through Chriſt's mediation God is pacified with his people, for all that they have done, and his wrath, and all the effects of it are turned away from them, and entirely ceaſe with reſpect to them; or it ſunk down [r] into its place, as the Targum of Jonathan, as if it roſe out of the earth. This may ſerve to confirm the notion of its being a burning wind, to which the idea of ſinking down, and ſubſiding well agrees.

℣. 3. And he called the name of the place Taberah, &c.] That is, burning; Moſes called it ſo; or it may be rendered imperſonally, it was called [s] ſo in after-times by the people: becauſe the fire of the Lord burnt among them; to perpetuate the memory of this kind of puniſhment for their ſins, that it might be a terror and warning to others; and this hiſtory is indeed recorded for our caution in theſe laſt days, that we murmur not as theſe Iſraelites did, and were deſtroyed of the deſtroyer, 1 Cor. x. 10, 11.

℣. 4. And the mixt multitude that was among them fell a luſting, &c.] Theſe came out of Egypt with them, Exod. xii. 38. having either contracted affinity with them, or ſuch intimacy of converſation, that they could not part, or being proſelyted to the Jewiſh religion, at leaſt in pretence; theſe were not only Egyptians, but a mixture of divers people, who having heard or ſeen the wonderful things done for Iſrael, joined them in hopes of ſharing the bleſſings of divine goodneſs with them; ſo the Targum of Jonathan calls them proſelytes, that were gathered among them: theſe luſted a luſting [t], as the words may be rendered; not after women, as ſome Jewiſh writers [u] think, even after ſuch that were were near akin to them, with whom they were forbidden to marry, and therefore desired to have those laws dissolved; but they lusted after eating flesh taken in a proper sense, as the latter part of the verse, and the whole context shew: and the children of Israel also wept again; they lusted after flesh likewise, following the example of the mixt multitude; thus evil communication corrupts good manners, and a little leaven leavens the whole lump; wicked men prove great snares to, and do much mischief among good men, when they get into their societies: and because the Israelites could not have what they would to gratify their lusts, they wept as children do, when they can't have what they are desirous of; and they wept again, for it seems they had wept before, either when they complained, ℣. 1. or at Rephidim, where they wanted water, as here flesh, or before that when they wanted bread, Exod. xvi. and xvii: and said, who shall give us flesh to eat? shall Moses, or even the Lord himself? from lusting they fell to unbelief and distrust of the power and providence of God; for so the Psalmist interprets this saying of theirs, Ps. lxxviii. 19, 20.

[p] כמתאננים ut conquerentes injuſte, Montanus, Fagius, Vatablus; ut qui vana moliuntur, Druſius. [q] Travels, par. 1. l. 2. c. 34. [r] תשקע ſunk down, ſo Ainſworth; compreſſus eſt, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius; reſedit, Tigurine verſion. [s] ויקרא & vocatum eſt, Tigurine verſion, Fagius, Piſcator. [t] התאוו תאוה concupiverunt concupiſcentiam, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius. [u] Bemidbar Rabba, §. 15. fol. 219. 1.

℣. 5. We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely, &c.] Fish was food the Egyptians much lived upon; for though Herodotus says, the priests might not taste of fish, the common people eat much; yea, he himself says, that some lived upon nothing else but fish gutted and dried in the sun; and he observes, that the kings of Egypt had a great revenue from hence [w]; the river Nile, as Diodorus Siculus [x] says, abounded with all kind of fish, and with an incredible number, so that there was a plenty of them, and to be bought cheap; and so Aben Ezra and Ben Gersom interpret the word freely, of a small price, as if they had them for nothing almost; but surely they forgot how dear they paid for their fish, by their hard toil, labour and service. Now this, with what follows, they call to mind to increase their lust, and aggravate their present condition and circumstances: the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlick; in the Hebrew language, the word for cucumbers has the signification of hardness, because they are hard of digestion. In the Talmud [y] they are so called, because they are as hurtful to the body as swords; though it is said in the same, that Antoninus always had them at his table; and Suetonius [z] and Pliny [a] say, that they were in great esteem with the emperors Augustus and Tiberius; though some think what they call cucumbers were melons. We are told [b], that the Egyptian cucumbers are very different from our European ones, which in the eastern countries serve only to feed hogs with, and not men; but the Egyptian cucumber, called chate, differs from the common one in bigness, colour and softness; and not only its leaves, but its fruit, are different from ours, being sweeter to the taste, and of more easy digestion, and reckoned to be very wholesome to the bodies of men: and so their melons are different from ours, which they call abdellavi, to distinguish them from others called chajar, which are of little use for food, and not pleasant, and more insipid, and of a softer pulp [c]: as for the leeks, onions and garlick, that these were commonly, and in great plenty eat of by the Egyptians, appears from the vast sums of money spent upon the men that worked in building one of the pyramids, in radishes, onions and garlick only, which Herodotus [d], Diodorus Siculus [e] and Pliny [f] make mention of. Indeed, in after-times these were worshipped as gods, and not suffered to be eaten, as Pliny [g] and Juvenal [h] inform us; but there is little reason to believe, that this kind of idolatry obtained so early as the time of Israel's being in Egypt; though some have thought that these were cheaper because of that, and so the Israelites could more easily come at them; but if that had been the case, it is more reasonable to believe that the Egyptians would not have allowed them to have eat of them at all: however, these are still in great plenty, and much used in Egypt to this day, as Vansleb [i] relates, who says, for deserts they have fruits, as onions, dried dates, rotten olives, melons, or cucumbers, or pompions, or such like fruits as are in season: thus carnal men prefer their sensual lusts and pleasures, and self-righteous men their righteousness, to Christ, the heavenly manna, his grace and righteousness.

℣. 6. But now our soul is dried away, &c.] Meaning their bodies, which for want of flesh-food, they pretended had no moisture in them, or they were half starved, and in wasting and consuming circumstances: there is nothing at all besides this manna before our eyes; which in itself was a truth and matter of fact; they had nothing to look to, and live upon but the manna, and that was enough, and with which, no doubt, many of them were contented, and satisfied, and thankful for it, though the greater part were not; and therefore this, tho' a truth, was foolishly and wickedly spoken, being said in disdain and contempt of the manna: so Christ, the heavenly manna, the antitype of this, of which see the notes on Exod. xvi. is indeed the only food that is set before us in the gospel to feed and live upon; nor is there any thing at all besides him, nor do true believers in him desire any other, but pray that evermore this bread may be given them; but carnal men, and carnal professors, slight the gospel-feast, of which Christ is the sum and substance; and at least would have something besides him, something along with him, something of their own to qualify for him, or to give them a right unto him, or to trust in along with him; they cannot bear to have nothing at all but Christ; or that he, and he alone, should be exalted, and be all in all, as he is justification and salvation, and in the gospel-provision, in which nothing is set before us but him.

℣. 7. And the manna was as coriander seed, &c.] Not in colour, for that is black or darkish, whereas the manna was white, as is generally observed; of which see more in the note on Exod. xvi. 31. however it might be like the coriander, because of its form and figure, being round, and because of its quantity, being small, Exod. xvi. 14. Some think the mustard-seed is meant, as Aben Ezra observes, which is the least of all seeds; it seems that the manna fell in small round grains, like to such seed. This, with what follows, is observed, to expose the folly and ingratitude of the Israelites, that having such bread from heaven, angels food, that they should slight it, and hanker after other food: and the colour thereof as the colour of bdellium; not an aromatic gum, which Pliny [k] speaks of, which is clear as wax, for that is black or blackish, and not white as the manna; besides, this should be read, not bdellium, bdellium, but bdeloah, and is a precious ſtone, and, according to Bochart, the pearl; ſo Ben Melech obſerves, that it is a precious ſtone; ſome ſay the diamond, and others a round white ſtone, which they bore and join ſtones together, and make a chain of, he doubtleſs means a pearl-necklace; though Jarchi ſays it is the cryſtal, and ſo the Jewiſh writers commonly; ſee the note on Gen. ii. 12. hence it appears the manna was very pleaſant to look at, being of a round form, and of a pearl or cryſtal colour.

2

[w] Euterpe, sive, l. 2. c. 37, 92, 149. [x] Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 32. [y] T. Bab. Avodah Zarah, fol. 11. 1.
[z] In Vit. August. c. 77. [a] Nat. Hist. l. 19. c. 5. [b] Alpinus de Plant. Ægypt. l. 1. p. 114. apud Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 3. p. 369. [c] Alpinus ib. [d] Ut supra, c. 125. [e] Ut supra, p. 58. [f] Nat. Hist. l. 36. c. 12. [g] Ib. l. 19. c. 6. [h] Porrum & cœpe nefas violare, &c. Satyr. 15. [i] Relation of a Voyage to Egypt, p. 186. [k] L. 12. c. 9.

℣. 8. And the people went about and gathered it, &c.] Went about the camp on all ſides where it fell in plenty; this they did every morning, and this was all the trouble they were at; they had it for gathering, without any expence to them: and ground it in mills; in hand-mills, as Aben Ezra; for though it melted through the heat of the ſun, and became a liquid, yet when gathered in the morning, it was hard like grains of corn, or other ſeeds, and required to be ground in mills: or beat it in a mortar; with a peſtle, as ſpices are beaten and bruiſed: and baked it in pans; or rather boiled it in a pot, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, ſince it follows: and made cakes of it; which were baked on the hearth; all which may denote the ſufferings of Chriſt, who was beaten, and bruiſed, and broken, that he might become fit food for faith, Iſ. liii. 4, 5, 10: and the taſte of it was as the taſte of freſh oil; which is very grateful and pleaſant, as well as very fattening and nouriſhing; ſo that the Iſraelites had no reaſon to complain of their being dried away by continual eating of it; ſee the note on Exod. xvi. 31.

℣. 9. And when the dew fell upon the camp in the night, &c.] As it uſually, and even conſtantly did: the manna fell upon it; as conſtantly, and had thereby a clean place to fall on; and then another dew fell upon that, which kept it the cleaner ſtill, and from any vermin creeping upon it; ſee Exod. xvi. 14. ſo careful was the Lord of this their proviſion, and ſo conſtantly every morning were they ſupplied with it; and which fell in the night when they were aſleep, and at reſt, and without any labour of theirs; and was ready prepared to their hands when they aroſe, and had nothing to do but gather it; and yet were ſo ungrateful as to make light of it, and deſpiſe it.

℣. 10. Then Moſes heard the people weep throughout their families, &c.] So general was their luſting after fleſh, and their diſcontent for want of it; and ſo great their diſtreſs and uneaſineſs about it, that they wept and cried for it, and ſo loud and clamorous, that Moſes heard the noiſe and outcry they made: every man in the door of his tent; openly and publickly, were not aſhamed of their evil and unbecoming behaviour, and in order to excite and encourage the like temper and diſpoſition in others; though it may have reſpect, as ſome have obſerved, to the door of the tent of Moſes, about which they gathered and mutinied; and which better accounts for his hearing the general cry they made; and ſo in an ancient writing of the Jews it is ſaid [1], they were waiting for Moſes until he came out at the door of the ſchool; and they were ſitting and murmuring: and the anger of the Lord was kindled greatly; becauſe of their ingratitude to him, their contempt of the manna he had provided for them, and their hankering after their poor fare in Egypt, and for which they had endured ſo much hardſhip and ill uſage, and for the noiſe and clamour they now made: Moſes alſo was diſpleaſed; with the people on the ſame account, and with the Lord alſo for laying and continuing ſo great a burden upon him, as the care of this people, which appears by what follows.

℣. 11. And Moſes ſaid unto the Lord, wherefore haſt thou afflicted thy ſervant, &c.] Or done evil [m] to him, that which was diſtreſſing to him, and gave him trouble; namely, ſetting him at the head of the people of Iſrael, and laying the government of them on his ſhoulders; which ſurely was doing him honour, though that is not to be expected without care and trouble; Moſes does not ſeem to be in a good frame of ſpirit throughout the whole of this diſcourſe with the Lord: the beſt of men are not always alike in their frames, and ſometimes act contrary to that for which they are the moſt eminent, as Moſes was for his meekneſs and humility: and wherefore have I not found favour in thy ſight; he had found much favour in the ſight of God, to have ſo many wonderful things done by him in Egypt, to be the inſtrument of the deliverance of Iſrael from thence, to be the leader of them through the Red-ſea, to be taken up to the mount with God, and receive the law from him to give to that people; but the favour he complains of that was denied him, is, his not being excuſed when he deſired it, from taking on him the office he was called unto, of being the deliverer and ruler of the people, Exod. iv. 10, 11, 12, 13. that thou layeſt the burden of all this people upon me? with reſpect to matters heavier and more difficult; for as to lighter and leſſer things, he was aſſiſted and relieved in by the officers placed over the ſeveral diviſions of the people at the advice of Jethro, Exod. xviii. government is a burdenſome thing, and eſpecially when a people are prone to mutiny and rebellion, as the people of Iſrael were.

℣. 12. Have I conceived all this people? have I begotten them? &c.] Conceived them as a mother, or begotten them as a father? am I a parent of either part to them, in a literal ſenſe, that I ſhould have the like care of them as parents of their children? but though this was not the caſe, yet in a civil and political ſenſe, he was their parent, as every king and governor of a country is, or ſhould be the father of it, and ſhould have a paternal affection for his ſubjects, and a tender care of them, and a hearty concern for their good and welfare: this, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, may denote the weakneſs of the law of Moſes, as Ainſworth obſerves, which has no concern in the regeneration of the ſpiritual Iſrael of God; who are born not of blood, nor of the will of men, nor of the will of the fleſh, but of God; he only does and can regenerate men by his Spirit and grace; and though miniſters of the word are inſtruments, yet it is not through the law, but through the goſpel that they beget ſouls to Chriſt, even by the Word of truth, the goſpel of ſalvation, by that Word which lives and abides for ever; it is not through the doctrine of the law but through the doctrine of faith, that the Spirit as a ſpirit of regeneration and ſanctification, is received; faith, hope, and love, and every other grace come the ſame way; ſee 1 Cor. iv. 15. 1 Pet. i. 23. Jam. i. 18. Gal. iii. 2. that thou ſhouldeſt ſay unto me; as in Exod. xxxii. 34. go lead the people unto the place, &c. which words Jarchi thinks, are here referred to: carry them in thy boſom, as a nurſing-father beareth the ſucking child, unto the land which thou ſwareſt to their fathers? the land of Canaan: kings ſhould be nurſing fathers; civil governors ſhould rule with gentleneſs and mildneſs; ſuch ſuch are moſt beloved, and moſt chearfully obeyed by their people: the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem interpret the word for nurſing father, by Pædagogue, which is the ſame word the apoſtle uſes of the law, Gal. iii. 24. that indeed was a ſevere ſchoolmaſter, that menaced, whipped, and ſcourged for every fault, and not a tender, nurſing father; there is not one kind, tender word in the law; it accuſes of ſin, pronounces guilty of it, curſes and condemns for it; but the goſpel-miniſtry, and miniſters of it uſe men gently; the apoſtles of Chriſt were gentle, as a nurſe cheriſheth her children, 1 Theſſ. ii. 7, 8. fed men as they were able to bear it; and when they delivered out their charges, it was in a kind manner, and even their reproofs were in love; and eſpecially Chriſt himſelf was ſo, by whoſe meekneſs and gentleneſs the apoſtle Paul beſeeches men, 2 Cor. x. 1. who gathers the lambs in his arms, carries them in his boſom, and gently leads thoſe that are with young; and ſupplies them with food, and brings them all ſafely to Canaan's land, the heavenly glory, where the law and the deeds of it will never bring men, Iſ. xl. 11.

[1] Siphri apud Yalkut in loc.

[m] הרעת malefeciſti, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius.

℣. 13. Whence ſhould I have fleſh to give unto all this people? &c.] This ſeems to countenance the Iſraelites in their luſting after fleſh, as if it was no evil in them, and as if it was but right they ſhould have what they deſired, though it was out of his power to give it them: for they weep unto me, ſaying, give us fleſh, that we may eat; he ſeems to pity them, whereas he ought to have reproved them for their murmurings and ingratitude, and put them in mind of the manna which was provided for them every day, and with which they ought to have been content.

℣. 14. I am not able to bear all this people alone, &c.] The burden of government of them, to take care of them and provide ſuſtenance for them; but he was not alone, for not to take notice of the rulers and officers in the ſeveral diviſions of the people that aſſiſted and eaſed him in lighter matters, adviſed to by Jethro, the Lord himſelf was with him in all matters of moment and difficulty; to whom he could apply at any time for advice, and who had promiſed to ſupply and did ſupply the people with ſuitable and proper proviſions every day: becauſe it is too heavy for me; to anſwer the requeſts, redreſs the grievances, and ſupply the neceſſities of this people.

℣. 15. And if thou deal thus with me, &c.] Let the whole weight of government lie upon me, and leave me alone to bear it: kill me, I pray thee, out of hand; take me out of the world at once, or kill me now, in killing[n]; diſpatch me immediately, and make a thorough end of me directly: if I have found favour in thy ſight; if thou haſt any love for me, or art willing to ſhew me a kindneſs, to remove me by death I ſhall take as one: and let me not ſee my wretchedneſs; or live to be the unhappy man I ſhall be; preſſed with ſuch a weight of government, affected and afflicted with the wants of a people I cannot relieve, or ſeeing them bore down with judgments and puniſhments inflicted on them for their ſins and tranſgreſſions, I am not able to prevail upon them to abſtain from: ſo the Targum of Jeruſalem, "that I may not ſee their evil, who "are thy people;" ſo Abendana, and in the margin of ſome Hebrew copies, it is read, "this is "one of the eighteen words, the correction of the "ſcribes;" who, inſtead of my wretchedneſs or evil, corrected it, their wretchedneſs or evil; but Aben Ezra ſays, there is no need of this correction.

℣. 16. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] Without making any reflection upon him, or upbraiding him with his unbecoming ſpeeches to him, but in a kind and tender manner directs for his aſſiſtance and eaſe: gather unto me 70 men of the elders of Iſrael; out from among them, ſuch as were not only men in years, but men of gravity, prudence and wiſdom; elders there were among the people in Egypt, Exod. iii. 16, 18. and it was from among ſuch as thoſe the 70 men were to be taken; we read of 70 elders before this time, that went up to the mount with Moſes, Exod. xxiv. 1, 9. but they are ſuppoſed only to be ſelected for that purpoſe at that time, and did not continue as a ſeparate body, or in any office: according to this number 70, the great Sanhedrim, or court of judicature that ſat at Jeruſalem in after times, conſiſted of 70 perſons, with a prince or preſident at the head of them, as Moſes was at the head of thoſe: and ſo our Lord, beſides his 12 apoſtles, ſent out 70 diſciples to be aſſiſting in his work and ſervice, Luke x. 1. whom thou knoweſt to be elders of the people; either in age, or in ſome ſort of office and authority among them, or however, to be good and juſt men, and had a conſiderable ſhare of knowledge, underſtanding and wiſdom: and officers over them; ſuch as Jethro adviſed to conſtitute, Exod. xviii. and it is not improbable, that theſe 70 were choſen out of them: and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may ſtand there with thee; and be ſeen by all the people what honour was done them, what authority was conferred upon them, and what gifts were beſtowed on them, qualifying them for their office, in which they were to be treated with reſpect by them.

℣. 17. And I will come down and talk with thee there, &c.] Deſcend from heaven, by ſome viſible token of his power and preſence, and in a friendly manner converſe with him face to face; which was an inſtance of great condeſcenſion and grace, and eſpecially when Moſes had ſhewed a very froward and peeviſh ſpirit; yet all is overlooked, and the Lord vouchſafes the moſt intimate communion with him, and does him honour before the people: and I will take of the ſpirit which is upon thee; the ſpirit of government, and the ſpirit of prophecy, the gifts of the Spirit qualifying for theſe things, of which Moſes had a large meaſure: and will put it upon them; that is, gifts of the ſame kind with his; not that his gifts were diminiſhed, or that properly ſpeaking any thing was taken from Moſes and given to the 70 elders; but from the ſame fountain and fulneſs of the Spirit Moſes partook of, they were furniſhed with like gifts and qualifications, he having not at all the leſs for what was communicated to them; ſee 1 Cor. xii. 4—11. 2 Kings ii. 9, 15. ſeveral of the Jewiſh writers, and particularly Jarchi, illuſtrate it by the lamp in the golden candleſtick in the ſanctuary, which was always burning, and at which all the reſt were lighted, without any diminution of its light at all: and they ſhall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyſelf alone; aſſiſt in the government of them, take part in all weighty and difficult matters, hear the complaints of the people, and bear a ſhare of the blame and reproach they at any time ſhould caſt upon their rulers.

℣. 18. And ſay thou unto the people, &c.] For what follows reſpects them, as what goes before regarded himſelf: ſanctify yourſelves againſt to morrow; or prepare yourſelves, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, either to receive mercies, or to meet the Lord in the way of his judgments; ſo Jarchi interprets it, "prepare for puniſhments," for for what is ſaid ſhould be, and what they had, was not as a bleſſing, but in a way of puniſhment: and ye ſhall eat fleſh; which they luſted after, wept for, and could not be eaſy without: for ye have wept in the ears of the Lord; complaining of him, and which he has taken notice of: ſaying, who ſhall give us fleſh to eat? for though they ſo earneſtly deſired it, they deſpaired of it, and even called in queſtion the power of God to give it: for it was well with us in Egypt; where they had their fleſh-pots, as well as their cucumbers, melons, leeks, onions and garlick, Exod. xvi. 3. but they forgot how ill it went with them by reaſon of their hard bondage, when their lives were made bitter by it, notwithſtanding their fleſh-pots, and of which, there is not much reaſon to believe, any great ſhare came to them: like to them were their poſterity in after-times, Jer. xliv. 17, 18. therefore the Lord will give you fleſh; to ſhew his power: and ye ſhall eat; to your ſhame and confuſion, not for pleaſure or profit.

[n] הרגני נא הרג occide me nunc occidendo, Druſius; occide me jam, occide, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

℣. 19. Ye ſhall not eat one day, &c.] Only, as in Exod. xvi. 12. nor two days, nor five days, neither ten days, nor twenty days; but even 30 days, a whole month, as in the following verſe.

℣. 20. But even a whole month, &c.] So long the Iſraelites continued at Taberah or Kibroth-hattaavah, as the Jews [o] conclude from this clauſe: until it come out at your noſtrils; being vomited up, through a nauſea of it, the ſtomach being overfilled and glutted with it; in which caſe, it will make its way through the noſtrils, as well as out of the mouth: and it be loathſome unto you; being ſurfeited with it; or it ſhall be for diſperſion [p], ſcattered about from the mouth and noſtrils: becauſe that ye have deſpiſed the Lord which is among you; who dwelt in the tabernacle that was in the midſt of them, whom they deſpiſed by treating the manna with contempt, he ſo plentifully ſpread about their camp, and by diſtruſting his power to give them fleſh, and by murmuring and complaining againſt him on the account of their having none: the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan are, "becauſe ye "have loathed the Word of the Lord, whoſe She-"kinah (or, the glory of whoſe Shekinah, as Jo-"nathan) dwelleth among you;" the eſſential Word, and who was figured by the manna they taſted and deſpiſed: and have wept before him; complaining of him, and murmuring againſt him: ſaying, why came we forth out of Egypt; ſuggeſting it would have been better for them if they had ſtayed there; thus reflecting on the wiſdom, power and goodneſs of God, diſplayed in the deliverance of them, and for which they had the utmoſt reaſon to be thankful.

℣. 21. And Moſes ſaid, &c.] By way of objection to what God had promiſed, diſtruſting his power to perform: the people amongſt whom I am; among whom he dwelt, of whom he was a part, and over whom he was a ruler: are 600,000 footmen; that were able to travel on foot, and were fit for war: this was the number of them when they came out of Egypt, Exod. xii. 37. they amounted in their laſt numbering to 3550 more, which leſſer number is here omitted, as Aben Ezra and Jarchi obſerve, and only the round number given: ſome ſay that all above the 600,000 were deſtroyed by the fire at Taberah, ℣. 1. and thou haſt ſaid, I will give them fleſh, that they may eat a whole month; this Moſes could not tell how to credit.

℣. 22. Shall the flocks and the herds be ſlain for them, to ſuffice them? &c.] Suggeſting that if all their cattle, their ſheep, and oxen were killed, which they and the mixt multitude brought out of Egypt, they would not be ſufficient for them to live upon a whole month; and intimating alſo, that it would be an unwiſe thing, and very improper to ſlay them all, were they ſufficient, ſince then they would have none for ſacrifice, or to breed when they came into the land of Canaan: the Targum of Jonathan is, "ſhall the ſheep that are in Arabia, and "the oxen that are in Nabatea be ſlain for them, "and be ſufficient for them?" or ſhall all the fiſh of the ſea be gathered together for them to ſuffice them? of the great ſea, as Jonathan; which, to gather together is, humanly ſpeaking, impoſſible, indeed if it could be done, they would ſuffice ſuch a number of people a month together: Moſes takes notice only of the fleſh of beaſts and of fiſhes, and ſeems not to have thought of the fleſh of fowls, with which, and not the other, the Lord afterwards fed them a whole month.

℣. 23. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] In anſwer to his objection, without upbraiding him with his ſin of unbelief: is the Lord's hand waxed ſhort? or his power diminiſhed ſince the creation, when he formed all things out of nothing, and what is it then he is not able to do? or ſince he wrought the wonders in Egypt, divided the Red-ſea, rained down manna from heaven, and ſmote the rock at Horeb, from whence waters flowed ſufficient for all this people, and their flocks and herds; and he that did all this, could give them fleſh that would ſuffice them a whole month, ſee Iſ. lix. 1. thou ſhalt ſee now whether my words ſhall come to paſs unto thee or no; whether I am able to make good my promiſe; a ſhort time will decide it, it ſhall be ſeen preſently whether I am, and will do what I have ſaid.

℣. 24. And Moſes went out, &c.] Either out of his own tent, about which the people aſſembled, complaining and weeping, ℣. 10. or rather, as Aben Ezra, out of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the ſanctuary where he had been converſing with God, about the affairs complained of both by the people and by himſelf; ſo the Targum of Jonathan ſays, he went out of the tabernacle, the houſe of the Shekinah or divine majeſty: and told the people of the words of the Lord; what he had ordered him to do for his eaſe in the government of them, and how he had promiſed to give them fleſh on the morrow: and gathered the 70 men of the elders of Iſrael; ſent for them by name, and ordered them to aſſemble at ſuch a time and place; and though two of them came not, after mentioned, yet the full number of ſeventy is given: and ſet them round about the tabernacle; they ſeem to be ſet not promiſcuouſly in a body together, but diſtinctly, one by another in a circular form; that they might be ſeen, obſerved, and taken notice of by the people that came about the tabernacle, who they were, what were done to them, and what befell them.

℣. 25. And the Lord came down in a cloud, &c.] In a cloud of glory, or a glorious one, as the Targums; either in the ſame that went before the people in the wilderneſs, or in one diſtinct from it, and

[o] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 8. p. 24.

[p] לזרא in diſperſionem, Munſter, Fagius, Montanus; ſo R. Joſeph Kimchi, apud Kimchi Sepher Shoraſh. rad. זרה & Abendana.

and only uſed on this occaſion, as a viſible token of the preſence of God: and ſpake unto him; to Moſes, talked with him, as he ſaid he would, ℣. 17. and took of the Spirit which was upon him, and gave it unto the ſeventy elders; ſee the note on ℣. 17. and it came to paſs that when the ſpirit reſted upon them, they propheſied; either they ſung the praiſes of God, which is ſometimes the ſenſe of propheſying, 1 Chron. xxv. 1, 2, 3. bleſſing God for the honour done them, and the gift beſtowed on them; or they opened and explained the laws of God, in virtue of the gifts they had received, according to which they were to aſſiſt Moſes in the government of the people, or they foretold things to come: the Jews ſay they propheſied of the quails, but that is not very likely: and did not ceaſe; from propheſying; the ſpirit of prophecy continued with them, which, in ſome caſes, might be neceſſary; or, they ceaſed not to propheſy all that day, though they afterwards did: and in the Hebrew text it is, they added not [q], that is, to propheſy, and Jarchi ſays, they only propheſied that day, as it is interpreted in an antient book of theirs, called Siphre; wherefore this ſpirit of prophecy is thought only to be given them as a temporary thing, for the confirmation of their having received the ſpirit of government, or gifts qualifying them for that, and to make them reſpectable among the people, and to ſhew that they were appointed to it by divine authority, and that this was not a device of Moſes to eaſe himſelf.

℣. 26. But there remained two of the men in the camp, &c.] Of the 70 who were ſummoned, that came not out of the camp of Iſrael to the tabernacle when the reſt did: the name of the one was Eldad, and the name of the other Medad; who, according to the Targum of Jonathan, were brethren of Moſes by his mother's ſide; for it ſays, they were the ſons of Elizaphan the ſon of Parnac, whom Jochabed the daughter of Levi brought forth at the time that Amram her huſband diſmiſſed her, and ſhe was married to him before ſhe brought forth Moſes; but it is elſewhere ſaid [r], that Elizaphan married her after the death of Amram; and Eldad and Medad were born unto them: and the ſpirit reſted upon them; as it did upon the reſt of the 70 that came to the tabernacle; theſe two had the ſame gifts of the Spirit beſtowed upon them as they had: and they were of them that were written; among the 70 whoſe names were put down in the ſummons Moſes gave them, to attend the tabernacle; for as for the notion of the Jews about ſchedules and pieces of paper put into an urn to draw lots with, there is no foundation in the text: but went not out unto the tabernacle; out of the camp to it, when they were ſummoned to come together; which they declined, as is commonly ſaid, out of modeſty, thinking themſelves unfit for ſuch an high office; and therefore as Saul hid himſelf among the ſtuff when he was about to be choſen king, ſo did they, or ſomething like it: the Targum of Jonathan is expreſs for it, which adds, becauſe they hid themſelves to flee from government; but the Spirit of God found them out, and filled them with his gifts, and conſtrained them to propheſy, whereby they were diſcovered: and they propheſied in the camp; perhaps in a private manner, it may be in their own houſes; which, how it came to be known is after related: what they propheſied of cannot be ſaid; according to the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, and other Jewiſh writers [s], they propheſied of the quails, and of the death of Moſes, and the ſucceſſion of Joſhua, of Gog and Magog, and their armies, and of their deſtruction by the Meſſiah, and of the reſurrection of the dead; but theſe are things not to be depended on.

℣. 27. And there ran a young man, &c.] From the camp to the tabernacle, who had heard Eldad and Medad propheſy; which he thought was not right, being done without the knowledge and approbation of Moſes, and in a private tent in the tabernacle, not among the elders but the common people: who this young man was is not material to know; ſome of the Rabbins, as Jarchi ſays, affirm, he was Gerſhon the ſon of Moſes; whoever he was, no doubt, it was with a good deſign, conſulting the glory of God and the honour of Moſes, and therefore in great haſte ran to him with the information: and told Moſes, and ſaid, Eldad and Medad do propheſy in the camp; who ſeem by this, to be perſons well known, and of ſome note and figure; ſince not only the young man could call them by their names, but there needed no other deſcription of them to Moſes and thoſe with him.

℣. 28. And Joſhua the ſon of Nun, the ſervant of Moſes, &c.] That waited upon him, and miniſtred to him, and executed his orders, eſpecially in civil things, and was to be his ſucceſſor: one of his young men; not that Joſhua was a young man in age, for he muſt be now between 50 and 60 years of age, ſee the note on Exod. xxxiii. 11. nor does the word neceſſarily ſuppoſe, that thoſe men were young among whom Joſhua was; but choice, excellent perſons, the principal ſervants of Moſes, at the head of whom Joſhua was, being his prime miniſter: the Targum of Onkelos and the Syriac verſion render it, from his youth, joining it with the word ſervant, as if he was the ſervant of Moſes from his youth, or ever ſince he was a young man; but Moſes had not been out of Midian but about two years, where he had kept his father's ſheep; however he anſwered and ſaid, my lord Moſes, forbid them; propheſying, reſtrain them from it, ſuffer them not to go on in it; he would have him exert his authority as the chief magiſtrate, which he thought was affected by their propheſying without his knowledge and conſent; and becauſe a word from the root here uſed ſignifies a priſon, ſome here interpret it, "put them in priſon," which is a ſenſe Jarchi mentions; but it can hardly be thought that Joſhua meant that ſuch rigorous meaſures ſhould be taken, only that they ſhould be rebuked for what they had done, and be charged for the future to be ſilent.

℣. 29. Moſes ſaid unto him, envieſt thou for my ſake? &c.] Leſt his authority ſhould be weakened, and his honour leſſened, becauſe they began not to propheſy in his preſence, and at the tabernacle, and among the reſt of the elders, and ſo ſeemed not to have received of the Spirit that was upon him, and to be independent of him: would God that all the Lord's people were prophets; this is not to be underſtood in the moſt abſolute ſenſe, as if Moſes wiſhed that every individual perſon among the people of Iſrael were prophets, as the word may ſignify a ſett and order of men, and an office in

[q] יספו & non addiderunt, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius; & non amplius, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [r] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 7. 1. [s] Vid. T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 17. 1. Abendana in Miclol Yophi in loc.

in the church or ſtate, as miniſters of the word extraordinary or ordinary; for then there would be none to propheſy to, or to teach and inſtruct; and ſo likewiſe, not rulers, or helps and aſſiſtants in government, for then there would be none to be governed; but it is to be taken comparatively; and is deſigned to ſhew how far Moſes was from an envious ſpirit at the gifts of others, that he could wiſh, if it was the will of God, and conſiſtent with the order of things, that every man had as great or greater gifts than he had, qualifying them for publick ſervice and uſefulneſs; ſuch was the modeſty and meekneſs of Moſes: there is a ſenſe indeed, in which all the Lord's people, all good men are and ſhould be prophets, and for which, by the grace of the Spirit of God they are qualified; and ſhould act as ſuch, by praying and ſinging praiſes, which are ſometimes meant by propheſying, and by ſpiritual conferences in private with one another, building up each other on their moſt holy faith, and by teaching and inſtructing all under their care in their families: and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them; the gifts of it, which are neceſſary to fit men for public ſervice in church or ſtate, or for private uſefulneſs, 1 Cor. xii. 7.

℣. 30. And Moſes got him into the camp, &c.] From the door of the tabernacle, where he had been ſettling the elders in their office, and now betook himſelf to the camp of Iſrael, perhaps to look more particularly into the affair of Eldad and Medad, and ſettle that, and put them among the elders; for they were of them that were written, whoſe names were put down for elders in the paper Moſes had written for that purpoſe, and in the ſummons that were given; or more generally to do public buſineſs, to exerciſe rule and government, with this new aſſiſtance granted him, as follows: he and the elders of Iſrael; he went in company with them, to impart to them the honour and glory they were to ſhare with him in the government, as Aben Ezra obſerves; or they went together, to obſerve what would be done for the people, according to the promiſe of the Lord, to give them fleſh; who had made good his word to Moſes, by taking of his Spirit and putting it on ſeventy men for his aſſiſtance; the other remained to be done, and was done as follows.

℣. 31. And there went forth a wind from the Lord, &c.] Both an eaſt wind, and a ſouth wind, according to Pſ. lxxviii. 26. either firſt one wind, and then another; one to bring the quails, or whatever are meant, to a certain point, and then the other to bring them to the camp of Iſrael; or a ſouth eaſt wind, as the Jewiſh writers interpret it: however, it was not a common wind, but what was immediately raiſed by the Lord for the following purpoſe: and brought quails from the ſea; the Red Sea, from the coaſts of it, not out of it. Joſephus [t] ſays, there were great numbers of this ſort of fowl about the gulf of Arabia; and Diodorus Siculus [u] ſays, near Rhinocalura, a place not far from thoſe parts, quails in flocks were brought from the ſea, which the people catched and lived upon. After Job Ludolphus, who has wrote a learned diſſertation on locuſts, many are of opinion with him, that locuſts are intended here, and think that what is hereafter related beſt agrees with them; it is pretty difficult to determine which is righeſt; there are learned advocates, and much to be ſaid for both [w]: and let them fall by the camp; the camp of Iſrael, and round about it on all ſides, as follows; which agrees well enough with locuſts, which are uſually brought by a wind, as the locuſts of Egypt were by an eaſt wind, which fall, reſt and ſettle on the earth, and ſometimes in heaps, one upon another; and theſe, whatever they were, fell as thick as rain, and were as duſt, and as the ſand of the ſea. The Jewiſh writers, who underſtand them of quails, interpret this not of their falling to the ground, but of their flying low, two cubits from the earth, about the breaſt of a man, ſo that they had no trouble in taking them; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, Jarchi, Ben Gerſom and Abendana; but this ſeems to be without any foundation: as it were a day's journey on this ſide, and as it were a day's journey on the other ſide, round about the camp; on the north ſide, and on the ſouth ſide, as the Targum of Jonathan explains it; but it doubtleſs means on all ſides, ſince they fell round about the camp; and from thence they lay thick upon the ground, a day's journey every way; which ſome compute at 16, others at 20 miles, on which ſpace there muſt be a prodigious number of quails or locuſts; and it is certain the latter do come in great numbers, ſo as to darken the air, and to cover a country, as they did Egypt; and the quails alſo, in ſome countries, have been taken in great numbers; in Italy on the coaſt of Antium, within a month, in the ſpace of five miles, 100,000 quails were taken every day [x]: and as it were two cubits high upon the face of the earth; as they fell they lay one upon another, the heighth of two cubits; which it is thought better agrees with locuſts than with quails, ſince the quails, by lying one upon another ſuch a depth, muſt be ſuffocated; whereas the locuſts, through the length of their feet, and the thinneſs of their wings, would not.

℣. 32. And the people ſtood up all that day, &c.] The day on which they fell in the morning: and all that night; the night following: and all the next day; after that, even the ſpace of 36 hours: and they gathered the quails; not took them flying, as the Jewiſh writers ſuggeſt, before obſerved, but from the earth where they fell, in order to lay them up as a proviſion for time to come; or otherwiſe had they taken them only for preſent uſe, they would not have been ſo long in gathering them; but they ſeemed greedy of them, and therefore took up all they could, or knew what to do with: he that gathered leaſt, gathered ten homers; or ſo many aſs-loads, as ſome interpret it; the words for an aſs and an homer, being near the ſame: an homer in meaſure is the ſame with the cor, and held ten ephahs; and, according to biſhop Cumberland [y], contained 75 wine gallons, 7 pints, and ſomewhat more, which muſt hold a vaſt quantity of quails; though not the meaſure, but the tale of fowls is commonly given. Some render the word heaps, as in Exod. viii. 14. and is ſuppoſed better to agree with locuſts; but then it will be difficult to aſſign a reaſon why the number of them ſhould be given, ſince heaps might be greater or leſſer: and they ſpread them all abroad for themſelves round about the camp; according to ſome, they were taken alive, and put into cages, which were hung round the camp, ſo that all places were full of them, in which they were kept, and uſed as they wanted them; but they ſeem rather, be they what they will, to be dead, and to be ſpread about to be dried in the ſun, being ſalted; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion verſion renders the word, and they dried them [z]; and agrees both with quails, which, according to ſome writers [a], uſed to be ſalted for food for time to come; and with locuſts, on which the inhabitants of ſome parts of Ethiopia always lived, as Pliny [b] ſays, being hardened in ſmoke, and with ſalt, and was their food for the year round. And this cuſtom was uſed in Arabia; for Leo Africanus [c] relates, that the people of Arabia Deſerta, and of Lybia, reckon the coming of the locuſts an happy omen; for either boiled, or dried with the ſun, they beat them into meal (or powder) and eat them: and of the Naſamones, a people in Africa, it is ſaid [d], that they hunt locuſts, and dry them in the ſun, and grind them, and then ſprinkling milk upon them, ſup them up.

[t] Antiq. l. 3. c. 1. §. 5. [u] Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 55. [w] Vid. Calmet's Dictionary in the word Quails, & Scheuchzer. Phyſica Sacr. in loc. Biſhop of Clogher's Chronology, p. 375, 376. Shaw's Travels, p. 189. [x] Blond. Ital. illuſtrat. p. 314. apud Huet. Alnetan. Quæſt. l. 2. c. 12. §. 17. [y] Of Scripture-weights, &c. p. 86.

℣. 33. And while the fleſh was yet between their teeth, &c.] When they had juſt got it into their mouths, and were about to bite it: ere it was chewed; or cut off; or cut into pieces by the inciſores, or fore-teeth, and then ground by the molares, or grinders, and ſo became fit to be ſwallowed. Both quails and locuſts were eaten as food; the former is a fat and delicious fowl, and the latter, ſome ſorts of them at leaſt, were allowed clean food for the Jews, and were fed on by many people: the wrath of the Lord was kindled againſt the people; for their luſting after fleſh, and deſpiſing the manna: and the Lord ſmote the people with a very great plague; the peſtilence, as Aben Ezra; or with fire, as Bochart [e], who gives the following reaſons why the people were ſo ſeverely puniſhed now, and not before, when they murmured on a like account; becauſe their ſins were greater, and more aggravated, they falling again into the ſame ſin, which had been forgiven them; and beſides, they were before preſſed with famine, now they had a plenty of manna every day; and alſo were better inſtructed, having received the law, which was not yet given when they were juſt come out of Egypt. Sulpitius [f] the hiſtorian ſays, 23,000 periſhed at this time.

℣. 34. And he called the name of that place Kibroth-hattaavah, &c.] That is, Moſes called it ſo, or it was called by the children of Iſrael, and by others in after-times, by this name, which ſignifies the graves of luſt; dug by luſt, or which luſt was the cauſe and occaſion of, and where thoſe that indulged it were buried, as follows: becauſe there they buried the people that luſted; not all that luſted, for the luſting was pretty general; but all that died thro' their gluttony and intemperance, and the judgment of God on them; or who were the moſt inordinate in their luſt, and encouraged others in it, and were the ringleaders in the murmur and mutiny.

℣. 35. And the people journied from Kibroth-hattaavah unto Hazeroth, &c.] After having ſtayed there a month or more, as is gathered from ℣. 20. and abode at Hazeroth; at leaſt ſeven days, as appears from the following chapter; which, according to Bunting [g], was eight miles from Kibroth-hattaavah, or Taberah, which were the ſame place.

CHAP. XII.

IN this chapter we have an account of Aaron and Miriam ſpeaking againſt Moſes, and for what reaſon, whoſe amiable character is given, ℣. 1—3. and of the Lord's calling them to him, and rebuking them for it, giving an excellent teſtimony to Moſes, and then departing in anger, ℣. 4—9. and of Miriam's being ſmitten with leproſy, and Aaron's intreating Moſes on his and her account, who prayed to the Lord to heal her, ℣. 10—13. and of her being ordered to be ſhut out of the camp ſeven days, during which time the Iſraelites ſtayed at Hazeroth, and then removed to the wilderneſs of Paran, ℣. 14—16.

℣. 1. And Miriam and Aaron ſpoke againſt Moſes, &c.] Miriam is firſt mentioned, becauſe ſhe was firſt in the tranſgreſſion, and ſo was only puniſhed; Aaron was drawn into the ſin by her, and he acknowledged his fault, and was forgiven: it muſt be a great trial to Moſes, not only to be ſpoken againſt by the people, as he often was, but by his near relations, and theſe, gracious perſons, and concerned with him in leading and guiding the people through the wilderneſs, Mic. vi. 4: becauſe of the Ethiopian woman, whom he had married, for he had married an Ethiopian woman; not a queen of Ethiopia, as the Targum of Jonathan; nor Tharbis, a daughter of a king of Ethiopia, whom Joſephus [h] ſays he married, when he was ſent upon an expedition againſt the Ethiopians, whilſt he was in Pharaoh's court; nor the widow of an Ethiopian king, whom he married after his death, when he fled from Pharaoh into Ethiopia, and was made a king there, as ſay ſome Jewiſh writers [i]: for there is no reaſon to believe he was married before he went to Midian; nor was this ſome Ethiopian woman he had married ſince, and but lately, Zipporah being dead or divorced, as ſome have fancied; but it was Zipporah herſelf, as Aben Ezra, Ben Melech, and ſo the Jeruſalem Targum, which repreſents her not as truly an Ethiopian, but ſo called, becauſe ſhe was like to one; indeed ſhe was really one; not a native of Ethiopia, the country of the Abyſſines, but ſhe was a Cuſhite, a native of Arabia Chuſea, in which country Midian was, from whence ſhe came; hence the tents of Cuſhan, and the curtains of Midian, are ſpoken of together, Hab. iii. 7. Now it was not on account of Moſes's marriage with her that they ſpoke againſt him, for that was an affair tranſacted in Midian ſome years ago, which at firſt ſight may ſeem to be the caſe; nor becauſe he now had divorced her, as Jarchi, which perhaps would have given them no uneaſineſs; and for the ſame reaſon, not becauſe he abſtained from converſation with her, that he might give up himſelf to the ſervice of God in his houſe, and perform it in a more holy and faithful manner, which is the common ſentiment of the Jewiſh writers: but rather as it is thought by others, becauſe of a ſuſpicion they had entertained, that ſhe had intereſted herſelf in the affair of the choice of the ſeventy elders, and had prevailed upon Moſes to put in ſuch and ſuch perſons ſons into the liſt ſhe had a mind to ſerve; at leaſt this ſeems to be the caſe, for their diſpleaſure was againſt Moſes himſelf; they were angry with him, becauſe he tranſacted that affair without them, and choſe whom he pleaſed, without conſulting them; and therefore, though they cared not to aſcribe it entirely to him, and his neglect of them, they imputed it to his wife, as if ſhe had over-perſuaded him, or her brother through her means, to take ſuch a ſtep as he did.

[z] So the word is uſed in Miſn. Sabbat, c. 22. §. 4. for ſpreading things in the ſun to dry them. [a] Athenæus, Hipparchus & Heſychius apud Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 1. c. 15. col. 107. [b] Nat. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 30. [c] Deſcriptio Africæ, l. 9. p. 769. [d] Herodot. Melpomene, ſive, l. 4. c. 172. [e] Ut ſupra, col. 109. [f] Hiſt. Sacr. l. 1. [g] Travels, p. 82. [h] Antiq. l. 2. c. 10. §. 2. [i] Dibre Hayamim, fol. 7. 2. Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 5. 2. ſo ſome in Aben Ezra in loc.

℣. 2. And they ſaid, hath the Lord indeed ſpoken only by Moſes? &c.] They own he had ſpoken by him; this was ſo notorious that it could not be denied: hath he not ſpoken alſo by us? are we not prophets as well as he? the Lord ſpake to Aaron whilſt he was in Egypt, and had made him a good ſpokeſman in his name, and bore this teſtimony of him, that he could ſpeak well, and Miriam is expreſsly called a propheteſs, Exod. iv. 14, 27. and xv. 20. and this being the caſe, they ſtomached it that they ſhould have no concern in the choice and appointment of the ſeventy elders: and the Lord heard it; for perhaps this was ſaid ſecretly between themſelves; but God that ſees, and hears, and knows all things, took notice of what was ſpoken by them and reſented it; for it was ultimately againſt himſelf, who had ordered Moſes to do what he did.

℣. 3. Now the man Moſes was very meek, &c.] So that they might ſay any thing againſt him, and he not to be affronted, nor reſent any injury; and this therefore is introduced as a reaſon why the Lord undertook the cauſe, and vindicated him, reſenting the obloquies of Miriam and Aaron againſt him; becauſe he knew he was ſo exceeding meek, that he himſelf would paſs it by without taking notice of it, though he might hear it: hence the Targum of Jonathan, "and he cared not for their "words;" they gave him no concern or uneaſineſs, ſo meek, mild and gentle was he: and this is to be conſidered, not as a ſelf-commendation of Moſes, but as a teſtimony of his character by God himſelf, by whom he was inſpired in writing it; though it is poſſible this might be added by another hand, Joſhua or Ezra, under the ſame direction and inſpiration of the Spirit of God; who choſe that ſuch a character of Moſes ſhould ſtand here, in oppoſition to the calumnies caſt upon him, and as giving a reaſon why not he himſelf, but the Lord, appeared in his vindication, he being ſo meek and lowly, as is ſaid of his antitype, and by himſelf, Matt. xi. 29. above all the men which were upon the face of the earth; being ſeldom angry, and when he was, it was generally, if not always, when the honour of God was concerned, and not on account of his own perſon and character; though it muſt not be ſaid of him, that he was perfect in this reſpect, or free from paſſion, or from blame at any time on account of it, but when compared with others, he was the meekeſt man that ever lived; whereby he became the fitteſt perſon to have to do with ſuch a peeviſh, perverſe and rebellious people as the Iſraelites were, whom no other man could well have bore with.

℣. 4. And the Lord ſpake ſuddenly unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, and unto Miriam, &c.] As one greatly provoked, and highly diſpleaſed, and which was ſhewn at once; and in order to prevent the complaint getting among the people, and ſpreading, which might have been of bad conſequence; as they were pretty much diſpoſed to murmur and mutiny; as alſo to ſhew that it was not through any ſolicitation of Moſes, that the Lord took this matter in hand, time not being allowed to him to make any application to him; for as ſoon as ever Miriam and Aaron had uttered their ſpeech againſt him, the Lord ſpake to them: come out, ye three unto the tabernacle of the congregation; every one out of his tent, as Aben Ezra; though it is not improbable that they were all together in the tent of Moſes, whither Aaron and Miriam were come to contend with him; the words ſeem to be ſpoken quick, and in haſte, as being angry: and they three came out; of the place where they were, to the tabernacle of the congregation, that ſo the people might not hear what was ſaid unto them, and what was the occaſion of it.

℣. 5. The Lord came down in the pillar of the cloud, &c.] Which was over the moſt holy place of the tabernacle, and which was a ſymbol of the preſence of the Lord; and who is ſaid to come down, becauſe that was above the tabernacle; whereas he came, as is next expreſſed, and ſtood in the door of the tabernacle; where he ſet up his tribunal, and called them to his bar; courts of judicature being uſually held in the gate; not ſuffering them to go into the tabernacle as they were wont to do, being delinquents: and called Aaron and Miriam; to come nearer to him, and hear what he had to ſay to them; Moſes keeping at a greater diſtance; it not being ſo proper that he ſhould be within hearing of thoſe commendations, which were about to be given of him; and they both came forth; Aaron and Miriam, and ſtood before the Lord.

℣. 6. And he ſaid, hear now my words, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan reads, I beſeech you; and Jarchi ſays, this particle always ſo ſignifies; but it is not ſo agreeable to the language of the divine Being: if there be a prophet among you; not as making a doubt of it; but rather allowing that there was, and that there were others beſides Moſes; as even they themſelves, Aaron and Miriam, and the ſeventy elders, and perhaps others; or at leaſt there had been, and would be again, as there were in after-times: I the Lord will make myſelf known to him; that is, declare my mind and will concerning things preſent, or things to come: in a viſion; when awake, either by day or by night, repreſenting objects to the bodily ſight; as the almond-tree-rod, and the boiling-pot to Jeremiah; the viſions of the chariots, and dry bones to Ezekiel, and ſuch as were ſhewn to Amos: or to the mind by night, as if really diſcerned by the ſenſes; as the viſions of the man riding on a red horſe, and of the four horns, and four carpenters; with ſeveral others ſhewn to Zechariah: and will ſpeak unto him in a dream; as he had done to Jacob; and as he did afterwards to Daniel, and many others.

℣. 7. My ſervant Moſes is not ſo, &c.] Or ſuch a prophet; he is not ſo uſed; it was not in ſuch a manner the Lord ſpake to him; not in viſions and dreams, as he had to Abraham and Jacob, and did to others in after-times: who is faithful in all mine houſe; in the houſe of Iſrael; or among that people which were the Lord's family, where Moſes was a ſervant and ſteward, and did all things according to the will of the Lord, the maſter of the family; he faithfully delivered to them all the laws, ſtatutes and ordinances, which he appointed to be obſerved by them: unleſs this is to be underſtood of the tabernacle, which was the houſe of God, in which he dwelt, and which was made, and all things in it, exactly according to the pattern given by the Lord to Moſes; ſee Heb. iii. 2, 5. and viii. 5.

℣. 8. With him will I ſpeak mouth to mouth, &c.] And face to face, as he had done, Exod. xxxiii. 11. in a free, friendly and familiar manner, as one friend friend ſpeaks to another, without injecting any fear or dread, and conſternation of mind, which was ſometimes the caſe of the prophets; or without a middle perſon, a mediator, as Aben Ezra, not by means of an angel, as in ſome caſes, but the Lord himſelf ſpake to him: even apparently, and not in dark ſpeeches; the word apparently, or viſion, being oppoſed to dark ſpeeches, ſhews, that this is not to be underſtood of the appearance or viſion of an object preſented to the ſight, or to the mind, which is denied of Moſes, though uſual with other prophets; but of the viſion, or plain ſenſe and meaning of words, which are ſo plainly expreſſed, that the ſenſe is eaſily ſeen and underſtood; it was not under figures and allegories, and parables and dark repreſentations of things, that the law of the decalogue, and other laws, ſtatutes and ordinances, and the proclamation the Lord made of himſelf, as the Lord gracious, merciful, &c. were delivered unto Moſes, but in plain words and clear expreſſions; not in ſuch ænigmatical, parabolical and allegorical terms, as many of the viſions and prophecies of Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Amos and Zechariah, were exhibited to them: and the ſimilitude of the Lord ſhall he behold; as he had at the burning buſh, and at mount Sinai, with the elders of Iſrael, and when the Lord proclaimed his name before him; at which ſeveral times it is highly probable he beheld the Lord, even the Lord Chriſt, in an human form, as a preſage of his future incarnation, and as he might alſo after this: the Targum of Jonathan is, "the ſimilitude which is "after my Shekinah (or divine majeſty) he ſaw;" that is, his back parts, as Jarchi, and other Jewiſh writers, interpret it; but biſhop Patrick thinks the word not ſhould be repeated from the preceding clauſe, and that the ſenſe is, that he did not behold him in ſimilitudes, nor did the Lord ſpeak to him by them, as to other prophets, ſee Hoſ. xii. 10: wherefore then were ye not afraid to ſpeak againſt my ſervant Moſes? or againſt my ſervant, againſt Moſes; againſt any ſervant of mine, but eſpecially againſt Moſes, ſo faithful in my houſe, ſo much approved of and honoured by me, and ſo ſuperior to all other prophets.

℣. 9. And the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt them, &c.] Which might be viſible by ſome outward token, as by lightening from the cloud, or however what follows was ſufficient to ſhew it: and he departed; from the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, where he had ſtood in the pillar of cloud for ſome time; but as ſoon as he had given his teſtimony of Moſes, and expreſſed his diſpleaſure at Aaron and Miriam, he went away directly from them; not ſtaying to hear what they had to ſay for themſelves, which was a plain indication of his anger againſt them.

℣. 10. And the cloud departed from off the tabernacle, &c.] Not from off the door of the tabernacle, as Aben Ezra, for that is implied in the laſt clauſe of the preceding verſe, but from off that part of the tabernable, the moſt holy place, where it had uſed to abide; but now it went up higher in the air, or removed at ſome diſtance from thence, which was a further indication of the ſore diſpleaſure of God; that as he would not ſtay with Aaron and Miriam at the door of the tabernacle, ſo neither would he ſuffer the cloud to continue over it, as it was wont to do, ſo long as they were there: and behold, Miriam became leprous, white as ſnow; was ſmote immediately with a leproſy by the Lord, as the hand of Moſes was in a miraculous way, Exod. iv. 6. and as Gehazi was, who was ſmitten of God in like manner, 2 Kings v. 27. in an ordinary and gradual leproſy, when it was all white, the man was clean, Lev. xiii. 13. but in an extraordinary one, and which was immediately from God, and at once, in this caſe it was a ſign it was incurable. Miriam only, and not Aaron, was ſmitten with a leproſy; though Chaſkuni ſays, that ſome of their Rabbins were of opinion, that Aaron was; but this does not appear, nor is it likely that he ſhould be thus defiled and diſhonoured, being the prieſt of the Lord, and ſince he was not ſo deep in the tranſgreſſion as Miriam, and was drawn into it by her, and alſo repented of it: and Aaron looked upon Miriam, and behold, ſhe was leprous; he not only caſt his eye upon her, as it were accidentally, and ſaw what was her caſe; but as the prieſt of the Lord, looked upon her, as it was the buſineſs of his office to do, and perceived ſhe was leprous, and was obliged to pronounce her ſo; and perhaps ſhe was the firſt after the law of the leproſy, that he was called to look upon, and pronounced her unclean, which muſt be a great mortification to him.

℣. 11. And Aaron ſaid unto Moſes, alas, my lord! &c.] The word for alas, is generally interpreted by the Jewiſh writers as a note of beſeeching and intreating, as it is here by the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, "I beſeech thee, my lord;" or upon me, my lord[k], be all the blame; ſuch was his tenderneſs to his ſiſter, and the compaſſion he had on her; and ſuch reverence and reſpect did he ſhow to Moſes his brother, though younger than he, becauſe of his ſuperior dignity as a prophet, and chief magiſtrate, and prime miniſter, and ſervant of the Lord, calling him my lord: I beſeech thee, lay not the ſin upon us; the puniſhment of it, bear not hard upon us, or ſuffer us to be puniſhed in a rigorous manner, without interceding to the Lord for us, for the abatement or removal of it; ſuch a powerful and prevailing intereſt he knew he had with God, that by his prayers their puniſhment would be mitigated, or not laid, or if laid, removed: wherein we have done fooliſhly, and wherein we have ſinned; he owns they had ſinned, but ſuggeſts, and ſo he would have it underſtood, that it was not through malice, and purpoſely and preſumptuouſly, but through folly and ignorance, inadvertency and weakneſs, and therefore hoped it would be forgiven.

℣. 12. Let her not be as one dead, &c.] As ſhe was, in a ceremonial ſenſe, being to be ſhut up and excluded from the ſociety of people, and as defiling by touching, as a dead carcaſe; and in a natural ſenſe, her fleſh, by the diſeaſe upon her, was become as dead fleſh, putrid and rotten, and unleſs miraculouſly cured it would iſſue in her death: of whom the fleſh is half conſumed, when he cometh out of his mother's womb; like an abortive, or one ſtill-born, that has been dead ſome time in its mother's womb; and therefore when brought forth its fleſh is almoſt waſted away, or at leaſt half conſumed; and in ſuch a plight and condition was Miriam already or quickly would be, through the force of her diſeaſe.

℣. 13. And Moſes cried unto the Lord, &c.] With a loud voice, and with great earneſtneſs and importunity, being heartily affected with the miſerable condition Miriam was in: ſaying, heal her now, O God, I beſeech thee; in the original text it is, O God now, heal her now; for the ſame particle is uſed at the cloſe as at the beginning of the petition; tition; and the repetition of it ſhews his earneſtneſs and importunity that ſhe might be healed directly, immediately without any delay; and Moſes uſes the word El, which ſignifies the ſtrong and mighty God, as expreſſive of his faith in the power of God, that he was able to heal her; and at the ſame time ſuggeſts that none but he could do it; and ſo Aben Ezra interprets it, "thou that haſt "power in thine hand, now heal her;" this prayer is a proof of his being of a meek, humble and forgiving ſpirit.

[k] בי in me, Montanus.

℣. 14. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] By a voice out of the cloud, though at a diſtance; unleſs it was by a ſecret impulſe upon his ſpirit, darting ſuch words into his mind as if he heard an audible voice: if her father had but ſpit in her face; or, in ſpitting ſpitted[l]; ſpit much, and continued ſpitting till he had covered her face with ſpittle; which, as it would have been a token of anger and diſpleaſure in him, an earthly father, who is meant, and of ſhame and diſgrace to her; ſo there is ſome likeneſs in ſpittle to leproſy, both being white, and in ſuch a caſe to the abundance of it, her face being covered with leproſy; and which came as it were from the mouth of the Lord, by his order and appointment, immediately, as ſpittle from a man, and like that, in a way of deteſtation and contempt, and to make aborred and deſpiſed: ſhould ſhe not be aſhamed ſeven days? hide herſelf and never appear in the family, and eſpecially in her father's preſence, becauſe of the ſhame ſhe was put unto, for the ſpace of ſeven days; how much more aſhamed then ſhould ſhe be, now her heavenly Father did ſpit in her face, and covered it with a white leproſy, and for as long a time at leaſt, or indeed longer; fourteen days, ſay the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi, but no more than ſeven are required, when more might have juſtly been, for her ſeparation and ſhutting up from company and converſation: let her be ſhut out from the camp ſeven days; for ſo long the leper was to be ſhut up at the trial of his leproſy, and ſo long he was to be out of his tent at the cleanſing of him, Lev. xiii. 5, 6. and xiv. 8. and after that let her be received again: into the camp and into ſociety with her relations and friends.

℣. 15. And Miriam was ſhut out of the camp ſeven days, &c.] And ſo in after-times lepers dwelt alone, and in a ſeparate houſe, as long as the leproſy was upon them, ſee 2 Chron. xxv. 21. Miriam no doubt, was healed at once, but as a puniſhment for her ſin, ſhe was obliged to keep out of the camp of Iſrael for ſuch a ſpace of time: and the people journeyed not till Miriam was brought in again; partly out of reſpect unto her, ſhe being a propheteſs, and one that went before them, and led them with Moſes and Aaron, Mic. vi. 4. and partly for want of the cloud to direct them, which had departed at a diſtance from them.

℣. 16. And afterwards the people removed from Hazeroth, &c.] After ſeven days, where they had been ſo long at leaſt; the cloud being returned to the tabernacle, and having been taken up, which was the ſignal for motion, the camps of Iſrael in their order, removed and marched forward: and pitched in the wilderneſs of Paran; at a place in it called Rithmah, ch. xxxiii. 18. which, according to Bunting[m], was eight miles from Hazeroth, near to which was another place called Kadeſh, or elſe this was another name of Rithmah, ſee ch. xiii. 3, 26. and now the Iſraelites were very near the land of promiſe, and from hence they ſent ſpies to make their obſervations on it, and bring a report of it; and had it not been for their ill conduct in that affair, in all probability would have been quickly in it, but on that account were kept out 38 years longer: it was on the 28th or 29th of the month Sivan the Iſraelites came to this place, according to the Jewiſh writers[n], which month anſwers to part of our May and part of June.

CHAP. XIII.

IN this chapter an order is given by the Lord, to ſend twelve men into the land of Canaan, to ſearch and ſpy it, and which was accordingly executed, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and the names of the twelve perſons are given, ℣. 4—16. the inſtructions they received from Moſes, what part of the land they ſhould enter into firſt, and what obſervations they ſhould make on it, ℣. 17—20. which they attended to, and on their return brought ſome of the fruit of the land with them, ℣. 21—26. and gave an account of it, that it was a very fruitful land, but the inhabitants mighty, and their cities walled, ℣. 27, 28, 29. which threw the people into confuſion, but that they were ſtilled by Caleb, one of the ſpies, who encouraged them, ℣. 30. but all the reſt, excepting Joſhua, brought an ill report of it, as not to be ſubdued and conquered by them, ℣. 31, 32, 33.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] When in the wilderneſs of Paran, either at Rithmah or Kadeſh; this was on the 29th day of the month Sivan, on which day, the Jews ſay [o], the ſpies were ſent to ſearch the land, which was a ſcheme of the Iſraelites own deviſing, and which they firſt propoſed to Moſes, who approved of it as prudential and political, at leaſt he gave his aſſent unto it to pleaſe the people, and carried the affair to the Lord, and conſulted him about it; who rather permitting than approving gave the following order; for the motion carried in it a good deal of unbelief, calling in queſtion whether the land was ſo good as had been repreſented unto them, fearing it was not acceſſible, and that it would be difficult to get into it, and were deſirous of knowing the beſt way of getting into it before they proceeded any farther; all which were unneceſſary, if they would have fully truſted in the Lord, in his word, promiſe, power, providence and guidance; who had told them it was a land flowing with milk and honey; that he would ſhew them the way to it, by going before them in a pillar of cloud and fire; that he would aſſuredly bring them into it, having eſpied it for them, and promiſed it unto them; ſo that there was no need on any account for them to ſend ſpies before them; however, to gratify them in this point, he aſſented to it: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Send thou men, &c.] Which is rather a permiſſion than a command; ſo Jarchi interprets it, it, "send men according to thy mind, I do not "command thee, but if thou pleaseſt ſend;" this he obſerved, was agreeable to Moſes and to the Iſraelites, and therefore granted it, or allowed them to take their own way, and which iſſued badly, as it always does, when men are left to their own counſel: that they may ſearch the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Iſrael; called the land of Canaan, though it conſiſted of ſeven nations, from the principal of them; this God had given in promiſe to the children of Iſrael, and had now brought them to the borders of it; nay, had given them orders to go up and poſſeſs it; but they were for ſearching it firſt, to know what ſort of a land it was, and which was the beſt way of entering into it, which is here permitted them, ſee Deut. i. 21, 22. of every tribe of their fathers ſhall ye ſend a man; excepting the tribe of Levi; the reaſon of which was becauſe they were to have no inheritance in the land, Deut. x. 9. and xviii. 1, 2. but then, to make up the number twelve, the two ſons of Joſeph, Ephraim and Manaſſeh, are reckoned as two tribes: every one a ruler among them; a prince in his tribe; ſo were men of honour and credit, of power and authority, of prudence and probity, and who might be truſted with ſuch an affair, and their report believed: they were not indeed princes of the higheſt rank, not the ſame that aſſiſted in taking the numbers of the people, who were captains over their ſeveral tribes, as in ch. i. 4—16. and ii. 2, 3, &c. but were inferior princes and rulers, perhaps rulers of thouſands.

[l] יִרֹק יָרַק ſpuendo ſpuiſſet, Pagninus, Montanus, Fagius, Druſius. [m] Travels, &c. p. 82. [n] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 8. p. 24. & Meyer. Annotat. in ib. p. 338. [o] Ib. ut ſupra. Peſikta, Chaſkunĭ.

℣. 3. And Moſes by the commandment of the Lord, &c.] By his power, permiſſion and leave, as Jarchi, that there might be no delay through his means: ſent them from the wilderneſs of Paran; from Rithmah or Kadeſh Barnea, which ſeem to be one and the ſame place in that wilderneſs: this, as before obſerved, was on the 29th day of Sivan: all thoſe were heads of the children of Iſrael; were not mean and vulgar men, but perſons of rule, who bore ſome office of magiſtracy and government among the people in their reſpective tribes.

℣. 4. And theſe were their names, &c.] From hence to the end of the 15th verſe there is nothing but the names of the ſaid perſons, whoſe ſons they were, and of what tribe; and the ſeveral tribes are mentioned, not according to the order of the birth of the patriarchs, nor according to the dignity of their mothers that bore them, but very likely, according to the order in which they were ſent, two by two, to ſearch the land; for had they went all twelve in a body, they would have been liable to ſuſpicion: the ſignification of their names is of no importance to know, and will give us no light into their characters or the reaſon of their choice, nor are their parents elſewhere taken notice of, nor any of them but Joſhua and Caleb, of whom we ſhall hear more hereafter.

℣. 16. Theſe are the names of the men which Moſes ſent to ſpy out the land, &c.] Which is obſerved after the catalogue is given of them, and this is repeated that their names may be taken notice of, which ſtand on record to the diſgrace of the greater number of them, and to the honour of two only, Joſhua and Caleb; and on the former the following remark is made; and Moſes called Oſhea the ſon of Nun, Jehoſhua; whether it was at this time that Moſes gave him this name is not certain; if it was, then he is called ſo before by anticipation, for he is ſeveral times called ſo before this, and even the firſt time we hear of him, Exod. xvii. 9. wherefore Chaſkuni reads it, Moſes had called; but Jarchi thinks it was now given him, and that Moſes prayed for him יה Jah or Jehovah ſave thee from the counſel of the ſpies: the name is the ſame with Jeſus, as appears from Heb. iv. 8. and a type he was of Chriſt the Saviour, whoſe name is ſo called, becauſe he ſaves his people from their ſins, Matt. i. 21. and brings them to heaven, as Joſhua was the inſtrument of ſaving the Iſraelites and bringing them into the land of Canaan.

℣. 17. And Moſes ſent them to ſpy out the land of Canaan, &c.] He ſent them from Kadeſh Barnea, as Caleb affirms, Joſh. xiv. 7. and ſaid unto them, go ye up this way ſouthward; pointing as it were with his finger, which way they ſhould go, even up ſuch a hill ſouthward; and which, as Aben Ezra obſerves, was not the ſouth of the camp but the ſouth of the land of Canaan; and who further obſerves, that it is well known that Egypt, from whence the Iſraelites now came, was to the ſouth of the land of Iſrael, of which this is a demonſtration; the latitude of Egypt is leſs than thirty degrees, and the latitude of Jeruſalem is thirty-three, and the wilderneſs of Paran was in the ſouth of the land of Egypt: it ſhould be rendered by the ſouth, as in ℣. 22. or from the ſouth [p], ſince the Iſraelites muſt go northward, as a learned man [q] obſerves, to enter into the land of Canaan: now this ſouth part of Canaan afterwards belonged to the tribe of Judah, and lying ſouthward and mountainous, was dry and barren, Joſh. xv. 1, 19. and was, as Jarchi ſays, the dregs of the land of Iſrael; and here, as he obſerves, the ſame method was taken as merchants do, who, when they ſhew their goods, ſhew the worſt firſt, and then the beſt: and go up into the mountain; which was inhabited by the Amorites, Deut. i. 44. and was afterwards called the mountainous or hill-country of Judea, Luke i. 39, 65.

℣. 18. And ſee the land what it is, and the people that dwelleth therein, &c.] The ſituation and condition of the country, and the nature, temper, diſpoſition, and conſtitution of the inhabitants, by which it might be judged, whether it was a deſireable thing to poſſeſs it, and whether it was practicable to ſubdue and take it: whether they be ſtrong or weak, few or many; whether able bodied men fit for war, and of ſpirit, ſtrength, and courage, or feeble and puſillanimous, weak, and timorous; and whether their number was ſmall or great, by which they would be capable of judging, whether they were in a ſtate and condition to defend themſelves or not, and whether a conqueſt of them was eaſy or no; the laſt of the two things in the preceding clauſe is firſt particularly explained and enlarged upon, as is uſual in the Hebrew language.

℣. 19. And what the land is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad, &c.] Whether the air is good, the climate temperate, and the earth well watered, and has good convenience of ſprings, fountains, and rivers, and ſo wholeſome or healthful; or otherwiſe, which is the firſt thing they were directed to obſerve, though here put in the ſecond place: and what cities they be they dwell in, whether in tents or ſtrong holds; whether in tents, as the Iſraelites now lived, and as the Kedarenes, as Aben Ezra notes, and other Arabians, who encamped camped in tents, or who dwelt in villages, and unwalled towns, unfortified cities, according to the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; or whether in fortified cities, towns and garrisons; by which it would appear whether it would be easy to come at them, and fall upon them, or difficult to subdue and conquer them; for if their cities were fortified, it would not be so easy to take them, and would require time. Jarchi thinks, that by this it might be known whether they were men of strength and courage, or whether weak and fearful persons; seeing if they dwelt in villages they were strong men, and depended on their own strength, but if they dwelt in fortified cities, they were weak.

[p] בנגב per meridianam plagam, V. L. hac meridiana plaga, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [q] Biſhop Clayton's Chronolgy of the Hebrew Bible, p. 392.

℣. 20. And what the land is, whether it be fat or lean, &c.] That is, what the soil of it is, whether it be rich and fertile, or whether it be poor and barren, which would be seen by the fruits it produced, this being now the fruitful season of the year; and so the Targum of Jonathan, "and what "is the praise of the land, whether its fruits are "fat or lean;" plump and full, rich and juicy, or otherwise, as their grapes, olives, &c. whether it was a land flowing with milk and honey, abounding with all good things, and those of the best sort, or no: whether there be wood thereon or not; timber for building, and other manual operations, or wood for fuel, which are great conveniences in a country; though the Targum of Jonathan interprets it of fruit-bearing trees, which bear fruits fit for eating, or not, as apples, pears, figs, pomegranates, &c. and be ye of good courage; and not be afraid of being taken up for spies, suggesting, that the power and providence of God would protect and preserve them, in which they should put their trust, and be of good heart: and bring of the fruit of the land; as a sample and specimen of what it brought forth, which would serve to encourage and animate the people in general, to go up and possess it: now the time was the time of the first ripe grapes; when they, and the other summer fruits were coming to their perfection; and which was a proper season to see them in, and bring a sample of them; though Chaskuni suggests, that it was a more dangerous time to bring off fruit, because the keepers of the vineyards were then there; and hence they needed strengthening, and are bid to be of good courage; the Targum of Jonathan is, "the day on which they went was the 29th of the "month Sivan, the time of the first ripe grapes;" and as this month answers to part of our May and part of June, and it being at the latter end of that month, it must be about the middle of June; by which we may observe the forwardness of grapes in the land of Canaan, the time of vintage now drawing nigh.

℣. 21. So they went up and searched the land, &c.] Went up the mountains as they were directed, and passed through the whole land; diligently enquired into every thing material belonging to it, according to their instructions, and made their observations on it, and on the inhabitants, and their habitations: from the wilderness of Zin unto Rehob, as men come to Hamath; this wilderness, from whence they went, seems to be the same with the wilderness of Paran, called Zin; perhaps from the multitude of thorns in it; but different from the wilderness of Sin, Exod. xvi. 1. which was nearer Egypt; but this was on the south quarter of the land of Canaan, along by the coast of Edom; ch. xxxiv. 3. Josh. xv. 1. Rehob, they are said to come to first from thence, was in the tribe of Asher in after-times, Josh. xix. 28. and lay to the north or north-west of the land of Canaan. Jerom says [r], that in his times there was a village called Rooba, four miles from Scythopolis. Hamath was the northern boundary of the land of Israel, and was in the tribe of Naphtali, when it came into the hands of the Israelites, and lay to the north-east, as the former place to the north-west, ch. xxxiv. 7, 8. Josh. xix. 35. so that their direction, as they went, was south and north, and west and east: their journey is described by Jarchi thus; they went on the borders of it, length and breadth, in the form of the letter ר gamma; they went on the south border from the east corner to the west corner, as Moses commanded them: get you up this way southward; the way of the south-east-border unto the sea, which is the western border; and from thence they returned, and went on all the western border by the sea-shore, until they came to Hamath, which is by mount Hor, at the north-west corner; but Hamath was on the north-east; nor did they go thither, it was too far off for them, but they went as far as Rehob, which was as men go to Hamath, as it should be rendered, that is, it lay in the way to Hamath.

℣. 22. And they ascended by the south, &c.] When they returned, after they had searched the land, then they came into the south-country again, which was in their way to Kadesh, where the camp of Israel remained; they are said to ascend, because of the hill-country they again came to; for their coming to Hebron, and carrying a cluster of grapes from that place, not far from thence, was upon their return: and came unto Hebron; which was in the hill-country of Judea, in the tribe of Judah afterwards, which before was called Kirjath Arba; in the original text it is, he came [s], Caleb, and he only, according to Jarchi and the Rabbins in Abendana; and certain it is that he was there, and he had this place, on which his feet trod, given him for an inheritance, Josh. xiv. 9, 13, 14, 15. and it is very probable, that the spies did not go together, but perhaps singly, and at most but two together, which seems to be the case here by what follows: where Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmai, the children of Anak were; where Anak, and these his three sons dwelt, who were giants; and perhaps from thence Hebron before this was called Kirjath Arbah, the city of the four; or from Arba, the father of Anak: now Hebron was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt; or Tanais, as the Targum of Jonathan, whence one of the nomes of Egypt was called the Tanitic nome: it was the metropolis of that country, and may be observed to abate the pride and vanity of that kingdom, which boasted of its antiquity. Josephus says [t], that the inhabitants of Hebron not only reckoned it more ancient than any of the cities of the land, but than Memphis in Egypt, accounting it (then in his time) 2300 years old; but who it was built by, is not certain; Jarchi thinks it is possible that Ham built Hebron for Canaan his younger son, before he built Zoan for Mizrain his eldest son; which does not seem likely.

℣. 23. And they came unto the brook of Eshcol, &c.] Or valley of Eshcol [u], which is here so called by anticipation from the following circumstance; and perhaps had not this name given it, until the chil-

[r] De loc. Heb. fol. 94. A.

[s] ויבא & venit, Montanus, Tigurine version, Drusius, so Onkelos; & venit Caleb, Junius & Tremellius.

[t] De bello Jud. l. 5. c. 9. §. 7.

[u] נחל vallem, Pagninus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Drusius.

children of Iſrael were poſſeſſed of the land, and then they called it ſo, in memory of what was done here at this time; it was not far from Hebron, as may be concluded from hence; and ſo Jerom, relating the travels of Paula in thoſe parts, ſays [w], ſhe came from Betzur to Eſhcol, where having ſeen the little cells of Sarah, the cradle of Iſaac, and the traces of the oak of Abraham, under which he ſaw the day of Chriſt, and was glad, riſing up from thence, ſhe went up to Hebron; which ſhows this Eſhcol to be near Hebron, and to lie low, and was a valley; ſee Deut. i. 24: and cut down from thence a branch, with one cluſter of grapes; in this valley was a vineyard, or at leaſt a vine-tree, on which they obſerved one cluſter, which perhaps was of an uncommon bigneſs, as it ſeems by what follows, and they cut down the branch, and that with it: and they bare it between two upon a ſtaff; it was ſo big; and which was not done only for the eaſe of carrying it, but that it might not have any of its grapes ſqueezed, bruiſed and broken off, but that they might carry it entire and whole for the Iſraelites to behold: theſe two men were probably Caleb and Joſhua; though Jarchi ſays they carried nothing, which is more than he could ſay with certainty. Some hiſtorians report very ſurprizing things of the bigneſs of vines, and the largeneſs of their cluſters, which, when obſerved, this account will not at all ſeem incredible. Strabo ſays [x], it is reported, that in Hyrcania, a vine produced a firkin of wine, metreta, a meaſure of 12 gallons; and that in Margiana, the trunk of a vine was ſo large, that it was as much as two men could graſp with both arms, and bore cluſters of two cubits long [y]; the ſame he ſays [z] of the bigneſs of vines in Mauritania, and of their cluſters being a cubit long; and of others in Carmania being two cubits long, as before [a]: it is reported of the Indian fig-tree, that it ſometimes has 100 figs more or leſs on a branch, and all in a cluſter like grapes; and ſome of the cluſters are ſometimes ſo large as to be carried by two men on a ſtaff [b], as here; and ſome have thought, that it is the fruit here meant; but this is expreſsly called a cluſter of grapes. About half a mile from Eſhcol, as Adrichomius [c] ſays, was the brook or valley of Sorek, which was famous for vines; and it is affirmed by many writers and travellers, that to this day there are vines in that place, which produce cluſters of 25 pounds weight and more; and that in Lebanon, and other parts of Syria, the kernels of grapes are as big as a man's thumb [d]. Leo Africanus ſpeaks [e] of grapes in ſome parts of Africa ſomewhat red, which from their bigneſs are called hens eggs: and the Talmudiſts [f] are extravagant, and beyond all belief, in the account they give of the vines in the land of Canaan, and of the cluſters of them, and the quantity of wine they had from them; and of this cluſter they ſuppoſe [g], that the two ſpoken of are not to be underſtood of men, but of bars or ſtaves; and that this cluſter was carried by eight, four at the four ends of the two ſtaves, and that there were beſides, two ſtaves or bars that went acroſs, at the ends of which were four more men, who carried the cluſter hanging in the middle; a figure of which Wagenſeil [h] has given us: but Philo the Jew [i] has given a better account of it, and more agreeable to the ſcripture, as that it was put upon a ſtaff, and hung at the middle of it, the ends of which were laid on the ſhoulders of two young men, who carried it; though he adds, that ſuch was the weight of it, that theſe were relieved by others in ſucceſſion: they brought of the pomegranates, and of the figs; that is, others of them did; which ſeems to favour the notion that they were in a body, and that there were more than two together at this place; but even theſe two might be able to bring ſome of this ſort of fruit along with them, as well as bear the cluſter of grapes; beſides, the text does not oblige us to underſtand it of the ſame perſons in the ſame place.

℣. 24. The place was called the brook of Eſhcol, &c.] That is, in after-times: becauſe of the cluſter of grapes which the children of Iſrael cut down from thence; the word Eſhcol ſignifying a cluſter; and this cluſter was typical of Chriſt, who may be compared to this, as he is to a cluſter of camphire, Cant. i. 14. there being in him a cluſter of all perfections, of all the perfections of deity, the wholefulneſs of the Godhead dwelling bodily in him; and of all human perfections, he being in all things like unto his people, excepting ſin; and there being alſo a cluſter of all the graces and gifts of the Spirit without meaſure in him, as man; and of all the bleſſings of grace for his people, as mediator; and of all the exceeding great and precious promiſes of the covenant of grace. The ſtaff, on which this was carried, may denote the miniſtration of the goſpel, which may ſeem mean and deſpicable in itſelf, but is the means of carrying the name of Chriſt, and the things of Chriſt, about in the world; ſee Acts ix. 15. and the two men which bore it, may ſignify the prophets of the Old Teſtament, and the miniſters of the New, who both agree and join together in ſetting forth the perſon, offices and grace of Chriſt. Moreover, this cluſter may be an emblem of the Spirit of God, and his grace, and of the rich experience the people of God have of it in this preſent life, whilſt travellers in the wilderneſs, as a taſte and earneſt of the future glory, and happineſs in the heavenly Canaan.

℣. 25. And they returned from ſearching the land after forty days.] The Targum of Jonathan adds, on the eighth day of the month Ab, which anſwers to part of July and part of Auguſt; ſo that this muſt be towards the latter end of July: ſome Jewiſh writers [k] ſay, it was the ninth of Ab; hence the tradition, that it was decreed on the ninth of Ab concerning their fathers, that they ſhould not enter into the land [l].

℣. 26. And they went, and came to Moſes, and to Aaron, &c.] They proceeded on their journey from Eſhcol, till they came to the camp of Iſrael; and as ſoon as they came there, went directly to Moſes and to Aaron, before they went into their own tents, as Aben Ezra obſerves: and to all the congregation of Iſrael unto the wilderneſs of Paran, to Kadeſh; that is, Kadeſh-barnea, as appears from Joſh. xiv. 7. called for brevity ſake Kadeſh; but is by ſome thought to be different from the Kadeſh in ch. xx. 1. to which the Iſraelites came not until 38 years after this time: this Kadeſh was in the wilderneſs of Paran, and the ſame with Rithmah, or was near it, where the Iſraelites were now encamped, camped, and had remained all the time the ſpies were gone: the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan call this place Rekem, as they do in Gen. xvi. 14. and brought back word unto them, and to all the congregation; to Moſes and Aaron, and the principal heads of the body of the people aſſembled together: to theſe they related an account of their tour through the land of Canaan, what they had met with, and what obſervations they had made, agreeable to the inſtructions that had been given them when they ſet out: and ſhewed them the fruit of the land; which they had brought with them, the bunch of grapes, pomegranates and figs.

[w] Epitaph. Paulæ, fol. 59. G. H. [x] Geograph. l. 2. p. 50. [y] Ib. [z] Ib. l. 17. p. 568. [a] Ib. l. 15. p. 500. [b] Salmuth. in Pancirol. rer. memorab. par. 2. p. 55. [c] Theatrum Terræ ſacr. p. 24. [d] Huet. Alnetan. Quæſt. l. 2. c. 12. §. 23. [e] Deſcript. Africæ, l. 2. p. 204. [f] T. Bab. Cetubot, fol. 111. 2. [g] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 34. 1. [h] Sotah, p. 707, 708. [i] De Vita Moſis, l. 1. p. 638. [k] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 8. p. 24. [l] Miſn. Taanith, c. 4. §. 7.

℣. 27. And they told him, &c.] Moſes, who was the chief ruler whom they addreſſed, and to whom they directed their ſpeech: and ſaid, we came unto the land whither thou ſenteſt us; the land of Canaan, which they were ſent by Moſes to ſpy; this was ſaid by ten of them or by one of them as their mouth; for Caleb and Joſhua did not join with them in the following account, as appears from ℣. 30. and ſurely it floweth with milk and honey; they own that the land anſwered to the deſcription which the Lord had given of it when it was promiſed them by him, Exod. iii. 8. and this is the fruit of it; pointing to the bunch of grapes, the pomegranates and figs; not that theſe were a proof of its flowing with milk and honey, at leaſt in a literal ſenſe, but of the goodneſs and fruitfulneſs of the land: though the luxury of Bacchus the god of wine, is by the poet [m] deſcribed, not only by a fountain of wine, but by rivers of milk and flows of honey.

℣. 28. Nevertheleſs the people be ſtrong that dwell in the land, &c.] Though ſo plentiful and fruitful and deſirable to enjoy, yet this objection lay againſt all hopes and even attempts to poſſeſs it, as they thought; the ſtrength of the people, its preſent inhabitants, both in body and mind, being perſons of a large and ſome of a prodigious ſtature, and to all appearance men of valour and courage: and the cities are walled and very great; and ſo inacceſſible, and able to hold out a long ſiege, and repel what force may be brought againſt them; ſo that to attack them would be to little purpoſe: and moreover we ſaw the children of Anak there; whom they had heard of before, and ſo had the congregation of Iſrael, and many terrible and frightful ſtories were told of them, and theſe they now ſaw with their eyes, and very formidable they appeared to them; this ſeems to prove that others beſide Caleb and Joſhua were at Hebron, where the ſons of Anak lived, ℣. 22. and ſo they might, and yet not be together with them.

℣. 29. The Amalekites dwell in the land of the ſouth, &c.] On the ſouthern ſide of the land of Canaan; not in it, for they were not Canaanites, but neighbours to them, and lay neareſt to the camp of Iſrael, and at the entrance into the land of Canaan; and as they were enemies of Iſrael, as appears from an attack upon them quickly after they came from the Red Sea, in Rephidim, Exod. xvii. 8. and friends to the Canaanites, they would no doubt oppoſe their paſſage into their land as they did, ch. xiv. 43, 45. this is one difficulty in the way of poſſeſſing the land hinted at, others follow: and the Hittites, and the Jebuſites, and the Amorites dwell in the mountains; and guard the paſſes there; ſo that ſhould they eſcape the Amalekites, or get the better of them, they would not be able to paſs the mountains, being ſo well inhabited and defended; the Hittites ſeem to dwell about mount Lebanon, Joſh. i. 4. the Jebuſites inhabited the mountains about Jeruſalem, and that itſelf, which was called by them Jebus, and from which they were not diſpoſſeſſed until the times of David, 1 Chron. xi. 4, 5. and the Amorites were poſſeſſed of the mountain which was on the borders of the land, next to the place where Iſrael now were, Deut. i. 20. and the Canaanites dwell by the ſea; theſe dwelt both on the eaſt and on the weſt of the land, Joſh. xi. 3. ſo that the weſtern Canaanites dwelt on the ſhore of the Mediterranean ſea, which is often put for the weſt in ſcripture; and the eaſtern Canaanites dwelt by the Dead Sea, or by the ſea of Tiberias, called ſometimes the lake of Geneſaret, and ſeems the rather to be meant here by what follows: and by the coaſt of Jordan; ſo that this river was unpaſſable by them; for by all this they would ſuggeſt that all avenues and paſſes were ſtopped up, ſo that it was a vain thing to attempt entrance into the land, or to expect ever to poſſeſs it.

℣. 30. And Caleb ſtilled the people before Moſes, &c.] In his preſence, they ſtanding before him; or unto Moſes [n], as they were coming to him with open mouth againſt him; for upon the above report of the ſpies they began to murmur and mutiny, and to ſpeak againſt Moſes for bringing them out of Egypt into a wilderneſs, feeding them with vain hopes of a country which they were never likely to enjoy; and in their wrath they might be making up to him, threatening to pull him to pieces, but were reſtrained by Caleb, who ſignified he had ſomething to ſay to them, to which they attended, he being one of the ſpies, and for their principal tribe, the tribe of Judah that went foremoſt; the Targum of Jonothan is, "Caleb ſilenced the people, and they attended to Moſes;" or hearkened to him, to what he ſaid, which though not here related, is in Deut. i. 29, 30. which yet they did not give credit to, though they heard what he had to ſay: and ſaid, let us go up at once and poſſeſs it; without any delay, for there is nothing more to be done than to enter and take poſſeſſion; this he ſaid, truſting to the promiſe of God, who is faithful, and to his power who is able to perform: for we are well able to overcome it; eſpecially having God on their ſide, who had promiſed to bring them into it, and put them in the poſſeſſion of it; and indeed, humanly ſpeaking, they ſeemed quite ſufficient for ſuch an undertaking, being upwards of 600,000 men fit for war, marſhalled under their proper ſtandards, with captains over each tribe, and having ſuch brave, wiſe and courageous commanders and generals, Moſes and Joſhua, who had given ſignal inſtances of their prudence and bravery already. What is it ſuch an army, under proper directions, might not undertake? One would think, in all human probability, they were able to conquer a much greater country than the land of Canaan.

℣. 31. But the men that went up with him, &c.] With Caleb, all but Joſhua: the other ten ſaid we be not able to go up againſt the people; this they had not ſaid before, though they plainly ſuggeſted it, and to make the people believe this, had repreſented the inhabitants of the land of Canaan in the light they did; but now, in direct oppoſition to Caleb, fully expreſſed it, giving this reaſon for it: for they are ſtronger than we; being both of a larger ſize and more numerous.

℣. 32.

[m] Vinique fontem, &c. Horat. Carmin. l. 2. Ode 19. Junius & Tremellius, Druſius.

[n] אל משה ad Moſeh, Montanus; venientem ad Moſem,

℣. 32. And they brought up an evil report of the land which they had ſearched, unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] Before, they gave a good report of the land itſelf, as a very fruitful one, anſwering to their expectations and wiſhes; but now they change their language, and give a different account of it; which ſhows their want of integrity, and to what length an oppoſition carried them, to ſay things contrary to their real ſentiments, and to what they themſelves had ſaid before: ſaying, the land through which we have gone to ſearch it, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof; the meaning ſeems to be, that it was ſo barren and unfruitful that it did not produce food ſufficient for the inhabitants of it, who were ready to ſtarve, and many did ſtarve through want, and ſo was the reverſe of what they had before ſaid; for which reaſon, Guſſetius [o] thinks the ſenſe is, that the land was the food and nouriſhment of its inhabitants, and that there was ſuch plenty in it that it wanted not any foreign aſſiſtance in any reſpect whatever. Some think that it was continually embroiled in inteſtine wars, in which they deſtroyed one another; but then this was no argument againſt, but for their going up againſt them, ſince through the diviſions among themſelves they might reaſonably hope the better to ſucceed; or it eat them up with diſeaſes, as the Targum of Jonathan adds, and ſo they would repreſent it, though a fruitful land, yet a very unhealthful one, in which the natives could not live, and much leſs ſtrangers; and ſo Aben Ezra and Ben Gerſom interpret it of the badneſs of the air of the country, as being very unwholeſome and pernicious. Jarchi repreſents them as ſaying, that wherever they came they ſaw them burying their dead, as if there was a plague among them; and be it ſo that there was, which is not unlikely, ſince the Lord promiſed to ſend hornets before them, which ſome interpret of diſeaſes ſent, Exod. xxiii. 28. and which was in their favour, ſince hereby the number of their enemies would be leſſened and they would be weakened, and in a bad condition to oppoſe them: and all the people that we ſaw in it, are men of a great ſtature; or men of meaſures [p], of a large meaſure, above the common meaſure of men; but it may be juſtly queſtioned whether they ſpoke truth; for though they might ſee ſome that exceeded in height men in common, yet it is not credible that all they ſaw were of ſuch a ſize; ſince they were not only at Hebron and ſaw the giants there who were ſuch, but they went through the land, as in the preceding clauſe, and all they met with cannot be ſuppoſed to be of ſuch a meaſure.

℣. 33. And there we ſaw the giants, &c.] Not throughout the land, and yet it is ſo expreſſed, and in ſuch connexion with what goes before, that it might be ſo underſtood, and as they might chuſe it ſhould; that as there were men every where of an uncommon bigneſs, and were generally ſo, there were ſome larger than they in all places, of a prodigious ſize, of a gigantic ſtature; and yet this was only in Hebron where they ſaw them: the ſons of Anak; whoſe names are given, ℣. 22. and there were but three of them: which came of the giants; they were of the race of giants; for not only Anak their father, but Arba their grandfather was one; Joſh. xiv. 15. and xv. 13. and we were in our own ſight as graſshoppers; little diminutive creatures in compariſon of them; an hyperbolical exaggeration of the greatneſs of the giants, and of their own littleneſs: and ſo we were in their ſight; but this they could not be ſo certain of, and could only make conjectures by their neglect or ſupercilious treatment of them. Jarchi makes them to ſpeak of them more diminutively ſtill, as that they heard thoſe giants ſaying one to another, "there are ants in the vineyards like men."

CHAP. XIV.

THIS chapter treats of the murmurings of the children of Iſrael upon the evil report of the ſpies, which greatly diſtreſſed Moſes and Aaron, ℣. 1—5. and of the endeavours of Joſhua and Caleb to quiet the minds of the people with a good account of the land, and of the eaſy conqueſt of it, but to no purpoſe, ℣. 6—10. and of the Lord's threatening to deſtroy the people with the peſtilence, ℣. 11, 12. and of the interceſſion of Moſes for them, which ſo far ſucceeded as to prevent their immediate deſtruction, ℣. 13—20. nevertheleſs they are aſſured again and again, in the ſtrongeſt terms, that none of them but Joſhua and Caleb ſhould enter into the land, but their carcaſes ſhould fall in the wilderneſs, even all the murmurers of twenty years old and upwards, ℣. 21—35. and the ten men that brought the evil report of the good land died of a plague immediately, but the other two lived, ℣. 36, 37, 38. and the body of the people that attempted to go up the mountain and enter the land, were ſmitten and diſcomfited by their enemies, after they had with concern heard what the Lord threatened them with, ℣. 39—45.

℣. 1. And all the congregation lifted up their voice and cried, &c.] This is not to be underſtood of every individual in the congregation of Iſrael, but of the princes, heads, and elders of the people that were with Moſes and Aaron when the report of the ſpies was made; though indeed the report might quickly ſpread throughout the body of the people, and occaſion a general outcry, which was very loud and clamorous, and attended with all the ſigns of diſtreſs imaginable, in ſhrieks and tears and lamentations: and the people wept that night; perhaps throughout the night; could get no ſleep nor reſt all the night, but ſpent it in weeping and crying, at the thought of their condition and circumſtances, and the diſappointments they had met with, as they conceived of entering into and poſſeſſing the land.

℣. 2. And all the children of Iſrael murmured againſt Moſes, and againſt Aaron, &c.] They being the inſtruments of bringing them out of Egypt, and conducting them hither: and the whole congregation ſaid unto them; ſome of them, the reſt aſſenting to it by their cries and tears and geſtures: would God we had died in the land of Egypt; and then what they left behind they thought might have come into the hands of their children or relations; but now they concluded it would become a prey to the Canaanites: or would God we had died in this wilderneſs; the wilderneſs of Paran, at Taberah, where many of them had been deſtroyed by fire, and now they wiſh they had periſhed with them.

℣. 3. Wherefore hath the Lord brought us unto this

[o] Ebr. Comment. p. 40.

[p] אנשי מדות, Viri menſurarum, Montanus, Vatablus, Druſius.

this land, &c.] Unto the borders of it: their murmuring did not ceaſe at Moſes and Aaron, the inſtruments, but proceeded againſt God himſelf, who had done ſuch wonderful things for them, not only in bringing them out of Egypt, but ſince they had been in the wilderneſs; and yet ſo ungrateful to complain of him and argue with him about favours beſtowed on them, as if they were injuries done to them; and particularly as if God had no other intention in bringing them out of Egypt to the place where they were, but to fall by the ſword; the ſword of the Canaanites, as the Targum of Jonathan adds: that our wives and our children ſhould be a prey? to the ſame people; they ſuppoſed they ſhould be killed, their wives abuſed, and their children made ſlaves of: were it not better for us to return into Egypt? and ſo eſcape the hands of the inhabitants of Canaan, of whom they had terrible apprehenſions from the report made of them.

℣. 4. And they ſaid one to another, let us make a captain, &c.] An head over them inſtead of Moſes, who they knew would never take the government and care of them, ſhould they reſolve to return to Egypt as they propoſed, and beſides were now ſo diſaffected to him, that they might not care he ſhould. Captains they had over their ſeveral tribes, but they choſe to have one chief commander and general over them all; Nehemiah ſays they did appoint one; which they either actually did, or this propoſal was interpreted as if really put in execution, they being ſo deſirous of it, and bent upon it; wherefore their will is taken for the deed, and ſo underſtood; ſee Neh. ix. 17. and let us return into Egypt; which was downright madneſs, as ſome interpreters have juſtly obſerved; they muſt not only expect to be deſerted by Moſes, through whoſe means ſo many miracles had been wrought for them, and who was ſo wiſe and faithful a governour of them; and by Aaron their prieſt, who offered their ſacrifices, and prayed for them, and bleſſed them; and by ſuch a valiant general as Joſhua, who had fought for them againſt their enemies; but by the Lord himſelf, ſo that they could not expect the manna to be continued as food for them, nor the pillar of cloud and fire as a guide unto them, nor to be protected from their enemies, on the borders of whoſe countries they muſt paſs; ſo that their deſtruction in the wilderneſs ſeemed inevitable; and if they could have ſurmounted theſe and other difficulties, what manner of reception could they expect to find in Egypt, on whoſe account all the firſtborn of man and beaſt among them were ſlain, whom they had ſpoiled of their riches, and whoſe king and his army, and in it perhaps the flower of the nation, were drowned in the Red Sea, for their ſakes? What therefore could they think of, if they had any ſober thought at all, but utter ruin, ſhould they return there again?

℣. 5. Then Moſes and Aaron fell on their faces, &c.] Through ſhame and confuſion of face for them, at hearing ſo ſhocking a propoſal made, and ſuch wretched ingratitude expreſſed; they bluſhed at it, and were in the utmoſt diſtreſs on account of it, and therefore threw themſelves into this poſture; or it may be this was done either to beg of them that they would lay aſide all thoughts of this kind, or to ſupplicate the divine Majeſty that he would convince them of their ſin and folly, and give them repentance for it and forgiveneſs of it; and this they did before all the congregation of the children of Iſrael; to affect them the more with a ſenſe of their ſin and danger.

℣. 6. And Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, &c.] Roſe up and interpoſed in this affair, looking upon themſelves under a ſpecial obligation ſo to do, as they were capable of confronting the other ſpies, and contradicting what they had ſaid: which were of them that ſearched the land; they were two of that number, and were the more concerned to hear ſuch a falſe account given, and diſtreſſed to obſerve the mutiny of the people, and therefore judged themſelves in duty bound to do all they could to ſtop it: rent their clothes; in token of ſorrow for the ſins of the people, and at their blaſphemy and ingratitude againſt God, and in dread of his wrath and fury breaking forth upon them.

℣. 7. And they ſpake unto all the company of the children of Iſrael, &c.] To as many as could hear them, to the heads of them: ſaying, the land which we paſſed through to ſearch it, is an exceeding good land; they obſerve that they were of the number of the ſpies that were appointed and ſent to ſearch the land of Canaan, and they had ſearched it, and therefore could give an account of it from their own knowledge; and they had not only entered into it, or juſt looked at a part of it, but they had gone through it, and taken a general ſurvey of it; and they could not but in truth and juſtice ſay of it, that it was a good land, delightful, healthful, and fruitful; yea very very good [q], exceeding exceeding good, ſuperlatively good, good beyond expreſſion; they were not able with words to ſet forth the goodneſs of it; this they averred, in oppoſition to the ill report the other ſpies had given of it.

℣. 8. If the Lord delight in us, &c.] Continue to delight in them as he had, and as appears by what he had done for them in Egypt, at the Red Sea, and in the wilderneſs; ſee Deut. x. 15. he will bring us into this land, and give it us, as he has promiſed, a land which floweth with milk and honey; as the Lord himſelf had deſcribed it, and as the unbelieving ſpies themſelves had owned it; ch. xiii. 27.

℣. 9. Only rebel not ye againſt the Lord, &c.] Nothing, it is ſuggeſted, could hinder them from the poſſeſſion of it but their rebellion againſt the Lord; which might provoke him to cut them off by his immediate hand, or to deliver them into the hands of their enemies; for rebellion is a dreadful ſin, and highly provoking, 1 Sam. xv. 23. neither fear ye the people of the land; on account of their number, ſtrength, and the walled cities they dwell in; they had nothing to fear from them, ſo be it they feared the Lord, and were not diſobedient to him: for they are bread for us; as eaſy to be cut to pieces, and to be devoured, conſumed, and deſtroyed as thoroughly, as bread is when eaten; and their fields, vineyards, all they have without and within, even all their ſubſtance, will be a prey to us, and furniſh out ſufficient proviſion for us, on which we may pleaſantly and plentifully live, as on bread; ſee Pſ. xiv. 4. their defence is departed from them; they had no heart nor ſpirit left in them; no courage to defend themſelves, and therefore the ſtrength of their bodies and their walled towns would be of no avail unto them; them; see Josh. ii. 9, 10, 11. or their shadow[r]; which covered and protected them, the providence of God which was over them, and continued them in the land, and quiet possession of it, until the measure of their iniquity was filled up, and the time come for his people Israel to inhabit it; but now it was departed: and the Lord is with us; as was evident by the cloud upon the tabernacle, and by the manna being spread around their camp every morning: the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan are, "the word of the Lord is for our help": fear them not; the Canaanites, notwithstanding the strength of their bodies, or of their cities, the Lord is mightier than they.

[q] טובה הארץ מאד מאד bona terra, valde valde, Montanus, Vatablus.

℣. 10. But all the congregation bade stone them with stones, &c.] Namely, Joshua and Caleb, who had made such a faithful report of the good land, and had delivered such an animating and encouraging speech to the people. This is not to be understood of the body of the people, and of all the individuals thereof, for who then should they bid to stone Joshua and Caleb? unless the sense is, that they stirred up and animated one another to it; but rather it means the princes and heads of the congregation, who commanded the common people to rise up and stone them; for notwithstanding the affecting behaviour of Moses and Aaron, and the arguments of Joshua and Caleb, they still persisted in their mutiny and rebellion, until the Lord himself appeared as he did: and the glory of the Lord appeared in the tabernacle of the congregation, before all the children of Israel; the Shekinah, or divine majesty, which dwelt between the cherubim in the most holy place, came into the court of the tabernacle; for neither in the holy nor in the most holy place could the people see it, or the token of it: in Deut. xxxi. 15. it is said, the pillar of cloud stood over the door of the tabernacle; and Noldius[s] renders it here, and the glory of the Lord appeared above the tabernacle of the congregation; with which agree the Targum of Jonathan and the Vulgate Latin and Septuagint versions; and so Jarchi says, the cloud descended there, and from thence very probably some coruscations, or flashes of lightning came forth, which plainly shewed the Lord was there; and this was done to terrify the people, and restrain them from their evil purposes; and to encourage the servants of the Lord, who hereby might expect the divine protection.

℣. 11. And the Lord said unto Moses, &c.] Out of the cloud upon the tabernacle: how long will this people provoke me? which suggests that they had often provoked him, and had done it long ago, and still continued to do so; and he had long bore their provocations; but it was not reasonable, nor could it be expected by Moses or any other, that he would bear them much longer: and how long will it be ere they believe me; unbelief was a sin they had often and long been guilty of, and which greatly prevailed among them, and was the root of all their murmurings, mutiny and rebellion; and what was highly provoking to the Lord, since they ought to have believed him, and that he was able to make good, and would make good his promises to them: for all the signs which I have shewed among them; the wonders and miracles he had wrought in Egypt, at the Red Sea, and in the wilderness, and in their sight; on account of which they should have given credit to his word, and which were strong aggravations of their unbelief; and is the true reason why they entered not into the good land; Heb. iii. 18, 19.

℣. 12. I will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them, &c.] Deprive them of inhabiting the land; so as many as died of the pestilence were even all the spies who brought an evil report of the good land, ℣. 37. with respect to the body of the people, this is to be considered not as a peremptory decree or a determined point; but is delivered partly by way of proposal to Moses, to draw out from him what he would say to it; and partly by way of threatening to the people, to bring them to a sense of their sin and repentance for it: and will make of thee a greater nation, and mightier than they; this anticipates an objection that might be made, should the people of Israel be cut off by the plague, and so disinherited of the land of Canaan, what will become of the oath of God made to their fathers? to which the answer is, it would be fulfilled in making the posterity of Moses as great or a greater and more powerful nation than Israel now was, and by introducing them into the land of Canaan, who would be of the seed of the fathers of Israel, as Jarchi observes, as those people were; and this was said to prove Moses, and try his affection to the people of Israel; and give him an opportunity of shewing his public and disinterested spirit.

℣. 13. And Moses said unto the Lord, &c.] In an abrupt manner, as the following words shew, his mind being greatly disturbed and distressed by the above threatening: then the Egyptians shall hear it; that the Lord had smitten the Israelites with the pestilence; the Targum of Jonathan interprets it of the children of the Egyptians who were suffocated in the sea: for thou broughtest up this people in thy might from among them; they were once sojourners among them and slaves unto them, and they were delivered from them by the mighty hand of the Lord upon the Egyptians, destroying their first-born; and therefore when they shall hear that the Israelites were all destroyed at once by a pestilence in the wilderness, it will be a pleasure to them, as follows.

℣. 14. And they will tell it to the inhabitants of this land, &c.] The land of Canaan, between which and Egypt there was an intercourse, though not by the way of the wilderness, being neighbours, and their original ancestors brethren, as Mizraim and Canaan were; or they will say[t], and that with joy, as the Targum of Jonathan adds; but what they would say does not appear so plain; either it was that the Israelites were killed in the wilderness, a tale they would tell with pleasure; but that the Canaanites would hear of doubtless before them, and not need their information, since the Israelites were upon their borders; or that the Lord had brought them out of Egypt indeed, but could carry them no farther, could not introduce them into the land he had promised them; or rather they would say to them what follows, for the participle for is not in the text, and may be omitted; and so the sense is, they will tell them, they have heard that thou Lord art among this people; in the tabernacle that was in the midst of them, in the most holy place of it: that thou Lord art seen face to face; as he was by Moses, who was at the head of them: and that thy cloud standeth over them; and sheltered and protected them from the heat

2

[r] צלם umbra eorum, Montanus, Tigurine version, Fagius, Vatablus; so Junius & Tremellius, Piscator.
[s] Concord. Ebr. Part. p. 164. N°. 737.
[t] יאמרו & dicent, Pagninus, Montanus, Drusius, &c.

heat of the ſun in the day-time, when it reſted upon them in their encampment: and that thou goeſt before them, by day-time in a pillar of a cloud, and in a pillar of fire by night; in their journeys; they'll tell of thoſe favours thou haſt ſhown Iſrael; and yet, after all, will obſerve that thou haſt deſtroyed them, which will not redound to thine honour and glory.

℣. 15. Now if thou ſhalt kill all this people, as one man, &c.] Suddenly, and at once, as might be done by a peſtilence; and as 185,000 were ſmitten at once, and as thought by the ſame diſeaſe, by the angel of the Lord in the camp of the Aſſyrians, in after-times, 2 Kings xix. 35: then the nations which have heard the fame of thee; the Egyptians, Canaanites, and others, as Aben Ezra obſerves; who had heard the report of the wonderful things done by him for Iſrael, and of the great favours he had beſtowed upon them; and ſo of his power, and goodneſs, and other perfections diſplayed therein, which made him appear to be preferable to all the gods of the Gentiles: will ſpeak, ſaying; as follows.

℣. 16. Becauſe the Lord was not able to bring this people into the land which he ſware unto them, &c.] That though he brought them out Egypt, he was not able to bring them through the wilderneſs into Canaan; and that though he had wrought many ſigns and wonders for them, he could work no more, his power failed him, he had exhauſted all his might, and could not perform the promiſe and oath he had made: therefore he hath ſlain them in the wilderneſs; becauſe he could not fulfil his word, and ſo made ſhort work of it, deſtroying them all together, which Moſes ſuggeſts would greatly reflect diſhonour on him; and in this he ſhows, that he was more concerned for the glory of God, than for his own.

℣. 17. And now, I beſeech thee, let the power of my Lord be great, &c.] That is, appear to be great; the power of God is great, not only mighty, but almighty; it knows no bounds, nothing is impoſſible with him, he can do whatever he pleaſes, Pſ. cxlvii. 5. his power, and the greatneſs of it, had been ſeen in bringing the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, and through the Red Sea, and in providing for them, protecting and defending them in the wilderneſs; and the requeſt of Moſes is, that it might appear greater and greater in bringing them into the land of promiſe; or elſe he means an exceeding great diſplay of the grace and mercy of God in the forgiveneſs of the ſins of the people; for as the power of God is ſeen in his forbearance and long-ſuffering with the wicked, Rom. ix. 22. much more in the forgiveneſs of the ſins of men, there being more power and virtue in grace to pardon, than there is in ſin to damn; and as it is an indication of ſtrength in men, and of their power over themſelves, when they can rule their own ſpirits, keep under their paſſions, and reſtrain their wrath, and ſhew a forgiving temper, Prov. xvi. 32. ſo it is an inſtance of the power of God to overcome his wrath and anger ſtirred up by the ſins of men; and notwithſtanding their provocations, freely to forgive: pardon of ſin is an act of power, as well as of grace and mercy, ſee Matt. ix. 6. and this ſenſe agrees with what follows. The firſt letter in the word for great is larger than uſual, that it might be taken notice of; and to ſignify the exceeding greatneſs of the power of God, Moſes deſired might be diſplayed in this caſe: and the letter numerically ſignifies ten, and has been thought to reſpect the ten times that Iſrael tempted the Lord, ℣. 22. and to ſuggeſt, that though they had ſo done, yet the grace and mercy of God ſhould ten times exceed the ingratitude of the people[u]: according as thou haſt ſpoken, ſaying; as in Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7. and is as follows.

℣. 18. The Lord is long-ſuffering, &c.] Towards all men, and eſpecially towards his own people: and of great mercy; being abundant in goodneſs, and keeping mercy for thouſands: forgiving iniquity and tranſgreſſion; all ſorts of ſin: and by no means clearing the guilty, viſiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation; which may ſeem to make againſt the plea of Moſes for mercy and forgiveneſs; but the reaſon of theſe words being expreſſed ſeems to be, becauſe they go along with the others in the paſſage referred to, and are no contradiction to the forgiving mercy of God in a way of juſtice; nor did Moſes requeſt to have the guilty cleared from puniſhment altogether, but that God would ſhew mercy, at leaſt to ſuch a degree as not to cut off the whole nation, and leave no poſterity to inherit the land; which is ſuppoſed in viſiting the ſin of the fathers to the third or fourth generation.

℣. 19. Pardon, I beſeech thee, the iniquity of this people, according unto the greatneſs of thy mercy, &c.] Intimating, that though the ſin of this people was great, the mercy of God to pardon was greater; and therefore he intreats that God would deal with them, not according to the greatneſs of their ſins, and the ſtrictneſs of juſtice, but according to the greatneſs of his mercy, who would, and does abundantly pardon: and as thou haſt forgiven this people, from Egypt, even until now; which ſhows both that theſe people had been continually ſinning againſt the Lord, ever ſince they came out of Egypt, notwithſtanding the great goodneſs of God unto them, and that he had as conſtantly pardoned; and therefore it was hoped and intreated, that he would ſtill continue to pardon them, he being the ſame he ever was, and whoſe mercy and goodneſs endure for ever: he had pardoned already ſins of the like kind ſince their coming out of Egypt, as their murmurings for bread in the wilderneſs of Sin, and for water at Rephidim, Exod. xvi. and xvii. and even a greater ſin than theſe, idolatry, or the worſhip of the calf.

℣. 20. And the Lord ſaid, I have pardoned according to thy word.] So as not to kill them utterly as one man; which is an inſtance of his being plenteous in mercy, and ready to forgive; and of the virtue and efficacy of the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man, and of the great regard the Lord has to the prayers of a good man for others. The Jeruſalem Targum is, "and the "Word of the Lord ſaid, lo, I have remitted and "forgiven according to thy word;" which muſt be underſtood of Chriſt, the eſſential Word, and ſhews, according to the ſenſe of the Targumiſt, that he has a power to forgive ſin, and muſt be a divine perſon, for none can forgive ſin but God; ſee Mark ii. 7, 10.

℣. 21. But as truly as I live, &c.] Which is the form of an oath, as the Targum; the Lord ſwears by his life, or by himſelf, becauſe he could ſwear by no greater: all the earth ſhall be filled with the glory of the Lord; this is not the thing ſworn unto or confirmed, but that by which the oath is made and confirmed; and the ſenſe is, that as ſure as the the earth had been filled with the glory of the Lord, as it may be rendered, as it had been with the fame of what he had done in Egypt, and at the Red Sea; or as it ſhould be filled with it in after-times, eſpecially in the kingdom of the Meſſiah in the latter day; ſee Iſ. vi. 3. Hab. ii. 14. ſo ſure the men that had provoked him ſhould not ſee the land of Canaan.

[u] Baal Hatturim in loc. & Buxtorf. Tiberias, c. 14. p. 38.

℣. 22. Becauſe all thoſe men which have ſeen my glory, &c.] His glorious majeſty, or the emblem of it in the cloud, on the tabernacle, which had often appeared to them, and the glorious things done by him; the glory of his power, wiſdom, goodneſs, faithfulneſs and truth, diſplayed in bringing them out of Egypt, through the Red Sea, and thus far in the wilderneſs, even to the borders of the land of Canaan; it ſhould be rendered, not becauſe, but that, for this is the thing ſworn to, or the matter of the oath: and my miracles which I did in Egypt; by the hand of Moſes, both before them, when he was ſent to them, as a proof his divine miſſion, and before Pharaoh and all his court, inflicting plagues upon him and his people: and in the wilderneſs; in raining manna from heaven about their tents, ſending them quails, and giving them water out of the rock: and have tempted me now theſe ten times; which the Jews underſtand preciſely and exactly of ſuch a number, and which they reckon thus*; twice at the ſea, twice concerning water, twice about manna, twice about quails, once by the calf, and once in the wilderneſs of Paran, which laſt and tenth was the preſent temptation: theſe are reckoned a little otherwiſe elſewhere×; but perhaps it may be better, with Aben Ezra, to interpret it of many times, a certain number being put for an uncertain, they having frequently tempted the Lord: and have not hearkened to my voice; neither to his word of promiſe, nor to his word of command, and particularly his late order to go up and poſſeſs the land, Deut. i. 21, 26.

℣. 23. Surely they ſhall not ſee the land which I ſware unto their fathers, &c.] Not poſſeſs and enjoy the land of Canaan, which the Lord by an oath had promiſed their fathers Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob to give it to their ſeed; and now he ſwears that theſe men, who had ſo often tempted him, and been diſobedient to him, ſhould not inherit it; ſo the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem take it for an oath; ſee Heb. iii. 11, 18. neither ſhall any of them that provoked me ſee it; that provoked him by the ill report they had brought of the land, by their unbelief, by their murmurings and mutiny.

℣. 24. But my ſervant Caleb, &c.] Who was one of the ſpies, and brought a good and true report of the land; and ſo in that, as well as in other things, approved himſelf to be a faithful ſervant of the Lord, and who had ſtilled the people at the beginning of their murmur, and with Joſhua had attempted to quiet them afterwards; and tho' Joſhua is not here mentioned, becauſe, as ſome ſay, he had no children, and therefore it could not be ſaid of him that his ſeed ſhould poſſeſs the land, as is ſaid of Caleb; or rather, becauſe he was to be the general and commander of the people, who was to introduce them into the land of Canaan, and therefore there was no neceſſity of expreſſing him by name, yet he is afterwards mentioned, ℣. 30, 38. becauſe he had another ſpirit with him; different from that of the reſt of the ſpies, excepting Joſhua; a ſpirit of faith, and of the fear of the Lord, of might and courage, of truth and faithfulneſs; believing in the promiſe of God, which the ſpies diſtruſted, being perſuaded the land might eaſily be conquered, which they feared; and bringing a true report of the land, the reverſe of the ill and falſe one they brought. For this is to be underſtood not of the holy Spirit of God, nor of his work upon the hearts of good men, which is different from the ſpirit of the world, though Caleb was poſſeſſed of that alſo: and hath followed me fully; with full purpoſe of heart whitherſoever he led him, or directed him, in every path of duty, and in the exerciſe of every grace; or hath fulfilled after me[y]; obeyed his word of command, fulfilled his mind and will, by going after him, and acting according to the rules and directions he gave him: him will I bring into the land whereinto he went; the land of Canaan he went into to ſpy and ſearch: and his ſeed ſhall poſſeſs it; not the whole land, but Hebron, and the parts about it, where he particularly went, and which he and his poſterity afterwards enjoyed, ſee ch. xiii. 22. Joſh. xiv. 13, 14, 15. The Targum of Onkelos is, ſhall expel it; the inhabitants of it; for the word ſignifies both to inherit and diſinherit; and ſo Jarchi interprets it, ſhall diſinherit the Anakim, and the people that are in it, that is, drive them out of it, as Caleb did, Joſh. xv. 13, 14.

℣. 25. And now the Amalekites, and the Canaanites dwelt in the valley, &c.] By the Canaanites are meant the Amorites, as Aben Ezra, which were a principal people of the land of Canaan, and which may be confirmed by Deut. i. 19, 20. this may ſeem contrary to what is ſaid ch. xiii. 29. where they are ſaid to dwell in the mountain; but it may be reconciled by obſerving, that indeed their proper ſettled habitation was in the mountain; but now they went down from thence, and ſat[z] in the valley, as it may be rendered, in ambuſh, there lying in wait for the children of Iſrael, as in Pſ. x. 8. and ſo Aben Ezra interprets it of their ſitting there, to lie in wait for them: and now, though theſe people had ſo ſadly provoked the Lord, yet ſuch was his goodneſs to them, as to warn them of the deſign of their enemies, and of the danger by them, to provide for their ſafety, by giving them the following inſtruction: to-morrow turn you; don't go forward, leſt ye fall into their ambuſhment, but turn about, and go the contrary way; return in the way, or towards the parts from whence ye came: this they are bid to do to-morrow, but did not till ſome time after; for contrary to the command of God, they went up the mount, where they were defeated by the Amalekites and Canaanites, after which they ſtayed in Kadeſh ſome days, Deut. i. 44, 45, 46. and get you into the wilderneſs by the way of the Red Sea; or in the way towards it; and ſo they would be in the way to Egypt, where the people were deſirous of returning again; but as they were always a rebellious and diſobedient people, and acted contrary to God, ſo in this caſe; for when he bid them go back towards the Red Sea again, then they were for going forward, and enter into the land of Canaan; though when he bid them go up, and poſſeſs it, then they were for returning to Egypt.

* T. Bab. Eracin, fol. 15. 1. Bartenora in Pirke Abot, c. 5. §. 4. Jarchi in loc. × Maimon. in Pirke Abot, ib. [y] וימלא אחרי & implevit poſt me, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Fagius, Druſius. [z] ישב ſedet, Druſius, Piſcator.

℣. 26. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, &c.] Before he had been only ſpeaking to Moſes, who had interceded with him to pardon the people, which he had granted; but at the ſame time aſſured him they ſhould not enter into and poſſeſs the land of Canaan, and the ſame he repeats to him and Aaron together: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 27. How long ſhall I bear with this evil congregation, which murmur againſt me? &c.] Bear with their murmurings, ſpare them, and not cut them off? how long muſt ſparing mercy be extended to them? the Lord ſpeaks as one weary of forbearing, ſo frequent and aggravated were their murmurings. The Jews underſtand this not of the whole congregation of Iſrael, but of the ten ſpies, from whence they gather, that ten make a congregation; and they interpret the phraſe, which murmur againſt me, tranſitively, which cauſe to murmur againſt me; made the children of Iſrael murmur againſt him, ſo Jarchi; but rather all the people are meant, as appears from the next verſe, and from the following clauſe: I have heard the murmurings of the children of Iſrael, which they murmur againſt me; for their murmurings were not only againſt Moſes and Aaron, but againſt the Lord himſelf, ℣. 2, 3.

℣. 28. Say unto them, as truly as I live, ſaith the Lord, &c.] The form of an oath, as in ℣. 21: as ye have ſpoken in mine ears, ſo will I do to you; what they had wiſhed for, and expreſſed in the hearing of the Lord, he threatens them ſhould be their caſe.

℣. 29. Your carcaſes ſhall fall in this wilderneſs, &c.] They had wiſhed they had died in it, ℣. 2. and the Lord here declares they ſhould, which is ſignified by the falling of their carcaſſes in it, or their bodies, which when dead fall to the ground, having no ſtrength to ſupport themſelves: and all that were numbered of you; but a few months before this time, when their number was 603,550, ch. ii. 46: according to your number, from twenty years old and upward; which is obſerved, as Jarchi thinks, to except the Levites, for they were not numbered with the other tribes; and when they were numbered by themſelves, their number was taken from a month old and upwards; wherefore it need not be wondered at, if we find that there were of them who did not fall in the wilderneſs, but entered into the land of Canaan, as it is certain Eleazar the prieſt, the ſon of Aaron did, ch. xxxiv. 17. Joſh. xiv. 1: which have murmured againſt me; which ſhows, that not the ſpies only, who cauſed the people to murmur, but the people themſelves who murmured, and had been numbered, from 20 years old and upward, are the evil congregation the Lord thus threatened with death.

℣. 30. Doubtleſs ye ſhall not come into the land, &c.] The land of Canaan; or if ye ſhall come [a]; that is, I ſwear ye ſhall not, ſo the Targum of Jonathan: concerning which I ſware to make you dwell therein; not them perſonally, but the people and nation, of which they were, and to which they belonged, the ſeed and poſterity of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, to whom the oath was made: ſave Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun; who brought a good report of the land. Caleb is mentioned firſt, as Aben Ezra thinks, becauſe he firſt appeaſed and quieted the people; but in ℣. 38. Joſhua ſtands firſt, ſo that nothing is to be inferred from hence; theſe were the only two of the ſpies that went into the land of Canaan, and the only two of the Iſraelites that were numbered, from twenty years old and upwards; thoſe of the tribe of Levi, not being in that account, muſt be remembered to be excepted alſo.

℣. 31. But your little ones, which ye ſaid ſhould be a prey, &c.] To the Canaanites, ℣. 3. them will I bring in; into the land of Canaan, and ſo fulfil the promiſe made to Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob; for the unbelief of this congregation did not make the faith, or faithfulneſs of God, of none effect: and they ſhall know the land which ye have deſpiſed; ſhall know what a good land it is by experience, and ſhall poſſeſs and enjoy it with approbation, delight and pleaſure, which they, believing the ſpies, rejected with loathing and diſdain.

℣. 32. But as for you, your carcaſes, &c.] Which way of ſpeaking ſeems to be uſed to diſtinguiſh them from their children; they ſhall fall in this wilderneſs; which is repeated for the confirmation and certainty of it, and an emphaſis is laid on the words, this wilderneſs, which are pronounced with an accent, to put them in mind of their wiſh, ℣. 2.

℣. 33. And your children ſhall wander in the wilderneſs forty years, &c.] Or feed [b], as ſhepherds, who go from place to place, and ſeek freſh paſture for their ſheep; it being the cuſtom of a ſhepherd, as Aben Ezra obſerves, not to ſtand or reſt in a place; and ſo like ſheep grazing in a wilderneſs, where they have ſhort commons, and wander about in ſearch of better. Theſe forty years are to be reckoned from their coming out of Egypt, from whence they had now been come about a year and a half: and bear your whoredoms; the puniſhment of their idolatries, which are frequently ſignified by this phraſe, and particularly of the idolatry of the calf, which God threatened to puniſh whenever he viſited for ſin, Exod. xxxii. 34. and of other ſins, as their murmurings, &c. for it was on account of them their children wandered ſo long in the wilderneſs, and were kept out of the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan: until your carcaſes be waſted in the wilderneſs; every one of them be conſumed by death, ſave thoſe before excepted.

℣. 34. After the number of days in which ye ſearched the land, even forty days, &c.] For ſo long they were ſearching it, ch. xiii. 25: each day for a year; reckoning each day for a year, 40 days for 40 years, as in Ezek. iv. 6: ſhall ye bear your iniquities even forty years; which number is given, being a round one, otherwiſe it was but 38 years and a half ere they were all cut off, and their children entered the land: and ye ſhall know my breach of promiſe; God never makes any breach of promiſe; his covenant he will not break, nor alter what is gone out of his lips; men break their promiſes, and tranſgreſs the covenant they have made with him, but he never breaks his, Pſ. lxxxix. 34. this ſhould rather be rendered only, ye ſhall know my breach; experience a breach made upon them by him, upon their perſons and families by conſuming them in the wilderneſs: the Targum of Jonathan is, "and ye ſhall know what ye have murmured "againſt me;" this ſame word is uſed in the plural in Job, xxxiii. 10. and is by the Targum rendered murmurings or complaints; and ſo the ſenſe is, ye ſhall know by ſad experience the evil of complaining and murmuring againſt me. The Vulgate

[a] אם אתם תבאו ſi vos ingreſſi fueritis, Pagninus, Montanus.

[b] יהיו רעים erunt paſcentes, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius, Junius & Tremellius; paſcent, Tigurine verſion, Piſcator.

Vulgate Latin verſion is, "ye ſhall know my ven-"geance;" and ſo the Septuagint, "ye ſhall know "the fury of my anger," which give the ſenſe, though not a literal verſion of the words.

℣. 35. I the Lord have ſaid, &c.] Determined, reſolved on doing what I have declared, and again repeat it; the decree is abſolute and peremptory, and will never be revoked: I will ſurely do it to all this evil congregation, that are gathered together againſt me; againſt his miniſters, Moſes the chief magiſtrate, and Aaron the high-prieſt; and this is interpreted gathering, conſpiring and rebelling againſt the Lord himſelf, on account of which they might be truly called an evil congregation, and therefore it was a determined point with him to deſtroy them: in this wilderneſs they ſhall be conſumed; by waſting diſeaſes: and there they ſhall die; as they wiſhed they might, ℣. 2. with reſpect to which this is ſo often repeated; and which the Jews interpret not only of a corporal death, but of an eternal one; for they ſay [c], "the generation of "the wilderneſs (of thoſe that died there) have "no part in the world to come, nor ſhall ſtand "in judgment, as it is ſaid, in this wilderneſs, &c. "Numb. xiv. 35."

℣. 36. And the men which Moſes ſent to ſearch the land, &c.] Ten of them: who returned; as they all did, who were ſent to ſearch it: and made all the congregation to murmur againſt him; againſt Moſes that ſent them; they murmured themſelves, and made others murmur: by bringing up a ſlander upon the land; that it ate up its inhabitants, and that the inhabitants of it were of ſuch a ſtature, and ſo gigantic and ſtrong, and dwelt in ſuch walled cities, that there was no probability of ſubduing them.

℣. 37. Even thoſe men that did bring up the evil report upon the land, &c.] They, and they only at this time: died by the plague before the Lord; either by the peſtilence immediately ſent upon them by the Lord, or by a flaſh of lightening from him, or in ſome other way; however by the immediate hand of God, and in his preſence, being in the tabernacle of the congregation, ℣. 10. tho' the Jews differently relate the manner of their death; ſome ſay worms came out of their navels, and up to their jaws, and eat them and their tongues; and others, that they came out of their tongues, and entered their navels, which they take to be a juſt retaliation for ſinning with their tongues: and the time of their death they differ about; ſome ſay, as the Targum of Jonathan, that it was upon the 7th, and others, that it was on the 17th of Elul or Auguſt they died [d].

℣. 38. But Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, &c.] Here Joſhua is ſet firſt, as Caleb is in ℣. 30. which ſhews that they were equal in dignity, and therefore are indifferently put, ſometimes the one firſt, and ſometimes the other: which were of the men that went to ſearch the land; were two of the ſpies, and were for the tribes of Judah and Ephraim, ch. xiii. 6, 8. lived ſtill; were not ſtricken with death, when the other ſpies were, though perhaps upon the very ſpot, and in the ſame place, and among them, when they were ſtruck dead; but theſe remained alive, and continued many years after, and entered the good land, and poſſeſſed it.

℣. 39. And Moſes told theſe ſayings unto all the children of Iſrael, &c.] That all that had murmured, who were of twenty years old and upwards, ſhould die in the wilderneſs, and never ſee nor enter into the land of Canaan, on the borders of which they now were: and the people mourned greatly; becauſe of their unhappy caſe, that they ſhould be cut off by death in the wilderneſs, and be deprived of the enjoyment of the good land; their ſorrow ſeems to have been not a godly ſorrow, or true repentance for ſin committed, but a worldly ſorrow that works death: it was not on account of the evil of ſin, the pardon of which they did not ſeem to ſeek after, but on account of the evil that was likely to come to them by it.

℣. 40. And they roſe up early in the morning, &c.] The next morning after they had heard the bad news of their conſumption in the wilderneſs; not being able perhaps to ſleep that night with the thoughts of it, and being now in a great haſte to go up and poſſeſs the land of Canaan, as they were before to return to Egypt: and gat them up into the top of the mountain; which was the way the ſpies went into the land of Canaan, ch. xiii. 17. this they did not actually aſcend, as appears from ℣. 44,45. but they determined upon it, and got themſelves ready for it: lo, we be here; this they ſaid either to one another, animating each other to engage in the enterprize; or to Moſes and Joſhua, ſignifying that they were ready to go up and poſſeſs the land, if they would put themſelves at the head of them, and take the command and direction of them: and will go up unto the place which the Lord hath promiſed; the land of Canaan: for we have ſinned; in not going up to poſſeſs it, when they were bid to go, and in liſtening to the ſpies that brought an ill report of it, and by murmuring againſt Moſes and Aaron, and the Lord himſelf, and propoſing to make them a captain and return to Egypt: but this acknowledgment and repentance were not very ſincere, by what follows.

℣. 41. And Moſes ſaid, Wherefore now do ye tranſgreſs the commandment of the Lord? &c.] Which was to turn back into the wilderneſs, and go the way that leads to the Red Sea, ℣. 25. inſtead of which now they were for going forward into the land of Canaan, though averſe to it juſt before: but it ſhall not proſper; their attempt to enter into it.

℣. 42. Go not up, for the Lord is not among you, &c.] And therefore could not expect ſucceſs, for victory is of the Lord; the Targum of Jonathan adds, "the ark, and the tabernacle, and the cloud "of glory move not", which were a plain indication that the Lord would not go with them, and therefore could not hope to prevail over their enemies and enter the land, but on the contrary might expect to be defeated by them, as follows: that ye be not ſmitten before your enemies; of which they would be in great danger ſhould they attempt to go up the hill, and the Lord not with them.

℣. 43. For the Amalekites and the Canaanites are there before you, &c.] Having removed from the valley, ℣. 25. or elſe had detached a party to defend the paſs on the top of the mountain, and where perhaps they deſigned to feign a retreat if they found it proper, and draw them into a combat in the valley: and ye ſhall fall by the ſword; by the ſword of the Amalekites and Canaanites: becauſe ye are turned away from the Lord; from the word of the Lord, from hearkening to and obeying

4

[c] Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 11. §. 3. fol. 7. 2.

[d] Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. c. 580. §. 2. Shalſhalet Hakabala, ing his command: therefore the Lord will not be with you; the conſequence of which muſt be bad for them.

℣. 44. But they preſumed to go up unto the hill-top, &c.] In a bold, audacious and preſumptuous manner; they attempted to go up to the top of the hill, notwithſtanding the remonſtrances of Moſes againſt it, and the danger they would be expoſed unto; but withdrawing themſelves from God, and his miniſters, and lifted up in themſelves, and confident of their own ſtrength, ventured on this raſh enterprize: the Vulgate Latin verſion is, being darkened they went up; either having their underſtandings darkened, and being given up to a judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart; or elſe they went up in the morning while it was dark, before daylight; which latter ſenſe is favoured by the Targum of Jonathan, "and they girded (or armed) "themſelves in the dark, before the morning-light;" and the former by an ancient expoſition, called Tanchuma, mentioned by Jarchi, "they went ob-"ſcure (as it were in the dark) becauſe without "leave:" nevertheleſs the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and Moſes departed not out of the camp; the cloud not being taken up, but abiding on the tabernacle, which was the ſignal for reſting, both for the ark, and for the camp, the Kohathites did not move with the ark: the Jews [e] have a notion, that there were two arks which went with Iſrael in the wilderneſs, one in which the law was put, and another in which the broken pieces of the tables were left; that in which the law was, was placed in the tabernacle of the congregation, and of this it is written, the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and Moſes departed not, &c. but that in which the broken pieces of the tables were, went in and out with them: but this does not clearly appear; and it is highly probable no ark went with them at this time; nor did Moſes the leader and commander of the people ſtir from the camp of the Levites; wherefore it was a bold and hazardous undertaking the other camps engaged in without God going with them, and their general before them, or Joſhua his miniſter; for if one did not go, the ſame may be concluded of the other.

℣. 45. Then the Amalekites came down, &c.] The hill; met the Iſraelites as they aſcended: and the Canaanites which dwelt in that hill; the ſame with the Amorites, one of the ſeven nations of Canaan, ch. xiii. 29. and ſmote them; with the ſword, having the advantage of them in coming down the hill upon them: and diſcomfited them even unto Hormah; the name of a place, ſo called from what happened there; as Jarchi ſays; either from this deſtruction of the Iſraelites at this time by theſe their enemies, or from the deſtruction of the Canaanites by Iſrael, ch. xxi. 4. and ſo here has its name by anticipation; or it may be from both theſe events, and ſeems to be confirmed by a third of the like kind, having been in former times called Zephah, Judg. i. 17. ſee Joſh. xv. 30. though ſome take it to be an appellative here, and not the proper name of a place, and render it even unto deſtruction, as the Targum of Jonathan, denoting the very great deſtruction and havock that were made among them: how many were deſtroyed is not certain; the judgment threatened them of God ſoon began to take place, that their carcaſſes ſhould fall in that wilderneſs.

CHAP. XV.

IN this chapter the children of Iſrael are inſtructed about the meat-offerings and drink-offerings, and the quantities of them, which were always to go along with their burnt-offerings and peace-offerings they ſhould offer when they came into the land of Canaan, ℣. 1—12. and they are told that the ſame laws and ordinances would be binding equally on them that were of the country, and on the ſtrangers in it, ℣. 13—16. and an order is given them to offer a cake of the firſt dough for an heave-offering, ℣. 17—21. and they are directed what ſacrifices to offer for ſins of ignorance, both of the congregation and particular perſons, ℣. 22—29. but as for preſumptuous ſinners they were to be cut off, ℣. 30, 31. and an inſtance is recorded of ſtoning a ſabbath-breaker, ℣. 32—36. and the chapter is concluded with a law for wearing fringes on the borders of their garments, the uſe of which is expreſſed, ℣. 35—41.

℣. 1. The Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After the murmurings of the Iſraelites by reaſon of the ſpies, and their being threatened with a conſumption of them in the wilderneſs on that account, and their defeat at Hormah; and leſt their poſterity ſhould be diſcouraged, and deſpair of ever enjoying the good land: ſaying as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, &c.] The younger ſort of them, ſuch as were under twenty years of age; for thoſe of that age and upwards, who had murmured againſt the Lord, had been aſſured by him with an oath that they ſhould die in the wilderneſs, and not ſee the land of Canaan; whereas thoſe Moſes is here bid to ſpeak to, were ſuch that ſhould poſſeſs it: when ye come into the land of your habitations, which I give unto you; the land of Canaan, the grant of which is here renewed to them, and an aſſurance given of their coming into it and ſettlement in it; and that they ſhould have dwelling-places there for their ſeveral tribes and families.

℣. 3. And will make an offering by fire unto the Lord, a burnt-offering, &c.] The firſt of theſe reſpects ſuch offerings by fire, which were not wholly burnt, but part of them were eaten by the prieſts, Deut. xviii. 1. and the latter ſuch as were wholly burnt, unleſs the latter can be thought to be only an explanation of the former: or a ſacrifice in performing a vow, or in a freewill-offering; theſe were peace-offerings, ſome of which were for thankſgiving, and others were either a vow or a freewill-offering as here; ſee Lev. vii. 11, 12, 16. or in your ſolemn feaſts; as the paſſover, pentecoſt, &c. of which and the offerings in them, ſee Lev. xxiii. 4—37. Numb. ch. xxviii. and xxix. to make a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord; for acceptance with him: of the herd or of the flock; a bullock of the one, a lamb or kid of the goats of the other; fowls are not mentioned, becauſe burnt-offerings of them required no drink-offerings [f].

℣. 4. Then ſhall he that offereth his offering unto the Lord, &c.] Be it of either kind before mentioned: being a meat-offering of a tenth deal of flour, mingled mingled with the fourth part of a hin of oil; this was made of the tenth part of an Ephah, or of an omer of fine wheaten flour, which was the quantity of about three quarts; and which was mixed and macerated with the fourth part of an hin, or with a quart and more than half a pint of oil; see Exod. xxix. 40. rather this should be called a bread-offering.

[e] T. Hieroſ. Sotah, fol. 22. 2.

[f] Maimon. Maaſeh hakorbanot, c. 2 §. 2.

℣. 5. And the fourth part of an hin of wine, &c.] The same measure with the oil, and this was wine of the grapes, as the Targum of Jonathan; other sorts of wine might not be used for the purpose mentioned: for a drink-offering shalt thou prepare; with the meat-offering, to go along with every burnt-offering and peace-offering; which as they were the food of God, and the provision of his house, it was proper there should be of every kind fit for an entertainment, as flesh, bread and wine. These were to go with the burnt-offering or sacrifice for one lamb; if there were more than one, then a greater quantity in proportion was required.

℣. 6. Or for a ram, &c.] Whether for a burnt-offering or a peace-offering; or rather and for a ram [g], as many versions: thou shalt prepare for a meat-offering two tenth deals of flour mingled with the third part of an hin of oil; which was the quantity of six quarts of fine flour, and about three pints and a quarter of a pint of oil.

℣. 7. And for a drink-offering thou shalt offer a third part of an hin of wine, &c.] The same quantity of wine was to be used in the drink-offering as of oil in the meat-offering: for a sweet savour unto the Lord; that it might be acceptable to him.

℣. 8. And when thou preparest a bullock for a burnt-offering, &c.] Which was a larger offering, and required a larger meat-offering and drink-offering, as the following verses shew: or for a sacrifice in performing a vow or peace-offerings unto the Lord; by which latter are meant freewill-offerings; for though both sorts here mentioned were peace-offerings, yet these were more particularly called so.

℣. 9. Then shall he bring with a bullock a meat-offering, &c.] Much larger than either for a lamb or ram, even one consisting of three tenth-deals of flour; or nine quarts of it: mingled with half an hin of oil; two quarts and a pint and somewhat more.

℣. 10. And thou shalt bring for a drink-offering half an hin of wine, &c.] The same quantity as of oil, and a little more: for an offering made by fire of a sweet savour unto the Lord; this, according to Jarchi, refers only to the meat-offering and the oil; for the wine was not a fire-offering, not being put upon the fire.

℣. 11. Thus shall it be done for one bullock, &c.] Such a quantity of flour and oil for the meat offering, and such a quantity of wine for the drink-offering as before expressed, making no difference between one young or old: or for a ram; which Jarchi says, was 13 months and one day old: or for a lamb, or a kid; for a young one of the flock, whether of the sheep or goat, whether a lamb or a kid of the goats; which, according to Jarchi, were within a year, not a year old.

℣. 12. According to the number that ye shall prepare, so shall ye do to every one, according to their number.] That is, in proportion to the number of the cattle, be they of which sort they would, should be the quantity of the meat and drink-offerings.

℣. 13. All that are born of the country shall do these things after this manner, &c.] Meaning that all Israelites should with their sacrifices bring their meat and drink-offerings of the quantity directed to as above: in offering an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord; when they offered any burnt-offerings or peace-offerings: the Jews say, that all sacrifices, whether of the congregation or of a private person require drink-offerings, excepting the first-born, the tithes, the passover, the sin offering, and the trespass-offering; but the sin-offering of the leper, and his trespass-offering, require them [h]: the Targum of Jonathan is, "all that are born in Israel, and not among the people, shall make these drink-offerings thus"; for though an uncircumcised Gentile might bring burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, yet not meat-offerings and drink-offerings with them; see the note on Lev. xxii. 18. only such as were proselytes of righteousness, as in the next verse.

℣. 14. And if a stranger sojourn with you, &c.] A stranger, or proselyte, not of the gate, but of righteousness, as Ben Gersom and the Jewish writers in general interpret it; or whatsoever be among you in your generations; whether such a proselyte settled and continued among them, or only stayed with them a while: and will offer an offering made by fire of a sweet savour unto the Lord; is desirous of offering a burnt-offering or a peace-offering to the Lord in an acceptable manner: as ye do, so shall he do; bring the same meat-offering and drink-offering, according to the nature and number of the cattle he brings for sacrifice.

℣. 15. One ordinance shall be both for you of the congregation, &c.] Or O congregation [i], as Ben Melech, and so the Targum of Jonathan, O whole congregation; though Aben Ezra denies it to be vocative: and also for the stranger that sojourneth with you; the same ordinance, statute, or appointment respecting the above things were equally binding on one side as on the other, an home-born Israelite and a proselyte of righteousness: an ordinance for ever in your generations; to be observed by them, one and the other, in all ages until the Messiah came and abolished the law of commandments contained in ordinances: as ye are, so shall the stranger be before the Lord; not in things civil but religious, and particularly with respect to the above sacrifices and offerings: Ben Gersom and Aben Ezra say this respects the burnt-offering only, which was before the Lord.

℣. 16. One law, and one manner, &c.] One law respecting these sacrifices, and one manner of offering them; one and the same precept to be observed, and one and the same judgment or punishment inflicted in case of non-observance: shall be for you, and the stranger that sojourneth with you; for Israelites and proselytes; which is said to invite and encourage the latter, and may have a distant view to the calling of the Gentiles in gospel-times, when there should be no difference between Jews and Gentiles called by grace in matters of religion, but would be one in Christ, Gal. iii. 28.

℣. 17. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] Or continued to speak to him; for the following law was given at the same time as those before: saying as follows.

℣. 18. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto

[g] Vid. Nold. Concord Ebr. par. p. 4. N°. 24. so R. Jonah in Ben Melech in loc.
[h] Misn. Menachot, c. 9. 6.
[i] הקהל O Congregatio, Noldius, p. 237. No. 1077.

unto them, &c.] Who only were bound to observe the following law concerning the cake of the first dough, and not Gentiles; so the Jews say [k], the dough of a Gentile is free from the cake, though an Israelite kneads it: when ye come into the land whither I bring you; the land of Canaan: this is another assurance of their possession of the land of Canaan, notwithstanding what had been threatened. in ℣. 2. it is only said, which I give unto you, but here, whither I bring you; assuring them, that as he had given it unto them, he would certainly introduce them into it. The Jews from hence gather, that they are not bound to observe this precept concerning the cake by the law, but in the land of Israel only, and when all Israel are there; wherefore at this time, and even in the days of Ezra, it is separated only by the words of the scribes; and the reason of it is, that this law might not be forgotten by the Israelites [l]: there were three countries that were bound to bring the cake, according to the Misnah [m].

℣. 19. Then it shall be, that when ye eat of the bread of the land, &c.] Of the land of Canaan; when they were about to eat of it before they actually did; when they were preparing for it, had ground their corn into flour, and had mixed it with water and kneaded it into dough, in order to bake it and make it fit for food; by bread is meant bread-corn, such as was the old corn of the land the Israelites first eat of when they entered into it, Josh. v. 11, 12. the Targum of Jonathan adds, "not of rice, or millet, or pulse", but what was made of corn used for bread; and the Jews say [n], there were five things only they were obliged to make the cake of, wheat, barley, Cusmin or rye, fox-ear (barley) and oats; and this is to be understood only of dough made for mens bread, and not for dogs or any other beast [o]: ye shall offer up an heave-offering unto the Lord; and what that is, is expressed in the next verse.

℣. 20. Ye shall offer up a cake of the first of your dough for an heave-offering, &c.] Of the first dough made of the first corn that was threshed, winnowed and ground, they were to make a cake, and offer it an heave-offering unto the Lord; the quantity of it is not expressed, but was left to the people's generosity; no stinted measure was fixed by the law; but according to the scribes, or the traditions of the elders, the quantity of the cake was the 24th part of the first dough that was kneaded; not the 44th, as Buxtorf [p] through mistake says; so the Targum of Jonathan, "of the first of your dough, one out of 24 (i. e. the 24th part of it) ye shall separate a separation for the priests", with which agrees the Misnah [q], though according to that, if made to sell publickly it was the 48th part of it. Some, because the next verse begins and ends with ם Mem, which numerically signifies 40, think this is an instruction to a bountiful person to give the 40th part [r]: as ye do the heave-offering of the threshing-floor, so shall ye heave it; as the two wave-loaves and first-fruits of their harvest, Lev. xxiii. 16, 17.

℣. 21. Of the first of your dough shall ye give unto the Lord, &c.] As an acknowledgment of his being the sovereign Lord and possessor of heaven and earth, and of his being the owner and proprietor of the land of Canaan; and by way of thankfulness to him, for the plenty of bread-corn he had given them; and therefore this cake was to be heaved or lifted up towards him in heaven, as follows: an heave-offering in your generations; for this respected not only the first time of their entrance into the land of Canaan, but was to be observed every year when they made their first dough, and was to continue as long as the ceremonial law lasted: this cake was antiently given to the priest, which is meant by giving it to the Lord, but now the Jews take it and cast it into the fire and burn it [s]: the apostle seems to allude to this cake of the first dough in Rom. xi. 16.

℣. 22. And if ye have erred, &c.] Gone astray from the law of God, and any of its precepts; every sin is an error, a missing of the mark, a wandering from the way of God's commandments. Jarchi, and the Jews in general, interpret this of idolatry, but it rather respects any deviation from the law moral or ceremonial, especially the latter: and not observed all these commandments which the Lord hath spoken unto Moses; in this chapter, more particularly concerning the meat-offerings and drink-offerings, and the quantity of them, to be brought along with their burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, and concerning the cake of the first dough to be heaved before the Lord and given to the priest.

℣. 23. Even all that the Lord hath commanded you by the hand of Moses, &c.] Recorded in this book and the two preceding, whether of a moral, ceremonial, or judicial kind; the whole body of laws given to the people of Israel from the Lord by Moses: from the day that the Lord commanded Moses, and henceforward among your generations; all that he had commanded, or should hereafter command.

℣. 24. Then it shall be, if ought be committed by ignorance, &c.] Of the law of God, not clearly understanding the meaning of it, or not adverting to the several precepts of it, and the circumstances of each, and the manner of performing obedience thereunto: without the knowledge of the congregation; or they being ignorant of the true intent of the law and form of obeying it; for this is to be understood not of the sin of a private person thro' ignorance, but of the body of the people; or of a congregation of them in some particular place, ignorantly and unawares falling into idolatry, or rather into a breach of any of the laws of God, moral or ceremonial: that all the congregation shall offer one young bullock for a burnt-offering, for a sweet savour unto the Lord; as an acceptable sacrifice to him; by which it appears that this law is different from that in Lev. iv. 13—21. since the bullock there was for a sin-offering, this for a burnt-offering; and besides another creature was to be for a sin-offering, as after expressed: with his meat-offering and his drink-offering, according to the manner; a meat-offering, consisting of such a quantity of flour and oil, and a drink-offering of such a quantity of wine as directed to, ℣. 9, 10. and one kid of the goats for a sin-offering; which though mentioned last was offered first, as an expiatory sacrifice for sin, typical of Christ, who was made an offering for sin, and then the burnt-offering by way of thankfulness for the acceptance of the other.

℣. 25.

[k] Schulchan Aruch, par. 2. c. 330. §. 1. [l] Ib. c. 322. §. 2, 3. [m] Misn. Challah, c. 4. §. 8. 10. [n] Misn. ut supra, c. 1. §. 1. [o] Schulchan Aruch, ut supra, c. 330. §. 8, 9. [p] Synagog. Jud. c. 34. p. 602. [q] Challah. c. 2. §. 7. so Schulchan Aruch, ib. c. 322. so Jarchi & Ben Gersom in loc. [r] Baal Hatturim in loc. [s] Buxtorf, ut supra, & Leo Modena, History of the present Jews, par. 2. c 9.

℣. 25. And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, &c.] By offering a ſin-offering for them, a type of Chriſt, the propitiation not only for the ſins of the people among the Jews, but throughout the whole world, 1 John ii. 2. and it ſhall be forgiven them; as the ſins of the Lord's people are forgiven them through the blood of Chriſt, and on account of his atoning ſacrifice and ſatisfaction made for them: for it is ignorance; a ſin of ignorance, for which reaſon Chriſt pleads for pardon on the foot of his ſacrifice, and his people receive it, Luk. xxiii. 34. 1 Tim. i. 13. for that this ſin was forgiven on the ſcore of a ſacrifice appears by what follows: and they ſhall bring their offering a ſacrifice made by fire unto the Lord; the bullock for the burnt-offering: and their ſin-offering before the Lord, for their ignorance; a kid of the goats.

℣. 26. And it ſhall be forgiven all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Which is repeated for the certainty of it, and for the ſake of what follows: and the ſtranger that ſojourneth among them; the proſelyte of righteouſneſs; ſo the bleſſing of pardon, through the propitiatory ſacrifice of Chriſt, comes upon believing Gentiles as well as Jews, Rom. iv. 9. 1 John ii. 2. ſeeing all the people were in ignorance; both the congregation of Iſrael and the ſtranger; ſee the note on the preceding verſe.

℣. 27. And if any ſoul ſin through ignorance, &c.] Any private or particular perſon, by breaking any of the above commands, or any other, not rightly underſtanding them, or not adverting to the circumſtances required in the manner of performing them: then he ſhall bring a ſhe-goat of the firſt year for a ſin-offering; which differed in this from the ſin-offering of a congregation that ſinned through ignorance; that was a kid of the goats, whether male or female, but this was to be a female goat and of a year old.

℣. 28. And the prieſt ſhall make atonement for the ſoul that ſinneth ignorantly, &c.] By offering his ſin-offering for him: when he ſinneth by ignorance before the Lord; to whom it is known to be ſuch, before whom all things are naked, open and well known: to make an atonement for him, and it ſhall be forgiven him; upon that atonement made by ſacrifice; ſo the forgiveneſs of the ſins of all the Lord's people proceeds upon an atonement made by the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt: full atonement of ſin and free forgiveneſs are not contrary to each other.

℣. 29. You ſhall have one law for him that ſinneth through ignorance, &c.] Which enjoins a ſhe-goat for a ſin-offering for ſuch: both for him that is born amongſt the children of Iſrael, and for the ſtranger that ſojourneth among them; both ſinning through ignorance, the ſame ſacrifice was offered for them, by which atonement was made, and through which their ſin was forgiven; by whom are meant home-born Iſraelites and proſelytes of righteouſneſs, who were under the ſame laws and enjoyed the ſame privileges, as do now believing Jews and Gentiles.

℣. 30. But the ſoul that doeth ought preſumptuouſly, &c.] Or with an high hand [t], or through pride, as the Targum of Jonathan; in an haughty, inſolent, bold and daring manner; in an obſtinate, ſtubborn, ſelf-willed way, with purpoſe and deſign, openly and publickly, neither fearing God nor regarding man: whether he be born in the land, or a ſtranger; here a ſtranger as well ſignifies a proſelyte of the gate as a proſelyte of righteouſneſs; ſeeing this preſumptuous ſinning may reſpect idolatry and blaſphemy, which ſins were puniſhable in proſelytes of the gate by the magiſtrates of Iſrael as well as by the immediate hand of God: the ſame reproacheth the Lord; by denying him to be the true Jehovah, by worſhipping other gods, and by ſpeaking in a blaſpheming manner of him the true God; and indeed every preſumptuous ſin, which is committed in a bold and audacious manner, in contempt of God and defiance of his law, is a reproaching him the lawgiver, and a trampling upon his legiſlative power and authority: and that ſoul ſhall be cut off from among his people; either by the hand of the civil magiſtrate, upon conviction of him, or by the immediate hand of God; no ſacrifice was to be offered for ſuch, no atonement to be made or forgiveneſs to be had; ſee Matt. xii. 31, 32.

℣. 31. Becauſe he hath deſpiſed the word of the Lord, and hath broken his commandment, &c.] That is, has broken it through contempt of it, deſpiſing it as a command of God, paying no regard to it as a law of his; otherwiſe ſuch who ſin ignorantly break the commandment of God: that ſoul ſhall be utterly cut off; or in cutting off ſhall be cut off [u]; moſt certainly cut off and entirely ruined and deſtroyed in this world and in that to come, as the Targum of Jonathan; and Maimonides [w] underſtands it, of ſuch a cutting off, that the ſoul itſelf periſhes and is no more; but ſuch annihilation the ſcripture no where gives us any reaſon to believe: his iniquity ſhall be upon him; the puniſhment of it, no atonement being made for it by ſacrifice; it ſhall be upon him and him only, or be in him [x], unrepented of and not forgiven.

℣. 32. And while the children of Iſrael were in the wilderneſs, &c.] According to Aben Ezra, in the wilderneſs of Sinai; for it is a common notion of the Jews that though this fact is recorded here, yet was committed the firſt year the Iſraelites came out of Egypt, quickly after the giving the law of the ſabbath: hence Jarchi remarks, that the ſcripture ſpeaks of this to the reproach of the Iſraelites, that they kept only the firſt ſabbath, and on the ſecond this man came and prophaned it; but it ſeems rather to be in the wilderneſs of Paran where this fact was committed, after the buſineſs of the ſpies and the diſcomfiture of Iſrael, and the above laws were given; and ſtands here in its proper place as an inſtance of a preſumptuous ſinner, cut off from his people, according to the above law, which it immediately follows: they found a man that gathered ſticks on the ſabbath-day; plucking them up by the roots, as the Targum of Jonathan, as ſtubble and the like; for the word ſignifies gathering ſtraw or ſtubble, or ſuch-like light things, as Ben Melech obſerves, and binding them in bundles for fuel; and this was done on the ſabbath-day, by which it appears that that was to be kept in the wilderneſs, though the laws before mentioned concerning ſacrifices, and the cake of the firſt dough, were not to be put in execution until Iſrael came into the land of Canaan; and according to the Targum of Jonathan this man was of the houſe of Joſeph, and in the Talmud [y] it is expreſsly ſaid that he was Zelophehad, who was a deſcendant of Joſeph.

℣. 33.

[t] ביד רמה in manu excelſa, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus. Tremellius, Druſius; in ipſo, Piſcator.

[u] הכרת וגכרת excidendo excidetur, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius.

[w] In Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 11. §. 1.

[x] בה in ea, Montanus, Junius &

[y] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 96. 2.

℣. 33. And they that found him gathering ſticks, &c.] Admoniſhed him, as ſay the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi, but he would not deſiſt; wherefore they brought him unto Moſes and Aaron, and unto all the congregation; to Moſes and Aaron, and to the ſeventy elders, who might be at this time met together, to hear, try and judge cauſes; for it cannot be thought that the whole body of the people are meant; and it is moſt likely that it was not on the ſabbath-day but the day following that they brought the man to them, who were then ſitting in the court; though Aben Ezra obſerves, that ſome ſay they brought him to them the firſt night.

℣. 34. And they put him in ward, &c.] In a certain priſon in the camp; perhaps the ſame in which the blaſphemer was put, Lev. xxiv. 12. and for much the ſame reaſon: becauſe it was not declared what ſhould be done to him; that is, what kind of death he ſhould die, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra; it had been before declared that the ſabbath-breaker ſhould die, but not what death he ſhould die, Exod. xxxi. 15. and xxxv. 2. tho' ſome think it was a matter of doubt whether gathering of ſticks was a breach of the ſabbath, or at leaſt ſuch a breach of it as required death; and the anſwer of the Lord ſeems to confirm this ſenſe, as follows.

℣. 35. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] Who conſulted the Lord upon this affair, in the tabernacle, even at the moſt holy place, from above the mercy-ſeat, where he promiſed to meet him, and commune with him about whatſoever he ſhould conſult him, Exod. xxv. 22. the man ſhall ſurely be put to death; for as no fire was to be made throughout their habitations on a ſabbath-day, gathering ſticks for ſuch a purpoſe was a work that was a violation of the ſabbath, puniſhable with death, Exod. xxxv. 2, 3. and the kind of death follows: all the congregation ſhall ſtone him with ſtones without the camp; as afterwards, without the city: of the place and manner of ſtoning, ſee the note on Acts vii. 58.

℣. 36. And all the congregation brought him without the camp, &c.] What was done by the order of Moſes and the ſeventy elders, is ſaid to be done by the whole congregation, though it was by a few perſons only the man was actually brought out, who were the proper officers to do ſuch buſineſs: and ſtoned him with ſtones, and he died; ſtoned him to death: as the Lord commanded Moſes; at the time he conſulted him in the ſanctuary, which he acquainted the court with, and they immediately ordered the execution, which was accordingly done.

℣. 37. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After the giving of the above laws, and the order for ſtoning the ſabbath-breaker; and the rather what follows is connected with them, becauſe it was to put them in mind of theſe and all other commands; and of ſo much importance is the precept directed to, that the Jews ſay, and Jarchi particularly, that it is equivalent to all the commands, and which he makes to be the reaſon of its being placed here: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 38. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] Whom it only concerned, and all of them, except women and children; for prieſts, Levites, Iſraelites, proſelytes and freed ſervants were bound to wear the fringes, but not Gentiles; nor might the Gentiles make them, what were made by them were not to be uſed [z], ſince it follows: and bid them that they make the fringes in the borders of their garments throughout their generations; the garments on which theſe fringes were put, were ſuch, that were made either of linen or of woolen; no other were obliged to them by the law; but according to the Rabbins other garments were alſo, yet only ſquare garments, which they call the Talith; and if that had not four ſkirts to it, it was free from them [a]: on this ſquare garment, and the four corners or ſkirts of it, were the fringes put; which were a ſort of pendants or taſſels, which hung down from it, which conſiſted of eight white woolen threads, ſometimes four, ſometimes eight or twelve fingers broad [b]; there were four of them, one at each ſkirt or corner of the garment: they were, as another writer ſays [c], made of eight threads broad, each of them being knit to the middle with five knots, and of wool ſpun of purpoſe for this uſe; and theſe were to be wore by them throughout their generations until the Meſſiah came, and they ſeem to have been wore by him, Matt. ix. 20. however, it is certain, they were wore by the Phariſees in his time, Matt. xxiii. 5. at preſent this four cornered garment is not any where in common uſe among the Jews, inſtead of which, they wear under their other garments, a kind of ſquare frock, with the fringes or taſſels faſtened to it, and this they call Arbah Canfot; and in their ſchools and at certain times of prayer, they put on a certain ſquare woolen veſtment, with the ſaid pendants faſtened at each corner, and this they call Talith [d]: and that they put upon the fringe of the borders a ribband of blue; or a blue lace, a piece of blue tape, which bound and kept the fringe tight and cloſe, and being of a different colour, the fringe being white, made it the more conſpicuous: the reaſon why this colour was uſed, the Jews ſay [e], was, becauſe it was like the ſea, and the ſea is like the ſky, and the ſky like the throne of glory: this blew, hyacinth or purple colour, as the Jews generally take it to be, was of a peculiar dye; the manner of making which is now unknown to them, and therefore they uſe only the white [f].

℣. 39. And it ſhall be unto you for a fringe, &c.] The blue ribband or lace ſhall be in or upon the fringe to faſten it: that ye may look upon it; the blue lace making the whole the more conſpicuous: from hence the Jews gather, that the night is not the time for wearing the fringe, which leſſens the ſight, and it is not ſo eaſily ſeen; and that night-garments are not obliged to have the fringe on them; and yet they ſay, a blind man is bound to wear it, becauſe, though he cannot ſee it, others can [g]: and remember all the commandments of the Lord, and do them; this is the general uſe, end and deſign of the fringes, that upon ſight of them they might be put in mind of the commandments, and put upon the practice of them; theſe being at the four corners of their veſtments, let them look which way they would downwards, before or behind, or on either ſide, they could not but ſee them; and the many threads in them might put them in mind of the many precepts they were to obſerve; and the white colour, the purity and holineſs of them; and the blue or ſky-coloured lace might lead them to obſerve the heavenly original of [z] Sepher Alphes, par. 1. fol. 439. 2. & 442. 1. Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. c. 14. §. 1. [a] Schulchan ib. c. 9. §. 1. & c. 10. §. 1. & c. 24. 1. [b] Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 9. p. 160. [c] Leo Modena, Hiſtory of the preſent Jews, par. 1. c. 5 §. 7. [d] Ib. §. 9. [e] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 17. 1. [f] Maimon. in Miſn Menachot, c. 4. §. 1. [g] Maimon. in Miſn. Ediot, c. 4. §. 10. & Hilchot Tzitzith, c. 3. §. 7. Schulchan Aruch, p. 1. c. 17. 1. & 18. 1.

of them; or being of a purple colour rather, might direct them to the blood of Chriſt, for the remiſſion of the tranſgreſſions of them: the Jews have many fanciful things about the uſe and virtue of theſe fringes, not worthy of notice; and they ſay, that ſuch who are careful to obſerve this law of the fringe, are worthy to ſee the face of the divine majeſty, and will be preſerved from evil ſpirits [h]: that ye ſeek not after your own heart and your own eyes; to have and enjoy, and do thoſe things, in matters of worſhip, which were of their own deviſing, and pleaſing in their ſight, as well as in moral things, what were agreeable to their carnal hearts, and make for the gratification of their ſenſes: after which ye uſe to go a whoring; which ſeems to reſtrain the ſenſe pretty much to idolatry, to falſe and ſuperſtitious worſhip, which are often in ſcripture expreſſed by fornication and whoredom; tho' other ſins and luſts alſo are ſometimes ſignified by the ſame words.

℣. 40. That ye may remember and do all my commandments, &c.] Which is repeated, that the end and uſe of theſe fringes might be particularly taken notice of, and attended to; that ſo they might not ſatisfy themſelves with and reſt in this ceremony of wearing the fringes, but be found in the obſervance of every moral precept, and of every religious ordinance and duty: and be holy unto your God; as in his preſence, according to his will, and for his honour and glory, by keeping his holy commands, and living an holy life and converſation, well-pleaſing in his ſight.

℣. 41. I am the Lord your God, &c.] Their creator, preſerver, and benefactor, their lord and ſovereign, their covenant-God and father: which brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God; to make it appear that he was their God in a ſpecial relation, and that he took the ſpecial care and government of them; and which was manifeſt by the ſyſtem of laws he gave them to obſerve, as well as by his proviſion for them on all accounts, and by his protection of them: I am the Lord your God; who had a right to enact laws, and enjoin the obſervance of them, as he was the Lord Jehovah; and they were under obligation to regard them, as he was not only their creator but their covenant-God and Father, who had beſtowed his favours liberally on them.

CHAP. XVI.

THIS chapter gives an account of a ſedition of Korah and others againſt Moſes and Aaron, ℣. 1, 2, 3, 4. with whom Moſes expoſtulates, and ſhews the unreaſonableneſs of their clamour againſt Aaron, ℣. 5—11. ſends for Dathan and Abiram, who were in the confederacy but refuſed to come, which greatly angred Moſes, ℣. 12—15. orders Korah and his company to appear before the Lord the next day, with Aaron, to have the controverſy decided, ℣. 16, 17, 18. when all the congregation gathered together would have been conſumed had it not been for the interceſſion of Moſes and Aaron, ℣. 19—22. and who, being ſeparated from the rebels by the command of the Lord, ſome of the rebels were ſwallowed up in the earth, and others deſtroyed by fire from heaven, ℣. 23—35. and their cenſers were made a covering for the altar, as a memorial of their ſin, ℣. 36—40. on which there was a new inſurrection of the people, which brought a plague upon them, and deſtroyed 14700 perſons, and which was ſtopped at the interceſſion of Aaron, ℣. 41—50.

℣. 1. Now Korah, the ſon of Izhar, the ſon of Kohath, the ſon of Levi, &c.] A great grandſon of Levi's, and own couſin to Moſes and Aaron, being brother's children; for Amram the father of Moſes and Aaron, and Izhar the father of Korah, were own brothers, both of them the ſons of Kohath, and Amram the eldeſt, and Izhar the next, Exod. vi. 16, 18, 21. this man is mentioned firſt, being the contriver, and plotter, and ringleader of the following ſedition, and which is called the gainſaying of Core, Jude, ℣. 11. when this was made is not certain; Aben Ezra thinks, this affair happened in the wilderneſs of Sinai, when the firſtborn were changed, and the Levites were ſeparated for holy ſervice, ch. iii. 1, 6, 12, 14. but according to the Targum of Jonathan, it was after the law concerning the fringes was given, which it here follows, and was on that account; for it ſays, that Korah took his coat, which was all blue, and that the men with him roſe up, and in the face of Moſes, taught the rite concerning the blue ribband; when Moſes declared he had it from God, that the fringe ſhould be of white, and one thread of blue ſhould be in it; but Korah and his company made their coats and fringes all of blue, which the Lord commanded not: but what Korah is ſaid to take is either himſelf, or men, or both, and not clothes, as follows: and Dathan and Abiram, the ſons of Eliab, and On the ſon of Peleth, ſons of Reuben, took men; which men are deſcribed in the next verſe, even princes of the aſſembly, &c. or he, Korah, took himſelf, as Ben Melech, or divided himſelf, as Onkelos, ſeparated himſelf from the congregation, and ſet himſelf at the head of a party he gathered together; and the vau or and before Dathan may be additional or ſuperfluous, as Chaſkuni obſerves, and ſo Abendana; and then the ſenſe is, that Korah took Dathan, Abiram and On apart by themſelves, and entered into a conſultation and confederacy with them againſt Moſes and Aaron, with whom he was offended on account of the prieſthood being beſtowed on the latter by the former; and theſe men he aſſociated to him, being the ſons of Reuben, who would the rather liſten to him, and join with him, becauſe the primogeniture was taken from them, and the camp of Judah was placed before them; and with theſe men he could more eaſily commune, becauſe the camp of Reuben, and the Kohathites lay on the ſame ſide of the tabernacle, ch. ii. 10. and iii. 29. Eliab, the father of Dathan and Abiram, was the ſon of Pallu, the ſecond ſon of Reuben, ch. xxvi. 5, 8. but as for On, no mention is made of him elſewhere, nor any more in this place; it is thought he ſeparated from his company after he had heard what Moſes ſaid to them; and the Rabbins ſay, his wife delivered him out of their hands, as Abendana obſerves.

℣. 2. And they roſe up before Moſes, &c.] To his face, openly and publickly, in a bold and audacious manner; with impudence, as the Targum of Jonathan: with certain of the children of Iſrael; ſome out of the ſeveral tribes, but perhaps chiefly of of the tribe of Reuben, as Jarchi; two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly; or congregation [i], who were princes in the several tribes to which they belonged, heads of houses and families of their fathers, rulers of thousands, hundreds, &c. famous in the congregation; or called [k] to the tabernacle of the congregation; who, when the great men among the people were gathered together to consult about any affair, were called, as Ben Melech observes: men of renown, or of name [l]; in high esteem among the people for their birth and rank, their wealth and riches, wisdom and prudence; and were so before they came out of Egypt, as Aben Ezra remarks; so that the persons concerned in this rebellion were not the mob and dregs of the people, but men of the greatest figure and fame, and therefore was likely to be of bad consequence.

4

[h] Baal Hatturim in loc. Schulchan ib. c. 24. §. 1, 6.

℣. 3. And they gathered themselves together against Moses, and against Aaron, &c.] They met together by appointment, and went up in a body to Moses and Aaron: and said unto them, ye take too much upon you; the one to be king, and the other to be priest; for they imagined that Moses took the civil government into his hands, and Aaron the priesthood, of themselves, without any call of God to either; but the contrary is most certain, Heb. iii. 2. and v. 4. the Israelites, those of the other tribes besides Levi and Reuben, thought that Moses took too much upon him of his own head, to take the Levites instead of the first-born, and confer a dignity on his own brethren, the sons of Kohath, who were near akin to him, and on all the sons of Levi, as Aben Ezra observes; and the Levites they conspired against him, because they were given to Aaron and his sons; and Dathan and Abiram entered into a conspiracy, as the same writer thinks, because he had removed the birth-right from Reuben their father, and had given it to Joseph; for it is probable they suspected him, because of Joshua his minister; and Jarchi conjectures, that Korah was angry because Moses had conferred the government of the Kohathites on Elizaphan, the son of Uzziel, the youngest son of Kohath, when he himself, Korah, was the eldest son of an elder son of Kohath: or it is, or let it be enough for you [m]; or more than enough, as Jarchi; it is sufficient that you have had the government, both in things civil and religious, so long as you have; it is time to give it up to others, who are as well qualified as yourselves. The time past may suffice for the exercise of your despotic and arbitrary power; tho' it seems to be chiefly levelled against Aaron, and his priesthood, which they thought Moses had conferred on his brother of himself, without any instruction from God: seeing all the congregation are holy, every one of them; having all heard the words of the Lord on Sinai, as Jarchi notes; and were all fit to be priests, and to offer sacrifice in and for their families, as they had used to do, before the separation of Aaron and his sons to the priesthood: and the Lord is among them; in the tabernacle, to whom they could approach and offer their offerings without a priest to do it for them: wherefore then lift ye up yourselves above the congregation of the Lord? since they were all upon a level, every one holy to the Lord, and might draw nigh unto him, and officiate as priests; wherefore they represent it as great pride and vanity in them; in Moses to take upon him to dispose of the priesthood at his pleasure, and make Aaron the high-priest of the people; and in Aaron to take this office upon him, and to be an high-priest, and not only over all the sons of Levi, but over all the children of Israel.

℣. 4. And when Moses heard it, &c.] What they said, their complaint against him, for setting up Aaron for an high-priest, and against Aaron for taking this honour to himself: he fell upon his face; through shame, as the Targum of Jonathan, blushing at their sin, in opposing the ordinance of God; and through fear of the divine displeasure, and of the wrath of God coming upon them for such wickedness; and in order to pray to God for them to make them sensible of their sin, and give them repentance for it, and pardon of it, and avert his judgments from them such a conduct called aloud for.

℣. 5. And he spake unto Korah and unto all his company, &c.] The 250 princes that were with him; what follows was said to them apart from Dathan and Abiram, who seem not to be present at this time; and this was after Moses had finished his prayer to God, and had received instructions from him, by an impulse on his mind, what he should say unto them, and was now risen up from the earth he fell upon: saying, even to-morrow the Lord will shew who are his; his priests, whom he had chosen, and put into that office; this he would make known so clearly and plainly, that there would be no room left to doubt of it, and which was revealed to Moses whilst upon his face in prayer to God: and who is holy; or whom he has separated to such an holy office and service: and will cause him to come near unto him; and do his work as a priest, without fear of danger, and without any hurt, which is suggested would befal others; and they may expect it, who intrude themselves into such an office, and engage their hearts in a bold audacious manner, to draw nigh to God in it: even him whom he hath chosen, will he cause to come near unto him; meaning Aaron with his sons, whom the Lord would make to appear that he had chosen, and put into the office of priesthood, and that it was not what Moses did of himself.

℣. 6. This do, take you censers, &c.] Vessels to put incense in to offer, which was the business of the priests: Korah, and all his company; the 250 princes that were with him, for so many we read took censers, and offered incense, ℣. 18, 35.

℣. 7. And put fire therein, &c.] Into the censers: and put incense in them; on the coals of fire in the censers: before the Lord; not at the altar of incense in the holy place, into which none but Aaron and his sons might come, but at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, where the glory of the Lord appeared, ℣. 18, 19. and this they were to do to-morrow; the day following that on which the insurrection was made, and in the morning of that day, which was the usual time of judgment; this was delayed until the morrow, that they might have opportunity to reflect upon what they had done, and repent of their sin, and consider what they were to do, and the danger which might attend it; as in the case of Nadab and Abihu, who, though sons of the high-priest, yet offering strange ſtrange fire, were conſumed by fire; and ſo might they for aſſuming the prieſthood, and officiating in any part of it, which did not belong to them: and it ſhall be, that the man whom the Lord doth chuſe, he ſhall be holy; meaning Aaron, with his ſons; for though the Lord had already choſen him, and ordered him and his family to be ſeparated from the reſt of the Iſraelites, to exerciſe the prieſtly office, and he was actually inveſted with it, and had entered upon it; yet he would at this time, in a viſible way and manner, make it manifeſt that he had done it, and therefore ſhould be as it were afreſh ſet apart for holy ſervice, and be continued in it: ye take too much upon you, ye ſons of Levi; of which tribe Korah was; and it looks as if thoſe with him were chiefly of that tribe; however theſe here addreſſed certainly were, and Moſes retorts their own language upon them; they had ſaid, that he and Aaron had taken too much upon them, though no more than what God had called them to; and now he ſays, that they had taken too much upon them, to reſiſt the ordinance of God, and to endeavour to remove from their office, whom God had put into it, in order to ſubſtitute themſelves: or it is enough for you, or let it ſuffice you; be content with the honour put upon you, the dignity you are raiſed to, to be next to the prieſts, and aſſiſtants to them; be not ambitious of more; let what you have ſatisfy you.

[i] עדה Congregationis, Pagninus. [k] קראי Vocati, Montanus, Drusius. [l] אנשי שם viri nominis, Montanus, Drusius. [m] רב sat est vel satis sit, Pagninus, Vatablus, Drusius, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; so Aben Ezra.

℣. 8. And Moſes ſaid unto Korah, &c.] Continued his diſcourſe to him, as the head of the conſpiracy, and the ringleader of it: hear, I pray you, ye ſons of Levi; to whom alſo he had been before ſpeaking; tho' Aben Ezra thinks the firſt ſpeech was made to Korah and his company, and what follows to the Levites.

℣. 9. Seemeth it but a ſmall thing unto you, &c.] It ſhould not; for it was a great thing which the Lord had done for them, and with which they ſhould have been ſatisfied, and for it thankful: that the God of Iſrael hath ſeparated you from the congregation of Iſrael; this was a ſpecial favour, and ought to have been eſteemed ſuch, that God, who was the God of the whole people of Iſrael in common, ſhould ſeparate the tribe of Levi from all the reſt of the tribes of Iſrael: to bring you near to himſelf; next to the prieſts their brethren of the ſame tribe, to be joined to them, and aſſiſt them in their ſervice, and officiate in the court of the tabernacle, where the divine majeſty dwelt: to do the ſervice of the congregation of the Lord; to watch it, and guard it, and keep out perſons unfit to enter into it; to take it down, and ſet it up, as occaſion required, and bear and carry the holy things in it, and take care of them: and to ſtand before the congregation to miniſter unto them; which Jarchi interprets of their ſinging in the deſk ſongs of praiſe before them; but Aben Ezra better, of the ſervice they did for them, when they brought their offerings and ſacrifices, which they took of them, and carried to the prieſts to offer for them.

℣. 10. And he hath brought thee near to him, &c.] To be in his courts, to watch in his houſe, and wait on his prieſts, for which an ample proviſion was made by tithes. Korah is here perſonally addreſſed: and all thy brethren, the ſons of Levi, with thee; the whole tribe of them, excepting Aaron and his family, who were advanced to be prieſts: and ſeek ye the prieſthood alſo? the high-prieſthood, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; this opens the true cauſe of their diſcontent and rebellion; they could not be ſatisfied with being the miniſters of the prieſts, but wanted to be prieſts themſelves, and Korah perhaps to be high-prieſt.

℣. 11. For which cauſe both thou, and all thy company are gathered together againſt the Lord, &c.] For gathering together againſt his miniſters, whom he had put into office to act under him, and endeavouring to overturn a conſtitution of his erecting, and reſiſting and not ſubmitting to an ordinance of his, is interpreted gathering againſt him, and acting in oppoſition to him; ſee Rom. xiii. 1, 2: and what is Aaron that ye murmur againſt him? what is his tranſgreſſion? what has he done? as Aben Ezra paraphraſes it; he is not chargeable with any fault, he did not take upon him the office of high-prieſt of himſelf, God called him to it, and put him in it; he is only his miniſter, and by no means to be blamed, and therefore it is unreaſonable to envy him, or murmur againſt him; and indeed, murmuring againſt him is murmuring againſt the Lord.

℣. 12. And Moſes ſent to call Dathan and Abiram the ſons of Eliab, &c.] He ſent meſſengers to call them to the houſe of judgment, as the Targum of Jonathan, to the court of judicature, where the Jews ſuppoſe Moſes, with the 70 elders, were now ſitting: it ſeems theſe two men departed either before Moſes roſe up from prayer, or however before he had finiſhed his ſpeech to Korah and the Levites; which being particularly directed to them, theſe men might think they had no concern in it, and went away to their own tents: which ſaid, we will not come up; this anſwer they returned to the meſſengers, and by them to Moſes; declaring that they denied his power, deſpiſed his authority, and would not obey his orders, and therefore refuſed to come up to the tabernacle, or to the tent of Moſes, or to the court of judicature, where-ever it was; perhaps the firſt is beſt. Aben Ezra thinks, that as the tabernacle was in the midſt of the camp, it was on an eminence, wherefore thoſe that came to it, might be ſaid to come up to it.

℣. 13. Is it a ſmall thing that thou haſt brought us up out of a land that floweth with milk and honey, &c.] Meaning Egypt, as the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it; which, though a plentiful country, never had, nor deſerved to have this epithet given it, which is peculiar to the land of Canaan, and is here given, in oppoſition to the deſcription of that land, which the Lord himſelf had ſo deſcribed; and argues great impudence and want of reverence of the divine Being, as well as great ingratitude to Moſes, the inſtrument of their being brought out of Egypt, where they laboured under bondage and ſervitude intolerable; and yet here repreſent it as an injury done to them, and as if the intent and deſign of it was purely to deſtroy them: for they add, to kill us in the wilderneſs; with want of food, of which they had plenty in Egypt they ſuggeſt; referring it may be to what the Lord by Moſes had ſaid to them, that their carcaſes ſhould fall in the wilderneſs; but that would not be for want of proviſions, but becauſe of their ſins. It was bad enough, they intimate, to be brought out of ſuch a plentiful country, into a barren wilderneſs; but what was ſtill worſe, the deſpotic and tyrannical government of Moſes, as they repreſent it, they were brought under: except thou make thyſelf altogether a prince over us? ruling in an arbitrary way, making laws, and ſetting up offices and officers at pleaſure, ſo that it is more eligible to be in bondage in Egypt, than under thy government. Aben Ezra takes their meaning to be, as if the end of bringing them out of Egypt was to aſſume and exerciſe erciſe ſuch rule and authority over them. His words are, "haſt thou brought us up out of Egypt, "that thou mayeſt exerciſe dominion over us as "a prince, yea many dominions, thou and thy "brother:" and who alſo obſerves, that Egypt lay to the ſouth of the land of Iſrael, ſo that one that came from Egypt to the land of Canaan, may be truly ſaid to come up, that part of Canaan lying higher than Egypt.

℣. 14. Moreover thou haſt not brought us into a land that floweth with milk and honey, &c.] Meaning the land of Canaan; but this was no fault of Moſes, he had brought them to the borders of it, he had bid them go up and poſſeſs it; but they refuſed, and choſe to have ſpies firſt ſent into it, who brought an ill report of it, which they liſtened to, and had ſo provoked the Lord thereby, that he ordered them to turn back, and threatened them with a conſumption of them in the wilderneſs; or certainly[n], verily thou haſt not brought us, &c. though the Septuagint verſion renders it affirmatively, thou haſt brought us; and the Vulgate Latin verſion, indeed thou haſt brought, directly contrary to the text; unleſs it is to be underſtood ironically, as it is by ſome: or given us inheritance of fields and vineyards; that is, in the land of Canaan, as were promiſed them; they ſuggeſt had this been the caſe, they could have been content that he ſhould have been their prince, and they would have ſubmitted to his government; but having received no advantage from him, but a great deal of hurt and damage, they could not but conſider him not only as a tyrant, but as an impoſtor and deceiver: wilt thou put out the eyes of theſe men? or dig them out[o]; either in a literal ſenſe, wilt thou be ſo cruel and mercileſs as to put out the eyes of theſe men, Korah and his company, and us for our oppoſition to thy government? or though thou ſhouldeſt do ſo, we will not come up; we are determined not to obey thee, but to ſhake off the yoke, let our puniſhment be what it will; or figuratively, doſt thou take us for blind perſons, whoſe eyes thou haſt put out, and think to lead us at thy pleaſure? or doſt thou caſt a miſt before the eyes of this whole congregation, that they are not able to ſee through thy deſigns? are the people ſo bewitched by them, as not to ſee thy deceits and impoſtures? pretending to bring them into a land flowing with milk and honey, which thou art not able to do, and now ſayeſt that thou haſt a meſſage from God to return again towards the Red Sea, and talkeſt of our poſterity inheriting the land 40 years hence; who is it that can't ſee through all this? Aben Ezra thinks, by theſe men are meant the elders that were with Moſes whom he led as he pleaſed, and ſo blinded them with his deluſions, as theſe pretended, that they could not ſee through them.

℣. 15. And Moſes was very wroth, &c.] Or it heated Moſes exceedingly[p]; made him very angry, cauſed him to burn with wrath againſt them; even the ſpeech they made, the words they uttered, not ſo much on account of their ill uſage of him, as for the diſhonour caſt upon the Lord: and ſaid unto the Lord, reſpect not thou their offering; their Minchah, the word is commonly uſed for the meat or bread-offering. Aben Ezra obſerves, that Dathan and Abiram were great men, and had offered ſuch kind of offerings before this fact; and therefore Moſes deſires that the Lord would have no reſpect to any they had offered, but have reſpect to him, who had never injured any of them. Jarchi gives it as the ſenſe of ſome, that whereas theſe men had a part in the daily ſacrifices of the congregation (with which a meat-offering always went) the requeſt is, that it might not be received with acceptance by the Lord; but he himſelf thinks, it is to be underſtood of the offering of incenſe they were to offer on the morrow; and Moſes deſires that God would ſhew his diſapprobation of it, and which is the common interpretation. The Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem render it, their gift: I have not taken one aſs from them; either by force, or as a bribe, or by way of gratuity for any ſervice done them; the ſenſe is, that he had not taken from them the leaſt thing in the world, any thing of the meaneſt worth and value, on any conſideration. Aben Ezra interprets the word take, of taking and laying any burden upon an aſs of theirs; ſo far was he from laying any burdens on them, and uſing them in a cruel and tyrannical manner, as they ſuggeſted, that he never laid the leaſt burden on any aſs of theirs, and much leſs on them: neither have I hurt any of them; never did any injury to the perſon or property of any one of them, but, on the contrary, had done them many good offices.

℣. 16. And Moſes ſaid unto Korah, &c.] Who was ſtill with him, when the meſſenger returned from Dathan and Abiram, and who heard what Moſes ſaid in his own defence: be thou and all thy company before the Lord; at the tabernacle, at the door of it; the Targum of Jonathan is, at the houſe of judgment, the court of judicature, where this affair was to be tried, and that was at the tabernacle, as appears by what follows: thou, and they, and Aaron to-morrow; the day after Moſes had ſent to Dathan and Abiram, on the morning of the next day; which as it was the time of ſitting in judgment, ſo of offering incenſe; meaning Korah and his company, the 250 men with him, and not Dathan, and Abiram; and Aaron alſo, he was ordered to appear, whom they oppoſed, and with whom the trial was to be made.

℣. 17. And take every man his cenſer, and put incenſe thereon, &c.] Which they were to bring with them the next day from their own tents; and theſe might be cenſers, which they had in their ſeveral families, and which they had uſed in them before the order of prieſthood was ſet up in Aaron's family, and limited to that; or they might be a ſort of chaffing diſhes or veſſels like cenſers, and would ſerve the preſent purpoſe; they were ordered to put fire into them, that was to be taken from the altar of burnt-offering; for ſtrange fire might not be uſed: and bring ye before the Lord every man his cenſer, 250 cenſers; according to the number of the men that were gathered with Korah: thou alſo and Aaron each of you his cenſer; Korah and Aaron were to bring each their cenſers, between whom lay the conteſt concerning the high prieſthood; which was to be determined by their offering incenſe before the Lord, and by his approbation or diſapprobation of it.

℣. 18. And they took every man his cenſer, and put fire in them, &c.] That is, they came the next morning according to order, prepared with their cenſers and incenſe; and they took fire from off the altar of burnt-offering, which ſtood in the court of the tabernacle: and laid incenſe thereon; upon the fire in their cenſers, and ſo burned it: and ſtood in the [n] אל certe, Noldius, p. 97. N°. 468. ſo Onkelos. Gius; fodies, Junius & Tremellius, Druſius.

[o] תנקר effodies, Pagninus, Piſcator; vis effodere, Fa-

[p] ויחר למשה מאד & excanduit Moſi valde, Druſius.

the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; not in the holy place where the altar of incenſe was, for that would not hold them; nor indeed in the court of the tabernacle, but at the door of it, or the outſide of it, that ſo they might be ſeen by all the people who came to be ſpectators and witneſſes of this affair: and they ſtood with Moſes and Aaron; in a bold and preſumptuous manner, as if they were their equals, diſputing their authority, and putting themſelves upon their trial before the Lord about it: the Targum of Jonathan ſays, theſe men ſtood on one ſide (of the door of the tabernacle) and Moſes and Aaron ſtood on the other ſide of it.

℣. 19. And Korah gathered all the congregation againſt them, &c.] Not his own company only, but as many of the whole congregation of Iſrael as he could get together, and eſpecially the principal men; ſo that it ſeems there was a general prevailing inclination in the people to take part with him againſt Moſes and Aaron, who wiſhed him ſucceſs in his undertaking, and readily came together to animate and encourage him in it, and to ſee the iſſue of it. Jarchi ſuggeſts, that all night he was going to the ſeveral tribes, perſuading them that it was not for his own private intereſt, but for the public good, that he acted againſt two men, who had taken to themſelves, the one the kingdom, and the other the prieſthood, and by this means got a great multitude together: unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; that is, before it, where Korah and his company ſtood, whoſe part they took, and had like to have ſuffered ſeverely for it, had it not been for the interpoſition of Moſes and Aaron: and the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the congregation; the ſhekinah or divine majeſty, which dwelt between the cherubim in the moſt holy place, removed and came to the door of the tabernacle, where the people were aſſembled, in the ſight of them, ſhewing ſome viſible token of his preſence, though no ſimilitude of himſelf was ſeen; or however he appeared in the cloud that was over the tabernacle, in which was ſeen a glory, a brightneſs and ſplendor, or ſuch coruſcations and flaſhes of lightening as were very unuſual and amazing, and plainly ſhewed the Lord was there; ſo Jarchi ſays, that he came in the pillar of cloud.

℣. 20. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, &c.] Out of the cloud: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 21. Separate yourſelves from among this congregation, &c.] Not only from Korah's company, but from the congregation of the children of Iſrael, whom Korah had got together, beſides the 250 men that were at firſt with him; who by their words and behaviour, and particularly by their aſſociation and ſtanding along with him, ſhewed them to be on his ſide, which greatly provoked the Lord: that I may conſume them in a moment; by fire from him, as the 250 men were afterwards conſumed, ℣. 35.

℣. 22. And they fell upon their faces, &c.] That is, Moſes and Aaron, in order to deprecate the wrath of God, and beſeech him to avert the threatened judgment; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan has it, "they bowed themſelves in prayer upon their faces:" and ſaid, O God, the God of the ſpirits of all fleſh; the maker of all men, as of their bodies which are fleſh, ſo of their ſouls or ſpirits, which are immaterial and immortal; hence he is called the father of ſpirits, Heb. xii. 9. who, as the Targum, puts the ſpirit in the bodies of men; or, as others, who knows the ſpirits of men; their thoughts, as Jarchi, the inward frames and diſpoſitions of their minds; who knows who have ſinned, and who not; and whether their ſins proceed from weakneſs, and being miſ-led, or whether from a malevolent diſpoſition, preſumption, and ſelf-will: ſhall one man ſin; meaning Korah, who was the ringleader: and wilt thou be wroth with all the congregation? who through ignorance and weakneſs, and by artifice and impoſition are drawn in to join with him; the plea is much the ſame with that of Abraham, Gen. xviii. 25.

℣. 23. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] When on his face in prayer, and bid him riſe up, and told him he had granted his requeſt, and then ſpoke to him: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 24. Speak unto the congregation, &c.] Not to Korah's company, but to the people of Iſrael, of the ſeveral tribes that were aſſembled together: ſaying, get ye up from about the tabernacle of Korah, and Dathan, and Abiram; which was either the ſame with their tents, as in ℣. 26. though, as they were of different tribes, Korah of the tribe of Levi, and Dathan and Abiram of the tribe of Reuben, their tents muſt be in diſtinct and different places, though both encamped on the ſame ſide of the tabernacle, and pretty near to each other; the camp of Levi was neareſt the tabernacle, and the camp of Reuben next to it. It may be, there was a ſingle tabernacle erected on this occaſion, for all theſe men to meet at when they judged it neceſſary. Aben Ezra is of opinion, Korah had a tent for his men and ſubſtance, at a diſtance from the camp of the Levites, and to his tent joined the tents of Dathan and Abiram.

℣. 25. And Moſes roſe up, &c.] Either from the ground, upon which he fell on his face, or from the ſeat on which he ſat at the door of the tabernacle; though he ſeems to have ſtood there; it may be, it only ſignifies, that he obeyed the divine order, and went about it directly, as often in ſcripture perſons are ſaid to ariſe, when they go about any thing they are directed, or chuſe to do: and went unto Dathan and Abiram; to endeavour to convince them of their evil, and bring them to repentance for it, and to reclaim them from their folly: and the elders of Iſrael followed him; either ſome principal perſons of the tribes, called elders, both from their age and prudence; or the 70 elders lately choſen to aſſiſt Moſes in the affairs of government, as Aben Ezra thinks theſe followed him to ſhow their reſpect unto him, and their approbation of his conduct, and for vindication of his character, which had been aſperſed by thoſe men, and to give the more weight to what ſhould be ſaid unto them, for their conviction and reformation.

℣. 26. And he ſpake unto the congregation, &c.] To the people of Iſrael aſſembled together on this occaſion; ſome, out of ill will to Moſes and Aaron, inclining to the ſide of Korah and his accomplices, and ſome out of curioſity to ſee the iſſue of this affair: ſaying, depart, I pray you, from the tents of theſe wicked men; theſe turbulent, ſeditious, and ill-deſigning men, diſturbers of the commonwealth and church of Iſrael, enemies to the peace of its civil and eccleſiaſtic ſtate: and when Moſes deſires the people to depart from their tents, he means not only that they would remove in perſon and ſtand at a diſtance, but ſuch who had their tents and families families and ſubſtance near them, would take care to remove, leſt they ſhould be deſtroyed with them: and touch nothing of theirs; not carry off any thing belonging to them along with their own, being all devoted to deſtruction: leſt ye be conſumed in all their ſins; leſt partaking of their ſins they ſhould of their plagues, and die in their ſins, as they would, or for them.

℣. 27. So they gat up from the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, on every ſide, &c.] The place where they met together and made their general rendezvous; this it ſeems was encompaſſed on all ſides by people out of the ſeveral tribes, who either wiſhed them well in their undertaking, or were curious to know how it would iſſue: and Dathan and Abiram came out; out of the tabernacle of Korah, and went to their own tents; and came out of them, and ſtood in the door of their tents, and their wives, and their ſons, and their little children; in an audacious manner, as not fearing God nor man; they carried their heads high, and were not in the leaſt daunted at what they were threatened with; and by their looks and geſtures bid defiance to Moſes and the elders with him.

℣. 28. And Moſes ſaid, hereby ye ſhall know that the Lord hath ſent me to do all theſe works, &c.] To bring the people of Iſrael out of Egypt, to exchange the firſt-born for the Levites, to make Aaron and his ſons prieſts, to gives the Levites to them, and to ſet Elizaphan over the Kohathites, things which theſe men found fault with, and queſtioned his authority for doing them: for I have not done them of my own mind; or not out of my heart [q]; he had not deviſed them himſelf, and done them of his own head, and in any arbitrary way, without the will of God or any authority from him, as theſe men ſuggeſted.

℣. 29. If theſe men die the common death of all men, &c.] Or as every man dies [r], or the generality of men, who for the moſt part die of one diſeaſe or another, as a fever, and the like, or through old age: or if they be viſited after the viſitation of all men; with ſuch viſitations as men in all ages for their ſins are viſited with, meaning public calamities, ſuch as peſtilence, famine and ſword: then the Lord hath not ſent me; it may be concluded that I had no miſſion nor commiſſion from the Lord to do what I have done, but may be reckoned a deceiver and an impoſtor; and I am content to be accounted ſo, ſhould either of the above things be the caſe of theſe men.

℣. 30. But if the Lord make a new thing, &c.] Or create a creation, or creature [s], what never was before, or put thoſe perſons to a death that none ever in the world died of yet; what that is he means is next expreſſed: and the earth open her mouth and ſwallow them up, with all that appertain unto them; their perſons, their wives, children and ſubſtance: and they go down quick into the pit; alive into the grave the opening earth makes for them; this is the new thing created; though the Rabbins ſay [t], the mouth of the earth, or the opening of the earth, was created from the days of the creation, that is, it was determined or decreed ſo early that it ſhould be: then ye ſhall underſtand that theſe men have provoked the Lord; by riſing up againſt Moſes and Aaron, and ſo againſt the Lord; by falſely accuſing his ſervants, and endeavouring to ſet the people againſt them, and ſo alter the conſtitution of things in church and ſtate.

℣. 31. And it came to paſs, as he had made an end of ſpeaking all theſe things, &c.] As ſoon as he had finiſhed his diſcourſe, which was addreſſed to the congregation, and, according to Joſephus [u], after a long prayer to God, which that writer gives at large; immediately ſo it was, that the ground clave aſunder that was under them; on which they ſtood, not from any natural cauſe, as by ſubterraneous winds, forcibly making their way and burſting the earth, and ſo getting vent, which has been thought to be the cauſe of earthquakes; but this was by the immediate hand and almighty power of God, and came to paſs juſt as Moſes ſuggeſted it would, and as ſoon as he had uttered his words, which made it the more obſervable.

℣. 32. And the earth opened her mouth and ſwallowed them up, &c.] Dathan and Abiram, their wives, ſons, and little ones, that ſtood at the door of their tents with them, and all their goods, as follows: the earth, as if it was a living creature or a beaſt of prey, opened its mouth and ſwallowed them up, as ſuch a creature does its prey: and their houſes; which may be meant both of their families or houſholds, and of the tents they dwelt in, which were their houſes; ſee Deut. i. 6. and all the men that appertained unto Korah; not Korah himſelf, for he was with the 250 men that had cenſers, and with Aaron at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation offering incenſe, and thereby making trial to whom the prieſthood belonged; and who, it is highly probable, periſhed by fire with the 250 men, as Joſephus, Aben Ezra, and others are of opinion; but the family of Korah, and not all of them, for his ſons died not at that time, ch. xxvi. 11. and there were of his poſterity in the times of David, to whom ſeveral of the pſalms are inſcribed; theſe were either out of the way upon buſineſs, the providence of God ſo ordering it for their ſafety; or they diſliked the proceedings of their father, and joined not with him; or if they did at firſt, repented of it and forſook him, as it is probable, On of the tribe of Reuben alſo did, ſince no mention is made of him in the deſtruction: and all their goods; their houſhold-goods, their ſubſtance and riches, their gold, ſilver, cattle, and whatever they were poſſeſſed of: a very extraordinary caſe this! and which perhaps gave riſe to ſome fabulous things among the heathens; however if they can be credited, this ought not to be thought incredible; as Amphiarauus, who with his chariot and its rider are ſaid to be ſwallowed up in the earth, ſtruck by a thunderbolt from Jupiter, and were never ſeen more [w]; and other ſtories are told of perſons praying to their deities for ſecrecy and ſhelter, and the earth has opened and hid them; as Althemenes, when he had ſlain his father [x]; and the nymph Thalia, pregnant by Jupiter, who for fear of Juno, wiſhed the earth might open and take her in, and it accordingly did, as is reported [y].

℣. 33. They and all that appertained unto them, went down alive into the pit, &c.] The grave which the opening earth made for them, they and their

[q] כי לא מלבי Quod non de corde meo, Pagninus, Montanus.
[r] כמות כל האדם ut moriuntur omnes homines, Pagninus; reliqui homines, Junius & Tremellius; alii homines, Piſcator.
[s] בריאה יברא creationem, creaverit, Pagninus, Montanus, Munſter, Fagius; creaturam, Vatablus, Druſius.
[t] Pirke Abot, c. 5. §. 6. Pirke Eliezer, c. 19.
[u] Antiq. l. 4. c. 3. §. 2.
[w] Apollodorus de deorum origine, l. 3. p. 157.
[x] Ib. p. 134.
[y] Macrob. Saturnal. l. 5. c. 19.

their families: and the earth closed upon them; and covered them over; this it did of itself, as Aben Ezra remarks: this was a wonderful instance of almighty power, that it should open in such large fissures as to swallow up such a number of men, with their tents, goods and cattle, and then close again so firmly, as not to have the least appearance upon it of what had happened, as Josephus observes [z], and they perished from among the congregation; and had a name and a place no more with them.

ver. 34. And all Israel that were round about them, fled at the cry of them, &c.] Or because of it, as Aben Ezra; their cry was so loud, their shrieks so dreadful and piercing, that the Israelites about them fled to get out of the sound of them, as well as for their own safety. The Targum of Jonathan not only represents their cry as terrible, but gives the words they expressed at it; "and all Israel that were round about them fled, because of the terror of their voice, when they cried and said, the Lord is righteous and his judgments truth, and truth are the words of Moses his servant, but we are wicked who have rebelled against him:" for they said, lest the earth swallow us up also; which they might fear, since they had provoked the Lord, by associating with these men, and countenancing them by their presence, as they had done; who would have consumed them in a moment at first, had it not been for the intercession of Moses and Aaron.

ver. 35. And there came out a fire from the Lord, &c.] Flashes of lightening from the cloud in which he was: and consumed the 250 men that offered incense; not that it reduced them to ashes, but took away their lives, struck them dead at once, in like manner as Nadab and Abihu were, who though said to be devoured by the fire, yet their bodies remained, Lev. x. 2, 4, 5. and is often the case of persons killed by lightening; tho' Josephus [a] thinks they were so consumed as that their bodies were no more seen, and who is express for it that Korah perished with them in this manner; which is not improbable, since he took his censer and offered incense with them, and was the ring-leader of them, and the person that contended with Aaron for the priesthood, which was to be determined in this way; and though he is not mentioned it may be concluded, as Aben Ezra observes, by an argument from the lesser to the greater, that if the men he drew in perished, much more he himself; and the same writer observes, that in the song of the Red Sea, no mention is made of the drowning of Pharaoh in it, only of his chariots and his host, and yet he himself was certainly drowned: now these men burning incense which belonged only to the priests of the Lord, were by just retaliation consumed by fire, and which made it plainly appear they were not the priests of the Lord; and the judgment on them was the more remarkable, that Moses and Aaron, who stood by them, remained unhurt. This was an emblem of the vengeance of eternal fire, of everlasting burnings, Jude, ver. 11.

ver. 36. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] Immediately after these men were consumed by fire from him; out of the same cloud from whence that proceeded, he spoke: saying; as follows.

ver. 37. Speak unto Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest, &c.] His eldest son, that was to succeed him as high-priest, and who perhaps was upon the spot to see the issue of things; and who, rather than Aaron, is bid to do what follows, partly because Aaron was now officiating, burning incense, and that he might not be defiled with the dead bodies; and partly because it was more proper and decent for the son to do it than the father; and it may be also because it was for the further confirmation of the priesthood in the posterity of Aaron: that he take up the censers out of the burning; either out from among the dead bodies burnt with fire from the Lord, or out of the burning of the incense in them; these were the censers of Korah and the 250 men with him: and scatter thou the fire yonder; the fire that was in the censers; the incense burning in them was to be cast out and scattered here and there, or carried to some unclean place at a distance, as a token of the rejection of the services of these men: and thus the Lord answered the prayer of Moses, that he would not have respect to their offering, ver. 15. if incense is intended there; though that seems to refer only to Dathan and Abiram, and not to these 250 men: for they are hallowed; incense being offered in them before the Lord, and therefore were not to be made use of in common service.

ver. 38. The censers of these sinners against their own souls, &c.] Who by burning incense in them sinned, and by sinning hurt and ruined their souls: let them make them broad plates for the covering of the altar; the altar of burnt-offering, which tho' it had a covering of brass, another made of these were to be put over it, for the further security of it, being of wood, from the fire continually burning on it; these censers were to be beaten into broad plates, by the workmen who understood how to do it: for they offered them before the Lord, therefore they are hallowed; they offered them in his presence, they burned incense in them, and to him, though it was not their business, but the business of the priests; yet these being done, and by his orders, for an open trial who were his priests and who not, they were not to be put to common use: and they shall be a sign unto the children of Israel; a memorial sign, a sign bringing this affair to remembrance, as it is explained in ver. 40. this was a sign to the priests, that they only were to offer every kind of offerings, and to the Levites, who attended the priests at the altar continually, and so had every day a sight of it and of those plates upon it, which would remind them of this fact, and teach them not to usurp the priest's office; and to all the children of Israel, to learn from hence that none were to burn incense but the priests of the Lord, for doing which Uzziah, tho' a king, was punished, 2 Chron. xxvi. 18—23.

ver. 39. And Eleazar the priest took the brazen censers, &c.] The metal of which these censers were made, is particularly observed, to shew that they were fit for the use they were ordered to be put unto, namely, for a covering of the altar of burnt-offering, which was covered with brass, that being very suitable, since fire was continually burning on it; and by this it appears that these censers were different from those of Aaron and his sons, for theirs were silver ones; the high-priest on the day of atonement indeed made use of a golden one, but at all other times he used a silver one [b]; and so did the common priests every day, morning and night, when they offered incense [c]: wherewith they that were burnt had offered; the 250 men burnt with fire from the Lord, having offered incense to him with the brazen censers: and they were made broad plates for a covering of the altar; not by Eleazar, but by workmen skilled in in the art of drawing or beating any kind of metal into thin plates, by the direction and order of Eleazar.

[z] Antiq. ut supra. §. 3. [a] Ib. §. 4. [b] Misn. Yoma, c. 4. §. 4. [c] Misn. Tamid, c. 5. §. 5.

℣. 40. To be a memorial unto the children of Israel, &c.] The whole body of them; this explains what is meant by sign, ℣. 38. that it was to put or keep in mind what follows: that no stranger which is not of the seed of Aaron, come near to offer incense before the Lord; not only any Gentile but any Israelite, and not any Israelite only, but any Levite; none but those of the family of Aaron might offer incense before the Lord: that he be not as Korah and as his company; this makes it clear that Korah perished at this time, though it is no where expressed; and it seems pretty plain from hence, that he perished by fire as his company, the 250 men with censers did: as the Lord said unto him by the hand of Moses; either to Korah, who is the immediate antecedent, and who perished as the Lord had told him by Moses he should; so some understand it, mentioned by Aben Ezra and Jarchi; or else to Aaron, as they interpret it; and then the sense is, that none but those of Aaron's seed should offer incense, as the Lord had declared to him by Moses; see ch. iii. 10. or it may be rather to Eleazar, as Abendana, who did as the Lord spake to him by Moses, took up the censers of the men that were burnt, and got them beaten into broad places, and covered the altar of burnt-offering with them.

℣. 41. But on the morrow, &c.] The day following the dreadful catastrophe, the earth swallowing up Dathan and Abiram, and all that belonged to them, the burning of Korah and the 250 men of his company: all the congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses, and against Aaron; not the princes and heads of the people only, but the whole body of them; though the above persons that murmured against them had but the day before been made such dreadful examples of divine vengeance. This is a most surprising instance of the corruption and depravity of human nature, of the blindness, hardness, and stupidity of the hearts of men, which nothing but the grace of God can remove; the images of the awful sights many of them had seen must be strong in their minds; the shrieks of the wretched creatures perishing must be as yet as it were in their ears; and the smell of the fire was scarce out of their nostrils; and yet notwithstanding this shocking scene of things, they fell into the same evil, and murmur against the men, whose authority being called in question, had been confirmed by the above awful instances: saying, ye have killed the people of the Lord; so they called the rebels, and hereby justified them in all the wickedness they had been guilty of; and though their death was so manifestly by the immediate hand of God, yet they lay it to the charge of Moses and Aaron, because it was in vindication of them that it was done, and because they did not intercede by prayer for them; though it is certain they did all they could to reclaim them from their sin, and prevent their ruin; yet the people insist on it that they were the cause or occasion of their death, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan express it.

℣. 42. And it came to pass when the congregation was gathered against Moses and against Aaron, &c.] To kill them, as the Targum of Jonathan adds; who, perhaps, upon uttering their murmurs made up to them, and by their gestures shewed an intention to murder them: that they looked toward the tabernacle of the congregation; either the people did, to see whether they could observe any appearance of the displeasure of God against them; or rather Moses and Aaron looked that way for help and deliverance in this extreme danger, knowing there was no salvation for them but of the Lord, Jer. ii. 23. and behold the cloud covered it; as when it was first erected, and which was a token of the divine presence, ch. ix. 15, 16. perhaps it had dispersed immediately upon the death of the rebels, and now returned again in favour of the servants of the Lord: and the glory of the Lord appeared; in the cloud, as in ℣. 19. to encourage Moses and Aaron, and to deliver them out of the hands of the people and to the terror of them.

℣. 43. And Moses and Aaron came before the tabernacle of the congregation.] Whose tent was not far from it, about which the people of Israel were gathered; and from whence they came to the tabernacle, both for shelter and safety, and for advice and instruction how to behave in this crisis; they did not go into it, but stood before it; the Lord being in the cloud over it, they stood in the door of it, ℣. 50. so the Targum of Jonathan, "and Moses and Aaron came from the congregation to the door of the tabernacle."

℣. 44. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] Out of the cloud: saying; as follows.

℣. 45. Get you up from among this congregation, &c.] That is, withdraw from them, and be separate, that they might not be involved in the same destruction with them, as well as that they might have no concern for them, or plead with the Lord in prayer on their account, but let him alone to destroy them, as follows: that I may consume them in a moment; as he was able to do, and had proposed to do it before, but they intreated him that he would not, ℣. 21, 22. as they again do: and they fell upon their faces; in prayer, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem; and so Aben Ezra observes, it was to pray to deprecate the wrath of God, and to implore his pardoning mercy for this sinful people; which shews what an excellent temper and disposition these men were of, to pray for them that had so despitefully used them, as to charge them with murder, and were about to commit it on them; see Matt. v. 44. Luke xxiii. 34.

℣. 46. And Moses said unto Aaron, take a censer, &c.] Which lay in the tabernacle: and put fire therein from off the altar; the altar of burnt-offering, from whence fire only was to be taken for burning incense; and lest Aaron in his hurry should forget to take it from thence, but elsewhere, and offer strange fire, as his sons had done, Moses expresses the place from whence he should take it: and put on incense; upon the fire, in the censer, which he was to do when he came into the camp, and not as soon as he took the fire from the altar: the censer with fire in it he carried in one hand, and the incense in the other; and when he was in the midst of the congregation, he put the incense on the fire, and burnt it, as appears from the following verse: this was an emblem of prayer, and a figure of the intercession and mediation of Christ, Ps. cxli, 2. Rev. viii. 3, 4. and go quickly unto the congregation; the case reqired haste: and make an atonement for them; which was usually done by the sacrifice of a sin or trespass-offering, but now there was no time for that, and therefore incense, which was of quicker dispatch, was used for that purpose instead of it: for there is wrath gone out from the Lord; some token of it, some disease was inflicted, inflicted, which Moſes had information of from the Lord, and therefore expreſsly ſays, the plague is begun; a peſtilence was ſent among the people.

℣. 47. And Aaron took as Moſes commanded, &c.] A cenſer with fire in it from the altar, and alſo incenſe: and ran into the midſt of the congregation; though a man in years and in ſo high an office, and had been ſo ill uſed by the people; yet was not only ſo ready to obey the divine command, but ſo eager to ſerve this ungrateful people, and ſave them from utter deſtruction, that he ran from the tabernacle into the midſt of them: and behold the plague was begun among the people; he ſaw them fall down dead inſtantly in great numbers: and he put on incenſe; upon the fire in the cenſer, which though it was not in common lawful to burn but in the holy place on the altar of incenſe, yet upon this extraordinary occaſion, it was diſpenſed with by the Lord, as it had been the day before when he offered it at the door of the tabernacle with the 250 men of Korah's company; and perhaps the reaſon of it now was, that the people might ſee Aaron perform this kind office for them, and give them a freſh convincing proof of his being inveſted with the office of prieſthood from the Lord, or otherwiſe he could have done this in its proper place, the ſanctuary: and made an atonement for the people; by offering incenſe, which God ſmelt a ſweet ſavour in, and accepted of, and his wrath was appeaſed and the plague ſtayed: in this Aaron was a type of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and of his mediation, atonement, and interceſſion; wrath is gone forth from God for the ſins of men, which is revealed in the law; and death the effect of it, has taken place on many in every ſenſe of it, corporal, ſpiritual and eternal; Chriſt as mediator, in purſuance of his ſuretyſhip-engagements, has made atonement for the ſins of his people by the ſacrifice of himſelf; and now ever lives to make interceſſion for them, which is founded upon his ſacrifice and ſatisfaction, his ſufferings and death, ſignified by the fire in which the incenſe was put.

℣. 48. And he ſtood between the dead and the living, &c.] The plague beginning at one end of the camp and ſo proceeded on, Aaron placed himſelf between that part of it wherein it had made havock, and that wherein yet it was not come; the Targum of Jonathan is, "he ſtood in prayer in the middle, and made a partition with his cenſer, between the dead and living;" in this he was a type of Chriſt the mediator between God and man, the living God and dead ſinners; for tho' his atonement and interceſſion are not made for the dead in a corporal ſenſe, nor for thoſe who have ſinned, and ſin unto death, the unpardonable ſin, nor for men appointed unto death, but for the living in Jeruſalem, or for thoſe who are written in the Lamb's book of life; yet for thoſe who are dead in ſin, and as deſerving of eternal death as others, whereby they are ſaved from everlaſting ruin: and the plague was ſtayed; it proceeded no farther than where Aaron ſtood and offered his incenſe, and made atonement: ſo the conſequence of the atonement and interceſſion of Chriſt is that the wrath of God ſin deſerves, comes not upon thoſe that have a ſhare therein, the ſecond death ſhall not ſeize upon them, nor they be hurt with it; for, being juſtified by the blood of Chriſt, and atonement for their ſins being made by his ſacrifice, they are ſaved from wrath to come.

℣. 49. Now they that died in the plague were 14700, &c.] Thus what they were threatened with, that their carcaſes ſhould fall in the wilderneſs was more and more fulfilled: beſide them that died about the matter of Korah; theſe are not taken into the number here, even the 250 men of Korah's company, and the families of Dathan and Abiram; how many they were is not certain, but they were but few in compariſon of theſe.

℣. 50. And Aaron returned unto Moſes, &c.] After he had by his atonement and interceſſion put a ſtop to the wrath of God broken forth upon the people: unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; where Moſes was waiting for his return, and to know the iſſue of this affair: and the plague was ſtayed; even before Aaron left the camp, and is here repeated for the certainty of it, and to intimate that it continued to ceaſe, and broke not out again.

CHAP. XVII.

IN this chapter the prieſthood of Aaron is further confirmed and eſtabliſhed by the budding and bloſſom of his rod, as it lay among the princes of the ſeveral tribes, when theirs did not, ℣. 1—9. which rod of Aaron was ordered to be laid up before the ark, as a token againſt the rebels, and to put an end to all murmurings againſt Aaron for the future; which was accordingly done, ℣. 10, 11. upon which the people expreſſed their fear of periſhing becauſe of their ſins, ℣. 12, 13.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After the plague ceaſed, for the further confirmation of the prieſthood in Aaron's family, another method is directed to by the Lord: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] The principal men among them of the ſeveral tribes: and take of every one of them; not of every individual of the people of Iſrael, but of their princes, as afterwards explained: a rod according to the houſe of their fathers; or father, of whom their houſe or tribe was called, as Reuben, Simeon, &c. this rod was either a common walking-ſtaff, as ſome think, or rather the enſign of their princely office and dignity peculiar to each tribe; though ſome think it was now freſh cut off from an almond-tree, and that all the rods were of one and the ſame tree; but ſuppoſing they were all of the almond-kind, as Joſephus[d] thinks, yet being dry rods, and of long uſe, ſerved to make the miracle appear the greater: of all their princes, according to the houſe of their fathers, twelve rods; this explains who they were to be taken of, the princes of the ſeveral tribes, whoſe names are given, ch. i. 5—15. and the number of them twelve, according to the number of the twelve tribes: write thou every man's name upon his rod; the name of each prince, or head of a tribe, either by cutting it into the rod, or faſtening a writing to it, after the manner of thoſe times; as for inſtance, the name of Elizur for the tribe of Reuben; by which it was to be made, and was made to appear that to none of theſe tribes belonged the prieſthood, but to the tribe tribe of Levi, and to none of that tribe but the family of Aaron; whereby it ſhould ſeem that ſome of all the tribes made pretenſions to it, as being all holy, and eſpecially the chief firſt-born of every tribe, as ſuch their princes were.

[d] Antiq. l. 4. c. 4. §. 2.

℣. 3. And thou ſhalt write Aaron's name upon the rod of Levi, &c.] Or upon the rod that was for the tribe of Levi; the name of Aaron was to be written, not the word Levi, or a Levite, as Joſephus [c]; for that would not have decided the controverſy about the prieſthood, which chiefly lay between the Levites and the family of Aaron, who were of the ſame tribe: for one rod ſhall be for the head of the houſe of their fathers; one rod for the head or prince of every tribe, every prince repreſenting his own tribe he was the head of, and the rod the prince; and though the tribe of Levi was divided into two families, the family of the prieſts, and the family of the Levites; yet, as Jarchi obſerves, they were but one tribe, and ſo one rod for them, as for the other tribes.

℣. 4. And thou ſhalt lay them up in the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] In the moſt holy place: before the teſtimony; that is, the ark in which the teſtimony or the law was: here they were laid as in the preſence of God, who was in a miraculous way to decide the controverſy by them, and put an end to it; for upon the ark was the mercy-ſeat, over which were the cherubim, the ſeat of the divine majeſty, and where none could come at them, and where no fraud could be ſuppoſed to be committed: where I will meet with you; not with the people in perſon, who might not go at any time into the moſt holy place; nor with Aaron, who only might go into it on the day of atonement; but with Moſes, the chief ruler and repreſentative of the whole body of the people, and who might go in there at any time, to conſult with God about matters of moment and difficulty, and where the Lord had ſaid he would meet him, Exod. xxv. 22. and now would, in a miraculous way, clearly ſhew him, and the people of Iſrael by him, who was the prieſt he had choſen of all the tribes.

℣. 5. And it ſhall come to paſs, that the man's rod whom I ſhall chooſe, &c.] Or make it manifeſt that he had choſen him, and ſo confirm the choice he had made of him and his family, for the prieſthood to be and continue in: ſhall bloſſom; bud and bloſſom, and yield fruit, as it afterwards did, which is here declared before-hand, that the miracle might appear the greater, exactly anſwering to a prediction delivered out before of it: and I will make to ceaſe from me the murmurings of the children of Iſrael, whereby they murmur againſt you; againſt Moſes for ſetting up his brother as an high-prieſt, and eſtabliſhing the prieſthood in his family; and againſt Aaron for accepting of it, and officiating in it; but by this method now taken, God would for ever ſilence their murmurings, ſo that they ſhould never be able with any face, to object any more to the authority of the Aaronical prieſthood, which ſhould appear by the predicted miracle beyond all diſpute and contradiction.

℣. 6. And Moſes ſpake unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] What the Lord had bid him ſay unto them concerning the rods, which they hearkened unto and obſerved: and every one of their princes gave him a rod apiece, for each prince one; every prince of the ſeveral tribes, and ſo a rod for every tribe, as well as for each prince: according to their fathers houſes, even twelve rods; there being twelve tribes named after their fathers, or the patriarchs, the 12 ſons of Jacob; and Joſeph having two tribes which ſprung from him, called after his two ſons Ephraim and Manaſſeh, there were 12 rods beſides that of Aaron; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion renders the words with the next clauſe, "and there were 12 "rods beſides the rod of Aaron;" in all 13: tho' the Jews ſay, there were but 12 with it, allowing but one rod for Joſeph, under whom were comprehended Ephraim and Manaſſeh, and reckoning the tribe of Levi one of the 12: ſo Aben Ezra obſerves, that the rod of Levi was among the 12, and Joſeph had but one rod: and the rod of Aaron was among their rods; in the middle of them, and was ſo placed, as Jarchi thinks, that it might not be ſaid, becauſe it was put on the ſide of the Shekinah or divine majeſty, therefore it budded; but being in the middle of them there could be no difference in that reſpect.

℣. 7. And Moſes laid up the rods before the Lord, in the tabernacle of witneſs.] In that part of the tabernacle, where the teſtimony or witneſs was, that is, the law, which was in the ark, over which was the mercy-ſeat, with the cherubim between which Jehovah dwelt, and this was the moſt holy place; and the rods being laid here, might be ſaid to be laid before the Lord, who, by making a difference in one of thoſe rods from the reſt, would decide the controverſy about the prieſthood, which was the end of their being laid before him.

℣. 8. And it came to paſs, that on the morrow Moſes went into the tabernacle of witneſs, &c.] Where none but he could go at any time; this was the day after the rods had been placed there: and behold, the rod of Aaron for the houſe of Levi; the rod that had Aaron's name upon it, which was to repreſent the tribe of Levi, of which he was: was budded, and brought forth buds; knobs of bloſſom, ſuch that are ſeen on trees before they open; for the almond-tree puts forth its bloſſoms before its leaves; though the Targum of Jonathan renders it branches, as do ſome verſions; and ſome think; this is to be underſtood of its putting out its leaves firſt, contrary to the nature of the almond-tree, and ſo makes the miracle the greater; thus Ben Melech: and bloſſomed bloſſoms; open flowers or bloſſoms, ſuch as appear on the almond-tree in the ſpring, and look very beautiful: and yielded almonds; ripe almonds, in their full perfection, as the Targums of Jeruſalem and Jonathan; the latter of which is, "in the ſame night it perfected and "brought forth almonds:" the word uſed has the ſignification of weaning, and alludes to children grown up to ſome ripeneſs and maturity, Gen. xxi. 8. the caſe ſeems to be this, that in one part of the rod were buds, ſwelling and juſt putting out, in another part open flowers quite blown, and in others full ripe fruit: now this clearly ſhewed it to be ſupernatural, ſince the almond-tree, though quick and early in its production of buds and flowers, yet never has thoſe and ripe fruit on it at the ſame time; to which may be added, that this was not the time of year the almond-tree bloſſoms; not the ſpring, but rather autumn, as it ſhould ſeem, ſince it was after the affair of the ſpies and the murmurs of the people on their report; now it was the time of the firſt ripe grapes, when they went into the land, and they were forty days ſearching it, and it was after their return the inſurrections before recorded were: the deſign of this was to confirm the prieſthood in Aaron's family, and ſhew that that it would continue there, in a flouriſhing condition, and that there would be a ſucceſſion of prieſts from him to the time of the Meſſiah, as there were; and the almond-tree having its name in Hebrew from watchfulneſs and haſte, ſee Jer. i. 11, 12. may denote the vigilance of the prieſts in their office, and the haſte puniſhment makes to come upon ſuch that ſhould oppoſe them, or uſurp the prieſthood, as in the caſe of Uzziah; ſo Jarchi remarks: this rod of Aaron's may be an emblem of the goſpel-miniſtry, of that rod that ſhould come out of Zion, Pſ. cx. 2. which in the eyes of men is mean and deſpicable, like a dry ſtick, but becomes a fruitful one through the power of divine grace; and an almond-tree rod may denote the vigilance and watchfulneſs of goſpel-miniſters over themſelves and others, and their doctrine; and oftentimes whom God puts into the miniſtry, he early calls them by his grace, and frequently makes the firſt part of their miniſtry moſt uſeful, and fruit is brought forth which remains: moreover, this rod may be conſidered as a type of Chriſt; it being a dry rod or ſtick, may denote the meanneſs of his deſcent and appearance in the world, and the unpromiſing aſpect of his being the king, Meſſiah, and ſaviour of men; and being an almond-tree rod, may ſignify his ſpeedy incarnation in the fulneſs of time, which the Lord haſtened; his being the firſt-born, and his right to the prieſthood, and his vigilance in it; its lying among other rods, and budding, and bloſſoming, and bringing forth fruit, may point at Chriſt's aſſuming the common nature of man, his being cut off by death, his reſurrection from the dead, and the fruits ariſing from thence, juſtification, peace, pardon, and eternal life; and as Aaron's prieſthood was confirmed by the budding, &c. of this rod, ſo the deity and meſſiah-ſhip of Chriſt are, by his reſurrection from the dead; ſee the note on Heb. ix. 4.

[c] Antiq. l. 4. c. 4. §. 2.

℣. 9. And Moſes brought out all the rods from before the Lord, unto all the children of Iſrael, &c.] He brought them out of the holy place, and ſhewed them to the princes of the ſeveral tribes: and they looked, and took every man his rod; which they knew by their names upon them; by their own hand-writing, as Aben Ezra; for though Moſes is bid to write their names on them, ℣. 2, 3. yet no more may be meant by that than that he ſhould order them to be written, and take care that they were.

℣. 10. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] After the rods had been viewed, and every prince took his rod, and full ſatisfaction was given that the prieſthood belonged to Aaron, by the budding and bloſſoming of his rod, when the reſt remained as they were: bring Aaron's rod again before the teſtimony; before the ark, in which the teſtimony or law was; here it was placed and continued, but how long cannot be ſaid with certainty, no doubt, for many ages; which increaſes the wonder that it ſhould, as it probably did, continue with its buds, bloſſoms and fruit on it: the apoſtle ſpeaks of it, as in the holy of holies, with the ark, the pot of manna, and the tables of the covenant, Heb. ix. 4. the Jews ſay [f], that when Joſiah the king ordered the ark to be laid up in that place which Solomon had built, that it might not be carried with the captives into captivity, as it is ſaid, 2 Chron. xxxv. 3. put the holy ark, &c. they hid with the ark the rod of Aaron, and the pot of manna, and the anointing oil, and which were not in the ſecond temple; and they ſay [g], particularly of Aaron's rod, that at the time it was laid up by Joſiah, it had its buds and almonds: now this was ordered to be put in the moſt holy place before the ark: to be kept for a token againſt the rebels; to be a token of their ſin and wickedneſs in rebelling againſt God, his ordinance and miniſters; which occaſioned this miracle to be wrought, for the confirmation of the prieſthood in Aaron's family, which they oppoſed, and to be a caution to others not to attempt any thing againſt it for the future; ſo Chriſt and the goſpel-miniſtry will be ſwift witneſſes againſt the oppoſers of him and that; ſee Mal. iii. 5. John iii. 19. and thou ſhalt quite take away their murmurings from me that they die not; quite ſilence all the murmurings of the people with reſpect to the prieſthood, being ſo fully convinced by this miracle of the divine authority Aaron and his family had to exerciſe the prieſtly office, and they only, and ſo ſuch deſtruction of the people be prevented, as had been lately made.

℣. 11. And Moſes did ſo, as the Lord commanded him, even ſo did he.] Took Aaron's rod and laid it up before the ark for the purpoſe mentioned, being a faithful ſervant to God in all his houſe.

℣. 12. And the children of Iſrael ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] The princes of the tribes, who had ſeen the miracle of the rod, and knew that it was laid up in the moſt holy place, and for what purpoſe, which gave them a ſenſible concern: theſe and as many as were acquainted with it, addreſſed Moſes upon it, as follows: ſaying, behold we die, we periſh, we all periſh; which being expreſſed without the copulative, and in different words, ſhew that they were ſpoken quick and in haſte, and diſcover the paſſion of mind, and diſtreſs they were in, and the ſenſe they had of their ſin and danger, fearing they ſhould all die and periſh, as many had already: it has reſpect, as ſome think, to puniſhments paſt and future, ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "ſome of us have been conſumed by "flaming fire, and others of us have been ſwal-"lowed up in the earth and are loſt, and lo, we "are accounted as if all of us would periſh."

℣. 13. Whoſoever cometh any thing near unto the tabernacle of the Lord ſhall die, &c.] They who before were ſo bold and daring as to think the prieſthood was common to them with Aaron, or they had as good a right to it, and might go into the ſanctuary of the Lord where he did, are now ſo frighted at the rod being laid up as a token againſt them, that they thought they muſt not come near the tabernacle at all, and if they did, would be in the utmoſt danger of death: ſhall we be conſumed with dying? ſuch violent deaths, until there are none left of us? but the Syriac and Arabic verſions render the words affirmatively; we are near or about to be conſumed; and ſo the Targum of Onkelos, lo, we are to be conſumed; which agrees beſt with the preceding clauſe, for they would ſcarcely make a queſtion of what they had affirmed.

[f] Kimchi in 2 Chron. xxxv. 3. Maimon. Hilchot Beth Habechirah, c. 4. §. 1.

[g] T. Hieroſ. Shekalim, c. 6. fol. 49. 3.

CHAP.

CHAP. XVIII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the diſtinct work and ſervice of the prieſts and Levites, ℣. 1—7. and of ſeveral things given to the prieſts for their maintenance, ℣. 8—19. and of the tithes the Levites ſhould have to live upon, ſince they were to have no inheritance in the land of Iſrael, ℣. 20—24. and of the tenth out of thoſe tithes they were to give to the high-prieſt, ℣. 25—32.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Aaron, &c.] As the things ſpoken were ſuch as concerned Aaron, he might be only and immediately ſpoken unto: thou and thy ſons, and thy father's houſe with thee; meaning both prieſts and Levites, the prieſts by him and his ſons, and the Levites by his father's houſe: ſhall bear the iniquity of the ſanctuary; the blame of any evil committed there, the puniſhment of it; the prieſts, Aaron and his ſons, if they did not perform the duty of their office aright, he in the moſt holy place, and they in the holy place, and at the altar of burnt-offering in the court; and the Levites, if they did not take care to watch in the tabernacle, and keep out ſtrangers and polluted perſons: and thou, and thy ſons with thee, ſhall bear the iniquity of your prieſthood; be anſwerable for any ſins, errors and miſtakes that ſhould be committed by them in the diſcharge of their office, thro' their own remiſſneſs, or not taking care that the Levites did their duty; this ſhows that the office of prieſthood, though honourable, was burthenſome, and not to be envied; and that the people needed not to be under ſuch terrible apprehenſions as they were, leſt they ſhould come too near the ſanctuary, as to be in danger of death, ſince it lay upon the prieſts and Levites eſpecially, to take care thereof, and who, if negligent, would ſuffer.

℣. 2. And to thy brethren alſo of the tribe of Levi, the tribe of thy father, &c.] For his father Amram was of that tribe, and ſo the Levites were his brethren, as he is directed to conſider them; which might ſerve to conciliate their minds, and make them eaſy with reſpect to his enjoyment of the prieſthood: bring them with thee; into the court of the tabernacle, for further they might not go: that they may be joined unto thee; as their name of Levites ſignifies, perſons joined and united to others, as they were to the prieſts; ſee the reaſon of their patriarch's name Levi in Gen. xxix. 34: and miniſter unto thee; be aſſiſting to the prieſts in killing the ſacrifices, receiving the blood, and flaying the beaſts, and in other things about the ſanctuary, ch. iii. 6: but thou, and thy ſons with thee, ſhall miniſter before the tabernacle of witneſs; which was the moſt holy place, where were the ark of the teſtimony or witneſs, and the tables of the covenant; and they might be ſaid to miniſter before that, when they miniſtred in the holy place, which was before it, when they burned incenſe upon the altar of incenſe, ordered the ſhew-bread, and trimmed the lamps of the candleſtick, which none but the prieſts the ſons of Aaron might do.

℣. 3. And they ſhall keep thy charge, and the charge of all the tabernacle, &c.] That is, the Levites, whatever Aaron and his ſons, the prieſts, ſhould charge them to do, or commit to their care and charge, that they ſhould obſerve; as to watch and keep out all unfit perſons, to take down and ſet up the tabernacle when needful, &c. only they ſhall not come nigh the veſſels of the ſanctuary; as the ark and mercy-ſeat in the holy of holies, the ſhew-bread table, and candleſtick in the holy place; wherefore when theſe were removed from place to place in journeying, they were covered, that they might not touch them as they carried them: and the altar; both of incenſe and burnt-offering, on neither of which might they offer: that neither they nor you alſo die; the prieſts for ſuffering them to meddle with things that did not belong to them, and the Levites for intruding themſelves.

℣. 4. And they ſhall be joined unto thee, &c.] As aſſiſtants in the ſacred ſervice: and keep the charge of the tabernacle of the congregation, for all the ſervice of the tabernacle; ſee the note on ch. iii. 7, 8: and a ſtranger ſhall not come nigh unto you; not any of the other tribes, only ſuch as were of the tribe of Levi; they only were to be brought with them, and joined unto them, and aſſiſt them, and miniſter to them, as in ℣. 2. though the Jews [h] underſtand by a ſtranger any one that was not a prieſt.

℣. 5. And ye ſhall keep the charge of the ſanctuary, &c.] That is, the prieſts, Aaron and his ſons; the high-prieſt was to keep the charge of the moſt holy place particularly, and do what was to be done in that on the day of atonement; and the common prieſts to keep the charge of the holy place, and do every thing relating to the altar of incenſe, the ſhew-bread-table and candleſtick: and the charge of the altar; of burnt-offering, which ſtood in the court of the tabernacle: that there be no wrath any more upon the children of Iſrael; as had been upon Korah and his company, and as afterwards came on Uzziah.

℣. 6. And I, behold, I have taken your brethren the Levites from among the children of Iſrael, &c.] See the note on ch. iii. 12. where the ſame is ſaid, only they are here called the brethren of the prieſts for the reaſon given, ℣. 2: to you they are given as a gift for the Lord, to do the ſervice of the tabernacle of the congregation; ſee the notes on ch. iii. 7, 8, 9.

℣. 7. Therefore thou and thy ſons with thee ſhall keep your prieſt's office, &c.] Obſerve all the duties of it, and keep out others from intruding into it: for every thing of the altar; both of incenſe and of burnt-offering; with reſpect to burning incenſe on the one, and offering ſacrifices on the other; both were to be done by prieſts, and by no other: and within the vail; in the moſt holy place, where the high-prieſt entered but once a year, and he only with incenſe, and the blood of ſacrifices, ſee Heb. ix. 7: and ye ſhall ſerve; do all the buſineſs that is to be done at either altar, whether in the court, or in the holy place, and whatſoever is to be done in the moſt holy place within the vail: I have given your prieſt's office unto you as a ſervice of gift; it was not what they had taken to themſelves of their own will, or had thruſt themſelves into, but what the Lord had called them to, and had freely inveſted them with, ſee Heb. v. 4: and the ſtranger that cometh nigh ſhall be put to death; any common perſon, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; any Iſraelite, one that is a ſtranger from the prieſts, though a Levite, as Aben Ezra; ſuch an one might not come either to the altar of burnt-offering to offer offer any ſacrifice upon it, or the altar of incenſe, to burn incenſe on that, or trim the lamps, or put the ſhew-bread in order, or to do any thing peculiar to the prieſt's office.

[h] Maimon. in Miſn. Zebachim, c. 2. §. 1.

℣. 8. And the Lord ſpake unto Aaron, &c.] Having pointed out to him the duty of his office, he now informs him of the perquiſites of it; or having told him what was his work, now what his wages, or what was his ſervice, and now his maintenance: behold, I alſo have given thee the charge of my heave-offerings, of all the hallowed things of the children of Iſrael; ſuch as the heave-ſhoulder and wave-breaſt, and firſt-fruits, and all other holy things in general, ſuch as were the moſt holy things, as in ℣. 9. and the lighter holy things, as the Jews call them, ℣. 11. the charge of theſe was given to keep for themſelves, and for their families: unto thee have I given them by reaſon of the anointing; becauſe of his office as a prieſt, to which he was conſecrated by anointing: and to thy ſons by an ordinance for ever; ſee Lev. vii. 34, 35, 36.

℣. 9. This ſhall be thine of the moſt holy things, &c.] For, as obſerved, there were ſome lighter and leſſer holy things or ſacrifices, and others ſuperlatively ſo: and thoſe are begun with, ſuch as were reſerved from the fire; thoſe parts of ſacrifices which were not burnt with fire on the altar of burnt-offerings: every oblation of theirs; which is a general word, including various offerings, the particulars follow: every meat-offering of theirs; or bread-offering, for they were made of fine flour and oil, and burnt on the altar, the remainder of which was eaten by Aaron and his ſons, Lev. vi. 14—18: every ſin-offering of theirs; which was offered to make atonement for ſin, which alſo belonged to the prieſts and their ſons, excepting ſuch whoſe blood was carried into the moſt holy place, Lev. vi. 25—30: and every treſpaſs-offering of theirs, which they ſhall render unto me; which was offered for a treſpaſs committed; what remained of this alſo, when burnt on the altar, was eaten by the prieſts and his ſons, Lev. vii. 5, 6. and this ſacrifice was a ram, when a treſpaſs was committed, either in the holy things of the Lord, or in wrongs done to men, Lev. v. 15. and vi. 6. Jarchi interprets it of an offering for a treſpaſs committed by rapine or violence to a ſtranger: theſe, all of them, it is added, ſhall be moſt holy for thee and for thy ſons; for their uſe, and for theirs only.

℣. 10. In the moſt holy place ſhalt thou eat it, &c.] Not in the holy of holies, eminently ſo called, nor in the holy place, for they were neither of them places to eat in; but in the tent of the congregation, as Aben Ezra, or court, as Jarchi; called moſt holy, in diſtinction from and in compariſon of the camp of Iſrael, and their tents, as afterwards of Jeruſalem, and their houſes there, where they might not eat the moſt holy things: every male ſhall eat it; the ſons of prieſts, and they only, not their wives, nor their daughters, and therefore not to be eaten at home, or in their own houſes: it ſhall be holy unto thee; ſeparated only for the uſe of him and his ſons.

℣. 11. And this is thine, &c.] What follow, which appertained to the prieſts, are the leſs or lighter holy things: the heave-offering of their gift; the right ſhoulder, given to the prieſt for an heave-offering of the ſacrifices of peace-offerings, Lev. vii. 32. according to Jarchi, it was what was lifted up or heaved from the thank-offering, the peace-offerings, and the ram of the Nazarites, ſee Lev. vii. 14, 32. Numb. vi. 19, 20. with all the wave-offerings of the children of Iſrael; which were waved to and fro before the Lord, as the breaſt of the peace-offerings, called therefore the wave-breaſt, Lev. vii. 30, 34. I have given them unto thee, and to thy ſons, and to thy daughters with thee, by a ſtatute for ever; for theſe were to be eaten in their own houſes, and by their families, wives, children, and ſervants bought with their money, or born in their houſes; but not hired ſervants, nor ſojourners, nor ſtrangers; nor their daughters married to ſtrangers; though, if widows, or divorced, and without children, and returned to their father's houſe, they might eat of them, Lev. xxii. 10—13. thus a proviſion was made for the maintenance of the prieſts of the Lord and their families, until the Meſſiah ſhould come; who has alſo appointed that they that preach the goſpel ſhould live of it, 1 Cor. ix. 13, 14. every one that is clean in thy houſe ſhall eat of it; that was clean in a ceremonial ſenſe; had not touched a dead body, &c. Jarchi ſays, this is ſaid to comprehend his wife; but that might be concluded from what is ſaid before, for if his children, much more might his wife eat of it.

℣. 12. All the beſt of the oil, and all the beſt of the wine, and of the wheat, &c.] Or the fat[1] of them; the fat of any thing being the beſt, ſee Deut. xxxii. 14. the firſt-fruits of them; the oil, and wine, and wheat: which they ſhall offer unto the Lord, them have I given thee; this, Jarchi calls, the great heave-offering, the firſt-fruits of their harveſt and vintage, which being offered to the Lord, was given to the prieſts: the quantity is not fixed, but left to the generoſity of the people, and was a free gift; liberal men would give a 40th part, thoſe of a meaner ſpirit a 50th, and niggardly ones a 60th, and leſs than that was not given; ſee the note on Exod. xxii. 29. compare with this Ezek. xlv. 13.

℣. 13. And whatſoever is firſt ripe in the land, &c.] Of any other ſort of fruit, figs, pomegranates, apples, plumbs, pears, &c. beſides olives and vines: which they ſhall bring unto the Lord, ſhall be thine; which they ſhall bring in a baſket to the tabernacle, where it was, or to the temple, when built: this the prieſts were to have, ſee Deut. xxvi. 2, 3, 4. every one that is clean in thine houſe ſhall eat of it; ſee the note on ℣. 11.

℣. 14. Every thing devoted in Iſrael ſhall be thine.] Fields, houſes, cattle, &c. if abſolutely devoted to the Lord, they were the prieſts; but if devoted to certain uſes, they were appropriated to thoſe uſes, as the repairs of the temple, &c. ſee Lev. 27.

℣. 15. Every thing that openeth the matrix in all fleſh, &c.] The firſt-born of every creature: which they bring unto the Lord; as they were obliged, he claiming it as his own, Exod. xiii. 2. whether it be of men or beaſts, ſhall be thine; every firſt-born of either, being the Lord's, became the prieſt's by his gift: nevertheleſs, the firſt-born of man ſhalt thou ſurely redeem; that is, take the redemption-price for it, which was five ſhekels, as in the following verſe; for the original proprietor was, ſtrictly ſpeaking, the redeemer, and paid the money, and the prieſt was the receiver, to whom it was paid; ſee Exod. xiii. 13. and the firſtlings of unclean beaſts ſhalt thou redeem; with lambs, as an aſs, which is put for unclean beaſts, is ordered to be be redeemed with a lamb, or its neck to be broken, Exod. xiii. 13. the Africans, the ſhepherds among them, as Herodotus relates [k], of their firſtlings they cut off the ear of the beaſt and throw it over a houſe, and then turn its neck back, for they worſhip only the ſun and moon; which ſeems to be an imitation of this law.

[1] חלב pinguedinem, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

℣. 16. And thoſe that are to be redeemed, &c.] Which is to be underſtood not of unclean beaſts laſt mentioned, for they were redeemed with lambs and not with money; and after they were eight days and not a month old, as follows, Exod. xiii. 13. and xxii. 30. but of the firſt-born of men: from a month old ſhalt thou redeem, according to thine eſtimation; that is, take the redemption-money next mentioned; and though both time and price are fixed, yet ſaid to be according to the eſtimation of the prieſt; ſee Lev. xxvii. 5, 6. for the money of five ſhekels; which was about 11 or 12 ſhillings of our money, and is the price given for the redemption of the firſt-born, when the Levites were taken in their ſtead, ch. iii. 47. after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, which is twenty gerahs, as in ch. iii. 47. ſee the note there; of the manner of redeeming the firſt-born, ſee the note on Exod. xiii. 15.

℣. 17. But the firſtling of a cow, or the firſtling of a ſheep, or the firſtling of a goat thou ſhalt not redeem, &c.] That is, ſhalt not take the redemption-price for them, but the creatures themſelves; which they, the prieſts, were to take for their own uſe: they are holy; ſeparated to the Lord, and therefore not to be uſed in common by men, but were ſacred to the Lord, or became the property of his prieſts; ſee Deut. xv. 19. how they were to be made uſe of follows: thou ſhalt ſprinkle their blood upon the altar; for they were to be ſacrificed, and their blood uſed as in other ſacrifices: and ſhalt burn their fat for an offering made by fire, for a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord; as the fat of other ſacrifices was, and particularly of the peace-offerings, which were wholly eaten otherwiſe, Lev. vii. 31.

℣. 18. And the fleſh of them ſhall be thine, &c.] For him and his family, to eat of whether blemiſhed or perfect the Jews ſay [l]: as the wave-breaſt, and as the right ſhoulder are thine; which were his part of the peace-offerings, for him and his ſons to eat of, Lev. vii. 34. and the Jews obſerve [m], that as the wave-breaſt and heave-ſhoulder of the peace-offerings might be eaten in two days and one night, ſo might thoſe of the firſtlings.

℣. 19. All the heave-offerings of the holy things, &c.] All before mentioned, and whatſoever comes under that name: which the children of Iſrael offer unto the Lord; either by his commandment, or of their own free will: have I given thee, and thy ſons, and thy daughters with thee, by a ſtatute for ever; ſo providing for their maintenance by an irrepealable law as long as their prieſthood laſted, even until the Meſſiah ſhould come: it is a covenant of ſalt for ever, before the Lord, unto thee and thy ſeed with thee; an incorruptible, inviolable, durable covenant, which ſhould laſt for ever, even till the goſpel-diſpenſation or world to come ſhould take place; and it would remain ever before the Lord in his ſight, who would take care it ſhould never be made void, but ſtand faſt with Aaron and his poſterity as long as his prieſthood endured.

℣. 20. And the Lord ſpake unto Aaron, &c.] What is ſaid, being what concerned the tribe of Levi, at the head of which Aaron was, even concerning the maintenance of the Levites: thou ſhalt have no inheritance in their land; in the land of Iſrael when they come to poſſeſs it, as the reſt of the tribes had: neither ſhalt thou have any part among them; any part of the land when it is divided by lot, as it was in the times of Joſhua, when taken from the Canaanites; no tract of land was peculiarly aſſigned to them as were to the other tribes, as fields, nor vineyards; they had cities appointed them, and they had houſes and fields devoted to the Lord which fell to them, and others they had by gift or legacy, or by purchaſe, as had Jeremiah the prieſt and Barnabas the Levite, Jer. xxxii. 9. and Acts vi. 36, 37. but they had no ſhare in the diſtribution of the land of Canaan at the time of the diviſion of it among the tribes; no not even in the ſpoil of the cities of the land of Canaan, when they were conquered; this Maimonides [n] ſays they were warned not to take; and a ſon of Levi that took any part of the ſpoil was to be beaten; but the ſpoil of other lands ſubdued by the kings of Iſrael, they might take, as other Iſraelites did: the reaſon of all this was, becauſe they had a ſufficient proviſion made for them in another way, and that they might not be entangled in worldly affairs, or ſpend their time in the culture of fields and vineyards, but wholly give themſelves to the ſervice of God in his houſe: I am thy part, and thine inheritance among the children of Iſrael; in things temporal, the offerings, tithes, firſt-fruits, &c. which were given to the Lord, being beſtowed upon them; and in things ſpiritual, they being employed in the work and ſervice of God, and having a peculiar nearneſs to him, and communion with him: ſo all that are made prieſts unto God, as all believers in Chriſt are, have God for their portion and inheritance, God in his perſons and in all his perfections, and under every character as the God of nature, providence and grace, is the portion of his people; and a rich, large, and ſatisfying portion he is, and which is inexhauſtible and will endure for ever; he is their portion in life and at death, in time and to all eternity; ſee Pſ. lxxiii. 26. and cxlii. 5. Lev. iii. 14.

℣. 21. And behold, I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Iſrael for an inheritance, &c.] The tenth part of the produce of the land; of the wheat, barley, oil, and wine; the tenth part of their harveſt and vintage; ſo that though they were the leaſt of the tribes, they had the greateſt ſhare of the increaſe of the land, and that without any labour or expence; the other having but nine parts among them all, and at the charge and labour of manuring, cultivating, &c. and this they were to have for their ſervice which they ſerve, even the ſervice of the tabernacle of the congregation; ſee ℣. 3, 4, 5, 6.

℣. 22. Neither muſt the children of Iſrael henceforth come nigh the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] To do any part of the prieſt's office, as to burn incenſe, as Korah and his company had done; or to do any part of the work of the Levites, by watching in the tabernacle; by taking it down and ſetting it up, and bearing the veſſels of it; otherwiſe they might come to it, to bring their ſacrifices, to pay their vows, and for their purification when neceſſary, and ſuch-like things: leſt they bear ſin and die; leſt ſin be charged upon them, and puniſhment

[k] Melpomene, ſive, l. 4. c. 188.
[l] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Becorot, c. 4. §. 2. & 5. 2.
[m] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Zebachim, c. 5. §. 8.
[n] Hilchot Shemittah Veyobel, c. 13. §. 10, 11.

punishment be inflicted, even the punishment of death; for it was death to intrude into the priest's office.

℣. 23. But the Levites shall do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] In guarding the tabernacle, that no unclean persons enter into it, or any others take any thing out of it, and in assisting the priests in their service, and carrying the vessels of the sanctuary when required: and they shall bear their iniquity; that is, when they fail in the duty of their office, are not careful in their service, and work, and business appointed them; if either they did not do their business themselves, or suffered others to do it, or such to come to the tabernacle who should not, they would be blameworthy and suffer for it: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, that among the children of Israel they have no inheritance; having such a plentiful provision made for them, by a statute as durable as this.

℣. 24. But the tithe of the children of Israel, &c.] The tenth of the produce of their land, as before: which they offer as an heave-offering unto the Lord; by way of gratitude to him for giving them the land, and for making it so fruitful to them, and as an acknowledgment of his being the sovereign Lord and proprietor of it: I have given to the Levites to inherit; so that the Levites had the tithe not immediately from the Israelites, nor were they dependent on them for them; but they were first given to the Lord, and then by him to the Levites, who held them of him, and not of the Israelites; and were a portion and an inheritance, settled upon them by the Lord himself, which they had as good a right and title unto, as the rest of the tribes had to their several inheritances: therefore have I said unto them, among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance; as in the preceding verse.

℣. 25. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] And not unto Aaron, because a tithe out of the tithe was to be given to Aaron, as Aben Ezra observes, and it was not so proper that he should have this order to deliver to the Levites, in which he and his sons were so much concerned, and therefore it was given to Moses to acquaint them of it: saying; as follows.

℣. 26. Thus speak unto the Levites, and say unto them, &c.] Aaron was to tell them what a provision would be made for them on account of their service, but Moses was to inform them what part Aaron was to have out of it: when ye take of the children of Israel the tithes, which I have given you from them for your inheritance; which was done at the time of their harvest, and of the ingathering of the fruits of the earth: then ye shall offer up an heave-offering of it for the Lord; in token of gratitude for the liberal provision he had made for the maintenance of them: even a tenth part of the tithe; a tenth part out of the tenth of the produce of the land of Israel.

℣. 27. And this your heave-offering, &c.] The tithe of the tithe, which tho' not properly heaved or lifted up, as the heave-offerings, strictly so called, were, any more than the tithe itself, ℣. 24. yet is so called, because separated to the use and service of the Lord, as they were: shall be reckoned unto you, as though it were the corn of the threshing-floor, and as the fulness of the wine-press; that is, it should be as acceptable to God as if they had fields and vineyards, threshing-floors, and wine-presses of their own, from whence corn and wine were taken, as the Israelites when they received their tithes from them; and what remained, they had as good a right unto, and might make use of as their own, as well as they; see ℣. 30.

℣. 28. Thus you also shall offer an heave-offering unto the Lord, &c.] As the Israelites did when they paid tithes to them, ℣. 24: of all your tithes which ye receive of the children of Israel; which heave-offering was a tenth part of them: and ye shall give thereof the Lord's heave-offering to Aaron the priest; that is, the said tenth part of the tithe was to be given not to Aaron only, as the high-priest, as some have thought, and so to his successors in the high-priesthood; but to him and his sons, even to all the priests in common, the high-priest having his share of it; and Josephus [o] is clear for it, that the tithe of the annual fruits was paid to the Levites, and to the priests. Hecatæus, an heathen writer, who lived in the times of Alexander the great, says [p], that all the priests of the Jews received the tenth of whatsoever was produced, and ministred things in common, and were 1500 in number.

℣. 29. Out of all your gifts ye shall offer every heave-offering of the Lord, &c.] Not only out of their tithes, but out of whatsoever gifts were given by the Israelites to them, and out of the produce of the fields which belonged to their cities, Numb. xxxv. 4. the Levites were to take a tenth, and and bring it to the Lord as an heave-offering; that is, they were to give it to the priests, to testify their gratitude for every thing they had, and to sanctify the rest unto them, and confirm their right and title to it, and give them the free use of it: of all the best thereof, even the hallowed part thereof, out of it; which was the tenth part, for that was holy, as Aben Ezra says, and that was to be the best of it, which was always to be given to the Lord.

℣. 30. Therefore thou shalt say unto them, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan is, "thou shalt say to "them the priests;" but the words seem manifestly spoken to the Levites: when ye have heaved the best thereof from it; taken out the tenth part of it, and that the best: then it shall be counted unto the Levites as the increase of the threshing floor, and as the increase of the wine press; then what remains shall be reckoned as much their own, and may be as lawfully enjoyed as the corn of the threshing-floor, and the wine of the wine-fat, of any Israelite whatever.

℣. 31. And ye shall eat it in every place, &c.] In any of their tents or dwelling-houses, not being obliged to eat it in the tabernacle, where the priests were obliged to eat many of their holy things, and second tithes were only to be eaten at Jerusalem, Deut. xiv. 22, 23. but the Levites might eat theirs any where, in any place, clean or unclean, according to Jarchi; for, he says, it might be eaten even in a grave-yard; but Aben Ezra much better, in a clean place, be that where it would: ye, and your households; they and their wives, their sons and daughters, their servants, whether bought or hired; and they might sell it to strangers, to purchase other necessaries with. The Targum of Jonathan interprets this of the priests; but the Levites only are plainly spoken of: for it is your reward for your service in the tabernacle of the congregation; which is said to encourage them in their work, and animate them to it, as well as to clear their right to such a maintenance against all objections; for the labourer is worthy of his reward, as those that labour in the word and doctrine are of theirs, 1 Tim. v. 17, 18.

℣.

[o] Antiq. l. 4. c. 4. §. 3.

[p] Apud Joseph. contr. Apion. l. 1. §. 22.

℣. 32. And ye ſhall bear no ſin by reaſon of it, &c.] Shall have no blame laid upon them, or guilt imputed to them, or puniſhment inflicted on them, on account of their having and enjoying their tithes and gifts: when ye have heaved from it the beſt; took out the tenth, and that the beſt, and given it to the prieſts; or otherwiſe they would be blameworthy, guilty, and liable to puniſhment: neither ſhall ye pollute the holy things of the children of Iſrael; the gifts they have given for holy uſes, and ſo are holy; which would be the caſe if they eat of them, or enjoyed them, without giving the prieſts the tenth part of them: leſt ye die; for it ſeems ſuch a neglect was puniſhable with death.

CHAP. XIX.

THIS chapter contains a law for making a water for purification for ſin, the ingredients of which are the aſhes of a red heifer burnt, about which many things are obſerved, ℣. 1—10. the uſe of the water made of them, to purify ſuch as were unclean by the touch of a dead body, ℣. 11, 12, 13. ſome rules are given, by which it might be known who were unclean on account of a dead body, ℣. 14, 15, 16. the manner of purifying ſuch perſons, ℣. 17, 18, 19. and the puniſhment of thoſe that ſhould neglect purification, ℣. 20, 21, 22.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, &c.] Not at this time, after the buſineſs of the ſpies, and the affair of Korah, but before the children of Iſrael departed from Sinai; and ſo Aben Ezra obſerves, that this was ſpoken in the wilderneſs of Sinai, when the Lord commanded to put unclean perſons out of the camp, and when ſome were defiled with a dead body, and unfit for the paſſover, ch. v. 2. and ix. 6. and mention is made of the water of purifying, ch. viii. 5. ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. This is the ordinance of the law which the Lord hath commanded, &c.] By which it appears, that this law was not of the moral, but of the ceremonial kind, being called an ordinance, a ſtatute, a decree of God, the King of kings; and which was founded not on any clear plain reaſon in the thing itſelf, but in the will of God, who intended it as a type and ſhadow of the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt, and of the efficacy of that to cleanſe from ſin; and it alſo appears by this, that it was not a new law now made, but which had been made already: which the Lord hath commanded; as is plain from what has been obſerved on ℣. 1. and the Jews [q] ſay, that the red heifer was ſlain by Eleazar the day after the tabernacle was erected, even on the ſecond day of the firſt month of Iſrael's coming out of Egypt; and it was now repeated both on account of the prieſts and people, becauſe of the prieſt to whom it belonged, as Aben Ezra obſerves, Aaron being now eſtabliſhed in the prieſthood; and becauſe of the people, who were afraid they ſhould die if they came near the tabernacle; now hereby they are put in mind of a proviſion made for the purification of them, when under any uncleanneſs, which made them unfit for coming to it: ſaying, ſpeak unto the children of Iſrael; whom this law concerned, and for whoſe purification it was deſigned; and it was at the expence not of a private perſon, but of the whole congregation, that the water of purifying was made; and that, as the Jews ſay [r], that the prieſts might have no perſonal profit from it: that they bring thee a red heifer; or young cow, for ſo the word properly ſignifies; one of two years old, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo ſays the Miſnah [s]; though ſome of the Rabbins ſay one of three years, or of four years, or even one of five years old would do. This inſtance, with others, where females are ordered to be ſlain; ſee Lev. iii. 1. confutes the notion of ſuch, who think the laws of Moſes were made in conformity to the cuſtoms of the Egyptians, this being directly contrary to them; if they were the ſame in the times of Moſes, they were in the times of Herodotus, who expreſsly ſays [t], male oxen the Egyptians ſacrifice; but it is not lawful for them to ſacrifice females, for they are ſacred to Iſis. Indeed, according to Plutarch [u] and Diodorus Siculus [w], the Egyptians in their times ſacrificed red bullocks to Typhon, who they ſuppoſed was of the ſame colour, and to whom they had an averſion, accounting him the god of evil; and becauſe red oxen were odious to them, they offered them to him; as red-haired men alſo were ſlain by them for the ſame reaſon, at the tomb of Oſiris, who they ſay was murdered by the red-haired Typhon; but theſe were ſuperſtitions that obtained among them after the times of Moſes, and could not be referred to by him; a better reaſon is to be given why this heifer or cow was to be of a red colour: without ſpot, wherein is no blemiſh; the firſt of theſe, without ſpot, the Jews underſtand of colour, that it ſhould have no ſpots in it of any other colour, black or white, nor indeed ſo much as an hair, at leaſt not two of another colour; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, in which there is no ſpot or mark of a white hair; and Jarchi more particularly, "which is perfect "in redneſs; for if there were in it, he ſays, two "black hairs, it was unfit;" and ſo Ben Gerſom, with which agrees the Miſnah [x]; if there were in it two hairs, black or white, in one part, it was rejected; if there was one in the head, and another in the tail, it was rejected; if there were two hairs in it, the root or bottom of which were black, and the head or top red, and ſo on the contrary; all depended on the ſight: and it muſt be owned, the like niceneſs was obſerved in the red oxen ſacrificed by the Egyptians, as Plutarch relates [y]; for if the ox had but one hair black or white, they reckoned it was not fit to be ſacrificed; in which perhaps they imitated the Jews: it being without blemiſh, was what was common to all ſacrifices, ſuch as are deſcribed in Lev. xxii. 22, 23, 24. and upon which never came yoke; and ſo among the heathens in after-times, very probably in imitation of this, they uſed to offer to their deities oxen that never had bore any yoke; as appears from Homer, Horace, Virgil, Ovid and Seneca, out of whom inſtances are produced by Bochart [z]. Now though this red cow was not properly a ſacrifice for ſin, yet it was analogous to one, and was a type of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in whom all theſe characters meet, and are ſignificant. It being a female, may denote the infirmities of Chriſt's human nature, to which it was ſubject, though ſinleſs leſs ones; he was encompaſſed with, and took on him our infirmities; and may have ſome reſpect to the woman, by whom the tranſgreſſion came, which brought impurity on all human nature, which made a purification for ſin neceſſary; and the red colour of it may point at the fleſh and blood of Chriſt he partook of, and the ſins of his people, which were laid upon him, and were as crimſon and as ſcarlet, and the bloody ſufferings he endured to make ſatisfaction for them; and its being without ſpot and blemiſh, may denote the perfection of Chriſt in his perſon, obedience, and ſufferings, and the purity and holineſs of his nature; and having never had any yoke upon it, may ſignify, that though he was made under the law, and had commands enjoined him by his Father as man, yet was free from the yoke of human traditions, and from the ſervitude of ſin, and moſt willingly engaged, and not by force and compulſion, in the buſineſs of our redemption and ſalvation.

[q] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 7. p. 22. [r] Miſn. Shekalim, c. 7. §. 7. & Maimon. in ib. [s] Miſn. Parah, c. 1. §. 1. [t] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 41. [u] De Iſide. [w] Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 79. [x] Parah, c. 2. §. 5. [y] Ut ſupra. [z] Hierozoic par. 1. l. 2. c. 33. col. 322.

ver. 3. And ye ſhall give her unto Eleazar the prieſt, &c.] The ſon of Aaron; the Sagam of the prieſts, as the Targum of Jonathan calls him, the ſecond or deputy-prieſt; it was not to be given to Aaron, that he might not be defiled, though but for a ſmall time, that ſo he might not be hindered in his office at all; but to Eleazar, to inure him to his office, and to confirm him in it: that he may bring her forth without the camp; without the camp of Iſrael; Jarchi ſays, without the three camps, as afterwards without Jeruſalem; it uſed in after-times to be burnt on the mount of Olives; it was brought forth as impure, and was a type of Chriſt, having the ſins of his people on him, and who in conformity to this type ſuffered without the gates of Jeruſalem, ſee Heb. xiii. 11, 12, 13: and one ſhall ſlay her before his face; the Targum of Jonathan ſays, another prieſt; but it was not neceſſary that it ſhould be ſlain by a prieſt, any man might do it. Jarchi ſays, a ſtranger ſlew, and Eleazar looked on; though it was not ſlain by him, yet it was ſlain before him, that it might look like a ſacrifice, though not offered on the altar; and ſlaying of it denotes the putting of Chriſt to death, which was done in the preſence, and with the approbation of the prieſts and elders of the people.

ver. 4. And Eleazar the prieſt ſhall take of her blood with his finger, &c.] He took the blood in his left-hand, and ſprinkled it with the finger of his right-hand, as Maimonides ſays [a]; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, which ſays, he did not receive it into a veſſel, but into the palm of his hand, and from thence ſprinkled it with his finger [b]; which Ainſworth thinks ſignified the ſpirit of Chriſt our high-prieſt, called the finger of God, Luke xi. 20. who takes the blood of Chriſt, and ſprinkles it on the hearts of his people, whereby they are freed from an evil conſcience: and ſprinkle of her blood directly before the tabernacle of the congregation ſeven times; or towards the tabernacle, ſo Noldius [c]; as ſprinkling of the blood was the principal action in ſacrifices, this was to be done directly before the tabernacle, from whence its purifying virtue was expected, though it was not ſhed in it, that it might have all the appearance of a ſacrifice it could have; and being done ſeven times, denotes the perfection of it: the prieſt, when he ſprinkled, ſtood on the eaſt-ſide, with his face to the weſt. When the temple was built at Jeruſalem, this affair was tranſacted on the mount of Olives, which was eaſt of Jeruſalem. Jarchi ſays, the prieſt ſtood in the eaſt of Jeruſalem, and placed himſelf ſo, that he might ſee the door of the temple at the time of ſprinkling the blood. Now it appears, as Maimonides ſays [d], that the floor of the temple was higher than the floor of the eaſtern gate of the mountain of the houſe 22 cubits, and the height of the gate of the mountain of the houſe was 20 cubits; wherefore one that ſtood over-againſt the eaſtern gate, could not ſee the door of the temple, therefore they made the wall, which was over the top of this gate (the battlement of it) low, ſo that he (the prieſt) that ſtood on the mount of Olives, might ſee the door of the temple, at the time he ſprinkled the blood of the cow over-againſt the temple; otherwiſe he could only have ſeen the eighth ſtep of the porch of the temple, as the ſame writer obſerves [e], with which agrees the Miſnah [f], that all the walls there (about the mountain of the houſe) were high, except the eaſtern wall, that ſo the prieſt that burnt the cow might ſtand on the top of the mount of Olives, and look and behold the door of the temple, when he ſprinkled the blood.

ver. 5. And one ſhall burn the heifer in his ſight, &c.] Another prieſt, as the Targum of Jonathan, Eleazar looking on, as that expreſſes it; the Jews ſay [g], that when the prieſt came to the mount of olives, accompanied by the elders of Iſrael, before he burnt the cow, he dipped himſelf in a dipping-place there; and the wood being laid there in order, wood of cedar, aſh, fir, and fig-trees, made in the form of a tower, with holes opened in it (to put in the fire, and that it might burn the quicker) and its aſpect being to the weſt, he bound the cow, and laid her upon the pile, with her head to the ſouth, and her face to the weſt; and then having ſlain it, and ſprinkled its blood, as before related, he ſet fire to it by the help of ſome ſmall wood: the burning of it may ſignify the dolorous ſufferings of Chriſt, when the wrath of God was poured forth like fire upon him; the ſame was ſignified by roaſting the paſſover-lamb: her ſkin, and her fleſh, and her blood, with her dung, ſhall be burn; which may denote the extent of Chriſt's ſufferings, reaching to all parts of his body, ſkin, fleſh, and blood, and the ſhame and reproach that attended them ſignified by dung; as well as how impure and accurſed he was accounted when he was made ſin for his people, bore their ſins and ſuffered for them, even not in body only, but in his ſoul alſo; for his ſoul as well as his body were made an offering for ſin.

ver. 6. And the prieſt ſhall take cedar-wood, and hyſſop, and ſcarlet, &c.] Another prieſt, according to the Targum of Jonathan; but it ſeems to deſign Eleazar the prieſt, and ſo in after-times, the ſame prieſt that burnt the cow took theſe things; the Jews ſay [h], when he took them he ſaid, is this cedar wood? is this hyſſop? is this ſcarlet? ſo he ſaid three times for every one of them, and he was anſwered, yes, three times to each of them: theſe were the ſame that were uſed at the cleanſing of the leper, Lev. xiv. 4. and caſt it into the midſt of the burning of the heifer; theſe were rolled or bound up together, as the Jews ſay [i], and made one bundle of, that they might the more eaſily be caſt into the fire; the hyſſop was wrapped about the

[a] Hilchot Parah Adumah, c. 3. §. 2. [b] Vid. Miſn. Parah, c. 3. §. 7. [c] p. 81. N°. 379.
[d] Hilchot Beth Habechirah, c. 6. §. 5. [e] In Miſn. Middot, c 2. §. 4. [f] Miſn. ib. [g] Miſn. Parah, c. 3. §. 7, 8, 9. [h] Ib. §. 10. [i] Ib. §. 11. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

the cedar wood with the ſcarlet wool: the true reaſon of the uſe of theſe, Maimonides ſays [k], was never clear to him; but the cedar wood, being durable, may denote the continued efficacy of Chriſt's ſufferings; the hyſſop, being purgative and of a good ſmell, the purging nature of Chriſt's ſacrifice, who, by himſelf purged away our ſins, and the ſweet odour thereof to the Lord; and the ſcarlet, the ſins of his people deſtroyed thereby.

℣. 7. Then the prieſt ſhall waſh his clothes, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan has it, "he that ſlew the cow," and Aben Ezra, the prieſt that burnt it; but it ſeems to mean Eleazar, the prieſt that ſprinkled the blood, and by touching that was defiled and needed waſhing; and ſo the Jews [l] ſay, all that were employed about it, from the beginning to the end, were defiled in their garments; not only he that ſlew it, and burnt it, and ſprinkled its blood, but he that took and caſt in the cedar-wood, &c. as we find alſo he that gathered the aſhes of it as well as burnt it: this creature was reckoned ſo impure, though its aſhes were for purifying, that whoever had any thing to do with it was unclean, as the ſcape goat, which had the ſins of all Iſrael on it; and this as that was typical of Chriſt, made ſin for his people, that he might cleanſe them from ſin: it may point at the ſin of the prieſts and people of Iſrael, in putting Chriſt to death, and yet there was cleanſing from that ſin, in the precious blood of Chriſt, as well as from all others: and bathe his fleſh in water; in forty ſeahs of water, as the Targum of Jonathan; not his clothes only, but his body was to be dipped in water: and afterward he ſhall come into the camp; when his clothes and fleſh are waſhed, but not before: and the prieſt ſhall be unclean until the even; though waſhed, and therefore, though he is ſaid to go into the camp upon waſhing, this is to be underſtood, after the evening is come: ſo Jarchi directs to interpret the paſſage, tranſpoſe it, ſays he, and ſo explain it; and he ſhall be unclean until the evening, and after that he may come into the camp, not only the camp of Iſrael, but the camp of the Shekinah, as the ſame writer.

℣. 8. And he that burneth her ſhall waſh his clothes in water, &c.] In forty ſeahs of water, as the Targum of Jonathan: this ſhews that one different from this is deſigned in the preceding verſe, and that this is one diſtinct from him that ſprinkled the blood, ℣. 4, 5. and bathe his fleſh in water; in a like quantity, as the above Targum: and ſhall be unclean until the even; and though waſhed, might not go into the camp until that time: this may ſignify, as before, that though the crucifixion of Chriſt was a very great ſin, and done by wicked hands, yet was pardonable through the very blood that was ſhed by them, Acts ii. 23, 36, 38, 41.

℣. 9. And a man that is clean ſhall gather up the aſhes of the heifer, &c.] A man, a clean prieſt, as the Targum of Jonathan; in after-times great care was taken that the prieſt concerned in the burning of the red cow ſhould be pure; he was ſeparated from his own houſe ſeven days before the time, and every day he was ſprinkled with the blood of all ſin-offerings then offered, that it might be ſure he was free from any pollution, by a grave, or a dead body; and for the ſame reaſon they made a cauſeway on double arches from the temple to the mount of olives, over the valley of Kedron, leſt any unſeen grave ſhould be in the way; and when he came thither he was obliged to waſh or dip himſelf, as before obſerved [m]; and ſo he that gathered up the aſhes was to be clean from all ceremonial pollution: the Jews ſay [n], that they pounded the aſhes; if there were any black coal in them or bone, they did not leave it in them, but ſifted them in ſtone ſieves; and not the aſhes of the heifer only they took, but the aſhes of the cedar-wood, &c. mixed with them; and theſe they put, as the Targum of Jonathan ſays, into an earthen veſſel incloſed in a covering of clay: and lay them up without the camp in a clean place; they were divided into three parts, according to the Targum of Jonathan, one part was put in the Chel (or the incloſure of the court of the tabernacle) another in the mount of olives, and the third part was divided among all the wards of the Levites, with which the Miſnah [o] agrees; Jarchi makes mention of the ſame diviſion, and of the uſe of each; that the wards had was without the court, that the citizens might take of it, and all that needed to be purified; that in the mount of olives was for the prieſts, to ſanctify other heifers with it; and that in the Chel was for a reſerve: and it ſhall be kept for a reſerve for the congregation of Iſrael; as aſhes may be kept a long time, if well taken care of, becauſe they are not ſubject to any corruption or putrefaction; and ſo was, as biſhop Patrick obſerves from doctor Jackſon, a figure of the everlaſting efficacy of Chriſt's blood: and according to the Jews, theſe aſhes of the firſt heifer muſt laſt more than 1000 years; for they ſay [p] the ſecond that was burnt was in the time of Ezra, though they reckon ſeven more afterwards before the deſtruction of the ſecond temple, in all nine; and the tenth they expect in the days of the Meſſiah, which are paſt; he being come, has put an end to this type by fulfilling it in himſelf: and the uſe of them was for a water of ſeparation; being put into water, and mixed with it, was for the cleanſing of ſuch as were ſeparated from others for their uncleanneſs, and was a purification of them for it, as follows: it is a purification for ſin; or it is ſin [q], not an offering for ſin, properly ſpeaking; the heifer, whoſe aſhes they were, not being ſacrificed in the tabernacle, nor on the altar, and wanted other rites; yet it anſwered the purpoſes of a ſin-offering, and its aſhes in water were typical of the blood of Chriſt, which purges the conſcience from dead works, when this only purified to the ſanctifying of the fleſh, Heb. ix. 13, 14. and is the fountain ſet open for ſin and uncleanneſs, Zech. xiii. 1. where both the words are uſed which are here, and in the preceding clauſe: aſhes are known to be of a cleanſing nature, and ſo a fit emblem of ſpiritual purification by Chriſt; and the duration of them, of the perpetuity of it.

℣. 10. And he that gathereth the aſhes of the heifer ſhall waſh his clothes, &c.] Whom the Targum of Jonathan calls a prieſt, though it does not ſeem neceſſary he ſhould be one: and be unclean until the even; ſee the note on ℣. 7. and it ſhall be unto the children of Iſrael, and unto the ſtranger that ſojourneth among them, for a ſtatute for ever; until the Meſſiah came, whoſe ſufferings and death are for the expiation of, and purification for the ſins of Jews

[k] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 47. [l] Miſn. Parah, c. 4. §. 4. [m] Ib. c. 3. §. 1. 6. 7.
[n] Ib. §. 11. [o] Ibid. [p] Ib. §. 5. [q] חטאת היא peccatum ipſa, Montanus; peccatum enim eſt, Tigurine verſion.

Jews and Gentiles, of all the people of God throughout the world, ſignified by the burning of this heifer; ſee 1 John ii. 2.

℣. 11. He that toucheth the dead body of any man, &c.] A man and not a beaſt, as Aben Ezra obſerves; for he that touched the dead body of a beaſt was unclean only until evening, Lev. xi. 24. any man, Jew or Gentile, as the ſame writer notes: this is inſtanced in, as being the principal pollution, though not the only one, yet ſo ſome think, for which the water of purification made of the aſhes of the burnt heifer was appointed: ſhall be unclean ſeven days; the reaſon of which is, becauſe death is the fruit of ſin, which is of a defiling nature, and to ſhew that all that are dead in ſins are defiled and defiling, and are not to be touched, or to have communion and fellowſhip held with them, but to be abſtained from.

℣. 12. He ſhall purify himſelf with it, &c.] That is, with the aſhes of the water of purification made of them: and this was to be done firſt on the third day; from the time of his touching the dead body. Aben Ezra intimates, that there is a ſecret or myſtery in this and the following number ſeven; it may reſpect the third day of Chriſt's reſurrection, who, as he ſhed his blood for the expiation and purification of ſinners, ſo he roſe again the third day for the juſtification of them: and on the ſeventh day he ſhall be clean; which may denote the perfect ſtate, or ſabbath of reſt, which remains for the people of God, when all Chriſt's purified and juſtified ones ſhall be clear of all ſin, and be the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect: but if he purify not himſelf the third day, then the ſeventh day he ſhall not be clean; whoever is not cleanſed from his ſins by the blood of Chriſt, ſhed for the remiſſion of them, and is not juſtified from them by him that roſe from the dead the third day, will never be cleanſed in the world to come, or in the eternal ſabbath; but it will then be ſaid, let him that is filthy be filthy ſtill, Rev. xxii. 11.

℣. 13. Whoſoever toucheth the dead body of any man that is dead, and purifieth not himſelf, &c.] With the aſhes of the heifer, or water of purification, and ſo neglects the means which God has appointed for his cleanſing: defileth the tabernacle of the Lord; that is, if he goes into it in his uncleanneſs, which it was not lawful for him to do: from the Jews the Aſſyrians ſeem to have borrowed ſome cuſtoms of theirs, as related by Lucian [q], who upon burying a dead cock reckoned ſeven days, ſee ℣. 11. and then went into the temple, for before they might not go in, nor perform holy ſervice; ſuch laws they uſe, that if any one ſees a dead carcaſe, he may not go that day into the temple; but he goes in the day following, after he has purified himſelf: and that ſoul ſhall be cut off from Iſrael; either be excommunicated from the church, or die by the hand of the civil magiſtrate, or by the immediate hand of God; that is, if he knew he had touched a dead body, and wilfully neglected the means of his purification, and ſo ſinned preſumptuouſly; otherwiſe, if all this was done ignorantly, an atonement was made for it, Lev. v. 3—6. becauſe the water of ſeparation was not ſprinkled upon him, he ſhall be unclean; as all are who are not ſprinkled with the blood of Chriſt: his uncleanneſs is yet upon him; and will remain, nothing can remove it; as nothing can remove the ſtain and blot of ſin but the blood of Chriſt; and where that is not applied it will remain marked before God, and will lie upon the ſinner to his utter condemnation and ruin; ſee Joh. ii. 22.

℣. 14. This is the law when a man dieth in a tent, &c.] A tent is only mentioned, becauſe the Iſraelites now dwelt in tents, as Aben Ezra remarks; otherwiſe the law holds equally good, of an houſe as of a tent: all that come into the tent, and all that is in the tent, ſhall be unclean ſeven days; the meaning of which is, that all perſons that come into a tent or houſe where a dead body is, are equally unclean, as thoſe that were in it when it died; and the ſame is to be ſuppoſed of all veſſels brought into it, as well as thoſe that are in it, that is, open ones, as appears by what follows.

℣. 15. and every open veſſel, &c.] An earthen one, as the Targum of Jonathan; and ſo Jarchi interprets it; and Maimonides [r] obſerves, that this is only to be underſtood of an earthen veſſel: which hath no covering bound upon it; a linen or a woolen cloth wrapped and tied about it: is unclean; the air of the houſe getting into it by its being uncovered.

℣. 16. And whoſoever toucheth one that is ſlain with a ſword in the open fields, &c.] That is killed by another, that dies a violent death, either by the ſword or other means; one that touched ſuch an one was unclean, or that touched the ſword with which he was ſlain, as the Targum of Jonathan adds: or a dead body; that dies a natural death, or ſuddenly, or in any way: or a bone of a man; dug out of a grave, and lying by itſelf: or a grave; the Targum adds, either the covering or ſide of a grave: ſhall be unclean ſeven days; all which has reſpect to the defiling nature of ſin, which is the cauſe of death and the grave.

℣. 17. And for an unclean perſon, &c.] Defiled by any of the above means: they ſhall take of the aſhes of the burnt heifer of purification for ſin; from the place where they were laid up for this uſe; ſee the note on ℣. 9. and ſome have thought that they were laid up in various cities and places in the country, as well as at Jeruſalem, that they might be come at eaſily upon occaſion; otherwiſe they could not be had without great trouble and expence, and in ſome places not ſo ſoon as the law required, for their purification, namely, on the third day after their defilement: and running water ſhall be put thereto in a veſſel; the Targum of Jonathan is, "fountain-water in the midſt of an earthen veſſel;" for no water but fountain, ſpring, or river-water was made uſe of; and it ſhould ſeem by what is ſaid, that aſhes were firſt put into the veſſel, and then the running water was put to them; and yet the Jewiſh writers ſay [s], that if the aſhes were put in firſt, and then the water, it was not right; and the meaning of what is ſaid here is, that the water and aſhes ſhould be mixed together; for it is urged from the words: running water in a veſſel, that it is plain, that the water is put in the veſſel and not to the aſhes; and therefore that which is ſaid, ſhall be put thereto, is to caution the perſon, that after he has put the aſhes upon the water, that he mixes them well with his finger, and cauſe the water below to riſe above [t].

℣. 18. And a clean perſon ſhall take hyſſop, and dip it in the water, &c.] Three ſtalks of hyſſop bound together, as the Targum of Jonathan, and this man was to be a clean prieſt, according to the ſame; but it does not ſeem neceſſary that he ſhould be

[q] De dea Syria. [r] In Miſn Cholin, c. 1. §. 6. [s] Maimon. Hilchot, Parah Adumah, c. 9. §. 1.
[t] Bartenora in Miſn. Temurah, c. 1. §. 5.

be a prieſt, but that any one free from ceremonial pollution might do it: and ſprinkle it upon the tent; where there was a dead body: but this, we are told, is to be underſtood not of a tent made of wood, or ſtone, or clay, but made of any thing woven, as linen; or of ſkins [u]: and upon all the veſſels; in ſuch a tent, that is, open ones, as before obſerved: and upon the perſons that were there; when the man died in it, or came into it ſince, and whilſt the dead body was in it; and upon him that touched a bone; of a dead man, or, as the Targum of Jonathan, the bone of a living man that is ſeparated from him: or one ſlain, or one dead; ſlain with a ſword, or dead of the peſtilence, as the ſame Targum, or of any other diſeaſe, or in any other way: or a grave; or the covering or ſide of one, as the ſame Targum adds.

℣. 19. And the clean perſon ſhall ſprinkle upon the unclean, &c.] The clean prieſt ſhall ſprinkle upon the unclean man, as the Targum of Jonathan; that is, he ſhall ſprinkle the water of purification upon him that is unclean in any of the above ways: on the third day, and on the ſeventh day; ſee the note on ℣. 12. and on the ſeventh day he ſhall purify himſelf; either the unclean perſon, who ſhall perfect his purification, as Jarchi interprets it, that is, by doing what follows; or elſe, the clean perſon, who becomes in ſome meaſure unclean, by ſprinkling and touching the water of ſeparation, as appears from ℣. 21. as the prieſt that ſprinkled the blood of the heifer, and the man that burnt it and gathered its aſhes, ℣. 7, 8, 9. and waſh his clothes, and bathe himſelf in water, and ſhall be clean at even; in like manner as the man that let go the goat into the wilderneſs, Lev. xvi. 26.

℣. 20. But the man that ſhall be unclean, &c.] By touching any dead body, bone, or grave: and ſhall not purify himſelf; with the water of purification: that ſoul ſhall be cut off from among the congregation; ſee the note on ℣. 13. becauſe he hath defiled the ſanctuary of the Lord; by going into it in his uncleanneſs: the water of ſeparation hath not been ſprinkled upon him, he is unclean; and will remain ſo, for nothing elſe could purify him, ſee ℣. 13.

℣. 21. And it ſhall be a perpetual ſtatute unto them, &c.] To the children of Iſrael, throughout their generations, unto the coming of the Meſſiah, when the ceremonial law, which ſtood in divers waſhings and purifications, was aboliſhed: that he that ſprinkleth the water of ſeparation ſhall waſh his clothes; the prieſt that ſprinkled, according to the Targum of Jonathan, or any other perſon that did it; ſo that the ſame purifying water which made an unclean perſon clean, defiled a clean one; for though it was purifying, it had uncleanneſs in it; having the aſhes not only of the cow itſelf, but of its ſkin, blood, and dung; and ſo a lye made of aſhes is impure in itſelf, and yet ſerves to ſcour cloth: Ainſworth thinks, this ſignifies the imperfection and inſufficiency of legal rites, which in their greateſt virtue only ſanctified to the purifying of the fleſh, and left the purifier himſelf in uncleanneſs he had not before; by conſideration of which, the people might be led to Chriſt, and his Spirit, for cleanſing, Heb. ix. 13, 14. and vii. 25. but it rather ſignifies, that the blood of Chriſt, which cleanſes from all ſin, and anſwers to this purifying water, that its cleanſing virtue is owing to Chriſt being made ſin for his people, and that ſome may be inſtruments of directing ſouls to the blood of Chriſt for cleanſing, and yet be defiled themſelves: it does not appear that this man, thus unclean, was to have the water of purification ſprinkled on him, but was only to waſh his clothes; ſee Rev. vii. 14. and he that toucheth the water of ſeparation ſhall be unclean until even: but was not clean until he had waſhed, as Aben Ezra obſerves, though not expreſſed; for if one that only ſprinkled it had need to be waſhed, much more one that touched it, and which was unavoidable; if when he mixed the water and aſhes together he ſtirred them with his finger, ſee the note on ℣. 17. tho' Maimonides [w] underſtands this of ſprinkling and touching the water when there was no neceſſity for it, when a perſon was not employed in doing the duty of this law.

℣. 22. And whatſoever the unclean perſon toucheth ſhall be unclean, &c.] Not the perſon unclean by ſprinkling, or touching the water of purification, but the unclean perſon ſpoken of throughout the chapter, that was unclean by touching a dead body, bone, or grave; whatever that man touched, any veſſel or thing, that was unclean alſo; or whomſoever, any perſon, man or woman, for it reſpects both perſons and things: and the ſoul that toucheth it; that which the unclean perſon hath touched; or him, the unclean perſon, whether the unclean perſon touched him, or he the unclean perſon, or touched any thing he had touched, he was unclean; denoting the ſpreading and infectious nature of ſin, and how much ſin and ſinners are to be avoided; ſee Lev. xv. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 19, 20.

CHAP. XX.

IN this chapter is an account of the children of Iſrael coming to the wilderneſs of Zin, where Miriam died, and where wanting water they murmured, ℣. 1—5. upon which Moſes and Aaron applied to the Lord, who ordered Moſes to ſpeak to a rock which ſhould give forth water, and which being ſmitten by him, accordingly did, ℣. 6—11. but Moſes and Aaron in their conduct of this affair diſpleaſed the Lord, ℣. 12, 13. after this Moſes ſent to the king of Edom, to deſire a paſſage through his country, which requeſt was refuſed, ℣. 14—21. upon Iſrael's coming to mount Hor, Aaron, by order, went up to the mount, and when ſtripped of his clothes, which were put on his ſon Eleazar, he died, lamented by all the people, ℣. 22—29.

℣. 1. Then came the children of Iſrael, even the whole congregation, &c.] Not immediately after the tranſaction of the above things, recorded in the preceding chapters; as the ſending of the ſpies into the land of Canaan, and their report of it; the buſineſs of Korah, and the giving of ſeveral laws reſpecting the prieſthood, and the purification of the people; but eight and thirty years after: nor was this the congregation that came out of Egypt; their carcaſſes by this time had fallen in the wilderneſs, as had been threatened, excepting ſome few few, so that this was a new generation: what passed during this time we have very little account of, excepting their journeyings from place to place, in ch. xxxiii. by which it appears, there were eighteen stations between the place they encamped at when the spies were sent, and this they now came to; and that the place from whence they came hither, was Ezion Geber; from hence they journeyed, and came into the desert of Zin; which is different from the wilderness of Sin, Exod. xvi. 1. as appears by their names, which are different, and by the stations of the Israelites, ch. xxxiii. 11, 36. hither they came in the first month; the month of Nisan, on the 10th day of it, according to the Targum of Jonathan, which was the first month of the 40th year of their coming out of Egypt, so Aben Ezra; with which agrees the Jewish chronologer [u], which says, this was the 40th year, and the beginning of the month Nisan: and the people abode in Kadesh; which is by some thought to be different from Kadesh Barnea, from whence the spies were sent, which lay to the south of the land of Canaan, whereas this was upon the borders of Edom; but doctor Lightfoot [w] shews them to be the same: it is supposed to be eight hours north or north north west of mount Sinai, which may be computed to be about 20 miles [x]; here the Israelites abode about four months, see ch. xxxiii. 38. the above Jewish chronologer says, three months wrongly: and Miriam died there, and was buried there; the Jews say [y], she died there the 10th day of the month Nisan, which was 10 days after the Israelites came to this place; though, according to the Targum of Jonathan, it was the same day they came thither: Patricides an Arabian writer says [z], she died on the 7th day of Nisan, aged 127; no mention is made of the people mourning for her as for Aaron, ℣. 29. and for Moses, Deut. xxxiv. 8. perhaps because of their distress for want of water, as follows.

[u] Maimon. in Miſn. Sabbat, c. 2. §. 3.

[w] Hilchot Parah Adumah, c. 15. §. 1.

℣. 2. And there was no water for the congregation, &c.] Which was so ordered for the trial of this new generation, to see whether they would behave any better than their fathers had done in a like circumstance, the first year they came out of Egypt, Exod. xvii. and they gathered themselves together against Moses and against Aaron; just as their fathers had done before them, being of the like temper and disposition.

℣. 3. And the people chode with Moses, &c.] Contended with him in a wrangling and litigious manner, shewing no reverence nor respect unto his person on account of the dignity of his office, and the many favours they had received from him; and this at a time, when instead of quarrelling with him, they should have condoled him on the loss of his sister, and bewailed their own loss also of one who had been a propheteſs to them, and a leader of them, Mic. vi. 4: and spake, saying, would God that we had died when our brethren died before the Lord; either at Taberah by fire, or as Korah and his company in like manner, or as the 14,700 by a pestilence, see ch. xi. and ch. xvi. which they thought a much easier death, either of them, than to die of thirst: they might well call them brethren, not only because of the same nation, and nearly related to them, but because they were of the same temper and disposition, and indeed brethren in iniquity; and they seem to use this appellation, as being of the same sentiments with them, and in vindication of them, and adopt almost their very language; see ch. xiv. 2.

℣. 4. And why have ye brought up the congregation of the Lord into this wilderness, &c.] The wilderness of Zin, whither by various marches and journeys, and through different stations, they were at length come: that we and our cattle should die there? with thirst; they seem to represent it, as if this was the end, design and intention of Moses and Aaron in bringing them thither; their language is much the same with their fathers on a like occasion; which shows the bad influence of example, and how careful parents should be of their words and actions, that their posterity be not hurt by them; see Exod. xvii. 3.

℣. 5. And wherefore have ye made us to come up out of Egypt, &c.] They represent that affair in such a light, as if they were forced out of Egypt by Moses and Aaron against their wills; or at least were over-persuaded by them to do what they had no inclination to, namely, to come out of Egypt; though they were in the utmost bondage and slavery, and their lives were made bitter by it, and they cried by reason of their oppression, and the hardships they endured; but this was all forgot. Aben Ezra says, it is a strange word which is here used, which shows the confusion they were in: to bring us unto this evil place; dry and barren, where there were neither food nor drink, as follows: it is no place of seed; or fit for sowing, as the Targum of Jonathan, any sort of seed, as wheat, barley, rye, rice, &c. or of figs, or vines, or pomegranates; it is not a soil fit to plant such trees in, nor would they grow were they planted: neither is there any water to drink; for them and their cattle, and therefore must be a miserable place for so large a body of people to subsist in.

℣. 6. And Moses and Aaron went from the presence of the assembly, &c.] Like fugitives, as Aben Ezra; they fled from them through fear, lest they should rise and fall upon them, and stone them, as their fathers were ready to do in a like case, Exod. xvii. 4. It is very likely this assembly gathered about the tents of Moses and Aaron, who went from thence unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; where the Lord had promised to meet Moses, and speak unto him, Exod. xxix. 42: and they fell upon their faces; to pray, as Aben Ezra, that God would forgive the sin of the people, and not break forth in his wrath against them, as he sometimes had done, and as their sin deserved, and that he would grant them what was needful for them. In the Vulgate Latin version the following words are added as their prayer, "and they cried "unto the Lord, and said, Lord God, hear the "cry of this people, and open to them thy trea"sure, the fountain of living water, that they be"ing satiated, their murmuring may cease." But they are not neither in the Hebrew text, nor in the Greek version, nor in the Chaldee paraphrases: and the glory of the Lord appeared unto them; either to Moses and Aaron, to encourage them to expect their prayers would be answered; or to the people, to terrify them, and silence their murmurings; see ch. xvi. 19.

℣. 7. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] Out of what was the token of his glory, which perhaps haps was the cloud, with an uncommon luſtre and brightneſs in it: ſaying; as follows.

[u] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 9. p. 25. [w] Chorograph. Cent. in Matt. c. 7. p. 8, 9. [x] Pococke's Travels, p. 157. [y] Shalshalet Hakabala, fol. 7. 2. Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. c. 580. §. 2. [z] Apud Hottinger. Smegma Oriental. l. 1. c. 8. p. 457.

℣. 8. Take thy rod, &c.] The rod of miracles, as the Targum of Jonathan; not the rod of Aaron, miraculous for its bloſſom and fruit, as ſome Jewiſh writers think; but the rod of Moſes, with which he had done many wonders in Egypt, and at the Red Sea, and in the wilderneſs, and particularly by ſmiting the rock at Horeb, when the Iſraelites wanted water, as they did now: and gather thou the aſſembly together, thou, and Aaron thy brother; not only the heads of the people, but the body of them, as many as could be got together to ſee the miracle, and to receive the benefit of it: and ſpeak ye unto the rock before their eyes; which was near, but a little way off, within ſight, and might be pointed to: it was not the ſame rock that was ſmote before; that was in Horeb, this in the extremity of the land of Edom, as Aben Ezra obſerves; this was to be ſpoken to, and by a word ſpeaking it would give out water; which was a trial of the faith of Moſes and Aaron, as well as of the people, before whom, in a public manner, the rock was to be addreſſed, as if it was intelligent and all-ſufficient: and it ſhall give forth his water; not as though there was a fountain of water in it, but that water ſhould flow from it, or God by it give water: and thou ſhalt bring forth to them water out of the rock; by ſpeaking to it: ſo thou ſhalt give the congregation and their beaſts drink; ſufficient for them both.

℣. 9. And Moſes took the rod from before the Lord, &c.] Which was laid up ſome where in the ſanctuary, as well as the rod of Aaron, ch. xvii. 7, 10: as he commanded him; being always faithful and obedient to him that appointed him.

℣. 10. And Moſes and Aaron gathered the congregation together before the rock, &c.] To which they were directed, and were to ſpeak unto; before this they gathered not only the elders of the people, but as many of the congregation as could be well aſſembled together: and he ſaid unto them; Moſes, who was bid to take the rod, and was the principal perſon concerned in this affair: hear now, ye rebels; ſuch their fathers had been, and ſuch they now were, a rebellious generation ever ſince they were known by him; not only rebellious againſt him their chief magiſtrate, but againſt the Lord himſelf, murmuring againſt him, being diſcontented and diſobedient, ſee Deut. ix. 23, 24: muſt we fetch you water out of this rock? not only ſignifying their unworthineſs of having ſuch a miracle wrought for them, and as ſhewing ſome degree of reluctance to attempt it, but as expreſſing diffidence about it; not of the power of God to bring water out of the rock, but of his will to do it for ſuch a rebellious people; or elſe their unreaſonableneſs to expect any ſuch thing ſhould be done for them; when they were ſo wicked, how could they think that ſuch a miracle ſhould be wrought for them; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "out of this rock is it poſſible for us to fetch out "water for you?" ſo Aben Ezra, have we power to bring out water to you from it? this was ſaid in a paſſion, as the manner of ſpeaking ſhews; ſee Pſ. cvi. 32, 33.

℣. 11. And Moſes lift up his hand, and with his rod he ſmote the rock twice, &c.] At firſt it only brought out ſome drops, as Jarchi conjectures, and therefore Moſes ſmote again, when it brought forth water plentifully: the Targum of Jonathan ſays, "at the firſt time it dropped blood, at the "ſecond time came out much water." Could this be credited, it would make the agreement between this rock and Chriſt appear very manifeſt; from whom, when his ſide was pierced with a ſpear, there came out blood and water, John xix. 34. for juſtification and ſanctification. In what reſpect this rock was a type of Chriſt, as the other at Horeb, and the ſmiting of it an emblem of Chriſt being ſmitten with the rod of juſtice, according to the law of God, and of the abundance of water flowing from it, as typical of the abundance of grace, and the bleſſings of it, as coming through a ſmitten, wounded Saviour, ſee the note on Exod. xvii. 6. where the ſame things are ſaid of another rock, as of this, and both types of Chriſt: and the water came out abundantly, and the congregation drank, and their beaſts alſo; there was enough for them, and their cattle; for it came out in great quantities, in large ſtreams, ſo that it ran down like a river, and which gave them drink as out of the great depths, Pſ. lxxviii. 15, 16. where the Pſalmiſt makes mention of rocks in the plural number, for there were two that were ſmitten in two different places, and at two different times; the one was at Rephidim, the other, as here, in Kadeſh; the one was in the firſt year of Iſrael's coming out of Egypt, this in the fortieth year of it; that was ſtruck but once, this twice; of this ſecond ſtone no mention is made by any traveller but one [a], who coming from mount Sinai, ſays, "we paſſed by a large rock on our left-hand, in "which, as in the other rock which Moſes ſtruck "with his rod, appear from the bottom to the "top, openings where water hath guſhed out."

℣. 12. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes and Aaron, &c.] Out of the cloud, where his glory appeared, and ſtill continued: becauſe ye believed me not, to ſanctify me in the eyes of the children of Iſrael; that Moſes and Aaron committed an evil which was diſpleaſing to the Lord is certain, but what that was is variouſly repreſented. Some ſay their ſin was, that the order was to ſpeak to the rock, whereas it was ſmitten, and not ſpoken to; but why then was Moſes bid to take the rod with him, if it was not to ſmite with it, as he had done before at Horeb? and beſides, this would only have been the ſin of Moſes, and not of Aaron; others think, that what provoked the Lord was, that the Iſraelites were called rebels; but this is a name the Lord himſelf gave them, ch. xvii. 10. and was what they juſtly deſerved; and what after this Moſes ſays of them, which, had this been the caſe, he would have been careful to have abſtained from, Deut. ix. 23, 24. Others are of opinion, that what was diſpleaſing to the Lord, was, that the bringing the water out of the rock was aſcribed to themſelves, and not to him; muſt we fetch you water, &c. Others ſuppoſe the ſin was in ſmiting the rock twice, and in anger; but this could only be the fault of Moſes at moſt. Dr. Lightfoot [b] thinks, the particular fault was this, that Moſes expreſſed his diſpleaſure and reſentment to the Iſraelites, that on their murmuring a new rock was opening, which portended a new and long ſtay in the wilderneſs, as the opening of the firſt rock at Horeb did; when he and Aaron were in expectation of being ſoon out of the wilderneſs, and now they feared they were beginning anew their abode in it; but it is certain certain from the text, that unbelief was their ſin; they were diffident about the will of God to bring water out of the rock for ſuch a rebellious people, and they did not put them in mind of the miracles God had wrought in former time, to encourage their faith; and ſo the Lord was not ſanctified by them before the people, as he ought to have been: therefore ye ſhall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them; the land of Canaan, a grant of which was made to their fathers, and particularly to this generation, and into which they would certainly be brought; but not by Moſes and Aaron, who were excluded becauſe of their unbelief, and accordingly both died before the entrance of the people into the land. This, according to the Targum of Jonathan, and Jarchi, was ſaid with an oath; ſee Heb. iii. 18, 19.

[a] See a Journal from Cairo to mount Sinai, 1722. p. 42, 43. Ed. 2.

[b] See his works, vol. 1. p. 36.

℣. 13. This is the water of Meribah, &c.] Or ſtrife; this is the name by which the water had in this place, and from this rock, was called; and which is the ſame name given to the place at Horeb, where a rock had been ſmitten, and water had flowed, as now, the firſt year they came out of Egypt; and to diſtinguiſh this from that, this is ſometimes called Meribah-Kadeſh, Deut. xxxii. 51. this being at Kadeſh, as that was at Rephidim: becauſe the children of Iſrael ſtrove with the Lord; for their chiding and ſtriving with Moſes, was interpretatively ſtriving with the Lord himſelf, whoſe miniſters and ſervants they were: and he was ſanctified in them; that is, the glory of his divine perfections was diſplayed in them; either in the waters fetched out of the rock, which was a proof of the almighty power of God, and of his truth and faithfulneſs to his promiſes; or in the children of Iſrael, in whoſe ſight, and for whoſe ſake this miracle was wrought: the Targum of Jonathan expreſsly ſays, in Moſes and Aaron, in not ſparing theſe his ſaints, but expreſſing ſeverity towards them for their ſin; ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret it.

℣. 14. And Moſes ſent meſſengers from Kadeſh, unto the king of Edom, &c.] This country was ſometimes governed by kings, and ſometimes by dukes, ſee Gen. xxxvi. At the time of the paſſage of the Iſraelites through the Red Sea, we read of the dukes of Edom, Exod. xv. 15. and here, 39 years after, of a king of Edom, but who he was is not certain. Biſhop Uſher takes him to be the ſame with Hadar, the laſt of the race of kings mentioned in Gen. xxxvi. 39. to him Moſes ſent meſſengers with a requeſt, which follows after a preamble to it; who were the meſſengers is not ſaid; the place from whence they were ſent is Kadeſh, a city on the borders of the land of Edom; but not Kadeſh-barnea, Aben Ezra ſays, though ſome are of opinion it is the ſame, ſee ℣. 1: thus ſaith thy brother Iſrael; the Iſraelites and Edomites ſpringing from two men, Jacob and Eſau, who were twin-brothers, and is obſerved to ingratiate themſelves to the Edomites, and gain their requeſt, pleading relation to them: thou knoweſt all the travail that hath befallen us; what an uncomfortable condition they had been in for many years, which was well known to Edom, a neighbouring country, as is reaſonable to ſuppoſe; ſince the fame of the children of Iſrael coming out of Egypt, paſſing through the Red Sea, and being ſo long in the wilderneſs, was ſpread every where; this was ſaid to move their pity.

℣. 15. How our fathers went down into Egypt, &c.] Jacob and his 12 ſons, with their children: and we have dwelt in Egypt a long time; even the ſpace of 430 years, Exod. xii. 40, 41: and the Egyptians vexed us, and our fathers; uſed them ill, brought them into bondage, and made their lives bitter, laid heavy taſks and burdens upon them, as well as ſlew their male-children, ſee Exod. i.

℣. 16. And when we cried unto the Lord, &c.] By reaſon of their bondage, and to be delivered from it, Exod. ii. 23: he heard our voice; their prayer to him, as the Targum of Jonathan, for help and deliverance, Exod. ii. 24. and iii. 7: and ſent an angel, and hath brought us forth out of Egypt; one of the miniſtring angels, as the ſame Targum, and ſo Aben Ezra; though he obſerves that ſome interpret it of Moſes, as do Jarchi, Ben Gerſom and Ben Melech, which is not likely; ſince Moſes is the perſon that ſent this meſſage to the king of Edom, who would not eaſily underſtand it of him, if ſo he meant; nor would the mention of it be of any conſequence and avail with him; whereas to underſtand it of ſome divine and heavenly agent, ſent by the Lord on ſo important an affair, might make it the more remarkable, and to be regarded by him: and indeed, no other is meant than the angel of God's preſence, who appeared to Moſes in the buſh, and ſent him to Pharaoh to demand the diſmiſſion of the children of Iſrael; and who, by him, wrought the wonders in Egypt, and brought Iſrael from thence, and went before them in a pillar of cloud and fire: and behold, we are in Kadeſh, a city in the uttermoſt of thy border; not that they were properly in the city, but near it, for they dwelt in tents in the wilderneſs; nor would that, or any one city, hold ſo large a number as they conſiſted of.

℣. 17. Let us paſs, I pray thee, through thy country, &c.] That being the neareſt and ſhorteſt way to the land of Canaan, from the place where they now were: we will not paſs through the fields, or through the vineyards; to hurt them, and injure any man in his private property, by gathering the fruit of them, if the ſeaſon of the year for it, or by trampling them down: neither will we drink of the water of the wells; which private perſons had dug, for the watering of their fields and vineyards, and for other uſes, at leaſt without paying for it; or only of the waters of the rivers, common to all paſſengers; from hence it appears, that the country of Edom was not then ſuch a barren country as in after-times, and as travellers[c] now report it is; ſee the note on Mal. i. 3: we will go by the king's high way; not the way in which the king uſed to walk, or which he ſhould order them to walk in, as Aben Ezra; but the public roads, common to all his ſubjects, and travellers to walk in by his allowance; and ſuch roads are now called by us the king's highway: we will not turn to the right-hand, or to the left; to do any injury to any perſon's property, but go ſtrait forward: until we have paſſed thy borders; from one to another, and got quite through the country.

℣. 18. And Edom ſaid unto him, &c.] The king of Edom replied to Iſrael, repreſented by the meſſengers ſent in their name: thou ſhalt not paſs by me; through my country: leſt I come out againſt thee with the ſword; or with thoſe that uſe the ſword, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; that is, with an army of ſoldiers with their drawn ſwords in their hands, to ſlay them as enemies.

℣. 19. And the children of Iſrael ſaid unto him, &c.] The meſſengers ſent by the children of Iſrael made made anſwer to the king of Edom: we will go by the highway; we deſire no other favour but that of the public road; we propoſe not to go through any part of the country that is incloſed, and cultivated to do any damage to it: if I and my cattle drink of thy water, then I will pay for it; as it was uſual, and ſtill is, to buy water in thoſe countries near the Red Sea, where it is ſcarce. We are told [d], that at Sueſs, a city on the extremity of the Red Sea, there is no water nearer than 6 or 7 hours journey towards the north-eaſt, which is brought from thence on camels; and a ſmall veſſel of it is ſold for 3 or 4 medinas, and a larger veſſel for 8 or 10, according to the demand for it; a medina is an Egyptian piece of money, worth about three halfpence of our Engliſh money: I will only (without doing any thing elſe) go through on my feet; as faſt as I can, without ſaying any thing to the inhabitants to terrify and diſtreſs them, and without doing them any injury. Some render it, I will only go with my footmen [e]; foot-ſoldiers, an army on foot, as Iſrael were.

[c] See Shaw's Travels, 4. 438. Ed. 2.

℣. 20. And he ſaid, thou ſhalt not go through, &c.] Which is an abſolute and peremptory denial: and Edom came out againſt him with much people, and with a ſtrong hand; the king raiſed the militia of his country, and came at the head of a powerful army to hinder their paſſing into it; being fearful and jealous, leſt ſuch a large body as they were ſhould ſeize on his country, or ſpoil it, not relying on their promiſes; and this might ariſe alſo from the old grudge of Eſau againſt Jacob, and which continued in his poſterity, and might now be revived upon their going to Canaan to poſſeſs the earthly bleſſing conferred on Jacob and his ſeed: however, it ſeems, though the Edomites would not let Iſrael paſs through their country, yet they furniſhed them with food and drink for their money, Deut. ii. 28, 29.

℣. 21. Thus Edom refuſed to give Iſrael paſſage through his country, &c.] Nothwithſtanding their near relation to each other, and the fair promiſes Iſrael made: wherefore Iſrael turned away from him; patiently bearing the refuſal, and not reſenting it; being ordered, as the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it, by the Word of heaven, not to make war with them, becauſe the time was not yet come to take vengeance on Edom by their hands; and to the ſame purpoſe the Targum of Jeruſalem.

℣. 22. And the children of Iſrael, even the whole congregation, journeyed from Kadeſh, &c.] Not directly, but after they had continued there ſome time, and had furniſhed themſelves with proviſions for their journey, which they bought of the Edomites, ſee Judg. xi. 17. the whole congregation is obſerved to journey from hence, not one of them being loſt by the king of Edom's coming out againſt them; theſe went out compleat and perfect, ſafe and ſound: and came unto mount Hor; which, according to Bunting [f], was 48 miles from Kadeſh; this had not its name from the Horim or Horites, nor they from that, their name being written with a different letter, but from Harar, a mountain, for the word itſelf ſignifies a mountain; wherefore it may be rendered, a mountain of the mountain, which Jarchi interprets a mountain on the top of a mountain. Joſephus [g] ſays, that here ſtood a city, formerly called Arce, ſince Petra, ſurrounded with an high mountain, where Aaron went and died; and Pliny ſays [h] of Petra, that it is encompaſſed with inacceſſible mountains.

℣. 23. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes and Aaron in mount Hor, &c.] When they were at the foot of that mountain, in the valley adjoining to it: by the coaſt of the land of Edom; which they were ſtill upon the borders of, and were going round it, not being permitted to go through it: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 24. Aaron ſhall be gathered unto his people, &c.] That is, ſhall die, for this phraſe is a periphraſis of death, and is uſed in common both of good and bad men, and deſigns death in general, without regard to perſons and places men go to at death: for he ſhall not enter into the land which I have given unto the children of Iſrael; the land of Canaan; and Aaron the prieſt, and ſo Moſes the lawgiver, not being ſuffered to enter into that land, ſhew the weakneſs and imperfection of the law, and of the Levitical prieſthood, and the inſufficience of them, and of obedience to them to bring men to, and give them an entrance into the heavenly glory; that is done by another perſon, the antitype of Joſhua, even Jeſus: becauſe ye rebelled againſt my word at the water of Meribah; that is, you Moſes and Aaron; their unbelief is called a rebelling againſt the word of the Lord, for which it was threatened them, that they ſhould not bring the people of Iſrael into the land of Canaan, and now the threatening begins to take place, ſee ℣. 12.

℣. 25. Take Aaron and Eleazar his ſon, &c.] His eldeſt ſon, who was to ſucceed him in the prieſthood, and did: and bring them up unto mount Hor; to the top of it, they being now at the foot of it, where the people of Iſrael lay encamped.

℣. 26. And ſtrip Aaron of his garments, &c.] His prieſtly garments, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi: and put them upon Eleazar his ſon; thereby declaring him to be high-prieſt in his father's ſtead: and Aaron ſhall be gathered unto his people, and ſhall die there; the phraſe of gathering to his people is here explained of his dying.

℣. 27. And Moſes did as the Lord commanded, &c.] Though it muſt be very cutting, diſtreſſing, and afflicting to him, to part with a brother ſo dear to him, and who had been ſo many years a companion of him, and a partner with him in the care and government of the people of Iſrael; but it being the Lord's will, he ſubmits unto it, and faithfully and readily obeyed his orders, as he always did: and they went up into mount Hor, in the ſight of all the congregation; that is, Moſes, Aaron, and Eleazar, and perhaps there might be ſome others that went with them as ſervants, to attend them and aſſiſt them in ſome things to be done, particularly in the burial of Aaron; they all ſaw Aaron go up, but he came down no more, and ſo it was ordered in this public manner, that they might be witneſſes of the tranſlation of the prieſthood from Aaron to Eleazar, who, after this affair was over, came down with Moſes.

℣. 28. And Moſes ſtripped Aaron of his garments, &c.] His prieſtly garments, which, very probably, were put on at the foot of the mountain, on purpoſe for the tranſaction of this affair, ſince they were not in common worn, but only when in ſervice; the ſame hands that cloathed Aaron with

[d] See a Journal from Cairo to mount Sinai. p. 10, 11. Ed. 2. in Fagius & Vatablus. [f] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 83. [g] Antiq. l. 4. c. 4. §. 7. [h] Nat. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 28.

[e] ברגלי cum meo exercitu pedeſtri; ſo ſome

them at first, stripped him of them, and both were done at the command of God; as the stripping of those garments was a divesting Aaron of his office, so it was a figure of the disannulling of his priesthood, when the Messiah should come, a priest after another order: and put them upon Eleazar his son; which was an investing him with the office of high-priest in his father's room; and which, as it must give Aaron pleasure and satisfaction to see his son put into his office before he died, so it signified the continuance of it in succession in his posterity, and was a confirmation of it; and it must be pleasing to Moses and the people of Israel, to observe the care and faithfulness of God in providing for the succession of the priesthood: and Aaron died there in the top of the mount; quietly, comfortably, and contentedly, without the least murmuring or repining: this was on the first day of the fifth month, as appears from ch. xxxiii. 38. that is, of the month Ab, as the Targum of Jonathan here says; and in this the Jewish writers [k] agree in general, which month answers to part of July and part of August; and in this same place where he died he was buried, as is evident from Deut. x. 6. wherefore no credit is to be given to the Arabs, who shew a stone not far from mount Sinai about two feet high from the ground, on which are seen some unknown characters, which, they say, were engraven by Jeremiah the prophet, in honour of Moses and Aaron, who were buried there [l]: and Moses and Eleazar came down from the mount; after Aaron was dead and buried.

℣. 29. And when all the congregation saw that Aaron was dead, &c.] Not that they saw his dead body, but they perceived by the relation of Moses, and by various circumstances, as not seeing Aaron come down, whom they saw go up, and seeing Eleazar with Aaron's garments on him, and perhaps, by tokens of mourning in Moses and Eleazar; so the Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem say, they saw them come down from the top of the mountain, with their garments rent, and ashes on their heads, weeping and lamenting: they mourned for Aaron thirty days; the whole month out; so long public mourning with the Jews lasted, as Josephus [m] relates: even all the house of Israel; men and women, as the Targum of Jonathan, and so Jarchi: no doubt, it was for the amiable virtues and abundant grace that were in him, and the many services he had done for them, both before and since he was invested with the priestly office; and oftentimes the memory of such things is revived after the death of a good man, which are not so much taken notice of in his life, nor he be thanked for them, or have honour and respect shewn him on account of them; but when dead, he, and what he has done, are spoken well of, and his loss lamented.

CHAP. XXI.

THIS chapter gives an account of the defeat of king Arad the Canaanite, ℣. 1, 2, 3. of the murmurings of the children of Israel, because of difficulties in travelling round the land of Edom, for which they were punished with fiery serpents, ℣. 4, 5, 6. and how that upon their repentance a brazen serpent was ordered to be made, and to be erected on a pole, that whoever looked to it might live, ℣. 7, 8, 9. and of the several journeys and stations of the children of Israel, until they came to the land of the Amorites, ℣. 10—20. when they sent a message to Sihon their king, to desire him to grant them a passage through his country; but he refusing, they fought with him, smote him, and possessed his land, concerning which many proverbial sayings were used, ℣. 21—32. and the chapter is concluded with the defeat of Og, king of Bashan, ℣. 33, 34, 35.

℣. 1. And when king Arad the Canaanite which dwelt in the south, &c.] Arad seems rather to be the name of a place, city, or country, of which the Canaanite was king, than the name of a man, since we read of the king of Arad, Josh. xii. 14. see also Judg. i. 16. and so the Targums of Onkelos and Jerusalem here render it, the king of Arad; and the Targum of Jonathan says, he changed his seat and reigned in Arad, which might have its name from Arvad, a son of Canaan, Gen. x. 18. and Jerom says [n], that Arath the same with Arad, is a city of the Amorites, near the wilderness of Kadesh, and that to this day it is shewn a village four miles from Malatis and 20 from Hebron in the tribe of Judah; and so Aben Ezra observes, that the antients say, this is Sihon (the king of the Amorites) and he is called a Canaanite, because all the Amorites are Canaanites; but according to Jarchi, the Amalekites are meant, as it is said, the Amalekites dwell in the land of the south; ch. xiii. 29. and so the Targum of Jonathan here, "and when "Amalek heard that dwelt in the land of the "south;" what he heard is particularly expressed in the following clause: heard tell that Israel came by the way of the spies; either after the manner of spies, or rather, by the way in which the spies went 38 years ago, which was the way of the south, where this Canaanitish king dwelt, see ch. xiii. 17, 22, 29. the Septuagint version leaves the word untranslated, taking it for the name of a place, and reads by the way of Atharim, so the Samaritan pentateuch and Arabic version; and did such a place appear to have been hereabout, it would be the most likely sense of the passage; for as the spies were never discovered by the Canaanites, the way they went could not be known by them; nor is it very probable that if it had been known, it should be so called, since nothing of any consequence to them as yet followed upon it: then he fought against Israel; raised his forces and marched out against them, to oppose their passage, and engaged in a battle with them: and took some of them prisoners; according to the Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem, great numbers of them; but Jarchi says, only one single maid-servant.

℣. 2. And Israel vowed a vow unto the Lord, &c.] The Israelites made supplication to the Lord for help against their enemies, and that he would give them victory over them, and made promises to him: and said, if thou wilt indeed deliver this people into my hand; certainly and entirely deliver them, [k] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 10. p. 29. Shalshalet Hakabala, fol. 7. 2. Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. c. 580. §. 2. Journal from Cairo to mount Sinai, p. 40. Ed. 2.

[l] Heb. fol. 87. K.
[m] De bello Jud. l. 3. c. 8. §. 5.
[n] De locis

liver them, ſo as that a compleat victory ſhall be obtained over them: then will I utterly deſtroy their cities; or anathematize, or devote them to utter deſtruction [o]; ſlay man and beaſt, burn their houſes and take their goods, not for a ſpoil, for their own private uſe, but reſerve them for the ſervice of God; all which is implied in the vow made, as was done to Jericho, Joſh. vi. 21, 24. and ſo it is a vow, as Abendana obſerves, of what they would do when they came to the land of Canaan.

℣. 3. And the Lord hearkened to the voice of Iſrael, &c.] In his prayers and vows; with acceptance heard, and anſwered them according to their wiſh: and delivered up the Canaanites; into their hands, gave them victory over them: and they utterly deſtroyed them and their cities; that is, anathematized them, and devoted them to deſtruction; for as yet they did not actually deſtroy them, ſince we read of Arad afterwards, Joſh. xii. 14. but this they did in Joſhua's time, when the whole land of Canaan came into their hands; for had they entered the land now, and took and deſtroyed the cities belonging to Arad, they would doubtleſs have proceeded, and purſued their conqueſts, and not have returned into the wilderneſs again to go round about Edom, in order to enter another way; many think, as Aben Ezra obſerves on ℣. 1. that this ſection was written by Joſhua, after the land was ſubdued: and he called the name of the place Hormah; which before was called Zephath, and it ſeems to have its name from various diſaſters which happened at this place; as the defeat of the Iſraelites by the Amalekites, ch. xiv. 45. and here of the Canaanites by the Iſraelites, and afterwards of the inhabitants of this place by Judah and Simeon, Judg. i. 17. it had its name from Cherem, the anathema or deſtruction it was devoted to.

℣. 4. And they journeyed from mount Hor, &c.] After the battle with the king of Arad, and the defeat of him: by the way of the Red-ſea, to compaſs the land of Edom; which lay by it, and from whence it had the name of the Red-ſea, Edom ſignifying red; and by the way of that the Iſraelites muſt needs go, to go round that country: and the ſoul of the people was much diſcouraged becauſe of the way; becauſe it was going back inſtead of going forward to Canaan's land, and becauſe of the length of the way; it was a round about way they were going; when, could they have been admitted to have paſſed through the country of Edom, the way would have been ſhort; or had they purſued their victory over the Canaanite, they would have gone directly into the land; and this perhaps was what fretted, vexed, and diſcouraged them, that they were obliged to go back, and take ſuch a circuit, when they had ſuch an opportunity of entering; and they might be diſtreſſed alſo with the badneſs and the roughneſs of the way, the borders of Edom being rocky and craggy: it is in the original text, their ſoul or breath was ſhort [p]; they fetched their breath ſhort, being weary and faint with travelling, or through anger, as angry perſons do, when in a great paſſion: ſo the people of God travelling through the wilderneſs of this world are often diſcouraged, becauſe of the difficulties, trials, and troubles they meet with in the way, from ſin, ſatan, and the world, and are fretful and impatient; but though they are led about and walk in a round about way, and in a rough way, yet in a right way to the city of their habitation, Pſ. cvii. 7.

℣. 5. And the people ſpake againſt God, &c.] Who went before them in the pillar of cloud and fire, for leading them in ſuch a way; that is, againſt Chriſt, as the apoſtle has taught us to interpret it, 1 Cor. x. 9. and is no inconſiderable proof of the deity of Chriſt; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, "and the people thought "in their heart, and ſpake againſt the Word of "the Lord," the eſſential Word and ſon of God: and againſt Moſes; his ſervant, for obeying the orders of the Lord, and leading and guiding the people as he directed him: wherefore have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderneſs? aſcribing this equally to God and to Moſes; uſing a ſtrange word, as Aben Ezra calls it, being in a great paſſion, and not conſidering well what they ſaid; ſhewing great ingratitude for ſuch a mercy, and repreſenting it in a wrong light, as if the intent of bringing them from thence was to ſlay them in the wilderneſs: for there is no bread; no bread-corn, nothing in the wilderneſs to make bread of; nothing that they called and accounted bread, otherwiſe they had manna, as is preſently owned: neither is there any water; any freſh water fit to drink, otherwiſe they were near the ſea; what they had from the rock lately, perhaps was now ſpent, and it did not follow them as the other rock had: and our ſoul loatheth this light bread; the manna; this very light, this exceeding light bread, the radicals of the word [q] uſed being doubled which increaſes the ſignification: if to be underſtood of light and eaſy digeſtion, it was the more to be valued; but perhaps, they meant, it had but little ſubſtance and virtue in it, and was not filling and ſatisfying; or rather, that it was exceeding vile, mean, and deſpicable; ſo they called the bread of heaven, angels food, this wonderful gift of providence; in like manner is Chriſt, the hidden manna, treated, and his goſpel, and the precious truths of it, by unregenerate men and carnal profeſſors, 1 Cor. i. 23.

℣. 6. And the Lord ſent fiery ſerpents among the people, &c.] Of which there were great numbers in the deſerts of Arabia, and about the Red ſea; but hitherto the Iſraelites were protected from them by the cloud about them, but ſinning, the Lord ſuffered them to come among them, to puniſh them; theſe are called fiery, either from their colour, for in Arabia, as there were ſerpents of a golden colour, as Ælianus [r] relates, to which the brazen ſerpent, after made, bore ſome likeneſs, ſo there were others in the ſame parts of Arabia of a red or ſcarlet colour, as Diodorus Siculus ſays [s], of a ſpan long, and their bite entirely incurable; or elſe they are ſo called from the effect of them, exciting heat and thirſt in thoſe they bit; ſo Jarchi ſays, they are ſo called becauſe they burn with the poiſon of their teeth: theſe, very probably, were flying ones, as may ſeem from Iſ. xiv. 29. and being ſent of God, might come flying among the people and bite them; and ſuch there were in the fenny and marſhy parts of Arabia, of which many writers ſpeak [t], as flying from thoſe parts into into Egypt, where they uſed to be met by a bird called Ibis, which killed them, and for that reaſon was had in great veneration by the Egyptians; and Herodotus [u] ſays, they are no where but in Arabia, and alſo [w] that they of that kind of ſerpents, which are called Hydri, their wings are not feathered, but like the wings of bats, and this Bochart [x] takes to be here meant: and they bit the people, and much people of Iſrael died; for, as before related from Diodorus Siculus, their bites were altogether incurable; and Solinus [y] ſays, of the ſame Arabian flying ſerpents, that their poiſon is ſo quick, that death follows before the pain can be felt; and of that kind of ſerpent the Hydrus, it is ſaid by Leo Africanus [z], that their poiſon is moſt pernicious, and that there is no other remedy againſt the bite of them, but to cut off that part of the member bitten, before the poiſon can penetrate into the other parts of the body: the Dipſas, another kind of ſerpent, which others are of opinion, is deſigned, by biting, brings immediately a thirſt on perſons, intolerable, and almoſt unextinguiſhable, and a deadly one, unleſs help is moſt ſpeedily had; and if this was the caſe here it was very bad indeed, ſince there was no water: Solinus [a] ſays, this kind of ſerpent kills with thirſt; Ariſtotle [b] ſpeaks of a ſerpent ſome call the ſacred one, and that whatſoever it bites putrifies immediately all around it: theſe ſerpents and their bites, may be emblems of the old ſerpent the devil, and of his fiery darts, and of ſin brought in by him, and which he tempts unto, the effects of which are terrible and deadly, unleſs prevented by the grace of God.

[o] והחרמתי & anathematiſabo, Montanus; devovebo, Tigurine verſion. [p] ותקצר נפש & abbreviata eſt anima, Montanus, Munſter, Fagius, Vatablus; decurtata, Piſcator. [q] הקלקל leviſſimo, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Fagius, Vatablus; viliſſimi, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [r] De Animal. l. 10. c. 13. [s] Bibliothec. l. 3. p. 180. [t] Herodot. Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 15. Ælian. de Animal. l. 2. c. 38. Mela, l. 3. c. 9. Solin. Polyhiſtor, c. 45. & alii.

℣. 7. Therefore the people came to Moſes, and ſaid, we have ſinned, &c.] Being bitten with ſerpents, and ſome having died, the reſt were frightened, and came and made an humble acknowledgment of their ſins to Moſes: for we have ſpoken againſt the Lord, and againſt thee; murmuring at their being brought out of Egypt, and becauſe they had no better proviſion in the wilderneſs; concluding they ſhould die there for want, and never enter into the land of Canaan, of which evils they were now ſenſible and confeſſed them: pray unto the Lord that he take away the ſerpents from us; or the ſerpent [c], in the ſingular, which is put for the plural, as it often is; or the plague of the ſerpent, as the Targum of Jonathan, that it might ceaſe, and they be no more diſtreſſed by them: they were ſenſible they came from God, and that none could remove them but him; and knowing that Moſes was powerful in prayer, and had intereſt with God, they intreat him to be their interceſſor, though they had ſpoken againſt him and uſed him ill: and Moſes prayed for the people; which proves him to be of a meek and forgiving ſpirit; who, though he had been ſo ſadly reflected on, yet readily undertakes to pray to God for them.

℣. 8. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] Out of the cloud; or it may be, Moſes went into the ſanctuary, and there prayed, and the Lord anſwered him from between the cherubim: make them a fiery ſerpent; not a real one, but the likeneſs of one, one that ſhould very much reſemble the fiery ſerpents Iſrael had been bitten with: and ſet it upon a pole; a ſtandard, banner, or enſign, as the word ſignifies; perhaps, meaning one of the poles on which their enſigns were carried: the Targum of Jonathan renders it, on an high place, that ſo it might be ſeen by all in the camp: and it ſhall come to paſs, that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it ſhall live; which is very wonderful, that by looking to the figure of a ſerpent, men ſhould be cured of the bites of real ones, and which bites were deadly; the virtue of healing could not come from the figure, but from God, who appointed it to be made; the Targum of Jonathan adds, that one bitten ſhould live, "if he directed his heart to the "Word of the Lord," even to that divine Logos or Word of God, whoſe lifting up was figured hereby; ſee John iii. 14.

℣. 9. And Moſes made a ſerpent of braſs, &c.] Which was the moſt proper metal to make it of, that it might reſemble the fiery ſerpents, whether of a golden or ſcarlet colour: and Diodorus Siculus [d] ſpeaks of ſome of the colour of braſs, whoſe bite was immediately followed with death, and by which, if any one was ſtruck, he was ſeized with terrible pains, and a bloody ſweat flowed all over him; and this was choſen alſo, becauſe being burniſhed and bright, could be ſeen at a great diſtance, and with this metal Moſes might be furniſhed from Punon, the next ſtation to this, where they now were, Zalmonah, as appears from ch. xxxiii. 42. a place famous for braſs mines, and which Jerom [e] ſays, in his time, was a little village, from whence braſs-metal was dug, by ſuch that were condemned to the mines: and put it upon a pole; as he was directed: and it came to paſs, that if a ſerpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the ſerpent of braſs, he lived; which was very marvellous, and the more ſo, if what phyſicians ſay is true, as Kimchi relates [f], that if a man bitten by a ſerpent looks upon a piece of braſs he dies immediately: the lifting up of this ſerpent on a pole for ſuch a purpoſe, was a figure of the lifting up of Chriſt, either upon the croſs, or in the miniſtry of the word, that whoſoever looks unto him by faith may have healing, ſee the note on John iii. 14. where this type or figure is largely explained: the ſtation the Iſraelites were now at, when this image was made, is called Zalmonah, which ſignifies an image, ſhadow, or reſemblance, as the brazen ſerpent was; from mount Hor, where they were laſt, to this place, according to Bunting [g], were 28 miles: this ſerpent did not remain in the place where it was ſet, but was taken with them, and continued until the days of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 4.

℣. 10. And the children of Iſrael ſet forward, &c.] From Zalmonah, and came to Punon, which, according to the above writer, was 20 miles from it; though here indeed, ſome think, the brazen ſerpent was ſet up, here being, as before obſerved, braſs mines to furniſh with that metal: and pitched in Oboth; which was 24 miles from Punon, as ſays the ſame writer: the word ſignifies bottles; perhaps, here the Iſraelites got water and filled their bottles, or, as others think, they filled them with the wine of Moab, and called the name of the place from thence; it is perhaps the ſame with the Eboda of Ptolemy [h], which he places in Arabia Petræa; and of which Pliny [i] alſo makes mention.

℣. 11. And they journeyed from Oboth, &c.] How long they ſtayed there is not certain: and pitched at Ije-abarim; which, according to Bunting [k], was 16 miles from Oboth; Jarchi ſays, it was the way that that paſſengers paſs by mount Nebo to the land of Canaan, and which divides between the land of Moab and the land of the Amorites: in the wilderneſs which is before Moab; called the wilderneſs of Moab, Deut. ii. 8. towards the ſun-riſing; the eaſt ſide of the land of Moab, Judg. xi. 18.

[u] Thalia, ſive, l. 3. c. 109. [w] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 76. [x] Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 3. c. 15. col. 423. [y] Polyhiſt. c. 45. [z] Apud Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 2. p. 386. [a] Polyhiſt. c. 40. [b] Hiſt. Animal. l. 8. c. 29. [c] נחש את serpentem, Montanus; hunc ſerpentem, Piſcator. [d] Bibliothec. l. 17. p. 560. [e] De locis Heb. fol. 91. G. [f] Sepher Shoraſh. rad. נחש. [g] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. 83. [h] Geograph. l. 5. c. 17. [i] Nat. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 28. [k] Ut ſupra.

℣. 12. From thence they removed, and pitched in the valley of Zered.] Or the brook Zered, as in Deut. xiii. 14. that is near it: this ſeems to be the ſame ſtation with Dibon-gad, ch. xxxiii. 45. and which, according to the above writer, was 16 miles from Ije-abarim.

℣. 13. From thence they removed, and pitched on the other ſide of Arnon, &c.] A river on the borders of Moab: which is in the wilderneſs that cometh out of the coaſts of the Amorites; according to Jarchi, they went round the land of Moab, all to the ſouth and eaſt, and came not into the border of Moab, as Jephthah ſaid, Judg. xi. 18. but before they came hither, they had a ſtation at Almon-diblathaim, ch. xxxiii. 46, 47. for Arnon is the border of Moab, between Moab and the Amorites; a river which divided theſe two countries, and bounded them; and Moſes is the more particular in this account, to ſhew that the Iſraelites took nothing from the Moabites, but what the Amorites had taken from them, they being charged not to diſtreſs the Moabites and Ammonites, Deut. ii. 9, 19. ſee Jephthah's defence, Judg. xi. 15—27.

℣. 14. Wherefore it is ſaid in the book of the wars of the Lord, &c.] A hiſtory of wars in former times, which the Lord had ſuffered to be in the world; and which, as Aben Ezra thinks, reached from the times of Abraham, and ſo might begin with the battle of the kings in his time, and take in others in after-times, and particularly thoſe of Sihon, king of the Amorites, and his conqueſts of ſome parts of Moab; and to this book, which might be written by ſome one of thoſe nations, Moſes refers, in proof of what he here ſays: what he did in the Red-ſea; that is, what Sihon, king of the Amorites did, or the Lord by him, at Vaheb in Suphah, as the words may be rendered; either againſt a king, or rather city of Moab, whoſe name was Vaheb, in the borders of the land of Moab, or how he deſtroyed that city Vaheb with a ſtorm or terrible aſſault[l]: and in the brooks of Arnon; ſome places ſituated on the ſtreams of that river, which were taken by the Amorites from the Moabites, as the book quoted plainly teſtified.

℣. 15. And at the ſtream of the brooks that goeth down to the dwelling of Ar, &c.] All that part of the country which lay upon the ſtream, as far as the city of Ar, the metropolis of Moab, called Ar of Moab, Iſ. xv. 1: and lieth upon the border of Moab; as that city did; ſo far goes the quotation out of the aforeſaid book, as a proof of what was taken by the Amorites from the Moabites, and were not in their poſſeſſion when Iſrael were upon their borders; and therefore in taking them from the Amorites, did no wrong to Moab.

℣. 16. And from thence they went to Beer, &c.] A place ſo called from a well which ſprung up here, of which the following account is given: that is, the well whereof the Lord ſpake unto Moſes; promiſing him to give it to the children of Iſrael, without aſking for it; which was a very ſingular favour, and for which they were thankful: ſaying to him, gather the people together, and I will give them water; for as they were now gone from the river Arnon, and the ſtreams and brooks of it, they might be in want of water, though they did not murmur as they had been uſed to do; and without their petition for it, the Lord promiſes to give it to them; and that they might be witneſs of the miracle that would be wrought for them, they are ordered to be gathered together.

℣. 17. Then Iſrael ſang this ſong, &c.] Being affected with the free favour and good-will of God towards them: ſpring up O well; for the ſpringing up of which they prayed in faith, believing in the promiſe of God, that it would ſpring up; and ſo encouraged one another not only to believe it, but even to ſing on account of it before it actually did: ſing ye unto it; or on account of it praiſe the Lord for it; or anſwer to it[m], it being their manner to ſing their ſongs by reſponſes, or alternately.

℣. 18. The princes digged the well, &c.] The princes and heads of the ſeveral tribes: the nobles of the people digged it; the ſeventy elders, according to the Targum of Jonathan: by the direction of the lawgiver; either the Lord himſelf, the lawgiver of his people, who pointed out the ſpot, and directed the princes where to dig, that is, he did this by Moſes; and who, as Jarchi thinks, is the lawgiver, and not amiſs: the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem render the word by Scribes, in the plural number, and interpret them of Moſes and Aaron: and this the princes and nobles dug with their ſtaves; either their walking-ſticks, or their rods, the enſigns of their authority; with theſe they ſmote the ground, or ſtuck them in a ſoft and ſandy place, upon which the waters bubbled up and flowed out. Dr. Shaw[n] chuſes to render the words, with their united applauſe, or clapping of hands, as the word מחקקוה in Chaldee ſignifies; or it may be expreſſed, as by Dr. Hunt, quoted by him, by deſcribing or marking out the figure or faſhion of the well with ſtaves. Mr. Ainſworth thinks, that this well ſignified Chriſt, the fountain of gardens, and well of living waters; and the waters of it the Spirit and his graces, which are a well of living water ſpringing up unto everlaſting life; the means of which are the labours of the governors of the church, the miniſters of Chriſt by preaching the word, and opening the ſcriptures; and ſuch grace is worthy of a ſong, and to be had with joy out of the wells of ſalvation, Iſ. xii. 4: and from the wilderneſs they went to Mattanah; from the wilderneſs near Arnon, which came out of the coaſts of the Amorites, ℣. 13. to a place which ſignifies a gift. The Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem render it, "and "from the wilderneſs it was given to them for a "gift;" that is, the well; and ſo the people of God, that are called out of the wilderneſs of this world, and come up from it, are called to partake of the gifts and bleſſings of grace, which are freely given unto them of God.

℣. 19. And from Mattanah to Nahaliel, and from Nahaliel to Bamoth.] All the Targums interpret this, and the following verſe, not of the journeying of the children of Iſrael, but of the motion of the well, that that from the place from whence it was given them, deſcended with them into the valleys, and from thence to the high places, as theſe words ſignify: and indeed, thoſe places are not mentioned in the journeys of the children of Iſrael, ch. xxxiii. and were not ſtations where they pitched, ed, but places they paſſed through before they came to Abarim, and the wilderneſs of Kedemoth.

[l] Vid. L'Empereur. Nott. in Moſis Kimchi ὁδοιπορια, p. 195.

[m] ענו לה reſpondete ei, Montanus; alternis canite ei, Tigurine verſion, Piſcator.

[n] Travels, p. 67. Ed. 2.

℣. 20. And from Bamoth in the valley, &c.] Or rather to the valley, as the Targum of Onkelos, ſince Bamoth ſignifies high places; though according to the Jeruſalem Talmud[o] Bamoth Baal, which ſeems to be the ſame place, was in a plain: that is in the country of Moab; the valley belonged to Moab, into which Iſrael came: to the top of Piſgah; not that the valley reached to the top, nor did the children of Iſrael go to the top of it, only Moſes, but rather to the bottom, which indeed is meant; for it intends the beginning of it, where Piſgah, which was an high mountain near the plains of Moab, began, and which was properly the foot of it: which looketh towards Jeſhimon; that is, Piſgah, as Jarchi rightly interprets it, which looked over a place called Jeſhimon; and which ſignifies a wilderneſs, and is no other indeed than the wilderneſs of Kedemoth, Deut. ii. 26. for from thence the following meſſengers were ſent.

℣. 21. And Iſrael ſent meſſengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, &c.] Who were one of the nations of the Canaanites, and a principal and powerful one, and who were devoted to deſtruction, and their land deſigned for the people of Iſrael; ſee Gen. xv. 16, 21. at this time Sihon was their king, to whom Moſes, in the name of Iſrael, ſent a very peaceable meſſage from the wilderneſs of Kedemoth, which lay near his country, Deut. ii. 26: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 22. Let me paſs through thy land, &c.] Thro' ſome part of it, which would have been a ſhorter way to the river Jordan, over which Iſrael was to paſs into the land of Canaan; the terms propoſed, or things to be obſerved in their paſſage, which they would bind themſelves ſtrictly to, are the ſame that were made to the king of Edom, ch. xx. 17. ſee the note there.

℣. 23. And Sihon would not ſuffer Iſrael to paſs through his border, &c.] Becauſe he could not truſt them, and confide in the promiſes they made, and thought it not ſafe to let ſuch a body of people into any part of his dominions, Judg. xi. 20. and chiefly becauſe his heart was hardened by the Lord, that he might be delivered into the hands of Iſrael, as was determined, Deut. ii. 30: but Sihon gathered all his people together; all that were able to bear arms out of all his cities, and which made no doubt a very numerous and powerful army; but then theſe being defeated, as they were, it became more eaſy to the Iſraelites to take their cities, where there were none left but women and children: and went out againſt Iſrael into the wilderneſs; the wilderneſs of Kedemoth; not content to reject a peaceable meſſage, he went out in an hoſtile manner againſt Iſrael, even out of his own dominions; ſo that he was the aggreſſor and unprovoked, which made his ruin appear the more juſt, and the children of Iſrael to have a better claim to his country conquered by them: and he came to Jahaz; a frontier town in the land of Moab, ſee Iſ. xv. 4. Jer. xlviii. 34. and which, according to Bunting[p], was 16 miles from Abarim: and fought againſt Iſrael; at the above place, where they had a pitched battle.

℣. 24. And Iſrael ſmote him with the edge of the ſword, &c.] Slew him and his army, entirely routed them, and got a compleat victory over them; God giving them up into their hands, who otherwiſe were a very ſtrong, powerful and warlike people; ſee Amos, ii. 9. and poſſeſſed his land from Arnon unto Jabbok; two rivers, the one to the ſouth, the other to the north of his country; the one was the boundary of his country between him and the Moabites, the other the boundary of his country between him and the Ammonites, as it follows: even unto the children of Ammon; for the border of the children of Ammon was ſtrong; which is given as a reaſon why the Iſraelites proceeded no farther in their conqueſt; there was another reaſon for that, which was the order of the Lord not to diſtreſs the Ammonites, nor meddle with them; though Jarchi makes this prohibition to be their ſtrength, Deut. ii. 19. but this is given as a reaſon why Sihon could not extend his conqueſts farther, becauſe it was ſo well fortified, either by nature or art, or both, by the river Jabbok, by mountains and frontier towns, and particularly by Rabbath, as the Targum of Jonathan ſuggeſts, which was their royal city in after-times, and a very ſtrong place; ſee 2 Sam. xii. 26, 27.

℣. 25. And Iſrael took all theſe cities, &c.] Which lay between the rivers Arnon and Jabbok; their particular names may be ſeen in ch. xxxii. 3, 34—38. and Iſrael dwelt in all the cities of the Amorites; being given to the Reubenites and Gadites, who inhabited them, as their poſſeſſion and inheritance, ch. xxxii. 2, 33. Deut. iii. 12, 16: in Heſhbon, and in all the villages thereof; or daughters thereof[q]. Heſhbon was the metropolis or mother-city, and all the towns and villages adjacent were as daughters to it; of which city more is ſaid in the following verſes, ſee the note on Iſ. xv. 4.

℣. 26. For Heſhbon was the city of Sihon the king of the Amorites, &c.] His royal city, where he kept his palace, where he had reſided ſome time, and perhaps ſome of his predeceſſors; and therefore being now in his poſſeſſion when taken by the Iſraelites, they had a good right and title to keep it, and dwell in it: and indeed this is here given as a reaſon of it, who had fought againſt the former king of Moab; either the king that reigned before Balak, or ſome king of Moab, that reigned formerly, againſt whom one of the name of Sihon, which might be a common name to the kings of the Amorites, as Pharaoh to the Egyptians, had engaged in war: and taken all his land out of his hand, even unto Arnon; and had been in the hands of the Amorites ſome years; and therefore the Moabites had no reaſon to object to the Iſraelites dwelling in it, and poſſeſſing it, which they had not taken from them, but from the Amorites in a lawful war. And for proof of this, reference is had to the bards and poets of thoſe times, who were the perſons that tranſmitted in verſe the hiſtory of famous actions to poſterity.

℣. 27. Wherefore they that ſpeak in proverbs ſay, &c.] The hiſtorical writers of thoſe times, among the Amorites, who were uſually poets, and wrote the hiſtory of the wars between the Moabites and Amorites in verſe; as Homer among the Greeks wrote the wars of Troy; and the compoſitions of thoſe ancient bards were ſhort and compendious, and wrapt up in proverbial ſayings, and enigmatical and figurative expreſſions, that they might be the better retained in memory, and therefore were called proverbialiſts. Jarchi ſays, they were Balaam and Beor that took up their parables, and ſaid, come into Heſhbon; which words are the beginning of the ſong, and in which the Amorites are repreſented as

[o] Sheviith, fol. 38. 4. Munſter, Fagius, Grotius.

[p] Travels of the Patriarchs, p. 83.

[q] בנתיה filiabus ejus, Montanus, as inviting Sihon, and his nobles, to enter Heſhbon, which he had taken, and make it his royal ſeat; or as encouraging one another to go into it and repair it, having ſuffered much at the taking of it, which ſeems to be confirmed by what follows: let the city of Sihon be built and prepared; that is, let us ſet about rebuilding of the city, and let us fit it up for Sihon our king, and let it be called his city, and made the place of his reſidence, his palace, and where his court may be kept.

℣. 28. For there is a fire gone out of Heſhbon, &c.] Not before, but after Sihon had ſubdued it, as Jarchi obſerves; and is to be underſtood of his ſoldiers going out from thence, and making deſolations in the adjacent parts, like a ſtrong fire, and the fierce flames of it there is no reſiſting; and ſo the Jeruſalem Targum, "for a people mighty, "and burning like fire, are gone out of Heſhbon;" ſee Amos i. 4, 7, 12, 14: a flame from the city of Sihon; which is the ſame thing in other words, the city of Sihon being Heſhbon, and a flame the ſame with fire; warriors, as both the Targums of Onkelos and Jeruſalem interpret it: this ſeems to be what thoſe compoſers undertook in their poetical way to foretel would be the caſe in future times; concluding from the conqueſts already made, that they would be extended much farther, and that no oppoſition could hinder: it hath conſumed Ar of Moab; the metropolis of the country of Moab, that is, they were as ſure of it, and endeavoured to make the people by theſe their compoſitions as confident of it, that this city would fall into the hands of their armies, and be deſtroyed, as if it was already done; otherwiſe it does not appear that it ever was taken out of the hands of the Moabites, until taken by the Aſſyrians or Chaldeans; of this city ſee the note on Iſ. xv. 1: and the lords of the high places of Arnon; who had the government of the high, ſtrong and fortified places all along the river Arnon; theſe it is ſuggeſted would be conquered by the Amorites; all the three Targums interpret it of the prieſts and worſhippers in the temples, and at the altars of the idols in Arnon; and it may be rendered, the Baals of the high places of Arnon, as if the gods of thoſe places ſhould fall into the victors hands; and which ſeems to have ſome confirmation from what follows; and it may be obſerved, that in theſe parts there were ſome places called Bamoth Baal, or the high places of Baal, ſee ch. xxii. 41. and Beth Baal Meon, which has its name from its being the temple and habitation of Baal, Joſh. xiii. 17.

℣. 29. Wo to thee Moab, thou art undone, &c.] The whole country ruined, or likely to be ſo: O people of Chemoſh; which was the name of their idol, who is called the abomination of the Moabites, 1 Kings xi. 7. ſee the note on Jer. xlviii. 7: he hath given his ſons that eſcaped; that is, the idol Chemoſh had given his ſons the men of the country that worſhipped him, who eſcaped the ſword of the Amorites, theſe, and his daughters into captivity unto Sihon king of the Amorites; who took captive what he ſlew not, or would do ſo, Chemoſh their god not being able to preſerve them, but obliged to deliver them up: thus the compoſers of this ſong inſult the god of the Moabites, as it was uſual for conquerors ſo to do; ſee Iſ. x. 10, 11. and xxxvi. 18, 19, 20. though ſome think theſe are the words of the Iſraelites, making their obſervations upon the above ſong, which ends at ℣. 28. and ſcoffing at the idol of the Moabites.

℣. 30. We have ſhot at them, &c.] Either the Amorites at the Moabites, or elſe the Iſraelites at the Amorites; for, according to Aben Ezra, theſe are the words of Moſes; though they, with ℣. 29. ſeem rather to be a continuation of the ſong of the old Amorite bards, deſcribing the ruin of the country of Moab by them; and this clauſe may be rendered with the next, their light, or lamp is periſhed from Heſhbon[r]; or their yoke, as Jarchi, and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion; that is, their kingdom, and the glory of it, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan interpret it, and ſo Jarchi: even unto Dibon; which was another city in the land of Moab; ſee Iſ. xv. 1: and we have laid them waſte even unto Nophah, which reached unto Medeba; Nophah perhaps is the ſame with Nebo, mentioned along with Medeba, Iſ. xv. 2. however, they were both places in Moab, and are mentioned to ſhew how far the deſolation had, or would ſpread; and the whole is obſerved to prove, that this part of the country of Moab, now poſſeſſed by the Iſraelites, was taken from them, not by them, but by the Amorites, a people Iſrael now conquered, and ſo had a right to what they found them in the poſſeſſion of.

℣. 31. Thus Iſrael dwelt in the land of the Amorites.] Not the land of the Moabites; and by thoſe means before mentioned; by conquering Sihon their king, they came into the poſſeſſion of it, and took up their dwelling in it; this was the beginning of the conqueſt of the Canaanites, and an earneſt and pledge of inheriting their land promiſed unto them; the Iſraelites that dwelt here were the tribes of Reuben and Gad.

℣. 32. And Moſes ſent to ſpy out Jaazer, &c.] Or Jazer, as it is called in Iſ. xvi. 9. Jer. xlviii. 32. another city that belonged to the Amorites, and which they had taken from the Moabites; and which came into the hands of the latter again, after the captivity of the ten tribes, as appears from the above places; according to Jerom[s], it was 15 miles diſtant from Heſhbon: and they took the villages thereof; not the ſpies, as Jarchi, but the Iſraelites under Moſes; who upon the return of the ſpies, and the report they made, marched towards it, and took it, and all the towns and villages round about it; for it ſeems to have been a principal city: and drove out the Amorites that were there; that dwelt there, and were in poſſeſſion of it; otherwiſe they would not have attacked it, had it, and its villages, been in the hands of the Moabites.

℣. 33. And they turned, &c.] From Jaazer, after they had taken it, and came back a little way: and went up by the way of Baſhan; which was a nearer way to Canaan, a fine country abounding with oxen and ſheep, having rich paſtures, and very famous for its oaks; it had its name from the mountain of Baſhan in it, and has been ſince called Batanea; it was at this time in the hands of the Amorites, and from them it was taken by Iſrael, as follows; who marched this way for that purpoſe, or at leaſt were ſo directed by the providence of God for that end: and Og king of Baſhan went out againſt them; who was of the race of

[r] נירם אבד חשבון lucerna eorum, Heſhbon (ſcilicet) periit, Tigurine verſion; regnum eorum periit a Cheſbon, Pagninus, Vatablus; imperium eorum, Munſter. [s] De locis Heb. fol. 92. G.

of the giants, and he himſelf of a gigantic ſtature, and was a king of the Amorites, as well as Sihon, Deut. iii. 8, 11. he came out in an hoſtile manner againſt Iſrael, to ſtop them going any farther: he, and all his people; out of his many cities, a numerous army no doubt: to the battle at Edrei; where it was fought between him and Iſrael. Jerom ſays [t], it was in his time called Adara, a famous city of Arabia, 24 or 25 miles from Bozra, and ſix from Aſhtaroth-karnaim, the ancient ſeat of the Rephaim, or giants, from whom Og ſprung, Gen. xiv. 5. and was the ſeat of Og now, from whence he came to Edrei or Adara, to meet and fight Iſrael there; ſee Deut. i. 4.

℣. 34. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, fear him not, &c.] Og being of a gigantic ſtature, and his forces numerous, might cauſe ſome fear in Moſes, and in the people, and therefore the Lord encouraged them not to be afraid of him and his army: for I have delivered him into thy hand, and all his people, and his land; that is, he had determined to do it, and now promiſed it, and it might be depended on and looked upon as if actually done: and thou ſhalt do to him as thou didſt unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heſhbon; ſlay him and his people, and take poſſeſſion of his country.

℣. 35. So they ſmote him and his ſons, and all his people, &c.] They engaged in battle with him, ſlew him and his ſons that came with him, and all his armies; and which conſiſted, as is probable, of all able to bear arms in all his cities; which the more eaſily came in to the hands of the Iſraelites after this battle, in which ſuch a carnage was made: until there was none left him alive; ſo univerſal was the ſlaughter at the battle, and in the cities that fell into their hands; they utterly deſtroyed men, women and children, Deut. iii. 3, 6: and they poſſeſſed his land; in which were threeſcore cities fenced with high walls, gates and bars, beſides a great many unwalled towns; theſe were poſſeſſed by the half tribe of Manaſſeh, Deut. iii. 4, 5, 13, 14, 15.

CHAP. XXII.

THE children of Iſrael being come into the plains of Moab, put the king of Moab into a panic, who expreſſed his fears to the elders of Midian, ℣. 1—4. and ſent for Balaam the ſoothſayer to curſe the people of Iſrael, but he upon conſulting the Lord refuſed to come, ℣. 5—14. on which the king of Moab ſent to him a ſecond time, making large promiſes of preferment to him, and who at this time got leave from the Lord to go with the meſſengers, ℣. 15—21. but was met with in the way by an angel of the Lord, who would have ſlain him had it not been for his aſs, of which a very wonderful relation is given, ℣. 22—35. and the chapter is cloſed with the interview between Balak king of Moab and Balaam, and an account of what paſſed between them, and what was done by them, ℣. 36—41.

℣. 1. And the children of Iſrael ſet forward, &c.] From the country of Baſhan, where we read of them laſt, after they had conquered Og the king of it, and alſo Sihon king of the Amorites, and ſettled ſome of their tribes in both kingdoms; the particular place from whence they came hither, according to the account of their journeys, were the mountains of Abarim, ch. xxxiii. 48: and pitched in the plains of Moab; the part of them they encamped in reached from Beth-jeſimoth to Abel-ſhittim, ch. xxxiii. 49: on this ſide Jordan by Jericho; or Jordan of Jericho, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; a river that flowed near to Jericho, running between the plains of Moab, and the plains of Jericho; according to Joſephus [u], it was 60 furlongs, or 7 miles and a half from Jericho; but, according to Jerom [w], it was but 5 miles: or rather, as ſome verſions render it, over-againſt Jericho [x]; for Jericho was on the other ſide of the river Jordan, and the plains of Moab, or that part of them where Iſrael now pitched, were right againſt that city; and ſo Joſephus ſays [y].

℣. 2. And Balak the ſon of Zippor ſaw all that Iſrael had done to the Amorites.] The word Amorites being particularly pointed, ſhews, as Aben Ezra obſerves, that Sihon and Og are both meant, and that there were not among the kings of the land of Canaan any ſo great as they; wherefore when Balak, who was the preſent king of Moab, ſaw what Iſrael had done to them, that they had conquered them, and ſeized upon their kingdoms; he reaſoned within himſelf, and ſaid, as Jarchi repreſents him, that if they could not ſtand before Iſrael, much leſs could he and his people; and the rather, ſince thoſe kings Iſrael had ſubdued, were too powerful for the king of Moab, and had taken part of his country from him, and yet Iſrael was too ſtrong for them.

℣. 3. And Moab was ſore afraid of the people, &c.] Leſt they ſhould enter into their country, and do to them as they had done to Sihon and Og, and their countries; on this account the king of Moab, his nobles, and the people of the land were in an exceeding great panic, which was a fulfilling of the prophecy of Moſes in Exod. xv. 15: becauſe they were many; the number of them taken a little after in this place, where they now were in the plains of Moab, even after 24000 had died of the plague, was 61,730, ch. xxv. 9. and xxvi. 51: and Moab was diſtreſſed becauſe of the children of Iſrael; though they had no reaſon for it, had they conſidered their relation to them, being the deſcendents of Abraham, the uncle of Lot, whoſe poſterity they were; and that the Iſraelites had done them ſervice in delivering them from ſuch bad neighbours, who had taken much of their country from them, and were doubtleſs making continual incroachments on them; and eſpecially had they known the orders the Iſraelites had from the Lord not to diſtreſs them, nor contend with them in battle, Deut. ii. 9. but this they were ignorant of, and being of a different religion from the Iſraelites, had them in abhorrence, or loathed them, as the word ſignifies; though the meaning rather ſeems to be, that they had a nauſea, a loathing in their ſtomachs, and could not eat their food, becauſe of the dread of the Iſraelites that was upon them; or they were weary of their lives, as Jarchi interprets it, and as the word is uſed, Gen. xxvii. 46.

℣.

[t] De locis Heb. fol. 87. I. & 92. M.
[u] Antiq. l. 5. c. 1. §. 4.
[w] De locis Heb. fol. 87. G.
[x] Κατα Ιεριχω, Sept. ex oppoſito Hiericho, Tigurine verſion.
[y] Antiq. l. 4. c. 6. §. 1.

℣. 4. And Moab ſaid unto the elders of Midian, &c.] Whom the king of Moab ſent for to conſult with what to do in the preſent caſe, for the good and ſafety of both people; for, according to the Targum of Jonathan, they were one people and one kingdom unto this time, at leaſt had been confederates, by what is ſaid Gen. xxxvi. 35. tho' Jarchi thinks, there was always a mutual hatred of each other, and that Midian now came againſt Moab to war, but for fear of Iſrael a peace was made between them, juſt as it was with Herod and Pontius Pilate in another caſe, Luke xxiii. 12. however they were friends as well as neighbours now; and by which it appears, that this Midian was not that where Jethro lived, which was on the Red Sea, near mount Sinai in Arabia Felix; this was near the river Arnon, and the Moabites in Arabia Petræa; and though both the one and the other deſcended from Midian, the ſon of Abraham by Keturah, yet they had ſpread themſelves, or the one was a colony from the other, and might be diſtinguiſhed into ſouthern and northern Midianites; the latter were thoſe near Moab; and theſe elders of Midian, addreſſed by the king of Moab, being now at his court, whether ſent for or not, are the ſame with the five kings or princes of Midian, as they are called, ch. xxxi. 8. Joſh. xiii. 21. as Aben Ezra obſerves: now ſhall this company lick up all that are round about us; conſume us, and all our people, and all adjoining to us, and depending on us: as the ox licketh up the graſs of the field; as eaſily, and as ſoon, and as compleatly and entirely; nor are we any more able to oppoſe them, than the graſs of the field is to reſiſt and hinder the ox from devouring it: and Balak the ſon of Zippor was king of the Moabites at that time; according to the Targum of Jonathan, Midianites and Moabites reigned by turns ſo long a time; and that Balak was a Midianite, and ſo ſays Jarchi, and unfit for the kingdom, and was ſet over them through neceſſity for a time: but it ſeems rather, that he was king in ſucceſſion after his father Zippor; and the deſign of the expreſſion is only to ſhew, that he who was before mentioned, ℣. 2. was the then reigning prince when this affair happened.

℣. 5. He ſent meſſengers therefore unto Balaam the ſon of Beor, &c.] In conſequence of the conſultation held by the king of Moab with the elders of Midian; and very probably through a motion of theirs, and by advice they gave, Balak diſpatched meſſengers of both people, to the perſon here deſcribed by his name and parentage; but who he was is not eaſy to ſay: the Jews ſometimes make him to be a magician in Pharaoh's court, at the time when Moſes was born [z], which is not probable; and it is ſtill more improbable that he ſhould be Laban the Syrian, as the Targum of Jonathan here, and the Targum on 1 Chron. i. 44. though others ſay [a] he was the ſon of Beor, the ſon of Laban, and ſo was the grandſon of Laban; and with as little probability is he ſaid to be Elihu, that anſwered Job according to a tradition of the Jews, mentioned by Jerom [b]; nor is there any reaſon to believe that he was ever a good man, and a true prophet of the Lord; he is expreſsly ſaid to be a diviner or a ſoothſayer, Joſh. xiii. 22. a ſort of men abhorred of God, and not to be ſuffered to be among his people, Deut. xviii. 10. but were of great credit and eſteem among the heathens, for their pretenſions to foretel things to come, or to diſcover loſt goods, and the like; and by their inchantments to drive away evils, or bring on curſes, for which Balaam was famous; and therefore by the advice of the Midianites, Balak ſent for him to Pethor, which is by the river of the land of the children of his people; the land of his people, of his birth or habitation, was Aram or Syria, ch. xxiii. 7. that is, Aram Naharaim, which lay between the two rivers Tigris and Euphrates, or what is ſometimes called Meſopotamia, as is clear from Deut. xxiii. 4. and the river of that land, which was eminently ſo called, is the river Euphrates, as the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it here, and by that river was Pethor, where Balaam now lived; and is by ſome thought to be the ſame with the Pacoria of Ptolemy [c], which was by that river: the meſſengers were ſent to call him; to invite him to Balak's court: ſaying, behold, there is a people come out from Egypt; Balak ſpeaks of them, as if he knew not who they were, only that they were come from Egypt, and were ſeeking a new habitation to ſettle in, and ſo were in danger from them, leſt they ſhould invade his country, and ſettle there: behold, they cover the face of the earth; not the face of the whole earth, unleſs an hyperbolical expreſſion is ſuppoſed, to ſet forth the greatneſs of their numbers; but a large part of the earth, all within ſight almoſt, even the plains of Moab: and they abide over-againſt me; were very near him, lay encamped before his country, and his metropolis, and ſo he thought himſelf in great danger, and threatened with an invaſion, as the pitching of their tents ſo near made him ſurmiſe.

℣. 6. Come now therefore, I pray thee, &c.] To my country, city and court: curſe me this people; by imprecations on them; and which being attended with various rites and ceremonies, brought calamities on perſons, which men of Balaam's character were ſuppoſed to have power to do: for they are too mighty for me; to oppoſe and ſubdue by force of arms; and therefore was obliged to have recourſe to ſuch arts and methods he was maſter of; ſuggeſting, that he was able to do more by his divinations, than could be effected by an army of men: peradventure I ſhall prevail, that we may ſmite them, and that I may drive them out of the land; there is hope by taking ſuch meaſures, that they may be prevailed over and conquered; and that together with your curſes, and my army, we may be able to ſmite them, and deſtroy them; you with your tongue, and I and my people with the ſword, and ſo drive them quite out of the land, and get a clear riddance of them: for I wot that he whom thou bleſſeſt is bleſſed, and he whom thou curſeſt is curſed; ſo high an opinion had the king of Moab of this ſoothſayer and diviner, from the report he had had of the mighty feats done by him; as, that thoſe for whom he aſked for bleſſings from heaven, had them, and thoſe on whom he imprecated evils, they came upon them; and this was a prevailing cuſtom among the heathens in after-times, and particularly the Romans; not only to endeavour to get the gods of the people from them they were at war with, and whoſe cities they beſieged, praying that they would leave ſuch places, cities, and their temples; but alſo wiſhed evils to cities and armies, and prayed the gods to fill them with flight, fear and terror, and that ſuch evils might come upon them, which had on others [d].

℣.

[z] Dibre Hayamim Shel Moaſeh, fol 3 2. Gen. fol. 69. D. [a] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 7. 2. [b] Quæſt. ſeu Traditiones in [c] Geograph. l. 5. c. 18. [d] Vid. Macrob. Saturnal. l. 3. c. 9.

℣. 7. And the elders of Moab, and the elders of Midian departed, &c.] By which it appears, that they were princes and nobles; for ſuch the elders were, that were ſent on this errand to Balaam; and that they were ſome of both people, Midian and Moab, that went upon it, ſee ℣. 14. which ſhews, that if they were not one people, under one king, which yet ſeems likely, nevertheleſs they made a common cauſe of it, and joined in this expedient to ſave their country: with the rewards of divination in their hands; not that diviners were ſent along with them to Balaam, as Aben Ezra interprets it, that he might not deceive them, and put them off, by ſaying it was not a fit and proper day or hour to go out and curſe, which theſe men would be able to refute; but if they were ſkilled in the art of divination as well as he, what need was there to ſend to him, when they had ſuch at hand? nor inſtruments of divination, as Jarchi, which ſo famous a ſoothſayer could not be thought to be without; but as we rightly render it, the rewards of divination, which were either fixed or left to the generoſity of thoſe that had recourſe to ſuch perſons, and were preſents which they brought them, in order to engage them to uſe the utmoſt of their art for them; and this ſenſe is confirmed by the apoſtles Peter and Jude, ſee 2 Pet. ii. 15. Jude ℣. 11: and they came unto Balaam; at Pethor: and ſpake unto him the words of Balak; told him the errand they were ſent on to him by the king of Moab.

℣. 8. And he ſaid unto them, lodge here this night, &c.] Which ſhows, that he was at once inclined to do their buſineſs for them, and would readily engage in it if he could be permitted; and it looks as if it was in the night-ſeaſon that he got knowledge of things, either in dreams, or by familiar ſpirits, or by conſulting the ſtars, or other methods uſed by him at ſuch ſeaſons; or it may be, this was only ſaid to get time before he gave them a peremptory anſwer, that he might, if he could, get leave to do what they deſired, to which he ſhewed a good inclination: and I will bring you word again, as the Lord ſhall ſpeak unto me; by which it appears he had ſome knowledge of the true God, and pretended great familiarity with him, thereby to make himſelf the more reſpectable; and indeed he was ſurprizingly favoured with ſome degree of intimacy with him, which, for the ſake of Iſrael, he was now admitted to; whether at any other time, or on any other occaſion, is not certain; however, he promiſed the princes he would let them know the next morning what was ſaid to him, and ſo accordingly what he ſhould or could do: and the princes of Moab abode with Balaam; that is, that night, and ſo very probably the princes of Midian likewiſe; though ſome of the Jewiſh writers think[e] they departed as ſoon as they heard Balaam ſay he would conſult the Lord about this matter; from whence they concluded, there was no room to hope for ſucceſs, ſince he would never conſent to deſtroy a nation ſo dear unto him, and for whoſe ſake he had wrought ſo many miracles; but if this was the caſe, how came the princes of Moab to ſtay, with whom the ſame objection would have place? but the reaſon why they only are named, may be what Aben Ezra gives an hint of, that theſe were the principal perſons in the embaſſy, in whom the reſt were included, as Balak their king was the principal perſon that ſent them.

℣. 9. And God came unto Balaam, &c.] In a dream very probably, as he did to Abimelech and Laban, Gen. xx. 3. and xxxi. 24: and ſaid, what men are theſe with thee? who lodged with him that night. This he ſaid, not as ignorant who they were, or from whence they came, or what they came about; but in order to lead on to a diſcourſe with Balaam, and to have from him the account of the men, and their buſineſs, and to try his fidelity in relating the affair.

℣. 10. And Balaam ſaid unto God, &c.] In anſwer to the queſtion he put to him: Balak the ſon of Zippor, king of Moab, hath ſent unto me; theſe men, and a meſſage by them: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 11. Behold, there is a people come out of Egypt, &c.] In this, and the following part of the verſe, he faithfully and punctually relates the words of Balak to him by his meſſengers, as well knowing he could not deceive the omniſcient God, or hide any thing from him, though he could deceive men, and conceal the truth from them, to ſerve a purpoſe; ſee the notes on ℣. 5, 6.

℣. 12. And God ſaid unto Balaam, thou ſhalt not go with them, &c.] Which is a denial of the firſt thing Balak requeſted, come now therefore, &c. ℣. 6. thou ſhalt not curſe the people; which was the principal thing deſired, and in order to which he was ſolicited to go with the meſſengers; but this is abſolutely forbidden: for they are bleſſed; by the Lord himſelf with an irrevocable bleſſing, and therefore it would be vain and fruitleſs, as well as dangerous for him to attempt to curſe them, Gen. xii. 3. this may have a ſpecial reſpect to the bleſſing of Jacob by Iſaac, which could not be reverſed by the ſolicitations of Eſau, and which deſcended to Jacob's poſterity, the Iſraelites, Gen. xxvii. 33.

℣. 13. And Balaam roſe up in the morning, &c.] With the impreſſion of the dream upon his mind, and of what had paſſed between God and him in it: and ſaid unto the princes of Balak; which ſhews what the elders were that were ſent, of what honour and dignity, and may include both thoſe of Moab and of Midian: get you into your land; as ſoon as you can; ſet forward on your journey, it is to no purpoſe to ſtay here: for the Lord refuſeth to give me leave to go with you; he only relates one part of the anſwer he had from the Lord, reſpecting his going with them, but ſays not a word of his being forbid to curſe Iſrael, and of the reaſon given, why he ſhould not; had he reported this, in all probability, it would have prevented any further application to him, and ſo any attempt to get this done, which Balaam ſeemed aware of; and therefore by concealing this, hoped for freſh ſolicitations and intreaties, and that in time, the Lord might be prevailed on to let him go and curſe them; he having a covetous deſire of riches, honour, and preferment in Balak's court.

℣. 14. And the princes of Moab roſe up, &c.] And the princes of Midian alſo, immediately, without entering into a parley with him, to perſuade him to go with them; perceiving by his anſwer that it would be to no purpoſe, and that he was determined to do as the Lord directed him: and they went unto Balak, and ſaid, Balaam refuſeth to come with us; as Balaam told them leſs than what God had ſaid to him, ſo they related leſs to Balak than what Balaam had ſaid to them; ſaying nothing of the Lord's refuſing to let him go with them, but repreſent it as a piece of pride and obſtinacy in Balaam, and which Balak was left to underſtand; and it ſeems as if he did underſtand it as a piece of of policy in Balaam, to get a larger offer of money or honour, or both from him, and which the following account ſeems to confirm.

[e] Jarchi, Ramban & Iſaac Arama apud Muis in loc.

℣. 15. And Balak ſent yet again princes more, and more honourable than they.] More in number, and greater in quality, princes of the firſt rank in his court; ſuppoſing that Balaam, thought he was not treated with reſpect enough, they being princes of the meaner ſort, and but few, that were ſent unto him before, which he imagined was the reaſon, at leaſt one reaſon, why he refuſed to come with them; perſons of Balaam's character in thoſe days being highly revered.

℣. 16. And they came to Balaam, &c.] Though men of ſuch rank and dignity, they did not decline the embaſſy, being ſent by their king; nor did they think it below them to wait upon this ſoothſayer: and ſaid unto him, thus ſaith Balak the ſon of Zippor; perſonating their maſter, and addreſſing the diviner in his name, as his embaſſadors; at the ſame time doing honour to Balak that ſent them, of whom they ſpeak reſpectfully, and to Balaam, to whom they were ſent: let nothing, I pray thee, hinder thee from coming unto me; no buſineſs, though ever ſo important, that might be upon his hands; nor any want of reſpect to him he might imagine; nor if the rewards offered were not thought ſufficient; nor any perſuaſions of men to the contrary; and if it could be thought he knew any thing of the prohibition of God, that may be included; ſo urgent was he upon his coming to him.

℣. 17. For I will promote thee unto very great honour, &c. In his court, by making him ſome great officer there, perhaps his prime miniſter; ſo that as before he laid a bait for his covetouſneſs, ſending him large preſents, and rewards of divination; here, for his pride and ambition, promiſing him court-preferment; though Aben Ezra interprets it, of mammon or riches, of which he could give him an immenſe ſum: in honouring I will exceedingly honour thee[f]; or load thee with wealth and riches; and ſo Balaam ſeems to underſtand it, ſince in his anſwer he ſays, if Balak would give me his houſe full of ſilver and gold; both civil honour and worldly wealth may be taken into the account, ſince they are both heavy and weighty things, and very deſireable and enſnaring; and I will do whatſoever thou ſayeſt unto me; give him what money he ſhould aſk of him, put him into whatſoever place and office he ſhould deſire; and though he was a ſovereign prince, would be at his beck and command, and do whatever he ſhould direct him to do in his kingdom, as well as in what concerned the affair of curſing Iſrael; as we find he afterwards did, with reſpect to ſacrifices and rites relative thereunto: come therefore, I pray thee, curſe me this people; renewing the requeſt made in the firſt embaſſy with great importunity, ℣. 6. but uſing here a different word, for curſing; there, as Munſter obſerves, the word ſignifies to curſe lightly; here, to blaſpheme and utterly devote to ruin; to which may be added, to curſe expreſsly and by name, to pierce through and through, to deprive of all benefits, and to deſtroy utterly.

℣. 18. And Balaam anſwered, and ſaid unto the ſervants of Balak, &c.] Who were not only princes of the land, but officers of ſtate in the court of Balak: if Balak would give me his houſe full of ſilver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of the Lord my God, to do leſs or more; which is well ſpoken, had it been from his heart: he ſpeaks very reſpectfully of God, calling him by his great and incommunicable name Jehovah, the Being of Beings; repreſenting him as the object of his worſhip and adoration, as he might be along with other gods, which was the practice of the heathens in thoſe times, particularly the Syrians, among whom Balaam lived; ſo did Laban and others before him: likewiſe he makes a profeſſion of him, and claims an intereſt in him, which he might the rather do, to make himſelf look greater, as being the ſervant of the moſt high God; for the Gentiles in thoſe times, and indeed in after ones, had a notion of one ſupreme God, ſuperior to all the reſt; and this Jehovah Balaam claimed as his God: he ſpeaks very well of the word of God, to which he pretended ſo ſtrict a regard, that he would not tranſgreſs it in the leaſt, for all that Balak could give him or more, no, not for all the money in the world; and yet his heart at the ſame time went after his covetouſneſs, and he was eagerly deſirous, and greedy of getting the advantages into his hands that were offered him; for he hoped that God would change his mind, and alter his word, and give him leave to go and get the money, as appears by what follows.

℣. 19. Now therefore, I pray you, tarry ye alſo here this night, &c.] As the former meſſengers had; this ſhews his ſtrong inclination to go along with them, and do what was deſired of him, could he be permitted; otherwiſe he might and ought to have told the meſſengers at once, that Balak needed not to have given himſelf and them ſo much trouble, ſince it was not in his power to do for him what he requeſted; nor would he attempt it, as being contrary to the will of God, and therefore it would be their beſt way to return as ſoon as they could; but inſtead of that, he deſires them to ſtay that night, which muſt give them ſome hope of ſucceeding in their embaſſy: that I may know what the Lord will ſay unto me more; he hoped he would change his mind, and ſay ſomething to him different from, and contrary to what he had before declared unto him, which to ſuppoſe of God is great vileneſs and wickedneſs; to ſuch a pitch did his greedy deſire after riches and honour work him up unto; he ought to have been ſatisfied with the anſwer already given him, and not to have enquired more.

℣. 20. And the Lord came unto Balaam at night, &c.] As before ℣. 9. it may be in a dream; the Targum of Jonathan is as there, "a word came "from the Lord:" and ſaid unto him, if the men come and call thee, riſe up, and go with them; this was ſaid, as ſome think, not ſeriouſly, but ſarcaſtically, or rather in an angry manner, bidding him go, if he would; ſo giving him up to his own heart's luſts, or at moſt, only permitting him to go with them, but not to curſe Iſrael; and this permiſſion to go ſeems to be on this condition, if the princes firſt called him, and were urgent on him to go with them: this was a trial of Balaam, whether he would be eager and forward to go, or patiently wait until he ſhould be called; or the words may be rendered, ſeeing, or becauſe[g], they are come to call thee: but yet the word which I ſhall ſay unto thee, that ſhalt thou do; whether he would or no, he ſhould be forced to do it, as Jarchi; and therefore fore go not with any intention to curſe Iſrael, which ſhall never be done; wherefore to go would be vain and fruitleſs, ſince he would never be able to anſwer the deſign of Balak: but ſtill Balaam hoped, it not being ſo fully and clearly expreſſed as before, that he ſhould not curſe Iſrael; that God would ſay ſomething elſe unto him, though he had no reaſon at all for it, but all the reverſe; ſo blinded was he with a greedy deſire of riches and honour.

[f] כבד אכבדך מאד honorando honorabo te valde, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator. [g] אם quandoquidem, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Noldius, p. 88. & Ainſworth.

℣. 21. And Balaam roſe up in the morning, &c.] Betimes, not waiting for the call of the princes, which ſhewed how eager he was to be gone, and how intent upon the journey: and ſaddled his aſs; which, if he did himſelf, as Jarchi ſuggeſts, this is a farther proof of the haſte he was in; though as he had two ſervants with him, it is more likely, that they did it by his order: the ſame is ſaid of Abraham, Gen. xxii. 3. it was uſual for perſons of note and figure, in thoſe times and countries, to ride on aſſes, Judg. v. 10. and went with the princes of Moab; in company with them, and with as good a will as they, his heart and theirs being alike, as Jarchi notes; though it ſeems by what follows, that by ſome means or another they ſoon parted company; for when the affair of the aſs happened, Balaam was alone, only attended by his two ſervants.

℣. 22. And God's anger was kindled becauſe he went, &c.] Though he had given him leave to go; but then it was upon condition that the princes called him to go with them, whereas he went without their call, and did not wait for it; and beſides, he did not acquaint them, as he did not the meſſengers before, of what God had ſaid, that he ſhould not curſe Iſrael, nor ſay any thing contrary to this his will, which, had he told them, they would not have taken him with them; moreover, he went with an intention, with a good will to curſe Iſrael, which muſt be diſpleaſing to God, who knew his heart; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "and the anger of the Lord was ſtrong, becauſe "he went to curſe them;" likewiſe, though he had a permiſſion to go, it was in an angry manner, and was not agreeable to the Lord he ſhould go, and therefore ſhould not have gone notwithſtanding; or at leaſt, he might expect ſome marks of the divine diſpleaſure; ſo Jarchi obſerves, he ſaw that the thing was evil in the eyes of the Lord, or diſpleaſing to him, and yet he deſired it; juſt as the people of Iſrael, when the Lord bid them go up and poſſeſs the land, which caſe Aben Ezra inſtances in; they deſired perſons might be ſent beforehand to ſpy out the land, which, though permitted, they ſmarted for it; for not whatſoever God permits is well pleaſing to him; beſides, the words may be rendered [b], when he went, or, as he was going; and ſo not a reaſon of the Lord's anger, but expreſſes when it was kindled or broke forth: and the angel of the Lord ſtood in the way for an adverſary againſt him; that this was not a created angel, one of the miniſtring ſpirits, but the increated one, the angel of Jehovah's preſence, appears from ℣. 35. that went before the people of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, not only to guide but to guard and protect them; and who was an adverſary to their adverſaries, and at all times ſtood up for their help and aſſiſtance againſt all thoſe that hated and oppoſed them: Jarchi calls him an angel of mercy, who would have reſtrained Balaam from ſinning, that he might not ſin and periſh, and ſo was rather a friend than an adverſary, had he attended to him: now he was riding upon his aſs, and his two ſervants were with him; who, the Targum of Jonathan ſays, were Jannes and Jambres, the magicians of Egypt, of whom ſee 2 Tim. iii. 8. theſe only were with him, the princes of Midian on ſome account or another being ſeparated from him.

℣. 23. And the aſs ſaw the angel of the Lord ſtanding in the way, &c.] Which Balaam did not; his eyes being held from ſeeing him by the power and providence of God, that he might be reproved and rebuked by his aſs, to whom God gave power to ſee, more than to him, as Jarchi notes, ſo that he had little reaſon to boaſt of his viſions and revelations, and that he was the man whoſe eyes were open: the angel ſtood in the very pathway on which the aſs was carrying Balaam: and his ſword drawn in his hand; as threatening to deſtroy him, and as if he was juſt about to puſh at him, and ſignifying hereby not only that he deſerved to die, but what death he ſhould die of, namely, by the ſword, as he did, ch. xxxi. 8. ſee 1 Chron. xxi. 16. and the aſs turned aſide out of the way; out of the common road, to ſave its maſter and itſelf, from a natural principle of ſelf-preſervation: and went into the field; adjoining to, and that lay along the road-ſide: and Balaam ſmote the aſs to turn her into the way; with his ſtaff, as in ℣. 27. to bring her into the common road again.

℣. 24. But the angel of the Lord ſtood in a path of the vineyards, &c.] Which were in the field into which the aſs went, and before Balaam could turn her back ſhe got into a narrow-path, between the vineyards, as the Targum of Jonathan; a foot-path which lay between them, or a foot-path where foxes ran and had their holes, who uſed to lie near vineyards and among them, ſee Cant. i. 15. however it was a very narrow path, and here the angel placed himſelf, ſo that there was no paſſage for Balaam and his aſs, at leaſt not without great difficulty and danger; a wall being on this ſide, and a wall on that ſide; and therefore there was no going out into the field as before, to avoid the difficulty and danger; this being, as Jarchi obſerves, a ſtone-wall that was on each ſide.

℣. 25. And when the aſs ſaw the angel of the Lord, &c.] In the ſame poſition as before, with a drawn ſword in his hand, and being frightened again, and in a narrow path, and no way to turn aſide: ſhe thruſt herſelf unto the wall; to one of the walls, as cloſe as ſhe could, in order to get by the angel: and cruſhed Balaam's foot againſt the wall; running up ſo very cloſely to it: and he ſmote her again; having done it once before, ℣. 23. the times of ſmiting are obſerved, for the ſake of what the aſs after ſaid, and for the confirmation of it.

℣. 26. And the angel of the Lord went further, and ſtood in a narrow place, &c.] More narrow than the other, at a further diſtance: where was no way to turn, either to the right hand or to the left; it was ſo ſtrait and cloſe a place that the angel filled the whole breadth of it, that there was no paſſing him; ſo that there was no getting forward nor backward; not forward, becauſe the angel filled up the way, and there was no ſlipping by him; nor backward, becauſe it could not turn itſelf to the right or left.

℣. 27. And when the aſs ſaw the angel of the Lord, &c.] The third time; for it ſeems that he was not always in ſight, but diſappeared as he removed from place to place, and at every new place where where he ſtood, the aſs ſaw him, though his maſter did not: ſhe fell down under Balaam; upon her knees on the ground, not being able to go backward nor forwards, nor to turn out of the way to the right or left: and Balaam's anger was kindled; he was diſpleaſed and out of humour before, when it turned into the field, and when it ſqueezed his foot againſt the wall, and therefore he ſmote it; but now falling down with him, he was in a fume and fury, quite enraged: and he ſmote the aſs with a ſtaff; which he rode with, perhaps his divining ſtaff, ſee Hoſ. iv. 12. it is not ſaid what he ſmote it with before, but probably with the ſame: Aben Ezra ſays, at the firſt and ſecond time he ſmote it with a ſmall ſtick, or with a thong.

[b] כי הולך quum iret, Noldius, p. 403.

℣. 28. And the Lord opened the mouth of the aſs, and ſhe ſaid unto Balaam, &c.] This was a very extraordinary and miraculous affair, and effected by a ſupernatural power, that a dumb creature which had not organs endued with ſpeech, ſhould ſpeak ſo plainly and diſtinctly, as is after expreſſed; and yet it ſhould not be thought incredible, for what is it that Omnipotence cannot do? wherefore there is no need to ſay, as ſome Jewiſh writers [l], that this was all done in a viſionary way, and not really and literally performed; nor can heathens well object to the verity of it, if they believe what they themſelves report concerning one of the aſſes which carried Bacchus over a river, to which, for reward, he gave the power of ſpeaking with an human voice [k]; though it is very probable the fable was framed from this ſtory, and frequently do their writers ſpeak of other brute creatures endued with ſpeech; ſo Homer [l] repreſents Xanthus, the horſe of Achilles, having the faculty of ſpeech given it by Juno: Pliny ſays [m], it is commonly reported among the wonderful things of the antients that an ox ſpoke; and Livy [n] frequently makes mention of an ox ſpeaking in divers places, and of one particularly that ſaid, "Rome take heed to "thyſelf;" not to take notice of a lamb in Egypt in the times of Bocchoris that ſpoke, related by Ælianus [o] and others; nor of the ram of Phrixus, or the dog at Ariminum, and the elephant of Porus in India, with others Bochart [p] has collected together: the words ſpoken by the aſs were as follow: what have I done unto thee, that thou haſt ſmitten me theſe three times? and juſt ſo many times ſhe had been ſmitten by him, ℣. 23, 25, 27.

℣. 29. And Balaam ſaid unto the aſs, becauſe thou haſt mocked me, &c.] Or rather defiled me, as the word is rendered in Job xvi. 15. by running with him againſt a wall, and by lying down with him in the duſt and dirt, and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, "becauſe thou haſt rolled me in the dirt;" the ſenſe of mocking is not eaſy to be underſtood, unleſs it be that it expoſed him to be mocked and laughed at by others, by turning aſide, and lying down, and being ſo unruly; but then there were only his ſervants with him, to whom only he could be expoſed in ſuch a manner, which, one would think, would not have given him ſo much concern, and put him into ſuch a paſſion: the word ſometimes is uſed for ſeeking occaſion, and ſuch a ſenſe it may have here, as that it ſought an opportunity or occaſion to throw him, and ſo to kill him, or at leaſt to do him hurt, ſee Dan. vi. 4. I would there were a ſword in my hand, for now would I kill thee: ſo enraged was he, and his paſſion was ſo great, that he was not at all frighted and amazed to hear the aſs ſpeak, though Joſephus [q] repreſents him as diſturbed and aſtoniſhed at it; but ſome think, he being uſed to converſe with ſpirits in the ſhapes of various creatures, it was no ſurprize to him to hear it ſpeak.

℣. 30. And the aſs ſaid unto Balaam, &c.] Made a reply to him, as if it underſtood what he ſaid, and had the faculty of reaſoning and diſcourſing, as well as of ſpeaking, which is very amazing: am not I thine aſs, upon which thou haſt ridden ever ſince I was thine unto this day? or rather, ever ſince thou waſt; not ever ſince he was in being, but ever ſince he could ride, ſo Aben Ezra; according to which, it ſeems, that this was the firſt he rode upon, and which he had always been uſed to; hence the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem paraphraſe it, "upon which thou haſt rode from thy "youth unto this day;" and be it that Balaam was a man pretty well advanced in years, an aſs is a creature that lives a long time: Pliny ſays [r], it lives 30 years; and an Arabic writer [s] makes mention of an aſs that the owner of it rode on 40 years: was I ever wont to do ſo unto thee? to ſtart out of the way, or lie down with him, could any one inſtance be given of it? ſuggeſting that ſhe was a ſure-footed creature, and had always carefully and ſafely carried him, for which it appeals to him: and he ſaid, nay; ſhe had never been uſed to ſerve him in ſuch a manner as ſhe had now, and therefore he might have concluded that ſomething more than ordinary was the matter; and it is much his conſcience had not accuſed him, that he was wrong in coming with the princes, taking the alarm from theſe circumſtances, had he not been an hardened creature, or at leaſt, had he not been ſo eagerly bent on riches and honour.

℣. 31. Then the Lord opened the eyes of Balaam, &c.] Who either was ſtruck with blindneſs, as the men of Sodom were, ſo ſome think, or rather his eyes were held, that he could not ſee the angel; he could ſee other objects, as his aſs, but he could not ſee that; as Eliſha's ſervant could ſee the hoſt that compaſſed the city, but not the chariots and horſes of fire about Eliſha, till his eyes were opened, 2 Kings vi. 15, 17. and ſo it was with Balaam until the Lord uncovered his eyes, or rolled away the vail over them, or took that off which by his power and providence hindered his ſight: and he ſaw the angel of the Lord ſtanding in the way, and his ſword drawn in his hand; in the ſame poſition as in ℣. 23. and he bowed down his head, and fell flat on his face; from off his aſs upon the ground, in reverence of the illuſtrious object before him, and through fear of being ſlain by his ſword in his hand.

℣. 32. And the angel of the Lord ſaid unto him, &c.] When riſen up, and ſtanding before him: wherefore haſt thou ſmitten thine aſs theſe three times? the brute creatures are not to be beaten without cauſe, nor to be miſuſed and abuſed by men, even their owners: behold, I went out to withſtand thee; the aſs was not to be blamed, nor to be beaten for turning aſide, or lying down, it was I that ſtood in the way, and hindered its going forward, [l] Maimon. Moreh Nevochim, par. 2. c. 42. Ben Gerſom in loc. Lactant. de falſa Relig. l. 1. c. 21.

[k] Hygin. Poet. Aſtronomic. l. 2. c. 25.
[l] Iliad. 19. prope finem.
[m] Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 45.
[n] Hiſt. l. 24. c. 10. l. 27. c. 11. l. 28. c. 11. and l. 55. c. 21.
[o] De Animal. l. 12. c. 3.
[p] Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 2. c. 14. col. 197, 198.
[q] Antiq. l. 4. c. 6. §. 3.
[r] Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 43.
[s] Algiahid in Damir. apud Bochart, ut ſupra, col. 195.

ward, and this was done by me on purpoſe to oppoſe and ſtop thee: becauſe thy way is perverſe before me; the journey he took was not with his good liking and approbation, and eſpecially ſeeing he went with an intention, if poſſible, to ſerve Balak, and curſe Iſrael; the way of his heart was bad, which the Lord knew; it was not directed according to his will, but ſwerved from it; the Targum of Jonathan is, "it is manifeſt before me "that thou ſeekeſt to go and curſe the people, "and the thing is not agreeable to me."

℣. 33. And the aſs ſaw me, and turned from me theſe three times, &c.] The aſs ſaw the angel when Balaam did not, and that was the reaſon of its turning aſide; and it was well for him it did, and therefore he ſhould not have ſmote it: unleſs ſhe had turned from me; if ſhe had puſhed on, endeavouring to make her way: ſurely now alſo I had ſlain thee, and ſaved her alive; had certainly and only ſlain him, and not the aſs; and from hence the Jewiſh writers [t] gather, that the aſs was now ſlain, leſt it ſhould be ſaid, this is the aſs that ſpoke, and ſo be made an idol of.

℣. 34. And Balaam ſaid unto the angel of the Lord, I have ſinned, &c.] That is, in beating the aſs; not that he was ſenſible of his ſin of covetouſneſs, and of the evil diſpoſition of his mind, and of his wicked intention in going along with the princes to curſe Iſrael, if poſſible, and get Balak's preſents and preferments: for I knew not that thou ſtoodeſt in the way againſt me; ſignifying, that if he had known it, he ſhould not have ſmitten the aſs, but ſubmitted himſelf to the will of the angel: now therefore if it diſpleaſe thee, I will get me back again; which he ſpoke very coldly and faintly, not caring heartily to go back, unleſs forced to it; for ſeeing a drawn ſword in his hand, he might be afraid of his life ſhould he perſiſt in his journey, and therefore feigns a readineſs to go back, quitting it on condition, that his going forwards was diſpleaſing; whereas he knew it was, eſpecially his going with an evil mind to hurt Iſrael if poſſible.

℣. 35. And the angel of the Lord ſaid unto Balaam, go with the men, &c.] Which was not a command, but a conceſſion, or rather a permiſſion, leaving him to go if he would, ſuffering him to follow his own heart's luſts, and giving him up to them to his own deſtruction; and beſides, it was not his going barely that was diſpleaſing to God, but his going with ſuch a bad intention: but only the word that I ſhall ſpeak unto thee, that thou ſhalt ſpeak; which expreſſes not only what he ought to do, but what he ſhould be obliged to do, even to bleſs the people againſt his will, when his mind was to curſe them, it being for his worldly intereſt; and therefore it is ſuggeſted he had better not go at all, ſince he never would be able to carry his point, yea would be brought to ſhame and confuſion before Balak and his nobles: the angel ſpeaking in the ſame language as God did before to Balaam, ℣. 20. ſhews, that not a created angel but a divine perſon is here meant: ſo Balaam went with the princes of Balak; whom after this he quickly overtook, or they him, or they met together at ſome appointed place, and proceeded on in their journey.

℣. 36. And when Balak heard that Balaam was come, &c.] Meſſengers being ſent to acquaint him with it, either by Balaam, or by the princes: he went out to meet him; overjoyed at the news that his princes had ſucceeded, and to ſhew him reſpect, and do him honour, and all to encourage him to do his utmoſt for him: unto a city of Moab, which is in the border of Arnon, which is in the utmoſt coaſt; by the ſituation of it, being on the border of the river Arnon, which river was in the extreme parts of Moab, and divided between the Moabites and Amorites, it is generally thought to be the city Ar, called Ar of Moab, ſee ch. xxi. 13, 28. and the king coming to meet Balaam ſo far as the uttermoſt border of his dominions, ſhewed the greater reſpect to him.

℣. 37. And Balak ſaid unto Balaam, &c.] Upon their meeting together: did I not carneſtly ſend unto thee to call thee? or in ſending ſend [u]; the firſt meſſengers in a very preſſing manner, with great importunity, to give thee an invitation to come to me, and thoſe men of rank and quality, with rewards of divination in their hands, and yet the invitation was rejected; and after them other meſſengers, more in number and greater in dignity, with larger offers and promiſes; and now indeed thou art come, but with much ado, what is the meaning of all this? wherefore cameſt thou not unto me? at firſt, without ſhewing ſo much indifference and reluctance, and which obliged me to ſend another meſſage to thee: am I not able to promote thee to honour? to give thee wealth and riches, and put thee into high places of honour and profit? hadſt thou any doubt in thy mind about it, either concerning my ability or will to do it?

℣. 38. And Balaam ſaid unto Balak, lo, I am come unto thee, &c.] And therefore let nothing more be ſaid of what is paſt: and as for future things, have I now any power at all to ſay any thing? that would be agreeable to the king, and anſwer his purpoſe in ſending for him, namely to curſe the people of Iſrael; he ſuggeſts that he had not, he was under the powerful reſtraint of God; he could not ſay what he himſelf was inclined to ſay, and what the king would have him ſay, and he expected he ſhould; he could not ſay as ſome in Pſ. xii. 4: the word that God putteth in my mouth, that ſhall I ſpeak; whether agreeable to Balak's will and deſign or not, and whether for or againſt Iſrael: however, it being expreſſed in ſuch indefinite terms, might leave room for Balak to hope it might anſwer his expectations and wiſhes.

℣. 39. And Balaam went with Balak, &c.] From Ar of Moab, or however from the place where they met, to the royal city where Balak had his palace, and ſeems to be the place following: and they came to Kirjath-huzoth; which Jarchi interprets a city full of ſtreets, a populous place having a multitude of men, women and children in the ſtreets of it; and the ſame writer ſuggeſts, as if Balak's view in this was to move the pity of Balaam, that ſuch a number of people might not be rooted out and deſtroyed.

℣. 40. And Balak offered oxen and ſheep, &c.] Or ſlew [w] them either for ſacrifice; and if ſo, Balak was the ſacrificer, as it was common for kings to be prieſts; and then Balaam, who was ſent for, was the prophet, that was to obſerve and explain any omen at the time of ſacrificing, as Calchas did, when the chiefs of Greece ſacrificed [x]: or rather for a feaſt, as the following words ſeem to ſhew; though it might be for both, it being uſual when ſacrifices were offered to idols, to eat part of them

[t] Bemidbar Rabba, §. 20. fol. 227. 4. Aben Ezra in loc.
[u] שלח שלחתי mittendo miſi, Pagninus, Montanus.
[w] ויזבח cumque occidiſſet. V. L.
[x] Homer. Iliad. 1.

them in a feſtival way, in imitation of the peace-offerings of the Jews, ſee ch. xxv. 2: and ſent to Balaam, and to the princes that were with him; either part of it to them, or he ſent for them to come, and partake of the feaſt, he and the princes of Moab and Midian, that had been to fetch him, and ſtill attended him; and this the king did in a way of rejoicing, being glad that Balaam was come, and as expreſſing his well-pleaſedneſs with the conduct of the princes and their ſucceſs, as well as to keep Balaam in high ſpirits, hoping to have his end anſwered by him.

℣. 41. And it came to paſs on the morrow, &c.] The day after the arrival of Balaam at Balak's royal ſeat, and after the entertainment given him, and the princes, on the morning [y] of that day, as the word ſignifies; and perhaps early in the morning, the king, eager to be about buſineſs, and get the people of Iſrael curſed if poſſible as ſoon as could be: that Balak took Balaam and brought him up into the high places of Baal; where groves were planted, and altars erected to that idol; and which the Targum of Jonathan calls the idol Peor, the ſame with Baal Peor, ch. xxv. 3. which might be their god Chemoſh, the ſame with Bacchus or Priapus: that thence he might ſee the utmoſt part of the people; the whole hoſt of Iſrael, even to the extreme part of it; the camp of Dan, as the Targum of Jonathan, which brought up the rear; he had him to thoſe high places, both that he might have a better view of the whole body of the people, and know how they lay; and to direct his curſes at them, and that ſucceſs might attend the undertaking, theſe being places of religious worſhip. Joſephus ſays [z], thoſe high places were 60 furlongs from the camp of Iſrael.

CHAP. XXIII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the ſacrifices offered by Balak and Balaam, and how God met Balaam, and put a word into his mouth, which he delivered in the preſence of the king of Moab and his princes, ℣. 1—7. the ſubſtance of which are, the ſeparate ſtate and condition of Iſrael from other nations, their number, and the happineſs of the righteous at death, ℣. 8—10. which made Balak uneaſy, ſince inſtead of curſing he bleſſed Iſrael, and therefore he had him to another place to take a view of the people, ℣. 11—13. where having offered ſacrifices, another word was put into the mouth of Balaam, and which he alſo delivered before the king and his nobles, ℣. 14—18. in which were expreſſed the unchangeableneſs of God, the irreverſibleneſs of the bleſſing of Iſrael, the ſtrength, ſafety, happineſs and glory of that people, ℣. 19—24. which made Balak more uneaſy ſtill; but willing to try him a third time, he carried him to another place, and there built altars, and offered ſacrifices, the conſequence of which is related in the next chapter, ℣. 25—30.

℣. 1. And Balaam ſaid unto Balak, &c.] When upon one of the high places of Baal, and after having taken a view of the people of Iſrael as they lay encamped: build me here ſeven altars; this was purely heatheniſh; for not only the Iſraelites after the law of Moſes had but one altar, but the patriarchs before that never built but one altar at a time. Some have thought regard is had to the ſeven planets worſhipped by heathens; though no doubt Balaam pretended to ſacrifice to Jehovah the true God, in order to gain him over to him to agree to it to curſe Iſrael, and perſuaded Balak, though an idolater, to join with him; and the more eaſily to bring him to it, mixes heathen rites and cuſtoms in ſacrifice to him: and prepare me here ſeven oxen, and ſeven rams; which were creatures offered in ſacrifice according to the law of Moſes, and before that was given, and by perſons who were not under it; and even by ſeven of each ſort, and that by the expreſs command of God, Job xlii. 8. It may be obſerved, that both in this, and the preceding clauſe, the word here is carefully expreſſed, namely, in one of the high places; there the altars were erected, and thither the oxen were brought to be ſacrificed; ſo that both the place, and the number of the altars, ſavoured of heatheniſh worſhip, in which he complied to induce the king to ſacrifice to Jehovah.

℣. 2. And Balak did as Balaam had ſpoken, &c.] Ordered ſeven altars to be built, and prepared ſeven bullocks and rams for ſacrifice: and Balak and Balaam offered on every altar a bullock and a ram; both ſeem to be concerned in offering the ſacrifices; Balak, though a king, it being uſual for kings to be prieſts alſo, as Melchizedek was, and Balaam as a prophet; and theſe ſacrifices were offered to the true God, as ſeems clear from ℣. 4. and to which Balak, at the direction of Balaam, agreed, in order to gain the Lord on his ſide, that he might prevail over the people of Iſrael.

℣. 3. And Balaam ſaid unto Balak, ſtand by thy burnt-offering, &c.] By which it appears that the ſacrifices offered were of this ſort, and there might be one, which was more peculiarly the burnt-offering of Balak; though he might be more or leſs with Balaam concerned in them all; at which he was directed to ſtand whilſt it was burning, preſenting that and himſelf to the Lord, that he would have reſpect to both: and I will go; depart from thence, at ſome little diſtance, unto ſome private place: peradventure the Lord will come to meet me; upon the offering of theſe ſacrifices to him, though he could not be certain of it, he having lately ſhown ſome diſpleaſure and reſentment unto him; and this was alſo in the day-time, when it was in the night he uſually came unto him: and whatſoever he ſheweth me, I will tell thee; the whole of it, truly as it is, whether agreeable or not: and he went to an high place; but he was in one already, and therefore if this is the ſenſe of the word, he muſt go to another, into a grove in one of the high places, where he might be retired, and ſo fit for a divine converſe; and the Targum of Onkelos renders it alone: but rather the ſenſe is, that he went into a plain, as De Dieu has ſhewn from the uſe of the word in the Syriac language; he was upon a high place, and he went down from thence into the plain, perhaps into a cave at the bottom of the hill, a retired place, where he hoped the Lord would meet him, as he did.

℣.

[y] בבקר in matutino, Montanus; mane, V. L. Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

[z] Antiq. l. 4. c. 6. §. 4.

℣. 4. And God met Balaam, &c.] Not in a kind and gracious manner; not out of any reſpect to him and his offerings; not to indulge him with any ſpiritual communion with him; nor to communicate his mind and will to him as a friend of his; not to gratify his deſires, and grant the requeſt of the king of Moab, or to ſmile upon and ſucceed the ſcheme that they had concerted; but for the ſake of his people Iſrael, to counterwork the deſigns of their enemies; to blaſt and confound them, and turn their curſes into bleſſings; and particularly to oblige Balaam to bleſs the people, he was ſo deſirous of curſing for the ſake of gain: and he ſaid unto him; in a bragging boaſting way, in order to gain his favour, and carry his point: I have prepared ſeven altars, and I have offered upon every altar a bullock and a ram; that is, to him the Lord; for had they been offered to Baal, he could never have had the front to have ſpoken of them to God; and which he could never have propoſed as a reaſon why he ſhould be regarded by him, or expect on account of them any favour from him: and indeed, theſe altars and ſacrifices were not at his expence, though they were prepared and offered at a motion of his; nor were they offered in a right manner, nor with a right end, nor from a right principle, and were far from being acceptable unto God, yea, were abominable unto him; ſee Prov. xxi. 27.

℣. 5. And the Lord put a word in Balaam's mouth, &c.] Not grace into his heart, nor the fear of God within him, but ſuggeſted to him what to ſay; impreſſed it ſtrongly on him, that he could not forget it, and with ſuch power and weight, that he was obliged to deliver it: and ſaid, return unto Balak, and thus ſhalt thou ſpeak; that is, unto him, and what is expreſſed in ℣. 7—10.

℣. 6. And he returned unto him, &c.] Immediately, as ſoon as he was told what to ſay: and lo, he ſtood by his burnt-ſacrifice; continued in his devotions, hoping for ſucceſs, and waiting for Balaam's return: he and all the princes of Moab; not only thoſe that were ſent to Balaam, but perhaps all the princes of the kingdom who were got together on this occaſion, and by reaſon of the imminent danger they apprehended the nation was in on account of Iſrael.

℣. 7. And he took up his parable, and ſaid, &c.] Pronounced the word, the prophetic word, which God had put into his mouth; ſo the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem call it, the parable of his prophecy; ſo called, becauſe in prophecies, often figurative and enigmatical expreſſions are uſed, and alſo ſententious and weighty ones, either of which are ſometimes called parables; ſee Pſ. lxxviii. 2. Job xxvii. 1, 29. 1 Prov. i. 6: Balak the king of Moab hath brought me from Aram; or Syria, that is, from Meſopotamia, as the Septuagint tranſlate it; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, from Aram or Syria, which is by Euphrates: out of the mountains of the eaſt; it being the mountainous part of Meſopotamia or Chaldea, where Balaam dwelt, which lay to the eaſt of the land of Moab: ſaying, come, curſe me Jacob, and come, defie Iſrael; he owns that this was Balak's view in ſending for him; nor does he deny that he himſelf came with ſuch an intention, could he be able to execute it; even curſe the people of Iſrael, with the utmoſt abhorrence and deteſtation of them, and in the moſt furious and wrathful manner, as the laſt word uſed ſignifies.

℣. 8. How ſhall I curſe whom God hath not curſed? &c.] The ſenſe is, that it was impoſſible for him to curſe thoſe that God did not curſe himſelf, or would not have curſed by others; not but that he had a good will to it, to get Balak's money and honour, but he knew not how to accompliſh it; yea, he ſaw it was in vain to attempt it, it was a thing that could not poſſibly be done: God does not, nor will he curſe his ſpiritual Iſrael; they are bleſſed by him in Chriſt, and they ſhall be bleſſed; nor is it in the power of their enemies to curſe them, or do them any hurt: the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, inſtead of God and the Lord in this, and the following clauſe, uſe the phraſe, "the Word of the Lord;" the eſſential Word, the Son of God, who is ſo far from curſing his people, that he has delivered them from the curſes of the law, being made a curſe for them, that the bleſſings of the everlaſting covenant of grace might come upon them; and they are bleſſed of God in him, and for his ſake, with all ſpiritual bleſſings: or how ſhall I defie, whom the Lord hath not defied? which is the ſame thing in other words, only this laſt word is expreſſive of more contempt and indignation.

℣. 9. For from the top of the rocks I ſee him, and from the hills I behold him, &c.] That is, Iſrael in their camps; Balaam being at this time on the top of a rock, or on an high hill, from whence he had a view of Iſrael, encamped in the plains of Moab below him: lo, the people ſhall dwell alone; this certainly reſpects their dwelling in the land of Canaan, where they dwelt a ſeparate people from all others, diſtinguiſhed by their language, religion, laws, cuſtoms, and manner of living, being different both in their clothing, and in their food, from other people; nor had they dealings, nor did they company with thoſe of other nations; ſee Eſth. iii. 8. John iv. 9. Acts x. 28. or ſhall dwell ſafely [z], or ſecurely, not ſo much becauſe of the ſituation of their country, but becauſe of the protection of the Almighty; ſee Deut. xxxiii. 28. and ſhall not be reckoned among the nations; as belonging to them, ſhall not be made of any account by them, but be deſpiſed and reproached for their religion chiefly; nor reckon themſelves of them, nor mix with them; ſo the Targum of Jeruſalem, "they ſhall not be mixed;" or, as Jonathan, "they ſhall not be led in the laws of the people;" and though they are now ſcattered among the people and nations of the world, yet they are not mixed with them, nor reckoned to be a part of them; nor do they reckon themſelves to be of them, but are a ſeparate, diſtinct people from them. Thus Iſrael, or the people of God in a ſpiritual ſenſe, dwell alone; not ſolitarily, or without company, in every ſenſe, for they have the company of Father, Son and Spirit, of angels and ſaints; but they dwell in God, in Chriſt, in the houſe of God, and with one another, ſeparately and diſtinctly from the world: they are a ſeparate people in the love of God; in the choice of them in Chriſt; in the covenant of grace made with them in him; in redemption by him; in his interceſſion for them; in effectual vocation; as they will be in the reſurrection-morn, and in heaven to all eternity: and they ſhall dwell ſafely, God being around them; Chriſt the rock and fortreſs of them; the Spirit in them being greater than he that is in the world; angels their guardians, and they in a ſtrong city, whoſe walls and bulwarks are ſalvation: nor are they reckoned among the nations; they they are choſen; redeemed and called out of them, and are not accounted of by them any other than the refuſe and offſcouring of all things; nor do they reckon themſelves to be of the world, but as pilgrims and ſtrangers in it. Baal Hatturim refers this prophecy to the days of the Meſſiah; ſee Jer. xxiii. 5, 6.

[z] לבדד confidenter, Pagninus; ſecurus, Vatablus.

℣. 10. Who can count the duſt of Jacob, &c.] The people of Iſrael, their poſterity, ſo called, not becauſe of their original, the duſt of the earth, but becauſe of their numbers, being as numerous as the duſt of the earth, or ſand of the ſea, as it was promiſed they ſhould be, Gen. xxviii. 14. and which is here confirmed by the prophecy of Balaam: and the number of the fourth part of Iſrael; one of the four camps of Iſrael, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; for this people was divided into four camps, under ſo many ſtandards, which were thoſe of Judah, Reuben, Ephraim and Dan, ſee ch. ii. and one of them is repreſented by Balaam as ſo numerous, as not to be counted, or ſhould be ſo, ſee Hoſ. i. 10, 11. The ſpiritual Iſrael of God, though comparatively few, are in themſelves, and will be when all together, a great number, which no man can number, Rev. vii. 9: let me die the death of the righteous; which are among them, as Jarchi, among the Iſraelites; for they were not all righteous, nor are any of themſelves, or by their own works, but by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt: or the death of the upright ones [a]; ſuch as are upright in heart and life, who have right ſpirits renewed in them, and walk uprightly according to the rule of the divine word; ſuch as are Iſraelites indeed, in whom there is no guile; the word uſed is pretty near in ſound and ſignification to Jeſhurun, one of the names of Iſrael, Deut. xxxii. 15. and xxxiii. 5. the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem render it, "the death of the true "ones," who are truly righteous and upright, truly gracious perſons; who have the truth of grace, and the root of the matter in them: theſe die as well as others, yet their death is different from others, not in the thing itſelf, but in the concomitants and conſequences of it; they die in the Lord, in union to him, in faith of him, in hope of eternal life by him, and their death is precious to him; and in conſequence of this they are carried by angels to glory at death, are immediately in heaven with Chriſt, and it will be well with them to all eternity. Balaam had ſome notion of this; and though he did not care to live the life of ſuch, he wiſhed to die their death, or that he might be as happy at death as they; by which he bears a teſtimony to the immortality of the ſoul, to a future ſtate after death, and to an eternal life and happineſs to be enjoyed by good men: and let my laſt end be like his; which is a phraſe expreſſive of much the ſame thing as before: death is the end of a man in this world; and the end of a righteous man in it is peace, reſt, ſalvation and eternal life, or is what follows upon it, and he then enters into: ſome render it, my reward [b], which comes to much the ſame ſenſe, the above being the righteous man's reward, not in a way of debt, but grace; others render the word, my poſterity [c]; but it is not certain Balaam had any, and if he had, his concern ſeems to be more for himſelf than for them.

℣. 11. And Balak ſaid unto Balaam, what haſt thou done unto me? &c.] Or for me [f]; nothing at all, to anſwer his purpoſe, or his end in ſending for him; I took thee to curſe mine enemies; ſo he calls the Iſraelites, though they had never done him any wrong; nor committed any acts of hoſtility againſt him, nor ſhewed any intention to commit any; nay, were forbidden by the Lord their God, to contend in battle with him and his people: and behold thou haſt bleſſed them altogether; or in bleſſing bleſſed [g], done nothing but bleſs them, and that with many bleſſings, or pronounced them bleſſed, and propheſied of their bleſſedneſs, of their number, their ſafety, and of their happineſs, not only in life but at and after death.

℣. 12. And he anſwered and ſaid, &c.] By reply to Balak: muſt I not take heed to ſpeak that which the Lord hath put in my mouth? pretending a great regard to the word of God, and to great carefulneſs to ſpeak it, exactly and punctually as he received it, whereas he was forced to it, and could not do otherwiſe.

℣. 13. And Balak ſaid unto him, &c.] Seemingly ſatisfied with his anſwer, however he could not help himſelf, and was willing to make the beſt of him he could, and try what he could do with him another time and elſewhere: come, I pray thee, with me unto another place, from whence thou mayeſt ſee them; for he had a mighty notion that both the ſight of the people, and the place from whence they were ſeen, would greatly contribute to anſwer the end he had in veiw, curſing the people: thou ſhalt ſee but the utmoſt part of them, and ſhalt not ſee them all; for he thought, either that he was ſo charmed with ſo glorious a ſight, as the regular encampment of ſuch a body of people was, that he could not find in his heart to curſe them; or, that he was ſo terrified at the ſight of ſuch a vaſt number of people, that he durſt not attempt it; and therefore Balak propoſed to have him to a place where he could only ſee a part of them and not the whole: and curſe me them from thence; that part, hoping that when he had curſed them he would gradually go on till he had curſed them all: but there is this objection to our verſion, and the ſenſe it directs to, that Balaam had been brought to a place already, where he had ſeen the utmoſt part of the people, ch. xxii. 41. wherefore ſome read [h] the middle clauſe in a parentheſis, and in the paſt tenſe, (for thou haſt ſeen but the utmoſt part of them, and haſt not ſeen them all;) and therefore would have him come to a place where he might ſee them all, and curſe them from thence.

℣. 14. And he brought him into the field of Zophim, &c.] Or Sede Tzophim, as Hillerus [i] reads it, ſo called from the watch-tower, and watchmen in it: Jarchi ſays, it was a high place, where a watchman ſtood to obſerve if an army came againſt a city, and ſo a very proper place to take a view of the armies of Iſrael from: to the top of Piſgah; a high hill in this place, where perhaps the watch-tower was, or however the watchman ſtood: this looked towards Jeſhimon or Beth Jeſimoth, in the plain of Moab, where Iſrael lay encamped, ſee ch. xxi. 20. and xxxiii. 49: and built ſeven altars, and offered a bullock and a ram on every altar; as he had done before, ℣. 2.

℣. 15. And he ſaid unto Balak, ſtand here by thy burnt-offering, &c.] As he had before directed him, ℣. 3. while I meet the Lord yonder; pointing to ſome place at a little diſtance, where he expected to

[a] ישרים rectorum, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator. [b] אחריתי ſee Prov. xxiv. 20. [c] Τὸ σπέρμα μου, Sept. [f] לי pro me. [g] ברכת ברך benedixiſti benedicendo, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator. [h] So Vatablus. [i] Onomaſtic. Sacr. p. 935.

to meet the Lord, and have ſome inſtructions from him; which he ſeemed confident of, having met with him once already.

℣. 16. And the Lord met Balaam, and put a word in his mouth, &c.] As he did before, ℣. 5. and ſaid, go again unto Balak, and ſay thus; the words which are expreſſed in ℣. 18—24.

℣. 17. And when he came to him, behold, he ſtood by his burnt-offering, &c.] As before, ℣. 6. and the princes of Moab with him; Jarchi obſerves, that before it is ſaid, all the princes of Moab, but not ſo here; for when they ſaw there was no hope of ſucceeding, ſome of them went away, and only ſome were left: and Balak ſaid unto him, what hath the Lord ſpoken? being in haſte to know what it was, whether agreeable or not.

℣. 18. And he took up his parable, &c.] Pronounced the word put into his mouth, and ſaid, riſe up Balak, and hear; not from his ſeat, as Eglon a ſucceſſor of his did, Judg. iii. 20. for he was now ſtanding by his burnt-offering; but the ſenſe is, that he would raiſe his attention, and ſtir up himſelf with all diligence to hear what he was about to ſay: hearken unto me, thou ſon of Zippor; or to his word, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, which follow.

℣. 19. God is not a man that he ſhould lie, &c.] Man is a creature conſiſting of a body of fleſh and blood, and of a ſoul, a created and finite ſpirit; but God, though he has the parts of an human body aſcribed to him in a figurative ſenſe, yet is not to be conceived of in a corporal manner; and though he is a Spirit, yet increated, immenſe, and infinite; and much leſs is as a ſinful man, who goes aſtray from the womb ſpeaking lies; no, let God be true, and every man a liar: he is God that cannot lie; his counſels of old are faithfulneſs and truth; his promiſes yea and Amen in Chriſt; the ſcriptures inſpired by him are true, and the prophecies of them are punctually accompliſhed, particularly what he foretold of the people of Iſrael, and promiſed unto them; that they ſhould be happy, and inherit the land of Canaan; that he would be true and faithful to them, and there could be no hope, by any means whatever, to make him falſe and unfaithful to his word: neither the ſon of man that he ſhould repent; repentance is found in men, who repent for what they have done, or change their minds, as to what they intended to do or ſet about; perceiving it to be wrong to do it, or that they are not able to do it, ſome unforeſeen thing turning up they were not aware of: but nothing of this kind belongs to God, or can befal him; he never changes his mind, alters his counſels, purpoſes, and decrees, and never varies in his affections to his people, nor makes void his choice of them, or covenant with them; and his calling of them by his grace, and his gifts of grace beſtowed upon them are without repentance: and particularly with reſpect to the people of Iſrael, there was no reaſon to hope or believe that God would change his purpoſes or promiſes reſpecting their outward happineſs, and enjoyment of the land of Canaan; or that ever he would be prevailed upon to curſe them, or admit them to be curſed, when he was determined, and had ſo peremptorily promiſed that he would bleſs them: hath he ſaid, and ſhall he not do it? or hath he ſpoken, and ſhall he not make it good? whether it be with regard to things temporal, ſpiritual, or eternal; for there is no variableneſs nor ſhadow of turning in his mind; he never forgets his word, he foreſees all events, he is able to perform; and is true and faithful; and therefore whatever is gone out of his lips will never be altered, but will be moſt certainly fulfilled, Pſ. lxxxix. 34. Iſ. xiv. 24, 27.

℣. 20. Behold, I have received commandment to bleſs, &c.] The people of Iſrael, to pronounce a bleſſing upon them, to declare them a happy people: and he hath bleſſed, and I cannot reverſe it; God has bleſſed them, has determined to bleſs them, has promiſed to bleſs them, has bleſſed them in the victories he has given them, and will compleat the bleſſing of them, by bringing them into the land he has given them: ſo the bleſſings which God has deſigned for his ſpiritual Iſrael, and beſtows upon them are irreverſible; they are bleſſings indeed, ſpiritual ones, and are for ever; he bleſſes them with himſelf, as their covenant-God, their portion here and hereafter, with Chriſt his ſon, and all things with him, with righteouſneſs, peace, and pardon, with his Spirit and the grace thereof, with ſonſhip, heirſhip, and eternal life.

℣. 21. He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he ſeen perverſeneſs in Iſrael, &c.] Not that there was no ſin in them, nor any obſerved by the Lord; yet not ſo as to mark it in ſtrict juſtice, and puniſh for it; but he forgave it, hid his face from it, and did not impute it to them; all the three Targums reſtrain it to idolatry, that there were none among them that worſhipped idols, which was the reaſon why the Lord could not be prevailed upon to curſe them: and Aben Ezra obſerves, that from hence Balak learnt to ſend women to the Iſraelites, to entice them to lewdneſs, and ſo to idolatry, that he might be able to carry his point: this is true of the ſpiritual Iſrael of God; for though there is ſin in them, and which is continually done by them, yet their ſins are removed from them, and have been laid on Chriſt, and he has bore them, and made reconciliation for them, and made an end of them, and has redeemed and ſaved them from them; and God, by imputing his righteouſneſs to them, has juſtified them from all their ſins, has forgiven all their iniquities, and blotted out all their tranſgreſſions, and has caſt them behind his back, and into the depths of the ſea, and has removed them as far from them as the eaſt is from the weſt: and when God is ſaid not to ſee or behold iniquity in his people, it is to be underſtood, not of his eye of Omniſcience, with which he ſees not only the ſins of all men, but thoſe of his own people alſo, and takes notice of them in a providential way, and chaſtizes them for them; but of his eye of avenging juſtice, and purely regards the article of juſtification, which is a full diſcharge from all ſin, and a perfect covering of it from the juſtice of God, ſee Jer. l. 20. the Lord his God is with him; and which is his protection and defence, and in vain it is for any to be againſt him, or ſeek to hurt him; nothing is a greater happineſs, or can be a greater ſafety, than to have the preſence of God; it is this makes ordinances pleaſant and delightful; by this ſaints are aſſiſted in duty, and ſupported under trials; it is an inſtance of diſtinguiſhing and amazing goodneſs, and is what will make heaven be the happy place and ſtate it is: all the three Targums interpret it, of the Word of the Lord that is with them, and for their help; who is the angel of God's preſence, Immanuel, God with us; and who has promiſed to be with his churches and miniſters to the end of the world, and will be with them through life, at death, and to all eternity: and the ſhout of a king a king is among them; of God their king, the Shekinah of their king, as the Targum of Onkelos; his glorious majesty, to whom they make their joyful acclamations, upon his appearing among them, and on the account of the victories he gives them over their enemies; or of the king Messiah, as the Targum of Jonathan, the king of kings, the lord of lords; and so in an ancient writing of the Jews [k], this passage is referred to the days of the Messiah: and this shout may respect the joyful sound of the gospel, one part of which is, that Zion's king reigns, and which proclaims him to be king, and speaks of the things concerning his kingdom, both the kingdom of grace, and the kingdom of glory; some respect may be had to the sounding of the silver trumpets by the priests on various occasions in Israel; see ch. 10.

℣. 22. God brought them out of Egypt, &c.] With a mighty hand and stretched-out arm, and he will conduct them through the wilderness, and bring them safe to Canaan's land; he that brought them from thence will not suffer them to perish by any means; it is in vain to attempt to curse a people that is in such hands, and for whom he has done such great things: Jarchi thinks this stands opposed to what Balak had said, ch. xxii. 5. thou sayest, lo, a people is come out of Egypt; "they did "not come out of themselves, but God brought "them:" he hath as it were the strength of an unicorn; that is, not God, but the people he brought out of Egypt, being a mighty people, able to push their enemies and subdue them, being numerous and strong, especially as strengthened by the mighty God of Jacob; and therefore their strength is expressed by the strength of this creature; for be it what it will, whether the Rhinoceros or the wild ox, or one kind of goats, as Bochart [l] thinks; whatever is meant by the Reem here, must be a strong creature, see Deut. xxxiii. 17. Job xxxix. 11. and great is the strength of the spiritual Israel of God, which they have from him to exercise grace, perform duty, withstand and overcome all their spiritual enemies, sin, satan, and the world.

℣. 23. Surely there is no inchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel, &c.] Balaam here owns, that all his inchantments and divinations signified nothing, and would never prevail to bring a curse upon Israel; it was a vain thing for him to use them, and as vain for Balak to expect any thing from them; neither he nor any other inchanter and soothsayer, using all the arts they are masters of, could ever do any hurt to such a people, who were the peculiar care of God, and were his church, against which the gates of hell could not prevail: or in Jacob and in Israel [m]; and this is the sense of all the Targums, that there are no inchantments nor inchanters, no divinations nor diviners in Israel; these were not agreeable to them, nor suffered among them, and therefore they were acceptable and well-pleasing in the sight of God; and indeed this sense agrees both with the literal version of the words, and is the sense Jarchi gives of them; that these people were fit for the blessing, because there were no inchanters and diviners among them; though he mentions another, and that is, that Israel had no need of inchanters and diviners, and of their inchantments and divinations, because they had the prophets to inform them, and the Urim and Thummim to declare things unto them: according to this time it shall be said of Jacob, and of Israel, what hath God wrought? as with respect to this time as well as to time past, and with respect to time to come, even with respect to all times; it shall be said with wonder and amazement, what great things has God done for this people? as bringing them out of the land of Egypt, leading them through the Red-sea, feeding and supplying them in the wilderness, protecting them from their enemies there, expelling the inhabitants of the land of Canaan, and setting them there in their stead; and wonderful things has God done for his spiritual Israel, in the redemption of them by Christ, in the beginning and carrying on the work of grace upon their hearts, by his Spirit; and at last he will bring them all to the heavenly Canaan of rest and happiness, and where this will be matter of admiration with them to all eternity, what has God done for us?

℣. 24. Behold, the people shall rise up as a great lion, &c.] Or rather, as the lioness [n], which, as Ælianus says [o], is the strongest and most warlike beast, the most fierce and furious, as is believed both by Greeks and Barbarians; and he mentions the heroism of Perdiccas the Macedonian, and Semiramis the Assyrian, in engaging with and killing, not the lion or leopard, but the lioness: and shall lift up himself as a young lion; both phrases denoting the courage and strength of the people of Israel, in attacking their enemies and engaging with them: he shall not lie down; being once roused up and engaged in war: until he eat of the prey, and drink the blood of the slain; as the lion does when it has seized on a creature, tears it to pieces, eats its flesh and drinks its blood: this may refer to the slaughter of the Midianites that would be quickly made, and among the slain of whom Balaam himself was, ch. xxxi. 7, 8. and to the slaughter and conquest of the Canaanites under Joshua, and taking their spoils.

℣. 25. And Balak said unto Balaam, neither curse them at all, nor bless them at all.] Signifying that it would be as well or better to do nothing at all, than to do what he did; but the sense is not, that he would not have him curse them, that he could never say, since he had pressed it both before and after this; wherefore the words should be rendered as they are by some [p], if in cursing thou dost not curse, or will not curse, neitherin blessing bless, or however do not bless: if he could not or would not curse Israel, he would not have him bless them on any account; if he could do him and his people no good in ridding them of their enemies, yet he desires him by no means to do them any harm by discouraging them and encouraging Israel.

℣. 26. But Balaam answered and said unto Balak, told not I thee, &c.] He appeals to him for his honesty and faithfulness, for honest and faithful he would be thought to be, both to God and man; that when he first met him, he plainly told him what he must expect from him: saying, all that the Lord speaketh, that I must do; which was very true, he was obliged to do as he had bid him, and speak what he had said unto him, though it was sore against his will; he would fain both have spoken

[k] Pesikta in Ketoreth Hassamim in Num. fol. 25. 4.
[l] Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 3. c. 27. col. 965.
[m] ביעקב בישראל in Jahacob, in Israel, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.
[n] כלביא ut leæna, V. L. Tigurine version.
[o] Var. Hist. l. 12. c. 39. Vid. Herodot. Thalia, sive, l. 3. c. 108.
[p] So Fagius, Vatablus; with which agree the Arabic version, and Noldius, p. 221. No. 1034.

ſpoken and done otherwiſe, if he might have been permitted.

℣. 27. And Balak ſaid unto Balaam, come, I pray thee, &c.] Come along with me: I will bring thee unto another place; if not better for the view of the people, yet a more religious place, on which account the king hoped for ſucceſs: peradventure it will pleaſe God, that thou mayeſt curſe me them from thence; it may be God will give thee leave to curſe the people from that place, being devoted to ſacred ſervice: this is the firſt time that Balak makes mention of the name of God; and he now ſeems to be ſatisfied that it was not Balaam's fault that he did not curſe Iſrael, but that he was hindered by God, who would not ſuffer him to do it.

℣. 28. And Balak brought Balaam to the top of Peor, &c.] The name of an high mountain in Moab, ſo called from a gap or opening in it; here the idol Baal was worſhipped, and from hence had the name of Baal Peor, ch. xxv. 3. and here very probably, was a temple built to the honour of him, called Beth Peor, the houſe or temple of Baal Peor, Deut. xxxiv. 6. that looketh towards Jeſhimon; as Piſgah alſo did, and very likely it was not far from it, ſince from thence they came hither, ℣. 14. ſee ch. xxi. 20. Jeſhimon is the ſame with Beth Jeſimoth, and ſo the Targum of Jonathan here calls it, a part of the plains of Moab, where Iſrael lay encamped, ch. xxxiii. 49. ſo that from hence Balaam could have a full view of them.

℣. 29. And Balaam ſaid unto Balak, &c.] Being willing to try again what could be done, and to gratify the king, and eſpecially to get the wages of unrighteouſneſs, if poſſible, which he dearly loved, as the apoſtle ſays, 2 Pet. ii. 15. build me here ſeven altars, and prepare me here ſeven bullocks, and ſeven rams; which had been done in two places before, ℣. 1, 14. the ſame ſort of creatures, and the ſame number here as there, and theſe only clean creatures, ſuch as were uſed in ſacrifice by the true worſhippers of God, and which, no doubt, Balaam had knowledge of, and therefore judged that thoſe would be moſt acceptable to the Lord.

℣. 30. And Balak did as Balaam had ſaid, &c.] Though the ſacrifices were expenſive, he did not grudge them; he ſpared no coſt to gain his point, though he now could have but little hope of it: and offered a bullock and a ram on every altar; as he had done before, ℣. 2, 14.

CHAP. XXIV.

IN this chapter we are told, that Balaam leaving his inchantments, the Spirit of God came on him, and he ſpake of the happineſs of Iſrael, and propheſied of their future greatneſs and glory, ℣. 1—9. which ſo exaſperated Balak, that he ordered him at once to depart from him, ℣. 10, 11. Balaam juſtified himſelf in what he ſaid and did, and ſuggeſted that before they parted, he had ſomething to ſay in a prophetic manner, concerning what Iſrael ſhould do to Moab in future times, ℣. 12, 13, 14. and then propheſies concerning the Meſſiah, and the deſtruction of Moab, and of ſome neighbouring nations, and even of ſome at a greater diſtance, as the Aſſyrians and Romans, ℣. 15—25.

℣. 1. And when Balaam ſaw that it pleaſed the Lord to bleſs Iſrael, &c.] That it was good in his ſight, what he approved of, and was well pleaſing to him, and that it was his determined mind that Iſrael ſhould be bleſſed, and not curſed, from which there was no turning him, by offering ſacrifices to him, and much leſs by his ſorceries and divinations: he went not as at other times; or, as at a time in a time [q], at two times, of which, ſee ch. xxiii. 3, 15. he abode in the place where the ſacrifices were offered, and did not depart to another at ſome diſtance, as he had twice before done: to ſeek for inchantments; which it ſeems he uſed before, for he not only offered ſacrifices to the true God, which yet were attended with ſuperſtitious rites, but he made uſe of his divining art alſo; and not only went to meet with God, and hear what he would ſay to him, but conſulted the devil alſo, being willing to have two ſtrings to his bow, and that, if poſſible, he might carry his point, and get what his covetous and ambitious mind was deſirous of: the words may be literally rendered, to meet inchantments [r]; but what ſhould be meant by the phraſe is not eaſy to ſay; I ſhould rather chooſe to render them, to meet ſerpents, and make uſe of them in his divinations, make obſervations on them, and predictions from them: one ſort of divination is called Ophiomancy, or divining by ſerpents; ſo Calchas, on ſeeing a ſerpent devour eight ſparrows with their dam, foretold the duration of the ſiege of Troy [s]: but he ſet his face towards the wilderneſs; where the people of Iſrael lay incamped, not with an intention to bleſs them, though he ſaw it pleaſed the Lord, but to take an opportunity, if he could, without his leave, to curſe them; and therefore he did not go out as he did before, to know his will, but ſtood by the ſacrifice, with his face to the wilderneſs, where the people were, to take any advantage that offered.

℣. 2. And Balaam lift up his eyes, &c.] Being on mount Peor: and he ſaw Iſrael abiding in his tents, according to their tribes; in that exact order in which they were directed to encamp under four ſtandards, and ſo many tribes under each ſtandard, ch. ii. and the ſpirit of God came upon him; not in his grace but in his gifts; not as a ſpirit of ſanctification, but as a ſpirit of prophecy, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan paraphraſe it; and ſo ſometimes the Spirit of God in this ſenſe has come upon wicked men, as on Caiaphas and others, John xi. 51. Matt. vii. 22, 23.

℣. 3. And he took up his parable, &c.] His parable of prophecy, as the Targums, his prophetic ſpeech, which with a loud voice, he expreſſed in the hearing of Balak and his nobles, and ſaid, Balaam the ſon of Beor hath ſaid; the preface to his prophecy is pompous, and ſeems to be full of pride and vanity, and ſo the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem repreſent him; "the man who is "more excellent than his father hath ſaid, to whom "hidden ſecrets, even what was hidden from the "prophets is revealed to him;" and the Jews have a ſaying [t], that he that has an evil eye, a haughty haughty ſpirit, and a large ſoul, or is covetous, is one of the diſciples of Balaam the wicked: and the man whoſe eyes are open, hath ſaid; or as ſome [u] render it, whoſe eyes were ſhut, but now open; either the eyes of his body, which were ſhut when the angel met him, and the aſs ſaw him and not he, but afterwards were open, and he ſaw him alſo; or the eyes of his underſtanding blinded with ambition and covetouſneſs, but were open to ſee his miſtake, at leaſt ſo far as to be ſenſible that he could never prevail upon God to allow him to curſe Iſrael; or rather open by the ſpirit of prophecy coming on him, whereby he ſaw and foretold things to come.

[q] כפעם בפעם ſicut vice in vice, Montanus, Vatablus, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus.

[r] לקראת נחשים in occurſum auguriorum, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus. [s] Homer. Iliad. 2. ſee more inſtances in Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 1. c. 3. col. 21, 22.

[t] Pirke Abot, c. 5. §. 19.

℣. 4. He hath ſaid, which heard the words of God, &c.] God ſpeaking to him, which he did ſeveral times, and with which he was greatly elated, ſee ch. xxii. 9, 20. and xxiii. 4, 5, 16: which ſaw the viſion of the almighty; not that he had a ſight of any ſimilitude of God, though the angel that appeared to him, which was Chriſt the increated angel, might appear in an human form, for ſome viſible form was ſeen both by the aſs and him; but rather this reſpects the viſions of God to him in the night; it may be in a dream, as has been already obſerved, and which the following words ſeem to confirm: falling into a trance, but having his eyes open; or falling into a deep ſleep, and yet the eyes of his body open, which ſometimes is the caſe with perſons aſleep; or the eyes of his mind open, to receive the inſtructions given him in a dream or viſion of the night; unleſs this is to be underſtood of his falling on his face, when he had his viſion, as ſometimes the prophets did, ſee Ezek. i. 28. Deut. viii. 17. Rev. i. 17. ſo the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem paraphraſe it; and the latter ſays, he propheſied of himſelf, that he ſhould fall by the ſword; which is better than to interpret it of his falling when his aſs lay down with him, as ſome do: ſo men may have a great deal of light and knowledge in their heads, and yet not have true grace in their hearts; great gifts, which puff up with pride and vanity, but not ſanctifying grace, which is of an humbling nature, 1 Cor. viii. 1, 2. and xiii. 1, 2, 3. what he ſaid under a ſpirit of prophecy, follows.

℣. 5. How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, &c.] Not that the matter of which they were made was ſo rich, or their ſtructure ſo admirable, but the order in which they were placed was ſo beautiful and agreeable: and thy tabernacles, O Iſrael; which is the ſame thing in other words, and which may be applied figuratively to the church of God, which often goes by the names of Jacob and Iſrael; and agrees with particular congregations and aſſemblies of ſaints, where they dwell as in tents in a moveble ſtate, like pilgrims and ſojourners; and which are the dwelling-places of Father, Son and Spirit, and of the people of God with one another; and are goodly, pleaſant and delightful, becauſe of the preſence of God with them, and on account of the proviſions there made for them, and the company they there enjoy; ſee Pſ. lxxxiv. 1, 4, 10.

℣. 6. As the valleys are they ſpread forth, &c.] Long and broad, lying between ſeveral mountains, and reaching from hill to hill; ſo the armies of Iſrael lay encamped in the plains and villages of Moab, making a very conſiderable length and breadth; the camp of Iſrael is ſaid to be 12 miles long, and 12 miles broad; ſo the Targum on ch. ii. 3. and this may denote the lowneſs of the ſaints and people of God in their own eyes, and their largeneſs in themſelves; and eſpecially when the place of their tents ſhall be enlarged, and the curtains of their habitations be ſtretched forth in the latter day; and alſo their fruitfulneſs, meads and vallies abounding with herbs and flowers, as the churches of God do with the fruits of the Spirit, grace and righteouſneſs, and with plants of the Lord's right-hand planting. Some render it as brooks and torrents of water, ſo the Targum of Jonathan; which diffuſe and ſpread themſelves; and on the banks of which ſtand beautiful trees in goodly order: as gardens by the river's ſide; laid out in a delightful manner, full of flowers, plants and trees, and well watered; like to theſe in ſeveral ſpots, were the people of Iſrael formed into divers camps; and to theſe may the churches of God be compared, who are diſtinguiſhed and incloſed by ſovereign grace, full of trees of righteouſneſs of the Lord's planting, watered by the river of divine love, and from Chriſt the fountain of gardens; ſee Cant. iv. 12—15. Pſ. i. 3: as the trees of lign-aloes, which the Lord hath planted; which are not planted and raiſed by the art and induſtry of man, but grow up without culture, as the mere produce of nature, under a divine providence; theſe are called lign, wood or tree-aloes, to diſtinguiſh them from another ſort of aloes, which are no other than plants; but theſe are what the Indians calls Calamba or Calembac, and phyſicians Xyloaloes and Agallochium, and are of a very aromatic and fragrant ſcent. This tree is ſaid to be about 8 or 10 feet high, at the head of it is a large bunch of leaves, which are thick and indented, broad at bottom, but growing narrower towards the point, and about four feet in length; the bloſſom of it is red, intermixed with yellow, and double like a pink; from this bloſſom comes fruit, round like a large pea, white and red; the juice of theſe leaves is drawn out by cuting them with a knife, and received into bottles; the ſmell of the wood is exquiſite [w]. P. Martyr [x] ſpeaks of a trunk of lign-aloes, which being cut, a ſweet ſavour proceeds from it. It may be obſerved what Iſidore [y] remarks, that it grows in Arabia, as well as in India, and ſo might be well known to Balaam. And to theſe the Iſrael of God may be compared for their fragrancy, being clothed with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, all whoſe garments ſmell of or like theſe aloes, Pſ. xlv. 8. and having the graces of the Spirit of God in them, the ſmell of which is preferable to all ſpices, and they themſelves are ſignified by the ſame, Cant. iv. 10, 14: and as cedar-trees beſide the waters; which are tall and high, large and ſpreading, durable and laſting, to which the righteous are compared, Pſ. xcii. 12. ſee the note there.

℣. 7. He ſhall pour the water out of his buckets, &c.] That is, God ſhall plentifully ſend down rain out of the clouds upon theſe vallies, gardens, and trees, and make them fruitful; and this may be a figure of the grace of God, with which his churches are watered, and become fruitful by means of the word and ordinances, which is conveyed through them out of the fulneſs which is in Chriſt: and his ſeed ſhall be in many waters; the ſeed and offspring of Iſrael ſhall be in a place of many waters, in a land of brooks and waters, ſhall dwell in a well-watered land, the land of Canaan, Deut. vii. 1

[u] So V. L. Montanus, Tigurine verſion, &c.

[w] See Calmet's Dictionary, and the Supplement to Chambers's Dictionary in the word Aloes.

[x] Decad. 1. l. 2.

[y] Origen. l. 17. c. 8.

viii. 7. or ſhall be like ſeed ſown near waters, or in well-watered places, which ſprings up and brings forth much fruit, ſee Iſ. xxxii. 20. or ſhall become, or be over many waters, to which people, kingdoms and nations are ſometimes compared; and ſo may denote the multitude of Iſrael, and the large extent of their dominions, ſee Rev. xvii. 1, 15: and his king ſhall be higher than Agag; who might be the then preſent king of Amalek, reckoned one of the greateſt kings on earth; and this name, ſome think, was common to all the kings of Amalek, as Pharaoh to the kings of Egypt; and according to Jarchi and Aben Ezra, this is a prophecy of the firſt king of Iſrael, Saul, and of his conquering Agag king of Amalek, for there was one of this name in his time, 1 Sam. xv. 7, 8: and his kingdom ſhall be exalted; that is, the kingdom of the people of Iſrael, as it was more eſpecially in the days of David and Solomon; and will be abundantly more in the days of the Meſſiah, when his kingdom ſhall be from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth, and the kingdoms of this world ſhall become his, and he ſhall reign over all the earth; and ſo the Jeruſalem Targum, "and the kingdom of the king Meſſiah "ſhall become very great;" and ſo other Jewiſh writers [z] refer this prophecy to the days of the Meſſiah.

℣. 8. God brought him forth out of Egypt, he hath as it were the ſtrength of an unicorn, &c.] Here he repeats what he had ſaid in a former prophecy, ch. xxiii. 22. ſee the note there: he ſhall eat up the nations his enemies; the ſeven nations of Canaan, which ſhould be ſubdued by Iſrael, and that with as much eaſe as a lion devours its prey; nor would the Canaanites be able to make any more reſiſtance to them, than a creature in the paws of a lion; and the phraſe denotes the utter deſtruction of them: and ſhall break their bones; as the lion breaks the bones of ſuch creatures that fall a prey to him; ſignifying that all their ſtrength ſhould be taken from them, their mighty men ſlain, and their fortified cities taken: and pierce them through with his arrows; ſlay them utterly.

℣. 9. He couched, &c.] Which may reſpect the poſture of the armies of Iſrael in the plains of Moab: he lay down as a lion, and as a great lion; as he would do, and did in the land of Canaan, when conquered by Iſrael; they took up their reſidence on it quietly, and dwelt in it ſecurely, and in no more fear of their enemies than a lion, which lays itſelf down and ſleeps without concern any where: who ſhall ſtir him up? who dare do it? as it would be a very raſh, bold, daring and dangerous thing to rouſe up a lion lying down; ſo it is ſuggeſted it would be alike to provoke Iſrael to war at ſome certain times, in the days of David more eſpecially: bleſſed is he that bleſſeth thee, and curſed is he that curſeth thee; which are the very words in which Iſaac bleſſed Jacob, the anceſtor of theſe people, Gen. xxvii. 29. and which bleſſing is confirmed by Balaam againſt his will, and whereby he curſed himſelf inſtead of Iſrael; for though he could not curſe him with words, he had curſed him in his heart, and would have done it verbally if he could [a].

℣. 10. And Balak's anger was kindled againſt Balaam, &c.] He had bore much and long, but he could bear no longer, he was quite impatient, his laſt words more eſpecially muſt exceedingly nettle him: and he ſmote his hands together; as expreſſive of his indignation, vexation and diſappointment: and Balak ſaid unto Balaam, I called thee to curſe my enemies; he had ſent princes to him, one ſett of them after another, to invite him into his country, and to his court, with great promiſes of reward to curſe Iſrael, whom he reckoned his enemies, and not to bleſs them: and behold, thou haſt altogether bleſſed them theſe three times; done nothing elſe but bleſs them with bleſſing upon bleſſing, time after time; even every one of the three times he opened his mouth, as Balak expected, to have curſed them.

℣. 11. Therefore now flee thou to thy place, &c.] His own country, from whence Balak had ſent for him, and he came; be gone directly, make all haſte away; he ſpeaks as one ſo provoked, that he could not bear him in his preſence, and as threatening him if he did not at once get out of his ſight: I thought to promote thee unto great honour; to beſtow much wealth and riches upon him, and to prefer him in his court to high offices of honour and dignity; he had promiſed that he would, and he thought as he ſaid, he was determined upon it, had he performed as he expected: but lo, the Lord hath kept thee back from honour; the Lord thou haſt ſo much talked of, and at whoſe beck and command thou haſt been, and by whom thou haſt been checked and controuled, he has hindered thee from riches and honour; ſee what thou haſt got, or rather loſt, by hearkening to him, and how he will pay thee for it.

℣. 12. And Balaam ſaid unto Balak, &c.] In order to mitigate his wrath, and bring him into a better temper: ſpake I not alſo to thy meſſengers which thou ſenteſt unto me; thoſe that came to him a ſecond time; for to the firſt he ſaid nothing of what is after related, but to the laſt he did much the ſame as he had afterwards ſaid to Balak himſelf: ſaying, ℣. 13. If Balak would give me his houſe full of ſilver and gold, &c.] Which are the very words he ſaid to the princes of Moab, ch. xxii. 18. I cannot go beyond the commandment of the Lord, to do either good or bad; for though here it is the commandment, and there the word of the Lord, yet it is the ſame word in both places in the original text: indeed here he omits the relation to the Lord he there claims, ſaying my God; and inſtead of little or great, here it is good or bad, but the ſenſe is the ſame: and he adds for explanation-ſake, of mine own mind; or out of my heart, which was diſpoſed well enough to ſerve Balak, but was laid under a reſtraint by the Lord: but what the Lord ſaid, that will I ſpeak; and he had not only ſaid this to the meſſengers, but to the king himſelf, and therefore he thought, that as he had openly and honeſtly told him this at firſt, he had no reaſon to be ſo angry with him; ſee ch. xxii. 38.

℣. 14. And now behold, I go unto my people, &c.] According to thine order, I ſhall not ſtay to make thee uneaſy with my company, only I crave thy patience to hear me a little before we part: come therefore, and I will advertize thee; about ſome things that ſhall come to paſs in future time, reſpecting this people, and thine, and other nations, both near and remote; and he hoped by this to bring him into a better temper, and part good friends: or I will counſel thee; what thou ſhalt do, as the Targum of Onkelos, and ſo makes a ſentence of [z] Peſikta in Ketoreth Haſſamim, fol. 27. 2. Vid. Philo. de Præmiis, p. 925. Sept. verſ. & Targum Jon. in loc.

[a] Qui, quia non licuit, non facit, ille facit. Ovid.

of this of itſelf, independent of, and diſtinct from what follows, beginning the next clauſe thus, and I will ſhew them what this people, &c. referring the former to the counſel Balaam gave to Balak, how to ſeduce the people into idolatry; and the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it at large; "come, I'll counſel thee, go and prepare victualing-houſes, and place lewd women there to ſell food and drink at a low price, and bring this people to eat, and drink, and be drunken; and let them lie with them, and deny their God, and they'll be delivered into thine hands in a little time, and many of them will fall;" which advice was followed, ch. xxv. 1, 2. and is referred to, ch. xxxi. 16. and Rev. ii. 14. but tho' Balaam did give him ſuch advice before he left him, which is highly probable, yet it is not what is intended here, ſince what follows is cloſely connected with the above clauſe, and contains the thing he advertized or adviſed him of: what this people ſhall do to thy people in the latter days; not what the Moabites ſhould do to the Iſraelites now, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, quite contrary to the original text, but what the Iſraelites ſhould do to the Moabites in future times; not only in the times of David, by whom they were ſubdued, 2 Sam. viii. but in much later times, even in the times of Alexander, or king Jannæus, who overcame them, as Joſephus [b] relates. Now this might be ſaid to Balak to make him eaſy, that it would not be until the latter days, many hundreds of years hence, ere the people of Iſrael would fight with Moab, and ſubdue it; and therefore he need be under no concern about them, ſince he would meet with no trouble from them in his time, nor his people for years to come.

℣. 15. And he took up his parable, and ſaid, &c.] In this and the following verſe; the ſame preface, in the ſame words, is made to his prophecy as before, ℣. 3, 4. ſee the notes there; only one clauſe is added, and knew the knowledge of the moſt high; that Balaam had ſome knowledge of God is certain from the names by which he calls him, being ſuch that he made himſelf known by to the patriarchs, and by which he is frequently called in the ſacred writings; but then this knowledge of his was merely notional and ſpeculative, and not ſpiritual and ſupernatural, and was ſuch as men may have, who are deſtitute of the grace of God: he was one that profeſſed to know him in words, but in works denied him, ſee 1 Cor. xiii. 2. Tit. i. 16. and he alſo was admitted to much nearneſs to God, and converſe with him, of which he boaſted; but then this was not for his own ſake, or as a mark of friendſhip to him, but for the ſake of the people of Iſrael, and to prevent his doing them miſchief. His prophecy follows,

℣. 17. I ſhall ſee him, but not now, &c.] Meaning not Iſrael, for he now ſaw him encamped, and at no great diſtance; but one that ſhould deſcend from him, a famous and excellent perſon, and who is no other than the Meſſiah, as appears by what follows; him he ſhould ſee, not ſpiritually with an eye of faith, nor corporally with his bodily eyes in his ſtate of incarnation, but at the day of judgment; and now indeed he ſaw him by a ſpirit of prophecy: I ſhall behold him, but not nigh; ſignifying, that the coming of this illuſtrious perſon, who ſhould ſmite the borders of Moab, was not near, and therefore Balak had no reaſon to indulge any preſent fears; and that when he was come either into the world to ſave men, or to judgment; Balaam would have no nearneſs to him, nor intereſt in him; he would ſee him at the laſt day, but not for himſelf, as Job ſays he ſhould; ch. xix. 25, 26, 27. there ſhall come a ſtar out of Jacob, and a ſceptre ſhall riſe out of Iſrael; which Aben Ezra interprets of David, though he ſays many interpret it of the Meſſiah; and there are ſome writers, both Jewiſh and Chriſtian, that underſtand it partly of David, and partly of Chriſt; and chiefly of him, and of David as a type of him; the fulfilment of which was only in part in David, but principally and compleatly in Chriſt. Maimonides [c] parts the prophecy between them: the whole undoubtedly agrees with Chriſt, and belongs unto him: the ſtar and ſceptre may be conſidered as names and titles of the Meſſiah; he is called the morning-ſtar, Rev. xxii. 16. for his glory, brightneſs and ſplendor, and for the light that comes by him, and the influence of his grace, and the bleſſings of it on the ſons of men; and hence a falſe Meſſiah took the name of Bar Cochab, the ſon of a ſtar, to anſwer to this prophecy; and he may be called a ſceptre, that is, a ſceptre-bearer, becauſe of his royalty; he not only has the name of a king, but has a kingdom, both of nature, providence and grace, and rules with a ſceptre of grace, mercy and righteouſneſs; and as he was to ſpring from Jacob or Iſrael, ſo he did, being a ſon of Abraham, a deſcendant of Jacob, of the tribe of Judah, and family of David, Matt. i. 1. Rom. i. 4. and ix. 4, 5. but I rather think, that the ſtar is to be conſidered as a ſign and circumſtance of his coming, and that the words may be rendered, when a ſtar ſteers its courſe from Jacob, or unto Jacob, then a ſceptre, or ſceptre-bearer, ſhall riſe out of Iſrael, or riſe up unto Iſrael; for the particle ל ſometimes ſignifies unto [d]; and that the appearance of a ſtar in Iſrael was a ſign of the Meſſiah's coming, is certain from Matt. ii. 1, 2. of which the Magi were informed by Zoroaſtres [e] their founder, who being of Jewiſh extract, had got it from this prophecy of Balaam; and it is as evident, that the Jews expected the appearance of an extraordinary ſtar at the time of the Meſſiah's coming; for ſo they ſay more than once in an ancient book of theirs [f], that "when the Meſſiah ſhall be revealed, a bright "and ſhining ſtar ſhall ariſe in the eaſt;" which expectation muſt be founded on this prophecy: and ſhall ſmite the corners of Moab; not only the corners of their houſes and cities, but the extreme parts and borders of the land, even all the ſides, and the whole of it; or the princes and great men of the land, ſometimes called corners, ſee Zech. x. 4. and ſo the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, "and ſhall kill the princes of Moab;" or the mighty ones of Moab, as the Jeruſalem Targum; this was literally fulfilled in David, 2 Sam. viii. 2. Pſ. lx. and figuratively and myſtically in Chriſt, by ſubduing his enemies, ſignifyed by Moabites, as being the enemies of Iſrael; either by reducing them through the power of his grace to obedience to him, or by ſmiting and breaking them in pieces with a rod of iron; and which will be more plainly and

[b] Antiq. l. 13. c. 13. § 5. Ebr. part. p. 545. Num. fol. 85. 4. & 86. 1.

[c] Hilchot Melachim, c. 11. §. 1.

[d] Vid. Nold. Concord.

[e] Abulpharag. Hiſt. Dynaſt. p. 54.

[f] Zohar in Exod. fol. 3, 3, 4. & in and fully accompliſhed, when he ſhall deſtroy thoſe Moabites, the antichriſtian nations, Rev. xix. 15—21. and deſtroy all the children of Sheth; ſome take Sheth to be the name of ſome famous king among the Moabites, as Grotius; others, the name of ſome city of Moab, which David utterly deſtroyed, as R. Nathan [g]; others ſuppoſe ſome particular nations are meant, as either the Edomites, ſo called becauſe they put confidence in their foundations, and fortified places, ſo Vitringa [h]; or the Egyptians, from Seth or Sethos, one of their kings, who was known by the name Egyptus, as a late learned writer [i] of ours conjectures; but rather by the children of Seth are meant all nations, as Jarchi obſerves, for all come from Seth, the ſon of the firſt man; and ſo the words may be rendered, as they are by Onkelos, "he ſhall rule over all the "children of men;" which will be fulfilled in Chriſt, when he ſhall have put down all rule and authority, and all will be ſubject to him, and his kingdom be from ſea to ſea, and his dominion from the river to the ends of the earth; unleſs rather by the children of Seth are meant the ſpecial people of God, in diſtinction from others, and in alluſion to the diſtinction between the Sethites and Cainites, the one being the people of God, the other not; and ſo it may be interpreted of Chriſt's gathering them to him, by clucking as it were for them, as a hen gathers her chickens; ſo the word is uſed in Jewiſh writings, and of God himſelf; for it is ſaid [k], the holy bleſſed God מקרקר clucks over them, as hens do, which is the ſimile our Lord himſelf uſes, Matt. xxiii. 37. the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan interpret this prophecy of the Meſſiah by name; and ſo do many other Jewiſh writers, both ancient [l] and modern [m].

℣. 18. And Edom ſhall be a poſſeſſion, &c.] Of the children of Iſrael, which was fulfilled in part when the Edomites became the ſervants of David, 2 Sam. viii. 14. and when they were ſmitten and ſpoiled by Judas Maccabæus, 1 Maccab. v. 3. and ſtill more ſo when all the Edomites or the Idumæans were ſubdued by Hyrcanus, and they became one people with the Jews, and conformed to their religious rites; which is not only related by Joſephus [n], but by Strabo [o], an heathen hiſtorian, who ſays, that they joined themſelves to the Jews, and embraced their laws: but in a ſpiritual ſenſe this has had a greater accompliſhment in the calling of the Gentiles, and introducing them into the church of God; ſee Amos ix. 12. compared with Acts xv. 14—17. Seir alſo ſhall be a poſſeſſion for his enemies; which was a mount in the land of Edom where Eſau formerly dwelt, and ſo ſignifies the ſame as before; and alſo that the moſt ſtrong and fortified places of the land ſhould fall into the hands of their enemies; ſee Obad. ℣. 17, 18, 19. and the notes there. Iſrael ſhall do valiantly; in fighting with and conquering the Edomites, or ſhall get much wealth and riches by the ſpoil of them, ſee Pſ. lx. 9, 12. This, and the following verſe, are in ſome ancient writings of the Jews [p] interpreted of the times of the Meſſiah.

℣. 19. Out of Jacob ſhall come he that ſhall have dominion, &c.] Meaning either David, or rather the Meſſiah; and ſo Jarchi interprets this of another ruler out of Jacob, even of the Meſſiah, of whom it is ſaid, he ſhall have dominion from ſea to ſea; Pſ. lxxii. 8. and ſhall deſtroy him that remaineth of the city; of the chief city of Edom, or of any of the cities of it, ſignifying that there ſhould be none left, ſee Obad. ℣. 18. this is alſo applied to the days of the Meſſiah, in the antient writings of the Jews [q].

℣. 20. And when he looked on Amalek, &c.] The country of Amalek, which lay to the ſouth of the land of Canaan, ch. xiii. 29. and which Balaam had a view of from the mountain of Peor, where he now was: and he took up his parable, and ſaid; the parable of his prophecy, as the Targum of Jonathan, and pronounced it aloud: Amalek was the firſt of the nations; not the firſt nation in the world, nor the chief and principal for numbers, riches, or ſtrength, but the firſt that made war with Iſrael, as all the three Targums paraphraſe it, as they did, ſee Exod. xvii. 8. but his latter end ſhall be that he periſh for ever; this was threatened to them by the Lord upon that battle, and is confirmed by this prophecy of Balaam: and after this, orders were given to Iſrael to blot out their remembrance, Deut. xxv. 19. and which, in a good meaſure, though not compleatly, was done in the times of Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 8, 9. and after that they were diſtreſſed by David, 1 Sam. xxvii. 9. and xxx. 17, 18. 2 Sam. viii. 12. and the reſt of them were ſmitten by the ſons of Simeon, in the days of Hezekiah, 1 Chron. iv. 41, 42, 43. after which we hear of them no more: Amalek may be conſidered as a type of Antichriſt, the ſon of perdition, who ſhall go into it, ſhall come to his end, and there ſhall be none to help him; which will be true of all the antichriſtian party, the enemies of Chriſt, who will be deſtroyed by him, and periſh eternally; ſee Dan. xi. 45. Rev. xvii. 8.

℣. 21. And he looked on the Kenites, &c.] Not the family and poſterity of Jethro, as Aben Ezra, Jarchi, and Abendana; for they were not a people by themſelves, but were now encamped with Iſrael, and went with them into the land of Canaan, and were not carried captive with the ten tribes, tho' ſome might that dwelt in Naphtali, Judg. ix. 4, 11, 17. for they after that remained with Judah under the name of Rechabites, Jer. xxxv. 2. and returned with the two tribes, being carried captive with them, 1 Chron. ii. 55. but they were a people, though of the ſame original and family Jethro deſcended from, which dwelt near, and afterwards among the Amalekites, and therefore were ſeen by Balaam, and taken notice of at the ſame time they were; ſee 1 Sam. xv. 6. Abarbinel takes them to be the ſame with thoſe in Gen. xv. 19. and took up his parable; or prophecy concerning them, and delivered it: and ſaid, ſtrong is thy dwelling place, and thou putteſt thy neſt in a rock; they dwelling in craggy rocky places, where they thought themſelves ſecure and out of danger; and this their habitation he calls Ken, a neſt, in alluſion to their name Kenites.

℣. 22. Nevertheleſs the Kenite ſhall be waſted, &c.] Though they were ſo ſtrongly fortified, and cloſely immured and ſurrounded with rocks and mountains, yet they ſhould gradually waſte away, as they were but few in Saul's time, 1 Sam. xv. 6. until Aſſur ſhall carry thee away captive; Tiglath Pileſer, king of Aſſyria, when he carried captive the people of Syria, took theſe with them, 2 Kings xvi. 9. though Jarchi

[g] Apud Lyram in loc. [h] Comment. in Iſ. xxii. 5 p 445. [i] Clayton's Chronology of the Hebrew Bible, &c. [k] T. Bab. Taanit, c. 4. in En Jacob, par. 1. fol. 143. 4. [l] Debarim Rabba, fol. 234. 4. Peſikta in Ketoreth Haſſammim in Num. fol. 27. 3. & 28. 1. [m] Abarbinel, Maſhmiah Jeſhuah, fol. 4. 2, 3. Abendana in loc. R. Iſaac. Chizzuk Emmunah, p. 71, 72. [n] Antiq. l. 13. c. 9. §. 1. [o] Geograph. l. 16. p. 523. [p] Zohar in Num. fol. 85. 4. & 86. 1. [q] Bemidbar Rabba, fol. 179. 3.

Jarchi thinks, they were carried captives with the ten tribes, that is, by Salmaneſer, king of Aſſyria; and the Targum of Jonathan, by Sennacherib, king of Aſſyria; and others think by Nebuchadnezzar, who was ſometimes reckoned a king of Aſſyria; taking them to be the ſame with the Amalekites, who were carried captives and returned with the two tribes.

℣. 23. And he took up his parable, and ſaid, &c.] Or delivered another prophecy, having made ſome little pauſe: alas, who ſhall live when God doeth this? referring not to what goes before, but to what follows; though Jarchi and Aben Ezra think it refers to the Aſſyrians conquering and carrying captive, not only the Kenites, but all the nations of the world, ſo that there was no living comfortably in it on his account; but this is ſaid after Balaam had taken up his parable again, and ſo reſpects what follows, as the deſtruction of the Perſian empire by Alexander, in which Aſhur or the Aſſyrians were included; and the deſtruction of the Jews by the Romans more eſpecially; which was ſuch as had not been the like from the beginning of the world, Matt. xxiv. 21, 22. and perhaps may have a further reſpect to the affliction of the witneſſes and church of Chriſt by Antichriſt; ſee Dan. xii. 1.

℣. 24. And ſhips ſhall come from the coaſt of Chittim, &c.] Kittim was the ſon of Javan, Gen. x. 4. and ſo deſigns ſome part of Greece: Joſephus[r] ſays, that Kittim poſſeſſed the iſland now called Cyprus, in which was a city now called Citium, after his name; Macedonia a conſiderable part of Greece, is called the land of Cittim, 1 Maccab. i. 1. and viii. 5. but the Targum of Jonathan interprets it, of the country of Italy; the Jeruſalem Targum, of the Roman legions; and perhaps both Greeks and Romans are intended, and ſo ſhips from Cittim in Dan. xi. 30. deſign Romans in Grecian ſhips; for in ſuch were the Roman ambaſſadors carried, who diſtreſſed Antiochus, king of Syria, ſee the note there; and both may be intended here: it is affirmed[s] that Noah, with his ſon Japhet, came into the country now called Italy, and built a city, and gave it the name of Cethim, ſince called Volterra, and was the metropolis of Etruria, and gave name to all Italy; and that in the year 220 from the building of that city, Cethim the ſon of Javan, and grandſon of Noah, took two colonies with him, and ſailed to an iſland which he called after his own name Cethim, now Cyprus: and ſhall afflict Aſhur; which being a part of the Perſian empire, was afflicted, conquered, and ſubdued by Alexander the Macedonian, who is ſaid to come out of the land of Cittim, 1 Maccab. i. 1. and ſhall afflict Eber; or the Hebrews, as the Septuagint verſion; not that the Grecians or Macedonians ſhould do this, for they under Alexander did not afflict the Jews; unleſs this is to be underſtood of the Seleucidæ, the kings of Syria, the ſucceſſors of Alexander, who did diſtreſs the Jews; but rather, this reſpects the Romans under Pompey, and eſpecially under Titus Veſpaſian, who deſtroyed their city, and carried them captive, and who ever ſince, have been diſperſed among the nations: and he alſo ſhall periſh for ever; not Eber, but thoſe that afflicted him, even the Romans; and indeed both monarchies, Grecian and Roman are propheſied of, as what ſhould be deſtroyed, and that by a ſon of Eber, the Meſſiah; the ſtone cut out of the mountain without hands, ſaid to break in pieces all theſe kingdoms, Dan. ii. 44, 45. and not Rome pagan only, but Rome papal alſo, Antichriſt and all the antichriſtian powers, 2 Theſſ. ii. 8. and ſo the Targum of Jonathan ſays, that the end both of the one and the other, that is, that ſhall afflict Eber, ſhall be, to fall by the hand of the king Meſſiah, and they ſhall periſh for ever.

℣. 25. And Balaam roſe up, and went and returned to his place, &c.] The country from whence he came, that is, he went from Balak, according to his command, in order to return to his own land; for he ſeems not to have reached it, but ſtayed by the way among the Moabites and Midianites, and was ſlain in a battle between Iſrael and them, ch. xxxi. 8. or if he did reach Meſopotamia, he returned again, as Chaſkuni ſays; and either before he left Balak, or in his journey homewards, or when he returned, he gave that advice, to ſeduce the Iſraelites firſt to whoredom, and by that to idolatry, the effects of which are obſerved in the following chapter, ſee the note on ℣. 14. and Balak alſo went his way; to his royal city, court, and family, attended, very probably, by the princes of Moab, who had been with him all this while; though how long theſe things were tranſacting is not certain.

CHAP. XXV.

THE contents of this chapter are, the ſin of the people of Iſrael, their whoredom and idolatry, ℣. 1, 2, 3. their puniſhment for it, multitudes being ſlain, ℣. 4, 5. whoſe number is given, ℣. 9. the zeal of Phinehas in ſlaying two notorious offenders, ℣. 6, 7, 8. whoſe names are obſerved, ℣. 14, 15. for which he is commended, and the covenant of prieſthood was given and confirmed unto him, ℣. 10—13. and the chapter is concluded, with an order to vex the Midianites, for vexing Iſrael with their wiles, ℣. 16, 17, 18.

℣. 1. And Iſrael abode in Shittim, &c.] A place in the plains of Moab, ſo called from the Shittim-wood which grew here in great abundance, ſo often mentioned in the building of the tabernacle; which was a ſort of white thorn, or rather the Acacia-tree, ſince there was ſcarce any thing elſe grew in the deſerts of Arabia, ſee the note on Exod. xxv. 5. its full name was Abel-ſhittim, ch. xxxiii. 49. here the Iſraelites abode even to the death of Moſes, for this was their laſt ſtation in the wilderneſs; they were now on the borders of the land of Canaan, and juſt ready to enter into it, which is an aggravation of the ſins they here fell into, and are next obſerved: and the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab; and of Midian alſo, as appears from ℣. 6. and ch. xxxi. 9. 16. by the advice of Balaam, the Moabites and Midianites found ways and means to become familiar with the Iſraelites, and to introduce their daughters into their company and converſation, and being being enſnared and enamoured with them, they were drawn to commit lewdneſs with them, and hereby were led on to commit other abominations, which brought the divine diſpleaſure upon them; ſo that what they durſt not attempt by war, and could not effect by ſorceries and divinations, they accompliſhed by thoſe iniquitous arts, namely, bringing the wrath, the curſe, and plague of God upon them.

[r] Antiq. l. 1. c. 6. §. 1. Vid. p. 77.

[s] Inghiram. Etruſc. Antiq. apud Dickinſon. Delph. Phænic. Append. p. 153.

℣. 2. And they called the people unto the ſacrifices of their gods, &c.] That is, the daughters of Moab and Midian, with whom the children of Iſrael carried on an unlawful correſpondence, invited them, their gallants, to come and partake of the feaſts which attended the ſacrifices of their idols; for part of what was offered to idols a feaſt was kept with, to which great numbers were invited, and which was obſerved with all the circumſtances of joy and pleaſure imaginable, and which was very enſnaring, eſpecially to young people; and the children of Iſrael being ſo much enamoured with the beauty of the Moabitiſh women, and ſo ſtrong were their luſts and paſſions, that they could not refuſe the invitation: and the people did eat; of the things ſacrificed to idols, and ſo became guilty of idolatry, even by ſo doing, and then when they had eaten and drank, and were merry, they were led on to other acts of idolatry: and bowed down to their gods; which was a plain and open act of idolatry, whereby they teſtified their faith in their divinity, their reverence of them, and their homage and obedience to them: Jarchi ſays, when the evil concupiſcence or luſt was ſtrong in them, and they ſolicited the daughters of Moab to hearken to them, and comply with them, they uſed to take the image of Peor out of their boſom, and ſaid, worſhip this, ſignifying that on that condition, they would gratify them; and thus whoredom led them on to idolatry, and they committed the one for the ſake of being indulged in the other.

℣. 3. And Iſrael joined himſelf unto Baal-peor, &c.] The name of an idol; one of the Baal's, Baal being a general name for an idol; and to diſtinguiſh this from other Baal's or idols, it was called Peor, either from its opening its mouth in prophecy, as Ainſworth; or from ſome obſcene poſture and action uſed in the worſhip of it, being, as it is by many thought to be, the ſame with Priapus; or rather, from the mountain Peor, where it was worſhipped, as Jupiter is called Jupiter Olympius, Capitolinus, &c. from the mountains where he had a temple, or was worſhipped; or from the name of ſome great perſonage called Lord Peor, who was deified after his death; hence theſe Iſraelites are ſaid, to eat the ſacrifices of the dead, Pſ. cvi. 28. Mr. Bedford [t] takes him to be Mizraim the ſon of Ham, the Oſiris of the Egyptians, and the Priapus of other heathens: and father Calmet [u] is of opinion, that he is the ſame with Orus, Oſiris, and Adonis; and that Pe is only a prepoſitive article, and that Or is the name, and no other than Orus; but ſuch a criticiſm the word will not bear: this idol the chief god of the Moabites, was, in all probability, the ſame with Chemoſh, who is expreſsly called the abomination of Moab, 1 Kings xi. 7. of whom ſee the note on Jer. xlviii. 7. ſo Chemoſh and Peor are thought to be the ſame by our Engliſh poet [w]: to him the Iſraelites joined themſelves, forſook the true God in a great meaſure, and were initiated into the rites of this deity, and conſtantly attended the worſhip of it, and cleaved unto it with their hearts and affections, and joined with their harlots in all parts of ſervice performed unto it; ſee the note on Hoſ. ix. 10. and the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Iſrael; for no ſin is more provoking to God than idolatry, that being ſo directly oppoſite to his nature, honour, and glory, as well as to his will and worſhip; and hereby the end of Balaam and Balak was, in a great meaſure, anſwered, and Balaam obtained that by his evil counſel which he could not by all his conjuring; this was ſeen by the plague ſent among them; ſee the note on ch. xxiv. 14.

℣. 4. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] Being provoked with the ſins of the people, he called to him out of the tabernacle, or out of the cloud: take all the heads of the people; the princes of the tribes, not to hang them, but to judge thoſe that worſhipped Peor, as Jarchi interprets it; though ſome think that theſe having ſinned, were ordered to be taken and hanged, and made public examples of; but it can hardly be thought, though there were ſome that might be guilty of the above ſins, as Zimri, yet not all of them: hang them up before the Lord againſt the ſun; that is, thoſe that were guilty of idolatry: the meaning is, and which all the Targums give into, that theſe heads of the people were to aſſemble at ſome proper place, the court of judicature, and order the delinquents to be brought before them, and try, judge, and condemn thoſe they found guilty, and cauſe them to be hanged ſomewhere near the tabernacle, and before it, having neglected the worſhip of God there, and ſerved an idol; and this was to be done openly in the day-time, that all might ſee and fear; and if it was the ſun that was worſhipped in this idol, as ſome think, they were hanged againſt the ſun, to ſhew that the idol they worſhipped was not able to deliver them; but in the face of it, and as it were in defiance of it, they were ordered to be hanged up; and this, according to the Targum of Jonathan, was in the morning againſt the riſing-ſun, and where they hung all day, and were taken down at ſun-ſetting: that the fierce anger of the Lord may be turned away from Iſrael; when juſtice had taken place, and proper puniſhment was inflicted upon the criminals, whereby a juſt reſentment was made againſt ſin, and God glorified.

℣. 5. And Moſes ſaid unto the judges of Iſrael, &c.] Either the ſame with the heads of the people, or the rulers of thouſands, hundreds, fifties, and tens, according to the diſtribution by the advice of Jethro: ſlay ye every one his men, that were joined unto Baal-peor; all that were under their ſeveral diſtricts and juriſdictions, that were found guilty of that crime; theſe they are ordered to ſlay, either with their own hands, or rather, cauſe to be ſlain by proper perſons they ſhould appoint to be executioners.

℣. 6. And behold, one of the children of Iſrael came, &c.] From one of the cities of Moab or Midian, the latter rather, by what follows; where he had been, very probably, to an idolatrous feaſt, and had eaten of the ſacrifices, and worſhipped idols, and committed fornication with the daughters of the land; and not content with indulging himſelf

[t] Scripture-Chronology, p. 267.

[u] Dictionary, on the word Baal.

[w] Next Chemos, th' obſcene dread of Moab's ſons, Peor his other name, ——— Milton, B. 1. l. 406, 412.

himſelf with thoſe impurities at a diſtance, and where he was leſs known: brought unto his brethren a Midianitiſh woman; into his father's family, into a tent where his brethren dwelt: in the ſight of Moſes, and in the ſight of all the congregation of the children of Iſrael; in the moſt open and undiſguiſed manner, into the midſt of the camp, paſſing by Moſes, and a great number of the people who were gathered together on this ſolemn occaſion, to ſeek the Lord, and humble themſelves before him: who were weeping before the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; the place where the people uſed to aſſemble together for religious exerciſes; here they were weeping and mourning for the ſins and abominations that were committed among them, and on account of the puniſhment inflicted on many of them, by the hand of the civil magiſtrate, and becauſe of the plague that was brought out upon them, from an angry God; by which it appears, that though there were many who had fallen into thoſe foul ſins, yet there were a great number which were not defiled with them, and ſighed and cried for the abominations in the midſt of them: and becauſe the fact here recorded was ſuch an amazing piece of impudence, the word behold is prefixed to the account of it; it being done in ſuch a public, bold, and audacious manner, and at ſuch a time when ſo many had been hanged up for it, and the plague of God was broke out among the people on account of it, and good men were bewailing the ſin, and the puniſhment of it; and if this was on a ſabbath-day, as the Samaritan chronicle [x] relates, it was a further aggravation of it.

℣. 7. And when Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar, the ſon of Aaron the prieſt, ſaw it, &c.] Saw the man paſs by in this impudent manner, and his whore with him; his ſpirit was ſtirred up, he was filled and fired with zeal for the glory of God, and with an holy indignation againſt the ſin and ſinner, and with a juſt concern for the honour of the righteous law of God; and to prevent others from falling into the ſame ſin, led by the public example of ſo great a perſonage, as it appears afterwards this man was: he roſe up from among the congregation; who were weeping at the door of the tabernacle, or from the midſt of the court of judicature, ſet for trying and judging ſuch perſons who were charged with idolatry; for he was not only the ſon of the high-prieſt and his ſucceſſor, but a ruler over the Korahites, and had, beſides his prieſtly office, a civil authority, 1 Chron. ix. 20. and took a javelin in his hand; a ſpear or pike; the Jews ſay [y], he ſnatched it out of the hand of Moſes; and according to Joſephus [z], it was a ſword; but the word rather ſignifies an hand-pike; this being ready at hand, he took it up and purſued the criminal.

℣. 8. And he went after the man of Iſrael into the tent, &c.] Into which he went with his harlot; the word here uſed is different from what is commonly uſed for a tent: Aben Ezra obſerves, that in the Kedarene or Arabic language there is a word near to it, which Bochart putting the article al to it, ſays [a], is alkobba, from whence is the word alcove with us; and Aben Ezra ſays, there was ſome little difference between the form of a tent and this, as well as others obſerve [b], there was in the matter of it, this being of ſkins and leather, and the other of hair, boughs of trees, &c. the author of Aruch [c] ſays, it was ſhort, or narrow above and broad below, and interprets it a place in which whores were put; and ſo it is uſed in the Talmud [d], for a brothel-houſe, and is ſo tranſlated here by ſome interpreters [e]: and thruſt both of them through; with his javelin, ſpear, or pike: the man of Iſrael, and the woman through her belly; by which, it ſeems, they were killed in the very act of uncleanneſs: this was an extraordinary action, done by a perſon of public authority, and under a more than common emotion of ſpirit, and not to be drawn into an example by perſons of a private character: ſo the plague was ſtayed from the children of Iſrael; which had broke out among them and carried off many; even a diſeaſe, the peſtilence, according to Joſephus [f]; its ceaſing upon this fact of Phinehas, ſhews that that was approved of by the Lord.

℣. 9. And thoſe that died in the plague were twenty and four thouſand.] The apoſtle ſays 23,000, 1 Cor. x. 8. Moſes includes thoſe that were hanged againſt the ſun, in the time of the plague, as well as thoſe that were taken off by it, even all that died on this account; the apoſtle, only thoſe that fell, which cannot with propriety be ſaid of thoſe that were hanged, who might be 1,000, and ſo their numbers agree; but of this and other ways of removing this difficulty ſee the note there.

℣. 10. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Out of the cloud, or out of the tabernacle, at the door of which Moſes now was, ℣. 6. this was after ſo many had died of the plague, and after the fact of Phinehas, by which it was ſtopt: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 11. Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar, the ſon of Aaron the prieſt, &c.] His deſcent and genealogy is obſerved as before, partly to ſhew that he was not a private perſon, but a man of public authority that did the above fact; perhaps one of the judges that Moſes ordered to ſlay every man his man, and therefore what he did he did by the order of the ſupreme magiſtrate; and partly to ſhew that he was heir apparent to the office of high-prieſt, who in courſe was to ſucceed in it; nor ſhould this action of his hinder it, but rather ſerve to ſecure and confirm it to him: hath turned away my wrath from the children of Iſrael; cauſed the effects of it to ceaſe, by ſlaying the two perſons, as before related: while he was zealous for my ſake among you; for the glory of God, the honour of his law, the credit of religion, and the good of his people, which is a good cauſe to be zealouſly affected in, ſee Gal. iv. 18. in which he was a type of Chriſt, whoſe zeal for the houſe of God, for the doctrine, diſcipline, and worſhip of it, for the ſalvation of his people, and the glory of God thereby, eat him up, Pſ. lxix. 9. as well as in his turning away wrath from Iſrael: ſin is the cauſe of wrath, and for it, it is revealed from heaven; the people of God are deſerving of it as others; but Chriſt has bore it for them, and ſo has delivered them from it and all the effects of it, [x] Apud Hottinger. Smegma Oriental. l. 1. c. 8. p. 448. [y] Pirke Eliezer, c. 47. fol. 56. 1. [z] Antiq. l. 4. c. 6. §. 12. [a] القبة conclave eſt camerati operis, quo lectus circumdatur, Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 4. c. 8. col. 1092. Vid. Schultens Animadv. Philolog. in Job. p. 183. [b] Caſtel. Lex. Heptaglot. col. 3261. [c] Baal Aruch, fol. 133. 4. [d] T. Bab. Avoda Zara, fol. 17. 2. [e] אל הקברית in lupanar, V. L. ad lupanar, Montanus; in lupanar ipſum, Junius & Tremellius; in fornicem, Tigurine verſion. [f] Ut ſupra.

it, and they are ſecure from its coming upon them: that I conſumed not the children of Iſrael in my jealouſy; by the plague ſent among them, being ſo highly provoked with their ſhocking abominations.

℣. 12. Wherefore ſay, &c.] Moſes is bid to tell what follows to Phinehas himſelf, for his comfort and encouragement, and to the people of Iſrael, that they might take notice of it, and give him honour and reſpect, as one highly eſteemed by the Lord: behold, I give unto him my covenant of peace; not only hereby aſſuring him that he had nothing to fear from the brethren and relations of the perſon he had ſlain, as Aben Ezra; but that he ſhould enjoy all peace and happineſs, external, internal, and eternal: Baal Hatturim on the place ſays, that Shalom peace, is by geometry, or numerically, the Meſſiah; who is the peace, the peace-maker, and peace-giver, and in whom all the bleſſings of grace and peace are: and if this covenant is the ſame with the covenant of the prieſthood in the next verſe; it may be ſo called, becauſe the prieſts had a peculiar nearneſs to God, and enjoyed his friendſhip, favour and peace with him, and becauſe the right adminiſtration of their office was the means of peace between God and his people; in this alſo Phinehas was a type of Chriſt; the covenant of grace made with him is called the covenant of peace, Iſ. liv. 10. Mal. ii. 5. for in this covenant the ſcheme of peace and reconciliation was formed, agreed to, and ſettled; Chriſt was appointed the peace-maker, which he agreed to be; and in conſequence of it was ſent and obtained peace by the blood of his croſs, which is publiſhed in the everlaſting goſpel, called therefore the goſpel of peace.

℣. 13. And he ſhall have it, and his ſeed after him, &c.] The covenant, and all the bleſſings of it; ſo the covenant ſtands faſt with Chriſt, and all his ſpiritual ſeed, Pſ. lxxxix. 28, 29: even the covenant of an everlaſting prieſthood; or this may be read in connexion with the preceding words, and the ſenſe be, and he and his ſhall have the covenant of an everlaſting prieſthood, beſide the covenant of peace before promiſed to him: the Aaronical prieſthood is called everlaſting, becauſe it was to continue, and did continue, throughout the whole Jewiſh diſpenſation, unto the coming of the Meſſiah, in whom it had its fulfilling end. Now though Phinehas in courſe was to have the prieſthood at his father's death, yet it is here promiſed him on account of his zeal, both to aſſure him that he ſhould ſurvive his father, and that nothing ſhould befal him that ſhould render him uncapable of the prieſthood; and moreover, that he ſhould have a ſeed in whom it ſhould be continued; there was indeed an interruption of it in his line for a little while, on ſome account or other, it being tranſlated into the family of Eli, a ſon of Ithamar; but then it was reſtored again in the time of Solomon to the family of Phinehas, where it continued unto the captivity, and even to the times of Herod, and ſo of the Meſſiah: in this alſo Phinehas was a type of Chriſt, the covenant made with him not only being from everlaſting and to everlaſting, a covenant that cannot be broken, and will never be removed; but the prieſthood founded on it is ſo too, being eſtabliſhed by the oath of God, who ſwore to him, thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchizedek; Chriſt's prieſthood is an unchangeable one, and does not paſs from one to another; his ſacrifice has a perpetual virtue and efficacy in it to take away ſin, and he ever lives to make interceſſion for his people, Heb. vii. 21, 24, 25, 27: becauſe he was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the children of Iſrael; by executing judgment upon the delinquents, as Chriſt has made atonement for the ſins of his people by ſatisfying law and juſtice: and, beſides what has been obſerved, it may be remarked, that there is an agreement between Phinehas and Chriſt in his very name; Phinehas ſignifies either the face of him that ſpares, that is, of God, that ſpares; Chriſt is the face of God, the expreſs image of his perſon, even of him, who though he ſpared not Chriſt himſelf, yet he ſpares his people for Chriſt's ſake; or elſe he ſhall look that ſpares, or and ſpare [g]; that is God, who looks upon the perſon, righteouſneſs, blood and ſacrifice of his Son, and ſpares his people.

℣. 14. Now the name of the Iſraelite that was ſlain, &c.] By Phinehas, as before related: even that was ſlain with the Midianitiſh woman; who was ſlain alſo, both together with one thruſt: was Zimri, the ſon of Sela, a prince of a chief houſe among the Simeonites; or a prince of his father's houſe, or family; there were five families of the Simeonites, and this man was a prince of one of them, ſee ch. xxvi. 12, 13. though Joſephus [h], and ſo the Samaritan chronicle [i], make him to be a prince of the tribe of Simeon. His name is mentioned partly to the reproach of him, and partly for the honour of Phinehas, whoſe zeal and courage were ſuch, that he feared not to take away the life of a perſon of ſuch figure, authority and intereſt among the people.

℣. 15. And the name of the Midianitiſh woman that was ſlain was Cozbi, the daughter of Zur, &c.] One of the five kings of Midian, ch. xxxi. 8. and ſo the Samaritan chronicle ſays [k], it was the daughter of a king that came to a prince of the tribe of Simeon, and inticed him to eat of her food, and worſhip her idols. The Targum of Jonathan ſays ſhe was called Selonæ, the daughter of Balak, chief of the nation of Moab, whoſe habitation was in Midian: he was head over a people, and of a chief houſe in Midian; that is Zur, the father of Cozbi was; there were five ſons of Midian, whoſe names are given, Gen. xxv. 4. from whence Jarchi concludes, that there were five principal families in Midian, and that this man was the head or chief of one of them, which is not improbable; and that alſo makes for the honour of Phinehas, that he ſpared not any for their rank and quality, of whatſoever nation they were.

℣. 16. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] This was ſome time after the above affair happened; how long it was, is not certain; and a little time before the death of Moſes, ſee ch. xxxi. 1, 2: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 17. Vex the Midianites, and ſmite them.] Go to war with them, and ſmite them with the ſword; not the Moabites but the Midianites, though they were both confederates againſt Iſrael; but God had given a charge not to contend in battle with Moab, Deut. ii. 9. they were ſpared for the ſake of Lot, from whom they ſprang; and, as Jarchi ſays, for the ſake of Ruth, who was to come from them; and ſo in the Talmud [l]; though they did not entirely eſcape the divine reſentment, as appears from Deut. xxiii. 3, 4. but the Midianites were the firſt that adviſed to ſend for Balaam, and with them he ſtayed

[g] Vid. Hiller. Onomaſtic. Sacr. p. 476. ut ſupra.
[h] Antiq. l. 4. c. 6. §. 10.
[i] Ibid.
[k] T. Bab. Bava Kama, fol. 38. 2.
[l] Apud Hottinger

I,

ſtayed and was entertained, after he had been diſmiſſed by Balak; and it ſeems as if it was to them he gave the wicked counſel, to draw Iſrael into fornication, and ſo into idolatry, and thereby bring the curſe of God upon them; which advice they communicated to the Moabites, and both were concerned in putting it into execution; ſee ch. xxii. 4, 7. and xxv. 1, 6. and xxxi. 9, 16.

℣. 18. For they vex you with their wiles, &c.] Not with wars but with wiles, with cunning ſtratagems, and artful methods to draw them into ſin, that thereby they might be expoſed to the wrath of God: wherewith they have beguiled you in the matter of Peor; the idol Peor, that is, Baal Peor; which ſeems to countenance the notion, that Peor was the name of a man, ſome great perſonage, who was deified after his death; now the Midianites beguiled the Iſraelites, by ſending their daughters among them, with whom they committed fornication, and by whom they were inveigled to worſhip the idol Peor: and in the matter of Cozbi, the daughter of a prince of Midian their ſiſter; their country-woman, as it was common with eaſtern people to call thoſe of the ſame country with them their brethren and ſiſters: now the Midianites beguiled the Iſraelites, by proſtituting a perſon of ſuch quality to a prince of theirs, which was ſetting an example to other daughters of Midian to follow her, and ſo hereby many of the children of Iſrael were enſnared into whoredom, and into idolatry: which was ſlain in the day of the plague, for Peor's ſake; or for the buſineſs of Peor, as the Targum of Jonathan, becauſe of the worſhip of that idol; not that Cozbi was ſlain upon that account, but the plague came upon Iſrael by reaſon of their worſhipping of it, and it was on the day that the plague was, that ſhe was ſlain; by which it ſeems that the plague laſted but one day.

CHAP. XXVI.

IN this chapter an order is given to number the people of Iſrael a ſecond time, ℣. 1—4. and the account begins with Reuben, the firſt-born, and the families that ſprung from him, and the number of them, ℣. 5, 6, 7. and Dathan and Abiram being of this tribe, the affair of them and Korah is afreſh related, ℣. 8—11. then the tribe of Simeon, its families and number, ℣. 12, 13, 14. next the tribe of Gad, and their families and number, ℣. 15—18. after that the tribe of Judah, its families and number, ℣. 19—22. then follows the tribe of Iſſachar, its families and number, ℣. 23, 24, 25. next to that the tribe of Zebulun, its families and number, ℣. 26, 27. then the ſons of Joſeph, and firſt Manaſſeh, his families and number, ℣. 28—34. and then the tribe of Ephraim, its families and number, ℣. 35, 36, 37. after that the tribe of Benjamin, its families and number, ℣. 38—41. next the tribe of Dan, its families and number, ℣. 42, 43. and which is followed by the tribe of Aſher, its families and number, ℣. 44—47. and the muſter is cloſed with the tribe of Naphtali, its families and number, ℣. 48, 49, 50. and the ſum total of all the numbers is given ℣. 51. and then follows another order to divide the land of Canaan by lot, when conquered, to the ſeveral tribes, according to their names and number, ℣. 52—56. and an account is given of the number of the Levites and their families, their number being taken not with the other tribes, but by themſelves, and which is ſummed up, ℣. 57—62. and the chapter is concluded with obſerving, that it appeared upon this numbering of the people, that there were but two perſons living of thoſe that were firſt numbered among the children of Iſrael, ℣. 63, 64, 65.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs after the plague, &c.] Related in the preceding chapter; how long after is not certain, perhaps before the war with Midian, exhorted to in the latter part of the foregoing chapter, and of which an account is given, ch. xxxi: that the Lord ſpake unto Moſes; out of the tabernacle, or out of the cloud: and unto Eleazar the ſon of Aaron the prieſt; the Lord had been uſed to ſpeak to Moſes and to Aaron; but now Aaron being dead, and Eleazar his ſon ſucceeding him in the prieſthood, is joined with Moſes, and the order here given is directed to them both: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Take the ſum of all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Excepting the Levites, who were to be numbered by themſelves, and at a different age; this ſum was to be taken, that it might appear that all of the old generation that came out of Egypt, of the age at which this ſum was taken, were now dead, excepting two, as the Lord had threatened; and partly that as they were now about to enter the land of Canaan, it might be divided to them according to their number; as well as to ſhow the faithfulneſs of God to his word and promiſe, that he would multiply and make them fruitful, notwithſtanding all their provoking ſins and tranſgreſſions: from twenty years old and upwards, throughout their father's houſe; all of that age in every tribe, houſe and family: all that are able to go to war in Iſrael; for which they muſt prepare, being about to enter the land of Canaan, and diſpoſſeſs and drive out the inhabitants of it.

℣. 3. And Moſes and Eleazar the prieſt ſpake with them, &c.] With the children of Iſrael, with the heads of them, their chief and principal, to aſſiſt in taking the number of the people; as when they were numbered 38 years ago, when a prince out of each tribe was taken to be with Aaron and Moſes in doing that buſineſs; but thoſe princes were now all dead, and another race ſucceeded, who were now employed in this ſervice; ſo the Targum of Jonathan ſays, they ſpoke with the rulers, and ordered them to number them: in the plains of Moab by Jordan near Jericho; or of Jericho, as the ſame Targum, on the other ſide of Jordan, to that on which Jericho ſtood; for as yet the children of Iſrael had not paſſed that river, nor entered into the land of Canaan, in which Jericho was, but they were now over-againſt it; ſee the note on ch. xxii. 1: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 4. Take the ſum of the people, from twenty years old and upward, &c.] At the ſame age at which the ſum was taken before, ch. i. 3. ſo that there could not be one that was more than 60 years of age, of all thoſe that went into the land of Canaan, except Joſhua and Caleb, and beſides ſome few in the tribe of Levi, which did not come into either of theſe muſters: and the Lord commanded Moſes, and the children of Iſrael, which went forth out of the land of Egypt; as Moſes had a command to number the people before, ſo he had now. The ſin of David was, that he numbered the people ple when he had no command for it; Moſes, when he brought the people out of Egypt, had them committed to him by tale; and now being about to die, he delivers them up as it were by tale again, as Jarchi obſerves.

℣. 5, 6, 7. Reuben the eldeſt ſon of Iſrael, &c.] The number of his tribe is taken firſt on that account; there were four families that deſcended from him, the Hanochite, Palluite, Heſronite and Carmite, and the number of men from twenty years old and upwards, fit for war, were 43,730; ſo that ſince the laſt numbering, this tribe was decreaſed 2,770; which may in part be accounted for by the families of Dathan and Abiram being cut off for their rebellion, who were of this tribe, and whoſe affair is briefly related in the following verſes, and it may be to point out this unto us.

℣. 8. And the ſons of Pallu, &c.] Or ſon, the plural for the ſingular, Pallu having but one ſon, whoſe name was Eliab, the father of Dathan and Abiram; ſo ℣. 42.

℣. 9. And the ſons of Eliab, Nemuel, and Dathan, and Abiram, &c.] Of Nemuel we no where elſe read; either he died without children, or he and his family periſhed with his brethren, being concerned with them in the conſpiracy; or the family of the Palluite was in his line, one of the ſame name may be obſerved in the tribe of Simeon: this is that Dathan and Abiram, which were famous in the congregation; either before their rebellion, for their power and authority, being heads of their fathers houſes; or for their parts and abilities, being men of great wiſdom and ſenſe; or for their zeal, activity and uſefulneſs; or after it, and became famous, or rather infamous on account of it, ſee ch. xvi. 2. who ſtrove againſt Moſes, and againſt Aaron in the company of Korah, when they ſtrove againſt the Lord; who joined with Korah and his company, and quarrelled with Moſes and Aaron about the prieſthood; with Moſes for putting Aaron into it, and with Aaron for accepting it, and officiating in it; and ſo with the Lord himſelf, by whoſe orders he was inveſted with it.

℣. 10. And the earth opened her mouth, and ſwallowed them up, &c.] Not only Dathan and Abiram, but their wives and children, their houſes and tents, and all their goods, ſee ch. xvi. 32, 33. together with Korah; the words being thus rendered, and ſtanding in ſuch cloſe connection with the preceding, ſome have concluded from hence, that Korah was ſwallowed up with them in the earth; whereas he ſeems rather to have been at that time with the 250 men that had cenſers at the door of the tabernacle, and was conſumed by fire with them, ſee ch. xvi. 16, 17, 18, 19, 40. and indeed it is ſuggeſted here, for the phraſe may be rendered, and the things of Korah [m]; what appertained unto him, his men, tents, goods and ſubſtance, which agrees with ch. xvi. 32. or and as for Korah [n]; with reſpect to him: when that company died; he was at the head of, he died alſo, the ſame death they died, by fire, as follows: what time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men; which was the number his company conſiſted of, who took cenſers, and offered incenſe, and were conſumed by fire, ch. xvi. 2, 17, 35. and with whom, in all probability, he periſhed: and they became a ſign; were made an example of, to deter others from the like practices, and particularly uſurping any part of the prieſt's office: ſome connect the words with the following, and take the ſenſe to be, that this was the ſign or miracle, that when they periſhed, Korah's ſons died not, but were preſerved; which ſenſe is countenanced by the Vulgate Latin, but the other ſenſe is beſt.

℣. 11. Notwithſtanding the children of Korah died not.] Neither of the peſtilence, nor by fire, nor by the ſwallowing up of the earth; they not being in the counſel of their father, but followed the doctrine of Moſes the prophet, as the Targum of Jonathan; they either diſliked their father's ſcheme, or if they engaged with him in it, they repented and departed from him, and were not preſent when the judgments of God came upon him and his company; there were ſeveral of his poſterity who were ſingers in the times of David, and to whom many of the pſalms were ſent to be ſung.

℣. 12—14. The ſons of Simeon after their families, &c.] This tribe was next numbered, not only becauſe Simeon was next to Reuben by birth, but becauſe his tribe was under the ſtandard of Reuben; two of his ſons are a little differently named here, than they are in Gen. xlvi. 10. there the eldeſt is called Jemuel, here Nemuel; there the youngeſt but one is named Zohar, here Zerah; and one of them is here omitted, namely Obad, perhaps becauſe he died without children, and ſo no family ſprang from him; wherefore the families of Simeon were but five, and the number of them were 22,200; by which it appears there was a very great decreaſe in this tribe ſince the laſt muſter, even 37,100, which in ſome meaſure is to be accounted for by the great number of this tribe, ſuppoſed to have died of the plague, on account of fornication and idolatry, made mention of in the preceding chapter; a prince in this tribe having ſet a bad example, it is probable he was followed in it by many of it, for which great numbers were cut off. Jarchi, from Tanchuma, ſays, that all the 24,000 that died of the plague, was of the tribe of Simeon; and ſo ſays the Samaritan chronicle [o]; but that is not likely.

℣. 15—18. The children of Gad after their families, &c.] This tribe was numbered next to Simeon, becauſe it lay encamped with that under the ſtandard of Reuben. There is a little variation in the names of two or three of his ſons, from thoſe by which they are called Gen. xlvi. 16. inſtead of Ziphion, here Zephon; and for Haggai, here Haggi; and what is much wider, for Ezbon, here Ozni. Seven families ſprang from Gad, whoſe number now was 40,500; they were diminiſhed ſince their laſt numbering 5,150; it is probable this tribe, being a warlike tribe, ſuffered very much in their attempt to enter the land of Canaan contrary to the will of God, and were repulſed and defeated by the Amalekites, ch. xiv. 40—45.

℣. 19—22. And the ſons of Judah were Er and Onan, &c.] And beſides theſe he had Shelah, Pharez, and Zerah, from whom families ſprang, but none from the two firſt: for Er and Onan died in the land of Canaan; where they were born; and that becauſe of their ſins, as the Targum of Jonathan adds, ſee Gen. xxxviii. 7—10. ſo that there were but three families ſprang from Judah, the Shelanites, Pharzites and Zarhites; only the family of the Pharzites was divided into two families, the Heſronites and the Hamulites, ſo called from two ſons of

[m] וְאֵת קֹרַח & quæ erant, Kotachi, Junius & Tremellius, & Corah (qui periit) in morte congregationis, Tigurine verſion, ut ſupra.

[n] So Pool, Patrick; deinde

[o] Apud Hottinger,

of Pharez; the number of theſe families amounted to 76,500, ſo that there was an increaſe of 1,900 ſince the laſt muſter, which anſwers to Jacob's bleſſing, that he ſhould be a praiſe among his brethren, Gen. xlix. 8.

℣. 23—25. Of the ſons of Iſſachar after their families, &c.] This tribe was numbered next to Judah, becauſe it was under his ſtandard. Two of his ſons are a little differently named than they are Gen. xlvi. 13. inſtead of Phuvah one is called Pua, and inſtead of Job another is called here Jaſhub; this tribe conſiſted of four families, and the number of warlike men in it was 64,300, their increaſe ſince the laſt numbering of them is 9,900.

℣. 26, 27. Of the ſons of Zebulun after their families, &c.] This is numbered next to Iſſachar, becauſe it was encamped under the ſtandard of Judah; it conſiſted of three families, whoſe numbers were 60,500, ſo that this tribe was increaſed 3,100.

℣. 28—34. The ſons of Joſeph after their families were Manaſſeh and Ephraim.] Manaſſeh is here mentioned firſt, though Ephraim was preferred to him by Jacob, and the ſtandard belonged to him; not becauſe he was the firſt-born, but becauſe he had now the greater increaſe, though he had but one ſon Machir, of whom was the family of the Machirites, and a grandſon whoſe name was Gilead, from whom was the family of the Gileadites, and who had ſix ſons; of whom were the families of the Jeezerite, Helekite, Aſrielite, Shechemite, Shemidaite, and Hepherite. Hepher, of whom was the laſt, had a ſon named Zelophehad, but he had no ſon, only five daughters, whoſe names are given; the number of men in this tribe, of twenty years old and upwards, fit for war, was 52,700, ſo that the increaſe was 20,500, a large increaſe indeed!

℣. 35—37. Theſe are the ſons of Ephraim after their families, &c.] Which were but three, the Shuthalhite, the Bachrite, and the Tahanite, only from the former ſprung another family called the Eranite; the number of the whole was 32,500, there was a decreaſe in this tribe of 8000.

℣. 38—41. The ſons of Benjamin after their families, &c.] This tribe was numbered next to Ephraim, being under his ſtandard. Five of the ſons of Benjamin are omitted, perhaps becauſe they died without iſſue, and ſo no families ſprang from them; the names of the five ſons mentioned, vary a little from the names of them in Gen. xlvi. 21. inſtead of Ehi, it is here Ahiram; and inſtead of Huppim and Muppim, it is here Shupham and Hupham; from theſe laſt five were the families of the Belaite, Aſhbelite, Ahiramite, Shuphamite, and Huphamite; and from the eldeſt of them ſprang two other families, the Ardite and Naamite, from Ard and Naaman, two ſons of Bela; the number of men in theſe families was 45,600, ſo that here was an increaſe of 10,200.

℣. 42, 43. Theſe are the ſons of Dan after their families, &c.] Though he had but one ſon, the plural being put for the ſingular; or by ſons are meant his poſterity; his ſon's name was Shuham, and by tranſpoſition Huſhim, in Gen. xlvi. 23. from him was the family of the Shuhamite; and yet tho' but one, conſiſted of 64,400 men; there was an increaſe of 1,700 in this tribe.

℣. 44—47. Of the children of Aſher after their families, &c.] This tribe was numbered next to Dan, becauſe it was under his ſtandard; one of his ſons is omitted, very probably dying childleſs, and ſo had no family; from the reſt ſprang the families of the Iimnite, Jeſuite, and Beriite; and from the latter, two others, the Heberite and Malchielite; and it is remarked that Aſher had a daughter named Sarah, and who alſo is particularly mentioned as a ſiſter of Aſher's ſons in Gen. xlvi. 17. no doubt but ſhe was a remarkable woman, either for religion, or for wiſdom and prudence, or ſome amiable virtue or grace or another, that ſhe is ſo particularly taken notice of: according to Maimonides[p] ſhe was an heireſs; for though Aſher had many ſons, this was his wife's daughter by another man, who had no ſons, and the inheritance was his daughter's, and therefore is ſo particularly mentioned; ſhe inheriting as the daughters of Zelophehad did: the number of perſons in this tribe was 53,400, the increaſe was 1,900.

℣. 48, 49, 50. Of the ſons of Naphtali after their families, &c.] This tribe, which is the laſt of them, was numbered next to Aſher, becauſe it was with that under the ſtandard of Dan; it had four families in it, the Jahzeelite, Gunite, Jezerite, and Shillemite, and its number was 45,400, being leſs by 8,000 than it was when firſt numbered.

℣. 51. Theſe were the numbered of the children of Iſrael, &c.] The twelve tribes, conſiſting of ſo many families, as above named; and the ſum total of perſons in them of twenty years old and upwards, and fit for war, was 601,730; ſo that tho' all thoſe that were numbered 38 years ago were now dead, excepting Joſhua and Caleb, yet there wanted but 1,820 of that number; ſo mindful was the Lord of his promiſe, and ſo faithful to keep it, notwithſtanding the provocations of theſe people, to increaſe and multiply them, that they had pretty near the number to go into the land of Canaan which they had when they came out of Egypt.

℣. 52. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After the ſum of the people of Iſrael had been taken: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 53. Unto theſe the land ſhall be divided for an inheritance, &c.] That were numbered, and to none elſe: according to the number of their names; and for this end was the number of them now taken, that the land might be equally divided among them; women and minors, or ſuch as were under twenty years of age had no ſhare in it; and even only thoſe who were at that age at this time; ſo Jarchi ſays, it was not divided to any that were leſs than twenty years of age, even though they came to be full twenty before the diviſion of the land; for they were ſeven years ſubduing it, and ſeven years dividing it, yet none took any part of it but theſe 601,730; nay, he ſays, if a man had ſix children they took but their father's part only.

℣. 54. To many thou ſhalt give the more inheritance, and to few thou ſhalt give the leſs inheritance, &c.] To a tribe more numerous, and conſiſting of more and larger families, a greater part of the land was to be given to them to poſſeſs; and to a ſmaller tribe, and of the fewer families and perſons in them, a leſſer ſhare of it: this direction is given to Moſes, but is not deſigned for him perſonally, for he never entered the land, but died before Iſrael went into it; but for the chief ruler that would be then in being, namely, Joſhua his ſucceſſor: to every one ſhall his inheritance be given, according to thoſe that were numbered of him; that is, to every tribe, and ſo to every family in it, according to the number of men in it, that were of the above above age when the ſum of them was taken: becauſe it is in the original text, to a man according to thoſe numbered of him, &c. [q] hence the Jewiſh writers [r] gather, that the land was diſtributed not to women but to men only.

[p] Apud Abendana in loc.

℣. 55. Notwithſtanding the land ſhall be divided by lot, &c.] That the diviſion might appear to be according to the determination and will of God, and not left to the judgment and diſcretion of the chief magiſtrate, though bound by the above rule: according to the names of the tribes of their fathers they ſhall inherit; that is, according as to whatſoever name of a tribe, ſuch a part or portion of the land comes up by lot, that ſhall their inheritance be: Jarchi ſays, the names of the twelve tribes were written on twelve ſcrolls of parchment, and twelve borders or limits of land on twelve others, and they were mixed together in an urn, and the prince put his hand into it and took two ſcrolls; a ſcroll came up with the name of a tribe and a ſcroll with a border or limit expreſſed on it; and the lot, he ſays, was by the Holy Ghoſt, for Eleazar, at the ſame time, was clothed with Urim and Thummim [s]; ſo that the people were certain that the diſpoſition and diviſion of the land was of God; but there were but nine tribes and a half, among whom the land of Canaan was divided, two tribes and a half ſettled on the other ſide Jordan, namely, the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and half the tribe of Manaſſeh.

℣. 56. According to the lot ſhall the poſſeſſion thereof be divided, &c.] It was by the determination of the lot that the land was divided by inheritance, and that was by the Lord, according to Prov. xvi. 33. between many and few; it was ſo ordered of the Lord by the lot, that the many ſhould have a larger ſhare, and the few a leſſer.

℣. 57—62. And theſe are they that were numbered of the Levites, after their families, &c.] And they were numbered not with the reſt of the tribes of Iſrael but by themſelves, as they were at the firſt numbering of the tribes; the three principal families of which were, the Gerſhonite, the Kohathite, and Merarite, ſo called from the three ſons of Levi; but all their ſons are not mentioned, of the ſons of Gerſhon only Libni, from whom was the family of the Libnites; not Shimei, becauſe, as Aben Ezra conjectures, either he had no ſons, or if he had, they died without any, and ſo there was no family from them; and of the ſons of Kohath no mention is made of Uzziel, nor of Izhar, but in the Korhites, only of the Hebronite family from Hebron; and of Amram, whoſe wife Jochebed is ſpoken of as a daughter of Levi, whom Levi's wife, as Jarchi rightly ſupplies it, bore to him in Egypt, and which Jochebed was the mother of Aaron, Moſes, and Miriam; and it is obſerved that Aaron had four ſons, Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar, the two firſt of which died for offering ſtrange fire to the Lord, and the two laſt were now living: from Merari, another ſon of Levi, ſprang two families, the Mahlite and the Muſhite; and the whole number of the Levites at this time taken, was 23,000 males of a month old and upward; ſo that here was an increaſe of 1000 males ſince the former numbering of them: the reaſon why they were not numbered with the other tribes was, becauſe they had no part of the land of Iſrael divided to them, and had no inheritance in it.

℣. 63. Theſe are they that were numbered by Moſes and Eleazar the prieſt, &c.] That is, theſe were the Levites, their families, and the number of males in them, which was taken by Moſes and Eleazar, who might be only concerned in numbering the Levites, of which tribe they were: and who alſo numbered the children of Iſrael; all the tribes of them, with the aſſiſtance of their princes: in the plains of Moab by Jordan, near Jericho; as they were commanded by the Lord.

℣. 64. But among theſe there was not a man of them whom Moſes and Aaron the prieſt numbered, &c.] About 38 years before this time: this, as Aben Ezra obſerves, reſpects the numbering of the Iſraelites, not of the Levites; for there were ſome of the tribe of Levi numbered then who were living, as Eleazar, and very probably Ithamar, and perhaps ſome few more, though it may be, Eleazar being now a numberer, was not reckoned among the numbered: when they numbered the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs of Sinai; ſee ch. i. for as there were none of the tribe of Levi among the ſpies, there might be but few of them among the murmurers.

℣. 65. For the Lord had ſaid of them, they ſhall ſurely die in the wilderneſs, &c.] This was threatened them, ch. xiv. 32. and now it was fulfilled: and there was not left a man of them, ſave Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun; the only two of the ſpies that brought a good report of the land of Canaan; all the reſt of them, and thoſe that murmured on the ill report of theirs, were now dead.

CHAP. XXVII.

THIS chapter relates that upon a petition of the daughters of Zelophehad, the affair of inheritances was ſettled; and it is directed that in caſe of want of male-iſſue, inheritances ſhould paſs to females, and in failure of them to the next of kin, whether father's brethren or any near kinſman, ℣. 1—11. alſo an order to Moſes to go up to the mount Abarim, and take a view of the good land, and die; with the reaſon of it, ℣. 12, 13, 14. upon which Moſes deſires a ſucceſſor of him might be appointed, ℣. 15, 16, 17. in anſwer to which Joſhua is nominated, and being preſented before the high-prieſt and the people, was inveſted with his office, by impoſition of hands, and had his charge given him, ℣. 18—23.

℣. 1. Then came the daughters of Zelophehad, &c.] Who are mentioned among the families of Manaſſeh, under that of the Hepherites, ch. xxxvi. 33. their father being dead, and they having no brethren, when they heard the land was to be divided among thoſe that were numbered, and who were only males of twenty years old and upwards, were concerned, leſt they ſhould have no ſhare in the diviſion of the land; and therefore came, according to the Targum of Jonathan, to the houſe of judgment, [q] אישׁ viro, Montanus. Miſn. Biccurim, c. 1. §. 5.

[r] Vid. T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 122. 1.

[s] Maimon. & Bartenora in judgment, or court of judicature, where Moſes, the princes, &c. were now ſitting: the genealogy of Zelophehad is given; he was, the ſon of Hepher, the ſon of Gilead, the ſon of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, the ſon of Joſeph; by which it appears he was of the tribe of Manaſſeh, and of the fourth generation from him: and theſe are the names of his daughters, Mahlah, Noah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Tirzah; in the ſame order their names are given in ch. xxvi. 33. Joſh. xvii. 3. but in ch. xxxvi. 11. it is a little altered, Noah and Tirzah change places, which Jarchi ſays, ſhews they were upon an equality one with another.

℣. 2. And they ſtood before Moſes, and before Eleazar the prieſt, and before the princes, and all the congregation, &c.] Who were now ſitting in court, to hear and try cauſes brought before them; here were Moſes the chief magiſtrate, Eleazar the high-prieſt, the princes of the ſeveral tribes, and the repreſentatives of the whole congregation, or it may be the ſeventy elders; a very grand and auguſt aſſembly, before whom theſe ladies appeared, and from whom they might expect to have juſtice done them: by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; near to which this court was held, both for the convenience of the people, to apply to in caſe of need, when they came thither to worſhip, and of Moſes, to ſeek the Lord in caſe of any difficulty that might ariſe as now did: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 3. Our father died in the wilderneſs, &c.] As all the generation of the children of Iſrael did, that came out of Egypt, who were twenty years old and upwards, excepting Joſhua and Caleb: and he was not in the company of them that gathered themſelves together againſt the Lord in the company of Korah; which is obſerved, not ſo much to obtain the favour and good-will of Moſes, as to clear the memory of their father from any reproach upon it, he dying in the wilderneſs; and chiefly, to ſhew, that the claim of his poſterity to a ſhare in the land, was not forfeited, he not being in that rebellion, nor in any other; ſo that he and his were never under any attainder: but died in his own ſin; which, though common to all men, every man has his own peculiar way of ſinning, and is himſelf only anſwerable for it, Iſ. liii. 6. Ezek. xviii. 4. he ſinned alone, had no partner or confederate, whom he had drawn into any notorious and public ſin, as mutiny, &c. to the prejudice of the ſtate and the rulers in it; ſo the Targum of Jonathan adds, "and he did not cauſe others to "ſin," ſo Jarchi; ſome take him to be the ſabbath-breaker, ch. xv. 32, others that he was one of thoſe that went up the hill, ch. xiv. 44, 45. moſt likely his ſin was, that of unbelief, diſbelieving the ſpies that brought the good report of the land, and giving credit to thoſe that brought an ill report of it; and ſo with the reſt of the people murmured, for which his carcaſs, with others, fell in the wilderneſs, and entered not into the good land, through unbelief, a ſin not puniſhed in their children: and had no ſons; which was the reaſon of this application.

℣. 4. Why ſhould the name of our father be done away from among his family, becauſe he hath no ſon? &c.] Or be withdrawn, and his family loſe their part and ſhare on that account; this they thought was unreaſonable: according to the Targum of Jonathan, to prevent the name of their father being loſt, and his part in the land, their motion was, that their mother might marry their father's brother, according to the law in Deut. xxv. 5, 6. with which Jarchi agrees; but it does not appear that that law was as yet in being; though how otherwiſe the name of their father would be preſerved, than by raiſing up ſeed in that way, is not eaſy to ſay; except, as ſome think, it was done by a ſon of one of thoſe heireſſes, or by the firſt ſon of every one of them, being called after the name of their grandfather Zelophehad, or their mother's grandfather Hepher; though the Jews[t] commonly, by the name, underſtand no other than the inheritance, which ſeems to be confirmed by what follows: give us therefore a poſſeſſion among the brethren of our fathers; a part with their uncles, or their children; by which they expreſs their faith, that the children of Iſrael would inherit the land, though as yet it was not conquered, nor even entered into; and might ſignify, as ſome think, their concern to have a part and portion in the heavenly inheritance the land of Canaan was typical of; and if ſo, as Ainſworth obſerves, they may be conſidered as five wiſe virgins indeed.

℣. 5. And Moſes brought their cauſe before the Lord.] For it ſeems it was too difficult for this court to decide; and it devolving upon Moſes, as the preſident of it, and who only could have recourſe to God at all times, he carried it to him and conſulted with him about it: this, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem ſay, was one of the four cauſes that came before Moſes the prophet, that he ſolved according to the mind of the Lord, which he conſulted; one was concerning the blaſphemer, Lev. xxiv. 11. the other concerning thoſe defiled by the dead, Numb. ix. 8. the third concerning the ſabbath-breaker, ch. xv. 34. and the fourth was this; ſee the note on Lev. xxiv. 12.

℣. 6. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] From off the mercy-ſeat, where he conſulted him, and from whence he promiſed to commune with him about any difficult matter that came before him, Exod. xxv. 22. ſaying; as follows.

℣. 7. The daughters of Zelophehad ſpeak right, &c.] What is juſt and reaſonable: thou ſhalt ſurely give them a poſſeſſion of an inheritance among their father's brethren; their uncles, or rather the children of them; for it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, their father's brethren, or their uncles were dead alſo: or in giving thou ſhalt give[u]; which, according to Jarchi, denotes two parts or portions they ſhould receive; the part of their father, who was of them that came out of Egypt, and his part with his brethren in the goods of Hepher: in the Miſnah[w], from whence he ſeems to have taken it, it is; "the "daughters of Zelophehad took three parts for "inheritance; the part of their father, who was "with them that came out of Egypt, and his part "with his brethren in the goods of Hepher, and "becauſe he was the firſt-born he was to take two "parts:" and though this ſtrict command was given to Moſes, yet it does not reſpect him perſonally, who lived not to enter into the land to ſee it divided; but him who ſhould be his ſucceſſor, and chief magiſtrate at the time of the diviſion of it, which was Joſhua, and of whom theſe ladies claimed their part, and had it, Joſh xvii. 3, 4. and thou ſhalt cauſe the inheritance of their father to paſs unto them; that is, that part which would have fallen to him by lot, had he been living, theſe were

[t] Poſikta, T. Bab. Jebamot, fol. 40. 1. Moſes Cotzenſis Præcept. Affirm. 51. Apud Selden. de Succeſſion. ad leg. Ebr. c. 14. p. 97. 98.

[u] נתן תתן dando dabis, Pagninus, Montanus.

[w] Bava Bathra, c. 8. §. 3.

were to take, they ſtanding in his place; and ſo the portion of the land he would have had, was to be divided between theſe five daughters of his.

℣. 8. And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] The above affair occaſioned a law to be made, in which all the people would have a concern, among whom ſuch caſes ſhould happen, as after related: ſaying, if a man die, and have no ſon, then ye ſhall cauſe his inheritance to paſs unto his daughter; as in the above caſe of the daughters of Zelophehad; what was determined as to their particular caſe, was made into a general law.

℣. 9. And if he have no daughter, &c.] Dies without any iſſue: then ye ſhall give his inheritance unto his brethren; and the children deſcending from them; that is, if his father was dead, otherwiſe if he was living, he was to be preferred to them, according to the Jewiſh writers; though, according to our law, no eſtate in fee ſimple aſcends lineally, or goes from a ſon who has made a purchaſe of it, to a father: in the Miſnah it is ſaid[x], the order of inheritances is thus, "if a man dies and has no ſon, then they cauſe his inheritance to paſs to his daughter; a ſon is before a daughter, and all that deſcend from the ſon are before the daughter; the daughter is before the brethren (of her father), and thoſe that deſcend from the daughter are before the brethren; the brethren (of a man) are before his father's brethren (or his uncles); and they that deſcend from his brethren are before his father's brethren: this is the general rule, every one that is before in the inheritance, thoſe that deſcend from him are before others, and a father is before all that deſcend from him."

℣. 10. And if he have no brethren, &c.] Nor any deſcendants from them: then ye ſhall give his inheritance unto his father's brethren; that is, to his uncles, and to their children.

℣. 11. And if his father have no brethren, &c.] Nor any deſcending from them: then ye ſhall give his inheritance unto his kinſman that is next to him of his family; that is neareſt of kin to him, tho' ever ſo remote; that is of his father's family, not his mother's, which was no family: and he ſhall poſſeſs it; here the Jews have a ſaying, that an Iſraelite is never without heirs[y]: and it ſhall be unto the children of Iſrael a ſtatute of judgment; a judicial law, that ſhould ever remain firm, and ſure, and unalterable: as the Lord commanded Moſes; and therefore no man could diſpoſe of his eſtate or inheritance by will, otherwiſe than is ſet forth by this command.

℣. 12. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] After the covenant made with Iſrael in the plains of Moab, and the ſong delivered to them, Deut. xxix. 1. and xxxii. 1—49. get thee up to this mount Abarim; which was a range of mountains, ſo called from the paſſages by them over Jordan into the land of Canaan; one part of which was Nebo, and the top of that Piſgah, from whence Moſes had the view of the good land here directed to; ſee ch. xxxiii. 47. Deut. xxxii. 49. and xxxiv. 1. and ſee the land which I have given unto the children of Iſrael; for though he was now 120 years old, his eyes were not dim, he could ſee at a great diſtance; and the heighth of this hill gave him an advantage of taking a proſpect of the land, a great way into it; and very probably his ſight might be greatly ſtrengthened and increaſed at this time by the Lord, for the purpoſe: this may be an emblem of that ſight by faith, which believers have at times, of the heavenly Canaan, and ſometimes are favoured with an enlarged one of it before their death.

℣. 13. And when thou haſt ſeen it, &c.] Which was all he was admitted to; for to go into it and ſee it was not allowed him, though he importuned it, Deut. iii. 25, 26. thou ſhalt be gathered unto thy people as Aaron thy brother was gathered; die as he did, in the ſame ſudden, eaſy, quiet, and chearful manner; ſee ch. xx. 26, 27, 28.

℣. 14. For ye rebelled againſt my commandment in the deſert of Zin, &c.] Both Moſes and Aaron, which was the reaſon why they were not ſuffered to go into the land of Canaan, but died a little before the children of Iſrael came into it: what their ſin was, called here a rebelling againſt the commandment of the Lord, ſee on ch. xx. 12. and is next ſuggeſted: in the ſtrife of the congregation, to ſanctify me before their eyes; when the congregation of Iſrael ſtrove againſt the Lord for want of water, they did not ſanctify the Lord by believing in him; but expreſſed ſome degree of diffidence before the congregation, about fetching water out of the rock, or queſtioning whether the Lord would give it to ſuch a rebellious people, though they had his order for it: that is the water of Meribah in Kadeſh, in the wilderneſs of Zin; ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from another Meribah, or water of ſtrife at Rephidim, Exod. xvii. 7. ſee Deut. xxxii. 51.

℣. 15. And Moſes ſpake unto the Lord, &c.] Having requeſted to go into the land and ſee it, which was denied him; and perceiving he muſt quickly die, and being a man of a public ſpirit, and concerned for the welfare of the people of Iſrael, prays that a ſucceſſor might be nominated and appointed: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 16. Let the Lord, the God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, &c.] The maker of the ſouls of men, called the ſpirits of all fleſh, or of corporeal beings, to diſtinguiſh them from the angels, who, though ſpirits, are incorporeal; and who knows the different qualities of the ſouls of men, their powers, and capacities, and fitneſs for ſervice, what gifts and talents they have for buſineſs; and who can beſtow ſuch upon them, which will qualify them for it: ſet a man over the congregation; meaning in his room and ſtead.

℣. 17. Which may go out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out, and which may bring them in, &c.] Which may lead them out, and go before them in war, and command them in battle, and bring them in in peace, having conquered their enemies; or theſe phraſes only mean the adminiſtration of civil government among them, and diligence and aſſiduity in it, ſee 2 Chron. i. 10. unleſs it has any peculiar reſpect to the leading the people of Iſrael out of the wilderneſs, and introducing them into the land of Canaan: that the congregation of the Lord be not as ſheep which have no ſhepherd; and ſo wander about, having none to guide them into proper paſtures, or to protect them from beaſts of prey; which is to be in a moſt forlorn and diſtreſſed condition; ſee Matt. ix. 36.

℣. 18. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] In anſwer to his requeſt: take thou Joſhua the ſon of Nun; who had been a ſervant of his near forty years, and of whoſe humility, diligence, faithfulneſs and integrity he had ſufficient proof, as well as of his ſkill and courage in military affairs, particularly at the battle with Amalek, Exod. xvii. 9—13. and xxiv. 13. and xxxiii. 11: a man in whom whom is the ſpirit; not only in whom is a ſpirit or ſoul, which is in every man; but the Spirit of God, and that not only as a ſpirit of grace and ſanctification, which is in every good man; but as a ſpirit of prophecy, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; or rather it reſpects the more than ordinary gifts of the Spirit qualifying him for government, as courage and conduct, wiſdom, prudence and greatneſs of mind: and lay thine hand upon him; thereby transferring the government to him, pointing him out to the people as his ſucceſſor; to ſhew to the children of Iſrael that he was in his place, as Aben Ezra notes; upon which followed a larger meaſure of the gifts of the Spirit of God; ſee Deut. xxxiv. 9.

[x] Ut ſupra, §. 2.

[y] Maimon. Hilchot Nechalot, c. 1. §. 3.

℣. 19. And ſet him before Eleazar the prieſt, and before all the congregation, &c.] Declaring before them all, that he was his ſucceſſor, and that they might be witneſſes of what was ſaid and done unto him, and receive and acknowledge him as ſuch, and as having power and authority over them, which it became them to ſubmit unto: and give him a charge in their ſight; to take care of the people committed to him; to rule them in the fear of God, and according to his laws; and to be of good courage, and go before the people and introduce them into the land of Canaan; aſſuring him of the divine preſence and help, ſo that he need not fear any enemy whatever; of this charge, and as confirmed by the Lord himſelf, ſee Deut. xxxi. 7, 8, 23.

℣. 20. And thou ſhalt put ſome of thine honour upon him, &c.] Meaning not the ſpirit that was on Moſes, and the gifts of the ſpirit; for to do this was the work of the Lord, and not Moſes, ſee ch. xi. 17, 25. but of the honour of civil government; ſuggeſting that he ſhould give him a ſhare in it, and uſe him not as a miniſter and ſervant as he had been, but as his collegue and partner; and let him have ſome of the enſigns of power and authority, and ſome exerciſe of it; not only to inure him to government, but to make him reſpectable among the people: that all the congregation of Iſrael may be obedient; to him as their ruler and governor, hearken to his words, and obey his commands.

℣. 21. And he ſhall ſtand before Eleazar the prieſt, &c.] This was for the honour of God, whoſe prieſt Eleazar was, and whoſe oracle was conſulted by him; for it is ſaid [z], the high-prieſt did not come into the preſence of the king, but when he pleaſed; and he did not ſtand before him, but the king ſtood before the high-prieſt, as it is ſaid, and before Eleazar the prieſt ſhall he ſtand; though it is commanded the high-prieſt to honour the king, and to riſe up and ſtand when he comes unto him; and the king does not ſtand before him, but when he conſults for him by the judgment of Urim; and his poſture ſeems to be different from other perſons that conſulted; for the ſame writer [a] obſerves, in anſwer to a queſtion, "how do they conſult? the prieſt ſtands, and his face is before the ark, and he that conſults is behind him, and his face to the back of the prieſt;" whereas here Joſhua ſtood before the prieſt, and ſo any king or ſupreme governor: who ſhall aſk counſel for him after the judgment of Urim before the Lord; of the Urim and Thummim which were in the breaſt-plate of judgment, and of conſultation by them, ſee the note on Exod. xxviii. 30. and from this place the Jews [b] infer, that conſultation was not made by them for a private perſon, but for a king, or for one the congregation ſtood in need of: at his word ſhall they go out, and at his word ſhall they come in; go out to war, and return from it, or do any ſervice enjoined them; that is, either at the word of the Lord, or rather at the word of Eleazar the prieſt, declaring the will of God, which comes to much the ſame ſenſe; or at the word of Joſhua, directed by the high-prieſt, according to the oracle of God; and he being under ſuch direction, the people could never do amiſs in obeying him, or be in any fear or danger of being led wrong by him; but he is mentioned in the next clauſe, as included in thoſe that went out, and came in: both he, and all the children of Iſrael with him, even all the congregation; which Maimonides [c] interprets thus, he, this is the king; and all the children of Iſrael, this is the anointed for war, or he whom the congregation hath need of; and all the congregation, theſe are the great Sanhedrim, or ſeventy elders.

℣. 22. And Moſes did as the Lord commanded him, &c.] Being faithful and obedient to him in all things, though ever ſo contrary to his own private intereſt, and to that of his family: and he took Joſhua and ſet him before Eleazar the prieſt, and before all the congregation; as his ſucceſſor, whom God had named and appointed as ſuch.

℣. 23. And he laid his hands upon him, &c.] Jarchi obſerves, that he did this chearfully, and did more than he was commanded; for the Lord ſaid to him lay thine hand, but he laid both his hands: and gave him a charge, as the Lord commanded Moſes; ℣. 19. this is a clear proof that Moſes was no impoſtor, ſince he ſought not to aggrandize his family, or ſerve the intereſt of that; nor did he in the leaſt repine or murmur that the prieſthood was given to his brother Aaron and ſons, and now the civil government to his ſervant of the tribe of Ephraim; and as for his own poſterity, they were only common Levites that waited upon the prieſts.

CHAP. XXVIII.

IN this chapter is a repetition of ſeveral laws concerning ſacrifices, as the law of the daily ſacrifice morning and evening, ℣. 1—8. of thoſe that were offered every week on the ſabbath-day, ℣. 9, 10. and every month on the firſt day of the month, ℣. 11—15. and on the ſeven days of unleavened bread, ℣. 16—25. and at the feaſt of weeks, ℣. 26—31.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] The number of the children of Iſrael being taken, and orders given to divide the land unto them, according to their numbers; it was thought proper by the Lord to renew, or to put in mind of, the laws concerning ſacrifices which had been made, and which they were to obſerve when they came into the land of Canaan; and the rather this was neceſſary, [z] Maimon. Hilchot Melachim, c. 2. §. 5.

[a] Miſn. Yoma, c. 7. §. 5. Maimon. Cele, ib. §. 12.
[b] Maimon. Hilchot Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 10. §. 11.
[c] Ibid.

ſary; as it was now 38 years ago ſince theſe laws were firſt made, and during that time were much in diſuſe, at leaſt ſome of them: and beſides, this was a new generation of men, that were ſprung up, thoſe that were at mount Sinai at the giving of the law being all dead, except a very few; and now Moſes alſo was about to die, and would be no more with them to remind them of theſe laws, and ſee that they were obſerved; and a ſucceſſor of him being appointed and conſtituted, it may be likewiſe on his account, as well as the peoples, that theſe laws were repeated: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Command the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, &c.] For what follows concerned them all; namely, the offering of their daily, weekly, monthly and anniverſary ſacrifices, which were not for private perſons, but for the whole congregation; and theſe might be conſidered by them not merely as commands and duties to be obſerved, but as tokens of the divine favour to them, that notwithſtanding all their rebellions and provocations in the wilderneſs, ſacrifices for ſin were ordered, continued and accepted of by the Lord; and his acceptance of them, and well-pleaſedneſs in them; may eaſily be obſerved in the expreſſions uſed concerning them: my offering, and my bread; by offering may be meant in general all ſacrifices which were offered to the Lord, and by his command; and more eſpecially the burnt-offering, which was wholly and peculiarly his, and is after explained by ſacrifices made by fire, and it is chiefly of burnt-offerings this chapter treats; and by bread may be meant, either the ſhew-bread, which was ſet upon a table before the Lord continually, as his bread; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "my "oblation, the bread of the order of my table "ſhall the prieſts eat, but what ye offer on the "altar, no man has power to eat;" or elſe the meat-offering, or rather, as it may be called, the bread-offering, which always went along with burnt-offerings; though the copulative and, which is not in the text, may be omitted, and both may ſignify the ſame, my offering, that is, my bread; for the ſacrifices were the food of God, the proviſions of his houſe, of which there were all ſorts in the ſacrifices, fleſh, bread and wine; particularly the daily ſacrifice was his food every day, and the fat of ſacrifices burnt is called the food of the offering made by fire, Lev. iii. 16. ſo Jarchi interprets it, my offering, this is the blood; my bread, the amurim, or fat that covereth the inward parts which were burnt on the altar: for my ſacrifices made by fire for a ſweet ſavour unto me; which reſpects burnt-offerings, wholly conſumed by fire, and were entirely the Lord's, and which he ſmelled a ſweet ſavour in, or were acceptable to him: theſe the children of Iſrael were to obſerve to offer unto him in their due ſeaſon; the daily ſacrifice, morning and evening; not before morning, nor after evening, as Aben Ezra obſerves; and ſo all the reſt at the proper time fixed, whether weekly, monthly or yearly. The Jews from this phraſe, obſerve to offer unto me, conclude the neceſſity of fixing ſtations, or ſtationary men, as Jarchi notes; ſo the tradition is, "theſe are the ſtations, as it is ſaid, command the children of Iſrael, &c. but how can the offering of a man be offered, and he not ſtand by it? wherefore the former prophets appointed twenty-four courſes, and to every courſe there was a ſtation at Jeruſalem of prieſts, Levites, and Iſraelites; and when the time of each courſe came to go up, the prieſts and Levites went up to Jeruſalem, and the Iſraelites who belonged to that courſe went into their cities, and read the hiſtory of the creation [d]:" now theſe ſtations, or ſtationary men, were ſubſtitutes for, or repreſentatives of all Iſrael, and ſtood by the ſacrifices when they were offered, in which all Iſrael were concerned, as particularly in the daily ſacrifice, which is here firſt taken notice of.

℣. 3. And thou ſhalt ſay unto them, &c.] Having directed Moſes to command the people of Iſrael to obſerve to offer all the ſacrifices of God in general, the Lord proceeds to order him to ſpeak of them, to them particularly and diſtinctly; this, according to Jarchi, is an admonition to the Sanhedrim: this is the offering made by fire, which ye ſhall offer unto the Lord; the daily burnt-offering, which was wholly conſumed by fire: two lambs of the firſt year without ſpot day by day, for a continual burnt-offering; this law was made before, and is directed to in Exod. xxix. 38. where the ſame things are ſaid as here, only as a further deſcriptive character of the lambs, they are here ſaid to be without ſpot; ſo all ſacrifices were to be without blemiſh, whether expreſſed or not; and in this, as in other things, theſe lambs were typical of Chriſt, the Lamb of God, without ſpot and blemiſh; and are ſaid to be a continual burnt-offering, becauſe they were offered every day in the week, without any intermiſſion, on any account whatever, which is frequently obſerved in this chapter; and this was to continue, and did continue until the Meſſiah came, who put an end to it by the ſacrifice of himſelf, as to any real uſe of it; and was in fact made to ceaſe a few years after, by the utter deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and was before that a little while intermitted in the times of Antiochus, Dan. viii. 11, 12. and ix. 27.

℣. 4. The one lamb ſhalt thou offer in the morning, &c.] Every morning, to make atonement for the ſins of the night, as the Targum of Jonathan: and the other lamb ſhalt thou offer at even; or between the two evenings, to make atonement for the ſins of the day, as the ſame Targum; in which they prefigured Chriſt, the Lamb of God, who continually, every day, morning and night, and every moment, takes away the ſins of his people, through the virtue and efficacy of his ſacrifice, John i. 29. ſee the note on Exod. xxix. 39.

℣. 5. And the tenth part of an ephah of flour for a meat-offering, &c.] Which always went along with the burnt-offering: mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil; which in thoſe times and countries was uſed inſtead of butter; and fine flour, and this mingled together made a minchah, or bread-offering, as it ſhould rather be called; of the meaſures uſed, ſee the note on Exod. xxix. 40.

℣. 6. It is a continual burnt-offering, &c.] For the meat-offering was burnt as well as the lambs, at leaſt part of it: which was ordained in mount Sinai for a ſweet ſavour, a ſacrifice made by fire unto the Lord; that is, this law concerning the daily burnt-offering was made on mount Sinai, ſo long ago as the children of Iſrael were there; and it was then ordered, that they ſhould continually offer ſuch a ſacrifice by fire, which would be grateful and acceptable unto God, eſpecially when done in faith of the ſacrifice of his Son it was a type of; or which ſacrifice was made [e], or offered at mount Sinai, [d] Taanith, c. 4. §. 2.

[e] העשיה quod obtuliſtis, V. L. quod factum eſt, Pagninus; quod ſacrificatum fuerat, Piſcator.

Sinai, when the law of it was firſt given there: hence Aben Ezra obſerves, that this is a ſign that they did not offer burnt-offerings in the wilderneſs after they journeyed from Sinai; but then, tho' ſacrifices were not ſo frequently offered by them, as afterwards, yet one would think that the daily ſacrifice would not be omitted, which ſeemed to be always neceſſary; nor would there be any, or but little uſe of the altar, and the fire continually burning on it, if this was the caſe; ſee Amos v. 25.

℣. 7. And the drink-offering thereof ſhall be the fourth part of an hin for the one lamb, &c.] For the lamb offered in the morning, along with the meat-offering of which went a drink-offering, which was of wine, and ſtrong wine too, as the next clauſe expreſſes it; the quantity of which was the fourth part of an hin, which was about a quart and half a pint of our meaſure: in the holy place ſhalt thou cauſe the ſtrong wine to be poured unto the Lord for a drink-offering; that is, in the court of the tabernacle upon the altar of burnt-offering, which ſtood there: the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem interpret it of old choice wine, old wine being reckoned beſt, ſee Luke v. 39. and though this wine was poured out on the altar, and not properly drank by any, yet it was to be the ſtrongeſt, beſt and choiceſt that could be got, as it was reaſonable it ſhould; ſince it was poured out as a libation or drink-offering to the Lord, which was his way of drinking it, as the burning of the ſacrifice was his way of eating that; all which was typical of the ſufferings, ſacrifice and blood-ſhed of Chriſt, which are well-pleaſing and acceptable to the Lord; ſee Iſ. liii. 10. Eph. v. 2.

℣. 8. And the other lamb ſhalt thou offer at even, &c.] As before directed, ℣. 4: as the meat-offering of the morning, and as the drink-offering thereof ſhalt thou offer it; ſome think that Caph, as, is put for Beth, with, the letters being ſimiliar, and ſo render the words, with the meat-offering of the morning, and with the drink-offering thereof; but there is no need of ſuch a verſion, nor is it with propriety; and the meaning is, that a meat-offering and a drink-offering were to go with the lamb offered at evening, of the ſame ſort, and in like manner as were offered with the lamb of the morning: a ſacrifice made by fire of a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord; this is repeated, to encourage the people to offer it, and to ſhow how very acceptable it was to the Lord, eſpecially the antitype of it.

℣. 9. And on the ſabbath-day, two lambs of the firſt year without ſpot, &c.] Juſt ſuch as were appointed for the daily ſacrifice: and two tenth deals of flour for a meat-offering mingled with oil; that is, two tenth parts of an ephah of flour mixed with two fourth parts of an hin of oil; of oil-olive, as the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it, which is always meant, wherever oil is mentioned; which made one meat-offering to them doubled for both lambs, or two meat-offerings of the ſame quantity with thoſe of the daily ſacrifice, one for one lamb, and the other for the other: and the drink-offering thereof; which was of a like quantity of wine doubled, in proportion to the meat-offering; when theſe lambs with the meat and drink-offerings, were offered up, is not ſaid, whether the one in the morning after, and the other in the evening before the daily ſacrifice, which is not improbable, or both together.

℣. 10. This is the burnt-offering of every ſabbath, &c.] Or, of the ſabbath in its ſabbath[f], that is, as Jarchi obſerves, the burnt-offering of one ſabbath was not to be offered on another, but only on its own; ſo that if the ſabbath was paſt, and the offering not offered, it ceaſed; it was not to be renewed the following ſabbath; every ſacrifice was to be offered in its own ſeaſon, ℣. 2. beſide the continual burnt-offering, and its drink-offering; and meat-offering alſo, over and above the two lambs of the daily ſacrifice; with the offerings that were appendages to them, two other lambs with proportionate meat and drink-offerings were offered alſo; the other were not to be omitted on account of theſe, ſhewing that more religious ſervice was to be performed on ſabbath-days than on others: it may be rendered after or upon, to which ſenſe Aben Ezra interprets it, after the daily ſacrifice; becauſe, ſays he, he puts upon it the burnt-offering of the ſabbath; which ſeems to confirm what has been ſuggeſted on the preceding verſe, that theſe lambs were offered morning and evening after the daily ſacrifice, and indeed there was nothing offered before that.

℣. 11. And in the beginnings of your months ye ſhall offer a burnt-offering unto the Lord, &c.] On the firſt day of every month, when the new moon appeared; that this was religiouſly obſerved appears from the blowing of the trumpets over the ſacrifices on this day; from attendance on the word of the Lord, by his prophets on this day, and from abſtinence from worldly buſineſs on it, Numb. x. 10. 2 Kings iv. 23. Amos viii. 5. two young bullocks, and one ram, ſeven rams of the firſt year without ſpot; this was the burnt-offering, and a very large and coſtly one it was: more creatures were offered on this day than on a ſabbath-day; not that this was a more holy day than that, but this was but once a month, and therefore the expence might be the more eaſily bore, whereas that was every week.

℣. 12, 13, 14. And three tenth deals of fine flour for a meat-offering, mingled with oil, for one bullock, &c.] The quantities of flour in the meat-offering, for each bullock, and for the ram, and for each lamb, are the ſame as in ch. xv. 4 — 10. only the quantity of oil for each is not here expreſſed, which for a bullock was half an hin of oil, for a ram the third part of an hin, and for a lamb the fourth part; and likewiſe the quantity of wine in the drink-offerings for each of them is the ſame here as there; which, according to the Targum of Jonathan, was to be wine of grapes, and not any other: this is the burnt-offering of every month, throughout the year; or, of the month in its month[g]; it was to be offered at its appointed time every month, and not to be deferred to another: Jarchi has the ſame remark here as on ℣. 10. ſee the note there.

℣. 15. And one kid of the goats for a ſin-offering unto the Lord, ſhall be offered, &c.] This was an offering of a different ſort, not a burnt-offering, but a ſin-offering, typical of Chriſt, who was made an offering for ſin; and it was of that ſort of ſin-offerings which were to be eaten, as the Jews ſay [h]; for there were ſome that were not, even ſuch whoſe blood blood was brought into the ſanctuary, Lev. vi. 30. Maimonides [1] obſerves, that this phraſe unto the Lord, is very particular and expreſſive, and that the deſign of it is, to obſerve that it was offered to the Lord, and not to the moon, as the Egyptians did: beſides the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering; though the burnt-offering of this day was ſo very large, conſiſting of ſo many creatures; and beſides that a goat for a ſin-offering; yet the daily ſacrifice was not to be omitted, and what belonged to that.

[f] שבת בשבתו ſabbathi in ſabbatho ejus, Pagninus, Montanus, Fagius, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [g] חדש בחדשו menſis in menſe ejus, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus. [h] Maimon. Hilchot Tamidin, c. 7. §. 2.

℣. 16. And in the fourteenth day of the firſt month, &c.] The month Niſan, as the Targum of Jonathan, or Abib, which upon the Iſraelites coming out of Egypt, and on that account, was made the firſt month; otherwiſe Tiſri or September was the firſt month, ſee Exod. xii. 2. and xiii. 4. is the paſſover of the Lord; a feaſt in which a lamb was killed and eaten, in memory of the Lord's paſſing over the houſes of the Iſraelites, when he ſlew the firſt-born in Egypt; ſee Exod. xii. 6, 18, 23, 27.

℣. 17. And in the fifteenth day of this month is the feaſt, &c.] Not of the paſſover, that was the day before, but of unleavened bread, which began on this day, and laſted ſeven days, Lev. xxiii. 6. which is what the Jews call the Chagigah: ſeven days ſhall unleavened bread be eaten; ſee Exod. xii. 15, 18.

℣. 18. In the firſt day ſhall be an holy convocation, &c.] The firſt of the ſeven days, which was kept in a very religious manner: ye ſhall do no manner of ſervile work therein; except by preparing food to eat; ſee Exod. xii. 16.

℣. 19. But ye ſhall offer a ſacrifice made by fire for a burnt-offering unto the Lord, &c.] Which was to be of the creatures next mentioned; two young bullocks, &c, the ſame with the burnt-offering on the firſt day of the month, ℣. 11.

℣. 20, 21. And their meat-offering, &c.] The quantity of flour for which is the ſame for a bullock, a ram, and a lamb, as in ℣. 12, 13.

℣. 22. And one goat for a ſin-offering, to make atonement for you.] For notwithſtanding all their ſervices and ſacrifices, and though this day was an holy convocation, yet there was need of a ſin-offering to expiate their guilt, typical of Chriſt, who takes away the ſins of our holy things as well as all other ſins: this ſin-offering alſo was of that ſort which were eaten; for Maimonides ſays [k], the goat of the ſin-offering was eaten on the ſecond day of the paſſover, which was the 16th of Niſan.

℣. 23. Ye ſhall offer theſe beſide the burnt-offering in the morning, &c.] The daily morning-ſacrifice, and alſo beſides the daily evening-ſacrifices, though it is not expreſſed: which is for a continual burnt-offering; and not to be intermitted on any account, let the ſacrifices of the day be ever ſo numerous; great care is taken to obſerve this.

℣. 24. After this manner ye ſhall offer daily throughout the ſeven days, &c.] That is, two bullocks, one ram, and ſeven lambs, for a burnt-offering, on every one of the ſeven days; but then they were not all holy convocations, only the firſt and laſt: the meat of the ſacrifice made by fire, of a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord; it ſeems by this, that only the burnt-offering was offered up every day, but not a goat of the ſin-offering, that was peculiar to the firſt day: it ſhall be offered beſide the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering; which is again repeated, that it might be diligently obſerved.

℣. 25. And on the ſeventh day ye ſhall have an holy convocation, &c.] As on the firſt: ye ſhall do no ſervile work; unleſs in dreſſing food.

℣. 26. Alſo in the day of the firſt-fruits, &c.] When the firſt-fruits of the wheat-harveſt were brought unto the Lord, which was the day of pentecoſt, fifty days from the ſheaf of the wave-offering being brought: when ye bring a new meat-offering unto the Lord; that is, a meat-offering made of the new corn, which were two wave-loaves of two tenth deals of fine flour, baked with leaven, Lev. xxiii. 15, 16, 17. after your weeks be out; the ſeven weeks from the paſſover to pentecoſt, even ſeven compleat ſabbaths or weeks, Lev. xxiii. 15. ye ſhall have an holy convocation, ye ſhall do no ſervile work; ſee Lev. xxiii. 21.

℣. 27—30. But ye ſhall offer the burnt-offering for a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord, &c.] Which was of the ſame kind, and was of the ſame number of creatures as on the firſt day of the month, and on the ſeven days of unleavened bread, ℣. 11, 19, 24. and the meat-offering which went along with this, was of the ſame quantity of flour to each creature as in the above-mentioned ſacrifices; and on this day alſo was offered a kid of the goats for a ſin-offering; and there were alſo peace-offerings which are not mentioned here, nor is there any mention of any in the whole chapter; ſee Lev. xxiii. 19.

℣. 31. And ye ſhall offer them beſides the continual burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, &c.] The daily ſacrifice of the morning and evening, ſo often mentioned in this chapter, and ſo frequently inculcated as not to be omitted, either in the weekly, monthly, or anniverſary feſtivals; it being ſo neceſſary a ſacrifice, and ſo eminent a type of the great ſacrifice of the Meſſiah: they ſhall be unto you without blemiſh, and their drink offerings; the flour, of which the meat-offerings were made was to be pure and clean, and free from vermin; and the wine for the drink-offering was not to be palled, and dead, and dreggy: of the former, it is ſaid in the Miſnah [l], "the treaſurer puts his hand into it (the flour) if there comes any duſt with it," it is rejected; if it produces worms it is rejected: this the commentators ſay [m], is to be underſtood, if the greateſt part of it is ſuch; and with reſpect to the latter, Jarchi ſays, our Rabbins learn from hence (this paſſage of ſcripture) that wine in which flour riſes (or a dregginеſs like flour) it is unfit for drink-offerings, for they ſhould be perfect: this denotes the purity of Chriſt, the bread of life, and his ſpotleſs and perfect ſacrifice, when his ſoul was poured out unto death.

[1] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 46. p. 488.
[m] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.
[k] Tamidin, ib. §. 3.
[l] Menachot, c. 8. §. 2.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXIX.

IN this chapter an account is given of the various offerings on the ſeveral remarkable days in the 7th month of the year; at the feaſt of blowing the trumpets on the firſt day of the month, ℣. 1—6. at the great faſt or day of atonement, which was the 10th of the month, ℣. 7—11. and at the feaſt of tabernacles, which began on the 15th day of the ſame month, and continued eight days, and the ſacrifices of every day are particularly mentioned; of the firſt day, ℣. 12—16. of the ſecond day, ℣. 17, 18, 19. of the third day, ℣. 20, 21, 22. of the fourth day, ℣. 23, 24, 25. of the fifth day, ℣. 26, 27, 28. of the ſixth day, ℣. 29, 30, 31. of the ſeventh day, ℣. 32, 33, 34. and of the eighth day, ℣. 35—38. which ſacrifices were to be offered, beſides their vows and free-will-offerings, of which Moſes gave a faithful account, according to the command of God, ℣. 39, 40.

℣. 1. And in the ſeventh month, &c.] The month Tiſri, as the Targum of Jonathan, which anſwers to part of our September and October; a month famous for days to be religiouſly obſerved, having more of them in it than any other month in the year: on the firſt day of the month, ye ſhall have an holy convocation; ſee Lev. xxiii. 24. ye ſhall do no ſervile work; and therefore in the place referred to, is called a ſabbath: it is a day of blowing the trumpets unto you; of which, ſee the note on the above place.

℣. 2. And ye ſhall offer a burnt-offering for a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord, &c.] Which was as follows: one young bullock, one ram, and ſeven lambs of the firſt year without blemiſh; which was the ſame, only one bullock leſs, with the offerings on the firſt day of the month, the ſeven days of unleavened bread, and the day of the firſt-fruits, ch. xxviii. 11, 19, 27.

℣. 3, 4, 5. And their meat-offering, &c.] Which went along with the creatures offered for a burnt-offering; the quantity of flour and oil uſed in it was the ſame, for a bullock, a ram, and each lamb, as in the offerings at the new moons, feaſt of unleavened bread, and the day of firſt-fruits, ch. xxviii. 12, 13, 20, 21, 28, 29. and a kid of the goats was alſo offered for a ſin-offering at this time, as in thoſe ſeaſons, and for the ſame purpoſe, to make atonement for the ſins of their holy things.

℣. 6. Beſide the burnt-offering of the month, and his meat-offering, &c.] The bullock, ram, and ſeven lambs, were offered on this day, beſides the two bullocks, one ram, and ſeven lambs, which were offered on it, on account of its being the firſt day of the month; and beſides the meat-offering that went along with them; theſe were not omitted on account of thoſe additional ſacrifices: and the daily burnt-offering; the two lambs of the daily ſacrifice; theſe alſo were offered as uſual, ſo that there were offered on this day three bullocks, two rams, and ſixteen lambs: and his meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, according to their manner; theſe alſo were offered with the daily ſacrifice, according to the law and rule preſcribed, for the making of them, and all were, for a ſweet ſavour, a ſacrifice made by fire unto the Lord; for they were burnt-ſacrifices, and very acceptable to the Lord, as they were types of the better ſacrifice, with which he is infinitely well pleaſed; and it is with reſpect to that, that ſuch a number of ſacrifices were appointed.

℣. 7. And ye ſhall have on the tenth day of the ſeventh month an holy convocation, &c.] The month Tiſri, as before; ſo the Targum of Jonathan: and ye ſhall afflict your ſouls; or perſons; their bodies by faſting, and their ſouls by repentance and humiliation; for this was a grand faſt, as it is called Acts xxvii. 9. ye ſhall not do any work therein; ſee Lev. xxiii. 28.

℣. 8. But ye ſhall offer a burnt-offering unto the Lord, &c.] Which is the ſame as ordered to be offered on the firſt day, ℣. 2. Aben Ezra is of opinion, that the ram here is different from thoſe in Lev. xvi. 3, 5, 24.

℣. 9, 10. And their meat-offering, &c.] Which was of the ſame quantity of flour and oil, for a bullock, a ram, and a lamb, as for the meat-offering on the firſt day of the month.

℣. 11. One kid of the goats for a ſin-offering, &c.] This alſo as it was different from that which was offered for the ſervice of the day, ſo it was offered after it; as is obſerved by the Jewiſh writers, that the goat, which was offered without, though of the Muſaphim or additions, could not go before the ſervice of the day; for it is ſaid as follows, beſide the ſin-offering of atonement; hence ſay they, we learn, that the goat within, which was of the ſervice of the day, went before it; [n] after that the ram of Aaron, and the ram of the people, and after that the fat of the ſin-offering: and the continual burnt-offering, and the meat-offering of it, and their drink-offerings; which were never omitted on account of the ſervice of any day, though ever ſo ſolemn, as this was: hence it appears, that there were offered on this day of atonement two bullocks, three rams, three goats, and two lambs.

℣. 12. And on the fifteenth day of the ſeventh month ye ſhall have an holy convocation, &c.] Of the ſame month Tiſri, which was the ſeventh from Niſan or Abib, though it was formerly the firſt month of the year: ye ſhall do no ſervile work, and ye ſhall keep a feaſt unto the Lord ſeven days; the feaſt of tabernacles, which began on the 15th day of this month.

℣. 13—34. And ye ſhall offer a burnt-offering, &c.] That is, on the firſt of the ſeven days, which was as follows: thirteen young bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the firſt year, they ſhall be without blemiſh; a very large ſacrifice indeed, for theſe were offered beſides one kid of the goats, for a ſin-offering, and the two lambs of the daily ſacrifice, which were not omitted on account of this extraordinary offering; ſo that there were no leſs than 32 creatures ſacrificed on this day: the meat and drink-offerings for each, according to the kind of them, were as uſual, and as before frequently obſerved; and the ſame ſacrifices, meat-offerings and drink-offerings were offered on the ſix following days of the feaſt, only with this difference, that there was one bullock leſs every day; which it is thought may denote the decreaſe of ſin in the Lord's people, and ſo an increaſe of holineſs, or rather the gradual waxing old and vaniſhing away of

[n] Bartenora in Miſn. Yoma, c. 7. §. 3.

of the ceremonial law, and the ſacrifices of it; and theſe bullocks ending in the number ſeven, which is a number of perfection, may lead us to think of the great ſacrifice theſe all typified, whereby Chriſt has perfected them that are ſanctified.

℣. 35. On the eighth day ye ſhall have a ſolemn aſſembly, &c.] The day after the ſeven days of the feaſt of tabernacles were ended; for this was not properly a part of that feaſt, but was a ſort of appendage to it; ye ſhall do no ſervile work therein; ſee the note on Lev. xxiii. 36.

℣. 36, 37, 38. But ye ſhall offer a burnt-offering, &c.] Which was the ſame that was offered on the firſt and tenth days of this month, ℣. 2, 8. and the meat and drink-offerings for each of the creatures were the ſame, as often expreſſed; and on this day a goat for a ſin-offering was alſo offered, beſides the daily ſacrifice, and what went along with that.

℣. 39. Theſe things ye ſhall do to the Lord, in your ſet feaſts, &c.] Or rather in the times ſet and appointed to you, as the Jewiſh writers [o] interpret it; and ſo Jarchi interprets it of a fixed time, which ſeems better; ſince theſe were not all feaſt-days, on which the above ſacrifices were to be offered, for one of them was a faſt, even the day of atonement: beſides your vows, and your free-will-offerings; which might be offered up at any time, notwithſtanding the above ſacrifices, which were neceſſary and obligatory; but theſe were at their own option: for your burnt-offerings, and for your meat-offerings, and your drink-offerings, and for your peace-offerings; of which ſee Lev. vii. 11—16.

℣. 40. And Moſes told the children of Iſrael, &c.] All theſe things; repeated the ſeveral laws unto them concerning the above ſacrifices, with the additions unto them, and explanations of them: according to all that the Lord commanded Moſes; being a faithful ſervant to the Lord in all his houſe, and in all things appertaining to it.

CHAP. XXX.

MENTION being made in the latter part of the preceding chapter, of vows to be performed to the Lord, beſides the ſacrifices directed to; here ſome account is given of them, and men are charged to fulfil, and not break them, ℣. 1, 2. but as to women, if a maid, being in her father's houſe, made a vow in his hearing, and he ſilent at it, her vow ſtood; but if he diſapproved of it, it was null and void, ℣. 3, 4, 5. and ſo a wife, when ſhe vowed a vow in the hearing of her huſband, and he ſaid not ought againſt it, it was valid; but if he objected to it, it ſtood for nothing, ℣. 6, 7, 8. likewiſe a widow, or one divorced, that made a vow in her huſband's houſe, before he died, or ſhe was put away from him, and he did not contradict it, it remained in force and to be fulfilled; but if he made it void, it ſtood not, and ſhe was forgiven, ℣. 9—12. it being in an huſband's power to confirm or make null a vow or oath, made by his wife to afflict her ſoul; but if he made any void after he heard them, and had been ſilent, he himſelf was to bear her iniquity, ℣. 13—16.

℣. 1. And Moſes ſpake unto the heads of the tribes, &c.] Or the princes of them, who could more eaſily be convened, and who uſed to meet on certain occaſions, and on whom it lay to ſee various laws put in execution: concerning the children of Iſrael; how they ought to conduct and behave in the following caſe, it being an affair which concerned them all: ſaying, this is the thing which the Lord hath commanded; relating to vows. Aben Ezra is of opinion, that this was delivered after the battle with Midian, of which there is an account in the following chapter, and is occaſioned by what was ſaid to the tribes of Gad and Reuben, ch. xxxii. 24, 25. do that which hath proceeded out of your mouth; to which they replied, thy ſervants will do as my lord commandeth; upon which the nature of a vow, and the manner of keeping it, are obſerved; but the occaſion of it rather ſeems to be, what is ſaid towards the cloſe of the foregoing chapter, ℣. 39. that the various ſacrifices there directed, were to be offered in their ſeaſon, beſides the vows and free-will-offerings; and when theſe were ratified and confirmed, and when null and void, and to be fulfilled or neglected, is the principal buſineſs of this chapter.

℣. 2. If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, &c.] Which muſt be in a thing that is lawful to be done, which is not contrary to the revealed will and mind of God, and which may tend to the glory of God, the honour of religion, the ſervice of the ſanctuary, the good of a man's ſelf, or of his neighbour; or in things purely indifferent, which may, or may not be done, without offence to God or man; as that he will not eat ſuch a thing for ſuch a time, or he will do this or the other thing, as Jarchi obſerves; who moreover ſays, that he may forbid himſelf what is forbidden, and forbid what is free and lawful; but he may not make free or lawful what is forbidden, that is, he may not vow to do a thing which is contrary to the law of God, ſuch a vow will not ſtand: and he was to be of ſuch an age before he could make a vow that would be valid; according to the Targum of Jonathan, he muſt be 13 years of age; it is ſaid in the Miſnah [p], "a ſon of 12 years and one day, his vows are examined; a ſon of 13 years and one day, his vows are firm, and they examine the whole 13th year before that time; although they ſay we know to whoſe name (or on whoſe account) we vow or conſecrate, their vow is no vow, nor their conſecration no conſecration; but after that time, though they ſay we know not to whoſe name (or on whoſe account) we vow or conſecrate, their vow is a vow, and their conſecration a conſecration:" or ſwear an oath to bind his ſoul with a bond; to his vow adds an oath for the greater confirmation of it, and to lay himſelf under the greater obligation to perform it: he ſhall not break his word; or profane it [q], but punctually perform it; men ſhould be careful how they vow, and not raſhly do it; but when they have vowed, they ought to perform; ſee Eccl. v. 4, 5. Deut. xxiii. 21, 22, 23: he ſhall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth; it is not in his power to revoke his vow or make it null: the Miſnic doctors [r] ſay, a man can looſe all vows, excepting his own. R. Judah ſays, not

[o] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Peſach. c. 7. §. 4.
[r] Negaim, c. 5. §. 5.
[p] Niddah, c. 5. §. 6.
[q] לא יחל׃

not the vows of his wife, nor thoſe which are between her and others; that is, as one of the commentators [s] explains it, ſuch vows which are not made to afflict, or reſpect not faſting; but according to the Targum of Jonathan, though a man cannot looſe his vows, or free himſelf from them; yet the Sanhedrim, or court of judicature can, or a wiſe man that is authenticated thereby, as Jarchi ſays, or three private perſons; but theſe are ſuch traditions, which make void the commandment of God, as our Lord complains, Matt. xv.

℣. 3. If a woman alſo vow a vow unto the Lord, &c.] Who has not paſſed 13 years, as the Targum of Jonathan: and bind herſelf by a bond; lay herſelf under obligation to perform her vow by an oath: being in her father's houſe; unto the 12th year, as the ſame Targum; that is, that is under his care, tuition and juriſdiction, whether ſhe literally, or properly ſpeaking, is in the houſe or no at the time ſhe vows; ſo Jarchi interprets it of her being in the power of her father, though not in his houſe, ſhe being not at age to be at her own diſpoſal, but at his: wherefore it is added, in her youth; which, as the ſame writer explains it, ſignifies that ſhe is "neither a little one, nor at age; for a little one's vow is no vow, and one at age is not in the power of her father to make void her vow: who is a little one? our Rabbins ſay, one of eleven years of age and one day, her vows are examined, whether ſhe knows on whoſe account ſhe vows and conſecrates, or devotes any thing; one vows a vow that is twelve years and one day old there is no need to examine them." He ſeems to refer to a paſſage in the Miſnah [t], "a daughter of eleven years and one day, her vows are examined; a daughter of twelve years and one day, her vows are firm, but they are to be examined thro' the whole twelfth year."

℣. 4. And her father hear her vow, and her bond wherewith ſhe hath bound her ſoul, &c.] Her vow which is binding upon her, or her vow and an oath annexed to it, which makes it ſtill more ſtrongly binding; and this he hears himſelf, or it is reported to him by others: and her father ſhall hold his peace at her; ſhall not reprove her for it, nor contradict her in it: then all her vows ſhall ſtand; be they what, or as many as they may: and every bond wherewith ſhe hath bound her ſoul, ſhall ſtand; his ſilence being to be interpreted as approving of them, and conſenting to them.

℣. 5. But if her father diſallow her in the day that he heareth, &c.] Diſapproves of her vow, and expreſſes his diſlike of it, and declares it null and void; which, if done at all, is to be done on the ſame day he hears it, and not on another day, as Aben Ezra obſerves; not the day following, and much leſs on a third or fourth day, &c. and it might be done on a ſabbath-day [u]: not any of her vows, or of her bonds wherewith ſhe bound her ſoul, ſhall ſtand; but become null and void, ſhe being at the controul of her father, and having nothing in her own power, and at her own diſpoſal to vow or conſecrate, but wholly in the power and at the diſpoſal of her father: and the Lord ſhall forgive her; the breach of her vow, it ſhall not be imputed to her as a ſin: becauſe her father diſallowed her; ſo that it was no fault of hers that it was not fulfilled; though ſhe might be blameworthy to make one, without previouſly obtaining his conſent, and making it raſhly without his previous knowledge, ſhe not being at her own hands; and in this reſpect may be ſaid to be forgiven by the Lord, which ſuppoſes ſome fault committed.

℣. 6. And if ſhe had at all an huſband with whom ſhe vowed, &c.] Or when her vows were upon her [w], was either betrothed or married to a man: or uttered ought out of her lips, wherewith ſhe bound her ſoul; uttered any thing, either with or without premeditation, either with thought and deliberation, or raſhly and imprudently, as the word ſignifies, yet in ſuch a manner that it was binding upon her.

℣. 7. And her huſband heard it, and held his peace at her in the day that he heard it, &c.] The vow ſhe made, and by his ſilence conſented to it: then her vows ſhall ſtand, and her bonds wherewith ſhe bound her ſoul, ſhall ſtand; or ſhe be under obligation to perform them.

℣. 8. But if her huſband diſallow her on the day that he heard it, &c.] Expreſſes his diſlike of it; and this he does as ſoon as he hears it, at leaſt that ſame day; according to the Jews [x], within the ſpace of 24 hours: then he ſhall make her vow which ſhe vowed, and that which ſhe uttered with her lips, wherewith ſhe bound her ſoul, of none effect; by contradicting it, and forbidding the performance of it; or however by declaring to her, or to others, that it is not agreeable to his mind and will that it ſhould be fulfilled: and the Lord ſhall forgive her; excuſe her performance of the vow, and not impute ſin to her on that account, nor puniſh for the breach of it, ſhe being under the cover of her huſband, and obliged to ſubmit to his will. According to Jarchi, the ſcripture ſpeaks of a woman that vows to be a Nazarite; her huſband hears and makes it void; but ſhe does not know it, and tranſgreſſes her vow, and drinks wine, and is defiled with the dead, ſo that ſhe has need of forgiveneſs, though it is made void; and if vows made void, he adds, have need of pardon, much more thoſe that are not.

℣. 9. But every vow of a widow, &c.] The ſcripture ſpeaks, as Jarchi ſays, of a widow from marriage, or that has been married, but a widow from eſpouſals (or that has been only eſpouſed) the huſband dead, the power is tranſmitted, and returns to the father; and with reſpect to ſuch a caſe, it is ſaid in the Miſnah [y], "if the father (of ſuch a betrothed perſon) dies, the power is not tranſmitted to the huſband; but if the huſband dies, the power is tranſmitted to the father; in this caſe, greater is the power of a father than of an huſband; in others, greater is the power of an huſband than of a father, becauſe an huſband makes void (the vow of) one at age, but a father does not make void (the vow of) ſuch a one:" and of her that is divorced; from her huſband on ſome account or another; now in each of theſe caſes, the one being looſed from the law of her huſband by death, and the other by a bill of divorce, if they vowed, the vows wherewith they have bound their ſouls, ſhall ſtand againſt her; againſt either of them, they having none over them to diſapprove of, contradict and make void their vows.

℣. 10. And if ſhe vowed in her huſband's houſe, &c.] Before his death, in his life-time, or before divorced: the Targum of Jonathan adds, by way of explanation, "and not at age for marriage," underſtanding it of a betrothed, and not a married perſon; perſon; but Jarchi ſays, the ſcripture ſpeaks of a married one, which ſeems moſt likely: or bound her ſoul by a bond with an oath; to fulfil her vow, to abſtain from this, or to do that, or the other thing.

[s] Bartenora in ib. [t] Niddah, ut ſupra.
[u] Miſn. Sabbat, c. 24. §. 5. [w] ונדריה עליה׃
[x] Leo Modena's Hiſtory of Rites, &c. par. 2. c. 4. [y] Nedarim, c. 10. §. 2.

℣. 11. And her huſband heard it, and held his peace at her, and diſallowed her not, &c.] Heard her make her vow, and bind it with an oath, and was ſilent at it, which was conſenting to it, and did not contradict her, nor ſhew any diſpleaſure or reſentment at her on account of it; the Targum of Jonathan adds, "and died before ſhe was at age;" but what follows held good equally of one that was at age for marriage, and actually married to him: then all her vows ſhall ſtand, and every bond wherewith ſhe bound her ſoul, ſhall ſtand; be ratified and confirmed, and ſhe be under obligation to make them good.

℣. 12. But if her huſband hath utterly made them void on the day he heard them, &c.] Declaring they were contrary to his mind and will, he diſapproved of them, and forbid the carrying them into execution: then whatſoever proceeded out of her lips concerning her vows, or concerning the bond of her ſoul, ſhall not ſtand; though her huſband be dead, or ſhe be divorced from him: her huſband hath made them void, and the Lord ſhall forgive her; ſhe will neither incur his diſpleaſure for not fulfilling her vow, nor have any puniſhment inflicted on her: the Targum of Jonathan is, "if her huſband makes them void, and ſhe knows it not "and tranſgreſſes, it ſhall be forgiven her by the "Lord."

℣. 13. Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the ſoul, &c.] By faſting, as Aben Ezra obſerves; as when a vow was made, or a perſon bound herſelf by an oath, to abſtain from ſuch and ſuch food, or to faſt on ſuch a day; to keep a faſt which was not appointed, to ſet apart a day for faſting, beſides the grand and general faſt on the day of atonement: Jarchi from hence gathers, that a man only makes vows of afflicting the ſoul, or vows of faſting; but this is not ſaid by way of limitation and reſtriction, but by way of amplification and illuſtration, giving a particular inſtance, by which others may be judged of: her huſband may eſtabliſh it, or her huſband may make it void; juſt as he pleaſed; and this power an huſband had, to prevent confuſion in the family, and trouble in the affairs of it, by vowing abſtinence from ſuch and ſuch food, or from ſuch and ſuch liquor, and the like; and to prevent running into expences he was not able to anſwer by vowing, and dedicating this and the other to holy uſes, for ſacrifices, and repairs of the temple, and the like.

℣. 14. But if her huſband altogether hold his peace at her from day to day, &c.] Said not one word to her day after day, neither on the day he heard her vow, nor the day following: then he eſtabliſheth all her vows, or all her bonds, which are upon her; by his ſilence: he confirmeth them, becauſe he held his peace at her, in the day that he heard them; for not to contradict them was to confirm them.

℣. 15. But if he ſhall any ways make them void, after that he hath heard them, &c.] Some way or other expreſſing his diſlike of them; not at the time he heard them, but ſome time afterwards; one day after, as the Targum of Jonathan: then he ſhall bear his iniquity; be accountable for the breach of the vow, the ſin ſhall be reckoned to him, and he ſhall bear the puniſhment of it, becauſe he ought to have declared his diſapprobation of it ſooner; and it may be, his doing it when he did, was only in a ſpirit of contradiction, or through covetouſneſs; and it would have been more adviſeable to have let the vow ſtand, and therefore acted a criminal part, and ſo was anſwerable for it; the Targum of Jonathan explains it, "her huſband or her "father ſhall bear her iniquity," ſuppoſing her not to be at age: Aben Ezra gives the reaſon of it, becauſe ſhe is in his power.

℣. 16. Theſe are the ſtatutes which the Lord commanded Moſes between a man and his wife, &c.] Relating to vows made by the wife, and confirmed or diſannulled by the huſband: Aben Ezra adds, if ſhe is at age or in puberty, underſtanding it of a married and not a betrothed wife: between the father and his daughter; if ſhe is not at age, as the ſame writer obſerves; for if ſhe is at age he has nothing to do with her vows: being yet in her youth; not at age, being not 12 years and one day old: in her father's houſe; in his power and juriſdiction, and at his diſpoſal, and ſo could make her vows void or firm, as he pleaſed: this power of ratifying or diſannulling vows, an huſband had over his wife, and a father over his daughter, to prevent imprudent and extravagant vows, and the two frequent uſe of them, the conſequences of which might be bad in families.

CHAP. XXXI.

THIS chapter contains an order to make war upon Midian, which was accordingly done, 1—12. but Moſes was wroth, becauſe they ſaved the women alive, who, through the counſel of Balaam, had been the cauſe of ſin, and of the plague for it in Iſrael, and therefore orders them, and the male-children, to be ſlain, ℣. 13—18. and then directs to the purification of the ſoldiers, their captives and ſpoil, ℣. 19—24. and by the command of God, an account is taken of the prey, and a diviſion of it made between the ſoldiers and the congregation, and out of each part a tribute is levied for the Lord, ℣. 25—31. and the ſum of the whole booty is given, ℣. 32—35. and of the part which belonged to the ſoldiers, and of the tribute given to the Lord, ℣. 36—41. and of the part which belonged to the children of Iſrael, ℣. 42—47. and beſides the above tribute to the Lord, the officers made a voluntary oblation out of their ſpoil, both by way of gratitude for ſparing their lives, and to make atonement for their ſouls, ℣. 48—54.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After the plague upon Iſrael for their fornication and idolatry, into which they were drawn by the daughters of Moab and Midian, and after the ſum of the people was taken in the plains of Moab, and various laws given or repeated, and a little before the death of Moſes: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Avenge the children of Iſrael of the Midianites, &c.] For the injury they had done them, by ſending their daughters among them, who enticed them to commit uncleanneſs with them, and then drew them into the worſhip of their idols, which brought the wrath of God upon them, and for which 24,000 perſons were ſlain. Now, tho' the Moabites had a concern in this affair as well as the Midianites, yet they were ſpared; which ſome think was for the ſake of Lot, from whom they deſcended; but why not the Midianites for the ſake of Abraham, whoſe offſpring they were by Ketu rah? Jarchi ſays, they were ſpared becauſe of Ruth, who was to ſpring from them; and ſo ſhe might, and yet vengeance be taken on great numbers of them: but the truer reaſon ſeems to be, either becauſe the ſin of the Moabites was not yet full, and they were reſerved for an after-puniſhment; or rather becauſe they were not the principal actors in the above affair; but the Midianites, who ſeem to have adviſed Balak at firſt to ſend for Balaam to curſe Iſrael, and who harboured that ſoothſayer after he had been diſmiſſed by Balak, and to whom he gave his wicked counſel, and which they readily followed, and induſtriouſly purſued: afterward ſhalt thou be gathered unto thy people; or die, ſee ch. xxvii. 13. it being ſome ſatisfaction to him to ſee the good land, as he did from Abarim, and the Iſraelites avenged on their enemies before his death.

℣. 3. And Moſes ſpake unto the people, ſaying, &c.] In obedience to the divine command; this muſt be ſuppoſed to be ſpoken, to the heads or princes of the tribes: arm ſome of yourſelves unto the war; not the whole body of the militia, 600,000 men and upwards, only ſome of them, and theſe choice and ſelect men; and according to the Jewiſh writers, good men, who, deteſting the ſins of leudneſs and idolatry, would more ſtrictly and ſeverely avenge themſelves on the Midianites for drawing their brethren into thoſe ſins, whereby they fell; and ſo Jarchi calls them righteous men: and let them go againſt the Midianites, and avenge the Lord of Midian: what the Lord calls the vengeance of the Iſraelites, Moſes calls the vengeance of the Lord, becauſe they were the Lord's people, and his cauſe and theirs the ſame; and becauſe the ſins they were drawn into by the Midianites, were not only againſt themſelves, and to their prejudice, but againſt the Lord, and to the diſhonour of his name.

℣. 4. Of every tribe a thouſand, &c.] So that the whole number of thoſe that were armed were 12,000, as after given: throughout all the tribes of Iſrael; this is obſerved, as Jarchi thinks, to comprehend the tribe of Levi, which in ſome caſes was left out of the account: ſhall ye ſend to the war; to fight with Midian.

℣. 5. So they were delivered out of the thouſands of Iſrael, &c.] Several thouſands very probably offered themſelves voluntarily to go to the war, or however were ſummoned together on this account, and out of them the following number was delivered of picked and choſen men: a thouſand of every tribe, twelve thouſand armed for war; which was but a ſmall number to go againſt ſo conſiderable a nation and people; but this was done to ſhew that the war was of the Lord, he would fight the battle, and give them victory, it being the ſame to him to do it with few as with many; and to encourage the people of Iſrael to believe the Lord would give them ſucceſs againſt their many and powerful enemies in the land of Canaan, on the borders of which they now were.

℣. 6. And Moſes ſent them to the war, &c.] Being muſtered and armed: a thouſand of every tribe, themand Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar the prieſt to the war; which looks as if Phinehas was the general of this army; for Moſes went not to the war, and no mention is made of Joſhua, nor might it be proper for him, he being the ſucceſſor of Moſes, who was quickly to die; but it ſeems rather, that there was no one perſon that had the command of the whole, but every captain commanded his own company; ſince, when Moſes met them, and was angry with them for ſparing the women, he does not addreſs any one as the chief commander, but all the officers, ℣. 14. however, it was very proper and prudent to ſend Phinehas with them, both on account of his office, as a prieſt, to encourage the people, and becauſe of his extraordinary zeal againſt the Midianites for what they had done, as appears by his ſlaying a prince of Simeon, and a Midianitiſh princeſs in their uncleanneſs: and he went with the holy inſtruments, and the trumpets to blow, in his hand; by the holy inſtruments, Aben Ezra underſtands the ark with what appertained to it, which in after-times uſed to be carried out when the Iſraelites went to war, Joſh. vi. 4. 1 Sam. iv. 3, 4. and Jarchi interprets them of the ark and plate of gold [z] which was upon the forehead of the high-prieſt; but what had Phinehas to do with this, who was but a common prieſt? though the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, "with the "Urim and Thummim of holineſs, to enquire by "them;" and it appears, that ſometimes a ſon of an high-prieſt was entruſted with the ephod, to which the breaſt-plate was faſtened, which had the Urim and Thummim on it, and made uſe thereof to enquire by, as in the times of David, 1 Sam. xxiii. 6—12. but it is the opinion of ſome learned men, and they may be in the right, that theſe inſtruments are no other than the trumpets, and who ſuppoſe the vau is not copulative but explanative, ſo Ben Gerſom, and read the words thus, with the holy inſtruments, even, or that is, the trumpets [a], the ſilver trumpets ordered to be made, ch. x. 2. one uſe of which was for the journey of the camps, and alſo to blow an alarm for war, and which was done by the prieſts; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan adds here, "to cauſe the camp of Iſrael to "reſt, and to cauſe it to go;" that is, to direct it when it ſhould ſtop and when it ſhould move.

℣. 7. And they warred againſt the Midianites, as the Lord commanded Moſes, &c.] Whether the Midianies came out againſt them with an army, and there was a pitched battle between them, is not certain; however the Iſraelites committed acts of hoſtility upon them, by entering their cities, plundering their houſes, and ſlaying the inhabitants of them; the Targum of Jonathan is, "they warred "againſt Midian, and ſurrounded it in the three "corners of it, as the Lord commanded Moſes;" for, as Maimonides [b] obſerves from tradition, "when they beſiege a city to take it, they do not ſurround it in the four corners of it, but in the three corners of it, and leave a place to flee out, that every one that would might eſcape for his life, as it is ſaid, and they warred againſt Midian, as the Lord commanded Moſes; by report, or from tradition it is learnt, that ſo he commanded him;" that is, in ſuch a manner to beſiege a city; but for this there is [z] So the Rabbins in Abendana in Miclol Yophi in loc.

[a] וחצוצרות erantque tubæ, Tigurine verſion; id eſt tubæ, Vatablus; nempe tubæ, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth.

[b] Hilchot Melacim, c. 6. §. 7.

is only tradition, for it is not mentioned among the rules after-directed to in such a case, Deut. xx. 10—20. and they slew all the males; which fell into their hands; for no doubt, there were multitudes that made their escape, since in after-times we read of the Midianites as a very powerful people, and very distressing to Israel, Judg. vi. 1, 2. these, as Aben Ezra observes, they slew, were such as were grown up, for as for their little ones, them they spared and carried captive, ℣. 9.

℣. 8. And they slew the kings of Midian, beside the rest of them that were slain, &c.] Besides the males of the common people, they slew their kings, who were petty kings or princes, perhaps under the king of Moab, or had reassumed their titles and government after the death of Sihon the king of the Amorites, who, in his time, were called dukes of Sihon, Josh. xiii. 21. namely, Evi, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba, five kings of Midian; the Targum of Jonathan says of Zur, this is Balak, which is not probable; it is more likely, what Aben Ezra observes, that he was the father of Cosbi, whom Phinehas slew, ch. xxv. 15. Balaam also the son of Beor they slew with the sword; so that he died not a natural death but a violent one, not such a one as he desired, the death of the righteous, but of bloody and deceitful men, who do not live out half their days; for if the Jewish writers [c] are to be credited, he was but 34 years of age when he was slain, which is not quite half the age of man, that being 70, Ps. xc. 10. it appears by this, that he was among the Midianites at the time of this war; either he stayed here till this time, when he went from Balak with an intention to go into his own country; or he had returned hither, being either sent for, by the princes of Midian, on this occasion; or, as some say, as Aben Ezra observes, that he came to Midian after he returned to his place, on hearing the plague that came upon Israel through his counsel, to receive the money of the elders of Midian for it; and so Chaskuni.

℣. 9. And the children of Israel took all the women of Midian captives, &c.] The word all is not in the original text, nor should it be supplied; for if all had been taken, and carried captive, and put to death, as those were afterwards, how could there have been such an increase of the Midianites as there was in some time after this? see Judg. vi. but the meaning is, that as many as fell into their hands they took and carried captive: and their little ones; both male and female: and took the spoil of all their cattle, and all their flocks; their oxen and their sheep, and also their asses, as appears by the following account: and all their goods; in their houses, their wealth and substance, gold, silver, &c.

℣. 10. And they burnt all their cities wherein they dwelt, &c.] So far as they went into the country, which perhaps might not be the whole land of Midian: and all their goodly castles with fire; which were either the palaces of their princes and nobles, or such-like great personages; or they were fortified places, for the security of their cities and country: the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan interpret them, of their houses of worship, their temples, and their altars.

℣. 11. And they took all the spoil, &c.] In their cities and castles: and all the prey, both of men and of beasts; all sorts of cattle, oxen, sheep, and asses.

℣. 12. And they brought the captives, the prey, and the spoil, &c.] The women and children, who were the captives, and the beasts which were the prey, and the gold, silver, &c. which were the spoil: unto Moses and Eleazar the priest, and unto the congregation of the children of Israel; that is, they were bringing the above persons and things unto them, returning from the war with Midian: unto the camp at the plains of Moab, which are by Jordan near Jericho; see ch. xxii. 1. but they were stopped, and were not admitted into the camp until seven days after.

℣. 13. And Moses and Eleazar the priest, and all the princes of the congregation, &c.] Attended, no doubt, with a proper retinue: went forth to meet them without the camp; partly to do honour to them, and to congratulate them on their victory, and partly to hinder them going into the camp directly, until they were purified; see Gen. xiv. 17, 18.

℣. 14. And Moses was wroth with the officers of the host, &c.] The general officers who had the command of the army, for there does not appear to be any one that was generalissimo over the whole, otherwise the displeasure would have fallen upon him: with the captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, which came from the battle; rather with should be left out, not being in the text; and these captains only explain who the officers were, and these were 132, as Aben Ezra observes; 12 who were captains over thousands, and were more properly the general officers; and 120 over so many hundreds, into which the whole were subdivided.

℣. 15. And Moses said unto them, have ye saved all the women alive?] Which either had been reported to him, or he concluded, by seeing so many with them; and this question is put, not for information, but by way of reproof, and as chiding them for what they had done; for they might have received orders from him to put them to death, when he sent them out; and if so, there was the more reason to be angry with them; or he might conclude they would have done this of themselves, knowing what instruments of mischief these women had been to Israel.

℣. 16. Behold, these caused the children of Israel, through the counsel of Balaam, &c.] Who advised the Midianites to send their women into the camp of Israel, and allure them to uncleanness, and so draw them into idolatry, which counsel they followed, and it succeeded; for by this means they were brought to commit trespass against the Lord in the matter of Peor; by worshipping Baal Peor, the god of the Moabites and Midianites; whereby they transgressed the commandment of God, which forbid them having and worshipping any other gods besides him, and is a sin highly offensive to him, being greatly derogatory to his honour and glory: and there was a plague among the congregation of the Lord; for that sin; and in that plague died 24,000 persons, ch. xxv. 9.

℣. 17. Now therefore kill every male among the little ones, &c.] Which they had taken and brought captives, ℣. 9: and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him; who might be such, at least many of them, who had lain with Israelitish men; and as the adulterers had been put to death, so now the adulteresses; or they were ordered to be slain, even all of them, lest they should entice the children of Israel to uncleanness, and so to idolatry again:

[c] Shalshalet Hakabala, fol. 7. 2.

again: now theſe were known to be ſuch, either by conjecture at their age, or rather, through the examination of matrons, unleſs it can be thought, as it is by ſome, that it was by divine revelation.

℣. 18. But all the women-children, &c.] The females among the little ones: that have not known a man by lying with him; which might be pretty clear, and eaſily concluded, from their age: keep for yourſelves; either to be hand-maids to them, or to be married among them when grown up, and become proſelytes, and initiated into their religion.

℣. 19. And do ye abide without the camp ſeven days, &c.] Which was the time that any one that touched a dead body remained unclean, ch. xix. 11. whoſoever hath killed any perſon; as moſt of them if not all muſt have done; all the males of Midian that fell into their hands being ſlain by them, that were men grown: and whoſoever hath touched any ſlain; as they muſt to ſtrip them of their garments, and take their ſpoil from them: purify both yourſelves and your captives, on the third and on the ſeventh day; which were the days appointed for the purification of ſuch that were polluted by touching dead bodies, ch. xix. 11. and their captives, which were the female little ones; (for as for the women, and males among the little ones, they were ordered to be ſlain,) though they were heathens, yet inaſmuch as they were to be for the ſervice of the Iſraelites, and to be brought up in their religion, they were to be purified alſo; to which purpoſe, is the note of Jarchi; "not that "the Gentiles receive uncleanneſs and need ſprin-"kling, but as ye are the children of the cove-"nant, ſo your captives, when they come into the "covenant, and are defiled, need ſprinkling."

℣. 20. And purify all your raiment, &c.] By waſhing them; and this may intend not ſo much their own wearing apparel, as the raiment they took off of the dead bodies of the Midianites, ſince the perſon that touched a dead body was not obliged to waſh his clothes, but the clean perſon that ſprinkled the water of purification on him, ch. xix. 19, 21. ſome render the words, purify yourſelves [d], together with the raiment, &c. which ſeems to be the beſt verſion of them: and all that is made of ſkins; of any ſort of creatures, as the covering of tents, ſhoes, bottles, &c. ſee ch. xi. 32. and all work of goats hair; ſuch as the covering of tents was alſo made of: and this, according to Jarchi and other Jewiſh writers [e], includes veſſels made of the horns, hoofs, and bones of theſe creatures: and all things made of wood; as beds, cups, diſhes, &c. all which might be purified by waſhing; ſee Lev. xv. 12.

℣. 21. And Eleazar the prieſt ſaid unto the men of war, which went to the battle, &c.] To all the ſoldiers, officers and common men: this is the ordinance of the law, which the Lord commanded Moſes; concerning the purification of unclean perſons and things, hereby confirming what Moſes had ſaid.

℣. 22. Only the gold, and the ſilver, the braſs, the iron, the tin, and the lead.] Theſe are excepted, and though unclean, are not to be purified by waſhing, but in another way, by fire, as follows; all theſe metals were well known in thoſe early times, and were made uſe of for inſtruments and veſſels of various ſorts.

℣. 23. Every thing that may abide the fire, ye ſhall make it go through the fire, &c.] Either through the ſmoke of the fire, and ſo be purified by ſuffumigation; or be put into the fire itſelf, where though they might be melted as the above things, yet not conſumed as raiment, and veſſels of ſkins, goats-hair and wood, would be: and it ſhall be clean; accounted ſo: nevertheleſs it ſhall be purified with the water of ſeparation; with the water mixed with the aſhes of the red heifer burnt, and ſprinkled on it; ſee ch. xix. 9. and all that abideth not the fire; without being conſumed, as whatſoever is of wood, &c. ye ſhall make go through the water; dip them in it, and rinſe them there with a quantity ſufficient; which, the Targum of Jonathan ſays, is forty ſeahs of water.

℣. 24. And ye ſhall waſh your clothes on the ſeventh day, &c.] As the leper did, Lev. xiv. 9: and ye ſhall be clean, and afterward ye ſhall come into the camp; into the camp of Iſrael, into the camp of the Levites, and into the camp of God, the tabernacle.

℣. 25. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After the purification of the ſoldiers, their captives and ſpoil: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 26. Take the ſum of the prey that was taken, both of man and beaſt, &c.] The number of the females that were taken captive and ſpared, and of the cattle, the ſheep, oxen and aſſes: thou, and Eleazar the prieſt, and the chief fathers of the congregation; who were all men of authority and character, and fit to be employed in ſuch ſervice, and of whoſe capacity and fidelity there could be no doubt.

℣. 27. And divide the prey into two parts, &c.] Into two equal parts, both the number of the people and of the cattle, when taken: between them that took the war upon them, and went out to battle, the ſoldiers; and by this it appears that they went voluntarily and chearfully: and between all the congregation; ſo that the part of them that went to battle, and of thoſe that ſtayed in the camp, were alike, and which in proceſs of time became a ſtatute and ordinance, 1 Sam. xxx. 24, 25. ſee Pſ. lxviii. 12.

℣. 28. And levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war, which went out to battle, &c.] That is, out of the part of the prey which was divided to them: one ſoul of 500, both of the perſons; or one woman of 500, as the Targum of Jonathan: and of the beeves, and of the aſſes, and of the ſheep; that is, one out of 500, of each of them alſo.

℣. 29. And take it of their half, &c.] Of the half part of the prey divided to the ſoldiers: and give it unto Eleazar the prieſt for an heave-offering of the Lord; by way of thankſgiving for the ſucceſs and victory God had given them, by means of which ſo much booty had fallen into their hands.

℣. 30. And of the children of Iſrael's half, thou ſhalt take one portion of fifty, &c.] Which was abundantly more than what was taken out of the part of the ſoldiers; and the reaſon of it is plain and eaſy to be diſcerned; the ſoldiers had taken much pains, and gone through much fatigue, as well as had hazarded their lives, and therefore leſs was to be taken from them; and beſides the tribute levied out of their half was to be given to the prieſts, who were not ſo numerous as the Levites, among whom the part out of the half of the congregation was to be diſtributed: of the perſons; of the women, as the Targum of Jonathan, one of [d] התחטאו purgatote vos, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; Vid. L'Empereur, Not. ad Kimchii ὁδοιπορια, p. 130.

[e] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Celim, c. 2. §. 1.

of 50 out of them was to be given to the Levites to be their handmaids, or to be taken in marriage by them, or their ſons, when fit for it: of the beeves, of the aſſes, and of the ſheep, of all manner of beaſts; of oxen, aſſes, ſheep and goats, one out of 50 of each of theſe ſorts were to be taken. Aben Ezra obſerves, no mention is made of camels, being but few, and no part taken: and give them unto the Levites, which keep the charge of the tabernacle of the Lord; for theſe being employed in the ſervice of the tabernacle, came in for their ſhare of the tribute levied unto the Lord.

℣. 31. And Moſes and Eleazar the prieſt did as the Lord commanded Moſes.] Took an account of the booty, divided it equally between the ſoldiers and the congregation of Iſrael, and levied a part out of each as a tribute for the Lord, which was given to the prieſts and Levites.

℣. 32. And the booty, being the reſt of the prey which the men of war had caught, &c.] The remainder of it, beſides what they had eaten in their return from the war, and during their ſeven days ſtay without the camp: from hence, to the end of ℣. 47. is only an account of the prey or booty taken, which in general were 675,000 ſheep, 72,000 beeves or oxen, 61,000 aſſes, and 32,000 females who had never known man; the half out of theſe, which fell to the ſhare of the ſoldiers, were 337,500 ſheep, 36,000 beeves or oxen, 30,500 aſſes, and 16,000 females, out of which were given as an heave-offering to the Lord 675 ſheep, 72 beeves or oxen, 61 aſſes, and 32 women: the half divided unto the children of Iſrael conſiſted of 337,500 ſheep, 36,000 beeves or oxen, 30,500 aſſes, and 16,000 women, out of which one in fifty, both of women and cattle, were given to the Levites; what that amounted to is not expreſſed, but may be eaſily reckoned.

℣. 48. And the officers which were over thouſands of the hoſt, &c.] Over the 12 thouſand, of which the hoſt or army conſiſted: namely, the captains of thouſands, and the captains of hundreds, came near unto Moſes; of their own accord, without being ſent, or required to do what they did.

℣. 49. And they ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] Gave the following relation to him, which is a very ſurprizing one: thy ſervants have taken the ſum of the men of war which are under our charge; ſince the war with Midian was over, they had muſtered the ſeveral companies under their command, ſuch as had thouſands, and thoſe that had hundreds: and there lacketh not one man of us; which is a moſt amazing and unheard-of thing, that in waging war with a whole nation, ſlaying all their males, ſacking and burning ſo many cities, plundering the inhabitants of their ſubſtance, taking and carrying off ſuch a vaſt number of captives, yet not one ſhould fall by the ſword of the enemy, or by any diſeaſe or accident whatever, but all to a man ſhould return to the camp of Iſrael again; this is not to be parallelled in any hiſtory.

℣. 50. We have therefore brought an oblation to the Lord, &c.] A free-will-offering, out of the ſpoil, over and above the tribute levied out of the half that came unto them: what every man hath gotten; or found [f], in the houſes, and upon the bodies of the ſlain, or of ſuch that were taken captives: of jewels of gold; either ſuch as were ſet in gold; or rather, as the words may be rendered, veſſels of gold [g], as diſhes, cups, ſpoons, and the like: chains; which were wore about the neck, or upon the arm, as Aben Ezra: and bracelets; for the hand, as the ſame writer, ſee Gen. xxiv. 22, 30. rings; for the finger: ear-rings; for the ear, as we render it, the word ſignifies ſomething round: and tablets; which, according to the Targum of Jonathan, were ornaments that hung down between the breaſts: to make an atonement for our ſouls before the Lord; not only this offering was brought as a token of gratitude and thankfulneſs, for ſparing of every one of their lives, and giving them ſuch ſucceſs and victory, and ſo large a ſpoil of the enemy; but alſo to expiate any ſins they had been guilty of in going out, and coming in, and particularly for ſparing the women they ſhould have put to death, for which Moſes was wroth with them, ℣. 14, 15.

℣. 51. And Moſes and Eleazar the prieſt took the gold of them, &c.] For it ſeems the ſeveral things before mentioned were all of gold: even all wrought jewels; or veſſels of work [h]; or wrought veſſels, or inſtruments, chains, bracelets, &c. which were all of gold, and curiouſly wrought.

℣. 52. And all the gold of the offering that they offered up to the Lord, &c.] The whole amount, weight, and value of it put together: even of the captains of thouſands, and the captains of hundreds; and perhaps of every common ſoldier, who might contribute his part, though it is not mentioned, but included in the oblation of the officers: was 16,750 ſhekels; which, according to the calculation of a very learned man [i], were 7,780 ounces, 4 drams, 2 ſcruples, and 35 grains.

℣. 53. For the men of war had taken ſpoil every man for himſelf.] And which he kept for himſelf, and did not deliver in with the prey or booty, which was brought to Moſes and Eleazar, the ſum of which was taken by them; and this ſeems to confirm what has been hinted, that as each ſoldier had taken ſpoil for himſelf, ſo every one contributed his quota towards this free-will-offering to the Lord.

℣. 54. And Moſes and Eleazar the prieſt took the gold, of the captains of thouſands and of hundreds, &c.] Which they ſo freely and generouſly offered: and brought it into the tabernacle of the congregation; and laid it up in ſome chamber there: for a memorial for the children of Iſrael before the Lord; in remembrance of the ſignal victory theſe men obtained, and of the ſingular care of divine providence in protecting them, that not one was loſt in the expedition; and of their ſenſe of gratitude and thankfulneſs for the favours granted them, and to put the children of Iſrael in mind for their imitation, when favoured with mercies from the Lord.

[f] מצא invenit, Pagninus, Montanus. [g] כלי זהב vas auri, Montanus; vaſa aurea, Vatablus, vas operis, Montanus. [h] כלי מעשה [i] Scheuchzer. Phyſica Sacr. vol. 2. p. 399.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXII.

THIS chapter relates, how that the tribes of Gad and Reuben requested a settlement in the country of Jazer and Gilead, being fit for the pasturage of their cattle, ℣. 1—5. at which Moses at first was very much displeased, as being unreasonable, and tending to discourage the rest of the people; and as acting a part like that their fathers had done before them, which brought the wrath of God upon them, so that they all but two perished in the wilderness; and this he suggests would be the case again, if such measures were taken, ℣. 6—15. upon which they explain themselves, and declare they had no intention of forsaking their brethren, but were willing to leave their children and cattle to the care of divine providence, and go armed before Israel, until they were brought into, and settled in the land of Canaan; nor did they desire any part or inheritance in it, ℣. 16—19. this satisfied Moses, and he agreed to it, that the land they requested should be their possession, provided the conditions were fulfilled by them, which they proposed, ℣. 20—24. and which they again agreed unto, and promised to perform, ℣. 25, 26, 27. wherefore Moses gave orders to Eleazar, Joshua and the chief fathers of the tribes, to put them in possession of the land of Gilead on those conditions, ℣. 28, 29, 30. and which were again promised that they would observe, ℣. 31, 32. and at the same time Moses made a grant of the kingdoms of Sihon and of Og to the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and to half the tribe of Manasseh, ℣. 33. and the chapter is closed with an account of the cities built or repaired by the children of Gad and Reuben, ℣. 34—38. and of the cities in Gilead taken and possessed by the children of Machir, and by Jair, who were of the tribe of Manasseh, ℣. 39—42.

℣. 1. Now the children of Reuben and the children of Gad had a very great multitude of cattle, &c.] By which it seems, that they had more in proportion than any of the other tribes; by what means it is not easy to say; very probably they were more addicted to the pastoral life, and took more delight in breeding cattle, and were more diligent in taking care of them: however, the reason for this observation presently follows: and when they saw the land of Jazer, and the land of Gilead; Jazer was in the kingdom of Sihon, and Gilead in the kingdom of Og, which had been both conquered by the Israelites: that behold, the place was a place for cattle; where much cattle was fed, there being a great deal of good pasturage for them: Jazer appears to be a well watered country, Jer. xlviii. 32. and Gilead and Bashan, which joined and belonged to the same country of Og, who was king of Bashan, were famous for good feeding of cattle: hence we read of the bulls of Bashan, and rams of the breed of Bashan, and goats on mount Gilead that looked plump and sleek; see Mic. vii. 14. Deut. xxxii. 14. Ps. xxii. 12. Cant. iv. 1.

℣. 2. The children of Gad and the children of Reuben came and spake unto Moses, &c.] The children of Gad are mentioned first, though Reuben was the first-born, and had a standard, under which Gad pitched: it may be, as Aben Ezra thinks, the Gadites were the first authors of this counsel, the contrivers of this scheme; who first moved it to the Reubenites, which they had an opportunity of doing, lying encamped by them; or however, they might be the most busy and active in this affair, or the best spokesmen; for it could be only some in the name of the whole, that addressed Moses on this account, and spoke to him about it: and to Eleazar the priest, and unto the princes of the congregation; who perhaps were the seventy elders, and with Moses the chief ruler, and Eleazar the high-priest, made up the grand Sanhedrim, or great council of the nation, and were undoubtedly the most proper persons to apply unto: saying; as follows.

℣. 3. Ataroth, Dibon, and Jazer, &c.] These were places which belonged to the Amorites, and were taken from Sihon, their king: of Ataroth we read no where else but in this chapter; of Dibon see Is. xv. 2. Jazer was a city, from whence the land about it had its name; it is the same with Jaazer, ch. xxi. 32. and stood about 15 miles from Heshbon[k], the capital city of the kingdom of Sihon: and Nimrah, and Heshbon, and Elealeh, and Shebam, and Nebo, and Beon; these were all places in the same country; of Heshbon see ch. xxi. 25, 26. and Is. xv. 4. Nimrah is the same with Beth-Nimrah, ℣. 36. and sometimes called Nimrim, famous for its water, Is. xv. 6. Jerom says[l], the name of it in his time was Benamerium, and lay to the north of Zoar; Elealeh, according to the same writer[m], was but a mile from Heshbon, of which see Is. xv. 4. Shebam is the same with Shibmah, ℣. 38. and seems to be a place famous for vines, Is. xvi. 18. Jer. xlviii. 32; it is thought to be the same with the Seba of Ptolemy[n], and according to Jerom[o], there were scarce 500 paces between this place and Heshbon; Nebo, the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan call the grave of Moses, because, on a mountain of this name Moses died, and where it is supposed he was buried; but it is certain he was buried not on a mountain but in a valley, Deut. xxxiv. 6. this perhaps had its name from the mountain near which it was, and of which, see Is. xv. 2. Beon is the same that is called Baal-meon, ℣. 38. and Beth Baal-meon, Josh. xiii. 17. where was very probably a temple of Baal; it was about nine miles from Heshbon[p].

℣. 4. Even the country which the Lord smote before the congregation of Israel, &c.] In which the above cities were, and perhaps some others not named: this was now in the hands of the people of Israel, being subdued by them, the conquest of which is ascribed unto the Lord, for the victory was of him; it was he that smote their enemies, and delivered their country into their hands; and now Moses, Eleazar, and the princes of the congregation, being the representatives of the people, had a right to dispose of it, and which these two tribes request, might be given to them, because, say ſay they: it is a land for cattle, and thy ſervants have cattle; to ſtock it with, and great numbers of them; ſee ℣. 1.

[k] Jerom. de loc. Heb. fol. 92. G. [l] Ibid. K. [m] Ibid. fol. 91. A. [n] Geograph. l. 5. c. 19. [o] Comment. in Esaiam, c. 16. 8. [p] Eusebius apud Reland. Palest. Illustr. par. 2. l. 3. p. 611.

℣. 5. Wherefore, ſaid they, if we have found grace in thy ſight, &c.] Directing their ſpeech to Moſes, the ruler of the congregation, in a very modeſt, decent, and reſpectable manner: let this land be given unto thy ſervants for a poſſeſſion; as their own portion and inheritance, to be enjoyed by them, and their children after them: and bring us not over Jordan; into the land of Canaan, where, as they after explain themſelves, they did not deſire to have any part with their brethren, but ſhould be content with their poſſeſſion here, ſhould it be granted them.

℣. 6. And Moſes ſaid unto the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, &c.] Being diſpleaſed with their motion, as his following diſcourſe ſhews, it having at firſt ſight, an appearance of covetouſneſs and cowardice: ſhall your brethren go to war, and ſhall ye ſit here? it is not reaſonable that your brethren ſhould be left by you, and engage in a war with your common enemies, to diſpoſſeſs them of their land before they can ſettle in it, and you remain here eaſy and quiet in the poſſeſſion of a fruitful country.

℣. 7. Wherefore diſcourage ye the heart of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Which he ſuggeſts it would, ſhould they ſettle on that ſide Jordan, ſince they would loſe the aſſiſtance of two of their tribes, even two thirds of one of their ſtandards, in fighting with their enemies and ſubduing their land; and beſides, it might be thought, that this requeſt of theirs, not only proceeded from ſelfiſh views, and a love of eaſe, which might ſet a bad example to others, but carried in it a diſtruſt of ever being able to enter into, at leaſt, to conquer and poſſeſs the land of Canaan, and ſo might have a tendency to diſcourage their brethren: from going over into the land which the Lord hath given them? deſpairing of ever enjoying it, and ſo laying aſide all thoughts of it, and not caring to make any attempt to get poſſeſſion of it.

℣. 8. Thus did your fathers, &c.] Meaning not particularly and only the fathers of theſe two tribes he was ſpeaking to, but of them and the other tribes alſo, who acted much ſuch a part; did not chooſe to go into the good land to poſſeſs it, when they were bid to do it, but were for ſending ſpies firſt, which brought an ill report of it, and diſcouraged the people from going into it; the hiſtory of which Moſes here gives: when I ſent them from Kadeſh-barnea to ſee the land; called only Kadeſh, ch. xiii. 26. the reaſon of the name ſee on ℣. 13.

℣. 9. For when they went up unto the valley of Eſhcol, &c.] That is, when they went up the hill, for they were bid to go up into the mountain, and proceeded on into the country, until they came to the valley or brook of Eſhcol, ſo called from the cluſter of grapes they there cut down and brought along with them, ch. xiii. 17, 23, 24. and ſaw the land; ſearching it for the ſpace of forty days: they diſcouraged the heart of the children of Iſrael; by telling them that there were giants in the land, and that the people in common were ſtrong, and their cities walled, and that they were not able to go up againſt them and overcome them; and by this means they diſheartened the people: that they ſhould not go into the land which the Lord had given them; and this Moſes feared, and ſuggeſts would be the conſequence of the requeſt, the two tribes now made.

℣. 10. And the Lord's anger was kindled the ſame time, &c.] Againſt the ſpies that brought the ill report, and againſt all the people that were diſheartened and murmured upon it, and which above all things, was to be dreaded now: and he ſware, ſaying; as follows.

℣. 11. Surely none of the men that came up out of Egypt, from twenty years old and upwards, &c.] See ch. xiv. 28, 29. ſhall ſee the land which I ſware unto Abraham, unto Iſaac, and unto Jacob; the land of Canaan, which at various times he ſware to give to them, and to their poſterity: becauſe they have not wholly followed me; the laws which he preſcribed them, the directions he gave them, and particularly the orders they had to go up and poſſeſs the land at once, Deut. i. 21.

℣. 12. Save Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh the Kenezite, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun, &c.] See ch. xiv. 30. whether Caleb or Jephunneh is called the Kenezite is not ſo eaſy to determine; the latter rather ſeems to be righteſt, for that Caleb ſhould be called ſo from Kenaz the father of Othniel, who is ſaid to be Caleb's brother, ſeems not to be agreeable; ſince it is not likely that they were own brothers, or Caleb would not have given his daughter to him; beſides Jephunneh and not Kenaz is always ſaid to be the father of Caleb, unleſs his father can be thought to have two names; it is moſt likely that Jephunneh, and ſo Caleb might be called the Kenezite, from an anceſtor of theirs of that name: Jarchi ſays, Caleb was the ſon-in-law of Kenaz, and Caleb's mother bore unto him Othniel: for they have wholly followed the Lord; here what was ſaid of Caleb, ch. xiv. 24. is ſaid both of him and Joſhua; ſee the note there.

℣. 13. And the Lord's anger was kindled againſt Iſrael, &c.] For murmuring againſt the report of the ſpies: and he made them wander in the wilderneſs forty years; for though it was but about 38 years from that time that they were in the wilderneſs, the round number of forty is given; and beſides, it includes the time of their firſt coming into it, which being reckoned, makes the compleat number, within a few months: Kadeſh, from whence the ſpies were ſent, and whither they returned, and where the people murmured, and had this ſentence pronounced on them, that they ſhould not ſee the land of Canaan, but wander and fall in the wilderneſs, ſeems to have had the addition of Barnea made unto it on that account, which ſignifies the ſon of him that wandereth: until all the generation which had done evil in the ſight of the Lord was conſumed; as they all were at this time when Moſes ſpake theſe words.

℣. 14. And behold, ye are riſen up in your father's ſtead, &c.] Succeeded them in their families, of which they were now the heads; and in their ſubſtance, their flocks, and herds; and he ſuggeſts alſo, in their manners and evil diſpoſitions: an increaſe of ſinful men; this new generation was greatly increaſed, for when the number was taken, as it was but a little before this time, they were pretty near the ſame number as of thoſe that came out of Egypt; but then they were not only an increaſe of men, but of ſinful men, like fathers, like ſons: to augment yet the fierce anger of the Lord toward Iſrael; to make it greater and fiercer towards that nation than even their fathers had by their many ſins and tranſgreſſions.

℣. 15. For if ye turn away from after him, &c.] From following him in the way of his commandments, from attending his word, worſhip, and ordinances, and from walking after him, who went before them in a pillar of cloud and fire, as it is suggested they would, should they stop short here and not go over Jordan into the land of Canaan: he will yet again leave them in the wilderneſs; as he did at the time of the affair of the ſpies, when they were ordered to turn and get into the wilderneſs by the way of the Red-ſea, and where they had been ever ſince unto this time, ch. xiv. 25. and ye ſhall deſtroy all this people; be the cauſe of their deſtruction, if the Lord ſhould in ſuch a manner reſent this ſtep of theirs, as to order them back into the wilderneſs again, though they were now as they were before on the borders of the land of Canaan.

℣. 16. And they came near unto him, &c.] The heads of the tribes of Gad and Reuben came a little nearer to Moſes, having ſomething more to ſay unto him, in order to explain their meaning, and in doing which they uſed ſome degree of freedom and boldneſs with him, ſee Gen. xliv. 18. and ſaid, we will build ſheepfolds here for our cattle, and cities for our little ones; not build new ones, but repair the old ones; for there were cities enough in the country, as before named, and no doubt ſheepfolds too, as the land was a place of cattle, but thoſe were through the war broken down and demoliſhed, and needed repairing; and this they propoſed to do and leave their children and their cattle to the care of their ſervants, under the protection of the divine providence, and did not mean for the preſent to take up their abode here.

℣. 17. But we ourſelves will go ready armed before the children of Iſrael, &c.] This they ſaid to free themſelves from the charge of cowardice, and that they did not mean to ſit ſtill whilſt their brethren went to war; they were willing to put on their armour, and be ready to meet the enemy upon the borders of the land, and engage with them, and to expoſe their lives in favour of their brethren: until we have brought them unto their place; to the land of Canaan, the place deſigned for them, and given unto them, to the poſſeſſion of it, and a ſettlement in it: and our little ones ſhall dwell in the fenced cities, becauſe of the inhabitants of the land; where they might be ſafe from them, which they propoſed to repair and re-fortify for the ſecurity of them, whilſt they went with their brethren into the land of Canaan, to put them into poſſeſſion of that, of which they made not the leaſt doubt; and ſo ſerved to clear them of ſuſpicion of any diſtruſt they had of entering into and poſſeſſing the land, which might tend to diſcourage the people.

℣. 18. We will not return unto our houſes, &c.] In the cities built or repaired by them, or to their families, and their ſubſtance, their flocks and their herds; all which they ſhould leave behind them, and never think of returning to them: until the children of Iſrael have inherited every man his inheritance; until all the tribes were ſettled in their reſpective places, and every family and every one in them had their portion aſſigned them; and accordingly they did not return until the land was wholly ſubdued, nor even until every lot came up, and the land was divided by it, and the inheritance of the ſeveral tribes fixed, and even the cities of the Levites aſſigned to them out of the ſeveral tribes; ſee Joſh. xxii.

℣. 19. For we will not inherit with them on yonder ſide Jordan, or forward, &c.] This they ſaid, not as being determined, whether Moſes and the princes were willing or not, to ſtay where they were, and not paſs over Jordan to inherit any part there, and much leſs as deſpiſing the good land, but as giving up all pretenſions to it, ſhould they be ſettled where they deſired: they were not of that ſelfiſh and covetous diſpoſition as to deſire any part on the other ſide Jordan, if it was but granted them to continue on this ſide, and poſſeſs the land they requeſted: becauſe our inheritance is fallen to us on this ſide Jordan eaſtward; they ſeem to ſpeak as if they were aſſured of it, and that it was ſo ordered by divine providence, and wanted nothing but the conſent of Moſes, and the princes of the congregation.

℣. 20. And Moſes ſaid unto them, &c.] Being better diſpoſed towards them, and more ſatisfied with the reaſonableneſs of their requeſt, it being explained unto him: if ye will do this thing; which they had promiſed: if ye will go armed before the Lord to war; they had ſaid, they would go ready armed before the children of Iſrael, but Moſes expreſſes it before the Lord; which is more agreeable to their encampment and order in marching, for not the ſtandard of Reuben but that of Judah went foremoſt, yet the ſtandard of Reuben marched directly before the ſanctuary bore by the Kohathites, ch. x. 18, 21. and ſo might be properly ſaid to go before the Lord, who dwelt there.

℣. 21. And will go all of you armed over Jordan before the Lord, &c.] Moſes tries them thoroughly, and is very expreſs in his words, requiring them not only to go armed, or march from the place where they were, towards the land of Canaan, but to go over Jordan, and not ſome of them only but all, and that before the Lord; though indeed when the tribes came to the river Jordan, the ark, which was the ſymbol of the divine preſence, went before all the tribes into it, and there ſtayed till they paſſed over, and then theſe two tribes and the half tribe of Manaſſeh paſſed before the children of Iſrael, and before the Lord unto battle, Joſh. iii. 11, 17. and iv. 12, 13. until he hath driven out his enemies before him; the Canaanites, who were the enemies of the Lord, as well as of his people, and becauſe of their ſins, in which they ſhewed their enmity to God, the land ſpewed them out, and he drove them out to make way for his people Iſrael, and till this was done the tribes of Reuben and Gad were to continue with them.

℣. 22. And the land be ſubdued before the Lord, &c.] For the inhabitants fleeing before his people, and being conquered by them, might be ſaid to be ſubdued before the Lord, this being done in his preſence, by his power, and for his people: then afterward ye ſhall return; to this ſide of Jordan, the land of Jazer and Gilead, to their cities, and families there; and be guiltleſs before the Lord, and before Iſrael; having fulfilled all that they promiſed: and this land ſhall be your poſſeſſion before the Lord; be eſtabliſhed and ſettled in it as their inheritance, the Lord ſeeing and approving of it, and protecting them in the enjoyment of it.

℣. 23. But if ye will not do ſo, &c.] As they promiſed they would, and Moſes inſiſted on it that they ſhould: behold, ye have ſinned againſt the Lord; in making ſuch a requeſt, and not fulfilling the conditions on which it was granted: and be ſure your ſin will find you out; fly in their faces, accuſe them in their conſciences, charge and load them with guilt, and bring deſerved puniſhment upon them: ſin may be put, as it often is, for the puniſhment of ſin, which ſooner or later will find out, and come upon the impenitent and unpardoned ſinner.

℣. 24.

℣. 24. Build ye cities for your little ones, and folds for your ſheep, &c.] For their ſafety and ſecurity, as they propoſed to do: and do that which proceedeth out of your mouth; all that they had promiſed.

℣. 25. And the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying, &c.] In anſwer to his ſpeech: thy ſervants will do as my Lord commandeth; both with reſpect to their march before the Lord to battle, and with reſpect to their proviſion for their children and flocks.

℣. 26. Our little ones, our wives, our flocks, and all our cattle, &c.] Their families, and their ſubſtance: ſhall be there in the cities of Gilead; ſuch as are before mentioned, ℣. 3. and which they propoſed to repair and fortify, to preſerve their families and poſſeſſions from the Amorites about them.

℣. 27. But thy ſervants will paſs over, &c.] The river Jordan, and go into the land of Canaan: every man armed for war; Moſes had required that all ſhould go over, and they conſent to it, and promiſe that every one ſhould, though this was not inſiſted on when they came to it, for only about 40,000 went over, Joſh. iv. 13. whereas the two tribes of Gad and Reuben, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, numbered more than 110,000; ſee ch. xxvi. 7, 18, 34: before the Lord to battle, as my Lord ſaith; for now, inſtead of ſaying, before the children of Iſrael, a phraſe they firſt uſed, they ſay, before the Lord, as Moſes had expreſſed it.

℣. 28. So concerning them Moſes commanded, &c.] That they ſhould have a grant of the land they requeſted: this looks as if Moſes determined the caſe himſelf, though perhaps it was by the vote, and with the conſent of the whole court; only Moſes ſtrictly enjoined them to obſerve it, namely, Eleazar the prieſt, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and the chief fathers of the tribes of the children of Iſrael; and the rather he did this, becauſe he knew that he ſhould die, and not ſee either the thing itſelf or the conditions of it performed.

℣. 29. And Moſes ſaid unto them, &c.] To Eleazar, Joſhua, and the princes of the congregation: if the children of Gad and the children of Reuben will paſs with you over Jordan, every man armed to battle before the Lord; as they have promiſed they will: and the land ſhall be ſubdued before you; which muſt be done before their return: then ye ſhall give them the land of Gilead for a poſſeſſion; which, no doubt, included that of Jazer too, ſince Jaazer, which is the ſame, is after mentioned as one of the cities built by the children of Gad, ℣. 35.

℣. 30. But if they will not paſs over with you armed, &c.] Shall change their minds, and break their promiſe, and refuſe to go over the river Jordon with the other tribes, and armed ready to engage in battle with the enemy: they ſhall have poſſeſſions among you in the land of Canaan; take their lot there, but have no inheritance or poſſeſſions on this ſide Jordan.

℣. 31. And the children of Gad and the children of Reuben anſwered, &c.] The word is in the ſingular number, and ſhews their unanimity, that they agreed to what Moſes ſaid, and replied all of them as one man, as Jarchi expreſſes it; and it may be, there was one that was the mouth of them all, and anſwered for them: ſaying, as the Lord hath ſaid unto thy ſervants, ſo will we do; here they make uſe of the word Jehovah, taking what Moſes had ſaid unto them as from the Lord, and therefore ſhould ſtrictly and punctually obſerve it, as if they heard the Lord himſelf ſpeak it.

℣. 32. We will paſs over armed before the Lord into the land of Canaan, &c.] This is repeated again and again, for the confirmation of it, aſſuring that it ſhould be ſtrictly performed according to the true intent of it: that the poſſeſſion of our inheritance on this ſide Jordan may be ours; that is, that the poſſeſſion and inheritance they deſired, and which had been granted them, on conditions to be performed by them, might be ratified and confirmed unto them on their fulfilment of them.

℣. 33. And Moſes gave unto them, &c.] By word of mouth, in the preſence of the court, or rather by ſome inſtrument drawn up and ſigned by him and the Sanhedrim, or witneſſed by them: even to the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, and unto half the tribe of Manaſſeh the ſon of Joſeph; no mention is made of this half tribe joining with the other two tribes in the requeſt to ſettle on this ſide Jordan, and therefore it is generally thought, that they were encouraged by the ſucceſs of the two tribes, to make a like motion; or elſe Moſes and the princes, obſerving that there was too much land for the ſaid tribes, joined this half tribe with them, the land being ſuitable for them: the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og king of Baſhan, the land with the cities thereof in the coaſts, even the cities of the country round about; of which kingdoms and the conqueſt of them, ſee ch. xxi. 24—35. and ſeveral of the cities in them are after mentioned.

℣. 34. And the children of Gad built, &c.] Or rather repaired the walls and fortifications, and rebuilt houſes which had been demoliſhed in the wars with Sihon and Og, when the following places were taken by the Iſraelites: Dibon, and Ataroth, and Aroer; the two firſt are mentioned in ℣. 2. Aroer was a city ſituated on the river Arnon, and was after this in the hands of the Moabites; Jerom ſays [q], it was ſhewed in his day on the top of the mountain, upon the bank of the river Arnon, which flows into the dead-ſea, Jer. xlviii. 19.

℣. 35. And Atroth-Shophan, and Jaazer, and Jogbehah.] Of theſe no mention is made elſewhere, except Jaazer, which is the ſame with Jazer, ℣. 3; ſee ch. xxi. 32.

℣. 36. And Beth-nimrah, and Beth-haran, fenced cities, &c.] The firſt of theſe is the ſame with Nimrah, ℣. 3. and the other is the ſame with Beth-aram, Joſh. xiii. 27. it is called in the Jeruſalem Talmud [r], Beth-ramtha, and ſo by the Syrians, Beth-ramphta; and to the ſame place Herod gave the name of Livias or Julias [s]: theſe cities the children of Gad built or repaired for their families: and folds for ſheep; they alſo built for their cattle, as they promiſed to do, and Moſes enjoined them, ℣. 16, 24, 26.

℣. 37. And the children of Reuben built Heſhbon, and Elealeh, and Kirjathaim.] Heſhbon was the royal city of Sihon, king of the Amorites, and Elealeh was within a mile of it, ſee ℣. 3. this ſhews that thoſe cities were not built anew properly, only repaired, for they were cities in being long before; beſides, they had not time to build new cities, for in a few months after this they paſſed over Jordan; though indeed they left men enow behind to rebuild cities, whom they might ſet to work about them

[q] De loc. Heb. fol. 87. I. par. 2. p. 642.

[r] Shevuith, fol. 38. 4.

[s] Vid. Reland. Paleſtin. Illuſtrat.

them when they departed: Kirjathaim is, by the Targum of Jonathan, called the city of two ſtreets paved with marble, and it adds, this is Bereſha: Jerom [t] ſays, it is now called Coraiatha, which is pretty near its antient name, and that it is ten miles from Medeba a city of Arabia, mentioned as one of the cities in the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, ch. xxi. 30; ſee Iſ. xv. 2.

℣. 38. And Nebo, and Baal-meon, (their names being changed) &c.] For Nebo was the name of an idol, after which perhaps the city was called: Baal-meon, ſignifies Baal's habitation, and where it is highly probable was a temple of his; and the children of Reuben not liking to retain ſuch idolatrous names, gave them others, but what they were, it is not ſaid; and certain it is, that when theſe places came into the hands of the Moabites, their ancient names were reſtored to them, as appears from Iſ. xv. 2. Jer. xlviii. 23. and Shibmah; the ſame with Shebam, ℣. 3. and gave other names unto the cities which they built; but they are neither known, nor did they always continue, as has been obſerved.

℣. 39. And the children of Machir the ſon of Manaſſeh went to Gilead, and took it, &c.] That part of it which Moſes gave unto the half tribe of Manaſſeh, which till now was in the hand of the Amorites; for half mount Gilead, and the cities thereof were given to the Reubenites and Gadites, which is the land of Gilead, they deſired, and which was already conquered; for they call it the country which the Lord ſmote before Iſrael, ℣. 1, 4. ſee Deut. iii. 12, 13: and diſpoſſeſſed the Amorite which was in it; for though they were driven out of one part of Gilead, yet not out of the whole.

℣. 40. And Moſes gave Gilead unto Machir the ſon of Manaſſeh, &c.] That is, to the children of Machir, who went and took it; though ſame ſay, as Aben Ezra obſerves, that Machir himſelf was now alive, and that it was given to him, but that is not probable; for ſuppoſing him to be living when the children of Iſrael came out of Egypt, all that came from thence, who were twenty years old and upwards, died in the wilderneſs, excepting two, ſee ℣. 11, 12. and he dwelt therein; that is, the family of the Macharite; ſee ch. xxvi. 29.

℣. 41. And Jair the ſon of Manaſſeh, &c.] By his mother's ſide, otherwiſe he was of the family of Judah; for Hezron, of the family of Judah, married a daughter of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, by whom he had a ſon called Segub, who was the father of Jair, 1 Chron. ii. 21, 22. the ſame went and took the ſmall towns thereof; of that part of Gilead given to Machir: and called them Havoth-Jair; after his own name: in Deut. iii. 14. they are called Baſhan-havoth Jair.

℣. 42. And Nobah went and took Kenath, and the villages thereof, &c.] Who this Nobah was, is not certain, very probably a deſcendant of Manaſſeh; it is ſaid [u], he was among thoſe that were born in Egypt, and died after the death of Moſes, and was buried beyond Jordan, as it is ſaid, alſo did Machir and Jair, ſo that there were none left but Caleb and Joſhua: and called it Nobah after his name; but it ſeems that in after-times its ancient name was reſtored to it; for Jerom [w] ſays, there was a village in Arabia called Cannatha, which is ſuppoſed to be this place; though he alſo tells us [x], that eight miles from Heſhbon, to the ſouth, is ſhewn a deſart place called Naba. Pliny [y] places Cannatha in the Decapolis.

CHAP. XXXIII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the journeys of the people of Iſrael from their firſt coming out of Egypt, to their arrival in the plains of Moab by Jordan, and the names of the ſeveral ſtations where they reſted, are given, ℣. 1—49. and they are ordered when they paſſed over Jordan, to drive out the Canaanites, deſtroy their idols, and divide the land among their families in their ſeveral tribes, ℣. 50—54. or otherwiſe it is threatened the Canaanites ſhould be troubleſome and vexatious to them, even thoſe that remained; and it might be expected God would do to the Iſraelites, as he thought to do to thoſe nations, ℣. 55, 56.

℣. 1. Theſe are the journeys of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Which are related in this chapter following: which went forth out of the land of Egypt; whither their fathers went and ſtayed, and were kept in hard bondage, but in due time were delivered from it, and came out from thence: with their armies; in great numbers, and in an orderly manner, in rank and file, and like ſo many ſquadrons, ſee Exod. vii. 4. under the hand of Moſes and Aaron; who were ſent to the king of Egypt to require their diſmiſſion, and who were the inſtruments under God of their deliverance, and were the leaders of them; as of them, out of Egypt, ſo through the wilderneſs in their ſeveral journeys, here recorded.

℣. 2. And Moſes wrote their goings out according to their journeys, by the commandment of the Lord, &c.] Which may be underſtood, either that their journeys were by the commandment of the Lord; ſo Aben Ezra takes the connexion to be, and which is undoubtedly true, and which is expreſſed plainly elſewhere; for ſo it was, that when the cloud abode on the tabernacle they reſted, and had their ſtations, and continued as long as the cloud tarried on it, and when that was taken up, then they marched; and thus at the commandment of the Lord they reſted, and at the commandment of the Lord they journeyed, ſee ch. ix. 17—23. or that Moſes wrote the account of their journeys, and ſeveral ſtations, at the commandment of the Lord, that it might be on record, and be read in future ages, and appear to be a fact, that they were led about in a wilderneſs, in places which were unknown to others, and had no names but what they gave them: and theſe are their journeys according to their goings out; from place to place; ſome of the ancients, as Jerom [z] particularly, and ſome modern writers, have allegorized theſe journeys of the children of Iſrael, and have fancied that there is ſomething in the ſignification of the names

[t] De loc. Heb. fol. 89. M.
[u] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 9. p. 27.
[w] Ut ſupra.
[x] De loc. Heb. fol. 93. H.
[y] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 18.
[z] De 42 manſionibus, Fabiolæ, inter opera ejus, T. 3. fol. 13.

names of the places they came to, and abode in, ſuitable to the caſes and circumſtances of the people of God in their paſſage through this world; but though the travels of the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, may in general be an emblem of the caſe and condition of the people of God in this world, and there are many things in them, and which they met with, and befel them, that may be accommodated to them; yet the particulars will never hold good of individual ſaints, ſince they are not all led exactly in the ſame path of difficulties and troubles, but each have ſomething peculiar to themſelves; and it will be difficult to apply theſe things to the church of God in general, in the ſeveral ſtages and periods of time, and which I don't know that any have attempted; and yet if there is any thing pointed out by the travels, one would think it ſhould be that.

℣. 3. And they departed from Rameſes, &c.] A city in Egypt, where the children of Iſrael, a little before their departure, ſeem to have been gathered together in a body, in order to march out all together, as they did. This place the Targum of Jonathan calls Peluſium. Dr. Shaw [a] thinks it might be Kairo, from whence they ſet forward; ſee Exod. xii. 37. and it was in the firſt month; in the month Niſan, as the ſame Targum, or Abib, which was appointed the firſt month on this account, and anſwers to part of our March and April: on the fifteenth of the firſt month, on the morrow after the paſſover; that was kept on the fourteenth, when the Lord paſſed over the houſes of the Iſraelites, and ſlew all the firſt-born in Egypt, which made way for their departure the next morning; the Egyptians being urgent upon them to be gone: the children of Iſrael went out with an high hand in the ſight of all the Egyptians; openly and publickly, with great courage and boldneſs, without any fear of their enemies; who ſeeing them march out, had no power to ſtop them, or to move their lips at them, nay, were willing to be rid of them; ſee Exod. xi. 7. and xii. 33.

℣. 4. For the Egyptians buried all their firſt-born, which the Lord had ſmitten among them, &c.] Which contributed much to the more eaſy and ſafe deliverance of the children of Iſrael; for their hearts were heavy with ſorrow, and their hands were full, and they had other work to do, namely, to bury their dead, than to moleſt Iſrael; and beſides, they knew it was for detaining them this ſtroke came upon them: upon their gods alſo the Lord executed judgments; they were moved at the preſence, and by the power of God, and fell and were daſhed to pieces, as the idols of the ſame land were in after-times, ſee Iſ. xix. 1. and this ſtill the more intimidated and frightened the Egyptians, that they durſt not attempt to hinder the departure of the Iſraelites from them. The Targum of Jonathan ſays, the Word of the Lord did this; and adds, their molten idols became ſoft, their ſtrong idols were mutilated, their earthen idols were diminiſhed, their wooden idols became aſhes, and thoſe of beaſts died.

℣. 5. And the children of Iſrael removed from Rameſes, &c.] Or Peluſium, as the ſame Targum again: and pitched in Succoth; where, as the ſame paraphraſe ſays, they were covered with the clouds of glory, ſuggeſting that to be the reaſon of its name; but that was rather becauſe of the booths or tents the Iſraelites erected, pitched and dwelt in, during their abode there: this, according to Bunting [b], was eight miles from Rameſes; according to whoſe computation, for want of a better guide, the diſtances of the ſeveral ſtations from each other will be given.

℣. 6. And they departed from Succoth, and pitched in Etham, &c.] Which was 8 miles from Succoth: which is in the edge of the wilderneſs; of the name, ſee Exod. xiii. 20. but Dr. Shaw [c] makes this particular portion of the wilderneſs to be 50 miles from Kairo or Rameſes.

℣. 7. And they removed from Etham, and turned again to Pihahiroth, &c.] Which was 16 miles from Etham. This turning, Aben Ezra ſays, reſpects the cloud, or Iſrael; and indeed it may reſpect both, for as the cloud turned, Iſrael turned, being directed by it; and this does not mean that they had been at Pihahiroth before, and now returned to it again; but that they by direction turned out of the ſtraight way in which they were to go to Pihahiroth; for the word again may as well, or better, be left out, ſee the note on Exod. xiv. 2: which is before Baal zephon; the name of an idol, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, ſuppoſed to be placed here, to watch and guard the paſſage, as Zephon ſignifies: and they pitched before Migdol; which was either the name of a city, the ſame with Migdol, Jer. xliv. 1. or it was a tower, as the word ſignifies, placed here on the borders of the land for the defence of it.

℣. 8. And they departed from before Pihahiroth, &c.] Being forced by Pharaoh's army preſſing upon them: and paſſed through the midſt of the ſea; from ſhore to ſhore, as on dry land: into the wilderneſs; that part of it which lay on the other ſide, for ſtill it was the wilderneſs of Etham they went into, as follows: and went three days journey in the wilderneſs of Etham, and pitched in Marah; ſo called from the bitterneſs of the waters there, and which is computed to be forty miles from Pihahiroth.

℣. 9. And they removed from Marah, and came unto Elim, &c.] Which was eight miles from Marah: and in Elim were twelve fountains of water, and threeſcore and ten palm-trees, and they pitched there; being a convenient place of water for them.

℣. 10. And they removed from Elim, and encamped by the Red Sea.] This encampment is omitted in the book of Exodus, ſee ch. xvi. 1. this part or arm of the Red Sea, whither they came, was ſix miles from Elim.

℣. 11. And they removed from the Red Sea, and encamped in the wilderneſs of Sin.] Sixteen miles from the Red Sea, where they were laſt; ſee Exod. xvi. 1.

℣. 12. And they took their journey out of the wilderneſs of Sin, &c.] According to the account in Exodus, this was after they had the manna given them, ſee Exod. xvii. 1. and encamped at Dophkah; 12 miles from the wilderneſs of Sin; and of this, and the next encampment, no mention is made in Exodus.

℣. 13. And they departed from Dophkah, and encamped in Aluſh.] The ſtrong fort, as the Targum of Jonathan calls it; this was 12 miles from Dophkah; according to the Jewiſh chronology [d], this Aluſh is the wilderneſs of Sin, where the Iſraelites came on the 15th day of the 2d month, from their going out of Egypt; and they ſay, that in Aluſh the ſabbath was given them, and that there they kept

[a] Travels, p. 307. Ed. 2.
[b] Travels of the Patriarchs, &c. p. 81.
[c] Travels, p. 308.
[d] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 5. p. 17.

kept the firſt ſabbath, as it is ſaid, and the people reſted on the ſeventh day, Exod. xvi. 30.

℣. 14. And they removed from Aliſh, and encamped at Rephidim, &c.] Eight miles from Aliſh: where was no water for the people to drink; and they murmured, and a rock here was ſmitten by Moſes at the command of God, and waters guſhed out ſufficient for them and their flocks, Exod. xvii.

℣. 15. And they departed from Rephidim, and pitched in the wilderneſs of Sinai.] Eight miles from Rephidim; and from a mount of this name here, were given the decalogue, with all other ſtatutes and ordinances, judicial and ceremonial, and orders and directions for building the tabernacle, and making all the veſſels appertaining to it, and which were all made during their ſtay here.

℣. 16. And they removed from the deſart of Sinai, and pitched at Kibroth-hattaavah.] Eight miles from the deſert of Sinai; here the people luſted after fleſh, and murmured, which, though given them, a peſtilence came and deſtroyed many of them, and here they were buried, whence the place was ſo called, which ſignifies the graves of luſt, i. e. of thoſe that luſted: no mention is made of Taberah, either becauſe it was the ſame with Kibroth, or near it; or, as Aben Ezra on Deut. ix. 22. ſays, they encamped there but one day, and ſo is not mentioned in the journeys, though it was one of the three they journeyed from mount Sinai to Kibroth-hattaavah, ſee ch. xi.

℣. 17. And they departed from Kibroth-hattaavah, and encamped at Hazeroth.] Eight miles from Kibroth-hattaavah, where Miriam was ſmote with leproſy, ch. xii.

℣. 18. And they departed from Hazeroth, and pitched at Rithmah.] Eight miles from Hazeroth: Rethem, from whence this place ſeems to have had its name, is generally rendered by Juniper, 1 Kings xix. 4, 5. and the Targum of Jonathan here adds, where the juniper-trees grew; and perhaps it is the ſame with the valley of Retheme, of which ſome travellers [e] thus write, "this valley, called in the Hebrew, Retheme, and commonly Ritma, derives its name from a yellow flower, with which the valley is enamelled; we found here, on the left-hand, two ciſterns of excellent water;" and water being to be had here, might be the reaſon of the Iſraelites pitching in this place. Some learned men [f] think it is the ſame with Kadeſh-barnea, from whence the ſpies were ſent, that being the next remove from Hazeroth, as this was; ſee ch. ii. 16 and xiii. 1, 26. and xxxii. 8. Deut. ii. 19. Joſh. xiv. 7. with which agrees the remark of Jarchi, that this place was ſo called, becauſe of the evil tongue of the ſpies, as it is ſaid, Pſ. cxx. 3, 4. what ſhall be done unto thee thou falſe tongue? ſharp arrows of the mighty, with coals of juniper; alluding to the ſignification of Rithmah; perhaps this is the ſame place, which by Joſephus [g] is called Dathema, and ſo in 1 Maccab. v. 9.

℣. 19—29. And they departed from Rithmah, and pitched at Rimmon-parez.] Six miles from Rithmah, and then from Rimmon to Libnah, which was ſix miles alſo; and from thence to Riſſah, which was ſix miles more; and from Riſſah to Kehelathah, which was the ſame number of miles; and from thence to Shapher, which was ſix miles alſo; and then they came to Haradah, which was four miles from thence; the next remove was to Makheloth, which was four miles and a half from the laſt place; then they went to Tahath, which was four miles more; and from thence to Tarah, which alſo was four miles; the next place they came to was Mithcah, four miles from Tarah; and then to Haſhmonah, which was eight miles more.

℣. 30, 31. And they departed from Haſhmonah, and encamped at Moſeroth.] Thirty two miles from Heſhmonah. In Deut. x. 6. it is called Moſera; and according to the account there, they came hither from the following place, Bene-jaakan; probably they went firſt thither from Haſhmonah, and then from Moſera or Moſeret, and ſo to Bene jaakan again, going backwards and forwards, ſo Jarchi; the diſtance of the two places was 24 miles; for the further reconciliation of this, ſee the note on Deut. x. 6. and the Samaritan verſion there.

℣. 32—37. And they removed from Bene-jaakan, and encamped at Hor-hagidgad.] In the Targum of Jonathan called Gudgod, as it is Gudgodah in Deut. x. 7. where the remove to this place is ſaid to be from Moſera; it was 20 miles from Bene-jaakan; from thence they went to Jotbathah, 24 miles from Hor hagidgad; and from thence to Ebronah, 20 miles more; and ſo to Ezion-geber, of which ſee 1 Kings ix. 26. which was 28 miles from Ebronah: and their next remove was to the wilderneſs of Zin, which was Kadeſh, 48 miles from Ezion-geber; and from Kadeſh they went to mount Hor, 45 miles more: which was in the edge of the land of Edom; as Kadeſh alſo was; ſee ch. xx. 16, 23.

℣. 38. And Aaron the prieſt went up into mount Hor, at the commandment of the Lord, &c.] Delivered to Moſes: and died there in the 40th year after the children of Iſrael were come out of Egypt; not being ſuffered to go with them into the land of Canaan, becauſe of his ſin of unbelief at Kadeſh, the laſt place from whence they came: in mount Hor he died, on the firſt day of the fifth month; the month Ab, anſwering to part of July and part of Auguſt; ſo that he lived but 4 months after his ſiſter Miriam; ſee ch. xx. 1, 25—29.

℣. 39. And Aaron was 123 years old when he died in mount Hor.] He was 83 when he ſtood before Pharaoh, Exod. vii. 7. and 40 years he had been with Iſrael ſince, which make this number; he was 3 years older than Moſes.

℣. 40—44. And king Arad the Canaanite, &c.] Or the king of Arad the Canaanite: which dwelt in the land of Canaan, he heard of the coming of the children of Iſrael; towards the land of Canaan, in order to poſſeſs it, and he came out and fought with them, and was vanquiſhed; ſee ch. xxi. 1, 2, 3. this was when Iſrael was at mount Hor; from whence they departed to Zalmonah, 28 miles from the mount; and from thence to Punon, which was 20 more; and ſo to Oboth, which was 24 miles from Punon; and thence to Ije Abarim, in the border of Moab, which was 16 miles, ſee ch. xxi. 9, 10, 11.

℣. 45. And they departed from Ijim, and pitched in Dibon-gad.] Sixteen miles from Ijim; the remove from whence is ſaid to be to the valley of Zared, ch. xxi. 12. in which Dibon-gad was, ſo called perhaps becauſe rebuilt by Gad afterwards.

℣. 46. And they removed from Dibon-gad, and encamped in Almon-diblathaim.] Sixteen miles from Dibon, perhaps the ſame with Diblath, Ezek. vi. 14. according to the account in ch. xxi 16, &c. they went from hence to Beer, a place where they found a well, which gave it this name; and ſeveral

[e] Egmont and Heyman's Travels, vol. 2. p. 154.
[f] Dr. Lightfoot, vol. 1. p. 35. Dr. Clayton's Chronology of the Hebrew Bible, p. 382, 383.
[g] Antiq. l. 12. c. 8. §. 4.

ral other removes are mentioned there, which are not here, and which perhaps were ſmall removes, and not properly ſtations.

℣. 47. And they removed from Almon-diblathaim, and pitched in the mountains of Abarim, &c.] Sixteen miles from Almon-diblathaim; theſe were ſo called from paſſages near them over the river Jordan: and this ſtation was pitched before Nebo; one of thoſe mountains, whither Moſes went up and died.

℣. 48. And they departed from the mountains of Abarim, and pitched in the plains of Moab, &c.] Sixteen miles from Abarim, where all thoſe things were tranſacted, which make the hiſtory of Balak and Balaam, ch. xxii, xxiii, xxiv, xxv. and where the Iſraelites now were by Jordan near Jericho; not on that ſide Jordan where Jericho ſtood, but on the other; Jericho, according to Euſebius, was ten miles from Beth-jeſimoth, where Iſrael now were, as follows.

℣. 49. And they pitched by Jordan from Beth-jeſimoth, even unto Abel-ſhittim in the plains of Moab.] Their camp reached twelve miles, as the Jews commonly ſay, which we may ſuppoſe was the diſtance of theſe two places, which were both in the plains of Moab; and the Jeruſalem Targum is expreſs for it, for mentioning Iſrael's encampment from Beth jeſimoth to Abel-ſhittim, it aſks, how far is that? 12 miles: the latter is ſometimes called Shittim, from the ſhittim-wood which grew there, ch. xxv. 1. and here it has the addition of Abel to it, to ſignify mourning, from the mourning of the children of Iſrael on account of the plague, in which 24,000 perſons died, ch. xxv. 1, 6, 9.

℣. 50. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes in the plains of Moab by Jordan, near Jericho, &c.] See the note on ℣. 48. and ch. xxii. 1: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 51. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, &c.] What was to be ſaid, being what concerned the whole body of the people: when ye are paſſed over Jordan into the land of Canaan; near to which they now were, and Moſes was about to leave them; and therefore it was the more neceſſary to give them ſome inſtructions and directions what they ſhould do, when they were come into it.

℣. 52. Then ye ſhall drive out all the inhabitants of the land from before you, &c.] Not at once, but gradually; and the ſenſe is, that they ſhould uſe their utmoſt endeavours wholly to extirpate them: and deſtroy all their pictures; their idolatrous ones; the pictures of their gods, or the ſtatues and figured ſtones of them: the Targum of Jonathan interprets it, "all the temples of their worſhip;" and the Jeruſalem Targum, "all their idols;" ſo called, as Jarchi notes, becauſe they covered the floor with a pavement of marble ſtones, to worſhip upon them by the ſtretching out of their hands and feet, according to Lev. xxvi. 1. and deſtroy all their molten images; of gold, ſilver, &c. and quite pluck down all their high places; their temples, groves, and altars built upon them.

℣. 53. And ye ſhall diſpoſſeſs the inhabitants of the land, and dwell therein, &c.] Turn them out of their cities, towns, and houſes, and inhabit them: for I have given you the land to poſſeſs it; who had a right to diſpoſe of it, and a better title they needed not deſire than the Lord could and did make them.

℣. 54. And ye ſhall divide the land by lot, &c.] What is ſaid in this verſe is the ſame with ch. xxvi. 53, 54, 55, 56. where it has been explained; ſee the note there.

℣. 55. But if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land before you, &c.] Should be remiſs and careleſs about it, and indifferent to it, and not make uſe of the proper means to get rid of them, but on the contrary, make covenants with them, and intermarry among them; or however, become friendly to them, and ſuffer them to dwell among them: then it ſhall come to paſs, that thoſe which ye let remain of them; ſparing their lives, and permitting them to dwell among them: ſhall be pricks in your eyes, and thorns in your ſides; which figurative expreſſions ſhew that they ſhould be very troubleſome and diſtreſſing to them, even in their moſt tender, and neareſt concerns, and deareſt relations, and which are explained and more properly expreſſed, as follows: and ſhall vex you in the land wherein ye dwell; among other things, by their wicked converſation, and by drawing them into ſin through their ill examples, and ſo bring the diſpleaſure of God upon them, and puniſhment for their evil doings.

℣. 56. Moreover, it ſhall come to paſs, &c.] This being the caſe, they ſuffering the Canaanites to dwell among them, and they mingling with them, learning their works, and ſerving their gods: that I ſhall do unto you, as I thought I ſhould do unto them; deliver them up into the hands of their enemies, who ſhould carry them captive into other lands.

CHAP. XXXIV.

IN this chapter the bounds and borders of the land of Canaan are deſcribed, according to the direction of the Lord to Moſes, ℣. 1, 2. the ſouth-border, ℣. 3, 4, 5. the weſtern-border, ℣. 6. the north-border, ℣. 7, 8, 9. the eaſt-border, ℣. 10, 11, 12. which is ordered to be divided by lot, to the nine tribes and a half, two tribes and a half having received their inheritance on the other ſide Jordan, ℣. 13, 14, 15. and the perſons are nominated to divide the land, Eleazar and Joſhua, with one prince out of every tribe, and who are mentioned by name, ℣. 16—29.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] At the ſame time that he ordered him to direct the children of Iſrael, when they had paſſed over Jordan, to drive out the inhabitants of the land of Canaan, and divide their land among them; he proceeded to give the limits and boundaries of the land: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Command the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, &c.] Not to fix the borders, and ſettle the boundaries of the land, for that is done by the Lord himſelf, who has determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of mens habitations, and particularly of Iſrael, ſee Deut. xxxii. 8. but to obſerve and take notice of the limits he had fixed, that they might know how far they were to go on every ſide, whom they were to drive out, and what they were to divide and inherit, and ſee what was their right, and preſerve it from the incroachments of their neighbours, as well as obſerve ſerve the goodneſs of God unto them, in thus providing for them: when ye come into the land of Canaan; to take poſſeſſion of it by virtue of a grant of it to them: this is the land that ſhall fall unto you for an inheritance; it is ſaid to fall, becauſe it was divided by lot, each tribe having ſuch a part of it aſſigned to them, according to the lot that came up unto them: even the land of Canaan with the coaſts thereof; or according to its borders, which are as follow.

℣. 3. Then your ſouth quarter, &c.] Or border of the land; which, as Jarchi obſerves, was from eaſt to weſt: ſhall be from the wilderneſs of Zin; which is Kadeſh where Miriam died, ch. xx. i. and xxxiii. 36. and if this Kadeſh was Kadeſh-barnea, as doctor Lightfoot ſeems to have proved [h], from whence the ſpies were ſent, that was clearly on the ſouth of the land of Canaan, for they were bid to go up their way ſouthward, ch. xiii. 17. and ſo Kadeſh-barnea is here after mentioned, as being in the ſouthern border: the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, "from the wilderneſs of the palm-"trees of the mountain of iron;" there is a ſmaller palm-tree, which by Jewiſh writers is called Zin, of which there were great quantities on a mountain famous for iron mines, in this wilderneſs, from whence it is thought it had its name; hence we read [i] of palm-trees of the mountain of iron, as fit to make the bunch of branches of trees, called the Lulab, carried in the hand on the feaſt of tabernacles: along by the coaſt of Edom; the land of Canaan to the ſouth, bordered on three countries, Egypt, Edom, and Moab; according to Jarchi, ſome part of Egypt, the whole land of Edom, and the whole land of Moab; the part of the land of Egypt was in the ſouth-weſt corner of it; the land of Edom by it to the eaſt; and the land of Moab by the land of Edom, at the end of the ſouth to the eaſt: and your ſouth border ſhall be the outmoſt coaſt of the ſalt-ſea eaſtward; the ſame that is ſometimes called the dead ſea, the ſea of Sodom, or the lake Aſphaltites, as heathen writers generally call it.

℣. 4. And your border, &c.] That is the ſouth-border, which is ſtill deſcribing: ſhall turn from the ſouth to the aſcent of Akrabbim; or Maaleh-Akrabbim, as in Joſh. xv. 3. ſo called from the multitude of ſerpents and ſcorpions in it, ſee Deut. viii. 15. ſo Kimchi ſays [k], a place of ſerpents and ſcorpions was this aſcent: doctor Shaw [l] ſays, Akrabbim may probably be the ſame with the mountains of Accaba, according to the preſent name, which hang over Eloth, where there is a high, ſteep road, well known to the Mahometan pilgrims for its ruggedneſs: and he thinks [m] it very probable, that mount Hor was the ſame chain of mountains that are now called Accaba by the Arabs, and were the eaſtermoſt range, as we may take them to be, of Ptolemy's black mountains: Joſephus [n] ſpeaks of Acrabatene as belonging to the Edomites, which ſeems to be this ſame place: and paſs on to Zin; that is, which aſcent goes on to it; the Targum of Jonathan is, "and ſhall paſs on to the palm-trees "of the mountain of iron;" by which is meant, the ſame with the wilderneſs of Zin: perhaps Zinnah is rather the name of a city; the Septuagint call it Ennac; the Vulgate Latin, Senna: Jerom [o] makes mention of a place called Senna, ſeven miles from Jericho: and the going forth thereof ſhall be from the ſouth to Kadeſh-barnea; from whence the ſpies were ſent ſouthward to ſearch the land, ch. xiii. 17. and xxxii. 8: and ſhall go on to Hazar-addar; called Adar, Joſh. xv. 3. and where it ſeems to be divided into two places, Hezron and Adar, which very probably were near each other, and therefore here put together, as if but one place: and paſs on to Azmon; which the Targums call Keſam.

℣. 5. And the border ſhall fetch a compaſs, &c.] Not go on in a ſtraight line, but turn about: from Azmon unto the river of Egypt; the river Nile, as both the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem; but Aben Ezra ſeems to deny that that river is meant; and ſome think that Rhinocolura, which flows into the Mediterranean ſea, is meant; or the valley of Egypt, Caſiotis, which divided Judea from Egypt, as follows: and the goings out of it; not of the river, but of the border: ſhall be at the ſea; the above ſea, called in the next verſe the great ſea; all the Targums render it to the weſt.

℣. 6. And as for the weſtern border, &c.] Of the land of Canaan: you ſhall even have the great ſea for a border, and no other, meaning the Mediterranean ſea, which lies weſt of the land of Judea; Aben Ezra calls it the Spaniſh ſea: it has the name of great, in compariſon of ſome in the land of Canaan, as the ſalt ſea, and the ſea of Tiberias: this ſhall be your weſt-border; namely, the Mediterranean ſea.

℣. 7. And this ſhall be your northern-border, &c.] What follows: from the great ſea ye ſhall point out for you mount Hor; not that mount Hor on which Aaron died, for that was on the ſouthern-border of the land; but rather mount Hermon, which is ſaid to be unto the entering into Hamath, Joſh. xiii. 5. as this mount Hor is in the following verſe; or ſome part of mount Lebanon might be ſo called, which was the northern border of the land: the Targum of Jonathan calls it Umanus; and the Jeruſalem Targum Manus or Taurus-Umanus, the mountain Amanus, which divided Syria and Cilicia; it is joined with Lebanon by Joſephus [p], and with that and Carmel by Ælianus [q].

℣. 8. From mount Hor ye ſhall point out your border unto the entrance of Hamath, &c.] Antiochia, as Jarchi; or rather Epiphania, as Jerom [r]; the former being deſcribed by Hemath the great, Amos vi. 2. this entrance was a narrow paſs leading from the land of Canaan to Syria, through the valley which lies between Lebanon and Antilibanus: and the goings forth of the border ſhall be to Zedad; the ſame boundary as here is given in Ezek. xlvii. 15.

℣. 9. And the border ſhall go on to Ziphron, &c.] Which in the Jeruſalem Targum is called Zapherin; and Jerom [s] ſays, that in his time this city was called Zephyrium, a town in Cilicia; but this ſeems to be at too great a diſtance: and the goings out of it ſhall be at Hazar-enan; which was the utmoſt of the northern border; and ſo it is in Ezek. xlvii. 17. and there called the border of Damaſcus: Reland [t] takes it to be the ſame with Enhazor, [h] Works, vol. 2. p. 8. 9.

[i] Miſn. Succah, c. 3. §. 1.
[k] Sepher Shoraſh. in voce עקרב.
[l] Travels, Tom. 2. ch. 1. p. 279.
[m] Ib. p. 323.
[n] Antiq. l. 12. c. 8. §. 1. ſee 1 Maccab. 5. 3.
[o] De loc. Heb. fol. 94. H.
[p] Antiq. l. 1. c. 6. §. 2
[q] De Animal. l. 5. c. 56.
[r] Commeht. in Ezek. 47. 16.
[s] Ibid. in ℣. 15.
[t] Paleſtin. Illuſtrat. par. 1. l. 1. p. 123.

hazor, a city in the tribe of Naphtali, Josh. xix. 37. the words only inverted: this shall be your northern border; from the Mediterranean sea to Hazar-Enan in Naphtali.

℣. 10. And ye shall point out your east-border from Hazar-Enan to Shepham.] From the place where the northern border ended, which Jerom says [u], the Hebrews call Apamia, as both the Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem do here. Shepham was a city between Hazar-Enan and Riblah in the tribe of Naphtali, where Adrichomius [w] places it.

℣. 11. And the coast shall go down from Shepham to Riblah, &c.] Said to be in the land of Hemath, Jer. lii. 9. which, according to Jerom [x], was Antioch of Syria; and both the Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem understand by it, Daphne, which was in the suburbs of Antioch; but this seems to be carrying the limits of the land too far: Jarchi remarks, that when the border goes from the north towards the south, it is said to go down: on the east side of Ain; a city in the tribe of Judah; according to Jerom [y], now a village that goes by the name of Bethennim, two miles from the turpentine tree, that is, from the tent of Abraham or oak of Mamre, and four from Hebron: and the border shall descend, and shall reach unto the side of the sea of Chinnereth eastward; the same with the sea of Tiberias, and the sea of Genesaret, frequently made mention of in the New Testament, and in Ezek. xlvii. 18. called the east-sea.

℣. 12. And the border shall go down to Jordan, &c.] A well-known river to the east of the land of Canaan: and the goings out of it shall be at the salt sea; the sea of Sodom; and though all sea water is generally salt, this was remarkably so, through the great quantity of bitumen and nitre in it, hence it was called Asphaltites; thus as the description of the borders of the land began with the salt sea, ℣. 3. it ends with it: this shall be your land, with the coasts thereof round about; which, according to the Targum of Jonathan, was thus bounded, Rekam-gea (or Kadesh-barnea) on the south, Taurus Umanus (by which he interprets mount Hor) on the north, the great sea on the west (i. e. the Mediterranean sea) and the salt sea on the east.

℣. 13. And Moses commanded the children of Israel, saying, &c.] Strictly enjoining them to observe what he was about to say to them: this is the land which ye shall inherit by lot; as above described and bounded: which the Lord commanded to give unto the nine tribes, and to the half tribe; to the tribes of Judah, Simeon, Benjamin, Dan, Ephraim, Zebulun, Issachar, Asher, and Naphtali, and the half tribe of Manasseh; though this command is not before expressed, it is very probable it was delivered to Moses at the same time he had the mind of God concerning the settlement of the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the other half tribe of Manasseh, on the other side Jordan; see ch. xxxii. 31.

℣. 14. For the tribe of the children of Reuben, according to the house of their fathers, &c.] That tribe, and all the families belonging to it: have received their inheritance, and half the tribe of Manasseh have received their inheritance; that is, it was agreed they should have it on condition of their going along with the other tribes over Jordan into the land of Canaan, and assist them in the conquest of it, ch. xxxii.

℣. 15. The two tribes and the half tribe, &c.] The tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh: have received their inheritance on this side Jordan near Jericho, eastward, toward the sunrising; that is, they received the grant of it there, even in the plains of Moab over-against Jericho, which lay to the east of the land of Canaan.

℣. 16. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] At the same time that he gave him the bounds of the land of Canaan, which was to be divided between the nine tribes and a half; and that this might be done in the most impartial manner, and to the satisfaction of them all, he gave orders to Moses: saying; as follows.

℣. 17. These are the names of the men which shall divide the land unto you, &c.] Or inherit the land for you [z]; that is, as Jarchi interprets it, they were to take possession of it in their name and stead, as their representatives, and then distribute it unto them, or divide it to be inherited by them; but whatever may be said for the princes of the tribes, as acting for their respective tribes, and representing them, the same cannot be said of the two first named, as follow: Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun; the one the principal person in ecclesiastical affairs, and the other in civil ones; to divide the land being partly a sacred work, as it was a type of the heavenly Canaan, and a civil one, as it concerned the present welfare of the people of Israel; and both were types of Christ, the priest upon his throne, who is both priest and king; who, as the one, gives a right unto it, and as the other, introduces into it.

℣. 18. And ye shall take one prince out of every tribe, &c.] That is, out of the nine tribes and the half, which are ten in all; of the tribes of Reuben and Gad none were taken, because they had had their inheritance granted them elsewhere; nor of the tribe of Levi, because they were to have no inheritance in the land: to divide the land by inheritance; who being men of honour, understanding and probity, and naturally concerned for the good of the tribes to which they belonged, would take care that justice be done to each, and that no fraudulent methods were used in drawing the lot; and then take possession according to the lot, and impartially divide the portion assigned among the respective families in the tribes, according to their rank and numbers.

℣. 19. And the names of the men are these, &c.] Which were not left to the tribes to chuse, but were nominated by the Lord himself, who best knew their capacities and qualifications for this service: of the tribe of Judah, Caleb the son of Jephunneh; who was one of the two spies that brought a good report of the land, and Joshua is the other; and these were the only two of the spies living, and who are the first that were appointed to this service, of over-seeing the division of the land; the rest were all of the new generation that were sprung up, whose fathers fell in the wilderness, and we know no more of them than their names; and therefore from hence, to the end of ℣. 28. no further remarks are necessary, only that the tribes and the princes are reckoned in a different order than they were at any time before, either at the first num-

[u] Comment. ut supra. Loc. Heb. fol. 88. F. Tigurine not.

[w] Theatrum Terræ Sanct. p. 114.

[x] Comment. ut supra.

[y] De

[z] נֶחֱלוּ לָכֶם hæreditabunt vobis, Montanus; qui hæreditario jure accipient pro vobis, numbering of them, ch. i. or at the offerings for the dedication of the altar, ch. vii. or at the taking the ſum of them, ch. xxvi. even according to the order of their ſituation in the land of Canaan by their lots, and which Moſes did not live to ſee; and which therefore ſhows the preſcience and prediſpoſing providence of God, and that Moſes, as biſhop Patrick obſerves, was guided by a divine ſpirit in all his writings.

℣. 29. Theſe are they whom the Lord commanded, &c.] Not only named and appointed them, but laid his commands upon them, and obliged them, to divide the inheritance unto the children of Iſrael; even this order was made before the land was conquered by them, ſo ſure and certain was it unto them; and accordingly they did divide it, and that in Shiloh, before the Lord, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, as in the preſence of God, doing it in the moſt impartial and ſolemn manner; ſee Joſh. xix. 51.

CHAP. XXXV.

THOUGH the tribe of Levi had no part in the diviſion of the land, yet cities out of the ſeveral tribes are here ordered to be given them to dwell in, to the number of forty-eight, ℣. 1—8. ſix of which were to be cities of refuge, ℣. 9—15. but not for wilful murderers, in whatſoever way they might kill a man, ℣. 16—21. but for ſuch who had killed a man unawares, ℣. 22, 23, 24. and ſeveral rules are given relating to ſuch perſons, ℣. 25—29. but no ſatisfaction was to be taken in caſe of murder, nor to excuſe a perſon's return to his own houſe before the death of the high-prieſt, who had fled to a city of refuge, that ſo the land might not be defiled, ℣. 30—34.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] After he had deſcribed the borders of the land, and given inſtructions about the diviſion of it among the ſeveral tribes, and named the perſons that ſhould be concerned in parting and putting it into the poſſeſſion of the Iſraelites, he makes a proviſion for the Levites; for though they had no inheritance in the land as a tribe, yet it was proper they ſhould have cities and houſes to dwell in; for it would not be ſuitable that they ſhould be always about the tabernacle, as they were in the wilderneſs; and it is concerning this the Lord is ſaid to ſpeak to Moſes, in the plains of Moab by Jordan, near Jericho; where the Iſraelites now were, and had been for ſome time: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Command the children of Iſrael, &c.] All the tribes of them; it is not a bare inſtruction that is given them, much leſs a mere requeſt that is made to them, or ſomething propoſed, and left to their option whether they would agree to it or no; but it is ſtrictly enjoined them by the Lord, who had given them freely all they ſhould poſſeſs, and who had a right to all they had, and to whom they were in duty and gratitude bound to do his will and pleaſure: the order is, that they give unto the Levites of the inheritance of their poſſeſſion, cities to dwell in; which was but reaſonable and requiſite, that the miniſters of God, and the aſſiſtants of the prieſts, and who did the ſervice of the congregation, that they ſhould have habitations for them and their families, as well as food and raiment was provided for them in another way: and ye ſhall give alſo unto the Levites ſuburbs for the cities round about them; which were partly for ornament to their cities, and partly for their health, that they might have air, and not be too cloſely confined within the walls of their cities; and alſo for convenience, that they might have room for their cattle, and places to lay up the increaſe of their fields, as after ſuggeſted. Jarchi ſays, that a ſuburb was a ſpace and place parted without the city, round about, for the beauty of it; but they were not allowed to build there an houſe (i. e. to dwell in) nor to plant a vineyard, nor to ſow ſeed; other ground is after provided for ſuch uſes.

℣. 3. And cities ſhall they have to dwell in, &c.] For them and their families, and indeed for nothing elſe, they having no trades nor worldly buſineſs to carry on in them: and the ſuburbs of them ſhall be for their cattle; for ſtables and ſtalls to put them up in, and for barns and ſtorehouſes to lay in provender for them: and for their goods; where to beſtow them, as the increaſe of their fields, olive-yards and vineyards, ſee Luke xii. 18, 19. and for all their beaſts; or living creatures; or for their whole life [z]; or livelihood, whatſoever was for the ſupport of it; the Targum of Jonathan adds, by way of explanation, for all their neceſſities; and ſo Jarchi.

℣. 4. And the ſuburbs of the cities which ye ſhall give unto the Levites, &c.] The dimenſions and bounds of them were not left to the Iſraelites, to give what ground they pleaſed for this purpoſe, but were fixed to what length they ſhould be: theſe ſhall reach from the walls of the city, and outward, a thouſand cubits round about; which was half a ſabbath-day's journey, and pretty near half a mile, which all around a city muſt contain a conſiderable quantity of ground, if the city was of any bigneſs, as it is certain that ſome of them given them at leaſt were.

℣. 5. And ye ſhall meaſure from without the city on the eaſt-ſide, 2000 cubits, &c.] Before only 1000 cubits were ordered to be meaſured, and now 2000, even 2000 more, which were to be added to the other, and to begin where they ended. The firſt 1000 were for their cattle and goods, theſe 2000 for their gardens, orchards, fields and vineyards; and ſo the Jewiſh writers underſtand it. Jarchi obſerves, that 1000 cubits are ordered, and after that 2000; and aſks, how is this? or how is it to be reconciled? to which he anſwers, 2000 are put to them round about, and of them the 1000 innermoſt are for ſuburbs, and the outermoſt (i. e. the 2000) are for fields and vineyards; and with this agrees the Miſnah [a], from whence he ſeems to have taken it; and the ſame was to be on every other ſide of the city, ſouth, weſt, and north, as follows: and on the ſouth-ſide 2000 cubits; and on the weſt-ſide 2000 cubits, and on the north-ſide 2000 cubits; which added to the other 1000 all around, muſt make a large circumference of land: and the city ſhall be in the midſt; in the midſt of the circuit of three thouſand cubits all around, ſo that it muſt ſtand very pleaſant and convenient: this ſhall be to them the ſuburbs of the cities; ſuch a quantity quantity of ground, conſiſting of ſo many cubits, ſhall be aſſigned to every city; the ſuburbs or glebe land to a Levite's city, on the four ſides were four ſquares, and each ſquare conſiſted of ſeventy-ſix acres, one rood, twenty perches, and eighty ſquare feet; all the four ſquares amounting to three hundred and five acres, two roods, one perch, beſides fifty-ſeven feet ſquare, according to biſhop Cumberland.

[z] לכל חייהם ad vitam ipſorum. Vid. Druſium.

[a] Sotah, c. 5. §. 3. Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

℣. 6. And among the cities which ye ſhall give unto the Levites, &c.] The number of which is not yet expreſſed, but is afterwards: there ſhall be ſix cities for refuge; a ſort of Aſylums, of which there were many among the heathens, perhaps in imitation of theſe, for perſons to have recourſe to for ſafety, when in danger of life: the Septuagint render the words, cities of flight [b]; or to flee unto, which certainly was the uſe of them: to this the apoſtle alludes when he ſpeaks of ſome that fled for refuge, to lay hold on the hope ſet before them, Heb. vi. 18. the word [c] uſed for refuge ſignifies gathering or receiving, for hither perſons in diſtreſs gathered or betook themſelves; and here they were received, retained, protected, and ſheltered: what and where theſe ſix cities were to be, and were, is after ſhown: which ye ſhall appoint for the man-ſlayer; not for any and every one, not for one that killed a man preſumptuouſly and purpoſely, through enmity and malice, but for one that did it ignorantly, unawares, and without deſign: that he may flee thither; with all haſte, after the commiſſion of the fact; and to faciliate his flight, and that he might have no interruption in it, the Sanhedrim were obliged to prepare the ways to the cities of refuge, and to make them fit and large; and they removed every thing that might cauſe him to ſtumble; and they did not leave in the way neither an hillock, nor a dale, nor a river but they made a bridge over it, that nothing might retard him that fled thither, as it is ſaid; thou ſhalt prepare thee a way, Deut. xix. 3. and the breadth of the way to the cities of refuge was not leſs than 32 cubits; and at the parting of ways (on poſts erected) were written, refuge, refuge, ſo that the ſlayer might know (the way) and turn there, (as this directed him): and on the fifteenth of Adar or February, they met every year, to take care of this buſineſs [d]; and they alſo appointed two diſciples of the wiſemen, or two ſtudious and underſtanding perſons to accompany him, not ſo much for the direction of the way, as leſt the avenger of blood ſhould meet with him, and ſlay him in the way; and who were to talk to him, and perſuade him not to do it, ſuggeſting to him that it was not done deſignedly but unawares, and that it would be a bad thing to kill a man for what he did not intend to do, and which was done without any malice or enmity to the perſon killed, and with ſuch-like words to cool and appeaſe the avenger [e]: and to them ye ſhall add 42 cities; according to the Jewiſh writers theſe alſo were cities of refuge; for ſo they ſay [f], "all the cities of the Levites receive or are refuges, every one of them is a city of refuge, as it is ſaid, and to them ye ſhall add, &c. the ſcripture makes them all alike for refuge: what difference is there between cities of refuge, which are ſeparated for refuge, and the reſt of the cities of the Levites? the gates of the cities of refuge receive, whether according to knowledge or not. (which Mr. Selden [g] interprets, whether the inhabitants will or no; but the ſenſe of Maimonides elſewhere [h], and of other writers, is plainly this, whether, according to the knowledge and intention of the man-ſlayer or not, whether he knows it to be a city of refuge or not, and whether he purpoſely came thither for ſafety or not), and he that enters into them is ſafe; but the reſt of the cities of the Levites do not receive, but according to knowledge (when the man-ſlayer knowingly and deſignedly came thither for ſhelter); and a man-ſlayer that dwells in a city of refuge gives no more for his houſe, but he that dwells in the other cities of the Levites, gives more (or pays for it) to the owner of the houſe;" but though this is their unanimous opinion, it rather ſeems, according to the letter of the ſcripture, that only ſix were cities of refuge, and the reſt were for the Levites to dwell in by themſelves.

℣. 7. So all the cities which ye ſhall give to the Levites ſhall be 48 cities, &c.] Of theſe 48 cities, their names, and what tribes they were in, and which of them were particularly cities of refuge, an account is given in Joſh. xxi. 10—37: them ſhall ye give with their ſuburbs; according to the dimenſions before preſcribed.

℣. 8. And the cities which ye ſhall give ſhall be of the poſſeſſion of the children of Iſrael, &c.] What ſhall fall by lot for their inheritance, and they ſhall be poſſeſſed of; and though they are, ſhall not refuſe, nor grudge to give them, according to the direction of God, whoſe the land is, they holding it under him: from them that have many, ye ſhall give many, but from them that have few, ye ſhall give few; which rule was obſerved; for out of Judah, whoſe lot was large, and out of Simeon, whoſe inheritance was within that of Judah, becauſe it was ſo large, nine cities were given, whereas out of the other tribes only four cities out of each were given, and out of one of them but three, ſee Joſh. xxi. every one ſhall give of his cities unto the Levites, according to his inheritance which he inheriteth; and the Levites being thus diſperſed among the ſeveral tribes, were of great advantage to them, to inſtruct them in the knowledge of divine things; ſo that though hereby Jacob's curſe on this tribe had its fulfilment, that it ſhould be divided in Jacob, and ſcattered in Iſrael, yet that became a bleſſing to the reſt of the tribes; ſee Gen. xlix. 7.

℣. 9. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] At the ſame time, or he continued his ſpeech unto him: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 10. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, &c.] Now, directly: when ye come over Jordan into the land of Canaan; as they quickly would, being now very near it, and of which there was the utmoſt certainty, ſince the Lord had promiſed to bring them over that river, and put them in poſſeſſion of that land.

℣. 11. Then ye ſhall appoint you cities, to be cities of refuge for you, &c.] And according to the Jewiſh writers [i], theſe were neither to be made large nor little, but middling; and they appointed them where there were markets and fairs, at which goods were to be ſold; and where there was plenty of water, and a multitude of people; and where there were were but few, they fetched others from other places; and they neither made nets for hunting, nor twisted ropes in them, nor sold any warlike instruments, lest the avenger of blood should use himself to come thither, under pretence of buying such things, and kill the man-slayer: that the slayer may flee thither, which killeth any person at unawares; or through error [k], or mistake, not on purpose, with design, or through malice and enmity, as is afterwards more largely explained.

[a] ערי המקלט πολεις των φυγαδευτηριων. Sept. [b] מקלט receptus, Junius & Tremellius; collectionis, Piſcator; R. Sol. Ohel Moed, fol. 82. 1. proprie ſignificat collectionem vel retentionem, Munſter. [c] Miſn. Maccot, c. 2 §. 5. & Maimon. & Bartenora in Ib. [d] Maimon. Hilchot Rotzeach, c. 8. §. 5. [e] De Jure Naturæ & Gentium, l. 4. c. 2. p. 489. [f] Maimon. ut ſupra, §. 11. [g] Maimon. Rotzeach, c. 8. §. 8. Vid. T. Bab. Maccot, fol. 10. 1. [h] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Maccot, l. 2. §. 4.

℣. 12. And they shall be unto you cities of refuge from the avenger, &c.] Or near kinsman; for as the right of redemption of an estate that was mortgaged, belonged to such an one; so of revenging the blood of any one that was killed: that the man-slayer die not; by the hand of the avenger, who in the heat of his passion would, could he come at him, fall upon him, and slay him, to avenge the death of his relation on him: until he stand before the congregation in judgment; before the court of judicature, to be examined, tried, and judged, whether the murder was committed knowingly and willingly, or whether through mistake and at unawares: this was done either before the court of judicature in the city of refuge, who took cognizance of such cases directly, that they might know whom to harbour and protect, and whom not; or before the court in the place where the fact was committed: interpreters are divided about this; and Calmet [l] is of opinion, that he was examined in both courts, first, more strictly in the city of refuge, and then, more slightly in the place where it was done, which is not improbable; however, this seems manifest from ℣. 25. that the court where it was committed had power to fetch him from the city of refuge, and set him before them, and examine into the case; and, if a proper person, restored him to the city of refuge, whither he had fled.

℣. 13. And of these cities which ye shall give, &c.] Of the 48 cities they were to give to the Levites, ℣. 7. six cities shall ye have for refuge; which, I think, makes it clear, that not all the 48 cities were for refuge, only six of them.

℣. 14. Ye shall give three cities on this side Jordan, &c.] Which were Bezer in the wilderness, out of the tribe of Reuben; and Ramoth in Gilead, out of the tribe of Gad; and Golan in Bashan, out of the tribe of Manasseh, Josh. xx. 8. and three cities shall ye give in the land of Canaan; which were Kadesh in Galilee, in mount Naphtali; Shechem in mount Ephraim; and Kirjath-arba or Hebron, in the mountain of Judah, Josh. xx. 7. which shall be cities of refuge; the three on the other side Jordan, the Jews say, were separated by Moses, and the three in the land of Canaan by Joshua, but not one of them was a refuge until they were all separated [m]: it may seem strange, that there should be as many in the two tribes and a half on the other side Jordan, as in the nine tribes and a half in the land of Canaan: let it be observed, what the Jewish writers say [n], Moses separated three cities beyond Jordan, and over-against them Joshua separated three in the land of Canaan; and they were like two rows in a vineyard, Hebron in Judea was over-against Bezer in the wilderness; Shechem in mount Ephraim was over-against Ramoth in Gilead; Kadesh in mount Naphtali was over-against Golan in Bashan; and the three were so disposed, that there was as much space from the south (of the land of Israel) to Hebron as from Hebron to Shechem, and as much from Hebron to Shechem as from Shechem to Kadesh; and as much from Shechem to Kadesh as from Kadesh to the north beyond Jordan; and it should be known that the land of the tribes beyond Jordan, extended in length as far as the land of Canaan, and was equal to it, running along it; so that those in the land of Canaan could soon and easily get over Jordan to the cities of refuge there, if there was occasion; besides, there is a direction given, that if their coast should be enlarged, they were to add three cities more in the land of Canaan, Deut. xix. 8. hence the Jews have a notion, that in the days of the Messiah those three cities will be added [o]; but the Messiah is come already, and is the antitype of them all.

℣. 15. These six cities shall be a refuge both for the children of Israel, and for the stranger, &c.] For an Israelite, and a proselyte of righteousness, one that embraced the Jewish religion, and in all things conformed to it, and to whom there was but one law in things civil and religious: and for the sojourner among you; the proselyte of the gate, who renounced idolatry, and observed the commands of the sons of Noah, but in other things did not comply with the Jewish ceremonies, yet had the benefit of the cities of refuge equally with the other; though the Jews say [p], such a proselyte or sojourner had only this privilege, who slew a proselyte, but not if he slew an Israelite; but for this distinction there is no foundation in the text; that every one that killeth any person unawares may flee thither; whether an Israelite, or a proselyte of righteousness or of the gate.

℣. 16. And if he smite him with an instrument of iron so that he die, &c.] As with an hatchet, hammer, sword, knife, &c. he is a murtherer; the instrument used by him, and with which he smote, shews that he had a bad design, and intended to kill, or he would never have smitten a man with such an instrument: the murtherer shall surely be put to death; be condemned to death, and be executed, by the order of the civil magistrate, according to the law in Gen. ix. 6. and not be allowed the benefit of a city of refuge.

℣. 17. And if he smite him with throwing a stone, &c.] Or with a stone of the hand [q], which the Jews interpret, of a stone so big as to fill a man's hand, and so wherewith he may die; at whom it is thrown; is sufficient to cause his death, if struck with it; so the Targum of Jonathan paraphrases it, of a "stone of fulness of hands, "which is sufficient that a man may die with it," or be killed by it: and he die; by the blow he receives from it, either immediately or in a short time after: he is a murtherer, and the murtherer shall surely be put to death; as in the above case.

℣. 18. Or if he smote him with an hand-weapon of wood, &c.] A stick, or staff, or club: wherewith he may die, and he die; which is sufficient to kill a man, as the same Targum explains it; and a man dies with the blow that is given him by it: he is a murtherer, and the murtherer shall surely be put to death; no pardon given him, or the benefit of the city of refuge allowed him.

℣. 19.

[k] בשגגה per errorem, Pagninus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; per imprudentiam, Tigurine version, Vatablus; in ignorantia, Montanus. [l] Dictionary on the word Refuge. [m] Misn. Maccot, c. 2. §. 4. Maimon. Hilchot Rotzeach, c. 8. §. 2. 3. & in Pirke, c. 4. §. 2. & Jarchi in loc. [n] T. Bab. Maccot, fol. 9. 2. [o] Maimon. Rotzeach, c. 8. §. 4. [p] Misn. Maccot, c. 2. §. 3. [q] באבן יד

℣. 19. The revenger of blood himself shall slay the murtherer, &c.] Not only shall have power to do it, but as it seems, should be obliged to do it; be the executioner of the murtherer; but not before his case has been heard, examined, tried, and judged; wherefore the Targum of Jonathan adds, "in judg-"ment," that is, as Onkelos explains it, "when "he is condemned by judgment," the court of judicature: when he meeteth him he shall slay him; the first opportunity he has, even though, as Jarchi says, if he meets him in the midst of one of the cities of refuge, and no judgment is passed on him.

℣. 20. But if he thrust him of hatred, &c.] Or, and if [r], since the scripture is still speaking of such that shall die for murther, though in another instance, without having the privilege of a city of refuge; if he thrusts him with a sword or knife, or rather, since, if any thing of that kind is included in the first instance of smiting with an instrument of iron, push him down from an high place, as Aben Ezra; so the men of Nazareth intended to have dispatched Christ in that way, Luke iv. 29. or hurl at him by lying in wait that he die; as a bowing wall, as the same writer instances in, push down that upon him as he passes along, lying in wait for him; or throws any thing at him, with an intention to kill him, and does; or casts down any thing upon him, a large stone, or any thing else, by which he dies.

℣. 21. Or in enmity smite him with his hand, that he die, &c.] Give him a blow with his fist, on some part of his body where life is most in danger, and which issues in death: he that smote him shall surely be put to death, for he is a murtherer; and therefore, according to the original law, ought to die, without reprieve or pardon; and notwithstanding this law made for cities of refuge, which were to be denied him: the revenger of blood shall slay the murtherer when he meeteth him; that is, when he is condemned, as both the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan interpret it, after a hearing and trial of his case.

℣. 22. But if he thrust him suddenly without enmity, &c.] Push him from a precipice, before he is aware, without any malicious design against his life, but merely through accident: or have cast upon him any thing; from the top of a house, or from a building he is pulling down, or pushes a bowing wall upon him, not knowing that he is passing by it: and without lying of wait; or having contrived to do it, just as he goes along, or in any other similar way.

℣. 23. Or with any stone wherewith a man may die, &c.] Which is sufficient to kill a man, if thrown at him: seeing him not; and so without intention: the Jews [s] from hence gather, that a blind man is to be acquitted, and dismissed, and not banished, and so stands in no need of a city of refuge; though others say, he is to be banished, and needs it, and ought to have the privilege of it: and cast it upon him that he die; casting it upon another account, and with another view, but yet falling upon a man, it kills him: and was not his enemy, neither sought him harm; it was never known that they were at variance, or that the slayer had ever by any overt act discovered any malice and enmity against the deceased, by word or deed, or ever sought to do him any injury, either to his person or property.

℣. 24. Then the congregation, &c.] That is, the court of judicature, assembled together to hear and try this cause: shall judge between the slayer and the revenger of blood; shall hear what both have to say, and pass sentence: according to these judgments; these judicial laws and rules of judgment, before delivered, exemplified in various cases.

℣. 25. And the congregation shall deliver the slayer out of the hand of the avenger of blood, &c.] Put him under the care of proper persons, to conduct him to one of the cities of refuge, or put him in the way to it; and restrain the avenger of blood from pursuing him, until such time that it may be judged he is safe arrived there: and the congregation shall restore him to the city of refuge, whither he was fled; so that it seems by this, when one had been guilty of man-slaughter, and fled to one of the cities of refuge, he might be taken from thence and had before a court of justice, and there take his trial; and if it appeared that the fact was committed by him, ignorantly, unawares, and without design, then he was returned to his city of refuge; but if otherwise, he was put to death, notwithstanding he had fled thither; and so it is said in the Misnah [t], that "at first, or formerly, one that killed another ignorantly or presumptuously, they sent him before to one of the cities of refuge, and the Sanhedrim sent and fetched him from thence: he who was condemned to death by the court, they slew him; he that was not condemned was dismissed; he that was condemned to banishment they returned him to his place, according to Numb. xxxv. 25." and he shall abide in it unto the death of the high-priest, which was anointed with the holy oil; and then he was to be set at liberty, and return to his house and family, and have his former possessions and honours, if he had any, restored unto him, the commission or warrant for his detainder there ceasing, being made void by the death of the high-priest; who was the prince of the priests and Levites, to whom those cities belonged, and so under his jurisdiction: or so it was ordered, because such was the general mourning for such a public loss as an high-priest, that all private revenges would subside, and the cause of them be buried in grief and forgetfulness; though no doubt, this had a respect to something which will be hereafter taken notice of: the Jews say [u], that the mothers of the priests used to supply with a sufficient quantity of food and raiment such who fled to the cities of refuge, that they might not pray for the death of their sons; and according to them, a man's case was very bad when there was no high-priest; for so they write [w], "he whose cause is finished (or his case determined in a court of judicature), and there is no high-priest; and he that slays an high-priest, or an high-priest slays another, he never goes out, no not so much as to bear testimony in any cause, and even in what the congregation has need of him, but there are his dwelling, his death, and his burial."

℣. 26. But if the slayer shall at any time come without the border of the city of his refuge, &c.] Which seems to be the three thousand cubits assigned to every city of the Levites, and so to the cities of refuge; and which, according to the Jewish writers, were a refuge, as the city itself; and it is said [x], "he that kills a man there, is killed for "him, but though the border is a refuge, the "slayer does not dwell in it, as it is said, ℣. 25. he

4

[r] אם et si, Pagninus, Montanus. [s] Misn. Maccot, c. 2. §. 3. [t] Ib. §. 6. [u] Misn. ut supra. [w] Ibid. §. 7. [x] Maimon. Hilchot Rotzeach, c. 8. §. 11. Misn. Maccot, c. 2. §. 7.

"he ſhall abide in it, but not in its borders:" whither he was fled; on account of man-ſlaughter.

℣. 27. And the revenger of blood find him without the borders of the city of his refuge, &c.] Without the ſuburbs, fields, and vineyards belonging to it: and the revenger of blood kill the ſlayer; being exaſperated againſt him, and to avenge the blood of his relation on him: he ſhall not be guilty of blood; or be reckoned a murtherer, or die for it.

℣. 28. Becauſe he ſhould have remained in the city of his refuge, until the death of the high-prieſt, &c.] Nothing could give him his liberty but his death; ſo that though this was a merciful proviſion made in ſuch caſes for ſuch perſons, and was a conſiderable benefit and privilege, yet it carried in it ſome appearance of a puniſhment; ſince ſuch a perſon was confined within the boundaries of one of the cities of refuge as long as the high-prieſt lived; and this was done to make perſons cautious how they were any way acceſſary to the death of another, though without deſign: but after the death of the high-prieſt, the ſlayer ſhall return into the land of his poſſeſſion; to that part of the land, and to that tribe to which he belonged, to his houſe and family, and to his poſſeſſions and inheritances, whatever he had, and to all the honours and privileges he before enjoyed, and under no danger from the avenger of blood henceforward: a cuſtom ſomewhat like this has prevailed in ſome parts of Africa, as Leo Africanus [y] relates, that if a man happened to kill another, all the friends of the deceaſed conſpired to kill him, but if they could not effect it, then the guilty perſon was proclaimed an exile from the city, for the whole ſpace of ſeven years; and at the expiration of the whole ſeven years, when he returned from his exile, the chief men of the city invited him to a feaſt, and ſo he was reſtored to his liberty: temples, groves, altars, and ſtatues were common among other nations for aſylums or refuges, but whole cities, very rarely with the ancients; it ſeems there were ſome [z].

℣. 29. So theſe things ſhall be for a ſtatute of judgment unto you, &c.] A judicial law, according to which they were to proceed in all the above caſes: throughout your generations in all your dwellings; throughout all ages, as long as they dwelt in the land of Canaan, even unto the times of the Meſſiah, in whom the things figured hereby had their accompliſhment: the cities of refuge were types of Chriſt: hence a divine perſon, even the Meſſiah, is often ſpoken of as the refuge of his people, Pſ. ix. 9. and xlvi. 1, 7. and lxii. 7, 8. with which compare Heb. vi. 18. theſe were places to flee to, as the word is rendered by the Greek verſion; to Chriſt ſenſible ſinners flee for ſhelter and ſafety, which ſuppoſes danger in themſelves from the law and juſtice of God; a ſenſe of that danger which makes them flee from wrath to come; a view of Chriſt, as a place of refuge, and that no other but he will ſerve their purpoſe, and therefore make all the haſte and ſpeed they can unto him. The word properly ſignifies cities of gathering, or of reception. There was a gathering of the elect of God to Chriſt at his death; and there is another at effectual calling, which is an act of God's grace, and a diſtinguiſhing one, when ſouls gather to Chriſt as their Saviour for righteouſneſs, peace, pardon, reſt and everlaſting life; and when Chriſt receives them, tho' ſinners, into his arms, and into his heart, and into open fellowſhip with him, ſo as to dwell in him, where they dwell pleaſantly and ſafely; he receives them into his houſe here, and into heaven hereafter; and by, and in Chriſt, thoſe that flee to him, and are received by him, are retained and preſerved from ſatan, law, hell and death. The cities of refuge were of God's appointing; ſo Chriſt, as a Saviour, and rock of refuge to his people, is appointed and ſore-ordained of God; they were well known for refuges, as the Lord is in the palaces of Zion; they were open for all, at all times, as Chriſt is for all ſinners, even the chief of ſinners, Jews or Gentiles; they are all one in Chriſt, the Iſraelite, and the ſtranger and ſojourner; all impediments were removed out of the way of them, and plain directions to them given, as are in the goſpel, and by the miniſters of it; and there is always room in Chriſt for ſuch that flee to him, as there was in thoſe cities; and being in him, they are ſafe from the curſe and condemnation of the law, from wrath to come, and from the ſecond death; and their redemption and atonement, peace and reconciliation, liberty, life and ſalvation, are owing to the death of Chriſt, their high-prieſt. Abendana [a] obſerves, that the death of the high-prieſt atoned for the offence (of man-ſlaughter) which was the reaſon the man ſlayer continued in the city of refuge till his death, and then was releaſed: however, certain it is, that the death of Chriſt, our high-prieſt, atones for every ſin of thoſe that flee to him, and by which they are reconciled to God. In ſome things there is a difference between theſe cities of refuge and Chriſt; they were ſix, he but one; they were for ſuch only who ſhed blood ignorantly, he for ſuch that were enemies to him, and lived in malice towards others, and guilty of the moſt enormous crimes: to be in theſe cities of refuge was a kind of exile and impriſonment, but they that are in Chriſt are freemen; it was poſſible that ſuch might die that were in them, and at moſt were only delivered from temporal death, but they that flee to Chriſt for refuge are ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation.

℣. 30. Whoſo killeth any perſon, &c.] Willingly, and through enmity and malice: the murtherer ſhall be put to death by the mouth of two witneſſes; which is repeated partly to ſhew, that this law concerning the cities of refuge was not deſigned to ſcreen a murtherer, who was guilty through malice prepenſe; and partly for the ſake of what is added to it, that two witneſſes are required in ſuch a caſe, where a man's life is at ſtake, to prove the fact againſt him; which ſhows how careful the Lord is, and men ſhould be, of the lives of his creatures, that no man ſuffer wrongfully; which is repeated again and again, that it might be obſerved, ſee Deut. xvii. 6. and xix. 15. but one witneſs ſhall not teſtify againſt any perſon, to cauſe him to die; which looks as if in other caſes, in pecuniary matters, and the like, where life is not concerned, one witneſs may be ſufficient; though it is always beſt and ſafeſt to have more if they can be had, that at the mouth of two or three witneſſes every thing may be eſtabliſhed, Deut. xix. 15. Matt. xviii. 16.

℣. 31. Moreover, ye ſhall take no ſatisfaction for the life of a murtherer, &c.] Though he would give all his wealth and ſubſtance, all his eſtates and poſſeſſions, and whatever he is worth in the world; for all that a man has, he'll give for his life; but theſe are not to be taken, nor any thing, and every thing thing his friends may offer for him; all is to be rejected, the life of ſuch a man is not to be ſaved on any conſideration: which is guilty of death; as he is who kills a man willingly and purpoſely; but one man may be guilty of killing another, and yet not be deſerving of death, when it is done ignorantly and accidentally with reſpect to him, for which reaſon this clauſe is added: but he ſhall be ſurely put to death; by the order of the civil magiſtrate; and if this is not done either through want of evidence, or the fault of the judge, or the criminal clemency of the chief governor, God ſooner or later will take vengeance on ſuch a perſon.

[y] Deſcriptio Africæ, l. 2. p. 135, 136. [z] Vid. Marmor. Oxon. & Not. in Ib. p. 25. & Ritterſhuſium de jure Aſylorum, c. 2. [a] Not. in Miclol Yophi in ℣. 25.

℣. 32. Moreover, ye ſhall take no ſatisfaction for him that is fled to the city of his refuge, &c.] Tho' for killing a man unawares: that he ſhould come again to dwell in the land, until the death of the prieſt; the high-prieſt; ſuch a man's liberty was not to be purchaſed with money, nor even his life to be bought off, ſhould he be taken without his city; a great ranſom could not deliver him from the avenger, becauſe he was guilty of this law, which ſo wiſely and mercifully provided for him; and conſequently guilty alſo of great ingratitude to God, as well as of a breach of his law, and of diſreſpect to his high-prieſt, under whom he was protected.

℣. 33. So ye ſhall not pollute the land wherein ye are, &c.] The land of Canaan, as it had been by the old inhabitants of it, by idolatry, adultery, and murther: for blood it defileth the land; the ſhedding of innocent blood defiles a nation, and the inhabitants of it, brings guilt thereon, and ſubjects to puniſhment: and the land cannot be cleanſed of the blood that is ſhed therein, but by the blood of him that ſhed it; or there can be no expiation [b], or atonement made for it in any other way; the blood of the murtherer is required at his hands, and nothing ſhort of it will ſatisfy law and juſtice, ſee Gen. ix. 6.

℣. 34. Defile not therefore the land which ye ſhall inherit, &c.] By the commiſſion of ſuch atrocious crimes, or ſuffering them to go unpuniſhed, or by taking a compenſation for the life of the guilty perſon: wherein I dwell; which is added to ſtrengthen the exhortation, and as giving a reaſon why care ſhould be taken not to pollute it, becauſe the holy God dwells there; as he did in the tabernacle erected for him, and in ſuch a peculiar manner as he did not in other lands: for I the Lord dwell among the children of Iſrael; he now dwelt among them as their God, and their king; his tent or tabernacle being pitched in the midſt of the camps of Iſrael; and ſo he would continue to dwell among them when they were come to the land of Canaan, ſo long as they obſerved his laws, ſtatutes and ordinances; and therefore it behoved them to be careful, that they did not pollute themſelves, and their land, and cauſe him to depart from them.

CHAP. XXXVI.

THIS chapter gives an account of an application made by the heads of the tribe of Manaſſeh, concerning the inheritances of the daughters of Zelophehad, which ſhould they marry into other tribes, would be removed thither, and ſo be a loſs to theirs, ℣. 1—4. which caſe was judged worthy of regard; and to remedy this inconvenience, they were ordered to marry into the family of their father's tribe, and this was to be a law to all heireſſes for the future in other tribes, ℣. 5—9. and accordingly the daughters of Zelophehad married their father's brothers ſons, ℣. 10—13.

℣. 1. And the chief fathers of the families of the children of Gilead, &c.] The princes, as Aben Ezra; ſo the Septuagint verſion, which was the tribe of Manaſſeh, whoſe grandſon Gilead was, as follows: the ſon of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, of the families of the ſons of Joſeph, came near; to the houſe of judgment, as the Targum of Jonathan, the Sanhedrim or court of judicature, conſiſting of the following perſons: and ſpoke before Moſes; the Septuagint verſion adds, and before Eleazar the prieſt, as in ch. xxvii. 2. and xxxii. 2. and before the princes, the chief fathers of the children of Iſrael; the princes of the ſeveral tribes; or it may be rather the ſeventy elders.

℣. 2. And they ſaid, &c.] One in the name of reſt: the Lord commanded my lord; that is, Moſes, whom they addreſs in a very reſpectable manner, being the chief governor of the nation under God: to give the land for an inheritance by lot to the children of Iſrael; which command may be ſeen in ch. xxvi. 53—56: and my lord was commanded by the Lord to give the inheritance of Zelophehad our brother; or kinſman, being of the ſame tribe: unto his daughters; who ſued for it, and upon Moſes's conſulting the Lord about it, it was ordered they ſhould have it, ch. xxvii. 1—11. and which theſe princes obſerved was likely to be attended with the following inconvenience.

℣. 3. And if they be married to any of the ſons of the other tribes of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Which was not an unreaſonable ſuppoſition, and perhaps was judged very probable and likely, if ſome method was not taken to prevent it; which they might conclude from the application of ſome young men of the other tribes unto them: then ſhall their inheritance be taken from the inheritance of our fathers, and ſhall be put to the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received; for the inheritance given unto them would of courſe, the above being the caſe, deſcend to their ſons, and whoſe fathers being of other tribes, it would be fixed there: ſo ſhall it be taken from the lot of our inheritance; which gave them ſome concern; for though this was no perſonal injury to them, nor any detriment to their families and eſtates, yet as it was a leſſening of their tribe, they were uneaſy at it; and the rather they might be, ſince half their tribe was to ſettle on that ſide Jordan, where they now were: and now all this, the ſuit of the daughters of Zelophehad for their father's inheritance, which was granted them, the addreſs of young men to them as heireſſes, the concern of the heads of the tribe of Manaſſeh on this account; all this, I ſay, being before they entered into the land, or it was conquered by them, or divided to them by inheritance, ſhow their ſtrong faith and aſſurance, that they ſhould poſſeſs it.

℣. 4. And when the jubilee of the children of Iſrael ſhall be, &c.] At which time inheritances were to

[b] לא יכפר non poſſet expiatio, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; to the ſame ſenſe, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion.

to be reſtored to the original proprietors of them; yet this would be of no ſervice in the preſent caſe, but rather the contrary, ſince it would fix the inheritances of theſe daughters in another tribe, or in other tribes into which they ſhould marry; and ſo Aben Ezra and Jarchi interpret it, tho' there ſhall be a jubilee, that will be of no advantage; it won't remedy this inconvenience: for then ſhall their inheritance be put unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received; it being one principal part of the buſineſs of the jubilee-year to ſettle the inheritances of every tribe; and theſe daughters being married into another tribe, of conſequence their inheritance would be placed there; or ſhould it be ſold by their huſbands, or their ſons, at the year of jubilee it would be reſtored to them as of ſuch a tribe: ſo ſhall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of the tribe of our fathers; and thereby be a leſſening of it; and every tribe being ambitious of preſerving and increaſing its grandeur, this affair ſenſibly affected the heads of this tribe.

℣. 5. And Moſes commanded the children of Iſrael, &c.] Even all the tribes of Iſrael, whom the following law concerned, as well as the tribe of Manaſſeh: according to the word of the Lord; whom no doubt he conſulted on this occaſion, as he did when the daughters of Zelophehad applied unto him about the inheritance of their father: ſaying, the tribe of the ſons of Joſeph hath ſaid well; in ſhewing ſuch a concern for the welfare of their tribe; the conſideration of which would be of ſervice to them all, and therefore was worthy of notice. Aben Ezra obſerves, that the heads of the fathers ſpoke for the ſake of every tribe, what was for the good of them all, and therefore was well ſpoken.

℣. 6. This is the thing which the Lord doth command concerning the daughters of Zelophehad, &c.] Concerning this affair relative to them; the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes the words, "not for the generations that riſe up after the diviſion of the land, but for the daughters of Zelophehad;" as if this order only reſpected them, or what might happen before the land was divided, but not after; and this is the general opinion of the Jewiſh writers; but it ſeems, that as the following law not only concerns them, but all heireſſes, ſo all ſuch after, as well as before the diviſion of the land, ſince the reaſon of it holds good after as before: ſaying, let them marry to whom they think beſt; whom they like beſt, who are moſt acceptable to them; as it was reaſonable they ſhould, and not have ſuch forced upon them, whoſe perſons were diſagreeable to them: only into the family of the tribe of their father ſhall they marry; they were to marry not only ſuch as were of the tribe of Manaſſeh, but of their father's family in that tribe; they could only marry into the family of the Hepherites; ſee ch. xxvi. 32, 33.

℣. 7. So ſhall not the inheritance of the children of Iſrael remove from tribe to tribe, &c.] Which ſhews, that this concerns all the tribes of Iſrael, though yet not fully expreſſed, as it is afterwards: for every one of the children of Iſrael ſhall keep himſelf to the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers; or cleave[a] to a wife in that tribe for marriage; this word is uſed in the original inſtitution of it, Gen. ii. 24. though they were not ſtrictly obliged to marry in their own tribe; and frequently they did intermarry with other tribes, which had it been unlawful, would not have been done, as it was by kings, and prieſts, and others; nor was there any danger of an inheritance going into another tribe by a man's marrying into it; wherefore this ſignifies only, that they were to be careful to keep their inheritances in their tribe; and therefore if any of them had no ſons, only daughters, he was to marry them in his own tribe and family, that the inheritance might not remove, as follows.

℣. 8. And every daughter that poſſeſſeth an inheritance in any tribe of the children of Iſrael, &c.] For the ſame law which gave the daughters of Zelophehad a right to their father's inheritance, gave every other daughter in Iſrael a right to inherit where there were no ſons, ch. xxvii. 8. and every ſuch daughter, according to this law, ſhall be wife unto one of the family of the tribe of her father; marry into her father's tribe and family; by which it appears that ſuch who were not heireſſes might marry perſons of another family, and even of another tribe: that the children of Iſrael may enjoy every man the inheritance of his fathers; of his father's brethren, or of thoſe that are near akin to him.

℣. 9. Neither ſhall the inheritance remove from one tribe to another, &c.] Which was one end of the year of jubilee, but that did not ſufficiently ſecure it without this law, as this caſe ſhews: but every one of the tribes of Iſrael ſhall keep himſelf to his own inheritance; the chief view of which was, that it might clearly appear of what tribe and family the Meſſiah ſprung when he came.

℣. 10. Even as the Lord commanded Moſes, ſo did the daughters of Zelophehad.] They married into the family of their father's tribe, according to the following account.

℣. 11. For Mahlah, Tirzah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Noah, &c.] The names of the daughters of Zelophehad, and the ſame as in ch. xxvi. 33. and xxvii. 2. only the order a little varied, Tirzah and Noah here changing places; there they are according to their birth, here they are according to their marriage, as Aben Ezra thinks; tho' Jarchi is of opinion, that being thus differently placed, ſhews, that they were equal to one another, and one was not preferred to the other: theſe were married unto their father's brothers ſons; ſo that they were couſin-germans.

℣. 12. And they were married into the families of the ſons of Manaſſeh, the ſon of Joſeph, &c.] The family of the Hepherites, of which they were. Aben Ezra obſerves, that their being married into families, and not a family, is a ſign that their uncles ſons were not all of them brethren, or the ſons of one man, but of more, though all ſons of one or other of their father's brethren: and their inheritance remained in the tribe of the family of their father; by means of theſe marriages, even both in their father's tribe and family.

℣. 13. Theſe are the commandments, and the judgments, &c.] The judicial laws concerning the diviſion of the land of Canaan, the caſe of inheritances in it, and the cities of refuge: which the Lord commanded by the hand of Moſes, unto the children of Iſrael in the plains of Moab, by Jordan, near Jericho; where the Iſraelites had been ever ſince they were firſt obſerved by Balak king of Moab, and where the various things had been done recorded in the preceding chapters from that time.

[a] דבקו adhærebunt, Montanus, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius.

The END of the FIRST VOLUME.

BOOKS and TRACTS, Publiſhed by JOHN GILL, D. D.
And Sold by GEORGE KEITH, in Gracechurch-Street.

1. AN Expoſition of the New Teſtament, in 3 Vol. Folio.

2. An Expoſition of the Prophets of the Old Teſtament, 2 Vols. Folio.

3. An Expoſition of the Song of Solomon, in 122 Sermons 4to.

4. The Cauſe of God and Truth. Part I. Being an Examination of the principal Paſſages of Scripture, made Uſe of by the Arminians in Favour of their Scheme, particularly by Dr. Whitby, in his Diſcourſe on the five Points, in which the Arguments founded on the ſaid Paſſages are anſwered, the Objections taken from them removed, and the genuine Senſe of them given.

5.——— Part II. A Vindication of the Argument founded on ſuch Paſſages of Scripture, as prove the Doctrines of eternal Election, particular Redemption, original Sin, efficacious Grace in Converſion, and the final Perſeverance of the Saints.

6.——— Part III. A Confutation of the Arguments taken from Reaſon, againſt thoſe Doctrines.

7.——— Part IV. The Judgment of the ancient Chriſtian Church: or the Senſe of the Chriſtian Writers of the firſt four Centuries concerning them, wherein are alſo conſidered, the Teſtimonies in Favour of the univerſal Scheme produced by Limborch, Gerhard Voſſius, Monſ. Daile, Dr. Whitby and others.

8. A Vindication of the Cauſe of God and Truth. Part IV. Relating to the Senſe of the ancient Chriſtian Writers, about ſome Things in controverſy with the Arminians, from the Cavils, Calumnies, and Defamations of Mr. Henry Heywood, &c.

9. The Doctrine of the Trinity ſtated and vindicated.

10. The Doctrine of the Reſurrection ſtated and defended.

11. The Doctrine of Juſtification by the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt ſtated and maintained.

12. The Doctrine of God's everlaſting Love to his Elect, and their eternal Union with Chriſt; together with ſome other Truths ſtated and defended againſt Dr. Taylor.

13. The Doctrine of the Saints final Perſeverance aſſerted and vindicated.

14. The Doctrine of Predeſtination ſtated, and ſet in a Scripture Light, againſt Mr. Weſley.

15. The Doctrine of Grace cleared from the Charge of Licentiouſneſs.

11 FE 59

16. Truth defended: Being an Anſwer to an anonymous Pamphlet; entitled ſome Doctrines in the Supralapſarian Scheme examined.

17. The Prophecies of the Old Teſtament, reſpecting the Meſſiah, conſidered and proved to be literally fulfilled in Jeſus; containing an Anſwer to the Author of the Scheme of literal Prophecy, &c.

18. Levi's Urim and Thummim found with Chriſt.

19. Two annual Diſcourſes on the Duty of Prayer and ſinging of Pſalms.

20. The Duty of a Paſtor to his People, a Sermon at the Ordination of George Braithwaite, M. A.

21. The Fulneſs of the Mediator, a Sermon preached to the Society that ſupport the Lecture in Devonſhire-Square.

22. Chriſt the Saviour from the Tempeſt, a Sermon in Commemoration of the great Storm.

23. An Eſſay on the Original of Funeral Sermons, Orations and Odes.

24. The moral Nature and Fitneſs of Things conſidered, occaſioned by ſome Paſſages in a Sermon of the Reverend Dr. Chandler's.

25. An Anſwer to the Birmingham Dialogue-writer upon the Divinity of Chriſt, Election, Original Sin, Free-will, irreſiſtable Grace, imputed Righteouſneſs, Perſeverance, and Baptiſm.

26. An Anſwer to the Birmingham Dialogue-writer's ſecond Part, with a Poſtſcript in anſwer to Mr. Henry Heywood's Introduction to his Tranſlation of Dr. Whitby on Original Sin.

27. The Neceſſity of good Works unto Salvation, conſidered, in anſwer to Dr. Taylor.

28. The Law eſtabliſhed by the Goſpel.

29. The Watchman's Anſwer to the Queſtion, What of the Night?

30. The practical Improvement of the Watchman's Anſwer to the Queſtion, What of the Night?

31. The Glory of the Church in the latter Day.

32. Faith in God and his Word, the Proſperity and Eſtabliſhment of his People.

33. The ſure Performance of Prophecy.

34. The quiet and eaſy Paſſage of the People of God thro' Death to Glory.

35. The glorious State of the Saints in Heaven.

36. Attendance in Places of religious Worſhip, where the divine Name is recorded, encouraged.

37. The Agreement of the Old and New Teſtament.

38. The Neglect of fervent Prayer complained of.

39. The ancient Mode of baptizing by Immerſion maintained and vindicated.

40. A Defence of the above Vindication of the ancient Mode of baptizing.

41. The divine Right of Infant-Baptiſm, examined and diſproved.

42. The Argument from apoſtolic Tradition in Favour of Infant-Baptiſm: with others in a Pamphlet called the Baptiſm of Infants a reaſonable Service, &c. conſidered, and alſo an Anſwer to a Welſh Clergyman's twenty Arguments; to which are added the the Diſſenters Reaſons for ſeparating from the Church of England, occaſioned by the ſaid Writer.

43. Antipædo-baptiſm: or Infant-baptiſm, an Innovation, in anſwer to Pædo-baptiſm, or a Defence of Infant-baptiſm in Point of Antiquity.

44. A Reply to Mr. Clarke's Defence of the divine Right of Infant-baptiſm.

45. The Law in the Hand of Chriſt: a Sermon at Broad-Mead, in Briſtol.

46. The Glory of God's Grace diſplayed, in its abounding over the Aboundings of Sin; a Funeral Sermon for Mr. John Smith.

47. Job's Creed: or Confeſſion of Faith; a Funeral Sermon for the Reverend Mr. Edward Wallin.

48. The Head of the Serpent bruiſed by the Seed of the Woman; a Funeral Sermon for Mrs. Martha Gifford.

49. A Funeral Sermon on the Death of Eliz. Gill.

50. A Funeral Sermon on the Death of Mrs. Mary Fall.

51. A Funeral Sermon on the Death of Mrs. Anne Brine.

52. A Funeral Sermon on the Death of Mr. Edward Ludlow.

53. A Funeral Sermon on the Death of the Reverend Mr. Samuel Wilſon.

54. A Funeral Sermon on the Death of Benjamin Seward, Eſq;

55. Chriſt the Ranſom found; a Sermon on the Death of Mr. John Davenport.

56. The mutual Gain of Chriſt and Chriſtians in their Life and Death; a Sermon on the Death of Joſeph Stennet, D. D.

57. A Confeſſion of Faith required of Chriſtians at their Admiſſion into a Goſpel-church, with Scripture Proofs annexed.