EVERIT MACY DIES IN ARIZONA HOTEL

Banker and Philanthropist Had Gone to Southwest to Recover His Health.

LEADER IN WESTCHESTER

President of Park Commission Had Been Head of County Welfare Work From 1914 to 1924.

Special to The New York Times.

PHOENIX, Ariz., March 21.—V. Everit Macy, philanthropist and president of the Westchester Park Commission, died this morning of bronchial pneumonia at Ingleside Inn, nine miles northeast of here.

Mr. Macy had been a Winter resident of this valley for the last three years. He arrived early this year accompanied only by a secretary. Though his health had not been robust, his illness was not regarded as serious until a few hours before his death.

Children Hasten to Arizona.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., March 21.—J. Noel Macy, president of the Westchester County Publishers, Inc., and Valentine E. Macy Jr., sons of V. Everit Macy, left for their father's bedside yesterday afternoon hoping to reach him before the end by flying from Chicago to Arizona. Accompanying them were Mrs. J. Noel Macy and Mrs. Edytha Lewis of Weston, Mass., a daughter.

Mr. Macy went to Phoenix upon the advice of physicians to recover from a chronic sinus ailment. Word was received here only yesterday that a dangerous fever had set in and that bronchial pneumonia might develop. Fear was expressed over the outcome of a bad cold Mr. Macy had contracted about ten days ago.

It is expected that the body will be brought to Chilmark, Mr. Macy's Ossining estate, about Thursday. Funeral services are expected to be in accordance with Mr. Macy's Quaker taste for simplicity, with burial in the family plot at Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, Tarrytown. Mr. Macy was a member and treasurer of St. Mary's Episcopal Church at Scarborough.

Flags on public buildings throughout Westchester County were at half-mast today in Mr. Macy's honor. The Park Commission met yesterday and unless a special meeting is called they will not meet again until next week. Judges of the county and Supreme Court will adjourn their terms, probably on Monday, out of respect for Mr. Macy.

Mr. Macy was born in New York City on March 23, 1871, the son of Josiah Macy 2d and Caroline Everit Macy. He would have been 59 years old on Sunday. His ancestors came from England in 1645. Each generation of the family has contributed in the upbuilding of the nation. Josiah Macy, great-grandfather of Mr. Macy, was a leading citizen of Nantucket, R. I., and in the early part of the last century came to Westchester County with his son, William H. Macy.

Father Standard Oil Official.

They lived in Harrison. Josiah was engaged in the commission business, was a sea captain, the owner of many sailing vessels, and considered prosperous. William, son of Josiah and grandfather of V. Everit, associated himself in his father's work and later turned from whaling to the petroleum industry. Josiah Macy 2d, father of V. Everit Macy, was born in New York City, where he built up the family fortune further. At the time of his death he was a prominent official of the Standard Oil Company, which had taken over the family's earlier petroleum business.

Mr. Macy was educated by tutors and in private schools in New York City. He was graduated from Columbia University in 1893 and for two years after his graduation traveled abroad. Upon his return he took over the business and investment interests of his father, who had died when his son was 5 years old.

John G. Agar, vice president of the Westchester County Park Commission, issued the following statement in behalf of the commission:

"In the passing of V. Everit Macy the Westchester County Park Commission has sustained an irreparable loss.

"Mr. Macy devoted his best years to the service of his fellow-men. As Commissioner of Public Welfare of Westchester from 1914 to 1924 he established standards previously unknown in the attitude of society toward its aged, indigent and physically infirm. His four years' work as president of the Park Commission was the culmination of his career of public service, toward the end of which he labored unselfishly with ebbing strength for the good of not only his own but succeeding generations.

"A distinguished citizen, an outstanding public servant, a philanthropist in the broadest sense of the word, V. Everit Macy dedicated his life to the service of humanity."

Reorganized Welfare System.

Valentine Everit Macy was known especially for his achievements in Westchester County in reorganizing the public welfare administration and in developing the county's park system until it became recognized as a model. But his field of interest and endeavor was extended to numerous phases of financial, industrial, educational, philanthropic, social, and archaeological enterprise.

Mr. Macy, who was very wealthy, devoted most of his later life to his public interests. As head of the welfare activities of Westchester County from 1914 to 1924, he was regarded as a pioneer in the development of the method which aims not to distribute charity or relief so much as to remove the causes of poverty, foreshadowing the adoption last year of the new State public welfare law.

From Jan. 1, 1926, until his death, he served as president of the Westchester County Park Commission, succeeding W. Delavan Baldwin. Under his leadership the park and parkway program was extended until it included more than 17,000 acres in the county and was, as far as operation and maintenance were concerned, practically self-supporting. The development of Playland at Rye Beach, of Glen Island, and of the Saw Mill and Hutchinson River Parkways came largely under his administration.

Mr. Macy also took an active part in the movement for improving relations between employers and labor. His educational work included the chairmanship of the board of trustees of Teachers College, Columbia University and benefactions for Negro education and grants to foreign students. In addition to membership on the board of trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, he was the donor of valuable pottery and antiquities to the museum.

During the early part of his career,

V. EVERIT MACY,

Mr. Macy became director of the Mechanics and Metals National Bank, the Bank of Long Island, the Queensborough Gas and Electric Company, the Union Trust Company, and other business institutions. At the same time he was trustee of the University Settlement, the George Junior Republic, treasurer of the People's Institute, chairman of the finance committee of the Manhattan Trade School, and first secretary of the National Employment Exchange.

Dropped Business for Welfare.

When, in 1914, he became Superintendent of the Poor in Westchester County, it was said that he resigned from twenty-three committees and organizations to devote himself to the task. He was elected as a Democrat and Progressive, but was reelected several times on the Republican ticket, serving successively under the titles of Commissioner of Charities and Correction, and Commissioner of Public Welfare. During his tenure of office, old buildings were replaced, the new Grasslands Hospital built, a child welfare division organized, and self-government introduced in the penitentiary.

His work on the park commission was not without opposition and attack. In 1925 and 1926 charges were made against the park administration by members of the Board of Supervisors. But charges brought against him during the land deal investigations of last year in Westchester County were dismissed by the grand jury as without foundation.

In 1917, Mr. Macy was appointed by President Wilson as chairman of a labor adjustment commission for settlement of labor disputes in shipyards, and in 1919 he was made umpire of the New York harbor strike. He was at that time president of the National Civic Federation, later serving as chairman of that organization's department of industrial relations.

When John D. Rockefeller Jr. in 1926 made his offer, later withdrawn, of $10,000,000 to the Egyptian Government for a museum at Cairo, Mr. Macy was one of a committee of three named to administer the fund. He also served as secretary of the Society for the Excavation of Sardis in Asia Minor.

In memory of his wife, Mrs. Edith C. Macy, who died in 1925, Mr. Macy gave to the Girl Scouts a camp of nearly 300 acres near Briarcliff, N. Y., and a fund of $100,000 for training leaders. He was often seen working in overalls on his estate at Scarborough, and on one occasion led forty head of thoroughbred cattle out of a barn threatened by fire.

Mr. Macy had also served as vice president of the New York State Child Labor Committee, and treasurer of the National Child Labor Committee. He was director of the Seamen's Bank for Savings, the Provident Loan Society, the City Housing Corporation, the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, the Tennessee Central Railroad and the Seaboard Air Line Railway. His clubs included the Century, University, St. Anthony, Columbia University, City and Union.

Organizations Pay Tribute.

Homer Folks, secretary of the State Charities Aid Association, issued the following tribute yesterday afternoon:

"Mr. Macy had been a member of the Central Association of the S. C. A. A. for thirty years, and of the board of managers of the association since 1924. He had twice served as vice president of the association.

"Mr. Macy's contribution of personal service and exceptional vision and administrative ability in the field of social welfare, as well as in many other branches of civic usefulness, will be one of his most enduring monuments."

A statement from Girl Scout headquarters issued by Mrs. Jane Deeter Rippin, national director, said:

"The Girl Scouts have lost one of their best friends by the death of V. Everit Macy, who was a member of our national committee on business and finance. Both Mr. and Mrs. Macy gave largely of themselves and their substance that the growing young women of the whole world might be trained in those principles which would make them more useful and valuable members of society. His passing comes as a great shock to all of us."

DR. J. F. ROYSTER DIES, NORTH CAROLINA DEAN

Noted English Scholar Had to Give Up Work as Head of American University Union.

Special to The New York Times.

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., March 21.—Dr. James Finch Royster, dean of the graduate school and head of the English department of the University of North Carolina, died today in Richmond, Va. He was one of the foremost scholars of the country in the field of English philosophy and was a member of the executive committee of the American Modern Language Association.

He went to London last Fall to spend a year as director of the American University Union, but illness compelled his return in December. Immediately after his arrival in New York he went to Richmond for hospital treatment.

Funeral services will be held at his late home here Sunday afternoon.

PROF. C. H. VAN TYNE, HISTORIAN, IS DEAD

Head of History Department at University of Michigan Succumbs at 60.

AUTHORITY ON REVOLUTION

Many of His Conclusions Ran Counter to Accepted Popular Traditions on War of 1776.

Special to The New York Times.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., March 21.—Professor Claude Halstead Van Tyne, historian and since 1911 head of the history department of the University of Michigan, died at his home here today after a long illness. He was 60 years old.

Professor Van Tyne was born in Tecumseh, Mich., and was graduated from the University of Michigan in 1898. He spent two years as a student at Heidelberg and Leipzig and obtained his doctorate from the University of Pennsylvania in 1900. He remained at Pennsylvania as a teaching fellow until 1903, when he came to Michigan as assistant professor of American history.

He is survived by his widow, a daughter and three sons.

Professor Van Tyne wrote extensively, mainly on topics growing out of the American Revolution. He was frequently in conflict with other students of history.

He wrote "Loyalists in the American Revolution," "History of the American Revolution," "Letters of Daniel Webster," "Guide to the Government Archives in Washington," "A School History of the United States," "Causes of the War of Independence" and "Unsolved Problems of the American Revolution."

He came into conflict with Mayor William Hale Thompson of Chicago when the latter was at the height of what he termed his campaign to eliminate anti-American sentiments from school histories. His critics condemned him as an Anglophile. Yet, when the United States entered the World War Professor Van Tyne, at the request of the Federal Government, undertook a speaking tour to explain the causes and aims of the war.

Professor Van Tyne held that what generally were considered the fundamental causes of the Revolution, such as "taxation without representation," were only contributing causes. The real motives, he held, lay in new conceptions of liberty and the rights of man. It was not a struggle between the Old World and the New, but a conflict between an old and a new school of political thought, he believed.

Professor Van Tyne held two important foreign scholarships. In 1913-14 he appeared before the provincial universities of France under the auspices of the Harvard Foundation. In 1926 he delivered at British universities the Sir George Watson lectures on American history, literature and institutions. His subject was a new interpretation of the American Revolution.

In 1921 Professor Van Tyne studied the British administration in India and his book, "India in Ferment," won for him sharp criticism from the opponents of British rule.

HALL NEILSON JACKSON.

Retired Proprietor of Cincinnati Book Store Dies at 62.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, March 21.—Hall Neilson Jackson, 62 years old, who for many years was in the book business here, died in Bethesda Hospital. At 16 he became interested in collecting first editions and old prints. He had retired a few years ago.

Mr. Jackson was born in Philadelphia, the son of the Rev. Augustus Jackson, rector of St. Paul Episcopal Church, Washington. His forefathers were officers in the Revolutionary Army and he was related to the Tuley and Neilson families of Virginia. He came to Cincinnati more than thirty years ago and opened a book store, which became a meeting place for book lovers.

He became ill a week ago last Saturday and was taken to the hospital. He leaves his widow, who formerly was Miss Bertha Drewithe of Washington; a brother, Stuart Wells Jackson, New York; a daughter, Miss Carolo Jackson, Cincinnati, and a son, Hall Neilson Jackson Jr., Cincinnati architect.

He was a member of the Cheviot Lodge of Masons and of the Elks and for many years was a member of the Cuvier Press Club.

EDWARD C. LASATER, CATTLE BREEDER, DIES

Owner of 300,000-Acre Ranch in Texas Was Said to Be World's Leading Jersey Breeder.

ARDMORE, Okla., March 20 (AP).—Edward C. Lasater, widely known Texas cattle breeder and operator of a 300,000-acre ranch near Falfurrias, Texas, died in a hospital here today after an illness of three days. He was 69 years old.

He was reputed to be the largest breeder of Jersey cattle in the world. His prize stock has been exhibited at cattle shows throughout the country.

In his early days Mr. Lasater worked in the sheep and cow camps of Texas. His Falfurrias herd consisted of Hereford and Hereford and Brahma crosses of beef cattle and the Falfurrias Jerseys for dairy purposes. In 1917 he was director of live stock and farming for the United States Food Administration, but he resigned after sharply disagreeing with the government's handling of the meat situation, which he described as unfairly preferential to the packers.

WILLIAM J. McCLELLAN.

Authority on Early History of Baltimore Dies at 84.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, March 21.—William J. McClellan, oldest member of the Maryland Historical Society and an authority on the history of early Baltimore, died last night at his home here.

Mr. McClellan, who was 84 years old on Christmas, had been ill for about a week with bronchial pneumonia.
