Pastor of the First Church in MALDEN.

Advertisement.

THE following Discourse contains only plain and practical reflections: When it was composed and delivered, the author had no thought of its publication, and he should not have confented to it now, had it not have been for the earnest deserves of some friends whom he could neither disoblige nor deny.

The character of Dr. Eliot, it may well be Jupposed, was not delivered with the rest of the Sermon: it is added now at the particular defire of the same friends, and the author could wish that in it he had done more justice to this eminent servant of God, or that the duty had been performed by a more capable hand: it wants elegance but not truth; of this every man who knew the subject of it must be convinced. The whole discourse is consecrated to the honor of God and the memory of a man whose character the author, to his latest breath, muft esteem and revere! 468-

HEBREWS iv. 9.

There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God.

HE sabbath of God is a day of rest; in it the good man retires from the world, he unbends his mind from secular engagements and fixes it upon God and divine things; its return will always give him pleasure, for it is as one of the days of heaven to his foul. Indeed, this holy day is typical of heaven; the employments in which good people in both are engaged, are fimilar, for these are spiritual and have a particular reference to God and his glory; in both, the world and all that it affords is under their feet, and God, the great and glorious God, employs all their thoughts and engages all their attention; the fabbath is mentioned in this connexion by the Apostle in our context, and 'e were induced hereby to make these remarks.

He was led to difcourfe upon this fubject by his quoting a paffage from the pfalms, in which God declares his anger against Ifrael and his determination to punish them by not permitting them to enter into his rest; this might refer first and principally eipally to the earthly Canaan which was to be the period of Ifrael's conflicts, the end of their toils and fatigues; as the Apofile knew this to be an allegorical reprefentation of the heavenly Canaan, the period of the believers trials and fufferings, he goes on to fpeak of this reft, of the reafons which prevent men from entering into it, even their unbelief and hardnefs of heart, of the refemblence between this and the chriftian fabbath, and finally afferts in our text that, there remainet btherefore a reft to the people of God.

This, my brethren, is a bleffed truth a truth capable of supporting the mind under the heaviest afflictions, of animating the most feeble defires, of famping into a facred flame the coldest love, and exciting the most careless to constant, chearful and perfevering obedience ! How thankful should we then be for such a truth, how earness to improve it to these important purposes !

My delign from the words is, First, to discourse to you of the nature and properties of the rest which is spoken of in the text. And,

Secondly, to defcribe fomething of the character of those to whom this rest belongs, or rather for whom it remains.

Under our first head which is, " to discourse to you on the nature and properties of the rest which is spoken of in the text," we remark, that rest is a cellution from labour and a relief from trouble;

it is repose after fatigue, and sleep after watching; this is the general idea conveyed to us by the word, rest.

But we may be affured that fomething valily greater and more important is meant by the Apollie in the text; he is there and in our context discoursing upon the period of the christian course, that state of happiness and reward to which the faithful fervants of Christ shall be received when they have glorified God upon earth and finished the work which he gave them to do; this state is designated in the text by the term rest, concerning which we would observe,

First, That it is not a rest or cellation from the fervice of God.

Good men by no means with for fuch a reft; were it granted them they would be miferable, for their fupreme delight is in this fervice, and they can fay with their mafter, John iv. 34. My meat is to do the will of him that fent me and to finish his work: They have indeed the keeneft relish for a flare of activity in the fervice of God, and view heaven as a delightful place, because there their whole employment will be to ferve God and ferve him without interruption.

To suppose that glorified faints ceale from the fervice of their maker would be not only to contradict the plainest dictates of enlightened reason, but also the positive affertions of the word of God, for it is faid to John concerning them, Rev. vii. 14, 15. These are they which came out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the lamb, therefore are they before the throne of God and serve him day and night in his temple, and he that sitteth upon the throne shall dwell among them: Angels and archangels, cherubim and feraphim are employed thus, for he makes his angels spirits and 'his ministers a flame of fire. Surely then when the spirits of just men are made perfect, when they come to join the general allembly and church of the first born on high, instead of resting from ' the fervice of their maker they will engage in it. with redoubled vigor and supreme delight, they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint. But,

Secondly, It is a reft from fin.

Sin is in the highest degree burthensome to holy men upon earth, it is directly contrary to that new nature which the spirit of God hath implanted within them; they complain of it as their heaviest burden, and they often groan out, in the bitterness of their gracious spirits, O wretched men that we are, who ball deliver us from the body of this death !

Now heaven is an holy place; the holy God, the holy Jefus, holy angels and faints inhabit it; all the exercises of heaven are holy, for they are all parts of the worship of a pure and holy being, there can therefore be no degree of fin in heaven: glorified spirits have conftant, uninterrupted communion with God, they must then be perfectly holy, for what communion hath light with darkness, or what fellowship hath the temple of God with idols? Sin and impurity of every kind are everlastingly excluded the the heavenly world by that declaration, Rev. xxi, 27. And there shall in no wife enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie, but they which are written in the lamb's book of life.

In likeness to God, and in conformity to his divine image confists real holiness, but faints when they arrive at glory shall become thus like to God and confequently holy, for declares the pious plalmist, Plal. xvii. 15. As for me I will behold thy face in righteousness, I shall be fatisfied when I awake with thy likeness.

They could not endure the fight of God unless they were holy; the finful, polluted foul thrinks away from the view of perfect purity: when any good men, in the ages of infpiration, were admitted to behold uncommon manifestations of the divine glory, a fenfe of fin remaining in them induced each of them to cry out, depart from me for I am a finful man, O God ! but we know that glorified spirits are admitted to the vision of God; Job afferts this in the strongest terms, when he says, speaking of the now exalted Redeemer, whom I shall see for myself and mine eyes shall behold and not another : it follows then in the plainest manner that the people of God shall reft from fin and corruption of every kind, shall become perfectly holy in heaven, for they shall see God, the vision of whom they could not endure if there were any remainders of corruption within them.

There is no truth more plain, more express, or more comfortable than this; to be with, to be like, to enjoy an holy God, how transporting is the thought to the holy foul! to think that their corruptions shall burden them no more, that they shall no more diffionor their glorious Lord, that they shall be called to ligh no more for the abominations of others, that their defires of holinefs, their eager hungerings and thirltings after righteousness shall be compleatly fatisfied, what unurrerable delight must it give to the children of the most high !

We observe,

Thirdly, That the reft which remaineth to the people of God is a relt from forrow.

The prefent, my brethren, is a world of forrow, for man is born to trouble as the parks fly upward; good men are often burthened with fpiritual and temporal distresses in the present life, but they rest from both thefe in heaven.

They reft there from their spiritual troubles; fin in themfelves and others is their greatest trouble, but this, we faw under the last particular, is removed when we arrive at an holy heaven: there they complain no more of the hidings of God's face, nor fit under the darkness and gloom of spiritual desertions, for the fan of righteoulnels ever shines upon them, not only with meridian splendor and majesty but alfo with healing in his wings; of confequence they have no more doubts of the love of God to their souls nor concern lest they should not glorify him? they reft from these which are by much their greatest troubles in heaven, for God is their shield and their

Ia

(II)

In heaven, again, good men reft from their temporal troubles: they are not exercised there with fickness or poverty, with reproach or bereavements; no, friends meet in heaven to part no more forever, their friends meet in heaven to part no more forever, their friends meet in heaven to part no more forever, their friends meet in heaven to part no more forever, their friends meet in heaven to part no more forever, their friends meet in heaven to part no more forever, their friends meet in heaven to part no more forever, their friends meet in heaven to part no more forever, their friends meet in heaven to part no more forever, their friends meet in heaven to part no more forever, their friends meet in heaven to part no more forever, and people are all their life time fubject to bondage : indeed, they have no more trouble there of any kind, but all is peace and joy and telicity.

This is no contemptible part of that reft which remaineth to the people of God, for under these trials and afflictions they often groan, being burdened, not that they would be unclothed but clothed upon, that mostality might be fwallowed up of life; and it is fecured to the believer by that word of God. Rev. vii. 17. For the lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

Fourthly. A reft from temptation remaineth to all the people of God.

Saran is the prime ruler in the great monarchy of hell and is reprefented, in the word of God, as the accuser of the brethren and as going about like a roaring tion seeking whom he may devour: good men are often vexed with his temptations here upon earth, but in heaven he never thews his accurted face; his fiery datts, wounding to foul and body here, become pointlefs there: how much forver the malevolence of his disposition may prompt him to disturb the repose of the blessed, yet the ability is taken away from him, for the voice of the Highest to him is, Hitherto shalt thou come and no further: he cannot there infuse any blassphemous thoughts; he will excite no more murmurings against God; he will fill us no more with sears of eternal ruin, nor foment vicious propensities within us: the people of God, safe under the protection of the great captain of their solution, and rejoicing in the triumphs of his love may bid defiance to the power and malice of Satan, and will rest forever from his temptations.

Fifthly, Heaven is a rest from mortification and felf-denial.

The corruption and depravity of the human heart render men averfe to that which is good and inclined to that which is evil, and this makes many duties of the divine life hard and difficult to be performed, while it is no eafy matter to avoid the commiffion of those crimes to which our passions and appetites lead us: hence arises the necessary of felfdenial and mortification, we must oftentimes go contrary to our inclination when we perform our duty, we must diffregard the powerful cravings of fenfual propensities when we avoid the practice of fin.

So neceffary are these duties of mortification in the divine life that onr Lord hath faid expressly, If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me 3 There remains an absolute necessity for the practice of these duties so long as we remain in the body, for so long the corrupt nature abides and remains within us.

But

But that perfect holiness of which the faints in heaven are possible takes away the necessary for the practice of these; they feel there no more inclination to fin nor aversion to holines, but their duty is their delight and the fervice of God is their highest pleasure: they have no more need of crossing their corrupt inclinations, for none such remain within them; they have no more need of flying from temptation, of distructing their own hearts, of keeping up fo strict a watch over themfelves and others; they feel no more backwardness to that which is good, but they are constantly animated and feel a divine vigor in the fervice of God, for they love him with a supreme, unabating affection.

How folemnly is the declaration of the apofile John to this purpose introduced, Rev. xiv. 13. And I heard a voice from heaven, faying unto me, write, bleffed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth: yea, faith the spirit. that they may rest from their labours, and their works do follow them: this, my brechren, is the period of the christian race; this is the goal at which, would we be happy, we must all arrive. But Sixthly, A compleat and perfect rest remaineth unto the people of God.

There is not the least remainder of fin or forrow in heaven: there is nothing there which, in any fense or degree, can disturb or molest the blessed, for every thing is excluded which can give them the least uncaliness, or in any way diminish the pleniude of their

their felicity: all is peace and joy and love in heaven; the most perfect harmony subsists among its inhabitants, they dwell in everlasting felicity, and are partakers of never ceasing pleasures.

This leads me to fay,

Seventhly, That the reft which remaineth to the people of God is everlafting.

Did the faints in glory know that their felicity fhould come to a period, they must necessarily be unhappy, for the dread of future evil, or the apprehension of the loss of present good, would imbister or render tasteles every enjoyment; such is the constitution of things as that our happines must be permanent in order to its being perfect.

The reft, the felicity therefore which remaineth to the people of God, is an everlaiting reft, it shall know no period : as long as their immaterial, immortal fpirits exist, they shall be happy: as long as the eternal Jehovah endures, as long as he who is the rock of ages, the ancient of days, the fame yesterday, to day and forever abides, they shall abide with and be bleffed in him, for God is their portion and reft, he will always continue to fatisfy them from the fulnels of his beniguity: accordingly the promile made to the people of God, Ifaiah xlv. 17. is, But Israel shall be fived in the Lord with an everlasting salvation : ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded world without end. The happinets of the faints of God shall run parallel with the longest time of eternity; they shall never more return to pain, to forrow nor distress, either temporal or spiritual, but shall be always blessed in the enjoyment of God and one another; they shall always abide in his presence where is fulness of joys and at his right hand where are pleasures evermore.

This is indeed an exceeding great and eternal weight of glory, a weight fufficient to overpower our natural faculties, for eye hath not feen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the great and glorious things which God hath prepared for them that love him; therefore hath it become neceffary that our mode of existence ihould be changed before we enter upon it; but death, when viewed as an introduction to this rest, must be confidered as a friend, and instead of fearing his approach, we must long for the time when we shall lie down in the grave, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are forever at rest.

Let us attend now to the fecond thing proposed, viz.

II. To describe something of the character of those to whom this rest belongs, or rather for whom it remains.

Such a glory and bleffedness as we have been describing is not referved for all men without any diffinction, it is bestowed only upon perfons of a particular character, who are denominated in the text -the people of God; some of the principal parts of their character we are now to mention. And,

First, they are cleansed from the guilt of fin.

Sin would unfit them for the presence and enjoyment of an holy God, he is of purer eyes than to behold evil and cannot look on iniquity: no finner while his guilt cleaves to him can be acceptable in the fight of God or be admitted to enjoy the tokens of his favor; fin then must be taken away or we cannot be admitted to the rest which remaineth to the people of God.

The Gospel of Jelus Christ shews us how we may be cleanfed from all our iniquities and be received as righteous in the fight of God; it points out to us his perfect righteoulnels and finished redemption as the only and at the fame time fure foundation of our trust and confidence, declaring in the strongest terms that the blood of Jesus Christ his . Jon cleanseth us from all sin : this gospel afferes us, in equally plain terms, that we must be interested in this righteousness of Christ by faith and thus be united to him or we shall never enter upon eternal rest; we must be justified freely of God's grace thro' the redemption there is in Christ Jesus the Lord, and being justified by faith must have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ or we shall never behold the face of God in peace.

Secondly, It is another part of the character of the people of God that they are renewed and changed in the spirit of their minds.

The melancholy yet unquestionable doctrine of buman depravity shews us the propriety of this obfervation : if mankind are naturally averfe to God and

and divine things, if the fabbath is a burden; if prayer is difagreeable, if good difcourfe is unfavoury, if good men are hateful to them, if they do not love to think nor fpeak of God, then furely a total change must take place within them, before they can relidue the enjoyments of the heavenly world.

For the reft which remains the to the people of God, the very happiness of heaven, confuts in such employments and enjoyments as these; it confuts in communion with God, in acts of devotion and praise to him and in fellowship with the faints of God: there are no other employments or enjoyments there, none therefore calculated for the carnal, graceles heart, none but what would be in the highest degree burthensome to it: indeed, men in a natural state have no real defires after heaven properly confidered, they have no relish for its enjoyments.

The difpctitions and affections, the defires and purfuits of their touls mult therefore be altered, or they can never enjoy the kingdom of God: a new nature mult be given them, old things must p fs away within them and all things become new, or they can never relith that tpirmual enjoyment which heaven offers to them: this is an indefpentable qualification of the people of God, for our Lord humfelf expressly afferts, John iii 3. Verily, verily, I fay unto thee, except a man be born again be cannot fes the kingdom of God.

This leads me to fay, Thirdly, Holinefs of heart and life is an effential part of the character of those to whom this rest remaineth.

No truth is more frequently or plainly revealed in scripture than this; it is faid expressly, Heb. xii. 14. -and holinefs, without which no man shall fee the Lord : This holinefs confifts in conformity to God, and this conformity, in creatures like us, confifts again in similitude to Jefus Christ, in following his example, in walking as he walked, and imbibing his spirit and temper; exact therefore to our purpole is that declaration of the apollle, Rom. viii. 9, Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his : we must not only have the spirit of God, the source of all good, within us, operating upon and renewing our natures, but we must possels the frame, temper and disposition of mind which this bleffed lamb of God difcovered while here upon earth : we mult, like him, have a supreme regard to God's honour, we must have an infinite aversion to fin, a great and conftant delight in the worthip of God, an hearty defi e of the welfare of mankind, and a fincere grief for the hardness of mens hearts. Such a temper of mind as this will neceffarily produce an holy walk and converfation; it will make ns watchtul against fiu; it will render us diligent in dury, it will lead us to avoid the most diftant appearance of evil, and to be filed with the fruits of righteoufness rubich are by Jejus Christ unto the glory and praise of God: every grace of the divine spirit will be tormed within us, and we shall grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jefus Chrift.

It is an infallible truth that none who prevailingly and habitually love fin can ever enjoy this reft, they are excluded by the frame and temper of their own minde, they are excluded also by an express word of God, 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10. Know ye not that the unrighteous unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived, neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor crunkards nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. Let none of us then flatter curfelves with hopes of eternal life while we love and practice any one iniquity, let us labor after holy learts and lives in order to our enjoying an holy heaveu.

Fourthly, The people of God excel in love.

Love conflitutes, in one fenfe, the whole of religion; it confilts in withing well to all intelligent exittence, and in defiring the happiness of every individual so far as this is confistent with the welfare of the whole: this is the temper of God himself, and as we have more than once observed, in conformity to God confists the religion of a rational creature.

Love is the happinefs and employment of heaven; all its inhabitants are filled with love and joy un/peakable and full of glory: they delight in viewing the glory of God and the happinefs of each other; each partakes of the others felicity and feels his own increated by it: the facted fisme of feraphic love catches from breaft to breaft; it animates, it warms, it influmes the whole celeftial circle.

Unless we have the spirit of heaven formed within us here, we shall never enjoy the glory of heaven hereafter; the spirit of love then must be formed within us here; we must love the great God with truth and sincerity, we must love the Lord Jesus with a pure heart fervently: we must have a particular and special love to all those who bear the image of Christ, and must benevolently with the welfare and happiness

happinels of all mankind the christian spirit is not parrow nor confined: it embraces in the arms of its affection not merely those who think and speak like ittelt, but all men, yea all beings which are in a capacity of happinels.

Love to the brethren expressive itelf in regard for these company and convertation and effecting them as the excellent ones of the earth in our taking particular pleature in doing good to the hou/hold of faith: Love to mankind in general differences itself in kind thoughts of, tender speeches about, and charitable actions towards them: if we say, be ye warmed and be ye cloathed only; if we see our brother, if we see any miserable object have need and relieve him not, if it is in our power to do so, we may depend upon it that we have no real love to mankind, but are in the gall of bitterness and bond of iniquity.

All malice, envy, wrath, clamour and evil-speaking are inconsistent with the spirit of love, and confequently of Christ and heaven : the malevolent, the eovious, the passionate, the revengebul, are excluded therefore by everlasting bars and bolts from the kingdom of glory.

Fifthly, Those for whom this rest remains are weaned from the world.

If their principal delight was here they would not relifh heaven nor have any delives after its refined, fpiritual enjoyments: fupreme I ve to God and the world are unerly incompatible, for no min can, at the fame time. lerve two mafters: the fame principal defines, affections and purpofes are placed here can have no real desires after another and better world. because here is their God and portion. It is an effential part therefore of the character of the people of God that they are wenned from this world, that they are spiritual and heavenly in the dispositions and purfuirs of their fouls: they are diffinguished in the plainest manner from the children of this world. they feel themselves to be at a distance from their home. in a foreign kingdom, to the prince of which they owe no allegiance : they confess themselves to be pilgrims and strangers here upon earth, and seek a better country, a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God ; their conversation is in heaven ; and fometimes when trom Pifgah's lofty top they are permittel to take a delightful furvey of the Canaan before them, they will and defire to depart and be with Chilf which is much better; they adopt the language of the Plalmilt crying out, Ob that I had roings like a dove, for then would I flee away and be at reft. These parts of the christian character are not in leed here in perfection; there are great remainders of corruption in the belt of men, and this calls for the daily exercise of that repentance rubich is unto life never to be repented of; under a sense of these they look duly upon him whom they have pierced and mourn as one mourneth figan only son, and are in bitterness as one is in bitterness for a first-born, and often make use of the language of Job, I have beard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee wherefore I abhor myself and repent' in dust and albes. Bleffed are they that mourn in this wiv for they thall be comforted, and for fuch mourners in Zion there remaineth an everlasting rest.

I M P R O V E M E N T. First, How thankful ought the people of God to be that this rest remaineth unto them.

If reft is pleafant to the weary upon earth, and those who impart it to others, are beloved and effected by them, much more will this reft of heaven be pleafant to the believer, and much more thankful will he be to the good God who hash provided it for him.

While we meditate upon this glorious reft we fhould confider that we have naturally no right to, nor claim upon it; that it was the free, rich mercy of God in Jefus Chrift which hath procured it upon us, and that he freely beltows it upon all who will become it. Surely my breakers it we had a proper

Accept it ! Surely, my brethren, it we had a proper fense of the value and importance of this reft, if we meditated more upon it, if we had more defires after it and had any earnest of it in our hearts, we should be filled with gratitude and thankfulness to that rich grace of God which hath purchased for and bestowed upon us such an inestimable inheritance !

Secondly, What a fupport is the confideration that fuch a reft remaineth for them, to the people of God, under all the trials and diffreffes of the prefent life.

We can endure labor much more patiently if we have the prospect of speedily entering upon rest, and if this rest is a reward and consequence of our labor it will support and animate us to it: the traveller suffains with patience all the fatigues of his journey because he hopes to come to its end at last,

and the laborer toils through the day without mur-

- ·

muring, because he knows that he shall lie down to rest at night, and that the sleep of the laboring manis sweet.

And if this is the cafe with earthly things, if the prospect of a little temporary rest to the body can support us under the toils and fatigues of life, how much more shall the prospect of eternal rest and ease support us under the trials and afflictions which it is necessary for us to pass through here in order to our admittance to it: Surely, my brethren, the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with that glory which shall be revealed ! What are these light afflictions, which indeed for the present are not joyous but grievous, when we confider that they shall work out for us a far more exceeding and an eternal weight of glory? Shall we murmur against God for sending these things upon us, when they are abfolutely necessary in order to our being admitted to glory? What are they all when brought in competition with the rest which remaineth to the people of God? Shall we not endure with patience that labor which is necessary in order to our relifhing this reft? Surely we may fay, welcome pain, welcome forrow, welcome ficknefs, welcome poverty, welcome bereavements, yea welcome death itself, if this will but introduce us to rest! we may not complain of any part of the process which our divine physician fees it necessary for us to pass through in order to cleanfe us from our fpiritual difeases and prepare us for a state of everlasting health: we may not complain of God for hiding his face from us a few days and hours now, when we know that we shall dwell forever in his presence, where is fulness of joys and at his right hand where are

are pleasures evermore ! The evening of rest is approaching fast upon us, let us then endure with patience the labors of the day !

Thirdly, Let us all be folicitous not to fail of this reft !

It is a caution given us by the apostle in our context, Let us therefore fear lest a promise being lest us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it !

This caution may be applied to those who have set out in religion, and to those who are yet in their fins.

Let the first be careful of apostacy: Many a man hath set out fair in religion, hath had reafon himfelf and given caufe to others to think that he would be an ornament to his profession, who hath neverthelefs returned like the dog to his vomit, and like the fow to her wallowing in the mire: You are ready to hope that you have a promife of entering into this rest; I wust in God you have so; do not nevertheless boast now that you are girding on the harness as thou byou were putting i. off: be distrussful of the ftrength and vigor of your own refolutions; depend upon the grace of Christ and walk circumspectly; indulge not to any thing in the temper of your minds, or in the tenor of your lives, which is inconfistent with the spirit and temper of heaven: labor more and more after this spirit, and knowing that your labor shall not be in vain in the Lord, be stedfast, immovable, always abounding in his work.

An offer of the enjoyment of this glorious reft is made, my hearers, to every fon of Adam who hears of the Gospel: none is excepted from it, nor can any

any one be hindered from enjoying it but by his own perverseness and obstinacy, so that there is a promise made even to you of entering into this rest, if you will comply with the proposals of the gospel.

And now, Sirs, let me warn, let me folemnly caution you against neglecting these offers and coming short of this rest: Your imaginations cannot conceive of its greatness and glory, it is offered to you, to you even though you may have been the chief of sinners: you have long neglected and despised these offers, you have been frequently warned against doing this, I now give you one solemn warning more (perhaps it may be the last which you will ever have) and befeech you to embrace this glorious offer and to be afraid of coming short of this rest.

A dreadful alternative is proposed to you if you do not embrace this offer ! it you will not glorify the mercy of God, you must and will glority his justice! if you do not spend an happy eternity with God and the spirits of just men made perfect in heaven, you must spend a miserable one with devils and damned spirits in hell.

It is high time that you awoke out of fleep and attended to thefe things; the hour of death is approaching faft upon you; your friends, your neighbours and acquaintance die away one after another from you, and your turn will foon come and you must enter on the eternal and invisible world, be exhorted therefore to prepare for this folemn hour, to fecure an interest in the great atonement, to imbibe the spirit and live the life of heaven here, and then you shall assuredly enter upon the rest which remainetly to the people of God. D

Fourthly,

Fourthly, What a support is it under the loss of christian friends to reflect that there remainetly a rest to the people of God.

They are gone from all the labors and forrows and troubles of this life to the enjoyment of eternal peace and reft in heaven! they know no more fin nor affliction, but behold the unveiled face of the glorious Immanuel, are transformed into his likeness and reflect his glory in the celetial paradife!

Shall we then wish them to return again to the prefent forrowful state? can we defire that they should exchange the rest of heaven for the labor, the felf denial and mortification of the prefent world? or can we mourn their entrance on eternal felicity? in the arms of their Jetus they enjoy uninterrupted happiness and look down with infinite contempt upon this world and all that it affords; to wish them to return then would argue feltislines in us; let this thought support us under bereavements, let us not mourn as those who have no hope, but let us be comforted for our christian dead.

Such confolations and fupports have we, my brethren, under the loss of that eminent fervant of God and faithful minister of Jesus Christ who was taken from your head this morning! we have the fullest ground of confidence and hope that he is entered on the rest which remaineth to the people of God, and that he is reaping the rewards of a faithful servant in God's heavenly kingdom.

And may we not imagine that his gentle, placid, glorious spirit is looking down with complacency upon his beloved people at this hour! how do we know but that departed fpirits are permitted at fome times to be with and observe the state and circumstances of their surviving friends! how do we know but that their spirits have intercourse with our own, although in a way infensible to us? at least we may cheriss the pleasing imagination, for it serves to foothe and compose our grief!

I am very fensible that I am inadequate to the task of delineating the character of your beloved pastor ! neither my age nor abilities render such an employment proper for me, but you must allow me, in gratitude to the friend of my father, to the guide of my own youth, to the watchful guardian of the seminary where I had my education, and the ornament of the town where I tpent my earliest days, to attempt it, relying upon the affistance of heaven and trufting to your candor to excuse my failings.

HE sphere in which Dr. ELIOT moved was so conspicuous as that every man of discernment was capable of forming a judgment as to his abilities : his genius was not of that kind which shews much more than it possifies; it was folid, penetrating and extensive; it was adapted to foar to the heights of science, as well as to delight itself with the milder studies of the polite arts.

The best natural abilities will not shine unless they are accompanied with the advantages of education: the unformed mind, like the unpolished diamond, poss-files much more value than it appears to have: Education therefore is of the greatest confequence in order to adapt men for public ufefulnels, and this advantage was indulged to and improved by the great and good man whom we this day lament! he gave himself to his studies, he spared no pains to furnish his mind with the best knowledge human and divine, and arrived at a period in fcience which many have sought but few have attained: having feperated himself, he sought and intermeddled with all knowledge. but he was not a pedant nor so swallowed up with a fenle of his own superiority of knowledge as to fcorn imparting it to others: on the contrary, having a remakable facility in communicating his ideas, he opened the treasures of knowledge in public and private, and rejoiced to find them received with avidity and improved to advantage.

Neither the gifts of nature, the endowments of reason, nor the acquisitions of art would, in his view, have fitted him for the work of the ministry, had not his heart been feasoned with the grace of God : he early felt the impressions of ferious religion upon his mind; these were cultivated and improved by a diligent and conftant walk with God, and his path, like that of the just, shined more and more unto the perfect day ! his continual breathings after the spirit of the gospel, his constant endeavours to imitate the example of his divine redeemer, his relifi for ferious godlines, his regard for those whom he efteemed good men, his love to the house and ordinances of God, and his earnest endeavours to promote the interests of the redeemer's kingdom, were plain evidences that he loved the Lord Jefus in fincerity, and was really under the influence of the motives and principles of the religion of the gospel.

This

This love to the Lord Jesus Christ and a regard to the souls of men, we have every reason to believe induced him to enter upon the work of the ministry: this work was his delight, in it he shone with distinguissed lustre, and this formed one of the brightest parts of his amiable and illustrious character.

Some of you, my brethren, remember his early appearances in the facred defk, you remember how earneftly you coveted fuch excellent gifts and with what an unanimous confent you called him to the paftoral care of this church as a colleague with the Rev. Mr. Webb, whose praise is still in these churches.

Early deprived of his venerable affiftant, he had the weight of this large congregation laid upon his fhoulders: he was fenfible of the burthen, he fometimes groaned under it, but his regard to God and his affection for you carried him through all his difficulties, and he chearfully employed his time, his talents, his opportunities in your fervice,

His public performances were always excellent ! remember you not, my brethren, with what an elevated devotion, with what a grateful variety of pertinent expression he would address the throne of gracel at fome times, especially when celebrating the peculiar mysteries of our holy religion, he would seem as if the veil was taken from before his eyes, as if heaven and its glories were bared to his view and he wished for the wings of a dove that he might floe away and enjoy the sum of that bliss whereof he had here the earness? pertinency, fluency and fervency as evidenced plainly that he was no stranger at the throne of grace, but that he maintained a daily, intimate converse with God his maker,

His fermons were universally admired; he posfeffed a most happy talent of arranging his thoughts and expressing them in a plain. elegant, nervous manner: when a man heard him preach, he would always think that this was the very way in which he would have wilhed to express himself, had he been called to speak upon the same subject : he discovered no delign to work upon the paffions; his difcourfes were plain, pathetic and animated, without those Itrained descriptions and intemperate expressions which naufeate the ferious mind; and yet fuch was his manner as that many have observed, no man could sooner move their affections: you never knew him have a careless, inattentive auditory; every eye would be fixed upon him and every ear would be open to imbibe the ingenious and instructive truths which distilled from his lips like rain upon the mown gras, as showers that water the earth : this might be owing in a degree, perhaps, to the dignity, the gracefulnels and unaffected fervor of his delivery; that it was not wholly fo is evident from the effect of perusing the many excellent discourses which, thanks be to God, he hath left published behind him ; by which, being dead, we may ye!, as it were, hear him speak.

HE believed and preached the diffinguishing doctrines of the gospel of the grace of God, and it was his constant determination to know nothing among men save Jesus Christ and him crucified; but his sermons were never filled with furious invectives against those who differed from him : controversial subjects, as much as poffible, he avoided, thinking that they, by no means, tended to the use of edifying: he preached the plain, practical doctrines and precepts of the christian religion; he fet these before men in a convincing, affecting point of view, calculated to alarm the carelefs and quicken the tardy, without any of that bitternels of religious zeal which hath fo often difgraced the affertors and preachers of the religion of love: he was at the furtheft diftance from bigotry, and daily manifested that charity which hopeth all things and believeth all things.

Catholicism formed a principal part of Dr. Elioi's character, he was not of that narrow, fordid temper which can embrace none but those of its own party; he was properly a lover of mankind, he embraced within the arms of his christian affection all those who appeared to have an honest regard to religious truth, let their tenets or modes of worship he what they would; and poffeffed the happy talent of fecuring mens affection and effeem while he opposed their favourite notions.

His conduct in difcharging the more private duties of his ministerial function, cauled him to be reverenced by all his people; in his private vifits he maintained the dignity of the minister, while he difcovered the politeness of the gentleman and the affability of the friend: he carefully avoided stiffices on the one hand and levity on the other : his piety fat easy upon him, he discovered no offentation of this nor of his abilities, but would fteal inftruction upon us in a way fo gentle, and yet fo prevalent that we felt he had done us good e're we perceived the method he took to do fo.

He was ever ready to visit and fympathize with the fick and afflicted among his flock, and perhaps the diforder of which he died was occasioned by his performing fuch a labor of love! his counfels to the fick and the dying were always admirably adapted to their fituation, and while he mingled his tears with those of his people who were called into affliction, he would drop those pious advices which would steal infensibly upon their minds and sooth them into patience and submission.

Two events, in the life of Dr. Eliot, manifested in the plainest manner, his regard for his stock and his respect to that which he esteemed to be his duty : some years since, the corporation of Harvard College, convinced of his abilities, of his prudence and admirable spirit of government, elected him to be President of that Society, but he viewed himself to be under such obligations to his own people as that he declined the honor : he could not think of breaking off the connexion which had so long and so happily substituted between them, but expressed his earnest defire to live and die their minister.

The other event took place at the time when the common enemy of America was in possession of this town, and had compelled the inhabitants either to remain under a military government or to go out a

that à number of his parishioners, as well as many belonging to other focieties, were obliged to tarty; they joined in earnefily requessing him that he would remain and comfort them in the house of their bondage, as they supposed he might co will takey: his inclination led him to go out, his family were gone before him, and he knew that a long and to his tender mind, a tedious leparation from diem would be the confequence of his tarrying : in this dilemma he asked the advice of his friends and addreffed the throne of grace for direction ; at itruth he concluded that it was his duty to fiffer effiction with the people of God who remained in town, and in the opinion of many there was no period of his life in which he was more eminently utern): he appeared then to be note dilengaged from the world, to have clearer views of divine things and firmer confidence in the promites of the golpel that he had ever had before: he calmly endured the deprivation of the pleafures of domeffick life, with all the diffreffing folicitudes and herefups of that trying feason, and was firing in the Lord and in the jouer of bis might : he ministered to his triends and people in the town, he ministered also to his countrymen who were taken by the enemy and who were confined, amidst fickness and wounds, in prison; he was constantly employed in doing good and in comforting others with the same consolations wherewith he himfelf was comforted of God : the malice of the enemy against him was restrained, and when we entered the town we beheld him once more with joy and transport : it is not easy to describe, though we can all remember, the pleafure and fatisfaction which • that meeting gave us! But to return. Ås

As he adorned a confpicuous flation and his abilitics were univerfally known and acknowledged, he was much improved in the fervice of thefe churches, for whofe conflicution he had an inviolable reverence, and whofe interefts he conftantly labored to promote : his brethren in the ministry loved and esteemed him : his advice was univerfally fought and followed, his acquaintance contred, and his labors accepted among ministers of every denomination in this and in other countries.

Senfible that he could in no better way shew his effein for the inflitutions of our venerable anceftors, or his regard to these churches, he watched over the college with the tenderest care: he early became acquainted with its interests and circumstances, he was early employed in its bufinefs, and paid a close and particular attention to it : his mind was conftantly employed in deviling means for its prosperity, and all his interest at home and abroad was made use of to procure it benefactors : did it fuffer loffes and need affiftance, he was ready to exert himfelf to the utmost of his power to repair them, and procure fuch donations as fhould render its latter end better than it's beginning: his exertions, in common with others the governors of that fociety, to procure the prefent elegant library and apparatus after the destruction of the former, are still remembered with affection and gratinude by the friends of that fociety! it is well known that he chearfully expended his time and his labor in order to promote its profperity.

Intrusted by the fociety erected for that purpose in Great Britain, he labored indefatigably to promote pains to find out fultable laborers to fend out into this part of the Lord's harvest, and they are ready to testify to the solicitude which he manifested for their comfort as well as his watchful care over the interest of the charity.

It was an observable part of the character of this great and good man, that whenever he was employed in public business of any kind, he exerted himself with the same diligence, care and industry as if it had been his own t honess at heart and active in disposition, he was not state of the business but fervent in spirit serving the Lora ! possible of inviolable, incorruprible integrity, his triends and the public felt their interests to be as fafe in his hands as in their own.

It would be injuffice to his character not to declare that he always withed well to the interests of his country, and was a real, heatty friend to the freedom, the peace and independence of America.

His knowledge of mankind, and his intimate acquaintance with the ruling principles of human conduct, rendered him not only ufeful but agreeable: his acquaintance was large, all of whom valued and effeemed him with tendernefs and refpect: ftrangers who have been introduced to him, were always ready to acknowledge that he honored his profeffion and country: tew men have acted their part fo well upon the human ftage, and fewer ftill have conciliated fuch univerfal effeem.

But, in the intimacies of private friendship and felect conversation, he shone with peculiar lustre : a warm heart, an heart formed for all the pleasures and delivering of this great halm of human life confed.

him to relifh the enjoyments of friendship to the highest degree: he had no referves with his friends, he treated them with an unconstrained freedom, he entered into their views, he made their joys and forrows his own, and lived with them in fuch a nanner as to lead them to view their connexion with him as the greatest happiness and enjoyment of their lives.

But let us change the fcene a little and view his conduct and behaviour in his family relations; and here he manifested that he was of the character of a golpel bishop, who must rule his own house well: In his conduct to Mrs. Eliot he ever discovered a manly tendernels and a warm affection : he always the wed an earnest folicitude for the everlasting welfare of his children, he educated them in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and spared no expence nor felf-denial to make them useful and happy in the world: his affection was returned by his children, and at the fame time they did him reverence! May God Almighty blefs them all! may they remember the many pious and uleful admonitions which they have received at the hands of their tables ! may those especially who are in, and who are defigued for the work of the ministry, follow him as he followed Chrift, and may a double fpirit of Elijah descend and rest on these Elishas !

This was the character of Dr. Eliot while he lived, and he died in a manner becoming fuch a life! his fun fet without a cloud! from his first feizure he viewed his difeate as mortal: he fet his houte in order, he gave his directions and advices to his children and friends, with that firmnels of mind which was ever a diffinguilhing part of his character, and which arofe not from natural but from chriftian and gracious principles ! in his difcourfes upon his death bed, he always expressed an unshaken faith in those glorious doctrines of the grace of God which he had preached unto others, and his firm, yet humble confidence in the merits of the redeemer ! refigned to the will of God, nay eager after his prefence and the enjoyment of his glory, he would frequently breathe out the pious ejaculation, come Lord Jefus, come quickly, why are thy chariot wheels fo long in coming ? and with a folemn meffage to his beloved people on his lips, he expired !

Thus lived and thus died the great and the good Dr. Eliot, a man univerfally efteemed and lamented! Iurely we may call after him, my father, my father, the chariots of Ifrael and the horfemen thereof ! and cry, help Lord, for the godly man ceafeth, the faithful fait from among the children of men.]

And now, my friends and brethren of this fociety, you will give me leave to urge upon you those confiderations which the impressions made upon your minds by the recent death of your beloved minister, have rendered immediately proper and may therefore be especially useful; I may not fail to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance to shew kindness and tenderness to the large and worthy family of your deceased pastor! he is gone from you forever, and you are forrowing most of all this day that you shall fee his face no more 1 but he hath left

and to you he hath committed them, preferve the facred deposit and manifest your regard for the dead by your kindness to the living ! *

But I have fomething of yet more importance to mention to you, fomething which were your beloved paltor now to appear before you clad in the dread habiliments of the grave, he would urge upon you with infinitely more zeal and earnelinefs, and that is, that you remember how you have received and beard and improve aright, and I am confirmed in this by the message which he, this morning, lett for me to deliver to you, tell my people, faid the expiring faint, that I have ever preached to them the pure and the genuine doctrines of the gespel, and they are my support, my only support and comfort at this moment I ----- See, my brethren, how a christian can die, and fee the warmth of affection which your minister had for you, for these were the last words which ever he spake ! indeed, there never was a people favoured with a kinder friend in a pattor than you have been; you have never wanted ferious and faithful warnings, strong and fervent exhortations to quicken you to feek after that reft which remaineth to the people of God: with what earnestnels have you heard your departed minister, from this very place, plead with you to attend to the things which concern your everlasting peace before they are forever hidden from your eyes I how has he poured out out his very foul before you and travailed it dirth again till Christ were formed in you! it is to be leared that he hath pleaded in vain with many of you, that their infensibility to the great things of God and religion hath drawn many a bitter ligh, many a painful tear from him, when none were. wirneffes but God and his own foul : be is gone where he will be troubled to more with your unbelief and hardness of heart, but do you mean that all his faithful labors, warnings and reproofs should be lost upon you ? you parted with your minister in love and affection, do you mean to meet him as your accufer at the bar of Christ? for well as he loved you, if you do not attend to that religion which he fo earnestly inculcated upon you, he will be a fwift witness against you in that day I and can you endure the thought of this ! you find it hard parting with him now, how much harder will it be to fee him mounting to the realms of glory, while you feel yourfelves finking into the bottomless pit ! These confiderations are not laid before you to move your affections only, but in order that the death of your minister may be fo improved by you as to do you good, that you may remember the pious warnings and instructions which you have for often heard at his mouth and feen in his example, both in public and private, that you may, like him, die the death of the righteous, and your latter end may be like his, that thus you may, with him, enjoy the rest which remainsth to the people of God.

Let christians remember, for their comfort, that the time is short, that they are hastening to the glorious rest upon which we have been meditating, that their separation

separation from their beloved minister will be very short ! let them anticipate the joy which they shall feel when they join the general affembly and church of the first born on high, then again to see and embrace him without any of those lets or incumbrances which prevented their perfect communion and fellowship in the present life; oh, my brethren, methinks I see your beloved paftor coming from the gates of the new Jerusalem, with a crown of righteousnels upon his head, with a golden harp in his hand, to hail your approach to ineffable felicity, to congratulate your entrance upon the paradife of God! methinks I hear the rapturous falutations which he gives his children in Chrift, and behold with what pleafure he piefents them to the great head of the church, faying. here am I and the children which thou hast graciously given me !--- but I drop the curtain, it is not for mortal eyes to pry into the bowers of Paradife! we must wait till this mortal shall have put on immortality, and this corruptible put on incorruption !

Finally, brethren, may this folemn and affecting difpenfation be fanctified to the bereaved family and flock, to our college to this town, and to all the churches of God! may we find that meat cometh out of the eater and fweetnefs out of the flrong, that this precious fervant of Chrift did more good and brought more home to God in his death than in his whole. life, and that we are all quickned hereby to feek after the reft which remaineth to the people of God I

AMEN.
