℣. 4. And ſaid unto me, behold, I will make thee fruitful, &c.] In a ſpiritual ſenſe, in grace and good works; in a literal ſenſe, in an increaſe of worldly ſubſtance, and eſpecially of children: and multiply thee; make his poſterity numerous as the ſand of the ſea: and I will make of thee a multitude of people; a large nation conſiſting of many tribes, even a company of nations, as the twelve tribes of Iſrael were: and I will give this land unto thy ſeed after thee, for an everlaſting poſſeſſion; the land of Canaan, they were to poſſeſs as long as they were the people of God, and obedient to his law; by which obedience they held the land, even unto the coming of the Meſſiah, whom they rejected, and then they were caſt out, and a lo-ammi wrote upon them, and their civil polity, as well as church-ſtate, at an end: and beſides, Canaan was a type of the eternal inheritance of the ſaints in heaven, the ſpiritual Iſrael of God, which will be poſſeſſed by them to all eternity.

℣. 5. And now thy two ſons, Ephraim and Manaſſeh, &c.] Ephraim was the youngeſt, but is mentioned firſt, as he afterwards was preferred in the bleſſing of him: which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt, before I came unto thee into Egypt; and therefore muſt be 20 years of age or upwards; for Jacob had been in Egypt 17 years, and he came there when there had been two years of famine, and Joſeph's ſons were born to him before the years of famine began, ch. xli. 50. of theſe Jacob ſays, they are mine: as Reuben and Simeon, they ſhall be mine; that is, by adoption; ſhould be reckoned not as his grand-children, but as his children, even as his two eldeſt ſons, Reuben and Simeon; and ſo ſhould be diſtinct tribes or heads of them, as his ſons would be, and have a diſtinct part and portion in the land of Canaan; and thus the birth-right was transferred from Reuben, becauſe of his inceſt, to Joſeph, who in his poſterity had a double portion aſſigned him.

℣. 6. And thy iſſue which thou begetteſt after them, ſhall be thine, &c.] The children of Joſeph, that either were, or would be begotten after Ephraim and Manaſſeh; though whether ever any were is not certain; and this is only mentioned by way of ſuppoſition, as Jarchi interprets it, if thou ſhouldeſt beget, &c. theſe ſhould be reckoned his own, and not as Jacob's ſons, but be conſidered as other grand-children of Jacob's were, and not as Ephraim and Manaſſeh: and ſhall be called after the name of their brethren in their inheritance; they ſhould not have diſtinct names, or make diſtinct tribes, or have a diſtinct inheritance; but ſhould be called either the children of Ephraim, or the children of Manaſſeh, and ſhould be reckoned as belonging either to the one tribe, or the other, and have their inheritance in them, and with them, and not ſeparate.

℣. 7. And as for me, when I came from Padan, &c.] From Syria, from Laban's houſe: Rachel died by me in the land of Canaan; his beloved wife, the mother of Joſeph, on whoſe account he mentions her, and to ſhew a reaſon why he took his ſons as his own, becauſe his mother dying ſo ſoon, he could have no more children by her; and ſhe being his only lawful wife, Joſeph was of right to be reckoned as the firſt-born; and that as ſuch he might have the double portion, he took his two ſons as his own, and put them upon a level with them, even with Reuben and Simeon. By this it appears, as by the preceding account, that Rachel came with him into the land of Canaan, and there died: in the way, when yet there was but a little way to come unto Ephrath; about a mile, or 2000 cubits, as Jarchi obſerves: and I buried her there in the way of Ephrath; where ſhe died, and dying in childbed, could not be kept ſo long as to carry her to Machpelah, the burying-place of his anceſtors; and eſpecially as he had his flocks and herds with him, which could move but ſlowly; and what might make it more difficult to keep her long, and carry her thither, it might be, as Ben Melech conjectures, ſummer time; and the Vulgate Latin adds to the text, without any warrant from the original, and it was ſpring-time; however, ſhe was buried in the land of Canaan, and which is taken notice of, that Joſeph might obſerve it: it follows, the ſame is Bethlehem; that is, Ephrath; and ſo Bethlehem is called Bethlehem-ephratah, Mic. v. 2. whether theſe are the words of Jacob, or of Moſes, is not certain, but ſaid with a view to the Meſſiah, the famous ſeed of Jacob that ſhould be born there, and was.

℣. 8. And Iſrael beheld Joſeph's ſons, &c.] Ephraim and Manaſſeh, of whom he had been ſpeaking, as if they were abſent, and he might not know until now that they were preſent, for his eyes were dim that he could not ſee clearly, ℣. 10. he ſaw two young men ſtanding by Joſeph, but knew not who they were, and therefore aſked the following queſtion: and ſaid, who are theſe? whoſe ſons are they? the Targum of Jonathan is, "of "whom were theſe born to thee?" as if he knew them to be his ſons, only enquired who the mother of them was; but the anſwer ſhews he knew them not to be his ſons, and as for his wife, he could not be ignorant who ſhe was.

℣. 9. And Joſeph ſaid unto his father, they are my ſons, whom God hath given me in this place, &c.] In the land of Egypt; he accounts his ſons as the gifts of God, as children are, Pſ. cxxvii. 3. and it was not only a ſentiment of the Jews, that children are the gift of God; hence the names of Mattaniah, Nathaniel, &c. but of heathens, as the Greeks and Romans, among whom are frequent the names of men which ſhew it, as Theodorus, Deodatus, Apollodorus, Artemidorus, &c. and he ſaid, bring them, I pray thee, unto me, and I will bleſs them; not in a common way, barely wiſhing them proſperity and happineſs, but as a patriarch and prophet, under the influence and inſpiration of the Spirit of God, declaring what would befal them, and what bleſſings they ſhould be partakers of, in time to come.

℣. 10. Now the eyes of Iſrael were dim for age, &c.] Or heavy [p], that he could not lift them up eaſily and ſee clearly; his eye-brows hung over, his eyes were ſunk in his head, and the humours preſſed them through old age, that it was with difficulty he could perceive an object, at leaſt not diſtinctly: ſo that he could not ſee; very plainly, otherwiſe he did ſee the ſons of Joſeph, though he could not diſcern who they were, ℣. 8. and he brought them near unto him; that he might have a better ſight of them and bleſs them: and he kiſſed them, and embraced them; as a token of his affection for them.

℣. 11. And Iſrael ſaid unto Joſeph, I had not thought to ſee thy face, &c.] Some years ago he never expected to have ſeen him any more; he had given him up for loſt, as a dead man, when his ſons brought him his coat dipt in blood; and by reaſon of the long courſe of years which paſſed before ever ever he heard any thing of him: and lo, God hath ſhewed me alſo thy ſeed; it was an additional favour to ſee his offſpring; it can hardly be thought, that in a courſe of 17 years he had been in Egypt, he had not ſeen them before, only he takes this opportunity, which was the laſt he ſhould have of expreſſing his pleaſure on this occaſion.

[p] כבדו graves erant, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, &c.

℣. 12. And Joſeph brought them out from between his knees, &c.] Either from between his own, where they were kneeling, as he was ſitting, in order that they might be nearer his father, to receive his bleſſing by the putting on of his hands; or rather, from between his father's knees, he, as Aben Ezra obſerves, ſitting on the bed, having kiſſed and embraced them, they were ſtill between his knees; and that they might not be burthenſome to his aged father, leaning on his breaſt, and eſpecially, in order to put them in a proper poſition for his benediction, he took them from thence, and placed them over-againſt him to his right and left hand: and he bowed himſelf with his face to the earth; in a civil way to his father, and in reverence of him; in a religious way to God, expreſſing his thankfulneſs for all favours to him and his, and as ſupplicating a bleſſing for his ſons through his father, under a divine influence and direction.

℣. 13. And Joſeph took them both, Ephraim in his right hand towards Iſrael's left hand, &c.] He took Ephraim his youngeſt ſon in his right hand, and led him up to his father, by which means he would ſtand in a right poſition to have his grand-father's left hand put upon him: and Manaſſeh in his left hand toward Iſrael's right hand; Manaſſeh his eldeſt ſon he took in his left hand, and brought him to his father, and ſo was in a proper poſition to have his right hand laid upon him, as ſeniority of birth required, and as he was deſirous ſhould be the caſe: and brought them near unto him; in the above manner, ſo near as that he could lay his hands on them.

℣. 14. And Iſrael ſtretched out his right hand, &c.] Not directly forward, but acroſs, or otherwiſe it would have been laid on Manaſſeh, as Joſeph deſigned it ſhould by the poſition he placed him in: and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger; the right hand being the ſtrongeſt and moſt in uſe, as it was reckoned moſt honourable to ſit at it, ſo to have it impoſed, as being ſignificative of the greater bleſſing: and his left hand upon Manaſſeh's head; who was the elder: guiding his hands wittingly; this was not done accidentally but on purpoſe; or made his hands to underſtand [q], they acted as if they underſtood what he would have done, as Aben Ezra; as if they were conſcious of what ſhould be, or would be; though he could not ſee clearly and diſtinctly, yet he knew by the poſition of them before him, which was the elder and which was the younger: he knew that Joſeph would ſet the firſt-born in ſuch a poſition before him, as naturally to put his right hand on him, and the younger in ſuch a poſition as that it would be readieſt for him to put his left hand on him; and therefore being under a divine impulſe and ſpirit of prophecy, by which he diſcerned that the younger was to have the greater bleſſing, he croſſed his hands, or changed them, and put his right hand on Ephraim, and his left hand on Manaſſeh: for Manaſſeh was the firſt-born; or rather, though [r] he was the firſt-born, as Aben Ezra.

℣. 15. And he bleſſed Joſeph, &c.] In his ſons, who were reckoned for him, and became the heads of tribes in his room: and ſaid, God, before whom my fathers Abraham and Iſaac did walk; in whom they believed, whom they profeſſed, and whom they feared, ſerved and worſhipped, and with whom they had communion: the God which fed me all my life long unto this day; who had upheld him in life, provided for him all the neceſſaries of life, food and raiment, and had followed him with his goodneſs ever ſince he had a being, and had fed him as the great ſhepherd of the flock, both with temporal and ſpiritual food, being the God of his life, and of his mercies in every ſenſe.

℣. 16. The angel which redeemed me from all evil, bleſs the lads, &c.] Ephraim and Manaſſeh, now about 20 years old or upwards: this is not to be underſtood of a created angel he wiſhes to be their guardian, but of an increated one, the Son of God, the angel of God's preſence, the angel of the covenant; the ſame with the God of his father before-mentioned, as appears by the character he gives him, as having redeemed him from all evil; not only protected and preſerved him from temporal evils and imminent dangers from Eſau, Laban, and others; but had delivered him from the power, guilt and puniſhment of ſin, the greateſt of evils, and from the dominion and tyranny of Satan the evil one, and from everlaſting wrath, ruin, and damnation; all which none but a divine perſon could do, as well as he wiſhes, deſires, and prays, that he would bleſs the lads with bleſſings temporal and ſpiritual, which a created angel cannot do; and Jacob would never have aſked it of him: and let my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Iſaac; having adopted them, he foretels they would be called not only the ſons of Joſeph, but the children of Iſrael or Jacob, and would have a name among the tribes of Iſrael, and be heads of them, as well as would be called the ſeed of Abraham and of Iſaac, and inherit their bleſſings: and let them grow into a multitude in the midſt of the earth; where they increaſed as fiſhes, as the word ſignifies [s], and more than any other of the tribes, even in the times of Moſes, the number of them were 85200 men fit for war, Numb. xxvi. 34, 37, and their ſituation was in the middle of the land of Canaan.

℣. 17. And when Joſeph ſaw that his father laid his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, it diſpleaſed him, &c.] To ſee the younger preferred to the elder; parents, generally ſpeaking, having the greateſt regard to the firſt-born with reſpect to honour and eſtate, and to them, in thoſe times, the patriarchal bleſſing particularly, was thought to belong; but it did not always go to them, but to the younger, as in Jacob's own caſe: and he held up his father's hand; he took him by the right-hand, and lifted it up from the head of Ephraim, and held it in order that he might put it by his direction on the head of Manaſſeh.

℣. 18. And Joſeph ſaid unto his father, not ſo, my father, &c.] It is not right, it ſhould not ſo be, that the right hand ſhould be put on the youngeſt, and the left hand on the eldeſt: for this is the firſt-born; directing him to Manaſſeh, and ſeeking to guide his hand towards him: put thy right hand upon his head; Joſeph was for proceeding according to the order of birthright, but Jacob was directed by a ſpirit of prophecy as follows.

℣.

[q] שכל את ידיו intelligere fecit ſuas manus, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Druſius, Cartwright. Tigurine verſion; quamvis, Piſcator; ſo ſome in Fagius.

[r] כי tametſi, & inſtar piſcium ſint, Pagninus, Montanus; ſo Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Ainſworth and the Targum of Onkelos, and Jarchi.

ẏ. 19. And his father refuſed, &c.] To have any alteration made, and therefore, though Joſeph lifted it up from Ephraim's head and held it over it, Jacob put it on again and went on with the bleſſing: and ſaid, I know it, my ſon, I know it; he knew what he did, and he repeats it to confirm it, as well as to ſhew the vehemency of his mind, and his reſolution to abide by what he had done; he knew on whom he laid his right hand, and he knew that Manaſſeh was the firſt-born; ſo the Targum of Jonathan: and he alſo ſhall become a people; a tribe or nation: and he alſo ſhall be great; in number, riches, and honour: but truly his younger brother ſhall be greater than he; more numerous, as the tribe of Ephraim was than that of Manaſſeh, when they came out of Egypt; for in numbering them there appeared to be 8300 more in the one tribe than in the other, Numb. i. 33, 35. as well as more honourable; Ephraim's ſtandard was placed before Manaſſeh's, Numb. ii. 18. 20. and upon the diviſion of the tribes in Rehoboam's time, as Jeroboam was of the tribe of Ephraim, that tribe was at the head of the ten tribes, and the ſeat of the kingdom was in it, and the whole kingdom of Iſrael often goes by the name of Ephraim: and his ſeed ſhall become a multitude of nations; that is, of families, for as nations are called families, Amos iii. 1, 2. ſo families may be called nations; the Targum of Onkelos is, "his ſons ſhall be rulers "among the people," ſo Joſhua who was of the tribe of Ephraim conquered and ſubdued the nations of the Canaanites, and Jeroboam of this tribe ruled over the ten tribes or nations of Iſrael: it may be rendered, his ſeed ſhall fill the nations [t], or be the fullneſs of them; which Jarchi interprets of the whole world being filled with the fame and renown of Joſhua, who was of this tribe, when the ſun and moon ſtood ſtill in his days; but it is beſt to underſtand this, of the large ſhare he ſhould have of the land of Canaan among the reſt of the tribes or nations of Iſrael.

ẏ. 20. And he bleſſed them that day, &c.] That Joſeph viſited him, and this he did by faith, believing that what he had ſaid concerning them would be accompliſhed, as the apoſtle obſerves, Heb. xi. 21. ſaying, in thee ſhall Iſrael bleſs; in Joſeph, as the Targum of Jonathan, that is, in his ſeed, in his ſons Ephraim and Manaſſeh, when the Iſraelites bleſſed any, they ſhould make uſe of their names: ſaying, God make thee as Ephraim and Manaſſeh; as great and honourable, as rich and wealthy, as fruitful and proſperous as they; and the Targum ſays, this cuſtom continues with the Jews to this day, to put their hands on perſons to bleſs them; if a ſon, they ſay, "God make thee "as Ephraim and Manaſſeh;" if a daughter, "God "make thee as Sarah and Rebekah:" and he ſet Ephraim before Manaſſeh; not only in this form of benediction, but in all that he had ſaid and done before; he preferred him to Manaſſeh by putting his right hand upon him, and giving him the ſuperior bleſſing: and it is no unuſual thing for the younger, to be ſet before the elder, both by God and man, but eſpecially by the Lord, who ſeeth not as man ſeeth, and proceeds not according to carnal deſcent, or thoſe rules men go by: there had been many inſtances before this, as Abel was preferred to Cain, Shem to Japhet, Abraham to Nahor, Iſaac to Iſhmael, and Jacob to Eſau; as there were after it, as Moſes to Aaron, and David to his brethren.

ẏ. 21. And Iſrael ſaid unto Joſeph, behold, I die, &c.] Expected to die very ſhortly; and he not only ſpeaks of it as a certain thing, and what would quickly be, but with pleaſure and comfort, having no fear and dread of it on him, but as what was agreeable to him, and he had made himſelf familiar with: but God ſhall be with you; with Joſeph and his poſterity, and with all his brethren, and theirs, to comfort and ſupport them, to guide and counſel them, to protect and defend them, to carry them through all they had to endure in Egypt, and at length bring them out of it; he ſignifies he was departing from them, but God would not depart from them, whoſe preſence would be infinitely more to them than his; and which, as it made him the more eaſy to leave them, ſo it might make them more eaſy to part with him: and bring you again unto the land of your fathers; the land of Canaan, where their fathers Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob had dwelt, and which was given to them and theirs for an inheritance, and where Joſeph and his brethren had lived, and would be brought thither again, as the bones of Joſeph were, and as all of them in their poſterity were in Joſhua's time.

ẏ. 22. Moreover, I have given to thee one portion above thy brethren, &c.] The word for portion is Shechem, and which ſome take to be not an appellative, as we do, but the name of a city, even Shechem; ſo the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi interpret it; and though that is not directly meant, yet there is a reference had to it, and it ſeems to be enigmatically underſtood; for this portion or parcel ſpoken of was near to Shechem, and not only that but the city itſelf, and all the adjacent country, came to the lot of Ephraim, and were poſſeſſed by that tribe: which I took out of the hand of the Amorite with my ſword, and with my bow; not referring, as ſome think, to the taking and ſpoiling of the city of Shechem by his ſons, and ſo ſaid to be done by him in them; for Jacob would never make that his act and deed, which he ſo much abhorred and deteſted, and ſtill did, as appears by what he ſays of it in the following chapter; nor was this taken from the Amorite, but from the Hivite, and not by his ſword and bow, whether taken literally or metaphorically, and ſo interpreted of his prayer and ſupplication, as by Onkelos; but he was ſo far from aſſiſting in that affair by ſupplication, that his imprecations fell on Levi and Simeon, for that fact of theirs: if this is to be underſtood of the city of Shechem, what Aben Ezra and Ben Gerſom propoſe, ſeems moſt agreeable, that this is ſaid by way of anticipation, the paſt tenſe being put for the future; Jacob under a ſpirit of prophecy foreſeeing and declaring that his ſons, and he in his ſons in future time, would take it out of the hands of the Amorites, the principal of the Canaanitiſh nations, and then it ſhould be given to Joſeph's ſeed; but the firſt and ſpecial regard is to the part or parcel of ground which lay near Shechem; and this Jacob is ſaid to take by his ſword and bow, which ſome interpret of his money, which were his arms and defence, and which he had got by much labour; and if it could be proved that his money was marked with a ſword and bow upon it, as the Perſian Darics were with an archer with his bow and arrow, and therefore called ſagittaries or archers [u], it would countenance this ſenſe; tho' even then it could not, with propriety, be ſaid, that he by this means obtained it of the Amorite, ſince ſince he bought it of the children of Hamor the Hivite; but it ſeems more likely, that after Jacob departed from Shechem to Hebron, the Amorite came and ſeized on this parcel of ground; which he hearing of, went with his ſons and ſervants, and recovered it out of their hands by his ſword and bow; though this warlike action of his is no where recorded in ſcripture, the Jewiſh writers [w] ſay, that Jacob and his ſons had very grievous wars with the Amorites on account of the ſlaughter and captivity of the Shechemites: by giving to Joſeph this portion above his brethren, it appears that the birthright was become his, he having the double portion, and indeed all that Jacob had of his own in the land of Canaan; and hence Joſeph's bones were buried here, it being his own ground; ſee Joſh. xxiv. 32. John iv. 5.

[t] יהיה מלא הגוים implebit nationes, Munſter; erit plenitudo gentium, Pagninus, Montanus, Schmidt; impletio gentium, Tigurine verſion. [u] Vid. Heidegger. Hiſt. Patriarch. tom. 2. Exercit. 22. §. 12. p. 690.

CHAP. XLIX.

THIS chapter contains a prophecy of future things, relating to the twelve ſons of Jacob, and to the twelve tribes, as deſcending from them, and which he delivered to his ſons on his deathbed, having called them together for that purpoſe, ℣. 1, 2. he begins with Reuben his firſt-born, whoſe inceſt he takes notice of, on which account he ſhould not excel, ℣. 3, 4. next Simeon and Levi have a curſe denounced on them for their cruelty at Shechem, ℣. 5, 6. but Judah is praiſed, and good things propheſied of him; and particularly that Shiloh, or the Meſſiah, ſhould ſpring from him, the time of whoſe coming is pointed at, ℣. 7—12. the predictions concerning Zebulun, Iſſachar and Dan follow, at the cloſe of which Jacob expreſſes his longing expectation of God's ſalvation, ℣. 13—18. and after foretelling what ſhould befal Gad, Aſher and Naphtali, ℣. 19—21. a large account is given of Joſeph, his troubles, his trials, and his bleſſings, ℣. 22—26. and Benjamin the youngeſt ſon is taken notice of laſt of all, all the tribes being bleſſed in their order according to the nature of their bleſſing, ℣. 27, 28. and the chapter is cloſed with a charge of Jacob's to his ſons to bury him in Canaan, which having delivered, he died, ℣. 29—33.

℣. 1. And Jacob called upon his ſons, &c.] Who either were near at hand, and within call at the time Joſeph came to viſit him, or if at a diſtance, and at another time, he ſent a meſſenger or meſſengers to them to come unto him: and ſaid, gather yourſelves together; his will was, that they ſhould attend him all together at the ſame time, that he might deliver what he had to ſay to them in the hearing of them all; for what he after declares, was not ſaid to them ſingly and alone, but when they were all before him: that I may tell you that which ſhall befal you in the laſt days; not their perſons merely, but their poſterity chiefly, from that time forward to the coming of the Meſſiah, who is ſpoken of in this prophecy, and the time of his coming; ſome things are ſaid relating to temporals, others to ſpirituals; ſome are bleſſings or propheciesof good things to them, others curſes or foretel evil, but all are predictions delivered out by Jacob under a ſpirit of prophecy; ſome things had their accompliſhment when the tribes of Iſrael were placed in the land of Canaan, others in the times of the judges, and in later times; and ſome in the times of the Meſſiah, to which this prophecy reaches, whoſe coming was in the laſt days, Heb. i. 1. and Nachmanides ſays, according to the ſenſe of all their writers, the laſt days here are the days of the Meſſiah; and in an ancient writing of the Jews it is ſaid [x], that Jacob called his ſons, becauſe he had a mind to reveal the end of the Meſſiah, i. e. the time of his coming; and Abraham Seba [y] obſerves, that this ſection is the ſeal and key of the whole law, and of all the prophets propheſied of, unto the days of the Meſſiah.

℣. 2. Gather yourſelves together, &c.] This is repeated to haſten them, and to ſuggeſt, that he had ſomething of importance to make known unto them, which he choſe to do, when they were together: and hear, ye ſons of Jacob, and hearken to Iſrael your father; theſe words are uſed and doubled to excite their attention to what he was about to ſay, and which is urged from the near relation there was between them.

℣. 3. Reuben, thou art my firſt-born, &c.] Jacob addreſſed himſelf to Reuben firſt, in the preſence of his brethren, owned him as his firſt-born, as he was, ch. xxix. 31, 32. did not caſhier him from his family, nor diſinherit him, though he had greatly diſobliged him, for which the birth-right, and the privileges of it, were taken from him, 1 Chron. v. 1, 2. my might, and the beginning of my ſtrength; begotten by him when in his full ſtrength [z], as well as the firſt of his family, in which his ſtrength and glory lay; ſo the Septuagint, "the beginning "of my children;" and becauſe he was ſo, of right the double portion belonged to him, had he not forfeited it, Deut. xxi. 17. ſee Pſ. cv. 36. Some verſions render the words, the beginning of my grief or ſorrow [a]; the word Oni ſometimes ſo ſignifying, as Rachel called her youngeſt ſon Benoni, the ſon of my ſorrow; but this is not true of Reuben, he was not the beginning of Jacob's ſorrow, for the raviſhing of Dinah, and the ſlaughter and ſpoil of the Shechemites, by his ſons, which gave him great ſorrow and grief, were before the affair of Reuben's lying with Bilhah: the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power; that is, to him of right belonged excellent dignity, power and authority, in the family, a pre-eminence over his brethren, a double portion of goods, ſucceſſion in government, and as is commonly underſtood, the exerciſe of the prieſthood; and ſo all the Targums interpret it, that he ſhould, had he not ſinned, took three parts or portions above his brethren, the birth-right, prieſthood and kingdom. Jacob obſerves this to him, that he might know what he had loſt by ſinning, and from what excellency and dignity, grandeur and power, he was fallen.

℣. 4. Unſtable as water, &c.] Which is not to be underſtood of the levity of his mind, and his diſpoſition to hurt, and the impetuous force of that breaking forth like water, and carrying him into the commiſſion of it; but rather of his fall from his excellency and dignity, like the fall of water from an high place; and of his being vile, mean, and

[w] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 5. 1. [x] Zohar in Gen. fol. 126. 1. [y] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 57. 4. & 58. 1.
[z] Nate, meæ vires ——— Virgil. [a] ראשית אוני κεφαλαιον λυπης μυ, Aquila; αρχη οδυνης, Symmachus apud Druſium; principium doloris mei, V. L. Tigurine verſion.

and contemptible, uſeleſs and unprofitable, like water ſpilt on the ground; and of his weak and ſtrengthleſs condition and circumſtances, being deprived of the prerogatives and privileges of his birth-right, and having loſt all his honour and grandeur, power and authority. The word in the Arabic language ſignifies [b] to be proud and haughty, to lift up one's ſelf, to ſwell and riſe like the turgent and ſwelling waters: but though he did thus lift himſelf, yet it follows, thou ſhalt not excel; not have the excellency of dignity and power which belonged to him as the firſt-born; the birth-right and the double portion were given to Joſeph, who had two tribes deſcending from him, when Reuben had but one; the kingdom was given to Judah, and the prieſthood to Levi, as both the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem obſerve: as he did not excel his brethren in honour and dignity, ſo neither in wealth and riches, nor in numbers; ſee Deut xxxiii. 6. where the word not is wrongly ſupplied; nor in his ſhare in the land of Canaan, his poſterity being ſeated on the other ſide of Jordan, at their requeſt; nor did any perſons of note and eminence ſpring from his tribe: becauſe thou wenteſt up to thy father's bed, then defiledſt thou it; referring to his inceſt with Bilhah, his father's concubine-wife, ch. xxxv. 22. which though done forty years ago, was now remembered, and left an indelible ſpot on Reuben's character, and his poſterity: he went up to my couch; turning himſelf to his other ſons, to take notice of the crime, as very abominable and deteſtable; affirming the truth of it, and ſpeaking of it with ſome vehemency, his affections being moved; and it may be could not bear to look at Reuben, but turned himſelf to his brethren; though he had forgiven the ſin, and very probably Reuben had repented of it, and had forgiveneſs of God, which he might have, though in ſome ſenſe vengeance was taken on this ſinful invention of his, Pſ. xcix. 8. There are various ſenſes given of this phraſe; ſome, as Aben Ezra, my bed departed from me; that is, he departed from his bed; or as Kimchi [c], it ceaſed to be my bed; he left it, he abſtained from the bed of Bilhah upon its being defiled by Reuben: and others ſeparate theſe words, and read עלה ſingly, it went up [d]; either the excellency of Reuben went up, vaniſhed and diſappeared like ſmoke; or as Ben Melech connects it with the beginning of the verſe, unſtable as water, giving the ſenſe, it, the inundation of water aſcended and prevailed over thee; as waters aſcend, meaning his luſt aſcended, and got the prevalence over him; but the accents will not admit of ſuch a ſeparation of the words; it is beſt to underſtand them in the firſt ſenſe. As to the manner of the expreſſion, of going up to a bed, it may be obſerved, that not only their beds in thoſe times might be raiſed higher than ours, but that they were placed in an higher part of the room, and ſo there was an aſcent to them; and Dr. Shaw [e] ſays, this is the cuſtom of the eaſtern people to this day, "at one end of each "chamber there is a little gallery, raiſed three, "four, or five feet above the floor, with a ballu-"ſtrade in the front of it, with a few ſteps likewiſe "leading up to it, here they place their beds."

℣. 5. Simeon and Levi are brothers, &c.] Not becauſe they were ſo in a natural ſenſe, being brethren both by father and mother's ſide, for there were others ſo beſides them; but becauſe they were of like tempers, diſpoſitions and manners [f], bold, wrathful, cruel, revengeful and deceitful, and joined together in their evil counſels and evil actions, and ſo are joined together in the evils predicted of them: inſtruments of cruelty are in their habitations; or veſſels, utenſils, houſhold goods gotten by violence and rapine, and through the cruel uſage of the Shechemites; theſe were in their dwellings, their houſes were full of ſuch mammon of unrighteouſneſs, or ſpoil; or as others, inſtruments of cruelty are their ſwords [g]; what they ſhould only have uſed in their own defence, with theſe they ſhed the blood of the Shechemites very barbarouſly, ch. xxxiv. 25. Some think the word here uſed is the Greeek word for a ſword; and the Jews ſay [h], that Jacob curſed the ſwords of Simeon and Levi in the Greek tongue; and others ſay it is Perſic, being uſed by Xenophon for Perſian ſwords; but neither of them ſeems probable: rather this word was originally Hebrew, and ſo paſſed from thence into other languages; but perhaps the ſenſe of it, which Aben Ezra gives, may be moſt agreeable, if the firſt ſenſe is not admitted, that it ſignifies covenants, compacts, agreements [i], ſuch as theſe men made with the Shechemites, even nuptial contracts; for the root of the word, in the Chaldee language, ſignifies to eſpouſe [k]; and theſe they abuſed to cruelty, bloodſhed and ſlaughter, in a moſt deceitful manner: in the Ethiopic language, the word ſignifies counſels; ſo De Dieu takes it here.

℣. 6. O my ſoul, come not thou into their ſecret, &c.] Their cabinet-counſels, combinations and conſpiracies; this Jacob ſaid, as abhorring the wicked counſel they had took of ſlaying the Shechemites; and leſt any ſhould think he was concerned in it, or connived at it, he expreſſed a deteſtation of the fact on his dying bed: the future tenſe may be put for the paſt; and ſo Onkelos renders it, my ſoul was not in their ſecret; and ſo the other two Targums paraphraſe it, that when they got and conſulted together, his ſoul was not pleaſed and delighted with their counſel, but abhorred it; or my ſoul ſhall not come, which Jarchi thinks prophetically refers to the caſe of Zimri, the ſon of Salu, of the tribe of Simeon, as the following clauſe to the affair of Korah, of the tribe of Levi, as foreſeeing and diſapproving them, and deſiring they might not be called by his name, or his name called upon them, Numb. xxv. 14. and xvi. 1. unto their aſſembly, mine honour, be not thou united; the ſame thing expreſſed in different words; by his honour or glory he means his ſoul, the more honourable part of man, or his tongue with which man glorifies God; and hereby Jacob intimates, that he did not in thought, and much leſs in expreſs words, give any conſent unto, and approbation of the deed of thoſe two ſons of his, and that he never was, nor never deſired to be with them in their meetings

[b] فخر ſuperbivit, ſemet extulit gloria faſtuque, Golius, col. 1767: ſo Caſtel. col. 2980. [c] Sepher Shoraſh. rad. עלה. [d] עלה aſcendit, i. e. ablit & evanuit, Vatablus. [e] Travels, p. 209. Ed. 2.

[f] ——— par nobile fratrum,
Nequitia & nugis pravorum & amore gemellum. Horat. Sermon. l. 2. Satyr. 3.

[g] מכרתיהם Machæræ eorum, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Schmidt; and ſo R. Sol. Urbin Ohel Moed, fol. 31. 2. [h] Pirke Eliezer, c. 38. [i] So Caſtell. Lexic. col. 2058. Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [k] מכר Chald. & Syr. deſpondit, deſponſavit, Schindler. Lex. col. 998.

ings and conſultations: for in their anger they ſlew a man; Hamor or Shechem, together with all the males of the city; and ſo man may be put for men, the ſingular for the plural, as is frequent. The Targum of Jonathan is, a king and his governor; and the Targum of Jeruſalem, kings with governors: and in their ſelf-will they digged down a wall; not the wall of the city of Shechem, which does not appear to be walled, by their eaſy acceſs into it; and if it was, they don't ſeem to have had proper inſtruments for ſuch an undertaking, nor a ſufficient number for ſuch work, and which would have required longer time than they uſed, unleſs it was a poor wall indeed: rather, the wall of Shechem's houſe, or the court before it, which they dug down, or broke through to get in and ſlay Hamor and Shechem, and take away their ſiſter; though the word, as here pointed, always ſignifies an ox; and ſo the Samaritan and Septuagint verſions render it, they hamſtringed a bull, or houghed an ox, juſt in like manner as horſes are ſaid to be houghed, Joſh. xi. 6, 9. 2 Sam. viii. 4. and which ſome underſtand [l] figuratively of a prince or ruler; ſo great perſonages are called bulls of Baſhan, Pſ. xxii. 12. and interpret it either of Hamor or of Shechem, who was a prince among his people, and furious in his luſt towards Dinah, and ſo this clauſe is much the ſame with the former: and beſides, him they enervated by circumciſion, and took the advantage of this his condition at the worſt, and ſlew him, which ſeems to be the true ſenſe of the text, agreeable to Gen. xxxiv. 25, 26. but the Jeruſalem Targum paraphraſes it of Joſeph, whom his brethren ſold, who was like unto an ox; and ſo Jarchi interprets it of him, whom they deſigned to ſlay, ſee Deut. xxxiii. 17. but it is better to take the words in a literal ſenſe, either of the oxen that Simeon and Levi took from the Shechemites, which they plucked or drove away from their mangers, as ſome render the words [m]; and ſome of them they might hough or hamſtring, that they might not get away from them, ſee ch. xxxiv. 28. or rather of Shechem himſelf, who was שור a prince, a word which has ſome likeneſs and affinity to this in the text.

℣. 7. Curſed be their anger, for it was fierce, &c.] It was ſinful anger in the nature of it, and ſo criminal and deteſtable; it was ſtrong, fierce and furious in its operation and effects, and ſo juſtly curſed; not their perſons, but their paſſions: and their wrath, for it was cruel; it iſſued in the cruel and barbarous ſlaughter of the inhabitants of Shechem; the ſame thing as before in other words repeated, to expreſs his great abhorrence of their wrath and rage. Aben Ezra thinks, that the words may be conſidered either as a prophecy, or a prayer, that their anger might ceaſe: what follows is certainly a prophecy, I will divide them in Jacob, and ſcatter them in Iſrael; which he is ſaid to do, becauſe he foretold it would be done; as Jeremiah is ſaid to root out and pull down kingdoms, becauſe he propheſied thereof, Jer. i. 10. and this was fulfilled in the tribes of Simeon and Levi; as for the tribe of Simeon, that had not a diſtinct part by itſelf in the land of Canaan, but had their inheritance out of the portion, and within the inheritance of the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xix. 1—9. and their cities did not join to one another, as Aben Ezra obſerves, but lay ſcattered up and down in the tribe of Judah; and when they were increaſed and ſtraitened for room, many of them went without the land, to the entrance of Gedor, where they of Ham, or the Egyptians, had dwelt, and others to mount Seir in Edom, 1 Chron. iv. 39, 42. and it is a notion which prevails with the Jews, and which Jarchi takes notice of, that a great many of this tribe were ſcribes and teachers of the law, and even teachers of children, and by which they lived among the ſeveral tribes; and ſo the Jeruſalem Targum, "I will divide the tribe of Simeon, that "they may be ſcribes and teachers of the law in "the congregation of Jacob." And as for the tribe of Levi, it is well known, that had no inheritance in the land of Canaan, but had 48 cities aſſigned them in the ſeveral tribes here and there; and thus Jacob's prophecy had an exact accompliſhment.

℣. 8. Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren ſhall praiſe, &c.] His name ſignifies praiſe, and was given him by his mother, her heart being filled with praiſes to God for him, ch. xxix. 35. and is here confirmed by his father on another account, becauſe his brethren ſhould praiſe him for many excellent virtues in him; and it appears by inſtances already obſerved, that he had great authority, and was highly eſteemed among his brethren, as his poſterity would be in future times for their courage, warlike expeditions and ſucceſs, and being famous for heroes, ſuch as David, and others; and eſpecially his famous ſeed the Meſſiah, and of whom he was a type, ſhould be praiſed by his brethren, who are ſo through his incarnation, and by divine adoption, and who praiſe him for the glories and excellencies of his perſon, and the bleſſings of his grace: thine hand ſhall be in the neck of thine enemies; preſſing them down by his ſuperior power, ſubduing them, and cauſing them to ſubmit to him, and which was verified in David, who was of this tribe, Pſ. xviii. 40. and eſpecially in the Meſſiah, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, who has conquered and ſubdued all his, and his peoples enemies, ſin, ſatan, the world and death: thy father's children ſhall bow down before thee; before the kings that ſhould ſpring from this tribe, and ſhould rule over all the reſt, as David and Solomon, to whom civil adoration and reſpect were given by them; and before the king Meſſiah, his ſon and antitype, in a way of religious worſhip, which is given him by the angels, the ſons of God, and by all the ſaints and people of God, who are his father's children by adoption; theſe bow before him, and give him religious adoration as a divine perſon, and ſubmit to his righteouſneſs as mediator, and bow to the ſcepter of his kingdom, and caſt their crowns at his feet, and give him the glory of their whole ſalvation. This in ſome Jewiſh writings [n] is applied to the time of the Meſſiah's coming.

℣. 9. Judah is a lion's whelp, &c.] Or as one; the note of ſimilitude being wanting, as Aben Ezra and Ben Melech obſerve; he was comparable to a young lion for his ſtrength, courage, and generoſity; and it may refer to the infant-ſtate of this tribe in the times of the Judges, who firſt went up againſt the Canaanites and overcame them, Judg. i. 1—4. from the prey, my ſon, thou art gone up; alluding to the lion going up to the mountains, where it chiefly reſides, after it has found its prey and ſatiated itſelf with it: he ſtooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion; one that is grown up, and has arrived to its full ſtrength, ſuch an one is a proper emblem of David king of Iſrael, of his royalty, courage, valour and conqueſts; and who having ſubdued the nations round about him, couched couched like a lion, and had reſt from all his enemies; and eſpecially, this was verified in the times of Solomon his ſon, when he had peace on all ſides, and Judah and Iſrael dwelt ſafely under their vines and fig-trees, 1 Kings iv. 24, 25, who ſhall rouſe him up? a lion grown up and in its full ſtrength, or a lioneſs, as ſome chuſe to interpret it, and which is the fierceſt, and therefore the moſt dangerous to rouſe up when laid down, either in its den, or with its prey in its paws: ſo dangerous it was to provoke the tribe of Judah, as its enemies after found, eſpecially in the times of David: all this may be applied to Chriſt, the lion of the tribe of Judah; the lion being the king of beaſts, and the ſtrongeſt among them, may denote the kingly power and authority of Chriſt, his great ſtrength as the mighty God and mighty Saviour, his courage in engaging with all the powers of darkneſs, and valour in vanquiſhing all enemies; his generoſity and lenity to thoſe that ſtoop to him, and his fierceneſs to his adverſaries, who took the prey from the mighty, and then aſcended on high, leading captivity captive; where he ſat down at the right hand of God at reſt and eaſe, and who will dare to rouſe him up, or be able to ſtand before him when once he is angry? This verſe in ſome antient [o] writings of the Jews is interpreted of Meſſiah the ſon of David.

[l] R. Jacob Ben Eleazer in Ben Melech, in loc. others, enervarunt bovem Schmidt; ſo Ainſworth.

[m] עקרו שור avulſerunt boves, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator;

[n] Zohar in Gen. fol. 127. 2.

℣. 10. The ſcepter ſhall not depart from Judah, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of the tribe, that Judah ſhould not ceaſe from being a tribe, or that it ſhould continue a diſtinct tribe until the coming of the Meſſiah, who was to be of it, and was, and that it might appear he ſprung from it; but this was not peculiar to this tribe, for the tribe of Benjamin continued, and ſo did the tribe of Levi unto the coming of Chriſt: beſides, by Judah is meant the tribe, and to ſay a tribe ſhall not depart from the tribe, is not only a tautology, but ſcarcely ſenſe; it rather ſignifies dominion, power, and authority, as the ſcepter always does, it being an emblem of it, ſee Numb. xxiv. 17. Zech. x. 11. and this intends either the government, which was in the heads and princes of the tribe, which commenced as ſoon as it became a tribe, and laſted as long as it remained one, even unto the times of the Meſſiah; or kingly power and government, which the ſceptre is generally thought to be an emblem of, and which firſt commenced in David, who was of the tribe of Judah, and continued unto the Babyloniſh captivity, when another ſort of governors and government took place, deſigned in the next clauſe: nor a lawgiver from between his feet; which may be rendered disjunctively, or a lawgiver; any ruler or governor that has juriſdiction over others, though under another, as the word is uſed, Judg. v. 14. and the ſenſe is, that till the Meſſiah came there ſhould be in the tribe of Judah, either a king, a ſcepter-bearer, as there was unto the captivity; or a governor, though under others, as there were unto the times of Chriſt under the Babylonians, Perſians, Grecians, and Romans; ſuch as Gedaliah, Zorobabel, &c. and particularly the Sanhedrim, a court of judicature, the members of which chiefly conſiſted of the tribe of Judah, and the נשיא or prince of it, was always of that tribe, and which retained its power to the latter end of Herod's reign when Chriſt was come; and though it was greatly diminiſhed, it had ſome power remaining, even at the death of Chriſt, but quickly after had none at all: and if by the lawgiver is meant a ſcribe or a teacher of the law, as all the Targums, Aben Ezra, Ben Melech, and others interpret it, who uſed to ſit at the feet of a ruler, judge, or prince of the Sanhedrim; it is notorious, there were of theſe unto, and in the times of the Meſſiah: in ſhort, it matters not for the fulfilment of this prophecy, what ſort of governors thoſe were after the captivity, nor of what tribe they were; they were in Judah, and their government was exerciſed therein, and that was in the hands of Judah, and they and that did not depart from thence till Shiloh came; ſince thoſe that were of the other tribes, after the return from the captivity all went by the name of Judah: until Shiloh come; which all the three Targums interpret of the Meſſiah, as do many of the Jewiſh writers antient and modern [p]; and is the name of the Meſſiah in their Talmud [q], and in other writings [r]; and well agrees with him coming from a root which ſignifies to be quiet, peaceable, and proſperous; as he was of a quiet and peaceable diſpoſition, came to make peace between God and men, and made it by the blood of his croſs, and gives ſpiritual peace to all his followers, and brings them at length to everlaſting peace and happineſs; having proſpered and ſucceeded in the great work of their redemption and ſalvation he undertook: and unto him ſhall the gathering of the people be; not of the Jews, though there were great gatherings of them to hear him preach, and ſee his miracles; as there were of all his people to him at his death, and in him as their head and repreſentative, Eph. i. 10. but of the Gentiles; upon his death, the goſpel being preached to all nations, multitudes among them were converted to Chriſt, embraced his doctrines, profeſſed his religion, and abode by him, ſee Iſ. xi. 10. ſome render it, the obedience of the people [s], from the uſe of the word in Prov. xxx. 17. which ſenſe agrees with the former; for thoſe who are truly gathered by the miniſtry of the word yield an obedience to his doctrines and ordinances; and others read, the expectation of the people [t]; the Meſſiah being the deſire of all nations, Hagg. ii. 6. this, with what goes before, clearly ſhews that the Meſſiah muſt be come, ſince government in every ſenſe has departed from Judah for 1700 years or thereabout, and the Gentiles have embraced the Meſſiah and his goſpel, the Jews rejected: the various contradictory ſenſes they put upon this prophecy, ſhew the puzzle and confuſion they are in about it, and ſerve to confirm the true ſenſe of it: ſome apply it to the city Shiloh, others to Moſes, others to Saul, others to David; nay, ſome will have Shiloh to be Jeroboam, or Ahijah the Shilonite, and even Nebuchadnezzar: there are two ſenſes they put upon it which deſerve the moſt notice, the one is, that Shebet, we render ſcepter, ſignifies a rod; and ſo it does, but ſuch a rod as is an enſign of government, as it muſt here, by what follows, ſee Ezek. xix. 11. but they would have it to ſignify either a rod of correction [u], or a ſtaff of ſupport; but what correction or affliction has befallen the tribe of Judah peculiar to it? was it not in a flouriſhing condition for 500 years, under the reign of David's [o] Raya Mehimna in Zohar in Exod. fol. 49. 3. 4.

[p] Zohar in Gen. fol. 32. 4. & in Exod. fol. 4. 1. & in Numb. fol. 101. 2. Bereſhit Rabba, fol. §. 98. 85. 3. Jarchi & Baal Hatturim, in loc. Nachmanidis Diſputat. cum Paulo, p. 53. Abarbinel. Maſhmiah Jeſhuah, fol. 10. 1. R. Abraham Seba, Tzeror Hammor, fol. 36. 4. & 62. 2.
[q] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 98. 2.
[r] Echa Rabbati, fol. 50. 2.
[s] יקהת עמים obedientia populorum, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Cocceius, Ainſworth; with which agree the Targums of Onkelos and Jeruſalem, Aben Ezra, Kimchi in Sepher, Shoraſh. Rad. יקה.
[t] προσδοκια εθνων, Sept. Theodotion; expectatio Gentium, V. L.
[u] R. Joel Ben Sueb apud Menaſſeh, Ben Iſrael. Conciliator in Gen. Queſt. 65. §. 8.

David's family? and when the reſt of the tribes were carried captive and never returned, Judah remained in its own land, and when carried captive, after 70 years returned again to it; add to which, that this is a prediction, not of affliction and diſtreſs, that ſhould abide in the tribe of Judah, but of honour and glory to it: and beſides, Judah has had a far greater ſhare of correction ſince the coming of the true Meſſiah than ever it had before: and what ſupport have the Jews now, or have had for many hundred years, being out of their land, deſtitute of their privileges, living among other nations in diſgrace, and for the moſt part, in poverty and diſtreſs? the other ſenſe is this, the ſcepter and lawgiver ſhall not depart from Judah for ever, when Shiloh comes[w]; but this is contrary to the accents which ſeparate and divide the phraſe, between his feet, from that, for ever, as this verſion renders the word; though עד never ſignifies for ever, abſolutely put, without ſome antecedent noun or particle; nor does כי ſignify when, but always until, when it is joined with the particle עד as it is here; beſides, this ſenſe makes the prophecy to paſs over ſome thouſands of years before any notice is taken of Judah's ſceptre, which, according to the Jews, it had thouſands of years ago, as well as contradicts a received notion of their own, that the Meſſiah, when he comes, ſhall not reign for ever, but for a certain time, and even a ſmall time; ſome ſay 40 years, ſome 70, and others 400[x].

℣. 11. Binding his foal unto the vine, and his aſs's colt unto the choice vine, &c.] Which may be underſtood either of the tribe of Judah, and ſignify that vines ſhould grow in ſuch plenty, and ſo large and ſtrong, that a man might faſten his aſs to one of them, and if it eat and deſtroyed it, it would give no great concern, ſince the country abounded with them; or they would be ſo full of cluſters that a man might load an aſs from one of them. Some parts of the tribe of Judah were famous for vines, eſpecially Engedi; hence we read of the vineyards of Engedi, Cant. i. 14. or elſe of Shiloh the Meſſiah, which ſome interpret literally of him, when the prophecy in Zech. ix. 9. was fulfilled, as is recorded in Matth. xxi. 2, 5. Mar. xi. 4. but others better figuratively, of Chriſt's cauſing the Gentiles, comparable to an aſs's colt, for their impurity, ignorance of, and ſluggiſhneſs in ſpiritual things, to cleave to him the true vine, John xv. 1. in the exerciſe of faith, hope, and love, or to join themſelves to his church and people, ſometimes compared to a vine or vineyard, Iſ. v. 1, 2. and xxvii. 2, 3. and he waſhed his garments in wine, and his clothes in the blood of grapes; an hyperbolical expreſſion, ſetting forth the great abundance of wine in this tribe, of which there was ſuch plenty, that if they would, they might have uſed it inſtead of water to waſh their clothes in, but not that they did do ſo, only might if they would; and may denote the great quantity of ſpiritual bleſſings flowing from the love of God, which come by Chriſt; and of his word and ordinances, which are comparable to wine and milk, and are a feaſt of fat things, of wine on the lees, well refined, Iſ. xxv. 6. and lv. 1. and may be applied to Chriſt, to the garment of his human nature, which, thro' his ſufferings and death was like a veſture dipped in blood, and he became red in his apparel, Iſ. lxiii. 1. Rev. xix. 16. or to his church and people, which cleave to him as a garment, and whoſe garments are waſhed and made white in the blood of the lamb, Rev. i. 5. and vii. 14. theſe words are interpreted of the Meſſiah in the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, and are applied to him and his times in the Talmud[y], and in other Jewiſh writings[z]: ſo wine is called the blood of the grape by the ſon of Sirach, Eccleſiaſtic. xxxix. 31. and l. 16.

℣. 12. His eyes ſhall be red with wine, &c.] Signifying, not the intemperance of this tribe, and their immoderate uſe of wine, and the effect of it on them; but the goodneſs and generoſity of their wine, that if drank plentifully of, and eſpecially to exceſs, would have ſuch an effect, ſee Prov. xxiii. 29, 30 and, as applied to the Meſſiah, the antitype of Judah, and who was of this tribe, it may denote not ſo much the beauty of his eyes, as the Targums paraphraſe it; as the joy and pleaſure that ſparkled in his eyes when he ſhed his blood on the croſs, enduring that, and deſpiſing the ſhame of it, for the joy of the ſalvation of his people; or the clearneſs of his ſight in beholding the actions of his enemies, and eſpecially of the fierceneſs and fury of his wrath againſt them, whoſe eyes are ſaid to be, as flames of fire, Rev. i. 14. and his teeth white with milk; denoting the fruitfulneſs of his land, producing fine paſtures, on which flocks and herds fed, and gave abundance of milk; and ſo Onkelos paraphraſes the whole verſe, "his mountains ſhall be red with his vine-"yards, and his hills ſhall drop wine, and his val-"lies ſhall be white with corn and flocks of ſheep;" and much the ſame are the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem: the myſtical ſenſe may reſpect Chriſt and his people, and be expreſſive of the purity of his nature, life and doctrine, and of the holineſs of his members, their faith and converſation; or the clauſes may be rendered, redder than wine, whiter than milk; but though whiteneſs recommends teeth, yet not redneſs the eyes; wherefore ſome[a] by tranſpoſing the firſt letters of the word for red, make it to ſignify black, as it does with the Arabs, and that colour of the eye is reckoned beautiful.

℣. 13. Zebulun ſhall dwell at the haven of the ſea, &c.] Of the ſea of Galilee, ſometimes called the ſea of Tiberias and of Geneſaret; and of the Mediterranean ſea; and accordingly we find that the border of this tribe, when ſettled in the land of Canaan was toward the ſea, Joſh. xix. 10, 11. and this was done, not at the diſcretion of Joſhua, or at the choice of this tribe, but by lot; and which ſhews that Jacob ſaid this under a ſpirit of prophecy, and which had its fulfilment 200 years after; and is a full proof of the preſcience and providence of God; and who, as he ſets the bounds of the people, or of the nations of the world, and of the tribes of Iſrael, ſo the bounds of the habitations of particular perſons, Acts xvii. 26. and he ſhall be for an haven of ſhips; ſhall have good ports commodious for ſhips to ſtation in, and to cover them from ſtorms and tempeſts; this tribe being ſituated by the ſea-ſhore[b]: and his border ſhall be unto Zidon; not the city Zidon, for the tribe of Zebulun reached no farther than Carmel, as Joſephus obſerves; "the Zebulonites, ſays he, obtained the land "from Carmel, and the ſea to the lake of Geneſaret

[w] Vid. Menaſſeh, Ib. §. 3.
[x] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 99. 1.
[y] T. Bab. Berac. fol. 57. 1.
[z] Zohar in Gen. fol. 127. 3. & 128. 2. 3.
[a] Danzius apud Stockium, p. 334.
[b] לחוף ימים in litore maris; V. L. ad litus marium, Druſius, Cocceius, Schmidt.

"farcit." Now Carmel was 40 miles at leaſt from Zidon; but Phœnicia is meant, of which Zidon was the chief city; and ſo the Septuagint in Iſ. xxiii. 2 put Phœnicia inſtead of Zidon; and whereas Carmel was the border of this tribe that way, it is alſo ſaid by Jerom [d], to be the border of Phœnicia; ſo that Zebulun reaching to Carmel, its border may be truly ſaid to be to Zidon or Phœnicia.

℣. 14. Iſſachar is a ſtrong aſs, &c.] Or as one, the note of ſimilitude being wanting, as Ben Melech obſerves; a bony [e] one, as the word ſignifies; not one that is lean, and nothing but ſkin and bones, as ſome interpret it, but that is ſtrong and robuſt, able to carry burdens; and this tribe is compared to an aſs, not for its ſtupidity and ſluggiſhneſs, but for its ſtrength, and its uſe in huſbandry, in which this tribe was chiefly occupied: the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi interpret this figuratively, of his being ſtrong to bear the yoke of the law: and it is a notion of the Jews, that this tribe were ſkilful in the doctrines of the law, and the intercalation of years, &c. from 1 Chron. xii. 32. couching down between two burdens; one hanging on one ſide, and another on the other; which Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret of bales of goods; and may as well be underſtood, of ſacks of corn or any thing elſe, carried by theſe creatures, which, when they come into a good paſture, and for the ſake of that and eaſe, will lie down with their burdens on them and riſe up again with them: the Targums of Onkelos and Jeruſalem paraphraſe it, between two borders [f], or the borders of his brethren, as Jonathan, Zebulun and Dan, between which this tribe lay; and this is the reaſon Aben Ezra gives, why Iſſachar, who was older than Zebulun, is mentioned after him, and between him and Dan, becauſe his land lay between them; and ſo it may be obſerved, that in the diviſion of the land in Joſhua's time, Iſſachar's lot came up after Zebulun's, Joſh. xix. but doctor Lightfoot thinks [g] it refers to the two kingdoms, between which it lay, that of Phœnicia on one ſide, and that of Samaria on the other.

℣. 15. And he ſaw that reſt was good, &c.] Not the houſe of the ſanctuary, and attendance there, and the ſervice of that, as the Targum of Jeruſalem; nor the reſt of the world to come, the happineſs of a future ſtate, as that of Jonathan; but rather as Onkelos, the part and portion of the good land allotted him; he ſaw that a quiet induſtry exerciſed in a diligent cultivation and manuring his land was preferable to the hurry of a court, or the fatigue of a camp, or the dangers of the ſeas: and the land that it was pleaſant; a fine delightful country, which if well looked after and improved, would produce plenty of pleaſant fruits; and within this tribe were the rich vale of Eſdraelon or Jezreel, and the fruitful mountains of Gilboa: of the former it is agreed by all travellers, the like has never been ſeen by them, being of vaſt extent and very fertile, and formerly abounded with corn, wine, and oil: ſee the note on Hoſ. i. 5. and the latter were famous for their fruitfulneſs, through the dews that deſcended on them, 2 Sam. i. 21. and bowed his ſhoulders to bear; the fatigues of plowing and ſowing, and reaping, and carrying in the fruits of the earth: and became a ſervant unto tribute; which greatly ariſes from agriculture and the fruits of the earth; and this tribe choſe rather to pay more tribute than the reſt, that they might abide at home and attend the buſineſs of their fields, when others were called to go forth to war.

℣. 16. Dan ſhall judge his people as one of the tribes of Iſrael.] There is an elegant paronomaſia, or an alluſion to the name of Dan in thoſe words, which ſignifies to judge, and the ſenſe of them is, there ſhould be heads, rulers; and judges of it, as the other tribes had; and this is the rather mentioned of him, becauſe he is the firſt of the children of concubine-wives as yet taken notice of; and what is here ſaid of him is alſo to be underſtood of the reſt of the ſons of the concubines; for the meaning is not, that a judge ſhould ariſe out of him as out of the other tribes, that ſhould judge all Iſrael, reſtraining it to Samſon, who was of this tribe, as the Targums and Jarchi; for no ſuch judge did ariſe out of all the tribes of Iſrael; nor was Samſon ſuch a judge of Iſrael as David, who, according to Jarchi, is the one of the tribes of Iſrael, namely, of Judah; for David did not judge as Samſon, nor Samſon as David, their form of government being different.

℣. 17. Dan ſhall be a ſerpent by the way, an adder in the path, &c.] Or be like that ſort of ſerpents called the adder; or rather, that which has the name of Ceraſtes, which lies among ſand, and being of the ſame colour is not eaſily diſcerned, and is often trampled upon unawares, and bites at once, unexpected; as Bochart [h] from various writers has ſhewn; particularly Diodorus Siculus [i] ſays, of this kind of ſerpents that their bites are deadly, and being of the ſame colour with the ſand few diſcern them, ſo that many ignorantly treading on them fall into danger unawares; and ſo Onkelos paraphraſes it, that lies in wait by the way; and is by another writer [k] interpreted, a very grievous and hurtful ſerpent as the adder is: that biteth the horſe-heels, ſo that his rider ſhall fall backward; for this ſort of ſerpents lying in horſe-ways and cart-ruts, ſnaps at and bites horſes as they paſs along, which bites affecting their legs and thighs, cauſe them to fall and throw their riders: this, by the Jewiſh writers, who are followed by many chriſtian interpreters, is applied to Samſon, who by craft and policy managed the Philiſtines, as in the affair of the foxes, and eſpecially in his laſt enterpriſe, when he got placed between the two pillars of the houſe, which anſwer, as ſome think, to the horſe heels, as the multitude on the roof of the houſe to the riders: but though this may be illuſtrated in a particular perſon in this tribe, as a ſpecimen of the genius and diſpoſition of the whole tribe, yet the prophecy reſpects the whole tribe, and points at the ſituation of it, which was by the way, at the extreme part of the country; ſo that they had need of craft and policy as well as power to defend themſelves againſt encroachers and invaders, and deſcribes the general temper and diſpoſition of this tribe, of which an inſtance may be ſeen in Judg. xviii. and it may have reſpect to the ſtumbling-blocks and offences laid in this tribe to the reſt of the tribes, by the idol of [c] Micah, and more eſpecially by the golden calf ſet up in Dan by Jeroboam.

℣. 18. I have waited for thy ſalvation, O Lord.] Jacob finding his ſpirits faint and flag, ſtops and breathes a while before he proceeded any further in bleſſing

[d] Comment. in Amos. 9. 3.
[e] חמר גרם Aſinus oſſeus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Munſter, Vatablus, Druſius, Piſcator, Cartwright.
[f] בין המשפתים inter terminos, V. L. inter terminos duos, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius, Cartwright; ſo Ainſworth, inter duos fines, Tigurine verſion.
[g] Works, vol. 1. p. 698.
[h] Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 3. c. 12. col: 418, 419, 420.
[i] Bibliothec. l. 3. p. 183.
[k] R. Sol. Urbin. Ohel Moed fol. 57. 1.

blessing the tribes; and as he found he was a dying man, and knew not how soon he should expire, expresses what he had been thoughtful of and concerned about in time past, and still was; that he had been waiting and hoping for, and expecting a state of happiness and bliss in another world, where he should be saved from sin and satan, and the world, and from all his enemies, and out of all his troubles; and this he firmly believed he should enjoy, and hoped it would not be long ere he did; and especially he may have a regard to the Messiah, the promised Saviour and Salvation by him, he had knowledge of, faith in, and expectation of; who may be truly called the Salvation of God, because of his contriving, providing, and appointing, whom he had promised and spoken of by all the prophets; and whom in the fulness of time he would send into the world to work out salvation for his people; and to him all the Targums apply the words, which are to this purpose: "said our father Jacob, not for the salvation of "Gideon the son of Joash, which is a temporal "salvation, do I wait; nor for the salvation of "Samson the son of Manoah, which is a transitory "salvation; but for the salvation of Messiah the "son of David, (which is an everlasting one) who "shall bring the children of Israel to himself, and "his salvation my soul desireth:" and though Jacob might be affected with the evils he foresaw would rise up in the tribe of Dan, he had last mentioned, and with the troubles that should come upon all the tribes; and had some pleasing sights of the deliverances and salvations, that should be wrought for them, by judges and saviours that should be raised up; yet his chief view was to the Messiah and salvation by him.

℣. 19. Gad, a troop shall overcome him, &c.] There is a paranomasia, or an allusion to the name of Gad almost in every word of the verse, which signifies a troop: the whole is a prediction that this tribe would be a warlike one, and have the common fate of war, sometimes be conquered, and at other times conquer, but however, should be at last entirely victorious; all the three Targums refer this to this tribe passing over Jordan at the head of the armies of Israel, into the land of Canaan, in Joshua's time, which, when they had subdued they returned to their own inheritance on the other side Jordan, Josh. i. 12—18. and iv. 12, 13. and xxii. 1—4. and so Jarchi; but it rather seems to refer to what befel them in their own tribe, which being seated on the other side Jordan was exposed to the incursions and spoils of the Moabites and Ammonites; who came upon them like troops of robbers, and seized upon their possessions and retained them for some years; as in the times of the Judges, see Judg. x. 7, 8. and in after times we find the Ammonites in possession of their country, Jer. xlix. 1. whereby this part of the prophecy had its accomplishment: but he shall overcome at the last; as the Gadites with the Reubenites and half tribe of Manasseh did overcome the Hagarites and Arabians, the war being of God, and succeeded, and they dwelt in their stead until the captivity of the ten tribes, 1 Chron. v. 18—22. and thus it is with the people of God in their present warfare-state, who are often foiled with sin, satan, and the world, their spiritual enemies; but at last they are more than conquerors over them all through Christ that has loved them.

℣. 20. Out of Asher his bread shall be fat, &c.] Which signifies that this tribe would have a sufficiency of food out of their own land, without being obliged to others, and that it would be of the best sort; it occupied a tract of land, as Adrichomius [l] says, reaching from great Zidon to Carmel of the sea, a space of 20 miles in length; and in breadth, from the great sea to Asor, and even to Naason, a space of 9 miles: the land of this tribe is very fat, he says, and exceeding fruitful in wine and oil, especially in the best wheat: and in this tribe, as the same writer [m] observes, among other very fruitful places was the valley of Asher, called the fat valley, which began 5 miles from Ptolemais, and reached to the sea of Galilee, and contained more than 10 miles in length; the soil of which was exceeding fat and fruitful, and produced the most delicate wine and wheat, and might be truly called the fat valley, see Deut. xxxiii. 24. and he shall yield royal dainties; food fit for kings, of all sorts, flesh, fish, and fowl: here king Solomon had one of his purveyors to provide food for him and his household, 1 Kings iv. 16. Asher's country answered to his name, which signifies happy or blessed: in those parts Christ was much in the days of his flesh on earth; in Cana of this tribe he turned water into wine, and in this country discoursed concerning the bread of life himself, who is the best of bread and royal dainties.

℣. 21. Naphtali is a hind let loose, &c.] Onkelos applies it to the tribe itself, and to the goodness of its land, "as for Naphtali, his lot fell in a "good land, and his inheritance a fruit-bearing "one," as it was; for in it was the most fruitful country of Genesaret, which gave name to a sea or lake by it, and which abounded with gardens, with palm-trees, fig-trees, and olive-trees; and which Josephus says [n], one might call the ambition of nature; and Strabo [o], an heathen writer, says of it, that it was an happy blessed country, and bearing all sorts of good things; and Jarchi on the place observes, this is the vale of Genesaret, which is as quick to bring forth fruit, as a hind is swift to run. Some will have this prophecy to be fulfilled in Barak, as Ben Gersom, Abendana, and others, who was of this tribe, and who at first was fearful like the hind, and backward to go out to war when called, but afterwards readily went out with Deborah, and at last gave goodly words in the song they both sung: but it better describes the genius, disposition and manners of the tribe, who were kind and loving, swift and expeditious in their affairs; lovers of liberty, well-spoken persons, humane, affable, courteous, of a good address and pleasing language, as follows: he giveth goodly words; to those he converses with; and it may be applied particularly to Christ and his disciples, and to the inhabitants of this tribe in his time, among whom they much were, see Matt. iv. 13. and ix. 1. he himself is compared to the hind of the morning, Ps. xxii. in the title, and to a roe or a young hart, Cant. ii. 9, 17. and viii. 14. for his amiableness and loveliness in himself, and for his lovingness to his people, and for his swiftness to do the will and work of his father, being sent out [p], as the word here used signifies, by him into this world, on the business of man's salvation: and so his disciples, who were Galileans, were swift to obey his call, and left all and followed him, and were sent out by him to preach his Gospel; and both both he and they may be ſaid to give goodly words, as the doctrines of the Goſpel are, words of grace, truth and life; wholeſome, comfortable, pleaſant and delightful; good tidings of good things, of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, ſalvation and eternal life by Chriſt: and the inhabitants of this country in Chriſt's time, were ſwift to run after him, and hear him; panted after him as the hart after the the water-brooks, and both received and gave out the goodly words of the Goſpel, and were made free thereby, and ſo like an hind let looſe. Bochart gives a different verſion of theſe words, which is countenanced by the Septuagint verſion, Naphtali is a tree full of ſhoots, or a tree ſhot out, ſprouting out beautiful branches; but as this is contrary to the points, and coincides with the next verſe, it is rejected by many learned men.

[l] Theatrum Terræ sanctæ, p. 1. [m] Ib. p. 13. [n] De Bello Jud. l. 3. c. 9. §. 8. [o] Geograph. l. 16. p. 519. [p] Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 3. c. 18. col. 896.

℣. 22. Joſeph is a fruitful bough, &c.] Or as one, like the bough or branch of a tree laden with fruit, as he was with children; one of which he called Ephraim from his fruitfulneſs, and both his ſons became numerous, and the heads of two tribes in Iſrael; and with other temporal fruits and bleſſings, as riches, honour, &c. and eſpecially with the fruits of grace and righteouſneſs: even a fruitful bough by a well; thoſe are the moſt fruitful that are near a well or fountain of water, as ſuch trees are which are planted by rivers of water, ſee Pſ. i. 4. this being repeated, may have reſpect to the two boughs or branches of Joſeph's family, or the two fruitful and numerous tribes that ſprung from him: whoſe branches run over the wall; as ſuch trees that are ſet againſt one, and by the reflected heat of the ſun grow the more, and become more fruitful. The word for branches is daughters, which ſome refer to the daughters of Manaſſeh and Zelophehad, who received their inheritance on both ſides of Jordan; and others interpret it of the cities of the tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, as cities are ſometimes called.

℣. 23. The archers have ſorely grieved him, and ſhot at him, and hated him.] His brethren, who grieved him with their ill uſage, ſhot out bitter words againſt him, and hated him for his dreams, and becauſe his father loved him; and they could not ſpeak peaceably to him, they mocked at him, conſpired to kill him, ſtripped him of his clothes, caſt him into a pit, and then ſold him; in all which he was a type of Chriſt, as uſed by the Jews. His miſtreſs alſo, and ſatan by her, grieved him with her temptations and ſolicitations to ſin, which were as fiery darts ſhot at him; but being reſiſted, her impure love was turned into hatred to him, and ſhe ſhot her lies, calumnies and reproaches as ſo many darts at him; and as the Targum of Jonathan, the magicians of Egypt, who envied him for his ſuperior knowledge, and perhaps many others in Pharaoh's court, who were diſpleaſed at his preferments, might bring accuſations to Pharaoh againſt him out of hatred to him; and ſatan and his principalities and powers, whoſe temptations are compared to fiery darts, are not to be exempted, which they ſhoot at, and grieve the people of God, who are hated by them. Perhaps reference may be had to the wars of the poſterity of Joſeph under Joſhua, who was of the tribe of Ephraim, with the Canaanites.

℣. 24. But his bow abode in ſtrength, &c.] For as his enemies were archers, and had bows and arrows, ſo had he, and repelled force by force; but then his bow and arrows were of a different ſort, the virtues and graces that he was poſſeſſed of, as innocence and integrity, chaſtity, fortitude, wiſdom; prudence and patience, faith, hope, and the like, which remained unmoved, and in their full exerciſe, notwithſtanding the powerful attacks made upon them; and ſo his poſterity were unmoved and unſhaken, and ſtood firm and undaunted, notwithſtanding the powerful enemies they had to deal with, until they were wholly ſubdued: and the arms of his hands were made ſtrong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; ſo that he held his bow, and drew it with great ſtrength againſt his enemies, as an archer being uſed to the bow, his nerves become ſtrong, and he is not weakened by drawing it, nor weary of uſing it; but Joſeph had not his ſtrength of himſelf, but from the Lord, the mighty one, that had ſtrengthened his father Jacob, and ſupported him under all his trouble: ſaints, like Joſeph, have their ſtrength, as well as their righteouſneſs, in and from Chriſt; and when they are weak in themſelves, they are ſtrong in him, to exerciſe grace and perform duty: from thence is the ſhepherd, the ſtone of Iſrael; from Jacob deſcended Joſeph; or from the God of Jacob it was that Joſeph through divine Providence was ſent into Egypt to be as a ſhepherd, to feed his father's family, and as a ſtone to uphold and ſupport it; in which he was a type of Chriſt, the great and good ſhepherd of the flock, and the ſtone that is laid in Zion, on which the whole ſpiritual Iſrael of God is built; the foundation-ſtone on which they are laid, and are ſafe, and the corner-ſtone which knits them together. And ſome think that Chriſt is principally meant, who in his office-capacity was from the mighty God of Jacob, a ſhepherd of his providing and appointing, and a ſtone of his laying; and ſo Nachmanides ſays, the ſtone here made mention of, is the ſame as in Pſ. cxviii. 22.

℣. 25. Even by the God of thy father, who ſhall help thee, &c.] The ſame with the mighty God of Jacob, by whom his hands had been made ſtrong; and he would be ſtill helped, protected and defended againſt his powerful enemies; and by whom, Chriſt, the antitype, was helped as man and mediator againſt his enemies, and to do all the work he engaged in; and by whom all the Lord's people are helped to fight his battles with their ſpiritual enemies, to withſtand temptations, exerciſe every grace, and do the will and work of God: and by the Almighty, which ſhall bleſs thee with bleſſings of heaven above; with thoſe bleſſings which may be aſcribed to the ſun, moon and ſtars, and their influences as means, and to the rain and dew which deſcend from thence; and as with ſuch temporal bleſſings, ſo with ſpiritual ones in heavenly things in Chriſt: bleſſings of the deep that lieth under; of rivers, fountains and ſprings that riſe out of the earth from below, which water and make fruitful: bleſſings of the breaſts, and of the womb; an increaſe of children, and of cattle, and thoſe healthy, thriving and proſperous, which are great temporal mercies; as are the word and ordinances ſpiritual ones, thoſe breaſts of conſolation, which ſuch that are born again partake of, and grow thereby.

℣. 26. The bleſſings of thy father have prevailed above the bleſſings of my progenitors, &c.] Jacob's bleſſings were greater and more numerous, both thoſe which he himſelf had, and beſtowed upon his offspring, than thoſe that Abraham and Iſaac had, he having more children than they, and bleſſings for every one of them; whereas they each of them had but two, and one of theſe two were excluded the bleſſing: and beſides, though theſe bleſſings were the ſame in ſubſtance beſtowed on his his progenitors, and by them on him, yet these were more clearly and distinctly given out by him to his posterity, and were nearer their accomplishment: unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills, they shall be on the head of Joseph; that is, continue on him as long as the everlasting hills continue, particularly those of a spiritual kind, for they endure for ever. The word for bounds signifies desire; and Onkelos paraphrases the words, "which the princes that were of old desired;" meaning either the angels, who desire to look into heavenly things, or the patriarchs, who were desirous of the coming of the Messiah, and salvation by him; and so the Vulgate Latin version is, until the desire of the everlasting hills should come; that is, Christ who is the desire of all nations, in whom all nations of the earth are to be blessed, and therefore desirable; blessings of all kinds are upon the head of the just, as they were on Joseph, Prov. x. 6: and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren; who shunned company and conversation with him, and at length sold him into Egypt, where he was parted from them, and remained separate for many years; and when they came to dwell in the land of Egypt, they lived in Goshen, and he at Pharaoh's court, where he was distinguished with peculiar honours, and advanced above them. Of Christ his antitype, see Heb. vii. 26.

℣. 27. Benjamin shall raven as a wolf, &c.] All the three Targums apply this prophecy to the priests offering the daily sacrifice, morning and evening, in the temple, which stood in the lot of Benjamin, and dividing what was left, and eating it. But it respects the tribe itself, compared to a wolf for its fortitude, courage and valour, as well as for its rapaciousness, it being a warlike tribe; and the Jewish writers [q] say, that it is compared to a wolf, because of its strength. Wolves, said to be devoted to Mars, are called martial wolves by Virgil [r] and Horace [s]; and we have an early instance of the valour and success of this tribe in a war waged with all the other tribes, and in two pitched battles, in one with 26000 men it beat 400000, Judg. xx. 15—25. and if this tribe is compared to a wolf for rapaciousness, this may be illustrated by the remainder of those after the loss of a third battle, catching and carrying away the daughters of Shiloh, and making them their wives, Judg. xxi. 23. Some apply this to particular persons of this tribe, as to Saul the first king of Israel, who was of Benjamin; and who as soon as he took the kingdom of Israel, in the morning, in the beginning of that state, fought against all his enemies on every side, against Moab, Ammon, Edom, the kings of Zobah, and the Philistines, and the Amalekites, 1 Sam. xiv. 47, 48. and to Mordecai and Esther, who were of the same tribe, who after the captivity, and in the evening of that state, divided the spoil of Haman, Esth. viii. 1. this is observed by Jarchi, Aben Ezra and Ben Gersom. Some of the christian fathers have applied the prophecy to the apostle Paul, who was of the tribe of Benjamin; who in the morning of his youth was a fierce and ravenous persecutor, and made havock of the church of God; and in the evening, or latter part of his life, spent his days in dividing the spoil of satan among the Gentiles, taking the prey out of his hands, turning men from the power of satan unto God, and distributed food to the souls of men. In a spiritual sense he was a warlike man, a good soldier of Christ, and accoutred as such, had a warfare to accomplish, and enemies to fight with; and did fight the good fight of faith, conquered, and was more than a conqueror through Christ, and is now crowned: and why may it not be applied to Christ himself, seeing the blessing of Benjamin by Moses, Deut. xxxiii. 12. seems to belong to him? he is God's Benjamin, the son and man of his right-hand, as dear to him as his right-hand, in whom his power has been displayed, and who is exalted at his right-hand; and may as well be compared to a wolf, as to a lion, as he is the lion of the tribe of Judah, and as God himself is compared to a lion and bear, Hos. xiii. 7, 8. and who is expressly said to divide the spoil with the strong, Is liii. 12. spoiled principalities and powers, delivered his people as a prey out of the hands of the mighty, and will make an utter destruction of all his and their enemies. Some of these things were done in the morning of the Gospel-dispensation, and others will be done in the evening of it, Col. ii. 15. Rev. xix. 11, 15.

℣. 28. All these are the 12 tribes of Israel, &c.] The 12 sons of Jacob before mentioned were heads of 12 tribes, who were afterwards feared, and had their part in the land of Canaan; there were indeed 13 tribes, two springing from Joseph; but then the tribe of Levi had no part in the land of Canaan, which was divided into 12 parts; this shows that the above predictions respect not the persons of the patriarchs, but their tribes: and this is it that their father spake unto them, and blessed them; the above is the sum and substance of what he had delivered in his patriarchal benediction of them, a little before his death; and though some of them, as Reuben, Simeon and Levi, may seem rather to be cursed than blessed, yet the greater part of them were clearly and manifestly blessed; and what he said by way of correction and rebuke to the others, might be blessed to them for their good; nor is it improbable, that after he had delivered out the above predictions, he might wish for and implore a blessing on them all; and certain it is, that they all had a part in the blessing of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, as it related to the land of Canaan: every one according to his blessing he blessed them; according to the blessing which was appointed to them of God, and was in after times bestowed on them, Jacob under a spirit of prophecy was directed to bless them with, or to foretel what blessings should come upon them, and which accordingly did.

℣. 29. And he charged them, and said unto them, &c.] The same charge he had given to Joseph he here renews, and lays it upon his sons, who were every one of them to go along with Joseph to bury him in Canaan: I am to be gathered unto my people; the people of God, the spirits of just men made perfect, the souls of all the saints who before this time had departed this life, and were in a state of happiness and bliss; called his people, because he and they were of the same mystical body the church, belonged to the same general assembly, and church of the first-born; the company of God's elect, who were in the same covenant of grace, and partakers of the same blessings and promises of grace: this shews, that the souls of men are immortal, that there is a future state after death, which is a state of happiness, and into which saints immediately enter as soon as they die, and where Jacob expected to be in a short time: bury me with my fathers; the

[q] Targum Jon. Aben Ezra & Gersom, in loc. [r] Virgil. Æneid. 9. [s] Horat. Carmin. l. 1. Ode 17.

the other part of himſelf, his body, which ſhould not be gathered to his people, as his ſoul would be, he orders to be interred with his fathers Abraham and Iſaac: in the cave that is in the field of Ephron the Hittite; which is more particularly deſcribed in the following verſe, being the place of his father's ſepulchre.

℣. 30. In the cave that is in the field of Machpelah, which is before Mamre, in the land of Canaan, &c.] This is ſo exactly deſcribed, that there might be no miſtake about the place, ſee Gen. xxiii. 17, 19: which Abraham bought with the field of Ephron the Hittite, for a poſſeſſion of a burying-place; this is obſerved if any of the ſucceſſors of Ephron, or any of the Hittites ſhould lay any claim unto it, or diſpute the right of Jacob's ſons to bury him there.

℣. 31. There they buried Abraham and Sarah his wife, &c.] Abraham buried Sarah there himſelf, and his two ſons, Iſaac and Iſhmael, buried him there: there they buried Iſaac and Rebekah his wife; we have no other account of the death of Rebekah, and her burial, but here; it is probable ſhe died before Iſaac, and that Iſaac buried her in this cave; and here Eſau and Jacob buried him: and there I buried Leah; of whoſe death and burial we alſo read no where elſe.

℣. 32. The purchaſe of the field, and of the cave that is there, was from the children of Heth.] Which is repeated for the certainty of it, and that it might be taken notice of, that both the field and cave were bought by Abraham of Ephron the Hittite, and that the children of Heth were witneſſes of the bargain, and of the payment of the money, and by whom the eſtate was made ſure to Abraham; all which might be urged, if any controverſy ſhould ariſe about it; ſee ch. xxiii. 16—20.

℣. 33. And when Jacob had made an end of commanding his ſons, &c.] Had given all the proper directions and inſtructions concerning his interment in the land of Canaan: he gathered up his feet into the bed; on which he ſat whilſt he bleſſed his ſons, and gave orders to them about his burial; but now he gathered up his feet into the bed, laid himſelf along, and compoſed himſelf in a proper poſture to die. What authority the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem on ℣. 21. had for ſaying this bed was a bed of gold, I know not: and he yielded up the ghoſt; he expired, he died an eaſy death, without any pain or ſickneſs; which Ben Melech ſays this phraſe is expreſſive of. He died in the year of his age 147, and not 144, as a Jewiſh chronologer [t] wrongly puts it, and in the year of the world 2315, and before Chriſt 1689, according to biſhop Uſher [u]: and was gathered unto his people; ſee the note on ℣. 29.

CHAP. L.

THIS chapter contains a ſhort account of what happened from the death of Jacob to the death of Joſeph, and is chiefly concerned with the funeral of Jacob; it firſt gives an account how Joſeph was affected with his father's death, of his orders to the phyſicians to embalm him, and of the time of their embalming him, and of the Egyptians mourning for him, ℣. 1—3. next of his requeſt to Pharaoh to give him leave to go and bury his father in Canaan, and his grant of it, ℣. 4—6. and then of the grand funeral proceſſion thither, the mourning made for Jacob, and his interment according to his orders, ℣. 7—13. upon the return of Joſeph and his brethren to Egypt, they fearing his reſentment of their former uſage of him, intreat him to forgive them; which they ſaid they did at the direction of their father, to which Joſeph readily agreed, and comforted them, and ſpoke kindly to them, and bid them not fear any hurt from him, for whatever were their intention, God meant it, and had over-ruled it for good, ℣. 14—21. and the chapter is concluded with an account of Joſeph's age and death, and of his poſterity he ſaw before his death, and of the charge he gave to his brethren to carry his bones with them, when they ſhould depart from Egypt, ℣. 22—26.

℣. 1. And Joſeph fell upon his father's face, &c.] Laid his own face to the cold face and pale cheeks of his dead father, out of his tender affection for him, and grief at parting with him; this ſhows that Joſeph had been preſent from the time his father ſent for him, and all the while he had been bleſſing the tribes, and giving orders about his funeral: and wept upon him; which to do for and over the dead, is neither unlawful nor unbecoming, provided it is not carried to exceſs, as the inſtances of David, Chriſt, and others ſhew: and kiſſed him; taking his farewel of him, as friends uſed to do, when parting and going a long journey, as death is. This was practiſed by heathens, who had a notion that the ſoul went out of the body by the mouth, and they in this way received it into themſelves; ſo Auguſtus Cæſar died in the kiſſes of Livia, and Druſius in the embraces and kiſſes of Cæſar [w]. Joſeph no doubt at this time cloſed the eyes of his father alſo, as it is ſaid he ſhould, and as was uſual; ſee ch. xlvi. 4.

℣. 2. And Joſeph commanded his ſervants, the phyſicians, to embalm his father, &c.] Which he did, not merely becauſe it was the cuſtom of the Egyptians, but becauſe it was neceſſary, his father's corps being to be carried into Canaan to be interred there, which would require time; and therefore it was proper to make uſe of ſome means for the preſervation of it, and theſe men were expert in this buſineſs, which was a branch of the medicinal art, as Pliny [x] and Mela [y] ſuggeſt; and of theſe Joſeph had more than one, as great perſonages have their phyſicians ready to attend them on any occaſion, as kings and princes, and ſuch was Joſeph, being viceroy of Egypt. Herodotus [z] ſays, the Egyptians had phyſicians peculiar to every diſeaſe, one for one diſeaſe, and another for another; and Homer [a] ſpeaks of them as the moſt ſkilful of all men; though the Septuagint render the word by ενταφιαστας, the buriers, ſuch who took care of the burial of perſons, to provide for it, and among the reſt to embalm, dry and roll up the bodies in linen: and the phyſicians embalmed him; the manner of embalming, as Herodotus [b] relates, was this, "firſt with a crooked iron inſtrument they extract-

"ed

[t] Ganz. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 6. 2. [u] Annales Vet. Teſt. A. M. 2315. [w] Vid. Kirchman. de Funer. Rom. l. 1. c. 5. [x] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 11. c. 37. [y] De Orbis Situ, l. 1. c. 9. [z] Euterpe, five, l. 2. c. 84. [a] Odyſſ. 4. [b] Ibid. c. 86.

" ed the brain through the noſtrils, which they " got out partly by this means, and partly by the " infuſion of medicines; then with a ſharp Ethio- " pian ſtone they cut about the flank, and from " thence took out all the bowels, which when they " had cleanſed, they waſhed with palm-wine (or " wine of dates) and after that again with odours " bruiſed; then they filled the bowels (or hollow " place out of which they were taken) with pure " myrrh beaten, and with caſia and other odours, " frankincenſe excepted, and ſewed them up; af- " ter which they ſeaſoned (the corps) with nitre, " hiding (or covering it therewith) 70 days, and " more then that they might not ſeaſon it; the " ſeventy days being ended, they waſhed the corps, " and wrapped the whole body in bands of fine " linen, beſmearing it with gum, which gum the " Egyptians uſe generally inſtead of glue." And Diodorus Siculus [c], who gives much the ſame account, ſays, that every part was retained ſo perfectly, that the very hairs of the eye-brows, and the whole form of the body were invariable, and the features might be known; and the ſame writer tells us, that the expences of embalming was different, the higheſt price was a talent of ſilver, about 187 pounds and 10 ſhillings of our money, the middlemoſt 20 pounds, and the laſt and loweſt were very ſmall. The embalmers he calls ταριχευται, and ſays they were in great eſteem, and reckoned worthy of much honour, and were very familiar with the prieſts, and might go into holy places when they pleaſed, as the prieſts themſelves.

℣. 3. Forty days were fulfilled for him, &c.] Were ſpent in embalming him: for ſo are fulfilled the days of thoſe that are embalmed; ſo long the body lay in the pickle, in ointment of cedar, myrrh and cinnamon, and other things, that it might ſoak and penetrate thoroughly into it; and ſo Diodorus Siculus [d] ſays, that having laid more than 30 days in ſuch a ſtate, it was delivered to the kindred of the deceaſed: and the Egyptians mourned for him 70 days; during the time of their embalming him; for longer than 70 days the body might not lie in the pickle, as before obſerved from Herodotus. According to Diodorus Siculus [e], the Egyptians uſed to mourn for their kings 72 days: the account he gives is, that " upon the death of a " king, all Egypt went into a common mourning, " tore their garments, ſhut up their temples, for- " bid ſacrifices, kept not the feaſts for 72 days, " put clay upon their heads [f], girt linen clothes " under their breaſts; men and women, 2 or 300 " together went about twice a-day ſinging in " mournful verſes the praiſes of the deceaſed; " they abſtained from animal food, and from wine, " and all dainty things; nor did they uſe baths, nor " ointments, nor lie in ſoft beds, nor dared to uſe " venery, but as if it was for the death of a beloved " child, ſpent the ſaid days in ſorrow and mourn- " ing." Now theſe 70 days here are either a round number for 72, or two are taken from them, as Quiſtorpius ſuggeſts, to make a difference between Jacob, and a king of theirs, who yet being the father of their viceroy, they honoured in ſuch a manner. Jarchi accounts for the number thus, 40 for embalming, and 30 for mourning; which later was the uſual time for mourning with the Jews for principal men, and which the Egyptians added to their 40 of embalming; ſee Numb. xx. 29. Deut. xxxiv. 8.

℣. 4. And when the days of his mourning were paſt, &c.] The 40 days before mentioned, in which both the Egyptians and Jacob's family mourned for him. An Arabic writer [g] ſays, the Egyptians mourned for Jacob 40 days, which was the time of embalming; but the text is expreſs for 70 days: Joſeph ſpake unto the houſe of Pharaoh; to the court of Pharaoh, the principal men there; ſo the Targum of Jonathan and the Septuagint verſion, to the great men or princes of the houſe of Pharaoh: it may ſeem ſtrange that Joſeph, being next to Pharaoh in the adminiſtration of the government, ſhould make uſe of any to ſpeak for him to Pharaoh on the following account. It may be, that Joſeph was not in ſo high an office, and in ſo much power and authority, as in the ſeven years of plenty and the ſeven years of famine; and it is certain that that branch of his office, reſpecting the corn, muſt have ceaſed; or this might have been a piece of policy in Joſeph to make theſe men his friends by ſuch obliging treatment, and by this means prevent their making objections to his ſuit, or plotting againſt him in his abſence; or if it was the cuſtom in Egypt, as it afterwards was in Perſia, that no man might appear before the king in a mourning habit, Eſth. iv. 2. this might be the reaſon of his not making application in perſon: moreover, it might not ſeem ſo decent for him to come to court, and leave the dead, and his father's family in ſuch circumſtances as they were: beſides, he might ſpeak to them not in perſon, but by a meſſenger, ſince it is highly probable he was now in Goſhen, at a diſtance from Pharaoh's court; unleſs it can be ſuppoſed that theſe were ſome of Pharaoh's courtiers who were come to him in Goſhen, to condole his father's death: ſaying, if now I have found grace in your eyes, ſpeak, I pray you, in the ears of Pharaoh; however, as theſe men had the ear of Pharaoh, and an intereſt in him, Joſeph intreats the favour of them to move it to him: ſaying; as follows, in his name.

℣. 5. My father made me ſwear, ſaying, lo, I die, &c.] Having reaſon to believe he ſhould not live long, he ſent for Joſeph, and took an oath of him to do as follows; this Joſeph would have obſerved to Pharaoh, to ſhew the neceſſity of his application to him, and the reaſonableneſs of his requeſt. The words of dying men are always to be regarded; their dying charge is always attended to by thoſe who have a regard to duty and honour; but much more when an oath is annexed to them, which among all nations was reckoned ſacred: in the grave which I have digged for me in the land of Canaan, there ſhalt thou bury me; it was uſual with perſons in their life-time to prepare graves or ſepulchres for themſelves, as appears from the inſtances of Shebna, Joſeph of Arimathea, and others, and ſo Jacob provided one for himſelf; and when he is ſaid to dig it, it is not to be ſuppoſed that he dug it himſelf, but ordered it to be dug by his ſervants, and very probably this was done at the time he buried Leah. Onkelos renders it, which I have bought, poſſeſſed or obtained by purchaſe; and ſo the word is uſed in Hoſ. iii. 2. but the cave of Macphelah, in which Jacob's grave was, was not bought by him, but by Abraham; for to ſay, as ſome Jewiſh writers [h] ſuggeſt, that he bought Eſau's part in it with a meſs of pottage, is without foundation; it is better to take the words in the firſt ſenſe. And now, ſince it was Jacob's deſire, desire, yea his dying charge, to be buried in the grave he had provided for himself, the mention of this to an Egyptian king could not fail of having its desired effect; since the Egyptians, as the historian [l] says, were more careful about their graves than about their houses: now therefore let me go up, I pray thee; to the land of Canaan, which lay higher than Egypt: and bury my father; there in the grave he has provided for himself: and I will come again; to the land of Egypt; this he would have said, lest it should be thought he only contrived this to get an opportunity of going away to Canaan with all his wealth and riches.

[c] Bibliothec. l. 1, p. 81, 82. [d] Ibid. p. 82. [e] Ibid. p. 65. [f] Vid. Pompon. Mela de Situ orbis. l. 1. c. 9. [g] Elmacinus, p. 43. apud Hottinger. Smegma, c. 8. p. 380. [h] R. David Kimchi Sepher Shoraſh. rad. כרת Ben Melech in loc.

5

℣. 6. And Pharaoh said, &c.] To Joseph, by the courtiers that waited upon him at Joseph's request, who having delivered it to him had this answer: go up, and bury thy father, as he made thee swear; the oath seems to be the principal thing that influenced Pharaoh to grant the request, it being a sacred thing and not to be violated; otherwise, perhaps, he would not have chose that Joseph should have been so long absent from him, and might have thought a grave in Egypt, and an honourable interment there, which he would have spared no cost to have given, might have done as well or better.

℣. 7. And Joseph went up to bury his father, &c.] According to his request; having obtained leave of Pharaoh, and being desirous of paying his last respects, and doing his last office to so dear a parent, with all the honour and decency this service could be done with: and with him went up all the servants of Pharaoh; a great number of them, some must be left to wait upon him; who these were the next words explain: the elders of his house; his senators and counsellors, his courtiers and principal officers of state: and all the elders of the land of Egypt; governors of provinces and cities, the chief officers civil and military; all which was done by the orders of Pharaoh, out of respect to Joseph and his family, and to make the funeral procession grand and honourable.

℣. 8. And all the house of Joseph, and his brethren, and his father's house, &c.] Joseph and his two sons, and his servants, and his 11 brethren and their sons that were grown up, and as many of his father's domestics as could be spared attended the funeral: only their little ones, and their flocks, and their herds, they left in the land of Goshen; there must be some servants left, though they are not mentioned, to take care of the little ones, and of the flocks and herds; and these being left behind, plainly shew they intended to return again, and did not make this an excuse to get out of the land.

℣. 9. And there went up with him both chariots and horsemen, &c.] Which was done both for the sake of honour and grandeur, and for safety and defence, should they be attacked by robbers in the deserts, or opposed by the Canaanites, and be refused the use of the cave of Macphelah, and the right to it disputed: and it was a very great company; both for quantity and quality; the attendants at this funeral were very numerous, and many of them great personages, and upon the whole was a very honourable company, as the word [k] signifies, and made a very great figure and grand appearance: or a very great army [l], consisting of chariots and horsemen fit for war, if there should be any occasion for it: and the Jews [m] pretend that Esau came out with a large army, and met Joseph at the cave of Macphelah and endeavoured to hinder the burial of Jacob there, where he lost his life; having his head struck off with the sword of Chushim the son of Dan: some say it was Zepho the grandson of Esau, with the sons of Esau that made the disturbance there, on which a battle ensued, in which Joseph was the conqueror, and Zepho was taken captive, see the note on ch. xxxvi. 11. the Jews [n] give us the order and manner of the above procession thus; first Joseph, next the servants of Pharaoh, or the princes, then the elders of the court of Pharaoh, after them all the elders of the land of Egypt, then the whole house of Joseph, next to them the brethren of Joseph, who were followed by their eldest sons, and after them were the chariots and last of all the horses.

℣. 10. And they came to the threshing-floor of Atad, &c.] Which was either the name of a man the owner of it, or of a place so called from the thorns and brambles which grew here, and with which the threshing-floor was surrounded, as Jarchi says, see Judg. ix. 14. Ps. lviii. 9. and it was usual to make a hedge of thorns round about a threshing floor [o] that it might be preserved; mention is made in the Talmud [p] of the wilderness of Atad, perhaps so called from the thorns and brambles in it: Jerom says [q], it was 3 miles from Jericho and 2 from Jordan, and was in his time called Bethagla, the place of a circuit, because there they went about after the manner of mourners at the funeral of Jacob. This, according to some [r], was 240 miles from On, where Joseph was supposed to live, 16 from Jerusalem, and 40 from Hebron, where Jacob was buried: nay, Austin [s] says, is was above 50 miles from that place, as affirmed by those who well knew those parts: which is beyond Jordan; as it was to those that came out of Egypt: and there they mourned with a great and very sore lamentation; being now entered into the country where the corpse was to be interred; and perhaps they might chuse to stop here and express tokens of mourning, that the inhabitants might be apprised of their design in coming, which was not to invade them and make war upon them, only to bury their dead: this mourning seems to be made chiefly by the Egyptians, which was done in an external way, and it may be by persons brought with them for that purpose; since both the name of the place after given, was from their mourning there, and the mourning of Joseph is next observed as distinct from theirs: and he made a mourning for his father seven days; which was the time of mourning, afterwards observed by the Jews, see 1 Sam. xxxi. 13. this Joseph ordered and observed after he had buried his father, as Aben Ezra says, is affirmed by their antient Rabbins, and perhaps might be at this same place upon their return.

℣. 11. And when the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, &c.] Who were at this time in the possession of the country where the threshing-floor of Atad was: when they saw the mourning in the floor of Atad; for so large a company of people, and such a grand funeral procession, brought multitudes from all the neighbouring parts to see the sight, [l] Diodor. Sic. Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 47. [k] כבד honorabilis; so Abendana. [l] המחנה exercitus ille; Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Drusius, Schmidt. [m] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 13. 1. Targum Jon. in ℣. 13. Pirke Eliezer, c. 39. Shalshalet Hakabala, fol. 5. 1. [n] R. Bechai apud Hottinger. Smegma, c. 8. p. 381. [o] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 13. 1. & Gloss. in Ib. Aruch in voc. גרן fol. 39. 4. [p] T. Hieros. Nedarim, fol. 40. 1. [q] De locis Heb. fol. 87. G. [r] Bunting's Travels, p. 79, 80. [s] Quæst. in Gen. l. 1. p. 54. inter opera ejus, Tom. 4.

ſight; and when they obſerved the lamentation that was made, ſaw their mournful geſtures and actions, and heard their doleful moan: they ſaid, this is a grievous mourning to the Egyptians; they concluded they muſt have loſt ſome great man to make ſuch a lamentation for him: wherefore the name of it was called Abel-mizraim, which is beyond Jordan; they changed the name of the place, and gave it another upon this occaſion, which ſignifies the mourning of Egypt or of the Egyptians, they being the principal perſons that uſed the outward and more affecting tokens of mourning; though the whole company might be taken for Egyptians by the Canaanites, becauſe they came out of Egypt.

℣. 12. And his ſons did unto him according as he commanded them.] Not only Joſeph but all the ſons of Jacob were concerned in the burial of him, being all charged by him with it, and who were obedient to his commands as follows; ſee ch. xlix. 29

℣. 13. For his ſons carried him into the land of Canaan, &c.] That is, they took care that he was carried there, as he deſired to be; for it cannot be thought that they carried him on their ſhoulders thither, in like manner as the devout men carried Stephen to his burial, Acts viii. 2. and buried him in the cave of the field of Macphelah, &c. the very place where he choſe to be buried, ch. xlvii. 29, 30.

℣. 14. And Joſeph returned into Egypt, &c.] As he promiſed he would, ℣. 5. he and his brethren; the 11 ſons of Jacob; for though they had not made the ſame promiſe, nor Joſeph for them, yet they returned, having left their little ones, flocks and herds in Egypt: and all that went up with him to bury his father; the elders and great men of the land of Egypt, with their attendants: after he had buried his father; in the land of Canaan, which, though given to the ſeed of Jacob, the time was not come for them to poſſeſs it, nor the time of their departure out of Egypt thither, which was to be a good while hence, and after another manner.

℣. 15. And when Joſeph's brethren ſaw that their father was dead, &c.] And buried; for this and what follows were after their return to Egypt, from the burial of their father; though ſome think it was before, and as ſoon as they ſaw their father was dead, when they thought it a proper time, while Joſeph's heart was tender and affected with his father's death, to compromiſe matters with him: but there is no reaſon to invert the order of the narration, for this ſeeing is not to be underſtood of their bodily ſight, but of the contemplation of their minds; they conſidered with themſelves that their father was now dead and buried, they had loſt an affectionate parent, who was concerned for the welfare and peace of all his family, but what a turn things would now take they knew not: they ſaid, Joſeph will peradventure hate us, and will certainly requite us all the evil which we did unto him; their ſin came freſh to their remembrance, guilt aroſe in their conſciences and flew in their faces, and this cauſed fear and diſtruſt where there was no reaſon for it, and led them to treat Joſeph's character very ill; who was far from being of ſuch a temper and diſpoſition ſuggeſted by them, as if he retained hatred in his breaſt, and was of a revengeful ſpirit, only hid it during his father's life, becauſe he would not grieve him.

℣. 16. And they ſent a meſſenger unto Joſeph, &c.] Not Bilhah, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, nor her ſons, Dan and Naphtali, as Jarchi, grounding it on ch xxxvii. though it is not improbable that ſome from among themſelves were deputed, who were moſt intereſted in Joſeph; ſince it is not very likely they would commit ſuch an affair to a ſtranger or to a ſervant; and the moſt proper perſons to be ſent on ſuch an errand ſeem to be Judah and Benjamin, the latter as having had no concern in the affair of ſelling him, and was his own brother by father and mother's ſide, and very dear to him; and the former, becauſe he ſaved his life, when the reſt, excepting Reuben, were for ſhedding his blood, and had endeared himſelf alſo to Joſeph, by his tender concern both for his father and his brother Benjamin; however, they thought fit firſt to ſound Joſeph, by a meſſenger, how he ſtood affected to them, before they appeared in a body in perſon, to whom they gave a charge, as the words may be rendered, they commanded unto Joſeph[t]; that is, they commanded thoſe that were deputed by them to him: ſaying, thy father did command before he died; ſome think this was no better than a lie, which their fear prompted them to; and that they framed the following ſtory, the more to work upon the mind of Joſeph, and diſpoſe it in their favour; ſeeing it is a queſtion whether Jacob ever knew any thing of the affair of their ill uſage to Joſeph; ſince otherwiſe it would have been, in all likelihood, taken notice of in his laſt dying words, as well as the affair of Reuben, and that of Simeon and Levi; and beſides, had he been apprized of it, he knew ſuch was the clemency and generoſity of Joſeph, that he had nothing to fear from him, nor could he entertain any ſuſpicion of a malevolent diſpoſition in him towards his brethren, or that he would ever uſe them ill for former offences: ſaying, as follows:

℣. 17. So ſhall ye ſay unto Joſeph, forgive, I pray thee now, the treſpaſs of thy brethren, and their ſin, &c.] Their very great ſin, and therefore more words than one are uſed to expreſs it; unleſs this repetition ſhould be intended, and ſignifies that their crime was a treſpaſs againſt God, and a ſin againſt their brother; and however, they are directed to aſk forgiveneſs for it, and urge the relation they ſtood in to Joſeph, in order to obtain it, which they were ready to acknowledge as a very great evil, and of which they repented: and now, we pray thee, forgive the treſpaſs of the ſervants of the God of thy father; they urge not only the common relation they ſtood in to Jacob, but what they ſtood in to the God of Jacob, being his ſervants, his worſhippers, as Joſeph alſo was; and therefore, being his brethren not only in nature but in religion and grace, they hoped he would forgive their treſpaſs: and Joſeph wept when they ſpake unto him; by their meſſenger; being troubled that they ſhould be in ſuch anxiety and diſtreſs of mind, which he had a fellow-feeling with, and that they ſhould have no better opinion of him, but entertain ſuch diſtruſt of him notwithſtanding all the kindneſs he had ſhewn them, as to imagine that he ſhould ever deal hardly with them for their former ill uſage of him, which was forgiven and forgotten by him long ago.

℣. 18. And his brethren alſo went, &c.] The meſſengers being returned to them, and acquainting them with what Joſeph had ſaid, they took courage and went from Goſhen to Joſeph's houſe or palace, be it where it may: and fell down before his face; in an humble ſuppliant manner: and they ſaid, [t] ויצוו אל־יוסף & mandaverunt ad Joſeph, Montanus; nuntio miſſo, Pagninus; aliquos ad Joſephum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

ſaid, behold, we be thy ſervants; they were content to be ſo, would he but forgive their ſin, and not reſent their ill behaviour to him; thus they further fulfilled his dream of the 11 ſtars making obeiſance to him, ch. xxxvii. 9.

℣. 19. And Joſeph ſaid unto them, fear not, &c.] That any hurt would be done by him to them, or that he would uſe them ill for their treatment of him: for am I in the place of God? to receive ſuch homage from you, that you ſhould be my ſervants, as Saadiah Gaon gives the ſenſe; or rather to take vengeance for injury done which belongs to God alone: or, am I not under God [u]? ſubject to him, a ſervant of his, and why ſhould you be mine? nor is it in my power if I had a will to it, to change his purpoſes, to alter his providences, or contradict his will, and do hurt to thoſe whom God hath bleſſed; and ſo may have regard to the late patriarchal benediction of his father, under the direction of the holy Spirit: or, am I in the place of God? and under him a father of them, as he had been a provider for them, and a ſupporter of them, and ſtill would be.

℣. 20. But as for you, ye thought evil againſt me, &c.] That muſt be ſaid and owned, that their intentions were bad; they thought to have contradicted his dreams, and made them of none effect, to have taken away his life, or however to have made him a ſlave all his days: but God meant it unto good; he deſigned good ſhould come by it, and he brought good out of it: this ſhews that this action, which was ſinful in itſelf, fell under the decree of God, or was the object of it, and that there was a concourſe of providence in it; not that God was the author of ſin, which neither his decree about it, nor the concourſe of providence with the action as ſuch ſuppoſes; he leaving the ſinner wholly to his own will in it, and having no concern in the ataxy or diſorder of it, but in the iſſue, through his infinite wiſdom, cauſes it to work for good, as follows: to bring to paſs, as it is this day, to ſave much people alive; the nation of the Egyptians and neighbouring nations, as the Canaanites and others, and particularly his father's family: thus the ſin of the Jews in crucifying Chriſt, which, notwithſtanding the determinate counſel of God, they moſt freely performed, was what brought about the greateſt good, the ſalvation of men.

℣. 21. Now therefore fear ye not, &c.] Which is repeated to diſpoſſeſs them of every fear they might entertain of him on any account whatever: I will nouriſh you, and your little ones; provide food for them, and their families, not only for themſelves and their ſons, now grown up, but their grand-children, and even the youngeſt and lateſt of their families ſhould ſhare in his favours: and he comforted them, and ſpake kindly to them; even to their heart [w]; ſuch things as were quite pleaſing and agreeable to them, ſerved to baniſh their fears, revive their ſpirits, and afford comfort to them. Juſt ſo God and Chriſt do with backſliding ſinners, and would have done with his own people by his ſervants; ſee Iſ. xl. 1, 2.

℣. 22. And Joſeph dwelt in Egypt, he, and his father's houſe, &c.] Comfortably, quietly, and in great proſperity, not only he, but his brethren and their families, as long as he lived: and Joſeph lived one hundred and ten years; and all but ſeventeen of them in Egypt, for at that age it was when he was brought thither: thirteen years he lived in Potiphar's houſe, and in priſon, for he was thirty years of age when he was brought to Pharaoh, and ſtood before him, and fourſcore years he lived in the greateſt honour and proſperity that a man could well wiſh for.

℣. 23. And Joſeph ſaw Ephraim's children of the third generation, &c.] His great grand-childrens children; and which ſhows, as moſt interprets obſerve, that Jacob's prediction that Ephraim ſhould be the greateſt and moſt numerous, very early began to take place: and the children alſo of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, were brought up upon Joſeph's knees; Machir had but one ſon by his firſt wife, whoſe name was Gilead; but marrying a ſecond wife, he had two ſons, Pereſh and Shereſh; ſee 1 Chron. vii. 14, 15, 16. who might be born before the death of Joſeph, and be ſaid to be brought up upon his knees, being educated by him, and often took up in his lap, and dandled on his knees, as grand-fathers, being fond of their grand-children, are apt to do.

℣. 24. And Joſeph ſaid unto his brethren, I die, &c.] Some time before his death he called them together, and obſerved to them, that he expected to die in a little time, as all muſt: and God will ſurely viſit you; not in a way of wrath and vindictive juſtice, as he ſometimes does, but in a way of love, grace and mercy: and bring you out of this land; the land of Egypt, in which they then dwelt: unto the land which he ſware to Abraham, to Iſaac, and to Jacob; meaning the land of Canaan, which he ſwore to thoſe patriarchs, that he would give to their poſterity.

℣. 25. And Joſeph took an oath of the children of Iſrael, &c. Not of his brethren only, but of their poſterity, as many of them as were now grown up, that ſo it might be communicated from one to another, and become well known to that generation which ſhould depart out of Egypt: ſaying, God will ſurely viſit you; which he repeats for the certainty of it, and that it might be obſerved: and ye ſhall carry up my bones from hence; when they ſhould go from thence to Canaan's land; he did not deſire them to carry him thither when he ſhould die, which he knew would give umbrage to the Egyptians, and they would not be ſo able to obtain leave to do it, as he had for his father. This was accordingly done, when Iſrael went out of Egypt, Moſes took the bones of Joſeph with him, and they were buried in Shechem; ſee Exod. xiii. 19. Joſh. xxiv. 32.

℣. 26. So Joſeph died, being an hundred and ten years old, &c.] The exact age aſſigned him by Polyhiſtor [x], from Demetrius an heathen. The Jewiſh writers [y] ſay, that he died the firſt of the twelve patriarchs, though he was the youngeſt of them; he died, according to biſhop Uſher [z], in the year of the world 2369, and before Chriſt 1635: and they embalmed him; his ſervants the phyſicians, according to the manner of the Egyptians, and as his father Jacob had been embalmed, ℣. 2. ſee the note there: and he was put into a coffin in Egypt; in an ark or cheſt, very probably into ſuch an one in which the Egyptians had uſed to put dead bodies when embalmed; which Herodotus [a] calls a θηκα,

[u] הֲתַחַת אֱלֹהִים אָנִי annon enim ſub Deo ſum? Vatablus. Druſius, &c. [w] עַל לִבָּם ad cor eorum, Pagninus, Montanus, [x] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 21. p. 425. [y] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 4. 1. & T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 13. 2. [z] Annales Vet. Teſt. A. M. 2369. [a] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 86, 91.

θηκα, or cheſt, and which they ſet up againſt a wall: in what part of Egypt this coffin was put, is not certain, it was moſt likely in Goſhen, and in the care and cuſtody of ſome of Joſeph's poſterity; ſo Leo Africanus ſays [b], that he was buried in Ficum, the ſame with the Heracleotic nome, ſuppoſed to be Goſhen; ſee the note on ch. xlvii. 11. and was dug up by Moſes, when the children of Iſrael departed. The Targum of Jonathan ſays, it was ſunk in the midſt of the Nile of Egypt; and an Arabic writer [c] ſays, the corps of Joſeph was put into a marble coffin, and caſt into the Nile: the ſame thing is ſaid in the Talmud [d], from whence the ſtory ſeems to be taken, and where the coffin is ſaid to be a molten one, either of iron or braſs; which might ariſe, as biſhop Patrick obſerves, from a miſtake of the place where ſuch bodies were laid; which were let down into deep wells or vaults, and put into a cave at the bottom of thoſe wells, ſome of which were not far from the river Nile; and ſuch places have been ſearched for mummies in late times, where they have been found, and the coffins and clothes ſound and incorrupt. And ſo ſome of the Jewiſh writers ſay [e], he was buried on the banks of the river Sihor, that is, the Nile; but others [f] ſay, he was buried in the ſepulchre of the kings, which is much more likely.

[b] Deſcriptio Africæ, l. 8. p. 722. [c] Patricides, p. 24. apud Hottinger. Smegma Oriental. c. 8. p. 379. [d] T. Bab. Sotah, c. 1. fol. 13. 1. [e] Sepher Hajaſchar, p. 118. apud Wagenſeil. Sotah, p. 300. [f] In T. Bab. Sotah, ut ſupra.

The

The Second Book of Moſes, called EXODUS.

THIS Book is called by the Jews Veelleh Shemoth, from the firſt words with which its begins, and ſometimes Sepher Shemoth, and ſometimes only Shemoth. It is by the Septuagint called Exodos, from whom we have the name of Exodus, which ſignifies a going out; ſee Luke ix. 31. Heb. xi. 22. becauſe it treats of the going of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt; and hence in the Alexandrian copy it is called the Exodus of Egypt; and ſo the Syriac verſion intitles it the ſecond book of the law, called the going out; and to the ſame purpoſe the Arabic verſion. The Jews ſometimes give it the name of Nezikin, as Buxtorf [a] obſerves out of the Maſora on Gen. xxiv. 8. becauſe in it ſome account is given of loſſes, and the reſtitution of them. That this book is of divine inſpiration, and to be reckoned in the canon of the ſacred writings, is ſufficiently evident to all that believe the New Teſtament; ſince there are ſo many quotations out of it there by Chriſt, and his apoſtles; particularly ſee Mark xii. 26. and that it was wrote by Moſes, is not to be doubted, but when, is not certain; it muſt be after the ſetting up of the tabernacle in the wilderneſs; the greateſt part of what is contained in it, he was an eye and ear-witneſs of; it plainly points out the accompliſhment of the promiſes and prophecies delivered to Abraham, that his poſterity would be very numerous, that they would be afflicted in a land not theirs, and in the fourth generation come out of it with great ſubſtance. It treats of the afflictions of the Iſraelites in Egypt, after the death of Joſeph, until their deliverance by Moſes; of his birth, calling and miſſion to Pharaoh, to demand of him to let the children of Iſrael go; of the ten plagues upon him and his people, for refuſing to diſmiſs them; of the departure of Iſrael from Egypt, and the inſtitution of the paſſover on that account; of their paſſage through the Red Sea into the wilderneſs, and of the various exerciſes and afflictions, ſupplies and ſupports they met with there; of the giving of a body of laws unto them, moral, ceremonial and judicial; and of the building of the tabernacle, and all things appertaining to it; and throughout the whole, as there is a figure and repreſentation of the paſſage of the people of God out of ſpiritual Egypt, through the wilderneſs of this world, to the heavenly Canaan, and of various things they muſt meet with in their paſſage, ſo there are many types of Chriſt, his perſon, office and grace, and of his church, his word and ordinances, which are very edifying and inſtructing. The book contains a hiſtory of about 145 years, from the death of Joſeph, to the erection of the tabernacle.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter begins with an account of the names and number of the children of Iſrael that came into Egypt with Jacob, ℣. 1—5. and relates that increaſe of them after the death of Joſeph, and the generation that went down to Egypt, ℣. 6, 7, 8. and what methods the Egyptians took to diminiſh them, but to no purpoſe, as by obliging to cruel bondage and hard ſervice; and yet the more they were afflicted, the more they increaſed, ℣. 9—14. by ordering the midwives of the Hebrew women to ſlay every ſon they laid them of; but they fearing God, did not obey the order of the king of Egypt, which when he expoſtulated with them about, they excuſed, and ſo the people multiplied, ℣. 15—21. and laſtly, by ordering every male child to be caſt into the river, ℣. 22. and which is the leading ſtep to the account of the birth of Moſes, which follows in the next chapter.

℣. 1. Now theſe are the names of the children of Iſrael which came down into Egypt, &c.] Of the twelve patriarchs, the ſons of Jacob, who were heads of the twelve tribes, whoſe names are here given; ſince the hiſtorian is about to give an account of their coming out of Egypt, and that it might be obſerved how greatly they increaſed in it, and how exactly the promiſe to Abraham, of the multiplication of his ſeed, was fulfilled: or, and theſe are the names [b], &c. this book being connected with the former by the copulative and; and when

[a] Lexic Talmud. col. 1325.

[b] ואלה & hæc, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius.

when this was wrote, it is highly probably there was no diviſion of the books made, but the hiſtory proceeded in one continued account: every man and his houſhold came with Jacob; into Egypt, all excepting Joſeph, and along with them their families, wives, children and ſervants; though wives and ſervants are not reckoned into the number of the 70, only ſuch as came out of Jacob's loins: the Targum of Jonathan is, "a man with the men of "his houſe," as if only male-children were meant, the ſons of Jacob and his grandſons; and Aben Ezra obſerves, that women were never reckoned in ſcripture as of the houſhold or family; but certainly Dinah and Serah, as they came into Egypt with Jacob, are reckoned among the 70 that came with him thither, ch. xlvi. 15, 17, 27.

℣. 2. Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah.] The firſt ſons of Jacob by Leah.

℣. 3. Iſſachar, Zebulun, &c.] The other two ſons of Jacob by Leah: Benjamin; the youngeſt of all Jacob's ſons is placed here, being his ſon by his beloved wife Rachel. Joſeph is not put into the account, becauſe he did not go into Egypt with Jacob.

℣. 4. Dan, and Naphtali, Gad, and Aſher.] Who are laſt mentioned, being ſons of the concubine-wives.

℣. 5. And all the ſouls that came out of the loins of Jacob, were ſeventy ſouls, &c.] Souls are put for perſons; of the number 70, and how reckoned, ſee the note on Gen. xlvi. 27. This was but a ſmall number that went down to Egypt, when compared with that which went out of it; and that it ſhould be compared with it, is the deſign of its being mentioned, ſee Exod. xii. 37: for Joſeph was in Egypt already; and is the reaſon why he is not reckoned among the ſons of Jacob, that came thither with him; though rather it may be better rendered, with Joſeph who was in Egypt [c]; for he muſt be reckoned, and indeed his two ſons alſo, to make up the number 70; therefore Jonathan rightly ſupplies it, "with Joſeph and his ſons "who were in Egypt," ſee the note on Gen. xlvi. 27.

℣. 6. And Joſeph died, and all his brethren, &c.] It is a notion of the Jews, that Joſeph died before any of his brethren, ſee the note on Gen. l. 26. and they gather it from theſe words; but it does not neceſſarily follow from hence, they might die ſome before him and ſome after him; and as they were all born in about 7 years time, excepting Benjamin, they might all die within a little time of each other: according to the Jewiſh writers [d], the dates of their death were theſe, "Reuben lived 124 years, and "died 2 years after Joſeph; Simeon lived 120 years, "and died the year after Joſeph; Levi lived 137 "years, and died 24 years after Joſeph; Judah "lived 119 years, Iſſachar 122, Zebulun 124, and "died 2 years after Joſeph; Dan lived 127 years, "Aſher 123 years, Benjamin 111 years, and died "26 years before Levi; Gad lived 125 years, and "Naphtali 133 years;" but though this account of the Jews, of their times, and of the times of their death, is not to be depended upon, yet it is certain they all died in Egypt, though they were not buried there; but as Stephen ſays, Acts vii. 16. they were carried over to Sichem and interred there, either quickly after their deceaſe, or however, were taken along with the bones of Joſeph by the children of Iſrael, when they departed out of Egypt: and it is alſo evident that they all died before the affliction and oppreſſion of the children of Iſrael in Egypt began; and this account ſeems to be given on purpoſe to point this out unto us, being placed in the order it is. Levi lived the longeſt of them all, and the affliction did not begin till after his death; and the Jewiſh chronologers ſay [e], that from his death to the children of Iſrael's going out of Egypt were 116 years; and they further obſerve [f], that it could not laſt more than 116 years, and not leſs than 87, according to the years of Miriam: and all that generation; in which Joſeph and his brethren had lived. Theſe alſo died, Egyptians as well as Iſraelites, before the oppreſſion began.

℣. 7. And the children of Iſrael were fruitful, &c.] In their offſpring; became like fruitful trees, as the word ſignifies: and increaſed abundantly; like creeping things, or rather like fiſhes, which increaſe very much, ſee Gen. i. 20. and multiplied; became very numerous, whereby the promiſes made to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob were fulfilled: and waxed exceeding mighty; were hale, and ſtrong, of good conſtitutions, able-bodied men, and ſo more dreaded by the Egyptians: a heap of words is here uſed to expreſs the vaſt increaſe of the people of Iſrael in Egypt: and the land was filled with them; not the whole land of Egypt, but the land of Goſhen: at firſt they were ſeated in a village in that country, but now they were ſpread throughout the towns and cities in it.

℣. 8. Now there aroſe up a new king over Egypt, &c.] Stephen calls him another king, Acts vii. 18. one of another family, according to Joſephus [g]; who was not of the ſeed royal, as Aben Ezra; and Sir John Marſham [h] thinks, this was Salatis, who, according to Manetho [i], was the firſt of the Hyeſi or paſtor-kings that ruled in lower Egypt; but theſe kings ſeem to have reigned before that time, ſee the note on Gen. xlvi. 34. and biſhop Uſher [k] takes this king to be one of the antient royal family, whoſe name was Rameſſes Miamun; and gives us a ſucceſſion of the Egyptian kings from the time of Joſeph's going into Egypt to this king: the name of that Pharaoh that reigned when Joſeph was had into Egypt, and whoſe dreams he interpreted, was Mephramuthoſis; after him reigned Thmoſis, Amenophis and Orus; and in the reign of the laſt of theſe Joſeph died, and after Orus reigned Acenchres a daughter of his, then Rathotis a brother of Acenchres, after him Acencheres a ſon of Rathotis, then another Acencheres, after him Armais, then Rameſſes, who was ſucceeded by Rameſſes Miamun, here called the new king, becauſe, as the Jews [l] ſay, new decrees were made in his time; and this Pharaoh, under whom Moſes was born, they call Talma [m], and with Artapanus [n], his name is Palmanothes: which knew not Joſeph; which is not to be underſtood of ignorance of his perſon, whom he could not know; nor of the hiſtory of him, and of the benefits done by him to the Egyptian nation, though, no doubt, this was among their records, and which, one would think he could not but know; or rather, he had no regard to the memory of Joſeph; and ſo to his family and kindred, the whole whole people of Iſrael: he acknowledged not the favours of Joſeph to his nation, ungratefully neglected them, and ſhewed no reſpect to his poſterity, and thoſe in connexion with them on his account; though, if a ſtranger, it is not to be wondered at.

[c] יוסף cum Joſepho qui erat in Ægypto, Junius & Tremellius, Ainſworth, Noldius, No. 1197. p. 273. ſo the Arabic verſion, Kimchi, and Ben Melech. [d] R. Bechai apud Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 3. 2. & 4. 1. [e] R. Gedaliah in Shalſhalet, fol. 5. 1. Ganz. Tzemach, David, par. 1. fol. 6. 1. [f] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 3. p. 9. [g] Antiq. l. 2. c. 9. §. 1. [h] Canon. Chron. Sec. 8. p. 107. [i] Apud Joſeph. Contr. Apion. l. 1. §. 14. [k] Annal. Vet. Teſt. p. 17. 18. [l] T. Bab. Erubin, fol. 53. 1. [m] Juchaſin, fol. 135. 2. [n] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 431.

℣. 9. And he ſaid unto his people, &c.] His princes, nobles, and courtiers about him, his principal miniſters of ſtate: behold, the people of the children of Iſrael are more and mightier than we; which could not be true in fact, but is ſaid to ſtir up his nobles to attend to what he was about to ſay, and to work upon them to take ſome ſpeedy meaſures for the cruſhing of this people; for that they were more in number, and mightier in power and wealth than the Egyptians, it was impoſſible; and indeed it may ſeem ſtrange, that the king ſhould tell ſuch an untruth, which might be ſo eaſily contradicted by his courtiers; though the words will bear to be otherways rendered, as that the children of Iſrael are many [o]; as they were very greatly multiplied, and became very numerous; and they might be mightier, that is, more robuſt and ſtrong, and fitter for war than the Egyptians, and therefore were formidable, and a people to be guarded againſt; and it was high time to think of ſecuring themſelves from them, before they grew too mighty and powerful; or they might be more numerous and mighty in that part of the land in which they were in Goſhen, though not more and mightier than the Egyptians in general.

℣. 10. Come on, &c.] Which is a word of exhortation, ſtirring up to a quick diſpatch of buſineſs, without delay, the caſe requiring haſte, and ſome ſpeedy method to be taken, and not put off as a trivial thing, and a matter of indifference: let us deal wiſely with them; form ſome wiſe ſchemes, take ſome crafty methods to weaken and diminiſh them gradually; not with open force of arms, but in a more private and ſecret manner, and leſs obſerved: leſt they multiply; yet more and more, ſo that in time it may be a very difficult thing to keep them under, and many diſadvantages to the kingdom may ariſe from them, next obſerved: and it come to paſs, that when there falleth out any war, they join alſo unto our enemies; their neighbours the Arabians, and Phœnicians, and Ethiopians: with the latter, the Egyptians had wars, as they had in the times of Moſes, as Joſephus [p] relates, and *Artapanus, an heathen writer alſo: Sir John Marſham [q] thinks, theſe enemies were the old Egyptians, with whom the Iſraelites had lived long in a friendly manner, and ſo more likely to join with them, the Thebans who lived in upper Egypt, and between whom and the paſtor-kings that reigned in lower Egypt, there were frequent wars; but theſe had been expelled Egypt ſome time ago: and fight againſt us, and ſo get them up out of the land; take the opportunity, by joining their enemies and fighting againſt them, to get away from them out of Egypt into the land of Canaan, from whence they came: this, it ſeems, the Egyptians had ſome notion of, that they were meditating ſomething of this kind, often ſpeaking of the land of Canaan being theirs, and that they ſhould in a ſhort time inherit it; and though they were dreaded by the Egyptians, they did not care to part with them, being an induſtrious, laborious people, and from whom the kingdom reaped many advantages.

℣. 11. Therefore they did ſet taſk-maſters over them, to afflict them with their burdens, &c.] This was the firſt ſcheme propoſed and agreed on, and was carried into execution, to appoint taſk-maſters over them; or princes, or maſters of tribute [r], commiſſioners of taxes, who had power to lay heavy taxes upon them, and oblige them to pay them, which were very burdenſome, and ſo afflictive to their minds, and tended to diminiſh their wealth and riches, and obliged them to harder labour in order to pay them, and ſo every way contributed to diſtreſs them: and they built for Pharaoh treaſure-cities, Pithom and Raamſes; theſe might be built with the money they collected from them by way of tribute, and ſo ſaid to be built by them, ſince it was chiefly in huſbandry, and in keeping flocks and herds that the Iſraelites were employed; or they might be concerned in building theſe cities, ſome of them underſtanding architecture, or however the poorer or meaner ſort might be made uſe of in the more laborious and ſervile part of the work: thoſe two cities are, in the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, called Tanis and Peluſium; but Tanis was the ſame with Zoan, and that was built but 7 years after Hebron, an antient city, in being long before this time, ſee Numb. xiii. 22. Peluſium indeed may be one of them, but then it is not that which is here called Raamſes but Pithom, as Sir John Marſham [s] and others think: Pithom is by Junius thought to be the ſame with the Pathumus of Herodotus [t], a town in Arabia Petræa, upon the borders of Egypt, where a ditch was dug from the Nile to the red ſea, and ſuppoſed to be the work of the Iſraelites: Raamſes is a place different from Rameſſes, Gen. xlvii. 11. and had its name from the then reigning Pharaoh, Rameſſes Miamun, as Pithom, is thought by ſome, to be ſo called from his queen: Pliny [u] makes mention of ſome people called Ramiſi and Patami, who probably were the inhabitants of theſe cities, whom he joins to the Arabians as bordering on Egypt: the Septuagint verſion adds a third city, On, which is Heliopolis: and a learned writer [w] is of opinion that Raamſes and Heliopolis are the ſame, and obſerves, that Raamſes in the Egyptian tongue, ſignifies the field of the ſun, being conſecrated to it, as Heliopolis is the city of the ſun, the ſame with Bethſhemeſh, the houſe of the ſun, Jer. xliii. 13. and he thinks theſe cities were not properly built by the Iſraelites, but repaired, ornamented and fortified, being by them banked up againſt the force of the Nile, that the granaries might be ſafe from it, as Strabo [x] writes, particularly of Heliopolis; and the Septuagint verſion here, calls them fortified cities; and with this agrees what Benjamin of Tudela ſays [y], that he came to the fountain of Al-ſhemeſh, or the ſun, which is Raamſes; and there are remains of the building of our fathers (the Jew ſays) even towers built of bricks, and Fium he ſays [z], (which was in Goſhen, ſee the note on Gen. xlvii. 11.) is the ſame with Pithom; and there, he ſays, are to be ſeen ſome of the buildings of our fathers. Here theſe cities are ſaid to be built for treaſure-cities, either to lay up the riches of the kings of Egypt in, in, or as granaries and ſtore-houſes for corn, or magazines for warlike ſtores, or for all of theſe: ſome think the pyramids were built by the Iſraelites, and there is a paſſage in Herodotus [a], which ſeems to favour it; he ſays, the kings that built them, the Egyptians, through hatred name them not, but call them the pyramids of the ſhepherd Philitis, who at that time kept ſheep in thoſe parts; which ſeems to point at the Iſraelites, the beloved people of God who were ſhepherds.

[o] רב multus, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius, Rivet. [p] Antiq. l. 2. c. 10. * Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 431. [q] Ut ſupra. [r] שרי מסים principes tributorum, Pagninus, Montanus, Fagius, Druſius, Cartwright; ſo Tigurine verſion. [s] Ut ſupra. [t] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 158. [u] Nat. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 28. [w] Jablonſki de terra Goſhen, Diſſert. 4. §. 8. [x] Geograph. l. 17. p. 553. [y] Itinerar. p. 120. [z] Ib. p. 114.

℣. 12. But the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew, &c.] Became more numerous, and broke out [b], as it may be rendered, like water which breaks out and ſpreads itſelf; ſo the Iſraelites increaſing in number, ſpread themſelves ſtill more in the land; the Egyptians thought, by putting them to hard labour in building cities, to have weakened their ſtrength, and made them unfit for the procreation of children; but inſtead of that, the more hard labour they were put unto, the more healthful and the ſtronger they were, and begot more children, and multiplied exceedingly: and ſo it is, that oftentimes afflictive diſpenſations are multiplying and growing times to the people of God, in a ſpiritual ſenſe; who grow like the palm-tree, which the more weight it has upon it the more it grows; when the church of God has been moſt violently perſecuted, the number of converts have been greater, and ſaints under affliction grow in grace, in faith and love, in holineſs, humility, patience, peace and joy; ſee Acts xii. 1, 2. 24. Rom. v. 3, 4, 5. and they were grieved becauſe of the children of Iſrael; becauſe of their multiplication and increaſe, and becauſe their ſchemes for leſſening them did not ſucceed; they were as thorns in their eyes, as ſome interpret the word, as Jarchi obſerves.

℣. 13. And the Egyptians made the children of Iſrael to ſerve with rigour.] Or with breach [c], with what might tend to break their ſtrength; they laid heavier burdens upon them, obliged them to harder ſervice, uſed them more cruelly and with greater fierceneſs, adding to their hard ſervice, ill words, and perhaps blows.

℣. 14. And they made their lives bitter with hard bondage, &c.] So that they had no eaſe of body nor peace of mind; they had no comfort of life, their lives and mercies were embittered to them: in mortar and in brick, and in all manner of ſervice of the field; if Peluſium was one of the cities they built, that had its name from clay, the ſoil about it being clayey, and where the Iſraelites might be employed in making brick for the building of that and other cities: Joſephus [d] ſays, they were ordered to part the river (Nile) into many canals, to build walls about cities, and raiſe up mounds, leſt the water overflowing the banks ſhould ſtagnate; and to build pyramids, obliging them to learn various arts, and inure themſelves to labour: ſo Philo the Jew ſays [e], ſome worked in the clay, forming it into bricks, and others in carrying ſtraw: ſome were appointed to build private houſes, others the walls of cities, and to cut ditches and canals in the river, and obliged day and night to carry burdens, ſo that they had no reſt, nor were they ſuffered to refreſh themſelves with ſleep; and ſome ſay, that they were not only employed in the fields in plowing and ſowing and the like, but in carrying of dung thither, and all manner of uncleanneſs: of their being employed in building of pyramids and canals; ſee the note on Gen. xlvii. 11. all their ſervice wherein they made them ſerve was with rigour; they not only put them to hard work, but uſed them in a very churliſh and barbarous manner, abuſing them with their tongues, and beating them with their hands: Philo in the above place ſays, the king not only compelled them to ſervile works, but commanded them heavier things than they could bear, heaping labours one upon another; and if any, through weakneſs, withdrew himſelf, it was judged a capital crime, and the moſt mercileſs and cruel were ſet over them as taſk-maſters.

℣. 15. And the king of Egypt ſpake to the Hebrew midwives, &c.] It is difficult to ſay who theſe midwives were, whether Egyptian or Hebrew women. Joſephus is of opinion, that they were Egyptians, and indeed thoſe the king was moſt likely to ſucceed with; and it may ſeem improbable, that he ſhould offer ſuch a thing to Hebrew women, who he could never think would ever comply with it, through promiſes or threatnings; and the anſwer they afterwards gave him, that the Hebrew women were not as the Egyptian women, looks as if they were of the latter: and yet after all, it is more likely that theſe midwives were Hebrew women, their names are Hebrew; and beſides, they are not ſaid to be the midwives of Hebrew women, but Hebrew midwives; nor does it ſeem probable that the Hebrew women ſhould have Egyptian midwives, and not thoſe of their own nation; and they were ſuch as feared the Lord; and the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem are expreſs for it, and they pretend to tell us who they were: of which the name of the one was Shiphrah, and the name of the other Puah; the one, they ſay, was Jochebed, the wife of Amram, and mother of Moſes and Aaron, and the other Miriam their ſiſter; and this is the ſenſe of many of the Jewiſh writers [f]: but whatever may be ſaid for Jochebed, it is not credible that Miriam ſhould be a midwife, who was but a girl, or maid at this time, about ſeven years of age, as the following chapter ſhews, and much leſs one of ſo much repute as to be ſpoke to by the king. It may ſeem ſtrange, that only two ſhould be ſpoke to on this account, when, as Aben Ezra ſuppoſes, there might be 500 of them: to which it may be anſwered, that theſe were the moſt noted in their profeſſion, and the king began with theſe, that if he could ſucceed with them, he would go on to prevail on others, or engage them to uſe their intereſt with others to do the like; or theſe might be the midwives of the principal ladies among the Iſraelites, in one of whoſe families, according as his magicians had told, as the Targum of Jonathan obſerves, ſhould be born a ſon, by whom the land of Egypt would be deſtroyed; of which Joſephus [g] alſo takes notice; and therefore he might be chiefly ſolicitous to deſtroy the male children of ſuch families; but Aben Ezra thinks, that theſe two were the chief over the reſt of the midwives, and who collected and paid to the king the tribute out of their ſalaries, which was laid upon them, and ſo he had an opportunity of converſing with them on this ſubject.

℣. 16. And he ſaid, when ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, &c.] Deliver them of their children: and ſee them upon the ſtools; ſeats for women in labour to ſit upon, and ſo contrived, that the midwives might do their office the more readily; but whilſt they ſat there, and before the

[a] Ut ſupra, c. 128. [b] יפרץ erumpebat, Junius & Tremellius, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Druſius, Tigurine verſion. [c] בפרך in fractione, Gajetan. apud Rivet. [d] Antiqu. l. 2. c. 9. §. 1. [e] De vita Moſis, l. 1. p. 608. [f] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 11. 2. Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 74. 1. Jarchi in loc. [g] Ut ſupra.

the birth, they could not tell whether the child was a ſon or a daughter; wherefore Kimchi [h] thinks the word here uſed ſignifies the place to which the infant falls down from its mother's belly, at the time of labour, and is called the place of the breaking forth of children, and takes it to be the uterus itſelf; and ſays it is called Abanim, becauſe Banim, the children are there, and ſuppoſes A or Aleph to be an additional letter; and ſo the ſenſe then is, not when ye ſee the women on the ſeats, but the children in the place of coming forth; but then he aſks, if it be ſo, why does he ſay, and ſee them there? could they ſee them before they were entirely out of the womb? to which he anſwers, they know by this rule, if a ſon, its face was downwards, and if a daughter, its face was upwards; how true this is, muſt be left to thoſe that know better; the Jewiſh maſters [i] conſtantly and poſitively affirm it: he further obſerves, that the word is of the dual number, becauſe of the two valves of the womb, through which the infant paſſes: if it be a ſon, then ye ſhall kill him; give it a private pinch as it comes forth, whilſt under their hands, that its death might ſeem to be owing to the difficulty of its birth, or to ſomething that happened in it. This was ordered, becauſe what the king had to fear from the Iſraelites, was only from the males, and they only could multiply their people; and becauſe of the above information of his magicians, if there is any truth in that: but if it be a daughter, then ſhe ſhall live; be kept alive, and preſerved, and brought up to woman's eſtate; and this the king choſe to have done, having nothing to fear from them, being of the feeble ſex, and that they might ſerve to gratify the luſt of the Egyptians, who might be fond of Hebrew women, being more beautiful than theirs; or that they might be married and incorporated into Egyptian families, there being no males of their own, if this ſcheme took place, to match with them, and ſo by degrees the whole Iſraelitiſh nation would be mixed with, and ſwallowed up in the Egyptian nation, which was what was aimed at.

℣. 17. But the midwives feared God, &c.] And therefore durſt not take away the life of an human creature, which was contrary to the expreſs law of God, Gen. ix. 6: and did not as the king of Egypt commanded them; knowing it was right to obey God rather than man, though ever ſo great, or in ſo exalted a ſtation: but ſaved the men-children alive; did not uſe any violence with them, by ſtifling them in the birth. The ſcheme was ſo barbarous and ſhocking, eſpecially to the tender ſex, to whom it was propoſed, and ſo devoid of humanity, that one would think it ſhould never enter into the heart of man.

℣. 18. And the king of Egypt called for the midwives, &c.] Perceiving by the increaſe of the Iſraelites, that they did not obey his commands: and ſaid unto them, why have ye done this thing, and have ſaved the men-children alive? not only did not kill them, but did every thing for them that was neceſſary for their future preſervation and health; ſee Ezek. xvi. 4.

℣. 19. And the midwives ſaid unto Pharaoh, becauſe the Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women, &c.] Not ſo tender, weak and feeble, nor ſo ignorant of midwifery, and needed not the aſſiſtance of midwives, as the Egyptian women: for they are lively; or midwives themſelves, as Kimchi [k] ſays the word ſignifies; and ſo [l] Symmachus tranſlates the words, for they are midwives; or are ſkilful in the art of midwifery, as Jarchi interprets it; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion is, for they have knowledge of midwifery, and ſo could help themſelves; or, for they are as beaſts [l], as animals which need not, nor have the aſſiſtance of any in bringing forth their young; and ſo Jarchi obſerves, that their Rabbins [m] explain it, they are like to the beaſts of the field, who have no need of a midwife; or they were ſo lively, hale and ſtrong, as our verſion, and others; and their infants alſo, through a more than common bleſſing of God upon them at this time, that they brought forth children as ſoon as they were in travail, with ſcarce any pain or trouble, without the help of others: nor need this ſeem ſtrange, if what is reported is true, of women in Illyria, Ireland [n], Italy [o], and other places [p], where it is ſaid women will go aſide from their work, or from the table, and bring forth their offſpring, and return to their buſineſs or meal again; and eſpecially in the eaſtern and hotter countries, women generally bring forth without much difficulty, and without the uſe of a midwife [q]: and are delivered ere the midwives come in unto them; which doubtleſs was true in ſome caſes, though not in all, becauſe it is before ſaid, they ſaved the men-children alive; and had it been ſo at all times, there would have been no proof and evidence of their fearing God, and obeying his commands, rather than the king's; and in ſome caſes not only the ſtrength and livelineſs of the Hebrew women, and their fears alſo, occaſioned by the orders of the king, might haſten their births before the midwives could get to them; and they might not chuſe to ſend for them, but uſe their own judgment, and the help of their neighbours, and do without them, knowing what the midwives were charged to do.

℣. 20. Wherefore God dealt well with the midwives, &c.] He approved of their conduct upon the whole, however difficult it may be to clear them from all blame in this matter; though ſome think, that what they ſaid was the truth, though they might not tell all the truth; yea, that they made a glorious confeſſion of their faith in God, and plainly told the king, that it was nothing but the immediate hand of God that the Hebrew women were ſo lively and ſtrong, and therefore were reſolved not to oppoſe it, let him command what he would; ſo Dr. Lightfoot [r], who takes the midwives to be Egyptians: and the people multiplied, and waxed very mighty; became very numerous, and ſtrong, and robuſt, being the offſpring of ſuch lively women.

℣. 21. And it came to paſs, becauſe the midwives feared God, &c.] And regarded his command, and not that of the king, though they riſqued his diſpleaſure, and their lives: that he made them houſes; which ſome underſtand of the Iſraelites making houſes for them, being moved to it by the Lord, to preſerve them from the inſults of the Egyptians; others of Pharaoh building houſes for them, in which he kept them, until the Hebrew women came to their time of delivery, who were or-ordered to be brought to these houses, that it might be known by others, as well as the midwives, whether they brought forth sons or daughters, neither of which is likely: but rather the sense is, that God made them houses, and hid them from Pharaoh, as Kimchi interprets it, that he might not hurt them, just as he hid Jeremiah and Baruch: though it seems best of all to understand it of his building up the families of these midwives, increasing their number, especially their substance and wealth, making them and their households prosperous in all worldly good; but because the word is in the masculine gender, some chuse to interpret it either of the infants themselves, the male children the midwives preserved, and of their being built up families in Israel, or by means of whom they were built up; or of the Israelites themselves, whose houses were built up by their means: and others are of opinion, that material houses or buildings are meant, built for the Israelites, that the midwives might know where to find them and their wives, when ready to lie in, who before lived up and down in fields and tents: but the sense of God's building up the families of the midwives is to be preferred, there being an enallage or change of the gender, which is not unusual; see ch. xv. 21.

[h] Sepher Shoraſh. rad. אבן. [i] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 11. 1. Niddah, fol. 31. 2. [k] Sepher Shoraſh. rad. חיה ſic alii, כי חיות הנה quia obſtetrices ipſæ, Pagninus, Montanus; ſo the Syriac verſion. [l] Μαιαι γαρ εισι, Symmachus apud Druſium. [m] In T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 11. 1. Chronicon Moſis, fol. 2. 1. [n] Vid. Wagenſeil. Sotah, p. 249. & Varro & Gataker in Ib. [o] Poſidonius apud Strabo. Geograph. l. 3. p. 114. [p] See Harte's Hiſtory of the Life of Guſtavus Adolphus, vol. 1. p. 233. [q] Ludolph. Ethiopic. l. 1. c. 14. [r] Works, vol. 1. p. 700.

℣. 22. And Pharaoh charged all his people, &c.] Finding he could not carry his point with the midwives, he gave a general order to all his people every where: saying, every son that is born ye shall cast into the river; the river Nile; not every son born in his kingdom, for this would have ruined it in time; but that was born to the Jews, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; and it is added in the Septuagint version to the Hebrews: and every daughter ye shall save alive; for the reasons given in the note on ℣. 16. which see.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter relates the birth of Moses, and his preservation in an ark of bulrushes, ℣. 1, 2, 3. his being found by Pharaoh's daughter, took up, and put out to nurse by her, and adopted for her son, ℣. 4—10. some exploits of his when grown up, taking the part of an Hebrew against an Egyptian whom he slew, and endeavouring to reconcile two Hebrews at variance, when one of them reproached him with slaying the Egyptian, ℣. 11—14. which thing being known to Pharaoh, he sought to slay Moses, and this obliged him to flee to Midian, ℣. 15. where he met with the daughters of Reuel, and defended them against the shepherds, and watered their flocks for them, ℣. 16, 17. which Reuel being informed of, sent for him, and he lived with him, and married his daughter Zipporah, by whom he had a son, ℣. 18—22. and the chapter is concluded with the death of the king of Egypt, and the sore bondage of the Israelites, and their cries and groans, which God had a respect unto, ℣. 23, 24, 25.

℣. 1. And there went a man of the house of Levi, &c.] This man was Amram, the son of Kohath, and grandson of Levi, as appears from ch. vi. 18. 20. and took to wife a daughter of Levi; one of the same house, family, or tribe; which was proper that the tribes might be kept distinct: this was Jochebed, said to be his father's sister, ch. vi. 20. see the note there: her name in Josephus [s] is Joachebel, which seems to be no other than a corruption of Jochebed, but in the Targum in 1 Chron. iv. 18. she is called Jehuditha.

℣. 2. And the woman conceived, and bare a son, &c.] Which was not her first child, nor indeed her first son, for she had both Aaron and Miriam before this: this son, which was Moses, was born, as the Jews say [t], in the 37th year, after the death of Levi, A. M. 2365. (or as others 2368.) on a Wednesday, the 7th of the month Adar, in the 3d hour of the day: some say it was on the 24th of Nisan; but according to bishop Usher [u], he was born 41 years after the death of Levi, A. M. 2433. and in the year before Christ 1571. and when she saw him that he was a goodly child; exceeding fair and beautiful, as Stephen expresses it, Acts vii. 20. the Jews say [w], his form was like an angel of God, and Trogus [x], an heathen writer says, his beautiful form recommended him: this engaged the affections of his parents to him, and who, from hence, might promise themselves that he would be a very eminent and useful person, could his life be preserved: she hid him three months; in her bed-chamber, some Jewish writers say [y]; others [z], in a house under ground, that is, in the cellar, however, it was in his father's house, Acts vii. 20.

℣. 3. And when she could no longer hide him, &c.] Because of her neighbours, who might hear the crying of the child, or because of the diligent search made by Pharaoh's officers, which some think was made every 3 months: the Jews [a] have a notion that his mother was delivered of him at 6 months end, and therefore when the other three months were up women usually go with child, she could hide him no longer, a birth of a child being then expected, and would be enquired about: she took for him an ark of bulrushes; the word, according to Kimchi [b], signifies a kind of wood exceeding light, so Gersom and Ben Melech; an Arabic writer [c], calls it an ark of wood; it is generally taken to be the papyrus or reed of Egypt, which grew upon the banks of the Nile, and of which many writers say, small vessels or little ships were made, see the note on Isa. xviii. 2. and daubed it with slime and with pitch; with pitch without and slime within, as Jarchi observes; which being of a glutinous nature, made the rushes or reeds stick close together, and so kept out the water: and put the child therein; committing it to the care and providence of God, hoping and believing that by some means or another it would be preserved; for this, no doubt, was done in faith, as was the hiding him 3 months, to which the apostle ascribes that, Heb. xi. 23. and she laid it in the flags by the river's brink; among the sedge, weeds, and rushes, that grew upon the banks of the river Nile; there she laid it, that it might not be carried away with the stream of the river, and that it might be seen and taken taken up by ſome body that would have compaſſion on it, and take care of it: the Arabic writers [d] ſay, that Jochebed made an ark of the papyrus, though in the law it is ſaid to be of cork, and pitched within and without, and put the child into it, and laid it on the bank of the Nile, where the water was not ſo deep, by the city Tzan (or Zoan, that is Tanis) which was the metropolis of the Tanitic nome; but very wrongly adds, that it might be killed by the daſhing of the waves, and ſhe might not ſee its death.

[s] Antiq. l. 2. c. 9. §. 4. [t] Shalshalet Hakabala, fol. 5. 2. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 7. 1. [u] Annal. Vet. Test. p. 18. [w] Pirke Eliezer, c. 48. fol. 57. 2. [x] Justin e Trogo, l. 36. c. 2. [y] Chronicon Mosis, fol. 3. 2. [z] Pirke Eliezer, ut supra. [a] Targum Jon. & Jarchi in loc. [b] Sepher Shoresh. rad. גמא [c] Elmacinus apud Hottinger, p. 402.

℣. 4. and his ſiſter ſtood afar off, &c.] This was Miriam, as the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it; who is ſuppoſed to be about 10 or 12 years of age, others ſay 7: ſhe was placed [e], as the word may be rendered, by her parents, or, ſhe placed herſelf [f], by their inſtruction, at ſome diſtance from the place where the ark was, that ſhe might not be obſerved and be thought to belong to it, and yet ſo near as to obſerve what became of it, which was the intent of her ſtanding there as follows: to wit what would be done to him; to know, take notice, and obſerve, what ſhould happen to it, if any one took it up, and what they did with it, and where they carried it; for, to wit is an old Engliſh word, which ſignifies to know, and is the ſenſe of the Hebrew word to which it anſwers, ſee 2 Cor. viii. 1.

℣. 5. And the daughter of Pharaoh came down to waſh herſelf at the river, &c.] Her name, in Joſephus [g], is called Thermuthis, and by Artapanus [h], an heathen writer, Merrhis, perhaps from Miriam, and frequently by the Jewiſh writers [i], Bithiah, which is the name of a daughter of another Pharaoh, 1 Chron. iv. 18. from whence they ſeem to have taken it: ſhe came down from the palace of her father, the gardens of which might lead to the Nile; for Zoan or Tanis, near to which, the Arabic writers ſay, as before obſerved, the ark was laid, was ſituated on the banks of the river Nile, and was the royal ſeat of the kings of Egypt; though perhaps the royal ſeat at this time was either Heliopolis, as Apion teſtifies [k], that it was a tradition of the Egyptians that Moſes was an Heliopolitan, or elſe Memphis, which was not far from it; for Artapanus another heathen writer ſays [l], that when he fled, after he had killed the Egyptian, from Memphis, he paſſed over the Nile to go into Arabia: however, no doubt, a bath was there provided for the uſe of the royal family; for it can hardly be thought that ſhe ſhould go down and waſh herſelf in the open river: here ſhe came to waſh either on a religious account, or for pleaſure: the Jews [m] ſay it was an extraordinary hot ſeaſon throughout Egypt, ſo that the fleſh of men was burnt with the heat of the ſun, and therefore to cool her ſhe came to the river to bathe in it: others [n] of them ſay, that they were ſmitten with burning ulcers, and ſhe alſo, that ſhe could not waſh in hot water but came to the river: and her maidens walked along by the river's ſide; whilſt ſhe waſhed herſelf; though it is highly probable ſhe was not left alone: theſe ſeem to be maids of honour, there might be others that might attend her of a meaner rank, and more fit to do for her what was neceſſary; yet theſe ſaw not the ark, it lying lower among the flags, and being nearer the bath where Pharaoh's daughter was, ſhe ſpied it from thence as follows: and when ſhe ſaw the ark among the flags, ſhe ſent her maid to fetch it; the maid that waited on her whilſt the reſt were taking their walks; her ſhe ſent from the bath among the flags to take up the ark: the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, and R. Eliezer [o] render it, "ſhe ſtretched "ed out her arm and hand and took it;" the ſame word being differently pointed, ſo ſignifying; but this is diſapproved of by the Jewiſh commentators.

℣. 6. And when ſhe had opened it, &c.] The ark, for it was ſhut or covered over, though doubtleſs there were ſome apertures for reſpiration: ſhe ſaw the child in it, and behold the babe wept; and which was a circumſtance, it is highly probable, greatly affected the king's daughter, and moved her compaſſion to it; though an Arabic writer ſays [p], ſhe heard the crying of the child in the ark, and therefore ſent for it: and ſhe had compaſſion on him, and ſaid, this is one of the Hebrews children; which ſhe might conclude from its being thus expoſed, knowing her father's edict, and partly from the form and beauty of it, Hebrew children not being ſwarthy and tawny as Egyptian ones: the Jewiſh writers [q] ſay, ſhe knew it by its being circumciſed, the Egyptians not yet uſing circumciſion.

℣. 7. Then ſaid his ſiſter to Pharaoh's daughter, &c.] Miriam the ſiſter of Moſes, who obſerving the ark taken up, and the maidens that were walking upon the bank of the river, and other women perhaps, gathering about it to ſee it; ſhe made one among them, and after hearing their diſcourſe about it, propoſed what follows to Pharaoh's daughter: Jarchi ſays, that Pharaoh's daughter tried ſeveral Egyptian women to ſuckle it, but it would not ſuck of them: Joſephus [r] ſays the ſame, and it alſo is in the Talmud [s]; and that, if true, gave Miriam a fair opportunity to offer to do the following meſſage for her: ſhall I go and call for thee a nurſe of the Hebrew women, that ſhe may nurſe the child for thee? for ſhe perceived that ſhe was deſirous of having the child brought up as her own.

℣. 8. And Pharaoh's daughter ſaid unto her, go, &c.] She fell in at once with the propoſal, being, no doubt, over-ruled by the providence of God, to agree to have ſuch a perſon called: and the maid went and called the child's mother; and her own, whoſe name was Jochebed the wife of Amram, as obſerved in ℣. 1.

℣. 9. And Pharaoh's daughter ſaid unto her, &c.] Being come, having made all poſſible haſte: take this child away, and nurſe it for me, and I will give thee thy wages; by which means ſhe had not only the nurſing of her own child, but was paid for it: according to a Jewiſh writer [t], Pharaoh's daughter agreed with her for 2 pieces of ſilver a day.

℣.

[d] Patricides, p. 25. Elmacinus, p. 46. apud Hottinger. Smegma, c. 8. p. 400. [e] תחתיב collocata fuerat, Vatablus. [f] Stiterat ſeſe, Junius & Tremellius, ſtitit ſeſe, Piſcator, Druſius. [g] Antiq. l. 2. c. 9. §. 5. [h] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 432. [i] T. Bab. Megillah, fol. 13. 1. Derech Eretz, fol. 19. 1. Pirke Eliezer, c. 48. Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 5. 2. [k] Apud. Joſeph. Contr. Apian. l. 2. §. 2. [l] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 433. [m] Chronicon. Moſis, fol. 3. 2. Ed. Gaulmin. [n] Targum Jon. in loc. Pirke Eliezer, ut ſupra. [o] Ibid. Vid. T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 12. 1. [p] Patricides apud Hottinger. p. 401. [q] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 12. 2. Aben Ezra in loc. [r] Antiq. l. 2. c. 9. §. 5. [s] T. Bab. Sotah, ut ſupra. [t] Dibre Hayamim, ſive Chronicon Moſis, fol. 4. 1.

℣. 10. And the child grew, &c.] In ſtature and in ſtrength, thriving under the care of its mother and nurſe, through the bleſſing of God: and ſhe brought him unto Pharaoh's daughter; when grown up and weaned, and needed a nurſe no longer: a Jewiſh chronologer [u] ſays, this was 2 years after his birth; and another ſays [w], that when he was 3 years old, Pharaoh ſitting at table, and his queen was at his right hand, and his daughter, with Moſes, at his left, and his mother before him, when Moſes in the ſight of them all took the crown from Pharaoh's head: and he became her ſon; by adoption, for though ſhe was a married woman, as ſome ſay, yet had no children, though very deſirous of them, which accounts the more for her readineſs in taking notice and care of Moſes; ſo Philo the Jew ſays [x], that ſhe had been married a long time but never with child, though ſhe was very deſirous of children, and eſpecially a ſon, that might ſucceed her father in the kingdom, or otherwiſe it muſt go into another family: yea, he further ſays, that ſhe feigned herſelf with child, that Moſes might be thought to be her own ſon: and Artapanus [y], an heathen writer ſays, that the daughter of Pharaoh was married to one Chenephres, who reigned over the country above Memphis, for at that time many reigned in Egypt; and ſhe being barren, took a ſon of one of the Jews, whom ſhe called Moyſes, and being grown up to a man's eſtate was, by the Greeks called Muſæus: and ſhe called his name Moſes, and ſhe ſaid, becauſe I drew him out of the water; by which it appears, that this word is derived from the Hebrew word משה Maſhah, which ſignifies to draw out, and is only uſed of drawing out of water, 2 Sam. xxii. 17. Pſ. xviii. 16. which Pharaoh's daughter gave him, he being an Hebrew child, and which language ſhe may very well be thought to underſtand; ſince there were ſuch a large number of Hebrews dwelt in Egypt, and ſhe was particularly converſant with Johebed her Hebrew nurſe; and beſides, there was a great affinity between the Hebrew and the Egyptian language, and therefore there is no need to derive the word from the latter, as Philo [z] and Joſephus [a] do; who obſerve that Mo in the Egyptian language ſignifies water, and Yſes, ſaved; beſides the Egyptian name of Moſes, according to Aben Ezra, who had it from a book of agriculture in that language, is Momos: the Jewiſh writers [b] give to Moſes many names, which he had from different perſons, no leſs than ten: and Artapanus [c] ſays, that by the Egyptian prieſts he was called Hermes or Mercury, and probably was the Hermes of that people; he is called by Orpheus [d] υδογενης, born in water, becauſe drawn out of it.

℣. 11. And it came to paſs in thoſe days when Moſes was grown, &c.] To man's eſtate; ſome of the Jewiſh writers ſay he was 18, others 29 years of age [e], but Stephen, who is moſt to be credited, ſays, he was full 40 years of age, Acts vii. 23. that he went out unto his brethren the Hebrews; whom he knew to be his brethren, either by divine revelation, or by converſing with his nurſe, who was his mother; who, doubtleſs, inſtructed him whilſt he was with her, as far as he was capable of being informed of things, and who might frequently viſit her afterwards, by which means he became apprized that he was an Hebrew and not an Egyptian, though he went for the ſon of Pharaoh's daughter, which he refuſed to be called when he knew his parentage, Heb. xi. 24. now he went out from Pharaoh's palace which, in a ſhort time he entirely relinquiſhed, to viſit his brethren, and converſe with them, and underſtood their caſe and circumſtances: and looked on their burdens; which they were obliged to carry, and were very heavy, and with which they were preſſed; he looked at them with grief and concern, and conſidered in his mind how to relieve them, if poſſible: and he ſpied an Egyptian ſmiting an Hebrew, one of his brethren; the Egyptian was, according to Jarchi, a principal of the taſk-maſters of Iſrael, who was beating the Hebrew for not doing his work as he required, and the Hebrew, according to him, was the huſband of Shelomith, daughter of Dibri, Lev. xxiv. 11. tho' others ſay it was Dathan [f].

℣. 12. And he looked this way, and that way, &c.] All around, to obſerve if there were any within ſight who could ſee what he did; which did not ariſe from any conſciouſneſs of any evil he was about to commit, but for his own preſervation, leſt if ſeen he ſhould be accuſed to Pharaoh, and ſuffer for it: and when he ſaw that there was no man; near at hand, that could ſee what he did, and be a witneſs againſt him: he ſlew the Egyptian, and hid him in the ſand; in a ſandy deſart place hard by, where having ſlain him with his ſword, he dug a hole, and put him into it; ſee the note on Acts vii. 24. Of the ſlaughter of the Egyptian, and the following controverſy about it, Demetrius [g], an heathen writer, treats of in perfect agreement with the ſacred ſcriptures.

℣. 13. And when he went out the ſecond day, &c.] The day following: behold, two men of the Hebrews ſtrove together; which the Jewiſh writers [h] take to be Dathan and Abiram: and he ſaid to him that did the wrong; who was the aggreſſor, and acted the wicked part in abuſing his brother: wherefore ſmiteſt thou thy fellow? friend and companion; ſignifying, that it was very unbecoming, unkind and unnatural, and that brethren and friends ought to live together in love, and not ſtrive with, and ſmite one another, and eſpecially at ſuch a time as this, when they were ſo oppreſſed by, and ſuffered ſo much from their enemies; ſee the note on Acts vii. 26.

℣. 14. And he ſaid, who made thee a prince and a judge over us? &c.] God had deſigned him for one, and ſo he appeared to be afterwards; but this man's meaning is, that he was not appointed by Pharaoh's order then, and ſo had nothing to do to interfere in their differences and quarrels; tho' Moſes did not take upon him to act in an authoritative way, but to exhort and perſuade them to peace and love, as they were brethren: intendeſt thou to kill me, as thou killedſt the Egyptian? if this was Dathan, or however the ſame Hebrew that he had defended and reſcued from the Egyptian, it was very ungenerous in him to upbraid him with it; or if that Hebrew had made him his confident, and acquainted him with that affair, as it was unfaithful to betray it, ſince it was in favour of one of his own people, it was ungrateful to reproach him with it: and Moſes feared; leſt the thing ſhould be diſcovered;

[u] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 5. 2. 604, 605.
[w] Chronicon. Ib. Shalſhal. Ib.
[x] De vita Moſis, c. 1. p. 604, 605.
[y] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 432.
[z] Ut ſupra.
[a] Ut ſupra, §. 6.
[b] Vajikra Rabba, §. 1. fol. 146. 3. Shalſhalet Hakabala. fol. 5. 2. Chronicon Moſis, fol. 4. 1.
[c] Apud Euſeb. ut ſupra
[d] De Deo, v. 23. Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 19. p 439.
[e] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 5. 2. Pirke Eliezer, c. 48.
[f] Ibid.
[g] Apud
[h] Targum Jon. & Jarchi in loc. Shemoth Rabba, §. 1. fol. 91. 4.

covered, and be told to Pharaoh, and he ſhould ſuffer for it: this fear that poſſeſſed Moſes was before he fled from Egypt, and went to Midian, not when he forſook it, and never returned more, at the departure of the children of Iſrael, to which the apoſtle refers, Heb. xi. 27. and is no contradiction to this: and ſaid, ſurely this thing is known; he ſaid this within himſelf, he concluded from this ſpeech, that either ſomebody had ſeen him commit the fact he was not aware of, or the Hebrew, whoſe part he took, had through weakneſs told it to another, from whom this man had it, or to himſelf; for by this it ſeems that he was not the ſame Hebrew, on whoſe account Moſes had ſlain the Egyptian, for then the thing would have been ſtill a ſecret between them as before; only the other Hebrew this was now contending with, muſt hereby come to the knowledge of it, and ſo Moſes might fear, that getting into more hands it would come out, as it did; ſee the notes on Acts vii. 27, 28, 29.

℣. 15. Now when Pharaoh heard this thing, he ſought to ſlay Moſes, &c.] Both for his killing the Egyptian, which by the laws of Egypt [i] was death, whether bond or free; and for his taking part with the Hebrews againſt the Egyptians, and knowing him to be a wiſe and valiant man, might fear he would put himſelf at the head of the Hebrews, and cauſe a revolt of them; and if there was any thing in his dream, or if he had ſuch a one, and had the interpretation of it given by his magicians, that an Hebrew child ſhould be born, by whom Egypt would be deſtroyed, ſee the note on ch. i. 15. he might call it to mind, and be affected with it, and fear the time was coming on, and Moſes was the perſon by whom it ſhould be done; and he might be ſtirred up by his courtiers to take this ſtep, who doubtleſs envied the growing intereſt of Moſes in his court: but Moſes fled from the face of Pharaoh; not through want of courage, but thro' prudence to avoid danger, and preſerve his life for future uſefulneſs; and no doubt under a divine impulſe, and by the direction of divine providence, the time for him to be the deliverer of Iſrael not being yet come: and dwelt in the land of Midian; a country ſo called ftom Midian, one of Abraham's ſons by Keturah, Gen. xxv. 2. Jerom [k] calls it a city, and ſays it was on the other ſide of Arabia, to the ſouth, in the deſart of the Saracens, to the eaſt of the Red Sea, from whence the country was called Midian; and Philo [l] ſays, that Moſes went into neighbouring Arabia; and which is confirmed by Artapanus [m] the heathen hiſtorian, who ſays, that from Memphis, croſſing the river Nile, he went into Arabia; and this country was ſometimes called Cuſh or Ethiopia; hence Moſes's wife is called an Ethiopian woman, Numb. xii. 1. and he ſate down by a well; weary, thoughtful and penſive. It may be obſerved, that it was uſual with perſons in ſuch like circumſtances, being ſtrangers and not knowing well to whom to apply for aſſiſtance or direction to place themſelves at a well of water, to which there was frequent reſort both for the uſe of families, and of flocks; ſee Gen. xxiv. 11, 13. and xxix. 2. This well is now called, as ſome ſay, Eyoun el Kaſeb, fourteen hours and a half from Magare Chouaib, or the Grott of Jethro [n]; but if this was ſo far from Jethro's houſe, his daughters had a long way to go with their flock: but ſome other travellers [o] ſpeak of a very neat and pleaſant village, called Hattin, where they were ſhown the grave of Jethro, Moſes's father-in-law; and in the neighbourhood of that place is a ciſtern, now called Omar, and is ſaid to be the watering-place where Moſes met with the daughters of the prieſt of Midian. A late learned man [p] thinks, that Sharma, which is about a day and a half's journey ſouth-eaſt from mount Sinai, is the place where Jethro lived. The Arabic geographer [q] ſays, at the ſhore of the Red Sea lies the city Madian, greater than Tabuc, and in it is a well, out of which Moſes watered the flocks of Scioaib, that is, Raguel.

℣. 16. Now the prieſt of Midian had ſeven daughters, &c.] Who being a deſcendant of Abraham might have retained the knowledge of the true God, and might be a prieſt of his, as Melchizedek was, or otherwiſe it may be thought improbable that Moſes would have married his daughter, as he afterwards did; and ſo Aben Ezra ſays, he was a prieſt of God; though the word is ſometimes uſed of a prince, ruler and govenor; and is ſo rendered here by the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; and Artapanus [r], an heathen writer, expreſly calls him αρχων, a prince of thoſe places, that is, of Arabia; he might be both prince and prieſt, as Melchizedek before mentioned was, and as has been the uſage of many countries: and they came and drew water, and filled the troughs to water their father's flock; which is no contradiction to their being daughters, either of a prieſt or a prince, which were both high titles and characters; ſince it was uſual in thoſe early times, and in thoſe countries, for the ſons and daughters of conſiderable perſons to be employed in ſuch ſervices; ſee the note on Gen. xxix. 9.

℣. 17. And the ſhepherds came and drove them away, &c.] The daughters of the prieſt of Midian, and their flock likewiſe; theſe were ſhepherds of ſome neighbouring princes or great men, who were ſo rude and ſlothful, and to ſave themſelves a little trouble of drawing water, brought up their flocks to drink of the water thoſe virgins had drawn, and to do this forced them and their flocks away: but Moſes ſtood up, and helped them, and watered their flock; moved to ſee ſuch rude and uncivil treatment of the weaker ſex, roſe up from the ground on which he ſat, and took their parts, and obliged the ſhepherds to give way, and brought up their flock to the troughs, and drew water for them, and gave them it; either he did this alone, or together with the ſervants that waited upon the prieſt's daughters, perhaps alone; and if it be conſidered that ſhepherds being uſually not of a very martial ſpirit, and theſe alſo in a wrong cauſe, and Moſes a man of an heroic diſpoſition, and had doubtleſs the appearance of a man of ſome eminence and authority, they were the more eaſily intimidated and overcome.

℣. 18. And when they came to Reuel their father, &c.] Or Ragouel, as the Septuagint; and ſo Artapanus [s] calls him. The Targum of Jonathan has it, their father's father; and ſo Aben Ezra ſays he was; and is the ſenſe of others, induced thereto by Numb. x. 29. but it does not follow from thence: thence: he ſaid, how is it that you are come ſo ſoon to-day? it being not only ſooner than they were wont to come, but perhaps their buſineſs was done in ſo ſhort a time, that it was marvellous to him that it could be done in it, ſo quick a diſpatch had Moſes made, and they through his aſſiſtance; and eſpecially it might be more ſtrange, if it was uſual, as it ſeems it was, to be moleſted by the ſhepherds.

[i] Diodor. Sicul. Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 70. [k] De locis Heb. fol. 93. A. B. [l] De Vita Moſis, l. 1. p. 609. [m] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 433. [n] See a journey from Grand Cairo to Mecca, in Ray's Travels, vol. 2. p. 468. [o] Egmont and Heyman's Travels, vol. 2. p. 29. [p] See the Origin of Hieroglyphics at the end of a journal from Cairo to Mount Sinai, p. 55. Ed. 2. [q] Climat. 3. par. 5. [r] Ut ſupra, p. 434. [s] Ut ſupra.

℣. 19. And they ſaid, an Egyptian delivered us out of the hand of the ſhepherds, &c.] A man, who by his habit and by his ſpeech appeared to them to be an Egyptian, and upon their enquiry he might tell them ſo, being born in Egypt, though of Hebrew parents: and alſo drew water enough for us; or in drawing drew [t]; drew it readily, quickly and in abundance: and watered the flock; by which means their buſineſs was done, and they returned home earlier than uſual.

℣. 20. And he ſaid unto his daughters, and where is he? &c.] By the account Reuel's daughters gave of Moſes, of his courage and humanity, he was very deſirous of ſeeing him: why is it that ye have left the man? behind them at the well, and had not brought him along with them; he ſeemed to be diſpleaſed, and chides them, and tacitly ſuggeſts, that they were rude and ungrateful, not to aſk a ſtranger, and one that had been ſo kind to them, to come with them, and refreſh himſelf: call him, that he may eat bread; take meat with them, bread being put for all proviſions.

℣. 21. And Moſes was content to dwell with the man, &c.] After he had been called and brought into the houſe, and had had ſome refreſhment, and after ſome converſation had paſſed between them, and perhaps after ſome days ſtay in Reuel's houſe; Rexel having obſerved his diſpoſition and behaviour, and being delighted therewith, propoſed to him to take up his reſidence with him, with which motion Moſes was well pleaſed, and accepted of it: and he gave Moſes Zipporah his daughter; to be his wife. It is not be ſuppoſed that this was done directly; though both Philo [u] and Joſephus [w] intimate, as if it was done at firſt meeting together; but it is not likely that Reuel would diſpoſe of his daughter ſo ſuddenly to a ſtranger, though he might at once entertain an high opinion of him; nor would Moſes marry a woman directly he had ſo ſlender an acquaintance with, ſo little knowledge of her diſpoſition, endowments of mind and religion. The Targum of Jonathan ſays it was at the end of ten years; and indeed forty years after this, a ſon of his ſeems to have been young, having not till then been circumciſed, ch. iv. 22—26. The author of the life of Moſes ſays [x], that he was ſeventy-ſeven years of age when he married Zipporah, which was but three years before he returned to Egypt. This circumſtance of Moſes's marrying Reuel's daughter is confirmed by Artapanus [y], a heathen hiſtorian; and alſo by Demetrius [z], and expreſly calls her Sapphora, who he ſays was a daughter of Jother or Jethro; and likewiſe by Ezekiel the tragœdian [a].

℣. 22. And ſhe bare him a ſon, and he called his name Gerſhom, &c.] Which ſignifies a deſolate ſtranger; partly on his own account, he being in a foreign country, a ſtranger and ſojourner; but not by way of complaint, but rather of thankfulneſs to God for providing ſo well for him in it; and partly on his ſon's account, that when he came to years of maturity and knowledge, he might learn, and in which Moſes no doubt inſtructed him, that he was not to look upon Midian as his proper country, but that he was to be heir of the land of Canaan, and which he might be reminded of by his name: for he ſaid, I have been a ſtranger in a ſtrange land; ſo Midian was to him, who was born in Egypt, and being an Hebrew, was entitled to the land of Canaan; this looks as if he had been at this time ſome years in Midian.

℣. 23. And it came to paſs in proceſs of time, that the king of Egypt died, &c.] According to Euſebius, Orus reigned in Egypt when Moſes fled from thence, and that two more reigned after him, Acencheres and Achoris, who both died before the deliverance of the children of Iſrael; but according to biſhop Uſher [b], this was the ſame king of Egypt under whom Moſes was born, and from whoſe face he fled, who died in the 67th year of his reign, Moſes being now 60 years of age, and having been in the land of Midian 20 years; and it was about twenty years after this that he was called from hence, to be the deliverer of his people; for things are often put cloſe together in ſcripture, which were done at a conſiderable diſtance. And the intention of this notice of the death of the king of Egypt, is chiefly to ſhew that it made no alteration in the afflictions of the children of Iſrael for the better, but rather the worſe: and the children of Iſrael ſighed by reaſon of the bondage; the ſeverity of it, and its long duration, and ſeeing no way for their eſcape out of it: and they cried, and their cry came up unto God; they not only ſighed and groaned inwardly, but ſo great was their oppreſſion, that they could not forbear crying out aloud; and ſuch was the greatneſs and vehemency of their cry, that it reached up to heaven, and came into the ears of the Almighty, as vehement cries are ſaid to do, whether ſinful or religious; ſee Gen. xviii. 20, 21. Pſ. xviii. 6: by reaſon of the bondage; which may either be connected with their cry, that that was becauſe of their bondage; or with the coming of it unto God, he was pleaſed to admit and regard their cry, becauſe their bondage was ſo very oppreſſive and intolerable.

℣. 24. And God heard their groaning, &c.] The petitions they put up to him with groans and cries: and God remembred his covenant with Abraham, with Iſaac, and with Jacob; that he would bring their ſeed out of a land not theirs, in which they were ſtrangers, and were afflicted, into the land of Canaan, for an everlaſting poſſeſſion.

℣. 25. And God looked upon the children of Iſrael, &c.] With an eye of pity and compaſſion, and ſaw all the hardſhips they laboured under, and all the injuries that were done unto them: and God had reſpect unto them; had a favourable regard to them; or knew [c] not only them, the Iſraelites, and loved them, and approved of them, and owned them as his own, all which words of knowledge ſometimes ſignify; but he knew their ſorrows and ſufferings, and took notice of what was done to them ſecretly; ſee ch. iii. 7.

CHAP.

[t] דלה דלה hauriendo hauſit, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator. [u] De vita Moſis, l. 1. p. 611. [w] Antiq. l. 2. c. 11. §. 2. [x] Chronicon Moſis, fol. 9. 1. [y] Apud Euſeb. Evangel. Præpar. l. 9. c. 27. p. 434. [z] Ib. c. 29. p. 439. [a] Ib. c. 28. [b] Annal. Vet. Teſt. p. 19. A. M. 2494.
[c] וידע et cognovit, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter we are informed how that the Lord appeared to Moſes in a buſh on fire, but not conſumed, ℣. 1—6. declared unto him that he had ſeen and obſerved the afflictions of the children of Iſrael, and was determined to deliver them, ℣. 7, 8, 9. that he gave him a call to be the deliverer of them, anſwered his objections to it, and inſtructed him what he ſhould ſay, both to the elders of Iſrael and to Pharaoh, ℣. 10—18. and aſſured him, that though at firſt Pharaoh would refuſe to let them go, yet after many miracles wrought, he would be willing to diſmiſs them, when they ſhould depart with great ſubſtance, ℣. 19—22.

℣. 1. Now Moſes kept the flock of Jethro his father-in-law, the prieſt of Midian, &c.] Who was either the ſame with Reuel or Raguel, ſpoken of in the preceding chapter; or, as others think, a ſon of his, the father being now dead; ſeeing it was now 40 years ſince Moſes came into Midian, Acts vii. 30. Demetrius [a], an heathen writer, who expreſsly ſays, that Jothor a ſon of Raguel, and Zipporah or Sepphora, as he calls her, was his daughter, whom Moſes married: now this was the buſineſs Moſes was chiefly concerned in during his ſtay in Midian; keeping the ſheep of his father-in-law, in which great perſonages have been employed, and who have afterwards been called to the kingly office, as David; and this was an emblem of his feeding and ruling the people of Iſrael, and in it he was an eminent type of Chriſt, the great ſhepherd and biſhop of ſouls: no doubt there were other things beſides this in which Moſes exerciſed himſelf in this courſe of time, and improved himſelf in the knowledge of things, natural, civil and religious, and which the more qualified him for the important work he was deſigned for: it is thought that in this interval he wrote the book of Geneſis, and alſo the book of Job: and he led the flock to the back-ſide of the deſart; of Sinai or Arabia, on the back part of which, it ſeems, were goodly paſtures; and hither he led his flock to feed, which was about 3 days journey from Egypt, ch. v. 3. or rather into the deſert [d], for Horeb or Sinai was not behind the deſert but in it: and came to the mountain of God, even to Horeb; ſo called either becauſe of the appearance of God at this time, after related, or becauſe of his giving the law and making the covenant with the people of Iſrael there; and it ſhould be obſerved that that tranſaction was paſt when Moſes wrote this book. Hither he led the ſheep, they delighting in mountains, hence ſometimes mountainous places are called οἰοπόλια [e], becauſe ſheep delight to feed upon them [f].

℣. 2. And the angel of the Lord appeared unto him, &c.] Not a created angel, but the angel of God's preſence and covenant, the eternal word and Son of God; ſince he is afterwards expreſsly called Jehovah, and calls himſelf the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, which a created angel would never do: the appearance was, in a flame of fire, out of the midſt of a buſh; not in a tall, lofty, ſpreading oak or cedar, but in a low thorny bramble buſh, which it might have been thought would have been conſumed in an inſtant of time: and he looked, and behold, the buſh burned with fire, and the buſh was not conſumed; this was not imaginary but a real thing; there was ſuch a buſh, and Jehovah appeared in it in this manner; and though it was all on fire yet was not conſumed, but remained entire after it: reference is frequently had to it as a matter of fact, Deut. xxxiii. 16. Mar. xii. 26. Acts vii. 30. 35. Artapanus [g] an heathen writer, had got ſome hint of it; his account is this, that while Moſes was praying to God, and entreating the afflictions of his people might ceaſe, he was propitious to him, and on a ſudden fire broke out of the earth and burned, when there was no matter nor any thing of a woody ſort in the place: nor need this account Moſes gives be thought incredible, when ſo many things ſimilar to it are affirmed by heathen writers, who ſpeak of a whole foreſt in flames without fire, and of a ſpear that burned for two hours, and yet nothing of it conſumed; and of a ſervant's coat all on fire, and yet after it was extinguiſhed no trace or mark of the flames were to be ſeen on it; and ſeveral other things of the like kind are related by Huetius [h] out of various authors: as to the myſtical ſignification of this buſh, ſome make it to be a type of Chriſt, and of his manifeſtation in the fleſh; of the union of the two natures in him, and of their diſtinction of the glory of the one, and of the meanneſs of the other; of his ſuſtaining the wrath of God, and remaining fearleſs and unhurt by it; and of his delivering and preſerving his people from it: the Jews commonly interpret it of the people of Iſrael, in the furnace of affliction in Egypt, and yet not conſumed; nay, the more they were afflicted the more they grew; and it may be a ſymbol of the church and people of God, in all ages, under affliction and diſtreſs: they are like to a thorn buſh both for their ſmall quantity, being few, and for their quality, in themſelves weak and ſtrengthleſs, mean and low; have about them the thorns of corruptions and temptations, and who are often in the fire of afflictions and perſecutions yet are not conſumed; which is owing to the perſon, preſence, power, and grace of Chriſt being among them; ſee the note on Acts vii. 30.

℣. 3. And Moſes ſaid, I will now turn aſide, &c.] From the place where he was, and the flock he was feeding, and get nearer to the buſh, which ſeems to have been on one ſide of him and not directly before him: and ſee this great ſight, why the buſh is not burnt; enquire into, and find out, if he could, the reaſon of this ſtrange and amazing ſight; how it could be that a buſh ſhould be on fire and yet not burnt up, which might have been expected would have been deſtroyed at once; for what is a thorn or bramble-buſh to devouring flames of fire, as theſe appeared to be?

℣.

[a] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 29. p. 439. [d] אחר המדבר υπο τὸν ἔρημον, Sept. in deſertum, Syr. Samar. ſo Noldius, p. 11. No. 76. [e] Homer. Odyſſ. 11. prope finem. [f] ἐν ὄρεσι μαλα τομιναι, Theocrit. Idyll. 3. [g] Apud Euſeb. Ib. c. 27. p. 434. [h] Alnetan. Quæſt. l. 2. c. 12. §. 10. p. 193, 194.

℣. 4. And when the Lord saw that he turned aside to see, &c.] Who is before called the Angel of the Lord, here Jehovah, the omniscient and omnipresent Being, who observing Moses turning aside and going onward to gratify his curiosity, by examining more narrowly this strange phænomenon: God called unto him out of the midst of the bush; with an articulate voice, being the eternal Word: and said, Moses, Moses; for the Lord knows his people distinctly, and can call them by name; and the repetition of his name not only shews familiarity and a strong vehement affection for him, but haste to stop him, that he might proceed no further; and this was done in order to stir him up to hearken to what would be said to him: and he said, here am I; ready to hear what shall be said, and to obey whatever is commanded.

℣. 5. And he said, draw not nigh hither, &c.] Keep a proper distance: put off thy shoes from off thy feet; dust and dirt cleaving to shoes, and these being ordered to be put off from the feet, the instrument of walking, shew that those that draw nigh to God and are worshippers of him, ought to be of pure and holy lives and conversations: for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground; not that there was any inherent holiness in this spot of ground more than in any other, which ground is not capable of; but a relative holiness on account of the presence of God here at this time, and was not permanent, only whilst a pure and holy God was there: hence, in after times the temple being the place of the divine residence, the priests there performed their services barefooted, nor might a common person enter into the temple with his shoes on [k]; and to this day the Jews go to their synagogues barefooted on the day of atonement [l], to which Juvenal [m] seems to have respect; and from hence came the Nudipedalia among the heathens, and that known symbol of Pythagoras [n], "sacrifice "and worship with naked feet:" in this manner the priests of Diana sacrificed to her among the Cretians and other people [o]; and so the priests of Hercules did the same [p], the Brahmans among the Indians never go into their temples without plucking off their shoes [q]; so the Ethiopian christians imitating Jews and Gentiles, never go into their places of public worship but with naked feet [r], and the same superstition the Turks and Mahometans observe [s].

℣. 6. Moreover he said, I am the God of thy fathers, &c.] Of every one of his fathers next mentioned: the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; with whom the covenant respecting the land of Canaan, and the promise of the blessed seed the Messiah was made: this again shews that the angel of the Lord that now appeared was God himself, Jehovah the Son of God. Our Lord makes use of this text to prove the resurrection of the dead against the Sadducees, God being not the God of the dead but of the living; Mar. xii. 26. 27. and Moses hid his face; wrapped it in his mantle or cloak, as Elijah did, 1 Kings xix. 13. because of the glory of the divine majesty now present, and conscious of his own sinfulness and unworthiness: for he was afraid to look upon God; even upon this outward appearance and representation of him in a flame of fire; otherwise the essence of God is not to be looked upon and seen at all, God is invisible; but even this external token and symbol of him was terrible to behold; the thought that God was there filled him with fear, considering the greatness and awfulness of his majesty, and what a poor, weak, and sinful creature he was.

℣. 7. And the Lord said, I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt, &c.] Or, in seeing I have seen, which not only denotes the certainty of it, as we express it; but the clear, distinct and full sight he had of it, with sympathy towards them, an affectionate concern for them, and a fixed, settled determination in his mind to deliver them; he had long took notice of, and had thoroughly observed their affliction, and was afflicted with them in it, and was bent upon their deliverance out of it: and have heard their cry, by reason of their task-masters; who were set over them to see that they did their work, and to lay heavy burdens on them, and afflict them by all manner of ways and methods they could devise; and who abused and beat them for not doing what was not to be done, which made them cry out because of their barbarous usage of them, and cry unto God for help and deliverance: for I know their sorrows; the pains of body they were put unto, and the inward grief and trouble of their minds on account of them.

℣. 8. And I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, &c.] Which must be understood consistent with the omnipresence of God, who is every where, and strictly speaking cannot be said to remove from place to place, or to descend; but such a way of speaking is used, when he gives some eminent display of his power or goodness, as here, in a wonderful manner he appeared in a burning bush, and manifested himself in a way of grace and kindness to his people, signifying that he would shortly save them: so Christ in our nature came down from heaven to earth, to save his spiritual Israel out of the hands of all their enemies: and to bring them out of that land; the land of Egypt, where they were in bondage, and greatly oppressed; unto a good land, and a large; the land of Canaan, which was not only a good land, but a large one in comparison of Goshen, where the Israelites were pent up and straitened for room through their great increase; and though it was but a small country in itself, and when compared with some others, being but 160 miles from Dan to Beersheba, and but 46 from Joppa to Bethlehem, and but 60 from Joppa to Jordan, yet for so small a country, it had a great deal of good land in it; for Hecatæus [t], an heathen writer, says it had in it 300 myriads of acres of the best and most fruitful land: unto a land flowing with milk and honey; which is not to be restrained merely to the abundance of cattle fed here, and the plenty of milk they produced, or the number of bees that swarmed here, and the quantity of honey they made; for the land abounded with other good things, and excellent fruits, as corn, and wine, and oil, and with figs, pomegranates, palm-trees, &c. but this is a proverbial and hyperbolical expression, setting forth the great affluence of all sorts of good things in it, for the necessity and delight of human life:

[k] Misn. Beracot, c. 9. §. 5. [l] Buxtorf. Jud. Synagog. c. 30. p. 571. [m] Observant ubi festa mero pede Sabbata reges. Satyr. 6. [n] Jamblichus de vita Pythagor. Symbol. 3. [o] Solin. Polyhistor. c. 16. Strabo, l. 12. p. 370. [p] Silius de Bello Punic. l. 3. [q] Rogerius de relig. Brachman. l. 2. c. 10. apud Braunium de vest sacerdot. l. 1. c. 3. p. 66. [r] Damianus a Goes apud Rivet. in loc. [s] Pitt's Account of the Relig. and Manners of the Mahometans, c. 6. p. 38. 81. Georgievizi de Turc. Moribus, c. 1. p. 11. Sionita de Urb. Oriental. & Relig. c. 7. p. 18. c. 10. p. 34. [t] Apud Joseph. contr. Apion. l. 1. c. 22.

life: unto the place of the Canaanites; who are mentioned first, as being the general name for the inhabitants of the land, as Aben Ezra suggests, tho' they are often spoken of as a distinct nation or tribe from the rest, and a principal one, denominated from Canaan the son of Ham: and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites; the Hittites and Amorites had their names from Heth and Emor, sons of Canaan; the Perizzites, Aben Ezra says, are the same with Sidon, who was the first-born of Canaan; and the Hivites and Jebusites were the descendants also of sons of Canaan, Gen. xv. 16, 17. the Girgashites are not here mentioned, either because they were a lesser people than the rest, as Aben Ezra thinks; or their land was not a land flowing with milk and honey, as Abendana observes; or they were gone out of the land before Israel went into it, according to other Jewish writers, or immediately yielded to Joshua, without fighting against him.

℣. 9. Now therefore behold, the cry of the children of Israel is come unto me, &c.] See ch. ii. 23: and I have also seen the oppression wherewith the Egyptians oppress them; which is repeated to observe the great notice he took of it; and the reason of his descent and appearance in this wonderful manner, as well as of the urgent necessity of Moses's going to deliver the people from their oppression.

℣. 10. Come now therefore, &c.] Leave thy flock, thy family, and the land of Midian: and I will send thee unto Pharaoh; this Pharaoh, according to Eusebius, was Cenchres, the successor of Achoris; but according to bishop Usher [u], his name was Amenophis, who immediately succeeded Rameses Miamun, under whom Moses was born. Clemens of Alexandria [w] relates from Apion, and he from Ptolemy Mendesius, that it was in the times of Amosis, that Moses led the children of Israel out of Egypt; but Tacitus [x] says, the name of this king was Bocchoris, who obliged them to go out, being advised by an oracle to do so; and so says Lysimachus [y]: that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt; and conduct them through the wilderness to the land of Canaan, and so be their deliverer, guide and governor under God, who now gave him a commission to act for him.

℣. 11. And Moses said unto God, who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, &c.] A private person, an exile in a foreign country, a poor shepherd, unknown to Pharaoh, and had no interest in him; and he a great king, and possessed of numerous forces to defend his country, and prevent the Israelites departure out of it: time was when he was known to a Pharaoh, dwelt in his court, and made a figure there, and had great interest and authority there, being the adopted son of the king's daughter; but now it was otherwise with him: and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt; who though a people numerous, yet unarmed, and held in great bondage; and he might remember how he had been repulsed and rejected by some of them 40 years ago, which might be discouraging to him.

℣. 12. And he said, certainly I will be with thee, &c.] To encourage and strengthen him; to protect, defend, and preserve him, and to succeed and prosper him; to give him credit and respect with the people of Israel, and influence over Pharaoh to prevail upon him at length to let Israel go: and this shall be a token unto thee, that I have sent thee; not the promise now made, nor the vision he had seen, but what follows: when thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain; mount Horeb or Sinai, as they did at the time of the giving of the law on it, when an altar was built upon a hill, and they offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, Exod. xxiv. 4, 5. and this was a sign, à posteriori, confirming the divine mission of Moses; and besides, the promise of this, on which Moses might depend, being made by the Lord, assured him of success, that he should bring the children of Israel out of Egypt, since he and they would serve the Lord together at this mountain, and from whence he might conclude he had a mission and commission from God. Of a like kind is the sign or token given of the deliverance of Jerusalem from the army of Sennacherib, Is. xxxvii. 30.

℣. 13. And Moses said unto God, &c.] Having received full satisfaction to his objection, taken from his own unfitness for such a service, and willing to have his way quite clear unto him, and his commission appear firm and valid to his people, he proceeds to observe another difficulty that might possibly arise: when I come unto the children of Israel; out of Midian into Egypt: and shall say unto them, the God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; with a message to them to receive him as his ambassador and their deliverer: and they shall say unto me, what is his name? a question it was probable they would ask, not through ignorance, since in their distress they had called upon the name of the Lord, and cried unto him for help and deliverance; but either to try Moses, and what knowledge he had of God: or there being many names by which he had made himself known; and especially was wont to make use of a new name or title when he made a new appearance, or any eminent discovery of himself, they might be desirous of knowing what was the present name he took: what shall I say unto them? what name shall I make mention of?

℣. 14. And God said unto Moses, I am that I am, &c.] This signifies the real being of God, his self-existence, and that he is the being of beings; as also it denotes his eternity and immutability, and his constancy and faithfulness in fulfilling his promises, for it includes all time, past, present and to come; and the sense is, not only I am what I am at present, but I am what I have been, and I am what I shall be, and shall be what I am. The Platonists and Pythagoreans seem to have borrowed their το ον from hence, which expresses with them the eternal and invariable Being; and so the Septuagint version here is ο ων: it is said [z], that the temple of Minerva at Sais, a city of Egypt, had this inscription on it, "I am all that exists, is, and "shall be." And on the temple of Apollo at Delphos was written ει, the contraction of ειμι, I am [a]. Our Lord seems to refer to this name, John viii. 58. and indeed is the person that now appeared; and the words may be rendered, I shall be what I shall be [b], the incarnate God, God manifest in the flesh: thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you; or as the Targum of Jonathan

[u] Annal. Vet. Test. p. 19. [w] Stromat. l. 1. p. 320. [x] Hist. l. 5 c. 3. [y] Apud Joseph. contr. Apion. l. 1. c. 34. [z] Plutarch. de Iside & Osir. [a] Plato in Timæo. [b] אהיה אשר אהיה ero qui ero, Pagninus, Montanus, Fagius, Vatablus.

Jonathan has it, "I am he that is, and that ſhall "be." This is the name Ehjeh, or Jehovah, Moſes is empowered to make uſe of, and to declare, as the name of the Great God by whom he was ſent; and which might ſerve both to encourage him, and ſtrengthen the faith of the Iſraelites, that they ſhould be delivered by him.

℣. 15. And God ſaid moreover unto Moſes, &c.] As a further explanation of the above name, and of the deſign and uſe of it: thus ſhalt thou ſay unto the children of Iſrael; for their further inſtruction in the ſaid name, and for the confirmation of the miſſion of Moſes, and the ſucceſs of it: the Lord God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob hath ſent me unto you; he who is Jehovah, and the Covenant-God of the anceſtors of the people of Iſrael, and of them, ſo he is called, ℣. 6: this is my name for ever; meaning either Ehjeh, I am, in the preceding verſe, or which is the ſame, Jehovah in this, and ſo both of them, and including alſo the name of the God of Abraham, &c. which he was always to be known by: and this is my memorial unto all generations; the name by which he ſhould be made mention of both by himſelf and others, and by which he would be called to remembrance by his people, and what he had promiſed unto them, and done for them.

℣. 16. Go and gather the elders of Iſrael together, &c.] Not all the ancient men among them, nor the judges of the people of Iſrael; for it does not appear there were ſuch among them in Egypt, until they came into the land of Canaan, but the heads of tribes or families: and ſay unto them, the Lord God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, of Iſaac, and of Jacob, appeared unto me; in a flame of fire in the midſt of a buſh at Horeb: ſaying, I have ſurely viſited you, and ſeen that which is done to you in Egypt; inſpected into their ſtate and circumſtances, took notice of their afflictions and oppreſſions, and determined to deliver them out of them, as follows.

℣. 17. And I have ſaid, &c.] Within himſelf, reſolved in his own mind, and had declared it to Moſes: I will bring you up out of the affliction of Egypt; with which they were afflicted in Egypt, and by the Egyptians; this he both purpoſed and promiſed to bring them out of: unto the land of the Canaanites, &c. then in the poſſeſſion of the Canaanites, and others, after named; ſee the note on ℣. 8.

℣. 18. And they ſhall hearken to thy voice, &c.] The elders of Iſrael, who would give credit to his commiſſion, attend to what he ſaid, and obey his orders, and follow the directions that he ſhould give them, and not ſlight and reject him, as ſome had done before: and thou ſhalt come, thou, and the elders of Iſrael, unto the king of Egypt; the elders of Iſrael in a body, and Moſes at the head of them; though we don't read of their approaching to Pharaoh, and addreſſing him in ſuch a manner, only of Moſes and Aaron applying to him: and you ſhall ſay unto him, the Lord God of the Hebrews hath met with us; with one of them, who had reported to the reſt what he had ſaid; the children of Iſrael are here called Hebrews, becauſe that ſeems to be a name the Egyptians moſt commonly called them, and by which they were beſt known to them, ſee Gen. xxxix. 14, 17. and xliii. 32. Exod. i. 19. and ii. 6, 11, 13: and now let us go, we beſeech thee, three days journey into the wilderneſs; the wilderneſs of Sinai and Arabia, and to mount Horeb in it; which from the borders of Egypt was three days journey going the direct road, but the Iſraelites going ſomewhat about, and ſtopping by the way, did not get to it until the third month of their going out of Egypt, ch. xix. 1: that we may ſacrifice to the Lord God; in the place where he had appeared to a principal man among them, and where they would be in no danger of being inſulted and moleſted by the Egyptians. Some think the reaſon of this requeſt they were directed to make, to ſacrifice out of the land of Egypt, was, becauſe what they ſacrificed, the Egyptians worſhipped as gods, and therefore would be enraged at ſuch ſacrifices; but for this there is no ſufficient foundation; ſee the note on Gen. xlvi. 34. rather the deſign was under this pretence to get quite away from them, they being no ſubjects of the king of Egypt, nor had he a right to detain them; nor were they obliged to acquaint him with the whole of their intentions, and eſpecially as they were directed of God himſelf to ſay this, and no more, and which being ſo reaſonable, made Pharaoh's refuſal the more inexcuſable.

℣. 19. And I am ſure that the king of Egypt will not let you go, &c.] Or but [c] I am ſure, &c. tho' ſo reaſonable a requeſt was made him, yet it would not be granted; this is obſerved to them, that they might not be diſcouraged when he ſhould refuſe to diſmiſs them, which the omniſcient God knew beforehand, and acquaints them with it, that when it came to paſs they might be induced to believe that the miſſion of Moſes was of God, rather than the contrary: no, not by a mighty hand; the mighty power of God diſplayed once and again, even in nine plagues inflicted on him, until the tenth and laſt came upon him; or unleſs by a mighty hand [d], even the almighty hand of God; prayers, intreaties, perſuaſions and arguments will ſignify nothing, unleſs the mighty power of God is exerted upon him.

℣. 20. And I will ſtretch out my hand, &c.] Or therefore [e] he would ſtretch out his mighty hand, exert his almighty power; and for this purpoſe was Pharaoh raiſed up, and his heart hardened, that God might ſhew his power in him, and on him: and ſmite Egypt with all my wonders, which I will do in the midſt thereof; with thoſe wondrous plagues, the amazing effects of his almighty power, which were wrought by him in the midſt of Egypt, by which their land, their rivers, their perſons, and their cattle were ſmitten: and after that he will let you go; this is ſaid for their encouragement, that their faith and patience might hold out, who otherwiſe ſeeing him ſo obſtinate and inflexible, might be ready to deſpair of ever ſucceeding.

℣. 21. And I will give this people favour in the ſight of the Egyptians, &c.] That is, give the Iſraelites favour in their ſight, a little before their departure, who ſhould be ready to do any thing for them, or beſtow any thing upon them; or however lend them what they would deſire, being glad to be at peace with them, or get rid of them, for whoſe ſakes they would perceive all thoſe ſore calamities came upon them, they were diſtreſſed with: and it ſhall come to paſs, that when ye go, ye ſhall not go empty; deſtitute of what was neceſſary for them, but

[c] אני ego autem, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſed ego, V. L. Pagninus, Vatablus; ſo Noldius, p. 344. No. 1246.

[d] ולא בד גם, Sept. niſi, V. L. Pagninus, Vatablus; ſo Noldius, p. 279.

[e] לכן ideo, propterea, Noldius, p. 279.

but even with great ſubſtance, as was foretold by Abraham they ſhould, and which prophecy was now about to be fulfilled, Gen. xv. 14.

℣. 22. But every woman ſhall borrow of her neighbour, and of her that ſojourneth in her houſe, &c.] Or ſhall aſk [f], deſire them to give or lend, what follows; and by this it appears, that the Iſraelites by reaſon of their great increaſe were ſpread about, and mixed with the Egyptians; and hence it was, that there was ſuch a mixt multitude that went up with them out of Egypt, who either were in connexion with them in civil things, or were proſelyted by them: jewels of ſilver, and jewels of gold; that is, jewels ſet in ſilver and in gold; or veſſels of ſilver, and veſſels of gold [g], plate of both ſorts, cups, diſhes, &c: and raiment; rich and goodly apparel, which they might borrow to appear in at their feaſt and ſacrifices in the wilderneſs, whither they aſked leave to go to: and ye ſhall put them upon your ſons, and upon your daughters; and ſo deck and ornament them with them at the time of their departure: and ye ſhall ſpoil the Egyptians; and very juſtly, for the hard ſervice they put them to; for which all this was but their wages due unto them, and which they would ſtand in need of in their travels to Canaan's land, and for the erection of the tabernacle, and providing things appertaining to it in the wilderneſs.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter is a continuation of the diſcourſe that paſſed between God and Moſes; and here Moſes makes other objections to his miſſion; one is taken from the unbelief of the people of Iſrael, which is removed by giving him power to work miracles, by turning the rod in his hand into a ſerpent, and then into a rod again; and by putting his hand into his boſom at one time, when it became leprous, and again into the ſame place when it became ſound and whole, and by turning the water of the river into blood, ℣. 1—9. another objection is formed from his want of eloquence, which is anſwered with an aſſurance, that God that made man's mouth, would be with his mouth, and teach him what to ſay; and beſides, Aaron his brother, who was an eloquent man, ſhould be his ſpokeſman, ℣. 10—17. upon which he returned to Midian, and having obtained leave of his father-in-law to depart from thence, he took his wife and his ſons, and returned to Egypt, ℣. 18—20. at which time he received ſome freſh inſtructions from the Lord, what he ſhould do before Pharaoh, and what he ſhould ſay unto him, ℣. 21—23. then follows an account of what befel him by the way, becauſe of the circumciſion of his ſon, ℣. 24—26. and the chapter is cloſed with an account of the meeting of Moſes and Aaron, and of their gathering the elders of Iſrael together, to whom the commiſſion of Moſes was opened, and ſigns done before them, to which they gave credit, and expreſſed their joy and thankfulneſs, ℣. 27—31.

℣. 1. And Moſes anſwered and ſaid, &c.] In reference to what Jehovah had declared to him in the latter end of the preceding chapter: but behold, they will not believe me, nor hearken to my voice; this ſeems to contradict what God had ſaid to him, ch. iii. 18. that they would hearken to his voice; but it can hardly be thought, that ſo good a man, and ſo great a prophet as Moſes was, would directly fly in the face of God, and expreſly contradict what he had ſaid. To reconcile this it may be obſerved, that what the Lord ſays reſpects only the elders of Iſrael, this all the people; or Jehovah's meaning may be, and ſo this of Moſes, that neither the one nor the other would regard his bare word, without ſome ſign or miracle being wrought; for as his call was extraordinary, ſo it required ſomething extraordinary to be done that it might be credited: for they will ſay, the Lord hath not appeared unto me; in the buſh, as he would affirm he did, and might do it with the greateſt aſſurance; yet the thing being ſo marvellous, and they not eye-witneſſes of it, might diſtruſt the truth of it, or be backward to receive it on his bare word; and this Moſes might rather fear would be the caſe, from the experience he had had of them 40 years ago, when it was more likely for him to have been a deliverer of them.

℣. 2. And the Lord ſaid unto him, &c.] Not reproving him for contradicting him, or ſhewing any diffidence of what he had ſaid; but rather as approving the hint he gave of having ſome ſign or miracle wrought, to command from the Iſraelites an aſſent unto him, as commiſſioned of God to deliver them: what is that in thine hand? which queſtion is put, not as being ignorant of what it was, but to lead on to what he had further to ſay, and to the working of the miracle: and he ſaid, a rod; or ſtaff, ſuch as ſhepherds uſe in the management of their flocks, for Moſes was now feeding the flock of his father in-law; but Aben Ezra ſeems rather to think it was a walking ſtaff, ſuch as ancient men lean upon, ſince Moſes did not go to Pharaoh after the manner of a ſhepherd; yea, it may be added, he went with the authority of a prince or ruler of Iſrael, and even with the authority of the ambaſſador of the King of kings.

℣. 3. And he ſaid, caſt it on the ground, &c.] That is, the rod or ſtaff: and he caſt it on the ground, and it became a ſerpent; not in appearance only, but in reality, it was changed into a real living ſerpent; for God, who is the author of nature, can change the nature of things as he pleaſes; nor is it to be ſuppoſed, that he would only make it look to the ſight as if it was one, by working upon the fancy and imagination to think it was one, when it was not; no doubt but it was as really turned into a true ſerpent, as the water was turned really and truly into wine by our Lord; this was the firſt miracle that ever was wrought, that we know of. Dr. Lightfoot [h] obſerves, that as a ſerpent was the fitteſt emblem of the devil, Gen. iii. 1. Rev. xii. 9. ſo was it a ſign that Moſes did not theſe miracles by the power of the devil, but had a power over and beyond him, when he could thus deal with the ſerpent at his pleaſure, as to make his rod a ſerpent, and the ſerpent a rod, as he ſaw good: and Moſes fled from before it; the

Jeſus

[f] ישאלה αἰτήσει, Sept. poſtulabit, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Druſius; petet, Junius & Tremellius.
[g] כלי vaſa, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator, Tigurine verſion, Druſius. [h] Works, vol. 1. p. 702.

Jews say [j], it was a fiery serpent, but for this they have no warrant: however, without supposing that it might be terrible and frightful, inasmuch as a common serpent is very disagreeable to men, and such an uncommon and extraordinary one must be very surprizing, to see a staff become a serpent, a living one, crawling and leaping about, and perhaps turning itself towards Moses, whose staff it had been. Philo the Jew [k] says, it was a dragon, an exceeding large one.

ver. 4. And the Lord said to Moses, put forth thy hand, and take it by the tail, &c.] Which to do might seem most dangerous, since it might turn upon him and bite him; this was ordered, partly that Moses might be assured it was really a serpent, and not in appearance only; and partly to try his courage, and it suggested to him, that he need not be afraid of it, it would not hurt him: the above learned doctor observes [l], that he is commanded to take it by the tail; for to meddle with the serpent's head belonged not to Moses, but to Christ that spake to him out of the bush: and he put forth his hand, and caught it, and it became a rod in his hand; as it was before. Some think this refers to the threefold state of the Israelites, first to their flourishing estate under Joseph, when they were as a rod or staff, then to their dejected state, by this rod cast to the ground, and become a serpent, and lastly to their restoration and liberty, by its becoming a rod again: others refer it to Christ, who is the power of God, and the rod of his strength, and who in his state of humiliation was like this rod, cast to the ground and became a serpent, of which the brazen serpent was a type, and who by his resurrection from the dead regained his former power; but perhaps they may be rightest who think it refers to the service and ministry of Moses, which seemed terrible to him at first, like a hurtful serpent, from which he fled; but after he was confirmed by the word of God, he readily undertook it.

ver. 5. That they may believe, &c.] The elders and people of Israel; for this miracle was wrought not for the confirmation of Moses's faith; for as Aben Ezra observes, the sign of the burning bush was given to him to confirm his faith, that it was God that appeared to him, and called him to this work; but this was wrought to confirm the faith of the Israelites in his divine mission: that the Lord God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared unto thee; see the note on ch. iii. 6.

ver. 6. And the Lord said furthermore unto him, &c.] Continued his discourse, and gave him another sign: put now thine hand into thy bosom, and he put his hand into his bosom; within his coat, under that part of the garment next to his breast: and when he took it out, behold, his hand was leprous as snow; that is, white as snow, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, through the leprosy that was upon it; it was a leprosy of the white sort, and which is reckoned the worst and most difficult to be cured, see Lev. xiii. 3, 4. Numb. xii. 10. It is highly probable that this gave rise to the story told by several heathen writers, as Manetho [m], Lysimachus [n], Trogus [o], and Tacitus [p], that Moses and the Israelites were drove out of Egypt by the advice of an oracle, because they had the leprosy, itch, and other impure diseases upon them.

ver. 7. And he said, put thine hand into thy bosom again, &c.] With the leprosy on it: and he put his hand into his bosom again, and plucked it out of his bosom; quickly after he had put it in: and behold, it was turned again as his other flesh; it was cured of the leprosy, and recovered its colour, and was as sound as before, and as any other part of his body. This was a very astonishing miracle, that he should be at once smote with a leprosy; that this should be only in his hand, and not in any other part of his body; and that it should be cured immediately, without the use of any means; and by this miracle Moses, and the Israelites, might be instructed and confirmed in the power of God, that that he could so suddenly inflict such a disease, and so easily cure it, was able to deliver them out of captivity, which was as death; and that however unfit Moses might be in himself to be a deliverer of the people, signified by his weak and leprous hand, yet being quickened and strengthened by the Lord, would be able to answer to the character; though after all, the deliverance must be imputed not to his hand and power, but to the mighty hand and power of God.

ver. 8. And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe thee, &c.] Will not give credit to the commission he had from God, but question the truth of it: neither hearken to the voice of the first sign; which miracle wrought, spoke plain enough, that he that wrought it, or for whose sake it was wrought, must be one come from God, or such a miracle would never be wrought by him or for him; but should any of the Israelites be still incredulous, it is supposed, that they will believe the voice of the latter sign; which had a voice in it commanding belief, that he was a messenger of God; the first sign respects his rod, the other his hand.

ver. 9. And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe also these two signs, &c.] Performed before their eyes; for these were done over again when Moses came into Egypt to the Israelites, and yet some of them might still remain unbelievers to his commission, and so to the voice of these signs, which loudly called for their faith: neither hearken unto thy voice; affirming he came from God, and was sent to be the deliverer of them: that thou shalt take of the water of the river; of the river Nile, when he should come into Egypt; wherefore Josephus [q] is mistaken when he intimates that this was done at the same time with the other signs; and was water he took near at hand and poured on the ground: but Philo [r] truly refers this to Egypt, where it was done, as it ought to be: and pour it upon the dry land, and the water which thou takest out of the river shall become blood upon the dry land; by which it would appear how easily the Lord could destroy the land of Egypt, and make it a barren land, whose fertility was owing to the overflow of the river Nile as a means; and this would be a specimen also of what he would do hereafter, in turning the waters of the river into blood, thereby avenging the blood of innocent babes drowned there by the Egyptians.

ver. 10. And Moses said unto the Lord, &c.] Notwithstanding the above miracles, he seems unwilling to go on the Lord's errand to Pharaoh and to the Israelites, and therefore invents a new objection after all his other objections had been sufficiently answered: I am not eloquent; or a man of words [s], that has words at command, that can speak well, rea-readily, and gracefully; ſuch an one, he intimates was proper to be ſent to a king's court, that was an orator, that could make fine ſpeeches, and handſome addreſſes, for which he was not qualified: neither heretofore, nor ſince thou haſt ſpoken to thy ſervant; neither in his younger years, had he ever been an eloquent man, nor was there any alteration in him in that reſpect, ſince God had given him this call: but I am ſlow of ſpeech, and of a ſlow tongue; had ſome impediment in his ſpeech, could not freely and eaſily bring out his words, or rightly pronounce them; ſo Lucian [t] the heathen calls Moſes ſlow-tongued, or one ſlow of ſpeech, and uſes the ſame word the Septuagint does here, which verſion perhaps he had ſeen, and from thence took it.

[j] Pirke Eliezer, c. 40. [k] De vita Mosis, l. 1. 614. [l] Ibid. [m] Apud Joseph contr. Apion. l. 1. c. 26. [n] Apud Ib. c. 34. [o] Justin e Trogo, l. 36. c. 2. [p] Hist. l. 5. c. 3. [q] Antiq. l. 2. c. 12 §. 3. [r] De vita Mosis, l. 1. p. 614. [s] איש דברים vir verborum, Pagninus, Montanus, Piscator, Ainsworth.

℣. 11. And the Lord ſaid unto him, who hath made man's mouth? &c.] Made that itſelf, and put in it the power and faculty of ſpeech, even into the mouth of the firſt man, Adam, as the Targum of Jonathan; and ſo of every other man, did not the Lord do it? none elſe could, and therefore he that made it, and made it capable of ſpeaking, could remove any impediments in it, and cauſe it to ſpeak freely and fluently: or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the ſeeing, or the blind? have not I the Lord? as all the ſenſes, and the perfection of them are from him, ſo all the imperfections in them are according to his good pleaſure; what he ſuffers to be, and can remedy when he thinks fit: it is he that gives the ſeeing eye and hearing ear, can and does make blind and deaf, that gives alſo the ſpeaking mouth, and makes that dumb, and can open it again as he pleaſes! and what is it that he cannot do?

℣. 12. Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth, &c.] And put words into it, and cauſe it to ſpeak readily and powerfully; and ſo it appears that he was, mighty in words, as well as in deeds, Acts vii. 22: and teach thee what thou ſhalt ſay; to Pharaoh, to the Iſraelites, and to Aaron, that was to ſpeak for him, as is hereafter obſerved.

℣. 13. And he ſaid, O my Lord, &c.] Acknowledging his dominion, his ſovereignty, his power to do the above things; or on me, O Lord [u], be the blame for making ſuch objections; or on me let this work be devolved, ſince it is thy pleaſure: ſend, I pray thee, by the hand of him whom thou wilt ſend. Many of the ancient chriſtian fathers underſtand it of the Meſſiah that was to be ſent, and as if Moſes thought this was a fit time for the ſending of him; and ſo Cocceius is of opinion, that nothing better can be underſtood, than that Moſes deſired that God would rather ſend him, whom Iſrael expected to be ſent, even the angel that ſhould go before them; of whoſe miſſion ſee ch. xxiii. 20. but no particular perſon is intended, unleſs himſelf; and the common interpretation is, that God would ſend a more fit and proper perſon than he was; and that he would rather ſend any one but him, and intreats to be excuſed; but I ſee not why this may not be underſtood of Moſes aſſenting to his miſſion, and acquieſcing in the will of God; as if he ſhould ſay, ſince it muſt be ſo, the will of the Lord be done, let him ſend by whom he will, and ſince it is his pleaſure to ſend by me, I ſubmit; what may ſeem to contradict this is, the Lord's anger and reſentment expreſſed in the following words; but that might be notwithſtanding, ſince Moſes had been ſo backward and reluctant, and made ſo many objections before he conſented.

℣. 14. And the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Moſes, &c.] For the objections, excuſes and delays he made with reſpect to his miſſion. In what way this anger was expreſſed, is not eaſy to ſay, whether by not removing the impediment of his ſpeech, or not giving him the prieſthood, which Jarchi thinks he otherwiſe would have had, and Aaron been only a Levite, as he is called in the next clauſe; or whether it was by joining Aaron to him, and ſo leſſening his honour in this embaſſy, though that ſeems to be done to incourage him; or by not ſuffering him to lead the children of Iſrael into the land of Canaan, which yet is aſcribed to another cauſe. However, though the Lord was angry with Moſes, yet without any change of affection to him, he ſtill retained and expreſſed a great regard to him; did not reject him from his ſervice as he might have done, but employed him, and preferred him to his elder brother. Moſes ſhews himſelf to be a faithful hiſtorian in recording his own weakneſſes, and the diſpleaſure of God at them: and he ſaid, is not Aaron the Levite thy brother? he was, and his elder brother, he was born three years before him, ch. vii. 7. though Juſtin [w], an heathen writer, ſays, he was his ſon, and calls his name Aruas, and ſpeaks of him as an Egyptian prieſt, and that he was made king after Moſes's death; hence, he ſays, was the cuſtom with the Jews for the ſame perſons to be kings and prieſts; in all which he is miſtaken. But Artapanus [x], another heathen writer, calls him the brother of Moſes, and by his right name Aaron; and ſays it was by his advice Moſes fled into Arabia, and ſpeaks of his meeting him afterwards, when he was ſent to the king of Egypt. Aaron is called the Levite, becauſe he was a deſcendant of Levi, and yet ſo was Moſes; perhaps this is added here, to diſtinguiſh him from others of the ſame name in other families, as Aben Ezra thinks; for as for what Jarchi ſuggeſts, as before, is without any foundation; and it is much more likely, that Moſes added this title to him in his account of this affair, becauſe he was the firſt of the tribe of Levi that was employed in the prieſtly office: I know that he can ſpeak well; or in ſpeaking ſpeak [y], ſpeak very freely, fluently, in an eloquent manner; in which he was an eminent type of Chriſt, who is our advocate with the father, and has the tongue of the learned to ſpeak a word in ſeaſon; and does ſpeak and plead for the converſion of his people, for the comfort of them, for the diſcoveries of pardoning grace and mercy to them; and for the carrying on the work of grace in them, and their perſeverance to the end, and for their eternal glorification. The 17th chapter of John is a ſpecimen of this: and alſo behold, he cometh forth to meet thee; having had an intimation from God of Moſes's call to come into Egypt, and deliver his people from their bondage, he immediately ſet out to meet him, whereby he ſhewed more faith, zeal and courage than Moſes did; and this is ſaid to animate him, and was a new ſign, and would be a freſh confirmation of his faith, when he ſhould ſee it accompliſhed, as he did: and when he ſeeth thee, he will be glad in his heart; ſincerely glad, and not only ſecretly ſo, but would expreſs his cordial joy with his lips; not only becauſe of his having a ſight of his brother once more, whom he had not ſeen for 40 years paſt paſt, but becauſe of his coming on ſuch an errand from God, to deliver the people of Iſrael; and therefore, as he would expreſs ſuch gladneſs on this occaſion, it became Moſes to engage in this work with the utmoſt pleaſure and chearfulneſs.

[t] In Philopatride. [u] בי אדני in me, Oleaſter. [w] E Trogo, l. 36. c. 2. [x] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 433, 434. [y] דבר ידבר loquendo loquetur, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Druſius.

℣. 15. And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto him, and put words in his mouth, &c.] Or things [z], the matter and ſubſtance of what he ſhould ſay, who being a man of words, an eloquent man, and a good ſpokeſman, would put them into proper language, and expreſs them pertinently: and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye ſhall do; or ſpeak what Moſes ſhould ſay to Aaron, and what Aaron ſhould ſay to Pharaoh, and to the people of Iſrael; ſo that as Aaron was under Moſes, and at his direction, they were both dependant on the Lord, and under his direction; and the one, as well as the other, needed his aſſiſtance, even Aaron that could ſpeak well. Moſes furniſhed him with matter, he put it into words, and both were inſtructed and influenced by the Lord what they ſhould ſay and do.

℣. 16. And he ſhall be thy ſpokeſman unto the people, &c.] And open to them Moſes's commiſſion from God, and the end of his miſſion into Egypt, and to them, and declare what ſigns had been, and would be done, in confirmation of it: and he ſhall be, even he ſhall be to thee inſtead of a mouth; or an interpreter, as all the Targums explain it, and ſo Jarchi; as he was an orator and maſter of language, he ſhould ſpeak to the people for Moſes, and explain his ſenſe and meaning, and put it into plain, proper, eaſy language, to be underſtood by the people; and this may be done where a different language is not ſpoken, but the ſame in plainer words, in more pertinent expreſſions, and better pronounced, and this is repeated for the certainty of it: and thou ſhalt be to him inſtead of God; Aaron was to ſtand between Moſes and the people, and ſpeak for him; and Moſes was to ſtand between God and Aaron, and in God's ſtead, and tell him what orders he had received from him, and which he ſhould communicate; and ſo ſome Jewiſh writers [a] interpret it of his being to him inſtead of a maſter or teacher, one that received doctrine from the Lord, and inſtructed him in it, and taught him the mind and will of God: or as Onkelos paraphraſes it, for a prince, and ſo Jarchi, a civil magiſtrate, one that had the power of life and death; the adminiſtration of civil affairs belonged to Moſes, and Aaron, though the elder brother, was ſubject to him; and in this ſenſe Moſes was a god to him; and ſo in after-times, the judges of Iſrael, they that ſat in Moſes's chair, were called gods, Pſ. lxxxii. 1, 6.

℣. 17. And thou ſhalt take this rod in thine hand, &c.] Which he then had in his hand, and was no other than his ſhepherd's ſtaff: wherewith thou ſhalt do ſigns; wondrous things, meaning the ten plagues inflicted on Egypt.

℣. 18. And Moſes went and returned to Jethro his father-in-law, &c.] With his flock of ſheep he kept, ch. iii. 1: and ſaid unto him, let me go, I pray thee, and return to my brethren which are in Egypt; the Iſraelites, who were ſo by nation and religion; as Jethro had been kind and beneficent to him, he did not chuſe to leave him without his knowledge and conſent, and eſpecially to take away his wife and children without it: and ſee whether they be yet alive; it ſeems by this, that Moſes had heard nothing of them during the 40 years he lived in Midian, which may be thought ſtrange, ſince it was not very far from Egypt; and beſides the Midianites traded in Egypt, as we learn from Gen. xxxvii. 28, 36. but this muſt be aſcribed to the providence of God, that ſo ordered it, that there ſhould be no intercourſe between him and his brethren, that ſo no ſtep might be taken by them for their deliverance, until the ſet time was come. Moſes did not acquaint his father-in-law with the principal reaſon of his requeſt, nor of his chief end in going into Egypt, which it might not be proper to acquaint him with, he being of another nation, though a good man; and leſt he ſhould uſe any arguments to diſſuade Moſes from going, who now having got clear of his diffidence and diſtruſt, was determined upon it: though ſome aſcribe this to his modeſty in not telling Jethro of the glorious and wonderful appearance of God to him, and of the honour he had conferred on him to be the deliverer and governor of the people of Iſrael: and Jethro ſaid to Moſes, go in peace; he judged his requeſt reaſonable, and gave his full conſent to it, and wiſhed him health and proſperity in his journey.

℣. 19. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes in Midian, &c.] After he had obtained leave of his father-in-law to quit Midian, but before he left it: go, return into Egypt; that is, directly, immediately; before he had only given him a commiſſion at large to go thither, but had not fixed the time when he ſhould go; but now he orders him to ſet forward at once: for all the men are dead which ſought thy life; to take it away, the king of Egypt, and his miniſters, and the friends of the Egyptian, Moſes had ſlain; and this is ſaid to encourage him to go; and though Moſes had never expreſſed his fear on this account, or made it an objection, yet it might lie ſecretly in his heart, and be one reaſon of his backwardneſs to go into Egypt, and which was now removed.

℣. 20. And Moſes took his wife, and his ſons, &c.] Gerſhom and Eliezer; by which it appears, that he intended to ſtay in Egypt, and that he believed that God would work deliverance by him: and ſet them upon an aſs; which though with us a mean creature, yet in thoſe times and countries were rode upon by great perſonages; and theſe, as Aben Ezra ſays, were reckoned in Egypt more honourable than mules. It may be the ſingular is put for the plural, and that each of them was ſet upon an aſs, with ſervants to take care of them: and he returned to the land of Egypt; that is, he ſet forward to go thither; for before he got thither, various things are related which befel him: and Moſes took the rod of God in his hand; his ſhepherd's ſtaff, ſo called, becauſe God ordered him to take it; and beſides, he had wrought ſigns and wonders by it already, and would do many more.

℣. 21. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] At the ſame time he appeared to him in Midian, and ordered him to go into Egypt, even before his departure thither: when thou goeſt to return into Egypt; and when got thither; for before the thing directed to in the next clauſe could not be done: ſee that thou do all theſe wonders before Pharaoh, which I have put in thine hand; not the three ſigns or wonders, related in the preceding part of the chapter, for they were to be done not before Pharaoh, but before the children of Iſrael; but theſe are the wonders he was to do in the ſight of Pharaoh, by inflicting the various plagues on him and his people, for refuſing to let Iſrael go, and which God had put in the power of Moſes to perform, and that that by means of the rod in his hand, he ordered him to take with him, ℣. 17: but I will harden his heart, that he ſhall not let the people go; that is, not directly, not for ſome time, not until all the wonders are wrought, and plagues inflicted to bring him to it: he firſt hardening his own heart againſt God, and all remonſtrances made unto him, it was but a righteous thing in God to give him up to the hardneſs of his heart, to deny him his grace, which only could ſoften it, and to leave him to the corruptions of his nature, and the temptations of ſatan; and by leaving him to ſtrong deluſions, to believe the lying miracles of his magicians: this the Lord thought fit to acquaint Moſes with, leſt he ſhould be diſcouraged by his refuſal to diſmiſs Iſrael.

[z] את הדברים.

[a] Targum Jon. Jeruſ. & Abendana in loc.

℣. 22. And thou ſhalt ſay unto Pharaoh, &c.] When arrived in Egypt, and in his preſence: thus ſaith the Lord; he was to declare to him, that he came in his name, and by his orders, and as an ambaſſador of his, required the diſmiſſion of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt: Iſrael is my ſon, even my firſt-born; as dear to him as a man's firſt-born is, or as is his only ſon: adoption is one of the privileges peculiar to Iſrael after the fleſh, even national adoption, with all the external privileges appertaining to it, Rom. ix. 4, 5.

℣. 23. And I ſay unto thee, let my ſon go, that he may ſerve me, &c.] Worſhip God according to his will in the place he had deſigned for him, and where he might be ſafe and free; and which ſervice was due from him as a ſon, and to be performed not in a ſervile way, but in a filial manner, and therefore as a ſervant, he could demand his diſmiſſion, and much more as his ſon; and this is required in an authoritative way, for ſaying is here commanding, inſiſting on it as a point of right to be done: and if thou refuſe to let him go, behold, I will ſlay thy ſon, even thy firſt-born; meaning, not only in a ſtrict and literal ſenſe Pharaoh's firſt-born ſon, and heir to his crown, but the firſt-born of all his ſubjects, which in a civil ſenſe were his. This was not to be ſaid to Pharaoh at the firſt opening of his commiſſion to him, but after all methods had been tried, and the ſeveral other plagues deſigned were inflicted on him to no purpoſe, he was to be told this, which was the laſt plague, and ſucceeded; but this is told to Moſes beforehand, that when other meſſages he ſhould be ſent with to him, and all that ſhould be done by him would prove ineffectual; this when ſent with and performed, would have the deſired effect.

℣. 24. And it came to paſs by the way in the inn, &c.] As Moſes and his family were travelling in their way to Egypt, at an inn where they ſtopped for the refreſhment of themſelves and cattle, or in order to lodge all night: ſo it was, that the Lord met him, and ſought to kill him; not the uncircumciſed ſon of Moſes, as ſome think, but Moſes himſelf, who had neglected the circumciſion of his ſon; that from the context, and the fact of Zipporah, after related, ſeems to be the reaſon of the divine diſpleaſure, and not his bringing his family with him, ſuppoſed to be an hindrance of him in his work, nor of his ſtaying too long at the inn, and not haſtening his journey, which are the reaſons given by ſome: and Moſes's neglect of circumciſion was not owing to the diſuſe of it among the Midianites, who being the deſcendants of Abraham, it is highly probable they retained this rite, and that it was uſed in Jethro's family, ſince Zipporah well underſtood the nature of it, and how to perform it; and it looks as if her eldeſt ſon had been circumciſed before, ſeeing only one was now circumciſed by her; but the Midianites perhaps followed the ſame practice as the Iſhmaelites did, who were their neighbours, and the deſcendants of Abraham alſo, who deferred it till their children were 13 years of age; or if this child was a very young one, it might have been put off, becauſe of the journey they were juſt about to take, and purpoſing to do it when come into Egypt; but this was reſented by the Lord in Moſes, who had ſuch knowledge of the law of God; and this diſpleaſure of Jehovah might be ſignified either by inflicting ſome diſeaſe upon him, as Aben Ezra and Kimchi think, which threatened him with death, or by appearing in a terrible manner, as the angel of the Lord did to Balaam, with a drawn ſword in his hand.

℣. 25. Then Zipporah took a ſharp ſtone, and cut off the foreſkin of her ſon, &c.] Perceiving that it was the neglect of circumciſing her ſon was the cauſe of the divine diſpleaſure againſt her huſband; and he being either ſo ill through the diſeaſe upon him, or ſo terrified with the appearance of the Lord to him, in the manner it was, that he could not perform this rite himſelf, ſhe undertook it; and, according to the Jewiſh canons [b], a woman may circumciſe; and having with her no inſtrument more proper to do it with, took a ſharp ſtone, very probably a flint, of which there was great plenty in Arabia Petræa, where ſhe was, and did it; and ſo the Jewiſh writers ſay [c], they circumciſe with a flint ſtone, with glaſs, or any thing that will cut; and ſuch like actions have been performed with ſharp ſtones among the heathens [d]: and caſt it at his feet; not at the feet of the infant, Eliezer, as R. Samuel in Aben Ezra; the blood of the circumciſion running down to his feet, as Lyra interprets it; and ſo touched his feet [e], as ſome render the words; not caſt at the feet of the deſtroying angel, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem, in order to pacify him; but at the feet of Moſes, as the Jeruſalem Talmud [f]; and ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra: and ſaid, ſurely a bloody huſband art thou to me; thoſe who think it was at the feet of the child the foreſkin was caſt, take theſe words to be ſpoken of that, and obſerve that it is uſual for women at the circumciſion of a child, to call it a bridegroom or huſband, becauſe it is then eſpouſed unto, and reckoned among the people of God; but this is not well ſupported; it is a cuſtom of too late a date to give any countenance to ſuch a ſenſe of the words, which ſeem plain enough to be ſpoken to and of Moſes; but not in an angry upbraiding way, as if he was a bloody cruel man to oblige her to do ſuch an action, but rather in a gratulatory way, as being thankful and rejoicing, that by this means through the blood of the circumciſion, ſhe had ſaved her huſband's life; and as it were in that way had bought him, and afreſh eſpouſed him to herſelf as her huſband; or otherwiſe it would have been all over with him, but now to her great joy he was delivered from the threatened deſtruction, and reſtored to her; and ſo the Targums of Jonathan

[b] Maimon. Hilchot Milah, c. 2. §. 1. Shulchan Aruch, par. 2. Yore Dea, Hilchot Milah, c. 264. §. 1. [c] Maimon. Ib. Shulchan Ib. §. 2.

[d] Mollia qui rupta ſecuit genitalia teſta. Juvenal. Satyr. 6.
Devolvit ipſe acuto ſibi pondera ſilice. Catullus.

[e] יהנע לרגליו tetigitque pedes ejus, V. L. [f] T. Hieroſ. Nedarim, fol. 38. 2.

than and Jeruſalem paraphraſe the next verſe, "then "Zipporah gave praiſe, and ſaid, how amiable is "the blood of circumciſion, which hath delivered "my huſband from the hand of the deſtroying "angel."

℣. 26. So he let him go, &c.] That is, the Lord let Moſes go; ſuffered him to go on his journey without any farther interruption; as the Targums, it, the angel ceaſed from him, or left him; or the diſeaſe and trembling departed from him, as Aben Ezra, and he was quite well and eaſy; though Grotius, after Lyra, underſtands it of Zipporah, ſhe departed from him, that is, from Moſes, and returned to Midian again, as it ſeems ſhe did; but this the grammatical conſtruction of the words will not bear, being maſculine, though ſometimes the maſculine is uſed of women, as in ch. i. 21: then ſhe ſaid, a bloody huſband thou art becauſe of the circumciſion; this is repeated, partly to give the reaſon of her calling him a bloody huſband, becauſe of the circumciſion, and partly becauſe of her great joy on occaſion of her huſband's reſtoration to her by this means.

℣. 27. And the Lord ſaid unto Aaron, &c.] He appeared to him in a dream or viſion, and to this reference is had in 1 Sam. ii. 27: go into the wilderneſs to meet Moſes; in the wilderneſs of Arabia, thro' which Moſes was to paſs into Egypt, and who was now ſet out on his journey thitherward: and he went; immediately, being obedient to the heavenly viſion: and met him in the mount of God; in Horeb, where the Lord had appeared to Moſes, and therefore called the mount of God, and where afterwards the law was given, and the covenant made with the people of Iſrael; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, "in the mount on which "the glory of God was revealed:" and kiſſed him; as relations and intimate friends uſed to do at meeting or parting, to teſtify affection and reſpect; and Aaron muſt on all accounts be glad to meet Moſes, both as he was his brother, whom he had not ſeen for many years, and as he was come to be a deliverer of the people of Iſrael. And it is obſerved, that it was but two days journey from the land of Midian, where Jethro lived, from whence Moſes ſet out; and that a common traveller cannot conveniently make the journey from Rameſſes, or grand Cairo (from whence it may be ſuppoſed Aaron ſet out) to mount Horeb, in leſs than a fortnight, though he be carried on the back of a camel [g]; and yet Aaron reached this place by the time that Moſes did, which ſhows that either he delayed ſetting out on his journey, or was detained long at the inn on the road, on account of what happened there.

℣. 28. And Moſes told Aaron all the words of the Lord, who had ſent him, &c.] He declared his miſſion and commiſſion from God, and gave him the particulars of what was to be ſaid both to the people of Iſrael, and to the king of Egypt; and this he did, becauſe Aaron was to be his ſpokeſman unto them: and all the ſigns which he had commanded him; to do, firſt before the children of Iſrael, and then before Pharaoh; before the one to obtain credit of them, as being ſent of God, and before the other to get leave of him for the departure of Iſrael out of Egypt.

℣. 29. And Moſes and Aaron went, &c.] Set forward for Egypt: and being come thither gathered together all the elders of the children of Iſrael; the heads of tribes and families, as many as they could conveniently get together in one place; probably in the metropolis of the kingdom, where Pharaoh's palace was, ſince we quickly hear of their going in to him.

℣. 30. And Aaron ſpake all the words which the Lord had ſpoken unto Moſes, &c.] As Moſes had related to him, being his mouth and ſpokeſman: and did the ſigns in the ſight of the people; not Aaron but Moſes, and theſe were the turning of his rod into a ſerpent, and the ſerpent into a rod again; putting his hand into and out of his boſom, when it was leprous, and then doing the ſame, when it was well again; and taking water out of the river, and changing it into blood, which he did for the confirmation of his miſſion.

℣. 31. And the people believed, &c.] That Moſes was ſent of God, and would be the deliverer of them: and when they heard that the Lord had viſited the children of Iſrael; in a way of grace and mercy, by raiſing ſuch a redeemer and deliverer in the midſt of them: and that he had looked upon their affliction; with an eye of pity and compaſſion: then they bowed their heads, and worſhipped; adoring the goodneſs of God, and expreſſing their thankfulneſs for the notice he took of them, and ſignifying their readineſs to obey all inſtructions and directions that ſhould be given them.

CHAP. V.

MOSES and Aaron go in to Pharaoh, and deſire leave for the children of Iſrael to go into the wilderneſs three days journey, to ſacrifice to the Lord, and are anſwered in a very churliſh and atheiſtical manner, and are charged with making the people idle, the conſequence of which was the taſk-maſters had orders to make their work more heavy and toilſome, ℣. 1—9. which orders were executed with ſeverity by them, ℣. 10—13. upon which the officers of the children of Iſrael complain to Pharaoh, but to no purpoſe, ℣. 14—19. and meeting with Moſes and Aaron, lay the blame upon them, ℣. 20, 21. which ſends Moſes to the Lord to expoſtulate with him about it, ℣. 22, 23.

℣. 1. And afterward Moſes and Aaron went in, and told Pharaoh, &c.] Whoſe name, ſome ſay, was Cenchres, others Amenophis, according to Manetho and Chæremon [h]; ſee the note on ch. iii. 10. went into Pharaoh's palace, and being introduced by the proper officer at court for that purpoſe, addreſſed him in the following manner: thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael; as ambaſſadors of him, who is King of kings, and Lord of lords; and ſo Artapanus [i], the heathen, ſays, that the Egyptian king hearing that Moſes was come, ſent for him to know wherefore he was come, who told him, that the Lord of the world commanded him to let the Jews go, as it follows here: let my people go, that they may hold a feaſt unto me in the wilderneſs; in the wilderneſs of Sinai or Arabia, at Horeb there, where they might keep it more freely and ſafely, without being diſturbed by the Egyptians, and without giving any offence to them; and [g] Clayton's Chronology of the Hebrew Bible, p. 221.

[i] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 434.
[h] Apud Joſeph. cont. Apion. l. 1. c. 26. 32.

and the demand is juſt; they were the people of God, and therefore he claims them, and ſervice from them was due to him; and Pharaoh had no right to detain them, and what is required was but their reaſonable ſervice, they owed to their God. This feaſt was to be held, not for themſelves, but to God, which chiefly conſiſted in offering ſacrifice, as is after explained; the entire diſmiſſion of them is not at once demanded, only to go a little while into the wilderneſs, and keep a feaſt there to the Lord; tho' it was not intended they ſhould return, but it was put in this form to try Pharaoh, and that he might be the more inexcuſable in refuſing to grant what was ſo reaſonable.

℣. 2. And Pharaoh ſaid, Who is the Lord, &c.] Jehovah they made mention of, which, whether he took it for the name of a deity, or of a king, whoſe ambaſſadors they declared themſelves to be, was a name he had never heard of before; and this being expreſſed and pronounced, ſhews that this name is not ineffable, or unlawful to be pronounced, as ſay the Jews: that I ſhould obey his voice, to let Iſrael go? he knew of no ſuperior monarch to him, whoſe orders he was obliged to obey in any reſpect, and particularly in this, the diſmiſſion of the people of Iſrael out of his land, tho' it was but for a ſhort time: I know not the Lord; who this Jehovah is, that made this demand, and required Iſrael's diſmiſſion. The Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, "I have not found the name of Jehovah writ-"ten in the book of angels, I am not afraid of "him." An Egyptian book, in which, the paraphraſt ſuppoſes, were written the names of gods and of angels; and no ſuch name being there, he was the more bold and inſolent: neither will I let Iſrael go; determining he would pay no regard to ſuch an unknown deity, or king, be he who he would.

℣. 3. And they ſaid, the God of the Hebrews hath met with us, &c.] Perceiving that the name Jehovah was unknown to him, and treated by him in a ſcornful manner, they leave it out, and only ſay, the God of the Hebrews; a people that dwelt in his country, and he well knew by this name, and could not be ignorant that their God was different from his; and it was he that had met Moſes and Aaron; they did not ſeek to him to be ſent on this errand, but he appeared to them as he did to Moſes at Horeb, and to Aaron in Egypt. Some render it, the God of the Hebrews is called upon us[f]; his name was called upon them, or they were called by his name; they were his ſervants and worſhippers, and therefore under obligation to attend to what he enjoined them: let us go, we pray thee, three days journey into the deſert; a requeſt which was made in a very humble and modeſt manner, and not at all extravagant, nor any thing dangerous and diſadvantageous to him; for now they ſpeak as of themſelves, and therefore humbly intreat him; they don't aſk to be wholly and for ever ſet free, only to go for 3 days; they don't propoſe to meet and have their rendezvous in any part of his country, much leſs in his metropolis, where he might fear they would riſe in a body, and ſeize upon his perſon and treaſure, only to go into the wilderneſs, to mount Sinai there. And hence it appears, that the diſtance between Egypt and mount Sinai was 3 days journey, to go the ſtraighteſt way, as Aben Ezra obſerves: and ſacrifice unto the Lord our God; which is what was meant by keeping a feaſt; ſome ſacrifices the people, as well as the prieſts, feaſted on; this was not a civil, but a religious concern: leſt he fall upon us with peſtilence, or with the ſword; this they urge as a reaſon to have their requeſt granted, taken from the danger they ſhould be expoſed unto, ſhould they not be allowed to go and offer ſacrifice to God; tho' by this they might ſuggeſt both loſs and danger to Pharaoh, in order to ſtir him up the more to liſten to their requeſt; for ſhould they be ſmitten with peſtilence, or the ſword, he would loſe the benefit of their bond ſervice, which would be a conſiderable ſink in his revenues; and beſides, if God would be ſo diſpleaſed with the Iſraelites for not going, and not ſacrificing, when they were detained, how much more diſpleaſed would he be with Pharaoh and the Egyptians for hindering them?

℣. 4. And the King of Egypt ſaid to them, &c.] For he was not ſtruck dumb, as Artapanus [g], a fore-cited writer ſays: wherefore do ye Moſes and Aaron lett the people from their works? as they did when they gathered them together, and wrought ſigns before them; which Pharaoh it ſeems had heard of, and had got their names very readily: get you unto your burdens; meaning not Moſes and Aaron, ordering them to go about their private and family-buſineſs, but the people they repreſented, and on whoſe account they came; and it is highly probable, the elders of the people, at leaſt ſome of them, were with them, to whom theſe words might be more particularly directed. See ch. iii. 18.

℣. 5. And Pharaoh ſaid, behold, the people of the land now are many, &c.] So that if ſome were taken off, as ſuggeſted, there were enough of them to do buſineſs, and ſo he cared not; but if allowed to go, they might mutiny and rebel, and give a great deal of trouble to quell them; or it may be, the ſenſe is, they were very numerous, and too numerous already, and if they were took off of their work, and allowed to go a feaſting, they would be more ſo, which agrees with the next clauſe: and you make them reſt from their burdens; which was the way to make them more numerous ſtill, and to fruſtrate the deſign of laying burdens upon them, which was originally intended to hinder the multiplication of them, ch. i. 9—14.

℣. 6. And Pharaoh commanded the ſame day the taſk-maſters of the people, &c.] Who were Egyptians, and whom Pharaoh ſent for the ſame day, to give them orders to oppreſs them yet more and more, ſo far was he from complying with their requeſt: and their officers; who were Iſraelites, and were under the taſk-maſters, and accountable to them for each man's work that they had the inſpection and care of: ſaying, as follows.

℣. 7. Ye ſhall no more give the people ſtraw to make brick, &c.] Whether this was given and uſed to mix with the clay, as is done in ſome places [h], that the bricks made thereof might be firmer and ſtronger, or to burn them with in the furnaces, or to cover them from the heat of the ſun, that they might not dry too ſoon and crack, is not eaſy to determine; tho' it is ſaid that the unburnt bricks of Egypt formerly were, and ſtill are made of clay mixed with ſtraw. The Egyptian pyramid of unburnt brick, Dr. Pococke[i] obſerves, ſeems to be made of the the earth brought by the Nile, being of a ſandy black earth, with ſome pebbles and ſhells in it; it is mixed up with chopped ſtraw, in order to bind the clay together, as they now make unburnt bricks in Egypt, and many other Eaſtern parts, which they uſe very much in their buildings. He ſays, he found ſome of theſe bricks (of the pyramid)

[f] נקרא עלינו eſt invocatus ſuper nos, Montanus. So ſome in Vatablus, Druſius. [g] Ut ſupra. [h] Vide Vitruvium de Architectura, l. 2. c. 3. p. 46. & Philander in ib. [i] Obſervations on Egypt, p. 53.

13 inches and a half long, 6 inches and a half broad, and 4 inches thick; and others 15 inches long, 7 broad, and 4 inches 3 quarters thick. But be the ſtraw for what uſe it will, it had been dealt out to them by proper perſons, to be uſed in one way or another; but now it was forbidden to be given them, as heretofore it had been done: let them go and gather ſtraw for themſelves; out of the fields where it lay, after the corn had been reaped and gathered in, or in barns, where it had been threſhed; to do which muſt take up a good deal of their time, and eſpecially if the ſtraw lay at any diſtance, or was hard to be come at.

℣. 8. And the tale of the bricks which they did make heretofore, you ſhall lay upon them, &c.] Oblige them to make and bring in the ſame number of bricks they uſed to do, when ſtraw was brought to them and given them; by which it appears, that their daily taſk was ſuch a number of bricks: you ſhall not diminiſh ought thereof; not make any abatement of the number of bricks, in conſideration of their loſs of time and their labour in going to fetch ſtraw from other places: for they be idle; and want to be indulged in a lazy diſpoſition, which ought by no means to be connived at: therefore they cry, let us go and ſacrifice to our God; ſuggeſting, that this requeſt and cry of theirs did not proceed from a religious principle, or the great veneration they had for their God, but from the ſloth and idleneſs they were addicted to.

℣. 9. Let there more work be laid upon the men, &c.] Inſtead of leſſening it, let it be increaſed, or be heavy [k] upon 'em, that it may oppreſs and afflict them and keep them down, and weaken their ſtrength and their ſpirits, and diminiſh them: that they may labour therein; and have no leiſure time to ſpend in idleneſs and ſloth: and let them not regard vain words; or words of falſhood [l] and lies, ſuch as were ſpoken by Moſes and Aaron, promiſing them liberty and deliverance from their bondage, which he was determined never to grant, and ſo eventually make ſuch words to appear to be vain and empty, falſhood and lies.

℣. 10. And the taſk-maſters of the people went out, &c.] From the preſence of Pharaoh, out of his court, to the reſpective places where they were ſet to ſee that the Iſraelites did their work: and their officers; the officers of the Iſraelites, who were under the taſk-maſters, and anſwerable to them for the work of the people, and their tale of bricks: and they ſpake to the people, ſaying, thus ſaith Pharaoh, I will not give you ſtraw; that is, any longer, as he had uſed to do.

℣. 11. Go ye, get ye ſtraw, where you can find it, &c.] Before it was provided by the king, and brought to the brick-kilns, but now they are bid to go and fetch it themſelves, and get it where they could, whether in fields or barns; and if they were obliged to pay for it out of their labour, it was a greater oppreſſion ſtill: yet not ought of your work ſhall be diminiſhed; they were to do the ſame work, and make the ſame number of bricks, as when ſtraw was brought and given them; and no allowance made for waſte of time in ſeeking, or expences in procuring ſtraw, which was very hard upon them.

℣. 12. So the people were ſcattered abroad throughout all the land of Egypt, &c.] That part of it where they dwelt: to gather ſtubble inſtead of ſtraw; ſtraw not being eaſy to come at, they were obliged to gather ſtubble that was left in the fields, after the corn was gathered in. Ben Melech obſerves, that the word ſignifies ſmall ſtraw, or ſmall ſticks of wood, and ſo Kimchi [m], and if ſo, this muſt be to burn the bricks with in the furnaces.

℣. 13. And the taſk-maſters haſted them, &c.] Kept them tight and cloſe to their work, and were urgent on them to make quick diſpatch of it: ſaying, fulfil your works, your daily taſks, as when there was ſtraw; they inſiſted upon it, that they did the ſame buſineſs at the brick-kilns, made the ſame number of bricks every day, as they uſed to do when they had ſtraw at hand. See ℣. 11.

℣. 14. And the officers of the children of Iſrael, which Pharaoh's taſk-maſters had ſet over them, &c.] This makes it clear, not only that the taſk-maſters and officers were different perſons, but that the one were Egyptians appointed by Pharaoh, and the other were Iſraelites, of the better ſort of them, who were ſet over the poorer ſort by the taſk-maſters, to look after them, and take an account of their work, and the tale of their bricks, and give it in to the taſk-maſters; now theſe were beaten by the taſk-maſters, either with a cane, ſtick, or cudgel, or with whips and ſcourges, becauſe there was a deficiency in their accounts, and the full tale of bricks was not given in: and demanded, wherefore have ye not fulfilled your taſk in making brick, both yeſterday and to-day, as heretofore? the firſt day they were deficient they took no notice of it, did not call them to an account for it, but this being the caſe the ſecond day, they not only expoſtulated with them about it, but beat them for it, which was hard uſage. They had no need to aſk them the reaſon of it, which they knew very well, and muſt be ſenſible that the men could not do the ſame work, and be obliged to ſpend part of their time in going about for ſtraw or ſtubble; or the ſame number of men make the ſame tale of bricks, when ſome of them were employed to get ſtraw for the reſt, and to beat thoſe officers for a deficiency thro' ſuch means was cruel.

℣. 15. Then the officers of the children of Iſrael came and cried unto Pharaoh, &c.] Made their complaints to him, perhaps with tears in their eyes, being uſed ſo very ill. They little thought it was by Pharaoh's orders; they ſuppoſed he knew nothing of it, and therefore hoped to have their grievances redreſſed by him, but were miſtaken: ſaying wherefore dealeſt thou thus with thy ſervants? ſo they call themſelves, they living in his country, and being under his juriſdiction, tho' not properly his ſubjects; however, he had made 'em his ſlaves, and ſo indeed even bond-ſervants.

℣. 16. There is no ſtraw given unto thy ſervants, &c.] As uſed to be, which they ſuppoſed Pharaoh knew nothing of, and by which it appears that the order given by Pharaoh, ℣. 6, 7, was not given in the hearing of the officers, only to the taſk-maſters, and by them to be made known to the officers, tho' indeed both are there mentioned, and both repreſent this to the people, ℣. 10. and they ſay to us, make brick, tho' they had no ſtraw to make or burn it with: and behold, thy ſervants are beaten; becauſe the ſame number of bricks is not made as heretofore: but the fault is in thine own people; the taſk-maſters, who ſent the people abroad to get ſtraw or ſtubble themſelves, and therefore could not make the ſame bricks as before; or thy people ſin [n], the guilt is theirs: or by thy people are meant the Iſraelites, whom they call Pharaoh's people to gain

[k] תכבד aggravetur, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. tablus. Verbis falſis, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. cat populus tuus, Montanus, Druſius, Cartwright.

[l] בדברי in verbis mendacii, Pagninus, Montanus, Va-

[m] Sepher Shoraſh, rad. כשש.

[n] וחטאת עתך & pec-

gain favour with him; and then the ſenſe is, either ſin is imputed to thy people [o], the blame is laid upon them, or puniſhment is inflicted on them without cauſe, ſin being often put for puniſhment; they are wrongfully charged with a fault, and wrongfully puniſhed, ℣. 17. But he ſaid, ye are idle, ye are idle, &c.] Inſtead of expreſſing indignation at the taſk-maſters, and relieving the officers and the people, he inſults them in a flouting, ſarcaſtic way, charging them with ſloth and idleneſs; and which, for the certainty of it, or however to ſhew how ſtrongly perſuaded and fully aſſured he was of the truth of it, repeats it, and gives the following as a proof of it, therefore ye ſay, let us go and do ſacrifice to the Lord; ſuggeſting that it was not ſo much the ſervice and honour of God they regarded, as that they might have a leiſure-day from work and labour.

℣. 18. Go therefore now and work, &c.] Go about your buſineſs, attend to your work, even you officers, as well as your people; work yourſelves, as well as ſee that your people do theirs, and don't trouble me with ſuch impertinent applications: for there ſhall no ſtraw be given you, yet ſhall ye deliver the tale of bricks; the uſual number of bricks, as the Vulgate Latin verſion has it; tho' in ℣. 8. it is rendered in that verſion the meaſure of bricks, and ſo another word is tranſlated by them, ℣. 14. and perhaps both may be intended, both number and meaſure; that is, that it was expected and inſiſted on that they delivered the full number of bricks they uſed to make, and theſe of full meaſure; for bricks were made of different meaſures, as Vitruvius [p] obſerves; ſome among the bricks were of 2 hands breadth, others of 4, and a 3d ſort of 5. See the note on ℣. 7.

℣. 19. And the officers of the children of Iſrael did ſee that they were in evil caſe, &c.] In a bad condition and circumſtances, and that there was no likelihood of their getting out of them, ſince Pharaoh treated them after this manner; they ſaw not only that the common people were in a bad condition, in great bondage, miſery, and diſtreſs, to be obliged to get ſtraw to make brick, and carry in their full tale as before; but that they themſelves were in a bad ſituation, ſince for the deficiency in their people they were like to be beaten for it from time to time: After it was ſaid, ye ſhall not miniſh ought from your bricks of your daily taſk; after this had been ſaid and confirmed by Pharaoh, they had no hope of things being better with them, but looked upon their unhappy lot as irretrievable.

℣. 20. And they met Moſes and Aaron, &c.] The officers of the children of Iſrael, who had been with their complaints to Pharaoh: who ſtood in the way as they came forth from Pharaoh; they had placed themſelves in a proper ſituation, that they might meet them when they came out, and know what ſucceſs they had, and which they were extremely deſirous of hearing; by which they might judge in what temper Pharaoh was, and what they might for the future expect from him in conſequence of their embaſſy.

℣. 21. And they ſaid unto them, the Lord look upon you and judge, &c.] Or, will look upon you and judge [q]; and ſo it is either a prediction of what would be done to them, or an imprecation on them that God would take notice of their conduct, and puniſh them, or at leaſt chaſtiſe them for acting the part they had, if not wickedly, yet imprudently: becauſe you have made our ſavour to be abhorred in the eyes of Pharaoh; or to ſtink [r]; they were become vile, abominable, and hateful to him, he could not bear the ſight of them, and treated them as the filth and offſcouring of all things; they had loſt their good name, credit, and reputation with him; for leave being aſked for them to go 3 days journey into the wilderneſs, to offer ſacrifice, and keep a feaſt, they were looked upon as a parcel of idle, ſlothful fellows: and in the eyes of his ſervants; not the taſk-maſters only, but his nobles, counſellors, and courtiers: to put a ſword in their hands to ſlay us; a proverbial expreſſion, ſignifying that they by their conduct had expoſed them to the utmoſt danger, and had given their enemies an occaſion againſt them, and an opportunity of deſtroying their whole nation, under a pretence of diſobedience and diſloyalty.

℣. 22. And Moſes returned unto the Lord, &c.] Biſhop Patrick thinks, that this not only intimates that the Lord had appeared to Moſes ſince he came into Egypt, but that there was ſome ſettled place where he appeared, and where he might reſort to him on all occaſions, and therefore is ſaid to return to him; tho' it may ſignify no more, than that inſtead of ſtaying to give an anſwer to the officers, which he might be at a loſs to do, he went to God, to the throne of grace by prayer, as he was wont to do in caſes of difficulty: and ſaid, Lord, wherefore haſt thou ſo evil intreated this people? or afflicted them, and ſuffered them to be thus afflicted; which to aſcribe to God was right, whatever were the means or inſtruments; for all afflictions are of him, and who has always wiſe reaſons for what he does, as he now had; to try the faith and patience of his people; to make the Egyptians more odious to them, and ſo take them off from following their manners, cuſtoms, rites, and ſuperſtitions, and make them more deſirous of departing from thence to the land of Canaan, nor ſeek a return to Egypt again; and that his vengeance on the Egyptians for ſuch cruelty and inhumanity might appear the more juſt, and his power might be ſeen in the plagues he inflicted on them, and in the deliverance of his people when reduced to the utmoſt extremity: why is it that thou haſt ſent me? he ſeems to wiſh he had never been ſent, and could be glad to be recalled, ſomething of the ſame diſpoſition ſtill remaining in him as when firſt called; ſince no end was anſwered by his miſſion, no deliverance wrought, yea, the people were more afflicted and oppreſſed than before; and therefore he was at a loſs how to account for it that he ſhould be ſent at all, ſeeing nothing came of it to the good of the people.

℣. 23. For ſince I came to Pharaoh to ſpeak in thy name, &c.] Had he come in his own name, it needed not be wondered at if he ſhould not ſucceed, but coming in the name of God, it might have been expected he would, and that Pharaoh would have been prevailed upon or obliged to uſe the people well, and let them go; but inſtead of that, he hath done evil to this people; afflicted and oppreſſed them more than ever: ſee ℣. 7, &c. neither haſt thou delivered thy people at all; there was not the leaſt thing done towards their deliverance, their affliction was not at all mitigated, but increaſed: Moſes expected that God would have made a beginning as ſoon as he had delivered his meſſage to Pharaoh; that his mind would have been diſpoſed in favour of the people, and he would have made their bondage dage lighter and eaſier, if he did not diſmiſs them at once; but inſtead of that, more work was laid upon them, and their burdens were heavier: now this was a ſtumbling and a temptation to Moſes, to wiſh he had never been ſent; but if he had called to mind, which he ſeems to have forgotten, that Pharaoh would not let the people go at firſt, until all the wonders were wrought he had given him power to do, ch. iv. 2. it would have relieved him, and removed his objections, and put a ſtop to his expoſtulation with God, who gives an anſwer to them in the following chapter, without expreſſing any diſpleaſure at them.

[o] So Vatablus, Piſcator, and ſome in Munſter, Pagninus. [p] Ut ſupra. [q] יראה וישפוט videbit & judicabit, Rivet. [r] הבאשתם feciſti fœtere, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Druſius.

CHAP. VI.

THE Lord encourages Moſes to hope for ſucceſs from his name Jehovah, and the covenant he had made with the fathers of his people, ℣. 1—5. orders him to aſſure the children of Iſrael that he would deliver them from their bondage and burdens, and bring them into the land of Canaan; but through their diſtreſs and anguiſh they hearkened not to him, ℣. 6—9. but Moſes is ſent again to Pharaoh to demand the diſmiſſion of Iſrael, to which he ſeems unwilling, and both he and Aaron are charged both to go to the children of Iſrael, and to Pharaoh, ℣. 10—13. next follows a genealogy of the tribes of Reuben, Simeon and Levi, which ſeems to be given for the ſake of Moſes and Aaron, and to ſhew their deſcent, ℣. 14—25. who were the perſons appointed of God to be the inſtruments of bringing the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, ℣. 26—30.

℣. 1. Then the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] In anſwer to the queſtions put to him, and the expoſtulations made with him: now ſhalt thou ſee what I will do to Pharaoh; in inflicting puniſhments on him: for with a ſtrong hand ſhall he let them go; being forced to it by the mighty hand of God upon him; and it is by ſome rendered, becauſe of a ſtrong hand [a]; ſo Jarchi; for this is not to be underſtood of the hand of Pharaoh, but of the hand of God: and with a ſtrong hand ſhall he drive them out of his land; not only be willing that they ſhould go, but be urgent upon them to be gone, ch. xii. 33.

℣. 2. And God ſpake unto Moſes, and ſaid unto him, I am the Lord.] Or Jehovah, the ſelf-exiſtent Being, the Being of beings, the everlaſting I am, the unchangeable Jehovah, true, firm and conſtant to his promiſes, ever to be believed, and always to be depended on.

℣. 3. And I appeared unto Abraham, unto Iſaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God Almighty, &c.] Able to fulfil all his purpoſes, promiſes and covenant, with whom nothing is impoſſible; or El-ſhaddai, God all-ſufficient, who has a ſufficiency of happineſs in himſelf, and every thing to ſupply the wants of his creatures in things temporal and ſpiritual, ſee Gen. xvii. 1: but by my name Jehovah was I not known to them; which he had in the preceding verſe called himſelf by. This is not to be underſtood abſolutely; for it is certain that he had made himſelf known by this name, and this name was known unto Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, Gen. xv. 6, 7, 8. and xxvi. 2, 24. and xxviii. 13. but comparatively, as ſome think; that is, he was not ſo much made known to them by the one name as the other; though it may be queſtioned whether the one was more uſed in ſpeaking to them than the other; wherefore others think, as Saadiah Gaon, that the word only is to be ſupplied, as in Gen. xxxii. 28. and the ſenſe to be, that by his name Jehovah he was not only made known to them, but by his name El-ſhaddai, and others alſo; and others reconcile the difficulty thus, that though the name Jehovah itſelf was known to the patriarchs, by which they were aſſured that God is eternal, immutable and faithful to his promiſes; yet he was not known as to the efficacy of this name, or with reſpect to the actual performance of his promiſe, as he now would be by delivering the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, and bringing them into the land of Canaan; though perhaps by reading the words with an interrogation, the clauſe will appear more plain, and by my name Jehovah was I not known to them? [b] verily I was. Joſephus [u] ſays, this name was not before made known to men, and that it was not lawful for a man to ſpeak it; and this is the common notion of the Jews, that it is ineffable, and not lawful to be pronounced, and therefore they put Adonai and Elohim in the room of it, and the vowel points of theſe words to it, which is a falſe and ſuperſtitious notion: this name was known among the heathens; it is the ſame with Ιαω in the oracle of Apollo [w]; and Diodorus Siculus [x] ſays, that with the Jews Moſes is ſaid to give laws from a God called IAO, and is the ſame which in Philo Byblius [y] is called Jevo; and both are no other than a corruption of Jah or Jehovah; and perhaps the τετραχτυς of the Pythagoreans [z], by which they ſwore, is the ſame with the tetragrammaton, or this word of four letters, with the Jews.

℣. 4. And I have alſo eſtabliſhed my covenant with them, &c.] With Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, and with their poſterity, ſo that it is ſure and firm, and ſhall never be made null and void: to give them the land of Canaan; or to their children, which were as themſelves: the land of their pilgrimage, wherein they were ſtrangers; not being in actual poſſeſſion of any part of it, but lived as pilgrims and ſtrangers in it, as their poſterity now did in another land not theirs; ſee Heb. xi. 9, 13.

℣. 5. And I have alſo heard the groaning of the children of Iſrael, &c.] For the Lord is not only the eternal and immutable being in his purpoſes and promiſes, and a covenant-keeping God; but he is compaſſionate and merciful, and ſympathizes with his people in all their afflictions; he takes notice of their ſighs and groans, as he now did thoſe of his people in Egypt: whom the Egyptians keep in bondage; and which was the reaſon of their groaning; their bondage being ſo hard and rigorous, in which they were detained by Pharaoh, who refuſed to let them go, though Moſes in the name of the Lord had required him to do it: and I have remembred my covenant; concerning bringing

[a] ביד חזקה propter manum validam; ſo ſome in Druſius. [b] Vid. Noldium, N° 788. [u] Antiq. l. 2. c. 12. §. 4. [x] Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 84. [w] Cornelius Labeo de oraculo Apoll. Clarii apud Macrob. Saturnal. l. 1. c. 18. [y] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 1. c. 9. p. 31. [z] Carmin. Aurea Pythagor. l. 47. & Hierocles in Ib. p. 225, 277. Porphyr. de Vita Pythagor. p. 189.

ing them out of Egypt into the land of Canaan, which he would quickly do, and thereby make it appear he was mindful of his covenant, which is indeed never forgotten by him, though it may ſeem to be.

℣. 6. Wherefore ſay unto the children of Iſrael, I am the Lord, &c.] Eternal in his being, immutable in his counſels, faithful to his covenant, and able to fulfil it: and I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians; which lay heavy on them, and made them ſigh and groan: and I will rid you out of their bondage; in which they were kept, and by which their lives were made bitter: and I will redeem you with a ſtretched out arm; with an arm ſtretched out from heaven to earth, as Aben Ezra expreſſes it; even by the exertion of his almighty power, openly and manifeſtly diſplayed in the lighting down of his arm upon the enemies of his people, and in delivering them out of their hands: and with great judgments; upon the Egyptians, by many and ſore plagues and puniſhments inflicted on them.

℣. 7. And I will take you to me for a people, &c.] Out of the hands of the Egyptians, and out of their country, to be in a political ſenſe his kingdom and ſubjects; and in a religious ſenſe a holy people to himſelf, to fear, ſerve, worſhip and glorify him, by walking according to laws and rules given them by him; and this he did by ſetting up and eſtabliſhing a civil and eccleſiaſtical polity among them: and I will be to you a God; their king and their God to rule over them, protect and defend them, they being a theocracy; and their Covenant-God and Father, giving them various ſpiritual privileges, the adoption, the glory, the covenant, the law, ſervice and promiſes: and ye ſhall know that I am the Lord your God; by the promiſes fulfilled, the favours granted, and the deliverances wrought for them: which bringeth you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians; ſee the preceding verſe.

℣. 8. And I will bring you in unto the land, &c.] The land of Canaan: concerning the which I did ſwear; or lift up my hand[a], which was a geſture uſed in ſwearing, Gen. xiv. 22: to give it to Abraham, to Iſaac, and to Jacob; ſee ℣. 4: and I will give it you for an heritage; to be poſſeſſed as an inheritance by them, ſo long as they were obedient to his will, or until the Meſſiah came: I am the Lord; whoſe counſels of old are faithfulneſs and truth; whoſe promiſes are yea and amen; whoſe gifts and calling are without repentance; and who is able alſo to perform whatever he has ſaid he will do.

℣. 9. And Moſes ſpake ſo unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] After this manner, and in the above words, declaring all that the Lord made known to him, and promiſed to do for them; which one would have thought would have revived their ſpirits, and refreſhed and comforted their hearts under their troubles, and encouraged a lively exerciſe of faith and hope of deliverance: but they hearkened not unto Moſes; being diſappointed of deliverance by him, and their afflictions being increaſed, and lying heavy upon them, they were heartleſs and hopeleſs: for anguiſh of ſpirit; trouble of mind and grief of heart, with which they were ſwallowed up; or for ſhortneſs of breath[b], being ſo preſſed that they could hardly breathe, and ſo were uncapable of attending to what was ſpoken to them: and for cruel bondage; under which they laboured, and from which they had ſcarce any reſpite, and ſaw no way of deliverance from it.

℣. 10. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] At another time, and renewed his orders to him to go again to Pharaoh, and require their diſmiſſion: ſaying; as follows, ℣. 11. Go in, &c.] Into Pharaoh's palace, and into his preſence, to whom acceſs ſeems not to be very difficult; and perhaps acceſs to princes was not attended with ſo much ceremony then, as it now is: ſpeak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt; though a king, and a king of ſo large a country as Egypt, yet don't be afraid to ſpeak to him; ſpeak to him plainly and boldly, not in a ſupplicatory, but in an authoritative way, in the name of the King of kings: that he let the children of Iſrael go out of his land; this demand had been made before, but was rejected with an haughty air, and now it is repeated, before the Lord proceeds to puniſh him for his diſobedience, that his judgments upon him might appear more manifeſtly to be juſt and right.

℣. 12. And Moſes ſpake before the Lord, &c.] Who appeared in a viſible form, and had ſpoke to him with an articulate voice, and before whom Moſes ſtood, and made the following reply: ſaying, behold, the children of Iſrael have not hearkened unto me; even though he brought a comfortable meſſage to them from the Lord, and delivered many gracious promiſes of his to them, aſſuring them of deliverance out of Egypt, and of their poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan: how then ſhall Pharaoh hear me; making a demand upon him to part with a people, from whoſe labour he receives ſo much advantage, and has ſuch an addition to his revenues, and who is a mighty king, and haughty monarch. And this is further enforced from his own weakneſs and unfitneſs to ſpeak to Pharaoh: who am of uncircumciſed lips? had an impediment in his ſpeech, could not ſpeak freely and readily, but with difficulty; perhaps ſtammered, and ſo uttered ſuperfluous ſyllables, repeated them before he could fully pronounce what he aimed at; or in other words, he was not eloquent, which was his old objection, and had been fully anſwered before; and by this it appears, that there was no alteration in the ſpeech of Moſes, ſince God ſpoke with him at mount Horeb. Some think Moſes expected to have had this impediment removed, and tacitly hints at it here, not being ſo well ſatisfied with Aaron's being joined with him as his mouth and ſpokeſman, which ſeemed to carry in it ſome reflection upon him.

℣. 13. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes and unto Aaron, &c.] No notice is taken of the objection of Moſes, having been ſufficiently anſwered before; and Aaron is joined with him in the following charge: and gave them a charge unto the children of Iſrael, and unto Pharaoh king of Egypt; that is, to go to the children of Iſrael and comfort them, and direct them what they ſhould do, and how they ſhould behave under their preſent circumſtances; aſſuring them of deliverance, and to go to Pharaoh, and to make a freſh demand upon him to let Iſrael go; and in this work they had a ſolemn charge from God to continue, and not to deſiſt from it, until they had finiſhed it: to bring the children of Iſrael out of the land of Egypt; which they were to be the inſtruments of: and that it might be known clearly from whom they deſcended, who had ſuch a charge given them, and ſuch honour honour put upon them, the following genealogy is recorded.

[a] נשאתי את ידי levavi manum meam, Pagninus, Montanus, Munſter.

[b] מקצר רוח ob brevem anhelitum, Munſter.

℣. 14. These be the heads of their fathers houses, &c.] Not of the families of Moses and Aaron, but of the children of Israel, though only the heads of three tribes are mentioned; and some think that these three are taken notice of, to shew that they were not rejected of God, though they seem to be rather cursed than blessed by Jacob; and that though they were guilty of very great crimes, as Reuben of incest, and Simeon and Levi of murder, yet they truly repented, and obtained mercy of God, and were honoured in their offspring, of whom an account is here given; but the two first seem to be taken notice of for the sake of the third, and that order might be observed, and that it might plainly appear that the deliverers of Israel were Israelites: the sons of Reuben, the first-born of Israel, Hanoch, and Pallu, Hezron, and Carmi; whose names, and the order in which they are put, are the same as in Gen. xlvi. 9: these be the families of Reuben; the heads of them, or from whence they sprung.

℣. 15. And the sons of Simeon, Jemuel, and Jamin, and Ohad, and Jachin, and Zohar, and Shaul the son of a Canaanitish woman, &c.] See the note on Gen. xlvi. 10: these are the families of Simeon; who gave rise and name to the several families of that tribe now in Egypt.

℣. 16. And these are the names of the sons of Levi, according to their generations, &c.] Whose sons, according to the order of their birth, were as follow: Gershom, and Kohath, and Merari; see Gen. xlvi. 11: and the years of the life of Levi were 137 years; and exactly the same number of years is assigned him by Polyhistor from Demetrius [c], an heathen writer. Jarchi says, that the reason why the years of the life of Levi are reckoned, is to shew how long the bondage lasted; for there was no servitude as long as any of the tribes (or of the sons of Jacob) remained, according to Exod. i. 6, 8. and the Jewish chronologers [d] affirm, that Levi was the last of the patriarchs that died; and that he died in the year of the world 3332, and lived in Egypt 94 years; and from his time, to the going out of Egypt, were only 116 years; and they further say, the bondage could not last longer than 116 years, nor shorter than 87. Bishop Usher [e] places his death in A. M. 2385, and before Christ 1619: according to the Targum of Jonathan, he lived to see Moses and Aaron the deliverers of Israel; but that is false, since Joseph and all his brethren died before Moses was born, Exod. i. 6.

℣. 17. And the sons of Gershom, Libni, and Shimi, according to their families.] He had only two sons, from whom came the families of the Libnites and Shimites; see Numb. iii. 21.

℣. 18. And the sons of Kohath, Amram, and Izhar, and Hebron, and Uzziel, &c.] So they are reckoned in 1 Chron. vi. 18. though only the family of the Hebronites are mentioned in Numb. xxvi. 58: and the years of the life of Kohath were 133 years. A Jewish chronologer says [f], he died 100 years before the going out of Egypt: just the same number of years is ascribed to him by Polyhistor from Demetrius, an heathen historian [g].

℣. 19. And the sons of Merari, Mahali, and Mushi, &c.] From whence sprung the families of the Mahalites and Mushites, Numb. iii. 33: these are the families of Levi, according to their generations; the families that descended from him and his sons, according to the order of their birth.

℣. 20. And Amram took him Jochebed his father's sister to wife, &c.] This Amram was the first son of Kohath, and the father of Moses, as after related, and so must be the same with the man of the house of Levi, and his wife the daughter of Levi, as in ch. ii. 1. and though such a marriage was afterwards prohibited, Moses does not conceal it, tho' it may seem to reflect some dishonour on him and his family; he writing not for his own glory, but for the sake of truth, and the good of mankind, and especially the church and people of God. Indeed the Vulgate Latin version, and the Septuagint, Samaritan and Syriac versions, make her to be his cousin-german, the daughter of his father's brother, his uncle's daughter; and so does Polyhistor from Demetrius [h]; but in Numb. xxvi. 59. she is expressly said to be a daughter of Levi, born to him in Egypt, and therefore must be his father's sister: and she bare him Aaron and Moses; and Miriam also, though not mentioned, it being for the sake of these two that the genealogy is made: and the years of the life of Amram were 137 years; just the age of his grandfather Levi, ℣. 16. A Jewish chronologer [i] says, he died in the 30th year of Moses; but the Arabic writers [k] say in the 56th or 57th, and at the end of A. M. 3810. Polyhistor [l] from Demetrius makes his age to be 136, and him to be the father of Moses and Aaron, and Aaron to be three years older than Moses, exactly according to the scripture-account.

℣. 21. And the sons of Izhar, Korah, and Nepheg, and Zichri.] These seem to be mentioned for the sake of Korah, concerning whom is a remarkable history in the following book; for the other two are no where else spoken of.

℣. 22. And the sons of Uzziel, Mishael, and Elzaphan, and Zichri.] The two first of these were the men that were ordered by Moses to carry out of the camp the two sons of Aaron, who were killed by lightening for offering strange fire, Lev. x. 4.

℣. 23. And Aaron took him Elisheba, &c.] The same name we pronounce Elizabeth; and of this name was the wife of Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist, Luke i. 5. this woman Aaron took, was the daughter of Amminadab, the sister of Naashon; a prince of the tribe of Judah, Numb. vii. 12. her he took to wife; or married; for though intermarriages with the several tribes were not allowed, nor used in after-times, that they might be kept distinct, and the inheritances also, yet the tribe of Levi often took wives of other tribes, because they had no inheritance, and were to have none in the land of Canaan, so that confusion in tribes and inheritances was not made hereby; and it is observable, that these marriages were frequently with the tribe of Judah, as signifying the union of the kingly and priestly offices in Christ, who sprung from the tribe of Judah: and she bare him Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar; the two first of these died by fire from heaven in their father's lifetime, for offering strange fire to the Lord, Lev. x. 1, 2. Eleazar succeeded his father in the priesthood, Numb. xx. 26. and of the sons of Ithamar executing the priest's office, see 1 Chron. xxiv. 2.

5 ℣.

[c] Apud Euseb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 21. p. 425. [d] Shalshalet Hakabala, fol. 5. 1. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 6. 2. & 7. 1. Seder Olam Rabba, c. 3. p. 9. [e] Annales Vet. Test. p. 17. [f] Shalshalet, ut supra. [g] Apud Euseb ut supra. [h] Ibid. [i] Shalshalet, ut supra. [k] Patricides, p. 26. Elmacinus, p. 46. apud Hottinger. Smegma Oriental. l. 1. c. 8. p. 392. [l] Apud Euseb. ut supra.

℣. 24. And the ſons of Korah, &c.] The eldeſt ſon of Izhar, who, though he proved a bad man, yet many of his poſterity were good men, and are often mentioned in general in the titles of ſome of the pſalms of David: the immediate ſons of Korah were Aſſir, and Elkanah, and Abiaſaph. Aben Ezra ſays, that Samuel the prophet was of the ſons of Korah; perhaps what might lead him to it was, becauſe his father's name was Elkanah, the name of one of theſe ſons of Korah, but can't be this Elkanah: theſe are the families of the Korhites; the heads of them, or from whom they deſcended.

℣. 25. And Eleazar Aaron's ſon took him one of the daughters of Putiel to wife, &c.] This was Aaron's eldeſt ſon. The perſon, whoſe daughter he married, Dr. Lightfoot [m] conjectures was an Egyptian convert, perhaps of the poſterity of Potipherah, among whom Joſeph had ſowed the ſeeds of true religion, and ſuppoſes that the Egyptians uſed the name of Puti or Poti, either in memorial of their uncle Put, Gen. x. 6. or in reverence of ſome deity of that name; but the Targum of Jonathan makes Putiel to be the ſame with Jethro; and ſo does Jarchi; but Aben Ezra ſeems to be righteſt, who takes him to be of the children of Iſrael, though the reaſon of his name is not known, and the daughter of ſuch an one it is moſt likely a ſon of Aaron would marry: and ſhe bore him Phinehas; of whom ſee Numb. xxv. 11: theſe are the heads of the Levites, according to their families; from whence the Levites ſprung, and their ſeveral families. It may be obſerved, that Moſes ſays nothing of his own offſpring, only of his brother Aaron's, partly out of modeſty and humility, and partly becauſe the prieſthood was ſucceſſive in the family of Aaron, but not the civil government in the family of Moſes; and that he proceeds no further to give the genealogy of the remaining tribes, his chief view being to ſhew the deſcent of Aaron and himſelf, that it might be with certainty known in after-times who they were that were inſtruments of Iſrael's deliverance out of Egypt, which would be matter of enquiry, and very deſireable to be known.

℣. 26. Theſe are that Aaron and Moſes, &c.] Aaron is ſet before Moſes, becauſe he was the eldeſt, and becauſe he propheſied in Egypt before Moſes, as Aben Ezra obſerves; though Moſes was greater in dignity than he, and therefore the true reaſon may be the modeſty of Moſes; though in a following verſe Moſes is ſet before Aaron, to ſhew that they were equal, as Jarchi thinks; and perhaps the thing was quite an indifference to the hiſtorian, and done without any care and intention; however theſe words are emphatically expreſſed, on purpoſe to point out the perſons to future ages: to whom the Lord ſaid, bring out the children of Iſrael from the land of Egypt; which is the charge he gave them both, ℣. 13. and the account of which is returned to again, after an interruption by the genealogy before recorded: Iſrael were to be brought out, according to their armies; denoting their numbers, and the order in which they were to march out of Egypt, as they did, not by flight, nor in confuſion, but in a formidable manner, and in great compoſure and order, with theſe two men, Moſes and Aaron, as their generals at the head of them.

℣. 27. Theſe are they which ſpoke to Pharaoh king of Egypt, &c.] In the name of the Lord of hoſts; and demanded the diſmiſſion of Iſrael, in order to bring the children of Iſrael from Egypt: nor did they deſiſt making application to him, until they had prevailed upon him to let them go: theſe are that Moſes and Aaron; which is repeated, that it may be obſerved who were the deliverers of Iſrael, what their names, of what tribe they were, and from whom they deſcended, and who ſprung from them, at leaſt from Aaron.

℣. 28. And it came to paſs on the day when the Lord ſpake unto Moſes in the land of Egypt.] This verſe depends upon the following for the ſenſe of it, which ſhews what it was the Lord ſaid to Moſes in the day he ſpake to him in Egypt, when he was come thither, which is as follows:

℣. 29. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying, I am the Lord, &c.] See ℣. 2, 6, 8: ſpeak thou unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, all that I ſay unto thee; that he let Iſrael go; and that in caſe of refuſal, that he would puniſh him and his people with this and the other plague, one after another, and at laſt ſlay him and their firſt-born.

℣. 30. And Moſes ſaid before the Lord, behold, I am of uncircumciſed lips, &c.] As he had done, ℣. 13. and this is only a repetition of what is there ſaid, in order to lead on to what is related in the following chapter: how ſhall Pharaoh hearken unto me? ſo mean a perſon, and ſo poor a ſpeaker, and he a mighty king, ſurrounded with wiſe counſellors and eloquent orators.

CHAP. VII.

MOSES and Aaron are ordered to go to Pharaoh, and require the diſmiſſion of the people of Iſrael, but they are told before-hand that Pharaoh's heart would be hardened, and would refuſe to let them go, until the hand of the Lord was ſtretched out, and great judgments were brought down upon Egypt, and then they ſhould come forth, ℣. 1—5. which orders Moſes and Aaron obeyed, and their age is obſerved, when this was done, ℣. 6, 7. and they are bid to work a miracle, when Pharaoh ſhould demand one, by turning a rod into a ſerpent, which they did; but Pharaoh's magicians doing the ſame in appearance, his heart was hardened, ℣. 8—14. and then they are directed to meet him at the river, and require the ſame as before; and if he refuſed, to ſmite the waters of the river with the rod, and turn them into blood, which they did, ℣. 15—21. but Pharaoh's magicians doing the ſame by inchantments, he did not regard it, though the plague laſted ſeven days, ℣. 22—25.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] In anſwer to his objection, taken from his own meanneſs, and the majeſty of Pharaoh, and from his want of readineſs and freedom of expreſſion: ſee; take notice of, obſerve what I am about to ſay: I have made thee a god to Pharaoh; not a god by nature, but made ſo; he was ſo by commiſſion and office, clothed with power and authority from God to act under him in all things he ſhould direct; not for ever, as angels are gods, but for a time; not in an an ordinary way, as magiſtrates are gods, but in an extraordinary manner; and not to any other but to Pharaoh, being an ambaſſador of God to him, and as in his room and ſtead to rule over him, though ſo great a monarch; to command him what he ſhould do, and controul him when he did wrong, and puniſh him for his diſobedience, and inflict ſuch plagues upon him, and do ſuch miracles before him, as no mere man of himſelf, and none but God can do; and even exerciſe the power of life and death, as in the ſlaying of the firſt-born, that Pharaoh ſhould ſtand in as much fear of him, as if he was a deity, and apply to him to remove the plagues upon him, as if he was one: and Aaron thy brother ſhall be thy prophet; to declare the will of God revealed to him by Moſes from the Lord; ſo that this ſeems to be more than to be the mouth and ſpokeſman of Moſes, and interpreter and explainer of his words, or to be acting the part of an orator for him; for Moſes in this affair being God's vicegerent, and furniſhed with a knowledge of the mind and will of God reſpecting it, as well as with power to work miracles, and inflict plagues, was made a god to both Pharaoh and Aaron; ſee ch. iv. 6. to Pharaoh in the ſenſe before explained, and to Aaron, he being his prophet, to whom he communicated the ſecrets of God, and his will and pleaſure, in order to make the ſame known to Pharaoh. Thus highly honoured was Moſes to be a god to a ſovereign prince, and to have Aaron to be his prophet.

[m] Works, vol. 1. p. 704, 705.

℣. 2. Thou ſhalt ſpeak all that I command thee, &c.] That is, to Aaron his prophet, whatever the Lord made known to him in a private manner as his will to be done: and Aaron thy brother ſhall ſpeak unto Pharaoh; whatſoever ſhould be told him by Moſes, as from the Lord: that he ſend the children of Iſrael out of his land; this was the principal thing to be inſiſted upon; and all that was ſaid or done to him was to bring about this end, the diſmiſſion of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt.

℣. 3. And I will harden Pharaoh's heart, &c.] See the note on ch. iv. 21: and multiply my ſigns, and my wonders in the land of Egypt; work one miracle and wonderful ſign after another, until they are all wrought intended to be wrought; and which he had given Moſes power to do, and until the end ſhould be anſwered and obtained, the letting go of the children of Iſrael.

℣. 4. But Pharaoh ſhall not hearken unto you, &c.] Regard not what they ſaid, nor anſwer the demand they made, or obey the command of God delivered by them to him: this the Lord apprized them of, that they might not be diſcouraged, and conclude their labour would be in vain, their attempts fruitleſs, and they ſhould never gain their point, but ſpend their time, and expoſe themſelves to danger to no purpoſe: that I may lay mine hand upon Egypt; the inhabitants of Egypt, ſmiting them with one plague after another, and particularly with the laſt, ſlaying their firſt-born; every plague was a ſtroke of his hand, and an effect of his mighty power and vengeance, and more eſpecially that: and bring forth mine armies; the children of Iſrael conſiſting of 600,000 men, beſides women and children, ch. xii. 37. which divided into 12 tribes, made 12 fine armies, 50,000 men in a tribe or army upon an average: and my people the children of Iſrael out of the land of Egypt; the word and need not be ſupplied; if any ſupplement is neceſſary, the word even would be better, ſince this clauſe is added by way of explanation, ſhewing who are meant by the armies of the Lord, his people to be brought out: by great judgments; inflicted upon the Egyptians.

℣. 5. And the Egyptians ſhall know that I am the Lord, &c.] Jehovah, the one, only, true and living God; this they ſhould know by the judgments executed upon them, and be obliged to acknowledge it: when I ſtretch forth mine hand upon Egypt; eſpecially the laſt time, to deſtroy the firſt-born: and bring out the children of Iſrael from among them; by which it would appear that he was mightier than they, and obtained the end for which the plagues were inflicted on them.

℣. 6. And Moſes and Aaron did as the Lord commanded them, &c.] After this they never ſhewed any reluctance, or made any objection to any meſſage they were ſent with, or any work they were ordered to do, but went about it at once, and performed it with all readineſs and chearfulneſs: ſo did they; which is not a ſuperfluous and redundant expreſſion, but very emphatical, ſhewing with what care and diligence they did every thing, and how exactly they conformed in all things to the divine will.

℣. 7. And Moſes was 80 years old, &c.] At this time, which is obſerved partly to ſhew how long Iſrael had been afflicted in Egypt; for their great troubles and miſeries began about the time of the birth of Moſes, or a little before, as appears from the above hiſtory; and partly to ſhew the patience and forbearance of God with the Egyptians, and how juſt and righteous were his judgments on them; with this perfectly agrees Stephen's account of the age of Moſes, Act. vii. 23, 30. and Aaron 83 years old, when they ſpake unto Pharaoh; ſo that they were men that had had a large experience of things, and had been long training up for the ſervice deſigned to be done by them; they were men of wiſdom and prudence, of ſedate and compoſed countenances, and fit to appear before a king, whoſe age and venerable aſpect might command attention to them. Aben Ezra obſerves, that "in all "the ſcripture there is no mention of any prophets "that propheſied in their old age but theſe, be"cauſe their excellency was greater than all the "prophets." By this it appears, that Aaron was 3 years older than Moſes. A Jewiſh chronologer ſays [n], that it is affirmed in an expoſition of theirs, that Aaron propheſied to the Iſraelites in Egypt 80 years, which is making him to be a very young prophet when he firſt entered into the office. The Arabic writers [o] ſay, Miriam was at this time 87, ſo was 7 years older than Moſes, and 4 years older than Aaron; ſee ch. ii. 4.

℣. 8. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes and unto Aaron, &c.] After he had given them their commiſſion, and inſtructions to go to Pharaoh, and a little before they went in to him: ſaying, as follows.

℣. 9. When Pharaoh ſhall ſpeak unto you, ſaying, ſhew a miracle for you, &c.] To prove that they came from God, the Jehovah they ſaid they did, and that they were his ambaſſadors, and came in his name, and made the demand for him; which when he ſeriouſly reflected on things, he would be ready to require, hoping they would not be able to ſhew any, and then he ſhould have ſomewhat againſt them, and treat them as impoſtors: then thou ſhalt ſay unto Aaron, take thy rod; the ſame that Moſes had in his hand at Horeb, and brought with him to Egypt; this he had delivered into the hand hand of Aaron, who was to be his agent, and with this rod do ſigns and wonders as he did, and on account of them it is ſometimes called the rod of God: and caſt it before Pharaoh, and it ſhall become a ſerpent; as it became one before at Horeb, when Moſes by the order of God caſt it on the ground, and afterwards became a rod again, as it now was, ch. iv. 2, 3, 4. Hence Mercury, the meſſenger of the gods with the heathens, is repreſented as having a caduceus, a rod or wand twiſted about with ſnakes [p].

[n] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 7. 1.

[o] Patricides, p. 26. apud Hottinger. p. 415.

℣. 10. And Moſes and Aaron went in unto Pharaoh, &c.] Into the palace of Pharaoh boldly, and with intrepidity, clothed with ſuch power and authority, and aſſured of ſucceſs: and they did as the Lord had commanded; they demanded in his name the diſmiſſion of the children of Iſrael, and upon his requiring a miracle to confirm their miſſion, wrought one as follows: and Aaron caſt down his rod before Pharaoh, and it became a ſerpent; or a dragon, as the Septuagint verſion; this word is ſometimes uſed of great whales, Gen. i. 21. and of the crocodile, Ezek. xxix. 3. and it is very likely the crocodile is meant here, as Dr. Lightfoot [q] thinks; ſince this was frequent in the Nile, the river of Egypt, where the Hebrew infants had been caſt, and into whoſe devouring jaws they fell, and which alſo was an Egyptian deity [r]. Tho' no mention is made of Pharaoh's demanding a miracle, yet no doubt he did, as the Lord had intimated he would, and without which it can hardly be thought it would be done; and Artapanus [s], an heathen writer, expreſsly aſſerts it; for he ſays, "when "the king required of Moſes to do ſome ſign or "wonder, the rod which he had he caſt down, and "it became a ſerpent, to the amazement of all, "and then took it by its tail and it became a rod "again;" which is a teſtimony from an heathen of the truth of this miracle.

℣. 11. Then Pharaoh alſo called the wiſe-men and the ſorcerers, &c.] The cunning men and wizards, a ſort of jugglers and deceivers, who pretended to great knowledge of things, to diſcover ſecrets, tell fortunes, and predict things to come, and by leger-demain tricks, and caſting a miſt before people's eyes, pretended to do very wonderful and amazing things; and therefore Pharaoh ſent for theſe, to exerciſe their art and cunning, and ſee if they could not vie with Moſes and Aaron: now the magicians of Egypt, they alſo did in like manner with their enchantments; or by their ſecret wiles and juggles, making things ſeem to appear to the ſight when they did not really, but by dazzling the eyes of men by their wicked and diabolical art, they fancied they ſaw things which they did not; for the word has the ſignification of flames of fire, or of a flaming ſword, or lance, which being brandiſhed to and fro dazzles the ſight. The Targum of Jonathan gives the names of two of theſe magicians, whom he calls Jannes and Iambres, as does the apoſtle in 2 Tim. iii. 8. ſee the note there. Joſephus [t] calls theſe magicians of Egypt prieſts, and Artapanus [u] ſays, they were prieſts that lived about Memphis. According to the Arabs [w], the name of the place where they lived was Auſana, a city very antient and pleaſant, called the city of the magicians, which lay to the eaſt of the Nile: their name in the Hebrew language is either from a word which ſignifies a ſtyle, or graving tool, as Fuller [x] thinks, becauſe in their enchantments they uſed ſuperſtitious characters and figures; or as Saadiah Gaon [y] from two words, the one ſignifying a hole, and the other ſtopped; becauſe they bored a hole in a tree to put witchcrafts into it, and ſtopped it up, and then declared what ſhould be, or they had to ſay.

℣. 12. For they caſt down every man his rod, and they became ſerpents, &c.] That is, they ſeemed to be ſo, as Joſephus [z] expreſſes it, but not really, in which he is followed by many; tho' ſome think that the devil aſſiſted in this affair, and in an inſtant, as ſoon as the rods were caſt down, removed them and put real ſerpents in their room: but Aaron's rod ſwallowed up their rods; that is, the ſerpent that Aaron's rod was turned into, ſwallowed up the rods of the magicians, which never were otherwiſe than rods only in appearance; or if real ſerpents were put in the room of them, theſe were devoured by his ſerpent called his rod, becauſe it was before turned into a ſerpent, as Aben Ezra obſerves; tho' the Targums of Jonathan, Jarchi, and R. Teſhuah, ſuppoſe this was done after the ſerpent became a rod again; which makes the miracle the greater, and more wonderful, that a rod ſhould devour other rods; and ſuppoſing them real ſerpents, this was what the magicians could not make their rods do, and in which they were out-done by Aaron.

℣. 13. And he hardened Pharaoh's heart, &c.] Or, notwithſtanding the heart of Pharaoh was hardened [a]; though he ſaw the rods of his magicians devoured by Aaron's rod; or therefore [b] his heart was hardened, becauſe he ſaw that the rods of his magicians became ſerpents as well as Aaron's; in which there was a deception of ſight, and which was ſuffered for the hardening of his heart, there being other wonders and miracles to be wrought, for ſhewing forth the divine power, before Iſrael muſt be let go: that he hearkened not unto them; to Moſes and Aaron, and comply with their demand, to diſmiſs the people of Iſrael: as the Lord had ſaid; or foretold he would not.

℣. 14. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Pharaoh's heart is hardened, &c.] Or heavy [c], dull and ſtupid, ſtiff and inflexible, can't lift up his heart, or find in his heart to obey the will of God: he refuſeth to let the people go; which was an inſtance and proof of the hardneſs and heavineſs of his heart, on which the above miracle had made no impreſſion, to regard what God by his ambaſſadors had required of him.

℣. 15. Get thee unto Pharaoh in the Morning, &c.] The next morning, a time in which the mind is moſt compoſed and ſedate, and fit to attend to what may be ſuggeſted: lo, he goeth out unto the water; the river Nile, either to take his morning's walk, and to refreſh himſelf at the water-ſide, as the Jeruſalem Targum; or to obſerve divinations upon the water, as a magician, as the Targum of Jonathan. So in the Talmud [d] it is ſaid, that the Pharaoh in the days of Moſes was a magician. Or rather, as Aben Ezra thinks, which he ſays is a cuſtom of the kings of Egypt to this day, to go out in the months of Tammuz and Ab, i. e. June and July, when the river increaſes, to obſerve how many degrees it has aſcended, by which the fruitfulneſs of the enſuing ſeaſon was judged of. See the note on Amos viii. 8. Or elſe he went to worſhip the riſing ſun,

[p] Vid. Chartar. de imag. deorum, p. 136. imag. 48. Juvenal, Sat. 15.
[q] Works, vol. I. p. 702.
[r] Crocodylen adorat,
[s] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 435.
[t] Antiq. l. 2. c. 13. §. 3.
[u] Apud Euſeb. ut ſupra.
[w] Arab. Geograph. Climat. 2. par. 4. lin. 21.
[x] Miſcell. Sacr. l. 5. c. 11.
[y] Comment. in Dan. i. 20.
[z] Antiq. ut ſupra.
[a] וירחזק attamen obfirmatum eſt, Junius & Tremellius.
[b] Itaque, Piſcator.
[c] כבד grave, Montanus, Druſius. So Ainſworth.
[d] T. Bab. Moed. Katon, fol. 18. 1.

ſun, or the Nile, to pay his morning devotions to it; for not only Jarchi, and other Jewiſh writers, ſay it was their chief god, but Plutarch [c] alſo affirms, that nothing was ſo much honoured with the Egyptians as the Nile; and both Theodoret on this place, and Athanaſius [f] elſewhere ſays, that they reckoned it a god, and worſhipped it as ſuch; and it has been uſual with other nations to worſhip rivers, as Ælianus [g] reports: and thou ſhalt ſtand by the river's brink againſt he come; over againſt the brink of the river Nile, in order to meet him: and the rod which was turned to a ſerpent, ſhalt thou take in thine hand; as a terror to Pharaoh, on ſight of which he might be put in mind of what had been done, and by means of which he might fear other wonders would be wrought; by this it appears, that after the rod had been turned into a ſerpent, it became a rod again, as it did at Horeb, ch. iv. 4. Moſes having previous notice of all this, ſhews the preſcience of God, and his certain knowledge of future contingent events.

℣. 16. And thou ſhalt ſay unto him, &c.] Upon meeting him: the Lord God of the Hebrews hath ſent me unto thee; ſtill appearing in the character of the ambaſſador of Jehovah, the god of the children of Iſrael: ſaying, let my people go that they may ſerve me in the wilderneſs; the demand is once more renewed, before any puniſhment is inflicted for refuſal, that the patience and forbearance of God might be the more viſible, and his judgments appear the more righteous when inflicted, as well as Pharaoh be left more inexcuſable. The reaſon of the demand is obſerved, that they may ſerve me; keep a feaſt, and ſacrifice to him, as is before expreſſed, and the place where is pointed at: in the wilderneſs; at Sinai, in Arabia, where were the mountains of Sinai and Horeb; but the time of their ſervice is not here expreſſed, as elſewhere, namely 3 days: and behold, hitherto thou wouldeſt not hear; and obey the voice of the Lord, upbraiding him with his diſobedience, and the hardneſs of his heart; but ſignifying it was not now too late, though it was adviſeable to be quick, or the blow would be given, and the plagues inflicted.

℣. 17. Thus ſaith the Lord, in this thou ſhalt know that I am the Lord, &c.] By the following inſtance of his power and vengeance: I will ſmite with the rod that is in my hand; which though in the hand of Moſes, ℣. 18. yet he being his ambaſſador, and repreſenting him, is ſaid to be in the hand of the Lord; and with this he threatens to ſmite upon the waters which are in the river; the river Nile, and the canals thereof: and they ſhall be turned to blood; and if this river was their god, it would abundantly appear that the God of the Hebrews was Jehovah, and above all gods, and particularly above theirs.

℣. 18. And the fiſh that is in the river ſhall die, &c.] Their element being changed, and they not able to live in any other but water: and the river ſhall ſtink; with the blood, into which it ſhould be congealed, and with the putrified bodies of fiſhes floating in it: and the Egyptians ſhall loath to drink of the water of the river; the very colour of it, looking like blood, would ſet them againſt it, and create a nauſea in them; or ſhall be weary [h], tired of drinking it in a little time through the loathſomeneſs of it; or be weary in digging about it, ℣. 24. to get ſome clear water to drink of; or in ſeeking to find out ways and methods to cure the waters, that ſo they might be fit to drink of, as Jarchi interprets it.

℣. 19. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Pharaoh ſtill being obſtinate, and refuſing to let the people go: ſay unto Aaron, take thy rod, and ſtretch out thine hand upon the waters of Egypt; upon all of them in general, what were in the river Nile, or derived from it, as follows: upon their ſtreams; the ſeven ſtreams of the river Nile, Iſ. xi. 15. ſee the note there: upon their rivers; the canals that were cut out of the river Nile, for the watering of their fields and gardens, for they had no other river: and upon their ponds, and upon all their pools of water; which were dug near the river, or to which pipes were laid to convey the water thither: that they may become blood; and ſo not fit to drink: and that there may be blood throughout all the land of Egypt, both in veſſels of wood, and in veſſels of ſtone; in which water were kept in private houſes, fetched from the river for the uſe of families; all which were to be turned into blood every where, in all parts of the land, and in all places mentioned, immediately upon Aaron's taking his rod, and ſmiting the waters with it in that part of the river that was before him.

℣. 20. And Moſes and Aaron did ſo, as the Lord commanded, &c.] Moſes delivered the rod to Aaron, who took it and went to the water-ſide: and he lift up the rod, and ſmote the waters that were in the river; or in that river [i], the river Nile, on the brink of which Pharaoh then ſtood: in the ſight of Pharaoh, and in the ſight of his ſervants; his nobles and courtiers who attended him in his walk to the water; for this was done before he returned to his palace: and all the waters that were in the river were turned into blood; not only the face of the waters looked like blood, but they were really turned into it; and not only the ſuperficies of the water, but all the water that was in the river, wherever it flowed, and as far as it flowed in the land of Egypt.

℣. 21. And the fiſh that was in the river died, &c.] Which was a full proof, that the converſion of it into blood was real; for had it been only in appearance, or the water of the river had only the colour of blood, and looked like it, but was not really ſo, it would not have affected the fiſhes, they would have lived as well as before; and this plague was the greater affliction to the Egyptians, not only as it affected their drink but their food, fiſh being what the common people chiefly lived upon, Numb. xi. 5. ſee Iſ. xix. 8. and the note there: and the river ſtunk; the blood into which it was turned being corrupted through the heat of the ſun, and the dead fiſhes ſwimming upon it being putrified: and the Egyptians could not drink of the water of the river; and they had no other water to drink of [k]; for rain ſeldom fell in Egypt, though ſometimes it did in ſome places, ſee the note on Zech. xiv. 18. The water of the river Nile was not only their common drink, but it was exceeding pleaſant, and therefore the loſs of it was the greater; it was ſo remarkable for the ſweetneſs and delicacy of its taſte, that in the time of Peſcennius Niger, when his ſoldiers murmured for want of wine, he is reported to have anſwered them, "what! crave you wine, and have "the water of the Nile to drink?" which Mr. Maillett,

[c] De Iſide & Oſir. Vide Philo de vita Moſis, l. 1. p. 617.
[f] Contr. Gentil. p. 20. & de incarnatione, p. 73.
[g] Var. Hiſt l. 2. c. 33.
[h] נלאו delaſſabuntur, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus. Defatigabuntur, Cartwright.
[i] ביאר ω τω ποταμω, Sept. in eo rivo, Junius and Tremellius, Piſcator.
[k] Vid. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 29.

Maillett, who lived 16 years conſul for the French nation at Grand Cairo, confirms, and ſays, that it is grown to be a common proverb, that whoever has once taſted it, will ever after pine for it [l]; with this compare Jer. ii. 18: and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt; in the river wherever it flowed, in all its ſtreams and channels, and wherever any water was collected out of it, or fetched from it, let it be in what reſervoir it would. This is the firſt plague executed on the Egyptians, and a very righteous one by the law of retaliation for ſhedding the blood of innocent babes, thro' caſting them into this river; and this will be the ſecond, and third vials of God's wrath, which will be poured on antichriſt, or myſtical Egypt, who will have blood given to drink becauſe worthy, ſee Rev. xvi. 3, 4, 5. 6. Artapanus [m], an heathen writer, bears teſtimony to this miracle, though he does not ſo fully and clearly expreſs it as it was; he ſays, "a little after, that is, after the former "miracle of the rod turned into a ſerpent, the "Nile, that river whoſe ſwelling waves overflow "all Egypt, was ſmitten with the rod; and the "water being gathered and ſtagnated, boiled up, "and not only the fiſhes were deſtroyed, but the "people periſhed through thirſt."

℣. 22. And the magicians of Egypt did ſo with their enchantments, &c.] Who were either in company with Pharaoh and his nobles, or were immediately ſent for to try their art, and confront Moſes and Aaron with it; and who very probably got a little water in a veſſel, and by ſome juggling trick impoſing upon, and deceiving the ſight of Pharaoh and his ſervants, made it look like blood; and the devil might help them to a ſufficient quantity of blood, and diſcolour the water with it, and make it appear as if it was blood, and which was a poor buſineſs; had they turned the bloody river into water again, they would have equalled the miracle of Moſes and Aaron, and done ſome ſervice to their country; but to deceive the ſight of people, or to ſpoil a ſmall quantity of water that was good, by mixing it with blood, was but a mean and unworthy action. Should it be aſked from whence they had this water, when all was turned into blood? it may be anſwered, either from Goſhen, as the Targum of Jonathan, the waters of the Hebrews not being affected with this plague; though Aben Ezra thinks they were; or from the ſea, as Theodoret; but both theſe places were too far diſtant to fetch water from, in the time that Pharaoh ſtayed here before his return home: rather therefore this water was had from ſome habitation of the Iſraelites in the city near at hand, where Pharaoh lived, or was dug for immediately by the magicians, as in ℣. 24. or it may be that all the waters were not immediately turned into blood, but ſucceſſively and gradually, firſt the river, and then its ſtreams, &c. ſo that there might be near at hand a pool of water, not yet turned into blood, and a veſſel of water might be fetched from it, on which they exerciſed their juggling art: and Pharaoh's heart was hardened; by ſeeing his magicians do what was ſimilar to what Moſes and Aaron had done; and therefore concluded that it was not by the hand of God, but owing to a magic art they were maſters of, as his magicians were: neither did he hearken unto them; to Moſes and Aaron, and what they ſaid to him, to let the people go: as the Lord had ſaid; had before told he would not hearken to them, ℣. 4.

℣. 23. And Pharaoh turned, and went into his houſe, &c.] Turned away from Moſes and Aaron, and turned back from the river to which he came, and went to his palace in the city; it being perhaps now about dinner-time, when all before related had paſſed: neither did he ſet his heart to this alſo; had no regard to this miracle of turning the waters into blood, as well as he had none to the rod being turned into a ſerpent, and devouring the rods of the magicians; he neither conſidered the one nor the other, or ſeriouſly and cloſely thought of this, any more than of the other.

℣. 24. And all the Egyptians digged round about the river, &c.] On each ſide of it, in order to get clear water; and Aben Ezra thinks the Hebrews alſo, who were affected with this, and the two following plagues, the frogs and lice; but it is much more reaſonable to conclude, that they were free from them all. This they did for water to drink; for there was none in the river, ſtreams, ponds and pools, or in veſſels, in which they uſed to reſerve it, and therefore could come at none but by digging; and whether they obtained any in that way, is not ſaid: for they could not drink of the waters of the river; it being turned into blood, and ſtunk ſo exceedingly; and though they might ſtrain it, and make it in ſome meaſure drinkable, and might make uſe of the juice of herbs, and other things, to extinguiſh their thirſt, and the better ſort might have a ſtock of wine, yet multitudes muſt be greatly diſtreſſed, and many periſh, as Philo [n] the Jew ſays they did.

℣. 25. And ſeven days were fulfilled, &c.] Or there were full ſeven days, a whole week: after that the Lord had ſmitten the river; and turned it into blood; here the miracle is aſcribed to him, Moſes and Aaron, and the rod they uſed, were only inſtruments, nothing ſhort of almighty power could do ſuch a miracle; it ſeems this laſted ſeven days at leaſt. It began, as biſhop Uſher [o] computes it, on the 18th day of the 6th month, or Adar, part of February and part of March, and ended the 25th of the ſame. It is not ſaid that Pharaoh requeſted to have it removed, though Philo [p] ſays he did; his ſtubborn heart not being humbled enough as yet to aſk ſuch a favour, and therefore perhaps it was taken off without aſking for it, to make way for another.

CHAP. VIII.

IN this chapter Pharaoh is threatened with the plague of frogs, in caſe he refuſed to let Iſrael go, which accordingly was brought upon him, ℣. 1—6. and though the magicians did ſomething ſimilar to it, yet theſe were ſo troubleſome to Pharaoh, that he promiſed to let the people go, and ſacrifice to God, if they were removed; and a time being fixed for the removal of them, it was accordingly done at the intreaty of Moſes and Aaron, ℣. 7 — 14. but there being a reſpite, Pharaoh's heart heart was hardened, and the plague of lice is ordered, and which was executed; and though this the magicians essayed to do, and could not, but owned it to be the finger of God, yet Pharaoh's heart was hardened, ℣. 15—19. wherefore he is threatened with a swarm of flies, which should not infest Goshen, only the places where the Egyptians dwelt, and it was so, ℣. 20—24. upon which Pharaoh called for Moses, and declared himself willing the people should sacrifice in the land; but this not being satisfactory, he agreed they should go into the wilderness, but not far; and on the account of the intreaty of Moses, the plague was removed; but still Pharaoh's heart was hardened, and he would not let the people go, ℣. 25—32.

[l] See the biſhop of Clogher's Chronology of the Hebrew Bible, p. 287. [m] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 435. [n] De vita Moſis, l. 1. p. 617. [o] Annal. Vet. Teſt. p. 20. [p] Ut ſupra.

℣. 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] Either whilst the plague upon the waters continued, or immediately upon the removal of it: go unto Pharaoh, and say unto him, thus saith the Lord, let my people go, that they may serve me; mentioning neither time nor place, where, when and how long they should serve him, for which their dismission was required, but insist on it in general.

℣. 2. And if thou refuse to let them go, &c.] Will not obey the orders: I will smite all thy borders with frogs; he gives him warning of the blow before he strikes, which shows his clemency and goodness, his patience and long-suffering; and this he did, not only that he might have time and space for repentance, and thereby award the blow; but that when it came, he might be sensible it was not by chance, or owing to second causes, but was from the Lord himself. I will smite all thy borders with frogs; fill the whole land of Egypt with them, to the utmost borders thereof on every side. Some [q] say the word signifies a large Egyptian fish, which in the Arabic tongue is called Al-tamsach, that is, a crocodile, with which the Nile abounded; but such a creature could not invade and attack them in the manner as is after related.

℣. 3. And the river shall bring forth frogs abundantly, &c.] The river Nile; and though water, and watry places, naturally produce these creatures, yet not in such vast quantities as to cover a whole country, and so large a one as Egypt, and this done at once, immediately; for they were all produced instantaneously, and in one day were spread all over the nation, and removed the next: and besides what follows is equally miraculous, which shall go up and come into thine house; which though they may come up out of rivers, and be upon the banks and the meadows adjacent, yet are never known to come into houses, and especially into bedchambers and other places after mentioned, being not a bold but timorous creature, and shuns the sight and company of men; but these came even into the royal palace, nor could his guards keep them out: and into thy bed-chamber, and upon thy bed; and by their leaping upon him, and croaking in his ears disturb his rest: and into the house of thy servants, and upon thy people; both nobles and common people, and not only get into their houses, but upon their persons, on their hands when about their business, on their laps, and into their bosoms, as they sat; which must be very offensive and troublesome to them, what with their ugly shape, croaking noise, and filthy smell, and the disagreeable touch of them, leaping on them, and even upon their food, and all vessels used for the same, which must make it very nauseous and distasteful to them: and into thy ovens; where they baked their bread, and would be now hindred from the use of them: and into thy kneading-troughs; where they kneaded their dough, and made it into loaves, and prepared it for the oven; or the dough itself, which they leaped upon and licked, and made it lothsome for use.

℣. 4. And the frogs shall come up both on thee, and upon thy people, and upon thy servants;] no doubt by the interposition of divine power and providence, and it may be by the ministry of angels; so that let them use what care, caution, and diligence they would, there was no keeping them out; but they came upon all the people of the land, high and low, rich and poor, and upon the king's ministers, courtiers, and nobles, and the king himself not excepted; tho' by this particular enumeration of him, his people, and servants, the children of Israel may be thought to be exempted from this plague, as R. Japhez observes; though Aben Ezra dislikes his remark, but it seems to be just.

℣. 5. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] By a secret impulse upon his mind, for he was now in the presence of Pharaoh, who had refused to let Israel go: say unto Aaron, stretch forth thy hand with thy rod; for Aaron carried the rod, and he was the minister of Moses, who was appointed a god to him; and he was to speak and to do whatever he ordered him from the Lord: over the streams, over the rivers, and over the ponds; the 7 streams of the river of Nile, and over the canals cut out of it, and over all places where there was a collection of water for any use for man or beast: and cause frogs to come up upon the land of Egypt; out of the streams, rivers, and ponds immediately.

℣. 6. And Aaron stretched out his hand over the waters of Egypt, &c.] That is, towards the waters of the Nile, and towards all places where any water was; for it was not possible he could stretch out his hand over all the waters that were in every place: and the frogs came and covered the land of Egypt; they came up at once, and in such multitudes every where, that the whole land was full of them; this was done on the 25th of Adar, or February, the same day the former plague ceased; so Artapanus [s], the heathen historian says, that Moses by his rod produced frogs, locusts and lice. And the story which Heraclides Lembus [t] tells, seems to be hammered out of this account of Moses, that in Pæonia and Dardania such a number of frogs fell from heaven, as filled the public roads and private houses; at first the inhabitants killed them, and keeping their houses shut, bore it patiently for some time; but when it signified nothing, and their household-goods were covered with them, and they found them boiled and roasted with their food, and lay in such heaps that they could not tread for them, and were so distressed with the smell of the dead ones, that they forsook their country.

℣. 7. And the magicians did so with their enchantments, &c.] By their secret wiles and juggling tricks: and brought up frogs upon the land of Egypt; that is, some few, as a proof of their art and skill, and to show that Moses and Aaron did but what they could do; but what they did either were only in appearance, deceiving the sight of Pharaoh and his people, or real frogs were brought to them by the help of devils, but not in such numbers: and besides, beſides, this was adding to the plague, and not diminiſhing it; had they done any thing to the purpoſe, they ſhould have removed it at once, or deſtroyed the frogs; but that they could not do, of which Pharaoh being ſenſible, he therefore intreated for the removal of them by Moſes and Aaron. To this plague there ſeems to be ſome reference at the pouring out of the ſixth vial, Rev. xvi. 13, 14.

4

[q] R. Chananeel apud Abendana, and some in Aben Ezra in loc. [r] בכל משארותיך in tuas pastas, Pagninus; in farinam tuam aquis conspersam, Tigurine version; in reliquiis ciborum tuorum, V. L. [s] Apud Euseb. ut supra. [t] Apud Athenæi Deipnosophist. l. 8. c. 2.

℣. 8. Then Pharaoh called for Moſes and Aaron, &c.] He ſent for them: and ſaid, intreat the Lord, that he may take away the frogs from me and from my people; he begins now to know the Lord, whom he knew not before, by the judgments he executed on him, to acknowledge his hand in thoſe judgments, and tacitly to own that none elſe could remove them; and his proud heart was ſo far humbled, as to beg the favour of Moſes and Aaron to intercede with the Lord to cauſe this plague to ceaſe, which was intolerable: and it may be obſerved from other inſtances in hiſtory, ſomewhat ſimilar to this, that whole cities and countries have been deſerted by their inhabitants on a like occaſion, as thoſe of Pæonia and Dardania, in the account above given; and Juſtin reports [u] of the Abderites, a people of Thrace, that becauſe of the multitude of frogs and mice, were obliged to leave their native country, and ſeek new habitations; and Diodorus Siculus [w], and Ælianus [x] relate much the ſame of a people called Autariatæ; and Varro [y] affirms, that in a city in France, the inhabitants of it were drove away by frogs; which inſtances, as they ſhow how very diſtreſſing ſuch a calamity is, ſo they ſerve to illuſtrate and confirm the truth of the divine hiſtory, cavilled at by infidels, when any thing is related in it exceeding the common and ordinary courſe of things: and I will let the people go, that they may do ſacrifice unto the Lord; as had been frequently required of him, ch. v. 1, 3. and vii. 16. and viii. 1.

℣. 9. And Moſes ſaid unto Pharaoh, glory over me, &c.] If thou canſt; take every advantage againſt me of leſſening my glory, and increaſing thine own; or vaunt or boaſt thyſelf againſt me, as the phraſe is rendered, Judg. vii. 2. Iſ. x. 15. or take this honour and glory to thyſelf over me, by commanding me, and fixing a time to pray for thee, and I'll obey thy orders; which agrees with the Septuagint, Syriac and Vulgate Latin verſions, and the paraphraſe of Onkelos, appoint, or order for me; that is, when I ſhall pray for thee; or do me this honour, to believe me in the ſight of the people, to declare before them, that thou doſt believe that upon my prayer for thee this plague ſhall be removed: when ſhall I intreat for thee, and for thy ſervants, and for thy people, to deſtroy the frogs from thee and thy houſes, that they may remain in this river only? Moſes agreed to intreat the Lord for him as he deſired, but leaves it with him to fix the time for doing it; and this he did, that it might appear that the removal of the frogs, as well as the bringing of them, would not be owing to chance, or to any natural cauſe, but to the Lord himſelf; and though Moſes had no direction from the Lord for this, that is recorded, yet he might preſume upon it, ſince he was made a God to Pharaoh, and had power to do as he pleaſed; and alſo he knew the mind and will of God, and might have now a ſecret impulſe upon his ſpirit, ſignifying it to him: and beſides, he had the faith of miracles, and ſtrongly believed that God would work this by him, and at whatſoever time ſhould be fixed.

℣. 10. And he ſaid, to-morrow, &c.] Which according to biſhop Uſher was the 26th day of Adar, or February. It may ſeem ſtrange that Pharaoh, and his people, being ſo greatly diſtreſſed with this plague, ſhould not deſire that the Lord would be intreated to do it immediately, and not put it off to another day: two reaſons are uſually given; one is, he might hope that it would by that time go off of itſelf, and then he ſhould not be beholden to the Lord, nor to Moſes; and the other is, that he thought an affair of this kind could not be done immediately, but that it required time for making the interceſſion, and performing rites and ceremonies, which he ſuppoſed might be uſed, as were by his magicians; and it might be now the evening of the day, and therefore deferred it till to-morrow: and he ſaid, be it according to thy word; as if he had ſaid, it ſhall be done as thou haſt deſired, and at the time fixed: that thou mayeſt know that there is none like unto the Lord our God; that can ſend plagues, and remove them at his pleaſure, which the deities he worſhipped, and the magicians he employed, could not do.

℣. 11. And the frogs ſhall depart from thee, and from thy houſes, and from thy ſervants, and from thy people, &c.] Signifying there ſhould be a full and clear riddance of them: they ſhall remain in the river only; the river Nile.

℣. 12. And Moſes and Aaron went from Pharaoh, &c.] To the place where they uſed to pray to the Lord, and meet with him, and receive meſſages from him; this they did the ſame day the plague was inflicted, the day before the morrow came when the frogs were to be removed: and Moſes cried unto the Lord; prayed unto him with great fervency, and with a loud voice moſt fervently intreating that the frogs might be removed on the morrow, as he had promiſed, that ſo he might not be covered with ſhame and confuſion before Pharaoh; his faith of the miracle being wrought did not hinder the uſe of prayer to God for it: becauſe of the frogs which he had brought againſt Pharaoh; as an army; or put upon [z] him, as a judgment on him; or rather the ſenſe is, as it may be rendered, becauſe of the buſineſs of the frogs, which he had propoſed or promiſed to Pharaoh [a]; that is, for the taking of them away, he had propoſed to Pharaoh to fix the time when he ſhould intreat the Lord for the removal of them; and he having fixed on the morrow, Moſes promiſed it ſhould be done according to his word; and now he is importunate with the Lord, that it may be done as he had promiſed.

℣. 13. And the Lord did according to the word of Moſes, &c.] He heard his prayers, and fulfilled what he had promiſed Pharaoh: and the frogs died out of the houſes, and out of the villages, and out of the fields; the word for villages ſignifies courts [b], and may be ſo rendered here; and the ſenſe is, that they not only died out of their dwelling-houſes, but out of their court-yards, and even out of their gardens, orchards and fields, ſo that there were none near them to give any manner of trouble and offence. And their dying, and remaining dead upon the ſpot, were clear proofs that they were real frogs that were produced, and not in appearance only, as the frogs of the magicians might be; God

[u] E Trogo, l. 15. c. 2. [w] Bibliothec. l. 3. p. 164. [x] De Animal. l. 17. c. 41. [y] Apud Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 29. [z] שם לפרעה poſuit Parhoni, Pagninus, Montanus; impoſuerat, Junius & Tremellius, [a] Super cauſa vel negotio ranarum quod propoſuerat Pharaoni, Fagius. [b] מן החצרת ex atriis, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Piſcator.

God could have cauſed them to return to the river from whence they came, or have annihilated them, or removed them out of ſight in an inſtant; but the killing them, and letting them lie dead, proved the truth of the miracle, and gave apparent evidence of it both ways, both in the bringing and removing them.

℣. 14. And they gathered them together upon heaps, &c.] Swept them up, and laid them in heaps out of the way: and the land ſtank; with the ſtench of the dead frogs, which was another proof and evidence of the reality of the miracle; and that dead frogs will cauſe ſuch an ill ſmell, appears from the above account of what befel the inhabitants of Pæonia and Dardania, unleſs that ſhould be the ſame with this, only the names of places and ſome circumſtances altered; ſee the note on ver. 16.

℣. 15. But when Pharaoh ſaw that there was reſpite, &c.] From his affliction, as the Targum of Jonathan adds; the plague was removed, and he found himſelf and his people at eaſe: or there was a breathing [c]; before he and his people were ſo oppreſſed, that they could ſcarce breathe, but now being delivered from the judgment on them with which they were ſtraitened, were enlarged and at liberty, and in eaſy circumſtances: he hardened his heart; ſee the note on ch. vii. 14. and hearkened not unto them; to Moſes and Aaron, to let the children of Iſrael go, as they had required, and he had promiſed: as the Lord had ſaid; had foretold, that he would not hearken to them, nor let Iſrael go as yet.

℣. 16. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] On the 27th day of the month, according to biſhop Uſher, the ſame day the frogs were removed; no warning is given him of the next plague, at leaſt there is no account of any: ſay unto Aaron, ſtretch out thy rod, and ſmite the duſt of the land; in ſome one part of the land, that place neareſt to him where there was a quantity of duſt; for it can't be imagined that he ſhould ſmite all the duſt of the land in every part of it, but ſmiting one part ſerved for the whole: that it may become lice throughout all the land of Egypt; not gnats as ſome, nor flies as others, but lice, though perhaps not of the common and ordinary ſort, but new and extraordinary, and it may be of different ſorts, ſuitable to different creatures.

℣. 17. And they did ſo, &c.] As follows: for Aaron ſtretched out his hand with his rod; as directed and ordered: and ſmote the duſt of the earth, and it became lice in man and in beaſt; which ſhews it was a miraculous operation, ſince lice do not uſually ſpring from duſt, but from the ſweat of bodies, and the naſtineſs of them, through ſloth and idleneſs; and moreover, this was like the creation of man at firſt, which was out of the duſt of the earth, and alike the effect of almighty power: all the duſt of the land became lice throughout all the land of Egypt; that is, the greateſt part of it, not that every atom of duſt became lice, nor was the land of Goſhen, in which the Iſraelites dwelt, infected with this plague, unleſs where any of the Egyptians were; tho' Dr. Lightfoot [d] thinks, that lice were in Goſhen as in other parts of Egypt, there being no ſevering between Goſhen and Egypt mentioned until the next plague; and ſince Iſrael had partook of many of the ſins of Egypt, they muſt partake of ſome of her puniſhments; and he thinks this is the reaſon that the plague of lice is not reckoned among the plagues of Egypt in Pſ. lxxviii. becauſe it was common to Iſrael, and to the Egyptians, and which is the ſenſe of Aben Ezra on ch. vii. 24. The account that Artapanus [e], the heathen hiſtorian, gives of this plague, is this; "Moſes ſmote the earth "with a rod, and produced a certain flying ani"mal, which greatly diſtreſſed the Egyptians, and "raiſed ulcers in their bodies, which no phyſicians "could cure." And ſo Origen [f] deſcribes this creature as "having wings and flying in the air, "but ſo ſubtile and minute, as to eſcape the eye "unleſs very ſharp-ſighted; but when it lights upon a body, it ſtings moſt bitterly, ſo that what a "man can't ſee flying, he feels ſtinging." Both ſeem to deſign the gnat, but this ſort of vermin don't ſtick in and abide with men or beaſts, as theſe here are ſaid to do, but buzz about and bite, and then are gone.

℣. 18. And the magicians did ſo with their enchantments, to bring forth lice, &c.] They made uſe of their magical art, and juggling tricks they were maſters of, to produce the like ſort of creatures, or at leaſt to make ſuch appear, or ſeem to appear, to the eyes of men: but they could not; God would not ſuffer them to do it, to impoſe upon Pharaoh and deceive him and the Egyptians any longer; and a ſtop is put to them, when ſuch ſmall and deſpicable creatures were produced, the more to put them to ſhame and confuſion, and to ſhew that what they did before was not real, and that what they did in appearance was only by divine permiſſion: ſo there were lice upon man and upon beaſt; theſe lay in great numbers on both, biting and diſtreſſing them in a moſt terrible manner; for as the magicians could not produce ſuch creatures, it was not in their power to remove them.

℣. 19. Then the magicians ſaid unto Pharaoh, this is the finger of God, &c.] This is to be aſcribed to a power ſuperior to human, to a divine power; ſo long as they could do ſomething ſimilar, or impoſe upon the ſenſes of men, and make them believe they did the like, they would not acknowledge divine omnipotence; but when they no longer could deceive the ſight of Pharaoh and the Egyptians, then they own the effects of a ſuperior power: and this they did partly to detract from the power of Moſes and Aaron, becauſe they would not have them paſs for more ſkilful perſons in the magic art than themſelves; and therefore ſuggeſt, that this was done not by virtue of any human ſkill and art, but by the power of the ſupreme being; and partly to detract from the honour of the God of Iſrael; for they don't ſay this is the finger of Jehovah, whom they accounted, as Dr. Lightfoot [g] obſerves, as a petty trivial god, but this is the finger of Elohim, the ſupreme deity. It is conjectured by ſome [h], that in memory of this plague the Egyptian prieſts ſcrape their whole bodies, leſt there ſhould be a louſe or any unclean thing on them when they worſhip their gods, as Herodotus [i] relates: and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, and he hearkened not unto them; either not unto the magicians owning the hand of God, and his divine power in the plague inflicted; or to Moſes and Aaron demanding the diſmiſſion of the people of Iſrael, which latter ſeems to be confirmed by the uſual phraſe as follows, as the Lord had ſaid; ſee ch. vii. 4.

℣. 20. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, riſe up early in the morning, &c.] Of the day following, the 28th of Adar, or February, according to biſhop Uſher;

[a] רוחה reſpiratio, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Junius and Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius. [d] Works, vol. I. p. 705, 706. [e] Apud Euſeb. ut ſupra. [f] In Exod. Homil. 4. fol. 35. col. 2. [g] Ut ſupra.
[h] Vid. Scheuchzer. Phyſica Sacra, vol. I. p. 132. [i] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 37.

Uſher; this was the fitteſt time to meet with Pharaoh, and the moſt likely to make impreſſions on him: and ſtand before Pharaoh; meet him as he comes along, and ſtop him, and ſtand before him as having ſomething to ſay to him; this was uſing great boldneſs and freedom with a king; but as Moſes was ordered to do it by the King of kings, it became him to obey him; lo, he cometh forth to the water; ſee the note on ch. vii. 15. and ſay unto him, thus ſaith the Lord, let my people go that they may ſerve me; which had often been required before, but to no purpoſe, and in caſe of refuſal he is threatened as follows.

℣. 21. Elſe, if thou wilt not let my people go, &c.] But remaineſt obſtinate and inflexible: behold, I will ſend ſwarms of flies upon thee; the word uſed is generally thought to ſignify a mixture, and is interpreted by many a mixture of various creatures; the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it a mixture of wild beaſts, and ſo Joſephus [k] underſtands it, of all ſorts of beaſts, of many forms, and ſuch as were never ſeen before; according to Jarchi, all ſorts of evil beaſts are meant, as ſerpents and ſcorpions mixed together; and ſo Aben Ezra ſays it ſignifies evil beaſts mixed together, as lions, wolves, bears, and leopards; but it is not likely the houſes ſhould be filled with theſe, or the ground covered with them, as after related; and beſides, they would ſoon have deſtroyed all the inhabitants of the land, ſince as it follows they are ſaid to be upon them; rather a mixture of inſects is intended; the Septuagint verſion renders it the dog-fly, and ſo Philo the Jew [l]; which, as Pliny [m] ſays, is very troubleſome, to dogs eſpecially, about their ears, and this verſion Bochart [n] approves of: and upon thy ſervants, and upon thy people, and into thy houſes; they ſhould be ſent unto and ſettle firſt on his own perſon, and alſo on his miniſters and courtiers, and upon all his ſubjects in general, and get into their houſes, and be very troubleſome gueſts there: and the houſes of the Egyptians ſhall be full of the ſwarms of flies, and alſo the ground whereon they are; their number would be ſo very great.

℣. 22. And I will ſever in that day the land of Goſhen, in which my people dwell, &c.] Diſtinguiſh it from other parts of the land of Egypt: that no ſwarms of flies ſhall be there; which was a very wonderful thing, and ſo the word may be rendered, I will marvellouſly ſever or ſeparate [o], and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, I will do wonders or miracles in that day; as they were to make ſuch a difference in every part of the country from another, and ſo near as Goſhen was to the place where Pharaoh lived, and to bound and limit ſuch ſort of creatures as flies, which move ſwiftly from place to place, and particularly to keep the land of Goſhen clear of them; when, as biſhop Patrick obſerves, it was a country that abounded with cattel, whoſe dung is apt to breed flies: to the end thou mayeſt know, that I am the Lord in the midſt of the earth; he is God over all the earth, and rules as a King in the midſt of it, and does whatſoever he pleaſes in it; ſee Pſ. lxxiv. 12. and in the midſt of the land of Goſhen where his people dwelt, and over whom he was King in a peculiar manner, and took a peculiar care of them, to protect and defend them; and which muſt the more vex and diſtreſs the Egyptians, when they ſaw the Iſraelites clear of thoſe plagues they were afflicted with.

℣. 23. And I will put a diviſion between my people and thy people, &c.] Or, a redemption [p]; for by diſtinguiſhing them in his providence from the Egyptians, he might be ſaid to redeem or deliver them; thus God makes a difference between his choſen people and the reſt of the world, through his Son's redemption of them by his blood, out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation: tomorrow ſhall this ſign be; which, according to biſhop Uſher, muſt be the 29th day of Adar or February.

℣. 24. And the Lord did ſo, &c.] And this he did immediately of himſelf, without any means; not by the rod of Aaron, to let the Egyptians ſee that there was nothing in that rod, that it had no magic virtue in it, and what was done by it was from the Lord himſelf, who could as well inflict plagues without it as with it; ſee Pſ. cv. 31. and there came a grievous ſwarm of flies; or a heavy [q] one, which was both very numerous, and very troubleſome and diſtreſſing: into the houſe of Pharaoh, and into the houſes of his ſervants, and into all the land of Egypt; into the palace of Pharaoh, and into the palaces of his nobles, miniſters, and courtiers, and into the dwelling-places of all his ſubjects, throughout the whole land, excepting the land of Goſhen: the land was corrupted by reaſon of the ſwarm of flies; Joſephus [r] ſays, the land lay neglected and uncultivated by the huſbandmen; it may be, the air was infected by the flies, which produced a peſtilence that took off many of the inhabitants; ſo among the Eleans, as Pliny [s] reports, a multitude of flies produced a peſtilence; however, it is certain many of the inhabitants of Egypt, periſhed by them; they might ſting them to death, ſuck their blood, and poiſon them with their envenomed ſtings; ſee Pſ. lxxviii. 45.

℣. 25. And Pharaoh called for Moſes and for Aaron, &c.] He and his people not being able to endure this plague of flies any longer; and we read in prophane hiſtory, of ſuch creatures being ſo troubleſome, that people have been obliged to quit their habitations, and ſeek for new ones; ſo Pauſanias [t] relates of the inhabitants of Myus, that ſuch a number of flies roſe out of the lake, that the men were obliged to leave the city, and go to Miletus; ſo Ælian [u] reports, that the inhabitants of Megara were drove from thence by a multitude of flies, as were the inhabitants of Phaſelis by waſps, which creatures alſo might be in this mixture of inſects: and ſaid, go ye ſacrifice to your God in the land; that is, in the land of Goſhen, in the place where they were; he was willing to allow them the liberty of ſacrificing to their God, which it ſeems they had before; but then he would not conſent they ſhould go out of the land to do it.

℣. 26. And Moſes ſaid, it is not meet ſo to do, &c.] It being the command and will of God that they ſhould go 3 days journey into the wilderneſs, and ſacrifice there; and beſides, it was dangerous, the Egyptians might be provoked by their ſacrifices to fall upon them, and kill them: for we ſhall ſacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians to the Lord our God; by which Moſes is not to be underſtood as calling the idols of Egypt an abomination, as being ing ſo to God and to all good men, that were not idolaters; for though they were, Moſes would ſcarcely call them ſo before Pharaoh, when he could have made uſe of another word as well; but his meaning is, that the Iſraelites would ſacrifice that, which would be an abomination, and very deteſtable to the Egyptians for them to do. And ſo the Targum of Jonathan; "for the ſheep which "are the idols of the Egyptians, we ſhall take and "offer before the Lord our God." Herodotus [w] ſays, it was not accounted with the Egyptians lawful to ſacrifice any creature, but ſwine, and male oxen, and calves, ſuch as were clean; but nevertheleſs, as after theſe times the Egyptians did offer ſuch creatures as oxen, ſheep, and goats, at leaſt ſome of them did, biſhop Patrick thinks this may only refer to the rites and ceremonies of ſacrificing, and to the qualities and condition of the beaſts that were offered, about which the Egyptians in after ages were very curious; however, be it which it will, ſomething might be done which would diſpleaſe the Egyptians, and therefore it was beſt to ſacrifice out of their land: lo, ſhall we ſacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians before their eyes, and will they not ſtone us? riſe up in a body in great wrath, and fall upon us and ſlay us, by taking up ſtones and caſting at us, or by ſome means or another diſpatch us whilſt offering; juſt as Pilate mingled the blood of the Galileans with their ſacrifices, Luke xiii. 1. and the Egyptians were a people that greatly reſented any indignity done to their deities, and would proſecute it with great wrath and fury; as appears from an inſtance which Diodorus Siculus [x] reports he was an eye-witneſs of, as that a certain Roman having killed a cat, (which is an Egyptian deity) the mob roſe about his houſe, ſo that neither the princes ſent by the king of Egypt to intreat them, nor the common dread of the Roman name, could deliver the man from puniſhment, though he did it imprudently, and not on purpoſe.

[k] Antiqu. l. 2. c. 14. §. 3. [l] De vita Moſis. l. 1. p. 622. [m] Nat. Hiſt. l. 11. c. 34. [n] Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 4. c. 15. col. 555. [o] והפליתי faciamque mirabilem, V. L. miraculoſe agam, Fagius; marvellouſly ſever, Ainſworth. redemptionem, Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [p] פדות graviſſime, V. L. [q] כבד gravis, Montanus, gra- [r] Ut ſupra. [s] Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 28. [t] Achaica, ſive l. 7. p. 400. [u] De Animal. l. 11. c. 28.

℣. 27. We will go three days journey into the wilderneſs, &c.] As was firſt inſiſted on, and from which demand they ſhould not depart: and ſacrifice unto the Lord our God, as he ſhall command us; both what ſacrifices ſhall be offered, and the manner in which they ſhall be done, both which ſeemed for the preſent in a good meaſure undetermined and unknown; and therefore it was poſſible, and very probable, that in one or the other they ſhould give offence to the Egyptians, ſhould they ſacrifice among them, being at all events reſolved to do as the Lord ſhould command them.

℣. 28. And Pharaoh ſaid, I will let you go, that ye may ſacrifice to the Lord your God in the wilderneſs, &c.] He does not ſay 3 days, though as he allowed them to go into the wilderneſs and ſacrifice, they could not go and come again in leſs time; nor would Moſes have accepted of the grant, as it ſeems by what follows he had, if he had obliged them to leſs time: only you ſhall not go very far away; his meaning is, as Aben Ezra obſerves, that they ſhould go no further than three days journey; he was jealous that this was only an excuſe to get entirely out of his dominions, and never return more. He might have heard of their claim to the land of Canaan, and of their talk, and hope, and expectation, of going and ſettling there; and ſo underſtood this motion of theirs, to have leave to go into the wilderneſs for 3 days, to ſacrifice to the Lord, was only a pretence; that their real intention was to proceed on in their journey to Canaan; however, being in this great diſtreſs, he made as if he was willing to grant what they deſired, and very importunately urged they would pray he might be delivered from this plague: intreat for me; the words ſeem to be ſpoken in haſte, and with great eagerneſs and vehemence.

℣. 29. And Moſes ſaid, behold, I go out from thee, &c.] Directly, immediately to the place where he was wont to meet the Lord, and receive orders and inſtructions from him: and I will intreat the Lord, that the ſwarms of flies may depart from Pharaoh; for as he ſent them, he only could remove them, and he could do the one as eaſily as he did the other: from his ſervants, and from his people to-morrow; that there might be a thorough and clear riddance of them from him and all his ſubjects, and out of every part of his kingdom; which ſhould be done, and was done on the morrow, that is on the 30th day of Adar, anſwering to part of our February, and part of our March, ſo that this muſt be about the middle of March: but let not Pharaoh deal deceitfully any more, in not letting the people go to ſacrifice to the Lord; as in the plague of frogs, refuſing to let them go when it was paſt; which Moſes calls an illuſion, a mocking of them, and dealing deceitfully, to which he here refers; ſee ℣. 15.

℣. 30. And Moſes went out from Pharaoh, and intreated the Lord;] He did as he promiſed he would, and prayed to the Lord to remove the flies from Pharaoh and his people.

℣. 31. And the Lord did according to the word of Moſes, &c.] Did as he intreated him to do as follows: and he removed the ſwarms of flies from Pharaoh, from his ſervants, and from his people; by what means is not ſaid, whether by deſtroying them at once as the frogs, or by driving them away with a wind, as the locuſts afterwards: there remained not one; the meaning is not, not one ſwarm of flies, but not one fly, there was not one left; which looks as if it was in the latter way that they were removed, ſince if in the former, they would have remained, though dead, as the frogs did, for a little while.

℣. 32. And Pharaoh hardened his heart at this time alſo, &c.] As he did before, when he found the plague was removed, and the flies were gone: neither would he let the people go; through pride and covetouſneſs, being loth to have the number of thoſe under his dominion ſo much diminiſhed, and to loſe ſo large a branch of his revenues ariſing from the labour of theſe people.

[w] Euterpe, ſive l. 2. c. 41, 42, 45.

[x] Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 75.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

THIS chapter relates the plague of murrain upon the cattle, and which yet was not upon the cattle of the Iſraelites, ℣. 1—7. and the plague of boils and blains on man and beaſt, ℣. 8—11. and Pharaoh's heart being hardened, Moſes is ſent to him with a meſſage from the Lord, threatening him that all his plagues ſhould come upon him, and particularly the peſtilence, if he would not let Iſrael go; and ſignifying, that to ſhew his power in him, and declare his name throughout the earth, had he raiſed him up, and a kind of amazement is expreſſed at his obſtinacy and pride, ℣. 12—17. and he is told that a terrible ſtorm of hail ſhould fall upon the land, and deſtroy all in the field; wherefore thoſe that regarded the word of the Lord got their cattle within doors, but thoſe that did not, took no care of them, ℣. 18—21. and upon Moſes's ſtretching out his hand, when ordered by the Lord, the ſtorm began, and deſtroyed every thing in the field throughout the land, excepting the land of Goſhen, ℣. 22—26. upon which Pharaoh ſent for Moſes and Aaron, acknowledged his ſin, and the juſtice of God, begged they would intreat for him, which Moſes did; but when the ſtorm was over, Pharaoh's heart was ſtill more hardened, and he refuſed to let the people go, ℣. 27—35.

℣. 1. Then the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] The ſame day the plague of the flies was removed: go in unto Pharaoh; boldly, without any fear of him or his court: and tell him, thus ſaith the Lord God of the Hebrews; ſpeak in the name of Jehovah, the God whom the Hebrews worſhip, and who owns them for his people, and has a ſpecial love for them, and takes a ſpecial care of them, and is not aſhamed to be called their God, as poor and as oppreſſed as they be: let my people go, that they may ſerve me; this demand had been often made, and though ſo reaſonable, was refuſed.

℣. 2. For if thou refuſe to let them go, &c.] Continue to refuſe, as he had done: and wilt hold them ſtill; in the land, and under his dominion and oppreſſion.

℣. 3. Behold, the hand of the Lord, &c.] Which was ſtronger than his, with which he held the Iſraelites: is upon thy cattle which is in the field; this takes in all in general, of which the particulars follow, though limited to ſuch as were in the field, and ſo did not take in what were at home in their out-houſes and ſtables: upon the horſes; of which there was great plenty in Egypt, as appears from various places of ſcripture: upon the aſſes; uſed for carrying burdens from place to place: and upon the camels; uſed for the like purpoſes, and to ride upon, and particularly to travel with through deſart places for commerce, being able to proceed on without water for a conſiderable time: upon the oxen, and upon the ſheep; oxen were for labour to plow with, and ſheep for their wool, and all of them to trade with: there ſhall be a very grievous murrain; or peſtilence [y], a very noiſome one, and which would carry off great numbers; the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan render it a death, as the Jews commonly call a peſtilence, whether on man or beaſt, becauſe it generally ſweeps away large numbers.

℣. 4. And the Lord ſhall ſever between the cattle of Iſrael, and the cattle of Egypt, &c.] Make ſuch a difference and diſtinction between them, that the murrain ſhould not be on the one, when it was on the other, and which was a very marvellous thing; and eſpecially in the land of Goſhen, where the Egyptians had much cattle, and Pharaoh himſelf, ſee Gen. xlvii. 6. and yet, tho' the cattle of Iſrael breathed in the ſame air, drank of the ſame water, and fed in the ſame paſtures, they had not the murrain as the cattle of Egypt had; and the word here uſed ſignifies a marvellous ſeparation, as has been obſerved on ch. vii. 22: and there ſhall nothing die of all that is the childrens of Iſrael; not an horſe, nor an aſs, nor an ox, nor a ſheep.

℣. 5. And the Lord appointed a ſet time, &c.] For the coming of this plague, that it might plainly appear it came from him, and was not owing to any natural cauſe: ſaying, to-morrow the Lord ſhall do this thing in the land; thus giving him time and ſpace, as he had often done before, to conſider the matter well, repent of his obſtinacy, and diſmiſs the people of Iſrael, and ſo prevent the plague coming upon the cattle, as threatened.

℣. 6. And the Lord did that thing on the morrow, &c.] Brought a murrain, or a peſtilential diſeaſe on the cattle. This, according to biſhop Uſher, was on the 2d day of the 7th month, which afterwards became the firſt month, the month Abib, which anſwers to part of March and part of April, and ſeems to be about the 17th of March: and all the cattle of Egypt died; not all abſolutely, for we read of ſome afterwards, ℣. 9, 10, 19, 25. but all that were in the field, ℣. 3. and it may be not ſtrictly all of them, but the greateſt part of them, as Aben Ezra interprets it; ſome, and a great many of all ſorts, in which limited ſenſe the word all is frequently uſed in ſcripture: but of the cattle of the children of Iſrael died not one; at leaſt of the murrain, or by the hand of God, and perhaps not otherwiſe, which was very wonderful, ſince ſuch a diſorder is uſually catching and ſpreading.

℣. 7. And Pharaoh ſent, &c.] Meſſengers to the land of Goſhen, to ſee whether the murrain was upon the cattle of Iſrael or not, and whether any of them died or not. The Targum of Jonathan is, "he ſent to Peluſium to ſee," and enquire about this matter; that is to Raamſes, for ſo that paraphraſe calls Raamſes in ch. i. 11. a city built by the Iſraelites, and where many of them might dwell. This Pharaoh did, not merely out of curioſity, but to know whether the divine prediction was accompliſhed, and that he might have wherewith to confront it, could he find the murrain was upon any of the cattle of Iſrael, or any died of it; and if they did not, his view might be to convert them to his own uſe, and make up his loſs, and the loſs of his people, in a good meaſure in this way, and perhaps this may be the reaſon why he ſo little regarded this plague: and behold, there was not one of the cattle of the Iſraelites dead; which was very wonderful, and therefore a behold, a note of admiration is prefixed to it, yet it made no impreſſion on Pharaoh: and the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, and he did not let the people go; though this plague was ſo heavy upon him and his people, and the loſs they ſuſtained ſo great: in the other plagues plagues of the water, the frogs, lice and flies, tho' very troubleſome and terrible, yet the loſs was not very great; but here much damage was done to their property, yet this did not make his heart relent, or cauſe him to yield to let Iſrael go.

[y] דבר peſtis, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator; peſtilentia, Druſius; ſo Tigurine verſion.

℣. 8. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes and unto Aaron, &c.] This very probably was the day following, on the third day of the month Abib, about the 18th of March, that orders were given to bring on the following plague: and take to you handfuls of aſhes of the furnace; either in which the bricks were burnt, or rather in which food was boiled, ſince it can ſcarcely be thought there ſhould be brick-kiln furnaces ſo near Pharaoh's court; tho' perhaps ſome reference may be had to them, and to the labour of the children Iſrael at them, and as a juſt retaliation for their oppreſſion of them in that way. Theſe aſhes were ſuch as were blown off the coals, and though freſh, yet not ſo hot but that they could take and hold them in their hands: and let Moſes ſprinkle it towards the heaven, in the ſight of Pharaoh; this was to be done before Pharaoh, that he might be an eye-witneſs of the miracle, he himſelf ſeeing with his own eyes that nothing elſe were caſt up into the air but a few light aſhes; and this was to be done towards heaven, to ſhew that the plague or judgment came down from heaven, from the God of heaven, whoſe wrath was now revealed from thence; and Moſes he was to do this; he alone, as Philo[z] thinks, or rather both he and Aaron, ſince they were both ſpoken to, and both filled their hands with aſhes; it is moſt likely that both caſt them up into the air, though Moſes being the principal perſon, is only mentioned.

℣. 9. And it ſhall become ſmall duſt in all the land of Egypt, &c.] Which aſhes, thrown up into the air, ſhould be ſo multiplied and ſpread, as to be over all the land of Egypt, and come down like ſhowers of ſnow or ſleet every where, only of a hot and ſcalding nature; or theſe handfuls of aſhes were to be caſt up into the air, and come down in the above manner, about Pharaoh's court, as a ſign and token of what would be the caſe all over the kingdom: and ſhall be a boil breaking forth with blains; that is, theſe aſhes becoming a ſmall duſt, and falling down like the dew, ſnow, or ſleet, yet hot and burning, ſhould produce ſore boils, burning ulcers, hot carbuncles, riſing up in puſtules, bliſters and buboes, which laſt word is pretty near in ſound with the Hebrew word here uſed: upon man, and upon beaſt, throughout all the land of Egypt; ſo that, as the laſt plague affected their property, ſubſtance and riches, which in thoſe times greatly lay in cattle, this, beſides that, would affect their perſons, and give them exceeding great pain, tho' it might not iſſue in death.

℣. 10. And they took aſhes of the furnace, &c.] Which was near at hand, perhaps in Pharaoh's cook-room: and ſtood before Pharaoh; not in his palace, or in any covered room, but in ſome place open to the heaven, a court-yard or garden adjoining to the palace: and Moſes ſprinkled it up towards heaven; caſt it up in the air; this being again aſcribed to Moſes, ſeems to confirm the notion of thoſe who think he only did it; but for the reaſons before given, both may be thought to be concerned: and it became a boil breaking forth with blains, upon man, and upon beaſt; theſe falling down in the manner before deſcribed, on whomſoever they lighted, whether man or beaſt, produced ſore boils and inflammations, and raiſed bliſters and blotches; and hence aroſe thoſe lying ſcandalous ſtories of the Iſraelites being a ſcabby people, and of their being driven out of Egypt on that account, affirmed by Manetho, Lyſimachus, Diodorus Siculus, Tacitus, Juſtin, and others; ſee the note in ch. iv. 6. with this plague the firſt vial poured forth on myſtical Egypt, or antichriſt, has ſome agreement, Rev. xvi. 2.

℣. 11. And the magicians could not ſtand before Moſes, becauſe of the boils, &c.] Which were on them, as on others, and which with all their art and ſkill they could not keep off; and which were ſo ſore upon them, and painful to them, that they were obliged to withdraw, and could not ſtand their ground, confronting Moſes, conteſting and litigating with him; for it ſeems, though they had not acted, nor attempted to act in imitation of Moſes and Aaron, ſince the plague of the lice, yet they ſtill continued about Pharaoh, leſſening as much as in them lay the miracles wrought by them, and ſuggeſting that they had done the moſt and the worſt they could, and ſo contributing to harden the heart of Pharaoh againſt the people of Iſrael; wherefore they were righteouſly puniſhed with boils for ſo doing, and for their contempt of the meſſengers and miracles of God, and for their impoſition upon men, and their deception of them: for the boil was upon the magicians, and upon all the Egyptians; but not upon Moſes and Aaron, nor upon any of the Iſraelites, and was afterwards called peculiarly the botch of Egypt, Deut. xxviii. 27.

℣. 12. And the Lord hardened the heart of Pharaoh, &c.] He having often, and ſo long hardened his own heart, God gave him up to judicial hardneſs of heart, to his own corruptions, the temptations of ſatan, and the lying magicians about him, to make an ill uſe of every thing that offered to him, and put a wrong conſtruction on all that befel him, ſo that whatever was ſaid to him, or inflicted on him, made no impreſſion to any purpoſe: and he hearkened not unto them; to Moſes and Aaron, and to the Lord by them: as the Lord had ſpoken to Moſes; both that he would harden his heart, and he ſhould not hearken to them; all this was no other than what the Lord had ſaid ſhould be, ch. iv. 21. and vii. 4.

℣. 13. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, riſe up early in the morning, and ſtand before Pharaoh, &c.] Who it ſeems uſed to riſe early in the morning, and ſo was a fit time to meet with him, and converſe with him; it might be one of the mornings in which he uſed to go to the water early, though not mentioned, unleſs that was every morning: and ſay unto him, thus ſaith the Lord God of the Hebrews, let my people go, that they may ſerve me; thus had he line upon line, and precept upon precept, ſo that he was the more inexcuſable, ſee ℣. 1.

℣. 14. For I will at this time ſend all my plagues upon thy heart, &c.] Not meaning particularly the plague of the hail, which next follows, ſo called, becauſe it conſiſted of various things, as hail, rain, lightening and thunder, as Aben Ezra, and who obſerves, that Pharaoh was more terrified with this plague, than with any other; but rather all the plagues yet to come, for by them are not meant all the plagues that were in the power of God to inflict, which how many and great they are none can ſay, but all that he had determined in his mind to bring upon him; and theſe ſhould not ſo much affect and afflict his body, as the boils and ulcers had the magicians, but ſhould reach his heart, and fill him with horror and terror: and upon thy ſervants, and upon thy people; even all that that he intended to bring not only upon himself, but upon his subjects, both high and low: that thou mayst know, that there is none like unto me in all the earth; for the perfections of his nature, and the works of his hands, particularly his providential dealings with the sons of men, and especially with him.

[z] De vita Moſis, l. 1. p. 622.

℣. 15. For now will I stretch out my hand, that I may smite thee and thy people with pestilence, &c.] Which yet we never find was done; for though this by many is referred to the slaying of the first-born, yet it is not certain that this was done by the pestilence: besides, Pharaoh was not then smitten, nor his people, only their first-born; wherefore these words are to be rendered, not in the future, but in the imperfect or præterpluperfect tense, thus; for when now I stretched out my hand, or if now I had stretched out my hand to smite thee and thy people with pestilence [a]; that is, at the time when he smote the cattle with the murrain or pestilence, when he could as well have smote him and his people with it; there was no want of power in God to do it, and had he done it, it would have been all over with him and them: and thou shalt be cut off from the earth; or thou hadst been, or wouldest have been cut off from the earth [b], must have perished out of it, and been no more in the land of the living.

℣. 16. And in very deed, for this cause have I raised thee up, &c.] Or but truly or verily [c]; instead of smiting thee with the pestilence, and cutting thee off out of the land of the living, I have raised thee up, made thee to stand [d], to continue in being; I have preserved thee from perishing by the former plagues, and have reserved thee for greater judgments and sorer punishments. It may take in all that God did to him; the constitution and appointment of him to all this in his eternal mind; his bringing him into being, and raising him up to kingly dignity; preserving him from perishing by the pestilence; boils and blains, and keeping him for future evils, and all upon this account for the following reasons: for to shew in thee my power; in working miracles, inflicting judgments one after another, and especially in destroying him and his host in the Red Sea: and that my name may be declared throughout all the earth; as it has been more by that last action than by all the rest of the plagues; though in all, his sovereignty, wisdom, power, patience, long-suffering and justice, are most visibly displayed and glorified.

℣. 17. As yet exaltest thou thyself against my people, that thou wilt not let them go?] And so against God himself, disobeying his commands, despising his messengers, and slighting his miracles, and hardening his heart against him, and refusing to let Israel go after all; thereby shewing the most intolerable pride and insolence not only against the Lord's poor people, but against himself, for what is done to them he takes as done to himself; or dost thou still tread upon my people? [e] trample them under foot, and make an highway or cause-way of them.

℣. 18. Behold, to-morrow about this time, &c.] It was now the 4th day of the month Abib, and the 5th when the following was inflicted: I will cause it to rain a very grievous hail; which should fall very thick, and the hailstones be very numerous and heavy, and the storm last long: such as hath not been in Egypt since the foundation thereof, even until now; not since the earth or land itself was founded, for that was founded when the rest of the world was, and the sense then would be the same as since the foundation of the world; and so the Targum of Jonathan seems to understand it, paraphrasing the words, "from the day that men were "made, even until now." And a like expression is used of a storm of hail, thunder and lightening, and earthquakes yet to come, which will be such as has not been since men were upon the earth, with which this plague may be compared, Rev. xvi. 18, 21. but here is meant since Egypt was inhabited, or rather formed into a kingdom, and founded as such, which had been many hundreds of years before this time; there was a king of Egypt in Abraham's time; the first founder of this empire, and king of it, was Mizraim, the son of Ham, from whom it had its name, by which it is usually called in scripture. This supposes that it did sometimes rain in Egypt, contrary to a vulgar notion, or otherwise there would have been no room for the comparison; though it must be owned that rain is rare in Egypt, especially in some parts of it; see the note on Zech. xiv. 18.

℣. 19. Send therefore now, and gather thy cattle, and all that thou hast in the field, &c.] The servants that were at work there: this is said to denote both the certainty of the plague, and the terribleness of it, that all, both men and beast, would perish by it, if care was not taken to get them home; and also to shew the wonderful clemency and mercy of God to such rebellious, hardened and undeserving creatures, as Pharaoh and his people were; in the midst of wrath and judgment God remembers mercy: for upon every man and beast which shall be found in the field, and shall not be brought home; and there sheltered in houses, barns and stables: the hail-stones shall come down upon them, and they shall die; the hail-stones that would fall would be so large and so heavy as to kill both men and beasts, like those which fell from heaven upon the Canaanites in the days of Joshua, which killed more than the sword did, Josh. x. 11.

℣. 20. He that feared the word of the Lord among the servants of Pharaoh, &c.] Who if they had not the true fear of God, and were not sincere proselytes, yet had a servile fear of him, and dreaded his word, his threatening, his denunciations of judgments and predictions of future punishments; of which they had had many instances wherein they were fulfilled, and therefore had reason to fear that this also would, even the word that had been just now spoken: made his servants and cattle flee into the houses; called home his servants, and drove his cattle in great haste out of the fields, and brought them home as fast as he could, and housed them; in which he acted the wise and prudent part, and shewed a concern for his servants and his cattle, as well as believed the word of the Lord.

℣. 21. And he that regarded not the word of the Lord, &c.] Or set not his heart [f] unto it, took no notice of it, but treated it with the utmost contempt; and of this sort it may be thought there were the far greatest number: every one of this cast left his servants and cattle in the field; let them remain remain there, and took no care of them, nor thought about them, and ſo took no methods to preſerve them; in which he acted a fooliſh part, to his own detriment and loſs.

[a] כי עתה שלחתי modo enim cum extendi, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Drusius, vel si extendissem, Fagius, Coccius; so Jarchi, Gersom, Targ. Onk. & Jon. [b] ותכחד sic fuisses excisus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Drusius, Cocceius. [c] ואולם veruntamen, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Drusius, Fagius; so Ainsworth. [d] העמדתיך stare fecite, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus. [e] עודך מסתולל בעמי adhuc tu calcas populum meum? some in Drusius; so Jarchi. [f] לא שם לבו non posuit cor suum, Pagninus, Montanus, Piscator, Fagius.

℣. 22. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] When the morrow was come, the 5th day of the month Abib: ſtretch forth thine hand toward heaven; with his rod in it, as appears from the next verſe, to ſhew that the following plague would come from the heaven, that is, the air, and from God, who dwells in the heaven of heavens: that there may be hail in all the land of Egypt; not only in that ſpot, and near it, where Moſes ſtood, and from that part of the heaven towards which he ſtretched forth his hand, but from the whole heaven all over the land of Egypt; which ſhows it to be an unuſual and extraordinary hail, for a hail-ſtorm ſeldom reaches far, a mile it may be, or ſome ſuch ſpace; but never was ſuch a one heard of as to reach through a whole country, and ſo large a one as Egypt: upon man and upon beaſt; ſuch as belonged to thoſe who would take no warning, nor attend to the word of the Lord to fetch home their ſervants and cattle: and upon every herb of the field throughout the land of Egypt; it ſhould fall ſo thick, that ſcarce an herb would eſcape it.

℣. 23. And Moſes ſtretched forth his rod towards heaven, &c.] The ſame which Aaron had made uſe of before, but was now in the hand of Moſes, and whoſe rod it properly was: and the Lord ſent thunder and hail, and the fire ran along the ground; hot thunder-bolts, which ſtruck their flocks, Pſ. lxxviii. 48. and hail which fell ſo thick and weighty as to deſtroy both men and cattle, and break trees in pieces, and ſpoil the corn, the graſs, and the tender herb; and fire, that is lightning, which deſcended ſo low, and in ſuch quantities, as run along the ground, and conſumed all it met with. Artapanus [g], an heathen writer, who ſpeaks of this ſtorm of hail, ſays, that Moſes beſides the hail cauſed earthquakes by night, ſo that thoſe that eſcaped the earthquakes were taken away by the hail, and thoſe that eſcaped the hail, periſhed by the earthquakes, which he ſays overthrew all the houſes, and moſt of the temples: and the Lord rained hail upon the land of Egypt; upon Egypt, where rain was not common, and on all the land of Egypt, when in ſome parts of it it was ſcarce known, and hail as thick as rain; ice, ſnow and hail are moſt rarely if ever ſeen there, the air not being cold enough for the production of them [h]. This was the Lord's immediate doing, when there was no likelihood of it, nor any appearance of ſecond cauſes concurring to produce it, and came at the exact time he had foretold it ſhould; all which were very extraordinary.

℣. 24. So there was hail, and fire mingled with the hail, &c.] Which was a miracle within a miracle, as Aben Ezra obſerves; and very wonderful indeed it was, that the hail did not quench the fire, nor the fire melt the hail, as Philo the Jew [i] remarks: very grievous, ſuch as there was none like it in all the land of Egypt, ſince it became a nation; ſee the note on ℣. 18.

℣. 25. And the hail ſmote throughout all the land of Egypt, &c.] It was in all the land, and it ſmote and did miſchief in all parts of it, only in Goſhen, after excepted: all that was in the field, both man and beaſt; which they that neglected the word of the Lord took no care to fetch home, theſe were all ſmitten and deſtroyed by the hail: and the hail ſmote every herb of the field; that is, the greateſt part of them, for ſome were left, which the locuſts afterwards eat, ch. x. 15. and brake every tree of the field; and the vines and fig-trees, Pſ. lxxviii. 47. and cv. 33.

℣. 26. Only in the land of Goſhen, where the children of Iſrael were, was there no hail.] So that ſuch Egyptians as might dwell among them, they, their ſervants, their cattle, and their fruits, eſcaped this plague; and oftentimes do wicked men fare the better for the people of God that are among them.

℣. 27. And Pharaoh ſent, &c.] Not perſons to obſerve whether there was any hail fell in the land of Goſhen, though there are ſome [k] that ſo ſupply the words; but it can't be thought that Pharaoh would ſend, or that any would go thither amidſt ſuch a ſtorm of thunder and hail; but he ſent meſſengers, and called Moſes and Aaron; who might be in his palace, at leaſt not very far off: and ſaid unto them, I have ſinned this time; not but that he had ſinned before, and muſt be conſcious of it, particularly in breaking his promiſe ſo often; but now he acknowledged his ſin, which he had never done before: and this confeſſion of ſin did not ariſe from a true ſenſe of it, from hatred of it, and ſorrow for it as committed againſt God; but from the fright he was in, the horror of his mind, the dread of the preſent plague being continued; and the terror of death that ſeized him, the rebounding noiſe of the thunder in his ears, the flaſhes of lightening in his face, and the hail-ſtones beating upon the top of his houſe, and againſt the windows and ſides of it, frightened him exceedingly, and forced this confeſſion from him: the Lord is righteous, and I and my people are wicked; which was well ſpoken, had it been ſerious and from his heart; for God is righteous in his nature, and in all his works, and in all thoſe judgments he had inflicted upon him; and he and his people were wicked in uſing the Iſraelites in ſuch a cruel manner, and in detaining them when it had been promiſed them again and again that they ſhould have leave to go, and eſpecially in rebelling againſt God, and diſobeying his commands.

℣. 28. Intreat the Lord, for it is enough, &c.] Hail, thunder and lightening enough; or pray that this may be enough, and thought ſufficient, and that there may be no more; or intreat the Lord, and much [l]; pray and pray much, pray earneſtly and without interceſſion until the plague ceaſes: that there be no more mighty thunderings and hail; or voices of God [m]; for thunder is the voice of God, and theſe thunderings or voices were very loud, the claps were very terrible to hear, and the hail was very grievous and heavy, and the whole was very amazing and frightful, and the more to Pharaoh, who perhaps had never heard the voice of thunder, or ſeen an hail-ſtorm before, even a common one, theſe being rare in the land of Egypt: and I will let you go, and ye ſhall ſtay no longer; go the three days journey into the wilderneſs, directly and immediately; he would not put it off on any account, and much leſs refuſe to let them go at all, as he had often done.

℣. 29. And Moſes ſaid unto him, as ſoon as I am gone out of the city, &c.] Zoan or Tanis, for it was in the field of Zoan where theſe wonders were wrought, Pſ. lxxviii. 12, 43. the reaſon why he went out of the city to pray, Jarchi ſays, was, becauſe becauſe it was full of idols; but the truer reaſon was, that he might be private and alone whilſt he was praying to God; and perhaps he went out alſo to ſhew that he was not frightened at the ſtorm, or afraid of being deſtroyed by it, and was confident of preſervation in the midſt of it, in the open field, by the power of God, whom he ſerved: I will ſpread abroad my hands unto the Lord; which was a prayer-geſture directed to by the light of nature, and was uſed very anciently, and by the heathens, as well as others; of which the learned Rivet has given many inſtances in his comment on this text: and the thunder ſhall ceaſe, neither ſhall there be any more hail; this he had faith in, and full aſſurance of before he prayed for it; he knew the mind and will of God, and not only he knew what he could do, but what he would do, and which he tells Pharaoh of before-hand; which was a full proof that he was a god to Pharaoh, as the Lord ſaid he had made him, ch. vii. 1. that thou mayeſt know how that the earth is the Lord's; that the whole earth is his, and therefore he can do, and does in it whatever he pleaſes; as the heavens alſo are his, and therefore can cauſe thunder, lightening, hail and rain, and ſtop them when he thinks fit; or that the land of Egypt particularly was his, and not Pharaoh's, and therefore could deſtroy, or ſave it at his pleaſure; and particularly it being his, Pharaoh had no right to detain his people in it againſt his will, who was Lord of it.

[g] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 435, 436. [h] Vid. Scheuchzer. Phyſica Sacra, vol. 1. p. 139.
[i] De vita Moſis, l. 1. p. 620. [k] Miſiſſet qui obſervarent, Junius & Tremellius. [l] העתירי־ורב orate multum, Rivet. [m] קלת אלהים voces Dei, Montanus, Druſius.

℣. 30. But as for thee, and thy ſervants, &c.] Notwithſtanding the confeſſion of ſin he had made, and his earneſt requeſt that the Lord might be intreated to remove this plague, and though he had been aſſured it would be removed: I know that ye will not yet fear the Lord God; they had not feared him yet; the confeſſion of ſin made did not ariſe from the true fear of God, but from a dread of puniſhment, and when delivered from this plague, the goodneſs of God would have no ſuch effect as to cauſe him and his ſervants to fear the Lord; or I know, that before ye were afraid of the face of the Lord God [n], which Kimchi [o] and Ben Melech interpret thus, "I know that thou and thy ſervants, "before I pray for you, are afraid of the face of "the Lord God, but after I have prayed, and the "thunders and rain are ceaſed, ye will ſin again;" and ſo they did.

℣. 31. And the flax and the barley was ſmitten, &c.] With the hail, thunder and lightning, and were beat down, bruiſed, broken, and blaſted, and deſtroyed; of the former there were great quantities produced in Egypt, which was famous for linen, much was made there, and there were many that wrought in fine flax, ſee Iſ. xix. 9. and the latter were uſed not only to feed their cattle, but to make a drink of, as we do, ale and ſtrong beer; and ſo the Egyptians uſe it to this day, as Dr. Shaw [p] ſays, both to feed their cattle, and after it is dried and parched, to make a fermented, intoxicating liquor, called bonzah; probably the ſame with the barley-wine of the ancients, and a ſpecies of the ſicar, or ſtrong drink of the ſcriptures: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was bolled; or in the ſtalk, quite grown up, and ſo the ears of the one were beat off, and the ſtalks of the other battered with the hail, and broken and deſtroyed.

℣. 32. But the wheat and the rye were not ſmitten, &c.] Bruiſed, broken, beat down, and deſtroyed by hail: the word by us rendered rye, and by others Fitches or Spelt, is thought by Dr. Shaw [q] to be rice, of which there were and ſtill are plantations in Egypt; whereas rye is little, if at all known in thoſe countries, and beſides is of the quickeſt growth; and he obſerves that rice was the olyra of the ancient Egyptians, by which word the Septuagint render the Hebrew word here; and from Pliny [r] we learn, that olyra and oryza or rice are the ſame, and which with the Greeks is zea, by which ſome tranſlate the word here: for they were not grown up; and ſo their leaves, as the ſame traveller obſerves, were at that time of ſo ſoft and yielding a nature, that the hail by meeting with no reſiſtance, as from the flax and barley, did them no harm; and ſo the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions render it: they were late; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi interpret it: for the wheat-harveſt with the Jews, and ſo with the Egyptians, was later than the barley-harveſt, there being about a month's difference between them: ſome render the word dark or hidden [s], becauſe, as Aben Ezra ſays, they were now under ground; and if this was the caſe, indeed the reaſon is ſtrong why they were not ſmitten; but this was not the caſe, for, according to Pliny [t], there was but one month's difference in Egypt between the barley and the wheat; but rather, they are ſaid to be ſo, becauſe the ear was as yet hid, and was not come forth; it juſt began to ſpindle, or, as the above traveller explains it, they were of a dark-green colour, as young corn generally is, in contradiſtinction to its being of a bright yellow or golden colour, when it is ripe; for, adds he, the context ſuppoſes the wheat and the rice not only to have been ſown, but to have been likewiſe in ſome forwardneſs, as they well might be in the month of Abib, anſwering to our March.

℣. 33. And Moſes went out of the city from Pharaoh, &c.] Into the field, where, being retired from company, he could freely and without being diſturbed, pray unto God: and ſpread abroad his hands unto the Lord; denoting the ſpreading of caſes before God, and expectation, hope and readineſs to receive favours from him: and the thunder and hail ceaſed; immediately upon the intreaty of Moſes; ſee the power and prevalence of prayer: a like inſtance we have in Elijah, Jam. 5. 17, 18. and the rain was not poured upon the earth; ſo that there was rain as well as hail, which was reſtrained and entirely ceaſed.

℣. 34. And when Pharaoh ſaw that the rain, and the hail, and the thunders were ceaſed, &c.] And there was a clear ſky and a fine ſerene heaven, the black clouds were diſperſed and gone, and he heard no more the clattering of the hail-ſtones, and the terrible claps of thunder, and ſaw no more the flaſhes of lightening, but all was calm and compoſed: he ſinned yet more, and hardened his heart, he and his ſervants; inſtead of giving glory to God who had heard the prayers of Moſes and Aaron for them, and had delivered them from their frights and fears, and the terror and horror they were in, and of letting the people of Iſrael go, ſee Rev. 16. 21.

℣. 35. And the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, &c.] Inſtead of being ſoftened, as it ſeemed to be when under the plague, it became harder and harder when delivered from it: neither would he let the children of Iſrael go; though he had ſo abſolutely promiſed it, and aſſured them that he would would not keep them, and that they ſhould not ſtay any longer: as the Lord had ſpoken by Moſes; that ſo his heart would be hardened until the ſigns and wonders were multiplied upon him, God deſigned to perform, ch. iv. 21. and vii. 3.

[n] טרם תיראון priuſquam timeretis, Tigurine verſion. [o] Sepher Shoraſh. rad. טרם. [p] Travels, tom. 2. c. 2. § 5. p. 407. Ed 2. [q] Ibid. [r] Nat. Hiſt. l. 18. c. 7. 9. [s] אפילת caliginoſa, Montanus, Vatablus; latuerant, Tigurine verſion; latentia, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius. [t] Ut ſupra.

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter is introduced with giving the reaſons why the Lord hardened the heart of Pharaoh, ¥. 1, 2. Moſes and Aaron go in to him, and once more demanded in the name of the Lord the diſmiſſion of the people of Iſrael, and in caſe of refuſal, threatened him with locuſts being ſent into his country, which ſhould make terrible havock in all his coaſts, ¥. 3—6. the ſervants of Pharaoh intreat him to let them go, upon which Moſes and Aaron are brought in again and treated with about the terms of their departure; but they, inſiſting upon taking all with them, men, women and children, and flocks and herds, and Pharaoh not willing that any but men ſhould go, they are drove from his preſence in wrath, ¥. 7—11. wherefore the locuſts were brought on all the land, which made ſad devaſtation in it, ¥. 12—15. and this wrought on Pharaoh ſo far as to acknowledge his ſin, pray for forgiveneſs, and to deſire Moſes and Aaron to intreat the Lord to remove the plague, which they did, and it was removed accordingly, but ſtill Pharaoh's heart was hardened, ¥. 16—20. then followed the plague of thick darkneſs over all the land for three days, which brought Pharaoh to yield that all ſhould go with them excepting their flocks and herds; but Moſes not only inſiſted that not a hoof ſhould be left behind, but that Pharaoh ſhould give them ſacrifices and burnt-offerings, ¥. 21—26. Pharaoh's heart was hardened and he refuſed to comply, and Moſes was bid to be gone, and take care never to ſee his face any more, and which Moſes agreed to, ¥. 27, 28, 29.

¥. 1. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, go in unto Pharaoh, for I have hardened his heart, &c.] Or as ſome render it, though I have hardened his heart [u]; or otherwiſe it would ſeem rather to be a reaſon he ſhould not go, than why he ſhould; at leaſt it would be diſcouraging, and he might object to what purpoſe ſhould he go, it would be in vain, no end would be anſwered by it; though there was an end God had in view, and which was anſwered by hardening his heart, and the heart of his ſervants; whoſe hearts alſo were hardened until now; until the plague of the locuſts was threatened, and then they relent; which end was as follows: that I might ſhew theſe my ſigns before him; which had been ſhewn already, and others that were to be done, ſee, ch. vii. 3. or in the midſt of him [w], in the midſt of his land, or in his heart, ſee ch. ix. 14.

¥. 2. And that thou mayeſt tell in the ears of thy ſon, and of thy ſon's ſon, &c.] Not of his ſons and grandſons only; for Moſes here, as Aben Ezra obſerves, was in the ſtead of Iſrael; and the ſenſe is, that it ſhould be told to their poſterity in all ſucceeding ages: what things I have wrought in Egypt; the plagues that he inflicted on the Egyptians: and my ſigns which I have done amongſt them; meaning the ſame things which were ſigns: that ye may know how that I am the Lord; that their God is the true Jehovah, and the one only living and true God; the Lord God omnipotent, omniſcient, omnipreſent, infinite and eternal.

¥. 3. And Moſes and Aaron came in unto Pharaoh, &c.] As the Lord commanded them, for what is before ſaid to Moſes was deſigned for Aaron alſo, his prophet and ſpokeſman: and ſaid unto him, thus ſaith the Lord God of the Hebrews; as the ambaſſadors of the God of Iſrael, and in his name ſaid: how long wilt thou refuſe to humble thyſelf before me? to acknowledge his offence, lie low before God, and be ſubject to his will; he had humbled himſelf for a moment, but then this did not continue; what God expected of him, and complains of the want of, was ſuch a continued humiliation before him, and ſuch a ſubjection to him, as would iſſue in complying with what he had ſo often demanded of him, and is as follows: let my people go, that they may ſerve me; ſee ch. ix. 1, 13.

¥. 4. Elſe, if thou refuſe to let my people go, &c.] He threatens him with the following plague, the plague of the locuſts, which Pliny [x] calls deorum iræ peſtis: behold, to-morrow will I bring the locuſts into thy coaſt; according to biſhop Uſher [y] this was about the 7th day of the month Abib, that this plague was threatened, and on the morrow, which was the 8th day, it was brought; but Aben Ezra relates it as an opinion of Japhet an Hebrew writer, that there were many days between the plague of the hail, and the plague of the locuſts, that there might be time for the graſs and plants to ſpring out of the field; but this ſeems not neceſſary, for theſe locuſts only eat of what were left of the hail, as in the following verſe.

¥. 5. And they ſhall cover the face of the earth, that one cannot be able to ſee the earth, &c.] Or, cover the eye of the earth [z]; either the appearance and colour of the earth, ſo as they could not be diſcerned for the multitude of the locuſts on it; ſo the word is uſed in Numb. xi. 7. or the eye of man looking upon the earth, which would not be able to ſee it, becauſe the locuſts would be between his eye and the earth. The Targum of Onkelos is, "and ſhall cover the eye of the ſun of the earth," ſo that its rays ſhall not reach the earth; and ſo Abarbinel interprets it of the ſun, which is the light of the earth, when it caſts forth its rays, as the eye upon the object that is ſeen; and the meaning is, that the locuſts ſhould be ſo thick between the heavens and the earth, that the eye of the earth, which is the ſun, could not ſee or caſt its rays upon it, as in ¥. 15. and ſo Pliny ſays [a], that locuſts came ſometimes in ſuch multitudes as to darken the ſun: and they ſhall eat the reſidue of that which is eſcaped, which remaineth unto you from the hail; particularly the wheat and the rye, or rice, which was not grown, ch. ix. 32. and the herb or graſs of the land, ¥. 12. and ſhall eat every tree which groweth for you out of the field; ſuch fruit-trees as eſcaped the hail, and ſuch boughs and branches of them which were not broken off by it, ¥. 15. and locuſts will indeed eat trees themſelves, the bark of them,

[u] כי quamvis, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth. Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth.
[x] Nat. Hiſt. l. 11, 29.
[a] Ibid.
[w] בקרבו in medio ejus, Pagninus, Druſius; in interioribus ejus, Montanus.
[y] Annales Vet. Teſt. p. 21.
[z] עין הארץ oculum terræ, Montanus, them, and gnaw every thing, even the doors of houſes, as Pliny [b] relates.

℣. 6. They ſhall fill thy houſes, &c.] The king's palace and all the offices of it: and the houſes of thy ſervants; the palaces of his nobles and courtiers: and the houſes of all the Egyptians; of all the common people, not only in the metropolis, but in all the cities and towns in the kingdom; and ſo Dr. Shaw [c] ſays, the locuſts he ſaw in Barbary in the years 1724 and 1725, climbed as they advanced over every tree or wall that was in their way; nay, they entered into our very houſes and bed-chambers, he ſays, like ſo many thieves: which neither thy fathers, nor thy fathers fathers, have ſeen ſince the day they were upon the earth unto this day; for bigneſs, for numbers, and for the miſchief they ſhould do; for though they have ſometimes appeared in great numbers, and have covered a large ſpot of ground where they have ſettled, and devoured all green things, yet never as to cover a whole country at once, and ſo large a one as Egypt, and deſtroy all green things in it; at leaſt, never ſuch a thing had been ſeen or known in Egypt before ſince it was a nation, though it was a country ſometimes viſited by locuſts; for Pliny [d] ſays, that in the country of Cyreniaca, which was near Egypt, ſee Acts ii. 10. there was a law made for the diminiſhing of them, and keeping them under, to be obſerved 3 times a year, firſt by breaking their eggs, then deſtroying their young, and when they were grown up: and he turned himſelf, and went out from Pharaoh; as ſoon as Moſes had delivered his meſſage, perceiving anger in Pharaoh's countenance, and concluding from hence and ſome geſtures of his, that he ſhould not ſucceed, and perhaps might be bid to go away, though it is not recorded; or he looked and went out from him [e], in honour to the king, as R. Jeſhuah obſerves, he went backward with his face to the king; he did not turn his back upon him, but went out with his face to him; and which as it was and is the manner in the Eaſtern countries, ſo it is with us at this day, to go from the preſence of the king, not with the back, but with the face turned toward him, ſo long as he is to be ſeen.

℣. 7. And Pharaoh's ſervants ſaid to him, &c.] His courtiers and counſellors, ſuch of them as were not ſo hardened as others, or however now began to relent, and dreaded what would be the conſequence of things, even the ruin of the whole country, the good of which they ſeem to have had at heart: how long ſhall this man be a ſnare unto us? an occaſion of ruin and deſtruction, as birds by a ſnare; they ſpeak in a contemptuous manner of Moſes, calling him this man, the rather to ingratiate themſelves into the good will of Pharaoh, and that their advice might be the better and the eaſier taken: let the men go, that they may ſerve the Lord their God; that is, Moſes and his people, grant them their requeſt, that the land may be preſerved from ruin; for if things go on long at this rate, utter deſtruction muſt enſue: knoweſt thou not yet that Egypt is deſtroyed? as good as ruined, by the plagues that already were come upon it, eſpecially by the laſt, by the murrain and boils upon the cattle, which deſtroyed great quantities, and by the hail which had ſmitten their flax and their barley; or, muſt thou firſt know that Egypt is deſtroyed? before thou wilt let the people go; or doſt thou firſt wiſh, or is it thy pleaſure, that it ſhould be firſt declared to thee that Egypt is deſtroyed, as Aben Ezra interprets it, before thou wilt grant the diſmiſſion of this people? The Targum of Jonathan is, "doſt "thou not yet know, that by his hands the land "of Egypt muſt periſh?" ſee the notes on ch. i. 15. and ii. 15.

℣. 8. And Moſes and Aaron were brought again unto Pharaoh, &c.] Upon this motion of his miniſters, meſſengers were ſent to bring them in again: and he ſaid, go ſerve the Lord your God; as you have often deſired: but who are they that ſhall go? or, who and who [f]; for Pharaoh was unwilling that they ſhould all go, but would have ſome retained as pledges of their return; for he was jealous of a deſign to get out of his country, and never return again, which he could not bear the thoughts of, even of loſing ſuch a large number of men he had under his power, and from whom he received ſo much profit and advantage by their labour.

℣. 9. Moſes ſaid, we will go with our young and with our old, &c.] The latter were neceſſary to guide, direct, and inſtruct in the buſineſs of ſacrifice, and to perform it as heads of their reſpective families; and the former were to be preſent, that they might be trained up and inured to ſuch religious ſervices: with our ſons and with our daughters; as with perſons of every age, ſo of every ſex, who had all a concern herein, eſpecially as it was a ſolemn feaſt, which all were to partake of: with our flocks and with our herds will we go; which were requiſite for the ſacrifices, not knowing which they were to ſacrifice, and with which to ſerve God, till they came to the place where they were to ſacrifice; ſee ℣. 26. for we muſt hold a feaſt unto the Lord; which required the preſence of old and young, men, women, and children, to join in it, and their flocks and their herds, out of which it was to be made.

℣. 10. And he ſaid unto them, let the Lord be ſo with you, as I will let you go, and your little ones, &c.] Either as mocking them, let the Lord you talk of be with you if he will, and let him deliver you if he can, as I ſhall let you go with your children, which I never will; or as wiſhing them ill, that the Lord their God may be with them, as he ſhould diſmiſs them on their propoſal, that is, not at all; he wiſhes they might never have the preſence of the Lord, or receive any bleſſing from him, till he ſhould diſmiſs them, which he was determined never to do in the manner they deſired; and therefore the ſum of his wiſh or imprecation is, that they might never enjoy any benefits from the Lord; the firſt ſenſe ſeems to be beſt: look to it, for evil is before you; which is either a charge of ſin upon them, that they had an evil deſign upon him, and intended to raiſe a mutiny, make an inſurrection, and form a rebellion againſt him; or a threatening to inflict the evil of puniſhment upon them, if they would not comply with his terms; and it is as if he ſhould ſay, be it at your peril if you offer to go away, in any other manner than it is my pleaſure.

℣. 11. Not ſo, &c.] You ſhall not go with your children as you propoſe: go now ye that are men, and ſerve the Lord, for that you did deſire; ſuggeſting that that was all they firſt required, that their men ſhould go three days into the wilderneſs, and ſacrifice unto the Lord; whereas the demand was, let my people go, ch. v. 1. which were not the men only, but the women and children alſo, and all were were concerned in the ſervice of God, and in keeping a feaſt to him: and they were driven out from Pharaoh's preſence; by ſome of his officers, according to his orders.

[b] Ibid. [c] Travels, p. 187, Edit. 2. [d] Ut ſupra. [e] ויפן et reſpexit, Pagninus, et reſpiciens exivit, &c. Tigurine verſion. [f] מי ומי qui & qui, Pagninus, Montanus; quis & quis, Vatablus.

℣. 12. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Stretch out thine hand over the land of Egypt, &c.] Firſt one way, and then another, towards every quarter and every part of the land, to ſignify that the following plague would come upon the whole land: for the locuſts, that they may come up upon the land of Egypt; the ſtretching out of his hand was to be the ſignal to them, to come up and ſpread themſelves over the land, which was brought about by the mighty power of God; for otherwiſe there was no ſuch virtue in the hand or rod of Moſes, to have produced ſo ſtrange an event: and eat every herb of the land, even all that the hail hath left; the wheat and the rye, or rice, the graſs, herbs, and plants, it had beat down, but not utterly deſtroyed, as well as ſome boughs and branches of trees which were left unbroken by it.

℣. 13. And Moſes ſtretched forth his rod over the land of Egypt, &c.] His hand with his rod in it: and the Lord brought an eaſt-wind upon the land, all that day and all that night; all that day after he had been driven from Pharaoh, and after he had ſtretched out his hand with his rod in it over Egypt, which was the ſeventh of the month Abib, and all the night following. This Jehovah did, who holds the winds in his fiſt, and brings them out of his treaſures, whoſe will they obey, and whoſe word they fulfil: and when it was morning; the morrow was come, ℣. 4. the 8th day of the month Abib: the eaſt wind brought the locuſts; it was uſual for theſe creatures to be taken up and carried with the wind, and brought into countries, as Pliny [g] and other writers atteſt. In the year 1527, a ſtrong wind brought vaſt troops of locuſts out of Turkey into Poland, which did much miſchief; and in the year 1536 a wind from the Euxine Pontus brought ſuch vaſt numbers of them into Podolia, as that for 20 miles round they devoured every thing [h]. The word here uſed commonly ſignifies the eaſt wind, and ſo the Jewiſh writers unanimouſly interpret it; and if thoſe locuſts were brought from the Red Sea, into which they were carried, it muſt be by an eaſt-wind, ſince the Red Sea was eaſt of Egypt; but the Septuagint verſion renders it the ſouth-wind, and which is approved of by De Dieu on the place, and by Bochart [i]; and the latter ſuppoſes theſe locuſts were brought by a ſouth-wind out of Ethiopia, which lay to the ſouth of Egypt, and where in the ſpring of the year, as it now was, were uſually great numbers of locuſts, and where were a people that lived upon them, as Diodorus Siculus [k] and Strabo [l] relate; who both ſay that at the vernal equinox, or in the ſpring, the weſt and ſouth-weſt winds blowing ſtrongly brought locuſts into thoſe parts; and the ſouth-wind being warm might contribute to the production, cheriſhing, and increaſing of theſe creatures, and which are ſometimes brought by a ſouth-wind. Dr. Shaw ſays [m], the locuſts he ſaw in Barbary, an. 1724 and 1725, were much bigger than our common graſhoppers, and had brown ſpotted wings, with legs and bodies of a bright yellow; their firſt appearance was toward the latter end of March, the wind having been for ſome time from the ſouth.

℣. 14. And the locuſts went up over all the land of Egypt, &c.] Being raiſed up by the wind in the places where they were generated, they flew and ſpread themſelves all over the land, being in a wonderful manner produced and multiplied by the power of God: and reſted in all the coaſts of Egypt; in every part of it where the Egyptians dwelt, and where there were meadows, paſtures, fields, gardens, orchards; here they lighted and fed, excepting the land of Goſhen, where Iſrael dwelt, which muſt be thought to be exempted from this plague, as from the reſt. Very grievous were they; becauſe of the miſchief that they did, and becauſe of their multitude, for they were innumerable, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, and as it is, Pſ. cv. 34. there were no ſuch locuſts as they, neither after them ſhall be ſuch; there were none before, and there would be none afterwards like them, which Moſes knew by a ſpirit of prophecy. If this is to be underſtood of their bigneſs, they muſt be very large; in the year 1556, there were locuſts at Milain that were a ſpan long, and had ſix feet, and theſe like the feet of rats, and there was one four times bigger than the reſt, which was taken and kept by a citizen, and would hiſs like a ſerpent when it ſaw that no food was ſet before it [n]; yea, Pliny [o] ſpeaks of locuſts in India 3 feet long; and what Moſes here ſays is not contradicted in Joel ii. 2. becauſe his words may be underſtood of the Chaldean army, of which the locuſts were an emblem; and beſides, each may be reſtrained to the country in which they were, as that none ever before or ſince were ſeen in Egypt as theſe, though they might be in other countries; and ſo thoſe in Joel's time were ſuch as never before or ſince were ſeen in the land of Judea, though they might be in other places.

℣. 15. For they covered the face of the whole earth, &c.] Of the whole land of Egypt; and this ſeems to be the inſtance in which theſe locuſts differed from all others, that had been or would be, even in their numbers; for though there might have been before, and have been ſince, ſuch vaſt numbers of them together as to darken the air and the ſun, and by lighting firſt on one ſpot and then on another, have deſtroyed whole countries; yet never was ſuch an inſtance known as this, as that they ſhould come in ſo large a body, and at once to light, and ſpread, and ſettle themſelves over the whole country. Leo Africanus [p] indeed ſpeaks of a ſwarm of locuſts, which he himſelf ſaw at Tagteſſa in Africa, A. D. 1510. which covered the whole ſurface of the ground; but then that was but in one place, but this was a whole country. It is in the original, they covered the eye of the whole earth; of which ſee the note on ℣. 5. ſo that the land was darkened; the proper colour of the earth, and the green graſs on it, could not be ſeen for them, they lay ſo thick upon it; and being perhaps of a brown colour, as they often are, the land ſeemed dark with them: and they did eat every herb of the land, and all the fruit of the trees, which the hail had left; for though every herb of the field is ſaid to be ſmitten, and every tree of the field to be broke with it, ch. ix. 25. yet this, as has been obſerved, is to be underſtood either hyperbolically, or of the greater part thereof, but not of the whole: and there remained not any green thing in the trees, or in the herbs of the field, through all the land of Egypt; the like is ſaid to befal the province of Carpitania, in the 9th

[g] Nat. Hiſt. l. 11. c. 29. [h] Frantzii Hiſt. Animal. Sacr. par. 5. c. 4. p. 794. [i] Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 1. c. 15. col. 101, 102. & l. 4. c. 3. col. 463. Vid. Jablonſki de terra Goſhen Diſſertat. 5. §. 5. [k] Bibliothec. l. 3. p. 162. [l] Geograph. l. 16. p. 531. [m] Travels, p. 187. Edit. 2. [n] Frantzii Hiſt. Ib. p. 800. [o] Ut ſupra. [p] Deſcriptio Africæ, l. 2. p. 117.

9th year of Childibert, king of France; which was ſo waſted by locuſts, that not a tree, nor a vineyard, nor a foreſt, nor any ſort of fruit, nor any other green thing remained [q]. So Dr. Shaw [r] ſays of the locuſts he ſaw as above related, that they let nothing eſcape them, eating up every thing that was green and juicy, not only the leſſer kinds of vegetables, but the vine likewiſe, the fig-tree, the pomegranate, the palm, and the apple-tree, even all the trees of the field. But then ſuch devaſtations are uſually made gradually, by theſe creatures moving from place to place, whereas this deſtruction in Egypt was done in one day. Indeed we are told in hiſtory, that in one country 140 acres of land were deſtroyed in one day [s]; but what is this to all the land of Egypt? with this plague may be compared that of the locuſts upon the ſounding of the fifth trumpet, Rev. ix. 1—11.

℣. 16. Then Pharaoh called for Moſes and Aaron in haſte, &c.] Or, haſtened to call them [t]; ſent meſſengers in all haſte to fetch them, and deſire them to come as ſoon as poſſible to him. Thus he who a few hours ago drove them from his preſence, in a hurry, ſends for them to come to him with all ſpeed, which the preſent circumſtances he was in required: and he ſaid to Moſes and Aaron; when they were brought into his preſence: I have ſinned againſt the Lord your God, and againſt you; againſt the Lord by diſobeying his command, in refuſing to let Iſrael go, when he had ſo often required it of him; and againſt Moſes and Aaron his ambaſſadors, whom he had treated with contempt, and had drove them from his preſence with diſgrace; and againſt the people of Iſrael, whom they perſonated, by retaining them, and uſing them ſo ill as he had. This confeſſion did not ariſe from a true ſenſe of ſin, as committed againſt God, nor indeed does he in it own Jehovah to be his God, only the God of Moſes and Aaron, or of the Iſraelites; but from the fright he was in, and fear of puniſhment continued upon him, to the utter ruin of him and his people.

℣. 17. Now therefore forgive, I pray thee, my ſin, only this once, &c.] Pretending that he would never offend any more, and if he did, he did not deſire it ſhould be forgiven him, but that due puniſhment ſhould be inflicted on him. Theſe words are directed to Moſes, he being the principal perſon, that came to him with a commiſſion from the Lord, and who was made a God to Pharaoh; and therefore he does not aſk forgiveneſs of the Lord, but of Moſes: and intreat the Lord your God, that he may take away from me this death only; this deadly plague of the locuſts, which devouring all the fruits of the earth, muſt in courſe produce a famine, and that the death of men. Moreover, the author of the book of Wiſdom ſays, that the bites of the locuſts killed men, ch. xvi. 9. Pharaoh was ſenſible that this plague came from God, and that he only could remove it; and therefore begs the prayers of Moſes and Aaron to him for the removal of it, and ſuggeſts that he would never deſire ſuch another favour; but that if he offended again, and another plague was inflicted on him, he could not deſire it to be taken away; by which he would be underſtood, that he determined to offend no more, or give them any occaſion for any other judgment to come upon him, was he once clear of this.

℣. 18. And he went out from Pharaoh, &c.] Without the city, as he had been wont to do: and intreated the Lord; prayed to him that he would remove the plague of the locuſts from the land.

℣. 19. And the Lord turned a mighty ſtrong weſt-wind, &c.] He turned the wind the contrary way it before blew; it was an eaſt-wind that brought the locuſts, but now it was changed into a weſt-wind, or a wind of the ſea [u], of the Mediterranean ſea; a wind which blew from thence, which lay to the weſt of Egypt, as the Red Sea did to the eaſt of it, to which the locuſts were carried by the wind as follows: which took away the locuſts, and caſt them into the Red Sea; and as it is uſual for locuſts to be brought by winds, ſo to be carried away with them, and to be let fall into ſeas, lakes, and pools, and there periſh. So Pliny ſays [w] of locuſts, that being taken up and carried with the wind in flocks or ſwarms, they fell into ſeas and lakes; and Jerom obſerves [x] in his time, that they had ſeen ſwarms of locuſts cover the land of Judea, which upon the wind riſing have been driven into the firſt and laſt ſeas; that is, into the Dead Sea, and into the Mediterranean Sea; ſee Joel ii. 20. This ſea here called the Red Sea, is the ſame which is now called the Arabian gulph; in the original text it is the ſea of Suph; that is, the ſea of flags or ruſhes; as the word is rendered, chap. ii. 3, 5. from the great numbers of theſe growing on the banks of it, which are full of them, as Thevenot [y] ſays; or the ſea of weeds [z], from the multitude of them in the bottom of it, or floating on it. So Columbus found in the Spaniſh Weſt Indies, on the coaſt of Paria, a ſea full of herbs, or weeds [a], which grew ſo thick, that they ſometimes in a manner ſtopped the ſhips. Some render Yam Suph, the ſea of buſhes; and ſome late travellers [b] obſerve, that though in the dreadful wilds along this lake, one ſees neither tree, ſhrub, nor vegetable, except a kind of bramble, yet it is remarkable that they are found in the ſea growing on its bottom, where we behold with aſtoniſhment whole groves of trees bloſſoming and bearing fruit, as if nature by theſe marine vegetables meant to compenſate for the extreme ſterility reigning in all the deſerts of Arabia; and with this agrees the account that Pliny [c] gives of the Red Sea, that in it olives and green fruit trees grow; yea, he ſays that that and all the Eaſtern ocean is full of woods; and adds, it is wonderful that in the Red Sea woods live, eſpecially the laurel, and the olive bearing berries. Hillerus [d] thinks this ſea here has the name of the ſea of Suph from a city of the ſame name near unto it. It is often called the Red Sea in prophane authors as here, not from the coral that grew in it, or the red ſand at the bottom of it, or red mountains near it; tho' Thevenot [e] ſays, there are ſome mountains all over red on the ſides of it; nor from the ſhade of thoſe mountains upon it; nor from the appearance of it through the rays of the ſun upon it; and much leſs from the natural colour of it; which, as Curtius [f] obſerves, does not differ from others; tho' a late traveller ſays [g], that "on ſeveral parts of "this ſea (the Red ſea) we obſerved abundance of "reddiſh ſpots made by a weed reſembling cargaco, "(or

[q] Frantzius. ib. p. 802. [r] Ut ſupra. [s] Frantz. Ibid. p. 800. [t] ויחחר - לקרא & feſtinavit ad vocandum, Montanus; feſtinavit accerſere, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [u] רוח ים ventum maris, Montanus, Druſius. [w] Nat. Hiſt. l. 11. c 29. [x] Comment. in Joel, ii. 20. [y] Travels into the Levant, B. 2. ch. 33. p. 175. [z] יהוח סוף in mare algoſum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; in mare carectoſum, Tigurine verſion. [a] P. Martyr. de Angleria, Decad. 1. l. 6. Vide Decad. 3. l. 5. [b] Egmont and Heyman's Travels, vol. 2. p. 158. [c] Nat. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 103. l. 13. c. 25. [d] Onomaſtic. Sacr. p. 128. [e] Ut ſupra. [f] Hiſt. l. 8. §. 9. [g] Hyeronymo Lobo's Obſervations, &c. in Ray's Travels, vol. 2. p. 489.

" (or Sargoſſo) rooted in the bottom, and floating " in ſome places: upon ſtrict examination, it " proved to be that which we found the Ethiopians " call Sufo (as here Suph) uſed up and down for " dying their ſtuffs and clothes of a red colour;" but the Greeks called it ſo from Erythras or Erythrus, a king that reigned in thoſe parts [h], whoſe name ſignifies red; and it is highly probable the ſame with Eſau, who is called Edom, that is red, from the red pottage he ſold his birthright for to Jacob; and this ſea waſhing his country Idumea or Edom, was called the Red Sea from thence; and here the locuſts were caſt by the wind, or fixed [i], as a tent is fixed, as the word ſignifies, and there continued, and never appeared more: there remained not one locuſt in all the coaſts of Egypt; ſo that the removal of them was as great a miracle as the bringing them at firſt: this was done about the 9th day of the month Abib.

℣. 20. But the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart, &c.] For as yet he had not brought all his judgments on him he deſigned to bring: ſo that he would not let the children of Iſrael go; though they had promiſed to do it, and that he would never offend more in this way.

℣. 21. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] About the 11th day of the month Abib: ſtretch out thine hand towards heaven; where the luminaries are, and from whence light comes: that there may be darkneſs over the land of Egypt, even darkneſs which may be felt; that is, what cauſed it, the groſs vapours and thick fogs; for otherwiſe darkneſs itſelf, being a privation of light, cannot be felt: Onkelos paraphraſes it, " after that the darkneſs of the " night is removed;" ſo Jonathan; that it might appear to be different from that, and be much groſſer.

℣. 22. And Moſes ſtretched forth his hand toward heaven, and there was a thick darkneſs over all the land of Egypt three days.] The 11th, 12th, and 13th days of the month Abib, with this compare the 5th vial, Rev. xvi. 10.

℣. 23. They ſaw not one another, &c.] Not only the luminaries of heaven were covered and beclouded with the darkneſs, ſo that they were of no uſe to them; but the fogs and vapours which occaſioned it were ſo damp and clammy that they put out their fires, lamps, and candles, ſo that they could receive no benefit from them: neither roſe up any from his place for three days; from the place of his habitation, not being able to find the way to the door, or however not able to do any buſineſs abroad; and beſides were quite amazed and confounded, ſuppoſing the courſe of nature was changed and all things going to a diſſolution, their conſciences filled with horror and terror and black deſpair, ſtrange and terrible phantoms and apparitions preſented to their minds, as the author of the book of Wiſdom ſuggeſts, ch. xvii. 5. and which is countenanced by what the pſalmiſt ſays, who, inſtead of this plague of darkneſs, takes notice of evil angels being ſent among them, Pſ. lxxviii. 49. that is, devils in horrible ſhapes repreſented to their minds, which dreadfully diſtreſſed and terrified them, ſo that they durſt not ſtir and move from the place where they were: but all the children of Iſrael had light in their dwellings; not only in the land of Goſhen, but in all places where they were mixed with the Egyptians, as it is plain they were, from ch. xii. 23, 27. ſo that they could go about their buſineſs and perform it as at other times, and had now a fine opportunity of packing up their goods, and getting every thing ready for their departure, without being obſerved by the Egyptians. Doctor Lightfoot [k] thinks, that now they attended to the ordinance of circumciſion, which had been generally neglected, and was neceſſary to their partaking of the paſſover, which in a few days was to be obſerved, and of which no uncircumciſed perſon might eat, ch. xii. 48. and which he grounds upon Pſ. cv. 28. and this time was wiſely taken for it, when the Egyptians could have no opportunity or advantage againſt them, becauſe of their ſoreneſs by it; it may indeed be wondered at, that they did not take the advantage of the darkneſs the Egyptians were in, of getting out of the land, and going there three days journey into the wilderneſs; but it was the will of God that they ſhould not ſteal away privately, or go by flight as fugitives, but openly, and with the mighty hand and ſtretched out arm of God; beſides, the Lord had not as yet wrought all the judgments he intended. In the fabulous expedition of Bacchus againſt the Indians, a ſtory is told which ſeems to be taken from hence, that the Indians were covered with darkneſs, whilſt thoſe with Bacchus were in light all around them [l].

℣. 24. And Pharaoh called unto Moſes, &c.] After the three days, as the Targum of Jonathan, when the darkneſs was over, or at leaſt much diminiſhed, fearing that ſtill worſe evils would befall him: and ſaid, go ye, ſerve the Lord, only let your flocks and your herds be ſtayed; ſtopped or remain behind, as a pledge and ſecurity of their return; and theſe the rather he was deſirous of retaining, becauſe of the great loſs of cattle he had ſuſtained by the murrain and boils upon them, and by the hail: let your little ones alſo go with you; this he had refuſed before, but now conſents to it, which he thought was doing them a great favour, and that upon ſuch terms they might be content to go.

℣. 25. And Moſes ſaid, thou muſt give us alſo ſacrifices and burnt-offerings, &c.] Sheep, rams and goats for ſacrifices, and oxen for burnt-offerings; and that of his own, as Jarchi interprets it; but rather, the meaning is, that beſides having their little ones with them, they muſt be allowed alſo to take their cattle for ſacrifices and burnt-offerings: that we may ſacrifice unto the Lord our God; might have wherewith to offer up in ſacrifice to him as he ſhall require.

℣. 26. Our cattle alſo ſhall go with us, &c.] Of every kind, of the flocks and of the herds: there ſhall not an hoof be left behind; not a ſingle creature that has an hoof: it is a proverbial expreſſion, ſignifying that they ſhould carry all that belonged to them with them: for thereof muſt we take to ſerve the Lord our God; ſomething of every kind and ſort, all they had being devoted to his ſervice, and to be yielded to him upon demand: and we know not with what we muſt ſerve the Lord, until we come thither; into the wilderneſs; they knew not exactly and preciſely what kind of creatures or how many of them, as Aben Ezra obſerves, they were to offer at a time; for though before this there was a known diſtinction between clean and unclean creatures, and the various offerings and ſacrifices of the patriarchs might in a good meaſure direct them in the uſe of them; yet the ſpecial and peculiar laws about ſacrifices were not given until

[h] Curtius ut ſupra. Mela de ſitu orbis, l. 3. c. 8. Strabo, l. 16. p. 535, 536.
[i] Vid. Huet. Quæſt. Alnetan. l. 2. c 13. §. 12. p. 204.
[l] ויתקעהו & fixit eam, Montanus; ſo Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius, Ainſworth.
[k] Works, vol. 1. p. 707.

I

until after their deliverance, and they were got into the wilderneſs; ſo that this was not a bare pretence to get their cattle along with them, but was the true caſe and real matter of fact.

℣. 27. But the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart, &c.] Yet more and more: and he would not let them go; his heart was ſet againſt it, his will was reſolute, and he was determined never to let them go.

℣. 28. And Pharaoh ſaid unto him, &c.] To Moſes: get thee from me; be gone from my preſence, I have nothing more to ſay to thee, or do with thee: take heed to thyſelf; leſt miſchief befalls thee from me, or thoſe about me: ſee my face no more; neither here, or elſewhere: for in that day thou ſeeſt my face thou ſhalt die; this was a fooliſh as well as a wicked ſpeech, when he lay at the mercy of Moſes, rather than Moſes at his; he being made a God unto him, and had ſuch power to inflict plagues upon him, of which he had had repeated inſtances.

℣. 29. And Moſes ſaid, thou haſt ſpoken well, &c.] Not that which was good, in a moral ſenſe, for it was very wicked, but what would eventually prove true: I will ſee thy face again no more; which may be underſtood either conditionally, except he was ſent for, and he deſired to ſee him, he would not come of himſelf; or abſolutely knowing by a ſpirit of prophecy, that he ſhould be no more ſent unto him, and that Pharaoh ſhould in a little time be drowned in the red ſea, when he would be ſeen no more by him nor any other; for as for what is ſaid in the following chapter, it is thought by many to have been ſaid at this time, as it might even before he went out of the preſence of Pharaoh, which in ch. xii. 8. he is ſaid to do in anger: and as for Pharaoh's calling for him at midnight, and bidding him riſe and be gone, ch. xii. 31. it might be delivered by meſſengers, and ſo he be not ſeen by Moſes and Aaron. By this ſpeech of Moſes, it appears he was not afraid of Pharaoh and his menaces, but rather taunts at him, and it is to this fearleſs diſpoſition of Moſes at this time that the apoſtle refers in Heb. xi. 27.

CHAP. XI.

MOSES having an intimation from the Lord that one plague more would be brought on Pharaoh, and then he would let Iſrael go, when they ſhould borrow of their neighbours jewels of gold and ſilver, the people being in great favour with the Egyptians, ℣. 1, 2, 3. he declares to Pharaoh before he went out of his preſence, the ſlaying of all the firſt-born in Egypt, which would iſſue in the diſmiſſion of Iſrael, and then he went out from him in great anger, ℣. 4—8. but ſtill Pharaoh would not hearken, and his heart was hardened, and he refuſed again to let Iſrael go, ℣. 9, 10.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] Whilſt in the preſence of Pharaoh, by a ſecret impulſe upon his mind; or he had ſaid [m], which ſome refer as far back as to his appearance to him in Midian, ch. iv. 23. which is too remote; rather it refers to the laſt time he went to Pharaoh, being ſent for by him; and the words may be rendered, for the Lord had ſaid [n]; and ſo are a reaſon why Moſes was ſo bold, and expreſſed himſelf with ſo much confidence and aſſurance to Pharaoh, that he would ſee his face no more: yet will I bring one plague more upon Pharaoh, and upon Egypt; upon him and all his ſubjects, for the following one would affect all the families of Egypt, in which there was a ſon: afterwards he will let you go hence; out of Egypt readily, at once, and not attempt to ſtop or retard your going: when he ſhall let you go; declare his will, give leave and orders for it: he ſhall ſurely thruſt you out hence altogether; abſolutely, entirely, without any exception or limitation, them, their wives, their children, their flocks and herds, and whatſoever belonged to them, without any reſtraint upon them in any reſpect, and without any condition of return, or fixing any time for it, but the diſmiſſion ſhould be general, unlimited, and unconditional; or, in thruſting he ſhall thruſt you out [o], with force and vehemence, with urgency and in great haſte.

℣. 2. Speak now in the ears of the people, &c.] This cannot be underſtood of the whole body of the people being gathered together, but of ſome of the principal ones, who ſhould communicate it to others, and ſo from one to another, until all the heads and maſters of families became acquainted with it: and let every man borrow of his neighbour, and every woman of her neighbour, jewels of ſilver, and jewels of gold; to ornament themſelves with at the feaſt they were going to keep: the Samaritan and Septuagint verſions add, and cloathing or raiment, and ſuch it is certain they did borrow, ch. xii. 35. or veſſels [p] of different forms, made of gold and ſilver, ſuch as were fit and proper to be uſed at ſacrifices and feaſts, and which will account for the veſſels given by princes, Numb. vii. for the doing of which the divine authority was ſufficient; though there ſeems to be a reaſon for it in juſtice, that they might be paid for their hard ſervice they had been made to ſerve for ſo many years, without having a proper reward for it: the word may be rendered, let every man aſk, &c.

℣. 3. And the Lord gave the people favour in the ſight of the Egyptians, &c.] So that they freely and willingly lent them the things they aſked of them; which ſeems to be ſaid by way of anticipation, for this was not done until the following plague was inflicted, ſee ch. xii. 35, 36. moreover, the man Moſes was very great in the land of Egypt; his name was famous throughout the whole land, becauſe of the ſigns and wonders, and miracles wrought by him; they took him to be a very extraordinary perſon, as he was, and had him in great eſteem, becauſe, at his intreaty the plagues were removed from them, when they had been brought on them; and this made them the more willing to lend the above things to the people of Iſrael when they aſked them of them, becauſe of their their great reſpect to Moſes, and whom, if they did not cordially love, yet they feared, and might imagine that if they did not comply with the requeſt of his people, he might reſent it, and employ his power againſt them; and thus he ſtood, either beloved or feared, or both, in the ſight of Pharaoh's ſervants; his miniſters, courtiers, and counſellors: and in the ſight of the people; the common people, the inhabitants of the land of Egypt.

[m] ויאמר dixerat, ſome in Vatablus, Ainſworth, Cartwright; ſo Aben Ezra. [n] Dixerat enim, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Rivet. [o] גרש יגרש expellendo expellet, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius; ſo Fagius, Vatablus, Cartwright. [p] כלי σκευη Sept. vaſa, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Piſcator, Druſius; inſtrumenta, Junius & Tremellius.

✝. 4. And Moſes ſaid, &c.] To Pharaoh before he left him, when he had told him he ſhould ſee his face no more; for the three preceding verſes are to be read in a parentheſis, being placed here by the hiſtorian, as giving ſome light to this laſt diſcourſe and tranſaction between Moſes and Pharaoh: thus ſaith the Lord, about midnight will I go out into the midſt of Egypt; perhaps to the capital and metropolis of it, which might ſtand in the midſt of it, as uſually does the royal city; or it may only ſignify that he would go into the very heart of it, and ſteer his courſe all around in every part and quarter of it, ſlaying the firſt-born every where in all towns and cities throughout the kingdom, as follows; in order to which he is ſaid to go out, either from the place where Moſes uſed to go and pray to him, and where he met him and gave him his orders and inſtructions, or out of the land of Goſhen, where he dwelt among the Iſraelites; or rather, it only ſignifies the manifeſtation of himſelf in ſome work and action of his, the exertion of his power in inflicting puniſhment for ſin: thus God is ſometimes ſaid to go forth out of his place when he is about to exerciſe judgment in the earth; for this muſt be underſtood conſiſtent with his omnipreſence, ſee Iſ. xxvi. 21. and this was to be done about midnight, the middle of the night following the preſent day, which was the 14th of the month of Abib or Niſan; it was in the morning of that day Moſes had this diſcourſe with Pharaoh, and in the evening of it the paſſover was kept, and about the middle of the night the firſt-born were ſlain, as follows.

✝. 5. And all the firſt-born in the land of Egypt ſhall die, &c.] By the deſtroying angel inflicting a diſeaſe upon them, as Joſephus ſays [q], very probably the peſtilence; however, it was ſudden and immediate death, and which was univerſal, reaching to all the firſt-born that were in the families of the Egyptians in all parts of the kingdom: from the firſt-born of Pharaoh that ſitteth upon his throne; this periphraſis, that ſitteth upon his throne, either belongs to Pharaoh, and is a deſcription of him who now ſat upon the throne of Egypt; and the Septuagint verſion leaves out the pronoun his; and ſo it is the ſame as if it had been ſaid the firſt-born of Pharaoh, king of Egypt; or elſe, to the firſt-born, and deſcribes him who either already ſat upon the throne with his father, as was ſometimes the caſe, that the firſt-born was taken a partner in the throne, in the life-time of his father; or who was the preſumptive heir of the crown, and ſhould ſucceed him, and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "who "ſhall or is to ſit upon the throne of his king-"dom:" even unto the firſt-born of the maid-ſervant that is behind the mill; or behind the two mills [r], or two mill-ſtones; for it was the cuſtom then as with the Arabs now, as doctor Shaw [s] relates, to grind their corn with hand-mills, which were two ſtones laid on one another, and in the uppermoſt was a handle, with which it was turned about by women, between whom the two ſtones were placed, and ſo they might be ſaid to be behind them; though the phraſe uſed does not neceſſarily ſuppoſe that they ſat behind the mill, for it may as well be rendered by or near the mill [t]: this is not to be underſtood of the firſt-born, as behind the mill, or at it, and grinding, as Aben Ezra interprets it, but of the maid-ſervant; it being the buſineſs of ſuch in early times to turn theſe mills, and grind corn, as it is now in Arabia, as the above traveller relates; and ſo it was in Judea in the times of Chriſt, Matt. xxiv. 41. and Homer [u] in his times, ſpeaks of women grinding at the mill, ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 41. the deſign of theſe expreſſions is to ſhew that none would eſcape this calamity threatened, neither the king nor his nobles, nor any of his ſubjects, high and low, rich and poor, bond and free: and all the firſt-born of beaſts; ſuch as had eſcaped the plagues of the murrain and boils: this is added, not becauſe they were ſuch as were worſhipped as gods, as Jarchi obſerves, but to increaſe their miſery and aggravate their puniſhment, theſe being their property and ſubſtance, and became ſcarce and valuable, through the preceding plagues of the murrain, boils, and hail, which deſtroyed many of their cattle.

✝. 6. And there ſhall be a great cry throughout all the land of Egypt, &c.] Of parents for the loſs of their firſt-born ſons, their heirs, the ſupport and glory of their families; children for the loſs of their elder brethren; and ſervants for the loſs of the prime and principal in their maſters houſes; and all in a dreadful fright, expecting inſtantly death themſelves: ſuch as there was none like it, nor ſhall be like it any more; for though the after deſtruction of Pharaoh, and his hoſt in the Red Sea, might be a greater loſs, yet not occaſion greater mourning; ſince that was only a loſs of military perſons, and did not affect at leaſt ſo many families as this; and though their king was loſt alſo, it might not give them ſo much concern, ſince through his ill conduct, his hardneſs and obſtinacy, he had been the means of ſo many plagues inflicted on them.

✝. 7. But againſt any of the children of Iſrael ſhall not a dog move his tongue, againſt man or beaſt, &c.] That is, as no hurt ſhould be done to man or beaſt among them, to the firſt-born of either of them, ſo there would be no noiſe or cry in their dwellings, but the profoundeſt ſilence, ſtilneſs and quietneſs among them; though this is generally underſtood of what would be their caſe when on their march departing out of Egypt, which was immediately upon the ſlaying of the firſt-born; and if literally underſtood, it was a very extraordinary thing that a dog, which barks at the leaſt noiſe that is made, eſpecially in the night, yet not one ſhould move his tongue or bark, or rather ſharpen [w] his tongue, ſnarl and grin, when 600,000 men, beſides women and children, with their flocks and herds, ſet out on their journey, and muſt doubtleſs march through many places where dogs were, before they came to the Red Sea; though it may alſo be interpreted figuratively, that not an Egyptian, though ever ſo ſpiteful and malicious, and ill diſpoſed to the children of Iſrael, ſhould not offer to do any hurt either to the Iſraelites or their cattle, or

[q] Antiq. l. 2. c. 14. § 6.
[r] אחר הרחים poſt molas, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; after the millſtones, Ainſworth. ad molam. V. L. apud molas, Noldius, p. 11. No. 75.
[s] Travels, p. 231. Ed. 2.
[t] παρα το μυλον, Sept.
[u] μιν αλετευουσ' μυλης, &c. Homer. Odyſſ. 7. l. 109.
[w] לא יחוץ non acuet, Noldius, p. 517. No. 1471. ſo Jarchi.

or exclaim againſt them on account of the ſlaughter of their firſt-born, or ſay one word againſt their departure, or attempt to ſtop them, but on the contrary would haſten their going, and be urgent for it: that ye may know how that the Lord doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Iſrael; by preſerving them and theirs, when the firſt-born of Egypt were deſtroyed, and by cauſing ſtilneſs and quietneſs among them when there was an hideous outcry, and doleful lamentation among the Egyptians; and by bringing Iſrael quietly out from among them, none offering to give the leaſt moleſtation.

℣. 8. And all theſe thy ſervants, &c.] Pharaoh's nobles, miniſters, courtiers and counſellors, who were then in his preſence, and ſtood about him, to whom Moſes pointed: ſhall come down unto me; from Pharaoh's palace, which might be built on an eminence, to the place where Moſes had dwelt during the time he had been in Egypt, which might lie lower; or theſe ſhould come from Zoan, or from Memphis, which ever of them was now the royal city, to the land of Goſhen, which lay lower than the other part of Egypt; or it may only denote the ſubmiſſion of Pharaoh's ſervants, that they ſhould in the time of their diſtreſs be ſo humble and condeſcending as to come themſelves to Moſes, and as it follows: and bow down themſelves unto me; in the moſt obſequious manner, humbly entreating, and earneſtly begging him: ſaying, get thee out, and all the people that follow thee; or are at thy feet [w], that were at his beck and command, and under h s power, as Aben Ezra; or that followed his counſel and advice, as Jarchi, that did as he directed them, and went after him as their leader and commander, even every one of them; they that brought up the rear, he, and all of them would be deſired to depart, and not a man remain behind: this was fulfilled, ch. xii. 31: and after that I will go out; out of the land of Egypt, Moſes, and all the children of Iſrael: and he went out from Pharaoh in a great anger; as ſoon as he had ſaid the above words, becauſe he had bid him be gone from him, and had threatened him with his life, if ever he ſaw his face more; and becauſe he was ſo rebellious againſt God, whoſe zeal inſpired the heart of Moſes with indignation againſt him, though the meekeſt man on earth, and for whoſe glory he was concerned; though ſome underſtand this of Moſes going out from Pharaoh, when he and not Moſes was in great anger, becauſe of what Moſes had now threatened him with, and told him what would be the iſſue of things, the ſubmiſſion of him and his nobles, and the diſmiſſion of Iſrael; but this ſenſe is not favoured by the accents.

℣. 9. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] Not at this time when he went out from Pharaoh, but ſome time before this, for the words may be rendered, the Lord had ſaid [x], for ſo he had, as is related, ch. vii. 3, 4. but the hiſtorian makes mention of it here, to ſhew that Moſes was not ignorant of the event of things; he knew that Pharaoh's heart would be hardened from time to time, and that one plague after another muſt be inflicted, before he would let the people go; and therefore when he prayed for the removal of any, it was not in expectation that he would abide by his promiſe, but to do the will of God, and the duty of his calling: Pharaoh ſhall not hearken unto you; to Moſes and Aaron, and let the people of Iſrael go as required of him: that my wonders may be multiplied in the land of Egypt; which Jarchi interprets of the ſmiting of the firſt-born, dividing the waters of the Red Sea, and the deſtruction of Pharaoh and his hoſt in it; but ſince theſe words were ſaid before any of the plagues were inflicted, it may refer to them all.

℣. 10. And Moſes and Aaron did all theſe wonders before Pharaoh, &c.] Which are related in the preceding chapters: and the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart; one time after another, and yet more and more: ſo that he would not let the children of Iſrael go out of his land; until the laſt plague, the ſlaying of the firſt-born, was brought upon him and his people, related in the following chapter.

CHAP. XII.

THIS chapter begins with obſerving, that the month in which the above wonders were wrought in Egypt, and the following ordinance appointed to the Iſraelites, ſhould hereafter be reckoned the firſt month in the year, ℣. 1, 2. on the 10th day of which a lamb here deſcribed was to be taken and kept till the 14th, and then ſlain, and its blood ſprinkled on the poſts of the houſes of the Iſraelites, ℣. 3—7. the manner of dreſſing and eating it is ſhewn, ℣. 8—11. and the reaſon of the inſtitution of this ordinance being given, ℣. 12, 13, 14. and an order to eat unleavened bread during ſeven days, in which the feaſt was to be kept, ℣. 15—20. directions are alſo given for the immediate obſervance of it, and particularly about the ſprinkling of the blood of the lamb, and the uſe of it, ℣. 21—23. and this ordinance, which they were to inſtruct their children in, was to be kept by them in ſucceeding ages for ever, ℣. 24—27. about the middle of the night it was firſt obſerved, all the firſt-born in Egypt were ſlain, which made the Egyptians urgent upon the Iſraelites to depart in haſte, ℣. 28—33. and which they did with their unleavened dough, and with great riches they had borrowed of the Egyptians, ℣. 34—36. the number of the children of Iſrael at the time of their departure, the mixt multitude and cattle that went with them, their baking their unleavened cakes, the time of their ſojourning in Egypt, and of their coming out of it that night, which made it a remarkable one, are all particularly taken notice of, ℣. 37—42. laws and rules are given concerning the perſons that ſhould partake of the paſſover, ℣. 43—49. and the chapter is concluded with obſerving, that it was kept according to the command of God, and that it was on the ſame day it was firſt inſtituted and kept, that Iſrael were brought out of Egypt, ℣. 50, 51.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes and Aaron in the land of Egypt, &c.] Before they and the children of Iſrael came out of it, before the ſlaying of the firſt-born, yea before Moſes came from the preſence of Pharaoh, and had given him notice of it; and it is very probable even before the three days darkneſs, ſeeing it ſeems neceſſary it ſhould be four days before the paſſover, ſince on the 10th day the lamb was to be taken, and on the 14th ſlain ſlain, ℣. 3, 6. and by what follows it looks as if it was at the beginning or firſt day of the month, and ſo the words may be rendered, the Lord had ſpoke [y]; and the following account is deferred to this place, that there might be no interruption of the hiſtory of the plagues, and that the paſſover, with all its rites and ceremonies, both at the firſt inſtitution and obſervance of it, and in after-times, might be laid together.

[w] ברגליך in pedibus tuis, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius; ſub pedibus tuis, Munſter, Vatablus; qui eſt ad pedes tuos, Cartwright. [x] ויאמר dixerat autem, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Rivet.

℣. 2. This month ſhall be unto you the beginning of months, &c.] Not only the firſt, as after expreſſed, but the chief and principal of them, now famous for their coming out of Egypt in it, and would be more ſo for the ſufferings and death of the Meſſiah, and redemption by him from ſin, ſatan and the world, law, hell and death, for he ſuffered at the time of the paſſover. This month was called Abib, ch. xiii. 4. and xxiii. 15. which ſignifies an ear of corn, and at this time we find that the barley was in ear, ch. ix. 31. which clearly ſhows in what month the above things were tranſacted; afterwards it was called Niſan, which ſeems to be the Chaldean name for it, Nah. ii. 1. Eſth. iii. 7: it ſhall be the firſt month of the year to you; which before was the 7th; whilſt the Iſraelites were in Egypt they obſerved the ſame beginning of the year and courſe of months as the Egyptians, as Joſephus [z] intimates; and with the Egyptians, the month Thot was the firſt month, which anſwered to Tiſri with the Jews, and both to our September, or a part of it, ſo that the beginning of the year was then in the autumnal equinox, at which ſeaſon it is thought the world was created; but now to the Iſraelites it was changed unto the vernal equinox, for this month of Abib or Niſan anſwers to part of our March and part of April; though indeed both beginnings of the year were obſerved by them, the one on eccleſiaſtic, the other on civil accounts; or, as Joſephus [a] expreſſes it, the month of Niſan was the beginning with reſpect to things divine, but in buying and ſelling, and ſuch like things, the ancient order was obſerved; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan here paraphraſes it, "from hence ye ſhall "begin to reckon the feaſts, the times and the re-"volutions." Indeed the Jews had four beginnings of the year according to their Miſnah [b]; the firſt of Niſan (or March) was the beginning of the year for kings and for feſtivals; the firſt of Elul (or Auguſt) for the tithing of cattle; the firſt of Tiſri (or September) for the ſabbatical years, jubilees, and planting of trees and herbs; and the firſt of Shebet (or January) for the tithing the fruit of trees.

℣. 3. Speak ye unto all the congregation of Iſrael, &c.] That is, to the elders of the people, and heads of families; unleſs we can ſuppoſe, that they had been gradually gathered, and were now gathered together in a body by the direction of Moſes, by whom they were aſſured that their departure was at hand; and the rather it may thought that ſo it was, ſince the following order concerned the whole and every individual: ſaying, in the tenth day of this month; the month Abib or Niſan, which ſhows that this direction muſt be given before that day, and ſo very probably on the firſt of the month, as before obſerved: they ſhall take to them every man a lamb; not every individual perſon, but every maſter of a family, or head of an houſe, as follows: according to the houſe of their fathers, a lamb for an houſe; if large enough to eat up a whole lamb, otherwiſe they were to do as next directed: the Targum of Jonathan ſuggeſts, that this direction of taking a lamb to them on the tenth day of the month, was only for this time, and not for following ages; and ſo the Jewiſh doctors [c] commonly underſtand it as being peculiar to the paſſover in Egypt, and not in after-times; for they [d] ſay, "what difference is there between the paſſover in "Egypt, and the paſſover in after-ages? the paſſ-"over in Egypt was taken within the tenth day, "and was obliged to ſprinkling with a bunch of "hyſſop upon the lintel, and upon the two ſide-"poſts, and was eaten with haſte in one night, but "the paſſover in after-ages was kept all the 7 days." The ground and reaſon of this ſpecial direction for taking up a lamb on the tenth day, was, that they might have a lamb ready; and that through the multiplicity of buſineſs, and the hurry they would be in at their departure, they might not forget it, and neglect it; and that they might have time enough to examine whether it had all the prerequiſites and qualifications that were neceſſary; and that whilſt they had it in view, they might be led to meditate upon, and talk of, expect and firmly believe their deliverance; yea, that their faith might be directed to a far greater deliverance by the Meſſiah, which this was only typical of, Heb. xi. 28. but ſome of theſe reaſons would hold good in after-times, and it ſeems by ſome circumſtances that this rule was attended to.

℣. 4. And if the houſhold be too little for the lamb, &c.] That they can't eat it up at once: let him and his neighbour next unto his houſe, take it according to the number of the ſouls; which Joſephus [e] ſays were never fewer than 10, and were often 20, but no man might feaſt alone; with which agrees the Jewiſh canon [f], "they don't kill the paſſover-"lamb for a ſingle perſon, nor even for a ſociety "conſiſting of 100, that can't eat the quantity "of an olive:" every man according to his eating ſhall make your count for the lamb; that is, a man muſt reckon up how many he has in his own houſe to eat of the lamb, and what their appetites be, by which he will be able to judge whether he can diſpenſe with a lamb himſelf, or whether he muſt take in ſome of his neighbours, and how many, ſo as to eat up the whole lamb, for, for ſuch perſons the lamb was to be ſlain. The rule is, "if a man ſlays it for thoſe that do not eat "of it, or for thoſe that are not counted, for the "uncircumciſed, and the unclean, it was wrong, "and not allowed of." [g] The taking in his neighbours may reſpect the call of the Gentiles to partake of Chriſt with the Jews, ſee Eph. iii. 5, 6.

℣. 5. Your lamb ſhall be without blemiſh, &c.] Without any ſpot or defect in it. Maimonides [h] reckons no leſs than 50 blemiſhes in a creature, any one of which makes it unfit for ſacrifice, ſee Lev. xxi. 21—24. This lamb was a type of Chriſt, who is therefore ſaid to be our paſſover ſacrificed for us, 1 Cor. v. 7. comparable to a lamb for his innocence and harmleſneſs, for his meekneſs, humility and patience, for uſefulneſs both for food and raiment, as well as for being fit for ſacrifice; and who is a lamb without ſpot and blemiſh, either of original ſin, or actual tranſgreſſion, holy in his nature, harmleſs in his life: a male of the firſt year; any one within that time, but

[y] וידבר alloquutus autem fuerat, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; dixerat autem; ſo ſome in Druſius, and Ainſworth.
[z] Antiq. l. 1. c. 3. § 3. [a] Ibid. [b] Miſn. Roſh-haſhanah, c. 1. §. 1. [c] Ben Gerſom in loc. Maimon. Korban Peſach. c. 10. §. 15. [d] Miſn. Peſach. c. 9. §. 5. [e] De bello Jud. l. 6. c. 9. §. 3.
[f] Miſn. Peſach. c. 8. §. 7. [g] Ibid. c. 5. §. 3. [h] Hilchot Biath Hamikdaſh, c. 7. §. 1.

but not beyond it; denoting the ſtrength and vigour of Chriſt, in the flower of his age, his ſhort continuance among men, and his being tender and ſavoury food for the faith of his people: ye ſhall take it out from the ſheep, or from the goats; it might be either a lamb, or a kid of the goats; for the moſt part, or generally, it was a lamb that was taken; ſo the Jewiſh canon runs [i], "he that "ſays to his ſervant go and ſlay for me the paſſ- "over, if he ſlays a kid he may eat it; if he "ſlays a lamb he may eat of it; if he ſlays a kid "and a lamb, he may eat of the firſt." The goat being of an ill ſmell may denote Chriſt being made ſin, and a ſin-offering for his people; and the taking of a lamb from theſe may ſignify the choice of Chriſt from among the people in the council and covenant of God; the preordination of him to be the lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world; the preſervation of him from the infection of ſin in his incarnation, and the ſeparation of him of ſinners in his converſation.

℣. 6. And ye ſhall keep it up until the 14th day of the ſame month, &c.] In their houſes; this may denote the preſervation of Chriſt in his infancy, and to the appointed time of his ſufferings and death; and it is remarkable, that on this very day, the 10th of Niſan, four days before the paſſover, and ſo as many days before his ſufferings and death, he made his entry into Jeruſalem, near to which he was to be offered up, John xii. 1, 12: and the whole aſſembly of the congregation ſhall kill it in the evening; that is, of the 14th of Niſan; not between the two ſuns, as the Targum of Jonathan, between the ſun-ſetting and the ſun-riſing; nor between the ſetting of the ſun, and the entire diſappearance of its rays of light reflecting in the air and clouds after it, as Aben Ezra; ſo it is ſaid in the Talmud [k], after the ſun is ſet, all the time that the face of the eaſt is red; others ſay as long as a man can walk half a mile after ſun-ſetting; and others, the twinkling of an eye; but between the two evenings [l], as it may be rendered; which reſpects that ſpace of time after the ſun begins to decline, and the entire ſetting of it; when the ſun begins to decline, as it does after noon, that is the firſt evening, and when it is ſet, that is the ſecond; and the middle ſpace between the one and the other is about the 9th hour of the day, according to the Jewiſh computation, and with us about three o'clock in the afternoon, about which time the paſſover uſed to be killed; for they ſay [m], "the daily ſacrifice was ſlain at 8 and a half, and offered at the 9th; but on the evening of the paſſover it was ſlain at 7 and a half, and offered at 8 and a half, whether on a common day, or on a ſabbath; and if the evening of the paſſover happened to be on the evening of the ſabbath, it was ſlain at 6 and a half, and offered up at 7 and a half, and after that the paſſover;" which was done, that there might be time before the laſt evening for the ſlaying of the paſſover-lamb. Joſephus [n] ſays, at the paſſover they ſlew the ſacrifice from the 9th hour to the 11th; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 17. and it being at the 9th hour that our Lord was crucified, the agreement between him and the paſchal lamb in this circumſtance very manifeſtly appears, Matt. xxvii. 46. though it may alſo in general denote Chriſt's appearing in the laſt days, in the end of the world, to put away ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf: the ſlaying of the paſchal lamb is aſcribed to the whole aſſembly of the congregation, becauſe it was to be ſlain by their order, and in their name, for their uſe, and they preſent; and thus the crucifixion of Chriſt, his ſufferings and death are attributed to the men of Iſrael, and all the houſe of Iſrael, Acts ii. 22, 23, 36. and iii. 12—15.

℣. 7. And they ſhall take of the blood, &c.] Of the lamb, being received into a baſon, ℣. 22: and ſtrike it on two ſide-poſts; with a bunch of hyſſop dipped into it: and on the upper door-poſt of the houſes wherein they ſhall eat it; but not on the poſts of thoſe houſes, the inhabitants of which joined with their neighbours in eating it; though Levi Ben Gerſom thinks, they were ſprinkled as the reſt; but to what purpoſe, when there were no Iſraelites, and no firſt-born in them? the two ſide-poſts were the poſts of a folding door, on which the two folds were hung, and the upper door-poſt is what is afterwards called the lintel, ℣. 23. and has its name in Hebrew from looking out; for as Aben Ezra ſays, there was a window over the door, as is the cuſtom throughout the whole country of the Iſhmaelites or Arabians; and ſo Schindler ſays [o], which perhaps he took from him, that the word ſignifies either a lintel, or a little window over the door, through which it might be ſeen who called or knocked at the door; and adds, in Egypt, as now in Arabia, there were windows over the doors of houſes. The ſprinkling the blood of the paſchal-lamb was typical of the ſprinkling of the blood of Chriſt upon the hearts and conſciences of his people, and of their peace, ſafety and ſecurity by it from the wrath of God, and the vengeance of divine juſtice; of the farther uſe of this rite, ſee on ℣. 22, 23. Aben Ezra mentions it as the opinion of ſome, that the ſprinkling of the blood on thoſe places was to ſhew, that they ſlew the abomination of the Egyptians openly; but he himſelf gives a much better reaſon for this rite, namely, that it was to be a propitiation for every one that eat in the houſe, and was a ſign to the deſtroyer, that he might look upon it in like manner, as it is ſaid Ezek. ix. 4. ſet a mark, &c. this ſeems to be peculiar to the paſſover in Egypt, and was not uſed in after-times.

℣. 8. And they ſhall eat the fleſh in that night roſt with fire, &c.] The night of the 14th of Niſan; and as the Jews reckoned their days from the evening preceding, this muſt be the beginning of the 15th day, which being obſerved, will ſerve to reconcile ſome paſſages relating to this ordinance. The lamb was to be roaſted, not only becauſe its fleſh thereby would be more palatable and ſavoury, but becauſe ſooneſt dreſt that way, their preſent circumſtances requiring haſte; but chiefly to denote the ſufferings of Chriſt, the antitype of it, when he endured the wrath of God poured out as fire upon him; and alſo to ſhew, that he is to be fed upon by faith, which works by love, or to be received with hearts inflamed with love to him: and unleavened bread; this alſo was to be eaten at the ſame time, and for ſeven days running, even to the 26th day of the month, ℣. 15, 18. where ſee more concerning this: the reaſon of this alſo was, becauſe they were then in haſte, and could not ſtay to leaven the dough that was in their troughs; and was ſignificative of the unleavened bread bread of ſincerity and truth, with which the true paſſover-lamb is to be eaten, in oppoſition to the leaven of error, hypocriſy and malice, 1 Cor. v. 7, 8: and with bitter herbs they ſhall eat it; the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, with wild lettuces, which are very bitter; and the worſt ſort of which, for bitterneſs, Pliny ſays [p], is what they call picris, which has its name from the bitterneſs of it, and is the ſame by which the Septuagint render the word here: the Targum of Jonathan is, "with horehound and endive, they ſhall eat it;" and ſo the Targum on Cant. ii. 9. Wild endive; of which Pliny ſays [q], there is a wild endive, which in Egypt they call cichory, and bids fair to be one of theſe herbs; according to the Miſnah [r], and Maimonides [s], there were five ſorts of them, and any one, or all of them might be eaten; their names with both are theſe, Chazoreth, Ulſhin, Thamcah, Charcabinah and Maror; the four firſt of which may be the wild lettuce, endive, horehound, or perhaps tanſie; and cichory the laſt. Maror has its name from bitterneſs, and is by the Miſnic commentators [t] ſaid to be a ſort of the moſt bitter coriander; it ſeems to be the ſame with picris: but whatever they were, for it is uncertain what they were, they were expreſſive of the bitter afflictions of the children of Iſrael in Egypt, with which their lives were made bitter; and of thoſe bitter afflictions and perſecutions in the world, which they that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus muſt expect to endure; as well as they may ſignify that as a crucified Chriſt muſt be looked upon, and lived upon by faith, ſo with mourning and humiliation for ſin, and with true repentance for it as an evil and bitter thing, ſee Zech. xii. 10.

[i] Miſn. Peſach. c. 8. §. 2. [k] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 34. 2. [l] בין הערבים inter duas veſperas, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Ainſworth. [m] Miſn. Peſach. c. 5. §. 1. [n] De bello Jud. l. 6. c. 9. §. 3. [o] Lex. Pentaglott. col. 1938.

℣. 9. Eat not of it raw, &c.] Not roaſted enough; and ſo Jarchi ſays, that what is not ſufficiently roaſted, or is not throughly and down roaſted, is in the Arabic language called נא [u], the word here uſed; and ſo Maimonides [w] ſays it ſignifies fleſh, on which the fire begins to operate, and is roaſted a little, but not enough for eating. And indeed there ſeems to be no neceſſity of a prohibition of eating the fleſh quite raw: ſome [x] derive the word from a root which ſignifies to break, and ſuppoſe that this rule forbids the breaking or cutting it in pieces; that as it was to be roaſted whole, and not a bone of it to be broken, ſo it was to be brought to table whole, and the whole to be eaten; but then it could not be eaten without being cut to pieces. Abarbinel [y] takes the word in the uſual ſignification of it, now, as if the ſenſe was, ye ſhall not eat of it now, not before the evening of the 14th day; but whereas Moſes had told them, ℣. 6. that the lamb was to be kept up until the 14th day, it was needleſs to tell them that they ſhould not eat it now or immediately; the firſt ſenſe is beſt, and this ſhews that Chriſt, the antitype of this lamb, is not to be eaten in a carnal but ſpiritual manner, of which our Lord treats in John vi. nor ſodden at all with water; the Targum of Jonathan is, "neither boiled in wine, nor "in oil, nor in other liquor, nor boiled in water." This, with reſpect to the antitype, ſhews, that Chriſt is not received in a cold lukewarm manner, and with indifference; and that nothing is to be mixed, added and joined unto him, but he alone is to be regarded in the buſineſs of our acceptance, juſtification and ſalvation: but roſt with fire; for the reaſons before given: the manner of roaſting it, according to the Jewiſh canons [z], was this, they bring a ſpit made of the wood of pomegranate, and thruſt it into its mouth quite through it, and put the thighs and entrails within it; they don't roaſt the paſſover-lamb on an iron ſpit, nor on an iron grate. Maimonides [a] is a little more particular and exact in his account to the queſtion; how do they roaſt it? he replies, "they transfix it thro' "the middle of the mouth to its poſteriors, with a "wooden ſpit, and they hang it in the midſt of a "furnace, and the fire below:" ſo that it was not turned upon a ſpit, according to our manner of roaſting, but was ſuſpended on a hook, and roaſted by the fire underneath, and ſo was a more exact figure of Chriſt ſuſpended on the croſs, and enduring the fire of divine wrath. And Juſtin Martyr [b] is ſtill more particular, who was by birth a Samaritan, and was well verſed in Jewiſh affairs; he even in converſing with Trypho the Jew, who could have contradicted him had he ſaid what was wrong, ſays, the lamb was roaſted in the form of a croſs; one ſpit, he ſays, went through from the lower parts to the head, and again another acroſs the ſhoulders, to which the hands (or rather the legs) of the lamb were faſtened and hung; and ſo was a very lively emblem of Chriſt crucified: his head, with his legs, and with the purtenance thereof; or with its inwards [c], theſe were all to be roaſted together, the whole lamb with all that belonged to it, with which the above canon of the Jews agrees.

℣. 10. And ye ſhall let nothing of it remain until the morning, &c.] It was to be all ate up; a whole Chriſt is to be received and fed upon by faith; Chriſt in both his natures, divine and human, united in his perſon, in all his offices of prophet, prieſt and king, and with all the benefits and bleſſings of his grace, and which come by his blood, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice: and that which remaineth of it until the morning, ye ſhall burn with fire; what of the fleſh which remaineth not ate, and what of it that could not be eaten, as the bones, which were not broken, and the nerves and ſinews, which might not be eaten; and ſo runs the Jewiſh canon [d], "the bones, and the ſinews, and what "remains, they ſhall burn on the 16th day; and "if the 16th happens on the ſabbath, they ſhall "burn on the 17th." The reaſon of this law was, that what was left might not be converted to common or ſuperſtitious uſes, as alſo that the Iſraelites might not be burdened with it in their journey, nor the Egyptians have an opportunity of treating it with contempt.

℣. 11. And thus ſhall ye eat it, &c.] After the following manner, in the habit and poſture deſcribed: the Targum of Jonathan adds, "at this "time, and not in ages following;" for theſe rites were peculiar to the paſſover in Egypt, and not to be obſerved in after-times: with your loins girded; that is, with their garments girt about their loins, for the better convenience in travelling; for in thoſe countries they wore long looſe garments, which reached to their feet, and unleſs girt up were a great hindrance in walking; and may denote the ſaints being girt with the girdle of truth, and their readi-readineſs and fitneſs to perform every good work: your ſhoes on your feet; which uſed to be put off at feaſts, in order to have their feet waſhed, which was frequently done at ſuch times, as we learn from many inſtances in ſcripture, which could not be done unleſs the ſhoes were off, Gen. xviii. 4, 5. Luke vii. 44. John xiii. 5. beſides, it is highly probable, that the Iſraelites in Egypt did not wear ſhoes in common, it being a hot country, and they in a ſtate of poverty and bondage; but now being about to depart the land, and to take a journey, they are ordered to have their ſhoes on, to be ready for it; and was a token of their deliverance and freedom, and joy on that occaſion; and may, in an evangelic ſenſe, denote the feet of the ſaints being ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpel of peace, Eph. vi. 15. and your ſtaff in your hand; ſuch as travellers make uſe of to ſupport and aſſiſt, protect and defend them in their journey, and may be expreſſive of faith in the word and promiſes of God, which are the ſupport of his people in their paſſage through this world, Pſ. xxiii. 4. and ye ſhall eat it in haſte; becauſe upon ſlaying the firſt-born the Egyptians would be urgent upon them to depart immediately: Aquila renders it, with fear, and ſo the Targum of Jonathan; but the other ſenſe ſuits beſt with the circumſtances of the Iſraelites: it is the Lord's paſſover; which he has commanded, and is a ſign and token of his paſſing over the houſes of the Iſraelites, when he deſtroyed the firſt-born in all the houſes of the Egyptians, and which is explained in the following verſe, and the reaſon of its name given; the act of paſſing was his, the ordinance was appointed by him, and it was typical of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt the true paſſover, 1 Cor. v. 7.

[p] Nat. Hiſt. l. 19. c. 8. & 21. 17. & 32. 22. [q] Ibid. [r] Miſn. Peſach. c. 2. §. 6. [s] Hilchot, Chametz umetzah, c. 7. §. 13. [t] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Peſach. ut ſupra. [u] לא cruda fuit caro, Golius, col. 2476. Semicocta, cruda fuit caro, Caſtell. Lex. col. 2296. Vid. Hottinger. Smegma Oriental. p. 169, 170. [w] Hilchot Korban Peſach, c. 8. §. 6. [x] Oleaſter apud Rivet in loc. Guſſet. Comment. Ebr. p. 487, 488; ſo ſome in Aben Ezra. [y] So Marinus Brixianus in arca Noe. [z] Miſn. Peſach. c. 7. §. 1, 2. [a] Hilchot Korban Peſach, c. 8. §. 10. [b] Dialog. cum Trypho Jud. p. 259. [c] ועל קרבו & cum interioribus ejus, Pagninus, Tigurine verſion, ſo Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [d] Miſn. ut ſupra, §. 10.

℣. 12. For I will paſs through the land of Egypt this night, &c.] Which muſt be underſtood conſiſtent with his omnipreſence, and of the manifeſtation of his powerful preſence, or of the exertion of his mighty power in the following event: and will ſmite all the firſt-born in the land of Egypt, both man and beaſt; as had been declared to Pharaoh, ch. xi. 5. and againſt all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgment; meaning either figuratively, the nobles, princes, judges, and civil magiſtrates, who are ſometimes called Elohim gods; but ſince the firſt-born of theſe as of others, and ſo the judgment on them are comprehended in the preceding clauſe, this is rather to be underſtood literally of the idols of the Egyptians, their images of gold and ſilver, or of whatever they were made of: the Targum of Jonathan is, "on all the idols "of the Egyptians I will exerciſe four judgments; "the molten idols ſhall be melted, the idols of "ſtone ſhall be cut aſunder, the idols of earth "ſhall be broke to pieces, and the idols of wood "ſhall become aſhes;" ſee Numb. xxxiii. 4. Iſ. xix. 1. and there are ſome traces of this in heathen writers; Artapanus [e] ſays, that by an earthquake moſt of the temples in Egypt fell; and Juſtin [f] reports, that Moſes being the leader of the exile Iſraelites, ſtole away the ſacred things of the Egyptians, i. e. their gods, which they endeavoured to regain by force of arms: I am the Lord; God Almighty, faithful and true, and therefore what was threatened ſhould certainly be performed, and thereby the Egyptians and all others might know that he was Jehovah alone, and that there is no god beſide him.

℣. 13, And the blood ſhall be to you for a token upon the houſes where you are, &c.] The blood of the paſſover-lamb being ſprinkled on the two ſide-poſts and upper door-poſts of the houſes inhabited by the Iſraelites, or where they were eating the paſſover; this ſhould be a ſign or token to them of the Lord's making good his promiſes to them, and ſo of their ſafety, and to the deſtroying angel not to enter therein, but paſs by and ſave them: and when I ſee the blood, I will paſs over you; for which reaſon, this ordinance now inſtituted was called the paſſover, becauſe the Lord, on ſight of the blood ſprinkled, paſſed over the houſes of the Iſraelites to thoſe of the Egyptians; or leaped, as Jarchi ſays, the word ſignifies, ſkipped from one Egyptian houſe to another, paſſing by that of the Iſraelites: and the plague ſhall not be upon you, to deſtroy you, when I ſmite the land of Egypt; the peſtilence with which the firſt-born ſhould be deſtroyed.

℣. 14. And this day ſhall be unto you for a memorial, &c.] To be remembered, and that very deſervedly, for the deſtruction of the firſt-born of the Egyptians, and for the deliverance of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, and as memorable a day it is, and much more ſo for the redemption of the ſpiritual Iſrael by the Meſſiah; for it was on this ſelf ſame day that he ſuffered for the redemption and ſalvation of his people: the Jews not only have a ſaying, "that in the month Niſan they "were redeemed, and in the month Niſan they "will be redeemed [g]," but they expreſsly ſay, "on the ſame day, the 15th of Niſan, Iſrael is to "be redeemed, in the days of the Meſſiah, as they "were redeemed on that day, as it is ſaid, according to the days, &c. Mic. vii. 15." [h] and you ſhall keep it a feaſt to the Lord throughout your generations; as the 15th day was properly the Chagigah or feſtival day, when they made a feaſt both of the flock and of the herd, of both ſheep and oxen, Deut. vi. 2. you ſhall keep it a feaſt by an ordinance for ever; unto the end of the Jewiſh œconomy and church-ſtate, until the Meſſiah come, the true paſſover, and be ſacrificed for us.

℣. 15. Seven days ſhall ye eat unleavened bread, &c.] From the evening of the 14th day to the evening of the 21ſt; and this was a diſtinct feſtival from what was properly called the feaſt of the paſſover, and does not reſpect the firſt paſſover in Egypt; for though the paſſover-lamb was eaten with unleavened bread, and the Iſraelites eat no other, not only for ſeven days, but for 30 days following; yet this was not only by the divine command but through neceſſity, they having no other bread to eat; but in after-times they were commanded to keep a feaſt for ſeven days, in which they were not to eat leavened bread, in commemoration of their haſty departure out of Egypt, not having time to leaven the dough in their troughs, and of their diſtreſs and want of ſavoury bread: even the firſt day ye ſhall put away leaven out of your houſes; out of their dwelling-houſes, which were to be diligently ſearched for that purpoſe, and every hole and crevice in them; and not only their lower rooms, their dining rooms and parlours, but their upper rooms and bed chambers; becauſe it was poſſible a man might ſometimes go into them with a piece of bread in his hand, and drop or leave ſome of it behind him: yea ſynagogues and ſchools were to be ſearched, ſince

[e] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 436.
[f] E Trogo, l. 36. c. 2.
[g] Roſh-Haſhanah, fol. 11. 1. 2.
[h] Cabaliſtæ apud Fagium in loc.

ſince children might carry thither leavened bread [i]; and this ſearch was to be made by the light of a lamp or candle, not by the light of the moon, if in the night, nor by the light of the ſun, if in the day, but by the light of a lamp or candle, and not by the light of a torch, or of a lump of fat, or greaſe, or oil, but by a lamp or candle of wax [k]: and this ſearch was to be made at the beginning of the night of the 14th of Niſan; yea, it is ſaid that leavened bread was forbidden from the 7th hour of the day, that is, one o'clock in the afternoon and upwards, which is the middle of the day [l]: the account of the Miſnic doctors is [m], "R. Meir ſays, that they may eat "leaven the whole 5th hour, i. e. 11 o'clock in "the morning, and burn it the beginning of the "6th, or 12 o'clock; R. Judah ſays, they may eat "it all the 4th hour, or 10 o'clock, and ſuſpend "it the whole 5th hour, and burn it the begin-"ning of the 6th:" for whoſoever eateth leavened bread, from the firſt day until the ſeventh day; from the firſt of the ſeven days to the laſt of them, beginning at the night of the 14th, and ending at the night of the 21ſt: that ſoul ſhall be cut off from Iſrael; either from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and be disfranchiſed, and not accounted as an Iſraelite; or from the Iſraelitiſh church-ſtate, and have no communion in it, or partake of the ordinances of it; or if it is to be underſtood of cutting off by death, it is either by the hand of the civil magiſtrate, or by the immediate hand of God; and is ſometimes by the Jews interpreted, of a man dying, either without children, or before he is 50 years of age, and ſome even underſtand it, of deſtruction of ſoul and body, or of eternal damnation.

℣. 16. And in the firſt day there ſhall be an holy convocation, &c.] An holy day, in which the people ſhould be called to holy exerciſes, and wholly abſtain from worldly buſineſs, done on other days: and in the 7th day there ſhall be an holy convocation unto you; obſerved in a feſtival way, and in the like religious manner the firſt day was, the day of their going out of Egypt; and the 7th was the day in which Pharaoh and his hoſt were drowned in the Red Sea, as Aben Ezra obſerves; for which reaſons thoſe days are diſtinguiſhed from the reſt, and appointed to be holy convocations, and which appear from the journeying of the children of Iſrael, as computed by Junius: they came to Succoth on the 15th, to Etham the 17th, to Pihahiroth the 18th, where they were ordered to ſtay, and wait the coming of their enemies, on the 20th the army of Pharaoh came up to them, and the night following the Iſraelites paſſed through the ſea and the Egyptians were drowned: no manner of work ſhall be done in them; as uſed to be done on other days, and as were on the other five days of this feſtival: the Jewiſh canons are, "it is forbidden "to do any work on the evening of the paſſover, "from the middle of the day and onward, and "whoever does work from the middle of the day "and onward, they excommunicate him; even "though he does it for nothing, it is forbidden [n]:" "R. Meir ſays, whatever work any one begins "before the 14th (of Niſan) he may finiſh it on "the 14th, but he may not begin it on the be-"ginning of the 14th, though he could finiſh it: "the wiſemen ſay, three workmen may work on "the evening of the paſſover unto the middle of "the day, and they are theſe, taylors, barbers, "and fullers: R. Joſe bar Judah ſays, alſo ſhoe-"makers [o]," but in the text no exception is made but the following: ſave that which every man muſt eat, that only may be done of you; ſo that kindling fire and preparing food might be done on thoſe days, which might not be done on ſabbath-days; and the prohibition of work was not ſo ſtrict on thoſe days as on that.

℣. 17. And ye ſhall obſerve the feaſt of unleavened bread, &c.] Which was a diſtinct feaſt from the paſſover-feaſt; for though at that, unleavened bread was eat, it was kept but one night, this ſeven days; and it is repeated that it might be taken notice of, and the rather, as it was to be obſerved in all ages as long as the Jewiſh œconomy laſted; the reaſon of which follows: for in this ſelf-ſame day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt; which, though not already done, was juſt on doing, and was certain; and beſides, it reſpects the day when it ſhould come about another year: by their armies, are meant the tribes of Iſrael, not ſo much for their military force, for as yet they were an unarmed people, but for their numbers, which were ſufficient to make ſeveral conſiderable armies, and for their order and eaſe, and their being without any fear of the enemy, in which they marched out of Egypt: therefore ſhall ye obſerve this day in your generations, by an ordinance for ever; according to the rules given, with the ſame exactneſs, ſtrictneſs, and conſtancy as the firſt of the paſſover, and as long as that continued; ſee the note on ℣. 14.

℣. 18. In the firſt month, &c.] As it was now ordered to be reckoned, the month Abib or Niſan: the 14th day of the month at even, ye ſhall eat unleavened bread; that is, at the evening following, the 14th of Niſan, and which was the beginning of the 15th day, the Jews beginning their day from the evening: hence the Targum of Jonathan is, "on the 14th of Niſan ye ſhall ſlay the paſſ-"over, in the evening of the 15th ye ſhall eat "unleavened bread:" unto the 20th day of the month at even; which would make juſt ſeven days; the above Targum adds, "on the evening "of the 22d ye ſhall eat leavened bread," which was the evening following the 21ſt day. This long abſtinence from leaven denotes, that the whole lives of thoſe who are Iſraelites indeed, ſhould be without guile, hypocriſy, and malice, and ſhould be ſpent in ſincerity and truth.

℣. 19. Seven days there ſhall be no leaven found in your houſes, &c.] Wherefore, on the 14th day the moſt diligent ſearch was made, and whatever was found was burnt, or caſt into the ſea, or diſperſed with the wind; about which the traditionary writers of the Jews give many rules and canons, ſee the note on ℣. 15. for whoſo eateth that which is leavened, even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from the congregation of Iſrael; which is repeated to deter them from the breach of this ordinance; ſee the note on ℣. 15. and it is added for further explanation, of whom it concerns: whether he be a ſtranger, or born in the land; by a ſtranger is meant, not a mere heathen, who was not bound by this law, but a proſelyte; and not a proſelyte of the gate, one that was only a ſojourner among them, and obſerved the commandments of the ſons of Noah; but a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, who profeſſed the Jewiſh religion, and propoſed to conform to it in all reſpects,

[i] Lebuſh, par. 1. No. 433. §. 1. 3. 10. Schulcan Aruch, par. 1. No. 433. §. 3. 10. [k] Lebuſh & Schulcan, Ib. §. 1. [l] Lebuſh & Schulcan, No. 431. §. 1. [m] Miſn. Peſach. c. 1. §. 4. [n] Lebuſh, par. 1. No. 468. §. 1. Schulcan Aruch, par. 1. No. 468. §. 1. [o] Miſn. Peſach. c. 4. §. 6.

ſpects, and therefore was obliged to obſerve this as other precepts: and by one born in the land, is intended a native of the land of Canaan, whither they were now going in order to poſſeſs it, or a real Iſraelite, ſuch as were born of Iſraelitiſh parents, and proper inhabitants of Canaan, which they would be put into the poſſeſſion of.

℣. 20. Ye ſhall eat nothing leavened, &c.] Bread or any thing elſe that had any leaven in it: in all your habitations ſhall ye eat unleavened bread; that is, if they eat any bread at all, it muſt be ſuch; otherwiſe they might eat cakes of almonds or of eggs mixed with ſugar, provided there was no leaven uſed, and this the Jews call the rich unleavened bread [p]: this is repeated over and over, that they might be the more careful of obſerving this precept; but as this was limited for a certain time, it plainly appears to be a miſtake of Tacitus [q] the Roman hiſtorian, who repreſents unleavened bread as the bread the Jews eat of in common.

℣. 21. Then Moſes called for all the elders of Iſrael, &c.] Not in age but in office, who were either heads of families, or at leaſt principal men in the tribes; which explains in what manner he was to ſpeak to the congregation of Iſrael, and convey to them the will of God concerning the obſervation of theſe feaſts, ℣. 3. and ſaid unto them, draw out; a lamb or a kid, out of their flocks on the tenth day of the month, and keep it up until the 14th, as in ℣. 3, 6. and take you a lamb, according to your families; or take ye of the flock [r], whether a lamb or a kid; a lamb for every family, if there was a ſufficient number in it to eat it up, if not, two or more families were to join and keep the feaſt together: and kill the paſſover; the lamb for the paſſover, which was to be done on the 14th day of the month; and before the prieſthood was eſtabliſhed in the family of Aaron, and before the Iſraelites were poſſeſſed of the land of Canaan, and the temple was built at Jeruſalem, the paſſover was killed by the heads of families, and in their own houſes, but afterwards it was killed only by the prieſts, and at Jeruſalem and in the temple there, ſee Deut. xvi. 5.

℣. 22. And ye ſhall take a bunch of hyſſop, &c.] Which ſome take to be mint, others origanum or marjoram, as Kimchi [s], others roſemary, as Piſcator, Rivet, and many more; and indeed this ſeems to be fitter to ſtrike or ſprinkle with than hyſſop; but it is more generally underſtood of hyſſop, becauſe the Hebrew word Ezob is ſo near in ſound to it; though whether it means the ſame herb we call hyſſop is uncertain: Jarchi ſays, three ſtalks of it are called a bunch, and ſo the Miſnic canon runs [t], "the command concerning hyſſop is three ſtalks, "(which Maimonides on the place interprets roots) "and in them three branches;" which ſome have allegorically applied to the Trinity, by whom the hearts of God's people are ſprinkled with the blood of the true paſchal lamb, and are purged from dead works: the heathens in their ſacrifices uſed ſometimes branches of laurel, and ſometimes branches of the olive to ſprinkle with [u]: and dip it in the blood that is in the baſon; which, according to the Targum of Jonathan, was an earthen veſſel, into which the blood of the lamb was received when ſlain, and into this the bunch of hyſſop was dipped; ſo it was uſual with the heathens to receive the blood of the ſacrifice in cups or baſons [x]: the blood being received into a baſon and not ſpilled on the ground and trampled on, may denote the precioufneſs of the blood of Chriſt, the true paſſover-lamb, which is for its worth and excellent efficacy to be highly prized and eſteemed, and not to be counted as a common or unholy thing; and the dipping the bunch of hyſſop into the blood of the lamb, may ſignify the exerciſe of faith on the blood of Chriſt, which is a low and humble grace, excludes boaſting in the creature, deals alone with the blood of Jeſus for peace, pardon, and cleanſing, and by which the heart is purified, as it deals with that blood: and ſtrike the lintel, and the two ſide-poſts with the blood that is in the baſon; an emblem of the ſprinkling of the hearts and conſciences of believers with the blood of Chriſt, and cleanſing them from all ſin by it: and none of you ſhall go out at the door of his houſe until the morning; that they might not be in the way of the deſtroyer; and though the deſtroying angel knew an Iſraelite from an Egyptian, yet this was to be the ordinance of protection to them, abiding in their houſes, marked with the blood of the paſſover-lamb; ſignifying that their ſafety was in their being under that blood, as the ſafety of believers lies in their being juſtified by the blood of Chriſt; for to that it is owing, that they are ſaved from wrath to come: this is the purple covering under which they paſs ſafely through this world to the heavenly glory, Rom, v. 9. Cant. iii. 10. this circumſtance was peculiar to the paſſover in Egypt; in after-times there was not the like danger.

℣. 23. For the Lord will paſs through to ſmite the Egyptians, &c.] All the firſt-born in the ſeveral families, in all the towns and cities in Egypt: and when he ſeeth the blood upon the lintel, and upon the two ſide-poſts; which muſt be underſtood of his taking notice of it with a ſpecial view to the good of thoſe within the houſe; otherwiſe every thing is ſeen by his all-ſeeing eye: and thus Chriſt, the lamb of God, is in the midſt of the throne, as though he had been ſlain, and is always in the view of God and his divine juſtice; and his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, are always looked unto by him with pleaſure, delight, and ſatisfaction, to the advantage of his people, as applied unto them, who are hereby accepted with him, juſtified in his ſight, and ſecure from condemnation and wrath: the Lord will paſs over the door; and the houſe where this blood is ſprinkled, and go to the next, or where Egyptians dwell; and thus juſtice paſſes over, and paſſes by, acquits and diſcharges them who are intereſted in the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt: and will not ſuffer the deſtroyer to come in unto your houſes to ſmite you; the deſtroying angel, as the Targum of Jonathan; for he ſeems to be diſtinct from the Lord, who is ſaid to paſs through and paſs over, being an attendant and miniſter of his, to execute vengeance upon the Egyptians; and whether a good or a bad angel, it matters not, ſince God can make uſe of either to inflict judgments on men; but it may be more probably the former, even ſuch an one as was employed in deſtroying the whole hoſt of the Aſſyrians in one night, 2 Kings xix. 35. and anſwers better in the antitype

[p] See Leo Modena's Hiſtory of the Rites, &c. of the Jews, par. 3. c. 3. § 5. [q] Hiſt. l. 5. c. 4. [r] מן de filiis gregis, Onk. & Jon. [s] Sepher Shoraſh. rad. אזב [t] Miſn. Parah, c. 11. §. 9 [u] Vid. Kipping. Rom. Antiq. p. 241. Virgil Æneid. 6. Ovid. Faſt. l. 5.

[x] ——— ——— tepidumque cruorem
Succipiunt pateris ——— Virgil. Æneid. 6.

antitype or emblem to the juſtice of God taking vengeance on ungodly ſinners, when it is not ſuffered to do the ſaints any harm.

℣. 24. And ye ſhall obſerve this thing for an ordinance to thee and thy ſons for ever;] Not this laſt thing of ſprinkling the blood, which was peculiar to the paſſover in Egypt; but the whole before obſerved relating to the feaſt of the paſſover, and the feaſt of unleavened bread, and all the rites appertaining to them, which were to be obſerved until the coming of Chriſt.

℣. 25. And it ſhall come to paſs, when ye be come to the land, &c.] To the land of Canaan, towards which they were juſt about to ſet forward on their journey, and in a few years would be in the poſſeſſion of: which the Lord will give you according as he hath promiſed; to their fathers Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and to them: that ye ſhall keep this ſervice; enjoined them, reſpecting the paſſover-lamb, and leavened bread, with all the rites and ceremonies relative thereunto, excepting ſuch as were peculiar to the firſt paſſover in Egypt.

℣. 26. And it ſhall come to paſs, when your children ſhall ſay unto you, what mean ye by this ſervice?] Of killing and roaſting a lamb, and eating it with bitter herbs, and of abſtaining from leavened bread.

℣. 27. That ye ſhall ſay it is the ſacrifice of the Lord's paſſover, &c.] This lamb is a ſacrifice, both euchariſtical, or by way of thankſgiving for their ſafety, when the firſt-born of the Egyptians were ſlain, and for their deliverance out of Egypt, and alſo propitiatory; the blood of this lamb being a propitiation or atonement, for all within the houſe where it was ſprinkled, as before obſerved from Aben Ezra; and typical of the atoning ſacrifice of Chriſt our paſſover, 1 Cor. v. 7. and this was commanded by the Lord, and approved of and accepted by him, and therefore called his ſacrifice as well as paſſover, for the following reaſon: who paſſed over the houſes of the children of Iſrael, when he ſmote the Egyptians, and delivered our houſes; their families, not ſuffering the deſtroying angel to enter into them, which was a very diſtinguiſhing mercy, and worthy of remembrance. Now in this they were to inſtruct their children in ſucceſſive generations, that the memory of it might be kept up, and a ſenſe of the goodneſs of God continued, and his name glorified. Maimonides[y] ſays, "it is a command to make this known to chil-"dren, even though they do not aſk it, as it is "ſaid, and thou ſhalt ſhew thy ſon, Exod. xiii. 8. "According to the ſon's knowledge, his father "teaches him; how if he is a little one or fooliſh? "he ſays to him, my ſon, all of us were ſervants, "as this handmaid, or this ſervant, in Egypt; "and on this night the holy bleſſed God redeemed "us, and brought us into liberty: and if the ſon "is grown up, and a wiſe man, he makes known "to him what happened to us in Egypt, and the "wonders which were done for us by the hand of "Moſes our maſter, all according to the capacity "of his ſon; and it is neceſſary to make a repe-"tition on this night, that the children may ſee, "and aſk, and ſay, how different is this night "from all other nights! until he replies and ſays "to them, ſo and ſo it happened, and thus and "thus it was:" and the people bowed the head and worſhipped; ſignifying the deep ſenſe they had of the mercy ſhewn them, their thankfulneſs for it, and their readineſs to obſerve the ordinance now inſtituted.

℣. 28. And the children of Iſrael went away, &c.] The elders of the people, ℣. 21. they departed to their ſeveral tribes and families at Goſhen and elſewhere: and did as the Lord commanded Moſes and Aaron, ſo did they; they took a lamb on the 10th day, and kept it till the 14th, on which day they ſlew it, and roſted it with fire, and eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs.

℣. 29. And it came to paſs, that at midnight the Lord ſmote all the firſt-born in the land of Egypt, &c.] The midnight of the 15th of Niſan, as the Targum of Jonathan, when faſt aſleep, and thoughtleſs of any danger; and it being at ſuch a time, muſt ſtrike with a greater horror and terror, when ſenſible of the blow, which might be attended with a great noiſe, that might awaken the reſt: from the firſt-born of Pharaoh that ſat on his throne; the heir to his crown, who was to have ſat upon his throne, or already did, being taken a partner with him in it: unto the firſt-born of the captive that was in the dungeon; or priſon, that was grinding at the mill there, ch. xi. 5. which was the work and buſineſs the priſoners were often put to, as appears from the caſe of Samſon, Judg. xvi. 21. and all the firſt-born of cattle; which were left of the other plagues, which had conſumed great numbers of them.

℣. 30. And Pharaoh roſe up in the night, &c.] Being awakened by the uncommon noiſe he heard: he and all his ſervants, and all the Egyptians; he and his nobles, and miniſters of ſtate, courtiers, and counſellors, and his ſubjects in common, perhaps every where in his kingdom, but particularly in the metropolis: and there was a great cry in Egypt; throughout the whole land, the firſt-born being every where ſlain, which cauſed a moſt dreadful lamentation of parents for their eldeſt ſon, of brethren and ſiſters for their elder brother, and of ſervants and maidens for the principal and heir of the family; a cry ſo loud and general as perhaps was never heard before or ſince, and under which diſtreſs they could have no relief, or any to be their comforter, ſince all were in the ſame circumſtances: for there was not a houſe wherein there was not one dead; for if there was no firſt-born in it, as it can hardly be thought there ſhould be in every houſe, though ſome have been of opinion that it was ſo ordered in providence that there ſhould; yet the principal or moſt conſiderable perſon in the family, that is next to the maſter, might be called the firſt-born, as Jarchi notes from Pſ. lxxxix. 27. Though this may be taken as an hyperbolical expreſſion, or as Aben Ezra obſerves, it being uſual with the ſcripture to ſay that of all, which is true of the greateſt part.

℣. 31. And he called for Moſes and Aaron by night, &c.] Not that Pharaoh went in perſon, but he ſent his ſervants to call them; for they never ſaw his face more after he had drove them from his preſence; but now was fulfilled what Moſes told him, that his ſervants ſhould come to him in a very ſupplicant manner, and intreat him and his people to get away in all haſte, ch. x. 28, 29. and xi. 8. Where Moſes and Aaron now were is not certain, probably in the city, or ſuburbs of it, where Pharaoh's palace was, for it is not likely that they were gone to Goſhen: and ſaid riſe up; from their beds in which they now were, being midnight: midnight: and get ye forth from among my people, both ye and the children of Iſrael; even all of them, without any exception of women or children as before; and without limiting them to place or time, where they ſhould go, and how long they ſhould ſtay; and without obliging them to promiſe to return: and go and ſerve the Lord as ye have ſaid; as they had intreated they might, and as they had demanded in the name of the Lord that they ſhould; to which now he gave his conſent, though he afterwards repented of it.

[y] Hilchot Chametz umetzah, c. 7. §. 2, 3.

✝. 32. Alſo take your flocks and your herds, as ye have ſaid, &c.] Which they had inſiſted upon ſhould go with them, but he had refuſed, but now he is willing they ſhould go with them: and be gone; out of his city and country in all haſte: and bleſs me alſo; or pray for me, as the Targum of Onkelos; pray the Lord to beſtow a bleſſing upon me alſo, as I have done well by you in ſuffering you to depart with your whole families, flocks, and herds. The Targum of Jonathan is, "I deſire no-"thing elſe of you, only pray for me, that I die "not;" and ſo Jarchi. As he found his firſt-born, and the heir to his crown and kingdom was dead, he might juſtly fear it would be his caſe next, and perhaps very ſoon; and therefore deſires their prayers for him, that his life might be ſpared.

✝. 33. And the Egyptians were urgent upon the people, &c.] The people of Iſrael; not uſing force, but ſtrong intreaties, the moſt powerful arguments, and importunate language they were maſters of: that they might ſend them out of the land in haſte; this looks as if it was the people about Pharaoh, his miniſters and courtiers, they were preſſing upon to diſmiſs the Iſraelites at once, and to haſten their departure; or elſe Moſes and Aaron, and the elders of the people, to ſtir them up to a quick diſpatch of their affairs, that they might be ſoon rid of them; unleſs the ſenſe is, that they were very ſolicitous and earneſt with the people, that they would get away out of the land as faſt as they could: for they ſaid, we be all dead men; for their firſt-born being all ſlain, they expected that they themſelves, and the reſt of their families, would be ſtruck with death next; and this they feared would be the caſe in a very little time, if they did not depart; for they had ſufficient reaſon to convince them, that it was purely on their account, and becauſe they had not leave to go out of the land, that all the above judgments, and particularly the laſt, were inflicted on them.

✝. 34. And the people took their dough before it was leavened, &c.] They had that evening mixed their flour with water, and made it into dough, but had put no leaven into it; and the Egyptians being ſo very earneſt to have them gone, they ſtaid not to put any leaven into it: but their kneading troughs, or rather their dough, being bound up in their clothes upon their ſhoulders; for it is not likely that their troughs ſhould be wrapped up in the ſkirts of their garments; but their dough might, if their clothes were like the hykes of the Arabs now, as Dr. Shaw [z] thinks they were, and which are pretty much like the plads of the Scotch, and which are large enough for ſuch a purpoſe; as even the veil which Ruth wore held 6 meaſures of barley, Ruth iii. 15. and ſo theſe clothes of theirs, like the Arabs hykes, and the Scotch plads, might be ſo made that large lumps of dough being bound up in them, might be thrown over their ſhoulders, and ſo carried by them when they journeyed.

✝. 35. And the children of Iſrael did according to the word of Moſes, &c.] Ch. iii. 22. and xi. 2, 3. and they borrowed of the Egyptians jewels of ſilver, and jewels of gold, and raiment; or they aſked [a] them of the Egyptians to give them them, which they readily did to get rid of them; for upon their being urgent with the Iſraelites to be gone in haſte, they might reply, that they were not provided with things ſuitable for a journey, and therefore requeſted ſuch things of them, which they at once freely conſented to; ſee the notes on ch. iii. 22. and xi. 2, 3.

✝. 36. And the Lord gave the people favour in the ſight of the Egyptians, &c.] Their minds were diſpoſed towards them, and their hearts were inclined to grant their requeſt, and did grant it: ſo they lent unto them; ſuch things as they required; or they gave unto them [b]; made preſents of them freely to them; and ſo Joſephus ſays [c], that they honoured them with gifts: and they ſpoiled the Egyptians; ſtripped them of their ſubſtance and riches, of their moſt valuable things; in doing which they were in no wiſe criminal, ſince they did it by the direction and authority of God, who has a right to diſpoſe of all the things in the world; and to take of them from one, and give to another, as he pleaſes; nor was any injuſtice done to the Egyptians, who owed all this, and perhaps abundantly more to the Iſraelites, for the labour and ſervice they had ſerved them in for many years; beſides they were the avowed enemies of Iſrael, and the Lord had now put himſelf at the head of the armies of Iſrael, and was contending with them, and they with him, who ſhould overcome; and this was doing no other than what, according to the law of nations, is lawful to be done in time of war; to ſpoil, plunder, and diſtreſs an enemy, in whatſoever way it can be done. And thus the promiſe made to Abraham, that his poſterity ſhould come out with great ſubſtance, was fulfilled, Gen. xv. 14. This circumſtance is taken notice of by ſome heathen writers, as Artapanus [d]; who ſays they borrowed many cups of the Egyptians, and not a little raiment, beſides a great quantity of other treaſure and riches; and ſo Ezekiel the tragedian [e] ſpeaks of a vaſt deal of gold and ſilver, raiment, and other things, the Iſraelitiſh women had of the Egyptians at their departure, and who relates the hiſtory of Moſes and the above plagues very agreeable to the ſacred writings.

✝. 37. And the children of Iſrael journeyed from Rameſes to Succoth, &c.] Rameſes was a place in Goſhen, or rather the land of Goſhen, from whence the country was ſo called; ſee the note on Gen. xlvii. 11. The Targum of Jonathan takes it to be Peluſium, or Sin, now called Tinah, formerly the ſtrength of Egypt, and which lay at the entrance of it, and ſays it was 130 miles to Succoth; and Jarchi ſays 120. But the diſtance between theſe 2 places was not ſo great; for Succoth from Rameſes it is computed was 8 miles [f] only. The latter place is ſo called by anticipation; for it was now a deſert, as Joſephus [g] ſays, which he calls Latopolis, but had its name Succoth from the children of [z] Travels, p 224, 225. Edit. 2.

[a] וישאלו et poſtulaverunt, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; petierunt, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

[b] וישאלום ut petita darent, Tigurine verſion; ut dederint, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Ainſworth, Cartwright.

[c] Antiqu. l. 2. c. 14. § 6.

[d] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 436.

[e] Apud Euſeb. ib. c. 29. p. 443.

[f] See Bunting's Travels, p. 81.

[g] Ut ſupra, c. 15. § 1.

of Iſrael pitching their tents there; for the word ſignifies tents or tabernacles. The number of the children of Iſrael when they came out of Egypt were about 600,000 on foot, that were men, beſides children; and which is confirmed by the account that Chœremon [g] the heathen gives, who makes the number of thoſe drove out of Egypt, as he calls them, 250,000; and ſays that when they came to Peluſium, they found there 380,000 left there by Amenophis; which makes in all 630,000. And ſo Philo the Jew ſays [h], they were above 600,000, beſides old men, children, and women, that could not eaſily be numbered; and the word about will admit of it, ſince it may be uſed not to diminiſh, but to increaſe the number; and it is certain that in the 2d year after they were come out of Egypt; their number was 600550 without the Levites, who were not numbered; and they that were numbered were ſuch as were 20 years old and upward, and able to go forth to war, Numb. i. 9. and ii. 32. and ſuch were thoſe here, as Jarchi obſerves; ſo that if there were 600,000 men of 20 years old and upwards, able to bear arms, beſides women, children, and old men, it may well be thought that in all, there were no leſs than near two millions and a half; for, according to the ordinary proportion allowed in other nations of four to one between the number of the whole people in a nation, and thoſe men fit to bear arms, that the number of the Iſraelites alone, of all ages and ſexes which went out of Egypt along with Moſes, will amount to two millions and 400,000 ſouls [i]; which was a prodigious increaſe of 70 perſons in little more than 200 years, and a moſt marvellous thing it was, that in ſo large a number of perſons there was not one feeble among them, Pſ. cv. 37.

℣. 38. And a mixed multitude went up alſo with them, &c.] Some of theſe were Egyptians, and ſome of other nations that had reſided in Egypt, and who, on various accounts, might chuſe to go along with the children of Iſrael; ſome through intermarriages with them, being loth to part with their relations, ſee Lev. xx. 10. others on account of religion, being proſelytes of righteouſneſs, and others through worldly intereſt, the land of Egypt being by the plagues a moſt deſolate place; and ſuch wonders being wrought for the children of Iſrael, they ſaw they were a people that were the favourites of heaven, and judged it ſafeſt and beſt and moſt for their intereſt to keep with them: the Targum of Jonathan computes the number of thoſe to be 240 myriads: and flocks and herds, even very much cattle; the greateſt part of which muſt be ſuppoſed to belong to the children of Iſrael, whoſe cattle were not deſtroyed when thoſe of the Egyptians were; and the reſt might be the cattle of ſuch who feared and regarded the word of God, and took their cattle into their houſes at the time of the plague of hail, whereby they were preſerved; and which might be an inducement to them to take their herds and their flocks and go along with the children of Iſrael, ſee ch. ix. 20.

℣. 39. And they baked unleavened cakes, &c.] While they were at Succoth; but ſince that was a deſert place, where could they get ovens to bake them in? they might lay them upon coals, and by frequent turning them bake them, or under hot aſhes, under a pan covered with hot embers and coals, on an hearth, in which way cakes and other things are now baked with us in many places: of the quick way of dreſſing cakes in the eaſtern countries, ſee the note on Gen. xviii. 6. and ſome render the word, cakes under aſhes [k], which were made of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt, for it was not leavened; of the manner of their bringing it, ſee on ℣. 34. and the reaſon why it was not leavened follows: becauſe they were thruſt out of Egypt, and could not tarry; to leaven their dough, in ſuch haſte did they go out from thence. When they are ſaid to be thruſt out, it is not to be underſtood of force and compulſion uſed, or of any indecent and ill behaviour towards them; but of earneſt intreaties and urgent perſuaſions to depart; though this no doubt gave riſe to the ſtories told by Juſtin [l], Tacitus [m], and others, that they were drove and caſt out of Egypt by force, becauſe they were a filthy diſeaſed people, infected with the ſcab, itch, and leproſy; whereas there was not a ſick, unſound, infirm, and feeble perſon among them, as before obſerved: neither had they prepared for themſelves any victual; they had their flocks and their herds, out of which they could take for their uſe, and they had dough tho' unleavened and unbaked; but they had nothing ready dreſſed; what remained of the paſſover-lamb they were obliged to burn; they had nothing which was got by hunting or fiſhing, as the word [n] uſed ſignifies; neither veniſon nor fiſh, of the latter of which there was great plenty in Egypt.

℣. 40. Now the ſojourning of the children of Iſrael, who dwelt in Egypt, &c.] The Septuagint verſion adds, and in the land of Canaan; and the Samaritan verſion is, "the ſojourning of the children of Iſ-" rael, and of their fathers, in the land of Canaan, "and in the land of Egypt." Agreeable to which are both the Talmuds; in one [o] of them the words are, "in Egypt and in all lands," and in the other [p] "in Egypt, and in the reſt of the lands;" and in the ſame way Aben Ezra interprets the words. And certain it is, that Iſrael did not dwell in Egypt 430 years, and even not much more than 200 years; but then they and their fathers Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, dwelt ſo long in Meſopotamia, in Canaan, and in Egypt, in foreign countries, in a land not theirs, as the phraſe is Gen. xv. 13. where the place of their ſojourning, and the time of it, are given by way of prophecy. The Jews reckon from the viſion of God to Abraham between the pieces to the birth of Iſaac 30 years, ſo the Targum of Jonathan; but that cannot be, though from his coming out of his own native place, Ur of the Chaldeans, to the birth of Iſaac might be ſo many years, ſince he was 75 years of age when he came out of Haran, Gen. xii. 4. and if he ſtayed at Haran 5 years, as probably he did, then there were juſt 30 from his coming out of Ur of the Chaldees to Iſaac's birth, ſince he was born when he was 100 years old; and from the birth of Iſaac to the birth of Jacob was 60 years, Gen. xxv. 26. and from thence to his going down to Egypt was 130, Gen. xlvii. 9. and from thence to the coming of Iſrael out of Egypt were 210 years, as is generally computed, which make the exact ſum of 430 years; of theſe ſee more in the notes on Acts vii. 6. and Gal. iii. 17.

℣.

[g] Apud Joſeph. contr. Apion, l. 1. §. 32. [h] De vita Moſis, l. 1. p. 625. [i] Bp. of Clogher's Chronology of the Hebrew Bible, p. 271. See Judah Leon's Relation of memorable Things, &c. p. 2. [k] עגת ſubcineritios panes, V. L. ſubcineritia, Samar. ιξυφιας, Sept. ſo Munſter [l] E Trogo, l. 36, c. 2. [m] Hiſt. l. 5. c. 3. Manetho apud Joſeph. contr. Apion, l. 1. c. 15. & Chœremon apud ib. c. 32. & Lyſimachus apud ib. c. 34. [n] צדת vox autem proprie ſignificat aliquid venando captum, Piſcator. [o] T. Hieroſ. Megillah, fol. 71. 4. [p] T. Bab. Megillah, fol. 9. 1.

ver. 41. And it came to pass at the end of 430 years, &c.] As soon as completed: even the self-same day it came to pass, that all the hosts of the Lord went out from the land of Egypt; which was the 15th of Nisan; and Jarchi says it was on the 15th of Nisan that the decree was made known to Abraham between the pieces concerning the affliction of his posterity 400 years in a land not theirs; but this is not to be depended on; yet it looks as if at the close of the 430 years, from the date of them, exactly to a day, the children of Israel, the armies of the Lord came out of Egypt in great order: however it seems certain by this, that they all came out the same day, which was very wonderful that such a large number should be collected together, and that they should march out of the land on one and the same day; and it is pretty plain it was in the day-time, and very likely in the midst of the day; for they were not to stir out of their houses till morning, and then they had what remained of the passover to burn, as well as many other things to do, it is very probable, and some which they could not do; so that they did not go by night, or by stealth, but openly at noon-day; and the words will bear to be rendered, in the strength or body of the day [r], when it is at its height, as it is at noon; and so the Jews represent the Lord speaking after this manner [s], "If I bring "out Israel by night, the Egyptians will say, now "he does his work after the manner of thieves; "but behold, I will bring them out in the midst "of the day, in the strength of the sun, as is "said, and it was in the self-same day, &c."

ver. 42. It is a night to be much observed unto the Lord, &c.] Or a night of observations [t], in which many things are to be observed to the honour and glory of God, as done by him, wherein his power, wisdom, goodness, truth and faithfulness, are displayed; partly by the destruction of the Egyptian first-born, and particularly for bringing them, the children of Israel, out from the land of Egypt; with the leave, and even pressing importunity of the Egyptians, and with so much wealth and riches, having found great favour in their sight, which was from the Lord: this is that night of the Lord to be much observed of all the children of Israel in their generations; in successive ages unto the coming of the Messiah, for the reasons before given; and the self-same night is worthy the remembrance of all the spiritual Israel of God, of all true believers in Christ; for that very night after Christ had eat the passover with his disciples, he was betrayed by one of them; and to perpetuate the memory of this, and of his sufferings and death, an ordinance is appointed to be observed until his second coming, see 1 Cor. xi. 23—26. and the ancient Jews themselves have had some notion of the appearance of the Messiah at this time; for they not only expect his coming at the time of the passover, and speak of their redemption by him in the month of Nisan, as before observed on ver. 14. but of this very night, among the four observable things in it, the 4th they say is, Moses shall go out of the midst of the wilderness, and the king Messiah out of Rome; so it is said in the Jerusalem Targum on the place.

ver. 43. And the Lord said unto Moses and Aaron, &c.] At the same time he acquainted them with the above things: this is the ordinance of the passover; as before delivered, and these the laws and rules, according to which it is to be observed, as now related, both respect to the lamb, and to the unleavened bread; and the following is an account of the persons that were to partake of it: there shall no stranger eat thereof; one that is of another country, an entire heathen, and unacquainted with, and does not profess the Jewish religion, which was the religion of God.

ver. 44. But every man's servant bought with his money, &c.] And so his own property: when thou hast circumcised him; as such an one ought to be according to the covenant of circumcision given to Abraham, Gen. xvii. 13, 27. though one should think not without his consent; wherefore care was to be taken to purchase such servants as would be willing to conform to that rite, and pains were to be taken with them to instruct them in it, and persuade them to it; to which, when they had submitted, they had a right to eat the passover, but if they did not, it was not allowed: then shall he eat thereof; but not otherwise.

ver. 45. A foreigner and an hired servant shall not eat thereof.] One of another nation, and one that was only hired by the day, week or year; as they were not obliged to circumcision, so without it they had no right to eat of the passover, none but such as became proselytes of righteousness.

ver. 46. In one house shall it be eaten, &c.] For though there might be more lambs than one eaten in a house, where there were a sufficient number to eat them; and there might be more societies than one in an house, provided they kept themselves distinct, and were large enough each of them to eat up a lamb; yet one lamb might not be eaten in different houses, a part of it in one house, and a part of it in another; which may denote the unity of the general assembly and church of the first-born, and the distinct separate congregations of the saints, and the right that each have to a whole Christ, who is not to be divided from his ministers, word and ordinances; see the note on Matt. xxvi. 18: thou shalt not carry forth ought of the flesh abroad out of the house; into another house; for where there was not a sufficient number in one house to eat a lamb, their neighbours in the next house were to join with them; but then they were not to part it, and one portion of it to be eaten in one house, and the other in another, but they were to meet together in one of their houses, and there partake of it; thus, though Christ may be fed upon by faith any where by particular believers, yet in an ordinance-way only in the church of God: neither shall ye break a bone thereof; any of its tender bones to get out the marrow; and so the Targum of Jonathan adds, "that ye may eat that "which is in the midst of it:" this was remarkably fulfilled in Christ the antitype, John xix. 32—36.

ver. 47. All the congregation of Israel shall keep it.] The passover, and the feast of unleavened bread only; for a Gentile was first to be circumcised, and be joined to the congregation, and then partake of it, and not before.

ver. 48. And when a stranger shall sojourn with thee, &c.] Who by so doing became a proselyte of the gate, he observing the commands of the sons of Noah: and will keep the passover of the Lord; is desirous of being admitted to that ordinance: let all

[r] בעצם היום הזה in corpore diei hujus, Pagninus, Montanus; in the body or strength of that day, Ainsworth.
[s] Pirke Eliezer, c. 48. fol. 58. 2. [t] ליל שמרים nox observantiarum, Munster, Fagius, Vatablus, so Drusius, Piscator, Cartwright, Ainsworth.

all his males be circumciſed, and then let him come near, and keep it; firſt himſelf, and then all his male-children and male-ſervants, and then, and not till then, he might approach to this ordinance, and obſerve it; for by this means he would become a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, and in all reſpects, as an Iſraelite, or ſon of Abraham, as it follows: and he ſhall be as one that is born in the land; a native and proper inhabitant of Canaan, enjoying all the privileges and immunities of ſuch: for no uncircumciſed perſon ſhall eat thereof; theſe laws and rules concerning thoſe perſons that were to eat of the paſſover, are ſuch as were to be obſerved in all ſucceſſive generations, to the coming of Chriſt; and were the rather neceſſary to be given now, becauſe of the mixt multitude who now came up with the children of Iſrael out of Egypt.

℣. 49. One law ſhall be to him that is home born, &c.] A proper Iſraelite, one that is ſo by deſcent: and unto the ſtranger that ſojourneth among you; that becomes a proſelyte to the true religion; theſe were both bound by the ſame law, and obliged to obſerve the ſame rites and ceremonies, and partook of the ſame ordinances, benefits and privileges; this was a dawn of grace to the poor Gentiles, and preſignified what would be in Goſpel-times, when they ſhould be fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſhold of God, be fellow-heirs of the ſame body, and partakers of the promiſes of Chriſt by the Goſpel, Eph. ii. 19. and iii. 5, 6.

℣. 50. Thus did all the children of Iſrael, &c.] They ſlew a lamb, and roaſted and ate it, with unleavened bread, and bitter herbs, and took a bunch of hyſſop, and dipped it in the blood, and ſtruck the lintel and the ſide-poſts of the doors of their houſes; this they did on the night of their deliverance out of Egypt: as the Lord commanded Moſes and Aaron, ſo did they; being inſtructed by them; which is an inſtance of their ready and chearful obedience to the divine will, which they were under great obligation to perform from a grateful ſenſe of the wonderful mercy and favour they now were made partakers of.

℣. 51. And it came to paſs the ſelf-ſame day, &c.] That the above ordinance was inſtituted and celebrated in the night: that the Lord did bring the children of Iſrael out of the land of Egypt, by their armies; by their ſeveral tribes, which were like ſo many armies, marching in large numbers, and with great order and regularity, ſee the note on ch. vii. 4.

CHAP. XIII.

THIS chapter begins with an order to ſanctify or ſet apart the firſt-born of man and beaſt to the Lord, ℣. 1, 2. and the people of Iſrael are charged to keep the feaſt of unleavened bread in its ſeaſon, from year to year, when they came into the land of Canaan, the reaſon of which they were to acquaint their children with, ℣. 3 — 10, and they are alſo directed, when come into the land of Canaan, to ſet apart every firſtling of a beaſt unto the Lord, and particularly the firſtling of an aſs was to be redeemed with a lamb, or its neck to be broke, and all the firſt-born of men were to be redeemed alſo, ℣. 11—13. and when their children enquired the reaſon of it, they were to be told, it was on account of the Lord's ſlaying the firſt-born of men and beaſt among the Egyptians, when Pharaoh would not let Iſrael go, and of ſaving the firſt-born of his people, ℣. 14—16. and it is obſerved, that when the children of Iſrael went out of Egypt, they were not led by the neareſt way, the way of the land of the Philiſtines, but a roundabout way, the way of the wilderneſs of the Red Sea, when they took the bones of Joſeph with them, as he had adjured them to do, ℣. 17—19. and the chapter is concluded with an account of their journeying from Succoth to Etham, the Lord going before them in a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night, ℣. 20—22.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] When he and the Iſraelites were at Succoth: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Sanctify unto me all the firſt-born, &c.] That is, of males, as the Targum of Jonathan adds, for thoſe and not females, were only either ſacrificed or redeemed, ſee ℣. 12. and this ſanctification of them to the Lord, ſignifies the ſeparation or devoting of them to the ſervice of God; if the firſt-born of clean creatures, they were to be ſacrificed, if unclean to be redeemed with a price, and ſo the firſt-born of men, becauſe it was not lawful to ſacrifice them; and the money for the redemption of them was given to the prieſts, the miniſters of the Lord, and ſo to him; who theſe firſt-born were is further explained: whatſoever openeth the womb among the children of Iſrael, both of man and of beaſt; that is, if a male; for, if a female, though it openeth the womb was not reckoned a firſt-born, becauſe not to be offered; nor even a male after the birth of a female, becauſe that openeth not the womb; and ſo if a man married a widow, and ſhe had had children by her former huſband, though ſhe ſhould bring him a ſon, which was his firſt-born, yet not being her's, and not opening the womb, was not ſubject to this law; but if a man married ſeveral wives one after another, or together, who had never been married before, or had had no children; if each of them brought him a ſon at firſt birth, they were all of them firſt-born, and to be ſanctified to the Lord; but the Jews ſay [u], if a woman at her firſt birth brought forth a male and a female, the father was free from this law of the redemption of the firſt-born, becauſe the female might come forth firſt: this phraſe, among the children of Iſrael, ſhews that this law only belonged to them, and not to the Gentiles; wherefore the Jewiſh doctors ſay [w], if a man buys cattle of an heathen, and ſells to him, or is in partnerſhip with him, and gives and takes of him, he is free from the law of the firſt-born; for it is ſaid among the Iſraelites, and not among others: it is mine; all creatures, man and beaſt are the Lord's by creation; but theſe firſt-born were his in a peculiar manner, and which he reſerved to himſelf, to his own uſe and ſervice; and the people of Iſrael were under great obligation to devote them to him, ſince he had ſpared all their firſt-born, when all the firſt-born of the Egyptians both man and beaſt were deſtroyed: this may denote the ſpecial and peculiar intereſt the Lord has in the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born whoſe names are written in heaven, through the ſpecial, par-particular, and eternal choice of them in Chriſt, and the redemption of them to him by the price of his blood; and who, on account both of their election of God, and redemption by Chriſt, are laid under obligation to give up themſelves to God, a holy, living, and acceptable ſacrifice, which is but their reaſonable ſervice.

[u] Miſn. Becorot, c. 8. §. 4, 5. & Bartenora in Ib.

[w] Ibid. c. 2. §. 1.

℣. 3. And Moſes ſaid unto the people, &c.] After the Lord had ſpoken to him, and ſaid the above things: remember this day in which ye came out of Egypt, out of the houſe of bondage; or of ſervants [x], where they had been ſervants to the Egyptians, by whom they had been made to ſerve with rigour, and their lives made bitter with hard bondage; that country had been like a priſon-houſe unto them, where they had been detained captives, and treated in a very cruel manner; but now they were come out of this place and ſtate of ſervitude, even that very day, the 15th of Niſan; and which therefore it became them to remember, they and theirs, in all ſucceeding generations, as the Lord had directed, and which is afterwards repeated to impreſs it the more upon their minds and memories: for by ſtrength of hand the Lord brought you out of this place; it was not by their own might and ſtrength that they were redeemed from their ſtate of bondage, but by the mighty hand of the Lord, who wrought ſuch ſigns and wonders before Pharaoh and his ſervants, and inflicted ſuch plagues upon them, which none but an omnipotent hand could do, which obliged them at laſt to let them go: and if the Iſraelites were under obligation on account of this redemption, to remember the day when it was in this wonderful manner wrought out, much more reaſon have we to remember the redemption by Chriſt the mighty redeemer, whoſe own arm wrought ſalvation for us, and delivered us out of the hands of our ſpiritual enemies, that were ſtronger than we, by frequently attending the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, which is inſtituted to bring this amazing affair to our remembrance, and which is to be continued for that purpoſe unto the ſecond coming of Chriſt: there ſhall no leavened bread be eaten; as they then on this very day had no other but unleavened bread to eat, ſo they ſhould eat no other on this day and the ſix days following, in ſucceſſive ages unto the coming of the Meſſiah.

℣. 4. This day came ye out, &c.] Out of Egypt, on the 15th of Niſan, as the Targum of Jonathan: in the month Abib; which ſignifies an ear of corn, becauſe in this month barley was in the ear, ſee ch. ix. 31. the Syriac verſion renders it, in the month of flowers; when the flowers were riſing up out of the earth, being ſpring-time, and a very fit time to travel in; and this is obſerved, not only becauſe they might not know what month it was, in ſuch a ſtate of ignorance, as well as ſervitude, were they kept in Egypt; but as Jarchi alſo intimates, to point out to them the mercy and goodneſs of God to them, in bringing them out at ſuch a ſeaſonable time to travel in, when there were neither heat, nor cold, nor rain. This month anſwers to part of our March, and part of April.

℣. 5. And it ſhall be when the Lord ſhall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, &c.] Though the whole land was called the land of Canaan, yet there was one tribe or nation of them particularly ſo called as here, diſtinct from thoſe that follow: and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Hivites, and the Jebuſites; there were ſeven nations in all, but two are here omitted, the Girgaſhites and Perizzites, but they are added in the Septuagint verſion, ſee Deut. vii. 1. which he ſware unto thy fathers to give thee; to Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob; ſo that they might be aſſured they would be brought into it, ſince they had both the word and oath of God for it; and which is the rather mentioned now for their encouragement, ſince they were at this time ſet forward in their journey thitherwards: a land flowing with milk and honey; ſee the note on ch. iii. 8. that thou ſhalt keep this ſervice in this month; the month of Abib; that is, the following ſervice concerning unleavened bread; it is concluded from hence by ſome, that thoſe laws concerning the paſſover, and eating unleavened bread, and ſanctifying the firſt-born, did not oblige the Iſraelites, whilſt in the wilderneſs, only when they came into the land of Canaan; and it ſeems pretty clear that this was the caſe with reſpect to the two latter, but not the former, ſince it is certain they did keep the paſſover in the wilderneſs, and were obliged to it, Numb. ix. 1—5. but then it may be obſerved, that there is no mention there of their keeping the feaſt of unleavened bread, only of the paſſover, as here no mention is made of the feaſt of the paſſover, which, though they followed one another were two diſtinct feaſts.

℣. 6. Seven days ſhalt thou eat unleavened bread, &c.] The Jews [y] gather from this place, and from Deut. xvi. 8. that the obligation to eat unleavened bread, laſted no longer than the firſt night of the ſeven days, but on the reſt, it was enough if they abſtained from leavened bread, and it was lawful for them to eat of other food as they pleaſed, ſee the note on ch. xii. 15. but the words are very expreſs in both places, and ſo in the following verſe, for eating unleavened bread, as well as abſtaining from leavened; and indeed otherwiſe it would not be ſo clear and plain a commemoration of their caſe and circumſtances, in which they were when they came out of Egypt; this bread of affliction, as it is called, Deut. xvi. 3. being what would put them in mind thereof: and in the ſeventh day ſhall be a feaſt to the Lord; an holy convocation, in which no work was to be done, except what was neceſſary for preparing food to eat, ſee ch. xii. 16.

℣. 7. Unleavened bread ſhall be eaten ſeven days, &c.] From the evening of the 14th day, to the evening of the 21ſt, ch. xii. 18. this is very expreſs as before, that not only they were to abſtain from leaven, but that they were obliged to eat unleavened bread; and as for the cakes of eggs and ſugar the Jews now uſe, theſe, as Leo Modena ſays [z], are for thoſe that are dainty and of tender ſtomachs, and ſuch as are ſick, who eat unleavened bread alſo: and there ſhall no leavened bread be ſeen with thee, neither ſhall there be leaven ſeen with thee in all thy quarters: ſee the note on ch. xii. 15. and the above-mentioned writer ſays [a], "they begin before the paſſover, with all the diligence "and care they can, to put away all leaven, or "any thing that hath had leaven in it out of their "houſes and out of their power; ſearching all "their cupboards and bins, and cleanſing the "whole houſe and whiting it all over; and they "provide themſelves alſo of new utenſils for their "kitchen and table; or elſe they new-make the "old again, and ſcour them well; or elſe they have "a ſelect number of veſſels ſet apart for the uſe "of the paſſover only, that ſo they may be "cer-

[x] מבית עבדים e domo ſervorum, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Vatablus, & Druſius. [y] In Siphre apud Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael. Conciliat. in loc. [z] Hiſtory of the Rites, &c. of the Jews, par. 3. c. 3. §. 5. [a] Ib. §. 4.

"certainly assured that they use not any thing "during those eight days, that hath had leaven in "it:" and Aben Ezra upon the place says, that the sense of it is, that the Israelites ought not to suffer any to sojourn in any place subject to them, but on this condition, that they abstain from leavened bread at the time of the passover, and this he takes to be the meaning of the phrase, in all thy quarters or borders.

℣. 8. And thou shalt shew thy son in that day, &c.] On the first of the days of the feast of unleavened bread, the reason of eating it; and this is to be shewn not to a son or single child only, but by parents to all their children, sons and daughters, and even unasked, as Maimonides [b] interprets it; and so Jarchi's note is, to a son that knows not how to ask or what to ask about, see the note on ch. xii. 26. saying, this is done because of that which the Lord did unto me, when I came forth out of Egypt; that is, this unleavened bread is eaten because of the quick and speedy deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, so that they had not time to leaven their dough.

℣. 9. And it shall be for a sign unto thee upon thine hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes, &c.] These are not the words of God or of Moses to the children of Israel, but of an Israelitish parent to his son, telling him that this feast of unleavened bread would serve the same purpose to refresh his memory with what God did for his people of old, as the tying of a thing on the hand, or placing it before the eye, is to a person to bring any thing to his remembrance, to which the allusion is; the like figurative phrases may be observed in Prov. i. 9. and iii. 3. the Jews understand this literally, and hence the use of phylacteries among them, which they bind upon their left hand, and place upon their foreheads between their eyes, of which see the note on Matt. xxiii. 5. but such a practice could be of no use to answer the end next mentioned: that the Lord's law may be in thy mouth; for surely this cannot be taken literally, but the sense is, that being instructed by the observance of the above feast, and being taught the meaning of it, they might be able to speak of it to their children, and so transmit it from age to age to their latest posterity: for with a strong hand hath the Lord brought thee out of Egypt; see the note on ℣. 3.

℣. 10. Thou shalt therefore keep the ordinance in his season, &c.] Not the ordinance of the phylacteries, as the Targum of Jonathan, but the ordinance of unleavened bread: from year to year; every year successively so long as in force, even unto the coming of the Messiah. It is in the Hebrew text, from days to days [c]; that is, either year after year, as we understand it; or else the sense is, that the feast of unleavened bread, when the season was come for keeping it, was to be observed every day for seven days running.

℣. 11. And it shall be when the Lord shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, &c.] Put for all the rest of the nations: as he sware unto thee, and to thy fathers, and shall give it thee; to them as they were in their loins, and from thence might certainly conclude it would be given them.

℣. 12. That thou shalt set apart unto the Lord all that openeth the matrix, &c.] Or the womb, as in ℣. 2. and this phrase, set apart, explains the word sanctify there, and shews that it signifies the separating of such to the use and service of God, causing it to pass, as the word [d] here used signifies, from a man's own power and use to be the Lord's only: and every firstling that cometh from a beast which thou hast; or even every firstling [e], explaining what is meant by what opens the matrix or womb, even every first-born of a beast; though Jarchi interprets it of an abortion, what comes before its time, that this also should be set apart to the Lord; this must be understood of the firstlings of clean creatures, fit for food and sacrifice, such as the firstlings of cows, sheep and goats, Numb. xviii. 17. as distinguished from unclean ones in the following verse: the males shall be the Lord's; which explains what sort of first-born of man and beast were to be set apart for his use, not females, though the first that opened the womb, but males.

℣. 13. And every firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a lamb, &c.] Which was given to the priest for it; and according to the Jewish canon [f], it might be redeemed with that only; "not with "a calf, nor with an animal (a goat or a ram, "as Bartenora interprets it) nor with a lamb slain, "or torn to pieces." Jarchi thinks the ass only was to be redeemed, and not the firstling of any other unclean creature, but his reasons are insufficient; all unclean creatures, as horses, camels, dogs, swine, &c. are included in it, as should seem from Numb. xviii. 15. and this is the rather particularly mentioned, because there was a greater plenty of them than of horses and camels, and because they were very useful creatures; and if these were to be redeemed, than much more those of less value, and less useful. Hence might arise the story and calumny, as some have thought, of the Jews worshipping an ass's head: and if thou wilt not redeem it, then thou shalt break its neck; cut off its head on the back of the neck with a knife or cleaver, such as butchers use, as the Misnah [g], and its commentators, interpret it, so that the owner should have no profit by it: and all the first-born of man amongst thy children shalt thou redeem; with the price of five shekels of the sanctuary, and within 30 days of the birth of it, Numb. xviii. 16. and these being to be redeemed as the unclean beasts were, shows that men are by nature unclean, and even the first-born, whose names are written in heaven, the elect of God, and need redemption by the blood of the Lamb.

℣. 14. And it shall be when thy son asketh thee in time to come, &c.] Or on the morrow [h], the day following such a separation of the first-born of clean creatures, or such a redemption of the first-born of unclean ones, and of man, or in any after-time: saying, what is this? what is the meaning of this? for what reason are such things done? that thou shalt say unto him, by strength of hand the Lord brought us out of Egypt from the house of bondage; by laying his mighty hand upon the first-born of Egypt, and destroying them, which made the king of Egypt, and his people, willing to let Israel go; see the note on ℣. 3.

℣. 15. And it came to pass, when Pharaoh would hardly let us go, &c.] Shewed great reluctance to it, and with difficulty was prevailed upon to dismiss them: that the Lord slew all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both the first-born of men, and the first-born of beast; which he did in one night, making

[b] Hilchot Chametz Umetzah, c. 7. §. 2, 3.
[c] מימים ימימה a diebus in dies, V. L. Montanus, Munster, Vatablus, Drusius.
[d] והעברת & transfire facies, Pagninus, Montanus, Fagius, Vatablus, Drusius, Cartwright; so Ainsworth.
[e] וכל פטר etiam quicunque vel quicquid aperuerit, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Ainsworth.
[f] Misn. Becorot, §. 1. §. 5.
[g] Ibid. §. 7. Maimon. & Bartenora in Ib.
[h] מחר cras, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine version.

ing uſe of a deſtroying angel or angels for that purpoſe: therefore I ſacrifice to the Lord all that openeth the matrix, being males; that is, the firſt born of all clean creatures, as oxen, ſheep and goats: but all the firſt-born of my children I redeem; by paying five ſhekels apiece to the prieſt for them, as before obſerved; and this law continues to be obſerved with the Jews; the manner of which, as related by Leo Modena [l], is as follows, "Thirty "days being expired after the birth of the child, "they call a prieſt to them; that is to ſay, one "that is deſcended of the ſtock of Aaron, whom "the father of the child pleaſeth; and ſo, many "people being gathered together at the time ap- "pointed, the father of the child bringeth before "the prieſt in a bowl or baſon, a good quantity "of gold and ſilver, and then they give him the "child into his arms; the prieſt then calling the "mother of it before him, ſaith unto her, miſtreſs, "is this your ſon? ſhe anſwereth yes; then re- "plies he, have you never had any child before, "either male or female, or have miſcarried any "one? ſhe ſaith unto him, no; then doth the "prieſt ſay, this child is mine as being the firſt- "born; then turning himſelf toward the father, "he aſketh him whether he will redeem it or not; "who anſwereth him, ſaying, ſee here is gold and "ſilver, take your own price; then ſaith the prieſt "unto him, you will redeem it then? the father "anſwereth, I will redeem it; it ſhall be ſo then, "ſaith the prieſt, this child is mine as being the "firſt-born, as it is written, Numb. xviii. 16. I "therefore take this in exchange, &c. and ſo he "takes the ſum of two French crowns, or there- "about, as he thinks good, and then delivers the "child to his father and mother, and this day they "make a feaſting-day." This cuſtom was uſed in Chriſt's time, and was obſerved with reſpect to him, Luke ii. 27.

℣. 16. And it ſhall be for a token upon thine head, and for frontlets between thine eyes, &c.] Theſe laws obſerved concerning the ſetting apart the firſtlings of their beaſts, the redemption of the firſt-born of unclean ones, and of the firſt-born of men, will bring the reaſon of it, the deſtruction of the firſt-born of Egypt, and the preſervation of the firſt-born of Iſrael, as freſh to remembrance as any token upon the hand, put there to bring things to mind; and it will be as eaſily, and as clearly diſcerned, as any thing upon a man's forehead may be ſeen by another: for by the ſtrength of hand the Lord brought us forth out of Egypt; which is often mentioned, that it might be obſerved; it being the ſigns and wonders which the omnipotent hand of God wrought, eſpecially the laſt, which worked upon Pharaoh, to let the people of Iſrael go; and their poſterity, in all ſucceeding ages, would ſpeak of this affair as if perſonally concerned in it, they being then in the loins of their anceſtors, and repreſented by them, as well as they reaped and enjoyed all the benefits of that wonderful deliverance, the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, and the bleſſings of it, as well as many other privileges both of a civil and religious kind. And ſo Maimonides [k] ſays, "in "every age a man is obliged to conſider himſelf, "as if he in himſelf now went out of the bond- "age of Egypt, as it is ſaid, and he brought us "forth from thence, &c."

℣. 17. And it came to paſs, when Pharaoh had let the people go, &c.] Gave them leave to depart out of Egypt, and even urged them to be gone in haſte upon the death of his firſt-born: that God led them not through the way of the land of the Philiſtines, although that was near; the land of the Philiſtines was the pentapolis, or five cities of Gaza, Aſhkelon, Aſhdod, Ekron and Gath, which lay between Egypt and Canaan; and their way through it to Canaan, out of Egypt, was the neareſt they could go; and was, as Aben Ezra ſays, about 10 days journey; but Philo the Jew ſays [l], it was but three days journey; and it ſeems by the ſons of Jacob going to and fro for corn, that it was no very long journey: for God ſaid; within himſelf, or he declared the following reaſon of ſo doing to Moſes: leſt peradventure the people repent; which is ſaid not as ignorant or doubtful, but as Aben Ezra ſays, after the manner of men: when they ſee war; the Philiſtines coming out againſt them to hinder their paſſage through their country; they being a warlike people, bold and courageous, and the Iſraelites, through their long ſervitude, of a mean, timorous and cowardly diſpoſition; and indeed as yet unarmed, and ſo very unfit to engage in war, and therefore would at once be intimidated: and they return to Egypt; judging it more eligible to continue in their former bondage, than to fall a prey into the hands of ſuch fierce and cruel enemies. This is the only reaſon mentioned for not leading them this way; but there were other ſecret reaſons for it, which afterwards opened in providence, as the doing that wonderful work for them, leading them through the Red Sea as on dry land, and the deſtruction of Pharaoh and his hoſt in it; and by being brought into a wilderneſs, a ſolitude, they would be in the fitteſt place to receive and attend to the body of laws given them, and where they were formed into a commonwealth and church-ſtate, previous to their entrance into and poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan; and here alſo they were humbled, tried and proved, and had ſuch inſtances of the power and goodneſs of God to them, as were ſufficient to attach them to his ſervice, and lay them under the greateſt obligation to him, as well as would be of uſe to ſtrengthen their faith and hope in him in future times of difficulty and diſtreſs.

℣. 18. But God led the people about, &c.] Inſtead of their going to the weſt, or north-weſt, towards Gaza, &c. and the Mediterranean ſea, the Lord going before them in a pillar of cloud and fire, as after related, directed them to turn off to the right between the eaſt and ſouth, to the ſouth-eaſt: through the way of the wilderneſs of the Red Sea; the wilderneſs of Etham by the Red Sea: and the children of Iſrael went up harneſſed out of the land of Egypt; or girt [m] about the loins under the 5th rib; not with armour, as ſome [n] underſtand it, for it is not likely that they could, or that Pharaoh would ſuffer them to be furniſhed with armour, but their garments were girt about them, and ſo fit for travelling; or they went up by fives [o], as it may be rendered, either by five in a rank, or rather in five bodies or ſquadrons, and ſo marched out, not in a diſorderly and confuſed way, but in great order and regularity. The latter is much more reaſonable to ſuppoſe, for five in a rank is too too ſmall a number for an army of 600,000 men to march in; ſince allowing the ranks to be but three feet aſunder, and a mile to conſiſt of 2000 yards, the front and rear of the army would be 60 miles diſtant from each other [p].

[l] Hiſtory of the Jews, par. 4. c. 9. §. 2. p. 627. [k] Hilchot Chametz Umetzah, c. 7. §. 6. [l] De vita Moſis, l. 1. Melech. [m] חמשים accincti. Pagninus, Vatablus, Cartwright; ſo Onkelos, Aben Ezra. [n] Kimchi & Ben [o] Quintati, Montanus; quini, Piſcator, Rivet.

ver. 19. And Moſes took the bones of Joſeph with him, &c.] And his remains might well be called bones, ſince at ſuch a diſtance from his death the fleſh muſt be gone, and nothing but bones left; of the place where Joſeph's coffin was laid, ſee the note on Gen. l. 26. The Jews pretend, that Moſes was informed where Joſeph was buried by Sarah, the daughter of Aſher, who they ſay was living at this time [q]; and many other fables they relate concerning the manner of finding him, which are not worthy of any notice. Jarchi thinks, that the bones of all the tribes, or of the ſons of Jacob, were carried with them, but that does not appear from the text; though it ſeems according to Stephens's account, that they were carried over to Canaan; but then, whether immediately after their death, or at this time, and alſo by whom, is not certain, ſee Acts vii. 15, 16: for he had ſtraitly ſworn the children of Iſrael; his brethren; or in ſwearing had cauſed them to ſwear [r], had given them a very ſtrict oath, and which they had related to their children, and ſo from one generation to another, and thus it became known, and Moſes looked upon himſelf, and the people of Iſrael, as bound to obſerve it: ſaying, God will ſurely viſit you; in a way of mercy and goodneſs, and bring you out of Egypt, and put you in poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan: and ye ſhall carry up my bones away hence with you; ſee the note on Gen. l. 25.

ver. 20. And they took their journey from Succoth, &c.] On the ſecond day, as Jarchi obſerves, from their coming out of Egypt, which was the 16th of Niſan: and encamped in Etham, in the edge of the wilderneſs; which had its name from it, and was called the wilderneſs of Etham, Numb. xxxiii. 8. Etham is ſaid to be eight miles from Succoth [s]. Joſephus [t] calls Succoth Latopolis, which had its name from the fiſh Latus, formerly worſhipped there, where, he ſays, Babylon was built when Cambyſes deſtroyed Egypt, and is thought by many [u] to be the ſame with Troglodytis, by the Red Sea; and Etham is ſuppoſed to be the Buto of Herodotus [w], where were the temple of Apollo and Diana, and the oracle of Latona.

ver. 21. And the Lord went before them, &c.] Who is called the angel of the Lord, ch. xiv. 19. and xxiii. 20. not a created but the increated angel, the angel of Jehovah's preſence, in whom his name, nature, and perfections were, even the Word and Son of God, the Lord Chriſt, ſee 1 Cor. x. 9. who went before the armies of Iſrael, as their king, leader, and commander: by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; through the Red Sea, and the wilderneſs, at the edge of which they now were, which was untrodden, and trackleſs, and the way through it very difficult to find; and being a ſandy deſert, as ſoon as a path was made, it was immediately covered with ſand, and to be ſeen no more: this cloud was not an ordinary one, but extraordinary, ſupernatural and miraculous; in the ſuperior part of it, it was in the form of a pillar, riſing upwards towards heaven; in the lower part of it, it was more ſpread, and covered the camp of Iſrael; for beſides the uſe of it to ſhew the way through a trackleſs wilderneſs, it was a ſhelter and protection from the ſcorching heat of the ſun in a ſandy deſert, where there was ſcarce any thing to ſcreen them from it, to which the alluſion is in Iſ. iv. 5, 6. ſee Numb. x. 34. and xiv. 14. Pſ. cv. 39. this cloud was an emblem of Chriſt, who has ſometimes appeared clothed with a cloud, Rev. x. 1. of the obſcurity of his human nature, of the fullneſs of grace in him, and being in the form of a pillar, of his uprightneſs, firmneſs, ſtability, and viſibility in it; and of the uſe and benefit he is to his people, partly to ſhew them the way in which they ſhould go, by his ſpirit and word, and lead them in it by his own example, whom it becomes them to follow, he being a wiſe, ſafe, and conſtant guide; and partly to ſhelter and protect them from the heat of a fiery law, from the flaming ſword of juſtice, from the wrath of God, from the fiery darts of Satan, and from the furious perſecution of wicked men, ſometimes compared to the violent heat of the ſun, Cant. i. 6, 7. and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light; whenever they travelled by night, as they ſometimes did, and in thoſe hot countries it was very agreeable; and this pillar of fire gave them light when the moon ſhone not, and was a direction to them which way to go: ſometimes it is night with the people of God, a night of darkneſs and deſertion, of drouſineſs, ſleepineſs, and carnal ſecurity, or of affliction and diſtreſs: Chriſt is the light and comfort of his people, and by his Spirit and word illuminates, guides, and directs them what to do, and where and how to walk: to go by day or night; to direct them in their journey whether by night or day: this was but one pillar, though Aben Ezra thinks they were two; but it may be obſerved they are mentioned as one, and that the pillar of cloud in the night, was a cloud of darkneſs to the Egyptians, and gave light to the Iſraelites, ch. xiv. 19, 20, 24. ſee alſo Numb. ix. 21. and it is eaſy to obſerve that what appears as a cloud of ſmoke in the day-time, looks like fire in the night: ſo when Alexander's army was on the march, as a ſignal, "fire "was obſerved in the night, and ſmoke by day," as ſays the hiſtorian [x]: nor can this account of Moſes ſeem incredible to the heathens themſelves, as Clemens of Alexandria obſerves [y], ſince they relate a ſtory ſomewhat ſimilar to this, which they profeſs to believe; as, that when Thraſybulus brought the exile Grecians from Phyle, and willing to do it ſecretly, a pillar was his guide, and as he paſſed in the night through untrodden paths, when the moon ſhone not, and it was a dark winter night, a light was ſeen going before him, which brought them ſafe to Mynichia, and then left them: indeed this was not ſo extraordinary and miraculous, if true, as this pillar, as biſhop Patrick obſerves, becauſe it was but for a night, whereas this continued all the 40 years in the wilderneſs, until the Iſraelites came to Canaan's land, as follows: the Arabic geographer [z] ſpeaks of exhalations ariſing out of caves at the ſides of mountains, which in the day-time looked like ſmoke, and in the night-time like fire.

ver. 22. He took not away the pillar of the cloud by day, &c.] It always appeared in the day-time, and was a guide and ſhelter: nor the pillar of fire by by night, from before the people; this continued till they came through the wilderneſs to the borders of the land of Canaan, when they needed it no longer, and then it left them; for when they paſſed over Jordan the ark went before them, Joſh. iii. 6.

[p] See the Biſhop of Clogher's Chronology of the Hebrew Bible, p. 272. [q] T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 13. 1. [r] השבע השביע adjurando adjuraverat, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius. [s] Bunting's Travels, p. 81. [t] Antiq. l. 2. c. 15. §. 1. [u] See the Univerſal Hiſtory, vol. 3. p. 387. [w] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 59, 63, 83, 155. [x] Curtius, l. 5. c. 2. [y] Strom. l. 1. p. 348. [z] Climat. 3. par. 8.

CHAP. XIV.

THIS chapter begins with directions of God to Moſes, to be given to the children of Iſrael about the courſe they were to ſteer in their journey, with the reaſon thereof, ℣. 1—4. which they obſerving, a report was brought to Pharaoh that they were fled, and this determined him and his ſervants to get ready and purſue after them, as they did with a great army, ℣. 5—9. which when the Iſraelites ſaw, it put them in great fear, and ſet them to murmuring and complaining againſt Moſes for bringing them out of Egypt, ℣. 10, 11, 12. who deſired them to be ſtill and quiet, and they ſhould ſee the ſalvation of the Lord, ℣. 13, 14. and he is bid to order the people to go on in their journey, and to take his rod and ſtretch it over the ſea and divide it, that Iſrael might paſs through it on dry ground, and the Egyptians follow them, whereby God would be honoured and glorified, ℣. 15—18. upon which the angel of the Lord in a pillar of cloud removed from before them, and went behind them for their protection, ℣. 19, 20. and Moſes ſtretching out his hand over the ſea, and a ſtrong eaſt wind blowing upon it, the waters divided and the Iſraelites went into it, and the Egyptians followed them, but their hoſt being troubled by the Lord, and their chariot-wheels taken off, they found themſelves in great danger, and were thrown into a panic, ℣. 20—25. and upon Moſes's ſtretching out his hand again over the ſea, the waters returned, and Pharaoh and his hoſt were drowned, but the Iſraelites paſſed through ſafely, as on dry land, ℣. 26—29. which great work of the Lord being obſerved by them, influenced their fear of him, their faith in him and his ſervant Moſes, ℣. 30, 31.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Out of the pillar of the cloud in which he went before them; either while they were at Etham, or when journeying from thence, and a little before they turned off to the right, as they were now directed: ſaying; as follows:

℣. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, that they turn, &c.] Not return to Egypt, or to the place, or towards the place from whence they came, but turn off, out of the road in which they were; for, as a late traveller ſays [a], "there were two roads, "through which the Iſraelites might have been "conducted from Kairo (which he ſuppoſes may be "Rameſes) to Pihahiroth. One of them lies thro' "the vallies, as they are now called, of Jendily, "Rumaleah and Baideah, bounded on each ſide by "the mountains of the lower Thebais; the other "lies higher, having the northern range of theſe "mountains (the mountains of Mocattee) running "parallel with it on the right hand, and the deſart "of the Egyptian Arabia, which lies all the way "open to the land of the Philiſtines, on the left (ſee "ch. xiii. 17.) about the middle of this range we "may turn ſhort on our right-hand into the valley of Baideah, through a remarkable breach or diſ-"continuation, in which we afterwards continued "to the very banks of the Red Sea this road; "then, through the valley of Baideah, which is "ſome hours longer than the other open road, "which leads us directly from Kairo to Suez, was "in all probability the very road which the Iſra-"elites took to Pihahiroth, on the banks of the "Red Sea." And again he ſays [b], this valley ends at the ſea in a ſmall bay, made by the eaſtern extremities of the mountains, and is called Tiah beni Iſrael, i. e. the road of the Iſraelites, from a tradition of the Arabs, of their having paſſed through it; as it is alſo called Baideah from the new and unheard-of miracle that was wrought near it, by dividing the Red Sea, and deſtroying therein Pharaoh, his chariots and horſemen: and encamp before Pihahiroth; which was 16 miles from Etham [c], and by ſome [d] thought to be the ſame with the city of Herooes (or Heroopolis) on the extreme part of the Arabic gulf, or the Phagroriopolis, placed by Strabo [e] near the ſame place: according to the above traveller [f], Pihahiroth was the mouth, or the moſt advanced part of the valley of Baideah to the eaſtward toward the Red Sea; with which Jarchi in ſome meaſure agrees, who ſays Pihahiroth is Pithom, now ſo called, becauſe the Iſraelites became free: they (Hahiroth) are two rocks, and the valley between them is called (Pi) the mouth of the rocks: ſo doctor Shaw obſerves [g]; the word may be deduced from חר a hole or gullet, and by a latitude common in thoſe caſes, be rendered a narrow defile, road or paſſage, ſuch as the valley of Baideah has been deſcribed:—but as the Iſraelites were properly delivered at this place from their captivity and fear of the Egyptians, Exod. xiv. 13. we may rather ſuppoſe that Hhiroth denotes the place where they were reſtored to their liberty; as Hhorar and Hhiroth are words of the like ſort in the Chaldee: but another very learned man [h] ſays, that in the Egyptian language Pihahiroth ſignifies a place where grew great plenty of graſs and herbs, and was contiguous to the Red Sea, and was like that on the other ſhore of the ſea, the Arabian, which Diodorus Siculus [i] ſpeaks of as a pleaſant green field: between Migdol and the ſea; which ſignifies a tower, and might be one: there was a city of this name in Egypt, and in thoſe parts, but whether the ſame with this is not certain, Jer. xliv. 1. over againſt Baal-zephon; which the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem take to be an idol; and ſo does Jarchi, and ſay it was the only one left of the idols of Egypt; ſee ch. xii. 12. and ſo ſome chriſtian as well as Jewiſh writers ſuppoſe it to be; and that it was as a watch, or guard, or amulet to keep fugitives from going out of the land: but by Ezekiel the Tragœdian [k], it is called a city; and ſo by Joſephus [l], who ſays, they came to Baal-zephon the third day, a place ſituated by the Red Sea; which is moſt likely, and it is highly probable that this and

[a] Dr Shaw's Travels, p. 307. Ed. 2. [b] Ib. p. 309. [c] Bunting's Travels, p. 82. [d] See the Univerſal Hiſtory, vol. 3. p. 387. [e] Geograph. l. 17. p. 553. [f] Shaw, Ib. p. 310. [g] Ut ſupra. [h] Jablonſki de terra Goſhen, Diſſert. 5. §. 9. [i] Bibliothec. c. 3. p. 175. [k] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 29. p. 444. [l] Antiq. l. 2. c. 15. §. 1.

and Migdol were two fortified places, which guarded the mouth of the valley, or the ſtraits which led to the Red ſea: Artapanus [m] the heathen hiſtorian agrees with Joſephus in ſaying it was the third day when they came to the Red Sea: before it ſhall ye encamp by the ſea; and there wait till Pharaoh came up to them.

℣. 3. For Pharaoh will ſay of the children of Iſrael, &c.] The Septuagint verſion adds, to his people, his miniſters and courtiers, when he hears where they are: they are intangled in the land; have loſt their way, and got into places they cannot eaſily get out of, and are perplexed in their minds, and do not know what way to take or courſe to ſteer: the wilderneſs hath ſhut them in; or, ſhut up the way to them [n]; the wilderneſs between the mountains, the above-mentioned traveller ſpeaks of [o] the mountains of Gewoubee; theſe would ſtop their flight or progreſs to the ſouthward, as thoſe of the Attackah would do the ſame towards the land of the Philiſtines; the Red Sea likewiſe lay before them to the eaſt, whilſt Pharaoh (could) cloſe up the valley behind them, with his chariots and his horſemen; and which, no doubt, appeared very advantageous and encouraging to him, as it muſt be very diſtreſſing to the Iſraelites.

℣. 4. And I will harden Pharaoh's heart, &c.] Once more, as he had often done: that he ſhall follow after them; to Pihahiroth, and even into the ſea after them: and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his hoſt; in his wiſdom, faithfulneſs, power, and juſtice, by the deſtruction of them: that the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord; the only Jehovah, the Lord God omnipotent; even thoſe that feel the weight of his hand whilſt troubling their hoſt, and bringing the waters upon them; eſpecially thoſe that ſhall remain in the land, and will not be involved in the cataſtrophe: and they did ſo; the Iſraelites, turned to the right to Pihahiroth, inſtead of going by Biſhbeſh and Tinah, (Bubaſtis and Peluſium) and ſo along the ſea-coaſt towards Gaza and Aſcalon, and encamped there, between Migdol and the ſea over-againſt Baal-zephon, as they were ordered and directed.

℣. 5. And it was told the king of Egypt, &c.] by ſome of the Egyptians, or mixt multitude that went out with Iſrael, but returned upon their encampment at the Red Sea, or by ſome ſpies Pharaoh ſent with them to obſerve their motions: the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi make uſe of a word which Buxtorf tranſlates, military officers: and the latter ſays, they went out with them the three days journey, but the Iſraelites not returning to Egypt (as expected) they tell Pharaoh of it the fourth day; and on the fifth and ſixth he purſued them, and in the night of the 7th went into the ſea after them, and on the morning they (the Iſraelites) ſung the ſong, which was the 7th of the paſſover: theſe reported to Pharaoh: that the people fled; that under a pretence of going three days journey into the wilderneſs, to ſerve and ſacrifice to the Lord, they were about to make their eſcape out of the land: and the heart of Pharaoh and of his ſervants were turned againſt the people; who had ſo much favour in their ſight, not only to give them leave to go, and to haſten their departure, but to lend and give them things of great value; but now their hearts were filled with hatred of them, and with malice and revenge: and they ſaid, why have we done this, that we have let Iſrael go from ſerving us? not Pharaoh only, but his ſervants ſaid ſo, even thoſe who had intreated him to let them go, ch. x. 7. yet now repent of it, and cannot think what reaſon they had to do it, when at that time they ſaw reaſon, and gave a very ſufficient one, namely, the deſtruction of Egypt; but now the judgments and plagues of God being no more upon them, they recollect the great ſervice of the Iſraelites to them, and the benefits and advantages they had reaped by it, and the loſs they had ſuſtained by parting with them, and therefore reflect upon themſelves for ſuch a piece of conduct.

℣. 6. And he made ready his chariot, &c.] Which he uſually rode in when he went forth to war; for this ſeems to be a military chariot, and not for ſhew or grandeur; and this was got ready not by himſelf, as Jarchi, but rather by his orders, as Aben Ezra: and took his people with him; the Greek verſion reads, all his people; not all his ſubjects, but his ſoldiers; at leaſt a great number, and eſpecially his cavalry.

℣. 7. And he took 600 choſen chariots, &c.] The chief and beſt he had, war-chariots, chariots of iron; perhaps ſuch as had iron ſcythes to them, to cut down men as they drove along: theſe were taken partly for quickneſs of diſpatch, that they might be able the ſooner to overtake the Iſraelites, who had got ſeveral days marches before them; and partly for their ſtrength, and the annoyance of their enemies with them: and all the chariots of Egypt; as many as could in ſo ſhort a time be got together; for the words are not to be taken in the utmoſt latitude, but to ſignify a great number, and all that could be conveniently come at: the Greek verſion is, all the horſe, the cavalry, which better diſtinguiſhes them from the former: and captains over every one of them; over every one of the chariots, ſo that they muſt each of them have many in them, to have captains over them; and perhaps the infantry, or foot ſoldiers, for quickneſs of expedition, were put into them; for beſides theſe, there were horſemen: Joſephus [p] makes the whole number of his army to be 50,000 horſe, and 200,000 foot, and the ſame number is given by a Jewiſh chronologer [q]: but Patricides, an Arabic writer ſays [r], it conſiſted of 600,000, and Ezekiel [s] the tragic poet, has made it to amount to a million of horſe and foot: ſhould it be aſked where cattle could be had to draw the chariots, and horſes for the horſemen after-mentioned, when all were deſtroyed by the hail, ch. ix. 25. it may be replied, that only thoſe in the field were killed, not ſuch as were in ſtables, where chariot-horſes and horſes for war may be ſuppoſed to be: beſides, as the Targum of Jonathan intimates, theſe might belong to theſe ſervants of Pharaoh who feared the word of the Lord, and took their cattle home, ch. ix. 20.

℣. 8. And the Lord hardened the heart of Pharaoh king of Egypt, &c.] As he ſaid he would, ℣. 4. and he purſued after the children of Iſrael; took their rout in purſuit of them: and the children of Iſrael went out with an high hand; not once dreaming they ſhould be purſued by Pharaoh as an enemy, when they went out with his full conſent, and with ſuch preſſing ſolicitations to be gone, and with ſo much favour ſhewn them by the [m] Apud Euſeb. Ib. c. 27. p. 436.

[o] Shaw, ut ſupra, p. 309.
[r] Apud Hottinger. Smegma, p. 464.
[n] סגר עליהם clauſit viam illis, Pagninus, præcluſit ſeſe illis, Vatablus.
[p] Antiq. l. 2. c. 15. §. 3.
[s] Apud Euſeb. ut ſupra.
[q] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 77. 2.

the Egyptians; wherefore they set out, and went on with great boldneſs, courage, and intrepidity; with an uncovered head, as the Targum of Onkelos, without any fear, and with great alacrity and chearfulneſs; they carried both their heads and their hands high, were fearleſs and thoughtleſs of any danger when this mighty preparation was making againſt them.

℣. 9. But the Egyptians purſued after them, &c.] When they thought nothing of it, and had no fears about it: all the horſes and chariots of Pharaoh, and his horſemen, and his army; by the latter Aben Ezra underſtands the foot, as diſtinguiſhed from the cavalry, the horſes and horſemen; and perhaps theſe, as before obſerved, might be carried in the chariots for quicker diſpatch: and overtook them encamping by the ſea, beſide Pihahiroth, before Baal-zephon; where they had pitched their camp by divine appointment, ℣. 2.

℣. 10. And when Pharaoh drew nigh, &c.] Or cauſed to draw nigh [t]; that is, his army brought it very near to the camp of the Iſraelites: the children of Iſrael lift up their eyes, and behold, the Egyptians marched after them; in great numbers, with full ſpeed, threatening them with utter deſtruction: and they were ſore afraid; being an unarmed people, though numerous, and ſo unable to defend themſelves againſt armed and diſciplined troops; and beſides, through their long time of ſlavery their ſpirits were broken, and were a mean, abject, diſpirited people; and eſpecially were ſo on the ſight of the Egyptians, whom they had ſo many years looked upon and ſerved as their lords and maſters: and the children of Iſrael cried out unto the Lord; had they prayed unto him in this their diſtreſs for help and aſſiſtance, protection and preſervation, with an holy and humble confidence in him for it, they had acted a right and laudable part; but their crying out to him ſeems to be only an outcry of the troubles they were in, and rather the effect of deſpair than of faith and hope; and was by way of complaint and lamentation of their miſerable condition and circumſtances, as appears by what follows, which ſhows what temper of mind they were in.

℣. 11. And they ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan is, "the ungodly of that ge-"neration ſaid unto Moſes;" but it ſeems rather to be underſtood of the body of the people in general, and is not to be limited to ſome particular perſons of the worſe characters among them: becauſe there were no graves in Egypt; as if there had been none, when there were ſo many; the Egyptians being more ſolicitous about their graves than their houſes, as Diodorus Siculus reports [u]; thus upbraiding Moſes in a ſarcaſtic way for what he had done: haſt thou taken us away to die in the wilderneſs? that ſo there might be room and graves enough to bury them in, for nothing but death was before their eyes: wherefore haſt thou dealt thus with us, to carry us forth out of Egypt? which was very ungrateful and diſingenuous.

℣. 12. Is not this the word that we did tell thee in Egypt, &c.] The thing they ſuggeſted to him, and talked with him about whilſt they were in the land of Egypt, before they came out of it, particularly after their ſervice and bondage were made more ſevere and cruel upon Moſes and Aaron's demanding their diſmiſſion, ſee ch. v. 21. and vi. 9: ſaying, let us alone, that we may ſerve the Egyptians? peaceably and quietly, as we have been uſed to do, ſince there is no likelihood of being freed, and ſince we are more evilly treated than before: for it had been better for us to ſerve the Egyptians, than that we ſhould die in the wilderneſs; of ſuch mean ſpirits were they, and had ſo poor a notion of, and taſte for liberty, and ſo ungrateful were they to their deliverer.

℣. 13. And Moſes ſaid unto the people, &c.] Not in wrath and anger, but very coolly and ſedately, agreeable to his character of the meekeſt man on earth; tho' what they had ſaid to him was very inſulting and provoking: fear ye not; Pharaoh and his numerous hoſt, don't be diſmayed at them, or poſſeſs yourſelves with a dread of them, and of deſtruction by them: ſtand ſtill; don't ſtir from the place where you are, don't offer to run away, or to make your eſcape by flight (and which indeed ſeemed impoſſible) keep your place and ſtation, and put yourſelves in ſuch a ſituation as to wait and obſerve the iſſue of things: and ſee the ſalvation of the Lord, which he will ſhew to you to-day; which is expreſſive of great faith in Moſes in the midſt of this extremity, who firmly believed that God would ſave them from this numerous and enraged army, and that very quickly, even that day; at leaſt within 24 hours, within the compaſs of a day; for it was the night following that ſalvation was wrought for them, and their eyes beheld it: and it may be called the ſalvation of the Lord, for it was his own hand that only effected it, the Iſraelites not contributing any thing in the leaſt unto it, and was typical of the great ſalvation which Chriſt with his own arm, and without the help of his people, has wrought out for them: for the Egyptians whom ye have ſeen to-day, ye ſhall ſee them again no more for ever; that is, in ſuch a poſture or manner, no more armed, nor alive, and the objects of their fear and dread; for otherwiſe they did ſee them again, but then they were on the ſeaſhore dead; for it ſhould be rendered, not whom, but how, or in what manner [w].

℣. 14. The Lord ſhall fight for you, &c.] By commanding the wind of the heavens, and the waves of the ſea, and employing them againſt their enemies, and on their behalf; they being unarmed, and ſo not in a condition to fight for themſelves, as well as they had no heart or ſpirit for it: and ye ſhall hold your peace; be ſtill, and quiet, and eaſy in your minds, and forbear ſaying or doing any thing; be ſilent, and neither expreſs the fear and diſtreſs of their minds, by any mournful ſounds, or their joy of faith by ſhouts and huzzas; as they could not draw a ſword, they were not ſo much as to blow a trumpet, and break a pitcher, and cry the ſword of the Lord, and of Iſrael, as they after did on another occaſion, at leaſt their poſterity.

℣. 15. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, wherefore crieſt thou unto me? &c.] The Targum of Jonathan is, "why ſtandeſt thou and prayeſt before me?" and no doubt this crying is to be underſtood of prayer, of mental prayer, of ſecret ejaculations put up by Moſes to the Lord without a voice, for no mention is made of any: this ſhews, that though Moſes moſt firmly believed that God would work ſalvation for them, yet he did not neglect the uſe of means, prayer to God for it; nor was the Lord diſpleaſed with him on that account, only he had other work for him to do, and he had no need to

[t] הקריב fecit accedere, Pagninus, Montanus; admovit caſtra, Junius & Tremellius.
[w] אשר ως τροπον, Sept. quemadmodum, Piſcator; quomodo, Noldius, p. 107. N°. 544.
[u] Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 47.

to pray any longer, God had heard him, and would ſave him and his people: ſpeak unto the children of Iſrael that they go forward; a little further, as Aben Ezra obſerves, until they were come to the ſea-ſhore, near to which they now were; and thither they were to move in an orderly compoſed manner, as unconcerned and fearleſs of their enemies.

℣. 16. But lift thou up thy rod, and ſtretch out thine hand over the ſea, and divide it, &c.] Even the ſame rod with which ſo many wonders had been done in Egypt; and Artapanus, the heathen, ſays [x], that Moſes being bid by a divine voice, to ſmite the ſea with his rod, he hearkened to it, and touched the water with it, and ſo it divided, as it is ſaid it did, ℣. 21: and the children of Iſrael ſhall go on dry ground through the midſt of the ſea; and ſo they did, ℣. 22, 29.

℣. 17. And I, behold, I will harden the hearts of the Egyptians, &c.] That they ſhall have no ſenſe of danger, and be fearleſs of it, incautious and thoughtleſs, hurried on with wrath, and fury, malice and revenge: and they ſhall follow them; the Iſraelites into the ſea, ſuppoſing it to be as ſafe for the one as the other: and I will get me honour upon Pharaoh, and upon all his hoſt, upon his chariots, and upon his horſemen; by the utter deſtruction of them, in juſt retaliation for the many innocent infants that had been drowned by them in the river Nile.

℣. 18. And the Egyptians ſhall know that I am the Lord, &c.] Acknowledge him to be Jehovah, the ſelf-exiſtent, eternal and immutable Being, the one only living and true God, who is wiſe and powerful, faithful, juſt and true; that is, thoſe Egyptians that were left behind in Egypt, hearing what was done at the Red Sea; for as for thoſe that came with Pharaoh, they all periſhed to a man: when I have gotten me honour upon Pharaoh, upon his chariots, and upon his horſemen; by caſting them into the ſea, and drowning them there, thereby ſhewing himſelf to be mightier than he.

℣. 19. And the angel of God which went before the camp of Iſrael, &c.] The Jews ſay [y], this was Michael, the great prince, who became a wall of fire between Iſrael and the Egyptians; and if they underſtood by him an increated angel, the eternal Word, the Son of God, who is always in ſcripture meant by Michael, they are right; for certainly this angel of the Lord is the ſame with Jehovah, who is ſaid to go before them in a pillar of cloud and fire, ch. xiii. 21: removed, and went behind them; but becauſe removing from place to place, and going forwards or backwards, cannot be properly ſaid of a divine perſon, who is omnipreſent, and fills every place and ſpace; this is to be underſtood of the emblem of him, the pillar of cloud, as the next clauſe explains it: and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and ſtood behind them; the Targum of Jonathan adds, "because of the Egyptians, who caſt arrows and "ſtones, and the cloud received them;" and ſo Jarchi; whereby the Iſraelites were protected and preſerved from receiving any hurt by them: ſo Chriſt is the protection of his people from all their enemies, ſin, ſatan and the world, that ſin cannot damn them, nor ſatan deſtroy them, nor the world overcome them; for his ſalvation is as walls and bulwarks to them, and he is indeed a wall of fire about them.

℣. 20. And it came between the camp of the Egyptians, and the camp of Iſrael, &c.] That is, the pillar of cloud, and the angel of God, or Jehovah in it, whereby the camp of Iſrael was ſecured from being annoyed by the camp of the Egyptians; and was an emblem of the gracious interpoſition of Chriſt between his ſpiritual Iſrael, whom he has redeemed by his blood, and their ſpiritual enemies, the Egyptians, the men of the world that hate them, from whoſe rage and malice Chriſt is their protection and ſafe-guard: and it was a cloud and darkneſs to them; to the Egyptians; it caſt a ſhade upon them, and made the darkneſs of the night ſtill greater to them, ſo that they could not ſee their way, and knew not where they were: but it gave light by night to theſe; to the Iſraelites, ſo that they could ſee their way and walk on in the midſt of the ſea, as on dry land; and ſuch a light and guide they needed; for it was now the 21ſt day of the month, 7 days after the full of the moon, when the paſſover began, and therefore could have no benefit from the moon. The Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem ſay, that half the cloud was light, and half darkneſs; and it ſeems plain from the account, that that ſide of it which was towards the Egyptians was dark, and that which was towards the Iſraelites was light, and ſo an hindrance to the one, and a benefit to the other: thus Chriſt is ſet for the riſing of ſome, and the fall of others; and his Goſpel is to ſome the ſavour of death unto death, and to others the ſavour of life unto life; to the one it is a hidden goſpel, and lies in darkneſs and obſcurity, and to others a great and glorious light: ſo that one came not near the other all the night; an emblem of that diviſion and ſeparation which the grace of God, the blood of Chriſt, and the light of the Goſpel, make between the true Iſrael of God, and the men of the world; and which will continue throughout time, and to all eternity, ſo that they will never come near to each other; ſee Luke xvi. 26.

℣. 21. And Moſes ſtretched out his hand over the ſea, &c.] With his rod in it, as he was directed to, ℣. 16. What the poet ſays [z] of Bacchus is more true of Moſes, whoſe rod had been lift up upon the rivers of Egypt, and now upon the Red Sea: and the Lord cauſed the ſea to go back by a ſtrong eaſt-wind all that night; and the direction of the Red Sea being nearly, if not altogether, north and ſouth, it was in a proper ſituation to be wrought upon and divided by an eaſterly wind; though the Septuagint verſion renders it a ſtrong ſouth wind. No wind of itſelf, without the exertion and continuance of almighty power, in a miraculous way, could have ſo thrown the waves of the ſea on heaps, and retained them ſo long, that ſuch a vaſt number of people ſhould paſs through it as on dry land; though this was an inſtrument Jehovah made uſe of, and that both to divide the waters of the ſea, and to dry and harden the bottom of it, and make it fit for travelling, as follows: and made the ſea dry land; or made the bottom of it dry, ſo that it could be trod and walked upon with eaſe, without ſinking in, ſticking faſt, or ſlipping about, which was very extraordinary: and the waters were divided; or after the waters were divided [a]; for they were firſt divided before the ſea could be made dry. The Targum of Jonathan ſays, the waters were divided into 12 parts, anſwerable to the [x] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 436.

[y] Pirke Eliezer, c. 42.

[z] Tu flectis amnes, tu mare barbarum. Horat. Carmin. l. 2. Ode 9.

[a] ויבקען quum diffidiſſet ſe aqua illius, Piſcator; ſo ו ſeems to be uſed in ch. 16. 20.

the twelve tribes of Israel, and the same is observed by other Jewish writers [b] grounded upon a passage in Ps. cxxxvi. 13. and suppose that each tribe took its particular path.

℣. 22. And the children of Israel went into the midst of the sea upon the dry ground, &c.] Some Jewish writers say [c], that the tribe of Judah went in first, and then the other tribes followed; but it is most likely, what Josephus says [d], that Moses first entered in, and then the Israelites, encouraged by his example, went in after him; and a very adventurous action it was, and nothing but strong faith in the almighty power and promise of God could have engaged them in it, to which the apostle ascribes it, Heb. xi. 29. It is the opinion of Aben Ezra, and some other Jewish writers, that the Israelites did not pass through the Red Sea to the opposite shore, only went some way into it, and took a compass in a semicircle, and came out on the same shore again, and which has been espoused by some Christian writers; and chiefly because they were in the wilderness of Etham before, and from whence they went into it, and when they came out of it, it was still the wilderness of Etham they came into, and went three days journey into it seeking water; see ch. xiii. 20. Num. xxxiii. 8. Though it is possible the wilderness on the opposite shore might bear the same name, because of its likeness to it; and if it was the same wilderness that went round the Arabic gulf, or Red sea, and reached on to the other side of it, and so the wilderness of Etham lay on both sides, the difficulty is removed; for it seems most agreeable to the expressions of scripture, that the Israelites passed through it from shore to shore. Others in order to lessen the miracle, would have it that Moses, well knowing the country, and observing the tide, took the advantage of low water, and led the Israelites through it; and this story is told by the Egyptian priests of Memphis, as Artapanus [e] relates; but were the Egyptians less knowing of their country, and of the tide of the Red Sea? and could Moses be sure of the exact time when they would come up to him, and the tide would serve him? Besides, the Egyptian priests at Heliopolis own the miracle, and relate it much as Moses has done; which must proceed from a conviction of the truth of it. And the above historian reports that the king (of Egypt) with a great army, and consecrated animals, pursued the Jews because of the substance they had borrowed of the Egyptians, which they took with them; but Moses being bid by a divine voice, (or the voice of God, of Jehovah) to smite the sea with a rod, and hearkening to it, he touched the water with the rod, and so it divided, and his forces passed through a dry path, and the Egyptians attempting the same and pursuing, fire or lightning flashed out against them; and the sea shutting up the path again, partly by fire, and partly by the flow of the water, they all perished: and that this affair was miraculous, and could not be owing to any advantage taken from the tide, the following things have been observed; it is owned that the Red Sea ebbs and flows like other seas that have a communication with the ocean, that is, the waters rise towards the shore during six hours, and having continued about a quarter of an hour at high water, ebb down again during another six hours; and it is observed by those who have examined it, that the greatest distance it falls from the place of high water, is about 300 yards; and that during the time of low water, one may safely travel it, as some have actually done; so that those 300 paces which the sea leaves uncovered during the time of low water, can continue so but for the space of half an hour at most; for during the first six hours, the sea retires only by degrees, and in less than half an hour it begins again to flow towards the shore. The most therefore that can be allowed, both of time and space of passable ground, in a moderate computation, is about 200 paces, during 6 hours, or 150 paces, during 8 hours. Now it is further observed, that it is plain that a multitude consisting of upwards of two millions and a half of men, women, children, and slaves, incumbered besides with great quantities of cattle, household stuff, and the spoils of the Egyptians, could never perform such a march within so short a time; we may say within even double that space, though we should allow them also double the breadth of ground to do it on. This argument, 'tis added, will hold good against those who suppose they only coasted along some part of the sea, and those who maintain that they crossed the small arm or point of it which is toward the further end, near the isthmus of Suez; seeing that six or eight hours could not have sufficed for the passage of so immense a multitude, allow them what breadth of room you will; much less for Pharaoh to have entered it with his whole host [f]: and for the confirmation of the Mosaic account of this affair, and as miraculous, may be observed the testimony of Diodorus Siculus, who reports [g] that it is a tradition among the Ichthyophagi, who inhabit near the Red Sea, or Arabic gulph, which they have received from the report of their ancestors, and is still preserved with them, that upon a great recess of the sea, every place of the gulph became dry, the sea falling to the opposite parts, the bottom appeared green, and returning back with a mighty force, was restored to its place again; which can have reference to nothing else, but to this transaction in the time of Moses. And Strabo [h] relates a very wonderful thing, and such as rarely happens, that on the shore between Tyre and Ptolemais, when they of Ptolemais had a battle with the emperor Sarpedon at that place, and there being put to flight, a flow of the sea like an inundation covered those that fled, and some were carried into the sea and perished, and others were left dead in hollow places; after a reflux followed, and discovered and shewed the bodies of those that lay among the dead fishes. Now learned men have observed [i], that what is here said of the sea of Tyre is to be understood of the Red Sea, and that Sarpedon is not a proper name, but the same with שר פדון Sarphadon, the prince of deliverance, or of the delivered, as Moses was: and the waters were a wall unto them on their right hand and on their left; some of the Jewish rabbins from ch. xv. 8. have supposed that the waters were frozen as they were drove back by the east-wind, and so stood up firm whilst the Israelites passed through, and then another wind thawed them, which brought them upon the Egyptians; but no doubt this was done by the wonderful interposition of divine power, and perhaps the ministry of angels was made use of, to detain and continue them in this position, until the end was answered. Adrichomius says [k], the breadth of the sea

[b] Pirke Eliezer, c. 42. Targum Jon. & Hieros. in Deut. i. 1. Jarchi, Kimchi, and Arama in Ps. cxxxvi. 13.
[c] Pirke Eliezer, ibid. [d] Antiqu. l. 2. c. 16. §. 2. [e] Apud Euseb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 436. [f] Universal History, vol. 3. p. 392, 393. marg. [g] Bibliothec. l. 3. p. 174.
[h] Geograph. l. 16. p. 521, 522. [i] Vid. Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. I. p. 167. [k] Theatrum Terræ, p. 123, 124.

ſea was ſix miles at the paſſage of the Iſraelites; but a late traveller [l] tells us, that the channel betwixt Sdur (or Shur on the oppoſite ſide) and Gibbel Gewoubee, and Attackah, (which he ſuppoſes was the place of their paſſage) was nine or ten miles over. Thevenot ſays [m], that during the ſpace of five days he kept along the coaſt of the Red Sea in going to mount Sinai, he could not obſerve it to be any where above eight or nine miles over. A later traveller [n] tells us, that from the fountains of Moſes may be plainly ſeen a wonderful aperture (Pihahiroth; ſee ℣. 2.) in the mountains on the other ſide of the Red Sea, through and from which the children of Iſrael entered into it, when Pharaoh and his hoſt were drowned; which aperture is ſituated W. S. W. from theſe fountains of Moſes, and the breadth of the ſea hereabouts, where the children of Iſrael paſſed it, is about four or five hours journey. The Arabic geographer [o] calls the place Jethren, where Pharaoh and his hoſt were drowned; and repreſents it as a dangerous place to ſail in, and where many ſhips are loſt, and that this rough place is about the ſpace of ſix miles. A countryman [p] of ours, who had been in theſe parts, gueſſes that the breadth of the place (called by the Mahometans, Kilt el Pharown, the well or pit of Pharaoh) where the Iſraelites are ſaid to paſs through, is about ſix or ſeven leagues; the difference between theſe writers may be accounted for by the different places where they ſuppoſe this paſſage was.

℣. 23. And the Egyptians purſued, &c.] The Iſraelites going forwards towards the ſea as they were ordered, and going into it: and went in after them into the midſt of the ſea; which if fearful of, they might conclude it was as ſafe for them to go in as for the Iſraelites; but perhaps through the darkneſs of the night, and the eagerneſs of their purſuit, they might not perceive where they were, nor the danger they were expoſed unto: even all Pharaoh's horſes, his chariots, and his horſemen; which is obſerved to ſhew, that as all that did go in periſhed, not one was ſaved, as after related, ſo all he brought with him, the whole of his army, went in, ſo that all that went out of Egypt were deſtroyed.

℣. 24. And it came to paſs, that in the morning-watch, &c.] The Romans divided the night into four watches, ſo the Hebrews; though ſome ſay into three only. The firſt began at ſix o'clock, and laſted till nine, the ſecond was from thence to twelve, the third from thence to three in the morning, and the laſt from three to ſix, which is here called the morning-watch; ſo that this was ſome time between three and ſix o'clock in the morning: the Lord looked unto the hoſt of the Egyptians, through the pillar of fire and of the cloud; the angel of the Lord, and who was Jehovah himſelf, who was in it, he looked to the army of the Egyptians; not to know whereabout they were, he being the omniſcient God; nor in a friendly manner, but as an enemy, with indignation and wrath. The Targum of Jonathan is, "he looked through the pillar of "fire, to caſt upon them coals of fire, and thro' "the pillar of cloud, to caſt upon them hail-"ſtones." The Jeruſalem Targum is, "pitch, "fire, and hail-ſtones;" and Joſephus [q] ſpeaks of ſtorms and tempeſts, of thunder and lightning, and of thunder-bolts out of the clouds; and Artapanus [r] of fire or lightning flaſhing out againſt them, by which many periſhed. Perhaps the pſalmiſt may have reference to this in Pſal. xviii. 10—15. and troubled the hoſt of the Egyptians; the thunder and lightning no doubt frightened the horſes, ſo that they broke their ranks, and horſemen and chariots might run foul on one another, and the hail-ſtones ſcatter and deſtroy many; however, the whole muſt be terrible and diſtreſſing to them, eſpecially it being in the night-ſeaſon.

℣. 25. And took off their chariot-wheels, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan renders it cut or ſawed them off; perhaps they might be broken off by the hail-ſtones. Milton [s] ſeems to have a notion of Pharaoh's chariot-wheels being broken, when he ſays, and craze (i. e. break) their chariot-wheels; or as Jarchi ſuggeſts, he burnt them, through the force of the fire or lightning: that they drave them heavily; the wheels being off, the chariots muſt be dragged along by the horſes by mere force, which muſt be heavy work; or, and made them to go, or led them heavily, or with heavineſs [t]; and ſo to be aſcribed to the Lord, who looked at the Egyptians, took off the wheels of their chariots, and ſtopped them in the fury of their career, that they could not purſue with the ſwiftneſs they had: ſo that the Egyptians ſaid, let us flee from the face of Iſrael; for by this battery and flaſhes of fire on them, they concluded that Iſrael, who they thought were fleeing before them, had turned and were facing them, and the Lord at the head of them; and therefore it was high time for them to flee as follows: for the Lord fighteth for them againſt the Egyptians; for they rightly took the thunder and lightning, the fire and hail-ſtones, to be the artillery of heaven turned againſt them, and in favour of the Iſraelites. Jarchi interprets it, the Lord fights for them in Egypt, even in Egypt itſelf; but ſo he had done many a time before, of which they were not inſenſible.

℣. 26. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] Out of the pillar of fire and of the cloud, when the Egyptians were in all the confuſion before deſcribed, and about to make the beſt of their way back again: Stretch out thine hand over the ſea; with his rod in it, by which all the wonders were wrought, and particularly by which the ſea had been divided, and now it muſt be uſed to a different purpoſe: that the waters may come again upon the Egyptians, upon their chariots, and upon their horſemen; the waters which ſtood upright as a wall, on the right and left, might be no longer kept in ſuch a poſition, but fall down upon the Egyptians, their chariots and horſemen, being higher than they.

℣. 27. And Moſes ſtretched forth his hand over the ſea, &c.] Or towards it, as he was ordered, the rod being in his hand, as before obſerved: and the ſea returned to his ſtrength, when the morning appeared; being no longer detained by a ſuperior power, contrary to the nature of it, to ſtand ſtill as an heap, and firm as a wall, its waves came down and rolled with their uſual force and ſtrength, or it returned to its uſual courſe: at the appearance of the morning in its ſtrength; when the morning looked forth in its firſt light and brightneſs, when it was broad day: and the Egyptians fled againſt it; againſt againſt the waves that came rolling down upon them: or at meeting it [u]; for as they turned their backs on the Iſraelites and fled, the waters of the ſea met them, as well as fell on each ſide of them, or rather over them, and followed after them, and cloſed and ſhut them up on all ſides; ſo that it was in vain for them to flee, for let them go which way they would, the ſea was againſt them: and the Lord overthrew the Egyptians in the midſt of the ſea; or ſhook them off or out [w]; out of their chariots, blew them out with the wind; for as there was a wind made uſe of to divide the waters of the ſea, and make the bottom of it dry, there was another to cauſe the waters to return to their former place; ſee ch. xv. 10. or the waves of the ſea daſhed them out of their chariots, or through the force of them they were overturned in it.

[l] Dr. Shaw's Travels, p. 314. Edit. 2. [m] Travels into the Levant, B 2. ch. 33. p. 175. [n] A Journal from Grand Cairo, &c. in 1722. p. 13. Edit. 2. [o] Climat. 3. par. 3. [p] Pitt's Account of the Mahometans, p. 77 [q] Ut ſupra. [r] Apud Euſeb. ut ſupra. [s] Paradiſe Loſt, B. 12. ver. 210. [t] וינהגם בכבדת et deduxit eos graviter, Vatablus; & duxit eos cum gravitate, Druſius; ſo Ainſworth.

℣. 28. And the waters returned, &c.] To their place, and ſo in the above tradition related by Diodorus Siculus, it is ſaid that the ſea returning with a mighty force was reſtored to its place again; ſee the note on ℣. 22. and covered the chariots and the horſemen; the wall they made being much higher than a man on horſeback, when they fell down, covered even thoſe who had the advantage of horſes and chariots; and much more muſt the infantry be covered by them, who may be meant in the next clauſe: and all the hoſt of Pharaoh that came into the ſea after them; the foot that went into the ſea after the chariots and horſemen, or the whole army, including the cavalry and infantry, which went into the ſea after the children of Iſrael. Who this Pharaoh was is not agreed; according to Beroſus [x] his name was Cenchres, or Chenchres, whom Acherres ſucceeded; according to biſhop Uſher [y] it was Amenophis; but our Engliſh poet [z] calls him Buſiris; though Strabo [a] ſays there was no king or governor of that name. Diodorus Siculus [b] indeed ſpeaks of two ſo called; yet he elſewhere [c] ſays, not that there was any king of the name, only the ſepulchre of Oſiris was ſo called: there remained not ſo much as one of them; wherefore it muſt be a falſhood which is related by ſome, that Pharaoh himſelf was preſerved, and afterwards reigned in Nineveh [d], ſince not one was ſaved; ſee Pſ. cvi. 11. and ſo Artapanus [e] the heathen ſays they all periſhed, and among theſe are ſaid [f] to be Jannes and Jambres, the magicians of Egypt mentioned in 2 Tim. iii. 8. but this is contradicted by thoſe [g] who aſcribe the making of the golden calf to them.

℣. 29. But the children of Iſrael walked upon dry land in the midſt of the ſea, &c.] The bottom of it becoming ſo through the ſtrong eaſt-wind, which blew all night until they came to the oppoſite ſhore, where they landed on terra firma; and ſo Noldius renders the phraſe through the ſea; that is, from ſhore to ſhore: and the waters were a wall to them on their right hand and on their left; ſee the note on ℣. 22.

℣. 30. Thus the Lord ſaved Iſrael that day out of the hand of the Egyptians, &c.] For though it was now ſix or ſeven days ſince they had leave to go out of Egypt, and actually did depart, yet they could not be ſaid properly to be ſaved, or to be in ſafety, till this day, when all the Egyptians their enemies were deſtroyed, that purſued after them; and this was the 21ſt day of the month, and the 7th and laſt day of the paſſover, and was an holy convocation to the Lord; ſee the note on ch. xii. 16. and Iſrael ſaw the Egyptians dead on the ſea-ſhore; all along, as a late traveller [h] obſerves, as we may preſume, from Sdur (or Shur) to Corondel, and at Corondel eſpecially, from the aſſiſtance and termination of the current there. The word for dead [i] is in the ſingular number, and joined with a plural may denote that they ſaw every one of the Egyptians dead, ſince they were all deſtroyed, and not one remained of them, as in ℣. 28. Aben Ezra thinks the ſenſe of the words is, not that the Egyptians were ſeen dead upon the ſea-ſhore, but that the Iſraelites ſtanding upon the ſea-ſhore ſaw the dead bodies of the Egyptians, that is, floating on the waters of the ſea; but rather the meaning is, that their dead bodies were by the force of the waters caſt upon the ſhore, and there beheld and plundered by the Iſraelites. Joſephus [k] obſerves, that the day following (that night the Egyptians were drowned) the arms of the Egyptians being caſt on the ſhore where the Hebrews encamped, through the force of the ſea and wind, Moſes gathered them up and armed the Hebrews with them; and this will account for it, how they came to have arms, ſince it is highly probable they came out of Egypt unarmed; and how they could fight battles as they did in the wilderneſs, and when they came into the land of Canaan.

℣. 31. And Iſrael ſaw the great work, &c.] Or hand [l]; the hand of the Lord, the mighty power of God, and took notice of it, and ſeriouſly conſidered the greatneſs of it: which the Lord did upon the Egyptians; which mighty hand he laid upon them, and which great power he exerciſed on them, and which great work, the effect thereof, he wrought in deſtroying them in ſuch a manner, by cauſing the waters which divided for them and their ſafety, to return upon the Egyptians to their utter deſtruction: and the people feared the Lord; had an awe of his power and greatneſs upon their minds, and a ſenſe of his goodneſs to them upon their hearts, which influenced their fear of him, and cauſed them to fear him with a filial and godly fear: and believed the Lord and his ſervant Moſes; they believed the Lord to be the only Jehovah, the ſupreme being, the one only living and true God, faithful to his word, able to do all things, and wiſe to do them in the fitteſt ſeaſon, for his own glory and his people's good; and they believed his promiſes, and the fulfilment of them; and that as he had now ſaved them out of the hands of the Egyptians, he would bring them to the land of Canaan, which he had promiſed their fathers to give unto them; and they believed Moſes was ſent of God to be their deliverer out of Egypt, and to be their leader to the promiſed land; ſee Pſ. cvi. 12. and who were now by the apoſtle ſaid to be baptized unto Moſes in the cloud and in the ſea, 1 Cor. x. 1, 2. and of their paſſage through the Red Sea under the direction of Moſes being an emblem of baptiſm, ſee the note there.

[u] לקראתו in occurſum ejus, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius; obviam mare, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[w] ינער ἐξετιναξε Sept. et excuſſit, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius; ſic excuſſit, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.
[x] Antiqu. l. 5. ſol. 88. 2. & 90 2. [y] Annal. vet. Teſt. p. 19.
[z] Whoſe waves o'erthrew
Buſiris, and his Memphian chivalry. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, B. 1. v. 306, 307.
[a] Geograph. l. 17. p. 552. [b] Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 42. [c] Ib. p. 79. [d] Dibre Hayamim, fol. 13. 2. [e] Ut ſupra. [f] Midraſh in Exod. xv. 10. & Arab. MS. apud Gregory's Notes & Obſerv. p. 6. [g] Shalſhalet, fol. 7. 1. [h] Shaw's Travels, p. 314. Edit. 2. [i] מת Mortuum, Montanus, Druſius. [k] Antiqu. l 2. c. 16. §. 6. [l] היד την χειρα Sept. Manum, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

CHAP. XV.

THIS chapter contains the ſong of Moſes, and of the children of Iſrael on the banks of the Red Sea; in which they celebrate their paſſage through it, the deſtruction of Pharaoh and his hoſt in it, and the glory of the divine perfections diſplayed therein, interſperſed with prophetic hints of things future, ℣. 1—19. which ſame ſong was ſung by the women with Miriam at the head of them, attended with timbrels and dances, ℣. 20, 21. an account is given of the march of the children of Iſrael from the Red Sea to the wilderneſs of Shur, and of the bitter waters found at Marah, which occaſioned a murmuring, and of their being made ſweet by caſting a tree into them, ℣. 22—25. when they were told by the Lord, that if they would yield obedience to his commandments, they ſhould be free from the diſeaſes the Egyptians had been afflicted with, ℣. 26. and the chapter is concluded with their coming to Elim, where they found twelve wells of water, and 70 palm-trees, and there encamped, ℣. 27.

℣. 1. Then ſang Moſes and the children of Iſrael this ſong unto the Lord, &c.] Which is the firſt ſong recorded in ſcripture, though no doubt before this time ſongs of praiſe were ſung to the Lord; the people of God having occaſion in all ages more or leſs to ſing his praiſes. The Jews [n] ſpeak of ten ſongs, the firſt of which was ſung by Adam, when his ſins were forgiven him, and this ſong of Moſes is the ſecond; though ſometimes they ſay [o], from the creation of the world to the ſtanding of Iſrael by the Red Sea, we don't find that ever any man ſung a ſong but Iſrael; God created the firſt man, but he ſung no ſong: however, this is the firſt on record, and is a typical one; Moſes the compoſer of it, and who bore a principal part in it, and was the deliverer of the people of Iſrael, was a type of Chriſt, the redeemeer of his church; and Iſrael that joined with him in it, and were the perſons delivered, were typical of the ſpiritual Iſrael of God redeemed by Chriſt; and the deliverance here celebrated bore a great reſemblance to the redemption wrought out by him; and Chriſt, the angel of the Lord, that went before the Iſraelites through the Red Sea, and fought for them, is the principal perſon concerned in it, and who is meant by the Lord throughout the whole of it, and to whom it is ſung; and a ſong upon a ſimilar occaſion to this will be ſung in the latter day, upon the deſtruction of ſpiritual Egypt or Antichriſt, and is called the ſong of Moſes and the lamb in alluſion to it, Rev. xv. 3. The Jews [p] ſay, this ſhall be ſung at the time when the wicked ſhall periſh out of the world, and obſerve that it is not written שר then ſung, but ישיר then ſhall ſing, &c. Moſes had reaſon to ſing, ſince God had heard his prayer, and had done him honour before the people, and he was both an inſtrument of and a ſharer in the ſalvation wrought; and the children of Iſrael had reaſon to ſing, inaſmuch as they were a people choſen of God, and diſtinguiſhed by him; were redeemed from bondage, called out of Egypt, and now ſaved out of the hands of their enemies, who were all deſtroyed, and they brought ſafely through the Red Sea, and landed on firm ground. And the time when they ſung this ſong was then, when they had paſſed through the ſea on dry land; and when they had ſeen the Egyptians their enemies dead on the ſea-ſhore; and when they were in a proper frame of ſpirit to ſing, when they had taken notice of and conſidered what great and wonderful things the Lord had done for them, and their minds were ſuitably impreſſed with a ſenſe of them; when they were in the exerciſe of the graces of the fear of God, and faith in him, and which is neceſſary to the performance of all religious duties, and particularly this of ſinging the praiſes of God: and ſpake, ſaying, I will ſing unto the Lord; that went before them in a pillar of cloud and fire; who had led them ſafely through the Red Sea, and troubled and deſtroyed the hoſt of the Egyptians; even the ſame Jehovah, who has undertook the ſalvation of his people, is become the author of it, and to whom the ſong of redeeming grace is due: for he hath triumphed glorioufly; over Pharaoh and all the Egyptians, the enemies of Iſrael, as Chriſt has over ſin, in the deſtruction of it by his ſacrifice, and over Satan and his principalities and powers, when he ſpoiled them on the croſs, and over death the laſt enemy, and all others; over whom he has made his people more than conquerors, through himſelf: or in excelling he excells [q]; all the angels of heaven, in his name and nature, relation, and office; and all the ſons of men, even the greateſt among them, being King of kings, and Lord of lords; in the wonderful things done by him, no ſuch atchievements having ever been wrought by any of them: or in magnifying he is magnified [r]; appears to be what he is, great in his nature, perfections, and works; and to be magnified, or declared to be great, and extolled as ſuch by all that know and fear him: the horſe and his rider hath he thrown into the ſea; the horſes and horſemen of Pharaoh; and which is not amiſs allegorically applied by Tertullian [s], to the world and the devil; the world is the horſe, and the rider the devil; that being under his power and direction, he being the God of it, and working effectually in it; ſpurring and exciting the men of it to every ſinful luſt and pleaſure; and may be put for all the ſpiritual enemies of God's people, eſpecially their ſins; which are caſt by the Lord into the midſt of the ſea, never to be ſeen and remembered any more, and which is to them matter of a ſong of praiſe and thankſgiving.

℣. 2. The Lord is my ſtrength and ſong, &c.] The ſtrength of Moſes and the children of Iſrael againſt the fears of the Egyptians, and of entrance into the Red Sea; who inſpired them with courage, and ſtrengthened their faith, neither to fear being deſtroyed by the one, or drowned in the other; and ſo in the glory of his nature, and of his divine perfections, of his juſtice, holineſs, faithfulneſs, truth, and goodneſs, he was the ſubject-matter of their ſong. As Chriſt is the ſtrength of his ſpiritual Iſrael, the author and giver of ſtrength unto them, the ſtrength of their lives, their hearts, and graces; and who ſtrengthens them to do his will and work, to exerciſe every grace, withſtand corruptions, reſiſt

[n] Targum in Cant. i. 1. fol. 20. 2.
[o] Shemot Rabba, §. 23. fol. 107. 3.
[p] Tikkune Zohar, correct. 10.
[q] גאה נאה excellendo excelluit, Piſcator. Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus.
[r] Magnificando magnificatus eſt,
[s] Contr. Marcion, l. 4. c. 20.

reſiſt temptations, bear afflictions, and overcome every enemy; and who on the account of the glory of his perſon, the beauty, fitneſs, and fulneſs of it, and becauſe of his offices of mediator, ſaviour, prophet, prieſt, and king, as well as by reaſon of what he has done for them, the righteouſneſs he has brought in, and the ſalvation he has wrought out, is the ſum and ſubſtance of their ſong of praiſe: and he is become my ſalvation; the ſalvation of Iſrael in a temporal ſenſe, having ſaved them out of the hands of the Egyptians their enemies; and the ſalvation or ſaviour of his ſpiritual Iſrael, who are ſaved by him with an everlaſting ſalvation; he is not only their ſaviour, but ſalvation itſelf; being not only the author of it, and that being in him for them, but made that itſelf unto them, even their all in all; their righteouſneſs, atonement, peace, light, life, food, health, comfort, and joy; all their grace being in him, and from him, as well as their eternal glory and happineſs: and this he is to them now, he is their ſalvation by impetration, having obtained it by his obedience, ſufferings, and death; and by application, they being convinced of their need of ſalvation by him, and the ſuitableneſs of it to them, ſeek to him for it, deſire that and no other, which is brought nigh unto them by the Spirit of God, and witneſſed to by him as theirs; ſo that they are already ſaved by grace, through faith and hope in Chriſt; and of their particular intereſt in it, they have knowledge by the ſame Spirit, which fills them with joy unſpeakable and full of glory. This and the preceding clauſe are words ſo very expreſſive, and contain ſuch fulneſs of matter, and ſuch intereſting things, that both the pſalmiſt David, and the church, in the times of the evangelic prophet Iſaiah, have borrowed them to expreſs their ſenſe of the great things the Lord was to them, and had done for them, Pſ. cxviii. 14. Iſ. xii. 2. he is my God, and I will prepare him an habitation; Chriſt is God, truly God, as appears from the names given him, particularly Jehovah; from the perfections aſcribed to him, from the works done by him, and from the worſhip of him both by angels and men; and he is his people's God, their Immanuel, God in their nature, the God in whom they believe, and in whom they have an intereſt; he is the God of their ſalvation, the Lord their righteouſneſs; their Lord, head, and King; their huſband, beloved, father, brother, friend; their God and guide, even unto death; their portion and exceeding great reward, now and hereafter: wherefore Moſes, or the people of Iſrael, or both, determine to prepare him an habitation, being concerned that he had no better dwelling-place among them than he had; and ſeem to have ſome reſpect unto, and knowledge of an habitation hereafter to be built, the tabernacle and temple; which were typical of the human nature of Chriſt, and of his church; but then they were both of God's preparing, and not mens; wherefore an habitation in the hearts of his people may be chiefly deſigned; the preparation of which, though it is principally and efficaciouſly of the Spirit of God, yet in ſome ſenſe may be ſaid to be prepared by the ſaints, when they ſhew a concern for grace to be in exerciſe; to have duty regularly, and conſtantly performed in a manner acceptable to him, and that no diſturbance be given to occaſion his departure from them. The Septuagint verſion is, I will glorify him; with ſoul and body, which are both his; and ſo much to the ſame purpoſe other verſions, I will decorate or beautify[t] him; declare his beauty and glory, and ſpeak in praiſe of it: my father's God, and I will exalt him; Chriſt was not only the God of Amram, the father of Moſes, who was a good man; but the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, as he declared himſelf to be, Exod. iii. 6. the anceſtors not only of Moſes, but of all the children of Iſrael. This ſhews the antiquity of Chriſt, that he was their fathers God, and that he is to be truſted and depended on as he was by their fathers, and to be regarded, and highly valued and eſteemed, having been their fathers friend, and is a reaſon why he ſhould be exalted by them; for though he cannot be raiſed higher than he is, being the Son of the higheſt, God over all bleſſed for ever, whoſe kingdom ruleth over all, and is now as man aſcended on high, and is highly exalted by his Father, and at his right hand, and glorified by him with himſelf; yet he may be ſaid to be exalted and lifted up by us, when we celebrate and ſet forth the height of his glory and excellency, by aſſerting his proper deity, aſcribing the ſame perfections, works, and worſhip to him, as to his Father, by attributing diſtinct divine perſonality to him, confeſſing his eternal ſonſhip, owning him in all his offices, and giving him the glory due unto him on account of them, and for ſalvation wrought out by him; the whole honour and praiſe of it belong to him: he may and ſhould be exalted in the hearts of his people, in their thoughts and affections, and with their lips in ſongs of praiſe; and in the houſe of God, and the ordinances of it, where every one ſhould ſpeak of his glory; the reaſons are, becauſe he is above all in his perſon and perfections, is the only mediator, ſaviour, and redeemer, and to exalt him is the way to be exalted, Prov. iv. 8.

ẏ. 3. The Lord is a man of war, &c.] A man, which has reſpect to the future incarnation of Chriſt, for as yet he was not really man; though it was purpoſed, covenanted, agreed to, and propheſied of, that he ſhould, as he after was; not a mere man, as appears by the following clauſe: a man of war; or a warrior; being engaged in war, and inured to it; having to do with very powerful enemies, Satan and his principalities and powers, the world, and the great men of it, Antichriſt, and all the Antichriſtian ſtates. A warrior well verſed in all the arts of war, and abundantly qualified for it, having conſummate wiſdom, ſtrength and courage, and thoroughly furniſhed and accoutred for it; having on the breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs, the helmet of ſalvation, the garment of vengeance, and cloak of zeal, and a veſture dipt in blood; and with a ſword girt on his thigh, or drawn, or coming out of his mouth; and with a bow and arrows, going forth conquering and to conquer; for he is a victorious one, who has conquered ſin, Satan, and the world, and will ſubdue all others, and make his people more than conquerors, through him. He is not a common man of war or warrior; he is the captain of the Lord's hoſt, the leader and commander of the people, the generaliſſimo of the armies in heaven and earth, and is a prince and king at the head of them: the Lord is his name; or Jehovah, which proves him to be more than a man; and being ſo, it is no wonder that he is ſo mighty, powerful, and victorious.

ẏ. 4. Pharaoh's chariots and his hoſts hath he caſt into the ſea, &c.] Which was done by the angel of the Lord, who was Jehovah himſelf, our Immanuel, and man of war, as appears from ch. xiv. 17. 24.

[t] ואנוהו δοξαζω αυτον Sept. glorificabo eum, V. L. laudabo eum, Syr. Samar. hunc decorabo, Tigurine verſion; co: decorabo eum, Piſcator.

24—28. an emblem of the deſtruction of Antichriſt, and all the Antichriſtian ſtates, of which Pharaoh and his hoſt were types: his choſen captains alſo are drowned in the Red Sea; who were appointed over his choſen chariots, which all periſhed in the ſea together. In the carnage that will be made by Chriſt, the warrior and conqueror, among the followers of Antichriſt, the man of ſin, the antitypical Pharaoh, the fleſh of captains is mentioned for the fowls of heaven to feed upon, Rev. xix. 18.

℣. 5. The depths have covered them, &c.] The depths of the ſea covered Pharaoh and his hoſt, ſo as to be ſeen no more; and in like manner will myſtical Babylon, or Antichriſt, be deſtroyed, and be no more found and ſeen; as likewiſe the ſins of God's people, being caſt into the depths of the ſea, and covered with the blood of Chriſt, will be ſeen no more; when they are ſought for, they ſhall not be found: they ſunk into the bottom as a ſtone; into the bottom of the ſea, as a ſtone thrown into any body of water ſinks and riſes not up again; this circumſtance is obſerved by Nehemiah, ch. ix. 11. their perſecutors thou threweſt into the deep, as a ſtone into the mighty waters; and thus a ſtone like a mill-ſtone being taken by an angel and caſt into the ſea, is made an emblem of the irrecoverable ruin and deſtruction of Babylon, or Antichriſt, Rev. xviii. 21.

℣. 6. Thy right Hand, O Lord, is become glorious in power, &c.] In bringing the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, and through the Red Sea, and in the deſtruction of Pharaoh and the Egyptians; and ſo the right hand of Chriſt, expreſſive of his power, he has in and of himſelf, and is the ſame with his father's, and is mighty, yea almighty, is become glorious, famous, and illuſtrious, in the redemption and ſalvation of his people, by bearing their ſins, and working out a righteouſneſs for them; and in the deſtruction of their enemies, ſin, Satan, the world, and death, as is more fully expreſſed in the next clauſe: thy right hand, O Lord, hath daſhed in pieces the enemy; in a literal ſenſe, Pharaoh and his hoſt, the avowed enemies of Iſrael; and in a ſpiritual ſenſe, thoſe before named, together with all the Antichriſtian party, thoſe enemies of Chriſt, and his people, whom he will break to ſhivers as a potter's veſſel, Rev. ii. 27.

℣. 7. And in the greatneſs of thine excellency, &c.] Chriſt has an excellency in him, a greatneſs of excellency, a ſuperlative one; he has a more excellent name and nature than the angels, being a divine perſon; and a more excellent miniſtry, as man and mediator, than any of the ſons of men, as prophet, prieſt, and king; and is ſuperlatively excellent in his operations, has wrought out a moſt excellent righteouſneſs, offered up a more excellent ſacrifice than ever was offered, and obtained a great, glorious, and excellent ſalvation for his people; in conſequence of which is what is next aſſerted: thou haſt overthrown them that roſe up againſt thee; againſt his perſon and his people, who are in ſuch ſtrict union with him as to be reckoned as himſelf; and thoſe that riſe up againſt them, he reckons as riſing up againſt him, or as his enemies; and both the one and the other are overthrown by him, as were thoſe that roſe up againſt him in perſon when on earth, as Herod, Pontius Pilate, the people of the Jews, with the Gentiles, and as will be Antichriſt and his followers, and all the ſpiritual enemies of the people of God: thou ſenteſt forth thy wrath, which conſumed them as ſtubble; the wrath of the Lord God Almighty is like fire, and wicked men are as chaff and ſtubble; and as thoſe cannot ſtand before fire, but are ſuddenly and quickly conſumed with it; ſo neither can the wicked, the enemies of Chriſt and his people, ſtand before the wrath of the lamb, when the great day of it is come, but muſt be preſently deſtroyed by it; ſee Iſa. li. 24. and xxvii. 4. Rev. vi. 17.

℣. 8. And with the blaſt of thy noſtrils the waters were gathered together, &c.] From the bottom of the ſea, and divided and laid on heaps; and this by a ſtrong eaſt-wind, called the blaſt of the noſtrils of the Lord, becauſe as eaſily brought by him as a man's breath or wind is drawn through his noſtrils; and thus Chriſt with the breath of his mouth, and the brightneſs of his coming, will deſtroy Antichriſt, 2 Theſſ. ii. 8. Iſ. xi. 4. the floods ſtood upright as an heap; though a fluid body, yet by the power of Chriſt were raiſed up and continued upright, firm and conſiſtent; as things dry and ſolid may be laid and heaped up on one another, and remain firm and ſtable; and ſo did the waters of the ſea, they ſtood like a wall, and were as firm as a rock; whilſt the Iſraelites paſſed between them, they ſtood upright, and lift up their hands, as if they bleſſed them; or bleſſed God for the deliverance of them, or in admiration of it; ſee ch. xiv. 22. Hab. iii. 10. and the depths were congealed in the heart of the ſea; were like mountains of ice, as if they were frozen, and ſo ſtood firm and unmoved until thawed; and ſome have thought that they were really frozen: or this may reſpect the hardening of the bottom of the ſea, which became dry land, and terra firma for the Iſraelites to paſs upon through it.

℣. 9. The enemy ſaid, &c.] That is, Pharaoh, who repented that he had let Iſrael go; an emblem of Satan, who when the people of God are taken out of his hands is uneaſy at it, and ſeeks to recover them again into his poſſeſſion; or of Antichriſt breathing out threatening and ſlaughter to the ſaints, the reformers departed from him, and delivered out of his captivity: I will purſue, I will overtake, I will divide the ſpoil; which words being expreſſed without the copulative and, ſhew the paſſion he was in, the haſtineſs of his expreſſions, and the eagerneſs of his mind; and being delivered in ſuch an abſolute manner, I will, I will, &c. denote not only the fixed reſolution and determination he had made to purſue, but the aſſurance he had of carrying his point; he thought as ſurely as he purſued he ſhould overtake, and overtaking ſhould conquer, and get into his hands all the riches the people of Iſrael went out of Egypt with: my luſt ſhall be ſatisfied upon them; both his luſt of covetouſneſs to poſſeſs himſelf of the wealth the people had of their own, and which they had ſpoiled the Egyptians of, by borrowing of them; and alſo his luſt of revenge and cruelty upon them, as appears from what follows: I will draw my ſword; out of its ſcabbard, and ſheath it in them: my hand ſhall deſtroy them; which he made no doubt of, they being an unarmed people; and therefore, though numerous, were unable to engage with him, and defend themſelves, ſee Rev. vi. 14. and vii. 14. and xix. 19, 20, 21. and with it compare Iſ. x. 11, 14.

℣. 10. Thou didſt blow with thy wind, &c.] A ſtrong eaſt-wind, ch. xiv. 22. which is the Lord Chriſt's, who has it in his treaſury, holds it in his fiſts, ſends it out as he pleaſes, and it fulfils his word and will: the ſea covered them; which ſtood up up in an heap as a wall to let Iſrael paſs through, and fell down with all its waves and billows with great force upon the Egyptians, and covered and drowned them: they ſunk as lead in the mighty waters; which is a very heavy metal, and being caſt into the water ſinks to the bottom at once, as did the Egyptians in the Red Sea, and as Babylon the great will, and never riſe more, Rev. xviii. 21.

ỿ. 11. Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods? &c.] For the perfections of his nature, for the bleſſings of his goodneſs, and for the works of his hands; and eſpecially for the greatneſs and excellency of his power, ſeen in the ſalvation of his people, and the ruin of their enemies: there is none like him among the mighty ones, as it may be rendered; among the mighty angels, who excel in ſtrength, and are ſometimes called gods; or among the mighty ones on earth; or the ſons of the mighty, kings, princes, judges, and civil magiſtrates of every rank and order; and eſpecially for the following things: who is like thee, glorious in holineſs? ſome underſtand this, of the holy place, either heaven, where Chriſt is glorious above all created beings; or the church, where he ſhews himſelf glorious to his people: others, of holy perſons, either holy angels, among whom he was at Sinai, and when he aſcended on high, and will be when he comes again, in his own and his father's glory; or the ſaints, when he will bring them with him, and be glorified in them; but rather, it is to be underſtood of the attribute of his holineſs, which is eminently and perfectly in him; in his perſon, with reſpect to both his natures divine and human; the glory of which is diſplayed in all the works he has wrought, eſpecially in the great work of redemption, which was undertook both for the honour of the holineſs and righteouſneſs of God, and to redeem his people from ſin, and make them righteous and holy: it appears in the holy doctrines he taught, and in the holy commandments and ordinances he enjoined his people, and in his judgments on his enemies; in all which it is plainly ſeen that he loves righteouſneſs and hates iniquity, and there is none like him for it; there is none holy as the Lord among angels or men, 1 Sam. ii. 2. fearful in praiſes; or, in the things for which he is to be praiſed; as the glories and excellencies of his perſon, the bleſſings received from him, and through him, both temporal and ſpiritual; grace, and all the bleſſings of it here, now communicated, and glory and happineſs promiſed and expected: and many things, for which he is to be praiſed, he is fearful, awful, and tremendous in them; there are ſome things his right hand teaches him, and it does, deſerving of praiſe, which yet are terrible, and ſuch were they which are here literally referred to; the plagues upon the Egyptians, and the deſtruction of Pharaoh and his hoſt, called the wondrous works done in the land of Ham, and terrible things by the Red Sea, Pſ. cvi. 22. and yet theſe were matter of praiſe to Iſrael, and gave occaſion for this ſong; and ſuch are they, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, which he has done to his and our enemies: when the year of his redeemed was come, it was a day of vengeance in his heart, and he exerciſed it; he made an end of ſin, aboliſhed death, deſtroyed him which had the power of it, and ſpoiled principalities and powers; and a dreadful ſlaughter will be made of antichriſt and his followers, when the ſong of Moſes and the Lamb will be ſung on account of it; and ſuch diſpenſations of providence, and judgments on men, as on Pharaoh and Antichriſt, as they are terrible to wicked men, they ſtrike an awe on the people of God, at the ſame time they furniſh out a ſong of praiſe to them: moreover, this may reſpect not only the matter of praiſe, but the reverend manner in which it is performed by good men; who, as they have a concern that they cannot ſufficiently praiſe the Lord, and fear they ſhall not perform it aright, and ſenſible of their weakneſs and imperfection, like the ſeraphim, cover their faces whilſt they applaud his perfections, particularly that of his holineſs, and declare the earth is full of his glory; ſo they deſire to perform this as all their other ſervices, with a holy fear and trembling, with reverence and godly fear, ſince holy and reverend is his name: it follows, doing wonders; and for which there is none like him; wonders Chriſt did before his incarnate ſtate, both in eternity, in the goings forth of his heart, in acts of love to his people, in aſking for them, and betrothing them, in becoming the ſurety of them, in propoſing to be a ſacrifice in their ſtead, in entering into a covenant with his father on their account, in taking the care and charge of their perſons, and in being the treaſury of all grace and glory for them; and likewiſe in time, being concerned in the wondrous works of creation, which are a wonderful diſplay of divine wiſdom, power, and goodneſs, and in all the affairs of providence; for there was not any remarkable occurrence from the beginning of the world to the time of his coming in the fleſh but he was concerned therein; as the drowning of the old world, to whom previouſly he preached by his Spirit in Noah; the burning of Sodom and Gomorrah, the plagues of Egypt, and the deſtruction of Pharaoh and his hoſt, the deliverance of the children of Iſrael, both out of Egypt and Babylon, and many others: and when he became incarnate, how many wonders were wrought by him? the incarnation itſelf was a wonderful inſtance of his grace and condeſcenſion, to take upon him the nature of man, be made fleſh, and dwell among them; and during his incarnate ſtate on earth many wonders were done by him; the doctrines he taught, the miracles he wrought, and eſpecially the great work of our redemption and ſalvation, which will be for ever the wonder of men and angels; his raiſing himſelf from the dead, his aſcenſion to heaven, and his appearance there for his people, as well as his ſecond coming to judgment, are all marvellous things; and on account of all this and more, he may well be called wonderful; for working wonders there is none like him.

ỿ. 12. Thou ſtretchedſt out thy right hand, &c.] That is, exerted his power, and gave a diſplay and proof of it; of which the right hand is an emblem: the earth ſwallowed them; meaning Pharaoh and his hoſt; for though they were drowned in the ſea, that being a part of the terraqueous globe, they may be ſaid to be ſwallowed in the earth; as Jonah, when in the depth of the ſea, the earth and its bars are ſaid to be about him, ch. ii. 6. and beſides, many of Pharaoh's army might be ſwallowed up in the mud at the bottom of the ſea: nor is it improbable that thoſe that were caſt upon the banks and ſand, whom the Iſraelites ſtripped, might be afterwards ſwallowed up therein.

ỿ. 13. Thou in thy mercy haſt led forth the people which thou haſt redeemed, &c.] From their ſervitude vitude and bondage in Egypt; and so they were the Lord's people, peculiar to him, and distinct from all others: those he led forth as out of Egypt, so through the Red Sea onward towards Canaan's land; which was owing to his mercy, pity, and compassion to them in their affliction and distress: thus the spiritual Israel are a people redeemed by Christ from the bondage of sin, satan, and the law, and are his property, special and peculiar to him, and distinguished from all others: those he leads forth out of the state of nature in which they are, which is a very uncomfortable one, dark, bewildered, and forlorn, and out of their own ways, both of sin and self-righteousness; he leads them in himself the true way to eternal life, and in the paths of faith, truth, and holiness; and he leads to himself, his blood, righteousness and fulness, and into his father's presence, into his house and ordinances, and at last to heaven, the city of their habitation: and though it is sometimes in a rough way he leads them thither, yet always in a right one; and this must be ascribed to his grace and mercy, and not to the merits of his people: it was owing to his mercy he engaged for them as a surety, and came into this world to be their saviour, in his love and pity he redeemed them; and it is according to abundant mercy they are regenerated, and called, and saved: thou hast guided them in thy strength unto thy holy habitation; or rather, art guiding them [w]; for as yet they were not brought to their rest, the land of Canaan, where God had chosen a place for his people and himself to dwell in; nor was the tabernacle as yet made, much less the temple, where Jehovah took up his residence; but as he had brought out his people Israel from Egypt with a strong hand and mighty arm, he was guiding and directing them onward in their journey, in the same greatness of his strength, which he would and did continue, until he brought them to the place he had chosen for his habitation; which was typical both tabernacle and temple of the human nature of Christ, in which the fulness of the godhead dwells, and which is holy, being perfectly free from sin, and to which the people of God are guided as the new and living way to the father, and whereby they have communion with him: likewise they were an emblem of the church of God, where Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit dwell, and which consists of holy persons, and where holy services are performed; and hither the Lord guides and directs his people, and where he gives them a name and a place better than that of sons and daughters; and also of heaven, where the Lord dwells, and which is the habitation of his holiness, where are holy angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect, and into which none shall enter but those that are holy; and hither the Lord guides all his people, with his counsel, and by his Spirit and word, and by his almighty power brings them thither.

℣. 14. And the people shall hear, and be afraid, &c.] What follows from hence to the end of the song is plainly prophetical, a prediction of future events; and this clause respects the case of all the nations of the earth, who should hear the report of the plagues brought upon the Egyptians for the sake of Israel, and of their being brought out of Egypt, and of their being led thro' the Red Sea as on dry land, and of the destruction of Pharaoh and his host in it, which report would strike a panic in all that heard it, throughout the whole world; as well as of what the Lord would after this do for them in the wilderness, see Deut. ii. 25. sorrow shall take hold of the inhabitants of Palestina; which was adjoining to the land of Canaan, and through which in the common way their road lay to it.

℣. 15. Then the dukes of Edom shall be amazed, &c.] Of which there were many, see Gen. xxxvi. 15—30. the land being first governed by dukes, as perhaps it was at this time, though in some few years after it had a king, Numb. xx. 14. now these, when they heard of the wonderful things that were done for Israel in Egypt, at the Red Sea, and in the wilderness, were astonished and surprized, and filled with fear and dread, see Deut. ii. 4. the mighty men of Moab, trembling shall take hold upon them; as did on Balak the king of Moab, and his people, Numb. xxii. 2, 3. where may be observed a literal accomplishment of this prophecy: all the inhabitants of Canaan shall melt away; as their hearts did, through fear, when they heard what God did for Israel against the Egyptians and the Amorites, and understood that they were upon the march to their land to invade it and dispossess them of it: see the fulfilment of this prediction in Josh. ii. 9, 11, 12. thus when Babylon shall be destroyed, as Pharaoh and his host were, and the people of God saved out of the midst of her, as Israel was, the kings of the earth will stand afar off for fear of her torment, and bewail and lament for her, Rev. xviii. 9, 10.

℣. 16. Fear and dread shall fall upon them, &c.] On the several nations and people before-mentioned, especially the Canaanites, which the Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem interpret, of the fear of death, lest the Israelites should fall upon them and destroy them, or God should fight for them, against them, and bring ruin and destruction on them: by the greatness of thine arm they shall be as still as a stone; awed by the power of God, visible in what he had done for the Israelites, and upon their enemies; they should be like stocks and stones, immoveable, have no power to act, nor stir a foot in their own defence, and against Israel, come to invade and possess their land; nor in the least molest them, or stop them in their passage over Jordan, or dispute it with them, but stand like persons thunder-struck, and as stupid as stones, not having any spirit or courage left in them: till thy people pass over, O Lord, till the people pass over, which thou hast purchased; pass over the brook of Arnon, and the ford of Jabbok, according to the Targum of Jonathan; or the ford of Jabbok, and the ford of Jordan, according to the Jerusalem Targum; the river of Jordan is doubtless literally meant, at least chiefly; and the accomplishment of this prediction may be seen in Josh. iii. 15, 16, 17. and v. 1. which was an emblem of the quiet passage of Christ's purchased people, through the ford or river of death to the Canaan of everlasting rest and happiness: Christ's people are purchased by him, who is able to make the purchase, and had a right to do it, and has actually made it, by giving his flesh, shedding his blood, laying down his life, and giving himself a ransom-price for them: these do, and must pass over Jordan, or go through the cold stream of death; it is the way of all the earth, of good men as well as others; it is a passage from one world to another; and there is no getting to the heavenly Canaan without going this way, or through this ford; and all the Lord's purchased people, like Israel, clean pass over through it, not one are left in it; their bodies are raised again, their souls are re-united to them, and both come safe to heaven and and happineſs: and for the moſt part, they have a quiet and eaſy paſſage, the enemy is not ſuffered to diſturb them, neither the ſins and corruptions of their nature, nor an evil heart of unbelief, nor ſatan with his temptations; and the terrors of death are taken away from them; ſo that they can ſit and ſing on the ſhores of eternity, in the view of death and another world, ſaying, death, where is thy ſting? grave, where is thy victory? &c. and this is to be aſcribed to the greatneſs of Jehovah's arm, to his almighty power, on which they lean, and go on comfortably in the wilderneſs; and by this they are carried ſafely through death to glory, and it is owing to this that the enemy and the avenger are ſtilled.

[w] נהלת commode ducis, Junius & Tremellius.

℣. 17. Thou ſhalt bring them in, &c.] Into the land of Canaan, which is often aſcribed to the Lord, as well as his bringing them out of the land of Egypt, ſee Deut. viii. 8. and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance; in the country which he choſe for the inheritance of his people and himſelf; one part of which was very mountainous, called the hill-country of Judea, and eſpecially Jeruſalem, round about which mountains were; and particular reſpect may be had to mount Moriah and Zion, on which the temple afterwards ſtood, and which was called the mountain of the Lord's houſe, and ſeems to be pointed at in the following account: here Iſrael is compared to a vine as elſewhere, which the Lord took out of Egypt and planted in the land of Canaan, where it took root and was ſettled, ſee Pſ. lxxx. 8, 9. in the place, O Lord, which thou haſt made for thee to dwell in; that is, which he had appointed for his habitation; for as yet neither the tabernacle nor temple were built, in which he afterwards dwelt: in this ſenſe the word made is uſed in Prov. xvi. 4. ſee Mark iii. 14. in the ſanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have eſtabliſhed; that is, which he intended to eſtabliſh, and would, and did eſtabliſh; meaning, more eſpecially, the temple, and the holy of holies in it, which he directed Solomon to build, and was a ſettled dwelling-place for him, 1 Kings viii. 13. now all this may be conſidered as typical of the church of Chriſt, and of his bringing and planting his people there, which is a mountain, and often ſignified by mount Zion; is viſible and immoveable, the true members of it being intereſted in the love of God, on the ſure foundation of electing grace, ſecured in the everlaſting covenant, and built on the rock Chriſt Jeſus; and is the Lord's inheritance, choſen by him to be ſo, given to Chriſt, and poſſeſſed by him as ſuch, and as dear to him and more ſo, than a man's inheritance is to him: this is a place he has appointed, prepared, and made for himſelf to dwell in, and is the habitation of Father, Son, and Spirit; and is a ſanctuary or holy place, conſiſting of holy perſons eſtabliſhed in Chriſt, as particular believers are, and the church in general is; and though now ſometimes in an unſettled ſtate as to outward things, yet ere long will be eſtabliſhed on the top of the mountains: and hither the Lord brings his purchaſed people, as ſheep into his fold, as children to his houſe, fitted up for them, as gueſts to partake of his entertainments; and this is an act of his powerful grace upon them, and of his diſtinguiſhed goodneſs to them: and here he alſo plants them, for the church is a plantation, a garden, an orchard of pomegranates, with pleaſant fruits; and ſuch as are planted here are tranſplanted out of the world, and are firſt planted in Chriſt, and receive the ingrafted word; and though miniſters may be inſtruments in planting, the Lord is the efficient; and thoſe that are planted by him are choice, pleaſant plants, fruitful ones, and ſhall never be plucked up: but as this follows the paſſage of the Lord's people over Jordan into Canaan land, it may rather be conſidered as an emblem of the heavenly ſtate, and of the Lord's bringing and planting his people there; which, like a mountain, is an immoveable and unalterable ſtate, an inheritance incorruptible and eternal, the dwelling-place of Jehovah, a ſanctuary or holy place, which his hand prepared from the foundation of the world; and which he has eſtabliſhed as everlaſting habitations for his people, where he brings their ſouls at death, and both ſouls and bodies in the reſurrection-morn to dwell with him for ever; and which is a paradiſe, an Eden of pleaſure, where he plants them as trees of righteouſneſs, next to Chriſt the tree of life, and where they are always green, fruitful, flouriſhing, and ſhall never be hurt by any ſcorching heat or blaſting wind, or be trodden under foot or plucked up.

℣. 18. The Lord ſhall reign for ever and ever.] Even that ſame Lord that is ſpoken of throughout this ſong, and to whom every thing in it is aſcribed, and who is no other than the Lord Jeſus Chriſt: his reign began in eternity, when he was ſet up and anointed as king over God's holy hill of Zion, his church, the elect, who were a kingdom put under his care and charge, and which he will deliver up again one day, compleat and perfect: he reigned throughout the whole old-teſtament-diſpenſation, and was acknowledged as well as propheſied of as a king; in his ſtate of humiliation he had a kingdom, though not of this world, and upon his aſcenſion to heaven he was made and declared Lord and Chriſt; and thence forward his kingdom became very viſible in the Gentile world, through the miniſtration of his word, accompanied by his almighty power; and ever ſince, more or leſs, he has ruled by his Spirit and grace in the hearts of many of the children of men, and ere long, will take upon him his great power, and reign, in a more viſible, ſpiritual, and glorious manner, in the midſt of his churches, in the preſent ſtate of things; and then he will reign with all his ſaints raiſed from the dead, for the ſpace of a thouſand years on earth, and after that will reign with them for ever in heaven, in the ultimate ſtate of glory and happineſs: the reigns of all others are but ſhort, or however, but for a time, but the reign of Chriſt is for ever and ever; the reigns of ſin, and of ſatan, and of death, have an end, but of the government of Chriſt, and the peace thereof, there will be no end; the reigns of the greateſt potentates, emperors, and kings, of cruel and tyrannical princes, ſuch as Pharaoh, are limited to a certain time, as is the reign of antichriſt, which when ended, and the ſaints will have got the victory over him, the ſong of Moſes and the Lamb will be ſung; but Chriſt's kingdom is an everlaſting kingdom, and his dominion is evermore: the Targum of Jonathan is, "let us ſet a crown "on the head of our redeemer, whoſe is the royal "crown, and he is king of kings in this world, "and whoſe is the kingdom in the world to come, "and whoſe it is and will be for ever and ever;" and to the ſame purpoſe is the Jeruſalem Targum.

℣. 19. For the horſe of Pharaoh went in with his chariots, and with his horſemen into the ſea, &c.] Meaning not that particular and ſingle horſe on which Pharaoh was carried, but all the horſes of his that drew in his chariots, and all on which his cavalry was mounted; these all went into the Red Sea, following the Israelites thither: these words are either the concluding part of the song, recapitulating and reducing into a compendium the subject-matter of it; or are a reason why Moses and the children of Israel sung it; or else they are to be connected more strictly with the preceding verse, and give a reason why the Lord reigns over his people for ever; because he has destroyed their enemies, and delivered them out of their hands: and the Lord brought again the waters of the sea upon them; after he had divided them, for the Israelites to pass through them, he caused them to close again, and to fall upon the Egyptians and cover and drown them: but the children of Israel went on dry land in the midst of the sea; which was a very wonderful thing, and was a just and sufficient reason for singing the above song to the Lord, see ch. xiv. 29.

℣. 20. And Miriam the prophetess, the sister of Aaron, &c.] The same, it is highly probable, that is called the sister of Moses, ch. ii. 3, 4, 7, 8. her name Miriam is the same as Mary with us, and signifies bitterness; and as the Hebrews [x] observe, had it from the bitterness of the times, and the afflictions the Israelites endured and groaned under when she was born; which is a much more probable signification and reason of her name than what is given by others, that it is the same with Marjam, which signifies a drop of the sea; from whence they fancy, comed the story of Venus, and her name of Aphrodite, the froth of the sea: Miriam was a prophetess, and so called, not from this action of singing, here recorded of her, for so all the women that sung with her might be called prophetesses, though sometimes in scripture prophesying intends singing; but rather from her having a gift of teaching and instructing, and even of foretelling things to come; for the Lord spoke by her as well as by Moses and Aaron, and she, with them, were the leaders of the people of Israel, sent to them of the Lord, see Numb. xii. 2. Mic. vi. 4. she is particularly called the sister of Aaron, though she was likewise the sister of Moses; the reason is, that being older than Moses, she was Aaron's sister before his, and having lived all her days with Aaron almost, and very little with Moses, was best known by being the sister of Aaron; and it is possible she might be his own sister by father and mother's side, when Moses was by another woman; however, it is said of her, she took a timbrel in her hand; and all the women went out after her, with timbrels and with dances; timbrels were a sort of drums or tabrets, which being beat upon gave a musical sound, somewhat perhaps like our kettle drums; and though dances were sometimes used in religious exercises, yet the word may signify another kind of musical instruments, as pipes or flutes [y], as it is by some rendred; and by the Syriac and Arabic versions, sistrums; which were musical instruments much used by the Egyptians, and from whom the Israelitish women had these; and as they were going to keep a feast in the wilderness, they lent them to them, it is very probable on that account; otherwise it is not easy to conceive what use the Israelites could have for them, and put them to during their hard bondage and sore affliction in Egypt: now with these they went out of the camp or tents into the open fields, or to the shore of the Red Sea, and sung as Moses and the men of Israel did: to this the psalmist seems to refer in Ps. lxviii. 25.

℣. 21. And Miriam answered them, &c.] The men, for the word is masculine; that is, repeated, and sung the same song word for word after them, as they had done, of which a specimen is given by reciting the first clause of the song: sing ye to the Lord; which is by way of exhortation to the women to sing with her, as Moses begins the song thus: I will sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea; see the note on ℣. 1. the manner of their singing, according to the Jews [z] was, Moses first said, I will sing, and they said it after him.

℣. 22. So Moses brought Israel from the Red Sea, &c.] Or caused them to journey [a], which some think was done with difficulty, they being so eager and intent upon the spoil and plunder of the Egyptians cast upon the sea-shore, the harness of their horses being, as Jarchi observes, ornamented with gold and silver, and pretious stones; or as others, they had some inclination to return to Egypt, and take possession of the country for themselves; the inhabitants of it, at least its military force, being destroyed, and their armour in their possession; but the truer meaning of the word is, that Moses as their general, gave them the word of command to march, and till they had it they stayed at the Red Sea refreshing themselves, taking the spoils of the enemy, and singing the praises of God; but when Moses gave them orders to set forward they proceeded on their journey: and they went out into the wilderness of Shur; the same with the wilderness of Etham, as appears from Numb. xxxiii. 8. there might be, as Aben Ezra conjectures, two cities in or near this wilderness, of those two names, from whence it might be called: for, as doctor Shaw says [b], Shur was a particular district of the wilderness of Etham, fronting the valley (of Baideah) from which, he supposes, the children of Israel departed: and doctor Pocock says [c], that the wilderness of Shur might be the fourth part of the wilderness of Etham, for about six hours from the springs of Moses, (where, according to the tradition of the country, the children of Israel landed, being directly over-against Clysma or Pihahiroth) is a winter torrent, called Sedur (or Sdur) and there is a hill higher than the rest called Kala Sedur (the fortress of Sedur), and from which this wilderness might have its name: and by another traveller [d], this wilderness is called the wilderness of Sedur: and now it was the wilderness of Etham they were in before they went into the Red Sea, which has induced some to believe that they came out on the same shore again; for the solution of which difficulty see the note, ch. xiv. 22. and they went three days in the wilderness, and found no water; which must be very distressing to such a vast number of people and cattle, in a hot, sandy, desert: this doubtless gave occasion to the stories told by heathen authors, as Tacitus [e], and others; that the people of the Jews, under the conduct of Moses, were near perishing for want of water, when following a flock of wild asses, which led them to a rock covered with a grove of trees, they found large fountains of water: the three days they travelled here were the 22d, 23d, and 24th of Nisan, in the beginning of April.

[x] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 3. p. 9. Dibre Hayamim, fol. 2. 2. [y] במחלת cum fistulis, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator; cum tibiis, Drusius; so Ainsworth. [z] T. Hieros. Sotah, fol. 20. 3. T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 30. 2. [a] ויסע et fecit proficisci, Pagninus & Montanus, Drusius; jussit proficisci, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator. [b] Travels, p. 312. [c] Travels, p. 156. [d] Journal from Cairo, &c. p. 13. [e] Hist. l. 5. c. 3.

℣. 23. And when they came to Marah, &c.] A place in the wilderneſs, afterwards ſo called from the quality of the waters found here; wherefore this name is by anticipation: they could not drink of the waters of Marah, for they were bitter; and they muſt be very bitter for people in ſuch circumſtances, having been without water for three days, not to be able to drink of them: ſome have thought theſe to be the bitter fountains Pliny [f] ſpeaks of, ſomewhere between the Nile and the Red Sea, but theſe were in the deſert of Arabia; more probably they were near, and of the ſame kind with thoſe that Diodorus Siculus [g] makes mention of, who, ſpeaking of the Troglodytes that inhabited near the Red Sea, and in the wilderneſs, obſerves, that from the city Arſinoe, as you go along the ſhores of the continent on the right hand, there are ſeveral rivers that guſh out of the rocks into the ſea, of a bitter taſte: and ſo Strabo [h] ſpeaks of a foſs or ditch, which runs out into the Red Sea and Arabian gulf, and by the city Arſinoe, and flows through thoſe lakes which are called bitter; and that thoſe which were of old time bitter, being made a foſs and mixed with the river, are changed, and now produce good fiſh, and abound with water-fowl: but what ſome late travellers have diſcovered ſeems to be nearer the truth: doctor Shaw [i] thinks, theſe waters may be properly fixed at Corondel, where there is a ſmall rill, which, unleſs it be diluted by the dews and rain, ſtill continues to be brackiſh: another traveller [k] tells us that, at the foot of the mountain of Hamam-El-Faron, a ſmall but moſt delightful valley, a place called Garondu, in the bottom of the vale, is a rivulet that comes from the afore-mentioned mountain, the water of which is tolerably good, and in ſufficient plenty, but is however not free from being ſomewhat bitter, though it is very clear: doctor Pocock ſays, there is a mountain known to this day, by the name of Le-Marah; and toward the ſea is a ſalt well called Birhammer, which is probably the ſame here called Marah: this Le-Marah he ſays, is 16 hours ſouth of the ſprings of Moſes; that is, 40 miles from the landing-place of the children of Iſrael; from whence to the end of the wilderneſs were ſix hours travelling, or about 15 miles; which were their three days travel in the wilderneſs, and from thence two hours travel, which were five miles to a winter-torrent called Ouarden; where, it may be ſuppoſed, Moſes encamped and refreſhed his people, and from thence went on to Marah, about the diſtance of 8 hours, or 20 miles ſouthward from the torrent of Ouarden: therefore the name of it is called Marah; from the bitterneſs of the waters, which the word Marah ſignifies; ſee Ruth i. 20.

℣. 24. And the people murmured againſt Moſes, &c.] For bringing them into a wilderneſs where they could find no water fit to drink; ſaying: what ſhall we drink? what ſhall we do for drink? where can we drink? this water is not drinkable, and unleſs we have ſomething to drink, we, and our wives, and children, and ſervants, and cattle, muſt all periſh.

℣. 25. And he cried unto the Lord, &c.] Or prayed, as all the Targums, that God would appear for them, and relieve them in their diſtreſs, or humanly ſpeaking, they muſt all periſh: happy it is to have a God to go to in time of trouble, whoſe hand is not ſhortened that it cannot ſave, nor his ear heavy that he cannot hear: Moſes knew the power of God, and truſted in his faithfulneſs to make good the promiſes to him, and the people, that he would bring them to the land he had ſwore to give them: and the Lord ſhewed him a tree, which when he had caſt into the waters, the waters were made ſweet; what this tree was is not known; if it was in its own nature ſweet, as the author of Eccleſiaſticus ſeems to intimate, when he ſays, ch. xxxviii. 5. was not the water made ſweet with the wood, that its virtue might be known? yet a ſingle tree could never of itſelf ſweeten a flow of water, and ſuch a quantity as was ſufficient for ſo large a number of men and cattle; and therefore, be it what it will, it muſt be owing to a miraculous operation that the waters were made ſweet by it: but the Hebrew writers ſay, the tree was bitter itſelf, and therefore the miracle was the greater: Gorionides [l] ſays, it was wormwood; and both the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem call it the bitter tree, Ardiphne, which Cohen de Lara [m] makes to be the ſame which botaniſts call Rhododaphne or roſe-laurel, and which, he ſays, bears flowers like lilies, which are exceeding bitter, and are poiſon to cattle; and ſo ſays Baal Aruch [n]; and much the ſame has Elias Levita [o]: and this agrees well enough with the myſtical and ſpiritual application that may be made of this; whether theſe bitter waters are conſidered as an emblem of the bitter curſes of the law, for that bitter thing ſin, which makes work for bitter repentance; and for which the law writes bitter things things againſt the ſinner, which, if not prevented, would iſſue in the bitterneſs of death; ſo that a ſenſible ſinner can have nothing to do with it, nor can it yield him any peace or comfort: but Chriſt, the tree of life, being made under the law, and immerſed in ſufferings, the penalty of it, and made a curſe, the law is fulfilled, the curſe and wrath of God removed, the ſinner can look upon it with pleaſure and obey it with delight: or whether theſe may be thought to repreſent the afflictions of God's people, comparable to water for their multitude, and for their overflowing and overwhelming nature, and to bitter ones, being grievous to the fleſh; eſpecially when God hides his face and they are thought to be in wrath: but theſe are ſweetened through the preſence of Chriſt, the ſhedding abroad of his love in the heart, the gracious promiſes he makes and applies, and eſpecially through his bitter ſufferings and death, and the fruits and effects thereof, which ſupport, refreſh, and chear, ſee Heb. xii. 2. 3. there he made a ſtatute and an ordinance; not that he gave them at this time any particular law or precept, whether moral or ceremonial, ſuch as the laws of keeping the ſabbath and honouring of parents, which the Targum of Jonathan mentions [p]; and to which Jarchi adds, that concerning the red heifer: but he gave them a general inſtruction and order concerning their future behaviour; that if they hearkened to his commandments, and yielded obedience to them, it would be well with them, if not, they muſt expect to be chaſtized and afflicted by him, as is obſerved in the following verſe, to which this refers: and there he proved them; the people of Iſrael; by theſe waters being firſt firſt bitter and then ſweetened, whereby he gave them a proof and ſpecimen how it would be with them hereafter; that if they behaved ill they muſt expect the bitter waters of affliction, but if otherwiſe, pleaſant and good things: or, there he proved him [q]; Moſes, his obedience and faith, by ordering him to caſt in the tree he ſhewed him; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt to agree with what follows.

[f] Nat. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 29 [g] Bibliothec. l. 3. p. 172. [h] Geograph. l. 17. p. 553. [i] Travels, p. 314. [k] A Journal from Grand Cairo to Mount Sinai, A. D. 1722. p. 14, 15. [l] Heb. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 38. p. 742. [m] Ir. David, p. 21. [n] Fol. 51. 3. [o] In Methurgeman, fol. 9. 2. [p] So T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 56. 2. Seder Olam Rabba, c. 5. p. 17.

℣. 26. And ſaid, if thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, &c.] By this and the following words, they are prepared to expect a body of laws to be given unto them, as the rule of their future conduct; and though they were delivered from the rigorous laws, bondage, and oppreſſion of the Egyptians, yet they were not to be without law to God, their king, lord, and governor, whoſe voice they were to hearken to in all things he ſhould direct them in: and wilt do that which is right in his ſight; which he ſhall ſee and order, as fit to be done, and which was not to be diſputed and contradicted by them: and wilt give ear to his commandments, and keep all his ſtatutes; whether moral, ceremonial, or judicial, even all that either had been made known to them, or ſhould be hereafter enjoined them; and this at mount Sinai, where they received a body of laws, they promiſed to do; namely, both to hear and to obey, Exod. xxiv. 3, 7. Deut. v. 27. I will put none of theſe diſeaſes upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians; in any of the plagues inflicted on them, which they were witneſſes of; from theſe they ſhould be preſerved, if obedient, but if not they muſt expect them, or what was ſimilar to them, ſee Deut. xxviii. 27. for I am the Lord that healeth thee; both in body and ſoul; in body, by preſerving from diſeaſes, and by curing them when afflicted with them; and in ſoul, by pardoning their iniquities, which, in ſcripture, is ſometimes ſignified by healing, ſee Pſ. ciii. 3. Mal. iv. 2.

℣. 27. And they came to Elim, &c.] On the 25th of Niſan; for, according to Aben Ezra, they ſtayed but one day at Marah. Elim, as a late traveller [r] ſays, was upon the northern ſkirts of the deſart of Sin, two leagues from Tor, and near 30 from Corondel; according to Bunting [s] it was eight miles from Marah: where were 12 wells of water, and 70 palm-trees; and ſo a very convenient, commodious and comfortable place to abide at for a time, ſince here was plenty of water for themſelves and cattle, and ſhady trees to ſit under by turns; for as for the fruit of them, that was not ripe at this time of the year, as Aben Ezra obſerves. Thevenot [t] ſeems to confound the waters here with the waters of Marah; for he ſays, the garden of the monks of Tor is the place, which in holy ſcripture is called Elim, where were 70 palm-trees and 12 wells of bitter water; theſe wells, adds he, are ſtill in being, being near one another, and moſt of them within the precinct of the garden, the reſt are pretty near; they are all hot, and are returned again to their firſt bitterneſs; for I taſted, ſays he, of one of them, where people bathe themſelves, which by the Arabs is called Hammam Mouſe, i. e. the bath of Moſes; it is in a little dark cave: there is nothing in that garden but abundance of palm-trees, which yield ſome rent to the monks, but the 70 old palm-trees are not there now. This does not agree with an obſervation of the aforementioned Jewiſh writer, that palm-trees will not flouriſh in the ground where the waters are bitter; though they delight in watry places, as Pliny [u] ſays; and yet Leo Africanus [w] aſſerts, that in Numidia the dates (the fruit of palm-trees) are beſt in a time of drought. A later traveller [x] tells us, he ſaw no more than nine of the 12 wells that are mentioned by Moſes, the other three being filled up by thoſe drifts of ſand which are common in Arabia; yet this loſs is amply made up by the great increaſe in the palm-trees, the 70 having propagated themſelves into more than 2000; under the ſhade of theſe trees, is the Hammam Mouſe, or bath of Moſes, particularly ſo called, which the inhabitants of Tor have in great veneration, acquainting us, that it was here where the houſhold of Moſes was encamped. Dr. Pocock takes Elim to be the ſame with Corondel; about four hours or ten miles ſouth of Marah, he ſays, is the winter torrent of Corondel, in a very narrow valley, full of tamariſk-trees, where there is tolerable water about half a mile weſt of the road; beyond this, he ſays, about half an hour, or little more than a mile, is a winter torrent called Dieh-Salmeh; and about an hour or two further, i. e. about three or four miles, is the valley or torrent of Wouſſet, where there are ſeveral ſprings of water that are a little ſalt; and he thinks that one of them, but rather Corondel, is Elim, becauſe it is ſaid afterwards, they removed from Elim, and encamped at the Red Sea; and the way to Corondel to go to the valley of Baharum, is part of it near the ſea, where he was informed there was good water, and ſo probably the Iſraelites encamped there; and Dr. Clayton [y] is of the ſame mind, induced by the argument he uſes: a certain traveller [z], in the beginning of the 16th century, tells us, that indeed the wells remain unto this day, but that there is not one palm-tree, only ſome few low ſhrubs; but he could never have been at the right place, or muſt ſay a falſehood, ſince later travellers, who are to be depended upon, ſay the reverſe, as the above quotations ſhew. As to the myſtical application of this paſſage, the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem make the 12 fountains anſwerable to the 12 tribes of Iſrael, and 70 palm-trees to the 70 elders of the Sanhedrin; and ſo Jarchi: and more evangelically the 12 fountains of water may denote the abundance of grace in Chriſt, in whom are the wells of ſalvation, and the ſufficiency of it for all his people; and which the doctrine of the Goſpel, delivered by his 12 apoſtles, diſcovers and reveals, and leads and directs ſouls unto; and the 70 palm-trees may lead us to think of the 70 diſciples ſent out by Chriſt, and all other miniſters of the word, who for their uprightneſs, fruitfulneſs and uſefulneſs, may be compared to palm-trees, as good men in ſcripture are, ſee Pſ. xcii. 12. Cant. vii. 7, 8: and they encamped there by the waters; where they ſtayed, as Aben Ezra thinks, 20 days, ſince in the firſt verſe of the following chapter, they are ſaid to come to the wilderneſs of Sin on the 15th day of the ſecond month; here being every thing agreeable to them for the refreſhment of themſelves and cattle, they pitched their tents and abode a while; as it is right in a ſpiritual ſenſe for the people of God to abide by his word and ordinances.

CHAP.

[q] נסהו tentavit eum, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius, V. L. Tigurine verſion; probavit eum, Vatablus; tentavit ipſum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [r] Shaw, ut ſupra. [s] Travels, p. 82. [t] Travels into the Levant, B. 2. ch. 26. p. 166. [u] Nat. Hiſt. l. 13. c. 4. [w] Deſcriptio Africæ, l. 1. p. 82. [x] Dr. Shaw, ut ſupra. [y] Chronology of the Hebrew Bible, p. 296, 297. [z] Baumgarten. Peregrinatio, l. 1. c. 21. p. 44.

CHAP. XVI.

THIS chapter begins with an account of the journeying of the children of Israel from Elim to the wilderneſs of Sin, where they murmured for want of bread, ℣. 1—3. when the Lord told Moſes that he would rain bread from heaven for them, which Moſes informed them of; and withal, that the Lord took notice of their murmurings, ℣. 4—12. which promiſe the Lord fulfilled; and a deſcription of the bread, and the name of it are given, ℣. 13, 14, 15. and ſome inſtructions are delivered out concerning the quantity of it to be gathered, ℣. 16, 17, 18. the time of gathering and keeping it, ℣. 19—21. the gathering a double quantity on the ſixth day for that and the ſeventh day, with the reaſon of it, ℣. 22—30. and a further deſcription of it, ℣. 31. and an order to preſerve an omer of it in a pot, to be kept for generations to come, that it might be ſeen by them, ℣. 32—34. and the chapter is concluded with obſerving, that this bread was ate by the Iſraelites 40 years, even till they came to the borders of the land of Canaan, and the quantity they ate every day is obſerved what it was, ℣. 35, 36.

℣. 1. And they took their journey from Elim, &c.] And came again to the Red Sea, as appears from Numb. xxxiii. 10. perhaps to ſome bay or creek of it, which ran up from it, and lay in their way, and where for a ſhort time they encamped to look at it, and recollect what had been done for them in bringing them through it; but as their ſtay here was ſhort, and nothing of any importance or conſequence happened, it is here omitted, and their next ſtation is only obſerved: and all the congregation of the children of Iſrael came unto the wilderneſs of Sin; which ſtill bears the ſame name, as a late traveller [a] informs us, who paſſed through it, and ſays, we traverſed theſe plains in nine hours, being all the way diverted with the ſight of a variety of lizards and vipers, that are here in great numbers; and elſewhere [b] he ſays, that vipers, eſpecially in the wilderneſs of Sin, which might very properly be called the inheritance of dragons, were very dangerous and troubleſome, not only our camels, but the Arabs who attended them, running every moment the riſk of being bitten. The Red Sea, or the bay of it, they came to from Elim, according to Bunting [c], was ſix miles, and from thence to the wilderneſs of Sin, 16 more. This is a different wilderneſs from that of Zin, which is written with a different letter, Numb. xx. 1. and was on the other ſide of mount Sinai, as this was the way to it, as follows: which is between Elim and Sinai; according to the above writer [d], it was 22 miles from Elim the Iſraelites travelled, and 40 more ere they came to Sinai. Dr. [e] Shaw ſays, after traverſing the plains in nine hours, we were near 12 hours in paſſing the many windings and difficult ways which lie betwixt thoſe deſarts and theſe of Sinai, the latter conſiſts of a beautiful plain more than a league in breadth, and nearly three in length: on the 15th day of the ſecond month, after their departing out of the land of Egypt; the month Ijar, as the Targum of Jonathan, which anſwers to part of April and part of May, and has its name from the beautifulneſs of the flowers, which appear at this time of the year: the Iſraelites were now come from thence a month or 30 days; for they came out the 15th of Abib or Niſan, and now it was the 15th Ijar; and as the firſt day of this month, as Jarchi ſays, was on the firſt day of the week, this day muſt be ſo likewiſe; and yet ſometimes the Jews ſay [f], this was a ſabbath-day.

℣. 2. And the whole congregation of the children of Iſrael murmured, &c.] For want of bread; for the Targum of Jonathan ſays, that day the dough ceaſed they brought out of Egypt, on which, and the unleavened cakes they had lived 30 days; and for a longer ſpace of time it was not ſufficient, as Joſephus [g], and other Jewiſh writers [h] obſerve; and now it was all ſpent, and they were in the utmoſt diſtreſs for bread, and fall a murmuring as they were uſed to do, when in any diſtreſs, even the whole congregation of them, at leaſt the far greater part; ſome few might be excepted, as Caleb and Joſhua, and ſome others: and they murmured againſt Moſes and Aaron in the wilderneſs; in the wilderneſs of Sin, where they were, and where no corn was to be had to make bread of; and their murmuring was not only againſt Moſes, as before when they wanted water, but againſt Aaron alſo, who were jointly concerned in bringing them out of Egypt. It is a common caſe when things don't go ſo well as to be wiſhed for in church or ſtate, for people to murmur againſt their governors, eccleſiaſtic or civil, and lay all the blame to them.

℣. 3. And the children of Iſrael ſaid unto them, &c.] They not only inwardly murmured, and privately complained among themſelves, but they ſpoke out their complaints, and that in a very extravagant manner: would to God we had died by the hand of the Lord in the land of Egypt; by one of the plagues, or ſome ſuch like plague as were inflicted on the Egyptians, which killed many of them, and particularly the hail-ſtorm and plague on the firſt-born; ſuggeſting that death, even by the hand of the Lord, whether in an ordinary or extraordinary way, was more eligible than their preſent circumſtances: when we ſat by the fleſh-pots, and when we did eat bread to the full; which is an exaggeration of their former circumſtances, and the happineſs of them, in order to aggravate the miſery of their preſent ones; for it can hardly be thought ſtrictly true, that whilſt they were in hard bondage in Egypt, they had often fleſh in their pots, and leiſure-time to ſit and attend them, either the boiling of it in them, or the eating of it when ſerved up in diſhes at the table; which they ſeem to boaſt of, as if they had ſeveral diſhes of meat at table, and ſat in great ſplendor, and took a great deal of time to regale themſelves, and when they indulged themſelves to ſatiety, having fulneſs of bread, and all proviſions: for ye have brought us forth into this wilderneſs, to kill this whole aſſembly with hunger; but there was no danger of that at preſent, ſince they had ſo many flocks and herds with them; tho' indeed ſo large a number would ſoon have ate them up, and which could not ſo comfortably be fed upon without bread; and beſides, theſe they did not chuſe to ſlay, unleſs under great neceſſity, which they reſerved for ſacrifice, and for an increaſe.

℣.

[a] Shaw, p. 314. [b] Ib. p. 444. [c] Travels, p. 82. [d] Ib. [e] Travels, p. 314. [f] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 87. 2. [g] Antiq. l. 2. c. 15. §. 1. [h] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 5. p. 17.

℣. 4. Then ſaid the Lord unto Moſes, &c.] Who no doubt had been praying to him, as was his uſual manner, when the people were in diſtreſs and complained, and was heard and anſwered by him: behold, I will rain bread from heaven for you; tho' they were a murmuring, rebellious and ungrateful people, the Lord dealt kindly and bountifully with them; he did not rain fire and brimſtone upon them, as on Sodom and Gomorrah, nor ſnares and an horrible tempeſt, as on the wicked; but what was deſirable by them, and ſuitable to their preſent circumſtances, even bread, which was what they wanted, and this ready prepared; for though they did dreſs it in different ways, yet it might be eat without any preparation at all; and this it was promiſed ſhould be rained down upon them, there ſhould be great plenty of it; it ſhould come as thick and as faſt as a ſhower of rain, and lie around their camp ready at hand to take up; and this ſhould not ſpring out of the earth as bread-corn does, but come down from heaven; and being ſuch a wonderful thing, a behold is prefixed unto it, denoting the marvelloufneſs of it, as well as exciting attention to what was ſaid: our Lord may ſeem to contradict this, when he ſays, Moſes gave you not that bread from heaven, John vi. 32. but the reconciliation is eaſy; for not to obſerve that it was God, and not Moſes, that gave this bread, ſo tho' it came from the airy heavens, and along with the dew of it, where it was prepared perhaps by the miniſtry of angels, and therefore called the corn of heaven, and angels bread, Pſ. lxxviii. 24, 25. yet it came not from the heaven of heavens, the third heaven, from whence the true bread, the antitype of this, came, even our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf: and the people ſhall go out, and gather a certain rate of it every day; or the thing of the day in its day [i], the bread day by day; to which our Lord may be thought to allude, when he directs his diſciples to pray, give us this day our daily bread; as this would be rained every morning, the people were to go out of the camp, and gather it up for their daily uſe, and which was to be done every day: that I may prove them, whether they will walk in my law or no; by this ſingle inſtance of their obedience to his will in going out every morning to gather their bread, that ſhould be rained for them, he propoſed to try and prove their obedience to his law in all other reſpects; what regard would be had to it when it ſhould be given, and what might be expected from them, and likewiſe whether they would depend upon his providence in this caſe alſo.

℣. 5. And it ſhall come to paſs, that on the ſixth day, &c.] Of the week, and from the raining of the bread, which was on the firſt day of the week: they ſhall prepare that which they bring in; the Targum of Jonathan adds, to eat on the ſabbath-day; what they did not conſume on the ſixth day was to be prepared and reſerved for the ſeventh day; that is, it was to be baked or boiled as they thought fit to have it, or eat it as it was, which they pleaſed, ſee ℣. 23. only one part of it was to be kept till the next day: and it ſhall be twice as much as they gather daily; on that day ſhould be rained double what fell on other days, and ſo twice as much ſhould be gathered up; the reaſon for which is not here mentioned, but afterwards given; though Moſes no doubt was now made acquainted with it, or otherwiſe he could not have informed the princes and people of it, as he afterwards did, ℣. 23, 25, 26, 29.

℣. 6. And Moſes and Aaron ſaid unto all the children of Iſrael, &c.] That is, Aaron ſpoke in the name of Moſes to them, he being his ſpokeſman, appointed of God to ſpeak for him, and both ſpoke to them as from the Lord: at even, then ye ſhall know that the Lord hath brought you out from the land of Egypt; that they were brought out they knew, but they make this to be an act and deed of Moſes and Aaron, ℣. 3. whereas it was the work of the Lord; and at evening they ſhould have a freſh proof of it, and that they were not brought forth to be killed with hunger, as they complained, by the quails coming up and covering their camp, whereby they would have fleſh to eat, ℣. 12.

℣. 7. And in the morning, then ye ſhall ſee the glory of the Lord, &c.] Either as diſplayed in this wonderful affair, raining bread about their tents, which was in the morning, or elſe as it appeared in the cloud, ℣. 10. the latter ſenſe ſeems to be confirmed by what follows: for that he; the glory of the Lord, the glorious Shekinah of Jehovah, the angel that went before them in the cloud, the eternal Word and Son of God: heareth your murmurings againſt the Lord; againſt Jehovah his Father; ſee Gen. xix. 24: and what are we, that ye murmur againſt us? either ſignifying that there was no reaſon for it, and no occaſion of it, ſince not they, but the Lord, brought them out of Egypt, and into thoſe circumſtances; what they did was only by his command, and with a view for their good, and therefore it was both unreaſonable and ungrateful in them to murmur againſt them; or as obſerving, that ſeeing they murmured againſt the Lord, it was no ſtrange thing to them they ſhould murmur againſt them, and therefore took it the more quietly and patiently.

℣. 8. And Moſes ſaid, this ſhall be, &c.] Which ſupplement may be left out: when the Lord ſhall give you in the evening fleſh to eat; cauſe the quails to come up, and fall about their tents: and in the morning bread to the full; by raining it from heaven all around them: for that, or rather then [k] the Lord heareth your murmurings which ye murmur againſt him; it will then appear that he has heard them, and taken notice of them, by giving them bread and fleſh, they complained of the want of; and yet did not reſent in a way of wrath and diſpleaſure their murmurings, but kindly, bountifully, and in a moſt marvellous manner provided for them, which was acting like himſelf, a God gracious and merciful: and what are we? that we ſhould be the objects of your reſentment, and be murmured at, and complained of, who had done nothing to deſerve ſuch treatment: your murmurings are not againſt us, but againſt the Lord; not only againſt them, but againſt the Lord alſo; or not ſo much againſt them as againſt the Lord, whoſe meſſengers and miniſters they were, and whom they repreſented, obeyed and ſerved: thus whatever is done to the miniſters of Chriſt, he reckons as done to the Father, and to himſelf, Luke x. 16. 1 Theſſ. iv. 8.

℣. 9. And Moſes ſpake unto Aaron, &c.] Who was his prophet and ſpokeſman to the people: ſay unto all the congregations of the children of Iſrael; to the heads of them, to as many as could conveniently hear him, and were to report what he ſaid to the reſt: come near before the Lord; who was in the pillar of cloud, which from the firſt appearance of it never removed from them, nor the Lord from that; though ſome have thought, that before the taber-

[i] דבר יום ביומו rem diei in die ſuo, Pagninus, Montanus, Munſter, Vatablus, Fagius, Druſius. Tigurine verſion.

[k] בישמיע teſtabitur ſe audiſſe,

tabernacle was built, there was ſome ſmall tent or little tabernacle where the Shekinah was; but for this there is no foundation, there is for the other ſuggeſted: for he hath heard your murmurings; which is repeated again and again, to obſerve to them the evil of it, and what notice the Lord took of it, though he indulged them in ſo gracious a manner he did.

℣. 10. And it came to paſs, as Aaron ſpoke to the whole congregation of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Before he had well done ſpeaking: that they looked toward the wilderneſs; they were already in the wilderneſs of Sin, and they looked ſtrait forward toward that part of it which was yet before them, or to the wilderneſs of Sinai, which was right onward, and whither they were travelling: and behold, the glory of the Lord appeared in the cloud; which went before them; there was a more than common brightneſs in it, an effulgence and beam of light and glory ſhining in it. Chriſt the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, appeared in it, in ſome viſible diſplays of his majeſty, which made it very obſervable to them.

℣. 11. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Out of the bright and glorious cloud: ſaying; as follows:

℣. 12. I have heard the murmurings of the children of Iſrael, &c.] This Moſes and Aaron had often affirmed, and now the Lord confirms what they had ſaid, and lets them know that he took notice of their murmurings, and diſapproved of them, and was diſpleaſed with them; though he did not think fit to reſent them in an angry way, but dealt kindly and graciouſly with them; and ſince he had brought them into a wilderneſs, which was his own act, he would take care of them, and provide for them; which they might reaſonably conclude he would, ſince he had done ſo many great and good things for them, in bringing them out of Egypt, and through the Red Sea, and had ſlain all their enemies, and had given them water when in diſtreſs, and therefore need not have murmured nor have doubted but that he would give them bread alſo: ſpeak unto them, ſaying, at even ye ſhall eat fleſh; meaning that very evening, when the quails came up, as the following verſe ſhews: and in the morning ye ſhall be filled with bread; the next morning, when the manna fell around their camp, ſo that they had bread, and fulneſs of it: and ye ſhall know that I am the Lord your God; good and gracious, kind and merciful, ever mindful of his covenant and promiſes, able to ſupply their wants, and provide them with every thing neceſſary and ſufficient for them.

℣. 13. And it came to paſs, that at even the quails came up, &c.] From the coaſts of Egypt, from the Red Sea, over which they flew; and being evening, and weary with flying ſo long, lighted and ſettled where the Iſraelites encamped. Joſephus[1] ſays about the Arabian gulf, there are more of this ſort of birds than any other, which flying over the ſea, and being weary, and coming nearer the ground than other birds, and lighting among the Hebrews, they took them with their hands as food prepared for them of God. The Targum of Jonathan calls them pheaſants; ſome think they were locuſts; but of this ſee more on Numb. xi. 31. Theſe here ſeem to have come up one evening only, whereas in the place referred to, they had them a whole month together: and covered the camp; their numbers were ſo many, as indeed ſuch a prodigious company of people as thoſe were, required a great number to ſatisfy them with. Theſe quails which were ſent in the evening, at the cloſe of the day; were an emblem of worldly things, which are not the portion of the ſaints and people of God, what they are to live upon, and take up their ſatisfaction in; nor are they abiding but tranſitory things, which come and go, make themſelves wings and fly away toward heaven: and in the morning the dew lay round about the hoſt; the camp of Iſrael; or a lay of dew[m], an emblem of the grace of God, and the bleſſings of it, ſee Hoſ. xiv. 6.

℣. 14. And when the dew that lay was gone up, &c.] Exhaled by the ſun upon the riſing of it: behold, upon the face of the wilderneſs; upon the ſurface of it, all around the camp of Iſrael: there lay a ſmall round thing, as ſmall as the hoar froſt on the ground; which is what is in the next verſe called manna. Before the ſun roſe there was nothing but a dew to be ſeen; when that was gone off through the force of the ſun then the manna appeared; which was but a ſmall thing, and very unpromiſing for food, and eſpecially for ſuch a vaſt number of people; and a round thing, for which it is after compared to a coriander ſeed, as is thought; though the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan don't interpret the word of the round form, but rather refer to its ſmallneſs; and which is expreſſed in the Vulgate Latin verſion, "ſmall, and "as if beat with a peſtle;" and for its white colour, as well as its ſmalneſs, it looked like hoar froſt on the ground. Jarchi ſays there were two dews, within which it lay as ſomething covered in a box, and he ſeems to be right; for it is certain from Numb. xi. 9. that there was a dew which fell firſt, and then the manna fell upon it; and from hence it is plain alſo, that there was a dew over the manna, which went up from it when the ſun roſe: and the deſign of this ſeems to be to keep this heavenly bread pure and clean for the Iſraelites, that it might neither partake of the duſt or ſand of the wilderneſs where it fell, and that nothing might light upon it until the time of gathering it came. The Jews, in memory of this, will ſometimes put bread upon the table between two table-cloths[n]; and it is highly probable, that to this the alluſion is of the hidden manna in Rev. ii. 17. by which is meant our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the antitype of this manna, as will be obſerved as we paſs on, in all the circumſtances of it: the manna came with the dew, and was covered with it, and hid in it; Chriſt is the gift of God's free grace to the ſons of men, and is exhibited in the word of grace, where he lies hid to men in the glory of his perſon, and the fulneſs of his grace, until revealed and made known. The figure of the manna being round, which is a perfect figure, may denote the perfection of Chriſt in his perſon, natures and office; he being perfectly God and perfectly man, having all the eſſential perfections both of the divine and human natures in him, as well as all fulneſs of grace; and being made perfect through ſufferings, is become a compleat Saviour, and by his blood, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice has perfected for ever his ſanctified ones: and the manna being ſmall, may ſignify the meanneſs of Chriſt in the eyes of men in his ſtate of humiliation, and the unpromiſing appearance he made of being the Saviour and King of

[1] Antiq. l. 3. c. 1. §. 5.

[m] שכבת הטל cubatio roris, Montanus, Piſcator, Cartwright; accubitus roris, Druſius; ſitus vel ſtramentum roris, Munſter.

[n] Vid. Fagium in loc.

of Iſrael; the white colour of it may direct to the purity of Chriſt, to the holineſs of his natures, and the beauty of his perſon, being white and ruddy, the chiefeſt among ten thouſands.

℣. 15. And when the children of Iſrael ſaw it, &c.] As they could not but obſerve it, it being ſpread over the face of the wilderneſs; and beſides, as they were told, that in the morning they ſhould have bread to the full, they were up early to look after it: they ſaid one to another, it is manna; not ſuch as is known by that name now, which is only uſed in medicine; nor any thing that was then known by any ſuch name; but ſo they called it, becauſe it was, as Jarchi ſays, a preparation of food, or food ready prepared for them, from מנה Manah, which ſignifies to appoint, prepare and diſtribute, ſee Dan. i. 5, 10. ſo Chriſt is appointed of God, and prepared in his purpoſes and decrees, and delivered out by his grace as proper food for his people, who have every one their portion in due ſeaſon: for Kimchi and Ben Melech give the ſenſe of the word, a gift and portion from God; and ſuch is Chriſt, the gift of his grace, and an unſpeakable one. Some think theſe words were ſpoken by the Iſraelites on firſt ſight of the manna, by way of queſtion, Man hu, what is it? and ſo Joſephus [o] ſays it ſignifies in their language; but it does not appear that the word is ſo uſed in the Hebrew tongue, though it might in the Syriac or Chaldee, which was more in uſe in the times of Joſephus. But it can hardly be thought that the Iſraelites could ſpeak in either of theſe dialects at this time; it is much more probable what others ſay, that it ſo ſignifies in the Egyptian tongue; and it is not at all to be wondered at that Iſrael, juſt come out of Egypt, ſhould uſe an Egyptian word: and this beſt agrees with the reaſon that follows, for they wiſt not what it was; which contradicts our verſion; for if they knew not what it was, how came they to call it manna? but taking the above words as an interrogation, aſking one another what it was? theſe come in very pertinently, and aſſign a reaſon of the queſtion, becauſe they were ignorant of it, having never ſeen any ſuch thing before; and this ſenſe is confirmed by what Moſes ſays in the next clauſe, telling them what it was: and thus Chriſt is unknown to his own people, until he is revealed unto them; not by fleſh and blood, by carnal reaſon, or carnal men, but by the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of him; and he remains always unknown to natural men, tho' ever ſo wiſe and prudent: and Moſes ſaid unto them, this is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eat; which he had promiſed them the day before, and which he had now rained in plenty about them; and which they had as a free gift of his without any merit and deſert of theirs, and without their labour, diligence and induſtry, and which they had now power from him to eat of freely and plentifully.

℣. 16. This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded, &c.] Reſpecting the gathering of it, the rule or rules he would have obſerved concerning that, as follows: gather of it every man according to his eating; according to his appetite, and according to the appetites of thoſe that were in his family, as much as they can all eat; and that they may have enough, the particular quantity is fixed for each of them. This act of gathering, in the myſtical ſenſe, may reſpect the exerciſe of faith on Chriſt, laying hold of him as he is held forth in the word, receiving him, and feeding upon him with a ſpiritual appetite, and that freely, largely, plentifully, and encouraging others to do the ſame: an omer for every man; or head, or by poll [p]; they were to take the poll of their families, the number of them, and reckon to every head, or aſſign to every man, ſuch a meaſure of the manna, and which was ſufficient for a man of the keeneſt appetite; what this meaſure was, ſee the note on ℣. 36. This muſt be underſtood not of ſucking infants, and ſuch that were ſick and infirm, and of poor appetites, that could not feed upon and digeſt ſuch ſort of food, only of thoſe that could: according to the number of your perſons, take ye every man for them which are in his tent; this was to be done after it was gathered and brought in, either by certain overſeers of this affair, or heads of families, who according to the number of thoſe that were in their tents, who were eaters of ſuch ſort of food, was to take an omer of it for every one of them.

℣. 17. And the children of Iſrael did ſo, &c.] They went out of the camp in the morning when it was fallen, and gathered it; which is expreſſive of believers going out of the camp, leaving the world, and all behind them for Chriſt; and of their going out of themſelves to him, and of their going in and out, and finding paſture and food for their ſouls in him to live upon: and gather ſome more, ſome leſs; ſome that were more robuſt and ſtrong, that were more active and diligent, gathered in more than others; which may denote the different degree and exerciſe of faith in God's people; ſome are ſtrong in it, and others weak; ſome attain to a greater degree of knowledge of Chriſt, and receive more grace from him, and have more ſpiritual peace, joy and comfort in believing, and others leſs; ſee Rom. xv. 1, 13.

℣. 18. And when they did mete it with an omer, &c.] What was gathered in; and every one had his meaſure, his omer dealt out to him by thoſe that meted or meaſured it: he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack; when their gatherings were put together in one heap, and each had his omer meaſured out to him; he that had gathered more than an omer had no more allotted to him, and he that gathered not ſo much as an omer, yet had a full one meaſured out to him: or he, that is, Moſes, did not cauſe him to abound [q], that gathered much, he had no more for his ſhare than another; nor ſuffer him to want [r] that gathered little, ſo that they all had alike; which ſhows, that though there may be different exerciſes of grace, yet it is the ſame grace in all; all have alike precious faith, and an equal intereſt in Chriſt, the object of it; all are equally redeemed by his precious blood, and juſtified by his righteouſneſs, and have their ſins forgiven on the foot of his atonement; all have the ſame Chriſt, and the ſame bleſſings of grace, and are intitled to the ſame eternal glory and happineſs. The apoſtle quotes this paſſage, and applies it to that equality there ſhould be among chriſtians in acts of beneficence and charity, that what is wanting in the one through poverty, may be made up by the riches of others, 2 Cor. viii. 14, 15: they gathered every man according to his eating; according to the number of perſons he had to eat of it; there always was, upon an average, ſome gathering more and others leſs, an omer gathered and diſtributed to to every perſon. Jarchi takes this to be a miracle, that nothing ſhould ever be wanting of an omer to a man; and ſo Aben Ezra obſerves, that the ancients ſay this is a miracle.

[o] Antiq. l. 3. c. 1. §. 6. [p] לגלגלת ad caput, Montanus; pro capite, Fagius, Druſius, Cartwright; ſo Ainſworth. [q] העדיף & non abundare fecit, Montanus. [r] לא החסיר non minoravit, Montanus; non defuit, Tigurine verſion.

℣. 19. And Moſes ſaid unto them, &c.] At the ſame time he gave the direction to them about gathering it, and meaſuring out to every man an omer: let no man leave of it until the morning; not that every man was bound to eat up the quantity diſtributed to him; he might give what he could not eat to thoſe that could eat more, if there were any ſuch; or he might give it to his cattle, or caſt it away, but he was not to reſerve it until the next day for his uſe; which was to teach him that God would beſtow this benefit and bleſſing on him daily, and he might expect it, whoſe mercies are new every morning; and to inſtruct him to live every day upon the providence of God for his daily food; as indeed every man ought to do ſo, let his circumſtances be ever ſo affluent; and in a more ſpiritual and evangelic ſenſe, it teaches believers to live continually every day by faith on Chriſt, and to ſay day by day, Lord, ever more give us this bread, John vi. 34.

℣. 20. Notwithſtanding they hearkened not unto Moſes, &c.] That is, not all of them, ſome of them did, and perhaps the far greater part of them: but ſome of them left it until the morning; out of diſtruſt, for fear they ſhould have none the next day; being men of little faith, that could not truſt God for a ſupply for the morrow: the Targum of Jonathan ſays, theſe were Dathan and Abiram; and ſo Jarchi: and it bred worms, and ſtank; or by an hyſteron proteron and tranſpoſition of the words, the ſenſe may be, that it ſtank, corrupted, and putrified, and ſo produced worms, in which order the words lie, ℣. 24. and this was not from the nature of the manna to breed worms ſo ſoon, but God ſo ordering and diſpoſing it, that it ſhould do ſo; for otherwiſe it would keep to another day, as what was gathered on the ſixth day kept to the ſeventh, and there was a part of it kept for many ages, ſee ℣. xxiv.—xxxiii. and ſince the manna was of the meat-kind, perhaps thoſe worms it bred might be of the weevil ſort, as Scheuchzer conjectures[a]: and Moſes was wroth with them; for breaking the commandment of God.

℣. 21. And they gathered it every morning, &c.] From the time the morning began, during four hours, or to the 4th hour, as the Targum of Jonathan; that is, till ten o'clock in the morning: this was a very wonderful thing that bread ſhould be provided and rained every morning about the camp of Iſrael, in ſuch plenty as to be ſufficient to feed ſuch a vaſt body of people; and that for 40 years together: every man according to his eating; according to the number of perſons he had in his family to eat of it, and as much as every one could eat; there never was any lack or ſcarcity of it, but every morning there it was for them, and they gathered it, an omer for every one: and when the ſun waxed hot, it melted; and ſo what was left ungathered, being exhaled by the ſun and laid up in the clouds, generated and increaſed, and became a proviſion to be let down the next morning; it being the will of God that it ſhould not be trampled upon or expoſed; and that the Iſraelites might be diligent, and not neglect the time of gathering it: and the Targum of Jonathan ſays, from the fourth hour, or ten o'clock and onward, the ſun was hot upon it and melted it, which is the time of day when the ſun is hotteſt: and ſome things we may obſerve, are hardened by the ſun, and others are ſoftened, as the manna was, even to a liquefaction; though otherwiſe it was of ſo hard a nature as to be beaten in a mortar and ground in a mill, Numb. xi. 8.

℣. 22. And it came to paſs, that on the ſixth day, &c.] Of the week, or from the firſt raining of the manna, which was the ſame: they gathered twice as much bread; as they had uſed to do on other days, a greater quantity falling, and which was more eaſily taken up: two omers for one man; or, inſtead of one[b], of one omer; ſo it turned out when they came to meaſure what they had gathered; otherwiſe they had no intention in gathering it, but lying in a great quantity, they gathered as as much as they could, or could well carry, and upon meaſuring it ſo it proved; for it does not appear that Moſes had as yet acquainted them what was to be, or would be gathered on this day; nor had he any orders ſo to do from the Lord, only he was told by him that ſo it would be, and accordingly it came to paſs, ſee ℣. 5. and all the rulers of the congregation came and told Moſes; what had happened, that the people that day had gathered as much more as they had uſed to do on other days: theſe ſeem to be the overſeers of this affair, before whom what was gathered was brought, and in whoſe preſence it was meaſured, and who took care that every one ſhould have his omer and no more: this makes it plain that the people acted without deſign, and knew not that they were to gather on this day double to other days; ſince the rulers knew nothing of it, nor of the reaſon of it, and it can hardly be imagined that the people ſhould know and the rulers be ignorant.

℣. 23. And he ſaid unto them, this is that which the Lord hath ſaid, &c.] Which he had ſaid to Moſes privately, for as yet, he had ſaid it to none elſe: to-morrow is the reſt of the holy ſabbath unto the Lord; according to Jarchi, the rulers aſked Moſes, what this day was, different from other days, that double the quantity ſhould be gathered? from whence, he ſays, we learn, that Moſes had not as yet declared the ſabbath to them; and this is indeed the firſt time we read of one; and though as there was divine worſhip before, there muſt be times for it; but as there was as yet no certain place for worſhip, ſo no certain time for it, but as it was appointed by the heads of families, or as more families might agree unto and unite in; at leaſt no day before this appears to be a day of reſt from ſervile labour, as well as for holy uſe and ſervice: bake that which ye will bake, to-day, and ſeethe that ye will ſeethe; the phraſe to-day, is not in the text, and not neceſſarily ſupplied; the ſenſe being plainly this, that they might take and boil what they would, and dreſs as much of the manna as they pleaſed, and eat what they would, but not that they were to bake and boil for the next day; for it is clear by what follows, that the manna of the next day was not dreſſed either way, for then it would be no wonder that it did not ſtink; and as yet the law for not kindling a fire on the ſabbath-day was not given; and therefore, for aught to the contrary, they might roaſt or ſeethe on that day or eat it as it was, as they themſelves thought fit: and that which remaineth over; what they did not bake, nor ſeethe, nor eat: lay up for you to be kept until the morning; whereas on other days they were to leave nothing of it till the morning, but deſtroy it or caſt it away, whatever was left un-eaten.

℣.

[a] Phyſica ſacra, vol. 2. p. 179.

[b] לאחד pro uno, Tigurine verſion.

℣. 24. And they laid it up until the morning, as Moſes bade, &c.] What was left of two omers a man, what they had neither baked nor boiled: and it did not ſtink, neither was there any worm therein; which was the caſe; when it was left or laid up on other days; and it ſhewed that there was an interpoſition of divine providence in the keeping of it to this day, and clearly confirmed it to be the will of God that this day ſhould henceforward be to them the reſt of the holy ſabbath.

℣. 25. And Moſes ſaid, eat that to-day, &c.] That is, he ſaid this on the ſeventh day in the morning, and bid them eat of it whether boiled or ſeethed, or as it was, or juſt as they pleaſed; however they had liberty to eat of it, and indeed they had no other, becauſe none fell on this day: for to-day is a ſabbath unto the Lord; a time of reſt from labour, and to be employed in the ſervice of the Lord: to-day ye ſhall not find it in the field; ſhould they ſeek for it, which they had no occaſion to do, ſince there was a ſufficiency provided the day before; and this he ſaid to prevent their going out to ſeek for it, which, if out of curioſity or for any other reaſon any of them ſhould do, it would be in vain and fruitleſs.

℣. 26. Six days ye ſhall gather it, &c.] Day after day, every morning, as they had done the ſix days paſt, ſo they ſhould during their ſtay in the wilderneſs: but on the ſeventh day, which is the ſabbath; which is repeated being a new thing, to impreſs it on their minds: in it there ſhall be none; no manna; none ſhall fall, and ſo none can be gathered, and therefore it would be to no purpoſe to go out and ſeek for it; as alſo there would be no need of it, ſince they would always have a double portion on the ſixth day.

℣. 27. And it came to paſs, &c.] Perhaps the next ſeventh day following: that there went out ſome of the people for to gather; to gather manna, as on other days; which they did not through want of proviſion or a greedy appetite, for they had bread every day, and on that day to the full, but to gratify their curioſity, or to ſee whether the words of Moſes ſtood, as Aben Ezra expreſſes it; that is, whether what he ſaid was true, or came to paſs, that there ſhould be none, and they ſhould not be able to find any on that day, and ſo it was: and they found none; no manna; in the places where they uſed to find it in plenty on other days.

℣. 28. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] Who had ſeen and taken notice of what thoſe men had done, who went out into the field to ſeek for manna on the ſeventh day, and was diſpleaſed with it, and therefore ſpoke to Moſes out of the cloud: how long refuſe ye to keep my commandments and my laws? this is not ſaid merely with reſpect to their breach of the commandment of the ſabbath, as if they had long refuſed to obſerve and keep that; whereas that was but one command, and but juſt given; but upon their breach of that, he takes occaſion to upbraid them with their former tranſgreſſions of other laws of his, and which they had continued in, or at leaſt were frequently committing; and which was a proof of their perverſeneſs and rebellion againſt him, though he was ſo kind and bountiful to them.

℣. 29. See, for that the Lord hath given you the ſabbath, &c.] Theſe are either the words of Jehovah, the angel of the Lord, out of the cloud continued; or the words of Moſes to the children of Iſrael, upon what the Lord had ſaid to him, and would have them obſerve and take notice, that whereas the Lord had given them a ſabbath, or enjoined them a day of reſt: therefore he giveth you on the ſixth day the bread of two days; wherefore they had no occaſion to go out in ſearch of manna, as well as it was a vain thing to do it; and eſpecially as it was againſt a command of God, and being ungrateful in them, as there was ſuch a proviſion made for them: abide ye every man in his place; in his tent for that day, giving himſelf up to religious exerciſes, to pray and praiſe, inſtruct his family, and in all things ſerve the Lord he was directed to: let no man go out of his place on the ſeventh day; not beyond two thouſand cubits, as the Targum of Jonathan, which is the ſpace the Jews generally fix upon for a man to walk on a ſabbath-day, ſo far he might go and no further; and which perhaps is the ſame ſpace as is called a ſabbath-day's journey, Acts i. 12. ſee the note there.

℣. 30. So the people reſted on the ſeventh day.] Did not attempt to go out of their tents in queſt of manna, as on other days, and obſerved it as a day of reſt from labour, and ſo they continued to do in ſucceſſive generations.

℣. 31. And the houſe of Iſrael called the name thereof manna, &c.] For till now they had given it no name; which ſhews that the words are not to be read as we render them in ℣. 15. it is manna, unleſs this is to be conſidered as a confirmation of that name; but rather as an interrogation, what is it? though, from thence, man being the firſt word they made uſe of on ſight of it, might ſo call it; or as others, from its being now an appointed, prepared portion and gift, which they every day enjoyed, ſee the note on ℣. 15. and it was like coriander-ſeed, white; that the colour of the manna was white is not only here aſſerted, but is plain from other paſſages, it being like the hoar-froſt, which is white, ℣. 14. and its colour is the colour of bdellium, Numb. xi. 17. or pearl, which is of a white, bright colour, as the word is interpreted by the Jews; and who ſay [u], that the manna was round as a coriander-ſeed, and white as a pearl; but then if it is here compared to the coriander-ſeed on that account, ſome other ſeed than what we call coriander-ſeed muſt be meant, ſince that is of a darkiſh colour; though it is thought by moſt, that the compariſon with it is not on account of the colour, but its form being round, as a coriander-ſeed is, and as the manna is ſaid to be, ℣. 14. Joſephus [w] thinks, it is compared to the coriander-ſeed for its being about the bigneſs of that ſeed; tho' I muſt confeſs, it ſeems to me to be compared to the coriander-ſeed for its colour, and therefore Gad, the word uſed, muſt ſignify ſomething elſe than what we call coriander-ſeed; but what that is, is not eaſy to ſay: Ben Gerſom is of the ſame mind, and thinks it refers to colour, and fancies, that Gad had his name from his whiteneſs, Gen. xxx. 11. Artapanus [x] the heathen, makes mention of this food of the Jews in the wilderneſs, where, he ſays, they were 30 years; during which time, God rained upon them meal like to panic (a ſort of grain like millet) in colour almoſt as white as ſnow: and the taſte of it was like wafers made with honey; or cakes that had honey mixed in them; though in Numb. xi. 8. the taſte of it is ſaid to be as the taſte of freſh oil, which Saadiah Gaon, Aben Ezra, and others account for thus; that if a man eat of it as it came down, it was as cakes of honey, but when when dreſſed, it was as the taſte of freſh oil; however, it was very palatable and agreeable to the taſte: honey that drops from palm-trees is ſaid to be not much different in taſte from oil: the Jews [y] have a notion that there were all kinds of taſtes in the manna, ſuited to the ages and appetites of perſons, and that as they would have it, ſo it taſted; which notion the author of the book of Wiſdom ſeems to give into, ch. xvi. 20, 21. Leo Africanus [z] ſpeaks of a ſort of manna found in great plenty in the deſerts in Libya, which the inhabitants gather in veſſels every morning to carry to market, and which being mixed with water is drank for delight, and being put into broth has a very refreſhing virtue: of the round form and white colour of manna as applicable to Chriſt, notice has been taken on ℣. 14. and the ſweetneſs of its taſte well agrees with him the antitype: his perſon is ſo to them who have taſted that the Lord is gracious; his word or goſpel is ſweeter than the honey or the honey-comb; his mouth is moſt ſweet, the doctrines that proceed from it, and the exceeding great and precious promiſes of it; his fruits and the bleſſings of his grace, peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, &c. are ſweet to thoſe that ſit under his ſhadow, where faith often feeds ſweetly and with delight upon him.

[u] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 75. 1. [w] Antiq. l. 3. c. 1. §. 6. [x] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 27. p. 436.

℣. 32. And Moſes ſaid, &c.] At another time, though it is here inſerted to give the account of the manna all together: this is the thing which the Lord commandeth; namely, what follows: fill an omer of it to be kept for your generations; which was the quantity allowed a man every day; this meaſure was to be laid up, and reſerved for poſterity in future generations, not to eat, nor ſo much as taſte of, for then it would ſoon have been gone, but to look at, as follows: that they may ſee the bread wherewith I have fed you in the wilderneſs, when I brought you out of the land of Egypt; that they might ſee what ſort of food was provided for them, and what quantity each man had of it every day; and ſo have an ocular proof of the wiſdom, power, and goodneſs of God, in providing for their ſupport in a wilderneſs, where no ſupplies were to be had; and when they were juſt come out of an enemy's country: thus Chriſt is the food of his people, whilſt they are in the wilderneſs of this world; and is never ſo until they are brought out of the ſtate of nature's darkneſs and bondage, like that of the Egyptians; and who, being the food of the ſaints in ages paſt, is preſented to the eye of faith, for its encouragement to look to him and believe in him, receive, embrace, and feed upon him.

℣. 33. And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, take a pot, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan calls it an earthen pot; and ſo Jarchi; which if it could be ſupported, might be conſidered as an emblem of the miniſters of the word, in whom, as in earthen veſſels, the goſpel of Chriſt is put: Aben Ezra ſays, it was a veſſel either of earth or braſs, which latter is more likely for duration; ſince an earthen veſſel can hardly be ſuppoſed to continue ſo long as this did, and much leſs a glaſs pot, as others take it to be: but the Septuagint verſion renders it a golden pot; and ſo it is ſaid to be by Philo the Jew [a], and which is confirmed by the apoſtle, Heb. ix. 4. and which puts the thing out of queſtion; and this may denote the word and ordinances which retain and hold forth Chriſt as the bread of life, and are a memorial of him, as evidently ſet forth, crucified and ſlain, to future ages, comparable to gold; both for the preciouſneſs of them, being more to be deſired than gold, yea than fine gold, and for the duration of them, they being to continue until the ſecond coming of Chriſt: and put an omer full of manna therein; the manna, and the full meaſure of it, according to a man's eating, was to be put into it, denoting that a full Chriſt, or Chriſt in all the fulneſs of his perſon and grace, is to be held forth in the word and ordinances to the eye of faith: and lay it up before the Lord, to be kept for your generations; in a place where the Lord would hereafter fix the ſymbol of his preſence, the ark, cherubim, and mercy-ſeat; and may ſignify the preſence of Chriſt with his father, the efficacy of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, his mediation and interceſſion; for he is not only held forth in the word, for faith to look at, but he is before the throne as though he had been ſlain, Rev. v. 6.

℣. 34. As the Lord commanded Moſes, ſo Aaron laid it up before the teſtimony, to be kept.] That is, before the ark of the teſtimony; when that was made, as it was in a little time after this, called the teſtimony, becauſe it contained in it the law, which was a teſtimony or teſtification of the mind and will of God unto Iſrael, ſee ch. xxv. 16, 21, 22. the apoſtle ſays, the pot of manna was in the ark, Heb. ix. 4. that is, on one ſide of it, ſee the note there.

℣. 35. And the children of Iſrael eat manna forty years, &c.] Wanting 30 days, as Jarchi obſerves; reckoning from their coming out of Egypt, and the paſſover they kept there, to their coming to the borders of the land of Canaan to Gilgal, and keeping the paſſover there, when the manna ceaſed, were juſt 40 years; but then they had been out of Egypt a month before the manna fell; but the round number is given as is common: it was on the 16th of Iyar the ſecond month, the manna fell; and it was in the month of Niſan, about the 16th or 17th of the month that it ceaſed, ſee Joſh. v. 10, 11. 12. until they come to a land inhabited; where the ground was cultivated, and corn was produced to make bread of, which could not be had in a wilderneſs; and therefore God graciouſly provided for them every day, and fed them with manna till they came to ſuch a place: they did eat manna, until they came to the borders of the land of Canaan; that is, Gilgal: the Targum of Jonathan is, "they eat manna forty years in the life of "Moſes, until they came unto the land of habita-"tion; they eat manna forty days after his death, "until they paſſed over Jordan, and entered the "extremities of the land of Canaan:" ſome have thought this verſe was not written by Moſes, but Joſhua, or ſome other hand after his death, ſince he did not live quite to the ceſſation of the manna; which need not be much diſputed or objected to; though it may be conſidered that Moſes led Iſrael to the borders of the land of Canaan, though he did not go with them ſo far as Gilgal, and died before the manna ceaſed; yet as he was aſſured of it, he could write this in certain faith of it, and eſpecially by a ſpirit of prophecy: this ſignifies that the children of God are to live by faith upon Chriſt, whilſt they are in the wilderneſs of this world; world; nor will this ſpiritual food be wanting to them whilſt in it; but when they are come to Canaan's land, to the heavenly glory, they'll no more walk and live by faith, but by ſight: the word and ordinances will then ceaſe; Chriſt will be no more held forth to them in that way, but they ſhall ſee him as he is, and behold his glory.

[y] Shemot Rabba, §. 25. fol. 108. 4. & Bemidbar Rabba, §. 7. fol. 188.
[a] De Cong. Quær. Erud. Gratia, p. 438.
[z] Deſcriptio Africæ, l. 7. p. 631.

℣. 36. Now an omer is the tenth part of an ephah.] Frequent mention being made of this meaſure in the above relation, as containing the quantity of each man's ſhare of the manna daily, during the forty years ſtay in the wilderneſs; an account is given by the hiſtorian, how much it contained, by which it may appear, what a ſufficient proviſion was made: an Ephah, according to Jarchi, contained three ſeahs (or pecks); a ſeah, ſix kabs; a kab, four logs; a log, ſix egg-ſhells; and the tenth part of an Ephah, was 43 egg-ſhells, and the fifth part of one: but doctor Cumberland [b] has reduced this to our meaſure, and has given it more clearly and diſtinctly: an Ephah, according to him, contained in wine meaſure, ſeven gallons, two quarts, and about half a pint; in corn-meaſure, ſix gallons, three pints, and three ſolid inches; and an omer three quarts; which being made into bread, muſt be more than any ordinary man could well eat: for, as Ainſworth obſerves, an omer was twice as much as the chænix, (a meaſure mentioned in Rev. vi. 6.) which was wont to be a man's allowance of bread-corn for a day; and what a vaſt quantity muſt fall every day to ſupply ſo large a number of people with ſuch a meaſure; ſome have reckoned it at 94466 buſhels every day, and that there muſt be conſumed in forty years 1379203600 buſhels [c].

CHAP. XVII.

THE children of Iſrael coming to Rephidim, want water, and chide with Moſes about it, who, crying to the Lord, is bid to ſmite the rock, from whence came water for them, and he named the place from their contention with him, ℣. 1—7. at this place Amalek came and fought with Iſrael, who, through the prayer of Moſes, ſignified by the holding up of his hands, and by the ſword of Joſhua was vanquiſhed, ℣. 8—13. for the remembrance of which it was ordered to be recorded in a book, and an altar was built with this inſcription on it, Jehovah Niſſi; it being the will of God that Amalek ſhould be fought with in every generation until utterly deſtroyed, ℣. 14, 15, 16.

℣. 1. And all the congregation of the children of Iſrael journeyed from the wilderneſs of Sin, &c.] Where they had ſtayed ſome time, at leaſt a week, as it ſhould ſeem, from the gathering the manna there ſix days, and reſting on the ſeventh: after their journeys; firſt from the wilderneſs of Sin to Dophkah, and from Dophkah to Aluſh, and from Aluſh to Rephidim, as appears from Numb. xxxiii. 12, 13, 14. their two ſtations at Dophkah and Aluſh, are here omitted, nothing very remarkable or of any moment happening at either place: according to the commandment; or mouth of the Lord [d], who, either with an articulate voice out of the cloud, ordered when they ſhould march, and where they ſhould encamp; or elſe this was ſignified by the motion or reſt of the pillar of cloud or fire which always went before them, in which the Lord was: and pitched in Rephidim; which was a place on the weſtern ſide of mount Sinai: according to Bunting [e], Dophkah was 12 miles from the wilderneſs of Sin, and Aluſh 12 miles from Dophkah, and Rephidim 8 miles from Aluſh: and Jerom ſays [f], according to the propriety of the Syriac language, it ſignifies a remiſſion of hands: and to which the Targum of Jonathan ſeems to have reſpect, adding, "the place where their hands ceaſed from the precepts of the law, wherefore the fountains were dried up;" and it follows: and there was no water for the people to drink; being a ſandy deſert place.

℣. 2. Wherefore the people did chide with Moſes, &c.] Contended with him by words, expoſtulating with him in a very angry and indecent manner for bringing them thither; loading him with reproaches and calumnies, wrangling and quarrelling with him, and uſing him very ill, giving hard words and bad language: and ſaid, give us water, that we may drink; directing their ſpeech both to Moſes and Aaron, as the word give [g] being in the plural number, ſhews; which was requiring that of them, which only God could do, and ſignifying as if they were under obligation to do it for them, ſince they had brought them out of Egypt, and had the care of them; and having ſeen ſo many miracles wrought by them, might conclude it was in their power to get them water when they pleaſed: had they deſired them to pray to God for them, to give them water, and exerciſed faith on him, that he would provide for them, they had done well; which they might reaſonably conclude he would, who had brought them out of Egypt, led them through the Red Sea, had ſweetened the waters at Marah for them, conducted them to fountains of water at Elim, and had rained fleſh and bread about their tents in the wilderneſs of Sin, and ſtill continued the manna with them: and Moſes ſaid unto them, why chide ye with me? as if it was I that brought you hither, whereas it is the Lord that goes before you in the pillar of cloud and fire, and as if I kept water from you, or could give it you at pleaſure; how unreaſonable as well as how ungenerous is it in you to chide with me on this account? wherefore do you tempt the Lord? the Lord Chriſt, as appears from 1 Cor. x. 9. who with the Father and Spirit is the one Jehovah; him they tempted or tried; they tried whether he was preſent with them or no, ℣. 7. they tried his power, whether he could give them water in a dry and deſert land; and they tried his patience by chiding with his ſervants, and ſhewing ſo much diſtruſt of his power and providence, of his goodneſs and faithfulneſs; and by their wretched ingratitude and rebellion, they tempted him to work a miracle for them.

℣. 3. And the people thirſted there for water, &c.] They ſaw there was no water when they firſt came thither, and therefore chid Moſes for bringing them to ſuch a place, where they could not ſubſiſt; and having ſtayed ſome little time here, and all the water they brought with them from Aluſh being ſpent, and having none to drink, began to

[b] Of Scripture-Weights and Meaſures, ch. 3. p. 64. 86, 87. ch. 4. p. 137.
[c] Vid. Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 2. p. 177, 178.
[d] עַל פִּי ſuper ore, Montanus, ad os, Vatablus.
[e] Travels, p. 82.
[f] Epiſt. ad Fabiolam de 42 manſion. Tom. 3. fol. 15. B.
[g] תְּנוּ Date, Pagninus, Montanus, &c.

to be very thirſty: and the people murmured againſt Moſes; became more impatient and enraged, and threw out their invectives againſt him with much acrimony and ſeverity: wherefore is this that thou haſt brought us up out of Egypt? where it would have been much better for us to have continued: to kill us, and our children and our cattle with thirſt; which is intolerable to any, and eſpecially to children and cattle, which require frequent drinking: they could not ſuppoſe that Moſes had ſuch a murderous view in bringing them out of Egypt, or that this was his intention in it, but that this would be the iſſue and event of it.

℣. 4. And Moſes cried unto the Lord, &c.] Or prayed unto him, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; which ſhews the diſtreſs he was thrown into, the vehemence of his prayer, and perhaps the loud and lamentable tone in which he expreſſed it: this was the method he always took, and the refuge he fled unto in all his times of trouble; in which he did well, and ſet a good example of piety and devotion to God, of faith and truſt in him: ſaying, what ſhall I do unto this people? or, for this people [h]; to relieve them in their preſent exigency; ſuggeſting his own inability to do any thing for them; yet not deſpairing of relief, but rather expreſſing faith in the power and goodneſs of God to keep them, by his application to him; deſiring that he would open a way for their ſuccour, and direct him what he muſt do in this caſe for them: ſome thing, he intimates, muſt be done ſpeedily for the glory of God, for his own ſafety, and to prevent the people ſinning yet more and more, and ſo bring deſtruction upon them; for, adds he, they be almoſt ready to ſtone me; or, yet a little, and they will ſtone me [i]; if the time of ſuccour is protracted, if relief is not in a ſhort time given, he had reaſon to believe from the menaces they had given out, the impatience they had ſhewed, the rage they were in, they would certainly take up ſtones and ſtone him, being in a ſtony and rocky place; and this they would do, not as a formal puniſhment of him as a falſe prophet, telling them they ſhould be brought to Canaan, when they were brought into the wilderneſs and periſhing there; which law reſpecting ſuch an one was not yet in being; but this, he ſuppoſed, as what an enraged multitude was wont to do, and which was more ready at hand for them to do than any thing elſe, ſee ch. viii. 26.

℣. 5. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] Out of the pillar of cloud: go on before the people; lead them on nearer to mount Sinai or Horeb, within ſight of which they now were. Jarchi adds, by way of explanation, "and ſee if they will ſtone "thee;" fear not, go on boldly, no harm ſhall come to thee: and take with thee of the elders of Iſrael; ſome of them for a witneſs, as the above writer obſerves, that they may ſee that by thine hand water comes out of the rock, and may not ſay there were fountains there from the days of old. Theſe were taken, becauſe they were the principal men among the people, who as they were men of years, ſo of prudence and probity, and whoſe veracity might be depended upon; and ſince ſo great a multitude could not all of them ſee the miracle, the rock being ſmote, and the water only flowing in one part of it, and perhaps the road to it but narrow, it was proper ſome perſons ſhould be ſingled out as witneſſes of it, and who ſo proper as the elders of the people? and thy rod wherewith thou ſmoteſt the river, take in thine hand, and go; wherewith the river Nile was ſmitten, and the water became blood, when Moſes and Aaron firſt went to Pharaoh; and which, though ſmitten by Aaron, yet being with the rod of Moſes, and by his order, is attributed to him; or elſe with which the Red Sea was ſmitten by Moſes, and divided; which being but a narrow channel, or an arm of the ſea, might be called a river: and this circumſtance is obſerved, as the afore-mentioned writer thinks, to let the Iſraelites know, that the rod was not, as they thought, only deſigned for inflicting puniſhment, as on Pharaoh and the Egyptians, but alſo for bringing good unto them; and when they ſaw this in his hand by which ſo many miracles had been wrought, they might be encouraged to hope, that ſomething was going to be done in their favour, and that water would be produced for them to drink.

℣. 6. Behold, I will ſtand before thee there upon the rock in Horeb, &c.] Or upon that rock [k], a particular rock which was pointed unto, where the Lord in the pillar of cloud would ſtand; not as a mere ſpectator of this affair, but as a director of Moſes where to ſmite the rock; and to exert his power in producing water from it, and by his preſence to encourage Moſes to do it, and to expect and believe the iſſue of it: and thou ſhalt ſmite the rock; or on the rock, or in it [l]; which made Jarchi fancy that the rod of Moſes was ſomething very hard, that it was a ſapphire by which the rock was cleft: and there ſhall come water out of it, that the people may drink; they, their children, and their cattle, ready to die for thirſt. Thus God ſhewed himſelf gracious and merciful to a murmuring and ungrateful people: and Moſes did ſo in the ſight of the elders of Iſrael; he ſmote the rock with his rod, and the waters guſhed out in great abundance, like ſtreams and rivers, for the refreſhment of the people, and their flocks, Pſ. lxxviii. 20. and cv. 41. The heathens have preſerved ſome footſteps of this miracle in their writings, though diſguiſed. Pauſanias [m] ſpeaks of a fountain of cold water ſpringing out of a rock, and reports how Atalantes coming from hunting thirſty, ſmote a rock with his ſpear, and water flowed out. This rock at Rephidim, and the apertures through which the waters flowed, are to be ſeen to this day, as travellers of veracity relate. Monſieur Thevenot [n] ſays, the rock at Rephidim is only a ſtone of a prodigious height and thickneſs, riſing out of the ground: on the two ſides of that ſtone we ſaw ſeveral holes, by which the water hath run, as may be eaſily known by the prints of the water, which hath much hollowed it, but at preſent no water iſſues out of them. A later traveller [o] gives us a more diſtinct account of it: after we had deſcended the weſtern ſide of this mount (Sinai) ſays he, we came into the plain or wilderneſs of Rephidim, where we ſaw that extraordinary antiquity, the rock of Meribah, which has continued to this day, without the leaſt injury from time or accidents. This is rightly called from its hardneſs, Deut. viii. 15. צור החלמיש, a rock of flint, though from the purple or reddiſh colour of it, it may be rather rendered the rock of חלם or אחלמה amethyſt, or the amethyſtine, or granate rock. It is about ſix yards ſquare, lying tottering as it were and looſe, near the middle of the valley, and ſeems to

[h] לעם הזה populo huic, V. L Pagninus, Montanus, &c. [i] עוד מעט adhuc paululum & lapidabit me, V. L. parum abeſt, Tigurine verſion; adhuc modicum, Pagninus, Montanus; adhuc pauliſper, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth. [k] על הצור ſuper illam petram, Junius & Tremellius; ſuper illa petra, Piſcator. [l] בצור in petram, Pagninus, Montanus; in petra ſeu rupe; ſo Jarchi, and the Targums. [m] Laconic. ſive, l. 3. p. 209. [n] Travels into the Levant, par. 1. B. 2. ch. 26. p. 167. [o] Dr. Shaw's Travels, p. 317. Ed. 2.

to have been formerly a clift of mount Sinai, which hangs in a variety of precipices all over this plain; the water which guſhed out, and the ſtream which flowed withal, Pſ. lxxviii. 20. have hollowed acroſs one corner of this rock, a channel about two inches deep, and twenty wide, all over incruſtated like the inſide of a tea-kettle that has been long uſed. Beſides ſeveral moſſy productions that are ſtill preſerved by the dew, we ſee all over this channel a great number of holes, ſome of them four or five inches deep, and one or two in diameter, the lively and demonſtrative tokens of their having been formerly ſo many fountains. Neither could art or chance be concerned in the contrivance, inaſmuch as every circumſtance points out to us a miracle; and in the ſame manner, with the rent in the rock of mount Calvary at Jeruſalem, never fails to produce the greateſt ſerioufneſs and devotion in all who ſee it. The Arabs, who were our guards, were ready to ſtone me in attempting to break off a corner of it: and another late traveller [p] informs us, that the ſtone called the ſtone of the fountains, or the ſolitary rock, is about 12 feet high, and about eight or ten feet broad, tho' it is not all of one equal breadth. It is a granate marble, of a kind of brick colour, compoſed of red and white ſpots, which are both duſky in their kind. And it ſtands by itſelf in the forementioned valley (the valley of Rephidim) as if it had grown out of the earth, on the right-hand of the road toward the north-eaſt: there remains on it to this day the lively impreſſion of the miracle then wrought; for there are ſtill to be ſeen the places where the water guſhed out, ſix openings towards the ſouth-weſt, and ſix towards the north-eaſt; and in thoſe places where the water flowed, the clefts are ſtill to be ſeen in the rock, as it were with lips. The account Dr. Pocock [q] gives of it is this, "it is on the foot of mount Seriah, and "is a red granate ſtone, 15 feet long, 10 wide, "and about 12 high: on both ſides of it toward "the ſouth end, and at the top of it for about "the breadth of eight inches, it is diſcoloured as "by the running of water; and all down this "part, and both ſides, and at top, are a ſort of "openings and mouths, ſome of which reſemble "the lion's mouth that is ſometimes cut in ſtone "ſpouts, but appear not to be the work of a "tool. There are about 12 on each ſide, and "within every one is an horizontal crack, and in "ſome alſo a crack down perpendicularly. There "is alſo a crack from one of the mouths next "to the hill, that extends two or three feet to the "north, and all round to the ſouth. The Arabs "call this the ſtone of Moſes: and other late tra-"vellers [r] ſay, that about a mile and a half, in "the vale of Rephidim, is this rock; this, ſay "they, is a vaſt ſtone, of a very compact and "hard granate, and as it were projecting out of "the ground; on both ſides, are 12 fiſſures, which "the monk our guide applied to the 12 apoſtles, "and poſſibly not amiſs, had he joined the 12 "tribes of Iſrael with them: as we were obſerv-"ing theſe fiſſures, out of which the water guſhed, "one would be tempted to think, added he, it is "no longer ago than yeſterday the water flowed "out; and indeed there is ſuch an appearance, "that at a diſtance one would think it to be a "ſmall water-fall lately dried up: and one [s] that "travelled hither in the beginning of the 16th "century ſays, that to this day out of one of the "marks or holes there ſweats a ſort of moiſture, "which we ſaw and licked." We are taught by the apoſtle Paul the myſtical and ſpiritual meaning of this rock, which he ſays was Chriſt, that is, a type of him, 1 Cor. x. 4. as it was for his external unpromiſing appearance among men at his birth, in his life and death; for his height, being higher than the kings of the earth, than the angels of heaven, and than the heavens themſelves, and for ſtrength, firmneſs and ſolidity. The water that flowed from this rock was typical of the grace of Chriſt, and the bleſſings of it, which flow from him in great abundance to the refreſhment and comfort of his people, and to be had freely; and of the blood of Chriſt, which flowed from him when ſtricken and ſmitten. And the rock being ſmitten with the rod of Moſes, typified Chriſt being ſmitten by the rod of the law in the hand of juſtice, for the tranſgreſſions of his people; and how that through his having being made ſin, and a curſe for them, whereby the law and juſtice of God are ſatisfied, the bleſſings of grace flow freely to them, and follow them all the days of their lives, as the waters of the rock followed the Iſraelites through the wilderneſs.

℣. 7. And he called the name of the place, Maſſah, and Meribah, &c.] The former ſignifies temptation, and the latter contention: the reaſon of which names being given by Moſes, or whoever was the namer of the place, follows: becauſe of the chiding of the children of Iſrael; that was the reaſon why it was called by the laſt name, Meribah, becauſe here the Iſraelites chid and contended with Moſes, and uſed him opprobriouſly: and becauſe they tempted the Lord; therefore it had the former name of Maſſah: ſaying, is the Lord among us or not? as if they ſhould ſay, if we periſh through thirſt, the Lord is not among us, nor takes any care of us; nor was it he that brought us out of Egypt, but Moſes; nor is he in the pillar of cloud and fire, as is ſaid; but if he works a miracle, and gives us water, for us, our children, and cattle, then it will appear he is among us; and thus they tempted the Lord, though without this they had had full proof by many inſtances, that he was among them, and even in a very extraordinary manner.

℣. 8. Then came Amalek, &c.] The Amalekites, who were not the poſterity of Amalek, a ſon of Eliphaz, the ſon of Eſau, by Timna the concubine of Eliphaz, Gen. xxxvi. 12. who dwelt in the deſart to the ſouth of Judea, beyond the city Petra as you go to Aila, as Jerom ſays [t]; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan deſcribes them as coming from the ſouth; and Aben Ezra interprets them a nation that inhabited the ſouthern country. Joſephus [u] calls them the inhabitants of Gobolitis and Petra; but they were the deſcendants of Cuſh, and the ſame with thoſe who were in Abraham's time long before Amalek, the deſcendant of Eſau, was in being, Gen. xiv. 7. and who bordered eaſtward on the wilderneſs of Shur: and fought with Iſrael in Rephidim; ſo that this was before they came from hence to Sinai, very probably as they were on the march thither, and before the rock was ſmitten, and they had been refreſhed with water, and ſo whilſt they were in diſtreſs for want of that, and therefore this muſt be a great trial and exerciſe to them. What ſhould move the Amalekites to come and fight with them, is not eaſy to ſay; it is by many thought to

4

[p] Journal from Cairo to mount Sinai, A. D. 1722. 35, 36, 37. Ed. 2. [q] Travels, p. 148. [r] Egmont and Heyman's Travels, vol. 2. p. 174, 175. [s] Baumgarten. Peregrinatio, l. 1. c. 24. p. 62. [t] De locis Hebr. fol. 87. M. [u] Antiq. l. 3. c 2. §. 1.

to be the old grudge of the children of Eſau againſt the children of Iſrael, becauſe of the affair of the birth-right and bleſſing which Jacob got from Eſau, who were now on their march for the land of Canaan, which came to him thereby: but it is hardly probable, that theſe people ſhould know any thing of thoſe matters at this diſtance, and beſides were not of the race of Eſau; and if any thing of this kind was in remembrance, and ſtill ſubſiſted, it is moſt likely that the Edomites would have been concerned to ſtop them, rather than theſe: it is more probable, that theſe had heard of their coming out of Egypt with great riches, the ſpoils of the Egyptians; and being an unarmed, undiſciplined people, tho' numerous, thought to have taken this advantage againſt them of their diſtreſs and contentions, and plundered them of their wealth; unleſs we can ſuppoſe them to be an ally of the Canaanites, and ſo bound by treaty to obſtruct their paſſage to the land of Canaan: but be it as it may, they came out againſt them, and fought with them without any provocation, the Iſraelites not attempting to enter their country, but rather going from it; for theſe ſeem to follow them, to come upon the back of them, and fall upon their rear, as appears from Deut. xxv. 17, 18.

✓. 9. And Moſes ſaid unto Joſhua, &c.] The ſon of Nun, who was his miniſter, and was a man of war from his youth, trained up in the art of war, and afterwards ſucceeded Moſes, and was captain of the armies of Iſrael, and fought at the head of them, and ſubdued the Canaanites. Moſes knew he was a fit perſon for the preſent purpoſe, and therefore gave him the following orders: chuſe us out men; the ſtouteſt and moſt courageous, beſt able to bear arms, and engage in war; for the multitude in common was not qualified for ſuch ſervice, nor was there any neceſſity of engaging them all in it: and go out; out of the camp, and meet them at ſome diſtance, that the women and children might not be terrified with the enemy: fight with Amalek; for their cauſe was juſt, Amalek was the aggreſſor, Iſrael was on the defenſive part; and ſhould it be aſked where they had arms to fight with? it may be remembered, that the Egyptian army that was drowned in the Red Sea, and whoſe bodies were caſt upon the ſhore, might furniſh them with a large quantity of armour, which they ſtripped them of, and arrayed themſelves with: to-morrow I will ſtand upon the top of the hill, with the rod of God in my hand; on the top of mount Horeb or Sinai, where he might be ſeen by the army of Iſrael with that rod in his hand, lifted up as a banner by which God had done ſo many wonderful things; and by which they might be encouraged to hope that victory would go on their ſide, and this he promiſed to do to-morrow, the day following; for ſooner a ſelect body of men could not be taken out from the people, and accoutred for war, and go forth to meet the enemy.

✓. 10. So Joſhua did as Moſes had ſaid to him, &c.] He ſingled out ſome proper perſons for the battle, and arrayed them with armour, and led them forth out of the camp, and went forth at the head of them: and fought with Amalek; upon both armies meeting a battle enſued: and Moſes, and Aaron, and Hur went up to the top of the hill; to the top of mount Sinai or Horeb, not ſo much to ſee the battle fought, as to be ſeen by Joſhua and the people of Iſrael, eſpecially Moſes with the rod in his hand lifted up, that they might behold it, and be encouraged through it to hope for, and expect victory; and the other two went up with him to aſſiſt him in holding up his hands with the rod, as appears by what follows. Aaron it is well known was his brother, but who Hur was is not ſo clear, though no doubt a very eminent and principal man. There was an Hur, the ſon of Caleb, who deſcended from Judah in the line of Phares and Hezron, and which Hur was the grandfather of Bezaleel, 1 Chron. ii. 5, 9, 19, 20. but whether the ſame with this, cannot be ſaid with certainty; it is moſt likely, that he was the huſband of Miriam, as Joſephus ſays [w], and ſo the brother-in-law of Moſes and Aaron; tho' ſome Jewiſh writers ſay [x], that he was their ſiſter's ſon, the ſon of Miriam.

✓. 11. And it came to paſs when Moſes held up his hand, that Iſrael prevailed, &c.] With his rod in it as a banner diſplayed, as ſome think, which inſpired the Iſraelites with courage to fight, and they had the better of it; though Aben Ezra rejects that notion, obſerving, that if that had been the caſe, Aaron or Hur would have lifted it up, or fixed it in a high place on the mount, that it might have been ſeen ſtanding; and therefore he thinks the ſenſe of the ancients the righteſt, that it was a prayer-geſture. And among the heathens, Moſes was famous for the efficacy of his prayers; Numenius, the Pythagoric philoſopher [y], ſays of him, that he was a man very powerful in prayer with God: and ſo all the Targums interpret it, and particularly the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem paraphraſe the words, "when Moſes lift up his hands in "prayer, the houſe of Iſrael prevailed, but when "he reſtrained his hands from prayer, the houſe "of Amalek prevailed," as it follows: when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed; ſo that victory ſeemed to go ſometimes on one ſide, and ſometimes on the other, according as the hand of Moſes, with the rod in it, was held up or let down; when it was held up, and Iſrael ſaw it, they fought valiantly, but when it was let down, and they could not ſee it, their hearts failed them, and they feared it portended ill to them, which cauſed them to give way to the enemy. The ſpiritual Iſrael of God are engaged in a warfare with ſpiritual enemies, ſome within, and ſome without; and ſometimes they prevail over their enemies, and ſometimes their enemies prevail over them for a while; and things go on very much as a man either keeps up or leaves off praying, which is ſignified by the lifting up of holy hands without wrath and doubting, 1 Tim. ii. 8. and which when rightly performed under the influence of the divine Spirit in faith, in ſincerity, and with fervency and conſtancy, has great power with God and Chriſt, and againſt ſatan and every ſpiritual enemy.

✓. 12. But Moſes's hands were heavy, &c.] And hung down through wearineſs, holding up the rod firſt in one hand, and then in another for ſo long a time; and thus ſometimes, through infirmity, the beſt of men grow remiſs in prayer, their hands are weak and hang down through the corruptions of their hearts, the power of unbelief, the temptations of ſatan, and want of immediate anſwers of prayer, or through long delays of it, and then the enemy gets an advantage over them: and they took a ſtone, and put it under him, and he ſat thereon; ſo that it ſeems not only that his hands were heavy, but he could not well ſtand on his feet any longer, longer, being a corpulent man as well as in years, as Ben Gerſom ſuggeſts; and therefore Aaron and Hur took a ſtone that lay on the mount for him to ſit upon, where he might be raiſed as high, and be as well ſeen, as ſtanding: this ſtone may be an emblem of Chriſt the ſtone of Iſrael, the foundation of his people, their prop and ſupport, which ſuſtains and upholds them, their Eben Ezer, or ſtone of help in all their times of difficulty and diſtreſs: and Aaron and Hur ſtayed up his hands, the one on the one ſide, and the other on the other ſide; the one was on his right, and the other on his left; and when the rod was in his right hand, he that was on that ſide held up that; and when it was in his left hand, he that was on the left ſide ſupported that: theſe may be an emblem of Chriſt, and of the Spirit of Chriſt, from whom the ſaints have their ſupports and aſſiſtance in prayer: Aaron the prieſt may repreſent Chriſt, from whoſe blood righteouſneſs and ſacrifice, and from whoſe advocacy, mediation and interceſſion, the people of God receive much encouragement and ſtrength in their addreſſes at the throne of grace: and Hur who has his name from a word which ſignifies freedom and liberty, may be an emblem of the holy Spirit of God; who helps the ſaints in prayer under all their infirmities, and makes interceſſion for them, by filling their hearts and mouths with arguments, and is a free ſpirit to them; by whom they are upheld, and where he is there is liberty, and a ſoul can come forth in prayer to God, and in the exerciſe of grace with freedom: and his hands were ſteady until the going down of the ſun; when the victory was decided in favour of Iſrael: this may denote ſteadineſs of faith in prayer, the conſtant performance of it, and continuance in it as long as a man lives.

[w] Antiq. l. 3. c. 2. § 4. [x] Pirke Eliezer, c. 45. Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 7. 1. [y] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 8. p. 411.

℣. 13. And Joſhua diſcomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the ſword.] Amalek being diſtinguiſhed from his people, has led ſome to think that Amalek was the name of the king, or general of the army, and that it was a common name to the kings of that nation, as Pharaoh was to the kings of Egypt; but for this there is no foundation in the ſcriptures: as Amalek ſignifies the Amalekites, his people may deſign the confederates and auxiliaries, the other people, as Ben Gerſom expreſſes it, they brought with them to fight againſt Iſrael. And ſo Jerom [z] ſays, by him another Canaanite dwelt, who alſo fought againſt Iſrael in the wilderneſs, of whom it is ſo written, and Amalek and the Canaanite dwelt in the valley, Numb. xiv. 25. and who were all, the one as the other, at leaſt the greateſt part of them, cut to pieces by the edge of the ſword of Joſhua and the Iſraelites, who obtained a complete victory over them; as the ſpiritual Iſrael of God will at laſt over all their ſpiritual enemies, ſin, ſatan, the world and death.

℣. 14. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] After the battle was over, and the Iſraelites had got the victory: write this for a memorial in a book; not in looſe papers, but in a book, that it might continue; meaning that the account of this battle with Amalek ſhould be put down in the annals or journal of Moſes, in the book of the law he was writing, or was about to write, and would write, as he did, ſee Joſh. i. 7, 8. that ſo it might be kept in memory, and tranſmitted to the lateſt poſterity; it being on the one hand an inſtance of great impiety, inhumanity and raſhneſs in Amalek, and on the other a diſplay of the goodneſs, kindneſs and power of God on the behalf of his people: and rehearſe it in the ears of Joſhua; who was a principal perſon concerned in this battle, and therefore when the account was written and rehearſed, could bear witneſs to the truth of it, as well as he was to be the chief perſon that ſhould be concerned in introducing the Iſraelites into the land of Canaan, and ſubduing the Canaanites; and therefore this, and what follows, was to be rehearſed to him, as the rule of his conduct toward them, and particularly Amalek: for I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; ſo that they ſhall be no more a nation, and their name never mentioned, unleſs with diſgrace and contempt. This was fulfilled partly by Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 8. and more compleatly by David, 1 Sam. xxx. 17. 2 Sam. i. 1. and viii. 12. and the finiſhing ſtroke the Jews give to Mordecai and Eſther, as the Targum of Jeruſalem on ℣. 6.

℣. 15. And Moſes built an altar, &c.] On Horeb, as Aben Ezra; on the top of the hill, as Ben Gerſom, where ſacrifices of thankſgiving were offered up for the victory obtained, or however a monument erected in memory of it: and he called the name of it Jehovah Niſſi; which ſignifies either the Lord is my miracle; who wrought a miracle for them in giving them the victory over Amalek, as well as through ſmiting the rock with the rod, brought out water from thence for the refreſhment of the people, their children and cattle; or the Lord is my banner, alluding to the hands of Moſes being lifted up with the rod therein, as a banner diſplayed, under which Joſhua and Iſrael fought, and got the victory. This may fitly be applied to Chriſt, who is both altar, ſacrifice and prieſt, and who is the true Jehovah, and after ſo called; and who is lifted up as a banner, ſtandard or enſign in the everlaſting Goſpel, in order to gather ſouls unto him, and enliſt them under him, and to prepare them for war, and encourage them in it againſt their ſpiritual enemies; and as a token of their victory over them, and a direction to them where they ſhall ſtand, when to march, and whom they ſhall follow; and to diſtinguiſh them from all other bands and companies, and for the protection of them from all their enemies, ſee Iſ. xi. 10. Theſe words were inſcribed upon the altar, or the altar was called the altar of Jehovah Niſſi, in memory of what was here done; from hence it has been thought [a], that Bacchus, among the heathens, had his name of Dionyſius, as if it was Jehovah Nyſſæus.

℣. 16. For he ſaid, becauſe the Lord hath ſworn, &c.] So ſome Jewiſh writers [b] take it for an oath, as we do; or becauſe the hand is on the throne of the Lord [c]; which the Targum of Jonathan, Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret of the hand of the Lord being lifted up, and of his ſwearing by the throne of his glory; but as Druſius obſerves, it is not credible that God ſhould ſwear by that which is prohibited, by Chriſt, Matt. v. 24. and xxiii. 22. rather the words are to be rendered, becauſe the hand, that is, the hand of Amalek, is againſt the throne of the Lord [d]; againſt his people, among whom his throne was, and over whom he ruled, and ſo againſt himſelf, and the glory of his majeſty; becauſe he was the firſt that made war upon Iſrael, when the Lord brought them out of Egypt, and and unprovoked fell upon their rear, and ſmote the hindmoſt, faint and weary among them: therefore the Lord will have war with Amalek from generation to generation; until they are utterly deſtroyed; and ſo in fact he had, and thus it was. The Targum of Jonathan is, "he by his word will "make war againſt thoſe that are of the houſe "of Amalek, and deſtroy them to three genera-"tions, from the generation of this world, from "the generation of the Meſſiah, and from the ge-"neration of the world to come;" and Baal Hatturim on the place obſerves, that this phraſe, from generation to generation, by Gematry, ſignifies the days of the Meſſiah. Amalek may be conſidered as a type of antichriſt, whoſe hand is againſt the throne of God, his tabernacle, and his ſaints; who with all the antichriſtian ſtates which make war with the Lamb, will be overcome and deſtroyed by him.

[z] Ut ſupra. [a] Vid. Bochart. Canaan, l. 1. c. 18. col. 440. [b] R. Sol. Urbin. fol. 95. 1.
[c] כי יד על כס־יה quia manus ſuper thronum Domini, Pagninus, Montanus; ſublata manu ſuper ſolium Dei (juro) Tigurine verſion. [d] Quia manus (Hamaleki) fuit contra ſolium Jah, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth.

CHAP. XVIII.

THIS chapter gives an account of Jethro, Moſes's father-in-law, with Zipporah his daughter, the wife of Moſes, and her two ſons meeting him in the wilderneſs, who was kindly received by him, ℣. 1—7. and on Moſes relating the great things God had done for Iſrael, Jethro expreſſed his joy on that account, gave praiſe to God, offered ſacrifice, and kept a feaſt with the elders of Iſrael, ℣. 8—12. and obſerving the conſtant and fatiguing buſineſs Moſes had on his hands from morning to evening in judging the people, ℣. 13—18. he gave him advice to appoint perſons under him, to receive laws and ordinances from him, he ſhould have from God, and according to them, judge and govern the people under them, ſome being rulers of thouſands, others of hundreds, others of fifties, and ſome of tens, ℣. 19—23. which counſel was acceptable to Moſes, and he took it, ℣. 24—26. and the chapter is concluded with their friendly parting, ℣. 27.

℣. 1. When Jethro the prieſt of Midian, Moſes's father-in-law, &c.] The Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan call him the prince of Midian, and ſo the word [c] is rendered in ſome verſions; whoſe daughter Moſes had married, and ſo was his father-in-law, of which ſee more in ch. 2: heard of all that God had done for Moſes, and for Iſrael his people; the miracles he had wrought for them in Egypt, the dividing of the Red Sea to make a way for them, the deſtruction of the Egyptians, providing them with bread and water in ſuch a miraculous manner in the wilderneſs, and giving them victory over Amalek, and appearing always at the head of them in a pillar of cloud and fire: and that the Lord had brought Iſrael out of Egypt; which was the greateſt bleſſing of all, and for the ſake of which ſo many wonderful things had been done to Pharaoh and the Egyptians. And now Midian being near to Egypt, it is not to be wondered at, that Jethro ſhould hear of theſe things, the fame of which went through all the countries round about, ſee ch. xv. 14, 15. though it is not improbable, that Moſes might ſend meſſengers to Midian to acquaint his father-in-law, his wife, and ſons, of what the Lord had done for him, and by him.

℣. 2. Then Jethro Moſes's father-in-law took Zipporah Moſes's wife, &c.] When he had heard of the above things, he determined to pay Moſes a viſit, and congratulate him on that account; and he took his daughter, the wife of Moſes, along with him, to deliver her to her huſband, to ſhare with him in his cares and troubles; as to partake with him of his honours and dignity, ſo to bear part with him in his burdens, ſo far as ſhe was capable of: after he had ſent her back; upon his call and miſſion to Egypt, he took his wife and children with him; but upon an affair which occurred in the inn by the way, he ſent them back again to his father-in-law, where they had remained ever ſince, ſee ch. iv. 24, 25. Jarchi ſays this was done at meeting with Aaron his brother, ℣. 27. and relates a converſation between them upon it. As that Aaron ſhould ſay to him, who are theſe? to which he replied, this is my wife, I married her in Midian, and theſe are my ſons: he further ſaid to him, and where art thou carrying them? he replied to Egypt; ſays he, by reaſon of thoſe who are before there, we are in ſtraits, and thou wilt add unto them; upon which he ſaid to his wife, go back to thy father's houſe, and ſhe took her ſons and went thither. Kimchi [d] obſerves, that ſome render the words after her gifts; whoſe ſenſe, according to Aben Ezra, is, after ſhe had ſent gifts to her huſband; but others more probably interpret it, of gifts ſent by him to her to engage his father-in-law to let her come to him, as well as to prevail upon her to come; perhaps it may be better rendered, after her meſſenger; that is, either after the meſſenger ſent to her by Moſes, to acquaint her and her father of what had been done for him, or after the meſſenger ſhe ſent to him, to let him know that ſhe intended ſhortly to be with him; though perhaps, after all, nearer to our verſion and others: it may be rendered, after her diſmiſſions [e]; the diſmiſſion or ſending away of her and her ſons, as before related; for this is by no means to be interpreted of a divorce of her; after which ſhe was brought again to her huſband; for there is no reaſon to believe that ever any thing of that kind had paſſed, as ſome have thought [h]: the plain caſe ſeems to be this, that Moſes finding his family would be expoſed to danger, or would be too great an incumbrance upon him in the diſcharge of his great work he had to do in Egypt, ſent them back to his father-in-law until a fit opportunity ſhould offer of their coming to him, as now did.

℣. 3. And her two ſons, &c.] Thoſe alſo Jethro took along with him and his daughter: of which the name of the one was Gerſhom; which ſeems to be his firſt-born, ch. ii. 22. his name ſignifies a deſolate ſtranger, as ſome, or, there I was a ſtranger; the reaſon of which name follows agreeable thereunto: for he ſaid, I have been an alien in a ſtrange land; meaning, not the land of Egypt, where he was born, and had lived forty years; but in the land of Midian, where he was when this ſon of his was born; and which name was given him partly to keep up the memory of his flight to Midian, and partly to inſtruct his ſon, that Midian, though his native place, was not his proper country

[c] כהן præſes, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. ſome in Vatablus and Druſius.
[h] Vid. Selden, Uxor Hebr. p. 629.
[d] Sepher Shoraſh. rad. שלח poſt dona vel donationes ejus; ſo country where he was to dwell, but another, even the land of Canaan.
[e] אחר שלוחיה poſt dimiſſiones ejus, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius.

℣. 4. And the name of the other was Eliezer, &c.] Who ſeems to be his ſecond ſon, and was that which was circumciſed by Zipporah at the inn, and about which there was ſuch a ſtir, ch. iv. 24, 25, 26. and ſignifies my God is help, or, his helper: for the God of my father, ſaid he, was mine help, and delivered me from the ſword of Pharaoh; who, on hearing that Moſes had killed an Egyptian, was wroth with him, and ſought to ſlay him; and perhaps drew his ſword for that purpoſe but was prevented: however, this, in all human probability, would have been the caſe, that he would have fallen by his ſword either in a private or public manner, had it not been for the interpoſition of divine providence, and therefore he gave this name to his child, to be a ſtanding memorial of it.

℣. 5. And Jethro, Moſes's father-in-law, &c.] This is the third time he is ſo called in the chapter already, and many more times beſides after in it; the reaſon of which ſeems to be, either to diſtinguiſh him from another of the ſame name, or to do him honour, that he ſhould be in ſuch a relation to ſo great and diſtinguiſhed a man as Moſes now was: came with his ſons and his wife unto Moſes into the wilderneſs; not with his own ſons and wife, but with the ſons and wife of Moſes; Zipporah and her ſons, as before related; with thoſe he came into the wilderneſs of Arabia, where Moſes now was, and which was not at a great diſtance from Midian, ſince about the ſame ſpot Moſes, when he dwelt there, had, and fed the flock of his father-in-law, ch. iii. 1. that part of the land of Midian where Jethro lived, lay ſomewhere eaſtward of mount Sinai, and was probably ſituated where Sharme now ſtands; which, according to doctor Pocock [l], is about a day and a half's journey from mount Sinai, from whence the monks of mount Sinai are chiefly ſupplied with fiſh [k]: it follows: where he encamped at the mount of God; at Horeb, where the Lord had appeared to Moſes; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan adds, "where the glory "of the Lord was revealed to Moſes at the begin-"ning;" and where, afterwards the Lord appeared again, and gave the law, and therefore is called the mount of God; the one as well as the other being paſt when Moſes wrote this book, and called the mountain by this name: it is matter of queſtion at what time Jethro came hither, whether before or after the giving of the law: it ſeems, by the order in which this ſtory is here placed, as if it was immediately after the battle with Amalek; and Saadiah Gaon is of opinion it was before the giving of the law; and one would think it moſt reaſonable and natural that Jethro would take the firſt opportunity of viſiting Moſes, and that Moſes would not long defer ſending for his wife and children: but Aben Ezra thinks, he did not come till the ſecond year after the tabernacle was ſet up, ſince, in the context mention is made of burnt-offerings and ſacrifices, and no account is given of a new altar built by Moſes; and beſides, he ſays, I do make them know the ſtatutes of God and his laws, ℣. 16; and it is certain from hence, that the children of Iſrael were removed from Rephidim, and were now encamped at the mount of God, at Horeb; but whether they had got to the other ſide of the mount of Sinai as yet is not ſo clear; tho' it looks as if what Moſes did, by the advice of Jethro, was after the law was given on Sinai, ſee Deut. i. 6—16. ſo that upon the whole, it ſeems as if this account, according to the order of time, ſhould be placed after Numb. x. 28. or, as doctor Lightfoot [l] thinks, between the tenth and eleventh verſes of that chapter, and is put here to ſhew that though Midian was near Amalek, as he obſerves, yet Jethro was exempt from the curſe and deſtruction threatened to that, ſee 1 Sam. xv. 6.

℣. 6. And he ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] By a meſſenger, as Jarchi; or by a written letter, as Aben Ezra; or as the Septuagint verſion, it was told to Moſes, thy father, &c. for, as yet, he was not come to him, as appears by Moſes going forth to meet him: I thy father-in-law, Jethro, am come to thee; or, am coming [m]; for, as yet, he was not in his preſence, and they were not perſonally preſent face to face: the Targum of Jonathan adds, to become a proſelyte; but it ſeems that before as well as now, he had been a worſhipper of the true God, and always ſpeaks like one that had had the fear of God before him continually: and thy wife and her ſons with her; this he thought fit to acquaint him of by meſſenger or letter, that he might be in expectation of them, and not be ſurprized at once with their appearance: beſides, as ſome obſerve, and not amiſs, after the late attack of the Amalekites upon their rear, guards or centinels might be placed in the out parts of the camp for its ſafety, and who would not eaſily, without order, let ſtrangers paſs into it, and therefore previous notice was neceſſary to get admiſſion.

℣. 7. And Moſes went out to meet his father-in-law, &c.] Out of the camp, at leaſt out of his tent: the Targum of Jonathan ſays, from under the cloud of glory: how far he went is not certain, nor material to know: this was an inſtance of his great humility and modeſty, and was doing Jethro a great deal of honour; that one who was in ſuch great dignity, at the head of ſuch a vaſt body of people, and ſuperior to him both in natural and ſpiritual abilities, yet condeſcended to go forth in perſon to meet him, when he might have ſent a guard of his men to eſcort him to his camp, which would have been honour ſufficient; and it is not ſaid, he went out to meet his wife and children; for Aben Ezra ſays, it was not uſual for honourable men ſo to do: and did obeiſance; to Jethro, bowed unto him and worſhipped him in a civil way, after the manner of the eaſtern nations, who uſed to make very low bows to whom they paid civil reſpect: and kiſſed him; not to make him a proſelyte, as the above Targum, nor in token of ſubjection, but of affection and friendſhip; it being uſual for relations and friends to kiſs each other at meeting or parting: and they aſked each other of their welfare; or peace [n]; of their proſperity and happineſs, temporal and ſpiritual, of their peace, inward and outward, and of the bodily health of them and their families: and they came into the tent; the Targum of Jonathan ſays, "into the ta-"bernacle of the houſe of doctrine," or ſchool-room; which is not likely, ſince Jethro was a man well inſtructed in divine things, and needed not to be put to ſchool; and if he did, it can hardly be thought that as ſoon as Moſes met him he ſhould ſet about the inſtruction of him; but into his tent where he dwelt; that, as Aben Ezra ſays, which was

4

[l] Travels, p. 137. vol. 1. p. 710, 711.

[k] See the Biſhop of Clogher's Chronology of the Hebrew Bible, p. 214.

[m] בא veniens, Montanus.

[n] לשלום ad pacem, Montanus; de pace, Munſter, Fagius, Druſius, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth.

[l] Works, was the known tent of Moſes, though it is not expreſsly ſaid his tent.

℣. 8. And Moſes told his father in-law all that the Lord had done unto Pharaoh, &c.] After the proper civilities had paſt, and Jethro had been refreſhed with food and drink, as is highly probable, they entered into a converſation about what had lately paſt, which Jethro had had a general report of, and which had brought him hither, and therefore it would be very entertaining to him to have the particulars of it; and Moſes begins with what the Lord had done to Pharaoh, how he had inflicted his plagues upon him one after another, and at laſt ſlew his firſt-born, and deſtroyed him and his hoſt in the Red Sea: and to the Egyptians, for Iſrael's ſake; the ſeveral plagues affecting them, eſpecially the laſt, the ſlaughter of their firſt-born; and who alſo were ſpoiled of their riches by the Iſraelites, and a numerous army of them drowned in the Red Sea, and all becauſe of the people of Iſrael; becauſe they had made their lives bitter in hard bondage, had refuſed to let them go out of the land, and when they were departed purſued after them to fetch them back or cut them off: and all the travail that had come upon them by the way; to the Red Sea, and at Marah, and Rephidim, and how Amalek fought with them, as the Targum of Jonathan obſerves; what a fright they were put into, when purſued by Pharaoh and his hoſt behind them, the rocks on each ſide of them, and the ſea before them; their want of water in the wilderneſs, not being able to drink of the waters at Marah becauſe bitter; their hunger, having no bread nor fleſh in the wilderneſs of Sin, and their violent thirſt and no water to allay it in the plains of Rephidim, and where alſo they were attacked by an army of the Amalekites: and how the Lord delivered them; out of all this travail and trouble, and out of the hands of all their enemies, Egyptians and Amalekites.

℣. 9. And Jethro rejoiced for all the goodneſs which the Lord had done to Iſrael, &c.] In giving them the manna and the well, as the above Targum, bread to eat when hungry, and water to drink when thirſty; to which Jarchi adds, and the law, for he ſuppoſes the meeting of Jethro and Moſes was after the law was given on mount Sinai, tho' here recorded; but this goodneſs may be extended to other things, as the ſaving of their firſt-born at the time of the Lord's paſſover, giving them favour in the ſight of the Egyptians, of whom they borrowed or aſked things of value, of gold, ſilver and jewels, bringing them out of Egypt with an high hand, going before them in a pillar of cloud and fire by day and night, dividing the waters of the ſea for them to paſs through as on dry land, and doing for them the above things related, and giving them victory over Amalek; and it may be obſerved that the joy of Jethro was not merely on account of the goodneſs of God done to Moſes, a relation of his, having married his daughter; but becauſe of the great and good things God had done for Iſrael, his ſpecial and peculiar people, the worſhippers of the true and living God, for whom Jethro had an affection, becauſe they were ſo, and therefore rejoiced in their proſperity: whom he had delivered out of the hand of the Egyptians; whom he had wrought upon to give them leave to depart from them, and deſtroyed them when they purſued after them, firſt delivered them from their bondage, and then from their rage and wrath.

℣. 10. And Jethro ſaid, &c.] Like a truly good man, as one that knew the Lord and feared him, and was deſirous of giving him the praiſe and glory of all the wonderful things he had done: bleſſed be the Lord, who hath delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians; and out of the hand of Pharaoh; meaning particularly Moſes and Aaron, the meſſengers of God, as Aben Ezra obſerves, who went to Pharaoh in the peril of their lives, and whom he ſometimes threatened with death; but the Lord delivered them both out of his hands, and out of the hands of his miniſters and people, who, doubtleſs, muſt be at times enraged at them for the plagues they brought upon them; for the perſons here pointed at are manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from the body of the people of Iſrael next mentioned: who hath delivered the people from the hand of the Egyptians; the people of Iſrael, from the hard bondage and cruel ſlavery they were held under by the Egyptians; which, as it was the Lord's doing, Jethro gives him the glory of it, and bleſſes him for it, or aſcribes to him on account of it, bleſſing, honour, glory and praiſe.

℣. 11. Now I know that the Lord is greater than all gods, &c.] He knew the Lord before, and that he was the only true God, and greater than all that were ſo called; but now he had a freſh inſtance of it, a clear proof and demonſtration of it, and ſo more plainly and fully knew it, and was aſſured of it, that he was greater than all the idols of the Gentiles, and particularly than the gods of the Egyptians; ſince he had ſaved his people Iſrael out of their hands, and when they could not protect and defend the Egyptians neither from plagues nor from deſtruction; nay, could not ſecure themſelves, being all deſtroyed by the mighty Jehovah, ſee ch. xii. 12. as alſo that he is greater than all that are called gods, kings, princes, and civil magiſtrates, than Pharaoh and all his nobles, generals, and captains, who were deſtroyed by him: for in the thing wherein they dealt proudly, he was above them; the idol-gods, the gods of the Egyptians, the evil dæmons, ſatan and his principalities, who influenced them, preſuming and boaſting by their magicians, what they could do; but in thoſe things Jehovah in the wonders he wrought appeared to be above them; they were overcome by him, and obliged to acknowledge the finger of God; and this ſenſe ſtands beſt connected with the preceding clauſe: or elſe in thoſe things, in which the Egyptians dealt proudly with the Iſraelites, purſuing after them in the pride and vanity of their minds, and giving out that they ſhould overtake them and divide the ſpoil, and ſatisfy their luſt upon them, when God blew with his wind upon them, the ſea covered them, and they ſunk as lead in the mighty waters, ſee ch. xv. 9, 10, 11. and to the drowning of the Egyptians in the Red Sea, the Jews commonly apply this: thus the Targum of Jonathan, "wherein the Egyptians dealt wickedly in "judging Iſrael, by the waters, judgment returned "upon them that they might be judged by the "waters;" and to the ſame ſenſe Jarchi: they ſuppoſe here was a juſt retaliation, that as the Egyptians drowned the Hebrew infants in the waters of the Nile, they were in righteous judgment drowned in the Red Sea; this is the very thing, or is the ſame way they in their pride and malice dealt with the people of Iſrael; God dealt with them, and ſhewed himſelf to be both againſt them °, as it may be rendered, and above them.

℣.

° עליהם contra eos, Pagninus, Montanus; contra illos, V. L. Tigurine verſion; ſo Reinbech de accent. Heb. p. 314.

℣. 12. And Jethro, Moſes's father-in-law, took a burnt-offering and ſacrifices for God, &c.] The burnt-offering which was either of the flock or of the herd, was wholly conſumed by fire, from whence it had its name; the peace-offering for thankſgiving, which ſeemed to be meant by the ſacrifices here, the fleſh of them were to be eaten, Lev. vii. 15. and now a feaſt was kept, as the latter part of the verſe ſhews: whether Jethro brought cattle along with him for ſuch a purpoſe, and ſo gave [p] or offered them for a burnt-offering and ſacrifices to God; as the word for took, may be rendered, one and the ſame word, ſignifying both to give and take, ſee Pſ. lxviii. 18. compared with Eph. iv. 8. or whether with the leave of Moſes and the children of Iſrael, he took them out of their flocks and herds, it matters not, ſince this is only obſerved to ſhew Jethro's devotion to God, and the grateful ſenſe he had of the divine goodneſs to Iſrael; and ſince he was a prieſt of Midian, as he is generally ſaid to be, and a prieſt of the moſt high God, as Melchizedeck was, he might offer ſacrifices; for it does not appear that he delivered them to others to be offered, or that theſe were ſlain by Aaron; for, though he is after mentioned, yet not as a ſacrificer but as a gueſt; and perhaps this might be before he and his ſons were ſeparated to the prieſts office, or, at leaſt, before they had entered upon it; nor is this mention of a burnt-offering and ſacrifices any proof of Jethro's meeting Moſes after the giving of the law, ſince, before that ſacrifices were in uſe, and Jethro being a grandchild of Abraham, might have learnt the uſe of them from him: and Aaron came, and all the elders of Iſrael, to eat bread with Moſes's father-in-law, before God; the tents of Moſes being on the eaſt ſide of the tabernacle, as Aben Ezra ſays, in which was the mercy-ſeat and cherubim, between which the divine Majeſty was; but there is no need to ſuppoſe that the tabernacle was now built, for this tent of Moſes might be placed before or near the pillar of cloud in which Jehovah was; or the ſenſe may only be, that they ate their food in the preſence of God, in the fear of the Lord, with gladneſs and ſingleneſs of heart, as good men do; and eſpecially as this was an euchariſtic ſacrifice unto God they partook of, Aaron and the elders came out of a civil reſpect to Jethro, to take a meal with him, as well as to join with him in a religious action: the bread they ate, was, no doubt, the manna, which Jethro, though a Midianite, yet a deſcendant of Abraham, and a good man, partook of, and is put for the whole repaſt, the fleſh of the ſacrifices and what elſe were eaten: no mention is made of Moſes, nor was there any need of it, as Aben Ezra obſerves, it being his tent in which they were: the Targum of Jonathan adds, "Moſes ſtood "and miniſtred before them;" and ſo ſays Jarchi; which is not very probable, it being not agreeable to the dignity of his ſtation and office.

℣. 13. And it came to paſs on the morrow, &c.] The above Targum paraphraſes it, "on the day "after the day of atonement:" and ſo Jarchi obſerves the ſame, out of a book of theirs called Siphri; but rather, this was either the day after the entertainment of Jethro with Aaron and the elders in the tent of Moſes, or the day after Jethro's coming, as Aben Ezra: that Moſes ſat to judge the people; though his father-in-law was come to viſit him, yet he did not neglect the care of his people, and the buſineſs that lay upon his hands for their good, civil and religious; but the very day following his coming, cloſely applied himſelf to hear and judge cauſes; and ſuch a vaſt body of people muſt find him work enough; and eſpecially if we conſider their quarrelſome diſpoſition, for if they were ſo to one another, as they were to Moſes and Aaron, they muſt be very litigious; however Moſes bore with them, and attended to their cauſes, to do juſtice and judgment among them, being now made a prince and a judge over them by divine authority, and whom they acknowledged as ſuch: and the people ſtood by Moſes, from the morning unto the evening; not that a ſingle cauſe was ſo long a trying, but there being ſo many of them in one day, that they laſted from the morning to night; ſo that when one cauſe was diſpatched and the parties diſmiſſed, another ſucceeded, and ſo continued all the day long: Moſes he ſat as judge, with great majeſty, gravity, and ſedateneſs, hearkening with all attention to what was ſaid on both ſides, and the people they ſtood, both plaintiff and defendant as became them.

℣. 14. And when Moſes's father-in-law ſaw all that he did to the people, &c.] Or for them [q]; for their information and inſtruction in the laws of God, and for the deciſion of caſes brought before him, according to them; and what a deal of buſineſs was on his hands, and he went through for the good of the people: and he ſaid, what is this thing that thou doeſt to the people? this queſtion he put, not as being ignorant what he did, he ſaw what he did, and underſtood it full well, but this he ſaid to lead on to ſome converſation upon this head: why ſitteſt thou thyſelf alone? no other judge upon the bench with him to aſſiſt him, to take it by turns, and to relieve and eaſe him: and all the people ſtand by thee from morning unto even? not being able to get their cauſes heard and tried, there being ſo many of them; and therefore ſome were obliged to wait all day long, before they could have their buſineſs done, which was both fatiguing to him and them.

℣. 15. And Moſes ſaid unto his father-in-law, &c.] In anſwer to his queſtion; and there were two things, as Aben Ezra obſerves, he did to the people, and for which they came to him; the one is obſerved in this verſe and the other in the next: becauſe the people come unto me to enquire of God; of his mind and will in certain caſes, and of his ſtatutes and laws, as the following verſe ſhews; what they ſhould obſerve, and according to which they ſhould conduct themſelves: they came to enquire what God would have them to do; and in doubtful caſes, what was his will and pleaſure, and to deſire Moſes to inform them; and if the things were of ſuch a nature that he could not eaſily and readily do it, then to enquire of God for them, which in after-times was done by Urim and Thummim.

℣. 16. When they have a matter they come unto me, &c.] This is the other thing he did for them, as the above writer obſerves; which being laſt mentioned, he ſpeaks of firſt, as follows, meaning that when there was a matter in difference between two perſons or more, and they could not agree it among themſelves, then they brought it to him to be heard and decided: and I judge between one and another; hear what they have to ſay on both ſides, and then judge which is in the right and which is in the wrong, and determine what is to be done, according to the laws of God, or according to the rules rules of juſtice and equity: and I do make them know the ſtatutes of God and his laws; this relates to the firſt thing, their coming to him to enquire of God, what is his mind and will, or what he would have them do; and in order to this, and in anſwer to their requeſt, he inſtructed them in the laws of God, both civil and religious: this is made uſe of by ſome, to prove that Jethro's coming to Moſes, was after the law was given: but this does not neceſſarily follow, becauſe Moſes, by a divine impulſe, might be directed, immediately to make known to the people, what was the will and mind of God, with reſpect to any particular caſe they enquired about; and rather, this ſeems to furniſh out an argument to the contrary, ſince, if the laws and ſtatutes of God had yet been given on mount Sinai, the people could not have been ignorant of them, and ſo needed not ſuch daily information and inſtruction from Moſes.

[p] ויקח acceptumque obtulit, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Fagius, Druſius. [q] לעם propter populum, Vatablus.

℣. 17. And Moſes's father-in-law ſaid unto him, &c.] Having obſerved what he did, and heard his anſwer to the queſtion he put to him: the thing that thou doſt is not good; not meaning that it was not morally good, or that it was morally evil; for it was certainly a good thing to inquire of the mind and will of God for the people, and to hear and decide matters in controverſy between them, and do juſtice to both parties; but it was not good for the health of Moſes; it was not commodious and convenient for him; it was not for his bodily welfare; it was too much for him, as he explains himſelf in the next verſe.

℣. 18. Thou wilt ſurely wear away, &c.] His natural ſtrength and animal ſpirits, and ſo his fleſh; he feared, his conſtant application and attendance to buſineſs would impair his health, break his conſtitution, and bring him into a conſumption. Moſes was naturally of a ſtrong and vigorous conſtitution: for, forty years after this, even to the time of his death his natural force was not abated; or fading thou wilt fade, or falling thou wilt fall [r]; in alluſion to the leaves of trees in autumn, which fade, and wither, and fall: both thou and the people that is with thee; it was tireſome to the people, as well as fatiguing to Moſes, who, becauſe of the multitude of caſes, were obliged to wait a long time, ſome of them from morning to night, and yet could not get their ſuit to come on, and ſo were obliged to attend next day, and perhaps day after day. The Targum of Jonathan is, "even thou "alſo, Aaron and his ſons, and the elders that are "with them;" and ſo Jarchi; but theſe don't ſeem to have been aſſiſting to him at all, as appears by what follows: for this thing is too heavy for thee; it was too great a burden upon his ſhoulders, what his ſtrength was not equal to; for though his internal abilities were exceeding great, and he had a good will to the work, to ſerve God and his people, yet it was more, humanly ſpeaking, than his bodily ſtrength would admit of, or any mortal man could go through: thou art not able to perform it thyſelf alone; and this Moſes was ſenſible of himſelf afterwards, and ſays the ſame thing, Deut. i. 9.

℣. 19. Hearken now unto my voice, I will give thee counſel, &c.] Jethro being the elder man, and of ſome character and figure, being either a prieſt or prince of Midian, or both, might without incurring a cenſure, take upon him to give advice to Moſes, a younger man, and his ſon-in-law, though he was ſuperior to him in office and in parts; and eſpecially ſince his advice proceeded from a ſincere and cordial regard for his health and welfare: and God ſhall be with thee; and ſucceed the advice he gave, which he perſuaded himſelf would be agreeable to the will of God, and attending to it he would proſper, and find that the method taken would be bleſſed of God, and iſſue in his own good and the good of the people; or it may be taken prayer-wiſe, as by ſome, may God be with thee [s]; to direct thee to what thou ſhouldſt do, either to take the advice, or reject it; and be it as it will, he wiſhed him well, and that he might have his health, and that as his day was, his ſtrength might be: be thou for the people to Godward; or on the part of God, as Aben Ezra interprets it; that part of his work he adviſed him to retain by all means, which lay more immediately between God and the people; to be a mediator between them; to tranſact affairs for them with God; to inquire his mind and will in matters difficult and doubtful; to be, as Jarchi expreſſes it, a meſſenger and interpreter between them, and an enquirer of judgments of him, or what ſtatutes and judgments he would have obſerved by them: that thou mayeſt bring the cauſes unto God; concerning which, as yet, he had given no directions as a rule to go by.

℣. 20. And thou ſhalt teach them ordinances and laws, &c.] Both with reſpect to things civil and religious, which he ſhould receive from God; and ſhalt ſhew them the way wherein they muſt walk; the path of faith and duty, the way of truth, holineſs and righteouſneſs: and the work that they muſt do; both with reſpect to God, and one another, the various duties and exerciſes of religion, every thing relating to their moral, religious and civil conduct.

℣. 21. Moreover, thou ſhalt provide out of all the people, &c.] Or look out [t] from among them; ſee Acts vi. 3. able men; or men of power [u]; meaning not ſo much men of ſtrong and robuſt conſtitutions, who, as Aben Ezra ſays, are able to bear labour; but men that have ſtrength of heart, as Ben Gerſom expreſſes it, men of ſpirit and courage, and are not afraid to do juſtice, to repreſs vice, and countenance virtue; or as Maimonides ſays [w], have a ſtrong heart, or courage and boldneſs to deliver the oppreſſed from the hands of the oppreſſor. Jarchi interprets it of rich men, of men of ſubſtance, who have no need to flatter, or play the hypocrite, and to know the faces of men: ſuch as fear God; who have the fear of God before their eyes, and on their hearts in all they do, and therefore can't do thoſe things that others do, who are deſtitute of it; can't give a cauſe the wrong way wilfully, or pervert judgment, and are the reverſe of the character of the unjuſt judge, that neither feared God nor regarded man, Luke xviii. 2: men of truth; true men, ſincere, upright and faithful men, that love truth and hate lies and falſhood, and will take ſome pains to get at the truth of a cauſe, to enquire where it lies, and purſue and encourage it where it is found, and diſcourage to the uttermoſt falſhood, lies and perjury: hating covetouſneſs; in themſelves and others, filthy lucre, diſhoneſt gain, mammon of unrighteouſneſs, and ſo not to be bribed and corrupted, and execute wrong judgment for the ſake of money: and place ſuch over them to be rulers of thouſands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens; meaning not courts courts of judicature, consisting of such a number of judges, for such a court was never known to have a thousand judges upon the bench at once; the highest court of judicature that ever was among the Jews, which was long after this time, consisted but of seventy or seventy-one: but the sense is, that each of these should have such a number of persons, or rather families under their care, who, when they applied unto them for justice, should faithfully administer it to them; see the note on ℣. 25.

[r] נבל תבל marceſcendo marceſſes, Montanus; ſo Ainſworth; cadendo cades, Pagninus. [s] ויהי אלהים עמך ſee Poole in loc. [t] תחזה videbis, Montanus; tu proſpice, Tigurine verſion; tu videto, Druſius. [u] אנשי חיל viros virtutis, Montanus, Vatablus; viros fortitudinis, Cartwright. [w] Hilchot Sanhedrin, c. 2. §. 7.

℣. 22. And let them judge the people at all times, &c.] In their several districts, whenever a matter of difference between man and man arises, and the case is brought before them, let them judge impartially between them, and determine what is right and wrong, and execute judgment and justice truly; which would take off a great deal of business from the hands of Moses: and it shall be that every great matter they shall bring to thee; any affair of great importance, and difficult of determination, and about which the judges may have some doubt in their minds, and they are not clear as to the decision of it; this, they the judges, not the people, were to bring to Moses: but every small matter; what is of no great importance, or is easy of decision, where the right and the wrong clearly appear, and there is no difficulty in the determination of it: so shall it be easier for thyself; to go through the business that would be necessarily devolved upon him, as the chief ruler and governor, supreme judge, lawgiver, leader and commander: and they shall bear the burden with thee; of ruling and judging the people, they taking a share of it, it would sit the lighter and easier upon him; and the whole seems to be wise and prudent counsel.

℣. 23. If thou shalt do this thing, &c.] Hearken to the advice given, and put it in execution, by chusing out of the people, and placing over them judges qualified, as directed: and God command thee so; for he did not desire him to follow his advice any further than it appeared to be according to the will of God, which he doubted not he would enquire about; and if he found it was agreeable to it, and should pursue it: then thou shalt be able to endure; to continue in his office and post, and hold on for years to come, God granting him life and health; whereas otherwise, in all human probability, he must waste and wear away apace: and all this people shall also go to their place in peace; having had their cases heard and tried, and their differences adjusted to satisfaction; and quick dispatch being made, they would return to their tents or places of abode in much peace of mind, and sit down contented with the determination made, and pleased that the law-suit was not protracted to any unreasonable length of time. Jarchi interprets all this people, of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and the seventy elders that came with him, as if they by this means would be eased, and so pleased with it.

℣. 24. So Moses hearkened to the voice of his father in law, &c.] Considered what he said, weighed it well in his mind, and judged it good advice, and determined to follow it: and did all that he had said; by chusing such men as he directed to, and committing the judgment of the people to them, as follows:

℣. 25. And Moses chose able men out of all Israel, &c.] He looked among them, and selected the best of them, such as most answered to the qualifications it was requisite they should have; and though only one of them is here mentioned, which is the first Jethro gave, yet no doubt they were all attended to, though not expressed: and made them heads over the people; rulers, governors, judges and officers; this is a general word, comprehending their several particular offices they sustained; which seem to be chiefly distinguished by the different numbers of people, or families, under them, otherwise their work and office were much the same: rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens; just as Jethro advised, ℣. 21. According to the Targum of Jonathan, the rulers of thousands were 600, rulers of hundreds 6000, rulers of fifties 12,000, and the rulers of tens 60,000; and so Jarchi; and the like account is given in both the Talmuds [x], where the whole is summed up, amounting to 78600; which account Aben Ezra disapproves of, and thinks not credible: it is built upon the number of Israel at this time, when they came out of Egypt, being 600,000 men; and so if there was a ruler to every thousand men, there must be 600 of them, and so on; but these thousands may intend not individual persons, but families, that these were appointed over, as the families of Israel and Judah are called their thousands, Judg. vi. 15. Mic. v. 2. and this will serve greatly to reduce the number of these judges and officers.

℣. 26. And they judged the people at all seasons, &c.] Any day in the week, or any time in the day, whenever there was any occasion for them, and cases were brought before them: the hard cases they brought unto Moses; that is, the judges brought them to Moses when such came before them which were too hard for them, it was difficult to them to determine rightly about them, then they brought them to be heard and decided by him; for the judges, and not the people, best knew when a case was hard or easy to determine: but every small matter they judged themselves; and gave it as they saw was most agreeable to justice and equity, and did not trouble Moses with it; by which means he was eased of a great deal of business and fatigue, which was Jethro's view in giving the advice he did.

℣. 27. And Moses let his father-in-law depart, &c.] After he had been with him some time, and desired leave to go into his own country, which was granted; or he dismissed [y] him in an honourable way; and as he went out to meet him when he came, if he did not attend him, when he went, some way in person, yet sent a guard along with him both for honour and for safety: and he went his way into his own land; the land of Midian: the Targum of Jonathan, "he went to proselyte all the "children of his own country;" or as Jarchi expresses it, the children of his family; and it is plain that the Kenites and Rechabites descended from him, who in after-times lived among the Jews, and were proselytes to their religion, Judg. i. 16. 1 Chron. ii. 55. Jer. xxxv. 2.

[x] T. Hieros. Sanhedrin, fol. 19. 2. T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 18. 1. Montanus, Vatablus, Drusius, Piscator.

[y] וישלח & dimisit, V. L. Tigurine version,

CHAP. XIX.

IN this chapter we have an account of the coming of the children of Iſrael to mount Sinai, ℣. 1, 2. of the covenant made with them there, the propoſal on the part of God, and their acceptance of it, ℣. 3—8. the previous notice God gave three days before of his appearance on the mount, the orders for their preparation to meet him, and the execution of them, ℣. 9—15. the awful and tremendous appearance of God upon the mount, ℣. 16—20. and the ſtrict charge given, that neither people nor prieſts ſhould come near and gaze, only Moſes and Aaron with him were to come up, bounds being ſet to prevent the reſt, ℣. 21—24. and the chapter is cloſed with obſerving, that Moſes went down from the mount, and delivered to the people what the Lord ſpoke to and by him, ℣. 25.

℣. 1. In the third month, when the children of Iſrael were gone forth out of the land of Egypt, &c.] Which was the month Sivan, and anſwers to part of May and part of June: the ſame day came they into the wilderneſs of Sinai; which had its name from the mountain ſituated in it, and that from the buſhes which grew upon it. Juſtin [z] calls it Synan, which he ſays Moſes occupied, and Strabo [a], Sinnan. Hither they came either on the ſame day they came from Rephidim; which, according to Bunting [b], were eight miles from it, or on the ſame day of the month, as to number, that is, on the 3d day of the 3d month; and ſo Jerom [c] and others ſay, it was on the 47th day after their coming out of Egypt, three days after which they received the law on mount Sinai, it being a generally received notion, that the law was given 50 days after the paſſover; hence the feaſt of weeks is called from thence the feaſt of pentecoſt, or 50 days: or rather this was the firſt day of the month, as Jarchi and R. Moſes; with which agrees the Targum of Jonathan; and ſo was the 45th of their coming out of Egypt, five days after which they received the law; it being a tradition with the Jews, as Aben Ezra obſerves, that that was given on the 6th of Sivan, and may be accounted for thus; on the firſt day they came to Sinai, and encamped there, on the day following Moſes went up to God, ℣. 3. on the third day Moſes gathered the elders together, ℣. 7. and declared to them the words of God, and on the 3d day after that, which was the 6th, the law was delivered to them.

℣. 2. For they were departed from Rephidim, &c.] After they had fought with Amalek, and came to the weſtern part of the mount to Horeb, where the rock was ſmitten for them; and they were come from that now, and encamped at Sinai, after Jethro had paid a viſit to Moſes: and were come to the deſart of Sinai, and had pitched in the wilderneſs; that is, of Sinai, as in the preceding verſe: and there Iſrael encamped before the mount; mount Sinai, from whence the deſart or wilderneſs was called. This, as Jarchi ſays, was on the eaſt ſide of the mount; Horeb and Sinai were but one and the ſame mountain, which had two tops. Horeb was on the weſtern ſide, near to which lay the plain of Rephidim; and Sinai was on the eaſtern ſide, on which the wilderneſs of that name bordered: ſo that the children of Iſrael, when they came from Rephidim, came from the weſtern ſide, and took a circuit about and came to the eaſtern; which, according to a forementioned writer, was eight miles, and was the 12th ſtation or manſion of the children of Iſrael. This number 12 is taken notice of by ſome, as having ſomething ſingular and peculiar in it; there were the 12 tribes of Iſrael, and at their 12th manſion the law was given them; Chriſt had 12 apoſtles, and there are 12 foundations of the new Jeruſalem, and 12000 were ſealed out of every tribe of Iſrael.

℣. 3. And Moſes went up unto God, &c.] Who was in the pillar of cloud upon the top of the mount; this was on the ſecond day, according to the Targum of Jonathan: the Lord called unto him out of the mountain; or had called unto him, as Aben Ezra, ſince without his leave he could not have gone up. He called to him out of the cloud upon the top of the mountain to come up, and being come near him, he called to him, and ſpoke with an articulate voice, as follows: ſaying, thus ſhalt thou ſay to the houſe of Jacob, and tell the children of Iſrael; which are the ſame, and are deſcribed as deſcending from the ſame perſon, who was called by both names; the one was his name in the former and lower ſtate of his life, the other in the latter and more proſperous one; and his poſterity are called by theſe two names, as biſhop Patrick obſerves, to put them in mind, that they who had lately been as low as Jacob, when he went to Padan-Aram, were now grown as great as God made him when he came from thence, and was called Iſrael.

℣. 4. Ye have ſeen what I did to the Egyptians, &c.] The plagues he brought upon them in Egypt, and the deſtruction of them at the Red Sea; theſe things they were eye-witneſſes of, and needed no other proof or evidence to convince and aſſure them of them, and therefore muſt be under obligation to attend to what he was about to recommend unto them, for which reaſon this is obſerved: and how I bare you on eagles wings; that is, as on eagles wings, the note of ſimilitude being wanting, but to be ſupplied; for it cannot be thought that they were literally bore on eagles wings; but as that creature is reported to be very affectionate to its young, and careful of it, and as is ſaid only to one; for having more, it will caſt away all but one, and reſerve that, which it carefully nouriſhes; and being ſwift of flight, and ſtrong of wing, it will in a remarkable manner take its young upon it, and ſafely and ſwiftly convey it where it pleaſes; of which ſee the note on Deut. xxxii. 11. The eagle excels other birds both in its ſtrength and in the bigneſs of its body; and eſpecially its pectoral muſcles, by which its wings are ſupported, are very ſtrong, ſo that it can carry its young, and other things, on its back and wings; and ſome ſuch thing nature itſelf ſeems to have required, as naturaliſts obſerve [d]; and there are ſome hiſtories, which, if true, greatly confirm and illuſtrate this. Ælianus [e] reports of Tilgamus, a Baby-

[z] E Trogo, l. 36. c. 1
[a] Geograph. l. 16. p. 520.
[b] Travels, p. 82.
[c] Epiſt. Fabiolæ de 42 manſion. fol. 15. c. 1. tom. 3.
[d] Scheuchzer. Phyſica Sacra, vol. 2. p. 186.
[e] Hiſt. Animal. l. 12. c. 21.

Babylonian, and who afterwards was king of Babylon, and who seems to be the Tilgath Pilneser of the scriptures, king of Assyria, that when a lad, being thrown down from the top of a tower, an eagle, which is a very quick-sighted bird, saw him, and before he came to the ground, flew under him, took him upon its back, and carried him into a garden, and gently let him down. So it is related of Aristomenes [f], that as he was casting headlong into a deep ditch by the Lacedæmonians, where they used to throw condemned malefactors, an eagle flew under him, and bore him on its wings, and carried him to the bottom, without any hurt to any part of his body. Jarchi observes, that whereas other birds carry their young between their feet, for fear of those that fly above them, the eagle flying above all others, and so in no fear of them, carries its young upon its wings, judging it better that a dart should pierce that than its young. The Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem paraphrase the words, "and I bore you on clouds, "as on eagles wings;" which covered, and protected, and sustained them, as the eagles wings do its young; the former adds, from Pelusium, a city in Egypt, supposed by the Targumist to be the same with Rameses; where Jarchi observes the people of Israel were very swiftly gathered together as the place of their rendesvouz, and were as safely brought from thence to the place where they now were. Thus the Lord shewed an affectionate concern for Israel, took them under his care and protection, stood between them and the Egyptians in a pillar of cloud, and secured them from their arrows, and swiftly and safely removed them from the land of Egypt to the place where they now were, distinguishing them from all other nations, having chosen them to be a special people to himself: and brought you unto myself; to the mountain of God, where he had appeared to Moses, and given this as a sign and token of the truth of his mission, that he and Israel, when brought out of Egypt by him, should serve him on this mount; and now they were brought thither, where he was about not only to grant his presence in a very singular manner, but to deliver his law unto them, and enter into a covenant with them, and establish and settle them as his people; so that they were a people near unto the Lord, taken into covenant, and indulged with communion with him, and made partakers of various distinguished blessings of his: both the above Targums are, "I brought "you to the doctrine of my law," to receive it at this mount.

ver. 5. Now therefore, &c.] Since they had received such marks of his favour, and were laid under great obligations to him: if ye will obey my voice indeed; truly, sincerely and heartily; or in hearkening hearken, or in obeying obey [g]; that is, closely and attentively hearken to what he should say to them, and thoroughly and constantly yield a chearful obedience to his commands: and keep my covenant; now about to be made with them, which would consist of promises of good things to be done to them on his part, and of duties to be performed by them on their part, and so would constitute a formal covenant by stipulation and restipulation: then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people; be as highly valued by him, and as carefully preserved as the richest treasure among men; even as the treasure of princes, consisting of gold and silver, precious stones, pearls and jewels, and every thing that is valuable; and of this he would give such proof and demonstration, as would make it appear that they were esteemed by him above all people upon the face of the earth; being chosen for his peculiar treasure, and redeemed out of the house of bondage and slavery to be his peculiar people, and distinguished from all others by particular favours and blessings: for all the earth is mine; as it is, and the inhabitants of it, by creation, sustentation, preservation and dominion, all being made, upheld, preserved and governed by him; and therefore, as he had a right to all, could chuse what part he pleased for his special use and service; or though all the earth is mine [h], as Marinus in Aben Ezra, which yet the latter does not seem to approve of; and then the sense is, though the whole world was his, and all that is in it, yet such was his special affection, and peculiar regard to Israel, as to chuse them, and esteem them as his portion and inheritance, his jewels and peculiar treasure.

ver. 6. And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, &c.] Instead of being in a state of servitude and bondage, as they had been in Egypt, they should be erected into a kingdom, become a body politic, a free state, a commonwealth governed by its own laws, and those laws of God's making; yea, they should be a kingdom to him, and he be more immediately the king of them, as he was not of others, the government of Israel being a theocracy; and this kingdom should consist of men that were priests, who had access to God, served him, and offered sacrifice to him; or of men greatly esteemed and honoured, as priests were in those times. Jarchi interprets it, a kingdom of princes, as the word sometimes signifies; the subjects of this kingdom were princes, men of a princely spirit, and these princes, like those of the king of Babylon, who boasted they were altogether kings; and like the Roman senators, of whom the embassador of Pyrrhus said, that he saw at Rome as many kings as he saw senators. And so here all the Targums render it, kings and priests; to which reference seems to be had not only in 1 Pet. ii. 9. but in Rev. i. 6. they were kings when they got the victory, as in the times of Joshua, over the several kings of Canaan, and had their kingdoms divided among them; and before the priesthood was settled in the family of Aaron, every head of a family in Israel was a priest; and they were all priests at the passover, as Philo [i] observes: and so the spiritual Israel of God are kings and priests; they are kings, having the power and riches of kings; having got through Christ the victory over sin, satan and the world; and being possessed of the kingdom of grace, and heirs of the kingdom of glory; and priests, being allowed to draw nigh to God, to present themselves, souls and bodies, a holy and living sacrifice, to offer to him the sacrifices of prayer and praise thro' Christ, by whom they become acceptable to him: and an holy nation; being separated from all others, and devoted to the worship and service of God, having holy laws, and holy ordinances, and a holy service, and a holy place to perform it in, and holy persons to attend unto it, as they afterwards had. In allusion to this, the spiritual Israel, or people of God, are also called so, 1 Pet. ii. 9. being chosen unto holiness, redeemed from all iniquity, called with

[f] Pausaniæ Messenica, sive, l. 4. p 250, 251.

[g] שמוע תשמעו obediendo obedieritis, Pagninus, Montanus; audiendo audiveritis, Drusius; auscultando auscultabitis, Piscator; so Ainsworth.

[h] כי tametsi, Vatablus; quamvis, Piscator, Drusius.

[i] De vita Mosis, l. 3. p. 686.

with an holy calling, ſanctified by the blood of Chriſt, and made holy by the Spirit of God, and under the influence of his grace live holy lives and converſations: theſe are the words thou ſhalt ſpeak unto the children of Iſrael; what he would have them do, and they were bound to do in a way of duty to him, and what he in a way of grace would do for them, and they ſhould be unto him.

℣. 7. And Moſes came and called for the elders of the people, &c.] After he had heard the above words from the mouth of God, he came down from the mount into the camp of Iſrael, and ſent for the elders or principal men of the tribes and families of Iſrael to come to him: and being gathered together, laid before their faces all theſe words, which the Lord commanded him; expreſſed them in the plaineſt manner, ſet them in the cleareſt light to their minds and conſciences; ſo that they thoroughly underſtood them, were fully convinced of the propriety of theſe things God required of them, and their obligation to obſerve them, and ſaw plainly the greatneſs and importance of what he promiſed unto them.

℣. 8. And all the people anſwered together, &c.] By their heads and repreſentatives, the elders, ſummoned before Moſes, to whom he declared the whole will of God; or this being communicated by them to their reſpective tribes and families, they were all of one mind; there was not a contradicting voice among them, they all gave the ſame anſwer, or all united in returning for anſwer what follows: all that the Lord hath ſpoken, we will do; obey his voice in all things he directs unto, or commands to be done, and keep the covenant he ſhould make with them, and obſerve whatever was required on their parts; which was well ſpoken, if with the heart, and if under a conſciouſneſs of their own weakneſs, they had expreſſed their deſire of dependence upon the grace of God to enable them to perform, ſee Deut. v. 28, 29. The Septuagint verſion adds, and we will hear, or be obedient, as in ch. xxiv. 7: and Moſes returned the words of the people unto the Lord; not for his information, who knew very well what they had ſaid, but for the diſcharge of his office as a mediator and meſſenger between God and them: this, according to Jarchi, was on the third day of the month.

℣. 9. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] As the Targum of Jonathan, on the third day; though Jarchi ſays the fourth; which ſeems not ſo well to agree with his words on the preceding verſe, ſince it ſeems to be at the ſame time that Moſes returned the words of the people to the Lord, that he ſaid what follows to him: lo, I come unto thee in a thick cloud; which was different from the pillar of cloud in which he went before the people, and now ſtood in it on the top of the mount; for he ſpeaks not now of his preſent appearance to Moſes, but of his appearance on the mount three days after; wherefore the Septuagint verſion wrongly renders it, in a pillar of cloud; there were appearances of the divine Majeſty in a cloud frequently afterwards, both in the Old and New Teſtament, ſee Exod. xl. 34. 1 Kings viii. 10, 11. Matt. xvii. 5. and ſo Chriſt, the mighty angel, is ſaid to be clothed with a cloud, Rev. x. 1. And from ſuch appearances as theſe, the heathens have repreſented their deities, as Apollo [k], Venus [l], Juno [m], and others, coming in a cloud, or clothed with one: that the people may hear when I ſpeak with thee, and believe thee for ever; they had believed Moſes already, particularly at the Red Sea, when they ſaw what was done there, but afterwards, as it ſeems, returned to their unbelief again; but now, as they would be eye-witneſſes of the cloud in which the Lord would appear to Moſes, ſo they would be ear-witneſſes of what he ſaid to him; for though the cloud was a thick one in which he came, ſo that they could not ſee any ſimilitude, any likeneſs at all, not ſo much as a brightneſs, a ſhining glory as they had ſeen in the pillar of cloud, ſee ch. xvi. 7, 10. yet, the voice of God out of it was ſo loud, when he ſpoke with Moſes, that this vaſt body of people being placed around, at the lower part of the mount, heard plainly and diſtinctly all that was ſaid; ſo that they were ſure they were not impoſed upon by Moſes, but that the law he delivered to them was from God, ſince they heard it with their own ears; and therefore they and their poſterity believed it for ever, and never entertained the leaſt diſtruſt of the divinity and authority of it. This caſe was widely different from that of Numa or Mahomet, the one pretending to receive inſtructions from the goddeſs Egeria, and the other from the angel Gabriel; but all depended upon their own word, none were, nor did they pretend that any were eye or ear-witneſſes of what they declared; but ſuch was the caſe here: and Moſes told the words of the people unto the Lord; the ſame which he is ſaid to return to him in the preceding verſe, and here repeated for the confirmation of it, and to lead on to what the Lord had to ſay further concerning them.

℣. 10. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] On the fourth day, according to the Targum of Jonathan: go unto the people; go down from the mountain, from the top of it, where he now was, to the camp of Iſrael, which was pitched before it: and ſanctify them to-day and to-morrow; the fourth and fifth days of the month; that is, he was to inſtruct them how they were to ſanctify themſelves in an external way, by waſhing themſelves, as after mentioned, their bodies and clothes, and by abſtaining from all ſenſual pleaſures, lawful or unlawful: and let them waſh their clothes; which the Jews underſtood not of their garments, but of their bodies alſo; teaching them by theſe outward things the neceſſity of internal purity and holineſs, to appear before God: theſe outward rites were in uſe before the law of Moſes, as appears from Gen. xxxv. 2. and the heathens themſelves have ſimilar notions of the cleanneſs of bodies and garments, as well as the purity of mind, being acceptable to their deities [n].

℣. 11. And be ready againſt the third day, &c.] Not the third day of the month, but the third day from hence, this being the fourth, and the morrow the fifth, and the third day the day following that, the ſixth, on which day it is generally agreed by the Jews, that the law was given, ſee the note on ℣. 16. for the third day the Lord will come down in the ſight of all the people, upon mount Sinai; which muſt be underſtood, conſiſtent with his omnipreſence, and is only expreſſive of ſome viſible diſplay of his power, and of ſome ſen-

[k] Nube & candentes humeros amictus
Augur Apollo. Horat. Carmin. l 1. ode 2.

[l] Et Venus æthereos inter dea candida nimbos
Dona ferens aderat. — Virgil. Æneid. l. 8. prope finem.

Hoc Venus obſcuro faciem circumdata nimbo Detulit. — Ib. Æneid. 12.

[m] Agens hyemem nimbo ſuccincta, per auras. Ib. Æneid. 10.

[n] Caſta placent ſuperis, pura cum veſte venito. Tibullus.

ſenſible token of his preſence to the people; he was now upon it in the pillar of cloud, but then he would appear in another manner, and deſcend in a thick cloud and fire, which all the people would ſee, though they could not ſee the ſimilitude of any thing in it.

℣. 12. And thou ſhalt ſet bounds to the people round about, &c.] That is, round about the mountain, by drawing a line, throwing up a foſs or ditch, or elſe by laying up heaps of ſtones or ſand, which might be come at eaſily, or buſhes and branches of trees, which grew thick on the mount, from whence it had its name; but be it what will that were uſed, theſe were to ſignify, that ſo far the people might go, but no further, which their curioſity might prompt them to: ſaying, take heed unto yourſelves that ye go not up into the mount; ſo far were they from being allowed to go up to the top of it, that they were not allowed to aſcend it at all, or to go any further than where the aſcent or riſe began; it was at their peril to aſcend, and this was what they were to take heed unto, leſt they incurred danger: or touch the border of it; it being the mountain of God, and relatively holy through his preſence on it: whoſoever toucheth the mount, ſhall be ſurely put to death; which ſevere law was made to deter them from any attempt to go up the mountain, ſince it was death even to touch it, ſee Heb. xii. 18.

℣. 13. There ſhall not a hand touch it, &c.] The mountain or the border of it, which is repeated that it might be taken notice of; and to ſhew that it would be reſented if they were to ſtretch out their hand and only lightly touch it, much more, ſhould they ſet their feet upon it and attempt to aſcend it: or rather, ſhall not touch him[o]; that is, the man that ſhall touch the mountain; he ſhall be ſo deteſtable and abominable whoever touches it or breaks through the bounds of it, and attempts to aſcend it, that no man ſhall follow him to lay hold on him, in order to bring him back to juſtice, but ſhall diſpatch him at once in one or other of the ways directed to: but he ſhall ſurely be ſtoned, or ſhot through; if near at hand, all about him ſhall riſe upon him, and take up ſtones and ſtone him; but if he is got at a diſtance, then they were to ſhoot arrows at him; and in this way Aben Ezra interprets it; the words, ſays he, refer to the man that toucheth the mount, who is not to be followed and apprehended, but thoſe that ſee him, and are near, abiding in the place where they are, are to ſtone him immediately, and if afar off they are to throw darts at him: though the Targum of Jonathan ſeems to underſtand it, as if puniſhment would be immediately inflicted upon ſuch a perſon, not by the hands of men, but by the hand of God; for it ſays, ſuch an one ſhall be ſtoned with hail-ſtones, and fiery darts ſhall be ſpread upon him; or, as the Jeruſalem Targum, ſhall be ſhot at him: whether it be beaſt, or man, it ſhall not live; that touches the mountain, and ſo it is explained, Heb. xii. 20. the word beaſt comprehends all kinds of beaſts, wild and tame, and all ſorts of cattle, of the herd or flock; as the word man takes in women as well as men, as Ben Gerſom obſerves; Aben Ezra thinks, fowls are not mentioned, becauſe they cannot be taken, but fly away immediately; but then they might be ſhot: when the trumpet ſoundeth long, they ſhall come up to the mount; this, according to Jarchi, was a trumpet of a ram's horn; the word uſed in the Arabic language ſignifying a ram; but it is a mere fancy and fable of his, that this was of the ram of Iſaac which was ſacrificed in his ſtead; it is much more likely that there was indeed no real trumpet, only a ſound was formed like the ſound of one; and it is highly probable, was formed by the miniſtring angels; Aben Ezra obſerves, that the ſound of a trumpet was never heard until the day of the decalogue, until the day that was given; and that there was not a greater wonder on mount Sinai than this: the deſign and uſe of it was to gather this vaſt body of people together, to come and hear what God had to ſay unto them; and when its ſound was protracted to a great length, or was in one continued tone, and ſomewhat lower, as is uſual when a trumpet is about to ceaſe blowing, then the people were to take it as a token that they ſhould approach the mountain; not to aſcend it, but come to the lower and nether part of it, where bounds were ſet to direct them how far they might go and no further: ſo the Septuagint verſion is, "when the voices (or thunders) and the trum-"pets and the cloud departed from the moun-"tain, they went up to the mountain:" a certain Jewiſh writer[p] interprets this, not of the people in general, but of Aaron and his ſons, and of the ſeventy elders, ſee ℣. 24.

℣. 14. And Moſes went down from the mount unto the people, &c.] The ſame day that he went up, the fourth day of the month: and ſanctified the people; inſtructed them and ordered them what they ſhould do for their ſanctification, in order to their hearing the law from the mouth of the lord: and they waſhed their clothes; as the Lord had directed Moſes to enjoin them, and as he had commanded them, ſee the note on ℣. 10.

℣. 15. And he ſaid unto the people, be ready againſt the third day, &c.] The third day from thence, the ſixth of the month Sivan, againſt which day they were to prepare themſelves, by waſhing their garments, and all other outward acts of ſanctification and purity they were directed to, that they might be ready for the ſervice of that day, to hear and receive the law from God himſelf: Aben Ezra has this note on the paſſage, "perhaps not "a man ſlept that night, that he might hear the "voice of the Lord in the morning, as was the "way or cuſtom of the high prieſt on the day of "atonement;" that is, not to ſleep the night before: come not at your wives; or, do not draw nigh to a woman[q], to lie with her; meaning not with a ſtrange woman, or one that was not his wife, for that was not lawful at any time; nor with a menſtruous woman who was unclean, and ſo forbidden, but with a man's own wife: what was lawful muſt now be abſtained from, for the greater ſanctification and ſolemnity of the ſervice of this day, ſee 1 Cor. vii. 5. ſo Chæremon[r] the ſtoic ſays of the Egyptian prieſts, that when the time is at hand that they are to perform ſome very ſacred and ſolemn ſervice, they ſpend ſeveral days in preparing for it; ſometimes two and forty, ſometimes more, ſometimes leſs, but never under ſeven; when they abſtain from all animals, and from all kind of herbs and pulſe, and eſpecially from venereal venereal converſation with women; and to this latter Juvenal [s] the poet has reſpect.

3

[o] לא תגע בו non tanget eum, Vatablus, Druſius, non feriet eum, Tigurine verſion. [p] R. Samuel Ben Hophni, apud Aben Ezram, in loc. [q] תגשו אל אשה μη προσιλθητε γυναικι Sept. to a woman, Ainſworth. [r] Apud Porphyr. de Abſtinentia, l. 4. §. 7. Vid. Clement. Alexand. Stromat. l. 1. p. 306.

℣. 16. And it came to paſs on the third day in the morning, &c.] The ſixth of the month, according to the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi; on which day, as the Jews generally ſay [t], the law was given, and which they alſo obſerve, was a ſabbath-day: yea, they are ſometimes ſo very particular as to fix the hour of the day, and ſay [u], it was the ſixth hour of the day, or 12 o'clock at noon, that Iſrael received the decalogue, and at the ninth hour, at three o'clock in the afternoon, returned to their ſtations: there were thunders, and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount; which were to awaken the attention of the people to what they were to hear and receive, and to ſtrike their minds with an awe of the divine Being; and to add to the ſolemnity of the day, and the ſervice of it; and to ſignify the obſcurity and terror of the legal diſpenſation, and the wrath and curſe that the tranſgreſſors of the law might expect, even an horrible tempeſt of divine vengeance, ſee Heb. xii. 18. and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; or, exceeding ſtrong [w]; being blown by the mighty angels, and by ten thouſand of them, with whom the Lord now deſcended: ſo that all the people that was in the camp trembled; at the ſound of it, it was ſo loud and terrible, and it ſo pierced their ears and their hearts: a different effect the goſpel-trumpet, the jubilee-trumpet, the joyful ſound of love, grace, and mercy, has upon ſenſible ſinners, and on true believers: the law with its curſes terrifies, the goſpel with its bleſſings comforts.

℣. 17. And Moſes brought forth the people out of the camp, &c.] Which was before the mountain and near it, when the above tokens were given of the divine preſence on it; as they were thrown into a pannic upon the ſound of the trumpet, it was, perhaps, with ſome difficulty that they were brought out of the camp, or perſuaded to quit it; and nothing ſhort of the preſence of Moſes at the head of them, to go before them, and lead them to the foot of the mountain, could have prevailed upon them to have done it: to meet with God; who came forth in ſuch an awful and ſolemn manner, as their king and law-giver, to deliver a body of laws to them, to be the rule of their future conduct: and they ſtood at the nether part of the mount; at the bottom of it, where bounds were ſet, and a fence made, that they ſhould proceed no further, and yet near enough to hear what God ſaid to Moſes and to them.

℣. 18. And mount Sinai was altogether on a ſmoke, &c.] Not from nature, as Vulcano's, but for a reaſon after given; it ſeemed to be one large body of ſmoke, nothing elſe to be ſeen but ſmoke; an emblem of the darkneſs of the legal diſpenſation, which was full of obſcure types and figures, of dark ſhadows and ſmoky ſacrifices, to which the clear day of the goſpel-diſpenſation is oppoſed, ſee 2 Cor. iii. 12—18, becauſe the Lord deſcended upon it in fire; in flaming fire, as the Targums, which ſet the mountain on fire, and cauſed this prodigious ſmoke; for if he, who is a conſuming fire, but toucheth the hills and mountains, they ſmoke, Pſ. civ. 32. and the ſmoke thereof aſcended as the ſmoke of a furnace; ſuch an one as that which Abraham in viſion ſaw, Gen. xv. 17. and the whole mount quaked greatly; to which circumſtance Deborah refers in her ſong; when ſhe ſpeaks of mountains melting and flowing from before the preſence of the God of Iſrael, and particularly of Sinai, Judg. v. 4, 5. and the Pſalmiſt, who makes mention of the earth ſhaking, and the heavens dropping, and of Sinai being moved at his preſence, Pſ. lxviii. 8. it is probable there was an earthquake at this time, which ſometimes attends thunders and lightenings, ſee Rev. xvi. 18.

℣. 19. And when the voice of the trumpet ſounded long, &c.] Not in one continued tone, as before, ℣. 13. where a different word is uſed, and when it decreaſed, and was about to ceaſe, which was to ſummon the people to attend; but now they were come to the foot of the mount, and this ſounding was a preparation to the giving of the law unto them, and was not one continued even tone: but waxed louder and louder; or, going, and exceeding ſtrong; or, ſtrengthening itſelf exceedingly [x]; it went on to an high pitch, until it was exceeding vehement and ſtrong, and ſo ſonorous as ſcarce to be bore: Moſes ſpake; what he ſaid is not here recorded; it is highly probable, as has been obſerved by ſome, that he uttered thoſe words related of him in Heb. xii. 21. I exceedingly fear and quake; ſuch an impreſſion did this loud and ſtrong voice of the trumpet make upon him: and God anſwered him by a voice; a ſtill and gentle one, in order to encourage and comfort him; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, "with a pleaſant and laudable voice, and with delightful words."

℣. 20. And the Lord came down on mount Sinai, &c.] In the above viſible tokens of his preſence and power; otherwiſe he is the incomprehenſible Jehovah, that immenſe and omnipotent Being, who fills heaven and earth, and cannot be contained and circumſcribed in either: on the top of the mount; where the fire he deſcended in reſted, and where the ſmoke and thick cloud were, as a token of his preſence: and the Lord called Moſes up to the top of the mount; who either was at the bottom of it with the people, or in a higher aſcent of it between God and them: and Moſes went up; to the top of it, where the Lord was, as he ordered him: a certain traveller [y] tells us that the top of this mount was ſcarce 30 feet in circumference.

℣. 21. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, go down, &c.] As ſoon as he was got to the top of the mount he was bid to go down again to the bottom, with a meſſage to the people: charge the people, leſt they break through unto the Lord to gaze; to ſee if they could obſerve any ſimilitude or likeneſs of God, that they might have an idea of it in their minds, or make an image like unto it; to prevent which, the Lord, knowing the vanity and curioſity of their minds, ordered Moſes to give them a ſtrict charge not to tranſgreſs the bounds ſet them, or to break down or break through the fence of ſtones and ſand, or hedge of buſhes, brambles, and branches of trees, or whatever was placed for bounds: and many of them periſh; or fall

[s] Ille petit veniam quoties non abſtinet uxor,
Concubitu, ſacris obſervandiſque diebus. Juvenal, Satyr 6.

[t] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 86. 2. & Yoma, fol. 4. 2. Seder Olam Rabba, c. 5. p. 18. [u] Pirke Eliezer, c. 46.
[w] חזק מאד fortis valde, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus; ſo Ainſworth. [x] הולך וחזק מאד προβαινωσαι ισχυροτεραι σφοδρα, Sept. iens & fortificans ſe valde, Montanus; roborans ſe, Vatablus; quum pergeret & invaleſceret valde, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [y] Baumgarten. Peregrinatio, l. 1. c. 24. p. 61.

fall [z]; by the hand of God; either fall by death, or into ſome grievous calamity, as the men of Bethſhemeſh periſhed through looking into the ark, 1 Sam. vi. 19.

℣. 22. And let the prieſts alſo, which come near unto the Lord, &c.] Either the firſt-born, as the Jews generally interpret it, ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra; who were ſanctified to the Lord, and in whoſe ſtead afterwards the Levites were taken; or the ſons of Aaron, who ſhould be, and were potentially, though not actually prieſts, as Ben Gerſom expreſſes it, from an antient book of theirs called Mechilta; or rather, ſome principal perſons, as heads of families and the like, who before the prieſthood was ſettled in the family of Aaron, officiated as prieſts, and drew nigh to God, and offered up ſacrifices for themſelves and others, and were diſtinguiſhed from others by this character, and therefore do not intend princes, as ſome interpret the word; for the deſcription of them will not agree to them, but plainly points to a ſort of men, to whom it was peculiar to perform that office. Theſe, Moſes is bid to charge that they ſanctify themſelves; in the ſame manner as the people in general were before ordered, and keep themſelves within the ſame bounds; not daring to tranſgreſs them, becauſe they were perſons that uſed to draw nigh to God in the performance of religious actions: leſt the Lord break forth upon them; and ſmite them, that they die in like manner as he made a breach on Uzzah afterwards for touching the ark of the Lord, 2 Sam. vi. 6, 7, 8.

℣. 23. And Moſes ſaid unto the Lord, &c.] Upon his giving ſuch ſtrict orders both with reſpect to the people and the prieſts: the people cannot come up to mount Sinai; ſuggeſting as if there was no need for him to go down on that account, to give them a charge not to break through and gaze; ſince, as he thought, there was no probability that they ever would attempt it, ſeeing ſuch a ſolemn charge had been given, nor any poſſibility of it, ſince ſuch a fence was made: for thou chargedſt us, ſaying, ſet bounds about the mount, and ſanctify it; and accordingly bounds have been ſet, that the people may not go up it, and the place has been declared ſacred, that ſo none will preſume to do it, according to the ſolemn charge that has been given: ſome [a] read the preceding clauſe by way of interrogation, may not the people come up to mount Sinai? may not any of them? or if any of them, who may? and there was the greater reaſon for aſking ſuch a queſtion, ſince the prieſts that drew near to God might not, and ſo the next words are conceived to be an anſwer to it.

℣. 24. And the Lord ſaid unto him, away, get thee down, &c.] And prevent the people and prieſts from breaking through the bounds and gazing, to which their curioſity would tempt them; as the Lord knew better than Moſes, and it was high time for him to be gone, the matter required haſte, the people were under great temptations of indulging their curioſity, to the peril of their lives: and thou ſhalt come up, thou, and Aaron with thee; which is thought to be an anſwer to the queſtion, who might come up? only himſelf and Aaron, who was his prophet and ſpokeſman, and concerned with him in his miracles, and in conducting the people of Iſrael; and who was to be chief prieſt, as Moſes was to be, and was the leader and governor of the people: but let not the prieſts and the people break through to come up unto the Lord, leſt he break forth upon them; it required the immediate preſence of Moſes below, and immediate care was to be taken by him, leſt the prieſts and people, led by a vain curioſity, ſhould attempt to aſcend the mount, and come where God was, to ſee if they could obſerve any likeneſs of him; which would ſo provoke him, that in juſt retaliation, that as they had broke through the bounds ſet, he would break forth on them by inflicting ſudden death upon them.

℣. 25. So Moſes went down to the people, &c.] As the Lord commanded him: and ſpake unto them; charging them to keep their diſtance, and not preſume to paſs the line he had drawn, or the foſs or fence he had made: in the Jeruſalem Targum it is added, "come and receive the ten words;" the decalogue or ten commands; and the Targum of Jonathan, "come and receive the law with "the ten words;" the ten commandments of the law, which are delivered in the following chapter.

CHAP. XX.

IN this chapter we have an account of the giving of the law on mount Sinai; the preface to it, ℣. 1, 2, the ten commandments it conſiſts of, ℣. 3—17. the circumſtances attending it, which cauſed the people to remove at ſome diſtance, ℣. 18. when they deſired of Moſes, that he would ſpeak to them and not God, who bid them not fear, ſince this was for the trial of them; but ſtill they kept at a diſtance, whilſt Moſes drew nigh to God, ℣. 19, 20, 21. who ordered him to caution the children of Iſrael againſt idolatry, and directed what ſort of an altar he would have made whereon to offer their ſacrifices, promiſing that where his name was recorded he would grant his preſence and bleſſing, ℣. 22—26.

℣. 1. And God ſpake all theſe words, &c.] Which follow, commonly called the decalogue, or ten commands; a ſyſtem or body of laws, ſelected and adapted to the caſe and circumſtances of the people of Iſrael; ſtriking at ſuch ſins as they were moſt addicted to, and they were under the greateſt temptation of falling into the commiſſion of; to prevent which, the obſervation of theſe laws was enjoined them; not but that whatſoever of them is of a moral nature, as for the moſt part they are, are binding on all mankind, and to be obſerved both by Jew and Gentile; and are the beſt and ſhorteſt compendium of morality that ever was delivered out, except the abridgment of them by our Lord, Matt. xxii. 36—40. the ancient Jews had a notion, and which Jarchi delivers as his own, that theſe words were ſpoken by God in one word; which is not to be underſtood gramatically; but that thoſe laws are ſo cloſely compacted and united together as if they were but one word, and are not to be detached and ſeparated from each other; hence, as the apoſtle James ſays, whoſoever offends in in one point is guilty of all, ch. ii. 10. and if this notion was as early as the firſt times of the goſpel, one would be tempted to think the apoſtle Paul had reference to it, Rom. xiii. 9. Gal. v. 14. though indeed he ſeems to have reſpect only to the ſecond table of the law; theſe words were ſpoke in an authoritative way as commands, requiring not only attention but obedience to them; and they were ſpoken by God himſelf in the hearing of all the people of Iſrael; and were not, as Aben Ezra obſerves, ſpoken by a mediator or middle perſon, for as yet they had not deſired one; nor by an angel or angels, as the following words ſhew, tho' the law is ſaid to be ſpoken by angels, to be ordained by them, in the hands of a mediator, and given by the diſpoſition of them, which perhaps, was afterwards done, ſee Acts vii. 53. Gal. iii. 19. Heb. ii. 2. and the notes there: ſaying; as follows.

[z] נפל πιπτειν, Sept. & corruant, Pagninus, Tigurine verſion; & cadat Montanus, cadant, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius; ſo Ainſworth. [a] So ſome in Vatablus.

℣. 2. I am the Lord thy God, &c.] This verſe does not contain the firſt of theſe commands, but is a preface to them, ſhewing that God had a right to enact and enjoin the people of Iſrael laws; and that they were under obligation to attend unto them with reverence, and chearfully obey them, ſince he was the Lord, the eternal and immutable Jehovah, the Being of beings, who gives being to all creatures, and gave them theirs, and therefore had a right to give them what laws he pleaſed; and he was their God, their Covenant-God, in a ſpecial and peculiar manner, their king and their God, they being a Theocracy, and ſo more immediately under his government, and therefore had laws given them preferable to what any other people had: which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt; where they had been afflicted many years, and reduced to great diſtreſs, but were brought forth with an high hand, and with great riches, and in a very wonderful and miraculous manner; ſo that they were under great obligations to yield a ready and chearful obedience to the will of God: out of the houſe of bondage; or ſervants[b]; that is, where they had been ſervants and ſlaves, but now were made free, and were become a body politic, a kingdom of themſelves, under their Lord, king, law-giver, and Saviour, Jehovah himſelf, and therefore to be governed by laws of his enacting; and this ſhews that this body of laws was delivered out to the people of Iſrael, and primarily belong to them; for of no other can the above things be ſaid.

℣. 3. Thou ſhalt have no other gods before me.] This is the firſt command, and is oppoſed to the polytheiſm of the Gentiles, the Egyptians, from whom Iſrael was juſt come, and whoſe gods ſome of them might have had a favourable opinion of and liking to, and had committed idolatry with; and the Canaanites, into whoſe land they were going; and to prevent their joining with them in the worſhip of other gods, this law was given, as well as to be of ſtanding uſe to them in all generations; for there is but one only living and true God, the former and maker of all things, who only is to be had, owned, acknowledged, ſerved and worſhipped as ſuch; all others have only the name, and are not by nature gods; they are other gods than the true God is; they are not real but fictitious deities; they are other or ſtrange gods to the worſhippers of them, that cry unto them, for they don't anſwer them, as Jarchi obſerves: and now for Iſrael, who knew the true God, who had appeared unto them, and made himſelf known to them by his name Jehovah, both by his word and works, whom he had eſpouſed to himſelf as a choice virgin, to commit idolatry, which is ſpiritual adultery with other gods, with ſtrange gods, that are no gods, and this before God, in the preſence of him, who had took them by the hand when he brought them out of Egypt, and had been a huſband to them, muſt be ſhocking impiety, monſtrous ingratitude, and extremely diſpleaſing to God, and reſented by him; and is, as many obſerve, as if a woman ſhould commit adultery in the preſence of her huſband, and ſo the phraſe may denote the audaciouſneſs of the action, as well as the wickedneſs of it; though, as Ben Melech from others obſerves, if it was done in ſecret it would be before the Lord, who is the omniſcient God, and nothing can be hid from him: ſeveral Jewiſh commentators, as Jarchi, Kimchi, and Aben Ezra, interpret the phraſe before me, all the time I endure, whilſt I have a being, as long as I live, or am the living God, no others are to be had; that is, they are never to be had, ſince the true God will always exiſt: the Septuagint verſion is, beſides me, no other were to be worſhiped with him; God will have no rivals and competitors; though he was worſhipped, yet if others were worſhipped with him, if others were ſet before him and worſhipped along with him, or it was pretended he was worſhipped in them, and even he with a ſuperior and they with an inferior kind of worſhip; yet this was what he could by no means admit of: the phraſe may be rendered againſt me [c]; other gods in oppoſition to him, againſt his will, contrary to the obedience due to him and his precepts: this law, though it ſuppoſes and ſtrongly inculcates the unity of the divine Being, the only object of religious adoration, yet does not oppoſe the doctrine of the trinity of perſons in the Godhead; nor is that any contradiction to it, ſince though the Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Spirit is God, there are not three gods, but three perſons, and theſe three are one God, 1 John v. 7.

℣. 4. Thou ſhalt not make unto thee any graven image, &c.] An image of any thing graven by art or man's device, cut out of wood or ſtone, and ſo any thing that was molten, or caſt into a mold or form, engraved by men, and this in order to be worſhipped; for otherwiſe images of things might be made for other uſes and purpoſes, as the cherubim over the mercy-ſeat, and the brazen ſerpent, and images and impreſſions on coin, which we do not find the Jews themſelves ſcrupled to make uſe of in Chriſt's time on that account; though they vehemently oppoſed the ſetting up any images of the Cæſars or Emperors in their temple, becauſe they ſeemed to be placed there as deities, and had a ſhew of religious worſhip: however, any image of God was not to be made at all, ſince no ſimilitude was ever ſeen of him, or any likeneſs could be conceived; and it muſt be a groſs piece of ignorance, madneſs, and impudence, to pretend to make one, and great impiety to make it in order to be the object of religious worſhip; on which account, not any image, or the image of any thing whatever was to be made: or any likeneſs of any thing that is in heaven above; any form, figure, portrait, or picture of any thing or creature whatever, whether in the ſupreme, ſtarry, or airy heaven; as of angels, which ſome have gone into the the worſhip of; and of the ſun, moon, and ſtars, the hoſt of heaven; and of any of the birds of the air, as the hawk by the Egyptians, and the dove by the Aſſyrians: or that is in the earth beneath; as oxen, ſheep, goats, cats, dogs, &c. ſuch as were the gods of Egypt: or that is in the water under the earth; as of fiſhes, ſuch as were the crocodile of Egypt, the Dagon of the Philiſtines, and the Derceto of the Syrians: this is the ſecond command, as the Targum of Jonathan expreſsly calls it; that is, the firſt part of it, which forbids the making of graven images for worſhip; the other part follows, which is the worſhip of them itſelf: Clemens of Alexandria [d] obſerves, that Numa, king of the Romans, took this from Moſes, and forbid the Romans to make any image of God, like to man or beaſt.

[b] עבדים ſervorum, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [c] על פני contra me, Noldius, No. 1801. p. 731.

℣. 5. Thou ſhalt not bow down thyſelf to them, &c.] Perform any worſhip to them, ſhew any reverence of them by any geſture of the body; one being mentioned, bowing the body, and put for all others, as proſtration of it to the earth, bending the knee, kiſſing the hand, lifting up of hands or eyes to them, or by any outward action expreſſing a religious eſteem of them, as if there was divinity in them: nor ſerve them; in a religious manner, internally or externally, by offering ſacrifice and burning incenſe to them; by praying to, or praiſing of them; by expreſſing love to them, faith and truſt in them, hope and expectation of good things from them, and the like. The reaſon of this ſecond command, relating to the making and worſhipping of images, next follows: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God; jealous of his own honour and glory, and will not give it to another, even to graven images, nor ſuffer it to be given to them without reſenting it; and jealouſy is fierce and cruel, and breaks forth into great wrath, and iſſues in dreadful ſcenes oftentimes among men; as a man that has reaſon to be jealous of his wife, and eſpecially if he takes her and the adulterer in the fact, it often coſts them both their lives, being ſo enraged at ſuch an inſult upon him, and ſuch a violation of the marriage-bed; and thus the great Jehovah, the God of Iſrael, their head and huſband, is repreſented in order to deter from idolatry, or ſpiritual adultery, than which nothing could be more provoking to him: viſiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children; meaning chiefly, if not ſolely, the iniquity of idolatry; which being ſuch an inſult on his honour, crimen læſæ majeſtatis, is treated by him as high-treaſon is among men; not only he puniſhes the authors and perpetrators of it in their own perſons, which is meant by viſiting, but upon their children alſo, which are parts of themſelves; and whatſoever is inflicted on them, is the ſame as on themſelves, and is an addition to, and a ſenſible aggravation of their puniſhment; and eſpecially theſe are viſited in ſuch a manner, when they tread in their father's ſteps, and fill up the meaſure of their iniquity. So the Targum of Jonathan, "viſiting "the iniquity of ungodly fathers on rebellious "children:" unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me; as all idolaters muſt be thought to do, whatſoever love and affection they may pretend to God, by worſhipping idols before him, beſides him, along with him, or him in them: the third, and fourth, and generation are mentioned, becauſe ſometimes parents lived to ſee theſe, and ſo with their eyes beheld the puniſhment inflicted upon their poſterity for their ſins, which muſt be diſtreſſing to them; or however, theſe being but ſmall removes from them, might impreſs their minds and affect them, to think what their ſins would bring upon their deſcendants, who would quickly come after them, and ſhare in the ſad effects of their iniquities, and ſo be a means to deter them from them.

℣. 6. And ſhewing mercy unto thouſands of them that love me, &c.] And ſhew their love by worſhipping God, and him only, by ſerving him acceptably with reverence and godly fear, by a chearful obedience to all his commands, by all religious exerciſes both internal and external, as follows: and keep my commandments; not only this, but all others; for keeping theſe from right principles, and with right views, is an inſtance and evidence of love to God, ſee John xiv. 15, 21, 23. and to ſuch perſons he ſhews mercy and kindneſs, performs acts of grace, and beſtows on them bleſſings of goodneſs; and indeed it is owing to his own grace, mercy and kindneſs to them, that they do love him, and from a principle of love obſerve his precepts; and this is ſhewn to thouſands, to multitudes, who are bleſſed with ſuch grace as to love the Lord, and keep his commandments: though rather this is to be underſtood of a thouſand generations, and not perſons, and ſhould have been ſupplied, as in the preceding verſe, unto a thouſand generations, God being more abundant in ſhewing mercy, and exerciſing grace and goodneſs, than he is rigorous in inflicting puniſhment.

℣. 7. Thou ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, &c.] Make uſe of the name Lord or God, or any other name and epithet of the divine Being, in a light and trifling way, without any ſhew of reverence of him, and affection to him; whereas the name of God ought never to be mentioned, but in a grave and ſerious manner, and with an awe of the greatneſs of his majeſty upon the mind. The Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan reſtrain this to ſwearing by the name of the Lord; and ſo the Jewiſh writers generally interpret it, either of ſwearing lightly, raſhly or falſly; and to this it may very well be extended, though not limited; and ſo forbids, as all prophane oaths, imprecations and curſes by the name of God, which the mouths of wicked men are full of, ſo ſwearing by it in matters trivial, and of no importance; for ſwearing even by the name of the Lord ought not to be uſed, but in matters of moment and conſequence, for the confimation of a thing, and putting an end to ſtrife, and where a matter cannot be determined and decided without an appeal to God. And great care ſhould be taken that a man ſwears to that which is true, and not falſe; for falſe ſwearing, or perjury, is a very grievous ſin, and as it is ſtrictly forbidden, it is ſeverely puniſhed by the Lord, as follows; ſee Lev. xix. 12. Zech. v. 4. this is the third command, and the reaſon enforcing it follows: for the Lord will not hold him guiltleſs that taketh his name in vain; will not look upon him an innocent perſon, and treat him as ſuch; will not acquit and diſcharge him as juſt and righteous; but on the contrary will conſider him as a guilty perſon, a prophaner of his name, and a tranſgreſſor of his law, and will condemn and puniſh him, if not in this world, yet in the world to come; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, by way of explanation, adds, "in the day of the "great judgment;" ſee Mal. iii. 5.

℣. 8. Remember the ſabbath-day to keep it holy.] By abſtaining from all ſervile work and buſineſs, and from all pleaſures and recreations lawful on other other days, and by ſpending it in religious exerciſes, both internal and external. This the Iſraelites are bid to remember, by obſerving it in ſuch a manner, becauſe this command had been given them before at the firſt time the manna was rained about their tents, ch. xvi. 23, 25, 26. and becauſe it was a command of poſitive inſtitution, and not a part of the law of nature, and therefore more liable to be forgotten and neglected; for, as a Jewiſh writer [e] obſerves, all the laws of the decalogue are according to the dictates of nature, the law and light of reaſon, and knowledge of men, excepting this: wherefore no other has this word remember prefixed to it; there being ſomewhat in the light of every man's reaſon and conſcience, to direct and engage him in ſome meaſure to the obſervation of them. In what day of the week this ſabbath was to be kept, next follows; for all to the end of the 11th verſe belongs to this command, which is the fourth.

[d] Stromat. l. 1. p. 304.

℣. 9. Six days ſhalt thou labour, &c.] This is not to be taken for a precept, but a permiſſion; not as a command enjoining men to work and labour with their hands, to provide for themſelves and families things uſeful, and neceſſary, and honeſt in the ſight of God; but as a grant, an allowance of ſo many days to employ themſelves in, for their own profit and advantage, and that of their families; the Lord only reſerving one day out of ſeven for his ſervice, which ought to be looked upon as a ſingular favour, that he required no more of their time for his uſe, and the reſt they might ſpend as they pleaſed, ſo that they did not indulge themſelves in ſin. It is required indeed of all men to labour in ſome ſort and way or another, with their heads or with their hands; tho' all are not obliged to labour in the ſame way, or to the ſame degree, for he that will not work, ought not to eat; but this law is not an injunction of that kind, only a toleration of labour on the ſix days of the week, if proper and neceſſary, when it is forbidden on the ſeventh: and do all thy work; which is incumbent on a man, he is called unto, and is neceſſary to be done for the good of him and his family; particularly care ſhould be taken, that all ſhould be done on the ſix days that could poſſibly be done, and nothing left to be done on the ſeventh.

℣. 10. But the ſeventh day is the ſabbath of the Lord thy God, &c.] Not which he reſted on, and ceaſed from the works of creation in, though he did reſt on the ſeventh day of the creation, and ſo on every other day ſince, as well as that; nor does it appear, nor can it be proved, that this day appointed to the Jews as a ſabbath, was the ſeventh day of the week from the creation of the world; but was either the 7th day of the week from their coming out of Egypt, or from the raining of the manna: but this is called the Lord's ſabbath, or reſt, becauſe enjoined by him to the people of Iſrael, and not to them until they were ſeparated from other people, and were a diſtinct body of men under a certain meridian; for it is impoſſible that one and the ſame day, be it the ſeventh, or any other, ſhould be kept to exactneſs of time by all the inhabitants of the earth; it being night with one part when it is day with another, and not the ſame day to them all: in it thou ſhalt not do any work; of a ſervile nature, exerciſe any trade or any manufactory, or any kind of work for pleaſure or profit, only works of mercy and neceſſity. No labour or handicraft was to be exerciſed, according to the Jewiſh canons [f], until the going out of it, or the appearance of the ſtars: thou, nor thy ſon, nor thy daughter; neither a man nor his children, male and female, ſuch as were under age, and under the tuition, direction and care of their parents, who were to inſtruct them in this kind, and not ſuffer them to work on this day, and much leſs oblige them to it; for as for thoſe that were grown up, and no longer under the inſpection of parents, and were heads of families themſelves, they are included in the word thou, and are in the firſt place charged in this command: thy man-ſervant, nor thy maid-ſervant; this is to be underſtood, according to the Jews, not of hired ſervants, concerning whoſe reſt from labour a man was not bound [g], but of ſuch as were born in their houſe, and bought with their money; and of ſuch men-ſervants as were circumciſed, and in all things profeſſed to be proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion, and to conform to it; for as for one that only received the commands of the ſons of Noah, and was not circumciſed, he might do work for himſelf on the ſabbath-day, but not for his maſter; and no Iſraelite might bid him work on the ſabbath-day for the neceſſity of an Iſraelite, though he was not his maſter [h]. If a ſervant does work without the knowledge of his maſter, and it is known to all that he does it without his knowledge, there is no need to ſeparate him from it, or take him off of it [i]; ſo maid-ſervants, when they did things without the knowledge of their maſters and miſtreſſes, and without being bid to do it, they were free to do it: thus, for inſtance, they ſay [k], "a cheeſe "which maids make of themſelves, of milk that "belongs to an Iſraelite, is lawful when he does "not bid them make it:" nor thy cattle; of any ſort whatever that is uſed to labour, becauſe if the cattle did not reſt, ſervants could not, who are concerned in the care and uſe of them: in Deut. v. 14. the ox and the aſs are particularly mentioned, becauſe laborious creatures; the one were uſed in ploughing, and treading out the corn, and the other to ride upon, and carry burdens; and concerning the latter, the Jews have this canon [l], "he who is going in the way, (or on a journey) "and has ſanctified for himſelf the day, and has "money with him, and has an aſs; and though "he has with him an idolater, he may not put "his bag upon his aſs, becauſe he is commanded "concerning its reſt; but he may give his bag "to the idolater to throw it upon it; and at the "going out of the ſabbath he may receive it from "him, and even may not give him a reward for "it;" but not only thoſe, but all ſorts of cattle were exempt from labour on this day, as horſes, camels, mules, &c. which, according to the Jewiſh canons, as they were not to be employed in work by the Jews, ſo they were not to be let or lent out to an idolater [m]: nor the ſtranger that is within thy gates; who was a proſelyte of the gate, and not of righteouſneſs; as for the proſelyte of righteouſneſs that was circumciſed, and profeſſed the Jewiſh religion, about him there could be no doubt concerning his reſt on this day; but the proſelyte of the gate, his caſe was not ſo clear, and therefore is particularly expreſſed; and by which deſcription it ſhould ſeem, that he was not obliged by this law, had he not been within their gates, or or a ſojourner in any one of their cities; but ſince it was contrary to the laws and uſages among whom they dwelt, and might be an offence to ſome, and a ſnare to others, and as Grotius thinks, might be to their detriment, get their work and their gain from them, they are forbid to work; and yet, according to the Jewiſh writers [n], they might work for themſelves, though not for an Iſraelite, as before obſerved.

[e] Aben Ezra. [f] Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. Orach Chayim Hilchot Sabbat, c. 293. §, 2, 3. [g] Lebuſh, par. 1. c. 304. §. 1 [h] Schulchan Aruch, Ib. c. 304. §. 1. [i] Lebuſh, Ib. [k] Schulchan, Ib. c. 305. §. 21. [l] Ib. c. 266, §. 1, [m] Ib. c. 246. §. 3.

℣. 11. For in ſix days the Lord made heaven and earth, the ſea, and all that in them is, &c.] And of which ſix days, and of the ſeveral things made in each of them, ſee the firſt chapter of Geneſis: and reſted the ſeventh day; which does not ſuppoſe labour, attended with wearineſs and fatigue; for the creator of the ends of the earth fainteth not, neither is weary, Iſ. xl. 28. nor eaſe and refreſhment from it, but only a ceſſation from the works of creation, they being finiſhed and compleated, though not from the works of providence, in which he is continually concerned: now this circumſtance, before recorded in the hiſtory of the creation, is wiſely improved to engage an attention to this command, and to the obſervation of it; there being an analogy between the one and the other, that as God worked ſix days, and having done his work compleatly, ceaſed from it and reſted, ſo it was fit and proper, that as the Iſraelites had ſix days allowed them to labour in, and do all their work, they ſhould reſt on the ſeventh, they and all that belonged to them, or had any connexion with them: wherefore the Lord bleſſed the ſabbath, and hallowed it; he ſeparated it from all other days of the week, and ſet it apart for holy uſe and ſervice, by obliging his people to ceaſe from all work on it, and to give up themſelves to the exerciſes of religion, as hearing, reading the word, prayer, praiſe, &c. and he bleſſed it with his preſence, and with the communications of his grace, as he ſtill continues to do, whatſoever day his people make uſe of for his worſhip and ſervice. The note of Jarchi is, "he bleſſed it with manna, "by giving double bread on the ſixth, and ſanc-"tified it by manna, that it might not deſcend on "it:" ſo that there was a proviſion made for it, which was bleſſing it; and it was diſtinguiſhed from all other days, no manna falling on it, which was the ſanctification of it; and all ſhewed it to be a day the Lord had a particular regard to, and that it was to be a day of reſt, and exemption from labour.

℣. 12. Honour thy father and thy mother, &c.] Which is the fifth commandment of the decalogue, but is the firſt commandment with promiſe, as the apoſtle ſays, Eph. vi. 2. and is the firſt of the ſecond table: this, though it may be extended to all anceſtors in the aſcending line, as fathers father and mother, mothers father and mother, &c. and to all ſuch who are in the room of parents, as ſtep-fathers and ſtep-mothers, guardians, nurſes, &c. and to all ſuperiors in dignity and office, to kings and governors, to maſters, miniſters, and magiſtrates; yet chiefly reſpects immediate parents, both father and mother, by ſhewing filial affection for them, and reverence and eſteem of them, and by yielding obedience to them, and giving them relief and aſſiſtance in all things in which they need it; and if honour, eſteem, affection, obedience, and reverence, are to be given to earthly parents, then much more to our Father which is in heaven, Mal. i. 6. Heb. xii. 9. that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee; that is, the land of Canaan, which he had given by promiſe to their fathers, and was now about to put them, their poſterity, into the poſſeſſion of: this further confirms the obſervation made, that this body of laws belonged peculiarly to the people of Iſrael: long life in any place or land is a bleſſing in itſelf, yet is not always enjoyed by obedient children, though diſobedience to parents often brings the judgments of God on perſons; ſo that they ſometimes die an untimely or an uncommon death, as in the caſe of the rebellious ſon, for whom a law was provided in Iſrael, and Abſalom and others, ſee Lev. xx. 9. Deut. xxi. 18. 2 Sam. xviii. 14. Prov. xxx. 17. Aben Ezra takes the word to be tranſitive, and ſo the words may be read, that they may prolong thy days; or, cauſe thy days to be prolonged; meaning either that the commandments, and keeping of them, may be the means of prolonging the days of obedient children, according to the divine promiſe; or that they, their father and mother, whom they honour and obey, might, by their prayers for them, be the means of obtaining long life for them; or elſe that they, Father, Son, and Spirit, may do it, though man's days, ſtrictly ſpeaking, cannot be ſhortened or lengthened beyond the purpoſe of God, ſee Job xiv. 5. the Septuagint verſion inſerts before this clauſe another, that it may be well with thee, as in Deut. v. 16. and which the apoſtle alſo has, Eph. vi. 3. and where, inſtead of this, the words are, and thou mayeſt live long on the earth; accommodating them the better to the Gentiles, to whom he writes.

℣. 13. Thou ſhalt not kill.] Not meaning any ſort of creatures, for there are ſome to be killed for the food and nouriſhment of men, and others for their ſafety and preſervation; but rational creatures, men, women, and children, any of the human ſpecies, of every age, ſex, condition, or nation; no man has a right to take away his own life, or the life of another; by this law are forbid ſuicide or ſelf-murder, parricide or murder of parents, homicide or the murder of man; yet killing of men in lawful war, or in defence of a man's ſelf, when his own life is in danger, or the execution of malefactors by the hands or order of the civil magiſtrate, and killing a man at unawares, without any deſign, are not to be reckoned breaches of this law; but taking away the life of another through private malice and revenge, and even ſtabbing of a man's character, and ſo all things tending to or deſigned for the taking away of life, and all plots, conſpiracies, and contrivances for that purpoſe, even all ſinful anger, undue wrath and envy, rancour of mind, all malice in thought, word, or deed, are contrary to this precept, ſee Matt. v. 21, 22. and which, on the other hand, requires that men ſhould do all they can for the eaſe, peace, and preſervation of the lives of men: this is the ſixth command, but in the Septuagint, the ſtrict order in which this and the two following precepts lye, is not obſerved, rehearſing them thus, thou ſhalt not commit adultery, thou ſhalt not ſteal, thou ſhalt not kill; and ſo in Mark x. 19. Rom. xiii. 9. the order is inverted.

℣. 14. Thou ſhalt not commit adultery.] Which, ſtrictly ſpeaking, is only that ſin which is committed with another man's wife, as Jarchi obſerves; but Aben Ezra thinks, the word here uſed ſignifies the ſame as another more commonly uſed for whoredom and fornication; and no doubt but fornication is here included, which, though it was not not reckoned a crime among ſome heathens, is within the reach of this law, and forbidden by it, it being an impure action, and againſt a man's body, as the apoſtle ſays, 1 Cor. vi. 18. as well as ſins of a more enormous kind, as unnatural luſts and copulations, ſuch as inceſt, ſodomy, beſtiality, &c. and even all unchaſte thoughts, deſires, and affections, obſcene words, and impure motions and geſtures of the body, and whatever is in itſelf unclean or tends to uncleanneſs; as it alſo requires that we ſhould, as much as in us lies, do all we can to preſerve our chaſtity, and the chaſtity of others pure and inviolate, ſee Matt. v. 28. this is the ſeventh commandment.

[n] Maimon. Hilchot Sabbat, c. 20. §. 14.

℣. 15. Thou ſhalt not ſteal.] Which is to take away another man's property by force or fraud, without the knowledge, and againſt the will of the owner thereof. Thefts are of various kinds; there is private theft, picking of pockets, ſhopliſting, burglary, or breaking into houſes in the night, and carrying off goods; publick theft, or robbing upon the high-ways; domeſtic theft, as when wives take away their huſbands money or goods, and conceal them, or diſpoſe of them without their knowledge and will, children rob their parents, and ſervants purloin their maſters effects; eccleſiaſtical theft or ſacrilege, and perſonal theft, as ſtealing of men and making ſlaves of them, ſelling them againſt their wills; and Jarchi thinks, that this is what the ſcripture ſpeaks of when it uſes this phraſe; but though this may be included, it may not be reſtrained to this particular, ſince, beſides what have been obſerved, there are many other things that may be reduced to it and are breaches of it; as all over-reaching and circumventing in trade and commerce, unjuſt contracts, not making good and performing payments, detention of ſervants wages, unlawful uſury, unfaithfulneſs with reſpect to any thing depoſited in a man's hands, adviſing and encouraging thieves, and receiving from them: the caſe of the Iſraelites borrowing of the Egyptians and ſpoiling them, is not to be objected to this law, ſince that was by the command of God, and was only taking what was due to them for ſervice; however, by this command God let the Iſraelites know that that was a peculiar caſe, and not to be drawn into an example, and that they were in other caſes not to take away another man's property; and ſo the caſe of an hungry man's ſtealing to ſatisfy nature, is not obſerved as lawful and laudable, but as what is connived at and indulged, Prov. vi. 30, 31. this law obliges to preſerve and ſecure every man's property to himſelf, as much as in men lies: this is the eighth commandment.

℣. 16. Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs againſt thy neighbour.] Neither publickly in a court of judicature, by laying things to his charge that are falſe, and ſwearing to them, to his hurt and damage; nor privately, by whiſpering, tale-bearing, backbiting, ſlandering, by telling lies of him, traducing his character by innuendoes, ſly inſinuations, and evil ſuggeſtions, whereby he may ſuffer in his character, credit, and reputation, and in his trade and buſineſs: Aben Ezra thinks, the words deſcribe the character of the perſon that is not to bear witneſs in any court, and to be read thus, thou ſhalt not anſwer who art a falſe witneſs; or, O thou falſe witneſs; meaning that ſuch an one ſhould not be admitted an evidence in court, who had been convicted already of being a falſe witneſs; his word and oath are not to be taken, nor ſhould any queſtions be put to him or he ſuffered to anſwer to any; his depoſitions ſhould have no weight with thoſe before whom they were made, nay even they ſhould not be taken, nor ſuch a perſon be allowed to make any; but this is to put this precept in a quite different form from all the reſt, and without any neceſſity, ſince the word may as well be taken for a teſtimony bore, as for the perſon that bears it: this is the ninth commandment.

℣. 17. Thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbour's houſe, &c.] This is the tenth and laſt commandment, and is an explanation of ſeveral of the paſt; ſhewing that the law of God not only forbids external acts of ſin, but the inward and firſt motions of the mind to it, which are not known, and would not be thought to be ſinful, were it not for this law; nor are they known by this law, until the Spirit of God by it convinces men of them, in whoſe light they ſee them to be ſinful; even not only the ſchemes and contrivances of ſin in the mind, the imaginations of it, thoughts dwelling upon it with pleaſure, but even the firſt riſings of ſin in the heart; and ſuch motions of it which are not aſſented unto, and unawares ſpring up from the corruption of nature, and are ſudden craving deſires after unlawful things, even theſe are forbidden by this law; which ſhews the ſpirituality of the law of God, and the impoſſibility of its being perfectly kept by fallen men. The apoſtle has reference to it, Rom. vii. 7. Several particulars are here mentioned not to be coveted, as inſtances and examples inſtead of others. Thus, for inſtance, a neighbour's houſe is not to be coveted; nor his field, as the Septuagint verſion here adds, agreeable to Deut. v. 21. a man is not ſecretly to wiſh and deſire that ſuch a man's houſe or land were his, ſince this ariſes from a diſcontent of mind with reſpect to his own habitation and poſſeſſions; and a man ſhould be content with ſuch things as he has, and not covet another's, which is not without ſin: thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbour's wife; and wiſh ſhe was thine, and luſt after her; this is a breach of the ſeventh command, and ſerves to explain and illuſtrate that. This clauſe ſtands firſt in the Septuagint verſion, as it does in Deut. v. 21: nor his man-ſervant, nor maid-ſervant, nor his ox, nor his aſs, nor any thing that is thy neighbour's; which, with the firſt clauſe, ſerve to explain the eighth command, ſhewing that we are not only forbid to take away what is another man's property, any of the goods here mentioned, or any other, but we are not ſecretly to deſire them, and wiſh they were in our poſſeſſion; ſince it diſcovers uneaſineſs and diſſatisfaction with our own lot and portion, and is coveting another man's property, which is coveting an evil covetouſneſs.

℣. 18. And all the people ſaw the thunderings, and the lightnings, &c.] That is, they heard the one, and ſaw the other; they heard the dreadful vollies of thunder, and ſaw the amazing flaſhes of lightning, which were like lamps and torches, as the word uſed ſignifies; by a communication of ſenſes, one ſenſe is put for another, and the ſenſe of ſight being the principal, as Ben Melech obſerves, it is put for the reſt, and ſo in the following. It is an obſervation of Auſtin's [o], that to ſee is uſed of all of the five ſenſes, ſeeing, hearing, taſting, ſmelling, and feeling: and the noiſe of the trumpet, and the mountain ſmoking; they heard the ſound of the trumpet, which made them tremble, and ſaw the mountain all in a ſmoke, which made it look very terrible. Though the words may be rendered, as they they are by ſome, they perceived the thunders, &c [p]. they had a ſenſible perception of them with their eyes and ears, which greatly affected them, and made ſtrong impreſſions upon their minds, and filled them with fear and dread: and when the people ſaw it, they removed, and ſtood afar off; their minds were not only terrified and diſtreſſed, and their bodies ſhook with fear; but they could not ſtand their ground, but were obliged to retreat, who but juſt before were curious to draw near, and gaze and ſee what they could, to prevent which bounds were ſet; but now theſe were needleſs, what they ſaw and heard were ſufficient to keep them at a diſtance, nay obliged them to quit their places; they were at the lower part of the mount before, and now they removed a good way from it, even to their camp, and to their tents in it, ſee Deut. v. 30. The Targum of Jonathan ſays, they removed 12 miles; and ſo Jarchi, who obſerves, that this was according to the length of their camp.

[o] Confeſſ. l. 10. c. 35.

℣. 19. And they ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] Who was now come down from the mountain, and to whom the heads of the tribes and elders of the people came from the camp, and out of their tents, by whom the people ſaid to him, as follows, ſee Deut. v. 23, 30: ſpeak thou with us, and we will hear; their requeſt is, that whatſoever it was the will and pleaſure of God to declare to them, that he would communicate it to Moſes, and he deliver it to them, promiſing that they would hearken to it, and obey it, as if they had heard it from the mouth of God himſelf: but let not God ſpeak with us, leſt we die; pray to him, that he would not ſpeak immediately, but by a mediator, which they now ſaw the need of; that there was no drawing nigh to God, nor hearing nor receiving any thing from him without one; that his law, as it came from him to them ſinful creatures, was a killing letter, and the miniſtration of condemnation and death, and injected ſuch terror into their minds, that if it was continued they muſt die under it: thus as the apoſtle obſerves, when they heard the voice of words, entreated that the word ſhould not be ſpoken to them any more, for they could not endure that which was commanded, Heb. xii. 19, 20.

℣. 20. And Moſes ſaid unto the people, &c.] By their repreſentatives and meſſengers, the heads of the tribes and elders: fear not; be not afraid of God with a ſlaviſh fear; be not afraid of the thunders and lightnings, as if they were like one of the plagues of Egypt, which terrified Pharaoh and his people; be not afraid of being conſumed by them, they will do you no hurt; be not afraid of dying by the hand of God, at his preſence, and through the voice of his words ſpoken to you; be of good courage, for the deſign of God is not to deſtroy you, but to inſtruct you, and do you good: for God is come to prove you; whether being now freed by him from Egyptian bondage, they would take and own him for their king, and be ſubject to his laws and government; whether they would abide by what they had ſaid, all that the Lord hath ſpoken will we do, ch. xix. 8. whether they thought they had purity and righteouſneſs enough to anſwer to the divine law, and whether they imagined they had ſtrength enough to fulfil it, and whether they needed a mediator between God and them or not: ſome Jewiſh writers [q] give a different ſenſe of this clauſe, as if the coming of God to them in this grand and majeſtic manner was to exalt them, and make them great and honourable among the nations of the world; taking the word uſed to be derived from a root, which ſignifies to lift up, as a banner or enſign is lifted up on high; but the former ſenſe is beſt: and that his fear may be before your faces; not a ſlaviſh fear of death, of wrath, and damnation, before dehorted from; but a reverence of the divine majeſty, an awe of his greatneſs and glory, a ſerious regard to his commands, delivered in ſo grand a manner, and a carefulneſs to offend him by diſobeying them: that ye ſin not; by breaking the law, and tranſgreſſing the precepts of it, which they might be deterred from, as it might be reaſonably thought, when they reflected with what ſolemnity, and in what an awful manner it was delivered to them.

℣. 21. And the people ſtood afar off, &c.] Still kept their diſtance in their camp and tents; or the heads and elders of the people having had this converſation with Moſes, returned to their tents as they were bid, Deut. v. 30. and to the people in the camp, and there they continued whilſt Moſes went up to God with their requeſt: and Moſes drew near to the thick darkneſs where God was; the thick cloud, ch. xix. 9, 16. as Jarchi interprets it, and who obſerves from their doctors that there were three incloſures about the divine majeſty, darkneſs, a cloud, and thick darkneſs; and ſo Moſes paſſed through the darkneſs, and the cloud, to the thick darkneſs where Jehovah was, and where he is ſaid to dwell when the temple was built, 1 Kings viii. 12. and they have an obſervation that the word rendered drew near, is tranſitive, and ſhould be tranſlated, he was brought near, or, made to draw nigh; Michael and Gabriel being ſent to him, took hold of his hands and brought him againſt his will unto the thick darkneſs [r]; but if the word will admit of ſuch a verſion, the ſenſe is either that he was cauſed to draw near through the importunity of the people; or rather through the call of God to him, or an impulſe of his upon his mind, which obliged him to it.

℣. 22. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] When Moſes was come near the thick darkneſs where God was: thus thou ſhalt ſay unto the children of Iſrael; at his return unto them, and which he was to deliver in the name of God, and as his words: ye have ſeen that I have talked with you from heaven; deſcending from heaven on mount Sinai in a cloud and fire, he talked with them out of the cloud and fire, and delivered to them with an audible voice the above ten commands; the cloud and fire they ſaw with their eyes, and the words expreſſed from thence, they heard with their ears; or heaven may mean the air on the top of Sinai, from whence Jehovah ſpoke.

℣. 23. Ye ſhall not make with me, &c.] This is a propoſition of itſelf, as appears by the accent Athnach placed at the end of it, which divides it from the following, and therefore, gods of ſilver, belong to the next clauſe or propoſition; ſomething ſeems to be wanting to compleat the ſenſe, which the Talmudiſts [s] and Jarchi after them ſupply thus, "ye ſhall not make with me as the "likeneſs of my miniſters which miniſter before "me on high;" as the ſeraphim, miniſtering angels, &c. as the ſun, moon, and ſtars; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes the words, "ye "ſhall not make to worſhip, the likeneſs of the "ſun, and of the moon, and of the ſtars, and of the [p] ראים percipiebant, Junius & Tremellius, intelligebant; ſo ſome in Druſius. [q] Jarchi in loc. Medraſh apud Kimchi in Sepher Shoraſh. rad. נסה & Ben Melech in loc. [r] Pirke Eliezer, c. 41. [s] T. Bab. Roſh. Haſhanah, fol. 24. 1. 2. Avoda Zara, fol. 43. 1. 2.

" the planets, and of the angels that miniſter be" fore me :" or rather, ye ſhall not make any likeneſs with me, or any likeneſs of me; and ſo the words ſtand connected with the preceding verſe, that ſince they only ſaw the cloud and fire, and perceived the voice of God from thence, but ſaw no likeneſs or ſimilitude of him, therefore they were not to make any under a pretence of worſhipping him with it, or in it, or by it; and ſo Ben Melech adds, by way of explanation, although your intention is to my ſervice: gods of ſilver, and gods of gold ye ſhall not make unto you; for ſo this clauſe is to be read: that is, images made of gold and ſilver, images of angels, or of the hoſt of heaven, the ſun, moon, and ſtars, or of great men on earth, as kings or heroes, or of any creature in heaven, earth, or ſea; theſe they were not to make unto them, in order to ſerve and worſhip them, or to worſhip God in them, or by them, or with them: the firſt images for idolatrous worſhip were made of gold and ſilver, becauſe, being rich and glittering, they more affected the minds of the people, as the golden calf a little after made, and perhaps the gods of Egypt were ſuch, at leaſt ſome of them; wherefore this law againſt idolatry is repeated, becauſe the people of Iſrael were prone unto it, and many of them had been enſnared with it in Egypt, and upon every occaſion were ready to relapſe into it: gods, or images made of meaner materials, as braſs, wood, and ſtone, though not mentioned, are equally forbidden; for if thoſe of richer materials were not to be made and worſhipped, much leſs thoſe of baſer ones.

ẏ. 24. An altar of earth thou ſhalt make unto me, &c.] This was a temporary precept, and only in force until the tabernacle was built, and reſpects occaſional altars, erected whilſt on their travels, and were to be made of turfs of earth, and ſo eaſily and quickly thrown up, as their caſe and circumſtances required, and as eaſily thrown down, as it was proper they ſhould, after they had no more uſe for them, leſt they ſhould be abuſed to ſuperſtitious uſes; for afterwards the altar for burnt-offerings was made of Shittim wood covered with braſs, and that in the temple was wholly a brazen one, Exod. xxvii. 1, 2. 2 Chron. iv. 1. this precept ſeems to ſuggeſt the plainneſs and ſimplicity in which God would be worſhipped, in oppoſition to the pomp and gaudy ſhew of idolaters intimated in the preceding verſe; though Tertullian [t] relates of the Romans in the times of Numa Pompilius, that they had neither images, nor temples, nor capitols, only altars made of turfs of earth haſtily thrown up; and this altar of earth might be, as Ainſworth obſerves, a figure of the earthly or human nature of Chriſt, who is the altar, whereof believers in him have a right to eat, Heb. xiii. 10. and ſhalt ſacrifice thereon thy burnt-offerings, and thy peace-offerings, thy ſheep, and thine oxen; which were the creatures offered in the ſaid ſacrifices, as alſo in the ſin-offerings and treſpaſs-offerings, which, though not mentioned, are included: in all places where I record my name; or, cauſe it to be mentioned, or remembered [u]; where he manifeſted himſelf, diſplayed the glory of his nature and perfections; or, as the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it, cauſed his Shekinah or divine majeſty to dwell, or gave any intimations of his preſence, as at the altar now erected to him, and ſat the ſacrifices offered up thereon, and afterwards in the tabernacle, between the cherubim over the mercy-ſeat, and ark of the teſtimony; which was removed to various places before the temple was built at Jeruſalem, where he took up his reſidence, and his name was called upon, made mention of, and recorded for many generations: but that being deſtroyed and worſhip there at an end, men may now worſhip God in any place, ſo be it they do it in ſpirit and in truth; and where-ever the name of God is truly called upon, and the glory of his divine perfections, as diſplayed in the ſalvation of ſinners by Chriſt, is ſet forth, and Chriſt and him crucified is preached; and mention is made of his name as the only one in which ſalvation is; of his glorious perſon and offices, of his righteouſneſs, blood and ſacrifice, for juſtification, remiſſion of ſins, and atonement; and his ordinances are adminiſtred, which are memorials of his love and grace; there Jehovah grants his preſence: I will come unto thee; not locally or by change of place, nor by his omnipreſence merely, ſo he is every where; nor in any viſible way, but in a ſpiritual manner, by the communications of his grace and favour, ſee John xiv. 21, 22, 23. and I will bleſs thee; with his preſence, than which nothing is more deſireable and delightful; with the ſupplies of his grace, with peace and pardon, with a juſtifying righteouſneſs, with a right and title to eternal life, with enlarged views of theſe bleſſings and of intereſt in them.

ẏ. 25. And if thou wilt make me an altar of ſtone, &c.] If they choſe inſtead of an earthen one to make one of ſtone, as they might in rocky places, where they came, and in ſuch an one where they now were, mount Sinai, under which hill an altar was built, ch. xxiv. 4. thou ſhalt not build it of hewn ſtone; which would require time and occaſion expence, to hew and poliſh them in an artificial way; but it was to be built of rude and unpoliſhed ſtones, juſt as they were taken out of the quarry, or found lying by the way, and which were laid up in an heap one upon another, and was done with little trouble, and without any ornament, and eaſily ſeparated and thrown down, when become uſeleſs: the reaſon of this law, as given by Maimonides [w], is this, " becauſe the idolaters of " that time built their altars of hewn ſtones, there" fore God forbad it, leſt we ſhould be like them,
" and that we might ſhun it in all things, he com" manded the altar to be made of earth, as it is
" ſaid, an altar of earth ſhalt thou make unto me;
" and if it could not be made without ſtones, that
" the ſtones ſhould remain in their own natural " form, and be neither hewn nor poliſhed; as he
" after forbad a painted ſtone, and a plantation of " trees by an altar; for in each of theſe there is
" one and the ſame intention and deſign, namely,
" that we might not worſhip him in the ſame
" manner in which idolaters uſed to worſhip their
" fictitious deities:" for if thou lift up thy tool upon it; or, thy ſword [x]; it ſignifies any tool or inſtrument made of iron as a ſword is, and here ſuch an one as is uſed in hewing of ſtone; which, if lifted up on the altar, or on any of the ſtones of which it is built, to ſtrike and hew them with, thou haſt polluted it; and ſo made it unfit for uſe: how this ſhould be done hereby is not eaſy to ſay, no

[t] Apologet. c. 25. [u] אזכיר את שמי memorare faciam nomen meum, Pagninus, Montanus; ubi recordari faciam nomen meum, ſeu ubi faciam ut recordemini nominis mei, Piſcator. [w] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 45. [x] חרבך gladium tuum, Montanus, Piſcator, Cartwright.

no good reaſon ſeems to be aſſignable for it but the will and pleaſure of God; who ſo appointed it, and reckoned that a pollution, and would have it ſo thought by others, which with men is accounted ornamental; his thoughts and judgment are not as man's: the Targum of Jonathan is, "for if thou "liſteſt up iron, of which a ſword is made, upon "a ſtone, thou wilt prophane it;" the reaſon which the Miſnic doctors[y] give, and Jarchi from them is, "becauſe iron was created to ſhorten the "days of men, but the other was made to pro-"long the days of men; and therefore it cannot "be juſt that that which ſhortens ſhould be lifted "up and agitated over that which prolongs:" but Maimonides gives a better reaſon of it, as Abarbinel underſtands him, which was to prevent perſons making images in ſtones[z], which image-making is the thing guarded againſt and forbidden in the context; but ſtill better is that of Iſaac Arama[a], that the hands of the artificer were to abſtain from the ſtones of the altar, leſt that good which men obtain of God at the altar, ſhould be attributed to any work of theirs: though, after all, it is right what Aben Ezra ſays, that it does not belong to us to ſearch after the reaſons of the commands, at leaſt, not in too curious and bold a manner, and where God is ſilent and has not thought fit to give any.

℣. 26. Neither ſhalt thou go up by ſteps unto mine altar, &c.] That is, you prieſts the ſons of Aaron, as the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem paraphraſe the words; the altar of burnt-offering built when the tabernacle was, ſeemed not to require any, being but three cubits high, Exod. xxvii. 1. but that in Solomon's temple did, being ten cubits high, 2 Chron. iv. 1. and therefore ſome method muſt be uſed to aſcend it, and do the buſineſs that was to be done on it: now the Jews ſay[b], there was what they call Kibbeſh, a ſort of a cauſeway made of earth thrown up, which roſe gradually and led to the top of the altar, and was about 32 cubits long and 16 broad: and ſo the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes the words, "thou ſhalt "not go up by ſteps to mine altar but by bridges;" expreſs mention is made of ſtairs to the altar in Ezekiel's viſion, ch. xliii. 17. that thy nakedneſs be not diſcovered thereon; that part of the body which is not to be named, and ought not to be ſeen, and which would be expoſed if there were many ſteps, and theſe at a diſtance from each other; which would oblige them to take large ſtrides, and ſo be in danger of diſcovering thoſe parts which would make them the object of contempt and ridicule with the people; ſince as yet breeches were not uſed, and the garments were long looſe ones, which were eaſily turned aſide, or the parts under them ſeen by thoſe below; to prevent which, afterwards linen breeches were ordered to be made for the prieſts, and to be uſed by them in their ſervice: Maimonides[c] thinks, the reaſon of this was, becauſe formerly the idolatrous worſhip of Peor was performed by uncovering of their nakedneſs before it; and ſo by this is expreſſed God's deteſtation of ſuch an impure and abominable practice; but this is uncertain; however this we may be ſure of, that this is the will of God, that all immodeſty and indecency, and whatever tends to create impure thoughts and ſtir up unclean luſts, ſhould be carefully avoided in his worſhip.

CHAP. XXI.

IN this, and the two following chapters, are delivered various laws and precepts, partly of a moral, and partly of a religious, but chiefly of a civil nature, reſpecting the commonwealth of Iſrael, and its political good. This chapter treats of ſervants, and laws relating to them; to men-ſervants how long they ſhall ſerve, and what is to be done to thoſe who are deſirous of ſtaying with their maſters after their time is up, ℣. 1—6. to maid-ſervants, and eſpecially betrothed ones, either to a father or a ſon, ℣. 7—11. likewiſe it contains laws concerning the ſlaughter of men, whether with deſign or unawares, ℣. 12—14. and concerning the ill uſage of parents, ℣. 15, 17. and man-ſtealing, ℣. 16. and of miſchief that comes by mens quarrelling and fighting, ℣. 18, 19. and by ſmiting a man or maid-ſervant, ℣. 20, 21, 26, 27. to a woman with child, that is by means of mens ſtriving and contending with each other, ℣. 22—25. and of damages that come by oxen, or to them, ℣. 28—36.

℣. 1. Now theſe are the judgments, &c.] The judicial laws reſpecting the civil ſtate of the people of Iſrael, ſo called becauſe they are founded on juſtice and equity, and are according to the judgment of God, whoſe judgment is according to truth; and becauſe they are ſuch by which the commonwealth of Iſrael was to be judged or governed, and were to be the rule of their conduct to one another, and a rule of judgment to their judges in the execution of judgment and juſtice among them: which thou ſhalt ſet before them; beſides the ten commands before delivered. They were ſpoken by God himſelf in the hearing of the people; theſe were delivered to Moſes after he went up to the mount again, at the requeſt of the people, to be their mediator, to be by him ſet before them as the rule of their behaviour, and to enjoin them the obſervance of them; in order to which he was not only to rehearſe them, but to write them out, and ſet them in a plain and eaſy light before them: and though they did not hear theſe with their own ears from God himſelf, as the ten commands; yet as they had the utmoſt reaſon to believe they came from him, and it was at their own requeſt that he, and not God, might ſpeak unto them what was further to be ſaid, with a promiſe they would obey it, as if they had immediately heard it from him; it became them to receive theſe laws as of God, and yield a chearful obedience to them; nor do we find they ever queſtioned the authority of them; and as their government was a theocracy, and God was more immediately their king, than he was of any other people, it was but right, and what might be expected, that they ſhould have their civil laws from him, and which was their privilege, and gave them the preference to all other nations, Deut. iv. 5—8.

℣. 2. If thou buy an Hebrew ſervant, &c.] Who ſells himſelf either through poverty, or rather is ſold becauſe of his theft, ſee ch. xxii. 3. and ſo the the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, "when ye "ſhall buy for his theft, a ſervant, a ſon of an "Iſraelite;" agreeable to which Aben Ezra obſerves, this ſervant is a ſervant that is ſold for his theft; and he ſays, it is a tradition with them, that a male is ſold for his theft, but not a female; and the perſons who had the ſelling of ſuch were the civil magiſtrates, the Sanhedrim, or court of judicature; ſo Jarchi, on the text, ſays, if thou buy, &c. that is, of the hand of the Sanhedrim who ſells him for his theft: ſix years he ſhall ſerve; and no longer; and the Jewiſh doctors ſay [d], if his maſter dies within the ſix years he muſt ſerve his ſon, but not his daughter, nor his brother, nor any other heirs: and in the ſeventh he ſhall go out free for nothing; without paying any money for his freedom, as it is explained ℣. 11. nay, on the other hand, his maſter was not to ſend him away empty, but furniſh him liberally out of his flock, floor and wine-preſs, ſince his ſix years ſervitude was worth double that of an hired ſervant, Deut. xv. 13, 14, 18. and his freedom was to take place as ſoon as the ſix years were ended, and the ſeventh began, in which the Jewiſh writers agree: the Targum of Jonathan is, at the entrance of the ſeventh; and Aben Ezra's explanation is, at the beginning of the ſeventh year of his being ſold; and Maimonides [e] obſerves the ſame. Now as this ſervant, in the ſtate of ſervitude, was an emblem of that ſtate of bondage to ſin, ſatan and the law, which man is brought into by his theft, his robbing God of his glory by the tranſgreſſion of his precepts; ſo likewiſe in his being made free, he was an emblem of that liberty wherewith Chriſt, the Son of God, makes his people free from the ſaid bondage, and who are free indeed, and made ſo freely without money, and without price, of pure free grace, without any merit or deſert of theirs; and which freedom is attended with many bountiful and liberal bleſſings of grace.

[y] Miſnah Middot, c. 3. § 4. [z] Apud L'Empereur in Middot, ib. [a] Apud Rivet in loc. [b] Middot, c. 3. §. 3. [c] Ut ſupra.

℣. 3. If he came in by himſelf, he ſhall go out by himſelf, &c.] That is, if he came into his ſervitude alone, as the Septuagint verſion has it, he ſhould go out of it in like manner; the word for by himſelf, ſome interpret with his garment [f], or the ſkirt of one; and then the ſenſe ſeems to be, that as he was clothed when he was ſold, ſo he ſhould be when made free: but rather the phraſe literally is with his body [g]; not his naked body, or as deſtitute of raiment, and the neceſſaries of life; for as before obſerved, his maſter was to furniſh him liberally with good things: but the plain meaning is, that if he was a ſingle or unmarried man when he entered his maſter's ſervice, he ſhould go out ſo; or as a Jewiſh writer [h] expreſſes it, as if he ſhould ſay, with his body without another body with him, who is his wife, as appears by what follows; unleſs his maſter ſhould give him a wife whilſt in his ſervice, which is ſuppoſed in the next verſe, and even then he was to go out alone, if he choſe to go out at all; though Jarchi ſays, if he was not married at firſt, his maſter might not give him a Canaanitiſh woman to beget ſlaves of her: if he were married, then his wife ſhall go with him; that is, if he had a wife, a daughter of Iſrael, as the Targum of Jonathan; or an Iſraelitiſh woman, as Jarchi, and had her at his coming; for otherwiſe, if it was one his maſter after gave him, ſhe might not go out, as appears by the following verſe; but being his wife before his ſervitude, and an Iſraelitiſh woman, was not the maſter's bondmaid, nor bought with his money, and therefore might go out free with her huſband.

℣. 4. If his maſter have given him a wife, &c.] One of his ſlaves, a Canaanitiſh woman on purpoſe to beget ſlaves on her, ſince all born in his houſe were his own; this is ſuppoſed to be after he was come into his houſe, and into his ſervice: and ſhe have born him ſons, or daughters; as ſhe might have born him ſeveral of the one ſort, or the other, if ſhe was given to him quickly after his ſervitude began: the wife and her children ſhall be her maſter's; ſhe being his ſlave, and bought with his money, he had a right unto her, and to the children belonging to her, the birth following the belly; and being born in his houſe, they were alſo his. Jarchi here obſerves, that the ſcripture ſpeaks of a Canaanitiſh woman, for an Hebrew woman went out at the ſixth year, and even before the ſixth, if ſhe produced the ſigns, that is, of puberty: and he ſhall go out by himſelf; without his wife and children: if it be objected to this law, that it is contrary to the law of marriage, which is indiſſoluble, but by this diſſolved; it may be replied, that the ſervant was not obliged by it to leave his wife, unleſs he choſe it; on complying with certain conditions after-mentioned, he might continue with her; beſides, ſhe was, according to Jarchi, but his ſecondary wife, and not only ſo, the marriage was not lawful, being with a Canaanitiſh woman, and not agreeable to the Lord; and being alſo her maſter's ſlave, to whom he had a right, he could retain her if he pleaſed, having only given her to his ſervant to beget ſlaves on for him.

℣. 5. And if the ſervant ſhall plainly ſay, &c.] Or, in ſaying ſhall ſay [i], ſhall expreſs himſelf in plain and full terms, and repeat his words, and abide by them, ſignifying it as his laſt will, and determined reſolution: I love my maſter, my wife, and my children, and I will not go out free; but continue in his ſervitude, having a great affection for his maſter, and that he might enjoy his wife, and children he dearly loved; and being animated with ſuch a principle, his ſervitude was a pleaſure to him: and when our obedience to God ſprings from love to him, and to his cauſe, and intereſt, which ſhould be as dear to us as our families, it is then acceptable to God and delightful to ourſelves; in Deut. xv. 16. it is, becauſe he loveth thee, and thine houſe, becauſe he is well with thee; hence the Jewiſh writers ſay [k], underſtanding by houſe, a family, if a ſervant has a wife and children and his maſter not, his ear is not to be bored; and if his maſter has a wife and children and he has not, his ear is not to be bored; if he loves his maſter and his maſter don't love him, or his maſter loves him and he don't love his maſter, or if he is ſick, &c. his ear is not to be bored.

℣. 6. Then his maſter ſhall bring him unto the judges, &c.] To Elohim, to God, to the judgment-ſeat of God, according to the Septuagint; to ſome perſon or perſons to enquire of God what is to be done in ſuch a caſe; but this ſeems needleſs, ſince it is here declared: no doubt civil magiſtrates or judges are meant by Elohim, or the gods, as in Pſ. lxxxii. 1, 6. and ſo Jarchi interprets it of the houſe houſe of judgment, or Sanhedrim, the court that had convicted the ſervant of theft, and had ſold him to him, it was proper he ſhould acquaint them with it, have their opinion about it; and eſpecially it was proper to have him to them, that he might before them, even in open court, declare his willingneſs to abide in his maſter's ſervice; and from whom, as the Targum of Jonathan, he was to receive power and authority to retain him in his ſervice: he ſhall alſo bring him to the door, or to the door poſt; either of the gate of the city, where the judges were ſitting, before whom what follows was to be done, as Aben Ezra ſuggeſts; or rather the door of his maſter, or any other man's, as Maimonides [l]: and his maſter ſhall bore his ear thro' with an awl; or with a needle, as the Targum of Jonathan, which alſo ſays it was the right ear; and ſo Jarchi; and the upper part of it, as ſays Maimonides, who likewiſe obſerves, that that with which it is bored muſt be of metal; and moreover, that it is the maſter himſelf that muſt do it, and not his ſon, nor his meſſenger, nor a meſſenger of the Sanhedrim [m]: the ear is an hieroglyphic of obedience, and the boring of it through to the door-poſt denotes the ſtrict and cloſe obedience of ſuch a ſervant to his maſter, and how he is, and ought to be, addicted to his ſervice, and be conſtantly employed in it, and never ſtir from it, nor ſo much as go over the threſhold of his maſter's houſe. This cuſtom of boring a ſervant's ear continued in Syria till the times of Juvenal, as appears by ſome lines of his [n]: and he ſhall ſerve him for ever; as long as he lives [o]; however until the year of jubilee, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi; if there was one before his death, for nothing elſe could free him; denoting freedom by Chriſt in his acceptable year, and day of ſalvation.

[d] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Kidduſhin, c. 1. §. 2. [e] Hilchot Abadim, c. 2. §. 2. [f] בגפו cum quali veſte, V. L. cum veſte ſua; ſome in Vatablus & Druſius. [g] Cum corpore ſuo, Munſter, Pagninus, Vatablus, Druſius; ſolus corpore ſuo, Junius & Tremellius; cum ſolo corpore ſuo, Piſcator. [h] R. Sol. Urbin. Ohel Moed, fol. 15. 1. [i] אמר יאמר [k] T. Bab. Kidduſhin, fol. 22. 1. Maimon. in Miſn. Kidduſhin, c. 1. §. 2.

℣. 7. And if a man ſell his daughter to be a maid-ſervant, &c.] That is, if an Iſraelite, as the Targum of Jonathan, ſells his little daughter, as the ſame Targum, and ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra, one that is under age, that is not arrived to the age of twelve years and a day, and this through poverty; he not being able to ſupport himſelf and his family, puts his daughter out to ſervice, or rather ſells her to be a ſervant: ſhe ſhall not go out as the men-ſervants do; that are ſold, before deſcribed; or rather according to the Targum, "as the Ca-"naaniteſh ſervants go out, who are made free, "becauſe of a tooth, or an eye (the loſs of them, "℣. 26, 27.) but in the years of releaſe, and with "the ſigns (of puberty) and in the jubilee, and at "the death of their maſters, with redemption of "ſilver," ſo Jarchi.

℣. 8. If ſhe pleaſe not her maſter, &c.] Be evil in the eyes of her maſter [p]; and he has no liking of her, and love to her, not being agreeable in her perſon, temper or conduct, ſo that he don't chuſe to make her his wife: who hath betrothed her to him; but not compleated the marriage, as he promiſed, when he bought her, or at leaſt gave reaſon to expect that he would; for according to the Jewiſh canons, a Hebrew handmaid might not be ſold but to one, who laid himſelf under obligation to eſpouſe her to himſelf, or his ſon, when ſhe was fit to be betrothed [q]; and ſo Jarchi ſays, he ought to eſpouſe her, and take her to be his wife, for the money of her purchaſe is the money of her eſpouſals. There is a double reading of this paſſage, the Keri, or marginal reading we follow; the Cetib, or written text is, who hath not betrothed her, both may be taken in, who hath not betrothed her to him, as he ſaid he would, or as it was expected he ſhould; for had ſhe been really betrothed, what follows could not have been done: then ſhall he let her be redeemed; ſhe being at age, and fit for marriage, and her maſter not caring to marry her, her father ſhall redeem her, as the Targum of Jonathan; it was incumbent on him to do that, as it was on her maſter to let her be redeemed, to admit of the redemption of her; or whether, as Aben Ezra ſays, ſhe redeemed herſelf, or her father, or one of her relations, if ſhe was near the ſix years (the end of them) they reckoned how many years ſhe had ſerved, and how many were yet to the ſeventh, or to the time that ſhe is in her own power, and according to the computation was the redemption: thus, for inſtance, as it is by others [r] put, if ſhe was bought for 6 pounds, then one pound is the ſervice of every year; and if ſhe redeemed herſelf, her maſter took off of the money for the years ſhe had ſerved; or thus [s], if ſhe was bought for 60 pence, and had ſerved two years, he muſt pay her 40 pence, and ſo free her: to ſell her unto a ſtrange nation, he ſhall have no power; that is, to another man, as both the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, even to an Iſraelite that was of another family, to whom the right of redemption did not belong; for to ſell an Iſraelite, man or woman, to a Gentile, or one of another nation, was not allowed of in any caſe, as Joſephus [t] obſerves; but the meaning is, he had no power to ſell her to another, though of the ſame nation, to be his handmaid; this power neither her maſter nor her father had, as Jarchi aſſerts, ſhe being redeemed, and in her own power: ſeeing he hath dealt deceitfully with her; in not fulfilling his promiſe made to her father when he ſold her to him, or not anſwering the expectation he had raiſed in her; and eſpecially he dealt thus with her, if he had corrupted her, and yet refuſed to betroth and marry her.

℣. 9. And if he have betrothed her unto his ſon, &c.] Not caring to betroth and marry her himſelf, as being more ſuitable in age for his ſon than for himſelf: he ſhall deal with her after the manner of daughters; as if ſhe was his daughter, and give her a dowry: or the ſon ſhall treat her after the manner the daughters of Iſrael are treated when married, by giving her food, raiment, and the duty of marriage, ſo Jarchi; or after the manner of the daughters of Iſrael that are virgins, and who are not ſold, as Aben Ezra.

℣. 10. If he take him another wife, &c.] The father takes another wife for his ſon, or the ſon takes another wife to himſelf after he has betrothed and married his father's maid-ſervant: her food, her raiment, and her duty of marriage ſhall he not diminiſh; neither deny it her in whole, nor leſſen it in part, but give her her full due of each. What is meant by the two former words, is eaſy, and admits

[l] Hilchot Abadim, c. 3. §. 9. [m] Ibid.

[n] Molles quod in aure feneſtræ
Arguerint, licet ipſe negem? Satyr. 1.

[o] Serviet in æternum, qui parvo neſciet uti. Horat.

[p] רעה בעיני mala in oculis, Montanus; mala videbitur in oculis, Junius & Tremellius; mala fuerit in oculis, Druſius.
[q] Maimon. Hilchot Abadim, c. 4. §. 11. & in Miſn. Kidduſhin, c. 1. §. 2. [r] Bartenora in Kidduſh. Ib. [s] Maimon. in Ib. [t] Antiq. l. 16. c. 1. §. 1.

admits of no difficulty, the latter is differently interpreted. Some take it to ſignify no other than an habitation [u], that as he was to provide food and raiment for her, ſo an houſe to dwell in; but the generality of interpreters, Jewiſh and Chriſtian, underſtand it as we do, of the conjugal duty, the uſe of the marriage-bed, or what the apoſtle calls due benevolence, 1 Cor. vii. 3. The word is thought to have the ſignification of a fixed time for it; and the Miſnic doctors [w] are very particular in aſſigning the ſet times of it for different perſons; and in thoſe countries where there were, and where there ſtill are, plurality of wives, each had, and have their turns, ſee Gen. xxx. 15, 16.

℣. 11. And if he do not theſe three unto her, &c.] Not the three things laſt mentioned; though this ſenſe, Aben Ezra ſays, many of their interpreters give, which is rejected by him, ſo do ſome chriſtian expoſitors; but theſe three things are, eſpouſing her to himſelf, or to his ſon, or redeeming her by the hand of her father; that is, letting her be redeemed by him, as the Targum of Jonathan; and ſo Jarchi, Aben Ezra and Ben Melech: the meaning is, if one or other of theſe things are not done, then ſhall ſhe go out free without money; be diſmiſſed from her ſervitude, and not obliged to pay any thing for her freedom; the Targum of Jonathan adds, he ſhall give her a bill of divorce; that is, the ſon to whom ſhe had been betrothed, and another wife taken by him, and ſhe denied the above things; which favours the firſt ſenſe.

℣. 12. He that ſmiteth a man, ſo that he die, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan is, that ſmites a man or daughter of Iſrael with the ſword; but there is no need to reſtrain the words either to perſons of any certain nation, nor to any inſtrument with which a perſon may be ſmitten as to die; but any human perſon, man, woman or child, of whatſoever nation, and they ſmitten with any thing whatever, that iſſues in their death: ſhall ſurely be put to death; by the order of the civil magiſtrate, and by the hand of ſuch as ſhall be appointed by him; for this is the original law of God, Gen. ix. 6.

℣. 13. And if a man lie not in wait, &c.] For the life of another to take it away; or does not do it willingly, as the Septuagint verſion, does not ſeek after it, nor deſign it: but God delivers him into his hand; it being ſuffered and ordered by the providence of God, without whoſe knowledge and will nothing comes to paſs, even what may ſeem to be a contingent thing, or matter of chance to us; or it is ſo brought about in providence, that one man falls into the hands of another, and his life is taken away by him, though not purpoſely and maliciouſly; becauſe, as Aben Ezra expreſſes it, for another ſin which he has committed, and for which he muſt die in this way, though not intended by the perſon the more immediate cauſe of his death: then I will appoint thee a place whither he ſhall flee; and there be ſafe both from the avenger of blood, and the civil magiſtrate; which place whilſt Iſrael were in the wilderneſs, was the camp of the Levites, according to Jarchi, or the altar, as follows; but when they were come to Canaan's land, there were cities of refuge appointed for ſuch perſons, that killed a man unawares, to flee to, and where they were ſafe from private revenge, and falling a ſacrifice to public juſtice.

℣. 14. But if a man come preſumptuouſly upon his neighbour to ſlay him with guile, &c.] That comes with malice in his heart, with wrath in his countenance, in a bold, daring, hoſtile manner, uſing all the art, cunning and contrivance he can to take away the life of his neighbour; no aſylum, no refuge, not any thing to ſcreen him from juſtice is to be allowed him: hence, a meſſenger of the Sanhedrim, or an executioner, one that inflicts the forty ſtripes, ſave one, or a phyſician, or one that chaſtizes his ſon or ſcholar, under whoſe hands perſons may die, do not come under this law; for though what they do, they may do wilfully, yet not with guile, as Jarchi, and others obſerve, not with an ill deſign but for good: thou ſhalt take him from mine altar, that he may die; that being the place which in early times criminals had recourſe unto, as Joab and others, as well as in later times, to ſecure them from vengeance; but a man guilty of wilful murder was not to be protected in this way; and the Targum of Jonathan is, "though he is a prieſt, "(the Jeruſalem Targum has it, an high-prieſt) and "miniſters at mine altar, thou ſhalt take him from "thence, and ſlay him with the ſword," ſo Jarchi; but the law refers not to a perſon miniſtring in his office at the altar of the Lord, but to one that ſhould flee there for ſafety, which yet he ſhould not have.

℣. 15. And he that ſmiteth his father or his mother, &c.] With his fiſt, or with a ſtick, or cane, or any ſuch thing, though they died not with the blow, yet if it occaſioned any wound, or cauſed a bruiſe, or made the part ſmitten black and blue, or left any print of the blow; for as Jarchi ſays, the party was not guilty, unleſs by ſmiting there was a bruiſe, or wayle, made, or any mark or ſcar: but if ſo it was, then he ſhall be ſurely put to death; the Targum of Jonathan adds, with the ſuffocation of a napkin; and ſo Jarchi ſays with ſtrangling; the manner of which was this, the perſon was ſunk into a dunghill up to his knees, and two perſons girt his neck with a napkin or towel until he expired. This crime was made capital, to ſhew the hainouſneſs of it, how deteſtable it was to God, and in order to deter from it.

℣. 16. And he that ſtealeth a man and ſelleth him, &c.] One of the children of Iſrael, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, and ſo the Septuagint verſion: but though this law was given to the Iſraelites primarily, yet was made for men-ſtealers in general, as the apoſtle obſerves, who plainly has reference to it, 1 Tim. i. 9, 10: or if he be found in his hand; before the ſelling of him, as Jarchi notes, ſince he ſtole him in order to ſell him, he was guilty of death, as follows: he ſhall ſurely be put to death; with ſtrangling, as the ſame Jewiſh writer remarks, as on the preceding verſe; and Jarchi ſets it down as a rule, that all death in the law, ſimply expreſſed, is ſtrangling.

℣. 17. And he that curſeth his father, or his mother, &c.] Though he don't ſmite them with his hand, or with any inſtrument in it, yet if he ſmites them with his tongue, reviles and reproaches them, ſpeaks evil of them, wiſhes dreadful imprecations upon them, curſes them by the name explained, as the Targum of Jonathan calls it, by the name Jehovah, wiſhing the Lord would curſe them, or that his curſe might light upon them, ſee Prov. xx. 20. and xxx. 17. ſhall ſurely be put to death; or or be killed with caſting ſtones on him, as the Targum of Jonathan, or with ſtoning; ſo Jarchi, who obſerves, that wherever it is ſaid, his blood be upon him, it is meant of ſtoning, as it is of the man that curſes his father or his mother, Lev. xx. 9. which was after this manner, the place of ſtoning was two cubits high, to which the malefactor with his hands bound was brought; from whence one of the witneſſes againſt him, caſt him down headlong, of which, if he did not die, then they took up ſtones and caſt on him, and if he died not through them, then all Iſrael came and ſtoned him; that is, the multitude upon the ſpot: this verſe in the Septuagint verſion follows ℣. 15. with which it agrees, both reſpecting the ſame perſons.

[u] עונתה habitationem ejus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius; ſo ſome in Aben Ezra. Vid. Pfeiffer. dubia vexata, cent. 1. loc. 97. [w] Miſn. Cetubot, c. 5. §. 6.

℣. 18. And if men ſtrive together, &c.] Quarrel and fight, and wreſtle with, and box one another: and one ſmite another with a ſtone; which lying near him he might take up, and in his paſſion throw it at his antagoniſt: or with his fiſt; with his double fiſt, as we expreſs it, with his hand cloſed that it might come with the greater force, and give the greater blow: and he die not, but keepeth his bed; does not die with the blow of the ſtone or fiſt, yet receives ſo much damage by it that he is obliged to take to his bed; or, as the Targum of Jeruſalem paraphraſes it, is caſt on the bed ſick; or, as the Targum of Jonathan, falls into a diſeaſe, as a fever, or the like, through the force of the blow, ſo that he is confined to his room and to his bed.

℣. 19. If he riſe again, &c.] From his bed, or from his diſeaſe, as the laſt mentioned Targum, recovers again, at leaſt ſo far as to be able to do what follows: and walk abroad upon his ſtaff; if he is able to get out of his bed, and eſpecially out of his houſe, and can be ſeen walking about in the ſtreet or in the field, though he is obliged to make uſe of a ſtaff, and lean upon it, being yet weak and ſickly: then ſhall he that ſmote him be quit; from the judgment of ſlaying, as the Targum, he ſhall not be charged with manſlaughter, or be found guilty of a capital crime, but diſcharged from that: only ſhall he pay for the loſs of his time; as much as he could have got in that time by his labour, from which he was obliged to ceaſe: the Jewiſh writers add other things alſo he was to pay for, as the Targum of Jonathan, particularly; as for his pain, and for his loſs of any member, and for his ſhame and diſgrace, as well as the phyſicians fee, which is ſuppoſed to be included in the next clauſe: and cauſe him to be thoroughly healed; take care that he has a phyſician or ſurgeon, and that the proper medicines be applied, and thoſe continued until he is quite well; all which muſt be at the expence of the ſmiter.

℣. 20. And if a man ſmite his ſervant, or his maid with a rod, &c.] A Canaanitiſh ſervant or maid, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi; and that only with a rod for the correction of them, and not with a ſword or any ſuch deſtroying weapon, which would ſeem as though he intended to kill, yet nevertheleſs: and he die under his hand; immediately, whilſt he is ſmiting or beating him or her, on the ſame day, as the above Targum interprets it: he ſhall be ſurely puniſhed; or condemned to the puniſhment of being ſlain with the ſword, as the ſaid Targum and Jarchi explain it: this law was made to deter maſters from uſing ſeverity and cruelty towards their ſervants.

℣. 21. Notwithſtanding, if he continue a day or two, &c.] And does not die immediately, or the ſame day, but lives 24 hours, as the Jewiſh writers interpret it; ſo Abendana [x] explains the phraſe, a day or two; "a day which is as two days, and "they are 24 hours from time to time," that is, from the time he was ſmitten to the time of his continuance; and ſo it is elſewhere explained [y], by a day we underſtand a day, which is like to days, that is, from time to time, the meaning of which is, from a certain time in one day to the ſame in another: he ſhall not be puniſhed; that is, with death; for he is his money; is bought with his money, and is as good as money, and therefore it is a loſs ſufficient to him to loſe him; and it may be reaſonably thought he did not ſmite his ſervant with an intention to kill him, ſince he himſelf is the loſer by it.

℣. 22. If men ſtrive, &c.] Quarrel and fight with one another, which is to be underſtood of Hebrews, as Aben Ezra obſerves: and hurt a woman with child; who being the wife of one of them, and alſo an Iſraelitiſh woman, interpoſes to part them, or help her huſband; but the other, inſtead of ſtriking his antagoniſt as he intended, gives her a blow: ſo that her fruit depart from her; or, her children go forth [z], out of her womb, as ſhe may have more than one; through the fright of the quarrel, and fear of her huſband being hurt, and the blow ſhe received by interpoſing, might miſcarry, or falling into labour, come before her time, and bring forth her offspring ſooner than expected: and yet no miſchief follow; to her, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra reſtrain it to the woman; and which miſchief they interpret of death, as does alſo the Targum of Onkelos; but it may refer both to the woman and her offspring, and not only to the death of them, but to any hurt or damage to either of them: now though there was none of any ſort, he ſhall ſurely be puniſhed; that is, be fined or mulcted for ſtriking the woman, and haſtening the childbirth: according as the woman's huſband will lay upon him, and he ſhall pay as the judges determine; the huſband might propoſe what fine ſhould be paid, and might aſk it in court; and if the ſmiter agreed to it, well and good, but if he judged it an exorbitant demand, he might appeal to the judges; for the huſband might not lay what fine he pleaſed: this, if diſputed, was to be decided by the judges, and as they determined it, it was paid; of which Maimonides [a] gives this account: "he that ſtrikes a "woman and her fruit depart, though he did not "intend it, is obliged to pay the price of the "birth to the huſband, and for hurt and pain to "the woman; how do they eſtimate the price of "the birth? they conſider the woman how well ſhe "was before ſhe brought forth, and how well ſhe "is after ſhe has brought forth, and they give it "to the huſband; if the huſband be dead, they "give it to the heirs; if ſhe is ſtriken after the "death of her huſband, they give the price of the "birth to the woman."

℣. 23. And if any miſchief follow, &c.] According as that is, ſo ſhall it be done to the ſmiter: if death follows, then thou ſhalt give life for life; if death to the woman, ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra interpret it; to which agrees the Targum of Jonathan, "but if there is death in her, then ye ſhall "judge or condemn the life of the murderer for "the life of the woman;" about which Jarchi ſays, ſays, there is a difference among their doctors; ſome ſay life properly, abſolutely the perſon himſelf; others ſay money, but not life properly; for he that intends to kill one and kills another is acquitted from death, but muſt pay to the heirs the price (of the perſon killed) as that perſon might be ſold for in the market: and indeed it ſeems hard that a perſon that kills another at unawares, ſhould die for it; it is more reaſonable that the puniſhment ſhould in ſuch a caſe be commuted for ſomething leſs than life; and that though no ſatisfaction was to be taken for a wilful murderer, Numb. xxxv. 31. yet it ſeems to imply that it might be taken for one that was ſo without deſign; as by another law cities of refuge are appointed for the man-ſlayer at unawares: the canons of the Jews, according to Maimonides [b], run thus; "he that "ſtrikes a woman, and ſhe miſcarries and dies, "although it is done ignorantly; lo, ſuch an one, "is free from payment, and he does not pay any "thing, as it is ſaid, if there is no miſchief, &c. the "ſcripture does not diſtinguiſh between what is "done ignorantly and preſumptuouſly, in a thing "in which there is not death by the Sanhedrim, to "free him from payment: in what things? when "he intends the woman; but if he intends his "neighbour and ſtrikes the woman, though ſhe "dies, ſince her death is without intention, lo, "this is a thing in which there is not death by the "Sanhedrim, and he pays the price of the birth:" the Septuagint verſion interprets this, not of the woman that miſcarries and dies, but of the child that becomes an abortive; if that was not formed and ſhaped, then only a fine was to be laid, but if it was come to its proper form and ſhape, and ſo was animated or quickened, then life was to go for life: and ſo, according to the Salic laws, he that killed an infant in its mother's womb was to pay 8000 pence, which made 200 ſhillings; but if he was the cauſe of a woman's miſcarriage, by blows or otherwiſe, if the birth was animated, according to the civil law, he was to be puniſhed with death [c]: but one would think, where this is only accidental and not intended, ſuch a puniſhment is too rigid and ſevere: however, neither this nor what follows were left to the will of a private perſon to inflict at his pleaſure, but to the civil magiſtrate; and therefore no ways encourages private revenge, in favour of which it was applied by the Phariſees in Chriſt's time, whoſe gloſs he refutes, Matt. v. 38, 39. nor are the words directed to the offender in this and the following caſes, but to Moſes, and ſo to all judges under him and in ſucceſſion, who were to ſee theſe laws put in execution.

[x] Not. in Miclol Yophi in loc. [y] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Zabim, c. 2. §. 3. [z] ויצאו ילדיה & egreſſi fuerint nati ejus, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Druſius. [a] Hilchot Chobel Umazzik, c. 4. §. 1. 2.

℣. 24. Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot.] This is lex talionis, the law of retaliation, and from whence the heathens had theirs; but whether this is to be taken ſtrictly and literally, or only for pecuniary mulcts, is a queſtion; Joſephus [d] underſtands it in the former ſenſe, the Jewiſh writers generally in the latter; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it; "the price of an "eye for an eye, &c." Jarchi on the place obſerves, that, "he that puts out his neighbours eye "muſt pay him the price of his eye, according to "the price of a ſervant ſold in the market, and "ſo of all the reſt; for not taking away of mem-"bers, ſtrictly is meant, as our doctors here interpret it;" in a place he refers to, and to which Aben Ezra agrees; and of the difference and diſpute between the Jews concerning this matter, ſee the note on Matt. v. 38. and indeed, though theſe laws of retaliation ſhould, according to the letter of them, be attended to as far as they can; yet in ſome caſes, it ſeems neceſſary that they ſhould not be ſtrictly attended to, but ſome recompence made in another way, and nothing ſeems more agreeable than a pecuniary one: thus, for inſtance, this law cannot be literally executed, when one that has never an eye puts out the eye of another, as it is poſſible that a blind man may; or one that has no tooth may ſtrike out the tooth of another; in ſuch caſes eye can't be given for eye, nor tooth for tooth; and as Saadiah Gaon [e] obſerves, if a man ſhould ſmite the eye of his neighbour, and the third part of the ſight of his eye ſhould depart; how will he order it to ſtrike ſuch a ſtroke as that, without adding or leſſening? and if a man that has but one eye, or one hand, or one foot, ſhould damage another man in thoſe parts, and muſt loſe his other eye, or hand, or foot, he would be in a worſe caſe and condition than the man he injured; ſince he would ſtill have one eye, or hand, or foot; wherefore a like law of Charondas among the Thurians is complained of, ſince it might be the caſe, that a man with one eye might have that ſtruck out, and ſo be utterly deprived of ſight; whereas the man that ſtruck it out, though he loſes one for it, yet has another, and ſo not deprived of ſight utterly, and therefore thought not to be ſufficiently puniſhed; and that it was righteſt that he ſhould have both his eyes put out for it: and hence Diodorus Siculus [f] reports of a one-eyed man who loſt his eye, that he complained of this law to the people, and adviſed to have it altered: this lex talionis was among the Roman laws of the twelve tables [g].

℣. 25. Burning for burning, wound for wound, ſtripe for ſtripe.] This is to be underſtood of burning a man's fleſh with fire; of wounds made by any means, ſo that the blood is let out; and of blows, and the prints and marks of them; of ſtripes and wayles where the blood is ſettled, and the part is turned black and blue: the Targum of Jonathan is, the price of the pain of burning for burning, &c. and indeed in every one of theſe caſes, the law could not be well literally executed; for it would be very difficult to burn and wound and mangle a man exactly as he had done another: and as Favorinus [h] objects againſt the law of the twelve tables of the Romans concerning retaliation, how can a man make a wound in another exactly as long, and as broad, and as deep as that he has given? nor would he ſuffer a larger to be made, as it was not juſt it ſhould; and to which may be added, that all conſtitutions are not alike, and burning and wounding and ſtriping, eſpecially in ſome parts, might prove mortal and the perſon might die thereby; to them the law of retaliation would not be obſerved, the puniſhment would be exceeded; and it is much more agreeable to juſtice and equity that it ſhould be leſſened rather than increaſed; and it may be obſerved, the law of the the twelve tables with the Romans concerning maiming of members, only took place when the parties could not come to an agreement; and with reſpect to the Jewiſh law, Joſephus [i] himſelf ſays, that the man that has his eye put out, may receive ceive money for it, if he is willing, which the law allows of.

[b] Chobel Umazzik, c. 4. §. 5. 6. [c] Vid. L'Empereur in Miſn. Bava Kama, c. 8. §. 2. [d] Antiq. l. 4. c. 33. 35. [e] Apud Aben Ezram in loc. [f] Bibliothec. l. 12. par. 2. p. 82, 83. [g] A. Gell. Noct. Attic. l. 20. c. 1. [h] Apud Ib. [i] Ut ſupra.

℣. 26. If a man ſmite the eye of his ſervant, &c.] Give him a blow on the eye in a paſſion, as a correction for ſome fault he has committed: or the eye of his maid, that it periſh; ſtrike her on that part in like manner, ſo that the eye is beaten or drops out, or however loſes its ſight, and is blinded, as the Septuagint verſion; or corrupts it [k], it turns black and blue, and gathers corrupt matter, and becomes a ſore eye; yet if the ſight is not loſt, or corrupts ſo as to periſh, this law does not take place; the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi, reſtrain this to a Canaanitiſh ſervant or maid: he ſhall let him go free for his eyes ſake; or them, as the Septuagint; his right to them as a ſervant was hereby forfeited, and he was obliged to give them their freedom, let the time of ſervitude, that was to come, be what it would. This law was made to deter maſters from uſing their ſervants with cruelty, ſince though humanity and goodneſs would not reſtrain them from ill uſage of them, their own profit and advantage by them might.

℣. 27. And if he ſmite out his man-ſervant's tooth, or his maid-ſervant's tooth, &c.] Give them ſuch a ſlap on the face, or a blow on the mouth, as to ſtrike out one of their teeth; this alſo the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi reſtrain to a Canaanitiſh ſervant or maid: he ſhall let him go free for his tooth's ſake; both him and her, the ſervant and the maid; this, though of leſſer conſequence than the loſs of an eye, was puniſhed in the ſame manner with the loſs of the ſervant-man or maid, to make maſters careful how they abuſed their ſervants in any degree. And though only theſe parts are expreſſed, yet Jarchi and Aben Ezra obſerve, that all other principal members of the body, which they reckon to be twenty-four, are included, as the fingers, toes, &c.

℣. 28. If an ox gore a man or a woman that they die, &c.] That are Iſraelites, of whom only Aben Ezra interprets it; but though they may be principally deſigned, yet not ſolely; for no doubt if one of another nation was gored to death by the ox of an Iſraelite, the ſame penalty would be inflicted, as follows: then the ox ſhall be ſurely ſtoned; which is but an exemplification of the original law given to Noah and his ſons, Gen. ix. 5: at the hand of every beaſt will I require it, i. e. the blood of the lives of men; which ſhews the care God takes of them, that even a beaſt muſt die that is the means of ſhedding man's blood: and his fleſh ſhall not be eaten; it being as an impure beaſt according to this ſentence, as Maimonides [l] obſerves; and even though it might have been killed in a regular manner before it was ſtoned, it was not to be eaten; no not even by heathens, nor by dogs might it be eaten, as a dead carcaſs might by a proſelyte of the gate, or a ſtranger; this might not be given nor ſold to him; for as Aben Ezra obſerves, all profit of them is here forbidden: but the owner of the ox ſhall be quit; from puniſhment, as the laſt mentioned writer obſerves, from ſuffering death; he ſhall only ſuffer the loſs of his ox: the Targum of Jonathan is, "he ſhall be quit from "the judgment of ſlaughter (or condemnation of "murder) and alſo from the price of a ſervant or "maid," which was thirty ſhekels, ℣. 32.

℣. 29. But if the ox were wont to puſh with his horns in time paſt, &c.] Or from or before yeſterday, to the third [m]; that is, three days before, and had made three puſhes, as Jarchi explains it: and it hath been teſtified to his owner; by ſufficient witneſſes, who ſaw him puſh at people for three days paſt: the Targum of Jonathan is, "and it hath "been teſtified to the face of his owner three "days." Concerning this teſtimony Maimonides [n] thus writes, "this is a teſtification, all that teſtify "of it three days; but if he puſhes, or bites, or "kicks, or ſtrikes even an hundred times on one "day, this is no teſtification, (not a ſufficient one): "three companies of witneſſes teſtify of it in one "day, lo, this is a doubt, whether it is a (proper) "teſtimony or no; there is no teſtification but be-"fore the owner, and before the Sanhedrim: "and he hath not kept him in; in ſome incloſed place, houſe or field, not frequented by people, and where there was no danger of doing any hurt, if this care was not taken, after a proper teſtimony had been given of his vicious diſpoſition. By the Roman laws [o] oxen that puſhed with their horns were to have hay bound about them, that thoſe that met them might beware of them; hence that of Horace [p]: but that he hath killed a man or a woman; by puſhing and goring them with his horns, or any other way, as biting or kicking: the ox ſhall be ſtoned; as is provided for by the preceding law: and his owner ſhall be put to death; ſince he was acceſſory to the death of the perſon killed, not keeping in his beaſt, when he had ſufficient notice of his vicious temper: the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo other Jewiſh writers, interpret this of death ſent upon him from heaven, or death by the immediate hand of God, as ſudden death, or death by ſome diſeaſe inflicted, or before a man is fifty years of age; but there is no doubt to be made, but this intends death by the civil magiſtrate, according to the original law, Gen. ix. 6.

℣. 30. If there be laid on him a ſum of money, &c.] By the decree of the judges, as Aben Ezra, or which the Sanhedrim of Iſrael have laid upon him; if his ſentence of death is commuted for a fine, with the conſent of the relations of the deceaſed, who in ſuch a caſe are willing to ſhew mercy, and take a fine inſtead of the perſon's death; ſuppoſing it was through careleſſneſs and negligence, and not with any ill deſign that he did not keep up his ox from doing damage, after he had notice: then he ſhall give for the ranſom of his life, whatever is laid upon him; whatever mulct or fine he is amerced with by the court, inſtead of the ſentence of death firſt pronouced. Of this ranſom Maimonides [q] thus writes: "the ranſom is according as "the judges conſider what is the price (or value) "of him that is ſlain; (i. e. according to his rank, "whether a noble or common man, a free man "or a ſervant) all is according to the eſtimation of "him that is ſlain.—To whom do they give the "ranſom? to the heirs of the ſlain; and if a wo-"man is killed, the ranſom is given to the heirs "of her father's (family) and not to her huſ-"band."

℣. 31. Whether he have gored a ſon, or have gored a daughter, &c.] A little ſon or daughter, and both Iſraelites, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra; this is obſerved, becauſe only a man or woman are made

4

[k] שחתה & corruperit eum, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius; ſo Ainſworth. [l] Hilchot Maacolot Aſurot, c. 4. §. 22. [m] מתמל שלשם ab heri & nudiuſtertius, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Piſcator, Druſius. [n] Hilchot Niſke Mammon, c. 6. §. 1, 2. [o] Plutarch. in Craſſo.

[p] Fœnum habet in cornu, longe fuge. Horat. Sermon. l. 1. Satyr. 4.

[q] Hilchot Niſke Mammon, c. 11. §. 1, 2.

made mention of in ℣. 29, 30. persons grown up; and lest it should be thought that only adult persons were intended, this is added to shew, that the same regard is had to little ones, as to grown persons, should they suffer by an ox in like manner as men and women may. The Targum of Jonathan restrains this to a son or daughter of an Israelite; but the life of every one, of whatsoever nation, is equally provided for, and guarded against by the original law of God: according to this judgment shall it be done unto him; to the owner of the ox that has gored a child, male or female; that is, he shall be put to death, if he has been warned of the practice of his ox for three days past, and has took no care to keep him in; or he shall pay the ransom of his life, as it has been laid by the court, with the consent of the relations of the children.

℣. 32. If the ox shall push a man-servant, or a maid-servant, &c.] Which the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi interpret of a Canaanitish servant, man or maid; but no doubt the same provision was made for an Hebrew servant, man or maid, as for a Gentile one: he shall give unto their master thirty shekels of silver; that is, the owner of the ox shall pay so much to the masters of the servants for the loss they have sustained by his ox goring them; and Maimonides[r] observes, that "the ransom of "servants, whether great or small, whether male "or female, is fixed in the law, thirty shekels of "good silver, whether the servant is worth a hun-"dred pounds, or whether he is worth but a penny." This was the price our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ was sold at, Matt. xxvi. 15. see the note there.

℣. 33. If a man shall open a pit, &c.] That has been dug in time past, and filled up again, or take the covering from it, and leave it uncovered: or if a man shall dig a pit, and not cover it; a new one, in the street, as the Targum of Jonathan; or in a public place, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra; otherwise a man might dig one for water, in his own fields, in inclosed places, where there was no danger of cattle coming thither, and falling therein: and an ox or an ass fall therein; or any other beast, as Jarchi observes; for these are mentioned only as instances, and are put for all others. Maimonides[s] says, "if a man digs a pit in a public place, "and an ox or ass fall into it and die, though the "pit is full of shorn wool, and the like, the owner "of the pit is bound to pay the whole damage; "and this pit he says must be ten hands deep, "if it is less than that, and an ox, or any "other beast or fowl fall into it and die, he is "free."

℣. 34. The owner of the pit shall make it good, &c.] Repair the loss of the ox or ass: and give the money unto the owner of them; the price of them, what they are worth: the Targum of Jonathan is, "the owner of the pit shall pay the silver, he shall "return to its owner the price of the ox or ass:" and the dead beast shall be his; either the owner of the pit, who pays the full value for the ox or ass killed, which seems but reasonable; or "the in-"jured person, as Jarchi, for he says, they reckon "or estimate the carcass, and he takes it for the "price;" that is, for part of the price it is valued at.

℣. 35. And if one man's ox hurt another's, that he die, &c.] By pushing with his horns, or his body, or by biting with his teeth, as Jarchi, or by any way whatever: then they shall sell the live ox and divide the money; the scripture speaks, as the same writer observes, of one of equal value, otherwise the man that had his ox killed might be greatly a gainer by it; for if his ox was a poor one, and of little value, and the ox that killed his a good one, of value greatly superior, which according to this law was to be sold, and the money divided between the two owners, the man that lost his ox might have double the worth of it, or more, which was not equitable. On the other hand, according to the Jewish canons[t], the case stood thus, "when an ox of the value of one pound strikes "an ox of the value of twenty, and kills him, "and lo, the carcass is of the value of four pounds, "the owner of the ox is bound to pay him eight "pounds, which is the half of the damage, (added "to the half part of the price of the carcase) but "he is not bound to pay, but of the body of the "ox which hurts, because it is said, they shall sell "the live ox; wherefore if an ox of the value of "twenty pieces of money, should kill one of two "hundred, and the carcase is valued at a pound, "the master of the carcass can't say to the master "of the live ox, give me fifty pieces of money; "but it will be said to him, lo, the ox which did "the hurt is before thee, take him, and go thy "way, altho' he is worth no more than a penny:" and the dead ox also they shall divide; the money the carcase is worth, or it is sold for.

℣. 36. Or if it be known that the ox hath used to push in time past, &c.] If it is a plain case, and a thing well known in the neighbourhood, and there are witnesses enough to testify it, that it has yesterday, and for two or three days running, pushed with his horns men and cattle, as they have come in his way, see the note on ℣. 29. and his owner hath not kept him in; took no care to prevent his doing mischief by putting him into a barn or outhouse, or into an enclosure, where he could do no damage to any: he shall surely pay ox for ox; that is, he shall give as good an ox to him, whose ox has been killed by his, as that was, or pay him the full worth and value of it: and the dead shall be his own; shall not be divided as in the preceding case, but shall be the proprietor's wholly, that is, the sufferer's; because the owner of the vicious ox took no care of him, though it was well known he was mischievous, for which negligence he was punished this way.

CHAP.

[r] Hilchot Nizke Mammon, c. 11. §. 1.
[s] Ib. c. 12. §. 1, 10. so Bartenora in Misn. Bava Kama, c. 1. §. 1.
[t] Maimon. Hilchot Nizke Mammon, c. 1. §. 1.

CHAP. XXII.

THIS chapter contains various laws concerning theft, ℣. 1—4. concerning damage done to fields and vineyards by beasts, and to corn in stacks or standing, by fire, ℣. 5, 6. concerning any thing or creature deposited in the hands of a neighbour, and they be stolen or lost by one means or another, ℣. 7—13. concerning any thing borrowed, and it comes to any damage, ℣. 14, 15. concerning fornication, ℣. 16, 17. concerning witchcraft, bestiality and idolatry, ℣. 18—20. concerning oppression, and affliction of the stranger, fatherless and widow, ℣. 21—24. concerning taking usury and pledges, ℣. 25—27. concerning irreverence to magistrates, ℣. 28. concerning the offering of firstfruits to God, ℣. 29, 30. and the chapter is concluded with a prohibition of eating any thing torn by beasts, ℣. 31.

℣. 1. If a man shall steal an ox or a sheep, &c.] In which the substance of men chiefly lay in those times, and particularly the people of Israel, who were now come out of Egypt, with their flocks and herds, and these lying near together, were the more liable to be stolen; and hence also, the laws in the preceding chapter concerning oxen and damages done by them, and oxen and sheep are only mentioned; perhaps chiefly because used in sacrifice, as well as serviceable for other things; not but that stealing other cattle and other things were criminal and forbidden, and to be punished in proportion: and kill it, or sell it; either of which cases would plainly shew that he took it away with an intention to deprive the owner of it, and to convert it to his own use: he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep; the reason of this difference, five being obliged to be given for the one, and but four for the other is, because the one was more valuable than the other, as well as more useful, and also more easily stolen, and therefore the greater mulct or fine was laid upon the theft of it, to deter from it: the Targum of Jonathan expresses the reason of the law thus; five for oxen, because the theft of them hindered from plowing, or made to cease from it; and for sheep but four, because there was trouble in the theft of them, and there was no tillage or agriculture by them: and Saadiah Gaon observes, that the damage that comes to the owner of the ox is more than that by a lamb, because with it he, the ox, plows, which is a creature that was used in those countries, to be employed in that service, as well as in treading out the corn: Maimonides[u] accounts for it thus, "the restitution of the theft of oxen "is increased by one, because the theft of them "is easy; sheep are fed in flocks, and are easily "kept and watched, and can scarcely be taken "away by theft but in the night; but oxen are "fed scattered here and there, and therefore can-"not be so easily kept by the neat-herd; hence "also their theft used to be more common:" fourfold restitution was in use with the antient Persians, with whom it was a rule, "whoever took any "substance of another, in retaliation they took "fourfold from him, and if he restored it, he gave "fourfold of the same[w]."

℣. 2. If a thief be found breaking up, &c.] An house, in order to steal money, jewels, household-goods, &c. or breaking through any fence, hedge, or wall of any inclosure, where oxen, or sheep, or any other creatures are, in order to take them away: the Targum of Jonathan is, "if in the hole "of a wall (or window of it) a thief be found;" that is, in the night, as appears from the following verse, if the sun, &c. to which this is opposed, as Aben Ezra observes; some render it, with a digging instrument[x]; and it is a Jewish canon[y], that "if any one enter with a digging instrument, he "is condemned on account of his end;" his design, which is apparent by the instrument found upon him; for as Maimonides[z] observes, "it is "well known, that if any one enters with a digging instrument, that he intends, if the master "of the house opposes him to deliver his goods "out of his power, that he will kill him, and "therefore it is lawful to kill him; but it does not "signify whether he enters with a digging instrument, either by the way of the court, or roof;" and be smitten that he die; be knocked down with a club, by the master of the house, or any of his servants, or be run through with a sword, or be struck with any other weapon, to hinder him from entrance and carrying off any of the goods of the house, and the blow be mortal: there shall no blood be shed for him; as for a man that is murdered; for to kill a man when breaking into a house, and by all appearance, with an intention to commit murder, if resisted, in defence of a man's self, his life and property, was not to be reckoned murder, and so not punishable with death: or, no blood shall be unto him[a]; shall be imputed to him, the man that kills the thief, shall not be chargeable with his blood, or suffer for shedding it; because his own life was risked, and it being at such a time, could call none to his assistance, nor easily discern the person, nor could know well where and whom he struck.

℣. 3. If the sun be risen upon him, &c.] Either upon the thief, or upon the master of the house, or the person that finds the thief and smites him that he dies; it matters not which it is interpreted, it is true of both, for when it is risen on the one, it is on the other: there shall be blood shed for him; the person that kills him shall die for it: the Targum of Jonathan is, "if it is as clear as "the sun, (and so Jarchi) that not to kill any he "entered, and he should kill him, there is guilt "of shedding innocent blood:" because coming at broad day-light, and when the sun was up, it was a plain case he came not with a design to murder, but only to steal; besides, being at such a time, the master of the house could call for help and assistance, and take him; which is what is suggested he should do, and not take away his life, but oblige him, if he had got any of his goods to restore them as follows: for he should make full restitution; by returning them and as much more, as [u] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 41. [w] Lib. Shed-dar, apud Hyde Relig. Vet Pers. p. 472. [x] במחתרת cum perfossorio, Pagninus; cum instrumento perfossorio, Tigurine version. [y] Misn. Sanhedrin, c. 8. §. 6. [z] Comment. in Ib. [a] איך לו דמים non ei sanguines, Montanus, Vatablus, Drusius.

as the following verſe ſhews: if he have nothing, then he ſhall be ſold for his theft; by the Sanhedrim, or court of judicature: as the Targum of Jonathan, before whom he ſhould be brought, and the theft proved upon him, and unto the year of the remiſſion or releaſe, as the ſame Targum; nor were ſuch to be ſold to ſtrangers, or to ſerve for ever, for they were to be diſmiſſed after ſix years, as Joſephus [b] obſerves: and it is a canon with the Jews [c], that, "an Hebrew ſervant whom the Sanhedrim ſell, "they do not ſell him but to an Iſraelite, or to a "proſelyte of righteouſneſs," according to the Targum of Jonathan, it ſeems as if he was to be ſold to the perſon from whom he ſtole, ſince it is, "he ſhall be ſold to him;" but if not, however, the price he was ſold at was to be given to him for a recompence of his loſs: ſo ſays Maimonides [d], "if he have not goods, neither moveable nor im-"moveable, the Sanhedrim ſell him, and give the "price to him that is injured, as it is ſaid: if he "have nothing, &c. and adds, a man is ſold for his "theft but not a woman [e]:" from hence it appears, that theft was not a capital crime by the law of Moſes: Draco is ſaid to be the firſt who made it ſo; but his law being thought by the Athenians to be too ſevere, was annulled by them [f]: the law of the twelve tables with the Romans greatly agrees with the Moſaic laws about theft; theſe permitted to kill a thief who ſhould be taken in open theft, if either when he committed the theft it was night, or if in the day-time, and he defended himſelf with weapons when about to be taken [g]; or as elſewhere expreſſed [h], an open thief was delivered to ſervitude to him who was robbed, but a nocturnal thief it was lawful to kill by the law of the twelve tables.

℣. 4. If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, &c.] Or, in finding be found [i], be plainly and evidently found upon him, before witneſſes, as the Targum of Jonathan; ſo that there is no doubt of the theft; and it is a clear caſe, that he had neither as yet killed nor ſold the creature he had ſtolen, and ſo could be had again directly, and without any damage done; as well as it would appear by this, that he was not an old expert thief, and uſed to ſuch practices, ſince he would ſoon have made away with this theft in ſome way or another: whether it be ox, or aſs, or ſheep; or any other creature; and even, as Jarchi thinks, any thing elſe, as raiment, goods, &c. he ſhall reſtore double; two oxen for an ox, two aſſes for an aſs, and two ſheep for a ſheep: and, as the ſame commentator obſerves, two living ones and not dead ones, or the price of two living ones: ſo Solon made theft by his law, not puniſhable with death, but with a double reſtitution [k]; and the reaſon why here only a double reſtitution and not fourfold is inſiſted on, as in ℣. 1. is, becauſe there the theft is perſiſted in, here not; but either the thief being convicted in his own conſcience of his evil, makes confeſſion, or however, the creatures are found alive with him, and ſo more uſeful being reſtored, and being had again ſooner, the loſs is not quite ſo great.

℣. 5. If a man ſhall cauſe a field or vineyard to be eaten, &c.] Which is not his own, by putting cattle into it to feed upon it, as it is explained in the next clauſe: and ſhall put in his beaſt, and ſhall feed in another man's field; do damage in one or both thoſe two ways, either by his feet treading down the graſs and fruits of the earth, which the Rabbins, as Jarchi ſays, think, is meant by putting in his beaſt; or with his beaſt eating up the ſame, which is intended by the latter phraſe: of the beſt of his own field, and of the beſt of his own vineyard, ſhall he make reſtitution; for what damage is done by his beaſt in his neighbour's field or vineyard; and this held good of any garden or orchard injured in like manner; and it is a general rule with the Jews, that when any damage is ſuſtained, he that does the damage is obliged to pay with the beſt the earth produces [l], even though better than was the man's that ſuffered the loſs, that for the future he might be more careful of doing injury to another [m].

℣. 6. If fire break out, &c.] Even tho' of itſelf, as Jarchi interprets it: and catch in thorns; a thorn-hedge or fence, with which corn-fields might be incloſed: ſo that the ſtacks of corn, or the ſtanding-corn, or the field be conſumed therewith; whether it be corn cut down, bound up in ſheaves, and laid up in heaps or ſtacks, or whether it be yet growing, and not fully ripe, at leaſt not cut down, or any other fruits of the field; if the fire that takes the thorns which are near them ſhould reach to thoſe, and kindle upon them and deſtroy them: he that kindleth the fire ſhall ſurely make reſtitution; that is, though he kindles the fire upon his own ground, yet being careleſs of it, it breaks out without his intention and deſign, and catches hold on a thorn-hedge between him and his neighbour's field, and ſo ſpreads itſelf to the corn there, whether ſtanding or in ſtacks, or to other fruits either lying or growing there; now, though he did not kindle the fire in the corn, and among the ſtacks or heaps of fruit in his neighbour's field, yet for his careleſneſs in not looking after the fire he had kindled in his own field, he was to make good all the damages his neighbour ſuſtained hereby: the Jewiſh canons relating to this affair are theſe; "if "a man kindles a fire by the hands of a deaf man, "or a fool, or a child, he is free by human judg-"ment, but he is bound by the judgment of "heaven, (that is, to make reſtitution;) if he kin-"dles it by the hand of a knowing and under-"ſtanding man, he is bound; one brings fire and "another afterwards brings wood, he that brings "the wood is bound; one brings wood and an-"other afterwards brings fire, he that brings the "fire is bound; after that, another comes and "blows the flame (or fire), he is bound; but if "the wind blows it they are all free; he that kin-"dles a fire and it conſumes wood, or ſtones, or "duſt, he is bound, as it is ſaid, Exod. xxii. 6. "if fire break out, &c. if the fire paſſes over a "fence four cubits high, or a public road, or a "river, he is free [n]:" thoſe two things laſt mentioned, feeding on another man's field and fire, with the ox and the pit, obſerved in the preceding chapter, are with the Miſnic doctors [o], the four fathers fountains, or ſources of damages.

℣. 7. If a man ſhall deliver unto his neighbour money or ſtock to keep, &c.] Without any reward for keeping it, as the Targum of Jonathan; and ſo other Jewiſh writers [p] underſtand this paſſage, of ſuch as keep a depoſitum freely, having nothing for

[b] Antiq. l. 16. c. 1. §. 1. [c] Maimon. Abadim. c. 1. §. 3. [d] Hilchot Genubah, c. 3. §. 11.
[e] So Miſn. Sotah, c. 3. §. 8. [f] A. Gell. Noct. Attic. l. 11. c. 18. [g] Ib. [h] Ib. l. 20. c. 1.
[i] הִמָּצֵא תִמָּצֵא inveniendo inventum fuerit, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator. [k] A. Gell. l. 11. c. 18.
[l] Miſn. Bava Kama, c. 1. §. 1. [m] Bartenora in Miſn. Gittin, c. 5. §. 1. [n] Ib. c. 5. §. 4.
[o] Ib. c. 1. §. 1. [p] Jarchi in ℣. 10. Bartenora in Miſn. Shebuot, c. 6. §. 5.

for it; whether it be money or goods, gold, ſilver, jewels, raiment, houſhold ſtuff, or any kind of veſſels or inſtruments uſed in the houſe, or in trade; and alſo cattle, as appears from ℣. 9. and if it be ſtolen out of the man's houſe; into whoſe cuſtody it was delivered: if the thief be found, let him pay double; the worth of what is ſtolen, agreeable to the law in ℣. 4. that is, if it was found in his hands, but if he had diſpoſed of it, then he was to pay fivefold or fourfold, as in ℣. 1. and ſo runs the Jewiſh canon [q], "if any one delivers to his "neighbour a beaſt or veſſels, and they are ſtolen "or loſt, he ſhall make reſtitution; but if he will "not ſwear, for they ſay, one that keeps for no-"thing, may ſwear and be free; then if the thief "ſhould be found he ſhall pay double; if he has "killed or ſold, he ſhall pay fourfold or fivefold: "to whom ſhall he pay? to him with whom the "depoſitum is: if he ſwears, and will not pay, "and the thief is found, he ſhall pay double; if "he has killed or ſold he ſhall pay fourfold and "fivefold: to whom ſhall he pay? to the owner "of the depoſitum."

℣. 8. If the thief be not found, &c.] And ſo no account can be given of the goods depoſited, what is become of them, and it becomes a doubtful caſe, whether they have been ſtolen or embezzled, and there is ſuſpicion of the latter: then the maſter of the houſe ſhall be brought unto the judges; here called Elohim, gods, becauſe they were God's vicegerents, and perſonated him, and acted under his power and authority; and who at this preſent were Moſes, and thoſe that judged the people under him, and afterwards the ſeventy elders, and all ſuch who in ſucceeding times were judges in Iſrael, and bore the office of civil magiſtrates; before theſe the maſter of the houſe, or the perſon who had any goods committed to his care, and they were loſt, was to be brought and put to his oath, and upon it examined, in order to find out what was become of the goods committed to him: to ſee whether he have put his hand to his neighbours goods; took them to himſelf, made uſe of them, or diſpoſed of them to his own advantage, and which was no other than a kind of theft.

℣. 9. For all manner of treſpaſs, &c.] With reſpect to what is committed to a man's truſt, and it is loſt to the owner of it, there muſt be ſome where or other a treſpaſs committed, either by the perſon into whoſe hands it was put, or by a thief that has ſtolen it from him: whether it be for ox, for aſs, for ſheep, for raiment, or for any manner of loſt thing; by which it appears that either of theſe, or any other cattle not named, as well as money and veſſels, or houſhold goods, or goods in trade, were ſometimes, or might be lodged in the hands of another as a depoſitum for ſafety or convenience; and for which, or any other ſo depoſited, and loſt, which another challengeth to be his; or affirms that he put into the hands of his neighbour to be kept by him for him; or who ſhall ſay this is he, or he is the perſon into whoſe hands I put it, or this is it [r]; ſuch and ſuch were the thing or things I delivered to him: the cauſe of both parties ſhall come before the judges; who were to hear what each party had to ſay, and to examine the witneſſes each of them brought, and conſider the nature of the evidence given, and to judge and determine: and whom the judges ſhall condemn; or pronounce wicked [s], as having done a wicked thing; either the one as having brought a falſe accuſation againſt his neighbour, charging him with a depoſitum he never had, or the other as having converted it to his own uſe: he ſhall pay double unto his neighbour; either the depoſiter, who pretended to be ſo and was not, but brought a falſe charge againſt his neighbour, or a falſe witneſs, as Jarchi, ſuch an one was to pay double to the perſon charged wrongfully; or, on the other hand, the perſon with whom the depoſitum was put, if it appeared that he had acted a fraudulent part, and abuſed his truſt, then he was to pay double to the depoſiter.

℣. 10. If a man deliver to his neighbour an aſs, or an ox, or a ſheep, or any beaſt to keep, &c.] And he keeps it without a reward, as the Targum of Jonathan; but Jarchi and Aben Ezra more rightly interpret this of one that keeps for hire, as neatherds, ſhepherds, &c. The Jews ſay [t] there are "four ſorts of keepers; he that keeps for nought "(or freely), he that borrows, he that takes hire, "and he that hires; he that keeps for nought "ſwears in all caſes (and is free), he that borrows "pays for all (that is loſt or ſtolen, &c.) he that "takes hire, and he that hires, ſwear on account "of that which is torn, or carried away, or dies, "and they pay for that which is loſt or ſtolen," which are the caſes after ſuppoſed: and it die; either of the above, or any other under the care of another; that is, dies of itſelf, not being killed by any, and its death ſudden, and not eaſily accounted for: or be hurt; receive any damage in any part, though it die not; or be broken [u], have any of its limbs or bones broken; or be torn by a wild beaſt, as the Targum of Jonathan adds: or driven away; from the flock or herd by thieves or robbers, or rather carried captive by an enemy in an hoſtile way, ſee ℣. 12: no man ſeeing it; die, or be hurt, or carried off; and ſo, as the above Targum paraphraſes it, there is no witneſs that ſees and can bear witneſs, that is, to any of the ſaid things which have happened to it.

℣. 11. Then ſhall an oath of the Lord be between them both, &c.] Either by the one, the keeper, for the ſatisfaction of the owner, or by them both; by the owner, that he delivered ſuch and ſuch cattle to the keeper; and by the keeper, that he was no ways concerned in the death, hurt, or carrying off of the ſame: and this is called the oath of the Lord, not only becauſe in this law required by him, but becauſe ſworn by him, or in his name, and made before him, in his preſence; who is hereby appealed unto; and who is called upon to take vengeance on the perſon that takes the oath of perjury; and ſuch an oath only is a lawful one, men are to ſwear only by the Lord. But this oath was not tendered to any one: "if a man was ſuſpected of an oath (i. e. of "perjury) they might not give him his oath, nei-"ther the oath of the law, nor the oath from "their words (the ſcribes), nor the oath of im-"poſition (impoſed by the wiſemen); and even "though he that brought the action would have "it, they might not hearken unto him: if a man "has ſwore falſly a raſh oath, or an oath of te-"ſtimony, [q] Miſn. Bava Metzia, c. 3. §. 1. [r] אשר יאמר כי הוא זה qui dixerit quod illud hoc, Montanus; quum dixerit illud ipſum eſſe, Junius & Tremellius; de qua dixerit aliquis illum ipſum eſſe, Piſcator; ſo Ainſworth. [s] רשיעון Vid. Ainſworth. [t] Miſn. Bava Metzia, c. 7. §. 8. [u] נשבר confractum, Pagninus, Montanus; fractum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius; ſo Ainſworth.

" ſtimony, or an oath concerning any thing depo-" ſited, or a vain oath, lo, he is ſuſpected of an " oath, and ſo every one that is rejected for wit-
" neſs on account of any tranſgreſſion." [w] The oath to be taken by the keeper, and who indeed ſeems to be the only perſon that was to take one, was that he hath not put his hand unto his neighbours goods; ſo as either to kill or maim, or drive away, or ſuffer to be driven away, any of the cattle committed to his care, or that he had not diſpoſed of them to his own uſe and profit: and the owner of it ſhall accept thereof; of the oath, as the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi, and ſo be ſatisfied, and give no further trouble, ſuch an oath being for the confirmation of the thing, and to put an end to ſtrife; or he ſhall take the aſs, ox or ſheep, as it was, and be content; but then, tho' he might take the dead or maimed one, he could not take that which was driven or carried away, wherefore the firſt ſenſe is beſt: and he ſhall not make it good; or pay for it to the owner, what it was worth.

℣. 12. And if it be ſtolen from him, &c.] Or but if [x] it was taken away by theft; and that from with him [y], as it may be literally rendered, from among his own cattle, and they not taken; and he being preſent, pretending to have an eye upon them and keep them, but was careleſs and negligent, at leaſt, if he did not connive at the theft: he ſhall make reſtitution to the owner thereof; for in ſuch a caſe there was ground for ſuſpicion of fraud; however there was apparent careleſſneſs, and it was but juſt he ſhould make reſtitution, ſince he had hire or wages for keeping it; which is the reaſon Aben Ezra gives for it, and is ſuggeſted by the Targum of Jonathan; which adds to the former clauſe, by way of explanation, " that which was with him " to be kept for a reward."

℣. 13. If it be torn in pieces, &c.] By ſome wild beaſt, at leaſt as pretended: then let him bring it for witneſs; part of that which is torn, that it may be witneſs for him that it was torn, as in Amos iii. 12. as Aben Ezra obſerves; and ſo the Jeruſalem Targum, " let him bring of the members of " it a witneſs," which would make it a clear caſe that it had been ſo uſed; but it is poſſible that the whole carcaſe might be carried off, and nothing remain to be brought as a proof of it; wherefore the Targum of Jonathan is, " let him bring wit-
" neſſes;" and ſo ſome verſions render it [z]; and to this agrees Jarchi, whoſe note is, " let him bring " witneſſes of its being torn by violence, and he is " free," ſuch who ſaw it done; but it is before ſuppoſed, that ſuch cattle may be hurt, broken or maimed, no man ſeeing it, ℣. 10. and therefore in ſuch a caſe no witneſſes could be brought, wherefore the firſt ſenſe ſeems beſt: and he ſhall not make good that which was torn; or ſhall not pay for it, pay the price of it, as much as it is worth. Here Jarchi diſtinguiſhes, " there is that which is torn, for " which a man pays, and there is that which is " torn, for which he does not pay; that which is " torn by a cat, or a fox, or a marten (a kind of " weaſel) he pays for, but that which is torn by " a wolf, a lion, or a bear, he does not pay for:" the reaſon of which is, becauſe it is thought the keeper might have preſerved and delivered from the former, and therefore was culpable, when it was not in his power to ſave from the latter; and the Miſnic doctors obſerve, that one wolf is not violence, but two are; ſo that what is torn by one, the keeper is bound to pay for, but not what is torn by more. But two dogs are not violence, unleſs they come from two different quarters, and then they are: a ſingle thief is violence, and ſo is a lion, a bear, a leopard, a baſiliſk, and a ſerpent; and this only when they come willingly, and of themſelves; but if they (the cattle) are brought to places where there are troops of wild beaſts, and thieves, it is no violence [a], and in ſuch a caſe, the keepers are liable to pay; and ſo unleſs he makes uſe of ſtaves, and calls in other ſhepherds to his aſſiſtance, as Maimonides [b] obſerves, when it is in his power to do it; and ſo at leaſt might make an attempt to ſave or reſcue the cattle.

℣. 14. And if a man borrow ought of his neighbour, &c.] Any beaſt as it ſhould ſeem, as an ox to plow with, an aſs, horſe or camel to ride on, though the Jewiſh writers carry it alſo to any kind of houſhold ſtuff: and if he be hurt or die; if any damage comes to it, or it dies whilſt it is in the borrower's hands, and when employed in that work for which he borrowed it; the Targum of Jonathan is, " and the veſſel ſhould be broke, " or the beaſt die:" and the owner thereof being not with it; at the time of its being hurt, or of its death, and ſo could not be ſo well ſatisfied whether uſed well or no, nor how the damage and death came to it: he ſhall ſurely make it good; pay the full price for it, it is worth; which tho' it may ſeem hard, was neceſſary, in order to make men careful of things they borrowed, and that lenders may not be loſers for their kindneſs.

℣. 15. But if the owner thereof be with it, &c.] When it is hurt or dies; for in ſome caſes the owner might go along with his beaſt, being borrowed or hired to do work with it; or however being upon the ſpot, muſt be ſatisfied that it was not ill uſed; and it may be reaſonably preſumed he would do all he could to preſerve it: and this being the caſe, he ſhall not make it good; that is, the borrower, but the loſs would lie upon the lender; ſeeing this might have been the caſe if it had been at home, and not borrowed or lent. The Jewiſh writers underſtand all this in a different manner, that if the owner is not with it in the time of borrowing, tho' he is with it in the time of its being hurt, or of its death, the borrower muſt pay; but if he was with it in the time of borrowing, tho' not in the time of its receiving damage, or of its death, the borrower was free [c]; for, as Jarchi ſays, whether it be in that work (for which he was borrowed), or in another work (it matters not) if he was with it at the time of borrowing, there was no neceſſity of his being with it at the time of its hurt or death. The reaſon of which, I muſt confeſs, I do not underſtand; unleſs the meaning is, that it was neceſſary that the owner, and the beaſt, ſhould be both borrowed or hired together; and which indeed ſeems to be the ſenſe of the Miſnah, or tradition [d], which runs thus, " if " a man borrows a cow, and borrows or hires its " owner with it; or if he hires or borrows the " owner, and after that borrows the cow, and it " dies, he is free, as it is ſaid, Exod. xxii. 15. but " if he borrows the cow, and afterwards borrows " or hires the owner, and it dies, he is bound to " pay,

[w] Maimon. Hilchot Toan Venitan, c. 2. §. 1, 2. [x] כי אם ſi autem, Druſius. [y] מעמו e cum eo, Montanus. [z] יביאהו עד adducet eum teſtem, Pagninus, Montanus; adducat ille teſtem, Munſter, Fagius. [a] Miſn. Bava Metzia, c. 7. §. 9. [b] Hilchot Shecirat, c. 3. §. 6. [c] Miſn. Bava Metzia, c. 8. §. 1. Maimon. & Bartenora in Ib. [d] Ib.

" pay, as it is ſaid, ℣. 13. if his owner is not with " it, &c." If it be an hired thing, it came for its hire; that is, if the beaſt which was come to ſome damage, or was dead, was hired, and not borrowed, then whether the owner was with it or not at that time, he could demand no more than hire, and the perſon that hired it was obliged to pay that and no more; or if the owner himſelf was hired along with his beaſt, and ſo was preſent when it received its damage, or its death, nothing more could come to him than what he agreed for.

℣. 16. And if a man entice a maid, that is not betrothed, &c.] For one might be betrothed according to the cuſtom of thoſe times, and not be married, or the nuptials conſummated, and ſo be yet a maid or virgin; but being betrothed, it made the caſe different, becauſe ſuch an one was as a wife to a man: but the caſe here ſuppoſed is of a maid not betrothed, and alſo not forced, but yielding to the ſolicitations of a man, as is implied by her being enticed; which ſignifies his gaining upon her affections, and obtaining her conſent by expreſſing ſtrong affection for her, and making large promiſes to her, and ſo both by words and geſtures prevailing with her to yield to his deſire: and lie with her; in a way of carnal copulation; and ſuch an action between two ſingle perſons by conſent, is what is called ſimple fornication: if this was done in a field, the maid was ſuppoſed to be forced, ſince there ſhe might cry out, and not be heard; but if in a city, ſhe is ſuppoſed to be enticed, and conſent, ſince if ſhe cried out ſhe might be heard; this the Jewiſh writers gather from Deut. xxii. 23—27. though the law there reſpects a betrothed damſel: he ſhall ſurely endow her to be his wife; give her a dowry in order to be his wife, or however ſuch an one as he would or muſt give if ſhe became his wife, even one ſuitable to her rank and dignity, whether he married her or no; for he was not obliged to it whether he would or no, and in ſome caſes could not if he would, as follows.

℣. 17. If her father utterly refuſe to give her unto him, &c.] For wife, either becauſe of his character, family or circumſtances; or however being diſagreeable to him on one account or another, and therefore will by no means agree to marry his daughter to him, and not only give him an abſolute denial, but reſolutely perſiſt in it: the Targum of Jonathan has it, " if it ſeems not good to " him;" if he don't like nor chuſe to marry her; and ſome add alſo, if ſhe herſelf don't approve of marrying him: he ſhall pay money according to the dowry of virgins; as virgins on marriage have uſually given them, according to their rank and dignity: here is no ſum fixed, but the Targum of Jonathan is, " he ſhall be mulcted in fifty ſhekels " of ſilver," which is taken from Deut. xxii. 29. though that ſeems to be not altogether a like caſe with this; for though it reſpects a virgin not betrothed, as here, yet one that has been forced, and therefore the man was obliged to marry her and never put her away; and the mulct or fine was to be paid to the damſel's father and not to her: the Septuagint verſion here ſays, it was to be paid to the father.

℣. 18. Thou ſhalt not ſuffer a witch to live.] Such that had familiar ſpirits, and converſed with them, and by means thereof got knowledge of many things relating to perſons, at leaſt pretending they did; and who did or ſeemed to do many ſtrange and ſurprizing feats, as even to raiſe the ſpirits of departed perſons, to converſe with them and gain knowledge by them, though in reality they did not, and could not do ſuch things, but uſed ſome juggling tricks to deceive the people, and in which they might be aſſiſted by evil ſpirits; as appears from the caſe of the witch of Endor, who was ſurprized at the appearance of Samuel, it being out of the ordinary courſe of her art and practice, really to bring up the ſpirit of a man deceaſed, whatever pretenſions might be made to it; however, ſuch being deceivers of the people, and leading them into unwarrantable practices, and off of a dependance on God and his providence, and from ſeeking to him, and aſking counſel of him, they are by this law adjudged to death, ſuch an one was not to be ſuffered to live; not that it was lawful for any body to kill her, or that any private perſon might or muſt do it that knew her, or took her to be a witch; but ſhe was to be had before a court of judicature and tried there, and if found guilty to be put to death by the civil magiſtrate: ſo Jarchi's note is, " but ſhe ſhall die by " the houſe of judgment;" or the Sanhedrim; for theſe words are ſpoken to Moſes the chief judge, and to thoſe that were under him, and ſucceeded him and them; though the Targum of Jonathan prefaces them thus: " and my people, the chil- " dren of Iſrael, thou ſhalt not, &c." and though only a witch is mentioned, or this is only expreſſed in the feminine gender, becauſe a multitude of this ſort of people were found among women, as Ben Melech obſerves, and ſo Aben Ezra; yet wizards, or men that dealt with familiar ſpirits are included; and it may be reaſonably concluded from hence, that if women, who generally have more mercy and compaſſion ſhewn them, yet were not ſuffered to live when found criminal in this way, then much leſs men: and this law is thought by ſome to follow upon the other, concerning enticing and lying with a virgin not betrothed, becauſe ſuch ſort of perſons were made uſe of to entice and decoy maids to gratify the luſts of men.

℣. 19. Whoſoever lieth with a beaſt, &c.] In like manner as a man and woman, by carnal copulation; this is a crime ſo deteſtable and abominable, ſo ſhocking and diſhonourable to human nature, that one would think it could never be committed by any of the human ſpecies, and that there was no occaſion for making a law againſt it; but ſuch is the depravity and corruption of mankind, that divine wiſdom ſaw it neceſſary, and to deter from it made it death as follows; ſuch an one, ſhall ſurely be put to death; no mercy ſhewn him, no pardon or reſpite given him by the civil magiſtrate: according to the Targum of Jonathan, the death of ſuch a perſon was by ſtoning, for it paraphraſes the words, " he ſhall be killed with " the caſting of ſtones."

℣. 20. He that ſacrificeth unto any god, &c.] To Elohim, to ſtrange gods, to the idols of the people, as the Targum of Jonathan; to the Egyptian deities, to the gods of the Moabites, Amorites, Edomites, Canaanites, Philiſtines, or any other: Aben Ezra ſays, the word Elohim comprehends angels; and by the exceptive clauſe it is plain, it takes in all that had been, were, or ever would be the objects of idolatrous worſhip, eſpecially the ſun, moon, and ſtars, the principal objects of worſhip in thoſe days: ſave unto the Lord only; the true and living God; Jehovah, the ſelf-exiſtent, immutable, and eternal Being; the creator of all things, the poſſeſſor of heaven and earth, the moſt high God, and the only one: ſacrificing takes in all the acts of ſervice performed to an idol, as to the true God, as offering incenſe, pouring out a libation, bation, as well as ſlaying and burning an animal, as Jarchi obſerves: he ſhall be utterly deſtroyed; be accurſed, anathematized, devoted to deſtruction, as the word uſed ſignifies: the Targum of Jonathan is, "he ſhall be killed with the ſword, and "his goods conſumed," not only loſe his life but his ſubſtance, and ſo be deſtroyed in body and eſtate.

℣. 21. Thou ſhalt not vex a ſtranger, &c.] One that is not born in the ſame country, but comes into another country to ſojourn, as Jarchi; not a native of the place, but of another kingdom or country; a ſtranger to the commonwealth of Iſrael, that is only in it for a time on trade and buſineſs, or through one providence or another; or elſe a proſelyte is meant, not a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, who has embraced the true religion; but a proſelyte of the gate, that takes upon him the commands of the ſons of Noah; or, as Aben Ezra here expreſſes it, who takes upon him not to ſerve idols; ſuch were allowed to dwell among the Iſraelites, and they were to carry it friendly and kindly to them, and not vex them, nor irritate them with words, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi; by calling them names, Gentiles, uncircumciſed perſons, and the like; upbraiding them with their country, ignorance, and manner of life; they were not to ſay to a proſelyte, as Ben Melech obſerves, remember thy former works; or, if the ſon of a proſelyte, remember thy father's works: nor oppreſs him; by taking his goods, as the above Targum, and ſo Jarchi; by refuſing to aſſiſt him with advice or otherwiſe, to trade with him, or to give him lodging, and furniſh him with the neceſſaries of life: for ye were ſtrangers in the land of Egypt; out of which they were but juſt come, and therefore ſuch a reaſon muſt be very ſtriking and moving upon them: the Targum of Jonathan prefaces it, "and my people, the houſe of Iſrael, re- "member that ye were ſtrangers, &c." this they could not have forgot in ſo ſhort a time, and the remembrance of this ſhould move their compaſſion to ſtrangers hereafter, when they came to ſettle in their own land; and therefore, as they would that men ſhould have done to them when in ſuch circumſtances, the ſame they ſhould do to others; and beſides, the remembrance of this would ſerve to abate their pride and vanity and their overbearing diſpoſition.

℣. 22. Ye ſhall not afflict any widow or fatherleſs child.] Who have no friends, huſband, or father to be on their ſide and protect them, and are weak and helpleſs to defend themſelves, and therefore it muſt be barbarous to do them any injury, either to their perſons or property; no one ought to be afflicted and diſtreſſed by another, either in body or mind, or ſubſtance, and eſpecially ſuch as have no helper, not any to ſuccour them and ſympathize with them; for this is a law for every man, as Jarchi obſerves, is binding upon all; only the ſcripture ſpeaks of theſe, becauſe of their weakneſs, and becauſe they are more frequently afflicted than others, cruel and unmerciful men taking the advantage of their inability to defend themſelves.

℣. 23. If thou afflict them in any wiſe, &c.] In any way, or by any means whatever; their minds, by reproaches, cenſures, inſults, and their bodies by ſtripes, falſe impriſonment, &c. and in their ſubſtance, by withholding from them what belongs to them, taking what they have, or cheating and defrauding them in any reſpect; or, in afflicting afflict them[c]; afflict them much, and continue to do ſo: and they cry at all unto me; in prayer, as the Targum of Jonathan; or, in crying cry[f]; cry vehemently, or importunately, and with conſtancy, or rather, cry ever ſo little: I will ſurely hear their cry; the voice of their prayer, as the ſame Targum; or, in hearing I will hear[g]; will certainly take notice of their cries, and return an anſwer to them, by appearing on their ſide, and avenging their injuries; for God is the father of the fatherleſs, and the huſband of the widow, and the judge of them both: the manner of ſpeaking or form of expreſſion is the ſame in all theſe clauſes, the words being doubled.

℣. 24. And my wrath ſhall wax hot, &c.] Againſt thoſe that afflict them, being ſo devoid of humanity, compaſſion and tenderneſs, and ſo guilty of oppreſſion and injuſtice, which are aggravated by the circumſtances of the perſons they ill treat, and therefore the more provoking to God: and I will kill you with the ſword; with the ſword of death, ſays the Targum of Jonathan; it deſigns one of God's ſore judgments, the ſword of an enemy; the meaning is, that when ſuch evils ſhould become frequent among them, God would ſuffer a neighbouring nation to break in upon them in an hoſtile way, and put them to the ſword; hence it follows: and your wives ſhall be widows, and your children fatherleſs; be in the ſame circumſtances with thoſe they have injured, and therefore ſhould conſider not only the deſtruction that would come upon themſelves, being cut off by the ſword, but the caſe of their families; and how, could they be ſenſible of it, they would like to have their wives and children uſed as they have uſed the widows and fatherleſs.

℣. 25. If thou lend money to any of my people, that is poor by thee, &c.] Such only need to borrow money, and to whom it ſhould be freely lent, when it may be to the good of the borrower, and not any injury to the lender: this law, according to the Jewiſh writers, only reſpects Iſraelites and not Gentiles; agreeable to which is Jarchi's note, "if thou lend, that is, not to a Gentile; and to "which of my people? the poor, and to which of "the poor? that is with thee:" thou ſhalt not be to him as an uſurer; that will not lend without uſury, nor without an exorbitant intereſt, and deals very hardly with the borrower if he is not punctual in the payment of it; the Iſraelites were not only not to be uſurers, but they were not to be like them; they were not to require any thing for lending a poor man a little money; as not any ſettled intereſt, ſo neither were they to take any previous gift or after reward, ſee Luke vi. 34, 35. neither ſhalt thou lay upon him uſury; or oblige him to give intereſt for money borrowed: it is in the plural number, neither ſhall ye lay; and Aben Ezra obſerves, that the lender, ſcribe, and witneſs, all tranſgreſs this law; that is, when a man lends money on intereſt, and a bond is made by the ſcribe for it, and this ſigned by witneſſes, all are guilty of the breach of it: yea, ſome Jewiſh writers[h] ſay, not only thoſe, but whoever is a ſurety or bondſman for the payment, and even the borrower himſelf, ſee Pſ. xv. 5. and the note there.

℣. 26. If thou at all take thy neighbours raiment to pledge, &c.] So that it ſeems that the lender, though he might not impoſe uſury on the borrower, or or oblige him to pay interest for what he lent him, yet for the security of his money he might take his clothes, either his bed-clothes or wearing apparel, or any instruments or goods of his; but when he did, he was bound to what follows: thou shalt deliver it to him by that the sun goeth down; the reason of which appears in the next verse, with respect to his bed-clothes, should that be the pledge: but Jarchi interprets it, not of his nocturnal clothes, but of his apparel in the day-time, and paraphrases it thus, "all the day, thou shalt restore it to him "until the setting of the sun; and when the sun "is set, thou shalt return and take it until the "morning of the morrow comes; the scripture "speaks of the covering of the day, of which "there is no need at night;" but rather night-clothes are meant by what follows.

[c] ענה תענה affligendo afflixeris, Pagninus, Piſcator, Ainſworth, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius. [f] צעק יצעק clamando clamaverit, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator, Ainſworth. [g] שמע אשמע audiendo audiam, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator, Ainſworth. [h] Miſn. Bava Metzia, c. 5. §. 11. Maimon. & Bartenora in Ib.

℣. 27. For that is his covering only, &c.] All that he has to cover him, the only covering he has when he lies down to sleep; and therefore should be restored to him by the time of sun-set, at which time he returns from his labour; and after some refreshment retires to his bed for rest, when his covering will be necessary: it is his raiment for his skin; which is next to his skin, and covers his naked body, as it is when he lies down to sleep; and therefore if not returned, he must lie naked without any covering, which to deprive him of would be cruel: Jarchi interprets this covering of his shirt, but it rather means his bed-clothes: the Septuagint version calls it the clothes of his shame, what cover and hide the shame of nakedness: wherein shall he sleep? what shall he have to sleep in if this is detained from him? nothing at all; or it may be read without an interrogation, wherein he should sleep, or was used to sleep: and it shall come to pass, when he crieth unto me; and complains of ill usage, that he has nothing to cover him in the night-season, when he lies down to sleep, which is very uncomfortable, as well as unhealthful and dangerous: that I will hear; his cry and complaint, take notice of it, and resent the usage of him: for I am gracious; or merciful; and therefore every thing cruel and uncompassionate is disagreeable, and even abominable to him, and he will take care in his providence, that the injured person shall be redressed and the injurer punished.

℣. 28. Thou shalt not revile the gods, &c.] Meaning not the idols of the Gentiles, which they reckon gods, and worship as such; which is the sense of Philo, and some others, particularly Josephus [l], who to curry favour with the Roman emperors given to idolatry, has from hence inserted the following among the laws given to Moses; "let no man "blaspheme the gods, which other cities think are "such, nor rob strange sacred places, nor receive "a gift dedicated to any deity;" but this cannot be the sense of the text, being contrary to Deut. xii. 2, 3. nor can it be thought that care should be taken, lest the honour of the heathen deities should be detracted from; but civil magistrates, the judges of the land, and the like, are meant, who are powers ordained of God, are in his stead, and represent him, and therefore respect should be shewn them; nor should they be treated with any degree of slight and contempt, which may discourage and intimidate them, and deter them from the execution of their office: the Targum of Jonathan interprets them of judges very rightly, agreeable to Ps. lxxxii. 1, 6. and so Aben Ezra says, "they are the judges and the priests, the sons of "Levi, with whom the law is:" nor curse the ruler of thy people; whether civil or ecclesiastic; the last mentioned Jewish writer interprets it of the king, who is the supreme ruler in things civil, and ought to be honoured and loved, served and obeyed, and not hated and cursed, no not secretly, not in the bed-chamber, nor in the thought of the heart, since not only the thing is criminal but dangerous; it is much if it is not discovered, and then ruin follows upon it, Eccl. x. 20. The apostle Paul applies it to the high-priest among the Jews, who was the ruler in sacred things, Acts xxiii. 5. and may be applicable to the prince of the Sanhedrim, or chief in the grand court of judicature; and even to all dignified persons, who ought not to be spoken ill of, and to be abused in the execution of their office, and especially when they perform well.

℣. 29. Thou shalt not delay to offer the first of thy ripe fruits, &c.] Which, according to Maimonides [k], were of seven kinds only; for he says, "they "don't bring the first-fruits, but of the seven kinds, "said in the praise of the land (the land of Ca-"naan, Deut. viii. 8.) and they are wheat, barley, "grapes, figs, pomegranates, olives and dates;" and how much of these were to be offered, is not fixed by the law, but were left to the generosity of the people: the above mentioned writer asks [l], "what measure do the wisemen set? a good eye "(or a bountiful man) brings one of forty (or "the fortieth part of his fruits); a middling one "(one that is neither liberal nor niggardly) brings "one of fifty (or the fiftieth part); and an evil "one (a covetous man) one of sixty (or the sixti-"eth part) but never less than that." Now this was not to be delayed, but to be brought as soon and as early as could be: the Jewish writers seem to understand this of postponing things, or inverting the order of them, bringing that first which should be last, and that last which should be first; so Jarchi interprets it, "thou shalt not change the "order of their separation, to postpone that which "should be first, and to put before that which "should be last; for the first-oblation should not be "brought before the first-fruits, and the tithes be-"fore the first-oblation." And thus runs one of their canons or traditions [m], "if any one brings the "first-oblation before the first-fruits, the first-tithe "before the first-oblation, the second-tithe before "the first, it is as if he transgressed a negative "precept: thou shalt not delay or postpone, &c. "Exod. xxii. 29." And of thy liquors; and these, according to Maimonides [n], were only the first-fruits of liquors of olives and grapes: the first born of thy sons thou shalt give unto me; which is a repetition of the law in ch. xiii. 2. see the note there.

℣. 30. Likewise shalt thou do with thine oxen, and with thy sheep, &c.] That is, with the first-born, which were to be set apart to the Lord; and so the Targum of Jonathan paraphrases it, "the "first-born of thine oxen, and of thy sheep;" for having spoken of the first-born of men, the scripture proceeds to speak of the first-born of cattle, great and small, the separation of which was enjoined in one, and the same precept, ch. xiii. 2. seven days it shall be with his dam; whether it be a calf or a lamb; before it was seven days old it was not to be taken from it, and given to the Lord: on the eighth day thou shalt give it me; that that is, they might do it then, but not before; yet they were not obliged to bring it exactly on that day, but they might do it any time within the month, and at a month's end they were obliged to redeem it, that is, give the prieſt the ſum of five ſhekels for it, Numb. xviii. 16. The Jewiſh canon runs thus [n]; "how long are Iſraelites bound "for the bringing of the firſt-born, i. e. before "they offer it to the prieſt? in ſmall cattle thirty "days, in large cattle fifty days."

[l] Antiq. l. 4. c. 8. §. 10. Contr. Apion. l. 2. c. 33. [k] Hilchot Biccurim, c. 2. §. 2. [l] Hilchot Trumot, c. 3. §. 2. [m] Misn. Trumot, c. 3. §. 6. [n] Biccurim, ut supra.

℣. 31. And ye ſhall be holy men unto me, &c.] They were ſo by God's act of election, not ſpecial and particular, but general and national; chuſing and ſeparating them to be an holy people to him, above all the people on the face of the earth, and in a ceremonial ſenſe they obſerving laws and appointments of God of this kind; which is the ſenſe here intended, as appears by what follows: all men, and ſo theſe Iſraelites, ought to be holy in a moral ſenſe, and ſome are holy in a ſpiritual and evangelical ſenſe, being made holy by the Spirit of God; of theſe the apoſtle Peter ſpeaks, in alluſion to this, and ſuch like paſſages, 1 Pet. ii. 9. neither ſhall ye eat any fleſh that is torn of beaſts in the field; or in the houſe, as Jarchi notes; but the ſcripture, as he obſerves, ſpeaks of the place where it is more uſual for beaſts to tear, and ſo Aben Ezra; otherwiſe what is torn elſewhere, or by whatſoever accident it is bruiſed and maimed, was not to be eaten: ye ſhall caſt it to the dogs; for even a ſtranger was not to eat of it, or if he did he was unclean, and was obliged to waſh his clothes; and bathe himſelf, Lev. xvii. 15. and yet Jarchi interprets this figuratively of ſuch as are like dogs; meaning the Gentiles, whom the Jews uſed to call ſo, ſee Matt. xv. 26. An heathen poet gives inſtructions perfectly agreeable to this law; "don't, "ſays he, eat fleſh fed upon by beaſts, but leave "the remains to the ſwift dogs [o]."

CHAP. XXIII.

THIS chapter contains ſeveral laws chiefly judicial, relating to the civil polity of Iſrael, as concerning witneſs born, and judgment made of caſes in courts of judicature, without any reſpect to poor or rich, and without the influence of a bribe, ℣. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8. concerning doing good to an enemy in caſe any of his cattle go aſtray, or fall under their burden, ℣. 4, 5. and of the oppreſſion of a ſtranger, ℣. 9. and then follow others concerning the ſabbath of the 7th year, and of the 7th day, with a caution againſt the uſe of the names of idols, ℣. 10—13. next are laws concerning the appearance of all their males at the three feaſts, ℣. 14—17. and concerning the ſlaying of the ſacrifice of the paſſover, and bringing the firſt of the firſt-fruits of the land, ℣. 18, 19. and then a promiſe is made of ſending an angel to them to bring them into the land of Canaan, where they ſhould carefully avoid all idolatry, and ſhew a juſt indignation againſt it, and ſerve the Lord, and then it would be well with them, ℣. 20—26. and particularly it is promiſed, that the Lord would ſend his fear, and his hornets, before them, to deſtroy the inhabitants of the land, and drive out the reſt by little and little, until they ſhould poſſeſs the utmoſt borders of it, which are fixed, ℣. 27—31. and the chapter is concluded with a direction not to make a covenant with theſe people, or their gods, nor ſuffer them to dwell among them, leſt they ſhould be a ſnare unto them, ℣. 32, 33.

℣. 1. Thou ſhalt not raiſe a falſe report, &c.] Of a neighbour, or of any man whatever, either ſecretly by private ſlanders, whiſpers, backbiting and talebearing, by innuendo's, detracting from his good name and credit, ſuggeſting things falſe and wicked concerning him; or publickly in a court of judicature, bringing a falſe accuſation, laying a falſe charge, and bearing a falſe teſtimony againſt him: or thou ſhalt not receive a falſe report [p]; if there were not ſo many that ſay report, and we will report it, that are ready to receive every ill thing of their neighbours, there would not be ſo many that would raiſe ſuch ill things of them; every thing of this kind ſhould be diſcountenanced, and eſpecially by judges in courts of judicature, who are chiefly ſpoken to and of in the context; theſe ſhould not eaſily admit every charge and accuſation brought; nor bear, or endure a falſe report, as the word alſo ſignifies, but diſcourage, and even puniſh it: put not thine hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witneſs; which is not a geſture uſed in ſwearing, ſuch as with us, of putting the hand upon a book, which did not obtain ſo early; nor is there any inſtance of this kind in ſcripture; the geſture uſed in ſwearing was either putting the hand under the thigh, which yet is queſtionable, or lifting of it up to heaven; but here it is expreſſive of confederacy, of joining hand in hand to carry on a proſecution in an unrighteous way, by bearing falſe teſtimony againſt another; and ſuch were to be guarded againſt, and not admitted to give evidence in a cauſe, even a man that is known to be a wicked man, or to have been an unrighteous witneſs before; on the one hand, a man ſhould be careful of joining with him in a teſtimony that is unrighteous; and on the other hand, judges ſhould take care not to ſuffer ſuch to be witneſſes. The Jews ſay [q], that every one that is condemned to be ſcourged, or has been ſcourged for ſome crime committed, is reckoned a wicked man, and he is not to be admitted a witneſs, nor his teſtimony taken.

℣. 2. Thou ſhalt not follow a multitude to do evil, &c.] The Targums of Jeruſalem and Jonathan add, but to do good. As in private life, the examples of the many, who are generally the moſt wicked, are not to be followed, though they too often are; examples, and eſpecially of the multitude, having great influence, and therefore to be guarded againſt; ſo in public courts of judicature, where there are many judges upon the bench, if one of them is ſenſible that the greater part go wrong in their judgment of a caſe, he ought not to follow them, or be influenced by them, but go according to the dictates of his own conſcience, and the evidence of things as they appear to him, and neither agree to juſtify the wicked, nor condemn the righteous: neither ſhalt thou ſpeak in a cauſe to decline after many to wreſt judgment; or thou ſhalt not anſwer; ſwer [r]; either in pleading in a cauſe, and taking the ſide of it the majority is on, and for that reaſon, though it is a manifeſt perverſion of juſtice; or by giving a vote on that ſide, and on that account, whereby a wrong judgment paſſes; and this vote given either according to the number of witneſſes, which ought not always to be the rule of judgment; for it is not the number of witneſſes, but the nature, evidence and circumſtances of their teſtimony that are to be regarded. Jarchi ſays, in judgments of life and death, they go after the mouth of one witneſs to abſolve, and after the mouth of two to condemn: or according to the number of judges on the bench, and their ſuperiority in years and knowledge; and ſo ſome render the word, after the great ones [s]; for a judge is not to be influenced by names or numbers in giving his vote, but to judge according to the truth of things, as they appear to him: hence the Jews ſay, that the younger or puiſne judges uſed to be aſked their judgment firſt, that they might not be influenced by others ſuperior to them; and a like method is taken with us in the trial of a peer, the younger lords always giving their opinion firſt: as to the number of votes by which a cauſe was carried in court, it is ſaid [t], not as the decline to good is the decline to evil; the decline to good, i. e. to abſolution, is by the ſentence of one (a majority of one) the decline to evil, i. e. to condemnation, is by the mouth or ſentence of two, a majority of two.

[n] Miſn. Becorot, c. 4. §. 1. [o] Μηδε τι θηροβοτον, &c. Phocylides, ℣. 136, 137. [p] לא תשא non ſuſcipies, V. L. Pagninus, Vatablus, Druſius, Fagius. [q] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 3. §. 3.

℣. 3. Neither ſhalt thou countenance a poor man in his cauſe.] Becauſe he is a poor man, and for that reaſon endeavour to carry his cauſe for him, right or wrong, from a fooliſh pity to him as a poor man, and from an affectation of gaining the applauſe of people on that account; or thou ſhall not honour or adorn a poor man [u], by a ſet ſpeech in favour of his cauſe, though wrong, dreſſed up in the beſt manner, and ſet off with all the colourings of art, to make it appear in the moſt plauſible manner; the law is againſt reſpect of perſons, as not the perſon of the rich, ſo neither is the perſon of the poor to be accepted, but the juſtice of their cauſe is to be regarded; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "the poor that is guilty in his judg-"ment or cauſe, his face (or perſon) thou ſhalt "not accept to have pity on him, for no perſon is "to be accepted in judgment."

℣. 4. If thou meet thine enemy's ox or his aſs going aſtray, &c.] Or any other beaſt, as the Samaritan verſion adds; for theſe are only mentioned for inſtances, as being more common, and creatures ſubject to go aſtray; now when ſuch as theſe are met going aſtray, ſo as to be in danger of being loſt to the owner, though he is an enemy; or as the Targum of Jonathan, "whom thou hateſt be-"cauſe of a ſin, which thou alone knoweſt in him;" yet this was not ſo far to prejudice the finder of his beaſts againſt him, as to be careleſs about them, to ſuffer them to go on without acquainting him with them, or returning them to him, as follows: thou ſhalt ſurely bring it back to him again; whether it be an ox, or an aſs, or any other beaſt, the law is very ſtrong and binding upon the finder to return it to his neighbour, though an enemy, and bring it either to his field or to his farm.

℣. 5. If thou ſee the aſs of him that hateth thee lying under his burden, &c.] Fallen down, and ſuch a burden upon him that he cannot riſe up again, but lies under it, and the owner of it is not able of himſelf to raiſe it up again: and wouldſt forbear to help him; ſhew an inclination to paſs on without giving him any aſſiſtance to get up his beaſt again; or wouldſt thou forbear to help him [w]? as Jarchi, and others, read with an interrogation, could it be in thine heart to forbear helping him? couldſt thou go on, and take no notice of him and his caſe, and not join him in endeavouring to get up his beaſt again, that he may proceed in his journey? canſt thou be ſo cruel and hard-hearted, though he is thine enemy? but if thou art, know this, thou ſhalt ſurely help with him; to get up his aſs again: hence the Jewiſh canon runs thus [x], "if "an aſs is unloaded and loaded four or five times, "a man is bound, i. e. to help, as it is ſaid, in "helping thou ſhalt help; if he (the owner) goes "away, and ſets himſelf down, ſeeing the com-"mand is upon thee, if it is thy will and plea-"ſure to unload, unload, he is free; for it is ſaid, "with him; if he is an old man, or ſick, he is "bound, the command of the law is to unload, "but not to load." The words may be rendered, in leaving thou ſhalt leave with him [y]; either leave or forſake thine enmity to help him, as Onkelos; or leave thy buſineſs, thou art about, to lend him an hand to raiſe up his beaſt again.

℣. 6. Thou ſhalt not wreſt the judgment of thy poor in his cauſe.] As the poor man was not to be favoured when his cauſe was bad through an affected pity for him as a poor man, ſo his judgment was not to be wreſted or perverted, when his cauſe was good, becauſe of his poverty; which is too often the caſe, through the power of rich men, and the prevalence of their gifts and bribes, and to curry favour with them: the phraſe, thy poor, is very emphatical, and intended to engage judges to regard them, as being of the ſame fleſh and blood with them, of the ſame nation and religion; and who were particularly committed to their care and protection under God, who is the judge and protector of the poor, of the widow and the fatherleſs.

℣. 7. Keep thee far from a falſe matter, &c.] Or word [z]; from receiving a falſe teſtimony, or taking the falſe or wrong ſide of a cauſe, or engaging in a bad one; keep aloof off from it, as much at a diſtance from it as poſſible: and the innocent and the righteous ſlay thou not; that is, do not condemn them to death, nor join with the majority in their condemnation, if they appear to be innocent and righteous; nor give orders, or join in giving orders to the executioner to put ſuch to death. The Targum of Jonathan is, "he "that goes righteous out of the houſe of thy "judgment (out of the Sanhedrim, to which he "belonged) and they find out his ſin (afterwards) "and he that goes out guilty, and they (after-"wards) find out his righteouſneſs, do not ſlay:" for I will not juſtify the wicked; the wicked judge in pronouncing an unjuſt ſentence on innocent and righrighteous men; or if they abſolve wicked men, at the ſame time they put to death the innocent and righteous, God will not juſtify thoſe wicked men cleared by them, but will, in his own time and way, ſooner or later, inflict the deſerved puniſhment on them: this is not contrary to Rom. iv. 5. for though God juſtifies the ungodly, he does not juſtify ungodlineſs in them, or them in ungodlineſs, but from it, and that by the imputation of the righteouſneſs of his ſon.

[r] ולא תענה neque reſpondeas, Tigurine verſion; non reſpondebis, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Druſius.
[s] אחרי רבים poſt potentiores, Junius & Tremellius; poſt magnos, Lyra, Cartwright. [t] Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 1. §. 6. [u] לא תהדר non honorabis, Pagninus, Vatablus, Druſius, Cartwright; non decorabis, Montanus; ne ornes, Tigurine verſion; ne honorato, Junius & Tremellius; ne ornato, Piſcator. [w] וחדלת מעזב num deſines ſublevare eum? ſome in Vatablus; ceſſabis auxiliari ei? Druſius; deſines auxiliari ei? Pagninus. [x] Miſn. Bava Metzia, c. 2. §. 10. [y] Deſerendo deſeres eum eo, Montanus; ſo Ainſworth. [z] מדבר שקר a verbo mendacii, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Druſius, Junius & Tremellius, Tigurine verſion, Fagius.

℣. 8. And thou ſhalt take no gift, &c.] Of the perſons whoſe cauſe is to be tried in a court of judicature before judges; neither of thoſe on the one ſide nor on the other, neither before the trial nor after, neither by words, by a promiſe, nor by facts, by actually receiving money; and not even to judge truly, as Jarchi obſerves, neither to clear the innocent nor to condemn the guilty; a gift was not to be taken on any conſideration whatever: for the gift blindeth the wiſe; or the ſeeing[a]; the open ones, who uſed to have both their eyes and their ears open, and attentive to the cauſe before them; and yet a gift ſo blinds them by caſting ſuch a miſt before them, that they are inattentive to the true merits of the cauſe, and their affections and judgments are to be carried away in favour of thoſe that have bribed them, as to paſs a wrong ſentence: and perverteth the words of the righteous; either the ſentences of righteous judges, as they ought to be, but a gift perverts their judgment and they give a wrong decree; or the cauſes of the righteous that are brought before thoſe, are perverted by giving the cauſe to their adverſaries, who are wicked men.

℣. 9. Alſo thou ſhalt not oppreſs a ſtranger, &c.] As theſe were not to be vexed and oppreſſed in a private manner and by private men, ſee ch. xxii. 21. ſo neither in a public manner, and in a public court of judicature, or by judges on the bench when their cauſe was before them, by not doing them juſtice, ſhewing a partiality to thoſe of their own nation againſt a ſtranger; whereas a ſtranger ought to have equal juſtice done him as a native, and the utmoſt care ſhould be taken that he has no injury done him, and the rather, becauſe he is a ſtranger: for ye know the heart of a ſtranger; the fears he is poſſeſſed of, the inward diſtreſs of his ſoul, the anxiety of his mind, the tenderneſs of his heart, the workings of his paſſions, his grief and ſorrow, and dejection of ſpirit: the Targum of Jonathan is, "the groaning of the ſoul of a ſtran-"ger:" this the Iſraelitiſh judges knew, having had a very late experience of it: ſeeing ye were ſtrangers in the land of Egypt; where they had been vexed and oppreſſed, brought into hard bondage, and groaned under it; and therefore it might be reaſonably thought and expected, that they would have a heart ſympathizing with ſtrangers, and uſe them well, and eſpecially ſee that juſtice was done them, and no injury or oppreſſion of any kind.

℣. 10. And ſix years thou ſhalt ſow thy land, &c.] The land of Canaan, given to their anceſtors and to them, and which they were now going to inherit; and when they came into it they were to plant it with vines and olives; or rather, theſe being ready planted, they were to prune and dreſs them; and they were to till their land, and plow it, and ſow it with various ſorts of grain, for ſix years running, from the time of their poſſeſſion of it: and ſhall gather in the fruits thereof; corn and wine, and oil, into their own garners, treaſuries, and cellars, as their own property, to diſpoſe of as they pleaſed for their own uſe and profit.

℣. 11. But the ſeventh year thou ſhalt let it reſt, and lie ſtill, &c.] From tillage, and make its fruits common, as the Targum of Jonathan; the note of Jarchi is, let it reſt, from perfect tillage, as plowing and ſowing; and lie ſtill, from dunging and harrowing, or weeding: this law was intended to ſhew that God was the original proprietor and owner of this land, and that the Iſraelites held it under him; and to teach them to depend upon and truſt in his providence; as well as that there might be both reſt for the land, and ſo it became more fruitful afterwards, having by this reſt renewed its vigour, and alſo for ſervants and cattle; and that the poor might have an equal ſhare in the fruits of the earth, and appear to be joint lords of it with others under God, as it follows: that the poor of thy people may eat: that which grows up of itſelf, of which there were great quantities; for the ſixth year bringing forth for three years, a great deal of ſeed fell, which grew up again; and eſpecially, as through plenty they were not ſo careful to gather it all up; and beſides this, there were the fruits of trees, of vines, olives, &c. which brought forth their fruit in courſe as uſual, and which were all this year common to poor and rich; ſo that the former had an equal propriety and ſhare with the latter: and what they leave, the beaſts of the field ſhall eat; ſignifying that there ſhould be ſuch plenty that there would be enough for all, and to ſpare; that there would be much left, and which ſhould be the portion of the beaſts of the field, and who would alſo be ſufficiently provided for by the produce the earth brought forth of itſelf, as herbage, &c. and the fruits the poor left: in like manner thou ſhalt deal with thy vineyard, and with thy olive-yard; that is, theſe were not to be pruned, nor the grapes and olives gathered, but were to be in common with all: a larger account is given of this law in Lev. xxv. 2—7.

℣. 12. Six days thou ſhalt do thy work, &c.] That is, they might do what work they would on the ſix days of the week: and on the ſeventh day thou ſhalt reſt; from all the work and labour done on other days, and give up themſelves to religious exerciſes: that thine ox and thine aſs may reſt; and ſo every other beaſt, as horſes, camels, &c. and the ſon of thy handmaid, and the ſtranger may be refreſhed; the former, the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi, interprets, of one uncircumciſed, and the latter, of a proſelyte of the gate: this law is here repeated, partly to ſhew that it is of the ſame kind with the former, namely, ceremonial and temporary; and partly, as Jarchi obſerves, leſt it ſhould be ſaid, ſince all the year is called the ſabbath, there was no need to obſerve the weekly ſabbath.

℣. 13. And in all things that I have ſaid unto you, be circumſpect, &c.] Or obſerve them, be careful to keep them punctually and conſtantly, even all that are delivered in this and the preceding chapters: and make no mention of the name of other gods; neither call upon them, nor ſwear by them, nor make vows to them; and as little as poſſible, ever utter their names, and never with pleaſure and delight, and ſhewing any honour of them, and reverence to them, but with the utmoſt deteſtation and abhorrence: neither let it be heard out of thy mouth; not any of their names; the ſame thing in different words, the more to inculcate and impreſs the thing upon the mind, and to ſhew with what vehemence and earneſtneſs this is preſſed.

℣.

[a] פקחים videntes, Pagninus, Vatablus, Cartwright; apertos, Montanus, Druſius.

℣. 14. Three times thou ſhalt keep a feaſt unto me in the year.] The feaſt of the paſſover, on the 14th of the month Niſan or March; and the feaſt of weeks or pentecoſt 50 days after that; and the feaſt of tabernacles on the 15th day of Tiſri or September.

℣. 15. Thou ſhalt keep the feaſt of unleavened bread, &c.] Which began on the 14th of the month Abib or Niſan, and laſted ſeven days, during which time no leavened bread was to be eaten by the Iſraelites, or to be in their houſes, of which ſee the notes on ch. xii. 15, 18, 19, 20. and xiii. 6. 7. thou ſhalt eat unleavened bread ſeven days, as I commanded thee in the time appointed of the month Abib; from the 14th of the month to the 21ſt: for in it thou cameſt out of Egypt; in ſuch haſte that there was no time to leaven the dough in the troughs; in commemoration of which this law was given, and this feaſt was kept: and none ſhall appear before me empty; at this feaſt and the two following ones; for beſides the offerings and ſacrifices appointed, at the feaſt of paſſover was brought a ſheaf of the firſt fruits of the barley harveſt; and at the feaſt of pentecoſt the two wave loaves or cakes of the firſt-fruits of the wheat harveſt; and at the feaſt of tabernacles they appeared with palm-tree branches, and boughs of goodly trees, and poured out water fetched from Siloam, before the Lord: but to this appearance the Jewiſh doctors [b] ſay, "there was no meaſure fixed; for every "one, if he would, might go up and appear, "and go away: according to another interpreta-"tion, for the burnt-offering of appearance, and "the peace-offerings of the Chagigah, which a "man is bound to bring, as it is written, ye ſhall "not appear empty; there is no meaſure from the "law, as it is written, a man according to the gift "of his hand, Deut. xvi. 17. but the wiſe men "fix a meaſure; to the burnt-offering, a Meah "of ſilver, to the Chagigah two pieces of ſilver:" ſome underſtand this, not of their bringing any thing with them to appear before the Lord with, but of what they ſhould be bleſſed with there; even with the preſence of God, and communion with him, and with the bleſſings of his grace and goodneſs; ſo that however they came, they ſhould not remain, nor go away empty, and ſo have no cauſe to repent their appearance before him; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt.

℣. 16. And the feaſt of harveſt, &c.] This is the ſecond feaſt, the feaſt of wheat-harveſt, between which and barley-harveſt were 50 days; or between the firſt-fruits of the one and the firſt-fruits of the other were ſeven weeks, as Aben Ezra obſerves, and was ſometimes called the feaſt of weeks; at which feaſt were to be brought, the firſt-fruits of thy labours, which thou haſt ſown in the field; the two wave loaves or cakes, made of the firſt new wheat, which was the effect of their labour in tilling the field, and ſowing it with wheat, and reaping it: and the feaſt of in-gathering which is in the end of the year, when thou haſt gathered in thy labours out of the field; this is the third feaſt in the year to be kept, and was kept at the cloſe of the year, at the revolution of it, when a new year began; that is, according to the old account, which made Tiſri the month in which this feaſt was kept, the firſt month of the year; whereas, according to the new account, it was the ſeventh month from the month Abib, now made the firſt of the months upon the Iſraelites coming out of Egypt in that month: this is the ſame feaſt with the feaſt of tabernacles, but here called the feaſt of in-gathering, becauſe, at this time of the year all the fruits of the earth were gathered in; the corn, and wine, and oil, and all other fruits, on account of which there was great rejoicing, as there ought to be.

℣. 17. Three times in the year all thy males ſhall appear before the Lord thy God.] In the city of Jeruſalem, when they were come into the land of Canaan, and the temple was there built: here they were to ſhew themſelves before the Lord as being his, and devoted to his ſervice; concerning which the Miſnic doctors have the following canon [c], "all "are bound to appear except a man deaf and "dumb, a fool, a little one, one of neither ſex, "or of both ſexes, women, ſervants not free, the "lame, the blind, the ſick, an old man, and he "that cannot go on his feet."

℣. 18. Thou ſhalt not offer the blood of my ſacrifice with leavened bread, &c.] This belongs to the feaſt of the paſſover; for as all the Jewiſh writers agree, this ſacrifice is the ſacrifice of the paſſover, as it is ſometimes called, ſee ch. xii. 27. now when the paſchal lamb was killed, and its blood ſhed, and its fleſh eaten, there was to be no leaven along with it; it was to be eat with unleavened bread, and there was to be no leaven in their houſes at this time; nay, it was not to be ſlain until all was removed: this was the firſt thing the Jews did, as ſoon as the 14th day was come, to ſearch for leaven, remove and burn it; and this ſenſe of the law is confirmed by the Targum of Jonathan, which is, "not a man ſhall ſlay whilſt "there is leaven in your houſes, the ſacrifice of my "paſſover;" and to the ſame purpoſe is the note of Jarchi: neither ſhall the fat of my ſacrifice remain until the morning; and indeed no part of the paſſover-lamb was to remain until the morning, what did was to be burnt with fire, ch. xii. 10. the Targum of Jonathan is, "neither ſhall there "remain without the altar the fat of the ſacrifice "of my paſſover until the morning, nor of the "fleſh which ye ate in the evening;" and ſo Jarchi interprets it, of its not remaining without the altar.

℣. 19. The firſt of the firſt-fruits of thy land, &c.] Both of the barley and wheat-harveſt, and of the wine and oil; yea, Jarchi ſays, the ſeventh year was obliged to firſt-fruits; and Joſephus [d] relates, that the Jews were ſo tenacious of this law, that even in the famine in the time of Claudius Cæſar, the firſt-fruits were brought to the temple and were not meddled with: thou ſhalt bring into the houſe of the Lord thy God; to the tabernacle, during the ſtanding of that, and the temple when that was built; which were the perquiſites of the prieſts who officiated in the houſe and ſervice of God: ſo Pliny ſays [e] of the ancient Romans, that they taſted not of the new fruits or wines before the firſt-fruits were offered to the prieſts, which ſeems to have been borrowed from hence: thou ſhalt not ſeeth a kid in his mother's milk; and ſo a calf, or a lamb [f], as Jarchi interprets it; which ſome underſtand of ſlaying a young kid and its dam together, and ſo is a law againſt cruelty, like that law of not taking the dam with the young, on finding a bird's neſt, Deut. xxii. 6, 7. others, of killing, dreſſing, and eating a kid, whilſt it ſucks the milk of its mother, before it is eight days old, and ſo a law againſt luxury; but the Jews generally underſtand it, of boiling, or eating the fleſh of

[b] Bartenora in Miſn. Peah, c. 1. §. 1. [c] Miſn. Chagigah, c. 1. §. 1. [d] Antiq. l. 3. c. 15. §. 3.
[e] Nat. Hiſt. l. 18. c. 2. [f] Vid. T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 114. 1.

of any creature and milk together [g]: ſo the Targum of Onkelos paraphraſes it, "ye ſhall not eat "fleſh with milk;" and the Targum of Jonathan is, "ye ſhall neither boil nor eat the fleſh and "the milk mixed together:" hence, according to the rules they give, the fleſh of any beaſt, or of a fowl is not to be ſet upon a table on which cheeſe is, (being made of milk) leſt they ſhould be eat together; nor may cheeſe be eat after fleſh until ſome conſiderable time, and then, if there is any fleſh ſticks between a man's teeth, he muſt remove it, and waſh and cleanſe his mouth; nor may cheeſe be eat on a table-cloth on which meat is, nor be cut with a knife that fleſh is cut with [h]; ſo careful are they of breaking this law as they underſtand it: but the words are, doubtleſs, to be taken literally, of not boiling a kid in its mother's milk; and is thought by many to refer to ſome cuſtom of this kind, either among the Iſraelites, which they had ſome where learnt, or among the idolatrous heathens, and therefore cautioned againſt; Maimonides and Abarbinel, both ſuppoſe it was an idolatrous rite, but are not able to produce an inſtance of it out of any writer of theirs or others; but doctor Cudworth has produced a paſſage out of a Karaite author [i], who affirms, "it was a cuſtom of the heathens at the in-ga- "thering of their fruits to take a kid and ſeeth "it in the milk of the dam, and then in a magi- "cal way, go about and beſprinkle all their trees, "fields, gardens, and orchards, thinking by "this means they ſhould make them fructify, and "bring forth fruit again more abundantly the "next year:" and the Targum of Jonathan on ch. xxxiv. 26. ſeems to have reſpect to this, where, having paraphraſed the words as here quoted above, adds, "leſt I ſhould deſtroy the fruit of your trees "with the unripe grape, the ſhoots and leaves "together:" and if this may be depended upon, the law comes in here very aptly, after the feaſt of in-gathering, and the bringing in the firſt-fruits of the land into the Lord's houſe.

℣. 20. Behold, I ſend an angel before thee, &c.] not a created angel but the increated one, the angel of God's preſence, that was with the Iſraelites at Sinai, and in the wilderneſs; who ſaved, redeemed, bore, and carried them all the days of old, whom they rebelled againſt and tempted in the wilderneſs; as appears by all the characters after given of him, which by no means agree with a created angel: Aben Ezra obſerves, that ſome ſay this is the book of the law, becauſe it is ſaid, my name is in him, or in the midſt of it; others ſay, the ark of the covenant; but he ſays, this angel is Michael; and if indeed by Michael is intended the increated angel, as he always is in ſcripture, he is right: Jarchi remarks, that their rabbins ſay, this is Metatron, whoſe name is as the name of his maſter; Metatron by gematry, is Shaddai, which ſignifies almighty or all-ſufficient, and is an epithet of the divine Being; and Metatron ſeems to be a corruption of the word Mediator: ſome of the ancient Jewiſh writers ſay [k], this is the angel that is the redeemer of the world, and the keeper of the children of men: and Philo the Jew [l] applies the word unto the divine Logos, and ſays, "he (God) uſes the divine Word as the guide of "the way; for the oracle is, behold I ſend my an- "gel, &c." which agrees with what follows: to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared; to preſerve the Iſraelites in their journey through the wilderneſs, from all their enemies that ſhould ſet upon them, and to bring them ſafe at laſt to the land of Canaan, which he had appointed for them, and promiſed to them, and had prepared both in his purpoſe and gift for them, and would make way for their ſettlement in it by driving out the nations before them.

℣. 21. Beware of him, &c.] Of his face or countenance; obſerve his looks towards you in a providential way, whether frowning or ſmiling; obſerve his directions and inſtructions, laws and commands: and obey his voice; hearken to what he ſays, and chearfully, readily, and punctually do as he orders: provoke him not; by unbelief, by murmurings and complaints, by unbecoming words and actions, by tranſgreſſing his commands, and acting contrary to his will: for he will not pardon your tranſgreſſions; or ſuffer them to paſs unchaſtiſed and uncorrected, but will, as he did, take vengeance on their inventions, and on them becauſe of them, though he forgave their iniquities; for that he was ſuch an angel as could forgive ſin, which none but God can do, is evident; becauſe it would be abſurd to ſay, he will not pardon, if he could not pardon their tranſgreſſions, ſee Matt. ix. 6. for my name is in him; the Father is in the Son, and the Son in the Father; the nature and perfections of God are in the Word and Son of God, and ſo his name Jehovah, which is peculiar to him; Chriſt is Jehovah our righteouſneſs: or though my name is in him [m]; as Abendana and others, his name the Lord God, gracious and merciful, pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin, as afterwards proclaimed in him; and yet notwithſtanding this, he would not clear the guilty, or ſuffer the Iſraelites to go unpuniſhed, if they offended him: the Targum of Onkelos is, "or in my name is his word," he is my ambaſſador and ſpeaks in my name.

℣. 22. But, if thou ſhalt indeed obey his voice, &c.] Or hearkening hearken [n], to it attentively, liſten to it, and diligently and conſtantly obſerve and obey in whatever he ſhall direct and order: and do all that I ſpeak; by him; or whatſoever he had ſpoke, or was about to ſpeak; for as yet all the laws and ſtatutes were not delivered, eſpecially thoſe of the ceremonial kind: then I will be an enemy unto thine enemies, and an adverſary unto thine adverſaries; which they ſhould either meet with in their paſſage through the wilderneſs, or when they came into the land of Canaan; ſignifying hereby, that he would protect them from them, ſubdue them under them, and give them victory over them, as that they ſhould be utterly deſtroyed, and ſo way made for their poſſeſſion of their land, as in the following words.

℣. 23. For mine angel ſhall go before thee, &c.] The ſame as before deſcribed: and bring thee in unto the Amorite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Canaanite, and the Hivite, and the Jebuſite; ſix nations are only mentioned, though there were ſeven; the Gergaſites are omitted, tho' added in the Septuagint verſion; and this omiſſion of them might be, either becauſe they were ſwallowed up by one or other of the other nations, particularly the Amorites, who were the moſt powerful; or rather, having mentioned the moſt and chiefeſt, the Lord was not careful, as Aben Ezra obſerves, to to take notice of the leaſt: and I will cut them off; from being a nation, either of them; for though there were ſome of them left, and dwelt about in the land, yet not as a kingdom and nation of themſelves, as they had been, but became tributary to the Iſraelites.

[g] Tikkune Zohar, Correct. 14. fol. 26. 1. [h] Schulchan Aruch, par. 2. Yore Deah, Hilchot Baſhar Bechaleb, c. 88. §. 1. & 89. §. 1. 4. [i] Apud Gregory's Notes & Obſerv. c. 19. p. 97, 98. [k] In Zohar in Gen. fol. 124. 4. [l] De migratione Abraham, p. 415. [m] כי שמי quamvis nomen meum, Druſius, [n] שמוע תשמע audiendo audieris, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius, Piſcator.

℣. 24. Thou ſhalt not bow down to their gods, &c.] In a way of honour to them, doing them reverence, expreſſing thereby an high eſteem of them, truſt in them, and expectation of good things from them: nor ſerve them; in any kind of ſervice in which they uſually are ſerved by their votaries; as by offering ſacrifice, incenſe, libations, &c. or by praying to them or praiſing of them, or in whatſoever way they are ſerved by idolaters: nor do after their works; the works of the worſhippers of idols; all thoſe wicked works in general done by them, which ſhould not be imitated; and thoſe particularly relating to the ſervice and worſhip of their deities: but thou ſhalt overthrow them; the heathen gods; utterly deſtroy them, and break them to pieces, or demoliſh their temples, the idolatrous houſes built for them, and their altars; for the word has the ſignification of demoliſhing buildings, and razing up the very foundations of them: and quite break down their images; or, in breaking break down[o]; utterly and entirely break them down, break them to ſhivers, all their ſtatues of gold or ſilver, braſs, wood, or ſtone, or of whatſoever materials they were made; none were to be ſpared, nor any remains of them to be ſeen, that they might not prove a ſnare to any to worſhip them; and hereby they were to expreſs their deteſtation of idolatry, and their ſtrict and cloſe adherence to the true God, and the worſhip of him as follows.

℣. 25. And ye ſhall ſerve the Lord your God, &c.] And him only, who had brought them out of Egypt, and done ſo many great and good things for them at the Red ſea, and now in the wilderneſs; by which he appeared to be the true Jehovah, the one and only living God, and to be their God in covenant, who had promiſed them much, and had performed it; and therefore was in a ſpecial and peculiar manner their God, and they were under the higheſt obligations to ſerve and worſhip him in the way and manner he directed them to: and he ſhall bleſs thy bread and thy water; and make them nouriſhing and refreſhing to them, and preſerve them thereby in health, as well as proſper and ſucceed them, and increaſe their worldly ſubſtance: and I will take ſickneſs away from the midſt of thee; the ſtroke of bitterneſs, or the bitter ſtroke, as the Targum of Jonathan, any grievous diſeaſe, which is bitter and diſtreſſing; ſignifying that there ſhould be none among them, but that they ſhould be healthful, and free from diſtempers and diſeaſes.

℣. 26. There ſhall nothing caſt their young, nor be barren in the land, &c.] There ſhall be no aborſions or miſcarriages, nor ſterility or barrenneſs, either among the Iſraelites, or their cattle of every kind, ſo that there ſhould be a great increaſe, both of men and beaſts: the number of thy days I will fulfil; which was fixed for each of them, in his eternal purpoſes and decrees; or what, according to the temperament of their bodies and the courſe of nature, which, humanly ſpeaking, it might be ſuppoſed they would arrive unto; or generally the common term of human life, which, in the days of Moſes was threeſcore years and ten, or fourſcore, ſee Job xiv. 5. Eccl. iii. 2. Pſ. xc. 10. it may be conſidered, whether any reſpect is had to the time of their continuance in the land of Canaan, the term of which was fixed in the divine mind, or the fulneſs of time in which the Meſſiah was to come.

℣. 27. And I will ſend my fear before thee, &c.] What ſhould cauſe fear among the nations of the land of Canaan; either the hornets mentioned in the next verſe as explanative of this; or the fame of his mighty works, which he had done for Iſrael in Egypt, at the Red Sea, and in the wilderneſs; which ſtruck the inhabitants of Canaan with ſuch a pannic that they were ready to faint and melt away, and loſt all courage, Joſh. ii. 9, 10. 11. and will deſtroy all the people to whom thou ſhalt come; that is, the greateſt part of them: and I will make all thine enemies turn their backs unto thee; flee away, not being able to face them and ſtand a battle, or however, not ſtand it long, but run and make their eſcape: or I will give thee the neck of them[p]; cauſe them to ſubmit, to lay down their necks and be trampled upon; an expreſſion denoting their ſubjection, and an entire conqueſt of them, ſee Pſ. xviii. 39, 40.

℣. 28. And I will ſend hornets before thee, &c.] Which may be interpreted either figuratively, and ſo may ſignify the ſame as fear before, which ſhould fall on the Canaanites upon hearing the Iſraelites were coming; the ſtings of their conſciences, for their ſins, terrors of mind, dreading the wrath of the God of Iſrael, of whom they had heard, and terrible apprehenſions of ruin and deſtruction from the Iſraelites: Aben Ezra interprets it, of ſome diſeaſe of the body which weakens it, as the leproſy, from the ſignification of the word, which has ſome affinity with that uſed for the leproſy; and ſo the Arabic verſion underſtands it, of a diſeaſe: or rather, the words are to be taken literally, for hornets, which are a ſort of waſps, whoſe ſtings are very penetrating and venemous; nor is it any ſtrange or unheard-of thing for people to be drove out of their countries by ſmall animals, as mice, flies, bees, &c. and particularly Ælianus[q] relates, that the Phaſelites were drove out of their country by waſps: and Bochart[r] has ſhewn that thoſe people were of a Phœnician original, and inhabited the mountains of Solymi; and that this happened to them about the times of Joſhua, and ſo may probably be the very Canaanites here mentioned as follow: the waſps in Ariſtophanes's comedy which bears that name, are introduced ſpeaking of themſelves, and ſay, no creature when provoked, is more angry and troubleſome than we are[s]: which ſhall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite from before thee; which three are mentioned inſtead of the reſt, or becauſe they were more eſpecially infeſted and diſtreſſed with the hornets, and drove out of their land by means of them.

℣. 29. I will not drive them out from before thee in one year, &c.] This is obſerved beforehand, leſt the Iſraelites ſhould be diſcouraged, and fear they ſhould never be rid of them; and it was ſo ordered in providence for the following reaſon: leſt the land become deſolate; there being not a ſufficient number of Iſraelites to replace in their ſtead, to repeople the land, and to cultivate it; and yet their

[o] שבר תשברם confringendo confringes, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius; perfringendo perfringito, Piſcator.
[p] נתתי־ערף & dabo—cervicem, Pagninus, Montanus; exponam tibi cervicem, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; ponam ad te cervicem, Druſius.
[q] Hiſt. Animal. l. 11. c. 28.
[r] Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 4. c. 13. col. 541.
[s] Ariſtoph. Veſpæ, p. 510.

their number was very large, being, when they came out of Egypt, as is generally computed, about two millions and a half, beſides the mixed multitude of Egyptians and others, and during their forty years in the wilderneſs, muſt be greatly increaſed: and the beaſt of the field multiply againſt thee; there being ſo much waſte ground for them to proul about in, they would ſo increaſe as to make head againſt them, and be too many for them; or however, it would be difficult to keep them under: the Targum of Jonathan adds, "when "they ſhall come to eat their carcaſſes (the car-"caſſes of the Canaanites ſlain in war) and may "hurt thee."

℣. 30. By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, &c.] Not the beaſts of the field, but the inhabitants of Canaan, who were left partly to keep up the cities and towns, that they might not fall to ruin, and to till the land, that it might not be deſolate; and partly to be trials and exerciſes to the people of Iſrael, and to prove whether they would ſerve the Lord or no. Juſt as the corruptions of human nature remain with the people of God when converted, for the trial and exerciſe of their graces, and that they may have their dependance not on themſelves, but on the grace of God to keep them in his ways, and to preſerve them ſafe to eternal glory; and by compleating the work of grace, which is gradually done, they might be made meet for it: until thou be increaſed, and inherit the land; for as their enemies were driven out gradually, by little and little, ſo they multiplied gradually, until at length they became a ſufficient number to fill all the cities and towns in all the nations of Canaan, and take an entire poſſeſſion of it, as their inheritance given unto them by God.

℣. 31. And I will ſet thy bounds, &c.] The bounds of the land of Canaan, which in proceſs of time it ſhould reach unto, though not at once, not until the times of David and Solomon, 2 Sam. viii. 1 Kings iv. 24. which bounds were as follow: from the Red Sea, even unto the ſea of the Philiſtines; the Red Sea was the boundary eaſtward, as the ſea of the Philiſtines, or the Mediterranean ſea was the boundary weſtward: and from the deſart unto the river; the deſart of Shur or Arabia towards Egypt, was the boundary ſouthward, as the river Euphrates was the boundary northward, and is the river here meant, as the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it; and ſo Jarchi interprets it, and generally others: for I will deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hand; the greater part upon their entrance into it, and ſettlement in it, and the reſt afterwards: and thou ſhalt drive them out before thee; not all at once, but by degrees, as before obſerved.

℣. 32. Thou ſhalt make no covenant with them, &c.] A covenant of peace, a league, a confederacy, ſo as to take them to be their allies and friends; but they were always to conſider them as their enemies, until they had made an utter end of them; though the Gibeonites by craft and guile obtained a league of them; but the methods they took to get it, ſhew they had ſome knowledge of this law, that the Iſraelites might not, or at leaſt would not, make any league or covenant with the inhabitants of the land of Canaan. This may be alſo extended to marriage-covenants, which they were forbid to make with them; which yet they did, and proved a ſnare to them, for this brought them to make a covenant with their gods, and ſerve them, which is here alſo forbidden: nor with their gods; making vows unto them, promiſing to ſerve them, if they would do ſuch and ſuch things for them.

℣. 33. They ſhall not dwell in thy land, &c.] The land of Canaan, given by God for an inheritance, and now would be in the poſſeſſion of the Iſraelites; and therefore were not to ſuffer the old inhabitants to dwell with them in it, at leaſt no longer than they could help it; they were to do all they could to root them out: leſt they make thee ſin againſt me; by their ill examples and perſuaſions, drawing them into idolatry, than which there is no greater ſin againſt God, it being not only contrary to his law, his mind and will, but directly againſt his nature, being, perfections and glory: for if thou ſerve their gods; or for thou wilt ſerve [t]; this would be the conſequence of their dwelling in the land, they would draw the Iſraelites into the worſhip of their idols, to which they were naturally prone; and ſhould they commit idolatry, it will ſurely be a ſnare unto thee; idolatry would be the cauſe of their ruin and deſtruction, they would be ſnared by it, as fiſhes in a net, or birds and beaſts by traps and gins; or for it will be a ſnare [u], that is, the Canaanites dwelling among them would be a ſnare to draw them into their idolatry, and ſo into ruin.

CHAP. XXIV.

IN this chapter we have an account, that Moſes was ordered to come up to the Lord alone, ℣. 1, 2. but that before he did go up, he related to the people all the above laws delivered to him, which they promiſed obedience to, and ſo a covenant was made between God and the people by ſacrifice, and by the ſprinkling of blood, ℣. 3—8. upon which he and Aaron, and his two ſons and ſeventy elders of Iſrael, went up part of the mountain, and had a viſion of God, ℣. 9—11. when Moſes with Joſhua was called, and went up higher, until at length he entered into the cloud where the Lord was, and continued forty days and forty nights, ℣. 12—18.

℣. 1. And he ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] Who ſaid? no doubt a divine perſon, and yet what this perſon ſaid is, come up unto the Lord; meaning either to himſelf, or one divine perſon called to Moſes to come up to another: according to the Targum of Jonathan, it was Michael, the prince of wiſdom; not a created angel, but the eternal Word, wiſdom, and Son of God; who ſaid this on the 7th day of the month, which was the day after the giving of the law, or ten commands; though Jarchi ſays this paragraph was before the ten commands, and was ſaid on the fourth of Sivan; but the Targumiſt ſeems righteſt: come up unto the Lord, thou and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and ſeventy of the elders of Iſrael; Nadab and Abihu were the two eldeſt ſons of Aaron, ch. vi. 23. and the ſeventy elders were not all the elders of Iſrael, but were ſo many of them ſelected out of them, the chief and principal; who were heads of tribes and families, and were no doubt many, if not all of them, of thoſe who by the advice of Jethro were choſen to be rulers lers of thouſands, hundreds and fifties; theſe were called to come up to the Lord on the mountain, but not to the top of it, only Moſes went thither: and worſhip ye afar off; from the people, and even at a diſtance from Moſes; for he only was admitted near to God, as the following verſe ſhews.

[t] כי תעבד quia ſervies, Malvenda.

[u] כי יהיה quia erit, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius.

℣. 2. And Moſes alone ſhall come near the Lord, &c.] Into the cloud where he was, and talk with him face to face, as a man talketh with his friend; which was great nearneſs indeed, and a peculiar favour and high honour was this: but they ſhall not come nigh; Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and the ſeventy elders of Iſrael: neither ſhall the people go up with him; not any of them, much leſs the whole body. It ſeems by this account, that Moſes had been down from the mount after he had received the laws recorded in the two preceding chapters; though as yet he had not related them to the people, but did before he went up again by the above order, as appears from what follows.

℣. 3. And Moſes came and told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments, &c.] Which according to Jarchi were the ſeven commands given to the ſons of Noah, the laws concerning the ſabbath, and honouring parents, the red heifer, and the judgments at Marah; but all theſe they were acquainted with before, excepting that of the red heifer, and the law, for that was not yet delivered to Moſes, nor were theſe, the ten commands, for they had heard them from the Lord themſelves; but they doubtleſs were the judgments, or judicial laws which he was ordered to ſet before the people, contained in the two preceding chapters, which were chiefly of the judicial kind, and related to the civil polity of the people of Iſrael: and all the people anſwered with one voice; one ſpeaking for, and in the name of the reſt, or they all lift up their voice together, and being unanimous in their ſentiments, expreſſed them in the ſame words: and ſaid, all the words which the Lord hath ſaid will we do; that is, they would be careful to obſerve all the laws, ſtatutes, judgments and commands, which the Lord had enjoined them; and leſs than this they could not ſay, for they had promiſed Moſes, that if he would draw nigh to God, and hear what he ſhould ſay, and deliver it to them, they would hearken to it, and obey it, as if they had heard God himſelf ſpeak it; only they intreated the Lord would ſpeak no more to them, as he did the ten commands, it being ſo terrible to them.

℣. 4. And Moſes wrote all the words of the Lord, &c.] Jarchi ſays, all from the creation, to the giving of the law, and the commands at Marah; but though theſe were written by him, yet not at this time; but as Aben Ezra more truly obſerves, what are mentioned in this paraſhah, or ſection, or what is contained in the two preceding chapters, he not only related to them from his memory, but he wrote them in a book, which is after mentioned, that they might be ſeen and read hereafter; for theſe were not the ten commands, they were written as well as ſpoken by the Lord himſelf, but the judicial laws before mentioned: and roſe up early in the morning; not on the fifth of Sivan, as Jarchi, the day before the giving of the law, but on the eighth of that month, two days after it: and built an altar under the hill; under mount Sinai, about the place where the bounds were ſet, beyond which the people were not to go: and twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes of Iſrael; to anſwer to them, and which were to repreſent them, as ſeems, by the following account; theſe probably were made of marble ſtone, of which mount Sinai conſiſted, and of which there was plenty thereabout.

℣. 5. And he ſent young men of the children of Iſrael, &c.] To the altar under the hill he had built; theſe young men, according to Jarchi, were the firſt-born of the children of Iſrael; and ſo the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; and the latter adds, "for unto this hour, the worſhip was among "the firſt-born, as yet the tabernacle of the cove-"nant was not made, and as yet the prieſthood "was not given to Aaron." But though this is a notion that has obtained among learned men, both Jews and Chriſtians, it has been called in queſtion by ſome, who have ſuch reaſons againſt it, as are not eaſily refuted. And very probably, as the ſeventy elders were ſuch as were ſelected from the ſenior and graver part of the people, ſo theſe were choice young men, that were ſeparated from others for this ſervice, without any regard to birth-right: which offered burnt-offerings, and ſacrificed peace-offerings of oxen unto the Lord; by way of thankfulneſs; and ſuch were uſed at making covenants, when the parties ate and drank together. The Vulgate Latin verſion has it, twelve calves, without any authority for it.

℣. 6. And Moſes took half of the blood, and put it in baſons, &c.] Half of the blood of the above ſacrifices, this he put into baſons, and ſet by in order to ſprinkle on the people: and half of the blood he ſprinkled on the altar; the Targum of Onkelos adds, to atone for the people. But the altar here ſeems to repreſent the Lord, who was one of the parties covenanting, and therefore is ſprinkled with blood as a ratification of the covenant on his part, and the promiſes of it.

℣. 7. And he took the book of the covenant, &c.] Which contained the words of the Lord he is ſaid to write, ℣. 4. and conſiſted both of laws and judgments required of the people, and to which they had given their aſſent, and promiſed obedience to; and of promiſes made by the Lord of ſending his angel before them to guide them in the way, and bring them to Canaan, and to drive the Canaanites from thence, and put the Iſraelites into the poſſeſſion of it; ſo that here were promiſes on both ſides, a reſtipulation of parties, which made a formal covenant: and read in the audience of the people; he had rehearſed what was contained in it from his memory, by word of mouth, to which they had aſſented, ℣. 3. and having written the ſame in a book, he read it to them diſtinctly, that they might the better take notice of the contents of it: and they ſaid, all that the Lord hath ſaid, will we do, and be obedient; which is a repetition and confirmation of what they had before ſaid, and is expreſſed in ſtronger terms; ſo that this was not done ſuddenly and inconſiderately, and yet they ſeem not to be ſo well apprized of their own inability to keep the laws of God, and of the treachery of their own hearts as to their regard to them; ſee Deut. v. 28, 29.

℣. 8. And Moſes took the blood, &c.] The other half of the blood which was in the baſons: and ſprinkled it on the people; not on the whole body of the people, who could not be brought nigh enough, and were too numerous to be all ſprinkled with it; though the apoſtle ſo expreſſes it, a part being put for the whole, Heb. ix. 19. either this was ſprinkled on the young men that offered the ſacrifices in the name of all the people; or on the ſeventy elders as the heads of them, ſo Aben Ezra; or upon the 12 pillars, which anſwered to the the 12 tribes, and repreſented them, as the altar did the Lord: and ſaid, behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all theſe words; being a ratification of the covenant on both ſides, having been ſprinkled both upon the altar, and upon the people. In alluſion to which, the blood of Chriſt is ſometimes called the blood of ſprinkling, and which, ſprinkled upon the mercy-ſeat, calls for pardon for men; and ſprinkled on their conſciences, ſpeaks peace and pardon to them, and cleanſes from all ſin; and ſometimes the blood of the everlaſting covenant, the covenant of grace made with him, by which it is ratified and confirmed, and our Lord may have regard to this rite and mode of expreſſion in Matt. xxvi. 28.

℣. 9. Then went up Moſes and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, &c.] After the above things were done, the words of the Lord were told the people, and the book of the covenant read unto them, to which they agreed, ſacrifices were offered, and the blood of them ſprinkled on the altar, and on the people. The Samaritan verſion adds to theſe, Eleazar and Ithamar, the two younger ſons of Aaron: and ſeventy of the elders of Iſrael, who were called up to the mountain to the Lord, ℣. 1.

℣. 10. And they ſaw the God of Iſrael, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan reſtrains this to Nadab and Abihu; whereas it is doubtleſs true of Moſes and Aaron, and the ſeventy elders, who all ſaw him, and who were witneſſes to the people, that it was a divine perſon that ſpoke to Moſes, and delivered the laws unto him, to be obſerved by them; which ſeems to be the reaſon of their being called up, and favoured with this ſight; which muſt not be underſtood as of any thing criminal in them, as if they curiouſly looked and pried to ſee ſomething they ſhould not, for which they deſerved ſome ſort of puniſhment, as the Targum intimates; but of a privilege, and a very high one they were favoured with: and this ſight they had was not by a viſion of prophecy, or with the eyes of their underſtanding, but corporeally; they ſaw the Son of God, the God of Iſrael, in an human form, as a pledge and preſage of his future incarnation, who is the angel that ſpoke to Moſes on mount Sinai, as Stephen ſays, and the Lord that was among the angels there, who afterwards became incarnate, and having done his work on earth, aſcended on high, Acts vii. 38. Pſ. lxviii. 17, 18. and there was under his feet; which ſhows that there was a viſible form, and that human; nor is this contrary to what is ſaid, ye ſaw no ſimilitude, Deut. iv. 12, 15. ſince what is here related does not reſpect the ſame time, nor the ſame perſons; this was after the giving of the ten commands, that at the time of it; this is ſaid of the 70 elders, with Moſes, Aaron, and his two ſons, that of all the people: as it were a paved work of a ſaphire-ſtone; like a pavement pitched with ſaphire. The Septuagint verſion is, "and they "ſaw the place where the God of Iſrael ſtood, "and what were under his feet, as the work of a "ſaphire-brick." The ſaphire-ſtones, of which the pavement was, were as broad as bricks, and being like a brick, was a memorial, as the Targum of Jonathan ſays, of the ſervitude the Egyptians made the children of Iſrael to ſerve with in clay and bricks; but being a ſaphire, bright and glorious, may denote the liberty they now enjoyed in exchange for their bondage. And the Targum of Jonathan underſtands it of the colour, and not of the form of the ſaphire, and renders it, the white ſaphire; and ſo do ſome Jewiſh writers [w]; though the colour of the ſaphire is azure, or ſky-coloured; with which agrees what follows: and as it were the body of heaven in his clearneſs; and Ruæus [x] ſays, the ſaphire is ſky-coloured, and ſome of them ſhine and ſparkle with golden points or ſpots, and are reckoned the beſt ſaphires; ſo that this repreſents the heaven as quite clear and ſerene, beſpangled with ſtars; and as the heavens, covered with clouds, may denote the diſpleaſure of God, ſo a ſerene heaven his favour and good-will, and in ſuch an amiable light was he now beheld.

℣. 11. And upon the nobles of the children of Iſrael he laid not his hand, &c.] Which ſome interpret of his hand of prophecy, and of the meaſure of the Spirit, ſuch an one as Moſes had, and by virtue of which he lived forty days and nights without eating and drinking; but theſe not having ſuch a meaſure of the Spirit, were obliged to eat and drink to ſupport nature, as in the next clauſe: but it is rather to be underſtood of the hand of God; he did not inflict any diſeaſe or death upon them on their ſight of him, it being a notion that no man could ſee God and live; but theſe men did live, not only Moſes, and Aaron and his two ſons, but the ſeventy elders, who were the principal and choiceſt perſons among the children of Iſrael; wherefore the Targum of Jonathan wrongly reſtrains this to Nadab and Abihu: alſo they ſaw God, and did eat and drink; though they ſaw God, they continued alive and well, and in good health, of which their eating and drinking were a ſign and evidence; or they ate, as Abendana, the ſacrifices of the peace-offerings, which were uſually eaten by the prieſts and the people; and as a feaſt was common at covenant-making, here was a feaſt kept by the elders, the repreſentatives of the people, when they covenanted with God. Onkelos favours this ſenſe, "and they rejoiced in their ſacrifices, which "were accepted with good-will, as if they had ate "and drank."

℣. 12. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, come up to me into the mount, &c.] For as yet Moſes was not got up to the top of the mount, only up ſome part of it with the elders, though at ſome diſtance from the people: but now he is bid to come up higher: and be there; continue there, as he did ſix days after this: and I will give thee tables of ſtone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; that is, the law of the ten commandments, which were written on tables of ſtone by the Lord himſelf; he had already ſpoken them in the hearing of the people, but now he had wrote them, and that in tables of ſtone; partly for the duration of them, and partly to repreſent the hardneſs of the hearts of the Iſraelites, the ſtubborneſs of their wills to comply with his law, their contumacy and obſtinate perſiſtence in diſobedience to it: that thou mayeſt teach them; theſe being in hand and ſight, he would have an opportunity of explaining them to them, and inculcating them on their minds, and preſſing them to yield an obedience to them.

℣. 13. And Moſes roſe up, and his miniſter Joſhua, &c.] In order to go up higher on the mount. Joſhua and he only was to go up higher with him, though not to the top of the mount, at leaſt not into the cloud upon it, as Moſes did. Joſhua was his his miniſter or ſervant, and waited upon him whereever he went, and was to be his ſucceſſor; and therefore for his encouragement, and to qualify him the better for it, he was indulged with a ſight and knowledge of things others were not; for by his not knowing any thing of the idolatry of the golden calf, ch. xxxii. 17, 18. it appears that he was on ſome part of the mount all the 40 days and 40 nights; and if it ſhould be aſked, whether he faſted all that time, or if he did not, how he was provided with food and drink? it may be replied, that there is no neceſſity to ſuppoſe that he faſted all that time; and it is eaſy to imagine how he was ſupplied, for the manna fell round about the mountain, of which he might gather and eat day by day, as Aben Ezra obſerves; and there was a brook which deſcended out of the mount, from whence he might have water, Deut. ix. 19. and Moſes went up into the mount of God; mount Sinai, where he had formerly appeared to him in a buſh, and now had deſcended on it to give the law, and was ſtill upon it, where his glory was ſeen; and therefore might, with great propriety, be called the mount of God; to the top of which Moſes was preparing to go, but before he went gave the following inſtructions.

[w] Saadiah Gaon in Aben Ezra, & R. Jonah in Ben Melech in loc.

[x] De Gemmis, c. 2.

℣. 14. And he ſaid unto the elders, &c.] The 70 elders which were ſelected out of the ſeveral tribes of Iſrael, and now about to return to the camp: tarry ye here for us; meaning himſelf and Joſhua, who was going with him: until we come again unto you; perhaps Moſes might not know how long his ſtay would be at the top of the mount, but ſuppoſed it would be ſome time by the proviſion he makes for hearing and adjuſting caſes in his abſence: and behold, Aaron and Hur are with you; Hur is not mentioned before, as being with Moſes and the reſt; but doubtleſs he was, at leaſt it is highly probable he was one of the 70 elders; of him ſee more in the note on ch. xvii. 10. if any man have any matters to do; any caſes to be conſidered, any cauſe to be tried in difference between him and another man, and which cannot be determined by the inferior judges, is too difficult for them to take in hand: let him come unto them; bring his caſe before them, and have their advice and opinion, and be determined by them.

℣. 15. And Moſes went up into the mount, &c.] To the top of it, and as it ſeems alone, leaving Joſhua behind in a lower part of the mountain: and a cloud covered the mount; in which cloud Jehovah was.

℣. 16. And the glory of the Lord abode upon mount Sinai, &c.] The divine Shekinah or majeſty, ſome viſible token of it, an exceeding great brightneſs and ſplendor: and the cloud covered it ſix days; either the glory of the Lord, ſo that it could not be ſeen as it had been; or the mount, as Jarchi; but that is obſerved before, unleſs repeated for the ſake of the time it covered it, ſix days; or him, Moſes, as ſome in Jarchi, who for ſix days together was covered with a thick cloud, ſo that he was not ſeen by any whilſt on the mountain; and thus he remained, until he was admitted into the immediate preſence of God, for which he was now preparing: what he did, or was made known to him during this time, is not ſaid; it is probable his thoughts were employed about the glory and greatneſs of the divine Being; and as he was abſtracted from earthly men and things, he was more at leiſure to contemplate on divine and heavenly things, and ſo was more fitted for an intercourſe with God, and had more courage and preſence of mind to enter into it: and on the ſeventh day he called unto Moſes out of the midſt of the cloud; in which the glory of God was, and which ſeems to favour the firſt ſenſe of the preceding clauſe, that it was the glory of God the cloud covered.

℣. 17. And the ſight of the glory of God was like devouring fire, on the top of the mount, &c.] For when God ſpoke out of the cloud, the glory of the Lord flaſhed out like devouring fire; it was not devouring fire, but it was like it; it was like a great blaze of fire, which conſumes all that is in its way; it was ſuch a large body of light, and ſo clear and bright, that it looked like devouring flames of fire; and being upon the top of the mount was very viſible, and ſeen at a great diſtance in the eyes of the children of Iſrael throughout their camp.

℣. 18. And Moſes went into the midſt of the cloud, &c.] Where the glory of God was, and he muſt at this time be endowed with more than ordinary courage to enter into it, when the glory of the Lord flaſhed out of it like flames of fire; yet being called of God he was not intimidated, but with great ſerenity and compoſure of mind, as may be thought, he went into the preſence-chamber of the moſt High, to hear what he had to ſay unto him: and gat him up into the mount; that is, he went into the cloud, after he had aſcended the ſummit of the mount; for it cannot be ſuppoſed that he firſt went into the cloud, and then got himſelf up to the mount, which yet our verſion, if not carefully guarded againſt, may lead unto: and Moſes was in the mount forty days and forty nights; without eating or drinking; and juſt ſuch a term of time Chriſt faſted in the wilderneſs; it is probable that the ſix days before mentioned are to be reckoned part of thoſe forty days, ſince it is not ſaid that he was in the cloud forty days and forty nights, but in the mount. The Targum of Jonathan adds, "learning the words of the law from the mouth of the "Holy One, whoſe name is to be praiſed." Living without food ſo long muſt be aſcribed to a miracle; for Hippocrates[y], that great phyſician, ſays, that "thoſe who remain without food ſeven days, "thenceforward, if they would, cannot receive any "ſupport from food, becauſe then the belly will "not admit of any;" and gives this reaſon for it, becauſe the faſting inteſtine coheres, or is wrinkled.

[y] Lib. de Carn. in fine, apud Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 2. p. 196.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXV.

IN this chapter an order is given for a free will-offering towards various things for the worſhip and ſervice of God, and the materials to be offered, which would be uſeful and acceptable are mentioned particularly, ℣. 1—7. as alſo another order to build a ſanctuary for God, after a model that he would give, ℣. 8, 9. and an ark to put in the law on tables of ſtone, the faſhion of which, and the various things belonging to it are deſcribed, ℣. 10—16. and a mercy-ſeat with cherubim on it to be ſet over the ark, where the Lord promiſes to meet Moſes and commune with him, ℣. 17—22. and a table with various appurtenances to it to place the ſhew-bread on, ℣. 23—30. and a candleſtick of gold, whoſe parts are deſcribed, and all the inſtruments relative to it, ℣. 31—40.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] When on the mount, and in the midſt of the cloud with him: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] That is, when he ſhould go down from the mountain to the camp: that they bring me an offering; the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan call it a ſeparation; ſomething ſeparated from their ſubſtance, and devoted to the ſervice of God, and for the uſe of the ſanctuary afterwards to be built: of every man that giveth it willingly, with his heart, ye ſhall take my offering; or take what was offered to him, be it more or leſs, and of whatſoever perſon, high and low, rich and poor, ſo be it, it is freely given from the heart; not grudgingly or through force, as the Targum of Jonathan adds; and in ſuch manner did David and his people many hundreds of years after this offer towards building of the temple, and the veſſels belonging to that, ſee 1 Chron. xxix. 6—14. according to the Jewiſh writers, none but the children of Iſrael were to offer to this ſervice, and only ſuch who knew what they did; for thus they criticiſe on the words, "ſpeak unto the chil-" dren of Iſrael: this excepts an heathen and an "idolater; of every man; this excludes a little one; "that giveth it willingly with his heart; this ex-"empts a deaf and dumb man, and a fool, be-"cauſe they have no knowledge to offer freely [z]:" however, this we may learn from hence, that whatever we do for the worſhip and ſervice of God, we ſhould do it freely, chearfully, and cordially; for God loves a chearful giver; and if this was required under the legal diſpenſation, it is much more neceſſary and obligatory under the goſpel-diſpenſation, and more ſuitable to it where all things are done and given freely of God, and ſuch large bleſſings of grace are liberally beſtowed by him on perſons undeſerving.

℣. 3. And this is the offering which ye ſhall take of them, &c.] That is, ſome one or other of the following things were to be taken of each of them that had a heart, and it was in the power of their hands to give; it was not expected that ſomething of each of theſe ſhould be had of every one, but every man was to give, and it was to be received of him, what of theſe would ſuit him beſt to beſtow, ſome one thing, ſome another, as they were poſſeſſed of, and had a heart to give; and for which ſervice many of them were abundantly ſupplied with what they had brought out of Egypt; and as it was the Lord that gave them favour in the eyes of the Egyptians to lend or give them the riches they had, they were under the greater obligation to part with ſomewhat of it freely for his ſervice; and eſpecially, as it would be to the ſpiritual profit and advantage both of them and theirs: gold and ſilver, and braſs; gold, for thoſe things that were to be made of gold; as the mercy-ſeat and cherubim, the candleſtick, &c. or were covered with it, as the ark, the ſhew-bread table, and other things; and ſilver, for thoſe that were made of that, as the ſilver ſockets to the boards of the tabernacle, the ſilver trumpets, &c. and braſs for the altar of burnt-offering, its pans, ſhovels, baſons, rings, and ſtaves, and other things: Aben Ezra rightly obſerves, that no mention is made of iron, there being no uſe of that for any thing in the tabernacle to be made of it; as alſo, there was not in the temple of Solomon, and where there was not ſo much as a tool of iron heard in it while it was building, 1 Kings vi. 7. it may be, becauſe inſtruments of war, ſlaughtering weapons, were made of iron; and to ſhew that God is the God of peace in his ſanctuary, and ſo in all the churches: gold and ſilver veſſels the Iſraelites borrowed or begged of the Egyptians, and brought them with them when they came out of Egypt, ch. xi. 2. and xii. 35.

℣. 4. And blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, &c.] The Jewiſh doctors are much divided about the ſenſe of the words ſo rendered by us; ſome will have one colour, and ſome another meant; but, according to thoſe learned men, who have taken much pains in ſearching into the meaning of them, as Bochart and Braunius, it appears that our verſion of them is righteſt; and by theſe we are not to underſtand the colour themſelves, which could not be brought, nor even the materials for dying them are intended; but wool, or clothes, either ſilken or linen of thoſe colours: of the former the apoſtle has taught us to expound them, Heb. ix. 19. and ſo Jarchi interprets them, of wool thus dyed, and Joſephus [a] alſo; which was made up into yarn and wove, and was much uſed in the garments of the prieſts, in the curtains of the tabernacle, and in the veil between the holy and the moſt holy place: and fine linen; the beſt of which was made in Egypt only, as Aben Ezra ſays, and much wore there, eſpecially by the prieſts; and they had ſuch an abundance of it that they traded to other nations with it, ſee Iſ. xix. 9. Ezek. xxvii. 7. and of which the Iſraelites might bring a conſiderable quantity with them out of Egypt: and goats hair; though the word hair is not in the text, it is rightly ſupplied, as it is by the Septuagint verſion, and others, for not goats themſelves, but their hair muſt be meant; of this the curtains for the covering of the tabernacle were made: Jarchi interprets it the down of goats, the ſhort, ſmall, fine hair that grows under the other.

℣. 5. And rams ſkins dyed red, &c.] Of theſe were made a covering for the tent or tabernacle: and badgers ſkins; which were for the ſame uſe: the Septuagint verſion calls them hyacinth or blue ſkins; according to which, they ſeem to be the rams ſkins dyed blue; and ſo Joſephus [b] ſeems to have [z] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Trumot, c. 1. §. 1.

[a] Antiqu. l. 3. c. 6. §. 1. [b] Ut ſupra.

have understood it; and it is much questionable, whether the same creature is meant we call the badger, since that with the Israelites was an unclean creature; nor is its skin made use of for shoes, or well could be, as the skin of this creature is said to be, Ezek. xvi. 10. Jarchi says it was a kind of beast only at that time; and Aben Ezra says, it was known in those days but not now: and shittim-wood; supposed by the Jewish writers, as Kimchi[c], and Ben Melech from him, to be the best and most excellent kind of cedar: Aben Ezra conjectures, and he delivers it but as a conjecture, that there might be near mount Sinai, a forest of shittim trees; and whilst the Israelites were there they cut them down for booths, which they might carry with them when they removed from thence; for, he says, Moses did not speak of the tabernacle till after the day of atonement: and since Acacia, is by much the largest, and the most common tree of the deserts of Arabia, as doctor Shaw[d] observes, he thinks there is some reason to conjecture, that the shittim wood, whereof the several utensils of the tabernacle, &c. were made, was the wood of Acacia: and long ago it was the opinion of Cordus[e], that the shittim wood was the Acacia of Dioscorides; and it is the same with the Senton or Santon of the Arabians, which is the Egyptian thorn that grows in the wilderness, of which Herodotus[f] says, they cut wood of two cubits out of it, and make ships of burden of it: this is said to grow in the parts of Egypt, at a distance from the sea; in the mountains of Sinai, at the Red Sea, about Suez, in the barren wilderness; which circumstances seem to determine it to be the shittim wood[g]: some places where it might grow in plenty seem to have had their names from it, see Numb. xxv. 1. and xxxiii. 49. Joel iii. 18.

℣. 6. Oil for the light, &c.] For the light of the lamps in the candlestick; this was oil-olive, as the Targum of Jonathan, and so Jarchi, see ch. xxvii. 20. spices for anointing oil; for the anointing of Aaron and his sons, and the tabernacle and its vessels, such as pure myrrh, sweet cinamon, sweet calamus, and cassia: and for sweet incense; as stacte, onycha, and galbanum; from whence they had this oil and these spices it is not easy to say, unless they brought them out of Egypt with them; which is likely, since the deserts of Arabia could not furnish them with them.

℣. 7. Onyx-stones &c.] So called from their likeness to the nail of a man's finger: the Targum of Onkelos calls them stones of beryl; and the Targum of Jonathan gems of beryl; and the Septuagint version, stones of Sardius; and some take them to be the Sardonyx stones, which have a likeness both to the Onyx and to the Sardius: and stones to be set in the ephod, and in the breast-plate; two onyx stones were set in the ephod, one of the garments of the high-priest, and an onyx stone with eleven other precious stones, were set in the breast-plate of the high priest: these stones were doubtless among the jewels set in gold and silver the Israelites had of the Egyptians, and brought with them out of Egypt.

℣. 8. And let them make me a sanctuary, &c.] An holy place to dwell in, and so called from his dwelling in it, as follows: that I may dwell amongst them; in the midst of them, where the tabernacle was always placed; and there he dwelt as their king and their God, to whom they might have recourse on all occasions, and whom they should serve and worship: this sanctuary was to be made of many of the materials before-mentioned by the Israelites, whom Moses should employ, and to whom he should give directions for the making it, according to the pattern shewed him: and so the Jewish writers interpret, make me, or to me, i. e. of mine, of mine holy things, things sanctified and separated to his use; and they bring this passage to prove that the workmen in the temple were to be paid only out of the holy things, or money given for the repair of it[h]: this was a type of the human nature of Christ, the true sanctuary and tabernacle which God pitched and not man, and in which the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily; and of the church of God, the temple of the living God, among whom he walks, and with whom he dwells, Heb. viii. 2. 2 Cor. vi. 16.

℣. 9. According to all that I shew thee, &c.] That is, the sanctuary was to be made in all respects exactly according to the view of it that Moses now had upon the mount from God, and which he was to communicate to the workmen for their instruction and direction: after the pattern of the tabernacle, and of the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it: and by the pattern is not meant an idea of it, impressed on the mind of Moses, or a picture of it which was shewn him, but a little edifice representing it in all its parts, a perfect model of it: and so Maimonides[i] says, Tabnith, the word here used, signifies the structure and disposition of any thing, i. e. the form of it in a foursquare, in roundness, in a triangle, or in any of the like figures, see Heb. viii. 5. and so David had, by the spirit, a pattern of the temple, and which he gave to his son Solomon, to build according to it, 1 Chron. xxviii. 11, 12, 19.

℣. 10. And they shall make an ark of shittim-wood, &c.] A chest or coffer to put things into, and into this were to be put the two tables of stone on which the law was written, and it was to be made of the wood before mentioned, ℣. 5. this was a very eminent type of Christ, with whom the name of an ark, chest, or coffer where treasure lies, agrees; for the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, and the riches of grace, even all the fulness of it, lie in him; and all the epithets of this ark are suitable to him, as when it is called the ark of God, the ark of his strength, the glory of God, the face of God, Jehovah, and God himself, the holy ark, and ark of the covenant: and its being made of shittim-wood, which is an incorruptible wood, a wood that rots not, by which the Septuagint version here, and in ℣. 5. and elsewhere render it, may denote the duration of Christ in his person, and the natures united in it; in his divine nature from everlasting to everlasting, he is God; in his human nature, he saw no corruption, and though he died he lived again, and lives for evermore; in his offices, as mediator, redeemer, saviour, prophet, priest, and king, he abideth for ever; and in his grace and the fulness of it, which, like himself, is the same to-day, yesterday, and for ever: two cubits and a half shall be the length thereof, and a cubit and a half the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof; if this cubit was a common cubit, consisting of a foot and a half or 18 inches, then the length of this this ark was 45 inches, and its breadth and heighth 27 each: according to doctor Cumberland [k], the Egyptian and Jewish cubit was above 21 inches, and then the ark must be 53 inches long or more, and 32 and three quarters broad and high, or more: and Josephus [l] says, the length of it was five spans, and the breadth and height of it three spans each.

[c] Sepher Shoraſh. rad. שוט [d] Travels, p. 144. Ed. 2. [e] Apud Druſ. Heb. Adag. Decur. 3. Adag. 4. [f] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c 96. [g] Vid. Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 2. p. 204. [h] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Temurah, c. 7. §. 1. [i] Moreh Nevochim, par. 1. c. 3.

℣. 11. And thou shalt overlay it with pure gold, &c.] Not gild it, but put a plate of pure gold over it: within and without shalt thou overlay it; so that nothing of the wood could be seen: this may denote the glory of Christ in both his natures, divine and human, the riches of his person and office, which are unsearchable and durable, and his preciousness to them that believe, Cant. v. 10—16. and shalt make upon it a crown of gold round about; or a cornish of pure gold upon it, every way, which was a square on which the mercy-seat was set; which may point at the honour and glory of Christ, especially in his kingly office, who has indeed on his head many crowns; one a crown of pure gold, his divine Father has set upon him; another which the church has crowned him with, and indeed both angels and saints cast their crowns at his feet, and set the crown on his head, or give him the glory of all they have and are.

℣. 12. And thou shalt cast four rings of gold for it, &c.] For which a mould was to be made, and the gold being melted, was poured into it, and so the rings were fashioned: and put them in the corners thereof; or, in its feet, as Aben Ezra, though Jarchi says, it had no feet; but as the word used so signifies always, it is more probable it had feet; and the rather, that it might not stand upon the ground, but on feet, as chests and coffers usually do: and two rings shall be in the one side of it, and two rings in the other side of it; Jarchi says, at the upper corners, near the mercy-seat were they placed, two on one side and two on the other, at the breadth of the ark; but it is more likely they were fixed in the lower part of it, as Ramban, at the feet of it; and in the length of the ark, as Josephus writes [m].

℣. 13. And thou shalt make staves of shittim-wood, &c.] Of the same wood the ark was made of, see ℣. 5, 10. and overlay them with gold; cover them with plates of gold, so that they appeared to be all of gold, the wood being not to be seen.

℣. 14. And thou shalt put the staves into the rings by the sides of the ark, &c.] This shews for what use the rings were; namely, to put the staves into them; and the use of the staves thus put was, that the ark might be borne with them; which staves overlayed with gold, and put into golden rings, figured the ministers of Christ, enriched with the gifts and graces of his spirit, and possessed of the truths of the gospel, more precious than gold and silver; who bear the name of Christ, and carry his gospel into the several parts of the world.

℣. 15. The staves shall be in the rings of the ark, &c.] Not only be put into them, but remain in them, yea, always: they shall not be taken from it; or, as the Septuagint version is, be immoveable; so that those gold rings in the ark may signify the churches of Christ, which are instrumental to bear his name, and spread his truth in the world, comparable to rings for their circular form, being the purest and most perfect bodies of men on earth, and to gold rings for their worth and value, preciousness, excellency, and duration; and with whom the ministers of the gospel, comparable to golden staves, are always to be, and never depart from them: or else they may signify the perfect and precious doctrines of Christ, in which his ministers are always to be; either in meditation on them, or in preaching of them, and by which they are always to abide, see 1 Tim. iv. 15. 16.

℣. 16. And thou shalt put into the ark the testimony that I shall give thee.] Which was the principal use of it: by the testimony is meant, the law, written on two tables of stone; so called, because it was a testification of the mind and will of God, what he would have done or omitted; and as the Israelites had declared their approbation of it, and assent unto it, and had promised obedience to it, therefore should they transgress it, it would be a testimony against them: now this was put into the ark and preserved there, see Deut. x. 1—5. which may signify that the law was in the heart of Christ, and which he undertook to fulfil, and with pleasure did it; that he is become the fulfilling end of the law for righteousness to them that believe in him; and that it remains with him as a rule of walk and conversation to his people, so far as it is of a moral, holy, and spiritual nature.

℣. 17. And thou shalt make a mercy-seat of pure gold, &c.] Or covering [n]; so Jarchi and Aben Ezra; for so the word properly signifies; and what is meant was no more than a cover of the ark, which was open at the top, and this was the lid of it, and exactly answered to it, as appears by the dimensions afterwards given of it; and because the root of this word in one form signifies to propitiate or make atonement, some render it, at the propitiatory or propitiation [o]; which is favoured by the apostle in Heb. ix. 5. and to which he seems to refer, Rom. iii. 25. and the rather, since God is represented sitting on this, as shewing himself propitious and well pleased with men, by his communing with them from hence; the Septuagint version takes in both senses, rendering it the propitiatory covering [p]: this being called by what name it will, was typical of Christ; he is the seat of mercy, or, as it is in the new testament expressed, the throne of grace; whereon, or, in whom God shews himself to be gracious and merciful to the children of men; all the stores of mercy are in him, and all the vessels of mercy are put into his hands; the mercy of God is displayed in the mission of him as a saviour, and is glorified by him in a way consistent with his justice and holiness; thro' him only special mercy is communicated to sinful men, to whom God is only merciful in Christ: and Christ himself is all mercy to his people; his ways of old were mercy and truth, and all his works, especially his great work of redemption, are done in mercy and pity to them; he shews himself to be merciful to them, by sympathizing with them, and supporting them under all their temptations and afflictions, in granting them all the necessary supplies of [k] Of Scripture Weights and Measures, ch. 2. p. 34. 56.

[l] Antiq. l. 3. c. 6. §. 5.
[m] Ibid.
[n] כפרת operiorium, Montanus; tegmen sive operimentum, Vatablus; operculum, Piscator. V. L. Pagninus, Munster, Tigurine version. Tremellius.
[o] Propitiatorium,
[p] ιλαστηριον επιθεμα Sept. operculum propitiatorium, Junius &

of grace here, and by beſtowing eternal life on them hereafter: he is their covering, the covering of their perſons by his righteouſneſs, imputed to them, and of their ſins, by his blood ſhed for them, and ſprinkled on them, and of the law, by his ſatisfaction for the tranſgreſſions of it; whereby they are ſecured from the avenging juſtice of God, and wrath to come: and he is the propitiation or propitiatory, who has made atonement and reconciliation for ſin; and in and through whom God ſhews himſelf propitious to his people, he being pacified, his wrath appeaſed, and his juſtice ſatisfied by his obedience and ſufferings: and this mercy-ſeat being of pure gold, without any allay or mixture in it, may denote the purity of Chriſt's obedience, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice in the compleatneſs of ſalvation by him, without any works of righteouſneſs of men; the worth and excellency of Chriſt, and of theſe bleſſings of his, and the preciouſneſs of his blood, and the continued virtue and efficacy of it, and of his righteouſneſs and ſacrifice, by which the propitiation is made: two cubits and a half ſhall be the length thereof, and a cubit and a half the breadth thereof: which are exactly the dimenſions of the ark, to which this was a lid or cover, ſee ℣. 10. in the myſtical ſenſe it intimates, that Chriſt in his nature, obedience, ſufferings, and death, is the end of the law for righteouſneſs, which is entirely commenſurate, and anſwers to all its demands; his holy nature is anſwerable to the holineſs and ſpirituality of the law; his righteouſneſs to all that obedience it requires, and his ſufferings and death to the penalty of it; ſo that through Chriſt, we have a righteouſneſs to juſtify us before God, as long and as broad as the law is, though the commandment is exceeding broad, Pſ. cxix. 96. Aben Ezra obſerves, that there is no mention made of the thickneſs of the mercy-ſeat; and the ſame Jarchi takes notice of, but adds, that according to their Rabbins, it was an hand's breadth, and the Targum of Jonathan ſays, "and its thick-"neſs an hand's breadth."

℣. 18. And thou ſhalt make two cherubim of gold, &c.] Which ſome take to be in the form of birds, and others, of winged animals, ſuch as the like were never ſeen, ſo Joſephus; the Jews commonly ſuppoſe, they were in the form of young men, which they obſerve the word ſignifies in the Chaldee language; others, that they were in the form of an ox, the face of an ox and a cherub being the ſame Ezek. i. 10. and x. 14. and indeed their form is beſt diſcerned from the account of them in Ezekiel, and in the Revelation, and from the latter we beſt learn what they were; they were hieroglyphics or emblems, not of the two teſtaments, as many of the ancients, nor of the angels, ſince they are diſtinguiſhed from them, much leſs of the trinity of perſons in the godhead; but either of the ſaints and true believers in Chriſt in common, of both diſpenſations, legal and evangelical, and ſo ſignified by the number two; and being made of gold may denote their excellency, worth, and value in the eſteem of Chriſt; for, the precious ſons of Sion, are comparable to fine gold for their preciouſneſs, ſolidity, and duration, as well as for their ſincerity and ſimplicity; or rather, of the miniſters of the word in particular; and theſe may be ſignified by two, and point at the prophets of the old teſtament and the apoſtles of the new; and the miniſters of the word in all ages, and particularly during the reign of antichriſt, are called the two witneſſes that propheſy in ſackcloth; and being ſaid to be of gold, may reſpect the grace of God beſtowed on them, comparable to gold, the rich gifts of the Spirit of God they are furniſhed with, as well as the precious truths of the goſpel committed to their truſt: of beaten work ſhalt thou make them, in the two ends of the mercy-ſeat; not of gold melted and poured into a mould, and ſo received the form of the cherubim; nor were they firſt made by themſelves, and then placed at the two ends of the mercy-ſeat, and ſoldered to it; but they were made of the ſame maſs of gold with the mercy-ſeat, and beaten out of it with an hammer, and planiſhed and ſmoothed, and ſo wrought up into this form, as appears by the following verſe; and may denote the union of believers to Chriſt, who are one body and one ſpirit with him; and the union of the old and new teſtament-churches in him, and who are but one church, one body, of which he is the head; and as he is the foundation of the apoſtles or prophets, on whom they are laid, he is the corner ſtone in which they are united; and ſo it may likewiſe ſignify the nearneſs of the miniſters of the word to Chriſt, their dependance on him, and their partaking of the ſame gifts and graces of his Spirit, only in meaſure, being made by him able miniſters of the goſpel.

℣. 19. And make one cherub on the one end, and the other cherub on the other end, &c.] The ſituation of the cherubim is particularly explained, leſt, as Jarchi obſerves, it ſhould be thought that there were two at both ends of the mercy-ſeat; whereas there were only one at one end, and another at the other, oppoſite to each other, and both pointing to the mercy-ſeat; which may expreſs the ſituation and office of the miniſters of the word under each diſpenſation, who are ſo placed as to derive all their gifts and graces from Chriſt, and to point him out unto the ſons of men as the only way of ſalvation, the only propitiation for ſin, and through whom alone, grace and mercy are to be had: even of the mercy-ſeat ſhall ye make the cherubim on the two ends thereof; this is not ſo much intended the more to inculcate and confirm the ſituation of the cherubim, as more fully to explain the matter of which they were made; for it was of or out of the mercy-ſeat that they were made, at the two ends of it; that is, they were made not only of the ſame kind of metal with that, but out of the ſame maſs or lump of gold that was; a lid of gold being made commenſurate to the ark, what remained above that meaſure, at the ends of it, were beaten and formed into two cherubim.

℣. 20. And the cherubim ſhall ſtretch forth their wings on high, &c.] From whence it appears they were in the form of winged creatures, as the Seraphim in Iſaiah's viſion, and the living creatures in thoſe of Ezekiel and John; and their wings did not hang down by them, or on the ſide of them, but were ſtretched out upwards towards the heaven above their heads; denoting the readineſs, agility and ſwiftneſs of the miniſters of the word to do the work and will of Chriſt, as well as their expectation of all the ſupplies of gifts and grace from him to enable them to do it: covering the mercy-ſeat with their wings; which reached each other; though, as Jarchi [q] ſays, between them and the mercy-ſeat there was a hollow of ten hands breadth; ſo high were they ſtretched upwards, tho' they met each other: and their faces ſhall look one to another; and which is expreſſive of the harmony, concord concord and agreement of the true and faithful miniſters of Chriſt one with another; who all agree in preaching Chriſt and him crucified, and in the ſeveral momentous and important doctrines of the goſpel: towards the mercy-ſeat ſhall the faces of the cherubim be; as before obſerved, it may denote their directing ſouls to Chriſt as the only way of ſalvation, keeping always in all their miniſtrations this great truth in view, atonement and ſatisfaction by the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt, and ſalvation alone by him; which they make the rule of their miniſtry, and from which they never ſwerve, taking care not to deliver any thing contrary to it, or which may ſerve to caſt a veil over it.

[q] Ex T. Bab. Succah, fol. 5. 2. Vid Gloſſ. in Ib.

ver. 21. And thou ſhalt put the mercy-ſeat above upon the ark, &c.] Over it, as a covering for it: this ſituation of the mercy-ſeat above the ark, where the law was, ſignifies, that there is no mercy but in a way of righteouſneſs, or of ſatisfaction to the law of God, and in a conſiſtence with the honour of it; and the cherubim over the mercy-ſeat making a throne for the majeſty of God, in which he ſat, and the ark below a kind of footſtool for him, ſhews, that Chriſt, the mercy-ſeat and propitiatory, ſtands between God and his law, and is the mediator between God, and men the tranſgreſſors of that law, and by fulfilling it has covered the ſins of his people, which are violations of it; and being above it, and having magnified and made it honourable, is able to ſuppreſs its charges and accuſations, and ſecure from its curſe and condemnation: and in the ark thou ſhalt put the teſtimony that I ſhall give thee; or after thou ſhalt put in the ark, &c. [r] as the particle vau is ſometimes uſed; the ſenſe is, that then the mercy-ſeat ſhould be put above, and upon the ark, as the covering of it, after the law, or the two tables of teſtimony were put into it; for then it was covered, and not to be opened any more; ſee Exod. xl. 20.

ver. 22. And there I will meet with thee, &c.] With Moſes, and ſo with the high-prieſt in after-times, when he ſhould enter into the holy of holies, and with the people of God as repreſented by him, when he ſhould go in and inquire for them of the Lord: and I will commune with thee from above the mercy-ſeat, from between the two cherubim; converſe with him and them about whatſoever they ſhould apply unto him for, theſe being the ſymbols of the divine preſence: hence the Lord is frequently deſcribed, as dwelling between the cherubim which are upon the ark of the teſtimony; that is, which cherubim are upon it, being on the mercy-ſeat, which was the cover of it; or rather which is upon [s], which mercy-ſeat is upon the ark of the teſtimony, as it properly was; and here the Lord promiſes to commune of all things which I ſhall give thee in commandment unto the children of Iſrael; what they ſhall do, reſpecting thoſe things which by Moſes, or the high-prieſt, they ſhould inquire the mind and will of God about: this may ſignify that the way to communion with God lies through Chriſt, the mercy-ſeat and propitiation, through his blood and righteouſneſs, through the veil, that is to ſay, his fleſh; and the encouragement to it is from him, our great high-prieſt, and from his propitiatory ſacrifice; and the enjoyment of it is through him; our fellowſhip is with the Father, and his Son Jeſus Chriſt; God ſpeaks to us by him, and reveals himſelf in him.

ver. 23. Thou ſhalt alſo make a table of ſhittim-wood, &c.] As the ſanctuary or tabernacle was an houſe for God to dwell in, he would have the proper furniture of an houſe, as a table, candleſtick, &c. This table was to be in the ſame place with the ark and mercy-ſeat; they were ſet in the holy of holies, where there were nothing elſe; but this in the holy place, on the north-ſide of it, ch. xxvi. 35. and xl. 22. its principal uſe was to ſet the ſhew-bread on, as after-mentioned, and was typical of Chriſt, and communion with him, both in this life, and that to come. There is the table of the Lord, to which his people are now admitted, where he ſits down with them, and they with him, to have fellowſhip with him in the miniſtration of the word and ordinances, of which he is the ſum and ſubſtance; and this is very deſirable and delightful, and an inſtance of his condeſcending grace, Cant. i. 12. and he will have a table in his kingdom hereafter, where his ſaints ſhall eat and drink with him, in which their chief happineſs will conſiſt, Luke xxii. 30. This table may be conſidered as typical of Chriſt himſelf, for he is both table and proviſions, and every thing to his people; and of him in both his natures; in his human nature, it being made of ſhittim-wood, incorruptible; for though Chriſt died in that nature, yet he ſaw no corruption, he roſe again, and lives for evermore; in his divine nature, by the gold it was covered with: two cubits ſhall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof, and a cubit and an half the height thereof; it was two Jewiſh ſquare cubits in length, which are about ſix Engliſh ſquare feet and above half, viz. ninety-four inches, according to biſhop Cumberland [t]. It was neither ſo long nor ſo broad as the ark by half a cubit, but was of the ſame height with it, being about 32 inches high and three quarters, according to the Jewiſh and Egyptian cubit, which was about 21 inches and more, and was a proper height for a table; and this meaſure, no doubt, takes in the thickneſs of the table, and the height of the ſeat, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra obſerve.

ver. 24. And thou ſhalt overlay it with pure gold, &c.] Cover it with a plate of gold, ſo that the wood was not ſeen; which may denote either the excellency of Chriſt's human nature, being pure and ſpotleſs, and adorned with the grace of the Spirit of God without meaſure; or rather of his divine nature, which is the head of Chriſt, and ſaid to be as the moſt fine gold, for in him dwells all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily: and make thereto a crown of gold round about; that is, on both ſides and at both ends; for though it is called a crown, it was a ſquare, and this was both to ornament the table, and to keep from falling off of it what was ſet upon it. Jarchi ſays, it was a ſign of the crown of the kingdom, for a table ſignifies riches and greatneſs, as they ſay a king's table: and indeed this was the table of the King of kings, who has on his head many crowns, and one muſt be made upon his table.

ver. 25. And thou ſhalt make unto it a border of an hand's breadth round about, &c.] Jarchi ſays, their wiſemen are divided about this; ſome ſay it was above, round about the table; others ſay it was below, fixed from foot to foot at the four corners of the table, and the board of the table lay upon the border: and thou ſhalt make a golden crown to the border thereof round about; this was not the ſame ſpoke of in the former verſe, but another; that was above, and upon the table, this below and under it; or rather that was, as it may be better expreſſed, [r] ואל הארן poſtquam in arca, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius. Vid. Nold. Concord. Ebr. part. p. 290.

[s] אשר על quod eſt, Vatablus. [t] Ut ſupra.

ed, a lip, rim or border, that went round within the table [u]; and this crown ſurrounded that on the edge of it.

ver. 26. And thou ſhalt make for it four rings of gold, &c.] As the ark had, and for the ſame uſe as the rings of that were, though whether caſt, as they were, is not ſaid: and put the rings in the four corners that are on the four feet thereof; as there were four feet at the four corners of the table, to each foot a ring was faſtened; the uſe of theſe follows.

ver. 27. Over-againſt the border, &c.] Or under it, as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions. Jarchi ſays the rings were fixed to the feet, over-againſt the top of the border: ſhall the rings be for placing of the ſtaves to bear the table; into theſe rings ſtaves were to be put, to carry the table from place to place, when it was neceſſary, as while they were in the wilderneſs, and before the tabernacle had a fixed ſettled place for it; for wherever the tabernacle was carried, the ark and the table were alſo: where the church of Chriſt is, there he is, and there are the word and ordinances; and which are ſometimes moved from place to place, as from the land of Judea into the Gentile world, from the eaſtern part of the world to the more northern; and that by the miniſters of the word, who bear the name, and carry the Goſpel of Chriſt into the ſeveral parts of the world, as this table was bore by the Levites, Numb. iv. 7, 8, 15.

ver. 28. And thou ſhalt make the ſtaves of ſhittim-wood, and overlay them with gold, &c.] In like manner as the ſtaves for the ark, and which were made of the ſame wood: that the table may be born with them; when moved from one place to another; theſe ſtaves did not remain in the rings, as the ſtaves for the ark did; but, as Joſephus ſays [w], were taken out, becauſe they otherwiſe would have been in the way of the prieſts, who came every week to it, to ſet the ſhew-bread on; and theſe were put in only when they carried it from place to place, as appears from Numb. iv. 8.

ver. 29. And thou ſhalt make the diſhes thereof, &c.] On which the ſhew-bread loaves were ſet. Jarchi ſays, they were of the form of the bread, and that there were two ſorts, one of gold, and one of iron; in the iron one the bread was baked, and when they took it out of the oven, they put it into the golden one until the morrow of the ſabbath, when they ſet it in order upon the table; and that form is called Kaarah, which we render a diſh: and the ſpoons thereof; or rather cups; theſe, Jarchi ſays, were cenſers, in which they put the frankincenſe; and there were two of them for the two handfuls of frankincenſe, which they put upon the two rows of ſhew-bread, Lev. xxiv. 7. ſee Numb. vii. 14. Joſephus [x] calls them vials, and ſays, that on the bread were put two golden vials full of frankincenſe: and the covers thereof, and the bowls thereof, to cover withal; the one to cover the bread, and the other to cover the frankincenſe; or all the above ſaid veſſels were to cover the table, and with them all it muſt be pretty well covered with veſſels. The Jews give a different account of theſe two laſt, and of their uſe, which we render covers and bowls; the firſt of theſe Jarchi ſays were like the half of hollow reeds divided to their length, made of gold; and three of them were laid in order on the top of every loaf, ſo that one loaf reſted upon theſe reeds; and they ſeparated between loaf and loaf, ſo that the air could come in between them, and they did not become mouldy; the latter, he ſays, were props like ſtakes of gold ſtanding on the ground, and they were higher than the table, even as high as the rows of bread; and they were forked with five forks, one above another, and the tops (or ends) of the reeds, which were between each loaf, reſted upon theſe forks, that ſo the weight of the upper loaves might not be too heavy for the lower ones, and break them. A like account of them Ben Melech gives, and obſerves, that ſome make the firſt word to ſignify the props, and the ſecond the reeds; and ſo they are interpreted by Maimonides [y]; and, according to the Miſnah [z], the props were 4, and the reeds 28. According to the Septuagint verſion, theſe were veſſels uſed in libations, or drink-offerings; and the laſt clauſe is rendered in it, with which thou ſhalt pour out; wine or oil, and ſo in ſome other verſions; but it will be difficult to find any uſe for ſuch libations or drink-offerings at this table.

ver. 30. And thou ſhalt ſet upon the table ſhew-bread before me always.] Which conſiſted of 12 cakes or loaves, ſet in two rows upon the table, and ſtood there a whole week, and every ſabbath were renewed; and when the old ones were took away, which were eaten by the prieſts, new ones were ſet, ſo that they were always before the Lord; and being continually before him, were called ſhew-bread, or bread of faces, being always before the face of God. This was a memorial of the goodneſs of God in daily providing bread for the people of Iſrael, and was preſented to him as a thankful acknowledgment of it, and being the ſame they eat at their own tables; and this being eaten by the prieſts, was expreſſive of the communion between God and them, they being gueſts of his, and feeding on the ſame proviſions. This ſhew-bread may be conſidered either as typical of the church and people of God, who are all one bread, 1 Cor. x. 17. theſe pure and unleavened cakes may denote their purity, ſimplicity and ſincerity, being without the leaven of malice and wickedneſs; the number 12, the 12 tribes of Iſrael, the whole ſpiritual Iſrael of God; their being called ſhew-bread, or bread of faces, the preſentation of themſelves to the Lord in public worſhip, and their being ever under the eye and care of God; their being ſet on the table, their ſtanding in Chriſt, and ſecurity by him, who is the foundation of the apoſtles and prophets; and being ſet in rows, their order and harmony; being renewed every ſabbath, the conſtancy of their worſhip, and the ſucceſſion of them in all ages; the frankincenſe put on each row, the acceptance of their perſons and ſervices through the incenſe of Chriſt's mediation; the border round about them, the power of Chriſt around them to keep them from falling: or elſe as typical of Chriſt himſelf, of his being the food of believers, the bread of life: the ſhew-bread of fine flour, may fitly ſignify Chriſt the fineſt of the wheat, the corn of heaven, the bread that comes from thence; its quantity, twelve cakes, the ſufficiency of food with him, bread enough and to ſpare for the whole Iſrael of God; its continuance, the permanency of Chriſt as the food believers have always to feed upon; the frankincenſe on it, the gratefulneſs of Chriſt to ſuch, to whom his fleſh is meat indeed, and his blood drink indeed; and being ſet for prieſts, and only for them, may ſhew, that Chriſt is only food to ſuch who are made prieſts to God: or this may be an emblem emblem of the interceſſion of Chriſt, who is the angel of God's preſence, ever before him, and repreſents the whole Iſrael of God, for whom he intercedes; and his interceſſion is continual, he ever lives to make interceſſion for them, and that is always acceptable to God. The twelve loaves, Joſephus [a] ſays, ſignify the year divided into ſo many months.

I

[u] So R. Sol. Urbin. Ohel Moed, fol. 61. 2. Menachot, c. 11. §. 6. [w] Antiq. l. 3. c. 6. §. 6. [x] Ibid. [y] Piruſh in Miſn. [z] Menachot, Ib.

℣. 31. And thou ſhalt make a candleſtick of pure gold, &c.] Another piece of houſhold furniture, and an uſeful one, eſpecially in a houſe where there are no windows, as there were none in the tabernacle, denoting the darkneſs of the legal diſpenſation, ſee 2 Kings iv. 10. This candleſtick was ſet in the holy place, on the ſouth-ſide of it, over-againſt the ſhew-bread table, ch. xxvi. 35. and xl. 24. and was typical of the church of God; ſo the candleſticks John had a viſion of ſignify ſeven churches, Rev. i. 13, 20. the general uſe of which is, to hold forth light put into it, for it has none of itſelf, but what is put there by Chriſt: and this is not the light of nature and reaſon, nor the law of Moſes, but the goſpel of Chriſt; which where it is ſet, gives light and diſpels darkneſs; is uſeful to walk and work by; does not always burn alike, and will ſhine the brighteſt in the end of the world: this light is put into the candleſtick by Chriſt the fountain of all light, and from whom all light is communicated, particularly the goſpel; and being put there, loſt ſinners are looked up by it, ſtrayed ones are brought back, hypocrites are detected, and ſaints are enlightened, comforted and refreſhed: and this candleſtick being made of pure gold, may denote the worth and value of the church of God, and the members of it, their ſplendor, glory and purity they have from Chriſt, and their duration; and thus the ſeven churches of Aſia are compared to ſeven golden candleſticks, Rev. i. 12. and under the form of a golden candleſtick is the goſpel-church ſet forth in Zech. iv. 2. Joſephus [b] is of opinion, the candleſtick has ſome myſtical meaning in it, it being of 70 parts, as he ſays, refers to the 12 ſigns of the Zodiack, thro' which the ſeven planets take their courſe, whom Milton [c] follows: of beaten work ſhall the candleſtick be made; not of gold melted, and poured into a mould, from whence it might take its form; but it was beaten with an hammer out of an entire maſs of gold, and not the following parts made ſeparately, and then joined: his ſhaft, and his branches, his bowls, his knops, and his flowers ſhall be of the ſame; not only of the ſame metal, but beaten out of the ſame maſs and lump of gold; theſe are the ſeveral parts of the candleſtick: the ſhaft is the trunk and body of the candleſtick, which ſtood in the middle of it, and in which the ſeveral parts united; and may either be typical of Chriſt, who is principal and head of the church, and ſtands in the middle of it, and is the cement of the ſeveral parts of it, and is but one, the one head, Mediator and Saviour; or elſe the church univerſal, of which particular ones are parts: its branches may either ſignify the ſeveral members of churches, who are in Chriſt as branches, and hold forth the word of light; or elſe miniſters of the goſpel, who have their commiſſion and gifts from him, and are held by him as ſtars in his right hand; or elſe particular churches, which are branches of the church univerſal: its bowls, which were to hold oil for the lamps, may denote men of capacity in the churches, full of the gifts and graces of the Spirit, able to teach others alſo: and the knops and flowers were for decoration, and may ſignify the graces of the Spirit with which private members and believers are adorned; or the gifts of the Spirit with which the miniſters of the word are furniſhed, and appear beautiful, publiſhing the glad tidings of ſalvation by Chriſt.

℣. 32. And ſix branches ſhall come out of the ſides of it, &c.] Out of the trunk or ſhaft, being beaten out of it: three branches of the candleſtick out of one ſide, and three branches of the candleſtick out of the other ſide; Jarchi takes what we render the ſhaft, to be the lower part of the candleſtick, from whence three feet went out below; and the branch or cane, for it is in the ſingular number in the preceding verſe, he takes to be the middle branch or trunk, that went up from the middle of the foot upwards, and upon it was the middle lamp, in the form of a cenſer, to pour oil into the midſt of it; and the ſix branches went out from the ſides of that, here and there drawn obliquely, and went up to the height of the candleſtick, which is the middle branch or cane; and they went up from the midſt of that middle cane, one above another, the lowermoſt long, and that above it ſhorter than that, and the uppermoſt ſhorter than that; for the height of the tops of them were equal to the height of the middle cane, that is, the ſeventh, from whence the ſix went out.

℣. 33. Three bowls made like unto almonds, with a knop and a flower in one branch, &c.] There were three bowls or cups in the form of almond nuts to each branch, which were either to hold oil for the lamps, as before obſerved, or as others think to catch the ſnuff which fell from them; and there were a knop, which according to the ſignification of the word, was in the form of a pomegranate, and a flower, which the Targum of Jonathan renders a lily; and they are both in ſcripture emblems of the ſaints endowed with the gifts and graces of the Spirit: and three bowls made like almonds in the other branch; on the other ſide of the candleſtick, oppoſite to the former: ſo in the ſix branches that come out of the candleſtick; there were the ſame number of bowls, with a knop and a flower in the reſt of the branches, as in thoſe mentioned.

℣. 34. And in the candleſtick ſhall be four bowls, &c.] That is, in the trunk or body of it; the branches had but three apiece, but this being larger had four: and theſe were alſo made like unto almonds, with their knops and their flowers; as the bowls on the branches had with them.

℣. 35. And there ſhall be a knop under two branches of the ſame, &c.] According to Jarchi, from the middle of the knop (which was like a pomegranate, or, as others, like an apple) two branches were drawn from the two ſides of it, here and there; ſo they teach in the work of the tabernacle, the height of the candleſtick was eighteen hands breadth: this clauſe is repeated twice in this verſe, ſignifying there ſhould be a knop under each of the three branches on one ſide, and three on the other ſide: for it follows, according to the ſix branches that proceed out of the candleſtick; out of the trunk of it, as in ℣. 32.

℣. 36. Their knops and their branches ſhall be of the ſame, &c.] Of the ſame metal, gold, and of the ſame maſs: all it ſhall be one beaten work of pure pure gold; not made in parts, and then put and soldered together, but the whole candlestick in all its parts and branches were to be beaten out of one piece of gold.

[a] Antiq. l. 3. c. 7. §. 7. [b] Ibid. [c] Paradiſe Loſt, B. 12. ℣. 254, 255, 256.

℣. 37. And thou shalt make the seven lamps thereof, &c.] Which were six of them, on the top of the six branches that came out of the sides of the candlestick, and the seventh on the top of the shaft which ran up in the middle of it; which no doubt were made of gold as well as the rest, and may signify the many members of churches bearing the lamp of a profession; or the several gifts and graces of the Spirit, which are sometimes, because of the perfection of them, called the seven spirits of God, and are compared to seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, Rev. iv. 5. or else the ministers of the gospel, who are the lights of the world: and they shall light the lamps thereof; Aaron and his sons, the priests in successive generations: that they may give light over-against it; to the table of shew-bread, which was opposite to it on the north-side of the tabernacle, and so by the light of these lamps the priests could see to place the shew-bread in its order; or the candlestick itself, the lamps being so placed as to give light to the whole body of it, that it might be seen in all its parts very distinctly; unless it can be thought that these lamps were separate from the candlestick, and set around the sides of the holy place, and gave light to it: and this may rather seem to be the case, since these lamps are spoken of after the whole of it is said to be one beaten work of pure gold; but then we have no account of the lamps of the candlestick, unless they are supposed to be included in the branches; wherefore the first sense seems best.

℣. 38. And the tongs thereof, &c.] Which, according to Jarchi, was a sort of forks with which they took the wicks out of the oil, and put them in the lamps; or, as some think, the snuffers, but they are distinguished from tongs, 1 Kings vii. 49, 50. and the snuff-dishes thereof shall be of pure gold; in which the tongs or snuffers were put, or into which the snuff itself was put that was snuffed off. Jarchi says, they were a sort of small cups, in which they put the ashes of the lamp, morning by morning, when they trimmed the lamps from the ashes of the wicks which burned in the night, and were extinct: so Ben Gersom and Lyra say, they were vessels full of water where those were put which were snuffed off, that they might not make a smoke, which is not improbable.

℣. 39. Of a talent of pure gold shall he make it, with all these vessels.] The common talent weighed 60 pounds, but the sacred talent was double, and weighed 120 pounds, as says Jarchi, and so Ben Melech: a talent of gold amounted to 5067 pounds 3 shillings and 10 pence of our money, according to bishop Cumberland[d].

℣. 40. And look that thou make them, &c.] Or see that they are made by workmen employed: after their pattern, which was shewed thee in the mount; from whence it appears, that as Moses was showed the model of the tabernacle, so also of the candlestick, and of all its appurtenances, and of every other vessel in it; and he is strictly charged to look carefully and diligently to it, that every thing be done exactly according to the model he had a view of, in which every thing was particularly described, and nothing was left to the will, humour and fancy of men.

CHAP. XXVI.

IN this chapter a description is given of the tabernacle itself, and first of its inward curtains, of their number, matter, length and breadth, and the manner of coupling them together, ℣. 1—6. and then of the outward curtains of it, their number, matter, length and breadth, and coupling, and how disposed of, ℣. 7—13. and next of the two coverings of the tabernacle, of rams skins and badgers skins, ℣. 14. the boards for the tabernacle are also described, with their tenons and sockets, ℣. 15—25. and the bars and rings for it, by which it was kept firm together, ℣. 26—30. an account is given of the veil between the holy and the most holy place, ℣. 31—35. and of the hanging for the door of the tabernacle, ℣. 36, 37.

℣. 1. Moreover, thou shalt make the tabernacle, &c.] Which he was ordered to make before, the pattern of which was shown him in the mount: this was an habitation for God to dwell in, as the word properly signifies, and into which the furniture before described was to be put; this tabernacle was a type both of the human nature of Christ, which is the true tabernacle which God pitched, and not man, the greater and more perfect one, Heb. viii. 2. and ix. 11. in which the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily, where the glory of God is seen, in whom he grants his gracious presence to his people, and accepts of them and their sacrifices of prayer and praise; and also of the church of God, Ps. xliii. 3. and xlvi. 4. and lxxxiv. 1. Is. xxxiii. 20. Here Jehovah dwells, grants his presence to his people, and comes and blesses them; here he is worshipped, and spiritual sacrifices are offered up to him with acceptance: the tabernacle of Moses was made with ten curtains of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet; the ground of these curtains was fine linen, twined or doubled; and the Jewish writers, as Maimonides, Ben Gersom, and others, say it was six times doubled, the word Shesh, here used, signifying six; and this was interwoven with threads of yarn dyed blue, purple and scarlet; according to Jarchi, the threads of which this tapestry was made were 24 times doubled: he observes, "there were four sorts in every thread, "one thread of fine linen, and three of wool, and "every thread was doubled six times; lo, the four "sorts, when they were twined together, there "were 24 double to a thread;" which if so, must make a stuff of a very great consistence and stiffness. This as applied to the human nature of Christ, the fine linen may denote the purity of it; the various colours the different graces of the Spirit, with which it is adorned; or else the wounds, bruises, bloodshed, sufferings and death he endured in it: as applied to the church, may signify the clothing of the saints with the righteousness of Christ, that fine linen clean and white, and their being washed in his precious blood, and beautified with the graces of his Spirit: with cherubim of cunning work shalt thou make them; that is, with figures like those of the cherubim on the mercy-seat, so disposed by the curious art and contrivance of the weaver, as to appear on both sides of this tapestry; tapſtery; for this was not wrought by a needle, which only ſhows the figure on one ſide, but by weaving, as Jarchi obſerves; and who ſays, that there was one figure on one ſide, and another on another; as for inſtance, a lion on one ſide, and an eagle on the other; or which is more likely, the ſame figure was ſeen on both ſides, as Maimonides affirms, who ſays [e], the work called Choſheb (which is what is here ſpoken of) is that whoſe figures appear on both ſides, before and behind: this in the myſtical ſenſe may point either to the miniſtration of angels to Chriſt in his human nature, and to his people the heirs of ſalvation; or elſe to the ſervice of goſpel-miniſters, done for the honour and glory of Chriſt, and the good of his church and people: Joſephus [f] thinks theſe curtains had a myſtical meaning in them, and repreſent the nature of the elements, and ſo Philo [g].

[d] Of Scripture weights and measures, p. 121.

℣. 2. The length of one curtain ſhall be 28 cubits, &c.] Or 14 yards: and the breadth of one curtain, four cubits; or two yards; according to the common notion of a cubit being half a yard; but if, as doctor Cumberland ſays, the Jewiſh and Egyptian cubit was three inches longer, this will make a conſiderable difference in the length and breadth of thoſe curtains, eſpecially in the former: and every one of the curtains ſhall have one meaſure; be of equal length and breadth.

℣. 3. The five curtains ſhall be coupled together one to azother, &c.] Five of the ten curtains were to be ſewed together, and make as it were one curtain: and other five curtains ſhall be coupled one to another; the other five were to be joined together in like manner, and ſo made two large pieces of tapeſtry of 14 yards long and ten broad, according to the common account of a cubit, but were much longer and broader.

℣. 4. And thou ſhalt make loops of blue upon the edge of the one curtain, &c.] The firſt large curtain, conſiſting of five ſewed together, at the edge of that: from the ſelvedge in the coupling; where it was to be coupled with the other great curtain; loops or eylet holes [h], were to be made: theſe were not wove with the curtains, for they were not to be upon all of them, only at the two outermoſt of the large ones, and therefore were made afterwards, probably with the needle: and likewiſe ſhalt thou make in the uppermoſt edge of another curtain, in the coupling of the ſecond; loops alſo were to be made on the outermoſt edge of another curtain belonging to the ſecond great curtain, where it was to be coupled with the firſt.

℣. 5. Fifty loops ſhalt thou make in the one curtain, &c.] In the firſt great curtain, or in the outermoſt of the five that were ſewed together: and fifty loops ſhalt thou make in the edge of the curtain that is in the coupling of the ſecond; as many alſo were to be made in the outermoſt of the ſecond great curtain, where it was to be coupled with the firſt: that the loops may take hold one of another; or rather, that they might anſwer to one another in both curtains; for the loops could not take hold of one another, only were made to meet together by the taches, hooks, or claſps put into them next mentioned.

℣. 6. And thou ſhalt make fifty taches of gold, &c.] Which ſome render buttons [i], others hooks [k]; they ſeem to be claſps; the uſe of them follows: and couple the curtains together with the taches; the two great curtains were made out of the ten, which had in them 50 loops or eylet-holes each, into which the fifty golden claſps were put, one end of them into the loops of one of the curtains, and the other end of them into the loops of the other curtain, and ſo joined them both together: ſo Jarchi deſcribes them, that their heads or ends entered one of them into the loops in one coupling, and the other into the loops of the other coupling, and ſo coupled them together: and it ſhall be one tabernacle; or, as the Targum of Jonathan, "the tabernacle ſhall be coupled together, that it may be "one:" the joining of the curtains together by the golden taches or claſps, put into loops of blue, figured the putting together the members of Chriſt's human body, in juſt ſymmetry and proportion [l], when they were faſhioned and curiouſly wrought in the lower parts of the earth, in the womb of the virgin, being the curious workmanſhip of the divine Spirit, Pſ. cxxxix. 15, 16. and the union of the members of Chriſt's myſtical body, the church, being fitly framed and compacted together, and united to each other in faith and love, Eph. ii. 21. and iv. 3, 4, 16. Col. ii. 2. 19. and iii. 14.

℣. 7. And thou ſhalt make curtains of goats hair, &c.] Jarchi calls it the flower or down of goats, the ſofter and finer part of their hair, which was ſpun by women, as appears from ch. xxxv. 26. and was made up into a ſtuff ſomewhat like our camblet; theſe curtains were coarſer than the former, and were made to be put over them, to preſerve them from the weather, as it follows: to be a covering upon the tabernacle: which by the curtains of linen coupled together, became one tabernacle, as in the preceding verſe; and theſe curtains were to be a tent or covering over them: they were ſomewhat like, being made of the ſame matter with the coverings with which the ancient Arabs covered their tents, which were made of goats hair, as were the tents of Kedar alluded to in Cant. i. 5. theſe curtains of goats hair denote the outward appearance of Chriſt in human nature, who, attended with all human infirmities excepting ſin, was in the form of a ſervant, in great meanneſs and poverty, covered with reproach, and had in the greateſt contempt, and eſpecially at the time of his ſufferings and death; though all rich and glorious within, full of grace, and of all the bleſſings of grace, of righteouſneſs and life, of light, joy, peace, and comfort for his people; and may alſo denote the mean appearance of the church and people of God outwardly; being, generally ſpeaking, a poor and an afflicted people, ſubject to the ſcorn, reproach, and perſecutions of men, but all glorious within, enriched with the grace of God and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and ſo in one reſpect, like theſe curtains of goats hair, and in another reſpect, like the curtains of fine linen: eleven curtains ſhalt thou make; one more than the other; the reaſon of which was, that there might be one at the entrance of the tabernacle, there being no linen curtain there, ſee ℣. 9.

℣. 8. The length of one curtain ſhall be thirty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits, &c.] The breadth of them is the ſame with the linen curtains, but the length of them two cubits more; the reaſon of which was, that they might hang down lower on either ſide, and the better preſerve

[e] Hilchot Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 8. §. 15. [f] Antiq. l. 3. c. 7. §. 7. [g] De vita Moſis, l. 3. p. 667.
[h] ללאת ocellos, Vatablus. [i] קרסי fibulas, Tigurine verſion, Vatablus. [k] Uncinos, Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius; ſo the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan.

preſerve them from any injury: and the eleven curtains ſhall be all of one meaſure; as to length and breadth.

℣. 9. And thou ſhalt couple five curtains by themſelves, &c.] And make one large curtain of them, as was ordered with reſpect to the linen curtains: and ſix curtains by themſelves; as there were eleven of them, ſuch a diviſion was made of five into one large curtain, and ſix into another; and as that which had ſix in it would reach further than the other, proviſion is made for the diſpoſal and uſe of that as follows: and ſhalt double the ſixth curtain in the fore-front of the tabernacle; at the entrance of it, in the eaſt end of it; the ſixth curtain reaching to that, and hanging down, was turned up and ſo doubled, over againſt the door or entrance; and was, as Jarchi ſays, like a modeſt bride that covers her face with a vail, which before this had no covering; for thus it was, as Dr. Lightfoot[m] deſcribes it, the holy place was ten yards long, and the five curtains ſewed together were juſt ſo broad, and ſo they covered only the top and the ſides, but hung not down at the end, which was eaſtward—but the ſix (goat hair curtains) that lay eaſt, reached to the end, covered the pillars whereon that vail hung, and they hung half a curtain's breadth or a yard over the entrance.

℣. 10. And thou ſhalt make fifty loops on the edge of the one curtain, that is outmoſt in the coupling, &c.] Juſt in like manner, and in the ſame place where they were ordered to be put on the linen curtains, only theſe are not ſaid to be of blue, but perhaps were wrought with goats hair: and fifty loops in the edge of the curtain which coupleth the ſecond; theſe loops were ſet on each of the curtains where the two large pieces were to be coupled together.

℣. 11. And thou ſhalt make fifty taches of braſs, &c.] As theſe curtains were coarſer and alſo the loops, ſo the taches, hooks, or claſps, were made of meaner metal, but anſwered the purpoſe of joining and coupling together full as well: and put the taches into the loops; one end of the hook or claſp into the loop on one of the curtains, and the other end of the hook or claſp into the loop on the other curtain anſwering to it: and couple the tent together, that it may be one; that the tent or covering over the tabernacle might be one, as the tabernacle by the like means was, ℣. 6.

℣. 12. And the remnant that remaineth of the curtains of the tent, &c.] Of the goats hair curtains, which were one more than the linen curtains: the half-curtain that remaineth; for the other half extended to the eaſt end of it, at the entrance of the tabernacle, and hung down and was doubled there, and the other that remained is here diſpoſed of: ſhall hang over the back ſide of the tabernacle; the weſt end of it, where was the holy of holies; or rather, as doctor Lightfoot[n] deſcribes it thus, it was when thoſe curtains (of goats hair) were laid upon the other over the tabernacle; they were not laid as theſe brazen loops (claſps it ſhould be) did light juſt upon the golden ones over the vail, but three quarters of a yard more weſtward, ſo that the five curtains that went weſt did reach to the ground and half a curtain to ſpare, Exod. xxvi. 12. the other ſix that lay eaſt reached to the end, covered the pillars whereon that vail hung, and they hung half a curtain's breadth or a yard over the entrance.

℣. 13. A cubit on the one ſide, and a cubit on the other ſide of that which remaineth in the length of the curtains of the tent, &c.] The curtains of the tent, or the goat hair curtains, were two cubits longer than the other, and theſe are the two cubits, one on one ſide and the other on the other, which remained, and by which they were longer than the linen curtains: it ſhall hang over the ſides of the tabernacle; the north and ſouth ſides: on this ſide, and on that ſide, to cover it; and as the above learned doctor obſerves[o], their length of 15 yards reached half a yard lower on either ſide than the other curtains did, and yet they came not to the ground by a quarter of a yard; ſo that the ſilver foundations (of which afterwards) were always plain to be ſeen every where but at the weſt end.

℣. 14. And thou ſhalt make a covering for the tent, of rams ſkins died red, &c.] This was a covering that was put over the curtains of goats ſkin; but whether it went all over them, or only upon the roof of the tabernacle, they covered, to keep out the rains from ſoaking through, is not certain, nor very evident: Jarchi thinks the roof was only covered with this covering of rams ſkins; but others think it more reaſonable that the whole was covered with them to preſerve from duſt and rain: and a covering above of badgers ſkins; of theſe ſkins ſee the note on ch. xxv. 5. this was a fourth covering of the tabernacle; the firſt was of linen curtains, the ſecond of goats hair, the third of rams ſkins, and the fourth of badgers ſkins, which ſeems to have been thicker and coarſer, ſince ſhoes were made of them, Ezek. xvi. 10. R. Judah, as quoted by Jarchi, thinks the two laſt were but one covering, half of it conſiſting of rams ſkins and half of it of badger ſkins; but the text is expreſs that the latter was a covering above and over the former: theſe ſeveral coverings of the tabernacle ſhew the care that God takes of his church and people, and how ſufficiently they are provided for, that they may be in ſafety from all their enemies, being cloathed with Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and under the purple covering of his blood, and ſurrounded by his almighty power, ſee Iſ. iv. 5, 6.

℣. 15. And thou ſhalt make the boards for the tabernacle, &c.] Which were the pillars and ſupports, and properly the walls of it, which gave it its firmneſs and ſecurity, or otherwiſe the curtains would have been blown about by every wind: they were to be made of ſhittim-wood ſtanding up; juſt as they grew, as a Jewiſh writer obſerves[p]; theſe planks or boards were not to be laid along the lengthway of them, but to be ſet upright; and may denote ſuch who are pillars in the houſe of God, and are to be upright both in heart and converſation, both miniſters and private members; and indeed the church itſelf is the pillar and ground of truth, Gal. ii. 9. Rev. iii. 12. 1 Tim. iii. 15.

℣. 16. Ten cubits ſhall be the length of a board, &c.] Or five yards, according to the common cubit: and a cubit and a half ſhall be the breadth of one board; or 3 quarters of a yard; and from hence we may learn what were the height and the length of the tabernacle; according to the common computation of a cubit, it was but 5 yards high and 15 long, ſince there were but 20 boards on each ſide, ℣. 18, 20. but if three inches are added to each cubit, it will make its meaſures conſiderably larger: Joſephus[q] ſays, the boards were four fingers thick: according to biſhop Cumberland land, the boards of the tabernacle, containing 15 Jewiſh ſquare cubits, were very near 30 Engliſh ſquare feet in their length and breadth.

[m] Works, vol. 1. p. 718. [n] Ibid. p. 719. [o] Ibid. [p] Bartenora in Miſn. Succah, c. 3. §. 14. [q] Antiq. l. 3. c. 6. §. 3.

℣. 17. Two tenons ſhall there be on one board, &c.] Every board was to be ſo cut and ſhaped at the lower end of it, as to have, as it were, two hands [r], as in the original, to enter into, lay hold on, and faſten in mortaiſes: ſet in order one againſt another; at a proper diſtance from each other, as the rounds of a ladder: thus ſhalt thou make for all the boards of the tabernacle; every one was to have two tenons.

℣. 18. And thou ſhalt make the boards for the tabernacle, &c.] As in the manner before deſcribed, ſo in number as follows: 20 boards on the ſouth ſide, ſouthward; which being a cubit and a half broad, made the length of the tabernacle 15 yards according to the common account; but if theſe were cubits of 21 inches, then its length was much greater.

℣. 19. And thou ſhalt make 40 ſockets of ſilver under the 20 boards; &c.] Or baſes [s], and which were properly the foundation of the tabernacle, on which it was ſettled and eſtabliſhed; theſe ſockets were the mortaiſes, for the two tenons of each board or plank to be placed in, and were as broad as the plank, and joining each other, made one entire baſis for the whole ſtructure; each ſocket contained a talent of ſilver, and was made of the ſilver given at the numbering of the people, Exod. xxxviii. 25, 27. and a talent of ſilver, according to biſhop Cumberland amounted to 353 pounds 11 ſhillings, and ſome odd pence of our money: by which may be judged the whole value of this ſilver-foundation, which with the 4 ſockets of the vail conſiſted of 100 of them, which anſwer to the 100 talents of ſilver collected at the above offering: two ſockets under one board for his two tenons, and two ſockets under another board for his two tenons; and ſo in all the 20 boards, which took up the whole 40 on the ſouth ſide.

℣. 20. And for the ſecond ſide of the tabernacle on the north ſide, &c.] The direction of the tabernacle was eaſt and weſt; at the eaſt end was the entrance into the holy place, and at the weſt end the holy of holies; and the two ſides were north and ſouth; and as on the ſouth ſide ſo on the north, there ſhall be twenty boards: juſt the ſame number as the laws of building required.

℣. 21. And their 40 ſockets of ſilver, &c.] Anſwerable to the 20 boards for their two tenons to be placed in as in mortaiſes: two ſockets under one board, and two ſockets under another board; and ſo under all the boards on the north ſide as on the ſouth.

℣. 22. And for the ſides of the tabernacle, &c.] Or the ends of it, the eaſt and weſt, and the account begins with the weſt: weſtward thou ſhalt make ſix boards; ſo that the breadth of the tabernacle was but nine cubits, or four yards and a half, according to a common cubit; but two boards more placed at the two corners of the ſides, next obſerved, added to the breadth of it.

℣. 23. And two boards ſhalt thou make for the corners of the tabernacle in the two ſides.] For the north weſt and ſouth weſt corners, in the north and ſouth ſides; concerning which doctor Lightfoot thus writes [t]: and the weſt end had ſix planks entire, beſides a plank at either corner, jointing end and ſides together; theſe corner planks were of the ſame breadth that all the others were, and thus ſet, the middle of the breadth of the one plank was laid cloſe to the end of the ſouth-ſide, or to that plank that was furtheſt weſt; ſo that a quarter of a yard of the breadth of the corner plank was inward, to make up the tabernacle breadth, a quarter was taken up with the thickneſs of the ſide-plank to which it joined, and a quarter lay outward: thus at the ſouth-weſt, juſt ſo was it at the north-weſt corner: then count; the two corner planks were inward a quarter of a yard a-piece, and the ſix planks that ſtood between them of three quarters a-piece, behold five yards, juſt the breadth of the houſe between wall and wall: theſe corners knit end and ſide together, and were the ſtrength of the building; as, adds he, "Chriſt is of his church, making Jews and Gen-" tiles one ſpiritual temple."

℣. 24. And they ſhall be coupled together beneath, &c.] At the bottom of the boards or planks: and they ſhall be coupled together above the head of it unto one ring; at the top of the boards there was a ring, to which they were coupled and faſtened, and ſo at the bottom of them, though not expreſſed: ſome underſtand this of all the planks, both at the two ſides and at the weſt end; but it ſeems rather to reſpect only the corner planks, ſince it follows: thus ſhall it be for them both, they ſhall be for the two corners; which were coupled and joined alike at each corner as if they were twins, as the word uſed ſignifies; or, the meaning is, that theſe were double boards, and ſo like twins, which were ſo cloſely put together that they ſeemed but one board; which was done that the corners might be thicker and ſtronger, and ſo for the greater firmneſs of the building.

℣. 25. And they ſhall be eight boards, &c.] Six at the weſt end and one at each corner, north-weſt and ſouth-weſt: and their ſockets of ſilver, 16 ſockets; the ſame as thoſe for the boards on both ſides north and ſouth: they were of the ſame metal, ſilver; and they were two under one board, to receive its two tenons as follows: two ſockets under one board, and two ſockets under another board; and ſo under all eight, and which ſockets joining with thoſe of the two ſides, and in all made 96, were the baſis and foundation of the tabernacle, and was a figure of Chriſt, the only foundation of his church and people; and the ſeveral tenons of the boards joined into thoſe ſockets of ſilver, may denote the union of the members of Chriſt and miniſters of his word to him, and their dependence on him.

℣. 26. And thou ſhalt make bars of ſhittim-wood, &c.] Which being put into rings or ſtaples of gold, kept the boards tight, cloſe, and firm together: five for the boards of the one ſide of the tabernacle; for inſtance, the ſouth ſide; four of theſe were placed, two at the upper end of the boards, and two at the lower end, and the fifth in the middle, particularly taken notice of, ℣. 28. how long theſe bars were it is not ſaid, but it is reaſonable to conclude, that they reached the length of the tabernacle, which was 30 cubits; and as it was not eaſy to get bars of ſuch a length, the notion of Joſephus [u] perhaps, may be right, that each two conſiſted of divers parts which joined one another, the head of one entering into the hollow of the other; other; and as he ſuppoſes, they were five cubits long, a row of them muſt have ſix parts, which went along the ſides, north and ſouth, and the weſt end two, which was but ten cubits.

[r] ידות שתי duæ manus, Montanus. Druſius. [s] אדני baſes, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine verſion, Piſcator, [t] Ut ſupra. [u] Ib.

℣. 27. And five bars for the boards of the other ſide of the tabernacle, &c.] Suppoſe the north, theſe bars were diſpoſed of in the ſame manner as thoſe on the ſouth-ſide: and five bars for the boards of the ſide of the tabernacle; or the end of it, the weſt end, as follows: for the two ſides weſtward; that is, the two corners at the weſt end, the ſouth weſt, and the north-weſt corners; and theſe five bars reached from the one to the other, two at the upper part of the boards, and two at the lower part, and one in the middle.

℣. 28. And the middle bar in the midſt of the boards ſhall reach from end to end.] From eaſt to weſt, as Jarchi interprets it; but this can only be ſaid of the middle bar on the north and ſouth ſides of the tabernacle, for the middle bar at the weſt end was from north to ſouth: about this bar there is ſome difficulty, as that it is ſaid to be from end to end, as if that only was; whereas it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe that the reſt were ſo likewiſe; it may be, they might come ſomewhat ſhort of reaching the end, whereas this did entirely; or rather, the truer reaſon is, becauſe the reſt of the bars conſiſted of various parts; whereas this was a long bar of one entire piece, reaching from one end of the tabernacle to the other: likewiſe it is ſaid to be in the midſt of the boards; and the Jewiſh writers are generally of opinion, that it did not run along in rings as the other bars did, but the boards and planks being bored, this went through the thickneſs of the wood throughout; and in this they are followed by Arias Montanus, Vatablus, doctor Lightfoot, and others: but to this it may be objected, that the boards muſt be very thick indeed, even incredibly ſo, to admit of ſuch a bore as to let in a bar of this kind, and is not ſo conſiſtent with its being a portable houſe; and beſides, when it was at any time taken down in order to be removed, ſuch a bar muſt give a great deal of trouble, and be in danger of being broke to pieces; beſides, if it was thus covered in the boards as it muſt be, what need was there that it ſhould be overlayed with gold as in the next verſe? it is more probable therefore, that it went not through the midſt of the thickneſs of the wood, but in the middle of the length of the planks, and ſo expreſſes its different ſituation from the reſt of the bars, which were at or towards the top and bottom of the planks, and this in the middle of them. It is not ſaid of theſe bars, whether they were within or on the outſide of the tabernacle; it is moſt likely they were on the outſide, as Joſephus [w] ſays they were; ſince they would not have made a good appearance within-ſide, where they would have been always ſeen by the prieſts within, whereas being without they were covered with the curtains.

℣. 29. And thou ſhalt overlay the boards with gold, &c.] Not merely gild them, but cover them with thin plates of gold; and which, becauſe it would take up a great quantity of gold, and make the boards very heavy, unleſs the plates were very thin, when they were taken down and carried from place to place; ſome have thought they were only gilded: and make their rings of gold, for places for the bars; theſe were made of ſolid gold, and were as ſtaples to let the bars into: and, according to Jarchi, there were two rings to every board: and thou ſhalt overlay the bars with gold; cover them with plates of gold; and theſe bars and ſtaples of gold ſhow how compact and firm the church of God is, through his almighty power, as well as how glorious and ſplendid it is by his grace.

℣. 30. And thou ſhalt rear up the tabernacle, &c.] When thus finiſhed, and all the furniture belonging to it compleated: according to the faſhion thereof, which was ſhewed in the mount; this is the third time that this is obſerved to Moſes in the account of the tabernacle; which ſhows how punctually God would have the pattern obſerved he had given him, and that all things might be particularly and exactly done according to it, ſee Heb. viii. 5.

℣. 31. And thou ſhalt make a vail, &c.] The uſe of this, as follows, was to divide the holy place from the moſt holy place in the tabernacle; it has its name from hardneſs, it being very ſtiff and ſtrong, for it was made of thread ſix times doubled, and was four fingers thick, as the Jewiſh writers ſay: this vail may repreſent the ſin of man, which ſeparates between God and man, was removed by the death of Chriſt when the vail was rent, and ſo the way to heaven opened; or the obſcurity of the legal diſpenſation, the goſpel being vailed under the ſhadows of the law, and the way into the holieſt of all then not ſo manifeſt, and particularly the ceremonial law, which ſeparated between Jew and Gentile, and is now aboliſhed by the death of Chriſt; or rather it was typical of the human nature of Chriſt, his fleſh, called in alluſion to it the vail of his fleſh, Heb. x. 20. This vail was made of blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, of fine twined linen of cunning-work; it ſeems to have been made of the ſame materials, and in the ſame curious manner of workmanſhip with the curtains of the tabernacle, ℣. 1. and was itſelf no other than a curtain, and ſo it is interpreted by ſome Jewiſh writers [x]. It being made of fine linen denotes the purity of Chriſt, of his nature, life and righteouſneſs; of twined linen, his ſtrength, courage and ſteadineſs; of blue, purple and ſcarlet, the ſeveral graces of the Spirit, with which his human nature was adorned, his flaming zeal for his Father's glory, and the good of his people, his bloody wounds, ſufferings and death, the preciouſneſs of his blood, the dignity of his perſon, and his glorious exaltation, purple and ſcarlet being the colours wore by kings: with cherubim ſhall it be made; ſignifying either the miniſtration of angels to him in his incarnate ſtate, or the miſſion of goſpel-miniſters by him, ſee Pſ. cxxxix. 15, 16.

℣. 32. And thou ſhalt hang it upon four pillars of ſhittim-wood, overlaid with gold, &c.] For it was ten cubits long, and as many broad; and being of ſuch a ſtiffneſs and thickneſs as it was, required ſo many pillars to ſupport it: theſe pillars may ſignify the deity of Chriſt, which is the ſupport of his human nature, and in which it has its perſonal ſubſiſtence, and gives all its actions and ſufferings virtue and efficacy; and being of ſhittim wood, which is incorruptible, may denote his eternity, and being covered with gold, his glory: their hooks ſhall be of gold; which were upon the tops of the pillars on which the vail was hung: and the pillars were upon the four ſockets of ſilver; which were properly the pedeſtals or feet of the pillars; and theſe ſockets, into which the pillars were let and placed, and the hooks the vail hung by, may hint hint at the union of the two natures in Chriſt, who is God and man in one perſon, God manifeſt in the fleſh; ſee Cant. v. 15.

[w] Ut ſupra.

[x] Vid. R. Sol. Urbin. Ohel Moed, fol. 37. 2.

℣. 33. And thou ſhalt hang up the vail under the taches, &c.] Or claſps, which coupled the two grand curtains, or pieces of tapeſtry, each conſiſting of five curtains, of which the tabernacle was made, ℣. 6. and by this it ſeems that the place where they met, and were claſped, was where the vail was hung between the holy and the moſt holy place: for as Dr. Lightfoot [y] obſerves, according to the diviſion of the houſe was the diviſion of the curtains, the vail that parted the holy from the moſt holy, was hung juſt under the golden claſps that knit the five curtains together; ſo that five curtains lay over the holy place, and the other five over the moſt holy; but with this difference, the holy place was ten yards long, and the five curtains ſewed together were juſt ſo broad, and ſo they covered only the top and ſides, but hung not down at the end which was eaſtward; but the moſt holy was but five yards long, and the five curtains over that did not only cover the top, but alſo hung down at the weſt end to the ſilver baſes; and of what he ſays of the goat-hair curtains, and their brazen claſps or taches, and where they met, and what they covered, ſee the note on ℣. 12: that thou mayeſt bring in thither within the vail the ark of the teſtimony; the ark in which the teſtimony or law of God, teſtifying his will, was put; of which ſee ch. xxv. 10, &c. this was to be ſet in the moſt holy place, as being holy, ſpiritual, juſt and good; and as being fulfilled by Chriſt, ſignified by the ark in which it was, through whoſe righteouſneſs alone there is admiſſion into the holy of holies, by which this law is fulfilled, magnified, and made honourable: and the vail ſhall divide unto you, between the holy place, and the moſt holy; which was ſo thick, that there was no ſeeing through it; and none might enter by it into the holieſt of all but the high-prieſt, and he only on the day of atonement; and into the holy place might none come but the prieſts, to do the ſervice of the ſanctuary. The holy place was typical of the church on earth, where all the ſaints, who are prieſts to God, worſhip, and the moſt holy of heaven, the perfect ſtate of bliſs and happineſs.

℣. 34. And thou ſhalt put the mercy-ſeat upon the ark of the teſtimony, &c.] With the cherubim of glory overſhadowing it; all which were a repreſentation of the way of man's ſalvation flowing from the mercy and grace of God, through the propitiation by Chriſt, and his perfect righteouſneſs, by which the law is fulfilled; and all this is publiſhed in the goſpel by the miniſters of it, ſignified by the cherubim: and theſe are all the things that were in the moſt holy place; and they were placed at the weſt end of it.

℣. 35. And thou ſhalt ſet the table without the vail, &c.] The table of ſhew-bread, of which ſee ch. xxv. 23—30. this was not to be within the vail, but without it, in the holy place: and the candleſtick over-againſt the table, of which ſee ch. xxv. 31, &c. ſignifying, that in the church of God, in the preſent ſtate of things, which the holy place was an emblem of, there are both food and light: the candleſtick was placed on the ſide of the tabernacle, toward the ſouth; according to Jarchi, two cubits and a half from the ſide of it: and thou ſhalt put the table on the north ſide; of the tabernacle, directly over-againſt the candleſtick, two cubits and a half from the ſouth ſide, as the ſame writer ſays.

℣. 36. And thou ſhalt make an hanging for the door of the tent, &c.] At the eaſt end of the tabernacle, which lay open and expoſed, and for which as yet there was no proviſion; the weſt end of it, where ſtood the holy of holies, was incloſed with ſix boards, and two corner ones, ℣. 22, 23. and the linen curtains hung down there to the ſilver baſes, and ſo did the curtains of goats hair, even to the ground, and half a curtain to ſpare; ſee ℣. 12, 33. but for the eaſt end, or entrance into the tabernacle, there was nothing till now ordered, only the ſixth curtain of the goats-hair curtains was there turned up double, ℣. 9. but now here an hanging is ordered, or rather a covering [z], as the word ſignifies; Jarchi calls it a vail; and this was inſtead of a door to the tabernacle, and divided the holy place into which only the prieſts might enter from the place where the people ſtood and worſhipped: and this alſo was made of blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, and fine twined linen; as was the vail between the holy and the holy of holies; only with this difference, this was wrought with needle-work, and that was of cunning-work: the difference between theſe two, Rokem and Choſheb, was, as Ben Melech from the Miſnah relates, that Rokem is the work of a needle, and therefore but one face or figure is ſeen, that is, it is only ſeen on one ſide; but Choſheb is the work of a weaver, and therefore two faces or figures are ſeen, that is, they are ſeen on both ſides; and with this account Maimonides agrees, ſee the note on ℣. 1. beſides this hanging, Joſephus [a] tells us there was another of linen, of the ſame bigneſs with this, and which covered it, and preſerved it from the weather, and which on feſtival days was turned back, that the people might have a proſpect of the other; juſt as there were curtains of goats hair to preſerve the linen ones.

℣. 37. And thou ſhalt make for the hanging five pillars of ſhittim-wood, &c.] One at each corner of the entrance into the tabernacle, and the other three at a proper diſtance from each other, ſo as to make four ways for the prieſts to enter in at; as there might very well be, ſince there was a breadth of ten cubits, or five yards or more: and overlay them with gold; with plates of gold, for a gild would ſoon wear off by continual uſe in paſſing and repaſſing. This is to be underſtood not of the whole pillars, but of the chapiters, heads, tops or knobs of them, and of their fillets or girdles; in ſome parts of them, the wood appearing, as is plain from ch. xxxvi. 38. and xxxviii. 28: and their hooks ſhall be of gold; on which the hanging, covering or vail was hung: and thou ſhalt caſt five ſockets of braſs for them; for the pillars to ſtand upon them, and were of a meaner metal than thoſe on which the pillars for the vail before mentioned; that being the entrance into the holy of holies, where the divine majeſty dwelt, this into the holy place where the prieſts did their ſervice.

[y] Works, vol. 1. p. 718. Tigurine verſion, Druſius.

[z] מסך operimentum, Montanus; tegumentum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; velum, 2

[a] Antiq. l. 3. c. 6. §. 4.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXVII.

THIS chapter treats of the altar of burnt-offering, and of all things relative to it, ℣. 1—8. of the court of the tabernacle, its hangings on each side with pillars, sockets and hooks for them, ℣. 9—19. and it is concluded with an order to the Israelites to bring oil-olive for the lamp of the sanctuary, ℣. 20, 21.

℣. 1. And thou shalt make an altar of shittim-wood, &c.] This is a different altar from that made of earth before the tabernacle was built, ch. xx. 24. and from the altar of incense, ch. xxx. 1. this was to offer burnt-offerings on, and was placed at the door of the tabernacle, in the court of the people, where they brought their sacrifices to the priests to offer for them: it stood in the open air, as it was proper it should, that the smoke of the sacrifices might ascend up and scatter. This altar was not typical of the altar of the heart; though indeed all the saints are priests, and every sacrifice of theirs should come from the heart, and particularly love, which is more than all burnt-offerings; but the heart is not this altar of brass to bear the fire of divine wrath, which none can endure; nor does it sanctify the gift, it being itself impure: nor of the Lord's table, or the table on which the Lord's supper is set; that is a table, and not an altar, a feast, and not a sacrifice; is not greater than the gift, nor does it sanctify: nor of the cross of Christ, on which he died, bore the sins of his people, and sanctified them by his blood; but of Christ himself, who by his office is a priest, his human nature is the sacrifice, and his divine nature the altar; and he is that altar believers in him have a right to eat of, Heb. xiii. 10. his divine nature is greater than the human, is the support of it, which sanctifies and gives it virtue as a sacrifice, and which makes the sacrifices of all his people acceptable to God. This altar of burnt-offering is said to be made of shittim-wood, a wood incorruptible and durable; Christ, as God, is from everlasting to everlasting; as man, though he once died, he now lives for evermore, and never did or will see corruption; his priesthood is an unchangeable priesthood, and passes not from one to another, and particularly his sacrifice is of a continual virtue and efficacy: five cubits long, and five cubits broad, the altar shall be foursquare; as to the length and breadth of it, which were alike, two yards and a half each, according to the common notion of a cubit. The altars of the heathens were made in imitation of this, they were foursquare as this was. Pausanias makes mention of a temple of Diana that was τέτραγωνος, foursquare, sensibly rising up on high. And this figure may denote the perfection of Christ's sacrifice, and the permanency of it; though the altars in Solomon's temple, and in the visions of Ezekiel, are much larger, and which also were foursquare, 2 Chron. iv. 1. Ezek. xliii. 16. Christ's sacrifice is large and extensive, making satisfaction for all his people, and for all their sins; and he is an altar large enough for all their sacrifices to be offered up to God with acceptance: and the height thereof shall be three cubits; a proper height for a man to minister at; for as Aben Ezra observes, the height of a man is but four cubits ordinarily; so that a man serving at the altar would be a cubit, or half a yard or more above it, and would have the command of doing on it what he had to do.

℣. 2. And thou shalt make the horns of it upon the four corners thereof, &c.] Which were either for ornament, or for keeping what was laid upon the altar from falling off, or for the fastening of the sacrifice to them, and were what criminals fled to for refuge, and laid hold on; and may denote the power of Christ, who is the horn of salvation to preserve his people from a final falling away, and from ruin and destruction, and his protection of those that fly to him for refuge; and these horns being at the corners of the altar, may respect the four parts of the world, from whence souls come to Christ for everlasting salvation: his horns shall be of the same; that is, made of the same wood as the altar itself, and so may lead to observe the like things: or upwards out of it [b], the altar; prominent from it, as the Arabic version, and so the sacrifices could be bound to them, Ps. cxviii. 27: and thou shalt overlay it with brass; with plates of brass, that it may endure the fire, and preserve the wood from being burnt with it; this may denote not only the brightness, lustre and glory of Christ, like the shining brass, but his great strength in bearing the sins of his people, and all the punishment due unto them, even the fire of divine wrath, without being consumed by it. Jarchi observes, that it was overlayed with brass, because it was to make atonement for the impudence of the forehead, which is as brass, Is. xlviii. 4.

℣. 3. And thou shalt make his pans to receive his ashes, &c.] Not to receive them in as they fell, but to gather them up in, and carry them away; and this was done every morning about cock-crowing, not much sooner nor later [c]: and his shovels; to throw up the ashes together to be put into the pans; Jarchi describes this vessel to be like the cover of a brass pot, with a handle to it; the same we call a fire-shovel: and his basons; to receive the blood of the sacrifice, and out of which it was sprinkled, as the word signifies, and may be rendered sprinkling basons: and his flesh-hooks; not such as were used to take flesh out of the pot, 1 Sam. ii. 13. for there could be no use for such at the altar of burnt-offering; but were, as Jarchi says, like hooks recurved, with which they struck into the flesh, and turned it upon the coals to hasten the burning of it; and with which very probably they kept the fire and the parts of the sacrifices in good order, until they were consumed: and his fire-pans; which were a kind of censers in which coals of fire were taken off from the altar of burnt-offering, and carried to the altar of incense, as Jarchi and Ben Gersom observe, see Lev. xvi. 12. but as censers did not belong to the altar of burnt-offering, but to the altar of incense, Fortunatus Scacchus [d] is of opinion, that these were a larger sort of vessels, wherein the fire which came down from heaven was kept burning whilst the altar and grate were cleansed from the coals and ashes, and when the altar was had from place to place: all the vessels thereof thou shalt make of brass; as being fittest for the use of this altar.

℣.

[b] מממנו sursum ex eo, Noldius, p. 615.

[c] Misn. Yoma, c. 1. §. 8. & Maimon. in Ib.

[d] Sacr. Eleochrism. Myrothec. l. 2. c. 73. p. 676, 677.

℣. 4. And thou ſhalt make for it a grate of net-work of braſs, &c.] Or ſieve, as in Amos ix. 9. it was a plate of braſs with holes in it, to let through either the blood that drained from the parts of the ſacrifice, or the aſhes of it; for this was the focus or hearth, on which the ſacrifice and the wood were laid and burnt: this, according to the Targum of Jonathan on ch. xxxviii. 4. was to receive the coals and bones which fell from the altar; and ſo may denote the purity of Chriſt's ſacrifice, which was offered up without ſpot to God, and the uſe of him, as the altar to ſanctify our gifts, and take away the ſins of our holy things: and upon the net ſhalt thou make four brazen rings in the four corners thereof; by which, with chains put into them the grate was faſtened to the four horns of the altar, and the uſe of them was to let it down and hang in the middle of the altar, and to take it up when there was occaſion for it; though ſome think theſe rings were not in the grate but by it, as the particle may be rendered, a little lower than that, on the ſides of the altar; into which the ſtaves after mentioned were put, and with which the altar was carried when removed from place to place.

℣. 5. And thou ſhalt put it under the compaſs of the altar beneath, &c.] That is, the grate was to be put within the four-ſquare compaſs of the altar in the hollow part of it, for the wood and ſacrifice to be laid upon it: that the net may be even to the midſt of the altar; and as the altar was three cubits high, this net or grate was let down by chains to its rings a cubit and a half, and being of ſuch a depth was capable of containing a great deal.

℣. 6. And thou ſhalt make ſtaves for the altar, ſtaves of ſhittim-wood, &c.] Like thoſe that were made for the ark, and for the ſame purpoſe: and overlay them with braſs; with plates of braſs, whereas thoſe for the ark were overlayed with gold.

℣. 7. And the ſtaves ſhall be put into the rings, &c.] Not into the rings of the grate, as Jarchi and others; though doctor Lightfoot[t] thinks, theſe came out of each corner through the altar-frame, and hung out of the frame, and in theſe the ſtaves being put, made the frame and the grate ſure together, and ſo they were alſo carried together; but it ſeems rather, that as the grate had rings peculiar to that, to let it down and take it up, and with which it was carried, with a purple cloth covered over it, Numb. iv. 13. ſo the altar had rings peculiar to that on the ſides of it, into which theſe ſtaves were put: and the ſtaves ſhall be upon the two ſides of the altar to bear it; and which ſhews that the rings into which theſe were put were not the rings of the grate, for they were at the four corners of it, which hung upon the four horns of it; whereas the ſtaves were on the two ſides of it in order to bear it from place to place, which was done by the Levites; and was typical of the miniſters of the goſpel bearing the name of Chriſt, and ſpreading the doctrine of his ſacrifice and ſatisfaction in the world, which is the main and fundamental doctrine of the goſpel.

℣. 8. Hollow with boards ſhalt thou make it, &c.] The frame of it being made of boards of ſhittim-wood, there was nothing within-ſide but the grate, which was put within the four-ſquare, down into the middle of it, and ſo was light of carriage; though the Targum of Jonathan, and other Jewiſh writers repreſent this hollow as filled up with duſt and earth, to anſwer to the altar of earth, Moſes was before bid to make; but this ſeems quite contrary to the preſent direction: the hollowneſs of the altar may denote the emptineſs of Chriſt when he became a ſacrifice; he emptied himſelf as it were, when he became incarnate, of all his greatneſs, glory, and riches, and became mean and poor for the ſake of his people, that they through his poverty might be made rich, Phil. ii. 7, 8. 2 Cor. viii. 9. as it was ſhewed thee in the mount, ſo ſhall they make it; or, as he ſhewed thee[s], that is, God. Moſes had a model of this altar ſhewed him, and he was to be careful to inſtruct the workmen, and ſee to it, that they built it exactly according to the model.

℣. 9. And thou ſhalt make the court of the tabernacle for the ſouth ſide, ſouthward, &c.] This was a large court-yard to the houſe of God, or tabernacle, which ſtood in it at the upper end of it; it was incloſed, but open to the air; and in it, between the entrance into it and the holy place, ſtood the altar of burnt-offering before deſcribed, and on one ſide of that the laver for the prieſts to waſh in; into this the people of Iſrael were admitted, and where they brought their ſacrifices and worſhipped: it was typical of the viſible church of God on earth, which, though an incloſure, and is ſeparated from the world, yet conſiſts of profeſſors, good and bad, of real ſaints and hypocrites; as into this court, Iſraelites of every character, ſex, and ſtate entered. In David's time it was divided into divers courts, and what anſwered to it when the temple was built, were the ſeveral apartments called the courts of the prieſts, where they ſacrificed, and the court of Iſrael, where the men-Iſraelites worſhipped, and the court of the women where they were by themſelves; and in after-times there was another court ſeparate from theſe, called the court of the Gentiles, into which they might enter; and the deſcription of this court begins with that ſide of it which lay full ſouth: there ſhall be hangings for the court of fine twined linen of 100 cubits long for one ſide; for the ſouth-ſide; and theſe hangings, with the reſt all around, made the court, and were the walls of it; and from hence we learn, that it was 100 cubits or 50 yards long, according to the common computation of a cubit; tho' it was 300 inches more, this cubit being 3 inches more than is commonly ſuppoſed. Theſe hangings, vails or curtains, for ſo in the verſions they are differently called, were the incloſure of the court; they were made of fine linen, ſix times twiſted, but not of various colours, and curiouſly wrought with cunning work, as the curtains of the tabernacle were; and according to the ſignification of the word, they were wrought full of holes, like eylet holes, or in the manner of net-work; ſo that though they kept perſons from entering in, they might be ſeen through, and through them might be ſeen what was doing in the court: and all this may ſignify that the viſible church of God on earth is ſeparated from the world, and ſhould conſiſt of men called out of it, and of ſuch who are clothed with that fine linen, clean and white, the righteouſneſs of the ſaints, and which is the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and who have both inward and outward holineſs; and though none but thoſe who are admitted members of it, may partake of its ordinances, dinances, yet others may be ſpectators of what is done in it.

[t] Works, vol. 1. p. 722.

[s] הראה fecit videre, Pagninus, Montanus; oſtendit Dominus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius; ſo Ainſworth.

℣. 10. And the 20 pillars thereof, and their 20 ſockets ſhall be of braſs, &c.] On theſe pillars the hangings, vails, or curtains were ſet, and they were for one ſide, the ſouth ſide, in number 20; and ſo muſt ſtand 5 cubits, or two yards and a half or more, diſtant from each other, ſince the length of the hangings were 100 cubits: theſe, according to Philo the Jew [h], were made of cedar, but if of wood, moſt probably of ſhittim-wood, as they are by moſt thought to be; tho' one would think, according to the plain and expreſs words of the text, they as well as their ſockets were of braſs: and Joſephus [i] expreſsly ſays, they were of braſs, and which ſeem fitteſt for the purpoſe: now, tho' the church of God itſelf is a pillar, and ſo is every true member of it, 1 Tim. iii. 15. Rev. iii. 12. yet miniſters of the goſpel may be more eſpecially deſigned, Prov. ix. 1. Gal. ii. 9. Jer. i. 18. who are the principal ſupport of the churches of God, and of the intereſt of religion; and are ſet for the defence of the goſpel, and are ſtedfaſt in the miniſtration of it: the hooks of the pillars and their fillets ſhall be of ſilver; the hooks on the pillars might be ſomewhat like our tenter hooks, and ſo Jarchi deſcribes them, as having one end crooked upwards, and the other end fixed in the pillar; and as for the fillets, he ſays, they were ſilver threads round about the pillars; but whether they were upon the face or front of them all, or on the top, or in the middle of them, he confeſſes his ignorance; only this he knew, that the word has the ſignification of girding or binding; and theſe fillets might not only be for ornament but for the binding of the hangings to the pillars: and ſo Ben Gerſom ſays, that they were ſilver threads, with which the curtains were bound to the pillars, that the wind might not ſeparate them from them: and both the ſilver hooks and fillets may ſignify the word and ordinances as adminiſtred by the preachers of the goſpel, in which there is an union, conjunction, and communion between them and the churches.

℣. 11. And likewiſe for the north ſide, in length there ſhall be hangings of 100 cubits long, &c.] The north and ſouth ſides of this court being equal, the ſame length of hangings were for the one as the other: and his 20 pillars and their 20 ſockets of braſs; there went on this ſide the ſame number of pillars and ſockets, and of the ſame metal: the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of ſilver; juſt as they were on the ſouth ſide.

℣. 12. And for the breadth of the court, on the weſt ſide, &c.] On the weſt end, the upper end of the court, near to which reached the holy of holies: ſhall be hangings of 50 cubits; or 25 yards and more, ſo that the court was but half as broad as it was long: their pillars ten, and their ſockets ten; which was a number proportionate to the hangings, and ſtood at an equal diſtance from each other, as the pillars for the ſides, at 5 cubits, or two yards and a half, as commonly computed.

℣. 13. And the breadth of the court on the eaſt ſide, eaſtward, &c.] Which was the entrance into it: ſhall be 50 cubits; the eaſt end and weſt end were of the ſame meaſure.

℣. 14. The hangings of one ſide of the gate, &c.] Or entrance into the court: ſhall be 15 cubits; or ſeven yards and a half: their pillars three, and their ſockets three; and ſo ſtood at the ſame diſtance from one another as the reſt of the pillars did, the diſtance of five cubits.

℣. 15. And on the other ſide ſhall be hangings 15 cubits, &c.] On the other ſide of the gate, or entrance into the court, on the north-eaſt ſide, as the other may be ſuppoſed to be the ſouth-eaſt ſide, there was the ſame length of hangings: their pillars three, and their ſockets three; the ſame as on the other ſide of the gate.

℣. 16. And for the gate of the court ſhall be an hanging of 20 cubits, &c.] Which with the 15 on each ſide, make the 50 cubits, the breadth of the court eaſtward, ℣. 13. this hanging was better than the reſt, much finer and richer; for it was of blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, and fine twined linen wrought with needle-work; and was of the ſame as the hangings for the door of the holy place, ch. xxvi. 36. this was a figure of Chriſt, and of the graces of the Spirit in him, and of his bloodſhed, ſufferings, and death; who is the door into the church, and to the ordinances of it, and leads on to the holy place, and even to the holy of holies, ſee John x. 9. Heb. x. 20. their pillars ſhall be four, and their ſockets four; ſo that the pillars of this court at both ſides and each end were 60, 20 on each ſide, ſouth and north, and ten at each end, weſt and eaſt.

℣. 17. All the pillars round about the court ſhall be filleted with ſilver, &c.] This is obſerved, becauſe only mention is made before of the pillars that were on the ſouth and north ſides of the court, as filleted with ſilver; but inaſmuch as thoſe at both ends, eaſt and weſt, were to be ſo likewiſe, this is added: their hooks ſhall be of ſilver, and their ſockets of braſs; no notice having been taken of the hooks to the pillars at both ends, though they were as neceſſary there as elſewhere, and muſt be ſuppoſed, and though the ſockets are mentioned, yet not their metal, and therefore are in general included here.

℣. 18. The length of the court ſhall be 100 cubits, &c.] And as may be concluded from the length of the hangings on each ſide: and the breadth 50 every where; at both ends, and was the breadth of the hangings there, and which all around made the court: and the height five cubits; or two yards and a half, and ſomewhat more; it was but half the height of the tabernacle, and hence that might be ſeen above it every way; ſo that, according to biſhop Cumberland, it contained 1 rood, 21 perches, and 27 ſquare feet, and was half an Egyptian aroura, which is the ſquare of 100 Jewiſh or Egyptian cubits: of fine twined linen; of which the hangings were made, and here called the court, as they properly were, for they made it: and their ſockets of braſs; the baſes on which all the pillars ſtood, upon which the hangings of fine twined linen were, were of braſs; which ſeems to be repeated, that the foundation of this court might be obſerved to be different from that of the tabernacle; the foundation of that, or the ſockets, into which the boards of it were put, being of ſilver.

℣. 19. All the veſſels of the tabernacle in all the ſervice thereof, &c.] Which either refers to the veſſels belonging to the altar of burnt-offering, and ſo is a repetition of what is ſaid, ℣. 3. or rather to inſtruments that were uſed at the ſetting up and taking down of the tabernacle; ſuch as hammers and the like, to drive the ſtaves into the rings, and knock out the pillars from their ſockets, &c. as Jarchi and Ben Gerſom obſerve; for otherwiſe wiſe the veſſels uſed in the ſanctuary were of gold or ſilver, or covered therewith, and not of braſs. as theſe are afterwards ſaid to be: and all the pins thereof; what theſe were, is not eaſy to ſay; for there was nothing made of braſs in the holy or moſt holy place, but the taches or claſps, with which the curtains of goats hair were coupled together, and the ſockets on which the five pillars were ſet at the entrance of the door of the tabernacle, ch. xxvi. 11, 37. and it is poſſible that thoſe pillars might be faſtened in their ſockets with braſs pins; for the claſps or taches can hardly be called pins: and all the pins of the court ſhall be of braſs; theſe were braſs pins, or ſtakes faſtened in the ground all round the court, to which cords were tied, and theſe faſtened to the hangings; whereby they were kept tight and cloſe, that the wind could not move them to and fro, as Jarchi and Ben Melech obſerve, and ſo Joſephus [k]; ſee Iſ. xxxiii. 20.

[h] De vita Moſis, l. 3. p. 667,

[i] Antiq. l. 3. c. 6. § 2.

℣. 20. And thou ſhalt command the children of Iſrael, &c.] Here begins a new ſection of the law; an account being given of the tabernacle, and its parts, and the furniture thereof, next the ſeveral parts of ſervice done in it, are obſerved; and the account begins with that of the candleſtick in the holy place, in order to which Moſes is directed, to command the people of Iſrael, whoſe buſineſs it was to provide for it: that they bring thee pure oil beaten for the light; for the light of the candleſtick to light up the ſeveral lamps in the ſeveral branches of it; and the oil to be brought and uſed there was not any ſort of oil, as what is got out of fiſhes, as train-oil, or out of nuts, as oil of almonds, but what comes from the olive-tree; and this muſt be pure and free from lees and dregs, and muſt be beaten with a peſtle in a mortar, and not ground in a mill, that ſo it might be quite clear; for being bruiſed and beaten, only the pulp or fleſh of the olive was broken, but being ground in a mill the ſtones were broken and ground, and ſo the oil not ſo pure. Jarchi and Ben Melech, from their Rabbins, obſerve, that after the firſt drop was preſſed out, they put them into mills and grind them; but then, though the oil was fit for offerings, it was not fit for the light of the candleſtick. Ben Gerſom ſays, they put the olives bruiſed into a baſket, and the oil dropped from them without preſſing at all; and this was the choiceſt and moſt excellent for the light. The quantity to be brought is not fixed; but the meaſure fixed by the wiſe men of Iſrael, as Jarchi ſays, was half a log, that is, for every lamp; and this was the meaſure for the longeſt nights, the nights of the month Tebet, and ſo the ſame for all other nights: to cauſe the lamp to burn always; night and day, continually, as it was proper it ſhould, that the houſe of God might not be at any time in darkneſs; as it would otherwiſe be, ſince there were no windows in it; and his ſervants miniſter in it in the dark, even in the day-time, at the altar of incenſe, and at the ſhew-bread table, which is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe; and though there are ſome paſſages of ſcripture which ſeem to intimate, as though the lamps only burnt till the morning, and then went out, and were lighted every evening; this difficulty may be ſolved, and the matter reconciled by what Joſephus [l] relates, who muſt be an eye-witneſs of it, that three of the lamps burned before the Lord in the day-time, and the reſt were lighted at the evening; and Hecataeus [m], an heathen writer, ſpeaking of the golden candleſtick, ſays, its light was unextinguiſhed day and night, particularly the lamp which was in the middle; alſo the candleſtick is by the ancient Jews, and by Nachmanides, ſaid to have been never extinct.

℣. 21. In the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] The reaſons uſually given for this name of the tabernacle are, either becauſe the children of Iſrael gathered and met together here at certain times, or becauſe here the Lord met with Moſes, and his ſucceſſors, as he had promiſed, ch. xxv. 22. but neither of them will hold good; not the firſt, becauſe the place where the candleſtick was, and which Aaron and his ſons are here ſaid to order, was in the holy place, into which only the prieſts entered, and therefore could not be called the tabernacle of the congregation, from the people of Iſrael being gathered and aſſembling there; not the latter, becauſe it was in the moſt holy place where the Lord promiſed to meet with Moſes, and commune with him, even from between the cherubim over the mercy-ſeat there: indeed, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation the children of Iſrael aſſembled, and there the Lord met them, and ſo the whole might be called from thence, and there ſeems to be no other reaſon for it, ch. xxix. 42, 43. and this place was without the vail before the teſtimony; that is, without the vail which divided between the holy and the moſt holy place, and which vail was before the ark, where the law or the teſtimony was put; for the candleſtick was in that part of the tabernacle which was without the vail, or in the holy place: and here Aaron and his ſons ſhall order it from evening to morning before the Lord; that is, they were to take care that the lamps which went out might be lighted; and that they be kept clear and burning, they were to trim and ſnuff them, for which they had proper inſtruments provided for them, ch. xxv. 37, 38. This points at the word of God, which ſhines as a light in a dark place, and is a lamp to the feet, and a light to the path, and to the conſtant application of Goſpel-miniſters in preaching it, in order to enlighten men in all ages unto the end of the world: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever unto their generations, on the behalf of the children of Iſrael; on whom it was incumbent to provide oil for the lamps, as long as the tabernacle and temple-ſervice laſted; and figured out either the maintenance of Goſpel-miniſters by the churches, or the grace and gifts of the Spirit, with which they are furniſhed by the head of the church, often ſignified by oil in ſcripture.

[k] Antiq. l. 3. c. 6. §. 2. p. 408.

[l] Ib. c. 8. §. 3.

[m] Apud Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 9. c. 4.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXVIII.

THIS chapter informs us of the ſervants God would have to miniſter to him in the houſe, or tabernacle, he had ordered to be made, even Aaron and his ſons, ℣. 1. of the garments they were to wear in their ſervice, ℣. 2—5. and firſt of the garments of the high-prieſt, and particularly of the ephod, with the girdle, on the ſhoulder-pieces of which were to be two onyx ſtones, with the names of the children of Iſrael engraved on them, ℣. 6—14. and that of the breaſt-plate of judgment, with the Urim and Thummim in it, ℣. 15—30. and of the robe of the ephod, ℣. 31—35. and of the mitre, ℣. 36—39. and then of the garments of the common prieſts, ℣. 40—43.

℣. 1. And take thou unto thee Aaron thy brother, and his ſons with thee, &c.] Moſes is bid to fetch or ſend for Aaron and his ſons to him; or cauſe them to draw near [n] to him, and ſtand before him, that he might in the name of the Lord, and by his authority, diſtinguiſh and ſeparate them: from among the children of Iſrael; and before them all inveſt them with the office of prieſthood, as it follows: that they may miniſter unto me in the prieſt's office; before this time every maſter of a family was a prieſt, and might and did offer ſacrifice, and all the Iſraelites were a kingdom of prieſts; and Moſes, as Aben Ezra calls him, was a prieſt of prieſts; but now it being enough for him to be the political ruler of the people, and the prophet of the Lord, the prieſtly office is beſtowed on Aaron and his ſons; nor might any afterwards officiate in it, but ſuch as were of his family; and a great honour this was that was conferr'd on him, and to which he was called of God, as in Heb. v. 4. and it is greatly in the favour of Moſes, and which ſhews him to be an upright and undeſigning man, that ſought not to aggrandize himſelf and his family; that though he had ſo much honour and power himſelf, he ſought not to entail any upon his poſterity. It is hinted in the latter part of the preceding chapter, that Aaron and his ſons ſhould miniſter in the ſanctuary, and look after the candleſtick, and its lamps; and here the deſign of God concerning them is more fully opened, which was, that they ſhould be his peculiar miniſters and ſervants in his houſe, to do all the buſineſs appertaining to it: even Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar, Aaron's ſons; who were all the ſons that Aaron had that we read of; though Aben Ezra thinks it probable, that he might have other ſons, and therefore the names of thoſe are particularly mentioned, who were to be taken into the prieſt's office with him; the two firſt of theſe died very quickly after this, in a very awful manner, as the ſacred ſtory relates; and from the other two ſprung all the prieſts that were in all ſucceſſive generations.

℣. 2. And thou ſhalt make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, &c.] Called ſo, becauſe in theſe he was to miniſter in the holy place, and perform holy ſervice; and becauſe typical of the holy human nature of Chriſt our great high-prieſt, and of his ſpotleſs righteouſneſs, and of the garments of ſanctification, both outward and inward, that all believers in him, who are made prieſts unto God, are arrayed with: Aaron and his ſons, being appointed prieſts, their garments are firſt deſcribed before their work, and even before their conſecration to their office; and there were ſome peculiar to Aaron, or the high-prieſt, and different from thoſe of his ſons, or the common prieſts; and which are firſt treated of, as the breaſt-plate, the robe of ephod, and the plate of gold; beſides theſe, there were four more common to all the prieſts, as the coat, the breeches, the girdle and bonnet. Now whereas ſome of the heathen prieſts performed their office, and offered their ſacrifices, naked, which was very ſhameful and abominable, as Braunius [o] from various authors has ſhown, though this was not done by them all; in oppoſition to ſuch a filthy practice, and to ſhew his deteſtation of it, the Lord orders his prieſts to be clothed, and that in a very ſplendid manner, with garments for glory and beauty; that is, with glorious and beautiful ones, and which would make his prieſts look ſo: and this was done, partly to point out the dignity of their office to themſelves, that they might take care to behave ſuitable to it, and keep up the honour and credit of it; and partly to make them reſpectable unto men, and be honoured by them, none being clothed as they were, as Aben Ezra obſerves; but chiefly becauſe they were typical of the glory and beauty of Chriſt's human nature, which was as a garment put on, and put off, and on again, and in which he officiated as a prieſt, and ſtill does; and which is now very glorious, and in which he is fairer than any of the children of men; and of the garments of his ſalvation, and robe of righteouſneſs, in which all his people, his prieſts, appear exceeding glorious and beautiful, even in a perfection of beauty.

℣. 3. And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto all that are wiſe-hearted, &c.] That have knowledge and underſtanding in mechanic arts, particularly in making garments; and it required men of more than ordinary ſkill to be employed in making theſe, becauſe they were uncommon ones, and required a good deal of thought and judgment, and care and application, to make them exactly as they ſhould be: whom I have filled with the ſpirit of wiſdom; for beſides a common underſtanding of things, theſe required a peculiar gift from God, which ſome men, as Bezaleel, and Aholiab had: that they may make Aaron's garments, to conſecrate him, to put upon him at the time of his conſecration; and indeed this was one way, by which, as well as by ſacrifices, that he was conſecrated, ſee ch. xxix. 1, 5, 6. that he may miniſter unto me in the prieſt's office; for the prieſts without having theſe garments on, might not miniſter in their office; for when theſe garments were off, as they were when they were out of their ſervice, they were as other men, as laymen, ſee Ezek. xlii. 14. and the note there.

℣. 4. And theſe are the garments which they ſhall make, &c.] Some for Aaron and ſome for his ſons, ſome peculiar to the high prieſt, and others in common to him and other prieſts: a breaſt-plate, and an ephod, and a robe, and a broidered coat, a mitre and a girdle; of each of which, with others, there is a more particular account in this chapter, and will be obſerved in their order: and they ſhall make make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, and his sons; as those before-mentioned, with some others not mentioned; some for Aaron only, and others that were to be worn by his sons also: that he may minister unto me in the priest's office; these were absolutely necessary to the execution of the priestly office, and an essential qualification for it, and without which it was not lawful to serve in it.

[n] הקרב appropinquare fac, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus.

[o] De veſtitu Sacerdot. Heb. l. 1. c. 1. §. 5. p. 11.

℣. 5. And they shall take, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan adds, out of their substance; that is, those that were wise-hearted, and had knowledge and skill in making such garments; these were to take, not out of their own personal substance, but they were to take or receive from Moses what the people freely offered for such service, ch. xxxvi. 3. gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen; pieces of gold, which they beat into thin plates, and drew into wires, and which they worked into stuffs, woollen or linen, or both; of the colours here mentioned; all which were made use of in the ephod, girdle, breast-plate, &c. see ch. xxxix. 3. and had a mystical significancy in them.

℣. 6. And they shall make the ephod, &c.] This was the outermost garment of all, and was put over the robe; it was a short garment, reaching to the loins, as Kimchi [p]; or to the buttocks, as Abarbinel [q]; and not to the heels or feet, as Jarchi [r], and Maimonides [s]; for Josephus [t] says, it was but a cubit long, which was little more than half a yard; he means, that part of it which was distinct from the shoulder-pieces, and came down from thence; the hinder part of it covered the back and reached to the middle of the buttocks; and the forepart covered the breast and belly, and with shoulder-pieces under the arm-holes was buttoned with onyx stones upon the top of the shoulders, and was girt about the breast with a curious girdle: it had no sleeves, though Josephus [u] says it had, as appears from the make of it; it was different from the linen ephod worn by the common priests and others, and was a symbol of the human nature of Christ, our great high priest: it was made of gold, of blue, and of purple, of scarlet, and fine twined linen, with cunning work; the stuff of which it was made, was interwoven with threads of gold, and threads of blue, purple, and scarlet yarn, and threads of linen, wrought with divers figures in a curious manner, which looked very beautiful; and was a fit emblem of the glory, excellency, and purity of Christ's human nature; of the various graces of the Spirit in it; of his heavenly original; of his blood, sufferings, and death, and glorious exaltation; and of its being a curious piece of workmanship wrought by the Lord himself, Heb. x. 5.

℣. 7. It shall have the two shoulder-pieces thereof, &c.] Which were two pieces that joined to the ephod, reaching from the arm-holes to the shoulders both on the right and left, coming from before and behind; and meeting on the shoulders, were buttoned with two onyx stones, and covering the shoulders are called by this name: joined at the two edges thereof; the two edges of the ephod; not sewed thereunto with a needle, as Maimonides [w] and other Jewish writers think, but were woven along with it, and in the weaving was of the same with it: and so it shall be joined together; that is, the hinder and fore parts of the ephod in the shoulder-pieces of it, shall be joined together by the two onyx stones upon them, hereafter mentioned, with which they were buttoned.

℣. 8. And the curious girdle of the ephod, which is upon it, &c.] Which was worn along with it; and went out from it like two thongs, as Jarchi says, which girt the ephod close to the back and breast: shall be of the same; of the same matter as the ephod, and woven in the same manner, and together with it: according to the work thereof; wrought with the same coloured, curious and cunning work: even of gold, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen; and from the gold in it, it was called a golden girdle, to distinguish it from others, and with it the priest was girt under the arm-holes about the paps, to which the allusion is, Rev. i. 13. and is an emblem of the close union of the human nature of Christ to his divine person, which is the effect of his love to his people; and which, as it is seen in his incarnation, so more especially in his sufferings and death; and it may denote his strength to do his work as a priest, his readiness to perform it, and his faithfulness and integrity in it; righteousness being the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.

℣. 9. And thou shalt take two onyx stones, &c.] So called from the colour of a man's nail, which they are thought to resemble: the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan call them stones of beryl, and so the Syriac version; the Septuagint, stones of emerald, and the Arabic version, crystal stones: but, according to Josephus [x], they were sardonyx-stones, and in which Braunius [y] thinks he was right: and grave on them the names of the children of Israel; the names of the 12 sons of Jacob, 6 on one stone and 6 on the other, as often mentioned, for which onyx stones are very fit; and they must be very large to have so many letters engraved upon them; for there is no reason to believe the initial letters of their names only were engraven, but their whole names at length. In the Museum at Dresden is an oriental onyx which cost 48000 dollars; it is of an oval figure, and its longest diameter is almost six inches, and in such an one might easily be engraved so many names: and Wagenseil makes mention of one in the possession of the bishop of Bamberg, in which were represented Christ sitting, and teaching his 12 apostles standing round him, of which he has given the figure [z]: the onyx stone being of the colour observed, was a fit emblem of Christ in his human nature, and if the sardonyx, of him in both his natures; and as the 12 tribes of Israel were a figure of the church, their names being on two stones, may denote both the Jewish and Gentile churches; these being precious stones on which they were engraven, may signify how valuable the church and its members are to Christ; and being alike there, their being equally loved of God, chosen in Christ, redeemed by his blood, interested in all the blessings of his grace, and shall enjoy the same glory; and their names being there, the distinct knowledge had of them by name, and being in ouches of gold, their dignity and safety, as afterwards declared.

℣. 10. Six of their names on one stone, &c.] The names of the six eldest on the stone upon the right shoulder: and the other six names of the rest on the other other ſtone; the names of the ſix youngeſt on the ſtone upon the left ſhoulder; for theſe ſtones, as afterwards ſaid, were put on the ſhoulders of the prieſts, according to their birth; the order of it; ſo, that upon the firſt ſtone were engraven the names of Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Dan, and Naphtali; and on the ſecond ſtone the names of Gad, Aſher, Iſſachar, Zebulun, Joſeph, and Benjamin; and ſo they are diſpoſed by Jarchi, with whom Joſephus agrees [a]; though ſome Jewiſh writers, and particularly Maimonides [b], place them otherwiſe; but this ſeems moſt agreeable to the letter and ſenſe of the text.

[p] Comment. in 1 Chron. 15. 27. [q] Comment. in loc. [r] Comment. in loc. [s] Hilchot Cele Hamikdash, c. 9. §. 9 [t] Antiq. l. 3. c. 7. §. 5. [u] Ibid. [w] Ut supra. [x] Ut supra. [y] De vestitu sacerd. Heb. l. 2. c. 18. §. 4. p. 730. [z] Not. in Misn. Sotah, c. 9. p. 996.

℣. 11. With the work of an engraver in ſtone, &c.] Not in common but precious ſtones: Moſes was not to do this himſelf, as it could not be ſuppoſed he ſhould, but he was to employ an engraver, whoſe buſineſs it was, and one that was capable of doing it workman-like: like the engravings of a ſignet, ſhalt thou engrave the two ſtones with the names of the children of Iſrael; as in ſignets or ſeals, by which impreſſions are made on wax, the letters or figures are cut deep, that they might on the wax ſtand out; ſo it ſeems, the letters of the names of the children of Iſrael were cut in theſe ſtones: this ſhews that engraving on precious ſtones is very antique, and the antients indeed are ſaid to excel in this art: thou ſhalt make them to be ſet in ouches of gold; in beazils or ſockets, ſuch as precious ſtones in rings are ſet in; theſe with the ſtones in them ſerved as buttons to faſten together the hinder and forepart of the ephod on the ſhoulder-pieces of it.

℣. 12. And thou ſhalt put the ſtones upon the ſhoulders of the ephod, &c.] i. e. the ſhoulder-pieces of it; theſe ſtones were put there, the names of the 12 ſons of Iſrael being engraven on them, and they ſet in rims or ſockets of gold, and ſerving for buttons to the ſhoulder-pieces: but chiefly the deſign of them was for ſtones of memorial unto the children of Iſrael; not to put the Iſraelites in mind of the merits of their anceſtors, as the Targum of Jonathan; for none of their works were meritorious, and ſome were not good, and not worthy of remembrance; but rather to put Aaron or the high prieſt in mind to pray and make interceſſion for the 12 tribes, whoſe names were on the ſtones; or rather to put God himſelf in remembrance of his promiſes made unto them, and that they were his dear, ſpecial, and peculiar people; juſt as the rainbow was to be a memorial to the Lord, of the covenant he made with all fleſh, and which is to be underſtood after the manner of men: and Aaron ſhall bear their names before the Lord, upon his two ſhoulders for a memorial; ſignifying his preſentation of them to the Lord when he appeared before him on the mercy-ſeat; his interceſſion for them, and his patient bearing all their infirmities and weakneſſes; in which he was a type of Chriſt, who preſents all his people to his divine Father, makes interceſſion for them, and bears all their burdens, the care and government of them being upon his ſhoulders, Iſ. ix. 6. Luke xv. 4.

℣. 13. And thou ſhalt make ouches of gold.] Or ſockets of gold, to put the two onyx ſtones in, ℣. 11. for of other ouches we read not, excepting the incloſings, in which the 12 ſtones of the breaſt-plate were ſet, ℣. 20. and theſe are again mentioned becauſe of the chains to be faſtened to them, of which in the following verſe.

℣. 14. And two chains of pure gold at the ends, &c.] The uſe of which was to hang the breaſt-plate on, after deſcribed; one end of them was faſtened to rings on the ouches in the ſhoulder-pieces, and the other end to rings on the breaſt-plate, and thus it hung: of wreathen work ſhalt thou make them; theſe chains were not made after the manner of circles or ringlets coupled together, as chains uſually are, but of golden wires twiſted together as a rope is twiſted: and faſten the wreathen chains to the ouches; to the ouches on the ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod, in which the onyx ſtones were ſet, very probably to rings that were in theſe ouches.

℣. 15. And thou ſhalt make the breaſt-plate of judgment, &c.] Called a breaſt-plate, becauſe worn upon the breaſt of the high prieſt; and a breaſt-plate of judgment, becauſe it was to put him in mind that he ſhould do juſtice and judgment in the execution of his office, and that he ſhould have at heart the judgment of the people of Iſrael; and in difficult caſes ſhould aſk it of God, and faithfully declare it to them: it was, with the 12 ſtones in it an emblem of the church and people of God, borne upon the heart of Chriſt our great high-prieſt, who are made righteous by him, yea, the righteouſneſs of God in him, and are called by his name, the Lord our righteouſneſs; the judgment or government of whom is committed to him, and which he exerciſes, by appointing laws and ordinances for them, by conſtituting and qualifying perſons to act under him, to explain thoſe laws and ſee them put in execution, by vindicating and protecting them, and by the open juſtification of them at the laſt day: with cunning work, after the work of the ephod thou ſhalt make it; wrought with divers figures in a very curious manner: of gold, of blue, and of purple, and of ſcarlet, and of fine twined linen ſhalt thou make it; a piece of ſtuff interwoven with threads of gold, or golden wires, and with threads of yarn of blue, purple and ſcarlet colours, and with threads of fine twined linen ſix times doubled; all which may ſignify the beautiful array of the ſaints, with the ſeveral graces of the Spirit; and eſpecially their being clothed with fine linen, called the righteouſneſs of the ſaints; that raiment of needle-work, and clothing of wrought gold, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, conſiſting of his obedience, ſufferings and death, fitly expreſſed by theſe various colours.

℣. 16. Four-ſquare it ſhall be, being doubled, &c.] That is, when it was doubled; for the length of it, according to Maimonides [c], was a cubit, which is two ſpans, and ſo when it was doubled, was but one, and its length and breadth being alike, as follows: a ſpan ſhall be the length thereof, and a ſpan ſhall be the breadth thereof; a four-ſquare, which is the meaſure, the form of the new Jeruſalem, the church of Chriſt, Rev. xxi. 16. and may denote the perfection, firmneſs and immoveableneſs of it, Pſ. cxxv. 1. Some have thought, that this breaſt-plate was doubled, in order to have ſomething incloſed in it: ſome imagine, that within this fold were put the Urim and Thummim, which they ſuppoſe to be two words engraved on a ſtone, and different from the 12 ſtones in it; others, that the name of Jehovah was written and put there, as the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi on ℣. 30. and other Jewiſh writers, and others, fancy ſome little images were put within theſe folds, the ſame with with the Teraphim, and ſuppoſed to be the Urim and Thummim; but if theſe were hid in the folds, they could not be ſeen when conſulted; it is moſt probable there was nothing put within the double, which was not done for any ſuch uſe; but moſt likely, that it might be ſtrong to bear the weight of the precious ſtones, put in ouches of gold upon it.

[a] Ut ſupra. [b] Cele Hamikdaſh, ut ſupra. [c] Cele Hemikdaſh, c. 9. §. 6.

℣. 17. And thou ſhalt ſet in it ſettings of ſtones, &c.] Or fill in it fillings of ſtones [d]; which ſhews that there were in it ouches, or ſockets of gold, the hollows of which were to be filled up with precious ſtones: even four rows of ſtones; making a four-ſquare, and ſo filling up the meaſure of the breaſt-plate: the firſt row ſhall be a ſardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle; about theſe ſtones, and thoſe that follow, there is a great variety of interpretations of them, both among Jews and Chriſtians; and they ſeem to be little known: our tranſlators upon the whole ſeem to be as right as any in giving the names of them; the firſt of theſe, the ſardius, is a red ſtone of a blood colour, as the cornelian or ruby, and which ſome have thought is here meant, and has its name either from the place where it has been found, Sardis or Sardinia; or rather from its red colour; for Sered ſignifies red in Iſ. xliv. 13. as Braunius [e] has obſerved from Kimchi; and ſo Odem, which is the word here uſed, ſignifies, and undoubtedly intends a ſtone of ſuch a colour; and it is highly probable, that this is the Demium of Pliny [f], which is one of the three kinds of ſardius in India; and the red is ſo called from its redneſs, as the ſame Braunius obſerves. The ſecond ſtone, the topaz, had its name, according to Pliny [g], from an iſland in Arabia, in the Red Sea, called Topazos; and the beſt topaz is the topaz of Cuſh or Arabia, as in Job xxviii. 19. The topaz of the ancients was of a green colour; and ſo the three Targums call this ſtone Jarken or Jarketha, which ſignifies green; hence ſome have taken this to be the emerald, which is of a fine green colour: the third ſtone is the carbuncle, as we render it; whatever ſtone is meant, it muſt be a bright and glittering one, like lightening, as the word ſignifies; wherefore ſome have taken it to be the emerald, ſo the Septuagint and Braunius [h]; it being a very radiant and glittering ſtone, of a graſs green, and very refreſhing to the ſight; but Danæus [i] ſays, that the carbuncle is that ſpecies of the ruby, which of all is moſt beautiful and excellent, and darts out light like lightening to thoſe that look at it at a diſtance, and ſhines in the middle of the night and darkneſs, ſo that it enlightens places near it, as if it were a ſun: this ſhall be the firſt row; now upon theſe three ſtones were engraven the names of Reuben, Simeon and Levi, as both the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem agree.

℣. 18. And the ſecond row ſhall be an emerald, a ſapphire, and a diamond.] The firſt of theſe ſtones is by both the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan rendered an emerald, as by us; and which is deſcribed by Pliny [k] as of a green colour, exceeding delightful and pleaſant, and to which he gives the third place among precious ſtones; though by many the ſtone here called Nophec, is thought to be the carbuncle, and is ſo rendered by the Septuagint: the carbuncle of the ancients is no other than what we call the ruby; and which Braunius [l] thinks is here meant, and ſo Abarbinel, which is juſt making an exchange of the laſt ſtone of the firſt row for this; and De Dieu obſerves, that if any chuſes to render the preceding ſtone an emerald, as Braunius does, he muſt render this a carbuncle or ruby; and if he renders that a carbuncle, then he muſt take this for an emerald. The next ſtone is the ſapphire, of which one would think there could be no doubt, ſince it is the very Hebrew word itſelf that is here uſed; which Ruæus [m] ſays is of a ſky colour, and ſparkles with golden ſpots or ſpecks, with which agrees Job xxviii. 6. The third ſtone of this row is the diamond or adamant; and that this ſtone is meant, ſeems clear from its name Jahalom, which comes from a word which ſignifies to break; and from hence a hammer has its name, becauſe this ſtone pierces, cuts and breaks other ſtones, but cannot be broken itſelf. On theſe three ſtones were engraved, according to the Jeruſalem Targum, the names of the three tribes of Judah, Iſſachar and Zebulun; but more truly, according to the Targum of Jonathan, the names of the tribes of Judah, Dan and Naphtali, and ſo Jarchi; for the names here, as on the onyx ſtones, were according to the order of their birth.

℣. 19. And the third row, a ligure, an agate, and an amethyſt.] The firſt of theſe ſtones, the ligure or lyncurius, is ſaid to be ſo called from the congealed urine of the lynx [n], but rather from the ſpots of that creature; for according to Danæus [o], it is the ſame ſtone with that called Stellina, from having many ſpecks like ſtars ſpread about in it. Braunius [p] takes the jacinth ſtone to be here meant, and ſo does Ainſworth; ſee Rev. xxi. 20. the ſecond ſtone, the agate, is well known; and though now of little account, was formerly in great eſteem, as Pliny [q] aſſerts, and therefore may well be thought to have a place among theſe ſtones. Pyrrhus king of Epirus had a very famous one, in which, not by art, but by nature, were ſeen the nine muſes, and Apollo holding an harp: the word for it here is Shebo, which comes from a word which ſignifies to captivate; becauſe, as De Dieu obſerves, this ſtone is eaſily captivated under the hand of the artificer; there being no ſtone which ſo eaſily admits of engravings as this. The laſt of this row is the amethyſt; which ſtone has its name either from its being of the colour of wine; or as others, from its being a preſervative from drunkenneſs: the Hebrew word Achlamah, ſeems to come from a word which ſignifies to dream; and this ſtone is ſuppoſed to cauſe perſons to dream, as Aben Ezra, from one of their wiſemen, relates. On theſe three ſtones, according to the Jeruſalem Targum, were written the names of the tribes of Dan, Naphtali and Gad; but according to the Targum of Jonathan, Gad, Aſher and Iſſachar, which is much better, for a reaſon before given.

℣. 20. And the fourth row, a beryl, and an onyx, and a jaſper, &c. Whatever ſtone is meant by the firſt in this row, it muſt be of a ſea-green colour; for Tarſhiſh, the word uſed, ſignifies the ſea; and ſo the beryl, as Pliny [r] ſays, imitates the greenneſs of the pure ſea. Braunius [s] takes it to be the chryſolite, that is meant; and ſo does Ainſworth; and it is ſo rendered by the Septuagint; and this, according to Ruæus [t], is of a colour like the greenneſs of the ſea: the onyx has its name from its being

[d] ומלאת בו מלאת אבן & implebis in eo plenitudinem lapidis, Montanus; vel eum impletione lapidis, Pagninus; implebis in eo impletione lapidis, Druſius. [e] De veſtitu Sacerd. Heb. l. 2. c. 8. §. 10. p. 639. [f] Nat. Hiſt. l. 37. c. 7. [g] Ibid. l. 6. c. 29. [h] Ut ſupra, c. 10. §. 4. p. 653. [i] Apud De Dieu in loc. [k] Ut ſupra, c. 5. [l] Ut ſupra, c. 11. §. 2, 7. p. 661, 667. [m] De Gemmis, l. 2. c. 2. [n] Vid. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 37. c. 3. [o] Apud De Dieu in loc. [p] Ut ſupra, c. 14. §. 9. p. 699. [q] Nat. Hiſt. l. 37. c. 10. [r] Ib. c. 5. [s] Ut ſupra, c. 17. §. 7. p. 720. [t] De Gemmis, l. 2. c. 7.

ing of the colour of a man's nail, as obſerved before; but here Shoham is thought by Braunius [u] to be the ſardonyx, following Joſephus, Jerom and the Vulgate Latin verſion, which is a compound of the Sardian and onyx ſtones: the laſt is undoubtedly rightly rendered the jaſper, for the Hebrew word is Jaſpeh: this ſtone is ſometimes variegated with ſpots like a panther, and therefore is called by Onkelos, Pantere; the moſt valuable is the green ſpotted with red or purple: they ſhall be ſet in gold in their incloſings; or be ſet and incloſed in ouches or ſockets of gold, as the two onyx ſtones upon the ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod: there were 12 of theſe ouches or ſockets, which might be made out of one piece of gold, into which the twelve above ſtones were put. Theſe ſtones were, no doubt, brought out of Egypt by the children of Iſrael, and were the gifts of their princes.

℣. 21. And the ſtones ſhall be with the names of the children of Iſrael, 12 according to their names, &c.] And juſt ſo many are reckoned up in the preceding verſes, each of which had one or other of the names of the children of Iſrael engraved on them, according to the order of their names in their birth. Some have thought that Levi's name was omitted, but their reaſon for it ſeems not ſufficient; for why might not he bear the name of his own tribe, and repreſent that as well as the reſt, ſince the whole Iſrael of God is repreſented by his antitype? like the engravings of a ſignet, every one with his name ſhall they be according to the twelve tribes; not like the impreſſion of a ſeal on wax, then the letters indeed would have been protuberant, as ſome have thought; but theſe were like the engravings of a ſeal, in which the letters or figures are cut within it: theſe 12 ſtones, with the names on them, repreſent the 12 tribes of Iſrael, and they the whole ſpiritual Iſrael of God; and being precious ſtones, ſhew the excellency of the people of God, of what value, and in what eſteem they are with God and Chriſt, being their jewels and peculiar treaſure; and their names being in them, denote the ſpecial and particular knowledge God has of them, their names being written in heaven in the book of life; and they are called by name by the Lord; and being engraved as a ſignet, is an emblem of their being ſet as a ſeal on the arm and heart of Chriſt, and of their being as dear and precious to him as a ſignet on a man's right-hand; and being ſet in ouches and incloſures of gold, expreſs both the dignity and excellency, and the careful preſervation of them: theſe were ſet in rows, as members of churches are, every one in his order, rank and ſtation, 1 Cor. xii. 18, 28.

℣. 22. And thou ſhalt make upon the breaſt-plate chains at the ends, &c.] One end of them to be put to the breaſt-plate, and the other end to the ouches on the ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod, by which the breaſt-plate hung from thence: the Targum of Jonathan renders it, chains of a certain determined bigneſs, of length and thickneſs exactly alike; or terminable ones, as it may be rendered, not circular like a locket, or chain of gold worn about the neck, but that had ends to it: ſome interpret it chains, made like ropes, in the ſame manner as cables are, twiſted together; and ſuch it is certain they were, by what follows: of wreathen work, of pure gold; not of circles and ringlets of gold coupled together, but of golden wires twiſted together, as ropes are.

℣. 23. And thou ſhalt make upon the breaſt-plate two rings of gold, &c.] On the upper part of it, above, toward the two ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod; theſe were to put one end of the chains into before mentioned: and ſhalt put the two rings on the two ends of the breaſt-plate; the two upper ends or corners of it, the right and left.

℣. 24. And thou ſhalt put two wreathen chains of gold in the two rings, &c.] This expreſſes both how many chains were to be made, which is not before ſaid, and the uſe of them, or where they were to be put, as well as the uſe of the rings: which are on the ends of the breaſt-plate; the two uppermoſt ends or corners of it.

℣. 25. And the other two ends of the two wreathen chains thou ſhalt faſten in the two ouches, &c.] In which the two onyx ſtones were ſet on the ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod, and were as buttons to them; probably there were rings to thoſe ouches, into which theſe ends of the wreathen chains of gold, reaching from the breaſt-plate, were put; or however, by ſome means or other they were faſtened to theſe ouches or ſockets: and put them in the ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod before it; that is, on the ouches upon them, as before obſerved; into that part or ſide of the ouches which was to the fore-part of the ephod; ſo that the breaſt-plate hung by theſe chains from the ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod, on the fore-part of it, upon the breaſt of the high-prieſt.

℣. 26. And thou ſhalt make two rings of gold, &c.] Two other rings beſides thoſe before mentioned: and thou ſhalt put them upon the two ends of the breaſt-plate; on the other two ends or corners of it: in the border thereof, which is in the ſide of the ephod inward; theſe were at the two lower ends of the breaſt-plate, towards the ephod on the inſide.

℣. 27. And two other rings of gold thou ſhalt make, &c.] This is the third pair of rings ordered to be made, the two other pair were for the four ends or corners of the breaſt-plate, but this pair was for the ephod: and ſhalt put them on the two ſides of the ephod; one on the right and the other on the left: underneath towards the fore-part thereof; underneath the ephod, yet towards the fore-part of it; or rather, on the fore-part of it, though ſo as the rings could not be ſeen: over-againſt the other coupling thereof; either ſo as to anſwer to the other coupling of the breaſt-plate to the ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod above; or to the rings at the ends of the breaſt-plate below, with which theſe were to be coupled with a lace of blue; and ſo the word other here ſupplied may be left out: above the curious girdle of the ephod; juſt above that theſe rings in the ephod were, to anſwer to the rings in the lower ends of the breaſt-plate.

℣. 28. And they ſhall bind the breaſt-plate by the rings thereof, &c.] By the rings at the lower ends of it, as it was by the rings at the upper ends of it to the ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod; or lift it up, ſo ſome interpret it [w]; as if it was ſaid, they ſhall lift up the breaſt-plate to join it with the ephod that is above it: unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue; this blue lace was put both into the rings of the breaſt-plate and into the rings of the ephod, and ſo being tied in a knot, faſtened them together; as the ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod and the breaſt-plate were coupled above, with wreathen chains of gold put into rings: now this was done, that it may be above the curious girdle of the ephod; that the breaſt-plate might be above it, or elſe the lace of blue: and that the breaſt-

4 plate

[u] Ut ſupra, c. 18. §. 4. p. 730.

[w] R. Sol. Urbin. Ohel Moed, fol. 89. 2.

plate be not looſed from the ephod; but be kept tight and cloſe to it by the wreathen chains above, and by the knots of blue lace below; which may denote the conjunction of the prophetic and prieſtly offices in Chriſt; the former being ſignified by the breaſt-plate of judgment, in which the Urim and Thummim were, and the latter by the ephod; or elſe the union of the ſaints to Chriſt, the bond of which is everlaſting love, from which there can be no ſeparation; this union can never be diſſolved, his people can never be looſed from him, they are members of his body, and one ſpirit with him.

℣. 29. And Aaron ſhall bear the names of the children of Iſrael in the breaſt-plate of judgment, upon his heart, &c.] Their names being engraven on the ſtones, and the ſtones put into the breaſt-plate of judgment, and this breaſt-plate hanging down upon the breaſt and heart of Aaron, he was a repreſentative of the 12 tribes of Iſrael, as Chriſt his antitype is the repreſentative of the whole Iſrael of God; and who lie near the heart of Chriſt, are ſet as a ſeal upon it, are engraven on the palms of his hands, and carried in his boſom, and whom he always preſents to his divine Father, and are accepted in him: he repreſented them in eternity, and in time; in his ſufferings and death, in his burial and reſurrection from the dead, when they were crucified, buried, and raiſed with him; and he repreſents them now in heaven, where they ſit together in heavenly places in him, as it here follows in the type: when he goeth in unto the holy place; to trim the lamps and offer incenſe, and eſpecially when he went into the moſt holy place once a year: for a memorial before the Lord continually; for a memorial to himſelf, to pray for them when he appeared before the Lord, and to put the Lord in remembrance of his covenant with them, and promiſes to them, ſee the note on ℣. 12. Iſ. xliii. 26. the Targum of Jonathan is, for a good memorial, not a memorial for evil but for good.

℣. 30. And thou ſhalt put in the breaſt-plate of judgment, the Urim and the Thummim, &c.] What theſe were, interpreters are at a loſs about, both Jewiſh and chriſtian; ſome have confeſſed their ignorance of them; ſome have conjectured they were only theſe two words written, and put in the duplicature of the breaſt-plate; others that the name of Jehovah with other divine names, were put there and ſo called; and ſome have fancied that they were little images, the ſame with the teraphim, the high prieſt carried in the folds of the breaſt-plate, by which conſultation was made; others have thought them to be a work purely divine, and of Jehovah's putting there; for my own part I am inclined to follow Joſephus [x], who takes them to be the ſame with the twelve ſtones; and it is obſervable that where the ſtones are mentioned nothing is ſaid of the Urim and Thummim, and where the Urim and Thummim are obſerved, no notice is taken of the ſtones, ſee ch. xxxix. 10, &c. Lev. viii. 8. the uſe of theſe was to have the names of the children of Iſrael engraven upon them, and ſo be borne on the heart of Aaron, when he went into the holy place, as is here ſaid of the Urim and Thummim; and that conſulation might be made by them in matters of moment and difficulty, as appears from various other paſſages of the ſcripture, Numb. xxvii. 21. 1 Sam. xxiii. 9. and xxviii. 6. but in what manner this was done, and in what way the anſwer was given and underſtood, are not eaſily accounted for: ſome ſay, by the brightneſs or protuberance of the letters on the ſtones; others, by the ſhining and ſplendor of the ſtones, which is more probable; others, by an inward impreſſion on the mind of the prieſt; and others, by an articulate voice, which ſeems beſt of all: the Septuagint render theſe two words manifeſtation and truth; and Ælianus [y] reports, that the chief and oldeſt among the Egyptian prieſts and judges wore an image of a ſapphire ſtone about his neck, which they called truth; and according to Diodorus Siculus [z], this image was of more precious ſtones than one; for he ſays, the preſident in the Egyptian courts of judicature had on his neck, hanging on a golden chain, an image of precious ſtones which they called truth: but there is no reaſon to believe that this cuſtom was as antient as the times of the Iſraelites in Egypt, or that they borrowed this from them; but rather, that the Egyptians did this in imitation of what the high prieſt among the Jews wore, which they might learn from the Jews in Solomon's time, or in later ages: the words Urim and Thummim ſignify lights and perfections, agreeable to which is the paraphraſe of Jonathan; "Urim, which enlighten their words, and mani- "feſt the hidden things of the houſe of Iſrael, "and Thummim, which perfect their works, by "the high prieſt, who ſeeks inſtruction from the "Lord by them:" they were typical of Chriſt, in whom all lights and perfections are; all light is in him; the light of nature and reaſon is from him, as the creator, and is given to every man that comes into the world; the light of grace is with him, and communicated to all his people at converſion, and in all the after degrees and ſupplies of it; all light and knowledge in divine things is from him, the knowledge of God, of himſelf, and of the goſpel, and the truths of it; and the light of glory will be from him: all the perfections of deity, the whole fulneſs of the godhead, all human perfections, which make him as man in all things like unto us, but far exceeding us; as mediator, all the bleſſings and promiſes of the covenant are in him; all the gifts of the Spirit, and a fulneſs of all grace; there are in him perfect righteouſneſs, perfect holineſs, all light, life, ſtrength, wiſdom, joy, and comfort [a]: and theſe ſtones, or Urim and Thummim, may be an emblem alſo of the ſaints, being made light and perfect righteouſneſs in Chriſt, from whom they have both: and they ſhall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goeth in before the Lord; either into the holy or into the moſt holy place, juſt as the names of the children of Iſrael on the ſtones are ſaid to be, ℣. 29. ſee the note there: and Aaron ſhall bear the judgment of the children of Iſrael upon his heart, before the Lord continually; not only bear their names and remember their caſes, make interceſſion for them, and repreſent their perſons, in all which he was a type of Chriſt, but bear their judgment, have that at heart, and adminiſter it unto them; and in all doubtful and difficult caſes enquire of God what was fit and right to do for them, or for them to do: ſo Chriſt has the government of his people, both at heart and in his hands; all judgment is committed to him, him, and he is the righteouſneſs of his people now, and will be their judge hereafter.

[x] Antiq. l. 3. c. 7. §. 5. [y] Var. Hiſt. l. 14. c. 34. [z] Bibliothec. l. 1. p. 69. [a] See a Diſcourſe of mine, called Levi's Urim and Thummim, found with Chriſt, &c. publiſhed in 1725.

℣. 31. And thou ſhalt make the robe of the ephod all of blue.] This was a different garment from the ephod, was longer than that, and was under it, and of different materials: that was made of gold, blue, purple, ſcarlet, and fine linen; this only of linen, and wholly of a blue colour, without any curious figures upon it, as were on that; in ch. xxxix. 22. it is ſaid to be of woven work; it was woven from top to bottom, and had no ſeam in it: ſo Joſephus ſays [b], "the coat did not conſiſt of two "parts, nor was it ſewed upon the ſhoulder, nor "on the ſide, but was one long piece of woven "work;" and ſuch was the ſeamleſs coat our Lord Jeſus Chriſt wore, literally underſtood, John xix. 23. and both were an emblem of his perfect righteouſneſs, which has nothing of the works of men joined to it, to juſtify them before God, and make them acceptable to him; for this robe ſignifies the robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, the beſt robe; it has its name from a word which ſignifies prevarication or ſin, becauſe it covers the ſins of God's people; the matter of it was linen, and ſo fitly points at the fine linen, that is the righteouſneſs of the ſaints, and being blue or ſky-coloured, may denote heaven and happineſs, which that entitles to, ſee Matt. v. 20. the Septuagint verſion calls it a garment down to the feet, uſing the ſame word as in Rev. i. 13. and fitly agrees with that righteouſneſs with which all Chriſt's members are covered and juſtified, Iſ. xlv. 24, 25. Rom. iii. 22. 23.

℣. 32. And there ſhall be a hole in the top of it, in the midſt thereof, &c.] At the neck of it, for the high prieſt to put his head through when he put it on: it ſhall have a binding of woven work, round about the hole of it; a large hem or ſelvage, perhaps of the ſame kind of woven ſtuff the robe itſelf was made of, and this was done to ſtrengthen it: as it were the hole of an habergeon; a corſlet or coat of mail: that it be not rent; when the high prieſt put it on; or through the weight of the ephod and the ouches of gold on the ſhoulder-pieces of it, and the breaſt-plate hanging down from thence; this may denote the ſtrength and duration of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, which is an everlaſting one.

℣. 33. And beneath upon the hem of it, &c.] Or the ſkirts of it, at the bottom of the robe: thou ſhalt make pomegranates of blue, and of purple, and of ſcarlet, round about the hem thereof; theſe were figures made of blue, purple, and ſcarlet yarn, in the form of pomegranates: Jarchi ſays, they were round and hollow, and made like hens eggs, about the bigneſs of them, and of an oval form: and bells of gold between them round about; according to ſome, the bells were put into the pomegranates, which is ſuppoſed to be the meaning of the phraſe between them, or, in the midſt of them; and ſo Aben Ezra obſerves, that ſome ſay the bells did not appear, they were only in the midſt of the pomegranates, and there they cauſed their ſound to be heard; but according to our verſion and others, the bells were placed between the pomegranates, between every pomegranate and pomegranate there was a golden bell; and this ſeems to be plainly the ſenſe of the following verſe.

℣. 34. A golden bell and a pomegranate, a golden bell and a pomegranate, &c.] Firſt a golden bell and then a pomegranate, then a bell and then a pomegranate again, and ſo on: upon the hem of the robe round about; all round the hem or ſkirts of the robe, were they placed in this manner: the Targum of Jonathan ſays, the ſum or number of them were 71; but Maimonides [c] ſays, there were 72, 36 in each ſkirt; and ſo ſays R. Levi Ben Gerſom; but Clemens of Alexandria [d] has increaſed the number to 366, according to the days of the year, and thinks they ſignified the acceptable year of the Lord proclaiming and reſounding the great appearance of the Saviour: golden bells may denote either the interceſſion of Chriſt in heaven, which if not vocal as on earth, has a ſpeech or ſound in it, which is underſtood; his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, call aloud for peace and pardon, and it is a ſound that is always heard with delight; the matter of them being gold may denote the preciouſneſs and excellency of Chriſt's interceſſion, and the duration of it; and being on the hem of the robe, ſhews that Chriſt's righteouſneſs is that on which his interceſſion depends, and from whence it has its efficacy: or elſe theſe bells may be an emblem of the goſpel, as preached by Chriſt himſelf, and by his apoſtles and miniſters, compared to bells for ſound; the ſound of the goſpel being a ſound of love, grace, mercy, peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation; a joyful ſound, like that of the jubilee, an even and certain one, different from that of the law, and exceeding muſical and delightful; and to golden bells for the preciouſneſs of it, and its truths, and for its duration; and being on the hem of the robe, may ſignify that in the goſpel the rlghteouſneſs of Chriſt is revealed and pointed at, and that faith in this righteouſneſs comes hereby; the pomegranates on Aaron might be an emblem of his prieſthood, and of the ceremonial law, and of the good things they were ſhadows and types of; and of Chriſt himſelf, and of the virtue, odour, and fragrancy of his ſufferings, ſacrifice, and interceſſion; and alſo of the church, called an orchard of pomegranates, Cant. iv. 13. conſiſting of various members, as the pomegranate of various grains; the juice of which the blood of Chriſt may reſemble, in which thoſe members ſwim and are waſhed; and who are of a grateful odour to God, and are ſurrounded by his power and love; and their hanging upon the hem of the robe, may ſignify the acceptableneſs of them thro' the righteouſneſs, ſacrifice, and mediation of Chriſt, and the fruits of good works, which both the righteouſneſs of Chriſt and the goſpel produce; and particularly the bells and pomegranates may ſignify, that ſound doctrine and a ſavoury life and converſation ſhould go together in the prieſts of the Lord, in the miniſters of his word.

℣. 35. And it ſhall be upon Aaron to miniſter, &c.] That is, the robe before deſcribed ſhall be put upon him, that he might miniſter in the prieſt's office, for without this, as well as the other garments, he might not: and his ſound ſhall be heard when he goeth in unto the holy place before the Lord, and when he cometh out; by means of which the prieſts would have notice that they might depart, and he be alone in his miniſtrations; or rather, that the people might know his going out and coming in, and ſo give themſelves up to prayer, whilſt he was offering incenſe, ſee Luke i. 9, 10. though the inſtance of Zacharias is not of an high-prieſt, but of a common prieſt: that he die not; the Targum of Jonathan adds, with flaming fire. This is added, to make him, and all ſucceeding prieſts, careful ful that this robe, nor any other of the prieſtly garments, were wanting, when they miniſtred before the Lord; ſhould any be wanting, it would be highly reſented by the Lord: and ſuch an one would be in danger of being cut off by death from the immediate hand of God, as Nadab and Abihu were for offering ſtrange fire to the Lord; for, according to the Jewiſh writers [e], a prieſt not rightly attired, either with more or fewer garments than he ſhould have, his ſervice was illegal, and he was as a ſtranger, and his ſervice ſtrange ſervice, unacceptable to God, yea, provoking to him; and ſo Jarchi on the text ſays, if he wanted one of theſe garments, he was guilty of death by the hand of heaven, the immediate hand of God.

[b] Antiq. l. 3. c. 7. §. 4. [c] Hilchot Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 9. §. 4. [d] Stromat. l. 5. p. 564.

℣. 36. And thou ſhalt make a plate of pure gold, &c.] It was, as Jarchi ſays, two fingers broad, and reached from ear to ear, and ſo Maimonides [f]; it is ſometimes called the holy crown, and the plate of the holy crown, ch. xxix. 6. and xxxix. 30. Lev. viii. 9. this was a prieſtly crown, for prieſts were very honourable and dignified perſons, eſpecially the high-prieſt among the Jews; and even among the Gentiles, it was common for their kings to be prieſts: and though this crown may denote the kingly power of Chriſt, yet as reſiding in him who is a prieſt, for he is a prieſt on his throne, Zech. vi. 13. and ſo may ſignify the conjunction of the kingly and prieſtly offices in Chriſt, who has a crown of pure gold given him by his Father, and put upon him, and by his people, Pſ. xxi. 4. Cant. iii. 11. and being of pure gold, holy, and on the forehead, as this plate was, may ſignify the purity and holineſs of Chriſt's kingdom and office, the glory, viſibility and perpetuity of it: and grave upon it, like the engravings of a ſignet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD; which words were written either in two lines, or in one. If in two, Maimonides [g] ſays, the word holineſs was above, and to the Lord below; but it might be written in one line, and that ſeems moſt likely: he alſo ſays the letters were protuberant, or ſtood out; but then they would not be graved like the engravings of a ſignet, in which the letters or figures are engraved within, but like the impreſſions of a ſignet made on wax, or other things: in this the high-prieſt was a type of Chriſt, who is holy in himſelf, in his perſon, in both his natures, divine and human, in his offices of prophet, prieſt and king; and he is holineſs itſelf, the moſt holy, eſſentially, infinitely and perfectly, ſo as angels and men are not, and the ſource and ſpring of holineſs to others: and he is holineſs to the Lord for his people; he is ſo repreſentatively; as their covenant-head he has all grace in his hands for them, and they have it in him; this is ſanctification in Chriſt, and is by virtue of union to him, and is compleat and perfect, and the cauſe of holineſs in his people; and he is ſo by imputation. The holineſs of his human nature was not a mere qualification for his office, or only exemplary to us, but is with his obedience and ſufferings imputed to us for juſtification. Moreover, Chriſt has by his blood ſanctified his people, or made atonement for them, and procured the cleanſing of them from their ſins, or the expiation of them; and he is alſo the efficient cauſe of their internal holineſs by his Spirit, without which there is no ſeeing God, 1 Cor. vi. 11.

℣. 37. And thou ſhalt put it on a blue lace, &c.] The plate of gold: that it may be upon the mitre; either the plate or the lace; the lace is the neareſt antecedent; but it ſeems by what follows it ſhould be the plate: upon the fore-front of the mitre it ſhall be; the plate of gold; the mitre was of linen, a wrap of linen about the head, and was like a turbant on it, in the top of it; it did not come down low upon the forehead, but left that bare for this plate of gold to be put upon it. Jarchi ſeems to underſtand all this of the lace, by comparing it with the following verſe, and ch. xxxix. 31. as if the plate was repreſented as in the lace, and the lace upon the plate and upon the mitre above; all which he thinks is to be reconciled by obſerving, that the plate had three holes, and in every hole was a blue lace, and each lace was divided into two parts, ſo that there were ſix in all, two laces at each end of the plate, and two in the middle, by which they were faſtened upon the top of the mitre, by which it was kept from falling off; and of this middle lace, he thinks, the text is to be underſtood. The Targum of Jonathan obſerves, that this plate was put on a blue lace, to make atonement for the impudent.

℣. 38. And it ſhall be upon Aaron's forehead, &c.] That is, the plate of gold, with the inſcription on it, holineſs to the Lord, and ſo was very viſible and legible. The Targum of Jonathan adds, from temple to temple, that is, from the furthermoſt end of the one, to the furthermoſt end of the other, the ſame as from ear to ear, ſee the note ℣. 36. the uſe of it follows: that Aaron may bear the iniquity of the holy things, which the children of Iſrael ſhall hallow in all their holy gifts; this ſuppoſes that the ſacrifices of the children of Iſrael, which they brought to the prieſts to offer for them, or the gifts they devoted to ſacred uſe might be attended with ſin, and blame, either in the matter of their offerings and gifts, or in the manner in which they brought them; and which through the high-prieſt having this plate of gold, with the above inſcription on it, were expiated; they were bore away from them, and were not placed to their account, but they were cleared and diſcharged of them: and ſo it is, that there is ſin in the beſt performances of the ſaints; there is not a juſt man that does good, but he ſins in doing that good; the beſt righteouſneſs of men is imperfect, and attended with ſin; and this can't be borne, or taken away by themſelves; if God ſhould mark ſuch ſins as theſe, they could not ſtand before him; now Chriſt, their high-prieſt, bears and takes away theſe, along with all others, which are laid upon him, and borne by him: and it ſhall be always upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before the Lord; not that he had always this plate of gold on his forehead, only in time of ſervice; but then it was continually for the acceptance of them, though it was not upon his forehead, as Jarchi obſerves; but Maimonides [h] ſays, there was great neceſſity that the high-prieſt ſhould be always in the ſanctuary, as it is ſaid, it ſhall be always upon his forehead, and therefore muſt be always there, for he might not wear it out of it. This with reſpect to the antitype may ſignify, that the perſons and ſervices of the people of God are accepted with him through the holineſs and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, who is always in the preſence of the Lord, ever appears in heaven for them; and is the Lamb of God, to whoſe perſon, blood, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice they are directed to look for the removal of their ſins of every ſort.

℣. 39. And thou ſhalt embroider the coat of fine linen, &c.] Which was a diſtinct garment from the

[e] Maimon. Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 10. §. 4, 5. & Succah, fol. 5. 1. [f] Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 9. §. 1. Vid. T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 63. 2. [g] Ibid. [h] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 47.

the ephod, and from the robe of the ephod, and was the innermoſt of all; it was made of fine linen, curiouſly wrought in the weaving of it: according to ſome, it was full of a ſort of eylet holes; but as the word is that, from whence comes that for ouches, ℣. 6. Jarchi thinks it was full of holes, like thoſe ouches or ſockets, in which the ſtones were ſet; and ſo this coat was decked and adorned with gems and precious ſtones ſtuck in thoſe holes or ouches: but rather it was figured with ſuch little cornered holes as are in the ſtomach of animals that chew the cud, called the reticulum; being in the form of network, as Maimonides [i] obſerves, and which is approved of by Braunius [k]: this was an emblem of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, comparable to fine linen richly embroidered, decked and adorned with jewels, and curiouſly wrought, ſee Rev. xix. 8. Iſ. lxi. 10: and thou ſhalt make the mitre of fine linen; which was a wrap of linen 16 cubits long, as Maimonides [l] ſays, both for the high-prieſt, and for common prieſts, which only differed in the manner of wrapping them; that for the high-prieſt was wrapped fold upon fold, as a roller for a plaſter, and ſo the mitre was flat upon the head, and was like a turbant, and did not riſe up into a point; but thoſe of the common prieſts were ſo wrapped, as that they roſe up like a night-cap, or a high-crowned hat. The mitre, hat or cap, though a token of honour, yet alſo of ſervitude; and may denote, that the people of the Jews were in a ſtate of ſervitude, and point at the obſcurity and darkneſs of that diſpenſation; they not clearly diſcerning divine myſteries, and wanting boldneſs and freedom to look up to God; or it may denote, that the prieſts under the law were ſervants, and that Chriſt, our great high-prieſt, ſhould appear in the form of one; and may alſo point at the intenſeneſs of the mind in them and him on buſineſs, being deaf to every thing elſe. The Targum of Jonathan ſays, the coat of fine linen was to atone for the ſhedding of innocent blood, and the mitre to atone for thoſe who have elated thoughts, are puffed up with pride and vain conceit: and thou ſhalt make the girdle of needle-work; to gird about the embroidered coat, which Joſephus [m] ſays was four fingers broad; but, according to Maimonides [n], it was about three fingers broad, and 32 cubits long, which they wound about and about; and though we tranſlate it needle-work, it ſhould rather be the work of the embroiderer, as Ainſworth renders it; and this was not wrought by the needle, but in weaving; for as Maimonides [o] obſerves, "they did not make any of the prieſts "garments with needle-work, but with the work "of the weaver, according to Exod. xxxix. 27." This girdle may denote the ſtrength, readineſs, faithfulneſs and integrity of Chriſt in the performance of his prieſtly office; ſee Iſ. xi. 5.

℣. 40. And for Aaron's ſons thou ſhalt make coats, &c.] Of fine linen, of woven work, as in ch. xxxix. 27. theſe were different from the broidered coat of the high prieſt, and the blue robe of the ephod: and thou ſhalt make for them girdles; linen ones, to gird up their linen coats which were long, that they might the more expeditiouſly perform their ſervice; and which is an inſtruction to all the prieſts of the Lord, true believers in Chriſt, to be ready, forward, and diligent in the work of the Lord; and eſpecially to miniſters of the word, who, as their doctrines and lives ought to be pure, ſignified by the prieſt's linen garment, ſo they ſhould be girt about with the girdle of truth, and ready upon all occaſions to publiſh and defend it, and do their work with chearfulneſs and faithfulneſs: and bonnets ſhalt thou make for them; theſe were coverings for the head, and of the ſame kind with the mitre of the high prieſt, and of the ſame length, but differed from that in the manner of wrapping the linen, of which they were made, ſee the note on the preceding verſe: and all theſe were to be made for glory and beauty; to beautify and adorn them, to make them look like perſons of ſome note and figure, and that they might be reſpectable among men, and typical, as they all were, of our great and glorious high prieſt, the ſon of God.

℣. 41. And thou ſhalt put them on Aaron thy brother, and his ſons with him, &c.] And this putting on of their garments by Moſes, under the authority of God, was a ſolemn inveſtiture of them, with the prieſtly office alſo; for from henceforward they had a right to exerciſe it, having thoſe garments on, without which they were never to officiate: and ſhalt anoint them; with the anointing oil, of which afterwards a particular account is given, and how to be made, and for what uſe, ch. xxx. 22—30. typical of the holy graces of the Spirit of God: and conſecrate them; the conſecration of them, was by inveſting them with their garments, and by anointing them with oil; for this phraſe does not intend the whole of their conſecration, only another branch of it, and may be literally rendered, fill their hand [p]; that is, with ſacrifices to be offered up by them, ſee ch. xxix. 1. 24. 2 Chron. xiii. 9. and ſanctify them; by all this, ſet them apart, and devote them to the ſacred office of prieſthood: that they may miniſter unto me in the prieſt's office; by offering ſacrifices for the people, burning incenſe, and doing other things relative to the office.

℣. 42. And thou ſhalt make them linen breeches to cover their nakedneſs, &c.] Or the fleſh of nakedneſs [q], that part of the body which ought not to be naked and expoſed to view, and which, when it is, cauſes ſhame and ridicule; what part is deſigned is eaſily gathered from the next clauſe; great care was taken in the ſervice of God's houſe, to preſerve decency, prevent immodeſty, and to guard againſt laughter and levity, and the like care ſhould be always taken, ſee the note on ℣. 2. from the loins even unto the thigh they ſhall reach; they were to reach above the navel near the heart, and to the end of the thigh, which is the knee, as Maimonides ſays [r]; who alſo obſerves, that they had ſtrings, but had no opening before or behind, but were drawn up round like a purſe; they were a ſort of drawers, and ſomewhat like our ſailors trowſes.

℣. 43. And they ſhall be upon Aaron and upon his ſons, &c.] Not the linen breeches only, but all the other garments: when they come into the tabernacle of the congregation; even into that part of it where the people aſſembled, the court of the tabernacle, and where ſtood the altar of burnt-offering, on which they offered the ſacrifices of the people, but never without the prieſtly garments on: or when they come near unto the altar to miniſter in the holy place; at the altar of incenſe which ſtood there; or when they came to trim the lamps of the candlecandleſtick, and ſet the ſhew-bread on the table, and take away the old, which candleſtick and ſhew-bread table were both in the holy place: that they bear not iniquity and die; be guilty of ſin in not having their prieſtly garments on in time of ſervice, and ſo bear the puniſhment of it and die for it; the Targum of Jonathan adds, with flaming fire, with fire from heaven, ſuch as Nadab and Abihu were afterwards conſumed with; an high prieſt that had not the eight garments on, or a common prieſt that had not his four garments, his ſervice was illegal and rejected, and he was guilty of death by the hand of heaven, as Maimonides [s] ſays; that is, he was deſerving of immediate death from the hand of God, and might expect it: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever unto him, and his ſeed after him; as long as the Aaronical prieſthood continued, until Chriſt ſhould ariſe, made an high prieſt, not after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchizedek, and ſhould put an end to the prieſthood of the former, by anſwering and fulfilling all the types and ſhadows of it; this reſpects all that is ſaid in this chapter concerning the veſtments of the prieſts, one and another.

[i] Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 8. §. 16. [k] De veſtitu Sacerdot. Heb. l. 1. c. 17. p. 379, 380. [l] Ut ſupra, c 8. §. 19. [m] Antiq. l. 3. c. 7. §. 2. [n] Ut ſupra. [o] Ibid. [p] ומלאת את ידם & implebis manum eorum, Montanus, Vatablus, Tigurine verſion, Fagius, Piſcator. [q] בשר ערות carnem nuditatis, Montanus, Vatablus, Druſius; carnem nudam, Junius & Tremellius; carnem verendorum, Tigurine verſion; carnem pudendorum, Piſcator. [r] Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 8. §. 18.

CHAP. XXIX.

THIS chapter gives an account of the form and order of the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons to the prieſtly office; preparatory to which Moſes is ordered to take a young bullock, two rams, bread, cakes, and wafers unleavened, and bring them and Aaron and his ſons to the door of the congregation, where the ceremony was to be publickly performed, and which began with waſhing them, ℣. 1—4. and then proceeded by putting on the prieſtly garments directed to be made in the preceding chapter, firſt on Aaron, who alſo was anointed, ℣. 5, 6, 7. and then upon his ſons, ℣. 8, 9. after which the bullock and the two rams were to be ſlain, and orders are given what was to be done with their blood, and the ſeveral parts of them, as well as with the cakes and wafers, ℣. 10—23. and directions are given to make theſe wave and heave-offerings, ℣. 24—28. and that the garments of Aaron's ſhould be his ſon's that ſucceeded him, ℣. 29, 30. and that the fleſh of the ram of conſecration with the bread ſhould be eat by Aaron and his ſons and no other, ℣. 31—35. the altar alſo where they were to officiate, was to be cleanſed, ſanctified, and an atonement made for it, ℣. 36, 37. after which, two lambs every day, morning and evening, were to be offered on it in all ſucceeding generations, ℣. 38—42. and the chapter is cloſed with a promiſe that the Lord would meet with the children of Iſrael at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and would ſanctify the tabernacle, and dwell among them, and be their God, ℣. 43—46.

℣. 1, And this is the thing that thou ſhalt do unto them, &c.] To Aaron and his ſons: to hallow them; to ſanctify them, ſet them apart, and conſecrate them: to miniſter unto me in the prieſt's office; for which the Lord had appointed them, to which he had choſe, called, and ſeparated them: take one young bullock, and two rams without blemiſh; a young bullock was an heifer of three years old, according to Kimchi [t], and ſuch an one was uſed in ſacrifice in former times, ſee Gen. xv. 9. though Maimonides [u] ſays, it was one of two years, and ſo Abendana [w], whoſe words are, "a bullock "is a ſon of two years, and a ram is after he has "entred into the ſecond year 31 days;" and ſo Ben Gerſom; the bullock was an emblem of the ſtrength, laborioufneſs, and patience of Chriſt, and both of them being without blemiſh, were typical of his purity and perfection in his nature and life, and eſpecially in his ſacrifice.

℣. 2. And unleavened bread, &c.] Such as uſed to be eat at the time of the paſſover, and this being diſtinguiſhed from cakes and wafers after mentioned, ſhews that this was bread of a larger ſize, a loaf or loaves of bread, ſee ℣. 23. and cakes unleavened, tempered with oil; theſe were made of flour mixed with oil, but without leaven, and were a leſſer and thinner ſort of bread than the former: and wafers unleavened, anointed with oil; with oil olive, the beſt of oil, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Aben Ezra; theſe were a thinner ſort of bread ſtill, ſomewhat like our pan-cakes; and they were anointed with oil after the baking of them, and in the form of the Greek χ chi, as Jarchi ſays, or of a St. Andrew's or Burgundian croſs: of wheaten flour ſhalt thou make them; of the fineſt of the wheat, for theſe were to be the food of Aaron and his ſons, who were now to be inveſted with an high and honourable office, and were to live according to the dignity of it; and theſe being all unleavened, may denote that ſincerity, ſimplicity, and integrity that ought to be found in them, in the diſcharge of their office, and which were in Chriſt in full perfection; as well as ſoundneſs in doctrine, life, and manners, being free from all leaven of falſe doctrine, hypocriſy, and malice; and likewiſe what is expected of the ſame kind in all the ſaints, who, under the goſpel-diſpenſation are all of them prieſts unto God, and whoſe food is the fineſt of the wheat, Chriſt the bread of life.

℣. 3. And thou ſhalt put them into one baſket, &c.] The unleavened bread, cakes, and wafers; this baſket may be an emblem of the goſpel and the miniſtration of it, in which Chriſt the bread of life is carried, and miniſtred to his people: and bring them in the baſket, with the bullock and the two rams; not that the bullock and the rams were to be brought in the baſket along with the bread, cakes, and wafers; but at the ſame time that they were brought to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, theſe were to be brought, led, or drove to the altar, in order to be ſlain and ſacrificed.

℣. 4. And Aaron and his ſons thou ſhalt bring unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] That is, order and direct them to come thither; for it cannot be thought he was to carry them in his arms or on his ſhoulders, or have them thither by force, whether they would or no; but he was to declare to them that it was the will of the Lord they ſhould appear there: and ſhalt waſh them with water; out of the laver after mentioned, which

[s] Ibid. c. 10. § 4, 5.
[t] Comment. in Pſ. 69. 32.
[u] Hilchot Zebachim, c. 1. §. 14.
[w] Not. in Michol Yophi in loc.

which ſtood between the door of the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar: the Targum of Jonathan ſays, this waſhing was performed in 40 ſeahs of living, or ſpring-water, which was ſufficient for the immerſion of the whole body, which 'tis highly probable was the caſe; and ſo Jarchi interprets it, of the dipping of the whole body, and which ſeems to have been neceſſary, upon their entrance on their office, to denote their compleat purity and holineſs, though afterwards when they entered on ſervice, they only waſhed their hands and feet, ſee ch. xxx. 18—21. to which our Lord ſeems to allude, John xiii. 10. this waſhing ſhews what purity and holineſs were neceſſary to the prieſts of the Lord, and that they ought to be clean that bear the veſſels of his houſe, or miniſter in his ſanctuary, and which were in Chriſt in their full perfection; and ſuch an high prieſt became us, who is holy, harmleſs, and undefiled, and ſo could offer himſelf without ſpot, and was a fit perſon to take away ſin by ſacrifice, and to be an advocate for his people: this may alſo point at his baptiſm, which he ſubmitted to before he entered on his office in a public manner, and which was performed by immerſion; and in this way ought all his prieſts, his ſaints to be waſhed, as well as with the waſhing of regeneration, and with the blood of Chriſt; and which is neceſſary to their officiating as prieſts, or drawing nigh to God, and requiſite to their communion with God and Chriſt.

℣. 5. And thou ſhalt take the garments, &c.] The prieſtly garments before ordered to be made, and when made: and put upon Aaron the coat; the broidered coat, the coat of fine linen, which was put on firſt and was next to his fleſh, for all theſe garments were put on in the order in which they are here placed: and the robe of the ephod; which was all of blue, and had pomegranates and golden bells at the hem of it; this was put over the broidered coat: and the ephod; which was made of gold, blue, purple, ſcarlet, and fine twined linen: this was a ſhort garment put over the robe of the ephod: and the breaſt-plate; with the Urim and Thummim in it, or the 12 precious ſtones on which were engraven the names of the 12 tribes of Iſrael, which hung down over the breaſt by wreathen chains of gold, from the ſhoulder-pieces of the ephod: and gird him with the curious girdle of the ephod; which was made of the ſame ſtuff and after the ſame manner as the ephod itſelf, and which girt all his garments tight and cloſe to him; the ſignificancy of theſe has been obſerved already; and unleſs thus clothed he could not miniſter in his office, and theſe he had only on whilſt miniſtring in it: no mention is made of the breeches, becauſe theſe were doubtleſs to be put on by the high-prieſt himſelf in a private manner before he came there; whereas all theſe garments were put on him publickly at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, where it would not have been ſo ſeemly and decent to put on the other.

℣. 6. And thou ſhalt put the mitre upon his head, &c.] Which was made of linen, and was a wrap of linen about his head in the form of a turbant: and put the holy crown upon the mitre; the holy crown was a plate of gold which had theſe words, holineſs to the Lord engraven on it; and ſo ſays the Targum of Jonathan, "on which the holy name "was engraven;" the mitre was upon the top of his head, this in the fore-front of that; it was upon Aaron's forehead and reached from ear to ear, and was faſtened behind with a blue lace; this was like a crown or a diadem, and denotes the honour and dignity of the prieſtly office: Chriſt is a prieſt on his throne, and his ſaints are a royal prieſthood, even kings as well as prieſts unto God.

℣. 7. Then thou ſhalt take the anointing oil, &c.] After ordered to be made of principal ſpices, myrrh, cinnamon, calamus, caſſia, and oil-olive, ch. xxx. 23—30. and pour it upon his head, and anoint him; this was done, according to Jarchi, in the form of the letter chi as before; the oil was put upon his head and between his eyebrows, and he joined them with his finger: Aben Ezra thinks this was done before the mitre was put upon his head, for upon the head was the oil only poured; but Nachmanides was of opinion that the mitre was ſo folded about the head that the middle of the head was open, and upon that the oil was poured; and ſo the Talmudiſts ſay*, that his (the high prieſt's) hair was ſeen between the plate of gold and the mitre; but however this was, it ſeems plain from the text that this anointing was, after the mitre was put on, and the prieſt habited with all his garments; and it is alſo as clear a caſe, that the ointment was poured on his head which ran down to his beard, Pſ. cxxxiii. 2. and I ſee no difficulty in ſuppoſing that the mitre and crown might be taken off again whilſt the ceremony of anointing was performed. This unction denotes the inveſtiture of Chriſt with his office in eternity, who is ſaid to be anointed ſo early, Prov. viii. 22. and the donation of the Spirit to him in time, without meaſure; with which he is ſaid to be anointed, both at his incarnation and at his baptiſm, and alſo at his aſcenſion to heaven, and hence comes the name of the Meſſiah; which ſignifies anointed; and ſo his people, his prieſts, are anointed of God, with an unction from him, with the oil of grace, with the graces of the Spirit, which is neceſſary for their inſtruction, for the preſentation of themſelves to God as an holy ſacrifice, and to make them meet for the heavenly glory.

℣. 8. And thou ſhalt bring his ſons, &c.] Order the ſons of Aaron, to come to the ſame place where he was: and put coats upon them; ſuch as were ordered to be made for them, ch. xxviii. 40.

℣. 9. And thou ſhalt gird them with girdles (Aaron and his ſons) &c.] Aaron with the girdle of the ephod, and with the girdle of needle-work, and his ſons with common girdles made for them; all which ſhewed what ſtrength, diligence and expedition were neceſſary for the diſcharge of their office: and put the bonnets on them; upon their heads, which differed only from the high-prieſt's mitre in the manner of rolling or wrapping, as has been obſerved on ch. xxviii. 39, 40: and the prieſts office ſhall be theirs, for a perpetual ſtatute; that is, ſhall deſcend from father to ſon in Aaron's family throughout all generations, until the Meſſiah ſhould come; who would be a prieſt of another order, and put an end to the Aaronical prieſthood, by fulfilling what that was a type of, and ſo aboliſhing it: and thou ſhall conſecrate Aaron and his ſons; or fill the hand of them; that is, with ſacrifices to offer for themſelves and others, ſee the note on ch. xxviii. 41. The Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan are, "ſhall offer the offering of Aaron, and the offer-"ing of his ſons," of which there is an after account, and was one part of their conſecration.

℣. 10. And thou ſhalt cauſe a bullock to be brought before the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] The ſame, or of the ſame kind he was ordered to take.

℣.

* T. Bab. Zebachim, fol. 19. 1.

℣. 1. and here the place is expreſſed, where it was to be taken, and what was to be done with it: and Aaron and his ſons ſhall put their hands upon the head of the bullock; not Aaron firſt alone, and then his ſons, as ſome have thought, Aben Ezra makes mention of; but, as he ſays, both together, not one before another; declaring it to be their ſacrifice, a vicarious one, one in their room and ſtead, ſignifying that they deſerved to die as that creature would; and by this act putting, as it were, their ſins and tranſgreſſions upon it, ſee Lev. xvi. 21, 22. and which was an emblem of the imputation of ſin to Chriſt, and laying upon him the iniquities of us all.

℣. 11. And thou ſhalt kill the bullock before the Lord, &c.] That is, Moſes is ordered to do it, who now officiated as a prieſt, pro tempore, Aaron and his ſons not being yet compleatly inveſted with that office, or thoroughly conſecrated to it; of which conſecration this ſacrifice was a part, and therefore could not with propriety be concerned in killing their own ſacrifice; for that purpoſe, Moſes therefore did it, and he did it before the Lord; Jehovah the Son gave him thoſe orders to do it before Jehovah the Father, in his preſence, as an offering to him, and for his acceptance. And the ark, as Aben Ezra obſerves, was in the middle weſtward, and right againſt it was the altar of incenſe, and over againſt that the altar of burnt-offering: by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; that is, as Jarchi interprets it, in the court of the tabernacle before the door; not by the door by which they entered in to the court of the tabernacle; but in the court before the door that leads in to the holy place, at ſome diſtance from which ſtood the altar of burnt-offering, where this bullock was ſlain and ſacrificed: all this may denote the public manner in which Chriſt, the antitype, ſuffered in the preſence of the Lord, with his knowledge and will, and before the people of Iſrael.

℣. 12. And thou ſhalt take the blood of the bullock, &c.] Being ſlain, and its blood received into a baſon: and put it upon the horns of the altar with thy finger; not ſprinkle it with hyſſop, as was done in ſome caſes, but put on with the finger dipped into the blood in the baſon; as the horns of the altar were the place where the ſacrifice was bound, as ſome think, or however where perſons in diſtreſs fled for refuge, and laid hold on, it may figure the blood of Chriſt, being effectual to the cleanſing of their ſouls, and the remiſſion of their ſins, through the application of it to them by the Spirit of God: and pour all the blood beſide at the bottom of the altar; the reſt of the blood not put upon the horns of the altar, all that was left of it. Jarchi ſays, there was a receptacle (for it) that protuberated round the altar, about a cubit from the ground; and here it was that the blood was poured.

℣. 13. And thou ſhalt take all the fat that covereth the inwards, &c.] That covered the ſkin or caul, in wich the bowels are contained, called the omentum, which generally has a pretty deal of fat upon it: and the caul that is above the liver; which ſeems to deſign the diaphragm or midriff; but the Septuagint verſion renders it, the lobe of the liver; and Ben Melech ſays, it is to be interpreted with the liver, for he ſays he took a little of the liver with the caul: and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and burn them upon the altar; the Targum of Jonathan is, lay them in order on the altar; it is not eaſy to ſay, ſince fat is taken both in a good and bad ſenſe, what is deſigned by the burning of it: as fat often deſigns the beſt, it being burned on the altar may ſignify, that the beſt is to be given to the Lord, and we are to honour him with the beſt things we have, which ſhould be devoted to his ſervice; or as fat renders inſenſible, and ſtupifies and makes men heavy, and inclines to a carnal and vicious diſpoſition; and the inward parts and reins being the ſeat of carnal deſires, affections and luſts; it may denote that the inward part of man is very wickedneſs, and that the inward corruptions of nature, and the carnal affections and fleſhly luſts are to be mortified and deſtroyed, at leaſt the power of them to be ſubdued and reſtrained.

℣. 14. But the fleſh of the bullock, and his ſkin, and his dung, &c.] The ſeveral parts and members of him, head, legs, feet, &c. and the ſkin taken off of him, and the dung that comes from him. Aben Ezra obſerves, that the fleſh comprehends the head and the pieces, and may be interpreted in a way of conjecture, that he waſhed it; and afterwards burnt it; all repreſenting a whole Chriſt under all his painful ſufferings, and the ſhame and reproach he underwent in them: ſhalt thou burn with fire without the camp; ſo Chriſt, the antitype, ſuffered without the gates of Jeruſalem a moſt painful and ſhameful death, deſpiſed and reproached by men, and the wrath of God like fire poured out upon him: the apoſtle ſeems to refer to this, Heb. xiii. 11, 12. it is a ſin-offering; in order to make atonement for the ſins of Aaron and his ſons; for the law made men prieſts, that had infirmity, and needed offerings and ſacrifices for their own ſins, which ſhows the imperfection of the Aaronical prieſtood.

℣. 15. And thou ſhall alſo take one ram, &c.] One of the two he was bid to take, ℣. 1: and Aaron and his ſons ſhall put their hands upon the head of the ram; confeſſing their ſins, acknowledging their guilt, and by this act transferring the ſame to the ram, which was to be a burnt-offering, and was typical of the imputation of ſin to Chriſt, as before obſerved.

℣. 16. And thou ſhalt ſlay the ram, &c.] As he was ordered to ſlay the bullock, acting in this as a prieſt, as in that: and thou ſhalt take his blood, and ſprinkle it round about upon the altar; the blood being received into a baſon, it was not to be put upon the altar with the finger, as the blood of the bullock, but was to be ſprinkled probably with a bunch of hyſſop, round about upon the altar, on the top and ſides: as the deity of Chriſt is the altar, which ſanctifies every gift, this may ſignify that his blood has its virtue and efficacy from that, to make atonement for the ſins of men, and to cleanſe them from them.

℣. 17. And thou ſhalt cut the ram in pieces, &c.] For the better convenience of laying it upon the wood on the altar, that it might be burnt; for it was to be a whole burnt-offering: and waſh the inwards of him, and his legs; denoting the purity of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, and that when his people give up themſelves to God as a whole burnt-offering, in the flames of love and zeal, their affections ſhould be pure and ſincere: and put them unto his pieces, and unto his head; lay them together, ſo that they might be entirely conſumed at once; ſignifying that Chriſt was both in ſoul and body an offering and a ſacrifice of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to God; zeal for the honour of whoſe houſe, and the glory of his name, eat him up, as well as the fire of divine wrath; and ſo our whole ſouls, bodies and ſpirits, ſhould be preſented to the Lord as a holy, living and acceptable ſacrifice to him, which is more ſtrongly ſuggeſted in the next verſe.

℣. 18. And thou ſhalt burn the whole ram upon the altar, &c.] For which reaſon his head, his pieces, his inwards, and his legs, were to be put together, and laid in order upon the altar: it is a burnt-offering unto the Lord; offered up to him, and accepted by him, as follows: it is a ſweet ſavour; or a ſmell of reſt[y], in which God acquieſces, and reſts, and takes delight and pleaſure; it is, as the Septuagint verſion, for a ſmell of ſweet ſavour, or a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour; which phraſe the apoſtle makes uſe of, and applies to the ſacrifice of Chriſt, Eph. v. 2: an offering made by fire unto the Lord; which being conſumed by fire, aſcended upwards to the Lord, and became acceptable to him, as the ſacrifice of his own Son, in his fiery ſufferings and death, was unto him.

℣. 19. And thou ſhalt take the other ram, &c.] The other of the two that was left, ℣. 1: and Aaron and his ſons ſhall put their hands on the head of the ram, as they were to do, and did, upon the head of the other; ſee the note on ℣. 15.

℣. 20. Then ſhalt thou kill the ram, &c.] As the other: and take of his blood, ſome part of it being received into a baſon: and put it upon the tip of the right ear of Aaron, and upon the tip of the right ear of his ſons; according to Jarchi, this is the middle griſtle within the ear; but Saadiah more rightly ſays, it is the tender part which joins to the orb of the ear. The blood was put upon this part to ſanctify it, and cleanſe from ſins that come thereby, and to teach the high-prieſt that he ought attentively to liſten to what ſhould be ſaid unto him of the Lord, that he might faithfully report it to the people; and as our great high-prieſt had his ear opened and awakened, to hear as the learned; and happy are his people who have ears to hear the joyful ſound, and take pleaſure in it, and who are cleanſed from their hearing ſins, by his precious blood: and upon the thumb of their right hand; on the middle joint of it, as Jarchi: and upon the great toe of the right-foot; the hands and fingers being the inſtruments of action, and the feet and toes of walking, ſhew that the life and converſation of the prieſts of the Lord ought to be pure and holy, and ſo their antitype perfectly was; and whereas there is imperfection in all the actions, and even in the beſt righteouſneſs of the ſaints, and their walk and converſation is not without ſin, they have need to have them ſprinkled with, and their converſation-garments waſhed and made white in the blood of the Lamb: and ſprinkle the blood upon the altar round about; as was done with the blood of the other ram, ℣. 16.

℣. 21. And thou ſhalt take of the blood that is upon the altar, &c.] Not that which was ſprinkled upon it, which could not be gathered up in ſuch quantities as to be ſprinkled again; but which was in a baſon on it, having been received into it when the ram was ſlain: and of the anointing oil; hereafter to be made, and with which Aaron was anointed as ſoon as he had his garments on; and this is a different anointing from that that was poured on his head; this was ſprinkled on his garments, as follows: and ſprinkle it upon Aaron; both the blood and the oil: and upon his garments; the note of Aben Ezra is, under the garments of Aaron, and on his garments, as if they were ſprinkled within and without: and upon his ſons, and upon the garments of his ſons with him; at his firſt unction his ſons don't ſeem to have been anointed at all, but now they and their garments are ſprinkled both with blood and oil; denoting both the juſtification of the prieſts of the Lord by the blood of Chriſt, and the ſanctification of them by the Spirit, and the need that both their perſons and their actions ſtand in of cleanſing by them both: and he ſhall be hallowed, and his garments, and his ſons, and his ſons garments with him; all ſhould be holy in a ceremonial ſenſe, and devoted to holy uſes and ſervices; ſee Pſ. xlv. 8. Rev. vii. 14.

℣. 22. Alſo thou ſhalt take of the ram the fat and the rump, &c.] The fat which was upon it: the ſheep in Arabia and about Judea were remarkable for their large tails; according to Rauwolff[z], they were half a ſpan thick, and one and a half broad, and very fat; and ſo in Africa and Egypt were rams of large tails of ten and twenty pounds weight[a]; and Ariſtotle[b] ſpeaks of ſheep in Syria that had tails a cubit broad; and Herodotus[c] makes mention of two ſorts in Arabia, one ſort have tails three cubits long, which if drawn upon the ground would ulcerate, wherefore the ſhepherds make little carts to bear them upon[d], and the other ſort have tails a cubit broad; and Vartomanus[e] relates, how in Arabia are fat ſheep whoſe tails weigh 11, 12, 16, nay 44 pound, and of a cubit long: and the fat that covereth the inwards, and the caul of the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them; ſee the note on ℣. 13. and the right ſhoulder; what was to be done with it is afterwards obſerved as well as with the reſt: for it is a ram of conſecration; or of fillings[f]; Jarchi ſays, the ſcripture declares theſe fillings to be peace-offerings, for they miniſter peace to the altar, and to him that does the ſervice, and to the owners; wherefore the breaſt was neceſſarily his that did the ſervice for his portion, and this was Moſes, for he miniſtred in the fillings, and the reſt Aaron and his ſons eat, for they were the owners.

℣. 23. And one loaf of bread, &c.] Of unleavened bread, as in ℣. 2. large bread is meant, as Ben Melech obſerves, for the reſt were cakes and wafers as follows: and one cake of oiled bread; which was made of flour and oil mixed and tempered together: and one wafer out of the baſket of unleavened bread; which was anointed with oil and croſſed, as the Jewiſh writers ſay: that is before the Lord; which baſket of unleavened bread, cakes and wafers, was ſet in the court of the tabernacle, and ſo ſaid to be before the Lord, being devoted to whatever uſe he ſhould aſſign them, being by his orders brought thither.

℣. 24. And thou ſhalt put all in the hands of Aaron, and in the hands of his ſons, &c.] Which accounts for the uſe of the phraſe, filling the hand for conſecration, ℣. 9. for all the above things of the ram, bread, cakes, and wafers, were put into their hands when conſecrated, denoting their inveſtiture with their office: all things are in the hands of Chriſt, relative to the glory of God and the good of his people; their perſons are in his hands, and all grace and bleſſings of it for them; a commiſſion to execute his office as a prieſt is given to him; and as it was proper that he alſo ſhould

---

[y] רית ניחוח odor quietis, Montanus, Fagius, Vatablus, Cartwright, Piſcator. African. Deſcript. Africæ, l. 9. p. 753.

[z] Travels, p. 221.

[a] Leo.

[b] Hiſt. Animal. l. 8. c. 28.

[c] Thalia ſive l. 3. c. 113.

[d] The ſame is obſerved in T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 54. 2. & Gloſs. in Ib.

[e] Navigat. l. 2. c. 5, 9, 15.

[f] מלאים impletionum, Montanus, Vatablus, Piſcator.

ſhould have ſomewhat to offer, his hands are filled, and he has a ſufficiency for that purpoſe, as Aaron and his ſons had, Heb. viii. 3. and ſhalt wave them for a wave-offering before the Lord; which was waved or ſhook to and fro, from eaſt to weſt, and from north to ſouth, to or before him, as Jarchi obſerves, whoſe are the four winds of the world [g]; and this was done by Moſes and Aaron alſo; for, according to the ſame writer, "both were employed "in waving, both the owners and the prieſt, how? "the prieſt put his hand under the hand of the "owner and waved, and in this Aaron and his "ſons were the owners and Moſes the prieſt."

℣. 25. And thou ſhalt receive them of their hands, &c.] After they had been put into them, and filled with them, and waved by them: and burn them upon the altar for a burnt-offering; not the fleſh of the ram, which is after ordered to be boiled and eat by Aaron and his ſons; but the fat of it, before deſcribed, with one loaf, one cake, and one wafer of unleavened bread, out of the baſket: this was done for a ſweet ſavour before the Lord; that it might be grateful and acceptable to him, as it was: it is an offering made by fire unto the Lord; ſee the note on ℣. 18.

℣. 26. And thou ſhalt take the breaſt of the ram of Aaron's conſecrations, &c.] The ram being ſlain and cut to pieces, this part is particularly diſpoſed of: and wave it for a wave-offering before the Lord; in the manner before deſcribed: and it ſhall be thy part; the part of Moſes, he officiating now as a prieſt; and we find accordingly in after-times that this part of the ſacrifice belonged to the prieſt, Lev. vii. 31.

℣. 27. And thou ſhalt ſanctify the breaſt of the wave-offering, &c.] Set it apart for the uſe of the prieſt in all ſucceeding ages: and the ſhoulder of the heave-offering; as the breaſt was waved from one hand to another, or caſt from the hand of one to the hand of another; the ſhoulder was heaved up, or caſt up and catched again: this alſo was to be ſanctified or ſet apart for the prieſt's uſe, Lev. vii. 32, 33, 34. which is waved, and which is heaved up of the ram of the conſecration; the breaſt was waved and the ſhoulder heaved: even of that which is for Aaron, and of that which is for his ſons; as theſe two parts before-mentioned in peace-offerings were.

℣. 28. And it ſhall be Aaron's and his ſons by a ſtatute for ever, from the children of Iſrael, &c.] That is the ſhoulder, which ſeems particularly meant, though the breaſt alſo was theirs, which was at this time given to Moſes, he being prieſt; and this was an everlaſting ſtatute and ordinance in all generations, as long as the prieſthood of Aaron laſted, until the Meſſiah ſhould come and put an end to it: and this the children of Iſrael were always to allow the prieſts; the ſhoulder, becauſe Aaron bore their names before the Lord upon his ſhoulders, for a memorial; and the breaſt for a like reaſon, becauſe he bore their names in the breaſt-plate of judgment upon his heart, and their judgment alſo before the Lord continually, ch. xxviii. 12, 29, 30. for it is an heave-offering; it is lifted up to the Lord, and therefore is given to his prieſt: and it ſhall be an heave-offering from the children of Iſrael of the ſacrifice of their peace-offerings, even their heave-offerings unto the Lord; it being heaved up and given to the prieſt, it was reckoned an offering to the Lord, and was accepted by him as a peace-offering; and it was an emblem of the lifting up of their hearts to God, and of the going up of the affections and deſires of their ſouls to him, and of their ſerving and worſhipping him, in ſpirit and in truth, who is a Spirit, and was their father in heaven, to whom their eyes, hearts, and hands, were to be lifted up.

℣. 29. And the holy garments of Aaron ſhall be his ſon's after him, &c.] That ſon that ſucceeded him in the prieſthood; for the prieſthood continued in Aaron's family by ſucceſſion, the eldeſt ſon being high prieſt, until the diſpoſal of this office fell into the hands of heathen princes, and then it was obtained by intereſt or money: now, though the coat and breeches might be wore out by Aaron before he died, yet the robe of the ephod, and the ephod, and its girdle, and the breaſt-plate might continue, and go from father to ſon, and eſpecially the latter, even to ſucceeding ages; ſee Numb. xx. 26, 28. to be anointed therein, and conſecrated in them; this is to be underſtood only of the high prieſthood, and of anointing and conſecrating to that; for none but high prieſts were anointed, and their ſons who ſucceeded them in that office, and who were anointed, and conſecrated in like manner as Aaron was, by waſhing, clothing, anointing, and ſacrificing.

℣. 30. And that ſon that is prieſt in his ſtead, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan is, "who ſhall "riſe after him of his ſons, not of the Levites;" for the high prieſt was to be of the family of Aaron, a deſcendant of his; it was not enough that he was of the tribe of Levi, but he muſt deſcend from Aaron, either in the line of Eleazar or of Ithamar: ſhall put them on ſeven days; the next ſucceſſor was to wear the garments ſeven days running: when he cometh into the tabernacle of the congregation to miniſter in the holy place; to offer ſacrifice in the court of the tabernacle, on the altar of burnt-offering, and to offer incenſe on the altar of incenſe, and to trim the lamps of the candleſtick, and to put the ſhew bread on the table.

℣. 31. And thou ſhalt take the ram of the conſecration, &c.] For the other ram was cut in pieces and burnt, even the whole of it: and ſeethe his fleſh in the holy place; not in that part of the tabernacle which was properly the holy place, as diſtinguiſhed from the holy of holies, and from the court of the tabernacle; for in that there was no convenience for boiling, but in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation, even at the door of it, as in Lev. viii. 31. ſee Ezek. xlvi. 19—24.

℣. 32. And Aaron and his ſons ſhall eat of the fleſh of the ram, &c.] Typical of the fleſh of Chriſt, whoſe fleſh is meat indeed, and to be eat by faith, whereby it becomes ſpiritual food, ſavoury and nouriſhing, as it is to all the Lord's prieſts, or who are made ſo to God: and the bread that is in the baſket; the unleavened bread, cakes, and wafers, ℣. 2, 3. what was left of them, one loaf, one cake, and one wafer, having been put into the hands of Aaron and his ſons, and received from them and burnt, ℣. 23, 24, 25. this may figure Chriſt the bread of life, held forth in the miniſtry of the word, for believers in him to feed upon; which baſket of bread was by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; the whole court, Jarchi ſays, was ſo called, where the people in common aſſembled, and the Lord met with them; and ſo may point at the public ordinances, where Chriſt is ſet forth as food for ſouls.

℣.

[g] Vid. T. Bab. Menachot, fol. 62. 1.

℣. 33. And they ſhall eat thoſe things wherewith the atonement was made, &c.] For the ſins of Aaron and his ſons, for they were men of infirmity, and needed ſacrifice for ſin themſelves; and herein Chriſt their antitype excelled them, that he had no ſin of his own, and needed not to offer firſt for them, and then for the ſins of others, as Aaron and his ſons, the types of him did; and their eating of the ſacrifice for atonement, points at the receiving of the atonement of Chriſt's ſacrifice by faith, and the enjoyment of it and the bleſſings following on it: to conſecrate and to ſanctify them; that they might be filled and fitted, and ſet apart and devoted to the office of the prieſthood, and miniſter in it: but a ſtranger ſhall not eat thereof, becauſe they are holy; meaning not one of another nation, but of another family, though an Iſraelite; the Targum of Jonathan renders it, a prophane and common perſon, a layman, one that was not a prieſt; who, though he was of the ſeed of Iſrael, yet not being of the ſeed of Aaron, as Aben Ezra interprets it, he might not eat of the above things, becauſe they were devoted to holy uſes; and therefore none but ſuch who were ſanctified or ſet apart to ſacred ſervice might partake of them.

℣. 34. And if ought of the fleſh of the conſecrations, or of the bread remain unto the morning, &c.] Being more than the prieſts could eat: then thou ſhalt burn the remainder with fire; that it might not be uſed in a contemptuous manner, or abuſed to ſuperſtitious uſes; the ſame orders with thoſe reſpecting what was left of the paſſover, ch. xii. 10. it ſhall not be eaten becauſe it is holy; which is the reaſon before given, why it ſhould not be eaten by a ſtranger, and being kept till the next morning it was ordered to be burnt, that it might not then be eaten at all; it was not to be given to a ſtranger, nor to be caſt to dogs, becauſe it had been devoted to ſacred uſes; and it ſeems as if it was not to be eaten by the prieſts themſelves the next day, who were to live upon the daily proviſion made for them.

℣. 35. And thus ſhalt thou do unto Aaron, and to his ſons, &c.] For their conſecration, waſhing, cloathing, anointing them, ſprinkling blood upon them and their garments, and offering ſacrifice for them: according to all things which I have commanded thee; no one thing was to be omitted, and we find they were carefully and punctually obſerved, Lev. viii. ſeven days ſhalt thou conſecrate them; ſo long the rites and ceremonies of the conſecration were to be performing, that they might be thoroughly uſed to the putting on of their garments, and the offering of ſacrifices as they ſaw performed by Moſes; and in all reſpects be fitted for the diſcharge of their office: the Jewiſh writers generally ſay, that ſeven days were appointed that a ſabbath might paſs over them.

℣. 36. And thou ſhalt offer every day a bullock for a ſin-offering, for atonement, &c.] That is, every day of the ſeven days of conſecration; denoting the full and compleat atonement for ſin by the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which theſe ſacrifices could not really obtain, and were therefore frequently repeated, in this caſe ſeven times; figuratively by that number pointing to the full expiation of ſin by the atoning Saviour, who was made not only an offering for ſin, but ſin itſelf by imputation, for his people: and thou ſhalt cleanſe the altar when thou haſt made atonement for it; which though not capable of ſin, or of any moral guilt, yet in as much as it was to be of ſacred uſe, and to have ſin-offerings laid upon it; expiation and cleanſing, in a ceremonial way, were to be made for it, to purge it from the uncleanneſs of the children of Iſrael, Lev. xvi. 18, 19. This altar was typical of Chriſt, who is that altar believers in him have a right to partake of; and though he had no ſin of his own, no guilt of that kind to expiate, nor pollution to be cleanſed from, yet as he had the guilt of his people tranſferred to him, and was clothed with their filthy garments, and had their uncleanneſſes on him; by the ſacrifice of himſelf he purged away ſin from himſelf and them, and was juſtified and cleared of all, and they in him: and thou ſhalt anoint it, to ſanctify it; anoint it, as it afterwards was, with the holy anointing oil, whereby it was ſanctified, or ſet apart for holy uſes; in which it was a figure of Chriſt anointed with the oil of gladneſs, the Holy Spirit, above his fellows; and was ſanctified and ſet apart for his prieſtly office, in which he was both altar, ſacrifice and prieſt.

℣. 37. Seven days thou ſhalt make atonement for the altar, and ſanctify it, &c.] That it might be thoroughly fit to have ſacrifices offered on it: and it ſhall be an altar moſt holy; as Chriſt is, and is called the Moſt holy, and ſaid to be anointed, Dan. ix. 24. He is holy in his perſon, nature and offices, more holy than angels or men; as holy as the Lord God, the God of Iſrael, his Father, who is glorious in holineſs, and none like to him for it: whatſoever toucheth the altar ſhall be holy; that is, whatſoever gift or ſacrifice, according to law, was offered on it, whatever appertained unto it, or were ſuitable for it; for as for other things, they were not made holy by a touch of it, Hagg. ii. 11, 12. The Targum of Jonathan refers it to perſons, paraphraſing the words, that ſuch ſhould be holy who were "of the ſons of Aaron, but of the reſt "of the people, it was not lawful for them to "draw nigh, leſt they ſhould be burnt with flam-"ing fire that comes out of the holy things;" but our Lord applies it to gifts and offerings of the altar, for to this caſe he ſeems to have reſpect, Matt. xxiii. 19. for he is the altar that ſanctifies not only the perſons, but the ſervices of his people, and their ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe come up with acceptance to God from off this altar; though even the beſt duties and ſervices of theirs need atonement and purification by the ſacrifice and blood of Chriſt.

℣. 38. Now this is that which thou ſhalt offer upon the altar, &c.] An altar being ordered to be built, and this ſanctified and expiated, and prieſts being appointed and conſecrated to the ſervice of it; an account is given of the offerings that ſhould be offered up upon it every day, beſides thoſe that ſhould be offered occaſionally, and at other ſet times: two lambs of the firſt year day by day continually; typical of Chriſt the Lamb of God, who continually, through the efficacy of his blood, and the virtue of his ſacrifice, which are ever the ſame, takes away day by day the ſins of his people. A lamb is a proper emblem of him for innocence and harmleſſneſs, for meekneſs and humility, for patience, for uſefulneſs for food and clothing, and eſpecially for ſacrifice; and theſe being of the firſt year, may denote the tenderneſs of Chriſt, who as he grew up as a tender plant, ſo as a tender lamb, encompaſſed with infirmities, being in all things like unto his people, excepting ſin; and as theſe were to be without ſpot, Numb. xxviii. 3. and ſo here, in the Septuagint verſion, it may point at the purity of Chriſt, who is the Lamb of God, without ſpot and blemiſh, and who offered himſelf without ſpot to God, and was a fit ſacrifice to be offered up for the taking away of the ſins of men.

℣. 39. The one lamb thou ſhalt offer in the morning, &c.] And before this no other ſacrifice was to be offered, and therefore it was ſlain and offered very early; and yet it was not lawful to ſlay it before break of day, wherefore great care was taken that it ſhould not; "he that was appointed over "the ſervice, uſed to ſay to the prieſts, go out, "and ſee if the time of ſlaying is come; if it "is come, he that went out to ſee, ſaid, corruſ-"cations or brightneſſes; Matthias the ſon of Sa-"muel ſaid, does it enlighten the face of the whole "eaſt as far as Hebron? he ſaid, yes; why was "this neceſſary? becauſe one time the light of "the moon aſcended, and they thought the eaſt "was enlightened (or it was break of day) and "they ſlew the ſacrifice [h]:" and the other lamb thou ſhalt offer at even, or between the two evenings; of which phraſe ſee the note on ch. xii. 6. Joſephus [i] ſays, it was about the 9th hour, or 3 o'clock in the afternoon, that the daily ſacrifice was offered: the Miſnic doctors ſay [k], it was ſlain at eight and a half, or half an hour after 2 o'clock, and was offered up at 9 and a half, or half an hour after 3 o'clock; they ſtaid as long as they could before they offered it, becauſe no ſacrifice was offered after it but the paſſover. We are told, that the lamb of the morning was ſlain in the north-weſt corner of the altar, and that of the evening in the north-eaſt corner [l]: the reaſon of this was, becauſe in the morning the ſun was in the eaſt, and ſhone over-againſt the weſt; but the evening daily ſacrifice was when the ſun was in the weſt, and ſhone over-againſt the eaſt [m]: this was in a good meaſure literally fulfilled in Chriſt, namely, as to the time of ſlaying and offering the daily ſacrifice; for he was crucified at the 3d hour, that is, at 9 o'clock in the morning, at the 6th hour, or at 12 o'clock at noon, darkneſs was upon the earth, which continued till the 9th, and then he gave up the ghoſt, which was 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the uſual time of ſlaying and offering the daily evening ſacrifice, Mark xv. 25, 33, 34. and this may ſignify the extenſiveneſs of Chriſt's ſacrifice, reaching from the morning of the world to the evening of it. He was ſlain and offered up in the morning of the world, in the purpoſe and promiſe of God, in the typical ſacrifices of men, and in the faith of his people, who looked to him as the atoning Saviour, and in the efficacy of his blood, which reached to all the ſaints from the beginning, for the pardon and atonement of their ſins; and it was at the end or evening of the Jewiſh world and ſtate, that Chriſt was offered up a ſacrifice for ſin, and the virtue of it will continue to the end of the world. Chriſt is the Lamb of God that continues to take away the ſin of the world, and his blood continues to cleanſe from all ſin, and he ever lives to make interceſſion for tranſgreſſors. Good men are continually ſinning, and they ever ſtand in need of the application of pardoning grace and mercy; there are ſins of the night, and the ſins of the day they fall into, and nothing can expiate them but the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt. The repetition of theſe ſacrifices every day, morning and night, ſhews, that they could not really and perfectly take away ſin; the ceſſation of them was a token of perfect atonement by Chriſt, which made them needleſs and uſeleſs: and this may teach us, that the ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe ſhould be morning and evening; in the morning we ſhould expreſs our thankfulneſs for the mercies of the night, and pray for the continuance of them the day following; and at the evening we ſhould offer up the ſacrifices of praiſe for the mercies of the day, and pray for the mercies of the night; and at both ſeaſons ſhould be concerned to have a freſh application of the atoning blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt, for the taking away from us the ſins of the night and day.

℣. 40. And with the one lamb a tenth deal, &c.] That is, the tenth part of an ephah, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra, which is an omer, and held as much as a man could eat in one day, or more, ſee ch. xvi. 38: of flour mingled with the fourth part of a hin of beaten oil; this was a meat, or rather bread-offering, which went along with the daily ſacrifice, and typified Chriſt the food of his people, who is compared to a corn of wheat; is the fineſt of the wheat, and the bread of God, which came down from heaven, and gives life, food and nouriſhment to men; and the beaten oil may ſignify the graces of the Spirit in him, and the exerciſe of them through the many trials and ſufferings he endured, and which make him ſavoury food to his people, as a crucified Chriſt is: and the 4th part of a hin of wine for a drink-offering; a hin, Aben Ezra ſays, was an Egyptian meaſure, but what reaſon he had for it does not appear; according to Ainſworth, the fourth part of it was a pint and a half; but according to biſhop Cumberland [n], who has with great exactneſs calculated the Jewiſh meaſures, it was a quart and above half a pint; this was poured out upon the altar. Jarchi ſays, there were two ſilver baſons on the top of the altar, and there were bored in them like two ſmall noſtrils, and wine was put in the middle of them; and it flowed and went out by the way of the noſtrils, and fell upon the top of the altar, and from thence deſcended to the bottom: this wine poured may either ſignify the blood of Chriſt ſhed, or poured out for the remiſſion of ſin; or the love of Chriſt very plentifully manifeſted in the offering up of himſelf for men, and the acceptableneſs of that to God: and moreover, as ſacrifices are called the bread of God, and he makes as it were a feaſt of them, feeding on them with delight and pleaſure, it was neceſſary there ſhould be wine to compleat the banquet; wherefore wine is ſaid to cheer both God and man, Judg. ix. 13. alluding to the libations of wine in ſacrifices.

℣. 41. And the other lamb thou ſhalt offer at even, &c.] See the note on ℣. 39: and ſhalt do thereto according to the meat-offering of the morning, and according to the drink-offering thereof; a meat and drink-offering conſiſting of the ſame things, for quality and quantity, and made in the ſame manner, were to be offered with the daily evening ſacrifice, as with the morning one: for a ſweet ſavour, an offering made by fire unto the Lord; for theſe lambs were both burnt with fire upon the altar, and therefore are called a burnt-offering in the next verſe.

℣. 42. This ſhall be a continual burnt-offering throughout your generations, &c.] To be offered up morning and evening in every age, as long as the Moſaic œconomy laſted, till he came, who put an end to it by offering up himſelf, the antitype of it: at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before

[h] Miſn. Yoma, c. 3. §. 1, 2. Tamid, c. 3. §. 2. c. 5. §. 1. [i] Joſeph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 4. §. 3. [k] Miſn. Peſachim, c. 5. §. 1. [l] Miſn. Tamid, c. 4. §. 1. [m] Bartenora, in Ib. [n] Of Scripture-weights and meaſures, c. 3. p. 86.

before the Lord; that is, upon the altar of burnt-offering which ſtood there, ſee ch xl. 29: where I will meet you to ſpeak there unto thee; to accept of their ſacrifices, give further directions of what was to be done, and anſwers to enquiries made of him in matters of moment and difficulty. Jarchi obſerves, that ſome of their Rabbins conclude from hence, that the holy bleſſed God ſpoke with Moſes from off the altar of braſs, after the tabernacle was ſet up; but others ſay from off the mercy-ſeat, as in ch. xxv. 22.

℣. 43. And there will I meet with the children of Iſrael, &c.] Not only with Moſes or with Aaron, and his ſucceſſors, but with the people themſelves, by granting them his gracious preſence in public ordinances, giving them tokens of his good-will unto them, and of his acceptance of their offerings, hearing their prayers put up by themſelves, or by the prieſt interceding for them, and receiving their thankſgivings for mercies beſtowed, and giving them inſtructions by the mouth of his prieſts: and the tabernacle ſhall be ſanctified by my glory; by his ſhekinah or the glory of the divine majeſty dwelling in it; or it may be ſupplied, the children of Iſrael ſhall be ſanctified; ſet apart and diſtinguiſhed by his glorious preſence among them; the Targum of Jonathan is, "I will be ſanctified in or "by their princes becauſe of my glory."

℣. 44. And I will ſanctify the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, &c.] This ſeems to intimate that ſomething elſe in the preceding verſe is intended, as what ſhould be ſanctified, than the tabernacle, as we ſupply it; or elſe here is a repetition of the ſame thing for the confirmation of it, and both that and the altar were ſanctified, or ſet apart for holy uſes, as well as cleanſed and expiated by ſacrifices: I will ſanctify alſo both Aaron and his ſons, to miniſter to me in the prieſts office; that is, in a ceremonial way, by ſeparating them from the reſt of the children of Iſrael, by waſhing, cloathing, and anointing them, and by accepting ſacrifices offered by them; for this is not to be underſtood of internal ſanctifying grace, which, though Aaron had, and many of his ſons that ſucceeded him, yet not all; nor was it neceſſary to the performance of the prieſtly office, though it is in all thoſe who are a royal prieſthood, and made prieſts as well as kings unto God; for they are a holy nation, called with an holy calling, and unto himſelf, and have it both internally and externally.

℣. 45. And I will dwell among the children of Iſrael, &c.] In the tabernacle ordered to be built for him, and which when built was placed in the midſt of the camp of Iſrael; and here Jehovah dwelt as a king in his palace, near at hand to help, protect, and defend his ſubjects, and ſupply them with all things needful for them; ſee Deut. iv. 7. and will be their God; their covenant-God, their king and their God, their government being a theocracy; their God and father, by national adoption, and from whom they might expect all good things, they continuing in obedience to his commands, by the tenure of which they held their rights and privileges, civil and eccleſiaſtical.

℣. 46. And they ſhall know that I am the Lord their God, &c.] By his preſence with them, by the bleſſings beſtowed upon them, by his care of them, and kindneſs to them: that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell amongſt them; not only did he bring them from thence, that they might dwell in the land of Canaan, but that he might dwell among them, which was by far the greateſt mercy; and not only that they might be delivered from the bondage and affliction with which they were ſorely preſs'd, but that they might be a free people, under the protection of their king and their God, in the midſt of them; all which was a great encouragement to them, and an obligation on them to attend the ſervice of the ſanctuary, and to obey the Lord in whatſoever he had enjoined or ſhould command them: I am the Lord their God; of which he had given full proof and evidence by what he had done for them, and would yet give more; and to have the Lord our God is the greateſt happineſs that can be enjoyed, ſee Pſ. xxxiii. 12. and cxliv. 15.

CHAP. XXX.

THIS chapter treats of the altar of incenſe, its form and uſe, ℣. 1—10. of the ranſom of the Iſraelites, with the half ſhekel when numbered, ℣. 11—16. of the laver for the prieſts to waſh their hands and feet at before ſervice, ℣. 17—21. of the anointing oil, the ingredients of it, and what was to be done with it, ℣. 22—33. and of the perfume, the compoſition and uſe of it, ℣. 34—38.

℣. 1. And thou ſhalt make an altar to burn incenſe upon, &c.] The Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan call it incenſe of ſpices, properly enough, for it was made of various ſpices; of which ſee ℣. 34. and this was neceſſary on a natural and civil account, to remove thoſe ill ſmells from the ſanctuary, occaſioned by the number of beaſts continually ſlain in it; but chiefly on a religious account, to denote the acceptableneſs of the ſervice of the ſanctuary to God: of ſhittim-wood ſhalt thou make it; of the ſame that the altar of burnt-offering was made, which was covered with braſs, but this with gold, as after related; of this ſort of wood, ſee the note on ch. xxv. 5. as this altar was a type of Chriſt, the ſhittim-wood may reſpect his human nature; which wood, though it ſprung out of the earth, was not common, but choice and excellent, and very ſtrong, durable and incorruptible; and ſo Chriſt, though he was man made of an earthly woman in his human nature, yet was choſen out of the people, is the chiefeſt among ten thouſand, and excellent as the cedars, the man of God's right hand, whom he made ſtrong for himſelf; and though he died in it, he ſaw no corruption, he now lives, and will live for evermore; in which nature he acts the part of a mediator, and intercedes for his people, and offers up their prayers perfumed with the much incenſe of his mediation, to which this altar has a ſpecial reſpect.

℣. 2. A cubit ſhall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof, four-ſquare ſhall it be, &c.] It was one Jewiſh ſquare cubit, which is in ſurface, according to biſhop Cumberland, three Engliſh ſquare feet, and about 47 ſquare inches; which may denote the ſolidity, perfection, and extenſiveneſs of Chriſt's prieſthood, it being unchangeable, firm, and laſting; and which paſſes not from one to another, other, and the which makes ſomething perfect, which the law and prieſthood of Aaron could not, even perfects for ever, them that are ſanctified; and is very extenſive; the virtue of it reaches to all the elect of God, from the beginning of the world to the end of it; not his ſacrifice only, but his interceſſion, which is principally reſpected; that is made for all the people of God, in all places, and in all ages, and for all things for them, both for this life, and that which is to come: and two cubits ſhall be the height thereof; ſo that it was as high again as it was long and broad: Chriſt, our interceding high prieſt, is made higher than the heavens: the horns thereof ſhall be of the ſame; of the ſame wood the altar itſelf was made: theſe were a ſort of ſpires that roſe up at the four corners of the altar; and the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes the words, "and of it its horns ſhall "be erect;" which were chiefly for decoration and ornament; and may denote the honour and glory of Chriſt, as well as his power and ability to ſave, to the uttermoſt, all that come to God by him, or lay hold upon him, ſince he ever lives to make interceſſion.

℣. 3. And thou ſhalt overlay it with pure gold, &c.] Hence this altar is ſometimes called the golden altar, Numb. iv. 11. Rev. viii. 3. this may figure the deity of Chriſt, whoſe head is as the moſt fine gold, and is in the divine nature, in the form of God, and is the brightneſs of his glory, and poſſeſſed of the ſame perfections; or rather the glorification of his human nature in heaven, where he is highly exalted, and the preciouſneſs of his interceſſion, which is always powerful and prevalent, and the duration of it: the top thereof, and the ſides thereof, round about, and the horns thereof; all and each of them were covered with gold; this altar had a top, when the altar of burnt-offering had none, but its hollow place was filled up with earth at every encampment; ſo Jarchi obſerves: this was not a grate, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, for here were neither blood nor aſhes to be let through; but it was a flat covering like the roof of a houſe, as the word ſignifies, on which was ſet a golden diſh, with live coals and incenſe burning on them; and which, when burnt was carried away: and the ſides are the four ſides of the frame, it being a four-ſquare, or the two ſides and two ends of it; and the horns, the four horns at each corner, all were covered with plates of gold; ſo that this altar was a richer and more excellent one than that of burnt-offering; and may ſignify the ſuper-excellency of Chriſt's ſtate of exaltation to that of his humiliation: in the latter, which the altar of burnt-offering reſpected, he was made of no reputation, and became obedient to the death of the croſs, yea, was made ſin, and a curſe for his people; but in the former, which the altar of incenſe reſpected, he was raiſed from the dead, and had glory given him; he was raiſed for the juſtification of his people, and was himſelf juſtified in the Spirit, aſcended on high, was received into glory, ſat down at the right hand of God, making continual interceſſion for his ſaints: and thou ſhalt make unto it a crown of gold round about; which was partly to keep from ſlipping what was put upon it, but chiefly for ornament; and plainly points at the exaltation of Chriſt in our nature in heaven, as our interceding high prieſt, where he is a prieſt upon his throne, and is crowned with glory and honour.

℣. 4. And two golden rings ſhalt thou make to it under the crown of it, &c.] The crown was on the top of the altar, at the edge of it all around; and juſt underneath it were two rings of gold, two on each ſide: by the two corners thereof, upon the two ſides of it ſhalt thou make them; at each corner a ring, and at each ſide; the uſe of them follows: and they ſhall be for places for the ſtaves to bear it withal; theſe rings were for the ſtaves to be put into when the altar was to be carried from place to place, as it was in the wilderneſs, during the travels of Iſrael there; and this ſignifies that Chriſt never leaves his people; when they are in the wilderneſs he is with them, interceding for them, providing all things neceſſary for their food, ſafety, and protection, Rev. xii. 14.

℣. 5. And thou ſhalt make the ſtaves of ſhittim-wood, &c.] Of the ſame wood the altar itſelf was made: and overlay them with gold; as that was; theſe rings and ſtaves may be an emblem of the precious ordinances of Chriſt in which he grants his preſence; and where he is held forth in different ages and places as the interceding high prieſt of his people, their advocate with the father, pleading continually his propitiatory ſacrifice in their favour.

℣. 6. Thou ſhalt put it before the vail, &c.] That divides between the holy and the moſt holy place; not within the vail in the holy of holies, but before it at the holy place, for there the altar of incenſe ſtood: Joſephus [o] ſays, between the candleſtick and the table, i. e. of ſhewbread, ſtood the altar of incenſe; now the candleſtick and ſhewbread were in the holy place; and with this account the Talmudiſts [p] agree, who ſay, that the table was in the north, diſtant from the wall two cubits and a half, and the candleſtick on the ſouth, diſtant from the wall two cubits and a half, and the altar was in the middle, and ſtood between them: and Maimonides [q] gives the like account of its ſituation, which is here further deſcribed: that is by the ark of the teſtimony; which vail was by it, before which the altar was placed; the ark of the teſtimony was the cheſt or coffer in which the law was put, and which was the teſtimony of the will of God, from whence it had this name; and it ſtood in the moſt holy place; and not by it in the ſame place, but over-againſt it, in the holy place ſtood the altar of incenſe: before the mercy-ſeat, that is over the teſtimony; the mercy-ſeat that was over the ark, a lid or cover to it, where the teſtimony was; and towards this, before the face of it, was the altar of incenſe, where the prieſt officiating, looked directly towards it; having that in view for the acceptance of the people's prayers to God through Chriſt, which they were making whilſt he was burning the incenſe: where I will meet thee; as he had before promiſed, ch. xxv. 22.

℣. 7. And Aaron ſhall burn thereon ſweet incenſe every morning, &c.] This in after times was done by a common prieſt, who obtained this ſervice by lot, as we find in the times of Zacharias, Luke i. 9. the incenſe was fetched out of the houſe of Abtines, where it was made, and burning coals were taken off of the altar of burnt-offering in a veſſel, and the incenſe was ſpread upon them and burnt:

[o] Antiq. l. 3. c. 6. §. 8. [p] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 33. 2. [q] Hilchot Beth. Habechirah, c. 1. §. 7.

burnt: the Jewiſh canons about this matter run thus [r]; he that was worthy of, or allotted to the incenſe, took a veſſel that held three kabs, and a bowl in the midſt of it, full and heaped up with incenſe, and took a ſilver cenſer, and went up to the top of the altar, and moved the coals to and fro, and took them and went down and poured them into a golden cenſer: and again [s], he that was worthy of or allotted to a cenſer, gathered the coals upon the top of the altar, and ſpread them with the edges of the cenſer, and bowing himſelf went out; and he that was worthy of or allotted to the incenſe, took the bowl out of the midſt of the veſſel and gave it to his friend or neighbour: and he that burns the incenſe may not burn until the preſident ſays to him burn; and if he was an high prieſt, the preſident ſays, lord high prieſt, burn; the people depart, and he burns the incenſe and bows and goes away: the burning of the ſweet incenſe was typical of the mediation and interceſſion of Chriſt; the burning coals typified his ſufferings, which were painful to his body, and in which he endured the wrath of God in his ſoul, and both muſt be very diſtreſſing to him: the incenſe put upon theſe, ſhews that Chriſt's mediation and interceſſion proceeds upon his ſufferings and death, his bloodſhed, ſatisfaction and ſacrifice; which mediation of his, like the ſweet incenſe, is frequent, is pure and holy, though made for tranſgreſſors, and there is none like unto it; there is but one mediator between God and man: likewiſe this was typical of the prayers of the ſaints; and at the ſame time that the incenſe was burnt the people were at prayer, which was ſet before the Lord as incenſe, ſee Pſ. cxli. 3. Luke i. 10. theſe go upwards to God, and come up with acceptance to him, from off the golden altar, being offered up to him by Chriſt, with his much incenſe, thro' his blood and righteouſneſs, and are pure, holy, fervent and fragrant, and called odours, Rev. v. 8. and viii. 3, 4. when he dreſſeth the lamps, he ſhall burn incenſe upon it; which he did every morning he went into the holy place, where the candleſtick with its lamps was; theſe he trimmed and dreſſed, ſnuffed thoſe thoſe that were ready to go out, lighted thoſe that were gone out, ſupplied them with oil and wicks, and cleared the ſnuff-diſhes, and the like: now near to the candleſtick ſtood the altar of incenſe, ſo that when the prieſt looked after the one, he did the ſervice of the other; and hence we learn, that our interceſſor and lamp-lighter is one and the ſame; he that was ſeen amidſt the golden candleſticks dreſſing the lamps of them, appears at the golden altar with a golden cenſer, to offer up the prayers of his ſaints, Rev. i. 13. and viii. 3, 4. and we learn alſo, that the light of the word and prayer ſhould go together, as they do in faithful miniſters and conſcientious chriſtians, who give themſelves up unto and employ themſelves therein; the one, to and in the miniſtry of the word and prayer, and the other to and in the reading and hearing of the word and prayer.

℣. 8. And when Aaron lighteth the lamps at even, he ſhall burn incenſe upon it, &c.] In the evening the prieſt went into the holy place to light the lamps that were gone out, ſee the note on ch. xxvii. 20. at the ſame time he burnt incenſe on the altar; and as the daily ſacrifice was offered up morning and evening, ſo the incenſe was burnt every morning and evening, and much about the ſame time: the Jews ſay [t], that the incenſe of the morning was offered between the blood (i. e. the ſprinkling of the blood of the daily ſacrifice) and the members, or the laying of the pieces on the altar; and the incenſe of the evening was between the pieces and the drink-offering: and with this Philo agrees [u], who ſays, twice every day moſt fragrant odours were offered, at the ſun riſing and ſetting, before the morning and after the evening ſacrifice: a perpetual incenſe before the Lord throughout your generations; thus Chriſt's mediation and interceſſion is conſtant and continual; as his ſacrifice continually takes away the ſin of the world, in which it was the antytipe of the daily ſacrifice; ſo his blood continually ſpeaks for peace and pardon, and every bleſſing of grace for his people, in which it is the antitype of the morning and evening-incenſe; for he ever lives to make interceſſion; and ſo the prayers of the ſaints are directed to God, both morning and evening, and they ceaſe not praying as long as they live.

℣. 9. Ye ſhall offer no ſtrange incenſe thereon, &c.] Which had not the ſame, but was made of other materials, or had more or fewer; whatever was not exactly the ſame was not to be offered; and ſo to make uſe of other mediators than Chriſt, whether angels or men, or to put up prayer to God for the ſake of our own righteouſneſs, pleading the merits of our works, and not the blood, righteouſneſs and ſacrifice of Chriſt, is to offer ſtrange incenſe, unacceptable to God, and which will be of no avail to men: nor burnt-ſacrifice, nor meat-offering; theſe were to be offered and burnt upon the altar of burnt-offering: neither ſhall ye pour drink-offering thereon; as upon the other altar; every thing in God's worſhip and ſervice was to be done in the proper place and order; theſe offerings and ſacrifices, though they were by divine appointment, yet muſt be offered on that altar which was peculiar for them.

℣. 10. And Aaron ſhall make an atonement upon the horns of it once in a year, &c.] On the day of atonement, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi and Aben Ezra explain it; and the atonement here referred to, ſeems to be an atonement for the altar itſelf, ſee Lev. xvi. 18, 19. and as the altar of burnt-offering was firſt expiated and then uſed, ch. xxix. 36, 37. ſo it ſeems the altar of incenſe had not only an atonement made on it, but for it: and this was done with the blood of the ſin offering of atonement; by ſprinkling the blood of that offering upon the horns of it, as we learn from the afore-mentioned place; and this ſhews that Chriſt's mediation and interceſſion is founded upon the virtue of his blood, and the efficacy of his atoning ſacrifice, ſee 1 John ii. 1, 2. once in the year ſhall he make atonement upon it, throughout your generations; which proves the inſufficiency of all legal ſacrifices of themſelves to take away ſin, ſince every year, as the apoſtle obſerves, there was a remembrance of it, Heb. x. 3, 4. it is moſt holy unto the Lord; either the atonement made on the day of atonement, which was a moſt holy part of ſervice, and pointed at the great atonement made by the moſt holy one, the ſon of God; or this altar thus expiated, and devoted to ſacred uſe, was reckoned a moſt ſacred one to the Lord, and ſo was to have nothing offered upon it but what he ordered; with which Jarchi agrees in his note, "the altar is "ſanctified to theſe things only, and not to any "other ſervice."

℣.

[r] Miſn. Tamid, c. 5. §. 4, 5. [s] Ib. c. 6. §. 2, 3. [t] Miſn. Yoma, c. 3. §. 4. [u] De Victimis, p. 836.

4

℣. 11. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Continued his diſcourſe; or, there being ſome interniiſſion, reaſſumed it: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 12. When thou takeſt the ſum of the children of Iſrael, after their number, &c.] An account of them, how many they are; which was ſometimes done, and was proper to be done, eſpecially in time of war; though the preſent caſe ſeems to be for the ſake of raiſing money for the tabernacle and the ſervice of it: then ſhall they give every man a ranſom for his ſoul unto the Lord, when thou numbereſt them; which was not done yearly, nor was it perpetual; we have but two inſtances of it after this, until the times of David, Numb. i. 2. and xxvi. 2. yet it ſeems to have been a yearly tax or tribute, in the times of Chriſt, Matt. xvii. 24. and xxi. 12. ſee the notes there; and in the Miſnah is a whole treatiſe called Shekalim, in which an account is given of the time and manner of collecting this ranſom-money, and for what uſes, and who were obliged to pay it, and who not; on the firſt of Adar (or February) they proclaimed concerning the payment of it, on the 15th the tables were ſet for that purpoſe, and on the 25th the proper perſons ſat in the ſanctuary to receive it[w]: this was typical of the ranſom of ſouls by Chriſt, who are not all the world, for they are ranſomed out of it, but Iſraelites, the whole myſtical Iſrael of God, and are a numbered people; their names are written in the book of life, they are told into the hands of Chriſt, are exactly known by God and Chriſt; and theſe are many and even numberleſs to men: that there be no plague amongſt them, when thou numbereſt them; as there was when David numbered them; which ſome have thought was owing to the non-payment of the ranſom-money after-mentioned; the Septuagint verſion is, no fall, the ranſom of ſouls by Chriſt preſerves them from a total and final fall by ſin, into everlaſting ruin and deſtruction; or, no death, as the Targum of Onkelos, for redemption by Chriſt ſecures from the ſecond death, and even from a corporal death as a penal evil.

℣. 13. This they ſhall give, every one that paſſeth among them that are numbered, &c.] And their number, according to Jarchi, was known by what was paid; for he ſays the ſum was taken not by heads, but every one gave the half ſhekel, and by counting them the number was known, as follows: half a ſhekel after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary; that is, after the ſtandard of a ſhekel kept in the ſanctuary as a rule for all; and ſo Jarchi paraphraſes it, "according to the weight of a ſhekel, which "I have fixed for thee to weigh, the ſhekel of "the ſanctuary." It was about 14 pence: a ſhekel is twenty gerahs; a gerah being the 20th part of a ſhekel, it was not quite three half pence of our money: an half ſhekel ſhall be the offering of the Lord; which was to be offered to him for the ranſom of ſouls, whoſe lives were forfeited by ſin; and of the redemption of which this was an acknowledgment; and was typical of the ranſom-price of ſouls by Chriſt, which is not ſilver or gold, but his precious blood, his life, himſelf, which is given as an offering and ſacrifice to God, in the room and ſtead of his people; and which is given to God againſt whom ſin is committed, the law-giver whoſe law is broken, the judge whoſe juſtice muſt be ſatisfied, and the creditor to whom the price muſt be paid.

℣. 14. Every one that paſſeth among them that are numbered, from twenty years old and above, &c.] Even Levites, Iſraelites, proſelytes and ſervants freed, but not women, bond-ſervants or children[x]: ſhall give an offering to the Lord; the half ſhekel before mentioned.

℣. 15. The rich ſhall not give more, nor the poor ſhall not give leſs than half a ſhekel, &c.] Which ſhows that the Iſraelites were alike in the eſteem of God, their worldly circumſtances making no difference; their ſouls being alike, the ſame ranſom-price was given for them; and that they were all to have an equal ſhare in the ſervice and ſanctuary of God, and the price was ſet ſo low, that the pooreſt man might be able to pay it: and even Maimonides[y] ſays, if he lived on alms, he was to beg it of others, or ſell his cloaths from off his back to pay it. This ſhows the equality of the redeemed and ranſomed of the Lord; for though ſome ſins and ſinners are greater than others, and ſome are redeemed from more ſins than others, yet all ſins being infinite, as committed againſt an infinite God, but one price is paid for all, and that is the precious blood of Chriſt, the Son of God, an infinite and divine perſon; hence all the ranſomed ones have the ſame faith, righteouſneſs, ſalvation and eternal life: when they give an offering unto the Lord, to make atonement for your ſouls; which have ſinned, are liable to death for it, are the more excellent part of men, and require a great price for the redemption and ranſom of them; and hence it is ſo great a bleſſing to be ranſomed, becauſe it is the ranſom of the ſoul: and ſuch is the efficacy of Chriſt's ranſom, that it is a full atonement for the ſouls of men, and their ſins, and compleatly delivers from ſin, ſatan, the law, death and hell.

℣. 16. And thou ſhalt take the atonement-money of the children of Iſrael, &c.] The half ſhekel, the ranſom of their ſouls: and ſhalt appoint it for the ſervice of the tabernacle of the congregation; for the building of the tabernacle, for the repairs of it, and for the ſacrifices offered in it; particularly we find that this firſt collection this way was appropriated to the ſilver ſockets of the ſanctuary, and the vail, for the ſilver hooks, and for the pillars, ch. xxxviii. 27, 28: that it may be a memorial unto the children of Iſrael before the Lord, to make an atonement for your ſouls; to put them in mind that they were ſinners, that their lives were forfeited, that a ranſom-price was given and accepted of God, that hereby atonement in a typical ſenſe was made for them; and this was before the Lord, as a token of their gratitude to him, and of their acknowledgment of the favour.

℣. 17. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Again, at another time, and upon another ſubject: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 18. Thou ſhalt alſo make a laver of braſs, and his foot alſo of braſs, to waſh withal, &c.] For Aaron, and his ſons, and the prieſts in ſucceſſion, to waſh at before their entrance on their miniſtry; and denotes in general the neceſſity of purity, in order to miniſter in the prieſtly office; and which was in its perfection in Chriſt, who being holy and harmleſs, was an high-prieſt becoming us, and ſuitable to us, qualified to offer himſelf without ſpot to God, and to take away ſin; of which purity his baptiſm in water might be a ſymbol, which he ſubmitted to before he entered publickly on the execution of his office as a prophet and prieſt; and as this may reſpect the miniſters of the goſpel, it ſhews, ſhews, that they ſhould be pure and holy in their lives and converſations, and be examples in purity of converſation to others: and as this may chiefly reſpect all the ſaints who are prieſts unto God; it may be either typical of the laver of regeneration, in which grace, comparable to water, is given, and in which a clean heart is created; and which has an influence on purity of life and converſation, and ſecures from death: or rather of the blood of Chriſt, the laver and fountain to waſh in for ſin and uncleanneſs; which is large and capacious for all the prieſts of the Lord, and ſtands open and uncovered for all to come unto; and as this was made of braſs, and that braſs the looking-glaſſes of the women, ch. xxxviii. 8. as it may reſpect the laver of regeneration, may denote the durableneſs of that grace, which is an immortal ſeed, a well of living water, ſpringing up to everlaſting life, and was a clear evidence of election of God, and redemption by Chriſt; and as it may be an emblem of the blood of Chriſt, it ſignifies the duration and continued virtue of that blood to cleanſe from all ſin; and that ſuch who are waſhed in it, and cleanſed by it, are not only beheld as clean and pure by the Lord, but in their own ſight alſo, God having cauſed their iniquities to paſs from them, and juſtified them from them by his blood: and thou ſhalt put it between the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar; that is, the altar of burnt-offering, which was by the door of the tabernacle; and between that and the tabernacle or tent of the congregation ſtood the laver for the prieſts to waſh in, juſt as they entered into the tabernacle, ch. xl. 29—32. it ſtood inclining to one of the ſides, as Aben Ezra ſays; a little on the ſouth ſide, as Jarchi obſerves: and thou ſhalt put water therein; or order it to be put in for the uſe next mentioned.

[w] Miſn. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 1, 3. [x] Ibid. [y] Hilchot Shekalim, c. 1. §. 1.

℣. 19. For Aaron and his ſons ſhall waſh their hands and their feet thereat.] Not in it, but at it; the laver had mouths or ſpouts, as Ben Melech ſays, from whence the water flowed when the prieſts waſhed their hands and feet at it; and ſo Bartenora ſays [z], they did not waſh out of the laver, but from water flowing out of it; it is ſaid out of it, not in it; it ſeems at firſt there were but two of theſe ſpouts; for it is ſaid [a] Ben Katin made twelve ſpouts or cocks, which had but two before; ſo that 12 prieſts could waſh their hands and feet at one time, and which they could do at once, preſently, by putting the right-hand on the top of the right-foot, and the left-hand upon the left-foot, as both Jarchi and Ben Melech relate: and now the hands being the inſtruments of action, and the feet of walking, this ſhews that the actions of good men, the prieſts of the Lord, and their walk and converſation are not without ſin, and that theſe need waſhing in the laver of Chriſt's blood, to which there muſt be daily application, ſee Zech. xiii. 1. Rev. vii. 14. Our Lord ſeems to have reference to this ceremony, John xiii. 10. the Egyptian prieſts waſhed twice every day in cold water, and twice every night [b].

℣. 20. When they go into the tabernacle of the congregation, they ſhall waſh with water, &c.] The laver, ſtanding near the door of the tabernacle, they waſhed at it as ſoon as they entered; and no man, we are told [c], entered into the court before he waſhed, even though he was clean; though he had contracted no filthineſs, and even though he had waſhed his hands and feet at home, he was obliged to do it when he went into the tabernacle, before he attempted to perform any ſervice. This intimates to us the neceſſity as of pure hearts, ſo of pure hands, in order to compaſs the altar of God, to attend public worſhip, and particularly prayer, in which holy hands ſhould be lifted up, 1 Tim. ii. 8. Pſ. xxvi. 6: that they die not; ſin expoſes to death, eternal death; that is the wages of it, and it is only the blood of Chriſt, and being waſhed in that, that can ſecure from it: or when they come near to the altar to miniſter; to the altar of burnt-offering to miniſter there, by laying on the wood, and the pieces, in order, and burning them on it, as follows: to burn offering made by fire to the Lord; no man was fit for this ſervice, or might be admitted to it, until he was waſhed; and it was uſual among other nations to waſh before they entered on religious ſervice [d]; even in the Eaſt-Indies, the prieſts don't ſacrifice to their idols before they waſh in water, that is about the temple [e]; which ſeems to be a ſatanical imitation of this practice among the Jews.

℣. 21. So they ſhall waſh their hands, and their feet, that they die not, &c.] By the immediate hand of God, who would ſo greatly reſent ſuch a neglect of his command; and by how much eaſier it was to perform it, by ſo much the more were they inexcuſable, and to be treated with greater ſeverity; and this is repeated, that they might carefully obſerve it, leſt they periſh: and it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever to them, even to him and to his ſeed, throughout their generations; to be obſerved by Aaron and his deſcendants in all ages, as long as their prieſthood laſted, until the Meſſiah ſhould come, and waſh all his people, his prieſts, with his own blood, from all their ſins, Rev. i. 5, 6.

℣. 22. Moreover, the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Some little time afterwards, whilſt he was yet with him on the mount: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 23. Take thou alſo unto thee principal ſpices, &c.] To make the anointing oil with, and are as follow: of pure myrrh 500 ſhekels; it is ſtrange that Saadiah, and ſo Maimonides [f], ſhould take this for muſk, which comes from a beaſt, and is confuted by Aben Ezra from Cant. v. 1. from whence it plainly appears to be what comes from a tree; and the word mor, here uſed, gives the tree the name of myrrh, almoſt in all languages. And it is juſtly mentioned firſt among the chief of ſpices; ſince, as Pliny [g] ſays, none is preferred unto the ſtacte or liquor that flows from it, that which is pure myrrh, unmixed, unadulterated; or myrrh of freedom [h], which flows freely, either of itſelf, or when cut, which is the beſt; and this was fitly uſed as a principal ingredient in the anointing oil, ſince oil was made out of it itſelf, called oil of myrrh, Eſth. ii. 12. and as a ſhekel is generally ſuppoſed to weigh half an ounce, the quantity of this to be taken was 250 ounces: and of ſweet cinamon half ſo much, even 250 ſhekels; or 125 ounces: it is here called ſweet cinamon, to diſtinguiſh it from that which was not ſweet; ſo Jarchi obſerves, "there is one ſort that has a good ſmell and taſte, "another that has not, but is as wood (common "wood) therefore it was neceſſary to ſay ſweet "cinamon." So Pliny [i] ſpeaks of two ſorts of it, one whiter, and another blacker; ſometimes the white

[z] In Miſn. Zebachim, c. 2. §. 1. [a] Miſn. Yoma, c. 3. §. 10. [b] Herodot. Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 37.
[c] Miſn. Yoma, c. 3. §. 5. [d] Vid. Outram de Sacrificiis, l. 1. c. 6. §. 14. [e] Variorum. Navigat. l. 5 c. 23.
[f] Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 1. §. 3. [g] Nat. Hiſt. l. 12, 15. [h] מר דרור myrrhæ libertatis, Montanus, Vatablus; myrrhæ ſponte fluentis, Tigurine verſion. [i] Ibid. c. 19.

white is preferred, and ſometimes the black is commended. The cinamon tree grows in great plenty in the iſland of Zeilon in India, as Vartomanus [k] relates, who ſays it is not much unlike a bay-tree, eſpecially the leaves; it beareth berries as does the bay-tree, but leſs and white; it is doubtleſs no other than the bark of a tree, and gathered in this manner; every third year they cut the branches of the tree—when it is firſt gathered it is not yet ſo ſweet, but a month after, when it waxeth dry; and with this Pliny [l] agrees, who ſays it is not odorous whilſt it is green. Pancirollus [m] reckons cinamon among the things that are loſt; and ſays, that we have no knowledge of the true cinamon; and reports from Galen, that in his time it was ſo ſcarce, that it was rarely found but in the cabinets of emperors. Pliny [n] makes mention of it, as uſed in ointments: and of ſweet calamus 250 ſhekels; or 125 ounces; and this is called ſweet, becauſe there is a calamus that is not ſweet, as Jarchi; this is the ſame with the ſweet cane from a far country, Jer. vi. 20. from India, as is generally thought; but rather perhaps from Sheba, or ſome part of Arabia; it muſt be nearer at hand than India from whence the Iſraelites had theſe ſpices; and Moſes is bid to take them, as if they were near indeed; and Pliny ſpeaks of myrrh, and of ſweet calamus, as growing in many places of Arabia, and of cinamon in Syria [o]; and Dionyſius Periegetes [p] mentions calamus along with frankincenſe, myrrh and caſſia, and calls it ſweet-ſmelling calamus; and ſo Strabo [q] ſpeaks of caſſia and cinamon as in Arabia Felix; and Diodorus Siculus [r] makes mention of all theſe in Arabia, and of caſſia that follows.

℣. 24. And of caſſia 500 ſhekels, &c.] Or 250 ounces: after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary; according to the ſtandard weight kept there. This caſſia was not the caſſia ſolutiva, which is of a purgative nature, and now in uſe in phyſic, but the caſſia odorata, or the ſweet-ſmelling caſſia; which Pancirollus [s] ſays, ſome take to be the nard, out of which a moſt ſweet oil is preſſed; and Servius [t] ſays, that caſſia is an herb of a moſt ſweet ſmell. Pliny [u] ſpeaks of it along with cinamon; and Galen ſays, when cinamon was wanting, it was uſual to put in its ſtead a double quantity of caſſia [w]; Leo Africanus ſpeaks of trees in Africa bearing caſſia, and which chiefly grew in Egypt [x]: and of oil-olive an hin; containing 12 logs: according to Godwin [y], it was of our meaſure three quarts; but as biſhop Cumberland has more exactly calculated it, it held a wine gallon, a quart, and a little more: this was the pureſt and beſt of oil, and moſt fit and proper to be a part of this holy anointing oil.

℣. 25. And thou ſhalt make it an oil of holy ointment, &c.] All the above ſpices and oil being put together, an ointment was to be made out of them, not thick as ointments uſually are, but a liquid to be poured, and therefore called an oil of ointment, and holy, becauſe devoted only to ſacred uſes: an ointment compound after the art of the apothecary; or confectioner; the ſpices bruiſed, and pounded, and mixed together, and boiled or diſtilled, and ſo an oil or ointment extracted from them: it ſhall be an holy anointing oil; for the uſes next mentioned: it ſignified the Holy Spirit of God, and his graces, that oil of gladneſs with which Chriſt and his people are anointed; and is that anointing which teacheth all things, ſee Pſ. xlv. 7. Iſ. lxi. 1, 3. Acts x. 38. 1 John ii. 20, 27. comparable to theſe ſeveral ſpices, and oil-olive, for their ſweet ſmell, chearing and reviving nature, and ſuppling quality, and for their valuableneſs and precioufneſs, and of which there was a certain weight and meaſure; for though Chriſt received this unction without meaſure, yet there is a certain meaſure of grace and gifts beſtowed upon his people, and by which they are made holy and fit for their maſter's uſe.

℣. 26. And thou ſhalt anoint the tabernacle of the congregation therewith, &c.] It cannot be thought the whole of it ſhould be anointed all over, but only a part of it for the whole; and this was either typical of the human nature of Chriſt, the true tabernacle God pitched, and not man, and which was anointed with the Holy Ghoſt; or of the church and people of God, who are an holy tabernacle or temple of the Lord, and who receive the unction from the holy one: and the ark of the teſtimony; the cheſt where the law was, and ſtood in the moſt holy place of the tabernacle; and was a type of the Meſſiah, the anointed one, in whoſe heart the law was, and who is the fulfilling end of it for righteouſneſs.

℣. 27. And the table, and all his veſſels, &c.] The ſhew-bread table, with all things appertaining to it, rings, ſtaves, diſhes, ſpoons, bowls, &c. all were anointed; which had reſpect to Chriſt, and the communion of his people with him, feeding on him, that food which endures for ever, whom God the Father has ſealed and ſanctified: and the candleſtick and his veſſels; an emblem of the church, and of the light of the word held forth in it, which being accompanied with the grace of the Spirit of God, is the ſavour of life unto life: and the altar of incenſe; on which the odours, the prayers of the ſaints, come up before God through the mediation of Chriſt.

℣. 28. And the altar of burnt-offering, with all its veſſels, &c.] Pans, ſhovels, baſons, &c. and this altar particularly was ſprinkled with it ſeven times, Lev. viii. 10, 11: and the laver, and his foot; the laver of braſs for the prieſts to waſh their hands and feet in, and the foot or baſe of it on which it ſtood, ſee ℣. 18.

℣. 29. And thou ſhalt ſanctify them, that they may be moſt holy, &c.] By anointing them, and ſo be ſet apart for ſacred uſes only; as by the grace of the Holy Spirit, the people of God, the veſſels of mercy are really ſanctified, and made meet for the maſter's uſe; and therefore it is called the ſanctification of the Spirit, which is true holineſs, in oppoſition to typical or ceremonial holineſs, here intended; and if this holy anointing oil made thoſe things moſt holy that were anointed with it, how much more muſt the grace of the Spirit thoſe who partake of it; and though it is at preſent imperfect, it will be perfected, and become compleat holineſs, without which no man can ſee the Lord: whatſoever toucheth them, ſhall be holy; as is ſaid of the moſt holy altar, ch. xxix. 37. ſee the note there. The Targum of Jonathan interprets it of perſons that approach theſe holy places, and things ſo anointed and ſanctified, paraphraſing the words thus; "whoſoever cometh unto them of the prieſts "ſhall

[k] Navigat. l. 6. c. 4. [l] Ut ſupra. [m] Rer. Memorab. ſive Deperd. par. 1. tit. 9. p. 28. [n] Ib. l. 15. c. 7. [o] Nat. Hiſt. l. 12. c. 15, 22, 28. [p] Orb. Deſcript. l. 937. [q] Geograph. l. 16. p. 538. [r] Bibliothec. l. 2. p. 132. [s] Ut ſupra, tit. 11. p. 30. [t] In Virgil. Bucol. Eclog. 2. [u] Ut ſupra, c. 19. [w] Apud Dalechamp in Plin. Ib. [x] Deſcriptio Africæ, l. 9. p 752. [y] Moſes & Aaron, l. 6. c. 9.

" ſhall be holy, but of the reſt of the tribes ſhall " be burnt with flaming fire before the Lord."

℣. 30. And thou ſhalt anoint Aaron and his ſons, &c. Them alone, and not others, as Aben Ezra, who were typical of Chriſt anointed with the Spirit of God without meaſure, to his various offices of prophet, prieſt and king; and alſo of all the ſaints, who are anointed prieſts to God, to offer up ſpiritual ſacrifices acceptable to God through Chriſt: and conſecrate them, that they may miniſter unto me in the prieſt's office; by anointing them, and by other rites mentioned in the preceding chapter; whereby they were ſet apart for that office, and were qualified for it, and had authority to exerciſe it.

℣. 31. And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] When he was come down from the mount, and gave the inſtructions about the making and uſing of this oil: ſaying, this ſhall be an holy anointing oil unto me throughout your generations; Abarbinel, and other Jewiſh writers, conclude from hence, that this ſelf-ſame oil, which was made by Moſes, laſted throughout the generations to the times of Joſiah, when it was hid with other things; but this notion is juſtly exploded by Aben Ezra; it is not probable, that ſo ſmall a quantity that was now made, which is ſuppoſed by ſome to be no more than a gallon and a half of wine meaſure, ſhould ſuffice ſo long: it does not ſeem to be more than what was ſufficient for preſent uſe; for the anointing of ſo many perſons and things as were anointed, and much leſs to be ſufficient for the anointing of prieſts and kings in after-times, until that period. This cannot be ſuppoſed without a miraculous interpoſition, to which the Talmudiſts [z] fly, and obſerve, that there were many miracles in this affair; but there is no need to have recourſe to them, ſince, for aught that is ſaid, it might be made again in like manner for ſacred uſes, which is meant by the phraſe unto me; though it might not be made for any other uſe, private or prophane.

℣. 32. Upon man's fleſh ſhall it not be poured, &c.] That is, not upon common men, or on mens fleſh in common, as was uſual at feaſts and entertainments in the eaſtern countries, ſee Pſ. xxiii. 5. Luke vii. 46. but this was not be uſed on ſuch occaſions, otherwiſe it was poured on the fleſh of ſome men, as Aaron and his ſons, on whoſe head it was poured and ran down to the beard: neither ſhall ye make any other like it, after the compoſition of it; for private uſes: it is holy, and it ſhall be holy unto you; it was ſet apart for ſacred uſe by the Lord, and ſo it was to be reckoned by them, and not to be uſed in any way, or for any other purpoſe than he had directed: all which ſhews, that the grace of the Spirit belongs to the Lord's people, his prieſts; other men are carnal, and have no lot or part in this matter, and are not to be admitted to holy ordinances, as if they were holy perſons; nor is fellowſhip in holy things to be allowed them; nor is counterfeit grace of any avail, which, though it may bear a likeneſs to true grace, is not that, nor to be ſo accounted, nor reſted on, as feigned faith, the hypocrite's hope, diſſembled love, and pretended humility.

℣. 33. Whoſoever compoundeth any like it, &c.] For his own uſe, or for any other than what God appointed it for: or whoſoever putteth any of it upon a ſtranger; meaning not a Gentile, an alien from the commonwealth of Iſrael; tho' Japhet interprets it of ſuch a ſtranger who was not of the children of Iſrael; this Aben Ezra ſays is not right, but he ſays it means one that is not of the ſeed of Aaron; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, " upon a " prophane perſon (or a common perſon, a laic) " that is not of the ſons of Aaron:" though the kings of Iſrael ſeem to be an exception to this, which might be by a ſpecial order from the Lord; yet it is a queſtion whether it was with this, or with common oil, that they were anointed: indeed, the oil with which Solomon was anointed, was taken out of the tabernacle, 1 Kings i. 39. ſhall even be cut off from his people; either by death, by the immediate hand of God inflicting ſome diſeaſe upon him, or by excommunication from the congregation of Iſrael, or by not favouring him with any poſterity, to keep up his name in the nation.

℣. 34. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] In a continued diſcourſe, or ſome time after the former, though more probably at the ſame time; ſince it concerns the incenſe to be offered on the altar of incenſe, about which directions are given in the former part of the chapter: take unto thee ſweet ſpices; which are as follow, ſtacte, onycha and galbanum; the former of theſe has its name from dropping; and of the ſame ſignification is the Hebrew word Nataph, here uſed. Pancirollus ſays [a], myrrh is a drop or tear diſtilling from a tree in Arabia Felix; and ſtacte is a drop of myrrh, which is extracted from it, and yields a moſt precious liquor: and ſo Pliny [b] relates, that myrrh-trees ſweat out of their own accord, before they are cut, what is called ſtacte, to which nothing is preferable: though ſome naturaliſts, as Theophraſtus and Dioſcorides [c] ſpeak of this as flowing from it when it is cut; however, all agree it is a liquor that drops from myrrh; though the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem interpret it balſam or roſin; as does Jarchi on the place, and Maimonides [d]: the ſecond of theſe, onycha, has its name from being of the colour of a man's nail, as the onyx ſtone is, and is the ſame with the unguis odorata or blatta byzantia. Jarchi ſays, it is the root of a ſpice, ſmooth and ſhining like a man's nail. It is by ſome " underſtood of laudanum or bdel- " lium; but the greateſt part of commentators ex- " plain it by the onyx, or the odoriferous ſhell, " which is a ſhell like to that of the ſhell-fiſh cal- " led purpura: the onyx is fiſhed for in watry " places of the Indies, where grows the ſpica nardi, " which is the food of this fiſh, and what makes " its ſhell ſo aromatic; they go to gather theſe " ſhells when the heat has dried up the marſhes. " The beſt onyx is found in the Red Sea, and is " white and large, the Babylonian is black and " ſmaller; this is what Dioſcorides ſays of it [e]." And the beſt being found in the Red Sea, it may be reaſonably ſuppoſed it was what Moſes was bid to take. In all India, it is the principal thing in all perfumes, as the aloe is in pills [f]; the Targum of Jonathan interprets it by coſtus; and the Jeruſalem Targum by ſpike of myrrh, meaning perhaps ſpikenard. The laſt of theſe galbanum, what now goes by that name, is of a very ill ſmell, and therefore can't be thought to be one of theſe ſweet ſpices; but another is meant, and which by its name

[z] Maſſachet Cerithot, fol. 5. 2. & Horayot, fol. 11. 2.
[a] Rer. Memorab. & Deperd. par. 1. tit. 12. p. 32.
[b] Nat. Hiſt. l. 12. c. 15.
[c] Apud Dalechamp. in Plin. Ib.
[d] Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 2. §. 4.
[e] Calmet's Dictionary on the word Onycha.
[f] Vid. Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 2. p. 243.

name Chelbanah, was of a fat and unctuous nature; though Jarchi says, Galbanum, whose smell is ill, is put among the spices; and Maimonides[g] and Kimchi[h] describe it like black honey, and of an offensive smell; but it must be something odoriferous, and therefore most likely to be the Galbanum Pliny[i] speaks of as growing on mount Amanus in Syria, which he mentions along with several sorts of balsams, and as a sort of frankincense; and the Vulgate Latin version, to distinguish it, calls it Galbanum of a good smell: these sweet spices with pure frankincense; for which Sabæa in Arabia Felix was very famous, and was called the thuriferous country, as Pliny[k] says; who observes that there were in it two times of gathering the frankincense, the one in autumn, that which was white, and the purest, the other in the spring, which was reddish, and not to be compared with the former: of each shall there be a like weight; just as much of one as of the other: in the Hebrew text it is, alone by alone, and the sense may be, that each spice was beaten alone, and after that mixed, as Aben Ezra, or weighed alone, and then put together.

℣. 35. And thou shalt make it a perfume, &c.] By mixing the above spices together: a confection after the art of the apothecary; in the manner they beat, compound, and mix several ingredients together: tempered together; or salted[l], with salt of Sodom, as Aben Ezra interprets it; and Maimonides[m] says, there was a fourth part of a kab of salt of Sodom put into it: and whether this incense or perfume respects the intercession of Christ or the prayers of his people, they are both savoury and acceptable to God, the latter on account of the former; in all sacrifices salt was used, and every spiritual sacrifice of ours should be seasoned with grace: pure and holy; such should be the prayers of the saints, and such most certainly is the mediation of Christ, which is his much incense.

℣. 36. And thou shalt beat some of it very small, &c.] Or every one of the spices; for this does not seem to respect any different usage of some part of the incense from the rest; but it was all to be beat very small, that it might mix together the better, and be easier spread upon the coals, and the smoke thereof go up the sooner: and put of it before the testimony in the tabernacle of the congregation; that is, upon the altar of incense, which was placed there, ℣. 6. and here it was to be put in order to be burnt, not to be kept, either to be looked at, or smelled to: where I will meet with thee; see the note on ℣. 6. it shall be unto you most holy; reckoned by them most sacred, and not to be put to any private or prophane uses.

℣. 37. And as for the perfume which thou shalt make, &c.] As above directed: you shall not make to yourselves according to the composition thereof; that is, for their own use, for the scenting of their rooms, or to snuff up, or smell to, as in the next verse: it shall be unto thee holy for the Lord; separated entirely for his service, to be burned upon his altar, and to be no otherways used.

℣. 38. Whosoever shall make like unto that, to smell thereto, &c.] A man might make a perfume of the same ingredients, and of the same weight, and exactly like it, but not to burn for his own delight and pleasure; but if he made it and sold it to the congregation, as Jarchi observes, he was not guilty; but if it was for his own private use and pleasure, then he shall even be cut off from his people; see the note on ℣. 33.

CHAP. XXXI.

IN this chapter an account is given of the persons whom God had chosen, and qualified for the work of building the tabernacle, and all things relating to it, and for the direction and oversight thereof, ℣. 1—6. and an enumeration is made of the several things that were to be wrought, some in one way, some in another, ℣. 7—11. the law of the sabbath is repeated, and the violation of it made death, ℣. 12—17. and the chapter is concluded with observing, that at the close of the above orders, two tables of stone, with the law written upon them by the finger of God, were given to Moses, ℣. 18.

℣. 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] After the Lord had given Moses instructions about building a tabernacle, the model of which he had shewn him, and what should be the furniture of it, who should minister in it, and what cloaths they should wear, he acquaints him that he had provided artificers for this service; which would prevent doubts and objections that might rise up in the mind of Moses, how and by whom all this should be done; since the children of Israel had not been brought up, nor used to any curious work in Egypt, out of which they were but just come: saying; as follows.

℣. 2. See, I have called by name Bezaleel, &c.] Had pitched upon, chosen, and distinguished him particularly from all other men to be the architect or chief master-builder of the tabernacle, and to be the director and overseer of the whole work relating to it: the Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem paraphrase it, "I have called with a good name "Bezaleel;" as if respect was to be had to his name Bezaleel, as given him by God, and very expressive and significant; whereas the phrase of calling by name does not signify, the imposing of a name upon him, but the singular and personal choice of him to an office: indeed, his name Bezaleel is very significant, and may be rendered, in the shadow of God; and he was under the shadow, influence, and protection of the Lord, and was called to be concerned in making those things, which were shadows of good things to come; and he may be considered in all as a type of Christ, who is the chief and master builder of his church, has the care and oversight of it, and under whom others work; for except he build the house, they labour in vain that build it; he was called by name, or eminently chosen to this work, he took not this honour to himself, but was called of God, as Bezaleel was, and was hid and abode under the shadow of the Almighty all the while he was concerned in it, see Ps. xci. 1. Is. xlix. 1, 2. the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah; Bezaleel's

[g] Cele Hamikdash, c. 2. §. 4. [h] Sepher Shoresh. Rad. חלב. [i] Nat. Hist. l. 12. c. 15.
[k] Ib. c. 14. [l] מממלח salitum, Montanus, Drusius, Junius & Tremellius, & Piscator. [m] Cele Hamikdash, c. 2. §. 3.

zaleel's father's name was Uri, which ſignifies my light; and his grandfather's name Hur, which has the ſignification of liberty or freedom; the ſame that Moſes left with Aaron to judge the people of Iſrael during his ſtay in the mount, and is thought to have been the huſband of Miriam; ſo that his grandfather being living, he may be ſuppoſed to be but a young man: the Jews ſay [n], he was but 13 years of age when he was employed in this ſervice, but that is not probable; though indeed, his antitype, when but 12 years of age ſaid, wiſt ye not that I muſt be about my father's buſineſs? his Father, whom he calls Uri, my light, Pſ. xxvii. 1. he being the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; and is the Son of God that makes men free, and they are free indeed; and of whom it is evident that he ſprung out of the tribe of Judah, a tribe greatly honoured of God.

℣. 3. And I have filled him with the Spirit of God, &c.] Not with the ſpecial graces of the Spirit, or with ſpiritual gifts fitting for ſpiritual ſervice in the knowledge of ſpiritual things, and the inſtruction of men in them, though no doubt, he might have them; but with the gifts of ingenuity and ſkill in manual arts, and mechanical operations, as follows: in wiſdom, and in underſtanding, and in all manner of workmanſhip; theſe explain what is meant by the Spirit of God he was filled with; namely, with a ſufficient meaſure of natural wiſdom, knowledge, and underſtanding in all ſorts of workmanſhip hereafter mentioned, to qualify him for his office as a director therein; that is, he had ſuch a ſhare of knowledge of what was to be wrought, ſuch wiſdom and underſtanding in the ingenious and curious manner of working them, that though he did not work with his own hands, yet could teach, guide, and direct others how to do them: and this was not an ordinary but an extraordinary gift of knowledge of theſe things; nor was it owing to a fruitful invention, nor to long ſtudy and contrivance; but it was by the immediate inſpiration of the Spirit of God, which was neceſſary at this time, the Iſraelites being now in a general ſtate of ignorance of all ingenious arts and ſciences, having lived ſo many years in a ſtate of ſervitude, and ſcarce knew any thing but making of bricks: and it may be obſerved, that God never calls any to any work or ſervice of his, but he qualifies for it: in all this Bezaleel was a type of Chriſt, who was filled with the Holy Spirit without meaſure; and on whom reſted the Spirit of wiſdom and of counſel, and in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge; and who, as God's righteous and faithful ſervant as mediator, dealt wiſely and prudently in all his adminiſtrations.

℣. 4. To deviſe cunning works, &c.] To invent, contrive, and draw patterns, for the weavers particularly, for the making of the curtains of the tabernacle, the vail of the moſt holy place, the ephod, and the curious girdle of it, which were made of cunning work, curiouſly wrought by the weaver; and ſo Jarchi interpets this, of the weaving of the work of Choſheb or cunning work, of the deviſing of cunning works, or of the knowledge of witty inventions, by wiſdom or the Meſſiah, ſee Prov. viii. 12. to work in gold, and in ſilver, and in braſs; for it is not to be ſuppoſed there were either goldſmiths or braſiers among the Iſraelites; only maſons and bricklayers, and brickmakers, and ſuch ſort of manufacturers; ſo that Bezaleel had need of immediate wiſdom from the Spirit of God, not only to deviſe curious works in theſe ſeveral things as in others, but to teach men how to work in them, what tools to work with, and how to uſe them, how to melt theſe ſeveral metals, and into what forms and ſhapes to put them, and then to poliſh them; as there were ſome things in the temple to be made of gold, as the candleſtick, others of ſilver, as the ſockets of the tabernacle, and others of braſs, as the altar of burnt-offering, and its veſſels with other things.

℣. 5. And in cutting of ſtones to ſet them, &c.] Not of marble ſtones, or of any common ſtones uſed in building, and the cutting and hewing of them to be laid therein, for of thoſe there was no uſe in the tabernacle; but of precious ſtones, and the cutting of them, and ſetting of them in their ouches or incloſures, as the onyx ſtones on the ſhoulders of the high prieſt, and the 12 precious ſtones in his breaſt-plate: Bezaleel was taught by the Spirit of God the art of jewelling, and inſtructed others in it: and in carving of timber; or rather, in cutting timber [o]; for it is the ſame word as before, for we have no account of any carved work in the tabernacle; and therefore this muſt deſign the work of carpenters and joiners in cutting the ſhittim-wood, making planks and boards of it, and of them the ſides of the tabernacle, jointed into ſockets; the ark of the teſtimony, the ſhew-bread table, and altar of incenſe, which were of timber, and the workmanſhip of ſuch perſons: to work in all manner of workmanſhip; in all other manufactories; as ſpinning, weaving, embroidery, dying various colours, compounding ointment, perfume, &c.

℣. 6. And I, behold, I have given with him Aholiab the ſon of Ahiſamach of the tribe of Dan, &c.] To be a partner with him, and to aſſiſt in the direction and overſight of the work of the tabernacle; which was done that there might appear to be a ſufficiency in the direction, and that too much honour might not be given to one tribe; and it is obſervable, that as Solomon of the tribe of Judah was the builder of the temple, one of the tribe of Dan alſo was a principal artificer in it, 2 Chron. ii. 14. and it is no unuſual thing for two perſons to be joined together in matters of moment and importance, as Moſes and Aaron, who were ſent to Pharaoh for Iſrael's diſmiſſion out of the land of Egypt; the apoſtles of Chriſt, and ſeventy diſciples, who were ſent out two by two; the two witneſſes propheſying in ſackcloth, the two anointed ones ſtanding before the Lord of the whole earth; and Joſhua and Zerubbabel in the rebuilding of the temple: nor is it unuſual for both ſuch perſons to be types of Chriſt, as Moſes and Aaron, Joſhua and Zerubbabel were; and here Bezaleel as before, and now Aholiab, whoſe name ſignifies the father's tent or tabernacle; he being concerned in the overſight of the tabernacle of God and the building of it, and his father's name Ahiſamach, according to Hillerus [p], ſignifies, one ſupports, i. e. God; and may be a figure of Chriſt, whoſe human nature is the true tabernacle God pitched, and not man, and who, as mediator, is Jehovah's ſervant, whom he upholds: and in the hearts of all that are wiſe-hearted; men of ingenuity, that had good natural parts and abilities, and minds diſpoſed to curious works and able to perform them, under the guidance and direction of others: I have put wiſdom, that they may make all that I have commanded thee; in the preceding ceding chapters; these persons were to work under Bezaleel and Aholiab, and to do as they were ordered and directed by them; and having good natural abilities, mechanical heads and hearts, and divine wisdom in a large measure communicated to them, they were greatly qualified for the service of the tabernacle, and making all things appertaining to it: thus Christ, the architect and masterbuilder of his church, has wise builders under him, that work in his house, being qualified with the gifts and graces of his Spirit from him, see Zach. vi. 12, 13, 15.

[n] Shalſhalet Hakabala, fol. 6. 2.
[p] Onomaſt. Sacr. p. 735.
[o] בחרשת עץ in fabrefactione ligni, Montanus; ſo Tigurine verſion.

℣. 7. The tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] That is, they had wisdom given to make that according to the pattern shewed to Moses, and under the direction of the two above persons, to whom Moses communicated it; and from hence forward in this and some following verses, mention is made of the various things wrought by these under workmen; first the house, and then the furniture of it, as follows: and the ark of the testimony, and the mercy-seat that is thereupon, and all the furniture of the tabernacle; of that part of it called the holy of holies; the furniture of which was only the ark, the mercy-seat over that, and the cherubim overshadowing that, where was the seat of the divine Majesty; this was properly his apartment, see ch. xxv. 10—22.

℣. 8. And the table and his furniture, &c.] The shew-bread-table with its dishes, spoons, and bowls, ch. xxv. 23—30. and the pure candlestick with all his furniture; called pure, because made of pure gold, and was to be kept pure and clean by the priests, and in which pure oil olive was burnt, and gave a clear light; its furniture were its lamps, tongs, and snuff-dishes, ch. xxv. 31—39. and the altar of incense; made of shittim-wood covered with gold, ch. xxx. 1—10.

℣. 9. And the altar of burnt-offering with all his furniture, &c.] Which was made of shittim wood covered with brass; its furniture were its pans, shovels, basons, &c. ch. xxvii. 1—8. and the laver and his foot; for the priests to wash their hands and feet at, ch. xxx. 18—21.

℣. 10. And the clothes of service, &c.] Either those the priests ministred in in the time of service, and which they never wore but when in it, and so might with propriety be so called, and what they were the following words explain; or else these were clothes of blue, purple, and scarlet, and coverings of badgers skins, in which the ark, the shew-bread-table, the candlestick, and the golden altar, and other instruments of the tabernacle were wrapped, as Aben Ezra observes, when the Israelites journeyed in the wilderness, see Numb. iv. 5—15. and the holy garments for Aaron the priest; the breast-plate, ephod, and robe, the broidered coat, mitre, and girdle, ch. xxviii. 4. and the garments of his sons to minister in the priest's office; the bonnets, coats, girdles, and breeches, ch. xxviii. 40, 41, 42.

℣. 11. And the anointing oil, and sweet incense for the holy place, &c.] Of the composition of both which, see ch. xxx. 23—38. according to all that I have commanded thee, shall they do; not only make all the said things, but make them exactly according to the form and pattern given to Moses, communicated to Bezaleel and Aholiab, whose business it was to see that all things were done by the workmen agreeable to it.

℣. 12. And the Lord spake unto Moses; &c.] After he had described to him the place of worship, and appointed the priests that should minister in it, and ordered the making of all things appertaining to it, and the workmen that should be concerned therein; he repeats the law of the sabbath, and puts in mind of the time of worship: saying; as follows.

℣. 13. Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, &c.] Notwithstanding all that has been said and ordered concerning making the tabernacle and all things belonging to it; yet this was not to be understood to the violation of the sabbath, or the neglect of that, in which no work was to be done, no not any relating to the tabernacle and the vessels of it; and though that was to be made, and every thing belonging to it, as soon as possible; yet the sabbath was to be observed and not broken on that account; and this the people of Israel were told of, saying; verily, or nevertheless[q], my sabbaths ye shall keep; not sabbaths of years, as the 7th year and the 50th year, but of weeks, expressed by the plural number, because there are many of them in course throughout the year, no less than 52; and so the apostle uses the same number, Col. ii. 16. and so do heathen writers[r]: for it is a sign between me and you, throughout your generations; a token of the covenant between them, of his being their God and they his people in a peculiar sense; seeing they observed the same day as a day of rest now, on which he had rested at the finishing of the works of creation, which other nations of the world did not observe; of his sanctifying and separating them from all other people; for this was not a sign between him and other nations, but between him and the people of Israel only; and was to be observed throughout their ages, as long as their civil and church-state lasted, but not through others: that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you; had separated and distinguished them from the rest of the nations of the world; but if this law had been given to all nations, it could not have been a distinguishing sign of them from others; nor could it be known hereby that God had separated them to himself above all people; and this was done that it might be known, not only by them, for the word ye is not in the text, but by others, the nations of the world, as Jarchi; that they were a distinct people, having distinct laws from all others, and particularly this.

℣. 14. Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore, &c.] Strictly observe it, according to the rules given concerning it: for it is holy unto you; a day that was set apart of God for holy exercises, peculiarly on their account: every one that defileth it; by doing any servile work upon it, or not observing it in a religious way: shall surely be put to death; by the hand of the civil magistrate; if the law of the Jewish sabbath is now in force, the sanction continues, and the violation of it ought to be punished by a judge, with death: for whosoever doeth any work therein; so much as to kindle a fire, and dress any food, by boiling or roasting, or any other way: that soul shall be cut off from among his people; that is, shall die by the hand of the civil magistrate, it being but another phrase for being put to death; though though the Jewish writers, particularly Jarchi, understand the former phrase, put to death, as to be done by a civil magistrate, when there are witnesses and full proof of the case; but this of cutting off by the hand of God, by immediate punishment from heaven, when it was done secretly, and there was no proof to be made of it.

[q] אך veruntamen, Pagninus, Montanus, Tigurine version, Fagius, Vatablus, Drusius, Cartwright, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator. [r] Metuentem sabbata. Juvenal. Satyr. 14.

℣. 15. Six days may work be done, &c.] Allowed to be done by an Israelite, if he would; for this is not a command to work, but a permission or grant to do it; and therefore, seeing they had so many days granted them for their use, it could not be thought hard and unreasonable that God should claim one day in seven for his own use and service, and oblige them to refrain from work on it: but in the seventh is the sabbath of rest; from worldly labour, and was typical of spiritual rest here, and eternal rest hereafter: holy to the Lord; separated from other days, and entirely devoted to the worship and service of God, and to be kept holy to the Lord in all holy and religious exercises, as hearing and reading the word, praying, praising, &c. whosoever doeth any work in the sabbath-day, he shall surely be put to death; the Targum of Jonathan adds, by casting stones; and so we find that the first transgressor of this law we read of was stoned to death, Numb. xv. 35, 36.

℣. 16. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath, &c.] On whom the sabbath of the seventh day was only enjoined, as well as that of the 7th and of the 50th years, being all ceremonial and shadowy: to observe the sabbath throughout their generations; so long as the Mosaic dispensation lasted, and their civil polity and church-state continued, even until the Messiah came, when all those Jewish shadows, rites, and ceremonies, fled away and disappeared: for a perpetual covenant; just in the same sense as circumcision was, Gen. xvii. 13.

℣. 17. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever, &c.] In like sense, as the land of Canaan was given them for an everlasting possession; and the covenant of circumcision, and the ordinance of the passover, and the fast on the day of atonement, were for ever; that is, unto the end of the Jewish world and state, at the coming of Christ, when a new world and state of things began, see Gen. xvii. 8, 9, 13. Exod. xii. 24. Lev. xvi. 29, 31, 34. for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed; which is to be understood figuratively after the manner of men, who ceasing from toil and labour find rest and refreshment; but not really and properly, for as not labour, and weariness, and fatigue, so neither rest nor refreshment can be properly said of God; but this denotes his cessation from the works of creation, though not of providence, and of the delight and pleasure he takes in a view of them: this is observed, not as the foundation of this law, and the reason of its being made, but as an illustration of it, and as an argument, shewing the reasonableness of it, and the similarity of it with what God himself had done, and therefore the enjoining of it could not reasonably be objected to.

℣. 18. And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him on mount Sinai, &c.] After all those laws, orders and instructions before related, which having done, he ceased to converse with him any longer in that manner he had: and at parting gave him two tables of testimony; the two tables of the law, which is a testimony of the will of God, and contained the duty of the Israelites both towards God and man, and are reducible to these two, love to God, and love to our neighbour: five of the commands of the decalogue were written on one table, and five on the other; or it may be rather four on one table, the first being the largest, and containing the duty owing to God, and six on the other, which regard the duty of men one to another; so Orpheus the heathen poet, speaking of the law of Moses, calls it δισσαλαχα θεσμον [a]. Tables of stone; the Targum of Jonathan will have them to be of the sapphire stone, from the throne of glory; the paraphrast seems to have respect to ch. xxiv. 10. and with as little appearance of truth, says, their weight was 40 seahs; it is more probable they were of marble-stone, of which there were great quantities in mount Sinai. Dr. Shaw says [b], that part of mount Sinai, which lies to the westward of the plain of Rephidim, consists of a hard reddish marble like porphyry, but is distinguished from it by the representations of little trees and bushes, which are dispersed all over it. The naturalists call this sort of marble embuscatum, or bushy marble; some think Sinai had its name from thence [c]. This may denote the firmness, stability and duration of the law, not as in the hands of Moses, from which these tables were cast and broke, but as in the hands of Christ, and laid up in him the ark of the covenant, the fulfilling end of the law for righteousness: and it may also figure the hardness of man's heart, which is destitute of spiritual life, obdurate and impenitent, stupid, senseless and ignorant, stubborn and inflexible, and not subject to the law of God, and on which no impressions can be made, but by the power and grace of God: written with the finger of God; by God himself, and not by an angel, or by any creature or instrument; and it is by the finger of God, the spirit, grace and power of God, that the laws of God are put into the inward part, and written on the heart, to which the apostle refers, 2 Cor. iii. 3. This account is given by way of transition to what is recorded in the next chapter.

[a] De Deo, prope finem; [b] Travels, p. 443. [c] See Buxtorf. in voce סנה.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the idolatry of the Iſraelites making and worſhipping a golden calf, ℣. 1—6. the information of it God gave to Moſes, bidding him at the ſame time not to make any ſuit in their favour; that he might conſume them, and make a large nation out of Moſes's family, ℣. 7—10. the interceſſion of Moſes for them, in which he ſucceeded, ℣. 11—14. his deſcent from the mount with the two tables in his hands, accompanied by Joſhua, when he was an eye-witneſs of their idolatry, which raiſed his indignation, that he caſt the two tables out of his hands and broke them, took the calf and burnt it, and ground it to powder, and made the children of Iſrael drink of it, ℣. 15—20. the examination of Aaron about the fact, who excuſed himſelf, ℣. 21—24. the orders given to the Levites, who joined themſelves to Moſes, to ſlay every man his brother, which they did to the number of 3000 men, ℣. 25—29. another interceſſion for them by Moſes, which gained a reſpite of them for a time, for they are threatened to be viſited ſtill for their ſin, and they were plagued for it, ℣. 30—35.

℣. 1. And when the people ſaw that Moſes delayed to come down out of the mount, &c.] The time, according to the Targum of Jonathan, being elapſed, which he had fixed for his deſcent, and through a miſreckoning, as Jarchi ſuggeſts; they taking the day of his going up to be one of the 40 days, at the end of which he was to return, whereas he meant 40 compleat days; but it is not probable that Moſes knew himſelf how long he ſhould ſtay, and much leſs that he acquainted them before-hand of it; but he ſtaying longer than they ſuppoſed he would, they grew uneaſy and impatient, and wanted to ſet on in their journey to Canaan, and to have ſome ſymbol and repreſentation of deity to go before them: the people gathered themſelves together unto Aaron; who with Hur was left to judge them in the abſence of Moſes: it is very likely that they had had conferences with him before upon this head, but now they got together in a tumultuous manner, and determined to carry their point againſt all that he ſhould ſay to the contrary: and ſaid unto him, up; put us off no longer, make no more delay, but ariſe at once, and ſet about what has been once and again adviſed to and importuned: make us gods which ſhall go before us; not that they were ſo very ſtupid to think, that any thing that could be made with hands was really God, or even could have life and breath, and the power of ſelf-motion, or of walking before them; but that ſomething ſhould be made as a ſymbol and repreſentation of the divine Being, carried before them; for as for the cloud which had hitherto gone before them, from their coming out of Egypt, that had not moved from its place for 40 days or more, and ſeemed to them to be fixed on the mount, and would not depart from it; and therefore they wanted ſomething in the room of it as a token of the divine preſence with them: for as for this Moſes; of whom they ſpeak with great contempt, though he had been the deliverer of them, and had wrought ſo many miracles in their favour, and had been the inſtrument of ſo much good unto them: the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt; this they own, but don't ſeem to be very thankful for it: we wot not what is become of him; they could ſcarcely believe that he was alive, that it was poſſible to live ſo long a time without eating and drinking; or they ſuppoſed he was burnt on the mount of flaming fire from before the Lord, as the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it.

℣. 2. And Aaron ſaid unto them, &c.] Perceiving that they were not to be diſſuaded from their evil counſel, and diverted from their purpoſe, but were determined at all events to have an image made to repreſent God unto them in a viſible manner: break off the golden ear-rings which are in the ears of your wives, of your ſons, and of your daughters; theſe were ſome of the jewels in gold they had borrowed of the Egyptians; and it ſeems that in thoſe times and countries, men as well as women, uſed to wear ear-rings; and ſo Pliny [w] ſays, in the eaſtern countries men uſed to wear gold in their ears; and this may be confirmed from the inſtance of the Iſhmaelites and Midianites, Judg. viii. 24. Aaron did not aſk the men for theirs, but for thoſe of their wives and children; it may be, becauſe he might ſuppoſe they were more fond of them, and would not ſo eaſily part with them, hoping by this means to have put them off of their deſign: and bring them unto me; to make a god of, as they deſired; that is, the repreſentation of one.

℣. 3. And all the people brake off the golden ear-rings which were in their ears, &c.] The men took off their ear-rings, and perſuaded their wives and children, or obliged them to part with theirs; though the Targum of Jonathan ſays, the women refuſed to give their ornaments to their huſbands; therefore all the people immediately broke off all the golden ornaments which were in their ears [x]; ſo intent were they upon idolatry. This is to be underſtood not of every individual, but of the greateſt part of the people; ſo the apoſtle explains it of ſome of them, 1 Cor. x. 7. Idolaters ſpare no coſt nor pains to ſupport their worſhip, and will ſtrip themſelves, their wives and children of their ornaments to deck their idols; which may ſhame the worſhippers of the true God, who are oftentimes too backward to contribute towards the maintenance of his worſhip and ſervice: and brought them unto Aaron; preſently, the ſelf-ſame day; they ſoon forgot the commands enjoined them to have no other gods ſave one, and to make no graven image to bow down to it, and their own words, ch. xxiv. 7.

℣. 4. And he received them at their hand, &c.] For the uſe they delivered them to him: and faſhioned it with a graving-tool, after he had made it a molten calf; that is, after he had melted the gold, and caſt it into a mould, which gave it the figure of a calf, and with his tool wrought it into a more agreeable form, he took off the roughneſs of it, and poliſhed it; or if it was in imitation of the Egyptian Apis or Oſiris, he might with his graving-tool engrave ſuch marks and figures as were upon that, to cauſe the greater reſemblance, ſo Selden [y] thinks; ſee the note on Jer. xlvi. 20. or elſe the ſenſe may be, that he drew the figure of a calf with his tool, or made it in a mould [z], into which he poured poured in the melted gold, and made it a molten calf: the Targum of Jonathan gives another ſenſe of the former clauſe, he bound it up in a napkin; in a linen cloth or bag, i. e. the gold of the earrings, and then put it into the melting pot, and ſo caſt it into a mould, and made a calf of it. Jarchi takes notice of this ſenſe, and it is eſpouſed by Bochart [a], who produces two paſſages of ſcripture for the confirmation of it, Judg. viii. 24. 2 Kings v. 23. and illuſtrates it by Iſ. xlvi. 6. What inclined Aaron to make it in the form of a calf, is not eaſy to ſay; whether in imitation of the cherubim, one of the faces of which was that of an ox, as Moncæus thought; or whether in imitation of the Oſiris of the Egyptians, who was worſhipped in a living ox, and ſometimes in the image of one, even a golden one. Plutarch is expreſs for it, and ſays [b], that the ox was an image of Oſiris, and that it was a golden one; and ſo ſays Philo the Jew [c], the Iſraelites, emulous of Egyptian figments, made a golden ox; or whether he did this to make them aſhamed of their idolatry, thinking they would never be guilty of worſhipping the form of an ox eating graſs, or becauſe an ox was an emblem of power and majeſty: and they ſaid, theſe be thy gods, O Iſrael, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt; they own they were brought up out of that land by the divine Being; and they could not be ſo ſtupid as to believe, that this calf, which was only a maſs of gold, figured and decorated, was inanimate, had no life nor breath, and was juſt made, long after their coming out of Egypt, was what brought them from thence; but that this was a repreſentation of God, who had done this for them; yet ſome Jewiſh writers are ſo fooliſh as to ſuppoſe, that through magic art it had the breath of life in it, and came out of the mould a living calf, ſatan, or Sammael entring into it, and lowed in it [d].

[w] Nat. Hiſt. l. 11. c. 37. [x] So Pirke Eliezer, c. 45. [y] De Dis Syris Syntagm. 1. c. 4. p. 138.
[z] ויצר אתו בחרט formavit illud modulo, Piſcator; ſo ſome in Ben Melech, and in Vatablus; and ſo the Vulgate Latin, formant opere fuſorio; ſee Fagius in loc.

✡. 5. And when Aaron ſaw it, &c.] In what form it was, and what a figure it made, and how acceptable it was to the Iſraelites. The Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem paraphraſe it, "and "Aaron ſaw Hur ſlain before him;" for reproving them for their idolatry, as the Midraſh [e], quoted by Jarchi, ſays: and Aaron fearing they would take away his life if he oppoſed them, he built an altar before it; that ſacrifice might be offered on it to it: and Aaron made proclamation, and ſaid, to-morrow is a feaſt to the Lord; that is, he gave orders to have it publiſhed throughout the camp, there would be ſolemn ſacrifices offered up to the Lord, as repreſented by this calf, and a feaſt thereon, which was a public invitation of them to the ſolemnity: though ſome think this was a protracting time, and putting the people off till the morrow, who would have been for offering ſacrifice immediately, hoping that Moſes would come down from the mount before that time, and prevent their idolatry.

✡. 6. And they roſe up early in the morning, &c.] Being eager of, and intent upon their idol-worſhip: and offered burnt-offerings; upon the altar Aaron had made, where they were wholly conſumed: and brought peace-offerings; which were to make a feaſt to the Lord, and of which they partook: and the people ſat down to eat and to drink; as at a feaſt: and roſe up to play; to dance and ſing, as was wont to be done by the Egyptians in the worſhip of their Apis or Ox; and Philo the Jew ſays [f], of the Iſraelites, that having made a golden ox, in imitation of the Egyptian Typho, he ſhould have ſaid Oſiris, for Typho was hated by the Egyptians, being the enemy of Oſiris; they ſung and danced: the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem interpret it of idolatry; ſome underſtand this of their lewdneſs and uncleanneſs, committing fornication as in the worſhip of Peor, taking the word in the ſame ſenſe as uſed by Potiphar's wife, Gen. xxxix. 14, 17. ſee the note on 1 Cor. x. 7.

✡. 7. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, go, get thee down, &c.] In Deut. ix. 12. it is added, quickly, and ſo the Septuagint verſion here: this was ſaid after the Lord had finiſhed his diſcourſe with him, and had given him the two tables of ſtone, and he was about to depart, but the above affair happening he haſtens his departure; indeed the idolatry began the day before, and he could have acquainted him with it, if it had been his pleaſure, but he ſuffered the people to go the greateſt length before a ſtop was put to their impiety: for thy people which thou broughteſt out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themſelves; their works, as the Targum of Jonathan ſupplies it, their ways and their manners; their minds, the imaginations of their hearts were firſt corrupted, and this led on to a corruption of actions, by which they corrupted and defiled themſelves yet more and more, and made themſelves abominable in the ſight of God, as corrupt perſons and things muſt needs be; and what can be a greater corruption and abomination than idolatry? the Lord calls theſe people not his people, being diſpleaſed with them, though they had been, and were, and ſtill continued; for notwithſtanding this idolatry, he did not caſt them off from being his people, or write a Lo-ammi on them; but he calls them Moſes's people, as having broken the law delivered to them by him, they had promiſed to obey, and ſo were liable to the condemnation and curſe of it; and becauſe they had been committed to his care and charge, and he had been the inſtrument of their deliverance, and therefore it was great ingratitude to him to act the part they had done, as well as impiety to God; wherefore, though it was the Lord that brought them out of Egypt, it is aſcribed to Moſes as the inſtrument, to make the evil appear the greater. Jarchi very wrongly makes theſe people to be the mixed multitude he ſuppoſes Moſes had proſelyted, and therefore called his people.

✡. 8. They have turned aſide quickly out of the way which I commanded them, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan adds, by way of explanation, "on "Sinai, ſaying, ye ſhall not make to yourſelves an "image, or figure, or any ſimilitude." This was the command God had given to them; this the way he had directed them to walk in; from this they turned aſide, by making the golden calf as an image or repreſentation of God; and this they had done very quickly, ſince it was but about ſix weeks ago that this command was given; wherefore if Moſes had delayed coming down from the mount, they had made haſte to commit iniquity; and perhaps this obſervation is made of their quick defection, in oppoſition to their complaint of Moſes's long abſence: they have made them a molten calf; for though it was made by Aaron, or by his direction to the founder or goldſmith, yet it was at their requeſt and earneſt ſolicitation; they would not be eaſy without it: and have worſhipped it; by bowing the knee to it, kiſſing it or their hands at the approach of it, ſee Hoſ. xiii. 2. and have ſacri-

[a] Hierozoic. p. 1. l. 2. c. 39. col. 334, 335.
[b] De Iſid. & Oſir.
[c] De Vita Moſis, l. 3. p. 677.
[d] Pirke Eliezer, c. 45.
[e] So Pirke Eliezer, c. 45.
[f] Ut ſupra, & de Temulentia, p 254.

ſacrificed thereunto burnt-offerings and peace-offerings: and ſaid, theſe be thy gods, O Iſrael, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt; the very words they uſed, ℣. 4. and which were taken particular notice of by the Lord with reſentment.

℣. 9. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, I have ſeen this people, &c.] He had obſerved their ways and works, their carriage and behaviour; he had ſeen them before this time; he knew from all eternity what they would be, that their neck would be as an iron ſinew, and their brow braſs; but now he ſaw that in fact which he before ſaw as future, and they proved to be the people he knew they would be; beſides, this is ſaid to give Moſes the true character of them, which might be depended upon, ſince it was founded upon divine knowledge and obſervation: and behold it is a ſtiff-necked people; obſtinate and ſelf-willed, reſolute in their own ways and will not be reclaimed, inflexible and unſubjected to the yoke of the divine law; a metaphor taken from ſuch creatures as will not ſubmit their necks or ſuffer the yoke or bridle to be put upon them, but draw back and ſlip away; or, as Aben Ezra thinks, to a man that goes on his way upon a run and will not turn his neck to him that calls him; ſo diſobedient and irreclaimable were theſe people.

℣. 10. Now therefore let me alone, &c.] And not ſolicit him with prayers and ſupplications in favour of theſe people, but leave him to take his own way with them, without troubling him with any ſuit on their behalf; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "and now leave off thy prayer, and do "not cry for them before me;" as the prophet Jeremiah was often bid not to pray for this people in his time, which was a token of God's great diſpleaſure with them, as well as ſhews the prevalence of prayer with him; that he knows not how, as it were, humanly ſpeaking, to deny the requeſts of his children; and even, though made not on their own account, but on the account of a ſinful and diſobedient people: that my wrath may wax hot againſt them, and that I may conſume them: which ſuggeſts that they were deſerving of the wrath of God to the uttermoſt, and to be deſtroyed from off the face of the earth, and even to be puniſhed with an everlaſting deſtruction: and I will make of thee a great nation; increaſe his family to ſuch a degree, as to make them as great a nation or greater than the people of Iſrael were, ſee Deut. ix. 14. or the meaning is, he would ſet him over a great nation, make him king over a people as large or larger than they, which is a ſenſe mentioned by Fagius and Vatablus; and indeed, as biſhop Patrick obſerves, if this people had been deſtroyed, there would have been no danger of the promiſe not being made good, which was made to Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, concerning the multiplication of their ſeed urged by Moſes ℣. 13. ſeeing that would have ſtood firm, if a large nation was made out of the family of Moſes, who deſcended from them: this was a very great temptation to Moſes, and had he been a ſelfiſh man and ſought the advancement of his own family, and careleſs of, and indifferent to the people of Iſrael, he would have accepted of it; it is a noble teſtimony in his favour, and proves him not to be the deſigning man he is repreſented by the deiſts.

℣. 11. And Moſes beſought the Lord his God, &c.] As the Lord was the God of Moſes, his covenant-God, and he had an intereſt in him, he made uſe of it in favour of the people of Iſrael: and ſaid, why doth thy wrath wax hot againſt thy people? ſo as to think or ſpeak of conſuming them utterly; otherwiſe he knew there was reaſon for his being angry and wroth with them; but though they were deſerving of his hot wrath and diſpleaſure, and even to be dealt with in the manner propoſed, yet he intreats he would conſider they were his people; his ſpecial people, whom he had choſe above all people, and had redeemed them from the houſe of bondage, had given them laws, and made a covenant with them, and many promiſes unto them, and therefore hoped he would not conſume them in his hot diſpleaſure; God had called them the people of Moſes, and Moſes retorts it, and calls them the people of God, and makes uſe of their relation to him as an argument with him in their favour; and which alſo ſhews that Moſes did not underſtand that the Lord by calling them his people diſowned them as his: which thou haſt brought out of the land of Egypt, with great power, and with a mighty hand? this the Lord had aſcribed to Moſes, and obſerves it as an aggravation of their ingratitude to Moſes; and here Moſes retorts and aſcribes it to God and to his mighty power; as for himſelf he was only a weak feeble inſtrument, the Lord was the efficient cauſe of their deliverance, in which he had ſhewn the exceeding greatneſs of his power; and he argues from hence, that ſeeing he had exerted his mighty arm in bringing them from thence, that he would not now lift it up againſt them and deſtroy them.

℣. 12. Wherefore ſhould the Egyptians ſpeak and ſay, &c.] Thoſe that remained, as the Targum of Jonathan, who were not drowned in the Red Sea: a good man will be concerned for the honour and glory of God among the enemies of his people, that their mouths may not be opened to blaſpheme the Lord and ſpeak ill of his ways, ſee Joſh. vii. 9. and this is ſometimes an argument with God himſelf, not to do that to his people they deſerve; leſt it ſhould give occaſion to the enemy to ſpeak reproachfully, inſult, and triumph, Deut. xxxii. 26, 27. for miſchief did he bring them out, to ſlay them in the mountains, and to conſume them from the face of the earth; that he brought them out of Egypt, not with a good but ill deſign; not to bring them into the land of Canaan, as they promiſed themſelves, but to deſtroy them in the mountains; not to erect them into a great kingdom and nation which ſhould make a conſiderable figure in the world, but to cut them off from being a people at all: the mountains where they now were, were Sinai and Horeb, and there might be others thereabout, among which they were encamped: the Targum of Jonathan is, "among the mountains of Tabor, and Hermon, and Sirion, and "Sinai:" turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent of this evil againſt thy people; not that there is any turning or ſhadow of turning with God, or any change of his mind, or any ſuch paſſions and affections in him as here expreſſed; but this is ſaid after the manner of men concerning him, when he alters the courſe of his dealings with men according to his unalterable will, and does not do the evil threatened by him, and which the ſins of men deſerve.

℣. 13. Remember Abraham, Iſaac, and Iſrael, thy ſervants, &c.] The covenant he had made with them, the promiſe he had made unto them, with an oath annexed to it: to whom thou ſwareſt by thine own ſelf; which he did, becauſe he could ſwear by no greater; and for the confirmation of his his covenant and promiſe, ſee Gen. xxii. 16. and ſaidſt unto them; for what was ſaid to Abraham was repeated and confirmed to Iſaac and Jacob: I will multiply your ſeed as the ſtars of heaven; multitudes of which are out of ſight and cannot be ſeen with the naked eye, nor numbered: and all this land that I have ſpoken of; the land of Canaan, then inhabited by ſeveral nations: will I give unto your ſeed, and they ſhall inherit it for ever; as long as they are a people, a body politic, and eſpecially whilſt obedient to the divine will; but ſhould they be now cut off, this promiſe would become of no effect: this is the great argument Moſes makes uſe of, and the moſt forcible one.

℣. 14. And the Lord repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people.] He did not do what he threatened to do, and ſeemed to have in his thoughts and deſigns, but did what Moſes deſired he would, ℣. 12. not that any of God's thoughts or the determinations of his mind are alterable; for the thoughts of his heart are to all generations; but he changes the outward diſpenſations of his providence, or his methods of acting with men, which he has been taking or threatened to take; and this being ſimilar to what they do when they repent of any thing, who alter their courſe, hence repentance is aſcribed to God, tho' properly ſpeaking, it does not belong to him, ſee Jer. xviii. 8. Aben Ezra thinks that the above prayer of Moſes, which was ſo prevalent with God, does not ſtand in its proper place, but ſhould come after ℣. 31. for, to what purpoſe, ſays he, ſhould Moſes ſay to the Iſraelites ℣. 30. peradventure I ſhall make an atonement for your ſin; if he was appeaſed by his prayer before?

℣. 15. And Moſes turned, and went down from the mount, &c.] He turned himſelf from God, with whom he had been converſing forty days; his back was to the aſcent of the mount, and he turned himſelf in order to go down; or he looked [e], as a man conſiders what is to be done, as Aben Ezra obſerves, and he ſaw that he was obliged to go down in haſte: and the two tables of the teſtimony were in his hand; or hands, as in ℣. 19. for they were perhaps, as much as he could carry in both hands, being of ſtone, as in ch. xxxi. 19. on which was written the law, the teſtimony of the will of God with reſpect to what was to be done or not done: the letters were written on both their ſides, on the one ſide and on the other were they written; ſome think that the engraving of the letters was ſuch, that it went through the ſtones, and in a miraculous manner the letters and lines were in a regular order, and might be read on the other ſides; to which Jarchi ſeems to incline, ſaying, the letters might be read, and it was a work of wonders; others think that the letters were written both within and without, like Ezekiel's book of woes; that the ſame that was within ſide was written without, that ſo when held up, they might be read by thoſe that ſtood before and thoſe that ſtood behind; but rather, ſo it was that the whole was written within, ſome of the commands, on the right, and ſome on the left, and ſo the tables might be clapped together as a book is folded.

℣. 16. And the tables were the work of God, &c.] And not of angels or men; the ſtones were made and formed by God into the ſhape they were: and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables; the letters in which the law was written were of his framing, deviſing, and engraving; and this was to ſhew that this law was his own, and contained his mind and will; and to give the greater dignity and authority to it, and to deter men from breaking it.

℣. 17. And when Joſhua heard the noiſe of the people, as they ſhouted, &c.] Dancing about the calf: when Moſes went up into the mount, Joſhua went with him, and tarried in a lower part of the mount all the forty days until he returned, ſee ch. xxiv. 13. though not ſo low as the bottom of the mount where the people were, nor ſo near it as to know what they did there, for of their affairs he ſeems to be entirely ignorant; nor ſo high as where Moſes was, or however, not in the cloud where he converſed with God, for of what paſſed between them he had no knowledge, until declared by Moſes: he ſaid unto Moſes, there is a noiſe of war in the camp; ſuch a noiſe as ſoldiers make in an onſet for battle; he ſuppoſed that ſome enemy was come upon and had attacked the people, and that this noiſe was the noiſe of the enemy, or of the Iſraelites, or both, juſt beginning the battle; or on the finiſhing of it on the account of victory on one ſide or the other; and as he was the general of the army, it muſt give him a concern that he ſhould be abſent at ſuch a time.

℣. 18. And he ſaid, &c.] Not Joſhua, as Saadiah Gaon thinks, but Moſes, in anſwer to what Joſhua had ſaid: it is not the voice of them that ſhout for maſtery; that have got the better of it, and have obtained the victory, and ſhout on that account; or, not the voice of a cry of ſtrength, or of a ſtrong cry [h]; that is, of men who have got the victory, and are in high ſpirits, and ſhout with a ſtrong voice; and ſo the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, "not the voice of ſtrong men that overcome in "battle:" neither is it the voice of them that cry for being overcome; which is not a voice of ſhouting but of howling; or, not the voice of the cry of weakneſs, or of a weak cry [i]; who being unable to ſtand their ground are conquered, and make a bitter outcry on falling into the enemy's hands, or being wounded ſhriek terribly, and ſo the above Targums, "not the voice of the weak who are "overcome by the enemy in battle: but the noiſe of them that ſing, do I hear; as at a merry entertainment, either on a civil or religious account: Moſes, who knew what the children of Iſrael had done, and what they were about, could better judge of the nature of the ſound he heard than Joſhua could, who knew nothing of what was tranſacting.

℣. 19. And it came to paſs as ſoon as he came nigh unto the camp, &c.] To the bottom of the mountain, and pretty near where the people were encamped: that he ſaw the calf, and the dancing; the golden image of the calf, and the people dancing about it, in honour of it, and as glad they had got a ſymbol and repreſentation of God to go before them; and ſo the Egyptians did before the golden ox; as Philo ſays, before obſerved: and Moſes's anger waxed hot; he fell into a paſſion of indignation at the ſight of ſuch execrable idolatry, though he was ſo meek a man, and though he had himſelf expoſtulated with the Lord why his wrath ſhould wax hot againſt this people; but when he ſaw it with his own eyes he could not contain himſelf, ſelf, but his ſpirit was raiſed to a very great pitch of anger, and could not forbear ſhewing it in ſome way or another, and particularly in the following manner: and he caſt the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount; of Sinai; at the foot of it: he brought the tables, though he knew what they had done, and no doubt ſhewed them to them, told them what they were, and enlarged on the wonderful condeſcenſion and goodneſs of God in giving them ſuch laws, and writing them with his own hand, engraving them himſelf on ſuch tables of ſtone; and then broke them to pieces, to denote that they had broken theſe laws, and deſerved to be broke in pieces and deſtroyed themſelves; and this he did before their eyes, that they might be the more affected with it, and be the more ſenſible of their loſs; and this was not the mere effect of paſſion, at leaſt a ſinful one, but was under the influence and direction of God himſelf; ſince we never read he was blamed for this action, though afterwards ordered to make two tables like them: the Jews ſay [k], this was done on the 17th day of Tammuz, which anſwers to part of June and part of July, and is obſerved by them as a faſt on account of it.

[e] ויפן & aſpexit, Pagninus.

[h] קול ענות גבורה vox eorum qui reſpondeant fortiter, Tigurine verſion; vox clamoris fortis, Druſius.

[i] קול ענות חלושה vox eorum qui reſpondeant infirmiter, Tigurine verſion; vox clamoris debilis, Druſius.

℣. 20. And he took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, &c.] Melted it down into a maſs of gold, whereby it loſt its form, and had no more the appearance of a calf: and ground it to powder; but how this was done is not eaſy to ſay, whether by beating the maſs of gold into thin plates, and then filing them ſmall; for this art has remained unknown; the chymiſts have boaſted of it as only poſſeſſed of it; but it ſeems Moſes learned in all the learning of the Egyptians, had it: however, it is now certain by various experiments, that gold, though a very thick and heavy body, conſiſts of parts which are ſeparable from one another, and to be divided into infinite ſubtler parts: the famous doctor Halley has ſhewn that one grain of gold may be divided into 10,000 parts and yet viſible; and doctor Keil has demonſtrated that a cubic thumb's breadth of gold is diviſible into 47619047 parts, which do not eſcape the ſight: according to the computation of the ſaid doctor Halley, leaf-gold, with which ſilver threads are gilded, is not thicker than the 124500 part of a thumb's breadth; ſo that a cube of the hundredth part of a thumb's breadth of the ſaid ſubtle parts, may contain 243000000 [l]: and ſtrawed it upon the water; of the brook that deſcended out of the mount, Deut. ix. 21. now called the fountain of St. Catharine; which doctor Shaw [m] ſays, after it has ſupplied the demands of the convent (now built on this mount) is received without into a large baſon, which running over, forms a little rill: and another traveller [n] ſpeaks of a fountain about the middle of mount Sinai, which, though ſmall, was found in it running water very wholeſome and refreſhing: but if this was a brook of running water, it ſeems more likely, that water was taken out of it and put into a proper veſſel or veſſels, on which the powder of the golden calf was ſtrewed; or otherwiſe it would have been carried away with the ſtream, and could not have been taken up and given to the people to drink, as is next ſaid; and this ſhews that it muſt be reduced to a very ſmall, light powder indeed, to float upon the top of the water and not ſink to the bottom, as mere filings of gold would neceſſarily do: and made the children of Iſrael drink of it; not the whole body of them, or every individual, but the more principal perſons, and ſuch who had been the moſt active in encouraging the making of the calf, and the worſhipping of it: this was done not only that they might entirely loſe their gold and have no manner of profit by it, but that the idol, which is nothing in the world, might be brought to nothing indeed, and that there might be no remains of it to be abuſed to ſuperſtitious uſes, as well as to ſhew them their folly in worſhipping that which could not ſave itſelf; and by drinking it, whereby it paſſed through them and became an excrement, to expreſs the utmoſt abhorrence and deteſtation of it; as alſo to ſhew that they deſerved the curſe of God to enter into them, as oil into their bowels, as that water did, and be utterly deſtroyed: the Jewiſh writers, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra ſuppoſe, this water with the powder of the golden calf in it, had the ſame effect and was for the ſame uſe as the water of jealouſy, that it made the bellies of thoſe that drank it to ſwell: and the Targum of Jonathan obſerves, that whoever gave any golden veſſel towards the making of the calf, there was a ſign appeared in his countenance: and Aben Ezra ſuggeſts the ſame, but neither of them ſay what it was: but an antient Latin poet, quoted by Selden [o], reports from the Hebrew writers, that whoever were guilty of this idolatry, as ſoon as they drank of the water their beards became yellow as gold, whereby the Levites knew who were guilty, and ſlew them; but as this is quite fabulous, ſo I have not met with it in any Jewiſh writer, only an author of theirs, of great antiquity and credit with them, ſays [p], that whoever kiſſed the calf with his whole heart, his lips became golden.

℣. 21. And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, &c.] Having deſtroyed the calf, and thereby expreſſed his abhorrence of their idolatry, he examines the principal perſons concerned, and enquires into the cauſe and reaſon of it, how it came about; and begins with Aaron, though his own brother, with whom along with Hur he had committed the government of the people during his abſence; and therefore was juſtly accountable for ſuch a tranſaction, which could not have been without his knowledge and conſent: no mention is made of Hur, whether he was dead or no is not certain; the Jewiſh writers ſay he was, and that he was killed for reproving the Iſraelites for their wickedneſs; and it looks as if he was dead, ſince he was not in the examination, and we hear of him no more afterwards: what did this people unto thee, that thou haſt brought ſo great a ſin upon them? as idolatry is, than which no ſin can be greater, it being not only a breach of the firſt table of the law, but directly againſt God, againſt the very being of God, and his honour and glory; it is a denial of him, and ſetting up an idol in his room, and giving to that the glory that is only due to his name; and Aaron being the chief magiſtrate, whoſe buſineſs it was to ſee that the laws of God were obſerved, and to reſtrain the people from ſin, and to have been a terror to evil doers; yet falling in with them, and conniving at them, he is charged with bringing ſin upon them, or them into that; and is aſked what the people had done to him, that he ſhould do this to them? what offence they had given him? what injury they had done him? that he bore them a grudge for it, and took this method to be revenged; for it is ſuggeſted, had they uſed uſed him ever ſo ill, he could not have requited it in a ſtronger manner, than by leading them into ſuch a ſin, the conſequence of which muſt be ruin and deſtruction, ſee Gen. xx. 9. or elſe Moſes enquires of Aaron what methods the people had made uſe of to prevail upon him to ſuffer them to do ſuch a piece of wickedneſs; whether it was by perſuaſion and artful inſinuations, or by threatning to take away his life if he did not comply, or in what manner they had wrought upon his weak ſide, to induce him to take ſuch a ſtep.

[k] Miſn. Taanith, c. 4. §. 7. [l] Vid. Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 2. p. 247. [m] Travels, p. 242. Ed. 2. [n] Baumgarten. peregrinatio, l. 1. c. 24. p. 61, 62. [o] De Dis Syris Syntagma, 1. c. 4. p. 156. [p] Pirke Eliezer, c. 45.

℣. 22. And Aaron ſaid, let not the anger of my lord wax hot, &c.] He addreſſes him in a very reſpectable manner, though his younger brother, being in a ſuperior office, the chief ruler of the people, king in Jeſhurun; and he perceived a violent emotion riſing in him, great indignation in his countenance, and an high reſentment of what was done, and therefore he intreats his patience to hear him, in a few words, what he had to ſay, and he begins with the well-known character of the people: thou knoweſt the people, that they are ſet on miſchief; or are in wickedneſs[q]; wholly in it, and under the power and influence of it, given up to it, and bent upon it; and there was no reſtraining them from it; and he appeals to the knowledge of Moſes himſelf for the truth of this, of which their ſeveral murmurings againſt him, ſince they came out of Egypt, were a proof; ſee 1 John v. 19.

℣. 23. For they ſaid unto me, make us gods, which ſhall go before us, &c.] Which was true, ℣. 1. but then he ſhould have told them, that gods were not to be made; that what were made with hands were no gods, and could not go before them; that the making of any image, ſimilitude or repreſentation of God was forbidden by him, as they had lately heard from his own mouth; he ſhould have diſſuaded from ſuch idolatry, by ſhewing them the evil nature of the ſin, and the ruin they expoſed themſelves to by it: for as for this Moſes, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him; their words he truly recites, and perhaps might chuſe the rather to mention them, becauſe they carried in them ſome reflexion on Moſes for ſtaying ſo long in the mount; and as if that contributed much to this affair, and which put the people on forming ſuch a ſcheme, they concluding he muſt be dead through famine; or, as the Targum of Jonathan, be burnt with flaming fire from the Lord.

℣. 24. And I ſaid unto them, whoſoever hath any gold, let them break it off, &c.] That is, any earrings of gold, let them looſe or take them off their ears: ſo they gave it me; of their own accord, as if unaſked by him, though he had bid them bring it to him, ℣. 2: then I caſt it into the fire; to melt it, but ſays nothing of the mould the melted gold was poured into: and there came out this calf; he ſpeaks of it as if the gold became in the form of a calf without any deſign, or without uſing any methods to put it in this form; but that it was a matter of chance, or rather ſomething preter-natural and miraculous; he ſpeaks of it as if it was alive, and came out of itſelf: and indeed the Jews repreſent it as done by magic art, and by the operation of ſatan, and ſpeak of it as coming out alive, bellowing and dancing; and the Targum of Jonathan is, "and I caſt it into the fire, and ſatan "entered into the midſt of it, and out of it came "the likeneſs of this calf." Aaron ſays not a word of his faſhioning it with a graving tool, after he had made it a molten calf; but Moſes learned this elſewhere, and has recorded it. What Moſes thought of this apology is not ſaid; it could not be ſatisfactory to him; and it is certain the conduct of Aaron in this affair was diſpleaſing to God; and it ſeemed as if he would have deſtroyed him, had not Moſes prayed for him, Deut. ix. 20.

℣. 25. And when Moſes ſaw that the people were naked, &c.] Not in their bodies, being ſtripped of their ear-rings; for parting with them was not ſufficient to denominate them naked in a corporal ſenſe; nor as being without their armour, which was laid aſide whilſt they were eating, and drinking, and dancing about the calf, and ſo might be thought a proper opportunity for the Levites to fall upon them, by the order of Moſes, and ſlay them: but it can hardly be thought, that all the people bore arms, and that Moſes took the advantage of their being without them: but rather they were naked in their ſouls, through their ſin, and the ſhame of their nakedneſs appeared; their ſin was made manifeſt, and they were diſcovered to be what they were; and they were now deprived of the divine protection; the cloud was departing from them, the ſymbol of the divine preſence, God being provoked by their ſins; unleſs it is to be underſtood of their ceaſing from work, and keeping holy-day in honour of the calf, and ſo were loitering about, and not attending to the buſineſs of their callings, in which ſenſe the word ſometimes ſeems to be uſed, ſee Exod. v. 4. Judg. v. 2: for Aaron had made them naked unto their ſhame amongſt their enemies; to part with their ear-rings, or lay aſide their armour whilſt feaſting, could not be ſo much to their ſhame among their enemies; but to ſin againſt God, in the manner they did, was to their ſhame, which Aaron was a means of by not doing all he could to hinder it, and by doing what he did to encourage it; and now he made them naked to their ſhame by expoſing it, ſaying they were a people ſet on miſchief, and given up to ſin and wickedneſs; and what they had now done ſerved to expoſe them to ſhame even among their enemies, both now and hereafter; when they ſhould hear of their ſhameful revolt from God, after ſo many great and good things done for them, and of the change of their gods, and of their fickleneſs about them; which was not uſual with the Gentiles: though the laſt word may be rendered, among thoſe that riſe up from you; that ſhould ſpring from them, come up in their room, and ſucceed them, their poſterity, as in Numb. xxxii. 14. and ſo Onkelos renders it, to your generations; and is ſo to be underſtood, as Abendana obſerves; and then the ſenſe is, that this ſin of making and worſhipping the golden calf, and keeping a holy-day, would be to their ſhame and diſgrace, among their poſterity, in all ſucceeding ages.

℣. 26. Then Moſes ſtood in the gate of the camp, &c.] In one of the gates of it; for it doubtleſs had more than one to go in and out of, as is clear from ℣. 29. it being probably intrenched all around; here Moſes ſet himſelf, it being the uſual place, as in cities, where the people were ſummoned together on important occaſions, and juſtice and judgment were adminiſtred: and ſaid, who is on the Lord's ſide? let him come unto me; who is for the worſhip of the true God, and him only, and againſt the worſhip of a golden calf, or any other idol, and is zealous for the glory of God, and the honour of his name: and all the ſons of Levi gathered themſelves together unto him; that is, all thoſe that had not given in to the idolatry of the calf; all is put

[q] בְּרַע in malo, Montanus, Druſius, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

put for many. Jarchi infers from hence, that this tribe was wholly free from that ſin; but the contrary is moſt evident, for it appears from the context that many of them were ſlain for it; yea, as on the one hand, they were only of the tribe of Levi, who joined themſelves to Moſes, though there was no doubt many in all the tribes that were not in the idolatry; ſo, on the other hand, there were none ſlain, or very few, but of the tribe of Levi, as will appear in the expoſition of the following verſes, they being principally concerned with Aaron in making the calf; and therefore thoſe of the ſame tribe that joined them not, were the more zealous and ſtudious to purge themſelves from the imputation of the crime, by going over to Moſes at once, and ſhowing themſelves to be on the Lord's ſide.

℣. 27. And he ſaid unto them, thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] The following orders are given by Moſes, not of himſelf the chief magiſtrate, and as the effect of heat and paſſion, but they were from the Lord, who was Iſrael's God and King; he had them expreſly from him, or by an impulſe on his ſpirit, or in ſuch a way and manner that he knew it was of God, and this was his will: put every man his ſword by his ſide; girt there, ready to be drawn upon order: and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp; not into the tents, where good men might be bemoaning the ſin committed, but throughout the ſtreets, where many were loitering, it being a holyday with the idolaters: and ſlay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbour; who were idolaters; none were to be ſpared on account of relation, friendſhip and acquaintance.

℣. 28. And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moſes, &c.] They girded their ſwords by their ſides, went through the camp, and ſlew their brethren, companions and neighbours, who were keeping holyday in honour of the idol: and there fell of the people that day about 3000 men; the Vulgate Latin verſion reads 23,000 very wrongly; now theſe being chiefly, if not altogether, of the tribe of Levi, the brethren, companions and neighbours of the Levites, that were the ſlayers, together with the after-plagues that came upon them, ℣. 35. account for the deficiency of males in this tribe, ſome few months after, when it was numbered; and the number of them from one month old and upwards amounted but to 22,000, which was but a very ſmall one in proportion to the other tribes, who generally, one with another, numbered 40,000 each, and none ſo few as 30,000 [r]; of this tribe Aaron was, and therefore uſed with ſeverity, becauſe of his concern in this ſin; and even tho' it was the tribe of Moſes, it was not ſpared.

℣. 29. For Moſes had ſaid, &c.] To the Levites, when he firſt gave them their orders: conſecrate yourſelves to-day to the Lord; devote yourſelves to his ſervice, by obeying his orders, ſlaying thoſe, or the heads of them, who have caſt ſo much contempt upon him as to worſhip the golden calf in his room; and which would be as acceptable to him, as the offerings were, by which Aaron and his ſons were conſecrated to the Lord; and as theſe Levites were conſecrated to his ſervice this day, on this account: even every man upon his ſon, and upon his brother; not ſparing the neareſt relation found in this idolatry, and for which the tribe of Levi is commended and bleſſed in the bleſſing of Moſes, Deut. xxxiii. 8, 9. and as it follows, that he may beſtow a bleſſing upon you this day; which was their being taken into the ſervice of God to miniſter to the prieſts in the ſanctuary, to bear the veſſels of the Lord, and for their maintenance to have the tithes of the people: this day was, according to the Jewiſh writers [s], the 17th of Tammuz, or June, on which day the Jews keep a faſt upon this account.

℣. 30. And it came to paſs on the morrow, &c.] The 18th of Tammuz it was, the ſame writers ſay, that Moſes implored the mercy of God for Iſrael. Jarchi on ch. xxxiii. 11. ſays it was on the 17th day the tables were broke, on the 18th the calf was burnt, and on the 19th that Moſes went up to intercede for them: that Moſes ſaid unto the people, ye have ſinned a great ſin; the ſin of idolatry, ſee ℣. 21. from hence it appears, that all that were guilty of it were not ſlain, perhaps only ſome of one tribe; and there was great reaſon to fear, that as wrath was gone forth, it would not ſtop here, but others would fall a ſacrifice to the divine diſpleaſure; wherefore it is propoſed by Moſes to make application to the Lord on their behalf, that they might obtain mercy: and now I will go up unto the Lord; on the top of mount Sinai: peradventure I ſhall make atonement for your ſin; not by any ſacrifice offered, but by his prayers prevail with God to forgive their ſin, and not puniſh any more for it: he had by his firſt prayer obtained of the Lord not to conſume them off of the face of the earth, and utterly deſtroy them as a nation; but that did not hinder but that reſentment might be ſhewn in a leſſer degree, or by parts; as now 3000 men had been cut off, chiefly out of one tribe, if not altogether, the reſt of the tribes might expect to be viſited, according to the number of their delinquents.

℣. 31. And Moſes returned unto the Lord, &c.] On the mount where he was in the cloud: and ſaid, oh, this people have ſinned a great ſin; which the following words explain; he confeſſes the ſame to God he had charged the people with in the preceding verſe: and have made them gods of gold; the golden calf, which they themſelves called Elohim, Gods.

℣. 32. Yet now if thou wilt, forgive their ſin, &c.] Of thy free grace, good-will and pleaſure; it will redound to thy glory, men will praiſe thy name on account of it; theſe people will have great reaſon to be thankful, and will lie under great obligations to thee, to fear, ſerve and glorify thee; and in particular it will be regarded by me as the higheſt favour that can be aſked or granted: and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of the book which thou haſt written; not the book of the law, as Jarchi, written with the finger of God, the name of Moſes was not written there; nor the book of the juſt, as the Targum of Jonathan, the liſt and catalogue of good men, that belonged to the viſible church, called in after-time the writing of the houſe of Iſrael, Ezek. xiii. 9. but rather the book of life, either of this temporal life, and then it means no more than that he wiſhed to die, even immediately by the hand of God, which ſeems to be countenanced by Numb. xi. 15. or elſe of eternal life, and is no other than the book of life of the Lamb, or God's predeſtination or choice of men in Chriſt to everlaſting life, which is particular, perſonal, ſure and certain; and Moſes aſks for this, not as a thing either deſireable or

[r] See the biſhop of Clogher's Chronology of the Hebrew Bible, p. 360, 361.

[s] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 6. p. 18. Pirke Eliezer, c. 46.

or poſſible, but to expreſs his great affection for this people, and his great concern for the glory of God; and rather than either ſhould ſuffer, he choſe, if it was poſſible, to be deprived of that eternal happineſs he hoped for, and ſhould enjoy.

℣. 33. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] In anſwer to his requeſt: whoſoever hath ſinned againſt me, him will I blot out of my book; not that any one that is really in the book of life is ever blotted out, or that any one predeſtinated or ordained to eternal life ever periſh: but ſome perſons may think themſelves, and they may ſeem to be written in that book, or to be among the number of God's elect, but are not, and turn out obſtinate, impenitent ſinners, and live and die in impenitence and unbelief; when it will appear that their names were never written in it, which is the ſame thing as to be blotted out of it, ſee Pſ. lxix. 28. Now by this anſwer the Lord does not abſolutely refuſe the requeſt of Moſes with reſpect to the people, though he does with regard to himſelf, and the blotting his name out of his book; and it is plain, by what follows, he meant to ſhew mercy to the people, ſince he bids Moſes go and lead them on towards Canaan, and promiſes an angel to go before them; though he reſerves to himſelf a liberty to chaſtize this people for this ſin, as he ſhould have opportunity, along with others.

℣. 34. Therefore now go, lead the people unto the place of which I have ſpoken unto thee, &c.] That is, to the land of Canaan, which he had promiſed to their fathers and to them, and had directed Moſes to bring them to: behold, mine angel ſhall go before thee; and not I, as Jarchi interprets it; not the angel of the covenant, and of his preſence, as in ch. xxiii. 20. but a created angel, which though a favour, was a leſſening of the mercy before promiſed and granted; and which gave the people a great deal of concern, though Moſes by his ſupplications got the former bleſſing reſtored, ch. xxxiii. 2, 4, 14, 17: nevertheleſs, in the day when I viſit, I will viſit their ſin upon them; that is, when he ſhould viſit them in a way of correction for other ſins, he would viſit them in like manner for this ſin, the worſhip of the golden calf; and ſo Jarchi well explains it, "when I viſit upon them their "iniquities, I will viſit upon them a little of this "iniquity, with the reſt of iniquities; and there "is no puniſhment, adds he, comes upon Iſrael, "in which there is not ſomething of the puniſh-"ment of the ſin of the calf;" and the Jews have a ſaying [t], that "there is not a generation in "which there is not an ounce of the ſin of the "calf."

℣. 35. And the Lord plagued the people, &c.] That is, continued ſo to do at certain times, with the peſtilence, or other calamities; for this ſeems not to refer, as ſome think, to the ſlaughter of the 3000 men: the reaſon follows, becauſe they made the calf which Aaron made; that is, they provided him with materials to make it; they urged and ſolicited him to do it, and would not be eaſy without it, ſo that the making of it is aſcribed to them; or they ſerved it, as Onkelos; or bowed unto it, as Jonathan; with which agree the Syriac, Arabic and Samaritan verſions, which render it, they ſerved, or worſhipped, or ſacrificed to the calf which Aaron made.

CHAP. XXXIII.

THIS chapter informs us, that the Lord refuſing to go with the people, only ſending an angel with them, they are filled with concern and troubled, ℣. 1—6. Moſes upon this pitched the tabernacle without the camp, where every one that ſought the Lord went; Moſes entered into it himſelf, and the Lord talked to him in a friendly manner in the cloudy pillar that ſtood at the door of it, and the people worſhipped every man at his own tent-door; all which foreboded good, and tended to reconciliation, ℣. 7—11. Moſes improved the opportunity, and intreats the preſence of God to go with them, which was granted, ℣. 12—17. and that he might have a ſight of the glory of God; and this is promiſed to paſs before him, he being put into the cliff of the rock, ℣. 18—23.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, depart, and go up hence, &c.] Not from the place where Moſes was, which was the top of the mount, but where the camp of Iſrael was, at the bottom of the mount; where they had lain encamped ſome time, but were now ordered to proceed on their journey: thou, and the people which thou haſt brought up out of the land of Egypt; though his wrath was in ſome meaſure mitigated, and he had ſo far forgave their ſin, that he would not cut them off from being a people; yet ſtill he does not call them his people, or own that he brought them out of Egypt, as he does in the preface to the commands they had now broke, as if they were not under his care and conduct; but ſpeaks of them in a different manner, as a people that Moſes had brought out from thence, and whom he orders to go on with: unto the land which I ſware unto Abraham, to Iſaac, and to Jacob, ſaying, unto thy ſeed will I give it; meaning the land of Canaan, which as he had promiſed with an oath to their fathers to give it to them, he would faithfully obſerve it, though they were unworthy of ſuch a favour.

℣. 2. And I will ſend an angel before thee, &c.] Not the angel before promiſed, ch. xxiii. 20. the angel of his preſence, the eternal Word and Son of God, but a created angel; and ſo Aben Ezra obſerves, he does not ſay the angel that was known, that his name was in him; though even this was to be looked upon as a favour, and ſhowed that he had not utterly caſt them off: and I will drive out the Canaanite, the Amorite, and the Hittite, the Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jebuſite; who were now the inhabitants of the land, and theſe he promiſes to drive out, to make way for their poſſeſſion of it; and that by his hand, as the Targum of Jonathan interprets it, by the hand of the angel. Only ſix nations are mentioned, though there were ſeven; the Gergaſite is omitted, but added in the Septuagint verſion.

℣. 3. Unto a land flowing with milk and honey, &c.] Abounding with all the neceſſaries and good things of life, a deſcription of the land of Canaan frequently made, ſee ch. iii. 8: for I will not go up in the midſt of thee; would not grant them his preſence in ſo near, viſible and reſpectable a manner as he had before done, though he would not utterly forſake them: the tabernacle was before in the midſt of the camp, that is, that which was erected until until the large one, ordered to be made, was finiſhed, but now it was removed without the camp, ℣. 7. for thou art a ſtiff-necked people; ſee ch. xxxii. 9. and the note there: leſt I conſume them in the way; in the way to the land of Canaan, and ſo never get there; the meaning is, that the Lord being in the midſt of them, their ſin would be the more aggravated to be committed in his preſence, before his face; and the glory of his majeſty would require that immediate notice be taken of it; and juſt puniſhment inflicted; ſo that by this ſtep God both conſulted his own honour, and their ſafety.

[t] T. Hieroſ. Taanith, fol. 68. 3.

℣. 4. And when the people heard theſe evil tidings, &c.] That God would withdraw his gracious preſence, and go not up with them himſelf, only ſend an angel with them; and eſpecially this may reſpect what is threatened, ℣. 5. and had been ſaid at this time: they mourned; were inwardly and heartily grieved for their ſin, whereby they had provoked the Lord to depart from them, and gave ſome outward and open tokens of it: and no man did put on his ornaments; they uſed to wear at other times, their rings and jewels, which the princes and the chief among the people eſpecially, were wont to wear; and in common the people did not put on their beſt cloaths, or what they uſually wore, but clothed themſelves in mournful habits, in ſackcloth and aſhes, or in ſome ſuch like manner.

℣. 5. For the Lord had ſaid to Moſes, &c.] At the ſame time he had told it to the people: ſay unto the children of Iſrael; Menachem, as quoted by Ainſworth, obſerves, that this is ſaid in a way of mercy; for ſince their idolatry he had only called them the people of Moſes, and the people, but now calls them by their beloved name, the children of Iſrael; but whether this was any hint of mercy and favour, is not very apparent by what follows: ye are a ſtiff-necked people; obſtinate and untractable, ſee the note on ch. xxxii. 9: I will come up into the midſt of thee in a moment, and conſume thee; before he threatens them, that he would not go up in the midſt of them, that is, in a way of grace and mercy, to guide, protect and defend them himſelf; and now that he would come up in the midſt of them, but in a different manner, in a way of wrath, and to take vengeance on them for their ſins; and the meaning is, either that ſhould he do ſo but one moment, it would be all over with them, or they would be utterly conſumed; or this is threatened on condition, provided they did not repent of their ſins and humble themſelves: therefore now put off thy ornaments from thee; not their armour, as ſome, nor the clothes they wore at the feſtival for the golden calf, for this was long after that; but the clothes they uſually wore, the beſt they had, with all their decorations and ornaments, and put on mournful habits as an outward token of their repentance and mourning for their ſins, if they had any real concern: this ſhows, that theſe words muſt have been ſaid before; ſince the people on hearing the evil tidings had clothed themſelves in a mournful habit, and did not put on their ornaments, ℣. 4: that I may know what to do unto thee; which does not ſuppoſe ignorance or irreſolution in God, but is ſaid after the manner of men, that he ſhould deal with them in porportion to their conduct and behaviour, and as that ſhould outwardly appear.

℣. 6. And the children of Iſrael ſtript themſelves of their ornaments, &c.] Such as before deſcribed, and this they did, by the mount Horeb; before their departure from thence, and where they had been guilty of the idolatry: the words may be literally rendered, *from mount Horeb: and Jonathan underſtands the preceding clauſe, of ſomething they put off which they received from thence; but the meaning is, that they went to ſome diſtance from mount Horeb, and there ſtripped themſelves to ſhew their greater humiliation, and the ſenſe they had of their unworthineſs of being near to the Lord, or enjoying his preſence.

℣. 7. And Moſes took the tabernacle, &c.] Not that, the pattern of which he had been ſhewn in the mount, for that was not as yet made, rather his own tabernacle or tent, ch. xviii. 7. or one that was erected for worſhip before the large one was ordered, and whilſt that was building; for it can hardly be thought they ſhould have no place of worſhip for a whole year after they were come out of Egypt; though this might be not a place on purpoſe, or only erected for that uſe, but might be one of the apartments of Moſes; who, beſides what he had for the uſe and convenience of his family, had a ſpecial and peculiar one, both on a religious account, where he and the people ſometimes worſhipped, and God met with them, and on a civil account, to hear and judge the cauſes of the people, and reſolve their doubts, and remove their difficulties, and make enquiries of God for them: and pitched it without the camp, afar off from the camp; 2000 cubits diſtant from it, as the Targum of Jonathan, and ſo Jarchi, which he endeavours to confirm from Joſh. iii. 4. and was what was afterwards called a ſabbath day's journey: this was done partly that he might have the opportunity of converſing with God, and bringing about a thorough reconciliation between him and the people, who declared he would not go up in the midſt of them; and partly that this might be a ſymbol to the people, of the Lord's departure from the midſt of them; that ſo they might be brought to a thorough humiliation for their ſin, who might fear that he would not only ſtand at a diſtance, but entirely remove from them: it might be conſidered as a token of his diſpleaſure with them, and yet be a door of hope unto them; ſince he was not wholly gone from them, but might be ſought unto by them as follows; and called it the tabernacle of the congregation; as the great tabernacle was afterwards called, and as this might be before, though now renewed, to give the people ſome encouragement to reſort here; becauſe here he and they met together, both on civil and religious accounts, and God met with them: and it came to paſs, that every one which ſought the Lord; about any affair of moment and importance, to know his will, and to have inſtruction and direction what to do; or that ſought to him for peace and reconciliation, for the pardon of their ſins, and the acceptance of their perſons, repenting of their ſins, and confeſſing the ſame: went out unto the tabernacle of the congregation, which was without the camp; theſe went out of the camp from their tents there, to this; who were not the body of the people, but either ſuch who had difficult matters to enquire about, or were ſeriouſly and heartily concerned for the evil they had committed, and for the removal of the divine preſence from them.

℣. 8. And it came to paſs when Moſes went out of the tabernacle, &c.] For when he had pitched it; he did not continue there; which ſhews it was not the tent or tabernacle he dwelt in, but whither he went to and fro, both to meet the Lord in it, and and transact the affairs of the people, and especially the great affair now depending between God and them: that all the people rose up; in reverence of him as their ruler, and the minister of God, and as their mediator between God and them, though they had but lately thought and spoke very meanly and contemptibly of him, ch. xxxii. 1. see Job xxix. 8. and stood every man at his tent-door; none offering to go in, nor to sit down until he was gone into the tabernacle; which was an instance of their respect to him: and looked after Moses until he was gone into the tabernacle; kept their eye on him as long as they could see him, thereby expressing their esteem of him, signifying their desire that he would intercede for them, and wishing him success therein: the Targum of Jonathan interprets all this of the ungodly among them that looked after Moses with an evil eye.

* מהר a monte, V. L. Pagninus, Montanus, Druſius; procul a monte, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

℣. 9. And it came to pass as Moses entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar descended, &c.] From the top of the mount in which Jehovah was: and stood at the door of the tabernacle; where Moses was just entered, and in sight of the people, which was a token of grace and favour both to him and them: and the Lord talked with Moses; not the cloudy pillar, but the Lord in it, as we rightly supply it: what he talked with him about is not said, very probably concerning the children of Israel, their conduct and behaviour, and what was his will further concerning them.

℣. 10. And all the people saw the cloudy pillar stand at the tabernacle-door, &c.] They being every man at his tent-door; and this must be a pleasing sight to them, and give them some hope that God would be merciful to them, forgive their sin, and not depart from them: and all the people rose up and worshipped, every man in his tent-door; not Moses, nor the cloudy pillar, but the Lord in it; it was not a civil bow they made to Moses, and in respect to him, for he was gone into the tabernacle out of sight, but a religious adoration of the Lord in the pillar of cloud.

℣. 11. And the Lord spake unto Moses face to face, &c.] Not by an angel, but he himself in person; not by a dream or vision, but apparently, in real visible appearance; not in dark speeches, but clearly in plain words, easy to be understood; and not by a voice from heaven at a distance, but mouth to mouth, being very near, as when on the mount, and now at the door of the tabernacle: as a man speaketh unto his friend; freely, familiarly, plainly, cordially, openly, without any reserve or shew of authority, or causing dread and fear; for he also spake to the children of Israel face to face, but then it was out of the fire in a terrible manner which they could not bear, Deut. v. 4. and he turned again into the camp; to acquaint the people, the heads and elders of them, what discourse he had with God, what success he had met with on their behalf, and how the Lord stood affected to them, or what was his will concerning them: but his servant Joshua, the son of Nun, a young man, departed not out of the tabernacle; who is here described by his name, Joshua, by his descent, the son of Nun, by his relation to Moses, a servant of his, who waited on him wherever he went, when upon the mount and now at the tabernacle; and by his age, a young man, as he was in comparison of Moses, and is so called chiefly because he was his servant, it being usual to call servants young men, of whatsoever age; for Joshua, strictly speaking, could not be a young man in years; he was the general of the army at the battle with Amalek; and according to Aben Ezra, was now 56 years of age, which he collects from his living to the age of 110 years; now to 56 add the 40 years in the wilderness, 7 years, in which he subdued the land of Canaan, and 7 more in dividing it, as say their wise men, the sum is 110 years: and it not being easy to account for it, that Moses should depart alone, unaccompanied by Joshua, who always attended him, and no sufficient reason is given why he should stay behind in the tabernacle; as for private devotion, which this was not a place for; or for judging the causes of the people in the absence of Moses, which we never find he did; or to guard the tabernacle, to be a watchman in it, or even at the head of a watch over it, which as it seemed unnecessary, so was an employment too mean for him; the words therefore may be rendered as they are by some, and the rather, as there is an accent which makes a considerable stop on the word נער translated, a young man[w], and he turned again to the camp, and his servant Joshua, the son of Nun, a young man; that is, along with him; they both returned to the camp, and then it follows, he, i. e. the Lord, departed not out of the tabernacle, but continued there; to whom Moses afterwards returned and had the following discourse: a learned man[x], who thinks that the grand tabernacle is here meant, yet unfinished, though not the final erection of it; and that here is a dislocation in the history, and supposes that Moses having been 40 days absent, found upon his return a good progress made in the work of the tabernacle, and the ornaments and utensils belonging thereunto; and as soon as the woodwork of the tabernacle was finished, he ordered it to be put together; but because the tabernacle had neither a door to it, nor were the hangings of the outer court finished, therefore Joshua the servant of Moses, the son of Nun, a young man, departed not out of the tabernacle, but remained there to preserve it from being polluted: but it is a mistake of his that the tabernacle had not a door to it, and it is strange he should make it, when it is twice mentioned in the preceding verses; and since the pillar of cloud and the Lord in it were there, no man durst draw near to pollute it, so that there was no need of Joshua's being there to preserve it; and besides, it was after this Moses went up to the mount and stayed other 40 days and 40 nights, see ch. xxxiv. 4, 28.

℣. 12. And Moses said unto the Lord, &c.] Having returned from the camp to the tabernacle again: see, thou sayest unto me, bring up this people; from hence to the land of Canaan, as in ℣. 1. and thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me; to guide and direct him, help and assist him, protect and defend him, and the people with him; he had signified something of this kind, but by some expressions, and by his present conduct, he was at a loss to know who was to go with him; he had told him that the increated angel, in whom his name and he himself were, should go with them; but now it had been declared that he would not go up in the midst of them himself, but send an angel, a created one, but who that was he knew not; he thought he had reason to expect the pillar of the cloud and fire by day and night; but that had had so many motions that he could not be assured of the continuance of it: yet thou hast said, I know thee by name; have a particular and special ſpecial knowledge of thee, and diſtinguiſhed thee from others, and have a perſonal affection for thee: and thou haſt alſo found grace in my ſight; had an intereſt in his ſpecial favour and good-will, was acceptable unto him, had received an abundance of ſpiritual grace, and many very extraordinary gifts from him, and had had many benefits beſtowed on him, which were proofs of his being grateful and well pleaſing to him.

[w] So Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Rivet.

[x] Clayton's Chronology of the Hebrew Bible, p. 343.

℣. 13. Now therefore, I pray thee, if I have found grace in thy ſight, &c.] Which he ſaid, not as doubting whether he had or no, but as taking it for granted he had, and ſo argues from it, and improves his intereſt in it, in his pleading with God: ſhew me now thy way; either the way which he himſelf would take, the way of his providence in bringing the children of Iſrael into the land of Canaan; or the way he would have him take, the way of his duty, how he would have him behave in conducting them thither; unleſs he means the Meſſiah, Chriſt, the way to the heavenly Canaan, to whom he ſeems greatly to have reſpect in the following part of this chapter: that I may know thee, that I may find grace in thy ſight; by which he might have a further evidence of his being acceptable to God, and having a ſhare in his good-will; as well as he would better know in what way grace is communicated, Chriſt being the way both of acceſs into the grace of God, and of acceptance with him, and of the communication of grace from him: and conſider that this nation is thy people; though they had ſinned againſt him in the manner they had done, they were a people he had choſen above all people to be his; he had made a covenant with them, and was their covenant-God; he had redeemed them out of Egypt, and had called them from thence, and had wrought a great ſalvation for them, and had beſtowed many peculiar favours upon them; and though for this their groſs idolatry and ſad apoſtacy from him, they were unworthy of the relation, and he had thought fit not to call them his people, but the people; or the people of Moſes, yet they ſtill were his people, and he entreats he would conſider the relation they ſtood in to him, and ſhew mercy to them.

℣. 14. And he ſaid, &c.] In anſwer to his requeſt: my preſence ſhall go with thee; or before thee, both with Moſes and before the people; meaning the angel of his preſence he had before promiſed, the eternal Word and Son of God, who ſaved them, redeemed them, bore, and carried them all the days of old: or, my faces ſhall go [y]; all the three divine perſons, Father, Son, and Spirit; there was Jehovah the Father, whoſe the angel of his preſence was; and there was Jehovah the Son, Chriſt, whom they tempted in the wilderneſs; and there was Jehovah the Holy Spirit, whom they vexed, ſee Iſ. lxiii. 9, 10, 11. and I will give thee reſt; not eaſe, and peace and tranquillity of mind, or a freedom from the fear of enemies, and all dangers by them, much leſs, reſt in the grave, before Iſrael ſhould be brought into Canaan's land; but rather, the promiſed land itſelf, which was the reſt that was promiſed, and would be given, and was typical of that eternal reſt which remains for the people of God in heaven, and is a pure gift; for this promiſe is not perſonal and peculiar to Moſes, but belonged to all the people, to whom God would give the typical reſt, ſee Deut. xii. 9.

℣. 15. And he ſaid unto him, &c.] Moſes ſaid unto the Lord: if thy preſence go not with me; or with us, as it may be as well ſupplied, and which agrees with what follows: carry us not up hence; from the mount to the land of Canaan; though God had promiſed his preſence, which was the thing requeſted, Moſes could not forbear expreſſing himſelf after this manner, to ſhew the high eſteem he had of this bleſſing, and how worthleſs and inſignificant every thing elſe was without it; that even Canaan, the land of reſt promiſed, was nothing in compariſon of it: it is not much matter where we are, or what we have, if God is not with us; but if he grants his preſence, the greateſt hardſhips in a wilderneſs are made eaſy, and difficulties are got through with pleaſure; though ſome read the words in the preceding verſe by way of interrogation, ſhould my face or preſence go, and ſhould it give thee reſt [z]? as carrying in it a kind of denial, which makes Moſes here more urgent for it, and ſuch a verſion thoſe words ſeem to require.

℣. 16. For wherein ſhall it be known here, &c.] At Sinai, among the mountains in the wilderneſs: that I and thy people have found grace in thy ſight; were acceptable to him, highly eſteemed by him, and had received peculiar favours from him; what evidence would there be of this? how would it appear to others? what knowledge could they have of it? is it not in that thou goeſt with us? in ſuch a grand majeſtic manner, and ſo viſible as in a pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night: this was a full proof, and a ſtrong and convincing argument, even to a demonſtration, that they were a ſpecial and peculiar people, the favourites of God, highly eſteemed and honoured by him; but ſhould this be diſcontinued, as ſeemed to be threatened, there would be nothing to demonſtrate, that they had found more grace and favour than other people; but this being the caſe, ſo ſhall we be ſeparated, I and thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth; diſtinguiſhed by this favour from them, and that in a very wonderful and marvellous manner, as the word ſignifies; and ſo ſome render it, marvellouſly ſeparated [a]; for the pillar of cloud and fire was a very marvellous thing, and diſtinguiſhed the people of Iſrael from all others in a ſurprizing manner, none having been ever favoured in the like manner.

℣. 17. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, I will do this thing alſo that thou haſt ſpoken, &c.] Or aſked for, namely, go with them himſelf in this amazing and diſtinguiſhed manner, in the pillar of the cloud and fire; this he would do as well as ſhew him his way and his works, and indeed all this he did by granting that: for thou haſt found grace in my ſight, and I know thee by name; he owns the truth of the thing, on which Moſes had formed his plan, and by granting his requeſt, gave a freſh proof and evidence of it; and what can be a greater bleſſing than to partake of the ſpecial grace, favour, and good-will of God, and to be particularly and perſonally known to him, with ſuch a knowledge as has connected with it the ſtrongeſt affection and higheſt eſteem?

℣. 18. And he ſaid, I beſeech thee, ſhew me thy glory.] Not any viſible luſtre, ſplendor, and brightneſs, as a ſymbol of the divine preſence, that he had ſeen, ch. xvi. 7, 10. nor the glorious eſſence of God, as Maimonides [b], which is inviſible and cannot [y] פני ילכו facies meæ ibunt, Montanus, Vatablus. So Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

[z] An facies mea iret & quietem daret tibi? Noldius, p. 243.
[a] נפלינו marvellouſly ſeparated, Ainſworth.
[b] Yeſude Hatorah, c. 1. §. 10.

cannot be ſeen, and of which Moſes could not be ignorant; nor the glory of the heavenly ſtate, which alſo he muſt know he could not ſee until he came thither; but he ſeems to mean ſome viſible, glorious repreſentation of God, ſuch as he had never ſeen, though he had been with him ſo long on the mount in the cloud, and heard his voice, and ſaw ſome appearances of brightneſs and glory, yet not in any form that he could frame any idea of; perhaps he may mean the angel of God's preſence, called his face, the promiſed Meſſiah and glorious redeemer and ſaviour, in whom there is ſuch a bright diſplay of the glory of the divine perfections; yea, is the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; and this favour was granted him, with ſome proper limitations and reſtrictions; for though this requeſt was, no doubt, ſincere and upright, it might be attended with frailty and weakneſs; yet it is not utterly denied, but with ſome explanation is allowed, and perhaps was the higheſt favour ever granted to any before the incarnation of our Lord, at leaſt in ſo full and glorious a manner as this was; Moſes having by his ſuit obtained much, wants more, and is emboldened to aſk it, and in a good meaſure had it, as the following words ſhew.

℣. 19. And he ſaid, I will make all my goodneſs paſs before thee, &c.] Which is his glory; the glory of the Lord lies in his goodneſs, and that appears in the works of his hands, in the methods of his providence, eſpecially in the diſtribution of his ſovereign grace and mercy, and particularly in his pardoning grace and mercy, through the blood of Chriſt; for as it is the glory of a man to paſs over a tranſgreſſion, Prov. xix. 11. much more, it is the glory of God, of which this goodneſs is afterwards interpreted; and may be underſtood of Chriſt himſelf, who is the goodneſs of God itſelf, is not only good, but the Lord's good one, emphatically good; as he is called his holy one, ſo his good one; becauſe all his goodneſs is laid up in him, he is prevented and filled as mediator, with the bleſſings of his goodneſs; all are proclaimed in him, diſplayed through him, and communicated by him; and he is that glorious perſonage that Moſes might be deſirous of having a view of, and was favoured with; however, with a view of the divine goodneſs, as it is conſpicuous in him, in what he is, and has done for his people; for God has ſhewn forth the exceeding riches of his grace and goodneſs in him: and I will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee; his name and his nature, his perfections, and the glory of them, as diſplayed in Chriſt; or when he is about to paſs, or whilſt he is paſſing by, leſt he ſhould paſs by unobſerved, I will proclaim aloud and give thee notice that he is now paſſing by thee, whoſe name is Jehovah, and whoſe nature, glory and goodneſs are as follow: and will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will ſhew mercy on whom I will ſhew mercy; ſignifying that notwithſtanding the children of Iſrael had ſinned againſt him in ſuch a manner as they had, yet he ſhould ſhew favour, grace, and mercy to them in pardoning their ſins; and it ſhould be diſtributed, not according to any merits of theirs, but according to his ſovereign will and pleaſure, and not to all, but to whomſoever he thought fit; and in this would be ſeen his glory: and ſo it is with reſpect to grace and mercy, as diſplayed in Chriſt to ſinful men; it is not in proportion to their deſerts, but according to the purpoſe and good will of God, and that not unto all, but unto ſome whom he has appointed, not unto wrath, but unto ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt, and which is to the glory of his grace; and the more enlarged view men have of this, the more clearly and fully does the goodneſs and glory of God paſs before them.

℣. 20. And he ſaid, thou canſt not ſee my face, &c.] Meaning not his form, his eſſence, his very nature, and the glory of it, that Moſes muſt know he could never ſee; but the brighteſt diſplays of his grace and goodneſs in Chriſt, the fulleſt diſcoveries of it, which are too much for man, in the preſent ſtate of things to have, who ſee in part, and but through a glaſs darkly, not face to face, or in the moſt compleat and perfect manner; it is but a ſmall part and portion of God, and of his ways and works as of creation and providence, ſo more eſpecially of grace, ſalvation, and redemption by Jeſus Chriſt, that is known of him; the things of the goſpel in their full perfection are, what eye has not ſeen; and particularly were more hidden and unſeen under the legal diſpenſation; this face was covered with types and ſhadows, and dark repreſentations of things; though, in compariſon of that ſtate, we now, with open face, behold the glory of the Lord, yet ſtill it is through a glaſs darkly, and we have not the clear and full view of things as will be hereafter: for there ſhall no man ſee me, and live; if there was to be ſuch a revelation made of the grace and goodneſs, and glory of God in Chriſt, as it really is in itſelf, it would be too much for mortals in the preſent ſtate to bear; it would break their earthen veſſels in pieces; the full diſcovery therefore is reſerved to a future ſtate, when theſe things will be ſeen as they are, and men will be in a condition to receive them; otherwiſe we find that men have, in a ſenſe, ſeen the face of God in this life, and have lived; though many, and even good men have been poſſeſſed with ſuch a notion, that if a man ſaw God he muſt die, ſee Gen. xxxii. 30. Exod. xxiv. 11. Judg. xiii. 22.

℣. 21. And the Lord ſaid, behold, there is a place by me, &c.] Near him, not in or by the tabernacle, where it may be the pillar of cloud now was, as it had been ℣. 9, 10. but upon the rock, where it had been for many days, and near to which there was a fit place for Moſes to be in, and have that view of the goodneſs and glory of God he would favour him with: and thou ſhalt ſtand upon a rock; in Horeb, typical of Chriſt the rock, the rock of Iſrael and the rock of ages, the rock of refuge, ſalvation, and ſtrength; comparable to one for ſhelter, ſolidity, firmneſs, ſtrength, and duration; and happy are they who ſtand upon this rock; they are ſafe and ſecure, they ſtand on high, and have noble proſpects of the perfections of God, and of the riches of his grace and goodneſs, ſee Pſ. xl. 2, 3. Iſ. xxxiii. 16, 17. Matt. vii. 24, 25.

℣. 22. And it ſhall come to paſs while my glory paſſeth by, &c.] The diſplays of his grace and goodneſs are made: that I will put thee in a clift of the rock; in one of the clifts, made by ſmiting it, through which the waters guſhed out for the relief of the Iſraelites, and their flocks: and we are told [c], that to this day, on the ſummit of mount Sinai, by the Arabians called Gibel el Mouſa, or the mountain of Moſes, is perceived a large chaſm in the rock, ſaid to be the cave where Moſes hid himſelf from God, when the glory of the Lord paſſed before him. Now this clift may be an emblem of Chriſt, [c] Egmont and Heyman's Travels, vol. 2. p. 167. ſee a Journal from Cairo, &c. p. 28, 29. Ed. 2.

Chriſt, as crucified, ſmitten, wounded and ſlain; who was ſmitten by the law and juſtice of God as this rock was ſmitten by the rod of Moſes; and had gaſhes and wounds made in him like the clifts of a rock, being pierced with the nails and ſpear; and in theſe clifts of the rock ſaints dwell by faith, Cant. ii. 14: and will cover thee with my hand; with his cloud, as Ben Melech, and ſo may denote the cloudineſs, obſcurity and darkneſs of the legal diſpenſation: but here it ſeems to denote imperfection, not being able to bear the full ſight of the divine glory, and which angels themſelves cannot bear, but cover their faces; and alſo the danger of being conſumed, were it not that ſaints are in Chriſt, and covered and ſecured in him, otherwiſe God is a conſuming fire: while I paſs by thee; or his glory, the glory of all his perfections, wiſdom, holineſs, juſtice, power and faithfulneſs, and eſpecially of his grace, mercy and goodneſs in Chriſt.

℣. 23. And I will take away mine hand, &c.] As being covered with the hand may ſignify the obſcurity of the former diſpenſation, the taking of it away may denote a more clear revelation of the grace and goodneſs of God in Chriſt, and ſo of the glory of it under the goſpel-diſpenſation; and yet what is ſeen in this, in compariſon of the reality of things as they are, or of the heavenly ſtate, are but as next expreſſed: and thou ſhalt ſee my back parts; which ſome underſtand of the humanity of Chriſt, and his ſufferings in it, ſometimes expreſſed by his heel, and the bruiſing of it, Gen. iii. 15. or elſe the works of God in creation, by which the inviſible things of God are ſeen, and which give a knowledge of him à poſteriori; and ſo Maimonides [d] interprets the phraſe, which follow me, ſhow from my will, i. e. all my creatures: or rather it denotes the imperfect knowledge of God in the preſent ſtate, even as revealed in Chriſt, in whom there are the cleareſt and brighteſt diſplays of his glory; yet this, in compariſon of the beatific ſight of him, is but like ſeeing a man that is gone by, whoſe back is only to be ſeen: but my face ſhall not be ſeen; in the preſent ſtate the face of God, that is his favour, communion with him, and the light of his countenance, are to be ſought for, and may be enjoyed; the glory of himſelf is to be ſeen in the face or perſon of Chriſt, and the glory of that face or perſon is to be ſeen in the glaſs of the goſpel, but at preſent imperfectly; God in Chriſt as he is, the fulleſt and brighteſt diſplays of his glory, grace and goodneſs, are reſerved to another ſtate, ſee 1 Cor. xiii. 9, 12. 1 John iii. 2. or it may regard the divine nature of Chriſt, which could not be ſeen by Moſes, but his back parts or human; Chriſt as clothed with fleſh might, and would be ſeen by him, as he was ſeen by him on the mount, Matt. xvii. 3.

CHAP. XXXIV.

IN this chapter Moſes has orders to hew two tables of ſtone, that God might write on them the ten commands, and bring them up with him to the mount, ℣. 1—4. where the Lord proclaimed his name, and cauſed his glory and his goodneſs to paſs before him, ℣. 5—7. when Moſes took this favourable opportunity that offered to pray for the people, that God would forgive their ſin, and go along with them, ℣. 8, 9. upon which he made a covenant with them, which on his part was to do wonders for them, and drive out the inhabitants of Canaan before them; and on their part, that they ſhould have no confederacy and communion with theſe nations, and ſhun their idolatry, and every thing that might lead unto it, ℣. 10—17. and he repeated ſeveral laws before given, and urged the obſervance of them, which Moſes was to acquaint the people with, ℣. 18—27. and after a ſtay of 40 days and 40 nights on the mount, he came down with the two tables of the law; and the ſkin of his face ſhone ſo bright, that the people of Iſrael were afraid to come nigh him, and therefore he put a veil over his face while he converſed with them, ℣. 28—35.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] Out of the cloudy pillar, at the door of the tabernacle, where he had been converſing with him in the moſt friendly manner, as related in the preceding chapter: hew thee two tables of ſtone like unto the firſt; of the ſame form, and of the ſame dimenſions, and it may be of the ſame ſort of ſtone, which perhaps was marble, there being great plenty of that kind on mount Sinai. Now Moſes being ordered to hew theſe tables, whereas the former were the work of God himſelf, as well as the writing, ſhews that the law was to be the miniſtration of Moſes, and be ordained in the hand of him as a mediator, who had been praying and interceding for the people; and as a token of the reconciliation made, the tables were to be renewed, yet with ſome difference, that there might be ſome remembrance of their crime, and of their loſs by it, not having the law on tables of ſtone, which were the work of God, but which were the work of man: and I will write upon theſe tables the words that were in the firſt tables which thou brakeſt; the writing of theſe was by the Lord himſelf, as the former, ſhews that the law itſelf was of God, though the tables were hewn by Moſes, and that he would have it known and obſerved as ſuch; and the ſame being written on theſe tables, as on the former, ſhews the unchangeableneſs of the law of God, as given to the people of Iſrael, that he would have nothing added to it, or taken from it; and the writing of it over again may have reſpect to the reinſcribing it on the hearts of his people in regeneration, according to the tenor of the new covenant: the phraſe, which thou brakeſt, is not uſed as expreſſing any diſpleaſure at Moſes for that act of his, but to deſcribe the former tables; and the breaking of them might not be the effect of paſſion, at leaſt of any criminal paſſion, but of zeal for the glory of God, and the honour of his law, which was broken by the Iſraelites, and therefore unworthy of it; and might be according to the counſel of the divine will, and the ſecret direction of his providence.

℣. 2. And be ready in the morning, &c.] This was, according to the Jewiſh chronology [e], on the 28th day of the month Ab or July: and come up in the morning unto mount Sinai; the ſame mount where he had been before: and preſent thyſelf there to me on the top of the mount; where the pillar of cloud removed and ſtood, and near it Moſes was to ſtand and wait to hear what would be ſaid unto him, him, and to see what would be made to pass before him.

[d] Moreh Nevochim, par. 1. c. 38.

[e] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 6. p. 19.

℣. 3. And no man shall come up with thee, &c.] Before, Aaron and his two sons, and the 70 elders of Israel went up with Moses, though they did not go so near the Lord as he did; but now having sinned in the matter of the golden calf, though a reconciliation was made, they were not allowed to go with him, nor even Joshua his servant, tho' he had no concern in the sin; Moses must be alone, that the ministration of the law might be by him only, and in order to receive a peculiar favour in answer to his request: neither let any man be seen throughout all the mount; in any part of it, as Joshua was before in some part of it, even all the while that Moses was there; but now not a single person must be seen any where, not only because of the giving of the law to Moses, but because of the display of the divine glory, which was to be made particularly to him: neither let the flocks nor herds feed before that mount; or over-against it, or rather near it [f]; which was ordered, not so much on the account of the flocks themselves, who were not capable of any moral guilt; nor that they might not come to any hurt, since they were to be stoned or thrust through with a dart if they touched it, which order it is highly probable was in force as before; but on the account of their keepers, that there might be none of them on the spot, or near, to observe what passed; and chiefly this was said to command fear and reverence in the minds of the people, whilst this solemn affair was transacting between God and Moses, and to check all curiosity in them.

℣. 4. And he hewed two tables of stone like unto the first, &c.] Which may be an emblem of the ministry of men, which God makes use of in hewing of his people, and bringing them to a sense of their sins, the breach of his law, and repentance for them, Hos. vi. 5: and Moses rose up early in the morning; which, according to the Jews [g], was the 29th of Ab or July, which shewed his ready and chearful obedience to the divine will, and the quick dispatch he had made in hewing the tables; which whether he did with his own hands only, or made use of others whom he directed, is not very material; though the phrase hew thee, or hew unto thee, seems as if he were to do it himself, and not another: and went up unto mount Sinai, as the Lord had commanded him; which was the third time of his going there, and every time he continued 40 days and 40 nights, as Aben Ezra observes, see Deut. ix. 18, 25: and took in his hand the two tables of stone; which could not be very thick and heavy to carry in one hand up a mountain, but must be a sort of marble slab or slate: at this same time an ark was ordered to be made, and was made, to put the tables into, which was a type of Christ, the fulfilling end of the law for righteousness, Deut. x. 1—5.

℣. 5. And the Lord descended in the cloud, &c.] The same with the cloudy pillar, which was now gone up from the door of the tabernacle, and was on high in the air over the mount, and on which the Lord now descended in it, as he had before, ch. xix. 9, 16, 18: and stood with him there; not Moses stood with the Lord, as the Vulgate Latin version; but the Lord, or the cloud in which the Lord was, stood near to Moses: and proclaimed the name of the Lord; Jehovah declared with a loud voice out of the cloud, that the Lord was there; the Targum of Jonathan is, "and Moses called on "or in the name of the Word of the Lord;" and so the Vulgate Latin version refers it to Moses, and renders the words, calling on the name of the Lord; but the following verse clearly shows, that it must be understood of the Lord, and not of Moses.

℣. 6. And the Lord passed by before him, &c.] Or caused his Shekinah, his divine majesty, and the glory of it, to pass before him, as the Targums; his glory and goodness, which he had promised should pass before him, ch. xxxiii. 19, 22. and it is but a transient, passing view the greatest of men, God's peculiar favourites, have of him in this life: and proclaimed, the Lord, the Lord God; the Jerusalem Targum very wrongly paraphrases the words as a prayer of Moses, thus, and Moses prayed, and said, O Lord, Lord; and so the Vulgate Latin version; but it is quite clear, and beyond all doubt, from Numb. xiv. 17, 18. that what follow are the words of God, and not of Moses: the sense is, that the Lord, as he passed by Moses, to raise and fix his attention, declared it was Jehovah that passed by; which is repeated the more to excite his attention, and is the name by which he had made himself known to Moses, even when he sent him into Egypt; for I am that I am is an explanation of this name, see Exod. iii. 14. and the word El, translated God, signifies mighty and powerful, and is true of all the three divine persons, to whom respect may be had in the use of these three words. What is proclaimed or declared concerning God is, that he is merciful and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth; first merciful, and he is so in the most tender and affectionate manner; he is rich and plenteous in mercy, freely giving it, delights in bestowing it, constantly shews it to his people; it is manifested and displayed in Christ, the mercy-seat; and it lays a foundation for faith and hope, and is the spring of all good things in time, and to eternity: and he is also gracious, good and kind to men, without any merit or desert of theirs, but bestows good things on them freely, of his own free grace, favour and good-will, as appears by various acts of his; in the eternal choice of them to everlasting happiness; in providing a Saviour for them, and giving all grace and spiritual blessings to them in him; by giving Christ to them, and for them, justifying them freely by his righteousness, pardoning their sins according to the riches of his grace, regenerating, calling, preserving and saving them by it: likewise long-suffering; both towards wicked men, the vessels of wrath, by whom his patience and long-suffering are abused and despised; and towards his elect, on whom he waits to be gracious, not willing that any of them should perish, but all be brought to repentance; and his long-suffering is their salvation: and it follows, abundant in goodness and truth; in providential goodness to all men; in special goodness to his chosen people, which he has laid up, and wrought out for them, and shewn them in Christ; in his truth and faithfulness, in fulfilling his promises, both with respect to the mission of his Son into the world, to be the Saviour of it, and with respect to all other things promised, whether relating to this life, or that to come, to grace or glory; he never suffers his truth and faithfulness to fail; his promises are all yea and amen in Christ.

℣. 7. Keeping mercy for thousands, &c.] In his own heart, in his purposes and decrees, in his counsels ſels and covenant, in his Son, with whom he keeps it for ever, and for all in him, Pſ. lxxxix. 28. and they are many who are ordained to eternal life, for whom Chriſt gave his life a ranſom, and for whom his blood was ſhed for the remiſſion of their ſins; and whom he juſtifies by his knowledge, and at laſt brings to glory as the great captain of their ſalvation; theſe are even a number which no man can number. All the Targums render it to a thouſand generations; and Jarchi interprets it of two thouſand generations. The firſt letter in the word, rendered keeping, is longer than is uſual, in the Hebrew text; which, according to the Jews [h], denotes the largeneſs of the grace of God, its great extent and long continuance: forgiving iniquity, and tranſgreſſion, and ſin; the word uſed ſignifies a lifting it up, and taking it away: thus Jehovah has taken it from the ſinner, and put it on his Son, who has borne it, and made ſatisfaction for it; and in ſo doing has taken it quite away, ſo as to be ſeen no more; and through the application of his blood to the conſcience of a ſinner, it is taken away from thence, and removed as far as the eaſt is from the weſt; from whence it appears, that it is in Chriſt, and for his ſake, that God forgives ſin, even thro' his blood, righteouſneſs, ſacrifice and ſatisfaction; and this forgiveneſs is of all ſin, of all ſorts of ſin, original or actual, greater or leſſer, public or private, open or ſecret, of omiſſion or commiſſion, of heart, lip and life. The Jews ſometimes diſtinguiſh theſe three words; iniquity, they ſay, ſignifies ſins through pride and preſumption; tranſgreſſion, intends rebellions againſt God; and ſin, what is committed through error and miſtake [i]; and much to this ſenſe is Jarchi's interpretation of theſe words; they no doubt include all manner of ſin, which God for Chriſt's ſake forgives: and will by no means clear the guilty; without a full and proper ſatisfaction to juſtice; which is provided in Chriſt, whom God has ſet forth to be the propitiation for ſin, to declare his righteouſneſs, that he might appear to be juſt, whilſt he juſtifies and pardons thoſe that believe in Jeſus; otherwiſe all the world are guilty before God, and none would be cleared; but thoſe for whom ſatisfaction is made, and a righteouſneſs wrought out, they are cleared, acquitted and diſcharged, and they only: or tho' he will by no means let it go unpuniſhed [k]; that is, ſin, expreſſed by the ſeveral words preceding; and ſo to this purpoſe is this phraſe tranſlated in Jer. xxx. 11. and the meaning is, that though God pardons ſin, all manner of ſin, and ſo diſplays his grace and mercy, yet he takes care of the honour of his juſtice, and never ſuffers any ſin to go unpuniſhed, either on the ſinner, or on the ſurety. Pardon of ſin always proceeds upon the redemption that is through the blood of Chriſt, and is a branch of it, ſee Rom. iii. 24, 25, 26. Eph. i. 7. Some underſtand theſe words as relating not to the juſtice, but to the mercy and goodneſs of God; and render the words, either in extirpating he will not extirpate, as Maimonides [l]; and as Jonathan tranſlates the ſame phraſe in Jer. xxx. 11. in deſtroying I will not deſtroy; and ſo De Dieu here, in emptying he will not empty, or deſtroy; and this ſenſe is thought to be moſt agreeable to the prayer of Moſes, and the promiſe of God, that his goodneſs and glory ſhould paſs before him, to which the other ſenſe ſeems contrary; but the juſtice of God is as much his glory, and in it lies his goodneſs, as well as his grace and mercy; beſides, the following words cannot be thought to be ſo expreſſive of the grace, and mercy, and goodneſs of God, but of his punitive juſtice, and ſo the objection would ſtill remain: viſiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the childrens children, unto the third, and to the fourth generation; ſee the note on ch. xx. 5.

[f] אל מול ההר ההוא πλησιον του ορους, Sept. prope montem illum, Noldius, p. 80.

[g] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 6. p. 19.

℣. 8. And Moſes made haſte, &c.] Perceiving the voice ceaſed, and the Lord was paſſing on, leſt he ſhould be gone, and he loſe the favourable opportunity he had: and bowed his head toward the earth, and worſhipped; threw himſelf proſtrate upon it, and in the moſt humble manner put up his requeſts to God, which are expreſſed in the following verſe; he gladly laid hold on this opportunity to uſe his intereſt with God for the people of Iſrael, and to improve the proclamation of grace and mercy in the forgiveneſs of ſins, now made; which encouraged his faith and hope to draw nigh with a holy boldneſs, and uſe freedom with him, and yet with an awe of his majeſty, with reverence and godly fear.

℣. 9. And he ſaid, if now I have found grace in thy ſight, &c.] Or ſeeing now, for he could have no doubt upon his mind, but that he had found grace and favour in the ſight of God, ſince he had cauſed his goodneſs and glory to paſs before him, and made ſuch a proclamation of his grace and mercy to him; but he takes it for granted, and improves it, and argues upon it, as follows: O Lord, let my Lord, I pray thee, go amongſt us; as the Lord had ſignified as if he would not go among them, but leave them to the conduct of a created angel; and Moſes had before prayed, that his preſence or face might go with them, ch. xxxiii. 3, 14. and now having ſome freſh tokens of the favour and goodwill of God towards him, renews his requeſt with great earneſtneſs and importunity, intreating the Lord Jehovah the Father, that Moſes's Lord Jehovah the Son, the angel of God's preſence, in whom his name was, might go with them, as he had ſaid he ſhould: for it is a ſtiff-necked people; and therefore have need of ſuch an one to be with them, to rule and govern them, to reſtrain and keep them within due bounds; or though [m] it is a ſtiff-necked people; for this is the reaſon given by the Lord why he would not go among them, ch. xxxiii. 3. wherefore Moſes prays that he would go notwithſtanding this; he owns the character of them was juſt, yet humbly prays that God would nevertheleſs vouchſafe his preſence: and pardon our iniquity, and our ſin; which he had the greater reaſon to hope he would, ſince he had juſt proclaimed his name, a God pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin; and the more to gain his ſuit, makes himſelf a party concerned, calling the ſin committed, our iniquity, and our ſin; even his among the reſt, who had found grace in the ſight of God, and therefore intreats others might alſo, ſince they were all ſinners, and there was forgiveneſs with him: and take us for thine inheritance; to poſſeſs and enjoy, protect and defend, cultivate and improve, keep and preſerve for ever.

℣. 10. And he ſaid, behold, I will make a covenant, &c.] Or renew the covenant before made the [h] Vid. Buxtorf. Tiberiad. c. 14. p. 38.

[i] Moreh Nevochim, par. 1. c. 54.
[k] נקה לא ינקה at impunita minime dimittens, Tigurine verſion; & non exercens impunitatem, Coccei Lexic. in voce נקה.
[l] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Yoma, c. 4. §. 2. Abendana.
[m] Quamvis, Piſcator, Patrick; ſo R. Marinus in Aben Ezra; and ſome in the people had broke; which on his part was, that he would, as Moſes had entreated, forgive the ſin of the people, go along with them, and introduce them into the land of Canaan, and drive out the inhabitants of it before them; and on their part, that they ſhould avoid idolatry, and every thing that led unto it, particularly making covenants, and entering into alliances with the idolatrous nations caſt out: before all thy people I will do marvels, ſuch as have not been done in all the earth, nor in any nation; both in their paſſage through the wilderneſs, and entrance into Canaan's land, and the conqueſt of that; ſuch as the earth opening its mouth and ſwallowing alive Korah, Dathan and Abiram, and was a new thing God created; the ſmiting of the rock at Kadeſh, from whence flowed waters abundantly; the healing of ſuch as were bit by fiery ſerpents through looking at a ſerpent of braſs; Balaam's aſs ſpeaking, and reproving the madneſs of the prophet; the diviſion of the waters of Jordan; the fall of the walls of Jericho at the ſound of rams horns; the ſun and moon ſtanding ſtill, until the Lord had avenged himſelf of his enemies: and all the people among which thou art, ſhall ſee the work of the Lord; for it ſhould be viſible, as the above things were, and plainly appear to be the Lord's doing, and not man's, being above the power of any created being to perform: for it is a terrible thing that I will do with thee; Aben Ezra reſtrains this to Moſes's perſon, and interprets this of the wonderful ſhining of the ſkin of his face, when he came down from the mount, which made the children of Iſrael afraid to come nigh him; and of his vigorous conſtitution at the time of his death, when his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated, contrary to the nature of ancient perſons: but it is better to underſtand it of the miniſtry of Moſes, and of the awful things that God would do by him; or rather of the people of Iſrael, among whom, and for whoſe ſake God would do ſuch things as ſhould cauſe a panic among the nations all around them; particularly what he did for them to Og king of Baſhan, and Sihon king of the Amorites, on account of which terror fell, as on the king of Moab, ſo on the inhabitants of Canaan; ſee Numb. xxi. 33, 34, 35. and xxii. 3. Joſh. ii. 9, 10, 11.

℣. 11. Obſerve thou that which I command thee this day, &c.] Which words are either ſaid to Moſes perſonally, as Aben Ezra thinks, as a direction to him to obſerve what had been ſaid to him, and declare them to the children of Iſrael; or rather to the children of Iſrael, and reſpect the commands which are afterwards delivered out to be obſerved by them in the following verſes; and what is expreſſed in the next clauſe, is ſuch as was not done by the miniſtry of Moſes, nor in his time: behold, I drive out before thee; not before Moſes, but the people of Iſrael, the Amorite, and the Canaanite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Hivite, and the Jebuſite; ſix nations are only mentioned, though there were ſeven, the Gergaſites being omitted, becauſe either they left the land before, as ſome think, or becauſe they at once ſubmitted; they are added in the Septuagint verſion.

℣. 12. Take heed to thyſelf, &c.] This is ſaid not to Moſes, but to the people of Iſrael, as a caution to them when they ſhould enter the land of Canaan, and poſſeſs it: leſt thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land whither thou goeſt; enter into a league and alliance, to live friendly and amicably, and ſupport and aſſiſt each other againſt the common enemy; whereas they were to ſmite the ſeven nations and deſtroy them, and ſhew them no mercy, Deut. vii. 1, 2. leſt it be for a ſnare in the midſt of thee; be the means of drawing them into the ſame ſinful practices with themſelves, eſpecially into idolatrous ones, and ſo of bringing ruin and deſtruction on them.

℣. 13. But ye ſhall deſtroy their altars, &c.] On which they had ſacrificed to their idols; ſince, if they were allowed to continue, they might be temptations to offer ſacrifice thereon, contrary to the command of God: break their images; of gold or ſilver, wood or ſtone, which they made for themſelves, and worſhipped as deities; ſeeing if theſe continued, the ſight of them might lead to the worſhip of them, and ſo bring under the divine diſpleaſure, as a breach of the command of God given them: and cut down their groves; which were cluſters of trees, where they had their temples and their idols, and did ſervice to them, and where, beſides idolatry, many impurities were committed. Such places were originally uſed by good men for devotion, being ſhady and ſolitary, but when abuſed to ſuperſtitious and idolatrous uſes, were forbidden. It is ſaid [n], the word for grove is general, and includes every tree they ſerve, or plant, for an idol.

℣. 14. For thou ſhalt worſhip no other god, &c.] Than the Lord their God, the one only living and true God, which was the firſt command given to the people of Iſrael, and binding upon all men: for the Lord whoſe name is Jealous, is a jealous God; his name and nature anſwer to one another; he admits of no rival or competitor in worſhip; he will not give his glory to another god, or one ſo called, nor his praiſe to graven images; and in this he is diſtinguiſhed from all nominal and fictitious gods, who have many joined with them, and are rivals of them, which gives them no concern, becauſe inſenſible; but it is otherwiſe with the Lord, who knows the diſhonour done him, and reſents it, and is as jealous of any worſhip being given to another, as the huſband is of the honour of his marriage-bed; for idolatry is ſpiritual adultery, as is ſuggeſted in the following verſe.

℣. 15. Leſt thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, &c.] A marriage-covenant, taking their daughters in marriage to their ſons, and vice verſa, as the following words ſhew; here the caution is to be underſtood and the words ſupplied from ℣. 12. and inſerted and connected thus, take heed to thyſelf, leſt thou make, &c. and they go a whoring after their gods; that is, the inhabitants of the land, and particularly thoſe with whom the Iſraelites made a covenant, and entered into a marriage-relation with, and perhaps, on this condition, that they would abſtain from idolatry; and yet, contrary to the obligation they laid themſelves under, luſt after their idols, and commit ſpiritual fornication or adultery with them, which is explained by the next clauſe: and do ſacrifice unto their gods; ſuch as the firſt inſtitutors of their idolatry enjoined, and their anceſtors had obſerved, and were according to the rites and cuſtoms of of the country: and one call thee, and thou eat of his ſacrifice; invite to eat of what remained, that was offered to the idol: hence it appears, that having feaſts at ſacrifices, and eating things offered to idols in a feſtival way, are very ancient practices; ſee 1 Cor. x. 27, 28.

℣. 16. And thou take of their daughters unto thy ſons, &c.] That is, marry them to them, which explains what is meant by making a covenant with them, them, entering into such a near relation, and joining families, and thus intermixing with one another: and their daughters go a whoring after their gods; the worship of whom they have been trained up in from their infancy, and therefore hanker after them, and commit whoredom in a spiritual sense with them: and make thy sons go a whoring after their gods; be the means of tempting and drawing them into idolatrous practices, as the wives of Solomon were a snare to him.

[n] R. Sol. Urbin. Ohel Moed, fol. 72. 1.

℣. 17. Thou shalt make thee no molten gods.] Made of a melted liquor, whether gold or silver, or brass, poured into a mould; and though graven images are not mentioned, they are included, a part being put for the whole, as appears not only from the injunction to break images in general whether graven or molten, ℣. 13. but from the second command, which expressly forbids the making and worshipping of them; but molten ones are particularly mentioned, because it is probable they were chiefly such the Canaanites worshipped, and especially, because the calf the Israelites had lately made and worshipped was a molten one.

℣. 18. The feast of unleavened bread shalt thou keep, &c.] Which was instituted at the time of their coming out of Egypt, and on that account, and then observed, ch. xii. 15, 18, 19. and xiii. 6, 7. and afterwards repeated, and the month expressed in which they were to keep it, and the reason of it, as it here follows, ch. xxiii. 15. see the note there.

℣. 19. All that openeth the matrix is mine, &c.] Or the womb, and therefore to be sanctified, and set apart for his use: this also was declared, and the law concerning it given, at the time of their coming out of Egypt, and here repeated, see the notes on ch. xiii. 2, 12.

℣. 20. Every firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem, &c.] This goes along with the former, ch. xiii. 13. see the note there: and none shall appear before me empty; at the grand festivals, the passover pentecost, and tabernacles, see the note on ch. xxiii. 15.

℣. 21. Six days shalt thou work, but on the seventh day thou shalt rest, &c.] This is the law of the seventh-day-sabbath, which is after repeated to fix it in the minds and memories of the people, see ch. xx. 10. and xxiii. 12. and xxxi. 15. and here it is added, which has not been mentioned before: in earing and in harvest thou shalt rest; that is, in the time of plowing, and in the time of reaping and gathering in the harvest, which are both very busy seasons; the rest of the sabbath was not to be violated; such sort of works, though they might require haste and expedition, yet the sabbath was not to be broken on account of them: this is the common sense of the law, as it is understood; but Maimonides [o] gives another sense from their doctors, who say, it is forbidden to plow in the sixth year what cannot be reaped but in the seventh; and so likewise that it is forbidden to reap on the seventh year, that of which profit may be had on the eighth year, and this is founded on what the scripture says, Exod. xxxiv. 21. in earing, &c. and they say, that here plowing and harvest are not to be understood of the seventh day, because this is included in the general rule, thou shalt not do any work — they say, of that which is plowed, whose reaping or harvest is forbidden, is the plowing at the evening of the seventh year, and at the going out of the seventh; and know this, that the evening of the seventh is the sixth year, and the going out of the seventh is the eighth year; and so Jarchi on the text observes, that some of their Rabbins say, this is to be understood of the plowing of the seventh year; the seventh year entering, and the harvest of the seventh year, at the going out of it; so that as there is a seventh day of rest, there is a year in which plowing and harvest are forbidden; but there are others, he says, who say, the text speaks only of the sabbath.

℣. 22. And thou shalt observe the feast of weeks; &c.] The feast of pentecost, called the feast of weeks, because seven sabbaths or weeks, or fifty days, were to be reckoned from the day in the passover feast, on which the sheaf of the wave-offering was brought, Lev. xxiii. 15, 16. and which was also called the feast of the first-fruits of wheat-harvest, to distinguish it from the barley-harvest, at the time of the passover, when a sheaf of barley was the wave offering to the Lord; but at this two loaves or cakes of fine wheaten flour were brought as the first-fruits of the wheat-harvest, see Lev. xxiii. 17. and the feast of in gathering at the year's end; which was the feast of tabernacles, called the feast of in-gathering, because at this time all the fruits of the earth, the corn, wine, and oil, and all others were gathered in; and this was at the close of the old year, and at the beginning of the new, according to the antient account, which made Tisri or September the first month in the year; see the note on ch. xxiii. 16.

℣. 23. Thrice in the year shall all your men-children appear before the Lord God, &c.] At the three above-mentioned feasts, see the note on ch. xxiii. 17. here it is added, the God of Israel; who had chosen them to be his special people, had redeemed them out of Egypt, and done great things for them since; had made a covenant with them, and had now renewed that covenant with them, and was their covenant-God, and they his people, and so were under great obligations to present themselves unto him at the times appointed by him.

℣. 24. For I will cast out the nations before thee; &c.] Who are particularly mentioned, ℣. 11. and therefore they need not be in any fear of them, when they should go up to the appointed place, and appear before the Lord; for to this they were not obliged, until they were come into the land of Canaan, and the inhabitants driven out before them: and enlarge thy borders; so that as they should have no enemies within them, to hinder and molest them, or discourage and deter them from attendance on the Lord at such set times, so they would be set at a great distance from them, that they should have nothing to fear from them; and should it be objected that at such times, when only women and children were left at home, and their borders were defenceless, it would be a proper opportunity for their enemies to invade them, it is further promised: neither shall any man desire thy land; tho' it is a desirable land; and their neighbours, and especially the old inhabitants of it, envied the happiness of the Israelites, and could not but wish it was in their possession; yet God, who has the hearts of all men in his hands, and can direct their thoughts, and turn the inclinations of their minds, and influence their affections, and engage them with other objects, promises that they should not think of an invasion of them, or have their minds, and the desires and affections of their hearts, in the least turned that way at these seasons, whatever they might have at other times; even when thou shalt go up to appear before the Lord thy God thrice in a year; year; at the feasts before-mentioned, which was a most wonderful display of the power and providence of God.

[o] In Misn. Shevüith, c. 1. §. 1.

℣. 25. Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leaven, &c.] That is, not kill the passover, whilst there was any leaven in their houses; so the Targum of Jonathan, see the note on ch. xxiii. 18. neither shall the sacrifice of the feast of passover be left unto the morning; neither any of the flesh, nor of the fat of the passover-lamb; if any were left, it was to be burnt, see ch. xii. 10. and xxiii. 18.

℣. 26. The first of the first-fruits of thy land thou shalt bring, &c.] This and another law in this verse, concerning not seething a kid in his mother's milk, are repeated from ch. xxiii. 19. see the notes there.

℣. 27. And the Lord said unto Moses, &c.] Being still with him on the mount: write thou these words; expressed in the preceding verses, from ℣. 11. to this, as he before had written in a book all those laws, contained in ch. xxi. xxii. xxiii. called the book of the covenant, ch. xxiv. 4, 7. and which perhaps might be destroyed, as well as the two tables were broken; and therefore upon the renewal of the covenant here, there is a repetition made of the principal laws before given, which are ordered also to be written in a book, which may very well be called by the same name, since it follows: for after the tenor of these words, I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel; with Moses, as their representative and mediator, and with them represented by him: what is above related, carries in it the form of a covenant between them, God having declared on his part, what he would do for them, and what laws and rules he required to be observed on their part; which Moses assented to in their name, and was ordered to write them down, that he might repeat them to them.

℣. 28. And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights, &c.] These were other forty days and nights, besides those he had been with the Lord, when he came down and broke the two tables in his hand, on sight of the idolatry of the people; yea, not only the Jewish writers think, that he was on the mount three times forty days and forty nights, but also several learned christian writers, as doctor Lightfoot [p] and others; and it seems plain, that he went up to the mountain three times, ch. xxiv. 15. and xxxii. 30. and xxxiv. 4. and it is not improbable that he was each time so long there; about the first and third times there can be no doubt, see ch. xxiv. 18. and the text before us; and at the second time, when he went up to make reconciliation for the people, ch. xxxii. 30. he says, that he fell down before the Lord, as at the first forty days and forty nights, Deut. ix. 18. and from the 7th day of the month Sivan, the day after the giving of the law, to the tenth of Tisri, on which day he now descended, are just so many days: he did neither eat bread nor drink water; and it is very likely slept not, he being supported without either of these by the power of God; and having such nearness of communion with God, and his mind taken up with what he heard and saw, he had no thoughts of, nor desires and cravings after such things, as well as he stood in no need of them; all which must be ascribed to the miraculous interposition of God in the support of him, see the note on ch. xxiv. 18. and he wrote on the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments; not Moses, for these were tables of stone, which he could not write or engrave upon, without proper instruments, which it does not appear he had with him on the mount; but it was God that wrote them, who in ℣. 1. says he would write them, and from Deut. x. 2, 4. we are assured he did.

℣. 29. And it came to pass, when Moses came down from mount Sinai, &c.] Which was on the day of atonement, according to Jarchi, that is, the tenth of Tisri or September; and so the Jewish chronologers [q] fix his descent on this day: with the two tables of testimony in Moses's hand; the two tables he carried up, on which God had wrote the law, called the testimony, being a testification and declaration of his will to the children of Israel: when he came down from the mount, that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone, while he talked with him; the Targum of Jonathan is, "Moses "knew not that the splendor of the form of his "face was become illustrious, which he had from "the brightness of the glory of the Shekinah of the "Lord, at the time he talked with him." And this the apostle calls the glory of his countenance, 2 Cor. iii. 7. the glory of the Lord as it passed before him, when in the clift of the rock, and that degree of it he was admitted to the sight of, whilst conversing with God, during his stay on the mount 40 days and 40 nights, left a shining glory on his countenance; which whilst he was with God he could not be at all sensible of, the glory of God so infinitely surpassing that; and when he came down the mount, as he could not see his own face without a glass, so though the rays of light and glory that darted from his face were so bright and strong, that they might have been observed by him, yet his mind was so intent on what he had seen and heard, that he took no notice of them. The Vulgate Latin version renders it very wrongly, that his face was horned, which has given occasion to painters to represent him in a ridiculous manner, as having horns coming out of his forehead; though the word has the signification of an horn, and the meaning of that version, as of others, may only be, that the skin of his face darted out rays [r] like horns, such as the rays of the sun appear to be like to the eye, see Hab. iii. 4. hence Jupiter Ammon, the same with the sun, is described as having horns [s]; and so Bacchus, who is supposed to be the same with Moses, is represented as having a horned face [t]. Now this glory was left on the countenance of Moses, to shew that he had had communion with God, and that the law he brought with him was from him; and to signify the glory of it, and to command awe and reverence, and make men afraid to break it.

℣. 30. And when Aaron and all the children of Israel saw Moses, &c.] Who very probably met him at the bottom of the mount; these Israelites with Aaron were the princes, as Aben Ezra seems rightly to interpret it, and as appears from the following lowing verſe; for Moſes could not well be ſeen by the whole body of the people at once, upon his deſcent from the mount: behold, the ſkin of his face ſhone; darted out rays of light and glory all around it, much perhaps in the ſame manner as the glory about our Lord, and others, is painted by the Romaniſts: and they were afraid to come nigh him; there was ſomething ſo majeſtic and ſtriking in it; and perhaps they could not tell whether it foreboded good or evil to them; and this may ſignify, that as by the light of the law ſin is diſcovered, it fills with a ſenſe of wrath, and fear of damnation; and being the miniſtration of condemnation and death, it is terrifying and killing, tho' it has a glory in it.

[p] Works, vol. 1. p. 715, 716. [q] Seder Olam Rabba, c. 6. p. 19. [r] קרן radios ejacularetur, Tigurine version; in modum cornu radiaret, Munster, Fagius, vel radiasset, Vatablus; splendere instar cornu, Drusius; so קרן Karnon † in the Arabic language signifies the rays of the sun. [s] Vid. Diodor. Sicul. l. 3. p. 201. Macrob. Saturnal. l. 1. c. 21. [t] Diodor. Sicul. l. 4. p. 212. so Orpheus calls Bacchus, διπρωλα. Hymn. p. 126. and Horace ascribes to him, cornu decorum, Carmin. l. 2. Ode 19.

† Golius, col. 1896. Castel. col. 3455.

℣. 31. And Moſes called unto them, &c.] Who, as it appears by what follows, on ſight of him were ſo terrified, that they did not proceed on to meet him, but went back, and therefore he called unto them to return and come forward: and Aaron and all the rulers of the congregation returned unto him; knowing him by his voice, and encouraged by his call of them, who before might take him to be ſomething more than human, ſome glorious form, one of the heavenly angels appearing in this manner: and Moſes talked with them; after he had put a vail on his face, of which there is an account in the following verſes. He talked with them friendly, and told them all that had happened to him in the mount; what a glorious ſight he had been indulged with; what a proclamation of the grace and goodneſs of God had been made to him; and what laws and ordinances God had enjoined him, and them, the obſervance of.

℣. 32. And afterward all the children of Iſrael came nigh, &c.] That is, after Aaron and the rulers had had a converſation with Moſes, then the whole body of the people by turns were admitted to come before him, and hear the laws of God from him: and he gave them in commandment all that the Lord had ſpoken with him on mount Sinai; beſides the two tables of ſtone, and the teſtimony written on them, he gave them all the other commands he was ordered to write in a book, and which are recorded in this chapter; he kept back nothing from them, but enjoined them to keep all the Lord had commanded.

℣. 33. And till Moſes had done ſpeaking with them, &c.] Not when he had done, as the Septuagint verſion, for then there would have been no occaſion for it; but when he firſt began to ſpeak to Aaron and the rulers, and continued to ſpeak to the congregation until he had finiſhed what he had to ſay; even he did what follows, as ſoon as he perceived there was a glory on his face, which they could not bear to look at: he put a vail on his face; ſomething that covered it in a good meaſure, a maſk, or linen cloth, or ſome ſuch thing. The obſcurity of the law may be ſignified by this vail, both of the moral and ceremonial law; the moral law, which tho' it makes known the mind and will of God, with reſpect to what is to be done, or not done, yet not with reſpect to the affair of life and ſalvation; it makes known the one God as the object of worſhip, but gives no account of a trinity of perſons in the Godhead; no hint of God in Chriſt, nor revelation of the Son of God; no view of a Saviour, no notion of pardon; nor does it point out the righteouſneſs of Chriſt unto us; nor do we from it hear any thing of the Spirit of God, and his grace, nor of eternal life and glory: the ceremonial law, and its ordinances, did give ſome light into evangelical things, and did point out Chriſt, and the bleſſings of his grace, yet but darkly and obſcurely; they were ſhadows of good things to come, and gave ſome dark and diſtant views of them, but were not ſo much as the image of the things, and did not bring them near, and ſet them in a clear light: likewiſe this vail may be an emblem of the darkneſs of the minds of men, with reſpect to the law, and the knowledge of divine things; eſpecially of the Jews, who, as the apoſtle ſays, could not ſtedfaſtly look at the end of that which is aboliſhed; of the ceremonial law which is diſannulled, the end of which was Chriſt; he is the end for which it was made, the ſcope or mark at which it aimed, the term in which it iſſued, and in whom it had its compleat fulfilment; but this they had not a perfect view of, and could not ſtedfaſtly behold: the moral law alſo is in ſome ſenſe aboliſhed by Chriſt, as the miniſtration of Moſes, as a covenant of works, and as to the curſe and condemnation of it to thoſe that believe; and Chriſt he is the end of this, the fulfilling end of it, by conformity of nature, and obedience of life unto it, and by ſuffering the penalty of it; but ſuch was the blindneſs of the Jews, that they were ignorant of the nature of this law, of the ſpirituality and perfection of it, of its uſe to convince men of ſin, to condemn for it, but not to juſtify from it; were ignorant of the righteouſneſs of God which the law required, and of Chriſt, and of the way of life and righteouſneſs by him; and ſo of the Spirit of God, and his work, and of the myſteries of the goſpel, and of the books of the Old Teſtament; ſee 2 Cor. iii. 14, 15.

℣. 34. But when Moſes went in before the Lord to ſpeak with him, &c.] Went into the tabernacle to converſe with him, to pray unto him, and enquire about any matter of difficulty reſpecting the people of Iſrael he was concerned for, which he often did: he took the vail off until he came out; and ſo when men are truly converted, and turn to the Lord, the vail of darkneſs and unbelief is removed, and the true light ſhines, in which they ſee things in another light than they did before; and when they come into his preſence, they come with hearts opened and unvailed, all things being naked and open to him with whom they have to do; and particularly ſaints under the goſpel-diſpenſation, with an open face, as in a glaſs, behold the glory of the Lord; and when they get to heaven, they'll then ſee face to face, and know as they are known, 2 Cor. iii. 16, 18. 1 Cor. xiii. 12: and he came out, and ſpake unto the children of Iſrael, that which he was commanded; this reſpects not the preſent time of his coming down from the mount, or out of the tabernacle with the law and commands now given, for theſe he had already declared; but after-times, and all ſuch times when he went in to the Lord to enquire of him his mind and will concerning certain things, in which the people wanted information, when, upon his return, he acquainted them with whatſoever the Lord ordered to be done.

℣. 35. And the children of Iſrael ſaw the face of Moſes, that the ſkin of Moſes's face ſhone, &c.] That is, not only when he came down from the mount, but whenever he came out of the tabernacle, where he had been enquiring of God, and converſing with him: and Moſes put the vail upon his face again, until he went in to ſpeak with him; this he did from time to time, when he came out from the Lord he put on his vail, and when he went in again, he put it off. How long this brightneſs on his countenance remained, cannot be ſaid with any cer-certainty; Saadiah Gaon says, it did not remove from him to the day of his death: hence 'tis said, his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated, Deut. xxxiv. 7. and Aben Ezra seems to approve of it; and it is the opinion of many great and learned men, that it continued as long as he lived.

CHAP. XXXV.

THIS chapter begins with a renewal of the command of the sabbath, ℣. 1, 2, 3. and contains an order for a free-will offering to be brought for the service of the sanctuary, and specifies the things to be brought, and for what uses, ℣. 4—19. to which there was a ready compliance, and men and women, princes and the common people, every one according to what they had in possession, brought and offered it freely, ℣. 20—29. and for their encouragement, that their offering would not be in vain, they were informed there were two persons divinely inspired, to do, and teach to be done, all manner of work for the tabernacle, towards which they had made such a liberal and plentiful contribution, ℣. 30—35.

℣. 1. And Moses gathered all the congregation of the children of Israel together, &c.] According to Jarchi, on the morrow after the day of atonement; that is, the next day after his descent from the mount, being desirous of setting about the building of the tabernacle, and making all things appertaining to it as soon as possible; which had been retarded through the sin of the golden calf, and making reconciliation for that: and said unto them, these are the words which the Lord hath commanded, that ye should do them; namely, the law of the sabbath, as it had a peculiar relation to the making of the tabernacle, and the free-will offerings to be made on that account; for as for the ten commands, or other ordinances, whether ceremonial or judicial, the people had been made acquainted with them before.

℣. 2. Six days shall work be done, &c.] Or may be done[u]; every one might do what work he pleased, or the business of his calling, on the six days of the weeks; he had liberty granted him of God, and might make use of it for the advantage of himself and his family; unless this can be thought to have a peculiar respect, as this repetition and renewal of this law seems to have, to the building of the tabernacle; and so is an order for working at it closely and constantly all the six days of the week, and in things belonging to it, until the whole was finished: but on the seventh day there shall be to you an holy day; or holiness[w], wholly holy, and be separated and devoted to holy service and religious duties, abstaining from all manner of work, even from the work of the tabernacle; for though that was designed for the worship of God, and required dispatch, yet the sabbath was not to be violated on account of it: and as Jarchi observes, this admonition concerning the sabbath was given previous to the command of building the tabernacle; to shew that that did not drive away the sabbath, or that the sabbath was not to give way to it, or to be broken for the sake of it, it being a sabbath of rest to the Lord; in which the Israelites were to rest from bodily labour, and spend the day in the service of God, and to his honour and glory: whosoever doth work therein; even though it might be in any thing belonging to the tabernacle: shall be put to death; the Targum of Jonathan adds, by casting stones, stoning being the punishment of sabbath-breakers, Numb. xv. 35, 36.

℣. 3. Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the sabbath-day.] This law seems to be a temporary one, and not to be continued, nor is it said to be throughout their generations as elsewhere, where the law of the sabbath is given or repeated; it is to be restrained to the building of the tabernacle, and while that was about, to which it is prefaced; and it is designed to prevent all public or private working on the sabbath-day, in any thing belonging to that; having no fire to heat their tools or melt their metal, or do any thing for which that was necessary; for it can hardly be thought that this is to be taken in the strictest sense, as an entire prohibition of kindling a fire and the use of it on that day, which is so absolutely useful, and needful in various cases, and where acts of mercy and necessity require it; as in cold seasons of the year, for the warming and comforting of persons who otherwise would be unfit for religious exercises, and on the account of infants and aged persons, who could not subsist without it; and in cases of sickness, and various disorders which necessarily require it; and even for the preparation of food, which must be had on that day as on others, the sabbath being not a fast, but rather a festival, as it is with the Jews; and yet this law is interpreted by them in the most rigorous sense: they put kindling a fire among the principal works forbidden on that day[x], and that not only to bake bread and boil flesh, as Aben Ezra interprets it here, but to warm themselves with; nay, they think it unlawful to touch an hearth, or a coal of fire, or a firebrand, or any thing that may give them any warmth in a cold season; and if for the sake of infants or aged persons, there is need of a fire or heating a stow, they hire a christian to do it, or so prepare and order matters the day before that it kindle of itself[y]; and so Leo Modena[z] says, "they "do not meddle with any fire, nor touch any "wood that is on fire, nor kindle any, nor put it "out; nor do they so much as light a candle on "the sabbath-day; and if the place be cold where "they dwell, except they have any stows, or hot-"houses, or else have some one that is no Jew to "kindle a fire for them; or had so ordered the "matter before-hand that the fire should kindle of "itself at such a time; they must even be con-"tent to sit in the cold all that day:" but here they nicely distinguish and observe, that it is said, throughout your habitations; their private dwellings, but not the habitation of the Lord, or the house of the sanctuary; and on this score they allow of kindling a fire in Beth Moked[a], an apartment in the temple, where a fire was constantly kept for the priests that kept watch to warm themselves at.

℣. 4. And Moses spake unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, &c.] Continued his speech to [u] יעשה fiat, Piscator. [w] קדש sanctitas, Pagninus, Montanus, Vatablus, Drusius. [x] Misn. Sabbat, c. 7. §. 2.

[y] Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 16. p. 361. [z] History of the Rites, &c. of the Jews, par. 3. c. 1. §. 3.
[a] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 20. 1.

to them, being convened by him, after by way of preface he had repeated the law of the ſabbath, with an additional circumſtance to it, pro tempore: ſaying, this is the thing which the Lord commanded; ordered Moſes to inform them of as his will, when he was with him upon the mount the firſt time; but through their idolatry, and time ſpent in making up matters between God and them, he had not had till now an opportunity of acquainting them with it: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 5. Take ye from amongſt you an offering unto the Lord, &c.] That is, they were to take a part of their ſubſtance, of what they were poſſeſſed of, every man according to his ability, out of what he had in his hand that was ſuitable, and preſent it as a free-will offering to the Lord, for the uſe of the tabernacle to be built, and the ſervice of it: whoſoever is of a willing heart; that is, of a generous and liberal diſpoſition: let him bring it, an offering of the Lord; or an offering to him, otherwiſe not; if brought niggardly and grudgingly it would not be acceptable, for God loves a willing and chearful giver: gold, ſilver, and braſs; here and in the four following verſes, the ſeveral things are particularly mentioned, which would be wanted in building the tabernacle, and in the ſervice of it, and therefore would be acceptable; and they being exactly the ſame, and delivered in the ſame words and in the ſame order as in ch. xxv. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. the reader is referred to the notes there.

℣. 10. And every wiſe-hearted among you ſhall come, &c.] Every ingenious man, that is ſkilful in any mechanic art and buſineſs, who has a peculiar turn of mind, and employs his thoughts to improve, in a curious manner, in whatſoever manufactory he is concerned, every ſuch an one is invited by Moſes to come to him: and make all the Lord hath commanded; the particulars of which follow.

℣. 11. The tabernacle, &c.] Which is not a general name for the whole, the court, the holy place, and the holy of holies; but deſigns the ten fine linen curtains curiouſly wrought; or the under curtains, as Jarchi expreſſes it, which were within: his tent; the curtains of goats hair, which were a covering over the others, and were made for a roof of the tabernacle, as the ſame writer obſerves: and his covering; the covering for the tent, which was made of ramſkins, and badgers ſkins: his taches; which claſped, coupled the curtains together, both the one and the other; the one ſort were of ſilver, and the other of braſs: and his boards, his bars, his pillars; which were all of ſhittim-wood; the boards were the walls of the tabernacle, the bars which kept them tight together, and the pillars were thoſe on which the hanging of the door of the tent, and on which the vail that divided between the holy of holies were hung; of all which, ſee ch. xxvi. and the notes there: and his ſockets; which were of ſilver, into which the boards were let and faſtened, ſee ch. xxvi. 19, &c.

℣. 12. The ark and the ſtaves thereof, &c.] To carry it with, which were all made of ſhittim-wood: with the mercy-ſeat; made of pure gold; theſe were ſet in the moſt holy place: and the vail of the covering; which divided between the holy and the holy of holies; of theſe ſee ch. xxv. 10—22. and xxvi. 32, 33.

℣. 13. The table and his ſtaves, and all his veſſels, &c.] The table of ſhew-bread, and all things appertaining to it: and the ſhew-bread; which is mentioned for the ſake of the table, and to ſhew what was intended, and the uſe of it; for otherwiſe the ſhew-bread was not yet to be made, nor by the artificers here called together; and is to be interpreted of the diſhes of the ſhew-bread, in which it was put; and ſo Junius and Tremellius render it, the inſtruments or veſſels of the ſhew-bread; of theſe ſee ch. xxv. 23—30.

℣. 14. The candleſtick alſo for the light, and his furniture, &c.] The tongs and ſnuff-diſhes: and his lamps, with the oil for the light; the cups, in which were put the oil and the wicks to burn and give light, as Jarchi interprets them; of theſe ſee ch. xxv. 31—39.

℣. 15. And the incenſe-altar, and his ſtaves, &c.] Which were overlaid with gold; hence this altar was called the golden altar, of which ſee ch. xxx. 1—5. and the anointing oil and ſweet incenſe; each of which were made of various ſpices, ſee ch. xxx. 23—31: and the hanging for the door at the entering in of the tabernacle; at the eaſt end of it, there being there, as Jarchi obſerves, neither boards, nor curtains; ſee ch. xxvii. 16.

℣. 16. The altar of burnt-offering with his brazen grate, his ſtaves, and all his veſſels, &c.] Of which ſee ch. xxvii. 1—8. the laver and his foot; Aben Ezra here obſerves, that it had no ſtaves, and conjectures it was carried in waggons when removed.

℣. 17. The hangings of the court, &c.] Of the tabernacle, the outward court, which were of fine twined linen, a hundred cubits long on each ſide, north and ſouth, and fifty cubits broad, eaſt and weſt; ſee ch. xxvii. 9—13. his pillars, and their ſockets; the pillars were they on which the hangings were hung; and the ſockets were what the pillars were let into and faſtened in: and the hanging for the door of the court; at the eaſt of it, of which ſee ch. xxvii. 16.

℣. 18. The pins of the tabernacle, &c.] Which were to fix and faſten the ends of the curtains in the ground, that they might not be moved with the wind, as Jarchi obſerves: and the pins of the court, and their cords; which were for the ſame uſe; ſee ch. xxvii. 19.

℣. 19. The cloths of ſervice, to do ſervice in the holy place, &c.] To wrap up the various veſſels of the tabernacle, when removed from place to place; ſee ch. xxxi. 10. or the prieſts veſtments, in which they did their ſervice, and therefore it follows, by way of appoſition: the holy garments for Aaron the prieſt, and the garments of his ſons to miniſter in the prieſt's office; for which there are particular directions in ch. xxviii.

℣. 20. And all the congregation of the children of Iſrael departed from the preſence of Moſes.] After they had heard what Moſes was ordered to propoſe unto them, they immediately went to their tents, and fetched what they had with them, or were willing to part with, and brought it directly as a free-will-offering to the Lord; as the next verſe ſhews: from hence Aben Ezra obſerves, we may learn, that the whole congregation of Iſrael came to the tabernacle, company after company.

℣. 21. And they came every one whoſe heart ſtirred him up, &c.] Who felt an impulſe upon his mind, a ſtrong inclination in him: and every one whom his ſpirit made willing; or was endowed with a free and liberal ſpirit, and was heartily willing to bear a part, and chearfully contribute to this ſervice; otherwiſe the willing mind, as well as the ability, were given them of God; ſee 1 Chron. xxix. 14: and they brought the Lord's offering; an offering to him, and ſuch as he directed and diſpoſed them to bring, and which was for his worſhip and ſervice, and and the honour of his name, and was acceptable to him: to the work of the tabernacle of the congregation; for the making of that, the several parts of it, and all things in it: and for all his service; either the service of God, or of his tabernacle, which is the same: and for the holy garments; that is, of Aaron and his sons.

℣. 22. And they came both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, &c.] And none else were asked to come; and this supposes, that as there were many of both sexes that were quite cordial, and heartily willing to contribute to the uttermost of what they had for this service, so there were others that were not: and brought bracelets, and ear-rings, and rings, and tablets; the first of these, according to our version, seem to be ornaments, not about the neck, but the hands and arms, or wrists, see Gen. xxiv. 22, 30. though the word seems to have the signification of an hook, and may mean buckles or clasps, with which some part of their garments were coupled and fastened; so Kimchi says [b], that in his opinion it was an ornament somewhat like a needle, with which they pierced and joined the two parts of the collar of a shirt under the throat: the next are such ornaments as were worn in the ears, and though many had been given for the making of the golden calf, yet not all; there were many that did not give their ear-rings for this service, especially the women, perhaps only the men, see ch. xxxii. 2, 3. the rings were such as were worn on the finger, as all seem to agree; but what the tablets were is hard to say, the word being only used in this place: some take them for ornaments worn on the right arm; others for the covering of another part, not to be named; others for girdles or aprons; Aben Ezra gives a different account of most of them; he says the first design ornaments in the ear, or ear-rings; the second such as were worn in the nose, or nose-jewels; and the third indeed such as were put on the finger; and the fourth, that were upon the arm: however, they were all jewels of gold; or were all such ornaments as were made of gold; and these are first mentioned, as being probably first brought, and were what were asked for in the first place, gold being wanted for several things: and every man that offered, offered an offering of gold unto the Lord; that is, every one of the first company that came, their offering was of gold, or something made of gold.

℣. 23. And every man with whom was found blue, and purple, and scarlet, &c.] Wool or yarn of either of the colours; unless it can be supposed, there might be with some of them the ingredients with which colours were made, brought with them out of Egypt: and fine linen; they had brought out of Egypt, and for which that country was famous: and goats hair; which in those countries was so long as to be shorn like the wool of sheep: and red skins of the rams; dyed red, for it does not mean any that were naturally so, of which none are known: and badgers skins; see ch. xxv. 5. of each of these, such who had them in their possession, and their hearts were willing to part with them: brought them; to Moses, to the tabernacle or tent where he was.

℣. 24. Every one that did offer an offering of silver and brass, brought the Lord's offering, &c.] Every one that had any quantity of either of these, whose heart was inclined freely to part therewith, brought it as a free-will offering to the Lord: and every man with whom was shittim-wood; or acacia, a sort of wood which grew pretty plentifully in those parts; and such who had cut it down for some use or another, and were disposed to part with it for any work of the service; of which many things were to be made, whether they were trees they had felled, or planks and boards they had cut them into: brought it; a sufficient quantity of it, for the various uses it was to be put unto.

℣. 25. And all the women that were wise-hearted, &c.] That were ingenious, and had a good hand at spinning particularly, these were of the common and lower sort; the more honourable and richer sort of women are before mentioned, as bringing jewels or ornaments of gold of different sorts: but these were such who did spin with their hands; in which way they got their living; some were more dextrous at it than others: and brought that which they had spun, both of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine linen; that is, yarn of these several colours, and flaxen thread, of which fine linen was made, all ready for the weaver, whether in woollen or linen.

℣. 26. And all the women whose hearts stirred them up in wisdom, &c.] To be ingenious in their business, and to study to do it in a curious manner, and to do that which others could not: spun goats hair; some join the phrase, in wisdom, in the preceding clause with this, neglecting the accent Athnach, which divides them, thus, in wisdom spun goats hair; and which without being separated from the preceding clause, may be understood and repeated in this: for, as Aben Ezra says, to spin goats hair was an art that required excellent wisdom; and so Jarchi: in the eastern countries there is a sort of goats hair very bright and fine, and hangs to the ground, and the beauty of it is equal almost to that of silk, and is never sheared, but combed off, and the women of the country spin it; and at this day a great trade is driven with it at Angora and Aleppo.

℣. 27. And the rulers brought onyx-stones, and stones to be set, &c.] Or stones of fillings [c], to be set in ouches, and fill them up, as stones set in rings do: for the ephod, and for the breast-plate; the onyx-stones were for the shoulder-pieces of the ephod; and the other stones were for the breast-plate of judgment, and both to be borne by the high priest, for a memorial of the children of Israel before the Lord, whose names were engraven on these stones: the rulers are mentioned last, as bringing their offerings: the reason of which may not be, because they were backward to it, for they might offer earlier, though recorded last; or if they offered last, it might be because they brought things that others could not; namely, the precious stones here mentioned, and other things in the next verse, the common people had not; though some of the Jewish writers tax them with dilatoriness, and observe a letter wanting in the word for rulers, it generally has; omitted to denote, as they think, that they were slow and backward in offering; so Jarchi notes from R. Nathan.

℣. 28. And spice and oil, &c.] Such excellent spices and precious oil, pure oil olive, as the common people had not, and which they brought out of Egypt; the one was for the light; for the light of the candlestick only; the oil, and other spices were for the anointing oil, and for the sweet incense; the spices for the former were pure myrrh, sweet cinamon, sweet calamus and cassia; and for the latter, ter, ſtacte, onycha, galbanum, with pure frankincenſe.

2

[b] Sepher Shoras. rad. חרז. [c] Calmet in the word hair. אבני המלאים lapides plenitudinum, Pagninus, Montanus; repletionum, Vatablus; impletionum, Drusius.

℣. 29. The children of Iſrael brought a willing offering unto the Lord, &c.] What they did, whether more or leſs, they did it chearfully and willingly, as to the Lord, for his ſervice and glory: every man and woman, whoſe heart made them willing to bring for all manner of work, which the Lord had commanded to be done by the hand of Moſes; ſee the note on ℣. 21. and as there were work and ſervice of God's appointment to be done in the legal tabernacle, ſo there are in the goſpel-church; ſuch as prayer, praiſe, preaching, and hearing the word, and the adminiſtration of ordinances; and for the ſupport of which contributions are made; and all this is to be done willingly and cordially: the goſpel is to be preached not by conſtraint but willingly, not for filthy lucre-ſake, but of a ready mind; the word is to be heard and received with all readineſs, and ordinances are to be ſubmitted to chearfully, and with the whole heart; and the contributions made for the poor, and the ſupport of divine ſervice, are to be generous and bountiful: and thoſe who have ſuch a willing heart and ſpirit, have it not by nature or of themſelves, but from the efficacious grace of God, which makes them a willing people in the day of his power; and from the free Spirit of God, who works in them both to will and to do of his good pleaſure; and from the love of God and Chriſt conſtraining them to it: and theſe act according to their ſeveral abilities, ſome have more grace and greater gifts, and others leſſer and meaner; as well as ſome have more of this world's goods than others, and ſo capable of doing more ſervice; but all, according to their capacity, of every ſex and claſs are to contribute all they can freely and willingly, to the carrying on of the cauſe of God and intereſt of religion: ſome bring gold, and ſome goats hair, ſome ſilver, and ſome braſs, &c. but all being offered willingly, from right principles, and with right views, is acceptable.

℣. 30. And Moſes ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] After they had brought their ſeveral free-will-offerings: ſee; obſerve, take notice of this, for your encouragement, that your ſervice will not be in vain, for want of proper perſons to perform this work, and to guide, direct, and overſee it: the Lord hath called by name Bezaleel, the ſon of Uri, the ſon of Hur, of the tribe of Judah; of this man, and of his deſcent, ſee the note on ch. xxxi. 2.

℣. 31. And he hath filled him with the Spirit of God, &c.] This and the two following verſes contain the account of the qualifications of Bezaleel, which he had in an extraordinary manner from the Lord, and theſe are expreſſed in the ſame words as in ch. xxxi. 3, 4, 5. wherefore ſee the notes there.

℣. 34. And he hath put in his heart that he may teach, &c.] Inſtruct others in the things he had knowledge of; the Lord not only gave him gifts of wiſdom, underſtanding, and knowledge, to deviſe and contrive curious works, and how to perform them, but gave him a capacity, and inclined his mind to teach others how to work theſe works; for not all that have knowledge, have a capacity and a will to teach others alſo; this is of God: both he and Aholiab the ſon of Ahiſamach of the tribe of Dan; who was joined with him as a companion and aſſiſtant in the ſame ſervice; him the Lord alſo qualified, both to deviſe things, and to teach them others; of this man ſee the note on ch. xxxi. 6.

℣. 35. Them hath he filled with wiſdom of heart, &c.] Or wiſdom in their heart, a large meaſure of it, ſignified by their being filled with it; and whatever wiſdom men have, whether in things natural, civil, moral, or ſpiritual, it is all of God: this was to work all manner of work, of the engraver; which the ſetting of ſtones in the ephod or breaſt-plate required: and of the cunning workman; and ſuch an one was neceſſary for the making the curtains of the tabernacle, the vail between the holy and the holy of holies, and the ephod and breaſt-plate of the high-prieſt: and of the embroiderer, in blue, and in purple, in ſcarlet, and in fine linen; in which there were various works of things belonging to the tabernacle, and perſons employed in it: and of the weaver; both in linen and woolen, for the curtains and hangings of the tabernacle, and for the prieſts garments: even of thoſe that do any work, and of thoſe that deviſe cunning work; whether in the above things, or in any ſort of curious work, in gold, ſilver, braſs, wood, or ſtone.

CHAP. XXXVI.

BEZALEEL and Aholiab, with the artificers under them, having a call as well as qualifications for the ſervice of the ſanctuary, and having received from Moſes the materials for it, ſet about it, ℣. 1—3. but the people bringing more than was neceſſary, they acquaint Moſes with it, who by a proclamation reſtrained from it, ℣. 4—7. and next an account is given of the ſeveral things that were wrought by them, as firſt the curtains for the tabernacle, both of linen and goat's hair, and the coverings of them, ℣. 8—19. next the boards for the tabernacle, and the ſockets they were ſet in, and the bars for the boards, ℣. 20—34. and then the vail which parted the moſt holy place from the holy place, and the hanging which divided between the holy place and the court, ℣. 35—38.

℣. 1. Then wrought Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wiſe-hearted man, &c.] Or every ingenious artificer under them: when they began to work is not preciſely ſaid, but it is very probable, they ſet about it directly, as ſoon as they were furniſhed with materials for it; nor is it ſaid where they wrought; it is very likely there was a particular place, where they were ranged according to their reſpective manufactories, and where they did their work under the inſpection, and by the direction of theſe two men: in whom the Lord put wiſdom and underſtanding, to know how to work all manner of work, for the ſervice of the ſanctuary, according to all that the Lord had commanded; for as all the wiſdom and underſtanding which Bezaleel and Aholiab had for the building of the tabernacle, and making every thing appertaining to it, and for inſtructing others to do the ſame, were from the Lord; ſo all the wiſdom, underſtanding and capacity in the artificers to learn of them, and work according to their directions, were alſo from him; who in a very extraordinary manner enlarged their faculties, and increaſed their natural abilities, to take in what was ſuggeſted to them, and perform their work exactly agreeable thereunto.

℣. 2. And Moſes called Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wiſe-hearted man, &c.] It was not enough that they had qualifications for this work, but they muſt have a call to it from Moſes, to whom the whole affair was committed, to ſee that it was done according to the pattern ſhown him in the mount; ſo all that are concerned in the public work and ſervice of the church of God, ſhould have a call unto it both from the Lord and from the church: in whoſe heart the Lord had put wiſdom, even every one whoſe heart ſtirred him up to come unto the work to do it; who had not only abilities given him of God, but a mind diſpoſed for it, a willingneſs of heart, a readineſs of ſoul for ſuch ſervice, was even eager upon it, and in haſte to be at it.

℣. 3. And they received of Moſes all the offering, &c.] That is, Bezaleel and Aholiab received it of him, who delivered it to the ſeveral workmen, as the nature of their work required, ſome one thing, and ſome another; to ſome gold, to others ſilver, to other braſs, and to ſome they delivered out fine linen, and blue, purple and ſcarlet yarn, and to others ſhittim-wood; Moſes gave all out faithfully that he received, and kept back nothing for his own uſe or private advantage, even all the above things of which the offering conſiſted: which the children of Iſrael had brought for the work of the ſervice of the ſanctuary, to make it withal; and which perhaps they went and fetched the ſame day they were called together, and acquainted with the mind of God concerning it; or at leaſt they brought it in a very ſhort ſpace of time, and as ſoon as it poſſibly could be; it was delivered to the workmen, that the work might be begun, and carried on with the utmoſt expedition: and they brought yet unto him free-offerings every morning; they continued for a courſe of time afterwards to bring their free-will offerings of one thing or another, to Moſes every morning, which perhaps was the moſt ſuitable time for him to receive them; and beſt expreſſes their readineſs and diligence in bringing them, and which, as they brought, he ſent to the workmen, as appears by what follows.

℣. 4. And all the wiſe men that wrought all the work of the ſanctuary, &c.] The ingenious artificers who were employed, ſome in one thing, and ſome in another, either on the tabernacle itſelf, or the veſſels of it, and things appertaining to it: came every man from his work which they made; left off their work by mutual conſent and agreement, and came in a body to Moſes.

℣. 5. And they ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying, &c.] One in the name of the reſt: the people bring much more than enough for the ſervice of the work, which the Lord hath commanded to make; they had taken an eſtimate of what was to be done, and of what was neceſſary for the doing of it, and of what the people brought for this ſervice; and they found there was a great deal more brought than would be wanted, and therefore they thought proper to adviſe Moſes of it, that no more might be brought: it is hard to ſay which is moſt to be wondered at, the great liberality of the people in contributing ſo freely and bountifully, and continuing to do ſo without being urged, or even aſked; or the honeſty of the workmen, one and all, who might have gone on to have received the gifts of the people by the hands of Moſes, and what was ſuperfluous might have converted to their own uſe; but inſtead of this, they agree as one man to let Moſes know how the ſtate of things was, and prevent the people from making any more contributions.

℣. 6. And Moſes gave commandment, &c.] Orders to ſome proper perſon or perſons about him: and they cauſed it to be proclaimed throughout the camp; or cauſed a voice to paſs; a crier or herald, as the Targums, who went through the camp and publiſhed in every quarter: ſaying, let neither man nor woman make any more work for the offering of the ſanctuary; as the men in cutting ſhittim-wood, and planing it, and the women in ſpinning blue, purple and ſcarlet yarn and goat's hair: ſo the people were reſtrained from bringing; that is, any more: inſtead of a ſpur to liberality, which moſt want, a reſtraint was laid upon theſe to check it, and prevent an exceſs in it, of which there is rarely any danger; ſo eager, forward and zealous were they in this good work.

℣. 7. For the ſtuff they had was ſufficient for all the work to make it, &c.] The gold, ſilver, braſs and precious ſtones, the wood and yarn, which had been already brought in, were ſufficient for every thing they were ordered to make: and too much; a great deal more than would be uſed; much would remain after all was wrought: what was done with this is not ſaid, whether it was returned to the people, or laid up for the uſe of the tabernable and ſervice, as might hereafter be wanted; which latter ſeems moſt probable.

℣. 8. And every wiſe-hearted man among them that wrought the work of the tabernacle, &c.] Did the part aſſigned him, what he was fitteſt for, and moſt ſkilful in: particularly ſome made ten curtains, &c. which were properly the tabernacle, and were made firſt, and then the ſeveral things appertaining to it; and from hence, to the end of the chapter, is only an account of the making of the tabernacle, its curtains, coverings, boards, ſockets and bars, the vail for the moſt holy place, and the hangings for the tabernacle, exactly as they are ordered to be made, ch. xxvi. ſee the notes there: and it may be obſerved, that throughout the account of the various articles, it is all along ſaid he did this and the other; either referring to Moſes, by whoſe orders they were done, or to Bezaleel, the chief director of the work, or to each and every one of the artificers ſeverally concerned.

CHAP. XXXVII.

THIS chapter continues the account of the making of the tabernacle, and the furniture of it, particularly the ark, mercy-ſeat and cherubim, ℣. 1—9. the ſhew-bread-table, and what appertained to that, ℣. 10—16. the candleſtick, and all the veſſels of it, ℣. 17—24. and the altar of incenſe, together with the anointing oil, and pure incenſe, ℣. 25—29.

℣. 1. And Bezaleel made the ark of ſhittim-wood, &c.] Jarchi ſays, becauſe he gave his mind to this work more than the reſt of the wiſe men, it is called by his name. It is a notion of ſome Jewiſh writers, that the ark was made by Bezaleel, without the help of others; but there is no ſufficient reaſon to be given for it; for other things are equally aſcribed to him in this and the folfollowing chapter, as the mercy-seat with the cherubim, the shew-bread-table, the candlestick of pure gold, the two altars, the laver of brass, with other things, which are only said to be made by him, because they were made by his direction, and he having the oversight of them whilst making; wherefore Aben Ezra observes, that this is particularly said for the glory of the ark. Of the ark, and all other things mentioned in this chapter, see the notes on ch. xxv. and xxx.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

THIS chapter is a continuation of the account of the making of the things belonging to the tabernacle, particularly the altar of burnt-offering, ℣. 1—7. the laver of brass, and the things it was made of, ℣. 8. the court and its hangings, pillars, sockets, hooks and pins, ℣. 9—20. then follows an account of the quantities of gold, silver and brass, expended in the making of the several things appertaining to the sanctuary, ℣. 21—31.

℣. 1. And he made the altar of burnt-offering, &c.] That is, Bezaleel made it, or it was made by his direction, he having the care and over-sight of it, wherefore the making of it is ascribed to him, 2 Chron. i. 5. the account of this, its horns, vessels, rings, and staves is carried on to the end of ℣. 7. of which see the notes on chap. xxvii. 1—8.

℣. 8. And he made the laver of brass, and the foot of it of brass, &c.] Not of the brass of the offering, for of that were made the brazen altar, its grate and vessels, the sockets of the court and court-gate, and the pins of the tabernacle, ℣. 29, 30, 31. but no mention is made there of the laver; for that was made as here said, of the looking-glasses of the women assembling, which assembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; tho' these are called looking-glasses, it is not to be supposed that they were made of glass as ours are; for of what use could such be in the making of a brazen laver? Some indeed chuse to read the words with the looking-glasses [d], and take the sense to be, that there were looking-glasses about the laver, affixed to it, that when the priests came to wash, they might see their spots, and the better know how to cleanse themselves from them: but it should be observed, that the priests did not come hither to wash their faces, but their hands and feet, ch. xxx. 19. and so stood in no need of looking-glasses for that purpose. The particle ב is here, as Aben Ezra observes, instead of מ, and denotes the matter of which the laver was made, and therefore these instruments to behold the face in, or those mirrors, were of brass, as both he and Philo the Jew [e] affirm; and indeed what else could they be, for a laver of brass to be made of? mirrors in former times were made of various sorts of metal polished, some of gold, some of silver, some of brass, and some of brass and tin [f]; and the Indians to this day have mirrors made of brass, well polished, and exactly represent the complexion [g]. Pliny says [h], that those of Brundusium, which were made of brass and tin mixed, were with the ancient Romans reckoned the best. Aristotle [i] speaks of mirrors of brass, and of their receiving and shewing the least touch, because the brass is smooth and polished; and so in our times, there are such as are made of polished steel, and even of burnished brass too: de la Hay [k] says, that he had one in his study, which was given him, made of brass of Damascus, and was so finely polished that no crystal one could give a truer sight of the face than that; however, it is certain, the ancients used such kind of mirrors; see Job xxxvii. 18. these the good women of Israel in their great zeal, brought for the service of the sanctuary, though they were of daily use, and peculiarly serviceable to them in their dressing; for though the word women is not in the text, it is rightly supplied, as it is in all the three Targums, the word being feminine, and as may be justified by a parallel passage, 1 Sam. ii. 22. indeed Vatablus [l] proposes another, rendering the words thus, "of the looking "glasses in great number gathered together, which "they had heaped together at the door of the ta"bernacle of the congregation;" but the word used is active and not passive, and is used of persons gathering together, and not of things gathered, as appears from the above-quoted place, and others; and these women gathered together, not for devotion and religion, to pray, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan paraphrase it, or to pray, and hear the words of the law, as Aben Ezra, much less, to bear any part in the ministry and service of the sanctuary, which as yet was not built; for this tabernacle of the congregation was no other than the tent of Moses; or however, some little tabernacle erected while the other was preparing, see ch. xxxiii. 7. hither the women crowded with their mirrours of brass for the service of the sanctuary; for the word signifies an assembling in troops like an army; and they came in great numbers and beset the door of the tent where Moses was, that he might take their offerings at their hands; not but that it will be allowed that devout women sometimes did assemble at the tabernacle and temple, to perform acts of religion and devotion; but this seems not to be the case here, nor this a time and place for it; see 1 Sam. ii. 22. Luke ii. 37.

℣. 9. And he made the court, &c.] The open court of the tabernacle, where the people met, of which, its pillars, sockets, hangings, hooks, and pins, an account is given, to the end of ℣. 20. of which see the notes on ch. xxvii. 9—19.

℣. 21. This is the sum of the tabernacle, &c.] Not of the several parts of the tabernacle, and the several things belonging to it, before enumerated, as made and delivered to the care and custody of the Levites, but of the materials of which they were made, particularly the gold, and silver, and the brass; the several sums, and weight of which are given in the following verses: even of the tabernacle of the testimony; in which the law, the testimony of the will of God was put inclosed in the ark: as it was counted, according to the commandment of Moses; when it was brought in to him by the people, and delivered by him to Bezaleel, leel, Aholiab, and the artificers: for the ſervice of the Levites; or by means of their miniſtry, who were employed in taking this account: by the hand of Ithamar, ſon to Aaron the prieſt; the youngeſt ſon of Aaron, who had the direction and overſight of this affair.

[d] במראת cum speculis, Oleaster. [e] De vita Mosis, l. 3. p. 673. [f] Vid. Doughtei Analecta Sacr excurs. 44. p. 124. [g] Agreement of customs between the East-Indians and Jews, art. 15. p. 65. [h] Nat. Hist. l. 33. c. 9. & l. 34. c. 17. [i] De Insomniis, c. 2. [k] Apud Habikhorst de mulier. Zobheoth in Thesaur. Theolog. Philolog. vol. 1. p. 321. [l] Apud Ib. p. 318.

℣. 22. And Bezaleel the ſon of Uri, the ſon of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, &c.] Of whom and his deſcent ſee ch. xxxi. 2. made all that the Lord commanded Moſes; gave directions about them, and took care that the tabernacle and all things belonging to it were made, which the Lord commanded Moſes, and in the exact manner in which they were ordered to be made.

℣. 23. And with him was Aholiab, ſon of Ahiſamach, of the tribe of Dan, &c.] Of him ſee ch. xxxi. 6. an engraver; of precious ſtones, as thoſe in the ephod, and breaſt-plate: and a cunning workman; in deviſing and working curious figured works, either in weaving or with the needle: and an embroiderer in blue, and in purple, and in ſcarlet, and in fine linen; which were uſed in the curtains and hangings of the tabernacle, and in the prieſts garments.

℣. 24. All the Gold that was occupied for the work, in all the work of the place, &c.] That was expended in making the mercy-ſeat and cherubim, and the candleſtick, which were all of pure gold; beſides other things belonging to the ark and ſhew-bread-table; and the plates, with which the ark and many other things were covered or gilded: even the gold of the offering; which the people brought and offered freely; as their bracelets, earrings, and jewels of gold, ch. xxxv. 22. was 29 talents, and 730 ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary; now as it is clear from ℣. 25, 26. that a talent is of the value of 3000 ſhekels, which, according to Brerewood, amount to 375 pounds of our money; and reckoning as he does the value of gold to be 12 times that of ſilver, a talent of gold, with him, is, of our money, 4500 pounds; ſo that 29 talents, 730 ſhekels are reckoned by him, at 131595 pounds [m]; but according to doctor Cumberland [n], who is more exact in his calculation, and who reckons a talent of ſilver at 353 pounds, 11 ſhillings, and 10 pence halfpenny, and the value of gold to be 14 times that of ſilver; ſo that a talent of gold is, with him, 5067 pounds, 3 ſhillings, and 10 pence; wherefore this whole ſum of gold expended in the tabernacle, according to him, amounted to 148719 pounds ſterling: and according to Waſerus [o], the amount of the whole is 350920 Hungarian ducats, which make three tons and a half of gold, and 920 ducats: when one conſiders the diſtreſſed caſe of the Iſraelites in Egypt, their late deliverance from thence, and the deſert in which they were, it may be wondered how they come by theſe riches, here and after mentioned; but when it is obſerved, the riches of their anceſtors, particularly what Joſeph got in Egypt, which deſcended to their poſterity; the repayment of the labour of the Iſraelites at their departure, with what they borrowed of the Egyptians, and what they found upon their carcaſſes when caſt up by the Red ſea, it will in a good meaſure be accounted for; to which may be added, that according to Jerom [p], there were 11 miles from mount Horeb in the wilderneſs, fruitful mountains of gold called Catachryſea.

℣. 25. And the ſilver of them that were numbered of the congregation, &c.] This was not the offering of ſilver, ch. xxxv. 24. but what was collected in numbering the people, where every one of 20 years old and upwards, paid half a ſhekel, ch. xxx. 12—15. the ſum was, 100 talents, 175 ſhekels, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary; which, according to Brerewood [q], make of our money, 37721 pounds, 17 ſhillings, and ſix pence; according to Waſerus [r], the whole amounted to 150887 dollars and a half; and ſo, according to Lundius [s], the ſum is ſo many imperials, and 45 creutzers or croſs pennies.

℣. 26. A bekah for every man, that is, half a ſhekel, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, &c.] A half ſhekel was called a bekah, from בקע bakah to divide; becauſe it was a ſhekel divided into two parts: for every one that went to be numbered, from twenty years and upwards; in order to give a ranſom, and make an atonement for their ſouls, as was ordered ch. xxx. 12—15. for 603550 men; ſo that from the time of their coming out of Egypt, which was now about ſix months ago, there was an increaſe of 3550 of the above age; ſee ch. xii. 37.

℣. 27. And of the 100 talents of ſilver were caſt the ſockets of the ſanctuary, and the ſockets of the vail, &c.] The ſockets for the boards of the tabernacle, into which they were put; and the ſockets for the vail, which divided between the holy and the moſt holy place, in which the pillars were ſet the vail was hung upon, and which was the ſilver-foundation of the whole fabrick: 100 ſockets of the 100 talents, a talent for a ſocket; there were 96 ſockets for the ſanctuary or tabernacle, and four for the vail; and on each of theſe a talent of ſilver was expended; which, according to doctor Cumberland, was 353 pounds, 11 ſhillings, and ſome odd pence; ſo much every ſocket coſt.

℣. 28. And of the 1775 ſhekels, &c.] Which remained of the ſum collected, ℣. 25. after the ſilver ſockets were caſt: he made hooks for the pillars; on each ſide of the court of the tabernacle on which the hangings were hung; theſe hooks, as Kimchi ſays [t], were in the form of the letter ן, and were made to hang the ſacrifices upon, when they took their ſkins off; and ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah [u], that there were iron hooks fixed in the walls and pillars, on which they hung (the paſſover-lambs) and ſkinned them; this was done in the ſecond temple, when the hooks, it ſeems, were iron, but thoſe of the tabernacle were ſilver: and overlaid their chapiters, and filleted them; that is, overlaid the heads, tops, or knobs of the pillars with ſilver plates, and filleted, girded, or hooped other parts of them with ſilver.

℣. 29. And the braſs of the offering was 70 talents, and 2400 ſhekels.] Which, according to Paris weight, were 6177 pounds, 10 ounces, 2 drams, and 64 grains [w]: this might be had from the neighbouring mountains of Arabia, where it is ſaid [x] the metals of braſs and iron were firſt dug.

℣. 30. And therewith he made the ſockets to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] Which were five; ſee ch. xxvi. 37. and the brazen altar, and the brazen grate for it, and all the veſſels of the altar; which were all made of braſs; ſee ch. xxvii. 2, 3, 4.

℣.

[m] De Ponder. & pretiis Vet. Num. c. 4, 5. [n] Of Scripture Weights and Meaſures, c. 4. p. 120, 121.
[o] De Antiq. Numis. l. 2. c. 18. [p] De locis Heb. fol. 90. A. [q] Ut ſupra. [r] Ut ſupra.
[s] Apud Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 2. p. 253. [t] Sepher Shoraſh. Rad. נצח. [u] Peſachim, c. 5. ſ. 9. [w] Vid. Scheuchzer. ut ſupra. [x] Ariſteas de 72. interpret. p. 42. Vid. Hieron. de loc. Hebr. fol. 90. A.

℣. 31. And the ſockets of the court round about, tabernacle, and all the pins of the court round about; and the ſockets of the court-gate, &c.] Theſe were the pins for the curtains of the tabernacle, and for alſo of braſs, in all ſixty: and all the pins of the the hangings of the court; ſee ch. xxvii. 19.

CHAP. XXXIX.

IN this chapter is continued the account of making the ſeveral things belonging to the ſanctuary, particularly the clothes for the ſervice of the tabernacle, and the garments of the prieſts, as the ephod and its curious girdle, ℣. 1—7. the breaſt-plate and the putting of the ſtones in it, and the faſtening of it to the ephod, ℣. 8—21. the robe of the ephod, with the bells and pomegranates to it, 21—26. and the coats, mitre, bonnets, breeches, and girdle of fine linen for Aaron and his ſons, ℣. 27—29. and the golden plate, ℣. 30, 31. and all being finiſhed the tabernacle and every thing belonging to it were brought to Moſes, and viewed by him; who ſeeing that all was done exactly according to the commandment of the Lord, bleſſed the people, and particularly the artificers, ℣. 32—43.

℣. 1. And of the blue, and purple, and ſcarlet they made clothes of ſervice, &c.] Jarchi obſerves that there is no mention made of linen, becauſe theſe were not the prieſtly garments in which there was linen; but theſe were they with which they covered the veſſels of the ſanctuary when they journeyed; and ſo ſays Aben Ezra; and thoſe were covered with clothes of blue, purple, and ſcarlet, Numb. iv. 5—15. though ſome think theſe were clothes wore by the prieſts: to do ſervice in the holy place; and which they only wore when in it, and employed in the ſervice of it; and therefore what follows muſt be by way of explanation: and made the holy garments for Aaron, as the Lord commanded Moſes; the particulars of which are given in the following verſes.

℣. 2. And he made the Ephod of gold, &c.] From hence to the end of ℣. 31. we have a very particular account of the making of the prieſts garments exactly according to the directions given to Moſes, ch. xxviii. the notes on which ſee; only it may be obſerved, that here in ℣. 3. an account is given of the manner in which they made the gold fit to be worked along with the blue, purple, and ſcarlet yarn; they beat the gold into thin plates, and then cut them into wires, and then twiſted them together with the yarn: the gold that was uſed in the weaving of the ephod and the breaſt-plate, ſpoken of in the law, was wrought after this manner; the workman took one thread of pure gold, and put it with 6 threads of blue, and twiſted the 7 threads as one, and ſo he wrought a thread of gold with 6 of purple, and another thread with 6 of ſcarlet, and another with 6 of linen or flax, ſo that there were 4 threads of gold, and all the threads were 28, as it is ſaid; they did beat or ſpread out the gold, &c. to work in the midſt of blue, &c. from whence is learnt that the thread of gold was twiſted in the midſt of them [y]: and it may be further obſerved, that after the enumeration of the ſtones in the breaſt-plate, ℣. 10, 11, 12, 13. no mention is made of the Urim and Thummim, which ſeems to confirm the opinion of many, and which is my own, that they are the ſame with the ſtones: moreover, in ℣. 28. it may be obſerved, that what the coats for the common prieſts were made of is expreſſed, which is not before, which was linen; expreſſive of their purity and holineſs, and in which they ought always to appear before God and man, and in which apparel they have been imitated among the heathens: the prieſts of Hercules are ſaid to be clothed with linen [z], and the Egyptian prieſts wore only a linen garment [a]; hence the prieſts of Iſis, with whom ſhe is repreſented as ſurrounded by Juvenal [b], are called by him grex liniger, and by Martial, linigeri [c].

℣. 32. Thus was all the work of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation finiſhed, &c.] Both the tabernacle conſiſting of the court, the holy place, and the moſt holy place, and the tent or covering that was over it, with all things appertaining to the ſervice of it, as before deſcribed: and the children of Iſrael did according to all that the Lord commanded Moſes, ſo did they; both the people in general, and the artificers in particular; the people brought gold, ſilver and braſs, &c. as was propoſed to them; and the artificers wrought theſe and all other things, according to the directions and inſtructions they received.

℣. 33. And they brought the tabernacle unto Moſes, &c.] That is, the ſeveral parts of it before it was put together, with all its furniture, and every thing appertaining to it; which are examined in the order in which they were directed to be made, from hence to the end of ℣. 42. and this was done, that Moſes might inſpect the whole, and ſee whether it was done according to the pattern ſhewn him, and the inſtructions he had given to the workmen.

℣. 43. And Moſes did look upon all the work, &c.] Made a ſurvey of it, and with great care and accuracy examined every particular thing, and the manner in which it was finiſhed: and behold they had done it as the Lord had commanded, even ſo had they done it; both as to matter and manner in every punctilio, on all accounts, juſt as they were ordered and directed; they being throughout the whole filled by the Spirit of God with wiſdom and underſtanding, to do every thing juſt as it was the will and pleaſure of God it ſhould be done: and Moſes bleſſed them; commended them for what they had done, and implored the divine bleſſing upon them; and which may be underſtood both of the people who had ſo liberally and plentifully contributed to this good work, and of the artificers who had ſo carefully and punctually performed it. The form of bleſſing, as the Targum of Jonathan gives it, is, "may the ſhekinah (or the divine majeſty) of the "Lord dwell in the works of your hands;" or as Jarchi expreſſes it, "may it be the pleaſure (of "God) that the ſhekinah may dwell in the works of "your hands, and the beauty of the Lord our God "may be upon us, &c." which laſt words were part of the prayer of Moſes, Pſal. xc. 17.

[y] Maimon. Cele Hamikdaſh, c. 9. §. 5. [z] Silius Ital. de bell. Punic. l. 3. [a] Herodot. Euterpe ſive, l. 2. c. 38. [b] Satyr. 6. [c] L. 12. Epigram. 26.

CHAP. XL.

THIS chapter contains the order for ſetting up the tabernacle, and placing the furniture of it where it was the will of God it ſhould be put, ℣. 1—8. and for the anointing it, and all its veſſels, and alſo Aaron and his ſons, ℣. 9—16. all which were accordingly done, the tabernacle was reared up, and every thing was put in its proper place, ℣. 16—33. upon which a cloud covered the tent, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle, ſo that Moſes could not enter; which cloud afterwards was a direction in their journeys, by night and by day, ℣. 34—38.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] When the tabernacle, and the work of it, were finiſhed, and he had taken a ſurvey of it, and every thing belonging to it, which appeared to be done as was ordered: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. On the firſt day of the firſt month, &c.] Which was the month Niſan, as the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it; which was the month the children of Iſrael came out of Egypt, out of which they had now been a whole year, excepting 14 days: ſhalt thou ſet up the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation; the tabernable, which had a tent or covering over it, to which the people were gathered at times for religious ſervice.

℣. 3. And thou ſhalt put therein the ark of the teſtimony, &c.] The ark or cheſt where the law was, a teſtimony of the divine will, and which was to be put into the moſt holy place of the tabernacle: and cover the ark with the vail; not with the propitiatory or mercy-ſeat, as the Targum of Jonathan; for though that was a covering or lid to the ark, yet not a vail; this was the vail that divided between the holy place and the moſt holy, and ſo covered or hid the ark from the ſight even of the prieſts that went into the holy place.

℣. 4. And thou ſhalt bring in the table, &c.] The table of ſhew-bread, which was to be ſet in the holy place: and ſet in order the things that are to be ſet in order upon it; beſides the diſhes, ſpoons, covers and bowls, there were the twelve loaves of ſhew-bread to be ſet in two rows: and thou ſhalt bring in the candleſtick, and light the lamps thereof; which was to be brought and ſet in the ſame holy place with the ſhew-bread-table; and though the lamps were to be lighted by Aaron, the prieſt of the Lord, he being not yet conſecrated, the office was performed by Moſes.

℣. 5. And thou ſhalt ſet the altar of gold for the incenſe before the ark of the teſtimony, &c.] Not in the moſt holy place where the ark was, but overagainſt it in the holy place: and put the hanging of the door of the tabernacle; the door of entrance into the holy place, where there were to be no other things ſet but thoſe now mentioned, the ſhew-bread-table, the candleſtick, and the altar of incenſe; and theſe being brought in, the hanging was to be put up, which hid the ſight of the above things, and forbid the entrance of the people there.

℣. 6. And thou ſhalt ſet the altar of the burnt-offering, &c.] Where the ſacrifices of the people were to be brought, and offered up by the prieſts; and this was to be ſet up in the open court, as it was proper it ſhould, both becauſe of the ſmell and ſmoke of the ſacrifices: before the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation; juſt a little before the entrance into the holy place.

℣. 7. And thou ſhalt ſet the laver, &c.] As is directed in ch. xxx. 18. ſee the notes there.

℣. 8. And thou ſhalt ſet up the court round about, &c.] Which conſiſted of various hangings, eaſt, weſt, north and ſouth; ſee ch. xxvii. 9—16.

℣. 9. And thou ſhalt take the anointing oil and anoint the tabernacle, &c.] In this, and the two following verſes, orders are given for the anointing of the tabernacle, and its veſſels, the altar of burnt-offering, and its veſſels, the laver, and its foot, whereby they were conſecrated for divine uſe and ſervice, according to ch. xxx. 26, 28, 29. ſee the notes there.

℣. 12. And thou ſhalt bring Aaron and his ſons to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] To waſh, anoint, and clothe them, as in the two following verſes, that they might miniſter in the prieſt's office, according to ch. xxviii. 41. and xxix. 4—8. ſee the notes there.

℣. 15. And thou ſhalt anoint them as thou didſt anoint their father, &c.] For Aaron was firſt anointed, and then his ſons: that they may miniſter unto me in the prieſt's office; which they might not do before their anointing, though ſeparated for it, and called unto it: for their anointing ſhall ſurely be an everlaſting prieſthood throughout their generations; that is, this ceremony of anointing was to be uſed in all ages at the inveſtiture of the high-prieſt with his office, until the Meſſiah ſhould come, who would put an end to the Aaronical prieſthood; for not common prieſts, only the ſucceſſors of the high-prieſt, were anointed in after-times; this preſent unction ſerving for all the prieſts that ſhould follow in ſucceſſive generations, ſo long as the prieſthood continued.

℣. 16. Thus did Moſes, &c.] He ſet up the tabernacle, and every thing in its place, and anointed them, and Aaron and his ſons: according to all that the Lord commanded him, ſo did he; by which he approved himſelf to be a faithful ſervant in the houſe of God.

℣. 17. And it came to paſs in the firſt month, in the ſecond year, &c.] Of the departure of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt: on the firſt day of the month, that the tabernacle was reared up; ſo that this was in the ſpring of the year, about the vernal equinox, on a new year's day, that this was done, which was beginning the year well: it was within a fortnight of a year after their coming out of Egypt, and when they had been about five months and a half in building the tabernacle; for ſuch a time it ſeems they were in doing that, and which, conſidering the many things to be done, and in the winter-ſeaſon, it ſhews great diſpatch. Where was the place, in which the tabernacle was reared up, is not ſaid: it is [d] obſerved, that near the ſouth-weſt corner of that part of mount Sinai, which is called mount Epiſteme, there is a little hill called Araone by the Arabs, and by the Greeks the tabernacle of the teſtimony, where they ſay Aaron was conſecrated, and firſt performed the offices of the prieſthood: probably, ſays a learned man [e], on this hill was placed the tabernacle of the congregation, which Moſes was ordered to place without the camp afar off; but he ſeems to miſtake the tent of Moſes, or how-however the little tabernacle erected before the grand one was made, for this tabernacle in ch. xxxiii. 7. which he ſeems to refer to; it is more probable that it was now reared up in the midſt of the camp of Iſrael, ſee Numb. ii. 2.

[d] Pocock's Travels, p. 147. [e] Clayton's Chronology of the Hebrew Bible, p. 350.

℣. 18. And Moſes reared up the tabernacle, &c.] Not of himſelf, but with the help of others: and faſtened the ſockets, and ſet up the boards thereof; fixed the ſilver ſockets all around, which were the foundation of the building, and placed and eſtabliſhed the ſhittim boards in them: and put in the bars thereof; to keep the boards cloſe and tight: and reared up his pillars; the pillars that ſupported the vail between the holy and holy of holies, and thoſe on which the hanging for the door of the tabernacle was put, as well as the ſeveral pillars all around the court of the tabernacle for the hangings of that.

℣. 19. And he ſpread abroad the tent over the tabernacle, &c.] Which were curtains of goat's hair: and put the covering of the tent above upon it; which was of rams ſkins dyed red, and over that another covering of badgers ſkins: as the Lord commanded Moſes; ch. xxvi. 7, 14.

℣. 20. And he took and put the teſtimony into the ark, &c.] The ten commands, called the teſtimony, becauſe they teſtified and declared what was the will of God with reſpect to things to be done, or not done. The Targum of Jonathan ſays, he put the broken pieces of the tables into it; but what became of them, or were done with them, we no where read; and it does not appear that any other, but thoſe that Moſes hewed by the order of God, were put into the ark; ſee Deut. x. 1—5. and ſet the ſtaves on the ark; that it might be ready to be carried whenever a remove was neceſſary: and put the mercy-ſeat above upon the ark; together with the cherubim.

℣. 21. And he brought the ark into the tabernacle, &c.] Into that part of it called the holy of holies: and ſet up the vail of the covering, and covered the ark of the teſtimony; the vail which divided between the holy and moſt holy place, and ſo kept out of ſight the ark of the teſtimony within, from being ſeen by any, even by the prieſts in the holy place: as the Lord commanded Moſes; ch. xxvi. 33, 34.

℣. 22. And he put the table in the tent of the congregation, &c.] In the holy place; for there the ſhew-bread-table, which is here meant, was put: upon the ſide of the tabernacle northward, without the vail; on the north ſide of the tabernacle, at a little diſtance from the walls, which were the curtains and boards, even in the holy place on the outſide of the vail, which divided from the moſt holy place.

℣. 23. And he ſet the bread in order upon it before the Lord, &c.] The ſhew-bread, the twelve cakes of it, in two rows, ſix in a row: as the Lord had commanded Moſes; ch. xxv. 30. ſee Lev. xxiv. 5, 6, 7, 8.

℣. 24. And he put the candleſtick in the tent of the congregation, &c.] In the ſame place, the holy place: over againſt the table; the ſhew-bread table: on the ſide of the tabernacle ſouthward; directly oppoſite to the table.

℣. 25. And he lighted the lamps before the Lord, &c.] The ſeven lamps belonging to it: this, though it was the buſineſs of the prieſts of Aaron, and his ſons, yet they not being at preſent inveſted with their office, was done by Moſes, who in this and ſeveral other things mentioned in this chapter officiated as a prieſt: as the Lord commanded Moſes, ch. xxv. 37.

℣. 26. And he put the golden altar, &c.] The altar of incenſe; ſo called becauſe it was overlaid with gold, and to diſtinguiſh it from the altar of burnt-offering, which was covered with braſs: to this altar there is an alluſion in Rev. viii. 3. in the tent of the congregation, before the vail; in the ſame place, the holy place, where the ſhew-bread-table and candleſtick were, and theſe were all the furniture of it; and this was put not within the vail but before it, over againſt the ark, as that ſtood within it, ℣. 5.

℣. 27. And he burnt ſweet incenſe thereon, &c.] Which is another branch of the prieſtly office exerciſed by Moſes, and which he would never have done had he not had a command from God for it, as follows: as the Lord commanded Moſes; he commanded Moſes indeed, to order and direct Aaron to do this, but he being not yet conſecrated, Moſes being the Lord's prieſt, did it.

℣. 28. And he ſet up the hanging at the door of the tabernacle.] That is, at the door of the holy place, all being brought into it that were to be placed there.

℣. 29. And he put the altar of burnt-offering by the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation, &c.] Of which ſee ℣. 6. and offered upon it the burnt-offering and the meat-offering; either the burnt-offering and the meat-offering of the daily ſacrifice, as Jarchi interprets it, ſee ch xxviii. 38—42. or it may be rather the burnt-offering and meat-offering of the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons, ch. xxix. 1, 2, 18, 23. as the Lord commanded Moſes; in the places referred to.

℣. 30. And he ſet the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, &c.] Of which poſition, ſee ch. xxx. 18. and put water there to waſh with it; for the prieſts to waſh their hands and feet with; a type of that laver or fountain opened for the houſe of David and inhabitants of Jeruſalem to waſh in, Zech. xiii. 1.

℣. 31. And Moſes, and Aaron, and his ſons, waſhed their hands and their feet thereat.] This laver was for the prieſts, and Moſes officiating as a prieſt, waſhed in it, with Aaron, and his ſons, whom he was now about to conſecrate to the prieſts office, and inveſt with it by offering ſacrifice for them; Jarchi ſays, this was on the 8th day of the conſecration.

℣. 32. When they went into the tent of the congregation, &c.] Not only at this time but at all other times: and when they came near unto the altar, they waſhed; to the altar of burnt-offering to offer ſacrifice; and alſo to the altar of incenſe, and burn incenſe on that; for before whatever ſervice they performed in the tabernacle they waſhed: as the Lord commanded Moſes, ch. xxx. 20. this phraſe is near twenty times expreſſed in this and the preceding chapter, to ſhew that every thing was done by the workmen, and every thing put in its proper place by Moſes, exactly according to the will of God; no one purſuing his own fancy and private judgment, but all conſulting the mind of God, and acting according to that.

℣. 33. And he reared up the court round about the tabernacle and the altar, &c.] Which conſiſted of hangings 100 cubits long and 50 broad; ſee ch. xxvii. 9, &c. and ſet up the hanging of the court-gate; which was at the eaſt end of it; and the the hanging was of 20 cubits, hung upon 4 pillars, ch. xxvii. 16. ſo Moſes finiſhed the work; of the tabernacle, in making it by workmen, and in rearing it up by the help of others; and as the former was the work of ſome months, ſo the latter, it is highly probable, was the work of ſome days, at leaſt, in doing all that is ſaid to be done in this chapter relative to it; for though it is ſaid to be reared up on the firſt day of the firſt month, yet not then fully ſet up, or every thing done requiſite to the uſe and ſervice of it; ſee Numb. vii. 1.

℣. 34. Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, &c.] The outſide of it; this cloud was the ſame with the pillar of cloud that went before the Iſraelites, as ſoon almoſt as they came out of Egypt; and led them through the Red ſea, and conducted them to mount Sinai; only it now appeared in a different form, not erect as a pillar, but more expanded, ſo as to cover the tabernacle without: and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle; the inſide of it, not the moſt holy place only, but the holy place alſo: this was an uncommon brightneſs, luſtre, and ſplendor, a glorious ſtream of light, which the eye of man could not well bear to behold; ſuch a glory filled the temple of Solomon at the dedication of that, 1 Kings viii. 11. and was an emblem of Chriſt, the brightneſs of his Father's glory, dwelling in and filling the tabernacle of the human nature, where the Godhead, the Shekinah, the divine Majeſty dwells bodily, Heb. i. 3. John i. 14. Col. ii. 9.

℣. 35. And Moſes was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, &c.] He had been there before, both in the holy, and in the moſt holy place, to ſee that the furniture of each were put as the Lord directed, which being done he came out again; and now a cloud being on the outſide of it and the glory of the Lord within, he was ſo ſtruck with an awe and reverence of the divine Being, of whoſe preſence theſe were a ſymbol, that he could not engage his heart, or had not boldneſs to go into the tabernacle until he was called, Lev. i. 1. for ſo it follows: becauſe the cloud abode thereon, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle; there was ſomething, no doubt, very venerable in the ſpreading cloud, as well as very ſtriking in the refulgent glory, which commanded diſtance, even to a perſon that had been uſed to converſe with God; Moſes that went into the midſt of the cloud where the Lord was, now could not or durſt not go into the tabernacle it covered; and he who then was not deterred by the ſight of the glory of God, which was like devouring fire, ch. xxiv. 16, 17, 18. now could not, or at leaſt thought it not proper and adviſeable to enter into the holy place erected for the ſervice and worſhip of God; the chief reaſon of which may be, becauſe, as yet he had not a call to enter, as he then had, and as we find was afterwards given him, Lev. i. 1. and perhaps another reaſon may be, becauſe he was now no longer a prieſt; Aaron and his ſons being inveſted with the prieſtly office, whoſe buſineſs it was to draw nigh to God; and indeed, the call he afterwards had was not to come into the tabernacle, but was a call unto him out of it.

℣. 36. And when the cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle, &c.] By the Lord himſelf, or it removed by his order, that is, roſe up and ſtood above the tabernacle, and appeared in the form of a pillar, and went before it: the children of Iſrael went onward in all their journeys; the motion of the cloud was a direction to ſet forward and continue their journey as long as it laſted; but when it reſted and abode upon the tabernacle, then they ſtopped and reſted alſo, as is ſuggeſted in the following verſe, ſee Numb. ix. 17—23. thus the ſaints are to be followers of God as dear children, and to follow the lamb whitherſoever he goes or directs, and walk after the Spirit, the dictates and directions thereof; ſo the wheels in Ezekiel's viſion went and ſtood, as did the living creatures, and the ſpirit in them, Ezek. i. 19, 20, 21.

℣. 37. But if the cloud were not taken up, then they journeyed not, &c.] Even if it continued ſo two days, or a month, or a year, as very probably it ſometimes did; which will in ſome meaſure, account for the long continuance of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, ſee Numb. ix. 22. till the day that it was taken up; or, of its aſcent [f], being liſted up, or going upwards, higher in the air, right over the tabernacle, or perhaps more to the front of it; the word uſed before in this and the preceding verſe has the ſignification of aſcending upwards.

℣. 38. For the cloud of the Lord was upon the tabernacle by day, &c.] Or over it [g], it covered it, when it abode upon it, and reſted; and ſtood on high over it, when it moved and the people journeyed: and fire was on it by night; the ſame phænomenon which had the appearance of a cloud in the day-time ſhone like fire in the night-time: or fire was in it [h]; that is in the cloud; ſo it appeared in the night, and was, as the Targum of Jonathan here calls it, a pillar of fire; the ſame with the pillar of cloud and fire, which departed not from the people all the while they were in the wilderneſs, ch. xiii. 21, 22. Neh. ix. 19. and this was in the ſight of all the houſe of Iſrael, throughout all their journeys; whether by night or by day; for in hot countries they travel much by night; and as the cloud was both a ſhelter from the heat of the ſun in the day-time, and a direction of their way; ſo the fire by night was of the ſame uſe for direction, and might be alſo terrifying to wild beaſts in the wilderneſs, who are afraid of fire, and ſo be a ſecurity to the Iſraelites from them; all which is an emblem of the guidance and protection, light, joy, and comfort the church of God has from his gracious preſence, whilſt in the wilderneſs of this world; ſee Iſ. iv. 5, 6.

[f] העלתו ſuſtolli ejus, Montanus. Junius & Tremellius, Druſius.

[g] על המשכן ſupra tabernaculum, Druſius.

[h] בו in ea, Fagius,

The Third Book of MOSES, called LEVITICUS.

THIS book is commonly called by the Jews Vajikra, from the firſt word with which it begins, and ſometimes תורת כהנים the law of the prieſts [a]; and this is its name in the Syriac and Arabic verſions: by the Septuagint interpreters it is called λευϊτικον, and by the Latins, Leviticus, or the Levitical book, becauſe it gives an account of the Levitical prieſthood, as the apoſtle calls it, Heb. vii. 11. It treats of the ſacrifices under the Levitical diſpenſation, and of the prieſts concerned in them, and of the times and ſeaſons in which they were offered, and of many other rites and ceremonies. That it was wrote by Moſes, is not only generally believed by the Jews, but is affirmed in the New Teſtament; ſee Matt. viii. 4. John viii. 5. compared with Lev. xiv. 2. and xx. 10. from whence, as well as from other citations out of it in other places, the authority of it may be concluded. The matter of it was delivered to Moſes, and very likely by him then written upon the erection of the tabernacle, which was in the ſecond year of the Iſraelites coming out of Egypt, in the firſt month, and the firſt day of the month, Exod. xl. 17. and it was on the ſame day that the Lord ſpake to Moſes out of it, and delivered to him the laws concerning ſacrifices, recorded in the firſt ſeven chapters; ſee Numb. i. 1. compared with Lev. i. 1. and on the eighth day of the ſame month, and ſome following days, the remainder of it was given to him, and written by him, ſee ch. viii. 1. and x. 1. and xvi. 1. to which agrees the Targum of Jonathan on ch. i. 1. "when "Moſes had made an end of erecting the taber-"nacle, Moſes thought and reaſoned in his heart, "and ſaid, mount Sinai, its excellency was the ex-"cellency of an hour, and its holineſs the holi-"neſs of three days, it was not poſſible for me "to aſcend unto it, until the time that the Word "was ſpeaking with me; but this tabernacle of "the congregation, its excellency is an excellency "for ever, and its holineſs an holineſs for ever, it "is fit that I ſhould not enter into it, until the "time that he ſpeaks with me from before the "Lord; and therefore the Word of the Lord cal-"led to Moſes, and the Word of the Lord ſpake "with him out of the tabernacle of the congre-"gation, ſaying;" and to the ſame purpoſe the Jeruſalem Targum. It was written in the year from the creation of the world 2514, and about 1490 years before the coming of Chriſt. The various ſacrifices, rites and ceremonies made mention of in it, were typical of Chriſt, and ſhadows of good things to come by him: there are many things in it, which give great light to ſeveral paſſages in the New Teſtament, and it is worthy of diligent reading and conſideration.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter contains certain laws and rules concerning ſacrifices, particularly burnt-offerings, which were delivered by the Lord to Moſes, ℣. 1, 2. what thoſe offerings ſhould be of, ℣. 3, 10, 14. what rules ſhould be obſerved, what actions ſhould be done, firſt by the perſons that brought them, ℣. 3, 4. and then by the prieſt that offered them, with reſpect to the burnt-offering of the herd, ℣. 5—9. and to the burnt-offering of the ſheep and goats, ℣. 11, 12, 13. and to the burnt-offering of fowls, ℣. 15—17. all which, when offered aright, were of a ſweet ſavour to the Lord, ℣. 9, 13, 17.

℣. 1. And the Lord called unto Moſes, &c.] Or met him, as the phraſe is rendered in Numb. xxiii. 4. The word ויקרא tranſlated called, the laſt letter of it is written in a very ſmall character, to ſhew, as the Jews [b] ſay, that he met him accidentally, and unawares to Moſes: other myſteries they obſerve in it, as that it reſpects the modeſty of Moſes, who leſſened himſelf, and got out of the way, that that he might not have the government laid upon him, and therefore the Lord called him; or to denote the wonderful condescension of the Lord, whose throne is in heaven, and yet vouchsafed to dwell in the tabernacle, out of which he called to Moses, and from mount Sinai, and out of the cloud [c]. The word Lord is not in this clause, but the following, from whence it is supplied by our translators, as it is in the Syriac version, and as the word God is in the Arabic version; the two Targums of Jonathan and Jerusalem paraphrase it, "the Word of the Lord called to Moses," by an articulate voice, though it may be it was a still small one; and which some think is the reason of the smallness of the letter before mentioned; and Aben Ezra says, that Moses heard it, but all Israel did not hear: and spake unto him out of the tabernacle of the congregation; from off the mercy-seat, between the cherubim over the ark, where the glory of the Lord, or the divine Shekinah and Majesty took up its residence, and from whence the Lord promised to commune with Moses, Exod. xxv. 22: saying; what follows concerning sacrifices; which shows, that these were not human inventions, but of divine institution, and by the appointment of God.

[a] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 103. 2.

[b] Vid. Buxtorf. Tiberias, c. 15. p. 39.

℣. 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, &c.] For unto no other was the law of sacrifices given; not to the Gentiles, but to the children of Israel: if any man; or woman, for the word man, as Ben Gersom observes, includes the whole species: of you; of you Israelites; the Targum of Jonathan adds, "and not of the apostates "who worship idols." Jarchi interprets it of yours, of your mammon or substance, what was their own property, and not what was stolen from another [d], see Is. lxi. 8: bring an offering unto the Lord; called Korban of Karab, to draw nigh, because it was not only brought nigh to God, to the door of the tabernacle where he dwelt, but because by it they drew nigh to God, and presented themselves to him, and that for them; typical of believers under the gospel-dispensation drawing nigh to God through Christ, by whom their spiritual sacrifices are presented and accepted in virtue of his: ye shall bring your offering of the cattle, even of the herd, and of the flock; that is of oxen, and of sheep or goats. The Targum of Jonathan is, "of a clean beast, of oxen, and of sheep, but "not of wild beasts shall ye bring your offerings." These were appointed, Ben Gersom says, for these two reasons, partly because the most excellent, and partly because most easy to be found and come at, as wild creatures are not: but the true reason is, because they were very fit to represent the great sacrifice Christ, which all sacrifices were typical of; the ox or bullock was a proper emblem of him for his strength and laboriousness, and the sheep for his harmlessness, innocence and patience, and the goat, as he was not in himself, but as he was thought to be, a sinner, being sent in the likeness of sinful flesh, and being traduced as such, and having the sins of his people imputed to him.

℣. 3. If his offering be a burnt-sacrifice of the herd, &c.] So called, because consumed by fire, see ch. vi. 9. even all of it except the skin, and therefore its name with the Greeks is a whole burnt-offering, as in Mark xii. 33. its name in Hebrew is עולה which comes from a word which signifies to ascend or go up; because not only it was carried up to the altar by the priest, which was common to other sacrifices, but being burnt upon it, it ascended upwards in smoke and vapour; it was typical of Christ's dolorous sufferings and death, who therein sustained the fire of divine wrath, and his strength was dried up like a potsherd with it. Jarchi on ℣. 1. says, there were in the burnt-offerings mysteries of future things: let him offer a male; and not a female, pointing at the Messiah's sex, and his strength and excellency, the child that was to be born, and the son to be given, whose name should be Immanuel: without blemish; or perfect, having no part wanting, nor any part superfluous, nor any spot upon it, see Lev. xxii. 19—24. denoting the perfection of Christ as man, being in all things made like unto his brethren, and his having not the least stain or blemish of sin upon him, either original or actual, and so could, as he did, offer up himself without spot to God, Heb. ii. 17. and ix. 14. 1 Pet. i. 19: and he shall offer it of his own voluntary will; not forced or compelled to it, or with any reluctancy, but as a pure free-will offering; so our Lord Jesus Christ laid down his life of himself, and freely gave himself an offering and a sacrifice, and became chearfully and readily obedient unto death: at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord; it was to be done openly and publickly, and in the presence of the Lord, to whom it was offered up; shewing, that Christ's sacrifice would be offered up to God, against whom we have sinned, by which his law would be fulfilled, his justice satisfied, and wrath appeased, and that his death would be public and notorious; see Luke xxiv. 18—20.

℣. 4. And he shall put his hand on the head of the burnt-offering, &c.] According to the Targum of Jonathan, it was his right-hand; but it is generally thought by the Jewish writers, that both hands were laid on; so Ben Gersom and Aben Ezra, with whom Maimonides [e] agrees, who says, he that lays on hands ought to lay on with all his strength, with both his hands upon the head of the beast, as it is said, upon the head of the burnt-offering; not upon the neck, nor upon the sides; and there should be nothing between his hands and the beast: and as the same writer says [f], it must be his own hand, and not the hand of his wife, nor the hand of his servant, nor his messenger; and who also observes [g], that at the same time he made confession over the burnt-offering, both of his sins committed against affirmative and negative precepts: and indeed by this action he owned, that he had sinned and deserved to die as that creature he brought was about to do, and that he expected pardon of his sin through the death of the great sacrifice, that was a type of. Moreover, this action signified the transferring of his sins from himself to this sacrifice, which was to be offered up to make atonement for them; so Gersom observes; see Lev. xvi. 21, 22. This denotes the translation of our sins from us, and the imputation of them to Christ, who was offered up in our room and stead, to make atonement for them, as follows: and it shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him; that is, the burnt-offering should be accepted in his room and stead, and hereby an atonement of his sins should be made for him, typical of that true, real and full atonement made by the sacrifice of Christ, which this led his faith unto.

℣. 5.

[c] R. Abraham Seba, Tzeror Hammor, fol. 92. 1. 2. [d] Vid. T. Bab. Succah, fol. 30. 1. & not. Abendana in Michol Yophi in loc. [e] Hilchot Maaseh Hakorbanot, c. 3. §. 13. [f] Ib. §. 8. Vid. T. Bab. Menachot, fol. 93. 2. [g] Ib. §. 14.

℣. 5. And he ſhall kill the bullock before the Lord, &c.] That is, the man that brings the burnt-offering, for no other is yet ſpoken of; and according to the traditions of the elders [h], killing of the ſacrifice was right when done by ſtrangers, by women, and by ſervants, and by unclean perſons, even in the moſt holy things, ſo be it that the unclean did not touch the fleſh; and it is obſerved [i], that the ſervice of the prieſt begins in the next clauſe, killing being lawful by him that was not a prieſt, according to the Targum of Jonathan, the butcher; but Aben Ezra interprets it of the prieſts, and certain it is, that the burnt-offerings of the fowls were killed by the prieſts, ℣. 15. and the Septuagint verſion renders it, and they ſhall kill; but be this as it will, the burnt-offering was to be killed in the court before the Lord; and this was typical of the death of Chriſt, who, according to theſe types, as well as to other prophecies, was to die for the ſins of men, and accordingly did; and if this was the proprietor and not the prieſt that killed the ſacrifice, it may denote that the ſins of God's people, for whom Chriſt's ſacrifice was offered up, were the cauſe of his death: and the prieſts Aaron's ſons ſhall bring the blood; in veſſels or baſons, as the Targum of Jonathan adds, into which they received it when ſlain: and ſprinkle the blood round about upon the altar, that is by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; which was the altar of burnt-offering, and not the altar of incenſe, as appears by the ſituation of it, ſee Exod. xl. 5, 6. and the blood was ſprinkled all around the altar with two ſprinklings: the rule in the Miſnah is [k]; the ſlaying of the burnt-offering is in the north, and the reception of its blood into the miniſtering veſſels is in the north, and its blood ought to have two ſprinklings, which anſwer to four; which Maimonides [l] explains thus; becauſe it is ſaid round about, it muſt needs be that the ſprinklings ſhould comprehend the four ſides of the altar; and this is done when the two ſprinklings are upon the two horns, which are diametrically oppoſite; and this is what is meant, which are four; the ſenſe is, that thoſe two ſhould include the four ſides, and the two oppoſite horns were the north-eaſt and the ſouth-weſt, as he and other Jewiſh writers obſerve [m], and which he expreſſes more clearly elſewhere [n]: when the prieſt took the blood in the baſon, he ſprinkled out of it in the baſon, two ſprinklings upon the two corners of the altar oppoſite from it; and he ordered it ſo to ſprinkle the blood upon the horn, that the blood might ſurround the corners in the form of the Greek letter Gamma [o]; ſo that the blood of the two ſprinklings might be found upon the four ſides of the altar; becauſe it is ſaid of the burnt-offerings, and of the peace offerings round about; and this is the law for the treſpaſs-offering, and the reſt of the blood was poured out at the bottom ſouthward: now this was always done by a prieſt, for though the bullock might be killed by a ſtranger, as Gerſom on the place obſerves, yet its blood muſt be ſprinkled by a prieſt; and it is the note of Aben Ezra, that this might be done by many, and therefore it is ſaid, the prieſts Aaron's ſons, when the ſlaying of it was only by one. The altar on which the blood was ſprinkled typified the divinity of Chriſt, which gave virtue to his blood, whereby it made atonement for ſin; and in alluſion to this rite Chriſt's blood is called the blood of ſprinkling, 1 Pet. i. 2. Heb. xii. 24. which being ſprinkled on the heart by the Spirit of God, clears it from an evil conſcience, and purges the conſcience from dead works, and ſpeaks peace and pardon there, Heb. x. 22. and ix. 14.

℣. 6. And he ſhall flay the burnt-offering, &c.] Take off its ſkin; this was the only part of it that was not burnt, and was the property of the prieſt, Lev. vii. 8. but who this was done by is not ſo manifeſt, ſince it is in the ſingular number he, and ſeems to be the bringer of the offering; for Aaron's ſons, the prieſts that ſprinkled the blood, are ſpoken of plurally; and agreeably, Gerſom obſerves, that the flaying of the burnt-offering and cutting it in pieces were lawful to be done by a ſtranger; but Aben Ezra interprets he, of the prieſt; and the Septuagint and Samaritan verſions read in the plural number, they ſhall flay, &c. and this was the work of the prieſts, and who were ſometimes helped in it by their brethren the Levites, 2 Chron. xxix. 34. and as this follows upon the ſprinkling of the blood, it was never done till that was; the rule is, they don't flay them (the ſacrifices) until the blood is ſprinkled, except the ſin-offerings, which are burnt, for they don't flay them at all [p]. The flaying of the burnt-offering may denote the very great ſufferings of Chriſt, when he was ſtripped of his cloaths, and his back was given to the ſmiters, and his cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; and the ſkin of the ſacrifice, which belonged to the prieſt, may be an emblem of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and which alſo was ſignified by the coats of ſkins the Lord God made for Adam and Eve, Gen. iii. 21. that robe of righteouſneſs, and garments of ſalvation, which all that are made kings and prieſts to God are cloathed with: and cut it into his pieces; which was done whilſt he was flaying it, and after this manner, as Maimonides relates [q], he flays until he comes to the breaſt, and then he cuts off the head, then its legs, and finiſhes the flaying; then he rends the heart, and brings out its blood; then he cuts off the hands, and goes to the right foot, and cuts off that, and after that he cuts down the breaſt until its bowels are diſcovered; he takes the knife and ſeparates the lights from the liver, and the caul of the liver from the liver, and does not remove the liver out of its place; and he goes up to the right ſide, and cuts and deſcends to the back bone, and he does not go to the back bone until he comes to the two tender ribs; he comes to the neck, and leaves in it two ribs here and two ribs there; he cuts it and comes to the left ſide, and leaves in it two tender ribs above and two tender ribs below; then he comes to the point of the back bone, he cuts it, and gives it and the tail, and the caul of the liver, and the two kidneys with it; he takes the left foot and gives it to another; and according to this order, they flay and cut in pieces the burnt-offering of the cattle; and theſe are the pieces ſpoken of in the law, Lev. i. 6. ſome apply this to the miniſters of the goſpel, rightly dividing the word of God, and to the effect the word has in dividing aſunder ſoul and ſpirit; but it is beſt to apply it to Chriſt, either to the evidence given of him in the goſpel, in which he is clearly ſet forth in his perſon, natures, and offices, and in all the parts and branches thereof; thereof; where every thing is naked and open to view, as the creature was when thus cut up; or rather, to his ſufferings, which he endured in every part of his body from head to foot.

[h] Miſn. Zebachim, c. 3. §. 1. & Maimon. in ib. T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 27. 1. & Zebachim, fol. 32. 1. & Menachot, fol. 19. 1. [i] Bartenora in Miſn. Zebachim, ib. [k] Miſn. Zebachim, c. 5. §. 4. [l] Peruſh in Ib. [m] Jarchi, Bartenora & Yom Tob, in Ib. [n] Hilchot Korbanot, c. 5. §. 6. [o] Vid. T. Bab. Zebachim, fol. 53. 2. [p] Ib. §. 18. [q] Ib. c. 6. §. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Vid. Miſnah, Tamid c. 4 §. 2, 3.

℣. 7. And the ſons of Aaron the prieſt ſhall put fire upon the altar, &c.] The fire of the altar originally came down from heaven, and conſumed the ſacrifice, and which was a token of God's acceptance of it, ſee Lev. ix. 24. 1 Kings xviii. 23, 24, 38. 1 Chron. xxi. 26. 2 Chron. vii. 1. and this fire was kept burning continually upon the altar, Lev. vi. 12, 13. and yet the Jewiſh writers ſay, it was the command of God, according to this paſſage, that fire ſhould be brought from another place and put here; Jarchi's note on the text is, "though "fire came down from heaven, it was command-"ed to bring it from a common or private place:" and Maimonides [r] ſays the ſame thing, and ſo it is often ſaid in the Talmud [s]; and this, as Gerſom obſerves, was not done by any but a prieſt in the the time of his prieſthood, or when cloathed with his prieſtly garments; and ſo in the Talmud it is ſaid, that the putting fire upon the altar belonged to the prieſthood, but not flaying nor cutting in pieces [t]: this fire denoted the wrath of God, revealed from heaven againſt all unrighteouſneſs and ungodlineſs of men, and which is the everlaſting fire prepared for the devil and his angels, and all the workers of iniquity; and which Chriſt endured for his people in human nature, when he bore their ſins, and became a whole burnt-offering for them: and lay the wood in order upon the fire; the wood for the ſacrifice was an offering of the people, brought to the temple at times appointed, Neh. x. 34. and xiii. 31. where was a place called לשכת העציים the wood-room or wood-chamber, and which was in the north-eaſt part of the court of the women; and here ſuch prieſts as had blemiſhes, wormed the wood, or ſearched the wood for worms; for whatſoever wood had a worm found in it, it was not fit to be laid upon the altar; and it was from hence the prieſts fetched the wood and laid it on the altar [u]; for a private perſon might not bring it from his own houſe for his offering [w], tho' it was provided by the congregation [x], and brought thither by private perſons; and it might be any ſort of wood but that of the vine and olive [y], which were not uſed, becauſe they did not burn well, and were ſoon reduced to aſhes; and becauſe ſuch a conſumption would be made of ſuch uſeful trees hereby, that there would be no wine nor oil in the land of Iſrael, ſo neceſſary for private and religious uſes. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, the pile of wood being laid before; that is, before the fire was put upon the altar; but this is contrary to the text, for the wood was laid upon the fire, and therefore the fire muſt be firſt; the caſe ſeems to be this, the fire was firſt kindled, and then the wood laid in order upon it.

℣. 8. And the prieſts Aaron's ſons ſhall lay the parts, &c.] That were cut in pieces, ℣. 6. ſome of which are particularly mentioned: the head and the fat; the head which was cut off, and the body, the trunk of it; ſo Aben Ezra ſays, the wiſe men interpret the word פדר which is only uſed here and in ℣. 12. and in ch. viii. 20. and which he thinks is right; though others take it to be the fat caul or midriffe which parts the intrails; and the Targum of Jonathan renders it, the covering of fat: theſe are particularly mentioned, but include in general the reſt of the pieces, which were laid: in order upon the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar; this diſpoſition of the ſeveral parts of the burnt-offering upon the altar, ſignifies the laying of Chriſt upon the croſs, and the diſpoſition of his head, his hands, and feet there; according to the uſual order of crucifixion: the ſkin, as before obſerved, was not burnt, but was the property of the prieſt, and the ſinew that ſhrunk was taken away, and caſt upon the aſhes in the middle of the altar [z].

℣. 9. But the inwards and his legs ſhall be waſh in water, &c.] This was firſt done in a room in the court of the temple, called לשכת המדחין the room of the waſhers, or the waſhing room, where they waſhed the inwards of the holy things [a]; and after that they waſhed them upon the marble tables between the pillars, where they waſhed them three times at leaſt [b]; and whereas this is ſaid to be done in water; Maimonides [c] obſerves, "not "in wine, nor in a mixture of wine and water, "nor in other liquids:" the waſhing of the inwards and legs denoted the internal purity of Chriſt's heart, and the external holineſs of his life and converſation, and the ſaints purification by him both in heart and life: with Philo the Jew [d], theſe things had a myſtical meaning; by the waſhing of the inwards was ſignified, that luſts were to be waſhed away, and ſuch ſpots removed as were contracted by ſurfeiting and drunkenneſs, very hurtful to the lives of men; and by the waſhing of the feet was ſignified, that we ſhould no more walk upon the earth, but mount up to the air, and paſs through that, even to heaven: and the prieſt ſhall burn all on the altar; all the other pieces, as well as the inwards and legs, excepting the ſkin, which denoted the painful ſufferings of Chriſt, and the extent of them to all parts of his body; and indeed his ſoul felt the fire of divine wrath, and became an offering for ſin: to be a burnt ſacrifice, an offering made by fire; that is, all the parts of the bullock were burnt on the altar, that it might appear to be a whole burnt-offering conſumed by fire: of a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord: he accepting of it, and ſmelling a ſweet ſavour of reſt in it, as an atonement for ſin, typical of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which is to God for a ſweet ſmelling ſavour, Eph. v. 2. the Jewiſh doctors [e] gather from hence, that whether a man offers much or little, it matters not, if his heart is but directed to God; which Maimonides explains thus [f], he that ſtudies in the law, it is all one as if he offered a burnt-offering, or a meat-offering, or a ſin-offering, concerning which this phraſe is uſed.

℣. 10. And if his offering be of the flocks, &c.] As it might be: namely, of the ſheep, or of the goats, for a burnt-ſacrifice; which were both typical of Chriſt, ſee the note on ℣. 2. he ſhall bring it a male without blemiſh; ſee the note on ℣. 3.

℣. 11. And he ſhall kill it on the ſide of the altar northward before the Lord, &c.] This is a circumſtance not mentioned in the killing of the bullock:

[r] Hilchot Tamidin, c. 2. §. 1. [s] T. Bab. Erubin, fol. 63. 1. Yoma, fol. 21. 2. & 53. 1. [t] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 26. 2. Vid. T. Bab. Zebachim, fol. 18. 1. [u] Miſn. Middot, c. 2. §. 5. [w] Iſſure Mizbeach, c. 5. §. 13. T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 27. 1. [x] T. Bab. Menachot, fol. 22. 1. [y] Miſn. Tamid. c. 2. §. 3. & T. Bab. Tamid, fol. 29. 2. [z] Ib. Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 6. §. 4. [a] Miſn. Middot, c 5. §. 2. Maimon. Bethhabechirah, c. 5. §. 17. [b] Ib c. 3. §. 5. & Tamid, c. 4. §. 2. Piſke, Toſaphot Middot, Art. 23. [c] Hilchot Hakorbanot, c. 6. § 6. Vid. T. Bab. Zebachim, fol. 22. 1. [d] De victimis, p. 839. [e] Miſn. Menachot, c. 13. §. 11. T. Bab. Shebuot, fol. 15. 1. [f] In Miſn Ib.

lock: Maimonides [g] says, there was a four-square place from the wall of the altar northward, to the wall of the court, and it was 60 cubits, and all that was over-against the breadth of this, from the wall of the porch to the eastern wall, and it is 76 cubits; and this four square place is called the north, for the slaying of the most holy things: so that it seems this being a large place, was fittest for this purpose. Aben Ezra intimates, as if some respect was had to the situation of mount Zion; his note is, on the side of the altar northward, i. e. without, and so the sides of the north, Ps. xlviii. 2. for many mistake who say, that the tower of Zion was in the midst of Jerusalem; and with this agrees Mr. Ainsworth's note on Lev. vi. 25. hereby was figured, that Christ our sin-offering should be killed by the priests in Jerusalem, and mount Sion, which was on the sides of the north, Ps. xlviii. 2. crucified on mount Calvary, which was on the north-west side of Jerusalem; as by the Jews tradition, the morning-sacrifice was killed at the north-west horn of the altar [h]: and the priests Aarons sons shall sprinkle the blood round about upon the altar; see the note on ℣. 5.

℣. 12. And he shall cut it into his pieces, with his head and his fat, &c.] Or his body, as the Targum of Jonathan; this was to be cut in pieces in the same manner as the bullock, see the note on ℣. 6: and the priest shall lay them in order on the wood that is on the fire, which is on the altar; see the note on ℣. 8.

℣. 13. But he shall wash the inwards and the legs with water, &c.] As he did the bullock, ℣. 9: and the priest shall bring it all; all the parts to the ascent of the altar, as the Jews [i] interpret it; all the parts and pieces of it, even the very wool on the sheep's head, and the hair on the goat's beard, their bones, sinews, and horns, and hoofs [k], all were burnt, as it follows: and burn it on the altar, it is a burnt-offering, an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord; see the note on ℣. 9.

℣. 14. And if the burnt-sacrifice for his offering to the Lord be of fowls, &c.] As it might be for the poorer sort, who could not offer a bullock, nor a sheep, or a lamb, Lev. v. 7. and xii. 8: then he shall bring his offering of turtle doves, or of young pigeons; the Jewish writers all agree, that the turtles should be old, and not young, as the pigeons young, and not old; so the Targum of Jonathan, Jarchi, Aben Ezra, and Gersom [l]; the latter gives two reasons for it, because then they are the choicest and easiest to be found and taken: no mention is made of their being male or female, either would do, or of their being perfect and unblemished, as in the other burnt-offerings; but if any part was wanting, it was not fit for sacrifice, as Maimonides [m] observes. These creatures were proper emblems of Christ, and therefore used in sacrifice, whose voice is compared to the turtle's, and his eyes to the eyes of doves, Cant. ii. 12. and v. 12. and who is fitly represented by them for his meekness and humility, for his chaste and strong affection to his church, as the turtle dove to its mate, and for those dove-like graces of the Spirit which are in him.

℣. 15. And the priest shall bring it unto the altar, &c.] The south-east horn of it; near which was the place of the ashes, into which the crop and its feathers were cast [n]: and wring off his head; by twisting it back as it should seem; the word used is only to be found here, and in Lev. v. 8. the Jews say, it signifies to cut with the nail, and that the priest did this, not with a knife or any other instrument, but with his nail; so Jarchi and Gersom on the place observe: some think he only let out the blood this way, but did not separate the head from the body, which seems to be favoured by Lev. v. 8. though Maimonides and Bartenora [o] conclude the reverse from the same place; and that the meaning is, that he should cut off the head and divide it asunder at the time he cuts with the nail: the manner of cutting with the nail was this [p], the priest held both the feet of the bird with his two fingers of his left hand, and the wings between two other fingers, and the bird upon the back of his hand, that it might not be within the palm of it; then he stretches out its neck upon the thumb about two fingers breadth, and cuts it over against the neck with his nail, and this is one of the hardest services in the sanctuary: and burn it on the altar; that is, the head, after squeezing out the blood, and rubbing it with salt: and the blood thereof shall be wrung out at the side of the altar; or the wall of it: this though mentioned last, must be done before, and immediately upon the wringing of the head, and between that and the burning it on the altar: this wringing off the head, and wringing out the blood, denote violence, and shew that Christ's death, which this was a type of, was a violent one; the Jews laid violent hands upon him, and pursued his life in a violent manner, were very pressing to have it taken away, and his life was taken away in such a manner by men, though not without his father's secret will, and his own consent.

℣. 16. And he shall pluck away his crop with his feathers, &c.] Or with its meat, or dung, as Onkelos renders it, meaning that which was in its crop; and so the Jerusalem Targum interprets it, with its dung; and Jonathan's paraphrase is, with its collection, or what was gathered together in the crop; it includes the intrails, as Gersom observes: and cast it beside the altar on the east part, by the place of the ashes; where the ashes of the burnt-offering were put every day, and every time such an offering was made; and all this answered to the washing of the inwards, and legs of the other burnt-offerings, and signified the same thing, the cleanness and purity of Christ, and of his people by him.

℣. 17. And he shall cleave it with the wings thereof, &c.] One wing being on one side, and the other on the other side: but shall not divide it asunder; the body of the bird, though it was cleaved down in the middle, yet not parted asunder, nor any of its wings separated from it; the Targum of Jonathan paraphrases it, but shall not separate its wings from it; this denoted, that though, by the death of Christ, his soul and body were separated from each other, yet the human nature was not separated from his divine person, the personal union between the two natures still continuing; nor was he divided from his divine father, though he was forsaken

[g] In Misn. Zebachim, c. 5. §. 1. & Yoma, fol. 27. 1 Chagigah, fol. 11. 1. [h] Misn. Tamid, c. 4. §. 1. [i] T. Bab. Pesachim, fol 65. 1. [k] Misn. Zebachim, c. 9. §. 5. Maimon. Hilchot Hakorbanot, c. 6. §. 2. [l] Vid. T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 22. 1, 2. [m] Issure Mizbeach, c. 3. §. 1, 2. Vid. Misn. Zebachim, c. 7. §. 5. & Maimon. & Bartenora, in ib. [n] Misn. Zebachim, c. 6. §. 5. & Bartenora in Ib. [o] In Misn. Ib. [p] Maimon. in Misn. Ib. §. 4. & Bartenora, in Ib.

forſaken by him, yet ſtill in union with him as the ſon of God; nor from the divine Spirit by which he offered up himſelf to God, and by which he was quickened; nor from his church and people, for whom he ſuffered, they being united to him as members to their head: and the prieſt ſhall burn it upon the altar, upon the wood that is upon the fire; in like manner as the ox, ſheep, or goat were burnt: according to the Miſnah, the prieſt went up the aſcent (of the altar) and turned round about the circuit, when he came to the ſouth-eaſt horn, he cut its head (or nipped it) with his nail, over-againſt its neck, and divided it, and ſqueezed out its blood by the wall of the altar; and turned the part nipped to the altar, and ſtruck it at it, and rubbed it with ſalt, and caſt it upon the fires; then he went to the body and removed the crop and its feathers (or dung) and the intrails that came out along with it, and threw them into the place of aſhes; he cleaved but did not divide aſunder, but if he divided it was right, then he rubbed it with ſalt, and caſt it upon the fires [q]: it is a burnt-ſacrifice, an offering made by fire, of a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord; ſee the note on ℣. 9. ſo with the heathens, to the gods of the air they ſacrificed fowls for burnt-offerings [r].

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter contains the law of the meat-offering, and gives an account of what it was made of, fine flour, with oil poured, and frankincenſe put upon it, ℣. 1. what was done with it; part of it burnt upon the altar, and the reſt was the property of the prieſts, ℣. 2, 3, 8, 9, 10. how it was to be when baked in an oven, or in a pan, or fried in a frying-pan, ℣. 4, 5, 6, 7. what was prohibited in it, leaven and honey, ℣. 11. what was to be uſed in it, ſalt, ℣. 13. and what was to be the oblation and meat-offering of the firſt-fruits, and what to be done with it, ℣. 12, 14, 15, 16.

℣. 1. And when any man will offer a meat-offering unto the Lord, &c.] Or, when a ſoul, and which Onkelos renders a man, ſo called from his more noble part; and, as the Jews ſay, this word is uſed becauſe the Minchah or meat-offering here ſpoken of, was a free-will offering, and was offered up with all the heart and ſoul; and one that offered in this manner, it was all one as if he offered his ſoul to the Lord [s]: there were ſome meat-offerings which were appointed and fixed at certain times, and were obliged to be offered, as at the daily ſacrifice, the conſecration of prieſts, the waving of the ſheaf, &c. Exod. xxix. 40, 41. Lev. vi. 20. and xxiii. 13. but this was a free-will offering; wherefore it is ſaid, when any man will offer; the Hebrew word מנחה a meat-offering, may be derived from נחה to bring or offer, and ſo is a name common to offerings of any ſort; or from הנית to recreate and delight, it being of a ſweet ſavour to the Lord, as other offerings were; others derive it from מנה a root not in uſe, and in the Chaldee language ſignifies a gift or preſent, in which ſenſe this word is uſed, Gen. xxxii. 13, 20. his offering ſhall be of fine flour; of flour of wheat, Exod. xxvii. 2. for, as the Jews ſay, there is no fine flour but wheat, and this was for the meat-offering, 1 Chron. xxi. 23. and this was to be of the fineſt of the wheat; for all offerings, whether private or public, were to be of the beſt, and to be brought from thoſe places which were noted for having the beſt; and the beſt places for fine flour were Mechmas and Mezonicha, and the next to them were Capharſim, in the valley; and though it might be taken out of any part of the land of Iſrael and uſed, yet it chiefly came from hence [t]; and according to the Jewiſh writers [u], the leaſt quantity of fine flour uſed in a meat-offering was the tenth part of an Ephah, which was about three pints and a half, and a fifth part of half a pint: Chriſt was prefigured by the meat-offering; his ſacrifice came in the room of it and put an end to it, Pſ. xl. 7, 8. Dan. ix. 27. whoſe fleſh is meat indeed, the true meat or bread, in diſtinction from this typical meat-offering, John vi. 55. the fine flour denotes the choiceneſs, excellency, and purity of Chriſt; the dignity of his perſon, the ſuperiority of him to angels and men, being the chiefeſt, and choſen out of ten thouſand; the purity of his human nature being free from the bran of original corruption, and the ſpotleſſneſs of his ſacrifice: and fine flour of wheat being that of which bread is made, which is the principal part of human ſuſtenance, and what ſtrengthens the heart of man, and nouriſhes him, and is the means of maintaining and ſupporting life; it is a fit emblem of Chriſt, the bread of life, by which the ſaints are ſupported in their ſpiritual life, and ſtrengthened to perform vital acts, and are nouriſhed up unto everlaſting life, and who, as the meat-offering, is called the bread of God, Lev. xxi. 6, 8. John vi. 33. and he ſhall pour oil upon it; upon all of it, as Jarchi obſerves, becauſe it was mingled with it, and it was the beſt oil that was uſed; and though it might be brought from any part of the land of Iſrael, which was a land of oil olive, yet the chief place for oil was Tekoah, and the next to it was Ragab beyond Jordan, and from hence it was uſually brought [w]; and the common quantity was a log, or half a pint, to a tenth deal of fine flour, as Gerſom aſſerts from the wiſe men, and to which Maimonides [x] agrees; and Gerſom on the place obſerves, that it is proper that ſome of the oil ſhould be put in the lower part of the veſſel, and after that the fine flour ſhould be put in it, and then he ſhould pour ſome of it upon it and mix it: the oil denotes the grace of the Spirit poured out upon Chriſt without meaſure, the oil of gladneſs, with which he was anointed above his fellows, and from whence he has the name of Meſſiah or Chriſt, or anointed; and with which he was anointed to be prophet, prieſt, and king, and which renders him very deſireable and delightful to his people, his name being as ointment poured forth, Pſ. xlv. 7. Cant. i. 3. and put frankincenſe thereon; on a part of it, as Jarchi's note is; and according to him, the man that brought the meat-offering left an handful of frankincenſe upon it on one

[q] Miſn. Zebachim, c. 6. §. 5. [r] Porphyr. apud. Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. l. 4. c. 9. p. 146. Vid. Macrob. Saturnal. l. 3. c. 8. [s] Jarchi, Aben Ezra & Baal Hatturim in loc. [t] Miſn. Menachot, c. 8. §. 1. [u] Jarchi & Gerſom in loc. [w] Miſn. Menachot, c. 8. §. 3. [x] Hilchot Maaſeh, Hakorbanot, c. 13. §. 5.

one ſide; and the reaſon of this was, becauſe it was not to be mixed with it as the oil was, and it was not to be taken in the handful with it [z]; and the quantity of the frankincenſe, as Gerſom ſays, was one handful: this denoted the ſweet odour and acceptableneſs of Chriſt, the meat-offering, both to God and to his people: it is an obſervation of the Jewiſh writers, that the pouring out of the oil on the fine flour, and mixing it with it, and putting on the frankincenſe, might be done by a ſtranger, by any man, by the man that brought the meat-offering, but what follows after the bringing of it to the prieſt were done by him [a].

℣. 2. And he ſhall bring it to Aaron's ſons, the prieſts, &c.] And this is all that he did with it; he left it with the prieſt, who carried it to the altar, to the ſouth-weſt horn of it [b]: the order of bringing it, according to Maimonides [c], was this, "a "man brings fine flour from his houſe in baſkets "of ſilver or of gold, or of other kind of metals, "in a veſſel fit to be a miniſtring veſſel; and if it is a meat-offering of fine flour, he puts it into a "miniſtring veſſel, and ſanctifies it in a miniſtring "veſſel;" then did what follows: and he ſhall take thereout his handful of the flour thereof, and of the oil thereof; as mixed together: the Jews ſay [d], this was done with the right hand, which is very likely, that being generally uſed in this way: the Talmudiſts thus deſcribe the manner in which the handful was taken; the prieſt ſtretched out his three fingers over the palm of his hand, and gathered the handful in the plate or pan, and parted it off with his thumb above, and with his little finger below; and this was the moſt difficult piece of ſervice in the ſanctuary [e]: though Maimonides [f] rejects this notion of difficulty, and ſays, it was done in the common way, in which men take up a handful of any thing: but Bartenora ſays [g], it was not in the uſual way, but much as before deſcribed; the prieſt put the ſides of his fingers into the flour, and gathered the flour with the ſides of his fingers within his hand, and took of the flour only three fingers full, upon the palm of his hand, and no more; and that it might not be heaped or go out, he pared it off, above with his thumb, and below with his little finger; and this he affirms, according to the Gemara, and what his maſters had taught him, was one of the hardeſt pieces of ſervice in the ſanctuary: with all the frankincenſe thereof; this was not taken along with the handful of flour and oil; for if there was ever ſo ſmall a quantity of frankincenſe in the handful it was not right [h]; for the frankincenſe, when brought, was put on one ſide of the fine flour, and when the handful was taken, then that was taken all together, and put upon it: and the prieſt ſhall burn the memorial of it upon the altar; that is, he was to burn the handful of fine flour and oil with the frankincenſe, as a memorial; either to put the Lord in mind of his loving kindneſs to his people, and of his covenant with them, and promiſes unto them, to which the alluſion is, Pſ. xx. 3. or to put the offerer in mind of the great ſacrifice of Chriſt, who was to be offered for his ſins, and to be a meat-offering to him: this was the part the Lord had in this offering, and which related to his worſhip, as the word uſed ſometimes ſignifies, as De Dieu has obſerved: to be an offering made by fire, of a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord; ſee the note on ch. i. 9.

℣. 3. And the remnant of the meat-offering ſhall be Aaron's and his ſons, &c.] Which not only ſhows the care taken by the Lord for the maintenance of the prieſts, from whence the apoſtle argues for the ſupport of miniſters of the goſpel, 1 Cor. ix. 13, 14. but denotes that ſuch who are made prieſts unto God by Chriſt, have a right to feed upon Chriſt the meat-offering by faith; who is that altar and meat-offering, which none but ſuch have a right to eat of: it is a thing moſt holy of the offerings of the Lord made by fire; ſome offerings with the Jews were only holy things, or as they call them, light holy things, comparatively ſpeaking; others were heavy holy things, or moſt holy; or, as it is in the original, holineſs of holineſs, the moſt holy of all.

℣. 4. And if thou bring an oblation of a meat-offering baken in an oven, &c.] This is another kind of meat-offering, or in another form; the former was only fine flour and oil mixed together, and frankincenſe put on it, but this was made up into cakes, and baked in an oven, and not in any thing elſe, according to the Jewiſh tradition [i]; he that ſays, lo, upon me be a meat-offering baked in an oven, he may not bring that baked otherwiſe; and this meat-offering was made into cakes and wafers, and then baked, as follows: and it ſhall be an unleavened cake, of fine flour mingled with oil, or unleavened wafers anointed with oil; which according to the Jews were made after this manner [k]; the prieſt put the oil into a veſſel before the making of it, then put the fine flour to it, and put oil upon it, and mixed it, and kneaded it, and baked it, and cut it in pieces, and put oil upon it, and mixed it, and again put oil upon it, and took the handful, and it was the fourth part of an hin of oil that was divided into the ſeveral cakes; the cakes, they ſay, were obliged to be mixed, and the wafers to be anointed; the cakes were mixed, but not the wafers; the wafers were anointed, and not the cakes. The oil denoted the grace of the Spirit of God in Chriſt, and in his people; and being unleavened, the ſincerity and truth with which the meat-offering, Chriſt, is to be fed upon.

℣. 5. And if thy meat-offering be an oblation baken in a pan, &c.] Which had no edge or covering, and the paſte on it hard, that it might not run out: it ſhall be of fine flour unleavened, mingled with oil; ſignifying the ſame as before.

℣. 6. Thou ſhalt part it in pieces, &c.] This anſwered to the dividing of the pieces of the burnt-offering, ch. i. 6, 12. and ſignified the ſame thing; ſee the note there. All meat-offerings, 'tis ſaid [l], that were prepared in a veſſel, were obliged to be cut to pieces; the meat-offering of an Iſraëlite, one (cake) was doubled into two, and two into four, and then divided, each piece was about the quantity of an olive: and pour oil thereon; after parted into pieces, ſee the note on ℣. 4: it is a meat-offering; as well as that of fine flour, or that which was baked in an oven.

℣. 7. And if thy oblation be a meat-offering baken in the frying-pan, &c.] It is aſked [m], what difference there is between the pan, and the frying-pan; the frying-pan has a cover, but the pan has no cover; the frying-pan is deep, and its works (or paſte) flow, or are thin, but the pan is extended, and [z] Vid. T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 14. 2. [a] T. Bab. Menachot, fol. 9. 1. & 18. 2. & Peſachim, fol. 36. 1. & Jarchi in loc. [b] T. Bab. Sotah, ib. & Menachot, fol. 8. 2. [c] Hilchot Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 13. §. 12. [d] Miſn. Menachot, c. 1. §. 2. [e] T. Bab. Menachot, fol. 11. 1. [f] In Miſn. Menachot, ib. [g] In ib. [h] Miſn. ib. & Jarchi in loc. [i] Miſn. Menachot, c. 5. §. 9. Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [k] T. Bab. Menachot, fol. 75. 1. [l] Miſn. Menachot, c. 6. §. 4. Maimon. Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 13. §. 10. [m] Miſn. ib. c. 5. §. 8.

and its works (or paſte) are hard or ſtiff; which Maimonides [n] explains thus, the frying-pan is a deep veſſel, which has a lip or edge round about it, and the paſte which is baked in it is thin and flows; the pan is a veſſel which has no lip or edge, and therefore its paſte is hard or ſtiff, that it flow not: now all theſe acts of mixing the flour, and kneading, and baking, and frying, and cutting in pieces, as well as burning part on the altar, ſignify the dolorous ſufferings of Chriſt when he was ſacrificed for us, to be both an atonement for our ſins, and food for our faith: it ſhall be made of fine flour with oil; as the other ſort of meat-offerings before mentioned.

℣. 8. And thou ſhalt bring the meat-offering, that is made of theſe things, unto the Lord, &c.] Either to the tabernacle, the houſe of the Lord, or to the Lord's prieſt, as it follows: and when it is preſented to the prieſt; by the owner of it: he ſhall bring it unto the altar; to the ſouth-weſt horn of the altar [o].

℣. 9. And the prieſt ſhall take from the meat-offering a memorial thereof, &c.] That is, an handful of it; as of the fine flour, ℣. 2. ſo of the pieces of that which was baked, whether in the oven, or pan, or frying-pan: and ſhall burn it upon the altar; the memorial or handful: it is an offering made by fire, of a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord; ſee the note on ch. i. 9.

℣. 10. And that which is left of the meat-offering, &c.] Not burnt with fire: ſhall be Aaron's and his ſons; the high-prieſt took his part firſt, and then the common prieſts: it is a thing moſt holy of the offerings of the Lord made by fire; ſee the note on ℣. 3.

℣. 11. No meat-offering which ye ſhall bring unto the Lord, ſhall be made with leaven, &c.] It might be uſed in peace-offerings, and in the wave-loaves, ch. vii. 13. and xxiii. 17. but not in meat-offerings; not only in the handful that was burnt, but in the reſt that was eaten by Aaron and his ſons; for ſo is the rule [p], "all meat-offerings are knead-"ed in hot water, and are kept that they might "not be leavened; and if what is left of them be "leavened, a negative precept is tranſgreſſed, Lev. "i. 11." It denoted in Chriſt, the antitype of the meat-offering, freedom from hypocriſy and all falſe doctrines, which were the leaven of the Scribes and Phariſees, Luke xii. 1. Matt. xvi. 6, 11, 12. and in his people that feed upon him by faith, that they ſhould be clear of malice and wickedneſs, and of communion with prophane and ſcandalous perſons, 1 Cor. v. 6, 7, 8, 13. ſo the Jews [q] ſay, the corruption of nature is like to leaven, and therefore forbid: for ye ſhall burn no leaven, nor any honey, in any offering of the Lord made by fire; as leaven was uſed in ſome offerings, ſo honey was brought with the firſt-fruits, 2 Chron. xxxi. 5. but neither of them might be uſed in offerings made by fire; they are forbidden to be burnt: the reaſon why they were forbidden, ſome think is, becauſe they were uſed by the heathens in their ſacrifices, ſo Maimonides [r], whoſe cuſtoms were not to be followed; and certain it is that honey was uſed in heathen ſacrifices: Homer ſpeaks of honey as the ſweet food of the gods [s], and what they deſire; and ſo Pauſanias [t] relates of the Eleans, that according to an ancient cuſtom, they uſed to offer on the altar frankincenſe, and wheat mixed with honey: Porphyry [u] obſerves, that the ancient ſacrifices with moſt were ſober, the libations of water; after theſe, libations of honey, ready prepared by the bees, the firſt of moiſt fruits, next libations of oil, and laſt of all, libations of wine; the Egyptians uſed honey in their ſacrifices [w]: or the reaſon is becauſe it was much of the ſame fermenting nature with leaven, as Aben Ezra, and when burnt gave an ill ſmell, which was not proper in offerings made by fire, of a ſweet ſavour to the Lord; or rather becauſe a ſymbol of ſin and ſinful pleaſures. Baal Hatturim on the place ſays, the corruption of nature is ſweet to a man as honey, and intimates that that is the reaſon of its prohibition: it denotes unto us that ſuch as would feed by faith on Chriſt, ought to relinquiſh ſinful luſts and pleaſures; and that thoſe that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt not expect their ſweets, but bitters, even afflictions, reproaches, and perſecutions, for Chriſt's ſake, in this life.

℣. 12. As for the oblation of the firſt-fruits, ye ſhall offer them unto the Lord, &c.] Or in or with the oblation, as ſome render it; that is along with the oblation of the firſt-fruits, leaven and honey might be offered: the Arabic verſion is very expreſs, but for a ſacrifice of firſt-fruits ye ſhall offer both to God; as they might be, as before obſerved; ſo the Targum of Jonathan, "for the leavened "bread of the firſt-fruits ſhall be offered, and "dates in the time of the firſt-fruits; the fruits "with their honey ſhall be offered, and the prieſt "ſhall eat them:" but they ſhall not be burnt on the altar for a ſweet ſavour; which they could not make, and beſides, were to be the portion of the prieſts.

℣. 13. And every oblation of thy meat-offering ſhalt thou ſeaſon with ſalt, &c.] Which makes food ſavoury, and preſerves from putrefaction; denoting the ſavourineſs and acceptableneſs of Chriſt as a meat-offering to his people, he being ſavoury food ſuch as their ſouls love, as well as to God the Father, who is well pleaſed with his ſacrifice; and alſo the perpetuity of his ſacrifice, which always has the ſame virtue in it, and of him as a meat-offering, who is that meat which endures to everlaſting life, John vi. 27. and alſo the grave and gracious converſation of thoſe that by faith feed upon him, Mark ix. 50. Col. iv. 6. neither ſhalt thou ſuffer the ſalt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat-offering; this ſeems to ſuggeſt the reaſon why ſalt was uſed in meat-offerings, and in all others, becauſe it was a ſymbol of the perpetuity of the covenant, which, from thence is called a covenant of ſalt, Numb. xviii. 19. namely, the covenant of the prieſthood, to which theſe ſacrifices belonged, Numb. xxv. 13. hence the Targum of Jonathan, "becauſe the twenty-four gifts "of the prieſts are decreed by the covenant of "ſalt, therefore upon all thine offerings thou ſhalt "offer ſalt:" with all thine offerings thou ſhalt offer ſalt; even thoſe that were not to be eaten, as well as thoſe that were; as the burnt-offering of the herd, of the flock and of fowls, and their ſeveral parts; all were obliged to be ſalted that were offered, excepting wine, blood, wood, and incenſe [x]; hence there

[n] Miſn. ib. & Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 5. §. 7. Vid. Jarchi, Gerſom & Ben Melech in loc. T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 14. 2. Menachot, fol. 8. 2. Zebachim, fol. 63. 1. [o] Jarchi & Gerſom in loc. [p] Miſn. Menachot, c. 5. §. 2. [q] Baal Hatturim in loc. [r] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 46. p. 481.

[s] —— μιλι χλωρον, &c. Hymn. in Mercur. prope finem.
Χρησον Μελιτωμα, &c. Batrachomyo.

[t] Eliac. 1. ſive l. 5. p. 316. [u] De Abſtinentia, l. 2. c. 20, 21. [w] Herodot. Euterpe, ſive l. 2. c. 40. [x] Maimon. Iſſure Mizbeach, c. 5. §. 11.

there was a room in the temple where ſalt was laid up for this purpoſe, called לשכת מלח the ſalt-room [y]; and which was provided by the congregation and not by a private perſon [z]; our Lord has reference to this law in Mark ix. 49. the heathens always made uſe of ſalt in their ſacrifices [a].

℣. 14. And if thou offer a meat-offering of thy firſt-fruits unto the Lord, &c.] This, according to Aben Ezra, was not any of the offerings of the firſt-fruits, which they were obliged to, as at the paſſover or pentecoſt, or feaſt of tabernacles, but a free-will offering; but Jarchi thinks, it is to be underſtood of the meat-offering of the Omer, Lev. xxiii. 13, 14. and ſo Gerſom, which was offered up on the 16th of Niſan; and this is the general ſenſe of the Jewiſh writers [b]: thou ſhalt bring for the meat-offering of thy firſt-fruits green ears of corn dried by the fire; theſe were ears of barley, which began to be ripe in the month Abib, which month had its name from hence, and is the word here uſed; theſe were dried by the fire, being green and moiſt, or otherwiſe they could not have been ground; for, according to Gerſom, theſe were afterwards ground into fine flour: even corn beaten out of full ears; and ſo made the fineſt flour: the firſt-fruits were a type of Chriſt, who is ſo called, 1 Cor. xv. 23. the beating of the ears of corn, and drying of them by the fire, and the grinding of them, denoted the ſufferings of Chriſt.

℣. 15. And thou ſhalt put oil upon it, and lay frankincenſe thereon, &c.] Either on the ears of corn dried, or on the fine flour of them when ground; in like manner as the oil and frankincenſe were put upon the fine flour of wheat, and upon the cakes and wafers baked, ℣. 1, 4, 5, 7. it is a meat-offering; one ſort of it, and like the reſt.

℣. 16. The prieſt ſhall burn the memorial of it, &c.] That which is taken out of it for a memorial, the ſame with the handful of fine flour and cakes of the meat offering: part of the beaten corn thereof; or that which was ground in a mill: and part of the oil thereof, with all the frankincenſe thereof; as was done in the other meat-offerings: it is an offering made by fire unto the Lord, ſee ℣. 2.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter contains the law of the peace-offerings, and gives an account what they conſiſted of, and of the various rites and ceremonies uſed at them, as of the bullock and the rites appertaining to that, ℣. 1—5. and of the lamb, and of the rites peculiar to it, ℣. 6—11. and of the goat, and of the rites belonging to it, ℣. 12—16. and the chapter is concluded with a law forbidding the eating of fat and blood throughout their dwellings for ever, ℣. 17.

℣. 1. And if his oblation be a ſacrifice of peace-offering, &c.] The Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan render it, the ſacrifice of holineſſes or ſanctifications; ſo called, not becauſe they were more holy than other ſacrifices; for they were what the Jews [c] call the lighter holy things, in diſtinction from the moſt holy things, ſuch as the meat offerings were, ch. ii. 10. but as Ainſworth ſuggeſts, either becauſe none but holy perſons might eat of them, Lev. ix. 19, 20. though this alſo was enjoined in other ſacrifices, or becauſe hereby the name of God was ſanctified. Theſe offerings were either by way of thankſgiving for favours received, or for free devotion, or as a vow, and in order to obtain for himſelf that offered and family health and ſafety, peace and proſperity, ſee Lev. vii. 19, 20. all which the word uſed ſignifies; and theſe ſacrifices are by the Septuagint called ſacrifices of ſalvation or health, becauſe offered either in gratitude for it, or to enjoy it; or elſe they were offered to make peace and reconciliation, and therefore are called peace-offerings, and that they were for this purpoſe is certain from Ezek. xlv. 15. and Gerſom ſays, they had their name from hence, becauſe they bring peace between God and men; they were a kind of a pacific feſtival between God, the prieſts, and the owner, and were typical of Chriſt, who has made peace for us by his blood and ſacrifice. There is ſomething very offenſive to God in ſin, it being a breach of his law, and contrary to his nature and will, provoking to the eyes of his glory, deſerving of wrath, and death itſelf, and ſo not only ſets man at a diſtance from him, but creates an enmity between them; hence a peace-offering became neceſſary; ſuch an one man could not bring acceptable to God; for neither his repentance nor good works would do; but Chriſt has offered up himſelf a ſacrifice, and thereby has made reconciliation for ſin and ſinners, and procured peace with God for them; the conſequence of which is ſpiritual peace here, and eternal peace hereafter; and ſo is a ſacrifice of peaces, as the Hebrew phraſe here may be literally rendered, and is the proper antitype and full completion of this ſort of ſacrifice: if he offer it of the herd; that is, a bullock: whether it be a male or female; as it might be either; ſhewing, as ſome think, that in Chriſt Jeſus, and in the goſpel-churches, and under the goſpel-diſpenſation, there is no diſtinction of male and female, with reſpect to bleſſings and privileges, Gal. iii. 28. or rather as others, denoting both ſtrength and weakneſs in Chriſt; ſtrength in his obedience, and weakneſs in his ſufferings; ſtrong he was as the man of God's right hand made ſo by him, and yet was crucified through weakneſs: he ſhall offer it without blemiſh before the Lord; ſignifying the perfection and purity of Chriſt's ſacrifice of peace-offering in the ſight of God: before the Lord; this, according to Gerſom, was on the weſt ſide of the court.

℣. 2. And he ſhall lay his hand upon the head of his offering, &c.] His right hand with ſtrength, the Targum of Jonathan ſays; perhaps both his hands were impoſed; the Septuagint and Arabic verſions read it in the plural number, hands; this ſame rite was uſed in the ſacrifice of burnt-offering, ch. i. 4. ſee the note there; which might be done in any place in the court where it was ſlain, only with this difference: according to Maimonides [d], there was was no confeſſion of ſin made at laying on of hands upon the peace-offerings, but words of praiſe were ſpoken: and kill it at the door of the congregation; it ſeems as if it was not the prieſt, but the owner that brought it, and laid his hands on it, that killed it; and ſo the laſt mentioned writer ſays, that ſlaying the peace-offering by a ſtranger was right; and as he and others [e] ſay, it might be ſlain in any part of the court; it was not obliged to be ſlain in the north part of it, as the burnt-offering was, ch. i. 11. and Aaron's ſons the prieſts ſhall ſprinkle the blood upon the altar round about; in like manner as the blood of the burnt offering was, and it was done with two ſprinklings, which were as four [f]; ſee the note on ch. i. 5. this was typical of the blood of Chriſt, called the blood of ſprinkling.

[y] Miſn. Middot, c. 5. §. 2. [z] Maimon. Iſſure Mizbeach, c. 5. §. 13. [a] Ante Deos Homini, &c. Ovid. Faſtor. l. 1. Vid. Horat. Carmin. l. 3. Ode 23. [b] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Menachot, c. 10. §. 4. [c] Miſn. Zebachim, c. 5. §. 7. [d] Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 3. §. 15.

℣. 3. And he ſhall offer of the ſacrifice of the peace-offering, &c.] That is, the prieſt, not all of it, but ſome of it, even what is after mentioned: an offering made by fire unto the Lord; for what was offered to the Lord was burnt, and is that part of it which is next mentioned in this and the following verſe: the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards; both that which covered them, and that which ſtuck to them; and the fat being the beſt, it was the Lord's, and offered to him, and denoted Chriſt the fatted calf, whoſe ſacrifice is beſt and moſt excellent; and which was typified by that which Abel offered up, and which being of the fat of the flock, and offered up by faith in Chriſt's ſacrifice, was more excellent than Cain's, Gen. iv. 4. Heb. xi. 4.

℣. 4. And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, &c.] Meaning either the two kidneys which were next the flanks, or the fat upon them, which was next to them; theſe and the burning of them, may ſignify the burning zeal, and flaming love and affections of Chriſt for his people, which inſtructed him, and put him upon offering himſelf a ſacrifice of peace-offering for them, ſee Pſ. xvi. 7. and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it ſhall he take away; or the caul, which is a thin membrane or ſkin, in which the liver is encloſed, with the liver, together with the kidneys, he ſeparated from the reſt in order to burn, at leaſt with a part of the liver; ſo Jarchi and Gerſom interpret it, that he ſhould take a little of the liver with the caul; and indeed ſome think, the word rendered caul, ſignifies a part of the liver, that which the Greeks call the table, the broader part of it like a table; and which word the Talmudiſts [g] retain, who ſpeak of טרפשיה דכבדא the table of the liver; and by which Jarchi on Exod. xxix. 13. interprets the caul above the liver, the ſame as here.

℣. 5. And Aaron's ſons ſhall burn it on the altar, &c.] That is, the fat of the ſeveral parts before mentioned; this ſignified the ſufferings of Chriſt, by which our peace is made, and by whoſe death we are reconciled to God: this rite of burning the fat of the inwards of ſacrifices was uſed by the Pagans, and is ſtill retained by the idolatrous Indians to this day [h]: upon the burnt ſacrifice; which, as Gerſom ſays, was the burnt-offering of the daily ſacrifice of the morning, which was offered firſt of all ſacrifices; ſo Jarchi ſays, "we learn that the "daily burnt-offering preceded every other offer-"ing:" this was an eminent type of Chriſt's ſacrifice: which is upon the wood that is on the fire; that is, which burnt-offering was laid upon the wood on the fire, and the fat of the peace-offering upon that: it is an offering made by fire, of a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord; as Chriſt's ſacrifice is, Eph. v. 2. ſee the note on ch. i. 9.

℣. 6. And if his offering for a ſacrifice of peace-offering unto the Lord, be of the flock, &c.] As it might be: and be either male or female; which he pleaſed: he ſhall offer it without blemiſh; ſee the note on ℣. 1.

℣. 7. If he offer a lamb for his offering, &c.] Which was of the flock, and muſt be of the firſt year; this is a rule laid down by Maimonides [i], that wherever this word is uſed in the law, it ſignifies one of the firſt year: then ſhall he offer it before the Lord; bring it into the court, and preſent it to the prieſt.

℣. 8. And he ſhall lay his hand upon the head of his offering, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan adds here, as before, "his right-hand with ſtrength:" and kill it before the tabernacle of the congregation; in the court, in any part of it; for as Gerſom ſays, all places were right for this; the man that brought it killed it, or the butcher, as the Targum of Jonathan ſays here alſo as on ℣. 2: and Aaron's ſons ſhall ſprinkle the blood thereof round about upon the altar; upon the four horns of it, ſee the note on ℣. 2.

℣. 9. And he ſhall offer of the ſacrifice of the peace-offering, &c.] That is, the prieſt, Aaron, or one of his two ſons: an offering made by fire unto the Lord; that part of it which was to be burnt with fire; and in the peace-offering of the lamb, there was ſomething more than in the peace-offering of the bullock, or of the goat, which follows: the fat thereof, and the whole rump, it ſhall he take off hard by the back-bone; not the rump or tail, but the fat of it; the copulative and is not in the text; wherefore Aben Ezra ſays, that Gaon was miſtaken in reading it as we do, the fat thereof, and the whole rump; but it ſhould be rendered, its fat of the whole rump, or tail: in the eaſtern countries [k], ſome ſheep and lambs had very large tails, and very fat ones, the leaſt weighing 10 or 12 pounds, the largeſt above 40, and were put in little carts for eaſe and ſafety; ſee the note on Exod. xxix. 22. now ſuch as were whole, entire, perfect, and without blemiſh, as the word ſignifies, the fat of them that was next to the back-bone, was to be taken off of ſuch as were brought for peace-offerings: and the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards; as before; ſee the note on ℣. 3.

℣. 10. And the two kidneys, &c.] The ſame direction is given here as about the bullock of the peace-offering, ℣. 4. ſee the note there.

℣. 11. And the prieſt ſhall burn it upon the altar, &c.] The fat of the tail, of the inwards, the two kidneys, and the caul of the liver: it is the food of the offering made by fire unto the Lord; or bread; this part of the offering that was burnt belonged to the Lord; it was his food, and what was accepted of by him, and therefore is elſewhere called the bread of God, Levy. xxi. 8, 22. Numb. xxviii. 2.

℣. 12. And if his offering be a goat, &c.] As it might be, and which alſo was of the flock: then he ſhall offer it before the Lord; in the ſame place and manner as the bullock and the lamb, ℣. 1, 7.

℣. 13. And he ſhall lay his hand upon the head of it, &c.] His right-hand, according to the Targum of Jonathan, as before; the ſame directions are are given for the killing of it, and for the ſprinkling of its blood, as in the offerings of the bullock and lamb.

[e] Miſn. Zebachim, c. 5. §. 7. [f] Miſn. ib. [g] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 46. 1. [h] See the Abridgment of Mr. Brainerd's Journal, publiſhed in 1748. p. 30. [i] Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 1. §. 14. [k] Vid. Ludolf. Hiſt. Ethiop. l. 1. c. 10. §. 14.

℣. 14, 15. And he ſhall offer thereof his offering, &c.] The ſame rules are laid down about taking the fat off of ſeveral parts, as in the ſacrifice of the bullock; but nothing is ſaid of the fat of the rump and tail, as is ſaid of the lamb.

℣. 16. And the prieſt ſhall burn them upon the altar, &c.] Which ſhows that not the fat only, but the inwards, and the kidneys were burnt alſo; ſo Maimonides ſays [l], that the prieſt ſalted the parts, and burned them upon the altar; and the prieſts might not have the breaſt and ſhoulder (which were what belonged to them) until the parts were burnt: it is the food of the offering made by fire; which the Lord eat of, or accepted of: for a ſweet ſavour; as a type of the ſweet-ſmelling ſacrifice of Chriſt, with which he is well pleaſed: all the fat is the Lord's; that is, all that was upon the parts mentioned in the ſeveral ſacrifices of peace-offerings, which was to be taken off and burnt: though the Jewiſh writers underſtand it of all fat in general, and ſo interpret the law that follows.

℣. 17. It ſhall be a perpetual ſtatute for your generations, &c.] That is, unto the end of the Moſaic diſpenſation, until the Meſſiah comes, and his ſacrifice is offered up, and his blood is ſhed, till that time in all generations: and throughout all your dwellings; wherever their habitations ſhould be, it is a law to be obſerved: that ye eat neither fat nor blood; the Jewiſh writers think, that this is not to be reſtrained to the fat and blood of ſacrifices, becauſe theſe were not offered in their dwellings, but in the tabernacle and temple, and therefore interpret it of fat and blood in general; but what fat and blood are meant, may be ſeen in Lev. vii. 23—27. the Targum of Jonathan adds, "but "upon the top of the altar it ſhall be offered to "the name of the Lord," which ſeems to reſtrain it to the ſacrifices.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter contains the law of the ſin-offering, which was offered for ſins committed through ignorance, error and miſtake, ℣. 1, 2. and gives an account of the matter of them, and the rites belonging thereunto, which were different according to the perſons for whom it was made, as for the anointed prieſt, ℣. 3—12. for the whole congregation, ℣. 13—21. and for the ruler, ℣. 22—26. and for any of the common people, ℣. 27—35.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying.] Continued to ſpeak to him, or after ſome pauſe made, proceeded to ſpeak to him, and give things in commandment concerning the ſin-offering, what it ſhould be, and for whom, as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, &c.] For this law concerning the ſin-offering, as the reſt, only belonged to them, and ſuch as were proſelyted to them: if a ſoul ſhould ſin through ignorance; ſin is from the ſoul, though committed by the body; it is the ſoul that ſins, Ezek. xviii. 4. it includes, as Aben Ezra obſerves, both Iſraelites and proſelytes; who ſinned through ignorance either of the law, that ſuch things were forbidden, or of having committed them, they being done unobſerved, and through inadvertency; or were forgotten that they were done, or were done through error and miſtake; theſe ſins are what the apoſtle calls the errors of the people, their ſtrayings out of the way through ignorance and inadvertency, Heb. v. 2. and ix. 7. ſuch ſins as a man is overtaken with unawares, and is drawn into at once through temptation and the prevalence of corruption; theſe are the errors and ſecret faults which David diſtinguiſhes from preſumptuous ſins, Pſ. xix. 12, 13: againſt any of the commandments of the Lord, (concerning things which ought not to be done.) The Jewiſh writers [m] diſtinguiſh the commandments of the Lord into affirmative and negative, and make their number to be 613; 248 are affirmative, according to the number of bones in a man's body, and 365 are negative ones, according to the number of the days of the year; and they obſerve [n], it is only the tranſgreſſion of negative precepts that is here meant, and for which a ſin-offering was to be brought: and ſhall do againſt any of them; it muſt be ſomething done, and not merely ſaid: hence the Jews [o] ſay, that as the neglect of circumciſion, and of the paſſover, does not come under this law, becauſe they are affirmative precepts; ſo neither blaſphemy, becauſe there is nothing done, only ſomething ſaid: of theſe ſins of ignorance, they give inſtances as follows; if any man eats the fat that is about the kidneys, thinking it is the fat that is about the heart; or that lies with a woman forbidden by the law, thinking her to be his wife; or that commits idolatry, by bowing to the idol, thinking that the law forbids ſacrifice, incenſe and libation, but not bowing; or that prophanes the ſabbath, thinking it is a common day [p].

℣. 3. If the prieſt that is anointed do ſin, &c.] That is, the high-prieſt; as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan, and the Septuagint verſion render it; who in after-times was only anointed, tho' at firſt Aaron's ſons were anointed with him; ſo an high-prieſt is deſcribed in Lev. xxi. 10. and ſuch an one was liable to ſin, and often did; which ſhows not only that the greateſt and beſt of men are not without ſin, but proves what the apoſtle obſerves, that the law made men high-prieſts which had infirmity, even ſinful infirmities, who needed to offer for themſelves as well as for the people; by which it appeared that perfection could not be had by the Levitical prieſthood, and that it was proper it ſhould ceaſe, and another prieſthood take place, Heb. vii. 11, 12, 18, 19, 27, 28: according to the ſin of the people; committing the like ſins of error and ignorance as the common people, to which he was liable as they; or to make the people guilty, as the margin reads; to which agrees the Septuagint verſion, ſo that the people ſin; and the Vulgate Latin verſion, making the people to ſin; either by his doctrine or example, and both thro' ignorance, heedleſſneſs and inadvertency: the Targum of Jonathan is, "when he offers the offering "of ſin for the people, not according to its man-"ner" or rite; as if his ſin lay in erring whilſt he

[l] Ut ſupra, c. 9. §. 11. [m] T. Bab. Maccot, fol. 23. 2. [n] Maimon. in Miſn. Horayot, c. 2. §. 3. Bartenora in Miſn. Ceritot, c. 1. §. 1. Gerſom in loc. [o] Miſn Ceritot, c. 1. §. 2. & Bartenora in Ib. Maimon. Hilchot Shegagot, c. 1. §. 2. [p] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Ceritot, Ib.

he was offering; but be it in which way it may, whether by any unadviſed, inadvertent action of his own, or ignorant inſtruction of the people, ſo cauſing them to err, or any ignorance or miſtake in offering the ſacrifices of the people: then let him bring for the ſin which he has ſinned; in either way: a young bullock; not an ox which was three years old, nor a calf which was but of one year, but a bullock which was of two years; ſo Maimonides [q] obſerves, that wherever it is ſaid a calf, that is a young one of the firſt year, but a bullock it is a young one of the ſecond year: as are mens characters, ſo are the aggravations of their ſins, and ſacrifices were proportioned thereunto; the high-prieſt was obliged to bring the ſame offering as the whole congregation did in a like caſe; ſee ℣. 13, 14. without blemiſh; a type of the ſacrifice of Chriſt offered up without ſpot to God, as it follows: unto the Lord; againſt whom ſin is committed, and therefore ſacrifice both in the type and antitype muſt be brought and offered up to him, by whom it is accepted, and to whom it is of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour, namely, the unblemiſhed ſacrifice of Chriſt: for a ſin-offering; or for ſin; the ſin-offering is called ſin itſelf, and ſo is Chriſt the antitype of it, 2 Cor. v. 21. Chriſt is moſt holy in himſelf, had no ſin in him, nor knew any, nor were any committed by him; yet he appeared in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, took the place of ſinners, and was their ſubſtitute, had all their ſins laid upon him, and was by imputation made ſin itſelf, and became an offering for it, and ſo fully anſwered the type of the ſin-offering.

℣. 4. And he ſhall bring the bullock unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord, &c.] As the bullock of the burnt-offering; ſee the note on ch. i. 3: and ſhall lay his hand on the bullock's head; the Targum of Jonathan ſays his right-hand; ſee the note on ch. i. 4: and kill the bullock before the Lord; at the door of the tabernacle, that is, in the court, as Gerſom obſerves; according to the above Targum, the butcher killed it, and not the prieſt; ſee the note on ch. i. 5. all this is typical of the imputation of ſin to Chriſt, and of his death.

℣. 5. And the prieſt that is anointed ſhall take of the bullock's blood, &c.] Let out and received into a baſon; this he did himſelf, and not another, for he offered for himſelf, and the blood was to make atonement for him: and bring it to the tabernacle of the congregation; out of the court where the bullock was ſlain, into the holy place, where were the vail that divided between the holy of holies, and the altar of ſweet incenſe, after mentioned.

℣. 6. And the prieſt ſhall dip his finger in the blood, &c.] The finger of his right-hand, as Gerſom obſerves, and ſo Maimonides [r]; for blood was always taken and ſprinkled with the right-hand, if done with the left it was wrong, according to the Jewiſh canons [s]; and though it is only ſaid the prieſt, and not that is anointed, as before, yet it ſeems to mean him and not another; though if a private prieſt did this, Gerſom ſays, it would be right, and ſo Maimonides [t]: and ſprinkle of the blood ſeven times before the Lord; a figure of the blood of Chriſt, called, in alluſion to this rite, the blood of ſprinkling; which being preſented before the Lord, calls for pardon from him, and ſprinkled on the conſcience, ſpeaks peace there, and perfectly cleanſes from all ſin, which the ſeven times ſprinkling is a ſymbol of: before the vail of the ſanctuary; the words may be literally rendered, the face of the vail of the ſanctuary; as if the blood was ſprinkled on the outſide of the vail. Jarchi's note is, "over-againſt the place of its holineſs, he directed (it) "over-againſt between the ſtaves; the blood ſhall "not touch the vail, but if it touches, it touches "it;" that is, it is no matter. And according to Maimonides [u], the blood of bullocks and goats burnt, was ſprinkled ſeven times upon the vail, which divided between the holy and the holy of holies This typified the vail of Chriſt's fleſh, whoſe blood gives boldneſs to enter into the holieſt of all, Heb. x. 19, 20.

℣. 7. And the prieſt ſhall put ſome of the blood, &c.] With his finger, which he dipt into it: upon the horns of the altar of ſweet incenſe before the Lord, which is in the tabernacle of the congregation; this was the golden altar on which incenſe was offered; it was placed before the vail, on the outſide of it, in the holy place, ſee Exod. xxx. 1—6. and the prieſt, when he put the blood on the horns of it, began at the north-eaſt horn, ſo to the north-weſt, then to the ſouth-weſt, and laſt to the ſouth-eaſt [x]; and the prieſt dipped his finger at every horn, and when he had finiſhed at one horn, he wiped his finger at the edge of the baſon, and after that dipped a ſecond time; for what remained of the blood on his finger was not fit to put upon another horn [y]. This rite ſhows, that the interceſſion of Chriſt, ſignified by the altar of ſweet incenſe, proceeds upon the foot of his blood and ſacrifice, Rev. viii. 3, 4. 1 John ii. 1, 2: and ſhall pour all the blood of the bullock at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; this altar ſtood without the holy place, and the altar of incenſe within; and after the prieſt had ſprinkled of the blood of the bullock, upon the horns of the altar of incenſe, what remained he poured at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering; for though it is ſaid all the blood, it can mean no more than what was left; wherefore the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, all the remaining blood; and Jarchi's explanatory note is, the reſt of the blood. The place where this was poured, according to Maimonides [z], was the weſt-bottom of the altar; and Gerſom on the place obſerves the ſame. This denotes the efficacy of Chriſt's blood to make atonement for ſin, and the reverent eſteem it ought to be had in, being precious blood.

℣. 8. And he ſhall take off from it all the fat of the bullock for the ſin-offering, &c.] When the prieſt had killed the bullock, and ſprinkled and poured the blood, as before commanded; he then cut up the bullock, and took out its inwards, and put them in a veſſel, and ſalted them, and ſtrowed them on the fires [a], and burnt them, and the fat of them, as he did with the ſacrifice of the peace-offerings; ſo that what is here ſaid, and in the two next verſes, is the ſame with what is ordered concerning them in ch. iii. 3, 4, 5. ſee the notes there. Jarchi and Gerſom both obſerve that they agree, that as one brings peace into the world, ſo does the other.

℣. 11. And the ſkin of the bullock, &c.] Not taken off; for the ſin-offerings that were burnt, were not flayed at all, but were cut in pieces with their ſkins on them [b]; in other burnt-offerings the ſkin was [q] Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 1. §. 14. Zebachim, c. 2. §. 1. & Bartenora in Ib.

[r] Ibid. c. 5. §. 7. Bartenora in Miſn. Menachot, c. 3. §. 4.
[s] Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 5. §. 15.
[t] Miſn. Yoma, c. 5. §. 5. Maimon. Ib. §. 10. 14.
[u] Maimon. Ib. §. 8.
[x] Maimon. ib. c. 7. §. 2.
[y] Ib. c. 5. §. 18. & 7. 2
[z] Miſn. Ib. § 13.
[a] Ib. §. 11.
[b] Miſn.

was taken off, and was a perquiſite of the prieſt, Lev. vii. 8. but this being an offering for the prieſt, the ſkin was burnt with the reſt: and all his fleſh, with his head, and with his legs, and his inwards, and his dung; the burning of theſe denoted the ſufferings of Chriſt, and theſe ſeveral parts the extent of them, they reaching to all parts of his body as ſtretched upon the croſs; and the dung particularly the reproach of them, he dying the death of the croſs, and was made ſin and a curſe for his people.

℣. 12. Even the whole bullock ſhall he carry forth without the camp, &c.] The Jewiſh writers interpret it without the three camps [b], the camp of the tabernacle, the camp of the Levites, and the camp of the Iſraelites; when the temple was built, ſuch ſacrifices were carried and burnt without the city of Jeruſalem; there were three places for burning, one was in the midſt of the court where they burnt ſuch ſacrifices as were unfit and rejected; the other was in the mountain of the houſe called Birah, where they burned ſuch as any accident befel them, after the carrying of them out of the court; and the third place was without Jeruſalem, called the place of aſhes [c]: this was typical of Chriſt being had out of the city of Jeruſalem, and ſuffering without the gates of it, Heb. xiii. 11, 12: unto a clean place where the aſhes are poured out; the aſhes of the burnt-offerings. This, according to Ainſworth, anſwered to the place where Chriſt was crucified, being a place of ſkulls, or dead mens aſhes, John xix. 17: and burn him on the wood with fire; any wood might be uſed for the burning of it, even ſtraw or ſtubble, which in the Hebrew language are called wood, as Gerſom on the place obſerves, and ſo Maimonides [d]; and it is added, with fire, as the laſt writer ſays [e], to exclude lime and cinder-coals: where the aſhes are poured out ſhall be be burnt; openly without; and ſeeing it is not ſaid, that the prieſt ſhall carry forth the bullock, and ſhall burn it, it is concluded by Gerſom on the place, that both may be done lawfully by a ſtranger, and ſo Maimonides [f].

℣. 13. And if the whole congregation of Iſrael ſin through ignorance, &c.] That is, all Iſrael, or the greateſt part of them, as Gerſom interprets it, thro' the ignorant teaching of the judges, who by their inſtruction cauſe the people to err, and commit ſins of ignorance, as Baal Hatturim on the place obſerves, and Maimonides elſewhere [g]; wherefore Jarchi, and ſome others, by the congregation of Iſrael underſtand the Sanhedrim, or the bench of judges, conſiſting of ſeventy-one. Ainſworth remarks on the words, that the church may err: and the thing be hid from the eyes of the aſſembly; congregation or church, ſo that they don't know that it is a ſin which they have committed: and they have done ſomewhat againſt any of the commandments of the Lord, concerning things which ſhould not be done; tranſgreſſed negative precepts: and are guilty; of ſin, though as yet they know it not.

℣. 14. When the ſin which they have ſinned againſt it, &c.] Any of the commandments of the Lord forbidding ſuch a thing to be done: is known; is made known to them by the prieſt, or any other, ſo that they are convinced that what has been done is wrong, though done through ignorance: then the congregation ſhall offer a young bullock for the ſin, and bring him before the tabernacle of the congregation; the ſame offering with that of the anointed prieſt, he being, as Aben Ezra on the place obſerves, equal to all Iſrael.

℣. 15. And the elders of the congregation ſhall lay their hands upon the head of the bullock before the Lord, &c.] Theſe muſt be two at leaſt, ſome ſay three, and ſome ſay five [h]; the more generally received notion is, that they were three of the Sanhedrim [i]; though the Targum of Jonathan makes them to be the 12 rulers of the 12 tribes: and the bullock ſhall be killed before the Lord; in the court near the altar of burnt-offering, either by a prieſt, or levite, or by a butcher, as the above Targum expreſſes it.

℣. 16. And the prieſt that is anointed, ſhall bring of the bullock's blood, &c.] That is, the chief-prieſt, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan explain it: to the tabernacle of the congregation; as he brought the blood of his own bullock, ℣. 5. from hence, to the 22d verſe, an account is given of the ſame rites to be obſerved in the ſin-offering, for the congregation, as for the anointed prieſt; ſee the notes on ℣. 6, 7, 12.

℣. 22. When a ruler hath ſinned, &c.] Or prince, the naſi, one that is lifted up above others in honour, power and authority, or that bears the weight of government: the word comes from one which ſignifies to lift up, or to bear; it may be underſtood of a governor of a family, or of a tribe, as Aben Ezra obſerves; and ſo in the Talmud [k] it is ſaid, it means the prince of a tribe, ſuch as Nachſon the ſon of Amminadab, prince of the tribe of Judah. Maimonides [l] ſays a king is deſigned, over whom none has power; and ſo Gerſom on the place, who obſerves, that David the king is called a prince, Ezek. xxxiv. 24. ſee Ezek. xlvi. 2. and done ſomewhat through ignorance againſt any of the commandments of the Lord his God; the phraſe, his God, is here added, and is not uſed neither of the anointed prieſt, nor of the congregation, nor of one of the common people; only of the prince, to ſhew, that though he is above others, God is above him, and he is accountable to him; he is his God, of whom he is, and by whom he rules; wherefore if he breaks any of his commandments, though ignorantly, he muſt bring a ſacrifice for it: concerning things which ſhould not be done, and is guilty; of tranſgreſſing negative precepts, which are as binding on him as others.

℣. 23. Or if his ſin which he hath ſinned, come to his knowledge, &c.] Or rather, and if his ſin, &c. [m] either by means of others informing him of it, or of himſelf calling to mind what he has done, and conſidering it to be a tranſgreſſion of the law: he ſhall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a male without blemiſh; his offering was to be a kid of the goats, a fat and a large one; becauſe, as Baal Hatturim obſerves, he ate fat things every day; and to diſtinguiſh it from the offering of one of the common people; and without blemiſh, as all ſacrifices were, that they might be typical of the offering of Chriſt without ſpot.

℣.

[b] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 68. 1. 2. & Sanhedrin, fol. 42. 2. Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Zebachim, c. 12 §. 5. Jarchi in loc. [c] Maimon. Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 7. §. 3, 4. [d] Maimon. Hilchot Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 7. §. 5. [e] Ib. Vid. T. Bab. Peſachim, fol. 75. 1. [f] Maimon. ib. [g] Hilchot Shegagot, c. 12. §. 1. [h] Miſn. Sotah, c 9. §. 1. [i] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Menachot, c. 9. §. 7. Maimon. Hilchot Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 3. §. 10. [k] T. Bab. Horayot, fol. 11. 1. [l] Hilchot Shegagot, c. 15. §. 6. [m] ℵ και Sept. & poſtea, V. L. & Noldius, p. 3. N°. 23.

℣. 24. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the goat, &c.] His right hand, as the Targum of Jonathan; see the note on ch. i. 4. and kill it; not the prince, but the priest after-mentioned, or the butcher, as the same Targum: in the place where they kill the burnt-offering before the Lord; in the court on the north side of the altar, see ch. i. 11. and vi. 25: it is a sin offering; an offering for his sin of ignorance, or sin; so Christ our offering is said to be, 2 Cor. v. 21.

℣. 25. And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger, &c.] With the finger of his right hand, as the Talmudists [n] observe, and Gersom on the place; the priest first received the blood into a bason or ministring vessel, and then dipped the finger of his right hand into it, that next the thumb: and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering; the four horns of it; in this there was a difference between the sacrifice of the anointed priest and of the congregation, and this of the ruler; the blood of the former was put upon the horns of the altar of incense, this upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering: and shall pour out his blood at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering; the south bottom of it; the order of the priests proceeding in putting the blood was different from that used in putting it on the horns of the altar of incense; here he first put the blood upon the south-east horn, then upon the north-east, next upon the north-west, and then upon the south-west; and upon the bottom of that horn where he finished, he poured the remainder of the blood, which was the southern bottom [o].

℣. 26. And he shall burn all his fat upon the altar, &c.] Of burnt-offering, that is, the priest shall do it: as the fat of the sacrifice of peace-offerings; see ch. iii. 3, 4, 5. and the priest shall make an atonement for him as concerning his sin; in a typical way, directing to the great sacrifice of Christ, which is the only real atonement and propitiation for sin: the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic versions render, the priest shall pray for him; for the pardon of his sin: and it shall be forgiven him; not for the prayers of the priest, nor for the sacrifice offered up, but for the sake of Christ, the antitype of such sacrifices, and when faith was exercised on him; or the meaning is, he shall not be punished for it.

℣. 27. And if any one of the common people sin through ignorance, &c.] Or, if one soul of the people of the earth; that is, a single person, and so is distinguished from the congregation, one of the common sort of people; however is neither an high priest, nor a prince, or king, but either a common priest, or Levite, or Israelite; no man is free from sin; all sorts of persons, of all ranks and degrees, high and low, rich and poor, men in office, civil or ecclesiastical, or in whatsoever state of life, are liable to sin, and do sin continually, either ignorantly or willingly; and Christ is a sacrifice for all sins and for all sorts of sinners: whilst he doeth somewhat, &c. see the notes on ℣. 2, 13, 22.

℣. 28. Or if his sin which he hath sinned come to his knowledge, &c.] So that he is convinced that he has sinned: then he shall bring his offering; to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to the priest there: a kid of the goats; a young goat: a female without blemish; and so inferior to the offering of the ruler or prince; for the characters of men are aggravations of their sins, and sacrifices were to be in some measure answerable to them, and suitable to their circumstances: for the sin which he hath sinned; to atone for it in a typical way.

℣. 29. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin-offering, &c.] His right hand, as the Targum of Jonathan; not the priest that shall offer it, but the man that has sinned, that brings it, thereby confessing his sin, and transferring it to the sacrifice: and slay the sin-offering in the place of the burnt-offering; that is, on the north side of the altar.

℣. 30, 31. And the priest shall take of the blood, &c.] So that all the preceding actions, the bringing the offering, the putting the hand upon the head of it, and slaying it, were done by the man that sinned; of this and what follows here and in the next verse, see the notes on ℣. 25, 26.

℣. 32. And if he bring a lamb for a sin-offering, &c.] As he might if he would; the Jews observe, that in all places a lamb is put before a goat, as being more excellent in its kind; but here it is mentioned after, which shews, they say, that they are equally alike [p]: he shall bring it a female without blemish; typical of Christ the lamb of God, without spot and without blemish, 1 Pet. i. 19.

℣. 33. He shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin-offering, &c.] On the head of the lamb, as on the head of the goat, even his right hand, as the above Targum, as before: and slay it for a sin offering, in the place where they kill the burnt-offering; for if it was not slain for a sin-offering but for something else, or on any other account, as for a burnt-offering, it was not right [q].

℣. 34, 35. And the priest shall take of the blood, &c.] See the notes on ℣. 25, 26.

CHAP. V.

THIS chapter treats of the trespass-offering, points at the sins for which it was to be made, and the matter of it; it was for secret sins, and sins of ignorance, such as refusing to bear witness in a known case, ℣. 1. touching unclean things and false swearing, ℣. 2, 3, 4. the things directed to in such cases are confession, ℣. 5. sacrifice of a lamb, or kid of the goats, ℣. 6. and in case of poverty, two turtle doves, or two young pigeons; concerning the offering of which instructions are given, ℣. 7—10. and if not able to bring them, then a meat-offering of fine flour, about which rules are laid down, ℣. 11—13. and for sins committed through ignorance in holy things or sacrileges, the sacrifice of a ram is enjoined, and satisfaction ordered to be made for the injury done in the holy thing, by adding a fifth part to it, ℣. 14—16. and for sins committed ignorantly against negative precepts, only a ram is appointed for the trespass-offering, ℣. 17—19.

℣. 1. And if a soul sin, &c.] The soul is put for the person, and is particularly mentioned, as Ben Melech says, because possessed of will and desire:

[n] T. Bab. Zebachim, fol. 24. 1. Pesachim, fol. 57. 2. & Ceritot, fol. 28. 2.

[o] Maimon. Hilchot Maasch Hakorbanot, c. 5. §. 10.

[p] T. Bab. Zebachim, fol. 7. 1. & Menachot, fol. 4. 1.

[q] T. Bab.

fire: and hear the voice of ſwearing; or curſing, or adjuration; not of prophane ſwearing, and taking the name of God in vain, but either of falſe ſwearing, or perjury, as when a man hears another ſwear to a thing which he knows is falſe; or elſe of adjuration, either the voice of a magiſtrate or of a neighbour adjuring another, calling upon him with an oath, to bear teſtimony in ſuch a caſe; this is what the Jews [r] call the oath of teſtimony or witneſs, and which, they ſay [s], is binding in whatſoever language it is heard: and is a witneſs; is able to bear witneſs to the thing he is adjured about: whether he hath ſeen or known of it; what he has ſeen with his eyes, or knows by any means: of ſuch a caſe, the Jews obſerve [t], that there may be ſeeing without knowing, or knowing without ſeeing, and in either caſe a man ought to bear witneſs: if he do not utter it; tell the truth, declare what he has ſeen or known: then he ſhall bear his iniquity; he ſhall be charged with ſin, and be obliged to acknowledge his offence, and bring a treſpaſs-offering for it: it is ſaid [u], that the witneſſes are not guilty of the oath of the teſtimony, but in theſe ten caſes; if they are required; if the teſtimony is concerning goods; if the goods are moveable; if he that requires binds himſelf to pay for their teſtimony only, in caſe they bear witneſs; if they refuſe after required; if they refuſe in the Sanhedrim; if the adjuration or oath is made there by the name of God, or his titles; if knowledge of the teſtimony goes before the oath; if he particularizes his witneſſes in the time of the oath, or at the time of the requirement; and if the oath is in a language they underſtood.

℣. 2. Or if a ſoul touch any unclean thing, &c.] Meaning an Iſraelite, for only ſuch were bound by this law, which pronounced a perſon unclean that touched any thing that was ſo in a ceremonial ſenſe; this is the general, including whatſoever by the law was unclean; the particulars follow: whether it be a carcaſe of an unclean beaſt, as the camel, the coney, the hare, and the ſwine, Lev. xi. 2—8. or a carcaſe of unclean cattle; as the horſe, and the aſs, which were unclean for food, and their dead carcaſſes not to be touched, Lev. xi. 26, 27, 28. or the carcaſe of unclean creeping things; ſuch as are mentioned in Lev. xi. 29, 30, 31. and if it be hidden from him; that he has touched them; or the uncleanneſs contracted by touching, he having inadvertently done it; or being ignorant of the law concerning ſuch uncleanneſs: he alſo ſhall be unclean; in a ceremonial ſenſe, by thus touching them: and guilty; of a breach of the command which forbids the touching of them: this is by way of prolepſis or anticipation; for as yet the law concerning unclean beaſts, and creeping things, and pollution by touching them, was not given: Jarchi and Gerſom interpret this guilt, of eating of holy things, and going into the ſanctuary when thus defiled: in the Jewiſh Miſnah [w] it is ſaid, the word hidden is twice uſed, to ſhew that he is guilty, for the ignorance of uncleanneſs, and for the ignorance of the ſanctuary.

℣. 3. Or if he touch the uncleanneſs of man, &c.] The dead body of a man, or the bone of a dead body, or a grave, or any profluvious or menſtruous perſon: whatſoever uncleanneſs it be that a man ſhall be defiled withal; not morally, but ceremonially: and it be hid from him; he is not ſenſible that he has touched any thing ceremonially unclean: when he knoweth of it, then he ſhall be guilty; acknowledge his guilt, and offer a ſacrifice for it, as after directed.

℣. 4. Or if a ſoul ſwear, &c.] A raſh or vain oath: pronouncing with his lips; not in his heart, as Jarchi notes; not ſaying within himſelf that he would do this, or that, or the other thing, but expreſſing his oath plainly and diſtinctly, with an audible voice: to do good, or to do evil; which was either impoſſible or unlawful for him to do; whether the good or evil he ſwears to do is to himſelf or to another; whether he ſwears to do good to himſelf, and evil to another, or good to another, and evil to himſelf, ſee Pſ. xv. 4, 5. The Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, "whatſoever a man "expreſſes, whether of any thing preſent or fu-"ture;" as if he ſwears he has done ſuch and ſuch a thing, whether good or evil; or that he will do it, be it what it will, and it is not in the power of his hands to do it, or if he did it, it would be doing a wrong thing: whatſoever it be that a man ſhall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; he has forgot that he ever ſwore ſuch an oath: and when he knoweth of it, then he ſhall be guilty in one of theſe; when he is told of it, and it is made clearly to appear to him, that he did at ſuch a time, and in ſuch a place, deliver out a raſh oath concerning this, or the other thing, then he ſhall be chargeable with guilt in one of theſe; either in raſhly ſwearing to do good when it was not in his power, or to do evil, which would have been unlawful. The Targum of Jonathan is, "if he knows "that he has falſified, and repents not, he is "guilty."

℣. 5. And it ſhall be when he ſhall be guilty in one of theſe things, &c.] Before expreſſed in the preceding verſes; the Targum of Jonathan is, "in "one of the four things," which Ben Gerſom particularly mentions in the oath of witneſs, or the pollution of the ſanctuary, or the pollution of its holy things, or a vain oath: that he ſhall confeſs that he hath ſinned in that thing; not make confeſſion of ſin in general, but of that particular ſin he is guilty of; and this he was to do before he brought his offering, or at leaſt at the time of his bringing it; for without confeſſion his offering would be of no avail; and which he made, as Ben Gerſom ſays, by laying his hand on the head of the offering, thereby ſignifying and declaring his guilt, and that he deſerved to die as the creature would, about to be ſacrificed for him; or he might make a verbal confeſſion and acknowledgment of his offence. Fagius, from the Jewiſh writers, has given us the form of it, which was this; "I beſeech "thee, O Lord, I have ſinned, I have done wick-"edly, I have tranſgreſſed before thee, ſo and ſo "have I done; and lo I repent, and am aſhamed "of what I have done, and I will never do the "ſame again." Though perhaps this form may be of too modern a date, yet doubtleſs ſomewhat like this was pronounced; and they make confeſſion of ſin neceſſary to all ſacrifices, and ſay [x] atonement is not made by them without repentance and confeſſion.

℣. 6. And he ſhall bring his treſpaſs-offering unto the Lord, for the ſin which he hath ſinned, &c.] To make atonement for it; this was typical of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, whoſe ſoul was made an offering for ſin, Aſham a treſpaſs-offering, Iſ. liii. 10. where the ſame word is uſed as here: a female from the flock, [r] Miſn. Sotah, c. 7. 1. [s] Maimon. & Bartenora in Ib. T. Bab. Sotah, fol. 33. 1. [t] T. Bab. Shebuot, fol. 33. 2. & 34. 1.

[u] Maimon. Hilchot, Shebuot, c. 9. §. 3. [w] Miſn. Shebuot, c. 2. §. 5.
[x] Maimon. Hilchot Teſhubah, c. 1. §. 1.

flock, a lamb, or kid of the goats for a sin-offering; it is generally thought there was a difference between a trespass-offering and a sin-offering; but it is not easy to say wherein the difference lies; and what has been observed by learned men is not very satisfactory: and certain it is, that the same offering is here called both a trespass-offering and a sin-offering; and such as were men of substance, and capable of it, were to bring a female lamb or kid, it being for sins of ignorance, a sacrifice of a less value was admitted; yet it must be a lamb, typical of Christ the Lamb of God; and atonement cannot be made, even for sins of ignorance, but by the blood and sacrifice of Christ: and the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his sin; that is, by offering his sacrifice for him, which was a type of the atonement made by the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without spot and blemish.

℣. 7. And if he be not able to bring a lamb, &c.] He is not possessed of a lamb, nor able to purchase one: then he shall bring for the trespass which he hath committed, two turtle doves, or two young pigeons, unto the Lord; either the one or the other; these were common, and in great plenty in the land of Israel, as Maimonides [y] observes, which was the reason of their being ordered, since to be had cheap. The turtle doves were larger, as the Targum of Jonathan calls them, being older, and the pigeons lesser, being young; or the one were grown, and not little, and the other little, and not grown, as the Jewish writers [z] observe; and either of them were proper emblems of Christ in his purity, innocence and meekness, by whom an atonement is made both for the rich and poor: one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; one of the turtle-doves or pigeons, which soever were brought was offered up as a sin-offering, and the other that remained was offered up as a burnt-offering; so that the poor man had two sorts of offerings out of what he brought, when the rich had but one; and may denote the compleatness of his sacrifice, and the full atonement made by it.

℣. 8. And he shall bring them unto the priest, &c.] Either two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons: who shall offer that which is for the sin-offering first; that which is chosen for it, as the Targum of Jonathan; and this choice was made, not by the priest, but by the man that brought the offering, who separated it, and said, lo, this is a sin-offering, and after that said, lo, this is a burnt-offering [a]; the sin-offering was offered first, which was to make atonement for sin, and then the burnt-offering, to denote the divine acceptance of it; and so Ben Gersom observes, it was proper to offer the sin-offering first, to atone for his sin, that after he (God) was appeased this way, he might receive his gift; for the burnt-offering was as a gift. Jarchi compares it to an advocate, who first goes in to appease, and when he has appeased, the gift goes in after him: and wring off his head from his neck, but shall not divide it asunder; be it a turtle-dove or a young pigeon, so it was to be served; the head was not to be separated from the body, but was nipped by the nail of the priest in the neck, as it might be rendered [b]; over against the neck, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan render it; the hinder part, or what is behind the throat, as Jarchi and Ben Melech interpret it; so that the part which was nipped was the neck; and this nip was made so large, as that the blood was let out by it, as appears from the following verse, and yet the head was not divided from the body; the head hung by a piece of skin on the back part; of the manner of performing this, and the mystery of it, see the note on ch. i. 15.

℣. 9. And he shall sprinkle of the blood of the sin-offering upon the side of the altar, &c.] Or wall [c]; it is asked [d], "what is the wall at which the rest "of the blood is wrung out? this is the lower "wall, namely, the half of the height of the altar below, under the thread (of scarlet that goes "round the middle of the altar) that the rest of "the blood may be squeezed at the bottom of the "altar, and because of this the sin-offering of the "fowl is below," that is, the sprinkling of its blood. And so Ben Gersom observes; from hence we learn, says he, that the sprinkling of the sin-offering of the fowl was in the lower part of the altar; and I think this sprinkling, adds he, was not in the length, but in the breadth: and the rest of the blood shall be wrung out at the bottom of the altar; the blood sprinkled was that which dropped from it, when nipped by the priest; this here was squeezed out by him, and was shed at the foot of the altar; so that the altar had all the blood, and nothing but the blood of the fowl, all the rest belonged to the priest [e]: this might be an emblem both of the drops of blood which fell from Christ in the garden, and of the shedding of his blood upon the cross, whereby remission of sin was obtained, and atonement made: it is a sin-offering; an offering whereby sin was typically expiated and atoned.

℣. 10. And he shall offer the second for a burnt-offering, according to the manner, &c.] That is, the second turtle dove or young pigeon, after the other was made a sin-offering; and the manner according to which this was offered, was not according to the rite or manner of the bird chosen first for a sin-offering, as the Targum of Jonathan, but according to the burnt-offering of the fowl in ch. i. 15, 16, 17. so Jarchi and Ben Gersom: and the priest shall make an atonement for him, for his sin which he had sinned, and it shall be forgiven him; upon the atonement made; and so forgiveness of sin with God proceeds upon the atonement made by the blood of Christ, Heb. ix. 22. God never took one step towards it, without a regard to Christ the propitiation for sin; he promised it with a view to him; there is no instance of pardon under the Old Testament but in this way, and God always has respect to Christ in pardon, it is for his sake; and this way of forgiveness best provides for the glory of the divine perfections; there can be no better way, or infinite wisdom would have used it; there could be no other way, considering the council, and covenant of peace; to pardon, without atonement and satisfaction, is not consistent with the purity, justice and veracity of God; and to observe this great truth, the phrase is afterwards frequently repeated.

℣. 11. But if he be not able to bring two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, &c.] Which is supposing a man to be in the poorest circumstances he can well be; and such is the grace and goodness of God, that he has provided for the atonement and forgiveness of the poorest, as well as of the rich:

[y] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 46. Zebachim, c. 10. §. 4.

[z] Maimon. & Bartenora in Misn. Cholin, c. 1. §. 5. [b] Vid. Noldium, p. 611. N°. 1637. Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piscator, Drusius; Zebachim, c. 6. §. 4.

[c] קיר ע' אמו של הטוכ, Sept. super parietem, ad parietem, Tigurine version. [d] Maimon. in Misn. [e] Misn. ib. [a] Ib. in Misn.

rich: then he that hath ſinned ſhall bring for his offering the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a ſin-offering; which is an omer, Exod. xvi. 36. and is as much as a man can eat in one day, as Aben Ezra remarks: he ſhall put no oil upon it, neither ſhall he put any frankincenſe thereon; to diſtinguiſh it from the common meat-offering, which had both, ch. iii. 1. and to make it as eaſy, and as little chargeable to the poor as poſſible, both oil and frankincenſe being things of value; and ſome think that theſe were prohibited, to ſhew that atonement and forgiveneſs, and even the ſalvation of men, are not owing to grace in them, comparable to oil, or to their prayers, ſignified by frankincenſe, and ſo to any or all of their duties, but to Chriſt alone, and his atoning ſacrifice: or theſe were forbidden, becauſe emblems of joy and gladneſs, and therefore not ſo proper at a confeſſion of ſin, and humiliation for it: or rather to ſhew how diſagreeable and offenſive ſin was to the Lord, being contrary to grace, of which oil was an emblem, and far from being acceptable to him, which frankincenſe might ſignify; and therefore being prohibited, might denote how unacceptable, yea nauſeous, ſin is to him; which agrees with the reaſon given; for it is a ſin-offering, and therefore muſt not be honoured, as Jarchi, or muſt have every thing removed from it that is beautiful and amiable, as Ben Gerſom, ſuch as oil and frankincenſe.

℣. 12. Then ſhall he bring it to the prieſt, &c.] The flour juſt as it was, not kneaded and made into a cake, as appears by what follows: and the prieſt ſhall take his handful of it; as much of the flour as he could hold in one hand: even a memorial thereof; to bring to mind his ſin, and the goodneſs of God in admitting of an offering for it, and forgiving it upon that: and burn it on the altar, according to the offerings made by fire unto the Lord; in the ſame manner as other burnt-offerings were made: it is a ſin-offering; or an expiatory ſacrifice for ſin.

℣. 13. And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him, &c.] By burning the handful of flour brought by him, as an emblem of the painful ſufferings of Chriſt, whereby he made atonement for the ſins of his people: as touching his ſin that he hath ſinned in one of theſe; for whatſoever ſin he had committed in any of the above caſes, ℣. 1, 2, 3, 4: and it ſhall be forgiven him; upon the foot of the atonement made; ſee the note on ℣. 10: and the remnant ſhall be the prieſt's, as a meat-offering; the whole tenth part of an ephah of fine flour was the prieſt's, excepting the handful he took and burnt, juſt as in the caſe of a common meat-offering, ch. ii. 3.

℣. 14. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Out of the tabernacle of the congregation, ch. i. 1. he continued to ſpeak to him: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 15. If a ſoul commit a treſpaſs, and ſin through ignorance in the holy things of the Lord, &c.] In the payment of tithes, or offering firſt-fruits as he ought, by withholding them, or any part of them, or through eating of ſacred things he ought not: then ſhall he bring for his treſpaſs unto the Lord; for it being a treſpaſs in holy things, it might be properly called a treſpaſs to or againſt the Lord; unleſs this is rather to be underſtood of the offering brought to the Lord for his treſpaſs as follows: a ram without blemiſh out of the flocks; out of the ſheep and not the goats, as Ben Gerſom obſerves; and this being for ſacrifice, or for a treſpaſs in holy things, though ignorantly done, an offering of more value is required than for ſins of ignorance in other caſes, ℣. 6. a type of Chriſt, who for his ſtrength may be compared to a ram, and to one without blemiſh, for his purity and holineſs, and to a choice one, ſelected out of the flock, for his being choſen out from among the people: with thy eſtimation by ſhekels of ſilver, after the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, for a treſpaſs offering; that is, either an eſtimation was to be taken of the damage done in the holy things, an account of which was to be brought along with the ram, and the coſt paid; or elſe the ram brought was to be of the value of, or worth ſhekels of ſilver; and the leaſt of many, being two, as Aben Ezra and Ben Gerſom obſerve, the ſenſe is, that the ram brought for the treſpaſs-offering ſhould be at leaſt worth two ſhekels of ſilver; ſo Jarchi and Ben Gerſom.

℣. 16. And he ſhall make amends for the harm that he hath done in the holy thing, &c.] This ſeems to favour the ſenſe of the word eſtimation, in the preceding verſe, as underſtood of the eſtimate of the damage done in the holy things, which belonged to the prieſts, for which recompence was to be made according as the damage was valued: and ſhall add the fifth part thereto, and give it unto the prieſt; beſides paying for the whole damage, he was to give a fifth part of the whole to the prieſt; which was ordered to ſhew the evil nature of the ſin of ſacrilege, tho' done ignorantly, and to make men careful and cautious of committing it: the fifth part, according to the Jewiſh writers [f], is the fourth part of that of which a man eats, (viz. of the holy things) which is the fifth of the whole; thus, if he eats the value of a penny, he pays the penny and the fourth part of one, and ſo it is in all the fifths mentioned in the law; or, as Ben Gerſom on the place expreſſes it, if he has had profit by the holy things to the value of four ſhekels, he pays five ſhekels; for the fifth of the ſhekels they add the fifth part to the four ſhekels; in this he obſerves, all are alike, the prieſt, the anointed, the prince, and a private perſon, for the law makes no difference between them in this: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him with the ram of the treſpaſs-offering; by offering it up for him: and it ſhall be forgiven him; after he has paid the whole damage, and a fifth part beſides, and offered the treſpaſs-offering for atonement; ſee the note on ℣. 10.

℣. 17. And if a ſoul ſin, and commit any of theſe things which are forbidden to be done by the commandments of the Lord, &c.] Reſpecting holy things: though he wiſt it not; or did not know that he had tranſgreſſed a negative command: yet he is guilty, and ſhall bear the iniquity; be chargeable with guilt, and is liable to puniſhment, and muſt make an atonement and ſatisfaction for it; ſee Luke xii. 48.

℣. 18. And he ſhall bring a ram without blemiſh out of the flock, &c.] See the note on ℣. 15. with thy eſtimation for a treſpaſs-offering to the prieſt; along with the offering was to be brought an eſtimate of whatſoever damage had been done through the breach of any of the commands of God, where damage could take place, that ſo recompence be made as before directed; or elſe the ram brought was to be valued, and examined whether it was worth two ſhekels of ſilver, as before explained, ℣. 15. but no fifth was required as in the former caſes: and the prieſt ſhall make atonement for him concerning his ignorance wherein he erred, and wiſt it it not, and it ſhall be forgiven him; ſee the note on ℣. 10. this is what the Jews call Aſham Talui, doubtful treſpaſs-offering.

[f] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Trumot, c. 6. 1.

℣. 19. It is a treſpaſs-offering, &c.] An offering for a treſpaſs committed: he hath certainly treſpaſſed againſt the Lord; though committed ignorantly, and therefore an offering muſt be brought; for no ſin of any kind muſt be over-looked, paſſed by, or forgiven, without a ſacrifice, or without atonement made by ſacrifice: or, he ſhall offer a treſpaſs-offering to the Lord, or before the Lord, as Onkelos; or before the Word of the Lord, as Jonathan; and Maimonides out of Siphri [g] obſerves, that whereas it is ſaid, a treſpaſs or treſpaſs-offering to the Lord, it was not lawful for the prieſts to eat of it.

CHAP. VI.

THIS chapter treats of the treſpaſs-offering for ſins committed knowingly and wilfully, ℣. 1—7. and of the law of the burnt-offering, and of cleanſing the altar of burnt-offering, and keeping the fire burning on it continually, ℣. 8—13. and of the meat-offering, which is repeated with ſome additional circumſtances, ℣. 14—18. and of the offering at the conſecration of the high-prieſt, ℣. 19—23. and of the ſin-offering, and where to be killed and eaten, and by whom, ℣. 24—30.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Continuing his ſpeech with him, for the ſame law of the treſpaſs-offering is ſtill diſcourſed of, only with reſpect to different perſons: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. If a ſoul ſin, and commit a treſpaſs againſt the Lord, &c.] All ſin is againſt the Lord, contrary to his nature and will, and a tranſgreſſion of his law; but ſome ſins are more apparently ſo than others, and againſt which he expreſſes greater indignation and abhorrence, being attended alſo with very aggravating circumſtances, as theſe that follow; which are ſuch as are not only contrary to the will of God, but to the good of ſociety, and tend to the ſubverſion of it, of which he is the founder and ſupporter, and eſpecially when he is ſworn by, and appealed to as a witneſs, in a caſe not only injurious but falſe: and lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep; whether money or goods, or any living creature, ſheep, cow, horſe, &c. and ſhould deny that ever any thing was delivered to him, and take his oath upon it; which is a very grievous crime, and not to go unpuniſhed, as was known by the light of nature, and declared by the heathen oracle [h]; and yet there was to be a treſpaſs-offering to make atonement for ſuch a ſin: Jarchi thinks, by his neighbour is meant a third perſon between them; but if that third perſon was a witneſs of the goods being delivered, there would have been no occaſion of an oath, as follows: the caſe ſuppoſed ſeems to be, when any thing was delivered to the care and cuſtody of another, without the knowledge of any but the perſon that delivered it, and he to whom it was delivered; who retaining it for his own uſe, embezzling the goods, and acting the unfaithful part, affirms to the owner, he never had any thing of him, and ſo lies to him, and to that lie adds an oath of perjury: or in fellowſhip; in partnerſhip; as for inſtance, having received money belonging to them both, denies he ever received any, and ſo cheats his partner of what was his due, and being put to his oath, takes it: or, in putting of the hand [i], as perſons uſually do when they enter into fellowſhip or partnerſhip, they give each other their hand in token of it; or in putting any thing into the hand, as money to trade with, and he denies he received any; or by way of purchaſe for any thing bought, and the perſon of whom the purchaſe is made, affirms the purchaſer never put any thing into his hand, or paid him any thing, but inſiſts upon being paid again; or, in a way of lending, as Jarchi and Ben Gerſom, becauſe then money is put into the hand of him that receives it, and in the caſe ſuppoſed, the borrower denies that ever any was put into his hand, or he borrowed any; and being called upon to ſwear, ſwears falſly: or in a thing taken away by violence; without the will and knowledge of the owner; privately and ſecretly, but being ſuſpected, is challenged with it, and denying it, is made to ſwear, which he does falſly: or hath deceived his neighbour; cheated him in trade and commerce, over-reached him in buſineſs, extorted money from him; or by calumny and falſe accuſation, got any thing out of his hands, ſee Luke xix. 8. or by detaining the wages of the hireling; ſo Jarchi and Ben Gerſom.

℣. 3. Or have found that which was loſt, and lieth concerning it, &c.] Who having found any thing loſt, at once concludes it his own, and converts it to his own uſe, never enquiring after the proprietor of it, or taking any method to get knowledge of him, and reſtore it to him; but ſo far from that, being ſuſpected of finding it, and charged with it denies it: Maimonides [k] gives a reaſon why a loſt thing ſhould be reſtored, not only becauſe ſo to do, is a virtue in itſelf praiſe-worthy, but becauſe it has a reciprocal utility; for if you do not reſtore another's loſt things, neither will your own be reſtored to you: and ſweareth falſely; which is to be underſtood, not of the laſt caſe only, but of all the reſt, or of any one of them, as it follows: in any of all theſe that a man doth ſinning therein; by unfaithfulneſs in a truſt, cheating, cozening, lying, and falſe ſwearing.

℣. 4. Then it ſhall be, becauſe he hath ſinned and is guilty, &c.] Owns his guilt thro' remorſe of conſcience, and makes a confeſſion of it; or otherwiſe upon conviction, without ſuch confeſſion he was to pay double, ſee Exod. xxii. 7, 8, 9. whereas, in this caſe it is only ordered, that he ſhall reſtore that which he took violently away; whether money, goods, or cattle: or the thing which he hath deceitfully gotten; by over-reaching, by extortion, by falſe accuſation, or detention of wages: or that which was delivered him to keep; in which he was unfaithful to his truſt, be it what it will: or the loſt thing which he found; and denied he had it.

℣. 5. Or all that about which he hath ſworn falſly, &c.] In all and each of the above caſes, in which he had committed a treſpaſs and denied it, and to the denial adds a falſe oath, and yet after all acknowledges it: he ſhall even reſtore it in the principal; whatſoever he has embezzled, or cheated another

2

[g] Maimon in Miſn. Temurah, c. 7. §. 6.
[i] בתשומת יד in poſitione manus, Montanus.
[h] Spartano cuidam reſpondit, &c. Juvenal. Satyr. 13. prope finem.
[k] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 40.

another of, or detained from the right owner, the whole of that was to be restored: and shall add the fifth part more thereto; to the principal, see ch. v. 16. but Maimonides [l] says, this was an instruction to add a fifth to a fifth; and Aben Ezra takes the word to be plural, and observes, that the least of many is two, and so two fifths were to be added to the principal, but the first sense seems best: and give it unto him to whom it appertaineth; as, to his neighbour, who had deposited any thing in his hands; or his partner, he had any ways wronged; or whomsoever he had defrauded in any respect; or the proprietor of lost goods; Ben Gersom observes, it was not to be given to his son, nor to his messenger: in the case of taking any thing away by violence, though but the value of a farthing, it is said, that he shall be obliged to bring it after him (from whom he has taken it) even unto Media, (should he be there) he shall not give it to his son, nor to his messenger, but he may give it to the messenger of the Sanhedrim; and if he dies, he must return it to his heirs [m]: in the day of his trespass-offering; when he brings that, but restoration must first be made: the Targum of Jonathan renders it, in the day he repents of his sin: and so Aben Ezra interprets it, "in the day he returns "from his trespass;" when he owns and confesses it, is sorry for it, and determines to do so no more. Maimonides observes [n], that one that takes away any thing by violence, (which is one of the cases supposed) is not mulcted so much as a thief; he only restores the principal; for the fifth part is for his false oath; the reasons of which are, because robbery is not so frequently, and is more easily committed, and is more open, and against which persons may guard and make resistance, and the robber is more known than a thief who steals secretly; see Exod. xxii. 1.

℣. 6. And he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the Lord, &c.] That is, to the tabernacle of the Lord, to the altar of the Lord in it, and to his priest ministring therein, as it follows: a ram without blemish out of the flock, with thy estimation, for a trespass-offering unto the priest; the same offering that was ordered for a trespass through ignorance, ch. v. 16. typical of the sacrifice of Christ offered up both for sins of ignorance and wilful transgressions, for his blood cleanses from all sin, see the note there; the phrase, with thy estimation, used there also, is here interpreted by Ben Gersom, of two shekels, the value of the ram was to be of, brought for the trespass-offering.

℣. 7. And the priest shall make an atonement for him before the Lord, &c.] By offering the ram he brought, by which a typical, but not real atonement was made; for the blood of bulls and goats, of sheep and rams, could not take away sin; but as they were types of Christ, and led to him, the lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world: and it shall be forgiven him, for any thing of all that he hath done in trespassing therein; any and every one of the above sins, with all the aggravations of them, were forgiven, upon the atonement made, though they were so enormous; and indeed all manner of sin is forgiven for Christ's sake, except the sin against the holy Ghost: and L'Empereur [o] rightly observes, against the Socinians, who deny that sacrifices were offered for crimes very grievous, that these were of such a nature; for what more vile than unfaithfulness in a trust, than cheating and cozening, stealing, lying, and perjury?

℣. 8. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] It may be after some intermission, or pause made; for some here begin a new chapter, and indeed a new section here begins in the Hebrew copies: saying; as follows:

℣. 9. Command Aaron and his sons, &c.] Who were nominated, selected, and appointed to the priest's office, though not yet consecrated to it and invested with it, see ch. viii. 1. saying, this is the law of the burnt-offering; of the daily sacrifice, morning and evening: it is the burnt-offering, because of, or for the burning upon the altar all night unto the morning; as there was nothing offered on the altar of burnt-offering after the evening-daily sacrifice, nor any thing before the morning-daily sacrifice; it was the more difficult to keep the fire of the altar burning in the night; wherefore a slow fire was used in the evening-sacrifice, and several things remained to be burnt in the night: so Maimonides [p] says, the remainder of the fat of the members were burnt all night until the pillar of the morning: and the fire of the altar shall be burning in it; not without it, as Aben Ezra observes, but on it; that is, should be ever burning on it, night and day, as it is after declared.

℣. 10. And the priest shall put on his linen garment, &c.] His measure [q], as the word signifies, a garment that was just the measure of his body, and exactly fitted it; it was a sort of a shirt, which he wore next his body, and reached down to his feet; and in this he always officiated, and was an emblem of the purity and holiness of Christ our high priest, who was without sin, and so a fit person to take away the sin of others, by offering up himself without spot to God: and his linen breeches shall he put upon his flesh; to cover his nakedness; that indecency might be prevented, and that he might not be exposed to ridicule; and tho' these two garments are only mentioned, yet the wise men say, the word put on, includes the bonnet and the girdle; for the removing of the ashes from the altar, which is the thing he was to be thus cloathed to do, was done in the four garments, though the scripture mentions but two [r]: and take up the ashes which the fire hath consumed, with the burnt-offering on the altar; this was the first thing the priests did in a morning, and which in after-times, they cast lots for, and the first lot was for this service, and which was performed very early [s]; "every day they cleansed or swept the altar, at "cock-crowing or near it, whether before or after, "and on the day of atonement at midnight, and "at the feasts from the time of the first watch:" and he shall put them beside the altar; without, at the corner of the altar, as Aben Ezra, on the east-side of it; so says Jarchi, the priest takes a full censer of the innermost consumptions; (that is, of the innermost parts of the sacrifice reduced to ashes) and puts them in the east of the rise of the altar; or, as by another [t] expressed, he takes the ashes in a censer, more or less, and lays them down at the east of the rise of the altar, and there leaves them, and this is the beginning of the morning service: and we are told by another writer [u], that there was a place called, the house of ashes,

[l] In Misn Trumot, c. 6. §. 1.
[m] Misnah Bava Kama, c. 9. §. 5.
[n] Ut supra, c. 41.
[o] In Misn. Bava Kama, c. 9. §. 5.
[p] In Misn. Beracot, c. 1. §. 1.
[q] מדן, est מד proprie vestis commensurata corpori, Munster; so Jarchi.
[r] Maimon. in Misn. Tamid, c. 5. §. 3
[s] Misn. Yoma, c. 1. §. 8.
[t] Bartenora in Ib.
[u] Jacob. Jud. Leo. Tabnitid Hecal, No. 90. apud Wagenseil. Sotah, p. 426.

aſhes, and it was at the eaſt of the riſe of the altar, at a diſtance from the foot of it ten cubits and three hands breadth; where the prieſt, before they began to ſacrifice, laid the aſhes of the ſacrifices, and of the candleſtick, and of the altar of incenſe, and of the offering of the fowl that were caſt out.

℣. 11. And he ſhall put off his garments, &c.] Thoſe before mentioned, he is ſaid to put on: and put on other garments; not common garments or lay-habits, what the prieſts wore when they were not on duty; for, as Ben Gerſom ſays, theſe were prieſtly garments, though meaner than the firſt, or thoſe that were put off: and ſo Jarchi ſays, they were worſe than they were: it ſeems as if they were ſuch that were ſpotted and dirty, and threadbare, almoſt worn out, and only fit for ſuch ſort of work as to carry out aſhes: and ſo Maimonides[w] obſerves, that theſe other garments are not to be underſtood of common garments; but of ſuch that are meaner in value and eſteem, for both are holy garments; and indeed nothing belonging to the prieſtly office was to be performed but with the prieſtly garments, and they were only to be worn by the prieſts whilſt in ſervice: and carry forth the aſhes; when theſe gathered on a heap were become large, as Jarchi ſays; and there was no room for the pile of wood, they carried them out from thence; and this he obſerves, was not obligatory every day, but the taking of them up, as in the preceding verſe, they were bound to every day: and theſe they carried without the camp, unto a clean place; for though they were aſhes, yet being aſhes of holy things, were not to be laid in an unclean place, or where unclean things were: as the burnt-offering was a type of Chriſt in his ſufferings and death, enduring the fire of divine wrath in the room and ſtead of his people; ſo the carrying forth the aſhes of the burnt-offering, and laying them in a clean place, may denote the burial of the body of Chriſt without the city of Jeruſalem, wrapped in a clean linen cloth and laid in a new tomb, wherein no man had been laid, Matt. xxvii. 59, 60. Luke xxiii. 53.

℣. 12. And the fire upon the altar ſhall be burning in it, it ſhall not be put out, &c.] There were three fires, or piles of wood for fire continually; the firſt was a large one, on which the daily ſacrifice was burnt; the ſecond leſs, and called the pile of the incenſe, becauſe they took from it fire in a cenſer to burn the morning and evening-incenſe; and the third was only for preſerving the fire that it might not go out; and of this it is written, Lev. vi. 12.[x] and Maimonides[y] obſerves, that ſome ſay, the firſt of theſe is meant by the burning all night, ℣. 9. and the ſecond, by the fire of the altar burning in it, ℣. 12. but his own ſenſe is, the third is meant by it; and in the ſenſe of R. Joſes, theſe three fires were all burning upon the altar; the firſt was towards the eaſt ſide of the altar, the ſecond towards the ſouth-weſt, as being nearer to the riſe of the altar, where the prieſts were, and the third was made in any part of the altar as was thought fit[z]; and this is the fire not to be put out, and he that quenched it, though but one coal, was to be beaten, yea, though it be brought down from the altar[a]: and the prieſt ſhall burn wood in it every morning; until the fourth hour of the day, according to the Targum of Jonathan; that is, unto ten o'clock in the morning: and lay the burnt-offering in order upon it; both morning and evening, and as often as any ſacrifices of that kind were offered up: and he ſhall burn thereon the fat of the peace-offerings; that which was upon the inwards and covered them, and upon the kidneys, and flanks, and caul of the liver; ſee ch. iii. 3, 4.

℣. 13. The fire ſhall ever be burning upon the altar, &c.] This was what firſt fell from heaven, ch. ix. 24. and which in after ages was maintained by conſtant fuel put unto it, there being every day burnt-offerings upon it; which was an emblem of the love of Chriſt to his people, which is ever in a flame and burning, and can never be quenched by the many waters of their ſins and iniquities; nor by all the ſufferings he underwent to atone for them; nor by all the meanneſs and afflictions they are attended with; his love is fervent towards them, and always the ſame: and alſo of their love to him, which is unquenchable by the perſecutions of men, by afflictions by the hand of God, by divine deſertions, by ſatan's temptations, or their own corruptions: it likewiſe may be an emblem of the graces of the Spirit of God in the hearts of his people, which have both light and heat in them; and though they are ſometimes very low as to exerciſe, yet are in a wonderful manner preſerved amidſt great oppoſitions made unto them from within and from without; and may alſo be a ſymbol of the word of God, ſometimes compared to fire for its light and heat, and may be ſignified by the fire on the altar for its perpetuity, which continues and abides, notwithſtanding the attempts of men and devils to get it out of the world; and though the miniſters of it die, that lives, and has been preſerved in the worſt of times, and will burn moſt clearly, and ſhine moſt brightly in the end of the world. This perpetual fire may alſo point at the prayers of ſaints, the fervency of them, and their perſeverance in them; or rather to the efficacy and acceptance of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which always continues; nor may it be amiſs applied to the afflictions of God's people, which conſtantly attend them in this world, and they muſt expect to have whilſt in it; and even to the wrath of God on wicked men to all eternity, and which is the fire that cannot be quenched: it ſhall never go out; as it is highly probable it never did, until the deſtruction of the temple by Nebuchadnezzar; tho' the author of the ſecond book of the Maccabees, ch. i. 19. pretends that ſome devout prieſts, who were carried captives into Perſia, hid the fire of the altar privily in the hollow of a pit, where was no water, and in which it was kept ſure and unknown to men, and was found and reſtored in the times of Nehemiah, ℣. 20, 21, 22. but this is contrary to what the Jews always aſſert[b], that the fire from heaven was wanting in the ſecond temple; and yet from the account Joſephus[c] gives of a feſtival called Xylophoria, or the feaſt of the wood-carrying, it ſeems to have been then in being, and great care was taken to preſerve it that it might not go out; for, he ſays, at that feaſt it is a cuſtom for all to bring wood to the altar, that ſo there might never be wanting fuel for the fire, for it always remained unextinguiſhed: as to what ſome have obſerved out of Diodorus Siculus[d], that Antiochus

[w] In Miſn. Tamid, c. 5. §. 3. & in Yoma, c. 4. §. 6. [x] Maimon. Hilchot Tamidin, c. 2. §. 4. Bartenora in Miſn. Tamid c. 2. §. 4. [y] In Ib. §. 5. & in Yoma, c. 4. §. 6. [z] Maimon. Hilchot Tamidin, c. 2. §. 7, 8, 9. [a] Ibid. §. 6 [b] T. Hieroſ. Taaniot, fol. 65. 1. T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 21. 2. [c] De Bello Jud. l. 2. c. 17. §. 6. [d] Eclog. 1. ex l. 34. p. 902.

chus Epiphanes, when he went into the temple, quenched this fire; it appears to be a miſtake; for Diodorus does not ſay that he put out the fire of the altar, but that he extinguiſhed the immortal lamp, as it was called by them (the Jews) which was always burning in the temple; by which he plainly means the lamp in the candleſtick, and perhaps, what the Jews call the weſtern lamp, which was always burning, and was the middle lamp bending to the weſt, and to which the reſt bent: the Heathens in many places, imitated this perpetual fire: the Brahmans among the Indians, ſpeak of fire falling from heaven, kept by them on everlaſting hearths, or in fire-pans [e] for that purpoſe: the Perſians had their perpetual fire, having a great opinion of that element: in the march of Darius againſt Alexander, it is obſerved by the hiſtorian [f], that the fire which the Perſians call ſacred and eternal, was placed on altars of ſilver, and he is ſaid to adjure his ſoldiers by the gods of their country, and by the eternal fire on the altars, &c. to reſcue the Perſian name and nation from the laſt degree of reproach [g]: the Grecians have many traces of this continual fire on the altar, among them: at Mantinia, as Pauſanias [h] relates, was a temple of Ceres and Proſerpina, where a fire was kindled, and great care taken that it might not be extinguiſhed; and in the temple of Pan, a fire burned which was never quenched: and the ſame writer ſays [i], with the Eleans was an altar which had fire continually burning on it night and day: and Ælianus [k] makes mention of an altar of Venus at Eryce in Sicily, which burnt night and day; and of which, he ſays many things wonderful and fabulous: and it is well known, that the Romans had their goddeſs Veſta, whom Velleius Paterculus [l] calls the keeper of the perpetual fires; and there were certain virgins, called the veſtal virgins, whoſe buſineſs it was to take care that the fire never went out; and is by Virgil [m] called the eternal fire: and Veſta itſelf is thought by ſome learned men to be the ſame with אש־יה Eſh-jah, the fire of Jehovah: now theſe were all ſatanical imitations of the perpetual fire on the altar of God.

℣. 14. And this is the law of the meat-offering, &c.] Or the rules to be obſerved concerning that, for which, though directions are given, ch. ii. 1, &c. yet is here repeated with ſome additions to it: the ſons of Aaron ſhall offer it before the Lord; being brought unto them by the children of Iſrael: before the altar; or at the face of it, for what was properly offered was burnt upon it, as in the following verſe: for it ſhould be rather rendered in, or on the altar [n]; the face of it is the top of it, on which every ſacrifice was offered, and not before it.

℣. 15. And he ſhall take of it his handful, &c.] See the note on ch. ii. 2.

℣. 16. And the remainder thereof ſhall Aaron and his ſons eat, &c.] What quantity of fine flour the meat-offering conſiſted of is not ſaid; very probably it was left to the offerer to bring what he would, ſince it was a free-will-offering: with unleavened bread ſhall it be eaten in the holy place; or rather, unleavened ſhall it be eaten; for it cannot well be thought that bread of any ſort ſhould be eaten with this offering, which, properly ſpeaking, was itſelf a bread-offering, and ſo it ſhould be called, rather than a meat-offering; and certain it is, that no meat-offering was to be made of leaven, but of fine flour unleavened, and ſo to be eaten, not by the prieſts in their own houſes, but in the tabernacle; not in that part of it properly called the holy place, in diſtinction from the holy of holies, but as it follows: in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation they ſhall eat it; in a room provided in that court for that purpoſe, as afterwards in the temple.

℣. 17. It ſhall not be baked with leaven, &c.] Which, as it was a type of Chriſt may denote his ſincerity both in doctrine, life and converſation; and as it may reſpect the offerer, may ſignify his uprightneſs and integrity, and his being devoid of hypocriſy and inſincerity: I have given it unto thee for their portion of my offerings made by fire; this was part of the proviſion made for the maintenance of the prieſts, as it was but juſt that they that miniſtred at the altar ſhould live of it; and the rather, as the prieſts and levites had no portion and inheritance in the land of Iſrael, and therefore muſt be ſupported in another way, which the Lord took care of: it is moſt holy, as the ſin-offering, and as the treſpaſs-offering; as they, ſo this being devoted to ſacred uſes, what were not conſumed upon the altar belonged to the prieſts, and were their perquiſites, nor might they be appropriated to the uſe of any other.

℣. 18. All the males among the children of Aaron ſhall eat of it, &c.] And they only, for none but they might eat in the holy place, and therefore theſe holy things that were to be eaten there, were only eaten by them; what might be eaten by the prieſts in their own houſes, their wives and daughters ate of, but in the holy place only their males, and a male was one that was thirteen years of age: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever in your generations, concerning the offerings of the Lord made by fire; a ſtatute to laſt till the Meſſiah ſhould come, the true meat or bread-offering; and the bread he gave was his fleſh, and he that eats of it ſhall not die, but live for ever, John vi. 27, 51: every one that toucheth them ſhall be holy; ſignifying, that no one ought to touch them but a holy perſon, one devoted to holy ſervices, the prieſts and their ſons; or whatſoever [o] toucheth them, the diſhes they ate thoſe offerings out of, or the knives they cut them with, were not to be uſed for any thing elſe.

℣. 19. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] At the ſame time the above laws were delivered: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 20. This is the offering of Aaron and his ſons, &c.] That is, of ſuch of them as ſucceeded him in the high-prieſtood, as appears from ℣. 22. ſo Aben Ezra, of him, or of one of his ſons in his room; though ſome think the common prieſts offered the following oblation at the time of their initiation into their office, though they were not anointed as the high-prieſt was, nor obliged as he to continue the offering daily: which they ſhall offer unto the Lord in the day when he is anointed; when he, or any of his ſons in his ſtead, were anointed, for as yet he himſelf was not; ſee ch. viii. 2. ſome, as Aben Ezra obſerves, think that ב in, is inſtead of מ from, and that the ſenſe is, that Aaron, or his ſucceſſor, and every of them, were to offer the following offering perpetually from the time of their being anointed, and put into the office of

[e] Ammian. Marcellin. l. 23. [f] Curt. Hiſt. l. 3. c. 3. [g] Ib. l. 4. c. 14. [h] Arcadica five, l. 8. p. 469. 516. [i] Eliac. 1. five, l. 5. p. 316. [k] Hiſt. Animal. l. 10. c. 50. [l] Hiſt. l. 2. in fine. [m] Vos æterni igneis, &c. Æneid. l. 2. [n] אל פני המזבח in altari, Noldius, p. 82. N°. 591. [o] כל אשר quicquid, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, Druſius.

of the high-prieſt, and which certainly was the caſe, as appears by what follows: the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour perpetual; which was an omer, and as much as a man could eat in one day; and this the high-prieſt offered every day, as long as he lived, or was in his office, and that at his own expence, as Joſephus ſays [p], not all together, but in the following manner: half of it in the morning, and half of it at night; ſo that this conſtantly returned as the morning and evening-ſacrifices did, and followed them. Jarchi ſays of this, that it was the common meat-offering at the conſecration of a prieſt, but the high-prieſt offered it every day; and it appears from the Miſnic writers [q], that this meat-offering conſiſted of 12 cakes, the ſame number as thoſe of the ſhew-bread; the ſame phraſe, a perpetual ſtatute, being uſed of one as the other; and ſix of theſe were offered in the morning, and ſix at evening; and this as the daily ſacrifice had the ſame myſtical meaning, and reſpected the continual efficacy of the ſacrifice of Chriſt.

℣. 21. In a pan it ſhall be made with oil, &c.] With oil-olive, as the Targum of Jonathan; the pan in which it was made was a veſſel that had no covering, nor hollow in the middle, nor any lip or edge, but was a plane, and extended, and the dough made on it was hard and ſtiff, that it might not run off [r]. In the temple was a chamber of thoſe that made the cakes [s], where, as Bartenora [t] obſerves, was prepared the meat-offering, which the high-prieſt offered, one half in the morning, and the other half in the evening: and when it is baked, thou ſhalt bring it in; not thoroughly baked, but very little, as ſays Joſephus, haſtily, ſo that it ſwells and riſes up in bubbles. Jarchi ſays, the flour was firſt mixed in hot water, and after that it was baked in an oven, and then fried in a pan: and the baked pieces of the meat-offering ſhalt thou offer for a ſweet ſavour unto the Lord; or the meat-offering cut in pieces ſhalt thou offer, as both the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem; the 12 cakes were broken each into two, and 12 halves were offered in the morning, and 12 at evening: the manner in which it was done was, the prieſt divided every cake into two by meaſure, ſo that he might offer half in the morning, and half in the evening; and he took the halves and doubled every one of them into two, and broke them, until he found every broken piece doubled into two, and he offered the halves with half the handful of frankincenſe in the morning, and in like manner in the evening [u]: this may have reſpect to the body of Chriſt being broken for us, whereby he became fit food for faith, and an offering of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to God.

℣. 22. And the prieſt of his ſons that is anointed in his ſtead, ſhall offer it, &c.] The ſucceſſor of the high-prieſt: it is a ſtatute for ever unto the Lord; which he by an everlaſting ſtatute appointed to be offered to him by every high-prieſt, until the Meſſiah ſhould come: it ſhall be wholly burnt; of a common meat-offering only a handful was burnt, and the reſt was the prieſt's; ſee ℣. 15, 16.

℣. 23. For every meat-offering for the prieſt ſhall be wholly burnt, &c.] Wherefore the prieſt that offered this for the high-prieſt got nothing by it; he ſerved him gratis: it ſhall not be eaten; neither by himſelf, nor any other prieſt. The prieſts by eating the offerings of the people bore their iniquities, and made atonement for them, Lev. x. 17. but the prieſts might not eat their own ſacrifices, to ſhew that they could not bear their own ſins, and make atonement for them; and this proves the inſufficiency of the legal ſacrifices, and the need there was for one to ariſe of another order to take away ſin; and it is thought by ſome to be typical of the active obedience of Chriſt [w], every day yielded to the law and will of God, and is perfect, as the word here ſignifies, and to be diſtinguiſhed from עולה a burnt-offering.

℣. 24. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Continued his diſcourſe with him: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 25. Speak unto Aaron, and to his ſons, ſaying, this is the law of the ſin-offering, &c.] Or the rules to be obſerved concerning that, beſides what had been already delivered in ch. iv: in the place where the burnt-offering is killed, ſhall the ſin-offering be killed before the Lord; and that was on the north ſide of the altar, ſee ch. i. 11. and ſo Aben Ezra and Ben Gerſom obſerve, that the place of ſlaying every ſin-offering was the north; and ſome have obſerved that mount Calvary, where our Lord was crucified, lay pretty much to the north of Jeruſalem, ſee Pſ. xlviii. 2: it is moſt holy; ſacred to the Lord, offered up to him, and accepted by him, and typical of the moſt pure and holy ſacrifice of Chriſt, who was made ſin, and an offering for ſin, in the room and ſtead of his people.

℣. 26. The prieſt that offereth it for ſin ſhall eat it, &c.] Thereby ſignifying that he bore the ſin of the perſon that brought the offering, and made atonement for it; as a type of Chriſt, who bore the ſins of his people in his own body on the tree, and made ſatisfaction for them; ſee Lev. x. 17. Hoſ. iv. 8. This is to be underſtood not of that ſingle individual prieſt only that was the offerer, but of him and his family; for, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, it was impoſſible for one man to eat all the fleſh of a beaſt at one meal or two; but it means, as he ſays, the family of the prieſt that then officiated, the male part: in the holy place ſhall it be eaten, in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation; within the hangings, as Ben Gerſom's note is, with which the court of the tabernacle was hung and made; in ſome room in that part of the ſanctuary did the prieſt, with his ſons, eat of the holy offerings that were appropriated to them; an emblem of ſpiritual prieſts, believers in Chriſt, feeding in the church upon the proviſions of his houſe, the goodneſs and fatneſs of it.

℣. 27. Whatſoever ſhall touch the fleſh thereof ſhall be holy, &c.] None but holy perſons, ſuch as were devoted to holy ſervices, even the prieſts and their ſons, might touch and eat of the fleſh of the ſin-offering: all that did ſo were ſacred perſons; and even what were uſed in eating it, diſhes and knives, were to be put to no other uſe, not to any common ſervice, or for any thing but holy things; which was done to keep up a veneration for the ſacrifices, and eſpecially for the great ſacrifice they typified, the ſacrifice of Chriſt, whoſe fleſh is meat indeed; and whoever eats of that by faith dwells in Chriſt, and Chriſt dwells in him, John vi. 55, 56: and when there is ſprinkled of the blood thereof upon any garment; the garment of the prieſt that ſlays and offers it: thou ſhalt waſh that whereon it was ſprinkled in the holy place; it was not to be carried out of the tabernacle, and waſhed elſewhere, but in the ſanctuary; either at the laver, where the prieſts waſhed their hands and feet, or in ſome room in the [p] Antiq. l. 3. c. 10. §. 7. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

[q] Miſn. Menachot, c. 6. §. 5. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. Maimon. Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 13. §. 7.
[r] Ib. c. 5. §. 8.
[s] Miſn. Middot, c. 1. §. 4.
[t] In ib.
[u] Maimon. ib. §. 4.
[w] Vid. Michaelis Obſerv. Sacr. Exercitat. 6. p. 57. & Mede in ib. p. 58.

the court for that purpoſe. This was done to preſerve an eſteem and value for the blood of the ſacrifice, as typical of the precious blood of Chriſt.

℣. 28. But the earthen veſſel wherein it is ſodden, ſhall be broken, &c.] That being porous, the liquor in which the ſin-offering was boiled might ſoak into it, and the ſmell of it be retained, and therefore as ſuch veſſels were not very coſtly, they were ordered to be broken; but where the broken pieces were carried and laid, the Jewiſh writers are at a loſs about; for, that veſſels, which had ſerved for holy uſes, ſhould be laid in an open publick place and expoſed, they thought was indecent; and as there might be in a courſe of time great quantities broken, it would look very diſagreeable and unſeemly to have them lie in heaps in the ſanctuary; they therefore have framed a miracle, and conceit that they were ſwallowed up in the ground where they were laid [x]: and if it be ſodden in a brazen pot, it ſhall be both ſcoured and rinſed in water; braſs being more valuable, muſt not be deſtroyed; and beſides the liquor could not ſoak into that, and whatever ſcent it retained was eaſily and ſoon removed by ſcouring and rinſing; the former was with hot water, and the latter with cold, as Ben Gerſom affirms.

℣. 29. And all the males among the prieſts ſhall eat thereof, &c.] As of the meat-offerings, ℣. 18. and this ſhows that not the ſingle prieſt that offered only ate of it, ℣. 26. but his male-children, and not thoſe only, but thoſe of other prieſts then upon duty, or in the court: it is moſt holy; ſee the note on ℣. 25.

℣. 30. And no ſin-offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation to reconcile withal in the holy place, ſhall be eaten, &c.] Every offering, and ſo every ſin-offering, was killed in the court of the tabernacle, on the north ſide of the altar; and the blood of ſome of them, as on the day of atonement, was carried within the vail and ſprinkled on the mercy-ſeat for reconciling the holy place, and making atonement for it; now the fleſh of ſuch ſin-offerings might not be eaten by the prieſts, though all others might: it ſhall be burnt in the fire. Ben Gerſom ſays, it was burnt in its place in the court, in a place prepared there to burn things rejected, and ſanctified; and I think, adds he, this place was on the eaſt ſide, i. e. of the court; but it is clear from Lev. xvi. 27. where the above caſe is mentioned, that it was to be carried out, without the camp, and burnt there. What uſe the apoſtle makes of this, applying it to Chriſt, ſee Heb. xiii. 11—13.

CHAP. VII.

THE ſeveral things contained in this chapter are the law of the treſpaſs-offering, ℣. 1—7. the portion the prieſts had in the burnt-offerings and meat-offerings, ℣. 8—10. the law of the peace offerings, whether by way of thankſgiving, or a vow, or voluntary oblation, ℣. 11—21. the prohibition of fat and blood, ℣. 22—27. the parts the prieſts ſhould have in the peace-offerings, the breaſt and right-ſhoulder, ℣. 28—36. and the chapter is concluded with a recapitulation of the various things contained in this and the preceding chapters, ℣. 37—38.

℣. 1. Likewiſe this is the law of the treſpaſs-offering, &c.] Or the various rites and rules to be obſerved, at the offering of it: the perſons for whom it was to be made are deſcribed in the two preceding chapters, both ſuch that ſinned through ignorance, and knowingly, and here the place and parts of the offering, and how to be diſpoſed of, are declared: it is moſt holy; wholly devoted for ſacred uſe, either to the Lord, or to his prieſts; there were ſome things the Jews call light holy things, and others, moſt holy in the higheſt degree, of this ſort was the treſpaſs-offering.

℣. 2. In the place where they kill the burnt-offering, ſhall they kill the treſpaſs-offering, &c.] See ch. i. 11: and the blood thereof ſhall be ſprinkle round about upon the altar; on the upper part of it. There was a ſcarlet thread that was drawn around the altar in the middle, the blood of ſome of the ſacrifices was ſprinkled below it, and ſome above it, as was the blood of the treſpaſs-offering.

℣. 3. And he ſhall offer of it, all the fat thereof, &c.] To the Lord, that being claimed by him, as in the peace-offerings of the herd, and of the flock, whether a bullock or cow, a lamb or a goat, ch. iii. 3, &c. and in the ſin-offering of the bullock, ch. i. 8: and the rump; or tail, which of ſheep and rams, for the treſpaſs-offering, was very large and fat in thoſe countries; ſee the note on Exod. xxix. 22. and on ch. iii. 9: and the fat that covereth the inwards; called the omentum.

℣. 4. And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, &c.] Which are uſually covered with fat: which is by the flanks; or rather that which is upon them [y]; for this reſpects not the ſituation of the kidneys, nor the fat upon them, but the fat which is upon the flanks, as diſtinct from that, and where there are great collops of it, ſee Job xv. 27: and the caul that is above the liver; the lobe upon the liver, according the Septuagint: with the kidneys, it ſhall he take away; all the fat before mentioned, together with the kidneys, were to be taken away from the ram of the treſpaſs-offering, and burnt, as follows.

℣. 5. And the prieſt ſhall burn them upon the altar, &c.] Fat taken off of the ſeveral parts before mentioned, and the kidneys: which were to be for an offering made by fire unto the Lord; and was acceptable to him, being typical of the offering of Chriſt, which is a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour, bearing the fire of divine wrath in the room and ſtead of his people: it is the treſpaſs offering; an offering for a treſpaſs committed, to make atonement for it; and this part of it, the burning of the fat, was properly the offering to the Lord, all the reſt were the prieſt's, as follows.

℣. 6. Every male among the prieſts ſhall eat thereof, &c.] Of the fleſh of it, after the fat was taken off and burnt, the reſt belonged to the prieſts and their ſons, and to them only, not to their wives and daughters: it ſhall be eaten in the holy place; in the court of the tabernacle, in ſome apartment in it, for that purpoſe as afterwards in the temple; it was not to be carried home to their houſes, for all in the family to partake of, only the prieſts and their ſons were to eat of it: it is moſt holy; and therefore none but ſuch who were devoted to holy ſervices might eat of it; only ſanctified perſons, ſons, true believers, who are made prieſts unto God, have a right to eat of the altar Chriſt, or can eat his fleſh in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and feed upon him by faith, and receive nouriſhment from him, Heb. xiii. 10.

[x] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 21. 1.

[y] אשר על הכסלים & qui eſt ſuper iliis, Tigurine verſion.

℣. 7. As the ſin-offering is, ſo is the treſpaſs-offering, there is one law for them, &c.] The ſame as in ch. vi. 27, 28: the prieſt that maketh atonement therewith ſhall have it; who by offering it made atonement for the treſpaſs of the perſon that brings it, as typical of the atonement by the ſacrifice of Chriſt, he was to have all but what was burnt, for himſelf and his ſons; though no doubt but other prieſts then on duty in the court eat with him.

℣. 8. And the prieſt that offereth any man's burnt-offering, &c.] In which the fleſh was wholly burnt, and nothing of it remained to requite the prieſt for his trouble, as in other offerings: even the prieſt ſhall have to himſelf the ſkin of the burnt-offering, which he hath offered; in ſome caſes the ſkin itſelf was burnt, and then he could have nothing, ſee ch. iv. 11, 12. but in others the ſkin was reſerved for the prieſt. There ſeems to be an emphaſis upon the phraſe to himſelf, and may ſignify, that though in other things other prieſts might partake with him, yet not in this; and ſo Maimonides [z] obſerves, that the ſkin was not given to every prieſt, but to him that offered the ſacrifice; and elſewhere [a] he ſays, the ſkins of light holy things are the owners, but the ſkins of the moſt holy things are the prieſts. And ſome have thought this law has ſome reſpect to the caſe of Adam, and is agreeable thereunto; who having offered ſacrifice according to divine directions given him, had coats made for him and his wife of the ſkins of the ſlain beaſts; and it was uſual with the heathen prieſts to have the ſkins of the ſacrifices, and in which they ſlept in their temples; and others alſo were deſirous of the ſame, in order by dreams or otherwiſe to get knowledge of things future; ſee the note on Amos ii. 8.

℣. 9. And all the meat-offering that is baked in the oven, &c.] Or every meat-offering [b], whether dreſſed in one way or another, and which was done in one or other of theſe three ways, of which this was one, baked in an oven heated for that purpoſe: and all that is dreſſed in the frying-pan; ſuch as we call pan-cakes: and in the pan; which was different from the frying-pan; it ſeems to be what was ſet upon an hearth made hot, and ſoon baked; ſee the note on ch. vi. 21. of theſe three different ways of dreſſing the meat-offering, ſee ch. ii. 4, 5, 7.

℣. 10. And every meat-offering mingled with oil, and dry, &c.] Rather it ſhould be rendered or dry [c]; that is, as Jarchi interprets it, that has no oil in it; the meat-offering in common, let it be dreſſed in what way ſoever, was mingled with oil; but in the poor man's offering for ſin, which was as a meat-offering, no oil was to be put upon it, ch. v. 11. but whether the offering was with or without oil, moiſt or dry, it ſhall all the ſons of Aaron have, one as much as another; it was to be equally divided among them; or a prieſt offering it at one time, was to have the ſame as another prieſt at another time; it was always alike; all that remained, except the handful that was burnt, was the prieſt's.

℣. 11. And this is the law of the ſacrifice of peace-offerings, which he ſhall offer unto the Lord.] Some other laws and rules reſpecting the oblation of them: in ch. iii. an account is given of what they ſhould be, both of the herd and flock, and of the burning of the fat of them; and here the ſeveral ſorts of them are diſtinctly obſerved, what ſhould be offered with them, and the part the prieſt ſhould have of it, and when the fleſh of them ſhould be eaten.

℣. 12. If he offer it for a thankſgiving, &c.] Which Jarchi reſtrains to the wonderful deliverances of ſea-faring perſons, of travellers, and of ſuch as have been confined in priſon, or have laboured under violent diſeaſes and diſorders of body; and ſo Aben Ezra ſeems to underſtand it, only of thankſgivings on account of being delivered out of diſtreſs; but it might be for the common mercies of life, or any particular mercy or inſtance of divine goodneſs, a man was ſenſible of, and thought proper in this way to make an acknowledgement of it: then he ſhall offer with the ſacrifice of thankſgiving; which, if of the herd, was either a bullock or a cow; and if of the flock, was either a lamb or a goat: unleavened cakes mingled with oil; ten of them, according to the Jewiſh writers; the meaſure of flour, of which they were made, were, as Jarchi ſays, five Jeruſalem-ſeah's or peeks, which were ſix of thoſe uſed in the wilderneſs, and made 20 tenths or omers, an omer being the tenth part of an ephah [d]; the oil they were mingled with, as to the quantity of it, was half a log [e]; a fourth part of it was for the cakes, haſtily baked, (ſaid in the latter part of this verſe to be fried) an 8th part for thoſe baked, (intended in this clauſe) and an 8th part for the wafers next mentioned: and unleavened wafers anointed with oil; theſe were a thinner ſort of cakes, made without leaven as the others, but the oil was not mixed with the flour in the making of them, but put upon them when made, and therefore ſaid to be anointed with it; there were alſo ten of theſe: and cakes mingled with oil of fine flour fried; theſe were ſuch as were haſtily and not thoroughly baked, ch. vi. 21. or, as Jarchi and Ben Gerſom, they were mixed and boiled with hot water, as much as was ſufficient; or, according to Maimonides [f], were fried in oil; and there were ten of theſe, in all 30.

℣. 13. Beſides the cakes, &c.] The unleavened cakes, and the unleavened wafers, and the fried cakes; or with theſe, as Aben Ezra and Abendana interpret it: he ſhall offer for his offering, leavened bread, with the ſacrifice of thankſgiving of his peace-offerings; not that this was offered upon the altar, for all leaven was forbidden there, ch. ii. 11. but it was given to the prieſt, that he might have change of bread, and ſuch as was agreeable to him, to eat with the fleſh of the peace-offerings he had a ſhare of, and to the owners alſo; and the whole of this conſiſted of ten cakes likewiſe, as will appear by what Maimonides [g] ſays; he (the offerer) takes 20 tenths of fine flour, and makes 10 leavened, and 10 unleavened; the 10 leavened he makes into 10 cakes, and the 10 unleavened he makes of them 20 cakes alike, ten cakes of every ſort, 10 cakes baked in an oven, 10 cakes wafers, and 10 cakes ſlightly baked.

℣. 14. And of it he ſhall offer one out of the whole oblation, for an heave-offering unto the Lord, &c.] That is, one out of the unleavened cakes, and out of [z] In Miſn. Challah, c. 4. §. 9. [a] In Miſn. Zebachim, c. 12. §. 3. [b] כל מנחה omne munus, Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator, &c. [c] וחרבה vel aridum, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator. [d] Vid. Miſn. Menachot, c. 7. §. 1. & Bartenora in ib. [e] Maimon. Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 9. §. 20. [f] In Miſn. Menachot, c. 9. §. 3. [g] Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c 9. §. 17, 18, 21.

of the unleavened wafers, and out of the cakes fryed, and out of the cakes leavened; lo, ſays Aben Ezra, four at leaſt, and the truth is, adds he, there were 10; and ſo Maimonides [h] ſays, the prieſt took out of all the four cakes, one out of every ſort, as it is ſaid, and of it he ſhall offer one, &c. and it ſhall be the prieſt's that ſprinkleth the blood of the peace-offerings; that is, that part of the cakes and bread which is offered as an heave-offering to the Lord, was the portion of the prieſts; and ſo Maimonides [i] ſays, "the bread waved (rather "heaved) with the thank-offering was eaten by "the prieſts, and the reſt of the bread by the "owners."

℣. 15. And the fleſh of the ſacrifice of his peace-offerings for thankſgiving, &c.] Having given directions about the cakes and bread that went along with the peace-offerings, offered in thankfulneſs for mercies received; inſtructions are next given about eating the fleſh of them; and the order is, that that ſhall be eaten the ſame day that it is offered; partly by him that brought them and his family, and partly by the poor he was to invite to eat thereof; and alſo by the prieſts and Levites, who were to have their ſhare of it; ſee Deut. xii. 11, 12, 17, 18. he ſhall not leave any of it until the morning; which was ordered to encourage liberality to the prieſts, Levites, and others, ſince all muſt be eat up before morning: according to the Jewiſh canons, they might eat it no longer than midnight; by that time it was to be all conſumed; and it is ſaid [k], the wiſe men made an hedge to the law to keep men from ſin.

℣. 16. But if the ſacrifice of his offering be a vow, &c.] Be on account of a vow made, as, that if he was favoured with ſuch and ſuch benefits, or delivered out of ſuch and ſuch troubles and diſtreſſes, then he would offer ſuch a ſacrifice: or a voluntary offering; without any condition or obligation; what from the mere motion of his mind, he freely offered, not being directed to it by any command of God, or under any neceſſity from a vow of his own, and without any view to any future good to be enjoyed: Aben Ezra deſcribes both the one and the other thus; a vow which he uttered with his lips in his diſtreſſes, a voluntary offering, which his ſpirit made him willing to bring, a ſacrifice to God neither for a vow nor for thankſgiving: it ſhall be eaten the ſame day that he offereth his ſacrifice; that is, it ſhall be begun to be eaten then, and if all is eat up it is very well, but they were not obliged in either of theſe caſes, as in the preceding, to eat up all, and leave none to the morning, for it follows: and on the morrow alſo the remainder of it ſhall be eaten; ſome of it, if thought fit, and could not be conveniently eaten, might be kept till the day after the ſacrifice, but no longer.

℣. 17. But the remainder of the fleſh of the ſacrifice on the third day, &c.] What remained of it un-eaten on the ſecond day, and was kept till the third: ſhall be burnt with fire; that it might neither corrupt, nor be put to ſuperſtitious uſes, nor be of any profit in any reſpect; that ſo niggardlineſs and diſtruſt of the care of providence, might be diſcouraged: perhaps ſome reſpect may be had in the type to the reſurrection of Chriſt on the third day, having ſeen no corruption.

℣. 18. And if any of the fleſh of his peace offerings be eaten at all on the third day, &c.] Any part of it even the leaſt: it ſhall not be accepted; as a ſacrifice well pleaſing to God; he will take no delight in it, or expreſs any ſatisfaction therein; but on the contrary, reject it with abhorrence: neither ſhall it be imputed to him that offereth it; the Targum of Jonathan adds, for merit or righteouſneſs; it ſhall not be accounted a righteous action, or the offerer receive any benefit by it: it ſhall be an abomination; to God, the fleſh being kept ſo long, through a ſordid and niggardly diſpoſition: and the ſoul that eateth of it ſhall bear his iniquity; it ſhall not be forgiven him; he ſhall bear the puniſhment of it.

℣. 19. And the fleſh that toucheth any unclean thing ſhall not be eaten, &c.] That is, the fleſh of the peace-offerings; ſhould it be touched by any unclean perſon, man or woman; that was ſo in a ceremonial ſenſe, being profluvious or menſtruous, or having touched any thing unclean, or touched by any unclean creature, as a dog or the like, as it might be while carried from the tabernacle to any of their tents or houſes: it ſhall be burnt with fire; that no profit might be had of it; and this was to make them careful in carrying it from place to place: and as for the fleſh, all that be clean ſhall eat thereof; that are clean in a ceremonial ſenſe; as all that are clean in an evangelic ſenſe, through the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, may, by faith, eat his fleſh and drink his blood. Jarchi obſerves, that whereas it is ſaid, Deut. xii. 27. thou ſhalt eat the fleſh; ſome might object and ſay, that none might eat of the peace-offerings but the owners of them, therefore it is ſaid here, all that be clean ſhall eat; not the owners only, nor the prieſts and Levites only, but whoever the offerer ſhould invite to eat thereof, provided he was but clean.

℣. 20. But the ſoul that eateth of the fleſh of the ſacrifice of the peace-offerings, that pertain unto the Lord, &c.] That are offered up to him, and ſo are holy, and therefore not to be eaten by unholy perſons, or by any having his uncleanneſs upon him; a profluvious perſon that has an iſſue running out of him, a gonorrhea; ſee ch. xv. 2. even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people; be diſfranchiſed as an Iſraelite, be debarred the privileges of the ſanctuary, or be cut off by death before the uſual time and term of man's life; ſo thoſe that eat and drink unworthily in the ſupper of our Lord, where his fleſh is eaten and his blood drank, eat and drink damnation to themſelves, 1 Cor. xi. 29.

℣. 21. Moreover the ſoul that ſhall touch any unclean thing, &c.] Perſon or thing, the dead body of a man, or the bone of a dead body, or a grave in which it was laid: as the uncleanneſs of man; the iſſue that runs from a profluvious perſon: or any unclean beaſt; that was ſo by the law ceremonial; ſee ch. xi. 4—8. or any abominable unclean thing; which the Targum of Jonathan interprets, of every unclean reptile; ſee ch. xi. 20, 24, 29. and eat of the fleſh of the ſacrifice of peace-offerings, which pertain unto the Lord, even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people; ſee the note on the preceding verſe.

℣. 22. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] Continued ſpeaking to him: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 23. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, &c.] Putting them in mind, by repeating to them the laws concerning fat and blood, ch. iii. 17. ye ſhall eat no manner of fat; of any creature fit for food, whoſe fleſh otherwiſe may be eaten, and particularly of ox, or of ſheep, or of goats; creatures uſed in ſacrifice; though this is not to be reſtrained to

[h] Maaſeh Hakorbanot, c. 9. §. 17, 18. 21. [i] Ibid. §. 12. [k] Miſn. Zebachim, c. 5. §. 3.

to such of them, and the fat of them that were sacrificed, whose fat was claimed by the Lord as his, and was burnt on his altar; but this is to be understood of the fat of these creatures, when killed for their common use, for the food of them and their families; the fat even of these was not to be eaten; that which was not separated from the flesh but mixed with it might be eaten, but not that which was separated [l].

℣. 24. And the fat of the beast that dieth of itself, &c.] Of any disease, and is not regularly killed: and the fat of that which is torn with beasts; with wild beasts: may be used in any other use; as in medicine, for plasters, or for making candles, or for greasing of any thing to make it smooth and pliable, or the like: but ye shall in no wise eat of it; such carcasses themselves were not to be eaten of, and one would think their fat in course must be unlawful; but however, to prevent the doing of it, this particular law was given, and those that broke this were doubly guilty, as the Jews observe [m]; once in eating things that died of themselves, or were torn with beasts, and again by eating the fat of them.

℣. 25. For whosoever eateth the fat of the beast, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, &c.] As oxen, sheep, rams, goats; meaning, not only the fat of those that are offered, but the fat of all those of the like kind: even the soul that eateth it shall be cut off from his people; see the note on ℣. 20. Maimonides [n] observes, that the punishment of cutting off is enjoined for the eating of fat, because men used to count it delicious, for which reason also God would honour his sacrifices with it: and he further observes [o], that the fat of the intestines too much saturates, hinders concoction, generates gross and frigid blood, hence it is much better it should be burnt than eaten; and that blood and what dies of itself are of difficult digestion, and of bad nourishment, wherefore the latter is forbidden in the preceding verse, and the former in the next: of the punishment for eating fat the same writer [p] observes, he that eats fat the quantity of an olive, presumptuously, is guilty of cutting off, if ignorantly, he must bring the fixed sin-offering: and elsewhere [q] he says, he that eats fat is beaten for it; and he eats it a second time and is beaten for it; but if he eats it a third time they don't beat him, but put him into a prison, which is a strait place according to his heighth, where he cannot stand upright, nor can he lie down in it; and they give him bread and water of affliction till his bowels are distressed and he become sick, and then they feed him with barley till his belly bursts.

℣. 26. Moreover ye shall eat no manner of blood, &c.] Of any of the above creatures, or any other, even of any clean creature, and much less of an unclean one: whether it be of fowl or of beast; of all sorts and kinds. Jarchi thinks, the words being thus expressed, the blood of fishes and locusts is excepted, and so lawful to eat: in any of your dwellings; this shews that this law is not to be restrained to creatures slain in sacrifice in the tabernacle, and to the blood of them, but to be understood of all such as were slain in their own houses for food, and the blood of them.

℣. 27. Whatsoever soul it be that eateth any manner of blood, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan adds, of any living creature, that is, of any while it is alive; for the Jews always interpret the law in Gen. ix. 4. of the member of a living creature torn off from it, and its flesh with the blood eaten directly: even that soul shall be cut off from his people; Maimonides [r] observes, that to some sorts of food cutting off is threatened, particularly to blood, because of the eager desire of men to eat it in those times, and because it precipitated them to a certain species of idolatry; he means that of the Zabians, of which see the note on Ezek. xxxiii. 25. of the true reason of the prohibition of eating blood under the law, see Lev. xvii. 10, &c.

℣. 28. And the Lord spake unto Moses, &c.] At the same time the above laws were delivered; for what follows relates to the sacrifice of the peace-offerings: saying; as follows.

℣. 29. Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, &c.] Giving them the further instructions concerning their peace-offerings: he that offereth the sacrifice of his peace-offerings unto the Lord; whether it be for thanksgiving, or as a vow, or a voluntary oblation, and whether it be of the herd or of the flock, an ox or a cow, a lamb or a goat: shall bring his oblation unto the Lord, of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings; that is, the unleavened cakes, wafers, and fried cakes, and unleavened bread, which are called the whole oblation, ℣. 12—14.

℣. 30. His own hands shall bring the offerings of the Lord made by fire, &c.] That is, such parts of the peace-offerings as were to be burnt with fire, as the fat on several parts described in ch. iii. 3, 4. the owners of the offerings were to bring them in the manner as will be presently observed: the fat with the breast it shall he bring; the fat to be burnt, and the breast for the priest and his sons, as in the following verse: that the breast may be waved for a wave-offering before the Lord; how this waving was performed, see the note on Exod. xxix. 24. particularly with respect to these peace-offerings it was thus; if a thank-offering, the priest takes of the bread brought with it one (cake) out of ten, and lays it with the breast, the shoulder, and the inwards, and waves all upon the hands of the owners; on which he puts the fat, then the breast and the shoulder above, (i. e. upon the fat) then the two kidneys, and the caul, and the liver above them; and if there was any bread, he put it over them, and waved all; putting his hand under the hands of the owner [s].

℣. 31. And the priest shall burn the fat upon the altar, &c.] Of burnt-offering, even the fat upon the inwards, the two kidneys, the flanks, the caul and liver: but the breast shall be Aaron's and his sons; which being waved before the Lord for a wave-offering, was the Lord's, and so was given to his priests to eat of, for the service done by them, it being but reasonable that they that serve at the altar, should live of it; and thus, with other things, a maintenance was provided for the priests, and their families, as ought also to be for gospel-ministers under the present dispensation.

℣. 32. And the right shoulder shall ye give unto the priest for an heave-offering, &c.] Whether of an ox or a cow, a lamb or a goat: of the sacrifices of your peace-offerings; which were of either of these creatures; the Targum of Jonathan paraphrases it, "the [l] Bechai in Lev. 3. 17. [m] Maimon. Hilchot Maacolot Asurot, c. 7. §. 2. [n] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 41. [o] Ib. c. 48. [p] Hilchot Maacolot Asurot, c. 7. §. 1. [q] Hilchot Sanhedrim, c. 18. §. 4. [r] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 41. [s] Maimon. Maaseh Hakorbanot, c. 9. §. 6, 7. so Ben Gersom in loc.

4

" the right arm from the ſhoulder to the elbow." The breaſt being the ſeat of wiſdom, and the ſhoulder of ſtrength, ſome think denote Chriſt as the wiſdom and power of God unto his people, his prieſts, who have all their knowledge and ſtrength from him, and who bears them on his heart and on his ſhoulder.

℣. 33. He among the ſons of Aaron that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings, and the fat, &c.] Who ſprinkled the blood of them upon the altar round about, and burnt the fat upon it, which were rites enjoined to be obſerved, ch. iii. 2—5: ſhall have the right ſhoulder for his part; his particular part and ſhare, becauſe of his ſervice: Aben Ezra remarks, that the right ſhoulder was given to him that ſprinkled the blood, and the breaſt to all the prieſts; and Jarchi obſerves, that he that was fit for ſprinkling the blood, and burning the fat, and went out an unclean perſon in the time of ſprinkling the blood, or burning the fat, had no part in the fleſh.

℣. 34. For the wave-breaſt, and the heave-ſhoulder have I taken of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Theſe two parts were particularly pitched upon and ſelected: from off the ſacrifices of their peace-offering; the reſt being allowed the owners, beſides what were burnt: and have given them unto Aaron the prieſt, and unto his ſons, by a ſtatute for ever, from among the children of Iſrael; as long as the prieſthood laſted, even to the coming of the Meſſiah, in whom all theſe ſacrifices would have their accompliſhment and their end.

℣. 35. This is the portion of the anointing of Aaron, &c.] Of his being anointed to the prieſtly office; this is the part allotted and aſſigned him for the execution of it; this is the reward, as Aben Ezra interprets it, of his faithful performance of it, namely, his having the wave-breaſt and heave-ſhoulder of the peace-offerings, and a cake out of every one of the unleavened cakes, together with the leavened bread, beſides other perquiſites from other offerings: and of the anointing of his ſons; the ſucceſſors of him in the prieſtood; the Targum of Jonathan adds, above all their brethren the Levites: out of the offerings of the Lord made by fire; out of ſuch whoſe fat on the ſeveral parts of them was burnt with fire, ſuch as the peace-offerings were: in the day when he preſented them to miniſter unto the Lord in the prieſt's office; when they were ordered to be taken out from among the children of Iſrael, and to be conſecrated to, and inveſted with, the prieſt's office, as they were by Moſes, and preſented by him unto him as his prieſts; at that time the above portion was aſſigned them, as follows.

℣. 36. Which the Lord commanded to be given them of the children of Iſrael, &c.] Whenever they brought their offerings to be offered up by them, ſuch parts thereof were ordered to be allowed them as theirs: in the day that he anointed them; or from the day they were anointed of Moſes, by the direction of the Lord, from that time they had a right and claim to the above things, out of the ſacrifices brought, ſo Aben Ezra: and this was by a ſtatute for ever throughout their generations; in all ſucceſſive generations, unto the coming of the Meſſiah, which would put an end to their prieſthood. Thus the Lord provided for the maintenance of his miniſters, till that time came; and ſince it has been the ordinance of Chriſt, that they which preach the goſpel, ſhould live of the goſpel, 1 Cor. ix. 13, 14.

℣. 37. This is the law of the burnt-offering, &c.] As delivered, ch. vi. 9—13: of the meat-offering; as in ch. vi. 14—18: and of the ſin-offering; as in ch. vi. 25, 30: and of the treſpaſs-offering; as in ch. vii. 1—7: and of the conſecrations; of Aaron and his ſons to the prieſt's office, as in ch. vi. 20—23: and of the ſacrifice of the peace-offerings; as in this chapter, ℣. 11—33. for this is only a recapitulation of the ſeveral laws reſpecting theſe things before obſerved.

℣. 38. Which the Lord commanded Moſes in mount Sinai, &c.] Or by or near [t] mount Sinai; for the above laws were not given to Moſes when on the mount, but after the tabernacle was erected, and out of it, as appears from ch. i. 1. and to which what follows agrees: in the day that he commanded the children of Iſrael to offer their oblations unto the Lord in the wilderneſs of Sinai; where they were when the above laws were delivered to them, and which wilderneſs had its name from the mount near to which they now were, and where the tabernacle was pitched, from whence the Lord ſpoke; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it, " in the " tabernacle which they made for him in the wil- " derneſs of Sinai;" there they were ordered to offer their oblations of every ſort, as before directed. It ſhould be obſerved, that this is to be underſtood of the command given in the wilderneſs to offer ſacrifices, but not of the ſacrifices themſelves then offered, which were not done while there; ſee Jer. vii. 22. Amos v. 25.

CHAP. VIII.

THE order for the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons is renewed, ℣. 1—3. which accordingly was ſet about and performed by Moſes, ℣. 4, 5. who having firſt waſhed and clothed them, firſt Aaron, and then his ſons, with the garments of the prieſthood, anointing at the ſame time the tabernacle of the altar, and what appertained to them and Aaron alſo, ℣. 6—13. and then he ſlew the bullock for the ſin-offering, and the ram for the burnt-offering, and the ram of conſecration; and did with the blood, fat, ſhoulder and breaſt, and the meat-offering belonging thereunto, as he had been directed, ℣. 14—30. and the chapter is concluded with ſome inſtructions about boiling the fleſh, and burning the remainder of it, and keeping the charge of the Lord night and day for ſeven days. ℣. 31—36.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] The following ſection or paragraph relating to the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons, was delivered, according to Jarchi, ſeven days before the ſetting up of the tabernacle; but to me it ſeems to have been delivered after the ſetting it up, ſince it was out of the tabernacle that the Lord ſaid all thoſe things recorded in the preceding chapters; and after he had given out the laws concerning ſacrifices, then he renewed the order for the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons, that they might offer them: ſaying; as follows.

℣.

[t] בהר by the mount; ſo Patrick in loc.

℣. 2. Take Aaron and his ſons with him, &c.] That is, order them to come, or ſend a meſſage to them, that they appear at ſuch a time at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, where the ceremony of conſecration was to be performed, and was performed, ℣. 3. which is obſerved and recorded by Moſes, to ſhew, that he had a divine warrant for what he did, and that it was not from favour and affection to his brother, and becauſe of the relation he and his family ſtood in to him, that he inveſted him and them with the prieſtly office, but it was by a command from the Lord; nor did Aaron take this honour to himſelf, but was called of God to it, Heb. v. 4: and the garments; the garments for the prieſthood, ordered and deſcribed, and now made, ſee Exod. ch. xxviii. and ch. xxxix. and the anointing oil; which alſo was ordered to be made, and now was made, Exod. xxx. 23. and xxxvii. 29: and a bullock for the ſin-offering, and two rams, and a baſket of unleavened bread; which were all to be uſed at the conſecration with the anointing oil Aaron was to be anointed, and alſo the tabernacle and the altar; and the bullock was to be a ſin-offering, and one of the rams a burnt-offering for Aaron and his ſons, and the other ram was the ram of conſecration of them; and out of the baſket of unleavened bread one cake of each ſort was to be taken, and waved with other things, and burnt, which finiſhed the conſecration; but with it was no oath, as in the conſecration of the antitypical high-prieſt Chriſt Jeſus, which difference is obſerved by the apoſtle, Heb. vii. 21. ſee Exod. xxix. 1, 2.

℣. 3. And gather thou all the congregation together, &c.] That is, the heads of the tribes and the elders of the people, as Aben Ezra interprets it; for the whole body of the people, and every individual of them, could not be got together: unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; taking this for the whole court itſelf, as it ſometimes is; though no doubt on this occaſion as great a number was convened, as well could be admitted into the court, or about it, to be ſpectators and witneſſes of the ſolemn inveſtiture of Aaron and his ſons with the prieſtly office.

℣. 4. And Moſes did as the Lord commanded him, &c.] He convened Aaron and his ſons, and the heads of the people, at the door of the tabernacle, and came himſelf, and brought with him the garments, the oil and ſacrifices, even every thing neceſſary for the conſecration: and the aſſembly was gathered together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; and this was, according to the Targum of Jonathan, on the 23d day of the month Adar or February; but it rather ſeems to be later, ſome time in the beginning of Niſan or March, and before the paſſover began, ſee Numb. ix. 1—5.

℣. 5. And Moſes ſaid unto the congregation, &c.] Having convened them, he opened to them the reaſon of their being called together, which was not done of himſelf, but by divine direction: this is the thing which the Lord commanded to be done; namely what follows, concerning the conſecration of Aaron and his ſons to be prieſts, and the inveſtiture of them with that office, attended with various rites and ceremonies to be performed, of which they were to be witneſſes.

℣. 6. And Moſes brought Aaron and his ſons, &c.] To the laver which was in the court of the tabernacle: and waſhed them with water; to ſhew that they ſhould be clean that bear the veſſels of the Lord, and offer the ſacrifices of the people; all that are in publick office in the houſe of God, ought to have both clean hands and a pure heart, to hold the myſtery of the faith in a pure conſcience, and to be of a pure and holy converſation; and indeed all that are made kings and prieſts to God, as all the ſaints are they are waſhed from their ſins in the blood of Jeſus, Rev. i. 5, 6.

℣. 7. And he put upon him the coat, &c.] The embroidered coat of fine linen which was next to his fleſh, Exod. xxviii. 39. and all the garments were put on juſt in the order they are here declared; no mention is made indeed of the linen breeches, ſince it is highly probable theſe were put on by Aaron himſelf in ſome apartment in the tabernacle, or before he came thither; it not being ſo decent to put on, or have theſe put on, in the ſight of the whole congregation: and girded him with the girdle; the girdle of needlework with which the linen coat was girt to him, and was diſtinct from the curious girdle of the ephod after mentioned, Exod. xxviii. 39. and clothed him with the robe; the robe of the ephod, which had at the hem of it golden bells and pomegranates, Exod. xxviii. 31—35. and put the ephod upon him; made of gold, blue, purple, ſcarlet, and fine twined linen, which had two ſhoulder-pieces, and on them two onyx ſtones, on which were engraved the names of the twelve tribes, Exod. xxviii. 6—12. and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound it unto him therewith; which was made of the ſame with the ephod, and by which it was girt cloſe unto him; of the myſtical meaning of theſe garments, ſee the notes on the places referred to.

℣. 8. And he put the breaſt-plate upon him, &c.] Which was made of the ſame materials with the ephod, and was put upon it, and faſtened to it: alſo he put in the breaſt-plate the Urim and Thummim; that is, Moſes did it, as all the reſt; for there is no reaſon to be given why this ſhould be appropriated to God as a divine work, diſtinct from the reſt; and theſe ſeem to be the twelve precious ſtones ſet in the breaſt-plate, whoſe names are given, Exod. xxviii. 17—20. and if they are not intended, no account is here given of them; but ſince in Exod. xxxix. 8—14. an account is given of the ſtones, and of the ſetting of them in the breaſt-plate, and no mention is made of the Urim and Thummim, and here notice is taken of them, but nothing ſaid of the ſtones; it ſeems pretty plain they muſt be the ſame; ſee the note on Exod. xxviii. 30.

℣. 9. And he put the mitre upon his head, &c.] Which was made of fine linen, and was a wrap of that of a conſiderable length about his head, Exod. xxviii. 39. alſo upon the mitre, even upon his fore-front did he put the golden plate; which was put upon the forehead of the high-prieſt, reaching from ear to ear, and was faſtened to the mitre with a blue lace, and had on it this inſcription, holineſs to the Lord, Exod. xxviii. 36, 37. and is here therefore called the holy crown; denoting both the ſanctity and the dignity of the high-prieſt, and typical of Chriſt, who is holineſs itſelf, and to his people, and is now crowned with glory and honour, being a prieſt upon the throne: hence the Jews[u] ſpeak of the crown of the law, and of the crown of the kingdom, and of the crown of the prieſthood: and this as all the reſt was done, as the Lord commanded Moſes; all theſe were made according to the divine order, and were put on in the manner and form he directed him; of the myſtery mystery of the mitre and the crown; see the notes on the places above referred to.

[u] Pirke Abot, c. 4. § 13.

℣. 10. And Moses took the anointing oil, &c.] Which Bezaleel had made, according to the directions which Moses had given him, and he had received from the Lord: this Moses brought with him to the door of the tabernacle as he was ordered, ℣. 2. and now he took it and made use of it as follows: and anointed the tabernacle and all that was therein; the altar of incense, the candlestick, and table of shew-bread: and sanctified them; separated and devoted them to sacred use and service.

℣. 11. And he sprinkled thereof upon the altar seven times, &c.] The altar of burnt-offering, the order for anointing it is given in Exod. xxx. 28. and xl. 10. but in that no directions are given for the manner of doing it by sprinkling, nor the number of times it was to be sprinkled: hence Jarchi confesses his ignorance, and says, "I know "not how it was ordered about these sprinklings;" but no doubt Moses was instructed of God in what manner to anoint it, and how often; and the number seven may denote the perfect unction of it, and made it a fitter type of Christ, who received the unction of the Spirit without measure: and anointed the altar, and all its vessels; pans, shovels, basons, flesh-hooks, and fire-pans: both the laver and his foot; which was for the priests to wash at; and very probably this was done before Moses brought Aaron and his sons thither and washed them, ℣. 6. since it seems most proper that it should be consecrated before used, as it follows: to sanctify them; set them apart for sacred use.

℣. 12. And he poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, &c.] Which ran down to his beard, and to the collar of his coat, the robe of the ephod, but not to the skirts of his garments, as we wrongly render it, Ps. cxxxiii. 2. Jarchi says it was first poured on his head, and after that he put it between his eye-brows, and drew it with his finger here and there, or from one eye-brow to another: Maimonides [w] gives a like account, with some addition; he says, the oil was poured on his head, and he was anointed between the eye brows, in the form of the Greek letter χ chi: a greater profusion of oil was used in the anointing of Aaron than of the tabernacle, altar, and laver, and their vessels, he being so eminent a type of Christ, our high-priest, anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows: and anointed him to sanctify him; to signify that he was set apart and devoted to the sacred office of the priesthood. The Targum of Jonathan observes, that this anointing was after he had cloathed him; though some have thought it was done before the mitre and holy crown were put on; but if they were put on to complete the investiture, they might be taken off while the ceremony of anointing was performed.

℣. 13. And Moses brought Aaron's sons, &c.] His four sons, Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; he ordered and directed them to come there, or sent proper persons to fetch them, or from one part of the court where they were, he might accompany them thither: and put coats upon them, and girded them with girdles; which were made of fine linen, Exod. xxxix. 27, 28. and the coats being made long to reach down to the ancles, needed girdles, especially when in service, that they might perform it more expeditiously: and put bonnets on them; which were made of fine linen also, and differed from the mitre of the high-priest, only in the manner of rolling up the linen: as the Lord commanded Moses; as all the above things were made, so they were all put on, according to the directions Moses received of the Lord, who was faithful in his house, with respect to every thing he enjoined him, Heb. iii. 2, 5.

℣. 14. And he brought the bullock for the sin-offering, &c.] To the tabernacle, into the court of it, to the altar of burnt-offering there; that is, he caused it to be brought thither as he was ordered, Exod. xxix. 10. and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the bullock for the sin-offering; their right hands, according to the Targum of Jonathan, which is not improbable, thereby as it were transferring their sins to it, and confessing them over it; acknowledging their guilt, and that they deserved to die, as that creature would; which was to be a vicarious sacrifice for sin, and whose blood was to purify and sanctify the altar, at which they, sinful men, were to serve.

℣. 15. And he slew it, &c.] Not Aaron, nor any of his sons, who as yet were not fully consecrated and installed into their office, but Moses, as follows: and Moses took the blood; which was received into a bason when the bullock was slain: and put it upon the horns of the altar round about with his finger; upon the four horns of the altar, which were at the four corners of it, and dipping his finger into the blood, he besmeared the horns with it, and drew it about with his finger here and there; and so is said to be done round about the altar, as these horns were: and purified the altar; or cleansed it; not from moral guilt and pollution, which it was uncapable of, but from all ceremonial pollution it might be supposed to have: and poured the blood at the bottom of the altar; the rest of the blood he did not use about the horns: and sanctified it; separated it from common to sacred use: to make reconciliation upon it; that it might be fit to have sacrifices offered on it to make atonement and reconciliation for sins; for which reason, it was necessary it should itself be pure and holy, in such sense it was capable of being so.

℣. 16. And he took all the fat that was upon the inwards, &c.] Called the omentum: and the caul above the liver; the lobe upon the liver, as the Septuagint; or the caul and the liver, so says Jarchi; the liver separately, for he took a little of the liver with it, the caul: and the two kidneys, and their fat, and Moses burned it upon the altar; the fat of these several parts, which has been often observed, was done; and in imitation of which, the same has been done by the Persians and their Magi, as related by Strabo [x] and others [y]; and by the Romans, to which Persius [z] refers; and these several parts are generally covered with fat in fat creatures, and especially sheep, as Aristotle [a] observes.

℣. 17. But the bullock and his hide, his flesh, and his dung, he burnt with fire without the camp, &c.] Aben Ezra observes, that some say that he did this himself; and others, that it was done by orders, that is, he ordered others to do it, which seems probable enough: as the Lord commanded Moses; Exod. xxix. 14.

℣.

[w] In Misn. Ceritot, c. 1. §. 1. [x] Geograph. l. 15. p. 504. [y] Omentum in flamma pingue, &c. Catullus. [z] Tot tibi cum in flammis, &c. Satyr. 2. [a] Hist. Animal. l. 3. c. 17.

℣. 18. And he brought the ram for the burnt-offering, &c.] One of the two he was ordered to take, ℣. 2. and Aaron and his sons laid their hands on the head of the ram; as they had done before on the head of the bullock, see ℣. 14. their right hands, as the Targum of Jonathan, and that at the same time; not first Aaron and then his sons, as a famous grammarian Aben Ezra makes mention of, thought; but as he himself says, they laid them on together.

℣. 19. And he killed it, &c.] That is, Moses killed the ram, as the Septuagint version expresses it: and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about; as he did the blood of the bullock, ℣. 15.

℣. 20. And he cut the ram into pieces, &c.] Cut off its head and quartered it: and Moses burnt the head, and the pieces, and the fat; even all of it, as the following verse shews.

℣. 21. And he washed the inwards and the legs in water, &c.] The one being taken out, the other cut off: and Moses burnt the whole ram upon the altar, it was a burnt-sacrifice for a sweet savour, and an offering made by fire unto the Lord, as the Lord commanded Moses; see Exod. xxix. 18.

℣. 22. And he brought the other ram, the ram of consecration, &c.] Or filling [b], or fullnesses; because, as Jarchi says, these filled and perfected the priests in their priesthood; this was the finishing and consummation of their consecration: what is said in this and the three following verses, is the the same as is ordered, Exod. xxix. 19, 20, 21, 22. and needs no further explanation; see the notes there.

℣. 26. And out of the basket of unleavened bread, &c.] Moses was ordered to take, ℣. 2. that was before the Lord; being brought to the tabernacle, where now the Lord had taken up his residence: he took one unleavened cake; which had no oil in it or upon it: and a cake of oiled bread; which was mixed and tempered with oil: and one wafer; which was anointed with oil: and put them upon the fat, and upon the right shoulder; of the ram of consecration, which he took from it, and laid the cakes uppermost upon them.

℣. 27. And he put all upon Aaron's hands, and upon his sons hands, &c.] The fat and the right shoulder, with the cakes upon them: and waved them for a wave-offering before the Lord; see the note on Exod. xxix. 24.

℣. 28. And Moses took them from off their hands, &c.] After they had been waved before the Lord: and burnt them upon the altar, upon the burnt-offering; of the other ram; or after that burnt-offering, as Jarchi, who observes, that we do not find that the shoulder of the peace-offerings was offered in any place but this, for it belonged to the priest; but this being at the consecration of the priests, it was offered to the Lord by Moses, to whom it seems to have belonged, as the breast also, but that was not burnt but eaten: and the same writer affirms, that Moses ministred all the seven days of the consecration in a white shirt, or surplice; and that he might wear a linen coat, as priests did, is not improbable, since he now officiated as one: they were consecrated for a sweet savour; acceptable to the Lord, and so the priests, Aaron and his sons likewise, on whose account they were made: it is an offering made by fire unto the Lord; the fat, the shoulder, and the cakes.

℣. 29. And Moses took the breast, &c.] Of the ram of consecration: and waved it for a wave-offering before the Lord; this Moses seems to have waved with his own hands, and not upon the hands of Aaron and his sons, putting his under them, as in the wave-offering of the fat, shoulder and cakes, and for which the following words seem to give a reason: for of the ram of consecration it was Moses's part; the breast of it was his: as the Lord commanded Moses; see Exod. xxix. 26.

℣. 30. And Moses took of the anointing oil, and of the blood which was upon the altar, &c.] Which was sprinkled upon the altar round about, ℣. 24. and these two seem to be mixed together, since it follows: and sprinkled it upon Aaron, &c. see the note on Exod. xxix. 21.

℣. 31. And Moses said unto Aaron, and to his sons, &c.] After he had offered the bullock, the two rams, and cakes of unleavened bread for the consecration of them: boil the flesh at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; the remainder of the flesh of the ram of consecration, which was all but the fat, the shoulder, and the breast: and there eat it with the bread that is in the basket of consecration; what was left of that, there being one cake of a sort taken out of it and burnt: as I commanded, saying, Aaron and his sons shall eat it; see Exod. xxix. 32.

℣. 32. And that which remaineth of the flesh and of the bread, &c.] Until the next morning, which could not be eaten by Aaron and his sons: shall ye burn with fire; that it might not be corrupted, nor put to common nor superstitious uses.

℣. 33. And ye shall not go out of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation in seven days, &c.] Which was the time of their consecration, so long it lasted; and they had provision enough every day from the ram of consecration, whose flesh they were to boil and eat. The Jewish writers [c] are puzzled where they should ease nature, since the place was holy; but the orders are not to be considered as so strict, but that they might go in and out, though they were not to stay long, or to attend to any other business; and it was always necessary there should be some upon the spot, keeping the Lord's charge in their turns; and it was always requisite that they should also sleep alternately; for it cannot be thought that they should be all this time without rest, any more than without food: until the days of your consecration be at an end; which were to continue so long: for seven days shall he consecrate you; that is Moses, who here speaks of himself in the third person, as appears from Exod. xxix. 35. Aben Ezra observes, that the word end is wanting, and that the sense is, at the end of seven days he shall consecrate you, finish their consecration; all the seven days he was doing it, and at the end of the seventh concluded it.

℣. 34. As he hath done this day, so hath the Lord commanded to do, &c.] The same were to be repeated every day until the seven days were ended; so Jarchi and Aben Ezra; the former of these observes, that their Rabbins explain the phrase to do, in the preceding clause, of the business of the red heifer, and that which follows, to make an atonement for you, of the business of the day of atonement; and say, that it may be learned from hence that the high-priest was obliged to be separate (from his own house and family) seven days before that, and so the priest that burned the red heifer; and the same is observed by other Jewish writers [d]: but this refers to neither of these cases, but to the present ſent conſecration of Aaron and his ſons, and the making atonement by ſacrifice for them, and the ſanctification of them to miniſter in the prieſt's office.

[b] המלאים plenitudinum, Montanus; impletionum, vel potius completionum, Drusius; Heb. impletionum, Piscator.
[c] Aben Ezra, Hiscuni in loc. [d] Maimon. & Bartenora in Misn. Yoma, c. 1. §. 1. & in Parah, c. 3. §. 1.

℣. 35. Therefore ſhall ye abide at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] Or rather within it, as Noldius renders it, ſince they were not to go out of the door of it, ℣. 33. whereas our verſion ſeems to leave it undetermined, whether they abode without the door or within; where they were to continue, day and night, ſeven days; even the ſeven days of their conſecration: and keep the charge of the Lord, that ye die not; not the charge of the tabernacle, and the ſervice of it committed to them upon their inveſtiture with their office, hereafter to be obſerved by them; but what was charged upon them to attend unto, during the ſeven days of their conſecration; and the penalty being death in caſe of failure, was to make them more careful and cautious of tranſgreſſing; and which was the more neceſſary, as they were to be pure and holy at their entrance upon their work: and though this may ſeem ſomewhat ſevere; yet the aggravation of their ſin would be the greater, as it was to a ſacred and honourable work they were called, and to which they were now conſecrating; and as what was required of them, was what might eaſily be complied with: however Moſes, to ſhew that this was not of himſelf, but by divine authority, adds; for ſo I am commanded; that is, to declare unto them, that if they did not punctually obſerve the above orders, they muſt expect to die.

℣. 36. So Aaron and his ſons did all things which the Lord commanded by the hand of Moſes.] They ſubmitted to have them done to them, and for them, what was done on the firſt day of their conſecration, all the reſt of the days; and they kept within the tabernacle all that time as was enjoined them.

CHAP. IX.

AARON and his ſons being conſecrated to, and inveſted with the prieſt's office, are called upon to the exerciſe of it, to offer a ſin-offering and a burnt-offering for themſelves, and all ſorts of offerings, a ſin-offering, a burnt-offering, peace-offerings, and a meat-offering for the people; and a promiſe is made for their encouragement, that the glory of the Lord would appear to them, ℣. 1—7. and which were in their courſe accordingly offered; firſt, Aaron's ſin-offering for himſelf, ℣. 8—11. then his burnt-offering, ℣. 12—14. after that the ſeveral offerings of the people before mentioned, ℣. 15—21. when Aaron and Moſes bleſſed the people, the one as ſoon as he had done offering, and both together when they came out of the tabernacle, ℣. 22, 23. upon which a fire came forth from the Lord, and conſumed the burnt-offering upon the altar, ℣. 24.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs on the eighth day, &c.] When the ſeven days of conſecration were ended, as Ben Gerſom, the day following them, ſo ſoon was Aaron called to the execution of his office; and ſo both the Targum of Jonathan and Jarchi make it to be the eighth day of the conſecration, or the day after the anointing of Aaron and his ſons, and which they both ſay was the beginning, or firſt day of Niſan, the day the tabernacle was erected by Moſes; but that ſeems to have been ſet up before the conſecration: rather this was, as Aben Ezra ſays, the eighth day of the month Niſan or March, and was the eighth day of the conſecration, which began at the firſt day, on which day the tabernacle was ſet up, Exod. xl. 2: that Moſes called Aaron and his ſons, and the elders of Iſrael; Aaron and his ſons to enter upon their office, by offering ſacrifices for themſelves, and for the people, and the elders to be witneſſes thereof.

℣. 2. And he ſaid unto Aaron, &c.] In the preſence of the people of Iſrael: take thee a young calf for a ſin-offering; one not exceeding a year old, as in ℣. 3. but this was not for the ſin of making the calf only, to which the Jewiſh writers reſtrain it, but for all other ſins of his, which it was neceſſary ſhould be expiated before he offered ſacrifices for the ſins of others: and a ram for a burnt-offering; being a ſtrong and innocent creature was a proper emblem of Chriſt, the Lamb of God, that takes away by his ſacrifice the ſins of men: without blemiſh; this character belongs, as Aben Ezra obſerves, both to the calf and ram, which were both to be without ſpot, and ſo proper types of Chriſt the Lamb without ſpot and blemiſh, free both from original and actual ſin: and offer them before the Lord; on the altar of burnt-offering, which ſtood in the court of the tabernacle near where Jehovah was, to whom every ſacrifice for ſin was to be offered, being committed againſt him, and whoſe juſtice muſt be ſatisfied for it.

℣. 3. And unto the children of Iſrael thou ſhalt ſpeak, &c.] That is, Aaron ſhould ſpeak to them, for being now high-prieſt, Moſes had no more to do with the ſacrifices of the people, but it was incumbent on Aaron to call upon them to bring them to him ſuch as the Lord by his law required of them: ſaying, take ye a kid of the goats for a ſin-offering; this creature fitly repreſented Chriſt as made ſin, and an offering for ſin, in the room of his people: and a calf, and a lamb; both of them, as before obſerved, were proper emblems of Chriſt in his ſtrength and innocence, ſometimes called the fatted calf, and frequently the lamb of God, Luke xv. 23. John i. 29, 36: both of the firſt year, without blemiſh, for a burnt-offering; denoting the tenderneſs of Chriſt, his ſpotleſs purity, and painful ſufferings.

℣. 4. Alſo a bullock, and a ram for peace-offerings, to ſacrifice before the Lord, &c.] An offering being made for the atonement of ſin, and the gift of a whole burnt-offering accepted by the Lord upon that, peace-offerings were to be ſacrificed thereupon; one part of which belonged to the Lord, as the fat and the blood; another part to the prieſt, as the ſhoulder and the breaſt; and the reſt to the owners to make a feaſt with, expreſſive of the peace and joy which ariſe from the expiation and atonement of ſin, by the great ſacrifice of Chriſt, in commemoration of which a feaſt is kept by the Lord's people: and a meat-offering mingled with oil; with oil-olive; each of theſe offerings are treated of in the preceding chapters, where an account is given of them, and the myſtery of them explained: for to day the Lord will appear unto you; or and to-day, as in ℣. 6. ſo Noldius[e]; for this is not not obſerved as a reaſon why the ſacrifices were to be offered, but as a promiſe of the divine appearance, as an encouragement thereunto; and may have ſpecial reſpect to ſome viſible ſplendor and luſtre of the divine glory more than ordinary; and particularly to the fire that ſhould come out from before the Lord, and conſume the ſacrifice, ℣. 24 and ſo Ben Gerſom interprets it. And this being on the eighth day of the conſecration of the prieſts, may lead our thoughts to the day when our great high-prieſt roſe from the dead, the day after the ſeventh, or the Jewiſh ſabbath, even on the eighth day, or firſt day of the week, on which he made frequent appearances to his diſciples; ſee Mark xvi. 9, 12, 14. John xx. 19, 26.

[e] P. 395. N°. 1340.

℣. 5. And they brought that which Moſes commanded, before the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] That is, Aaron and his ſons, and all the children of Iſrael, as the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it. All the above ſacrifices they brought into the court of the tabernacle to be offered up: and all the congregation drew near, and ſtood before the Lord; that is, the elders of Iſrael, who were called together, ℣. 1. the heads of the tribes who repreſented the people; as many as well could be admitted into the court, no doubt, were, to be ſpectators of Aaron and his ſons officiating firſt in their new office, and to ſee their own ſacrifices offered; and they ſtood over-againſt where was the ſymbol of the divine preſence; and the Targum of Jonathan ſays, they ſtood with a perfect heart; and no doubt but they were heartily ſincere and upright in their ſacrifices, as they had been in their donations toward the building the tabernacle, and providing things belonging to it; and they ſtood with all humility, reverence and devotion.

℣. 6. This is the thing which the Lord commanded that ye ſhould do, &c.] Namely, what they had done, bring the creatures and things for ſacrifice they had: and the glory of the Lord ſhall appear unto you; either Chriſt, the brightneſs of his Father's glory, in an human form, as a preſage of his future incarnation, as he frequently did; or ſome more than ordinary refulgence of glory breaking out of the holy of holies, where God had now taken up his dwelling between the cherubim; or, as Aben Ezra explains it, the fire that ſhould go out from him, and conſume the ſacrifice, which would be a demonſtration of his preſence with them, and of his acceptance of the ſacrifice.

℣. 7. And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, &c.] This is only obſerved to ſhew, that as Aaron did not take upon him this office of himſelf, but was called unto it, and inveſted with it, by the appointment of God, ſo neither did he enter upon it but through the call of God by Moſes, in the ſight of the congregation: go unto the altar, and offer thy ſin-offering, and thy burnt-offering; the young calf and ram: and make an atonement for thyſelf, and for the people; firſt for himſelf, and then for the people; for, as Aben Ezra ſays, a man cannot atone for another, until he is pure from all ſin; which is a character only to be found in Chriſt, our great high-prieſt, and ſo a proper perſon to atone for, and take away the ſins of others: hence the prieſts under the law, with their ſacrifices, could never take away ſin really, only typically; and this ſhews the imperfection of the levitical prieſthood, that the prieſts of that order were obliged to offer firſt for their own ſins; this our high-prieſt, of another order, needed not to do; ſee Heb. vii. 27, 28. and offer the offering of the people, and make atonement for them; typical of the true and full atonement made by Chriſt, when he offered himſelf without ſpot to God: as the Lord commanded; Aaron to do, and as he commanded Chriſt, his ſon and our ſurety, the antitype of Aaron, John x. 18. and xiv. 31.

℣. 8. Aaron therefore went unto the altar, &c.] Of burnt-offering, freely and chearfully, at the direction and introduction of Moſes, who acted in this affair in the name of the Lord: and ſlew the calf of the ſin-offering, which was for himſelf; which was to be offered firſt, as it was proper it ſhould, that atonement being made for his ſins, his after burnt-offering might be accepted with God, and he be fit to offer the ſacrifices of the people: the calf he ſlew on the north ſide of the altar, where all the ſin-offerings and burnt-offerings were ſlain; ſee ch. i. 11. and vi. 25.

℣. 9. And the ſons of Aaron brought the blood unto him, &c.] The blood of the calf of the ſin-offering, which they had received in a baſon when it was ſlain: and he dipped his finger in the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar; the four horns of it, as Moſes had done at his conſecration, which was an example to him, ch. viii. 15. This was typical of the blood of Chriſt, to which perſons may have recourſe from the four quarters of the world for atonement and pardon: and poured out the blood at the bottom of the altar; what remained after he had put what was proper on the horns of it.

℣. 10. But the fat, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver of the ſin-offering, he burnt upon the altar, &c.] The Septuagint verſion is, he offered them: as the Lord commanded Moſes; ſee ch. iv. 8, 9.

℣. 11. And the fleſh and the hide he burnt with fire without the camp.] With common fire, for the fire from the Lord came only upon the altar, which perhaps may be the reaſon of this expreſſion being uſed when any thing was burnt without the camp, and not on the altar, ſee Exod. xxix. 14. Lev. viii. 17. Jarchi obſerves, that we do not find a ſin-offering burnt without the camp but this; which is a great miſtake; ſee ch. iv. 11, 12, 20, 21. and viii. 17.

℣. 12. And he ſlew the burnt-offering, &c.] The ram, which was for himſelf alſo; this he ſlew at the north-ſide of the altar, ch. i. 11. and Aaron's ſons preſented unto him the blood; which they had received into a baſon, when it was ſlain: which he ſprinkled round about upon the altar; as he had ſeen Moſes do before him, ch. viii. 19.

℣. 13. And they preſented the burnt-offering to him, &c.] After it was cut in pieces, as the ram of the burnt-offering was by Moſes, ch. viii. 20. and ſo it was done to this, as appears by what follows: with the pieces thereof, and the head, and he burnt them upon the altar; the Septuagint verſion is, he put them on the altar.

℣. 14. And he did waſh the inwards and the legs, &c.] As Moſes alſo had done, ch. viii. 21. and burnt them upon the burnt-offering on the altar; upon the pieces, and the head, before mentioned, ſaid to be burnt, or after the burnt-offering, after they were burnt: the Septuagint verſion is as before.

℣. 15. And he brought the people's offering, &c.] To the altar, having offered his own firſt: and took the goat, which was the ſin-offering for the people, and ſlew it; where he had ſlain his own: and offered it for ſin, as the firſt; the firſt offering he offered for himſelf, which was of the ſame ſort.

℣. 16. And he brought the burnt-offering, &c.] The calf and the lamb, ℣. 3. and offered it according to the manner; judgment, ordinance, and appointment pointment of God respecting that sort of offerings; see ch. i.

℣. 17. And he brought the meat-offering, &c.] Made of fine flour, with oil and frankincense put upon it, see ch. ii. 1. and took a handful thereof, and burnt it upon the altar; see ch. ii. 2, 3. beside the burnt sacrifice of the morning; the daily morning-sacrifice, which was not to be omitted on account of these extraordinary sacrifices, both for the priest and for the people; or after the burnt-sacrifice of the morning; for no sacrifice was offered up before that: so Jarchi.

℣. 18. He slew also the bullock and the ram, a sacrifice of peace offerings, which was for the people, &c.] That they might feast, rejoice, and be glad, that atonement was made for their sins, and their gifts and sacrifices accepted of God, see Rom. v. 11. and Aaron's sons presented unto him the blood; of the peace-offerings, the bullock and the ram, which they had received into a vessel as they were killing: which he sprinkled upon the altar round about; as he did with the blood of his own burnt-offering, ℣. 12.

℣. 19. And the fat of the bullock, and of the ram, &c.] Which in all offerings was the Lord's, and was burnt, see ch. iii. 16. the rump; or tail of the ram; which in those countries was very large, and had a great deal of fat upon it; see the note on Exod. xxix. 22. and on ch. iii. 9. and that which covereth the inwards; called the omentum: and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver; and the fat that was upon each of these: Ben Gersom observes, that the kidneys and liver are mentioned last, to shew that they were laid uppermost in waving, (after directed to) that the owners might be stirred up, or moved by these things.

℣. 20. And they put the fat upon the breasts, &c.] Both of the bullock and of the ram, whilst they were waving: and he burnt the fat upon the altar; after having been waved.

℣. 21. And the breasts and the right shoulder, &c.] The breasts of the bullock and the ram, and the right shoulders of them both: Aaron waved for a wave-offering before the Lord; which was given to him as his part of the peace-offerings, after they had been thus waved before the Lord; whereby an acknowledgment was made, that he was Lord of all, and had a right to all they had; in token of which, these parts were given to his priests towards their maintenance: as Moses commanded; see Exod. xxvii. 27, 28. Lev. vii. 34, 35, 36.

℣. 22. And Aaron lift up his hand towards the people, and blessed them, &c.] After he had offered the above sacrifices both for himself and them: the manner of the priests lifting up their hands when they blessed is thus described; in the provinces the priests lift up their hands to their shoulders, and in the sanctuary above their heads, excepting the high-priest, who did not lift up his hands above the plate of gold: but R. Judah says, the high-priest lift up his hands above the plate, as it is said Lev. ix. 22. [f] the modern Jews describe it thus [g], they lift up their hands to their shoulders, and they lift up the right hand somewhat higher than the left; then they stretch out their hands, and part their fingers, and frame them so as to make five airs; between two fingers and two fingers one air, and between the fore-finger and the thumb, and between the two thumbs; they spread out their hands so, that the middle (or palm) of the hand may be towards the earth, and the back-part of it towards heaven: Aaron lift his hands upwards, signifying from whence he implored the blessing, and towards the people on whom he desired it might descend; in this he was a type of Christ, who, after he had offered himself a sacrifice for the sins of his people, when he was risen from the dead and about to ascend to heaven, blessed his disciples, Luke xxiv. 50, 51. in Christ the saints are blessed with all spiritual blessings; by him they are procured for them, through his blood, sacrifice, and satisfaction; and he ever lives to make intercession for the application of them to them, see Eph. i. 3. Gal. iii. 13, 14. Acts iii. 26. and came down from offering of the sin-offering, and the burnt-offering, and peace-offerings; from the altar with joy, as the Targum of Jonathan; being glad he had done his service with acceptance; he is said to come down, there being a rise or ascent to the altar, which, as Aben Ezra observes, was three cubits high, and therefore it is with propriety said, he came down; which he did as soon as he had made an end of offering all the sacrifices.

℣. 23. And Moses and Aaron went into the tabernacle of the congregation, &c.] They went out of the court where the altar of burnt offering stood, and where Aaron had been offering the sacrifices; and they went into the holy place, where stood the altar of incense, the shew-bread-table, and the candlestick; and it is probable Moses went in with Aaron thither, to shew him how to offer the incense, to order the shew-bread on the table, and to light and trim the lamps of the candlestick; and so Jarchi observes, that he went in to teach him concerning the business of the incense; but it may be, it was also to pray for the people, as the Targum, and for the Lord's appearance to them, as was promised and expected, and that fire might descend on the sacrifices as a token of acceptance of them, as Aben Ezra notes: and came out, and blessed the people; Aaron had blessed them before, but now both Moses and Aaron blessed them, atonement being made by the sacrifice of Christ, and law and justice thereby fully satisfied; Christ and the law agree together in the blessing of the Lord's people; way was hereby made for the communication of blessings to them, consistent with the law of God, and his holiness and justice, Gal. iii. 10, 13, 14: and the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the people; some visible signs of his glory, some very great splendor or lustre, or breaking forth of his glory; or Christ, the glory of the Father, appeared in an human form, as a pledge of his future incarnation, when all the above sacrifices, which were types of him, would have their accomplishment; and this being immediately upon the offering of them, may signify that the glory of God greatly appears in the sacrifice and satisfaction of Christ, and in the redemption and salvation of his people in that way, Ps. xxi. 4. and lxxxv. 10. and the glorious and gracious presence of God is enjoyed by his people, in consequence of the propitiatory sacrifice of Christ, which was signified by the mercy-seat, from whence the Lord communed; and it is through Christ, his blood and sacrifice, saints have access to God, and fellowship with him; Eph. ii. 18. and iii. 12. 1 John i. 3.

℣. 24. And there came a fire out from before the Lord, &c.] Either from heaven, or from the holy of holies, where was the symbol of the divine presence, and Jehovah had now took up his residence: and [f] Misn Sotah, c. 7. §. 6.

[g] Schulchan Aruch, par. 1. Orach Chayim, c. 128. §. 12.

and consumed upon the altar the burnt-offering, and the fat; according to Aben Ezra, the burnt-offering of Aaron, and of the people, and of the daily sacrifice, for so it is written, besides the burnt-offering of the morning, ℣. 17. and the fat of the calf and ram of Aaron, and of the goat, ox and ram of the people, which though they were laid upon the altar at the time of their offering, yet it is thought by some they were not burnt till now: it is a conjecture of bishop Patrick's, that this burnt-offering was the burnt-offering of the evening-sacrifice, which was consumed by the fire from the Lord; he supposes that the offering of the above sacrifices had taken up the whole day, from the time of the morning-sacrifice until the evening; and that all the other sacrifices were burnt with common fire, but this with fire from the Lord; but then, what was the fat that was consumed? however, this was a token of acceptance; in like manner as it descended on the sacrifice of Abel, as is thought, Gen. iv. 4. and on the sacrifices offered at the dedication of the temple, 2 Chron. vii. 1. and on the burnt-sacrifice of Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 38. testifying the divine approbation and acceptance of them: for though in the mystery, the fire may design the wrath of God as a consuming fire, which was very distressing to Christ, and brought him to the dust of death; yet with respect to the persons for whom this sacrifice was offered, it denotes acceptance of it, that it was an offering by fire, and of a sweet-smelling savour to God, his law and justice being satisfied, and having honour done them: concerning this fire, and the perpetual burning of it, see the note on ch. vi. 12, 13. The heathens, in imitation of this, have pretended to have fire come down also from heaven on their altars, as the Brahmans, among the Indians, taken notice of in the above note. And so Solinus [b] speaks of the Vulcanian hill in Sicily, where they that serve in sacred things lay wood of vines on the altar, but put no fire; and if God is present (and so the sacrifice is approved) the branches, tho' green, will take fire of themselves, and a flame is kindled by the deity sacrificed to, no one setting them on fire. And Servius says [l], that with the ancients, fires on altars were not kindled, but they procured a divine fire by their prayers, which kindled on the altars; but these were mere pretences, and juggling tricks, in which they were assisted by satan to vie with this wonderful appearance of God in the acceptation of the sacrifice of his people: which when all the people saw, they shouted, and fell on their faces; Aaron blessing them, and the appearance of the glory of God unto them, no doubt, gave them joy and pleasure, as the spiritual blessings by Christ, and the gracious presence of God do to his people, Ps. ciii. 1—4. and iv. 6, 7. but what filled them with joy unspeakable, was the acceptance of their sacrifices, as typical of the sacrifice of Christ, and atonement by it, which made them shout, and the court to ring with it; and yet fell down on their faces with all reverence and humility, under a sense of the divine majesty being so near unto them, in this sensible token of his presence.

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter begins with the sin and punishment of two sons of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, ℣. 1—5. for whose death Aaron and his sons are commanded not to mourn, nor to depart from the tabernacle, ℣. 6, 7. and an order is given, prohibiting the priests from drinking wine when they went into it, ℣. 8—11. the law of eating holy things, both those that were more, and those that were less holy is enjoined, ℣. 12—15. and the flesh of the sin-offering not being eaten, but burnt, Aaron's sons are blamed for it, for which he makes an apology to the satisfaction of Moses, ℣. 16—20.

℣. 1. And Nadab and Abihu the sons of Aaron, &c.] His two eldest sons, as seems from Exod. vi. 23: took either of them his censer; a vessel in which coals of fire were put, and incense upon them, and burnt it, and so it follows: and put fire therein, and put incense thereon; which, as Aben Ezra says, was on the eighth day, that is, of their consecration, the day after their consecration was compleatly finished, and the same day that Aaron had offered the offerings for himself and for the people, see ch. ix. 1: and offered strange fire before the Lord; upon the golden altar of incense, which stood in the holy place right against the vail, within which were the ark, mercy-seat, and cherubim, the symbol and seat of the divine majesty: this fire was not that which came down from heaven, and consumed the sacrifice, as related at the end of the preceding chapter, but common fire, and therefore called strange; it was not taken off of the altar of burnt-offering, as it ought to have been, but, as the Targum of Jonathan, from under the trivets, skillets, or pots, such as the flesh of peace-offerings were boiled in, in the tabernacle; which he commanded not; yea forbid, by sending fire from heaven, and ordering coals of fire for the incense to be taken off of the altar of burnt-offering; and this as Aben Ezra observes, they did of their own mind, and not by order. It does not appear that they had any command to offer incense at all at present, this belonged to Aaron, and not to them as yet; but without any instruction and direction they rushed into the holy place with their censers, and offered incense, even both of them, when only one priest was to offer at a time, when it was to be offered, and this they also did with strange fire. This may be an emblem of dissembled love, when a man performs religious duties, prays to God, or praises him without any cordial affection to him, or obeys commands not from love, but selfish views; or of an ignorant, false and misguided zeal, a zeal not according to knowledge, superstitious and hypocritical; or of false and strange doctrines, such as are not of God, nor agree with the voice of Christ, and are foreign to the scriptures; or of human ordinances, and the inventions of men, and of every thing that man brings of his own, in order to obtain eternal life and salvation.

℣. 2. And there went out fire from the Lord, &c.] They sinned by fire, and they were punished by fire, either from heaven, or from the most holy place, where the Lord dwelt between the cherubim; this was of the nature of lightening, as appears by what follows: and devoured them; not reduced them to ashes, for neither their bodies nor their clothes were burnt with this fire, as is clear from from ℣. 4, 5. but their lives were deſtroyed, they were exanimated, their ſouls were ſeparated from their bodies by it, and they died; which is often the caſe by lightening, that the clothes of thoſe who are killed with it are untouched, and ſcarce any marks of violence on their bodies; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan ſays of theſe, their bodies were not burnt: and they died before the Lord; upon the ſpot where they were offering incenſe, in the holy place, over-againſt the moſt holy place. This was very awful, like the caſe of Ananias and Sapphira, and may ſeem ſevere: it was for the terror of others in the prieſthood, or who ſhould come after, to take care that they performed their office according to the divine precepts, and brought in no innovation into their ſervice. And when it is conſidered that theſe were the ſons of the high-prieſt, newly inveſted with an high and honourable office, and juſt had the laws of the prieſthood delivered unto them, and yet deviated from them as ſoon as in their office; and very probably, from what follows, went drunk into their ſervice, their ſin will appear aggravated, and the puniſhment leſs ſevere. This ſhews there's nothing in carnal deſcent, theſe were the ſons of Aaron the high-prieſt, that acted this part, and came to this end; the proneneſs of men to tranſgreſs the laws of God as ſoon as given them; thus the people of Iſrael fell into idolatry as ſoon as the moral law was given; and here the prieſts, as ſoon as the ceremonial laws, relating to the prieſthood, were delivered to them; and alſo that the law made ſinful men prieſts, and that the levitical prieſthood was imperfect; and that no order of men are free from ſin, or exempt from puniſhment: and the whole of the divine conduct in this affair may lead us to obſerve, how jealous God is in matters of worſhip; how much he diſlikes hypocrites, and formal profeſſors; how ſevere he will be againſt ſuch who bring in ſtrange doctrines; what will be the fate of the contemners of goſpel-doctrines and ordinances; and how much he reſents thoſe who truſt in themſelves, and their works, and bring in any thing of their own in the buſineſs of ſalvation, which is ſtrange fire, ſparks of their own kindling, a burning incenſe to their own drag, and ſacrificing to their own net.

[b] Polyhistor. c. 11.

[l] In Virgil. Æneid. l. 12. ℣. 200.

℣. 3. And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, &c.] Upon this awful occaſion, and in order to quiet and humble him under the mighty hand of God: this is it that the Lord ſpoke, ſaying; but when he ſpoke it, and where it is ſaid and recorded, is not ſo very clear; it might have been ſaid, and yet not recorded, or the ſubſtance of it may be recorded, though not in the expreſs words here delivered; it may refer, as ſome think, to Exod. xix. 22. or elſe to Exod. xxix. 43. which ſeems to come neareſt to what follows, ſo Jarchi: I will be ſanctified in them that come nigh me; in the prieſts that drew nigh to him, and offered ſacrifice and burnt incenſe to him; by theſe he expected to be ſanctified, not to be made holy, but to be declared to be ſo, and obeyed and worſhipped as ſuch; as he is, when his commands and ordinances are obſerved, as he would have them be, in faith and fear, which were not done by theſe ſons of Aaron; and therefore the Lord, by the puniſhment he inflicted, ſhewed himſelf to be an holy, righteous and jealous God: and before all the people I will be glorified; as he is when he is believed and truſted in; when his worſhip is carried on in his own houſe, according to his will; when his ordinances are kept as they were delivered, and when he is reverenced in the aſſembly of his ſaints; all which were wanting in this caſe. And this may alſo have reſpect to the glory of divine juſtice, in the public puniſhment of the ſin of thoſe men, that ſince he was not glorified by them before the people in the way of their duty, he would glorify himſelf in their puniſhment: and Aaron held his peace; was in a ſtupor, as the Septuagint, quite amazed, thunder-ſtruck, as we ſay; he was ſilent, ſaid not one word againſt what was done; murmured not at the providence, nor complained of any ſeverity, but was patient under the hand of God, and reſigned to his will; and ſince God was ſanctified and glorified, he was contented.

℣. 4. And Moſes called Miſhael and Elzaphan, the ſons of Uzziel, the uncle of Aaron, &c.] Uzziel was a ſon of Kohath, a brother of Amram, the father of Aaron, and ſo Aaron's uncle, as here; he had four ſons, two of which are here mentioned, as called by Moſes; theſe were firſt-couſins to Aaron, and ſecond to his ſons; ſee Exod. vi. 18, 22: and ſaid unto them, come near; it is very probable they were in the court of the tabernacle, being Kohathites, of the tribe of Levi; but not being prieſts, had no right to go into the holy place, where the two ſons of Aaron lay dead, without a ſpecial order for it, which they here had for this time, and upon this occaſion: carry your brethren from before the ſanctuary, out of the camp; the ſons of Aaron are called their brethren, though but couſins, it being uſual to call any relations brethren, and even if only of the ſame tribe, yea of the ſame nation. Now theſe were ordered to take the dead bodies of Aaron's ſons out of the holy place, and out of the tabernacle, even from before it, which, as Aben Ezra ſays, was the court over-againſt the camp; and they were to carry them out of the camp into ſome field, or place adjacent, and there bury them; it not being uſual in thoſe times to bury in cities and towns, and much leſs in places devoted to ſacred worſhip, as the tabernacle was; and therefore they were carried from both the ſanctuary and the camp: it is an obſervation of Aben Ezra, that "ſome ſay, the incenſe was before the "altar of burnt-offering, and the Levites entered "there;" but if by incenſe is meant the altar of incenſe, the place where theſe ſons of Aaron offered theirs, that was in the holy place, and not in the court, where ſtood the altar of burnt-offering: but they ſeem to mean as if their incenſe was offered in another place and not on the altar, ſomewhere in the court and before you come to the altar of burnt-offering; and ſo the perſons Moſes called could come in thither, and take up their bodies there fallen: but the ſame writer obſerves, that others ſay, that "it was upon the altar of incenſe (i. e. "that their incenſe was offered) and Moſes brought "them out of the tabernacle of the congregation," and then called theſe men to carry them from thence without the camp.

℣. 5. So they went near, &c.] To the place where the bodies lay, having an order from Moſes ſo to do, let them have been where they will: and carried them in their coats out of the camp, as Moſes had ſaid; or bid them do; they took them up in their clothes as they found them, and carried them in them; not that theſe men carried them in their own coats, but in the coats of the dead, as Jarchi expreſſes it; and had them without the camp and there buried them, probably in their coats in which they had ſinned, and in which they died: the Targum of Jonathan ſays, they carried them on iron hooks in their coats, and buried them without the camp.

℣.

℣. 6. And Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar, and unto Ithamar, his ſons, &c.] His two younger ſons, which yet remained; and ſo the Septuagint verſion adds, as in ℣. 12, 16. uncover not your heads; that is, do not take off your mitre, as the Septuagint verſion; or the bonnets which they wore in the time of their miniſtry; for the Jewiſh prieſts always had their mitres and bonnets on when they ſacrificed; in imitation of which, the heathens had their heads covered when they offered their ſacrifices [k]: now it was the way, or cuſtom of a mourner, as Ben Melech obſerves, to remove his mitre, bonnet or tiar, from his head; but in this caſe, that no ſign of mourning might be ſhewn, Aaron and his ſons are forbid to uncover the head: the Targum of Onkelos is, "don't increaſe the "hair," or nouriſh it, or ſuffer it to grow, as Jarchi and Ben Gerſom interpret it: now in times of diſtreſs and mourning, they uſed to let the hair grow, whether on the head or beard, ſee 2 Sam. xix. 24. and in this the Jews were imitated by the Egyptians, contrary to other nations; the prieſts of the gods in other places, ſays Herodotus [l], took care of their hair, (or wore their hair), in Egypt they are ſhaved; with others, the cuſtom is, for the head immediately to be ſhaved at funerals; but the Egyptians, at death, ſuffer their hair to grow in the parts before ſhaved; but this cuſtom with the Jews, though at other times uſed, is here forbid Aaron and his ſons: neither rend your clothes; which was ſometimes done at the report of the death of near relations, as children, in token of mourning, Gen. xxxvii. 34. Job i. 20. but here it is forbid, that there might be no ſign of it: it is a particular word that is here uſed: Ben Melech ſays, there is a difference between rending and tearing; tearing is in the body of a garment where there is no ſeam, but rending (which is what is here meant) where there is a ſeam: the prieſts rending their garments was after this manner, according to the Jewiſh canons [m], "an high prieſt rends below and a common "prieſt above;" that is, as one of their commentators [n] interprets it, the former rends the extreme part of his garment next the feet, and the latter at the breaſt near the ſhoulder; but in this caſe no rent at all was to be made: leſt ye die, and leſt wrath come upon all the people; ſo very provoking to God would be any ſigns of mourning in Aaron and his ſons, on this account: but let your brethren, the whole houſe of Iſrael, bewail the burning which the Lord hath kindled; though Aaron and his ſons might not mourn on this occaſion, the whole body of the people might, though not bewail ſo much the death of the perſons, as the cauſe of it; and be concerned for the awful judgment of God, and for the wrath that was gone forth, leſt it ſhould proceed and deſtroy others alſo, all being ſinners.

℣. 7. And ye ſhall not go out from the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, leſt ye die, &c.] That is, they were not to relinquiſh the ſervice of the ſanctuary, on the account of the death of theſe relations of theirs, and through grief for it, but go on in it; not Aaron on account of his children, nor his ſons on account of their brethren: from hence, ſays Ben Gerſom, we learn, that whatſoever prieſt leaves his ſervice, and goes out of the ſanctuary, is guilty of death: ſome think the ſeven days of conſecration were not quite over, during which time Aaron and his ſons were obliged to continue there, on pain of death, ch. viii. 33, 35. but it is pretty plain thoſe days were over, and that it was the day after the conſecration was finiſhed; ſee ch. ix. 1. and the note on ℣. 2. wherefore this reſpects their continuance in the tabernacle on the day the above affair happened, and they were obliged to continue in, and go through the ſervice of the day notwithſtanding that: for the anointing oil of the Lord is upon you; a learned man [o] infers from hence, that this affair happened within the days of conſecration, they being every day afreſh anointed with oil, at leaſt, had it, with the blood of the ſacrifices, ſprinkled on them, on their garments, taking it in the ſtrict ſenſe, for the oil being ſtill upon them; whereas it ſeems only to ſignify, that inaſmuch as they were conſecrated with oil to the prieſt's office, they were under obligation to continue and perform their ſervice without being let or hindered by what had happened: and they did according to the word of Moſes; they ſhewed no tokens of mourning on account of the dead, and did not offer to go out of the tabernacle and leave their ſervice.

℣. 8. And the Lord ſpake unto Aaron, &c.] Becauſe he was a prophet, Aben Ezra ſays; but the reaſon rather ſeems to be, becauſe he was the high-prieſt, and now inveſted with his office, and in the execution of it, and therefore the following law reſpecting the prieſt's drinking of wine was given: ſome ſay, as the ſame writer obſerves, that God ſpake to him by Moſes; but it rather ſeems, that he ſpoke to Aaron immediately: according to Jarchi, this order was delivered to him as a reward for his ſilence, and to do honour to him on that account: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 9. Do not drink wine or ſtrong drink, &c.] This law following, upon the affair of Nadab and Abihu, have cauſed ſome to think, and not without ſome reaſon, that they were drunk with wine or ſtrong drink, when they offered ſtrange fire; and indeed, it is hardly to be accounted for upon any other foot, that they ſhould do it; but having feaſted that day upon the peace-offerings, and drank freely, it being the firſt day of their entrance on their office, they were, it may be ſuppoſed, elated and merry, and drank more than they ſhould; wherefore this law was given, to reſtrain from ſuch a diſorderly and ſcandalous practice; not only wine, which is inebriating, but ſtrong drink alſo is forbidden, which, as Aben Ezra ſays, is made either of a ſort of wheat, or honey, or dates: and ſo Kimchi [p], and Ben Melech on the place after him obſerve, that this includes whatſoever inebriates, beſides wine; and that their doctors ſay, whoſoever drinks milk or honey, (they muſt mean ſome ſtrong liquor extracted from thence) if he enters into the tabernacle he is guilty: thou nor thy ſons with thee; the Targum of Jonathan adds, as did thy ſons, who died by the burning of fire; that is, he and his ſons were to avoid drinking wine or ſtrong drink to exceſs, as his two ſons had done, which led them to offer ſtrange fire, for which they ſuffered death: when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, leſt ye die; they might drink wine at other times, in a moderate manner; but it ſeems by this, they were not to drink any at all when they were about to go to ſervice, or to enter into the tabernacle in order to do it: indeed, according to the Jewiſh canons, every prieſt that is fit for ſervice, if he drinks wine, it is forbidden him to enter in (to the tabernacle, and ſo) from the altar (of burnt-offering) and

4

[k] Purpureo velare comas, &c. Virgil. Æneid. l. 3. Vid. Kipping. Rom. Antiq. l. 1. c. 12. §. 17. p. 495. [l] Euterpe five, l. 2. c. 36. [m] Miſn. Horayot, c. 3. §. 5. [n] Bartenora in Ib. [o] Clayton's Chronology of the Hebrew Bible, p. 353. [p] Sepher Shoraſhim, Rad. שכר.

and inward (into the holy place); and if he goes in and does his ſervice it is prophane (unlawful and rejected) and he is guilty of death by the hand of Heaven; and he that drinks the fourth part (of a log) of wine at one time, of wine forty days old; but if he drinks leſs than a fourth part of wine, or drinks a fourth part and ſtops between, and mixes it with water, or drinks wine out of the preſs within forty days (i. e. not quite ſo many days old) though more than a fourth part, he is free, and does not prophane his ſervice; if he drinks more than a fourth part of wine, though it is mixed, and though he ſtops and drinks little by little, he is guilty of death, and his ſervice is prophane (or rejected); if he is drunk with the reſt of liquors that make drunk, he is forbid to go into the ſanctuary; but if he goes in and ſerves, and he is drunk with the reſt of liquors that make drunk, whether of milk or of figs, (a ſtrong liquor made of them) he is to be beaten, but his ſervice is right; for they are not guilty of death but on account of wine in the hour of ſervice; and it does not prophane ſervice, but being drunken with wine [q]: in imitation of this, heathen prieſts were forbid wine, and abſtained from it, particularly the Egyptian prieſts; of whom it is ſaid [r], ſome of them never drink any wine, and others taſte but a little of it, becauſe it is ſaid to hurt the nerves, to fill the head, or make it heavy, to hinder invention and excite to luſt: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever throughout all your generations; even to the coming of the Meſſiah; and now under the goſpel-diſpenſation, though wine in moderation is allowed goſpel-miniſters, yet they are not to be given to it; it is a ſhame to any chriſtian man to be drunk with wine, and more eſpecially a miniſter, and ſtill more ſo when in his ſervice; ſee Ezek. xliv. 21.

℣. 10. And that ye may put difference between holy and unholy, &c.] That being ſober they might be able to diſtinguiſh between the one and the other; which a drunken man, having his mind and ſenſes diſturbed, is not capable of; as between holy and unholy perſons, and between holy and unholy things; particularly, as Aben Ezra interprets it, between a ſacred place and one that is common, and between a holy-day and a common week-day; the knowledge and memory of which may be loſt through intemperance; and ſo that may be done in a place and on a day which ought not to be done, or that omitted on a day and in a place which ought to be done: and between unclean and clean; between unclean men and women, beaſts and fowls, and clean ones; and between unclean things in a ceremonial ſenſe, and thoſe that are clean, which a man in liquor may be no judge of: hence, as the above writer obſerves, after this ſection follow laws concerning fowls clean and unclean, the purification of a woman after child-birth, the leproſy in men, garments and houſes, and concerning profluvious and menſtruous perſons; all which the prieſts were to be judges of, and therefore ought to be ſober.

℣. 11. And that ye may teach the children of Iſrael all the ſtatutes, &c.] Laws, precepts, ordinances, moral, ceremonial, and judicial, which was the buſineſs of the prieſts to do, Mal. ii. 7. but one inebriated with liquor would be uncapable of giving inſtructions about any of thoſe things: which the Lord hath ſpoken unto them by the hand of Moſes; particularly thoſe delivered and recorded in Exod. ch. xx. xxii. xxiii. and as not the prieſts, ſo neither any other Iſraelite might inſtruct [s]; nor indeed would be capable of inſtructing others when in liquor; and therefore exceſſive drinking, as it ſhould be carefully avoided by all men, ſo more eſpecially by thoſe who by their office are teachers of others; ſee Prov. xxxi. 4, 5.

℣. 12. And Moſes ſpake unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar, and unto Ithamar, his ſons that were left, &c.] Of the burning, as the Targum of Jonathan; who ſurvived his other two ſons that were burnt, who remained alive, not being concerned with them in their ſin, and ſo ſhared not in their puniſhment: take the meat-offering that remaineth of the offerings of the Lord made by fire; for all but the handful that was burnt of that kind of offerings belonged to the prieſts, ſee ch. vi. 14—18. this meat-offering, according to Jarchi, was the meat-offering of the eighth day, that is, of the conſecration, or the day after it was finiſhed, on which the above awful caſe happened, ch. ix. 17. and alſo the meat-offering of Nahſhon the ſon of Amminadab, of the tribe of Judah, who offered his offering firſt at the dedication of the altar, on the day the tabernacle was ſet up, which he ſuppoſes was on this day, ſee Numb. vii. 1. 10. 13. now theſe meat-offerings were not as yet eaten, and which may be true of the firſt of them, wherefore Aaron and his ſons, notwithſtanding their mourning, are bid to take it: and eat it without leaven beſide the altar; the altar of burnt-offering in the court of the tabernacle, as directed ch. vi. 16; ſee the note there: for it is moſt holy; and ſo might be eaten by none but holy perſons, ſuch as were devoted to ſacred ſervices, and only in the holy place, as follows; within hangings, where the moſt holy things were eaten, as Jarchi, that is, within the court of the tabernacle, which was made of hangings.

℣. 13. And ye ſhall eat it in the holy place, &c.] Not in that which was properly ſo called, but in the court of the tabernacle; at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, as Aben Ezra, in ſome apartment there; for it was not to be carried out of the ſanctuary, and eaten in their own houſes or tents, as others might, after mentioned: becauſe it is thy due and thy ſons due, of the offerings of the Lord made by fire; and not any others; neither his wife nor his daughters, nor any other related to him, or whom he might invite, as in other caſes, might eat of it; this none but he and his ſons might eat of, and no where elſe but in the ſanctuary: for ſo I am commanded; to make known and declare this as the will of God.

℣. 14. And the wave breaſt, and heave-ſhoulder, ſhall ye eat in a clean place, &c.] The breaſt of the peace-offerings that was waved, and the ſhoulder of them that was heaved before the Lord; theſe were given by him to the prieſts, towards the maintenance of their families, ch. vii. 34. and they might be eaten any where, provided the place was clean from all ceremonial pollution, and in which there were no polluted perſons, as leprous ones; they were to be eaten within the camp, as Jarchi obſerves, where lepers came not; for, as he adds, the light holy things, ſuch as theſe were, might be eaten in every city; and ſo it is ſaid in the Miſnah [t], and by the commentators on it: thou and thy ſons, and thy daughters with thee; theſe were not reſtrained to

[q] Maimon. Hilchot Biath Hamikdaſh, c. 1. §. 1. 2.
[s] Maimon. Hilchot Biath Hamikdaſh, c. 1. §. 3.
[r] Chæremon apud Porphyr. de Abſtinentia, l. 4. c. 6.
[t] Zebachim, c. 5. §. 6. & Bartenora in Ib.

to him and his ſons only, as the meat-offerings, and the fleſh of the ſin-offerings were, but were common to the whole family: for they be thy due, and thy ſons due; for their ſervice of the ſanctuary, and by the appointment and direction of the Lord: which are given out of the ſacrifices of peace-offerings of the children of Iſrael; of which ſee ch. vii. theſe are ſaid to be given out of them, for the whole was not given, only the breaſt and ſhoulder; and after the fat was burnt, the reſt belonged to the owners, with which they kept a feaſt of joy and thankfulneſs.

℣. 15. The heave-ſhoulder, and wave-breaſt ſhall they bring, &c.] Not the prieſts, but the owners to the prieſts, ch. vii. 29, 30: with the offerings made by fire of the fat; upon the inwards, kidneys and caul of the liver, which was all burnt: to wave it for a wave-offering before the Lord; the ſhoulder was lifted up, and the breaſt waved to and fro before the Lord of the whole earth, and towards the ſeveral parts of it, to ſhew and own his right to all they had, and then they were given to the prieſts as a token of it: and it ſhall be thine, and thy ſons with thee; both the ſhoulder and the breaſt: by a ſtatute for ever; to be obſerved as long as the ceremonial law and levitical prieſthood laſted, even to the end of the Jewiſh age and œconomy, and the coming of the Meſſiah: as the Lord hath commanded; ch. vii. 33, 34.

℣. 16. And Moſes diligently ſought the goat of the ſin-offering, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan ſays, "three goats were offered on that day, the goat "of the new moon, of the ſin-offering for the "people, and of the ſin-offering, which Nahſhon the "ſon of Amminadab offered at the dedication of the "altar; Aaron and his ſons, it adds, went and "burnt theſe three, Moſes came and ſought, &c." Jarchi alſo ſpeaks of three goats offered, but ſays that only one was burnt, the goat of the new moon; and ſo Ben Gerſom, who gives this reaſon for the diligent ſearch after it, becauſe it was always to be offered up, and was not a temporary affair, as the others were: but it rather ſeems to be the goat of the ſin-offering for the people, for it is not certain that the other goats were offered on this day, but this was, ſee ch. ix. 15. now according to the law, the fleſh of this goat was not to be burnt, but to be eaten by the prieſts in the holy place, ſee ch. vi. 25, 26. Moſes now ſuſpecting that Aaron and his ſons, through their grief for the death of Nadab and Abihu, had neglected the eating of it, ſought diligently after it, and ſo it proved: and behold, it was burnt; as they had no appetite to it themſelves, they burnt it, that it might not be eaten by any others, for none but they might eat it, and that it might not corrupt: and he was angry with Eleazar and Ithamar, the ſons of Aaron, which were left alive; when their two elder brothers were killed with lightening for doing what was not commanded, which ſhould have made them more obſervant of the laws of God, to do that which was commanded them; and though they were ſpared, and ſurvived their brethren, yet they tranſgreſſed, in burning the ſin-offering of the people, when they ſhould have eaten it. Jarchi obſerves, that he expreſſed his anger not to Aaron, but to his ſons, which he did for the honour of Aaron, laying the blame not on him, who was overwhelmed with grief, but on his ſons: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 17. Wherefore have ye not eaten of the ſin-offering in the holy place, ſeeing it is moſt holy, &c.] The ſin-offering was one of the moſt holy things, and therefore to be eaten only in the ſanctuary; though this was not the fault they are here charged with that they had eat it, but not in the holy place; for they had not eaten it at all, but burnt it, as appears from the preceding verſe; this is what they are blamed for particularly, though they are reminded of the whole law concerning it, that it was to be eaten by them; that it was to be eaten in the holy place, the reaſon of which is given; but they had not eaten it any where: and God hath given it to you, to bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before the Lord? for by eating the ſin-offering, or ſin itſelf, as it is in the original text, ſee Hoſ. iv. 8. they made the ſins of the people, for whom the offering was, in ſome ſenſe their own; and they bore them, and made a typical atonement for them; in which they were types of Chriſt, who was made ſin for his people, took their ſins upon him, and by imputation they were made his own, and he bore them in his own body on the tree, and made full ſatisfaction and atonement for them. Now ſince the eating of the ſin-offering of the people was of ſo great importance and conſequence, the neglect of it by the prieſts was very blameworthy.

℣. 18. Behold, the blood of it was not brought in within the holy place, &c.] When that was the caſe indeed, the fleſh of the ſin-offering was not to be eaten, but burnt, ſee ch. vi. 30. but this was not the caſe now, and therefore its fleſh ſhould have been eaten, and not burnt: ye ſhould indeed have eaten it in the holy place, as I commanded, ch. vi. 26.

℣. 19. And Aaron ſaid unto Moſes, &c.] For what Moſes had ſaid, was ſaid in his preſence, tho' not addreſſed to him directly, but to his ſons; and he was ſenſible that he was pointed at, and that if there was any blame in this affair, it lay as much or more on him than on his ſons; and therefore he takes it upon him to give an anſwer, and to excuſe the fact as well as he could: behold, this day they have offered their ſin-offering, and their burnt-offering before the Lord; that is, the people of Iſrael had brought a kid of the goats for a ſin-offering, and a calf and a lamb for a burnt-offering, and he and his ſons aſſiſting him, had offered them for them, even on the very day his two eldeſt ſons were removed by death in an awful manner: and ſuch things have befallen me; at this very time, ſoon after the above ſacrifices were offered, happened the death of his two ſons, which occaſioned great anguiſh and diſtreſs, grief and ſorrow, ſo that he could not eat of the ſin-offering; he had no appetite for it, and if he had, he thought in his preſent circumſtances it would not have been right, as follows: and if I had eaten the ſin-offering to-day, ſhould it have been accepted in the ſight of the Lord? he being a mourner. The Jews ſay [u], an high-prieſt may offer being a mourner, but not eat; a common prieſt may neither offer nor eat; and which they illuſtrate by this paſſage, that Aaron offered and did not eat, but his ſons did neither.

℣. 20. And when Moſes heard that, he was content.] He ſaid no more, he did not proceed in blaming him and his ſons, but was ſatisfied with the anſwer returned; he conſidered the grief and trouble of mind that attended Aaron, which might not only cauſe him to diſregard food, but even to forget what was commanded to be done in this caſe; and beſides he might obſerve, that there was ſome difficulty attending it; in ſome caſes the fleſh of [u] Miſn. Horayot, c. 3. §. 5. Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

2

of the ſin-offering was to be eaten, and not burnt, in others, to be burnt, and not eaten; and this being the firſt time of offering one, the miſtake might be the more eaſily made; and fearing one might be made, and eſpecially when Aaron was in ſuch circumſtances, might be the reaſon Moſes ſo diligently ſought after the goat of the ſin-offering: moreover, what Aaron had done appeared to be not out of any wilful neglect of the command of God, but with a good deſign, as judging it would be unacceptable to him, ſhould he have eaten of it in his circumſtances. Moſes upon the whole thought him excuſable, at leaſt inſiſted no more upon the blame. The Jewiſh writers make the miſtake to lie on the ſide of Moſes and not Aaron; and which the former acknowledged, according to the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem; ſee Deut. xxvi. 12, 13, 14.

CHAP. XI.

THIS chapter treats of creatures clean and unclean, as fit or not fit to be eaten; and firſt of beaſts, whoſe ſigns are given, ℣. 1—8. then of fiſhes, which are likewiſe deſcribed, ℣. 9—12. after that of fowls, and thoſe that are not to be eaten are particularly named, ℣. 13—19. next of creeping things, which are diſtinguiſhed into two ſorts, as flying creeping things, of which thoſe that are unclean, their carcaſſes are not even to be touched, as neither the carcaſſes of unclean beaſts, ℣. 20—28. and creeping things on the earth, which defile by touching, as well as eating, and make every thing unclean, upon which, being dead, they fall, ℣. 29—43. and theſe laws are enforced from the holineſs and goodneſs of God, ℣. 44, 45. and the chapter is concluded with a recapitulation of them, ℣. 46, 47.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, &c.] The one being the chief magiſtrate, and the other the high-prieſt, and both concerned to ſee the following laws put into execution; according to Jarchi, the Lord ſpoke to Moſes that he might ſpeak to Aaron; but Aaron being now in office, and one part of his office being to diſtinguiſh between clean and unclean, the following diſcourſe is directed equally to him, as to Moſes: ſaying unto them; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, &c.] For to them only belong the following laws, and not unto the Gentiles, as Jarchi rightly obſerves; theſe were parts of the ceremonial law, which was peculiarly given to them, and lay, among other things, in meats and drinks, and now aboliſhed; for it is not what goes into a man that defiles him; nor is any thing common or unclean of itſelf, but every creature of God is good if received with thankſgiving. The ſons of Noah had free liberty, without any reſtraint or limitation of uſing for food any living creature that moved upon the face of the earth; in the choice of which they were left to exerciſe their reaſon and judgment, and is the caſe with us now; but as men have not ſo nice a ſmell as ſome animals have, and cannot diſtinguiſh by their ſenſes ſo well as they what food is moſt wholeſome, which makes the exerciſe of their reaſon and judgment neceſſary, and the people of the Jews being a ſpecial people, and for whom the Lord had a peculiar regard; for the ſake of their health, and to preſerve them from diſeaſes they were ſubject to, ſuch as the leproſy and others, and to direct them to what was moſt ſalubrious and healthful, gave them the following laws; and which, though they are not obligatory upon us, yet may be a direction to us, in the uſe of what may be moſt ſuitable and proper food for us, the difference of climates, and of the conſtitutions of mens bodies being conſidered: not that we are to ſuppoſe, that the caſe of health was the only reaſon of delivering out theſe laws to the children of Iſrael, for other ends, beſides that, may be thought to be had in view; as to aſſert his ſovereign right to the creatures, and his diſpoſal of them to them according to his will and pleaſure; to lay a reſtraint on their appetites, to prevent luxury, and to teach them ſelf-denial, and compliance with his will; as alſo to keep them the more from the company and converſation of the Gentiles, by whom they otherwiſe might be led into idolatry; and to give them an averſion to their idols, to whom the creatures forbidden them to eat, many of them were either now or would be ſacred to them; and chiefly to excite to a care for purity, both inward and outward, and create in them an abhorrence of thoſe vices which may be ſignified by the ill qualities of ſeveral of the creatures; and to inſtruct them in the difference between holy and unholy perſons, with whom they ſhould or ſhould not have communion; ſee Acts x. 11—15. 28. theſe are the beaſts that ye ſhall eat among all the beaſts that are on the earth; they are not particularly mentioned here, but they are in Deut. xiv. 4, 5. and they are theſe ten; the ox, the ſheep, and the goat, the hart and the roebuck, and the fallow-deer, and the wild goat, and the pygarg, and the wild ox, and the chamois; of all which, ſee the notes there: here only ſome general things are obſerved to deſcribe them by, as follow.

℣. 3. Whatſoever parteth the hoof and is cloven-footed, &c.] That is, whoſe hoof is parted and cloven quite through; for there are ſome creatures that have partitions in their feet but not quite through, they are parted above, but underneath are joined together by a ſkin; wherefore both theſe phraſes are uſed to deſcribe the beaſts lawful to be eaten: the Egyptians ſeem to have borrowed this law from the Jews, for Chæremon ſays [x], that they abſtain from ſuch four-footed beaſts that have only one hoof, or have many partitions, or have no horns: and ſo the Targum of Jonathan adds here, "which have horns," which, though not in the text, agrees well with the creatures allowed by this law to be eaten, ſee Deut. xiv. 4, 5. for ſuch are all horned cattle; nor are there any cattle horned forbid to be eaten: and cheweth the cud among the beaſts, that ſhall ye eat; who having no upper teeth cannot thoroughly chew their food at once, and therefore bring it up again out of their ſtomachs into their mouths and chew it over again, that it may be better prepared for digeſtion in the ſtomach, and ſo yield better nouriſhment; and this makes the fleſh of ſuch creatures fitter for food: and theſe creatures have more ſtomachs than one; the ventricles for rumination are four; the firſt is the paunch, which in oxen is ſo big as to hold food of

[x] Apud Porphyr. de abſtinentia, l. 4. §. 7.

of fifty pound weight, the ſecond the honey-comb, the third the tripe, the fourth the honey-tripe, and to which are helpful the pectoral muſcle, the abdomen, with the diaphragm [y]: all this might have a moral and ſpiritual meaning in it, and may be applied either to miniſters of the word; who ought rightly to divide the word of truth, and give to every one their part, and who ſhould walk uprightly according to it, and who ſhould give themſelves up wholly to the meditation of it, and thoroughly digeſt it; and ſtudy to ſhew themſelves workmen, that need not to be aſhamed; or to private chriſtians, who have a diſcerning ſpirit in ſpiritual things, and can diſtinguiſh not only morality from immorality, but ſpiritual things from carnal, heavenly things from earthly, the voice of Chriſt from the voice of a ſtranger, and the doctrines of Chriſt from the doctrines of men; and who alſo walk as they ſhould do, by faith on Chriſt, in the ways of God, and according to the goſpel; theſe chew the cud, meditate on the word, feed upon it whilſt delivered, recal it, and have it brought to their remembrance by the divine Spirit, and ponder it in their hearts; ſee Pſ. i. 1, 2.

℣. 4. Nevertheleſs, theſe ſhall ye not eat, &c.] To whom one of theſe deſcriptive characters may agree but not the other: of them that chew the cud, or of them that divide the hoof: there being ſome that chewed the cud but did not divide the hoof; others that divided the hoof but did not chew the cud, of which inſtances are given as follow: as the camel, becauſe he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof; he is unclean unto you; and not to be eaten, whether male or female; or rather, though he cheweth the cud; and this account agrees with what naturaliſts give of it; ſo Ariſtotle [z] ſays it has not both rows of teeth, but wants its upper teeth, and chews as horned cattle do, and has bellies like theirs; for they have more bellies than one, as the ſheep, and goat, and hart, and others; ſince the ſervice of the mouth is not ſufficient to grind the food for want of teeth, this is ſupplied by the bellies which receive the food one after another; in the firſt it is indigeſted, in the ſecond ſomewhat more digeſted, in the third more fully, in the fourth compleatly: and ſo many bellies the camel has, as a very learned ſearcher [a] into theſe things obſerves; the firſt is the biggeſt, the ſecond very ſmall, the third much greater than the ſecond, and the fourth equal to the ſecond; in the ſecond belly between the tunicks, he ſays, ſeem to be the hydrophylacia, in which the water they drink is kept, very commodious for theſe animals paſſing through ſandy deſerts, ſo that they can long bear thirſt: Pliny [b] ſays four days: Leo Africanus [c] relates a method uſed by travellers in the deſerts of Lybia, who being in extreme want of water kill one of their camels, out of whoſe inteſtines they preſs out water; this they drink, this they carry about till they find a well, or muſt die with thirſt: and the account alſo which is given of the feet of theſe creatures agrees; it parts the hoof but not thoroughly, it is not cleft quite through, and ſo comes not up to Moſes's deſcriptive character of clean creatures; its hoof is divided in two, but ſo divided, as Ariſtotle [d] obſerves, that it is but little divided on the back part unto the ſecond joint of the toes; the forepart is very little divided, to the firſt joint of the toes, and there is ſomething between the parts, as in the feet of geeſe: and ſo Pliny ſays [e], it has two hoofs, but the lower part of the foot is but very little divided, ſo that it is not thoroughly cleft: but though the fleſh of theſe creatures was forbidden the Jews, it was eaten by people of other nations; both Ariſtotle [f] and Pliny [g] commend the milk of camels; and by the former, the fleſh of them is ſaid to be exceeding ſweet; and Diodorus Siculus relates [h], that what with their milk and their fleſh, which is eaten, as well as on account of their carrying burdens, they are very profitable unto men; and Strabo [i] ſays, the Nomades eat the fleſh and milk of camels; and ſo the Africans, according to Leo Africanus [k]; and a countryman of ours [l], who lived ſome time in Arabia, relates, that when a camel falls they kill it, and the poorer ſort of the company eat it; and he ſays, that he himſelf eat of camel's fleſh, and that it was very ſweet and nouriſhing: theſe creatures, in the myſtic ſenſe, may be an emblem of ſuch perſons that carry their heads high, are proud and haughty, that boaſt of their riches, or truſt in their righteouſneſs.

℣. 5. And the coney, &c.] Or rabbet: becauſe he cheweth the cud; or tho' he cheweth; which yet ſome obſerve, the coney or rabbet does not, it having upper teeth, and therefore they think ſome other creature is meant, by Shaphan, the word here uſed; and Bochart [m] is of opinion, that the Aljarbuo of the Arabians, a ſort of mountain-mouſe, is meant, which chews the cud and divides not the hoof, and reſides in rocks, which agrees with the account of the Shaphan in Prov. xxx. 26. but this is rejected by Dr. Shaw [n], who takes the creature here to be the Daman Iſrael, or Iſrael's lamb, an animal of mount Lebanon, a harmleſs creature, of the ſame ſize and quality with the rabbet, and with the like incurvating poſture, and diſpoſition of the fore-teeth, but is of a browner colour, with ſmaller eyes, and a head more pointed, like the Marmots; the fore-feet likewiſe are ſhort, and the hinder are nearly as long in proportion as thoſe of the Jerboa; and tho' this animal is known to burrow ſometimes in the ground, yet its uſual reſidence and refuge is in the holes and clifts of the rocks; but a learned man [o], and very inquiſitive in the things of nature, tells us, that the Cuniculus, coney or rabbet, this ſort of animals do chew half an hour after eating: but divideth not the hoof; which is well known of this creature: he is unclean unto you; not fit or proper to be eat of, but to be abſtained from as an unclean animal; and may be an emblem of timorous perſons, as theſe creatures, by Ariſtotle [p] are obſerved to be, and it is well known, they are; even of the fearful and unbelieving, reckoned among the impure, who will have their portion in the lake of fire, Rev. xxi. 8.

℣. 6. And the hare, becauſe he cheweth the cud, &c.] Or, though he chews it: but divideth not the hoof, he is unclean to you; and ſo not to be eaten; ſo Plutarch [q] ſays, that the Jews are ſaid to abſtain from the hare, diſdaining it as a filthy and unclean animal, and yet was in the greateſt eſteem with the

[y] Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 2. p. 278, 279. Ib. p. 280. [a] Scheuchzer. [b] Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 18. [c] Deſcriptio Africæ, l. 1. p. 75. [d] Hiſt. Animal. l. 2. c. 1. [e] l. 11. c. 45. [f] Hiſt. Animal. l. 6. c. 26. [g] Nat. Hiſt. l. 11. c. 41. [h] Bibliothec. l. 2. p. 137. [i] Geograph. l. 16. p. 535. [k] Deſcriptio Africæ, l. 1. p. 48. l. 6. 617, 620. Arab. Geogr. Clim. 1. par. 1. 3. [l] Pitt's Account of the Mahometans, c. 8. p. 106. Vid. Hieron. adv. Jovinian. l. 2. [m] Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 3. c. 33. col. 1015, 1016. [n] Travels, p. 177, 348. Ed. 2. [o] Scheuchzer. ut ſupra, p. 281. [p] Hiſt. Animal. l. 1. c. 1. [q] Sympoſ. l. 9. c. 5.

the Romans of any four-footed beaſt, as Martial ſays [r]: Moſes, as Bochart [s] and other learned men obſerve, is the only writer that ſpeaks of the hare as chewing the cud; though they alſo obſerve, that Ariſtotle [t] makes mention of that in common with thoſe that do chew the cud, namely a coagulum or runnet in its ſtomach; his words are, "all that "have many bellies have what is called πυετια, a "coagulum or runnet, and of them that have "but one belly, the hare;" only that: this creature being prone to luſt, may be an emblem of luſtful perſons, who give up themſelves to laſciviouſneſs, to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs, Eph. iv. 19.

℣. 7. And the ſwine, though he divide the hoof, and be cloven-footed, &c.] Not only its hoofs are parted but cloven quite through, and ſo in this reſpect anſwers Moſes's firſt deſcriptive character of clean creatures; though Ariſtotle [u] and Pliny [w] ſpeak of ſome kind of ſwine in Illyricum, Pæonia and other places, which have ſolid hoofs; but perhaps theſe were not properly ſwine, though ſo called: yet he cheweth not the cud; and a learned phyſician obſerves [x], that ſuch creatures that chew not the cud, ſo perfect a chyle cannot be elaborated by them as is by thoſe that chew the cud, and therefore their fleſh muſt be leſs wholeſome; and of the ſwine, he ſays [y], they have but one belly, and ſo there is no rumination or chewing the cud by them; wherefore they are to be placed, and are in a lower degree than the camel, the coney, and the hare; and as they cannot digeſt the chyle ſo well as thoſe that chew the cud, and alſo live upon moſt ſordid and filthy food, the eating of ſwines fleſh, he obſerves, muſt produce many inconveniences to the body, as eſpecially ſcorbutic, arthritic, ſcabious, and leprous diſorders: ſo Manetho the Egyptian ſays [z], that he that eats ſwines milk is liable to be filled with the leproſy; and Maimonides [a] gives it as the principal reaſon of its being forbid the Jews, becauſe it is ſuch a filthy creature, and eats ſuch filthy things: he is unclean to you; and ſo it has always been accounted by the Jews, and nothing is more abominable to them, as is even teſtified by heathen [b] writers; and in this they have been imitated by many nations, particularly the Egyptians, who, as Herodotus ſays [c], reckon ſwine a very filthy creature; ſo that if any one does but touch it paſſing by, he is obliged to plunge himſelf into a river with his clothes on; and keepers of them may not go into any of their temples, nor do the reſt of the Egyptians intermarry with them, but they marry among themſelves; the reaſon of this their abhorrence of ſwine, Ælianus ſays [d], is becauſe they are ſo gluttonous that they won't ſpare their own young, nor abſtain from human fleſh; and this, ſays he, is the reaſon why the Egyptians hate it as an impure and voracious animal: likewiſe the Arabians entirely abſtain from ſwines fleſh, as Solinus ſays [e], who adds, that if any of this ſort of creatures is carried into Arabia, it immediately dies; and the ſame Pliny [f] atteſts: and ſo the Phœnicians, the near neighbours of the Jews, would not eat the fleſh of them; hence Antoninus is ſaid to abſtain from it after the manner of the Phœnicians [g], unleſs the hiſtorian ſhould mean the Jews; alſo the Gallo-Grecians or Galatians [h]; nay, even the Indians have ſuch an abhorrence of it, that they would as ſoon taſte of human fleſh as taſte of that [i]; and it is well known that the Mahometans abſtain from it; and they have ſuch an averſion to it, that if any chance to kill a wild pig, for tame they have none, they look on the merit of it to be almoſt equivalent to the killing a chriſtian in fight [k]: now theſe creatures may be an emblem of filthy and impure ſinners, eſpecially apoſtates, who return to their former impurities and wallow in them, 2 Pet. ii. 22.

℣. 8. Of their fleſh ſhall ye not eat, &c.] Meaning, not of ſwine only, but of the camel, coney, and hare: and their carcaſe ſhall ye not touch; which muſt not be underſtood of touching them in any ſenſe; for then it would have been unlawful for a Jew to have rode upon a camel, or to take out and make uſe of hogs lard in medicine; but of touching them in order to kill them, and prepare them for food, and eat them; and indeed all unneceſſary touching of them is forbidden, leſt it ſhould bring them to the eating of them; though perhaps it may chiefly reſpect the touching of them dead: they are unclean to you; one and all of them; for as this was ſaid of each of them in particular, ſo now of all of them together; and which holds good of all wild creatures not named, to whom the deſcription above belongs, and which uſed to be eaten by other nations; ſome of which were called Pamphagi, from eating all ſorts, and others Agriophagi, from eating wild creatures, as lions, panthers, elephants [l], &c.

℣. 9. Theſe ſhall ye eat of all that are in the waters, &c.] In the waters of the ſea, or in rivers, pools, and ponds; meaning fiſhes; for though ſome perſons abſtain from eating them entirely, as the Egyptian prieſts, as Herodotus [m] relates; and it was a part of religion and holineſs, not with the Egyptians only, but with the Syrians and Greeks, to forbear eating them [n]; and Julian [o] gives two reaſons why men ſhould abſtain from fiſhes; the one becauſe what is not ſacrificed to the gods, ought not to be uſed for food; and the other is, becauſe theſe being immerſed in the deep waters, look not up to heaven; but God gave the people of Iſrael liberty of eating them, under certain limitations: whatſoever hath fins and ſcales, in the waters, in the ſeas, and in the rivers, them ſhall ye eat; ſome render it disjunctively, fins or ſcales [p]; but as Maimonides [q] obſerves, whatſoever has ſcales has fins; and who alſo ſays, if a fiſh has but one fin and one ſcale, it was lawful to eat: fins to fiſhes are like wings to birds, and oars to boats, with which they ſwim and move ſwiftly from place to place; and ſcales are a covering and a protection of them; and ſuch fiſhes being much in motion, and ſo well covered, are leſs humid and more ſolid and and ſubſtantial, and more wholeſome: in a ſpiritual ſenſe, fins may denote the exerciſe of grace, in which there is a motion of the ſoul, Godward, Chriſtward, and heavenward; and ſcales may ſignify good works, which adorn believers, and protect them from the reproaches and calumnies of men.

[r] L. 13. Epigr. 87. [s] Ut ſupra, c. 31. col. 977. [t] De part. Animal. l. 3. c. 15. & Hiſt. Animal. l. 3. c. 21. [u] Hiſt. Animal. l. 2. c. 1. [w] Nat. Hiſt. l. 11. c. 46. [x] Scheuchzer, ut ſupra, p. 282. [y] Ib. p. 284. [z] Apud Ælian. de Animal. l. 10. c. 16. [a] Moreh Nevochim, par. 3. c. 48. [b] Et vetus indulget, &c. Juvenal. Satyr. 6. nec diſtare putant, &c. Ib. Satyr. 14. Vid. Porphyr. de abſtinentia, l. 4. §. 11. 12. [c] Euterpe, ſive, l. 2. c. 47. [d] Ut ſupra. [e] Polyhiſtor. c. 46. [f] Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 52. [g] Herodian. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 16. [h] Pauſan. Achaica, ſive. l. 7. p. 430. [i] Cteſias apud Ælian. de Animal. l. 16. c. 37. [k] Pitt's Account of the Mahometans, p. 163. [l] Plin. l. 6. c. 30. Solinus, c. 43. [m] Euterpe, ſive. l. 2. c. 37. [n] Plutarch. Sympoſ. p. 730. [o] Orat. 5. p. 330. [p] So Bootius. [q] Hilchot Maacolot Aſurot, l. 1. §. 24.

℣. 10. And all that have not fins nor ſcales in the ſeas, and in the rivers, &c.] Such as eels, lampreys, &c. of all that move in the waters, and of any living thing which is in the waters; the former of theſe are interpreted by Aben Ezra and Ben Gerſom, of little fiſhes that have but a ſmall body, and ſuch as are created out of the waters; and the latter, of ſuch as are produced of a male and female; or as Maimonides [r] explains it, the one ſignifies the leſſer creatures, ſuch as worms and horſeleeches; the other greater ones, ſea-beaſts, as ſea-dogs, &c. they ſhall be an abomination to you; not only unclean, and ſo unfit to eat, but to be had in abhorrence and deteſtation, as being exceeding diſagreeable and unwholeſome; and as a learned man obſerves [s], to theſe prohibited in general, belong all thoſe animals in lakes, rivers, or ſeas, which are of a ſlow motion, and which, becauſe of the ſlow motion of their bodies, do not ſo well digeſt their food; and for that may be compared with four-footed beaſts that have but one belly, and ſo unwholeſome as they.

℣. 11. They ſhall be even an abomination to you, &c.] This is repeated again and again, to deter from the eating of ſuch fiſhes, leſt there ſhould be any deſire after them: ye ſhall not eat of their fleſh; here mention is made of the fleſh of fiſhes, as is by the apoſtle, 1 Cor. xv. 39. Aben Ezra obſerves, that their wiſemen ſay, this is according to the uſage of words in thoſe ages: but you ſhall have their carcaſes in abomination; not only abſtain from eating them and touching them, but expreſs the utmoſt averſion to them.

℣. 12. Whatſoever hath no fins nor ſcales in the waters, &c.] Which is repeated that they might take particular notice of this law, and be careful to obſerve it, this being the only ſign given: that ſhall be an abomination unto you; the Targum of Jonathan ſays, that not only the fleſh of ſuch fiſh, but the broth, and pickles made of them, were to be an abomination; which contradicts what Pliny [t] relates, that the Jews made a pickle of fiſhes that wanted ſcales; ſo Grotius underſtands him: this law of the Jews is taken notice of by Porphyry [u], who ſays, it is forbidden all the Jews to eat horſefleſh, or fiſhes that want ſcales, or any animal that has but one hoof: and Pliny [w] from an ancient author, Caſſius Hemina, makes mention of a law of Numa, forbidding the uſe of fiſh that had not ſcales, in feaſts made for the gods.

℣. 13. And theſe are they which ye ſhall have in abomination among the fowls, &c.] No deſcription or ſign is given of fowls, as of beaſts and fiſhes, only the names of thoſe not to be eaten; which, according to Maimonides are 24; ſo that all the reſt but theſe are clean fowls, and might be eaten; wherefore the ſame writer obſerves [x], that, "whoever was expert in theſe kinds, and in their "names, might eat of every fowl which was not "of them, and there was no need of an enquiry:" but what creatures are intended by theſe, is not now eaſy to know; very different are the ſentiments both of the Jews and Chriſtians concerning them; and indeed it does not much concern us chriſtians, to know what are meant by them, but as curioſity may lead us to ſuch an enquiry, not thinking ourſelves bound by theſe laws; but it is of moment with the Jews to know them, who think they are; wherefore to ſupply this deficiency, they venture to give ſome ſigns by which clean and unclean fowls may be known, and they are three; ſuch are clean who have a ſuperfluous claw, and alſo a craw, and a crop that is uncovered by the hand [y]; and on the contrary, they are unclean, and not to be eaten, as ſays the Targum of Jonathan, which have no ſuperfluous talon, or no craw, or a crop not uncovered: they ſhall not be eaten, they are an abomination; and they are thoſe that follow: the eagle, and the oſſifrage, and the oſpray; about the firſt of theſe there is no difficulty, all agree the eagle is intended; which has its name either from the nature of its ſight, or from the caſting of its feathers, or from its tearing with its bill: it is a bird of prey, a very rapacious creature, and ſometime called the bird of Jupiter, and ſacred to the gods; and theſe may be the reaſons why forbid to be eaten, as well as becauſe its fleſh is hard, and not fit for food, and unwholeſome; the oſſifrage or bonebreaker has its name from its tearing its prey and breaking its bones for the marrow, as the word Peres here uſed ſignifies, Mic. iii. 3. it is ſaid to dig up bodies in burying places to eat what it finds in the bones [z]: this is thought to be of the eagle-kind, as it is reckoned by Pliny [a], though Ariſtotle [b] ſpeaks of it as very different from the eagle, as larger than that, and of an aſh colour; and is ſo kind to the eagle's young, that when they are caſt out by that, it takes them and brings them up: the Oſpray is the Haliæetus or ſea-eagle, as the Septuagint verſion and ſeveral others render it; which Ariſtotle [c] deſcribes, as having a large and thick neck, crooked wings, and a broad tail, and reſides about the ſea and ſhores: Pliny [d] ſpeaks of it as having a very clear ſight, and poizing itſelf on high, having ſight of a fiſh in the ſea, will ruſh down at once and fetch it out of the water; and he alſo reports that ſhe will take her young before they are fledged, and oblige them to look directly againſt the rays of the ſun, and if any of them wink, or their eyes water, ſhe caſts them out of her neſt as a ſpurious brood. Ariſtotle [e], who relates the ſame, ſays, ſhe kills them. The name of this creature, in the Hebrew text, ſeems to be taken from its ſtrength; wherefore Bochart [f] is of opinion, that the melanæetos, or black eagle, which though the leaſt of eagles as to its bigneſs, exceeds all others in ſtrength, as both Ariſtotle [g] and Pliny [h] ſay; and therefore, as the latter obſerves, is called by the Romans, valeria, from its ſtrength. Maimonides [i] ſays of theſe two laſt fowls, which we render the oſſifrage and the oſpray, that they are not to be found on the continent, but in the deſart places of the iſles of the ſea very far off, even thoſe which are at the end of the habitable world.

℣. 14. And the vulture, and kite after his kind.] Perhaps it might be better if the verſion was inverted, and the words be read, and the kite, and the [r] Ib. c. 2. §. 12. abſtinentia, l. 4. c. 14.

[s] Scheuchzer, ut ſupra, p. 287.
[t] Nat. Hiſt. l. 31. c. 8.
[u] De
[w] Nat. Hiſt. l. 32. c. 2.
[x] Maacolot Aſurot, c. 1. §. 14. 15.
[y] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 75. 1. Maimon. Ib. §. 15.
[z] Calmet's Dictionary in the word Oſſifraga.
[a] Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 3.
[b] Hiſt. Animal. l. 6. c. 6. l. 8. c. 3. & l. 9. c. 34.
[c] Ib. l. 9. c. 32.
[d] Ut ſupra.
[e] Ib. c. 34.
[f] Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 2. c. 6. col. 188.
[g] Ut ſupra, c. 32.
[h] Ut ſupra.
[i] Maacolot Aſurot, c. 1. §. 17.

the vulture after his kind; and the laſt word is by us rendered the vulture in Job xxviii. 7. and very rightly, ſince the kite is not remarkable for its ſight, any other than all rapacious creatures are, whereas the vulture is to a proverb; and beſides, of the vulture there are two ſorts, as Ariſtotle ſays [k], the one leſſer and whiter, the other larger and more of an aſh-colour; and there are ſome that are of the eagle-kind [l], whereas there is but one ſort of kites; tho' Ainſworth makes mention of two, the greater of a ruddy colour, common in England, and the leſſer of a blacker colour, known in Germany, but produces no authority for it; however theſe are both ravenous creatures: of the kite, Ælianus ſays [m], it is very rapacious, and will take meat out of the ſhambles, but not touch any ſacrificed to Jupiter; the truth of which may well be queſtioned; and of vultures he reports [n], that they will watch a dying man, and follow armies going to battle, expecting prey; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 28.

℣. 15. Every raven after his kind.] The red raven, night-raven, the water-raven, river-raven, wood-raven, &c. this alſo includes crows, rooks, pies, jays and jackdaws, &c. The raven was with the heathens ſacred to Apollo [o], is a voracious creature, and ſo reckoned among unclean ones, and unfit for food; nor does the care that God takes of theſe creatures, or the uſe he has made of them, contradict this; ſee Job xxxviii. 41. Pſ. cxlvii. 9. 1 Kings xvii. 4, 6.

℣. 16. And the owl, &c.] The great and little owls being after mentioned, it ſeems beſt by the word here uſed, to underſtand the oſtrich with the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, the Oriental verſions, and the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan: the account which Pliny [p] gives of the African and Ethiopic oſtriches is this; that they are the largeſt of birds, and almoſt of the kind of beaſts; that they exceed the height of a horſeman on horſeback, and are ſwifter than the horſes; that their wings are given them to help them in their running, otherwiſe they are not flying fowls, nor are they lifted up from the earth. Their hoofs are like to thoſe of harts, with which they fight, and are cloven, and ſerve to gather up ſtones, which in their flight they throw with their feet againſt them that follow them; they have a wonderful concoction, digeſting whatever is ſwallowed down; and, according to Galen [q], all the parts of them, their fleſh and their eggs are hard and difficult of digeſtion and excrementitious: Aben Ezra ſays [r], their fleſh is as dry as a ſtick, and it is not uſual to eat it, for there is no moiſture in it; and therefore nothing can be eaten of the whole ſpecies, but the daughter or young one, for that being a female and little, there is ſome moiſture in it; but not ſo the male when little; wherefore as the fleſh of this creature is always reckoned by the Jews as unlawful to be eaten, it may the rather be ſuppoſed to be intended here, ſince if not here, it cannot be thought to be any where obſerved; and yet we find that both the eggs and the fleſh of this creature have been eaten by ſome people: their eggs with the Indians were reckoned delicate eating, as Ælianus [s] reports; and near the Arabians and Ethiopians, were a people, as both Diodorus Siculus [t] and Strabo [u] relate, who were called Struthophagi, from their living on oſtriches; and they eat them in Peru, where they are common [w]; and in ſeveral parts of Africa, as Nubia, Numidia, and Lybia, as Leo Africanus [x] relates: and the night hawk; which, according to Pliny [y], is ſometimes called Cymindis, and is ſeldom to be found in woods, ſees not ſo well in the day-time, and wages a deadly war with the eagle, and they are often found joined together: Bochart [z], who thinks that the female oſtrich is meant by the preceding bird, is of opinion that the male oſtrich is meant here, there being no general name in the Hebrew language to comprehend both ſexes: and the cuckow; a bird well known by its voice at leaſt: ſome have thought it to be the ſame with the hawk, changing its figure and voice; but this has been refuted by naturaliſts [a]: but though it is here forbid to be eaten, yet its young, when fat, are ſaid to be of a grateful ſavour by Ariſtotle: and Pliny [b] ſays, no bird is to be compared to it for the ſweetneſs of its fleſh, though perhaps it may not be here intended: the word is by the Septuagint rendered a ſea gull, and ſo it is by Ainſworth, and which is approved of by Bochart [c]: and the hawk after his kind; a well known bird, of which, according to Ariſtotle [d], there are not leſs than ten ſorts: Pliny [e] ſays ſixteen; it has its name in Hebrew from flying, it being a bird that flies very ſwiftly; ſee Job xxxix. 26. the hawk was a ſymbol of deity with the Egyptians, and was reverenced and worſhipped by them [f].

℣. 17. And the little owl, and the cormorant, and the great owl.] Ainſworth tranſlates the words juſt the reverſe, and takes the firſt word to ſignify the great owl, and the laſt the little one: the great owl may intend the great horn-owl, called ſometimes the eagle-owl, which is thus deſcribed; it is of the bigneſs of a gooſe, and has large wings, capable of extending to a ſurprizing breadth: its head is much of the ſize and figure of that of a cat, and has cluſters of black feathers over the ears, riſing to three fingers height; its eyes are very large, and the feathers of its rump long, and extremely ſoft; its eyes have yellow iriſes, and its beak black and crooked; it is all over mottled with white, reddiſh and black ſpots; its legs are very ſtrong, and are hairy down to the very ends of the toes, their covering being of a whitiſh brown [g]: and as this is called the great horn-owl, others, in compariſon of it, may be called the little owl. Some reckon ſeveral ſpecies of owls—there are of three ſizes; the large ones are as big as a capon, the middle ſized are as big as a wood pigeon, the ſmaller ſort about the bigneſs of an ordinary pigeon—the horned-owl is of two kinds, a larger and a ſmaller—the great owl is alſo of two ſorts, that is, of a larger and a ſmaller kind [h]; it is a bird ſacred to Minerva: but though it is pretty plain, that the laſt of the words uſed ſignifies a bird that flies in the twilight of the evening, from whence it ſeems to have its name, as Aben Ezra, Ben Gerſom, and other Jewiſh writers obſerve, and fitly agrees with the owl which is not ſeen in the day, but appears about that time; yet the firſt is thought by Bochart [i] to be the onocrotalus or pelican, which has under its bill a bag or ſack, which will hold a large quantity of any thing; and the word here uſed has the ſignification of a cup or veſſel, ſee Pſ. cii. 6. The word we render cormorant, the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan paraphraſe it, a drawer of fiſh out of the ſea, ſo Baal Hatturim; and thus it is interpreted in the Talmud [k]; and the gloſs upon it ſays, this is the water-raven, which is the ſame with the cormorant; for the cormorant is no other than corvus aquaticus, or water-raven; ſee the note on Zeph. ii. 14. The Septuagint render it by catarrhactes, which according to the deſcription of it [l], reſides by rocks and ſhores that hang over water; and when it ſees fiſhes ſwimming in it, it will fly on high, and contract its feathers, and flounce into the water, and fetch out the fiſh; and ſo is of the ſame nature, though not the ſame creature with the cormorant. Aben Ezra obſerves, that ſome ſay this is a bird which caſts its young as ſoon as born; and this is ſaid of the catarrhactes, that it lets down its young into the ſea, and draws them out again, and hereby inures them to this exerciſe [m].

[k] Hiſt. Animal. l. 8. c. 3. [l] Ariſtot. ib. l. 9. c. 32. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 3. Ælian. de Animal. l. 2. c. 46. [m] De Animal. l. 2. c. 42. [n] Ib. c. 46. [o] Ælian. ib. l. 1. c. 48. & l. 7. c. 18. [p] Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 1. Vid. Ariſtot. de part. Animal. l. 4. c. 14. [q] Apud Bochart. Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 2. c. 14. col. 226. [r] Piruſh in Exod. 23. 19. [s] De Animal. l. 14. c. 13. [t] Bibliothec. l. 3. p. 162. [u] Geograph. l. 16. p. 531. [w] Calmet's Dictionary in the word Oſtrich. [x] Deſcriptio Africæ, l. 6. p. 601. 605. 613. l. 9. p. 766. [y] Nat. Hiſt. l 10. c. 8. [z] Ut ſupra, c. 15. col. 235. [a] Ariſtot. Hiſt. Animal. l. 6. c. 7. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 9. [b] Ibid. [c] Ut ſupra, col. 26. [d] Hiſt. Animal. l. 9. c. 36. [e] Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 8. [f] Plutarch. de Iſide & Oſyr. Strabo. Geograph. l. 17. p. 559, 562. Diodor. Sicul. l. 1. p. 78. Clement. Alex. Stromat. l. 5. p. 566. [g] Ray's Ornithol. p. 63. apud Supplement to Chambers's Dictionary in the word Bubo. [h] Calmet's Dictionary in the word Owl.

℣. 18. And the ſwan, &c.] This is a bird well known to us, but it is a queſtion whether it is intended by the word here uſed; for though it is ſo rendered in the Vulgate Latin, it is differently rendered by many others: the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem call it otia, which ſeems to be the ſame with the otus of Ariſtotle [n], who ſays it is like an owl, having a tuft of feathers about its ears (from whence it has its name); and ſome call it nycticorax, or the owl; and here, by Bochart [o], and others, the owl called noctua is thought to be meant; and with which agrees the account ſome Jewiſh writers give of it, as Aben Ezra and Baal Hatturim, who ſay it is a bird, which every one that ſees is aſtoniſhed at it, as other birds are at the owl, are affrighted at the ſight of it, and ſtupified. But as the ſame word is uſed ℣. 30. among the creeping things for a mole, what Jarchi obſerves is worthy of conſideration, that this is calve (chauve) ſouris (the French word for a bat) and is like unto a mouſe, and flies in the night; and that which is ſpoken of among the creeping things is like unto it, which hath no eyes, and they call it talpa a mole. The Septuagint verſion renders it by porphyrion, the red ſhank; and ſo Ainſworth; and is thought to be called by the Hebrew name in the text, from the blowing of its breath in drinking; for it drinks biting, as Ariſtotle ſays [p]: and the pelican; which has its name in Hebrew from vomiting; being ſaid by Aben Ezra and Baal Hatturim, to be a bird that vomits its food; and it is obſerved by ſeveral naturaliſts [q], of the pelican, that it ſwallows down ſhelfiſh, and after they have lain ſome time in its ſtomach, it vomits them up again; where having been heated, the ſhells open, and it picks out the meat: and the gier-eagle; or vulture-eagle, the gypæetos of Ariſtotle [r], and who ſays it is called alſo oripelargos, or the mountain-ſtork; and which Pliny [s] alſo makes to be an eagle of the vulture-kind. Dr. Shaw ſays, that near Kairo there are ſeveral ſtorks of the ach bobba, (white father, differing little from the ſtork but in its colour) the percnopterus or oripelargos, which like the ravens about London feed upon carrion, and naſtineſs that that is thrown without the city; this the Arabs call rachama, the ſame with רחם, Lev. xi. 18. and רחמה in Deut. xiv. 17. and whatever bird is here meant, it muſt be one that is tender of its young, as its name ſignifies, as Aben Ezra and Baal Hatturim obſerve; and though both the eagle and the vulture are rapacious birds, yet have a great regard to their young; of the eagle ſee Deut. xxxii. 11. and the vulture, with the Egyptians, was an hieroglyphic of a tender mother, or any merciful perſon; it being reported of it, that during the 120 days its young are under its care, it very rarely flies from them, being ſo ſolicitous of nouriſhing them; and that by making inciſions in its thigh, it lets out a bloody flow of milk, when it has nothing elſe to ſupport them [t]. The Talmudiſts [u] ſay, that the bird racham, as it is here called, is the ſame with ſerakrak, and is by the Targum of Jonathan, and in the Syriac verſion, here rendered ſerakraka, ſo called from שרק, which ſignifies to ſquall; and, according to Munſter [x], is thought by ſome to be the pica, magpye, or rather the jay; and Dr. Shaw [y] obſerves, that by a ſmall tranſmutation of letters, that and the ſhagarag of the Arabs are the ſame; which he ſays is of the bigneſs and ſhape of a jay, though with a ſmaller bill, and ſhorter legs; the back is browniſh, the head, neck and belly of a light green; and upon the wings and tail there are ſeveral ſpots or ringlets of a deep blue; it makes a ſqualling noiſe; and, he adds, it has no ſmall affinity both in voice and plumage with the jay. The Septuagint verſion render the word by the ſwan; which if not intended by the firſt word in this text, may by this, being kind to its young, though otherwiſe reckoned a cruel and unmerciful bird, as Bochart [z] obſerves; ſome think the wood-pecker is meant, ſo called from its love to its parents [a].

℣. 19. And the ſtork, &c.] A bird of paſſage, Jer. viii. 7. it has its name from kindneſs, which it exerciſes both to its dam, and to its young. Various writers [b] ſpeak of the kindneſs of theſe birds to their dams, which when they are old they take care of and feed them, to which the apoſtle is thought to allude, 1 Tim. v. 4. and its tenderneſs to its young is no leſs manifeſt: when the city of Delf in Holland was on fire, the ſtorks were ſeen very buſy to ſave their young from the flames, and which when they could not do, threw themſelves into the midſt of them, and periſhed with them, as Druſius from the Dutch hiſtorians relates. It is ſaid to feed upon ſerpents; and hence by Virgil [c] to be inviſa colubris; and Juvenal [d] ſays, it nouriſhes its young with them; and which may be a reaſon of its being forbid to be eaten, and is the reaſon given by the Mahometans [e] for the prohibition of it; though on this account it was in great honour in Theſſaly, that country being freed from ſerpents by it, and therefore they made it a capital crime to kill them, as Pliny [f] relates; formerly people people would not eat the ſtork, but at preſent it is much eſteemed for the deliciouſneſs of its fleſh [g]: the heron after her kind; this bird has its name in Hebrew from its being ſoon angry, as Aben Ezra obſerves; and Jarchi calls it the angry vulture or kite, as it is in the Talmud [h]; and adds, and it appears to me to be what they call the heron, one ſort of which named aſterias, as there is one ſort ſo called by Pliny [i]; it becomes tame in Egypt, and ſo well underſtands the voice of a man, as Ælianus [k] reports, that if any one by way of reproach calls it a ſervant or ſlothful, it is immediately exceeding angry. There are three kinds of herons, as both Ariſtotle [l] and Pliny [m]; and by a learned man of ours [n], their names are thus given, the criel or dwarf-heron, the blue heron, and the bittour; ſome reckon 19: and the lapwing; the upupa or hoopoe; it has its name in Hebrew, according to Jarchi, from its having a double creſt; and ſo Pliny [o] aſcribes to it a double or folded creſt, and ſpeaks of it as a filthy bird; and, according to Ariſtotle [p] and Ælian [q], its neſt is chiefly made of human dung, that by the ill ſmell of it men may be kept from taking its young; and therefore may well be reckoned among impure fowl. Calmet [r] ſays, there is no ſuch thing as a lapwing to be ſeen in any part of England; but there are ſuch as we call ſo, whether the ſame bird with this I cannot ſay: and the bat; a little bird which flies in the night, Aben Ezra ſays; Kimchi [s] deſcribes it a mouſe with wings, which flies in the night, and we ſometimes call it the flittermouſe; it is a creature between a fowl and a beaſt; and as Ariſtotle ſays [t], it partakes of both, and is of neither; and it is the only fowl, as Pliny [u] obſerves, that has teeth and teats, that brings forth animals, and nouriſhes them with milk. It is a creature ſo very diſagreeable, that one would think almoſt there was no need of a law to forbid the eating of it; and yet it is ſaid by ſome to be eatable, and to be eaten, as Strabo [w] affirms, yea to be delicious food. It is aſſerted [x], that there is a ſort of them in the eaſt, larger than ordinary, and is ſalted and eaten — that there are bats in China as large as pullets, and are as delicate eating. Of theſe ſeveral fowls before mentioned, ſome are of the ravenous kind, and are an emblem of perſecutors and covetous perſons, and ſuch as live by rapine and violence; others are of a libidinous nature, and are an emblem of thoſe who ſerve divers luſts and pleaſures, and give up themſelves to uncleanneſs; others are night-birds, and are a proper emblem of them, whoſe works are works of darkneſs, and love darkneſs rather than the light; and others never riſe higher than the earth, and ſo may denote earthly-minded perſons; and others live on impure things, and ſo fitly repreſent ſuch who live an impure life; with all ſuch the people of God are to have no fellowſhip.

[i] Ut ſupra, c. 20. col. 275. [k] Bab. Cholin, fol. 63. 1. [l] Geſner. apud Bochart. ut ſupra, c. 21. col. 278. [m] Ibid. [n] Hiſt. Animal. l. 8. c. 12. Vid. Plin. l. 10. c. 23. [o] Ut ſupra, c. 23. [p] Ut ſupra, c. 6. ſo Plin. l. 10. c. 46. [q] Ariſtot. Hiſt. Animal. l. 9. c. 10. Ælian. de Animal. l. 3. c. 20. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 40. [r] Hiſt. Animal. l. 9. c. 32. [s] Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 3. [t] Travels, p. 449. Ed. 2. [u] Horus Apollo & Piſidas apud Bochart. ut ſupra, c. 27. col. 388. [w] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 63. 1. [x] Dictionar. Chald. p. 4. 18. [y] Travels, p. 183. [z] Ut ſupra, c. 25. col. 300. [a] Plin. l. 10. c. 33. [b] Ariſtot. Hiſt. Animal. l. 9. c. 13. Ælian. de Animal. l. 3. c. 23. & l. 10. c. 16. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 23. [c] Georgic. l. 2. [d] Satyr. 14. [e] Apud Bochart. ut ſupra, c. 29. col. 329. [f] Ut ſupra.

℣. 20. All fowls that creep, &c.] Or rather every creeping thing that flies; for what are deſigned are not properly fowls, but as the Jewiſh writers interpret them, flies, fleas, bees, waſps, hornets, locuſts, &c. ſo the Targum of Jonathan, Jarchi, Ben Gerſom and Maimonides [y]: going upon all four; that is, upon their four feet, when they walk or creep: theſe ſhall be an abomination to you; not uſed as food, but deteſted as ſuch.

℣. 21. Yet theſe may ye eat, &c.] Which are after deſcribed and named: of every flying creeping thing that goeth upon all four; even though it is a creeping thing that flies and goes upon four feet, provided they be ſuch, which have legs above their feet, to leap withal upon the earth; there is a double reading of this clauſe, the textual reading is, which have not legs, and is followed by ſeveral interpreters and tranſlators; and the marginal reading, which we follow, is, which have legs; and both are to be regarded as true, and written by Moſes, as Ainſworth obſerves; for locuſts are born without legs, and yet creep low, as Pliny aſſerts [z], and they have them afterwards; and it is a canon of the Jews, that what have not legs or wings now, or have not wings to cover the greateſt part of them, but ſhall have after a time when grown up, theſe are as free (to eat) now, as when grown up [a]. Dr. Shaw thinks [b], the words may bear this conſtruction, which have knees upon or above their hinder legs, to leap withal upon the earth; and applying this to the locuſt afterwards, and only inſtanced in, he obſerves, that this has the two hindermoſt of its legs and feet much ſtronger, larger and longer than any of the foremoſt. In them the knee, or the articulation of the leg and thigh is diſtinguiſhed by a remarkable bending or curvature, whereby it is able, whenever prepared, to jump, to ſpring, or raiſe itſelf up with great force and activity. And theſe Ariſtotle [c] calls the leaping parts; and though he attributes to the locuſt ſix feet, as does alſo Pliny [d], yet he takes the two leaping parts into the account; whereas Moſes diſtinguiſhes thoſe two from the four feet; and ſo Juſtin [e] obſerves, that Moſes does not reckon among the feet the two hinder thighs with which locuſts leap, which he calls clean, and thereby diſtinguiſhes them from ſuch unclean flying creatures which do not leap with their thighs, ſuch as beetles; and ſo the Jewiſh writers always deſcribe a clean locuſt, as having four feet and two legs, thighs or knees. Maimonides [f] gives three ſigns of them, which are theſe, whatſoever has four feet and four wings, which cover the greateſt part of its body in length, and the greateſt part of the compaſs of it, and has two thighs or knees to leap with, they are of the clean kind; and although its head is long, and it hath a tail, if its name is Chagob (a locuſt) it is clean.

℣. 22. Even theſe of them ye may eat, &c.] The four following ones, which ſeem to be no other than four ſorts of locuſts: the locuſt after his kind; this is the common locuſt, called by the name of Arbeh, from the great multiplication and vaſt multitudes of them; the phraſe, after his kind, and which alſo is uſed in all the following inſtances, ſignifies the whole entire ſpecies of them, which might be eaten: and the bald locuſt after his kind; which in the Hebrew text is Soleam, and has its name, as Aben Ezra ſuggeſts, from its aſcending rocks; rocks: but ſince locuſts do not climb rocks, or have any peculiar regard for them, rather this kind of locuſts may be ſo called, from their devouring and conſuming all that come in their way [g], from the Chaldee word כלעם which ſignifies to ſwallow, devour, and conſume; but why we ſhould call it the bald locuſt is not ſo clear, though it ſeems there were ſuch, ſince the Jews deſcribe ſome that have no baldneſs, which the gloſs explains, whoſe head is not bald [h], which ſhews that ſome are bald; and ſo this is deſcribed by Kimchi [i], it has an eminence, a riſing, or bunch upon it; ſome render it baldneſs, and it hath no tail, and its head is long; and ſo Ben Melech: and the beetle after his kind; which is another ſort of locuſt called Chargol, and ſhould not be rendred a beetle, for no ſort of beetles are eatable, nor have legs to leap with all, and ſo come not under the general deſcription given of ſuch flying, creeping things fit to eat: Kimchi ſays it is one kind of a locuſt [k], and Hiſcuni derives its name from חרה and רגל becauſe it ſtrives to leap with its feet, which anſwers to the above deſcriptive character: the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, and ſome others, render it, by Ophiomachus, a fighter with ſerpents, to which the locuſt is an enemy, and kills them, taking faſt hold of their jaws, as Pliny ſays [l], and ſo Ariſtotle [m]: and the graſhopper after his kind; this is another, and the fourth kind of the locuſt that might be eaten; its name is Chagab, from the Arabic word Chaguba to vail, locuſts vailing the light of the ſun: and according to the Jewiſh doctors, it is a name which every locuſt fit to eat ſhould have; "among the locuſts (fit for food) are "theſe, who have four feet, and four wings and "thighs, and wings covering the greateſt part of "them, and whoſe name is Chagab [n]:" and commentators ſay [o], it muſt be called by this name, as well as have thoſe ſigns: the difference between theſe ſeveral ſorts is with them this; the Chagab has a tail but no bunch; Arbeh neither bunch nor tail; and Soleam has a bunch but not a tail; and Chargol has both bunch and tail [p]: Maimonides [q] reckons up eight ſorts of them fit to eat; and theſe creatures were not only eaten by the Jews, but by ſeveral other nations: with the Parthians they were very agreeable and grateful food, as Pliny [r] relates; who alſo ſays [s], that ſome part of the Ethiopians live only upon them all the year, hardened in ſmoke, and with ſalt: Diodorus Siculus [t] makes mention of the ſame, and calls them Acridophagi, locuſt eaters, and gives a particular account of their hunting and taking them, and preſerving them for food; and ſo does Strabo [u]; and the ſame Solinus [w] relates of thoſe that border on Mauritania; and they are ſtill eaten in Barbary, where they dry them in ovens to preſerve them, and then either eat them alone, or pounded and mixed with milk: their taſte is ſaid to be like ſhrimps [x]; and Bochart [y] has ſhewn from various writers, that they were a delicious food with the Greeks, eſpecially among the common people; and ſo they are with the Indians [z].

[g] Calmet in the word Stork. [h] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 63. 1. [i] Ut ſupra, c. 60. ſo Ariſtot. l. 9. c. 1. [k] De Animal. l. 5. c. 36. [l] Hiſt. Animal. l. 9. c. 1. [m] Ut ſupra. [n] Ainſworth. Dictionary in voce Ardea. [o] Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 29. [p] Hiſt. Animal. l. 9. c. 15. [q] De Animal. l. 3. c. 26. [r] Dictionary in the word Lapwing. [s] Sepher Shoraſh. in voc. עטלף. [t] De part. Animal. l. 4. c. 13. [u] Nat. Hiſt. l. 10. c. 61. l. 11. c. 37. [w] Geograph. l. 16. [x] Calmet's Dictionary in the word Bat. [y] Maacolot Aſurot, c. 2. l. 5. [z] Nat. Hiſt. l. 11 c. 29. [a] Maimon. ib. c. 1. §. 23. [b] Travels, p. 420. [c] De part. Animal. l. 4. c. 6. [d] Nat. Hiſt. l. 11. c. 48. [e] Retract. l. 2. c. 15. [f] Maacolot, Aſurot, c. 1. §. 22.

℣. 23. But all other flying creeping things, &c.] Excepting the four ſorts before mentioned, wherefore we rightly ſupply the word other: which have four feet; or more; the Vulgate Latin verſion adds, only, but wrongly; for thoſe that have more are unclean, and forbidden to be eaten, excepting thoſe in the preceding verſe; and moſt creeping things that fly have ſix feet, as the locuſts themſelves, reckoning their leaping legs into the number; though it may be obſerved, that thoſe creatures that have ſix feet, have but four equal ones, on which they walk or creep; and the two foremoſt, which are longer, are as hands to them to wipe their eyes with, and protect them from any thing that may fall into them and hurt them; they not being able to ſee clearly becauſe of the hardneſs of their eyes, as Ariſtotle [a] obſerves; and particularly, it may be remarked of the fly as it is by Lucian [b], that though it has ſix feet it only goes on four, uſing the other two foremoſt as hands; and therefore you may ſee it walking on four feet, with ſomething eatable in its hands, lifting them up on high, juſt after the manner of men: now all ſuch creatures that have four feet or more, excepting the above, ſhall be an abomination unto you; abhorred as food, and abſtained from.

℣. 24. And for theſe ye ſhall be unclean, &c.] That is, for eating them; or ſhould they eat them they would be unclean: whoſoever toucheth the carcaſe of them ſhall be unclean until the even; not only he was unclean that eat them, but he that even touched their dead bodies was reckoned unclean; might not go into the tabernacle, nor have converſation with men, nor eat of the holy things, which were forbid men in any uncleanneſs; and though there is no mention of his waſhing himſelf, it may be underſtood, this being a ſhort or conciſe way of ſpeaking, as Aben Ezra obſerves; who adds, that it was neceſſary that he ſhould waſh himſelf in water; which was typical of waſhing and cleanſing by the grace and blood of Chriſt, without which a man cannot be cleanſed from the leaſt ſin, and pollution by it; and may ſignify that during the legal diſpenſation, there was no proper cleanſing from ſin, until the evening of the world, when Chriſt came and ſhed his blood for the cleanſing of it.

℣. 25. And whoſoever beareth ought of the carcaſe of them, &c.] That carries them from one place to another, out of the camp, city, village, or houſe or field where they may lie; and though this is done with a good deſign, as being offenſive or infectious, yet ſuch a one ſhall waſh his clothes, and be unclean until the even; from whence both Jarchi and Aben Ezra infer, that the pollution by bearing or carrying is greater than that by touching; ſince ſuch a man ſo defiled, was obliged to waſh his clothes as well as his body: ſo ſaints that have contracted pollution by any manner of ſin, are to waſh their garments and make them white in the blood of the lamb, Rev. vii. 14.

℣. 26. The carcaſes of every beaſt which divideth the hoof, and is not cloven-footed, &c.] As the camel: nor cheweth the cud; though it may divide the hoof as the ſwine; and on the other hand, ſuch as may chew the cud, and yet not dividing the hoof, as the coney and hare; for the ſcripture here, as Aben Ezra obſerves again, uſes a ſhort and conciſe concise way of speaking: these are unclean unto you; to be reckoned by them such, and neither to be eaten nor touched: every one that toucheth them shall be unclean; until the evening; and obliged to washing, though not expressed: this is not to be understood of touching them whilst alive, as some Sadducees or Karaites understand it, according to Aben Ezra; for camels, horses, mules, &c. might be, and were rode upon, and so touched; but of them when dead, or their carcases, as is rightly supplied in the beginning of the verse: and the Jewish writers [b] understand this of the flesh of the carcase only, not of the bones, horns, and hoofs, which, they say, do not defile, only the flesh: this is repeated from ℣. 8.

[g] So R. Sol. Urbin. Ohel Moed, fol. 88. 1. [h] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 65. 2. [i] Sepher Shoraſh. in voc. סלעם [k] Ib. in voc. חרגול [l] Ut ſupra. [m] Hiſt. Animal l. 9 c. 6. [n] Miſn. Cholin, c. 3. §. 7. [o] Maimon. & Bartenora in Ib. [p] Vid. T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 65. 2. [q] Maacolot Aſurot, c. 1. § 21. [r] Nat. Hiſt. l. 11. c. 29. [s] Ib. l. 6. c. 30. [t] Bibliothec. l. 3. p 162, 163. [u] Geograph. l. 16. p. 531. [w] Polyhiſtor. c. 43. [x] Sir Hans Sloan's Natural Hiſtory of Jamaica, vol. 1. p. 29. [y] Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 4. c. 7. col 490, 491. [z] Agreement of Cuſtoms of the Eaſt Indians and Jews, Art. 12. p. 60. [a] Ut ſupra. [b] De Muſca.

℣. 27. Whatsoever goeth upon his paws, &c.] Or the palms [c] of his hands; meaning such creatures, whose feet are not divided into two parts, but into many, like the fingers of an hand, as apes, lions, bears, wolves, foxes, dogs, cats, &c. among all manner of beasts that go on all four; this is added, to distinguish them from fowls, such as are clean; who walk but on two feet, though their feet are divided into fingers or talons, and may be called hands on which they walk: these are unclean unto you; and as they might not be eaten, so neither touched, as follows: whoso toucheth their carcase shall be unclean until the even; see the note on ℣ 24.

℣. 28. And he that beareth the carcase of them, &c.] Carries it upon any account, from place to place: shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even; as he that bore the carcases of any of the flying creeping things, ℣. 25. they are unclean to you; even the carcases of the one and of the other; and to all the Israelites, men, women, and children, as Aben Ezra observes.

℣. 29. These also shall be unclean unto you among the creeping things that creep upon the earth, &c.] As distinguished from those creeping things that fly, these having no wings as they; and which were equally unclean, neither to be eaten nor touched, neither their blood, their skin, nor their flesh, as the Targum of Jonathan paraphrases it: and the Misnic doctors say [d], that the blood of a creeping thing and its flesh are joined together: and Maimonides [e] observes, that this is a fundamental thing with them, that the blood of a creeping thing is like its flesh; which in Siphre (an ancient book of theirs) is gathered from what is said in Lev. xi. 29. these shall be unclean, &c. hence the wisemen say, the blood of a creeping thing pollutes as its flesh: the creeping things intended are as follow: the weasel, and the mouse, and the tortoise after his kind; the first of these, the weasel, a creature well known; there are two sorts of it, as Pliny [f] says, the field-weasel, and the house-weasel; the former are called by the Jewish writers, the weasel of the bushes [g], and the latter, the weasel that dwells in the foundations of houses [h]; and of the former, there was a doubt among some of them, whether it was a species of the eight reptiles in Lev. xi. 29. or whether it was a species of animals [i]; and which Maimonides says, is a species of foxes like to weasels: Bochart [k] thinks, the mole is intended; but the generality of interpreters understand it of the weasel; and so Jarchi and Kimchi, and Philip Aquinas interpret it by Mustela, the weasel: however, all agree, the second is rightly interpreted, the mouse; which has its name in Hebrew, from its being a waster and destroyer of fields; an instance of which we have in 1 Sam. vi. 5. see the note there; so that this sort may be chiefly intended, though it includes all others, who are distinguished by their colours, the black, the red, and the white, which are all mentioned by Jonathan in his paraphrase of the text: this animal, as a learned physician [m] expresses it, eats almost every thing, gnaws whatever it meets with, and among other things, is a great lover of swine's flesh, which was an abomination to the Jews; nor does it abstain from dung, and therefore it is no wonder it should be reckoned among impure creatures; and yet we find they were eaten by some people, see Is. lxvi. 17. especially the dormouse; for which the old Romans made conveniencies to keep them in, and feed them, and breed them for the table [n]: so rats in the West-Indies, are brought to market and sold for food, as a learned author [o] of undoubted credit assures us, who was an eye-witness of it: the last in this text, the tortoise, means the land tortoise; it has its name from the shell with which it is covered, this word being sometimes used for a covered waggon, Numb. vii. 3. there are various kinds of them, as Pliny [p] and other writers observe, and who, as Strabo [q] and Mela [r] also, speak of a people they call Chelonophagi, or tortoise-eaters: a tortoise of the land-sort is esteemed a very delicate dish: Dr. Shaw [s] speaking of the land and water tortoises in Barbary, says, the former, which hides itself during the winter months, is very palatable food, but the latter is very unwholesome: the Septuagint version renders it, the land crocodile, which is approved of by Bochart [t]: and Leo Africanus says [u], that many in Egypt eat the flesh of the crocodile, and affirm it to be of good savour; and so Benzon [w] says, its flesh is white and tender, and tastes like veal; though some among them, as Strabo [x] asserts, have a great antipathy and hatred to them; and others worship them as gods, and neither can be supposed to eat them; the land-crocodiles are eaten by the Syrians, as Jerom [y] affirms, for those feeding on the sweetest flowers, as is said, their entrails are highly valued for their agreeable odour: Jarchi says, it is a creature like a frog; he means a toad; so Philip Aquinas and many render the word: Dr. Shaw takes the creature designed, to be the sharp-scaled tailed lizard [z].

℣. 30. And the ferret, &c.] Whatever creature is here meant, it has its name in Hebrew from the cry it makes; and so the ferret has but one note in its voice, which is a shrill, but small, whining cry: it is used to drive rabbets out of their holes: the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin versions render the word by Mygale, the weasel-mouse, or mus areneus, of the Latins, the shrew or shrew-mouse: it has something of the mouse and weasel, from whence it has its name in Greek, being of the bigness of the one,

[b] Misn. Edaiot, c. 6. §. 3. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [c] על כפיו super volas suas, Pagninus, Montanus; super manus suas, Munster, Tigurine version, Drusius. [d] Misn. Meilah. c. 4. §. 3. [e] Piresh. in ib. [f] Nat. Hist. l. 29. c. 4. [g] Misn. Celaim, c. 8. §. 5. [h] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 20. 2. [i] Maimon. in Misn. ib. [k] Hierozoic. par. 1. l. 3. c. 35. col. 1022. [l] Sepher Shoresh. & Aquinas in rad. חלד. [m] Scheuchzer. Physic. Sacr. vol. 2. p. 307. [n] Varro de re Rustic. l 3. c. 14. apud Sir Hans Sloan's History of Jamaica, vol. 1. Introduct. p. 24. [o] Sir Hans Sloane, ib. p. 25. [p] Nat. Hist. l. 9. c. 10. & l. 32. c. 4. [q] Geograph. l. 16. p. 532. [r] De Situ Orbis, l. 3. c. 8. [s] Travels, p. 178. [t] Ut supra, l. 4. c. 1. [u] Descriptio Africæ, l. 9. p. 762. [w] Nov. Orb. Hist. c. 3. [x] Geograph. l. 17. p. 558, 566, 561, 563. [y] Adv. Jovin. l. 2. [z] Ut supra.

one, and the colour of the other: but Bochart [b] is of opinion, that a ſort of lizard called ſtellio, an evet or newt is meant; one ſort of which, according to Pliny [c], makes a bitter noiſe and ſcreaking, and the Cameleon; this is a little creature like a lizard, but with a larger and longer head; it has four feet, and on each foot three claws; its tail is long; with this as well as with its feet it faſtens itſelf to the branches of trees; its tail is flat, its noſe long, and made in an obtuſe point; its back is ſharp, its ſkin plaited and jagged like a ſaw, from the neck to the laſt joint of the tail, and upon its head it hath ſomething like a comb; in other reſpects it is made like a fiſh; that is to ſay, it has no neck [d]; what is ſaid of its living on air and changing colour according to what it is applied, are now reckoned vulgar miſtakes: but whatever creature is here meant, it ſeems to have its name in Hebrew from its ſtrength, wherefore Bochart [e] takes the guaril or alwarlo of the Arabs to be meant; which is the ſtouteſt and ſtrongeſt ſort of lizard, and is ſuperior in ſtrength to ſerpents, and the land-tortoiſe, with which it often contends: and the lizard; ſo Jarchi interprets the word by a lizard; it has a larger letter than uſual in it, that this creature might be taken notice of, and guarded againſt as very pernicious, and yet with ſome people it is eaten: Calmet ſays [f], there are ſeveral ſorts of lizards, which are well known: there are ſome in Arabia of a cubit long, but in the Indies, there are ſome, they ſay, of 24 feet in length: in America, where they are very good, they eat them: one lizard is enough to ſatisfy four men: and ſo in the Weſt-Indies, ſays Sir Hans Sloane [g], I was ſomewhat ſurprized to ſee ſerpents, rats, and lizards ſold for food, and that to underſtanding people, and of a very good and nice palate; and elſewhere [h], he ſays, all nations inhabiting theſe parts of the world, (the Weſt-Indies) do the ſame: Guanes or lizards are very common in Jamaica, and eaten there, and were of great uſe when the Engliſh firſt took this iſland, being, as I was aſſured, ſays he, commonly ſold by the firſt planters for half a crown a-piece: Dr. Shaw [i] ſays, that he was informed that more than 40,000 perſons in Kairo, and in the neighbourhood; live upon no other food than lizards and ſerpents, though he thinks [k], becauſe the chameleon is called by the Arabs taitah, which differs little in name from לטאה letaah here; that therefore that, which is indeed a ſpecies of the lizard, might, with more propriety be ſubſtituted for it: and the ſnail; ſo the word is rendered by Jarchi, on the place, and by Kimchi, and Philip Aquinas, and David de Pomis, in their Lexicons; and theſe creatures, though forbid to the Jews, yet are not only uſed for medicine, but alſo for food by many: ſnails of ſeveral kinds, we are told, are eaten with much ſatisfaction in Italy and France: in Sileſia they make places for the breeding of them at this day, where they are fed with turnep tops, &c. and carefully preſerved for the market; and the Romans took care of them in the ſame manner [l]: Bochart [m] thinks, a kind of lizard is meant, which lies in ſand, called by the Arabs chulaca, or luchaca, becauſe the word here uſed ſignifies, in the Talmudic [n] language, ſandy ground: and the mole; and ſo it is interpreted by Onkelos and Jarchi here, and by David de Pomis, and Philip Aquinas in their Lexicons: the ſame word is uſed for a certain ſort of fowl, which we tranſlate the ſwan, ℣. 18. but here of a creeping thing: whatever is intended by it, it ſeems to have its name from its breath; either in a contrary ſignification, if underſtood of the mole, which either holds its breath or breathes not whilſt under ground; or from its breathing more freely, wherefore Bochart [o] takes it to be the chameleon; which, as Pliny [p] ſays, is always gaping with its mouth for air; and it has been a vulgar notion, though a wrong one, that it lives upon it: the Targum of Jonathan interprets it by the ſalamander; now whoever eat any of the above eight creeping things, according to the Jewiſh canons, was to be beaten [q].

℣. 31. Theſe are unclean to you of all that creep, &c.] Unfit for food, and not to be touched, at leaſt when dead, as in the next clauſe, that is, theſe eight ſorts of creeping things before mentioned, as the Targum of Jonathan expreſſes it, and theſe only, as Maimonides ſays [r]: whoſoever doth touch them when they are dead, ſhall be unclean until the even; for touching them whilſt alive did not defile, only when dead; and this the Jews interpret, whilſt they are in the caſe in which they died, that is, whilſt they are moiſt; for as Ben Gerſom ſays, if they are ſo dry, as that they cannot return to their moiſture, they don't defile; for which reaſon, neither the bones, nor nails, nor nerves, nor ſkin of theſe creeping things defile; but they ſay [s], while the back-bone is whole, and the bones cleave to it, then a creeping thing is reckoned moiſt, and while it is ſo, it defiles.

℣. 32. And upon whatſoever any of them, when they are dead, doth fall, it ſhall be unclean, &c.] Any of the above eight creeping things, that is, of their fleſh, for as for their bones, nails, nerves, and ſkin, as before obſerved, being ſeparated from them and dry, they do not defile: whether it be any veſſel of wood, or raiment, or ſkin, or ſack; every wooden veſſel, as the Targum of Jonathan; and all ſorts of clothes, of woolen, linen, or ſilk, and all ſorts of ſkins, excepting ſkins of ſea-beaſts; for theſe, according to the Jews [t], received no pollution; and alſo ſacks or ſack-cloth made of goats hair and the like: whatſoever veſſel it be, wherein any work is done; any tool or inſtrument made uſe of by any artificer, in his trade, or any veſſel wrought by him: it muſt be put into water; dipped into it, even into forty ſeahs of water, according to the Targum of Jonathan; and which is to be underſtood, not of any working tool, or finiſhed veſſel only, but of any veſſel of wood, raiment, ſkin, or ſack, before mentioned: it ſhall be unclean until the even; even though put into water and waſhed: ſo it ſhall be cleanſed; in the above manner, by being put or dipt into water; or afterwards, as the Septuagint, when it has been dipped and the even is come, and not before.

℣. 33. And every earthen veſſel, whereinto any of them falleth, &c.] Any of the above eight reptiles, ſhould they by chance fall into the midſt of an earthen veſſel: whatſoever is in it ſhall be unclean; if it only by falling touched the outſide of it, it was not unclean; but if it fell into it, then whatever

4

[b] Ut ſupra, l. 4. c. 2. [c] Nat. Hiſt. l. 29. c. 4. [d] Calmet in the word Cameleon. [e] Ut ſupra, c. 3. [f] Dictionary in the word Lizard, Vid. Hieron. adv. Jovinian. l. 2. [g] Natural Hiſtory of Jamaica, vol. 1. Introduct. p. 25. [h] Ib. vol. 2. p. 333. [i] Travels, p 412. [k] Ib. p. 178. [l] Sir Hans Sloane's Nat. Hiſt. Ib. p. 23, 24. [m] Ut ſupra, c. 5. [n] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 31. 1. Gloſſ. in fol. 54. 1. [o] Ut ſupra, c. 6. [p] Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 33. [q] Maimon. Maacolot Aſurot, c. 2. §. 7. [r] Hilchot, Abot Hatumaot, c. 4. §. 14. [s] Maimon. & Bartenora in Miſn. Niddah, c. 7. §. 1. [t] Bartenora in Miſn. Celaim, c. 17. §. 13.

ever was contained in it was unclean; for, as Jarchi says, an earthen vessel does not pollute or receive pollution, but from the air of it [u], from its inside: and ye shall break it; other vessels might be put into water and rinsed, and so be cleansed, but earthen vessels, being of no great value, were to be broken in pieces: an emblem this, as Ainsworth suggests, of the dissolution of our bodies, which are as earthen vessels, and of the destruction of sin thereby, and of the entire removal of it by death.

℣. 34. Of all meat which may be eaten, &c.] Which otherwise is lawful to eat and fit for food, whether herbs, or whether the flesh of clean creatures: that on which such water cometh, shall be unclean; that is, such water as is put into an unclean vessel, become so by the fall of any unclean reptile into it; wherefore such water poured out upon any sort of food, clean and fit to eat, or that is put into such water, to be dressed, it becomes unclean and unfit to eat; for the vessel being unclean, defiles the water, and the water defiles the food: Jarchi interprets this of water in general, which coming upon any thing eatable, prepares it for uncleanness; "we learn, says he, that no food is "fit and prepared to receive defilement until water "comes upon it once; and after it is come upon "it once, it receives defilement for ever, even "though it becomes dry;" but the former seems to be the true sense: and all drink that may be drunk in every such vessel, shall be unclean; whatever otherwise might be lawfully drank, yet being put into such a vessel, into which any unclean reptile was fallen, or being in it when it fell into it, became unclean and not fit to be drank; and those liquors which receive uncleanness, and make meats unclean by coming on them, according to the Misnic doctors [w], are these seven, dew, water, wine, oil, blood, milk, and honey.

℣. 35. And every thing whereupon any part of their carcase falleth, shall be unclean, &c.] Before the scripture seems to speak of any one of the reptiles perfect, that falling upon any thing should pollute it; but here of any part of them, though ever so small, which should, through any accident, fall and light upon any thing, even that would render it unclean and unfit for use: whether it be oven, or ranges of pots; the one to bake bread in, and the other to boil flesh in, as Aben Ezra observes: they shall be broken down; and no more made use of for baking and boiling: for they are unclean, and shall be unclean to you; were made hereby unfit for use, and should not be used: the Jewish writers [x] explain the phrase, to you, to your necessity, that which they had need of, but now should not use nor receive advantage from; even to you, all men, women, and children, as Hiskuni interprets it: all this was ordered to create in them an abhorrence of these creatures, and to make them cautious of eating and touching them, and careful that they come not nigh, or touched, or fell upon any thing, since it would give them so much trouble, as well as occasion loss.

℣. 36. Nevertheless, a fountain or pit, wherein there is plenty of water, &c.] Or, a fountain or pit, a collection of waters, the copulative being wanting, as some observe, Aben Ezra takes notice of; or it may be by way of apposition, and so may explain what fountain or pit is meant, even such an one where there is a large confluence of water, into which, if any carcase of a creeping thing fell, or any part of it; yet it shall be clean; and fit for use, either because of the abundance of water in it, which could not be affected with the fall of such a creature into it as where there is but a small quantity; or rather, this exception was made, because pools of water were of considerable value in these countries, and frequently in use for bathings, &c. and therefore for the good of men; and that they might not suffer so great a loss by such an accident, they are declared notwithstanding to be clean and free for use: hence you may learn, says Jarchi, that he that dips in them is pure from his uncleanness; that a man might lawfully make use of them for a bath on account of any uncleanness, notwithstanding the carcase of a creeping thing had fallen into it; as a mouse, or rat, or any such creature: but that which toucheth their carcase shall be unclean; not the waters which touch the carcase, as Aben Ezra interprets it, for then the whole would be defiled, and unfit for use; but either the man that touched the carcase, laid hold upon it to pluck it out of the fountain or pit, or that which he made use of to get it out, or both these, were unclean in a ceremonial sense: the Targum of Jonathan is, "but he that toucheth their carcases in the midst "of these waters shall be unclean."

℣. 37. And if any part of their carcase fall upon any sowing seed that is to be sown, &c.] That which is selected from other seed in order to be sown, and which is laid by and laid up for that purpose; should the carcase, or any part of the carcase of a creeping thing fall upon an heap of it, into a vessel in which it was put, as a dead mouse or the like: yet it shall be clean; be fit for use and sown in the earth; because being cast into the earth and dying and quickening there, and then springing up again in stalk and ear, it would go through various changes before it became the food of man: the Targum of Jonathan describes it, such as is sown in its dryness, or being dry; for if it was wetted it was unfit for use, as follows.

℣. 38. But if any water be put upon the seed, &c.] Either accidentally or on purpose; whether on sowing seed, and with water with which they water the field, as Aben Ezra interprets it; or on seed used for food, by steeping it in water, as sometimes wheat is, and boiled; and whether it is water or the rest of the liquors, and whether they are put on the seed, or the seed falls into them it matters not, as Jarchi says: and any part of their carcase fall thereon; that is, on the seed, though Aben Ezra observes, some say upon the water: the Targum of Jonathan adds, in its moisture, or while it is wet; and so may be thought to be more susceptible of impurity from the touch of a dead reptile, or any part of it, and which would render it unfit for sowing or eating, until it was dried and cleansed; yea, Jarchi says, if it falls thereon, even after it is dried: it shall be unclean unto you; unfit for use.

℣. 39. And if any beast of which ye may eat die, &c.] Any clean beast, as the ox, sheep, goat, deer, &c. what, if rightly killed is very lawful to eat of; but if it died of itself through any distemper, or was torn by the wild beasts, so the Targum of Jonathan: he that toucheth the carcase thereof, shall be unclean until the even; not the bones, nerves, nerves, horns, hoofs, or ſkin, as Jarchi obſerves; theſe might be handled, becauſe ſome of them at leaſt, were wrought up into one inſtrument or another, by artificers for uſe and ſervice, but the fleſh of them might not be touched; whoever did touch it was ceremonially unclean, and might not go into the ſanctuary, or have converſation with men, until the evening of the day in which this was done.

[u] Vid. Misn. Celaim, c. 2. §. 1. & Maimon. & Bartenora in Ib. [w] Misn. Machshirin, c. 6. §. 4. [x] Maimon. & Bartenora in Misn. Edaiot, c. 7. §. 8.

℣. 40. And he that eateth of the carcaſe of it, &c.] For though it might be eaten, if rightly killed, yet not if it died of itſelf, or was ſtrangled, or torn to pieces by wild beaſts: ſhall waſh his clothes; beſides his body, which even he that touched it was obliged to: and be unclean until the even; tho' he and his clothes were waſhed, and he might not go into the court of the tabernacle, or have any concern with holy things, or converſation with men: he alſo that beareth the carcaſe of it; removes it from one place to another, carries it to the dunghill, or a ditch, and there lays it, or buries it in the earth: ſhall waſh his clothes, and be unclean until the even; from whence, as before obſerved by the Jewiſh writers, uncleanneſs by bearing is greater than uncleanneſs by touching, ſince the former obliged to waſhing of clothes, not ſo the latter; ſo Jarchi here; and yet ſtill was unclean until the evening, though he had waſhed himſelf in water, as Aben Ezra notes; and ſo ſays Jarchi, though he dips himſelf, he has need of the evening of the ſun.

℣. 41. And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, &c.] Nothing is called a creeping thing, as Jarchi ſays, but what is low, has ſhort feet, and is not ſeen unleſs it creeps and moves: and every creeping thing comprehends, as Aben Ezra and Ben Gerſom obſerve, the eight creeping things before mentioned, ℣. 29, 30. and mention is made of them here, that they might not be eaten, which is not expreſſed before; and being deſcribed as creeping things on the earth, is, according to Jarchi, an exception of worms in peaſe, beans and lentiles; and, as others obſerve, in figs and dates, and other fruit; for they don't creep upon the earth, but are within the food; but if they go out into the air, and creep, they are forbidden: ſhall be an abomination; deteſted and abhorred as food: it ſhall not be eaten; it ſhall not be lawful to eat ſuch a creature. This, as Jarchi, is binding upon him, that cauſes another to eat, as well as he that eats, the one is guilty as the other. And indeed ſuch are not fit to eat, and cannot be wholeſome and nouriſhing; for, as a learned phyſician obſerves [y], inſects conſiſt of particles exceeding ſmall, volatile, unfit for nouriſhment, moſt of them live on unclean food, and delight in dung, and in the putrid fleſh of other animals, and by laying their little eggs or excrements, corrupt honey, ſyrups, &c. ſee Eccl. x. 1. and yet ſome ſorts of them are eaten by ſome people. Sir Hans Sloane, after having ſpoken of ſerpents, rats and lizards, ſold for food to his great ſurprize at Jamaica, adds [z], but what of all things moſt unuſual, and to my great admiration, was the great eſteem ſet on a ſort of coſſi or timber-worms, called cotton tree-worms by the Negroes and the Indians, the one the original inhabitants of Africa, and the other of America; theſe, he ſays [a], are ſought after by them, and boiled in their ſoups, pottages, ollio's, pepper-pots, and are accounted of admirable taſte, like to, but much beyond marrow: yea, he obſerves [b], that not they only, but the moſt polite people in the world, the Romans, accounted them ſo great a dainty, as to feed them with meal, and endeavour breeding them up. He ſpeaks [c] alſo of ants, ſo large as to be ſold in the markets in new Granada, where they are carefully looked after, and bought up for food; and ſays, the Negroes feed on the abdomen of theſe creatures: he obſerves [d], that field-crickets were found in baſkets among other proviſions of the Indians.

℣. 42. Whatſoever goeth upon the belly, &c.] Jarchi's paraphraſe is, whatſoever goeth, as worms and beetles, and the like to them, upon the belly, this is the ſerpent; and to go upon the belly, is the curſe denounced upon it, Gen. iii. 14 this and every ſuch creature are forbidden to be eaten; as there are others who either have no feet, or what they have ſo ſhort, that they ſeem to go upon their belly; and yet as terrible and deteſtable as the ſerpent is, it has been the food of ſome, and accounted very delicious, as by a people mentioned by the Arabic geographer [e]. Mela [f] ſpeaks of a people, who from their eating ſerpents, were called ophiophagi, ſerpent-eaters; and Pliny [g] ſays of the Troglodytes, that the fleſh of ſerpents was their food. The Spaniards, when they firſt found out the Weſt-Indies, going aſhore on the iſle of Cuba, found certain ſpits of wood lying at the fire, having fiſh on them, about 100 pound weight, and two ſerpents of eight feet long, differing nothing from the crocodiles in Egypt, but not ſo big; there is nothing, ſays my author [h], among the delicate diſhes (of the natives of that place) they eſteem ſo much as theſe ſerpents, inſomuch that it is no more lawful for the common people to eat of them, than of peacocks and pheaſants among us: the Spaniards at firſt durſt not venture to taſte of them, becauſe of their horrible deformity and loathſomeneſs; but the brother of Columbus being allured by a ſiſter of one of the kings of the country to taſte of them, found them very delicious, on which he and his men fell to, and eat freely of them, affirming them to be of more pleaſant taſte than either our pheaſants or partridges; and that there is no meat to be compared with the eggs of theſe ſerpents [i]. Diodorus Siculus [k] ſpeaks of ſerpents in the iſland of Taprobane of great bigneſs, harmleſs to men, and whoſe fleſh is eat, and of a ſweet ſavour: and whatſoever goeth upon all four; that is, whatſoever creeping thing; for otherwiſe there are beaſts that go upon all four that are clean and fit to eat; but this is obſerved to diſtinguiſh this ſort of creeping things from thoſe that go upon their belly, and from thoſe that have more feet, as in the next clauſe; Jarchi particularly inſtances in the ſcorpion: or whatſoever hath more feet among all creeping things that creep upon the earth; ſuch as caterpillars, and particularly the Scolopendra, which the eaſtern people call Nedal; ſo Jarchi ſays, this is Nedal, a reptile which hath feet from its head to its tail, called Centipeda; and the Targum of Jonathan is, "from "the ſerpent, to the Nedal or Scolopendra, which "has many feet." Some of them have 72, 36 on a ſide; and others 84; ſome fewer, but all have many: them ye ſhall not eat, for they are an abomination; nation; abominable for food, and to be had in the utmoſt averſion.

[y] Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 2. p. 302. [z] Nat. Hiſt. of Jamaica, vol. 1. Introduct. p. 25. [a] Ib. vol. 2. p. 193. [b] Introduct. ut ſupra. Vid. Plin. l. 17. c. 24. & Ælian. de Animal. l. 14. c. 13. [c] Ib. vol. 2. p. 221, 223. [d] Ib. p. 204 Vid. Ariſtotel. Hiſt. Animal. l. 5. c 30. [e] Clim. 1. par. 6. [f] De Situ Orbis, l. 3. c. 8. [g] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 8. [h] Peter Martyr de Angleria, Decad. 1. l 3. [i] Ib. l. 5. [k] Bibliothec. l. 3. p. 141.

℣. 43. Ye ſhall not make yourſelves abominable with any creeping thing that creepeth, &c.] With any creeping thing that flies in the air, excepting the four ſorts of locuſts, ℣. 22. and with any creeping thing in the waters, ℣. 10. or with any thing that creeps on the land, by eating any of them; which being abominable for food, would make the eater of them ſo to God, he thereby breaking a command of his: neither ſhall you make yourſelves unclean with them; by touching and bearing them, as with dead beaſts, ſo with dead flies and the like: that ye ſhould be defiled thereby; in a ceremonial ſenſe.

℣. 44. For I am the Lord your God, &c.] Their Lord, and therefore had a right to enjoin them what laws he pleaſed concerning their food; and their God, their Covenant-God, and therefore would conſult their good, and direct them to what was moſt proper, convenient and wholeſome for them: ye ſhall therefore ſanctify yourſelves, and ye ſhall be holy, for I am holy; that is, ſeparate themſelves from all other people, and be diſtinct from them, by uſing a different diet from theirs, as their Lord and God was different from all others, ſo called; and thus by obſerving his commands, and living according to his will, and to his glory, they would be holy in a moral ſenſe, as they ought to be, who were under the peculiar care and notice of a holy God, and ſo highly favoured by him; and particularly by attending to the above laws concerning food, they would be kept from mixing with, and having converſation with the Gentiles, and ſo be preſerved from falling into idolatry, and continue a holy people, ſerving and worſhipping the Lord their God, and him only; and which ſeems to be a principal view as to religion, in delivering out the above commands: neither ſhall ye defile yourſelves with any manner of creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth; which is repeated to keep them at the utmoſt diſtance from theſe things, and to fill them with an averſion to them, that they might be careful to avoid them. There is no penalty annexed to theſe laws, but the breach of them making them unclean, thereby they were debarred the uſe of the ſanctuary, and of holy things, and of the converſation of men for that day; but, according to the Jewiſh writers, ſuch tranſgreſſions were puniſhable with ſtripes. Jarchi obſerves out of the Talmud[1], that he that eateth putitha (a ſmall water-reptile) was to be beaten 4 times, and if an ant or piſmire 5 times, and if a waſp or hornet 6 times.

℣. 45. For I am the Lord that bringeth you up out of the land of Egypt, &c.] He had brought them out of it, and was now bringing them on in the wilderneſs towards Canaan's land, in order to ſettle them there; and this is obſerved, to ſhew what obligations they lay under to him to obſerve his commands; for ſince he had done ſuch great things for them, it became them to be obedient to him in all things: and the more, ſince his end herein was, as he obſerves to them, to be your God; to make it appear that he was their God, and they were his ſpecial people, whom he had choſen for himſelf above all people upon the earth; that he was their King and their God, to protect and defend them, to provide for them, and take care of them, and beſtow all good things on them proper for them: ye ſhall therefore be holy, for I am holy; ſeparate from all others as he was, living holy lives and converſations, agreeable to his will made known to them, in imitation of him who had choſen and called them to be his people; for ſince holineſs is his nature, it becomes them who are his houſe and family, his ſubjects and people.

℣. 46. This is the law of the beaſts, &c.] Clean and unclean, what were to be eaten, and what not: and of the fowl; ℣. 2—8. the unclean ones, which are particularly mentioned that they might be avoided, all others excepting them being allowed, ℣. 13—19: and of every living creature that moveth in the waters; all ſorts of fiſh in the ſea, rivers, ponds and pools, ſuch as have fins and ſcales, theſe were to be eaten, but if they had neither, were forbidden, ℣. 9—12: and of every creature that creepeth upon the earth; eight of which are mentioned particularly, which when dead defiled by touching; and all others are forbidden to be eaten, ℣. 29—43; together with ſuch creeping things that fly, excepting thoſe that had legs above their feet to leap with, ℣. 20—23. This is a recapitulation of the ſeveral laws reſpecting them, though not in the exact order in which they are delivered in this chapter.

℣. 47. To make a difference between the unclean and the clean, &c.] Whether of beaſts, fiſh, fowl, and flying creeping things: and between the beaſt that may be eaten, and the beaſt that may not be eaten; the former clauſe takes in all in general, this inſtances in a particular ſort of creatures; and the firſt mentioned of which that might be eaten, are, that part the hoof, are cloven-footed, and chew the cud; and that might not, that chew the cud, but divide not the hoof, or divide the hoof, but chew not the cud; and now by ſuch-like deſcriptions and diſtinctions of the creatures treated of, the Iſraelites would be able to make a difference between the one and the other, and know what was to be eaten, and what not.

CHAP. XII.

THIS chapter treats of the purification of a lying-in woman, the time of whoſe purification for a man-child was 40 days, and for a maid-child 80, ℣. 1—5. at the cloſe of which ſhe was to bring her offerings to the prieſts, to make atonement for her, ℣. 6—8.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c.] The laws in the preceding chapter were delivered both to Moſes and Aaron, but what follows in this only to Moſes; but inaſmuch as the prieſt had a concern in it, it being his buſineſs to offer the ſacrifices required by the following law, it was no doubt given to Moſes, to be delivered to Aaron, as well as to the people. R. Semlai remarks, that as the creation of man was after that of the beaſts, fowls, fiſhes, &c. ſo the laws concerning the uncleanneſs of men are after thoſe relating to beaſts, &c. and they begin with the uncleanneſs of a lying-in woman, becauſe, as Aben Ezra obſerves, the birth is the beginning of man: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, &c.] For this law only concerned them, and not other nations of the world: if a woman have conceived ſeed; by lying with a man, and ſo becomes pregnant, and goes on with her pregnancy until ſhe brings forth forth a child. The Jews from hence gather, that this law reſpects abortions; that if a woman has conceived and miſcarries, 81 days after the birth of a female, and 41 after a male, ſhe muſt bring her offering [m]; but the law ſeems only to regard ſuch as are with child, and proceed to the due time of child-birth, whether then the child is born alive or dead: and born a man child; which is, generally ſpeaking, not only matter of joy to the mother, but to the whole family, ſee John xvi. 22: then ſhe ſhall be unclean ſeven days; be ſeparate from all company, except thoſe whoſe preſence is neceſſary to take care of her in her circumſtances, and do what is proper for her, and even theſe became ceremonially unclean thereby; yea, her huſband was not permitted to ſit near her, nor to eat and drink with her: according to the days of the ſeparation for her infirmity, ſhall ſhe be unclean; the ſame number of days, even ſeven, ſhe was unclean on account of child-birth, as ſhe was for her monthly courſes, called here an infirmity or ſickneſs, incident to all females when grown up, at which time they were ſeparate from all perſons; and the caſe was the ſame with a lying-in woman; ſee ch. xv. 14—29.

[1] T. Bab. Erubin, fol. 28. 1. Peſachim, fol. 24. 1. Maccot, fol. 16. 2.

℣. 3. And in the eighth day the fleſh of his fore ſkin ſhall be circumciſed.] Or the foreſkin of his fleſh, that is, of the man-child born according to the law, Gen. xvii. 12. and this ſeems to furniſh out a reaſon why a male-child was not circumciſed before the 8th day, and why it was then, becauſe before that its mother was in her ſeparation and uncleanneſs, and then was freed from it; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan. The circumciſion of a male-child on the 8th day was religiouſly obſerved, and even was not omitted on account of the ſabbath, when the 8th day happened to be on that, ſee John vii. 22, 23. and the notes there. It is an obſervation of Aben Ezra on this place, that the wiſe men ſay in the day, and not in the night, lo, he that is born half an hour before the ſetting of the ſun, is circumciſed after ſix days and a half, for the day of the law is not from time to time.

℣. 4. And ſhe ſhall continue in the blood of her purifying 33 days, &c.] That is, ſo many more, in all 40; for though at the end of 7 days ſhe was in ſome reſpects free from her uncleanneſs, yet not altogether, but remained in the blood of her purifying, or in the purifying of her blood, which was more and more purified, and compleatly at the end of 40 days: ſo with the Perſians it is ſaid, a lying-in woman muſt avoid every thing for forty days, when that time is paſſed, ſhe may waſh and be purified [n]; and which perhaps Zoroaſtres, the founder of the Perſian religion, at leaſt the reformer of it, being a Jew, as is by ſome ſuppoſed, he might take it from hence: ſhe ſhall touch no hallowed thing; as the tithe, the heave-offering, the fleſh of the peace-offerings, as Aben Ezra explains it, if ſhe was a prieſt's wife: nor come into the ſanctuary; the court of the tabernacle of the congregation, or the court of the temple, as the ſame writer obſerves; and ſo with the Greeks, a pregnant woman might not come into a temple before the 40th day [o], that is, of her delivery: until the days of her purifying be fulfilled; until the ſetting of the ſun of the 40th day; on the morrow of that ſhe was to bring the atonement of her purification, as Jarchi obſerves; ſee the note on ℣. 6.

℣. 5. But if ſhe bear a maid-child, &c.] A daughter, whether born alive or dead, if ſhe goes with it her full time: then ſhe ſhall be unclean two weeks; or fourteen days running; and on the 15th day be free or looſed, as the Targum of Jonathan, juſt as long again as for a man child: as in her ſeparation; on account of her monthly courſes; the ſenſe is, that ſhe ſhould be 14 days, to all intents and purpoſes, as unclean as when theſe are upon her: and ſhe ſhall continue in the blood of her purifying 66 days; which being added to the 14 make 80 days, juſt as many more as in the caſe of a male child; the reaſon of which, as given by ſome Jewiſh writers, is, becauſe of the greater flow of humours, and the corruption of the blood through the birth of a female than of a male: but perhaps the truer reaſon may be, what a learned man [p] ſuggeſts, that a male infant circumciſed on the eighth day by the profuſion of its own blood, bears part of the purgation; wherefore the mother, for the birth of a female, muſt ſuffer twice the time of ſeparation; the ſeparation is finiſhed within two weeks, but the purgation continues 66 days; a male child ſatisfies the law together, and at once, by circumciſion; but an adult female bears both the purgation and ſeparation every month. According to Hippocrates [q], the purgation of a lying-in woman, after the birth of a female, is 42 days, and after the birth of a male 30 days; ſo that it ſhould ſeem there is ſomething in nature which requires a longer time for purifying after the one than after the other, and which may in part be regarded by this law; but it chiefly depends upon the ſovereign will of the law-giver. The Jews do not now ſtrictly obſerve this. Buxtorf [r] ſays, the cuſtom prevails now with them, that whether a woman bears a male or a female, at the end of 40 days, ſhe leaves her bed, and returns to her huſband; but Leo of Modena relates [s], that if ſhe bears a male child, her huſband may not touch her for the ſpace of ſeven weeks; and if a female, the ſpace of three months; though he allows, in ſome places, they continue ſeparated a leſs while, according as the cuſtom of the place is.

℣. 6. And when the days of her purifying are fulfilled, for a ſon or for a daughter, &c.] For a ſon 40 days, and for a daughter 80; but the ancient Jews formerly, that they might not break it, ordered, that the offering enjoined as follows ſhould not be brought until the next day after the time was up: their canon runs thus [t], "a lying-in "woman does not bring her offering on the 40th "day for a male, nor on the 80th day for a fe"male, but after her ſun is ſet; and ſhe brings "her offering on the morrow, which is the 41ſt "for a male, and the 81ſt for a female; and this "is the day of which it is ſaid, when the days, &c. "Lev. xi. 6." She ſhall bring a lamb of the firſt year; the Septuagint adds, without blemiſh, as all ſacrifices ſhould be, if not expreſſed; or the ſon of his year [u]; ſome diſtinguiſh between the ſon of a year, as the phraſe ſometimes is, and the ſon of his year, as here; the latter denoting a lamb in its firſt year, though ſomething wanting of it, the former a full year old, neither more nor leſs: for a burnt-offering; in gratitude, and by way of thankſgiving for the mercies ſhe had received in child-bearing: and a young pigeon, or a turtle dove, for a ſin-offering; either the one or the other. With

4

[m] Miſn. Ceritot, c. 1. §. 6. Maimon. & Bartenora, in ib. [n] Lib. Shad-der port. 86. apud Hyde Hiſt. Relig. vet. Perſ. p. 478. [o] Cenſorinus apud Grotium in loc. [p] Scheuchzer. Phyſic. Sacr. vol. 2. p. 314. 315. [q] Apud Grotium in loc. [r] Synagog. Jud. c. 5. p. 120. [s] Hiſtory of Rites, Cuſtoms, &c of the Jews, par. 4. c. 5. §. 3. [t] Maimon. Mechoſre Capparah, c. 1. §. 5. [u] בן שנתו filium ſui anni, Montanus, Piſcator, Druſius.

With the Perſians [w], it is incumbent on a lying-in woman, in Abam (the 12th month) to bring twelve oblations for the ſin which proceedeth from child-birth, that ſo ſhe might be purified from her ſins. It is an obſervation of the Miſnic doctors [x], that turtles precede pigeons in all places; upon which they aſk this queſtion, is it becauſe they are choicer or more excellent than they? obſerve what is ſaid, Lev. xii. 6. from whence may be learned, that they are both alike, or of equal value. But why a ſin-offering for child-bearing? is it ſinful to bear and bring forth children in lawful marriage, where the bed is undefiled? The Jews commonly refer this to ſome ſin or another, that the child-bearing woman has been guilty of in relation to child-birth, or whilſt in her labour; and it is not unlikely that ſhe may ſometimes be guilty of ſin in ſome way or other, either through an immoderate deſire after children, or through impatience and breaking out into raſh expreſſions in the midſt of her pains; ſo Aben Ezra ſuggeſts, perhaps ſome thought roſe up in her mind in the hour of child-birth becauſe of pain, or perhaps ſpoke with her mouth; meaning what was unbecoming, raſh and ſinful. Some take the ſin to be a raſh and falſe oath: but there ſeems to be ſomething more than all this, becauſe though one or other of theſe might be the caſe of ſome women, yet not all; whereas this law is general, and reached every lying-in woman, and has reſpect not ſo much to any particular ſin of her's, as of her firſt parent Eve, who was firſt in the tranſgreſſion; and on account of which tranſgreſſion pains are endured by every child-bearing woman; and who alſo conceives in ſin, and is the inſtrument of propagating the corruption of nature to her offſpring; and therefore was to bring a ſin-offering typical of the ſin-offering Chriſt is made to take away that, and all other ſin; whereby ſhe ſhall be ſaved, even in child-bearing, and that by the birth of a child, the child Jeſus, if ſhe continues in faith, and charity, and holineſs, with ſobriety, 1 Tim. ii. 15. theſe offerings were to be brought unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, unto the prieſt; to offer them up for her. When the temple was built, theſe were brought to the eaſtern gate, the gate Nicanor, where the lepers were cleanſed, and lying-in women purified [y].

℣. 7. Who ſhall offer it before the Lord, &c.] Upon the altar of burnt-offering: and make an atonement for her; for whatſoever ſin in connection with or that attended child-bearing; as typical of the atonement by Chriſt both for ſin original and actual: and ſhe ſhall be cleanſed from the iſſue of her blood; in a ceremonial ſenſe, and according to that law be pure and clean: this is the law for her that hath born a male or a female; enjoined her, and to be obſerved by her; and though now with the reſt of the ceremonial law it is aboliſhed, yet it has this inſtruction in it; that it becomes women in ſuch circumſtances to bring the free-will offerings of their lips, their ſacrifices of praiſe, and in a public manner ſignify their gratitude and thankfulneſs for the mercy and goodneſs of God vouchſafed to them, in carrying them through the whole time of child-bearing, and ſaving them in the perilous hour.

℣. 8. And if ſhe be not able to bring a lamb, &c.] As every one was not in circumſtances ſufficient to be at the expence of buying a lamb for this purpoſe, having none of their own: then ſhe ſhall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons; which was a kind and merciful proviſion for the poorer ſort; ſince it was neceſſary that by them the favour received ſhould be acknowledged, as well as the ſin attending them in ſuch circumſtances ſhould be atoned for. This being the offering brought by the mother of our Lord, ſhews the ſtate of poverty in which ſhe was; and by this, and the circumciſion of her child, and the preſentation of it before the Lord at the time of her purification, it appears that they were both under the law, and obedient to it: the one for a burnt-offering, and the other for a ſin offering; Jarchi obſerves, that in oblations the ſin-offering goes before the burnt-offering, for ſin being atoned for, the gift was accepted; but here the burnt-offering went firſt, the reaſon is not very apparent: and the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for her, and ſhe ſhall be clean; equally the ſame as if ſhe had brought a lamb, inſtead of young pigeons, or turtle doves.

CHAP. XIII.

IN this chapter an account is given of the various ſorts of leproſy, and the rules by which they were to be judged of, ℣. 1—3. of the bright ſpot and ſcab, ℣. 4—8. of the riſing or ſwelling, ℣. 9—17. of the bile or hot ulcer, ℣. 18—23. of the hot burning or inflammation, ℣. 24—28. of the plague of the ſcall, ℣. 29—37. of bright ſpots or bliſters, ℣. 38, 39. and of ſhedding the hair, and baldneſs, ℣. 40—44. of what the leper was to do, and to be done unto, ℣. 45, 46. of the leproſy in garments made of linen, woollen, or of ſkin, ℣. 47—59.

℣. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes and unto Aaron, &c.] Aaron is addreſſed again, though left out in the preceding law, becauſe the laws concerning leproſy chiefly concerned the prieſts, whoſe buſineſs it was to judge of it, and cleanſe from it; and ſo Ben Gerſom obſerves, mention is made of Aaron here, becauſe to him and his ſons belonged the affair of leproſies, to pronounce unclean or clean, to ſhut up or ſet free; and as Aben Ezra ſays, according to his determination were all the plagues or ſtrokes of a man, who ſhould be declared clean or unclean: ſaying; as follows.

℣. 2. When a man ſhall have in the ſkin of his fleſh, &c.] Rules are here given, by which a leproſy might be judged of; which, as a diſeaſe, was frequent in Egypt, where the Iſraelites had dwelt a long time, and from whence they were juſt come; and is doubtleſs the reaſon, as learned men have obſerved, that ſeveral heathen writers make the cauſe of their expulſion from Egypt, as they chuſe to call it, though wrongly, their being infected with this diſtemper; whereas it was the reverſe, not they, but the Egyptians were incident to it [z]. Moreover, the leproſy here ſpoken of, ſeems not to be the ſame with that diſeaſe, or what we now call ſo, though ſome have thought otherwiſe; it being rather an uncleanneſs than a diſeaſe, and the buſineſs of [w] Lib. Shad-der, part. 73. apud Hyde, ut ſupra, p. 473. c. 1. §. 5.

[x] Miſn. Ceritot, c. 6. §. 9.
[y] Miſn Sotah. c. 1. §. 5.
[z] Eſt elephas morbus—— gignitur Ægypto. Lucret. l. 6. ℣ 1112.

of a prieſt, and not a phyſician to attend unto; and did not ariſe from natural cauſes, but was from the immediate hand of God, and was inflicted on men for their ſins, as the caſes of Miriam, Gehazi and Uzziah ſhew; and who by complying with the rites and ceremonies hereafter enjoined, their ſins were pardoned, and they were cleanſed; ſo that as their caſe was extraordinary and ſupernatural, their cure and cleanſing were as remarkable: beſides, this impurity being in garments and houſes, ſhows it to be ſomething out of the ordinary way. And this law concerning it did not extend to all men, only to the Iſraelites, and ſuch as were in connexion with them, ſuch as proſelytes. It is ſaid [a], all are defiled with the plague (of leproſy) except an idolater and a proſelyte of the gate; and the commentators ſay [b], even ſervants, and little ones though but a day old; that is, they are polluted with it, and ſo come under this law. Now the place where this diſorder appears is in the ſkin of the fleſh; that is, where there is a ſkin, and that is ſeen; for there are ſome places, the Jewiſh writers [c] ſay, are not reckoned the ſkin of the fleſh, or where that is not ſeen, and ſuch places are excepted, and they are theſe; the inſide of the eye, of the ear, and of the noſe; wrinkles in the neck, under the pap, and under the arm-hole; the ſole of the foot, the nail, the head and beard: and this phraſe, in the ſkin of his fleſh, is always particularly mentioned; and when there appeared in it a riſing, ſcab, or bright ſpot; the ſcab that is placed between the riſing or ſwelling, and the bright ſpot, belongs to them both, and is a kind of an acceſſory, or ſecond to each of them: hence the Jews diſtinguiſh the ſcab of the ſwelling, and the ſcab of the bright ſpot; ſo that theſe make four in all, as they obſerve [d]. And to this agrees what Ben Gerſom on this text remarks, the bright ſpot is, whoſe whiteneſs is as the ſnow; the riſing or ſwelling is what is white, as the pure wool of a lamb of a day old; the ſcab is what is inferior in whiteneſs to the riſing, and is as in the degree of the whiteneſs of the ſhell or film of an egg; and this is the order of theſe appearances, the moſt white is the bright ſpot, after that the riſing, and after that the ſcab of the bright ſpot, and after that the ſcab of the riſing or ſwelling; and lo, what is in whiteneſs below the whiteneſs of this (the laſt) is not the plague of leproſy: and it be in the ſkin of his fleſh like the plague of leproſy; either of the above appearances in the ſkin, having ſomewhat in them ſimilar to the leproſy, or which may juſtly raiſe a ſuſpicion of it, though it is not clear and manifeſt: then he ſhall be brought to Aaron the prieſt, or unto one of his ſons the prieſts; for as Jarchi notes, there was no pollution, nor purification of the leproſy, but by the mouth or determination of a prieſt. And a good man that was deſirous, and made conſcience of obſerving the laws of God, when he obſerved any thing of the above in him, and had any ſuſpicion of his caſe, would of himſelf go, and ſhew himſelf to the prieſt; but if a man did not do this, and any of his neighbours obſerved the appearances on him, brought him to the prieſt whether he would or no, according to the text, he ſhall be brought; that is, as Aben Ezra explains it, whether with or without his will; for he that ſees in him one of the ſigns, ſhall oblige him to come to the prieſt; and who obſerves, that by Aaron the prieſt is meant, the prieſt anointed in his room; and by his ſons the prieſts, the common prieſts, who are found without the ſanctuary; ſuch as the prieſts of Anathoth, but who were not of thoſe that were rejected.

℣. 3. And the prieſt ſhall look on the plague in the ſkin of the fleſh, &c.] Whether it be a ſwelling, or ſcab, or a bright ſpot that appears, and judge of it by the following rules, and none but a prieſt might do this: and when the hair in the plague is turned white; it ariſing in a place where hair grows, and which hair is not naturally white, but of another colour, but changed thro' the force of the plague; and there were to be two hairs at leaſt, which were at firſt black, but turned white; ſo Jarchi and Ben Gerſom: and theſe hairs, according to the Miſnah [e], muſt be white at bottom; if the root (or bottom) is black, and the head (or top) white, he is clean; if the root white, and the head black, he is defiled; for hairs turning white is a ſign of a diſorder, of weakneſs, of a decay of nature, as may be obſerved in ancient perſons: and the plague in ſight be deeper than the ſkin of his fleſh; appears plainly to view to be more than ſkin-deep, to have corroded and eat into the fleſh below the ſkin: it is a plague of leproſy; when theſe two ſigns were obſerved, hair turned white, and the plague was more than ſkin-deep, then it was a plain caſe that it was the leproſy; of which ſee the notes on Matt. viii. 2, 3. and Luke v. 12. This was an emblem of ſin, and the corruption of nature, which is an uncleanneſs, and with which every man is defiled, and which renders him infectious, nauſeous and abominable; and of which he is only to be cured and cleanſed by Chriſt, the great high-prieſt, through his blood, which cleanſes from all ſin. The above ſigns and marks of leproſy may be obſerved in this; the white hair denoting a decay of ſtrength, ſee Hoſ. vii. 9. may be ſeen in ſinners, as in the leper, who are without moral and ſpiritual ſtrength to keep the law of God, to do any thing that is ſpiritually good, to regenerate, renew, convert and ſanctify themſelves, or to bring themſelves out of the ſtate of pollution, bondage and miſery in which they are; and, like the leproſy; ſin lies deep in man; it is in his fleſh, in which dwells no good thing, and in which there is no ſoundneſs; it does not lie merely in outward actions, but it is in the heart, which is deſperately wicked; for the inward part of man is very wickedneſs: and the prieſt ſhall look on him, and pronounce him unclean; and ſo ſhould be obliged to rend his clothes, make bare his head, put a covering on his upper lip, and cry unclean, unclean; dwell alone without the camp, and at a proper time bring the offering for his cleanſing, and ſubmit to the ſeveral rites and ceremonies preſcribed, ℣. 45, 46. and ch. xiv.

℣. 4. If the bright ſpot be white in the ſkin of his fleſh, &c.] The Targum of Jonathan is, white as chalk in the ſkin of his fleſh; but other Jewiſh writers make the whiteneſs of the bright ſpot to be, the greateſt of all, like that of ſnow; ſee the note on ℣. 2: and in ſight be not deeper than the ſkin, and the hair thereof be not turned white; tho' it be a bright ſpot, and be very white, yet theſe two marks not appearing, it can't be judged a leproſy, at moſt it is only ſuſpicious: wherefore then the prieſt ſhall ſhut up him that hath the plague ſeven days; in whom the bright ſpot is, and of whom there is a ſuſpicion of the plague of leproſy, but it is not certain; and therefore in order to take time, and get further knowledge, the perſon was to be

ſhut

2

[a] Miſn. Negaim, c. 3. §. 1. [b] Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [c] Miſn. ib. c. 6. §. 8. & Maimon. & Bartenora in ib. [d] Miſn. ib. c. 1. §. 1. [e] Negaim, c. 4. §. 4.

ſhut up from all company and converſation for the ſpace of ſeven days; by which time it might be ſuppoſed, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, that the caſe and ſtate of the leproſy (if it was one) would be altered; and Aben Ezra remarks, that moſt diſeaſes change or alter on the ſeventh day.

℣. 5. And the prieſt ſhall look on him the ſeventh day, &c.] In the day, and not in the night, as Maimonides, but not on the ſeventh day, if it happened to be on the ſabbath [f], then it was put off till after it; and, according to the Jewiſh canons [g], they don't look upon plagues in the morning, nor in the evening, nor in the middle of a houſe, nor on a cloudy day, nor at noon, but at the 4th, 5th, 8th and 9th hours: and behold, if the plague in his ſight be at a ſtay; it appears to the prieſt, according to the ſtricteſt view he can take of it, that it is in the ſame ſtate and condition it was, neither better nor worſe: and the plague ſpread not in the ſkin; is not greater or larger than it was, though not leſs: then the prieſt ſhall ſhut him up ſeven days more; ſuch abundant care was taken, leſt after all it ſhould prove a leproſy.

℣. 6. And the prieſt ſhall look on him again the 7th day, &c.] On the ſecond ſeventh day, at the end of a fortnight from his being firſt preſented to him, and ſhut up: and behold, if the plague be ſomewhat dark; the ſpot be not ſo bright, or ſo white as it was at firſt; though Aben Ezra obſerves, that indeed many wiſe men ſay, that כהה is as חשך ſignifying dark, and the teſtimony or proof they bring is Gen. xxvii. 1. but according to my opinion, adds he, the word is the reverſe of פשה to ſpread; and the ſenſe is, if the plague does not ſpread itſelf in another place; and ſo ſome tranſlators render it contracted, or contracts itſelf [h]: and this ſeems beſt to agree with what follows: and the plague ſpread not in the ſkin; but is as it was when firſt viewed, after waiting 14 days, and making obſervations on it: the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean; that is, from leproſy, otherwiſe there was an impure diſorder on him, a ſcabious one: it is but a ſcab; which is the name Jarchi ſays of a clean plague or ſtroke, that is, in compariſon of the leproſy, otherwiſe ſuch can't be ſaid with any propriety to be clean. Ben Gerſom better explains it, it is a white ſcab, but not of the kind of leproſy, although it is found as the whiteneſs of the bright ſpot; but there are not ſeen in it the ſigns of leproſy, the hair is not turned white, nor has the plague increaſed: and he ſhall waſh his clothes, and be clean; for ſeeing he was obliged to be ſhut up, as Jarchi obſerves, he is called unclean, and ſtood in need of dipping, that is, his body and his clothes into water; ſo the people of God, though they are juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and are pronounced clean through it, yet ſince they have their ſpots and ſcabs, they have need to have their converſation-garments continually waſhed in the blood of the Lamb.

℣. 7. But if the ſcab ſpread much abroad in the ſkin, &c.] Or in ſpreading ſpread [k]; ſpreads, and proceeds to ſpread more and more: after that he hath been ſeen of the prieſt for his cleanſing; even after he had been viewed upon the firſt preſentation of him to him, and after he had been twice ſeen by him at the end of two ſeven days, in which he was ſhut up, and after he had been pronounced clean, and had waſhed his clothes for his purification: he ſhall be ſeen of the prieſt again; either he ſhall go to him of himſelf, or be brought to him, to be reviewed and paſs under a freſh examination.

℣. 8. And if the prieſt ſee that behold the ſcab ſpreadeth in the ſkin, &c.] Is not at a ſtay, as when he looked at it a ſecond and third time: then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean; a leprous perſon; to be abſolutely ſo, as Jarchi expreſſes it; and ſo obliged to the birds (to bring birds for his cleanſing) and to ſhaving, and to the offering ſpoken of in this ſection, as the ſame writer obſerves: it is a leproſy; it is a clear and plain caſe that it was one, and no doubt is to be made of it, it is a ſpreading leproſy: as ſin is; it ſpreads itſelf over all the powers and faculties of the ſoul, and over all the members of the body; and it ſpreads more and more in every ſtage of life, unleſs and until grace puts a ſtop to it.

℣. 9. When the plague of leproſy is in a man, &c.] He has all the ſigns of it, and it is pretty manifeſt both to himſelf and others that it is upon him: then he ſhall be brought unto the prieſt; by his friends and neighbours, if he is not willing to come of himſelf: a ſinner inſenſible of the leproſy of ſin, and of his unclean and miſerable ſtate thro' it, has no will to come to Chriſt the great high-prieſt for cleanſing; but one that is ſenſible of it, and of Chriſt's ability to help and cleanſe him, will come freely and gladly, and importunately ſeek to him for it; though indeed ſuch an one is brought by powerful and efficacious grace to him, yet not againſt, but with his full will; ſee John v. 40. and vi. 37, 44. compare with this Matt. viii. 1, 2, 3. Luke xvii. 12, 13, 14.

℣. 10. And the prieſt ſhall ſee him, &c.] Look at him, and cloſely and narrowly inſpect and examine his caſe: and behold, if the riſing be white in the ſkin; this is another appearance of the leproſy; the preceding were a bright ſpot, and the ſcab of it; but this a riſing or white ſwelling in the ſkin, as white as pure wool, as the Targum of Jonathan: and it have turned the hair white; to the whiteneſs of an egg-ſhell, or the film of it, as the ſame Targum; that is, hath turned the hair of another colour, into white which was before black; and there be quick raw fleſh in the riſing, or ſwelling; or the quickening or quickneſs of live fleſh [i]; either ſuch as we call proud fleſh, which looks raw and red; or ſound fleſh, live fleſh being oppoſed to that which is mortified and putrid; and ſo Jarchi renders it by Saniment, a French word for ſoundneſs: and the Septuagint verſion in this and all other places where the word is uſed, renders it ſound: this clauſe may be conſidered disjunctively, as by Gerſom, or there be quick raw fleſh; for either the hair turning white, or quick raw fleſh, one or the other, and one without the other was a ſign of leproſy, ſo Jarchi obſerves; even this is a ſign of uncleanneſs, the white hair without the quick fleſh, and the quick fleſh without the white hair: this may ſeem ſtrange that quick and ſound fleſh ſhould be a ſign of the leproſy and its uncleanneſs; though it ſhould be obſerved, it is ſuch as is in the riſing or ſwelling: and in things ſpiritual, it is a bad ſign when men are proud of themſelves and have confidence in the fleſh; when in their own opinion they are whole and ſound, and need no phyſician; when they truſt in themſelves that they are righteous, and and boaſt of and have their dependance on their own works; he appears to be in the beſt ſtate and frame that cries out as David did, that there is no ſoundneſs in his fleſh, Pſ. xxxviii. 3, 7.

[f] Miſn. Negaim, c. 1. §. 4. [g] Miſn. ib. c. 2. §. 2. [h] כהתה contracta eſt, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator; contraxerit ſeſe, ſome in Vatablus. [i] מחית בשר חי vivacitas carnis vivæ, Montanus, Vatablus. [k] פשרת תפישרת diffundendo diffuderit ſe, Montanus, Druſius, Piſcator.

℣. 11. It is an old leproſy in the ſkin of his fleſh, &c.] An inveterate one, of long ſtanding and continuance, an obſtinate one, not to be cured by medicine; as this ſort of leproſy was, and therefore the perſon was ſent not to a phyſician, but to the prieſt: the leproſy of ſin is an old diſeaſe, brought by man into the world with him, and continues with him from his youth upwards, and nothing but the Grace of God and blood of Chriſt can remove it: and the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean, and ſhall not ſhut him up; there being no doubt at all of it being a leproſy, and of his uncleanneſs, and therefore no need to ſhut him up for further examination, but to turn him out of the camp till his purification was over: for he is unclean; in a ceremonial ſenſe, and was obliged to the law for cleanſing, ſuch as after given.

℣. 12. And if a leproſy break out abroad in the ſkin, &c.] Or, if flowering it flowers [m]; the man that has it on him looks like a plant or tree covered with white flowers, being ſpread all over him in white ſwellings, bright ſpots or ſcabs, as it follows: and the leproſy cover all the ſkin of him that hath the plague, from his head even to his foot; ſuch an one as the leper was, that came to Chriſt for healing, ſaid to be full of leproſy, Luke v. 12. and ſuch in a myſtical ſenſe is every ſinner, whether ſenſible of it or no, even from the crown of the head to the ſole of the foot, full of the wounds, bruiſes, and putrefying ſores of ſin, Iſ. i. 6. whereſoever the prieſt looketh; that is, he can't look any where upon any part of him but he ſees the ſigns of the leproſy on him; and from whence the Jewiſh writers gather, that a prieſt that inſpects leprous perſons ought to have a clear ſight, and to have both his eyes, and that the inſpection ſhould not be made in a dark houſe.

℣. 13. Then the prieſt ſhall conſider, &c.] Look wiſtly upon it, and well weigh the matter in his own mind, that he may make a true judgment and pronounce a right ſentence: and behold if the leproſy have covered all his fleſh; from head to foot, ſo that no quick, raw, or ſound fleſh appear in him: he ſhall pronounce him clean that hath the plague; not clean from a leproſy he is covered with; but that he is free from pollution by it, and under no obligation to bring his offering, or to perform, or have performed on him any of the rites and ceremonies uſed in cleanſing of the leper: it is all turned white; his ſkin and fleſh with white, bright ſpots, ſcabs and ſwellings, and no raw and red fleſh appears: he is clean; in a ceremonial ſenſe: this may ſeem ſtrange, that one that had a bright ſpot, or a white ſwelling, or a ſcab that ſpreads, a ſingle one of theſe, or here and there one, ſhould be unclean, and yet if covered over with them, ſhould be clean; the reaſon in nature is, becauſe this ſhews a good healthful inward conſtitution, which throws out all its ill humours externally, whereby health is preſerved; as we ſee in perſons that have the meaſles or ſmall-pox, or ſuch like diſtempers, if they ſtick in the ſkin, and only here and there one riſes up in a tumor, and to an head, it is a bad ſign; but if they come out kindly and well, tho' they cover the whole body, things are very promiſing: the myſtical or ſpiritual meaning of this is, that when a man ſees himſelf to be a ſinful creature, all over covered with ſin, and no part free, and diſclaims all righteouſneſs of his own to juſtify him before God, but wholly truſts to, and depends upon the grace of God for ſalvation, and the righteouſneſs of Chriſt for his acceptance with God; he becomes clean through the grace of God and the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt.

℣. 14. But when raw fleſh appears in him, &c.] Between the white ſpots, ſcabs, or ſwellings, or in the midſt of them: he ſhall be unclean; be pronounced unclean, and be ſubject to all the preſcriptions of the law concerning lepers.

℣. 15 And the prieſt ſhall ſee the raw fleſh, &c.] Or when he ſees it, the perſon being brought to him to be viewed: and pronounce him to be unclean; or ſhall pronounce him to be unclean: for the raw fleſh is unclean; made a man ſo in a ceremonial ſenſe; ſee the note on ℣. 10. it is a leproſy; whereever any quick raw fleſh appears in a ſwelling.

℣. 16. Or if the raw fleſh turn again, &c.] Changes its colour, from redneſs, which is in raw fleſh: and be changed unto white; and does not look ruddy as fleſh in common does, nor red and fiery, as raw and proud fleſh, but is white, of the ſame colour with the ſwelling or ſcab: he ſhall come unto the prieſt; again, and ſhew himſelf, even though he was before by him pronounced clean.

℣. 17. And the prieſt ſhall ſee him, &c.] Review him, and examine him thoroughly: and behold, if the plague be turned into white; the raw fleſh in the ſwelling, which looked red, is become white: then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean that hath the plague; that was ſuppoſed to have the plague of leproſy; but upon a review, and on this change of things has not, he ſhall declare him free from it, and under no obligation to the laws and rites concerning it.

℣. 18. The fleſh alſo, in which, even in the ſkin thereof was a bile, &c.] Or hot ulcer, by which ſays Maimonides [n], you may underſtand any ſtroke by a ſtone, ſtick, or iron, or any other thing: and in the Miſnah [o], it is aſked, what is an ulcer? (or bile) a ſtroke by wood, ſtone, pitch, or hot water; all that is from the force of fire is an ulcer: and is healed; by the uſe of medicine, and the part in all appearance, as well and as ſound as ever.

℣. 19. And in the place of the bile there be a white riſing, &c.] In the place where the bile was, a white ſwelling appears: or a bright ſpot, white, and ſomewhat reddiſh; white and red mixed, as the Targum of Jonathan; and ſo Aben Ezra interprets the word reddiſh, of the bright ſpot being mixed of two colours, or part of it ſo; and ſuch a mixed colour of white and red, Gerſom obſerves, is uſual in a ſwelling, and adds, we are taught how to judge of theſe appearances, according to a tradition from Moſes, which is this: take a cup full of milk, and put in it two drops of blood, and the colour of it will be as the colour of the bright ſpot white and reddiſh; and if you put into it four drops, its colour will be as the colour of the riſing (or ſwelling) reddiſh; and if you put into it eight drops, its colour will be as the colour of the ſcab of the bright ſpot, more reddiſh; and if you put into it 16 drops, its colour will be as the colour of the ſcab of the ſwelling, very red:—hence it appears, ſays he, that the bright ſpot is whiteſt with its redneſs, and after that the ſwelling, and next the ſcab of the bright ſpot, and then the ſcab of the

[m] פרוח תפרח ανθουσα ἀνθησει, Sept. florendo floruerit, Montanus; ſo Druſius & Tigurine verſion.

[n] In Miſn. Negaim, c. 6. §. 8.

[o] Ib. c. 9. §. 1.

the ſwelling: but Bochart [p] is of opinion, that the word is wrongly rendred reddiſh, which, he thinks, contradicts the account of the bright ſpot being white, and eſpecially as the word for reddiſh has its radicals doubled, which always increaſe the ſignification; and therefore if the word bears the ſenſe of redneſs, it ſhould be rendred exceeding red, which would be quite contrary to the ſpot being white at all; wherefore from the uſe of the word in the Arabic language, which ſignifies, white, bright, and glittering; ſee the note on Lam. iv. 7. he chuſes to read the words, or a bright ſpot, white and exceeding glittering: but this word we render reddiſh and white, being read disjunctively, ℣. 24. ſeems to contradict this obſervation of his: and it be ſhewed to the prieſt; to look upon and paſs his judgment on it.

℣. 20. And if when the prieſt ſeeth it, &c.] And has thoroughly viewed it and conſidered it: behold, it be in ſight lower than the ſkin; having eaten into and taken root in the fleſh under the ſkin: and the hair thereof be turned white; which are the ſigns of leproſy before given, ℣. 3. the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean; not fit for company and converſation, but obliged to conform to the laws concerning leproſy: it is a plague of leproſy broken out of the bile; which was there before: this is an emblem of apoſtates and apoſtacy, who having been ſeemingly healed and cleanſed, return to their former courſe of life, and to all the inpurity of it, like the dog to its vomit, and the ſwine to its wallowing in the mire; and ſo their laſt ſtate is worſe than the firſt, as in this caſe; at firſt it was a bile, and then thought to be cured, and afterwards ariſes out of it a plague of leproſy.

℣. 21. But if the prieſt look on it, &c.] Upon a perſon in a like caſe, as firſt deſcribed, having had a bile, and that healed, and afterwards a white ſwelling, or a bright ſpot in the place of it: and behold, there be no white hairs therein; not two hairs turned white, as Gerſom interprets it: and if it be not lower than the ſkin; the bright ſpot not lower than the ſkin; not having got into the fleſh, only ſkin-deep: the Targum of Jonathan is, not lower in whiteneſs than the ſkin; for the bright ſpot is deſcribed as white, and ſo the riſing or ſwelling, ℣. 19. but be ſomewhat dark; or rather contracted; to which ſpreading is oppoſed in the next verſe; ſee the note on ℣. 6. then the prieſt ſhall ſhut him up ſeven days; to wait and ſee whether it will ſpread or no: a bile and burning, the Jews ſay, make a man unclean in one week, and by two ſigns, the white hair, and the ſpreading; by the white hair, both at the beginning and at the end of the week after diſmiſſion, and by ſpreading at the end of the week after it [q].

℣. 22. And if it ſpread much abroad in the ſkin, &c.] Upon viewing it on the ſeventh day, tho' it is not expreſſed, the ſwelling or bright ſpot; or in ſpreading ſpread, as in ℣. 7. ſee the note there; which Ben Gerſom interprets, not of the ſkin of the fleſh but of the ulcer: then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean; even though there are no white hairs in it, nor is it lower than the ſkin, yet is not at a ſtand or contracted, but ſpreading: it is a plague; or ſtroke; it is one ſort of a leproſy, and ſuch a one as makes a man unclean in a ceremonial ſenſe.

℣. 23. But if the bright ſpot ſtay in his place, and ſpread not, &c.] Continues as it was, when firſt viewed: it is a burning bile; but not a plague of leproſy: and the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean; as clear of a leproſy, and ſo not bound by the law of it, though attended with an inflammation or burning ulcer.

℣. 24. Or if there be any fleſh, in the ſkin whereof there is a hot burning, &c.] Or a burning of fire [r]; it is aſked, what is a burning? that which is burnt with a coal or with hot aſhes; all that is from the force of fire is burning [s]; that is, whatever ſore, puſtule or bliſter, is occaſioned by fire touching the part, or by any thing heated by fire: and the quick fleſh that burneth have a white bright ſpot, ſomewhat reddiſh, or white; the Targum of Jonathan is, a white ſpot mixed with red, or only white; and ſo Aben Ezra interprets the laſt clauſe: this ſeems to ſet aſide Bochart's interpretation of the word Adamdemeth, which we render ſomewhat reddiſh, and he, very white, bright, and glittering, ſince white is here oppoſed unto it; though it may be, the ſenſe is, that the fleſh burnt has a bright, white ſpot in it exceeding glittering; or however, at leaſt, a white one: by the quick fleſh that burneth, Gerſom ſays, is meant, the weak, tender fleſh which is renewed there, after it is healed from the purulent matter in it.

℣. 25. Then the prieſt ſhall look upon it, &c.] And examine it, whether it has the marks and ſigns of a leproſy or no, ſuch as follow: behold, if the hair in the bright ſpot be turned white; which before was black, or of another colour from white, and is now turned into the whiteneſs of chalk, as the Targum of Jonathan: and it be in ſight deeper than the ſkin; the ſame Targum is, "and its ſight "or colour is deeper in being white like ſnow, "more than the ſkin;" but this reſpects not the colour of it, as appearing to the ſight, but the depth of the ſpot, going below the ſkin into the fleſh, which, with the change of hair are the two ſigns of leproſy, ℣. 3. it is a leproſy broken out of the burning; which ſprung from thence, and what that had iſſued in: wherefore the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean; a leper, and to be treated as ſuch: it is the plague of leproſy; being a plain caſe, according to the rules by which it was to be judged of.

℣. 26. But if the prieſt look on it, &c.] On the hot burning and bright ſpot in it, in another perſon: and behold, there be no white hair on the white ſpot, and it be no lower than the other ſkin; why the word other ſhould be ſupplied I know not, any more than in ℣. 21. but be ſomewhat dark; or contracted, ſee the note on ℣. 24. then the prieſt ſhall ſhut him up ſeven days; as in the caſe of the burning bile or hot ulcer, as in the ſame verſe.

℣. 27. And the prieſt ſhall look upon him the ſeventh day, &c.] When that is come, any time on that day; not needing to wait until the end of it, or till the ſeven days are preciſely up; the ſame is to be underſtood in all places in this chapter where the like is uſed: and if it be ſpread much abroad in the ſkin; in the ſpace of ſeven days: then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean; it is the plague of leproſy; according to the law; ſo that it was neceſſary in ſuch a caſe, for him to conform to it in order to his cleanſing.

℣. 28. And if the bright ſpot ſtay in his place, and ſpread not in the ſkin, &c.] If after being ſhut up up ſeven days, it appears that the ſpot is no larger than when it was firſt viewed, but is as it was, and not at all increaſed: but it be ſomewhat dark; either not ſo bright as it was, or more contracted: it is a riſing of the burning; or a ſwelling of it, a ſwelling which ſprung from it, and nothing elſe: the prieſt ſhall pronounce him clean; from the leproſy, and ſo ſet him at liberty to go where he will, and dwell and converſe with men as uſual: for it is an inflammation of the burning; or an inflammation or bliſter occaſioned by the burning, and no leproſy.

[p] Hierozoic. par. 2. l. 5. c. 6. col. 689. Pagninus, Montanus, Junius & Tremellius, Piſcator.

[q] Miſn. Negaim, c. 3. §. 4.

[r] מכוית אש aduſtio ignis, Miſn. Negaim, c. 9. §. 1. & Maimon. in ib. c. 6. §. 8.

℣. 29. If a man or a woman hath a plague upon the head or the beard.] Any breaking out in thoſe parts, a ſwelling, ſcab, or ſpot, on a man's beard or on a woman's head; or on the head of either man or woman; or on a woman's beard, if ſhe had any, as ſome have had, though not common.

℣. 30. Then the prieſt ſhall ſee the plague, &c.] The perſon on whom it is, ſhall come or be brought unto him; and he ſhall look upon it and examine it: and behold, if it be in ſight deeper than the ſkin; which is always one ſign of leproſy; and there be in it a yellow thin hair; like the appearance of thin gold, as the Targum of Jonathan; for as Ben Gerſom ſays, its colour is the colour of gold; and it is called thin in this place, becauſe ſhort and ſoft, and not when it is long and ſmall; and ſo it is ſaid, ſcabs make unclean in two weeks, and by two ſigns, by thin yellow hair, and by ſpreading, by yellow hair, ſmall, ſoft, and ſhort [t]: now this is to be underſtood, not of hair that is naturally of a yellow or gold colour, as is the hair of the head and beard of ſome perſons, but of hair changed into this colour through the force of the diſeaſe; and ſo Jarchi interprets it, black hair turned yellow; in other parts of the body, hair turned white was a ſign of leproſy, but here that which was turned yellow or golden coloured: Aben Ezra obſerves, that the colour expreſſed by this word is, in the Iſhmaelitiſh or Arabic language, the next to the white colour: then the prieſt ſhall pronounce him unclean; declare him a leper, and unfit for company, and order him to do and have done for him the things after expreſſed, as required in ſuch a caſe: it is a dry ſcall; or wound, as the Septuagint verſion; Nethek, which is the word here uſed, Jarchi ſays, is the name of a plague that is in the place of hair, or where that grows; it has its name, from plucking up; for there the hair is plucked away, as Aben Ezra and Ben Gerſom note: even a leproſy upon the head or beard; as the head is the ſeat of knowledge, and the beard a ſign of manhood, and of a man's being arrived to years of diſcretion, when wiſdom and prudence are expected in him; this ſort of leproſy may be an emblem of errors in judgment, of falſe doctrines and hereſies imbibed by perſons, which eat as doth a canker, and are in themſelves damnable, and bring ruin and deſtruction on teachers and hearers, unleſs recovered from them by the grace of God.

℣. 31. And if the prieſt look on the plague of the ſcall, &c.] As it may appear in another perſon, brought to him for inſpection and examination: and behold, it be not in the ſight deeper than the ſkin; it don't ſeem to be got into the fleſh, or lower than the ſkin: and that there is no black hair in it; or, but no black hair in it; for, as Jarchi ſays, if there was a black hair in it, he would be clean, and there would be no need of ſhutting up; for black hair in ſcalls is a ſign of cleanneſs, as it is ſaid, ℣. 37. it would be a clear caſe that ſuch a man had no leproſy on him; for black hair is a token of a ſtrong and healthful conſtitution; and there could remain no doubt about it, and it would require no further trial and examination: Ben Gerſom ſays, it means two black hairs; and further obſerves, that black hair in the midſt of a ſcall is a ſign of cleanneſs; but this being wanting, then the prieſt ſhall ſhut up him that hath the plague of the ſcall, ſeven days; from the time of his viewing the ſcall; and ſo Ben Gerſom, this is the ſeventh day from the time of looking upon the ſcall.

℣. 32. And in the ſeventh day the prieſt ſhall look on the plague, &c.] To ſee whether it has got any deeper, or ſpread any further, and has any hair growing in it, and of what colour, that he might be alſo able to judge whether it was a leproſy or no: and behold if the ſcall ſpread not; was neither got into the fleſh, nor larger in the ſkin; and there be in it no yellow hair; that is a thin yellow hair, for ſuch only, as Ben Gerſom obſerves, was a ſign of leproſy in ſcalls, as in ℣. 30. and the ſame writer obſerves, that and is here inſtead of or, and to be read, or there be in it no yellow hair; ſince a ſcall was pronounced unclean, either on account of thin yellow hair, or on account of ſpreading: and the ſcall be not in ſight deeper than the ſkin; but be juſt as it was when firſt looked upon.

