This may be roughly true in the majority of instances; but there is no such invariable, certain indication; the scope is much broader and more intangible. There has also sometimes been an inclination on the part of the bar to argue as if every Prior Self-Contradiction involved a lie and illustrated the maxim, 'Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus' (ante, § 1008); but this also is without foundation; the discrediting effect of a Prior Self-Contradiction is independent of whether or not the jury believe it to involve a conscious lie.[2]

(2) The process of using a Self-Contradiction to show error is in one respect weaker, in another respect stronger, than the preceding process of using Contradiction by other witnesses. It is weaker, in that the proof of the specific error can never be as positive as is possible by the other mode.[3] For example, if five credible witnesses testify that the assailant had a scar upon his face, contradicting the first witness, a belief in his present error is more readily

§ 1017. [1] So, too, Best, Evidence, § 478.

[2] 1872, Craig v. Rohrer, 63 Ill. 326.

[3] See the opinion of Holmes, J., in Gertz v. Fitchburg R. Co., 137 Mass. 77, quoted post, § 1109.

From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), §§ 314-323.

reached than if a single former contradictory statement of his own is brought forward; in the latter case we are by no means compelled to believe that his statement on the stand is erroneous. On the other hand, in the present mode, the process of discrediting is in its chief aim incomparably stronger, because it always shows that the witness has made some sort of a mistake at some time, and thus demonstrates a capacity to make errors. In other words, both of his statements cannot be correct; one of the two must be incorrect; therefore, he shows a capacity to err. It is the repugnancy of the two that is fatal:

Ante 1727, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 147, 150: "Another thing that derogates from the credit of a witness is, if upon oath he affirmed directly contrary to what he asserts; . . . and this takes from the witness all credibility, inasmuch as contraries cannot be true. . . . Now that which sets aside his credit and overthrows his testimony is . . . the repugnancy of his evidence; . . . if what he says be contradictory, that removes him from all credit; for things totally opposite cannot receive belief from the attestation of any man."

Thus, the process of discrediting by Prior Self-Contradiction is on the whole the more effective. The capacity to err invariably appears, from the very fact of self-contradiction; while in the other process it does not appear unless we believe the opposing witnesses' assertions. Logically, therefore, the present process is more direct and effective, because self-operative. Practically, however, it may fall to the same level as the other, if the utterance of the self-contradiction is denied by the witness and is obliged to be evidenced by calling other witnesses; for them it requires (as in the other process) that we first believe the other witnesses.[4] Yet, even then, in compensation, it may acquire a double force, for if we believe the other witnesses, the first witness has twice erred and perhaps twice falsified, — once, in his self-contradiction, and once again in denying that he uttered it.[5]

§ 1018. Same: not admitted as Substantive Testimony, nor excluded as Hearsay. (a) Since, in the words of Chief Baron Gilbert (ante, § 1017), it is "the repugnancy of his evidence" that discredits him, obviously the Prior Self-Contradiction is not used assertively; i.e. we are not asked to believe his prior statement as testimony, and we do not have to choose between the two (as we do choose in the case of ordinary Contradictions by other witnesses). We simply set the two against each other, perceive that both cannot be correct, and immediately conclude that he has erred in one or the other, — but without determining which one. It is the repugnancy and inconsistency that demonstrates his error, and not the superior credibility of the prior statement. Thus, we do not necessarily accept his former statement as replacing his present one; the one merely neutralizes the other as a trustworthy one. In short, the prior statement is not primarily hearsay, because it is not offered assertively, i.e. not testimonially. The Hearsay Rule (post, § 1362) simply forbids the use of extrajudicial utterances as credible testi-

[4] This becomes important under Mr. J. Cooley's theory of Corroboration (post, § 1126).

[5] This is the chief reason for disputing the policy of the rule in the Queen's Case, about showing the writing to the witness (post, § 1260).

monial assertions; the prior contradiction is not offered as a testimonial assertion to be relied upon. It follows, therefore, that the use of Prior Self-Contradictions to discredit is not obnoxious to the Hearsay Rule.[1]

(b) It does not follow, however, that Prior Self-Contradictions, when admitted, are to be treated as having no affirmative testimonial value, and that any such credit is to be strictly denied them in the mind of the tribunal. The only ground for doing so would be the Hearsay rule. But the theory of the Hearsay rule is that an extrajudicial statement is rejected because it was made out of Court by an absent person not subject to cross-examination (post, § 1362). Here, however, by hypothesis the witness is present and subject to cross-examination. There is ample opportunity to test him as to the basis for his former statement. The whole purpose of the Hearsay rule has been already satisfied. Hence there is nothing to prevent the tribunal from giving such testimonial credit to the extrajudicial statement as it may seem to deserve.

The contrary view, however, is the orthodox one.[2] It is universally maintained by the Courts that Prior Self-Contradictions are not to be treated as having any substantive or independent testimonial value:[3]

§ 1018. [1] This was not always understood, and though we find this sort of evidence frequently used in the 1700s (e.g. 1679, Langhorn's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 451, 462, 467; Wakeman's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 653; 1699, Spencer Cowper's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1154, 1179; 1744, Heath's Trial, 18 How. St. Tr. 58, 77; 1761, Wright v. Littler, 3 Burr. 1244, 1255), yet the particular objection made to it (in the last two cases, for example) seems to have rested on a feeling that the Hearsay Rule was being infringed. Mr. Starkie, however, clearly pointed out the groundlessness of this notion (1824, Starkie, Evidence, I, 206). Today it is well understood that the Hearsay Rule interposes no obstacle: 1861, State v. Mulholland, 16 La. An. 377; 1867, State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 488; 1882, Tabor v. Judd, 62 N. H. 292, semble; and many of the cases cited in the next note infra. A good example may be seen, in Robinson v. Blakely, 4 Rich. 589 (1851), of a statement, inadmissible when offered merely as hearsay, becoming admissible when the opponent had put the declarant on the stand and thus laid him open to contradiction by the utterance before inadmissible.

[2] The orthodox view was approved in the first edition of this Treatise. Further reflection, however, has shown the present writer that the natural and correct solution is the one set forth in the text above. Compare the theory of Admissions (post, § 1048).

[3] Accord: ENGLAND: 1908, Dibble's Case, 1 Cr. App. 155 (from a hostile witness cross-examined by the calling party).

CANADA: 1916, R. v. Duckworth, 31 D. L. R. 570, Ont. (former testimony at the inquest).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1916, Southern R. Co. v. Gray, 241 U. S. 333, 36 Sup. 558; California: 1917, Albert v. McKay & Co., 174 Cal. 451, 163 Pac. 666; Delaware: 1838, Rash v. Purnel, 2 Harringt. 448, 457; Georgia: 1896, Ficken v. State, 97 Ga. 813, 25 S. E. 925; 1898, Bush E. L. & P. Co. v. Wells, 103 Ga. 512, 30 S. E. 533; 1906, Perdue v. State, 126 Ga. 112, 54 S. E. 820; Illinois: 1884, Moore v. People, 108 Ill. 487; 1889, Ritter v. People, 130 Ill. 255, 260, 22 N. E. 605 (former testimony at the coroner's inquest); 1892, Purdy v. People, 140 Ill. 46, 52, 29 N. E. 700 (same); Indiana: 1881, Davis v. Hardy, 76 Ind. 280; 1888, Conway v. State, 118 Ind. 482, 488, 21 N. E. 285; 1921, Hogan v. State, — Ind. —, 133 N. E. 1 (keeping liquor illegally); Kentucky: 1898, Jones v. Com., — Ky. —, 46 S. W. 217; 1900, Nussbaum v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 57 S. W. 249; 1902, Mullins v. Com., — Ky. —, 67 S. W. 824; 1902, Ashcraft v. Com., — Ky. —, 68 S. W. 847; 1904, Fletcher v. Com., — Ky. —, 83 S. W. 588; 1905, Whitt v. Com., — Ky. —, 84 S. W. 340; 1920, Brown v. Com., 188 Ky. 814, 224 S. W. 362; Louisiana: 1897, State v. Reed, 49 La. An. 704, 21 So. 732; Maine: 1872, State v. Reed, 60 Me. 553; Maryland: 1807, DeSobry v. DeLaistre, 2 H. & J. 220; 1875, Mason v. Poulson, 43 Md. 161, 176; Massachusetts: 1852, Com. v. Starkweather, 10 Cush. 60; 1890, Francis v. Rosa, 151 Mass. 535, 24 N. E. 1024; 1899, Manning v. Carberry, 172 Mass. 432, 52 N. E. 521; 1899, Harriman v. R. Co., 173 Mass. 28, 53 N. E. 156; 1904, McDonald v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 186 Mass. 474, 72 N. E. 55; 1905, Donaldson v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. Co., 188 Mass. 484, 74 N. E. 915; Michigan: 1878, Howard v. Patrick, 1847, ALLEN, J., in Charlton v. Unis, 4 Gratt. 60: "Such testimony of inconsistent statements is admissible only for the purpose of impeaching the credit of the witness, but cannot be received as evidence of any fact touching the issue to be tried; for that would be to substitute the statements of a witness, generally when not on oath, as evidence between the parties, for his evidence given under the saction of an oath upon the trial."

1855, SHAW, C. J., in Gould v. Norfolk Lead Co., 9 Cush. 346: "It is no evidence whatever that the facts are as he formerly stated them; and, though appeals are sometimes made to a jury that it is so, it is the province of the Court to inform them that it is not so."

But this theoretical and artificial nicety is overworked by some Courts. It has influenced them in reaching the rule forbidding impeachment of one's own witness by self-contradiction (ante, § 904); and the opinions are full of directions to trial Courts to tell the jurors to use their mental force to ignore in such self-contradicting assertions that testimonial value which their natural reasoning persists in seeing there.

§ 1019. Principle of Auxiliary Policy; Rules for avoiding Unfair Surprise and Confusion of Issues. Reasons of Auxiliary Policy apply to limit the present process of proving error as they do to the preceding one (ante, § 1002). In addition to the inferior probative value of errors upon distant and unconnected points, there obtain here, as there, the two strong considerations of Unfair Surprise and Confusion of Issues. The reasons are phrased by the authorities in almost the same language and are treated as applying equally to both modes of impeachment:

1849, WOODS, J., in Seavy v. Dearborn, 19 N. H. 356: "A question not otherwise material or proper does not become so by force of any purpose of the examining party to make use of it to discredit the witness by contradicting his answers to it. The reason

38 Mich. 795, 804; 1883, Brown v. Dean, 52 Mich. 267, 269, 17 N. W. 837; 1887, Catlin v. R. Co., 66 Mich. 358, 364, 33 N. W. 515; 1892, Tisman v. District, 90 Mich. 510, 513, 5 N. W. 549; 1897, Eno v. Allen, 113 Mich. 399, 71 N. W. 842; 1904, People v. Miner, 138 Mich. 290, 101 N. W. 536; Minnesota: 1867, State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 488; Mississippi: 1905, Simms v. Forbes, 86 Miss. 412, 38 So. 546; Missouri: 1877, Peck v. Ritchey, 66 Mo. 119; 1879, State v. Kilgore, 70 Mo. 558, semble; 1880, State v. Hughes, 71 Mo. 635; 1896, State v. Baker, 136 Mo. 74, 37 S. W. 810; Nebraska: 1899, Zimmerman v. Bank, 59 Nebr. 23, 80 N. W. 54; New Jersey: 1916, State v. Brunet, 88 N. J. L. 414, 97 Atl. 39 (instruction held erroneous); New York: 1871, Sloan v. R. Co., 45 N. Y. 127; North Carolina: 1914, Medlin v. County Board, 167 N. C. 239, 83 S. E. 483, Walker, J., diss. (here, a very pretty quibble, turning on the exquisite point that a witness' self-contradiction would not be "substantive evidence", but a party's admissions would be, on the theory of § 1048, n. 4, post); North Dakota: 1903, Balding v. Andrews, 12 N. D. 267, 96 N. W. 305; Ohio: 1829, Hand v. Elvira, 1 Gilp. 60; 1884, Kent v. State, 42 Oh. St. 433; Oklahoma: 1917, Thomas v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 414, 164 Pac. 995; Pennsylvania: 1895, Dampman v. R. Co., 166 Pa. 520, 31 Atl. 244; 1908, Com. v. Deitrick, 221 Pa. 7, 70 Atl. 275, semble; Texas: 1894, Armstrong v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 417, 421, 26 S. W. 829; 1897, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Johnson, 90 Tex. 304, 38 S. W. 520; Utah: 1912, State v. Chynoweth, — Utah —, 126 Pac. 276; Vermont: 1874, Law v. Fairfield, 46 Vt. 431; Wisconsin: 1879, Warder v. Fisher, 48 Wis. 344, 4 N. W. 470; 1889, Heddles v. R. Co., 74 Wis. 251, 42 N. W. 251, 76 Wis. 232, 45 N. W. 308.

Contra: 1921, Thomas v. State, 206 Ala. 416, 90 So. 295 (homicide; a prior self-contradictory statement of a witness for the prosecution having been allowed, held that the party "has the right to argue to the jury any facts and circumstances legitimately tending to show that they should believe the variant or contradictory evidence instead of said witness").

assigned by writers for these rules are that a contrary course of proceedings would introduce issues in interminable numbers and perplex and harass litigants in questions which do concern their cause."

1884, ELLIOTT, C. J., in Seller v. Jenkins, 97 Ind. 436: "The Courts do not put the rule [that a witness cannot be impeached upon collateral matters] on the ground that the nearer the false statement is to the main issue, the stronger is its effect upon the testimony of the witness. It is put upon an entirely different ground. By one Court it is put upon the ground that the time of the Court is too limited to permit collateral inquiries. An older and a stronger reason is . . . that such a practice would confuse the jury by an interminable multiplication of issues."

But these two considerations do not bear upon the present sort of evidence in precisely the same way as upon the preceding sort.

(a) Take, first, Confusion of Issues. The force of this objection is clear. But what remedy or limitation does it suggest? We cannot here say, as we could in dealing with Contradictions by outside testimony (ante, § 1002), that only such evidence shall be admitted as would have been otherwise admissible in any case; for no Prior Self-Contradictions would otherwise have been admissible. In the process of contradicting by extrinsic testimony, it was easy to draw the line by admitting only such testimony as would otherwise have been admissible, and thus the objection of Confusion of Issues was entirely obviated. In the present case, no such line is dictated by the logic of the situation. As a matter of history, however, Courts have always drawn the same line for both classes of evidence. Some line had to be drawn, and it was simpler to draw the same line for both. Its definition, and the application of it, are later examined (post, §§ 1020–1023).

(b) Next, the consideration of Surprise. It was seen, in dealing with Contradiction by extrinsic testimony (ante, § 1002), to expect the witness or his party to be prepared to refute alleged errors of his ceases to be unfair when the subject of the error is concerned with the matter in litigation or the qualifications of the witness; for upon such subjects they ought in any case to have come prepared. Thus the line is naturally drawn between Contradictions by other witnesses upon such subjects and Contradictions upon collateral subjects. But in the present class of evidence — Self-Contradictions — it is of no value to draw such a line. It is just as difficult to come prepared upon alleged Self-Contradictions dealing with the subject of litigation as upon other Self-Contradictions. For example, if after a witness has left the stand, the opponent offers (by a false witness) to prove that he formerly declared the assailant to be a tall man, whereas now he testifies that he was a short man, it is obviously impossible for any one but a prophet to have foreknown that the alleged self-contradiction would deal with this subject. By hypothesis, the witness has never made such an assertion and can so testify; but how can he have known until now what it is that he is to disprove? The fact that the matter is relevant to the case could not have warned him of the precise topic, time, and place of the fabricated remark. Thus, the line of distinction which naturally suggested itself to prevent surprise in the case of Contradiction by extrinsic testimony has no bearing in preventing surprise in the case of Prior Self-Contradictions.

Another method of obviating surprise must be sought. It is this, as followed by nearly every Court to-day: The witness must be asked in advance — i.e. on cross-examination and before any other testimony to the Prior Self-Contradiction is offered — whether he made the contradictory statement which it is desired to prove. In this way he receives ample warning, and, if the alleged contradiction is a mere fabrication of the impeaching party, the other has ample time to prepare to disprove it, or to explain it away if it was made. Thus, the method of obviating the objection of Surprise is, not to draw a line between collateral and other matters, but to require that express warning be given to the opposing witness before any attempt is made to prove the alleged Self-Contradiction. This rule is later examined (post, §§ 1025–1038).

Surveying, then, the scope of these two objections, Confusion of Issues and Surprise, as applied to Contradictions by extrinsic testimony (ante, § 1000) and to Self-Contradictions (the present subject), it is seen that the objections themselves are of the same nature in both classes; that the rules naturally resorted to for obviating the objections are not necessarily the same; that for the former class of evidence a single rule suffices to obviate both objections — the rule excluding Contradictions on Collateral Matters (ante, § 1002); but that for the present class two rules are required, one excluding Self-Contradictions on Collateral Matters (thus obviating the objection of Confusion of Issues), the other requiring a Preliminary Warning (thus obviating the objection of Surprise). These two main rules may now be taken up in order.

2. Collateral Matters Excluded

§ 1020. Test of Collateralness. It has just been noticed that the test of collateralness is in fact, though not in logical necessity, the same for this class of evidence as for the preceding one, i.e. Contradiction by extrinsic testimony (ante, § 1003).

Here, as there, most Courts content themselves with invoking the term "collateral" as the test. Others employ the terms "material" or "relevant" as indicating the matters that may be the subject of a Prior Self-Contradiction. The difficulty with all these terms is that without further definition they are too indefinite to be useful. When we seek to learn what "collateral" means, we are obliged either to define further — in which case it is a mere epithet, not a legal test — or to illustrate by specific instances — in which case we are left to the idiosyncrasies of individual opinion.

The only test in vogue that has the qualities of a true test — definiteness, concreteness, and ease of application — is that laid down in Attorney-General v. Hitchcock: Could the fact, as to which the prior self-contradiction is predicated, have been shown in evidence for any purpose independently of the self-contradiction?

1847, Attorney-General v. Hitchcock, 1 Exch. 99. POLLOCK, C. B.: "My view has always been that the test whether the matter is collateral or not is this: If the answer of a witness is a matter which you would be allowed on your part to prove in evidence, if it have such a connection with the issue that you would be allowed to give in evidence, then it is a matter on which you may contradict him. . . . I think the expression 'as to any matters connected with the subject of inquiry' is far too vague and loose to be the foundation of any judicial decision. And I may say I am not all prepared to adopt the proposition in those general terms, that a witness may be contradicted as to anything he denies having said, provided it be in any way connected with the subject before the jury. It must be connected with the issue as a matter capable of being distinctly given in evidence, or it must be so far connected with it as to be a matter which, if answered in a particular way, would contradict a part of the witness' testimony; and if it is neither the one nor the other of these, it is collateral to, though in some sense it may be considered as connected with, the subject of the inquiry. A distinction should be observed between those matters which may be given in evidence by way of contradiction as directly affecting the story of the witness touching the issue before the jury, and those matters which affect the motives, temper, and character of the witness, not with respect to his credit, but with reference to his feelings towards one party or the other. It is certainly allowable to ask a witness in what manner he stands affected toward the opposite party in the cause, and whether he does not stand in such a relation to that person as is likely to affect him and prevent him from having an unprejudiced state of mind, and whether he has not used expressions importing that he would be revenged on some one or that he would give such evidence as might dispose of the cause in one way or the other. If he denies that, you may give evidence as to what he said, — not with the view of having a direct effect on the issue, but to show what is the state of mind of that witness in order that the jury may exercise their opinion as to how far he is to be believed. But those cases, where you may show the condition of a witness or his connection with either of the parties, are not to be confounded with other cases where it is proposed to contradict a witness on some matter unconnected with the question at issue." ALDERSON, B.: "The question is this, Can you ask a witness as to what he is supposed to have said on a previous occasion? You may ask him as to any fact material to the issue, and if he denies it you may prove that fact, as you are at liberty to prove any fact material to the issue. . . . The witness may also be asked as to his state of equal mind or impartiality between the two contending parties, — questions which would have a tendency to show that the whole of his statement is to be taken with a qualification, and that such a statement ought really to be laid out of the case for want of impartiality; [and these answers may be contradicted]. . . . Such, again, is the case of an offer of a bribe by a witness to another person, or the offer of a bribe accepted by a witness from another person; the circumstance of a witness having offered or accepted a bribe shows that he is not equal and impartial. . . . But with these exceptions I am not aware that you can with propriety permit a witness to be examined first and contradicted afterwards on a point which is merely and purely collateral."

This rule of Attorney-General v. Hitchcock is expressly accepted in only a few of the United States.[1]

Moreover, the rule is often misunderstood. Courts are found phrasing the test of admissibility in this way: "Would the cross-examining party be entitled to prove it as a part of his case, tending to establish his plea?",[2] or "Whether the question, the answer to which is proposed to be contradicted, would be admissible if proposed by the party calling him?"[3] These are accurate enough as far as they go; but they omit to provide for an important class of matter clearly admissible, namely, facts relating to the bias, corruption, or other specific deficiencies of the witness. It is not merely matters which are a "part of the case" that may be the subject of a self-contradiction, but any matter which would have been otherwise admissible in evidence. The simple test is (in the language of Chief Baron Pollock) whether it concerns "a matter which you would be allowed on your part to prove in evidence" independently of the self-contradiction, — i.e. if the witness had said nothing on the subject.

§ 1020. [1] See the cases cited post, § 1021.
[2] 1870, Hildeburn v. Curran, 65 Pa. 63; 1896, Williams v. State, 73 Miss. 820, 19 So. 826.

It may be added that there is sometimes found an erroneous notion (precisely similar to that described already as obtaining sometimes for Contradiction by extrinsic testimony) that nothing said on the direct examination can be collateral and therefore a Self-Contradiction of anything said on the direct examination is admissible.[4] The history of this misunderstanding, and the reason why it is erroneous, have already been explained (ante, § 1007). The error has been frequently repudiated by other Courts.[5]

§ 1021. Two Classes of Facts not Collateral; (1) Facts relevant to the Issue. In applying the foregoing test, it is obvious that there are two classes of facts of which evidence would have been admissible independently of the self-contradiction: (1) facts relevant to some issue in the case under the pleadings; (2) facts admissible to discredit the witness as to bias, corruption, or the like.

(1) Facts relevant to some issue in the case. Here the circumstances of each separate case determine the admissibility; and no general principle can be laid down. Most rulings are useless as precedents.[1]

[3] 1859, Combs v. Winchester, 39 N. H. 16; said here to be "substantially the rule" of Attorney-General v. Hitchcook.

[4] 1864, Forde's Case, 16 Gratt. 557, semble ("It does not fall within the reason assigned, that the answer of a witness to collateral matter cannot be contradicted by the party asking it because it would be unjust to expect the witness to come prepared to prove the truth of every collateral statement; as he has embodied it himself in his own narrative of the transactions, he must be prepared to sustain it"); 1850, State v. Sargent, 32 Me. 429; 1864, Forde's Case, 16 Gratt. 556, semble; 1878, Furst v. R. Co., 72 N. Y. 544, semble.

[5] 1857, Dillon v. Bell, 9 Ind. 320: 1884, Seller v. Jenkins, 97 Ind. 437; 1896, Williams v. State, 73 Miss. 820, 19 So. 826.

§ 1021. [1] The following list does not include all the rulings in which the doctrine of "collateralness" has been incidentally sanctioned; it is everywhere conceded to be the law; compare also the cases and statutes cited ante, § 1004:

ENGLAND: 1827, Meagoe v. Simmons, 3 C. & P. 75 (usury; the consideration for a former bill discounted between the same parties at the same time); 1829, R. v. Phillips, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 105 (in using former utterings of forged notes to show guilty knowledge, the defendant's statements at the time of former uttering could not be contradicted by his statements "at a time collateral to a former uttering", "because the prisoner could not be prepared to answer or explain evidence of that description"); 1847, R. v. White, 2 Cox Cr. 192; 1853, R. v. Rorke, 6 Cox Cr. 196 (former testimony on a purely collateral point, admitted: Lefroy, C. J.: "No matter whether the question is relevant or irrelevant to the present issue, it goes to the inconsistency of her evidence on the two trials"; but refusing to make the ruling a precedent); 1862, Fowkes v. Ins. Co., 3 F. & F. 443 (denial by a medical examiner that he had before declared the life bad which he now testified he had accepted; allowed).

CANADA: 1874, Hamilton v. Holder, 15 N. Br. 223; 1874, McCulloch v. Ins. Co., 34 U. C. Q. B. 383, 387, and 32 U. C. Q. B. 614 (action on a fire policy; the plaintiff on cross-examination denied that he had told the defendant's agent that he had not been burned out before; contradiction excluded).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1806, Lamalere v. Caze, 1 Wash. C. C. 413 ("pertinent to the cause"; "relative to the cause"); 1840, U. S. v. Dickinson, 2 McLean 330; 1905, Dillard v. U. S., 141 Fed. 303, 310, 72 C. C. A. 451 (rule of Attorney-General v. Hitchcock applied); Alabama: 1848, Moore v. Jones, 13 Ala. 303; 1853, Ortez v. Jewett, 23 Ala. 663; 1859, Blakey's Heirs v. Blakey's Ex'x, 33 Ala. 618; 1879, Washington v. State, 63 Ala. 192; 1895, Orr v. State, 107 Ala. 35, 18 So. 142; 1921, Alabama C. G. & A. R. Co. v. Kyle, 204 Ala. 597, 87 So. 191 (execution of a note);
Arkansas: 1855, Atkins v. State, 16 Ark. 587; Dig. 1919, § 4187 (cited ante, § 923, ignores this limitation); 1909, Sellers v. State, 93 Ark. 313, 124 S. W. 770 (example of incorrect ruling);
California: 1852, McDaniel v. Baca, 2 Cal. 338; 1872, People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 458 (place of a homicide; admitted); 1898, Trabing v. N. & I. Co., 121 Cal. 137, 53 Pac. 644; 1905, Western Union O. Co. v. Newlove, 145 Cal. 772, 79 Pac. 542 (boundary);
Colorado: 1897, Askew v. People, 23 Colo. 446, 48 Pac. 524; 1913, Mitsunaga v. People, 54 Colo. 102, 129 Pac. 241;
Florida: 1901, Myers v. State, 43 Fla. 200, 31 So. 275;
Georgia: Code 1910, § 5881, P. C. § 1052 (allowable "as to matters relevant to his testimony and to the case"); 1899, Hudgins v. Bloodworth, 109 Ga. 197, 34 S. E. 364;
Illinois: 1884, Moore v. People, 108 Ill. 486;
Indiana: 1820, Shields v. Cunningham, 1 Blackf. 87 ("irrelevant and immaterial"); 1843, McIntire v. Young, 6 Ind. 497 (slander; that the witness proving the utterance did not know the plaintiff at the time, and held the same views as those uttered by defendant; excluded); 1853, Lawrence v. Lanning, 4 Ind. 194; 1869, Fogleman v. State, 32 Ind. 145; 1873, Burdick v. Hunt, 43 Ind. 388; 1883, Brown v. Owen, 94 Ind. 36; 1884, Seller v. Jenkins, 97 Ind. 434; 1885, Welch v. State, 104 Ind. 351, 3 N. E. 850; 1889, Staser v. Hogan, 120 Ind. 220, 21 N. E. 911, 22 N. E. 990 (in these two cases the misunderstood test is used: "Would the cross-examining party be entitled to prove it as a part of his case tending to establish his plea?"); 1895, Blough v. Parry, 144 Ind. 463, 40 N. E. 70; 1906, Swygart v. Willard, 166 Ind. 25, 76 N. E. 755 (intoxication of testator); 1920, Bush v. State, 189 Ind. 467, 128 N. E. 443;
Iowa: 1844, Wau-kon-chaw-neek-kaw v. U. S., 1 Morris 337; 1857, Cokely v. State, 4 Ia. 480; 1859, State v. Ruhl, 8 Ia. 451; 1921, McDonald v. Yellow Taxicab Co., 192 Ia. 1183, 184 N. W. 291 (automobile injury);
Kansas: 1907, State v. Sweeny, 75 Kan. 265, 88 Pac. 1078 (rule of Attorney-General v. Hitchcock applied);
Kentucky: 1859, Champ v. Com., 2 Metc. 23; 1878, Kennedy v. Com., 14 Bush 357; 1882, Loving v. Com., 80 Ky. 511; 1884, Crittenden v. Com., 82 Ky. 167; 1889, Com. v. Hourigan, 89 Ky. 311, 12 S. W. 550; 1896, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Webb, 99 Ky. 332, 35 S. W. 1117, 1121; 1921, Duke v. Com., 191 Ky. 138, 229 S. W. 122 (murder);
Louisiana: 1896, State v. Scott, 48 La. An. 1418, 20 So. 909; 1896, State v. Conerly, 48 La. An. 1561, 21 So. 192; 1905, State v. Rogers, 115 La. 164, 38 So. 952; 1910, State v. Fletcher, 127 La. 602, 53 So. 877; 1921, State v. Harris, 150 La. 214, 90 So. 574 (extortion and forgery);
Maine: 1831, Ware v. Ware, 8 Greenl. 53 ("the true line of distinction is that which has been established between those questions which are merely collateral and have no immediate connection with the cause and those which intimately relate to the subject of the inquiry"); 1857, Brackett v. Weeks, 43 Me. 291; 1870, State v. Kingsbury, 58 Me. 243; 1872, Bell v. Woodman, 60 Me. 466, 468; 1874, State v. Benner, 64 Me. 287; Davis v. Roby, 64 Me. 429;
Maryland: 1913, Capital Traction Co. v. Contner, 120 Md. 78, 87 Atl. 904 (motorman's admission that he lost control of his car, held not collateral);
Massachusetts: Two points are here to be noted: (1) The doctrine of the modern rulings is that the trial Judge has discretion to determine whether matter is collateral and even to allow a cross-examination upon matters concededly collateral; hence, most of such rulings simply decide that the discretion below was not improperly exercised in admitting or excluding; (2) Self-contradictions of one's own witness (ante, § 905) are admitted by virtue of a statute. P. S. c. 169, § 22, Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 23; how far the discretion-doctrine affects this statutory evidence does not appear: 1843, Brockett v. Bartholomew, 6 Metc. 396; 1843, Hathaway v. Crocker, 7 Metc. 264; 1857, Benjamin v. Wheeler, 8 Gray 413; 1857, Lane v. Bryant, 9 Gray 247 (a statement as to the witness' former hearsay and inadmissible remarks, excluded); 1861, Fletcher v. R. Co., 1 All. 13 (same); 1863, Couillard v. Duncan, 6 All. 440 (fraudulent transfer; creditor's inconsistent statement of the amount of the debt; admitted); 1865, Prescott v. Ward, 10 All. 205, 208 (discretion rule); 1866, Marsh v. Hammond, 11 All. 486 (statements by an insolvent debtor, a fraudulent transfer being involved; admitted); 1867, Carruth v. Bayley, 14 All. 532 (statements by a transferee and by another creditor, as to former's knowledge of insolvency, and as to the existence of a claim corroborating the other testimony; admitted); 1868, Foot v. Hunkins, 98 Mass. 524 (issue as to C.'s ownership, C. denying it; C.'s lack of money and failure having been testified to by him, former statements by him that he had means were received); 1869, Ryerson v. Abington, 102 Mass. 530 (an inadmissible opinion; excluded); 1873, Com. v. McBean, 111 Mass. 438 (indecent assault while on a drive; a statement on another occasion that the prosecutrix would kiss the defendant if he took her to drive; admitted); 1873, Davis v. Keyes, 112 Mass. 436 (contract on a warranty of a horse's age; defendant's testimony that he did not know the horse's age, and had never warranted a horse, excluded); 1875, Woodard v. Eastman, 118 Mass. 403; 1876, Kaler v. Ins. Co., 120 Mass. 334; 1877, Eames v. Whittaker, 123 Mass. 342, 344; 1885, Batchelder v. Batchelder, 139 Mass. 1, 29 N. E. 61 (under statute; that the witness had not had a conversation with the testator's wife regarding a will prior to the one in issue; excluded); 1889, Phillips v. Marblehead, 148 Mass. 328, 19 N. E. 547 (cross-examination on collateral matters, discretionary); 1889, Alexander v. Kaiser, 149 Mass. 321, 21 N. E. 376; 1889, Roberts v. Boston, 149 Mass. 346, 352, 21 N. E. 668 (discretion doctrine); 1895, Pierce v. Boston, 164 Mass. 92, 41 N. E. 229 (discretion doctrine); 1896, Howes v. Colburn, 165 Mass. 385, 43 N. E. 125 (discretion-doctrine; testimony of prior contradictions offered against a witness called in rebuttal); 1905, Robinson v. Old Colony St. R. Co., 189 Mass. 594, 76 N. E. 190 (motorman's conduct); 1906, American Woolen Co. v. Boston & M.R. Co., 190 Mass. 152, 76 N. E. 658 (records of a railroad);

Michigan: 1866, Fisher v. Hood, 14 Mich. 189; 1869, Patten v. People, 18 Mich. 329; 1878, Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 Mich. 501, 505; 1881, Hamilton v. People, 46 Mich. 186, 188, 9 N. W. 247; 1882, Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413, 417, 11 N. W. 221; 1882, People v. Broughton, 49 Mich. 339, 13 N. W. 621; 1886, Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 63 Mich. 161, 29 N. W. 682; 1887, McDonald v. McDonald, 67 Mich. 122, 34 N. W. 276; 1890, People v. Hillhouse, 80 Mich. 585, 45 N. W. 484; 1892, Electric Light Co. v. Grant, 90 Mich. 475, 51 N. W. 539; 1895, People v. De France, 104 Mich. 563, 62 N. W. 709; 1895, McClellan v. R. Co., 105 Mich. 101, 62 N. W. 1026 (a former expression of opinion, by one now testifying to a motorman's care, that the latter was to blame, admitted); 1904, People v. Row, 135 Mich. 505, 98 N. W. 13 (rape);

Minnesota: 1868, Hicks v. Stone, 13 Minn. 439; 1869, State v. Staley, 14 Minn. 115; 1897, Murphy v. Backer, 67 Minn. 510, 70 N. W. 799;

Mississippi: 1885, Jamison v. R. Co., 63 Miss. 33, 37; 1889, Jones v. State, 67 Miss. 111, 115, 7 So. 220; 1896, Williams v. State, 73 Miss. 820, 19 So. 826 (test, whether the matter would be admissible as part of the case); 1899, Garner v. State, 76 Miss. 515, 25 So. 363; 1905, Davis v. State, 85 Miss. 416, 37 So. 1018 (here an over-strict ruling); 1905, Bell v. State, — Miss. —, 38 So. 795 ("Would the cross-examining party be allowed to prove it as a part or in support of his case?"); 1905, Scott v. State, — Miss. —, 39 So. 1012; 1909, Cooper v. State, 94 Miss. 480, 49 So. 178;

Missouri: 1871, Harper v. R. Co., 47 Mo. 581; 1875, McKern v. Calvert, 59 Mo. 243; 1880, State v. Hughes, 71 Mo. 635; 1901, Hamburger v. Rinkel, 164 Mo. 398, 64 S. W. 104 (the facts must be such as are "pertinent to the issue and could have been shown in evidence as facts independently of the inconsistency");

Nebraska: 1884, George v. State, 16 Nebr. 321, 20 N. W. 311 (test, whether the same matter could be used affirmatively); 1897, Johnston v. Spencer, 51 Nebr. 198, 70 N. W. 982 (provable if "a part of his case, tending to establish his plea"); 1899, Zimmermann v. Kearney Co. Bank, 57 Nebr. 800, 78 N. W. 366, semble (test of Attorney-General v. Hitchcock adopted); 1904, Ferguson v. State, 72 Nebr. 350, 100 N. W. 800 (approving the last two Nebraska cases, but not noticing their difference);

New Hampshire: 1859, Combs v. Winchester, 39 N. H. 16 (Bell, J.: "It may always, we think, be determined whether evidence in contradiction of a witness is admissible by considering whether the question, the answer to which is proposed to be contradicted would be admissible if proposed by the party calling him. . . . But if the question is admissible only on cross-examination, it is merely collateral and cannot be contradicted"); 1861, Dewey v. Williams, 43 N. H. 385, 386; 1864, Summer v. Crawford, 45 N. H. 417;

New Jersey: 1830, Fries v. Brugler, 12 N. J. L. 80;

New York: 1830, Lawrence v. Barker, 5 Wend. 305; 1831, Jackson v. Warford, 7 Wend. 61; 1847, Howard v. Ins. Co., 4 Den. 504, 506 (a plea of fraudulent over-valuation to an action on a fire-policy; the witness, plaintiff's brother and business-manager, was asked whether he had, in originally making purchases, represented the plaintiff's capital (really $400) as $10,000; it was said obiter that the answer could not be contradicted); 1863, Plato v. Reynolds, 27 N. Y. 587; 1871, Sloan v. R. Co., 45 N. Y. 126 (negligence in not keeping the track in repair; prior inconsistent statements admitted of a witness to the condition of the track);

North Carolina: 1836, Radford v. Rice, 2 Dev. & B. 42 (the matter must be "relevant to the issue", "the fact in issue or its attendant circumstances or any facts immediately connected with the subject of inquiry"); 1869, State v. Kirkman, 63 N. C. 246 (allowed); 1871, Clark v. Clark, 65 N. C. 660 (details affecting bias; excluded); 1873, Kerrans v. Brown, 68 N. C. 43 (capacity of testator, his sanity being disputed; admitted); 1873, State v. Elliott, 68 N. C. 125 (circumstances of a killing; excluded); 1876, State v. Patterson, 74 N. C. 157 (filiation proceedings; whether prosecutrix had four years before had intercourse with a third person; excluded); 1879, State v. Scott, 81 N. C. 606 ("rather than be outdone by a negro, he would swear any § 1022. Same: (2) Facts discrediting the Witness as to Bias, Corruption, Skill, Knowledge, etc. A second class of matters which, by the rule in Attorney-General v. Hitchcock, may be the subject of a self-contradiction (because they concern facts which could have been introduced independently of the self-contradiction) includes all those which evidence specific discrediting qualities in the witness, — in particular, Bias, Interest, and Corruption, and occasionally also, lack of Skill, Knowledge, and the like. In this class, on the other hand, are not included facts of misconduct impeaching Moral Character. The admissibility of the self-contradiction thus depends indirectly on the scope of the rules governing the above kinds of facts (ante, §§ 948–996).

The general principle is to-day almost everywhere conceded, but it is in matters of bias, interest, and corruption that it receives most frequent mention: [1] amount of lies"; excluded); 1880, State v. Parish, 83 N. C. 613 (similar to Pattersons' Case, supra, but involving a peculiar doctrine of this State); 1882, State v. Crouse, 86 N. C. 621 (like Patterson's Case); 1882, State v. Davis, 87 N. C. 524 (a fact indicating the witness to be an accessory after the fact and thus affecting his motive to testify falsely; admitted); 1897, Burnett v. R. Co., 120 N. C. 517, 26 S. E. 819;

Ohio: 1884, Kent v. State, 42 Oh. 434 (rule of Attorney-General v. Hitchcock said to be ordinarily the test; whether universally, is doubted); Oklahoma: 1921, Freels v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 195 Pac. 1094 (murder); 1921, West v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 198 Pac. 99 (larceny of automobile);
Pennsylvania: 1870, Hildeburn v. Curran, 65 Pa. 63 (test, "Would the cross-examining party be entitled to prove it as a part of his case, tending to establish his plea?"); 1874, Schlater v. Winpenny, 75 Pa. 325; 1888, Zebley v. Storey, 117 Pa. 480, 489, 12 Atl. 569;
South Carolina: 1831, Smith v. Henry, 2 Bail. 118, 127; 1890, State v. Bodie, 33 S. C. 129, 11 S. E. 624;
South Dakota: 1897, State v. Davidson, 9 S. D. 564, 70 N. W. 879 (provable if "a part of his case, tending to establish his plea");
Tennessee: 1890, Franklin v. Franklin, 90 Tenn. 48, 16 S. W. 557; 1897, Saunders v. R. Co., 99 Tenn. 130, 41 S. W. 1031 ("as a part of and as tending to establish his case");
Utah: 1895, Fenstermaker v. Tribune Pub. Co., 12 Utah 439, 43 Pac. 117;
Vermont: 1858, Holbrook v. Holbrook, 30 Vt. 434; 1883, Lewis v. Barker, 55 Vt. 21; 1888, Alger v. Castle, 61 Vt. 57, 17 Atl. 727; 1901, Lynds v. Plymouth, 73 Vt. 216, 50 Atl. 1083;
Virginia: 1833, Daniels v. Conrad, 4 Leigh 402, 404, 405; 1882, Langhorne v. Com., 76 Va. 1019 (semble, the test of Attorney-General v. Hitchcock); 1895, Robertson v. Com., — Va. —, 22 S. E. 359;
Washington: 1900, State v. Coates, 22 Wash. 601, 61 Pac. 726 (confession of prior burglaries, admitted); 1922, State v. Carroll, — Wash. —, 206 Pac. 563;
Wisconsin: 1903, Barton v. Bruley, 119 Wis. 326, 96 N. W. 815 (here erroneously excluded, for the fact of bias was involved);
Wyoming: 1903, Horn v. State, 12 Wyo. 80, 73 Pac. 705 (prior statements showing motive, held not collateral).

§ 1022. [1] The rulings in the different jurisdictions are given below. The list given in the preceding note should also be consulted, as a strict line of division is sometimes difficult to draw. Compare also the cases cited ante, §§ 948–969, and §§ 990–996, which sometimes also throw light on the present rule.

ENGLAND: Some early rulings were inclined to treat all such matters as material: 1811, Yewin's Case, 2 Camp. 638, n. (whether a witness for prosecution had not said he would be revenged on defendant; allowed to be shown, "as the words were material to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner"); 1829, R. v. Barker, 3 C. & P. 590 (contradiction as to the loose conduct of the prosecutrix in a rape case; admitted); 1843, R. v. Robins, 2 M. & Rob. 512 (contradicting the prosecutrix in a rape case as to previous connection with other men; admitted); but other rulings were inclined to treat them as collateral, even where bias was distinctly involved: 1838, Harrison v. Gordon, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 156, Alderson, B. (excluding an apparent denial of circumstances indicating a hostile spirit); 1838, Lee's Case, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 154, Coleridge, J. (that the witness had said that the prisoner should be acquitted if it cost him £20; that he had tried to persuade witnesses for the prosecution not to testify; excluded). But this unsettled condition of the law was ended in 1847 by Attorney-General v.

Hitchcock, cited ante, § 1020 (admitting all matters involving bias or corruption; in this particular case the evidence was excluded as not really of that sort; the information was for making malt in an unregistered cistern; a witness testifying for the prosecution to the making was asked on cross-examination if he had not said that the Crown officers had offered him £20 to testify to that effect; this he denied, and another witness was called to prove it, but was rejected; Pollock, C. B.: "The reason is that it is totally irrelevant to the matter in issue that some person should have thought fit to offer a bribe to the witness to give an untrue account of a transaction, and it is of no importance whatever if that bribe was not accepted"); 1888, R. v. Shaw, 16 Cox Cr. 503, Cave, J. (bias, admissible).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1840, U. S. v. Dickinson, 2 McL. 330; 1880, U. S. v. Schindler, 18 Blatchf. 230, Benedict, J. (the utterances showing prejudice "would have been admissible if no inquiry had first been made of W. in regard to them, and inquiry of and denial by him did not make them any the less admissible");
Alabama: 1858, McHugh v. State, 31 Ala. 320 (bias; admitted); 1859, Blakey's Heirs v. Blakey's Executrix, 33 Ala. 618 (excluded); 1860 Lewis v. State, 35 Ala. 386 (attempt to coerce a witness; admitted); 1866, Bullard v. Lambert, 40 Ala. 210 (bias; admitted); 1877, Fincher v. State, 58 Ala. 215, 219 (bias; admitted);
Arkansas: 1889, Crumpton v. State, 52 Ark. 274 (bias; admissible); 1890, Hollingsworth v. State, 53 Ark. 387, 388, 14 S. W. 41 (that the witness was working for a reward);
California: 1878, People v. McKeller, 55 Cal. 65 (length of residence in one place; excluded); 1897, People v. Wong Chuey, 117 Cal. 624, 49 Pac. 833 (that the witness had attempted to bribe another; admitted);
Connecticut: 1828, Atwood v. Welton, 7 Conn. 70 (bias; admissible); 1874, Beardsley v. Wildman, 41 Conn. 515 (same);
Delaware: 1911, Roberts v. State, 25 Del. 2 Boyce, 385, 79 Atl. 396 (lies told by defendant about having no money);
Illinois: 1914, People v. Pfanschmidt, 262 Ill. 411, 104 N. E. 804 (opinion; excluded);
Indiana: 1859, Bersch v. State, 13 Ind. 435, semble (place of residence may affect credibility); 1869, Foglenman v. State, 32 Ind. 145 (the witness' motives for turning State's evidence in another cause; excluded); 1878, Scott v. State, 64 Ind. 400 (bias; admissible); 1881, Johnson v. Wiley, 74 Ind. 233, 238 (same); 1907, Cook v. State, 169 Ind. 430, 82 N. E. 1047 (murder; bias against the deceased; admitted); 1910, Miller v. State, 174 Ind. 255, 91 N. E. 930 (murder; erroneous ruling);
Iowa: 1898, State v. Heacock, 106 Ia. 191, 76 N. W. 654 (bias; excluded);
Kansas: 1912, State v. Swartz, 87 Kan. 852, 126 Pac. 1091 (that a witness was asleep at the time testified to, allowed);
Kentucky: 1855, Cornelius v. Com., 15 B. Monr. 545 (bias; admissible);
Maine: 1867, New Portland v. Kingfield, 55 Me. 176 (bias; admissible); 1874, Davis v. Roby, 64 Me. 428, 430 (a statement by the witness that her memory was poor and her husband had to keep telling her what to say admitted);
Massachusetts: 1854, Harrington v. Lincoln; 2 Gray 133 (a statement, after testifying, to another witness, that the former would lie on the stand under certain circumstances; excluded, as affecting only general morals, not bias in the case); 1857, Collins v. Stephenson, 8 Gray 439 (threats of revenge); 1857, Com. v. Farrar, 10 Gray 7 (a statement as to conduct alleged to show bias; excluded, because it did not); 1864, Tyler v. Pomeroy, 8 All. 483, 505 (bias; admissible); 1869, Swett v. Shumway, 102 Mass. 369 (that the witness had improperly offered money to obtain a copy of the contract from the opponent; admitted); 1875, Brooks v. Action, 117 Mass. 204, 209 (bias; admissible); 1882, Com. v. Donahoe, 133 id. 408 (that the defendant had not offered to pay him money to suppress his testimony; admitted, under the statute mentioned in the preceding section);
Michigan: 1871, Geary v. People, 22 Mich. 220 (unscrupulousness; admitted); 1874, Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173, 182 (fabrication of testimony; admissible); 1904, People v. Row, 135 Mich. 505, 98 N. W. 13 (attempt to persuade persons not to go surety for defendant; allowed);
Mississippi: 1859, Newcomb v. State, 37 Miss. 383, 401 (bias; admissible); 1889, Jones v. State, 67 Miss. 115, 7 So. 220 (same);
Nebraska: 1892, Consaul v. Sheldon, 35 Nebr. 254, 52 N. W. 1104 (same); 1909, Boche v. State, 84 Nebr. 845, 122 N. W. 72 (the witness' statement that he had told two persons that one J. made utterances implicating J. as the real murderer, allowed to be contradicted; Root, J., diss.);
New Hampshire: 1851, Titus v. Ash, 24 N. H. 332 (same); 1852, Martin v. Farnham, 25 N. H. 99 (same); 1852, Folsom v. Brawn, 25 N. H. 122 (tampering with another witness; admitted);
New York: 1847, People v. Austin, 1 Park. Cr. C. 156 (an offer by deceased's father to compound for the former's death was held inadmissible independently, yet admissible to contradict denials of it by the witness, as not "collateral" because it showed "corrupt or revengeful feelings"); 1882, Schultz v. R. Co., 89 N. Y. 248 (procuring another witness to testify falsely, admitted);
North Carolina: 1842, State v. Patterson, 2 Ired. 353 ("the temper, disposition, or conduct of the witness in relation to the case or the parties"; here, whether the witness had been paid for coming from another State to testify, allowed); 1871, Clark v. Clark, 65 N. C. 661 ("Had the question upon cross-examination

1867, WELLS, J., in Day v. Stickney, 14 All. 258: "The credit of a witness, upon whose testimony in part the issue is to be determined, is not merely collateral, and cannot be immaterial. The weight of his testimony with the jury may depend entirely upon their supposition that he is under no influence to prevaricate. If he is prejudiced for or against one of the parties to the suit, or has a strong purpose or feeling of interest in relation to the matter in controversy, it is a circumstance which may materially affect his testimony. . . . Under the English rule requiring that the witness should himself be interrogated as to his interest, bias, or hostile feeling, before other witnesses could be called to prove it by his declarations, such proof always involved a question of [self-] contradiction, and was generally treated in this secondary aspect alone. But the whole investigation relating thereto was regarded as belonging to the province of impeachment. Its character is the same although the contradiction be omitted."

1881, ELLIOTT, J., in Johnson v. Wiley, 74 Ind. 239: "It can make no difference whether the motives arise from hatred, interest, or affection; the principle is the same. If it be proper to contradict a witness by proving that statements have been made indicating hostility and enmity, it surely must be competent to prove statements showing that the impartiality of the witness is affected by motives arising from friendship, affection, fear, or interest."

Two special cases need mention. (1) In the early part of the 1800s, little discrimination was shown between different sorts of facts tending to discredit; and thus facts indicating Corruption or Bias were occasionally treated as facts affecting Moral Character, and therefore such prior Self-Contradictions were excluded. This is seen in some of the earlier English rulings;[2] but in Attorney-General v. Hitchcock this misunderstanding was cleared up, and the distinction between Bias or Corruption and Character was firmly settled. (2) In some instances — for example, showing previous connection of a rape-prosecutrix with third persons — the fact may be regarded either as affecting her Moral Character as witness (ante, § 979) or as affecting the probability of her consent (ante, § 200); in the former view, a Self-Contradiction would not be admissible, while in the latter view it would be admissible if the jurisdiction in question recognized the admissibility of that class of evidence. But Courts differ on that point; thus, the propriety of using been general, 'Are your feelings towards the plaintiff friendly or unfriendly?' and the answer been 'My feelings towards him are friendly', evidence in contradiction might have been offered as tending to show the animus. . . . But when the cross-examination, instead of being general, descends to particulars, then the party is bound by the answer and cannot be allowed to go into evidence 'aliunde' in order to contradict the witness"; this distinction is unsound); 1901, Carr v. Smith, 129 N. C. 232, 39 S. E. 831 (expressions indicating bias, held collateral, where the witness was a party);

Ohio: 1884, Kent v. State, 42 Oh. St. 428, 431 (bias, etc.; admissible);
Pennsylvania: 1865, Gaines v. Com., 50 Pa. 326, 328 (statements showing the witness possibly the real murderer and thus motivated to divert suspicion from himself, admitted);
South Carolina: (see the cases in the note ante, § 1021);
Tennessee: 1905, Creeping Bear v. State, 113 Tenn. 322, 87 S. W. 653 (here the witness had asked people not to sign a pardon for the defendant);
Vermont: 1862, Hutchinson v. Wheeler, 35 Vt. 340 (bias; admissible); 1869, Ellsworth v. Potter, 41 Vt. 690 (same);
Virginia: 1882, Langhorne v. Com., 76 Va. 1019 (bias, admissible; but limiting the evidence to declarations directly expressing hostility).

Presumably, the impeaching witness himself may also be impeached by a prior contradictory statement of what he now says the first witness said; i.e. this will not be a collateral matter: 1881, State v. Lawlor, 28 Minn. 222, 9 N. W. 698 ("at least within reasonable limits").

[2] Particularly in Harris v. Tippett, ante, § 1005.

a Self-Contradiction will there depend on the view taken by the Court of the other controversy.

§ 1023. Cross-examination to Self-Contradiction, without Extrinsic Testimony. Suppose that the witness is asked, "Did you at such a time and place say the contrary?", the matter being a collateral one; is this much allowable, provided no attempt is made by outside testimony to prove the self-contradiction if it is denied by the witness?

It has been sometimes said that even this much — i.e. the attempt to prove the collateral self-contradiction by the witness himself — is not allowable.[1] But on the principle there seems to be no objection. The reasons invariably advanced by the Courts (ante, § 1019) have reference solely to the formation of a new collateral issue for outside testimony; i.e. if the witness deny the prior utterance, the impeacher would proceed to prove it by other witnesses and the impeached would wish to disprove it by other witnesses, and it is to this process that the objections of Unfair Surprise and Confusion of Issues apply. They do not apply at all where the impeacher merely seeks to prove the utterance by the witness himself and rests content with the witness' admission or denial.

There is therefore no objection, either of principle or of policy, to such an attempt to prove the self-contradiction by the witness himself.[2]

Moreover, it is not uncommon to obtain, by cross-examination alone, an adequate exposure of the witness' inconsistencies; and no artificial limits should be set for its employment.[3] The following passages illustrate what may sometimes be thus effected:

1664, Turner's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 565, 606; it was vital to the defendant's case that he was at home on Thursday night and absent Friday night; his maid-servant being called for him, L. C. J. Hyde: "Did your master go forth on Friday night?" Maid: "No; he was at home and in bed all that night till 8 in the morning; and Thursday night before." Defendant: "A silly soul, she knows not what she says." L. C. J. Hyde: "I will ask you again; was your master at home on Friday night?"; Maid: "No, I think he was not."

§ 1023. [1] 1856, Gilbert v. Gooderham, 6 U. C. C. P. 46 (Draper, C. J.: "It very frequently happens that questions which in strictness are irrelevant are put and answered without objection. But I take the rule to be clearly established that no question can be legally put to a witness on cross-examination for the mere purpose of contradicting him. And if such question be put, the answer is conclusive"); 1905, Starke v. State, 49 Fla. 41, 37 So. 850; 1849, Seavy v. Dearborn, 19 N. H. 356; 1831, Jackson v. Warford, 7 Wend. N. Y. 61; 1911, Chase v. Hoosac T. & W. R. Co., 85 Vt. 60, 81 Atl. 236 (trial Court's discretion); 1904, Illinois Steel Co. v. Jeka, 123 Wis. 419, 101 N. W. 399; 1824, Starkie, Evidence, I, 189.

Compare the examples cited ante, § 1006, n. 2.

[2] Accord: 1871, R. v. Holmes, 12 Cox Cr. 143, per Kelly, C. B., semble; 1899, Spring Valley v. Gavin, 182 Ill. 232, 54 N. E. 1035 (trial Court has discretion); 1847, Howard v. Ins. Co., 4 Den. 504, 506.

Compare also the cases cited ante, § 1006.

For the propriety of repeating the matter of the direct examination on the cross-examination, in order to involve the witness in self-contradictions, see ante, § 782.

[3] 1871, Tichborne v. Lushington, Heywood's Rep. 148 (cross-examination of the claimant as to the reason for making his will in Australia; a good illustration); 1860, Wardlaw, J., in Chapman v. Cooley, 12 Rich. 660 ("there is no difference in principle between his contradiction of himself on the stand and outside of the court-house").

L. C. J. HYDE: "Why did you say so before?"; Maid: "I cannot remember, sir." C. J. BRIDGMAN: "She knows her master's mind."

1811, Berkeley Peerage Trial, Sherwood's Abstract, 189, 192, 273; the issue was whether Lord and Lady Berkeley were married before their eldest son was born, and this again turned mainly upon the genuineness or forgery of an entry in the marriage-register made in the name of Hupsman, the parish vicar; Lady Berkeley claimed its genuineness; Nicholas Hicks, an attorney, was offered to prove this, and swore convincingly, as being well acquainted with the writing; he was asked at the beginning of his cross-examination: "Have you been conversing with anybody lately as to this handwriting?" "I have not," the time of the trial being May; "You have not been at Spring Gardens, [Lady Berkeley's residence,] lately, have you?" "I have not; not to converse with anybody on the subject"; "Have you been there?" "I have been there several times"; "Whom did you go to there?" "I saw Lady Berkeley." "Do you mean to say you have not talked with anybody since you came to London as to the manner in which Hupsman wrote?" "I have not." After a long series of questions on other matters, the cross-examiner finally returned and asked how he came to be a witness, when he said that he had told Lady Berkeley that he could identify the register-entry; "When?" "I think in the month of April." "It was in Spring Gardens you went to Lady Berkeley?" "Yes"; "And you there told her you could swear to Hupsman's handwriting?" "Yes"; "And that was what passed between you?" "Yes"; whereupon his first answers above were read; and he was later committed to Newgate for contempt of the House.

3. Preliminary Warning Necessary

§ 1025. Reason of the Rule. It has been already noticed (ante, § 1019) that, to obviate the objection of Unfair Surprise, a natural expedient is to ask the witness, while on the stand under cross-examination, whether he made the supposed contradictory statement. He is thus warned that it will be offered against him by testimony later produced; and he may thus either prepare to deny it, if he claims not to have made it, or explain it, if he admits having made it. The reason and the nature of this preliminary question and warning have often been explained by the judges:

1820, ABBOTT, C. J., in The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 313 (s. c. Queen Caroline's Trial, Linn's ed., III, 259): "If it be intended to bring the credit of a witness into question by proof of anything he may have said or declared touching the cause, the witness is first asked, upon cross-examination, whether or no he has said or declared that which is intended to be proved. If the witness admits the words or declarations imputed to him, the proof on the other side becomes unnecessary, and the witness has an opportunity of giving such reason, explanation, or exculpation of his conduct, if any there may be, as the particular circumstances of the transaction may happen to furnish; and thus the whole matter is brought before the court at once, which in our opinion is the most convenient course. . . . [If the witness denies the utterance or claims the privilege of silence], the proof in contradiction will be received at the proper season. But the possibility that the witness may decline to answer the question affords no sufficient reason for not giving him the opportunity of answering and of offering such explanatory or exculpatory matter as I have before alluded to; . . . not only for the purpose already mentioned, but because, if not given in the first instance, it may be wholly lost, for a witness who has been examined and has no reason to suppose that his further attendance is requisite often departs the Court, and may not be found or brought back until the trial be at an end. So that, if evidence of this sort could be adduced on the sudden and by surprise, without any previous intimation to the witness or to the party producing him, great injustice might be done, . . . and one of the great objects of the course of proceeding established in our courts is the prevention of surprise, as far as practicable, upon any person who may appear therein."

1851, RANNEY, J., in King v. Wicks, 20 Oh. 91: "In addition to the reasons already stated [the fairness of giving opportunity for explanation], others equally cogent could be given. To make the truth manifest upon the issues joined between the parties is the object of all evidence. This testimony has no direct bearing upon any disputed fact, but raises a collateral issue upon the credit to be given to a witness, and with all collateral issues, is calculated to divert the minds of the jury from the points on controversy in the case. Such collateral inquiry may and often will become necessary; but it should be avoided where it can be, and I firmly believe it may be avoided in a majority of cases where the inquiry is first made of the witness himself, either by his confessing such contradictory statements or giving such explanations in regard to them as will convince the party that nothing is to be made by pursuing the matter further. Again, witnesses are required, willing or unwilling, to come into court and testify. They should appear there under the full confidence that their feelings and reputations will be respected and protected, so far as is consistent with the ends of justice. The witness suddenly finds himself on trial for his veracity. . . . A word imperfectly heard, forgotten, or omitted, may change his whole meaning, and make him say what he never thought of. . . . [A bitter strife may ensue] which might all have been avoided by one minute's explanation in the first instance from the party implicated in the presence of those brought to impeach him."

§ 1026. History of the Rule. But this rule is by no means an immemorial tradition. The reasons above explained were not worked out until well into the 1800s. The rule, as a rule, may be said to have had its birth with the response of the Judges in The Queen's Case (quoted above) in 1820. This utterance is said to have come as a surprise to the Bar; and up to that time no established requirement of the kind existed.[1] None of the treatises by practitioners, English or American, published prior to The Queen's Case mentions such a proviso. Add to this that, in all of the New England jurisdictions, the continuous traditions of practice down through the first half of the 1800s recognized no such requirement,[2] that in such others of the original States as Pennsylvania and New Jersey the rule has never found favor,[3] and that in New York,[4] Virginia,[5] and Georgia [6] traces of a similar sort appear.[7]

§ 1026. [1] It is said by Church, C. J., in 22 Conn. 267 (1853) and by Parker, C. J., in 17 Mass. 160 (1821), that the practice in England before The Queen's Case was not established, but that the circuits and judges differed. So far as extant decisions go, the matter seems to have been left unnoticed: 1732, Pendrell v. Pendrell, 2 Str. 925 (preliminary question not spoken of); 1761, Wright v. Littler, 3 Burr. 1247, 1255 (a dying declaration by an attesting witness that he had forged the will; no requirement of this sort is spoken of).

[2] Mass. 1821, Tucker v. Welsh, 17 Mass. 160; 1852, Gould v. Norfolk Lead Co., 9 Cush. 347 (Shaw, C. J.: "that is the English rule, but we have always adopted a different rule"); 1855, Com. v. Hawkins, 3 Gray 465; 1867, Day v. Stickney, 14 All. 260; Conn. 1853, Church, C. J., in Hedge v. Clapp, 2 Conn. 266; Vt. 1847, Davis, J., in Downer v. Dana, 19 Vt. 345 ("at that time [1821] I think no lawyer in Vermont had heard of such a rule here, and even now I do not find it naturalized anywhere except here"); N. H. 1851, Titus v. Ash, 24 N. H. 331; 1857, Cook v. Brown, 34 N. H. 471; Me. 1831, Ware v. Ware, 8 Greenl. 52, semble; 1850, Wilkins v. Babbershall, 32 Me. 184; 1867, New Portland v. Kingfield, 55 Me. 176; R. I. 1833, Avery's Trial (Newport), R. I., Hildreth's Report, 90 (before Eddy, C. J., Brayton, and Durfee, JJ.: "this question had been settled a year ago at Providence, where it was decided" that the witness must first be asked; counsel intimated that the prior practice had been to the contrary).

[3] 1830, Fries v. Brugler, 12 N. J. L. 80, semble; 1872, Walden v. Finch, 70 Pa. 463.

[4] In People v. Moore, 15 Wend. N. Y. 422 (1836), the rule seems to have been forgotten.

[5] 1855, Unis v. Charlton, 12 Gratt. Va. 497.

[6] 1846, Sealy v. State, 1 Kelly Ga. 218 (left undecided).

[7] See a forcible opinion by Church, C. J., in Hedge v. Clapp, 22 Conn. 266 (1853).

We may believe, therefore, that, as a requirement indispensable, the doctrine is an innovation dating from 1820. Thus, it may be fairly expected to stand upon its merits, and not upon long traditional membership in our system of evidence; and it is worth while to appreciate this, for the rule is open, in its more recent arbitrary form, to serious objection.

§ 1027. Objections to the Rule. The objection in brief is that in many cases it is impossible for the impeaching party to ask the question while the witness is on the stand, because it is often not until after the testimony is delivered that the prior contradictions are brought to the opponent's notice, and thus, wherever the witness becomes unavailable by death or absence, the contradictions cannot be used. As there is at least an equal chance that the alleged contradictions were really uttered and cannot be explained away, it is a poor policy that favors exclusively the witness to be impeached by exempting him from impeachment; justice demands with equal force that the impeaching party, if acting in good faith, should not be invariably the one to suffer, under a rigid enforcement of the rule. This argument has been well expounded in the following opinion:

1847, DAVIS, J., in Downer v. Dana, 19 Vt. 345: "Were the question 'res integra', I confess I could see no advantages to the cause of truth and justice, from the adoption of this rule of evidence, which are not equally well secured by the old practice of allowing the party whose witness has in that way been attacked to recall him, if he chose, for the purpose of contradicting or explaining the conduct or declarations imputed to him. Indeed, I have seen no objections of consequence to that course, except that it may sometimes happen that the witness may have departed from court supposing his attendance no longer necessary. Such an objection practically is entitled to very little weight, as it would be provided against by requiring, as is in fact generally done for other reasons, witnesses to remain in court until the testimony is finished. On the other hand, this rule would be productive of intolerable mischiefs, were it not mitigated by the somewhat awkward and inconvenient expedient of suspending the regular course of testimony, for the purpose of recalling the witness proposed to be impeached and laying a foundation for the impeaching testimony by interrogating him whether he did or said the things proposed to be proved. Besides, the privilege of doing this will be lost in all those cases where the witness has left court and cannot be found; the opposite party has every inducement to cut off this opportunity by immediately discharging all such as he may have reason to suspect are liable to be impugned. In addition to this, the avowed attempt to produce self-impeachment, made of course in a tone and manner evincing distrust of the general narrative, too often both surprises and disconcerts a modest witness. He answers hastily and confusedly, as is natural from having such a collateral matter hastily spring upon him. Everyone conversant with judicial proceedings must have often observed with pain an apparent contradiction produced in this way, when he is satisfied none would have existed under a different mode of proceeding. . . . To my mind these considerations present very formidable objections to the practice first authoritatively developed on the trial of the Queen in the House of Lords."

A due consideration for these arguments leads to the conclusion that in general the preliminary question should indeed be put, before producing the alleged contradiction; but that this requirement, instead of being rigid and invariable, should be open to exceptions, and should be dispensed with, in the Court's discretion, where the putting of the question has become impossible and the impeaching party has acted in good faith. This sensible form of the rule is, however, in vogue in a few jurisdictions only. The modern tendency has been to enforce the rule with inconsiderate and arbitrary rigidity. To-day it does, upon the whole, as much evil as good, and it is to be hoped that a reaction will some day manifest itself.

§ 1028. State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions.[1] In all but a few

§ 1028. [1] The rule is sanctioned, where not otherwise noted:

ENGLAND: 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 313, by all the Judges; 1837, Andrews v. Askey, 8 C. & P. 7; 1840, Carpenter v. Wall, 11 A. & E. 803 (where in a seduction suit a former admission of the plaintiff's daughter that B. had seduced her was subjected to this rule, though it had also legitimate effect as showing lightness of conduct; the Court do not say that the rule would have been foregone had the other purpose of the evidence been the chief or the sole one; and it is not clear just when the line is to be drawn); St. 1854, c. 125, § 23 ("If a witness, upon cross-examination as to a former statement made by him relative to the subject-matter of the cause, and inconsistent with his present testimony, does not distinctly admit that he has made such statement, proof may be given that he did in fact make it; but before such proof can be given, the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he has made such statement"); St. 1854, c. 125, § 22 (like the last half of ib. § 23, supra, for adverse witnesses).

CANADA: the statutes are like the English statute supra: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act, § 11; Alta. St. 1910, 2d sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, § 21; B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 17; N. Br. Cons. St. 1903, c. 127, § 16; Newf. Cons. St. 1916, c. 91, § 8; N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 43; Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 18; P. E. I. St. 1889, c. 9, § 16; Que. 1876, Decary v. Poirier, 20 Low. Can. Jur. 167; Sask. R. S. 1920, c. 44, § 33; Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 41.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1840, McKinney v. Neil, 1 McLean 537; U. S. v. Dickinson, 2 McLean 329; Chapin v. Siger, 4 McLean 381; Conrad v. Griffey, 16 How. 46; 1858, U. S. v. Holmes, 1 Cliff. 114; 1890, Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Artery, 137 U. S. 519, 11 Sup. 129; 1893, Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 309, 14 Sup. 334; 1894, Mattox v. U. S., 156 U. S. 237, 245, 15 Sup. 337;

Alabama: 1840, Lewis v. Post, 1 Ala. 69;

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1502 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 864);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4188 "Before other evidence can be offered of the witness having made at another time a different statement, he must be inquired of concerning the same, with the circumstances of time and persons present, as correctly as the examining party can present them"); 1854, Drennen v. Lindsey, 15 Ark. 361; 1877, Collins v. Mack, 31 Ark. 694; 1881, Griffith v. State, 37 Ark. 328; 1896, Carpenter v. State, 62 Ark. 286, 36 S. W. 900;

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 2052 ("before this can be done, the statements must be related to him, with the circumstances of times, places, and persons present, and he must be asked whether he made them, and if so, allowed to explain them"); 1866, Rice v. Cunningham, 29 Cal. 501; 1875, Leonard v. Kingsley, 50 Cal. 658; 1892, Young v. Brady, 94 Cal. 130, 29 Pac. 489; 1895, People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 41 Pac. 697 (applied to an offer to show that one identifying the accused as a murderer had at first identified a different person); 1897, People v. Wade, 118 Cal. 672, 50 Pac. 841 (under § 2052, C. C. P., asking is necessary);

Colorado: 1896, Mullen v. McKim, 22 Colo. 468, 45 Pac. 416; 1909, Jaynes v. People, 44 Colo. 535, 99 Pac. 325; 1919, Coplin v. People, 67 Colo. 17, 185 Pac. 254 (rule applied);

Connecticut: 1853, Hedge v. Clapp, 22 Conn. 266 (required, but subject to exceptions); 1875, State v. North, 42 Conn. 79 (similar); 1875, Tomlinson v. Derby, 43 Conn. 211 (similar); 1909, Adams v. Herald Pub. Co., 82 Conn. 448, 74 Atl. 755 (the prior warning is not indispensable, if the trial court "was of the opinion that the ends of fairness and justice would thereby be best served"; following Hedge v. Clapp);

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2710 ("the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he made such statement");

Georgia: 1846, Sealy v. State, 1 Kelly 218 (left undecided); 1849, Williams v. Turner, 7 Ga. 351 (required); Johnson v. Kinsey, 7 Ga. 429; Williams v. Chapman, ib. 470; Rev. C. 1910, § 5881, P. C. § 1052 ("with as much certainty as possible to the time, place, person, and circumstances");

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2619 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 23);

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8039 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2052);

Illinois: 1845, Regnier v. Cabot, 7 Ill. 41; 1856, Sigsworth v. Coulter, 18 Ill. 205;

Indiana: 1839, Doe v. Reagan, 5 Blackf. 219; 1843, McIntire v. Young, 6 Blackf. 497; 1861, Judy v. Johnson, 16 Ind. 371; 1862, Hill v. Goode, 18 Ind. 207, 209;
Iowa: 1889, Richmond v. Sundburg, 77 Ia. 258, 42 N. W. 184; 1895, Klotz v. James, 96 Ia. 1, 64 N. W. 648;
Kansas: 1872, State v. Horne, 9 Kan. 128 (required); 1888, Hughes v. Ward, 38 Kan. 454, 16 Pac. 810, semble (not required);
Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 598 ("circumstances of time, place, and persons present, as correctly as the examining party can present them"); 1883, Craft v. Com., 81 Ky. 250 (Code rule held applicable to criminal cases);
Louisiana: 1853, State v. Cazeau, 8 La. An. 115; 1880, State v. Angelo, 32 La. An. 408; 1895, State v. Johnson, 47 La. An. 1225, 17 So. 789; 1896, State v. Delaneuville, 48 La. An. 502, 19 So. 550;
Maine: 1831, Ware v. Ware, 8 Greenl. 52, semble (not required); 1850, Wilkins v. Babbershall, 32 Me. 184 (same); 1867, New Portland v. Kingfield, 55 Me. 176 (same); 1920, Currier v. Bangor R. & E. Co., 119 Me. 313, 111 Atl. 333;
Maryland: 1839, Franklin Bank v. Navig. Co., 11 G. & J. 35; 1843, Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 1 Gill 139; 1890, Brown v. State, 72 Md. 475, 20 Atl. 140; 1896, Peterson v. State, 83 Md. 194, 34 Atl. 834;
Massachusetts: here, down to 1869, the question was not required at all (the early citations are given ante, § 1026, note); in that year a statute adopted the requirement where one's own witness was to be contradicted: St. 1869, c. 425; Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 23 ("before proof of such inconsistent statements is given, the circumstances thereof sufficient to designate the particular occasion shall be mentioned to the witness, and he shall be asked if he has made such statements, and if so, shall be allowed to explain them"); 1869, Ryerson v. Abington, 102 Mass. 526, 531 (applies the statute strictly); 1876, Newell v. Homer, 120 Mass. 277, 283; 1883, Com. v. Thyng, 134 Mass. 191, 193 (mentioning person only, without time or place, and with no reason for the omission, is not sufficient); 1885, Batchelder v. Batchelder, 139 Mass. 1, 29 N. E. 61; but for an opponent's witness, the old rule remains unaltered: 1871, Blake v. Stoddard, 107 Mass. 111; 1895, Carville v. Westford, 163 Mass. 544, 40 N. E. 894; 1898, Allin v. Whittemore, 171 Mass. 259, 50 N. E. 618;
Michigan: 1842, Sawyer v. Sawyer, Walk. Ch. 48; 1852, Smith v. People, 2 Mich. 415;
Minnesota: 1869, State v. Staley, 14 Minn. 114;
Missouri: 1839, Garrett v. State, 6 Mo. 2, 4; 1851, Clementine v. State, 14 Mo. 115; 1858, State v. Dalton, 27 Mo. 15; 1860, State v. Davis, 29 Mo. 397; 1868, State v. Starr, 38 Mo. 279; 1920, Kersten v. Hines, 283 Mo. 623, 223 S. W. 586 (policeman's self-contradictory report of a crossing accident; excluded for lack of prior question);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10669 (like Cal. C. § 2052);
Nebraska: 1890, Wood River Bank v. Kelley, 29 Nebr. 597, 46 N. W. 86; 1892, Hanscom v. Burmood, 35 Nebr. 506, 53 N. W. 371; 1896, Columbia Bank v. Rice, 48 Nebr. 428, 67 N. W. 165;
New Hampshire: 1851, Titus v. Ash, 24 N. H. 331 (not required); 1857, Cook v. Brown, 34 N. H. 471 (same); 1905, Villineuve v. Manchester St. R. Co., 73 N. H. 250, 60 Atl. 748 (same as Titus v. Ash); 1921, Thompson v. Morin Co., — N. H. —, 114 Atl. 274 (Titus v. Ash followed);
New Jersey: 1830, Fries v. Brugler, 12 N. J. L. 80, semble (not required);
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, §§ 2178, 2180 ("the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he did make such statement");
New York: 1837, Everson v. Carpenter, 17 Wend. 420, semble; 1847, People v. Austin, 1 Park. Cr. C. 159; People v. Jackson, 3 Park. Cr. C. 598; 1859, Stephens v. People, 19 N. Y. 570; 1871, Sloan v. R. Co., 45 N. Y. 127; 1872, Gaffney v. People, 53 N. Y. 423; 1872, Height v. People, 50 N. Y. 394;
North Carolina: 1842, State v. Patterson, 2 Ired. 354; 1847, Pipkin v. Bond, 5 Ired. Eq. 101; 1848, Edwards v. Sullivan, 8 Ired. 304; 1856, Hooper v. Moore, 3 Jones 429; 1869, State v. Kirkman, 63 N. C. 248; 1876, State v. Wright, 75 N. C. 440; 1879, Jones v. Jones, 80 N. C. 246, 247 (not necessary for points "pertinent and material to the inquiry", as distinguished from statements involving bias, etc.); 1881, Rhea v. Deaver, 85 N. C. 337, 339 (same); 1882, Black v. Baylees, 86 N. C. 527, 534 (same), 1884, State v. Mills, 91 N. C. 581, 598 (same); 1890, State v. Morton, 107 N. C. 890, 12 S. E. 112 (same); 1897, Burnett v. R. Co., 120 N. C. 517, 26 S. E. 819 (same);
Ohio: 1851, King v. Wicks, 20 Oh. 89;
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 864 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2052); 1895, State v. Brown, 28 Or. 147, 41 Pac. 1042;
Pennsylvania: 1839, Sharp v. Emme, 5 Whart. 288, 300 (discretion of the trial Court); 1845, McAteer v. McMullen, 2 Pa. St. 32; 1845, Kay v. Fredrigal, 3 Pa. 221, 223 (discretion of the trial Court); 1847, McKee v. Jones, 6 Pa. 425, 429 (same); 1865, Gaines v. Com., 50 Pa. 328; 1872, Walden v. Finch, 70 Pa. 436 (to be applied with discretion); 1874, Brubaker v. Taylor, 76 Pa. 83, 87 ("in general", necessary); 1879, Rothrock v. Gallagher, 91 Pa. 108, 113 (discretion); 1898, Cronkrite v. Trexler, 187 Pa. 100, 41 Atl. 22 ("It is now settled" that the matter rests in the trial Court's discretion); jurisdictions the rule is recognized, and is enforced as an inflexible one. In a few jurisdictions its enforcement is left to the trial Court's discretion. In a few others it is not recognized at all.
Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 343 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2052); 1919, U. S. v. Baluyot, 40 P. I. 385, 406 (rule expounded);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1527, 6277 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2052); 1904, People v.

§ 1029. Preliminary Question must be Specific as to Time, Place, and Person. If the preliminary question is to be useful as a warning to enable the witness to prepare to disprove the utterance or to explain it away if admitted, it must usually specify some details as to the occasion of the remark. The witness may perhaps without this understand the occasion alluded to; but usually he will not, and in such a case this specification of the details is a mere dictate of justice. The modern tendency of American Courts, however, is to lose sight of the fact that this specification is a mere means to an end (namely, the end of adequately warning the witness), and to treat it as an inherent requisite, whether the witness really understood the allusion or not. The result of this is that unless the counsel repeats a particular arbitrary formula of question, he loses the use of his evidence, without regard to the substantial adequacy of the warning. Such a practice is impolitic and unjustified by principle. Add to this that the same Court is seldom uniform with itself in the elements of this fetish-formula which it prescribes as indispensable; and it will be seen that the rule on the whole is apt to produce to-day in its application as much detriment as advantage.

There are thus two ways of treating the rule that the details must be specified:[1] (1) It may be treated as a general requirement that the witness' atten-

Diaz, 5 P. R. 417 (murder; C. Cr. P. § 245 applied);
South Carolina: 1898, State v. Henderson, 52 S. C. 470, 30 S. E. 477;
Tennessee: 1837, Richmond v. Richmond, 10 Yerg. 346; 1848, Story v. Saunders, 8 Humph. 666; 1873, Cole v. State, 6 Baxt. 239;
Texas: 1864, Ayres v. Duprey, 27 Tex. 599;
Vermont: 1837, Pierce v. Gilson, 9 Vt. 222; 1847, Downer v. Dana, 19 id. 344; 1904, McKinstry v. Collins, 76 Vt. 221, 56 Atl. 985 (former testimony excluded, for lack of the inquiry to the witness);
Virginia: 1853, Wormeley's Case, 10 Gratt. 689, semble (required); 1855, Unis v. Charlton's Adm'r, 12 Gratt. 497 (Daniel, J.: "Cases may be supposed in which the Courts may be strongly called upon to dispense with or to make exceptions to the rule; and I will not undertake to say that special exigencies may not occasionally arise requiring the Courts to depart from the rule rather than to sacrifice justice by sternly adhering to it"); 1880, Davis v. Franke, 33 Va. 424; St. 1889, Code 1919, § 6215 ("the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned");
Washington: 1903, Brown v. Gillett, 33 Wash. 264, 74 Pac. 386 (rule adopted);
Wisconsin: 1858, Ketchingman v. State, 6 Wis. 426, 431; 1888, Welch v. Abbot, 72 Wis. 515, 40 N. W. 223.

§ 1029. [1] ENGLAND: This part of the rule seems to have been first promulgated in 1829, in Angus v. Smith, Moo. & M. 474 (Tindal, C. J.: "You must ask him as to the time, place, and person involved in the supposed contradiction: it is not enough to ask him the general question whether he has ever said so and so").

CANADA: 1907, R. v. Clarke, 38 N. Br. 11 (the sufficiency of the question is in the trial Court's discretion; one judge diss.).

UNITED STATES: The statutory provisions on this point have been already cited ante, § 1028; the judicial rulings are as follows; Alabama: 1840, Lewis v. Post, 1 Ala. 73 (time and person; here the witness asked for specifications, and the counsel refused them); 1841, State v. Marler, 2 Ala. 46 (where the witness had been asked as to statements to two named persons or any other; the two named were allowed to testify to contradictions, but not a third); 1847, Howell v. Reynolds, 12 Ala. 128; 1848, Moore v. Jones, 13 Ala. 303; 1849, Carlisle v. Hunley, 15 Ala. 625 (time, place, and person); 1851, Powell v. State, 19 Ala. 581 (time, place, and circumstances), 1851, Armstrong v. Huffstutler, 19 Ala. 53 (substance of the statement suffices); 1853, Nelson v. Iverson, 24 Ala. 15 (same; here the time stated was held reasonably accurate for the purpose); 1879, Atwell v. State, 63 Ala. 64 (time, place, and persons present); 1897, Southern R. Co. v. Williams, 113 Ala. 620, 21 So. 328 ("But the rule is not ironclad, — that is, it does not require perfect precision as to either [time, place, circumstances, or persons]; when it is clear that the witness cannot be taken by surprise, an ample opportunity is afforded to make any explanation desired, the predicate is sufficient");

Arkansas: 1881, Griffith v. State, 37 Ark. 332 (time, place, and person spoken to); 1883, Frazier v. State, 42 Ark. 70 (held sufficient, on the facts);
California: 1860, Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 177 ("time, place, and the precise matter"; "time, place, and occasion"); 1872, People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 457 (time, place, and person); 1897, People v. Bosquet, 116 Cal. 75, 47 Pac. 879 (statute applied); 1898, Plass v. Plass, 122 Cal. 4, 54 Pac. 372 ("persons present", construed); 1898, Green v. R. Co., 122 Cal. 563, 55 Pac. 577 (asking held not sufficient on the facts); 1901, Norris v. Crandall, 133 Cal. 19, 65 Pac. 568 (questions held not specific enough); 1902, Sinkler v. Silian, 136 Cal. 356, 68 Pac. 1024 (rule applied); 1918, Ash v. Soo Sing Iung, 177 Cal. 356, 170 Pac. 843; 1919, McLaughlin v. Los Angeles R. Co., 180 Cal. 527, 182 Pac. 44 (statement here held too variant from the statement subsequently offered to be proved);
Connecticut: 1904, Bradley v. Gorham, 77 Conn. 211, 58 Atl. 698;
Florida: 1903, Brown v. State, 46 Fla. 159, 35 So. 82 (question held sufficient on the facts, though no time was mentioned); 1907, Clinton v. State, 53 Fla. 98, 43 So. 312;
Georgia: 1849, Williams v. Turner, 7 Ga. 351 (time, place, person, and other circumstances); 1854, Wright v. Hicks, 15 Ga. 167 (rejected on the facts); 1861, Matthis v. State, 33 Ga. 29 (time, place, and person);
Illinois: 1853, Gotloff v. Henry, 14 Ill. 386 (time, place, and circumstances; yet not "every possible circumstance of identity", but such as will "direct the mind of a witness of ordinary apprehension to them"); 1855, Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Fay, 16 Ill. 569 (time, place, and person, semble); 1864, Root v. Wood, 34 Ill. 286 (time and place); 1866, Miner v. Phillips, 42 Ill. 130 (person only named; excluded); 1867, Winslow v. Newlan, 45 Ill. 151 (time, place, and circumstances); 1872, Northwestern R. Co. v. Hack, 66 Ill. 242 (an omission in a former statement; the question whether he had omitted as alleged, held necessary); 1877, Richardson v. Kelly, 85 Ill. 493 (time and place);
Indiana: 1860, Joy v. State, 14 Ind. 141 (time, place, and person, etc.); 1864, Bennett v. O'Byrne, 23 Ind. 605 (time sufficiently described on the facts); 1876, Hill v. Gust, 55 Ind. 51 (time, place, and person); 1881, McIlvain v. State, 80 Ind. 72 (time and place omitted; question excluded); 1898, Roller v. Kling, 150 Ind. 159, 49 N. E. 948 (excluded because the statement testified to was not called for in the same terms as the prior question so as to admit of an answer "Yes" or "No"; this rule is entirely too strict; it would reduce the process of getting evidence to a mumbling of prearranged formulas); 1915, Miller v. State, 183 Ind. 319, 109 N. E. 205 (question held not specific enough, on the facts; over-strict);
Indian Territory: 1904, Staneliff v. U. S., 5 Ind. T. 486, 82 S. W. 882 ("time, place, and other surroundings");
Iowa: 1852, Glenn v. Carson, 3 G. Gr. 529 (time and place); 1859, State v. Ruhl, 8 Ia. 451 (merely asking "what he had sworn to"; excluded); 1862, Samuels v. Griffith, 13 Ia. 109 (time, place, person, and specific subject); 1863, Strunk v. Ochiltree, 15 Ia. 180; 1868, Callanan v. Shaw, 24 Ia. 454 (the witness was asked "what he thought he made oath to" before, excluded); 1871, State v. Collins, 32 Ia. 41 (time, place, and person); 1874, Nelson v. R. Co., 38 Ia. 565 (admitted on the facts); 1876, State v. Kinley, 43 Ia. 295 (time, place, and person); 1876, State v. McLaughlin, 44 Ia. 83 (excluded because time was not mentioned, though person was); 1908, Gibson v. Seney, 138 Ia. 383, 116 N. W. 325 (sufficient "if the witness understands that to which reference is made");
Kentucky: 1900, Helfrich L. & M. Co. v. Bland, — Ky. —, 54 S. W. 728 (time, place, and person); 1911, Higgins v. Com., 142 Ky. 647, 134 S. W. 1135;
Maryland: 1867, Higgins v. Carlton, 28 Md. 138 (excluded, on the facts); 1873, Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. Andrews, 39 Md. 335, 339, 354 (admitted on the facts); 1896, Peterson v. State, 83 Md. 194, 34 Atl. 834 (time, place, and person);
Michigan: 1852, Smith v. People, 2 Mich. 415 (time, place, and person); 1880, Howard v. Patrick, 43 Mich. 121, 126, 5 N. W. 84 (time and place not sufficiently mentioned); 1895, People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149, 63 N. W. 196 (asking a stenographer to read from his minutes what the witness formerly testified about a certain transaction);
Minnesota: 1868, State v. Hoyt, 13 Minn. 142 (time, place, and person); 1887, Jones v. State, 65 Minn. 183 (time, place, and person);
Missouri: 1870, Spaunhorst v. Link, 46 Mo. 198 (time, place, and person); 1886, State v. Reed, 89 Mo. 170, 1 S. W. 225 (time, place and person); 1888, State v. Parker, 96 Mo. 393, 9 S. W. 728 ("time, place, etc.");
Nebraska: 1890, Wood River Bank v. Kelley, 29 Nebr. 597, 46 N. W. 86 (time, place, and person); 1892, Hanscom v. Burmond, 35 Nebr. 506, 53 N. W. 371 (same); 1903, Barton v. Shull, 70 Nebr. 324, 97 N. W. 292;
New Jersey: 1899, Union S. N. Bank v. Simmons, — N. J. Eq. —, 42 Atl. 489 (asking as to a part only will admit proof of that part only);
New York: 1847, People v. Austin, 1 Park. Cr. C. 159 (admitted, where all the circumstances were mentioned except the name of the person spoken to); 1855, Patchin v. Ins. Co., 13 N. Y. 270 (substance of the statement suffices); 1871, Sloan v. R. Co., 45 N. Y. 127 (same;

tion be adequately called to the alleged utterance, the trial Court to determine whether this has been done in a given case; this is the practice in England, Alabama, and Vermont, for example. (2) It may be treated as an invariable formula, the same for all cases; this is the unfortunate practice in most American courts.

§ 1030. Testimony of Absent or Deceased Witnesses; is the Requirement here also Indispensable? Suppose that it has become impossible to put the preliminary question on account of the witness' absence or decease, or some other circumstance rendering him now unavailable; may the question then be dispensed with and the self-contradiction be shown without further proviso? On this subject great difference of judicial opinion exists.

It is to be observed that we are not dealing here with the case of an ordinary witness who has left the court-room after testifying and cannot now be found for recall; that case is regarded as governed by the general rule already examined; the witness is theoretically still available for recall (post, § 1036), and it is the impeacher's own fault that he was not detained in court.[1] We leaving it to the trial Court's discretion); 1881, Hart v. Bridge Co., 84 N. Y. 59 ("time, place, and persons to whom or in whose presence");

North Carolina: 1903, State v. Crook, 133 N. C. 672, 45 S. E. 564 ("the rule must not be ironclad, and must not be reduced to a petty technicality"; here, the exact time held not necessary);
Oregon: 1879, State v. McDonald, 8 Or. 117 (statute applied); 1882, Sheppard v. Yocum, 10 Or. 408 (construing "persons present" to mean "person to whom the statement was made"); 1888, State v. Hunsaker, 16 Or. 499, 19 Pac. 605 (statute applied); 1896, State v. Ellsworth, 30 Or. 145, 47 Pac. 199 (time, place, and person; but person is unnecessary if the statement is otherwise sufficiently particularized); 1898, State v. Welch, 33 Or. 33, 54 Pac. 213 (question held specific enough); 1898, State v. Bartmess, 33 Or. 110, 54 Pac. 167 ("persons" need not be specified, in asking about former testimony); 1904, State v. Gray, 43 Or. 446, 74 Pac. 927;
South Carolina: 1881, State v. White, 15 S. C. 380, 390 (the place of making the statement must be mentioned);
South Dakota: 1896, State v. Hughes, 8 S. D. 338, 66 N. W. 1076 (not only time, place, and person, but also the specific statements; obscure);
Tennessee: 1851, Cheek v. Wheatly, 11 Humph. 558 ("time and occasion"; "time, place, and person"); 1873, Cole v. State, 6 Baxt. 239, 241 ("time, place, and person . . . and also the words or their substance", with other phrasings);
Texas: 1890, International & G. N. R. Co. v. Dyer, 76 Tex. 158, 13 S. W. 377 (time, place, and person);
Vermont: 1879, State v. Glynn, 51 Vt. 579 (particularity of question is much in the Court's discretion); 1921, Re Wood's Will, — Vt. —, 115 Atl. 231 (question not specifying time, place, or person, excluded on cross-examination; unsound; the only time to enforce the rule is when another witness is called to prove the former statement);
Virginia: 1902, Gordon v. Funkhouser, 100 Va. 675, 42 S. E. 677 (question naming time and person, but omitting place, held sufficient);
Washington: 1905, State v. Strodemier, 40 Wash. 608, 82 Pac. 915 (here the Court went to the other extreme, and rebuked a prosecuting attorney because in laying the foundation for impeachment of the defendant by his former testimony he asked the stenographer for the testimony "at the trial of the State of Washington v. Henry Strodemier"; this is finical: why might not the judge have tenderly suppressed all reference to the indictment in the present case, so as to prevent the unfortunate accused from being prejudiced by the grand jury's opinion of him);
Wisconsin: 1900, Miller v. State, 106 Wis. 156, 81 N. W. 1020; 1904, Wysocki v. Wisconsin L. I. & C. Co., 121 Wis. 96, 98 N. W. 950.

The following rulings seem reasonable: 1876, R. v. Mailloux, 16 N. Br. 498, 508, 511 (pointing out that "he cannot be asked generally to relate a conversation with another person, in order to enable the cross-examining counsel to discover" some variance); 1868, Callanan v. Shaw, 24 Ia. 454, supra (similar).

Distinguish the question whether to the other witness, testifying to the self-contradiction, the question as to its tenor may be leading (ante, § 779).

§ 1030. [1] But even here, where the calling party has culpably dismissed the witness out of reach, the rule may be dispensed with; post, § 1036, note.

are here concerned with cases where the witness' testimony is not given to the court orally and in person: thus, as required by the Hearsay Rule (post, § 1396), it is solely because he is personally unavailable that his testimony can be presented in this shape. There are at least five distinct situations of this sort: 1. Depositions; 2. Testimony at a Former Trial; 3. Dying Declarations, Statements against Interest, etc.; 4. Statements of an Attesting Witness to a Document; 5. Proposed Testimony admitted by Stipulation to avoid a Continuance. In all five cases the testimony cannot be offered in chief unless the witness is personally unavailable. But there is a distinction between the first two and the last three; in the former the impeacher has had the benefit of cross-examination, or an opportunity for it, for otherwise the testimony would not be admissible (post, § 1371); while in the latter the impeacher has had no such opportunity, the statements coming in as exceptions to the Hearsay Rule or as Judicial Admissions. It must also be observed, as to the first two, that, while at the moment in question the witness is unavailable, yet at the time of taking the deposition or of the former trial the impeacher may or may not have been aware of the alleged contradictory statement, — a material circumstance in the problem.

With these distinctions in mind, the arguments affecting each class of cases may be examined.

§ 1031. Same: (1) Depositions. The argument in favor of dispensing with the preliminary question is that, as the impeacher usually cannot know precisely what answers the deponent will give, he cannot be prepared at the time of the deposition to inquire as to contradictory statements, and he will therefore be cut off absolutely and unconditionally from any sort of impeachment by self-contradiction, unless the present rule be dispensed with:

1847, DAVIS, J., in Downer v. Dana, 19 Vt. 346: "The rule thus applied [of the necessity of calling attention] would impose on a party wishing the privilege of impeachment the necessity of attending, in person or by counsel, at the taking of every deposition to be used against him, with or without the State, which on any other account he might not be disposed to do. Besides, in many cases the deponent may be wholly unknown to him; he may have no knowledge of the matter to be testified to until actually given; the notice of the taking may be barely sufficient to enable him to reach the place perhaps hundreds of miles distant, in season to be present. It would be idle under such circumstances to expect a party to be prepared to go through with this preliminary ceremony. The result would be, he would be least able to shield himself against partial or false testimony precisely when such protection is most needed. It is true, the deponent, being absent from the trial, hears not the impeaching testimony and cannot be called upon to contradict or explain it. This may be an evil, but it is unavoidable from the nature of the case. It would be a worse evil to deny the right of impeaching depositions unless under regulations which would reduce the right to a nullity."

1872, AGNEW, J., in Walden v. Finch, 70 Pa. 463: "The practice has arisen out of regard to the witness himself, to enable him to explain any seeming discrepancy in his statements. Yet it must necessarily have its just boundary, or otherwise it leads to the sacrifice of the interests of the parties litigant. In some cases a Court would feel bound to require the witness intended to be contradicted to be first examined and his attention called to the supposed contradiction. Yet there are others where an unbending rule to this effect would work great hardship. Thus, where, as in this case, the witnesses have already been examined under a rule or a commission at a distant place preparatory to the trial, it would often be difficult to foresee, sometimes impossible to foreknow, the questions to be put to the witness on cross-examination in order to lay ground to contradict him. Indeed, in such cases unworthy witnesses might be purposely examined at a distance in order to prevent the ground from being laid. The names of the witnesses are seldom given who are examined under rules within the State, and even when examined under commissions the witnesses are not always named. It would be unjust to the party in such a case to deprive him of the opportunity of contradicting unworthy witnesses. We are therefore of opinion that those decisions of our own Court are to be preferred which hold that the question is one of sound discretion in the judge trying the cause upon the circumstances before him. Where the witnesses are all present, and the contradiction tends seriously to impair the credibility of the witness or to reflect upon his character, a Court would feel bound to give him the opportunity of explanation or denial before suffering his testimony to be impeached by counter-statements. Under different circumstances a Court would feel it proper to relax the rule."

The answer offered to this argument is (1) that practically the opponent does know beforehand, in the ordinary instance, what any important witness is expected to testify to, and he is therefore sufficiently able to learn in advance about self-contradictions, and (2) that, even conceding that an inconvenience may occur, yet this is far outbalanced by the abuses which would be possible if alleged self-contradictions could be brought into Court at a time when no adequate opportunity remains for denial or contradiction:

1855, DANIEL, J., in Unis v. Charlton's Adm'r, 12 Gratt. 495: "The principal reason assigned by the learned judge who delivered the opinion of the Court [in Downer v. Dana, supra] for refusing to apply the rule to depositions is that such a practice would impose on a party wishing the privilege of impeachment the necessity of attending in person or by attorney at the taking of every deposition to be used against him within or without the State, which on any other account he might be disposed to do. This argument 'ab inconvenienti' is not wholly without show of reason when urged in behalf of the exercise of the privilege of impeachment by a party who has had no notice of the taking, or who, though notified, did not attend at the taking of a deposition which he seeks to discredit, but seems to me devoid of weight when extended to the case of a party who was present at the taking of the deposition, and had thus the same opportunity of cross-examining the witness and calling his attention to the imputed inconsistent statements that he would or might have had in case the witness had been examined in court. . . . The rule proceeds from a sense of justice to the witness; . . . these reasons, it is obvious, apply just as forcibly to depositions as to oral examinations in court. And indeed there are considerations which urge the application of the rule to the case of an impeachment of a witness who has given his testimony in the form of a deposition, which may not arise in an effort to discredit a witness who has been examined in court. In the latter case the witness usually remains in or about the court till the trial is concluded; and if an assault is made upon him by proof of inconsistent statements, he might, even before the adoption of the rule requiring him to be first examined as to such statements, be recalled and re-examined by the party in whose favor he had testified; and he may thus have an opportunity of repelling or explaining away the force of the assault; whereas the witness whose deposition has been taken is usually absent from the scene of the trial, and has no shield against attacks on his veracity other than that provided by the rule. . . . There are no peculiar considerations calling upon us to exempt this case from the operation of the rule; for it appears from the deposition that the plaintiff's counsel was not only present at the taking, but exercised on the occasion his privilege of cross-examining the witness."

1864, BRINKERHOFF, C. J., in Runyan v. Price, 15 Oh. St. 14: "It seems to me that a reason, in addition to any that I have yet heard stated, may be found in favor of our conclusion in the following considerations. 'Dead men tell no tales'; and if the rule be once established that the testimony of a deceased witness may be impeached by giving in evidence declarations alleged to have been made by him out of court differing from those contained in his testimony and when he has had no opportunity for explanation, when all opportunity for explanation by him has passed away, when few will have the motive and none the power to vindicate his integrity and truthfulness such as he would have if living, it seems to me that temptations to perjury and subornation would be not a little increased by the comparative impunity with which those crimes might be committed. Such declarations at best are the lowest kind of evidence, and the administration of justice will suffer little in any case by their exclusion; while, if admitted and they are falsely alleged against a dead witness, it would hardly be possible ever to disprove them."

It is hard to choose between these opposing considerations.[1] The truth

§ 1031. [1] Federal: 1840, McKinney v. Neil, 1 McLean 547 (deposition 'ex parte'; "it was in the power of the defendant on reading the deposition, to move for a continuance on the ground that he wished to take the deposition of the witness in regard to the statements, with a view of afterwards contradicting him"; question held indispensable); 1853, Conrad v. Griffey, 16 How. 38, 45, 47 (question held indispensable); 1889, Ayers v. Watson, 132 U. S. 394, 401, 10 Sup. 116 (there had been four jury-trials of the case; the testimony of one Johnson had been twice taken by the defendants by deposition, and the plaintiffs had cross-examined him on the deposition; before the fourth trial he died; and upon the fourth trial the plaintiffs offered, as inconsistent with his former-trial deposition used by the defendants, another deposition of his, taken on a trial between other parties, many years before any of the above four trials. The Court do not definitely say that even where it is impossible to call attention to the prior statement, the omission to do so would be fatal, but they declare it fatal in this case where Johnson's deposition had been twice taken, "and no reference made to his former deposition, nor any attempt to call attention to it"); Alabama: 1847, Holman v. Bank, 12 Ala. 409 (Ormond, J., says "the rule by the very terms in which it is proposed applies to the oral examination of witnesses; . . . it cannot in the nature of things apply to such a case as this [chancery depositions], because until the last deposition is taken it cannot be known that there will be any discrepancy between them"; while in Howell v. Reynolds, 12 Ala. 131, he had said "we can perceive no reason why a witness testifying in this mode [deposition of a party answering interrogatories] should not be entitled to the same protection as if he had testified orally in the presence of the Court and jury"; the self-contradiction of the learned judge (commented on in Doe v. Wilkinson, infra) disappears when we observe that in the Holman case he had before him a Chancery suit, in which presumably the depositions were kept secret and then all "published" at once, and of which his remarks therefore were strictly true; so that his ruling in that case at least was unimpeachable); 1860, Doe v. Wilkinson, 35 Ala. 470 (question indispensable; repudiating Holman v. Bank, supra); Arkansas: 1881, Griffith v. State, 37 Ark. 330 (question indispensable); Colorado: 1895, Ryan v. People, 21 Colo. 119, 40 Pac. 777 (question indispensable); Connecticut: 1830, Daggett v. Tolman, 8 Conn. 171, 177 (question dispensed with, the deponent not having been cross-examined); 1906, Chuny v. Hotchkiss, 79 Conn. 104, 63 Atl. 947, semble (the trial Court has discretion; the question not indispensable where there is no danger of surprise); Georgia: 1849, Johnson v. Kinsey, 7 Ga. 430 (question indispensable); 1849, Williams v. Chapman, 7 Ga. 470 (same); 1854, Wright v. Hicks, 15 Ga. 167 (same); 1901, Raleigh & G. R. Co. v. Bradshaw, 113 Ga. 862, 39 S. E. 555 (excluded, even for a contradictory utterance after the deposition was taken); Kansas: 1878, Greer v. Higgins, 20 Kan. 424 (the contradiction was in another deposition taken two years before the other, in a related action; question held indispensable); Louisiana: 1858, Fletcher v. Henley, 13 La. An. 192 (a second commission was sent to call the attention of the deponent to contradictions, but he could not be found; admitted in view of this "seasonable, though fruitless effort"); 1898, State v. Wiggins, 50 La. An. 330, 23 So. 334 (question indispensable); Maryland: 1863, Matthews v. Dare, 20 Md. 269 (question indispensable); Missouri: 1841, Able v. Shields, 7 Mo. 123, 124 (question indispensable); 1865, Gregory v. Cheatham, 36 Mo. 161 (question indispensable, even where the statement was subsequent to the deposition); 1913, Ebert v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 174 Mo. App. 45, 160 S. W. 34 (rule properly applied to a prior written statement by deponent); New York: 1838, Davis v. Kimball, 19 Wend. 441 (question held seems to be that either rule, if inflexible, will occasionally work hardship. It is best to take the middle path, and to leave the matter to the determination of the trial Court, based on the needs of each case. But it is not to be wondered that the authorities are divided.

§ 1032. Same: (2) Testimony at a Former Trial. Where the testimony to be impeached is that given at a former trial by a person now unavailable, the arguments for and against dispensing with the preliminary question are in effect the same as in the case of a deposition, — except that there is less reason for favoring the impeaching party, since he would have had a better opportunity upon a trial than at a deposition to learn of the contradictory statements. The precedents are few, but more harmonious in favoring the requirement.[1] It is not clear whether a given Court would necessarily decide the question in the same way both for a deposition and for former testimony.

indispensable, even where the contradiction was posterior in time; the reversal of the judgment in 25 Wend. 260 does not seem to have affected this point); 1856, Stacy v. Graham, 14 N. Y. 498 (deposition 'de bene'; here inconsistent statements, as well as a confession of the falsity of the deposition, were offered; the evidence being treated from both points of view; question held indispensable); Ohio: 1864, Runyan v. Price, 15 Oh. St. 14 (question indispensable); 1851, Hazard v. R. Co., 2 R. I. 62 (here the statute did not require notice and opportunity to cross-examine for depositions taken 100 miles distant; the Court said, "The question is whether this is an inflexible rule. . . . The defendant could not cross-examine the witness. . . . If he has no right to show that the witness has contradicted himself, he loses an important right without any fault of his"); Texas: 1879, Weir v. McGee, 25 Tex. Suppl. 20, 32 (question indispensable); Vermont: 1847, Downer v. Dana, 19 Vt. 338, semble (question not always necessary; see quotation supra); 1898, Billings v. Ins. Co., 70 Vt. 477, 41 Atl. 516 (deposition; calling attention to inconsistent letter, not necessary); 1915, Comstock's Adm'r v. Jacobs, 89 Vt. 133, 94 Atl. 497 (deposition; Downer v. Dana followed); Virginia: 1855, Unis v. Charlton's Adm'r, 12 Gratt. 495 (see quotation supra); Washington: 1903, Brown v. Gillett, 33 Wash. 264, 74 Pac. 386 (deposition; self-contradiction not admissible without asking); 1913, Scandinavian-American Bank v. Long, 75 Wash. 270, 134 Pac. 913 (a letter not allowed to be used to contradict a deposition for lack of the prior warning; but the date of the letter does not appear; careless opinion).

§ 1032. [1] Federal: 1894, Mattox v. U. S., 156 U. S. 237, 245, 15 Sup. 337, Shiras, Gray, and White, JJ., diss. (declarations made after the former trial; question indispensable); 1897, Carver v. U. S., 164 U. S. 694, 17 Sup. 228 (recognizing the Mattox case obiter; question indispensable); California: 1901, People v. Compton, 132 Cal. 484, 64 Pac. 849 (question indispensable); Georgia: 1895, Sharp v. Hicks, 94 Ga. 624, 21 S. E. 208 (question indispensable); Kentucky: 1883, Craft v. Com., 81 Ky. 252 (question indispensable; here the impeaching evidence was a confession of the falsity of the testimony); 1910, Wilson v. Com., Ky., 130 S. W. 793 (question required; no authority cited); Massachusetts: 1821, Tucker v. Welsh, 17 Mass. 164 (Parker, C. J.: "Suppose a witness who has once testified should afterwards acknowledge the falsity of his statements, and then die; the party interested in his testimony might upon another trial prove what he had once said upon the stand under oath; and shall not the other party be permitted to prove that what he said was a falsehood?"); Michigan: 1907, People v. Peck, 147 Mich. 84, 110 N. W. 495 (deceased witness' testimony at a former trial; rule enforced); Minnesota: 1906, Lerum v. Geving, 97 Minn. 269, 105 N. W. 967 (Mattox v. U. S., infra, followed); Missouri: 1900, Ely Walker D. G. Co. v. Mansur, 87 Mo. App. 105 (question not indispensable, in impeaching former testimony preserved in a bill of exceptions made admissible by Rev. St. 1899, § 3149, R. S. 1919, § 5401, cited post, § 1668, n. 2; careful opinion by Goode, J.); Nebraska: 1905, Omaha St. R. Co. v. Boesen, 74 Nebr. 764, 105 N. W. 303 (testimony at a second trial offered on the sixth trial; the testimony at the first trial, excluded, for lack of asking at the second trial); New York: 1865, Hubbard v. Briggs, 31 N. Y. 536 (question indispensable); 1892, McCullough v. Dobson, 133 N. Y. 124, 30 N. E. 641 (question indispensable, even where the contradiction is posterior in time); Porto Rico: 1904, People v. Ruiz, 7 P. R. 129 (question dispensable; here the prosecution had introduced one of two statements in its possession, and the defendant offered the other); 1913, Rodriguez v. Porto Rico R. L. & P. Co., 19 P. R. 613 (affirming People v. Ruiz, supra).

§ 1033. Same: (3) Dying Declaration; (4) Attesting Witness, and other Hearsay Witnesses. (3) When the testimony to be impeached is a dying declaration, or other statement exceptionally admitted without the test of cross-examination (post, § 1420), the situation of the impeacher is radically different. (a) In the first place, while for depositions and former testimony he has always theoretically — and usually in practice — had at least one opportunity to ask the preliminary question yet here it is clear that he can never have had that opportunity; so that if the argument of hardship is to avail in his favor, there is here the extreme case of hardship. (b) Since by hypothesis the statements admitted have not been subjected to cross-examination, the law deprives the impeacher, if it insists on requiring the preliminary question, of two of his most important weapons of defence, at one and the same time, — cross-examination and prior self-contradictions. It has been apparent on all hands that this would be pushing the rule too far; and almost all Courts have agreed, therefore, that a self-contradiction may in this situation be offered, although the preliminary question has of course not been asked and can never be:[1]

1892, GRUBB, J., in State v. Lodge, 9 Houst. 542, 33 Atl. 312: "The objection made always is that the accused is deprived of the opportunity of calling the attention of the person who supposed himself to be about to die to certain facts, which, if brought to his attention, he might modify his statement or make none at all; that there is no opportunity to test his judgment, the strength of his recollection, or his bias. But the law says that it insures justice in the greater number of cases, and that it is necessary to let it in, although it does deprive the defendant of testing the memory of the witness and his truthfulness by cross-examination. Then it is as though it says: 'Very well, if you are deprived of that opportunity of ascertaining if that witness was wrong, and of bringing any witness to contradict him, when we let in the dying declarations, without an oath, you ought to have the right to put in testimony of previous declarations, without laying the ground.' . . . Therefore, as dying declarations are admitted on the ground of necessity, ought not proof of contradictory or inconsistent statements by the deceased to be also admitted on the same ground?"

§ 1033. [1] Accord: Federal: 1897, Carver v. U. S., 164 U. S. 694, 17 Sup. 228 (distinguishing the case of a contradiction of former testimony, because there the benefit of cross-examination has been had; Brewer and Peckham, JJ., dissenting); Alabama: 1848, Moore v. State, 12 Ala. 764, 767 (point not raised); 1904, Gregory v. State, 140 Ala. 16, 37 So. 259; California: 1863, People v. Lawrence, 21 Cal. 368, 371; 1901, People v. Amaya, 134 Cal. 531, 66 Pac. 794; Colorado: 1911, Salas v. People, 51 Colo. 461, 118 Pac. 992 (Garrigues, J., diss.); Delaware: 1906, State v. Fleetwood, 6 Pen. Del. 153, 65 Atl. 772; 1907, State v. Uzzo, 6 Pen. Del. 212, 65 Atl. 775; Georgia: 1884, Battle v. State, 74 Ga. 101, 104; 1908, Pyle v. State, 4 Ga. App. 811, 62 S. E. 540 (following Battle v. State); Illinois: 1898, Dunn v. People, 172 Ill. 582, 50 N. E. 137; Indiana: 1900, Green v. State, 154 Ind. 655, 57 N. E. 637; Louisiana: 1904, State v. Charles, 111 La. 933, 36 So. 29; Mississippi: 1850, Nelms v. State, 13 Sm. & M. Miss. 505; Oregon: 1893, State v. Shaffer, 23 Or. 555, 560, 32 Pac. 545; 1908, State v. Fuller, 52 Or. 42, 96 Pac. 456; Tennessee: 1836, M'Pherson v. State, 9 Yerg. 279 (point not raised); 1891, Morelock v. State, 90 Tenn. 528, 18 S. W. 258; Texas: 1906, Arnwine v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 254, 96 S. W. 4); 1906, McCorquodale v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. 344, 98 S. W. 879 (excluded on the facts); Washington: 1906, State v. Mayo, 42 Wash. 540, 85 Pac. 251.

Contra: 1901, Hamilton v. Smith, 74 Conn. 374, 50 Atl. 884 (declarations of J., deceased, not admitted to contradict other declarations of his already admitted under the Hearsay exception for boundary-statements; but the exclusion is placed on the principle of 'post litem motam', which however does not and was never before supposed to have any application to impeaching statements; but this is explained in State v. Segar, 1921, 96 Conn. 428, 114 Atl. 389, thus by Gager, J.: "We do not understand that the 'post litem motam' rule applies [to such statements]. . . . In the citation [by W. on Evidence] we think the opinion of Judge Baldwin in Hamilton v. Smith is misconstrued"); 1870, Wroe v. State, 20 Oh. St. 469; 1900, State v. Taylor, 56 S. C. 360, 34 S. E. 939; State v. Stuckey, 56 S. C. 576, 35 S. E. 263; 1918, State v. Brown, 108 S. C. 490, 95 S. E. 61 (adhering to State v. Taylor and State v. Stuckey, supra).

(4) Attesting Witness, and other Hearsay Witnesses. The production of an attested document, the attesting witness being unavailable, and the proof of his handwriting, in effects admits the hearsay attestation of the witness that the document was properly executed (post, § 1505). This being so, the foregoing principle ought to apply, and a self-contradictory statement ought to be allowed to be shown, in spite of the fact that the preliminary question has not been and cannot be asked. This was the original English practice,[2] although the rulings hardly avail as precedents, since the requirement of a preliminary question dates only from 1820; but the practice is theoretically and upon policy correct, and has been approved in this country:[3]

1848, GIBSON, C. J., in Hays v. Harden, 9 Pa. St. 158: "I admit that there is force in this view of the case, and that such testimony calls for vigilance and strict scrutiny. But I cannot agree that this is a reason for the exclusion of such testimony altogether, thereby in many cases destroying the possibility of exposing fraud, forgery, and villainy of every description, so apt to be practiced on persons of weak understandings, particularly when debilitated by sickness and disease. It is better that we should incur the risk mentioned than that we should sanction fraud and imposition. The remarks of Baron Parke [in Stobart v. Dryden] show a distrust of Courts and juries, and if pushed to an excess would be an argument against all testimony whatever, which we all know has been and will continue to be abused; but that would be a flimsy reason for excluding it altogether. . . . It is not difficult to see how easy it would be to spirit away a subscribing witness on the eve of trial, prove his handwriting, thereby giving full effect to his testimony, and then excluding all testimony of his repeated declarations that the bond or will was a forgery or a conspiracy to cheat or defraud. Establish this doctrine, and we shall not be without instances of attempts to baffle justice by removing the witness and thereby preventing the introduction of proof which the guilty know would destroy their claim."

But this sound doctrine was later repudiated in England.[4]

[2] 1761, Wright v. Littler, 3 Burr. 1244, 1255, Lord Mansfield, C. J. (alleged confession of forgery by the witness); 1808, Durham v. Beaumont, 1 Camp. 210, Ellenborough, L. C. J., mentioning a ruling of Heath J. ("This confession [of the forgery of the will] only supplied the place of what might have been obtained from cross-examination, had the witness survived; and the propriety of admitting it was never questioned"); 1820, Doe v. Ridgway, 4 B. & Ald. 53, 55, per Bayley, J. (declarations as to a forgery of the instrument, admissible, because their benefit could have been had if he were alive).

[3] Accord: 1910, Mobley v. Lyon, 134 Ga. 125, 67 S. E. 668 (careful opinion by Atkinson, J.; Evans, P. J., and Holden, J., diss.); 1842, Losee v. Losee, 2 Hill N. Y. 609, note by N. Hill, afterwards judge; 1855, Reformed Church v. Ten Eyck, 25 N. J. L. 40, 47; 1860, Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 274, 294; 1848, Harden v. Hays, 9 Pa. 151, 155 (quoted supra); 1831, M'Elwee v. Sutton, 2 Bail. S. C. 129 (that the witness "had frequently said, and even made affidavit, that the deed had been antedated in order to protect the property", admitted); 1846, Smith v. Asbell, 2 Strobh. S. C. 141, 145 (attesting witness out of State and examined by commission; self-contradiction received without prior asking; point not raised).

Left undecided: 1878, Botts v. Wood, 56 Miss. 136, 139; 1890, Hesdra's Will, 119 N. Y. 615, 616, 23 N. E. 555.

[4] 1836, Stobart v. Dryden, 1 M. & W. 615 (declarations of a deceased attesting witness M., whose handwriting had been proved, were offered as amounting to an acknowledgment

Wherever any other statements are admitted, by exception to the Hearsay rule — for example, statements of facts against interest — the same principle is applicable, and the requirement of prior asking should be dispensed with.[5]

§ 1034. Same: (5) Proposed Testimony admitted by Stipulation to avoid a Continuance. Where by consent of the opponent, given in order to avoid a continuance, the proposed testimony of an absent witness is received, in the form of the party's affidavit of the tenor of the expected testimony (post, § 2595), it would seem that the rule of prior asking should be dispensed with, because here, as in the foregoing hearsay statements, there has been no opportunity for testing the witness by cross-examination.[1] Where, however (as by some statutes), the opponent is obliged to admit (as a condition of avoiding the continuance) that the proposed testimony is true, the self-contradiction would be excluded, because all modes of impeachment are implicitly foregone by him.[2]

§ 1035. Self-Contradiction contained in other Sworn Testimony; is the Preliminary Question here necessary? Where the contradictory statement that is to be used is contained in a deposition or other sworn statement made at a prior time by the witness himself, it has been often argued, and sometimes decided, that the preliminary question is here unnecessary, because its authenticity cannot be denied by the witness and he needs no preparation for disproving it.[1] This argument, however, loses sight of the double pur-of forgery; excluded, in an opinion whose fallacies are too radical to be worth refuting); 1909, Speer v. Speer, 146 Ia. 6, 123 N. W. 176 (deceased attesting witness' declarations negativing testator's capacity, excluded; careful opinion by McClain, J., following Stobart v. Dryden; the fallacy of the opinion seems to lie in its statement that "the will stands as to the mental capacity of testator upon a presumption of law regardless of any testimony by subscribing witnesses to that effect"; the better view, post, § 1511, n. 4, does not support this); 1864, Runyan v. Price, 15 Oh. St. 6 (contradictory declarations of a deceased attesting witness whose deposition had been used).

[5] Quoted, but held not applicable: 1912, Gordon v. Munn, 87 Kan. 624, 125 Pac. 1 (deceased husband's statements as to an antenuptial contract).

§ 1034. [1] Accord: 1878, State v. Miller, 67 Mo. 604, 608 (under statute); 1904, Nagel v. St. Louis T. Co., 104 Mo. App. 438, 79 S. W. 502; 1902, Hutmacher v. R. G. & E. Co., 63 S. C. 123, 40 S. E. 1029.

Contra: 1857, Pool v. Devens, 30 Ala. 676; 1900, Gafford v. State, 125 Ala. 1, 28 So. 406; 1904, Gregory v. State, 140 Ala. 16, 37 So. 259; 1905, Funderburk v. State, 145 Ala. 661, 39 So. 672; 1867, State v. Shannehan, 22 Ia. 437; 1870, Williamson v. People, 29 Ia. 458; 1902, State v. Guy, 107 La. 573, 31 So. 1012; 1885, Fulton v. Hughes, 63 Miss. 61, 66; 1915, National Council v. Owen, 47 Okl. 464, 149 Pac. 231 (self-contradictions excluded); 1921, Coffey v. Jenkins, — S. C. —, 109 S. E. 117 (excluded, unless the party opposing continuance expressly reserves the right to contradict and this reservation is assented to); 1894, State v. Carter, 8 Wash. 272, 276, 36 Pac. 29.

[2] 1881, Rhea v. Deaver, 85 N. C. 337, 339.

§ 1035. [1] Colorado: 1888, Thompson v. Gregor, 11 Colo. 533, 19 Pac. 461 (deposition: here the wrong reason is given that the answer might incriminate by involving perjury); Delaware: 1838, Rash v. Purnel, 2 Harringt. 448, 456 (former testimony at a probate issue, admitted; no asking mentioned); Georgia: 1849, Williams v. Chapman, 7 Ga. 469 (question not required for a deposition in the same cause; the Court also denied the necessity of asking in any case where the supposed self-contradiction was made under oath or even in writing; this theory, however, is inconsistent with Stamper v. Griffin, 12 Ga. 454 (1853), and is not heard of again); 1853, Bryan v. Walton, 14 Ga. 196 (question not required for deposition in the same cause); 1860, Molyneaux v. Collier, 30 Ga. 745 (same); 1886, Klug v. State, 77 Ga. 736 (question not required for the defendant's own testimony before a magistrate); Code 1910, § 5881, P. C. § 1052 (asking required, "unless they pose of the preliminary question, i.e. not merely to allow preparation for disproof, but to allow an opportunity for explanations if the statement is admitted genuine. There is still just as much need for this opportunity to explain, whether the statement was made in a deposition or not. The doctrine has usually been repudiated.[2] are written statements made under oath in connection with some judicial proceedings"); 1890, Georgia R. & B. Co. v. Smith, 85 Ga. 530, 11 S. E. 859 (rule of asking applies to former testimony reported in a brief of evidence not read over or assented to by him); Vermont: 1859, Robinson v. Hutchinson, 31 Vt. 449 (question not required for a deposition).

§ 1036. Recall for putting the Question; Showing a Writing to the Witness. (1) Where the impeacher is in danger of losing the use of his evidence by not having asked the preliminary question on cross-examination, the witness may of course be recalled in order to be asked. But this recall, like all others (post, §§ 1867, 1899) is in the discretion of the trial Court,[1] — a discretion which will usually permit the recall where there has been nothing distinctly culpable on the part of the impeacher.

[2] Alabama: 1851, Powell v. State, 19 Ala. 5[illegible] 1860, Doe v. Wilkinson, 35 Ala. 471; [illegible]dford v. Barclay, 39 Ala. 37; these [illegible]s, repudiating Holman v. Bank, 12 [illegible]1847), per Ormond, J., hold that the qu[illegible] is necessary even where the contradiction is in a deposition; but in the later cases (1842, Hester v. Lumpkin, 4 Ala. 512, semble; 1846, Carville v. Stout, 10 Ala. 802, semble; 1860, Doe v. Wilkinson, 35 Ala. 471) an exception is made for a deposition taken in the same suit and one of several, for here it is in effect merely part of the same oral examination; California: 1872, People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 458 (question required for deposition before a magistrate in the same case); 1903, People v. Witty, 138 Cal. 576, 72 Pac. 177 (affidavit acknowledging the incorrectness of his deposition; asking required); Iowa: 1862, Samuels v. Griffith, 13 Ia. 106 (question required, even for deposition in the same case); 1865, State v. Ostrander, 18 Ia. 456 (question required for former testimony before a grand jury); 1867, State v. Shannehan, 22 Ia. 437 (question required for a deposition); 1871, State v. Collins, 32 Ia. 41 (same as Samuels v. Griffith); Louisiana: 1850, Fletcher v. Fletcher, 5 La. An. 408 (deposition); Minnesota: 1890, Hammond v. Dike, 42 Minn. 27, 44 N. W. 61 (question required for a deposition); Nebraska: 1892, Hanscom v. Burmood, 35 Nebr. 504, 506, 53 N. W. 371 (question required for former testimony); Tennessee: 1852, Nelson v. State, 2 Swan 237, 259 (before a committing magistrate; asking required); 1874, Titus v. State, 7 Baxt. 132, 137 (same).

§ 1036. [1] CANADA: 1921, R. v. Schiraba, 62 D. L. R. 308, Man. UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1841, State v. Marler, 2 Ala. 46 1874, Hall v. State, 51 id. 9, 14 (but not discretionary where the cross-examination has been suspended by consent); 1883, Bell v. State, 74 Ala. 420; 1890, Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Vance, 93 Ala. 144, 147, 9 So. 574; 1904, Vann v. State, 140 Ala. 122, 37 So. 158; 1906, Hammond v. State, 147 Ala. 79, 41 So. 761; 1906, Pitman v. State, 148 Ala. 612, 42 So. 993; California: 1875, People v. Keith, 50 Cal. 137, 139; 1896, People v. Shaw, 111 Cal. 171, 43 Pac. 593; Florida: 1903, Bryan v. State, 45 Fla. 8, 34 So. 243; 1908, Johnson v. State, 55 Fla. 46, 46 So. 155; Illinois: 1905, United States Wringer Co. v. Cooney, 214 Ill. 520, 73 N. E. 803; 1907, Hirsch & S. I. & R. Co. v. Coleman, 227 Ill. 149, 81 N. E. 21; Iowa: 1859, State v. Ruhl, 8 Ia. 447, 450; Louisiana: 1896, State v. Goodbier, 48 La. An. 770, 19 So. 755; 1904, State v. Brown, 111 La. 696, 35 So. 818; 1912, State v. Owens, 130 La. 746, 58 So. 557; 1916, State v. Rogers, 138 La. 867, 70 So. 863; Minnesota: 1900, Cooper v. Hayward, 79 Minn. 23, 81 N. W. 514 (here the witness was recalled to cure an insufficient inquiry already made); Missouri: 1886, State v. Reed, 89 Mo. 171, 1 S. W. 225; Pennsylvania: 1853, Com. v. Hart, 21 Pa. 495, 502; South Dakota: 1899, Ashton v. Ashton, 11 S. D. 610, 79 M. W. 1001; Virginia: 1905, Savage v. Bowen, 103 Va. 540, 49 S. E. 668.

If the recall has been made impossible by the act of the party first producing the witness, the rule requiring asking may then properly be deemed dispensed with, on the theory of waiver: 1820, Queen Caroline's Trial, Linn's ed., III, 112, 119, 159 (a witness for the prosecution, not asked on cross-examination about a prior statement, but at the end of his examination sent abroad by the prosecution; prior statement allowed to be proved, the recall for asking being made impossible by the prosecution's act).

Whether an accused taking the stand voluntarily may be thus recalled may involve a question of the waiver of the privilege against self-crimination (post, § 2276).

(2) Where the contradiction is contained in a writing by the witness, the writing is required, by the rule in The Queen's Case to be shown to the witness before he can be asked whether he uttered the statement contained therein. This rule, unsound both on principle and in policy, purports to rest upon the principle that documentary originals must be produced. It can therefore best be examined under that head (post, § 1259).[2]

§ 1037. Contradiction Admissible, no matter what the Answer to the Preliminary Question. A notion that for a time obtained with some English judges before the principle of Self-Contradiction was thoroughly differentiated, and a notion not uncommon to-day at our Bar, is that the witness' answer to the preliminary question is the testimonial statement against which the impeaching contradictory statement is to be set off as inconsistent. Two fallacies, now generally discredited by the Courts, have cropped out as the result of this underlying notion.

One fallacy is that if the witness, when asked whether he did not say such-and-such a thing to the contrary, does not respond by some assertion — either by failing to remember or by otherwise evading the question — then the contrary statement cannot be offered, because there is no assertion to contradict.[1] In truth, however, his answer to the preliminary question is wholly immaterial. He has already made on the stand an assertion A; we wish to show that he has elsewhere made the opposite assertion A′; and, before introducing the latter we must ask him whether he made it; this preliminary question is simply to give warning and lay the foundation required by the rule; the contradiction already exists (if at all) between the assertions A and A′, and thus his answer to the preliminary question is of no consequence as forming a contradiction. It is the question alone that is essential; if the warning has been given, that is all that the law is concerned with:

1889, HEMMINGWAY, J., in Billings v. State, 52 Ark. 303, 12 S. W. 574: "[The cross-examination] is required in order that he may explain apparent contradictions and reconcile seeming conflicts and inconsistencies. If he cannot remember the fact, he is unable to do what the law affords him an opportunity to do. . . . The testimony is discredited because he affirms to-day what he denied yesterday; the legitimate effect of such contradiction cannot depend upon his power to remember it."

It follows that the mere failure of the witness to recollect, when asked the preliminary question, whether he made the other statement does not prevent the impeacher from offering it;[2] nor, for the same reason,

[1] But of course the oral asking is not necessary where the contradictory statement is in a writing shown to the witness as required by the rule in The Queen's Case (post, § 1259): 1903, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Wade, 206 Ill. 523, 69 N. E. 565.

§ 1037. [1] 1830, Tindal, C. J., in Pain v. Beeston, 1 M. & Rob. 20; 1840, Abinger, L. C. B., in Long v. Hitchcock, 9 C. & P. 619 ("They cannot call one man to contradict another unless that other swears positively"); 1919, Bigham v. State, 203 Ala. 162, 82 So. 192 (approving Southern R. Co. v. Williams).

[2] Besides the following authorities, the statutes cited ante, § 1028, usually declare the rule:

ENGLAND: 1837, Parke, B., in Crowley v. Page, 7 C. & P. 789, whose ruling was accepted in subsequent practice ("If the rule were not so, you could never contradict a witness who said he could not remember");

does it matter whether in any other way his answer lacks in positiveness.[3]

Even where the witness admits having made the other statements, this does not prevent the opponent from offering it in evidence by his own witnesses;[4] for he may prefer to have it clearly brought out and emphasized, and it would be unfair to restrict him to the unemphatic mode of proving it by the witness' admission and to subject him to the necessity of disputing whether the admission has been full and exact.[5] The purpose of the question is not to prove

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1910, Searway v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 184 Fed. 716; 1922, Woods v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 279 Fed. 706; Alabama: 1877, Payne v. State, 60 Ala. 88; 1897, Southern R. Co. v. Williams, 113 Ala. 620, 21 So. 328; 1899, Henson v. State, 120 Ala. 316, 25 So. 23; 1919, Bigham v. State, 203 Ala. 162, 82 So. 192; Arkansas: 1889, Billings v. State, 52 Ark. 303, 12 S. W. 574; Florida: Fla. Rev. Gen. St. 1919, § 2711 (if the witness "does not distinctly admit that he has made such statement", it may be proved); Georgia: 1846, Sealey v. State, 1 Kelly 218; 1911, Waycaster v. State, 136 Ga. 95, 70 S. E. 883; Illinois: 1860, Ray v. Bell, 24 Ill. 451; Indiana: Burns Ann. St. 1914, § 532; Iowa: 1897, State v. Clark, 100 Ia. 47, 69 N. W. 257; Kansas: 1868, Lewis v. State, 4 Kan. 309; Louisiana: 1895, State v. Johnson, 47 La. An. 1225, 17 So. 789; Michigan: 1852, Smith v. People, 2 Mich. 415; 1892, Pickard v. Bryant, 92 Mich. 433, 52 N. W. 788; 1897, Pringle v. Miller, 111 Mich. 663, 70 N. W. 345; Missouri: 1877, Peck v. Ritchey, 66 Mo. 119; New Hampshire: 1860, Nute v. Nute, 41 N. H. 67; 1863, Sanderson v. Nashua, 44 N. H. 494; New Mexico: Annot. St. 19155, § 2178 ("If a witness . . . does not distinctly admit that he did make such statement, proof may be given that he did in fact make it"); Oregon: 1902, State v. Deal, 41 Or. 437, 70 Pac. 532; Pennsylvania: 1867, Gregg v. Jamison, 55 Pa. 471; South Carolina: 1896, State v. Kelley, 46 S. C. 55, 24 S. E. 60; Tennessee: 1873, Cole v. State, 6 Baxt. 240; Texas: 1860, Weir v. McGee, 25 Tex. Suppl. 25, 32; 1879, Johnson v. Brown, 51 Tex. 65, 75; Virginia: 1864, Forde's Case, 16 Gratt. 558; West Virginia: 1918, State v. Worley, 82 W. Va. 350, 96 S. E. 56 (overruling Robinson v. Pitzer, 3 W. Va. 335).

Suppose, however, that in the original assertion A (not in answer to the preliminary question) the witness is unable to recollect the details of an occurrence, then may a former assertion, giving the details in full, be offered as a Self-Contradiction? This is a question of what constitutes a Self-Contradiction, and is treated post, § 1042. The difference between that case and the present one is that here the witness merely cannot recollect whether he made the other assertion A′ as to the occurrence; while there the witness does not recollect the occurrence at all, and the question is whether there is any assertion A to be set off against assertion A′.

[3] Accord: 1912, People v. Singh, 20 Cal. App. 146, 128 Pac. 420; 1904, Chicago City R. Co. v. Matthieson, 212 Ill. 292, 72 N. E. 443 (here the witness said "he might have" made the statement); 1902, Sheldon v. Bigelow, 118 Ia. 586, 92 N. W. 701 (evasion); 1917, State v. Rodriguez, 23 N. W. 156, 167 Pac. 426; 1902, State v. Haworth, 24 Utah 398, 68 Pac. 155 (refusal); 1919, Lehan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 169 Wis. 327, 172 N. W. 787 (defendant not allowed to ask the witness whether he wanted his memory refreshed by a former written statement made to defendant's agent; the opinion ignores the present principle, and makes a number of loose statements).

Contra: 1903, People v. Glaize, 139 Cal. 154, 72 Pac. 965 (the question being asked and on objection an answer being forbidden by the Court, it was held that the foundation was not sufficient for subsequent testimony; this is erroneous).

[4] 1840, Lewis v. Post, 1 Ala. 69; 1898, Singleton v. State, 39 Fla. 520, 22 So. 876, semble (with doubt); 1843, Hathaway v. Crocker, 7 Mete. 264; 1882, Markel v. Moudy, 13 Nebr. 322, 14 N. W. 409; 1895, Fremont B. & E. Co. v. Peters, 45 Nebr. 356, 63 N. W. 791 (allowing the contradiction to be introduced immediately).

[5] Moreover, the cross-examiner may continue the probing (if he cares to risk it) by further asking, "Is that former statement true or false?"; compare Sir Charles Russell's cross-examination of Pigott in the Parnell Case, quoted post, § 1260, and the cases cited ante, § 959, n. 1.

However, many Courts have unwisely conceded that an admission by the witness does exclude further proof by the opponent: Eng. 1837, Parke, B., in Crowley v. Page, 7 C. & P. 789; Ill. 1860, Ray v. Bell, 24 Ill. 451; 1893, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Feehan, 149 Ill. 202, 214, 36 N. E. 1036; 1897, Swift v. Madden, 165 Ill. 41, 45 N. E. 979; 1903, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Wade, 206 Ill. 523, 69 N. E. 565, semble; 1905, Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Crose, 214 Ill. 602, 73 N. E. 865 (rule applied), La. 1896, State v. Goodbier, 48 La. An. 770, 19 So. 755; 1914, State v. Folden, 135 La. 791, 66 So. 223; Mo. 1884, State v Cooper, 83 Mo. 698, Tex. 1903, Barthe statement, but merely to warn that it will be proved; and there is no reason why an admission on the stand should here cut off the right to make such proof, for it does not ordinarily in other respects (post, § 1058) have such an operation.

§ 1038. Assertion to be Contradicted must be Independent of the Answer to the Preliminary Question. The other consequence of the loose notion above mentioned is a confusion of the assertion A, which is to be contradicted — this may be called the primary assertion — with the answer to the preliminary question. Counsel sometimes attempt to contradict the latter instead of the primary assertion, forgetting that there must be some primary assertion independent of the answer to the preliminary question.[1] Thus, suppose the witness is asked (on cross-examination, perhaps): "Did the assailant have a wart on his face?" and answers "No"; this is his primary assertion A; he is then asked the warning question, "Have you not said to X at such a time and place that the assailant did have a wart on his face?" and answers "No"; the opponent then proves that the witness has asserted that there was a wart; that is the contradictory assertion A′. Now the contradiction lies between the assertions A and A′; he now says that there was no wart; he formerly said that there was one; the contradiction is clear and material. But suppose that the primary question above was omitted, and only the preliminary or warning question asked; the result is that an error appears (i.e. he now says that he did not make a certain remark, while others prove that he did make it). But this is an ordinary contradiction (ante, § 1000) and not a self-contradiction; moreover, it is upon a wholly collateral point, for the fact of his formerly making a remark about the wart is wholly immaterial, and the only thing that is material is the existence of the wart, and upon this point he has as yet on the stand made no assertion at all which could serve as the basis of a self-contradiction. The extrinsic testimony of his former remark is therefore inadmissible, because it involves no self-contradiction, and is merely on a collateral point in any case:[2] nard v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. App. 67, 73 S. W. 957; 1907, Rice v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 100 S. W. 949; and the statutes cited ante, § 1028, and supra, note 2, also imply this.

§ 1038. [1] The fallacy above described was committed by Totten, J., in Cheek v. Wheatly, 11 Humph. 558 (1851).

[2] Accord: Ala. 1898, Naugher v. State, 116 Ala. 463, 23 So. 26; Mass. 1920, Bloustein v. Shindler, 235 Mass. 440, 126 N. E. 774 (personal injury; proof of a former statement about plaintiff's admission, excluded); Mich. 1863, Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 292 ("Did you not state so-and-so?", put on cross-examination, and direct examination not having touched the subject; excluded); Miss. 1905, Bell v. State, — Miss. —, 38 So. 795; N. H. 1859, Combs v. Winchester, 39 N. H. 18 (the witness was asked on cross-examination whether he had not said that he knew the carriage-bolt had no nut on it; whether or not it had was material, but the witness had not touched the subject on direct examination; his negative answer was not allowed to be contradicted); N. Y. 1854, Bears v. Copley, 10 N. Y. 93 (plea of negligent work to an action for wrongful discharge from employment; plaintiff's witness had not testified as to incompetency, but was asked on cross-examination whether he had not formerly stated that plaintiff was negligent; excluded, because no contradiction was involved, and what he formerly said was otherwise immaterial); Tex. 1898, Red v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 414, 46 S. W. 408; 1898, Welch v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 46 S. W. 812; 1898, Hoy v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 340, 45 S. W. 916; 1921, Bryan v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. 175, 234 S. W. 83.

The Courts are perfectly clear on this point. The only error of which any traces appear is

1896, WHITFIELD, J., in Williams v. State, 73 Miss. 820, 19 So. 826: "Could the State, as a part of its case, have proven that Margaret Kelly said to Elsie Ross, 'I sent you word there was a plot to kill your husband, made three weeks ago', by defendant and his brother? Clearly not. It was competent to prove there was a plot. It was competent to prove it by the acts or declarations of the defendant. It was competent to prove that Margaret Kelly heard the defendant's declarations evidencing the plots. And, had she been asked as to these matters, and denied, she could have been impeached by showing that she had elsewhere stated that she did hear defendant make such declarations. But to permit her to be contradicted by a statement that she had said to Elsie Ross that she had sent her word that there was a plot, etc., is in no possible view proper. The exact test here is, What was the fact embodied in her unsworn statement? This: That she had sent Elsie Ross word that there was a plot, etc.; had said to her that there was a plot, etc. Was this fact — her mere statement to Elsie Ross that there was a plot, etc. — a substantive fact, relevant to the guilt or innocence of this defendant, which the State could have proved as a part of its case in chief? Most certainly not."

§ 1039. Preliminary Question not necessary for Expressions of Bias, for a Party's Admissions, or for an Accused's Confessions; Impeaching one's Own Witness. (1) The rule requiring a preliminary warning does not on principle apply to proof of expressions of bias, although many Courts so extend it.[1]

(2) The rule applies only to the discrediting of a witness, and not to the use of a party's admissions, whether or not he is also a witness.[2]

(3) For the same reason the rule does not apply to an accused's confessions.[3]

(4) But it does apply to the impeachment of one's own witness, and not merely of the opponent's.[4]

4. What Amounts to a Self-Contradiction

§ 1040. Tenor and Form of the Inconsistent Statement (Utterances under Oath, Admissions and Confessions, Joint Writings, Inconsistent Behavior). (1) In the present mode of impeachment, there must of course be a real in- the supposition that the witness must have made his primary assertion upon the direct examination, and that unless he has there touched upon the subject the contradictory statement is not admissible. But this is not necessary. It is possible (though not usual), as in the illustration above used in the text, that the assertion to be contradicted may have been brought out on cross-examination; the only essential is that it should have dealt with a material, not a collateral, matter; and many material assertions may first come out on cross-examination: 1884, Sellers v. Jenkins, 97 Ind. 430, 437; and cases cited ante, § 1020.

It must be added that occasionally the answer to the preliminary question may be material, i.e. when the witness denies that he made a certain remark, this remark, in itself, may be independently material, and therefore its utterance may be shown. But this is rare, and in any case does not constitute a Self-Contradiction; it is merely the ordinary case of proving against the witness an error of fact on a material point. Thus, in proving former expressions of Bias, which the witness now denies having made, it is simply a case of proving a material fact, the fact of such expressions being otherwise admissible; hence it is not necessary to turn it into a case of Self-Contradiction by insisting that he should somewhere in the course of his testimony have asserted that he was not biassed. Cases cited under § 1043 rest on the same principle as those here cited.

§ 1039. [1] Cases cited ante, § 953.

Of course the rule has no application to proof of error by contradiction through other witnesses (ante, § 1006, n. 3); nor to proof of bad character by a record of conviction for crime (ante, § 980); nor, of course, does it apply to proof of any conduct of the witness: 1907, Bliss v. Beck, 80 Nebr. 290, 114 N. W. 162 (intoxication).

[2] Cases cited post, § 1051.

[3] For the question whether an inadmissible confession may be used as a self-contradiction, see ante, § 816.

[4] Cases cited ante, § 906.

consistency between the two assertions of the witness. The purpose is to induce the tribunal to discard the one statement because the witness has also made another statement which cannot at the same time be true (ante, § 1017). Thus, it is not a mere difference of statement that suffices; nor yet is an absolute oppositeness essential; it is an inconsistency that is required. Such is the possible variety of statement that it is often difficult to determine whether this inconsistency exists. But it must appear 'prima facie' before the impeaching declaration can be introduced. As a general principle, it is to be understood that this inconsistency is to be determined, not by individual words or phrases alone, but by the whole impression or effect of what has been said or done.[1] On a comparison of the two utterances, are they in effect inconsistent? Do the two expressions appear to have been produced by inconsistent beliefs?

1858, CLIFFORD, J., in U. S. v. Holmes, 1 Cliff. 116: "Directness, in the technical sense, is not necessary to give the evidence that character, nor is it necessary that the contradiction should be complete and entire, in order to admit the opposing testimony. Circumstances may be offered to rebut the most positive statement, and it is only necessary that the testimony offered should have a tendency to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove the opposite statement in order to render it admissible."

1888, C. ALLEN, J., in Foster v. Worthing, 146 Mass. 607, 16 N. E. 572: "It is not necessary, in order to make the letter competent, that there should be a contradiction in plain terms. It is enough if the letter, taken as a whole, either by what it says or by what it omits to say, affords some presumption that the fact was different from his testimony; and in determining this question, much must be left to the discretion of the presiding judge."

In most rulings, the circumstances of the cases are individual, and they have no value as precedents.[2]

§ 1040. [1] The following cases illustrate the variety of circumstances: Eng. 1861, Jackson v. Thomason, 1 B. & S. 745 (several letters, taken together, amounting to a contradiction, though singly insufficient; admitted); Can. 1888, Miller v. White, 16 Can. Sup. 445, 452 (books of another firm, kept under the witness' direction, admitted); U. S. Col. (Dist.): 1819, Jackson v. U. S., 48 D. C. App. 269 (keeping a bawdy-house); Ind. 1884, Sellers v. Jenkins, 97 Ind. 439 (the amount or degree of inconsistency is immaterial); Mass. 1868, Brigham v. Clark, 100 Mass. 431 (testimony that "L. C. C. & Co." was used as a firm name, contradicted by documents so signed for private debts; admitted); 1871, Hook v. George, 108 Mass. 327, 330 ("in their spirit and general purport the letters were in conflict"; admitted); 1883, Hosmer v. Groat, 143 Mass. 16, 8 N. E. 431 (the defendant having denied that L. was his agent, letters declaring him to be so were admitted, although not addressed to the plaintiff); Minn. 1869, Tinklepaugh v. Rounds, 24 Minn. 300 (inconsistency "in any material particular" is enough); Tenn. 1848, Weatherhead v. Sewell, 9 Humph. 272, 283 (the declarations of an attesting witness that the will did not follow the draft-instructions, not received to contradict his attestation in the Probate Court, which could only have involved testimony that the document was signed or acknowledged).

[2] Federal: 1816, Evans v. Eaton, Pet. C. C. 388; Alabama: 1919, Birmingham & A. R. Co. v. Campbell, 203 Ala. 296, 82 So. 546 (remarks at a railroad accident); California: 1861, People v. Williams, 18 Cal. 190, 193; 1898, People v. Collum, 122 Cal. 186, 54 Pac. 589; Connecticut: 1822, Treat v. Browning, 4 Conn. 410, 418; Columbia (Dist.): 1892, U. S. v. Cross, 20 D. C. 390; Georgia: 1897, Harrison v. Langston, 100 Ga. 394, 28 S. C. 162; 1905, Cox v. State, 124 Ga. 95, 52 S. E. 150 (assault); Indiana: 1860, Thompson v. State, 15 Ind. 473; Iowa: 1880, Case v. Burrows, 54 Ia. 682, 7 N. W. 130 (where it was doubtful where the cattle referred to were the same ones); Kentucky: 1878, Kennedy v. Com., 14 Bush 357; 1916, Ohio Valley Mills v. Louisville R. Co., 168 Ky. 758, 182 S. W. 955 (contradiction in a deposition allowable, though the deposition is not filed and therefore would be inadmissible under C. C. P. § 585; the amount of careful judicial reasoning spent in the opinion exhibits the futile

(2) The form of the supposed contradictory assertion is immaterial. It may be oral or written; it may be an ordinary letter, or it may be a sworn statement, as, for example, a deposition,[3] or an oral repetition of a written statement already proved.[4] unpractical technicalism of much which we call the law of Evidence); Louisiana: 1905, State v. Rogers, 115 La. 164, 38 So. 952 (letter excluded, on the facts); Maryland: 1880, Munshower v. State, 55 Md. 19; Massachusetts: 1863, Hamilton W. Co. v. Goodrich, 6 All. 197; 1871, Snow v. Moore, 107 Mass. 512; Michigan: 1907, Blickley v. Luce, 148 Mich. 233, 111 N. W. 752 (action against a landlord for loss of goods in a building which collapsed and then burned; the plaintiff's suit against the insurer claiming loss by fire, not admitted as inconsistent); Minnesota: 1890, Bennett v. Ins. Co., 43 Minn. 48, 44 N. W. 794; 1896, Swift v. Withers, 63 id. 17, 65 N. W. 85; 1913, Uggen v. Bazille and Partridge, 123 Minn. 97, 143 N. W. 112 (whether a warning was given, in the witness' understanding; the above text approved); Mississippi: 1913, Liles v. May, 105 Miss. 807, 63 So. 217 (alleged scrivener of a will; later statements indicating different belief as to the succession, admitted); New Hampshire: 1852, Martin v. Farnham, 25 N. H. 195; 1860, Nute v. Nute, 41 N. H. 67; New York: 1855, Patchin v. Ins. Co., 13 N. Y. 270; 1878, Furst v. R. Co., 72 N. Y. 545; 1906, Rossenbach v. Supreme Court, 184 N. Y. 92, 76 N. E. 1085 (insured's intoxication); North Carolina: 1836, Radford v. Rice, 2 Dev. & B. 43; Ohio: 1826, Lamb v. Stewart, 2 Oh. 230 (377); Pennsylvania: 1822, Stahle v. Spohn, 8 S. & R. 323; 1862, Travis v. Brown, 43 Pa. 18 (admitting where doubtful); 1874, Schlater v. Winpenny, 75 Pa. 325; Texas: 1859, Hall v. Simmons, 24 Tex. 227.

(3) The contradictory utterance may be a party's admissions, and are usable in either character.[5] Whether the confessions of an accused, when inadmissible as such, may be used against him on the stand as self-contradictions, has been a matter of controversy.[6] But a witness' confessions of perjury ought undoubtedly to be received, under the present principle.[7]

[3] There is no conceivable reason to the contrary, and it is hard to see why this point should have had to be decided so often: England: 1820, R. v. Hunt, 1 State Tr. N. S. 171, 250 (whether he gave the same evidence before the Ministry as he gave at the trial; allowed on cross-examination); U. S. Federal: 1890, Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Artery, 137 U. S. 519, 11 Sup. 129 (here the railroad company had sent its claim agent, after the injury to certain employees, to examine the others present at the time, and had secured written statements; one of these was shown to and acknowledged by one of these employees who took the stand for the plaintiffs, and was inconsistent with his testimony; held improperly excluded by the Court below); California: 1872, People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 458 (deposition); 1898, People v. Bushton, 80 Cal. 160, 161, 22 Pac. 127, 549 (deposition); Georgia: 1892, Lewis v. State, 91 Ga. 168, 170, 16 S. E. 986 (defendant's unsworn statement on former trial); Hawaii: 1869, R. v. Apuna, 3 Haw. 166, 170 (prior sworn statement in writing, admitted); Kansas: 1894, Southern K. R. Co. v. Painter, 53 Kan. 414, 418, 36 Pac. 731 (though the deposition is not filed nor admissible); Michigan: 1895, People v. Kennedy, 105 Mich. 434, 63 N. W. 405 (preliminary deposition); 1905, People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531, 105 N. W. 838 (defendant's own affidavit for a continuance, admitted); Missouri: 1905, Glasgow v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 191 Mo. 347, 89 S. W. 915 (deposition not certified nor filed, but signed); South Carolina: 1888, State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201, 228, 7 S. E. 296 (affidavit; testimony at an inquest); Wisconsin: 1861, Thayer v. Gallup, 13 Wis. 54 (even one not used because of the witness' personal attendance).

In Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. Andrews, 39 Md. 354 (1873), the impeaching witness was examined on a foreign commission, and by a majority opinion the impeaching testimony was declared admissible; why there should have been any doubt about it does not appear.

For additional instances of the use of sworn statements, see the succeeding notes in this section and the cases cited ante, § 278 n. 3 (false affidavits by the accused), and post, § 1075, n. 2 (depositions used). But distinguish the question ante, § 1034, whether here the preliminary warning is necessary.

[4] 1921, Borough v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 191 Ia. 1216, 184 N. W. 320.

[5] Cases cited post, § 1051.

[6] Cases cited ante, § 821.

Note that by the doctrine of waiver of the privilege against self-crimination an accused taking the stand could be impeached by former self-contradictions contained in testimony otherwise privileged under U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 860 and similar statutes (quoted post, § 2281). But thus far the decisions have taken the opposite view: cases cited post, § 2283 and § 2276, n. 9.

[7] Cases cited ante, § 959.

(4) The utterance may be in form of a joint statement by the witness, signing a document with other persons.[8] If the statements did not accurately represent his own belief, he may absolve himself by explanation (post, § 1044).

(5) The inconsistency may be found expressed, not in words, but in conduct indicating a different belief.[9]

This sort of evidence is sought frequently to be used against value-witnesses and is here not sufficiently favored by the Courts.[10]

§ 1041. Opinion as Inconsistent. A common difficulty is to determine whether some broad assertion, offered in contradiction, really assumes or implies anything specifically inconsistent with the primary assertion.[1]

The usual case of this kind is that of a general statement upon the merits of the controversy, which is now offered against a witness who has testified to a specific matter. Thus, A testifies for the prosecution that he saw the defendant near the scene of the alleged arson; it is offered to show that he has

[8] 1839, Attorney-General v. Bond, 9 C. & P. 189 (a joint affidavit, only the part by the witness can be used); 1884, Smith v. R. Co., 137 Mass. 61 (a written statement signed by a physician-witness, though also signed by a physician employed by the opponent, admitted); 1889, Phillips v. Marblehead, 148 Mass. 329, 19 N. E. 547 (value-testimony; to contradict, the record of the selectmen, awarding damages for the same land, and signed by the witness with the other selectmen, was excluded, because the recorded damages did not necessarily represent his individual opinion of the amount proper); 1900, Healey v. R. Co., 176 Mass. 440, 57 N. E. 703 (time-book turned in by a foreman, though not made by him, admissible); 1921, Re County Ditch No. 33, 150 Minn. 69 , 184 N. W. 374 (a valuation of benefits by a jury of view, though inadmissible under § 1640, post, held receivable as a self-contradiction to discredit the testimony of a juror taking the stand); 1891, Dawson v. Pittsburgh, 159 Pa. 317, 326, 28 Atl. 171 (witness to betterment; report of viewers, of whom he was one, received).

The following distinction seems sound: 1899, Becker v. Cain, 8 N. D. 615, 80 N. W. 805 (counsel's argument before jury in a prior litigation, as to ownership of wheat, not admissible to impeach him testifying as plaintiff claiming ownership).

[9] 1798, DeSailly v. Morgan, 2 Esp. 692 (contradicting the teacher of a school, who testified to the good moral influence in the school, by a letter of his own to a former pupil containing many immoral passages); 1899, Huff v. State, 106 Ga. 432, 32 S. E. 348 (rape, complainant's attempts to settle the prosecution, admissible on cross-examination); 1875, Wallace v. R. Co., 119 Mass. 91 (that a plaintiff who had testified that he was confined to the house by an injury for six months was within that time seen walking the streets); 1896, Lewis v. Gaslight Co., 165 Mass. 411, 43 N. E. 178 (an expert testifying to the proper mode of work was allowed to be asked about other occasions when he had done it differently); 1896, Bonnemort v. Gill, 165 Mass. 493, 43 N. E. 299 (witness to a testator's incapacity; the witness' former treatment of him as capable of business admitted, but not as necessarily and always contradictory).

Further illustrations of this kind of evidence will be found ante, §§ 273–291, where many of the instances would be equally available against a witness.

[10] 1869, Swan v. Middlesex, 101 Mass. 174, 179 (a witness who thought cutting off the front of an estate would improve the value of it, asked what would induce him to allow taking his own frontage; held irrelevant); 1873, Miller v. Smith, 112 Mass. 472, 475, 476 (here a witness had testified that a horse was worth $9000, and on cross-examination the question whether he would give $3000 for it was held to be a proper matter for the judge's discretion); 1833, Daniels v. Conrad, 4 Leigh Va. 402 (that he had offered the same land for sale at a value lower than his estimate on the stand; admitted, "though it might not be as strong as the evidence of his declarations [of actual value], because he might be asking a lower price than he really thought the property worth").

Compare the cases cited in the next section.

§ 1041. [1] Sundry illustrations: 1892, Young v. Brady, 94 Cal. 130, 29 Pac. 489 (assumpsit for money loaned; defendant's statement that he was thankful for certain services of the plaintiff and would reimburse him, excluded); 1859, Robinson v. Hutchinson, 31 Vt. 449 (witness to a will's execution; a statement that it was "a sort of boy's will", admitted); 1891, State v. Coella, 3 Wash. 107 (witness to good character of the defendant; prior statements as to fear of being killed by defendant and his friends, excluded).

elsewhere declared that he is sure that the defendant is innocent; is this admissible? The usual answer of some Courts is that the declaration should be excluded because it is mere opinion (post, § 1918). This is unsound, (1) because the declaration is not offered as testimony (ante, § 1018), and therefore the Opinion Rule has no application, and (2) because the declaration in its opinion-aspect is not concerned, and is of importance only so far as it contains by implication some contradictory assertion of fact. In short, the only proper inquiry can be, Is there within the broad statement of opinion on the general question some implied assertion of fact inconsistent with the other assertion made on the stand? If there is, it ought to be received, whether or not it is clothed in or associated with an expression of opinion. As a matter of precedent, the rulings vary more or less in the results reached;[2] most of them are vain quibbles.

[2] ENGLAND: 1831, Elton v. Larkins, 5 C. & P. 89, 390 (that a witness for defendant had said before trial "the defendants had not a leg to stand on"; admitted by Bosanquet, J., at the first trial, but rejected by Tindal, C. J., at the second, because it was not a contradiction of any matter of fact but only concerned a matter of judgment).

CANADA: 1856, Gilbert v. Gooderham, 6 U. C. C. P. 41, 45 (action on a contract of sale, the defendant denying the contract; a broker G. testified to the circumstances of the transaction and to his saying that he considered the bargain closed; a question whether before trial he had said there was no bargain was asked and excluded, because as an opinion it was not admissible; the test being whether such statements were otherwise admissible).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1858, U. S. v. Holmes, 1 Cliff. 116 (the witness had said on board ship, "I believe the captain is crazy", but, before the trial, that the captain "was no more crazy than he was"; admitted); 1903, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. De Clow, 61 C. C. A. 34, 124 Fed. 142 (that he "hoped the plaintiff would not report" a certain jar of the train, admitted, to impeach a conductor who had testified denying the jar); 1917, Illinois Central R. Co. v. Norris, 7th C. C. A., 245 Fed. 927 (prior testimony of a conductor before the Industrial Board, based on hearsay, excluded; unsound);
Alabama: 1898, Luther v. State, 118 Ala. 88, 24 So. 43 (that the opponent's witness had said he was afraid not to testify for the opponent, allowed);
Colorado: 1912, Denver C. T. Co. v. Lomovt, 53 Colo. 292, 126 Pac. 276 (trolley-car track-homicide; eye-witness testifying for defendant; former statement that "the motorman ought to be lynched", admitted);
Florida: 1901, Myers v. State, 43 Fla. 500, 31 So. 275 (witness to defendant's admissions, not allowed to be cross-examined to expressions of opinion as to defendant's guilt; citing Com. v. Mooney, Mass., infra, now doubted in its own jurisdiction);
Georgia: 1901, Central of Ga. R. Co. v. Tramwell, 114 Ga. 312, 40 S. E. 259 (fire caused by a locomotive; to contradict a witness to facts tending to negative the setting of fire by the engine, the witness' expression that "the C. railroad burnt it" was admitted); 1904, Jordan v. State, 120 Ga. 864, 48 S. E. 1912 (seduction; a witness to lewd conduct of the prosecutrix impeached by expressions of belief in her chastity); 1908, Bates v. State, 49 Ga. App. 486, 61 S. E. 888 ("Sam is coming clear", admitted to impeach an eye-witness for the prosecution);
Idaho: 1904, State v. Crea, 10 Ida. 88, 76 Pac. 1013 (murder; a witness for the defendant having testified to seeing a part of the difficulty, it was held improper to admit his statement that he had "seen the killing of M., and that it was as cold-blooded as you ever saw"; this is indeed bigotry in favor of technicality);
Indiana: 1851, Rucker v. Beaty, 3 Ind. 71 (opinion as to motives of the party, excluded on the facts); 1885, Welch v. State, 104 Ind. 349, 3 N. E. 850 (testimony that defendant had not confessed; evidence that witness had said he knew defendant was guilty and had offered to bet that he was, excluded, as mere opinion); 1893, Pence v. Waugh, 135 Ind. 143, 156, 34 N. E. 860 (whether he continued business transactions with the testator; allowed to be asked of a witness testifying to insanity: distinguishing Staser v. Hogan, 120 Ind. 216, 21 N. E. 911, 22 N. E. 990, where the question whether the witness "would have taken a note" from the alleged insane person was disallowed); 1900, Stevens v. Leonard, 154 Ind. 67, 56 N. E. 27 (attesting a will implies a statement of sanity; hence, the attester's testifying to the testator's insanity discredits by its inconsistency with the attestation; see post, § 1511); 1913, Sanger v. Bacon, 180 Ind. 322, 101 N. E. 1000 (a legatee's opinions as to the testator's mental condition, here excluded);

Iowa: 1905, State v. Matheson, 130 Ia. 440, 103 N. W. 137 (the defendant's father, having testified that he, though present, did not see the defendant use his pistol, allowed to be impeached by a statement that the boy "has shot the deputy sheriff");
Kansas: 1886, State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 14, 12 Pac. 318 (a witness to the accused's innocent bearing; question whether he had not said he thought the accused impressed him as guilty, admitted);
Kentucky: 1898, Franklin v. Com., 105 Ky. 237, 48 S. W. 986 (one testifying to defendant's planning of the crime; prior statement that he knew defendant had nothing to do with it, admissible); 1900, Ross v. Com., — Ky. —, 55 S. W. 4 (that the defendant had a bad case, and that it might go hard with him, excluded); 1903, Shinkle v. McCullough, 116 Ky. 960, 77 S. W. 196 (negligence of an automobile; the driver's statement that he considered himself responsible, admitted);
Maine: 1870, State v. Kingsbury, 58 Me. 241 (a statement that "he never would have done it if it had not been for others", admitted against one testifying in the defendant's favor);
Maryland: 1880, Munshower v. State, 55 Md. 11, 18 (murder; witness testifying to defendant's presence, etc., not allowed to be discredited by confession of his own guilt; plainly erroneous, so far as it was an assertion of his exclusive guilt); 1921, Pindell v. Rubenstein, 139 Md. 567, 115 Atl. 859 (injury at a gate; statement that "it is not your fault", admitted);
Massachusetts: 1863, Emerson v. Stevens, 6 All. 112 (a statement that the defendant-witness "had a right, if he saw fit" to commit the trespass denied, admitted); 1872, Com. v. Mooney, 110 Mass. 100 (testimony for prosecution as to details of a search of premises burned; former expression of belief in the defendant's innocence, excluded); 1873, Com. v. Wood, 111 Mass. 410 (by an eye-witness exonerating the defendant; a former statement that the defendant was guilty, admitted); 1896, Handy v. Canning, 166 Mass. 107, 44 N. E. 118 (ownership of a piano was in issue; the plaintiff's statements that she was not owner, admitted; "the test, in such a case as the present, for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of a witness, is whether, by common experience, different statements would mean different positions taken as to fact foundations, rather than as to the law conclusions"); 1902, Whipple v. Rich, 180 Mass. 477, 63 N. E. 5 (witness to a street accident, testifying that there was no obstruction of defendant's view, allowed to be contradicted by his statement that the defendant was not to blame; "the question is whether the specific facts testified to lead so directly to a conclusion that it is obviously unlikely that a man will believe a contrary conclusion if he believes the specific facts"; Com. v. Mooney doubted); 1905, Jacobs v. Boston El. R. Co., 188 Mass. 245, 74 N. E. 349 (a paper bearing the alleged signature of the witness, excluded; the reason for the ruling is unascertainable from the opinion); 1906, Cotton v. Boston El. R. Co., 191 Mass. 103, 77 N. E. 698 (damage by eminent domain; the petitioner's offer to sell at a price exceeding the value as testified to by him, admitted); 1907, Gleason v. Daly, 194 Mass. 348, 80 N. E. 486 (a witness present but not attesting a will; his statement "that it was a shame to make that man make a will, they might as well have a dead man", held not improperly excluded by the trial Court; the opinion sails rather close to the wind, in order to avoid overthrowing the trial Court's ruling); 1911, Smith v. Holyoke St. R. Co., 210 Mass. 202, 96 N. E. 135 (a witness in a personal-injury case to the fact of the car-gong not being rung until the collision; whether he could be contradicted by his opinion expressed to the conductor "it is no fault of you people", not clear);
Michigan: 1864, Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 487 (a physician's opinion of a testator's sanity contradicted by his former opinion that the will was not worth a snap of the fingers; allowed); 1882, People v. Stackhouse, 49 Mich. 76, 13 N. W. 364 (an expression of suspicion upon the general guilt of the defendant, for whom the witness testified; excluded); 1895, McClellan v. F. W. & B. I. R. Co., 105 Mich. 101, 62 N. W. 1025 (an inconsistent opinion as to negligence, admitted, Hooker and Grant, JJ., diss.);
Minnesota: 1905, O'Connell v. Ward, 130 Minn. 443, 153 N. W. 865 (log-scaling; contradictory opinion is admissible, but here held not relevant);
Missouri: 1881, State v. Talbott, 73 Mo. 347, 360 (the question of Munshower's case, Md., left undecided); 1920, State v. Nave, 283 Mo. 32, 222 S. W. 744 (larceny of mules; witness for defence not allowed to be contradicted by his utterance that "he thought M. N. the defendant had taken the mules"; this was termed "gross error"; but the error could never be so gross as the original one of foisting this suffocating Opinion rule upon the law of Evidence);
Nebraska: 1897, Johnston v. Spencer, 51 Nebr. 198, 70 N. W. 982 (false representations in a sale; a witness to the conditions of the business sold; whether he had said that this suit for false representations was an outrage, excluded as opinion); 1899, Zimmerman v. Bank, 59 Nebr. 23, 80 N. W. 54 (ownership of a note; that witness had inconsistently asserted ownership, admitted); 1909, Clow v. Smith, 85 Nebr. 668, 124 N. W. 140 (opinion admitted, on the facts);
New Hampshire: 1860, Nute v. Nute, 41 N. H. 71 (an opinion on the merits of the case, where the implication was indefinite, excluded); 1862, City Bank v. Young, 43 N. H. 460 (an opinion on the merits of the case, excluded);
New York: 1857, People v. Jackson, 3 Park. Cr. 597 (the prosecuting witness in a larceny

All Courts, however, concede that expert opinions, as well as other opinions ordinarily admissible, if inconsistent with those expressed on the stand, are receivable.[3]

§ 1042. Silence, Omissions, or Negative Statements, as Inconsistent; (1) Silence, etc., as constituting the Impeaching Statement. A failure to assert a fact, when it would have been natural to assert it, amounts in effect to an assertion of the non-existence of the fact. This is conceded as a general principle of evidence (post, § 1071). There may be explanations, indicating that the person had in truth no belief of that tenor; but the conduct is 'prima facie' an inconsistency.

There are several common classes of cases: (1) Omissions in legal pro- case had said he did not think the defendant would do anything wrong; admitted); 1863, Patchin v. Ins. Co., 13 N. Y. 270 (opinion as such is not excluded); 1874, Schell v. Plumb, 55 N. Y. 599 ("an opinion expressed by a witness upon the merits is inadmissible", because, apparently, it does not necessarily involve an assertion as to the particular fact testified to; here "the plaintiff ought to have $1000" was held to involve such an assertion); 1880, Mayer v. People, 80 N. Y. 377 (false representations; a witness for the defendant, corroborating his claim, asked whether he had not said that the defendant had been guilty of a great wrong, had acted like thieves; held proper, two judges dissenting); 1921, Enos Will, Sup. App. Div., 187 N. Y. Suppl. 757, 775 (an illustration of the pitiful nonsense made of the law by the Opinion rule in this application);

North Carolina: 1905, State v. Exum, 138 N. C. 599, 50 S. E. 283 ("Little did I think I would have married a murderer", admitted against the defendant's wife);
South Dakota: 1897, State v. Davidson, 9 S. D. 564, 70 N. W. 879 (mere opinion excluded; here, that a witness to disprove motive had said that he was convinced the defendant had killed the deceased); 1916, State ex rel. Kuhl v. Chambers, 37 S. D. 555, 159 N. W. 113 (bastardy; a physician who testified for defendant as to other intercourse of complainant, not allowed to be impeached by his statement that defendant was the father; unsound; Whiting, J., diss., approving the text above);
Tennessee: 1871, Sellars v. Sellars, 2 Heisk. 430 (attesting witness' declarations of testator's insanity, admitted, as contradicting his attestation); 1897, Saunders v. R. Co., 99 Tenn. 130, 41 S. W. 1031 (matter of opinion as to the fault of an injured party, excluded); 1907, Holder v. State, 119 Tenn. 178, 104 S. W. 225 (murder; to impeach a witness who testified to an alibi, her positive statement that the accused "did it", admitted);
Texas: 1904, Eastern Texas R. Co. v. Scurlock, 97 Tex. 305, 78 S. W. 490 (witness to the value of his own property); 1904, Parker v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 461, 80 S. W. 1008 (defendant's daughter, not allowed to be impeached by the statement "I believe that my father killed T."); 1905, Kirk v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 624, 89 S. W. 1067 ("I tried to keep K. from killing him", etc., excluded); 1917, McDougal v. State, 81 Tex. Cr. 179, 194 S. W. 944 ("murder; I tried to keep him from it, but I could n't do it", held inadmissible);
Vermont: 1905, Coolidge v. Ayers, 77 Vt. 448, 61 Atl. 40 (failure to assert a fact in former testimony, admitted);
Washington: 1913, State v. Hazzard, 75 Wash. 5, 134 Pac. 514 (murder by starvation; a prior statement by the prosecution's witness that the defendant had done nothing wrong, here excluded);
Wisconsin: 1903, Lowe v. State, 118 Wis. 641, 96 N. W. 417 (assault with intent to kill; defence, insanity; witness' prior contradictory statement as to defendant's insanity, held admissible).

[3] Add here some of the cases cited ante, § 1040, n. 10. Ireland: 1901, O'Regan v. Trench, L. R. 1 Ire. 274, 287, 297 (value of land; inconsistent statements admitted); U. S. California: 1872, People v. Donovan, 43 Cal. 165 (former opinion as to sanity); Delaware: 1851, State v. Windsor, 5 Harringt. 512, 526: Columbia (Dist.): 1881, Guiteau's Trial, D. C., II, 1237 (an expert witness for the prosecution on the issue of insanity was allowed to be discredited by the following postal card sent by him to the counsel for the defence before being called by the prosecution: "Accept my congratulations on the manner in which you have thus far directed the defence. It may not be popular, but it is right and just"); Maine: 1831, Ware v. Ware, 8 Greenl. 44, 55 (physicians testifying to a testator's insanity were discredited by former statements that the will could not be broken on the ground of insanity); Massachusetts: 1893, Liddle v. Bank, 158 Mass. 15, 32 N. E. 954 (physician's inconsistent opinion); 1896, Silverstein v. O'Brien, 165 Mass. 512, 43 N. E. 497 (a witness who valued property as worthless, asked as ceedings to assert what would naturally have been asserted under the circumstances;[1] (2) Omissions to assert anything, or to speak with such detail or positiveness, when formerly narrating, on the stand or elsewhere, the matter now dealt with;[2] (3) Failure to take the stand at all, when it would have been to former expressions imputing high value to it); Michigan: 1864, Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 487 (a physician's opinion as to a testator's sanity); Minnesota: 1921, Re County Ditch No. 33, 150 Minn. 69, 184 N. W. 374 (witness to value of benefits, contradicted by his different official valuation); New Hampshire: 1863, Sanderson v. Nashua, 44 N. H. 494 (experts in general); New York: 1898, Brooks v. R. Co., 156 N. Y. 244, 50 N. E. 945 (contrary opinion of a physician at a former trial); Ohio: 1915, Hoover v. State, 91 Oh. 41, 109 N. E. 626 (contradictory opinion stated at another time "concerning the same state of facts", admissible; but not when based on a hypothetical question); Pennsylvania: 1897, Krider v. Philadelphia, 180 Pa. 78, 36 Atl. 405 (the official assessment of property at a smaller value, to contradict the assessor as a witness to its value).

§ 1042. [1] Fla. 1895, Charles v. State, 36 Fla. 691, 18 So. 369 (voluntary dismissal of a previous suit through apparent inability to prove what the party now asserts; admitted); Ga. 1899, Merritt v. State, 107 Ga. 675, 34 S. E. 361 (assault with intent to rape said to have been witnessed by woman's father; his failure to complain that day or to appear as complainant in the warrant sworn out next day, admitted); Mass. 1868, Clement v. Kimball, 98 Mass. 536 (the wife's misconduct pleaded in an action against the husband for necessaries; to contradict the defendant's testimony that he had been informed of adultery with P. in 1865, testimony was received that he had in 1867 filed a divorce-libel charging adultery with specified persons but not with P.); Mo. 1918, State v. Drummins, 274 Mo. 632, 204 S. W. 271; N. Car. 1876, State v. Wright, 75 N. C. 439 (testimony that the prosecutrix, on applying for a warrant, "made various and contradictory statements", excluded, as too indefinite); Pa. 1877, Snyder v. Com., 85 Pa. 519, 521 (charging and testifying to the murder of the witness' infant daughter by the defendant, her father; a former complaint by her, after the time in question, admitted, in which incestuous adultery and rape only were charged, and not murder); 1897, Mullen v. Ins. Co., 182 Pa. 150, 37 Atl. 988 (failure to assert a claim now alleged, admitted); Vt. 1862, Nye v. Merriam, 35 Vt. 441, 445 (that the defendant by his counsel at the trial below defended the suit upon grounds wholly inconsistent with his present testimony); Wis. 1858, Conkey v. Post, 7 Wis. 137 (omission in the Court below to object to a note on the ground now claimed, namely, alteration).

Compare the cases cited post, §§ 1066, 1072.

[2] ENGLAND: 1678, Coleman's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1, 25 (one of the chief weaknesses in the testimony of the notorious perjurer Oates was that at his original information to the Council he failed to state facts which he afterwards testified to on the trials of his various victims; each time bringing out new facts before unmentioned); CANADA: 1902, R. v. Higgins, 36 N. Br. 18, 24 (accused's silence, until his trial, as to G. being the real murderer, admissible; good opinion by Harrington, J.);

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1888, U. S. v. Ford, 33 Fed. 864, semble (an omission to mention a matter on a prior examination, admitted); California: 1901, People v. Bishop, 134 Cal. 682, 66 Pac. 976 (witness' hesitation in giving former testimony on the same subject; allowed to be shown on the facts); Colorado: 1889, Babcock v. People, 13 Colo. 519, 22 Pac. 817 (failure to mention important matters at a prior examination, admitted); Florida: 1905, Hampton v. State, 50 Fla. 55, 39 So. 421 ("Have you testified to material facts here to-day that you did not testify to before the coroner's jury?" excluded; this is unsound); Georgia: 1896, Miller v. State, 97 Ga. 653, 25 S. E. 366, semble (a supposed eye-witness; that he did not disclose the assailant's identity when it would have been proper to do so, admitted); Illinois: 1906, Larrance v. People, 222 Ill. 155, 78 N. E. 50 (failure to mention a fact in testimony at an inquest; not admitted, unless on a showing that he was asked on that point or asked for all relevant facts); Maryland: 1910, Parks v. State, 113 Md. 338, 77 Atl. 603 (robbery; prosecuting witness identified defendant; a letter of his, stating that he did not know who struck him, admitted); Massachusetts: 1855, Com. v. Hawkins, 3 Gray 464 ("alleging a fact at one time which he denied at another, or stating it in two ways inconsistent with each other" is admissible, but not "a mere omission to state a fact, or stating it less fully [at a former examination], unless the attention of the witness was particularly called to it at the former examination"); 1873, Hayden v. Stone, 112 Mass. 348, 352 (testimony that C. claimed ownership; former silence by witness when as appraiser of C.'s estate he should have mentioned C.'s claim, admitted); 1875, Perry v. Breed, 117 Mass. 165 (Morton, J.: "If a witness has made a previous statement of the transaction in regard to which he testifies, under such circumstances that he was called upon as a matter of duty or interest to state the whole truth as to the transaction, it might be competent to put natural to do so.[3] In all of these much depends on the individual circumstances, and in all of them the underlying test is, Would it have been natural for the person to make the assertion in question?

§ 1043. Same: (2) Silence, etc., as constituting the Testimony to be Impeached. It ought to follow that, where the witness now claims to be unable to recollect a matter, a former affirmation of it should be admitted as a contradiction. But Courts have usually forbidden this, because the improper effect is apt to be to give a testimonial value (ante, § 1018) to the former statement; its aspect as a mere contradiction being naturally overshadowed.[1] such previous statements in evidence, to show that he then omitted material parts of the transaction to which he now testifies"); 1885, Brigham v. Fayerweather, 140 Mass. 412, 416, 5 N. E. 265 (excluding a former failure of the witness to make the assertion he made on the stand, because the former occasion did not call for an expression on the subject); 1888, C. Allen, J., in Foster v. Worthing, 146 Mass. 607, 16 N. E. 572 ("Declarations or acts or omissions to speak or to act when it would have been natural to do so if the fact were as testified to, may be shown by way of contradiction or impeachment of the testimony of a witness, when they fairly tend to control or qualify his testimony"); 1896, Bonnemort v. Gill, 165 Mass. 493, 43 N. E. 299 (former omission to testify to the fact, admitted); 1920, Com. v. Homer, 235 Mass. 526, 127 N. E. 517 (robbery; complaining witness' omission in prior accounts to mention a pistol, admitted); Michigan: 1905, Thompson v. Mecosta, 141 Mich. 175, 104 N. W. 694 (witness' failure to deny a statement of R. in his presence, not admitted, there being on the facts no duty to speak); Minnesota: 1869, State v. Staley, 14 Minn. 117 (failure by an accused taking the stand to deny the truth of his confession, admitted); 1895, Alward v. Oaks, 63 Minn. 190, 65 N. W. 271 (a letter to the party detailing the facts which the witness would testify to, but omitting a vital fact asserted on the stand, admitted); New Jersey: 1904, State v. Rosa, 71 N. J. L. 316, 58 Atl. 1010 (omitting to state a material circumstance in former testimony, admitted); New York: 1899, Barrett v. R. Co., 157 N. Y. 663, 52 N. E. 659 (omission of a material fact in a former narration, admitted); North Carolina: 1890, State v. Morton, 107 N. C. 890, 12 S. E. 112 (silence when other persons were accused, admitted to impeach a purporting eye-witness of the defendant's act); Utah: 1915, Requa v. Daly-Judge Mining Co., 46 Utah 92, 148 Pac. 448 (injury in a mine); Vermont: 1862, Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 68 (same); 1906, Green v. Dodge, 79 Vt. 73, 64 Atl. 499 (former failure to dispute the amount of rent, admitted); Wisconsin: 1913, Hilton v. Hayes, 154 Wis. 27, 141 N. W. 1015 (excluded; no authority cited).

Contra: 1920, Thompson v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 29, 224 S. W. 892 (misunderstanding the point).

But, on the principle of § 1072, post, silence in a court room during legal proceedings is usually not admissible; 1899, Turner's Appeal, 72 Conn. 305, 44 Atl. 310 (listening to another witness without interruption); 1903, Horan v. Byrnes, 72 N. H. 93, 54 Atl. 945 (witness' former silence at a trial when testimony was given as to her utterance of the biassed expression in question, excluded).

For failure of the woman to make fresh complaint in rape, etc., see post, § 1135.

[3] This will depend much on circumstances: 1855, Brock v. State, 26 Ala. 106 (a mother and a sister of the defendant, though present at the preliminary examination, failed to testify in his behalf, which, however, they afterwards did at the trial; excluded); 1895, Com. v. Smith, 163 Mass. 411, 40 N. E. 189 (Allen, J.: "The judge ruled, in effect, that, where a defendant now testifies that he is innocent of a criminal charge, the fact that he has heretofore refused to answer in relation to the subject, on the ground that his answers might tend to criminate him, may be considered as bearing upon the credibility of his present testimony. The defendant in such case now says that he is innocent. He formerly did not say that he was innocent, but that he would not answer lest he might criminate himself. This fact, though open to explanation, has some tendency to throw a doubt upon the truth of his present testimony, and thus has some bearing upon one material question; namely, the truthfulness of the witness"); 1896, People v. Wirth, 108 Mich. 307, 66 N. W. 41 (that a witness for the defendant saw the defendant bound over and did not at the time tell what he now tells, namely, that another person was the guilty one, admitted).

Compare the cases cited post, § 1072.

For the bearing of the privilege against self-crimination, as prohibiting the use of the accused's silence against him, see post, § 2272.

§ 1043. [1] ENGLAND: 1788, Warren Hastings' Trial, Lords' Journal, Feb. 29, April 10 (a question as to former affirmative testimony of a witness who now "disclaimed all knowl-

This is well enough as a caution. But the unwilling witness often takes refuge in a failure to remember,[2] and the astute liar is sometimes impregnable unless his flank can be exposed to an attack of this sort.[3] An absolute rule of prohibition would do more harm than good, and the trial Court should have discretion. In general, the risk (above noted) of permitting a testimonial value to be given to the extrajudicial assertion is greater for a witness examined by a party calling him, while the necessity for using it to expose a false witness is greater for the opponent of the witness; and the usual practice should follow this line of distinction.

5. Explaining away the Inconsistency

§ 1044. In general. In accordance with the logical principle of Relevancy (ante, § 34), the impeached witness may always endeavor to explain away the effect of the supposed inconsistency by relating whatever circumstances would naturally remove it. The contradictory statement indicates on its face that the witness has been of two minds on the subject, and therefore that there has been some defect of intelligence, honesty, or impartiality on edge of any matter so interrogated", excluded); 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 299 (when a witness testifies that he does not know or that he does not remember the occurrence of a certain fact, the fact that he formerly mentioned the alleged matter in a conversation is not admissible); UNITED STATES: Ark. 1922, Murray v. State, — Ark. —, 236 S. W. 617; Cal. 1898, People v. Dice, 120 Cal. 189, 52 Pac. 477 (former statement of what he now fails to remember, excluded); 1904, People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 532, 75 Pac. 101 (rule approved); 1905, People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 334, 83 Pac. 43 (rule affirmed); 1909, Bollinger v. Bollinger, 154 Cal. 695, 99 Pac. 196; Ga. 1899, Rickerson v. State, 106 Ga. 391, 33 S. E. 639 (denial of a fact which the party thought the witness would affirm is not the subject of self-contradiction); Ky. 1895, Saylor v. Com., — Ky. —, 33 S. W. 185 (testifying that he knows nothing; former assertion of something, excluded); 1897, Stevenson v. Com., — Ky. —, 44 S. W. 634 (testimony that he was not present at an affray; former statement that he did see the defendant shoot the deceased, excluded); 1913, South Covington & C. St. R. Co. v. Finan's Adm'x, 153 Ky. 340, 155 S. W. 742; Me. 1872, State v. Reed, 60 Me. 550 (here the matter was first referred to on cross-examination, and the witness could not recollect details; former detailed statements were excluded); Mass. 1914, Corsick v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 218 Mass. 144, 105 N. E. 600; Miss. 1903, Dunk v. State, 84 Miss. 452, 36 So. 609 (following, but misconceiving, the ruling in Williams v. State, Miss. quoted ante, § 1038); N. J. 1913, State v. D'Adame, 84 N. J. L. 386, 86 Atl. 414 (on failure to identify on the stand, a former identification was admitted), 1913, State v. Kysilka, 84 N. J. L. 6, 87 Atl. 79 (similar); Or. 1910, State v. Yee Gueng, 57 Or. 509, 112 Pac. 424 (a ruling which exhibits the useless quibbling induced by over-particularity in drawing this distinction); Pa. 1838, Stockton v. Demuth, 7 Watts 41 (a positive affirmation, not admitted against one who failed to recollect); Tex. 1907, Ozark v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 106, 100 S. W. 927 (prior affirmative statements by the prosecution's witness, not allowed to be proved by the prosecution where the witness had failed to testify to that effect); Wyo. 1922, Crago v. State, — Wyo. —, 202 Pac. 1099 (prosecution's witness, being asked as to an admission made to him by defendant, remembered none; held, that his prior written statement of such an admission could not be received).

Compare also the cases cited ante, § 1038.

No prior contradictions, of course, can be received where the testimony contradicted has been struck out: 1876, Mayo v. Mayo, 119 Mass. 290.

Where the witness now expressly denies a fact, on direct examination, contrary to the expectation of the party calling, the principle of impeaching one's own witness by showing a former contrary assertion becomes involved (ante, §§ 905, 1018, n. 2).

[2] Compare Majocchi's "non mi ricordo", quoted ante, § 975.

[3] The following cases illustrate this view: 1897, People v. Turner, 118 Cal. 324, 50 Pac. 537 (a more positive identification, admitted): 1860, Hastings v. Livermore, 15 Gray 10 (a former petition signed, showing a knowledge of a fact denied on the trial, though the witness said he did not know its contents, admitted): 1860, Nute v. Nute, 41 N. H. 67 the (present statement was merely that the witness did not his part; and it is conceivable that the inconsistency of the statements themselves may turn out to be superficial only, or that the error may have been based not on dishonesty or poor memory but upon a temporary misunderstanding. To this end it is both logical and just that the explanatory circumstances, if any, should be received:[1]

1843, GILCHRIST, J., in State v. Winkley, 14 N. H. 491: "Their effect upon his credibility might have been destroyed by evidence that they were made in an ironical manner and tone, by showing that they were connected with other remarks in such a way that they ought not to impair his credit, or that he could not have been supposed to be serious in making them."

1874, DANFORTH, J., in State v. Reed, 62 Me. 146: "The force of a contradictory statement must depend very materially upon the circumstances under which it was made and the influences at the time bearing upon the witness. It would therefore seem to be self-evident that witnesses so situated should be permitted to make such explanation as might be in their power. The first impulse of the mind in such a case is to inquire how this happened, what reason can be given, and more especially what can the party implicated say in excuse or extenuation. To refuse the opportunity to explain would be in effect to condemn a party without a hearing, and without that information which in many cases would be material to a correct judgment."

recollect a fact, and the former one affirmed it; admitted).

§ 1044. [1] Accord: ENGLAND: 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 385 (explaining why a witness stayed away from the first trial); 1840, R. v. Woods, 1 Cr. & Dix 439 (the witness had contradicted himself as to seeing the deceased before the murder; he was allowed to explain that his former statement was made in fear of being involved in the case).

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1853, Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44, 76; 1860, Lewis v. State, 35 Ala. 384, 386 (that the witness' master had threatened to whip him unless he told the story offered in contradiction); 1895, State v. Henry, 107 Ala. 22, 19 So. 23 (in this State the singular doctrine that one may not testify to his own state of mind (post, § 1966) is held not to affect such explanations); Cal. 1895, People v. Dillwood, — Cal. —, 39 Pac. 438 (motive for change of testimony); 1898, People v. Shaver, 120 Cal. 354, 52 Pac. 651; 1898, People v. Lambert, 120 Cal. 170, 52 Pac. 307; 1903, People v. Glover, 141 Cal. 233, 74 Pac. 745 (explaining that the former statement was not true); Ga. 1896, Miller v. State, — Ga. —, 25 S. E. 366 (former silence, explained as the result of advice by others); 1898, Huff v. State, 104 id. 521, 30 S. E. 808 (that he had before sworn falsely in fear of threats, allowed); 1904, Spearman v. Sanders, 121 Ga. 468, 49 S. E. 296; Ida. 1895, Douglas v. Douglas, 4 Ida. 293, 38 Pac. 935; Ill. 1907, Hirsch & S. I. & R. Co. v. Coleman, 227 Ill. 149, 81 N. E. 21; Ind. 1878, Jones v. State, 64 Ind. 473, 482 (threats by defendant to witness before her prior statement, admitted); 1904, Strebin v. Lavengood, 163 Ind. 478, 71 N. E. 494 (affidavits); Ky. 1899, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Alumbaugh, — Ky. —, 51 S. W. 18; Mass. 1871, Blake v. Stoddard, 107 Mass. 111 (that after making the contrary erroneous statement in answer to interrogatories he went to his counsel and informed him of the error, admitted); Minn. 1871, Jaspers v. Lano, 17 Minn. 296, 305 (even though the witness originally denied the statement); Mont. 1896, Du Vivier v. Phillips, 18 Mont. 370, 45 Pac. 554 (circumstances under which a letter was written, admitted); Nebr. 1895, Fremont B. & E. Co. v. Peters, 45 Nebr. 356, 63 N. W. 791; Mich. 1922, People v. Davis, — Mich. —, 187 N. W. 390; Nev. 1908, Tonopah Lumber Co. v. Riley, 30 Nev. 312, 95 Pac. 1001 (conversation with R., admitted by way of explanation); N. Y. 1848, Clapp v. Wilson, 5 Den. 286, 288; N. C. 1886, State v. Garland, 95 N. C. 672 (seduction; the fact that the prior declarations of the prosecutrix were made on the occasion of a formal visit of investigation from a church-elder, admitted); Or. 1903, State v. Howard, 43 Or. 166, 72 Pac. 880 (reasons for making a contradictory affidavit); S. C. 1887, State v. Jacobs, 28 S. C. 30, 37, 4 S. E. 799; Utah: 1906, Hoggan v. Cahoon, 31 Utah 172, 87 Pac. 164 (reasons for the inconsistent statements); Wis. 1888, Norwegian Plow Co. v. Hanthorn, 71 Wis. 534, 37 N. W. 825.

Compare the same rule for Admissions, post, § 1058.

For the use of prior consistent statements, to corroborate a witness who has been impeached by an inconsistent failure to speak on a former occasion, see post, § 1129.

§ 1045. Putting in the Whole of the Contradictory Statement. In making this explanation, it is obvious that in theory all that is allowable, where the witness wishes to show that the true significance of the former statement has been distorted by a fragmentary repetition of it, is the addition of such other parts of the statement as explain its true significance, — and not the entire conversation or writing, which may contain portions wholly irrelevant for the legitimate purpose of explanation. Such is the rule in England.[1] But in the United States it is common to say that the whole of the conversation, or of the former testimony or the deposition, may be received.

There is much to be said in favor of this looser doctrine, (1) because it affords a simpler test and avoids a continuous and petty wrangle over the various parts of the conversation or deposition, and (2) because the possible disadvantage of introducing some irrelevant matter may well be borne by the party who provoked this result by attempting to introduce a fragmentary portion. However, the whole subject is more fully developed by the Courts in dealing with the general principle of Completeness, and the judicial explanations quoted under that head (post, §§ 2113–2118) will indicate the practice upon the present subject.

§ 1046. Joining Issue as to the Explanation. When the self-contradiction is not upon a collateral point (ante, § 1020), either party may introduce other witnesses upon the issue whether the utterance was made; this is involved in the nature of the case.[1] But whether additional testimony may be introduced as to the correctness of the explanation given by the witness is doubtful, as a matter of precedent; convenience would seem usually to require its exclusion.[2]

§ 1045. [1] 1820, Abbott, C. J., for all the judges, in The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 294 (admitting "all which had constituted the motive and inducement and all which may show the meaning of the words and declarations", but not any other things which may have been said at the same time; see the quotation ante, § 952); 1838, Denman, L. C. J., in Prince v. Samo, 7 A. & E. 627 (admitting "everything said" at the time "that could in any way qualify or explain the statement as to which he had been cross-examined", but not "all that he said at the same time"; in this opinion, a part of the foregoing opinion, so far only as it bore on party's admissions, was repudiated; see the quotation post, § 2115).

[2] 1864, Beemer v. Kerr, 23 U. C. Q. B. 557 (the witness was contradicted by his own deposition before a magistrate, and explained that he was at that time confused, that he had not papers to refer to which he needed, and that not all that he said was reported; the opponent's testimony to disprove these excuses was excluded; Draper, C. J.: "If he offers explanations why his statements conflict, they are neither relevant to the issue tried, nor do they alter the fact that he has contradicted himself on oath, and any evidence as to the truth of his explanations, and not as to the fact in issue, to which his evidence relates, must be collateral and cannot be received"); 1896, State v. Goodbier, 48 La. An. 770, 19 So. 755 (disproof of the witness' explanation, rejected); 1879, Dufresne v. Weise, 46 Wis. 297 (explanation by the third witness on behalf of the impeached witness excluded).

See the treatment of a similar question as to Explanations of Bias, ante, § 952.

§ 1046. [1] 1881, R. v. Whelan, Ire., 14 Cox Cr. 595.

Contra: 1901, State v. Jackson 106 La. 413, 31 So. 52 (defendant having cross-examined a witness as to making an affidavit against him, the affidavit was not allowed to be used to show that the witness had not made it; the opinion ignores settled principles).

Sub-title II (continued): TESTIMONIAL IMPEACHMENT

Topic VI: ADMISSIONS

CHAPTER XXXV.

1. General Theory

2. What Statements are Admissions

3. Vicarious Admissions (by other than the Party Himself)

1. General Theory

§ 1048. Probative Status of Admissions. The statements made out of court by a party-opponent are universally deemed admissible, when offered against him. What is their probative status? [1]

(1) Regarded from the point of view of ordinary logic and psychology, they are of course testimonial utterances (ante, § 475), like any other human assertion whether made in or out of court.

But, even from this point of view, they have two kinds of probative value:

(a) One is the ordinary value of any person's testimonial utterance; this value depending on his capacity to observe, etc., his means of knowledge, his bias or interest or lack of it, and so on. The Hearsay rule, of course, must be satisfied (infra), but that is a rule of law. Psychologically, however, all testimonial utterances stand on the same footing. If therefore the party's utterances become somehow admissible, they have such natural probative value as those of any person having similar testimonial qualities. From this point of view, their value would be the same whether they are offered for or against the party.

(b) But when offered against the party they have additionally, the same logical status as a witness' self-contradiction. Just as a witness' testimony is discredited when it appears that on another occasion he has made a statement inconsistent with that testimony (ante, §§ 1018 ff.), so also the party-opponent is discredited when it appears that on some other occasion he has made a statement inconsistent with his present claim against him. The witness speaks in court through his testimony only, and hence his testimony forms the sole basis upon which the inconsistency of his other statement is predicated. But the party-opponent, whether he himself takes the stand or not, speaks always through his pleadings and through the testimony of his witnesses put forward to support his pleadings; hence the basis upon which may be predicated a discrediting inconsistency on his part includes the whole range of facts asserted in his pleadings and in the testimony relied on by him. Thus, in effect and broadly, anything said by the party-opponent may be used against him as an admission, provided it exhibits the quality of inconsistency with the facts now asserted by him in pleadings or in testimony.

§ 1048. [1] In the following article is found an acute criticism of the theory of Admissions as originally here expounded, and in the light of that article the above text has been revised: Professor Edmund M. Morgan, "Admissions as an Exception to the Hearsay Rule", Yale L. Journal, 1921, XXX, 355. It is believed that the reasoning now set forth in §§ 1048, 1049, places the theory of Admissions on the sounder basis.

(2) But, regarded from the point of view of the legal rules of admissibility, the party's extrajudicial statements, like all other extrajudicial statements, are met and challenged by the Hearsay rule (post, § 1361). How is it, then (since they are nevertheless admissible against the party-opponent), that they are able to pass the gauntlet of the Hearsay rule?

Very simply. The answer is that the party's testimonial utterances do not pass the gauntlet of the Hearsay rule when they are offered for him (unless they can satisfy some exception to that rule); but that they do pass the gauntlet when they are offered against him as opponent, because he himself is in that case the only one to invoke the Hearsay rule and because he does not need to cross-examine himself. The theory of the Hearsay rule is that an extrajudicial assertion is excluded unless there has been sufficient opportunity to test the assertion by cross-examination by the party against whom it is offered (post, § 1362); e.g. if Jones had said out of court "The party-opponent Smith borrowed this fifty dollars", Smith is entitled to an opportunity to cross-examine Jones upon that assertion. But if it is Smith himself who said out of court, "I borrowed this fifty dollars," certainly Smith cannot complain of lack of opportunity to cross-examine himself before his assertion is admitted against him. Such a request would be absurd. Hence the objection of the Hearsay rule falls away, because the very basis of the rule is lacking, viz. the need and prudence of affording an opportunity of cross-examination. In other words, the Hearsay rule is satisfied; Smith has already had an opportunity to cross-examine himself (post, §§ 1371, 1372); or (to put it another way) he now as opponent has the full opportunity to put himself on the stand and explain his former assertion.

The Hearsay rule, therefore, is not a ground of objection when an opponent's assertions are offered against him; in such case, his assertions are termed Admissions. But the Hearsay rule is a ground of objection by the first party when the opponent's assertions are offered in his favor; and such statements are then not termed "admissions." [2]

(3) It follows that the subject of an admission is not limited to facts against the party-opponent's interest at the time. No doubt the weight of credit to be given to such statements is increased when the fact stated is against the person's interest at the time; but that circumstance has no bearing upon their admissibility. On principle, it is plain that the probative reason why a party-opponent's utterance is sought to be used against him is ordinarily the reason noted above, in par. (1) b, viz. that it exhibits an inconsistency with his present claim, tending to throw doubt upon it, whether he was at the time speaking apparently in his own favor or against his own interest. For example, a plaintiff who now claims a debt of $100 is clearly discredited by having made a demand a month ago for only $50, even if at the time

[2] Hence the basis for the play upon words in the well-worn professional jest: "I hear that you consider yourself the ablest lawyer in this State; how do you prove it?" "I do not have to prove it; I admit it!"

the debtor conceded only $25 and thus put the demandant in the position of then making an assertion purely in his own favor for the aggrandizement of his claim. If the principle upon which admissions were received rested at all upon the disserving quality of the fact asserted at the time of assertion, such a statement would be as certainly rejected when offered by the first party as it would be when offered by the opponent himself in his own favor. Nevertheless the fallacy is sometimes committed of placing the admissibility of such statements on that untenable ground.[3]

That it is a fallacy, in the fullest sense, is to be seen not only by reflecting upon the principle involved, but also by observing that no Court ever yet excluded an opponent's admission because of such a limitation. Daily practice and unquestioned tradition are here unmistakable. Sometimes, too, the Courts have expressly negatived the fallacy in question:[4]

1856, POLLOCK, C. B., in Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. 1: "The distinction is this: If a party has chosen to talk about a particular matter, his statement is evidence against himself."

1898, HAMERSLEY, J., in State v. Willis, 71 Conn. 293, 41 Atl. 820: "Admissions are not admitted as testimony of the declarant in respect to any facts in issue; . . . They are admitted because conduct of a party [-opponent] to the proceeding, in respect to the matter in dispute, whether by acts, speech, or writing, which is clearly inconsistent with the truth of his contention, is a fact relevant to the issue."

(4) The logical value, therefore, of the use of admissions is twofold. In the first place, all admissions may furnish, as against the opponent, the same discrediting inference as that which may be made against a witness in consequence of a prior self-contradiction; the nature of this inference, both in its strength and in its weakness, has been already examined (ante, § 1018), and need not be here reconsidered. In the next place, all admissions, used against the opponent, satisfy the Hearsay rule, and, when once in, have such testimonial value as belongs to any testimonial assertion under the circumstances; and the more notably they ran counter to the natural bias or interest of the party when made, the more credible they become; this element adding to their probative value, but not being essential to their admissibility.

This double evidential utility explains the proposition, sometimes judicially sanctioned, that an admission is equivalent to affirmative testimony for the party offering it.[5] However, any attempt to stress this distinction tends to vain

[3] The following are typical passages: 1794, L. C. J. Eyre, in Thomas Hardy's Trial, 24 How. St. Tr. 1093 ("the presumption upon which declarations are evidence [against a defendant] is that no man would declare anything against himself unless it were true"): 1849, Bell, J., in Truby v. Seybert, 12 Pa. St. 101, 104 ("a man's acts, conduct, and declarations wherever made, provided they be voluntary, are admissible against him, as it is fair to presume they correspond with the truth; and it is his fault if they do not").

[4] Accord: 1882, State v. Anderson, 10 Or. 448, 453 (the admissibility "does not in any manner depend upon the question whether they were for or against his interest at the time they were made or afterwards"); 1899, State v. Mowry, 21 R. I. 376, 43 Atl. 871 (defendant's exculpative story on a charge of murder).

[5] Cal. 1867, Rhodes, J., in Hall v. The Emily Banning, 33 Cal. 525 ("when given in evidence, they tend, as does other competent evidence, to prove the fact in issue to which they relate"); Ia. 1905, Castner v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 126 Ia. 581, 102 N. W. 499 ("substantive evidence"); Md. 1879, Bartlett v. Wilbur, 53 Md. 485, 497 (they "may be offered to prove the truth of the matters admitted"):

logical quibbles, and should not be made the basis of any instruction on the weight of evidence.[6]

§ 1049. Admissions, distinguished from the Hearsay exception for Statements of Facts against Interest; Death not necessary. The use of Admissions is on principle not obnoxious to the Hearsay rule; for the reasons above stated in § 1048.

Nevertheless, because most statements used as admissions do happen to state facts against interest, judges have been found who, misled by this casual feature, have treated admissions in general as obnoxious to the Hearsay rule, and therefore as entering only under an exception to that rule.[1] That this is a mere local error of theory and in no sense represents a rule anywhere obtaining may be seen from three circumstances: first, that the limitation of the Hearsay exception to facts against pecuniary or proprietary interest (post, §§ 1461, 1476) has never been attempted to be applied to admissions; secondly, that the further requirement of the Hearsay exception, namely, that the declarant must first be accounted for as deceased, absent from the jurisdiction, or otherwise unavailable (post, § 1456), has never been enforced for the use of a party's admissions;[2] and thirdly, that if an opponent's Admissions fell under the protection of that Exception, they would be equally admissible in his favor: but of course they are not.

§ 1050. Admissions, distinguished from Confessions; Admissions under Duress; Admissions Required by Law. (1) A Confession is one species of Admission, namely, an admission consisting of a direct assertion, by the accused in a criminal case, of the main fact charged against him or of some fact essential to the charge (ante, § 821). The peculiarity of Confessions in evidence is that they are subjected to an additional limitation when offered Minn. 1908, McManus v. Nichols-Chisholm L. Co., 105 Minn. 144, 117 N. W. 223 (here the opinion was merely pointing out that admissions are something more than self-contradictions of the party's testimony if he testifies); Wis. 1879, Taylor, J., in Warder v. Fisher, 48 Wis. 344, 4 N. W. 470 ("are received also for the purpose of establishing the truth of the unsworn contradictory statement themselves").

[6] The following opinion illustrates the failure of justice that may occur where any stress is laid on this doctrine of admissions being "affirmative proof": 1909, Gibson v. Boston, 75 N. H. 405, 75 Atl. 103.

The oft-repeated warning against the slight weight of oral admissions or confessions on account of their liability to misunderstanding or distortion by the witness hearing them, is due to the principle of Completeness, and is considered thereunder (post, § 2094, ante, § 866).

§ 1049. [1] E.g. in Terry v. Rodahan, 79 Ga. 278, 293, 5 S. E. 38 (1887), and in the cases cited ante, § 1048, note 3.

[2] Eng. 1834, Woolway v. Rowe, 1 A. & E. 114 (declarations of a former proprietor admitted against the plaintiff; "the fact of his being alive at the time of the trial", held not to exclude them); Can. 1846, Payson v. Good, 3 Kerr N. Br. 272, 279; U. S. Mass. 1910, Abbott v. Walker, 204 Mass. 71, 90 N. E. 405; Car. 1819, Guy v. Hall, 3 Murph. 150; W Va. 1905, Stewart v. Doak Bros., 58 W. Va. 172, 52 S. E. 95; and also cases quoted post, § 1080.

The contrary seems never to have been sanctioned except in Gibblehouse v. Stong, 3 Rawle 436 (1832), Kennedy, J., diss. The confusion is perhaps a natural one in dealing with an ancestor's declarations of defect of title, where upon either principle the statement might be receivable; the difficulties are particularly analyzed post, §§ 1082–1087.

In the early days of American jurisdiction, the Supreme Court of Porto Rico found it difficult to convince the lawyers that "confessions are not hearsay"; 1904, People v. Rivera, 7 P. R. 325; 1905, People v. Dones, 9 P. R. 423, 428; 1905, People v. Rivera, 9 P. R. 454, 462; 1912, People v. Almestico, 18 P. R. 314, 323.

in criminal cases, — the limitation that they must have been made without any inducement calculated to destroy their trustworthiness (ante, § 822). The reason why such a limitation should be especially recognized for that species of Admissions has already been examined.

What remains to note is:

(a) Since a Confession is merely one sort of an Admission, all admissions are usable against the accused in a criminal case precisely as against a party in a civil case (ante, § 821); i.e. so long as they have satisfied the confessional rule, or fall without its scope, they are to be tested, like other admissions, by the ensuing principles common to all admissions;

(b) Since the Confessions-rule is peculiar to the situation of the accused in a criminal case, an admission made under duress by a party-opponent in a civil case is admissible, subject of course to comment on its weight (ante, § 815).

(2) Admissions made under a duty imposed by law stand on a peculiar footing. It would seem that nothing in the principles governing Admissions excludes them. But they may nevertheless come to be excluded upon two other principles:

(a) The statutes imposing such a duty usually require the statement in the shape of a report to a public official, e.g. a druggist's record of sale of poison or liquor, a corporation's report of assets, a common carrier's report of an injury done. In such cases the statute sometimes makes the communication confidential and expressly brings it under a privilege (post, § 2377). Without such express provision, the privilege might be implied, where policy obviously required it.

(b) In criminal cases, the foregoing kind of an admission, e.g. a report required by law, might receive protection from the privilege against self-crimination (post, § 2259*c*).

§ 1051. Admissions, distinguished from Testimonial Self-Contradictions; Prior Warning not necessary. An Admission is logically useful against the party in the same way as a prior Self-Contradiction against a witness (ante, §§ 1018, 1048), and its admissibility rests partly on that ground. It follows that certain deductions from this principle have a parallel application to the present sort of evidence, — notably in respect to implied admissions (post, § 1060) and to explanations of the admissions (post, § 1058). But there are two respects in which the distinction between a witness' self-contradictions and a party's admissions becomes important.

(1) The rule requiring that the witness must have been warned when on the stand, and asked whether he had made the statement about to be offered as a self-contradiction (ante, §§ 1025 ff.), has always been understood not to be applicable to the use of a party's admissions, i.e. they may be offered without a prior warning to the party.[1] The historical origin of this rule is plain enough;

§ 1051. [1] ENGLAND: 1837, Andrews v. Askey, 8 C. & P. 7; 1874, Day, Common Law Procedure Acts, 4th ed., 277 (the statute of 1854 does not apply to admissions); UNITED STATES: Ala. 1917, Hesk v. Ellis, 200 Ala. 17, 75 So. 329; Ark. 1877, Collins v. Mack, for until the middle of the 1800s the opponent was neither competent nor compellable to take the stand as a witness in common-law trials (ante, § 577; post, § 2217), and hence it was impossible to ask him about his utterances; a requirement to that effect would have excluded all admissions.

Since parties have been made competent and compellable, this obstacle no longer exists in full force. But nevertheless the rule has persisted, and on two sufficient grounds, first, because the opponent may not in fact take the stand, and thus no opportunity for asking him would arise, and, secondly, because the only object of requiring the warning is to provide a fair opportunity of explanation before the witness' departure, whereas a party is in theory present during the trial, and has in fact ample opportunity to protect himself by taking the stand for any explanations which he may deem necessary after hearing the testimony to his alleged admissions. It may be added that in chancery practice, where the opponent was compellable to testify upon a bill of discovery, and thus the reason of the original rule was in part lacking, there was a practice which to some extent assimilated the rule for witnesses, i.e. the party's oral admissions, though received in evidence, would not be acted on as the basis of a decision unless they had been specifically inquired about beforehand in the interrogatories appended to the bill (post, § 1856).

(2) A further practical difference between a party's admissions and a witness' self-contradictions remains to be noticed. The statements of a third person, i.e. vicarious admissions, may often be used against the party as ad-

31 Ark. 694 (even where the party is also a witness); Colo. 1892, Rose v. Otis, 18 Colo. 59, 63, 31 Pac. 493 (same); Del. 1898, State v. Brown, Del., 1 Pennaville 286, 40 Atl. 938; 1911, Roberts v. State, 25 Del. 2 Boyce, 385, 79 Atl. 396; Ga. 1897, Belt v. State, 103 Ga. 12, 29 S. E. 451 (larceny; the prosecutrix not being a party, prior asking is necessary before using inconsistent statements); Ida. 1894, Coffin v. Bradbury, 3 Ida. 770, 35 Pac. 715, 722; Ill. 1897, Buck v. Maddock, 167 Ill. 219, 47 N. E. 208; Ind. T. 1897, Eddings v. Boner, I Ind. T. 173, 38 S. W. 1110; Ia. 1896, State v. Forsythe, 99 Ia. 1, 68 N. W. 446; 1900, Bullard v. Bullard, 112 Ia. 423, 84 N. W. 513; Kan. 1894, Southern K. R. Co. v. Painter, 53 Kan. 414, 418, 36 Pac. 731; Md. 1896, Kirk v. Garrett, 84 Md. 383, 35 Atl. 1089; Mich. 1916, Cady v. Doxtator, 193 Mich. 170, 159 N. W. 151 (former testimony of now defendant); Minn. 1903, White v. Collins, 90 Minn. 165, 95 N. W. 765; 1911, Howard v. Illinois Central R. Co., 116 Minn. 256, 133 N. W. 557; Mo. 1905, State v. Wertz, 191 Mo. 569, 90 S. W. 838; 1907, Southern Bank v. Nichols, 202 Mo. 309, 100 S. W. 613; Mont. 1906, State v. Allen, 34 Mont. 403, 87 Pac. 177; Nebr. 1899, Churchill v. White, 58 Nebr. 22, 78 N. W. 369 (even where also a witness); 1902, Dunafon v. Barber, — Nebr. —, 95 N. W. 198; N. J. 1901, McBlain v. Edgar, 62 N. J. L. 634, 48 Atl. 600 (even where also a witness); Okl. 1900, Drury v. Terr., 9 Okl. 398, 60 Pac. 101, semble; Pa. 1874, Brubaker v. Taylor, 76 Pa. 87 (even where also a witness); 1876, Kreiter v. Bomberger, 82 Pa. 59, 61 (same); S. C. 1895, State v. Freeman, 43 S. C. 105, 20 S. E. 974 (even where also a witness); 1907, State v. Emerson, 78 S. C. 83, 58 S. E. 974; Vt. 1905, Coolidge v. Ayers, 77 Vt. 448, 61 Atl. 40; Wash. 1898, Hart v. Pratt, 19 Wash. 560, 53 Pac. 711; 1905, State v. Strodemeier, 40 Wash. 608, 82 Pac. 915.

Contra: 1882, Nutter v. O'Donnell, 6 Colo. 253, 260 ("the rule is the same whether the witnesses sought to be contradicted are parties to the suit or third persons"); 1889, State v. Young, 99 Mo. 666, 681, 12 S. W. 879 (rule applicable to defendant testifying; Ray, C. J., and Black, J., diss.); 1881, State v. White, 15 S. C. 381, 391 (asking not required for admissions as such, even when the party takes the stand; otherwise, if the statements are offered to impeach him as witness).

Not decided: 1907, Goss v. Goss, 102 Minn. 346, 113 N. W. 690 (not decided).

It is to be noted that this exemption from asking is properly applied even where the party is also a witness; i.e. where his statement plays the double part of a party's admission and a witness' self-contradiction.

missions, — for example, admissions by a predecessor in title. But this use is subject to definite limitations (post, §§ 1069–1087). Hence, if such a person has taken the stand as a witness, his prior inconsistent statements may be available to discredit him as a witness, although they might have failed to satisfy the rule for admissions of a predecessor.[2] Conversely, they may satisfy the latter rule but not the former, even against a party.[3]

§ 1052. Admissions, distinguished from Conduct indicating a Consciousness of Guilt (Flight, Fraud, Spoliation of Documents, Withholding of Evidence, and the like). (1) Admissions are statements, i.e. assertions in words, and it is their inconsistency with the party's other assertions that discredits the latter. Hence conduct cannot of itself be treated as an admission.

Yet the various sorts of conduct, which indicate a guilty consciousness and are undoubtedly receivable in evidence, are sometimes spoken of as Admissions. The truth is that they are just what they seem to be, namely, acts, not assertions, and that their use in evidence is strictly a circumstantial one by way of inference from the conduct to the mental state beneath it, and from that to some ulterior fact. This kind of evidence, and the theory of it, has already been considered in detail (ante, §§ 265–293). What has led them to be by some judges described as Admissions is the casual feature that in most instances they are receivable only as against a party-opponent to the cause, i.e. subject to the limitation peculiar to admissions. The reason for this is that otherwise their unrestricted use would lead to a substantial evasion of the Hearsay rule. For example, if after an affray one of the participants, A, takes flight and one of the bystanders, B, pursues and arrests him, A's flight is cir-

[2] 1916, Carey v. Nissie, 145 Mich. 383, 108 N. W. 733 (vendor testifying); 1897, Vogt v. Baldwin, 20 Mont. 322, 51 Pac. 157 (similar ruling for statements of an assignor testifying); 1895, Josephi v. Furnish, 27 Or. 260, 41 Pac. 424 (where a vendor on cross-examination was asked as to statements made by him after the sale of chattels; these statements being in themselves inadmissible as admissions by one out of possession, but being also contradictory to his direct testimony as to the facts of the sale, and for the latter purpose only admissible).

So also the following peculiar situation: 1911, Johnson v. Johnson, 78 N. J. Eq. 507, 80 Atl. 119 (divorce for adultery, the adulterous act being a rape; the defendant's plea of 'nolo contendere' on the rape charge, here received to impeach the defendant testifying for himself, as involving both a crime and a self-contradiction; whether receivable as an admission, not decided; this hesitation of the Court was unfounded).

[3] 1878, Wallace v. Souther, 2 Can. Sup. 598, 604 ("whether it contradicts a previous statement [on the stand] or not," the party's statement is receivable); 1905, Miller v. People, 216 Ill. 309, 74 N. E. 743 (a defendant's testimony on a former trial may be read against him as containing admissions, though he does not take the stand now; three judges dissenting, on the principle of § 2272, post, citing no authority; the dissent is totally without grounds); 1902, State v. Deal, 43 Or. 17, 70 Pac. 534.

So, too, the rule against impeaching one's own witness may forbid using self-contradictions against the opponent called as a witness (ante, § 906), and yet the same statements may serve as admissions; 1871, Gibbs v. Linabury, 22 Mich. 479 (where to prove the execution of a note the defendant was called; he testified that he could not swear to the writing, and the plaintiff then testified that the defendant had admitted the signature's genuineness on the stand at the trial below; held proper, as an admission).

The following ruling is preternaturally finicky and marks an acme of technicalism: 1909, State v. Minnick, 54 Or. 86, 102 Pac. 605 (the defendant having testified and having denied certain contradictory statements, they were proved on rebuttal; held that if admissions, they should have been proved in chief, and if only testimonial self-contradictions, the Court should have limited them to that purpose).

cumstantial evidence of his consciousness of guilt and thus of actual guilt, while B's pursuit is no less a circumstance evidencing B's belief in A's guilt and thus similarly of the fact of guilt. Yet to admit B's belief as circumstantial evidence would be at least no better than to admit B's extrajudicial assertion of A's guilt, which would clearly be prohibited by the Hearsay rule. Therefore in general the conduct of third persons, so far as it is a means of arguing to their belief, and thus to the fact believed, is excluded. Nevertheless, there are exceptional instances enough, in which such conduct is admitted, to indicate that on principle such evidence has a genuine circumstantial use, and that its prohibition is the indirect result of the policy of the Hearsay rule, and not of logical necessity. Those rules of exception have been already fully considered (ante, §§ 268–272).

It is enough here to note that the various sorts of conduct which are thus received against a party-opponent are not on principle to be classed as Admissions, but as Conduct affording circumstantial inferences. The chief types of such conduct, already considered in the above-cited sections, may here be rehearsed for reference' sake: Demeanor during trial (§ 274); Refusal to undergo a superstitious test (§ 275); Flight, escape, resistance, or concealment (§ 276); Falsehood, fraud, fabrication and suppression of evidence, bribery, spoliation (§ 278); Precautions against injury, repairs of a machine or highway after an injury (§§ 282, 283); Failure to prosecute or to make claim (§ 284); and Failure to produce witnesses or documents (§§ 285–291).

(2) From the foregoing use of conduct circumstantially is to be distinguished the use of silence as embodying a genuine Admission. When by a party's silence an assent is given to the assertion of a third person, that assertion is thereby adopted by the party, and therefore may be used against him as his own statement and admission. It is the statement, however, that constitutes the admission; the conduct merely effects its adoption. Such admissions, forming one variety of vicarious admissions, are later examined in detail (post, § 1071).

§ 1053. Admissions, as not subject to rules for Testimonial Qualifications; Personal Knowledge, Infancy; Opinion Rule. A primary use and effect of an admission is to discredit a party's claim by exhibiting his inconsistent other utterances. It is therefore immaterial whether these other utterances would have been independently receivable as the testimony of a qualified witness. It is their inconsistency with the party's present claim that gives them logical force.[1]

(1) In particular, personal knowledge, as indispensable to a witness (ante, § 656), is here not required. If the party-opponent, for example, now claims that his contract, made by an agent in France, entitles him to a cargo of silk, his statement last month that his contract called for a cargo of ribbons would discredit his present claim, even though it may be apparent that in neither case could he speak from personal knowledge. The conflict of claims is the significant circumstance, and the element of personal knowledge merely increases or lessens that significance. Since a party may make a claim and file averment of pleadings without regard to personal knowledge of the facts, it is fallacious to exact, in his contrary admissions, an element of personal knowledge which is not required for the original advancement of his claim. Such a requirement is repudiated in the better judicial view:[2]

§ 1053. [1] Accord: 1908, Binewicz v. Haglin, 103 Minn. 297, 115 N. W. 271.

1860, STEPHENS, J., in Kitchen v. Robbins, 29 Ga. 713, 716: "Are no admissions good against a party, unless founded on his personal knowledge? The admissions would not

[2] Accord: ENGLAND: 1836, Bishop of Meath v. Marquess of Winchester, 3 Bing. N. C. 183, 203 (case stated for counsel, made by a predecessor of the present bishop, concerning facts ranging 60 years before, received, though no "personal knowledge of the facts" could be supposed on his part; here the facts consisted chiefly of documents preserved, and the party had at any rate "with such, the best means of knowledge"); 1874, Bulley v. Bulley, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 739, 747, 751 (recital in a deed "sent to be executed for the) purpose of making a good title", received; but treated as having little weight, because it concerned a matter happening 120 years before, of which the party could have no personal knowledge); CANADA: 1917, Stowe v. Grand Trunk Pacific R. Co., 39 D. L. R. 127, Alta. (injury to horses; plaintiff's admission of a fact affecting due care, told him by his brother, held admissible, though not based on personal knowledge); affirmed in Can. S. C., 51 D. L. R. 685); UNITED STATES: Ga. 1860, Kitchen v. Robbins, 29 Ga. 713, 716 (see quotation supra); Mass. 1906, Stone v. Stone, 191 Mass. 371, 77 N. E. 845 (opinion); Mich. 1901, Wasey v. Ins. Co., 126 Mich. 119, 85 N. W. 459; 1915, Fitzgerald v. Lozier Motor Co., 187 Mich. 660, 154 N. W. 67 (cause of employee's injury; employer's report to insurer, based on foreman's report, and not on personal knowledge, held nevertheless admissible); Minn. 1908, Binewicz v. Haglin, 103 Minn. 297, 115 N. W. 271, semble (admissions of negligence); Mo. 1847, Sparr v. Wellman, 11 Mo. 230, 234 ("where a party believes a fact upon evidence sufficient to convince him of its existence, his declaration of the existence of that fact, if against his interest, is evidence against him"); N. Y. 1899, Reed v. McCord, 160 N. Y. 330, 54 N. E. 737 (if not merely in form an admission that he had heard of the fact); Tenn. 1835, Miller v. Denman, 8 Yerg. 237 ("whether he derives the facts admitted from his own knowledge or from information is perfectly immaterial"; but the Court wrongly declares that the source of the assertion cannot even affect the credit to be given by the jury to the admission); Wis. 1867, Shaddock v. Clifton, 22 Wis. 114, 118; 1870, Chapman v. R. Co., 26 Wis. 294, 302; 1913, Hilton v. Hayes, 154 Wis. 27, 141 N. W. 1015 (held not improperly excluded on the facts).

Contra: 1801, Chambre, J., in Roe v. Ferrars, 2 B. & P. 542, 548 ("where one party reads a part of the answer of the other party in evidence, he makes the whole admissible only so far as to waive any objection to the competency of the testimony of the party making the answer", and not so as to admit facts "stated by way of hearsay only"); 1913, Murdock v. Adamson, 12 Ga. App. 275, 77 S. E. 181 (father's action for son's death; father's admissions of son's negligence, based solely on son's statements, held inadmissible; no authority cited on the present point; opinion confused); 1897, Folk v. Schaeffer, 180 Pa. 613, 37 Atl. 104 (admission of liability by a partner, who had no personal knowledge, excluded in a suit against the firm).

Undecided: 1825, Rees v. Bowen, 1 McCl. & Y. 389, 391.

Note that under the present principle a party's account-books are always receivable against him, even though for lack of personal knowledge they might not be admissible under the Hearsay exception for regular entries (post, §§ 1530, 1557).

In Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands, under the Spanish system, the opposite principle prevails: P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 4305 ("Confession may be made either judicially or extrajudicially. In either case it shall be an indispensable condition for the validity of the confession that it should relate to personal acts of the confessor and that he should have legal capacity to make it"); P. I. Civ. C. § 1231 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. § 4305).

But the principle does not require the reception of an admission which in form merely concedes that some one else said something; for here the fact admitted would itself be merely a hearsay statement (according to the distinction noted ante, § 664); 1842, Lord Trimlestown v. Kemmis, 5 Cl. & F. 749, 780, 784 (statement by a party's predecessor that he had heard his grandmother make a certain statement, held not receivable; Lord Brougham doubting); 1857, Stephens v. Vroman, 16 N. Y. 381, 383; 1899, Reed v. McCord, N. Y. (cited supra).

be made except on evidence which satisfies the party who is making them against his own interest, that they are true, and that is evidence to the jury that they are true. Admissions do not come in on the ground that the party making them is speaking from his personal knowledge, but upon the ground that a party will not make admissions against himself unless they are true. The fact that he makes them against his interest can be reasonably explained only on the supposition that he is constrained to do so by the force of the evidence. The source from which a knowledge of the facts is derived, is a circumstance for the jury to consider, in estimating the value of the evidence, but that is all."

(2) On the same principle, the admissions of an infant party would be receivable.[3] Theoretically, the admissions of a lunatic party would stand upon the same footing, although the weight to be given them might be 'nil.' The practical result of conceding this much upon principle would be that at any rate there would be no occasion for putting into force the detailed rules about testimonial capacity (ante, §§ 492–509).

(3) The Opinion Rule (post, § 1917) does not limit the use of a party's admissions.[4] The reason for that rule does not apply to a party's admissions. Moreover, every case presented in the allegations of pleadings and witnesses includes both facts and inferences; hence, the opponent's admissions will naturally range over both facts and inferences without distinction, e.g. as when a debtor's letter admits that he owes $20 out of the $45 claimed by the creditor. To extend the arbitrary trivialities of the Opinion Rule to parties' admissions would be the extreme of futility.

§ 1054. Admissions, excluded as evidence of certain facts; (1) Contents of Documents; (2) Execution of Attested Documents; (3) Reports Required by Law; (4) Party-Opponent's Privilege. For the purpose of proving certain classes of facts, the use of admissions has by some Courts been forbidden.[1]

[3] 1845, O'Neill v. Read, 7 Ir. L. Rep. 434 (admissions of facts tending to show that goods were necessaries, received; but the Court, rather oddly, declined to term the statements "admissions"); 1902, Chicago C. R. Co. v. Tuohy, 196 Ill. 410, 63 N. E. 997, semble: 1899, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Potter, 60 Kan. 808, 58 Pac. 471 (infant's admissions receivable if the trial Court regards him as intelligent, even though he is incompetent to take an oath); 1920, Gebhardt v. United R. Co., — Mo. —, 220 S. W. 677; 1920, Gangi v. Fradus, 227 N. Y. 452, 125 N. E. 677; 1827, Mather v. Clark, 2 Aik. Vt. 209, 210.

Contra: 1904, Knights Templar & M. L. I. Co. v. Crayton, 209 Ill. 550, 70 N. E. 1066 (this is "suggested").

Compare § 1063, n. 1, post, at the end (admissions of attorneys).

For a guardian's admissions, see post, § 1076.

[4] Contra: 1920, Negociacion Agricola v. Love, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 220 S. W. 224 (action for value of services rendered in 1912 and 1913; plea, fraud; held, assuming that the plaintiff's character for honesty was material, that a letter of recommendation signed by defendant, dated 1911, and describing the defendant as "a person completely honorable and able for any contract", was inadmissible, being an "individual opinion", and as a party's admission it could not be received since a party's admission must concern facts, not opinions; this ruling is an unfortunate but entirely erroneous misapplication of the Opinion rule; party's admissions are in no way limited by the Opinion rule, as every day's unquestioned practice shows; e.g. a defendant's admission that he has been negligent; in the present case, the admission was indeed of practically no weight, because made in 1911, prior to the alleged frauds of the plaintiff, and therefore not inconsistent with the pleadings).

§ 1054. [1] The following anomalous statute belongs here: Wis. St. 1911, c. 123, p. 125, Stats. 1919, § 4079*m*: ("in civil actions for damages caused by personal injury no statement made or writing signed by the injured party within 72 hours of the time the injury happened or accident occurred shall be used in evidence against the party making or signing the same unless such evidence would be admissible as part of the 'res gestæ'";

(1) In evidencing the contents of a document, it has sometimes been thought that the opponent's admissions — at least, his oral admissions — should not be received until the original had been accounted for as lost or otherwise unavailable. This view, from time to time advanced in early English rulings, was definitely repudiated in Slatterie v. Pooley in a forceful opinion by Baron Parke; but has nevertheless obtained some vogue in the courts of this country. Its reasoning, and the state of the law, are examined elsewhere (post, §§ 1255–1257), in dealing with the rule requiring the production of documentary originals. That the fact of loss of the original may be evidenced by admissions has not been doubted (post, § 1196).

(2) In evidencing the execution of an attested document, the opponent's admissions were, by the orthodox common law, held inferior to the proof of the attesting witness' signature, and were not receivable until the latter was shown to be unattainable; though some American Courts declined to accept this result. The reason for it, and the state of the law, are elsewhere examined (post, §§ 1296–1300), in dealing with the attesting-witness rule. Apart from that rule, it has not been doubted that the execution of an ordinary unattested document may be evidenced by admissions (post, § 2132).

In Louisiana, a peculiar rule obtains that, if the signature of a document is disowned in the opponent's pleading, his admission will not be received to prove it.[2]

(3) Reports required by law to be filed with an administrative office by persons whose occupations are subject to administrative control will often contain statements sought to be used later as admissions; e.g. reports by an employer or a common carrier of injuries received by employees or passengers. Such statutes sometimes forbid the use of these reports in evidence; but the principle here involved is essentially one of Privilege, and the authorities are therefore considered under that head (post, § 2377).[3]

(4) Party-Opponent's Privilege. A party-opponent's admissions, so far as voluntarily made extrajudicially in oral statements overheard by other persons, or in writings possessed by other persons, were never privileged at common-law. But so far as contained in his own statements on the stand as a witness, or in writings possessed by himself, they were privileged from compulsory disclosure at common-law, i.e. they could not in general be obtained from him, by legal process, for use against him as evidence, without his consent. This privilege extended both to criminal and to civil matters; this is a wretched piece of partisan legislation which merely adds another artificial gag-rule to that series of manœuvres that calls itself a trial; the basis of the statute is, of course, the supposed chicanery of defendants' claim-agents in securing admissions during the injured person's disabled condition; but the straightforward and effective remedy would be to punish a few such agents where sharp practice is proved).

[2] 1835, Plicque v. La Branche, 9 La. 560, 562 (under C. C. P. § 325, providing for proof of handwriting); 1849, Segond v. Roach, 5 La. An. 54. (rule not applicable to a lost document).

[3] That lack of personal knowledge is no ground of objection to the use of such reports as admissions has been noted ante, § 1053. Whether an employee making such an admission is an agent of the party for the purpose is another question (post, § 1078).

being absolute for the former (post, § 2250), and subject to exceptions for the latter (post, § 2217).

But in criminal cases the privilege has been annulled, for many classes of offences, by the so-called immunity statutes (post, § 2281), and in civil cases it has been entirely abolished (post, §§ 2218–2221).

§ 1055. Admissions, as Insufficient for proof of certain facts: (1) Marriage; (2) Divorce; (3) Criminal Cases. In proving certain kinds of facts, a few rules have grown up which do not forbid the use of the party's admissions, but merely declare them insufficient without additional evidence; these are rules of quantity, not of relevancy.

(1) There has been some recognition of a rule that, upon certain issues, the fact of marriage is not sufficiently evidenced by admissions alone (post, § 2068).

(2) In a proceeding for divorce, the rule adopted from the civil law obtains universally, that the opponent's admissions are not alone sufficient proof; the danger of collusion furnishing the reason for the rule (post, § 2067).

(3) In criminal cases, a rule prevails in many jurisdictions that the accused's confession is not alone sufficient to found a conviction upon (post, § 2070).[1]

(4) There is no fixed rule that in civil cases generally an opponent's extrajudicial admission is insufficient, without other evidence, as the foundation of a verdict for one or more facts. But when the admission concerns the main controverted fact in the case, and the opponent's admission is the only evidence offered, a few Courts show an inclination to follow a general maxim that it is insufficient, at least, when the admission is one of conduct only.[2] This is of course merely an application of the general function of the judge to control a verdict based on insufficient evidence (post, §§ 2494, 2551). There are also one or two local rules as to corroboration being required where only a party-opponent's admissions are offered (post, § 2066).

(5) In Louisiana and Porto Rico there is a series of special rules limiting the use of various sorts of admissions, and based on the theory of the Continental law of proof.[3]

§ 1056. Weight of Admissions. Except in the foregoing instances there are no specific rules which place a handicap on the use of a party's admissions. But there is a general distrust of testimony reporting any extrajudicial oral statements alleged to have been made, including a party's admissions.

§ 1055. [1] For the doctrine that oral admissions are to be received with caution, owing to their liability to being misunderstood and misreported, see post, § 2094, n. 4.

[2] 1908, Binewicz v. Haglin, 103 Minn. 297, 115 N. W. 271 (admissions of negligence).

[3] Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 2249 ("Domestic books and papers are no proof in favor of him who has written them; they are proofs against him, 1, in all cases where they formally declare a payment received; 2, when they contain an express mention that the minute was made to supply the want of a title in favor of him for whose advantage they declare that an obligation was made"); § 2250 (creditor's indorsement of payment on the instrument is "good evidence when it tends to establish the discharge of the debtor"); § 2290 (an "extrajudicial confession, merely verbal, is useless in all cases of a demand in support of which testimonial proof would be inadmissible").

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 4305 ff.

This distrust reflects itself in several rules, which may notably affect a party's admissions, viz. (1) the rule about proving a document's contents (post, §§ 1196, 1255), (2) the Hearsay rule (post, § 1362), and (3) the rule for Verbal Completeness of Utterance (post, § 2094).

§ 1057. Admissions, as distinguished from Estoppels, Warranties, Contracts, and Arbitrations; Admissions made to Third Persons, or after Suit Begun. An admission, of the sort here concerned, is nothing but a piece of evidence. It is therefore to be distinguished from those statements of the party which become in themselves the foundation of independent rights for other persons, by virtue of some doctrine of substantive law, — in other words, from binding estoppels, warranties, and representations.

Thus, if A claims that his boundary line runs to an oak tree, and B admitted this, B's extrajudicial admission of the boundary's location is merely evidence for the truth of the other facts on which A rests his claim. But if B has made his statement to A under such circumstances that A was justified in acting on it and has since built up to the line he claimed, B's concession may by estoppel become the foundation of a new right for A, wholly irrespective of the validity of the grounds of his original claim. Here the field of substantive law, not that of evidence, is concerned. The statement or representation of B may, however, have been precisely the same in both cases, and it is A's reliance and action thereon that bring into effect the doctrine of the substantive law. Thus, the so-called "admission" being a common feature in both instances, there has been some tendency[1] to confound in one treatment the two wholly distinct things. There is, however, no ground for this confusion. It is simple enough to keep apart the evidential thing and the doctrine of substantive rights:

1860, BELL, C. J., in Corser v. Paul, 41 N. H. 24, 31: "There is a class of admissions which may be either express or implied from silence, or acquiescence, which are conclusive. Such are admissions which have been acted upon, or those which have been made to influence the conduct of others, or to derive some advantage to the party, and which, therefore, cannot be denied without a breach of good faith. As if, for example, in the present case, the defendant had stood by and seen this note offered to the bank for discount; and, being aware of what was doing, had been silent; or if, before the discount he had been spoken to by any of the officers of the bank in relation to the note, and, being aware of the facts, had forborne to deny the signature — by these tacit admissions he would be forever concluded to deny the note to be his, in case the bank discounted it. This is but an application of the same principle that is applied in the case of deeds of real estate, that he who stands by, at the sale of his property by another person, without objecting, will be precluded from contesting the purchaser's title."

So also a representation may become a warranty or other contract, and thus give rise to substantive rights, although, apart from such rights, the same representation might have been spoken of as a mere evidential admission; the occasional use of the term "admission" in such a connection (as, for example, when it is said that the indorsement of a bill of exchange admits — i.e. warrants — the genuineness of all prior indorsements [2]) must not be allowed to mislead us. So, too, the question whether a party has by his conduct assented to a contract [3] or to the possession of land, and has thus effected a change in his substantive rights, has no connection with the present evidential question (post, § 1073) whether by silence he has adopted another person's statement so as to make it his own admission.

§ 1057. [1] Notably in Greenleaf, Evidence, §§ 207 ff.

So, too, the acknowledgment by a parent of an illegitimate child, by statute in many States, gives to the child the status of legitimacy; and this acknowledgment becomes, not merely an evidential admission, but an act of substantive law, fixing the parties' rights, and therefore "conclusive." [4]

Again, the award of an arbitrator revises and concludes the parties' rights by virtue of their contractual assent to the award, and hence the tenor of the parties' statements in submitting the matter to arbitration must be examined;[5] but this has no concern with the question (post, § 1062) whether a statement made to the arbitrators, where the arbitration has failed, is to be excluded as evidence, on the ground that it is an admission made in the course of an effort to compromise.

All these modes in which a party's statements become the basis of contractual or estoppel rights have no bearing on their use as mere evidence.[6]

It may be added that, in consequence, it is immaterial, when an opponent's statement is offered as an admission, that it was uttered to a third person and not to the other party to the cause.[7] Evidentially it is still an inconsistent statement and therefore receivable. If, on the other hand, it were put forward as the basis of an estoppel right, because acted upon by the other party

[2] 1809, Critchlow v. Perry, 2 Camp. 182.

[3] 1820, Batturs v. Sellers, 5 H. & J. 117, 119 (a buyer's silent acquiescence in the seller's writing of the former's name makes the latter the agent to write it, so as to satisfy the Statute of Frauds); 1922, Southern Coal & Iron Co. v. Schwoon, — Tenn. —, 239 S. W. 398 (abandonment of title to land; counsel's statements in another litigation, held not to invoke the doctrine of judicial estoppel).

[4] 1919, Dilworth v. Dilworth, 134 Md. 589, 108 Atl. 165 ("the acknowledgment by the father . . . fixed the status of the child, and that cannot be changed by anything the father or mother may do").

Distinguish here the use of reputation as an element in "notorious" recognition, required by statute (post, § 1606).

[5] 1794, Kingston v. Phelps, Peake 227 (insurance policy; defendant's consent to arbitration, held to make the award receivable; but in this case it was rejected, as the plaintiff himself had not consented to the submission); 1800, Gregory v. Howard, 3 Esp. 113 (arbitrator to settle accounts, received to prove the parties' admissions, on a plea that the claim sued for had been included in the settlement).

[6] An admission in evidence is different from a waiver in the substantive law of contracts, property, etc. Whether the insurer's sending of a blank form for proof of claim, after he knows of a fact negativing the claim, is a waiver, has been the subject of many rulings, but the use of the phrase in such forms "shall not be construed as an admission" is misleading; it may be an admission evidentially, yet not a waiver; e.g. 1909, McCord v. Masonic Casualty Co., 201 Mass. 473, 88 N. E. 6.

[7] 1792, R. v. Neville, Peake 91 (nuisance; defendant's bond to the parish where he formerly resided, acknowledging his trade to be a nuisance, received, subject to explanation, "as it shall appear that this place is more or less like that where he before resided"); 1794, Grant v. Jackson, Peake 203 (action on a bill of exchange; a defendant's admission in an answer in chancery to a bill by other creditors, received); 1853, Chapman v. Twitchell, 37 Me. 59, 62; 1916, Sanders Engineering Co. v. Small, 115 Me. 52, 97 Atl. 218 (letter to C. by defendant's attorney, admitted; following Chapman v. Twitchell, and approving the text above); 1914, Peterson v. Pittsburg S. P. G. M. Co., 37 Nev. 117, 140 Pac. 519; 1904, Lambeck v. Stiefel, 71 N. J. L. 320, 59 Atl. 460.

to the cause, there would be ground for holding that it must have been made to him directly or else he would not have been justified in relying upon it; and such would be the usual requirement, for purposes of estoppel.

For the same reason, it is no objection to an admission that it was made after suit begun.[8]

§ 1058. Quasi-Admissions, as distinguished from Solemn or Judicial Admissions. The law of Evidence has suffered, in its most vital parts, from an ailment almost incurable, — that of confusion of nomenclature. The term "admissions" exhibits this misfortune in one of its notable aspects. There are two principles, not at all connected, which for a century or more have had to be discussed by the aid of a single and common term. One of these principles is the subject of the present Chapter; it authorizes the receipt of any statement by an opponent, as evidence in contradiction and impeachment of his present claim. Such statements, here referred to in the loose and usual phraseology as "admissions", should better, with a view to discrimination and clearness, be designated Quasi-Admissions.

The true Admission, in the fullest sense of the term, is another thing, and involves a totally distinct principle. It concerns a method of escaping from the necessity of offering any evidence at all. The former is an item in the mass of evidence; the latter is a waiver relieving the opposing party from the need of any evidence. The former is involved in the subject of the present Book, "What Facts are admissible as Evidence"; the latter is concerned with the subject of Book IV, "Of What Propositions no Evidence need be offered"; and is dealt with elsewhere (post, §§ 2588–2595).

An Admission, in the latter and correct sense, is a formal act, done in the course of judicial proceedings, which waives or dispenses with the production of evidence, by conceding for the purposes of litigation that the proposition of fact alleged by the opponent is true. The principal questions that arise in construing its principle are: What sort of a formal act is necessary; who may effectively do that act; what classes of facts may be thus disposed of; and how far, in time, is that act effective? With this genuine Admission we are not here further concerned, except in noting the distinction mentioned in the ensuing section, and also in considering (post, § 1066) the use of prior pleadings as quasi-admissions. Throughout the present discussion the term "admissions" will be understood to signify the ordinary or quasi-admission; the term "judicial admission" will be used to signify the formal waiver of proof.

§ 1059. Same: Quasi-Admissions not Conclusive: Explanations; Corroboration by Prior Consistent Claims; Putting in the Whole of the Statement. (1) A quasi-admission, of the present sort, being nothing but an item of evidence, is therefore not in any sense final or conclusive. The opponent, whose utterance it is, may none the less proceed with his proof in denial of its correctness; it is merely an inconsistency which discredits, in a greater or less degree, his present claim and his other evidence.

[8] 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. U. S. 64, 66; 1823, Marshall v. Sheridan, 10 S. & R. Pa. 268.

No one would ever have entertained doubts on this point, had not the two doctrines noticed in the preceding sections tended, by their superficial resemblance to the present doctrine, at certain points to produce confusion, — namely, the doctrines of estoppel and of judicial admission.[1] An Estoppel, i.e. a representation acted on by the other party, by creating a substantive right does oblige the estopped party to make good his representation, — in other words, but inaccurately, it is conclusive. So, too, but for an entirely different reason, a Judicial Admission is conclusive, in the sense that it formally waives all right to deny, for the purposes of the trial, i.e. it removes the proposition in question from the field of disputed issues. But statements which are not estoppels or judicial admissions have no quality of conclusiveness, and on principle cannot have.

This has always been conceded by the judges, in modern times:[2]

§ 1059. [1] The following utterance shows how obscurely the true principle was once conceived by eminent judges: 1803, Sir W. Grant, M. R., in Fairlie v. Hastings, 10 Ves. Jr. 123, 127: "A party is bound by his own admission, and is not permitted to contradict it."

[2] Accord: ENGLAND: 1797, Loveridge v. Botham, 1 B. & P. 49 (attorney's bill, followed by a second bill increasing the charge and adding new items; the Court, while at first confusedly speaking of the former as both "conclusive" and "presumptive" evidence, ended by declaring that "if errors or omissions in the former bill could be proved, they ought to be allowed for"); 1849, Newton v. Belcher, 12 Q. B. 921, 924 (mistake of law as to liability, allowed to be shown); 1849, Newton v. Liddiard, ib. 925 (same; the rule "is applicable to mistakes in respect of legal liability as well as in respect of fact").

CANADA: N. Br. 1844, Gilbert v. Porter, 2 Kerr N. Br. 390, 394; 1846, Payson v. Good, 3 Kerr N. Br. 272, 279; 1877, Raymond v. Cummings, 17 N. Br. 544 (book-account entries); Sask. 1911, Massey-Harris Co. v. Horning, 4 Sask. 448 (entries of payment in collection-books of the plaintiff creditor, held not conclusive against him).

UNITED STATES. Federal: 1909, Morgan v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 169 Fed. 242 (affidavit allowed to be explained by defendant as to his purpose in making it); Ala. 1921, Churchill v. Walling, 205 Ala. 509, 88 So. 582 (damage to bailed goods; receipt allowed to be disputed and explained); Cal. 1892, Bush v. Barnett, 96 Cal. 202, 205, 31 Pac. 2; Fla. 1852, Carter v. Bennett, 4 Fla. 283, 301, 342 (admission by a "solemn oath of record", setting up a defence, held open to explanation); Ga. 1847, Solomon v. Solomon, 2 Ga. 18, 30 (mistake of law may be shown); 1901, Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Gray, 113 Ga. 424, 38 S. E. 992; Ia. 1907, Furlong & Meloy v. American Central F. Ins. Co., 136 Ia. 499, 113 N. W. 107 (plaintiff's invoices and inventories); Me. 1903, Davis v. Davis, 98 Me. 135, 56 Atl. 588 ("No mere admissions 'in pais', however express or formal, are conclusive, unless they operate as an estoppel"); Md. 1903, Nicholson v. Snyder, 97 Md. 415, 55 Atl. 484 (party's answer in bankruptcy); Mass. 1909, Conant v. Evans, 202 Mass. 34, 88 N. E. 438 (admissions in correspondence); Nebr. 1902, State v. Paxton, 65 Nebr. 110, 134, 90 N. W. 983 (mistake of law may be shown); 1904, Wesnieski v. Vanek, — Nebr. —, 99 N. W. 258 (malicious prosecution; plaintiff's plea of guilty in the criminal prosecution, not conclusive); N. H. 1860, Corser v. Paul, 41 N. H. 24, 31; N. Y. 1920, Gangi v. Fradus, 227 N. Y. 452, 125 N. E. 677 (leaving the weight of admissions entirely to the jury); Or. 1909, Mahon v. Rankin, 54 Or. 328, 102 Pac. 608; Pa. 1906, Com. v. Monongahela Bridge Co., 216 Pa. 108, 64 Atl. 1058 (pleadings in another suit; cited post, § 1066, n. 2); P. I. 1906, Oas v. Roa, 7 P. I. 20 (title); Vt. 1896, Welch v. Ricker, 69 Vt. 239, 39 Atl. 200 (account-book entries, as to the person charged); 1902, Laflam v. Missisquoi Pulp Co., 74 Vt. 125, 52 Atl. 526; W. Va. 1906, Mullins v. Shrewsbury, 60 W. Va. 694, 55 S. E. 736 (pleading in another suit); 1909, Dudley v. Niswander, 65 W. Va. 461, 64 S. E. 745 (controversy over a note; terms of a contract made by one of the parties allowed to be contradicted, being merely used as an admission); Wyo. 1913, Hamilton v. Diefenderfer, 21 Wyo. 266, 133 Pac. 1081.

Under the Canadian practice, answers of a party to interrogatories of discovery are binding, in the sense that an inconsistent defence of fact cannot be set up at the trial, without amending the answer; 1917, Pyne v.

1829, BAYLEY, J., in Heane v. Rogers, 9 B. & C. 577, 586 (referring to an admission of the title of an assignee in bankruptcy): "There is no doubt but that the express admissions of a party to the suit, or admissions implied from his conduct, are evidence, and strong evidence, against him. But we think that he is at liberty to prove that such admissions were mistaken or were untrue, and is not estopped or concluded by them, unless another person has been induced by them to alter his condition; in such a case the party is estopped from disputing their truth with respect to that person (and those claiming under him) and that transaction; but as to third persons he is not bound."

1834, PARKE, B., in Ridgway v. Philip, 1 C. M. & R. 415: "An admission does not estop the party who makes it; he is still at liberty, so far as regards his own interest, to contradict it by evidence."

The only instances in which any apparent contradiction may be found are those in which questions of Estoppel (with which we have here nothing to do) were under discussion.

Distinguish from the foregoing principle another question, once in great vogue, and already here treated (ante, §§ 525–531), namely, whether the principle 'nemo allegans suam turpitudinem audiatur' would exclude the testimony of one who came forward to testify to his own prior falsity. So far as such a doctrine was ever recognized (and it is now wholly repudiated), it rested on the ground of moral obliquity, and applied to all witnesses alike, and not merely to parties, who indeed at that time were not qualified to testify at all.[3]

(2) It follows that an opponent whose admissions have been offered against him may offer any evidence which serves as an explanation for his former assertion of what he now denies to be the fact.[4] This may involve the showing of a mistake,[5] or the evidencing of circumstances which suggest a different significance to the words. The modes of explaining away a witness' self-contradictions (ante, § 1044) suggest analogies here.

(3) But such explanations must of course not violate other and independent principles of evidence. In particular, the rule against opinion-testimony (misguided as it is) may be construed to forbid the party to testify to his

Canadian Pacific R. Co., 37 D. L. R. 751, Man. (collecting prior cases).

Distinguish the effect of the parol evidence rule, post, §§ 2413, 2430, which forbids showing a mistake in a formal act constituting a substantive right.

[3] The following case illustrates the mingling of these two questions: 1829, Freeman v. Walker, 6 Greenl. Me. 68 (master's action for wages; whether defendant's allegation in a petition to the Federal authorities, relating to the master's misconduct, was disputable by him in this cause, not decided).

[4] 1867, Reid v. Warner, 17 Low. Can. 487 (handwriting); 1858, Smith v. Gifford, 33 Ala. 172; 1880, Dabney v. Mitchell, 66 Ala. 495, 505 (account filed); 1897, Posey v. Hanson, 10 D. C. App. 497, 508 (affidavit by one who could not read); 1896, Smith v. Mayfield, 163 Ill. 447, 45 N. E. 157 (the amount agreed to be due the admittant); 1906, State v. Morin, 102 Me. 290, 66 Atl. 650 (liquor-nuisance: why the defendant took out a Federal license, allowed to be explained); 1870, Janvrin v. Fogg, 49 N. H. 346; 1905, Chamberlain v. Iba, 181 N. Y. 486, 74 N. E. 481 (meaning of a letter, explained); 1897, Holmes v. W. R. E. Co., 20 R. I. 289, 38 Atl. 946 (words spoken jocularly, not an admission; here, of an agent); 1903, Boyer v. St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co., 97 Tex. 107, 76 S. W. 441 (assessors' books); 1920, Bonazzi v. Fortney, 94 Vt. 263, 110 Atl. 439 (malicious prosecution; on the facts as cited post, § 1066, n. 10, plaintiff was allowed to explain that the default was made on advice of an attorney); 1907, Yeska v. Swendrzynski, 133 Wis. 475, 113 N. W. 959 (explanation of an admission made in a plea of guilty to a prosecution for the same act, allowed).

[5] Ante, note 2.

real meaning and intention in making the statement.[6] Moreover, an explanation which attempts to rehabilitate the party by showing that he has, at still other times, made claims consistent with his present one is perhaps obnoxious to the general principle which forbids a witness' credit to be restored in this manner.[7]

(4) In this place, moreover, there often comes into application the general principle of Completeness, which permits the remainder of any utterance to be put in evidence by the other party, in order to present the full and correct significance of the fragment which the first party may have offered. This principle affects admissions as well as all other kinds of verbal utterances, and is elsewhere examined, in its bearing upon a party's admissions (post, §§ 2099, 2113, 2115).

The effect of this principle is sometimes difficult to distinguish from that of the Verbal Act doctrine (post, § 1772). The latter is concerned with the Hearsay rule, and defines the classes of utterances to which that rule is not applicable, i.e. it serves to remove the objection which that rule would otherwise interpose. The various sorts of statements which it thus serves to exempt from the Hearsay rule are elsewhere summarized (post, §§ 1777–1789). But it may here be noted that any statement of the opponent, made at the time of certain conduct of his which has been adduced as equivalent to an admission, may be offered in evidence so far as it presents the true complexion of his conduct and takes from it the quality of an admission.[8]

2. What Statements are Admissions

§ 1060. Implied Admissions; Sundry Instances. Whether from a certain express utterance some further statement is to be implied as necessarily included, or whether in certain conduct the utterance of a certain statement may be implied, is so much a question of the circumstances of each particular instance as hardly to become the legitimate subject of precedents. There are rulings recorded, but they depend upon no common principle.[1]

[6] 1897, Sutter v. Rose, 169 Ill. 66, 48 N. E. 411 (letter admitting knowledge, not allowed to be explained by writer's intention). This application of the rule is examined post, §§ 1954, 1963–1972.

[7] The cases are considered under that head, post, § 1126, § 1133, n. 7.

[8] 1846, Yarborough v. Moss, 9 Ala. 382, 387 (claim of interpleader to slaves attached by the defendant as creditor of T.; claimant had delivered the slaves to the sheriff when attached, and was allowed to prove what he then said: "if the plaintiff insists on this delivery for any purpose as evidence [by admissions], he is bound to take it with all the explanatory declarations and circumstances, as they constitute a part of the transaction itself. . . . If the entire declaration was received, it might appear that the claim of title would be perfectly consistent with the delivery"); 1860, Yates v. Shaw, 24 Ill. 368 (boundary dispute, the planting of a hedge by defendant on the line claimed by plaintiff, having been received as an admission, defendant's declarations of the line's incorrectness, while planting, received to explain away that inference).

Unless, of course, the doctrine of estoppel by judicial admissions applies: 1912, Central Trust Co. v. Culver, 23 Colo. App. 317, 192 Pac. 253.

§ 1060. [1] ENGLAND: 1818, Dickinson v. Coward, 1 B. & Ald. 677, 679 (assumpsit by assignee in bankruptcy; defendant's attendance to make claim and pay balance, at a meeting of the bankruptcy commissioners, held sufficient; L. C. J. Ellenborough: "I take it to be quite clear that any recognition of a person standing in a given relation to Admissions by conduct, for the reason already set forth ante, § 1052, have been fully considered under another head (ante, §§ 274–281).

§ 1061. Hypothetical Admissions; (1) Offer to Compromise or Settle a Claim; General Principle. Whether an offer to compromise a claim, or to settle it by a partial or complete payment, amounts to an admission of the truth of the facts on which the claim is based, and is therefore receivable in evidence, is a question which has given rise to prolonged discussion and to varied but often unsatisfactory attempts at explanation.

The solution is a simple one in its principle, though elusive and indefinite in its application; it is merely this, that a concession which is hypothetical only can never be treated as an assertion representing the party's actual belief, and therefore cannot be an admission; and, conversely, an unconditional assertion is receivable, without any regard to the circumstances which accompany it. But, before considering the bearing of this solution, it is necessary to dispose of some inadequate theories that have been judicially given some prominence:

(a) It was in Massachusetts formally propounded, and has elsewhere sometimes been suggested, that there is a privilege protecting as confidential all overtures of settlement made to the opposing party, — and this upon a principle analogous to that of the privileges for confidential communications (post, §§ 2286, 2377):

others is 'prima facie' evidence, against the person making that recognition, that that relation exists"); 1833, Storr v. Scott, 6 C. & P. 241 (charging A, held receivable as an admission that credit was given to A, not to B);

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1905, Chadwick v. U. S., 141 Fed. 225, 238 (conspiracy to defraud; letters written by defendant, though not shown to have been sent, received as admissions); Alabama: 1898, Turrentine v. Grigsby, 118 Ala. 380, 23 So. 666 (an unsigned note, to show indebtedness, admitted); California: 1889, White v. Merrill, 82 Cal. 14, 17, 22 Pac. 1129 (admission by defendant that a verdict against him at a former trial was just, received); Massachusetts: 1869, Ryerson v. Abington, 102 Mass. 525, 526, 530 (plaintiff's statements, after a prior trial of an action for the same personal injury, when warned by a friend for walking off so fast, that "it was all over now" and that "he knew how to play it on the judge", held admissible); 1898, Bertha Mineral Co. v. Morrill, 171 Mass. 167, 50 N. E. 534 (direction on goods sent, together with bill, etc., received as an admission as to whom credit was given); 1899, Manning v. Lowell, 173 Mass. 100, 53 N. E. 160 (value of land taken by eminent domain; owner's prior valuation given to assessor, admitted; price accepted by owner at attempted sale by him, admitted); Michigan: 1905, People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531, 105 N. W. 838 (defendant's affidavit for a continuance, used as an admission); 1905, Benson v. Raymond, 142 Mich. 357, 105 N. W. 870 (bill by a grantor to set aside his deed for mental incompetency; the Court held it proper to bring the complainant in court, "and afford the judge an opportunity of seeing him, and if he desired, of questioning him"); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8457 (in actions by a corporation or firm upon a money instrument payable to the corporation or firm, the production of the instrument is 'prima facie' evidence of the existence of the corporation or firm); Missouri: 1897, Banking House v. Darr, 139 Mo. 660, 41 S. W. 227 (oath to a tax-list received as an admission; compare the cases of assessors' books, cited post, § 1640); New Hampshire: 1852, Nealley v. Greenough, 25 N. H. 325, 331 (a statement, when served with a writ, that he was "surprised this claim had not been paid" and had "meant to have sent on the money to pay it" is an admission of every fact essential to the claim); Oklahoma: 1911, Wichita F. & N. W. R. Co. v. Holloman, 28 Okl. 419, 114 Pac. 700 (admissions of owner as to value in condemnation suit, received).

See also the citations post, § 1071, and ante, §§ 1040–1042, for analogous instances.

For admissions by using or approving a witness' testimony or deposition, see post, § 1075.

1845, DEWEY, J., in Dickinson v. Dickinson, 9 Metc. 471, 474: "The rules of evidence exclude, to some extent, and under certain circumstances, the declarations and admissions of a party. Thus, the more fully to protect the rights of parties litigating, all their communications with counsel are held to be privileged. Evidence of this character has always been excluded, and the rule has been so broad as to exclude all admissions thus made. Another instance of exclusion of testimony is that of an offer of one party to another to pay a sum of money, or other valuable consideration, with a view to a compromise of the matter in controversy. It must be permitted to men to endeavor to buy their peace, without being prejudiced by a rejection of their offers. Hence, evidence of such offers or proposals is irrelevant, and they are not to be taken as admissions of the legal liability of the party making them. But here a distinction exists between the cases of an offer to pay money to settle a controversy, and an admission of particular facts, connected with the case, made by a party pending a negotiation for a compromise. The more convenient rule might have been that which is applicable to communications between client and attorney, excluding, as testimony, everything communicated in this relation; which rule, if applied here, would exclude every admission made during the interview which was had for such compromise. To some extent this rule was attempted to be introduced, excluding all admissions of the parties, even admissions of particular facts, where it appeared that they were expressly stated at the time 'to be made without prejudice.' But the exception was soon introduced, that the evidence was competent where it was the admission of a collateral fact."

This theory is consistent enough with the general theory of privileged communications (post, § 2285), namely, that expeditious and extrajudicial settlements are to be encouraged and that privacy of communication is necessary in order to encourage them; and there is indeed a privilege for a party's statements to an official conciliator (post, § 2376). In policy, however, it may be doubted whether the recognition of such a privilege is in fact necessary in order to foster private settlement; or whether in fact the good that might be done by the diminution of litigation under such a privilege would be greater than the justice that is effected by the free use of the evidence made available through denying the privilege. At any rate, whatever the arguments of policy, the further and vital objection remains that the supposed privilege does not fit the rule of law as it is everywhere accepted and applied. Nowhere but in Massachusetts has this theory been definitely advocated; and even by its own expounders it is conceded not to explain the actual rule of law.

(b) Another theory, resting apparently on some notion of contract, is that an express reservation of secrecy (e.g. by the words "without prejudice") assimilates the offer to a contractual offer, so that if the terms are not accepted the offer is null and can have no evidential effect:

1871, MELLISH, L. J., in Re River Steamer Co., L.R. 6 Ch. App. 822, 832: "If a man says his letter is 'without prejudice', that is tantamount to saying, 'I make you an offer which you may accept or not, as you like; but if you do not accept it, the having made it is to have no effect at all.' It appears to me, not on the ground of bad faith, but on the construction of the document, that when a man says in his letter it is to be without prejudice, he cannot be held to have entered into any contract by it if the offer contained in it is not accepted."

1889, LINDLEY, L. J., in Walker v. Wilsher, L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 335: "What is the meaning of the words 'without prejudice'? I think they mean, without prejudice to the position of the writer of the letter if the terms he proposes are not accepted. If the terms proposed in the letter are accepted, a complete contract is established, and the letter, although written without prejudice, operates to alter the old state of things and to establish a new one."

It is hardly necessary to point out that the analogies of a contract-right can have no bearing on the probative use of such statements; since, conceding that an unaccepted offer amounts to nothing contractually, there may none the less remain for it an evidential value, over and above its defeated contractual purpose. Moreover, the practical objection to this theory is that, like the foregoing one, it does not adequately explain the rule of law; for, by general consensus, offers of compromise which do not contain the express words "without prejudice", may still be inadmissible in evidence, and conversely. Nevertheless, a professional tradition, especially among attorneys and solicitors in England, long enshrined the rule of thumb that a letter headed by the shibboleth "without prejudice" was safe from subsequent use as an admission, and that this phrase was necessary to protect it;[1] and this tradition has helped to cloud the discussion and to confuse the long line of rulings.

(c) The true reason for excluding an offer of compromise is that it does not ordinarily proceed from and imply a belief that the adversary's claim is well founded, but rather a belief that the further prosecution of that claim, whether well founded or not, would in any event cause such annoyance as is preferably avoided by the payment of the sum offered; in short, the offer implies merely a desire for peace, not a concession of wrong done:

1823, BAYLEY, J., in Thomson v. Austen, 2 Dowl. & Ry. 358, 361: "The essence of an offer to compromise is that the party making that offer is willing to submit to a sacrifice and to make a concession."

1839, L. C. COTTENHAM, in Tennant v. Hamilton, 5 Cl. & F. 133: "Money paid upon a complaint made, paid merely to purchase peace, is no proof that the demand is well founded. . . . [If the defendant had so paid money here], that would be no evidence of the damage; it is money paid to buy peace and to stop a complaint. It is very often a wise thing, however unfounded a complaint may be, for parties to pay a sum of money in order to quiet the party making the complaint."

1855, THOMAS, J., in Harrington v. Lincoln, 4 Gray 563, 567: "Peace is of such worth that a reasonable man may well be presumed to seek after it even at the cost of his strict right and by an abatement from his just claim. The offer which a man makes to purchase

§ 1061. [1] The following amusing anecdote illustrates the inveteracy of this notion: 1840, Law and Lawyers, II, 305: "Mr. Chitty relates an anecdote of a young attorney who had been carrying on a correspondence with a young lady, in which he had always, as he thought, expressed himself with the greatest caution. Finding, however, that he did not perform what he had led the lady to believe that he would, she brought an action for breach of promise of marriage against him. When his letters were produced on the trial, it appeared that he had always concluded —'this without prejudice, from yours faithfully, C. D.' The judge facetiously left it to the jury to determine whether these concluding words, being from an attorney, did not mean that he did not intend any prejudice to the lady, and the jury found accordingly."

Another amusing instance (presumably originating in the same anecdote of Mr. Chitty) is found in Mr. Guppy's celebrated proposal "without prejudice", to Esther Summerson ("Bleak House", c. IX); cited by Mr. (now Judge) John Marshall Gest, of Philadelphia, in his richly interesting essay on "The Law and Lawyers of Charles Dickens" (44 Amer. Law Reg. N. S. 401; 1905; now reprinted in his "The Lawyer in Literature", Boston, 1913).

it is to be taken, not as his judgment of what he should receive at the end of litigation, but what he is willing to receive and avoid it. . . . If the plaintiff had made the offer of compromise in open town-meeting, proof of it would have been excluded."

By this theory, the offer is excluded because, as a matter of interpretation and inference, it does not signify an admission at all. There is no concession of claim to be found in it, expressly or by implication.

Conversely, if a plain admission is in terms made, it is receivable, even though it forms part of an offer to compromise; and this much has long been well understood:

1828, RICHARDSON, C. J., in Sanborn v. Neilson, 4 N. H. 501, 509: "The reason why a mere offer of money or other thing by way of compromise is not to be evidence against him who makes it, is very plain and easily understood, — such an offer neither admits nor ascertains any debt, and is no more than saying that so much will be given to be rid of the controversy. But where the offer has been grounded upon an express admission of a fact, and that fact afterwards comes to be controverted between them, there seems to be no ground on which the evidence of the offer can be excluded. Thus if A sue B for $100, and B offer to pay $20, this offer shall not be received as evidence, because it may have been made merely for the sake of peace where nothing was due. But in such a case, if B admit expressly that $20 are due, and offer to pay that sum, then it seems to us that both the admission and the offer are evidence. We are, therefore, of opinion, that the offer made by the defendant in this case was, under the circumstances, admissible in evidence."

So it is apparent that the occasion of the utterance is not decisive; that is, it may or may not have been accompanied by a reservation or an injunction of secrecy; and it may or may not have occurred during negotiations for a settlement or a compromise. What is important is the form of the statement, whether it is hypothetical or absolute. If, making all implications from the context and the circumstances, the statement assumes the adversary's claim to be well-grounded for the mere purpose of discussing a settlement which will avoid litigation, then nothing is actually admitted in any true sense; and therefore the party making it is in none the worse condition for having omitted the phrase "without prejudice", nor for having offered the full amount of the claim without any pretence of compromise. If on the other hand, the statement is absolute, so far as appears, it is not saved by any cabalistic phrase, nor by its occurrence in the course of compromise-negotiations. This solution of the question is amply elucidated in the following passages:

1822, HOSMER, C. J., in Hartford Bridge Co. v. Granger, 4 Conn. 142, 148: "The law on this subject has often been misconceived; and it is time that it should be firmly established. It is never the intendment of the law to shut out the truth; but to repel any inference which may arise from a proposition made, not with design to admit the existence of a fact, but merely to buy one's peace. If an admission, however, is made, because it is a fact, the evidence to prove it is competent, whatever motive may have prompted to the declaration. In illustration of this remark, it may be observed, that if A offer to B ten pounds, in satisfaction of his claim of an hundred pounds, merely to prevent a suit, or purchase tranquillity this implies no admission that any sum is due; and therefore, testimony to prove the fact must be rejected, because it evinces nothing concerning the merits of the controversy. But if A admit a particular item in an account, or any other fact, meaning to make the admission as being true, this is good evidence, although the object of the conversation was to compromise an existing controversy. The question to be considered is, what was the view and intention of the party in making the admission; whether it was to concede a fact hypothetically, in order to effect a settlement, or to declare a fact really to exist. There is no point of honor guarded by the Court, nor exclusion of evidence lest it should deter from a free conversation. But testimony of admissions or declarations taking facts for granted, not because they are true, but because good policy constrains the temporary yielding of them to effectuate a greater good, is not admissible; truth being the object of evidence."

1889, DOE, C. J., in Colburn v. Groton, 66 N. H. 151, 156, 28 Atl. 95: "The preliminary question always is, not merely whether an admission of a fact was made during a settlement or negotiation, but whether a statement or act was intended to be an admission. It is a question, not of time or circumstances, but of intention. On that question the time and circumstances may be materiai evidence. . . . An offer of payment, whether accepted or rejected, is evidence, when the party making it understood it to be and made it as an admission of his liability. It is not evidence when he made it for the purpose of averting litigation, not intending to admit his liability. . . . An entire claim may be paid to avoid a law suit, the payer intending to admit nothing but his desire for peace. . . . 'Compromise' generally signifies a settlement in which there is a concession on both sides. Used in that sense, the word does not describe all cases in which peace is bought without an admission of liability, and is not an adequate statement of the law."

1901, SCHMUCKER, J., in Pentz v. Ins. Co., 92 Md. 444, 48 Atl. 139: "He was then asked what offer of settlement he had made, and the Court, upon the objection of the defendant excluded the question. The word 'settlement', as ordinarily used, may mean a compromise for peace's sake of a claim the validity of which is denied, or it may signify the payment of a claim to the extent to which it is conceded to be due. If the witness in the present case, by the use of the expression 'settlement', meant it in the strict sense of a claim under the policy, although no loss was admitted, evidence of the compromise was not admissible. If, on the contrary, he meant, as his previous answers seem to indicate that he did, that there was a conceded loss under the policy, which he wished to settle, the dispute being merely as to the amount of the loss, the evidence was admissible . . . as sufficient evidence to go to the Court sitting as a jury, from which he might infer that the refusal to pay a greater amount of loss was upon other grounds than failure to furnish proof of loss, and that, therefore, there had been a waiver by the defendant of such proof. If the answer of the witness had been that the defendant had offered to settle the loss under the policy by payment of an amount which was admitted [by him] to be due, it would have been admissible."

(d) Certain discriminations must of course be made: (1) When the question of costs or of laches arises, and depends upon whether an offer of payment before trial had been made, the fact of such an offer may be evidenced, as made relevant by the rule of costs.[2] (2) The payment of money into court before trial is a procedure sometimes employed to narrow the issues in a cause and to affect the ultimate burden of costs. This procedure has no concern with the present rule of Evidence.[3] But so far as the tender or payment into court is a conditional admission in the nature of an offer to settle, it should not be made known to the jury.[4] (3) An offer of compromise from an unauthorized person cannot amount to an admission of the party himself.[5] Supposing it to be an admission in terms, then the question whether it can be used depends on whether the person making it is (upon the principles of §§ 1069–1087, post) one whose admissions may be used to affect the party. (4) When an offer has been accepted, it may, of course, be proved as the basis of a contract sued upon.[6] (5) All evidence given before a board of conciliation may be privileged (post, § 2376).

[2] 1862, Williams v. Thomas, 2 Dr. & Sm. 29, 37 (costs); 1889, Walker v. Wilsher, L. R. 23 Q. B. D. 335 (costs; see citation post, § 1062); 1849, Collier v. Nokes, 2 C. & K. 1012; 1852, Romilly, M. R., in Jones v. Foxall, 15 Beav. 388, 397 (to "account for the lapse of time").

[3] 1876, Brown v. People, 3 Colo. 115; 1906, Mackey v. Kerwin, 222 Ill. 371, 78 N. E. 817 (though a tender pleaded or paid into court is a conclusive admission, a tender before trial not pleaded nor paid into court is not conclusive).

§ 1062. Same: State of the Law in various Jurisdictions. The correct solution of theory (noted in § 1061 (c)) seems to be fairly well accepted to-day, although the precedents within some jurisdictions, and particularly the long line of precedents in England, are difficult to reconcile.[1]

[4] The statutes and cases on this point are placed in § 1062, post.

[5] 1877, State v. Jaeger, 66 Mo. 173 (offer from defendant's wife); 1905, Cecil v. Terr., 16 Okl. 197, 82 Pac. 654 (rape under age; offer of settlement by defendant's father, excluded).

Here compare the rulings as to impeaching a witness or a party by his agent's corrupt offers (ante, §§ 278, 280, 962).

[6] 1884, Vardon v. Vardon, 6 Ont. 719, 725; 1884, Securities Co. v. Richardson, 9 Ont. 182.

§ 1062. [1] The rulings are as follows (compare the cases cited under self-contradiction, ante, § 1040, conduct evidencing consciousness of guilt, ante, §§ 282, 284, and communications to boards of conciliation, post, § 2376).

ENGLAND: 1718, Turton v. Benson, 1 P. Wms. 496, 497 (bond: a ruling that "Mr. Turton's offers made and not accepted signified nothing; that Lord Cowper had often said a man should not be bound by an offer made during a treaty which afterwards broke off, or upon terms that were not accepted", was approved by L. C. Parker); 1716, Harman v. Vanhattan, 2 Vern. 717 (bond; an offer to surrender it, on the opponent's making up certain money, disregarded by L. C. Harcourt; "it was but 'nudum pactum', a voluntary offer, and on condition that the money was then paid, and it was not complied with"); 1750, Baker v. Paine, 1 Ves. Sr. 456, 459 (L. C. Hardwicke: "The offers by defendant are material; though, generally speaking, offers by the parties by way of compromise are not to have much weight in the merits of the case, nor to be made use of"); 1790, Slack v. Buchanan, Peake 5 (L. C. J. Kenyon said that he had hitherto not received admissions made under a reference, but acknowledged that he had gone too far; in future, he would "reject none but such as are merely concessions for the purpose of making peace and getting rid of a suit"); 1794, Walbridge v. Kennison, 1 Esp. 143 (during a treaty for settlement, the defendant, being asked as to his handwriting on a bill, "admitted that it was his": L. C. J. Kenyon received this, since, though "any admission . . . obtained while a treaty was depending, on the faith of it", was inadmissible, yet the identity of handwriting "stood on a different foundation; it was matter no way connected with the merits of the cause and which was capable of being easily proved by other means"); 1800, Gregory v. Howard, 3 Esp. 113 ("facts admitted before arbitrators" can be proved by them); 1809, Cumming v. French, 2 Camp. 106, note (on demand for settlement, the drawer of a bill offered to give another bill; held, that this was a conditional offer of compromise, and not an acknowledgment of liability); 1823, Thomson v. Austen, 2 Dowl. & R. 358 (the plaintiff said to the witness "he was so anxious to get out of the law that he would refer the question in dispute to the witness as arbitrator", and asked him to tell this to the defendant, to get him to compromise, at same time admitting the receipt of money on account, held on the facts "not to have originated in any desire to compromise", and therefore to be admissible); 1827, Doe v. Evans, 3 C. & P. 219 (abstract of title used in an arbitration, held to be not virtually a part of a compromise, but an ordinary admission); 1828, Lofts v. Hudson, 2 Man. & Ry. 481 (agreement to pay a litigated claim and two-thirds of the costs, held by a majority, to be a compromise, and at any rate not such an admission of liability as to allow recovery of the one-third costs in a suit on the original claim); 1830, Wayman v. Hilliard, 7 Bing. 101 (on a demand of £40, defendant "offered to give £17"; Bosanquet, J.: "There has been no acknowledgment of defendant here; the defendant merely makes an an offer to purchase peace"; and so it was held not to support an action upon an account stated); 1830, Cory v. Bretton, 4 C. & P. 462 (letter declaring at the opening that it was "not to be used in prejudice of my rights or in any future arrangement", excluded; Tindal, C. J.: "It is clearly a conditional statement"); 1830, Wallace v. Small, 1 M. & M. 446 (defendant's admission of the contract, while refusing to

The only phrasing that calls for special notice is that introduced in certain earlier New York and Massachusetts cases, and made popular by Professor raise his offer of payment, received, because "not said to be without prejudice", and thus unrestricted "as to confidence"); 1830, Watts v. Lawson, 1 M. & M. 447, note (similar); 1835, Thomas v. Morgan, 2 C. M. & R. 496, Exch. (on demand for compensation for injury done by the defendant's dogs, he said: "if they had done it he would settle for it"; held, that this was "a fact to go to the jury, yet it ought to have little or no weight at all with them, for the offer may have been from motives of charity, without any admission of liability at all"); 1838, Healey v. Thatcher, 8 C. & P. 388 (Gurney, B., excluded a letter beginning "without prejudice" and offering to accept satisfaction); 1842, Paddock v. Forrester, 3 Man. & Gr. 903, 919 (trespass; letter of plaintiff, demanding compensation, but written as an "offer without prejudice, in case it is not agreed to", held inadmissible; and the answer thereto excluded also, though it did not contain such a reservation; Tindal, C. J.: "It is of great importance that parties should be left unfettered by correspondence which has been entered into upon the understanding that it is to be without prejudice"); 1846, Jardine v. Sheridan, 2 C. & K. 24 (statement made to the opponent's attorney, "with the object of obtaining a compromise", excluded); 1852, Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278, 315, 321 (letters written, after dispute begun, with a view to compromise and "without prejudice", excluded; Romilly, M. R.: "Such communications made with a view to an amicable arrangement ought to be held very sacred"; even if the correspondence contained "any admission affecting the plaintiff's rights, I should disregard such admissions made solely with a view to compromise"); 1852, Jones v. Foxall, ib. 388, 396 (Romilly, M. R., excluded "offers made without prejudice", as being merely an attempt "to convert offers of compromise into admissions"); 1862, Williams v. Thomas, 2 Dr. & Sm. 29, 37 (defendant's offer "without prejudice" to compromise, made before bill filed, held available by defendant to affect the costs; but "it could not be used against him"); 1871, Re River Steamer Co., L. R. 6 Ch. App. 822, 831 (offer made "without prejudice", said obiter to be insufficient to revive a debt barred by statute; see quotation, supra); 1872, Richards v. Gellatly, L. R. 7 C. P. 127, 131 (false representations as to a ship's equipment; complaints of the plaintiff's fellow-passengers, followed by settlement by the defendant, excluded); 1889, Walker v. Wilsher, L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 335 (letters written "without prejudice" during proposals for settlement, excluded, on an issue of probable cause affecting costs; Williams v. Thomas doubted); 1893, Re Daintrey, 2 Q. B. 116 (letter by debtor to creditor offering to compound the debt and declaring himself unable to pay and about to suspend if no composition could be made, headed "without prejudice"; held admissible, not being an offer of terms of settlement in a dispute or negotiation; 1922, La Roche v. Armstrong, 1 K. B. 485 (letters from one solicitor to another offering a sum of money; "this is all she has, and if you like to take this sum you can have it"; excluded, but on the ground that they were marked "without prejudice"); Rules of Court, 1883, Ord. XXII, R. 22, being Rule 9 of Nov. 1893 (an unaccepted tender into court is not to be evidence).

CANADA: Alberta: Rules of Court 1914, No. 74 (payment into court is not an admission of the claim); Manitoba: R. S. 1913, c. 46, Rule 552 (payment into court is not an admission); New Brunswick: Cons. St. 1903, c. 111, § 193 (no unaccepted offer to suffer judgment "shall be evidence against the party, making the same", in that or any other action); 1890, Stewart v. Muirhead, 29 N. Br. 273, 279 (an offer of a specific sum in settlement is admissible, unless stated to be confidential or without prejudice); 1912, Guimond v. Fidelity P. F. Ins. Co., N. Br. S. C., 2 D. L. R. 654, 662 (fire loss; Barker, C. J.: "Interviews and negotiations with a view to a settlement of dispute, especially where they are expressly stated to be without prejudice, are inadmissible); Nova Scotia: Rules of Court 1900, Ord. XXII, Rule 17 (like Eng. Rules of 1883); Ontario: 1856, Burns v. Kerr, 13 U. C. Q. B. 468 (letters stated to be "without prejudice", not admissible; with some hesitation); 1869, Clark v. G. T. R. Co., 29 U. C. Q. B. 136, 147 (defendant's letter proposing without prejudice a submission of the plaintiff's injuries to experts, and agreeing to abide their decision, and the answer accepting the offer, received on the facts, to rebut the imputation of bad faith, on behalf of the plaintiff); 1883, York Co. v. Toronto G. R. & C. Co., 3 Ont. 584, 593 (offers made without prejudice, held inadmissible); 1886, Pirie v. Wyld, 11 Ont. 422, 427 ("all communications made under the words 'without prejudice'" are inadmissible); 1887, Hartney v. Ins. Co., 13 Ont. 581 (letter offering a settlement, admitted, the reservation "without prejudice" here applying only to the waiver of conditions of the policy; but here the objection was not properly taken); 1913, Corby v. Foster, 29 Ont. L. R. 83, 13 D. L. R. 663 (father sued for son's tort; defendant's conduct showing an inclination to pay and settle, held no evidence of a 'scienter' of the son's dangerous propensity); Rules of Court 1913, No. 308 ("payment of money into court shall not, unless expressly so stated, be deemed an admission of the cause of action' etc.); Saskatchewan: 1915, Bank of Ottawa v. Stameo, Ltd., 22 D. L. R. 679, Sask. (insolvency; letter marked "without prejudice to the bank or the writer", held not privileged from use);

Greenleaf's treatise, in the form that a "distinct" or "independent admission of a fact" is receivable. This inadequate expression (made more mislead-

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1876, Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore W. Co., 93 U. S. 527 ("offer of compromise", held inadmissible); 1879, West v. Smith, 101 U. S. 263, 273 (the rule "is not that an admission made during or in consequence of an effort to compromise is inadmissible, but that an offer to do something by way of compromise, as to pay sums of money, allow certain prices, deliver certain property, or make certain deductions, and the like shall be excluded; these cannot be called admissions, as they were made to avoid controversy and to save the expenses of vexatious litigation"); 1908, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Rankin, 8th C. C. A., 162 Fed. 103 (correspondence between attorneys during an unsuccessful attempt to effect a compromise, excluded);

Alabama: 1896, Feibelman v. Assur. Co., 108 Ala. 180, 19 So. 540 (offer of compromise, excluded); 1904, Matthews v. Farrell, 140 Ala. 298, 37 So. 325 (performance of contract: admissions of "distinct facts" made in the course of compromise negotiations, received); 1906, Sanders v. State, 148 Ala. 603, 41 So. 466 (rape; offer of money to the prosecutrix' father, to "squash" the charge, excluded);

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 1321, 1515 (like Or. Laws 1920, §§ 532, 879);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 1337 (formal offer to allow judgment in a money action, if not accepted, "shall not be given in evidence"); § 1344 (offer to confess judgment in money action for part of amount "shall not be deemed to be an admission", nor be given in evidence);

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 997 (offer to allow judgment to be taken for a specified sum: "if the notice of acceptance be not given, the offer is to be deemed withdrawn, and cannot be given in evidence upon the trial"); § 895 (offer to allow judgment in a justice court: "the offer and failure to accept it cannot be given in evidence"); § 2078 ("an offer of compromise is not an admission that anything is due"); 1896, Rose v. Rose, 112 Cal. 341, 44 Pac. 658 (offer by a husband to his wife to divide the property, describing it as community property; that statement admitted, not being affected by the compromise-concessions);

Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, C. C. P. § 313 (unaccepted offer to allow judgment, not admissible); 1890, Patrick v. Crowe, 15 Colo. 543, 554, 25 Pac. 985 (propositions of compromise are inadmissible; otherwise of the admission "of any independent fact" in the course of negotiations); 1894, Kutcher v. Love, 19 Colo. 542, 544, 36 Pac. 152 (an admission made without reservation during compromise negotiation is receivable); 1899, Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. v. Roberts, 26 Colo. 329, 57 Pac. 1076 (offers of compromise, inadmissible); 1899, Thomas v. Carey, 26 Colo. 485, 58 Pac. 1093 ("unaccepted offer of compromise", inadmissible);

Columbia (Dist.): 1918, McMahon v. Mathews, 48 D. C. App. 303 (an offer not admitting liability, excluded);

Connecticut: 1822, Hartford Bridge Co. v. Granger, 4 Conn. 142, 148 (an admission, intended distinctly as such, is receivable though made in the course of an attempt to compromise; see quotation supra; Peters, J., diss.); 1824, Fuller v. Hampton, 5 Conn. 416, 418, 426 (similar); 1836, Stranahan v. East Haddam, 11 Conn. 507, 512 (authority to agent to pay a certain sum on receiving a release, held not admissible); 1919, Riccio v. Montano, 93 Conn. 289, 105 Atl. 625 (admissions of fact made before an industrial accident commissioner, received);

Delaware: 1909, Hudson v. Williams, 6 Pen. Del. 550, 72 Atl. 985 (distinct admissions, though made during negotiations for compromise, receivable);

Georgia: 1833, Hicks v. Thomas, Dudley 218 (if an admission made "not with a view of avoiding a suit or to buy one's peace against a doubtful claim, but from a consciousness of the truth of the fact", it is receivable; hence the motive is important); 1853, Molyneaux v. Collier, 13 Ga. 406, 414 ("the condition, tacit or express, that no advantage will be taken of the admission, it being made with a view to and in furtherance of an amicable adjustment, is the test of this rule of evidence"); 1854, Parker v. Walden, 16 Ga. 27, 30 (letter held not an offer of compromise, on the facts); 1859, Lucas v. Parsons, 27 Ga. 593, 629, 631 (reply of a party when rejecting a compromise, admitted); Rev. C. 1910, § 5781 ("admissions or propositions made with a view to compromise", are inadmissible); 1869, Frain v. State, 40 Ga. 529, 534 (under the Code; an offer to pay, if the case was settled, excluded); 1873, McElrath v. Haley, 48 Ga. 641, 647 (the Code "enlarges the common-law rule, which did not exclude the admission of distinct facts"); 1878, Tufts v. Du Bignon, 61 Ga. 322, 326 (offer of compromise, excluded); 1879, Scales v. Shackleford, 64 Ga. 170, 172 ("independent statements of truth", even "though made while the parties were trying to settle", are admissible); 1883, Keaton v. Mayo, 71 Ga. 649, 652 ("any fact admitted as true without such reference to compromise would be admissible", but not facts "admitted as an inducement to reach such settlement or compromise"); 1884, Sasser v. Sasser, 73 Ga.

ing by its occasional rendering as " the admission of any independent fact ") is merely an attempt to phrase one aspect of the correct theory already noted

275, 283 (defendant's refusal to settle, admitted); 1884, Mayor v. Minor, 73 Ga. 484, 489 (offer of money to prevent rebuilding of a dam alleged to be a nuisance, excluded); 1885, Hatcher v. Bowen, 74 Ga. 840 ("offer to pay a debt with a mule, not made pending any negotiations to compromise", received); 1893, Akers v. Kirke, 91 Ga. 590, 18 S. E. 366 (admissions after an offer of settlement but independent of it, received); 1891, Emery v. Atlanta R. E. Exchange, 88 Ga. 321, 331, 14 S. E. 556 ("It is not only propositions [to settle], but also 'admissions' made with a view to compromise, which are not proper evidence"); 1900, Teasley v. Bradley, 110 Ga. 497, 35 S. E. 782 (an offer of settlement, conceding a demand upon certain terms, and not as a part of a compromise, admitted); 1904, Teasley v. Bradley, 120 Ga. 373, 47 S. E. 925 (prior ruling in this case, 110 Ga. supra, affirmed); 1906, McBride v. Georgia R. & E. Co., 125 Ga. 515, 54 S. E. 674 (a subsequent offer to compromise does not exclude prior independent admissions); 1905, Georgia R. & E. Co. v. Wallace, 122 Ga. 547, 50 S. E. 478 (plaintiff's wagon and driver were injured by defendant's car; defendant's settlement with the driver for $25, not admitted on his re-direct examination);

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7192 (unaccepted offer to allow judgment, not admissible); 1888, Sebree v. Smith, 2 Ida. 329, 16 Pac. 915 (unaccepted offer of settlement, held inadmissible); 1903, Kroetch v. Empire M. Co., 9 Ida. 277, 74 Pac. 868 (offer of compromise, excluded);

Illinois: 1874, Barker v. Bushnell, 75 Ill. 220, 222 (offer to settle for less than the value in controversy, excluded); 1920, People v. Marx, 291 Ill. 40, 125 N. E. 719 (rape; prosecutrix' engagement of an attorney to secure a settlement for the civil claim, not admitted); 1922, Cook v. Korshak, 301 Ill. 603, 134 N. E. 49 (trover for a stolen diamond; defendant's refusal to accept an offer of settlement, excluded);

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 538, 539 (unaccepted offer to allow or to confess judgment, according to statute, not to be used in evidence); 1844, Wilt v. Bird, 7 Blackf. 258 (an admission "constituting in itself the point yielded for the sake of peace" is to be excluded, but not "an independent fact admitted to be true"); 1857, Cates v. Kellogg, 9 Ind. 506 (admission made during a settlement may be receivable, unless made "not because the fact is so, but expressly or clearly for the sake and as a part of the compromise"); 1867, Pattison v. Norris, 29 Ind. 165 (obscure); 1878, Board v. Verbarg, 63 Ind. 107, 111 (offer to release for a certain sum, excluded); 1878, Dailey v. Coons, 64 Ind. 545, 547 (offer to pay half the claim, excluded); 1888, Binford v. Young, 115 Ind. 174, 176, 16 N. E. 142 (Wilt v. Bird, approved); 1888, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wright, 115 Ind. 378, 390, 16, N. E. 145, 17 N. E. 584 (same);

Iowa: Code 1897, §§ 3817–19, Comp. C. 1919, §§ 8375, 8376 (unaccepted offer to confess judgment, not to be considered); 1890, State v. Lavin, 80 Ia. 555, 558, 46 N. W. 553 (an offer by way of compromise is inadmissible; but an "admission of particular facts, though made during a treaty of compromise", is receivable); 1896, Kassing v. Walter, — Ia. —, 65 N. W. 832 (offer of compromise, inadmissible); 1897, Houdeck v. Ins. Co., 102 Ia. 303, 71 N. W. 354 (similar); 1903, Rudd v. Dewey, 121 Ia. 454, 96 N. W. 973 (offer of compromise, not containing an admission of fact, excluded); 1905, Castner v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 126 Ia. 581, 102 N. W. 499 (an admission may be explained by the party's uncommunicated intent to accept a lower amount in compromise); 1905, State v. Campbell, 129 Ia. 154, 105 N. W. 395 (defendant's settlement of a former claim against the defendant, excluded); 1908, State v. Richmond, 138 Ia. 494, 116 N. W. 609 (burglary; defendant's offer to settle with the robbed party, admitted); 1914, Langdon v. Ahrens, 166 Ia. 636, 147 N. W. 940 (offer to settle, admitted);

Kansas: 1879, Central B. U. P. R. Co. v. Butman, 22 Kan. 639, 642 (admissions contained in a letter offering to compromise, received); 1917, Basnett v. Cherryvale G. L. & P. Co., 99 Kan. 716, 163 Pac. 161 (compromise of another suit from the same explosion; not decided);

Kentucky: 1827, Evans v. Smith, 5 T. B. Monr. 363 ("offers of sums, prices, or payments, made during an attempt to compromise", are not receivable; otherwise, of an acknowledgment of facts made pending a negotiation for settlement); C. C. P. 1895, §§ 634, 635, 640 (offer to confess judgment for a money claim "shall not be deemed to be an admission of the cause of action or amount to which the plaintiff is entitled, nor be given in evidence upon the trial"); 1900, Tyler v. Hamilton, 108 Ky. 120, 55 S. W. 920 (statute applied); 1900, Kelley v. Combs, — Ky. —, 57 S. W. 476 (statute applied); 1902, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Manion, 113 Ky. 7, 67 S. W. 40 (independent admission, made in an offer of compromise, admissible); 1904, List's Ex'r v. List, — Ky. —, 82 S. W. 446 (rule applied);

Louisiana: 1812, Delogny v. Rentoul, 2 Mart. La. 175 ("Proposals made while a compromise is on the carpet do not bind; but conversations in which a fact is disclosed may be admitted"); 1841, Agricultural Bank v. Bark Jane, 19 La. 1, 11 ("I am willing either to sell the ship at a low price, or charter her, so as to pay what I may be indebted to the bank", admitted); 1896, State v. Wright, 48 La. An. 1525, 21 So. 160 (offers to compromise are "generally" excluded);

(in § 1061 (c)), i.e. to declare that unqualified statements conceding the opponent's claim are receivable in spite of their occurrence as a part of an

Maine: 1852, Cole v. Cole, 33 Me. 542, 545 (conversation had for "ascertaining the claims really existing", and not "to purchase peace", received); 1906, Finn v. New England T. & T. Co., 101 Me. 279, 64 Atl. 490 (an offer of money, made before any demand for redress by the plaintiff, falls within the rule excluding offers of compromise); R. S. 1916, c. 87, § 40 (unaccepted offer to be defaulted for a specified sum, not admissible);
Maryland: 1859, Reynolds v. Manning, 15 Md. 510, 526 (an offer to compromise is inadmissible, even though not expressly said to be confidential or without prejudice); 1897, Caledonian F. I. Co. v. Traub, 86, Md. 86, 96, 37 Atl. 782 (offer to settle, "not by way of compromise, but in settlement of what was conceded" to be due, received); 1901, Pentz v. Ins. Co., 92 Md. 444, 48 Atl. 139 (mere authority to agent to compromise, not followed by any act of offering, excluded; see quotation supra); 1907, Acker M. & C. Co. v. McGaw, 106 Md. 536, 68 Atl. 17 (offer made with a view to compromise, excluded);
Massachusetts: 1824, Marsh v. Gold, 2 Pick. 284, 290 ("when parties are treating about compromise, admissions of particular facts" are receivable); 1826, Gerrish v. Sweetser, 4 id. 374, 377 (same principle applied; the exclusion "seems confined to the mere offer of compromise"); 1845, Dickinson v. Dickinson, 9 Metc. 471, 474 ("the admission by a party of any independent fact is admissible, though made under a treaty of compromise"; here the parties were discussing a settlement, the plaintiff said, "I demanded the colt, you recollect", and the defendant answered "Yes", and this was received); 1851, Snow v. Batchelder, 8 Cush. 513, 516 (during a conversation, had in order to offer a settlement, defendant "said he owed the note"; held admissible); 1855, Harrington v. Lincoln, 4 Gray 563, 567 (rule applied); Emerson v. Boynton, 11 Gray 395 (rule applied); 1875, Durgin v. Somers, 117 Mass. 55, 61 (rule applied); the offer of compromise admitted "only so far as it contained independent statements of facts"); 1878, Draper v. Hatfield, 124 Mass. 53, 56 (rule applied); Gen. L. 1920, c. 231, § 88 (no unaccepted tender of default and damages under § 74, to be evidence in the same or another action); 1903, Higgins v. Shepard, 182 Mass. 364, 65 N. E. 805 (ordinary offer of compromise, excluded); 1904, Snow v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. Co., 185 Mass. 321, 70 N. E. 205 (plaintiff's letter of claim, admitted on the facts); 1910, Grebenstein v. Stone & Webster Eng. Co., 205 Mass. 431, 91 N. E. 411 (mere offer to compromise, held inadmissible);
Michigan: 1878, Campau v. Dubois, 39 Mich. 274, 279 ("offers in negotiations for compromise" are inadmissible); 1887, Manistee N. Bank v. Seymour, 64 Mich. 59, 70, 31 N. W. 140 ("all admissions not expressly made to make peace, and all independent facts admitted during negotiations for settlement" are receivable); 1895, Pelton v. Schmidt, 104 Mich. 345, 62 N. W. 552 (offers of compromise, inadmissible); 1898, Fox v. Barrett, 117 Mich. 162, 75 N. W. 440 (similar); 1899, Phillips v. U. S. Benef. Soc'y, 120 Mich. 142, 79 N. W. 1 (correspondence with a view to settlement, excluded); 1904, Comstock v. Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541, 100 N. W. 788 (injury to a traction engine and plaintiff at a bridge; the township's settlement with the engine-owner, excluded); 1904, Musselman G. Co. v. Casler, 138 Mich. 24, 100 N. W. 997 (offer to settle, excluded); 1912, Crane v. Ross, 168 Mich. 623, 135 N. W. 83 (offer to settle for $25, excluded); Comp. L. 1915, § 12592 (offer to confess judgment, if not accepted, is not admissible);
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 7826 (offer to allow judgment, if refused, not admissible); § 7827 (tender of damages, not admissible); 1900, Person v. Bowe, 79 Minn. 238, 82 N. W. 480 (offer of payment, admitted on the facts);
Mississippi: Code 1906, § 771, Hem. § 554 (offer of satisfaction by defendant, if unaccepted, "shall not be given in evidence");
Missouri: 1863, Ferry v. Taylor, 33 Mo. 323, 333 ("an offer to pay a debt in property instead of money is in no sense an offer of compromise"); Rev. St. 1919, §§ 1395–6 (unaccepted offer to allow judgment or liquidate damages, not admissible);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10684 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2078); § 9770 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 997);
Nebraska: 1888, Kierstead v. Brown, 23 Nebr. 595, 612, 37 N. W. 471 (admissions in letters written in response to a proposition of compromise, held not receivable); 1890, Eldridge v. Hargreaves, 30 Nebr. 638, 647, 46 N. W. 923 (offer to pay a smaller sum in settlement, excluded); 1891, Olson v. Peterson, 33 Nebr. 358, 363, 50 N. W. 155 (offer of a sum in settlement of a bastardy claim, excluded); 1896, Callen v. Rose, 47 Nebr. 638, 66 N. W. 639 (offers of compromise, inadmissible); 1897, Hanover F. I. Co. v. Stoddard, 52 Nebr. 745, 73 N. W. 291 (same); 1897, Wright v. Morse, 53 Nebr. 3, 73 N. W. 211 (same); Rev. St. 1922, §§ 8661, 8666, 8667 (offer to allow judgment in action for money; if not accepted, not admissible on trial);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5265 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 997);
New Hampshire: 1828, Sanborn v. Neilson 4 N. H. 501, 508 ("an admission of particular attempt to compromise. Interpreting it in the light of the expositions already quoted, no inconsistency appears. Its only effect has been, appar-

facts made during a treaty for a compromise" is receivable, as also an offer of settlement founded thereon; see quotation supra); 1833, Hamblett v. Hamblett, 6 N. H. 333, 343 (preceding case approved; an admission made by one rejecting an offer of compromise is receivable); 1845, Rideout v. Newton, 17 N. H. 71, 73 (Sanborn v. Neilson approved; an offer of part payment, made after advice to offer it if his signature to the note was genuine, here rejected); 1853, Downer v. Button, 26 N. H. 339, 345 (an offer of settlement, made because "he was too poor to pay more", excluded); 1856, Bartlett v. Hoyt, 33 N. H. 151, 153, 165 (whether a statement was an independent admission or an offer of compromise may be submitted to the jury as a question of fact; clearly unsound); 1862, Eastman v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co., 44 N. H. 143, 154 (general principle approved); 1862, Perkins v. Concord R. Co., 44 N. H. 223, 225 (same); 1870, Coffin v. Plymouth, 49 N. H. 173 (that the defendant had paid the claim of another person injured in the same accident, admitted, by a majority); 1872, Plummer v. Currier, 52 N. H. 287, 296 (prior cases approved); 1872, Grimes v. Keene, 52 N. H. 330, 334 (highway injury; defendant's payment in satisfaction to another person injured in the same occurrence, received as an admission, no aspect of a compromise appearing; "it is the simple case of a claim made and a yielding to it"); 1878, Gray v. Rollinsford, 58 N. H. 253 (an unqualified offer to pay a claim for damages is receivable; preceding cases approved); 1889, Colburn v. Groton, 66 N. H. 151, 156, 28 Atl. 95 (whether an offer or a payment was intended to be an admission of a liability or an effort to avoid a controversy is a question of fact, depending on intent, to be determined by the trial judge; see quotation supra); 1896, Wason v. Burnham, 68 N. H. 553, 44 Atl. 693 (conversation in course of making a settlement of claims, admitted); 1899, Jenness v. Jones, 68 N. H. 475, 44 Atl. 607 (offer of compromise, inadmissible, but "any independent admission, though made in the course of negotiations for a compromise", receivable); 1899, Greenfield v. Kennett, 69 N. H. 419, 45 Atl. 233 (offers of compromise are inadmissible, and the finding of fact is not reviewable); 1902, Smith v. Morrill, 71 N. H. 409, 52 Atl. 928 (Colburn v. Groton approved; whether a statement is an admission or a mere offer of compromise depends upon the intent);

New Jersey: 1899, Richardson v. International Pottery Co., 63 N. J. L. 248, 43 Atl. 692 (offer of compromise held admissible, unless expressly stated to be without prejudice or unless due to opponent's suggestion of compromise; no precedents cited);

New York: 1816, Mount v. Bogert, Anthon 259 ("an admission of a fact independent of the compromise" is receivable); 1816, Tomb v. Sherwood, 13 John. 288 (offer to settle for a smaller sum, excluded as "a mere peace-offering"); 1825, Murray v. Coster, 4 Cow. 617, 635, per Colden, Sen. (like Sanborn v. Neilson, N. H., quoted supra, § 1061); 1831, Hyde v. Stone, 7 Wend. 354, 357 (offer to pay, if a release was given, held not an offer of compromise, on the facts); 1837, Mead v. Degolyer, 16 Wend. 638, 644, per Cowen, J. (an admission of a fact, made in the course of a treaty of compromise is receivable); 1846, Marvin v. Richmond, 3 Denio 58 (admission made during a negotiation for settlement, received; repudiating Williams v. Thorp, 8 Cow. 201); 1864, Bartlett v. Tarbox, 1 Abb. App. Cas. 120, 122 (admission of a distinct fact during a negotiation for settlement, held receivable; otherwise of an offer for the purpose of effecting a settlement); 1886, White v. Old Dominion S. S. Co., 102 N. Y. 661, 6 N. E. 289 ("The law excludes such admissions as appear to have been made tentatively or hypothetically, but admits those only which concede the existence of a fact"; here an admission during a negotiation for compromise was held to be in effect hypothetical only); 1888, Brice v. Bauer, 108 N. Y. 428, 433, 15 N. E. 695 (on the facts, "even the offer of a sum by way of compromise is held to be admissible, unless stated to be confidential or made without prejudice"; preceding cases not cited); 1895, Tennant v. Dudley, 144 N. Y. 504, 39 N. E. 644 (offer of compromise, held inadmissible); 1905, Misner v. Strong, 181 N. Y. 163, 73 N. E. 965 (compromise negotiations admitted; the error, if any, held harmless; two judges diss.); 1906, Hindley v. Manhattan R. Co., 185 N. Y. 335, 78 N. E. 276 (damage by eminent domain, the defendant pleading prescription; the defendant's settlement with two hundred other abutters, not admitted to rebut the claim of prescription; "the acknowledgment of title in Tom and Dick is not an acknowledgment by implication of title in Harry"); 1916, Bradley v. McDonald, — N. Y. —, 119 N. E. 340, 353 (admissions made during an interview, held receivable on the facts); C. P. A. 1920, §§ 176, 178 (unaccepted offer to liquidate damages cannot be proved on trial); 1921, Nadler v. Stearn, Sup. App., 190 N. Y. Suppl. 577 (automobile injury; that defendant had settled with another claimant, a witness for the plaintiff in this case, not admitted); 1922, Wemyss Furn. Co. v. Strober, — App. Div. —, 191 N. Y. Suppl. 783 (sale of goods; offer to settle, without admitting any facts, excluded);

North Carolina: 1846, State v. Jefferson, 6 Ired. 307 (rape; the husband's offer of compromise in the wife's presence, excluded);

ently, to lead to a stricter application of the principle, in certain courts, resulting in a more liberal reception of evidence; for the judges affecting

Con. St. 1919, §§ 896, 897 (offer to allow judgment, unaccepted, "cannot be given in evidence");
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 7856–59 (unaccepted offer to allow judgment or assess damages, inadmissible); St. 1921, c. 38, Mar. 10, § 6 (boards of conciliation; "no parts of the proceedings shall be admitted as evidence or considered at the trial of the case");
Ohio: 1875, Sherer v. Piper, 26 Oh. St. 476 (the mere fact of an offer of compromise, as well as its terms, held inadmissible); 1910, Toledo St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Burr & Jeakle, 82 Oh. 129, 92 N. E. 27 (defendant's offer of settlement for a fire loss, not allowed to be alluded to by counsel for the plaintiff in addressing the jury); Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11395 (offer to confess judgment, made under statute, not admissible);
Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 849 (offer to confess judgment in money-action, not to be "deemed an admission of the cause of action or the amount", "nor to be given in evidence upon the trial"); 1912, Anadarko v. Argo, 35 Okl. 115, 128 Pac. 500 (city council's committee recommendation of a sum to be paid in settlement, with a finding that the city was indebted to the plaintiff in that sum, admitted, but on the wrong theory);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 879 ("An offer of a compromise is not an admission that anything is due; but admissions of particular facts, made in negotiation for compromise, may be proved, unless otherwise specially agreed at the time"); § 532 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. § 997); 1911, Weiss v. Kohlhagen, 58 Or. 144, 113 Pac. 46 (injury by an excavation; that the defendant had settled with others "in the same position as plaintiff", allowed); 1917, State v. McLennan, 82 Or. 621, 162 Pac. 838 (larceny of a horse; defendant's expression of a "desire to get it settled", excluded). 1921, Marshall v. Olson, — Or. —, 202 Pac. 736 (personal injury; offer to settle for one half, excluded);
Pennsylvania: 1845, Sailor v. Hertzogg, 2 Pa. St. 182, 183 (issue of title by adverse possession; occupant's offer to hold under the claimant, held, on the facts, to be a "direct confession of a fact", and not "an offer to buy peace without regard to the title"); 1909, Rabinowitz v. Sullivan, 223 Pa. 139, 72 Atl. 378 (distinct admission, made during compromise proposals, admitted);
Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 346 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2078); 1905, Manila v. Del Rosario, 5 P. I. 227, 230 (C. C. P. § 346, applied); 1911, Lichauco v. Limjuco, 19 P. I. 12, 21 (offer of compromise is not admissible; applying C. C. P. § 346); 1914, U. S. v. Maqui, 27 P. I. 97 (theft; offer of compromise admitted, subject to explanation); 1915, U. S. v. Torres, 34 P. I. 994 (opium offence; similar);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 5357 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 997); 1910, Colomé v. Guánica, 16 P. R. 442 (payment in settlement is not an admission of liability); 1911, Pérez v. Guánica Centrale, 17 P. R. 927 (personal injury; offer of settlement, excluded);
Rhode Island: 1874, Daniels v. Woonsocket, 11 R. I. 4 (land-damages; plaintiff's offer of settlement, excluded as "privileged"); 1901, Draper v. Horton, 22 R. I. 592, 48 Atl. 945 (admission of amount due, with offer to pay it without costs, receivable); 1920, Messler v. Williamsburg C. F. Ins. Co., 42 R. I. 460, 108 Atl. 832 (offer by defendant to compromise, excluded);
South Carolina: C. C. P. 1922, §§ 645, 662, 664 (offer to allow judgment, according to statute, not to be receivable if unaccepted); 1899, Robertson v. Blair, 56 S. C. 96, 34 S. E. 11 (statements "made in the course of negotiations looking to a compromise", inadmissible); 1904, State v. Wideman, 69 S. C. 119, 46 S. E. 769 (malicious arson; defendant's statement of willingness to pay, though denying his guilt, admitted); 1906, Nickles v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co., 74 S. C. 102, 54 S. E. 255 (railroad wreck; that one of the injured employees, testifying for defendant, had received a sum in settlement from the defendant, admitted, citing no authority; Woods, J., diss. on the present ground; but it was really admissible, if at all, on the principle of § 961, ante); 1911, Wade v. Southern R. Co., 89 S. C. 280, 71 S. E. 859 (death by wrongful act; defendant introduced a release; held that being in the case it might be considered, with reference to its interpretation as an admission of liability);
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, §§ 2596–2599 (like N. D. Comp. L. §§ 7856–7859);
Tennessee: 1872, Strong v. Stewart, 9 Heisk. 137, 142 (demand of settlement by payment of a certain sum in compromise within four days, with the alternative of forfeiting all advantages under the contract, excluded);
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 6893 (unaccepted offer to allow judgment, inadmissible); 1918, Holt v. Great Eastern C. Co., 53 Utah 543, 173 Pac. 1168 (personal injury; certain correspondence held not inadmissible as an offer of compromise);
Vermont: 1850, Stanford v. Bates, 22 Vt. 546 (a mere offer of settlement is not receivable; otherwise of "a distinct admission of a fact", though made "during a negotiation for a settlement"); 1877, Doon v. Ravey, 49 Vt. 293, 296 (an admission which is a part of a treaty of compromise is privileged; but an admission made because "it is a fact", though during a treaty, is receivable); 1895, that phrase seem inclined — as in Massachusetts — to give little weight to the general hypothetical nature of discussions attending a compromise-negotiation, and to admit every statement not in itself distinctly conditional.

§ 1063. Same: (2) Admissions in Pleadings; (a) Attorney's Admissions, in general. Whether a pleading in another suit is receivable as an admission is a question that has led to surprising variety of opinion. Before examining the state of the controversy, it is worth while to notice some related matters of principle which have a bearing upon it; and, in doing this, something must be anticipated of doctrines which more properly belong later.

(a) In the first place, an attorney is not a person whose admissions may be used against the party-client, except so far as concerns the management of the litigation; and this principle applies equally to the quasi-admissions here concerned and to the solemn admissions already discriminated (ante, § 1057). The reason for this limitation is that the attorney's admissions can affect his client so far only as he has authority to act as agent in his client's place (on the principle of § 1078, post). That authority, so far as it is to be implied from the mere general appointment as attorney, and has not been enlarged in the particular case, extends only to the management of the cause. Yet, conversely, all his admissions during that management, including the utterances in the pleadings, do affect the client:[1]

Neal v. Thornton, 67 Vt. 221, 31 Atl. 296 (offer of compromise, held inadmissible; good opinion); 1919, Thayer v. Glynn, 93 Vt. 257, 106 Atl. 834 (offer to pay, made independently "of any treaty of compromise or settlement", admitted; unsound; how could an "offer to pay" be independent of a "treaty of settlement"? The two expressions mean the same thing. The opinion calls it "an indirect admission of liability"; but that is precisely what the principle excludes; only express admissions count here);

Virginia: 1797, Baird v. Rice, 1 Call. 18, 26, per Pendleton, P. ("Propositions on either side, made by parties in a treaty for compromising their differences, if that treaty be not effectual, are not to operate as evidence in a future contest in court"); 1817, Williams v. Price, 5 Munf. 507, 538 (unaccepted offer tending to a compromise, excluded); 1835, Brown v. Shields, 6 Leigh 440, 446, 452 (letter held on the facts not to be an offer of compromise, and to contain distinct admissions; Tucker, P., diss.); 1905, Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Stock, 104 Va. 97, 51 S. E. 161 (an offer of settlement of claims, construed as not "an effort to buy peace", and admitted);

Washington: 1900, Long v. Pierce Co., 22 Wash. 330, 61 Pac. 142 (an offer made on the faith of a compromise is inadmissible; whether it was so made is a question for the jury; the latter part of the ruling is erroneous);

West Virginia: 1906, Wade v. McDougle, 59 W. Va. 113, 52 S. E. 1026 (an expression of willingness to compromise as to a boundary, held ineffective);

Wisconsin: 1839, Johnson v. Wilson, 1 Pinn. 65, 70 ("admissions made by one party to another while mutually engaged in effecting a compromise of their difficulties", held inadmissible); 1860, State Bank v. Dutton, 11 Wis. 371 (statements made "in negotiating for a settlement", excluded); 1902, Collins v. State, 115 Wis. 596, 92 N. W. 266 (offer to settle a prosecution by restoring the money, admitted); 1903, Pym v. Pym, 118 Wis. 662, 96 N. W. 429 (settlement in compromise, held admissible, though not conclusive); 1907, Taylor v. Tigerton Lumber Co., 134 Wis. 24, 114 N. W. 122 (offers made during negotiations for compromise, excluded); 1921, Tullgren v. Karger, 173 Wis. 288, 181 N. W. 232 (unaccepted offer to settle, under Stats. § 2789, here admitted, because it was "embodied in the answer itself"; otherwise, if in a separate document);

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 5745 (offer to confess judgment, made according to statute, is not to be "given in evidence or mentioned on the trial").

For additional instances sometimes verging upon this principle, see post, § 1070 (admissions by reference).

§ 1063. [1] Accord: ENGLAND: 1807, Young v. Wright, 1 Camp. 139 (attorney's admission that the bill was for accommodation, excluded; judicial admissions, "with intent to obviate the necessity of proving it", are presumed to be by authority; "but it is clear that whatever the attorney says in the course of conversation is not evidence in the cause"); 1815, Marshall v. Cliff, 4 Camp. 133 (attorney's undertaking, before suit begun, to appear in any suit against defendant; his then authority presumed, from his now being attorney of record, so as to receive an admission of ownership contained in the undertaking); 1817, Parkins v. Hawkshaw, 2 Stark. 239, Holroyd, J. (defendant's admission as to the execution of a deed, excluded; "matter of conversation with an attorney could not be received in evidence against a client"); 1825, Colledge v. Horn, 3 Bing. 119 (statements by counsel, in the client's presence, in an address to the jury at a former trial; undecided, but it was assumed that apart from express authority or from assent by silence — post, § 1071 —, the statement was inadmissible; Best, C. J.: "I cannot allow that the counsel is the agent of the party"); 1832, Wagstaff v. Wilson, 4 B. & Ad. 339 (letter threatening legal proceedings, but written before action begun, excluded); 1845, Doe v. Richards, 2 C. & K. 216 (statements relating to a demand for possession, made before action brought by the person now attorney of record, excluded for lack of other evidence of authority; on offering evidence of the person being attorney at the prior time, Patteson, J., still doubted whether the attorney's admission was receivable); 1846, Watson v. King, 3 C. B. 608 (see quotation supra); 1846, Petch v. Lyon, 9 Q. B. 147, 154 (admissions which were "merely a loose conversation" and not "said as an admission of a disputed fact in the cause", held not sufficient).

1846, WILDE, C. J., in Watson v. King, 3 C. B. 608: "The attorney is not the agent of the client for the purpose of making admissions, except in the cause and for the purpose of the cause. All that appeared here was (the defendant having been proved to have held the premises at a certain rent) that one of the plaintiff's witnesses heard the plaintiff's attorney say that there was an agreement in writing. That clearly was no evidence at all to affect the plaintiff."

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1917, Attleboro Mfg. Co. v. Frankfort M. A. & P. G. Ins. Co., 1st C. C. A., 240 Fed. 573 (attorney's authority to make a settlement must be evidenced); Ark. 1922, Moore v. State, — Ark. —, 236 S. W. 846 (argument of defendant's counsel in another trial against an accomplice, excluded); Conn. 1919, Riccio v. Montano, 93 Conn. 289, 105 Atl. 625 (statements by defendant insurer's adjuster, before an industrial accident commissioner, admitted); Cal. 1921, Kinley v. Largent, 187 Cal. 71, 200 Pac. 937 (administrator and his attorney may waive a surviving opponent's incompetency by failing to object); Del. 1910, Godwin v. State, 1 Boyce, 24 Del. 173, 74 Atl. 1101 (bribery of a voter; the prosecuting attorney before offering evidence addressed the Court stating certain admissions by the defendant in conference with him; held that the silence of defendant's counsel was evidence of assent to the correctness of the statements thus made by the prosecuting attorney); Ga. 1903, Cable Co. v. Parantha, 118 Ga. 913, 45 S. E. 787 (conversation of one attorney with the other, after levy made, not admitted on the facts); Ia. 1908, McDermott v. Mahoney, 139 Ia. 292, 115 N. W. 32, semble (counsel's statements during a former trial making a concession upon the opponent's offer of evidence, admissible); Kans. 1903, Missouri & K. Tel. Co. v. Vandevort, 67 Kan. 269, 72 Pac. 771 (admission in an opening speech at a prior trial, received); Me. 1906, Liberty v. Haines, 101 Me. 402, 64 Atl. 665 (letter from the plaintiff's attorney stating an assignment of the claim, admissible); 1916, Sanders Engineering Co. v. Small, 115 Me. 52, 97 Atl. 218 (attorney's letter to third person, admitted); Mass. 1861, Currier v. Silloway, 1 All. 19 (attorney's agreement as to the amount of the verdict and admitting payment, received); 1864, Saunders v. McCarthy, 8 All. 42 ("mere matters of conversation", out of court, not relating to the suit, excluded); 1878, Lord v. Bigelow, 124 Mass. 185, 189 (attorney's offer, in another cause, to prove certain facts by the testimony of the party then on the stand, received as an agent's admission); 1887, Johnson v. Russell, 144 Mass. 409, 412, 11 N. E. 670 (attorney's agreement as to a verdict, excluded on the facts); 1888, Pickert v. Hair, 146 Mass. 1, 4, 15 N. E. 79 (conversation "relating to a fact in controversy, but not an agreement relating to the management and trial of a suit, or an admission intended to influence the procedure", held inadmissible); 1893, Loomis v. R. Co., 159 Mass. 39, 34 N. E. 82 (attorney's letter to the defendant, stating the circumstances of the alleged injury, held admissible; this ruling confirms the preceding doctrine as to the authority of an attorney under his retainer for litigation merely, and proceeds upon his authority in this case "to present and collect a claim", — a palpably sound distinction, which may at any time come into play where the latter sort of authority is in fact given; Lathrop, J., and Field, C. J., diss.); 1906, Cadigan v. Crabtree, 192 Mass. 233, 78 N. E. 412 (counsel's answer to a question of the judge at a prior hearing of the same issue, excluded); N. J. 1917, Christy v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co., 90 N. J. L. 340, 101 Atl. 373 (timber destroyed by fire; admissions made by defendant's attorney at a hearing before a State public service commission, 1849, BELL, J., in Truby v. Seybert, 12 Pa. St. 101, 105: "The concessions of attorneys of record bind their clients in all matters relating to the trial and progress of the cause. . . . [But] it has been ruled that what an attorney says in the course of casual conversation, relating to the controversy, is not evidence. The reason of the distinction is found in the nature and extent of the authority given; the attorney being constituted for the management of the cause in Court, and in England for nothing else."

§ 1064. Same: (b) Common-Law Pleadings in the Same Cause, as Judicial Admissions. (1) The pleadings in a cause are, for the purposes of use in that suit, not mere ordinary admissions (ante, § 1057), but judicial admissions (post, § 2588); i.e. they are not a means of evidence, but a waiver of all controversy (so far as the opponent may desire to take advantage of them) and therefore a limitation of the issues. Neither party may dispute beyond these limits. Thus, any reference that may be made to them, where the one party desires to avail himself of the other's pleading, is not a process of using evidence, but an invocation of the right to confine the issues and to insist on treating as established the facts admitted in the pleadings.

This much being generally conceded, it follows that a party may at any and all times invoke the language of his opponent's pleading on that particular issue as rendering certain facts indisputable; and that, in doing this, he is on the one hand neither required nor allowed to offer the pleading in evidence in the ordinary manner, nor on the other hand forbidden to comment in argument without having made a formal offer; for he is merely advocating a construction of the infra-judicial act of waiver of proof:[1] received); N. C. 1905, Hicks v. Naomi F. M. Co., 138 N. C. 319, 50 S. E. 703 (certain admissions of the attorney at a former trial, excluded); Vt. 1910, United States, for use of E. L. C. Co. v. U. S. Fidelity & G. Co., 83 Vt. 278, 75 Atl. 280 (counsel's admissions of fact of issue, made during presentation of evidence, held binding); Va. 1907, Virginia-Carolina C. Co. v. Knight, 106 Va. 674, 56 S. E. 725 (letter of an attorney naming the witnesses to be summoned, excluded).

The attorney's authority may be delegated to a clerk: 1831, Taylor v. Willans, 2 B. & Ad. 845, 855 (malicious prosecution; affidavit, as to bail, by the attorney's clerk, admitted; "if an attorney leaves the conduct of a cause to his clerk, what the latter does therein binds the party, as much as the act of the attorney himself"); 1832, Standage v. Creighton, 5 C. & P. 406 (offer of payment to stop litigation; managing clerk's statement received, "if the clerk had the management of the cause"); 1903, Lord, Owen & Co. v. Wood, 120 Ia. 303, 94 N. W. 842 (attorney's clerk).

It is sometimes said that the incompetency of evidence (here in a partition suit) cannot be waived by counsel for infant defendants: 1906, Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678 (no authority cited); 1904, Jesperson v. Mech, 213 Ill. 488, 72 N. E. 1194 (no authority cited); but surely this is erroneous; for if counsel are authorized to act at all, in particular, to raise objections, they are certainly empowered to waive them.

Compare § 1053, n. 2, ante, and § 1076, n. 7, post.

A counsel has of course the same authority for infant's guardian ad litem as for any other client: 1911, Byrnes v. Butte Brewing Co., 44 Mont. 328, 119 Pac. 788.

§ 1064. [1] Accord: Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5775 ("Without offering the same in evidence, either party may avail himself of allegations or admissions made in the pleadings of the other"); Ill. 1904, Yates v. People, 207 Ill. 316, 69 N. E. 775 (if introduced by the opponent, he is bound by them); Ind. 1878, New Albany & V. P. R. Co. v. Stallcup, 62 Ind. 345, 347 (pleadings are not to be read as evidence, but may be commented on; because the pleadings "constitute a part of its proceedings without being introduced in evidence"); 1879, Colter v. Calloway, 68 Ind. 219, 223 (they may be commented on without being offered in evidence); Iowa: 1893, Shipley v. Reasoner, 87 Ia. 555, 557, 54 N. W. 470 ("They go to the jury; not as evidence, but for the purpose of showing what the issues are"); Ky. 1905, Palmer T. Co. v. Eaves, — Ky. —, 85 S. W. 750 (here erroneously said that the opponent's pleadings may be "introduced in evidence"); Nebr. 1895, Woodworth v. Thompson, 44 Nebr.

1889, VANN, J., in Tisdale v. R. Co., 116 N. Y. 416, 419, 22 N. E. 700: "The object of pleadings is to define the issue between the parties, and when an issue of fact is tried before a jury they cannot appreciate the evidence, as it is given, unless they know the nature of the issues to be decided. Hence it is customary and proper for counsel, in opening, to tell the jury what the issues are as well as what they expect to prove. In some States the case is ordinarily opened by reading the pleadings. The pleadings are before the Court, not as evidence, but to point out the object to which evidence is to be directed. While a party sometimes formally reads in evidence the pleading of his adversary, or some part thereof containing a distinct and unconditional admission, no legal advantage is gained thereby, as the admissions, properly so-called, contained in an adverse pleading admit of no controversy and require no proof. . . . It is the duty of the Court, in charging the jury, to state the issues of fact raised by the pleadings. While this is commonly done in a summary way by stating the precise questions of fact to be decided, no reason is perceived why it may not be done by reading and analyzing the pleadings, when they are not complicated, and thus pointing out the issues and the position of the respective parties. It is evident, therefore, that the established practice does not require that the contents of the pleading should be concealed from the jury, as improper evidence is required to be kept from their attention. On the contrary, as the pleadings mark the boundaries within which the proof must fall, counsel upon either side are permitted to point out where they claim those boundaries are, before they introduce their evidence. So, when summing up, they restate the issues in order to logically apply the evidence to them. If they do not agree as to the construction of the pleadings, a question of law is presented, and it becomes the duty of the Court to construe them, to determine their legal effect and meaning, and to instruct the jury accordingly. In this case the answer was modified, but not superseded, by the stipulation, and in order to state the issues and point out what was admitted and what denied, it was necessary to construe the complaint, answer, and stipulation together. While the stipulation narrowed the issues to the injury inflicted upon the plaintiff and the amount of damages sustained by her, as it was alleged in the complaint, and not denied by the answer as modified, that she was precipitated with the falling bridge and train a distance of about thirty feet into the bed of the feeder, this became an admitted fact, important to be known by the jury, as it bore directly upon the extent of the injury. The fright naturally caused by being thrown that distance, amidst the crash of the breaking bridge and falling train, was also important. Was it not within the discretion of the trial Court to permit counsel, in summing up for the plaintiff, to call the attention of the jury to this allegation of the complaint, and to show by reading and by proper comments, fairly explaining the answer, that it was not denied?"

311, 62 N. W. 450 (pleadings need not be formally put in evidence, when referred to as admissions); N. J. 1898, Lee v. Heath, 61 N. J. L. 250, 39 Atl. 729 (plaintiff's bill of particulars, not being part of the record, must be formally offered in evidence when used as an admission); N. Y. 1871, White v. Smith, 46 N. Y. 418, 420 (pleading may be used as an admission; the opinion not stating how advantage is to be taken of the admission); 1889, Tisdale v. R. Co., 116 N. Y. 416, 418, 22 N. E. 700 (opponent's pleadings may be read by counsel, even when not formally put in evidence; see quotation supra); 1890, Holmes v. Jones, 121 N. Y. 461, 466, 24 N. E. 701 (defendant's answer read to the jury; "there is no rule of law which requires a party in any action to put his adversary's pleadings in evidence before his counsel can be allowed to comment upon them in his address to the jury. Statements, admissions, and allegations in pleadings are always in evidence for all the purposes of the trial"); Vt. 1911, Holbrook v. Quinlan & Co., 84 Vt. 411, 80 Atl. 339 (plea of former judgment, held conclusive as to two items remitted therefrom); Wis. 1875, Leavitt v. Cutler, 37 Wis. 46, 53 (reading of an answer, held unnecessary; "it is awkward practice formally to put them in evidence"); 1922, Nelson v. Pauli, — Wis. —, 186 N. W. 217 (personal injury; defendant's counsel allowed in argument to read part of plaintiff's complaint, without having offered it in evidence).

In Massachusetts, the statute seems to have been strangely interpreted: Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 231, § 87 ("Pleadings shall not be evidence on the trial, but the allegations therein shall bind the party making them"); 1866, Walcott v. Kimball, 13 All. 460 (pleadings not to be treated as evidence, in argument to the jury, but only as definitions of the issue; statute approved, because the circumstances giving rise to the drafting are improper to consider, and because comment at the argument leaves no opportunity for contrary evidence); 1872, Phillips v. Smith, 110 Mass. 61 (preceding case approved; pleading not admitted in evidence); 1878, Lyons v. Ward, 124 Mass. 364 (subsequent clauses of an answer, following a general denial, not allowed to be used as admissions); 1885, Taft v. Fiske, 140 Mass. 250, 5 N. E. 621 (preceding doctrine approved).

(2) How does this principle affect the use of the pleadings upon another issue in the same cause? It forbids any resort to a pleading upon another issue; because the object of each set of pleadings or counts is to raise and to define the separate issues, and any use of the one to aid the other would to that extent defeat this object and prevent the trying of the issue made. This result has always been conceded [2] (except, for a time, in Massachusetts [3]). It is a purely artificial rule, an exception to principle, and is rendered necessary solely by the peculiar theory of common-law pleading; for its fundamental object is "to separate the law from the facts, and to narrow the latter down to a single issue", [4] and the statute permitting multiple pleas did not and

[2] ENGLAND: 1786, Kirk v. Nowill, 1 T. R. 118, 125 (Buller, J.: "There was no such an idea before . . . that one plea might be supported by what is contained in another; each plea must stand or fall by itself; they are as unconnected as if they were on separate records"); 1813, Harington v. MacMorris, 5 Taunt. 228, 233 (Mansfield, C. J.: "It is every day's practice that the defendant's language in one plea cannot be used to disprove another plea; as in the familiar instance I have given of trespass and not guilty and a justification pleaded, where the justification would certainly if admissible prove the act, in case the reason of the justification fails"; excluding a bill of particulars furnished with a notice of set-off); 1839, Jones v. Flint, 2 Per. & D. 594, 595 (debt: pleas, first, nunquam indebitatus, invoking the Statute of Frauds, and, next, tender and payment into court; the plaintiff argued that the objection of the statute was obviated by the admission of the contract in the plea of payment; but Coleridge, J., said: "How can the admission made in one plea be called in aid of the issue joined on another?" and counsel answered, "It is conceded that it could not"); CANADA: 1841, Kinnear v. Gallagher, 1 Kerr. N. Br. 424, 425; UNITED STATES: Fed. 1917, Illinois Central R. Co. v. Norris, 7th C. C. A., 245 Fed. 927 (statements made in a motion below to quash a writ of certiorari to the Industrial Board, on the ground of jurisdiction, not received, the motion being in the nature of a demurrer; but an argument before the Board was apparently admitted); Del. 1903, Craig v. Burris, 4 Del. 156, 55 Atl. 353 (plea of confession and avoidance in the same cause, excluded); Ind. 1905, Fudge v. Marquell, 164 Ind. 447, 73 N. E. 895 (contract: confession and avoidance); Me. 1856, Nye v. Spencer, 41 Me. 272, 276 ("the language of a defendant in one plea cannot be used to disprove another plea"); Md. 1906, Fifer v. Clearfield & C. C. Co., 103 Md. 1, 62 Atl. 1122; Mich. 1905, People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531, 105 N. W. 838 (affidavit for a continuance); Miss. 1859, Morris v. Henderson, 37 Miss. 492, 508 ("The subject-matter of each plea is a distinct and separate ground of defence, which cannot be used in evidence when the case turns upon an issue presented by another plea"); N. H. 1842, Kimball v. Bellows, 13 N. H. 58, 66 (conflicting statements in another court or plea cannot be used as admissions; here, a count struck out since the former trial); N. C. 1900, Gattis v. Kilgo, 128 N. C. 402, 38 S. E. 931, semble; Gould on Pleading, c. 8, pt. I; Tex. 1921, Hines v. Warden, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 229 S. W. 957 (action for goods not delivered by a carrier; admission in another part of an answer, not usable as an admission to disprove a general denial in the answer).

On the question whether an affidavit of defence is a plea, in this sense, see the following: 1897, Mullen v. Union C. L. Ins. Co., 182 Pa. 150, 37 Atl. 988; 1902, Taylor v. Beatty, 202 Pa. 120, 51 Atl. 771.

[3] 1818, Jackson v. Stetson, 15 Mass. 39, 50 ("the confession or admission of the defendant in one plea may be used against him on the trial of another"; here laid down for a plea of justification in slander, and even under a statute allowing multiple pleas by permission): this ruling was followed in two cases: 1822, Alderman v. French, 1 Pick. 1, 4, 11 Am. Dec. 114 (careful opinion); 1827, Hix v. Drury, 5 Pick. 296, 303. But the law was altered by St. 1826, c. 107, for actions of defamation, and later for all actions: Gen. L. 1902, c. 231, § 90 ("If a defendant answers two or more matters in his defence, no averment, confession, or acknowledgment contained in one of them shall be used or taken as evidence against him on the trial of an issue joined on any other of them").

[4] Langdell, Summary of Equity Pleading, § 34.

could not destroy the primary scheme of keeping each issue independent for the purpose of submission to the jury. Thus, in order to secure for each of these issues an independent investigation, it becomes necessary, during that trial, to ignore, artificially, the existence of the other series of pleadings in the same cause.

§ 1065. Same: (c) Bills and Answers in Chancery in Other Causes. The moment we leave the sphere of the same cause, we leave behind all questions of judicial admissions. A judicial admission is a waiver of proof (ante, § 1057); and a pleading is, for the purpose of the very cause itself, a defining of the lines of controversy and a waiver of proof on all matters outside these lines of dispute. But this effect ceases with that litigation itself; and when we arrive at other litigation and seek to resort to the parties' statements as embodied in the pleadings of prior litigations, we resort to them merely as quasi-admissions, i.e. ordinary statements, which now appear to tell against the party who then made them. Hence, their use is to be determined by the principles peculiar to the present subject.

Such extrinsic pleadings, being upon their face direct and plain assertions made for a serious purpose, would naturally be supposed to be available as admissions; and the inquiry plausibly arises, Why should they not be? Viewed in the light of the principles of the present subject, there can be but two conceivable objections; one is the objection that they were not made by the party himself, nor by any one authorized to speak for him (on the principle of § 1078, post); the other is that they are conventional or hypothetical only, and not intended to be taken as sincere or absolute assertions. Before examining the validity of these objections for common-law pleadings, it must be noticed what result was reached, as a matter of law, for pleadings in chancery.

(1) An answer in chancery, in another suit, was always and unquestionably allowed to be used as an admission of the party.[1] Neither of the above-suggested objections, indeed, could by possibility be urged against it; for it was not made in the name of another person, but was subscribed to by the party himself; nor could it be regarded as conventional or hypothetical, for it was solemnly sworn to as the party's sincere and unqualified avowals.

§ 1065. [1] 1767, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 237 ("If the bill be evidence against the complainant, much more is the answer against the defendant, because this is delivered in upon oath"); 1812, Lady Dartmouth v. Roberts, 16 East 334, 339; 1903, Booth v. Lenox, 45 Fla. 191, 34 So. 566; 1860, Robbins v. Butler, 24 Ill. 387, 427; 1915, Allen v. U. S. Fidelity & Guar. Co., 269 Ill. 234, 109 N. E. 1035 (action by sureties against their indemnifier; the sureties' answer in chancery, filed in a suit by the obligee against them, together with stipulations and briefs, admitted; but the opinion ignores the distinctions of principle involved); 1855, Williams v. Cheney, 3 Gray Mass. 215, 220 (statutory discovery), 1855, Judd v. Gibbs, 3 Gray 539, 543 (same); 1875, Broadrup v. Woodman, 27 Oh. St. 553.

Contra: 1884, Arnold v. Caldwell, 1 Manit. 81, 155 (answer in discovery).

For other and distinct questions affecting the use of answers in chancery, see post, §§ 2111, 2121 (whether the whole must be offered or might be offered); post, § 1216 (whether the original must be offered); post, § 2158 (how the signature could be authenticated), post, § 1387 (whether the issues must be the same in the other suit); and post, § 1416 (whether the party's absence must be accounted for).

(2) A bill in chancery was originally considered as equally admissible.[2] The fact that it was not subscribed and sworn to by the plaintiff was regarded as at most requiring some further evidence of the party's authority, — to safeguard against the possibility of assuming to be his a bill which had been filed by a stranger in his name; and for this purpose the presence of the opponent's answer in the files was deemed a sufficient safeguard.[3] But there grew up, with the development of chancery pleading, a marked distrust of the significance of a bill. The practice in drafting was such that the allegations were commonly understood to be, in large part, mere conventional rigmarole; for, since every interrogatory of discovery put to the opponent had to be founded on some charge in the bill, and since the answer need be no more specific than the charge or the interrogatory,[4] it was necessary to frame specific and positive charge-allegations upon all topics on which the party desired specific discovery from the opponent; and hence, such charges could and did take the widest range of possibility, in the form of downright assertions of fact, merely as a preliminary to securing the discovery. In short, the allegations were (to a large extent) simply the interrogatories phrased in affirmative form for technicality's sake, and to that extent were no index at all of what the plaintiff really believed and meant to assert.[5] For these reasons the doctrine came to be settled that a bill in chancery was not receivable in another suit as an admission:

1828, L. C. HART, in Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 186, 208: "The Court never reads a bill as evidence of a plaintiff's knowledge of a fact; it is mere pleader's matter; the statements of a bill are no more than the flourishes of the draftsman. No decree was ever founded on the allegations of a plaintiff's bill as evidence of facts."

1847, Mr. R. N. Gresley, Evidence in Equity, 323: "Bills in equity are notoriously filled with fictitious matter. Neither is it allowed to be used against the plaintiff, the assertor of these false allegations, because it has been found by experience that under the present system of pleading no process is so efficacious as alleging, in eventually eliciting the truth. The

[2] 1665, Snow v. Phillips, 1 Sid. 220 (bill in chancery; objected that it is "not evidence, because it only contains matter suggested perhaps by counsel or solicitor without the privity of the party"; but, per Curiam, it was received, because "they will not intend that it was preferred without the privity of the party, and if it was, he has good remedy against those who had preferred it, in action on the case"; here the "privity" clearly means, not the relation of consultation between an engaged counsel and his client, but that of the original engagement without which the counsel may be acting for some stranger pretending to be the party named); 1767, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 235 ("The bill in chancery is evidence against the complainant, for the allegations of every man's bill shall be supposed true; nor shall it be supposed to be preferred by a counsel or solicitor without the party's privity, and therefore it amounts to the confession and admission of the truth of any fact"; yet there must have been further proceedings on it, otherwise it might be merely a false bill by a stranger; "it must be supposed to be the party's bill, where his adversary has been compelled by the process of the court of Chancery to answer it").

[3] Buller, quoted above.

[4] Langdell, Summary of Equity Pleading, §§ 56, 57, 64.

[5] 1797 (?), L. C. Eldon, in Twiss' Life, I, 301: "Lord Thurlow, when Lord Chancellor, called me into his room at Lincoln's Inn Hall, and among other things asked me if I did not think that a wooden machine might be invented to draw bills and answers in Chancery. I told him that I should be glad if such a machine could be invented, as my stationer's copy of my pleadings generally cost me more than the fees paid me by the solicitors." For another passage illustrating the common understanding as to the fictitious character of these allegations, see post, § 2111.

Court looks upon these allegations as the mere suggestions of counsel, and connives at statements and charges being made for the sole purpose of putting questions founded upon them to the defendant."

This doctrine, which (barring Mr. Justice Buller's adherence to the earlier practice [6]) became established in England by the end of the 1700s,[7] was generally accepted in the United States, and seems to have lasted even under improved methods of pleading in chancery;[8] although it may be supposed that where a bill is now required to be sworn to, the rule for answers would be applied.[9]

It is apparent, then, that the objection to the use of bills in chancery was, not that its words were those of counsel only (for this argument seems to have been commonly ignored [10]), but that its allegations were

[6] Quoted supra, note 2.

[7] 1730, Lord Ferrers v. Shirley, Fitzg. 195 (bill in chancery objected to as being "no more than the surmises of counsel for the better discovery of title"; excluded without giving a reason); 1737, Ives v. Medcalfe, 1 Atk. 63, 65 (L. C. Hardwicke: "At law, the rule of evidence is that a bill in chancery ought not to be received in evidence, for it is taken to be the suggestions of counsel only; but in this Court it has often been allowed"); 1797, Doe v. Sybourn, 7 T. R. 1, L. C. J. Kenyon (bill in chancery, excluded; it is to be taken "merely as the suggestion of counsel", and is admissible only "to show that such a bill did exist and that certain facts were in issue between the parties, in order to let in the answers or depositions of the witnesses"); 1799, Taylor v. Cole, 7 T. R. note (same); 1848, Boileau v. Rutlin, 2 Exch. 665, 676 (assumpsit for use and occupation; to prove an agreement to purchase, the defendant offered a bill in chancery, for specific performance, filed by the plaintiff, and setting out the agreement; excluded as an admission; Parke, B.: "Those, as well as pleadings at common law, are not to be treated as positive allegations of the truth of the facts therein for all purposes, but only as statements of the case of the party, to be admitted or denied by the opposite side, and if denied to be proved, and ultimately to be submitted for judicial decision"); 1862, Malcomson v. O'Dea, 10 H. L. C. 593 (to prove a prescriptive title to a fishery, a bill and answer in equity of 1674 were read; "This bill and answer were not read as evidence of the facts stated therein", but as indicating a dispute and then its abandonment, and thus, in connection with other things, an admission by the one party).

The opinion of the judges in the Banbury Peerage Case, 1809 (extracted in 2 Selwyn's Nisi Prius, c. 18, 11th Eng. ed., p. 765), sometimes cited as excluding a bill on the present principle, is in truth not an authority, since the bill was offered on behalf of the descendant of the party making it, and the present question was not referred to.

[8] Federal: 1855, Church v. Shelton, 2 Curt. C. C. 271, 274 (libel in admiralty, in another suit, not admissible, even though privity appear; following Boileau v. Rutlin); Ala. 1838, Adams v. M'Millan, 7 Port. 73, 85 (unsworn bills in chancery held inadmissible, being "the mere suggestions of counsel"); 1842, Durden v. Cleveland, 4 Ala. 225, 227 (same; there must be some recognition of the bill, as by verifying oath); Ga. 1892, Lamar v. Pearre, 90 Ga. 377, 17 S. E. 92 (see citation post, § 1066); Ky. 1817, Francis v. Hazelrig, 1 A. K. Marsh. 93 (except to identify the land described in a decree); 1820, Rankin v. Maxwell, 2 A. K. Marsh. 488, 491 ("We well know that counsel are not restricted in crowding into their bill numerous allegations to dress their case"); 1823, Rees v. Lawless, 4 Litt. 218 (similar); 1827, McConnell v. Bowdry, 4 T. B. Monr. 392, 395 (bill considered; opinion obscure); Mass. 1870, Elliott v. Hayden, 104 Mass. 180, 183, semble (see citation post, § 1066); Nebr. 1921, Macke v. Wagener, 106 Nebr. 282, 183 N. W. 360 (slander; defendant had afterwards in a supposed settlement of the claim given notes and mortgage, and had then brought a bill in equity to cancel them; held that the pleadings in the equity case were inadmissible); Pa. 1832, Owens v. Dawson, 1 Watts 149, 150.

Contra: 1893, Schmisseur v. Beatrie, 147 Ill. 210, 216, 35 N. E. 525.

[9] Can. 1862, Doe v. Ross, 5 All. N. Br. 346 (bill in chancery sworn to, admitted; "the maxim 'cessante ratio etiam cessante lex' is now made applicable"); U. S. 1916, Taylor v. Weingartner, 223 Mass. 243, 111 N. E. 909 (bill to avoid a foreclosure sale; plaintiff's allegations in a bill sworn to, held to be "admissions of the truth of the facts stated", though not usable in his favor); 1890, Buzard v. McAnulty, 77 Tex. 438, 445, 14 S. W. 138.

[10] See the comment on Snow v. Phillips, cited supra, note 2.

not intended as the sincere statements of either counsel or party, and were merely conventional utterances formally desirable for ulterior purpose.

§ 1066. Same: (d) Common-Law Pleadings in Other Causes. In the light of the considerations just noted (in § 1065), what objection could exist to the use of common-law pleadings, filed in other causes, and containing statements now serviceable as admissions?

The objections that have been advanced are the two already noticed, namely, that the utterances of the pleading are not in fact made by the party himself, and that they are frequently conventional and fictitious allegations; though these distinct reasons are seldom carefully discriminated:

1837, BRONSON, J., in Starkweather v. Converse, 17 Wend. 20, 22: "The party may make an admission in one suit or plea which he would be very unwilling to follow in another. A fact which is either directly or impliedly admitted in pleading will be deemed true for all the purposes of that issue. But it may still be that the fact does not exist and that it was only conceded in the particular case because the party did not think it important in relation to that matter to put it in issue."

1847, SHAW, C. J., in Baldwin v. Gregg, 13 Metc. 253, 255: "The pleadings are usually filed by the attorneys; and they are filed with a view of laying the merits of the respective parties before the court, in a technical form, and can hardly be considered as the act of the parties. It is not competent for the jury to hear evidence, and inquire and decide whether a specification of defence was filed 'bona fide or mala fide'. A bill of particulars filed by a plaintiff, or a specification of defence filed by a defendant, is usually a formal document, drawn up by counsel, after some examination of his client's case, and is made broad enough to cover all which the party can expect, in any event, to prove; and in most instances, probably, is not seen by the party in whose behalf it is filed."

The answers to these objections are not difficult to find. (1) That the statements of the pleading are not those of the party himself must be immaterial, since they are those of his authorized attorney. The appointment of attorney and counsel makes them agents to manage the cause in all its parts, including unquestionably the pleading. The agent's utterances for the principal in the pleadings bind the party as solemn judicial admissions; much more, then, may the agency suffice to admit them as informal quasi-admissions. If the fortunes of the party in the cause are irretrievably determined by the utterances of the attorney in the pleadings, it is difficult to argue that the attorney is not an agent for the purpose of making the same utterances receivable in evidence as quasi-admissions. (2) It is said that the utterances of the pleadings are merely conventional and therefore fictitious allegations, not to be taken as sincere and 'bona fide' statements. This is an objection which had weight when the common-law fictions of trover and ejectment and implied assumpsit were in vogue, and when the bill in chancery could be correctly said by John Wesley to be "stuffed with stupid, senseless, improbable lies", and by Jeremy Bentham, a century later, still to be "a volume of notorious lies." Even then, the recognized conventions could be distinguished by the practitioner from the plain unvarnished claims. But to-day, in the great majority of jurisdictions, the reforms in pleading deprive this objection of all weight. (3) Furthermore, the only plausible objection, namely, that many defensive pleadings are purely hypothetical in their nature and form, concerns matter which is restricted in scope and lends itself readily to segregation. For example, affirmative pleas in confession and avoidance should in strictness speak hypothetically in the confessing part;[1] but the avoiding part is unqualified in its form and must be taken to be sincere and final. It would therefore be correct enough to reject the former part as not an admission, since in form (if properly drawn) it admits nothing but assumes the fact provisionally for the purpose of avoiding it. But, leaving aside such portions, there is no reason why the plaintiff's allegations and the defendant's substantive replies in avoidance should not be taken for what they purport to be, namely, absolute utterances. Indeed, any other view is stultifying to the theory of legal proceedings; for it represents the pleadings during the trial of the cause itself as solemn asseverations upon the faith of which the parties' rights and liberties are forever adjudged and vindicated, and then proceeds, in the ensuing cause, to brush them aside as mere academic and unmeaning disputations, idle feats of forensic logic. Such a view is a travesty upon the facts.

That the pleadings in prior causes, then, can be treated as the parties' admissions, usable as evidence in later causes, must be conceded:

1883, ELLIOTT, J., in Boots v. Canine, 94 Ind. 408, 412: "Our statute has adopted the equity practice; we treat pleadings as statutory facts, not fictions. . . . If it can be said that Courts can presume that an answer under our code does not state facts, then it may be logically said that it is not evidence; but if the presumption is, that it does state facts, then it is logically inconceivable that it should not be evidence against the party. . . . Our code imperatively requires that pleadings shall state facts, but it does not stop with this command. It provides that 'All fictions in pleading are abolished.' It is several times declared that pleadings not sworn to shall have the same effect as pleadings sworn to. It is simply absurd to say that under our code the statements in the pleadings are mere fictions, and if they are not fictions then they are facts, and if facts in some cases, and in others conclusive admissions of record, then they are evidence. An admission in a pleading is the admission of matters of fact; this seems so plain that it is difficult to understand how the contrary doctrine can be seriously asserted."

The rule of law,[2] however, as generally applied under the orthodox com-

§ 1066. [1] Not all the orthodox forms do so, but the following illustrate the correct practice: Chitty, Pleading, 14th Am. ed., III, 965 (plea of set-off: "[Because the plaintiff owed the defendant at the same time the sum of $100, which sum] exceeds the supposed debt due and owing from the said defendant to the said plaintiff and the damages sustained by the said plaintiff by reason of the detention of the supposed debt so alleged to be due and owing to the said plaintiff as in the said declaration mentioned, and out of which said sum of money . . . he the said defendant is ready and willing and hereby offers to set off and allow to the said plaintiff the full amount of the said supposed debt and damages"); III, 1061 (plea of accord and satisfaction to a trespass: "Because he says that the said supposed trespasses were committed by the said W. P. (if at all committed by him) jointly with the said defendant G. S., and that after the committing of the said several supposed trespasses" an accord and satisfaction was had).

[2] The cases representing the different rules are as follows:

ENGLAND: 1848, Boileau v. Rutlin, 2 Exch. 665, 676 (pleadings at common law in another suit, said obiter to be inadmissible; quoted supra, § 1065, note 7); 1851, Marianski v. Cairns, 1 Macq. Sc. App. 212, 225 (creditor's claim against an estate; plaintiff's plea, in a suit for alimony, not sworn to be signed, held mon-law system of pleading, seems to have been to exclude all common-law pleadings filed in other causes. On the other hand, under most of the reformed systems (by which the pleadings, approximating the chancery pracadmissible; Lord Brougham: "Being in writing and signed by himself, it is to be regarded in the light of an admission").

CANADA: 1877, R. v. Wright, 17 N. Br. 363, 373 (affidavit made in another cause, admitted, per Wright, J., citing Richards v. Morgan, post, § 1075); 1877, Domville v. Ferguson, 17 N. Br. 40 (record in another suit, showing an admission of ownership of a vessel, admitted).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1858, Combs v. Hodge, 21 How. 397, 404 (petition and answer in another suit "signed by counsel and not by the parties", held not receivable as admissions; following Boileau v. Rutlin); 1885, Pope v. Allis, 115 U. S. 363 (pleading in equity or law, if sworn to by the party, is receivable as a "solemn admission"); 1889, Delaware Co. Com'rs v. Diebold S. & L. Co., 133 U. S. 473, 487, 10 Sup. 399 (complaint "not under oath nor signed by the plaintiff", excluded); Rev. St. 1878, § 860 (now repealed; quoted post, § 2281); 1904, Miller v. U. S., 133 Fed. 337, 350, 66 C. C. A. 399 (conspiracy to use the mails to defraud; arguments of the defendant's attorney before a State insurance commissioner when opposing a rival's attempt to do business there, not admitted); 1913, Oregon & Cal. R. Co. v. Grubissich, 9th C. C. A., 206 Fed. 577 (sworn answer in another suit bearing the party's name, but not shown to have been personally signed by or known to the party, excluded);

Alabama: 1920, Richardson v. State, 114 Ala. 124, 85 So. 789 (murder; deceased's answer and crossbill in a divorce suit, material to show the deceased's motive in his conduct in defendant's presence, admitted, though not sworn to by deceased, merely to show the assertion of a certain claim therein; McClellan, J., diss.);

California: 1874, McDermott v. Mitchell, 47 Cal. 249 (joint answer of R. and M., verified by R. alone, not received against M.; "it was the mere work of the attorney"; no authority cited); 1886, Duff v. Duff, 70 Cal. 503, 521, 12 Pac. 570 (petition for letters of administration; certain statements therein were excluded, as not required to be made and therefore not impliedly authorized, nor yet shown to be inserted with the petitioner's knowledge and sanction); 1887, Kamm v. Bank, 74 Cal. 191, 195, 15 Pac. 765 (claim against an estate; the action being brought by the party's consent, "complaint therein is evidence against him of the fact of suit brought and of the nature of the action"); 1889, Coward v. Clanton, 79 Cal. 23, 29, 21 Pac. 359 (said obiter that the attorney's presumed authority entitles the pleading to be "regarded as the admission of the party", subject to his showing that he did not in fact authorize it); 1894, Solari v. Snow, 101 Cal. 387, 389, 35 Pac. 1004 (complaint in another suit excluded, because not signed by nor known to the party);

Georgia: 1892, Lamar v. Pearre, 90 Ga. 377, 17 S. E. 92 (bill to recover land, filed in another suit against another person about the same land, admitted, though not sworn to or signed by the complainant but only signed by the solicitor); 1897, Farmer v. State, 100 Ga. 41, 28 S. E. 26 (false representations; answer in a creditor's suit, signed by certain persons as defendant's attorneys, not received in absence of proof of his direction or knowledge; distinguishing Lama v. Pearre as a civil case requiring a less stringent rule); 1901, St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Brunswick G. Co., 113 Ga. 786, 39 S. E. 483 (garnishee's admissions in an answer in litigation with a debtor of the same name, admitted); 1914, Harrison v. Davis, 22 How. 51, 53 (quieting title; defendant's answer in a prior partition suit, usable as an admission of common source of title);

Illinois: 1897, Gardner v. Meeker, 169 Ill. 40, 48 N. E. 307 (plea of set-off, etc., in another suit between the same parties on the same matter, admissible, but not without the declaration);

Indiana: 1883, Boots v. Canine, 94 Ind. 408, 414 (pleadings in general are admissible, on the presumption that the client authorizes its terms; see quotation supra);

Iowa: 1864, Ayers v. Ins. Co., 17 Ia. 176, 187 (unsworn answer, admitted);

Kansas: 1876, Hobson v. Ogden, 16 Kan. 388, 394 (verified pleading admitted); 1883, Solomon R. Co. v. Jones, 30 id. 601, 608, 2 Pac. 657 (same);

Louisiana: 1842, Wells v. Compton, 3 Rob. 171 182 semble (petition in another suit, admitted);

Maine: 1851, Parsons v. Copeland, 33 Me. 370, 374 (pleading in another suit, admitted; point not raised); 1897, Rockland v. Farnsworth, 89 id. 481, 36 Atl. 989 (a declaration of town of residence in a writ in another suit still pending, excluded);

Maryland: 1903, Nicholson v. Snyder, 97 Md. 415, 55 Atl. 484 (answer in bankruptcy, admitted);

Massachusetts: 1847, Baldwin v. Gregg, 13 Metc. 253 (quoted supra); 1861, Currier v. Silloway, 1 All. 19 (writ bearing an affidavit, in another suit, admitted); 1861, Gordon v. Parmelee, 2 All. 212, 215 (declaration in former suits, received, as being "not a mere technical statement of a cause of action by an attorney", but an averment by an agent in his employment); 1861, Jones v. Howard, 3 All. 224 (action on contract for use and occupation; evidence of previous action on writ of entry, tice, are required to be signed by the party, and sometimes to be sworn to) they are commonly ruled to be admissible if it appears that the party signed them. A few Courts concede the same result also when the party's personal admitted, subject to explanation by plaintiff as the result of a mistake); 1866, Bliss v. Nichols, 12 All. 443, 445 (declaration in another suit, "made by her authority", received); 1866, Boston v. Richardson, 13 All. 146, 162 (record in another suit, admitted); 1870, Elliott v. Hayden, 104 Mass. 180, 183 (sworn bill in another suit, filed but afterwards withdrawn, received, "upon the same ground upon which sworn answers and pleas in chancery, or allegations concerning the substance of the action in a declaration at common law, have been held admissible"); 1876, Brown v. Jewett, 120 Mass. 215, 217 (bill in equity received, if the party had signed and sworn to it or had authorized counsel to bring the bill for the purpose set forth therein, so far as that involved the statement in question); 1883, Dennie v. Williams, 135 Mass. 28 (answer in another suit, excluded, there being "nothing to indicate how far the attorney was particularly instructed"; prior cases distinguished as touching allegations "obviously made by direction" of the party or adopted "by prosecuting the action upon them" after knowledge of them); 1887, Johnson v. Russell, 144 Mass. 409, 11 N. E. 670 (answer in a former suit, admissible, when it contains "particular and specific allegations of matters of action or defence which cannot be presumed to have been made under the general authority of the attorney but are obviously from specific instructions of the party"); 1899, Farr v. Rouillard, 172 Mass. 303, 52 N. E. 443 (answer in another suit, not signed by defendant himself, excluded); 1900, Smith v. Paul Boyton Co., 176 Mass. 217, 57 N. E. 367 (record containing answer in another cause, received to show defendant's admission of ownership of property in issue); 1902, Stone v. Com., 181 Mass. 438, 63 N. E. 1074 (the plaintiffs now denying their title, the fact that in a prior case the counsel for the plaintiff "argued and tried to prove" that title was in the plaintiff, held inadmissible); 1905, De Montague v. Bacharach, 187 Mass. 128, 72 N. E. 938 (subsequent pleading of defendant in a second suit concerning the same contract, admitted merely to show that the defendant had pleaded the statute of limitations; Dennie v. Williams, supra, distinguished); 1917, Peck v. New England Tel. & T. Co., 225 Mass. 464, 114 N. E. 674 (to impeach the plaintiff's testimony as to the amount of his salary lost by an injury, the defendant was allowed to introduce the record in a suit by the plaintiff against his employer for unpaid salary; "the declaration may be presumed to have been prepared under the instructions of the plaintiff");

Michigan: 1903, Cornelissen v. Ort, 132 Mich. 294, 93 N. W. 617 (affidavit in another cause, received); 1916, Cady v. Doxtator, 193 Mich. 170, 159 N. W. 151 (injury to a motor-car; declaration of now defendant in a prior suit against the now plaintiff for the same collision, admitted against the defendant);

Minnesota: 1884, Vogel v. Osborne, 32 Minn. 167, 20 N. W. 129 (receivable "if it was signed or verified by the party, or if it otherwise affirmatively appears that the facts stated therein were inserted with his knowledge or by his direction"; or perhaps "if the party stands by it by allowing it to remain the pleading in the case"); 1889, Rich v. Minneapolis, 40 Minn. 82, 41 N. W. 455 (preceding case approved); 1893, O'Riley v. Clampet, 53 Minn. 539, 55 N. W. 740 (former claim in another lien-suit, received); 1902, Yoki v. First State Bank, 87 Minn. 295, 91 N. W. 1101 (affidavit of destitution in a divorce suit, admitted in an action for personalty); 1913, Salo v. Duluth & I. R. Co., 121 Minn. 78, 140 N. W. 188 (original of an amended complaint, not verified nor signed by the plaintiff, excluded, following Vogel v. Osborne);

Missouri: 1874, Dowzelot v. Rawlings, 58 Mo. 75 (petition filed by attorney of R. "at the latter's instance", admitted, "whether R. had seen the petition after it was drawn up, or not"); 1885, Anderson v. McPike, 86 Mo. 293, 301 (though the pleading is 'prima facie' receivable, yet, if proved to have been filed by one not employed as an attorney in the case, it is inadmissible); 1888, Nichols v. Jones, 32 Mo. App. 657, 664 (allegations in a pleading in another suit are receivable, because 'prima facie' the party acquiesced; but stipulations of fact filed in one action are not admissible elsewhere unless acquiescence of the client is shown);

Montana: 1903, Tague v. Caplice Co., 28 Mont. 51, 72 Pac. 297 (admissible if "verified by the party or prepared under his instructions");

Nebraska: 1886, Bunz v. Cornelius, 19 Nebr. 107, 114, 26 N. W. 621 (former petition for specific performance, admitted; no rule stated); 1899, Paxton v. State, 59 Nebr. 460, 81 N. W. 383 (other pleadings "either made by his direction or afterwards sanctioned by him", or signed or verified, are admissible); 1899, Paxton v. State, 59 Nebr. 460, 81 N. W. 383 (official bond of treasurer for second term; prior suit brought against bondsmen for first term, taken as an admission that part of total defalcation occurred during first term);

New Jersey: 1921, Stewart v. Stewart, — N. J. Eq. —, 114 Atl. 851 (divorce for adultery; respondent's plea of guilty to a criminal charge of the adultery, admitted); 1922, Lincks v. Erie R. Co., — N. J. L. —, 116 Atl. 493 (death of an employee; defendant's pleading in knowledge of the pleading's contents is otherwise shown. For the reasons already explained, all of these limitations and requirements must be regarded as unsound, and this a few Courts appear to hold.

Certain discriminations, however, resting on peculiar grounds or on special evidential uses, need to be made:

(1) A statement by a person as counsel in another's cause, may of course not be treated as his own admission usable against him personally.[3]

(2) A pleading, or other litigious allegation (such as plea of 'nolo contendere' or a case stated) may be in its terms merely hypothetical or ambiguous, and may therefore not be interpretable as an admission.[4]

(3) So far as the fact of the existence of a record or suit or claim is in issue, the pleading may be considered in order to evidence that fact.[5]

(4) The privilege against self-crimination does not forbid the use, in a criminal prosecution, of a plea in prior civil case admitting the fact now charged, because the plea, filed voluntarily, was a waiver of the privilege. Never-former litigation, as to the intra-state nature of the commerce, here admitted);

New York: 1837, Starkweather v. Converse, 17 Wend. 20, 22 (bill of particulars in another suit, excluded; see quotation supra); 1870, Cook v. Barr, 44 N. Y. 156, 158 ("It must first be shown, by the signature of the party or otherwise, that the facts were inserted with his knowledge or under his direction and with his sanction"); 1893, Hutchins v. Van Vechten, 140 N. Y. 115, 118, 35 N. E. 446 (admissions in a pleading in another action are receivable, "if signed by the party with knowledge of its contents");

Pennsylvania: 1841, M'Clelland v. Lindsay, 1 W. & S. 360 (plea in abatement in another suit, received); 1849, Truby v. Seybert, 12 Pa. St. 101, 105 (record in another suit, received, and assumed to be "either immediately from the party himself or authorized or assented to by him"); 1906, Com. v. Monongahela Bridge Co., 216 Pa. 108, 64 Atl. 909 (quo warranto; the defendant's answer in a prior suit for taxes, admitted, but not as conclusive); 1917, Scott v. American Express Co., 257 Pa. 25, 101 Atl. 96 (personal injury; pleadings of defence in another suit for the same accident, excluded, because offered only by reason of omissions in them, to discredit a witness, the rules of pleading not requiring an inclusion of such facts);

Philippine Islands: 1909, Mijares de Fariñas' Estate, 13 P. I. 63 (pleading in a former suit, not signed by deceased party, excluded);

Texas: 1866, Wheeler v. Styles, 28 Tex. 240, 246 (answer and exhibit in another cause, admitted; "it was his statement, made under oath"); 1890, Buzard v. McAnulty, 77 Tex. 438, 445, 14 S. W. 138 (pleading sworn to by the party, received); 1902, Murmutt v. State, — Tex. Cr. App. —, 67 S. W. 508 (plea of guilty on a charge of theft, admitted on a charge of burglary);

Wisconsin: 1896, Lindner v. Ins. Co., 93 Wis. 526, 531, 67 N. W. 1125 (prior pleading, unverified, held admissible; "presumptively the answer was authorized by the defendant, but it might show the circumstances and that the allegations were inserted without proper authority"); 1898, Lee v. R. Co., 101 Wis. 352, 77 N. W. 714 (pleading of plaintiff in another suit, not signed by him, admitted).

[3] 1887, Wood v. Graves, 144 Mass. 365, 370, 11 N. E. 567 (defendant's assumption of a fact in a brief submitted as counsel, held not an admission); 1902, Stone v. Com., 181 Mass. 438, 63 N. E. 1074 (see citation supra).

[4] Cases stated: 1807, Elting v. Scott, 2 John. 157, 162 ("case made" for argument, in another cause, rejected, as made "by counsel without any communication with the parties"); 1835, M'Lughan v. Bovard, 4 Watts Pa. 308, 313 (case stated for a judge cannot be used as an admission, especially when the parties have abandoned it and gone to the jury); 1848, Hart's Appeal, 8 Pa. St. 32, 37 (case stated, excluded). Plea: 1873, State v. Bowe, 61 Me. 176 (a plea of guilty of adultery, which might refer to either the woman's or the man's previous marriage, was therefore excluded as ambiguous); 1900, White v. Creamer, 175 Mass. 567, 56 N. E. 832 (bill to restrain the sale of liquor; plea of 'nolo contendere' in a prosecution for illegal sale, followed by conviction and sentence, excluded); 1902, State v. La Rose, 71 N. H. 435, 52 Atl. 943 (careful opinion; plea of 'nolo contendere', excluded); 1901, State v. Henson, 66 N. J. L. 601, 50 Atl. 468, 616 (plea of 'nolo contendere', usable as an admission of guilt in discrediting a defendant-witness); 1921, Stewart v. Stewart, — N. J. Eq. —, 114 Atl. 851 (explaining State v. Henson, supra).

[5] 1848, Boileau v. Rutlin, 2 Exch. 665, 677.

theless, in order to deprive a civil party of the right to refuse to plead on that ground, statutes have been enacted in some jurisdictions, forbidding the use of such pleadings in criminal cases.[6] Whether such statutes accomplish their primary purpose depends upon the principle of the privilege (post, §§ 2281, 2282). But the converse use, that of an accused's pleading in a subsequent civil case, would seem to be proper, and not within the prohibition of such statutes.[7]

(5) The use here discussed, of informal or quasi-admissions, has nothing to do with the use of pleadings as solemn or judicial admissions (ante, § 1057). The latter are conclusive in their nature; but that effect is confined to the cause in which they are made. When used in other causes as ordinary admissions, they are of course not conclusive [8] (on the principle of § 1058, ante); and therefore, so far as their admissibility is made (by some Courts, as above noted) to depend on the party's actual knowledge of their contents, or (when that requirement is not made) so far as the purpose is to detract from their weight, it may be shown by appropriate evidence that the party was in fact unaware of their contents.[9]

(6) A default in another suit, leading to judgment on default, would make admissible against the then defaulting party in the present case the essential allegations of claim on which the default was entered.[10] But that is because the failure to deny may amount to an admission by silence, on the principle of § 1072, post.

(7) The complicated doctrine of judicial estoppel is here to be distinguished.[11]

(8) Most statutes upon procedure in juvenile courts provide that no judgment or pleading or even evidence given in any proceeding against a juvenile

[6] These statutes are collected post, § 2281. A few of them are so broad as to exclude the pleading in "any" subsequent proceeding.

For the necessity of corroboration for an accused's confession see post, § 2071.

[7] 1904, Wesnieski v. Vanek, — Nebr. —, 99 N. W. 258 (malicious prosecution; plaintiff's plea of guilty in the criminal prosecution, admitted); 1921, Stewart v. Stewart, — N. J. Eq. —, 114 Atl. 851 (divorce for adultery; plea of guilty to a criminal charge of the adultery, sufficient); 1919, Engstrom v. Nelson, 41 N. D. 530, 171 N. W. 90 (battery; defendant's conviction upon plea of guilty to a criminal charge for the same act, admitted); 1916, Russ v. Good, 90 Vt. 236, 97 Atl. 987 (assault and battery; plea, self-defence; defendant's plea of guilty on a prosecution for breach of the peace, admitted); 1855, Birchard v. Booth, 4 Wis. 67, 69, 72 (battery; the defendant's oral plea of guilty on a criminal prosecution for the same battery, admitted).

So, too, in a criminal case: 1839, Com. v. Ervine, 8 Dana Ky. 30 (plea of guilty on a former trial for which judgment had been set aside, held properly admitted but not conclusive).

Some instances of the use of a former plea in a criminal case used in a subsequent criminal case will be found in the citations supra, n. 2, and post, § 1067.

[8] 1867, Tabb v. Cabell, 17 Gratt. Va. 160, 166; 1916, Russ v. Good, 90 Vt. 236, 97 Atl. 987.

[9] 1912, Coleman v. Jones & Pickett, 131 La. 803, 60 So. 243 (attorney's testimony that the allegation was made without knowledge of the party); 1916, Spain v. Oregon & W. R. & N. Co., 78 Or. 355, 153 Pac. 470 (trespass and malicious arrest by defendant's agent; plea, that plaintiff was drunk and disorderly, and that he afterwards pleaded guilty when charged; the plea of guilty held not conclusive); 1835, M'Lughlan v. Bovard, 4 Watts Pa. 308, 313 (case stated for the Court).

Compare also the cross-references ante, § 1065, note 1.

[10] 1920, Bonazzi v. Fortney, 94 Vt. 263, 110 Atl. 439 (malicious prosecution; issue whether plaintiff had been partner with his father; plaintiff's default in an action against the two as partners, admitted).

[11] A careful examination of the doctrine and its precedents will be found in the following opinion by Provosty, J.: 1913, Farley v. Frost-Johnson L. Co., 133 La. 497, 63 So. 122.

offender shall be used in evidence against him subsequently in any court. Broad as this provision is, its object is mainly to exclude the conviction as evidence of character, under statutes permitting a sentence to be affected by a record of prior convictions. The authorities have therefore been noted ante, § 196, under the Character rule.

§ 1067. Same: (c) Superseded or Amended Pleadings. When a pleading is amended or withdrawn, the superseded portion disappears from the record as a judicial admission limiting the issues and putting certain facts beyond dispute. Nevertheless, it exists as an utterance once seriously made by the party. While thus denied all further effect as a pleading, may it not still be used as a quasi-admission, like any other utterance of the party?

The objection to this use of it has been thus stated:

1885, DEVENS, J., in Taft v. Fiske, 140 Mass. 250, 252, 5 N. E. 621: "The plaintiff here, by means of the answer first filed and that subsequently relied on, endeavored to show that the amended answer was a 'put up' defence. The force of his argument depended upon a comparison of the evidence afforded by the two answers. It would be a [redacted]us embarrassment to that liberal amendment of pleadings contemplated by our sta[redacted]f a party availing himself of the leave in this respect granted by the Court could only [redacted]so by subjecting himself to the imputation that his new form of statement, by its difference from that previously made, showed that he presented a simulated case. . . . The original statement of a party's case is often hurriedly prepared, with imperfect information of the facts, and sometimes under misapprehension of the law. New facts are revealed at the trial, and new views of the law applicable to them are suggested. It would be unjust, if, in a closing argument, the counsel could be allowed to compare the answer originally made with that finally relied on, without an investigation of all the circumstances under which the original answer was made. Yet such an investigation would be manifestly impossible. To permit counsel thus to comment after the evidence has been concluded, and when no opportunity for explanation remains, or indeed could ever be given, would often cause an entirely different effect to be attributed to the legal statements of a defence from that which they should properly bear."

So far as the argument from hurry and inadvertence is concerned, it would be equally valid against many extrajudicial utterances of the party. Yet no one has ever supposed that it afforded any reason for their rejection. The party is always at liberty to show the circumstances in explanation, to detract from the significance of his utterance. The other argument — that of the unfairness of allowing comment in argument, after the evidence closed — rests on incorrect premises, for the conceded rule (noted later) is that the superseded pleading, when thus used, must always be formally offered in evidence at the proper time, like all other matters of evidence. There is no reason why a retraction, based (perhaps) on better information, should effect the exclusion of this rather than of any other sort of statement, once made by the party and now offered against him:

1883, ELLIOTT, J., in Boots v. Canine, 94 Ind. 408, 416: "We should feel that we were doing an idle thing if we should undertake to cite authority upon the proposition that a party cannot be deprived of his right to give in evidence an admission because the latter had withdrawn it. Even in criminal cases, an admission made by the accused before the examining magistrate is not rendered incompetent by a subsequent withdrawal. The withdrawal of an admission may, in proper cases, go in explanation, but it cannot change the rule as to its competency. We have never, until the argument in this case, known it to be asserted that the withdrawal of a confession or an admission destroyed its competency as evidence against the person making it. If it did, then criminals might destroy evidence by retraction, and parties escape admissions by a like course. The law tolerates no such illogical procedure. It is proper to show the withdrawal and all attendant circumstances, for the purpose of determining the weight to be attached to the admission, but not for the purpose of destroying its competency."

1903, Hon. A. C. Plowden, "Grain or Chaff; the Autobiography of a Police Magistrate", p. 156: "[When I was barrister on the Stafford Assizes,] I had been briefed to defend a man on a charge of horse-stealing; and, as briefs were scarce, I had no idea of letting the case go without a fight. As chance would have it, the prisoner was arraigned during the luncheon hour when I had left the court, and I was disgusted to find on return that he had actually pleaded 'Guilty.' I at once sought the judge, [Baron Bramwell,] and asked him privately to let the plea be withdrawn, explaining to him my position, and assuring him that had I been in court I should have advised the prisoner differently. The learned Baron demurred at first, but seeing my earnestness he gave way, and the prisoner was permitted to withdraw his plea. The trial came on; and after I had addressed the jury with much fervor, the learned [illegible] proceeded to sum up as follows: 'Gentlemen of the jury, the prisoner at the bar is indicted for stealing a horse. To this charge he has pleaded Guilty; but the learned counsel is convinced this was a mistake. The question, therefore, is one for you, gentlemen, which of them you will believe. If you should have any doubt, pray bear in mind that the prisoner was there and the learned counsel was n't.' Laughter from every part of the court seemed to follow this terse exposition. . . . I could not doubt, however, the absolute justice of the verdict that followed."

Such is the view generally accepted (although the rulings are by no means uniform) for civil cases.[1]

§ 1067. [1] California: 1876, Ponce v. McElvy, 51 Cal. 222 (superseded complaint, not allowed to be read); 1884, Johnson v. Powers, 65 Cal. 179, 180, 3 Pac. 625 ("Such statements, so far as they were contradictory of or inconsistent with his statements as a witness, were as much admissible, for the purpose of impeaching him, as if they were contained in a letter written by him to a third person or in an affidavit filed in a distinct proceeding"); 1886, Pfister v. Wade, 69 Cal. 133, 138, 10 Pac. 369 (superseded pleading does not bind; but it is receivable so far as it serves any purpose other than as a pleading; here, the plaintiff was allowed to use his own superseded pleading as containing an offer to pay money into court); 1886, Wheeler v. West, 71 Cal. 126, 128, 11 Pac. 871 (superseded complaint, held not admissible for defendant, the purpose not appearing in the report); 1889, Coward v. Clanton, 79 Cal. 23, 28, 21 Pac. 359 (answer in another suit on the same subject, received, though "superseded by the filing of another answer"; "no matter if it had ceased to exist as a pleading in the cause, it was still binding upon the respondent as an admission"; no authority cited); 1896, Ralph v. Hensler, 114 Cal. 196, 45 Pac. 1062 (superseded pleading held inadmissible in evidence); 1896, Miles v. Woodward, 115 Cal. 308, 46 Pac. 1076 (original amended pleading, not received); 1897, O'Connor's Estate, 118 Cal. 69, 50 Pac. 4 (superseded pleading, admitted); 1902, Ruddock Co. v. Johnson, 135 Cal. 919, 67 Pac. 680 (withdrawn cross-complaint, held not evidence); 1907, Pollitz v. Wickersham, 150 Cal. 238, 88 Pac. 911 (the California rule as to superseded pleadings held not applicable to exclude a creditor's claim formerly presented by plaintiffs to defendant and differing from the later one relied on at the trial); 1921, Williams v. Seiglitz, 186 Cal. 767, 200 Pac. 635 (slander; the original verified answer admissible to impeach as a prior inconsistent statement); Florida: 1921, Watkins v. Sims, 81 Fla. 730, 88 So. 764 (promissory note; "the original pleas being superseded by the amended and additional pleas, it was improper for counsel to exhibit the former pleas to the jury", etc.); Georgia: 1902, Alabama Midland R. Co. v. Guilford, 114 Ga. 627, 40 S. E. 714 (superseded pleading, held admissible); Illinois: 1899, Wenegar v. Bollenbach, 180 Ill. 222, 54 N. E. 192 (superseded bill in same proceeding, excluded, where not verified by the party but drawn by the attorney under a misapprehension; no general rule laid down); Indiana: 1883, Boots v. Canine, 94 Ind. 408, 416 (see quotation supra);

Iowa: 1873, Mulligan v. R. Co., 36 Ia. 180, 189 (amended pleading, admissible); 1886, Raridan v. R. Co., 69 Ia. 527, 531, 29 N. W. 599 (same); 1893, Shipley v. Reasoner, 87 Ia. 555, 557, 54 N. W. 470 (same); 1897, Ludwig v. Blackshere, 102 Ia. 366, 71 N. W. 356; 1903, Caldwell v. Drummond, — Ia. —, 96 N. W. 1122 (same); 1918, Farmers' Handy Wagon Co. v. Casualty Co., 184 Ia. 773, 167 N. W. 204 (indemnity against injuries to employees; withdrawn answer, admitted); 1921, Second Nat'l Bank v. Hults, 191 Ia. 353, 182 N. W. 175 (forgery of a note; defendant's pleading before amended, held "a circumstance to be considered");

Kansas: 1909, Arkansas City v. Payne, 80 Kan. 353, 102 Pac. 781 (answer and dismissed cross-petition, allowed to be read); 1919, Morrison v. Montgomery, 105 Kan. 430, 184 Pac. 985 (statement in a brief filed on former appeal of the same cause, not admitted, on the facts of the case); 1918, Berry v. Dewey, 102 Kan. 392, 170 Pac. 1000 (death by wrongful act; an application for continuance in 1906, admitted; "abandoned pleadings . . . are admissible in that action");

Kentucky: 1903, Wyles v. Berry, 116 Ky. 377, 76 S. W. 126 (original amended pleading, signed and sworn, held admissible);

Massachusetts: 1847, Baldwin v. Gregg, 13 Metc. 253 (the filing and withdrawing of a specification of defence is not to be considered); 1885, Taft v. Fiske, 140 Mass. 250, 5 N. E. 621 (the filing of an amendment to a pleading is not a proper subject of comment in argument, nor can the original pleading be used in evidence; see quotation supra); 1900, Demelman v. Burton, 176 Mass. 363, 57 N. E. 665 (comments on the amended answer, held improper on the facts); 1889, Com. v. Brown, 150 Mass. 330, 23 N. E. 49 (accused's plea of guilty before the magistrate on complaint, admitted); 1920, Woodworth v. Fuller, 235 Mass. 443, 126 N. E. 781 (amended claim filed, increasing the amount from $4190 to $6624; on cross-examination, counsel, holding the pleadings in his hand, asked whether and when the party had furnished to his counsel a statement claiming only $4190; held proper; "the questions did not relate to the contents of the pleadings, but to declarations material to the issues on trial"; distinguishing Demelman v. Burton);

Michigan: 1888, People v. Gould, 70 Mich. 240, 38 N. W. 232 (request to the justice to be allowed to withdraw a plea of not guilty, and to plead guilty, admitted); 1904, Bernard v. Pittsburg Coal Co., 137 Mich. 279, 100 N. W. 396 (not decided);

Minnesota: 1884, Vogel v. Osborne, 32 Minn. 167, 20 N. W. 129 (superseded pleading, held admissible, but under a stricter rule, as to proof of the party's personal knowledge of it, than other pleadings); 1905, Stearns v. Kennedy, 94 Minn. 439, 103 N. W. 212 (verified amended answer, admitted); 1913, Salo v. Duluth & I. R. Co., 121 Minn. 78, 140 N. W. 188 (cited ante, § 1066, n. 2);

Missouri: 1897, Walser v. Wear, 141 Mo. 443, 42 S. W. 928 (two former answers in the same cause, omitting to allege the present defence, received); 1906, Overton v. White, 117 Mo. App. 576, 93 S. W. 363 (abandoned answers, admitted);

Montana: 1897, Mahoney v. Hardware Co., 19 Mont. 377, 48 Pac. 545 (a part abandoned before trial, held not admissible);

Nebraska: 1895, Woodworth v. Thompson, 44 Nebr. 311, 62 N. W. 450 (original pleading, admitted); 1899, Miller v. Nicodemus, 58 Nebr. 352, 78 N. W. 618 (original of amended answer, receivable);

New York: 1889, Tisdale v. R. Co., 116 N. Y. 416, 420, 22 N. E. 700 (original answer, as modified by a stipulation narrowing the issue, allowed to be used);

North Carolina: 1882, Adams v. Utley, 87 N. C. 356 (amended answer, admitted; "as a declaration of the defendant, it can lose none of its vigor because of that circumstance"); 1906, Norcum v. Savage, 140 N. C. 472, 53 S. E. 289 (parts of an original answer, admitted);

North Dakota: 1909, Leistikow [illegible]elsdorf, 18 N. D. 511, 122 N. W. 340 (not decided);

Oklahoma: 1906, Page v. Geiser Mfg. Co., 17 Okl. 110, 87 Pac. 851 (here the original of an amended pleading in the probate court below was erroneously treated as a binding admission; "the plaintiff . . . is bound by the admissions made in his original answer"); 1906, Limerick v. Lee, 17 Okl. 145, 87 Pac. 859 (the original of an amended petition in a lien proceeding held admissible but not conclusive; this Court has not let its left hand know what its right was inditing, for this and the preceding opinion were written by the same judge, and were filed on the same day, but neither opinion distinguishes or refers to the other; illustrating that a youthful Commonwealth can quickly enough plunge into that mire of legal uncertainty which has been supposed to be an inheritance of the older ones only);

Oregon: 1899, Sayre v. Mohney, 35 Or. 141, 56 Pac. 526 (original of verified pleading, afterwards amended, receivable); 1909, Elliff v. Oregon R. & N. Co., 53 Or. 66, 99 Pac. 76 (withdrawn complaint, receivable); 1919, Garvin v. Western Cooperage Co., 94 Or. 487, 184 Pac. 555 (an action was brought by an administrator for the death of R.; a motion for a nonsuit was granted, the defendant's attorney pointing out that "it is disclosed by the evidence that the deceased has a mother" and the statute in such cases making the mother the plaintiff; the action was then renewed in the name of the mother, suing as an alien through the alien property custodian; on this trial the admission of the defendant's attorney in the first action as to the deceased having a mother was excluded; unsound and unfair; any rule which permits a party to play fast and loose in such manner reveals its unsoundness);

For criminal cases (where a withdrawn plea of guilty is later offered), the few authorities are divided.[2]

But, since the superseded pleading is offered, like any other statement of the party constituting a quasi-admission, as an item in the general mass of evidence against the party, it must of course be put in at the proper time. It therefore cannot be commented on in argument, unless (according to the principles of §§ 1806, 1866, post) it has been thus formally offered in due season:[3]

1886, ORTON, J., in Folger v. Boyinton, 67 Wis. 447, 30 N. W. 715: "The pleadings in the cause may be referred to by counsel or the Court to ascertain the nature and scope of the action and, if there is an answer, the real issues in the cause, and for no other purpose. But they cannot be referred to as proof of any fact unless they are introduced in evidence on the trial with at least some chance for explanation. The original complaint was sought to be read to the jury [during the closing argument] to show what the allegation of the plain-

Rhode Island: 1905, O'Connell v. King, 26 R. I. 544, 59 Atl. 926, semble (a withdrawn plea of tender may be used as an admission, subject to explanation);

South Dakota: 1896, Corbett v. Clough, 8 S. D. 176, 65 N. W. 1074 (superseded complaint, verified by the attorney only, held inadmissible, unless the party's direction or sanction is shown for the parts offered); 1903, La Rue v. St. Anthony & D. E. Co., 17 S. D. 91, 95 N. W. 292 (superseded complaint, signed by the attorney, held not admissible unless the plaintiffs had personally sanctioned its recital);

Texas: 1859, Coats v. Elliott, 23 Tex. 606, 613 (said obiter that a superseded pleading might properly have been excluded); 1896, Barrett v. Featherston, 89 Tex. 567, 35 S. W. 11, 36 S. W. 245 (superseded answer, admitted; Boots v. Canine, Ind., followed; Hunter, J., diss., in the Civ. App. Ct.); 1902, Houston E. & W. T. R. Co. v. De Walt, 96 Tex. 121, 70 S. W. 531 (former unamended pleading, received); 1903, Orange R. M. Co. v. McIlhenny, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 592, 77 S. W. 428 (abandoned pleading, admitted); 1903, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Goggin, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 667, 77 S. W. 1053 (similar; that it is not signed or sworn to by the party is immaterial);

Utah: 1896, Kilpatrick Co. v. Box, 13 Utah 494, 45 Pac. 629 (original answer before amendment, admitted);

Washington: 1905, State v. Bringgold, 40 Wash. 12, 82 Pac. 132 (accused's plea of guilty before the justice of the peace, afterwards withdrawn, admitted);

Wisconsin: 1875, Leavitt v. Cutler, 37 Wis. 46, 53 (original and first amended answer, in an action for breach of marriage-promise, held inadmissible to enhance damages); 1886, Folger v. Boyinton, 67 Wis. 447, 30 N. W. 715 (original complaint under oath, in an action for a crop-contract, held admissible "by way of impeachment or as admissions of the plaintiffs"); 1896, Lindner v. Ins. Co., 93 Wis. 526, 530, 67 N. W. 1125 (loss by fire; portions of the answer withdrawn by the defendant, held receivable; Leavitt v. Cutler, distinguished); 1901, Hocks v. Sprangers, 113 Wis. 123, 87 N. W. 1101, 89 N. W. 113 (defendant's original default and subsequent reopening of the case, excluded); 1883, Norris v. Cargill, 57 Wis. 251, 256 (original of an amended answer, allowed to be read to the jury as an admission "for what it was worth"); 1905, Schultz v. Culbertson, 125 Wis. 169, 103 N. W. 234 (original of an amended pleading, unverified and unsigned, admitted); 1909, Schoette v. Drake, 139 Wis. 18, 120 N. W. 393 (original answer, admitted).

[2] 1889, People v. Ryan, 82 Cal. 617, 23 Pac. 121 (withdrawn plea of guilty, held improperly admitted); 1916, State v. Carta, 90 Conn. 79, 96 Atl. 411 (assault to kill; defendant's withdrawn plea of guilty, held admissible, merely as an extra-judicial admission inconsistent with the present plea of self-defence; careful opinion by Thayer, J.; two judges diss.); 1889, State v. Meyers, 99 Mo. 117, 12 S. W. 516 (withdrawn plea of guilty, held improperly admitted); 1907, U. S. v. Alonso, 8 P. I. 78 (plea of guilty on preliminary examination, admissible; Tracey, J., diss.);

For the necessity of corroboration to an accused's extra-judicial confession, see post, § 2071.

[3] Accord: Ia. 1893, Shipley v. Reasoner, 87 Ia. 555, 558, 54 N. W. 470 (explaining away Cross v. Garrett, 35 Ia. 480, 486; Hanners v. McClelland, 74 Ia. 318, 323, 37 N. W. 389; Brannum v. O'Connor, 77 Ia. 632, 635, 42 N. W. 504); 1896, Leach v. Hill, 97 Ia. 81, 66 N. W. 69; Me. 1906, Liberty v. Haines, 101 Me. 402, 64 Atl. 665 (attorney's letter, not offered in evidence, but merely placed on file for a motion, not regarded as introduced); Nebr. 1895, Woodworth v. Thompson, 44 Nebr. 311, 62 N. W. 450; 1908, Waapke & K. Co. v. Schmoeller & M. P. Co., 82 Nebr. 716, 118 N. W. 652 (but not when the amendment was made after trial begun); Wis. 1886, Folger v. Boyinton, 67 Wis. 447, 30 N. W. 715 (see quotation supra).

tiffs was as to the contract. This was to prove the admissions of the plaintiffs as to what it was, and therefore should have been introduced as any other testimony in the case, so as to give the plaintiffs a chance to explain such an admission. But that old complaint, not then being the complaint in the cause, should of course be introduced in evidence like the records in another case. . . . To read that complaint to the jury would not be reading any part of the pleadings in the cause, either to ascertain the issues or the nature and scope of the action. I never heard of such a practice as here attempted, and in my opinion it is as illogical as it is unlawful."

3. Vicarious Admissions (by other than the Party himself)

§ 1069. In general. Admissions, in the sense here concerned, are merely the prior assertions of the party, which, being inconsistent with his present claim, serve now to discredit it by their discrepancy (ante, § 1048). How, then, can the utterances of any other person than the party himself serve for that purpose? In other words, how do other persons' statements become receivable as vicarious admissions?

Three different modes suggest themselves as possible. By preappointment, or reference, the party may designate a person whose utterance he assents to beforehand as correct, and this utterance, when made, thus represents the party's own belief. By adoption, the party may assent to a statement already uttered by another person, which thus becomes effectively the party's own admission. By privity of interest and by agency the party's rights may in the substantive law be affected by the acts of another person, and thus the other person's admissions may equally be available evidentially. These various modes may now be noticed in order; though it will be found that some classes of statements have to be considered from more than one of these three points of view.

§ 1070. Admissions by Reference to a Third Person. If a party, instead of expressing his belief in his own words, names another person as one whose expected utterances he approves beforehand, this amounts to an anticipatory adoption of that person's statement; and it becomes, when made, the party's own. This species of admission is well recognized,[1] though not fre-

§ 1070. [1] ENGLAND: 1794, Lloyd v. Willan, 1 Esp. 178 (defendant proposed to pay, if the plaintiff's porter would make an affidavit of the delivery of the goods; the affidavit was made; the defendant was then "precluded from going into any evidence whatever on the case", on the ground of 'mala fides' and of unfairness in probing an opponent's evidence); 1804, Burt v. Palmer, 5 id. 145 (defendant, on a demand made, said "You must apply to J. A., and he will pay you"; A.'s admission received; "where a person is referred to, to settle and adjust any account or business, what he says, if it is connected with the business which is referred to him, is evidence"); 1806, Daniel v. Pitt, 1 Camp. 364 note (defendant said, "If C. will say that he did deliver the goods, I will pay for them"; C.'s statement held admissible); 1807, Brock v. Kent, 1 Camp., note (defendant "desired him to enquire of J. about it", J. being a person who had paid money; Jones' statement held admissible); 1808, Williams v. Innes, 1 Camp. 364 (defendant's letter told the plaintiff "if she wanted any farther information regarding the affairs of the deceased, she should apply to a Mr. R."; L. C. J. Ellenborough: "If a man refers another upon any particular business to a third person, he is bound by what this third person says or does concerning it, as much as if that had been said or done by himself"); 1822, Garnet v. Ball, 3 Stark. 160 (trover for a horse; the plaintiff had said "that if the defendant would take his oath that the horse was his, he should keep him"; the fact of the defendant's affidavit being made was received); 1828, Hood v. Reeve, 3 C. & P. 532 (defendant's letter "I refer you to him thereon", meaning one H., held to admit H.'s statement requently available. In earlier times it had a prototype in a not uncommon contract-clause among merchants by which the obligor bound himself to perform when one or more specified persons should make an oath that certain facts existed, upon which the obligation became due, irrespective of the truth of the sworn statement; and litigation over such contracts was not infrequent up to the time of the Stuarts.[2] This admission by reference brings us, indeed, close to the principle of awards by arbitrators; for, though the validity of the award rests on a contractual basis (ante, § 1056) yet the process is one of reference to a third person's pronouncement.[3]

Admission by reference differs from admission by adoption in that in the latter form the third person's statement is already made; the varieties of this form we now proceed to consider.

§ 1071. Third Person's Statement assented to by Party's Silence; General Principle. 'Qui tacet consentire videtur', "silence gives consent", are ancient maxims, which have ever been taken to be unquestioned and have a larger scope than their application in the law of evidence. But, like all maxims, they merely sum up a broad principle, and cannot serve, without decided qualification, as practical and precise rules. Silence implies assent to the correctness of a communication, but on certain conditions only. The general principle of Relevancy (ante, § 29) tells us that the inference of assent may safely be made only when no other explanation is equally consistent with silence; and there is always another such explanation — namely, ignorance, or dissent — unless the circumstances are such that a dissent would in ordinary experience have been expressed if the communication had not been specting the account, though H.'s statement was made at another time; "anything that he says about the account is admissible"); 1836, Sybray v. White, 1 M. & W. 435 (injury to a horse; defendant said that if a miners' jury would say that the shaft where the horse was killed was his, he would pay; the miners' verdict received to charge the defendant; "the jury are in the nature of his accredited agents"); 1884, R. v. Mallory, 15 Cox Cr. 45 (knowing receipt of stolen goods; the defendant referred the police to his wife for a list of the prices and dates of purchase of the goods, stating that he did not know them, and the next day the wife handed the police the list in his presence; the list was received, as an admission of the prices and dates).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1869, Allen v. Killinger, 8 Wall. 480, 486 (rule recognized); Conn. 1856, Chadsey v. Greene, 24 Conn. 562, 572 (warranty of a horse; statements of N., to whom defendant referred plaintiff for information as to defendant's responsibility, received); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5778 (third person's admissions receivable, "when the party refers to such third person for information"); Ky. 1904, Drake v. Holbrook, — Ky. —, 78 S. W. 158 (defendant told F. to tell the witness "anything I wanted to know"; admitted); Me. 1853, Chapman v. Twitchell, 37 Me. 59 ("Twitchell can show you where the corner is"; T.'s showing admitted); N. Car. 1878, Lambert v. People, 6 Abb. N. C. 181, 193 (statements held not on the facts an admission by reference); N. Dak. 1907, State v. Werner, 16 N. D. 83, 112 N. W. 60 (conversation in which the defendant referred a third person to a doctor for information, allowed to be proved by the doctor, though the doctor's own knowledge might have been privileged); N. J. 1904, Skidmore v. Johnson, 70 N. J. L. 674, 57 Atl. 450 (a letter written by the defendant's daughter, which he had directed her to write, "without her telling what to write or being told what she did write", admitted).

The following case belongs somewhere here: 1895, State v. Kent, 4 N. D. 577, 62 N. W. 631 (the witness had written at defendant's dictation a certain account, which he was allowed to read and hand in, as embodying the defendant's admission).

[2] See some early examples cited ante, § 7 a (contracts to alter or waive the rules of evidence).

[3] Distinguish the question whether the party's own statements, made to arbitrators, may be excluded as being made with a view to compromise (ante, § 1062, note).

correct. This much has always been conceded judicially when the question has been presented.

But the force of the brief maxim has always been such that in practice (and especially in the original English tradition) a sort of working rule grew up that whatever was said in a party's presence was receivable against him as an admission, because presumably assented to. This working rule became so firmly entrenched in practice that frequent judicial deliverances became necessary in order to dislodge it; for in this simple and comprehensive form it ignored the inherent qualifications of the principle. These qualifications, in varying phraseology, are expounded in the following passages:

1826, DUNCAN, J., in Moore v. Smith, 14 S. & R. 388, 393: "The reason why this species of evidence is given is because the party by his silence is supposed to acquiesce. 'Qui tacet consentire videtur.' That presupposes a declaration or proposition made to him which he is bound either to deny or to admit. . . . [In the present case], the only evidence is that he was present at the view [of the land]; that he was on the land, the tract; and he was acting as chain-carrier [when remarks were made by the litigants]. This is quite too loose. Two men, at this rate, might talk a third out of his whole estate, with a witness! Nothing can be more dangerous than this kind of evidence. It should always be received with caution; and never ought to be unless the evidence is of direct declarations of that kind which naturally calls for contradiction, — some assertion made to the man with respect to his right, which by his silence he acquiesces in."

1838, PHELPS, J., in Vail v. Strong, 10 Vt. 457, 463: "It is sometimes said that, if a fact, which makes against the party, is stated in his presence, and is not contradicted by him, his silence raises a presumption of its truth. To this position we cannot accede. The mere silence of the party creates no evidence, one way or the other. There are, indeed, cases where the silence of the party creates a presumption or inference against him; but this presumption derives all its force from the circumstances, under which the statement is made, which may call for a denial. If the party is under a moral or honorary obligation to disclose, or if his reputation or interest is jeoparded by the statement, he has a strong inducement to deny it, if he can do so with truth. His silence, under such circumstances, affords an inference against him, which is more or less strong, in proportion to the inducement to make the denial. But even here, the evidence, thus created, rests altogether upon the attendant circumstances. If, for instance, the party be engaged in defending his reputation or his rights, an assertion, bearing upon the subject under discussion, and unfavorable to him, calls for a denial, and if there be not a denial, a presumption of its truth arises. But we know of no obligation upon the party to answer every idle or impertinent inquiry. He has the right to be silent, unless there be good occasion for speaking. We cannot admit that he is bound to disclose his private affairs, at the suggestion of idle curiosity, whenever such curiosity is indulged, at the hazard of being concluded by every suggestion, which may be suffered to pass unanswered. The true rule we understand to be this. Evidence of this character may be permitted to go to the jury, whenever the occasion, upon which the declaration is made in the presence of the party, and the attendant circumstances, call for serious admission or denial on his part; but the strength of the evidence depends altogether upon the force of the circumstances and the motives, which must impel him to an explicit denial, if the statement be untrue. But if no good reason exist to call for disclosure, and the party decline to enter into useless discussion, or answer idle curiosity, no legitimate inference to his prejudice can be drawn from his silence."

1844, REDFIELD, J., in Mattocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 113, 119: "It seems to have been generally considered that all conversation had in the presence of a party, in regard to the subject of litigation, might properly be given in evidence to the jury. . . . There are many cases of this character when one's silence ought to conclude him. But when the claim is made for the mere purpose of drawing out evidence, as, in the present case, it is obvious must have been the fact, or when it is in the way of altercation, or, in short, unless the party asserting the claim does it with a view to ascertain the claim of the person upon whom he makes the demand, and in order to know how to regulate his own conduct in the matter, and this is known to the opposite party, and he remains silent, and thereby leads the adversary astray, mere silence is, and ought to be, no ground of inference against any one. The liabilities to misapprehension, or misrecollection, or misrepresentation are such, that this silence might be the only security. To say, under such a dilemma, that silence shall imply assent to all which an antagonist may see fit to assert, would involve an absurdity little less gross than some of the most extravagant caricatures of this caricature-loving age. With some men, perhaps, silence would be some ground of inferring assent, and with others none at all. The testimony then would depend upon the character and habits of the party, — which would lead to the direct trial of the parties, instead of the case."

1847, SHAW, C. J., in Com. v. Kenney, 12 Metc. 235, 237: "In some cases, where a similar declaration is made in one's hearing, and he makes no reply, it may be a tacit admission of the facts. But this depends on two facts: first, whether he hears and understands the statement, and comprehends its bearing; and secondly, whether the truth of the facts embraced in the statement is within his own knowledge, or not; whether he is in such a situation that he is at liberty to make any reply; and whether the statement is made under such circumstances, and by such persons, as naturally to call for a reply, if he did not intend to admit it. If made in the course of any judicial hearing, he could not interfere and deny the statement; it would be to charge the witness with perjury, and alike inconsistent with decorum and the rules of law. So, if the matter is of something not within his knowledge; if the statement is made by a stranger, whom he is not called on to notice; or if he is restrained by fear, by doubts of his rights, by a belief that his security will be best promoted by his silence; then no inference of assent can be drawn from that silence. Perhaps it is within the province of the judge, who must consider these preliminary questions in the first instance, to decide ultimately upon them."

1891, BOWEN, L. J., in Wiedemann v. Walpole, 2 Q. B. 534, 539: "There must be some limitation placed upon the doctrine that silence when a charge is made amounts to evidence of an admission of the truth of the charge. The limitation is, I think, this: Silence is not evidence of an admission, unless there are circumstances which render it more reasonably probable that a man would answer the charge made against him than that he would not."

These limitations cannot be questioned in point of abstract principle. But it is perhaps questionable whether the specified conditions should be required to appear in a particular case before receiving the third person's statement made in the party's presence. Such strictness was proper enough in earlier days, up to fifty years ago, when the party himself was disqualified as a witness and therefore could not by his own testimony protect himself against undue inferences drawn from his silence. But to-day there is ample opportunity thus to counteract the risk of misconstruction; moreover, the rigid enforcement of the conditions above specified would tend to introduce technicalities and to cumber the issues. It would seem to be better to rule at least that any statement made in the party's presence and hearing is receivable, unless he can show that he lacked either the opportunity or the motive to deny its correctness; thus placing upon the opponent of the evidence the burden of showing to the judge its impropriety. But the burden is in practice generally left upon the proponent to show that the requisite conditions existed;[1] though the middle course is sometimes taken of leaving the question to the jury.[2]

§ 1072. Same: Specific Rules; Statements made during a Trial, under Arrest; Notice to Quit; Omission to Schedule a Claim, etc. (1) The application of the general principle is of course commonly attended by little difficulty; and such doubt as may arise depends on particular circumstances not leading to any specific rule. Most of the rulings cannot properly serve as precedents.[1]

§ 1071. [1] 1894, People v. Mallon, 103 Cal. 513, 514, 37 Pac. 512; 1859, Drumright v. State, 29 Ga. 430; 1911, Gibbons v. Terr., 5 Okl. Cr. 212, 115 Pac. 129; 1906, State v. Sudduth, 74 S. C. 498, 54 S. E. 1013.

Where all conditions exist except that it does not appear whether the party was silent or denied, an objection based on this point must specifically point it out at the time (applying the principle of § 18, n. 21, ante): 1908, Raymond v. State, 154 Ala. 1, 45 So. 895 (McClellan, J., diss.).

Compare other cases in the next section.

[2] 1824, State v. Perkins, 3 Hawks N. C. 377 (whether the defendant was by intoxication incapable of understanding what was said to him held properly left to the jury).

§ 1072. [1] ENGLAND: 1834, Hayslep v. Gymer, 1 A. & E. 162 (plaintiff's statements as to a gift, received because made to the defendant without dissent); 1877, Bessela v. Stern, L. R. 2 C. P. D. 265 (breach of marriage-promise; defendant's silence when taxed by the plaintiff with a promise, admitted, and also sufficient to go to the jury as corroboration under the statute); 1892, R. v. Mitchell, 17 Cox Cr. 503, 508 (dying declarations in defendant's presence excluded, because a denial at that moment was not to be expected).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1853, Turner v. Yates, 16 How. 14, 27 (declarations admitted because they were "of such a character and made under such circumstances as imperatively to have required them to deny their correctness if they were untrue"); 1909, Hauger v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 173 Fed. 54, 59 (defendant's wife's statements, in his presence, to the arresting officer, excluded);

Alabama: 1858, Fuller v. Dean, 31 Ala. 654, 657 (slander); 1876, Campbell v. State, 55 Ala. 80, 82 (larceny); 1876, Matthews v. State, 55 Ala. 187, 194 (rape); 1886, Williams v. State, 81 Ala. 1, 6, 1 So. 179 (homicide; co-defendant's declarations, admitted); 1895, Peck v. Ryan, 110 Ala. 336, 17 So. 733 (claim to a debt); 1902, Davis v. State, 131 Ala. 10, 31 So. 569; 1919, Braxton v. State, 17 Ala. App. 167, 82 So. 657 (wife's silence in presence of husband's statement that she had sold the whisky, not admitted); 1921, Delaney v. State, 204 Ala. 685, 87 So. 183 (general principle discussed, in application to accused's silence during conversations of accomplices);

California: C. C. P. § 1872, par. 3 ("an act or declaration of another, in the presence and within the observation of a party, and his conduct in relation thereto", is admissible); 1867, People v. McCrea, 32 Cal. 98; 1879, People v. Ah Yute, 53 Cal. 613; 1895, People v. Young, 108 Cal. 8, 41 Pac. 281; 1899, Tibbet v. Sue, 125 Cal. 544, 58 Pac. 160 (statement about a loan to a third person); 1906, People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 325, 86 Pac. 671 (a mother's statement in the defendant's presence, excluded); 1910, Snowball's Estate, 157 Cal. 301, 107 Pac. 598 (statements of ill-treatment, by testatrix in the presence of an heir, admitted); 1910, People v. Rollins, 14 Cal. App. 134, 111 Pac. 123 (evasive replies upon hearing letters read aloud to him; the letters admitted);

Connecticut: 1921, Kelly v. Waterbury, 96 Conn. 494, 114 Atl. 530 (negligence of employee);

Florida: 1903, Weightnovel v. State, 46 Fla. 1, 35 So. 856 (physician charged with abortion);

Georgia: Code 1910, § 5782, P. C. § 1029 ("acquiescence or silence, when the circumstances require an answer or denial or other conduct, may amount to an admission"); 1847, Carter v. Buchannon, 3 Ga. 513, 521 ("what one party says to another without contradiction is admissible, but what a stranger says to a party may, although uncontradicted, not always be evidence"); 1857, Morris v. Stokes, 21 Fla. 552, 571; 1859, Block v. Hicks, 27 Fla. 522, 524; 1859, Phillips v. State, 29 Fla. 105, 108; 1874, Markham v. O'Connor, 52 Fla. 183, 197; 1891, Small v. Williams, 87 Fla. 681, 685, 13 S. E. 589; 1892, Giles v. Vandiver, 91 Fla. 192, 194, 17 S. E. 115; 1899, Chapman v. State, 109 Fla. 157, 34 S. E. 369 (certain vague threats of a wife in defendant's presence, excluded); 1895, Ware v. State, 96 Fla. 349, 23 S. E. 410; 1903, Graham v. State, 118 Fla. 807, 45 S. E. 616 (mere silence when arrested, excluded);

Illinois: 1906, Kevern v. People, 224 Ill. 170, 79 N. E. 574 (rape; the father's repetition to the accused of his daughter's charge against him, admitted, but only "in substance", and not the precise words; this is trivial and unsound; three judges diss.); 1918, Pederson v. Mixon, 284 Ill. 421, 120 N. E. 323 (avoidance of deeds; lawyer's interview with the wife-grantor, in the husband's presence, not received); 1918, People v. Berger, 284 Ill. 47, 119 N. E. 975 (keeping a disorderly house);

Indiana: 1871, Pierce v. Goldsberry, 35 Ind. 317, 320; 1876, Blessing v. Dodds, 53 Ind. 95, 101; 1884, Surber v. State, 99 Ind. 71, 73; 1888, Conway v. State, 118 Ind. 482, 485, 21 N. E. 285;
Iowa: 1915, Geddes v. McElroy, 171 Ia. 633, 154 N. W. 320 (failure to claim consideration of a note);
Kentucky: 1898, Franklin v. Com., 105 Ky. 237, 48 S. W. 986; 1906, Eaton v. Com., 122 Ky. 7, 90 S. W. 972 (general rule stated); 1906, Finch v. Com., — Ky. —, 92 S. W. 940;
Massachusetts: 1839, Com. v. Call, 21 Pick. 515, 521 (accomplice's statements); 1854, Boston & W. R. Co. v. Dana, 1 Gray 83, 104; 1854, Com. v. Harvey, 1 Gray 487; 1861, Larry v. Sherburne, 2 All. 34 (plaintiff's silence when offered payment by a third person, held not an admission of that person's liability); 1862, Hildreth v. Martin, 3 All. 371 (preceding case approved); 1879, Drury v. Hervey, 126 Mass. 519, 522 (not admissible "unless the circumstances are such that a denial would naturally be expected or an explanation of some sort would naturally be called for"); 1879, Whitney v. Houghton, 127 Mass. 527; 1883, Com. v. Brailey, 134 Mass. 527, 530; 1888, Com. v. Funai, 146 Mass. 570, 16 N. E. 458; 1895, Com. v. McCabe, 163 Mass. 98, 39 N. E. 777; 1901, Com. v. O'Brien, 179 Mass. 533, 61 N. E. 213;
Michigan: 1895, People v. Fowler, 104 Mich. 449, 62 N. W. 572;
Minnesota: 1907, State v. Quirk, 101 Minn. 334, 112 N. W. 409 (defendant's silence when his wife stated why he killed, admitted);
Mississippi: 1914, Riley v. State, 107 Miss. 600, 65 So. 882 (wife and husband, charged with a murder, the wife already tried and convicted; the wife says to him, "You know you killed that man and made me take it on myself", and he answers, "Hush, Bessie, if you go to the penitentiary, you won't be gone over 6 months before you get a pardon; but if they convict me, they will hang me"; excluded, on the theory that "it is not always conducive to domestic peace for a husband to contradict the statements of his wife"; a snap of the fingers for such reasoning; Reed, J., diss.);
Missouri: 1896, State v. Hill, 134 Mo. 663, 36 S. W. 223 (the party, when charged with being the father of a child, "kinder laughed"; admitted); 1911, State v. Lovell, 235 Mo. 343, 138 S. W. 523 (by deceased, in defendant's presence, admitted); 1916, State ex rel. Tiffany v. Ellison, 266 Mo. 604, 182 S. W. 996 (malpractice; defendant physician asked his clerk if she had the record in the M. C. case, and she answered " yes, the school-teacher that you dropped iodine in her eye and put it out"; excluded; Walker, J., diss.; the opinions argue the question elaborately);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10531, par. 3 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1872);
New Hampshire: 1860, Corser v. Paul, 41 N. H. 24, 29 (demand of payment of a note);
New Jersey: 1857, Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 463, 504, 601, 612 (dying declarations as to the deceased's assailant; admitted); 1906, State v. Johnson, 73 N. J. L. 199, 63 Atl. 12 (liquor at a polling-place; remarks about it in defendant's presence, admitted); 1920, State v. Morris, 94 N. J. L. 19, 108 Atl. 765 (keeping a disorderly house; statement of inmates of the house, made in the defendant's hearing, admitted); 1921, Ollert v. Zielbell, — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 356 (personal injury; deceased wife's statement, charging defendant with negligence, made in his presence, admitted);
New York: 1887, People v. Driscoll, 107 N. Y. 414, 424, 14 N. E. 305 (similar to Donnelly v. State, N. J.); 1900, People v. Page, 162 N. Y. 272, 56 N. E. 750 (rape; silence when told by a third person that the prosecutrix was charging the defendant with the rape, excluded; unsound); 1902, People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210, 64 N. E. 814 (there must be a motive to respond or to act); 1903, Seidenspinner v. Metrop. L. Ins. Co., 175 N. Y. 95, 67 N. E. 123 (receipt of sick benefits is an admission by the beneficiary of sickness existing at the time); 1903, Stecher Lith. Co. v. Inman, 175 N. Y. 124, 67 N. E. 213 (there must be a motive to reply; applying this to a third person's statements as to defective goods; Parker, C. J., and two others, diss., on the wholly untenable ground that such evidence is admissible only in criminal cases);
North Carolina: 1877, Francis v. Edwards, 77 N. C. 271, 274 (unanswered remarks of an intoxicated person, treating defendant as a partner, held not admissible); 1883, Guy v. Manuel, 89 N. C. 83, 96 (declarations of a boundary, in the defendant's presence, before he had an interest, excluded); 1899, Webb v. Atkinson, 124 N. C. 447, 32 S. E. 737; 1902, Virginia C. C. Co. v. Kirven, 130 N. C. 161, 41 S. E. 1; 1913, Boney v. Boney, 161 N. C. 614, 77 S. E. 784;
North Dakota: 1898, Paulso Mercantile Co. v. Seaver, 8 N. D. 215, 77 N. W. 1001;
Ohio: 1915, Hoover v. State, 91 Oh. 41, 109 N. E. 626 (accusations made by the defendant's dying wife and the mother-in-law, at the bedside, admitted);
Oregon: 1922, Johnson v. Underwood, 102 Or. 680, 203 Pac. 879 (personal injury; statements to an officer by the participants in defendant's presence, admitted);
Pennsylvania: 1826, Moore v. Smith, 14 S. & R. 388, 392 (conversation between two others, in defendant's presence, during a survey, not admitted; see quotation supra); 1847, McClenkan v. McMillan, 6 Pa. St. 366; 1919, Com. v. Brown, 264 Pa. 85, 107 Atl. 676 (silence when the victim of a homicide was asked in defendant's presence who shot him, and named the defendant, admitted);
Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 298, par. 3 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1872); 1903, U. S. v. Muyot, 2 P. I. 177 (embezzlement; inference not drawn from accused's silence while his mother was negotiating for a settlement);

Among the commoner classes of cases, it may be noted that a tenant's silence upon receiving a notice to quit was formerly a common instance of the principle's application.[2] Under this principle, also, comes the inference from a party's omission to file a claim or defence in a list of debts or the like,[3] though this is is sometimes hardly to be distinguished from the analogous instances of silence at a trial (infra, par. 3), failure to answer a letter (post, § 1073) and failure to deny in a pleading the opponent's assertion (ante, § 1066); distinguish also the inference, from a party's failure to testify or to make complaint, of his consciousness of the weakness of his cause (ante, §§ 284, 289), where the inference does not involve an assent to a third person's statement.

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1403, par. 3 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1872, par. 3);
South Carolina: 1820, State v. Rawls, 2 Nott & McC. 331, 336 (gaming; defendant's silence, when called by other players with a certain name, held to be evidence of his name); 1905, State v. Major, 70 S. C. 387, 50 S. E. 13 (larceny);
South Dakota: 1906, State v. Mungeon, 20 S. D. 612, 108 N. W. 552 (incest; the father's silence when charged by the daughter as her child's father, in the presence of a Children's Home agent, admissible);
Tennessee: 1905, Phelan v. State, 114 Tenn. 483, 88 S. W. 1040 (defendant's silence, just after a homicide, when his wife stated that he had provoked the affray; an over-strict opinion);
Texas: 1909, Crowell v. State, 56 Tex. Cr. 480, 120 S. W. 897 (murder);
Utah: 1903, State v. Mortensen, 26 Utah 312, 73 Pac. 562, 633 (statements made over the body of the deceased, admitted on the facts);
Vermont: 1838, Vail v. Strong, 10 Vt. 457, 463 (see quotation supra); 1839, Gale v. Lincoln, 11 Vt. 152, 155; 1844, Mattocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 113, 119 (see quotation supra); 1851, Hersey v. Barton, 23 Vt. 685, 688 (statements to a third person in defendant's presence, excluded); 1896, State v. Magoon, 68 Vt. 289, 35 Atl. 310.

[2] 1809, Doe v. Biggs, 2 Taunt. 109 (silence on receiving a notice to quit, received as evidence of an admission of the term of tenancy); 1811, Doe v. Wombwell, 2 Camp. 559 (notice to tenant to quit; his failure to object, with his language at the time, held to be an admission of the time of beginning of tenancy); 1811, Thomas v. Thomas, 2 Camp. 647 (failure to object, on personal service of notice to quit, may be an admission; but it "must depend upon circumstances"; e.g. the defendant might be illiterate, or the server might have left too soon for objection to be made); 1811, Doe v. Forster, 13 East 405 (the tenant's knowledge of contents and his demeanor may amount to an admission). Compare the rule for an account rendered (post, § 1073).

Distinguish the question whether the landlord's receipt of rent without protest amounts to a waiver of default in payment: 1810, Doe v. Calvert, 2 Camp. 387.

[3] ENGLAND: 1811, Hart v. Newman, 3 Camp. 13 (insolvent's failure to schedule a bill of exchange "is not enough to prove that the amount was not then due"); 1830, Nicholls v. Downes, 1 Mo. & Rob. 13 (excluded; L. C. J. Tenterden: "Can it be allowed that a party shall be admitted to claim, in a court of justice, a debt, after having on oath declared there was none such?" Counsel then cited "a similar case in which Lord Ellenborough had said that the defendant's having cheated his assignees was no reason why another person should cheat him" (which was begging the question); L. C. J.: "I cannot assent to that"); UNITED STATES: Conn. 1904, Watson v. Bigelow Co., 77 Conn. 124, 58 Atl. 741 (whether the acceptance of goods without protest is an admission that they comply with the contract); 1905, Nichols v. New Britain, 77 Conn. 965, 60 Atl. 655 (failure to include an item in a claim of damages; inference allowed); Ill. 1904, People ex rel. Hillel Lodge v. Rose, 207 Ill. 352, 69 N. E. 762 (St. 1901, May 10, applied and held constitutional; the statute makes a corporation's failure to file an annual report 'prima facie' evidence of non-user); Me. 1878, Eaton v. New England T. Co., 68 Me. 63, 66 (omission to claim the present property in a garnishee or trustee answer in another suit, received); Mass. 1859, Stevens v. Miller, 13 Gray 282 (plaintiff's settlement of a debt without mention of counterclaim arising from the same transaction, admissible); Minn. 1917, Thaden v. Bagan, 139 Minn. 46, 165 N. W. 864 (compensation for farm-land taken; the claim being required by tax-law to be listed, the plaintiff's failure to list it with the county auditor was evidence as "an admission of non-ownership"); Mo. 1919, State v. Levitt, 278 Mo. 372, 213 S. W. 108; Pa. 1840, Miller v. Heck, 9 Watts 439, 445 (executor's inventory, omitting a claim now made, received); Vt. 1911, Donovan v. Selinas, 85 Vt. 80, 81 Atl. 235 (ownership as between husband and wife; the husband's failure to make claim, admitted).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 284, which are sometimes hardly distinguishable in practice.

(2) By way of specific rule, carrying out the principle already examined, it is sometimes said that the proponent of the evidence must show, not merely that the party was present [4] when the remark was made (and "presence" of course implies "proximity within a distance sufficient to permit hearing"), but also that the party actually heard and understood what was said.[5] But this seems too strict; the presence of a party may be assumed to indicate that he heard and understood. So, also, it is sometimes said that the proponent must show that the party had knowledge of the facts stated, since otherwise he might have hesitated to contradict.[6] This, again, is perhaps too strict, for a party's admission (as already noted in § 1053) is receivable irrespective of his personal knowledge.

(3) On the other hand, if on the circumstances it appears that the party was in fact physically disabled from answering, his silence of course signifies nothing, and the statement is inadmissible.[7] So, too, if the party had plainly no motive for responding, his silence permits no inference; and this is often the case where the statement is addressed to another person, and not to the party himself.[8] Much more is the silence without significance

[4] This much is always understood nowadays: 1913, Gila Valley G. & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 232 U. S. 94, 34 Sup. 229 (person less than 20 yards away; left to the trial Court); 1903, People v. Philbon, 138 Cal. 530, 77 Pac. 650; 1905, State v. Rosa, 72 N. J. L. 462, 62 Atl. 695 (conversation in a jail); 1895, Josephi v. Furnish, 27 Or. 260, 41 Pac. 424 (a conversation held twelve feet away and around a corner out of sight, excluded).

[5] 1909, Sorenson v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 168 Fed. 785 (Weightnovel v. State followed, in a ruling over-strict); 1903, Weightnovel v. State, 46 Fla. 1, 35 So. 856 (the defendant being outside the room); 1880, Jones v. State, 65 Ga. 147, 150 (the statement must be made in his presence and hearing, and the witness "must be certain thereby that his attention was arrested"); 1860, Queener v. Morrow, 1 Coldw. Tenn. 123, 130 ("it is indispensable that the party should have heard and understood the statement").

[6] 1841, Robinson v. Blen, 20 Me. 109; 1838, Edwards v. Williams, 2 How. Miss. 846, 849.

[7] Federal: 1896, Gowen v. Bush, 22 C. C. A. 196, 76 Fed. 349 (statements addressed to a plaintiff when he was semi-unconscious after an injury, excluded); 1906, Parulo v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 145 Fed. 664, 669, C. C. A. (remarks by a railroad employee to a physician in the presence of the injured plaintiff, excluded); Ala. 1895, Dean v. State, 105 Ala. 21, 17 So. 28 (remarks addressed to a party who was shot and unable to speak, excluded); 1899, Lalland v. Brown, 121 Ala. 513, 25 So. 997 (conversation in presence of defendant while ill, admitted); Ark. 1905, Bloomer v. State, 75 Ark. 297, 87 S. W. 438 (statement in the presence of the accused when drunk, excluded); Ind. 1893, Springer v. Byram, 137 Ind. 15, 25, 36 N. E. 361 (remark made by the brother of the injured plaintiff, before the latter in the ambulance, admitted); N. J. 1913, State v. Kysilka, 84 N. J. L. 6, 87 Atl. 79 (identification of the accused by a witness speaking another language; excluded); N. Y. 1897, People v. Koerner, 154 N. Y. 355, 48 N. E. 730 (remarks in the presence of one unconscious, excluded, though there was evidence that he was shamming unconsciousness); R. I. 1903, State v. Epstein, 25 R. I. 131, 55 Atl. 204 (statements in the presence of an accused who was physically in such suffering as to be probably unable to understand or reply, excluded).

[8] Ala. 1852, Lawson v. State, 20 Ala. 65, 68, 80 (fornication; conversation in the presence of the female defendant, as to the party to be charged by the doctor, just after the delivery of the child, held inadmissible); Ga. 1851, Rolfe v. Rolfe, 10 Ga. 143, 145 (excluded on the facts); 1906, Lumpkin v. State, 125 Ga. 24, 53 S. E. 810 (excluded on the facts); Mo. 1890, State v. Mullins, 101 Mo. 504, 518, 14 S. W. 625 (remarks addressed to third persons in the defendant's presence, not admitted); N. Car. 1882, State v. Kemp, 87 N. C. 540 (adultery; the children of the female defendant in her presence called the male defendant "papa"; held an admission of parentage and therefore of intercourse); Va. 1895, Fry v. Stowers, 92 Va. 13, 22 S. E. 500 (a conversation in D's presence but not addressed to him); Wash. 1907, State v. Barath, 47 Wash. 283, 91 Pac. 977 (statements by the injured person, made in adjoining room and not addressed to defendant, excluded, under the circumstances; also statements relating to matters prior to the assault).

when a positive deterrent motive, such as fear, was operating upon the party.[9]

Certain situations in particular may furnish a positive motive for silence without regard to the truth or falsity of the statement. Whether the fact that the party is at the time under arrest creates such a situation has been the subject of opposing opinions; a few Courts (for the most part in acceptance of an early Massachusetts precedent), by a rule of thumb exclude the statement invariably; but the better rule would seem to allow some flexibility according to circumstances.[10] But where the party is in a court-room, and a [9] 1858, Bob v. State, 32 Ala. 560, 565 (remarks of white persons, in the master's house, charging guilt upon a slave, whose shoe-tracks were being measured, excluded, because of his condition of "subordination and discipline").

[10] The cases on both sides are as follows: ENGLAND: 1837, R. v. Bartlett, 7 C. & P. 832 (defendant's silence, when charged, while in custody, by his wife's remark to him, held sufficient to admit her remark); 1866, R. v. Jankowski, 10 Cox Cr. 365 (silence on being identified at the police station, admitted; but it "ought not to weight against him"); 1910, Thompson's Case, 4 Cr. App. 45 (accomplice's statement, read out by a policeman in the presence of the accused, who immediately said, "This is a pack of lies"; held admissible; the opinion shows a most singular and apparently hopeless misunderstanding of the principles applicable to this class of evidence; on appeal, [1910] 1 K. B. 640, affirmed, but the opinion, while repudiating the extreme view that only statements expressly admitted to be true are receivable, holds that any statement read in the accused's presence is admissible subject to such weight as may be given, and ignores the vital fact that the accused here promptly denied the statement 'in toto'; 1910, Norton's Case, 5 Cr. App. 7, 65, 2 K. B. 496 (rape under age; the child made a charge in the accused's presence, which he denied; held inadmissible; here an admirable opinion, by Pickford, J., accurately and fully expounds the principle); 1910, Atherton's Case, 5 Cr. App. 233 (Norton's Case followed); 1911, Murtrie's Case, 6 Cr. App. 128 (similar); 1911, Hickey's Case, 6 Cr. App. 200 (similar); 1911, Stroud's Case, 7 Cr. App. 38 (Norton's Case followed); 1914, Christie's Case, A. C. 45, 10 Cr. App. 141 (per Lord Atkinson: "a statement made in the presence of an accused person [under arrest], even upon an occasion which should be expected reasonably to call for some explanation or denial from him, is not evidence against him of the facts stated, save so far as he accepts the statement, so as to make it in effect his own"; this is in theory an unsound statement; it would have been more correct to put it that the position of a person under arrest is not a position in which denial could reasonably be expected; because silence, where denial would be natural, is an "acceptance" of it; Lord Moulton did not approve the above statement, nor Lord Reading; the latter two questioned in part the definition by Pickford, J., in Norton's Case).

CANADA: 1892, R. v. Drain, 8 Manit. 535 (assaulted person's statement in the presence of the accused under arrest, admitted).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1852, Spencer v. State, 20 Ala. 24, 27 (declarations by a slave in defendant's presence, admitted); 1908, Raymond v. State, 154 Ala. 1, 45 So. 895 (larceny; the owner's statement, charging defendant under arrest, and not denied, admitted; approving the text above); 1913, Simmons v. State, — Ala. —, 61 So. 466 (statement in presence of accused under arrest, admitted); California: 1874, People v. Estrado, 49 Cal. 17 (co-defendant's statement to a police-officer, admitted; the defendant being afterwards allowed to make his statement); 1883, People v. Ah Fook, 64 Cal. 380, 1 Pac. 347 (statement of third person, admitted; 1898, People v. Doe, 122 Cal. 486, 497, 55 Pac. 581 (undecided); 1901, People v. Williams, 133 Cal. 165, 65 Pac. 323 (silence when under arrest, excluded on the facts); 1901, People v. Amaya, 134 Cal. 531, 66 Pac. 794 (undenied charges made against the defendant, under arrest, by the deceased on his death-bed, admitted; Com. v. Kenney, Mass., explained, and the doctrine repudiated that the mere fact of arrest excludes such statements); 1911, People v. Wong Loung, 159 Cal. 520, 114 Pac. 829 (excluded on the facts); 1920, People v. Ong Mon Foo, 182 Cal. 697, 189 Pac. 690 (homicide; Chinese accused, under arrest, in presence of the dying man and his wife, who charged him as the assailant; admitted);
Connecticut: 1922, State v. Ferrone, — Conn. —, 116 Atl. 336 (housebreaking; statements made by an officer to the accused while under arrest, and not replied to, excluded);
Georgia: 1902, Simmons v. State, 115 Ga. 574, 41 S. E. 983 (here excluded, the accused's hearing, etc., not being clearly shown); 1921, Johnson v. State, 151 Ga. 21, 105 S. E. 603 (homicide; statement of an accomplice made to a deputy sheriff in jail in defendant's presence, confessing the homicide, and not commented on by defendant in any way, excluded);

trial or other judicial proceeding is going on, his failure to deny statements made publicly by another person in the course of the proceeding would obviously admit of no inference against him, whether he attends as party or

Illinois: 1913, People v. Tielke, 259 Ill. 88, 102 N. E. 229 (interview between the accused under arrest, his sister, two policemen, and the prosecuting attorney; the sister's statements admitted, as being impliedly assented to by him); 1914, People v. Pfanschmidt, 262 Ill. 411, 104 N. E. 804 (statements excluded on the facts); 1921, People v. Wilson, 298 Ill. 257, 131 N. E. 609;

Kentucky: 1901, Porter v. Com., — Ky. —, 61 S. W. 16 (silence of defendant, under arrest, during an accomplice's confession in his presence, excluded); 1904, Merriweather v. Com., 118 Ky. 870, 82 S. W. 592 (Com. v. Kenney, Mass., followed; here the defendant was under arrest, at a railroad depot, in the presence of spectators and fellow-prisoners);

Louisiana: 1882, State v. Diskin, 34 La. An. 919, 921 (murder; silence when charged by the dying man, not admitted; here the officer in charge told the defendant to be quiet); 1887, State v. Estoup, 39 La. An. 906, 908, 3 So. 124 (like the next case); 1899, State v. Sadler, 51 La. An. 1397, 26 So. 390 (silence when charged while under arrest, inadmissible); 1901, State v. Carter, 106 La. 407, 30 So. 895 (similar rule, deceased's declarations, excluded);

Massachusetts: 1847, Com. v. Kenney, 12 Metc. 235 (statements by an officer and by the complaining party, not received under the circumstances); 1866, Com. v. Walker, 13 All. 570 (identification of defendant by a witness, excluded); 1876, Com. v. Brown, 121 Mass. 69, 80 (statements not receivable, unless "he was at liberty to reply", and the statement "was made by such a person and under such circumstances as naturally call for a reply unless he intends to admit it"); 1877, Com. v. McDermott, 123 Mass. 440 (conversation between an officer and the defendant's companion, excluded); 1892, Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 180, 198, 31 N. E. 961 (rule in Com. v. Brown approved; effect of equivocal replies, considered); 1902, Smith v. Duncan, 181 Mass. 435, 63 N. E. 938 (statements by a police officer to the defendant after an injury, but without arrest, admitted on the facts);

Michigan: 1920, People v. Foster, 211 Mich. 486, 179 N. W. 295 (the mere fact of being in custody does not suffice to exclude);

Missouri: 1895, State v. Murray, 126 Mo. 611, 29 S. W. 700 (defendant's brother, a codefendant, declared in the presence of the defendant, under arrest, that the latter was the one who had fired the shot; excluded); 1898, State v. Foley, 144 Mo. 600, 46 S. W. 733 (silence when under arrest can never be receivable as an admission); 1905, State v. Swisher, 186 Mo. 1, 84 S. W. 911 (State v. Foley followed); 1905, State v. Ethridge, 188 Mo. 352, 87 S. W. 495 (defendant's wife's statements made in his presence to the constable arresting him, excluded); 1906, State v. Richardson, 194 Mo. 326, 92 S. W. 649 (State v. Foley followed); 1907, State v. Kelleher, 201 Mo. 614, 100 S. W. 470 (statements by the deceased in the presence of the accused under arrest, excluded);

Nebraska: 1907, O'Hearn v. State, 79 Nebr. 513, 113 N. W. 130 (excluded, on the facts);

New Jersey: 1921, State v. Claymonst, — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 155 (carnal abuse; defendant's silence when the assaulted child identified him, admitted);

New York: 1874, Kelley v. People, 55 N. Y. 565, 572 (that an accused is under arrest is no objection; here the identifying statement of the injured person was received; "the declaration was in substance a challenge to them to assert their innocence if they were not guilty"); 1900, People v. Kennedy, 164 N. Y. 449, 456, 58 N. E. 652 (identifying remarks, made in answer to a police officer's inquiry, excluded, the officer having forbidden the accused to reply); 1901, People v. Wennerholm, 166 N. Y. 567, 60 N. E. 259 (silence during statements to an officer just before arrest, admitted; Martin and Bartlett, JJ., diss.); 1902, People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210, 64 N. E. 814 (silence of husband, under arrest, at the bedside of his wife, who was semi-conscious, the physician having enjoined silence, held not sufficient to admit the wife's remarks and conduct); 1906, People v. Cascone, 185 N. Y. 317, 78 N. E. 287 (deceased's statement, made in the accused's presence, excluded, because on the facts, the parties being Italians but English also being used, it did not appear that the accused understood questions and answers); 1911, People v. Conrow, 200 N. Y. 356, 93 N. E. 943 (here the district attorney improperly recounted in detail the accomplice's story to which the defendant had refused to make answer); 1920, People v. Cascia, Sup. App. Div., 181 N. Y. Suppl. 855 (robbery; silence when under arrest and identified by the victim and his wife, admitted, following Kelley v. People);

Ohio: 1881, Murphy v. State, 27 Oh. St. 628 (two persons having stolen goods in their possession were taken into custody; the remarks of one, to the officer, in the other's presence and on his behalf, admitted); 1904, Geiger v. State, 70 Oh. 400, 71 N. E. 721 (wife-murder; the accused was brought before the chief of police, under arrest, and in his presence his child of four years recounted a story of the murder in answer to questions of the police; his silence was held not to admit this conversation; an over-strict ruling; the Court inappropriately stigmatizes the occasion as a "star-chamber investigation"); merely as witness; for in either case he is prevented by the dictates of decorum from making open interruption and he knows that he may at the proper time make all necessary denials:[11]

Pennsylvania: 1910, Com. v. Aston, 227 Pa. 112, 75 Atl. 1019 (failure to deny accomplice's confession before chief of police, admitted);
Rhode Island: 1903, State v. Epstein, 25 R. I. 131, 55 Atl. 204 (statements by the injured person and the police, the accused being present under arrest, excluded; narrow doctrine approved);
South Carolina: 1906, State v. Sudduth, 74 S. C. 498, 54 S. E. 1013 (dying victim's accusation of the accused in the jail, admitted); 1913, State v. McIntosh, 94 S. C. 439, 78 S. E. 327 (excluded on the facts);
South Dakota: 1917, State v. Guffey, 39 S. D. 84, 163 N. W. 679 (larceny; statements in the presence of officers, admitted on the facts);
Tennessee: 1896, Green v. State, 97 Tenn. 50, 36 S. W. 700 (confession of an accomplice made within hearing, admitted);
Texas: 1896, Gardner v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 34 S. W. 945 (following the Massachusetts rule of exclusion); 1901, Funderburk v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 61 S. W. 393 (same); 1901, Weaver v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 340, 65 S. W. 534 (same); 1910, Couch v. State, 58 Tex. Cr. 505, 126 S. W. 866 (Gardiner Case approved); 1920, Kyle v. State, — Tex. Cr. App. —, 217 S. W. 943 (accomplice's confession in accused's presence, excluded);
Utah: 1896, People v. Kessler, 13 Utah 69, 44 Pac. 97 (the deceased charged the accused with shooting him, but the chief of police told the accused not to speak; excluded);
Washington: 1897, State v. McCullum, 18 Wash. 394, 51 Pac. 1044 (confession by co-defendant, in the presence of the defendant, kept there by compulsion, excluded);
West Virginia: 1899, State v. Dickey, 46 W. Va. 319, 33 S. E. 231 (statements by counsel of defendant under arrest, in the latter's presence, to the prosecuting attorney, excluded);
Wisconsin: 1912, Hardy v. State, 150 Wis. 176, 136 N. W. 638 (rape; identification of the accused, when arrested, by the victim, without response by the accused, admitted).

[11] ENGLAND: 1821, R. v. Appleby, 3 Stark 33 (defendant's silence when charged with guilt in the testimony of a co-defendant before the magistrate, held not to admit the testimony); 1825, Child v. Grace, 2 C. & P. 193 ("what was said by the magistrate before whom the matter had been investigated, in the presence of both plaintiff and defendant", excluded; Best, C. J.: "If such evidence is allowed, we shall have causes tried at the police offices before they come here"); 1829, Melen v. Andrews, M. & M. 336 (see quotation supra); 1830, R. v. Hollingshead, 4 C. & P. 242, semble (what a solicitor for the prosecution said in defendant's presence, before the magistrate, excluded); 1914, Mash v. Darley, 3 K. B. 1226 (bastardy; to corroborate the plaintiff, the face was held admissible that on a criminal charge of rape under age the defendant had at the magistrate's hearing put forward a certain defence which later at the jury trial he failed to put forward).

CANADA: 1894, Thompson v. Didion, 10 Manit. 246 (witnesses' testimony in the presence of the party in court, but not understanding their language, not taken as admissions).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1853, Carr v. Hilton, 1 Curt. 390 (statement of counsel, arguing before a Supreme Court, that he had notified H., not then a party, not received against H. now plaintiff); Alabama: 1856, Abercrombie v. Allen, 29 Ala. 281 (contract for services; plaintiff's remarks on the subject, in defendant's presence, at another trial before a justice of the peace, excluded); 1884, Weaver v. State, 77 Ala. 26, 28 (remarks of the magistrate, excluded on the facts); 1895, Collier v. Dick, 111 Ala. 263, 18 So. 522 (C. present in court as spectator while statements were made by M. on the stand; excluded); Georgia: 1890, McElmurray v. Turner, 86 Ga. 215, 217, 12 S. E. 359 (testimony of the party's own witness at a former trial, excluded, on the theory that silence did not mean assent); 1894, Bell v. State, 93 Ga. 557, 559, 19 S. E. 244 (silence of accused during preliminary examination, excluded); Indiana: 1874, Broyles v. State, 47 Ind. 251, 253 (testimony of opposing witness in the party's presence, before a magistrate, excluded); 1880, Howard v. Howard, 69 Ind. 592, 600 (statements by a witness on the stand, the defendant being then present as a party, excluded); 1881, Johnson v. Holliday, 79 Ind. 151, 156 (defendant's failure to deny statements of a witness before the magistrate, excluded); 1882, Puett v. Beard, 86 Ind. 104, 106 (battery done at a trial before a justice of the peace; unanswered remarks of the opponent's attorney, as to the battery, admitted, the trial having been ended by the brawl); Iowa: 1906, Foster v. Hobson, 131 Ia. 58, 107 N. W. 1101 (plaintiff's silence during counsel's assertion in another trial, when she was not a party, that her husband owned the farm now claimed by her, held not an admission); Maine: 1904, Thayer v. Usher, 98 Me. 468, 57 Atl. 839 (statements of U. in a court on the stand, the defendant being present and not denying, excluded); Massachusetts: 1902, Keith v. Marcus, 181 Mass. 377, 63 N. E. 924 (declarations by the judge in the party's presence, not admitted on the facts); Missouri: 1890, State v. Mullins, 101 Mo. 514, 517, 14 S. W. 625 (silence of defendant at a coroner's inquest, excluded); 1900, State v. Hale, 156

1829, PARKE, J., in Melen v. Andrews, M. & M. 336 (excluding the testimony of a witness on a former trial in the present plaintiff's presence, now offered against the plaintiff): "It is true that the plaintiff might have cross-examined or commented on the testimony. But still, in an investigation of this nature, there is a regularity of proceeding adopted which prevents the party from interposing when and how he pleases, as he would in a common conversation. The same inferences therefore cannot be drawn from his silence or his conduct in this case which generally may in that of a conversation in his presence."

1830, Messrs. Carrington and Payne, Note to 4 C. & P. 243: "The reason why anything said in the presence of the prisoner is receivable in evidence against him is that, being said in his hearing, he might have contradicted it had he chosen. Now this seems hardly to apply to what takes place at the time of an examination before the magistrate; because, as the prisoner could not keep up a running commentary of contradictions, the reason of admitting such evidence appears to fail."

Here, however, must be distinguished the effort of another principle (ante, § 289), by which the party's failure to produce testimony (in particular, to testify himself) permits an inference as to his consciousness of the weakness of his cause. The difference is that there the inference arises from his failure formally to take the stand at the proper time; while here the inference, if any, would arise from his failure to speak out informally at an improper time.[12]

Mo. 102, 56 S. W. 881 (defendant on trial "nodded his head" when a witness said, "Don't you know that is the pocket-book?"; excluded, but erroneously, for this was an explicit assent); New Hampshire: 1903, Little v. R. Co., 72 N. H. 61, 55 Atl. 190 (argument of plaintiff, after evidence closed, challenging defendant to make experiments showing the time required for stopping a car, held improper); New Jersey: 1907, Hauser v. Goodstein, 75 N. J. L. 66, 66 Atl. 932 (defendant's silence during testimony to an agency, excluded); New York: 1883, People v. Willett, 34 N. Y. 29 (experiments as to identity, made during a coroner's inquest and in defendant's presence, not admitted; "the doctrine as to silence . . . does not apply to silence at a judicial proceeding or hearing"); North Carolina: 1849, Moffit v. Witherspoon, 10 Ired. 185, 191 (silence during remarks of counsel made in argument to the jury, held not to make them admissible); 1887, Blackwell D. T. Co. v. McElwee, 96 N. C. 71, 1 S. E. 676 (silence of defendant, and his failure later as a witness to make denial, concerning the terms of a letter admitted by his partner when giving a deposition, to be correct, held inadmissible; the second point of the ruling is erroneous); 1909, State v. Jackson, 150 N. C. 831, 64 S. E. 376 (silence during testimony at an election commissioners' hearing, not received as an admission); 1909, Thorp's Will, 150 N. C. 831, 64 S. E. 379 (testator's silence during a former trial when his counsel argued that he was insane, not received as an admission); Pennsylvania: 1903, Com. v. Zorambo, 205 Pa. 109, 54 Atl. 716 (accused's silence when charged by a witness speaking before the magistrate, after the hearing was over, but when he might still have supposed it going on, excluded on the facts); 1917, Scott v. American Express Co., 257 Pa. 25, 101 Atl. 96 (omissions of facts in a pleading; cited more fully ante, § 1066); Tennessee: 1911, Parrott v. State, 125 Tenn. 1, 139 S. W. 1056 (defendant's silence at other trials, when hearing witnesses' charges; inference not allowed); Vermont: 1853, Brainard v. Buck, 25 Vt. 573, 579 (statements at a chancery proceeding, by a party, in the presence of the now defendant as a witness, charging him with the receipt of money, and not denied by him, excluded); 1863, State v. Gilbert, 36 Vt. 145, 147 (statements of a witness in defendant's presence before a magistrate, held not admissible because of the party's silence).

Compare the cases as to a witness' self-contradictions (ante, § 1042).

[12] The confused recognition of this other principle has sometimes led to rulings which are correct enough, but are not clearly placed upon the proper ground: 1844, Jones v. Morrell, 1 C. & K. 266, 268 (defendant's depositions, offered before a magistrate at a prior hearing, admitted, because the plaintiff, then being there, after the reading was "called upon to answer it", and did answer not denying); 1848, Simpson v. Robinson, 12 Q. B. 512 ("We do not understand that case [of Melen v. Andrews, supra] as deciding that under no circumstances can such evidence be admitted; . . . for cases might certainly be conceived in which a party by not denying a charge so made might possibly afford strong proof that the imputation was unjust"); 1901, State v. Dexter, 115 Ia. 678, 87 N. W. 417 (testimony of wife of defendant at a former trial in his

(4) It ought not to be necessary to note that the party's denial of the third person's statement destroys entirely the ground for using it.[13] Furthermore, when by silence the statement is made admissible, the inference of the party's assent may always (on the logical principle of § 32, ante) be explained away in rebuttal by circumstances showing that the silence was due to other motives.[14]

(5) Certain distinct principles need here to be discriminated: (a) Silence on the part of an accused person has sometimes a circumstantial significance, not by way of assent to a third person's statement, but as indicative of a consciousness of guilt; this is better considered in connection with related topics dealt with elsewhere (ante, § 284, failure to explain innocence; post, § 1144, consistent exculpatory statements; and post, § 1781, explaining the possession of stolen goods). (b) Statements of third persons, not receivable by virtue of the present principle of assenting silence, may still be receivable against an accused person, as admissions of a co-conspirator[15] (post, § 1079), or as parts of an entire conversation[16] (post, §§ 2115, 2119). (c) Statements by a wife in the husband's presence, being admissible under the present principle, may still have to satisfy the rule prohibiting testimony of wife against husband (post, § 2232). (d) Silence may indicate assent in a contractual sense; this involves the substantive law, and is without the present purview.[17]

§ 1073. Third Person's Document: Writing Sent to the Party or Found in his Possession; Unanswered Letter; Account rendered; "Proofs of Loss" in Insurance. The written statements of a third person may be so dealt with by the party that his assent to the correctness of the statements may be inferred, and they would thus by adoption become his own statements. What sort of dealing with the document will suffice for this purpose has in several respects been a mooted question. Leaving aside for the moment the particular problems as to corporation-books and depositions, which are affected by independent considerations, the different situations may be grouped under presence, admitted; he "had the opportunity to deny it on the witness stand").

Distinguish also the party's omission, at a former trial, to mention certain facts in his testimony, for that is equivalent to a contradiction of his present testimony (under § 1042, ante).

The party's use of a witness' deposition at a former trial rests on a different application of the principle (post, § 1075).

[13] Cal. 1903, People v. Morton, 139 Cal. 719, 73 Pac. 609; Ill. 1914, People v. Harrison, 261 Ill. 517, 104 N. E. 259 (the accused's reply that the narrator is a liar is a sufficient negation of silent assent to any part of the statement): La. 1899, State v. Robinson, 51 La. An. 694, 25 So. 380 (charges made against defendant in his presence, by deceased, and then denied by the former, excluded); Miss. 1901, Brown v. State, 78 Miss. 637, 29 So. 519; 1907, Johnson v. State, 90 Miss. 317, 43 So. 435; N. J. 1913, State v. D'Adame, 84 N. J. L. 386, 96 Atl. 414; N. Y. 1915, People v. Marendi, 213 N. Y. 600, 107 N. E. 1058 (murder; victim's statement in the accused's presence, denied by the latter, excluded); S. Dak. 1910, State v. Swenson, 26 S. D. 589, 129 N. W. 119; Tenn. 1901, Low v. State, 108 Tenn. 127, 65 S. W. 401.

[14] 1867, Flanagin v. State, 25 Ark. 92, 94 (threats or promises to the defendant, as explaining his silence, admitted); and cases cited ante, § 1058.

The further refinement, that the jury should be told that the statements of the third person as assented to are not to be taken as the latter's testimony, has been pointed out: 1914, State v. Wakefield, 88 Conn. 164, 90 Atl. 230; but is a needless quibble.

[15] 1867, State v. Fitzhugh, 2 Or. 227, 232.

[16] 1844, Redfield, J., in Mattocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 113, 119.

[17] 1822, Peele v. Ins. Co., 3 Mason 27, 81 (underwriters' silence, as forming an acceptance of the insured's abandonment of a vessel).

four heads: (1) Documents seen; (2) documents found in possession; (3) documents of demand, received but not answered; and (4) documents made use of.

(1) In some circumstances, the party's mere sight or perusal of a third person's document, without responsive protest of denial or explanation, may indicate an admission of correctness. But here each case virtually must stand by itself.[1]

(2) The party's possession of a document made by a third person may well be evidence of the party's knowledge of its contents (ante, § 260); but is it sufficient to justify an inference of assent to the statements contained therein? It is easy to imagine instances in which such an inference would be fallacious. Yet, since the party may always exculpate himself and disown the inference by proving the true reason for this retention of the document, the question remains whether the mere fact of possession ought not to suffice at the outset to make the document receivable, subject to explanations that may later be made.

This question was in orthodox practice answered in the affirmative: [2]

§ 1073. [1] England: 1877, Jones v. Botsford, 17 N. Br. 62 (document written by one under arrest, in the sheriff's presence, and forwarded by the latter to the former's attorney, admitted against the sheriff); U. S. Ia. 1902, Hull's Will, 117 Ia. 738, 89 N. W. 979 (obituary notice, published with a party's sanction, held on the facts not an admission of sanity); Mass. 1917, Leavitt v. Maynes, 228 Mass. 350, 117 N. E. 343 (services as physician; letter addressed to the husband, opened by the wife, and shown to the husband, not admitted on the facts); Mich. 1898, Raub v. Nisbett, 118 Mich. 248, 76 N. W. 393 (looking through an adversary's book of accounts, and stating no objection, makes the books receivable); 1906, Rogers v. Krumrei, 143 Mich. 15, 106 N. W. 279 (memorandum of a contract, made by one party in the sight of the other, admitted against the latter); Minn. 1896, Hulett v. Carey, 66 Minn. 327, 69 N. W. 31 (a letter read by the writer's husband, put into an envelope, and taken away to post, held an admission by him of the fact of marriage therein asserted); N. Y. 1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., Abbott's Rep. 1. 367 ff. (here the particular situation was that of a person who assisted in framing an answer to a letter received by him; and his failure to make an oral denial of its assertions was held not alone to admit the letter, and the written answer was held to be necessary in order to show how far he assented to the letter's statements); 1902, People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210, 64 N. E. 814 (defendant's statement that he had read a newspaper account, held not an admission of its truth); Or. 1905, Pacific Export L. Co. v. North P. L. Co., 46 Or. 194, 80 Pac. 105 (memorandum dictated by A in B's presence to a stenographer, typewritten, and a copy given to B, received for A as an admission of B); Pa. 1921, Marshall v. Carr, 271 Pa. 271, 114 Atl. 500 (ejectment; defendant's letter to the State Pardon Board, and his assistance in circulating M.'s petition thereto, held to make admissible M.'s description of herself in the petition as a widow); Tex. 1921, Terrell v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 599, 228 S. W. 240 (wife-desertion; a letter to the defendant from another woman, in amorous terms, was received, opened, and read by the wife, who then "told him about it, and he just laughed at the idea", etc., held inadmissible because the defendant had not "acted upon it or adopted it"; this ruling is incorrect; it shows a radical misapprehension of the principle, and its fallacy is dangerous); Vt. 1895, Hamilton v. Gray, 67 Vt. 233, 31 Atl. 315 (taxation of costs by a clerk of court in a suit in which the person was a party).

[2] ENGLAND: 1717, Francia's Trial, 15 How. St. Tr. 897, 990 (treasonable correspondence; L. C. B. Bury: "To receive so many letters, and to keep them so long, is an evidence that he assented to the matter"); 1809, Doe v. Pembroke, 11 East 504 (plaintiff's predecessor charged with recognition of relationship of his grandfather and the ancestor of defendant, on the strength of a recital in a cancelled will of the grandfather, found in a drawer of plaintiff's predecessor the grandson); 1814, R. v. Plumer, R. & R. 264 (larceny of money from a letter; a letter and a money-bill being found on the defendant, semble the contents of the letter could be used to connect it with the bill); 1817, R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 116, 140 (possession suffices); 1858, R. v. Bernard, 8 St. Tr. N. S. 887, 938 (conspiracy to murder Napoleon III; paper in A.'s handwriting, found in defendant's room bearing his handwriting, admitted to show knowledge of its contents, but not assent to them).

1794, Horne Tooke's Trial, 25 How. St. Tr. 1, 120; treason; a certain paper, addressed to Mr. Tooke and found at his house, was offered against him. Mr. Tooke: "I do not know what papers may have been taken from my house; but are letters written to me to be produced as evidence against me?" L. C. J. EYRE: "Being found in your possession, they undoubtedly are producible as evidence; but, as to the effect of them, very much will depend upon the circumstances of the contents of those letters, and whether answers to them can be traced, or whether anything has been done upon them. A great number of papers may be found in a man's possession which will be, 'prima facie', evidence against him, but will be open to a variety of explanations; and it is always a very considerable explanation that nothing appears to have been done in consequence of the paper being sent to him. But all papers found in the possession of a man are, 'prima facie', evidence against him, if the contents of them have application to the subject under consideration." Mr. Tooke: "The reason of my asking it is, I am very much afraid that, besides treason, I may be charged with blasphemy." Lord Chief Justice EYRE: "You are not tried for that." Mr. Tooke: "It is notorious I do not answer common letters of civility, but I have received and kept many curious letters. I received some letters from a man whose name is Oliver Verall, and he endeavored to prove to me that he was God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. He proved it from the Old Testament; in the first place that he was God the Father, because God is O Veral; that is, God over all. He proved he was God the Son, from the New Testament — verily, verily I am he; that is, Veral I, Veral I, I am he. Now, if these letters, written to me, which I, from curiosity, have preserved, but upon which I have taken no step, and to which I have given no answer, are produced against me, I do not know what may become of me." L. C. J. EYRE: "If you can treat all the letters that have been found upon you with as much success as you have these letters of your correspondent, you will have no great reason for apprehension, even if that letter should be brought against you."

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1901, Packer v. U. S., 46 C. C. A. 35, 106 Fed. 906 (unanswered letter to the accused from a victim of his fraud, found in the former's possession, excluded); 1909, Sorenson v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 168 Fed. 785 (certain incriminating letters from defendant's wife, not admitted); 1916, Moy Wing Sun v. Prentis, 7th C. C. A., 234 Fed. 24 (letters addressed to defendant and found in the laundry where he and others worked, held not receivable without proof of his assent to their contents); 1917, Dean v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 246 Fed. 568 (altering a postal money-order; memorandum-book taken from defendant's possession, admitted, as containing admissions by him and as containing handwriting by him to be used for comparison); Cal. 1895, People v. Colburn, 105 Cal. 648, 649, 38 Pac. 1105 (letter found on defendant, not admitted); 1899, Casey v. Leggett, 125 Cal. 664, 58 Pac. 264 (letter by stranger advising one whose fraudulent intent was in question to make a deed; mere receipt and possession of letter no evidence of acquiescence); Ill. 1894, Razor v. Razor, 149 Ill. 621, 624, 36 N. E. 963 (letter by X found in a wife's trunk, appointing an assignation, not received as implying assent, because not shown to be answered or acted on); 1909, Snell v. Wilson, 239 Ill. 279, 87 N. E. 1022 (similar to Razor v. Razor; cited more fully ante, § 260); Ind. 1905, Knox v. State, 164 Ind. 226, 73 N. E. 255 (letter found on the accused when arrested, admitted); Mass. 1848, Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. 189, 215 (conspiracy to defraud; letters found in defendants' possession, held not admissible "unless adopted or sanctioned by the defendants by some reply or statement or by some act done in pursuance of their suggestions"); 1863, Com. v. Jeffries, 7 All. 548, 561 (press copies in defendant's possession, received as "affecting him with an implied admission of the statements contained in them"); Ia. 1916, State v. Glaze, 177 Ia. 457, 159 N. W. 260 (embezzlement by cashier; defendant's knowledge, etc., required to be shown for a book containing entries by different persons); N. Y. 1837, Starkweather v. Converse, 17 Wend. 20, 24 (application of payments; defendant's retention of a document held on the facts no evidence of acquiescence); 1845, People v. Green, 1 Park. 11, 17 (letter from deceased, found in defendant's pocket, excluded on the facts); Okla. 1921, Goben v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 201 Pac. 812 (murder; letter found in the bottom of a trunk marked by defendant's initials, the letter having no address nor surname signed, nor its date being shown; excluded); P. I. 1904, U. S. v. De Los Reyes, 3 P. I. 349 (treason; the possession of a revolutionary commission in defendant's trunk, held not sufficient); 1905, U. S. v. Nuñez, 4 P. I. 441 (brigandage; similar); 1906, U. S. v. Manalo, 6 P. I. 364 (similar); Wash. 1917, State v. Roberts, 95 Wash. 308, 163 Pac. 778 (robbery; letter from S., advising return to Seattle, and acted upon by the accused, admitted; another letter, held "probably inadmissible").

The following case is peculiar: 1912, State v. McFarland, 83 N. J. L. 474, 83 Atl. 993 (wife murder; the defendant's intention to rid himself of his wife being in issue, letters of his paramour addressed to him, referring to his expressed intention to get a divorce, and retained by him, were held inadmissible for the purpose, as not having been impliedly assented to; five judges dissenting; the dissent is clearly correct; the majority opinion overstrains the test of admissibility; mere possession should suffice, leaving the possessor to explain if he can; the learned judge's statement that the reference in the text above to the consideration that "the party may always exculpate himself", etc., is "an amazing suggestion in view of the disability of parties to testify at common law" might be answered by noting that that was precisely what Lord Chief Justice Eyre permitted Horne Tooke to do, supra, more than one hundred years ago; the eminent Chief Justice's remark made in that case contains the good sense of the whole subject).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 260 (possession as evidence of knowledge); the judges do not always distinguish the two principles in the application.

1814, De Berenger's Trial, Gurney's Rep. 223. Mr. Park, for the defendant: "Am I to be answerable for all manner of things sent to me by my friends?" L. C. J. ELLENBOROUGH: "I think a paper found under the lock and key of the party is 'prima facie' readable against him. It is subject to observations. If you [the prosecutor] do not go farther, the reading this as found in his possession is doing little."

(3) The failure to reply to a written communication may sometimes suffice to permit an inference of the party's assent to the correctness of the statements made therein (upon the general principle of § 1071, ante). But the inference is not ordinarily so strong; and judges have always pointed out that the failure to reply in writing to a written communication does not have the same significance as a failure to reply orally to an oral communication:

1828, Fairlie v. Denton, 3 C. & P. 103. Mr. F. Pollock (arguing to admit a letter demanding money); "I submit that it is evidence, exactly the same as what is said verbally in the presence of a defendant is evidence against him, though he may make no answer." L. C. J. TENTERDEN: "I am slow to admit that. What is said to a man before his face he is in some degree called on to contradict, if he does not acquiesce in it. But the not answering a letter is quite different; and it is too much to say that a man, by omitting to answer a letter, at all events admits the truth of the statements that letter contains. . . . You may have that single line read, in which the plaintiff makes a demand of a certain amount, but not any other part which states any supposed fact or facts."

1858, ALDIS, J., in Fenno v. Weston, 31 Vt. 345, 352: "The omission of a party to reply to statements in a letter about which he has knowledge, and which if not true he would naturally deny, when he replies to other parts of the letter, is evidence tending to show that the statements so made and not denied are true. So where there has been a correspondence between parties in regard to some subject-matter, and one of the parties writes a letter to the other making statements in regard to such subject-matter, of which the latter has knowledge, and which he would naturally deny if not true, and he wholly omits to answer such letter, such silence is admissible as evidence tending to show the statements to be true. Still all such evidence is of a lighter character than silence when the same facts are directly stated to the party. Men use the tongue much more readily than the pen. Almost all men will reply to and deny or correct a false statement verbally made to them. It is done on the spot and from the first impulse. But when a letter is received making the same statement, the feeling which readily prompts the verbal denial not unfrequently cools before the time and opportunity arrive for writing a letter. Other matters intervene. A want of facility in writing, or an aversion to correspondence, or habits of dilatoriness may be the real causes of the silence. As the omission to reply to letters may be explained by so many causes not applicable to silence when the parties are in personal conversation, we do not think the same weight should be attached to it as evidence."

So far as any definite rule is concerned, then, it seems impracticable; and the precedents indicate that each case must stand on its own facts.[3]

[3] ENGLAND: 1828, Fairlie v. Denton, 3 C. & P. 103 (money had and received; letter of demand by plaintiff to defendant, but unanswered, not read; see quotation supra); 1846, Draper v. Crofts, 15 M. & W. 166 (unanswered demand for rent of premises actually occupied by a co-tenant; Parke, B., after noting the difference of opinion: "My own opinion is that no attention at all need be paid to a letter asking for money which the party does not owe; it is a different case if he is bound by circumstances or by his situation to return an answer. I think, therefore, not that such evidence is absolutely inadmissible, but that it is worth very little when admitted"); 1850, Gaskill v. Skene, 14 Q. B. 664, 669 (money had and received; plaintiff's unanswered letters to defendant, admitted, so far as they were in general a demand of the claim, even though certain details of the claim are also mentioned; "to make an intelligible demand, some statement of the facts on which the demand arises must be made"); 1858, Keen v. Priest, 1 F. & F. 314 (distraint; unanswered letter from plaintiff's attorney to defendant, received on the facts; Bramwell, B.: "Silence may sometimes be conduct"); 1872, Richards v. Gellatly, L. R. 7 C. P. 127, 131 (false representations as to a ship's equipment; letters of complaint, unanswered, from the plaintiff's fellow-passengers to the defendant, excluded; Willes, J.: "That notion has been long exploded; . . . it may be otherwise where the relation between the parties is such that a reply might properly be expected"); 1891, Wiedemann v. Walpole, 2 Q. B. 534 (failure to answer a letter charging the defendant with having promised to marry, held no admission by the defendant of the promise; distinguishing the case as one of a charge of an offence which is usually ignored); 1920, Thomas v. Jones, [1920] 2 K. B. 399, [1921] 1 K. B. 22 (bastardy; unanswered letter not regarded as evidence on the facts).

CANADA: 1870, Gilbert v. Campbell, 1 Hann. N. Br. 474, 491 (an unanswered itemized demand, excluded on the fact).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1876, U. S. v. Babcock, 3 Dillon, 571, 576 (unanswered telegrams to the defendant, held admissible, if, semble, under all the circumstances of the case the jury find that they called for an answer); 1906, Rumble v. U. S., 143 Fed. 772, 780, C. C. A. (unanswered letter, admitted on the facts); 1913, Thrush v. Fullhart, 4th C. C. A., 210 Fed. 1 (breach of marriage promise; plaintiff's letters to defendant after breach and after controversy arisen, excluded; no authority cited); Cal. 1919, People v. Lapara, 181 Cal. 66, 183 Pac. 545; Colo. 1890, Patrick v. Crowe, 15 Colo. 543, 555, 25 Pac. 985 (document submitted to the opponent in the course of a compromise, and not signed, but not specifically repudiated by him, excluded); Col. (Dist.) 1877, Meguire v. Corwine, 10 D. C. 81, 89 (unanswered letters demanding counsel fees, admitted; but a charge leaving to the jury to infer an admission of the claim, held properly refused); Ga. Code 1910, § 5741 ("In the ordinary course of business, when good faith requires an answer, it is the duty of the party receiving a letter from the other to answer within a reasonable time. Otherwise he presumed to admit the acts mentioned in the letter of his correspondent, and to adopt them"); Ill. 1903, Chicago v. McKechney, 205 Ill. 372, 68 N. E. 954, 987 (letters and reports of the plaintiff and his agents, sent to and read by the defendant's officers, but not by them answered or otherwise noticed, held not admissible); Ia. 1912, Seevers v. Cleveland Coal Co., 158 Ia. 574, 138 N. W. 793 (contract; certain unanswered letters, excluded, in a too finical ruling); Md. 1901, Biggs v. Stueler, 93 Md. 100, 48 Atl. 727 (failure to answer a letter, not equivalent to acquiescence); Mass. 1852, Dutton v. Woodman, 9 Cush. 257, 262 (letter to defendant, inquiring as to his liability as partner, admitted on the facts); 1862, Fearing v. Kimball, 4 All. 125 (unanswered letter, not admitted on the facts); 1865, Con. v. Edgerly, 10 All. 184, 187 (counterfeit utterance; letter received by defendant at a post-office, containing counterfeit bills, but taken from him before he read or opened it, held inadmissible); 1886, Sturtevant v. Wallack, 141 Mass. 119, 122, 4 N. E. 615 (letter demanding payment, etc., received as evidence of assent to the defendant's authority to T. as agent to order); 1905, Parker v. Farmers' F. Ins. Co., 188 Mass. 257, 74 N. E. 286 (insurer's failure to answer a letter of the insured about the agent, held not an admission of its statement; the ruling seems wrong on its facts); 1919, Sargent v. Lord, 232 Mass. 585, 122 N. E. 761 (services as architect; plaintiff's letter to defendant, received but not answered, not receivable against defendant, on the facts); Mich. 1904, State Bank v. McCabe, 135 Mich. 479, 98 N. W. 20 (demand of money; failure to reply held not to admit the statement of claim; making an arbitrary distinction between written and oral statements); Minn. 1914, Sonnesyn v. Hawbaker, 127 Minn. 15, 148 N. W. 476 (letter of demand; failure to reply, admitted); Nebr. 1888, Kierstead v. Brown, 23 Nebr. 595, 613, 37 N. W. 471 (silence, upon the receiving of a written proposition for settlement, held not an admission); N. J. 1897, Hand v. Howell, 61 N. J. L. 142, 38 Atl. 748 (failure to answer a letter making a claim, not an admission of the claim); N. Y. 1837, Bronson, J., in Starkweather v. Converse, 17 Wend. 20, 24 ("No man by doing wrong can make it the duty of another to complain of the injury at the risk

In one situation, however, there has been a uniform rule, namely, that the failure to dispute an account rendered, after the lapse of a reasonable time, amounts to an admission of its correctness.[4]

But in an action on an account stated, i.e. a specific document of contract, the opponent's account-books are not receivable, because the only issue of being concluded by his silence"); 1872, Waring v. Tel. Co., 44 How. Pr. 69, 75 (undenied letter of claim to defendant, held not to amount to an admission on the facts); 1883, Talcott v. Harris, 93 N. Y. 567, 571 (failure of a party arrested on ex parte affidavits to answer them by motion to vacate the order, held not an admission); 1884, Learned v. Tillotson, 97 N. Y. 1, 8 (account, for partnership profits in stock proceeds; letter of plaintiff to defendant, making a demand, not admitted because of defendant's failure to reply); 1891, Bank of British N. America v. Delafield, 126 N. Y. 410, 418, 27 N. E. 797 (unanswered letter relating to a loan, excluded on the facts); 1894, Thomas v. Gage, 141 N. Y. 506, 509, 36 N. E. 385 (services in making a monument; unanswered letter to defendant, excluded on the facts); 1900, Gray v. Kaufman D. & I. C. Co., 162 N. Y. 388, 397, 56 N. E. 903 (preceding cases approved); 1905, Klein v. East River E. L. Co., 182 N. Y. 27, 74 N. E. 495 (receipt of a letter, of the defendant's attorney advising him that certain instruments were valid, held not an admission by the defendant); 1922, Israel v. Savoy Watch Co., Sup. App. T., 192 N. Y. Suppl. 333 (a reply with denial is of course no admission); N. D. 1915, Huston v. Johnson, 29 N. D. 546, 151 N. W. 774 (action for broker's commission; the plaintiff's letter received by defendant stating the facts of the sale, not admitted; over-strict ruling); Tex. 1912, Curtsinger v. McGown, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 149 S. W. 303 (statement of claim for services; failure to reply, held not an admission); 1916, Hollingsworth v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 182 S. W. 465 (incest; letter of the woman to the defendant, unanswered, held inadmissible; the opinions by Harper, J., and by Prendergast, P. J., diss., discuss the general problem elaborately); Utah: 1911, State v. Greene, 38 Utah 389, 115 Pac. 181 (a statement charging the defendant with being the father of a bastard by M., shown to and read by him, and only partly denied; the statement admitted); Vt. 1856, Hill v. Pratt, 29 Vt. 119, 26 ("It would seem that the rule has never been extended to unanswered letters, particularly when the fact stated has relation to past transactions and upon which no future action of the party is contemplated"; here, a letter to an attorney, reporting the service of a writ, was excluded); 1858, Fenno v. Weston, 31 Vt. 345, 351 (failure to contradict a particular assertion, in answering a letter, and failure to reply to subsequent letters, held admissible; see quotation supra).

Distinguish the principle of Completeness, under which the question arises whether the reply to a letter must be offered in connection with it (post, § 2104) or may be offered in rebuttal (post, § 2120).

[4] England: 1741, Willis v. Jernegan, 2 Atk. 251 (a stated account need not be signed, to be set up in bar; it is "the person, to whom it is sent, keeping it by him any length of time without making any objection, which shall bind him"); 1750, Tickel v. Short, 2 Ves. Sr. 239 (L. C. Hardwicke: "If one merchant sends an account current to another in a different country, on which a balance is made due to himself, the other keeps it by about two years without objection, the rule of this Court and of merchants is that it is considered as a stated account");

Canada: 1850, Gilbert v. Palmer, 1 All. N. Br. 667 (mere presentment of an account in person, the opponent not conceding its correctness; excluded).

United States: Fed. 1809, Corps v. Robinson, 2 Wash. C. C. 388, 390 (account rendered to defendant by B. and A., and "retained by them without objection" held admissible to prove B. and A.'s partnership); 1812, Freeland v. Heron, 7 Cr. 147, 151 (the facts were held to afford "room for the application of a rule of the Chancery Court and of merchants to decide the controversy; it is this: When one merchant sends an account current to another residing in another country, between whom there are mutual dealings, and he keeps it two years without making any objections, it shall be deemed a stated account, and his silence and acquiescence shall bind him, at least so far as to cast the 'onus probandi' on him"); 1885, Leather Mfrs. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 6 Sup. 657; 1921, First Nat'l Bank v. Farrell, 3d C. C. A., 272 Fed. 371 (action for balance due a depositor; the defendant bank had paid out sums on a power of attorney but in excess of the limit set; depositor's failure to notify bank of pass-book errors, held "an admission that the entries as shown are correct"); Ala. 1852, McCulloch v. Judd, 20 Ala. 703, 705; 1882, Burns v. Campbell, 71 id. 271, 286 (objection to one item only is "an implied admission of the correctness of the rest"); 1895, Peck v. Ryan, 110 id. 336, 17 So. 733; Cal. 1859, Terry v. Sickles, 13 Cal. 427, 429 (failure to object in a reasonable time amounts to an admission); Fla. 1904, Daytona Bridge Co. v. Bond, 47 Fla. 136, 36 So. 445 (the objection to the account need not have been made immediately, but within a reasonable time); Haw. Rev. L. 1915, § 2341 (account rendered, undisis the agreement as to the account;[5] though in ordinary actions for the price of goods or services, the opponent's account-book entries are of course receivable as admissions against himself.[6] Distinguish (a) the question of substantive law, what constitutes irrevocably an account stated, so as to create a new cause of action thereon;[7] (b) the question when an account stated may be set aside by a bill in equity with leave to surcharge and falsify.[8] The use of account-books of parties and of third persons under exceptions to the Hearsay rule is dealt with post, §§ 1517–1561.

(4) The party's use of a document made by a third person will frequently amount to an approval of its statements as correct, and thus it may be received against him as an admission by adoption. A common instance of this application of the principle is the insured's or beneficiary's presentation of the "proofs of loss" to the insurer.[9] puted for six months, to be 'prima facie' evidence); Mich. 1895, Pabst Brewing Co. v. Lueders, 107 Mich. 41, 64 N. W. 872; 1898, Raub v. Nisbett, 118 Mich. 248, 76 N. W. 393 (failure to object in 30 days, not an admission as matter of law); N. Y. 1818, Murray v. Toland, 3 John. Ch. 569, 575; 1916, Bradley v. McDonald, — N. Y. —, 119 N. E. 340, 350 (action for engineering work; the plaintiff's daily and monthly accounts of work done, sent to the defendant, and "retained by them without criticism or objection", held receivable as admissions of the defendant); N. C. 1908, Davis v. Stephenson, 149 N. C. 113, 62 S. E. 900 (exception to the rule, here applied); S. C. 1821, McBride v. Watts, 1 McCord 384.

So also the principle applies where a duplicate original of a delivery entry is handed to the buyer at the time of a delivery: 1911, Federal U. Surety Co. v. Indiana L. & M. Co., 176 Ind. 328, 95 N. E. 1104.

[5] 1894, Sterling L. Co. v. Stinson, 41 Nebr. 368, 369, 59 N. W. 888.

[6] 1894, German N. Bank v. Leonard, 40 Nebr. 676, 683, 59 N. W. 107.

[7] 1844, Langdon v. Roane, 6 Ala. 518, 527; 1901, Louisville Banking Co. v. Asher, 112 Ky. 138, 65 S. W. 133; 1906, Little & H. I. Co. v. Pigg, — Ky. —, 96 S. W. 455; 1917, Isaacs v. Wishnick, 136 Minn. 317, 162 N. W. 297; 1920, Dodson v. Watson, 110 Tex. 355, 220 S. W. 771 (conclusiveness of an account stated); 1909, Ripley v. Sage L. & I. Co., 138 Wis. 304, 119 N. W. 108.

[8] Langdon v. Roane, Ala., supra.

[9] This much is generally assumed as unquestioned; the only matter of argument being the conclusiveness of such proofs by way of estoppel; in the following cases the "proofs" were received, except as otherwise noted: Fed. 1874, Insurance Co. v. Newton, 22 Wall. 32, 36 (coroner's verdict, admitted); 1877, Insurance Co. v. Higginbotham, 95 U. S. 380, 390 (foregoing case approved); 1889, Richelieu & O. N. Co. v. Boston M. Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, 435, 10 Sup. 934; 1900, Sharland v. Ins. Co., 41 C. C. A. 307, 101 Fed. 206 (coroner's verdict); 1917, Continental Life Ins. Co. v. Searing, 3d C. C. A., 240 Fed. 653 (here the special rule is laid down that "proofs of death" are not admissible at all as evidence for the jury, but go only to the judge upon the question whether a condition precedent to the right of action has been fulfilled); Ala. 1918, Union Mutual Aid Ass'n v. Carroway, 210 Ala. 414, 78 So. 792; Cal. 1884, Walther v. Ins. Co., 65 Cal. 417, 4 Pac. 413 (coroner's verdict); Ill. 1887, U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Kielgast, 26 Ill. App. 567, 572 (coroner's verdict; "the delivery of the paper imported no admission that the verdict was true"); 1889, U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Vocke, 129 Ill. 557, 562, 22 N. E. 467 (point reserved); 1903, Supreme Tent v. Stensland, 206 Ill. 124, 68 N. E. 1098; 1904, Knights Templar & M. L. I. Co. v. Crayton, 209 Ill. 550, 70 N. E. 1066 (not conclusive); Ind. 1905, Haughton v. Ætna L. Ins. Co., 165 Ind. 32, 73 N. E. 592; Ia. 1906, Jackman v. Brotherhood, 132 Ia. 64, 106 N. W. 350 (Supreme Tent v. Stensland, 206 Ill. 124, approved); 1917, Michalek v. Modern Brotherhood, 179 Ia. 33, 161 N. W. 125; Ky. 1904, American Benevolent Ass'n v. Stough, — Ky. —, 83 S. W. 126 (proofs of loss not receivable against the beneficiary, except as containing his own statements); 1908, Supreme Lodge K. of P. v. Bradley, — Ky. —, 109 S. W. 1178 (doctor's certificate); Mich. 1871, New York Central Ins. Co. v. Watson, 23 Mich. 486 (admission that other insurance existed); 1898, John Hancock M. L. Ins. Co. v. Dick, 117 Mich. 518, 76 N. W. 9 (physician's certificate); 1901, Wasey v. Ins. Co., 126 Mich. 119, 85 N. W. 459 (physician's affidavit; but a majority of the Court excluded such portions as were based on mere hearsay); 1906, Krapp v. Metrop. L. Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 369, 106 N. W. 1107 (proofs of death in general); 1915, Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers, 188 Mich. 466, 474, 154 N. W. 575 (coroner's verdict forwarded by beneficiary, held not an admission, purporting to follow Wasey v. Ins. Co., supra); Nebr. 1901, Modern Woodmen v. Kozak, 63 Nebr. 146, 88 N. W.

§ 1074. Same: Books of a Corporation or Partnership. Respecting the use of corporation-book entries as evidence of the facts recorded, some doubt and confusion has arisen, chiefly through a failure to keep in mind the history of the rule for parties' account-books. This aspect of the subject may best be disposed of at the outset.

(1) By a peculiar course of development (examined post, § 1518) a party's account-book, once receivable by custom, became inadmissible on his own behalf in England as early as the 1700s, through a combination of statute and judicial legislation. In the Colonies, this absolute prohibition never came to prevail; but the surviving use was limited in various ways; in particular, the transactions recorded must be of goods or services, and not of cash payments nor of special contracts, and the entrant must be the party himself. These limitations were later removed by statute in many jurisdictions; but in England, substantially till the end of the 1800s, the prohibition remained.

The account-books of a corporation-party, then, were in England not admissible, any more than the account-books of a natural person.[1] In the United States, they would have been admissible so far as any other party's account-books would have been; but obviously the above restrictions in fact excluded them, even when they related to entries of goods or services, because they were kept by a clerk. Nevertheless, they might have been and doubtless were used by calling the clerk to use them as memoranda of recollection, precisely as could be done by the clerk of any other party (ante, §§ 734 ff.). Moreover, after the statutory removal of some of the above restrictions — in particular, the restriction as to the nature of the transaction re-

248; N. Y. 1886, Goldschmidt v. Ins. Co., 102 N. Y. 486, 492 (coroner's verdict, expressly denied in the proofs to be true, excluded); 1896, Hanna v. Connecticut M. L. Ins. Co., 150 N. Y. 526, 44 N. E. 1099; 1917, Klein v. Prudential Ins. Co., 221 N. Y. 449, 117 N. E. 942; N. D. 1903, Stevens v. Continental C. Co., 12 N. D. 463, 97 N. W. 862 (excluded as against an infant); 1920, Fekjar v. Iowa S. L. S. Ins. Co., 44 N. D. 389, 177 N. W. 455; Ohio: 1883, Insurance Co. v. Schmidt, 40 Oh. St. 112 (physician's answers, based on hearsay excluded); Or. 1903, Cox v. Royal Tribe, 42 Or. 365, 71 Pac. 73 (held receivable as admissions; but here rejected because furnished by the insurer's agent); Pa. 1906, Felix v. Fidelity M. L. Ins. Co., 216 Pa. 95, 64 Atl. 903 (suicide; physician's statement, etc., in proofs of death admitted); 1922, Maculuso v. Humboldt Fire Ins. Co., 271 Pa. 489, 115 Atl. 828; Tex. 1921, Thornel v. Missouri State L. Ins. Co., Tex. — Civ. App. —, 229 S. W. 653 (proofs of death, inconsistent with claim, admitted); Wash. 1916, Armstrong v. Modern Woodmen, 93 Wash. 352, 160 Pac. 946; Wis. 1903, Voelkel v. Supreme Tent, 116 Wis. 202, 92 N. W. 1104 (coroner's certificate); 1904, Fey v. I. O. O. F. Ins. Soc'y, 120 Wis. 358, 98 N. W. 206; 1913, Krogh v. Modern Woodmen, 153 Wis. 397, 141 N. W. 276.

The question ought to be, in each case, whether the beneficiary has in fact adopted the statements as his own; there can be no general rule for all cases. The decisions are collected and examined in an article by Professor A. M. Kales, in 6 Columbia Law Review, 509 (1906), "Declarations of the Insured against the Beneficiary."

Distinguish the questions whether the admissions of the deceased insured may be used against the beneficiary (post, § 1081); whether the testimony before the coroner is admissible (post, § 1374); and whether there is a privilege for the physician's certificate of death (post, §§ 2385 a).

Distinguish also the question whether the insured or beneficiary may, on his own behalf, under the Hearsay rule offer affidavits contained in these "proofs" (post, § 1384), or whether the coroner's verdict may be offered by either party as an official report (post, § 1671), or may offer the "proofs" as part of the 'res gestæ' (post, § 1770).

§ 1074. [1] 1819, Marriage v. Lawrence, quoted infra.

corded — there was no reason why corporation account-books could not be used, on verification by the recorder, like any other books. They were and are neither more nor less admissible than any other party's books, either under the Parties'-Books branch of the Hearsay exception for Regular Entries (post, §§ 1537 ff.), or under the branch which admits Regular Entries by Deceased Persons (post, §§ 1521 ff.), or as verified memoranda of recollection (ante, §§ 734 ff.). There is no mystery about them, and no eccentricity.

But doubt was introduced by ignoring this point of view and fixing the attention on another principle, the test of which they could not satisfy:

(2) This principle was that of Official Statements, or Public Records, by virtue of which, as an exception to the Hearsay rule, official registers, by persons having a duty and authority, were receivable to evidence the facts stated. This principle sufficed to admit certain public registers, including the books of certain public corporations (post, § 1661); but it obviously could not cover the records of a private corporation or of a public corporation doing private acts.[2] Conceding this, the English Court found of course no other title for admitting corporate books as parties' entries, for the reason above explained. But, for the same reason, our own Courts, if they had kept in mind our peculiar tradition and statutes as to parties' books, might have correctly estimated the negative conclusion of the English Court, and might have laid hold of such other principle as plainly would have sufficed for the purpose in hand. This they did not do; they seem constantly to have ignored the likeness between the account-books of natural parties and of corporate parties.[3] The consequence is that (apart from unrecorded practice) they seem seldom to have supposed that there was any way of using corporate books otherwise than on the further principles now to be noticed; and the few Courts that have permitted their use have not done so with any firm and clear recognition of the sound reason for that result.

(3) No one doubted that the records of a meeting were receivable in proving the doings of the meeting. On the theory of the Parol Evidence rule (post, § 2451) those records were the doings; i.e. as with judicial and legislative records, the votes of the meeting are supposed not to be 'in pais,' or oral, but in writing; hence, in proving the acts of the meeting, as such, the acts are to be sought in the written records. Thus, the record is not somebody's hearsay testimony to the act; it is the act itself.[4] This rule, how-

[2] 1789, London v. Lynn, 1 H. Bl. 205, 215 (corporate tolls; same ruling as in the next case); 1819, Marriage v. Lawrence, 3 B. & Ald. 142 (right of a borough corporation to tolls; to show acts of prescriptive claim, the ancient corporate records of fines imposed and paid were not admitted; because though the books were public records, still "if the entry apply to private transactions alone, it will still fall within the rule applicable to private books" as a mere "minute made by a party in his own memorandum-book").

[3] E.g., in Chase v. R. Co., 38 Ill. 215 (1865); Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Deepwater R. Co., 57 W. Va. 641, 50 S. E. 890 (1905).

Contra, in a good opinion: 1891, Terry v. Birmingham N. Bank, 93 Ala. 608, 9 So. 299 (stock-exchange corporation books); also (1922) Newton v. Gas Co., 258 M. S. 165, 176 (cost of gas), Trainor v. Ass'n, Ill., and Ganther v. Jenks, Mich., cited infra.

[4] 1820, Owings v. Speed, 5 Wheat. 420, 422 (land vested in trustees; the "book of the board of trustees", in which their proceedings ever, though not disputed, sufficed only to admit what was actually done as a part of the corporate meeting; it still did not serve any purpose of proving matters that occurred apart from the meeting, such as the sale of goods, the erection of a building, the receipt of money, the subscription to shares, and the like.

Was there any other principle upon which the books could be used as evidence for these purposes? It is just here that the present principle of Admissions comes to be invoked:

(4) May not the account-books be used against a member of the corporation as statements assented to by him, by virtue of his presumed access to them? The books of a partnership are receivable against a partner, either on this principle or on the principle of agency.[5] May not corporation account-books be receivable in the same way, assuming that the opponent is shown to be a member, and that the object is to charge him with an admission of the correctness of the account? This question has generally been answered in the negative:[6] were recorded, was admitted, because, per Marshall, C. J., "the books of such a body are the best evidence of their acts, and ought to be admitted whenever those acts are to be proved"); 1902, Sigua Iron Co. v. Brown, 171 N. Y. 488, 64 N. E. 194.

In Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Deepwater R. Co., 57 W. Va. 641, 50 S. E. 890 (1905), there is a full collection of rulings; but the opinion of the majority does not appreciate the inherent distinctions of the subject; Brannon, P., diss. on this point, expounds the correct view, illustrating the discrimination above taken.

Compare §§ 1661, 2451, post.

[5] 1899, Chick v. Robinson, 37 C. C. A. 205, 95 Fed. 619 (special partner legally entitled to access to books; entries admitted); 1903, Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Turner, 98 Md. 22, 55 Atl. 1023; 1908, Schlicher v. White, 74 N. J. L. 839, 71 Atl. 337 (suit for accounting); 1844, Allen v. Coit, 6 Hill N. Y. 318 (entries in the firm's books; "the knowledge of their agent was in this respect their own knowledge"); 1892, Kohler v. Lindenmeyr, 129 N. Y. 498, 501, 29 N. E. 957 (here excluding books of a prior partnership); 1824, Thommon v. Kalbach, 12 S. & R. Pa. 238; 1908, Garrido v. Asencio, 10 P. I. 691.

[6] ENGLAND: The cases on both sides are as follows: 1816, Alderson v. Clay, 1 Stark. 405 (a member of a company who had attended three meetings, held to be affected by all the recorded doings of the company kept in a book open to all members); 1833, Hill v. Manchester & S. W. Co., 2 Nev. & M. 573 (see quotation supra);

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1899, Hayden v. Williams, 37 C. C. A. 479, 96 Fed. 279 (usable only as admissions by the corporation against a member or between members; but, even here, not "as to his own dealings" with a corporation); Ala. 1898, Booth v. Fire-Engine Co., 118 Ala. 369, 24 So. 405 (books admitted, the member being present at the meeting); 1921, McMillan v. Aiken, 205 Ala. 35, 88 So. 135 (title to land through a corporation; minutes of meeting, admissible against a stockholder); Cal. 1877, Neilson v. Crawford, 52 Cal. 248 (not received against a stockholder to show the company's indebtedness to the plaintiff; Hill v. Manchester & S. W. Co. followed); 1896, McGowan v. McDonald, 111 Cal. 57, 69, 43 Pac. 418 (received in a case like the preceding; "the first fact to be established is the indebtedness of the corporation, and when that is established, the liability of the stockholder results as a necessary sequence"; attempting to distinguish Neilson v. Crawford); 1898, San Pedro L. Co. v. Reynolds, 121 Cal. 74, 53 Pac. 410 (admitted as against an agent having charge of the books); Colo. 1911, Brown v. First Nat'l Bank, 49 Colo. 393, 113 Pac. 483 (embezzlement; bank's books admitted); Conn. 1904, Norman P. S. Co. v. Ford, 77 Conn. 461, 59 Atl. 499 (a corporation record-book, containing a certificate by a majority of the directors reciting a receipt of assets, excluded, as not a regular entry in a book of account); Ga. 1905, Lowry Nat'l Bank v. Fickett, 122 Ga. 489, 50 S. E. 396 (not clear); Ill. 1897, Anderson v. Life Ass'n, 171 Ill. 40, 49 N. E. 205 (directors' resolution of assessment, held 'prima facie' evidence against members); 1903, Trainor v. German A. S. L. & B. Ass'n, 204 Ill. 616, 68 N. E. 650 (books of account not admissible 'per se' against a stockholder; but admissible if fulfilling the requisites of books of account in general); Kan. 1917, Davis v. Sim, 100 Kan. 66, 163 Pac. 622 (allotment of land; corporate minutes, admitted); Mich. 1889, Ganther v. Jenks, 76 Mich. 510, 514 (entries of payment in the defendant company's books, admitted; "such

1833, Hill v. Manchester & S. W. Co., 2 Nev. & M. 573, 579, 580, 582. PARKE, J.; "In the case put of a partnership, the books are evidence against the individual partner dealing with the partnership, because he has access to the books and may alter them, and his not doing so is evidence of acquiescence." Campbell, Solicitor-General: "In the case of a partnership, the books are evidence against a partner, not on the ground of access, but because they are kept by a clerk, who is his agent, or by a partner, who is also his agent"; PARKE, J.: "That is the true ground upon which they are evidence." DENMAN, L. C. J.: ". . . We are, however, of opinion that the principle on which partnership books are evidence against the partners is that they are the acts and declarations of such partners, being kept by themselves or, by their authority, by their servants and under their direction and superintendence. But the clerk of the company, once appointed, is subject to the control of no individual member; and the free access provided for [by the charter] is only for the purpose of inspection."

1891, EARL, J., in Rudd v. Robinson, 126 N. Y. 113, 117, 26 N. E. 1046: "There was no proof that the defendant had actual knowledge of the entries contained in the books which were used as evidence against him, or that he authorized such entries or caused them to be made. There was no proof from which the law would raise a legal presumption that he had knowledge of the entries, unless he is chargeable with such knowledge from the mere fact that he was a stockholder and trustee of the corporation. . . . The books of corporations for many purposes are evidence, not only as between the corporation and its members, and between members, but also as between the corporation or its members and strangers. They are received in evidence generally to prove corporate acts of a corporation such as its incorporation, its list of stockholders, its by-laws, the formal proceedings of its board of directors and its financial condition when its solvency comes in question. But . . . can perceive no principle upon which the account-books of a corporation can be evidence against a member of the corporation, of the accounts and entries therein made in a suit brought by the corporation or its representatives against him to enforce his liability upon such account. The officers and book-keepers of a corporation are in no sense his agents. Individually he has no control over their acts, and has no responsibility thereof; and in making the entries they do not, in any legal sense, represent or bind him. As to the competency of such books, directors and stockholders of a corporation stand upon the same footing. It is quite true that a director stands in a more favorable position to know what is going on within the books, when properly kept by the proper officers or agents of the company, are competent testimony" as regular entries); Mo. 1912, Howard v. Strode, 242 Mo. 210, 146 S. W. 792 (whether L. J. H., deceased, was in Decatur or St. Louis on Jan. 15, 1883; minutes of a stockholders' meeting in St. Louis, reciting the presence of L. J. H., signed by him as secretary, and dated Jan. 16, 1883, also an order-book with an entry by the same person on Jan. 15, 1883, admitted, as a regular entry in the course of business); N. H. 1858, Haynes v. Brown, 36 N. H. 545, 563, 566 (the corporation-books are evidence, "in the nature of public records, as to everybody, of the corporate proceedings", including the fact of a defendant being stockholder; but not of other matters of fact, including the state of accounts between a stockholder and the corporation; following Hill v. Manchester & S. W. Co.); N. Y. 1891, Rudd v. Robinson, 126 N. Y. 113, 26 N. E. 1046 (action by a receiver to charge a director with unlawful appropriation of corporate funds; corporate account-books held not admissible to charge a director or stockholder; see quotation supra); Pa. 1919, Fell v. Pitts, 263 Pa. 314, 106 Atl. 574 (corporate books admitted against directors); Tenn. 1902, Continental Bank v. First Nat'l Bank, 108 Tenn. 374, 68 S. W. 497 (corporate account-books held admissible, like other account-books, "either for or against a corporation, and against a stranger or as between two strangers"); Vt. 1920, Smith v. Reynolds, 94 Vt. 28, 108 Atl. 697 (statement of account, in possession of defendant when treasurer of the corporation, admitted on the facts); Wis. 1914, Rogers v. Rosenfeld, 158 Wis. 285, 149 N. W. 33 (deceit in the sale of mining stock; the corporation account-books admitted to show the conditions of the business, on the theory that both parties were stockholders).

Against an active officer the books are of course admissible, on the principle of § 1073, par. (2), ante: 1908, State v. Hoffman, 120 La. 949, 45 So. 951 (knowing receipt of deposits, while insolvent, by a bank cashier; bank-book entries admissible against defendant, though actual knowledge must also be believed by the jury before finding guilt).

corporation and to be more familiar with its books in some cases than a stockholder. He has the right to inspect the books of the corporation, and so has a stockholder. A stockholder having the ability is just as able to become familiar with the contents of the books of a corporation to which he belongs as a director; and there is no principle of law by which a director can be charged with knowledge of the entries in the books of a corporation which is not equally applicable to its stockholders. . . . It would be quite a dangerous and, we think, startling proposition to hold that a clerk or other officer in a business corporation could enter charges in its books of account against a director or stockholder which could be proved in favor of the corporation by the mere production of the books, thus throwing upon him, or his personal representatives after his death, the burden of explaining the entries or showing them to be untrue, and we believe the doctrine has no support in principle or authority. A corporation seeking to enforce a claim against one of its directors or stockholders must establish it by the application of the same rules of evidence which are applied in an action brought by an individual to enforce a claim against any defendant."

Hence, the account-books have generally been excluded, in actions against stockholders, unless actual access to the books was shown, or unless the indebtedness in issue was that of the corporation to the plaintiff (in which case the corporate entries, as its admissions, evidenced the debt, and would not be offered as the stockholder's own admissions). Yet it would seem, upon the principle already examined (in par. (1) supra), that the account-books should be received against any person and without any other restrictions than ordinarily are applied in the use of such books of natural persons.

The inadequacy of the result reached by the Courts is indicated by the statutes which in many jurisdictions have expressly declared corporate account-books admissible on certain conditions.[7]

(5) A similar question, lacking one circumstance, is presented when, in an action charging the defendant as stockholder, it is desired to use the corporate stock-book to prove him to be a stockholder. Here there is no room for arguing upon the principle of Admissions, because the assent to be presumed from the right of access presupposes the party to have that right as a stockholder, which is here the very fact in issue. Much more, then, should this use of the books be denied by the Courts which see no other point of view than the principle of Admissions. On the other hand, a Court which permits this use must implicitly assume that the principles of Regular En-

[7] The following list is partial only:

ENGLAND, St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 69, § 220 (Companies Act; "where any company is being wound up, all books and papers of the company and of the liquidators shall, as between the contributories of the company, be 'prima facie' evidence of the truth of all matters purporting to be therein recorded");

UNITED STATES: Fla. Rev. Gen. St. 1919, § 5171 (in prosecution for false entry of transfer, fraudulent issue, etc., of corporate stock, books of "any corporation to which such person has access or the right of access" are admissible); Ind. Burns Ann. St. 1914, § 4365 (corporations for boards of trade, etc.; records admissible); ib. §§ 5771, 5794; Mass. Rev. L. 1920, c. 266, § 68 (corporation-books to be evidence in certain charges against one having access or the right of access to them); N. Y. Cons. L. 1909, Stock Corporation, § 32 ("books of account of every bank" to be presumptive evidence as against the corporation, officers, etc. or stockholders); C. P. A. 1920, § 373 (books of a foreign corporation, admissible "to prove an act or transaction" of the corporation); N. Car. Con. St. 1919, § 4948 (record of proceedings of agricultural society receiving money from State, may be "read in evidence in suits wherein the corporation may be a party"); Tex. Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3713 (records of any domestic corporation, admissible).

tries (noted above) apply to corporate-books, for there is no other available principle. In other words, the entry is, in effect, that A. B. by himself or his agent orally agreed to take shares of stock, or (where the subscription is in writing) that the purporting signature of A. B. is genuine. The judicial rulings are at variance;[8] but it is a little singular that there should appear

[8] ENGLAND: 1850, Bain v. R. Co., 3 H. L. C. 1, 21 (Lord Brougham said that at common law a corporation's share-book was not admissible to prove A. B. a shareholder; here applying a statute expressly making such books admissible).

CANADA: 1881, Stadacona Ins. Co. v. Rainsford, 21 N. Br. 309 (a charter made a certificate of the corporation evidence of a shareholder's indebtedness; held, that other evidence of the defendant being a shareholder must be given).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1824, Rockville, & W. Turnpike Co. v. Van Ness, Cr. C. C. 449 (action by the corporation for a balance due on a subscription; the original subscription book being offered, without evidence of the signature's genuineness, the Court, "'nem. con.', was of opinion that the commissioners' book of subscriptions is 'prima facie' evidence that the subscriptions were genuine or made by persons duly authorized"); 1877, Turnbull v. Payson, 95 U. S. 418 (assignee's action for stockholder's assessed liability to the company; stock-book held admissible to show "that he is the owner of the stock"); 1892, Liggett v. Glenn, 2 C. C. A. 286, 51 Fed. 381 (trustee's suit to recover unpaid assessment of stockholder; stock-ledger and transfer-book held admissible to prove the defendant a stockholder, and sufficient therefor with evidence of identity; following Turnbull v. Payson); 1892, Taussig v. Glenn, 2 C. C. A. 314, 51 Fed. 409 (same principle applied); 1897, Carey v. Williams, 25 C. C. A. 227, 79 Fed. 906, 909 (action for an unpaid assessment; entries in the stock-books held inadmissible to prove the defendant a stockholder; the contract of membership must be shown by some act of assent; Turnbull v. Payson and Liggett v. Glenn treated as containing obiter statements only); 1898, Sigua Iron Co. v. Greene, 31 C. C. A. 477, 88 Fed. 207 (like the preceding case); 1905, Harrison v. Remington P. Co., 140 Fed. 385, 402, C. C. A. (Carey v. Williams, supra, followed; but here the defendant's admissions were received, in the shape of certificates signed on the stubs and corresponding assignments written in the certificate book); 1913, Oregon & Cal. R. Co. v. Grubissich, 9th C. C. A., 206 Fed. 577 (corporate records — here of the plaintiff — not admitted to show the contents of a deed purporting to have been made to the corporation 40 years before and copied in the minutes; Ross, J., diss.); 1906, State ex rel. Biddle v. Superior Court, 44 Wash. 108, 87 Pac. 40 (following Turnbull v. Payson, U. S.); Cal. 1867, Mudgett v. Horrell, 33 Cal. 25 (creditor's suit to charge a stockholder; stock-books held not admissible to prove defendant a stockholder; per Currey, C. J., and Shafter, J.); Col. (Dist.): 1899, National Expr. & T. Co. v. Morris, 15 D. C. App. 262, 274 (stock-book "entries are not 'per se' evidence sufficient to establish the fact of membership"; there must be some conduct of assent by the person charged); Conn. 1900, Fish v. Smith, 73 Conn. 377, 47 Atl. 711 (excluded; yet admissible to prove time of membership commencing, if membership is otherwise evidence); Me. 1840, Coffin v. Collins, 17 Me. 440 (execution against a stockholder for the company's debts; semble, the corporate records were admissible); Md. 1872, Hager v. Cleveland, 36 Md. 476, 494 (corporation-books not admissible, "except perhaps in actions between the members"); Minn. 1921, Lebens v. Nelson, 148 Minn. 240, 181 N. W. 350 (stockholders' liability; the corporation records admissible to show defendants to be stockholders, under G. S. 1913, §§ 6177, 6183, 6194, 6203); N. H. 1858, Haynes v. Brown, 36 N. H. 545, 563 (admissible; see citation supra); N. J. 1904, French v. Millville Mfg. Co., 70 N. J. L. 960, 59 Atl. 214 (question not decided; here the books were used to refresh the secretary's memory); N. Y. 1813, Highland Turnpike Co. v. McKean, 10 John. 154 (books held admissible to show defendant a stockholder, if duly authenticated); Va. 1826, Grays v. Turnpike Co., 4 Rand. 578, 580, 582 (corporation-books used to prove its organization; defendant's subscription proved by his signature to the subscription-book); 1879, Stewart v. Valley R. Co., 32 Gratt. 146, 156 (stock-ledger and shareholders' list, admitted in an action by the company for the amount due from shareholders, to show the company's reliance on a subscription-paper signed by the defendant); 1888, Lewis v. Glenn, 84 Va. 947, 984, 6 S. E. 866 (preceding case approved); 1888, Vanderwerken v. Glenn, 85 Va. 9, 14, 6 S. E. 806 (action by a trustee of the company for the amount due from a shareholder; "that the stock-books of such a company are 'prima facie' evidence of who are its stockholders is well settled"); W. Va. 1882, Pittsburgh W. & K. R. Co. v. Applegate, 21 W. Va. 172, 180 (action for residue of shareholder's subscription; ledger and stockholders' list admitted to prove the defendant a stockholder, under express statute, Code 1860, c. 57, § 25); 1897, South B. R. Co. v. Long, 43 W. Va. 131, 27 S. E. 297 (similar).

more inclination to sanction the use of corporate-books to prove a defendant a stockholder than to sanction their use in an accounting against one who is otherwise proved a stockholder. Here, too, statutes have frequently intervened to make the stock-books admissible.[9]

§ 1075. Same: Depositions in another Trial, Used or Referred to. If a party expressly states that a certain piece of testimony by another person is correct, there can be no question that it becomes his statement by adoption, and is receivable as his admission.[1] But does he by implication approve and adopt as his all the depositions, testimonies, and affidavits that are offered on his behalf in a litigation, so that in a subsequent litigation these may be used against him as his admissions?

It is true that the rule against impeaching one's own witness was once explained upon the theory that a party guarantees the credibility of his witness, and (by inference) the correctness of the witness' statements (ante, § 898). But that impossible theory has long been exploded (ante, § 899), and cannot serve here. The question is purely one of implication from the facts.[2] [9] ENGLAND: Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, § 28; Companies Act, 1862, §§ 25, 27; St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 69, § 33 (Companies Act; "the register of members shall be 'prima facie' evidence of any matters by this Act directed or authorized to be inserted therein"); CANADA: Dom. Rev. St. 1906, c. 79, § 107 (books admissible in actions against the company or a shareholder); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 128, § 47 (certificate under corporate seal shall be evidence of shareholder's title); Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 178, § 123 (corporation stock-books to be evidence, in actions against the company or a shareholder); UNITED STATES: Colo. Comp. L. 1921, § 2268 (stock-book to be evidence against a stockholder); Ind. Burns Ann. St. 1941, § 4054 (corporate stock-book, admissible against a stockholder); Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 51, § 22 (corporation stock-book, admissible to prove who are stockholders and amount held); Mass. Rev. L. 1920, c. 255, § 22 (stock and transfer books shall be "competent evidence"); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 8014 (banking); § 8065 (trust, security, and deposit); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 9773 (records of private domestic incorporation, admissible in any suit to which the corporation is a party); N. Y. Cons. L. 1909, Stock Corporation § 32 (stock-book of a corporation, admissible in suits against the corporation, officers, directors, or stockholders); Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, § 5569 (actions between corporation and stockholders; subscription-books, admissible by certified copy); Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 3325 (bank stock-book to be presumptive evidence); Wis. Stats. 1919, § 2024–16 (bank stock-book to be evidence of "the facts therein stated").

For the authentication of corporate books, see post, §§ 2159, 2169; for proof of their contents by certified copies, see post, §§ 1223, 1683.

§ 1075. [1] 1835, R. v. John, 7 C. & P. 324 (deposition of T., which had been admitted to be correct by the defendant in his examination, received); 1863, State v. Gilbert, 36 Vt. 145, 147 (an admission that the testimony of a witness on a former occasion was true makes the testimony receivable); and cases ante, § 1070.

[2] The rulings are as follows: ENGLAND: 1806, Johnson v. Ward, 6 Esp. 47 (to prove one D. an agent of defendant, an affidavit of D. on a motion to postpone trial was admitted, as used by defendant and known and adopted by him); 1837, Brickell v. Hulse, 7 A. & E. 454 (trover for goods seized on execution; plaintiff allowed to use affidavit of W., put in by defendant on motion in chambers, to show seizure by W. on defendant's behalf; see quotation supra); 1839, Gardner v. Moult, 10 A. & E. 464 (assumpsit by assignees in bankruptcy against a creditor; plaintiff allowed, in proving act of bankruptcy, to use a deposition made by agent of defendant, expressly at defendant's instance, to open bankruptcy proceedings; the deposition being "a particular statement which their agent was sent to make"); 1834, Chambers v. Bernasconi, 1 C. M. & R. 341, 352, 360, 367 (action by alleged bankrupt against assignees; depositions used by petitioning creditors in the opening proceedings, not admitted; the assignees' enrolment of them pursuant to law not being an adoption and affirmation of them); 1840, Cole v. Hadley, 11 A. & E. 807 (trespass q. c. f.; issue whether plaintiff was tenant of the soil; at a former trial of a criminal proceeding against defendant on the now plaintiff's information for a trespass, plaintiff had alleged himself to be tenant, and defendant had put in the deposition of one D., the landlord, denying

In the endeavor to define that implication, a distinction was at one time advanced that the use of an affidavit implied an admission of the correctness of its specific contents, while the use of a witness' deposition or oral testimony did not:

1837, DENMAN, L. C. J., in Brickell v. Hulse, 7 A. & E. 454, 456: "There can, I think, be no question but that a statement which a party produces on his own behalf, whether on oath or not, becomes evidence against him. There is nothing to distinguish it from a statement made by the party himself. . . . [In equity proceedings a different rule may obtain]; plaintiff's tenancy; deposition admitted); 1845, White v. Dowling, 8 Ir. L. R. 128 (affidavit of plaintiff's clerk, used by him on an interlocutory motion in the same cause, not admitted for the defendant, by a majority of the Court, chiefly because it was used in his absence and without his knowledge); 1848, Boileau v. Rutlin, 2 Exch. 665, 680 (above cases referred to as sound, so far as the deposition, etc., was offered "for the purpose of proving a certain fact"); 1851, Pritchard v. Bagshawe, 11 C. B. 459, 462 (to prove D. to be an agent of the defendant in an act of conversion, an affidavit of D. on that point, used by the defendant in an action by him against one M., was admitted); 1863, Paget v. Birkbeck, 3 F. & F. 683, 686 (trespass q. c. f.; deposition made by witness for defendant in a Chancery suit in the same dispute, not admitted for the plaintiff: because not appearing to be so "used or adopted by the defendant to make it admissible against him in this action as an admission made by him or with his authority"); 1864, Richards v. Morgan, 10 Jur. N. S. 559, 4 B. & S. 641 (replevin for sheep; avowry, damage feasant; to prove title to the 'locus', the plaintiff offered depositions used by the defendant in a Chancery suit by one E. against the now defendant in which the same title was in issue, there being "no privity whatever" between E. and the now plaintiff; held admissible, by two judges out of three, because the depositions were formerly used for the specific facts as to which they were now offered); 1899, Evans v. Merthyr Tydfil, 1 Ch. 241, 250 (principle of Richards v. Morgan approved); CANADA: 1863, Thayer v. Street, 23 U. C. Q. B. 189, 192 (affidavit of M., filed and used by defendant in another suit, admitted); 1900, Livingstone v. Colpitts, 4 N. W. Terr. 441, 442 (defendant's cross-examination on his affidavit filed in the case, admitted; Richards v. Morgan followed; on appeal, this point was not decided).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1903, Connecticut M. L. Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 188 U. S. 208, 23 Sup. 294 (affidavit of a witness J. H. B., put in evidence by the plaintiff on the cross-examination of W. J. B., held to be usable against the plaintiff as a part of her evidence, and not merely as affecting the credit of J. H. B.). Ala. 1840, Hallett v. Walker, 1 Ala. 585, 588 (deposition on affidavit filed in same or prior cause, but not read, is not admission); 1863, Wilkins v. Stidger, 22 Cal. 231, 236 (medical services; defendant had called the plaintiff as a witness, in an action before arbitrators against the person who had injured the defendant; plaintiff's testimony not received; "a party to a suit is not bound by or held to admit as true every statement made by his witnesses during the trial of a cause, because he does not deny or contradict them at the time"; this is a misapplication of the principle of § 1072, ante); Mass. 1842, Hovey v. Hovey, 9 Mass. 216 (taking and filing a deposition, without using it, is not an admission of its truth); 1821, Martin v. Root, 17 Mass. 222, 227 (former witness' testimony not received; "then, he used him as a witness, and was obliged to content himself with all he was willing to swear to"); 1899, Knight v. Rothschild, 172 Mass. 546, 52 N. E. 1062 (statements of one affidavit expressly adopted in another, admitted); N. J. 1900, Bageard v. Consol. T. Co., 64 N. J. L. 316, 45 Atl. 620 (after showing plaintiff's inconsistent testimony on former trial, defendant was allowed to show that plaintiff then also brought a witness to testify to same effect; citing Richards v. Morgan); N. D. 1913, McCarty v. Kepreta, 24 N. D. 395, 139 N. W. 992, 1007 (affidavit of a third person, filed with the defendant's affidavit, held not necessarily, to be taken as true in all parts); Or. 1908, Patty v. Salem B. Co., 53 Or. 350, 96 Pac. 1106 (testimony of F., called for defendant in another suit, not admitted; the opinion treats it as a question of § 1072, ante, and apparently ignores the present principle); Pa. 1907, Becker v. Philadelphia, 217 Pa. 344, 66 Atl. 564 (personal injuries; the testimony of a physician, offered by the plaintiff in a former suit against another defendant, admitted for the present defendant as "adopted and used as her own" by the plaintiff); Va. 1826, M'Mahon v. Spangler, 4 Rand. 51, 56 (affidavit of B. read by plaintiff below, allowed to be used by defendant).

In any case, however, the deposition may be offered to show the party's knowledge of the facts stated in it, if that is material; 1836, Lorton v. Kingston, 5 Cl. & F. 269, 344; and cases cited ante, § 260.

So, also, on other principles, a party's own deposition or affidavit may be used as a self-contradiction (ante, § 1040, n. 3) or as a falsification showing consciousness of guilt (ante, § 278, n. 3).

a party who uses such depositions does not know beforehand what they are; if he did, such cases would stand on the same footing as the present; he can only refer to what he expects will be produced; it is like the case of a witness called at Nisi Prius, whose evidence does not bind the party calling him. It is quite different from a case where a party produces, as part of his own statement, an affidavit of which he knows the contents."

But this view was in England afterwards repudiated for the more accurate view that some depositions or testimonies may be so used as to become admissions, while some affidavits may not be; the result depending upon whether in the case in hand the particular statement was offered knowingly for a specific purpose:

1864, COCKBURN, L. C. J., in Richard v. Morgan, 10 Jur. N. S. 559, 564: "In principle, there can be no difference whether the assertion or admission be made by the party sought to be affected against himself, or by some one employed, directed, or invited by him to make the particular statement on his behalf. In like manner, a man who brings forward another, for the purpose of asserting or proving some fact on his behalf, whether in a court of justice or otherwise, must be taken himself to assert the fact which he thus seeks to establish. . . . Where a witness is called for the purpose of proving a particular fact, this amounts to an assertion of that fact by the party who so uses his testimony. And in this respect I must observe, that I can see no difference between written and oral testimony. For while I concur in the position, that the evidence of a witness, called on a trial, is not necessarily, nor, to the full extent to which it may go, admissible against the party calling him in a future proceeding, yet if it can be shown that the witness was called to prove a specific fact, it appears to me that this would be admissible as an assertion of such fact by the party calling the witness. . . . On the other hand, as I have already said, I entirely concur in the position, that it is not because a witness is called for the purpose of proving a particular fact or facts, that all that he may say becomes admissible in any future proceeding against the party calling him. And here, again, I see no valid distinction between 'viva voce' and written testimony. It has, indeed, been said, that a party, calling a witness to be examined in court, may, in many instances, be ignorant how far the witness may make statements unfavorable to the party calling him, while a party using a written deposition does so with a full knowledge of what it contains, and after full opportunity of balancing the advantages and disadvantages of using it. But it must be borne in mind that the party in the one case calling the witness, in the other using the deposition, may do so, not only without the intention of abiding by all the witness may say, but with the deliberate intention of calling on the Court or jury to disbelieve so much of the evidence as makes against him. Just as at Nisi Prius, a party is sometimes under the necessity of calling a doubtful or even hostile witness, in order to prove some part of his case which cannot otherwise be made out; and, in the event of adverse statements being made by the witness, seeks to induce the jury to reject them, as unworthy of belief, or as contradicted by the rest of the evidence; so, in the case of written evidence, a deposition or affidavit may, under similar circumstances, be used with a view to the adoption of a part and the rejection of the rest. It would be in the highest degree unreasonable to suffer the party using the evidence to be affected by that portion which he may have repudiated or disregarded, on the ground, that the statements of the witness must be taken to be his. Bearing in mind, that the true ground on which such evidence is admissible, is, that a party seeking to establish a fact by evidence in a court of justice, must be taken [in that litigation] to assert the fact he so seeks to prove, it seems to me to follow, on the one hand, that oral evidence, so far as it shall appear to have been used to establish a specific fact, will [in subsequent litigation] be evidence against the party using it, as an assertion of that fact; and on the other, that written evidence will be admissible against the party using it, in a subsequent proceeding with a different party, not for the purpose of proving all the statements it may contain, but only so far as it shall appear to have been used to establish a given fact or facts. It is not because a witness may have been called, or a deposition may have been used, that all the statements made are to be considered as having been adopted by the party using the evidence. In order to render this species of evidence admissible, as the assertion of a particular fact by the party using it, it must appear, either from the evidence itself, or from extrinsic circumstances, that it was used for the purpose of proving such fact. . . .

"I am not insensible to the inconvenience that may result from the admission of evidence of this sort. The evidence may have utterly failed in its effect in the original suit; the fact which was sought to be established may have been disproved by other evidence; the decision of the Court or jury may have been adverse; the party may long since have abandoned the ground which he formerly took; the production of such evidence in a subsequent suit may lead to collateral issues in the shape of inquiry into all the circumstances and bearings of the first. Counsel, too, may possibly be embarrassed in the conduct of a cause, as regards the production of evidence, by having to consider what may be its effects on the interests of their client beyond the present proceeding. But many of these difficulties would obviously apply in the case of statements made by the party irrespective of legal proceedings, which, if relevant to the matter in dispute, no one can deny to be admissible against him. All these difficulties exist equally in the case of affidavits and depositions in bankruptcy, both of which have been held to be admissible. The difficulty in which it is suggested that counsel would be placed in the conduct of a cause becomes reduced to a matter of small importance, when the admissibility of the deposition is limited by the qualification to which, in my view, it should be subject, namely, that it can only be used against the party to the extent of the purpose for which it was used by him in the former suit."

1840, COLLIER, C. J., in Hallett v. Walker, 1 Ala. 585, 589: "The mere filing of a deposition does not license the party against whom it was taken to read it as an admission to the jury. . . . The party taking the deposition may have discovered that it was inadmissible for him, or that the facts it proved were unfavorable to his interest, or were in themselves false. Under such circumstances he could not in justice be charged with having made an admission of its truth."

Certain other principles affecting the use of depositions must be discriminated. (1) Even if the party taking the deposition has not used it, so that by no possibility could it be treated as an admission, nevertheless it may be offered by the other party as a deposition, on showing the witness deceased or otherwise unavailable, if it was taken in the same cause; since the only objection to it arises from the Hearsay rule and that has been satisfied (post, § 1389). Thus the particular advantage to be gained by succeeding in treating it as an admission is that these restrictions do not then obtain. (2) The party's silence during the giving of opposing testimony cannot be treated as an admission of its correctness, for the reasons already examined (ante, § 1072, par. (3)).

§ 1076. Admissions of Other Parties to the Litigation; Nominal and Real Parties; Representative Parties (Executor, Guardian, etc.); Stockholders; Joint Parties; Confessions of a Co-defendant. A third mode (of those enumerated in § 1069) by which vicarious admissions may become receivable is by privity of interest, i.e. a relation which permits one person's rights, obligations, or remedies to be affected by the acts of another person, and thus also permits resort to such evidence as that other person may have furnished by way of admissions. This privity may be of two sorts, namely, privity of obligation and privity of title.

But first it is necessary to distinguish those instances in which merely the definition of a "party" is involved. By hypothesis, an admission is a statement elsewhere made by the party and now offered against him as inconsistent with and contradictory of his present claim made in the pleadings or evidence (ante, § 1048). Who, then, is the "party", i.e. the litigating person, whose admissions may thus be now turned against himself?

(1) In the first place, so long as fictions were copiously employed in the formal conduct of litigation, the admissions of a nominal, or fictitious party, were in strict logical consequence obliged to be received. For example — the typical instance — so long as the suit of the assignee of a chose in action was at common law required to be brought fictitiously in the name of the assignor, the latter's admissions were receivable, as being those of the party himself;[1] even though they would have been inadmissible, if made after assignment, as those of an assignor, on the principle of privity of title (post, § 1085). But, since the universal reforms in procedure, this problem is no longer presented; although even before those reforms the spirit of judicial progress had in some jurisdictions refused to recognize this logical extension of the fiction.[2] Where, however, the relation is not a fiction, but represents a real relation of legal interest — as where the administrative and beneficial interests are divided between trustee and 'cestui que trust' — it would seem that the admissions of the trustee should be receivable. Conversely, so far as procedure still permits any litigation to be conducted without joining the real and beneficial party in interest, his admissions would nevertheless be received;[3] perhaps such a case is not likely to-day to arise. In a criminal prosecution, the person to whose injury the crime was done is in no legal sense a party, and his statements are not receivable,[4] except, of course, by way of self-contradiction

§ 1076. [1] 1798, Bauerman v. Radenius, 7 T. R. 663, 668; 1833, Gibson v. Winter, 5 B. & Ad. 96, 102; 1819, Bulkley v. Landon, 3 Conn. 76, 82; 1836, Johnson v. Blackman, 11 Conn. 342, 348. The following statute contains general statements; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5776 (admissions of parties to the record, receivable, with certain exceptions specified).

[2] 1848, Dazey v. Mills, 10 Ill. 67; 1868, Shailer v. Bumstead, 99 Mass. 112, 127 ("In modern practice, at law even, the admissions of a party to the record who has no interest in the matter will not be permitted to be given in evidence to the prejudice of the real party in interest"); 1846, Sargeant v. Sargeant, 18 Vt. 371, 376.

[3] 1749, Hanson v. Parker, 1 Wils. 257 (action on a bond for the benefit of D.; "D. is to be considered as if she were really plaintiff"); 1809, Bayley, J., in R. v. Hardwicke, 11 East 578, 584 ("Bauerman v. Radenius only decided that the declarations of the nominal party on the record were evidence against him; but not that the declarations of the real party would not also have been evidence"); 1813, Smith v. Lyon, 3 Camp. 465 (action by a ship-master, for the benefit of the owner, on a charter contract; L. C. J. Ellenborough: "Although this action is in the name of the master, it is brought for the benefit of the owner; I am therefore of opinion that anything said by the latter is admissible evidence for the defendant").

But this would not necessarily be the rule where the trustee as party represented an entire estate and the cestui was interested in only a part of it, e.g. as life tenant: 1838, Doe v. Wainwright, 3 Nev. & P. 598, 605.

It would be apparently on the above principle that, to prove a plea in abatement for non-joinder, the admission of liability by the person sought to be joined would be receivable: 1827, Clay v. Langslow, M. & M. 45.

[4] 1875, Williams v. State, 52 Ala. 411, 412: 1901, Green v. State, 112 Ga. 638, 37 S. E. 885: 1884, Harper v. State, 101 Ind. 109, 111 (bastardy); 1898, Shields v. State, 149 Ind. 395, 49

as a witness. So, too, the stockholder of a corporation is not the real party in legal interest, and his statements cannot be received as admissions of the corporation.[5]

(2) Where the party sues in a representative capacity — i.e. as trustee, executor, administrator, or the like — the representative is distinct from the ordinary capacity, and only admissions made in the former quality are receivable; in particular, statements made before or after incumbency are inadmissible.[6] Conversely, his admissions as executor or the like would not be receivable against him as a party in his personal capacity. A guardian, so far as his powers place him in a representative capacity, is subject to the same rules;[7] but the function of a guardian 'ad litem' begins and ends with the litigation, and consequently his extrajudicial admissions are not receivable at all.[8]

N. E. 351 (murdered person); 1860, Com. v. Sanders, 14 Gray Mass. 394 (embezzlement); 1898, State v. Knock, 142 Mo. 515, 44 S. W. 235 (mother of a rape-prosecutrix); 1903, State v. Terry, 172 Mo. 213, 72 S. W. 513 (murdered man); 1904, State v. Brady, 71 N. J. L. 360, 56 Atl. 6 (rape-prosecutrix); 1905, State v. Hummer, 72 id. 328, 62 Atl. 388 (same); 1904, State v. Brady, 71 N. J. L. 360, 59 Atl. 6; 1902, State v. Deal, 41 Or. 437, 70 Pac. 534 (owner of a stolen horse); 1919, Com. v. Bednorciki, 264 Pa. 124, 107 Atl. 666 (murdered person); 1906, Brown v. State, 127 Wis. 193, 106 N. W. 536 (rape-prosecutrix).

[5] The contrary view was early taken in England for parish-inhabitants: 1809, R. v. Hardwicke, 11 East 578, 585; but it was repudiated by American Courts for town-proprietors; see Judge Redfield's note to Greenleaf on Evidence, I, § 175, 15th ed.

But the status of the parish-inhabitant and the town-proprietor was different from that of the modern shareholder in a private corporation; the admissions of a shareholder cannot affect the corporation: 1839, Fairfield Co. Turnpike Co. v. Thorp, 13 Conn. 173, 180. This is sometimes expressly provided by statute: Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 12545 (like the Wisconsin statute); N. Y. C. P. A. 1920, § 340 (admissions of a corporation member not a party, inadmissible unless made by him as agent or as witness); Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4079 (admissions of a member of a corporation, not receivable unless he is a party or an agent).

Yet in some cases the contrary is a practically better rule: 1904, Starr B. G. Ass'n v. North L. C. Ass'n, 77 Conn. 83, 58 Atl. 467 (admissions of members of a corporation may sometimes be received against the corporation; good opinion by Hamersley, J.).

[6] Canada: 1915, Canadian Northern Western R. Co. v. Moore, 23 D. L. R. 646, Alta. (value of land; an affidavit by one of the parties, made as executor to a will, stating value, held admissible against him as executor; citing the above text with approval); United States: 1823, Plant v. McEwen, 4 Conn. 544, 548 (executor, before appointment); 1895, Freeman v. Brewster, 93 Ga. 648, 21 S. E. 165 (guardian, after revocation); 1900, Horkan v. Benning, 111 Ga. 126, 36 S. E. 432 (administrator); 1914, Whisner v. Whisner, 122 Md. 195, 89 Atl. 393; 1906, Stone v. Stone, 191 Mass. 371, 77 N. E. 845 (executor; admitted); 1909, Gibson v. Boston, 75 N. H. 405, 75 Atl. 103; 1921, LeLong v. Siebrecht, Sup. App. Div., 187 N. Y. Suppl. 150 (letter written by defendant executor, before appointment, not received as an admission in an action against him as executor); 1898, Charlotte O. & F. Co. v. Rippy, 123 N. C. 656, 31 S. E. 879 (executor; excluded, unless connected with the settlement of the estate; this seems doubtful); 1922, McKay's Will, — N. C. —, 111 S. E. 5 (contested will); 1901, Williams v. Culver, 39 Or. 337, 64 Pac. 763 (administrator, before appointment); 1922, Johnson v. Underwood, 102 Or. 680, 203 Pac. 879 (administrator's suit for death by wrongful act; the statements of the now administrator, before appointment, not admissible).

For the case of co-executors, co-legatees, etc., see post, § 1081.

[7] Contra: 1904, Knights Templar & M. L. I. Co. v. Crayton, 209 Ill. 550, 70 N. E. 1066; 1846, Collis v. Bowen, 8 Blackf. Ind. 262.

But not of a guardian against the minor: 1905, Kidwell v. Ketler, 146 Cal. 12, 79 Pac. 514: this is really on the principle of § 1078, post.

For an infant's admissions against himself, see § 1053, ante, and § 1063, n. 1, at the end.

[8] 1921, Pindell v. Rubenstein, — Md. —, 115 Atl. 859 (mother of injured child, suing as next friend; admissions excluded; this shows how unreal are such technicalities); 1903, Stevens v. Continental C. Co., 12 N. D. 463, 97 N. W. 862 (infant); 1895, Chipman v. R. Co., 12 Utah 68, 41 Pac. 562.

A counsel has of course the same authority for an infant's guardian 'ad litem' as for any client: ante, § 1063, note 1.

(3) It will thus be seen that in receiving the admissions of a party as such, the only question can be, who the party is. The probative process consists in contrasting the statements of the same person made now as litigant and made formerly elsewhere, and it is in that view that it becomes necessary to define the identity of the person. It follows that the statements of one who is confessedly a distinct person B do not become receivable as admissions against A merely because B is also a party. In other words, the admissions of one co-plaintiff or co-defendant are not receivable against another, merely by virtue of his position as a co-party in the litigation.[9] This is necessarily involved in the notion of an admission; for it is impossible to discredit A's claims as a party by contrasting them with what some other party B has elsewhere claimed; there is no discrediting in such a process of contrast, because it is not the same person's statements that are contrasted. Moreover, ordinary fairness would forbid such a license; for it would in practice permit a litigant to discredit an opponent's claim merely by joining any person as the opponent's co-party and then employing that person's statements as admissions. It is plain, therefore, both on principle and in policy, that the statements of a co-party (while usable of course against himself) are not usable as admissions against a co-party.

The situation has often been obscured by the circumstance that the co-party's admissions are received against himself, and that they are sometimes received also against the other co-party because of a privity of obligation or of title (on the principle of §§ 1077 ff.). But it is not by virtue of the person's relation to the litigation that this can be done; it must be because of some privity of title or of obligation, which would indeed have admitted the statements even had the declarant not been made a co-party.

This principle, long recognized by the Courts, has not always been clearly appreciated by the profession:

1806, L. C. ERSKINE, in Morse v. Royal, 12 Ves. Jr. 355, 361: "So in trespass, where the defendants may be found severally guilty or not guilty, a witness may say he heard one acknowledge that he committed the act with the others; that is decisive against that one, and as it is legitimate evidence against him, the Court must hear it; though it is no evidence against the others."

1809, L. C. J. ELLENBOROUGH, in R. v. Hardwicke, 11 East 578, 585: "Evidence of an admission made by one of several defendants in trespass will not, it is true, establish the others to be co-trespassers. But if they be established to be co-trespassers by other competent evidence, the declaration of the one, as to the motives and circumstances of the trespass will be evidence[10] against all who are proved to have combined together for the common object."

[9] Accord: 1907, Postal Tel. C. Co. v. Likes, 225 Ill. 249, 80 N. E. 136; 1905, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Houchins, 121 Ky. 526, 89 S. W. 530 (but the Court must instruct as to its limited use); 1825, Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. N. Y. 483, 492 (Woodworth, J.: "An admission by a party to the record is evidence against him who makes it; . . . but not against others who happen to be joined as parties to the suit"); 1916, Rutland R. L. & P. Co. v. Williams, 90 Vt. 276, 98 Atl. 85.

Otherwise, where the parties have a common interest independently of being joined as parties: 1903, Fourth Nat'l Bank v. Albaugh, 188 U. S. 734, 23 Sup. 450; 1910, McCullough Bros. v. Sawtell, 134 Ga. 512, 68 S. E. 89 (joint claim; admissions received).

[10] I.e. on the principle of § 1079, post.

The principle is particularly illustrated by the rule in regard to the admissions of a co-defendant in a criminal case; here it has always been conceded that the admission of one is receivable against himself only;[11] and thus, where A's confession, for example, implicates also a co-defendant B, it is allowed to be read against A, under express instructions to the jury not to consider it as affecting B; and some judges at one time favored the practice of omitting the name of B, or any other co-defendant, in the proof of the confession.[12] As for answers in chancery, it has never been doubted that the answer of one defendant is no evidence against another.[13]

§ 1077. Privies in Obligation; Joint Promisor; Principal and Surety, etc. So far as one person is privy in obligation with another, i.e. is liable to be affected in his obligation under the substantive law by the acts of the other, there is equal reason for receiving against him such admissions of the other as furnish evidence of the act which charges them equally. Not only as a matter of principle does this seem to follow, since the greater may here be said to include the less; but also as a matter of fairness, since the person who is chargeable in his obligations by the acts of another can hardly object to the use of such evidence as the other may furnish. Moreover, as a matter of probative value, the admissions of a person having precisely the same interests at stake will in general be likely to be equally worthy of consideration. There being an identity of legal liability, the two persons are one so far as affects the propriety of discrediting one by the statements of the other.

When does this privity of obligation exist? This is plainly a matter for definition by the substantive law, not the law of Evidence. The rule of Evidence assumes whatever is otherwise established in the substantive law; and it would require a lengthy and inappropriate digression to examine here the conclusions of that law upon the variety of situations in which the question is presented. It is enough to note that the principle finds constant applica-

[11] 1664, Tong's Case, Kelyng 18; 1902, Terr. v. Castro, 14 Haw. 131 (adultery); 1868, Com. v. Thompson, 99 Mass. 444 (adultery); 1903, U. S. v. Caligagan, 2 P. I. 433; 1906, U. S. v. Paete, 6 P. I. 105; 1906, U. S. v. Manalo, 6 P. I. 364; 1908, U. S. v. Estabillo, 8 P. I. 674.

The ruling in Allen v. Allen, 1894, Prob. 248, that when the co-respondent and the respondent, in divorce for adultery, take the stand, then the testimony of either cannot be taken against the other, if no right of cross-examination is permitted, is erroneous, being based on the common-law rule forbidding such use of extra-judicial admissions of co-defendants. But testimony on the stand is entirely different from admissions, and nothing can prevent a witness' testimony, when credible, from being used to prove any relevant fact against any party. Compare § 916, ante (impeaching a co-defendant).

[12] The cases are collected post, § 2100, because they are concerned primarily with the principle of Completeness, there discussed.

For the use of a confession of a deceased person, implicating himself and exonerating the defendant, under the Hearsay exception for statements against interest, see post, § 1476.

For the use of admissions of co-conspirators, see post, § 1079.

[13] 1806, Morse v. Royal, 12 Ves. Jr. 355, 361; 1817, Leeds v. Ins. Co., 2 Wheat. 380, 383. But, of course, when the other party is a nominal one only, and thus is competent as a witness, his answer, if subjected to cross-examination, could be received. Distinguish also the admission of the other answer where one party makes it his own by reference (ante, §§ 1070, 1075).

tion chiefly to the admissions of a co-promisor,[1] of a principal (against his surety),[2] and of one or two other classes of liability.

These may now be examined in order to distinguish the present question from certain genuine rules of Evidence.

§ 1078. Same: Agent; Partner; Attorney; Deputy-Sheriff; Interpreter; Husband and Wife. (1) He who sets another person to do an act in his stead as agent is chargeable by such acts as are done under that authority, and so too, properly enough, is affected by admissions made by the agent in the course of exercising that authority. The question therefore turns upon the scope of the authority. This question, frequently enough a difficult one, depends upon the doctrine of Agency applied to the circumstances of the case, and not upon any rule of Evidence.[1]

§ 1077. [1] One of the most troublesome problems in this connection, namely, whether a promise or acknowledgment by one joint promisor serves to remove the bar of the statute of limitations against another, goes back to a ruling of Lord Mansfield, in Whitcomb v. Whiting, 2 Doug. 652 ("an admission by one is an admission by all"), and illustrates how the principle involved is one of the substantive law; this principle was confirmed in 1824, in Perham v. Raynal, 2 Bing. 306, 312, and in 1828, in Burleigh v. Scott, 8 B. & C. 36, 41. There is an interesting note upon it in Greenleaf on Evidence, 15th ed., I, § 112.

[2] Eng. 1821, Goss v. Watlington, 4 B. & B. 132, 137; 1828, Whitnash v. George, 8 B. & C. 556, 561 ("The entries [of the principal] were evidence against the surety because they were made by the collector [principal] in pursuance of the stipulation contained in the condition of the bond"); Can. 1915, Jordan School District v. Gaetz, 23 D. L. R. 739, Alta. (action against sureties of a treasurer; the treasurer's books admitted, but on different grounds by different judges; Harvey, C. J., citing the above text with approval); U. S. Ida. 1910, Sanders v. Keller, 18 Ida. 590, 111 Pac. 350; Ill. 1916, Scovill Mfg. Co. v. Cassidy, 275 Ill. 462, 114 N. E. 181 (surety for purchaser of goods); Ind. 1911, Federal U. Surety Co. v. Indiana L. & M. Co., 176 Ind. 328, 95 N. E. 1104; Iowa: 1904, Knott v. Peterson, 125 Ia. 404, 101 N. W. 173 (citing cases); 1908, Kuhl v. Chamberlain, 140 Ia. 546, 118 N. W. 776 (banker's books); Mass. 1911, Atlas Shoe Co. v. Bloom, 209 Mass. 563, 95 N. E. 952 (debtor's admissions not received against the guarantor); Mo. 1918, St. Charles S. Bank v. Denker, 275 Mo. 607, 205 S. W. 208 (defaulting cashier); N. C. Con. St. 1919, § 358 (suits on official bonds); Vt. 1906, Jangraw v. Perkins, 79 Vt. 107, 64 Atl. 449; Wis. 1911, United American F. Ins. Co. v. American Bonding Co., 146 Wis. 573, 131 N. W. 994.

This principle is occasionally ignored through the tendency to look only at the state of the parties under § 1076, ante; e.g.: 1904, McGowan v. Davenport, 134 N. C. 526, 47 S. E. 27 (trust deed of wife's separate property, to secure a debt recited to be that of husband and wife; the deceased husband's admissions that the debt was unpaid were excluded, because his estate was not a party to the action to foreclose).

It was on this principle that admissions of a debtor were held admissible against a sheriff charged with his escape: 1798, Sloman v. Herne, 2 Esp. 691 ("whatever evidence would be sufficient to charge the original defendants would do to charge a sheriff in such an action as the present").

The Hearsay exceptions for Statements against Interest (post, § 1455) and Regular Entries (post, § 1517) serve to confuse some of the earlier cases on this topic.

§ 1078. [1] The best of the earlier expositions is that of Sir W. Grant, M. R., in 1803, in Fairlie v. Hastings, 10 Ves. Jr. 123. Lord Kenyon, who became Chief Justice in 1788, had set himself against receiving any admissions by agents; and it was some time before the true principle was defined and accepted. For a collection of authorities applying the rule in Fairlie v. Hastings, see Wambaugh's Cases on Agency, 447 ff.; 1903, McEntire v. Levi C. M. Co., 132 N. C. 598, 44 S. E. 109.

The following Codes state the general principle:

Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1870, par. 5; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5779; Or. Laws 1920, § 727, par. 5 P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1403, par. 5 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, par. 5);

The provision in Georgia, Code 1910, § 3606 that "the declarations of an agent . . . are not admissible against his principal unless they were a part of the negotiation and constituting the 'res gestæ', or else the agent be dead", has been properly construed to mean, not that a deceased agent's statements are always receivable though not a part of the 'res gestæ', but that, apart from the present rule of 'res gestæ', the deceased agent's statements may be received as exceptions to the Hearsay rule

The common phrasing of the principle is well represented in the following passage:

1839, BUCHANAN, C. J., in Franklin Bank v. Pennsylvania D. & M. S. N. Co., 11 G. & J. 28, 33: "The principle upon which the declarations or representations of an agent, within the scope of his authority, are permitted to be proved, is, that such declarations, as well as his acts, are considered and treated as the declarations of his principal. What is so done by an agent, is done by the principal through him, as his mere instrument. So whatever is said by an agent, either in the making a contract for his principal, or at the time, and accompanying the performance of any act, within the scope of his authority, having relation to, and connected with, and in the course of the particular contract or transaction in which he is then engaged, is, in legal effect, said by his principal, and admissible in evidence; not merely because it is the declaration or admission of an agent, but on the ground, that being made at the time of and accompanying the contract or transaction, it is treated as the declaration or admission of the principal, constituting a part of the 'res gestæ', a part of the contract or transaction, and as binding upon him as if in fact made by himself. But declarations or admissions by an agent, of his own authority, and not accompanying the making of a contract, or the doing of an act, in behalf of his principal, nor made at the time he is engaged in the transaction to which they refer, are not binding upon his principal, not being part of the 'res gestæ', and are not admissible in evidence, but come within the general rule of law, excluding hearsay evidence; being but an account or statement by an agent of what has passed or been done or omitted to be done, — not a part of the transaction, but only statements or admissions respecting it."

The most difficult field in the application of this principle is that of tortious liability. For example, if A is an agent to drive a locomotive, and a collision ensues, why may not his admissions, after the collision, acknowledging his carelessness, be received against the employer? Because his statements under such circumstances are not made in performance of any work he was set to do. If he had before the collision been asked by a brakeman whether the train would take a switch at a certain point, and had then mentioned receiving certain instructions from the train-dispatcher, this statement might be regarded as made in the course of performing his appointed work. Nevertheless, such problems naturally admit of much speculative and barren argument.[2]

In that class of cases, namely, cases involving tortious liability, and, in particular, liability for injury in a railway accident, the question is usually complicated by the applicability of the Hearsay exception for Spontaneous Declarations (post, § 1745), which admits statements made under the influence of excitment, before the declarant had "time to contrive or invent."

whenever they fulfil the requirements of any of those exceptions, e.g. as regular entries, statements against interest, etc.: 1905, Turner v. Turner, 123 Ga. 5, 50 S. E. 969.

[2] E.g.: 1915, Northern Central Co. v. Hughes, 8th C. C. A., 224 Fed. 57 (superintendent of a coal company; "his general authority of superintendent gave him no such power"; and yet it is absurd to hold that the superintendent has power to make the employer heavily liable by mismanaging the whole factory, but not to make statements about his mismanagement which can be even listened to in court; the pedantic unpracticalness of this rule as now universally administered makes a laughing-stock of court methods).

The following enlightened opinion here marks a new departure: 1911, United American F. Ins. Co. v. American Bonding Co., 146 Wis. 573, 131 N. W. 994 (a report by an agent, made under a duty, but after his agency contract had expired, held admissible; opinion by Barnes, J.; Kerwin and Timlin, JJ., diss.)

This serves commonly to admit the immediate statements of the injured persons and the bystanders; and since the much-abused phrase 'res gestæ' has been commonly employed to suggest the limitations of that Hearsay exception, and has also been employed (though having nothing in common) to designate the scope of an agent's authority, it is natural that judges should sometimes have discussed the two principles, in their application to personal injuries, as if there were but one principle.[3] That there are two distinct and unrelated principles involved must be apparent; and the sooner the Courts insist on keeping them apart, the better for the intelligent development of the law of Evidence. Practically, the results of the two principles in application are decidedly different; for upon the principle of the Hearsay exception such statements may (if admissible) be received against either party; but, on the principle of Agency against the employer only; moreover, when offered against the employer, the limitations of the two principles would be in some respects more favorable, in others less favorable, to the reception of the evidence.

Upon the application of the principle to specific instances, it would be useless here to enter, for only the rules of the substantive law of Agency are involved.[4] It may be noted that the fact of agency must of course be some-

[3] This confusion is dealt with, post, § 1797. Examples of it may be found in opinions in the following cases: Fed. 1886, Vicksburg R. Co. v. O'Brien, 119 U. S. 99, 7 Sup. 118; 1919, Denver Omnibus & C. Co. v. Krebs, 8th C. C. A.; 255 Fed. 543 (personal injury); Cal. 1903, Luman v. Golden A. C. M. Co., 140 Cal. 700, 74 Pac. 307; Md. 1915, Pinkerton v. Slocumb, 126 Md. 665, 95 Atl. 965 (contract for repairs); Mich. 1917, Hyatt v. Leonard Storage Co., 196 Mich. 337, 162 N. W. 951 (wrecking crew); Mo. 1904, Redmon v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 185 Mo. 1, 84 S. W. 26; N. C. 1916, Johnson v. Rhode Island Ins. Co., 172 N. C. 142, 90 S. E. 124 (tornado insurance); Okla. 1917, Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Jackson, 63 Okl. 32, 162 Pac. 823 (death by wrongful act); Pa. 1918, Brown v. Kittanning C. P. Co., 259 Pa. 267, 102 Atl. 948 (death by a derrick); Tenn. 1918, Frank v. Wright, 140 Tenn. 535, 205 S. W. 434 (automobile driver); Utah: 1893, Linderberg v. Mining Co., 9 Utah 163, 33 Pac. 692; 1917, White v. Utah Condensed Milk Co., 50 Utah 278, 167 Pac. 656 (personal injury); Vt. 1915, Patterson's Adm'r v. Modern Woodmen, 89 Vt. 305, 95 Atl. 692 (life insurance; defendant's examining physician's answer in certificate as to defendant's health, received as an admission); 1917, Spinney's Adm'x v. Hooker, 92 Vt. 146, 102 Atl. 53 (personal injury; defendant's general manager's report of the accident, excluded; unsound); Wash. 1904, Cook v. Stimson Mill Co., 36 Wash. 36, 78 Pac. 39.

For examples of the correct treatment of these two principles, see: 1920, Planters' G. & W. Co. v. Pitts Banking Co., 24 Ga. App. 731, 102 S. E. 183; 1913, Forrester v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 36 Nev. 247, 134 Pac. 753, 136 Pac. 705; 1902, Blackman v. West Jersey & S. R. Co., 68 N. J. L. 1, 52 Atl. 370; 1904, Havens v. R. I. Suburban R. Co., 26 R. I. 48, 58 Atl. 247.

[4] The following include merely casual recent decisions in various jurisdictions, which may serve as illustrations: Federal: 1886, Steamboat Co. v. Brockett, 121 U. S. 637, 649, 7 Sup. 1039; 1893, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stewart, 9 U. S. App. 564, 6 C. C. A. 147, 56 Fed. 808; 1894, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. M'Lelland, 10 C. C. A. 300, 62 Fed. 116; 1895, Nelson v. Bank, 16 C. C. A. 425, 69 Fed. 802; Alabama: 1895, Postal Cable Co. v. LeNoir, 107 Ala. 640, 18 So. 266; Postal Cable Co. v. Brantley, 107 Ala. 683, 18 So. 321; 1897, Georgia H. I. Co. v. Warten, 113 Ala. 479, 22 So. 288; 1897, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hill, 115 Ala. 334, 22 So. 163; Arkansas: 1893, Fort Smith Oil Co. v. Slover, 58 Ark. 168, 179, 24 S. W. 106; 1896, Ames Ironworks v. Pulley Co., 63 Ark. 87, 37 S. W. 409; California: 1895, Hewes v. Fruit Co., 106 Cal. 441, 39 Pac. 853; 1895, Mutter v. Lime Co., — Cal. —, 42 Pac. 1068; 1896, McGowan v. McDonald, 111 Cal. 57, 43 Pac. 418; 1898, Hearne v. DeYoung, 119 Cal. 670, 52 Pac. 150, 499; Connecticut: 1896, Builders' Co. v. Cox, 68 Conn. 380, 36 Atl. 797; Georgia: 1886, Krogg v. R. Co., 77 Ga. 202, 213; 1897, Southern R. Co. v. Kinchen, 103 Ga. 186, 29 S. E. 816; 1903, Sweeney v. Sweeney, 119 Ga. 76, 46 S. E. 76 (agent of lands); 1904, how evidenced before the alleged agent's declarations can be received as admissions; and therefore the use of the alleged agent's hearsay assertions that he is agent would for that purpose be inadmissible, as merely begging the very question.[5] Nevertheless, they might be received provisionally as verbal

National Bldg. Ass'n v. Quin, 120 Ga. 358, 47 S. E. 962 (contract of loan); Hawaii: 1914, Wall v. Focke, 22 Haw. 221 (real estate sale); Illinois: 1897, Pennsylvania Co. v. Bridge Co., 170 Ill. 645, 49 N. E. 215; 1904, Baier v. Selke, 211 Ill. 512, 71 N. E. 1074 (brewmaster); Indiana: 1895, Treager v. Mining Co., 142 Ind. 164, 40 N. E. 907; Iowa: 1895, Waite v. High, 96 Ia. 742, 65 N. W. 397; 1897, Irlbeck v. Bierl, 101 Ia. 240, 67 N. W. 200, 70 N. W. 207; 1898, Schoep v. Ins. Co., 104 Ia. 354, 73 N. W. 825; 1898, Metropolitan Nat'l Bank v. Com. St. Bank, 104 Ia. 682, 74 N. W. 26; Kansas: 1895, Cherokee Co. v. Dickson, 55 Kan. 62, 39 Pac. 691; 1896, First Nat'l Bank v. Marshall, 56 Kan. 441, 43 Pac. 774 (bank president); 1897, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Osborn, 58 Kan. 768, 51 Pac. 286; 1898, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cattle Co., 59 Kan. 111, 52 Pac. 71; Kentucky: 1895, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ellis, 97 Ky. 330, 30 S. W. 979; 1896, Wash v. Cary, — Ky. —, 33 S. W. 728; 1896, Tarr Co. v. Kimbrough, — Ky. —, 34 S. W. 528; 1896, East Tenn. Tel. Co. v. Simms, 99 Ky. 404, 36 S. W. 171; 1897, Graddy v. Tel. Co., — Ky. —, 43 S. W. 468; 1897, C. & O. R. Co. v. Smith, 101 Ky. 104, 39 S. W. 832; 1904, Parker's Adm'r v. Cumberland T. & T. Co., — Ky. —, 77 S. W. 1109 (foreman); 1906, Shelbyville W. & L. Co. v. McDade, 122 Ky. 639, 92 S. W. 568 (engineer); Massachusetts: 1849, Coole v. Norton, 4 Cush. 95; 1897, Geary v. Stevenson, 169 Mass. 23, 47 N. E. 508; 1897, Gilmore v. Paper Co., 169 Mass. 471, 48 N. E. 623; 1905, Bachant v. Boston & M. R. Co., 187 Mass. 392, 73 N. E. 642 (railroad station-agent); 1906, McDonough v. Boston El. R. Co., 191 Mass. 509, 78 N. E. 141 (motorman); Michigan: 1895, Ablard v. R. Co., 104 Mich. 147, 62 N. W. 172; 1897, Andrews v. Min. Co., 114 Mich. 375, 72 N.W. 242; 1898, Maxson v. R. Co. 117 Mich. 218, 75 N. W. 459; 1919, Jonescu v. Orlich, 208 Mich. 89, 175 N. W. 174 (personal injury; illustrating the absurd unpracticality of this rule as nowadays applied); Mississippi: 1898, State v. Spengler, — Miss. —, 23 So. 33; Montana: 1898, Wilson v. Harris Sax Co., 21 Mont. 374, 54 Pac. 46; 1905, Poindexter & O. L. S. Co. v. Oregon S. L. R. Co., 33 Mont. 338, 83 Pac. 886 (railroad section boss); Nebraska: 1902, South Omaha v. Wrzensinski, 66 Nebr. 790, 92 N. W. 1045; 1904, Clancy v. Barker, 71 Nebr. 83, 98 N. W. 440 (hotel); New Hampshire: 1894, Nebonne v. R. Co., 67 N. H. 531, 38 Atl. 17; North Carolina: 1895, Williams v. Tel. Co., 116 N. C. 558, 21 S. E. 298; 1896, Craven v. Russell, 118 N. C. 564, 24 S. E. 361; 1898, Albert v. Ins. Co., 122 N. C. 92, 30 S. E. 327; Oregon: 1896, North P. Lumber Co. v. W. S. M. L. & M. Co., 29 Or. 219, 44 Pac. 286; 1897, First Nat'l Bank v. Linn Co. Bank, 30 Or. 296, 47 Pac. 615; 1897, Wicktorwitz v. Ins. Co., 31 Or. 569, 51 Pac. 75; 1905, Alden v. Grande R. L. Co., 46 Or. 593, 81 Pac. 385 (foreman of a logging camp); Pennsylvania: 1895, Shafer v. Lacock, 168 Pa. 497, 32 Atl. 46; 1896, Giberson v. Mills Co., 174 Pa. 369, 34 Atl. 563; South Dakota: 1896, Estey v. Birmbaum, 9 S. D. 174, 68 N. W. 290; Texas: 1898, Houston E. & W. T. R. Co. v. Campbell, 91 Tex. 551, 45 S. W. 2; 1905, Austin v. Forbis, 99 Tex. 234, 89 S. W. 405 (injury by electricity); Utah: 1893, Linderberg v. Min. Co., 9 Utah 163, 33 Pac. 692; 1897, Moyle v. Congreg. Soc., 16 Utah 69, 50 Pac. 806; Vermont: 1915, Blunt v. Montpelier & W. R. R. R., 89 Vt. 152, 94 Atl. 106 (railroad injury; an extreme example of the principle applied to a conductor's admissions); Virginia: 1895, Rensch v. Cold Storage Co., 91 Va. 534, 22 S. E. 358; 1896, Norfolk & C. R. Co. v. Lumber Co., 92 Va. 413, 23 S. E. 737; 1895, Jammison v. R. Co., 92 Va. 327, 23 S. E. 758; Washington: 1906, Baker v. Washington I. Co., 44 Wash. 697, 86 Pac. 1125 (drover); Wisconsin: 1904, Kamp v. Coxe Bros. & Co., 122 Wis. 206, 99 N. W. 366.

[5] "This is never disputed, except by those counsel who have to receive elementary training at the hands of the Supreme Court: 1897, Union G. & T. Co. v. Robinson, 24 C. C. A. 650, 79 Fed. 420; 1917, Attleboro Mfg. Co. v. Frankfort M. A. & P. G. Ins. Co., 1st C. C. A., 240 Fed. 573; 1921, Deming Ladies Hospital Ass'n v. Price, 8th C. C. A., 276 Fed. 668 (personal injury); 1920, Navajo-Apache Bank & T. Co. v. Willis, 21 Ariz. 610, 193 Pac. 297; 1904, Russell v. Washington S. Bank, 23 D. C. App. 398, 406; 1900, Jones v. Harrell, 110 Ga. 373, 35 S. E. 690; 1906, Peyton v. Old Woolen M. Co., 122 Ky. 361, 91 S. W. 719; 1899, Norberg v. Plummer, 58 Nebr. 410, 78 N. W. 708; 1907, Ryle v. Manchester B. & L. Ass'n, 74 N. J. L. 840, 67 Atl. 87; 1905, Jackson v. American T. & T. Co., 139 N. C. 347, 51 S. E. 1015; 1914, Surbaugh v. Gutterfield, 44 Utah 446, 140 Pac. 757; 1913, Livingstone Mfg. Co. v. Rizzi, 86 Vt. 419, 85 Atl. 912; 1898, Gregory v. Loose, 19 Wash. 599, 54 Pac. 33; 1916, Auwarter v. Kroll, 89 Wash. 347, 154 Pac. 438.

Of course this does not prevent the alleged agent from testifying upon the stand to the fact of his agency; for here his testimony is not offered as an admission: 1898, American Expr.

acts (post, § 1770) indicating that he was acting on another's behalf, not his own, leaving it to subsequent proof to establish his connection as agent with the present party.[6]

It may be added that, conformably to the general doctrine (ante, § 4) by which the rules of Evidence are no different in criminal cases, the admissions of an agent may equally be received in a criminal charge against the principal. But whether the fact thus admitted by the agent would suffice to charge the principal criminally without his personal knowledge or connivance would depend upon the particular rule of criminal law involved.[7]

(2) An attorney is an agent to conduct litigation; his admissions, therefore, are under certain circumstances receivable; this application of the principle has already been examined (ante, § 1063).

(3) A partner charges the partnership by virtue of an agency to act for it; how far his admissions are receivable depends therefore on the doctrines of Agency as applied to a partnership.[8]

(4) The use of the admissions of a deputy-sheriff against his sheriff seems to rest on an application of the theory of Agency.[9]

(5) A husband or wife may, in the ordinary way, become an agent, one for the other, and the agent's admissions are then receivable. But the mere marital relation does not of itself make them agents.[10]

(6) An interpreter may be made an agent to converse, and then his translation is receivable as an agent's admission, without calling him to the stand. But otherwise his extrajudicial statements are excluded by the Hearsay rule.[11]

Co. v. Lankford, 2 Ind. Terr. 18, 46 S. W. 183; 1905, Aultman T. & E. Co. v. Knoll, 71 Kan. 109, 79 Pac. 1074; 1907, Superior Drill Co. v. Carpenter, 150 Mich. 262, 114 N. W. 67; 1921, Grove Lodge v. Fidelity P. Ins. Co., 191 Ky. 666, 231 S. W. 215; 1897, Wicktorwitz v. Ins. Co., 31 Or. 569, 51 Pac. 75; 1911, Marcus v. Gimbel Bros., 231 Pa. 200, 80 Atl. 75.

[6] 1899, Parker v. Bond, 121 Ala. 529, 25 So. 898; 1906, Fifer v. Clearfield & C. C. Co., 103 Md. 1, 62 Atl. 1122 (requiring the evidence of agency to precede the declarations); 1898, Nowell v. Chipman, 170 Mass. 340, 49 N. E. 631; 1905, Singer Mfg. Co. v. Christian, 211 Pa. 534, 60 Atl. 1087; 1911, Henderson v. Coleman, 19 Wyo. 183, 115 Pac. 439.

Compare the cases cited post, § 1777.

[7] 1806, Lord Melville's Trial, 29 How. St. Tr. 550, 765, quoted ante, § 4; 1880, R. v. Downer, 14 Cox Cr. 486, 489.

[8] Uniform Acts: Uniform Partnership Act, 1914 (National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws), § 11 ("An admission or representation made by any partner concerning partnership affairs within the scope of his authority as conferred by this Act is evidence against the partnership"); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1870, par. 5, and the Codes following this model; Mo. 1920, Adair v. Kansas City T. R. Co., 282 Mo. 133, 220 S. W. 920 (examining the cases).

Some of the complicated problems here arising are discussed in a note to Greenleaf on Evidence, 15th ed., I. § 112.

Whether the admissions of a partner made after dissolution are receivable against the others, has been a much controverted point, probing deeply into the theory of partnership; the negative answer was made by Spencer, C. J., in Walden v. Sherburne, 15 Johns. N. Y. 409 (1818); the affirmative, by Wilde, J., in Cady v. Shepherd, 11 Pick. Mass. 400, 407 (1831), and in Rutland R. L. & P. Co. v. Williams, 90 Vt. 276, 98 Atl. 85 (1916).

[9] 1833, Snowball v. Goodricke, 4 B. & Ad. 541; except so far as by custom the sheriff (by reason of his bond of indemnity from the deputy) is treated as merely the nominal party, in which case (on the principle of § 1076, ante) the deputy's admissions are receivable without limitation, as being those of the real party; 1815, Tyler v. Ulmer, 12 Mass. 163, 166.

[10] The cases are collected post, § 2232 (marital privilege).

For admissions by either as grantor of property, see post, §§ 1080–1086, especially § 1086.

[11] The cases are collected post, § 1810 (Hearsay rule).

For other questions concerning interpreters, see ante, §§ 668, 811.

§ 1079. Same: Co-conspirators; Joint Tortfeasors. (1) A conspiracy makes each conspirator liable under the criminal law for the acts of every other conspirator done in pursuance of the conspiracy. Consequently, by the principle already exemplified in other relations (ante, § 1077) the admissions of a co-conspirator may be used to affect the proof against the others, on the same conditions as his acts when used to create their legal liability:

1843, PENNEFATHER, C. J., in R. v. O'Connell, 5 State Tr. N. S. 1, 710: "When evidence is once given to the jury of a conspiracy, against A, B, and C, whatever is done by A, B, or C in furtherance of the common criminal object is evidence against A, B, and C, though no direct proof be given that A, B, or C knew of it or actually participated in it. . . . If the conspiracy be proved to have existed, or rather if evidence be given to the jury of its existence, the acts of one in futherance of the common design are the acts of all; and whatever one does in furtherance of the common design, he does as the agent of the co-conspirators."

The tests therefore are the same, whether that which is offered is the act or the admission of the co-conspirator; in other words, the question is purely one of criminal law, or of conspiracy as affecting joint civil liability, and its solution is not to be sought in any principle of Evidence.[1]

§ 1079. [1] The following list of cases includes only certain leading English cases and some modern or leading American rulings:

ENGLAND: 1794, R. v. Hardy, 24 How. St. Tr. 451; 1794, R. v. Stone, 25 id. 1 et passim; 1817, R. v. Watson, 32 How. St. Tr. 80, 359, 538; 1817, R. v. Brandreth, 24 How. St. Tr. 766, 852; 1820. R. v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald. 5, 66.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1892, Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263, 309, 12 Sup. 617; 1893, Brown v. U. S., 150 U. S. 93, 98, 14 Sup. 37; 1895, Clune v. U. S., 159 U. S. 590, 16 Sup. 125; 1896, Wiborg v. U. S., 163 U. S. 632, 16 Sup. 1127, 1197; 1903, Connecticut M. L. Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 188 U. S. 208, 23 Sup. 294; 1905, Sprinkle v. U. S., 141 Fed. 811, C. C. A. (revenue frauds); 1905, Brown v. U. S., 142 Fed. 1, C. C. A. (misappropriation of bank funds); 1909, Doyle v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 169 Fed. 625; 1909, West Pub. Co. v. Edward Thompson Co., C. C. E. D. N. Y., 169 Fed. 833, 863 (digest and cyclopedia); 1910, Jones v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 179 Fed. 584, 601 (fraudulent acquisition of public lands); 1912, Keliher v. U. S., C. C. A., 193 Fed. 8 (embezzlement); 1918, U. S. v. Leonhardt, U. S. Court for China, 1 Extraterr. Cas. 790; 1919, U. S. v. Wallace, ibid., 900; 1919, Heard v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 255 Fed. 829 (robbery); Alabama: 1896, Hunter v. State, 112 Ala. 77, 21 So. 65; 1897, Everage v. State, 113 Ala. 102, 21 So. 404; 1899, McLeroy v. State, 120 Ala. 274, 25 So. 247; 1903, Collins v. State, 138 Ala. 57, 34 So. 993; 1920, Beech v. State, 203 Ala. 529, 84 So. 753 (murder); Arizona: 1913, Crowell v. State, 15 Ariz. 66, 136 Pac. 279 (murder); Arkansas: 1859, Clinton v. Estes, 20 Ark. 216, 225; 1899, Willis v. State, 67 Ark. 234, 54 S. W. 211; 1906, Chapline v. State, 77 Ark. 444, 95 S. W. 477 (bribery); 1906, Butt v. State, 81 Ark. 173, 98 S. W. 723; 1920, Housley v. State, 143 Ark. 315, 220 S. W. 40 (arson); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1870, par. 6; 1896, People v. Oldham, 111 Cal. 648, 44 Pac. 312; 1899, People v. Winters, 125 Cal. 325, 57 Pac. 1067; 1900, People v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 240, 63 Pac. 351; 1922, Budd v. Morgan, 187 Cal. 741, 203 Pac. 755 (alienation of affections); Colorado: 1873, Solander v. People, 2 Colo. 48, 64; 1888, Crawford v. People, 12 Colo. 290, 293, 20 Pac. 769; 1905, Johnson v. People, 33 Colo. 224, 80 Pac. 133 (abortion; the woman a co-conspirator); Connecticut: 1897, State v. Thompson, 69 Conn. 720, 38 Atl. 868; 1916, Cooke v. Weed, 90 Conn. 544, 97 Atl. 765 (fraud); Florida: 1898, Mercer v. State, 40 Fla. 216, 24 So. 154; Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, §§ 1025, 1035; 1918, Smith v. State, 148 Ga. 332, 96 S. E. 632 (murder); 1899, Carter v. State, 106 Ga. 372, 32 S. E. 345; 1905, Rawlins v. State, 124 Ga. 31, 52 S. E. 1; Illinois: 1887, Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 153, 228, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898; 1889, Van Eyck v. People, 178 Ill. 199, 52 N. E. 852; 1904, Miller v. John, 208 Ill. 173, 70 N. E. 27; 1904, Graff v. People, 208 Ill. 312, 70 N. E. 299; Indiana: 1901, Musser v. State, 157 Ind. 423, 61 N. E. 1; 1905, Knox v. State, 164 Ind. 226, 73 N. E. 255; 1907, Sanderson v. State, 169 Ind. 301, 82 N. E. 525 (murder); 1910, Baker v. State, 174 Ind. 708, 92 N. E. 14; 1911, Malone v. State, 176 Ind. 338, 96 N. E. 1; 1919, Roberts v. State, 188 Ind. 713, 124 N. E. 750 (conspiracy to commit a felony); 1916, Hawkins v. State, 185 Ind. 147, 113 N. E. 232 (conspiracy to commit larceny); 1921, Lincoln v. State, — Ind. —, 133 N. E. 351 (conspiracy for arson; three persons were indicted with defendant; the facts that two

In certain aspects, however, the rules of Evidence sometimes come to be involved, and a few discriminations must be noted. (a) The general principle affecting the order of evidence leaves it ultimately to be controlled by the trial Court's discretion, subject to certain provisional rules which obtain unless special considerations overthrow them (post, § 1867). In the present application, the rule for conditional relevancy (post, § 1871) naturally ap-had been convicted and that the third had suicided, held improperly admitted); Iowa: 1904, State v. Walker, 124 Ia. 414, 100 N. W. 354; 1906, State v. Brown, 130 Ia. 57, 106 N. W. 379 (instigator of a crime); 1907, State v. Crofford, 133 Ia. 478, 110 N. W. 921 (murder); 1910, State v. Manning, 149 Ia. 205, 128 N. W. 345; 1911, State v. Gilmore, 151 Ia. 618, 132 N. W. 53 (abortion); Kansas: 1895, State v. Rogers, 54 Kan. 683, 39 Pac. 219; Kentucky: 1895, Twyman v. Com., — Ky. —, 33 S. W. 409; 1901, Powers v. Com., 110 Ky. 386, 61 S. W. 735; 63 S. W. 976; 1901, Howard v. Com., 110 Ky. 356, 61 S. W. 756; 1907, Com. v. Hargis, 124 Ky. 356, 99 S. W. 348; 1911, Higgins v. Com., 142 Ky. 647, 134, S. W. 1135 (murder); 1917, Allen v. Com., 176 Ky. 475, 196 S. W. 160 (arson); 1920, Welch v. Com., 189 Ky. 579, 225 S. W. 470 (murder); 1921, Sain v. Com., 193 Ky. 215, 235 S. W. 368 (murder); Maryland: 1906, Lawrence v. State, 103 Md. 17, 63 Atl. 96 (conspiracy to defraud); Massachusetts: 1897, Com. v. Hunton, 168 Mass. 130, 46 N. E. 404; 1902, Com. v. Rogers, 181 Mass. 184, 63 N. E. 421; 1911, Com. v. Stuart, 207 Mass. 563, 93 N. E. 825; Minnesota: 1895, Nicolay v. Mallery, 62 Minn. 119, 64 N. W. 108; 1903, State v. Ames, 90 Minn. 183, 96 N. W. 330; 1919, State v. Lyons, — Minn. —, 175 N. W. 689 (fraudulent casting of ballots); 1918, State v. Dunn, 140 Minn. 308, 168 N. W. 2 (murder); Missouri: 1895, Hart v. Hicks, 129 Mo. 99, 31 S. W. 351; 1899, State v. Harris, 150 id. 56, 51 S. W. 481; 1903, State v. Kennedy, 177 Mo. 98, 75 S. W. 979; 1904, State v. Boatright, 182 Mo. 33, 81 S. W. 450; 1906, State v. Ruck, 194 Mo. 416, 92 S. W. 706 (the co-conspirator need not be a party to the record); 1906, State v. Darling, 199 Mo. 168, 97 S. W. 592; 1906, State v. Froshee, 199 Mo. 142, 97 S. W. 933; 1922, State v. Thompson, — Mo. —, 238 S. W. 786 (assault with intent to kill); Nebraska: 1897, Farley v. Peebles, 50 Nebr. 723, 70 N. W. 231; 1903, Lamb v. State, 69 Nebr. 212, 95 N. W. 1050; 1903, O'Brien v. State, 69 Nebr. 691, 96 N. W. 1908, 649; State v. Merchants' Bank, 81 Nebr. 704, 116 N. W. 667 (fraud on creditors); New Hampshire: 1892, Coburn v. Storer, 67 N. H. 86, 36 Atl. 607; New Jersey: 1915, State v. Dougherty, 86 N. J. L. 525, 93 Atl. 98 (larceny); New Mexico: 1896, Borrego v Terr., 8 N. M. 446, 46 Pac. 349; 1906, Terr. v. Neatherlin, 13 N. M. 491, 85 Pac. 1044; New York: 1874, Kelley v. People, 55 N. Y. 565, 575; 1897, People v. Peckens, 153 N. Y. 576, 47 N. E. 883; 1912, People v. Storrs, 207 N. Y. 147, 100 N. E. 730 (forgery); North Carolina: 1896, State v. Turner, 119 N. C. 841, 25 S. E. 810; Oklahoma: 1909, Spurgis v. State, 2 Okl. Cr. 362, 102 Pac. 57 (liquor-selling); Oregon: Laws 1020, § 727, par. 6; 1897, State v. Tice, 30 Or. 457, 48 Pac. 367; 1897, State v. Magone, 32 Or. 206, 51 Pac. 452; 1898, State v. Hinkle, 33 Or. 93, 54 Pac. 155; 1899, State v. Roach, 35 Or. 224, 57 Pac. 1016; 1902, State v. Aiken, 41 Or. 294, 69 Pac. 683; 1905, State v. Ryan, 47 Or. 338, 82 Pac. 703 (larceny); 1906, State v. White, 48 Or. 416, 87 Pac. 137; 1921, State v. Yee Guck, 99 Or. 231, 195 Pac. 363 (murder); Pennsylvania: 1895, Wagner v. Haak, 170 Pa. 495, 32 Atl. 1087; Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 298, par. 6 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); 1908, U. S. v. Empeinado, 9 P. I. 613 (murder); 1908, International Banking Co. v. Martinez, 10 P. I. 242; 1909, U. S. v. Raymundo, 14 P. I. 416, 440 (murder); 1915, People v. Diaz, 22 P. R. 177; 1918, People v. Mercado, 26 P. R. 107 (fraud on an insurer); South Carolina: 1897, State v. Rice, 49 S. C. 418, 27 S. E. 452; Tennessee: 1827, Cornwell v. State, Mart. & Y. 147, 153; 1896, Wiehl v. Robertson, 97 Tenn. 458, 37 S. W. 274; Texas: 1894, McKenzie v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 568, 577, 25 S. W. 426; 1905, Smith v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 233, 89 S. W. 817 (reviewing prior cases); 1908, Richards v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. 400, 110 S. W. 432 (whether the declarations of one already acquitted are admissible); 1920, Bouldin v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. 419, 222 S. W. 555 (robbery); Utah: 1898, State v. Kilburn, 16 Utah 187, 52 Pac. 277; Washington: 1896, State v. McCann, 16 Wash. 249, 47 Pac. 443, 49 Pac. 216; 1903, State v. Dix, 33 Wash. 405, 74 Pac. 570 (embezzlement); 1906, State v. Dilley, 44 Wash. 207, 87 Pac. 133 (robbery); 1912, State v. Wappenstein, 67 Wash. 502, 121 Pac. 984 (bribery); Wisconsin: 1905, Schutz v. State, 125 Wis. 452, 104 N. W. 90 (bribery); 1909, Miller v. State, 139 Wis. 57, 119 N. W. 850; 1911, Tarasinski v. State, 146 Wis. 508, 131 N. W. 889 (murder).

It is immaterial that the declarant has been acquitted of the charge, for that judgment does not affect the trial in hand: 1898, Holt v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 282, 45 S. W. 1016, 46 S. W. 829 (repudiating the 'obiter dictum' in Dever v. State, 37 id. 396, 30 S. W. 1071); see Richards v. State, Tex., cited supra.

plies; i.e. the statements of A being receivable against B on the hypothesis that A and B have conspired, some evidence of the conspiracy must ordinarily be furnished before offering the statements of A; in a given case, the trial Court's discretion may relax this rule.[2] (b) Where the alleged conspiracy was carried into effect by the acts of a mob or other riotous assembly or seditious society, the defendant whose instigation and leadership are proved becomes liable for the mob's acts, and thus the conduct and statements of any and all persons in the mob, whether identified or not, become a proper subject of consideration; and a field of somewhat indefinite extent is opened.[3] But in

[2] Eng. The cases vary more or less in their statement of the rule: 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 303; 1839, R. v. Frost, 4 State Tr. N. S. 85, 229, 244; 1848, R. v. Cuffey, State Tr. N. S. 467, 476; 1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 9th day, Times Rep. pt. 3, p. 34; Can. 1904, R. v. Hutchinson, 11 Br. C. 24, 33 (good opinion, by Hunter, C. J.); U. S. Cal. 1899, People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 Pac. 44; 1904, People v. Donnelly, 143 Cal. 394, 77 Pac. 177; Colo. 1873, Solander v. People, 2 Colo. 48, 64; D. C. 1904, Lorenz v. U. S., 24 D. C. App. 337, 373; Conn. 1898, State v. Thompson, 69 Conn. 720, 38 Atl. 868; Ind. 1907, Cook v. State, 169 Ind. 430, 82 N. E. 1047; Ia. 1904, State v. Walker, 124 Ia. 414, 100 N. W. 354 (good opinion, by McClain, J.); La. 1903, State v. Bolden, 109 La. 484, 33 So. 571; Mass. 1902, Com. v. Rogers, 181 Mass. 184, 63 N. E. 421; Mo. 1897, State v. May, 142 Mo. 135, 43 S. W. 637; 1911, State v. Fields, 234 Mo. 615, 138 S. W. 518; N. H. 1902, Cohn v. Saidel, 71 N. H. 558, 53 Atl. 800; Okl. 1904, Wells v. Terr., 14 Okl. 436, 78 Pac. 124; 1911, Thompson v. State, 6 Okl. Cr. 50, 117 Pac. 216; Or. 1897, State v. Moore, 32 Or. 65, 48 Pac. 468; Wash. 1912, State v. Wappenstein, 67 Wash. 502, 121 Pac. 989; W. Va. 1902, State v. Prater, 52 W. Va. 132, 43 S. E. 238.

[3] England: 1820, R. v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald. 5, 66; 1821, Redford v. Birley, 1 State Tr. N. S. 1071, 1157, 3 Stark. 87 (battery in dispersing a mob; solicitations by persons present to others to join them, admitted); 1843, R. v. O'Connell, 5 id. 1, 244, 262, 276 (seditious assembly; inscription on an arch through which the persons passed, admitted as a part of its conduct; remarks, by persons about an hour after the meeting, excluded; document circulated in various portions of the meeting, received); United States: 1884, Carr v. State, 43 Ark. 99, 102; 1854, Brennan v. People, 15 Ill. 511, 515 (murder of S. by a crowd of men among whom was the defendant; indications of the crowd's purpose in pursuing S., admitted to ascertain whether they had a common purpose); 1919, State v. Davis, 177 N. C. 573, 98 S. E. 785 (murder; crowd's utterances, admitted).

In Washington a vain distinction has been adopted in certain classes of cases: 1921, State v. Gibson, 115 Wash. 512, 197 Pac. 611 (unlawfully giving aid to the I. W. W. as a group of persons "formed to advocate, advise, and teach crime", etc.; F. and K. testified to conversations with H. and R., who stated that they were members of the I. W. W. and explained the purposes of the group as above; held inadmissible, mainly on the ground that the membership of H. and R. was evidenced only by their own hearsay statements; the ruling seems unsound, from a practical point of view); 1921, State v. Kowalchuck, 116 Wash. 592, 200 Pac. 333 (sabotage; to prove the unlawful purposes of the organization, a witness who stated that he was formerly a member and acquainted with its leaders was allowed to testify "to the statements and declarations made by these persons to members of the organization as to their duties as such members" e.g. by injury to property, etc.; distinguishing State v. Gibson, supra); 1921, State v. Pettilla, 116 Wash. 589, 200 Pac. 332 (criminal syndicalism; State v. Gibson explained as follows: "The rule is that the ban of hearsay testimony must be placed upon the use of witnesses whose testimony is a recital of what they have been told by persons who they have reason to believe are I. W. W.'s, either by the discovery upon them of membership cards, or by their declarations of membership, or other facts which lead the witnesses to the belief of the membership in the organization of the persons with whom they have held the conversations touching the purposes and objects, the principles and teachings, of the organization; but that witnesses may testify as to statements and speeches and declarations made by members of the organization, or in their presence, at recognized meetings of the organization or assemblages of the organization in their various headquarters or halls, or in such places and on such occasions as are proven to have received the sanction and countenance of the organization, and that the witnesses may also testify as to conversations in which are revealed the principles and teachings, the purposes and objects of the organization, with members of the organization, whose membership is shown by competent testimony, and whose membership such cases the utterances of members of the mob or of bystanders may also be receivable (under an exception to the Hearsay rule) for other purposes (post, § 1729); and accordingly the precise issue and object of the evidence must be discriminated. Elsewhere (post, § 1790) a summary survey is taken of the various questions that may arise in this connection. (c) That the confession of a principal is admissible, on the trial of the accessory, to evidence the commission of the crime by the principal, seems clear on the present principle, supposing some evidence of the defendant's coöperation to be first furnished.[4] But whether the judgment of conviction of the principal is receivable for the same purpose depends on the doctrine of the effect of judgments.[5] is proven to be of such a character as to show it carried with it the authority of the organization to make such declarations as to its purposes, objects, principles, and teachings").

(2) The admissions of one joint tortfeasor are receivable against another,[6] on the same principle and with the same limitations as those of conspirators; this is merely the same doctrine in its application to civil liability for torts.

§ 1080. Privies in Title; General Principle; History of the Principle. The admissions of one who is privy in title stand upon the same footing as those of one who is privy in obligation (ante, § 1077). Having precisely the same motive to make correct statements, and being identical with the party (either contemporaneously or antecedently) in respect to his ownership of the right in issue, his admissions may, both in fairness and on principle, be proffered in impeachment of the present claim.

[4] 1920, Mulligan v. People, 68 Colo. 17, 189 Pac. 5 (robbery); 1899, Howard v. State, 109 Ga. 137, 34 S. E. 330; 1915, State v. Roberts, 95 Kan. 280, 147 Pac. 828 (examining prior cases); 1899, Givens v. State, 103 Tenn. 648, 55 S. W. 1107; 1908, Gibson v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. 349, 110 S. W. 41 (leading opinion per Ramsey, J.); 1905, State v. Mann, 39 Wash. 144, 81 Pac. 561. Contra: 1912, State v. Beebe, 66 Wash. 463, 120 Pac. 122 (distinguishing State v. Mann, but certainly unsound in result).

[5] See the following cases: England: 1832, R. v. Turner, 1 Mood. Cr. C. 347 ("many of the judges appeared to think" that the conviction of a principal was not receivable); Canada: 1914, R. v. Walker, 18 D. L. R. 541, Que. (forfeiture of recognizance to keep the peace; record of conviction for assault, held under Quebec law not to "make proof", i.e. be conclusive, but "it is still evidence of the particular fact which it recites", i.e. "a breach of the peace, and consequently a violation of the condition of the recognizance"); United States: 1899, Kirby v. U. S., 174 U. S. 47, 19 Sup. 574 (a statute making the judgment of conviction of principal in embezzlement or larceny conclusive evidence of the fact of embezzlement or larceny of such goods, in a prosecution against a knowing receiver of such stolen or embezzled goods, held unconstitutional); Colo. Comp. L. 1921, § 7163 (in a civil action for damage done by a crime, the record of conviction is not admissible: a fatuous provision); 1911, State v. Stewart, 85 Kan. 404, 116 Pac. 489; 1855, Com. v. Elisha, 3 Gray Mass. 460; 1913, State v. Fiore, 88 N. J. L. 1039, 88 Atl. 1039 (judgment of conviction of principal, admissible to show principal's guilt in trial of accessory); 1915, Com. v. Vitale, 250 Pa. 548, 95 Atl. 723 (murder; to conviction of principal on trial of accessory is not admissible until the judgment becomes final by appeal or failure to appeal); 1916, Phillips v. Ohio Valley E. R. Co., 78 W. Va. 776, 90 S. E. 342 (action for eviction from a train for disorderly conduct; justice's conviction for disorderly conduct; not decided); and cases cited post, § 1346.

Hence the question whether a plea of guilty by one cannot be considered in the trial of another: 1920, State v. Stetson, — Mo. —, 222 S. W. 425 (witness' reference to "these two young men [the defendants], and the one that pleaded guilty held me up", excluded; if this is the consequence of the present rule, it merely demonstrates how artificial and unhealthy the rule is).

[6] 1809, R. v. Hardwicke, 11 East 578, 585 (see quotation supra, § 1076; and some of the civil cases cited supra, note 1).

But a co-respondent in a divorce suit founded on adultery is not necessarily a joint tortfeasor: 1921, Sargent v. Sargent, 92 N. J. Eq. 703, 114 Atl. 428.

In the following passages, both principle and policy are lucidly expounded from various points of view:

1819, HENDERSON, J., in Guy v. Hall, 3 Murph. 150: "The declarations or confessions of the person making them are evidence against such person and all claiming under him by a subsequent title, and for the plainest reasons. Truth is the object of all trials, and a person interested to declare the contrary is not supposed to make a statement less favorable to himself than the truth will warrant; at least there is no danger of overleaping the bounds of truth as against the party making the declarations. It is therefore evidence against him, and his subsequent purchaser stands in his situation; for he cannot better his title by transferring it to another, or thereby affect the rights of those who have an interest in his confessions. . . . It is asked, Why not swear him? The answer is, The [other] party likes his declarations better. He may, from some motive, vary his statement; and the party offering this evidence is alone to judge."

1832, KENNEDY, J., in Gibblehouse v. Stony, 3 Rawle 436, 445: "In the case before us the testimony offered and rejected was not of that character which in a technical and legal sense comes under the denomination of hearsay. It comes under what is considered the declarations or admissions of the party to the suit or his privies, that is, those under whom he claims; in respect to which the general rule of law is just as well settled that they shall be received in evidence as that hearsay shall not. All a man's own declarations and acts, and also the declarations and acts of others to which he is privy, are evidence, so far as they afford any presumption against him, whether such declarations amount to an admission of any fact, or such acts and declarations of others to which he is privy afford any presumption or inference against him. . . . The confessions of the party himself (which I do not understand to be denied) have always been considered good and admissible evidence of any fact admitted by them to be true, and may be given in evidence to prove it, notwithstanding the confessions might be such as to show that twenty witnesses were present who could all testify to its existence or non-existence, and who might all appear to be in the court-house at the time when such confessions should happen to be offered in evidence against the party making them. And this rule of admitting the confessions or declarations of the party extends not only to the admission of them against himself, but against all who claim or derive their title from him; in other words, between whom and himself there is a privity. There are four species of privity: privity in blood, as between heir and ancestor; privity in representation, as between testator and executor, or the intestate and his administrators; privity in law, as between the Commonwealth by escheat and the person dying last seised without blood or privity of estate; and privity in estate as between the donor and the donee, lessor and the lessee, vendor and the vendee, assignor and the assignee, etc. . . . Upon this same principle it is, that executors and administrators, as also devisees, legatees, heirs and next of kin, are all bound by the promises, whether written or verbal, of their respective testators or intestates, so far as they may have received estates from them that are liable, and the declarations and admissions of such testators and intestates are uniformly received in evidence against their devisees, legatees, heirs, and next of kin, so as to affect the estates which have passed to them. Privies in estates, such as vendee and vendor, assignee and assignor, stand upon the same footing in this respect to each other that privies in blood do. I know of no distinction. That which is binding upon the vendor will generally be equally so upon his vendee; and whatever would have been admissible as evidence against the former ought not only to be so against the latter, but ought to have the same effect too. . . . Lord Ellenborough has given the true reason of the rule for admitting the declarations of a party in evidence where he says it 'is founded upon a reasonable presumption that no person will make any declaration against his interest unless it be founded in truth.' If true when made, and therefore receivable in evidence, his selling or disposing of the property afterwards cannot make his former declarations in respect to it untrue, nor furnish any reason that I can perceive which ought to derogate from its character as evidence. But I cannot avoid believing that as long as the great object of receiving testimony is to aid in and to promote the investigation of truth, the declarations or admissions of a vendor or assignor against his interest, made before the sale or assignment, may be more safely relied on and received in evidence against his vendee or assignee than the testimony that would be given by such vendor or assignor himself, if the party claiming in opposition to his vendee or assignee must be compelled to resort to him."

1843, Messrs. Cowen and Hill, in Notes to Phillipps on Evidence, No. 481, p. 644: "[The owner's] estate or interest in the same property, afterwards coming to another, by descent, device, right of representation, sale or assignment, in a word, by any kind of transfer, whether it be the act of law or the act of the parties, whether the subject of the transfer be real or personal estate, corporeal or incorporeal, choses in possession or choses in action, the successor is said to claim under the former owner; and whatever he may have said affecting his own rights, before departing with his interest, is evidence equally admissible against his successor claiming from him, either immediately or remotely. And in this instance, it makes no difference whether the declarant be alive or dead; for though he be a competent witness, and present in court, his admissions are receivable. This doctrine proceeds upon the idea that the present claimant stands in the place of the person from whom his title is derived; has taken it 'cum onere'; and as the predecessor might have taken a qualified right, or sold, charged, restricted, or modified an absolute right, and as he might furnish all the necessary evidence to show its state in his own hands, the law will not allow third persons to be deprived of that evidence by any act of transferring the right to another."

This principle is to-day nowhere denied.[1]

But its recognition was slow in coming. Of the fundamental and common doctrines of our law of Evidence, this was perhaps the latest to receive judicial recognition. Not until the period 1830–1850 can the full acceptance of the principle be said to have been established, either in England or in the United States. As late as 1824, Mr. Starkie, in his philosophical treatise,[2] ventured only to say that the admissions of a prior owner were "sometimes" receivable. In 1839, Mr. Esek Cowen and Mr. Nicholas Hill, Jr. (the former then a judge of New York, the latter afterwards), were obliged to devote a long excursus, in their edition of Mr. Phillipps' treatise,[3] to a demonstration of the various bearings of the principle in its logical completeness. It was mainly through their masterly exposition that clarity of doctrine became thenceforward apparent in the American rulings.

The reasons for the confusion and halting development in the prior generation are now not difficult to detect. Long enough before then, to be sure, a single aspect of the principle had been plainly enough known and constantly applied, — namely, the use of recitals in deeds of preceding proprietors;[4] for in the substantive law the rights of the successor were defined by the terms of his chain of prior deeds, and it was a simple matter to concede an analogous evidential force, against him, to those parts of the deed which were not strictly definitive of the scope of his title.[5] But this was not with full per-

§ 1080. [1] Except in one traditional respect in New York, firmly fixed too long ago to be now discarded; see § 1083, post.

[2] Evidence, II, 48.

[3] Note No. 481.

[4] 1704, Ford v. Lord Grey, 1 Salk. 286.

[5] The only controversy in this respect was whether the recitals were conclusive, on the principle of estoppel, — a question carefully considered by Mr. J. Story, in 1830, in Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 83, cited post, § 1256.

ception of the principle; and in respect to all other forms of admissions, particularly oral ones, there were strong counter-analogies which tended to obscure the further perception of the principle. By the end of the 1700s the rules of Evidence were beginning to be more carefully considered than ever before (ante, § 8), and the Hearsay rule was in particular strictly enforced. The exceptions to this rule were by no means yet fully established; the scope of the Exceptions for Statements of Facts against Interest was not finally determined till the first quarter of the 1800s (post, § 1455). For that exception the requirement was essential that the declarant should be deceased, — a circumstance immaterial for admissions (ante, § 1049). Since Admissions (as already observed) are commonly though not necessarily against interest at the time of making (ante, § 1048), it was natural enough, in this inchoate stage of the conception, to fail to distinguish admissions of parties from the general hearsay exception, then in formation, for statements of facts against interest. Accordingly, even after it began to be perceived that a predecessor's oral statements were assimilable to his deed-recitals as admissions, the notion persisted for a long time that his death was essential (by analogy to the Hearsay exception) for their reception; and not until 1830 or thereabouts, either in England or the United States, was this notion thoroughly dislodged.[6] The thought was, up to that time, that if the person were living, whether he were grantor or were totally disconnected from the cause, his statement was hearsay and his testimony on the stand must be required.

Another doctrine, also, combined to divert judicial attention from the development of the doctrine of admissions; this was the Verbal-Act doctrine (post, §§ 1772–1778). Still looking from the hearsay point of view, the judges perceived, in the early 1800s, that the rule was not applicable to verbal parts of acts necessary to be proved, and in particular to declarations of claim or disclaim accompanying and coloring the occupation of land, where the issue was merely one of possession. Such declarations commonly proceeded from prior occupants where the proof of adverse possession, in founding a prescriptive title, extended into prior generations; and the propriety of receiving them came soon to be conceded. Now, in most of the cases affecting real property, in which the declaration would have been receivable as an admission, it was also receivable on one or the other of the foregoing principles, i.e. either as a statement of a fact against proprietary interest (under the Hearsay exception), or as a verbal part of an act coloring the possession. Hence it was that a generation elapsed, after the opening of the 1800s, before the applicability of the doctrine of Admissions was fully conceived; for both counsel and judges were naturally restrained in the channel of their speculations by these competing analogies for the commonest species of admissions.[7]

[6] 1827, Gaselee, J., in Hedger v. Horton, 3 C. & P. 179: "I have always understood that, with respect to real estates, the declarations of a party, made before he parted with his interest, have been received in evidence, and not his declarations after. But I believe that this has been in cases where the party was dead." And yet, as soon after as 1834, Parke, J., says, in Woolway v. Rowe, 1 A. & E. 114, 117: "The point [above ruled] is quite new to me. I always thought the party's interest at the time of the declaration was the ground on which the evidence was admitted." Other authorities are collected ante, § 1049.

In England Dartmouth v. Roberts, in 1812,[8] shows an evident logical effort, ending in the successful appreciation of the notion of a predecessor's admissions, in an issue concerning realty. Woolway v. Rowe, in 1834,[9] finds the doctrine unquestioned; though Hedger v. Horton, in 1827,[10] had shown it still clouded by the other analogies. For issues of personalty, Ivat v. Finch, in 1808,[11] had already opened the way; and a series of rulings on commercial paper, beginning with Kent v. Lowen, in the same year,[12] fully developed the principle before 1825.

In the United States the development proceeded by almost contemporaneous steps. The English reports were now fully in the hands of the American lawyers and judges; and the ambiguity and hesitation of the Westminster rulings were reflected in the discussions in the United States. In Connecticut, for example, the whole doctrine of predecessors' admissions was expressly under the ban as late as 1815,[13] and not until 1845 [14] did the new learning receive its settled sanction. In New York the principle was applied in realty issues as early as 1813;[15] but the rulings vacillated, and as late as 1843, in the much-argued case of Paige v. Cagwin,[16] the whole doctrine was put in jeopardy, and emerged to survive in only a mutilated form. In Vermont, the New York rule prevailed as late as 1845.[17] In Massachusetts, the principle seems to have been ignored throughout the first quarter of the 1800s.[18] In Pennsylvania alone, at the early period of 1782, a precocious but clear perception of the entire principle was found; [19] although even here in 1832 [20] it was still considered open to attack. After the publication of Messrs. Cowen and Hill's commentary, there was no longer room for misunderstanding or debate.[21]

[7] For example, Doe v. Jones, in 1808 (post, § 1458), might have been decided on the principle of admissions and not of statements against interest; and Stanley v. White, in 1811 (post, § 1778) and Doe v. Pettett (post, § 1778) need not have been decided on the verbal-act principle.

[8] 16 East 334. These and the following cases are further cited post, §§ 1082–1086.

[9] 1 A. & E. 114.

[10] 3 C. & P. 179.

[11] 1 Taunt. 141.

[12] 1 Camp. 177, by L. C. J. Ellenborough. The formative stage of the conception is interestingly shown by the same judge's ruling, only three years before, in a stronger case for admission (Duckham v. Wallis, 5 Esp. 151), excluding such statements on the express ground that to receive them "would be making the declarations of a third person evidence to affect the plaintiff's title when that person was not on the record." In Kent v. Lowen he correctly designated such a person as "one through whom the plaintiff made title"; he had seen the light.

[13] Beach v. Catlin, 4 Day 284; Barrett v. French, 1 Conn. 354.

[14] Smith v. Martin, 17 Conn. 399.

[15] Johnson v. M'Call, 10 John. 377.

[16] 7 Hill 361.

[17] Hines v. Soule, 14 Vt. 99; it was repudiated after a decade.

[18] Clarke v. Waite, 12 Mass. 439; Bridge v. Eggleston, 14 id. 245.

[19] Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64.

[20] Gibblehouse v. Stong, 3 Rawle 436, quoted supra.

[21] The transitional confusion of theory, above set forth, is reflected in the Code provisions of those States founding their codes on the Field Draft New York Code; these provisions apply in part to the ensuing rules for admissions by privies in title (§§ 1081–1087), and in part to statements against interest by any deceased persons (post, § 1455); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1848 ("The rights of a party cannot be prejudiced by the declaration, act, or omission of another, except by virtue of a particular relation between them; therefore, proceedings against one cannot affect another");

§ 1081. Same: Decedent; Insured; Co-legatee, Co-heir, Co-executor; Co-tenant; Bankrupt. The principle just examined may be phrased in this way: When by the hypothesis of the party himself his title as now claimed is identical with that of another person, as a prior holder, the statements of that other person, made during the time of his supposed title, are receivable against the party as admissions.[1] This question of identity of title depends obviously upon the substantive law of Property. In this respect it is without the scope of the law of Evidence, and does not call for consideration here. But a few of the commoner instances may be briefly examined for illustration's sake; and in particular the relation of grantor and grantee must be examined in detail, because of its many complicated relations with other rules of Evidence.

(1) No modern Court doubts that a decedent, whose rights are transmitted intact to his successor, is a person whose admissions are receivable against a party claiming the decedent's rights as heir, executor, or administrator.[2] The statutory claim, however, in an action for death by wrongful act, of the executor or other representative, is of an anomalous nature; in some features it is an action for a surviving claim of the deceased, while in others it is an action for an injury to the dependent relatives; there is therefore some ground for holding that the deceased's admissions are not receivable.[3] It may however equally be argued that, being admissible in one aspect, they should not

§ 1849 ("Where, however, one derives title to real property from another, the declaration, act, or omission of the latter, while holding the title, in relation to the property, is evidence against the former"); § 1851 ("And where the question in dispute between the parties is the obligation or duty of a third person, whatever would be the evidence for or against such person is prima facie evidence between the parties"); § 1853 (quoted post, § 1455); § 1870, par. 4 (quoted post, § 1455); Ga. Code 1910, §§ 5767, 5768 (quoted post, § 1455); Rev. C. 1910, § 5780 ("The admissions of privies in blood, privies in estate, and privies in law are admissible as against the parties themselves; but declarations of privies in estate, after title has passed out of them, cannot be received").

§ 1081. [1] Or, in another form: wherever the other person could by his acts affect the title of the present party, the other person's admissions may be used as evidence in disproof of that title.

[2] Eng. 1836, Smith v. Smith, 3 Bing. N. C. 29, 33 (deceased's admissions as to a gift, received; "strictly speaking, the defendant claims under him"); U. S. 1906, Cross v. Iler, 103 Md. 592, 64 Atl. 33 (husband's admissions, in an action by his widow against the administratrix); 1905, Benson v. Raymond, 142 Mich. 357, 105 N. W. 870 (declarations of grantee of a deed, as to grantor's insanity, received against the grantee's heirs); 1903, Dixon v. Union Ironworks, 90 Minn. 492, 97 N. W. 375 (wife-administratrix' action for death of husband); 1922, Beck v. Utah-Idaho Sugar Co., — Utah —, 203 Pac. 647 (title to land; plaintiff's deceased husband's declarations that she was not his lawful wife, admitted against her, claiming title through marriage).

Compare the rule for statements of facts against interest (post, § 1461, n. 1).

So, too, the administrator 'de bonis non' is affected by the admissions of the executor or administrator, who is his direct predecessor; 1874, Eckert v. Triplett, 48 Ind. 174, 176.

Compare § 1076, ante.

[3] 1906, Jacksonville El. Co. v. Sloan, 52 Fla. 257, 42 S. O. 516 (action by a widow, in her own right, for the death of her husband); 1922, Republic Iron & Steel Co. v. Ind. Com., 302 Ill. 401, 134 N. E. 754 (dependents of deceased employee; admitted); 1919, Eldredge v. Barton, 232 Mass. 183, 122 N. E. 272 (death by wrongful act; the decedent's statement, "it is my fault, I am to blame", held admissible on a count for conscious suffering before death, but not admissible on a count for loss to next of kin; a most accurate and delicate distinction, revealing at the same time the futile unpracticability of this doctrine of admissions, totally unrelated to probative value); 1898, Camden & A. R. Co. v. Williams, 61 N. J. L. 646, 40 Atl. 634 (undecided).

be excluded because the action has additional aspects; [4] moreover, they ought in any event to be receivable under the Hearsay exception for statements of facts against interest, as some Courts concede.[5] In a beneficiary's action for the sum conditioned in a policy of life-insurance, there is no legal identity of title between the deceased and the beneficiary, although the beneficiary's right is after all no more than the creation of the insured's contract; hence, unless the beneficiary has in the beginning been made a party to the contract so as to bind himself to be identified with the insured (and some forms of contract attempt this), the insured's admissions would not be receivable against the beneficiary. It must be conceded, however, that the situation admits of much refinement of reasoning, dependent on the theory of contract.[6] In any event the use of the insured's declarations as circumstantial evidence of his knowledge of his illness (ante, § 266) must be distinguished.[7]

(2) Where a title is created as a joint interest and by a single legal act, it would seem that the admissions of any one of the holders would be receivable against another as party. This would dictate the use of the admissions of a co-obligee in a joint contract,[8] but not of a co-tenant of realty,[9] nor of a co-trustee.[10] It seems also clear, and is conceded on all hands, that a co-devisee or co-legatee does not hold by a joint title, and therefore his admissions cannot be used to affect another.[11] But it does not follow (as is usually maintained)

[4] 1899, Georgia R. & B. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 108 Ga. 507, 34 S. E. 316 (wife's action for husband's death); 1896, Van Alstine v. Kaniecki, 109 Mich. 318, 67 N. W. 502 (action by a mother under the liquor-damage act); 1896, Hughes v. Canal Co., 176 Pa. 254, 35 Atl. 190 (wife's action for death of the husband).

[5] Post, § 1461.

[6] Compare the following rulings, pro and con: 1896, Mutual Life I. Co. v. Selby, 19 C. C. A. 331, 72 Fed. 980; 1903, Connecticut M. L. Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 188 U. S. 208, 23 Sup. 294; 1906, Hews v. Equitable L. A. Soc'y, 143 Fed. 850, C. C. A.; 1913, Logia Suprema v. Aguirre, 14 Ariz. 390, 129 Pac. 503; 1920, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Merideth, 146 Ark. 140, 225 S. W. 337; 1903, Sutcliffe v. Iowa S. T. M. Ass'n, 119 Ia. 220, 93 N. W. 90; 1907, Taylor v. Grand Lodge, 101 Minn. 72, 111 N. W. 919; 1863, Rawls v. Ins. Co., 27 N. Y. 282, 290; 1890, Smith v. Benefit Soc'y, 123 N. Y. 85, 25 N. E. 197; 1922, Evans v. Junior Order, — N. C. —, 111 S. E. 526; 1880, Union Cent. L. I. Co. v. Cheever, 36 Oh. St. 201, 208; 1879, Mobile L. I. Co. v. Morris, 3 Lea 101, 103; 1896, Fidelity M. L. Ass'n v. Winn, 96 Tenn. 224, 33 S. W. 1045; 1920, Chadwick v. Beneficial Life Ins. Co., 56 Utah 480, 191 Pac. 240, 255; 1920, Spaulding v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., — Vt. —, 109 Atl. 22 (adopting the theory that under a policy reserving the right to change beneficiary the admissions are receivable); 1895, Thomas v. Grand Lodge, 12 Wash. 500, 41 Pac. 882; 1885, Schwarzbach v. Ohio V. P. Union, 25 W. Va. 622, 646; 1899, McGowan v. Supreme Court, 104 Wis. 173, 80 N. W. 603; 1902, Rawson v. Ins. Co., 115 Wis. 641, 92 N. W. 378.

The cases are exhaustively analyzed, and a tenable distinction lucidly expounded, in an article by Professor A. M. Kales, "Declarations of the Insured against the Beneficiary", 6 Columbia Law Rev. 509 (1906).

[7] For the question whether an insurer's admissions, as the real plaintiff in an action for loss by fire, are receivable, see a careful opinion by Gray, J., in Judd v. N. Y. & T. S. S. Co., 128 Fed. 7, 62 C. C. A. 515 (1904).

[8] 1812, Bell v. Ansley, 16 East 141, 143 (joint obligees of an insurance policy).

[9] 1824, Osgood v. Manhattan Co., 3 Cow. N. Y. 612, 622; 1825, Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. 483, 492; 1918, Pope v. Hogan, 92 Vt. 250, 102 Atl. 937 (ejectment; certain admissions by husband and wife, partly received and partly rejected; cited more fully post, § 2232); in St. Louis O. H. & C. R. Co. v. Fowler, 142 Mo. 670, 44 S. W. 771 (1898), a co-tenant's admissions, as co-plaintiff, were received on the facts.

[10] 1800, Davies v. Ridge, 3 Esp. 101. Nor of a prior mortgagee: 1903, Lang v. Metzger, 206 Ill. 475, 69 N. E. 493 (a first mortgagee's admissions, not received against a second mortgagee).

[11] 1868, Shailer v. Bumstead, 99 Mass. 112, 127 ("Devisees or legatees have not that joint interest in the will which will make the admissions of one, though he be a party ap-that they are not to be received at all, even against himself when he is a party. The fact that there can be but a single judgment, for or against the validity of the entire will, constitutes only an imaginary obstacle; for it is not inherently necessary that the case should be proved against each party by the same evidence; a joint promise, for example, could be evidenced against A by his handwriting, against B by his admission, and against C by one who saw the document signed, and yet it must be either a joint promise or none. The refinement of reasoning and scrupulosity of caution which practically shuts out all such evidence of admissions in will-causes seems to be ill-judged. It is nevertheless approved by most Courts to-day.[12] A few Courts are found pellant or appellee from the decree of the probate court allowing the will, admissible against the other legatees; . . . such statements are only admissible when they are made during the prosecution of the joint enterprise", i.e. on the theory of conspiracy).

[12] Federal: 1889, Ormsby v. Webb, 134 U. S. 47, 65, 10 Sup. 478 (excluded, except to contradict as a witness, where the declarant was not sole legatee); 1913, In re Thompson, N. J. D., 205 Fed. 558 (bankrupt); Alabama: 1848, Roberts v. Thawick, 13 Ala. 68, 80 (mental incapacity); California: 1906, Dolbeer's Estate, 149 Cal. 27, 86 Pac. 695 (mental incapacity); 1908, Dolbeer's Estate, 153 Cal. 652, 96 Pac. 266; 1910, Snowball's Estate, 157 Cal. 301, 107 Pac. 598; Columbia (Dist.): 1906, Robinson v. Duvall, 27 D. C. App. 535, 548 (caveatee's admissions of testator's sanity, excluded, except to contradict him as a witness); Connecticut: 1893, Livingston's Appeal, 63 Conn. 68, 26 Atl. 470; 1902, Carpenter's Appeal, 74 Conn. 431, 51 Atl. 126; 1889, Dale's Appeal, 57 Conn. 127, 140, 17 Atl. 757 (undue influence); Georgia: Ga. Civ. C. 1910, § 3870 ("on an issue of devisavit vel non, the admission of an executor before qualification, or of a legatee unless the sole legatee, shall not be admissible in evidence to impeach the will, except the admission be in reference to the conduct or acts of the executor or legatee himself"); Georgia: 1914, Ginn v. Ginn, 142 Ga. 420, 83 S. E. 118 (applying the exception); Illinois: 1891, Campbell v. Campbell, 138 Ill. 612, 615, 28 N. E. 1080 (undue influence); 1912, Cunniff v. Cunniff, 255 Ill. 407, 99 N. E. 654 (excluding statements of undue influence made by one devisee; citing Campbell v. Campbell, 138 Ill. 612, but not Egbers v. Egbers, infra, n. 12); 1919, McCune v. Reynolds, 288 Ill. 188, 123 N. E. 317 (undue influence; one devisee's admission is "not admissible where the interests of the devisees are separate"; citing Campbell v. Campbell but not Cunniff v. Cunniff, supra, nor Egbers v. Egbers, infra, n. 12; is it not time to shepherd Egbers v. Egbers somewhere into the sheepfold?); 1920, Joyal v. Pilotte, 293 Ill. 377, 127 N. E. 741 (will-contest; the defendant legatees were S. P., the widow P. and an infant grandson given $5; the widow defaulted; admissions of undue influence by S. P. were excluded; this illustrates the irrationality of the rule); Indiana: 1898, Roller v. Kling, 150 Ind. 159, 49 N. E. 948; 1901, Hertrich v. Hertrich, 114 Ia. 643, 87 N. W. 689; 1879, Hayes v. Burkam, 67 Ind. 359, 363 (mental incapacity); 1913, Sanger v. Bacon, 180 Ind. 322, 101 N. E. 1001 (excluded; but noting that such statements may be admissible as self-contradictions); 1918, Ramseyer v. Dennis, 187 Ind. 420, 119 N. E. 716 (capacity to make a will; admissions of the sole beneficiary, receivable); Iowa: 1879, Ames' Will, 51 Ia. 596, 602, 2 N. W. 408 (undue influence); 1905, Fothergill v. Fothergill, 129 Ia. 93, 105 N. W. 377; 1912, Lawless v. Lawless, 156 Ia. 184, 135 N. W. 560; 1917, Liddle v. Salter, 180 Ia. 840, 163 N. W. 447 (here admitted, being utterances in the presence of the testatrix exhibiting influence); Maryland: 1820, Walkup v. Pratt, 5 H. & J. 51, 57; 1906, Kelly v. Kelly, 103 Md. 548, 63 Atl. 1082 (admissions of the testator's insane conduct, made before his death, by K., the executor and sole devisee, excluded; this is an 'absurditas absurditatum'); Massachusetts: 1804, Phelps v. Hartwell, 1 Mass. 71 (mental capacity; but see Atkins v. Sanger, 1822, 1 Pick. 192, semble, contra); 1891, McConnell v. Wildes, 153 Mass. 487, 26 N. E. 114 (undue influence); 1908, Gorham v. Moor, 197 Mass. 522, 84 N. E. 436 (but here admitted as self-contradictions to impeach); 1913, Aldrich v. Aldrich, 215 Mass. 164, 102 N. E. 487 (silence of a beneficiary of a will is not to be taken as an admission); 1919, Old Colony Trust Co. v. Di Cola, 233 Mass. 119, 123 N. E. 454; 1922, Neill v. Brackett, — Mass. —, 135 N. E. 690; Michigan: 1893, O'Conner v. Madison, 98 Mich. 183, 190, 57 N. W. 105 (undue influence); 1904, Roberts v. Bidwell, 136 Mich. 191, 98 N. W. 1000; Minnesota: 1919, Knutson's Estate, Benrud v. Anderson, 144 Minn. 111, 174 N. W. 617 (legatee's admissions excluded; nor can they be used as self-contradictions of the legatee as witness merely by calling her on cross-examination to lay a foundation); Mississippi: 1855, Prewett v. Coopwood, 30 Miss. 369, 388 (pecuniary to withstand it,[13] following what must be regarded as the orthodox view which receives such admissions as against the party making them.[14]

(3) The estate of an insolvent or bankrupt passes to an assignee as the debtor's successor; and it has always been conceded that the debtor's admissions, while his estate was in him, are receivable against the assignee;[15] whether the date of divestiture should be taken to be that of the act of bankruptcy or that of the appointment of an assignee was at one time a matter of doubt.[16]

Where there is no general assignment, but merely a levy by an individual execution creditor upon the estate of the debtor, the creditor still is seeking merely to acquire the title of the debtor, and in claiming under him would claim); Missouri: 1900, Schierbaum v. Schemme, 157 Mo. 1, 12, 57 S. W. 526; 1901, Wood v. Carpenter, 166 Mo. 465, 66 S. W. 173; 1905, King v. Gilson, 191 Mo. 307, 90 S. W. 367; 1906, Meier v. Buchter, 197 Mo. 68, 94 S. W. 883 (rule in Schierbaum v. Schemme supra, not applied, where the devisees were charged as co-conspirators to defraud); 1907, Seibert v. Hatcher, 205 Mo. 83, 102 S. W. 962 (Schierbaum v. Schemme followed); Nebraska: 1901, Stull v. Stull, — Nebr. —, 96 N. W. 196 (declarations of an executor not sole legatee, excluded); New Hampshire: 1888, Carpenter v. Hatch, 64 N. H. 573, 15 Atl. 219 (mental incapacity); New Jersey: 1907, Myers v. Myers, 75 N. J. L. 610, 68 Atl. 82; New York: 1901, Kennedy's Will, 167 N. Y. 163, 60 N. E. 442 (admissions of one heir not receivable in a will contest, since they are not admissible against the other heirs and there can be but one decree); 1906, Myer's Will, 184 N. Y. 54, 76 N. E. 920 (admissions of the principal legatee as to testatrix' incapacity, excluded); North Carolina: 1906, Linebarger v. Linebarger, 143 N. C. 229, 55 S. E. 709 (semble, not decided in general, but here excluded); Ohio: 1862, Thompson v. Thompson, 13 Oh. St. 356 (mental capacity); Pennsylvania: 1825, Nussear v. Arnold, 13 S. & R. 323; Tennessee: 1851, Mullins v. Lyles, 1 Swan 337 (fraud and undue influence); Virginia: 1899, Whitelaw v. Whitelaw, 96 Va. 712, 32 S. E. 358 (mental incapacity); West Virginia: 1871, Forney v. Ferrell, 4 W. Va. 729, 739 (undue influence).

Undecided: 1905, Arnold's Estate, 147 Cal. 583, 82 Pac. 252.

[13] Ill. 1898, Egbers v. Egbers, 177 Ill. 82, 52 N. E. 285 (it had been left undecided in Mueller v. Rebhan, 1879, 94 Ill. 142, 148); 1916, Lyman v. Kaul, 275 Ill. 11, 113 N. E. 944 (undue influence; E. C. P. and the contestant being the only beneficiaries, and E. C. P. being the principal one, her admissions were received; distinguishing Campbell v. Campbell, n. 11, supra, and purporting to follow Egbers v. Egbers); Ind. 1905, O'Brien v. Knotts, 165 Ind. 308, 75 N. E. 594 (indebtedness of an estate), semble: 1919, Davis v. Babb, — Ind. —, 125 N. E. 403 ("any declarations of a proponent or beneficiary evidencing some intention to unduly influence the testator are admissible"; citing no Indiana precedents; compare the citations in n. 11, supra); Iowa: 1902, Lundy v. Lundy, 118 Ia. 445, 92 N. W. 39 (admissions of a "principal beneficiary", received); Ky. 1841, Beall v. Cunningham, 1 B. Monr. 399 (lucid opinion by Roberson, C. J.); 1902, Gibson v. Sutton, — Ky. —, 70 S. W. 188 (following Beall v. Cunningham); 1904, Powers' Ex'r v. Powers, — Ky. —, 78 S. W. 152 (devisee's admissions); 1910, McConnell's Ex'r v. McConnell, 138 Ky. 783, 129 S. W. 106; Mich. 1902, Wood v. Zibble, — Mich. —, 92 N. W. 348 (admissions of the wife-proponent, received); Tex. 1914, Scott v. Townsend, 106 Tex. 322, 166 S. W. 1138 (second wife and her child as devisees); Utah: 1906, Miller's Estate, 31 Utah 415, 88 Pac. 338 (sole legatee's admissions, received).

Compare the following: 1902, Robinson v. Robinson, 203 Pa. 400, 53 Atl. 253 (legatee's statements, not offered as admissions of incapacity, received; prior cases distinguished).

[14] 1792, Jones v. Turberville, 2 Ves. Jr. 11.

For the same reason an executor's admissions should be receivable: Contra: 1911, Fowler's Will, 156 N. C. 340, 72 S. E. 357 (undue influence).

[15] 1794, Bateman v. Bailey, 5 T. R. 512; 1847, Ramsbottom v. Phelps, 18 Conn. 278, 283 ("Debts against an assigned estate stand on the same footing as debts against a deceased person whose estate is represented insolvent; and the admissions of the insolvent debtors are admissible for the same reason that the admissions of a deceased person, made while living, are admissible for the purpose of charging his estate"); 1846, Compton v. Fleming, 8 Blackf. 153; and many cases passim, §§ 1082–1086, post; so also, by exception, in New York: § 1083, par. 3, post. Contra: 1894, Bicknell v. Mellett, 160 Mass. 328, 35 N. E. 1130 (debtor's admissions of receipt of full consideration for a mortgage, not received against the assignee for the mortgagee).

[16] 1824, Smallcombe v. Bruges, 13 Price 136, 150 (excluding all admissions after the act of bankruptcy, and not only after the date of the commission).

be affected by his admissions prior to the levy; and this is generally conceded.[17] But this merely evidential use of admissions must be distinguished from the doctrine of estoppel; a creditor is of course not "bound" (for example, by recitals of consideration or the like), in the sense that he may not dispute the truth of the debtor's assertions.[18]

§ 1082. Grantor, Vendor, Assignor, Indorser; (1) Admissions before Transfer; (a) Realty; Admissions against Documentary Title; Transfers in Fraud of Creditors. By the general principle (examined ante, § 1080) the statements of a grantor of realty, made while title was by hypothesis still in him, are receivable as admissions against any grantee claiming under him. The history and slow development of this principle have already been noticed (ante, § 1080). It is sufficient here to say that the principle is to-day fully and universally conceded,[1] subject only to a modification due merely to its conflict with another principle (par. 3, infra):

[17] Post, § 1086, par. (b), and cases passim in §§ 1082–1806.

[18] 1893, Milburn v. Phillips, 136 Ind. 680, 695, 34 N. E. 983, 36 N. E. 360.

§ 1082. [1] The precedents are as follows, and should be read in the light of the remaining remarks of the text of § 1082; where not otherwise noted, the admissions were received without qualification:

ENGLAND: 1697, Sussex v. Temple, 1 Ld. Raym. 310 (answer in chancery); 1704, Ford v. Grey, 1 Salk. 286, 6 Mod. 44 (deed-recitals; see the quotation from this case, post, § 1256); 1812, Dartmouth v. Roberts, 16 East 334, 339 (answer in chancery by a co-defendant L. in a former suit on the same issue of tithes, admitted; "the defendant stood in the same place by derivation of title and by legal obligation as L., and L. upon his oath in a suit against him by the vicar has declared that the tithe is due to the rector and not to the vicar, and now that same person, in effect, is deraigning the title of the rector in favor of the vicar; the reading of his answer therefore operates as a contradiction to him"); 1818, DeWhelpdale v. Milburn, 5 Price 485, 488 (answer in chancery by a former dean and chapter); 1829, Madison v. Nuttall, 6 Bing. 226 (a former rector's written register of tithes, received "as an admission by a preceding rector"); 1832, Doe v. Austin, 9 Bing. 41, 45 (admissions of the predecessor under whom defendant claimed, received against him); 1834, Doe v. Cole, 6 C. & P. 359, 361 (similar ruling to Madison v. Nuttall); 1834, Woolway v. Rowe, 1 A. & E. 114 (former proprietor's disclaimer of a right of inclosure, admitted); 1834, Doe v. Seaton, 2 A. & E. 171, 179.

CANADA: 1846, Payson v. Good, 3 Kerr N. Br. 272, 279; 1873, Niles v. Burke, 14 N. Br. 237 (boundaries); 1874, Hamilton v. Holder, 15 N. Br. 222, 225 (but they were excluded in Carter v. Saunders, 1864, 6 All. 147, 150); 1916, Taylor v. Vanderburgh, 30 D. L. R. 196, Ont. (conduct of a predecessor, amounting to an admission as to boundaries, admitted).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1830, Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 83 (deed-recitals, admitted; see citation post, § 1256); 1876, Dodge v. Freedman's S. & T. Co., 93 U. S. 379, 383 (admissible, but "only to show the character of the possession" and "by what title he holds"; opinion confused; see post, § 1256); 1879, Baker v. Humphrey, 101 U. S. 494 (admissions of grantee as to the object of the conveyance to defeat creditors, received); 1897, Henderson v. Wanamaker, 25 C. C. A. 181, 79 Fed. 736; 1911, Northrup v. Columbian Lumber Co., C. C. A., 186 Fed. 770 (received, where made before title transferred);

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1849 ("Where, however, one derives title to real property from another, the declaration, act, or admission of the latter, while holding the title, in relation to the property, is evidence against the former"); 1852, Kilburn v. Ritchie, 2 Cal. 145, 148, semble; 1859, Stanley v. Green, 12 Cal. 148, 163 ("It matters not whether the declarations relate to the limits of the party's own premises, or the extent of his neighbor's, or to the boundary line between them, or to the nature of the title he asserts"); 1867, Bollo v. Navarro, 33 Cal. 459, 466; 1877, McFadden v. Ellmaker, 52 Cal. 348; 1882, People v. Blake, 60 Cal. 497, 503, 511; 1898, Williams v. Harter, 121 Cal. 47, 53 Pac. 405; 1902, Harp v. Harp, 136 Cal. 421, 69 Pac. 28;

Connecticut (compare the historical summary ante, § 1080): 1805, Nichols v. Hotchkiss, 2 Day 121, 126 (excluded, because the grantors were neither dead nor disqualified by interest); 1815, Barrett v. French, 1 Conn. 354, 365 (he is claiming to set aside an ancestress' deed for undue influence; "it has been uniformly decided that the declarations of the grantor, when the grantee is not present, prior or subsequent to the execution," are inadmissible); 1818, Beers v. Hawley, 2 Conn.

1843, WALWORTH, C., in Padgett v. Lawrence, 10 Paige 170, 180: "As a general rule, declarations made by a person in possession of real estate as to his interest or title in the property, may be given in evidence against those who derive title under him, in the same manner as they could have been used against the party himself if he had not parted with

467, 471 (grantor's declaration as to time of a deed's delivery, made before his transfer, admitted against the grantees "who claim under him"; preceding cases ignored); 1826, Clark v. Beach, 6 Conn. 142, 149 (question not decided); 1829, Norton v. Pettibone, 7 id. 319, 323 (declaration by defendant's ancestor's grantor that he had taken his deed in fraud of his own grantor's creditors, admitted against defendant; Beers v. Hawley confirmed; Barrett v. French by implication repudiated on this point); 1833, Fitch v. Chapman, 10 Conn. 8, 12 (declarations of a mortgagor, who had bought in his land with money of the defendant, that he had bought for the defendant, not admitted against the plaintiff, a creditor of the mortgagor, because the latter was still competent as a witness; Norton v. Pettibone and Beers v. Hawley distinguished on this ground); 1837, Deming v. Carrington, 12 Conn. 1, 4 (issue as to a boundary; declarations of C., under whom defendant claimed, admitted against defendant, though C. was alive and qualified; distinction made in Fitch v. Chapman repudiated; "where such identity exists, they are admissible, although the person making them is alive and competent to testify"); 1845, Smith v. Martin, 17 Conn. 399, 401 (preceding rule approved; "it seems to be perfectly well settled in this State"); 1847, Ramsbottom v. Phelps, 18 Conn. 278, 285 (same); 1901, Hamilton v. Smith, 74 Conn. 374, 50 Atl. 884 (Deming v. Carrington followed);

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5767 ("Declarations of a person in possession of property, in disparagement of his own title, are admissible in favor of any one, and against privies. Declarations in favor of his own title are admissible to prove his adverse possession");

Illinois: 1899, Gage v. Eddy, 179 Ill. 492, 53 N. E. 1008 (admitted; this ought to discredit Hart v. Randolph, 142 Ill. 521, 525, 32 N. E. 517, where the contrary statement was obiter made); 1915, Bald v. Nuernberger, 267 Ill. 616, 108 N. E. 724 (a printed sale bill, by a predecessor in title, omitting to name the tract in dispute, admitted as a disclaimer-admission; neither Gage v. Eddy nor Hart v. Randolph, supra, are mentioned in the opinion); 1922, Illman v. Kruse, 301 Ill. 408, 134 N. E. 107 (deed absolute as a mortgage; assignor's statements after parting with his interest, excluded);

Indian Terr. 1896, McCurtain v. Grady, 1 Ind. T. 107, 38 S. W. 65.

Iowa: 1876, Hurley v. Osler, 44 Ia. 642, 644; 1922, Mather v. Sewell, — Ia. —, 186 N. W. 636 (grantor's statements after a conveyance, not received to show its conditional nature);

Kansas: 1908, Kitchell v. Hodgen, 78 Kan. 551, 97 Pac. 369 (sale of realty);

Maine: 1839, Crane v. Marshall, 16 Me. 27, 29; 1861, Peabody v. Hewett, 52 Me. 33, 45;

Maryland: 1813, Dorsey v. Dorsey, 3 H. & J. 410, 420, 426; 1826, Coale v. Harrington, 7 H. & J. 147, 156; 1841, Clary v. Grimes, 12 G. & J. 32, 35;

Massachusetts: 1825, Davis v. Spooner, 3 Pick. 284, 288 (plaintiff and defendant claimed under deeds from A.; the plaintiff's deed being prior but unrecorded, A.'s admissions, made prior to the second deed, that the first existed, were received against the defendant, "considering that the defendant knew of the conveyance"; purporting to follow Bridge v. Eggleston, post); 1841, Proprietors v. Bullard, 2 Metc. 363, 368 (admissions of predecessor, while owner, received); 1861, Blake v. Everett, 1 All. 248, 249 (similar); 1867, Morrison v. Chapin, 97 Mass. 72, 77 (similar); 1910, Abbott v. Walker, 204 Mass. 71, 90 N. E. 405 (but here the Court erroneously states limitation of § 1567, post, i.e. that the declarations were made while on land);

Michigan: 1878, Cook v. Knowles, 38 Mich. 316 (grantor's admissions that his deed was falsely antedated, received; Cooley, J., diss., on the principle of § 1256, post); 1891, Merritt v. Stebbins, 86 Mich. 342, 48 N. W. 1084 (grantor's statements, excluded; obscure opinion);

Missouri: 1891, Meier v. Meier, 105 Mo. 411, 422, 430, 16 S. W. 223; 1898, Boynton v. Miller, 144 Mo. 681, 46 S. W. 754;

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10510 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1849);

Nebraska: 1892, Cunningham v. Fuller, 35 Nebr. 58, 60, 52 N. W. 836;

New Hampshire: 1821, Adams v. French, 2 N. H. 387 (admissions by the defendant's grantor, in a judgment obtained by the plaintiff, received against the defendant); 1826, Downs v. Lyman, 3 id. 486, 487 ("declarations of a person in possession of land, as to the nature of his possession", admissible against "all persons claiming under him"); 1844, Smith v. Powers, 15 N. H. 546, 563; 1858, Fellows v. Fellows, 37 N. H. 75, 84 (oral admissions as to non-title, held receivable); 1859, Little v. Gibson, 39 N. H. 505, 511; 1860, Hurlburt v. Wheeler, 40 N. H. 73, 76 (same); 1916, Barker v. Publishers' Paper Co., 78 N. H. 160, 97 Atl. 749 (title by adverse possession; declarations of one not a predecessor in title, excluded);

New Jersey: 1810, Townsend v. Johnson, 2 Penningt. 705 (declarations of defendant's predecessor, as to a boundary line, admitted against him); 1887, Miller v. Feenane, 50 N. J. L. 32, 11 Atl. 136;

his possession or interest; on the other hand, it is equally well settled that no declarations of a former owner of the property, made after he had parted with his interest therein, or which are overreached by the purchase of the party claiming through or under him, can be received in evidence to affect the legal or equitable title to the premises."

(1) It is to be noted that, upon this principle, statements made before title accrued in the declarant will not be receivable.[2] On the other hand, the time of divestiture, after which no statements could be treated as admissions, is the time when the party against whom they are offered has by his own hypothesis acquired the title; thus, in a suit, for example, between A's heir and A's grantee, A's statements at any time before his death are receivable against the heir; but only his statements before the grant are receivable against the grantee.[3]

New York: 1809, Jackson v. Bard, 4 John. 230; 1813, Jackson v. McCall, 10 John. 377; 1837, Varick v. Briggs, 6 Paige 323, 327; 1840, Luce v. Carley, 24 Wend. 451, 455; 1843, Padgett v. Lawrence, 10 Paige 170, 180 (see quotation supra); 1867, Vrooman v. King, 36 N. Y. 477, 483; 1877, Chadwick v. Fonner, 69 id. 404, 407;
North Carolina: 1803, Clark v. Arnold, 2 Hayw. 287 (declarations of the defendant's vendor, that he had not paid the purchase-money, not admitted against the defendant; but the Reporter, respectfully explaining this as an error in "the hurry of business", maintains the ruling wrong, as "too clear to need much illustration; . . . I cannot agree to disseminate wrong legal opinions out of respect to the opinion of any one"); 1819, Guy v. Hall, 3 Murph. 150 (grantor's declarations, admitting a prior sale, received against the later grantee; see quotation supra, § 1080); 1833, Hoyatt v. Phifer, 4 Dev. 273 (recitals in a deed, admissible against those claiming under it); 1838, May v. Gentry, 4 Dev. & B. 117, 119 (principle applied); 1852, Satterwhite v. Hicks, Busbee L. 105 (admissions of a debtor-grantor, that he was not indebted to the grantee, admitted against the latter on a creditor's behalf); 1902, Ratliff v. Ratliff, 131 N. C. 425, 42 S. E. 887 (grantor's statements before transfer, admitted);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 706 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1849);
Pennsylvania: 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64, 65 (letters of one P., admitted, since the defendant was lessee of P.'s heirs; the objection overruled was that "the defendant is not to be affected by the conduct of a third person"); 1810, Bonnet v. Devebaugh, 3 Binn. 175, 179 (deed-recitals; "no point of law is better established"); 1818, Diggs v. Downing, 4 S. & R. 347, 352 (deed-recital); 1818, Weidman v. Kohr, 4 S. & R. 174 ("the privity between that party and the plaintiff renders his confessions evidence against the plaintiff"; here, oral declarations as to the scope of a land-warrant); 1832, Gibblehouse v. Stong, 3 Rawle 436, 442 (declarations as to holding in trust, admitted; Huston, J., diss. on the principle of § 1256); 1832, Reed v. Dickey, 1 Watts 152, 154; 1919, Dawson v. Coulter, 262 Pa. 566, 106 Atl. 187 (dividing line between two tracts);
Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 276 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1848, 1849);
Porto Rico: 1920, Santiago v. Santiago, 28 P. R. 903, 909 (conveyance by P. to G.; in an action by P.; heirs to set it aside, P.'s documents received against them as admissions);
South Carolina: 1898, Levi v. Gardner, 53 S. C. 24, 30 S. E. 617 (admissible to show the character of his possession);
Utah: 1902, Church of Jesus Christ v. Watson, 25 Utah 45, 69 Pac. 531;
Vermont: 1841, Carpenter v. Hollister, 13 Vt. 552, 555 (grantor's admissions as to extent of possession, receivable; see post, § 1256); 1842, Hines v. Soule, 14 Vt. 99, 105 (Carpenter v. Hollister approved); 1918, Waterman v. Moody, 92 Vt. 218, 103 Atl. 325 (grantor's admissions received; careful opinion by Taylor, J., explaining prior cases);
Virginia: 1800, Walthol v. Johnson, 2 Call 275 (mortgagee's admissions received against the buyer on foreclosure); 1895, Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 226, 21 S. E. 347 (boundaries); 1895, Fry v. Stowers, 92 Va. 13, 22 S. E. 500 (boundaries);
West Virginia: 1905, Stewart v. Doak Bros., 58 W. Va. 172, 52 S. E. 95 (boundaries);
Wisconsin: 1866, Kelley v. Kelley, 20 Wis. 443, 446; 1901, Kreckeberg v. Leslie, 111 Wis. 462, 87 N. W. 450 ("declarations characterizing or defining his possession and claim", admissible); 1917, McGinty v. Brotherhood, 166 Wis. 83, 164 N. W. 249.

[2] 1857, Tyler v. Mather, 9 Gray Mass. 177, 185; 1871, Noyes v. Merrill, 108 Mass. 396, 399; 1880, Stockwell v. Blamey, 129 Mass. 312; 1911, Washoe Copper Co. v. Junila, 43 Mont. 178, 115 Pac. 917 (title not shown at all); 1872, Bullis v. Montgomery, 50 N. Y. 352, 358; 1885, Hutchins v. Hutchins, 98 N. Y. 56, 64.

[3] 1915, Halifax Power Co. v. Christie, 23 D. L. R. 481, N. S. (title claimed under deed

(2) The death of the declarant need of course not be shown (ante, § 1049); with Admissions, that circumstance is immaterial, for a grantor's as well as for those of the party himself. But if the grantor is deceased, the statement may thus become also admissible under the Hearsay exception (post, § 1458) for statements of facts against proprietary interest; and under this exception they are admissible for either party.[4]

(3) The principle requiring the production of documentary originals has sometimes been thought to override the principle of admissions, so as to preclude the use of a party's admissions to evidence the contents of a document until the loss of the document is first shown (post, § 1255). This doctrine in its present application would forbid the use of a grantor's admissions of lack of title whenever the party claiming under him had proved a documentary title in his grantor, because the admission would in effect be that some other document divesting that title had existed; and the offeror of the admission, in order to use it, must therefore apply it to some specific deed and prove that deed to be lost. Such is the doctrine that was finally worked out in New York, in a series of confusing rulings (post, § 1256) often cited elsewhere in fragments.

This doctrine, however, still permits the free use of a grantor's admissions either when the title derived from him purports to rest on adverse possession only, or when the admissions concern, not the documentary title, but only the extent of occupied boundaries or some other feature of possession. Thus in some jurisdictions it is common to state the general principle of Admissions in a limited form, namely, to be receivable so far as they concern the character or extent of the grantor's possession. This peculiar form is due chiefly to the foregoing doctrine, and also in part to the early traditional confusion (explained ante, § 1080) between a grantor's admissions and verbal acts of disclaim coloring a prescriptive possession. But, on the whole, this modified form seems merely fitted to confuse, and can hardly be said to be worthy of sanction. It has now become something more than a local rule of New York; but it has not been widely accepted.[5]

(4) In Massachusetts, at an early date, when the theory of predecessors' admissions was as yet everywhere inchoate in conception (ante, § 1080), its results were reached, in a special class of cases — namely, sales in fraud of from heirs of M., and by prior grant to T. from M.; M.'s admission that he had sold to T., received against the heirs' grantee; following Ivat v. Finch cited post, § 1083, n. 2; no discrimination made between deceased person's declarations against interest and party's admissions); 1885, Davis v. Melson, 66 Ia. 715, 24 N. W. 526. So also the following instance: 1828, Forsyth v. Kreakbaum, 7 T. B. Monr. Ky. 97, 100 (father's gift to a child, followed by his sale to another; father's declarations before the sale, admitted against the vendee).

[4] E.g.: 1895, Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 226, 21 S. E. 347 (deed established for plaintiff by statements against interest of a deceased prior grantor of plaintiff in a suit between the grantor and his grantee).

[5] In the foregoing collection of citations, in note 1, its effect is briefly noted where it is recognized; but the rulings which recognize it are collected and more fully stated post, §§ 1255–1257, in dealing with the rule for proof of documents. It may be assumed not to be law in jurisdictions where it has not been expressly adopted, as shown in those citations; but only a few jurisdictions have expressly rejected it.

creditors — on a different theory; the debtor's declarations before the sale were received as evidence of intent, being admissible either as circumstantial evidence (ante, §§ 242, 266) or as exceptions to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1729). This theory, sound enough in its application to that specific situation, was plainly enunciated in Bridge v. Eggleston, a ruling which had a great vogue and has since served as a precedent in other jurisdictions.[6] It is not to be found fault with, provided it does not cause us to ignore the principle of Admissions, which equally serves for the same class of cases and additionally covers a more extended scope.

§ 1083. Same: (b) Personalty; New York Rule. There is no reason why the general principle (ante, § 1080) of transferrors' admissions should not apply as well to the admissions of the vendor and assignor of personalty as to those of the grantor of realty. Indeed, the objection, already noticed (ante, § 1082, par. 3), due to the supposed infringement of the principle of producing documentary originals, here falls away in substance. Nor has any reason of policy ever been advanced against the use of vendors' admissions which did not equally attack the whole principle of transferrors' admissions; and Senator Lott, in the controlling opinion in Paige v. Cagwin,[1]

[6] Many of the following cases apply the doctrine to personalty: CANADA: 1857, Doe v. Fraser, 3 All. N. Br. 417 (defendant's father's declarations, not received to show the indebtedness or intent, unless made at or about the time of the deed); UNITED STATES: California: 1857, Landecker v. Houghtaling, 7 Cal. 391 (personalty; doctrine of Bridge v. Eggleston, Mass., approved); 1857, Visher v. Webster, 8 Cal. 109, 113 (preceding case approved); Connecticut: 1810, Beach v. Catlin, 4 Day 284, 292 (realty; debtor's prior declarations of fraudulent intent, excluded, "for the grantee ought not to be affected by the declarations of the grantor, unless they came to his knowledge"); 1823, Cook v. Swan, 5 Conn. 140, 145, 149 (realty; debtor's prior declarations, claiming a debt to the grantee, admitted for the grantee as "part of the 'res gesta'", citing Bridge v. Eggleston, Mass.); 1840, Pettibone v. Phelps, 13 Conn. 445, 450 (similar); Illinois: 1850, Prior v. White, 12 Ill. 261, 264 (personalty; mortgagor's declaration of intent, excluded unless knowledge of them prior to the mortgage is brought home to the mortgagee, "as tending to show his participation in the fraudulent scheme"; Bridge v. Eggleston, Mass., approved); Maine: 1854, Fisher v. True, 38 Me. 534, 536 (personalty; debtor's declarations admitted on the theory of Bridge v. Eggleston, Mass.); Massachusetts: 1815, Clarke v. Waite, 12 Mass. 439 (realty; debtor's statements excluded, without discrimination as to the time of their utterance); 1817, Bridge v. Eggleston, 14 Mass. 245, 250 (realty; debtor's declarations admitted, provided by other evidence the grantee's knowledge of the fraud is shown; Clarke v. Waite in this light explained; the opinion, however, does not treat the grantor's declarations as admissions at all, but as evidence of a fraudulent intent, under the principles of § 1729, post, and § 266, ante); 1831, Foster v. Hall, 12 Pick. 89, 99 (realty; Bridge v. Eggleston approved); 1867, Winchester v. Charter, 97 Mass. 140, 143 (realty); New Hampshire: 1842, Blake v. White, 13 N. H. 267, 273 (debtor's declarations, held admissible, on the theory of Bridge v. Eggleston); Oregon: 1902, Beers v. Aylsworth, 41 Or. 251, 69 Pac. 1025; 1902, Robson v. Hamilton, 41 Or. 239, 69 Pac. 651; Washington: 1892, O'Hare v. Duckworth, 4 Wash. 469; 474 (debtor's declarations admitted; citing Bridge v. Eggleston); Wisconsin: 1860, Gillet v. Phelps, 12 Wis. 437, 439, 446 (debtor's declarations, at the time of the sale, admitted to show his fraudulent intent); 1861, Bates v. Ableman, 13 Wis. 644, 650 (same principle sanctioned); 1861, Bogert v. Phelps, 14 Wis. 81, 95 (same).

Upon this question of evidencing fraudulent intent, another sort of evidence (frequently dealt with in the same rulings) must be distinguished, namely, other fraudulent sales by the debtor at the same time; this has been already treated in considering circumstantial evidence (ante, § 333).

One question of substantive law also usually arises in such cases, and must be distinguished from these evidential questions, — whether the knowledge by the creditor of the debtor's fraudulent intent is essential to avoiding the sale; an example may be seen in Foster v. Hall, 12 Pick. 89.

§ 1083. [1] New York, infra.

expressly conceded that his opposition rested on those broad grounds and would have effected a total exclusion if precedent had permitted.

(1) Accordingly, the English Courts, and most American Courts, apply the principle consistently, and receive without question all admissions by the vendor of personalty made while title was in him.[2]

(2) In a few Courts, the early Massachusetts doctrine of Bridge v. Eggleston, (ante, § 1082, par. 4) is applied to admit a debtor's declaration before his sale of personalty, on an issue of fraud against his creditors.[3]

(3) In New York, after some vacillation, a rule of exclusion was finally settled upon for the admissions of a vendor of personalty when offered against a purchaser for value. In 1843, in Paige v. Cagwin, this doctrine received the sanction of a majority of the Court, and has ever since maintained itself, in spite of repeated attempts to pare it down.[4] The historical explanation of

[2] ENGLAND: 1808, Ivat v. Finch, 1 Taunt. 141 (trespass for taking three mares, the defendant justifying as lord of the manor; the prior tenant's admissions that she had given the stock to the plaintiff, received, "because the right of the lord of the manor depended upon her title"); UNITED STATES: Fed. 1903, Fourth Nat'l Bank v. Albaugh, 188 U. S. 734, 23 Sup. 450; Ala. 1854, Jennings v. Blocker, 25 Ala. 415, 422; 1856, Fralick v. Presley, 29 Ala. 457, 462; 1857, Cole v. Varner, 31 Ala. 244, 250; 1862, Arthur v. Gayle, 38 Ala. 259, 267; Ill. 1869, Randegger v. Ehrhardt, 51 Ill. 101, 103; Ind. 1858, King v. Wilkins, 11 Ind. 346; 1862, Boone Co. Bank v. Wallace, 18 Ind. 82, 85; 1862, Bunberry v. Brett, 18 Ind. 343; 1875, Campbell v. Coon, 51 Ind. 76, 78 (the foregoing cases in effect overrule the early case of Ashley v. West, 3 Ind. 170, 172); Ia. 1877, Moss v. Dearing, 45 Ia. 530, 532 (grantor's admissions of a debt to grantee, receivable against other creditors); 1897, Thomas v. McDonald, 102 Ia. 564, 71 N. W. 572 (vendor's admissions as to fraudulent intent, received); Ky. 1828, Forsyth v. Kreakbaum, 7 T. B. Monr. 97, 100; Me. 1833, Hatch v. Dennis, 1 Fairf. 244; 1836, Breene v. Harriman, 14 Me. 32 (anomalous; vendor's admissions as to payment, excluded); 1846, Holt v. Walker, 26 Me. 107; 1855, McLanathan v. Patten, 39 Me. 142; Md. 1830, Stocket v. Watkins, 2 G. & J. 326, 343, semble (but here a widow's admissions were held not receivable against her executor who claimed as her husband's administrator d. b. n.); Pa. 1826, Kellogg v. Krauser, 14 S. & R. 137, 141 (judgment); 1870, Magee v. Maignel, 64 Pa. 110.

For Vermont see infra, note 7.

[3] The precedents have been already noticed in § 1082, par. 4.

[4] 1806, Waring v. Warren, 1 John. 340 (admissions of defendant's wife before marriage, received to show title in plaintiff); 1814, Alexander v. Mahon, 11 John. 185 (execution-creditor claiming against distraining landlord; the debtor's admissions of the tenancy, excluded; "as C. was a good and competent witness, the plaintiff in error cannot avail himself of his confessions"; no authority cited); 1827, Hurd v. West, 7 Cow. 753, 759 (admissions of defendant's vendor, in possession of sheep before the sale, that he was a mere bailee from the plaintiff, excluded; "where one is competent as a witness for the party, the latter cannot avail himself of the confessions of the former"; citing the preceding case; Esek Cowen, Esq., afterwards judge, approves the ruling in a reporter's note); 1828, Austin v. Sawyer, 9 Cow. 39 (sale of wheat; the vendor's admissions, before sale, that it belonged to the plaintiff, were received without question; the same reporter notes this as over-ruling the preceding case); 1831, Kent v. Walton, 7 Wend. 256 (action by the second indorsee of a renewal note against the maker; the first indorsee's admissions that the first note was usurious, excluded; no authority cited); 1832, Whitaker v. Brown, 8 Wend. 490 (action by bearer against the maker of a note to R. or bearer; R.'s admissions that "the defendant was not liable", excluded, following Hurd v. West, N. Y., and Duckham v. Wallis, Eng., post, § 1084; repudiating Cowen's note to Austin v. Sawyer); 1834, Crary v. Sprague, 12 Wend. 41 (hides claimed by the plaintiffs as vendees against parties concerned in various executions against the vendor; to show a fraudulent combination on the part of the defendants' assignors of the judgment claims, the assignors' declarations "while engaged in bringing about the sale" were received as "giving character to the transaction of sale"); 1834, Bristol v. Dann, 12 Wend. 142 (action by the indorsee against the maker of a partnership note; the payee's admissions that defendant was not a member of the partnership, excluded, following Whitaker v. Brown; "the rule seems to be that a party who can call a witness shall not be permitted to prove

Paige v. Cagwin has been already noticed (ante, § 1080). No useful policy seems to support it; and it has thus far remained a distinctly local rule. The rule of Paige v. Cagwin is, however, held not to include in its scope the statements of a bankrupt made before assignment.[5] Moreover, a successful attempt to evade it seems to have been made for the admissions of a vendor offered against his vendee on an issue charging a sale in fraud of creditors.[6] In Ver-his declarations; a former owner of real estate, through whom the title has passed, is said to be an exception"); 1841, Beach v. Wise, 1 Hill 612 (Kent v. Walton, Whitaker v. Brown, Bristol v. Dann, followed; but the Court, per Bronson, J., declares its dissatisfaction with the distinction excluding the admissions of a vendor or personalty; the decease of the predecessor held to be immaterial); 1844, Stark v. Boswell, 6 Hill 405 (doctrine applied); 1843, Paige v. Cagwin, 7 Hill 361 (admissions by the payee of a note, not received against a subsequent transferee for value after maturity; rule of exclusion affirmed for transfers of personalty in general, but confined to the case of a transferee for value, and not applied to a "privy by representation, as in cases of bankruptcy, death, and other cases of a similar character"; the decision was rendered by a majority of the Court of Errors, 13 to 7); 1847, Brisbane v. Pratt, 4 Denio 63 (preceding rule approved, but here not applied, the plaintiff not being a holder for value); 1852, Jermain v. Denniston, 6 N. Y. 276 (Paige v. Cagwin recognized, but held not to apply to a bank's admission, by pass-book entry, made while holding a note, that it had been paid; the rule is inapplicable where "the previous holder, while he owned the note, put into the hands of the maker, in the usual course of business, written evidence of its payment and discharge"); 1853, Booth v. Swezey, 8 N. Y. 276, 280 (Paige v. Cagwin approved, but said obiter not to apply to "a written receipt or discharge of debt which had been assigned by a former holder", because that would be "an act of the parties", and not a "mere conversation or ex parte admission"); 1854, Brown v. Mailler, 12 N. Y. 118 (Paige v. Cagwin recognized); 1858, Tousley v. Barry, 16 N. Y. 497, 500 (Booth v. Swezey followed); 1860, Foster v. Beals, 21 N. Y. 247 (mortgagee's written receipt for part payment of a bond and mortgage, not received against the assignee in good faith for value; Jermain v. Denniston distinguished, and the obiter dictum in Booth v. Swezey disapproved; Comstock, C. J., diss.); 1877, Chadwick v. Fonner, 69 N. Y. 404, 407 (Paige v. Cagwin approved); 1878, Von Sachs v. Kretz, 72 N. Y. 548, 554 (Paige v. Cagwin approved); 1879, Foote v. Beecher, 78 N. Y. 155, 157 (mortgagor's admissions of non-payment of a note, not received against a subsequent assignee of the equity); 1881, Truax v. Slater, 86 N. Y. 630, 632 (declarations of the assignor of a chose in action, held inadmissible); 1900, Merkle v. Beidleman, 165 N. Y. 21, 58 N. E. 757 (rule of exclusion applied to a mortgagee's declarations; "the case of Paige v. Cagwin practically closed the judicial discussion in this State", — an odd remark, in view of the rulings that occurred since the discussion was "closed"); 1905, Conkling v. Weatherwax, 181 N. Y. 258, 73 N. E. 1028 (Foote v. Beecher, Merkle v. Beidleman, supra, approved, obiter); 1912, People v. Storrs, 207 N. Y. 147, 100 N. E. 730 (forgery by a wife of a marriage settlement, dated Aug. 21, 1909, by the husband, reciting the gift of an automobile, etc., to her; the deceased husband's declarations, made at some time in the summer of 1909, that he had so given the automobile, held admissible for the defence, on the theory that the Paige v. Cagwin is subject to an exception allowing a deceased owner's disclaimers to be used against his representative in defence to a claim of title; but this is hardly an exception, as the rule of Paige v. Cagwin was expressly limited to purchasers for value).

[5] 1843, Paige v. Cagwin, supra; 1878, Von Sachs v. Kretz, 72 N. Y. 548, 554 (bankrupt's admissions of a set-off, made before the assignment, admitted against the assignee; "the qualification found in Paige v. Cagwin that the vendee or assignee must be a purchaser for value in order to make the declaration inadmissible, is an essential part of the rule; . . . the assignee in bankruptcy is not a purchaser for value"; repudiating the contrary obiter dictum in Bullis v. Montgomery, 50 N. Y. 352, 359, that "there is no such identity of interest between an insolvent assignor in trust for creditors and his assignee"). Compare the cases cited ante, § 1081.

[6] 1869, Cuyler v. McCartney, 40 N. Y. 221, 226 (personalty; excluded; "It will not do to say that testimony to the assignor's admission is competent evidence against him; . . . evidence good as against the assignor only does not contribute in any way to defeat their [the assignees'] title"; here they had taken possession); 1876, Stowell v. Hazelett, 66 N. Y. 625 (personalty; debtor's declarations admitted against himself); 1888, Loos v. Wilkinson, 110 N. Y. 195, 211, 18 N. E. 99 (assignor's declarations admitted; "they were competent against the persons making them, . . . and being competent against them, they could not have been excluded by the Court"). Yet it must be remembered that both the first and the last of the above cases are still cited

mont, just before the ruling in Paige v. Cagwin, the same result had been reached;[7] but the anomaly was soon repudiated.[8]

§ 1084. Same: (c) Negotiable Instruments. The holder of a negotiable instrument receives it from a prior holder free of equities and other defences personal to the prior holder; in this lies the element of negotiability. Consequently, the second holder's title is not identical with and dependent upon that of the first holder; and the admissions of the latter would (on the principle of § 1080), not be receivable against the former. But wherever the element of negotiability is wanting — as where the transfer is made after maturity — this distinction ceases; identity of title is found; and the admissions are receivable:

1843, Messrs. Cowen and Hill, in Notes to Phillipps on Evidence, No. 481, p. 668: "The distinction that although the party, who acquires a bill or note by endorsement, delivery or otherwise, after it is due or dishonored, or with notice or without consideration, or in any other manner which deprives him of the character of a 'bona fide' holder, is so far identified with the previous owner, that his declarations, while owner, may be received against such party; yet, that where the latter is a 'bona fide' holder in the course of trade, he cannot be touched by such declarations, not only harmonizes with various other legal consequences growing out of that character, but the cases all speak directly and uniformly upon this branch of hearsay evidence. The principle is, that the 'bona fide' holder is not a mere privy in title or estate with the preceding owner, except with regard to certain grounds of defence, which we have noticed. Among them are usury or gaming, or the like vice, which nullifies the bill or note absolutely in the hands of the holder, whether 'bona fide' or 'mala fide'; even this is now qualified by statute in several countries. . . . But in other cases, the 'bona fide' holder, by his purchase of the bill or note, stands, in a great measure, independent of the former holder who endorsed or delivered the paper to him. The law disconnects him with the previous title, and takes him into its own charge, as deriving a right from itself. And hence, among other privileges, while it cuts him clear of all the previous hostile acts of his predecessor, it forbids that his declarations shall be used in derogation of those rights which he professed to confer."

This logical application of the theory of transferrors' admissions was finally worked out in England, after some confusion of rulings, and since Barough v. White has not been disputed.[1] In the United States it would as law in later rulings dealing with a related question (post, § 1086).

[7] 1842, Hines v. Soule, 14 Vt. 99, 106 (excluded, on the theory that "if a person is still living and can be a witness, he must be called, and that his admissions are not evidence against his vendee or successor"; Bennett, J., diss.); 1845, Ellis v. Howard, 17 Vt. 330, 335 (preceding case approved).

[8] 1853, Read v. Rice, 25 Vt. 177 (in a note, C. J. Redfield repudiated the reason given for the ruling in Hines v. Soule); 1856, Hayward Rubber Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29, 39 (Hines v. Soule "has heretofore been considerably impugned"; "admissions made by the assignor of a chattel or personal contract prior to the assignment" are receivable against an assignee taking by that title); 1874, Downs v. Belden, 46 Vt. 674, 677 (preceding case approved); 1875, Alger v. Andrews, 47 Vt. 238, 241 (expressly announces that the decision in Hines v. Soule is overruled, "and for many years has not been regarded by the bench and bar of this State as declaring the true law of the subject"); 1918, Waterman v. Moody, 92 Vt. 218, 103 Atl. 325 (reviewing the foregoing cases).

§ 1084. [1] Where not otherwise stated, the instrument was not overdue when transferred: 1808, Kent v. Lowen, 1 Camp. 177, L. C. J. Ellenborough (usury; letters of the payee, at the time of making the note, admitted as "an act done by C. & Co., who were the payees of the note and through whom the plaintiff made title"); 1824, Pocock v. Billing, Ry. & Mo. 127, 1 C. & P. 230, 2 Bing. 269, L. C. J. Best (declarations of a former holder of a bill, if made while the holder, receivable); 1824, Coster v. Symons, 1 C. & P. 148, L. C. J. Ab-

to-day probably be recognized by Courts in all jurisdictions, except New York.[2]

§ 1085. Same: (2) Admissions after Transfer; Realty and Personalty, in general. On the general principle (ante, § 1080), statements made by the transferror of realty or of personalty, after transfer of title, are not receivable as admissions against the transferee. This much is never disputed, in the general application of the principle.[1] There may, however, be other principles of Evidence upon which such statements can be brought in; these are pointed out elsewhere (post, § 1087). Moreover, where the transfer is at-bott (declarations of the payee, admitting that the bill was discharged by a later one, received as "a declaration of the party under whom the plaintiff claims title"); 1824, Peckham v. Potter, 1 C. & P. 232, L. C. J. Gifford (payee's admissions of fraud in the consideration, admitted); 1824, Shaw v. Broom, 4 Dowl. & R. 730, K. B. (rule apparently conceded that the transfer must have been after maturity in order to make admissions receivable); 1825, Barough v. White, 6 Dowl. & R. 379, 4 B. & C. 325, K. B. (payee's declarations as to lack of consideration for a note payable on demand, excluded, unless the plaintiff "had been identified with A., by showing that he had taken the note without consideration, or after it was due"; Pocock v. Billing practically repudiated); 1825, Smith v. DeWruitz, Ry. & Mo. 212, L. C. J. Abbott (declarations held inadmissible "against a holder who had acquired the bill before it was due"); 1827, Hedger v. Horton, 3 C. & P. 179, Gaselee, J. (payee's declarations excluded, but not on the preceding principle); 1830, Beauchamp v. Perry, 1 B. & Ad. 89 (rule of Barough v. White followed); 1831, Haddan v. Mills, 4 B. & Ad. 486, C. J. Tindal (rule of Barough v. White followed); 1839, Phillips v. Cole, 10 A. & E. 106, 112 (same).

The converse doctrine, that the admissions would be excluded even if the transfer was after maturity, appeared at an early stage: 1805, Duckham v. Wallis, 5 Esp. 251, L. C. J. Ellenborough (admissions of payment, excluded; "It would be making the declarations of a third person evidence to affect the plaintiff's title when that person was not on the record"); but this rested on the early ignorance of the theory of admissions (as noted ante, § 1080), and was practically repudiated in the above line of rulings.

[2] Cal. 1911, Smith v. Goethe, 159 Cal. 628, 115 Pac. 223 (admissions by holders of notes as against subsequent holders taking after maturity, received); Conn. 1846, Roe v. Jerome, 18 Conn. 138, 151; 1847, Ramsbottom v. Phelps, 18 Conn. 278, 285; Ill. 1846, Williams v. Judy, 8 Ill. 282 (admitted; here usury made the note void; but it had become due before assignment); Ind. 1852, Blount v. Riley, 3 Ind. 471; 1854, Abbott v. Muir, 5 Ind. 444 (non-negotiable note); 1855, Stoner v. Ellis, 6 Ind. 152, 153 (statutory defence); Me. 1832, Shirley v. Todd, 9 Greenl. 83; 1833, Hatch v. Dennis, 1 Fairf. 244 (leading opinion: the chief argument opposed by counsel to the decision was that the payee of a negotiable instrument was not a party to the record and therefore was a competent witness; but the theory of privity of title was held to be paramount to this); 1852, Parker v. Marston, 34 Fairf. 386 (unindorsed note); Mass. 1833, Sylvester v. Crapo, 15 Pick. 92, 94; 1855, Bond v. Fitzpatrick, 4 Gray 89, 92; Okl. 1898, Frick v. Reynolds, 6 Okl. 638, 52 Pac. 391 (indorser's declarations as to unsoundness of horse for which note was given, made before transfer, admitted against subsequent holders if not 'bona fide'); Vt. 1856, Miller v. Bingham, 29 Vt. 82, 88. Undecided: 1827, Rose v. Knight, 4 N. H. 236, 239 (citing Pocock v. Billing).

In New York, the exclusionary rule of Paige v. Cagwin of course applies to choses in action, including overdue commercial paper, as well as to other personalty; the cases are placed ante, § 1083.

The Federal Supreme Court has once recognized this anomalous rule: 1876, Dodge v. Freedman's S. & T. Co., 93 U. S. 379, 383 (inadmissible; following Paige v. Cagwin).

§ 1085. [1] The cases collected ante, §§ 1082-1084, almost all imply this result also:

ENGLAND: 1842, Lord Trimlestown v. Kemmis, 5 Cl. & F. 749, 779 (abstract of title; statements "after he had parted with his interest", excluded).

CANADA: 1876, Philips v. Trueman, 16 N. Br. 391.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1848, Many v. Jagger, 1 Blatchf. 372, 376; 1905, West v. Houston Oil Co., 136 Fed. 343, 348, 69 C. C. A. 169 (land); Arkansas: 1918, Peters v. Priest, 134 Ark. 161, 203 S. W. 1042 (land); California: 1875, Tompkins v. Crane, 50 Cal. 478; 1893, Ord. v. Ord. 99 Cal. 523, 525, 34 Pac. 83; 1901, Banning v. Marleau, 133 Cal. 485, 65 Pac. 964; Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5780 (quoted ante, § 1080, n. 21); 1861, Howard v. Snelling, 32 Ga. 195, 203; 1875, Porter v. Allen, 54 Ga. 623 (even against a donee); 1891, Blalock v. Miland, 87 Ga. 573, 13 S. E. 551 (similar); 1895, Bowden v. Achor, 95 Ga. 243, 22 S. E. 271; 1896, Ogden v.

tacked as being in fraud of creditors, a special application of the principle of admissions may come into play; but this, being complicated with other questions, must now be examined separately.

§ 1086. Same: Transfers in Fraud of Creditors. Where the transfer is attacked as voidable because of being made with the intent to defraud creditors, Dodge Co., 97 Ga. 461, 25 S. E. 321; Illinois: 1854, Simpkins v. Rogers, 15 Ill. 397; 1866, Dunaway v. School Directors, 40 Ill. 247; 1869, Randegger v. Ehrhardt, 51 Ill. 101, 103; 1881, Bennett v. Stout, 98 Ill. 47, 51; 1884, Bentley v. O'Bryan, 111 Ill. 53, 62; 1892, Hart v. Randolph, 142 Ill. 521, 525, 32 N. E. 517 (even though while still in possession); 1893, Francis v. Wilkinson, 147 Ill. 370, 384, 35 N. E. 150; 1895, Miller v. Meers, 155 Ill. 284, 40 N. E. 577; 1897, Shea v. Murphy, 164 Ill., 614, 45 N. E. 1021; 1903, Lang v. Metzger, 206 Ill. 475, 69 N. E. 493; 1919, Delfosse v. Delfosse, 287 Ill. 251, 122 N. E. 484 (declarations of a grantor after execution and recording, excluded); Indiana: 1837, Doe v. Moore, 4 Blackf. 445 (even as against judgment-vendee, after date of judgment-lien accruing); 1861, Kieth v. Kerr, 17 Ind. 284, 286; 1861, Wynne v. Glidewell, 17 Ind. 446, 448; 1874, Burkholder v. Casad, 47 Ind. 418, 421; 1875, Harness v. Harness, 49 Ind. 384 (even as against the donee of an advancement); Woolery v. Woolery, 29 Ind. 249, and Hamlyn v. Nesbit, 37 Ind. 284, repudiated; 1875, Campbell v. Coon, 51 Ind. 76, 78; 1876, Garner v. Graves, 54 Ind. 188, 192; 1882, Somers v. Somers, 85 Ind. 599; 1887, Joyce v. Hamilton, 111 Ind. 163, 167, 12 N. E. 294; 1895, Robbins v. Spencer, 140 Ind. 483, 40 N. E. 263; Iowa: 1868, O'Neil v. Vanderburg, 25 Ia. 104, 107; 1881, McCormicks v. Fuller, 56 Ia. 43, 46, 8 N. W. 800; 1895, Neuffer v. Moehn, 96 Ia. 731, 65 N. W. 334; Kentucky: 1901, Fuqua v. Bogard, — Ky. —, 62 S. W. 480; 1906, Jones v. Tennis C. Co., — Ky. —, 94 S. W. 6; Louisiana: 1829, Dismukes v. Musgrove, 8 Mart. N. S. La. 375, 378; Maine: 1831, Hackett v. Martin, 8 Greenl. 77, 79 (commercial paper); Maryland: 1811, Thomas v. Denning, 3 H. & J. 242 (assignor's declaration after an alleged assignment of a bond, received; but apparently on the ground that the assignment was not sufficiently evidenced); Massachusetts: 1808, Bartlett v. Delprat, 4 Mass. 702, 707 (father's declarations denying a deed, not received against claimant under the deed, in favor of devisees of the father); 1817, Bridge v. Eggleston, 14 Mass. 245, 250 ("afterwards, he has no relation to the estate he has conveyed"); Michigan: 1896, Vyn v. Keppel, 108 Mich. 244, 65 N. W. 966; Minnesota: 1895, Kurtz v. R. Co., 61 Minn. 18, 63 N. W. 1; 1917, Jacobs v. Queen Ins. Co., 195 Mich. 18, 161 N. W. 936 (insurance policy); Nebraska: 1895, Consolidated T. L. Co. v. Pien, 44 Nebr. 887, 62 N. W. 1112; New Hampshire: 1825, Copp v. Upham, 3 N. H. 159 (admissions of a mortgagor, after assignment of his interest, not received for the mortgagee against the assignee; but the present principle is not invoked); New York: 1822, Frear v. Evertson, 20 John. 142 (debt); 1867, Vrooman v. King, 36 N. Y. 477, 483 (the offeror must show affirmatively that title was still in the declarant); 1893, Jones v. Jones, 137 N. Y. 610, 614, 33 N. E. 479; 1894, Holmes v. Roper, 141 N. Y. 64, 67, 36 N. E. 180 (note); 1902, Wangner v. Grimm, 169 N. Y. 421, 62 N. E. 569; 1905, Conkling v. Weatherwax, 181 N. Y. 258, 73 N. E. 1028 (a mortgagor, who was also executor; his admissions, made after execution of the mortgage, that the legacies had not been paid, not admitted against the mortgagee); North Carolina: 1846, Ward v. Saunders, 6 Ired. 382, 387 (but here received, when made before actual execution of the deed, which had been falsely antedated); North Dakota: 1898, Arnegaard v. Arnegaard, 7 N. D. 475, 75 N. W. 797; 1905, Leonard v. Fleming, 13 N. D. 629, 102 N. W. 308; Ohio: 1889, Hills v. Ludwig, 46 Oh. St. 373, 378, 24 N. E. 596; Oregon: 1895, Josephi v. Furnish, 27 Or. 260, 41 Pac. 424; Pennsylvania: 1805, Irwin v. Bear, 4 Yeates 262 (recitals in a patent); 1810, Bonnet v. Devebaugh, 3 Binn. 175, 179; 1815, Packer v. Gonsalus, 1 S. & R. 525, 535, 537; 1817, Wolf v. Carothers, 3 S. & R. 240, 245; 1822, Patton v. Goldsborough, 9 S. & R. 47, 55; 1825, Babb v. Clemson, 12 S. & R. 328; 1825, Morton v. M'Glaughlin, 13 S. & R. 107; 1868, Pringle v. Pringle, 59 Pa. 281, 289; 1898, McCullough v. R. Co., 186 Pa. 112, 40 Atl. 404 (by a grantor, after transfer, but during possession); 1915, Farmer's & Merchant's Bank v. Donnelly, 247 Pa. 518, 93 Atl. 761 (promissory notes); Philippine Islands: 1905, Manila v. Del Rosario, 5 P. I. 227, 230; South Carolina: 1909, Gowdy v. Gowdy, 83 S. C. 349, 65 S. E. 385 (by a mortgagee after sale); Tennessee: 1852, Carnahan v. Wood, 2 Swan 500, 502; Vermont: 1829, Bullard v. Billings, 2 Vt. 309, 312; 1842, Hines v. Soule, 14 Vt. 99, 105; 1901, Davis v. Buchanan, 73 Vt. 67, 50 Atl. 545; 1901, Ellis v. Watkins, 73 Vt. 371, 50 Atl. 1105 (note); Virginia: 1854, Smith v. Betty, 11 Gratt. 752, 763; 1883, Barbour v. Duncanson, 77 Va. 76, 83; 1885, Daily v. Warren, 80 Va. 512, 519; 1895, Brock v. Brock, 92 Va. 173, 175, 23 S. E. 224; West Virginia: 1874, Houston v. McCluney, 8 W. Va. 135, 156; Wisconsin: 1895, Matteson v. Hartman, 91 Wis. 485, 65 N. W. 58.

a variety of special considerations become applicable; and the efforts of the Courts to solve this puzzling problem have naturally been attended with some inconsistency and confusion. The source of it lies in the circumstance that distinct principles of Evidence may apply in certain conditions, and that opposite results would be reached according to the principle invoked.

At the outset, the cases obviously must be separated in which the debtor-transferror's statements are offered (a) against the transferee, and (b) against the creditor attacking the transfer and levying upon the property as still belonging to the debtor. The former situation, being the most common and the most involved, may be examined first:

A. Where the transferror's statements, made after the transfer of title, are offered against the transferee (usually consisting in plain admissions of fraud, or in assertions that the property is still his), it is clear that upon the principle of the preceding section, straightforwardly applied, they are inadmissible. This much is always conceded.

But there may be other ways of dealing with the evidence, by some of which (with or without the presence of special circumstances) the evidence may legitimately become admissible. At least five distinct theories, leading to that result, have been advanced by various Courts. Of these, the first three below enumerated invoke the principle of Admissions in one aspect or another; while the remaining two appeal to other established modes of evading the operation of the Hearsay rule. Of the five, it may be said that to-day the second would be nowhere disputed, and thus rarely arises for application by a Supreme Court. Of the other four, the third is also undisputed, but its requirements are more stringent than the others, and therefore it practically competes against them, because commonly the Courts which follow it repudiate the others. Nevertheless all five rest on established general doctrines and could conceivably be accepted by the same Court, so as to admit the evidence if it satisfied any one of the five. Finally, as between the competing theories, the third holds to-day the leading place, with the fourth apparently in next place for favor and tending to overtake. In some Courts, a pleasing eclecticism inclines them now to one and now to another theory; while on the part of a few Courts there is a sibylline obscurity of expression which baffles the attempt to interpret precisely their views.

The five theories, then, are as follows:

(1) The theory of Carnahan v. Wood, occasionally followed (in some other Court), seems to rest on this sequence of thought: Retention of possession is 'prima facie' fraudulent; fraud avoids the transfer; the title is still in the debtor; therefore, his admissions are made while title is still in him, and (on the principle of § 1082, ante) are receivable:

1852, MCKINNEY, J., in Carnahan v. Wood, 2 Swan 500, 502: "It is true, in general, that the declaration of a party, made after he has parted with his interest in the subject-matter of litigation, cannot be received to disparage the title or right of a party, acquired in good faith previous to the time of making such declaration. But this very just and reasonable principle must be taken as inapplicable to cases of fraudulent sales of property. If, for example, a conveyance is made, absolute upon its face, and the vendor continues to retain the possession of the property as before, this being 'prima facie' evidence of fraud, a creditor impeaching such conveyance on the ground of fraud, may be admitted to prove the declarations of the vendor, thus retaining the possession, in relation to the ownership, or to the character of his possession of the property. The fraudulent conveyance, though valid as between the parties, is void as to creditors of the vendor. So far as relates to them, the right of property remains unchanged in the vendor."

Upon this theory, the rule would limit the debtor's statements to those made while retaining possession. As a theory, it is possible; but it produces a suspicion that somewhere within its sequence the fallacy of begging the question is committed. Moreover, it would seem that at least it applies only when the transferror is a party to the cause.

(2) The second theory is that the transferror's statements are receivable when made in the presence of the transferee and impliedly assented to by his silence; in other words, it invokes the established principle of assenting silence (ante, § 1071), and receives the statements as the transferee's own admissions, made his by adoption. No Court disputes this, and in the opinions it is a proviso often noted in passing. It is mentioned here, because it is a frequently feasible method of using the evidence, though it invokes a distinct aspect of the principle of Admissions and is applicable in special circumstances only.

(3) The third theory is that of admissions by co-conspirators (ante, § 1079). When a conspiracy, on the part of transferror and transferee, to defraud the former's creditors, can somehow be established, the former's admissions are received against the latter, irrespective of being made before or after transfer or during possession, or of the transferror's being a party to the cause. Retention of possession becomes important only as one circumstance in the evidence of conspiracy. Moreover, the evidence of conspiracy must of course (ante, § 1079) be independent of the declarations desired to be admitted:

1869, WOODRUFF, J., in Cuyler v. McCartney, 40 N. Y. 221, 227: "[The admissibility of these declarations is insisted upon for the reason] that other evidence showed that the assignor and assignees were combined in a conspiracy to defraud the creditors of William T. Cuyler, and therefore the acts and declarations of either conspirator, while carrying the common intent into execution, and in furtherance thereof, are competent evidence to affect all the co-conspirators. This rule is not questioned. . . . [But] it is not and cannot be successfully claimed that mere proof that assignor and assignee have concurred in an assignment providing for the payment of debts, establishes a conspiracy within the rule. Delivering and accepting such an assignment establishes a common intent, but not a common intent to defraud. If mere proof of concurrence in the execution and delivery of the assignment established a common intent within the principle making the acts and declarations of the conspirators, while carrying their common design into execution, evidence against each other, then the rule first above stated [i.e. that declarations after transfer of title are inadmissible] is made a nullity. No sooner is an assignment made than the assignor may, by his acts or declarations out of court, defeat it, if he be dishonest enough to collude with any creditor, or to resent any dissatisfaction with the trustees, and defeat it by such means. To make such admissions or declarations competent evidence, it must stand as a fact in the cause, admitted or proved, that the assignor and assignees were in a conspiracy to defraud the creditors. If that fact exist, then the acts and declarations of either, made in execution of the common purpose, and in aid of its fulfilment, are competent against either of them. The principle of its admissibility assumes that fact. It necessarily follows that those declarations or admissions cannot be received to prove the fact itself. . . . So far then, as the admission of the evidence in this case, of declarations subsequent to the assignment, is sought to be sustained as evidence of the common fraud, on the ground of conspiracy, the argument wholly fails. A conspiracy cannot be proved against three, by evidence that one admitted it, nor against assignees by proof that the assignor admitted it; it is a fact that must be proved by evidence, the competency of which does not depend upon an assumption that it exists."

This theory is entirely sound so far as it goes. The only criticism to be made is that, though it is in itself entirely consistent with the ensuing two theories, yet the Courts which employ it commonly repudiate, expressly or impliedly, the remaining two, as well as the first above examined. Those may be or may not be unsound; but no Court need suppose that the recognition of this one is inconsistent with the recognition of the others; i.e. that the rejection of evidence because it does not satisfy the present one requires its absolute rejection without regard to the satisfaction of the others.

(4) The fourth theory appeals to the verbal-act doctrine (post, § 1772), and to that particular application of it which receives declarations by one in possession of property as coloring the nature of the possession and thus giving it a fraudulent or an honest complexion. The effect of this, when the transferror's declarations make for fraud, is to help to fortify the presumption of ownership from possession, and to fix fraud upon the transferror. The declarations do not affect the transferee, whose knowledge of the fraud is otherwise to be established (unless the presumption of ownership from possession be thought to satisfy). The theory has been thus expounded:[1]

1835, GASTON, J., in Askew v. Reynolds, 1 Dev. & B. 367, 369: "The possession of the slaves, having in this case been retained by the debtor, for eight or nine months after the execution of his bill of sale, was sufficient to impress upon the transaction the character of a fraudulent transfer, unless, from other facts and circumstances, another character could clearly be assigned to it. The plaintiff offered evidence, tending to remove the legal presumption, and to establish an actual 'bona fide' intention, which was properly submitted to the jury. The evidence is not set forth in the case made, but it must have tended to show, that the debtor retained the possession as the agent or bailee of the purchaser. The nature of that possession then became an important inquiry. Was it in truth a possession as the agent or the bailee of the purchaser, or colorably only as such, and actually as the beneficial temporary or permanent owner? If the first, the apparent repugnance between the title and the possession might be explained, and honestly accounted for; but if the second, then such colorable possession was but part of the machinery of the fraud. . . . Generally the acts or declarations of a grantor, after the conveyance made, are not to be received to impeach his grant; the rights of the grantee ought not to be prejudiced by the conduct of one who at the time is a stranger to him and to the subject-matter of those rights. But the acts and declarations in this case were those of the possessor of the property, — were connected with that possession, and formed a part of its attendant circumstances. They were collateral indications of the nature, extent, and purposes of that possession. They were to be admitted, not because of any credit due to him by whom they were done or uttered, but because they qualified and characterized, or tended to qualify and characterize, the very fact to be investigated."

§ 1086. [1] For another good exposition of it, see the quotation post, § 1779, from Burgert v. Borchert, 59 Mo. 80. The general principle of verbal acts in possession as affecting the presumption of ownership, apart from the case of sales in fraud of creditors, is fully expounded in passages quoted post, § 1778.

This theory can hardly be impugned in its logic. Reduced to a rule, it admits the declarations when made during possession, whether or not the debtor is a party to the cause.

(5) The fifth theory is based on the same principle as Bridge v. Eggleston (ante, § 1082, par. 4), but carries its logic further. A part of the issue being the debtor-transferror's intent, all his conduct and declarations which indicate his intent when dealing with the property are to be receivable (on the principle of § 1729, post, and § 266, ante), — an ordinary application of established principles having a larger scope:

1823, PORTER, J., in Guidry v. Grivot, 2 Mart. N. S. La. 13, 15: "To set aside the conveyance, three things were necessary, — fraud on the part of the vendor, fraud on the part of the vendee, and an injury to the party claiming. The acts and declarations of the first are surely as good and as high evidence as any other that can be given to prove fraud in him. They are of course not sufficient to show the vendee acted from the same motives; for then, as it was justly said in argument, every purchaser would hold at the mercy of him from whom he bought. But it is not a good objection to the introduction of evidence that it does not make out at once the whole of the case in support of which it is presented."

This theory is a legitimate one, and attracts by its simplicity. Its natural limitation, when reduced to a rule, is that the transferror must be in possession at the time; for otherwise his utterances would be of a past, and not a present, intent in dealing with the property, and therefore inadmissible (post, § 1729). The only objection can be the one intimated in Bridge v. Eggleston (ante, § 1082, par. 4) that the declarant has after the nominal transfer a motive to deceive; but this objection is over-nice, because he has equal motives to deceive before the transfer, and because the likelihood after the transfer that he will wish to falsify for the creditor (his natural antagonist, who now offers the declarations) is relatively small.

Of these theories, so far as they compete in their limitations, it cannot be said that, from the point of view of practical policy, the more liberal ones are to be disparaged.[2] The more light that is thrown on such transactions, the [2] Where nothing is noted, in the citations below, as to the debtor's possession, it is because the fact does not appear. All rulings which clearly appear to go upon the fourth theory above (verbal acts in possession) are placed under that head, post, § 1779. For Massachusetts and Pennsylvania additional cases will thus be found in § 1779, post, reaching the opposite result, on the verbal-act theory. For Alabama, Missouri, and North Carolina, all the cases whatever have been placed together in § 1779, post, because of their inextricable confusion of rulings; a few of the other jurisdictions represented below are by no means consistent in their rulings:

CANADA: New Brunswick: 1843, Doak v. Johnson, 2 Kerr 319 (declarations of the grantor's son in possession, not admitted for the grantor's creditor); 1858, Lawton v. Tarratt, 4 All. 1, 9 (debtor's declarations before and after the sale, admitted; no definite rule stated); 1890, McManus v. Wells, 29 N. Br. 449 (grantee's declarations excluded, though a party to the fraud, in an action against better. There is just as much risk of injuring an honest creditor as of dispossessing an honest buyer. There is in common experience a great deal the sheriff for the debtor's escape; Tuck, J., diss.): UNITED STATES: Federal: 1885, Winchester & P. M. Co. v. Creary, 116 U. S. 161 (the "common purpose to defraud" must be "first established by independent evidence", and the declarations must "have such relation to the execution of that purpose that they fairly constitute a part of the 'res gestæ' "); 1885, Jones v. Simpson, 116 U. S. 609, 6 Sup. 538 (preceding rule applied); 1893, Grimes D. G. Co. v. Malcolm, 7 C. C. A. 426, 58 Fed. 670 debtor's declarations, after mortgage executed and delivery made, excluded);

Alabama: (see post, § 1779);
California: 1859, Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 483, 484, 496 (excluded, on the doctrine of Bridge v. Eggleston, Mass.); 1859, Visher v. Webster, 13 Cal. 58, 61 (declarations excluded where there was "no such clear and unequivocal possession as to admit them" on the ground of 'res gestæ'); 1860, Cohn v. Mulford, 15 Cal. 50, 55 (similar to Paige v. O'Neil); 1864, Long v. Dollarhide, 24 Cal. 218, 227 (declarations after an assignment, said never to be admissible); 1864, Cahoon v. Marshall, 25 Cal. 197, 202 (held inadmissible, unless perhaps when made in possession with the vendee's consent); 1864, Jones v. Morse, 36 Cal. 205 (foregoing qualification not noticed); 1869, Spanagel v. Dallinger, 38 Cal. 278, 282, 284 (declarations after possession taken by the grantee, held inadmissible); 1874, Hutchings v. Castle, 48 Cal. 152, 156 (similar); 1894, Murphy v. Mulgrew, 102 Cal. 547, 552, 36 Pac. 857 (personalty; vendor's declarations, after sale but in possession, admitted; following Cahoon v. Marshall); 1895, Emmons v. Barton, 109 Cal. 662, 670, 42 Pac. 303 (grantor's declarations while in possession of the realty held inadmissible; suggesting that for personalty the rule was different); 1898, Banning v. Marleau, 121 Cal. 240, 53 Pac. 692 (personalty; debtor's declarations "after the sale", excluded); 1898, Henderson v. Hart, 122 Cal. 332, 54 Pac. 1110 (personalty; debtor's declarations, after title and possession gone, excluded); 1901, Bush & M. Co. v. Helbing, 134 Cal. 676, 66 Pac. 967 (husband's declarations of claim, while in possession, admitted, on the theory of conspiracy, in a suit to set aside a deed to his wife);
Connecticut: 1786, Woodruff v. Whittlesey, Kirby 60, 62 ("though a person may confess for himself, he cannot for another"; here the time of the declarations did not appear); 1815, Barrett v. French, 1 Conn. 354, 365 (grantor's declarations after transfer, said to be inadmissible); 1844, White v. Wheaton, 16 Conn. 530, 535 (same);
Georgia: 1877, Oatis v. Brown, 59 Ga. 711, 716 (declarations while retaining possession, admitted "as part of the 'res gestæ' of the fraudulent enterprise"); 1880, Williams v. Hart, 65 Ga. 201, 207 (rule of the preceding case applied); 1884, Powell v. Watts, 72 Ga. 770, 774 (admitted, where the debtor remained in possession contrary to the terms of the conveyance; no precedent cited);
Idaho: 1903, Meyer v. Munro, 9 Ida. 46, 71 Pac. 969 (declarations of mortgagor, after execution, held admissible only where the mortgagee is "a party to a common unlawful purpose");
Illinois: 1860, Wheeler v. McCorristen, 24 Ill. 40 (declarations after possession and title transferred, excluded); 1861, Rust v. Mansfield, 25 Ill. 336, 339 (preceding case approved; it does not appear who had possession); 1861, Myers v. Kinzie, 26 Ill. 36 (like Wheeler v. McCorristen); 1866, Miner v. Phillips, 42 Ill. 123, 130 (like Wheeler v. McCorristen); 1869, Gridley v. Bingham, 51 Ill. 153 (preceding case approved; but here it did not appear who had possession); 1895, Milling v. Hillenbrand, 156 Ill. 310, 40 N. E. 941 (like Wheeler v. McCorristen);
Indiana: 1849, Caldwell v. Williams, 1 Ind. 405, 409 (admitted on the theory of conspiracy, following Waterbury v. Sturdevant, N. Y.); 1877, Tedrowe v. Esher, 56 Ind. 443 (same); 1881, Kennedy v. Divine, 77 Ind. 490, 493 (same); 1884, Daniels v. McGinnis, 97 Ind. 549, 551 (same); 1885, Riehl v. Evansville Foundry Ass'n, 104 id. 70, 73, 3 N. E. 633 (same); 1886, Hunsinger v. Hofer, 110 Ind. 390, 393, 11 N. E. 463 (admissible "wherever it appears, either by direct or circumstantial evidence, that the grantor and the grantee were acting in concert"); 1896, Higgins v. Spahr, 145 Ind. 167, 43 N. E. 11 (same; provided that a 'prima facie' case of fraud must first be made out to the satisfaction of the Court); moreover, where the grantor and grantee are joined as defendants, e.g. when they are husband and wife, it is held that the husband's admission is at least receivable against himself: 1880, Bruker v. Kelsey, 72 Ind. 51, 56; 1883, Hogan v. Robinson, 94 Ind. 138, 145; 1885, Riehl v. Evansville Foundry Ass'n, 104 Ind. 70, 73, 3 N. E. 633; 1898, Vansickel v. Shenk, 150 Ind. 413, 50 N. E. 381 (admissible, "where he is a party to the suit . . . to show his motive or purpose in making the conveyance"; though not as against the grantee: this is virtually on the fourth theory above);
Iowa: 1859, Savery v. Spaulding, 8 Ia. 239, 250 (debtor's declarations as to the amount of goods on hand, excluded); 1865, Blake v. Graves, 18 Ia. 312, 314 (declarations in possession, admitted; the remaining in possession, will "be deemed such evidence of a conspiracy," or at least will be deemed "such a connection with the property" as to invoke the shibboleth more likelihood that the unscrupulous debtor will try to trick his creditor than that he will endeavor to overturn an honest sale by making evidence

'res gestæ'); 1876, Hurley v. Olster, 44 Ia. 642, 644, semble (theory of conspiracy employed to admit the declarations); 1878, Keystone Mfg. Co. v. Johnson, 50 Ia. 142, 144 (declarations after title and possession gone, excluded); 1879, Benson v. Lundy, 52 Ia. 265, 3 N. W. 149 (same); 1881, McCormicks v. Fuller, 56 id. 43, 46, 8 N. W. 800 (declarations in possession, excluded, there being no issue as to defrauding creditors; distinguishing Blake v. Graves, where the possession was held to be evidence of fraudulent conspiracy); 1884, Bixby v. Carskaddon, 63 Ia. 164, 170, 18 N. W. 875; s. c., 70 Ia. 726, 728, 29 N. W. 626 (same as Benson v. Lundy); 1888, Bener v. Edgington, 76 Ia. 105, 109, 40 N. W. 117 (same); 1890, Turner v. Hardin, 80 Ia. 691, 695, 45 N. W. 758 (same); 1897, Thomas v. McDonald, 102 Ia. 564, 71 N. W. 572 (same); 1904, Urdangen v. Doner, 122 Ia. 533, 98 N. W. 317 (Bixby v. Carskaddon followed);

Kansas: 1895, Burlington Nat'l Bank v. Beard, 55 Kan. 773, 42 Pac. 320, semble (declarations by debtor in possession, receivable to show intent);

Kentucky: 1833, Doyle v. Sleeper, 1 Dana 531, 532, semble (declarations after title gone, but during possession, excluded); 1842, Christopher v. Covington, 2 B. Monr. 357, 359 (same);

Louisiana: 1823, Guidry v. Guivot, 2 Mart. N. S. La. 13, 15 (admissible; see quotation supra); 1824, Martin v. Reeves, 3 Mart. N. S. 22 (same; explaining Highlander v. Fluke, 5 Mart. 442, 448);

Maine: 1854, Fisher v. True, 38 Me. 534, 537 (declarations after title and possession gone, excluded);

Massachusetts: 1804, Alexander v. Gould, 1 Mass. 165 (declarations after sale and during possession, held inadmissible, even where other evidence of the fraud of the vendee was in the case; Sedgwick, J., semble, contra); 1815, Clark v. Waite, 12 Mass. 439 (similar for realty; excluded); 1817, Bridge v. Eggleston, 14 Mass. 245, 250 (realty; excluded, because "he is interested to have such title defeated by his creditors", and because "afterwards he has no relation to the estate he has conveyed"); 1859, Aldrich v. Earle, 13 Gray 578 (realty; Bridge v. Eggleston followed); 1861, Taylor v. Robinson, 2 All. 562 (realty; similar); 1867, Winchester v. Charter, 97 Mass. 140, 142 (realty; declarations after execution of the deed and during possession, excluded); 1873, Holbrook v. Holbrook, 113 Mass. 74 (prior cases approved); 1882, Roberts v. Medberry, 130 Mass. 100 (same; but compare § 1779, post, where this case is cited); 1905, Hart v. Brierley, 189 Mass. 598, 76 N. E. 286 (personalty; excluded);

Michigan: 1896, Muncey v. Sun Ins. Office, 109 Mich. 542, 67 N. W. 563 (insurance policy; assignor's declarations excluded);

Mississippi: 1840, Ferriday v. Selser, 4 How. 506, 529 (grantor's declarations after execution of the deed, held inadmissible); 1876, Taylor v. Webb, 54 Miss. 36, 43 (declarations made "after he had parted with the land", excluded);

Missouri (see post, § 1779);

Montana: 1906, Borden v. Lynch, 34 Mont. 503, 87 Pac. 609 (debtor's declarations of fraud, prior to the plaintiff's mortgage, held admissible against him, but here excluded for lack of evidence of his knowledge of the fraud);

Nebraska: 1888, Campbell v. Holland, 22 Nebr. 587, 594, 35 N. W. 871 (declarations after transfer of title, excluded; theory of conspiracy doubted as inapplicable; opinion by Cobb, J.); 1889, White v. Woodruff, 25 Nebr. 797, 799, 805, 41 N. W. 785 (similar declarations, held admissible, in an opinion by the same judge, citing no precedents at all); 1889, Williams v. Eikenberry, 25 Nebr. 721, 724, 41 N. W. 770 (declarations by the debtor, after the vendee had taken possession, held inadmissible, except as contradicting the debtor's testimony on the stand; opinion by Reese, C. J.); 1889, Sloan v. Coburn, 26 Nebr. 607, 609, 42 N. W. 726 (declarations after transferring title and possession, admitted to show the debtor's "intention at the time they made the transfer", on the authority of the preceding case, no other being cited; opinion by Reese, C. J.); 1894, McDonald v. Bowman, 40 Nebr. 269, 273, 58 N. W. 704 (debtor's declarations, after a mortgage but in possession, admitted as indicative of his intent to defraud);

Nevada: 1883, Hirschfeld v. Williamson, 18 Nev. 66, 1 Pac. 201 (declarations after possession and title transferred, excluded);

New Hampshire: 1842, Blake v. White, 13 N. H. 267, 273 (debtor's declarations admitted, on the theory of Bridge v. Eggleston, Mass., supra, § 1082, par. 4, without discrimination as to their utterance before or after transfer; this is sound, upon the fourth theory above noted);

New York: 1809, Phœnix v. Dey, 5 John. 412, 426 (personalty; declarations after title and possession gone, excluded); 1814, Osgood v. Manhattan Co., 3 Cow. 612, 622 (same); 1834, Sprague v. Kneeland, 12 Wend. 161 (similar; place of possession obscure); 1834, Crary v. Sprague, 12 Wend. 41 (see the citation supra, § 1083; this ruling does not involve the precise question, but has been cited as authority in the later rulings); 1837, Waterbury v. Sturtevant, 18 Wend. 353 (assignor's admissions, six months after the conveyance, as to the fraudulent intent, held admissible, on the theory of conspiracy; though the reversal for his creditor. Any theory which, by invoking some legitimate principle of Evidence, will admit more of the debtor's utterances is practically to be of the judgment casts doubt on this point); 1851, Adams v. Davidson, 10 N. Y. 309, 313 (assignor's declarations, in possession, admitted to show fraud; this ruling is in the later opinions sometimes disapproved, sometimes distinguished); 1864, Ball v. Loomis, 39 N. Y. 412, 416 (declarations after possession and title transferred, excluded); 1869, Cuyler v. McCartney, 40 N. Y. 221, 227 (assignor's declarations, held admissible, even after possession surrendered to the assignee; if a conspiracy to defraud is shown, otherwise not; but the declarations themselves cannot suffice to evidence the conspiracy; see quotation supra); 1872, Newlin v. Lyon, 49 N. Y. 661 (similar); 1874, Tilson v. Terwilliger, 56 Id. 273, 276 (assignor's declarations, after renewing possession, not received as evidence of fraud); 1878, Burnham v. Brennan, 74 N. Y. 597 (declarations after title and possession transferred, excluded); 1881, Coyne v. Weaver, 84 id. 386, 392 (declarations after sale and delivery of possession, excluded; Cuyler v. McCartney approved); 1881, Tabor v. Van Tassel, 86 N. Y. 642 (Cuyler v. McCartney approved); 1888, Loos v. Wilkinson, 110 N. Y. 195, 211, 18 N. E. 99 (assignor's declarations, while in possession, held admissible "as bearing upon the questions of fraud", and as "part of a fraudulent scheme concocted by the three brothers, grantor and grantee"; Cuyler v. McCartney cited, but its limitations not observed); 1888, Bush v. Roberts, 111 N. Y. 278, 282, 18 N. E. 732 (similar to Tabor v. Van Tassel); 1892, Kain v. Larkin, 131 N. Y. 300, 312, 30 N. E. 105 (Cuyler v. McCartney approved); 1899, Lent v. Shear, 160 N. Y. 462 469, 55 N. E. 2 (declarations "after the transfer of both title and possession", excluded, there being no evidence of conspiracy);

North Carolina: (see post, § 1779);
North Dakota: 1898, Paulson Mercantile Co. v. Seaver, 8 N. D. 215, 77 N. W. 1001 (admissible only on the theory of conspiracy; this to be otherwise evidenced);
Oklahoma: 1904, Woods v. Faurot, 14 Okl. 171, 77 Pac. 346 (attachment of H.'s goods, F. claiming by prior sale from H.; H.'s declarations of claim to the sheriff, not admitted for the creditor; no authority cited);
Oregon: 1884, Krewson v. Purdom, 11 Or. 266, 3 Pac. 822 (vendor's declarations, after possession and title gone, held inadmissible "in the absence of any proof of fraud or collusion"); 1903, Walker v. Harold, 44 Or. 205, 74 Pac. 705 (vendor's declarations after deed, executed, admitted, after evidence of a "prior dishonest combination");
Pennsylvania: 1829, Wilbur v. Strickland, 1 Rawle 458, 460 (admitted, after evidence of continued possession, "to show that the transfer to S. was entirely colorable, fraudulent, and void"; but the principle was conceded that the fraudulent combination must first be otherwise evidenced); 1834, M'Kee v. Gilchrist, 3 Watts 230, 232 (principle of fraudulent conspiracy, held applicable); 1860, McDowell v. Rissell, 37 Pa. 164, 168 (declarations during possession, held admissible; "there must be some evidence of a common purpose or design; but a very slight degree of concert or collusion is sufficient"); 1868, Pringle v. Pringle, 59 Pa. 281, 289 (declarations during possession, excluded, there being no claim or evidence of fraudulent conspiracy); 1869, Hartman v. Diller, 62 Pa. 37, 43 (declarations admitted, after fraudulent collusion was otherwise evidenced); 1869, Pier v. Duff, 63 Pa. 59, 64 ("if there be any, even very slight evidence of complicity between the grantor and grantee in a design to defraud creditors", the grantor's declarations are admissible; the opinion also speaks loosely of admitting declarations by a possessor in general, to prove the character of the possession); 1903, Boyer v. Weimer, 204 Pa. 295, 54 Atl. 21 (conspiracy rule applied); compare also the cases post, § 1779;
South Dakota: 1903, Aldous v. Olverson, 17 S. D. 190, 95 N. W. 917 (action by the wife for property taken by a creditor of the husband; declarations after transfer, excluded);
Tennessee: 1833, Perry v. Smith, 4 Yerg. 323 ("No posterior act of N. without the participation of S. could defeat the transaction"); 1846, Trotter v. Watson, 6 Humph. 509, 513 (the debtor's retention of possession inconsistent with a deed being "a badge of fraud which of itself connects him with the claimant in the suspicion of a confederacy to defeat creditors", his declarations are admissible; but not otherwise); 1852, Carnahan v. Wood, 2 Swan 500, 503 (see quotation supra); 1871, Vance v. Smith, 2 Heisk. 343, 353 (debtor's declarations, not admitted against beneficiaries "who had no knowledge of such declarations, and no agency in causing them to be made");
Texas: 1886, Hamburg v. Wood, 66 Tex. 168, 176, 18 S. W. 623 (declarations during possession, admissible "when a 'prima facie' case of combination or conspiracy has been made by other evidence"; and the vendor's remaining in possession with the vendee's consent makes a 'prima facie' case of fraud);
Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 1400 (subsequent admissions of a debtor after appearance of a later attaching creditor, as to validity of claim on which prior attachment is founded, not receivable); 1833, Denton v. Perry, 5 Vt. 382, 388 (declarations after title and possession gone, excluded); 1833, Edgell v. Bennett, 7 Vt. 534, 537 (same); 1845, Ellis v. Howard, 17 Vt. 330, 335 (same); 1856, Hayward Rubber Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29, 40 (same); 1906, Mower v. McCarthy, 79 Vt. 142, 64 Atl. 578 commended and employed. The effort should be to open, and not to close, any available avenue of evidence.

B. When the transferror's declarations (admitting that he has transferred and confirming the transfer as honest and valid) are offered by the transferee against the creditor, they are plainly admissible (on the principle of §§ 1080, 1081, ante), because the creditor claims only under the debtor, and thus all the latter's admissions, before levy on his alleged property, are admissions of a predecessor in title.[3] But some Courts, applying the verbal-act theory (in par. 4, supra), admit on that ground declarations during possession, ignoring the present principle.[4]

§ 1087. Same: Other Principles affecting Grantor's Declarations as to Property, discriminated. Statements of a grantor not admissible under any of the foregoing principles (in §§ 1082–1086) may nevertheless be admissible by virtue of other principles of Evidence, resting on different conditions. The chief of these are (1) the Hearsay exception for statements of facts against proprietary interest (post, § 1458); here the declarant must be shown to be deceased or otherwise unavailable, and other limitations apply; (2) the verbal-act doctrine, as applied to declarations in possession (post, § 1778); here the issue must be one of possession, but it is immaterial whether the declarant is dead, or whether the declarations are against or for his interest; (3) the same doctrine, as applied to the presumption of ownership from possession (post, § 1779); the application of this doctrine to transfers in fraud of creditors has been specially noted in the foregoing section, but it may become equally applicable to declarations by other grantors; (4) the Hearsay ex-

(defendant loaned money to his son to buy a stock of goods and took a mortgage; the son's declarations of intent to defraud creditors, not admitted against the father, except on evidence of conspiracy);
Virginia: 1828, Claytor v. Anthony, 6 Rand. 285, 290, 300 (declarations during possession, admitted partly on the principle that a "community of purpose" had been evidenced, partly as declarations of fraudulent intent accompanying the act of sale; Coalter, J., diss., on the facts);
Washington: 1898, Anderson v. White, 18 Wash. 658, 52 Pac. 231 (admissible only on the theory of conspiracy);
Wisconsin: 1861, Bates v. Ableman, 13 Wis. 644, 645, 650, 721, 728 (debtor's declaration during possession after assignment, excluded; "we see no principle of evidence upon which they could be admitted"); 1861, Bogert v. Phelps, 14 Wis. 88, 95 (similar; "in order to affect the vendee, his knowledge of and participation in the fraud of the vendor must also be proved"; though when offered on the principle of Gillet v. Phelps, supra, § 1082, par. 4, they may be admissible if "shortly after the sale, if made so near the time of it as fairly to indicate what was then passing in his mind"); 1861, Grant v. Lewis, 14 Wis. 487, 489 (declarations while still in possession, held admissible "for the purpose of showing fraud in the sale if they have that tendency"; preceding cases ignored); 1869, Knapp v. Schneider, 24 Wis. 70, 73 (preceding case approved, but the ruling held inapplicable, since here the declarant purported to be not a vendor but an agent to buy for the plaintiff);
Wyoming: 1896, Toms v. Whitmore, 6 Wyo. 220, 44 Pac. 56 (admissible only on the theory of conspiracy).

[3] 1867, Whitaker v. Wheeler, 44 Ill. 440, 442 (trover against a sheriff levying); 1855, Cavin v. Smith, 21 Mo. 444 (debtor's admissions, while in possession, that his title was only conditional, received against attaching creditor); 1855, Burgess v. Quimby, 21 Mo. 508 (same); 1822, Johnson v. Patterson, 2 Hawks N. Car. 183; 1906, Mower v. McCarthy, 79 Vt. 142, 64 Atl. 578.
Contra: 1896, Bertrand v. Heaman, 11 Manit. 205, 208 (Dubuc, J., diss.; here, a garnishment); 1899, Marshall v. May, 12 Manit. 381 (preceding case approved); 1903, Lumm v. Howells, 27 Utah 80, 74 Pac. 432 (no authority cited).

[4] These rulings are collected post, § 1779.

ception for ancient deed-recitals, which are admissible in a limited class of cases irrespective of privity of title (post, § 1573); (5) the Hearsay exception for statements by deceased persons about a land-boundary; these are receivable by a rule which takes three very different forms in different jurisdictions (post, §§ 1563–1570). Moreover, (6) the exclusionary rule must be noted, which forbids the use of a grantor's assertions of claim to be used in rebuttal of his admissions disclaiming title (post, § 1133); these sometimes lead to confusion, in that they might be admissible as coloring an adverse possession, if the issue is one of prescriptive title (on the principle of § 1778, post), but would be inadmissible on an ordinary issue of title to rebut admissions.

Distinguish also three principles not affecting the use of oral declarations, and yet often involved in the present class of cases: (a) the principle of circumstantial evidence that possession of a part of a tract of land may be evidence of possession of the whole of the tract (ante, § 378); (b) the principle of circumstantial evidence that the execution of an old deed or lease may be evidence of possession of the land itself (ante, § 157); (c) the rule of authentication of documents that age, custody, and possession may be sufficient evidence of the genuineness of a document purporting to be an old deed (post, §§ 2137 ff.).

SUB-TITLE III: TESTIMONIAL REHABILITATION (SUPPORTING THE CREDIT OF AN IMPEACHED WITNESS)

CHAPTER XXXVI.

INTRODUCTORY

§ 1100. Distinction between (1) Admissibility of Evidence to Rehabilitate or Support a Witness, and (2) Stage of the Examination at which such Evidence can be offered. In the process of rehabilitating an impeached witness, there are four possible stages of the case at which the attempt may be made; the cross-examination of the impeaching witness, the re-examination of the impeached witness, the direct examination of a new witness called in rebuttal, and the reopening of the case after both sides have closed. There are certain rules to be observed, for convenience' sake, as to the appropriate stage for certain kinds of evidence; some evidence must properly be put in at a specific appropriate stage or not at all, other evidence at another stage, and so on. Thus the question may arise whether the evidence offered in Rehabilitation is offered at an improper stage of the trial. With such questions there is no present concern; they are dealt with under the general subject of Order of Evidence (post, §§ 1866–1900).

But the present subject is the Relevancy of the evidence in itself, assuming that it is offered at the proper stage. We are concerned with the application of the general principles of Relevancy to facts offered to rehabilitate an impeached witness, — whether a fact is relevant, whether it is provable by other witnesses or only by cross-examination, and the like.

§ 1101. Arrangement of Topics. Having in view the various qualities already noticed as affecting and impeaching the credibility of a witness (ante, §§ 874–881), and the various kinds of facts and modes of testimony available to prove those qualities, the next inquiry is how such impeaching evidence can be met and denied or explained away by other evidence. The processes available are based on the logical possibilities, already noticed (ante, §§ 34, 35), of the modes of argument available for an opponent; though the special features of the position of one sustaining an impeached witness complicate the processes. The logical relation of Rehabilitation to Impeachment has already been fully considered under the latter head (ante, § 874). But it is not feasible to follow completely any logical analysis of the various sorts of supporting evidence; for some of them are so closely associated with the rules affecting certain sorts of impeaching evidence that it is practically more useful to treat them under the same rubric.

Moreover, in theory two arrangements are open to choice, neither of which can practically be employed throughout. The topics might be considered either according to the various kinds of impeaching evidence to be met, or according to the various kinds of rehabilitating evidence used to meet them.

Either of these, if exclusively followed, would cause the separation of practically related topics and consequent inconvenience. Accordingly, the former grouping is followed chiefly for the first three ensuing topics (A, B, and C), and the latter for the last topic (D).

A. Rehabilitation after Impeachment of Moral Character

§ 1104. (A) Proving Good Character in Support; in General, Inadmissible until Impeached. Good character for veracity is as relevant to indicate the probability of truth-telling as bad character for veracity is to indicate the probability of the contrary. But there is no reason why time should be spent in proving that which may be assumed to exist. Every witness may be assumed to be of normal moral character for veracity, just as he is assumed to be of normal sanity (ante, § 484). Good character, therefore, in his support is excluded until his character is brought in question and it becomes worth while to deny that his character is bad.[1]

It has been said, to be sure, by a few Courts that where, without actually introducing testimony, the opponent has effectively insinuated the witness' impeachment, his good character is then proper in rebuttal. But this extension is exceptional in its vogue.[2] Moreover, the exception when an accused in a criminal case takes the stand is apparent only; for it is as an accused that he may offer his good character in chief (ante, § 56), and that character must concern the trait involved in the charge (ante, § 59), and § 1104. [1] This, as a general principle, is universally accepted; all the rulings in the ensuing sections assume it. The following statutes reaffirm it: Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1503 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 865); Ark. Dig. 1919, § 4189 (inadmissible "until his general reputation has been impeached"); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 2053 (not admissible until character "is impeached"); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 8040 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2053); Ky. C. C. P. 1895, § 599 (inadmissible "until his general reputation has been impeached"); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10670 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2053); Or. Laws 1920, § 865 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2053); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 344 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2053); P. R. Rev. St. C. 1911, § 1528 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2053).

It is commonly said that a witness' character is presumed to be good till impeached: 1922, State v. Pugh, — N. C. —, 111 S. E. 849. But it is more correct to say, as in the case of an accused's character (ante, § 290) that the witness' character is simply unknown and is not evidence one way or the other.

In Connecticut it has been said that such evidence should always be admitted on behalf of the woman in a rape charge, even without any attempt at impeachment: 1830, State v. DeWolf, 8 Conn. 93, 100 ("it would not be going too far, perhaps", to declare such a rule; but here left undecided); 1833, Rogers v. Moore, 10 Conn. 14, 17 (said to be settled).

In the same State a peculiar tradition also admits such evidence, even without impeachment, in favor of a "stranger", before any impeachment of character has been attempted: 1830, State v. DeWolf, 8 Conn. 93, 101 (a deaf-and-dumb person was treated as in effect a stranger); 1833, Rogers v. Moore, 10 Conn. 14, 17; 1850, Merriam v. W. Co., 20 Conn. 354, 364; 1881, State v. Ward, 49 Conn. 429, 433, 442 (not allowed for one resident in the State).

In New Hampshire, it is held that the party to a divorce suit may offer good character in support without waiting for impeachment: 1842, Kimball v. Kimball, 13 N. H. 222, 225; 1899, Warner v. Warner, 69 N. H. 137, 44 Atl. 908.

[2] 1856, Com. v. Ingraham, 7 Gray Mass. 46, 48 (admissible when by questions of the opponent the general character has been attempted to be impeached, even though the opposing witness answers favorably; because "in the manner in which the answer is given though in language apparently favorable to the witness, yet there might be conveyed the impression of doubt and uncertainty as to his reputation"); 1869, State v. Cherry, 63 N. C. 493, 495 (admitting it where the opponent had asked the witness himself about his bad character, and he had refused to answer).

thus since only his character for veracity can (in most jurisdictions) affect him as a witness (ante, § 922), his evidence of character at that stage will not usually be the same as that which he could later offer in his own support as witness.[3]

The question thus always arises, under this general rule, When is the witness' character brought into question by the opponent, so as to open the way to evidence of good character in denial? This must depend on the nature of the opponent's impeaching evidence. It may be a direct assault on the witness' character, in which case no doubt exists. But it may be evidence of a doubtful or ambiguous import, — for example, of bias, of a prior self-contradiction, of an error of fact, and so on through the whole series of kinds of discrediting evidence. It is obvious that the theory of each of these kinds of evidence must be considered before it can be said whether it affects the witness' character. In the ensuing applications of the rule, therefore, the result will depend much on the respective theories of Impeachment by Contradiction (ante, § 1000), by Self-Contradiction (ante, § 1017), and by Bias, Interest, or Corruption (ante, §§ 943–969).

§ 1105. Same: (1) After evidence of General Character. A direct impeachment of moral character by testimony (reputation or personal opinion) to a general trait of character plainly satisfies the rule and opens the way for the opposite party to rehabilitate his witness by testimony to his good character. No one has ever doubted this.[1]

But the character of a witness may also be expressly impeached (ante, §§ 977–988), not directly by his reputation or by others' personal opinion of a general trait of his character, but by particular acts of misconduct indicating a bad character. This may be done in two ways: by extrinsic testimony of conviction of crime; or, by answers on cross-examination of the witness himself as to instances of moral misconduct. These two modes are therefore also to be considered.

§ 1106. Same: (2) After evidence of Particular Instances of Misconduct, by Cross-examination or Record of Conviction. At first sight, there would seem to be here also no doubt about the propriety of rebutting by evidence of good character. The facts offered give an inference as to the witness' moral character, and an issue upon that character seems clearly to be opened. Such is the natural answer to this question:

[3] 1896, Hays v. State, 110 Ala. 60, 20 So. 322 (excluding the accused's character as to veracity in a larceny prosecution); 1921, Charley v. State, 204 Ala. 687, 87 So. 177; and cases cited ante, §§ 59, 890, 923, 925.

For the character of a deceased person in homicide, the woman in rape and seduction, and other uses of character not of a witness, see ante, §§ 62–79.

§ 1105. [1] The following minor points may be noted here: 1860, Prentiss v. Roberts, 49 Me. 127, 137 (it is immaterial that the testimony attacking the witness' general character is offered in the shape of the opponent's admissions); 1850, Morse v. Palmer, 15 Pa. 51 55 (the supporting character may cover another time or place than the impeaching one).

For the rebuttal of testimony to the unchaste character of the prosecutrix in seduction, see post, § 1620.

For curing one irrelevancy by another, see ante, § 15.

1838, NELSON, C. J., in People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 610 (after pointing out that good character, though an essential element of testimony, is assumed, and must first be attacked by the opponent): "Now what is the ground and reason for allowing a party to introduce general evidence in reply to fortify and support a witness who has been impeached? It surely is not because the impeachment has been effected by the testimony of witnesses, or by general evidence as to character, or in a particular way, — all this of itself can be of no importance; but it is because the impeachment, the effect of the proof, in whatever way introduced, tends directly to overcome the presumption of good character upon which the party had a right in the first instance to rely; because a material part of his proof is struck at by shaking confidence in the integrity and truth of the witness upon whom it depends. . . . If that [impeachment] can be removed, the presumption revives, and the facts are again sustained upon the good character of the witness. Regarding, then, the principle upon which testimony in reply to the impeachment of a witness is admitted, and the grounds and reasons upon which it rests, the Court should rather look to the effect of the impeachment than to the mode and manner in which it is brought about. It can be of little concern to a party whether the moral character of his witness is destroyed by the testimony of others called to speak to it, or by a cross-examination; the effect upon him, to the extent of the impeachment, is exactly the same; he loses the benefit of the evidence in both cases, and for the same cause, — the discredit of the witness. . . . There may indeed be more difficulty in the reply, in the case of an impeachment by cross-examination, than from general evidence. . . . But there is no intrinsic difficulty rendering a vindication impossible; the offer of the proof assumes that it is within the power of the party; cases may very well occur of particular vices and weaknesses, which cast a cloud over the moral character of the man and tend 'prima facie' to impeach his truth and integrity, but whose veracity could be vindicated by the concurrent testimony of all his neighbors and acquaintances. . . . But it is urged that, as the witness is upon the stand, he may be examined himself in explanation of the impeaching facts. The obvious answer to this is that the character of the witness for truth in the given case is proposed to be sustained by the evidence in reply notwithstanding the existence of the facts called out on the cross-examination. The case supposes explanation impossible, but that still his character for truth may be upheld by his neighbors and acquaintances."

In theory, to be sure, this conclusion is fallacious. It ignores the logical distinction between Explaining away and merely Denying (ante, § 34). Consider, first, questions on cross-examination. The misconduct, by hypothesis, being relevant and being proved by the witness' own admission on the stand, demonstrates the bad disposition behind it. If there had been any explanation of the act, the witness could give it (post, § 1117). But testimony to general good reputation explains away nothing; the damaging conduct is proved out of his own mouth. Testimony to his good reputation could only avail on the hypothesis that an attacking witness to bad reputation was speaking falsely and that the reputation was really good; but here it is by proved conduct and direct inference bad. Furthermore, records of convictions of crime similarly exhibit the bad character directly, and cannot be explained away by testimony as to good repute. This reasoning has found favor with some Courts:

1814, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in Dodd v. Norris, 3 Camp. 519: "The questions put to herself on cross-examination there was an ample opportunity of explaining, as far as the truth would permit, when she came to be re-examined."

1838, BRONSON, J., in People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 600: "Why should such evidence be received, when the witness is on the stand to give any explanation of his conduct which the truth of the case will permit? G. was not obliged to proclaim his own infamy. . . . But aside from this consideration, if there was anything to extenuate his conduct in abandoning his family and living in adultery, he was at liberty to state it. He stood there to make a picture of himself, and it is not to be presumed that he would draw it in darker colors than the truth of the case absolutely required. Neither the party who produces a witness nor the witness himself has any right to complain that compurgators are not allowed, when there has been no impeachment beyond the facts disclosed by the witness himself."

In spite of this logic, however, practically the former rule is preferable; for it gives some protection against the insinuations of an unscrupulous cross-examiner, and does not leave the witness helpless to rebut those inferences which the jury may and do in practice make, even though in theory the rebuttal does not exactly fit the impeaching facts:

1823, Note by the Reporters, in Bate v. Hill, 1 C. & P. 100 (Park, J., had allowed corroboration by character; The Reporters, Messrs. Carrington and Payne): "The course allowed by Mr. Justice Park in the present case is much more conducive to the attainment of justice. . . . Lord Ellenborough [in Dodd v. Norris, supra] says that it is to be set right in re-examination. This looks very well in theory. Those used to courts of justice well know that if the character of a party seduced is attacked in her cross-examination, though the witness may deny the things insinuated, a jury often believe that though denied there is some foundation for the insinuation, if witnesses are not called to convince them of the contrary. It is a little too much to allow a defendant to blast the character of a person he has seduced by his insinuations and then not to allow her to clear her character by the best means in her power."

The former rule (permitting corroboration by good character) commands the support of most Courts.[1]

§ 1106. [1] The authorities on both sides are as follows:

ENGLAND: 1753, Murphy's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 693, 724 (allowed after proof of an indictment); 1808, Bamfield v. Massey, 1 Camp. 460 (Ellenborough, L. C. J.; seduction; after evidence that the daughter had previously had a child by another man, good-character evidence was rejected, the contradiction of the specific charge being declared sufficient for the purpose); 1814, Dodd v. Norris, 3 Camp. 519 (Ellenborough, L. C. J.; seduction; the daughter, on cross-examination, admitted indelicate conduct with the defendant; good-character evidence rejected, as no general attack on it was thus involved; a re-examination declared sufficient for rehabilitation); 1817, R. v. Clarke, 2 Stark. 241 (rape; after an admission by the prosecutrix that she had been twice in the House of Correction, evidence of her good character since then was held admissible, to "repel the inference which might be drawn from her former misconduct", and "show that the witness is not so unworthy of credit as she might have been considered to be if these circumstances had not intervened"); 1823, Bate v. Hill, 1 C. & P. 100, Park, J. (facts like Dodd v. Norris, supra; character admitted); 1829, Provis v. Reed, 5 Bing. 435. 438 (deceased attesting witness' good character received "if it were imputed to S. that, having caused a will to be executed imperfectly, he had added an attesting witness after the death of the testator, — that in effect he had committed a forgery, [i.e.] if his moral character were thus attacked"); 1836, Doe v. Harris, 7 C. & P. 330 (Coleridge, J.; attorney drawing the will; after a cross-examination in which "it was sought to impeach his character", evidence of good character was excluded).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1860, Lewis v. State, 35 Ala. 386 (admitted, after evidence of subornation);
Arkansas: 1918, Lockett v. State, 136 Ark. 473, 207 S. W. 55 (assault to rape; the woman's good reputation for "truth and morality", not admitted, under Kirby's Dig. § 3140, quoted ante, § 1104; the unfairness of the rule of the statute is well illustrated in this case);
California: 1874, People v. Ah Fat, 48 Cal.

61, 64 (admitted, after impeachment by an offer of the witness to give testimony for money); 1875, People v. Amanacus, 50 Cal. 233 (admitted, after an admission that he had been convicted of felony);
Connecticut: 1833, Rogers v. Moore, 10 Conn. 14 (excluded; yet it does not appear how the cross-examination affected his character, except as indicating a share in a fraudulent grant at issue in the case); 1881, State v. Ward, 49 Conn. 429, 432, 442 (excluded; the witness had been testified to as an accomplice in an alleged larceny admitted to show intent in the larceny charged);
Iowa: 1899, State v. Owens, 109 Ia. 1, 79 N. W. 462 (not admitted after a cross-examination not resulting in answers involving misconduct);
Kentucky: 1909, Shields v. Conway, 133 Ky. 35, 117 S. W. 340 (good opinion, by Carroll, J.);
Louisiana: 1886, State v. Boyd, 38 La. An. 374 (obscure); 1892, State v. Fruge, 44 La. An. 165, 10 So. 621 (admitted, after questions as to former prosecution);
Maryland: 1869, Vernon v. Tucker, 30 Md. 456, 462 (allowable after "matter brought out on cross-examination", if it "amounts to an impeachment of the character for truth");
Massachusetts: 1829, Russell v. Coffin, 8 Pick. 143, 154 (admissible if the answers "impeach his general character"); 1855, Harrington v. Lincoln, 4 Gray 563, 567 (left undecided; in this case, however, the fact brought out was merely a charge of crime; and the witness' further answer stating his acquittal was held to remove the effect of the original answer); 1875, McCarty v. Leary, 118 Mass. 510 (cross-examination as to intoxication of the plaintiff-witness at other times than the assault in question; character for sobriety excluded, because it "would not have removed the imputation which resulted from his own testimony on the stand"; the preceding cases not cited); 1884, Gertz v. Fitchburg R. Co., 137 Mass. 77, 78 (record of conviction of crime; reputation for veracity admitted: good opinion by Holmes, J.);
Michigan: 1888, Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112, 114 (slander; good character excluded, after cross-examination to specific facts; "such specific facts cannot be met . . . with evidence of general reputation"); 1913, Kovacs v. Mayoras, 175 Mich. 582, 141 N. W. 662 (Hitchcock v. Moore followed);
Missouri: 1912, State v. Dipley, 242 Mo. 461, 147 S. W. 111 (allowed, after evidence of prize-fighting and assault); 1912, State v. Lovitt, 243 Mo. 510, 147 S. W. 484 (allowed, after evidence of unchaste conduct by a prosecutrix in rape); 1921, State v. Ritter, 288 Mo. 381, 231 S. W. 606 (after cross-examination "reflecting upon his standing", the witness' "good reputation for truth and veracity" cannot be shown; Orris v. R. Co., post, § 1108, affirmed; "the opinions of the courts of appeals holding to the contrary . . . are expressly overruled"; this ruling is adapted to give license to unscrupulous cross-examiners and to render the witness-stand a place of loathing for respectable citizens);
New York: 1838, People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 569, 584, 595 (admitted; Bronson, J., diss. and allowing it only (1) for deceased attesting witnesses — semble, to wills only — charged with fraud, and (2) for a witness who wishes to show a reform since the past delinquencies brought out on cross-examination; in this case, the witness admitted leading a dissolute life; see quotations supra); 1842, Carter v. People, 2 Hill 317 (the witness admitted having been arrested on a charge of counterfeiting; good character for truth allowed); 1842, People v. Hulse, 3 Hill 309, 314 (affirming People v. Rector, though Bronson, J., the mouthpiece of the Court, still expresses a liking for his doctrine in that case as dissenter; the rule here affirmed as law admits the supporting character after an attack "drawing out extrinsic facts going to general character on the cross-examination"); 1852, People v. Gay, 7 N. Y. 378, 381 (affirming People v. Hulse; the attack must consist in evidence on cross-examination going to impeach his general character; People v. Hulse is said to have overruled "in effect" the preceding cases, but this is clearly erroneous, as Welles, J., diss., points out at 382; the only point overruled is that of People v. Carter, which treats a mere arrest or charge as involving moral character, — a point expressly denied in the present case); 1856, Stacy v. Graham, 14 N. Y. 492, 501 (admitted after witness' admission of corruption; no authorities cited; Wright, J., diss.); 1890, Young v. Johnson, 123 N. Y. 226, 234 (rape; character excluded, after proof of the woman's loose conduct); 1916, Derrick v. Wallace, 217 N. Y. 520, 112 N. E. 440 (the witness-plaintiff, having on cross-examination admitted a conviction in 1896 for forgery, offered his present general good reputation; held admissible; careful opinion by Pound, J.);
Ohio: 1876, Webb v. State, 29 Oh. St. 351, 358 (admitted, after evidence of conviction of crime); 1894, Wick v. Baldwin, 51 Oh. 51, 36 N. E. 671 (cross-examination to conviction of crimes; reputation for truth admitted); 1918, Reed v. State, 98 Oh. 279, 120 N. E. 701 (cited more fully ante, § 68);
Oklahoma: 1907, First National Bank v. Blakeman, 19 Okl. 106, 91 Pac. 868 (admissible; leading case, with careful opinion by Burford, C. J.);
Pennsylvania: 1839, Braddee v. Brownfield, 9 Watts 124 (after cross-examination; opinion apparently self-contradictory, looking both ways);
Tennessee: 1885, Hoard v. State, 15 Lea 318, 323 (admitted, after cross-examination to character); 1900, Warfield v. R. Co., 104 Tenn. 74, 55 S. W. 304 (admissible after cross-examination affecting veracity);

§ 1107. Same: (3) After evidence of Bias, Interest, or Corruption. An act of Corruption directly affects moral character; and the corroboration should therefore depend upon the rule for acts involving character.[1] But Bias and Interest clearly do not involve any issue on the moral character of the witness, and there is no occasion for testimony to good character.[2]

§ 1108. Same: (4) After evidence of Self-Contradiction. The exposure of an error of a witness on a material point by his own self-contradictory statements is a recognized mode of impeachment (ante, § 1017), and serves as a basis for the further inference that he is capable of having made errors on other material points. This possibility of other errors, however, is not attributed specifically to any definite defect; it may be supposed to arise from a defect of knowledge, of memory, of bias, or of interest, or, by possibility only, of moral character (ante, § 1017). Thus, though the error may conceivably be due to dishonest character, it is not necessarily, and not even probably, due to that cause. If now we regard this remote contingency as important, it follows that he should be allowed to rebut this inference by evidence of good character. But if we regard this remote contingency as too slender to be taken into account, we shall refuse to believe that any issue of Character is involved.

It is according to these two opposing views of the situation that Courts admit or exclude such evidence.[1] The former view is represented in the following passages:

Texas: 1899, Smith v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 50 S. W. 363, semble (allowable, after cross-examination to character, only if the witness is a stranger in the community): 1899, Luttrell v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 651, 51 S. W. 930 (admissible after evidence of misconduct);
Vermont: 1848, Paine v. Tilden, 20 Vt. 554 564 (admitted, where the "character of the witness is attacked . . . by cross-examination"), 1892, Stevenson v. Gunning's Estate, 64 Vt. 601, 609, 25 Atl. 697;
Virginia: 1877, George v. Pilcher, 28 Gratt. 299, 312, 315 (semble, admissible); 1895, Reynolds v. R. Co., 92 Va. 400, 23 S. E. 770 (an endeavor on cross-examination to show that the plantiff's injuries existed before the accident, held not a sufficient impeachment);
Wisconsin: 1903, Kraimer v. State, 117 Wis. 350, 93 N. W. 1097 (admissible, after impeachment by conviction of crime).

§ 1107. [1] The cases have been placed in the foregoing section.

[2] 1907, First National Bank v. Blakeman, 19 Okl. 106, 91 Pac. 868 (admissible; careful opinion by Burford, C. J.); 1898, First Nat'l Bank v. Com. U. Ass. Co., 33 Or. 43, 52 Pac. 1050 (bias).

A Chinese witness is by Federal statute in certain cases required to be corroborated (post, § 2066); it would seem therefore that his good character for veracity ought in such cases to be received in chief. Contra: 1901, Woey Ho v. U. S., 48 C. C. A. 705, 109 Fed. 888 (in discretion).

§ 1108. [1] Ala. 1848, Hadjo v. Gooden, 13 Ala. 718, 720 (admitted); 1860, Lewis v. State, 35 Ala. 380, 386 (same); 1895, Holley v. State, 105 Ala. 100, 17 So. 102 (same); 1896, Towns v. State, 111 Ala. 1, 20 So. 598 (same); 1904, Brown v. State, 142 Ala. 287, 38 So. 268 (same); Cal. 1874, People v. Ah Fat, 48 Cal. 61, 64 (undecided); 1884, People v. Bush, 65 Cal. 129, 3 Pac. 590 (excluded; no cases cited); Conn. 1833, Rogers v. Moore, 10 Conn. 14, semble (excluded); Fla. 1898, Mercer v. State, 40 Fla. 216, 24 So. 154 (admitted); Ga. Code 1910, § 5881, P. C. § 1052 (allowable); 1853, Stamper v. Griffin, 12 Ga. 456 (excluded); 1879, McEwen v. Springfield, 64 Ga. 159, 165 (admitted); 1886, Pulliam v. Cantrell, 77 Ga. 563, 568, 3 S. E. 280 (same); 1903, Clark v. State, 117 Ga. 254, 43 S. E. 853 (statute applied); 1920, McBride v. State, 150 Ga. 92, 102 S. E. 865 (allowable; following Pulliam v. Cantrell); Ind. 1866, Paxton v. Dye, 26 Ind. 394 ("if by statements inconsistent with material evidence given by him in the body of his testimony, and which statements he does not admit that he made", admitted); 1868, Clark v. Bond, 29 Ind. 555 (admitted); Harris v. State, 30 Ind. 131 (admitted); 1870, Clem v. State, 33 Ind. 418, 427 (admitted, after careful reconsideration of the subject; see quotation supra); 1886,

1838, COWEN, J., in People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 583: "With great deference I ask. Do not discrepancies of statement in themselves go to general character? They are not like contradicting a witness on the fact itself, nor do they bring the matter to a mere test of memory. How do they operate in common understanding? Either to evince a dangerous levity and versatility, or downright dishonesty in representing a matter of fact."

1870, FRAZER, J., in Clem v. State, 33 Ind. 427: "The sole object in asking a witness whether he had made statements elsewhere not in accordance with his testimony, and upon his denial calling other witnesses to show that he did make such statements, is to create a belief that he is not a credible witness. Impeachment of a witness by proof of his bad character is intended to accomplish exactly and only the same thing. The statements and the bad character are alike immaterial, except for the single purpose of affecting the credit of the witness, and it is not easy to say that the two methods are not about equally efficient in accomplishing the end. In either case, the credibility of the witness is impaired. . . . If it is just in the one case that a party should be permitted to establish the credit of his witness by showing his good character, it is alike just in the other case."

The opposite view is represented by the following passage:

1860, WARDLAW, J., in Chapman v. Cooley, 12 Rich. L. 659: "The greatest rogue, under circumstances supervised by his neighbors, may simulate the course of honesty; one of good principles and the fairest reputation may be utterly unworthy of credit in his state-

Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Frawley, 110 Ind. 18, 26, 9 N. E. 594 (admitted); 1893, Board v. O'Conner, 137 Ind. 622, 35 N. E. 1006, 37 N. E. 16 (same); Ia. 1887, State v. Archer, 73 Ia. 320, 323, 35 N. W. 241 (excluded); 1899, State v. Owens, 109 Ia. 1, 79 N. W. 462 (excluded); 1907, State v. Hoffman, 134 Ia. 587, 112 N. W. 103 (excluded); Kan. 1917, Colvin v. Wilson, 100 Kan. 247, 164 Pac. 284 (admitted, but not as a "hard-and-fast rule"; the admissibility should be left "to the sound discretion of the trial Court)"; Ky. 1859, Vance v. Vance, 2 Mete. 581 (excluded); La. 1886, State v. Boyd, 38 La. An. 374 (admitted); Md. 1873, Davis v. State, 38 Md. 15, 49 (admissible); Mass. 1829, Russell v. Coffin, 8 Pick. 143, 154 (excluded); 1856, Brown v. Mooers, 6 Gray 450 (same); Com. v. Ingraham, 7 Gray 46, 48 (same); Mo. 1880, State v. Cooper, 71 Mo. 436, 442 (obscure); 1919, Orris v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 279 Mo. 1, 214 S. W. 124 (not admitted, after cross-examination to former statements suggesting lack of veracity; former ruling of the Court of Appeals reviewed and repudiated); 1921, State v. Ritter, 288 Mo. 381, 231 S. W. 606 (Orris v. R. Co. affirmed); N. Y. 1842, People v. Hulse, 3 Hill 309, 313 (excluded; no special exception allowed for rape cases; Cowen, J., diss.); 1847, Starks v. People, 5 Den. 106, 108 (excluded); 1856, Stacy v. Graham, 14 N. Y. 492, 498, 500 (admitted; no precedents cited; but here there were also admissions of corruption, and not merely self-contradictions); N. C. 1874, Isler v. Dewey, 71 N. C. 14 (admitted); Ohio: 1876, Webb v. State, 29 Oh. St. 351, 357 (excluded; pointing out that "if the impeaching evidence should appear from the conduct of the witness, or his contradictory statements made during his examination", his character would clearly be inadmissible, and yet the situation would be precisely the same); Or. 1874, Glaze v. Whitley, 5 Or. 164, 167 (admitted); 1882, Sheppard v. Yocum, 10 Or. 402, 413 (overruling the preceding decision, as representing an inferior rule); 1898, First Nat'l Bank v. Com. U. Ass. Co., 33 Or. 43, 52 Pac. 1050 (excluded); Pa. 1839, Braddee v. Brownfield, 9 Watts 124, semble (excluded); 1853, Wertz v. May, 21 Pa. 274, 279 (same); S. C. 1839, Farr v. Thompson, Cheves 37, 39, 43 (admitted, as it is "impossible to resort" to such testimony "without making a direct attack on the veracity and character of the witness"); 1860, Chapman v. Cooley, 12 Rich. L. 654, 658 (excluded; the preceding case being distinguished and in effect overruled); 1888, State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201, 230 (excluded); 1897, State v. Rice, 49 S. C. 418, 27 S. E. 452 (excluded); Tex. 1857, Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 713, 730 (admitted); 1900, Renfro v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 393, 56 S. W. 1013 (not allowed where the cross-examiner merely used the prior statement to refresh the witness' memory); 1903, Runnels v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 446, 77 S. W. 458 (admitted); Vt. 1840, State v. Roe, 12 Vt. 93, 97, 111 (admitted); 1848, Paine v. Tilden, 20 Vt. 554, 564 (same); 1848, Sweet v. Sherman, 21 Vt. 23, 29 (same); 1892, Stevenson v. Gunning's Estate, 64 Vt. 601, 608, 25 Atl. 697 (same); Va. 1877, George v. Pilcher, 28 Gratt. 299, 311, 315 (admissible, where "material facts" are the subject of the error); W. Va. 1899, State v. Staley, 45 W. Va. 792, 32 S. E. 198 (admissible).

ments of some transaction. Monomania is a state of mind universally recognized, and it may preclude one completely from the perception and narration of the truth. Intense ignorance or superstition, or some affection, may produce the same consequences. The great improbability of a narrative may produce disbelief, without impairing the confidence of the hearers in the probity of the narrator. A wise and good man may fail in his remembrance of any fact, and especially of its attendant circumstances. Surely, then, character and credit are distinct things, and every assault on the credit of a witness does not involve the imputation of perjury to him, nor, indeed, any reflection on his reputation."

The latter view seems to be much more in harmony with the needs of the situation. Considering the usual remoteness of the inference as to moral character, and the minor value of reputation-evidence in modern times, it is not worth while to cumber the trial with it for so trifling an occasion of use. As a matter of rule, the various jurisdictions are divided between the two views.

§ 1109. Same: (5) After Contradiction by other Witnesses. Contradiction by opposing witnesses has for its purpose to show an error by the first witness, so that from this error may be argued a capacity to commit errors upon other points as well (ante, § 1000). But here, as with the mode of impeachment just dealt with, it is only by contingency that Moral Character may be thought to be reflected upon. Thus, the same arguments pro and con as in the foregoing subject may here be raised, except that, since the insinuation against Moral Character is here more remote, the grounds for treating it as in issue and admitting rebutting evidence of good character are weaker

§ 1109. [1] The cases on both sides are as follows: England: 1808, Durham v. Beaumont, 1 Camp. 207 (a mere conflict of testimony: excluded); Federal: 1898, Spurr v. U. S., 31 C. C. A. 202, 87 Fed. 701 (excluded); 1902, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. M'Clish, 53 C. C. A. 60, 115 Fed. 285 (excluded; good opinion by Day, J.); Alabama: 1853, Newton v. Jackson, 23 Ala. 335, 344 (admitted); 1875, Mobile & G. R. Co. v. Williams, 54 Ala. 168, 172 (excluded; the preceding case not cited); 1894, Funderberg v. State, 100 Ala. 36, 14 So. 877 (excluded); 1900, Turner v. State, 124 Ala. 59, 27 So. 272 (mere contradiction, not used to impeach, insufficient); 1900, Bell v. State, 124 Ala. 94, 27 So. 414 (excluded); 1901, Lusk v. State, 129 Ala. 1, 30 So. 33 (bastardy; complainant's character admitted, after impeachment upon her assertion that she had not kept company with other men; but this would be justifiable under the principle of § 1106, ante); California: 1908, Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Ingersoll, 153 Cal. 1, 94 Pac. 94 (accounting as trustee; defendant's good character of the defendant-witness not admitted where only contradictions of his testimony on minor points had been introduced); Connecticut: 1833, Rogers v. Moore, 10 Conn. 14 (excluded); Florida: 1886, Saussy v. R. Co., 22 Fla. 327, 330 (excluded); Georgia: 1895, Miller v. R. Co., 93 Ga. 480, 21 S. E. 52 (excluded; good opinion by Bleckley, C. J.); 1897, Bell v. State, 100 Ga. 78, 27 S. E. 669 (excluded); 1899, Anderson v. R. Co., 107 Ga. 500, 33 S. E. 644 (excluded); Illinois: 1884, Tedens v. Schumers, 112 Ill. 263, 266 (excluded; see quotation supra); Indiana: 1863, Pruitt v. Cox, 21 Ind. 15; Johnson v. State, 21 Ind. 329 (excluded); 1881, Presser v. State, 77 Ind. 274, 280 (same); 1882, Braun v. Campbell, 86 Ind. 516 (same); 1889, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Frawley, 110 Ind. 18, 27, 9 N. E. 594 (same); Iowa: 1887, State v. Archer, 73 Ia. 320, 323, 35 N. W. 241, semble (excluded); Kentucky: 1859, Vance v. Vance, 2 Mete. 581 (excluded); Louisiana: 1895, State v. Desforges, 48 La. An. 73, 18 So. 912 (admissible, where a direct conflict exists and practically the integrity and veracity of the witnesses are involved); Maryland: 1869, Vernon v. Tucker, 30 Md. 456, 462 (excluded); 1873, Davis v. State, 38 Md. 15, 50, 59, 74 (allowable, after a showing of error on a material point; no authority cited; Stewart and Bowie, JJ., diss., citing the preceding case); Massachusetts: 1829, Russell v. Coffin, 8 Pick. 143, 154 (excluded); 1855, Heywood v. Reed, 4 Gray 574, 576, 581 (excluded; although incidentally the witness appeared as fraudulent assignor of property); 1856, Brown v. Mooers, 6 Gray 451 (excluded; even though knowledge of the falsity appears); Com. v. Ingraham, 7 Gray 46, 48,

The mixed arguments of logic and policy for rejecting it are seen in the following passages:

1839, EARLE, J., in Farr v. Thompson, Cheves S. C. 43: "It is obvious that it [i.e. proof that the facts are otherwise] may be resorted to without in the slightest degree impugning the veracity of the witness, so long as men view the same transaction in different lights, form different conclusions from the same premises, pay more or less attention to the same occurrences taking place before their eyes, and have memories more or less retentive."

1884, WALKER, J., in Tedens v. Schumers, 112 Ill. 263, 266: "If the practice sanctioned the calling of witnesses to prove general character whenever a witness is contradicted, it would render trials interminable. The greater portion of the time of courts would be liable to be engaged in the attack and support of the characters of witnesses. If permitted, each of the contradicting witnesses would have the same right; and not only so, but all of the supporting witnesses on each side contradicting each other would be entitled to the same privilege. It is thus seen that the rule must be limited to cases where witnesses are called to impeach the general character of a witness; otherwise, instead of reaching truth by the verdict, it would tend to stifle it under a large number of side issues calculated to obscure and not to elucidate them."

1884, HOLMES, J., in Gertz v. Fitchburg R. Co., 137 Mass. 77, 78: "The purpose and only direct effect of the [impeaching] evidence are to show that the witness is not to be believed in this instance. But the reason why he is not to be believed is left untouched. That may be found in forgetfulness on the part of the witness, or in his having been deceived, or in any other possible cause. The disbelief sought to be produced is perfectly consistent with an admission of his general character for truth, as well as for the other virtues; and until the character of a witness is assailed, it cannot be fortified by evidence."

No Court favoring admission seems to have attempted a reasoned justification of its policy; and the great majority of jurisdictions agree in excluding such evidence.

§ 1110. Same: Other Principles distinguished. The witness' good moral character, though it may be inadmissible in some of the foregoing situations, may nevertheless be receivable from some other point of view, — particularly in a charge of rape (ante, § 62), seduction (ante, § 76), or defamation semble (inadmissible); 1884, Gertz v. Fitchburg R. Co., 137 Mass. 77 (see quotation supra); New York: 1838, People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 569, 586 (excluded); 1842, People v. Hulse, 3 Hill 309, 313 (same); 1847, Starks v. People, 5 Den. 106, 108 (same); North Carolina: 1854, March v. Harrell, 1 Jones 329, 331, semble (admitted); 1874, Isler v. Dewey, 71 N. C. 14 (same); Oklahoma: 1907, First National Bank v. Blakeman, 19 Okl. 106, 91 Pac. 868 (excluded; except in special cases, in the trial Court's discretion); Oregon: 1874, Glaze v. Whitley, 5 Or. 164, 167 (admissible); 1882, Sheppard v. Yocum, 10 Or. 402, 413 (by implication overruling the preceding decision); 1915, State v. Louie Hing, 77 Or. 462, 151 Pac. 706 (excluded); Pennsylvania: 1839, Braddee v. Brownfield, 9 Watts 124 (excluded; even though the error involve a falsity); South Carolina: 1839, Farr v. Thompson, Cheves 37, 43 (excluded); 1860, Chapman v. Cooley, 12 Rich. 654, 660, semble (same); 1892, State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201, 230, semble (same); Tennessee: 1837, Richmond v. Richmond, 10 Yerg. 343, 345 (admitted; but here the argument was that there had been false swearing); Texas: 1894, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Raney, 86 Tex. 363, 25 S. W. 11 (excluded); 1900, Jacobs v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 353, 59 S. W. 1111 (excluded); 1914, McCue v. State, 75 Tex. Cr. 137, 170 S. W. 280 (excluded, even though the witness is a stranger in the county, distinguishing the rule of § 1106, n. 2, ante, Davidson, P. J., diss., and attributing the opposite effect to Jacobs v. State, supra); Vermont: 1892, Stevenson v. Gunning's Estate, 64 Vt. 601, 608, 25 Atl. 697 (excluded; in effect overruling the apparently opposite ruling in Mosley v. Ins. Co., 55 Vt. 142, 152 (1882), where the error involved a perjury); Virginia: 1877, George v. Pilcher, 28 Gratt. 295, 311, 315 (admitted); Washington: 1896, State v. Nelson, 13 Wash. 523, 43 Pac. 637 (excluded).

(ante, §§ 66, 76). Whether the proof of the character shall be by reputation (post, § 1608) or by personal opinion (post, § 1980) involves still other principles. Compare §§ 55–79, ante, for the use of character other than in impeachment of a witness.

§ 1111. (B) Discrediting the Impeaching Witness; Cross-examining to Rumors of Misconduct. In the foregoing sections, the object of the evidence offered in support was to establish the witness' good character, in direct denial of its impeachment, by bringing other witnesses to testify to the good reputed character. But the existence of the bad reputed character may also be denied indirectly, i.e. by discrediting the impeaching witness. This process raises certain special questions of its own.

(1) One mode of doing it is to impeach the impeaching witness' own moral character, or bias, or other quality affecting credibility, thus making the impeacher in turn an impeached witness. How far this can be done, with special reference to an impeaching witness, and to the necessity of ending the mutual recrimination at some reasonable point, has been already considered (ante, § 894).

(2) Another and more effective mode is to probe the grounds of the impeacher's knowledge as to the other's bad reputation, by requiring him to specify the particular rumors of misconduct, or statements of individuals, that have led him to assert the existence of the bad reputation. In theory, this rests upon the general principle (ante, § 994) that every witness may be discredited by exhibiting the inadequacy of his sources of knowledge. If a witness to another's bad reputation is speaking from a veritable knowledge of such a repute, he ought to be able to specify some of the rumored misconduct or some of the individual opinions that have gone to form that reputation. If he cannot do this, his assertion may be doubted:

1684, Braddon's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 1127, 1170. Witness: "The Wednesday and Thursday both, it was the common talk of the town all day long." WITHINS, J.: "Name one that spake it to you." Witness: "I cannot; it was the women as they came in and out of my shop, and as they went up and down the town." Counsel, Mr. Wallop: "My lord, we leave it with your lordship and the jury; he swears he then heard such a report." WITHINS, J.: "Do you believe that this man can speak truth when he says it was reported all about their town for two days before it was done, and yet cannot name one person that spake it?" Witness: "I keep a public shop, and do not take notice of every one that comes in and out, to remember particularly." WITHINS, J.: "You heard it up and down the town, you say; surely you might remember somebody."

1849, FLETCHER, J., in Bates v. Barber, 4 Cush. 109: "In point of principle it would seem proper to make this inquiry, because the witness is called on to state what is the reputation of the person impeached, what is his character for truth by report, what is said as to his character for truth; and it may be very material and important to know from whom in particular the reports come, and what persons they were who spoke against the character of the person impeached. Upon such inquiry, it may appear that all the persons from whom the witness has heard anything against the person impeached are his personal enemies, and so situated in regard to him that their speeches and reports against him are entitled to no consideration whatever. The inquiry may also be proper in order to test the extent and means of information possessed by the witness in regard to the character of the party impeached for truth and veracity; by allowing such inquiry, it may perhaps be made to appear that the imputed bad character is wholly fictitious and got up for a particular purpose."

1865, COOLEY, J., in Annis v. People, 13 Mich. 517: "There is no case where a thorough cross-examination is more important to an elucidation of the truth than where a witness is giving an answer to a general question which calls both for matter of fact and matter of opinion. If a witness can shield himself behind an answer so general that, even if false, the person who knows that fact cannot testify with definiteness on the subject, we may well believe that bad men will frequently resort to this species of evidence where the truth will not warrant it. And in nothing may parties be more easily mistaken than in judging of the general reputation of another for truth and veracity. They may either be mistaken in assuming the speech of one or two to be the voice of the community; or they may confound a reputation for something else with a reputation for untruth; or they may misconstrue reports; or they may honestly be mistaken in regard to their import. Nothing is more common in practice than to see a witness placed upon the stand to impeach the general reputation of another for veracity, when a cross-examination demonstrates that the reports only relate to a failure — probably an honest one — to meet obligations, while the party's real reputation for truth is above suspicion. Nothing short of a cross-examination which compels the impeaching witness to state both the source of the reports and their nature will enable the party either to test the correctness of the impeaching evidence or to protect the witness who is assailed, if he is assailed, unjustly."

The objections to such an inquiry are, first, the consumption of time and confusion of issues, and, secondly, the multiplication of petty scandal and the creation of hard feeling between the impeached witness and the innocent third persons whose names are brought into the dispute against their will and whose remarks may have been made in confidence. The first objection is no more serious here than for other cross-examination of all sorts. But the second objection undoubtedly discloses one of the unfortunate and degrading features of character-testimony. An answer, to be sure, is that, since testimony based on personal knowledge is now almost universally excluded (post, § 1980), and since reputation-testimony is notoriously so easily fabricated and its fabrication can be exposed only in this way, it would be inexpedient to destroy the only security against false impeaching testimony. The reply, however, to this may well be that it is better to go back to personal-knowledge testimony rather than to give a monopoly to a kind so easily fabricated and so inseparable from the vice of retailing neighborhood-scandal in court.

But the reasons above quoted are universally accepted (except by a few Courts which do not appreciate the reasoning); on cross-examination of the impeaching witness he may be asked as to the specific persons who have spoken against the impeached witness, and (usually) as to what misconduct they specified.[1]

§ 1111. [1] Except as otherwise noted, the following rulings allow cross-examination as to the persons speaking against the impeached witness: Canada: 1900, Messenger v. Bridgetown, 33 N. Sc. 291 (cross-examination of a witness to bad reputation, as to the opinion of "individual neighbors", allowed); U. S. Alabama: 1873 Sonneborn v. Bernstein, 49 Ala. 171; 1884, Jackson v. State, 77 Ala. 18, 24 (whether he had not heard good reports from some, allowed); Connecticut: 1849, Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 377 (good opinion by Church, C. J.); Florida: 1878, Robinson v. State, 16 Fla. 835, 840; Georgia: Code 1910, § 5882, P. C. § 1053 ("opinions of single individuals" may only be asked about "upon cross-exami-

This kind of discrediting examination is to be distinguished from the preliminary direct examination which some Courts require before a witness to reputation may speak as qualified (ante, § 691). The principle beneath both is the same. But there the object is to ascertain whether he is a qualified witness at all, while here he has already qualified and spoken, and the object is to discredit the sources of his knowledge.

Distinguish also the cross-examination of a witness to good reputation, concerning rumors of misconduct which he has heard (dealt with ante, § 988); this rests on an application of the same general principle, but it aims at the impeachment, not the support, of the impeached witness.

(3) May the impeaching witness, after thus naming certain persons or reports, be contradicted and shown to speak incorrectly on those points? The answer to this is usually negative,[2] on the theory that the contradiction concerns a collateral point (ante, § 1004). But this result seems unsound, for the denial can usually be summary and effective, and the effect on the im-nation in seeking for the extent and foundation of the witness' knowledge"); Iowa: 1897, State v. Allen, 100 Ia. 7, 69 N. W. 274 (but here excluding questions in which the examiner himself specified certain persons); Kentucky: 1902, Barnes v. Com., — Ky. —, 70 S. W. 827 (and the answers are of course not to be excluded because they involve unfavorable rumors); Maine: 1841, Phillips v. Kingfield, 19 Me. 375, 381 ("for how long a time, and how generally, the unfavorable reports had prevailed, and from what person he has heard them"); Michigan: 1865, Annis v. People, 13 Mich. 511, 516 (allowing also questions as to what specific persons said; see quotation supra); 1874, Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173, 185, semble; Minnesota: 1908, Harms v. Proehl, 104 Minn. 303, 116 N. W. 587 (allowing inquiry, not only to the names of the persons, but also to their statements); Mississippi: 1884, Pickens v. State, 61 Miss. 563, 566; 1885, French v. Sale, 63 Miss. 386, 393; Missouri: 1850, Day v. State, 13 Mo. 422, 426, semble (excluded; apparently treating it as an attempt to introduce hearsay); New Hampshire: 1838, State v. Howard, 9 N. H. 487; 1851, Titus v. Ash, 24 N. H. 331; New York: 1827, Lower v. Winters, 7 Cow. 265; 1830, People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 257, per Macy, Sen.; 1835, Bakeman v. Rose, 14 Wend. 105, 110, 18 id. 150 (here also direct examination allowed, in the trial Court's discretion, because the impeaching witness had volunteered the statement that some persons spoke for, and some against, the other witness); North Carolina: 1872, State v. Perkins, 66 N. C. 126; Ohio: 1862, McDermott v. State, 13 Oh. St. 335 (allowable to "ascertain from the witnesses their means of knowing her general reputation, the origin and character of any and all reports prejudicial to her, the extent to which those reports had prevailed, the time when and the persons from whom the witnesses had heard them, and, in short, everything which reflects the nature and general prevalence of the reputation"); Oregon: 1909, State v. Osborne, 54 Or. 289, 103 Pac. 62 (rape; defendant's witness to the woman's bad repute, not allowed to be cross-examined to his own knowledge of her good behavior; the Court mistakenly applies the rule of § 988, ante, as to a sustaining witness, and ignores the present rule); Vermont: 1858, Willard v. Goodenough, 30 Vt. 396 ("the cross-examination may extend to every matter of fact within the witness' knowledge bearing on the fact of the bad character to which he has testified").

Compare the rule about a divided reputation (post, §§ 1612, 1613).

[2] 1873, Sonneborn v. Bernstein, 49 Ala. 172; 1889, Robbins v. Spencer, 121 Ind. 596, 22 N. E. 660; 1884, State v. Woodworth, 65 Ia. 141, 21 N. W. 490; 1905, Hofacre v. Monticello, 128 Ia. 239, 103 N. W. 488 (Deemer, J.: "The writer would be inclined to adopt a contrary rule. . . . But as there seems to be nothing sustaining such a [contrary] rule save an unsupported remark of Professor W. in his new work on Evidence, § 1111, it is better, perhaps, to follow the current of authority"); 1908, Harms v. Proehl, 104 Minn. 303, 116 N. W. 587; 1862, McDermott v. State, 13 Oh. St. 3. Contra: 1905, Johnson v. State, 75 Ark. 427, 88 S. W. 905, semble (cited post, § 1117, n. 6); 1916, Johnson v. Ebensen, 38 S. D. 116, 160 N. W. 847 (admitting it, and approving the text above); 1913, Fort Worth Belt R. Co. v. Cabell, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 161 S. W. 1083 (after testimony to plaintiff's bad repute for truth and honesty, which the witness said was based on plaintiff's failure to pay his debts, plaintiff was allowed to explain the facts of his indebtedness).

peaching witness' credit is so direct that it cannot be termed collateral (ante, § 994).

§ 1112. (C) Explaining away the Bad Reputation; (1) Reputation due to Malice, etc.; (2) Witness' Veraciousness unimpaired; (3) Witness Reformed. Still another mode of meeting an impeachment of bad reputed character is, not to deny it directly by showing good reputed character, nor to deny it indirectly by discrediting the impeacher, but to explain it away by circumstances which diminish its significance, on the general logical principle of Explanation (ante, § 34).

(1) Conceding the reputation to exist, it may be argued that the reputation is untrustworthy because it has originated in the malice of a few persons, or in specific facts of conduct which do not justify it. But this course is open to all the evils of contradiction on collateral points (ante, § 1002), and would not be allowed;[1] except so far as it can be pursued on cross-examination of the reputation-witness (according to § 111, par. 2, ante).

(2) Conceding the reputation, in a jurisdiction where general bad character is relevant (ante, § 923), it may still be claimed that the witness' reputation for the trait of veracity remains unimpaired, so that the general bad character does not signify anything against his credibility. This seems to be generally conceded;[2] it does not involve proof of particular facts, and therefore is not obnoxious to other principles (ante, § 979).

(3) Conceding the reputation, and the actual character as then indicated by it, the claim may be made that the witness has since that time reformed, and has exhibited and now possesses the disposition of a generally good or veracious man. This, so far as it can be shown by reputation and without going into particular facts, would seem to be allowable;[3] though usually the same purpose is practically attained by simply adducing opposing witnesses to deny the bad character.

B. Rehabilitation after Impeachment by Particular Acts of Misconduct

§ 1116. Denial of the Fact; Innocence of a Crime admitted on Cross-examination or proved by Record of Conviction. There are but two ways, § 1112. [1] 1890, Hollingsworth v. State, 53 Ark. 387, 393, 14 S. W. 1 (that the reputation was due to a specific vice only, excluded, on the theory that "it would extend controversies beyond all reason" to permit such issues to be raised, even on cross-examination of the impeaching witnesses; the latter clause is unsound); 1830, People v. Mather, 4 Wend. N. Y. 257 (evidence was excluded, to explain away evidence of a witness' bad reputation, that the reports against him originated from a particular body of men who had spread false rumors as to certain conduct; good opinion by Marcy, Sen.).

[2] 1851, Wayne, J. (the others not touching the point), in Gaines v. Relf, 12 How. U. S. 555; 1838, People v. Rector, 19 Wend. N. Y. 569, 579, 588; 1883, Anon., 1 Hill S. C. 258 (O'Neall, J.: "the party in whose favor he has testified may inquire whether, notwithstanding his bad character in other respects he has not preserved his character for truth, and if this inquiry is answered affirmatively, the jury may seize upon it as the floating plank in his general wreck, and believe him").

But compare the following: 1898, Barnwell v. Hannegan, 105 Ga. 396, 31 S. E. 116 (must involve general character only, under C. C. § 5293).

[3] See the cases cited post, § 1117.

as already noted, in which a witness' particular acts of misconduct can be proved to discredit his character, — his own admission on cross-examination (ante, § 981), and a record of a judgment of conviction for a crime (ante, § 980). Obviously, he cannot deny a fact shown by the former mode.[1] But may he deny a fact attempted to be established in the latter mode? The thing actually proved against him is the judgment of conviction; but is the judgment conclusive to establish the fact of the crime?

(1) The technical fact that it is here used as between other parties ought not to be an objection; for it is not used against him as a party or as concluding him in respect to a legal right. Moreover, if this objection does not prevent the judgment being offered in evidence, as it certainly does not, it need not prevent the usual effect of conclusiveness being allowed for it. It is therefore correct and not unfair to exclude any attack by other witnesses on the judgment. But the rule against proving particular facts by outside testimony (ante, §§ 979, 1002) is not the proper ground for this exclusion; that applies only to the party offering to raise an issue; it cannot apply to exclude testimony in denial by one against whom testimony to a fact has been offered; to allow one party to adduce evidence and to forbid the other to refute it would be grossly unfair.[2]

(2) This being so, and the judgment being conclusive, the witness' own denials of guilt, on re-examination, would be equally inadmissible;[3] though it has sometimes been thought, proceeding in part on the erroneous theory just noted, that they are receivable.[4]

(3) But, in any event, may not a pardon for the crime be admitted as negativing guilt? If a pardon were always granted on the ground of discovery of innocence, the answer would clearly be in the affirmative, especially since the objection of raising new issues by other witnesses is here practically obviated. But as a pardon has no such necessary significance (since it is usually granted for other reasons than innocence), Courts would probably be found excluding it,[5] on the analogy of the principle of § 980 ante. Nevertheless, it seems more proper to conclude that, since a pardon may signify innocence, it should be received. Certainly a reversal of the judgment would be.[6]

§ 1116. [1] See the cases in notes 3 and 4, infra.

[2] For the right to explain, see the next section. Where the witness has not admitted but has denied the imputation on cross-examination, there is no occasion to call other witnesses to corroborate this denial: 1860, Tolman v. Johnstone, 2 F. & F. 66 (Cockburn, C. J., after consulting the other Judges).

[3] 1874, State v. Lang, 63 Me. 215; 1876, State v. Watson, 65 Me. 79; 1878, Com. v. Gallagher, 126 Mass. 55; 1884, Gertz v. Fitchburg R. Co., 137 Mass. 77, 80; 1897, Lamoureux v. R. Co., 169 Mass. 338, 47 N. E. 1009 (quoted in the next section); 1863, Gardner v. Bartholomew, 40 Barb. 326 (on the theory that it is the crime that impeaches, but that the record of conviction is conclusive of the offence).

[4] 1902, Reed v. State, 66 Nebr. 184, 92 N. W. 321; 1878, Sims v. Sims, 75 N. Y. 473 (on the theory that the conviction is used as evidence of the crime, but is not conclusive in a civil case; and yet the opinion in a preceding passage maintains that it is the sentence and not the crime that disqualifies); 1904, People v. Rodawald, 177 N. Y. 408, 70 N. E. 1 (Sims v. Sims approved).

[5] 1904, Gallagher v. People, 211 Ill. 158, 71 N. E. 842.

[6] 1899, State v. Duplechain, 52 La. An. 448, 26 So. 1000 (that the conviction had been set

§ 1117. Same: Explaining away the Fact; Reformed Good Character in Support. Conceding the fact of misconduct, as shown by the witness' own cross-examination or by a judgment of conviction of crime, what explanations can be made, to diminish or repel the inference of bad moral character suggested thereby?

(1) As against misconduct proved by either of the above modes, the inference of bad character may be met by testimony denying the fact to be inferred, i.e. by affirming the witness' good reputation. This kind of evidence has been already considered (ante, § 1106).

(2) Again, equally after either of those modes of proof, the claim may be made that, while the moral character may then have been bad, as indicated by the fact of misconduct, nevertheless the witness has reformed and possesses now a good character. This can certainly be done by the ordinary method of showing his present reputation;[1] and may also properly be done (the objection of confusion of issues not applying) by the witness' own statement on re-examination.[2]

(3) After proof of a judgment of conviction, may the witness be allowed to explain the circumstances of the offence, as extenuating the act and diminishing its significance? The conclusiveness of the judgment seems here to be no objection. It is true that no issue could be allowed to be joined on the witness' explanations, and thus there would be no security against false statements by him. Nevertheless, having regard to the publicity of one's discredit on the stand and the necessity of guarding against the abuses of the impeachment-process and of preventing the witness-box from becoming a place of dread and loathing, it would seem a harmless charity to allow the witness to make such protestations on his own behalf as he may feel able to make with a due regard to the penalties of perjury.[3] aside, and the case nolle prossed, allowed); and see the intimations in cases cited ante, § 980.

§ 1117. [1] Cases cited ante, § 1106, and the following: 1817, R. v. Clarke, 2 Stark. 241 (quoted ante, § 1106); 1886, Mynatt v. Hudson, 66 Tex. 66, 68, 17 S. W. 396.

[2] 1898, Tennessee C. I. & R. Co. v. Haley, 29 C. C. A. 328, 85 Fed. 534 (that an ex-convict was a "trusty", allowed); 1855, Holmes v. Stateler, 17 Ill. 453 (reform shown); 1881, Conley v. Meeker, 85 N. Y. 618, semble (conviction for crime shown; the witness' statement that he had reformed and led an honest and orderly life, admitted).

[3] Accord: 1922, Hopper v. State, — Ark. —, 236 S. W. 595 (conviction for robbing a post-office; explanation of the circumstances allowed); 1899, South Cov. & C. S. R. Co. v. Beatty, — Ky. —, 50 S. W. 239 (witness allowed to explain circumstances of his arrest and conviction); 1900, State v. McClellan, 23 Mont. 532, 59 Pac. 924 (explanation why he had been in jail, allowed); 1838, Chase v. Blodgett, 10 N. H. 22, 24.

Contra: 1897, Lamoureux v. R. Co., 169 Mass. 338, 47 N. E. 1009 (Holmes, J.: "Upon redirect examination the witness was asked to state the circumstances, the evidence being offered to show the extent of the wickedness involved in the act, and to show the circumstances. This evidence was excluded. Logically, there is no doubt that evidence tending to diminish the wickedness of the act, like evidence of good character, which is admissible, does meet, as far as it goes, the evidence afforded by the conviction, since that discredits only by tending to show either general bad character, or bad character of a kind more or less likely to be associated with untruthfulness. Nevertheless, the conviction must be left unexplained. Obviously, the guilt of the witness cannot be retried. It is equally impossible to go behind the sentence to determine the degree of guilt. Apart from any technical objection, it is impracticable to introduce what may be a long investigation of a wholly collateral matter into a case to which it is foreign, and it is not to be expected or allowed that the party producing the record should

(4) When, by the allowable process (ante, § 981) of questioning upon cross-examination, discrediting facts are brought out, there is usually but one type of fact that admits on principle of any explanation, i.e. whose force may be obviated, not by denial, but by the production of other facts, namely, the admission of an indictment or arrest or other charge of misconduct. In the jurisdictions where this is allowed to be brought out on examination (ante, §§ 982, 987), it is no more than fair that the witness should be allowed to explain that the arrest or charge was unfounded; for the arrest or indictment is only an 'ex parte' mode of inducing belief in the objective fact, i.e. the misconduct itself. But it would introduce all the evils of collateral issues (ante, § 979) if the showing were allowed to be made by extrinsic testimony; moreover, as the original fact is brought out on cross-examination of the witness himself, fairness is satisfied by confining the explanation within the limits of a re-examination of the witness himself.[4]

(5) As for other facts drawn out on cross-examination, supposing them open to any real explanation, it would doubtless be desirable to allow, in the trial Court's discretion, such explanation of them by the witness as seems worth listening to and does not require too much time.[5] In the same way, also put in testimony to meet the explanation ready in the mouth of the convicted person. Yet, if one side goes into the matter, the other must be allowed to also"); 1913, O'Brien v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 214 Mass. 277, 101 N. E. 365 ("No evidence is competent to explain the circumstances of the particular crime"; but counsel may argue hypothetically on the principle of § 1807, post); 1912, Smith v. State, 102 Miss. 330, 59 So. 96; 1921, Fowler v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 623, 232 S. W. 515 (witness' explanation that he had been acquitted on the ground of self-defence, held improper).

[4] Eng. 1795, R. v. Jackson, Dublin, Ridgeway's Rep. 63, 87 (the witness was asked whether he had been tried for perjury, and was allowed to explain that he had been acquitted and on what grounds; here a witness to corroborate him as to these facts was also admitted); 1834, R. v. Noel, 6 C. & P. 336 (the witness having been charged with keeping a gaming-house, he was allowed to explain that he was innocent); U. S. Ill. 1916, People v. Simmons, 274 Ill. 528, 113 N. E. 887 (a witness who had been indicted for perjury at a former trial was called, and the fact of the perjury was made known; held that the defendant was entitled to ask for the witness' explanation of his reason for changing his testimony); Ind. 1912, Neal v. State, 178 Ind. 154, 98 N. E. 872 (after the witness has on cross-examination answered negatively to questions about attempts to kill other persons, etc., he may not on re-direct examination explain the actually innocent complexion of the acts referred to in the questions; this is theoretically sound, but practically unfair; though the cross-examiner cannot prove the facts in contradiction, yet the insinuation is often equally effective (ante, § 983, post, § 1808), and the re-examination is the only means of removing its insidious effect); Mich. 1882, Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 417, 11 N. W. 221 (explaining the reasons for an arrest allowed); Tenn. 1892, Hill v. State, 91 Tenn. 521, 523, 19 S. W. 674 (protestation of innocence of an offence for which witness had been indicted, allowed); Tex. 1902, Stewart v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 67 S. W. 107 (witness allowed to state the disposal of indictments used to discredit him, but not to explain the details of the charges); 1920, Ray v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 196, 225 S. W. 523 (homicide; the prosecution having proved on defendant's cross-examination an indictment for theft; defendant's testimony to further proceedings showing his innocence, admitted); Vt. 1904, McKinstry v. Collins, 76 Vt. 221, 56 Atl. 985 (assault; plaintiff's explanation of his plea of guilty to a charge of assault on the same occasion, allowed on re-examination).

[5] 1899, Sayles v. Fitzgerald, 72 Conn. 391, 44 Atl. 733 (to show bias, plaintiff testified that defendant's witness had been discharged by the former for drunkenness; plaintiff's testimony on cross-examination as to specific acts of witness' drunkenness, allowed to be contradicted by witness); 1898, Ellis v. State, 152 Ind. 326, 52 N. E. 82 (testimony "in excuse and extenuation", excluded); 1886, State v. Starnes, 94 N. C. 976, semble (allowing explanation of particular misconduct; but here the question put on cross-examination was otherwise objectionable); 1922, Polk v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 238 S. W. 934 (seduction; the complainant al-where such facts have improperly been received or insinuated on the cross-examination of a supporting witness to the good reputation of the impeached witness (ante, § 988), an explanation or a denial from the impeached witness himself should be allowed, because the opportunities for abuse in that use of cross-examination are great and every means of counteracting them should be freely allowed.[6]

C. Rehabilitation after Impeachment by Bias, Interest, Self-Contradiction, Admissions

§ 1119. Denial of the Fact; Explaining away the Fact; Putting in the Whole of a Conversation, etc.; Good Character in Support. The modes of rehabilitation after impeachment by evidence of bias, interest, or self-contradiction, are better considered elsewhere. A brief summary here suffices:

(1) A denial of the fact of bias or the like, by other testimony, is always allowable; for any testimony of the opponent admissible to prove a discrediting fact must of course in fairness be allowed to be met by testimony denying the alleged fact. The only apparent (not real) exceptions could be the cases of proof by record of conviction (where the principle of conclusiveness of judgments applies) and of cross-examination by the opponent; but the former does not here come into use, and the latter involves the rule in regard to improper contradictions on collateral matters (dealt with ante, § 1007), and in regard to self-contradictions on collateral matters (dealt with ante, § 1046).

(2) The modes of explaining away impeaching facts of the present sorts are considered already elsewhere, — including their application to evidence of Bias, Interest, or Corruption (ante, §§ 952–969); to evidence of Self-Contradictions or Inconsistent Statements (ante, §§ 1044–1046); to evidence of Admissions (ante, § 1058); and in regard to all of these, by offering good character in support of the impeached witness (ante, §§ 1107–1109).

There remains now to be considered the method of supporting a witness, after any kind of impeachment, by prior consistent statements:

D. Rehabilitation by Prior Consistent Statements

1. Witnesses in General

§ 1122. General Theory. Under the head of Explanation, in dealing with the various modes of Impeachment (by Character, Bias, Interest, Corruption, Contradiction, Self-Contradiction), it would have been logically proper to consider, with reference to each of these modes, how far the effect of the

lowed to call other witnesses to disprove acts of unchastity insinuated on her cross-examination).

Compare the rule for curative irrelevancies (ante, § 15); and the rule for a witness' right in general to volunteer explanations (ante, § 785).

[6] 1905, Johnson v. State, 75 Ark. 427, 88 S. W. 905 (semble, charges brought out by an impeaching witness to character, may be denied in rebuttal, if no rule of estoppel applies); 1882, Abernethy v. Com., 101 Pa. 322, 328 (where, on cross-examination of a witness to good character, derogatory facts had come out, an explanation of them was allowed in answer).

impeaching evidence might be explained away or rebutted by the circumstance that the witness had, at a former time, told a consistent or similar story. Whether he could in this manner effect anything towards rehabilitating his credit must depend on the kind of impeaching evidence that has been offered; for clearly this mode of explanation may be relevant and forceful for some kinds of impeaching facts, but not for others. It is, however, more convenient, for the sake of clearness and comparison, to consider the various uses of this kind of explanatory evidence here in one place.

§ 1123. History. Down through the 1700s the notion prevailed that a witness could always be corroborated, without any limitation, by the circumstance of having made at other times statements consistent with the testimony delivered by him in Court. This practice was based on a loose instinctive logic, popular enough to-day, that there is some real corroborative support in such evidence; and the only objection then thought of was the Hearsay rule.[1] This rule does not in truth apply to prohibit such evidence (post, §§ 1131, 1792), as is now clearly understood; but there are other and serious objections to its indiscriminate admission in chief, and before any impeachment whatever. These objections began to be felt and offered by the end of the 1700s;[2] but it was not until the 1800s that any definite discriminations were settled upon and accepted. Even to-day there is much difference of judicial opinion as to the extent to which such evidence may be considered.

§ 1124. Offered (1) in Chief, before any Impeachment. When the witness has merely testified on direct examination, without any impeachment, proof of consistent statements is unnecessary and valueless. The witness is not helped by it; for, even if it is an improbable or untrustworthy story, it is not made more probable or more trustworthy by any number of repetitions of it.[1]

§ 1123. [1] Ante 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 68, 150 ("Though hearsay may not be allowed as direct evidence, yet it may be in corroboration of a witness' testimony, to show that he affirmed the same thing before on other occasions and that the witness is still consistent with himself; [he then makes an exception for former sworn testimony,] for if a man be of that ill mind to swear falsely at one trial, he may well do the same on the other on the same inducements; but what a man says in discourse without premeditation or expectation of the cause in question is good evidence to support him"). The following instances occur: 1679, Knox's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 763, 790; 1696, Sir John Freind's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 32; 1753, Squires' Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 270; 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 397 (of a defendant not testifying); 1767, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 294 (like Gilbert); 1770, Boston Massacre Trial, Chandler's Amer. Crim. Tr. I, 303, 361; and cases cited in § 1364, post (history of the Hearsay rule). Lutterell v. Reynell, 1 Mod. 282 (1671), is usually cited as an instance of the old rule; yet apparently it represents an aspect of the rule still acknowledged as law, namely, that an accomplice's similar statements, made before promise of pardon, are admissible to rebut the inference that his testimony was composed under influence of the promise (post, § 1128).

[2] 1776, Halliday v. Sweeting, cited 3 Doug. El. C. 163 (former consistent statements, admitted at the trial; but held inadmissible on a motion for a new trial). The MS. cases cited by McNally (Evidence, 378) indicate that in Ireland, by 1795, the admission was being frequently opposed; but it was maintained through the century.

§ 1124. [1] In point of exact psychology, this may not be the case. See the materials collected in the present author's "Principle of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), § 290.

Such evidence would be both irrelevant and cumbersome to the trial; and is rejected in all Courts.[2]

1836, STORY, J., in Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 439: "His testimony under oath is better evidence than his confirmatory declarations not under oath; and the repetition of his assertion does not carry his credibility further, if so far as his oath."

1878, READE, J., in State v. Parish, 79 N. C. 612: "It can scarcely be satisfactory to any mind to say that, if a witness testifies to a statement to-day under oath, it strengthens the statement to prove that he said the same thing yesterday when not under oath. . . . The idea that the mere repetition of a story gives it any force or proves its truth is contrary to common observation and experience that a falsehood may be repeated as often as the truth. Indeed it has never been supposed by any writer or judge that the repetition had any force as substantive evidence to prove the facts, but only to remove an imputation upon the witness. . . . If he stood before the court unimpeached, it was unnecessary and mischievous to encumber the court and oppress the defendant with his garrulousness out of court and when not on oath."

§ 1125. Offered (2) after Impeachment of Moral Character. When a bad reputation for veracity has been introduced to impeach, proof of consistent statements is equally irrelevant and useless. Even assuming the existence

[2] Accord (and many of the cases in the ensuing sections also concede this): Eng. 1783, R. v. Parker, 3 Doug. 242 (excluded; but this case says nothing as to the conditions on which to-day such evidence is recognized as admissible); 1811, Redesdale, M. R., in Berkeley Peerage Case, as cited in Phillipps, Evidence, 5th Am. ed., 307 (not admissible for "confirming" testimony); U. S. Fed. 1858, U. S. v. Holmes, 1 Cliff. 104; Ala. 1895, Chilton v. State, 105 Ala. 98, 16 So. 797; 1895, Sanders v. State, 105 Ala. 4, 16 So. 935; 1897, James v. State, 115 Ala. 83, 22 So. 565; 1909, Bennett v. State, 160 Ala. 25, 49 So. 296; Cal. 1895, People v. Schmitt, 106 Cal. 48, 39 Pac. 204; Shamp v. White, 106 Cal. 220, 39 Pac. 537; Conn. 1830, State v. DeWolf, 8 Conn. 93, 100 (left undecided); 1896, Builders' Co. v. Cox, 68 Conn. 380, 36 Atl. 797 (excluded); 1898, Baxter v. Camp, 71 Conn. 245, 41 Atl. 803 (same); 1900, Palmer v. Hartford D. Co., 73 Conn. 182, 47 Atl. 125 (same); Ill. 1919, People v. Foster, 288 Ill. 371, 123 N. E. 534 (burglary; a witness' written sales-report, confirming his testimony, excluded; such statements admissible only when "a part of the 'res gestæ' or made in the presence of the other party"; no prior rulings cited); Ind. 1837, Coffin v. Anderson, 4 Blackf. 395, 398; 1882, Bristor v. Bristor, 82 Ind. 276; Ky. 1871, Sullivan v. Norris, 8 Bush 519 (deposition); 1898, Franklin v. Com., 105 Ky. 237, 48 S. W. 986; La. 1899, State v. Carter, 51 La. An. 442, 25 So. 385; 1903, State v. Wheat, 111 La. 860, 35 So. 955; Me. 1831, Ware v. Ware, 8 Greenl. 55; 1853, Smith v. Morgan, 38 Me. 468; 1875, Sidelinger v. Bucklin, 64 Me. 371; Mass. 1846, Deshon v. Ins. Co., 11 Mete. 199, 209; 1868, Com. v. James, 99 Mass. 438, 440, semble; 1897, Burns v. Stuart, 168 Mass. 19, 46 N. E. 399; Miss. 1901, Williams v. State, 79 Miss. 555, 31 So. 197; 1904, Boyd v. State, 84 Miss. 414, 36 So. 525; Mo. 1883, State v. Grant, 79 Mo. 113, 133; Mont. 1903, Farleigh v. Kelley, 28 Mont. 421, 72 Pac. 756 (absent attesting witness); N. C. 1878, State v. Parish, 79 N. C. 610; 1897, Burnett v. R. Co., 120 N. C. 517, 26 S. E. 819; Rittenhouse v. R. Co., 120 N. C. 544, 26 S. E. 922; N. Y. 1826, Jackson v. Etz, 5 Cow. 314, 320; 1834, People v. Vane, 12 Wend. 78; 1840, Robb v. Hackley, 23 Wend. 50; 1900, People v. Smith, 162 N. Y. 520, 56 N. E. 1001; Okl. 1916, Jackson v. State, 12 Okl. Cr. 406, 157 Pac. 946 (citing the above text with approval); Pa. 1823, Henderson v. Jones, 10 S. & R. 322, 324; 1835, Craig v. Craig, 5 Rawle 91; 1847, McKee v. Jones, 6 Pa. 425, 429; 1877, Hester v. Com., 85 Pa. 139, 158, semble; 1890, Crooks v. Bunn, 136 Pa. 368, 371, 20 Atl. 529; 1897, Frazer v. Linton, 183 Pa. 186, 38 Atl. 589; 1904, Ranck v. Brackbill, 209 Pa. 499, 58 Atl. 884; S. D. 1903, Tenney v. Rapid City, 17 S. D. 283, 96 N. W. 96; Tenn. 1852, Nelson v. State, 2 Swan 237, 258 (the accused's or a witness' deposition before the examining magistrate, not to be read for him); 1915, Dietzel v. State, 132 Tenn. 47, 177 S. W. 47 (murder); Vt. 1913, State v. Turley, 87 Vt. 163, 88 Atl. 562; 1917, Phelps v. Utley, 92 Vt. 40, 101 Atl. 1011 (crim. con.; testimony to the co-respondent's nervous conduct, as corroborative of her testimony, excluded; this is far-fetched); Va. 1901, Repass v. Richmond, 99 Va. 598, 39 S. E. 160; 1921, Gallion & Gregory v. Winfree, 129 Va. 122, 105 S. E. 539 (commission on sale of lands; plaintiff's own testimony to former consistent statements, excluded).

of the bad character alleged, a depraved witness may well have repeated a story consistently. The bad character indicates some probability of untrustworthiness; the evidence of repetition does not attempt to meet the charge of bad character or diminish its effect, but evades it by reporting with the irrelevant fact that the witness has been consistent. [redacted] a few Courts have seen fit to admit the evidence.[1]

§ 1126. Offered (3) after Impeachment by Inconsistent Statements. The field in which the controversy is most rigorous and the opposing reasons most plausible is that of impeachment by Prior Inconsistent Statements (ante, § 1017).

On behalf of the admission of the supporting evidence, the earlier and conventional argument is that if a contradictory statement counts against the witness, a consistent one should count for him—a bit of loose logic which is natural and plausible:

1815, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Packer v. Gonsalus, 1 S. & R. 536: "Both being without oath, one [statement] is as good as the other, and the jury will judge of his credit on the whole."

1879, SMITH, C. J., in Jones v. Jones, 79 N. C. 249: "The admissibility of previous correspondent accounts of the same transaction to confirm the testimony of an assailed witness delivered on the trial rests upon the obvious principle that, as conflicting statements impair, so uniform and consistent statements sustain and strengthen his credit before the jury. . . . Again, the accuracy of memory is supported by proof that, at or near the time when the facts deposed to have transpired and were fresh in the mind of the witness, he gave the same version of them that he testified to on the tri[redacted]

The answer to this argument is simply that, since the self-contradiction is conceded, it remains as a damaging fact, and is in no sense explained away by the consistent statement. It is just as discrediting, if it was once uttered, even though the other story has been consistently told a score of times. This answer has weighed with many Courts:[1]

1835, GIBSON, C. J., in Craig v. Craig, 5 Rawle 97: "As rebutting, it cannot be pretended that they disprove the fact of [self-]contradiction, or that they remove the impu-

§ 1125. [1] The cases on both sides are as follows: Ala. 1873, Sonneborn v. Bernstein, 49 Ala. 168, 171 (admitted); Cal. 1888, Mason v. Vestal, 88 Cal. 396, 398, 26 Pac. 213 (excluded); Iowa: 1868, State v. Vincent, 24 Ia. 570, 574 (excluded); Ill. 1853, Gates v. People, 14 Ill. 433, 438 (left undecided); 1873, Stolp v. Blair, 68 Ill. 541, 543 (excluded); Me. 1875, Sidelinger v. Bucklin, 64 Me. 373, 375 (excluded); N. Car. 1849, State v. Dove, 10 Ire. 469, 473 (admitted); 1854, March v. Harrell, 1 Jones L. 329 (same); State v. Thomason, 1 Jones L. 274 (same); Pa. 1823, Henderson v. Jones, 10 S. & R. 322 (admitted); Vt. 1839, Munson v. Hastings, 12 Vt. 346, 347, 350 (excluded, after impeachment as to no knowledge of a Supreme Being or of the obligation of an oath); 1841, Gibbs v. Linsley, 13 Vt. 208, 215 (same; general bad character).

In New York the evidence was at first received: 1826, Jackson v. Etz, 5 Cow. 314, 320; 1834, People v. Vane, 12 Wend. 78; 1838, People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 569, 583 (admissible after "general impeaching evidence"); but later decisions repudiated these: 1840, Robb v. Hackley, 23 Wend. 50.

Besides the above Courts, those mentioned post, § 1130, which admit prior consistent statements after "any impeaching evidence" would of course admit them after an impeachment of general character. For their use after impeachment by particular crimes, see post, § 1131.

§ 1126. [1] This latter argument is unsound, for no one has ever thought of requiring that the consistent statements, to be admissible, should have been made freshly after the event; except in rape cases (post, § 1134).

tation of inconsistency; for it follows not, because the witness had sometimes told the tale delivered by him at the bar, that he had never told a different one. If it be supposed that they rebut the inference to be drawn from the fact of contradiction by decreasing its force, they still leave the witness more exposed than ever to the charge of vacillation; and how he is confirmed by being left in a predicament so unfavorable to his veracity is not easy to comprehend."

1858, BIGELOW, J., in Com. v. Jenkins, 10 Gray 488: "It did not relieve the difficulty, or in any degree corroborate the last story told by the witness, to show that previously he had made similar statements of the transaction. . . . The utmost that could be claimed for it in this view would be that it rendered the last statement more probable and worthy of credit, because, although the witness had made a contradictory statement, he had made another statement similar to those to which he had testified before the jury. But such a corroboration is altogether too slight and remote; indeed, if admitted and followed out to its legitimate results, it might properly lead to a protracted inquiry to ascertain which of the two statements had been made most frequently by the witness; and when this was determined, then it would be necessary to ask the jury to believe the witness if he had repeated the statement made before them a greater number of times than the contradictory one which had been proved to impeach his evidence. It is obvious that such a course of inquiry would furnish no means by which the credit due to the testimony of a witness could be satisfactorily ascertained."

But this answer, forceful as it seems at first sight, is itself in one respect based on a fallacy. "The imputation on his veracity," says Mr. Phillipps,[2] and others use similar terms, "results from the fact of his having contradicted himself, and this is not in the least controverted . . . by the evidence in question." But is it a proved fact that he has uttered the self-contradiction? And may not the consistency of his other statements help with the jury to controvert the assumption that he did utter the contradiction? The jury have still to determine whether they will believe the witnesses who say that he did in fact utter it; and if his consistency at other times can assist them in reaching a conclusion upon this fundamental point, it is relevant. That it may so assist them has been clearly pointed out by a few Courts:

1871, COOLEY, J., in Stewart v. People, 23 Mich. 74: "This question appears to us to be one of no ordinary difficulty. If it were an established fact that the witness had made the contradictory statements, we should say that the supporting evidence here offered was not admissible. If a witness has given different accounts of an affair on several different occasions, the fact that he has repeated one of these accounts oftener than the opposite one can scarcely be said to entitle it to any additional credence. A man untruthful out of court is not likely to be truthful in court; and where the contradictory statements are proved, a jury is generally justified in rejecting the testimony of the witness altogether. But in these cases the evidence of contradictory statements is not received until the witness has denied making them, so that an issue is always made between the witness sought to be impeached and the witness impeaching him. The jury, therefore, before they can determine how much the contradictory statements ought to shake the credit of the witness, are required first to find from conflicting evidence whether he made them or not. . . . Now there are many cases in which, if evidence is given of statements made by a witness in conflict with those he has sworn to, his previous statements should not only be received in support of his credit, but would tend very strongly in that direction. If, for instance, the witness is himself the prosecutor, and has already made sworn complaint, there could be no doubt, we suppose, that the pendency of this complaint, its contents and the relation of the witness to it, might be put in evidence, and that they would raise a strong probability that the testimony as to conflicting accounts, as having been given about the same time, was either mistaken or corrupt. Suppose a person to be testifying in a case in which he had spent a considerable period of time and a large sum of money in pursuing an alleged criminal to conviction, and he is confronted with evidence of his own conflicting statements; the rule would be exceedingly unjust, as well as unphilosophical, which should preclude his showing, at least by his own evidence, such circumstances of his connection with the case as would make the impeaching evidence appear to be at war with all the probabilities. And other cases may readily be supposed in which, under the peculiar circumstances, the fact that the witness has always previously given a consistent account of the transaction in question might well be accepted by the jury as almost conclusive that he had not varied from it in the single instance testified to for the purpose of impeachment. — It is impossible to lay down any arbitrary rule which could be properly applied to every case in which this question could arise; but we think that there are some cases in which the peculiar circumstances would render this species of evidence important and forcible. The tender age of the principal witness might sometimes be an important consideration; and the fact that the previous statement was put in writing — as it was in this instance — at a time when it would be reasonably free from suspicion might very well be a controlling circumstance. We think the circuit judge ought to be allowed a reasonable discretion in such cases, and that though such evidence should not generally be received, yet that his discretion in receiving it ought not to be set aside except in a clear case of abuse." [3]

[2] Evidence, 6th Am. ed., 307.

This argument seems unanswerable. It does not deny the correctness of the preceding argument, which points out that a consistent statement does not explain away a self-contradiction; but it shows that argument to rest upon the assumption that there has been a self-contradiction, and it reminds us that consistency of statement may serve to overthrow that assumption. This third view, however, has rarely been noticed.

Most Courts accept or reject this kind of evidence according as they are moved by the first or the second argument above.[4]

[3] A similar exposition is made by Johnson, J., in Lyles v. Lyles, 1 Hill Eq. S. C. 78 (1833); and the theory is approved, semble, in State v. Turley, 87 Vt. 163, 88 Atl. 562.

[4] ENGLAND: 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 508, and passim (admitted);
UNITED STATES: Federal: 1816, Wright v. Deklyne, 1 Pet. C. C. 19, 203 (admitted); 1834, Ellicott v. Pearl, 1 McLean 206, 211 (excluded); 1836, Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 412, 439 (same); 1850, Conrad v. Griffey, 11 How. 480, 490, semble (admissible);
Alabama: 1852, Nichols v. Stewart, 20 Ala. 358, 361 (excluded); 1873, Sonneborn v. Bernstein, 49 Ala. 168, 171, semble (same); 1895, Jones v. State, 107 Ala. 93, 18 So. 237 (same);
Arkansas: 1906, Burks v. State, 78 Ark. 271, 93 S. W. 983 (similar statements, not admitted, though the witness denied making the self-contradictory ones; rule of Cooley, J., in Stewart v. People, Mich., supra, repudiated);
California: 1874, People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 85, 90 (excluded); 1887, Barkly v. Copeland, 74 id. 1, 4 (same); 1891, Mason v. Vestal, 88 id. 396, 389, 26 Pac. 213 (same);
Georgia: 1889, McCord v. State, 83 Ga. 521, 531, 10 S. E. 437, semble (excluded); 1874, Georgia R. Co. v. Oaks, 52 Ga. 410, 416 (excluded); 1893, Fussell v. State, 93 id. 450, 456, 21 S. E. 97 (same); 1901, Knight v. State, 114 id. 48, 39 S. E. 928 (same); 1906, Cook v. State, 124 Ga. 653, 53 S. E. 104 (same);
Illinois: 1873, Stolp v. Blair, 68 Ill. 541, 543 (left undecided); 1904, Chicago City R. Co. v. Matthieson, 212 Ill. 292, 72 N. E. 443 (excluded); 1909, Reavely v. Harris, 239 Ill. 526, 88 N. E. 238 (excluded);
Indiana: 1837, Coffin v. Anderson, 4 Blackf. 395, 398 (admitted, and in the following five cases); 1842, Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. 299, 308; 1853, Perkins v. State, 4 Ind. 222; 1867, Dailey v. State, 28 Ind. 285; 1876, Brookbank v. State, 55 Ind. 169, 172; 1881, Carter v. Carter, 79 Ind. 466; 1885, Hodges v. Bales, 102 Ind. 494, 500, 1 N. E. 692 (excluded); 1888, Logansport P. & G. T. Co. v. Heil, 118 Ind. 135, 136, 20 N. E. 703, semble (same);

1892, Hobbs v. State, 133 Ind. 404, 407, 32 N. E. 1019 (admitted); 1897, Reynolds v. State, 147 Ind. 3, 46 N. E. 31, semble (admitted); 1897, Hinshaw v. State, 147 Ind. 334, 47 N. E. 158 (same); 1905, Hicks v. State, 165 Ind. 440, 75 N. E. 641 (admitted; but only such statements as corroborate the impeached parts, not other parts, of the testimony); 1913, Hopkins v. State, 180 Ind. 293, 102 N. E. 851 (admitted);
Iowa: 1868, State v. Vincent, 24 Ia. 570, 574 (excluded);
Kansas: 1883, State v. Hendricks, 32 Kan. 559, 4 Pac. 1050 (admitted; modifying State v. Petty, 21 Kan. 54); 1903, State v. Nelson, 65 Kan. 419, 70 Pac. 355;
Louisiana: 1894, State v. Cady, 46 La. An. 1346, 1349, 16 So. 195 (same);
Maine: 1874, State v. Reed, 62 Me. 147 (admitted);
Maryland: 1871, McAleer v. Horsey, 35 Md. 439, 465 (left undecided); St. 1874, c. 386, Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 3 (prohibits such corroboration for parties to the cause; quoted ante, § 488); 1890, Mallonee v. Duff, 72 Md. 283, 287, 19 Atl. 708 (statute applied);
Massachusetts: 1858, Com. v. Jenkins, 10 Gray 485, 487 (excluded); 1890, Hewett v. Corey, 150 Mass. 445, 23 N. E. 223 (same); 1905, Com. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127;
Michigan: 1868, Brown v. People, 17 Mich. 429, 435 (excluded); 1871, Stewart v. People, 23 Mich. 63, 74 (admissible or not in the trial Court's discretion; see quotation supra); 1921, People v. Purman, 216 Mich. 430, 185 N. W. 725 (knowing receipt of stolen goods; corroboration by prior similar statements, allowed, after cross-examination; purporting to follow Stewart v. People, but obviously not understanding its peculiar point);
Mississippi: 1870, Head v. State, 44 Miss. 731, 751 (excluded);
Missouri: 1896, State v. Taylor, 134 Mo. 109, 35 S. W. 92 (excluded); 1903, State v. Hendricks, 172 Mo. 654, 73 S. W. 194 (similar statements of a dying declarant, excluded); 1904, State v. Sharp, 183 Mo. 715, 82 S. W. 134 (admitted, purporting to follow State v. Taylor, supra); 1913, State v. Maggard, 250 Mo. 335, 157 S. W. 354 (admitted, following State v. Sharp);
Montana: 1901, Kipp v. Silverman, 25 Mont. 296, 64 Pac. 884 (excluded);
New Hampshire: 1833, French v. Merrill, 6 N. H. 465, 467 (admitted; but treated as involving a question of recent fabrication); 1860, Reed v. Spaulding, 42 N. H. 114, 117, 122 (excluded; the preceding case in this aspect discredited); 1866, Judd v. Brentwood, 46 N. H. 430 (excluded);
New York: the evidence was at first received: 1826, Jackson v. Etz, 5 Cow. 314, 320; 1834, People v. Vane, 12 Wend. 78; 1836, People v. Moore, 15 Wend. 420, 423; 1838, People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 569, 583, per Cowen, J.; Bronson, J., diss.: but later decisions repudiated these and declared the evidence inadmissible: 1840, Robb v. Hackley, 23 Wend. 50; Dudley v. Bolles, 24 Wend. 465, 472;
North Carolina: 1822, Johnson v. Patterson, 2 Hawks 183 (admitted); State v. Twitley, 2 Hawks 449 (same, and in following cases); 1848, State v. George, 8 Ire. 324, 328; 1849, Hoke's Ex'rs v. Fleming, 10 Ire. 263, 266; State v. Dove, 10 Ire. 469, 473; 1845, March v. Harrell, 1 Jones L. 329; State v. Thomason, 1 Jones L. 274;
Ohio: 1906, Cincinnati Traction Co. v. Stephens, 75 Oh. 171, 79 N. E. 235 (excluded, where the witness admitted the making of the inconsistent statements);
Oklahoma: 1908, Driggers v. U. S., 21 Okl. 60, 95 Pac. 612 (excluded);
Pennsylvania: 1807, Turnbull v. O'Hara, 4 Yeates 446, 451, semble (admitted); 1815, Packer v. Gonsalus, 1 S. & R. 526, 536 (same); 1821, Foster v. Shaw, 7 S. & R. 156, 162 (same); 1823, Henderson v. Jones, 10 S. & R. 322 (same); 1835, Craig v. Craig, 5 Rawle 91 (treating the matter as doubtful); 1847, McKee v. Jones, 6 Pa. 425, 428 (admitted); 1890, Crooks v. Bunn, 136 Pa. 368, 371, 20 Atl. 529 (admitted, but qualified as "sometimes and in some circumstances competent");
South Carolina: 1833, Lyles v. Lyles, 1 Hill Eq. 77 (admitted); 1848, State v. Thomas, 3 Strobh. 269, 271 (excluded, where "inconsistencies were apparent" in his testimony); 1904, State v. McDaniel, 68 S. C. 304, 47 S. E. 384 (excluded);
Tennessee: 1848, Story v. Saunders, 8 Humph. 663, 666, semble (excluded); 1855, Dossett v. Miller, 3 Sneed 72, 76 (admitted; not citing the preceding case); 1860, Queener v. Morrow, 1 Coldw. 123, 134 (same); 1872, Third Nat'l Bank v. Robinson, 1 Baxt. 479, 484 (same); 1880, Hayes v. Cheatham, 6 Lea 1, 10 (same); 1890, Glass v. Bennett, 89 Tenn. 478, 481, 14 S. W. 1085 (same); 1891, Graham v. McReynolds, 90 Tenn. 673, 694, 18 S. W. 272 (reviewing the cases and discarding Story v. Saunders);
Texas: 1894, Goode v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 505, 508, 24 S. W. 102 (admitted); 1898, Red v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 414, 40 S. W. 408 (admissible, when "shortly after the occurrence and before any inducement to falsify his testimony"); 1920, Taylor v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. 330, 221 S. W. 611 (homicide; later consistent statements here admitted, apparently on the principle of Stewart v. People, Mich.);
Vermont: 1839, Munson v. Hastings, 12 Vt. 346, 350, semble (excluded); 1841, Gibbs v. Linsley, 13 Vt. 208, 215 (same); 1888, State v. Flint, 60 Vt. 307, 310, 319, 14 Atl. 178 (same); 1899, Lavigne v. Lee, 71 Vt. 167, 42 Atl. 1093 (same); 1913, State v. Turley, 87 Vt. 163, 88 Atl. 563;
Washington: 1900, State v. Coates, 22 Wash. 601, 61 Pac. 726 (admitted where the contradictory statement was made under duress).

From the foregoing prohibition, however (as obtaining in most Courts), must be distinguished the case where the impeaching inconsistency consists, not in an express statement, but in conduct (ante, §§ 1040, 1042) implying an inconsistency; for here the implication may convincingly be removed by statements at or about the time which explain the conduct and refute the imputation that the present explanation is an afterthought.[5]

It is sometimes said, by Courts admitting consistent statements, that they must have been uttered before the self-contradiction;[6] though this seem an unnecessary refinement.

It has also been said that the permission, when granted, to corroborate by consistent statements does not apply to a party, even when he is a witness, against whom admissions have been used;[7] but this is unsound.[8]

§ 1127. Offered (4) after Impeachment by Contradiction. A former consistent statement helps in no respect to remove such discredit as arises from a contradiction by other witnesses. When B is produced to swear to the contrary of what A has asserted on the stand, it cannot help us, in deciding between them, to know that A has asserted the same thing many times previously. If that were an argument, then the witness who had repeated his story to the greatest number of people would be the most credible. Nevertheless, a few Courts see fit to receive the evidence, misled by the traditional notion that it has some force.[1]

[5] 1890, Hewitt v. Corey, 150 Mass. 445, 23 N. E. 223 (H. testified that a horse, the subject of an alleged conversion, was his wife's, not his own; his former inclusion of the horse in a chattel mortgage is shown in impeachment; he is allowed to show, in explanation, that it was so included by mistake, and that he so told the mortgagees shortly afterwards); 1880, Zell v. Com., 94 Pa. 258, 266, 273 (poisoning K.; R. testified to severe illness while calling at K.'s house at the same time; to discredit this, it was shown that on her way walking home she met two friends and did not mention the illness; to explain away this, evidence was admitted that on her way home she did stop at another friend's and told of her illness); 1859, State v. Dennin, 32 Vt. 158, 161 (arson; the identifying witnesses' former testimony at the preliminary examination being less positive and suggesting recent contrivance, evidence was admitted of their having caused the defendant's arrest immediately after the fire, as indicating a complete recognition at the time).

The following case shows the distinction between this and the ordinary principle: 1868, Brown v. People, 17 Mich. 429, 435 (to fix the date of an alibi, W. testified that it was Aug. 1; that he told another person on Aug. 2 that he had seen the defendant at the place the night before, excluded).

Compare the principles of §§ 1129, 1131, post.

[6] Fed. 1836, Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 412, 440, per Story, J., semble; 1850, Conrad v. Griffey, 11 How. 480, 491 (because "it is possible, if not probable, that the inducement to make them is for the very purpose of counteracting those first uttered"); Tenn. 1860, Queener v. Morrow, 1 Coldw. 123, 134 (for this would otherwise allow "every unprincipled witness to bolster up his credit"; moreover, here the statements were made under apparent hope of obtaining thereby a discharge from jail); 1891, Graham v. McReynolds, 90 Tenn. 673, 697, 18 S. W. 272.

Contra: 1876, Brookbank v. State, 55 Ind. 169, 172; 1883, State v. Hendricks, 32 Kan. 559, 4 Pac. 1050; 1920, Taylor v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. 330, 221 S. W. 611.

[7] 1888, Logansport & P. G. T. Co. v. Heil, 118 Ind. 135, 20 N. E. 703; Md. St. 1874, c. 386, and Pub. Gen. L. 1888, Art. 35, § 2 (quoted ante, § 488); 1890, Mallonee v. Duff, 72 Md. 283, 287, 19 Atl. 708.

[8] Examples of such use (cited also supra and infra): 1860, Reed v. Spaulding, 42 N. H. 114, 117, 123; 1866, Judd v. Brentwood, 46 N. H. 430; 1868, Washington Fire Ins. Co. v. Davison, 30 Md. 92, 104; 1871, McAleer v. Horsey, 35 Md. 439, 464; 1881, McLeod v. Bullard, 84 N. C. 515, 529; 1894, Wallace v. Grizzard, 114 N. C. 488, 19 S. E. 760.

But whether, without the party being a witness, his consistent claims can be used in general to rebut his admissions is a different question: post, § 1133.

§ 1127. [1] Fed. 1816, Wright v. Deklyne, 1

§ 1128. Offered (5) after Impeachment by Bias, Interest, or Corruption; Statements of an Accomplice. (1) A consistent statement, at a time prior to the existence of a fact said to indicate Bias, Interest, or Corruption, will effectively explain away the force of the impeaching evidence; because it is thus made to appear that the statement in the form now uttered was independent of the discrediting influence. The former statements are therefore admissible:[1]

Pet. C. C. 199, 203, semble (excluded); 1906, Inman v. Dudley & D. L. Co., 146 Fed. 449, 456, C. C. A. (excluded); D. C. 1880, U. S. v. Neverson, 1 Mackey 152, 169 (admitted); Ill. 1873, Stolp v. Blair, 68 Ill. 541, 543 (excluded); Ind. 1881, Carter v. Carter, 79 Ind. 466, 468 (excluded); 1885, Hodges v. Bales, 102 Ind. 494, 500, 1 N. E. 692 (same); Ia. 1868, State v. Vincent, 24 Ia. 570, 574, semble (excluded); Md. 1823, Cooke v. Curtis, 6 H. & J. 93 (admitted, and in the following cases); 1868, Washington Fire Ins. Co. v. Davison, 30 Md. 92, 104; 1871, McAleer v. Horsey, 35 Md. 439, 463 (Stewart, J., diss.); 1874, Maitland v. Bank, 40 Md. 540, 559; 1878, Bloomer v. State, 48 Md. 521, 537; 1890, Mallonee v. Duff, 72 Md. 283, 287, 19 Atl. 708; 1901, Gill v. Staylor, 93 Md. 453, 49 Atl. 650 (entries in a book, treated as made by the witness himself, admitted to corroborate him, after impeachment by contradiction on a material point); 1905, Maryland Steel Co. v. Engleman, 101 Md. 661, 61 Atl. 314 (this sort of corroboration is not permitted for parties, under St. 1874, now Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 3, cited ante, § 1126, n. 4); Mo. 1846, Riney v. Vanlandingham, 9 Mo. 807, 812 (excluded); N. Y. the evidence was at first received: 1834, People v. Vane, 12 Wend. 78, semble; but this case was later repudiated: 1840, Robb v. Hackley, 23 Wend. 50; Dudley v. Bolles, 24 Wend. 465, 472; N. C. 1854, March v. Harrell, 1 Jones L. 329 (admitted); 1874, Bullinger v. Marshall, 70 N. C. 520, 524 (same); 1879, State v. Blackburn, 80 N. C. 474, 478 (dying declarant); 1881, McLeod v. Bullard, 84 N. C. 515, 529; 1894, Wallace v. Grizzard, 114 N. C. 488, 19 S. E. 760; Pa. 1823, Henderson v. Jones, 10 S. & R. 322 (admitted); 1877, Hester v. Com., 85 Pa. 139, 158, semble (same); Tenn. 1890, Glass v. Bennett, 89 Tenn. 478, 481, 14 S. W. 1085, semble (admitted where the impeachment merely offered contrary facts, not self-contradictions, but the Court treated them as the latter); Vt. 1839, Munson v. Hastings, 12 Vt. 346, 350 (excluded).

§ 1128. [1] The evidence was held admissible, except as otherwise noted: Eng. 1803, Clare's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 899 (after insinuations that the witness had been motivated by a reward); U. S. Ala. 1895, Yarbrough v. State, 105 Ala. 43, 16 So. 758; Cal. 1874, People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 85, 90, semble; 1887, Barkly v. Copeland, 74 Cal. 1, 5, 15 Pac. 307 (before the time of an alleged offer of a bribe); 1888, Mason v. Vestal, 88 Cal. 396, 398, 26 Pac. 213, semble; Ga. 1889, McCord v. State, 83 Ga. 521, 530, 10 S. E. 437 (before the time of an alleged bribery); Ill. 1853, Gates v. People, 14 Ill. 433, 438; 1873, Stolp v. Blair, 68 Ill. 541, 543; 1904, Waller v. People, 209 Ill. 284, 70 N. E. 681; Ia. 1868, State v. Vincent, 24 Ia. 570, 575; 1868, Boyd v. Bank, 25 Ia. 257; 1917, Lingenfelter v. St. Clair, 179 Ia. 11, 161 N. W. 87, 93 (defendant's statement after a contract made, excluded on the facts); La. 1894, State v. Cady, 46 La. An. 1346, 1349, 16 So. 195 (semble, the principle conceded, but held not applicable where the proponent of the witness had himself shown the fact indicating bias); Mass. 1858, Com. v. Jenkins, 10 Gray 485, 488 (admissible, after evidence that "he is under a strong bias or in such a situation as to put him under a sort of mental duress to testify in a particular way"); 1890, Hewitt v. Corey, 150 Mass. 445, 23 N. E. 223 (same); Mo. 1896, State v. Taylor, 134 Mo. 109, 35 S. W. 92; 1913, State v. Maggard, 250 Mo. 335, 157 S. W. 352; N. H. 1860, Reed v. Spaulding, 42 N. H. 114, 123; 1866, Judd v. Brentwood, 46 N. H. 430; N. Y. 1840, Robb v. Hackley, 23 Wend. 50 (admissible, after evidence that the witness speaks "under the influence of some motive prompting him to make a false or colored statement"); N. C. 1891, State v. Brabham, 108 N. C. 793, 13 S. E. 217 (deceased's son); Okl. 1908, Driggers v. U. S., 21 Okl. 60, 95 Pac. 612 (admissible); Tenn. 1855, Dossett v. Miller, 3 Sneed 72, 76; 1860, Queener v. Morrow, 1 Coldw. 123, 134; 1880, Hayes v. Cheatham, 6 Lea 1, 10, semble; 1890, Glass v. Bennett, 89 Tenn. 478, 481, 14 S. W. 1085, semble; 1900, Nashville C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Lawson, 105 Tenn. 639, 58 S. W. 480; 1903, Legere v. State, 111 Tenn. 368, 77 S. W. 1059 (rule conceded, but held not applicable on the facts); 1922, Lyles v. State, — Tenn. —, 239 S. W. 446 (murder; rule applied to exclude certain statements); Tex. 1906, Welch v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 28, 95 S. W. 1035 (excluded on the facts); 1906, Anderson v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 134, 95 S. W. 1037 (excluded on the facts); 1915, Blackburn v. State, Tex. Cr., 180 S. W. 268 (larceny; explaining Hudson v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 24); 1915, Hopkins v. State, Tex. Cr., 180 S. W. 1096 (rape); 1916, Gleason v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 183 S. W. 891; 1920, Marable v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. 28, 219 S. W. 455 (collecting prior cases); 1921, Coleman v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. 297, 235 S. W. 898 (larceny); 1922, Nations v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 237 S. W.

1806, Mr. W. D. Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 247: "If a witness speaks to facts negativing the existence of a contract, and insinuations are thrown out that he has a near connection with the party on whose behalf he appears, that a change of market or any other alteration of circumstances has excited an inducement to recede from a deliberate engagement, the proof by unsuspicious testimony that a similar account was given when the contract alleged had every prospect of advantage removes the imputation resulting from the opposite circumstance, and the testimony is placed upon the same level which it would have if the motives for receding from a previous intention had never had existence."

(2) An accomplice, whether a co-indictee or not, is always under a suspicion of discredit, implied from his interest to screen himself and to secure the conviction of his companions (ante, § 967); and he is usually required to be corroborated by other witnesses (post, § 2056). Is it permissible to support him by the fact that he told a consistent story before taking the stand? It would seem not;[2] unless by some mode of impeachment some other principle (supra, par. 1; post, § 1129) becomes applicable.

§ 1129. Offered (6) after Impeachment as to Recent Contrivance. Impeachment on the ground of Recent Contrivance must be distinguished (as it is not always) from the foregoing ground. It is more nearly connected with the case of impeachment by Self-Contradiction. The charge of Recent Contrivance is usually made, not so much by affirmative evidence, as by negative evidence that the witness did not speak of the matter before, at a time when it would have been natural to speak; his silence then is urged as inconsistent with his utterances now, i.e. as a Self-Contradiction (ante, § 1042). The effect of the evidence of consistent statements is that the supposed fact of not speaking formerly, from which we are to infer a recent contrivance of the story, is disposed of by denying it to be a fact, inasmuch as the witness did speak and tell the same story.

In judicial rulings, this use of former similar statements is universally conceded to be proper;[1] though occasionally it is difficult to apply the principle to the facts.

570 (after evidence of a promise of immunity); Utah: 1898, Ewing v. Keith, 16 Utah 312, 52 Pac. 4 (the interest arising from being a party to the litigation, held not sufficient); Vt. 1888, State v. Flint, 60 Vt. 304, 307, 316, 14 Atl. 178 (undue influence of an interested person); 1905, State v. Bean, 77 Vt. 384, 70 Atl. 807 (State v. Flint followed); 1913, State v. Turley, 87 Vt. 163, 88 Atl. 562 (evidence held here not to be within the rule).

The statement in Reed v. Spaulding, 42 N. H. 123 (1860), that the sustaining statement "must have been, or at least appeared to be, directly against his interests," is not sound.

[2] 1895, State v. Callahan, 47 La. An. 444, 455, 17 So. 50 (by a majority); 1895, State v. Dudoussat, 47 La. An. 977, 17 So. 685; 1901, State v. Williams, 129 N. C. 581, 40 S. E. 84 (co-defendant, after verdict of not guilty entered by consent); 1906, Green v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 238, 90 S. W. 1115.

Contra: 1834, People v. Vane, 12 Wend. N. Y. 78, 79; 1913, People v. Katz, 209 N. Y. 311, 103 N. E. 305 (People v. Vane said to be still law).

§ 1129. [1] Compare with the following the cases in § 1126, ante, note 5: ENGLAND: 1913, Benjamin's Case, 8 Cr. App. 146 (detective's note-book entry); IRELAND: 1917, Flanagan v. Fahy, 2 Ir. R. 361 (will-forgery; similar statements made prior to the time of alleged motive of fabrication, admitted; Coll's Case, 24 L. R. Ire. 522, and other cases, explained; elaborate examination of the principle in the opinions); CANADA: 1819, R. v. Neigel, 39 D. L. R. 154, Alta. (murder; F. testifying for the prosecution as to an admission by defendant was discredited by evidence of a prior inconsistent statement; held that the prosecution could show the witness' still earlier consistent statement; per Beck, J., "to rebut the charge that his story as told at the trial was an afterthought"; following R. v. Benjamin); UNITED STATES: Federal: 1836, Ellicott v. Pearl, 10 Pet. 412, 439 ("where the testimony is assailed as a fabrication of a recent date or a complaint recently made"); California: 1912, People v. Ferrara, 18 Cal. App. 271, 122 Pac. 1089 (identification of accused); Georgia: 1902, Atlanta K. & N. R. Co. v. Strickland, 116 Ga. 439, 42 S. E. 864 (not admitted, where the opponent had impeached the witness' testimony as "manufactured"; the opinion ignores the principle involved); 1904, Sweeney v. Sweeney, 121 Ga. 293, 48 S. E. 984; Idaho: 1911, State v. Louie Moon, 20 Ida. 202, 117 Pac. 757; Illinois: 1904, Waller v. People, 209 Ill. 284, 70 N. E. 681 (the witness was impeached by certain former narrations of his omitting an essential fact; his statement at the time of the occurrence, including that fact, was admitted); Iowa: 1865, State v. Cruise, 19 Ia. 312 (whether the defendant was at a place on the 14th was essential; the defendant admitted that he was there on the 7th; a statement of his made on the 9th, and speaking of having been there already, was admitted, as it was conceded that he had been there only once); 1868, State v. Vincent, 24 Ia. 570, 575; 1906, Kesselring v. Hummer, 130 Ia. 145, 106 N. W. 501 (the present exception held not applicable on facts); Kansas: 1900, Board v. Vickers, 62 Kan. 25, 61 Pac. 391; 1907, National Cereal Co. v. Alexander, 75 Kan. 537, 89 Pac. 923 (principle applied); Louisiana: 1895, State v. Dudoussat, 47 La. 977, 17 So. 685 (where the prosecuting witness' statements were charged to be fabricated); Maryland: 1896, Baltimore C. P. R. Co. v. Knee, 83 Md. 77, 81, 34 Atl. 252 (but here the impeachment was by testimony that the witness was absent at the time of the event he testified to, and a former general statement made a few days after the event was rejected as not "supplying a test of witness' recollection as well as of his integrity"); 1909, Lanasa v. State, 109 Md. 602, 71 Atl. 1058 (a statement made to a detective by a co-indictee 39 days after the crime, excluded); Massachusetts: 1854, Com. v. Wilson, 1 Gray 338, 340 (similar statement at the time of the original event, admitted after a cross-examination directed to show concealment of his testimony until recently; said to be admissible where the opponent "has sought to impeach the witness on cross-examination"); 1858, Com. v. Jenkins, 10 Gray 485, 489 (after a showing that he "formerly withheld or concealed the facts", admissible); 1890, Hewitt v. Corey, 150 Mass. 445, 23 N. E. 223 (same); 1904, Com. v. Kelly, 186 Mass. 403, 71 N. E. 807 (here, to rebut an alleged failure of the witness to identify the accused at the time); 1905, Com. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127 (rule recognized); 1910, Webb G. & C. Co. v. Boston & M. R. Co., 206 Mass. 572, 92 N. E. 717 (the trial Court's discretion to control); New Hampshire: 1833, French v. Merrill, 6 N. H. 465, 467; 1860, Reed v. Spaulding, 42 N. H. 114, 123; New York: 1848, People v. Finnegan, 1 Park. Cr. C. 147, 151; 1890, Hesdra's Will, 119 N. Y. 615, 618, 23 N. E. 555 (deceased attesting witness' declarations during H.'s lifetime that H. had made a will, received to rebut his declarations after H.'s death that he had forged a will for H.; unsound); 1913, People v. Katz, 209 N. Y. 311, 103 N. E. 305 (accomplice testifying under promise of immunity; his statement written down shortly after arrest and a year before the promise, admitted); 1915, Ferris v. Sterling, 214 N. Y. 249, 108 N. E. 406 (ownership of an insurance policy; prior letters held admissible); Oklahoma: 1908, Driggers v. U. S., 21 Okl. 60, 95 Pac. 612 (admissible); Pennsylvania: 1835, Craig v. Craig, 5 Rawle 91, 98; 1847, McKee v. Jones, 6 Pa. St. 425, 429; 1912, Lyke v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 236 Pa. 38, 84 Atl. 595 (rule not clearly stated); South Dakota: 1901, State v. Caddy, 15 S. D. 167, 87 N. W. 927; 1907, McClellan's Estate, 21 S. D. 209, 111 N. W. 540 (prior consistent statements, admitted to explain away the suggestion of recent fabrication; former opinion modified, as applied to the evidence here offered); Tennessee: 1860, Queener v. Morrow, 1 Coldw. 123, 134; 1880, Hayes v. Cheatham, 6 Lea 1, 10; 1890, Glass v. Bennett, 89 Tenn. 478, 14 S. W. 1085, semble; Texas: 1886 Lewy v. Fischl, 65 Tex. 312, 318 (partnership); 1901, Ætna Ins. Co. v. Eastman, 95 Tex. 34, 64 S. W. 863; Utah: 1894, Silva v. Pickard, § 481, 10 Utah 78, 89, 37 Pac. 86; 1897, State v. Carrington, 15 Utah 480, 50 Pac. 526, semble; Vermont: 1839, Munson v. Hastings, 12 Vt. 346, 350 ("cases where the silence of the witness would operate strongly to discredit the fact afterwards sworn to, as in the case of bastardy, rape, robbery, and the like"); 1888, State v. Flint, 60 Vt. 304, 309, 317, 14 Atl. 178 (testimony of an accomplice as to tools in the defendant's trunk; the suggestion being that the police had told him of their discovery, evidence was admitted that he so stated before they told him); Virginia: 1911, Jessie v. Com., 112 Va. 887, 71 S. E. 612 (statements by one also accused, made before the accusation, admitted); Washington: 1902, Callihan v. W. W. Power Co., 27 Wash. 154, 67 Pac. 697 (written report of car-conductor, made to his superior before knowledge of the injury to the plaintiff, admitted in corroboration); 1917, State v. Spisak, 94 Wash. 566, 162 Pac. 998 (assault; prior consistent statements admissible "when testimony is assailed as a recent fabrication"; earlier rulings explained); 1919, State v. Baniff, 105 Wash. 327, 177 Pac. 801 (larceny of horses; the statements here excluded);

An analogous situation seems the follow-

§ 1130. Same: Statements Identifying an Accused, on a Former Occasion; Statements serving to Fix a Time or Place. (1) Ordinarily, when a witness is asked to identify the assailant, or thief, or other person who is the subject of his testimony, the witness' act of pointing out then and there the accused (or other person) is of little testimonial force. After all that has intervened, it would seldom happen that the witness would not have come to believe in the person's identity. The failure to recognize would tell for the accused; but the affirmative recognition might mean little against him.[1] The situation is practically the same as when Recent Contrivance is alleged. To corroborate the witness, therefore, it is entirely proper (on the principle of § 1129, ante) to prove that at a former time, when the suggestions of others could not have intervened to create a fancied recognition in the witness' mind, he recognized and declared the present accused to be the person. If, moreover (as sometimes is done) the person has been so placed among others that all probability of suggestion (by seeing him handcuffed, for example) is still further removed, the evidence becomes stronger. The typical illustration is that of the identification of an accused person at the time of arrest:

1847, LEFROY, B., in R. v. Burke, 2 Cox Cr. 295 (the witness could not certainly identify the accused as K., one of the robbers, but said that he had identified a man positively at the police-station, and "at the time he was sure it was the right man"; witnesses were then allowed to prove that the accused was the same person formerly identified by the witness): "I remember a case in England in which that kind of assistance was given; a man had shorn off his whiskers, and evidence was allowed to be given of his being the man whom the witness had identified. I acted in the same way in several cases three years ago at Nenagh, having first consulted with my brother judge upon the subject. It is simply an imperfect identification of the prisoner."

This is a simple dictate of common sense, and was never doubted in orthodox practice.[2] That some modern Courts are on record for rejecting such evidence ing, where the evidence was thought admissible: 1878, State v. Parish, 79 N. C. 610, 613, per Reade, J. (where "from lapse of time his memory was impeached"); 1879, Jones v. Jones, 80 N. C. 247, 250 (same).

In Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154, 189 (1876), the opinion of Hannen, J., admitted certain prior statements of the principal witness, made when her mind was presumably impartial.

§ 1130. [1] For the light here thrown by experimental psychology, see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), particularly §§ 241, 290.

[2] Accord: ENGLAND: 1743, Annesley v. Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1139, 1195 ff.; 1847, R. v. Burke, 2 Cox Cr. 295 (quoted supra); 1853, R. v. Blackburn, 6 Cox Cr. 338 (like R. v. Burke, supra); 1866, R. v. Smith, London, Montague Williams' Reminiscences, "Leaves of a Life" (1890), I. 138 (the Cannon street murder; the police-inspector was allowed to prove the identification of the accused from among a number of other persons, by tests so devised as to avoid any suggestion); 1914, Christie's Case, A. C. 545, 10 Cr. App. 141 (indecent assault upon a little boy; the boy's identification of the accused, when arrested, within a few minutes after the act, held admissible, per L. C. Halsbury (without the details of the boy's statement), Lord Atkinson, and semble by Lord Reading).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1893, Beavers v. State, 103 Ala. 36, 15 So. 616 (murder; witness' recognition of the accused in custody, on the morning after the killing, admitted); Kentucky: 1920, Brown v. Com., 187 Ky. 829, 220 S. W. 1052 (rape; the woman's identification of the accused shortly after arrest, admitted); Massachusetts: 1820, Burk v. Kellough, 235 Mass. 405, 126 N. E. 787 (personal injury; the plaintiff's statement is a telling illustration of the power of a technical rule of thumb to paralyze the judicial nerves of natural reasoning.

(2) Where the witness can verify his recollection of a time or place by the circumstance that another person made a statement to him, a different use of evidence is involved; the statement does not corroborate him by its similarity, for it may be otherwise irrelevant. The objection is based on the Hearsay rule (post, § 1791); but the cases are noted ante, § 416 (Identification).

§ 1131. Offered (7) after Cross-examination or Impeachment of Any Sort. The broad rule obtains in a few Courts that consistent statements may be admitted after impeachment of any sort, — in particular after any im-identifying the spot where she fell, made at the time of taking a photograph, admitted to connect the photograph with the testimony); New Jersey: 1921, State v. Claymonst, — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 155 (rape; the child's identification of the accused at the hospital after the assault, admitted only because of the accused's silence; present principle not noticed); Oregon: 1921, State v. Won Wen Teung, 99 Or. 95, 195 Pac. 349 (murder; evidence admitted that a witness for the state "picked him out as the one I saw, the first time, in jail when the detective brought him in").

Contra: Arkansas: 1912, Warren v. State, 103 Ark. 165, 146 S. W. 477 (burglary; identification of the defendant by the house-occupant, immediately after arrest, excluded: "Prof. W.'s views on this subject are not in accord with the weight of authority"; but it is respectfully suggested that a more important inquiry would be whether they are in accord with sound principle, common sense, and universal practice in proof outside of the courtroom); Illinois: 1909, People v. Lukoszus, 242 Ill. 101, 89 N. E. 749 (no authority cited); Iowa: 1904, State v. Egbert, 125 Ia. 443, 101 N. W. 191; New York: 1914, People v. Jung Hing, 212 N. Y. 393, 106 N. E. 105 (identification at the police station just after arrest, to corroborate the witness' identification on the stand, excluded; it is really astonishing how reluctant modern courts are to accept this bit of common sense; the learned judge's reference to the above text pays it an undeserved compliment; because the above text unfortunately failed to express itself, as intended, to the learned reader; the text means to say that a prior act or utterance of identification by a now witness is, or ought to be, admissible in chief, whenever identity is in dispute, without any conditions whatever as to impeachment on the ground of recent contrivance or any other ground); 1916, People v. Bertlini, 218 N. Y. 584, 113 N. E. 541 (robbery; witnesses testified to the statements of the victim and a bystander, made in the magistrate's court, identifying the accused; held allowable here, because the defendant had introduced the subject and the prosecution was merely rebutting as to the spontaneity of the identification; distinguishing People v. Jung Hing, supra; this ruling nevertheless indorses the essential vice of the rule in People v. Jung Hing); 1917, People v. Seppi, 221 N. Y. 62, 116 N. E. 793 (homicide; identification by witnesses at the police office, excluded, following People v. Jung Hing); Oregon: 1903, State v. Houghton, 43 Or. 125, 71 Pac. 982 (like R. v. Burke, supra; excluded); 1920, State v. Evans, 98 Or. 214, 192 Pac. 1062 (assault and robbery; that the prosecuting witness identified accused when confronted in the jail, held inadmissible); Texas: 1899, Murphy v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 120, 51 S. W. 940; 1906, Turman v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 7, 95 S. W. 533 (rape; approving Murphy v. State, and prior cases; here the prosecutrix testified that as soon as she had identified the accused in the presence of the sheriff, and upon a further question by him, she fainted; the fainting was held improperly proved, as it "was calculated to greatly imperil and jeopardize the defendant's rights"; such a cautious rule defies reason); 1920, Cummings v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. 154, 219 S. W. 1104 (burglary; identification of the stolen shoes by persons seeing them when found, but in defendant's absence, held erroneous on principle, but not material error where afterwards at the trial the witnesses identified the articles; re-affirming the doctrine of Canada v. State, 29 Tex. App. 537, 16 S. W. 341, 24 S. W. 514); Wisconsin: 1908, Gillotti v. State, 135 Wis. 634, 116 N. W. 252 (a person robbed testified on cross-examination that he had shortly thereafter described the robbers to the sheriff; the sheriff's testimony to that description was excluded; Marshall, J., diss., in a careful opinion); 1920, State v. Hamilton, — Wis. —, 176 N. W. 773 (testimony of police-officers to the identification of defendant by P. at the police-station immediately after arrest, held "hearsay and incompetent"; following Gillotti v. State; is it not too advanced an age of intelligence for this heresy to receive any further sanction?).

Compare other cases cited post, § 1791 (verbal acts).

peachment by cross-examination.[1] But there is no reason for such a loose rule.

§ 1132. Consistent Statements are not themselves Testimony; Impeached Witness himself may prove them. (1) The consistent statements are not to be taken in themselves as additional testimony; being deemed (unsoundly) obnoxious to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1792); it is the fact of the consistent statement that affords the corroboration:[1]

1878, READE, J., in State v. Parish, 79 N. C. 614: "It must not be considered as substantive evidence of the truth of the facts any more than any other hearsay evidence. The fact that supporting a witness who testifies does indirectly support the facts to which he § 1131. [1] Some of these cases rest on the ground that moral character (ante, § 1125) is involved; the ruling favors admission, except as otherwise noted: Illinois: 1873, Stolp v. Blair, 68 Ill. 541, 543 (cross-examination); Louisiana: 1895, State v. Johnson, 47 La. An. 1225, 17 So. 789 (cross-examination to fraud); Maryland: 1823, Cooke v. Curtis, 6 H. & J. 93 ("where the credibility of a witness is attacked"); 1871, McAleer v. Horsey, 35 Md. 439, 467 (left undecided); 1913, Cross v. State, 118 Md. 660, 86 Atl. 223 (Cooke v. Curtis followed); Massachusetts: 1854, Com. v. Wilson, 1 Gray 338, 340 (cross-examination); Missouri: 1883, State v. Grant, 79 Mo. 113, 133 (if an "attack be made on the character of the witness"); 1890, State v. Whelehon, 102 Mo. 17, 21, 14 S. W. 730 (left undecided); 1896, State v. Taylor, 134 Mo. 109, 35 S. W. 92 (repudiating State v. Grant on this point, and denying this broad scope to the rule); 1904, State v. Sharp, 183 Mo. 715, 82 S. W. 134 (State v. Taylor approved); New York: 1834, People v. Vane, 12 Wend. 78 (an accomplice; evidence admitted); but later decisions entirely repudiate this principle, and sustain the foregoing case under the doctrine (supra, § 1128) of explaining away a supposed bias or interest: 1840, Robb v. Hackley, 23 Wend. 50, 53; North Carolina: 1822, State v. Twitty, 2 Hawks 449; 1848, State v. George, 8 Ire. 324, 328, semble; 1854, March v. Harrell, 1 Jones L. 329 (from "the nature of his evidence, from his situation, from bad character", from prior self-contradictions, or by imputations on cross-examination); State v. Thomason, ib. 274; 1874, Bullinger v. Marshall, 70 N. C. 520, 525; 1878, State v. Laxton, 78 N. C. 564; 1878, State v. Parish, 79 N. C. 610, 613; 1879, Jones v. Jones, 80 N. C. 246, 249 (admissible "to repel any imputations upon the credit of the witness"); 1880, Roberts v. Roberts, 82 N. C. 29, 31 (to sustain "assailed" testimony); 1885, State v. Rowe, 92 N. C. 629, 631; 1885, State v. Whitfield, 92 N. C. 831, 834; 1885, Davis v. Council, 92 N. C. 725, 730 (fraud); 1887, State v. Brewer, 98 N. C. 607, 3 S. E. 819 (impeachment on cross-examination); 1887, Davenport v. McKee, 98 N. C. 500, 506, 4 S. E. 545 ("when and however impeached"); 1888, State v. Freeman, 100 N. C. 429, 5 S. E. 921 ("whenever the witness is impeached and in whatever manner"); 1889, State v. Ward, 103 N. C. 419, 8 S. E. 814; 1890, State v. Morton, 107 N. C. 890, 12 S. E. 112; 1890, State v. Jacobs, 107 N. C. 873, 12 S. E. 248; 1891, Hooks v. Houston, 109 N. C. 623, 627, 14 S. E. 49; 1892, Gregg v. Mallett, 111 N. C. 74, 77, 15 S. E. 936; State v. McKinney, 111 N. C. 683, 16 S. E. 235; 1893, Byrd v. Hudson, 113 N. C. 203, 18 S. E. 209; 1894, State v. Staton, 114 N. C. 813, 19 S. E. 96; 1894, Wallace v. Grizzard, 114 N. C. 488, 19 S. E. 760; 1897, Burnett v. Wilm. N. & N. R. Co., 120 N. C. 517, 26 S. E. 819; 1902, State v. Maultsby, 130 N. C. 664, 41 S. E. 97; 1905, State v. Exum, 138 N. C. 599, 50 S. E. 283 (why does the Court devote two pages discussing this rule, after it has been so long settled in this State?); 1912, Allred v. Kirkman, 160 N. C. 392, 76 S. E. 244; 1914, State v. Rodgers, 168 N. C. 112, 83 S. E 161; Pennsylvania: 1823, Henderson v. Jones, 10 S. & R. 332, semble (declaring in favor of "the generality of the rule"); 1877, Hester v. Com., 85 Pa. 139, 158, semble (approving the preceding case); 1890, Crooks v. Bunn, 136 Pa. 368, 372, 30 Atl. 529 (apparently approving Henderson v. Jones; but also apparently favoring a limitation to impeachment by prior self-contradictions); Texas: 1898, Scott v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 47 S. W. 531 (admitting after impeachment by conviction of crime).

The following case is unique: 1914, People v. Jung Hing, 212 N. Y. 393, 106 N. E. 105 (besides the impeachment of the witness, it must be shown that the corroborating statements themselves "were made under circumstances which precluded the probability of their being inspired by others"; no authority is cited; the limitation is needless and unsound, and appears never to have been thought of by any other Court).

§ 1132. [1] 1850, Conrad v. Griffey, 11 How., 480, 492; 1895, Yarbrough v. State, 105 Ala. 43, 16 So. 758.

Such evidence is said to be an exception to the Hearsay rule in Maitland v. Bank, 40 Md. 559 (1874); but this is erroneous.

testifies does not alter the case; that is incidental. He is supported, not by putting a prop under him, but by removing a burden from him, if any has been put upon him."

(2) When, by any of the foregoing rules, the statements are admissible at all, there is no reason why the impeached witness himself may not testify to them;[2] even though this will usually be of less value than the testimony of other persons.

§ 1133. Statements of Claim by a Party, to rebut his Admissions. If the consistent statements of a witness are (as a majority of Courts hold) not admissible to explain or rebut his inconsistent statements (ante, § 1126), then is there any less or greater reason for permitting the admissions of a party (when he has not become a witness) to be rebutted or explained by his statements of claim, made at other times, consistent with his present claims under the pleadings? His admissions are relevant against him in analogy to the self-contradiction of a witness (ante, § 1048), and it would seem therefore that his consistent claims should be treated after the same analogy; i.e. they should be received or excluded in whatever situations a witness' consistent statements would be received or excluded (ante, §§ 1126–1129). Most Courts, however, exclude such statements unconditionally.[1]

[2] Ind. 1892, Hobbs v. State, 133 Ind. 404, 408, 32 N. E. 1019; N. Car. 1848, State v. George, 8 Ire. 324, 329; 1881, McLeod v. Bullard, 84 N. C. 515, 529; 1885, State v. Whitfield, 92 N. C. 831, 835; 1897, Burnet v. R. Co., 120 N. C. 517, 26 S. E. 818; Tex. 1893, Goode v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 505, 508, 24 S. W. 102.

§ 1133. [1] California: 1903, Rulofson v. Billings, 140 Cal. 452, 74 Pac. 35 (action on a contract by defendant's testator to adopt and support the plaintiff; after admitting for the plaintiff declarations by the testator that plaintiff was his son, the Court excluded for the defendant declarations of the testator that he was only guardian; the present principle not noticed); Colorado: 1882, Nutter v. O'Donnell, 6 Colo. 253, 260 ("he cannot annul or explain them away by counter-declarations"); Georgia: 1878, Lewis v. Adams, 61 Ga. 559 (title to land); 1906, McBride v. Georgia R. & E. Co., 125 Ga. 515, 54 S. E. 674 (with possible exceptions; here in an action for personal injuries); 1908, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Varner, 129 Ga. 844, 60 S. E. 162 (personal injury; excluded); 1912, Gordon v. Munn, 87 Kan. 624, 125 Pac. 1 (antenuptial contract; the widow having offered the deceased husband's statements that it was destroyed by mutual consent, the heir was allowed to offer other declarations of the deceased that the contract was lost and not destroyed); Iowa: 1872, Wilson v. Patrick, 34 Ia. 362, 368, 371 (an ancestor's declarations that he owned the land absolutely, not received to counteract his admissions that he owned it as security only); 1887, Wescott v. Wescott, 75 Ia. 628, 35 N. W. 649, semble (similar; here the declarations of the plaintiff's mother that money handed by her to the defendant was a loan, not a gift); Maine: 1887, Royal v. Chandler, 79 Me. 265, 9 Atl. 615 (title to land); Maryland: (the statutes and cases are cited ante, § 1126, notes 4 and 8, and § 1127); Massachusetts: 1853, Hunt v. Roylance, 11 Cush. 117, 121 (excluded; "To show that a man denied being a member of a copartnership to A to-day does not prove or in any way tend to show that he did not admit that he was a member of the firm to B yesterday"); 1859, Com. v. Goodwin, 14 Gray 55 (arson); 1861, Blake v. Everett, 1 All. 248, 249 (right of way); 1866, Baxter v. Knowles, 12 All. 114, 119 (title to personalty); 1875, Pickering v. Reynolds, 119 Mass. 111, 113 (title to land); 1876, Hayden v. Stone, 121 Mass. 413 (dedication); Michigan: 1904, Bernard v. Pittsburg Coal Co., 137 Mich. 279, 100 N. W. 396 (the original unamended declaration of the plaintiff having been offered as an admission, his letter to his counsel stating the fact as now claimed was received); Missouri: 1846, Turner v. Belden, 9 Mo. 787, 790 (Foster v. Nowlin (1835), 4 Mo. 18, 22, repudiated); 1855, Criddle v. Criddle, 21 Mo. 522 (same rule); 1858, Clark v. Huffaker, 26 Mo. 264, 267 (partnership); New Hampshire: 1850, Hurlburt v. Wheeler, 40 N. H. 73, 76 (title to property); New York: 1806, Waring v. Warren, 1 John. 340, semble: Pennsylvania: 1819, McPeake v. Hutchinson, 5 S. & R. 294, 296 (advancement to child); 1822, Patton v. Goldsborough, 9 S. & R. 47, 55 ("A confession made at one time cannot be rebutted by a declaration at another time," because, "if that were permitted, a man might always destroy his confes-

Nevertheless, in property controversies, where usually the question arises, the same utterances are often receivable on some principle of Admissions (ante, §§ 1085–1087) or of Verbal Acts (post, § 1778), or, in other controversies, of Completeness of a conversation or correspondence (post, §§ 2115–2120).

2. Special Classes of Witnesses

§ 1134. Complaint of Rape; History. This class of corroborative statements is unusually complicated in principles and confused in precedents, — not because the principles themselves are inherently complex, but because the evidence admits of the application of three distinct general principles for its admission, and because the distinct bearings of these different principles have not always been borne in mind by the Courts.

Down to the beginning of the 1800s, evidence of this sort was received by the Courts as a matter of old tradition and practice, with little or no thought of any principles to support it. The tradition went back by a continuous thread to the primitive rule of hue-and-cry: and the precise nature of the survival is more fully explained in dealing with the Hearsay Exception of 'Res Gestæ' (post, § 1760). But as more and more attention began to be given, in the early 1800s, to the principles underlying every sort of evidence, there came to be felt a need of explaining on principle this inherited and hitherto unquestioned practice; the various aspects of its significance began to be thought of.

There are three possible principles, well enough established otherwise, upon which such evidence can be offered: 1, as an Explanation of a Self-Contradiction (ante, § 1042); 2, as a Corroboration by other Similar Statesions by subsequent declarations to the contrary"); 1824, Galbraith v. Green, 13 S. & R. 85, 92; 1890, Crooks v. Bunn, 136 Pa. 368, 371, 20 Atl. 529; South Carolina: 1882, Ellen v. Ellen, 18 S. C. 489, 494 (adverse possession); Texas: 1854, Jones v. State, 13 Tex. 168, 176.

Contra: Canada: 1869, Key v. Thomson, 1 Han. N. Br. 295, 297, 301 (malpractice; defendant having assured the plaintiff that he would recover, his statement at the time to another person that the plaintiff would not recover, held admissible, as explaining that the first assurance was merely to keep up the plaintiff's spirits); U. S. Federal: 1899, Fidelity M. L. Ass'n v. Miller, 34 C. C. A. 211, 92 Fed. 63 (fraudulent plan to commit suicide after obtaining insurance; after evidence of the deceased's utterances showing such a plan, other utterances showing the contrary were admitted in rebuttal); New York: 1915, Ferris v. Sterling, 214 N. Y. 249, 108 N. E. 406 (ownership of an insurance policy; prior letters held admissible; to rebut admissions); Pennsylvania: 1811, Brackenridge, J., in Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binn. 314, 333, 339 ("It goes to the evidence of the fact that he did at any time disclaim; for though a declaration at one time is not inconsistent with a contrary declaration at another, yet it diminishes the probability that such a declaration was made"; here, oral declarations of a predecessor of the defendant in title disclaiming title had been received; his deeds containing recitals of other deeds giving him title were declared admissible, as tending to show the improbability of such conversations; contra, Yeates, J.; compare the theory of Cooley, J., ante, § 1126); Tennessee: 1919, Gibson v. Buis, 142 Tenn. 133, 218 S. W. 220 (whether a check was handed to a legatee as a gift or an advancement; the legatee's statements of her conversation claiming it as a gift, admissible only to rebut admissions made by her, but not as "substantive testimony of the gift").

The principles of §§ 1725–1732, post (declarations of intent), will sometimes also suffice for such evidence.

Distinguish the question whether the party when a witness may be corroborated as such (ante, § 1126).

ments, under the present principle; 3, as a 'Res Gestæ' Declaration, excepted under the Hearsay Rule (post, § 1760). These may be noticed in order, with the precedents proceeding upon each theory.

§ 1135. Same: (A) First Theory: Explanation of an Inconsistency; Fact of Complaint is admissible. It has already been seen (ante, § 1042) that the fact of a failure to speak when it would have been natural to do so is in effect an Inconsistent Statement or Self-Contradiction, — as when on a former trial a witness said nothing about an important circumstance which he now asserts, or when he failed to testify at all, though present, when his testimony (if true) could have been highly valuable. This failure to speak, as also already seen (ante, § 1044), may perhaps be explained away in some fashion; but, unless so explained, it stands in effect as a Self-Contradiction.

(1) (a) Now, when a woman charges a man with a rape, and testifies to the details, and the accused denies the act itself, its very commission thus coming into issue, the circumstance that at the time of the alleged rape the woman said nothing about it to anybody constitutes in effect a Self-Contradiction of the above sort. It was entirely natural, after becoming the victim of an assault against her will, that she should have spoken out. That she did not, that she went about as if nothing had happened, was in effect an assertion that nothing violent had been done. Thus, the failure of the woman, at the time of an alleged rape, to make any complaint could be offered in evidence (as all concede) as a virtual self-contradiction discrediting her present testimony.[1]

(b) Now, where nothing appears on the trial as to the making of such a complaint, the jury might naturally assume that none was made, and counsel for the accused might be entitled to argue upon that assumption. As a peculiarity, therefore, of this kind of evidence, it is only just that the prosecution should be allowed to forestall this natural assumption by showing that the woman was not silent, i.e. that a complaint was in fact made.[2] This apparently

§ 1135. [1] That the woman's subsequent friendly conduct towards the accused, on a charge of rape, is admissible, stands upon another principle (ante, § 402).

[2] The English cases have always conceded that the fact of the complaint may be shown: they are collected post, § 1760 (under the Hearsay Exception), and need not be repeated here. The American cases here follow; but only the first ruling in each jurisdiction is given, except where later ones were needed to settle the doctrine; all the other cases, in the following sections, assume the doctrine as settled: Ala. 1871, Lacy v. State, 45 Ala. 80 ("the fact of making complaint immediately and before it is likely that anything should have been contrived and devised"); Ark. 1855, Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624, 648; Cal. 1862, People v. Graham, 21 Cal. 261, 265, semble; 1901, People v. Figueroa, 134 Cal. 159, 66 Pac. 202; Conn. 1830, State v. DeWolf, 8 Conn. 83, 99; Ga. 1852, Stephen v. State, 11 Ga. 225, 233; Ind. 1869, Weldon v. State, 32 Ind. 81; Iowa: 1871, State v. Richards, 28 Ia. 420; La. 1901, State v. Washington, 104 La. 57, 28 So. 904; Mich. 1871, Strang v. People, 24 Mich. 1, 5; 1874, People v. Lynch, 29 Mich. 273, 279; 1879, Maillet v. People, 42 Mich. 262, 264, 3 N. W. 854; 1920, People v. Luce, 210 Mich. 621, 178 N. W. 54; Minn. 1872, State v. Shettleworth, 18 Minn. 208, 212; 1877, Gardner v. Kellogg, 23 Minn. 463; Mo. 1875, State v. Jones, 61 Mo. 232, 235, semble; 1881, State v. Warner, 74 Mo. 83, 86; Nebr. 1881, Oleson v. State, 11 Nebr. 276, 9 N. W. 38, semble; 1900, Welsh v. State, 60 Nebr. 101, 82 N. W. 368; N. H. 1863, State v. Knapp, 45 N. H. 148, 155; N. Y. 1869, Baccio v. People, 41 N. Y. 265; N. Car. 1866, State v. Marshall, Phillips N. C. 49; Oh. 1848, Johnson v. State, 17 Oh. 593, 595; Okl.

irregular process of negativing evidence not yet formally introduced by the opponent is regular enough in reality, because the impression upon the tribunal would otherwise be there as if the opponent had really offered evidence of the woman's silence. Thus the essence of the process consists in the showing that the woman did not in fact behave with a silence inconsistent with her present story. The Courts have fully sanctioned this analysis of the situation:

1830, DAGGETT, J., in State v. DeWolf, 8 Conn. 99: "If a female testifies that such an outrage has been committed on her person, an inquiry is at once suggested why it was not communicated to her female friends. To satisfy such inquiry it is reasonable that she should be heard in her declaration that she did so complain."

1869, WOODRUFF, J., in Baccio v. People, 41 N. Y. 268: "It may be suggested, perhaps, that it is so natural as to be almost inevitable that a female upon whom the crime has been committed will make immediate complaint thereof to her mother or other confidential friend and, inasmuch as her failure to do so would be strong evidence that her affirmation on the subject when examined as a witness was false, that the prosecution may anticipate such a claim by affirmative proof that complaint was made. . . . Like outcries made at the time charged, the appearance and manner of the female immediately after, her instant complaints of the fact are all such as are natural and according to the ordinary course of events."

1900, BARTCH, C. J., in State v. Neal, 21 Utah 151, 60 Pac. 510: "The natural instinct of a female thus outraged and injured prompts her to disclose the occurrence, at the earliest opportunity, to the relative or friend who naturally has the deepest interest in her welfare; and the absence of such a disclosure tends to discredit her as a witness, and may raise an inference against the truth of the charge. To avoid such discredit and inference, it is competent for the prosecution to anticipate any claim as to effects, and show, by affirmative proof of the victim and of her relative or friend to whom she narrated the circumstances of the outrage, that complaint was made recently after its commission."

(c) In the same way, and just as with ordinary Self-Contradictions (ante, § 1044), if the silence is conceded by the prosecution, the silence may nevertheless be explained away as due to fear, shame, or the like, so that it loses its significance as a suspicious inconsistency:

1863, BELLOWS, J., in State v. Knapp, 45 N. H. 155: "It is equally well settled also that the delay to make complaint may be explained by showing that it was caused by threats or undue influence of the prisoner. . . . It would then be clearly proper to show the reasons of such delay, — whether caused by the threats of the prisoner, inability caused by the violence, want of opportunity, or the fear of injury by the communication to the only persons at hand. . . . Upon a disclosure of all the circumstances the jury might properly find that the delay was neither unreasonable nor inconsistent with the testimony of the prosecutrix." [3]

1897, Harmon v. Terr., 5 Okl. 368, 49 Pac. 55; Or. 1897, State v. Sargent, 32 Or. 110, 49 Pac. 889; Tenn. 1848, Phillips v. State, 9 Humph. 246, 247; Tex. 1874, Pefferling v. State, 40 Tex. 486, 492; Va. 1853, Brogy's Case, 10 Gratt. 722, 728; Vt. 1874, State v. Niles, 47 Vt. 82, 86; 1905, State v. Willett, 78 Vt. 157, 62 Atl. 48; Wis. 1888, Hannon v. State, 70 Wis. 448, 450, 36 N. W. 1.

The only contrary ruling is based on inattention to the different theories: 1911, People v. Lewis, 252 Ill. 281, 96 N. E. 1005 (the fact of fresh complaint by the woman, excluded, because she had not testified, being dead before the trial).

[3] Eng. 1864, R. v. Rearden, 4 F. & F. 76; U. S. 1900, State v. Peterson, 110 Ia. 647, 82 N. W. 329; 1904, State v. Icenbice, 126 Ia. 16, 101 N. W. 273; 1895, People v. Ezzo, 104 Mich. 341, 62 N. W. 407; 1872, State v. Shettleworth, 18 Minn. 208, 212; 1863, State v. Knapp, 45 N. H. 148, 155 ("how much delay in making the complaint ought to weigh against the prosecution must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case"); 1900, People v. Flaherty, 162 N. Y. 532, 57 N. E. 73 (explanations nearly nine months later, excluded); 1914, Sanchez v. Gestera, 7 P. R. Fed. 279; 1892, State v. Wilkins, 66 Vt. 1, 10, 28 Atl. 323.

(d) Under the early rule of hue-and-cry, it was necessary that there should have been fresh complaint; and this notion has been perpetuated in the statement, usual in enunciating the modern rule, that the complaint must have been recent, in order that the fact of it may be admitted. A few Courts have applied this notion practically in their rulings, by excluding complaints made after a certain length of time.[4] But, if it be considered that the purpose of the evidence is merely to negative the supposed silence of the woman, it is perceived that the fact of complaint at any time should be received. After a long delay, to be sure, the fact is of trifling weight, but it negatives silence, nevertheless, and the accompanying circumstances must determine how far the delay has been successfully explained away.[5]

(2) The foregoing principles apply equally to other charges involving sexual intercourse with violence or irrespective of the female's consent, — though here there is found naturally some difference of opinion in applying the principle to specific offences. (a) The failure to make complaint should not be admissible on a charge of rape under age of consent, unless where the complainant is a child of tender years;[6] nor (unless in the same exceptional case)

[4] Eng. 1896, R. v. Lillyman, 2 Q. B. 167 ("provided it was made as speedily after the acts complained of as could reasonably be expected"); U. S. 1898, People v. Lambert, 120 Cal. 170, 52 Pac. 307 (delay held too long on the facts); 1907, People v. Gonzalez, 6 Cal. App. 255, 91 Pac. 1013 (time is material); 1902, Lyles v. U. S., 20 D. C. App. 559, 563 (to a physician, four weeks later, when applying for an examination, excluded); 1916, People v. White, 194 Mich. 172, 160 N. W. 452 (indecent liberties; a complaint a week later, excluded); 1887, People v. O'Sullivan, 104 N. Y. 481, 490, 10 N. E. 881 (excluding, where the complaint was not made for nearly eleven months); 1915, State v. Mackey, 31 N. D. 200, 153, N. W. 982 (statements made more than a year after one alleged act, and a week after the last, in answer to interrogation by a committee, excluded); 1887, Dunn v. State, 45 Oh. St. 249, 252, 12 N. E. 826 (an unexplained delay of ten days excluded the evidence); 1906, State v. Griffin, 43 Wash. 591, 86 Pac. 951 (complaint six months afterwards, excluded, on the facts).

[5] Ariz. 1903, Trimble v. Terr., 125 Ariz. 494, 71 Pac. 932; Conn. 1908, State v. Sebastian, 81 Conn. 1, 69 Atl. 1054; Ill. 1922, People v. Mason, 301 Ill. 370, 133 N. E. 767 (assault with intent to rape; the female child lived with the defendant, her uncle; complaint made 4 days after leaving his home, though 2 months after the alleged assault, admitted); Iowa: 1903, State v. Bebb, — Ia. —, 96 N. W. 714 (made more than three months afterwards; admitted); 1904, State v. Bebb, 125 Ia. 494, 101 N. W. 189; 1910, Smith v. Hendrix, 149 Ia. 255, 128 N. W. 360; Mo. 1897, State v. Marcks, 140 Mo. 656, 41 S. W. 973, 43 S. W. 1095; Mont. 1903, State v. Peres, 27 Mont. 358, 71 Pac. 162; N. Y. 1874, Higgins v. People, 58 N. Y. 378, semble ("there is and can be no particular time specified"); S. Car. 1898, State v. Sudduth, 52 S. C. 488, 30 S. E. 408; Tex. 1899, Roberson v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 49 S. W. 398; 1911, Conger v. State, 63 Tex. Cr. 312, 140 S. W. 1112; Utah: 1909, State v. Williams, 36 Utah 273, 103 Pac. 250 (complaint made nearly three years later, admitted; but the delay may affect its weight); Vt. 1874, State v. Niles, 47 Vt. 82, 86 (Royce, J.: "It has never been understood that mere lapse of time could be made the test upon which the admissibility of such evidence depended; the time that intervenes . . . is a subject for the jury to consider").

The following cases lay down no rule: 1902, State v. Snider, 119 Ia. 15, 91 N. W. 762; 1898, Legare v. State, 87 Md. 735, 41 Atl. 60 (complaint not too late on the facts); 1898, Com. v. Cleary, 172 Mass. 175, 51 N. E. 746 (trial judge's discretion controls as to time; whether lapse of time may ever exclude as a matter of law, undecided).

The total failure to complain is of course not fatal 'per se' to the prosecution: 1906, Garvik v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 131 Ia. 415, 108 N. W. 327.

There is no reason why a second complaint should be excluded. Contra: 1896, Lowe v. State, 97 Ga. 792, 25 S. E. 676.

[6] Excluded: 1897, People, v. Lee, 119 Cal. 84, 51 Pac. 22, semble; 1912, Kramer v. Weigand, 91 Nebr. 47, 135 N. W. 230 (civil action on a charge of sodomy;[7] nor, perhaps, on a charge of taking indecent liberties.[8] (b) Similarly, the fact of complaint should not be admissible on a charge of seduction,[9] nor ordinarily on a charge of rape under age of consent, except for children;[10] but should be admissible for other offences usually involving force.[11]

§ 1136. Same: Consequences of this Theory; Details not admitted; Complainant must be a Witness. When the complaint is admitted on this theory, certain limitations upon its use follow logically and necessarily.

(1) Only the fact of the complaint, not the details. The purpose is to negative the supposed inconsistency of silence by showing that there was not silence. Thus the gist of the evidential circumstances is merely not-silence, i.e. the fact of a complaint, but the fact only. That she complained of a rape, or an attempt at rape, is all that principle permits; the further terms of her utterance (except so far as to identify the time and place with that of the one charged) are not only immaterial for the purpose, but practically turn the statement into a hearsay assertion, and as such it is inadmissible (except on the third theory).[1] for rape); 1899, State v. Birchard, 35 Or. 484, 59 Pac. 468.

Admitted: 1898, R. v. Kiddle, 19 Cox Cr. 77 (indecent assault on a child of six); 1905, R. v. Osborn, 1 K. B. 551 (indecent assault on a child of twelve; "such complaints are admissible, not merely as negativing consent, but because they are consistent with the story of the prosecutrix"); 1919, Colpin v. People, 67 Colo. 17, 185 Pac. 254 (rape under age; here admitted because consent was not alleged); 1905, State v. Oswalt, — Kan. —, 82 Pac. 513 (said to be "at least doubtful").

[7] Excluded: 1908, Soto v. Terr., 12 Ariz. 36, 94 Pac. 1104 (sodomy upon a child of four); 1897, Honselman v. People, 168 Ill. 172, 48 N. E. 304. Admitted: 1908, State v. Sebastian, 81 Conn. 1, 69 Atl. 1054.

[8] 1909, People v. Scattura, 238 Ill. 313, 87 N. E. 332 (excluded).

[9] Excluded: 1895, State v. Sibley, — Mo. —, 31 S. W. 1033.

[10] Excluded: 1908, State v. Hoskinson, 78 Kan. 183, 96 Pac. 138; 1920, State v. Langston, 106 Kan. 672, 189 Pac. 153; 1914, State v. Gay, 82 Wash. 423, 144 Pac. 711.

Admitted: 1907, People v. Gonzalez, 6 Cal. App. 255, 91 Pac. 1013; 1914, State v. Ellison, 19 N. M. 428, 144 Pac. 10 (statutory rape; good opinion by Parker, J., but not framing any fixed rule); 1906, State v. Winslow, 30 Utah 403, 85 Pac. 433 (incest with a minor daughter, there being no consenting fact); 1892, State v. Wilkins, 66 Vt. 1, 10, 28 Atl. 123 (admissible in corroboration, regardless of the question of consent); 1919, State v. Gile, 93 Vt. 142, 106 Atl. 829 (admissible for statutory rape also).

[11] Admitted: 1902, People v. Swist, 136 Cal. 520, 69 Pac. 223 (crime against nature, committed on a child); 1893, People v. Hicks, 98 Mich. 86, 89, 56 N. W. 1102 (indecent assault); 1912, Totten v. Totten, 172 Mich. 565, 138 N. W. 257 (civil action for rape); 1900, State v. Imlay, 22 Utah 156, 61 Pac. 557 (assault with intent to rape).

§ 1136. [1] The English cases on this point are collected post, § 1760 (under the Hearsay Exception), and need not be repeated here; in the American following it is to be noted that many of these Courts do allow the details of the statement to be used under the second theory, as seen in the next section:

Alabama: 1871, Lacy v. State, 45 Ala. 80; 1872, Scott v. State, 48 id. 420; 1884, Griffin v. State, 76 id. 29, 31; 1905, Posey v. State, 143 Ala. 54, 38 So. 1019;

Arizona: 1921, Sage v. State, 22 Ariz. 151, 195 Pac. 534 n. 1 (statutory rape);

Arkansas: 1855, Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624, 649; 1897, Davis v. State, 63 id. 470, 39 S. W. 356 (description given by a raped woman when shown the defendant);

California: 1862, People v. Graham, 21 Cal. 261, 265; 1893, People v. Stewart, 97 Cal. 238, 241, 32 Pac. 8; 1898, People v. Lambert, 120 Cal. 170, 52 Pac. 307; 1903, People v. Wilmot, 139 Cal. 103, 72 Pac. 838; 1904, People v. Scalamiero, 143 Cal. 343, 76 Pac. 1098;

Georgia: 1852, Stephen v. State, 11 Ga. 225, 233; 1910, Huey v. State, 7 Ga. App. 398, 66 S. E. 1023 (Stephen v. State followed);

Idaho: 1904, State v. Harness, 10 Ida. 18, 76 Pac. 788; 1916, State v. Andrus, 29 Ida. 1, 156 Pac. 421;

Illinois: 1908, People v. Weston, 236 Ill. 104, 86 N. E. 188; 1915, People v. Hamilton, 268 Ill. 390, 109 N. E. 329;

Indiana: 1869, Weldon v. State, 32 Ind. 81; 1871, Thompson v. State, 38 Ind. 39; 1893, Polson v. State, 137 Ind. 519, 523, 35 N. E.

(2) The woman must be a witness. Since the only object of the evidence is to repel the supposed inconsistency between the woman's present testimony and her former silence, it is obvious that if she has not testified at all,

607; 1910, Pulley v. State, 174 Ind. 542, 92 N. E. 550 (the name of the alleged assailant must not be mentioned);
Iowa: 1871, State v. Richards, 28 Ia. 420; 1886, State v. Clark, 69 Ia. 295, 28 N. W. 606; 1886, State v. Mitchell, 68 Ia. 118, 26 N. W. 44 (but this does not exclude the fact that the complaint spoke of a rape); 1890, McMurrin v. Rigby, 80 Ia. 322, 325, 45 M. W. 877 (same); 1900, State v. Petersen, 110 Ia. 647, 82 N. W. 329 ("exact particulars" inadmissible); 1902, State v. Wheeler, 116 Ia. 212, 89 N. W. 978 (admissible only "in confirmation of the witness or to repel the presumption that her statement is a fabrication"; but the name of the ravisher as stated may be included in proof of the fact of complaint); 1905, State v. Andrews, 130 Ia. 609, 105 N. W. 215 (the precise scope of the "fact" of the complaint here seems to be enlarged to include "who her assailant was and what he did to her", with further qualifications; the rule is now loose and unsettled in this State; see § 1761, post); 1905, State v. Barkley, 129 Ia. 484, 105 N. W. 506 (the rule further obscured; preceding case not cited); 1910, State v. Dudley, 147 Ia. 645, 126 N. W. 812; 1911, State v. Novak, 151 Ia. 536, 132 N. W. 26 (preceding rule applied; but pointing out that details not receivable under the present principle may be admissible under the Spontaneous Declarations exception to the Hearsay rule, post, §§ 1139, 1760); 1914, State v. Vochoski, 170 Ia. 246, 150 N. W. 53;
Kansas: 1901, State v. Daugherty, 63 Kan. 473, 65 Pac. 695; 1920, State v. Langston, 106 Kan. 672, 189 Pac. 153 (but here a liberal application was made, the child being of tender years); 1917, State v. McLemore, 99 Kan. 777, 164 Pac. 161 (the assailant's name must not be stated);
Louisiana: 1903, State v. McCoy, 109 La. 682, 33 So. 730 (not clear);
Maine: 1892, State v. Mulkern, 85 Me. 106, 107, 26 Atl. 1017;
Michigan: 1877, Brown v. People, 36 Mich. 203 (admitted exceptionally; no principle laid down); 1879, Maillet v. People, 42 Mich. 262, 264, 3 N. W. 854 (left undecided); 1886, People v. Gage, 62 Mich. 271, 28 N. W. 835 (treated as properly excluded by the present principle, but nevertheless admitted exceptionally by the 'res gestæ' principle, post, § 1760); 1893, People v. Hicks, 98 Mich. 89, 56 N. W. 1102 (excluding the details, and not applying the 'res gestæ' exception); 1896, People v. Duncan, 104 Mich. 460, 62 N. W. 556 (same); 1898, People v. Bernor, 115 Mich. 692, 74 N. W. 184, semble; 1900, People v. Marrs, 125 Mich. 376, 84 N. W. 284 (details excluded, unless they are made at the time as 'res gestæ' or unless the complainant is a child);
Minnesota: 1872, State v. Shettleworth, 18 Minn. 208, 212;
Missouri: State v. Jones, 61 Mo. 232, 235;
Nebraska: 1881, Oleson v. State, 11 Nebr. 276, 279, 9 N. W. 38; 1886, Mathews v. State, 19 Nebr. 330, 337, 27 N. W. 234; 1907, Younger v. State, 80 Nebr. 201, 114 N. W. 170 (here the ruling goes further and admits the naming or describing of the assailant: the foregoing cases are not cited); 1909, Henderson v. State, 85 Nebr. 444, 123 N. W. 459 (unless the complaint was part of the 'res gestæ'); 1918, Rhoades v. State, 102 Nebr. 750, 169 N. W. 433 (rape under age);
New Hampshire: 1863, State v. Knapp, 45 N. H. 148, 155;
New Jersey: 1915, State v. Schaeffer, 87 N. J. L. 663, 94 Atl. 598, semble;
New York: 1869, Baccio v. People, 41 N. Y. 265, 271;
Oklahoma: 1897, Harmon v. Terr., 5 Okl. 368, 49 Pac. 55;
Texas: 1874, Pefferling v. State, 40 Tex. 486, 492;
Utah: 1898, State v. Halford, 18 Utah 3, 54 Pac. 819 (obscure); 1900, State v. Neel, 21 Utah 151, 60 Pac. 510 (not admissible, except when so fresh as to be of the 'res gestæ');
Vermont: 1874, State v. Niles, 47 Vt. 82, 86; 1892, State v. Bedard, 65 Vt. 278, 284, 26 Atl. 719, semble;
Virginia: 1853, Brogy's Case, 10 Gratt. 722, 726;
Washington: 1898, State v. Hunter, 18 Wash. 670, 52 Pac. 247; 1906, State v. Griffin, 43 Wash. 591, 86 Pac. 951 (statement naming the accused, excluded);
Wisconsin: 1888, Hannon v. State, 70 Wis. 448, 452, 36 N. W. 1 ("except . . . where the person ravished is very young", referring to the cases of § 1760, post); 1902, Bannen v. State, 115 id. 317, 91 N. W. 107 (same).

A few Courts have erroneously allowed the detailed statement to be used even when proceeding upon the present theory; but these rulings are probably due to a confusion of the first and the second theory: 1830, State v. DeWolf, 8 Conn. 93, 100; 1848, Johnson v. State, 17 Oh. 593, 595; 1872, Burt v. State, 23 Oh. St. 394, 401.

For the admissibility of a child's complaint compare § 1751, par. c, § 1761, n. 2, post.

Of course, if the defence on cross-examination asks for some of the details, then the prosecution may ask for all of them on re-direct examination (on the principle of § 15, ante): 1915, State v. Ellison, 19 N. M. 428, 144 Pac. 10.

there is no inconsistency to repel, and therefore the evidence is irrelevant.[2] In a rape, for instance, charged to have been committed on a frequented way, and testified to by several bystanders, without calling the woman herself to the stand, it is entirely immaterial whether she made complaint or not; there is no story of hers before the court, and there is therefore no suspicion about such a story and nothing to repel. On the other hand, if the woman has taken the stand, it is immaterial whether she has been impeached or cross-examined (a matter of importance under the next theory); the fact of complaint may be introduced immediately, even by her own testimony in chief.

§ 1137. Same: (B) Second Theory; Rehabilitation by Consistent Statement. It has been seen (ante, § 1122) that, under some circumstances, and with limitations differently accepted in different jurisdictions, a witness whose testimony has been impeached may be corroborated or rehabilitated by evidence of his similar statements made at other times. This principle has been resorted to for admitting the present sort of evidence. The story of the woman is corroborated by showing that she told the same story at the time of making complaint. Where a Court allows this form of corroboration for other witnesses, it is a legitimate application of the principle to admit such evidence here. Courts sometimes permit the evidence to be used "to test" or "verify" the woman's recollection; but this is merely another way of saying that her telling a similar story at the first occasion corroborates her testimony on the stand. But in certain respects the conditions of use under the present theory differ radically from those under the preceding one.

§ 1138. Same: Consequences of this Theory; Details are admissible; Complainant must be a Witness, and Impeached. (1) The details of the statement are admissible. Since the purpose is to show that she tells the same story as on the stand, the whole of the complaint as made by her, with its terms and details, is to be received, and not the mere fact of the complaint.[1]

(2) But it is obviously necessary, here as in the preceding theory, that the woman must have testified. This requirement is common to both theories;

[2] England: The English Courts have not been clear upon this point: 1839, R. v. Walker, 2 Moo. & Rob. 212, Parke, B. (obscure); 1840, R. v. Megson, 9 C. & P. 420, Rolfe, B., semble, contra; 1840, R. v. Guttridges, ib. 471, Parke, B., semble, accord; 1841, R. v. Alexander, 2 Cr. & D. 126, Pennefather, B., semble, contra; 1896, R. v. Lillyman, 2 Q. B. 167, 177, semble, accord; 1898, R. v. Kiddle, 19 Cox Cr. 77, semble, contra (indecent assault; the prosecutrix being too young to be sworn, her unsworn testimony was admitted by virtue of St. 1885, quoted post, § 1828; an objection to the admission of the complaint, on the ground that "there was no evidence on oath to be corroborated", was overruled), 1905, R. v. Osborn, 1 K. B. 551, 558, semble, accord (indecent assault; the opinion appears to proceed on this theory).

United States: Most American Courts fail to make the requirement; but its logical necessity has occasionally been perceived; 1919, Elmer v. State, 20 Ariz. 170, 178 Pac. 28; 1910, Huey v. State, 7 Ga. App. 398, 66 S. E. 1023; 1902, State v. Wolf, 118 Ia. 564, 92 N. W. 673; 1898, Com. v. Cleary, 172 Mass. 175, 51 N. E. 746; 1887, People v. O'Sullivan, 104 N. Y. 481, 486, 10 N. E. 880; 1853, Brogy's Case, 10 Gratt. Va. 722, 727 (left undecided); and cases cited post, § 1138, par. 2.

Compare the doctrines of §§ 284 and 1076, ante. Note also that in Michigan and Wisconsin (supra, par. 1), the rule is partly contrary, i.e. only when the female is too young to testify are details admitted.

§ 1138. [1] This is the doctrine accepted by all the cases in the next two notes.

for both assume that the purpose is to rehabilitate a witness, and if the woman has not testified, there is no one in that position.[2]

(3) The witness must have been impeached. According to the general theory of Corroboration by Similar Statements (ante, § 1124), there must be some kind of impeachment before the other statement can be offered. In different jurisdictions different views are taken (ante, §§ 1125–1131) of what this impeachment must amount to, — whether it may be by general bad character, by bias, by prior self-contradiction, or the like. The kind of impeachment, therefore, which will be sufficient to admit the rape-complaint will depend on the view taken of the general principle in the particular jurisdiction.[3]

[2] England: 1839, R. v. Walker, 2 Moo. & Rob. 212, Parke, B., semble; 1840, R. v. Megson, 9 C. & P. 420, Rolfe, B. ("to show her credit and the accuracy of her recollection"; here the woman had died); 1840, R. v. Guttridges, ib. 471, Parke, B., semble; United States: 1862, People v. Graham, 21 Cal. 261, 265 (the child had been called to the stand, but could not testify for weeping); 1869, Weldon v. State, 32 Ind. 81 (the child alleged to have been raped being incompetent through youth); 1871, Thompson v. State, 38 Ind. 39 (the woman not having testified); 1895, State v. Meyers, 46 Nebr. 152, 64 N. W. 697 (incapacity as witness); 1845, People v. McGee, 1 Denio N. Y. 19, 22 (excluded wherever the woman is incompetent or for other reasons has not testified); 1907, State v. Werner, 16 N. D. 83, 112 N. W. 60 (and noting that, on this theory, the statement need not be "so recently after the commission of the offence", as it must be when admitted on the theory of § 1761, post); 1913, State v. Apley, 25 N. D. 298, 141 N. W. 740 (following State v. Werner); 1848, Johnson v. State, 17 Oh. 593, 595; 1910, People v. Rosado, 16 P. R. 413 (not clear); 1912, People v. Ruiz, 18 P. R. 587; and cases infra in note 3, especially Hornbeck v. State, Oh., Phillips v. State, Tenn.

Compare the cases cited ante, § 1136, par. 2.

[3] The English rulings are obscure as to whether impeachment is necessary: 1839, R. v. Walker, 2 Mo. & Rob. 212, Parke, B., semble (after cross-examination as to her story); 1840, R. v. Megson, 9 C. & P. 420, Rolfe, B., semble, contra; 1860, R. v. Eyre, 2 F. & F. 579, Byles, J., semble, contra; 1877, R. v. Wood, 14 Cox Cr. 47, Bramwell, L. J., semble, contra; 1896, R. v. Lillyman, 2 Q. B. 167, 177, contra (admissible in chief, as bearing on the consistency of the prosecutrix' conduct with her testimony).

The American rulings requiring impeachment are as follows; where no special note is added, the Court simply requires impeachment of some sort without defining what kind, and this impeachment may even cover mere cross-examination: Alabama: 1872, Scott v. State, 48 Ala. 420 ("in corroboration . . . if she is assailed in the matter of her complaint"); 1884, Griffin v. State, 76 Ala. 29, 32 (after either cross-examination as to the particulars of the complaint or evidence introduced "to impeach the prosecutrix"); 1901, Bray v. State, 131 Ala. 46, 31 So. 107; 1902, Oakley v. State, 135 Ala. 15, 33 So. 23; 1910, Gaines v. State, 167 Ala. 70, 52 So. 643 (Oakley v. State approved); Arkansas: 1855, Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624, 649 (after a general impeachment of credit); 1899, Lee v. State, 66 Ark. 286, 50 S. W. 517 (details admissible after impeachment as to the complaint); Idaho: 1907, State v. Fowler, 13 Ida. 317, 89 Pac. 757; Indiana: 1869, Weldon v. State, 32 Ind. 81, semble; 1871, Thompson v. State, 38 Ind. 39 (obscure as to the complaint itself; but requiring "impeachment" to admit other similar statements in general, following the usual rule for such evidence); Iowa: 1886, State v. Clark, 69 Ia. 294, 28 N. W. 606, semble; 1890, McMurrin v. Rigby, 80 Ia. 322, 325, 45 N. W. 877, semble; Louisiana: 1893, State v. Landford, 45 La. An. 1177, 14 So. 181 (admissible only after impeachment); Michigan: 1893, People v. Hicks, 98 Mich. 86, 56 N. W. 1102 (details admissible after impeachment; here excluded rape not being charged; but only indecent assault); Missouri: 1875, State v. Jones, 61 Mo. 232, 235; 1906, State v. Bateman, 198 Mo. 221, 94 S. W. 843; 1913, State v. Lawhorn, 250 Mo. 293, 157 S. W. 344 (affirming State v. Jones and State v. Bateman); Nebraska: 1881, Olsson v. State, 11 Nebr. 276, 279, 9 N. W. 38; Nevada: 1888, State v. Campbell, 20 Nev. 126, 17 Pac. 620 (excluded, unless after impeachment); 1905, Re Kelly, 28 Nev. 491, 83 Pac. 223 (State v. Campbell followed); New Mexico: 1899, Terr. v. Maldonado, 9 N. M. 629, 58 Pac. 350 (on direct testimony, details cannot be stated); New York: 1869, Baccio v. People, 41 N. Y. 265, 269, semble; North Carolina: 1866, State v. Marshall, Phillips 49, 51 (after a self-contradiction); 1899, State v. Brown, 125 N. C. 606, 34 S. E. 105 (declaration admitted after impeachment of prosecutrix on cross-examination); 1904, State v. Parker, 134 N. C. 209, 46 S. E. 511 (a technical rule laid down as to the judge's charge); Oregon: 1897, State v. Sargent, 32 Or. 110, 49 Pac. 889 (not admissible in chief); Tennessee: 1848, Phillips v. State, 9 Humph. 246, semble; Texas: 1874, Pefferling

§ 1139. Same: (C) Third Theory: Spontaneous or Res Gestæ Declarations, as Exception to Hearsay Rule. One of the exceptions to the Hearsay Rule permits the spontaneous declarations of a person suddenly excited by an extrinsic occurrence to be admitted as hearsay testimony (post, § 1747). The declarations of a woman under the fright of a sudden assault have been regarded by some Courts as receivable under this exception. The proper limitations are better considered in connection with the Hearsay Rule (post, § 1760). But the differences and similarities may be here pointed out between the rules of this theory and of the preceding ones:

(1) The details of the statement are admissible, because the rule is admitting a hearsay assertion, i.e. in effect, testimony.

(2) The woman need not be a witness, because the hearsay is admitted for its own sake, and not as corroborating her testimony or as in any way dependent upon it.

(3) If a witness, she need not have been impeached, because this requirement is wholly peculiar to the preceding theory.

(4) If the prosecutrix is too young to be a witness, nevertheless the statement is receivable.

§ 1140. Summary. (1) The fact of the complaint is always and legitimately admissible under the first theory above. (2) The details are legitimately receivable under either the second or the third theory; but the third has little vogue, while the second is widely accepted. Each has its own logical requirements, different from the other. (3) Both the first and the second theories may be accepted, without conflict. In most jurisdictions, the first theory is used to admit the fact of complaint, and then the second theory is invoked to admit the details; and this is proper enough, if the conditions of the second theory are observed.

§ 1141. Complaint in Travail by a Bastard's Mother. (1) At a time when

v. State, 40 Tex. 486, 492; 1894, Thompson v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 472, 475, 26 S. W. 987 (not admissible in chief).

The American cases not requiring impeachment are as follows; they allow the complaint-details to be offered in chief: Federal: 1834, Ellicott v. Pearl, 1 McLean 206, 211; Connecticut: 1830, State v. De Wolf, 8 Conn. 93, 100 (but here there had been cross-examination on the facts of the charge); 1876, State v. Kinney, 44 Conn. 153, 155 (same); 1880, State v. Byrne, 47 Conn. 465; Massachusetts: 1898, Com. v. Cleary, 172 Mass. 175, 51 N. E. 746, semble; New York: 1845, People v. McGee, 1 Denio 19, 22; North Dakota: 1907, State v. Werner, 16 N. D. 83, 112 N. W. 60 (but without formally accepting either specific theory); Ohio: 1848, Johnson v. State, 17 Oh. 593, 595 (the declarations must be made "immediately" after the alleged offence); 1849, Laughlin v. State, 18 Oh. 99, 101 (same); 1858, McCombs v. State, 8 Oh. St. 643, 646 (same); 1872, Burt v. State, 23 Oh. St. 394, 401 ("immediately or soon after"; the particularity of the details being left to the trial Court's discretion); 1879, Hornbeck v. State, 35 Oh. St. 277, 279; 1887, Dunn v. State, 45 Oh. St. 249, 251, 12 N. E. 826 ("immediately"; yet they are admissible after a delay, if it is accounted for, the Court applying here the rule as to admitting the fact of complaint, supra); Utah: 1900, State v. Imlay, 22 Utah 156, 61 Pac. 557 (details admissible, in corroboration of the complainant's testimony, if made immediately after the act).

It will be noted that most of the rulings prescribe something as to the time of the complaint. But this is really unnecessary, under the present theory of Corroboration by Similar Statements; the time of the statements is immaterial (ante, § 1126). This requirement as to time comes simply from a confusion of the first theory above (admitting the fact of the complaint) with the second theory (admitting the details).

parties and interested persons were disqualified, an exception was made by statute (resting probably on old traditional practice [1]), in several of the colonial communities, and the mother permitted to be a witness in a prosecution for bastardy or suit for filiation; this was indeed probably the first statutory exception to the general disqualification (ante, § 575). But it was conditioned on the fact that the mother had in her travail named and accused as the father the very person now on trial as defendant. This was the law in Massachusetts and New Hampshire;[2] while in Maine and Connecticut the requirement was more rigid, and formed a condition precedent (as sometimes construed) to maintaining the action.[3]

The theory on which these travail-accusations were thus given force was a composite one. Partly it was the present theory of corroborating by con-

§ 1141. [1] 1637, Bishop of Lincoln's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 769, 773 (witnesses to P. as the father of a bastard testified "some by confession of herself being the mother of the child who were present at the time of her delivery").

There was current on the Continent a maxim which seems to point to a similar custom: "Creditur virgini dicenti se ab aliquo cognitam et ex eo praegnantem esse." But this maxim does not appear to be found in the Canon law; and presumably it referred to some rule affecting the use of the woman's deposition, regardless of time of childbirth (Baudry-Lacantinerie et al., Traité théorique et pratique de droit civil, 2d ed., 1902, vol. III, "Des Personnes", § 671, "Recherche de la paternité"; E. Bonnier, Traité théorique et pratique des Preuves, etc., 5th ed. by Larnaude, 1888, § 223).

[2] Massachusetts: 1807, Drawne v. Stimpson, 2 Mass. 441 (under St. 1785, c. 66, Mar. 16, the accusation during travail and the subsequent constancy is a condition precedent to her competency, and the facts must be evidenced by other witnesses); 1809, Com. v. Cole, 5 Mass. 517 (time of travail, determined); 1827, Bacon v. Harrington, 5 Pick. 63 (time of travail, determined); 1829, Maxwell v. Hardy, 8 Pick. 560 (variance of accusation before travail does not disqualify); 1838, M'Managil v. Ross, 20 Pick. 99 (travail-accusation required even for complaints filed after birth of child); 1852, Bailey v. Chesley, 10 Cush. 284 (form of accusation, determined); 1868, Stiles v. Eastman, 99 Mass. 132 (the travail-accusation is a condition precedent to the maintenance of the action, not merely to her competency); 1874, Ray v. Coffin, 123 Mass. 65, semble (the old requirement is abolished, through the repeal of the statute by Gen. St. c. 72, § 8); 1888, Leonard v. Bolton, 148 Mass. 66, 18 N. E. 879 (same); New Hampshire: 1825, Railroad v. J. M., 3 N. H. 135, 140 (the requirement of travail-accusation is not a condition precedent to the right of maintenance but only to the mother being a witness; here proceeding upon the construction of St. Feb. 11, 1791); 1845, Long v. Dow, 17 N. H. 470 (statute applied to admit the mother as witness, time of "travail", defined); 1846, Rodimon v. Reding, 18 N. H. 431, 435 (same; form of declaration, defined); Pennsylvania: see note 4, infra.

[3] Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 102, § 5 (complainant must file a declaration, stating constancy of accusation of similar tenor to that in Conn. and Mass.); 1830, Dennett v. Kneeland, 6 Me. 460 (travail-accusation, held a condition precedent to the mother's competency, under the statute); 1831, Tillson v. Bowley, 8 Me. 163 (accusation held sufficient); 1844, Burgess v. Bosworth, 10 Shepl. 573 (the required constancy dates from the time of first accusation of the defendant, not from the time of first accusation of any one); 1867, Wilson v. Woodside, 57 Me. 489 (voluntary accusation, without questioning, suffices); 1868, Totman v. Forsaith, 55 Me. 360 (form of accusation, determined); 1898, Palmer v. McDonald, 92 Me. 125, 42 Atl. 315 (under Pub. St. 1883, c. 97, § 6, accusation at travail and constancy in the accusation are both essential to the action; but the constancy does not relate to accusations between time of travail and time of charge before magistrate); Connecticut: 1788, Hitchcock v. Grant, 1 Root 107 (plea in bar allowed; applying a statute of 1702); 1796, Warner v. Willey, 2 Root 490; 1804, Davis v. Salisbury, 1 Day 278, 282 (but otherwise in a suit for maintenance by the selectmen, not the woman); 1823, Judson v. Blanchard, 4 Conn. 557, 565; 1825, Chaplin v. Hartshorne, 6 Conn. 41, 44 (same); 1876, Booth v. Hart, 43 Conn. 480, 485 (holding that the original statute required the travail-accusation and the subsequent constancy, merely as a condition precedent to the mother's testifying at the trial by way of exception to the general rule of disqualification for parties, and that therefore the statute of 1848, making all parties competent, removed the necessity of prior accusation as a condition precedent to competency); 1905, Shailer v. Bullock, 78 Conn. 65, 61 Atl. 65 (Booth v. Hart approved).

sistent statements, — in particular, by statements calculated to rebut the suspicion of recent contrivance (ante. § 1129). Partly the theory of the Hearsay exception for spontaneous utterances ('res gestæ') lent its aid (post, § 1747); for the painful circumstances of the occasion (as the judges repeatedly pointed out) gave some guarantee of sincerity. Partly, too, the Hearsay exception for dying declarations furnished a close analogy (post, § 1438), for the apprehension of death was present. These various considerations united to give a just evidential force to such utterances.

(2) Since disqualification by interest has been abolished, and the mother's competency no longer depends on this requirement, the use of such declarations involves solely a question of admissibility for their own sake. The result in the different jurisdictions has been diverse:

(a) In the States in which the requirement originally obtained, the use of the travail-accusation now survives as admissible evidence by express new statute, or by the preservation of former practice, and elsewhere statute has adopted the rule.[4]

[4] Connecticut: Gen. St. 1887, § 1207 (after the woman's complaint on oath, constancy of accusation when "put to her discovery in the time of her travail and also examined on the trial of the cause" is 'prima facie' evidence); Gen. St. 1918, § 6007 (similar statute, omitting the provisos; "if such woman shall continue constant in her accusation, it shall be evidence" of paternity); 1879, Robbins v. Smith, 47 Conn. 182, 189 (even since proof of constancy ceased to be a requirement, it still remained admissible; here also admitting declarations before the child's birth; Carpenter, J., diss. on the last point); 1889, Benton v. Starr, 58 Conn. 285, 20 Atl. 450 (the woman's constant accusations received, including details of time and place); 1896, Harty v. Malloy, 67 id. 339, 36 Atl. 259; 1908, State v. Sebastian, 81 Conn. 1, 69 Atl. 1054 (rule applied in a prosecution for rape under age, to admit the woman's statement made at the time of a miscarriage); 1919, Hellman v. Karp, 93 Conn. 317, 105 Atl. 678 ("all evidence admissible under the former statute is equally now admissible under the present statute"; applying Gen. St. 1918, § 5832);

Hawaii: St. 1913, No. 101, Rev. L. 1915, § 3010 (bastardy; "if upon examination under the provisions of § 3006, and also in the time of her travail, she accuses the same person of being the father of the child, and continues constant in such accusation, her accusation in time of travail shall be admissible in evidence upon the trial to corroborate her testimony");

Maine: 1874, Sidelinger v. Bucklin, 64 Me. 371 (repetition of the accusation, before and after the time of examination, excluded, as governed by the ordinary rule for witnesses); 1891, Mann v. Maxwell, 83 Me. 146, 21 Atl. 844 (accusations during travail, admitted);

Massachusetts: Pub. St. 1882, c. 85, § 16 (if, upon examination in writing under oath at time of making formal accusation, she accuses a certain man, and "being put upon the discovery of the truth respecting such accusation in the time of her travail she accuses the same man . . . and has continued constant in such accusation, the fact of such accusation in time of travail may be put in evidence upon the trial to corroborate her testimony"); Rev. L. 1902, c. 82, § 16 (statute rewritten, without material change of rule); 1862, Eddy v. Gray, 4 All. 435, 438 (statute applied); 1874, Reed v. Haskins, 116 Mass. 198 (by express statute, the mother may testify to her travail-accusation, even since interested parties are made competent); 1874, Ray v. Coffin, 123 Mass. 365 (if there was no travail-accusation, subsequent constancy, or the failure to accuse any other person, is inadmissible); 1887, Tacey v. Noyes, 143 Mass. 449, 9 N. E. 830 (time of travail determined); 1888, Leonard v. Bolton, 148 Mass. 66, 18 N. E. 879 (travail-accusation admissible, even when complaint is not filed till after birth); 1891, Scott v. Donovan, 153 Mass. 378, 26 N. E. 871 (time of travail determined); 1904, Burns v. Donoghue, 185 Mass. 69, 71 N. E. 1060 (statute applied); 1904, Baxter v. Gormley, 186 Mass. 168, 71 N. E. 575 (her testimony on the complaint-hearing suffices); 1917, Akeson v. Doidge, 225 Mass. 574, 114 N. E. 726 (under the proviso "continues constant in such accusations", a single statement accusing the same defendant, made one month prior to the examination by the magistrate, and four months prior to travail, is not admissible; this is an over-technical decision); Gen. L. 1920, c. 273, § 12 (the above statute now omitted);

Pennsylvania: St. 1860 (going back to St. 1705), Mar. 31, § 37, Dig. 1920, § 7865, Crimes (woman having a bastard child is guilty of

(b) In a few other States similar statutes have introduced a sanction, based directly on the theory of dying declarations.[5]

(c) Rarely, a Court is found recognizing on common-law principles the traditional admission of travail-accusations. There is no reason why this should not be the general rule.[6]

(d) Commonly, in the jurisdictions having no statutes, admissibility is not conceded.[7]

§ 1142. Owner's Complaint after Robbery or Larceny. (a) Statements made by the owner or possessor of goods after an alleged robbery or larceny of them may be affected by several principles:

(1) The failure of the person to make complaint would be conduct indicating a non-belief in the genuine occurrence of the injury charged, and would seem to be clearly admissible against him (under the principle of § 284, ante). Accordingly, to repel in advance this inference, it would be proper to show for the prosecution, as in a charge of rape (ante, § 1135), that the person was not silent but did in fact complain with reasonable promptness.[1] Upon this principle, however, as in the case of rape (ante, § 1136), only the fact of the fornication as also the man, and "she persisting in the said charge, in the time of her extremity of labor or afterwards, in open court, upon the trial of such person so charged, the same shall be given in evidence, in order to convict such person of fornication").

In some jurisdictions of Canada, the action for support of a bastard is not maintainable unless the mother while pregnant or within six months after birth made affidavit charging the now defendant as father; but this affidavit is expressly declared not to be "evidence of the fact of the defendant being the father of the child": Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 154, §§ 314; Br. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 107, § 62; Sask. R. S. 1920, c. 156, §§ 15, 16.

[5] Del. Rev. St. 1921, c. 185, § 5, inserting a new § 3085, par. 25, in Rev. Code 1915 (if the mother be dead at time of trial of bastardy charge, "her declaration made in time of travail and persevered in as her dying declaration shall be evidence"); Miss. Code 1906, § 276, Hem. 225 ("declarations in her travail, proved to be her dying declarations", of deceased mother in bastardy proceedings, admissible).

So also the Uniform Illegitimacy Act, § 26 (National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, Proceedings, 1921, 1922; "In all cases where the mother is dead at the time of the trial, her declaration made in time of travail, and persevered in as a dying declaration, may be read in evidence"; so also if she "cannot be found at the time of the trial").

[6] 1905, Johnson v. Walker, 86 Miss. 757, 39 So. 49 (declarations of paternity made during travail are admissible to corroborate the mother's testimony apart from the statute cited supra, n. 5, and even though the mother is alive); 1919, King v. State, 121 Miss. 230, 83 So. 164 (seduction; woman's statement in travail as to child's paternity, not admissible, paternity not being in issue); 1887, Easley v. Com., — Pa. —, 11 Atl. 220 (declarations "in that extremity of labor", believing herself to be in peril of death, admitted).

[7] Ala. 1909, Palmer v. State, 165 Ala. 329, 51 So. 358 (excluded; no authority cited); Ia. 1858, State v. Hussey, 7 Ia. 409 (declarations of the mother "while in extremo travail", held not admissible); 1904, State v. Lowell, 123 Ia. 427, 99 N. W. 125 (since a complaint would be inadmissible, the failure to complain is equally so); Mich. 1905, People v. Stison, 140 Mich. 216, 103 N. W. 542 (incest; dying declarations of paternity, made at childbirth, excluded); Minn. 1898, State v. Spencer, 73 Minn. 101, 75 N. W. 893; Mont. 1894, State v. Tipton, 15 Mont. 74, 38 Pac. 222 (mother's declarations of paternity in travail, excluded); Nebr. 1895, Stoppert v. Nierle, 45 Nebr. 105, 63 N. W. 382 (excluded at common law; here the statute admits the examination only, but by either party); Tex. 1899, Poyner v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 640, 51 S. W. 377 (incest; the woman's accusation of the defendant, just after a child's birth, as the father, held inadmissible, except to explain away other inconsistent statements); Wis. 1865, Richmond v. State, 19 Wis. 307, 309.

Distinguish the use of the mother's examination before the magistrate (post, § 1417).

§ 1142. [1] Or, if in fact no complaint was made, the reason for silence may be shown: 1846, R. v. Gandfield, 2 Cox. Cr. 43 (to explain why a witness had not told of a burglary, her husband's directions to her not to tell of it because he was afraid of revengeful injuries were received).

complaint, and not the details of the statement, would be admissible. Such seems to be the English practice.[2]

(2) But on the theory of rehabilitating a witness, by showing his prior consistent statements, the details of the statement would become admissible; the ordinary conditions, however, would on this theory be (ante, §§ 1124–1131) that the injured person became a witness and that he was impeached as having recently fabricated the story. It is in this theory that some Courts act with reference to rape-complaints (ante, 1138); but it does not appear to be definitely applied by any Court for the present sort of evidence.[3]

(3) On the theory (post, § 1749) of the Exception to the Hearsay Rule for Spontaneous Exclamations (or 'res gestæ' statements) it would seem that, after some evidence of the robbery or larceny had been offered, the details of complaints or outcries made shortly after the robbery (or, if a larceny, shortly after the discovery of it) should be receivable. This is the attitude of some Courts towards rape-complaints (post, § 1761); and a number of Courts seem also to apply it to the present class of evidence. Such rulings might have founded themselves upon the ancient doctrine of hue-and-cry (post, § 1760), but no connection between the two seems to be assumed in the opinions; they proceed mainly upon a ruling in the Supreme Court of Michigan. The Courts admitting such statements seem not to go definitely upon either this or the preceding theory.[4]

(4) Some Courts, not accepting either of the two preceding theories as valid, reject altogether the details of such complaints.[5]

(b) Where the defendant is a bailee charged with the loss of goods, and he pleads robbery as an excuse, it would seem that he is in the same position evidentially as the owner or possessor in a prosecution for robbery. The fact of

[2] 1834, R. v. Wink, 6 C. & P. 397 (the prosecutor was allowed to state that he made complaint to a constable the next morning early, but not to state what person he named as the robber). But see R. v. Lundy, 6 Cox Cr. 477 (1854). See also an article by W. C. Maude, in 71 Justice of the Peace 411 (1907).

[3] See the cases in the next note.

[4] Illinois: 1896, Goon Bow v. People, 160 Ill. 438, 43 N. E. 593 (statements made in pursuit of the robber, admitted); Iowa: 1887, State v. Driscoll, 72 Ia. 583, 585, 34 N. W. 428 (outcry and declarations "in the effort to arrest the robbers", admitted; Rothrock, J., diss.); Michigan: 1874, People v. Morrigan, 29 Mich. 5 (the complainant, in a trial for larceny, was allowed to state that he had before described to a detective one of the stolen notes found on the defendant; Campbell, J.: "The conduct of a party complaining of a crime is often of considerable importance in determining his honesty", and is to be considered as 'res gestæ' rather than as hearsay); 1874, Lambert v. People, 29 Mich. 71 (similar); 1882, Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 416, 11 N. W. 221 (complaints of robbery, made immediately, were admitted as a part of the whole affair); 1882, People v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 479, 12 N. W. 662 (similar declarations admitted as "illustrative"); 1893, People v. Hicks, 98 Mich. 86, 89, 56 N. W. 1102 (restricting the rule of Lambert's case narrowly); Oklahoma: 1913, Robinson v. State, 8 Okl. Cr. 667, 130 Pac. 121 (complaint of owner received); Washington: 1901, State v. Smith, 26 Wash. 354, 67 Pac. 70 (complaint of the robber person, "almost immediately after the time of the alleged offence", admitted).

[5] 1892, Bolling v. State, 98 Ala. 80, 82, 12 So. 782 (larceny); 1867, People v. McCrea, 32 Cal. 98; 1895, Brooks v. State, 96 Ga. 353, 23 S. E. 413 (the claim made by the owner of goods stolen, when certain goods were shown him, excluded); 1893, Shoecraft v. State, 137 Ind. 433, 36 N. E. 1113 (excluded; to be treated apparently only on the ordinary principle of § 1749, post); 1890, Jones v. Com., 86 Va. 743, 10 S. E. 1004.

his speedy complaint should therefore be received (under (1) supra), as also the details of it (under (2) or (3) supra).[6]

§ 1143. Statements by Possessor of Stolen Goods. When, on a charge of larceny or robbery, the defendant's being found in posses ion of the stolen goods is relied upon in evidence against him, it would seem that his prior assertions, explaining his source of acquisition, should be admitted upon the principle (ante, § 1129) which admits consistent statements indicating that his explanation on the trial was not of recent contrivance. This presupposes, in strictness, that he has himself become a witness, and is thus open to rehabilitation in this manner. But since at common law the accused could not be a witness for himself, this application of the principle seems not to have been explicitly recognized. Its only limitation would be that the statements should have been made before the motive for deliberate contrivance could have arisen; and this would fairly represent the rule laid down in most of the cases. But, though such statements are by most Courts received, their admission is placed on a theory apparently that of the Verbal Act doctrine; and accordingly the precedents are examined under that head (post, § 1781).

§ 1144. Accused's Consistent Exculpatory Statements. It would seem that, in a liberal view of the principle of § 1129, ante, the statements of an accused person, made before or upon accusation made (i.e. before motive for deliberate contrivance could have operated), should be receivable, whether or not he becomes a witness. Probatively, an accused person's protestations of innocence, made in such circumstances, seem to have, for any one inquiring without prepossessions as to the rules of Evidence, a value similar to the class of statements dealt with in § 1129. Moreover, they serve to repel (as in the cases of the preceding sections) the inference from silence (ante, § 284). Most Courts dismiss them as ordinary hearsay assertions;[1] this result seems

[6] Pa. 1826, Tompkins v. Saltmarsh, 14 S. & R. 275, 279 (action against a bailee for careless losing; plea, robbery: "evidence ought to have been received of the hue and cry immediately after the discovery, his assiduous and indefatigable pursuit and strict search, both at the inn and the steamboat. If he had made no complaint or no inquiry, remained with his arms folded and his mouth shut, . . . the jury would have drawn the most unfavorable conclusions from it. . . . All this, however, is to be understood of acts immediately preceding and directly following, concurrent acts and declarations, not acts and declarations not known or commenced until after a lapse of time and suspicion afloat"); Miss. 1852, Lampley v. Scott, 24 Miss. 528, 534 (assumpsit for money delivered to defendant to be carried for plaintiff; defendant pleaded that he had been robbed; his declarations while in the swamp, where the alleged robbery occurred, to passers-by, his appeals for assistance, and his letter written to plaintiff immediately afterward, were admitted, following Tompkins v. Saltmarsh).

Contra: 1867, Tucker v. Hook, 2 Rush Ky. 85 (action for money collected; plea, robbery; defendant's declarations and conduct a few hours afterwards, excluded; no precedent cited).

§ 1144. [1] 1873, Ray v. State, 50 Ala. 104, 107 (defendant's denials on another occasion, excluded); 1891, U. S. v. Cross, 20 D. C. 365, 376 (denials, when arrested for murder, excluded); 1920, Durst v. State, — Ind. —, 128 N. E. 920 (illegal sale of liquor; defendant's statements shortly after a police raid, excluded); 1878, Turner v. Com., 86 Pa. 54, 71 (murder; declarations of innocence, excluded); 1897, State v. Carrington, 15 Utah 480, 50 Pac. 526 (made after knowing of the charge). Compare the cases cited ante, § 1133.

But the following case is sound: 1897, People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 652, 49 Pac. 1049 (declarations under hypnotic influence after arrest, excluded).

harsh and needless. But a few Courts indicate a willingness to accept them.[2] An accused's statements may of course be admissible under other principles, — for example, as exculpatory parts of a confession (post, § 2115), as statements of a mental condition (post, § 1732), or as spontaneous exclamations (post, § 1749); his conduct indicating consciousness of innocence (ante, § 293) may also be admissible.

What has been said elsewhere (post, § 1732, par. 3), as to the illiberal and over-technical judicial treatment of similar questions, may be urged again here.

So also the following: 1871, State v. Vandergraff, 23 La. An. 96 (R. S. § 1010, authorizing the accused's examination by a magistrate to be "evidence", does not admit it for the defendant); 1879, State v. Toby, 31 La. An. 756 (same; DeBlanc, J., diss.); 1879, State v. Dufour, 31 La. An. 804 (same).

[2] 1870, Pearson, C. J., in State v. Worthington, 64 N. C. 594, 595 ("[Evidence was offered] of what was said by the defendant when he showed the cotton to Wilson, who claimed it as his cotton and charged that it had been stolen out of his gin the night before. . . . When a man who is at liberty to speak is charged with a crime and is silent, his silence is a circumstance tending to show guilt. It follows that if he denies the charge, or says anything in explanation, these declarations may be given in evidence in his favor, to pass before the jury for what they are worth"); 1894, Boston v. State, 94 Ga. 590, 21 S. E. 603 (statements made within half an hour, when voluntarily surrendering himself, admitted).

TITLE III: AUTOPTIC PROFERENCE (REAL EVIDENCE)

CHAPTER XXXVII.

1. General Principle

2. Independent Principles incidentally affecting Autoptic Proference

3. Limitations germane to the Process itself of Autoptic Proference

1. General Principle

§ 1150. Definition of the Process. The three modes by which a tribunal may properly acquire knowledge for making its decisions have been already defined and distinguished (ante, § 24). They are Circumstantial Evidence, Testimonial Evidence, and "Real" Evidence. In arriving now at the Principles regulating the use of the third mode, it is necessary to recall briefly the nature of this mode as distinguished from the other two.

If, for example, it is desired to ascertain whether the accused has lost his right hand and wears an iron hook in place of it, one source of belief on the subject would be the testimony of a witness who had seen the arm; in believing this testimonial evidence, there is an inference from the human assertion to the fact asserted. A second source of belief would be the mark left on some substance grasped or carried by the accused; in believing this circumstantial evidence, there is an inference from the circumstance to the thing producing it. A third source of belief remains, namely, the inspection by the tribunal of the accused's arm. This source differs from the other two in omitting any step of conscious inference or reasoning, and in proceeding by direct self-perception, or autopsy.

It is unnecessary, for present purposes, to ask whether this is not, after all, a third source of inference, i.e. an inference from the impressions or perceptions of the tribunal to the objective existence of the thing perceived. The law does not need and does not attempt to consider theories of metaphysics as to the subjectivity of knowledge or the mediateness of perception. It assumes the objectivity of external nature; and, for the purposes of judicial investigation, a thing perceived by the tribunal as existing does exist. There are indeed genuine cases of inference by the tribunal from things perceived to other things unperceived -- as, for example, from a person's size, complexion, and features, to his age; these cases of a real use of inference can be later more fully distinguished (post, § 1154). But we are here concerned with nothing more than matters directly perceived — for example, that a person is of small height or is of dark complexion; as to such matters, the perception by the tribunal that the person is small or large, or that he has a dark or a light complexion, is a mode of acquiring belief which is independent of inference from either testimonial or circumstantial evidence. It is the tribunal's self-perception, or autopsy, of the thing itself.

From the point of view of the litigant party furnishing this source of belief, it may be termed Autoptic Proference.[1]

§ 1150. [1] The word "autoptic" has a precedent in the language of C. J. Robertson, quoted in the next section. The word "proference" is coined, in analogy to "reference", "inference", "conference", "deference", from the Latin 'proferre', whose form 'profert' is intimately associated, in history and in principle, with the process of autoptic proference.

The term "real evidence" has sometimes been applied to this source of belief; but not happily; first, because "real" is an ambiguous term, and not sufficiently suggestive for the purpose; secondly, because the process is not the employment of "evidence" at all, in the strict sense; and, thirdly, because the inventor of the term (Bentham, Judicial Evidence, III. 26 ff.) used the phrase in a sense different from that above and different from that commonly now attached to it; he meant by it any fact about a material or corporal object, e.g. a book or a human foot, whether produced in court or not; it is only by later writers that the production in court is made the essential feature. As to the novelty of the term "autoptic proference", compare the "self-evidence" of Gilbert, C. B., and the "autopsy" of Robertson, C. J., quoted post.

In Morse v. State, 10 Ga. App. 61, 72 S. E. 534 (1911), the trial judge had charged the jury that "evidence may be autoptic proference." The Appellate Court per Powell, J. commented as follows: "Error is assigned as to this charge on two grounds: (1) that the statement is abstractly incorrect; and (2) that it is misleading. Considering these points in reverse order, we may say (to borrow a Hibernicism from the private vocabulary of an ex-Justice of the Supreme Court of this State) that the language excepted to is neither leading nor misleading. As to the other objection — that the language is abstractly incorrect — if incorrectness from a legal standpoint is intended, the objection may be disposed of by citing W. on Evidence, § 1150 et seq. If philological incorrectness is referred to, the objection is more tenable; for, while 'autoptic' is a good word, with a pride of ancestry, though perhaps without hope of posterity, the word 'proference' is a glossological illegitimate, a neological love-child, of which a great law writer confesses himself to be the father (see W. on Evidence, § 1150, note 1). Despite all this, we cannot brand the statement as reversible error. This Court is rather liberal in allowing the judges on the trial bench the privilege of big words."

In Enyart v. People, 70 Colo. 362, 201 Pac. 564 (1921), Denison, J., said "Such evidence is called real or autoptic evidence."

The nature of this source of belief, as distinguished from that of inference from evidence, has more than once been noted in judicial utterances:[2]

Ante 1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 2: "All certainty is a clear and distinct perception; and all clear and distinct perceptions depend upon a man's own proper senses; . . . and when perceptions are thus distinguished on the first view, it is called Self-evidence, or intuitive knowledge. . . . Now most of the business of civil life subsists on the actions of men, that are transient things, and therefore oftentimes are not capable of strict demonstration (which, as I said, is founded on the view of our senses), and therefore the rights of men must be determined by probability. Now as all demonstration is founded on the view of a man's own proper senses, by a gradation of clear and distinct perceptions, so all probability is founded upon obscure and indistinct views, or upon report from the sight of others; . . . and this is the original of trials, and all manner of evidence."

1888, GARRISON, J., in Gaunt v. State, 50 N. J. L. 490, 495, 14 Atl. 600: "Inspection is like [an] Admission, in that, while not testimony, it is an instrument for dispensing with testimony."

1921, DAVIS, J., in Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Berg, 30 C. L. A. 274 Fed. 534 (injury to a seaman at a winch): "The questions whether or not the eyebolt was defective, and, if it was, whether or not that defect caused the hook to break, which resulted in the plaintiff's injury, as well as the question of contributory negligence of the plaintiff, were submitted to the jury. The defendant contends that there was no testimony from which the jury could draw the conclusion that the condition of the eyebolt could have caused the hook to break. . . . This contention does not take into consideration the 'real evidence' in the case. The jury had before it the hook, and the testimony as to how it was fastened in the eyebolt, and could readily draw its own conclusion. In addition to the usual methods of establishing facts by direct or positive evidence and circumstantial evidence, there is that of 'self-perception or self-observation.' We have three classes of evidence: (1) Direct or testimonial evidence; (2) indirect or circumstantial evidence; (3) autoptic proference, or real evidence. . . . The jury had the hook and eyebolt before it, and, being composed of men of common sense and experience, could determine for itself whether or not it was broken because it could not fully and properly enter the eye. It was thus not wholly dependent upon what was said about the hook and eyebolt."

It follows, on the one hand, that Autoptic Proference, for the tribunal's self-inspection, is to be distinguished from the use of testimonial and circumstantial evidence as the basis of an inference. Autoptic proference calls for no inference from the thing perceived to some other thing; and in this sense, but in this sense only, Autoptic Proference is "not evidence", i.e. not evidence in so far as evidence implies a process of inference. On the other hand, it is clear that Autoptic Proference is one of the three only sources of belief, and that it may be employed in litigation in order to convince the tribunal of desired facts. It is thus Evidence, in the sense that Evidence includes all modes, other than argument, by which a party may lay before the tribunal that which will produce persuasion. It is something more than and different from Testimonial or Circumstantial Evidence, and it is to be included among the kinds of Evidence in the broader sense of that term. The due appreciation of this is of considerable practical consequence in solving one of the problems connected with a jury's view (post, § 1168).

[2] Compare also the traditional phrase about a record "tried by inspection", i.e. its contents determined by direct perception; and also the language in the quotations in the next section. The following passage, though dealing with a judge's peculiar providence, rests upon the same thought: 1768, Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 331: "Trial by inspection, or examination, is when for the greater expedition of a cause, in some point or issue being either the principal question or arising collaterally out of it, but being evidently the object of senses, the judges of the Court, upon the testimony of their own sense, shall decide the point in dispute; . . . and therefore when the fact, from its nature, must be evident to the Court either from ocular demonstration or other irrefragable proof, there the law departs from its usual resort, the verdict of twelve men, and relies on the judgment of the Court alone."

§ 1151. General Principle: Autoptic Proference always Proper, unless Specific Reasons of Policy apply. It is obvious that, from the point of view of logic or probative value, none of the limitations have here to be examined which always affect the use of testimonial and circumstantial evidence. If we offer to prove that a man was of negro complexion by the circumstance that his grandchild is of negro complexion, it may be a question whether this fact is of enough probative value to be admissible. Or, if we offer to prove it by the assertion of a witness on the stand, the witness must first appear to be so qualified that his assertion is worth receiving. But when we offer to produce in Court the man himself, no inference is necessary, and the restrictions and preliminary inquiries that are due to the use of circumstantial or testimonial inferences are entirely dispensed with. There may be objections based on Materiality, or on Auxiliary Probative Policy (post, §§ 1157–1168), but there can be none based on Relevancy or probative value. There is always a question as to the relevancy of a circumstance, or the qualifications of a witness; there can never be a question as to the relevancy of the thing itself, autoptically produced. Add to this that, since either sort of evidence, testimonial or circumstantial, is one step removed from the thing itself to be proved, the production of the thing itself would seem to be the most natural and efficient process of proof. If the question is whether a shoe is fastened by laces or by buttons, the testimony of one who has seen the shoe or the circumstance that a button has fallen from the shoe, can at least be no more satisfactory than the inspection of the shoe in Court.

Accordingly, it might be asserted, 'a priori', that where the existence or the external quality or condition of a material object is in issue or is relevant to the issue, the inspection of the thing itself, produced before the tribunal, is always proper, provided no specific reason of policy or privilege bears decidedly to the contrary. Such ought to be, and such apparently is, the principle accepted by the Courts:

1811, COALTER, J., in Hook v. Pagee, 2 Munf. 379, 384 (allowing the inspection of an alleged slave): "There can be no objection to the other finding, to wit, 'that the plaintiff Nanny is a white woman.' The jury find this fact upon their own knowledge, — in other words, by inspection. Was this improper? . . . If the plaintiff Nanny had not been before the jury, they must have found their verdict upon the testimony of others, which would have amounted only to a probability. But here they have the highest evidence, the evidence of their own senses. . . . The jury believe their own senses, in preference to the opinions of the witnesses."

1835, ROBERTSON, C. J., in Gentry v. McMinnis, 3 Dana Ky. 382, 386 (the jury had been allowed to inspect the defendant, to see if she was a white woman): "The counsel denies that personal inspection by the jurors on the trial is proper or allowable evidence. . . . To a rational man of perfect organization the best and highest proof of which any fact is susceptible is the evidence of his own senses. This is the ultimate test of truth, and is therefore the first principle in the philosophy of evidence. . . . Hence, autopsy, or the evidence of one's own senses, furnishes the strongest probability and indeed the only perfect and indubitable certainty of the existence of any sensible fact. . . . [Jurors,] when they decide altogether on the testimony of others, do so only because the fact to be tried is unsusceptible of any better proof. Their own personal knowledge of the fact would always be much more satisfactory to themselves, and afford much more certainty of truth and justice. . . . Hence the policy of having a jury of the vicinage; and hence, too, jurors have not only been permitted but required to decide on autoptical examination wherever it was practical and convenient."

1876, BECK, J., in Stockwell v. R. Co., 43 Ia. 474 (admitting evidence of a trial in the jury's presence of the practicability of a train running a certain distance without steam): "The question involved is a physical fact. Its solution by the experiment would leave no chance for error in judgment or opinion. Why not employ the experiment to reach the truth, — the end and aim of all trials at law? . . . Suppose experts should differ as to the effect of the union of two chemical bodies; what objection could exist to an experiment before the jury to determine the true result? Suppose a question arose in a case as to the weight of a gold coin, the witnesses of the parties giving conflicting evidence on the subject; why not weigh it in the presence of the jury? Or suppose an alteration in a deed can only be determined by the use of artificial assistance, to the eye? Why should not jurors be permitted to use such aids to enable them to decide the case in accordance with the very truth? But the questions here presented we do not determine; we suggest these thoughts to show that there are arguments based upon the high considerations of justice and truth in support of the alleged experiment", if fairly conducted.

1877, RODMAN, J., in Warlick v. White, 76 N. C. 175, 179: "On general principles it would seem that, when the question is whether a certain object is black or white, the best evidence of the color would be the exhibition of the object to the jury. . . . Why should a jury be confined to hearing what other men think they have seen, and not be allowed to see for themselves?

"'Aut agitur res in scenis, aut acta refertur.
Segnius irritant animos demissa per aurem,
Quam quæ sunt oculis subjecta fidelibus, et quæ
Ipse sibi tradit spectator' (Horatius ad Pisones)."[1]

§ 1152. Sundry Instances of Production and Inspection in Court. This source of persuasion has been resorted to in a great variety of instances. Among the earliest examples of its recognition are the view of realty;[1] the proceeding 'de ventre inspiciendo' in cases of a widow professing to be with child entitled to inherit and of a convicted woman asking respite from execution on account of pregnancy;[2] the coroner's inquest over a deceased person; the inspection of a maimed person on a trial for mayhem;[3] the inspection of one pleading non-age or infancy;[4] and the Chancellor's examination of one protesting against being kept under restraint as an idiot or lunatic.[4] Proof is often made by the production of a person whose color is

§ 1151. [1] Quoted with approval in Moorhead v. Arnold, 73 Kan. 132, 84 Pac. 742 (1906). The poem is better known as 'De Arte Poetica.'

§ 1152. [1] See the authorities post, § 1162.

[2] The question in this case is rather one of a compulsory examination (post, § 1158).

[3] 1592, Abbot of Strata Mercella's Case 9 Co. Rep. 31 a; 1642, Austin v. Hilliers, Hardres 408; 1768, Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 332.

[4] See the authorities post, § 1154.

in issue;[5] of a person alleged to be intoxicated,[5] or incompetent,[6] or to be identical with another person,[5] or to resemble another person.[5] Tools, weapons, and other objects connected with a crime may be proved by production,[7] as well as the clothing or mutilated members of the deceased,[7] or the injured members of a plaintiff suing for compensation.[8] The nature of goods may be made to appear by the inspection of a sample,[9] or the operation of a force whose qualities are in issue by material instances of the effect of that operation.[10] In short, it does not appear that there is, in the nature of the process, any distinction to be taken as regards the kind of fact presented for inspection. Anything cognizable by the senses of the tribunal may thus be offered.

Nor is any distinction to be taken as regards the mode of presentation by the party. An object may be merely set forth for inspection, or some experimental process may be conducted in the tribunal's presence;[11] whether the mode involves a showing or a doing, either is in itself objectionable.

Nor is any distinction to be taken as to the mode of inspection by the tribunal. It may merely employ its senses directly; or it may use some suitable mechanical aid, such as a microscope.[12] It may merely look on, or it may take an active share in the process of experimentation;[13] or it may direct an inspection and report by experts.[14]

Nor is there any distinction as to the place of inspection; the thing may be brought into the court, or the tribunal may go to the place where the thing is.[15]

The discriminations that may serve to forbid this process of inspection by the tribunal are of two sorts: (1) Independent principles, connected with other subjects, may apply equally to the process of Autoptic Proference; (2) Limitations germane to the process itself may forbid its use. These may now be considered in order.

2. Independent Principles incidentally affecting Autoptic Proference

§ 1154. Irrelevant Facts are not to be proved (Color, Resemblance, Appearance, etc., to show Race, Paternity, Age, etc.; Changed Conditions of

[5] Post, § 1154.
[6] Post, § 1160.
[7] Post, § 1157.
[8] Post, § 1158.
[9] Ante, § 439; post, § 1159.
[10] Ante, §§ 445, 451.
[11] Post, §§ 1154, 1160, 1163; ante, § 445.
[12] Conn. 1906, State v. Wallace, 78 Conn. 677, 63 Atl. 448 (photograph of a building, examined with a magnifying glass); Ind. 1878, Short v. State, 63 Ind. 376, 380 (to discover a ring's erased inscription, the jury were allowed to examine it through a "magnifying or jeweller's eye-glass"; "if the eye-glass in question augmented the natural power of the eye to discover the inscription, it did that which in the light of science it was made for; and if it did not", no harm was done); Mass. 1906, Cotton v. Boston El. R. Co., 191 Mass. 103, 77 N. E. 698 (damage by eminent domain; the trial Court's refusal to allow the jury to look through a microscope at particles of steel collected in the building and emanating from the defendant road, held to be within his discretion); Mich. 1898, Morse v. Blanchard, 117 Mich. 37, 75 N. W. 93 (judge or jury may examine a writing with microscope to detect alteration); N. Y. 1897, People v. Constantino, 153 N. Y. 24, 47 N. E. 37 (the judge allowed to illustrate the length of a minute by taking his watch and marking the period for the jury).

Compare the cases cited ante, §§ 789, 790 (testimony based on the use of scientific instruments).

[13] See the preceding instance, and post, § 1160.
[14] Post, §§ 1862, 1863, 2484.
[15] Post, §§ 1161, 1162.

Premises, etc.). If, by some principle of Relevancy, a fact offered to be shown by Autoptic Proference is not admissible, because irrelevant, it cannot be shown, either in this or in any other way. For example, whether a person's color is black or white is best ascertained by inspecting the person; but if his color when ascertained would be irrelevant for the purpose concerned, an inspection to learn his color would obviously be unnecessary, and therefore improper. Thus, his color might be relevant to show his race-ancestry, but not to show his state of health; in the former case inspection would be allowed, in the latter case not, the ruling in each instance depending on the admissibility of the fact shown by inspection. In a large number of instances this is the real question.

(1) A person's color has always been regarded as some evidence of race-ancestry;[1] accordingly, the production of a person to ascertain his color as relevant for this purpose is proper;[2] so, also, to ascertain his foot-formation as evidence of race.[3]

(2) Resemblance of features, as evidence of paternity, in cases of bastardy, inheritance, or seduction, has been a matter of some controversy;[4] but, where the fact of resemblance has been regarded by the Court as having probative value, the production of the child for the better apprehension of the resemblance has been treated as proper.[5]

§ 1154. [1] Cases cited ante, § 167.

[2] CANADA: Br. C. St. 1903–4, 3 & 4 Edw. VII, c. 18, Evidence Act Amendment Act, § 3 (the judge, jury, etc., "may infer as a fact the nationality or race of the person in question from the appearance of such person"; the foregoing to be § 53 of Rev. St. 1897, c. 71); UNITED STATES: Federal: 1904, U. W. v. Hung Chang, 134 Fed. 19, 23, 67 C. C. A. 93 (Chinese descent, evidenced by the person's appearance; "it is a case of 'res ipsa loquitur' "); Ia. 1911, State v. Nathoo, 152 Ia. 665, 133 N. W. 129 (rape; profert of the child, as resembling the Hindoo defendant; not decided); Ky. 1835, Gentry v. McMinnis, 3 Dana Ky. 382, 386 (inspection of an alleged slave to determine her color); 1839, Chancellor v. Milly, 3 Dana 24 (same); Miss. 1876, Garvin v. State, 52 Miss. 207, 209 (exhibition of a defendant to determine his color); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 3513 (the jury may determine negro-blood from appearance, on an issue as to a mixed marriage); N. Car. 1877, Warlick v. White, 76 N. C. 175, 179 (exhibition of a child to determine its parentage by its color); P. I. 1916, Que Quay v. Insular Collector, 33 P. I. 128 (appearance, characteristics, language, dress, manner, and deportment, may be used as evidence of race or nationality); 1916, U. S. v. Kong Fong, 33 P. I. 234 (similar); 1917, Co Puy v. Insular Collector, 37 P. I. 409 (similar); Va. 1806, Hudgins v. Wrights, 1 Hen. & M. 134, 141 (Roane, J.: "In the case of a 'propositus' of unmixed blood, I do not see but that the fact may be as well ascertained by the jury or the judge upon view as by the testimony of witnesses"; otherwise, additional evidence may be needed); 1811, Hook v. Pagee, 2 Munf. 379, 384, 386 (inspection of an alleged slave's complexion, allowed); 1851, Southard's Trial, Va., 2 Amer. St. Tr. 905, 909 (objection being made to certain witnesses as disqualified by negro blood, Caskie, J., ruled, "I have no doubt I might decide upon my own inspection").

[3] 1861, Daniel v. Guy, 23 Ark. 50, 51 (the foot-formation being evidential of race, the plaintiff in a suit for freedom was allowed to exhibit her bare feet to the jury).

[4] Cases cited ante, § 166.

[5] The exhibition was allowed, except as otherwise noted: Federal: 1914, Ex parte Chooey Dee Ying, D. C., N. D. Cal., 214 Fed. 873 (whether a Chinese immigrant was the son of a Chinese native of the U. S.; resemblance of the son and alleged father considered); Alabama: 1875, Paulk v. State, 52 Ala. 427, 429; 1902, Kelly v. State, 133 Ala. 195, 32 So. 56 (bastardy; child about a year old, allowed to be shown); 1913, Watts v. State, 8 Ala. App. 264, 63 So. 18 (seduction; exhibition of child, allowed); California: 1889, Re Jessup, 81 Cal. 408, 418, 21 Pac. 976, 22 Pac. 742; 1904, People v. Tibbs, 143 Cal. 100, 76 Pac. 904 (seduction; child's presence in court held not improper); 1911, People v. Richardson, 161 Cal. 552, 120 Pac. 20; 1912, People v. Burke, 18 Cal. App. 72, 122 Pac. 435; 1916, Valencia v. Milliken, 31 Cal. App. 533, 160 Pac. 1086 (civil action for rape; the child of a year old, exhibited to the jury); Hawaii: 1918, Re Ah Sam, 24 Haw. 591 (bastardy; mother's retaining the child in her arms while testifying, allowed); Indiana: 1862, Risk v. State, 19 Ind. 152 (doubted because of the irrelevancy of resemblance); 1870, Reitz v. State, 33 Ind. 187 (same); Iowa: 1878, State v. Danforth, 48 Ia. 43, 47 (seduction; exhibition of infant, held improper, because of irrelevancy of resemblance); 1880, State v. Smith, 54 Ia. 104, 6 N. W. 153 (child exhibited, to show resemblance); 1900, State v. Harvey, 112 Ia. 416, 84 N. W. 535 (doubted, on authority of Close v. Samm, cited post, § 1168); 1909, State v. Hunt, 144 Ia. 257, 122 N. W. 902 (exhibition of a child two months old, in a seduction trial held improper as evidence by resemblance); 1917, State v. Kurtz, 183 Ia. 480, 165 N. W. 355 (incest; exhibition of the child born to the woman, held not improper on the facts); Kansas: 1915, State ex rel. Rison v. Browning, 96 Kan. 540, 152 Pac. 672 (bastardy; child of 6 mos. allowed to be exhibited, in the trial Court's discretion); Kentucky: 1917, Frierson v. Com., 175 Ky. 684, 194 S. W. 914 (rape under age; not decided); 1921, James v. Com., 190 Ky. 458, 227 S. W. 562 (bastardy; profert of the child to show resemblance; "we do not feel called upon . . . to commit ourselves either one way or the other"); Maine: 1888, Clark v. Bradstreet, 80 Me. 454, 15 Atl. 56 (held improper for reasons of irrelevancy); Maryland: 1876, Jones v. Jones, 45 Md. 144, 151, semble; Massachusetts: 1867, Finnegan v. Dugan, 14 All. 197; 1869, Young v. Makepeace, 103 Mass. 50, 54; 1891, Scott v. Donovan, 153 Mass. 378, 26 N. E. 871 (bastardy; child allowed to be exhibited, with no "distinction according to age"); Mississippi: 1905, Johnson v. Walker, 86 Miss. 757, 39 So. 49 (not decided); Missouri: 1906, State v. Palmberg, 199 Mo. 233, 97 S. W. 566 (rape under age; child exhibited); Nebraska: 1904, Esch v. Graue, 72 Nebr. 719, 101 N. W. 978 (mere presence of the child, held not improper on the facts); New Hampshire: 1859, Gilmanton v. Ham, 38 N. H. 108, 112; 1900, State v. Saidell, 70 N. H. 174, 46 Atl. 1083 (bastardy, defendant being a Jew; child allowed to be inspected); New Jersey: 1888, Gaunt v. State, 50 N. J. L. 490, 495, 14 Atl. 600; North Carolina: 1872, State v. Woodruff, 67 N. C. 89, semble; Ohio: 1892, Crow v. Jordon, 49 Oh. St. 655, 32 N. E. 750; P. I. 1914, Chua Yeng v. Insular Collector, 28 P. I. 591 (minor Chinese and alleged father);

(3) A person's appearance, as evidence of age (for example, of infancy, or of being under the age of consent to intercourse), is usually regarded as relevant;[6] and, if so, the tribunal may properly observe the person brought before it.[7]

The consideration of this resemblance was forbidden in Hanawalt v. State, 64 Wis. 84, 24 N. W. 489, on other grounds (post, § 1168).

Distinguish the following ruling, on the principle of § 1158, post: 1903, Hopkins v. Hopkins, 132 N. C. 25, 43 S. E. 506 (exhibition of defendant's child, in a divorce case, merely to excite sympathy, held improper).

[6] Ante, § 222.

[7] ENGLAND: 1312, Daniel v. Scadbury, Y. B. 5 Edw. II, Trin., No. 3, p. 130 (Bolland's ed., Selden Soc. Pub. vol. XXXIII, 1916; writ of entry; one of the claimants was said to be under age, i.e. 15 years, and it was prayed that the Court view him; apparently this was sanctioned); 1558, Langley v. Mark, Cary 53 (person adjudged "by inspection not above the age of 15 years"); 1586, Wood v. Wageman, Toth. 72 ("view of the body" had by Chancellor, to determine infancy); 1592, Abbot of Strata Mercella's Case, 9 Co. Rep. 31*a* (plea of non-age; the writ was a 'venire facias' "ut per aspectum corporis sui constare poterit præfatis justiciis nostris si prædictus A. sit plenæ ætatis"); St. 1904, 4 Edw. VII, c. 15, § 17 (offences concerning children; where "the child appears to the Court to be under that age" alleged, such child shall "be deemed to be under that age, unless the contrary is proved"). CANADA: P. E. I. St. 1910, c. 15, § 25 (neglected children; child's appearance as under age is sufficient as evidence). UNITED STATES: Colo. 1911, Quinn v. People, 51 Colo. 350, 117 Pac. 996 (but, if there is no other evidence, the jury's attention must be called, by instruction); Ga. 1899, Jones v. State, 106 Ga. 365, 34 S. E. 174 (rape of girl of 15 years; the jury allowed, in determining whether she had capacity to consent, "to take into consideration facts discovered by their own observation of the girl herself" in court); Mass. 1898, Com. v. Hollis, 170 Mass. 433, 49 N. E. 632 (appearance of a girl said to be under 16, allowed); Mo. 1900, State v. Thomson, 155 Mo. 300, 55 S. W. 1013; 1909, Stevenson v. Haynes, 220 Mo. 199, 119 S. W. 346 (defendant's presence before the jury is some evidence as to his being over 16 years of age); N. Y. Laws 1882, c. 340, C. P. A. 1920, § 334, Consol. L. 1909, Penal, § 817 (on a dispute as to a child's age, the child "may be produced and exhibited"); N. Car. 1851, State v. Arnold, 13 Ired. 184, 192 (whether a defendant was under 14; inspection allowed); P. I. 1913, Tan Beko v. Insular Collector, 26 P. I. 254 (minor son of Chinese immigrant); 1917, U. S. Agadas, 36 P. I. 246 (age of accused); 1919, Dy Keng v. Insular Collector, 40 P. I. 118 (immigrant's minor son); Wis. 1888, Hermann v. State, 73 Wis. 248, 250, 41 N. W. 171 (whether a girl's appearance was under 21, inspection allowed).

In Indiana, Texas, and Illinois, the con-

(4) A person's appearance and behavior is relevant as indicating his intoxication,[8] or his lunacy,[9] or even his competency as a workman;[10] and may therefore be learned by the tribunal's direct observation of the person.

(5) Where the identity of one person or thing with another is in issue, the features as observable by the tribunal are relevant.[11]

(6) The present condition of an object offered may not be the same as at the time in issue, nor so nearly the same as to be proper evidence of its former condition;[12] accordingly, autoptic proference is allowable only on the assumption that the condition is the same or sufficiently similar.[13]

(7) Experiments to show the quality or operation of a substance, a machine, etc., are often excluded because of the dissimilarity of circumstances or because of probable confusion of issues;[14] and for this reason the exhibition of such experiments before the tribunal may of course be forbidden.[15] The following classical example illustrates the propriety of experimentation when the fact ascertainable from it is a relevant one:

1800 (?), Lord ELDON, in Twiss' Life, I, 354: "When I was Chief Justice of the Common Pleas (I did like that court!) a cause was brought before me for the recovery of a dog which the defendant had stolen in that ground [lying in the fields beyond his house] and detained from the plaintiff its owner. We had a great deal of evidence, and the dog was brought into court and placed on the table between the judge and witness. It was a very fine dog, very large and very fierce, so much so that I ordered a muzzle to be put on it. Well, we could sideration of appearance as evidence of age has been forbidden on the ground of § 1168, post, where the authorities are collected.

For the possible quibble here, under the Opinion rule, see post, § 1974.

[8] 1794, Walker's Trial, 23 How. St. Tr. 1154 (Mr. Justice Heath: "He has made himself so exceedingly drunk, it is impossible to examine him"); and cases cited ante, § 235.

[9] The authorities are collected post, § 1160, where the subject is considered from another point of view.

[10] 1885, Keith v. N. H. & N. Co., 140 Mass. 175, 180, 3 N. E. 28 (appearance of employee on the stand, allowed to be considered as affecting his competency for his duties).

[11] 1669, R. v. Buckworth, 1 Sid. 377 (perjury in a cause involving the birth of a posthumous child, said to have been falsely procured by the mother from another woman; the delivery of the child "was proved by the circumstances usual in such cases, and also by marks, and the child being in court was stripped and shown"); 1592, Abbot of Strata Mercella's Case, 9 Co. Rep. 30 (a person said to be dead); 3 Bl. Com. 332; 1743, Annesley v. Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1139, 1182; 1873, R. v. Castro (Tichborne Trial), charge of C. J. Cockburn, passim; La. C. Pr. 1900, § 139 (Court may order movable property brought into court to determine its identity). Compare the principles affecting Identification, ante, § 413.

For the identity of animals, see infra, this section, and post, § 1161.

[12] The principles are explained ante, § 437.

[13] 1892, French v. Wilkinson, 93 Mich. 322, 53 N. W. 530 (limb bitten by dog; exhibition three years afterwards, forbidden, the sameness of condition not being shown); 1898, State v. Goddard, 146 Mo. 177, 48 S. W. 82 (door of room of homicide, not changed in condition, admitted); 1878, King v. R. Co., 72 N. Y. 607 (broken hook with cross-cracks, shown, the iron being in the same condition); 1913, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Fouts, 88 Oh. 305, 104 N. E. 544, (negligence of an engineer in disobeying an arm-signal of the conductor, mistaking the go-ahead signal for the back-up signal; the witness' reproduction of the signal before the jury, held improper, the conditions of light and distance not being the same); 1903, Walker v. Ontario, 118 Wis. 564, 95 N. W. 1086 (pieces of a broken bridge, two years after the break, allowed to be shown, after testimony to the sameness of condition); and cases cited post, § 1164 (jury's view).

The following ruling is unsound: 1870, Jacobs v. Davis, 34 Md. 204, 208, 216 (whether rails and shingles had been injured; the rails and shingles not allowed to be shown, because they could not be "received as testimony to prove or disprove the fact of injury done to them"; a singular abuse of language).

[14] Ante, § 445.

[15] See post, § 1160, for an additional reason for exclusion; and cases cited post, § 1163.

come to no decision; when a woman, all in rags, came forward and said, if I would allow her to get into the witness-box, she thought she could say something that would decide the cause. Well, she was sworn just as she was, all in rags, and leant forward towards the animal, and said, 'Come, Billy, come and kiss me!' The savage-looking dog instantly raised itself on its hind legs, put its immense paws around her neck, and saluted her. She had brought it up from a puppy. Those words, 'Come, Billy, come and kiss me', decided the cause." [10]

§ 1155. Privilege, as a ground for Prohibition (Self-Crimination, Plaintiff suing for Corporal Injury). Another independent principle that may prohibit autoptic proference is the principle of privilege, protecting one who is unwilling to furnish evidence. Whether the privilege of an accused person not to criminate himself is violated by compelling the exhibition of his body or its members in court depends wholly on the theory of this privilege.[1] So also the question whether a plaintiff suing for corporal injury may be compelled to exhibit it to the jury or to medical witnesses is peculiarly one of privilege;[2] as also the propriety of granting a writ 'de ventre inspiciendo'[2] or of ordering an inspection in a suit for divorce on the ground of impotency.[2]

§ 1156. Sundry Independent Principles sometimes involved (Handwriting, Hearsay, Photographs, etc.). Certain other independent principles sometimes resulting in the prohibition of autoptic proference, or prescribing conditions for its use. need to be discriminated:

(1) Specimens of handwriting, as evidence of a person's style of writing, are in some jurisdictions not to be submitted to the jury.[1]

(2) Where an object has been obtained by illegal means, it has sometimes been made a question whether it should be allowed to be used in evidence.[2]

(3) The Hearsay rule forbids a jury at a view to hear testimony;[3] moreover, some things said or done in court by way of test or experiment may virtually involve a breach of this rule by calling for unsworn testimony.[4] Whether the accused in a criminal case must be present at a view involves also the scope of the Hearsay rule.[5]

(4) The use of photographs, models, maps, and the like, by a witness, is merely one way of giving testimony, and does not concern the present principle.[6]

(5) Whether the Court may decide by inspection, instead of the jury, is a question of the respective functions of judge and jury.[7]

(6) The rule of Primariness, i.e., that the original of a writing must be presented autoptically to the tribunal, unless it is not available for production, involves a different question;[8] for there the question is whether the original

[10] For the relevancy of animal conduct of this kind, see ante, § 117.

Compare the unreasonable ruling in State v. Landry, 29 Mont. 218, 74 Pac. 418 (1903), cited post, § 1163, n. 6.

§ 1155. [1] Post, § 2265.

[2] Post, § 2220.

§ 1156. [1] Post, § 2001.

[2] Post, § 2183.

[3] Post, § 1802.

[4] 1877, Com. v. Scott, 123 Mass. 222, 224, 234 (cross-examination of one identifying defendant by his voice; Court's refusal to allow defendant to speak to test the witness, held proper, the defendant not being on oath; post, § 1824); 1886, Osborne v. Detroit, 36 Fed. 36 (post, § 1158).

[5] Post, § 1803.

[6] Ante, § 790.

[7] Post, § 2550.

[8] Post, § 1179.

writing must be presented, while here the only question is whether it may be and the answer to the latter question has never been doubted.[9]

(7) A chattel or a document produced may need to be authenticated, i.e. evidenced as to its connection with the authorship or possession of a specific person.[10]

3. Limitations germane to the Process itself of Autoptic Proference

§ 1157. Unfair Prejudice to an Accused Person (Exhibition of Weapons, Clothes, Wounds, etc.). The autoptic proference to the jury of the weapons or tools of a crime, or of the clothing or the mutilated members of the victim of the crime, has often been objected to on grounds of Undue Prejudice (post, § 1863). The nature of this supposed prejudice is illustrated in the following passages:

1806, Picton's Trial, 30 How. St. Tr. 457, 480; the defendant was charged with inflicting torture, as governor of Trinidad, upon Luisa Calderon, by first tying the left foot and right hand together behind, and then suspending the body from the ceiling by a pulley-rope tied to the left wrist, so that the weight of the body rested, through the right foot, on a sharp wooden spike in the floor. Mr. Garrow (to the witness Luisa): "Is that a faithful description of it?" [showing the witness a coloured drawing]. Ans. "Yes, very good indeed." L. C. J. ELLENBOROUGH: "I do not approve of exhibiting drawings of this nature before a jury; and I shall not permit it till the counsel for the defendant has seen it. I have no objection to your showing a description to the jury, but the colouring may produce an improper effect. [The opposing counsel consented to its use.] The jury will consider it merely as a description of the situation in which she was placed; whether she was justifiably so placed is the question between you." Mr. Garrow: "I have one to which there can be no objection; it is a mere pen-and-ink sketch." L. C. J. ELLENBOROUGH: "Gentlemen, you will consider that as a description of the position, which we can easily understand from the words of the witness. Nobody wishes that any improper impression should be made by that drawing; it is only to show the nature of the process." When the counsel for the defence afterwards complained of the prejudice thus created, Lord ELLENBOROUGH said: "That you must attribute to me, or perhaps to yourself; for I distinctly asked you whether you would consent to their exhibition, and on your concurring, I cautioned the jury not to suffer their minds to be inflamed, but simply to look at the representation of the position of the prosecutrix in order to understand the testimony of the witness."

1820, Ings' Trial, 33 How. St. Tr. 1051, 1088; the "Cato-street conspiracy"; high treason; the defendant claimed that he was ignorantly drawn into the movement and did not know of the specific murderous designs of the leaders. A constable produced the conspirators' weapons. "Are there now placed upon the table the things which were taken in Cato-street?" "Yes."— "You gave us an enumeration yesterday of thirty-eight ball-cartridges, firelock and bayonet, one powder-flask, three pistols, and one sword, with six bayonet spikes, and cloth belt, one blunderbuss, pistol, fourteen bayonet spikes, and three pointed files, one bayonet, one bayonet spike, and one sword scabbard, one carbine and bayonet, two swords, one bullet, ten hand-grenades; [two fire-balls, nine hundred and sixty-five ball cartridges, eleven bags of gunpowder of a pound each;] I do not see them?" "Here they are," producing a bag. — "We must have them on the table." They were emptied out, and the jury inspected the various articles, the hand-grenades being broken open, and other weapons displayed. No objection was made to this proceeding, which was taken as a matter of course; but the counsel for the defence, Mr. Adolphus, thus referred to it in his address: "You have had that which produces always a sort of mechanical effect. I do not mean to pay an ill compliment to your understandings; but you have had a display of visible objects, spikes and swords, guns and blunderbusses, have been put before you, to the end that this feeling may be excited in every man's mind, 'How should I like to have this sort of thing put to my breast! How should I feel if this were applied to my chimney! and that to my stair-case!', and so on; that is, that the individual feeling of each man may make him separate himself from society, — may make him, through the medium of his own personal hatred of violence or apprehension of danger, think that this contemptible exhibition of imperfect armoury could operate on a town filled by a million of loyal inhabitants or could give the means of overwhelming the empire. When touched by reason, they shrink to nothing, and will never produce a verdict contrary to the evidence of facts. It is like displaying the bloody robe of a man who has been stabbed or murdered; it is like the trick practised at every sessions, where we see a witness pull out some cloak or handkerchief dipped in blood of the person, to produce conviction through the medium of commiseration. They do not trust to description, but rely upon display. That is the effect of the production of these arms."

[9] Except for the considerations referred to in notes 1 and 2, supra.

[10] Post, § 2129.

1856, Mr. David Paul Brown, in "The Forum", II, 448 (this famous Philadelphia advocate is recounting the story of a 'cause célèbre' of 1834, the homicide, by a disappointed lover, of the woman he loved): "During the course of the trial there was an occurrence which is entitled to notice. When I first called upon the prisoner, after he had furnished me with some of the prominent details, I asked him how the deceased was dressed at the time of the blow. He said, 'in black.' I observed, 'that was better than if the dress had been white.' Upon which the prisoner turned hastily round, and asked what difference that could make. The reply was, 'No difference in regard to your offence, but a considerable difference in respect to the effect produced upon the jury by the exhibition of the garments, which, no doubt, will be resorted to.' And so upon the trial it turned out. The black dress was presented to the jury, — the eleven punctures through the bosom pointed out; but no stain was observable, no excitement was produced. At last, however, they went further, and produced some of the white undergarments — corsets, etc., all besmeared with human blood. Upon this exhibition there was not a dry eye in the courthouse. And the current of opinion continued to run against the defendant from that moment until the close of the case, and finally bore him into eternity."

1882, ANDREWS, C. J., in Walsh v. People, 88 N. Y. 467: "The exhibition of the photograph of a young girl alleged to have been cruelly murdered was, as is claimed, calculated to excite the pity of the jurors for the unfortunate victim of the homicide, and correspondingly to excite their prejudice, against the accused. . . . [After conceding that the condition of the corpse was irrelevant to the disputes of fact in the case,] The extent to which counsel may go, in opening a case to a jury, cannot in the nature of things be regulated by precise rule. The Court may doubtless interfere in the interest of justice to restrain undue license on the part of counsel in addressing the jury. . . . But if the prosecuting officer, instead of exhibiting the picture, had described the deceased in terms calculated to excite the sympathy or pity of the jury, it would scarcely be claimed that an exception would lie to a refusal of the Court to interfere. It is neither a logical nor a reasonable inference that a jury dealing with the grave issue of life or death, in a case where the sole controverted question is as to the insanity of the prisoner when he committed the act, would be influenced by a description in words or by a representation in a picture of the personal appearance of the person alleged to have been murdered."

1878, Mr. Pitt Taylor, Evidence, 7th ed., I, § 557: "Though evidence addressed to the senses, if judiciously employed, is obviously entitled to the greatest weight, care must be taken not to push it beyond its legitimate extent. The minds of jurymen, especially in the remote provinces, are grievously open to prejudices, and the production of a bloody knife, a bludgeon, or a burnt piece of rag, may sometimes, by exciting the passions or enlisting the sympathies of the jury, lead them to overlook the necessity of proving in what manner these articles are connected with the criminal or the crime; and they consequently run no slight risk of arriving at conclusions which, for want of some link in the evidence, are by no means warranted by the facts proved. The abuse of this kind of evidence has been a fruitful theme for the satirists, and many amusing illustrations of its effect might be cited from our best authors. Shakespeare makes Jack Cade's nobility rest on this foundation; for Jack Cade having asserted that the eldest son of Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March, 'was by a beggar woman stolen away', 'became a bricklayer when he came to age', and was his father, one of the rioters confirms the story by saying, 'Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house, and the bricks are alive to this day to testify to it; therefore deny it not.' Archbishop Whately — who makes use of the above anecdote in his 'Historic Doubts relative to Napoleon Buonaparte,' — adds, 'Truly, this evidence is such as country people give one for a story of apparitions; if you discover any signs of incredulity, they triumphantly show the very house which the ghost haunted, the identical dark corner where it used to vanish, and perhaps even the tombstone of the person whose death it foretold.'"[1]

1877, Scintillæ Juris, 58: "What is called 'real evidence'— mostly bullets, bad florins, and old boots — is of much value for securing attention. This is true even when these exhibits prove nothing, — as is generally the case. They look so solid and important that they give stability to the rest of the story. The mind in doubt ever turns to tangible objects. They who first carved for themselves a Jupiter from a log of wood knew very well that the idol could do nothing for them; but it enabled them easily to realize a power who could. A rusty knife is now to an English juryman just what a 'scarabæus' was to an Egyptian of old. I have seen a crooked nail and a broken charity-box treated with all the reverence due to relics of the holiest martyrs."[2]

1909, BURCH, J., in State v. Moore, 80 Kan. 232, 162 Pac. 475: "On Sunday, December 27, 1906, appellant waylaid his wife as she was returning from church, shot her twice through the body, and killed her on a public street in the city of Arkansas City. . . .

"Error is assigned because the jacket which the deceased wore when she was shot was introduced in evidence. It was fully identified, was pierced in the back by two bullet holes, and its lining was stained with blood. It is argued that the introduction in evidence of the dead woman's bloody jacket destroyed the mental poise of the jury by riveting their minds upon a scene of carnage, to the exclusion of any calm consideration of appellant's sanity, the only matter finally disputed by way of defense. The State rested under the necessity of establishing a tragedy involving the violent death of a human being from mortal wounds deliberately inflicted with malice aforethought — a thing most likely to include some blood along with the wickedness, perhaps, too, the terrifying report of pistol shots in a peaceful street on a Sunday just after church, the piteous appeals for life, and the agonized death screams of a defenseless woman as she is being shot down, and other shocking things. Such a subject is never a nice one to investigate. Any of the details have a decided tendency to horrify and to appall, but a court cannot arrange for lively music to keep the jury cheerful while the State's case in a murder trial is being presented, and grewsome evidence cannot be suppressed merely because it may strongly tend to agitate the jury's feelings. . . . Generally physical objects, which constitute a portion of a transaction, or which serve to unfold or explain it, may be exhibited in evidence, if properly identified, whenever the transaction is under judicial investigation. . . .

"Of course spectacular exhibitions may be framed for the purpose of arousing prejudicial emotions, and all such improprieties should be thwarted or promptly suppressed. The production of real evidence should not be permitted to exaggerate, and should not be allowed, through cunning presentation, to stir up passion or unduly excite sympathy or pity, and so lead the jury to act upon sentiment, instead of proof. But the proceeding is always under the control of the trial judge, who has authority to confine the use of such evidence to proper purposes and to regulate the time, manner, and extent of its presentation, and his discretion will not be interfered with unless abused with prejudicial consequences."

§ 1157. [1] The great dramatist's example will occur to every one: "See, what a rent the envious Casca made! . . . Here is himself, marred, as you see, with traitors." For the extent to which the Roman advocates developed this method of tempting emotion to overwhelm reason, see Forsyth's Hortensius the Advocate, 3d ed., 92, 96.

[2] This 'libellus', by Mr. C. J. (later Justice) Darling, published at first anonymously, has since gone into its sixth edition.

The objection thus indicated seems to be twofold. First, there is a natural tendency to infer from the mere production of any material object, and without further evidence, the truth of all that is predicated of it. Secondly, the sight of deadly weapons or of cruel injuries tends to overwhelm reason and to associate the accused with the atrocity without sufficient evidence.

The objection in its first phase may be at least partly overcome by requiring the object to be properly authenticated, before or after production; and this requirement is constantly enforced by the Courts (post, § 2130).

The objection in its second phase cannot be entirely overcome, even by express instructions from the Court; but it is to be doubted whether the necessity of thus demonstrating the method and results of the crime should give way to this possibility of undue prejudice. No doubt such an effect may occasionally and in an extreme case be produced; and no doubt the trial Court has a discretion to prevent the abuse of the process. But, in the vast majority of instances where such objection is made, it is frivolous, and there is no ground for apprehension. Accordingly, such objections have almost invariably been repudiated by the Courts.[3]

[3] To the cases following, add those quoted above, and also certain of the photograph cases cited ante, § 792:

ENGLAND: 1722, R. v. Reason, 16 How. St. Tr. 42 (murder by shooting: "the clothes [of the deceased] were produced, and by the hole in the waistcoat it appeared that the wound given by the pistol under the right pap could no way happen by any position of the pistols in the bosom of the deceased, by the pistol going off of itself").

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1860, Mose v. State, 36 Ala. 211, 219, 229 (a chip from a tree containing a buckshot said to have been fired, shown); 1895, Dorsey v. State, 107 Ala. 157, 18 So. 199 (murder; coat with shot-hole, worn by deceased); Burton v. State, 107 Ala. 108, 18 So. 285 (hat of the deceased); 1896, Crawford v. State, 112 Ala. 1, 21 So. 214 (pistol-balls taken from the body of the deceased, admitted); 1897, Mitchell v. State, 114 Ala. 1, 22 So. 71 (showing a purse said to have contained the stolen money); 1909, Rollings v. State, 160 Ala. 82, 49 So. 329 (murder; a futile distinction drawn between the clothing, etc. and the suspenders, etc. of deceased); 1919, Terry v. State, 203 Ala. 99, 82 So. 113 (murder; deceased's clothing admitted);

Arkansas: 1896, Starchman v. State, 62 Ark. 538, 540, 36 S. W. 940 (burglar's tools exhibited); 1913, Tiner v. State, 109 Ark. 138, 158 S. W. 1087 (exhibiting deceased's clothing);

California: 1882, People v. Hope, 62 Cal. 291, 295 (burglar's tools exhibited); 1886, People v. McCurdy, 68 Cal. 576, 580, 10 Pac. 207 (hats of the deceased, the defendant, and F. D., shown to the jury at their request); 1893, People v. Hawes, 98 Cal. 648, 652, 33 Pac. 791 (murder; vest worn by deceased, exhibited); 1897, People v. Winthrop, 118 Cal. 85, 50 Pac. 390 (articles taken in a robbery, admitted); 1900, People v. Sullivan, 129 Cal. 557, 62 Pac. 101 (gun used in a murder, admitted); 1901, People v. Westlake, 134 Cal. 505, 66 Pac. 731 (clothing of the deceased, admitted);

Delaware: 1905, State v. Powell, 5 Pen. Del. 42, 61 Atl. 966 (photographs of wounds on the deceased, admitted);

Georgia: 1876, Wynne v. State, 56 Ga. 113, 118 (murder; the pistol and cartridges allowed to be placed before the jury for their inspection, with explaining testimony); 1893, Adams v. State, 93 Ga. 166, 18 S. E. 553 (perjury as to pantaloons; the pantaloons exhibited); 1899, Dill v. State, 106 Ga. 683, 32 S. E. 660 (rock used in an assault, admitted); 1903, Patton v. State, 117 Ga. 230, 43 S. E. 533 (causing the weeping mother of the murdered boy to show to the jury his bloody shirt and point out the bullet-holes, held improper); 1905, Roberts v. State, 123 Ga. 146, 51 S. E. 374 (curtain-pole as a weapon for killing, shown);

Illinois: 1887, Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 236,

§ 1158. Unfair Prejudice to a Civil Defendant, in Personal Injury Cases. In civil actions, an objection has often been made, on analogous grounds, to 12 N. E. 856, 17 N. E. 898 (Anarchist murders at Haymarket Square; bombs and cans of dynamite, etc., exhibited); 1893, Painter v. People, 147 Ill. 444, 466, 35 N. E. 64 (bedclothing of the murdered man, etc., allowed to be displayed; "the time and manner in which objects of this character shall be displayed in the presence of the jury is a matter wholly within the sound discretion of the Court"); 1896, Keating v. People, 160 Ill. 480, 43 N. E. 724 (a wad of paper substituted for stolen bills, exhibited); 1902, Henry v. People, 198 Ill. 162, 65 N. E. 120 (buggy and deceased's clothes, exhibited); 1903, Cleveland C. C. & St. Louis R. Co. v. Patton, 203 Ill. 376, 67 N. E. 804 (injured person's clothing, exhibited); 1912, People v. Morris, 254 Ill. 559, 98 N. E. 975 (clothing of murdered woman shown);

Indiana: 1883, McDonel v. State, 90 Ind. 320, 327 (hatchet inspected by the jury); 1884, Story v. State, 99 Ind. 413, 416 (inspection of deceased's pantaloons allowed); 1893, Davidson v. State, 135 Ind. 254, 258, 34 N. E. 972 (murder; clothing worn by the deceased, exhibited); 1897, Anderson v. State, 147 Ind. 445, 46 N. E. 901 (revolver used in resisting arrest, exhibited); 1899, Thrawley v. State, 153 Ind. 375, 55 N. E. 95 (murder; skull of deceased exhibited); 1905, Osburn v. State, 164 Ind. 262, 73 N. E. 601 (knife found on defendant); 1917, Gibbs v. State, 186 Ind. 197, 115 N. E. 584 (larceny of chickens; to show the mode of identifying the chickens, by a hole punched in the feet, the chickens were exhibited);

Iowa: 1868, State v. Vincent, 24 Ia. 570, 576 (the severed head of the deceased, preserved in alcohol and exhibited to the Court and jury at the trial, then identified by witnesses); 1885, Barker v. Perry, 67 Ia. 146, 147, 25 N. W. 100 (cited post, § 1158); 1893, State v. Jones, 89 Ia. 182, 188, 56 N. W. 427 (murder; razor used, exhibited; defendant's admission of the fact of killing, immaterial); 1900, State v. Petersen, 110 Ia. 647, 82 N. W. 329 (rape; underclothing exhibited);

Kansas: 1909, State v. Moore, 80 Kan. 232, 102 Pac. 475 (murder; bloody jacket exhibited; leading opinion, by Burch, J.);

Kentucky: 1910, Catron v. Com., 140 Ky. 61, 130 S. W. 951 (bloody garment of witness, admitted);

Massachusetts: 1866, Com. v. Burke, 12 All. 182 (inspection of a stolen wallet, etc., to find whether "they were of some value", allowed);

Minnesota: 1894, State v. Smith, 56 Minn. 78, 84, 57 N. W. 325 (shooting a trespasser; signs on premises, warning trespassers, admitted); 1900, State v. Minot, 79 Minn. 118, 81 N. W. 753 (burglars' tools and arms, exhibited);

Mississippi: 1883, Powell v. State, 61 Miss. 319 (portion of stolen hog, shown for identification);

Missouri: 1897, State v. Wievers, 66 Mo. 13, 29 (murder; deceased's bones exhibited; "a party cannot, upon the ground that it may harrow up feelings of indignation against him in the breasts of the jury, have competent evidence excluded"); 1885, State v. Stair, 87 Mo. 268, 272 (blood-stained clothing of the deceased shown; "it was as competent for the jurors to get this information by their own sight as it was to get it through the medium of witnesses"); 1890, State v. Moxley, 102 Mo. 387, 14 S. W. 969, 15 S. W. 556 (spinal vertebræ of the deceased, allowed to be exhibited, if identified); 1893, State v. Murphy, 118 Mo. 7, 14, 25 S. W. 95 (rape; bloody underclothing exhibited); 1894, State v. Duffy, 124 Mo. 1, 10, 27 S. W. 358 (rape; defendant's clothing exhibited); 1908, State v. Harris, 209 Mo. 423, 108 S. W. 28 (clothes of deceased, showing place of wounds, admitted);

Montana: 1921, State v. Byrne, 60 Mont. 317, 199 Pac. 262 (murder; skull, bullets, etc., introduced);

Nebraska: 1901, Savary v. State, 62 Nebr. 166, 87 N. W. 34 (skull of deceased exhibited); 1922, King v. State, — Nebr. —, 187 N. W. 934 (murder; photographs of the body showing wounds, admitted);

New Jersey: 1897, Johnson v. State, 59 N. J. L. 535, 37 Atl. 949 (exhibition of defendant's boots and the tracks made by them, allowed); 1905, State v. Laster, 71 N. J. L. 586, 60 Atl. 361 (articles found on accused, exhibited); 1912, State v. Strong, 83 N. J. L. 177, 83 Atl. 506 (neck of the mutilated deceased person, said to have been strangled); 1914, State v. Cerciello, 86 N. J. L. 309, 313, 90 Atl. 1112 (murder; revolver and whiskey bottle shown, to corroborate a confession);

New Mexico: 1917, State v. Rodriguez, 23 N. M. 156, 167 Pac. 426 (murder; physician's exhibition of a bone of the deceased's skull, allowed);

New York: 1842, Colt's Trial, N. Y., 1 Amer. St. Tr. 455, 472 (murder by a hatchet; the skull and the hatchet were exhibited; William Kent, J., overruling an objection by Mr. Selden, "However painful it is, justice must be administered and the head produced, if the jury think it necessary"); 1866, Gardiner v. People, 6 Park. Cr. C. 155, 201 (murder; weapons used, and the deceased's clothing exhibited); 1852, People v. Larned, 7 N. Y. 445, 452 (burglary; tools exhibited); 1866, People v. Gonzalez, 35 N. Y. 49, 64 (murder; deceased's clothing exhibited); 1875, Foster v. People, 63 N. Y. 619 (burglar's tools shown); 1904, People v. Davey 179, N. Y. 345, 72 N. E. 244 (rape of a child; ask-the exhibition of his corporal injuries by one suing for compensation.[1] This objection, like the preceding one, assumes that there is a double risk; the jury may heedlessly conclude, it is thought, first, that because the injury is perfectly patent therefore the defendant is to blame for it, and, secondly, that since the plaintiff is truly in a pitiable plight, some one at least should be found to compensate him, and the defendant rather than any one else; both of these risks being particularly great in actions against a corporation or a moneyed individual. No doubt there is in such cases a constant tendency to render ing questions of the defendant as to similar acts upon other children who are made to stand up for identification by him, held improper on the facts); 1904, People v. Rimieri, 180 N. Y. 163, 72 N. E. 1002 (murder; the deceased left a widow and child, and there was some issue as to whether the deceased when shot was crossing the street to overtake the child or to seek the defendant; the widow testified that she was then pregnant with another child, and the living child was brought into court and shown; these facts were held to be hardly called for, but the error if any "entirely harmless"; this ruling, and People v. Davey, supra, are further commented on ante, § 21);

North Carolina: 1873, State v. Mordecai, 68 N. C. 207, 210 (burglary; accomplice's stick, exhibited); 1921, State v. Westmoreland, 181 N. C. 590, 107 S. E. 438 (murder; coat and trousers of deceased, exhibited);

Oklahoma: 1908, Reed v. Terr., 1 Okl. Cr. 481, 98 Pa. 583 (liquor offence; the whiskey bottle inspected and smelt by the jury); 1910, Saunders v. State, 4 Okl. Cr. 264, 111 Pac. 965 (deceased's coats and gloves, exhibited); 1911, Morris v. State, 6 Okl. Cr. 29, 115 Pac. 1030 (photographs of wounds on body, admitted); 1920, Jones v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 190 Pac. 887 (murder; exhibition of deceased's clothing, allowed); 1921, Jones v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 195 Pac. 789 (murder; exhibition of deceased's clothing, bearing fraternal badges, held not improper);

Oregon: 1903, State v. Miller, 43 Or. 325, 74 Pac. 658 (photographs of gunshot wounds on the deceased, excluded as "gruesome" and unnecessary; unsound on the facts);

Rhode Island: 1914, State v. Mariano, 37 R. I. 168; 90 Atl. 21 (skull of murdered man, admitted);

South Carolina: 1893, State v. Symmes, 40 S. C. 383, 387, 19 S. E. 16 (clothes exhibited, to show lack of powder-burns);

South Dakota: 1900, State v. Shields, 13 S. D. 464, 83 N. W. 559 (watch and chain of assaulted person, exhibited); 1910, State v. Jacobs, 26 S. D. 183, 128 N. W. 162 (revolver-experiments, to prove an immaterial fact, held improper, on the present ground);

Tennessee: 1890, Turner v. State, 89 Tenn. 547, 564, 15 S. W. 838 (murder; deceased's ribs and vertebra, exhibited);

Texas: 1882, King v. State, 13 Tex. App. 277, 280 (clothes of deceased, exhibited); 1883, Hart v. State, 15 Tex. App. 202, 228 (same; admissible, "no matter how the jury might be affected by them"); 1899, Roberson v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 49 S. W. 398 (rape; complaining witness brought in to testify, in such a bruised and emaciated condition that she could testify only by moving the head or by writing; held allowable); 1899, Barkman v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 105, 52 S. W. 73 (clothing of deceased, exhibited); 1904, Melton v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 451, 83 S. W. 822 (deceased's bloody garments, held improperly exhibited by his wife, there being no controversy as to that part of the case); 1918, White v. State, 83 Tex. Cr. 252, 202 S. W. 737 (assault to kill; the victim's exhibition of his blood-stained coat, allowed); 1920, Grace v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 301, 225 S. W. 751 (rape; exhibition of bloody clothing, bedclothes, etc., held improper on the facts);

Vermont: 1884, State v. Burnham, 56 Vt. 445 (breach of the peace by boxing-match; inspection of the gloves by the jury, apparently left to trial Court's discretion); 1909, State v. Roby, 83 Vt. 121, 74 Atl. 638 (assault, by throwing iron, etc., at the complainant's house; the articles of iron, etc., held not improperly exhibited; approving the above principle);

Washington: 1896, State v. Cushing, 14 Wash. 527, 45 Pac. 145, 17 Wash. 544, 50 Wash. 512 (clothing of the deceased and gun with which he was shot, exhibited);

Wisconsin: 1905, Roszczyniala v. State, 125 Wis. 414, 104 N. W. 113 (rape; accused's shirt and trousers, admitted); 1920, Krueger v. State, 171 Wis. 566, 177 N. W. 917 (murder; shoe containing bullet-holes, exhibited).

Compare also the cases cited ante, § 789, n. 3, as to dramatic modes of testifying so as to excite undue prejudice.

§ 1158. [1] 1892, Coleman, J., in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearson, 97 Ala. 211, 219, 21 So. 176 ("Human feelings are easily excited by the description of great bodily injuries or ghastly wounds or the exhibition of objects which appeal to the senses. Sympathy or indignation, once aroused in the average juror, readily become enlisted, to the prejudice of the person accused as the author of the injury").

verdicts against defendants regardless of proved culpability; no doubt the danger is of greater frequency here than in the preceding class of cases; and no doubt the trial Court has a discretion, which it should firmly exercise, to prevent the abuse of such a mode of proof. But it seems too rigorous to forbid a party to prove his case by the clearest evidence; and a jury which through violent prejudice would not be restrained by the Court's instructions would probably give way to its prejudice even without this evidence. The Courts impose no prohibition, except so far as the discretion of the trial Court may prevent abuses.[2]

[2] CANADA: 1918, Richardson v. Nugent, 40 D. L. R. 700, N. B. (malpractice; exhibition of plaintiff's unhealed wound to the jury, being valueless for any evidential purpose, held improper); 1897, Sornberger v. R. Co., 24 Ont. App. 263 (railroad injury; plaintiff allowed to exhibit her injured limb, for the purpose of having a medical witness explain the injury); 1897, Laughlin v. Harvey, 24 Ont. App. 438 (malpractice; plaintiff not allowed to exhibit his injured part to the jury, where no explanation by medical testimony was purposed; preceding case distinguished).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1886, Osborne v. Detroit, 36 Fed. 36, 38 (allowing the plaintiff to indicate to the jury the extent of a paralysis by submitting to the insertion of a pin into her body; "she was at liberty to exhibit her wounds if she chose to do so, as is frequently the case where an ankle has been sprained or broken, a wrist fractured, or any maiming has occurred"); 1901, Baggs v. Martin, 47 C. C. A. 175, 108 Fed. 33 (clothing of deceased, exhibited); Alabama: 1892, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pearson, 97 Ala. 211, 219, 12 So. 176 (shoe of brakeman killed on train, excluded on this ground); California: 1905, Anderson v. Seropian, 147 Cal. 201, 81 Pac. 521 (amputated hand preserved in liquid admitted); Illinois: 1889, Tudor Iron Works v. Weber, 129 Ill. 535, 539, 21 N. E. 1078 (plaintiff's torn clothing exhibited); 1891, Springer v. Chicago, 135 Ill. 552, 561, 26 N. E. 514 (general principle approved); 1894, Lanark v. Dougherty, 153 Ill. 163, 165, 38 N. E. 892 (injured limb examined by physician in jury's presence); 1899, Swift v. Rutkowski, 182 Ill. 18, 54 N. E. 1038 (injured limb may be exhibited, in trial Court's discretion); 1905, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Walker, 217 Ill. 605, 75 N. E. 520 (injured ankle); 1917, Wagner v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 114 Ill. 277, 115 N. E. 201 (personal injury causing amputation of foot; exhibition of foot and shoe held improper, because the sole purpose and effect was to "excite feeling"; erroneous); Indiana: 1884, Indiana C. Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181, 199 (injured hand exhibited); 1887, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood, 113 Ind. 544, 548, 14 N. E. 572, 16 N. E. 197 (plaintiff's injured limbs exhibited); 1893, Citizens' S. R. Co. v. Willoeby, 134 Ind. 563, 570, 33 N. E. 627 (physician allowed to exhibit the plaintiff's hip-joint injury and illustrate it by placing him in various poses); 1906, Pittsburgh C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Lightheiser, 168 Ind. 438, 78 N. E. 1033 (injured foot exhibited); Iowa: 1885, Barker v. Perry, 67 Ia. 146, 147, 25 N. W. 100 ("In all actions for injuries to the person", and "in the trial of criminal assaults", the injury may be exhibited to the jury); 1902, Faivre v. Manderscheid, 117 Ia. 724, 90 N. W. 76 (plaintiff's husband's crippled limbs, allowed to be exhibited); 1914, Nolte v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 165 Ia. 721, 147 N. W. 192 (photograph of the deceased woman, admitted); Kentucky: 1895, Newport News & M. V. R. Co. v. Carroll, — Ky. —, 31 S. W. 132 (bones of injured arm, exhibited); 1898, Williams v. Nally, — id. —, 45 S. W. 874 (bones of fractured leg, shown to expert witnesses); 1907, Ford v. Providence C. Co., 124 Ky. 517, 99 S. W. 609 (plaintiff' amputated leg); Maine: 1899, Jameson v. Weld, 93 Me. 345, 45 Atl. 299 (injured arm, allowed in discretion to be shown); Michigan: 1886, Carstens v. Hauselman, 61 Mich. 426, 430, 28 N. W. 158 (medical assistance to the defendant, a woman; trial Court's refusal to allow her to exhibit her injured limb to the jury, approved, the appearance not being a satisfactory source of inference); 1893, Langworthy v. Green, 95 Mich. 93, 96, 54 N. W. 697 (plaintiff's shrivelled limb allowed to be exhibited; argument of undue prejudice apparently repudiated); 1893, Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 268, 54 N. W. 757 ("the injured party may exhibit his wounds to the jury"); 1893, Edwards v. Three Rivers, 96 Mich. 625, 628, 55 N. W. 1033 (injured limb, exhibition allowed); 1895, People v. Sutherland, 104 Mich. 468, 62 N. W. 566 (wounds exhibited); 1909, Farrell v. Haze, 157 Mich. 374, 122 N. W. 197 (amputated bones, not allowed on the facts to be shown); Minnesota: 1885, Hatfield v. R. Co., 33 Minn. 130, 22 N. W. 176 (principle approved); 1901, Adams v. Thief River Falls, 84 Minn. 30, 86 N. W. 767 (plaintiff allowed in trial Court's discretion to make arm movements to illustrate her injury);

On the same principle, objection has been made to the plaintiff's testifying, as a witness, in a manner calculated to prejudice the defendant (ante, § 789). Whether the plaintiff in such suit is compellable to exhibit his injuries, for inspection by the jury and the defendant's witnesses, is a question of privilege, elsewhere considered (post, § 2220).

§ 1159. Indecency, or other Impropriety; Liquor Sampled by Jurors. When justice and the discovery of truth are at stake, the ordinary canons of modesty and delicacy of feeling cannot be allowed to impose prohibition upon necessary measures. If such matters were not unshrinkingly discussed and probed, many kinds of crime would remain unpunished. Nevertheless, needless offence to feelings of delicacy, especially by public exhibitions before idle spectators having no responsibility for the course of justice, may well be avoided. The limitations that may be applied are suggested in a passage from Chief Baron Hale:

Ante 1680, Sir MATTHEW HALE, Pleas of the Crown, I, 635: "I shall never forget a trial before myself of a rape in the county of Sussex. . . . There was an antient wealthy man of about sixty-three years old indicted for rape, which was fully sworn against him by a young girl of fourteen years old. . . . [The antient man alledged that he neither was nor could be guilty, since] he had for above seven years last past been afflicted with a rupture so hideous and great that it was impossible he could carnally know any woman, . . . and offered to show the same openly in court; which for the indecency of it I declined, but appointed the jury to withdraw into some room to inspect this unusual evidence; and they accordingly did so, and came back and gave an account of it to the Court, that it was impossible he should have to do with any woman in that kind; . . . whereupon he was acquitted."

Where it is a question of what would otherwise be an indecency, two limita-

Montana: 1907, Stephens v. Elliott, 36 Mont. 92, 92 Pac. 45 (injured arm, exhibited, to illustrate the expert testimony); Missouri: 1919, Turnbow v. Kansas City R. Co., 277 Mo. 644, 211 S. W. 41 (exhibition of amputated limbs, allowed); Nebraska: 1898, Omaha S. R. Co. v. Emminger, 57 Nebr. 240, 77 N. W. 675 (injured woman's limb, exhibited); 1902, Crete v. Hendricks, — Nebr. —, 90 N. W. 215 (injured foot, exhibited); 1904, Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl, 70 Nebr. 766, 98 N. W. 44 (maimed leg exhibited, even though the defendant did not deny the injury); 1904, Minden v. Vedene, 72 Nebr. 657, 101 N. W. 330 (personal injury; the lame plaintiff's act of walking to the witness-stand, held not objectionable); 1904, Felsch v. Babb, 72 Nebr. 736, 101 N. W. 1011 (plaintiff's exhibition and movements of arm and legs, allowed); New Hampshire: 1895, Nebonne v. R. Co., 68 N. H. 296, 44 Atl. 521 (exhibition of amputated toes, allowed), 1909, Lapointe v. Berlin Mills Co., 75 N. H. 294, 73 Atl. 406 (here refused, because not offered in season); New York: 1864, Mulhado v. R. Co., 30 N. Y. 370 (plaintiff's injured arm, exhibited); Oregon: 1921, Patterson v. Howe, 102 Or. 275, 202 Pac. 225 (dental malpractice; exhibition to the jury of plaintiff's bone particles having no evidential value, held error; the jury's inspection of the plaintiff's jaw, allowed); South Dakota: 1898, Sherwood v. Sioux Falls, 10 S. D. 405, 73 N. W. 913 (bringing the plaintiff into Court on a cot, in action for personal injury; not improper, where not shown unnecessary); 1920, Dean v. Seaman, 42 S. D. 577, 176 N. W. 649 (malpractice; exhibition of the injured limb, allowed); Tennessee: 1900, Arkansas River P. Co. v. Hobbs, 105 Tenn. 29, 57 S. W. 278 (injured limb, allowed to be exhibited and moved); West Virginia: 1894, Carrico v. R. Co., 39 W. Va. 86, 89, 19 S. E. 571 (stump of amputated arm; exhibition allowed; "danger of inspiring sympathy" not to exclude); 1909, Ewing v. Lanark Fuel Co., 65 W. Va. 726, 65 S. E. 200 (injured limb exhibited); Wisconsin: 1901, Viellesse v. Green Bay, 110 Wis. 160, 85 N. W. 665 (injury at a defective sidewalk; pieces of rotten plank allowed to be exhibited).

tions seem appropriate; [1] (a) there should be a fair necessity for the jury's inspection, the trial Court to determine; (b) the inspection should take place apart from the public court-room, in the sole presence of the tribunal and the parties. Such seems to be the tendency of the Courts.[2]

There may also be an unnecessary impropriety in other ways. The exhibition of repulsive objects should not be allowed unless it is fairly necessary.[3] The consumption by the jury of samples of liquor, for the purpose of determining its intoxicating qualities, will also ordinarily be prohibited.[4]

§ 1160. Incapacity of the Jury to Appreciate by Observation (Experiments in Court; Insane Person's Conduct). The significance of the production of a thing or a person or the performance of an experiment before the jury may sometimes not be properly apprehensible by unskilled laymen through mere observation. Nevertheless, an accompanying explanation by an expert will generally obviate any danger that the jury may be misled; and Courts have rarely recognized any force in this objection. Experiments

§ 1159. [1] Compare also the general principle as to Indecent Evidence (post, § 2180).

[2] Fed. 1891, Union P. R. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U. S. 250, 255, 11 Sup. 1000 (exposure of person allowable, "with a due regard to decency, and with the permission of the Court"); Ala. 1889, McGuff v. State, 88 Ala. 147, 7 So. [illegible] (rape; inspection of complaining witness allowed); Ida. 1920, Kinzell v. Chicago M. & P. P. R. Co., 33 Ida. 1, 190 Pac. 255 (injury while coupling cars; examination of plaintiff's anus in court, to exhibit the nature of the injury, held not improper); Ill. 1898, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Clausen, 173 Ill. 100, 50 N. E. 680 (rupture shown by injured person; allowable in discretion); Ia. 1904, Garvik v. Burlington C. R. & N. R. Co., 124 Ia. 691, 100 N. W. 498 (action for rape by D., an employee of the defendant; the trial Court permitted the jury to inspect the private parts of D., with his consent, in a separate room, on an allegation that the parts were defective; held improper, first, because it was not shown that the man's condition was the same as at the time alleged, and secondly, because it was a "shocking and indecent performance." As to the latter reason, such false judicial morality is so odd as to be incredible in these days; why was it "indecent" for the jury, but not for the experts, who made a similar examination? The Court declares that it found no authority for such examination, and "doubts if there is any to be found in the books"! It is regrettable for modern justice not only that Sir Matthew Hale, in the instance above cited, should have shown more good sense two centuries ago than we now possess, but that his celebrated example should even have become buried in oblivion from some of his learned successors); 1907, State v. Stevens, 133 Ia. 684, 110 N. W. 1037 (rape; the defendant's request to have the jury examine his parts in a private room was denied; following Garvik v. R. Co.); Wis. 1878, Brown v. Swineford, 44 Wis. 282, 284 (assault and battery; defendant's exhibition of his organs of generation to the jury, held improper; if material, a private examination by experts out of court should be made); 1901, Guhl v. Whitcomb, 109 Wis. 69, 85 N. W. 142 (personal injury; photograph of plaintiff's nude body, held improperly received).

[3] 1856, R. v. Palmer, Annual Register, 1856, pp. 422, 473, 475 (while allowing experiments as to the effect of strychnia upon dogs and rabbits to be described, the Court refused to allow dogs to be brought into the court-yard and killed by strychnia before the jury); 1887, Knowles v. Crampton, 55 Conn. 336, 341, 11 Atl. 593 (section of a human body, cut from a woman about the plaintiff's size and age, offered to show the character of rib and breast-bone formation, excluded, "the exhibit being of doubtful utility and offensive in its nature"; the trial Court's discretion to control).

[4] Ala. 1898, Wadsworth v. Dunnam, 117 Ala. 661, 23 So. 699 (that the jurors should test the intoxicating qualities of a liquor by taking bottles to their room, not allowed, because evidence must be publicly presented in Court); Ariz. 1921, Richardson v. State, — Ariz. —, 201 Pac. 845 (making intoxicating liquor; giving to the jury "the container, for inspection, or any other purpose", held improper); Colo. 1921, Enyart v. People, 70 Colo. 362, 201 Pac. 564 (selling whisky; jury permitted to examine and smell the liquor; "it is like shutting their eyes to the truth to do otherwise"; whether they may taste it, not decided); Kan. 1900, State v. Coggins, 10 Kan. App. 455, 62 Pac. 247 (liquor offence; held improper to allow the jury to examine and smell bottles of whiskey); 1905, State v. Schmidt, 71 Kan. 862, 80 Pac. 948 (liquor and samples have frequently been shown for the personal observation of the jury.[1]

On an issue of idiocy or insanity, it was from an early period regarded proper that the person should appear before the Chancellor for inspection.[2] Since the Chancellor is upon the subject of insanity no less a layman than is a juryman, it seems equally proper, and has been perhaps equally long established,[3] that inspection by the jury should be an allowable mode of acquiring knowledge on an issue of insanity. It is almost universally agreed that a sales; handling labelled bottles to the jury, held not improper on the facts); Mass. 1894, Com. v. Brelsford, 161 Mass. 61, 63, 36 N. E. 677 (offer to have jurors taste liquor, excluded); Mich. 1900, People v. Kinney, 124 Mich. 486, 83 N. W. 147 (whether a liquor was hard or sweet cider; jurors allowed to taste it); Minn. 1905, State v. Olson, 95 Minn. 104, 103 N. W. 727 (liquor offence; jurors allowed to take the sample as an exhibit, without tasting); N. C. 1922, State v. Simmons, — N. C. —, 110 S. E. 591 (possessing intoxicating liquor; the jury allowed to taste it).

§ 1160. [1] Besides the following, compare the cases cited ante, §§ 445, 451, 457, 460, 1154, and 1157: England: 1915, George J. Smith's Trial, Notable British Trials Series, 1922, p. 118 (wife-murder by drowning her in a bath-tub; the bath-tub was in the Court-room; Jury-Foreman: "One of the jury has expressed a wish that some one should be put in the bath for ocular demonstration"; Scrutton, J.: "I can only suggest to you that when you examine these baths in your private room, you should put one of yourselves in"); Federal: 1886, Osborne v. Detroit, 36 Fed. 36, 38 (allowing the plaintiff to test the extent of her paralysis by submitting to the insertion of a pin into her body in the jury's presence during the trial); 1898, Taylor v. U. S., 32 C. C. A. 449, 89 Fed. 954 (counterfeiting; plating-machine allowed to be operated before the jury); California: 1882, People v. Hope, 62 Cal. 291, 295 (experiments before the jury with burglar's tools to show their working, allowed); 1895, Thomas Fruit Co. v. Start, 107 Cal. 206, 40 Pac. 336 (a sample of prunes whose quality was in issue); Florida: 1905, Spires v. Stale, 50 Fla. 121, 39 So. 181 (experiment with a gun in the jury-room, refused in discretion; see the citation ante, § 460, n. 1); Illinois: 1859, Jumpertz v. People, 21 Ill. 375, 396, 408 (experiments with door-hooks, etc., to show the impossibility of the deceased's suicide as alleged; such an experiment before the jury, "to say the least, is very uncommon, and should be permitted by the Court with great caution"); Iowa: 1876, Stockwell v. R. Co., 43 Ia. 470, 473 (fire attributed to a locomotive; whether the engineer had not shut off the steam in running over a certain stretch was in issue, the practicability of doing so being denied; to show the practicability, a view having been ordered, a train was run over the stretch in question without steam; held proper); 1895, Moore v. R. Co., 93 Ia. 484, 61 N. W. 992 (collision on a railroad track; the jury having been taken to view the place, and an engine having been run over the track in their sight to illustrate the occurrence, this very sensible proceeding was held fatally improper); 1907, Chicago Telephone S. Co. v. Marne & E. T. Co., 134 Ia. 252, 111 N. W. 935 (sale of telephones; tests of the instruments in the jury's presence, held not improperly refused in the trial Court's discretion); Massachusetts: 1873, Brown v. Foster, 113 Mass. 136 (contract to make a suit of clothes; to show that they did fit the defendant, the plaintiff was allowed to produce them and with the defendant's assent to try them on him); 1879, Eidt v. Cutter, 127 Mass. 522 (whether the gases from the defendant's copperas works had discolored the paint on the plaintiff's house; boards, etc., used in experiments made out of Court, were shown to the jury); Mississippi: 1880, Dillard v. State, 58 Miss. 368, 386 (horse ridden by deceased, produced, and experiments by the jury as to the height of a rider, allowed); Montana: 1907, Stephens v. Elliott, 36 Mont. 92, 92 Pac. 45 (paralysis evidenced by the medical witness sticking a needle into the plaintiff's hand); New York: 1906, Train, "The Prisoner at the Bar", 312 (N. Y.; a striking experiment in testing poisons was performed before the jury); Virginia: 1893, Taylor v. Com., 90 Va. 109, 117, 17 S. E. 812 (jury allowed to examine rifle and cartridge to determine manner of explosion).

[2] 1592, Abbot of Strata Mercella's Case, 9 Co. Rep. 31*a*; 1768, Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 332.

[3] Ante 1680, Hale, Pleas of the Crown, I, 29, 33 (" 'Idiocy or not' is a question of fact triable by jury, and sometimes by inspection. . . . Touching the trial of this incapacity [of dementia], . . . the law of England hath afforded the best method of trial that is possible of this and all other matters of fact, namely, by a jury of twelve men all concurring in 'the same judgment, by the testimony of witnesses' 'viva voce' in the presence of the judge and jury, and by the inspection and direction of the judge").

lay-witness is qualified to testify to insanity;[4] and it seems to be universally accepted that, in whatever form the issue of insanity may be presented, the jury may take into consideration the behavior of the person as observed by them.[5]

§ 1161. Physical or Mechanical Inconvenience of Production; Patent Infringements. It may cause inconvenience, by obstruction of the court-room or by too great expense of time, to bring the desired object before the tribunal; and on this ground its production may be forbidden in the trial Court's discretion; though such a course has rarely been taken.[1] In Chancery, a Master may be ordered to examine and report.[2] In suits for infringement of patents of invention, the judge usually inspects the articles produced in court and may even allow machines to be produced and there operated.[3]

[4] Ante, § 568, post, § 1938.

[5] Eng. 1787, R. v. Steel, 1 Leach Cr. C., 3d ed., 451 (larceny; the accused not pleading on arraignment, a jury was sworn 'instanter', and found that she stood "mute by the visitation of God"); 1836, R. v. Pritchard, 7 C. & P. 303 (same); 1818, Ex parte Smith, 1 Swanst. 4, 7 (Lord Eldon, L. C.: "It is a practice by no means uncommon in cases of lunacy [in equity] (analogous to a practice very common in civil cases) that, when the lunatic cannot be removed to the jury, and it is inconvenient for the jury to examine the lunatic, one or two of the jury examine the lunatic and report their observations to the rest"); 1837, R. v. Goode, 7 A. & E. 535 (inquest of insanity: the defendant continued to show in Court "violent symptoms of mental derangement"; after evidence of his former condition, it was proposed to call a medical man as to his present condition; Denman, L. C. J.: "I think it is quite unnecessary; we can judge of that by what has passed in Court just now"); U. S. Col. (Dist.) 1881-2, Guiteau's Trial, Washington, D. C., passim (murder of the President; defence, insanity; the accused's annoying, insulting, and unruly behavior at the trial was allowed for the sake of the basis of inference thus placed before the jury as to his sanity; no express ruling on the subject seems to have been made); Del. 1873, State v. West, 1 Houst. Cr. 371, 385 (allowing production of a collection of articles — bottled snakes, an old shoe, a broken mirror, etc. — forming the "museum" of the defendant, and indicating his insanity); Mass. 1804, Com. v. Braley, 1 Mass. 103 (murder; the accused appearing at arraignment to be insane, "a jury was immediately empanelled" and found him insane); Mich. 1864, Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459, 492 (jury's inspection said to be proper; "in all of these proceedings, while testimony is generally necessary, and in many cases scientific testimony is of the utmost value, yet the law has always regarded the subject as usually open to the common understanding and capable of being judged by personal appearance"); N. Y. 1845, Re Russell, 1 Barb. Ch. 38, 39 (inquisition of lunacy; Walworth, Ch.: "The jury also have the right to inspect and examine the lunatic; and they should do so in every case of doubt, where such an examination can be had").

For the statutory rule in most States that in lunacy proceedings the commission of physicians may and must personally examine the party, see post, § 2090.

§ 1161. [1] Eng. 1862, Line v. Taylor, 3 F. & F. 731 (bite of a dog; the dog allowed to be produced and inspected by the jury to determine whether he was ferocious; perhaps under C. L. Pr. Act 1854, § 58); 1879, Thurman v. Bertram, Exch. D., Pollock, B., London Mail, July 18, 1879, cited in 20 Alb. J. 150 (horse frightened by the "unusual and unsightly appearance" of an elephant; the elephant brought into the court-room for inspection); D. C. 1907, District of Columbia v. Duryee, 29 D. C. App. 327 (injury at a hitching-post; the post was dug up and exhibited at the trial); Wash. 1902, Moran Bros. Co. v. Snoqualmie F. P. Co., 29 Wash. 292, 69 Pac. 759 (contract concerning a regulator-box for a power-plant; the box weighing several thousand pounds, held not necessary to be produced); W. Va. 1886, Hood v. Bloch, 29 W. Va. 244, 255, 11 S. E. 910 (cheese inferior to agreed quality; trial Court's refusal to allow production of the cheese, held not improper in view of the large bulk of goods involved); and other instances ante, §§ 451-460, ante, § 1160, note 1, and post, § 1163, note.

[2] As is customary in actions for infringement of copyright, where the material is voluminous: 1799, — v. Leadbetter, 4 Ves. Jr. 681; 1826, Mawman v. Tegg, 2 Russ. 385, 398.

[3] With the following cases compare those cited post, § 2221, concerning the opponent's privilege to refuse inspection; 1870, Seymour v. Osborne, 11 Wall. 516, 559; 1878, Bates v. Coe, 98 U. S. 31, 45, 49.

§ 1162. Production Impossible; View by Jury; (1) General Principle. Where the object in question cannot be produced in Court because it is immovable or inconvenient to remove, the natural proceeding is for the tribunal to go to the object in its place and there observe it. This process, traditionally known as a "view", has been recognized, since the beginnings of jury-trial, as an appropriate one:

Circa 1258, H. de Bracton, fol. 315 (of a woman charged with waste of dower-property): "Since damage has thus been done in a corporeal thing which is manifest to the sight of the eyes, she cannot by her law [i.e. by oaths] deny that it is not so, for so the view would be contrary to the oath of the jurors. It is better, therefore, when the woman denies waste, that a view be taken of the thing wasted against the prohibition both in the quality of the act and in the quantity."

1891, CRAIG, J., in Springer v. Chicago, 135 Ill. 553, 561, 26 N. E. 514: "If the parties had the right upon the trial to prove by oral testimony the condition of the property at the time of the trial, . . . upon what principle can it be said the Court could not allow the jury in person to view the premises and thus ascertain the condition thereof for themselves? . . . If a plat or a photograph of the premises would be proper evidence, why not allow the jury to look at the property itself, instead of a picture of the same? There may be cases where a trial Court should not grant a view of premises where it would be expensive, or cause delay, or where a view would serve no useful purpose; but this affords no reason for a ruling that the power to order a view does not exist or should not be exercised in any case. . . . If at common law, independent of any English statute, the Court had the power to order a view by jury (as we think it plain the Court had such power), as we have adopted the common law in this State, our Courts have the same power."

§ 1163. Same: (2) View allowable upon any Issue, Civil or Criminal; Statutes. That the Court is empowered to order such a view, in consequence of its ordinary common-law function, and irrespective of statutes conferring express power, is not only naturally to be inferred, but is clearly recognized in the precedents.[1]

Nor can any distinction here properly be taken as to criminal cases. It is true that here, by some singular scruple, a doubt has more than once been judicially expressed.[2] But it is impossible to see why the Court's power to aid the investigation of truth in this manner should be restricted on criminal cases, and the better precedents accept this doctrine.[3]

§ 1163. [1] See Glanvil. b. XIII, c. 14; Bracton, f. 69, and f. 315, quoted in the foregoing section; Fitzherbert, Natura Brevium, 123 C, 128 B, 184 F; Lord Mansfield, in 1 Burr. 252, quoted in the next section; 1624, Dalton v. All Souls' College, Palmer 363.

[2] Eng. 1756, R. v. Redman, 1 Kenyon 384 ("Per Curiam: There can be no view in a criminal prosecution without consent; and the practice was so before the act [4 Ann. c. 16]"); U. S. D. C. 1899, Price v. U. S., 14 D. C. App. 391, 405 (not decided); Haw. 1904, Terr. v. Watanabe, 16 Haw. 196, 220 ("It has been the practice" to allow it; question left undecided); Mass. 1830, Com. v. Knapp, 9 Pick. 496, 515 (view allowed, with consent of accused, but "with hesitation", because the Court "had doubts whether they could hold the prisoner to his consent"); Mo. 1899, State v. Hancock, 148 Mo. 488, 50 S. W. 112 (denied, even on defendant's application); N. Y. 1855, Eastwood v. People, 3 Park. Cr. 25, 53, semble (Court may not authorize a view in criminal cases).

[3] Under some of the statutes infra it is expressly allowable; see the cases cited in the next section, and also the following: England: 1847, R. v. Whalley, 2 Cox Cr. 231 (objected to as not proper in a criminal case except where indictment is removed by certiorari to civil side; overruled); 1872, R. v. Martin, 12 Cox Cr. 204, 41 L. J. M. C. 113, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 378, 380 (view allowed after summing up: trial Court's discretion);

Nor need there be any distinction to the disadvantage of any kind of civil case; for, although traditionally the chief and perhaps exclusive use of the view occurred in cases involving waste, trespass, and nuisance,[4] it is clear that no strict line of definition was made, nor can any reason for it be seen in principle. A view should be allowable in whatever sort of issue it may appear to be desirable.[5]

Moreover, the process of view need not be applicable merely where land is to be observed; it is applicable to any kind of object, real or personal in nature, which must be visited in order to be properly understood.[6]

United States: Fla. 1916, Haynes v. State, 71 Fla. 585, 72 So. 180 (murder; view allowed, under Gen. St. 1906, § 3989); Ind. 1858, Fleming v. State, 11 Ind. 234 (jury's view of building burned, allowed under statute); Mass. 1850, Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. 295, 298 ("the Court said that they had no doubt of their authority to grant a view, if they deemed one expedient, R. S. c. 137, § 10; and that views had been granted of late in several capital cases in this county"); Mich. 1913, People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23, 141 N. W. 869 (murder; view of premises allowed, under Comp. L. § 11952); Minn. 1872, Chute v. State, 19 Minn. 271, 278 (view allowable in discretion); N. C. 1897, State v. Perry, 121 N. C. 533, 27 S. E. 997; Va. 1903, Litton v. Com., 101 Va. 833, 44 S. E. 923 (Code, § 3167, held to authorize a view in criminal cases; Buchanan, J., resting the result on St. 1887–8, c. 15, § 4048).

Whether the accused must have an opportunity to be present at the view is an entirely different question (post, § 1803).

[4] 1814, Attorney-General v. Green, 1 Price 130 (allowable under the statute "in case of land", and perhaps in "informations of intrusion . . . on the principle of analogy"; but not on an information against a glass factory for taxes, "where a model may answer every purpose"); 1824, Redfern v. Smith, 9 Moore 497 (waste; view held necessary); 1848, Stones v. Menhem, 2 Exch. 382 (Parke, B., refusing an order for a view of work done as carpenter, bricklayer, etc., on a house: "The language of the acts of Parliament, coupled with the practice, appears to me to show that this is not a case in which a view ought to be granted; the necessity of a view seems to me to apply chiefly to actions of a local nature, such as trespass q.c.f., nuisance, and the like").

[5] See instances in the cases cited in the next section and ante, § 1160; and compare the similar controversy as to inspection (post, § 1862) and privilege (post, §§ 2194, 2221).

[6] See instances in the citations to the next section and § 1160, ante, and also the following: Federal: 1901, Olsen v. N. P. Lumber Co., 40 C. C. A. 427, 100 Fed. 388, 106 Fed. 298, 302 (view of the scene of an injury may include machinery in operation); Alabama: 1876, Campbell v. State, 55 Ala. 80 (tracks of the murderer were found in sandy soil; the defendant was allowed on the trial to make tracks in the sawdust on the court-house floor; but the trial Court refused to allow him to be taken by the sheriff out of the court to a place of sandy soil and there make tracks in the jury's presence, or to allow sandy soil to be brought into the court-room for the same purpose; held, that the trial Court had discretion to allow whichever mode it thought best); Florida: 1904, O'Berry v. State, 47 Fla. 75, 36 So. 440 (larceny of cattle; under Rev. St. 1892, §§ 1087, 2918, a view of the cattle was held proper); Georgia: 1891, Mayor v. Brown, 87 Ga. 596, 599, 13 S. E. 638 (injury at a street-crossing; jury's personal inspection of the place, held proper); Iowa: 1858, Nutter v. Ricketts, 6 Ia. 92, 96 (jury allowed to go out into the court-house yard and inspect the horse in controversy); 1913, Adamson v. Harper, 162 Ia. 56, 143 N. W. 844 (ownership of cattle; view held not improperly refused in trial Court's discretion); Kentucky: 1913, South Covington & C. St. R. Co. v. Finan's Adm'x, 153 Ky. 340, 155 S. W. 742 (jury's inspection of broken car-wheels out of court, held proper); New Hampshire: 1917, Carpenter v. Carpenter, 78 N. H. 440, 101 Atl. 628 (divorce for adultery at a town in Massachusetts; view by the judge of the place in question, held allowable; careful opinion by Walker, J.); Ohio: 1899, Schweinfurth v. R. Co., 60 Oh. St. 215, 54 M. E. 89 (jury allowed to go out and view experiments made with horse and buggy, engine and train, reproducing the conditions of the injury); West Virginia: 1899, Bias v. R. Co., 46 W. Va. 349, 33 S. E. 240 (jury allowed to view the railroad track and observe experiments as to distance of distinct vision).

Contra: Georgia: 1912, Peterson v. Lott, 11 Ga. App. 536, 75 S. E. 834 (mule levied by attachment; jury's view of the mule, refused, for lack of judicial power; one would think that Courts would not treat themselves like infants, insisting on being fed with a legislative spoon; even Lord Eldon was less conservative); Montana: 1903, State v. Landry, 29 Mont. 218, 74 Pac. 418 (larceny of a mare; the jury went to view another mare claimed by the defendant to be the mother of the one in controversy; the mare claimed by the

Thus at common law there need be no limitations of the above sorts upon the judicial power to order a view. The regulation of the subject by statute, which began in England some two centuries ago,[7] was concerned prosecuting witness to be the mother was also present, and the behavior of the mare in controversy "indicated a preference" for the latter; the Court held the view of the horses improper, going upon the narrow wording of P. C. § 2097, cited infra, n. 7, and citing no other authority on this point; although the behavior in question was plainly evidential on the principle of §§ 167, 177, 1154, ante, and the defendant himself had requested the view; this ruling, when compared with Lord Eldon's celebrated experiment, quoted ante, § 1154, seems to discountenance the optimistic belief that the world grows wiser as it grows older); South Dakota: 1901, Brady v. Shirley, 14 S. D. 447, 85 N. W. 1002 (view of horses, held improper, in the absence of statutory authority).

The cases where the rights of inspection by the opponent before trial (post, § 1862) and of privilege (post, §§ 2194, 2221) are involved, are sometimes not distinguished by the Courts.

[7] See Lord Mansfield's explanation, quoted in the next section. The English and Canadian statutes are as follows:

ENGLAND: 1705, St. 4 Anne, c. 16, § 8 ("in any action" at Westminster, where it shall appear to the Court that it will be "proper and necessary" that the jurors who are to try the issues should have the view of the lands or place in question, "in order to their better understanding the evidence" to be given at the trial, the Court may order special writs of 'distringas' or 'habeas corpora', commanding the selection of six out of the first twelve of the jurors therein named, or a greater number, to whom the matters controverted shall be shown by two persons appointed by the Court); 1730, St. 3 G. II, c. 25, § 14 (where a view shall be allowed, six of the jurors, or more, who shall be consented to on both sides, or if they cannot agree, appointed by the proper officer of the Court or a judge, "shall have the view, and shall be first sworn, or such of them as appear upon the jury" before any drawing; and so many only shall be drawn, to be added to the viewers, as shall make up the number of twelve); 1825, St. 6 G. IV, c. 50, §§ 23, 24 (in any case, civil or criminal, wherever "it shall appear . . . that it will be proper and necessary that some of the jurors who are to try the issues in such case should have the view of the place in question, in order to their better understanding the evidence that may be given upon the trial", an order may appoint six or more, to be named by consent or, upon disagreement, by the sheriff, and the place in question shown them by two persons appointed by the Court; and "those men who shall have had the view, or such of them as shall appear upon the jury to try the issue, shall be first sworn", and only so many added as are needed to make up twelve); 1852, St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, § 114 (writ of view not necessary; order of Court or judge sufficient); 1853, Second Report of Commissioners on Practice and Pleading, 37 (recommends the allowance of orders for inspection, by the jury or by the party or his witnesses, "of any premises or chattels the inspection of which may be material to determine the question in dispute"); 1854, St. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 58 ("Either party shall be at liberty to apply to a Court or a judge for a rule or order for the inspection by the jury, or by himself, or by his witnesses, of any real or personal property the inspection of which may be material to the proper determination of the question in dispute"; the judge to make the order on such terms as he sees fit; and the rules for views under preceding acts to apply as nearly as may be); 1883, Rules of Court, Ord. 50, R. 3 ("It shall be lawful for the Court or a judge, upon the application of any party to a cause or matter, and upon such terms as may be just, to make any order for the detention, preservation, or inspection, of any property or thing, being the subject of such cause or matter or as to which any question may arise therein, and for all or any of the purposes aforesaid to authorize any persons to enter upon or into any land or building in the possession of any party to such cause or matter, and for all or any of the purposes aforesaid to authorize any samples to be taken or any observation to be made or experiment to be tried, which may be necessary or expedient for the purpose of obtaining full information or evidence"); R. 4 ("It shall be lawful for any judge . . . to inspect any property or thing concerning which any question may arise therein"); R. 5 ("The provisions of Rule 3 of this order shall apply to inspection by a jury", which may be ordered as the Court "may think fit").

CANADA: Dominion: R. S. 1906, c. 144, Crim. C. § 958 (in criminal trials the Court may order a view of "any place, thing, or person", and prescribe the manner of showing); Alberta: Rules of Court 1914, No. 196 (Court may order inspection by the jury of "any person or any real or personal property whose inspection may be material", etc.); No. 197 (like Ont. Rule 265); St. 1921, c. 8, § 31 (juries; Court may order a view); Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, R. 604, 605 (like Ont. Rules 265, 266, but including the jury); Rule 891 (like ib. Rule 370); New Brunswick: Cons. St. 1903, c. 126, § 33, St. 1919, c. 3, § 33 ("when a view shall be considered rather with the details of the process, than with the limits of the power. Statutes now regulate the process in almost every jurisdiction;[8] but it may necessary by the Court, the jury sworn to try the cause shall make the view"; showers if necessary to be appointed by the Court); Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, Ord. 46, Rule 4 (like Eng. Ord. 50, R. 3); Rules 5, 6 (like Eng. Rules 4, 5); Nova Scotia: Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 34, R. 36 (referee may "have any inspection or view" which he deems expedient); Ord. 50, R. 3 (like Ont. R. 370); ib. R. 4 (any judge on appeal may inspect "any property or thing" concerned); ib. R. 5 (Rule 3 above shall apply to "inspection by a jury"); Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 64, § 86, the judge may order a view if it appears "that the jurors who are to try the issues in the case should have a view of the place or property in question in order to the better understanding of the evidence"); Rules of Court 1914, No. 265 (the judge "may inspect any property or thing concerning which any question arises"); No. 266 (inspection by party or witnesses may be ordered of "any property the inspection of which may be material to the proper determination of the question in dispute"); No. 370 (like Eng. Ord. 50, R. 3); No. 267 ("a view by the jury may be ordered by the judge"); Prince Edward Island: St. 1873, c. 22, § 107 ("It shall be sufficient to obtain a rule of the Court or judge's order directing a view to be had"); § 252 (view of "any real or personal property the inspection of which may be material to the proper determination" may be ordered).

[8] The statutes in the United States are as follows (but these should be compared with the statutes cited post, §§ 1862, 2194, 2221, dealing with the privilege of a party to refuse to allow inspection of premises or chattels; the one kind of statute has chiefly in mind the judicial power to permit the jury to use this mode of proof, the other has in mind the compulsory submission of the opponent to an entry upon his premises, before trial, by the first party and his witnesses; the contrast is shown in Rules 3 and 5, supra, of the English Court):

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1020 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 133).

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1061 (like Cal. P. C. § 1119);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 3176 (criminal cases; like Cal. P. C. § 1119); § 1293 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 610, substituting "real property" for "property");

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1954 ("Whenever an object, cognizable by the senses, has such a relation to the fact in dispute as to afford reasonable grounds of belief respecting it, or to make an item in the sum of evidence, such object may be exhibited to the jury . . . [or testified to]. The admission of such evidence must be regulated by the sound discretion of the Court"); § 610 ("When in the opinion of the Court it is proper for the jury to have a view of the property which is the subject of litigation, or of the place in which any material fact occurred", the Court may order a view, the place to be shown by the Court's appointee); P. C. § 1119 ("When in the opinion of the Court it is proper that the jury should view the place in which the offence is charged to have been committed, or in which any other material fact occurred", it may order a view, the place to be "shown to them by a person appointed by the Court for that purpose"); Cal. St. 1917, p. 831, May, 23, § 19 (State industrial accident commission may "cause inspection of the premises where the accident occurred to be made");

Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, C. C. P. § 206 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 610); § 207 (in all proceedings involving mining rights, it shall be the Court's duty, on application of either party, to order a view; each party to nominate a guide approved by the Court, and such guide or guides to point out "such features in the premises as it is desirable that the jury should see, and answer all questions propounded by the jury", with specified restrictions); G. S. § 6320 (eminent domain; Court may order a view); 1903, McMillen v. Ferrum M. Co., 32 Colo. 38, 74 Pac. 461 (statute held not to make a view-order obligatory where the applicant had not other sufficient evidence to go to the jury);

Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 4279 (jury may view "the premises or place in question, or to which the controversy relates, when it shall appear to the Court that such view is necessary to a just decision");

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 6091 (in criminal cases, "the Court may order a view by the jury"); § 2695 (in civil proceedings, "the jury may in any case, upon motion of either party, be taken to view the premises or place in question, or any property, matter, or thing relating to the controversy between the parties, when it shall appear to the Court that such view is necessary to a just decision"); 1915, Crawford v. State, 70 Fla. 323, 70 So. 374 (murder; view held deniable in the trial Court's discretion);

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8964 (like Cal. P. C. § 1119); § 6850 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 610);

Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 47, § 9 (jury in eminent domain proceedings "shall, at the request of either party, go upon the land sought to be taken or damaged, in person, and examine the same"); St. 1897, June 14, § 25 (local improvements; the Court may direct a view);

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 564 ("Whenever in the opinion of the Court it is proper for the jury to have a view of real or personal property which is the subject of litigation, or of the place where any material fact occurred", the Court may order a view, the place to be shown by "some person appointed by the Court"); § 2140 (in criminal cases, "whenever, in the opinion of the Court and with the consent of all the parties, it is proper for the jury to have a view of the place in which any material fact occurred", a view may be ordered, the place to be shown by "some person appointed by the Court for the purpose"); St. 1905, p. 584, § 264 (re-enacts the foregoing);

be assumed that the judicial power to order a view exists independently of any statutory phrases of limitation.

Iowa: Code 1897, § 3710, Comp. C. 1919, § 7506 ("When in the opinion of the Court it is proper for the jury to have a view of the real property which is the subject of controversy, or the place where any material fact occurred", it may be ordered, the place to be shown by the Court's appointee); § 5380, Comp. C. 1919, § 9438 (in criminal cases, "when the Court is of the opinion that it is proper the jury should view the place in which the offence is charged to have been committed, or in which any other material fact occurred", it may order a view, the place to be shown by Court's appointee);

Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7186 ("Whenever in the opinion of the Court it is proper for the jury to have a view of the place in which any material fact occurred, it may order a view of the place, which shall be shown to them by some person appointed by the Court for that purpose");

Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 318 (view allowable, when Court deems proper, "of real property which is the subject of litigation or of the place in which any material fact occurred"; some person appointed by the Court is to show it to them); C. Cr. P. § 236 (view allowable in discretion when "necessary" for the jury to see the place of the alleged offence "or in which any other material fact occurred"; judge, prisoner, and counsel to accompany; the judge, or a shower appointed by the Court, to show the place);

Louisiana: C. Pr. 1900, § 139 (Court may order production of "the object in dispute, of which he is in possession, if it be such movable property as can be produced, in order that it may be shown by testimony that it is in reality the object claimed");

Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 24, § 92 (in actions for highway injuries, view may be ordered, when it would "materially aid in a clear understanding of the case"); c. 87, § 101 ("in any jury trial" a view may be ordered); c. 100, § 2 (view may be ordered in action for waste); c. 109, § 41 (view may be ordered in real actions, if in Court's opinion "it is necessary to a just decision"); c. 136, § 24 (view may be ordered in a criminal case);

Maryland: St. 1920, Apr. 16, c. 563 (in any civil action, the Court may "have the jury make an inspection of real property which is the subject of litigation or of the place where any material fact in issue took place");

Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 234, § 35 (view may be ordered in criminal cases; in civil cases view may be had at the request of either party of "the premises or place in question, or any property, matter, or thing relative to the case", on tender of expenses, etc.); c. 80, § 9 (view in betterment cases to be had at the request of either party); c. 253, § 7 (same for flowage cases); c. 82, § 4 (view in highway cases when the jury think proper or at either party's request);

Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12622 (when a court "shall deem it necessary that the jury view the place or premises in question, or any property or thing relating to the issues between the parties", the Court may order a view on either party's application, "and direct the manner of effecting the same"); § 15825 (view may be ordered in criminal cases "whenever such Court shall deem such view necessary"); § 361 (condemnation of land; court may order a view by jury);

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 7800 ("Whenever the Court deems it proper that the jury should view real property which is the subject of litigation, or the place in which any material fact occurred", a view may be ordered, the place to be shown by the judge or the Court's appointee); § 9204 (Court "may order a view" in criminal case);

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 2720, Hem. § 2213 ("When, in the opinion of the Court, on the trial of any cause, civil or criminal, it is proper for the jury to have a view of the property which is the subject of litigation, or of the place at which the offence is charged to have been committed, or the place or places in which any material fact occurred, or any material object or thing in any way connected with the evidence in the case, the Court may at its discretion enter an order providing for such view or inspection"; the "whole organized court" is to go, and the thing "shall be pointed out and explained to the Court and jury by the witnesses in the case, who may at the discretion of the Court be questioned by him and by the representatives of each side, at the time and place of such view or inspection, in reference to any material fact brought out by such view or inspection"; the Court is to be regarded as still in session with full powers; and in criminal trials the view "must be had before the whole court and in the presence of the accused and the production of all evidence from all witnesses or objects animate or inanimate must be in his presence");

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 9350 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 610); § 10599 (like Cal. C. C.

§ 1164. Same: (3) View allowable in Trial Court's Discretion. The inconvenience of adjourning court until a view can be had, or of postponing the

P. § 1954); § 11996 (like Cal. P. C. § 1119, but after "occurred", inserting "or in cases involving the brand or mark or identity of live stock or other personal property", with other clauses suitable to this amendment; this amendment, made in 1907, apparently was designed merely to cure cases like State v. Landry, n. 6, supra; but why was not the Legislature courageous enough to give really unlimited powers, as in the English and Canadian statutes?),

Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 10145 (criminal cases; like Kan. Gen. St. § 7186); § 8791 (in civil cases "whenever, in the opinion of the Court, it is proper for the jury to have a view of property which is the subject of litigation, or of the place where", etc., as in criminal cases);

Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, §7191 (like Cal. P. C. § 1119); § 5211 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 610);

New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 227, § 19 (in actions involving right to real estate, or where "the examination of places or objects may aid the jury in understanding the testimony," the Court may in discretion direct a view);

New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 30 (where inspection of "any premises or chattels or other property in the possession or under the control of either party" "would aid in ascertaining the truth of any matter in dispute", Court may order possessor to permit inspection by jury or opponent or witnesses, under proper regulations); Juries § 77 (upon trials of indictments, the Court may order a view of "any lands or place, if in the judgment of the Court such view is necessary to enable the jury better to understand the evidence given in the cause"; the Court to direct the manner of the view);

New York: C. Cr. P. 1881, § 411 (view in criminal cases allowable when "in the opinion of the Court it is proper"); Cons. L. 1909, Real Prop. § 528, as amended by St. 1920, c. 930 (in action for waste, view may be ordered in discretion);

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 10855 (like Cal. P. C. § 1119); § 7622 (civil cases; like Cal. C. C. P. § 610);

Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 13658 ("Whenever in the opinion of the Court it is proper for the jurors to have a view of the place at which any material fact occurred", the Court may order a view, an appointee of the Court to show the place); § 11054 (view allowable in eminent domain proceedings); § 11448 (like Code § 13658 supra, inserting after "view", the words "of the property which is the subject of litigation, or");

Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 2714 (criminal cases; like Cal. P. C. § 1119); § 543 (civil cases; like Cal. C. C. P. § 610);

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 133 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 610, substituting "real property" for "property"); § 792 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1954, substituting "the exhibition of such object to the jury" for "the admission, etc.");

Pennsylvania: St. 1834, Apr. 14, §§ 158, 159, Dig. 1920, §§ 12947, 12948, Juries (when a view is allowed, "six of the first twelve jurors named in the panel, or more of them, shall be taken" to the place; "those of the viewers who shall appear [at the trial] shall first be sworn", and enough added to make up the twelve);

Philippine Isl. Civ. C. §§ 1240, 1241 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. §§ 4314, 4315); C. C. P. 1901, § 332 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1954 omitting "cognizable by the senses" and "or to make an item in the sum of the evidence");

Porto Rico: Rev. St. C. 1911, §§ 4314, 4315 ("personal inspection by the Court" is sanctioned); § 6290 (like Cal. P. C. § 1119); § 1463 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1954); 1909, Perez v. Yabucoa Sugar Co., 15 P. R. 200, 209 (personal injury in a sugar mill; the judge, trying without a jury, took "ocular inspection" of the place; held proper, since the former Spanish procedure permitted it, though the new Evidence Act ignored it; but why add "in the absence of any objection"?); 1917, Martinez v. Rodriguez, 26 P. R. 5 (execution of a will; the judge, sitting without a jury, went to view the house where the testatrix signed the will; held that the "ocular inspection" by the judge was allowable under Civ. C. § 1183, but that the parties should have been present and a memorandum should have been recorded);

Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 1 ("In all cases in which it shall seem advisable to the Court, on request of either party, a view by the jury may be allowed", and the Court shall regulate the proceedings);

South Carolina: C. C. P. 1922, § 559 ("the jury in any case may at the request of either party be taken to view the place or premises in question, or any property, matter, or thing relating to the controversy between the parties, when it appears to the Court that such view is necessary to a just decision"); Civ. C. 1922, § 5218 (condemnation of right of way; the jury "shall proceed to inspect the premises");

South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 4895 (like Cal. P. C. § 1119); § 2507 (civil cases; like Cal. C. C. P. § 610);

Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 1856 (jury of inquest of damages by eminent domain may examine ground, etc.); § 3689 (jury for processioning boundaries of land may examine it); § 2947 (eminent domain; jury's view allowable if court deems it necessary); § 6467 (land condemnation; "such jury may examine personally the property, if any, to be assessed trial for the purpose, may suffice to overcome the advantages of a view, particularly when the nature of the issue or of the object to be viewed renders the view of small consequence. Accordingly, it is proper that the trial Court should have the right to grant or to refuse a view according to the requirements of the case in hand. In the earlier practice, the granting of a view seems to have become almost demandable as of course; but a sounder doctrine was introduced by the statute of Anne (which apparently only re-stated the correct common-law principle); so that the trial Court's discretion was given its proper control:

1757, MANSFIELD, L. C. J., Rules for Views, 1 Burr. 252: "Before the 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, § 8, there could be no view till after the cause had been brought on to trial. If the Court saw the question involved in obscurity which might be cleared up by a view, the cause was put off, that the jurors might have a view before it came on to be tried again. The rule for a view proceeded upon the previous opinion of the Court or judge, at the trial, 'that the nature of the question made a view not only proper but necessary'; for the judges at the assizes were not to give way to the delay and expense of a view unless they saw that a case could not be understood without one. However, it often happened in fact that upon the desire of either party causes were put off for want of a view upon specious allegations from the nature of the question that a view was proper, — without going into the proof so as to be able to judge whether the evidence might not be understood without it. This circuity occasioned delay and expense; to prevent which the 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, § 8, impowered the Courts at Westminster to grant a view in the first instance previous to the trial. . . . [He then refers to the other statute of 3 G. II, and to the supposed rule as to the number of viewers necessary, treated infra.] Upon a strict construction of these two acts in practice, the abuse which is now grown into an intolerable grievance has arisen. Nothing can be plainer than the 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, § 8. . . . The Courts are not bound to grant a view of course; the Act only says 'they may order it, where it shall appear to them that it will be proper and necessary,' . . . [He then refers to the abuse of repeated postponement of trial to obtain a view.] We are all clearly of opinion that the Act of Parliament meant a view should not be granted unless the Court was satisfied that it was proper and necessary. The abuse to which they are now perverted makes this caution our indispensable duty; and, therefore, upon every motion for a view, we will hear both parties, and examine, upon all the circumstances which shall be laid before us on both sides, into the propriety and necessity of the motion; unless the party who applies will consent to and move it upon terms which shall prevent an unfair use being made of it, to the prejudice of the other side and the obstruction of justice."

with benefits", and city engineer etc. "may accompany such jury for the purpose of pointing out the property");
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 9000 (criminal cases; like Cal. P. C. § 1119); § 6807 (civil cases; like Cal. C. C. P. § 610);
Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 1887 (in actions for damages to real estate or concerning title to land, where a view is "necessary", it may be granted on motion of either party);
Virginia: Code 1919, § 6013 (in civil cases, at either party's request, the jury may be "taken to view the premises or place in question or any property, matter, or thing, relating to the controversy", when it appears to the Court "that such view is necessary to a just decision"; the requester to advance expenses);
Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 344 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 610, substituting "real property" for "property", and providing alternatively that the judge may act as shower); § 2160 (Court may order a view in a criminal trial);
West Virginia: Code 1919, c. 116, § 30 (like Va. Code, § 6013, for all classes of cases);
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4694 (the Court may order a view in a criminal case); § 2852 (civil cases; like Va. Code, § 6013); 1921, Ohrmundt v. Spiegelhoff, — Wis. —, 184 N. W. 692 (false representations in sale of land; view held to be in trial Court's discretion);
Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 7535 (criminal cases (like Oh. Gen. C. Ann. § 13658, inserting "disinterested" before "person"); § 5770 (Court may order view when "of opinion it is proper for the jurors to have a view of the property which is the subject of litigation or of the place in which any material fact occurred").

Accordingly, this provision, leaving the granting of the view to the trial Court's discretion, is found in almost every statute on the subject; and this doctrine is constantly exemplified in judicial decision.[1] It may be noted, § 1164. [1] Compare the statutes ante, § 1163; in the following cases, except where otherwise noted, the doctrine of the trial Court's discretion is enforced; most of the rulings apply one of the statutes already mentioned:

ENGLAND: 1815, Anon., 2 Chitty 422 (whether there was a hole on certain premises; view refused, because "in this case it might mislead"); 1742, Davis v. Lees, Willes 344, 348;

CANADA: 1880, Anderson v. Mowatt, 20 N. Br. 255, semble (view after charge given, allowable);

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1920, Forbes v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 268 Fed. 273 (condemnation proceedings; trial Court in discretion may order a view); Alabama: 1909, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wilson, 162 Ala. 588, 50 So. 188 (machine); Arkansas: 1875, Benton v. State, 30 Ark. 328, 345, 350 (discretion of trial Court controls as to necessity, under statute); 1880, Curtis v. State, 36 Ark. 284, 289 (same, as to time of view); 1914, Whitley v. State, 114 Ark. 243, 169 S. W. 952 (various details left to trial Court's discretion); California: 1897, People v. White, 116 Cal. 17, 47 Pac. 771 (premises of a burglary); 1897, Niosi v. Laundry, 117 Cal. 257, 49 Pac. 185 (place of a street accident); Florida: 1878, Coker v. Merritt, 16 Fla. 416, 421 (statute applied); Georgia: 1896, Broyles v. Prisock, 97 Ga. 643, 25 S. E. 389 (whether both parties must consent, left undecided); 1899, Johnson v. Winship M. Co., 108 Ga. 554, 33 S. E. 1013 (defective machinery; order to view it, within judicial powers in absence of parties' consent, depends on trial Court's discretion); 1909, Jones v. Royster Guano Co., — Ga. —, 65 S. E. 361 (nuisance); Illinois: 1891, Springer v. Chicago, 135 Ill. 553, 561, 26 N. E. 514 (view allowable in any case in discretion; here, of property damaged by a viaduct; practically overruling Doud v. Guthrie, 13 Ill. App. 653, 658); 1894, Vane v. Evanston, 150 Ill. 616, 621, 37 N. E. 901 (same principle approved; here allowed for a special assessment on land); 1894, Osgood v. Chicago, 154 Ill. 194, 41 N. E. 40 (eminent domain); 1895, Pike v. Chicago, 155 Ill. 656, 40 N. E. 567 (same); Iowa: 1872, King v. R. Co., 34 Ia. 458, 462; 1892, Morrison v. R. Co., 84 Ia. 663, 51 N. W. 75; 1906, Mier v. Phillips F. Co., 130 Ia. 570, 107 N. W. 621 (action for coal mined by the defendant under the plaintiff's land; view held properly refused; this ruling seems absurdly pedantic; the evidence was in conflict; is it an enlightened rule of law that forbids the jury to take the common-sense method of getting at the truth?); Kansas: 1883, State v. Furbeck, 29 Kan. 380 (view of wheat said to have been stolen); Kentucky: 1893, Roberts v. Com., 94 Ky. 499, 22 S. W. 845; 1892, Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Smith, 93 Ky. 449, 460, 20 S. W. 392, semble (discretion as to time of view); 1900, Valley T. & G. R. Co. v. Lyons, — Ky. —, 58 S. W. 502 (discretion); 1900, Memphis & C. P. Co. v. Buckner, 108 Ky. 701, 57 S. W. 482 (discretion); 1898, Henderson & C. G. R. Co. v. Cosby, 103 Ky. 184, 44 S. W. 639 (discretion); 1904, Green's Adm'r v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co., — Ky. —, 78 S. W. 439 (discretion); 1904, Mise v. Com., — Ky. —, 80 S. W. 457 (homicide); 1906, Louisville v. Caron, — Ky. —, 90 S. W. 604 (discretion); 1906, Cohankus Mfg. Co. v. Rogers' Gdn., — Ky. —, 96 S. W. 438 (injury at a machine; view revised in discretion); 1917, Salisbury v. Wellman El. Co., 173 Ky. 462, 191 S. W. 289 (building contract; C. C. P. § 318 applied); Massachusetts: 1899, Com. v. Chance, 174 Mass. 245, 54 N. E. 551 (discretion of trial Court controls); 1904, Blanchard v. Holyoke St. R. Co., 186 Mass. 582, 72 N. E. 94 (personal injuries; view of plaintiff in her home, held not improperly refused in the trial Court's discretion); 1907, Yore v. Newton, 194 Mass. 250, 80 N. E. 472 (time of view during trial is in the trial Court's discretion; but a motion by one of the parties is necessary); Michigan: 1893, Leidlein v. Meyer, 95 Mich. 586, 55 N. W. 367 (injury to land by flowage; view by jury in discretion of Court); 1896, Mulliken v. Corunna, 110 Mich. 212, 68 N. W. 141 (injury by falling on a defective sidewalk); 1906, Dupuis v. Saginaw V. T. Co., 146 Mich. 151, 109 N. W. 413 (view of the scene of a street-car accident, and an experiment under the same conditions); 1913, People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23, 141 N. W. 869 (murder); Minnesota: 1872, Chute v. State, 19 Minn. 271, 278 (in discretion, under statute); 1895, Brown v. Kohout, 61 Minn. 113, 63 N. W. 248; 1901, Northwestern M. L. I. Co. v. Sun Ins. Office, 85 Minn. 65, 88 N. W. 272; Montana: 1904, Maloney v. King, 30 Mont. 158, 76 Pac. 4 (applying C. C. P. § 1081); 1907, Stephens v. Elliott, 36 Mont. 92, 92 Pac. 45 (refusal to permit a view of the defendant's mine where the plaintiff was injured, held proper in discretion); Nebraska: 1920, Robison v. Troy Laundry, 105 Nebr. 267, 180 N. W. 43 (collision at a street-intersection); North Carolina: 1892, Jenkins v. R. Co., 110 N. C. 439, 441, 15 S. E. 193 (discretion of trial Court); Ohio: 1894, Jones v. State, 51 Oh. St. 331, 38 N. E. 79 (the view may be had in another county in the State); Oklahoma: 1920, Jones v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 190 Pac. 887 (murder; trial Court's discretion affirmed, in allowing a view of the place of the homicide.

as one circumstance affecting the exercise of that discretion, that, since the present condition of an object is not always a good index of its prior condition at the time in issue (ante, § 437), a view may well be refused where such a change of condition is likely to have occurred that a view of the object in its present condition would probably be misleading.[2]

§ 1165. Same: (4) View by Part of Jury. According to the earlier practice, a view was obtained before the trial and before the final selection of the jurors; and it was not regarded as necessary that all of the jurors finally selected should have participated in the view:

1757, MANSFIELD, L. C. J., in 1 Burr. 252: the reporter states that after the 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, § 8, views were granted upon motion, as of course; and under this act and 3 G. II, c. 25, § 14, a motion prevailed "that six of the first twelve upon the panel must view and appear at the trial; if they did not, there could be no trial, and the cause must go off." Where either party wished delay or vexation, he moved for a view. A thousand accidents might prevent a view, or six of the twelve from attending the view, or their attending the trial. He who wished them not to attend might by various ways bring it about. . . . Though twelve viewers should appear at the trial, yet according to the notion which prevailed if six of the first twelve upon the panel were not among them, the cause could not be tried. The tendency of this abuse to delay, vexatious expense, and the obstruction of justice, was so manifest that the Court thought it their duty to consider of a remedy; and Lord Mansfield for the Court announced the following rule: "The 3 G. II, c. 25, § 14, provides under Rev. S. § 5897); Pennsylvania: 1891, Com. v. Miller, 139 Pa. 77, 95, 21 Atl. 138 (discretion of trial Court); 1898, Rudolph v. R. Co., 186 Pa. 541, 40 Atl. 1083 (land-damages; view in discretion); 1899, Mintzner v. Hogg, 192 Pa. 137, 43 Atl. 465 (street-injury); Virginia: 1858, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Polly, 14 Gratt. 447, 470 (excavation-contract; trial Court's refusal to order a view, held not improper); Washington: 1892, Klepsch v. Donald, 4 Wash. 436, 445, 30 Pac. 991 (injury received from a blast of rock); 1894, State v. Coella, 8 Wash. 512, 36 Pac. 474; 1898, State v. Hunter, 18 Wash. 670, 52 Pac. 247; West Virginia: 1892, Gunn v. R. Co., 36 W. Va. 165, 178, 14 S. E. 465 (death on a railroad track; trial Court's refusal to order view, held not improper); 1897, State v. Musgrave, 43 W. Va. 672, 28 S. E. 813 (view of locality of death; trial Court's discretion controls); 1903, Davis v. American T. & T. Co., 53 W. Va. 616, 45 S. E. 926; Wisconsin: 1871, Pick v. Rubicon H. Co., 27 Wis. 433, 446 (flowage; trial Court's discretion); 1882, Boardman v. Ins. Co., 54 Wis. 364, 366, 11 N. W. 417 (trial Court's discretion; here, a fire loss); 1892, Andrews v. Youmans, 82 Wis. 81, 82; 1901, Koepke v. Milwaukee, 112 Wis. 475, 88 N. W. 238 (defective sidewalk); 1913, Serdan v. Falk Co., 153 Wis. 169, 140 N. W. 1035 (foundry where the injury was received).

A view may be taken of a place in another county, unless a statute expressly limits the scope: 1908, Beck v. Staats, 80 Nebr. 482, 114 N. W. 633 (conveyance of land in another county; the trial Court in discretion authorised to order a view anywhere in the State; other cases collected in the opinion); 1894, Jones v. State, 51 Oh. St. 331 (cited supra); or even in another State: 1917, Carpenter v. Carpenter, 78 N. H. 440, 101 Atl. 628 (divorce for adultery in Massachusetts; cited more fully ante, § 1163).

Distinguish the rulings as to a party's inspection before trial (post, § 1862) and a privilege to refuse such inspection (post, §§ 2194, 2221).

[2] Compare also the cases cited ante, § 1154, par. (6): 1899, Seward v. Wilmington, 2 Marv. Del. Sup. 189, 42 Atl. 451 (street injury; view not ordered, because the injury had been received three years before and the place was not in the same condition); 1896, Broyles v. Prisock, 97 Ga. 643, 25 S. E. 389 (the trial Court has a discretion to refuse, where a material alteration in the premises has occurred); 1893, Banning v. R. Co., 89 Ia. 74, 80, 56 N. W. 277 (locality of railroad injury; view allowed in discretion, the condition of the place not being shown to have changed); 1920, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scott's Adm'r, 188 Ky. 99, 220 S. W. 1066 (collision at a railway crossing in December; view of the place in September, held to be in the trial Court's discretion); 1863, State v. Knapp, 45 N. H. 148, 157 (rape; at a view of the place, the lack of a board in a fence, making an aperture by which witnesses said they had seen certain facts, had been replaced; notice not having been given by the State, the burden was upon it to show that no harm was done to the defendant's case).

'that where a view shall be allowed, the jurors who have had the view shall be first sworn, or such of them as shall appear, before any drawing,' which means, in opposition to such other jurors as are to be drawn by ballot, and not to establish that six at least of the first twelve shall be sworn. . . . It is infinitely better that a cause should be tried upon a view had by any twelve, than by six of the first twelve; or by any six, or by fewer than six, or even without any view at all, than that the trial should be delayed from year to year, perhaps forever"; and the Court accordingly announced that the view would thereafter be granted only upon consent to such terms as would be just [as quoted ante, § 1164]; and the reporter continues: "No party has ever since moved for a view without consenting to the terms; . . . as the non-attendance of viewers can now gratify neither party, both concur in wishing the duty performed"; he then gives the customary terms consented to for a special jury: "Consenting that in case no view shall be had, or if a view shall be had by any of the said jurors, whether they shall happen to be any of the twelve jurors who shall be first named in the said writ or not, yet the said trial shall proceed"; and also for common juries: "Consenting that in case no view shall be had, or if a view shall be had by any of the jurors, whether they shall happen to be six or any particular number of jurors who shall be so mutually consented to as aforesaid [referring to the consent to the statutory selection from the panel], yet the trial shall proceed." [1]

Under modern practice the view is commonly had after the complete impanelling of the jury; so that the reasons for being satisfied with a view by a part only of the jurors no longer exist. It may well be regarded as within the power of the trial Court to sanction no view in which the whole jury has not participated. Nevertheless, it should be noted that a participation by the entire number is no essential part of the orthodox and traditional notion of a view; and that the absence of one or more jurors need not be regarded as in itself fatal to the sufficiency of the view.[2]

§ 1166. Same: (5) Unauthorized View. That a view unauthorized by order of Court is improper, and that the information so obtained should be rejected, may easily be conceded. But it is important to distinguish the reasons for the impropriety. Assume that the whole number of the jury have attended, so as to obviate possible objection on that score; assume further that no witness or other person converses with the jury or attends them while viewing, so as to eliminate objections based on the Hearsay rule;[1] yet it would still be an improper proceeding. A view not had under the direction of the Court is improper because of the danger that the jury would view the wrong objects, and because of the difficulty for the party of ascertaining

§ 1165. [1] The error above-mentioned as to the earlier practice was founded apparently upon the following precedents: Brooke's Abridgment, "View", 89, 95; 1614, Gage v. Smith, Godb., 209 ("if six of the jury are examined upon a 'voyer dire' if they have seen the place wasted, that is sufficient"); 1628, Coke upon Littleton, 158 b. But the error had already been corrected judicially before Lord Mansfield's time: 1699, Anon., 2 Salk. 665, semble (where the practice of leaving out "so many of the principal panel who were not at the view" was disapproved). In the following cases, apparent irregularities have been thought harmless: 1578, Anon., 1 Leon. 267, pl. 359 ("In an action of wast, of wast assigned in a wood, the jury viewed the wood only, without entring into it; and it was holden that the same was sufficient, for otherwise it would be tedious for the jury to have had the view of every stub of a tree which had been felled"); 1863, R. v. Coroner, 9 Cox Cr. 373 (not viewing all at the same time.)

[2] Possibly some of the cases cited in the next section may have proceeded upon a doctrine contrary to that above set forth; but such a doctrine is without orthodox support.

§ 1166. [1] This question is dealt with post, § 1802.

whether they have viewed the right objects. Under the instructions of the Court, and with the official assistance furnished by the Court's order, these objections disappear; otherwise, they are serious and sufficient:

1893, MITCHELL, J., in Aldrich v. Wetmore, 52 Minn. 164, 172, 53 N. W. 1072: "The theory of jury trials is that all information about the case must be furnished to the jury in open court, where the judge can separate the legal from the illegal evidence, and where the parties can explain or rebut; but if jurors were permitted to investigate out of court, there would be great danger of their getting an erroneous or one-sided view of the case, which the party prejudiced thereby would have no opportunity to correct or explain."

Such unauthorized investigations by way of view have invariably been regarded as improper;[2] the only question has been whether the irregularity was dangerous enough to require a new trial.

§ 1167. Same: Other Principles to be distinguished (Juror's Private Knowledge; Official Showers; Accused's Presence; Fence and Road Viewers). The propriety of a view, as resting merely upon considerations inherent in the process of inspection, must be distinguished from other questions that sometimes arise in connection with a view.

(1) (a) A juror must proceed upon what he learns as a member of the jury and not upon his own private belief otherwise acquired (post, § 1800). Accordingly, the private and unauthorized investigation by a juror of some object connected with the trial may be regarded, not only as a violation of the foregoing principle (§ 1166), but also as an improper use of his private knowledge. (b) The acquisition of information from other persons present at a view is a violation of the Hearsay rule (post, § 1802). (c) The presence of official "showers" at a view is on principle not a violation of the Hearsay rule;—the reasons are examined elsewhere (post, § 1802). (d) Whether the accused in a criminal case is constitutionally entitled to be present at a view is a question involving the Hearsay rule (post, § 1803). (e) Whether the jury, after considering the information obtained at a view, may disregard the testimony of witnesses is a question of the jury's duty, and is not within the scope of the present subject; a principle bearing upon it is discussed in the next section.

[2] This question being one peculiar to the law of new trials, no attempt has here been made to collect all the precedents; compare the cases cited post, § 1802; Ill. 1875, Stampofski v. Steffens, 79 Ill. 303, 306 (private inspection by one juror, held improper); Ind. 1884, Luck v. State, 96 Ind. 16, 19 (taking the jury to the place by way of exercise, not sufficient in itself to authorize new trial); 1885, Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 537, 555, 1 N. E. 491 (taking them among other people for exercise; same ruling); Ky. 1897, Tudor v. Com., — Ky. —, 43 S. W. 187 (conduct of the jury while taking exercise, held not a view); Me. 1878, Winslow v. Morrill, 68 Me. 362 (juror visited the location privately; held improper); Mass: 1893, Harrington v. R. Co., 157 Mass. 579, 32 N. E. 955; Minn. 1893, Aldrich v. Wetmore, 52 Minn. 164, 172, 53 N. W. 1072 (new trial granted for private inspection by three jurors); 1893, Woodbury v. Anoka, 52 Minn. 329, 54 N. W. 187 (similar); 1897, Rush v. R. Co., 70 Minn. 5, 72 N. W. 733 (view without order of Court or knowledge of parties, improper, because "the parties have no opportunity of meeting, explaining, or rebutting evidence so obtained"); 1901, Pierce v. Brennan, 83 Minn. 422, 86 N. W. 417 (improper visit by jurors); Mo. 1878, State v. Sanders, 68 Mo. 202 (experiments made by some of the jury out of court to see whether worn-out boots, like some described, would make tracks as described, held improper, because done without leave of Court and after the case had been submitted; but here the defendant's counsel himself had suggested and urged the experiment: "this looks like allowing a party to take advantage of his own wrong, and therefore has caused some hesitation on our part"; there ought to have been no hesitation over so impudent an objection); N. J. 1849, Deacon v. Shreve, 22 N. J. L. 176 (private view by three jurors, where persons talked to them for the plaintiff, held improper); N. Y. 1855, Eastwood v. People, 3 Park. Cr. 25, 52 (unauthorized view by six jurors, held improper); 1885, People v. Court, 101 N. Y. 245, 4 N. E. 259 (one of the jurymen went alone to the scene of affray to observe it; semble, improper); 1888, People v. Johnson, 110 N. Y. 134, 144, 17 N. E. 684 (view allowable under C. Cr. P. § 411; failure to administer oath to officers, held to be waived); Wis. 1894, Peppercorn v. Black River Falls, 89 Wis. 38, 61 N. W. 79.

(2) (a) The process by which, under statutes in many jurisdictions, fence or road viewers are appointed is entirely different from the process here dealt with as a "view." Such viewers form in effect a special and anomalous tribunal, and take in their own way all the evidence that they need. Their procedure has nothing to do with the view by an ordinary jury. (b) The ancient learning about the right which was possessed by a tenant in formedon to have a view of lands in which he was interested was an entirely different thing from a jury's view;[1] it was a right of inspection given him to protect his interests, and is in any case to-day of no importance.[2]

§ 1168. Non-transmissibility of Evidence on Appeal; Jury's View as "Evidence." (1) On a number of occasions in modern times the notion has been advanced that autoptic proference of the thing itself before the tribunal is to be excluded as a method of proof because it is impossible to transmit to the higher Court on appeal the source of belief thus laid before the tribunal below, and because thus the losing party cannot obtain a proper revision of the proceedings by the higher Court. The argument is best set forth in the following passage:

1872, DOWNEY, J., in Jeffersonville M. & I. R. Co. v. Bowen, 40 Ind. 548: "It is urged . . . that in no case where the jury has had a view of the place in which any material fact occurred . . . can the evidence be got into the record, as it would be impossible to put into the bill of exceptions the impressions made upon the minds of the jury by such view; and that in this way all benefit of appeal to this Court, so far as any question is concerned which depends upon all the evidence being in the record, would be wholly cut off. It is further contended that whether the jury shall have a view of the place, etc., is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Court, and that the Court may thus in its discretion deprive a party of the right to have questions depending on the evidence reviewed in this Court, even in cases of the greatest moment. It is urged that under the rule in that case [a contrary one] a party might be convicted and sentenced to be hanged on wholly insufficient evidence; yet if the prosecutor has got an order for the jury to view the place, and they have done so, it would be impossible to get the judgment reversed, no matter how insufficient the evidence might have been."

This heterodox notion (which never troubled Lord Mansfield and the other shapers of the common law) has been sanctioned in a few jurisdictions, in forbidding the inspection of a person's appearance as evidence of his age,[1] and of § 1167. [1] See its features discussed in William v. Gwyn, 2 Saund. 44 a, note 4.

[2] The following case is therefore founded on error: 1875, Smith v. State, 42 Tex. 444, 448 (apparently declaring all views unlawful, because of the statutory abolition of "vouchers, views, essoigns", and wagers of battle and of law, Pasch. Dig. art. 1468; a curious misunderstanding of the meaning of the "view" there referred to).

§ 1168. [1] Illinois: 1904, Wistrand v. People, 213 Ill. 72, 72 N. E. 748 (rape; the jury not allowed to consider the defendant's appearance "to fix his age"; citing and following a child's features as evidence of another's paternity,[2] and also in forbidding the resort to a view by a jury.[3] But the notion has now been generally repudiated, even in the jurisdictions where it once obtained,[4] and the propriety of inspection or view by the tribunal is regarded as not to be impugned because of this consideration.[5] the erroneous theory of Stephenson v. State, Ind., infra); 1915, People v. Kielczewski, 269 Ill. 293, 109 N. E. 981 (following Wistrand v. People; a sentence to the reformatory being required for persons between 10 and 21 years of age, the jury here found that the accused was "about the age of 20 years"; the only evidence of age was (1) the accused's own statement that he was 21, (2) the appearance as inspected by the jury; held (1) "that the appearance of an alleged minor may be considered in determining his age", but (2) that the above evidence was in some way insufficient; the learned Court seems to lay down the absurd rule that there must have been some witness testifying to the jury how old the accused appeared, even though the accused is before them!; this pedantic doctrine is based on the old fallacy as to evidence not presentable on appeal); Indiana: 1867, Stephenson v. State, 28 Ind. 272 (age of a defendant as over 14; the personal appearance of the defendant not to be considered because "it will, so far as that issuable fact is involved, deprive the defendant of this right of review"); 1876, Ihinger v. State, 53 Ind. 251, 253 (selling liquor to a minor; the appearance of the alleged minor not to be considered; "there is no mode of putting such evidence upon the record in order that it may be passed upon by an appellate tribunal"); 1878, Robinius v. State, 63 Ind. 235, 237 (selling liquor to a minor; same); 1878, Swigart v. State, 64 Ind. 598 (same); 1885, Bird v. State, 104 Ind. 385, 389, 3 N. E. 827 (same); Texas: 1891, McGuire v. State, — Tex. App. —, 15 S. W. 917 (knowingly selling liquor to a minor; the buyer's appearance forbidden to be considered by the jury, partly on this ground).

[2] 1885, Hanawalt v. State, 64 Wis. 84, 87, 24 N. W. 489 (inspection of an infant to determine resemblance, excluded partly because of no probative value, partly because "this Court upon appeal could not reverse their verdict", since not all the evidence would be presented on appeal).

[3] 1875, Smith v. State, 42 Tex. 444, 448 (disapproving a view of a sow, partly on this ground).

[4] Except perhaps in Wisconsin.

[5] California: 1875, Wright v. Carpenter, 49 Cal. 607, 610 (but the jury are not to "take into consideration the result of their own examination", on the theory of Close v. Samm, infra); Indiana: 1872, Jeffersonville M. & I. R. Co. v. Bowen, 40 Ind. 545, 547 (injury on a railroad track; the jury had viewed the premises; the sufficiency of the evidence considered, and the jury's inspection treated as proper, but not a source of evidence, following the reasoning of Close v. Samm, Iowa, infra; overruling Evansville T. & C. G. R. Co. v. Cochran, 1858, 10 Ind. 560); 1872, Gagg v. Vetter, 41 Ind. 228, 258 (fire attributed to sparks from a brewery chimney; the premises had been viewed by the jury; same ruling); 1875, Heady v. Turnpike Co., 52 Ind. 117, 124 (view is not "part of the evidence in the case"); 1880, Indianapolis v. Scott, 72 Ind. 196, 204 (same; jury's testing a rotten sleeper viewed, held not misconduct); 1885, Shular v. State, 105 Ind. 289, 295, 4 N. E. 870 (principle of Bowen's case reaffirmed); 1887, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood, 113 Ind. 544, 550, 14 N. E. 572, 16 N. E. 197 (general doctrine of Cochran's case repudiated, except perhaps where inspection is the chief source of evidence in the case); 1906, Pittsburgh C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Lightheiser, 168 Ind. 438, 78 N. E. 1033 (injured foot exhibited; L. N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood followed); Iowa: 1869, Close v. Samm, 27 Ia. 503, 507 (trespass by flowage upon land: a jury's view allowed; their view held not a source of evidence, so as to prevent a ruling as to the sufficiency of the evidence in the record; see quotation post); 1892, Morrison v. R. Co., 84 Ia. 663, 51 N. W. 75; 1895, Moore v. R. Co., 93 Ia. 484, 61 N. W. 992 (collision on a railway track; view held improper because of an experiment with an engine); 1906, Mier v. Phillips F. Co., 130 Ia. 570, 107 N. W. 621 (trespass in mining coal; "evidence afforded by the condition of the premises on a view" is not permissible); Kansas: 1889, Topeka v. Martineau, 42 Kan. 387, 22 Pac. 419 (instruction to consider "the result of your observation in connection with the evidence", approved; theory that the results cannot be considered on appeal, repudiated); Massachusetts: 1834, Parks v. Boston, 15 Pick. 198, 200, 209 (Messrs. Rand and Dexter raised the point that if the knowledge acquired by a view were to be used, "a new trial could never be granted on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence in cases where a view was had; for it would be impossible to say how far the jury acted upon their own knowledge, and how far upon the testimony offered by the parties"; but Shaw, C. J., repudiated this and referred to "knowledge acquired by the view" as proper); Missouri: 1885, State v. Stair, 87 Mo. 268, 272 (bloodstained clothing of the deceased, identified by witness, shown to the jury; "the argument that these garments were not and could not be filed with the bill of exceptions,

(2) But unfortunately the reasons upon which this repudiation has proceeded have not always been sound ones, — have indeed sometimes been dangerous and misleading.

The correct reasons for the repudiation are the following:

First, the principle which allows a superior court to review the evidence given at a trial below does not necessarily imply that the evidence is to be stated and incorporated in its entirety but only so far as it is feasible to do so; and, so far as legislation has introduced new modes of revision by superior courts, it cannot be supposed to have intended by implication to change established modes of trial.[6] In the second place, there is not the slightest precedent for such a novel suggestion; for it was never made at the bar until 1834 and never judicially recognized until 1858, and yet jury-views and other modes of autoptic proference had long been established methods in procedure. In the third place, the Courts had already established a much more radical doctrine to the contrary effect, namely, that a verdict objected to as against the weight of evidence might nevertheless be supported on appeal for the very reason that the jury might have proceeded in part upon knowledge obtained at a view which could not be fully laid before the superior court:

1840, SHAW, C. J., in Davis v. Jenny, 1 Metc. 222 (denying the proposition that a Court cannot set aside a verdict based upon inspection): "The authority of the Court to set aside a verdict does not depend upon the nature and quality of the evidence upon which the jury have found it; though it often happens that the character of the evidence is such as to afford the jury much better means of judging of it than the Court can have of reviewing it, — as where much depends upon localities and the jury have a view, or upon minute circumstances and there is conflicting testimony, or upon the credit of a witness who is strongly impeached by one set of witnesses and supported by another. In all such cases the consideration that the jury had means of judging of facts which cannot afterwards be laid before the Court in their complete strength and fulness will always have a prevailing and often a decisive influence upon the judgment of the Court insupport of the verdict."[7] and therefore should not have been examined by the jurors, is no reason for excluding them; the descriptive evidence is sufficient to enable this Court to pass upon the competency and relevancy of the evidence"); South Carolina: 1904, Rose v. Harllee, 69 S. C. 523, 48 S. E. 541 (a statute provided that a mortgage of chattels should not be valid unless the description in the document was "in writing or typewriting, but not printed"; in an action on such a mortgage, the jury found a verdict based on the document being valid, and the judge ordered a new trial because the description was printed; held, that the order could not be reversed "on the ground that there was no evidence of the description being printed"); Texas: 1883, Hart v. State, 15 Tex. App. 202, 228 (repudiating the doctrine entirely; see quotation post).

In Vermont the opposite extreme has been reached; a verdict is set aside upon the court's inspection of a chattel in the brief: 1919, Riggie v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 93 Vt. 282, 107 Atl. 126 (verdict set aside, the plaintiff having been injured by the slipping of the dog in a railroad jack; the opinion says that "the jack was a piece of real evidence, and of all proof was the most satisfactory and convincing").

[6] 1869, Wright, J., diss., in Close v. Samm, 27 Ia. 503, 513 ("The Legislature doubtless considered this very difficulty, and yet deemed it better to give this power (the Court judging when it should be exercised), even though the difficulty of knowing upon what the verdict was based, than to withhold it entirely"). Compare the following: 1899, Bridgewater v. State, 153 Ind. 560, 55 N. E. 737 (reproving the attachment of knives, etc., to the bill of exceptions on appeal).

[7] Accord: Eng. 1670, Vaughan, C. J., in Bushel's Case, 6 How. St. Tr. 999, 1011, Vaughan 135 ("The evidence which the jury have of the fact is much other than that [deposed in Court]; for . . . 4. In many cases the jury are to have view necessarily, in many by consent, for their better information; to this evidence likewise the judge is a stranger");

Finally, the sanction of such a doctrine as the present one would lead to the absurd and impracticable consequence that autoptic proference, as a source of the jury's belief, should be radically prohibited. The following passage expounds the correct reasons for repudiating such a doctrine:

1883, WHITE, P. J., in Hart v. State, 15 Tex. App. 202, 228: "[One of the objections to exhibiting the deceased's clothing was] 'because such testimony cannot be made a part of the record herein.' . . . Is it true, or is it a standard test, or even a test at all, that the legality and admissibility of evidence depends upon the fact that it must be such as can and must be incorporated into and brought up by the record? We know of no such rule announced by any standard work on the law of evidence. If it be true, then the identification, the pointing out of a defendant in Court, is not legitimate or admissible because he cannot be sent up here with the record. A witness' countenance, tone of voice, mode and manner of expression, and general demeanor on the stand, oftentimes influence the jury as much in estimating the weight they give and attach to his testimony as the words he utters, and yet they cannot be sent up with the record. . . . How they have impressed the jury and influenced their verdict are facts known only to themselves, facts which must necessarily be unknown to the defendant, to the trial Court, and to this Court, save as they may be manifested in the verdict, because they cannot be written in the record; and yet they are and always have been the best and most legitimate sources from which a correct estimate of the value of oral evidence is drawn. . . . The doubting Thomas of Scripture could not be made to believe that the resurrected Saviour was indeed the dead and crucified Jesus, until permitted to put his fingers into the nail holes shown in the holy hands and thrust his own hand into the wounded side whence the spear of the Roman soldier let out the life-blood of the dying Lord. In a recent case in England,[8] not at present accessible, the defendant was on trial for selling grain by a false measure; to solve the question of his guilt, the Court had the supposed false measure and a standard measure brought before the jury and the grain actually measured from the one into the other in the presence of the jury; will any one pretend to say that this was not the best and most satisfactory evidence to the minds of the jury which could possibly be adduced of the fact in issue before them? And could not the fact be sufficiently stated in the record so as to apprise this Court fully of the nature and character of the evidence and mode of proof upon which the verdict was founded? Clearly so, we think."

(3) But another mode, in favor with a few Courts, of repudiating the doctrine in question, is to propound the theory that the jury's inspection is not an obtaining of evidence, and to hold that the bill of exceptions may therefore be said to contain all the "evidence" notwithstanding the jury has had a view:

1869, COLE, J., in Close v. Samm, 27 Ia. 508 (the trial Court had instructed the jury to find "from all the evidence in the case, and from all the facts and circumstances disclosed on the trial, including your personal examination"; the Supreme Court discussed the objection that the jury should not have based their verdict "in any degree upon personal examination"): "It seems to us that it [the purpose of the statutory view] was to enable the jury, by the view of the premises or place, to better understand and comprehend the testimony of the witnesses respecting the same, and thereby the more intelligently to apply the testimony to the issues on trial before them, and not to make them silent witnesses in the case, burdened with testimony unknown to both parties and in respect to which no opportunity for cross-examination or correction of error, if any, could be afforded either party. . . . [After referring to the additional objection that the bill of exceptions should contain all the evidence,] It is a general rule, certainly, if not universal, that the jury must base their verdict upon the evidence delivered to them in open Court, and they may not take into consideration facts known to them personally but outside of the evidence produced before them in Court; if a party would avail himself of the facts known to a juror, he must have him sworn and examined as other witnesses."

U. S. Cal. 1905, People v. Wood, 145 Cal. 659, 79 Pac. 367 (map used by witness); Ill. 1882, Peoria & F. R. Co. v. Barnum, 107 Ill. 160; Me. 1890, Shepherd v. Camden, 82 Me. 535, 537, 20 Atl. 91; Mass. 1863, Fitchburg R. Co. v. Eastern R. Co., 6 All. 98; Nebr. 1885, Omaha & R. V. R. Co. v. Walker, 17 Nebr. 432, 23 N. W. 348; 1907, Forbes v. Omaha, 79 Nebr. 6, 112 N. W. 326; Okl. 1905, Harmon v. Terr., 15 Okl. 147, 79 Pac. 757, 765.

Contra: 1913, Rockford v. Mower, 259 Ill. 604, 102 N. E. 1032.

[8] The learned judge possibly had in mind the case of Chenie v. Watson (cited post, § 1181), before Lord Kenyon, in 1797.

To this mode of evasion there are two conclusive answers. The first is that, if this theory were sound, then no valid bill of exceptions of any trial has ever been drawn up, since the demeanor of witnesses on the stand is always some evidence on the point of their credit [9] and no bill of exceptions has ever been able to embody this evidence with ink and paper. The second is that it is wholly incorrect in principle to suppose that an autoptic inspection by the tribunal does not supply it with evidence; for, although that which is received is neither testimonial nor circumstantial evidence, nevertheless it is an even more direct and satisfactory source of proof, whether it be termed "evidence" or not.[10] The suggestion that, in a view or any other mode of inspection by the jury, they are merely "enabled better to comprehend the testimony", and do not consult an additional source of knowledge, is simply not correct in fact:

1884, LYON, J., in Washburn v. R. Co., 59 Wis. 364, 368, 18 N. W. 328: "The object of a view is to acquaint the jury with the physical situation, conditions, and surroundings of the thing seen. What they see they know absolutely. . . . For example, if a witness testify that a farm is hilly and rugged, when the view has disclosed to the jury, and to every juror alike, that it is level and smooth, or if a witness testify that a given building was burned before the view, and the view discloses that it had not been burned, no contrary testimony of witnesses on the stand is needed to authorize the jury to find the fact as it is, in disregard of testimony given in court."

1898, BISSELL, J., in Denver T. & F. W. R. Co. v. Ditch Co., 11 Colo. App. 41, 52 Pac. 224: "We are very frank to say we do not appreciate the refined distinction which is drawn by some of the authorities, wherein it is held that the jury are not at liberty to regard what they have seen as evidence in the case, but must utterly reject it otherwise than as an aid to the understanding of the testimony offered. The folly of it is apparent from the constitution of the human mind, and the well-understood processes by which juries arrive at conclusions. Many illustrations which forcibly express these ideas may be found in the cases. If a dozen witnesses should testify that there was no window on the north side of the house from which one man had sworn that he viewed the affray, and the jurors on view should see the window, all lawyers would know that it would be futile, on the argument, to insist to the jury that their verdict must be based on the non-existence of the window since the point had been sustained by a vast preponderance in the number of witnesses. In this mining community, lawyers who have had to do with litigations over lode claims, where the controversy respects the existence of an apex or the continuity of a vein, will understand that if a jury descended to inspect a mine, and the jury had on it a half-dozen miners, it would be folly to expect a verdict if those workmen, from their inspection, concluded that the crevice was a vein, and that it was or was not continuous. If the miners believed from their inspection that the crevice was a thing that they would follow, though a hundred men might swear they could not obtain an assay from it, and a hundred professional witnesses might swear that the vein was not continuous, yet, if these miners believed that the stained seam was a thing which they would have followed in the development of the property had they owned it, their verdict would be that it was a vein, and was continuous, providing the subsequent development showed that at the end of it there was a large body of valuable ore. We are therefore quite unable to appreciate the reasoning by which Courts hold that a charge of this description is necessarily erroneous [namely, that the jury are to determine according to the evidence and their observations]."

[9] Ante, § 946.

[10] Ante, § 1150.

1898, HENSHAW, J., in People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 171, 54 Pac. 833: "[That the jury receive evidence] certainly is the case. If, for example, it were material to determine whether a hole in the panel of a door was or was not caused by a bullet, it would be permissible to remove the panel, to bring it into the court room, offer and have it received in evidence, and submit it to the inspection of the jury. It would not for a moment be doubted, if this procedure were adopted, but that the physical object was evidence in the case. If, instead of so doing, the Court should direct that the place where the material fact occurred should be viewed by the jury, and the jury should be conducted to the spot, and the panel of the door pointed out to them, would it be any the less the reception of evidence because obtained in this way? Certainly not."

1918, RITZ, J., in State v. McCausland, 82 W. Va. 525, 96 S. E. 938. "As to whether or not a view by the jury of some place connected with the matter before it is a taking of evidence is a question upon which there is a very decided conflict of authorities. Many of the courts hold that it is not, but is a part of the deliberations of the jury in arriving at a verdict; others say it is not the taking of evidence, but is simply allowing the jury to see the physical conditions in order that it may better understand the oral testimony; while still others assert that it is the presentation of physical conditions to the jury from which it may be informed as to some pertinent matter of inquiry. The purpose of introducing evidence is to inform the jury of the transaction in regard to which the trial is had, and anything pertinent to that end is proper for the purpose. Frequently in the trial of such cases material objects are introduced before the jury. In homicide cases the garments worn by the deceased are often introduced for the purpose of showing the place at which the wounds were inflicted. Can it be said that this is not evidence? It is stronger and more convincing to the jury than the oral testimony of any witness could possibly be. There can be no difference in the proffer of objects to the jury in the courtroom and such exhibition by taking the jury to view such objects, when they are not susceptible of being brought into court. The reason the jury is taken to view the ground is simply because it is physically impossible to bring it into the courtroom, and it is therefore necessary, in order that the jury may have all of the light obtainable upon the subject to which the inquiry is directed, that it be taken and shown these objects which form a part of the subject of inquiry. In this case can it be doubted that the actual demonstration made upon the ground to show whether or not certain objects were visible from a certain point was the strongest sort of evidence that could be introduced upon that question? Likewise, the view of the jury was the very strongest evidence as to the distance between the scene of the tragedy and the place where the witness was standing whose testimony was questioned. A dozen witnesses might testify that they observed this tragedy from a certain point, and the jury would not believe a single one of them, if from the observation made upon the ground the physical conditions were such as to preclude the possibility of the truth of the witnesses' statements."

The theory that a jury's view does not involve the obtaining of evidence has come before the Courts for consideration in many cases involving the propriety of instructions to juries and the weight to be accorded by juries to wit- nesses' testimony; and, in spite of some favoring precedents, it has in most jurisdictions been repudiated.[11]

[11] The following list includes cases on both sides; the Indiana and Iowa cases have been placed supra, par. (1):
Federal: 1898, U. S. v. Seufert B. Co., 87 Fed. 35, 38 (eminent domain; view may furnish evidence); 1921, Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Berg, 3d C. C. A., 274 Fed. 534 (personal injuries; hook and eye-bolt shown to jury, as basis of inference about cause of break; quoted ante, § 1150);
California: 1875, Wright v. Carpenter, 49 Cal. 607 (the jury are not to consider the result of their inspection as evidence); 1886, People v. Bush, 68 Cal. 623, 630, 10 Pac. 169 ("It is impossible that a jury could go and view such a place without receiving some evidence, through one of their senses, viz., that of sight"); 1898, People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 171, 54 Pac. 833 (a view is the obtaining of evidence; Wright v. Carpenter repudiated; see quotation supra);
Colorado: 1898, Denver T. & F. W. R. Co. v. Ditch Co. (see quotation supra);
Connecticut: 1899, McGar v. Bristol, 71 Conn. 652, 42 Atl. 1000 (after a view of premises by triors, "its situation and state . . . are as fully in evidence as if they had been presented to his consideration through descriptions given by witnesses under oath");
Illinois: 1874, Peoria A. & D. R. Co. v. Sawyer, 71 Ill. 361, 364 ("the facts derived from such examination would still have been a part of the evidence"); 1877, Mitchell v. R. Co., 85 Ill. 566 (view may furnish basis of conclusions as well as other evidence); 1883, Peoria & F. R. Co. v. Barnum, 107 Ill. 160 (jury's "personal observation" a source of evidence); 1884, Culbertson & B. Packing Co. v. Chicago, 111 Ill. 651, 655 (jury may "take into account such facts as they learned by viewing the property"); 1891, Springer v. Chicago (quoted ante, § 1162); 1892, Maywood Co. v. Maywood, 140 Ill. 216, 223, 29 N. E. 704 (an instruction to consider "such facts as they learned by the view, the same being in the nature of evidence and to be considered as such", approved); 1893, Peoria G. & C. Co. v. R. Co., 146 Ill. 372, 382, 34 N. E. 550 ("in the nature of evidence"); 1894, Vane v. Evanston, 150 Ill. 616, 621, 37 N. E. 901 (preceding cases distinguished as involving views under the eminent domain statute; for common-law views, the purpose is merely "to understand and apply the evidence"); 1898, Rock I. & P. R. Co. v. Brewing Co., 174 Ill. 547, 51 N. E. 572 (in eminent domain views, "the conclusions drawn by the jury from their view are in the nature of evidence"); and so the next two cases: 1902, Lanquist v. Chicago, 200 Ill. 69, 65 N. E. 681; 1903, East & W. I. R. Co. v. Miller, 201 Ill. 413, 66 N. E. 275; 1899, Seaverns v. Lischinski, 181 Ill. 358, 54 N. E. 1043 (rope exhibited to the jury; error can be assigned, even though the bill of exceptions cannot embody all the evidence; but a verdict cannot be "based exclusively on knowledge so acquired"; this is a correct way of stating such a rule); 1903, Spohr v. Chicago, 206 Ill. 441, 69 N. E. 515; 1903, Groves & S. R. R. Co. v. Herman, 206 id. 34, 69 N. E. 36; 1904, Illinois & M. R. Co. v. Humiston, 208 id. 100, 69 N. E. 880; 1908, Mercer Co. v. Wolff, 237 Ill. 74, 86 N. E. 708; 1916, Chicago v. Lord, 276 Ill. 544, 115 N. E. 8 (condemnation of land);
Kansas: 1889, Kansas C. & S. W. R. Co. v. Baird, 41 Kan. 69, 21 Pac. 227 (a view may furnish evidence of the need of crossings); 1889, Topeka v. Martineau (cited supra, note 5); 1893, Chicago K. & W. R. Co. v. Parsons, 51 Kan. 408, 410, 32 Pac. 1083 (a view is "at most but one means of bringing evidence before them, letting the thing itself testify"); 1906, Moorhead v. Arnold, 73 Kan. 132, 84 Pac. 742 (ballots tampered with);
Maine: 1890, Shepherd v. Camden, 82 Me. 535, 20 Atl. 91 (jury have "a right to take into consideration what they saw"); 1919, State v. Slorah, 118 Me. 203, 106 Atl. 768 (right of accused to attend a view; "without modifying the prior views of this Court in land-damage cases as laid down in Shepherd v. Camden and Wakefield v. B. & M. R. Co., . . . the purpose of a view is not to receive evidence");
Massachusetts: 1883, Tully v. R. Co., 134 Mass. 499, 503 (objection that a ruling that the plaintiff had not offered sufficient evidence could not be made after a view, repudiated, because such a ruling should take into consideration the contingency that knowledge was obtained at a view; "in most cases of a view, a jury must of necessity acquire a certain amount of information, which they may properly treat as evidence in the case"); 1890, Menard v. R. Co., 150 Mass. 386, 388, 23 N. E. 214 (by a view the jury learned that a flagman had been placed at a crossing since the accident; whether this could be "treated as a part of the evidence", for purposes of comment in argument, not decided);
Michigan: 1922, People v. Harrigan, — Mich. —, 187 N. W. 306 (automobile injury; a view does not supply evidence);
Minnesota: 1894, Schultz v. Bower, 57 Minn. 493, 59 N. W. 631 (removing lateral support; the view is merely to apply the evidence); 1901, Northwestern M. L. I. Co. v. Sun Ins. Office, 85 Minn. 65, 88 N. W. 272 (the jury is not to use the knowledge obtained at a view);
Montana: 1903, State v. Landry, 29 Mont. 218, 74 Pac. 418 (view of a mare; jury's view is only to "enable them to understand and apply the evidence");

The general result is, then, that it is no objection to the process of autoptic proference, at a view or in court, that the bill of exceptions cannot be made to transcribe faithfully the sources of belief thus laid before the jury; but that there are sound reasons for repudiating this objection without a resort to the unsound theory that a view, or any other form of autoptic proference, does not involve the consideration of evidence by the jury.

Nebraska: 1900, Chicago, Rock I. & P. R. Co. v. Farwell, 59 Nebr. 544, 81 N. W. 443 (a view "is evidence");
Nevada: 1919, Love v. Mt. Oddie U. M. Co., 43 Nev. 61, 184 Pac. 921 (title to mining claims; judge's view is not evidence; in any event, it does not suffice to sustain a judgment contrary to the other evidence);
New Hampshire: 1861, Dewey v. Williams, 43 N. H. 384, 387 (not clear); 1917, Carpenter v. Carpenter, 78 N. H. 440, 101 Atl. 628 (cited ante, § 1163; leading opinion by Walker, J.);
New Jersey: 1902, DeGray v. Tel. Co., 68 N. J. L. 454, 53 Atl. 200 (Close v. Samm, Ia., followed; jurors' view of telephone structures apparently held not to furnish evidence); 1908, Hinners v. Edgewater & F. L. R. Co., 75 N. J. L. 514, 69 Atl. 161 (jury's view may be used); 1919, Garland v. Furst Store, 93 N. J. L. 127, 107 Atl. 38 (an appellate court may set aside a verdict for insufficient evidence, even though the jury has had a view of premises; whether a view is "evidential", is needless to decide, "for in no event could it be conclusive");
Oklahoma: 1905, Blincoe v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co., 16 Okl. 286, 83 Pac. 903 (eminent domain; "you have a right to exercise your own judgment, based upon your inspection and observation, together with all the evidence, etc.", held a proper instruction; good opinion by Gillette, J.);
Oregon: 1916, Molalla El. Co. v. Wheeler, 79 Or. 478, 154 Pac. 686 (condemnation proceedings; "the findings of fact must be based on such testimony, in order that the decree rendered shall not be reversed on appeal"; this conception of exclusive judicial power in an appellate court is thoroughly unsound; once there were no appeals, but there was judicial justice);
Pennsylvania: 1890, Flower v. R. Co., 132 Pa. 524, 19 Atl. 274 (a view merely illustrates the testimony; said merely in cautioning the jury not to repudiate the testimony entirely); 1891, Hoffman v. R. Co., 143 Pa. 503, 22 Atl. 823 (approving the preceding case); 1899, Shano v. Bridge Co., 189 Pa. 245, 42 Atl. 128 (eminent domain; the jury may act upon "what they saw and knew"); 1913, Roberts v. Philadelphia, 239 Pa. 339, 86 Atl. 926 (approving Flower v. R. Co.);
Virginia: 1896, Kimball v. Friend's Adm'r, 95 Va. 125, 27 S. E. 901 (view does not authorize jury to base verdict on their inspection);
Washington: 1902, Seattle & M. R. Co. v. Roeder, 30 Wash. 244, 70 Pac. 498 (the jury "are told that, where there is a conflict in the testimony, they may resort to the evidence of their senses on the view to determine the truth; and this, we think, is correct"); 1912, Murphy v. Chicago M. & S. P. R. Co., 66 Wash. 663, 120 Pac. 525 (approving R. Co. v. Rœder);
West Virginia: 1894, Fox v. B. & O. R. Co., 34 W. Va. 466, 12 S. E. 757 (the view is to "better understand the evidence", but the jury may take into consideration the impressions gained by sight of the place); 1902, State v. Henry, 51 W. Va. 283, 41 S. E. 439 (a request that the jury "are not to take into consideration anything they saw or any impression they received at the view", held not improperly refused); 1907, Chadister v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 62 W. Va. 566, 59 S. E. 523 (approving the preceding cases); 1918, State v. McCausland, 82 W. Va. 525, 96 S. E. 938, (see quotation supra);
Wisconsin: 1883, Neilson v. R. Co., 58 Wis. 516, 523, 17 N. W. 310 (jury's view of premises allowed to be taken as source of knowledge); 1884, Washburn v. R. Co., 59 Wis. 364, 368, 18 N. W. 328 (view may be taken by jury as a source of knowledge); 1885, Johnson v. Boorman, 63 Wis. 268, 275 (Washburn v. R. Co. approved); Munkwitz v. R. Co., 64 Wis. 403, 407, 25 N. W. 438 (view is to "assist in weighing and applying the evidence"); 1886, Seefeld v. R. Co., 67 Wis. 96, 100, 29 N. W. 904 (view is to "enable the jury to determine the weight of conflicting testimony"); 1887, Sasse v. State, 68 Wis. 530, 537, 32 N. W. 849 (an instruction "what they saw legally becomes a part of the evidence in the case", disapproved; the Washburn case misunderstood and practically repudiated); 1906, Hughes v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 126 Wis. 525, 106 N. W. 526 (preceding rulings held not to forbid a juror testifying on a subsequent trial from knowledge obtained by a view at a former trial); 1909, American States S. Co. v. Milwaukee N. R. Co., 139 Wis. 199, 120 N. W. 844.

Distinguish the following: 1901, London G. O. Co. v. Lavell, 1 Ch. 135 (judge's inspection of omnibuses, upon the issue whether the defendant's was such an imitation of the plaintiff's as to deceive customers, held insufficient, without other evidence).

§ 1169. View by the Judge. Whenever the judge is the tribunal of fact, instead of the jury, the judge may have view, just as the jury might.

1. This is a time-honored part of the tradition; in the earlier periods, when the judge's share in the determination of fact-questions was much larger than it is nowadays, the annals show copious instances (ante, §§ 1152, 1154, 1163, 1164, passim).[1] Wherever, in modern practice, the facts are tried by a judge sitting without a jury, the judge's use of autoptic proference becomes an equally appropriate mode of ascertaining facts, and is a corollary of his general power to obtain evidence (post, § 2484). The English and Canadian legislation (ante, § 1164) explicitly recognizes this.

The judge, therefore, may equally well proceed from the court-room to the place in issue, wherever such a proceeding would be the suitable one for a jury, to take a "view" in the narrower sense.

2. If so, why may not this method be used before trial? Whenever a litigable occurrence is to be anticipated, and a view beforehand is practicable under the circumstances, such would be the dictate of common sense, e.g. when motor-speeding at a particular point is to be expected; in short, whenever any series of acts is recurring but could not be viewed after suit begun and would be attended by special doubt in weighing the conflicting testimony. —Such an expedient deserves to become one of the accepted methods of the future.[2]

§ 1169. [1] That a judge, sitting without a jury, may not take a private view of premises without notice to the parties, is held in Elston v. McGlauflin (1914), 79 Wash. 355, 140 Pac. 396. No doubt, as a matter of ordinary fairness, such should be the practice. But the reversal of the above judgment, merely because the judge did so, and because he happened also as a resident of the district to be less ignorant of conditions than most judges would be, is a serious error. It perpetuates the judicial straitjacket. It puts off the day when our judges shall be given more trust and more power — more discretion to bend stiff rules of substantive law where elasticity will do justice — more liberty to apply in the procedure of law-courts that directness and common sense which all of us employ outside the court-room. The perusal of the above opinion is commended to all lawyers who desire to test themselves. He who on reading it finds it perfectly natural in result and unrepugnant in reasoning, will know that he is as yet unaware of the spirit of the coming generation, and that he must seek earnestly for light. A good volume for him to read would be "The Science of Legal Method" (vol. IX of the Modern Legal Philosophy Series, 1915).

[2] The following instance of this, by an original-minded trial judge, is perhaps the first precedent: 1922, Aug. 19, Oregon Daily Journal, Portland, Or.: "Except by the lawless, there can be no divided opinion on Municipal Judge Ekwall's action in standing on a Portland street corner with two policemen to see the passing show of traffic violations go by. In two hours, 21 drivers were arrested. In court next day they appeared for a hearing of their cases. Some of them attempted to deny that they were guilty and were met by the announcement from the judge that he was present at the time of their arrest, that he knew them to be guilty, and that he had grown weary of hearing defendants deny charges brought by arresting officers. . . . In personally taking a stand on a street corner and himself viewing infractions of the law, noting the character of the violations and studying at first hand, traffic conditions and needs, Judge Ekwall has struck a new and intelligent note in law enforcement. His course is coöperation that coöperates."

PART II

RULES OF AUXILIARY PROBATIVE POLICY

INTRODUCTION

GENERAL SURVEY OF AUXILIARY RULES

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

§ 1171. Nature of the Rules. The subject of Relevancy, with which the preceding Part is concerned, is primarily one of logic, i.e. of the sufficiency of probative value, — the propriety of an inference. Taking the peculiar point of view of an investigation by judge and jury, the law asks whether a given fact, offered as the basis of an inference to a given proposition, is worth being admitted for the jury's consideration (ante, § 12). Whether the defective operation of another machine is probative to show the condition of the machine in question; whether the testimony of a person who was insane last January is admissible to show the existence of the fact which he asserts, — these are types of the questions with which the principles of Relevancy are concerned. It is true that, in examining those principles, it is often practically convenient (as noted ante, § 42) to treat at the same time the effect of certain principles of Auxiliary Probative Policy properly belonging here, in Part II, because the combined operation of the two sets of principles has often to be considered at one time in order to ascertain the resultant working rule. But this is merely on grounds of practical convenience in exposition.

Assume, then, that these principles of Relevancy have been satisfied, and that certain facts, so far as concerns their logical bearing and probative value, have passed the gantlet and are evidentially worthy to be considered. There still may remain for them another gantlet to pass. They may be amenable to certain other rules, applicable to specific classes of evidential material, and designed to strengthen here and there the evidential fabric and to secure it against dangers and weaknesses pointed out by experience. These Auxiliary Rules have nothing to do with Relevancy as such, i.e. regarded as the minimum requirement for Admissibility. They assume Relevancy, and then under special circumstances apply an extra safeguard designed to meet special dangers. They may be said to be artificial as distinguished from natural rules; that is, they do not, as do the rules of Relevancy, simply analyze the natural process of inference and belief; but they contrive a specific safeguard to be applied where experience has shown it desirable. Moreover, their operation is on lines distinct from those of Relevancy; for the same fact, though it is always relevant to prove the same proposition, may or may not come under the ban of one of these auxiliary rules, according to circumstances having no connection with relevancy. For example, the circumstance that a person planned to execute a will of a certain tenor is regarded as relevant to show that a lost will executed by him was of that tenor; yet, by a certain rule of preference, the document itself must be produced, and only if it is unavailable may this circumstantial evidence be used. Again, by another rule, sometimes laid down, the circumstantial evidence alone will in such cases not be regarded; it first must be quantitatively strengthened by the testimony of one who has read the document. Again, the assertion of a father of a family as to the age of his child is a fact always relevant (in the sense that the assertor is a qualified witness) to show the child's age; nevertheless, it will, under some circumstances, not be received unless it is made on the stand, under oath and subject to cross-examination. Again, the testimony of any person who has seen a testator sign a will is relevant, in the sense that the person is a qualified witness; yet, if there is another person available who has attested the will by his signature, the latter must first be called to the stand before the former can be listened to.

These rules of Auxiliary Probative Policy, then, form a set of rules over and above and independent of the rules depending on the principles of Relevancy. They are distinguished from the rules of Relevancy (Part I) in resting not upon an analysis of the process of inference, but upon artificial expedients designed to avoid special dangers irrespective of the nature of the inference and affecting in common various kinds of evidence resting upon various inferences. They are distinguished from the rules of Extrinsic Policy (Part III) in that the latter do not aim at the strengthening of the mass of evidence but at the avoidance of collateral disadvantages unconnected with the object of securing good evidence. The Auxiliary Probative Policy rules include the most characteristic features of the Anglo-American law of evidence. They are, on the whole, and apart from minor abuses, justified by experience as a valuable part of the system.

§ 1172. Summary of the Rules. These rules may best be grouped and analyzed, not according to their respective policies — which may be complex and varied — but according to the actual operation of the rule — the result which the rule produces in its application. For this purpose the rules seem divisible into five great classes, which may be termed, respectively,

I. Preferential;

II. Analytic (or Scrutinative);

III. Prophylactic;
IV. Simplificative; and
V. Quantitative (or Synthetic).

I. The nature of the Prefcrential rules is that they prefer one kind of evidence to another. This they may do in one of two ways: (a) they may require one kind of evidence to be brought in before any other can be resorted to, and may refuse provisionally to listen to the latter until the former is procured or is shown to be inaccessible; or (b) they may prefer one kind of evidence absolutely, i.e. they may require its production, and, so long as it is available, consider no other kind of evidence, even after the preferred kind has been supplied.

With reference to the kinds of evidence thus preferred, these rules are of the following scope:

(1) There is a rule of Preference for the inspection of the thing itself, in place of any evidence, either circumstantial or testimonial, about the things; this is the rule of Primariness, as sometimes termed (treated post, §§ 1177–1282), and concerns itself solely with documents. The preference here is solely of the conditional sort above-named, and not of the absolute sort. The questions that here arise are, in general, to what objects this rule of preference applies, under what conditions — the object ceasing to be available for production — the preference ceases, and to what exceptions the rule is subject.

(2) There is, next, a preference as between various kinds of testimonial evidence. One kind of witness may, for various reasons, be required to be called in preference to another. Here the two kinds of preference, conditional and absolute, are both found. (a) The chief example of the former sort is the rule requiring an attesting witness to be called. Other examples of this kind of rule are sometimes found in requirements that the eye-witnesses to a crime must all be called, or that the owner of stolen goods must be called to prove their loss, or that the alleged writer of a document must be called to identify it. (b) Of the absolute preference of one witness above another, the chief example is the rule preferring a magistrate's official report of testimony delivered before him. The preference here, when held to be absolute, is so in the sense that this report is not allowed to be shown erroneous, i.e. the magistrate's report is preferred so as to stand against that of any other person whatever. Another example of such a rule is the preference given to the enrolment of a statute as certified to by the presiding officers of the Legislature, the Governor, and the Secretary of State; where this doctrine obtains, these persons' testimony is made to stand against that of any other persons.

II. The nature of the Analytic (or Scrutinative) rules is to subject a certain kind of evidence to tests calculated to exhibit and expose its possible weaknesses and thus to make clear to the tribunal the precise value that it deserves. There is in effect but one rule of this sort, the Hearsay rule. By this rule, two such tests or securities for trustworthiness are required to be applied to testimonial evidence, — the tests of Cross-examination and Conformation; but the second is entirely subsidiary to the first, so that the essential purpose of this rule is that which is attained by bringing the witness to the stand and analyzing his assertions by the potent resolvent of cross-examination. The chief questions that arise in connection with this rule are whether the rule has in a given case been satisfied by adequate opportunity for cross-examination, whether certain classes of testimonial assertions are to be received exceptionally without undergoing these tests, and where the line is to be drawn between utterances to which the rule does and does not apply.

III. The nature of the Prophylactic rules is to endeavor by artificial expedients to remove, before the evidence is introduced, such sources of danger and distrust as experience may have shown to lurk within it. These are thus contrasted, on the one hand, with the Analytic rules, which achieve their purpose by exposing the weaknesses to plain view, and, on the other hand, with the Quantitative rules, which effect their object by cumulating a quantity of evidence sufficient to outweigh its individual weaknesses. The Prophylactic rules employ five expedients, — the Oath, the Perjury-penalty, Publicity proceedings, Separation of witnesses, and Prior Notice of evidence to the opponent. Their common aim is by these expedients to eliminate in advance the dangers which are inherent in certain kinds of evidence.

IV. The nature of the Simplificative rules is to reject a certain kind of evidence which though in itself relevant and trustworthy is likely under certain conditions to confuse the process of proof. These differ from the other four groups, as to practical effect, in that they do not accept the evidence when tested or strengthened by some artificial expedient — such as cross-examination, or oath, or numbers of witnesses — but simply exclude it, either absolutely or conditionally. The chief rules are those which exclude (1) evidence offered at an improper time, (2) testimony of an excessive number of witnesses, or of particular persons (such as a judge or counsel) likely to be over-influential, or of opinion, when superfluous and likely to be abused, (3) circumstantial evidence (such as an accused's moral character) likely to cause undue prejudice.

V. The nature of the Quantitative (or Synthetic) rules is that in given cases they require certain kinds of evidence to be associated with other evidence before the case will be allowed to go to the jury. There are three general classes of such rules. (1) A rule may prescribe a definite number of witnesses as the minimum. On a charge of treason, for example, two witnesses are almost universally required; and, on an issue of testamentary execution, two witnesses, or more, are generally required. (2) A rule may prescribe that in given cases one witness is not sufficient unless additionally there is circumstantial evidence of a specified sort. It is sometimes required, for example, that an accomplice's testimony must be thus corroborated, and that the testimony of a woman said to have been seduced or raped must be thus corroborated. (3) A rule may prescribe that one kind of circumstantial evidence shall on certain issues be insufficient without other circumstantial evidence; for example, for the execution of an ancient document not testified to by witnesses, the circumstance of age alone may be held insufficient without the accompanying circumstances of appropriate custody, long possession, or the like; or the exchange of marriage consent may be regarded in certain issues as not sufficiently evidenced by the circumstance of cohabitation. These quantitative rules are in our system of law relatively few and unimportant.

There is no one term traditionally given to this group of auxiliary rules, here termed rules of Auxiliary Probative Policy; but it is necessary now to examine the scope of a phrase which has long been used as covering some of them, — the "Best Evidence" principle.

§ 1173. "Best Evidence" Principle; History of the Phrase. The history of the phrase has been traced, once for all and without the possibility of better statement, by Professor Thayer:

1898, Professor James Bradley Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 489: "The phrase first appears in our cases, I believe, after the English revolution, in C. J. Holt's time. That is an early period for anything like a rule of evidence, properly so-called. Such rules could not well come into prominence, or be much insisted on, while the jury were allowed to find verdicts on their own knowledge; and that power of the jury had been elaborately asserted as a leading ground of the judgment in Bushnell's Case in 1670, by Vaughan, C. J., speaking for the court. Finding the rule, then, at the end of the seventeenth century, let us trace it down, not too minutely. In the year 1699–1700, in Ford v. Hopkins, in allowing a goldsmith's note as evidence against a stranger of the fact that the goldsmith had received money, Holt, C. J. says that they must take notice of the usages of trade; 'the best proof that the nature of the thing will afford is only required.' This is the earliest instance of the use of the phrase that I remember. This or its synonyms is repeatedly used by Holt and others. . . . The phrase now became familiar, and it continued to hold a great place throughout the eighteenth century. Chief Baron Gilbert introduced the expression into his book on Evidence, and recognized the rule which requires of a party the best evidence that he can produce, as the chief rule of the whole subject. . . . It is said in Gilbert's book that 'the first, therefore, and most signal rule in relation to evidence in this, that a man must have the utmost evidence the nature of the fact is capable of.' . . . The true meaning of the rule of law that requires the greatest evidence that the nature of the thing is capable of is this, that no such evidence shall be brought which 'ex natura rei' supposes still a greater evidence behind, in the parties' own possession and power. Why did he not produce the better evidence? he asks; and he illustrates by what was always the stock example, the case of offering 'a copy of a deed or will where he ought to produce the original.' . . . The Courts also were using the same and even more emphatic language. In 1740, Lord Hardwicke declared that 'the rule of evidence is that the best evidence that the circumstances of the case will allow must be given. There is no rule of evidence to be laid down in this court but a reasonable one, such as the nature of the thing to be proved will admit of.' And in 1792 Lord Loughborough said 'that all common-law courts ought to proceed upon the general rule, namely, the best evidence that the nature of the case will admit, I perfectly agree.' But the great, conspicuous instance in which this doctrine was asserted and applied was in the famous and historical case of Omychund v. Barker, in 1744, growing out of the extension of British commerce in India, where the question was on receiving in an English court the testimony of a native heathen Hindoo, taken in India, on an oath conformed to the usages of his religion. In this case, Willes, J., resorted to this rule, and Lord Hardwicke, sitting as Chancellor, with great emphasis said: 'The judges and sages of the law have laid it down that there is but one general rule of evidence, the best that the nature of the case will allow.' . . . An old principle which had served a useful purpose for the century while rules of evidence had been forming and were being applied, to an extent never before known, while the practice of granting new trials for the jury's disregard of evidence had been developing, and judicial control over evidence had been greatly extended, — this old principle, this convenient, rough test, had survived its usefulness. A crop of specific rules and exceptions to rules had been sprouting, and hardening into an independent growth. It had become perfectly true that in many cases it made no difference whatever whether a man offered the best evidence that he could or not, — the best evidence that the nature of the case admitted, the best 'ex natura rei', as some judges said, or the best 'rebus sic stantibus', as others said; none the less it was, in many cases, rejected. . . . As regards the main rule of the Best Evidence, in its general application, the text-books which followed Gilbert, beginning with Peake in 1801, and continuing with the leading treatises of Phillipps in 1814, Starkie in 1824, Greenleaf in 1842, Taylor in 1848, and Best in 1849 all repeat it. But it is accompanied now with so many explanations and qualifications as to indicate the need of some simpler and truer statement, which should exclude any mention of this as a working rule of our system. Indeed it would probably have dropped naturally out of use long ago, if it had not come to be a convenient, short description of the rule as to proving the contents of a writing. Regarded as a general rule, the trouble with it is that it is not true to the facts and does not hold out in its application; and in so far as it does apply, it is unnecessary and uninstructive. It is roughly descriptive of two or three rules which have their own reasons and their own name and place, and are well enough known without it."

§ 1174. Same: Scope of the Phrase. The phrase about "producing the best evidence", then, is merely a loose and shifting name for various specific rules. Each of these stands upon its own basis of principle, and each of them has its own history, independent of the phrase. The rules were not created by deduction from the principle implied in the phrase; but the phrase came to be used as descriptive of the rules already existing. What were these rules?

(1) Chiefly, and usually, the phrase was employed for the rule that the terms of a document must be proved by the production of the document itself, in preference to evidence about the document (post, §§ 1177–1282). This is the use that has longest survived, and its illustrations are too numerous to need citation.

(2) It has also often been employed to designate the Hearsay rule, i.e. the rule excluding assertions, offered to prove the facts asserted, and made by persons speaking out of court and not subject to the test of cross-examination (post, §§ 1360–1810). Testimony on the stand is "best" in the sense that it is not regarded as trustworthy until it has been subjected to this great test of cross-examination. This usage has almost disappeared, but it was once not uncommon.[1]

(3) It was also much employed to designate the group of rules by which the testimony of certain classes of witnesses is preferred to that of certain others. The party is required to resort first to the former, because, for varying reasons, their testimony is regarded as "best." The rule requiring the production of an attesting witness (post, §§ 1287–1321) was the chief of these, and the one most frequently designated by the phrase "best evidence";[2] but this employment of it is also now not often met with.

§ 1174. [1] E.g., 1709, Holt, C. J., in Altham v. Anglesea, 11 Mod. 210.

(4) There are a few scattered instances of the employment of the phrase in connection with certain principles of substantive law. It is sometimes said, for example, that the record of a Court is the best evidence of its proceedings, as compared with other testimony or with the clerk's minutes or docket entries. But the truth is that the Court's written record is the proceeding itself,— the only thing which will be regarded as the 'acta' of the Court; and so the frequent questions involving this subject are in reality questions of the law as to what constitutes for legal purposes a judicial act (post, § 2450). Again, the notary's or magistrate's record of a married woman's acknowledgment of consent to her deed, though sometimes spoken of as the "best evidence", is, as generally treated, not as a preferred testimony to the act, but as the very judicial act itself and the only thing to which the law will attach legal consequences.[3] Again, the parol-evidence rule in general,[4] though sometimes associated with the phrase "best evidence",[5] is in truth not a doctrine about preferred testimony, but a doctrine of substantive law specifying what sorts of transactions are to be treated as acts for the purpose of giving them legal effect.

(5) Rarely, the phrase is still invoked in odd connections, to justify some rule already established on definite and independent grounds.[6]

The sooner the phrase is wholly abandoned, the better.[7]

§ 1175. Primary and Secondary Evidence. The distinction between the "best evidence" that is first required, and the inferior evidence that is allowed when the "best" is unattainable, has come to be designated (apparently through the currency given it by Mr. Christian's essay and by Mr. Best's treatise) by the terms Primary and Secondary Evidence. These terms, which are in themselves not wholly unsatisfactory, are open to serious objections. One is that the rule requiring the production of documents is not a rule requiring evidence, but a rule preferring the thing itself (ante, § 1150) to any evidence about the thing; what is produced is not "primary evidence," in any significant sense; and the term tends to conceal the true nature of the

[2] E.g., 1796, Grose, J., in Stone's Trial, 25 How. St. Tr. 1313; 1804, Per curiam, in Jones v. Lovell, 1 Cr. C. C. 183. It was used in 1744, by Lord Hardwicke, L. C., in Omichund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 1, 45, to designate both (2) and (3) supra; it was used in 1812, by Kent, C. J., in Coleman v. Southwick, 9 Johns. 49, to designate both (1) and (2) supra; and such groupings of two or more of these three rules under the single phrase are elsewhere to be met with.

[3] Post, § 1352.

[4] Post, § 2400.

[5] E.g., Best, C. J., in Strother v. Barr, 5 Bing. 136, 151; Ga. Code 1895, § 5166.

[6] E.g., 1767, counsel arguing in Morris v. Miller, 4 Burr. 2057 (proof of marriage by eye-witness); 1866, Doe, J., in Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 120, 145, 146 (applying it to personal opinion by lay witnesses to sanity); 1886, Vigus v. O'Bannon, 118 Ill. 334, 348, 8 N. E. 778 (used in connection with evidence that a party had no notice of a fact); 1892, Stirling v. Wagner, 4 Wyo. 5, 31 Pac. 1032 (used in reference to one testifying to a long course of business without producing the books).

[7] Professor Thayer's just criticisms (quoted ante, § 1173) on the modern futility of the phrase had long ago been anticipated, in part, by the great exposer of legal cant: 1827, Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IX, pt. VI, c. IV (Bowring's ed., vol. VII, p. 554).

rule's effect. The other objection is that, so far as the term is understood to group together all rules exacting a certain quality of evidence when it is available,[1] it groups rules which are in practical tenor essentially distinct, — for the Hearsay rule and the Attesting Witness rule and the Documentary Original rule cannot be thus united. On the whole, it should be abandoned as more likely to confuse than to clarify the application of the various Auxiliary Rules which naturally form an independent group in our system of Evidence.[2]

§ 1175. [1] 1892, Lord Esher, M. R., in Lucas v. Williams, 2 Q. B. 113, 116 (" 'Primary' and 'secondary' evidence mean this: primary evidence is evidence which the law requires to be given first; secondary evidence is evidence which may be given in the absence of the better evidence which the law requires to be given first, when a proper explanation is given of the absence of that better evidence").

[2] The following is an example of this unsound and futile use of the term: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, §§ 1829, 1830 ("Primary evidence is that kind of evidence which under every possible circumstance affords the greatest certainty of the fact in question. Thus, a written instrument is itself the best possible evidence of its existence and contents. Secondary evidence is that which is inferior to primary").

TITLE I: PREFERENTIAL RULES

SUB-TITLE I: PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTARY ORIGINALS

CHAPTER XXXIX.

INTRODUCTORY

A. THE RULE ITSELF

(a) "In proving a writing"

(b) "Production must be made"

(c) "Unless it is not feasible"

(d) "Of the writing itself"

(e) "Whenever the purpose is to establish its terms"

B. Exceptions to the Rule

C. RULES ABOUT SECONDARY EVIDENCE OF CONTENTS (COPIES, DEGREES OF EVIDENCE, ETC.)

INTRODUCTORY

§ 1177. History of the Rule. The rule requiring the production of writings before the tribunal is one of the few rules in our system of Evidence that run back earlier than the 1700s. In this rule we find a continuous existence, under one form or another, as far back as the history of our legal system takes us. But this history finds the rule in three stages: first, the stage of a form of trial, — trial by 'carta' or document; next, the stage of a rule of pleading in jury trial, — the rule of profert; and finally the modern rule of production in evidence. These stages overlap to some extent, but they are nevertheless distinct.

However, before seeking to understand the evolution of these stages, we must recall the special mental attitude of the medieval mind towards documents; for that attitude has now virtually disappeared, and its disappearance represents the transition from one stage to another of the present rule.

I. (1) In the primitive medieval conception a document directly affecting rights of property or contract (as we should nowadays say) was looked upon as having in itself an extrinsic effect. Its physical, material existence was what counted, and nothing else. Produced — and lo! its very parchment worked its spell. Not produced, — and it counted for nothing. The primitive Germanic peoples knew not the 'carta', or written document; they performed their jural acts by symbolic dramatic ceremonies or gestures. They lived in an atmosphere of what we should now call formalism.[1] And when they migrated south and west, and were absorbed into the neo-Roman civilization, including the customs of transaction by document, the document was still (to them) merely one of the symbols that entered into the formalism of the transaction. Like the wand, the glove, and the knife, it had an efficacy, a magic, independent of its written tenor, — which indeed meant nothing to the parties who employed it, for they could not read.

This medieval conception was still in full force in the Norman times, when English law was shaping, and jury trial was making headway, — say the 1200s.[2]

(2) In such a state of thought, two consequences were inevitable.

In the first place, if a claim rested on a document, the production of the document was in itself sufficient, — just as, in a case dependent on witnesses, the mere oath-taking by the witnesses was the efficacious thing. Hence, "trial by documents" was a special form of trial, — distinct from "trial by witnesses" and from "trial by jury" (infra, par. II (a)).

In the second place (and most important for the present history), the non-production of the document was incurable. To lose one's deed was to lose one's right, — just as to-day to lose a money-coin is to lose its purchasing power. This formalistic conception of the document is copiously illustrated in the Year-Books:

1350, Thomas of Utred v. Anon., Y. B. 24 Ed. III, fol. 24, Pl. 1; detinue for a writing delivered to defendant; defendant demands that plaintiff exhibit the indenture describing the livery. SHARDLOW, J.: "Where the action is wholly on a specialty, if the specialty is lost, the whole action is lost."

1402, Anon., Y. B. 3 H. IV, fol. 19, Maynard's ed. fol. 17, Pl. 14; action on a contract for 20£; plea, as to 10£ he has a bond, and demurrer that the action should have been on the bond. Culpeper supposes that "the bond was burned or lost, and still we have the action on the bond." MARKHAM, J., "denied this, and said that this would be deemed your own foolishness in not better keeping it."

1426, Topcleff's Case, Y. B. 4 H. VI, fol. 17, pl. 1; debt for rent on a lease; during argument plaintiff suggested that even if the lease had been made by deed, and the deed were lost, he should not lose his rent. BABINGTON, J.: "I say that if it were as you say, and he had lost the deed, that it would be adjudged his foolishness for not keeping the deed safely."

This notion of substantive law, then, viz. that a right resting on a document not produced is no right at all; that the production is a necessary feature of the right; that the owner of the document has the whole risk of its existence; and that its non-production is inexcusable and incurable, is in the background of all procedure, and does not disappear entirely until the early 1800s; though it was gradually weakening and being whittled away through the preceding century or two.

§ 1177. [1] The various aspects of this formalism are more fully noted post, §§ 2404, 2426, 2462 (history of the Parol Evidence rules), and § 2032 (history of rules of number of witness).

[2] Distinguish here the conception of the Parol Evidence rule of a document as constituting or embodying the right. This is a fairly modern conception (post, § 2426). The discrimination may to us seem a mere subtlety, and in any event our attempts to follow the medieval mind must be more or less speculative. But the medieval conception involved in the present principle is that the physical, material document, when shown, has an intrinsic magical effect in proving the case, just as does the endurance of the ordeal or the pronouncing of oath. On the other hand, the Parol Evidence rule signifies that a right is embodied in the document, not in the oral utterances of the parties; and this problem had not arisen for medieval thought.

Professor Ames has thus summed up its development:

1895, Professor James Barr Ames, Specialty Contracts and Equitable Defences (Harvard Law Review, IX, 49): "It has been often said that a seal imports a consideration, as if a consideration were as essential in contracts by specialty as it is in the case of parol promises. But it is hardly necessary to point out the fallacy of this view. It is now generally agreed that the specialty obligation, like the Roman 'stipulatio', owes its validity to the mere fact of its formal execution. The true nature of a specialty as a formal contract was clearly stated by Bracton: — 'Prescripturam vero obligatur quis, ut si quis scripserit alicui se debere, sive pecunia numerata sit sive non, obligatur ex scriptura.'

"The specialty being the contract itself, the loss or destruction of the instrument would logically mean the loss of all the obligee's rights against the obligor. And such was the law. 'If one loses his obligation, he loses his duty.' 'Where the action is upon a specialty, if the specialty is lost, the whole action is lost.' [3]

"The injustice of allowing the obligor to profit at the expense of the obligee by the mere accident of the loss of the obligation is obvious. But this ethical consideration was irrelevant in a court of common law. It did finally prevail in Chancery, which, in the seventeenth century, upon the obligee's affidavit of the loss or destruction of the instrument, compelled the obligor to perform his moral duty. A century later the common-law judges, not to be outdone by the chancellors, decided, by an act of judicial legislation, that if profert of a specialty was impossible by reason of its loss or destruction, the plaintiff might recover, nevertheless, upon secondary evidence of its contents."

(3) This medieval, magical, formal, technical view of a documentary right was of course bound to yield under the Rationalism of the 1700s. By the end of that century, even Lord Kenyon, a mainstay of conservatism, is found conceding that the conception was an anachronism:

1789, L. C. J. KENYON, in Read v. Brookman, 3 T. R. 151, 156: "It does seem to militate against every idea of reason and justice to say that because deeds, which are in their nature perishable, cannot always be preserved, a party who is to derive a benefit or title under them shall be bereaved of that title in the event of their being lost."

1802, L. C. ELDON, in Ex parte Greenway, 6 Ves. Jr. 812: "Since I have sat here, I have found in Lord Hardwicke's own hand (and he was one of the greatest lawyers who ever sat in Westminster Hall) his most positive declarations that upon such an instrument [a bond] it is impossible to maintain an action without a profert. The law is however now settled otherwise."

The change of rules to conform to the modern conception took place, as might have been expected, by gradual stages only. It came earlier in chancery than at common law; and it came at different times, and by different series of precedents, for deeds, for bonds, and for commercial paper. So slow was [3] The authorities cited by Professor Ames include the Year-Book cases above quoted. Add the following: 1291, Haubrand's Bill (defendants detain from plaintiff "six charters of houses" as to which he is being sued, "and he cannot vouch without these charters"; Select Bills in Eyre, ed. Bolland, p. 8, Selden Society's Pub. vol. XXX, 1914).

Early instances of the Chancellor's intervention to give relief against the consequences of this principle are collected in Barbour's History of Contract in Early English Equity, p. 100 (Oxford Studies in Social and Legal History, IV, 1914).

its arrival for the latter class of instruments that, in the prolific era of American legislation of the early 1800s, it was still deemed worth while to enact statutes enabling the owner of lost commercial paper to maintain his action notwithstanding (post, § 1197).

II. Having thus traced the substantive conception of documentary right underlying the procedure, we are now in a position to follow the development of the procedure.

The party whose claim rested on a document must produce and show it, or lose his claim: such was, of course, the procedural consequence of the substantive idea. But the development of it passed through three broad stages:

(1) Trial by Documents. This is the primitive aspect of the rule:

1898, Professor J. B. Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 504, 13, 97, 104: "The vast majority of documents used in trials in early times were no doubt of the solemn, constitutive, and dispositive kind, — instruments under seal, records, certificates of high officials, public registers, and the like. Such documents, if the authenticity of them were not denied, 'imported verity', as the phrase was, — fixed liability and determined rights. As questions were tried by record and by Domesday Book, so they were tried by other documents. As has been said, 'If a man said he was bound [e.g. by a sealed instrument], he was bound.' Of course, therefore, whoever would use a document of this character must produce it, just as the Court had to have the jury in court, in trial (or proof) by jury, and the record, in trial (or proof) by record. As the trial by jury displaced one after another of the older modes of trial, sometimes these were mingled with it in a confused way; the procedure about joining attesting witnesses to deeds with the jury is probably an instance of this, — a combination of the old trial by witnesses with the newer trial by jury."

Thus in the first stage the contrast and competition is between trial before the judges with deed-witnesses and trial by the jury; but this contrast tends to disappear, and the witnesses go out with the jury and investigate the deed.

(2) Profert in Pleading. In the second stage, the contrast is between documents which are brought into court and formally presented in pleading to the consideration of the jury, and documents which are taken into consideration by the jury without this formal presentation. The jury at this time might freely go upon their own knowledge in reaching a verdict, and their consideration of documents not presented in court would thus at first not be an unnatural thing. Nevertheless, certain questions would arise:

1898, Professor Thayer, ubi supra, 105: "How if one who should have pleaded a charter or record did not plead it, relying, perhaps, on the jury, who might know of it? Could they find a matter of record or a deed without having it shown them? . . . Where a charter gave a ground of action or defence, it must regularly, as we have said, be pleaded; if admitted, it might save going to the assize. If it were not pleaded, one could not regularly use it in evidence to the jury; but the jury could have it if they wished: 'If a charter be put forward to inform the assize after they are sworn and charged, the charter will not be received unless they ask for it. To have the charter inform the assize, one should plead on the charter and say thus: "He did not die seised, etc., for he enfeoffed us by this charter", and then put forward the charter to inform.'[4] . . . In 1339[5] Scharshulle, J., is reported as saying that since a warranty requires a specialty, if it be not pleaded or put in evidence, a finding of it by the assize shall not be received. . . . In 1419–20,[6] in a case much debated, it was held, with some difference of opinion among the judges, that a jury cannot in a special verdict find a deed which has not been pleaded or given in evidence; 'Hull [J.]: This deed is only the private intent of a man, which can be known only by writing; and if the writing be shown, it may lawfully be avoided in several ways, as for non-sane memory, being within age, imprisonment, or because it was made before the ancestor's death, and the like; things which the party cannot plead unless he have oyer of the deed and it be shown.' "

[4] 1292; Y. B. 20 & 21 Edw. I, 20.

[5] Y. B. 13 & 14 Edw. III, 80.

This last passage introduces us to the peculiar nature of the second stage, i.e. the rule of profert, as a doctrine of pleading. The notion that the jury might go upon private knowledge obtained by them anywhere and everywhere was not substantially repudiated until the 1700s; but in the meantime there were various streams of tendency in that direction. One of them is here seen in the policy of requiring the important documents to be presented before the jury in court and forbidding them to be dealt with by the jury unless so presented. This policy does not come into force suddenly; in 1340, the jury found a record, though it was not produced, in part, by "its being commonly said in the country that there was such a plea and such a judgment rendered in the said form."[7] But the rule of requiring profert in court tended to prevail and to become exclusive. Profert must be made (as the judge above quoted explains) so that the opponent, before the jury goes out, may have a proper opportunity to plead against the document and bring his defences to the jury's consideration.

At the earlier part of this stage the contrast is thus between the jury's use of a document properly produced to them in court and their use of one irregularly obtained afterwards. It is not a contrast between the formal allegation of a document in the pleadings and its later production in evidence; for pleadings were oral, the counsel constantly stated facts testimonially to the jury, in connection with the true pleading or statement of the claim, and the assertion or claim about a document — the pleading of it — would not be in essence a separate process from that of showing it, making profert, putting it in as evidence; the allegation and the showing or profert were a part of the same process.

But when the time came that oral pleading disappeared, and the written pleading became a process entirely separate from that of putting in evidence at the trial, the doctrine of profert took on a new phase, the distinctive one which it bears as it appears in our classical common-law treatises on pleading in the early 1800s, at a time when the doctrine was coming to its end. In this phase, the rule of profert now required that a certain allegation be made in the written pleading, namely, after the statement of title by document, the allegation that the document was hereby 'prolatum in curiam'; and though it was not actually produced and attacked, yet the opponent might crave oyer (i.e. the "hearing" it read, a relic of the days of oral pleading and actual instant production) and the proponent's counsel must then send it to the opponent's representative and allow a copy to be taken.[8] In this degenerate and technical aspect of the rule as merely one of pleading, it need not further be considered here.[9] This contrast between the presence and absence of a purely formal allegation in the pleading has no significance for the present subject.

[6] Y. B. 7 H. V. 5, pl. 3.

[7] Y. B. 14 Edw. III. 25; cited in Thayer 109.

But it is necessary here to notice the limits of the rule of Profert, in order to understand the field that remained to be covered by a rule of Evidence applicable to documents in general. The rule of profert applied (1) in the first place only to documents under seal[10] and to judicial records.[11] This original restriction was natural enough, in the light of the history of the seal and its significance for documents. But the rule was later much enlarged. In any event it reflected the substantive idea already described (supra, par. I), viz. that a document on which a claim was based must without fail be produced by profert. (2) The rule of profert applied to civil cases only. This was also natural enough, and for the same reason.

'Pari passu' with the disappearance of the technical substantive idea of documents, the rule of Profert was dispensed with, at least by gradual steps, stretching over two centuries — where the document was lost,[12] or in the hands of the opponent,[13] or, in certain cases, in the hands of a stranger,[14] or was only collateral to the main issue;[15] and these stages took place (as already noted) at different times in chancery and at common law, and for deeds, bonds and commercial paper.

(3) The rule of Production in Evidence. The contrast that remains to investigate is that between a rule requiring the production in evidence of writings and the absence of such a rule.

It is apparent that, so far as the rule of Profert obtained, and from the earliest time of its obtaining, there was in effect a rule of Evidence on the subject; i.e. when, in the time of oral pleadings and evidence-production merged in one process, the rule required a document to be alleged and shown, this was a rule of Evidence at the same time that it was a rule of Pleading. Moreover, even in the later times of written pleadings, there would be a rule of evidence so far as there was a rule of pleading; for if it was necessary in the pleading to allege a fictitious showing of the document and then to give an actual oyer or sight of it to the opponent on request, the document would thus be ready for production in evidence also. The rule of profert in pleading, therefore, virtually enforced at the same time a rule of production in evidence. There was in practice no need of discriminating a separate rule of Evidence;

[8] Stephen, Pleading, 382, and note 86; the author there points out the historical fact that the profert rule was an indirect successor of trial by charter; so also Thayer, ubi supra, 504.

[9] It was abolished in England in 1852; St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, § 55.

[10] 1685, Aylesbury v. Harvey, 3 Lev. 204; 1828, Tidd's Practice, 9th ed., I, 590.

[11] Tidd, 587.

[12] Cases cited post, § 1193.

[13] Post, § 1199.

[14] Post, §:1211.

[15] Post, § 1252.

and, so far as one was thought of, it would run on all fours with the rule of Pleading.

Nevertheless, the law of the early 1800s does present us with a rule of Evidence requiring production, which is by that time so far distinct from the rule of pleading that its scope is much larger and its requirements therefore more exacting, while its application is made as of a rule independent of the Profert-pleading rule. It is thus worth while to ascertain how this independent growth came about; for the pleading-rule of Profert had for some time been crystallized in a technical form and was no longer capable of contributing directly to this expansion of the rule of Evidence.

At what time, then, did the rule of Evidence come to include in its scope the documents exempted by the two above limitations of the rule of Profert?

(a) In civil cases, it is plain that during the 1500s no independent rule of evidence yet required the production of writings in general. At this period, whatever document was not brought in by virtue of the Profert rule in pleading might be established without any production; and this might sometimes suffice even for a record:

1571, Newis v. Lark, 2 Plowd. 403, 410 a; assize of disseisin; part of the evidence was a recovery suffered; objection, "that the recovery was not shewn under the seal, or at least the roll of it should have been alledged particularly, so that the Court might see it, because it is resident in this Court, and they might have informed the jury of it after they had perused it. . . . But all the other justices [except Harper] argued to the contrary. For . . . whatever they [the jury] may take conusance of themselves may be given in evidence by parol, or by copies, or by other argument of truth. But in pleading, a man cannot make himself a title in any case by a record without shewing it under the great seal; and if a record be pleaded in bar, the party shall have a day to bring it in under the great seal (as Weston, Justice, said), and so he shall plead it without shewing it. But such day to bring it in shall not be where it is given in evidence, but the finding by the jury is sufficient, and they may find it of themselves, although it is not shewn to them in evidence; . . . and as they may find it, so by the same reason they may take instruction concerning it from every circumstance that carries an appearance of truth."

Somewhere during the 1600s the expansion and independent growth of the rule of Evidence began. It was during this period that the jury came to be substantially restricted to information furnished them by evidence in court;[16] and the course of this development would naturally put emphasis on the production of all writings in court. Thus the early contrast between the jury's use of a document out of court and their use of it in court would become unimportant. The contrast would come to be between a document actually produced by a witness and a document merely spoken of by him; and the latter practice would be regarded as irregular. By the beginning of the 1700s and onwards the rule is found applied to miscellaneous writings;[17]

[16] Post, § 2032; Thayer, ubi supra, 122.

[17] 1699, Anon., 1 Ld. Raym. 731 (rule applied to a note); 1702, Geery v. Hopkins, 2 Ld. Raym. 851 (applied to East India Company's cash-book and transfer-book and a "note of acceptance"); 1724, Downes v. Mooreman, Bunbury 189 (applied to an agreement between abbot and monks); 1734, R. v. Canterbury, Ridgw. temp. Hardw. 81 (applied to statutes of All Souls College); 1737, Goodier v. Lake, 1 Atk. 446 (applied to "an original note of hand"); 1750, Cole v. Gibson, although when a formal statement of it is made, the scope is still sometimes not so broad.[18] Only by the beginning of the 1800s do the practitioners who were writers of treatises explicitly state it to cover all kinds of writings.[19] Moreover, all through the 1700s the rule was understood not to apply to writings which were only "collateral" to the issue,[20] — a limitation borrowed from the profert tradition; and this restriction, though it did not expressly exempt from the rule unsealed writings, must no doubt practically have had some influence, for many of the miscellaneous writings, particularly letters, would usually be "collateral" to the issue. Nevertheless, that restriction does not account for the recorded practice, as the criminal trials show.

(b) In criminal cases, the rule appears, as late as the 1600s, not to have been settled upon as broadly applicable, even to records:

1640, Earl of Strafford's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 1427, 1432, 1434; the prosecution charged among other things, "1, that by proclamation he had restrained selling of flax; 2, that he had ordered the making of yarn of such and such lengths and number of threads; . . . for proof hereof they brought, 1, the proclamation about the restraint; 2, the warrant for seizing the forfeited goods"; then, proceeding, they charged the unlawful billeting of soldiers on private persons, and "Serjeant Savil was called, who produced the copy of the warrant upon which he had settled the soldiers"; then the defendant objected that this copy was no evidence, "1, because no transcript, but the original only, can make faith before the King's Bench in a matter of debt; . . . if copies be at any time received, they are such as are given in upon oath to have been compared with the originals which are upon record", and that this copy was not only not so sworn but that the Serjeant was prejudiced to swear in his own exculpation and was therefore incompetent; "the point seemed exceeding weighty, and in effect was the ground-work of the whole article [of charge]"; and "after a very hot contestation" the Lords "resolved that the copy should not be admitted, and desired them to proceed to other proofs", which consisted of impartial testimony that "he heard of such a warrant", and "he hath seen such a warrant under the deputy's hand and seal."

Certain it is that through this whole century no fixed rule of production existed for the miscellaneous writings that become relevant in a criminal trial. They were often produced, and often not produced nor accounted for; and when they were accounted for, the explanation was made, as likely as not, only on cross-examination, or to forestall the jury's suspicion or the judge's criticism, and not as a preliminary required by firm and accepted rule.[21]

1 Ves. Sr. 503, 505 (L. C. Hardwicke declared that there was no distinction as to "collateral" evidence; "so it is in the case of letters, which are always used by way of collateral, circumstantial evidence to prove the facts"); 1789, Cates v. Winter, 3 T. R. 306 (license to let horses); 1802, Livingston v. Rogers, 2 Johns. Cas. 488, 1 Cai. Cas. 27 (letter).

[18] 1749, Whitfield v. Fausset, 1 Ves. Sr. 387 (L. C. Hardwicke: "The rule is that the best evidence must be used that can be had; first the original; . . . this extends not only to deeds but to records"); ante 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 253 (deeds).

[19] 1801, Peake, Evidence, 97 ("Of private deeds, or other instruments, the production of the original, if in existence, and in the power of the party using it, is always required"); 1814, Phillipps, Evidence, 435 ("deeds, agreements, etc."); 1824, Starkie, Evidence, 368 ("deed, agreement, or other private instrument"); 1810, Swift, Evidence, 25, 31 (uses indifferently the terms "private writings", "deeds", "instrument").

[20] Post, § 1252.

[21] 1632, Sherfield's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 519, 527 (material document, not produced); 1637, Bastwick's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 711, 743

Under Lord Holt, however, the first quarter of the 1700s finds the rule (coincidently with its progress in civil cases) regularly acknowledged in practice, and applied to all kinds of writings.[22] And yet fifty years later it was possible to dispute and necessary to decide plainly that there was no difference in the doctrine for criminal cases.[23]

As a rule of Evidence, then, in contrast to a rule of Pleading, the last and largest stage of the modern rule as now universally accepted cannot be said to have been reached until the 1700s. No doubt its slow development was due in part to the difficulty of plainly differentiating it from the analogous but narrowly restricted doctrine of Profert in pleading.

(Bastwick's book having charged that the prelates had forged an Article of Religion, Archbishop Laud quoted his printed copies of the Articles to show the Article's presence, and then, since "it is not fit concerning . . . an Article of such consequence . . . you should rely upon my copies", produced "from the public records in my office, here under my officer's hand, who is a public notary", a copy of the original Article); 1637, Bishop of Lincoln's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 803, 804 (libellous letters produced); 1642, Duke of Richmond's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 111, 113 (letter produced); 1644, Archbishop Laud's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 315, 407 (same); 480 (another document not produced; defendant argues, "Why is not this paper produced? Out of all doubt it would [have been], had there appeared any such thing in it"); 1647, Morris' Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 951, 954 (forgery of an act of Parliament; there was "a view of the said writings, being by their lordships' orders brought into the House"); 1649, King Charles' Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 993, 1102 (warrant to the king's soldiers, produced as "the same original warrant"); 1653, Faulconer's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 323, 347, 349, 353 (perjury in a deposition; the original was carefully shown to have been lost, and was proved by copy; a certain petition, material in the proof, was produced in the original); 1656, Slingsby's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 871, 878 (a royal Commission produced and read; but a letter, testified to without production); 1678, Whitebread's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 79, 114, 118 (Oates having testified to the contents of a register of treasonable doings kept by the defendants, the Court tells the defendant, "You would do well to show us your book"; W.: "We never kept any"; then letters found in the defendant's papers were produced for the prosecution); 1679, same set of trials, 7 How. St. Tr. 311, 349, 355, 359 (testimony to a bill of exchange, not produced, because it had been taken by another person; but some letters were produced; L. C. J. Scroggs: "Then say you, 'It is wonderful that since they say they saw such and such letters, they should not produce them'? Why, they did not belong to them"); 1680, Earl of Stafford's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1293, 1318, 1443 (Dugdale, the informer, testifies to the contents of treasonable papers; afterwards, he is asked to explain why they are not produced, and states that they were destroyed); 1681, Plunket's Trial, 8 How. St. Tr. 447, 458 (documents' contents given without accounting for them), 475 (papers produced); 1682, Lord Grey's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 127, 147 (important letter of defendant referred to by plaintiff's witness, but not produced because she "had it not here"); 1685, Fernley's Trial, 11 How. St. Tr. 381, 423 (production not asked for); 1696, Charnock's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 1377, 1402 (same); 1696, Rookwood's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 139, 199 (list of names given to witness by defendant; testified to without producing or accounting for it); 1702, Swendsen's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 559, 582 (forcible marriage; the terms of the license testified to without producing it).

[22] 1696, Vaughan's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 485, 519 (Witness: "I had a letter about it"; L. C. J. Holt: "Where is that letter?"; Witness: "I have it not here"; L. C. J.: "Give not an evidence of a letter, without the letter were here; it ought to have been produced"); 1704, Tutchin's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 1095, 1111, 1114 (libel; certain original papers required to be accounted for); 1717, Francia's Trial, 15 How. St. Tr. 897, 921 (contents of letter stated without producing; but afterwards, on objection, production offered); 1722, Layer's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 93, 170, 176, 182, 186 (contents of letters stated without producing; afterwards their absence is accounted for on cross-examination). In 1802 McNally (on Evidence), writing chiefly for criminal cases, does not mention the rule.

[23] 1772, Buller, J., in Att'y-Gen'l v. Le Merchant, 2 T. R. 201 ("The rule of evidence in both cases [criminal and civil] is the same, that is, to have the best evidence that is in the power of the party to produce, which means that, if the original can possibly be had, it shall be required"; here, applying it to a letter); 1808, Com. v. Messinger, 1 Binn. 273, 274, 282.

§ 1178. Analysis of Topics. In following the application of the rule, it will be convenient to divide the subject under three heads: A. the Rule of Production itself; B. the Exceptions; C. the Accessory Rules applicable in case of non-production, — these last depending on separate principles of Evidence.

A. The Rule of Production may be stated, for convenience in examining its details and distinctions, in the following parts: [1]

(a) In proving a Writing,
(b) Production must be made,
(c) Unless it is not feasible,
(d) Of the writing itself,
(e) Whenever the purpose is to establish its terms.

A. The Rule Itself

(a) "In proving a writing"

§ 1179. Reason of the Rule. An important question is whether the rule is restricted to writings, or whether it includes also other chattels or material objects. It is necessary, for ascertaining this, first to examine the reasons of policy that have been put forward for the rule in general. These may be gathered from the following passages:

1611, Dr. Leyfield's Case, 10 Co. Rep. 92 a: "It was resolved that the lessee for years in the case at bar ought to shew the letters patent made to the lessee for life. For it is a maxim in the law that . . . altho' he who is privy claims but parcel of the original estate, yet he ought to shew the original deed to the Court; and the reason that deeds being so pleaded shall be shewed to the Court is that to every deed two things are requisite and necessary; the one, that it be sufficient in law, and that is called the legal part, because the judgment of that belongs to the judges of the law; the other concerns matter of fact, sc. if it be sealed and delivered as a deed, and the trial thereof belongs to the country. And therefore every deed ought to approve itself, and to be proved by others, — approve itself upon its shewing forth to the Court in two manners: 1. As to the composition of the words be sufficient in law, and the Court shall judge that; 2. That it be not razed or interlined in material points or places; . . . 3. That it may appear to the Court and to the party if it was upon conditional limitation or power of a revocation in the deed. . . . And these are the reasons of the law that deeds pleaded in court shall be shewed forth to the Court. And therefore it appears that it is dangerous to suffer any who by the law in pleading ought to shew the deed itself to the Court, upon the general issue to prove in evidence to a jury by witnesses that there was such a deed, which they have heard and read; or to prove it by a copy; for the viciousness, rasures, or interlineations, or other imperfections in these cases will not appear to the Court, or peradventure the deed may be upon conditional limitation or with power of revocation, and by this way truth and justice and the true reason of the common law would be subverted."

1641, Earl of Suffolk v. Greenwill, Ch. Rep. 89, 92: "The Court held it very dangerous to admit the contents and sufficiencies of deeds to be proved by the testimony of witnesses, the construction of deeds being the office of the Court."

§ 1178. [1] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), particularly §§ 241, 290, 357.

1696, HOLT, C. J., in Steyner v. Droitwich, Skinner 623, said that though an original may be evidence, "yet a copy would not, for it is liable to the mistake of the transcriber."

1811, Mr. Burrowes, arguing, in Sheridan's Trial, 31 How. St. Tr. 669: "There is nothing about which the law is more sacred than keeping away the vague and fluctuating recollection of the contents of written instruments, when it is possible to produce the instruments themselves."

1828, TENTERDEN, L. C. J., in Vincent v. Cole, M. & M. 257: "I have always (perhaps more so than other judges) acted most strictly on the rule that what is in writing shall be proved only by the writing itself. My experience has taught me the extreme danger of relying on the recollection of witnesses, however honest, as to the contents of written instruments; they may be so easily mistaken that I think the purposes of justice require the strict enforcement of the rule."

1852, MAULE, J., in MacDonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 942: "It is a general rule . . . that if you want to get at the contents of a written document, the proper way is to produce it if you can. That is a rule in which the common sense of mankind concurs. If the paper is in the possession of the party who seeks to have the jury infer something from its contents, he should let them see it."

These reasons are simple and obvious enough, as dictated by common sense and long experience. They may be summed up in this way: (1) As between a supposed literal copy and the original, the copy is always liable to errors on the part of the copyist, whether by wilfulness or by inadvertence; this contingency wholly disappears when the original is produced. Moreover, the original may contain, and the copy will lack, such features of handwriting, paper, and the like, as may afford the opponent valuable means of learning legitimate objections to the significance of the document. (2) As between oral testimony, based on recollection, and the original, the added risk, almost the certainty, exists, of errors of recollection due to the difficulty of carrying in the memory literally the tenor of the document.[1]

§ 1180. Same: Spurious Reasons. It is worth while to note the nature of these reasons, because currency has been given, since the quasi-philosophic treatise of Chief Baron Gilbert, to a reason which is superficially attractive in itself, yet is not only insufficient in principle but quite inconsistent with the detailed terms of the rule as everywhere accepted. This reason has been thus stated:[1]

Ante 1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 4: "There can be no demonstration of a fact without the best evidence that the nature of the thing is capable of. Less evidence doth create but opinion and surmise, and does not leave a man the entire satisfaction that arises from demonstration. For if it be plainly seen in the nature of the transaction that there is some more evidence that doth not appear, the very not producing it is a presumption that it would have detected something more than appears already. . . . No such evidence shall be brought which 'ex natura rei' supposes still a greater evidence behind in the party's § 1179. [1] In Louisiana, Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands, the principles of Spanish law, on which their Civil Codes are based, differ radically from the Anglo-American law; hence the ensuing rules do not necessarily obtain in those jurisdictions, except so far as the rules of the California Code of Civil Procedure, which have also been made law in the latter two jurisdictions, may be deemed to prevail. The provisions of the Spanish system are quoted in § 1225, post.

§ 1180. [1] This reason has been often advanced; e.g.: 1840, Parke, B., in Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664; and in Doe v. Ross, 7 id. 102; 1828, Marshall, C. J., in Tayloe v. Riggs, 1 Pet. 591, 596.

own possession and power; . . . for if the other greater evidence did not make against the party, why did he not produce it to the Court? As if a man offers a copy of a deed or will where he ought to produce the original, this carries a presumption that there is something more in the deed or will that makes against the party, or else he would have produced it."

1820, HOLROYD, J., in Brewster v. Sewall, 3 B. & Ald. 296, 302: "Now the reason why the law requires the original instrument to be produced is this, that other evidence is not so satisfactory, where the original instrument is in the possession of the party and where it is in his power to produce it or get it produced provided he gives notice. In either of these cases, if he does not produce it or take the necessary steps to obtain its production, but resorts to other evidence, the fair presumption is that the original document would not answer his purpose, and that it would differ from the secondary evidence which it gives."

The fallacy about this reason is that, even if it were shown not to exist, i.e. if the Court were satisfied that the proponent of the document was acting in perfect good faith (as, where he had no reason to believe that the original's terms would be needed or would be disputed), it would still be proper to require the document, in order to guard against honest errors of testimony and to allow the opponent to gain such enlightenment as he could from the appearance of the original; the rule should apply to honest as well as to dishonest parties. Moreover, that this is not the reason actually relied upon is seen in certain details of the rule; for the possession of the document by a disinterested third person would relieve the proponent from the suspicion of fraudulent suppression, yet the rule applies equally to that case; and the possession by the opponent himself with the right not to produce it will also serve to dismiss the suspicion, yet the rule applies equally to that case. Finally, if the above reason were the correct one, the rule would equally apply to objects other than writings; yet it is generally conceded that it does not. It may be added that, so far as concerns the above reason, it would have been sufficient to allow the jury to make an inference from the non-production (ante, § 291), and it would not have been necessary to require actual production. This reason, then, while it undoubtedly adds force to the rule in many instances, must be regarded as not forming the real and working reason of the rule.[2]

§ 1181. Rule not applicable to Ordinary Uninscribed Chattels. The real reason indicated for the rule shows why it has come to be generally accepted that only documents, or things bearing writing, can be within the purview of the rule. In the first place, it is in the terms and the construction of language that the special risk of error lies. To remember, for example, the color of a horse is a simple matter in comparison with remembering or even accurately transcribing the terms of a written warranty about the horse. In the second place, it is chiefly in respect to language that slight inaccuracies are likely to be of important legal consequence. A mistake, for example, in counting the number of bushels in a bin of wheat can hardly lead to serious consequences, but a mistake in a few letters of an ordinary deed may represent it as giving to Jones instead of to Jonas or as giving five hundred instead of four hundred acres.

[2] Compare the quotation from Attorney-General v. LeMerchant, post, § 1199.

For these reasons, it is entirely proper that a rule of such strictness should not be applied so broadly as to require the production of anything but writings; and such is the accepted doctrine:[1]

1874, COLERIDGE, C. J., in R. v. Francis, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 128, 132 (not requiring a cluster-ring, said to be false, to be produced): "When the question is as to the effect of a written instrument, the instrument itself is primary evidence of its contents. . . . But there is no case whatever deciding that when the issue is as to the state of a chattel, e.g. the soundness of a horse or the equality of the bulk of the goods to the sample, the production of the chattel is primary evidence and that no other evidence can be given till the chattel is produced in court for the inspection of the jury."

1844, MARSHALL, J., in Clarke v. Robinson, 5 B. Monr. 55 (declining to require production of a slave warranted sound): "It is now contended that as the evidence of one's own senses is the best of which extrinsic facts are susceptible, the testimony of witnesses is of an inferior grade, and therefore should not be allowed when the fact or thing itself to which it relates can be exhibited to the jury. This principle may have prevailed to some extent in the ancient jurisprudence of England, when the jury was brought from the actual vicinage of the transaction which they were to try, and in many cases affecting the realty were sent out to have a view of the premises. We suppose it was never required in cases involving mere personal property that the jury should act upon their own view of the thing. . . . The rule requiring the best evidence does not require that the jury shall in all cases where it is practicable be furnished with the means of personally knowing the fact. Except in cases of written instruments or records, although there may be more satisfactory means of knowledge, there is no higher grade of testimony as a means of communicating facts to a jury than the statement of a witness who has himself had the best means of knowledge. . . . We will not say that there may not be cases involving the condition or qualities of particular articles, in which the party having the custody may be permitted or perhaps even required to exhibit it to the jury as affording the most satisfactory means of knowledge; but the Court must have a discretion in these cases to prevent misconception or imposition."

Nevertheless, it is conceivable that upon occasion the particular features of an uninscribed chattel may be so open to misconstruction and may become so material to the issue that it would be proper to require production; in other words, if the two conditions above named as peculiar to writings occur for a thing not a writing, then the rule may well apply. Lord Kenyon's well-known ruling about the bushel-measure is an excellent illustration of this;[2]

§ 1181. [1] Eng. Accord: 1874, R. v. Francis, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 128 (not requiring the production of a ring said to be counterfeit); 1892, Lucas v. Williams, 2 Q. B. 113 (infringement of copyright of painting by publishing a photographic copy of it; proof of the photograph's being a copy, allowed without requiring the production of the painting); U. S. Ind. 1881, McClary v. State, 75 Ind. 260, 265 (failure of prosecution to produce the knife used in an assault, not error); Ky. 1844, Clarke v. Robinson, 5 B. Monr. 55 (warranty of slave's soundness; to show her condition, production not required: quoted supra); Mass. 1869, Com. v. Pope, 103 Mass. 440 (condition of clothes, etc., testified to without production); 1886, Com. v. Welch, 134 Mass. 473 (illegal liquor-selling; the contents of a tumbler said to contain liquor, and carried away by the witness, not required to be produced); Mo. 1899, State v. McAfee, 148 Mo. 370, 379, 50 S. W. 82 (deceased's shirt, not required to be produced); Or. 1882, Heneky v. Smith, 10 Or. 349, 355 (condition of hat of injured person; rule not applicable).

[2] 1797, Chenie v. Watson, Peake Add. Cas. 123 (assumpsit on a warranty that wheat should weigh 59 pounds per bushel; a witness being asked whether the plaintiff's bushel had not been tried and found to correspond with the public Belford bushel, and the latter but not the former measure being in court, Kenyon, L. C. J., "was of opinion that the question could not be asked . . . without producing the originals; . . . the best evidence the nature of the case would admit of was a production of both measures in court, and a comparison of them before the jury").

and a few other instances, less significant of principle, are recorded.[3] A correct solution is to leave to the discretion of the trial Court the occasional application of the rule to uninscribed chattels.

§ 1182. Rule as applicable to Inscribed Chattels. It is impossible to say that any settled doctrine has found favor respecting the application of the rule to material objects, not paper, bearing inscriptions in words. There are inherent difficulties. It is impracticable to base any distinction upon the material bearing the inscription; for a notice-board or a tombstone may deserve the application of the rule as well as a sheet of note-paper. Nor is it practicable to distinguish according to the number of words; for each number is but one higher than the preceding, and a broker's note of ten words or a baggage-check of a few initials may need inspection as much as a lengthy lease for ninety-nine years. Nor can the purpose of the words be material; for the memorandum-tick made for private verification may become as important as the deed intended for public registration.

No Court seems to have attempted, and certainly no Court has achieved, a satisfactory test for the distinction to be drawn. There are precedents requiring and precedents not requiring production, — precedents often entirely irreconcilable if one were seeking an inflexible rule.[1] But there is no reason

[3] 1835, Lewis v. Hartley, 7 C. & P. 405 (dog identifiable by marks; production required); and some of the cases in note 1, § 1182.

§ 1182. [1] The precedents of both sorts are as follows: ENGLAND: 1706, Feilding's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1347 (Witness: "I know Mr. Feilding by sight; he bought a gold ring of me, but I cannot remember the time"; Counsel: "Was there any posy in it?" "Yes, I graved a posy whilst he took a turn in the alley; the posy was by his direction, 'Tibi soli' "); 1805, R. v. Johnson, 7 East 65, 66, 29 How. St. Tr. 437 (postmark on an envelope; rule applied); 1842, R. v. Edge, Wills, Circ. Evid., 5th Am. ed. 212, Maule, B. (inscription on a coffin plate; rule applied); 1843, R. v. Hinley, 1 Cox Cr. 13 (rule applied to the address on a hamper, by Maule, J.; but he added: "Suppose an inscription on a bale marked 'XX'; would it be necessary to produce the bale?"); 1847, Burrell v. North, 2 C. & K. 680, 682, semble (rule applied to the direction on a parcel); 1864, R. v. Farr, 4 F. & F. 336, Channell, B. (stealing a ring; as a part of the description to identify it, a question was asked as to the inscription; rule applied).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1876, U. S. v. Babcock, 3 Dillon 571, 574 (superscription on an envelope; rule not applicable); 1878, U. S. v. De Graff, 14 Blatchf. 381, 385 (evading customs laws; testimony to shipping-marks on barrel-heads; rule not applicable); Alabama: 1904, Kirkland v. State, 141 Ala. 45, 37 So. 352 (rule of production applied to the date and postmark of a letter); 1915, Benjamin v. State, 12 Ala. App. 148, 67 So. 792 (larceny of a dress; price-ticket on the dress, not required to be produced); Colorado: 1874, Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Miller, 2 Colo. 442, 451, 462 (boxes of a passenger killed on railroad; inscription proved without production; "if a sign were painted on a house, it would hardly be contended that the house would have to be produced, nor can it be said that the law converts the court-room into a receptacle for wagons, boxes, tombstones, and the like, on which one's name may be written"); Connecticut: 1793, State v. Osborn, 1 Root 152 (passing a counterfeit sixteenpence; production required); 1793, State v. Blodget, 1 Root (forged paper-money; rule applied); Illinois: 1906, Young v. People, 221 Ill. 51, 77 N. E. 536 (a card inscribed: "L. Y., 3030 Indiana Avenue, phone Douglas 2685"; production required); Indiana: 1858, Whitney v. State, 10 Ind. 404 (selling lottery tickets, partly printed; production required); 1877, Frazee v. State, 58 Ind. 8, 11 (envelope bearing on the outside directions to the stakeholder for delivery of the stake within; production required); 1878, Caldwell v. State, 63 Ind. 283 (same); Kansas: 1920, State v. Lewark, 106 Kan. 184, 186 Pac. 1002 (knowing receipt of a stolen automobile; rule held not applicable to the number-tag, in the circumstances); Maryland: 1898, Wright v. State, 88 Md. 436, 41 Atl. 795 (rule applied to inscription on wrapper of butter-package); Massachusetts: 1858, Com. v. Blood, 11 Gray 74, 77 (labels of "rye whiskey" on jugs; production not required); Minnesota: 1906, Mattson v. Minn. & N. W. R. Co., 98 Minn.

for making such a rule; the rational and practical solution is to allow the trial Court in discretion to require production of an inscribed chattel wherever it seems highly desirable in order to ascertain accurately a material fact.

It should be added that the series of English rulings in which it was held, in certain prosecutions for sedition, that the banners bearing inscriptions alleged to import treasonable purposes, need not be produced,[2] must be regarded as wholly unsound. The very difference that existed, in some of the trials, in the testimonies of different witnesses as to the inscriptions' precise terms, and the materiality, in such trials, of these differences, should indicate the propriety of applying the rule, within discretionary limits; and it may be thought that those rulings would to-day not be followed even in England.[3]

§ 1183. Rule applicable to all Kinds of Writings. When the thing in question comes strictly within the class commonly termed "documents" or "writings", i.e. things of paper or parchment employed solely as a material for bearing words written or printed in the form of complete clauses or sen-

296, 108 N. W. 517 (death by a dynamite explosion; to prove the numbers marked on the wrappers of the dynamite sticks, the trial Court's refusal in discretion to order production of the dynamite in wrappers was held proper); New Jersey: 1921, Lamble v. State, — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 346 (murder; in proving identity of finger-prints, held not necessary to produce the automobile door bearing the prints; here evidenced by photographs); Pennsylvania: 1855, Bryant v. Stilwell, 24 Pa. 314, 317 ("maps, surveys, and drawings are not to be distinguished from other papers in this respect"; here, a plan of a house); West Virginia: 1914, State v. Davis, 74 W. Va. 657, 82 S. E. 525 (rule not applied to an explosive shell found near defendant's premises).

Compare also the criminal cases post, § 1205, where the rule was assumed to be applicable to paper-money, etc.

Whether in such a case a layman may testify by comparison of specimens, who had seen the lost original but did not know whose handwriting it was, is examined post, § 2004.

[2] 1746, Fletcher's Trial, 18 How. St. Tr. 353 (a flag with the motto, "Liberty and Property, Church and King"; rule not applied); 1781, Lord George Gordon's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 513 (banners inscribed "Protestant Association" and "No Popery"; rule not applied); 1820, R. v. Hunt, 1 State Tr. N. S. 171, 232, 252, 3 B. & Ald. 566, 569 (sixteen flags, with such mottoes as "No borough-mongering", "Unite and be free", "Equal representation or death", "Taxation without equal representation is tyrannical and unjust", "No corn laws", "The rights of man", were seized by the police at a meeting; Abbott, C. J.: "[1] There is no authority to show that, in a criminal case, ensigns, banners, or other things exhibited to public view, and of which the effect depends upon such public exhibition, must be produced or accounted for on the part either of the prosecutor or of the defendants. . . . Inscriptions used on such occasions are the public expression of the sentiments of those who bear and adopt them, and have rather the character of speeches than of writings. . . . . [2] The difficulty of such a deduction [of identity of the things when produced], and the impossibility that must occur in many cases of either producing the things themselves or of showing what has become of them, shows the unreasonableness of requiring the proof of the things themselves"); 1820, R. v. Dewhurst, 1 State Tr. N. S. 529, 542, 594 (similar); 1833, R. v. Fursey, 6 C. & P. 81, 86, 3 State Tr. N. S. 543, 560 (proclamation, forbidding riotous meeting, posted on a building-wall; production not required, on the authority of R. v. Hunt, but the real reason apparently was that here the placard was affixed to a wall, — as in § 1214, post; banners bearing death's head, etc., and "Liberty or Death"; production not required); 1839, R. v. Stephens, 3 State Tr. 1189, 1196 (inscriptions on banners; production not required); 1843, R. v. O'Connell, 5 State Tr. 1, 245 (inscriptions on banners described, without producing the banners).

[3] 1843, R. v. Hinley, 1 Cox Cr. 13 (Maule, J., after quoting the passage of Abbott, C. J., in R. v. Hunt, supra: "I confess that is not very satisfactory to me, for the circumstances of its being a public expression of feeling is no reason why the best proof should not be given. The reason why the writings are to be produced is because that is so much better a way of proving it than having it from the memory of any one else"); 1859, Butler v. Mountgarret, 6 H. L. C. 639 (Lord Wensleydale, upon counsel alluding to the ruling that banners containing words need not be produced: "That is on account of the inconvenience, perhaps the impossibility, of procuring the banners").

tences expressing connected thought, there is no further distinction to be made. The rule is applicable to all kinds of writings. The original doctrine of profert affected only records and instruments under seal, and applied in civil cases only; but by a gradual development, already noticed (ante, § 1177), the rule requiring production in evidence came to be settled, by the 1700s, as including in its scope any and every kind of document, from a record or a deed to a letter or a memorandum, and as applicable equally in criminal and in civil cases.[1]

(b) "Production must be made"

§ 1185. What constitutes Production; Witness testifying to a document not before him. The notion of the rule is that the terms of the document shall be placed before the tribunal and the opponent for personal inspection.

(1) It is not necessary that the proponent of the document should himself be the one actually to bring it in; if it is in court when he wishes to prove its terms, that is enough.[1]

(2) When the tribunal has delegated its function of hearing testimony to a lower tribunal or officer, production there will be sufficient;[2] but production already made before a magistrate or trial Court would not suffice where on appeal the trial of facts is in theory commenced anew in the superior Court.

(3) Production implies either the handing of the writing to the tribunal for perusal, or, if that is not demanded, at least the reading aloud of the writing by counsel or witness;[3] that a witness, for example, tells about the writing's contents does not suffice, even though he has it at the time in his possession in Court.[4]

(4) The production is for the benefit of the tribunal, not the opponent;[5]

§ 1183. [1] The general principle is thus stated in the Codes founded on Field's Draft New York Code: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1829 ("A written instrument is itself the best possible evidence of its existence and contents"); § 1937 ("The original writing must be produced and proved", except as in C. C. P. §§ 1855, 1919).

In Cobb's Georgia Code it is thus phrased: Rev. C. 1910, § 5828 ("Generally, the original writing must be produced and its execution proved. The excepted cases are prescribed by law").

For Louisiana, Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico, see the note to § 1178, ante.

§ 1185. [1] 1593, Wymark's Case, 5 Co. Rep. 75 ("When a deed is in court, one may take advantage of it without having it in hand. . . . When the deed is by one shewed to the Court, it is not respective as to him, but all others shall take advantage thereof"). So for production by the opponent: post, § 1209.

[2] Production before a referee to take testimony will usually be sufficient: 1873, Bohlman v. Coffin, 4 Or. 313, 316. But otherwise for production before an officer merely taking a deposition, unless a statute expressly gives exemption; e.g.: Minn. Gen. St. 1913, §§ 8439, 8440 (production, before officer taking deposition, of account-books or of verified letter-press copies of letters accounted for, to be equivalent to production at trial, copies being annexed to the deposition).

[3] 1860, Hanna, J., in Thornburgh v. R. Co., 14 Ind. 499, 501 ("Upon the introduction of a record it is usually read to the jury by the witness who may have it in charge, or by some attorney who may be engaged in the cause. It is not often, nor is it necessary, in ordinary cases, that it should be handed to each juror, unless in cases when inspection for a particular purpose is necessary").

[4] 1897, Mt. Sterling Bank v. Bowen, — Ky. —, 43 S. W. 483 (that the document is in the witness' hands is insufficient).

[5] 1874, Hilyard v. Harrison, 37 N. J. L. 170 (plaintiff offered tax warrants and duplicates in evidence at a hearing; an order to deliver them to defendant's possession for inspection, held improper; but an order of exhibition for inspection in open court or before a court officer or before the producing party or his attorney was held demandable).

his right of inspection, whether at or before trial, rests on other principles (post, §§ 1261, 1857–1861; ante, §§ 753, 762).

(5) The production is not for the benefit of a witness; hence, the document need not be perused by a witness or shown to him; except in consequence of certain independent principles, as follows:

(a) The rule (ante, § 1025) that a witness must be asked about a self-contradictory statement, before the opponent may prove it, has erroneously been held by some Courts to require that a writing containing such a statement must be shown to him before it is offered in evidence (post, § 1259);

(b) When a witness is asked to identify the signature of a document, the document must be before him (on the principle of §§ 653, 693, ante), because an observation of the specific document, as well as a knowledge of the type of handwriting, is necessary.[6] But where the witness has already seen the document before testifying, that is sufficient;[7] the usual instance is when the doc ment's production for other purposes is excused because of its loss.[8] Moreover, when the witness' testimony does not involve an identification of the handwriting of the document, he need not have it before him when testifying.[9] Whether a document must be sent out of the jurisdiction for an absent deponent ought to depend on the circumstances.[10] Statutes often provide for sending a will to an attesting witness who testifies by deposition.[11]

§ 1186. Production of Original always Allowable. The rule is that production must be made; it says nothing, in itself, as to whether production may be made. But it has already been seen (ante, § 1151) that autoptic proference, or production for the tribunal's inspection, of any evidential object is always allowable, in the absence of any specific rule of policy to the contrary. If then a party who, under the present principle, is exempted from producing

[6] 1841, Neale v. McKinstry, 7 Mo. 128, 132 (witness testifying by deposition to a note not before him, excluded).

[7] 1824, Dartnall v. Howard, Ry. & Mo. 169 (where it was necessary to identify the defendant as one who had signed an answer in Chuncery not produced, a person who had examined the signature was allowed to testify, without having the writing before him).

[8] 1849, Segond v. Roach, 4 La. An. 54; 1888, Vye v. Alexander, 28 N. Br. 89, 95; 1889, Alexander v. Vye, 16 Can. Sup. 501 (Gwynne, J., diss., quoted ante, § 697); 1890, Halifax Banking Co. v. Smith, 29 N. Br 462, 469 (Vye v. Alexander approved; here, a writing not produced. but admitted to be genuine).

[9] 1902, Harkless v. Smith, 115 Ga. 350, 41 S. E. 634 (a deed-copy may be used for a deposition, where the witness speaks only to the consideration of the deed as identified by its tenor); 1899, Clark v. Butts, 78 Minn. 373, 81 N. W. 11 (whether a name was in a deed before execution; deed need not be shown to witness; otherwise perhaps for expert opinion to alteration). 1915, Peters v. Lohr, 35 S. D. 372, 152 N. W. 504 (deposition based on a photographic copy of a record; following Harkless v. Smith and Clark v. Butts; cited more fully ante, § 797, n. 4).

[10] 1809, Amory v. Fellowes, 5 Mass. 219, 225 ("It may not be necessary to send the will back after it has been filed here, to obtain the testimony of the subscribing witnesses. . . . But a case may be so circumstanced that the will must be sent back to the subscribing witnesses"); 1854, Commercial Bank v. Union Bank, 11 N. Y. 203, 209 (draft shown by copy in the deposition-interrogatories; "a party is never called upon to risk the loss of valuable original papers, by annexing them to a commission to be transmitted to a distant State or country for execution").

[11] Cal. C. C. P. 1872, §§ 1308, 1310 (see quotation post, § 1304); Colo. Comp. L. 1921, § 5207; D. Col. Code 1919, § 132; Miss. Code 1906, § 1994, Hem. § 1659; Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 520; N. Y. St. 1913, c. 412, p. 871 (amending C. C. P. § 2618). R. I. Gen. L. 1919, C. 310, § 15; Va. Code 1919, § 5252.

Compare the cases as to photographic copies of documents submitted to handwriting witnesses: ante, § 797, post, §§ 2010, 2019.

a document in proof of its contents, and might prove them by copy if he wished, prefers nevertheless to produce and show the original, he may of course do so.

This principle seems obvious enough, but it has constantly to be pointed out anew by the Courts:[1]

1878, CAMPBELL, J., in Clymer v. Cameron, 55 Miss. 593, 595: "It is only as a substitute for the original that a copy is ever admitted. The original is always the best evidence, and it is only because of the impossibility or inconvenience of producing the original that § 1186. [1] Accord: ENGLAND: 1720, Brocas v. Mayor, 1 Stra. 307 (municipal corporate records).

CANADA: 1841, Linton v. Wilson, 1 Kerr N. Br. 223, 232, 241, 245 ("When a statute says that a copy shall be evidence, I cannot think that it excludes the original unless it expressly says the copy shall be the only evidence").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1903, Bradley T. Co. v. White, 58 C. C. A. 55, 121 Fed. 779 (court files); U. S. St. 1904, April 19, c. 1398, Stat. L. vol. 33, p. 186, Code § 683 (original applications, etc., in the land office, may be produced; cited more fully post, § 1676, n. 9); Alabama: 1842, Lawson v. Orear, 4 Ala. 156, 158 (Court record books); 1844, Carwile v. House, 6 Ala. 710, 711 (execution); 1887, Stevenson v. Moody, 85 Ala. 33, 35, 4 So. 595 (Probate Court record); Colorado: 1900, McAllister v. People, 28 Colo. 156, 63 Pac. 308; Connecticut: 1858, Gray v. Davis, 27 Conn. 447, 454 ("The object being to lay before the triers the real contents of the record, it would be absurd to hold that the best possible evidence, when adduced, should be excluded because inferior evidence by copy would be admissible"); Florida: 1903, Ferrell v. State, 45 Fla. 26, 34 So. 220 (record of marriage license); 1921, Wenske v. Salley, 82 Fla. 224, 89 So. 653 (original record of chancery suit, admitted); Georgia: 1855, Dobbs v. Justices, 17 Ga. 624, 629, 1884, Rogers v. Tillman, 72 Ga. 479, 481 (record of Court of another county, admitted; "a certified copy of this record could not have been higher or better evidence than the original"; but compare the Georgia cases infra, note 4); 1907, Sellers v. Page, 127 Ga. 633, 56 S. E. 1011 (record of same court); Illinois: 1870, Willoughby v. Dewey, 54 Ill. 266, 268 (original justice's docket); 1875, Stevison v. Earnest, 80 Ill. 513, 517 (records of Court; general principle affirmed); 1886, Taylor v. Adams, 115 Ill. 570, 573, 4 N. E. 837 (foreclosure proceedings); Indiana: 1860, Wiseman v. Risinger, 14 Ind. 461; 1865, Green v. Indianapolis, 25 Ind. 490, 492 (proceedings of a municipal corporation); 1874, James v. Turnpike Co., 47 Ind. 379, 381 (articles of association); 1876, Britton v. State, 54 Ind. 535, 541 (justice's judgment); 1878, Kennard v. Carter, 64 Ind. 31, 40 (same); 1878, Miller v. Harrington, 61 Ind. 503, 508 (same); 1880, Jones v. Levi, 72 Ind. 586, 591; 1881, Iles v. Watson, 76 Ind. 359, 360; 1881, Hall v. Bishop, 78 Ind. 370, 372; 1883, Anderson v. Ackerman, 88 Ind. 481, 492; Kansas: St. 1905, c. 323 (quoted post, § 1225, n. 1; nothing therein "shall prevent the production of the original"); Louisiana: 1817, Baudin v. Pollock, 4 Mart. 613 (notary's records); 1827, Priou v. Adams, 5 Mart. N. S. 691; Maine: 1874, Sawyer v. Garcelon, 63 Me. 25 (record of conviction; "strictly speaking, it is the best and only original evidence of the facts recited in it; a verified copy of the record, though admissible, is still only secondary evidence"); Massachusetts: 1839, Brooks v. Daniels, 22 Pick. 498, 500 (record of a court-martial's proceedings); 1850, Odiorne v. Bacon, 5 Cush. 185, 190 (record of a probate court; a statutory sanction for attested copies does not prevent the original's use); 1850, Greene v. Durfee, 6 Cush. 362 (bankrupt's order of discharge); 1859, Day v. Moore, 13 Gray 522, 524 (original writ, return, and execution); Michigan: 1856, Lacey v. Davis, 4 Mich. 140, 150 (deed recorded); Mississippi: 1878, Clymer v. Cameron, 55 Miss. 593 (official record of tax-sales); Missouri: 1907, Carp v. Queen Ins. Co., 203 Mo. 295, 101 S. W. 78 (judicial record); New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 394 (docket of justice in adjoining State may be produced, if properly authenticated by justice's oral testimony); North Dakota: 1913, Harmening v. Howland, 25 N. D. 38, 141 N. W. 131 (U. S. land-office records); Ohio: 1833, Winthrop v. Grimes, Wright 330; 1829, King v. Kenny, 4 Oh. 79, 83 (highway commissioners' records); 1867, Sheehan v. Davis, 17 Oh. St. 571, 580 (deed), Pennsylvania: 1826, Eisenhart v. Slaymaker, 14 S. & R. 153, 155; 1851, Garrigues v. Harris, 16 Pa. St. 344, 351; 1856, Miller v. Hale, 26 Pa. St. 432, 435 (assessment book); Texas: 1856, Houze v. Houze, 16 Tex. 598, 601 (judicial record); 1904, Manning v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 326, 81 S. W. 957 (judicial record), Virginia: 1858, Bullard v. Thomas, 19 Gratt. 14, 18 (order-book from another Court). Washington: 1902, Smith v. Veysey, 30 Wash. 18, 70 Pac. 94 (homestead declaration), Wisconsin: 1867, Weisbrod v. R. Co., 21 Wis. 602, 616.

a copy is admitted in its stead in any case. . . . It is because the original is evidence that a copy may be received; and it is always allowable to introduce an original record where it can be produced."

The same principle allows the production of the record-book of recorded or registered deeds, so far as it may be regarded as an original with reference to certified copies of it;[2] but here the question may further arise how far the registration is authorized by law, and how far even the record-book as only a copy of the original is admissible; so that other principles (post, § 1224) must be understood to be equally involved.

In a few instances, original public records have been excluded; but those rulings may be attributed to one of four special considerations: (1) If the law forbids the removal of a document from a public office to produce it in court is to produce evidence obtained by a violation of the law. This, however, is generally regarded as no objection to the reception of evidence, and therefore should not in itself exclude a public document thus illegally removed.[3] (2) Irrespective of any specific prohibition against removal, it has been thought by a few Courts that the policy of preserving public records from loss or injury (post, § 2182) may be incidentally enforced by refusing to accept the original when removed from its proper place and offered in evidence.[4] (3) In some instances the exclusion is apparently due in part to the thought

[2] Ala. 1883, Huckabee v. Shepard, 75 Ala. 342, 344 (register of a deed); 1887, Stevenson v. Moody, 85 Ala. 33, 35, 4 So. 595 (record-book of exemptions kept in Probate Court); 1891, Jones v. Hagler, 95 Ala. 529, 532, 10 So. 345 (record of deed); 1892, Cofer v. Scroggins, 98 Ala. 342, 345, 13 So. 115 (same); 1895, Gay v. Rogers, 109 Ala. 626, 629, 20 So. 37 (mortgage record-book); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1951, as amended March 1, 1889 (record of recorded instrument); Colo. 1873, Eyster v. Gaff, 2 Colo. 228, 230 (deed record-book); Ga. 1898, Richardson v. Whitworth, 103 Ga. 741, 30 S. E. 573 (re-record-book); Ind. 1872, Bowers v. Van Winkle, 41 Ind. 432, 435 (deed-record); 1874, Patterson v. Dallas, 46 Ind. 48 (same); 1881, Lentz v. Martin, 75 Ind. 228, 235 (same); Mo. 1887, Smiley v. Cockrell, 92 Mo. 105, 112, 4 S. W. 443 (deed-record); Pa. 1840, Harvey v. Thomas, 10 Watts 67, 76 ("The words of the law are that copies of the deeds, etc., are to be evidence; now the record-book is a copy of the deed or it is nothing; . . . copies from the record, or the record, have always been admitted as evidence"); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 331; S. Car. 1897, State v. Crocker, 49 S. C. 242, 27 S. E. 49 (distinguishing Duren v. Sinclair, 22 S. C. 361, on the ground that the statutory requirement of 10 days' notice, post, § 1225, applied properly to certified copies only, and not to the record itself, and that in that case no proof of loss was made; Jones, J., diss.).

Contra: 1859, Hanson v. Armstrong, 22 Ill. 442, 445 (record-book rejected); 1894, Johnson v. Drew, 34 Fla. 130, 15 So. 780 (record-book not admitted).

[3] See the cases collected under the general principle, post, §§ 2182, 2183, and the statutes collected post, § 2373.

[4] Georgia: 1892, Tharpe v. Pearce, 89 Ga. 194, 15 S. E. 46 (Alabama justice's docket, proved by himself, not admitted); 1896, Ellis v. Mills, 99 Ga. 490, 27 S. E. 740 (a plea and answer from another Court of the same county; excluded; Atkinson, J.: "The answer to this is that the law has pointed out one method of authentication only, and the Courts are not at liberty to recognize an entirely different manner of proving records. Aside from this, however, upon considerations of public policy, original documents should be excluded in courts other than those in which they are rendered, otherwise the temptation to attorneys and officers of the court to withdraw from the files original records for the purpose of using them as evidence in distant portions of the State might lead to their loss or destruction, and thus produce unnecessary confusion in the keeping of those things which should stand as permanent memorials of the action of the several courts"); 1902, Daniel v. State, 114 Ga. 533, 40 S. E. 805 (county commissioners' records, held improperly proved by original minutes); Tennessee: 1833, Nichol v. Ridley, 5 Yerg. 63, 65, semble (original papers of judicial records, not to be used because of danger to records).

Compare the similar cases cited post, § 2182.

that the genuineness of the original can not be as safely proved by a stranger bringing in the records, as by a clerk certifying to a copy in his office with the records in their place;[5] but this consideration is apparently influenced by other principles concerning Authentication (post, §§ 1278, 2158), and can have no proper bearing on the propriety of using the original when properly authenticated. (4) Finally, the exclusion has sometimes been due to a misunderstanding of the purpose of statutes making certified copies evidence.[6] Such statutes aim usually both to dispense with the original's production (post, § 1218) and to qualify the recording clerk to be a hearsay witness to the execution of the original (post, § 1677), — in other words, to supply additional kinds of evidence. It is therefore a total misapprehension of their meaning to rule that, because they merely make copies admissible, therefore originals are not made evidence; they are not expressly so made by the statute, because they were admissible already without the statute.[7]

§ 1187. Dispensing with Authentication does not dispense with Production. The Authentication of a document (post, §§ 2129–2169), i.e. proof that it was executed as it purports to be, is often dispensed with, by statute, where the opponent, by failing to traverse its genuineness, is taken as having admitted that fact. Nevertheless, the rule requiring Production still applies and must be satisfied.[1]

§ 1188. Dispensing with Production does not dispense with Authentication. Conversely, the satisfaction of the present rule, by some circumstance dispensing with Production, leaves it still necessary to authenticate the

[5] The following cases may be thus explained: 1883, Bigham v. Coleman, 71 Ga. 176, 192 (record of court in another county, proved by attorney, excluded; obscure); 1901, Cramer v. Truitt, 113 Ga. 967, 39 S. E. 459 (original record from superior court, not receivable in justice's court, where not admitted genuine); 1901, State v. Chaney, 93 Md. 71, 48 Atl. 1057 (original affidavit before justice on bastardy charge, held improperly transmitted to circuit court); 1855, Wallis v. Beauchamp, 15 Tex. 305, semble; 1883, Hardin v. Blackshear, 60 Tex. 132, 135.

[6] 1809, Burdon v. Rickets, 2 Camp. 121, note (a statute made the copy of a contract of purchase of a land-tax title evidence; held, that the original was not thereby made evidence); 1897, Belt v. State, 103 Ga. 12, 29 S. E. 451 (original declaration and judgment in another trial, excluded, because the certified copy was "primary evidence").

[7] Distinguish, however, the Hearsay question; e.g. if the question is whether a tax-assessor's list is admissible, the first question is whether the assessor's official assertion not made in court is admissible under the Hearsay rule (post, § 1640); if it is, then, so far as the present principle goes, the original list may be produced, even though a statute declares the official list provable by copy.

Distinguish also the question whether ballots produced are to be preferred as evidence to the finding or certificate of the election officers who first counted them (post, § 1351).

§ 1187. [1] Fed. 1824, Sebree v. Dorr, 9 Wheat. 558, 563 ("The production of the originals might still be justly required, to ascertain its conformity with the declaration, to ascertain whether it remained in its genuine state, to verify the title by assignment in the plaintiff, to trace any payments which might have been made and endorsed, and to secure the party from a recovery by a 'bona fide' holder under a subsequent assignment"; here said of a note); Conn. 1872, New York H. & N. R. Co. v. Hunt, 39 Conn. 75, 80; Fla. Fidelity & D. Co. v. Aultman, 58 Fla. 228, 50 So. 991 (suit on injunction bond, the bond's execution not being denied); Tex. 1853, Matossy v. Frosh, 9 Tex. 610, 613.

Contra: 1899, Knight v. Whitmore, 125 Cal. 198, 57 Pac. 891, semble. For cases under Illinois statutes, see post, § 1225.

On an analogous principle, the applicability of the presumption of a lost grant, arising after twenty years' possession, does not exempt the claimant from producing or accounting for a specific deed which he also invokes in support of his claim: 1845, Reynolds v. Quattlebum, 2 Rich. S. Car. 140, 144.

absent document, by such evidence of execution as is sufficient according to the principles of Authentication (post, §§ 2129–2169); attention has frequently to be called to this plain principle.[1]

§ 1189. Order of Proof as between Execution, Loss, and Contents. The rules for Order of Proof form a seperate body of doctrine (post, §§ 1866–1900). But it will be here convenient to notice the order of proof proper to satisfy the requirements of these two preceding rules when applied to one and the same document.

(1) Execution vs. contents. Where, in consequence of the unavailability of the original, the contents are to be proved by testimony, the question whether the execution (authentication, or, as it is sometimes put, the existence, or the genuineness) of the document should first be shown, or its contents should first be shown, is not easy of solution. On the one hand, it is difficult to prove, for example, that A executed a deed of certain land, without to some extent referring to its tenor to identify it. On the other hand, to allow the contents to be first fully set forth and proved involves the risk of making an impression on the jury such as would be improper in case the proof of execution later falls to the ground. The latter consideration has usually been regarded as the more important, at least for the purpose of establishing a usual rule; and accordingly it has long been common to say that

§ 1188. [1] Canada: 1863, Dickson v. M'Farlane, 22 U. C. Q. B. 539.

United States: Fed. 1897, Carey v. Williams, 25 C. C. A. 227, 79 Fed. 906, 908; Ala. 1859, Shorter v. Sheppard, 33 Ala. 648; 1885, Comer v. Hart, 79 Ala. 389, 394; 1888, Potts v. Coleman, 86 Ala. 94, 101, 5 So. 780; Ariz. 1917, Lally v. Cash, 18 Ariz. 574, 164 Pac. 443 (libel); Cal. 1853, Sinclair v. Wood, 3 Cal. 98, 100; Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1937; Colo. 1873, Hobson v. Porter, 2 Colo. 28; Conn. 1847, Kelsey v. Hanmer, 18 Conn. 311, 317; Ga. 1858, Heard v. McKee, 26 Ga. 332; 1860, Bigelow v. Young, 30 Ga. 121, 124; 1860, Oliver v. Persons, 30 Ga. 391, 397; 1888, Calhoun v. Calhoun, 81 Ga. 91, 6 S. E. 913; 1898, Dasher v. Ellis, 102 Ga. 830, 30 S. E. 544; Rev. C. 1910, § 5761, P. C. § 1022 ("The existence of a genuine original is essential to the admissibility of a copy"); Ind. 1845, Murray v. Buchanan, 7 Blackf. 549; Ia. 1862, Corse v. Sanford, 14 Ia. 235; 1890, Bray v. Flickinger, 79 Ia. 313, 314, 44 N. W. 554; Kan. 1893, Stevens v. State, 50 Kan. 712, 715, 32 Pac. 350; Ky. 1818, Embry v. Millar, 1 A. K. Marsh. 300; 1821, McIntire v. Funk, Litt. Sel. C. 425, 427; 1823, Elmondorff v. Carmichæl, 3 Litt. 473, 479; 1897, Fox v. Pedigo, — Ky. —, 40 S. W. 249; 1898, Helton v. Asher, 103 Ky. 730, 46 S. W. 22; La. 1831, Thomas v. Thomas, 2 La. o. s. 166, 168; Md. 1840, Boothe v. Dorsey, 11 G. & J. 247, 252; Minn. 1889, Wakefield v. Day, 41 Minn. 344, 347, 43 N. W. 71; Miss. 1897, Weiler v. Monroe Co., 74 Miss. 682, 22 So. 188; Mo. 1852, Perry v. Roberts, 17 Mo. 36; 1873, Yankee v. Thompson, 51 Mo. 241, 244; Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10585; N. H. 1827, Colby v. Kenniston, 4 N. H. 262, 265; 1844, Bachelder v. Nutting, 16 N. H. 261, 263; N. D. 1902, Garland v. Foster Co. S. Bank, 11 N. D. 374, 92 N. W. 452; Ohio: 1828, Richmond v. Patterson, 3 Oh. 369 (record proved by examined copy must be shown to have been lawfully kept); Pa. 1845, Flinn v. M'Gonigle, 9 W. & S. 75, 76 ("Light evidence is sufficient for this purpose"); 1849, Slone v. Thomas, 12 Pa. 209 (lost note; genuineness not sufficiently evidenced); 1850, Porter v. Wilson, 13 Pa. 641, 646 (articles of partnership; proof held insufficient); 1870, Krise v. Neason, 66 Pa. 253, 258 ("evidence of the genuineness of the original . . . must be of the most positive and unequivocal kind"); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 321 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1937); S. C. 1818, Howell v. House, 2 Mill Const. 80, 83; 1830, Stockdale v. Young, 3 Strobh. 501, 505.

Proof of contents and of execution may of course come from different witnesses: 1896, Painter v. Ladyard, 109 Mich. 568, 67 N. W. 901.

The following case is peculiar: 1911, Burgos v. Baez, 17 P. R. 599 (conciliation proceedings).

The judge's ruling is not conclusive upon the jury: 1916, St. Croix Co. v. Sea Coast C. Co., 114 Me. 521, 96 Atl. 1059 (alleged lost contract; careful opinion by Savage, C. J.).

there must first be evidence of execution before evidence of contents is offered: [1]

1737, Goodier v. Lake, 1 Atk. 446: "Where an original note of hand is lost, and a copy of it is offered in evidence to serve any particular purpose in a cause, you must shew sufficient probability to satisfy the Court that the original note was genuine, before you will be allowed to read the copy."

1826, Kimball v. Morrill, 4 Greenl. 368, 370: "When a party, on an issue to the country, would avail himself of an instrument in writing, lost by time and accident, he should first prove that an instrument was duly executed with the formalities required by law; . . . then, and not till then, he is permitted to give evidence of its contents."

Nevertheless, the trial Court ought to have a discretion to allow the evidence of contents to come first, where it is more convenient and where an assurance is given (on the principle of § 1871, post) that the other proof will be later put in; and such is the expressed doctrine of some Courts,[2] which others also would probably recognize on occasion. Moreover, where the execution is the real point in dispute, and the jury will have to consider it fully in any case, it would always be proper to receive the copy first and then go into the main matter in dispute.[3]

(2) Execution vs. loss. It is difficult to prove that a specific document is § 1189. [1] ENGLAND: 1696, R. v. Culpepper, Skinner 673 (though a copy is receivable, "yet they never permitted it except it be proved that there was such a deed executed"); 1749, Whitfield v. Fausset, 1 Ves. Sr. 387 (L. C. Hardwicke: "The law requires a proper foundation to be laid; . . . first, to prove that such a deed once existed"); UNITED STATES: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1937 (after proof of loss, "together with proof of the due execution of the writing", the contents may be evidenced); Del. 1855, Bartholomew v. Edwards, 1 Houst. 17, 25 (first, existence, then loss, then contents); s. c. 1 Houst. 247, 250 (same; the first two being proved to the Court); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5761 (but slight evidence suffices, where no "direct issue" is made); 1896, Baker v. Adams, 99 Ga. 135, 25 S. E. 28 (the original lost, and the maker having testified to its authenticity, a copy was received); 1898, Hayden v. Mitchell, 103 Ga. 431, 30 S. E. 287 (execution and existence must first be shown); 1898, Smith v. Smith, 106 Ga. 303, 31 S. E. 762 (must show not merely existence, but due execution); 1900, Garbutt L. Co. v. Gress L. Co., 111 Ga. 821, 35 S. E. 686 (same); 1900, Gibson v. Thornton, 112 Ga. 328, 37 S. E. 406 (same); Ill. 1861, Dickinson v. Breeden, 25 Ill. 186 (existence of original must first be proved); 1866, Deminger v. McConnell, 41 Ill. 227, 232 (intimating that the statute of 1861, post, § 1225, was passed to obviate the effect of the preceding ruling); 1866, Fisk v. Kissane, 42 Ill. 87 (declaring that the same affidavit or testimony used to prove loss need not speak to the existence of the original); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10585 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1937); Pa. 1899, McKenna v. McMichael, 189 Pa. 440, 42 Atl. 14 (will; some evidence of execution required first); S. C. 1830, Stockdale v. Young, 3 Strobh. 501, 504 (first existence and execution, then loss, then contents); 1895, Hobbs v. Beard, 43 S. C. 370, 21 S. E. 305 (first loss, then execution, then contents).

[2] 1872, Groff v. Ramsey, 19 Minn. 44, 60 (the order of proof is in the trial Court's discretion), 1910, Felker v. Breece, 226 Mo. 320, 126 S. W. 424; 1827, Allen v. Parish, 3 Oh. 107, 121 (the regular order should be distinct, — existence, execution, loss, and contents; but at times it may be convenient to go into all at once, good opinion).

[3] 1870, Stowe v. Querner, L. R. 5 Exch. 155 (action on a policy of insurance; plea, no policy made; to show the terms of the policy, a copy of the document, already admitted by the defendant to be a copy, was received without preliminary settlement by the judge of the execution of an original, because that execution was the main issue; Bramwell, B.: "The distinction is really this: Where the objection to the reading of a copy concedes that there was primary evidence of some sort in existence but defective in some collateral matter — as, for instance, where the objection is a pure stamp-objection —, the judge must, before he admits the copy, hear and determine whether the objection is well founded. But where the objection goes to show that the very substratum and foundation of the cause of action is wanting, the judge must not decide upon the matter, but receive the copy and leave the main question to the jury").

lost without referring to some extent to its existence and its genuineness as existing. On the other hand (it is argued), to prove the existence and execution of a specific document, before it appears that the document cannot be produced, is on principle improper. These conflicting considerations have led to opposing rulings; by some Courts it is said that evidence of existence and execution must come before evidence of loss;[4] and by some the opposite order is laid down;[5] while sometimes it is properly left to the trial Court's discretion.[6] The problem may more easily be solved by noting the distinction between existence and execution; e.g. suppose A to be testifying to the loss of a deed of Blackacre purporting to be signed by X; while on the one hand it is not necessary for this purpose first to prove that X did sign it, yet on the other it may be impossible for A to describe what is lost unless he does refer to the purporting signature; in other words, proof of the existence of a document bearing certain features is necessary and proper before it can be shown lost, but proof of its due execution is not necessary or proper until after a showing of loss.

(3) Loss vs. contents. That a specific document was lost can hardly be shown without some general reference to its tenor; nevertheless, the rule being clear that the contents cannot be proved by testimony until loss or the like is shown, the reference to the tenor of the document in proving its loss must be no more than is necessary to describe its general features. It is always possible, however, for the trial Court, on the assurance (post, § 1871) that loss will later be proved, to admit first the testimony to the document's contents.[7]

§ 1190. Production made; may a Copy also be offered? If the rule is satisfied by the original's production, may a copy also be used? On principle, it may; for the principle requires merely that the inspection of the original be made as the preferred source of evidence, and does not exclude other competent evidence. Ordinarily, a Court would probably exclude a copy as superfluous.[1] But where a copy was in effect valuable testimony to the

[4] 1886, Terpening v. Holton, 9 Colo. 306 (proof of execution, then of loss, here allowed); 1851, Porter v. Ferguson, 4 Fla. 102, 104, semble (existence, then loss); 1837, Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326, 334 (the usual order of evidence is first the proof of existence, and then the proof of unavailability; no decision given as to possible reasons for a reversed order).

[5] 1901, Laster v. Blackwell, 128 Ala. 143, 30 So. 663, 1832, Shrowders v. Harper, 1 Harringt. Del. 444 (loss first, then execution and contents); 1837, Hutchinson v. Gordon, 21 Harringt. 179, semble (same); 1844, State v. McCoy, 2 Speer S. C. 711, 714 (a question whether the witness had seen a certain power of attorney, excluded; rule repudiated that existence and execution must be shown before loss); 1858, Bateman v. Bateman, 21 Tex. 432 (loss, then existence and contents, here allowed); and compare some of the citations supra, note 1.

[6] 1848, Fitch v. Bogue, 19 Conn. 285, 290 (the order of proof, as between existence and loss, is not fixed, but depends on the case).

[7] E.g.: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1937 (quoted supra, n. 1); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10585 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1937); 1880, Cross v. Williams, 72 Mo. 577, 579 (allowing proof of contents, then of loss); and compare the citations supra, note 1.

For the question whether an opponent's destruction of a document is an admission of its terms as the proponent claims them, without further evidence on his part, see ante, § 291.

For the question at what stage the opponent's evidence may be put in on the question of loss, etc., see post, § 1870.

§ 1190. [1] 1828, Dean v. Carnahan, 7 Mart. N. S. 258.

terms of the original—for example, where the original is claimed to have been altered since the time when the copy was made — it might properly be received.[2]

§ 1191. Production may be Excused, when Contents are not in Dispute. What is most needed to-day, for this rule in general, is flexibility. This could be given by the following provision (in analogy to the time-honored provision, post, §§ 1294–1296, for the attesting-witness rule): Production of the original may be dispensed with, in the trial Court's discretion, whenever in the case in hand the opponent does not bona fide dispute the contents of the document and no other useful purpose will be served by requiring production.

The general rule, sound at heart as it is, tends to become encased in a stiff bark of rigidity. Thousands of times it is enforced needlessly. Hundreds of appeals are made upon nice points of its detailed application which bear no relation at all to the truth of the case at bar. For this reason the whole rule is in an unhealthy state. The most repugnant features of technicalism (ante, §§ 8*a*, 21) are illustrated in this part of the law of Evidence.

The above proposed measure would serve to restore health to the rule. A brief colloquy between the trial judge and counsel would reveal whether the strict enforcement of the rule was needed for the protection of either party. If not, production of the original would be dispensed with.

In several Canadian provinces, the principle of unavailability has been abandoned, for certain documents in which ordinarily no real dispute arises. This measure is a sensible and progressive one and deserves universal adoption (post, § 1223). Its essential feature is that a copy may be used unconditionally, if the opponent has been given an opportunity to inspect it. Similar statutes but not permitting unconditional use, exist in many States for certain classes of documents required to be filed before trial (post, § 1848).

(c) "Unless it is not feasible"

§ 1192. General Principle; Unavailability of the Original; Proof to the Judge. (1) The essential principle of preferred evidence is that it is to be procured and offered if it can be had (ante, § 1172). That thought dominates both the present rule preferring production of the document itself and the ensuing class of rules preferring one kind of witness to another kind (post, § 1286). The thought is here not that a certain kind of evidence is absolutely necessary, but that a certain kind is to be used if it is available. If it is not available, then it is not insisted upon:

1831, PORTER, J., in Thomas v. Thomas, 1 La. 166, 168: "That rule which is the most universal, namely, that the best evidence the nature of the case will admit, shall be produced, decides this objection; for it [the rule] is only another form of expression for the idea that when you lose the higher proof you may offer the next best in your power. The case admits of no better evidence than that which you possess, if the superior proof has been lost without your fault. The rule does not mean that men's rights are to be sacrificed and their property lost because they cannot guard against events beyond their control; it only means that, so long as the higher or superior evidence is within your possession or may be reached by you, you shall give no inferior proof in relation to it."

[2] 1902, Hong Quon v. Chea Sam, 14 Haw. 276 (like Walker v. Walker, post, § 1226, n. 7); 1847, Wilbur v. Wilbur, 13 Mete. Mass. 405 (the plaintiff offered a copy of an execution-levy; the defendant produced the original containing alterations; the question was whether the plaintiff or the defendant was bound to explain); 1853, Foulke v. Bray, 1 Wis. 104 (judgment); and cases cited post, § 1226, n. 7.

Compare the use of photographic enlargements of handwriting, ante, § 797.

Georgia, Revised Code 1910, § 5759: "In order to admit secondary evidence, it must appear that the primary evidence for some sufficient cause is not accessible to the diligence of the party."

The various classes of cases with which the following sections deal are but related instances of this general feature, that production of the writing itself is not required if production is under the circumstances not feasible. That the document is lost, detained by the opponent, held by a third person, physically irremovable, legally irremovable, practically irremovable, or otherwise unavailable without great inconvenience, — all these situations rest on the general notion that production is not feasible.

(2) Historically, this liberal and rational principle is not of ancient date. The more formal notions of the earlier methods of procedure stood on rigid requirements; and the modifications of these came in only gradually. Most of them were worked out while the doctrine of profert was still in force (ante, § 1177). The growth of each one can better be noticed under the respective heads. It will be seen that the profert, or showing of a deed or record in court, was dispensable, as early as Lord Coke's time, where the document was in the hands of a third person, under certain conditions (post, § 1211), or where it was detained in the custody of the law (post, § 1215), or where it had been destroyed by fire; but this last was an innovation of serious importance (post, § 1193); and the ordinary case of a lost document, i.e. one not demonstrably destroyed but simply not to be found, was not fairly settled, as dispensing with production, until the late 1700s (post, § 1193).

(3) The determination of this preliminary fact of unavailability is for the judge, not the jury, upon the general principle (post, § 2550) that questions of fact preliminary to the admissibility of evidence are for the judge.[1]

§ 1193. (1) Loss or Destruction; History. It was apparently a step of § 1192. [1] Eng. 1840, Smith v. Sleap, 1 C. & K. 48; U. S. Ala. 1858, Glassell v. Mason, 32 Ala. 719; Cal. 1858, Bagley v. McMickle, 9 Cal. 430, 449; Conn. 1848, Fitch v. Bogue, 19 Conn. 285, 290; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, §§ 5759, 5829; Ill. 1894, Grimes v. Hilliary, 150 Ill. 141, 145, 36 N. E. 977; Mass. 1834, Page v. Page, 15 Pick. 368, 374; N. Y. 1819, Jackson v. Frier, 16 John. 193, 195; Or. 1880, Rosendorf v. Hirschberg, 8 Or. 240, 242 (whether the original is lost, is for the Court; whether the copy is correct, for the jury); N. C. 1824, Eure v. Pittman, 3 Hawks 364, 371, 375 (where the secondary evidence, together with the evidence of loss or suppression, was conditionally but improperly submitted to the jury); 1844, Kelly v. Craig, 5 Ired. 129, 133; Pa. 1850, Porter v. Wilson, 13 Pa. St. 641, 646; Tenn. 1853, Tyree v. Magness, 1 Sneed 276, 277; 1870, Southern Express Co. v. Womack, 1 Heisk. 256, 262 (thus the ruling is presumed correct, if the evidence of loss is not embodied in the record of evidence).

As to the proper stage for introducing the opponent's evidence, see post, § 1870. That the trial Court's discretion governs the sufficiency of proof of loss, see post, § 1194.

some consequence when in 1611, in Dr. Leyfield's Case,[1] the Court resolved that "in great and notorious extremities, as by casualty of fire", profert of a deed might be dispensed with. Even this concession had to be enforced, during the ensuing century, by repeated rulings; and other instances of equally "great and notorious extremity" with fire, such as robbery, were added only slowly.[2] In these precedents, the "loss" of a document is frequently mentioned as equivalent to destruction by fire, in serving as an excuse; but the term evidently signified either an actual destruction or a disappearance through the acts of other persons, and not merely a disappearance through the party's own negligence or a mere impossibility of discovering a mislaid document; for the treatise-writers all through the 1700s,[3] and even later,[4] predicate of such an excusing loss that it must be without the party's fault or negligence and not a mere case of inability to find. It is not until the decision of Read v. Brookman, in 1789,[5] that all cases of genuine loss are § 1193. [1] 1611, Leyfield's Case, 10 Co. 88, 92 ("Yet in great and notorious extremities, as by casualty of fire, that all his evidences were burnt in his house, there, if that should appear to the Judges, they may, in favor of him who has so great a loss by fire, suffer him upon the general issue to prove the deed in evidence to the jury by witnesses, that affliction be not added to affliction").

[2] Ante 1661, Anon., Jenkins 19 ("In cases where charters have been lost by fire, burning of houses, rebellion, or when robbers have destroyed them, the law in such cases of necessity allows the proof of charters without shewing them. 'Necessitas facit licitum quod alias non est licitum' "); 1664, Knight v. Danler, Hardr. 323 (a burnt record of conviction; other evidence admitted, the conviction not being the main issue); 1696, R. v. Culpepper, Skinner 673 ("in the case of a deed lost or burnt they would admit a copy or counterpart of the contents"); 1696, Lynch v. Clerke, 3 Salk. 154, Holt, C. J. ("burnt or lost"; production excused); 1697, Barley's Case, 5 Mod. 210 (lost deed; production excused); 1699, Medlicot v. Joyner, 2 Keble 546, 1 Mod. 4 (a deed burnt, production excused); 1699, Underhill v. Durham, Freem. 509 (a survey burnt in the great fire of London; copy admitted); 1711, Sir E. Seymour's Case, 10 Mod. 8 (if lost "by inevitable accident", provable by copy); 1722, Robinson v. Davis, 1 Stra. 526 (robbery of a document in the mail; copy allowed); 1740, Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 71 (Hardwicke, L. C., allows an exemption in case of a loss and of proof of "the manner of its being lost; unless it happens to be destroyed by fire, or lost by robbery, or any unforeseen or unavoidable accident, which are sufficient excuses of themselves"); 1744, Omichund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 21, 49 (Hardwicke, L. C.: "Where the original is lost, a copy may be admitted"); 1744, Snellgrove v. Baily, 3 Atk. 214 (upon loss of a deed, copy allowable; but otherwise of a bond); 1754, Saltern v. Melhuish, Ambl. 247 ("a reasonable account of the deed being lost or destroyed" suffices); 1774, Mayor of Hull v. Horner, Cowp. 102 (Mansfield, L. C. J.; lost deed; copy admitted).

The history can be further seen in other lines of cases cited in Professor Ames' article, "Specialty Contracts and Equitable Defences", Harvard Law Review, IX, 49 (1895).

[3] Ante 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 95 ("a man cannot make his own fault in losing of the deeds any part of his excuse"; but to prove them "burned with fire" suffices); ante 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 252 ("no party shall take advantage of his own negligence in not keeping of his deeds, which in all cases ought to be fairly produced to the court"); 1765, Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 368 ("if that be positively proved to be burnt or destroyed (not relying on any loose negative, as that it cannot be found, or the like)", then production is excused).

[4] 1810, Swift, Evidence, 31 ("loss or destruction . . . by accident, without any fault on his part").

[5] 1789, Read v. Brookman, 3 T. R. 151 (a demurrer to a plea, excusing profert on the ground that it was "lost and destroyed by time and accident", was overruled. Buller, J.: "The rule laid down by Lord Coke [in Leyfield's Case] extends to all cases of extreme necessity; those which he mentions are only put as instances; and wherever a similar necessity exists the same rule holds. . . . It was said that the plaintiff was not without remedy, for that a Court of Equity would give him relief. But that argument is no answer in a Court of Law; we are not to consider what a Court of Equity in the plenitude of its power may do"); 1796, R. v. Metheringham, 6 id. 566 (loss of an order of removal of a pauper: oral proof allowed).

assimilated as instances of a general principle. From the time of that decision, the rule that an actual loss of any sort, making the document practically unavailable, suffices to excuse production, seems to have been fully accepted by the profession.[5]

§ 1194. Same: General Tests for Sufficiency of Proof of Loss; Trial Court's Discretion. In strictness, no doubt, a "destruction" signifies that the thing no longer exists, while a "loss" signifies merely that it cannot be discovered. Nevertheless, for practical purposes, the two come together for consideration in this rule. In the first place, the moment that the destruction becomes questionable at all (i.e. when not proved by eye-witnesses of a burning or tearing), the inquiry is raised whether the search for it has been sufficient; and, in the next place, the proof of a loss usually carries the implication that the thing not found has ceased to exist, and thus assimilates the case to one of destruction. Thus, the great question to which so many judges have devoted so much pains — the establishment of a test for the sufficiency of proof of loss — includes practically not only the cases of loss in the narrower sense but also the cases in which destruction is more or less explicitly put forward as the reason for non-production.[1]

The question thus resolves itself into an inquiry as to the sufficiency of the search; and the discovery of the island of Atlantis has occasioned no less arduous and no less vain efforts than the attempt to frame a fixed and just rule for the conduct of this inquiry. At the outset of the subject, then, it should be plainly understood — as great judges have so often told the bar, and as their successors and the bar have in new generations as often forgotten — that there is not and cannot be any universal or fixed rule to test the sufficiency of the search for a document alleged to be lost. The inquiry must depend entirely on the circumstances of the case. The following classical passages expound this doctrine in various forms:

1820, Brewster v. Sewell, 3 B. & Ald. 296; libel for charging the plaintiff with defrauding an insurance company; an expired policy was to be proved; whether the company or the plaintiff last had the policy was not certain; the plaintiff and his attorney had searched his premises in vain. ABBOTT, C. J.: "All evidence is to be considered with regard to the matter with respect to which it is produced. Now it appears to be a very different thing, whether the subject of inquiry be a useless paper, which may reasonably be supposed to be lost, or whether it is an important document which the party might have an interest in keeping, and for the non-production of which no satisfactory reason is assigned. . . . This being a case, therefore, where the loss or destruction of the paper may almost be presumed, very slight evidence of its loss or destruction is sufficient."[2]

1846, POLLOCK, C. B., in Gathercole v. Miall, 15 M. & W. 319, 329: "The evidence of a document being lost, upon which secondary evidence may be given of its contents, may vary much, according to the nature of the paper itself, the custody it is in, and indeed all the surrounding circumstances of the particular matter before the Court and jury. A paper of considerable importance, which is not likely to be permitted to perish, may call for a much more minute and accurate search than that which may be considered as waste paper, which nobody would be likely to take care of." ALDERSON, B.: "The question whether there has been a loss, and whether there has been sufficient search, must depend very much on the nature of the instrument searched for. . . . If we were speaking of an envelope, in which a letter had been received, and a person said, 'I have searched for it among my papers, I cannot find it', surely that would be sufficient. So with respect to an old newspaper which has been at a public coffee-room; if the party who kept the public coffee-room had searched for it there, where it ought to be if in existence, and where naturally he would find it, and says he supposes it has been taken away by some one, that seems to me to be amply sufficient. If he had said, 'I know it was taken away by A. B.', then I should have said you ought to go to A. B. and see if A. B. has not got that which it is proved he took away."

[5] It has sometimes been doubted whether a lost will or record was provable with the same evidence as other lost documents (post, § 1267). A lost negotiable instrument may be proved by copy; but the restrictions that have been enforced in that connection are matters of substantive law (post, § 1197).

§ 1194. [1] As pointed out by Colcock, J., in Peay v. Picket, 3 McCord 318, 322 (1825).

[2] 1824, Best, J., in Freeman v. Arkell, 2 B. & C. 494 ("That principle [of relativity] is fully established by the case of Brewster v. Sewell").

1833, THOMPSON, J., in Minor v. Tillotson, 7 Pet. 99: "The rules of evidence are adopted for practical purposes in the administration of justice. . . . The extent to which the rule is to be pushed, in a case like the present, is governed in some measure by circumstances. If any suspicion hangs over the instrument, or that it is designedly withheld, a more rigid inquiry should be made into the reasons for its non-production. But when there is no such suspicion, all that ought to be required is reasonable diligence to obtain the original."

1880, DEPUE, J., in Johnson v. Arnwine, 42 N. J. L. 451, 454: "Proof of loss or destruction so fully as to exclude every hypothesis of the existence of the original is not required. The question is always one of due diligence in the effort to procure the original before evidence of its contents is resorted to. As a general rule the party is expected to show that he has in good faith exhausted in a reasonable degree all the sources of information and means of discovery which the nature of the case would naturally suggest and which were accessible to him. If any suspicion hangs over the instrument, or there are circumstances tending to excite a suspicion that it is designedly withheld, the most rigid inquiry should be made into the reasons for its non-production. . . . No absolute rule has been or can be laid down, defining what search shall be considered as a search prosecuted with due diligence. The degree of diligence which shall be considered necessary in any case will depend on the circumstances, — the character and importance of the paper, the purposes for which it is proposed to use it, and the place where a paper of that kind may naturally be supposed to be likely to be found."

1896, STONE, C. J., in Jernigan v. State, 81 Ala. 58, 60, 1 So. 72: "In accounting for the absence of a writing, material testimony in the cause, so as to let in secondary evidence of its contents, no universal rule can be declared which will be applicable to every case. The testimony is addressed to the presiding judge, and he pronounces on its sufficiency. He must be reasonably convinced that it has been lost, destroyed, or is beyond the reach of the Court's process. A material inquiry in such cases is whether or not there was a probable motive for withholding this highest and best evidence. Whenever the Court is able to answer this inquiry in the negative, less evidence will satisfy its conscience than if suspicious circumstances attended the transaction. As a rule, there must be careful search at the place where it was last known to be, if its place of custody can be traced or remembered. If not, then such search must be made at any and every place where it would likely be found."

This general principle of relativity, that the sufficiency of the search depends upon the circumstances of the case, is sometimes expressed in the form of a standard of diligence; the search, it is said, must appear to have been made with such diligence as was reasonable upon all the facts of the case in hand.

The party proving the document must have used all reasonable means to obtain the original.[3]

It follows, properly, that the determination of the sufficiency of the search and in general of the proof of the fact of loss should be left entirely to the trial Court's discretion.[4] This important deduction has been admirably expounded in the following passage:

[3] ENGLAND: 1815, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in R. v. Morton, 4 M. & S. 48 ("The making search, and using due diligence, are terms applicable to some known or probable place or person, in respect of which diligence may be used"); 1827, Gully v. Exeter, 4 Bing. 290, 298 (depends upon "the importance of the deed and the particular circumstances of each case"); 1847, Alderson, B., in Doe v. Clifford, 2 C. & K. 448, 451 ("The law lays down rules to compel the production of primary evidence before secondary evidence can be given; but if a person has taken all reasonable means to produce primary evidence, then and then only he may give secondary evidence"); 1863, Quilter v. Jorss, 14 C. B. N. S. 747, 750 (reasonable exertions required).

CANADA: 1856, Tiffany v. McCumber, 13 U. C. Q. B. 159, 162 (the degree of diligence depends on the circumstances); 1865, Russell v. Fraser, 15 U. C. C. P. 375, 380.

UNITED STATES: Connecticut: 1837, Witter v. Latham, 12 Conn. 392, 399 (must "depend in a great measure on the circumstances of each particular case"); 1847, Kelsey v. Hanner, 18 Conn. 311, 316 (same); 1853, Waller v. School District, 22 Conn. 326, 334 (same); Georgia: 1849, Doe v. Biggers, 6 Ga. 188, 194 (depends on "the circumstances of each case", and is therefore left to the trial Court; but there are some general principles; "the object of the proof is to establish a reasonable presumption of the loss of the instrument; in general, the party is expected to show that he has in good faith exhausted in a reasonable degree all the sources of information and means of discovery which the nature of the case suggests and which were accessible to him; good faith and reasonable diligence are the requisites, and the diligence must have reference to the nature of the case"); Illinois: 1848, Mariner v. Saunders, 10 Ill. 113, 118 (depends on the circumstances); Maine: 1858, Simpson v. Norton, 45 Me. 281, 288 (depends "much upon the circumstances of the case"; an instructive illustration of the search required, — here, for a probate record); Maryland: 1852, Glenn v. Rogers, 3 Md. 312, 320 (depends much on the character and value of the instrument; the offeror must have "in good faith exhausted in a reasonable degree all the sources of information and means of discovery which the nature of the case would suggest and which were accessible to him"); New Hampshire: 1852, Pickard v. Bailey, 26 N. H. 152, 167 ("each decision depends so much on the circumstances of the individual case that no inflexible rule can be laid down"); New York: 1819, Jackson v. Frier, 16 John. 193, 196 ("No precise rule" exists, except that "diligent search and inquiry should be made of those persons in whose custody the law presumes the deed to be"); 1820, Jackson v. Root, 18 id. 60, 73 (pointing out that less search is required for a document of slight value; here, an abandoned contract); Ohio: 1853, Wells v. Martin, 1 Oh. St. 386 ("The ruling must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case"); Pennsylvania: 1854, Woodward, J., in Bell v. Young, 3 Grant Pa. 175 ("When diligent search has been made unsuccessfully for a paper by the person in whose hands the law presumes it to be, it is in judgment of law a lost paper"); South Carolina: 1880, Congdon v. Morgan, 14 S. C. 587, 593 ("no absolute rule on the subject"; search for a deed here held sufficient on the facts); Vermont: 1861, Thrall v. Todd, 34 Vt. 97 (the offerer must show that "he has in good faith reasonably exhausted all the sources of information and means of discovery which the nature of the case would naturally suggest and which were accessible to him").

[4] Accord (though sometimes with qualifications): Fed. 1919, Galbreath v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 648, 658; Ala. 1886, Jernigan v. State, 81 Ala. 58, 60; Ark. 1895, Wilburn v. State, 60 Ark. 141, 143, 29 S. W. 149; Cal. 1903, Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 73 Pac. 803; Conn. 1882, Elwell v. Mersick, 50 Conn. 275; Ga. Rev. Code 1910, § 5829; 1871, Wallace v. Tumlin, 42 Ga. 462; 1880, Phillips v. Lindsey, 65 Ga. 139, 143; 1876, Graham v. Campbell, 56 Ga. 258, 260; Md. 1909, Robinson v. Singerly P. & P. Co., 110 Md. 382, 72 Atl. 828; Mass. 1890, Smith v. Brown, 151 Mass. 338, 340, 24 N. E. 31; Mich. 1871, Stewart v. People, 23 Mich. 63, 73 (to some extent); Mo. 1870, Christy v. Cavanagh, 45 Mo. 375, 377; 1892, Kleiman v. Geiselman, 114 Mo. 437, 443, 21 S. W. 796 ("the trial judge is to determine the sufficiency of the proof"); 1897, Hume v. Hopkins, 140 Mo. 65, 41 S. W. 784; 1904, Liles v. Liles, 183 Mo. 326, 81 S. W. 1101; 1910, Felker v. Breece, 226 Mo. 320, 126 S. W. 424 (deed burned); N. J. 1880, Johnson v. Arnwine, 42 N. J. L. 451, 458; 1899, Longstreth v. Korb, 64 N. J. L. 112, 44 Atl. 934; 1904, Koehler v. Schilling, 70 N. J. L. 585, 57 Atl. 154; Pa. 1821, Leazure v. Hillegas, 7 S. & R. 313, 323; 1845, Flinn v. M'Gonigle, 9 W. & S. 75 ("Each case must depend on its peculiar circumstances; . . . it is a preliminary in-

1845, DENMAN, L. C. J., in R. v. Kenilworth, 7 Q. B. 642, 649; "I think that we may collect from R. v. Morton the only rule, namely, that no general rule exists. The question in every case is, whether there has been evidence enough to satisfy the Court before which the trial is had, that, to use the words of BAYLEY, J., in R. v. Denio, 'a "bona fide" and diligent search was made for the instrument where it was likely to be found.' But this is a question much fitter for the Court which tries than for us. They have to determine whether evidence is satisfactory, whether the search has been made 'bona fide', whether there has been due diligence, and so on. It is a mere waste of time on our part to listen to special pleading on the subject. To what employment shall we be devoted, if such questions are to be brought before us as matters of law!"

§ 1195. Same: Specific Tests and Rulings. Although the greater number of Courts have from time to time expressed approval of the controlling principle that the sufficiency of the search should be left to the trial Court, this principle is nevertheless often sinned against.

In the first place, there is an occasional tendency to prescribe some specific method of search in the shape of a fixed rule. It is sometimes said, for example, that the search must be made in the place where the document was last known to be, or that inquiry must be made of the last custodian, or that the last custodian must be summoned.[1] These requirements are sensible quiry, addressed to the legal discretion of the judge"); 1892, Gorgas v. Hertz, 150 Pa. 538, 540, 24 Atl. 756 ("generally left to the discretion of the trial judge") S. C. 1896, Norris v. Clinkscales, 47 S. C. 488, 25 S. E. 797; 1901, Elrod v. Cochran, 59 S. C. 467, 38 S. E. 122; 1905, Tucker v. Tucker, 72 S. C. 295, 51 S. E. 876; 1906, Leesville Mfg. Co. v. Morgan W. & I. Wks., 75 S. C. 342, 55 S. E. 768; Tenn. 1853, Tyre v. Magness, 1 Sneed 276, 277 ("what is proper diligence must depend much on the circumstances of the case"); Vt. 1874, Durgin v. Danville, 47 Vt. 95, 103 ("It is always a question of law in the given case whether the rule has been acted on and properly carried into effect"; but "whether the Court below have found facts correctly from the evidence bearing pro and con upon the existence of the facts of which the rule is predicable" will not be inquired).

Contra: 1904, Avery v. Stewart, 134 N. C. 287, 46 S. E. 519 (a reactionary ruling).

§ 1195. [1] The following list of such utterances does not purport to be complete: Alabama: 1889, Foster v. State, 88 Ala. 182, 187, 7 So. 185 ("as a rule, careful search must be made where the document was last known to be or where it would most likely be found"); 1906, Saunders v. Tuscumbia, R. & P. Co., 148 Ala. 519, 41 So. 982 (approving Foster v. State); Illinois: 1860, Cook v. Hunt, 24 Ill. 535, 550 ("the rule is well settled that when a paper has a particular place of deposit, as when it is known to have been in a particular place, or in the hands of a particular person, then that place must be searched by the party setting up the loss, or the person produced or accounted for into whose hands or keeping it has been traced"); 1882, Rhode v. McLean, 101 Ill. 467, 470 (bond; loss sufficiently shown; rule of calling last possessor held not to be an invariable one); 1891, Mullanphy S. Bank v. Schott, 135 Ill. 655, 667, 26 N. E. 640 (corporation book; loss not sufficiently shown; rule of calling last possessor applied); 1904, Prussing v. Jackson, 208 Ill. 85, 69 N. E. 771 (libel in a letter printed in a newspaper; the rule is that "the person in whose possession it was last traced must be produced, unless shown to be impossible; in which case search among his papers must be proved, if that can be done"); Indiana: 1889, Howe v. Fleming, 123 Ind. 263, 24 N. E. 238 (record; it must appear "that careful and diligent search was made in the office and by one so fully acquainted with the office-records and papers as to make it probable that if the paper was in the office he would find it"; trial Court's discretion here approved); Kansas: 1880, Brock v. Cottingham, 23 Kans. 383, 388 (execution not sufficiently shown lost; the clerk of Court should have been called or his deposition taken; the last custodian's testimony is not always necessary, except in the above class of cases, but it should be "the general rule"); New York: 1883, Kearney v. Mayor, 92 N. Y. 617, 621; South Carolina: 1846, Drake v. Ramey, 2 Rich. 37, 39 ("a search in the place where it was most likely to be found" suffices); Tennessee: 1853, Pharis v. Lambert, 1 Sneed 228, 230 (warrant last seen in the offerer's attorney's hand; the attorney required to be sworn or accounted for); 1853, Tyree v. Magness, 1 Sneed 276, 278 (paper in the cause; search among the clerk's papers, but not by the clerk, insufficient); 1855, Vaulx v. Merriwether, 2 Sneed 683 (deed enough as hints or warnings to the trial Court, but they are not fit to be erected into fixed rules.

In the second place, most Courts are found now and then deliberately disregarding the principle of the trial Court's discretion and reviewing on appeal all the circumstances bearing upon the sufficiency of the search.[2] These of deceased grantee; search among the grantee's papers, without search at the registry or among the deceased's representative's papers, insufficient); 1870, Girdner v. Walker, 1 Heisk. 186, 191 (letters to C., deceased; inquiry of C.'s representative, etc., and search among C.'s papers, required); Vermont: 1851, Fletcher v. Jackson, 23 Vt. 581, 591 (Redfield, J.: "The general rule upon this subject is familiar, that reasonable search shall be made in the place where the paper is last known to have been; and if not found there, then its present place of deposit shall be searched out in the usual mode by making inquiry of those most likely to know its whereabouts, and that is of course of the person last known to have had its custody"); 1860, Moore v. Beattie, 33 Vt. 219, 223 (search is to be made by the last custodian; sufficiency of search is for trial Court's discretion).

[2] The decisions and statutes are as follows: ENGLAND: 1805, Johnson's Case, 29 How. St. Tr. 437, 7 East 65 (envelopes; "such probable evidence of the destruction of the thing as to let in parol evidence of its nature"; here a mass of papers, presumably including these, were thrown into the fire); 1807, Kensington v. Inglis, 8 East 273, 278, 288 (belligerent trading license, issued by a colonial governor; the expiration and return of the license being shown, the custom to destroy them as waste paper and the search for this one in the office, held sufficient); 1815, R. v. Morton, 21 M. & S. 48 (search for an indenture of apprenticeship, held sufficient); 1816, Bullen v. Michel, 4 Dow 297 (copies of old tithe-taxations admitted, search for the originals proving unavailable); 1824, Freeman v. Arkell, 2 B. & C. 494 (information for an indictment returned ignoramus; search at a clerk's office held sufficient on the facts); 1825, R. v. East Farleigh, 6 Dowl. & R. 147 (indenture of apprenticeship); 1827, R. v. Denio, 7 B. & C. 620, 622 (same); 1828, R. v. Stourbridge, 8 B. & C. 96 (same); 1834, R. v. Rawden, 2 A. & E. 156 (same); 1836, M'Gahey v. Alston, 2 M. & W. 206, 213 (cancelled check in the office of a successor as clerk; search sufficient on the facts); 1837, Fitz v. Rabbits, 2 Moo. & Rob. 60 (a lease; search made three years before, for another purpose, held sufficient on the facts); 1845, R. v. Kenilworth, 7 Q. B. 642 (indenture of apprenticeship); 1846, Gathercole v. Miall, 15 M. & W. 319, 322 (old newspaper, left at certain society-rooms; search among members of the society not necessary); 1846, R. v. Rastrick, 2 Cox Cr. 39 (parcel-memorandum taken from a shop); 1851, Richards v. Lewis, 15 Jur. 512 (search not sufficient); 1852, R. v. Saffron Hill, 1 E. & B. 93 (search for a document held not wrongly declared insufficient by the trial Court); 1863, Quilter v. Jorss, 14 C. B. N. S. 747 (agreement of shipment, taken from the bearer in New York by official searchers for secessionist dispatches); 1872, R. v. Hall, 12 Cox Cr. 159 (forged document, in a prosecution for forgery).

CANADA: Alta. 1916, R. v. Peterson, 31 D. L. R. 295 (perjury; loss of a check held sufficiently proved); N. Br. 1842, Little v. Johnston, 1 Kerr 496 (letters; search held not sufficient); 1852, Basterach v. Atkinson, 2 All. 439, 445 (agreement in third person's hands; loss held sufficiently evidenced); 1855, Lyman v. Cain, 3 All. 259 (note taken up; search held sufficient); N. Sc. 1859, Barto v. Morris, 4 N. Sc. 90; 1876, Hazell v. Dyas, 11 N. Sc. 36, 42.

UNITED STATES (besides the cases in the following list, those cited post, § 1225, should also be consulted, where a similar question sometimes arises in construing the statutes allowing affidavit-proof of loss of a record : deed; for loss of books of entry, see also §§ 15[illegible] 1557, post):

Federal: 1806, U. S. v. Lambell, 1 Cr. C 312 (warrant; loss sufficiently shown); 1806, U. S. v. Wary, 1 Cr. C. C. 312 (warrant; loss not sufficiently shown); 1822, Boulding v. Massie, 7 Wheat. 122, 131, 154 (loss of assignment sufficiently shown); 1824, Riggs v. Tayloe, 9 Wheat. 483, 486 ("If he did not tear it up, then it has become lost or mislaid", held sufficient); 1826, Riggs v. Tayloe, 2 Cr. C. C. 687, 689 (contract; loss not sufficiently shown); 1833, Minor v. Tillotson, 7 Pet. 99 (land-grant; search sufficiently shown); 1835, Winn v. Patterson, 9 Cr. C. C. 663, 676 (power of attorney; loss sufficiently shown); 1836, U. S. v. Lodge, 4 Cr. C. C. 673 (larceny of bank-notes; that they had been passed away, held sufficient evidence of non-availability); 1865, Simpson v. Dall, 3 Wall. 460 (letters; loss not sufficiently shown); 1892, Scanlan v. Hodges, 10 U. S. App. 352, 361, 3 C. C. A. 113, 52 Fed. 354 (loss not proved); 1902, Dupee v. Chicago H. S. Co., 54 C. C. A. 426, 117 Fed. 40, 44 (search held sufficient); 1904, Brown v. Harkins, 131 Fed. 63, 65 C. C. A. 301 (distiller's books and transcript in collector's office; loss not sufficiently shown on the facts);

Alabama: 1832, Mitchell v. Mitchell, 3 Stew. & P. 81, 84 (search by persons unable to read is insufficient); 1839, Swift v. Fitzhugh, 9 Port. 39, 52 (deed; loss sufficiently shown on the facts); 1849, Herndon v. Givens, 16 Ala. 261,

268 (loss of note sufficiently shown); 1857, Johnson v. Powell, 30 Ala. 113, 115 (executions; search held sufficient on the facts); 1861, Preslar v. Stallworth, 37 Ala. 402, 406 (by a clerk of Court, that a note filed was no longer on file and he did not know what had become of it, held insufficient); 1872, Bogan v. McCutchen, 48 Ala. 493 (search for a letter, not sufficient on the facts); 1876, Calhoun v. Thompson, 56 Ala. 166, 170 (letter left with a magistrate; search held insufficient); 1879, Watson v. State, 63 Ala. 19, 22 (loss of justice's records, not sufficiently proved on the facts); 1881, Donegan v. Wade, 70 Ala. 501, 506 (notice of contest in Probate Court; loss insufficiently proved); 1886, Jernigan v. State, 81 Ala. 58, 60 (note and mortgage; search sufficient on the facts); 1889, Tanner & D. E. Co. v. Hall, 89 Ala. 628, 629, 7 So. 187 (search for correspondence, held sufficient on the facts); 1892, Thorn v. Kemp, 98 Ala. 417, 422, 13 So. 749 (summons, etc.; loss, etc., presumed from trial Court's finding); 1893, Boulden v. State, 102 Ala. 78, 84, 15 So. 341 (dying declaration in writing; search insufficient); 1897, Phœnix Ass. Co. v. McAuthor, 116 Ala. 659, 22 So. 903 (search for a policy held insufficiently shown); 1897, O'Neal v. McKinna, 116 Ala. 606, 22 So. 905 (search for warrant handed to grand jury, held insufficient on the facts); 1901, Laster v. Blackwell, 128 Ala. 143, 30 So. 663 (deed; loss held sufficiently shown on the facts); 1905, Tagert v. State, 143 Ala. 88, 39 So. 293 (search for a note, held not sufficient on the facts); 1905, Alabama Const. Co. v. Meador, 143 Ala. 336, 39 So. 216 (similar, for a letter); 1906, Saunders v. Tuscumbia R. & P. Co., 148 Ala. 519, 41 So. 982 (mechanics' lien, search held sufficient on the facts);

Arizona: 1874, Rush v. French, 1 Ariz. 99, 142, 25 Pac. 816 (rules of search laid down);

Arkansas: 1921, Leake v. State, 149 Ark. 621, 233 S. W. 773 (forgery; search held sufficient);

California: 1852, McCann v. Beach, 2 Cal. 25, 30 (loss of papers said to have been in a trunk; proof not sufficient); 1855, Norris v. Russell, 5 Cal. 250 (municipal ordinance; notice of tax-sale; search insufficient); 1855, People v. Clingan, 5 Cal. 389 (certificate of election; loss sufficiently proved); 1856, Folsom v. Scott, 6 Cal. 460 (deed; search insufficient on the facts); 1861, Caulfield v. Sanders, 17 Cal. 569, 573 (loss of entry-book not sufficiently shown); 1861, Pierce v. Wallace, 18 Cal. 165, 170 (search for lost deed, held sufficient); 1867, King v. Randlett, 33 Cal. 318, 320 (bill of sale; search held insufficient); 1875, Taylor v. Clark, 49 Cal. 671 (search for lost deed, not sufficient on the facts); 1895, Samoset v. Mesnager, 108 Cal. 354, 41 Pac. 337 (letter; search held sufficient); C. C. P. § 1855 (a writing's contents must be evidenced by the writing itself; except, "when the original has been lost or destroyed; in which case proof of the loss or destruction must first be made");

Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 6548 (party offering any deed, etc., "or other writing", alleged to have been executed by the opponent, and lost or destroyed; contents cannot be proved "until said party, his agent, or attorney, shall first make oath to the loss or destruction thereof, and to the substance of the same"); C. C. P. § 391 (for proving contents by "other than the writing itself", "proof of loss or destruction shall first be made"); 1873, Hobson v. Porter, 2 Colo. 28, 31 (search for a contract, held not sufficient); 1876, Londoner v. Stewart, 3 Colo. 47, 49 (search for a power of attorney, held not sufficient); 1877, Lyon v. Washburn, 3 Colo. 201, 204 (loss of a letter, not sufficiently proved); 1883, Wells v. Adams, 7 Colo. 26, 1 Pac. 698 (loss of a letter, not sufficiently proved); 1886, Bruns v. Clase, 9 Colo. 225, 227, 11 Pac. 79 (execution; loss sufficiently shown); 1886, Oppenheimer v. R. Co., 9 Colo. 320, 322, 12 Pac. 217 (railroad tariff sheet; loss sufficiently shown); 1886, Billin v. Henkel, 9 Colo. 394, 400, 13 Pac. 420 (letter; loss not sufficiently shown); 1906, Mortgage T. Co. v. Elliott, 36 Colo. 238, 84 Pac. 980 (note; loss sufficiently shown);

Connecticut: 1830, State v. DeWolf, 8 Conn. 93, 100 (mere ignorance of its whereabouts, without search, insufficient); 1837, Witter v. Latham, 12 Conn. 392, 399 (bankrupt's certificate; bankrupt ignorant of its whereabouts; search not required); 1840, Stoddard v. Mix, 14 Conn. 12, 17, 22 (loss sufficiently shown); 1847, Kelsey v. Hanmer, 18 Conn. 311, 316 (deed; sufficient search shown); 1849, White v. Brown, 19 Conn. 577, 583 (note; loss insufficiently shown); 1853, Waller v. School District, 22 Conn. 326, 334 (subscription-paper; loss sufficiently shown);

Delaware: 1841, Armstrong v. Timmons, 3 Harringt. 342 (deed; loss sufficiently shown); 1855, State v. Gemmill, 1 Houst. 9, 12 (directions to sheriff; loss sufficiently shown); 1855, Bartholomew v. Edwards, 1 Houst. 247, 250 (deed; loss not sufficiently shown);

Florida: 1904, Rhodus v. Heffernan, 47 Fla. 206, 36 So. 573 (administrator's schedule; loss sufficiently shown); 1920, Neylans v. Herndon, 79 Fla. 213, 84 So. 89 (promissory note);

Georgia: in this State a Court rule governs some of the cases: 1849, Doe v. Biggers, 6 Ga. 188, 194 (execution; sufficient search shown); 1851, Ellis v. Smith, 10 Ga. 253, 259 (same); 1852, Harper v. Scott, 12 Ga. 125, 135 (agreement; sufficient search shown); 1853, Molyneaux v. Collier, 13 Ga. 406, 413 (execution; search not sufficient); 1853, Bryan v. Walton, 14 Ga. 185, 194 (will; search not sufficient); 1857, Allen v. State, 21 Ga. 217, 218 (bail process; search held sufficient); 1858, Morgan v. Jones, 24 Ga. 155, 160 (letters of administration; loss sufficiently shown); 1858, Poulet v. Johnson, 25 Ga. 403, 410; 1859, Sutton v. McLoud, 26 Ga. 637, 642 (grant; search held insufficient); 1861, Roe & McDowell v. Doe & Irwin, 32 Ga. 39, 48 (Court rule applied);

1870, Cameron v. Kersey, 41 Ga. 40 (Court rule applied); 1872, Jackson v. Jackson, 47 Ga. 99, 117 (contents of letter not produced, excluded); 1873, Brown v. Tucker, 47 Ga. 485, 492 (trust-deed; search held insufficient); 1880, Seisel v. Register, 65 Ga. 662, 664 (execution; search insufficient); 1876, Southern Georgia & F. R. Co. v. Ayres, 56 Ga. 230, 233 (Court rule applied); 1883, Imboden v. Mining Co., 70 Ga. 86, 112 (search for deeds sufficient); 1886, Noland v. Pelham, 77 Ga. 262, 269, 2 S. E. 639 (deed; search not sufficient); 1887, Silva v. Rankin, 80 Ga. 79, 83, 4 S. E. 756 (deeds, etc., sufficiently shown lost); 1888, Georgia P. R. Co. v. Strickland, 80 Ga. 777, 779, 6 S. E. 27 (original not accounted for); 1901, Lott v. Buck, 113 Ga. 640, 39 S. E. 70 (search held insufficient on the facts); 1903, Sweeney v. Sweeney, 119 Ga. 76, 46 S. E. 76 (sheriff's fi. fa., sufficiently shown lost);

Hawaii: 1904, Walters v. Redward, 16 Haw. 25 (bond; loss sufficiently shown);

Illinois: 1840, Dormady v. State Bank, 3 Ill. 236, 238, 244 (note); 1841, Palmer v. Logan, 4 Ill. 56, 60 (notes; loss insufficiently shown); 1848, Mariner v. Saunders, 10 Ill. 113, 118 (deed; search held insufficient); 1854, Doyle v. Wiley, 15 Ill. 576 (contract; search sufficient on the facts); 1859, Holbrook v. Trustees, 22 Ill. 539 (treasurer's bond; loss not sufficiently shown); 1860, Whitehall v. Smith, 24 Ill. 166 (warrant and affidavit; loss not sufficiently shown); 1860, Cook v. Hunt, 24 Ill. 536, 550 (contract; loss not sufficiently shown, because the person last having custody was not accounted for; see note 1, supra); 1860, Stow v. People, 25 Ill. 69, 73 (deed; loss not sufficiently shown); 1862, Holbrook v. Trustees, 28 Ill. 187 (bond; loss not sufficiently shown); 1862, Ellis v. Huff, 29 Ill. 449 (execution; loss sufficiently shown); 1863, Pardee v. Lindley, 31 Ill. 174, 184 (deed; search sufficient); 1864, Owen v. Thomas, 33 Ill. 320, 326 (deed; search apparently held insufficient); 1864, Kupfer v. Bank, 34 Ill. 328, 356 (draft; loss sufficiently shown); 1864, McMillan v. Bethold, 35 Ill. 253 (note; loss sufficiently shown); 1865, Wells v. Miller, 37 Ill. 276, 280 (title-document; loss sufficiently shown); 1866, Carr v. Miner, 42 Ill. 179, 189 (bill and answer; loss sufficiently shown); 1867, Sturges v. Hart, 45 Ill. 103, 106 (injunction; loss not sufficiently shown); 1869, Huls v. Kimball, 52 Ill. 391 (mortgage; loss sufficiently proved); 1872, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Ingersoll, 65 Ill. 399, 403 (contract, loss not sufficiently shown); 1872, Case v. Lyman, 66 Ill. 229 (letters; loss sufficiently shown); 1873, Swearengen v. Gulick, 67 Ill. 208, 212 (deed; loss sufficiently shown); 1875, Wickenkamp v. Wickenkamp, 77 Ill. 92, 95 (note destroyed; secondary evidence admitted); 1875, Marlow v. Marlow, 77 Ill. 633 (notes; destruction sufficiently shown); 1875, Williams v. Case, 79 Ill. 356 (account filed in Court; loss not sufficiently proved); 1876, Hazen v. Pierson, 83 Ill. 241 (letter; loss not sufficiently shown); 1876, Crocker v. Lowenthal, 83 Ill. 579, 581 (deed; loss sufficiently shown); 1878, Moore v. Wright, 90 Ill. 470, 472 (note; loss not sufficiently shown); 1878, Protection L. I. Co. v. Dill, 91 Ill. 174 (policy of insurance; loss sufficiently proved); 1880, Taylor v. McIrvin, 94 Ill. 488, 492 (deed; loss sufficiently shown) 1881, Dugger v. Oglesby, 99 Ill. 405, 40 (deed; loss sufficiently shown); 1883, Golde v. Bressler, 105 Ill. 419, 429 (deed; loss sufficiently shown); 1884, Dowden v. Wilson 108 Ill. 257, 261 (copies of burned depositions used); 1888, Berdel v. Egan, 12 Ill. 298, 299, 17 N. E. 709 (deed; loss sufficiently shown); 1898, McDonald v. Stark, 176 Ill. 456, 52 N. E. 37 (loss of recorded town plats, sufficiently shown); 1899, Mayfield v. Turner, 180 Ill. 332, 54 N. E. 418 (declaration of trust; loss sufficiently shown); 1899, Harrell v. Enterprise Sav. Bank, 183 Ill. 538, 56 N. E. 63 (deed; search sufficient on the facts);

Indiana: 1839, Burke v. Voyles, 5 Blackf. 190 (award; not sufficiently accounted for); 1843, McNeely v. Rucker, 6 Blackf. 391 (lease; loss not sufficiently shown); 1843, Depew v. Wheelan, 5 Blackf. 485, 487 (note; same); 1845, Murray v. Buchanan, 7 Blackf. 549 (execution; same); 1856, Meek v. Spencer, 8 Ind. 118, 119 (memorandum of sale; search insufficient); 1857, Littler v. Franklin, 9 Ind. 216 (letter; same); 1859, Little v. Indianapolis, 13 Ind. 364 (petition to city council; search sufficient); 1859, Cleveland v. Worrell, 13 Ind. 545 (note; same); 1861, Carter v. Edwards, 16 Ind. 238 (same); 1862, Steel v. Williams, 18 Ind. 161, 165 (transcript; same); 1879, Avan v. Frey, 69 Ind. 91, 93 (lease; destruction by defendant shown); 1883, Johnston Harv. Co. v. Bartley, 94 Ind. 131, 134 (contract; search held sufficient); 1884, Langsdale v. Woollen, 99 Ind. 575, 585 (letter; same); 1884, Curme v. Rauh, 100 Ind. 247, 253 (mortgage; same); 1886, McComas v. Haas, 107 Ind. 512, 516, 8 N. E. 579 (letter; same); 1887, Roehl v. Haumesser, 114 Ind. 311, 319, 15 N. E. 345 (same); 1887, McCormick H. M. Co. v. Gray, 114 Ind. 340, 346, 16 N. E. 787 (contract; loss sufficiently shown); 1888, McNutt v. McNutt, 116 Ind. 545, 565, 19 N. E. 115 (same);

Iowa: 1851, Steamboat Wisconsin v. Young, 3 Greene 268, 271 (search for invoice sufficiently shown); 1861, Horseman v. Todhunter, 12 Ia. 230, 232 (mortgage; loss not shown); 1868, McCormick v. Grundy Co., 24 Ia. 382, 384 (loss of note sufficiently shown, 1876); Grimes v. Simpson College, 42 Ia. 589, 590 (contract; loss not sufficiently shown); 1877, Crowe v. Capwell, 47 Ia. 426 (note; search insufficient); 1880, Howe M. Co. v. Stiles, 53 Ia. 425, 5 N. W. 577 (letters; loss insufficiently shown); 1880, Gimbal v. Salomon, 54 Ia. 389, 6 N. W. 582 (letter; loss not shown); 1880, Foster v. Bowman, 55 Ia. 237, 240, 7 N. W. 513 (loss of record sufficiently shown); 1882, Hausen v. Ins. Co., 57 Ia. 741, 742, 11 N. W.

670 (contract of sale; searching sufficient); 1883, Louis Cook M. Co. v. Randall, 62 Ia. 244, 17 N. W. 507 (contract; loss sufficiently shown); 1886, Hill v. Aultman, 68 Ia. 630, 27 N. W. 788 (letter; search held insufficient); 1887, Postel v. Palmer, 71 Ia. 157, 159, 32 N. W. 257 (positive testimony of loss by custodian; further search unnecessary); 1890, State v. Thompson, 79 Ia. 703, 705, 45 N. W. 293 (letters; loss not shown); 1895, Waite v. High, 96 Ia. 742, 65 N. W. 397 (search insufficient on the facts); 1899, Williams v. Williams, 108 Ia. 91, 78 N. W. 793 (contract as loss not sufficiently shown on the facts); 1919, Swanson Automobile Co. v. Stone, 187 Ia. 309, 174 N. W. 247 (search for certain assignments, held insufficient on the facts);

Kansas: 1893, Roberts v. Dixon, 50 Kan. 436, 437, 31 Pac. 1083 (no search at all; production required);

Kentucky: 1819, Hart v. Strode, 2 A. K. Marsh. 115 (bond; loss sufficiently shown on the facts); 1820, Hamit v. Lawrence, 2 A. K. Marsh. 366 (lease; same); 1821, McIntire v. Funk, Litt. Sel. C. 425, 427 (bond; same); 1824, May v. Hill, 5 Litt. 307, 309 (bond; same); 1853, Dickerson v. Talbot, 14 B. Monr. 60, 67 (deed; search sufficient on the facts); 1868, Nutall v. Brannin, 5 Bush 11, 18 (letter; search insufficient on the facts); 1870, Penny v. Pindell, 7 Bush 571, 574 (record; same); 1898, Helton v. Asher, 103 Ky. 730, 46 S. W. 22 (loss not shown); 1906, Interstate Inv. Co. v. Bailey, — Ky. —, 93 S. W. 578 (deed; loss sufficiently shown);

Louisiana: Rev. C. C. 188, § 2279 (when an "instrument in writing, containing obligations which the party wishes to enforce, has been lost or destroyed, by accident or force, evidence may be given of its contents, provided the party show the loss either by direct testimony or by such circumstances, supported by the oath of the party, as render the loss probable"); here it is difficult to separate the cases under this statute and at common law from those belonging under the other statute, post, § 1225: 1823, Robertson v. Lucas, 1 Mart. N. S. 187, 189 (agreement; loss not sufficiently shown, under the French rule); 1829, Tate v. Penne, 7 Mart. N. S. 548, 551 (marriage-contract; loss sufficiently shown); 1831, Baines v. Higgins, 1 La. 220, 222 (bill of sale; loss not sufficiently proved); 1842, Thomas v. Turnley, 3 Rob. 206, 210 (deeds; loss sufficiently shown); 1847, Prothro v. Minden Seminary, 2 La. An. 939 (corporate resolution; loss sufficiently shown); 1894, Cochran v. Cochran, 46 La. An. 536, 539, 15 So. 57 (agreement; search sufficient on the facts); 1901, Willett v. Andrews, 106 La. 319, 30 So. 883 (deed forming a link in the title to land; advertisement of loss held not necessary under Civ. C. §§ 2279, 2280);

Maine: 1848, Wing v. Abbott, 15 Shepl. 367, 373 (judicial record; search not sufficient on the facts);

Maryland: 1810, Rusk v. Sowerwine, 3 H. & J. 97 (power of attorney; search insufficient on the facts); 1814, Ringgold v. Galloway, 3 H. & J. 451, 455 (loss of commissions, etc., not sufficiently proved); 1830, State v. Wayman, 2 G. & J. 254, 283 (search for Chancery records, not sufficient on the facts); 1843, Mulliken v. Boyce, 1 Gill 60, 66 (horse-pedigree: search held insufficient on the facts);

Massachusetts: 1844, Foster v. Mackay, 7 Metc. 531, 537;

Michigan: 1850, Higgins v. Watson, 1 Mich. 428, 431 (note; loss sufficiently shown); 1868, Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351, 375 (records of a justice; loss not sufficiently shown); 1871, Stewart v. People, 23 Mich. 63, 73 (letter; search held sufficient); 1877, Bottomley v. Goldsmith, 36 Mich. 27 (letter; search held sufficient); 1877, King v. Carpenter, 37 Mich. 363, 369 (deed; loss sufficiently shown); 1878, People v. Gordon, 39 Mich. 259, 262 (loss of justice's files sufficiently shown); 1879, McKeown v. Harvey, 40 Mich. 226 (contractor's proposals; search sufficiently shown); 1883, Holcomb v. Mosher, 50 Mich. 252, 257, 15 N. W. 129 (deed; search held sufficient); 1885, Huff v. Hall, 56 Mich. 456, 457, 23 N. W. 88 (letter; loss sufficiently shown); 1886, Dalton's Appeal, 59 Mich. 352, 355, 26 N. W. 539 (petition for guardian; loss sufficiently shown); 1890, Shoulder v. Bonander, 80 Mich. 531, 534, 45 N. W. 487 (agreement; proof of loss "unsatisfactory"); 1895, Stanley v. Anderson, 107 Mich. 384, 65 N. W. 247 (contract recorded with a justice of the peace; loss sufficiently shown);

Minnesota: 1861, Guerin v. Hunt, 6 Minn. 375, 380 (letter; search not sufficiently shown); 1867, Thayer v. Barney, 12 Minn. 502, 510, 513 (account-book and receipt; loss sufficiently shown); 1871, Board v. Meagher, 17 Minn. 412, 422 (order for brick; search sufficiently shown); 1881, Molm v. Barton, 27 Minn. 530, 532, 8 N. W. 765 (bill of sale; loss sufficiently shown); 1886, Nelson v. Land Co., 35 Minn. 408, 410, 29 N. W. 121 (sheriff's certificate; search not sufficiently shown); 1896, Slocum v. Bracy, 65 Minn. 100, 67 N. W. 843 (search held sufficient); 1896, Windom v. Brown, 65 Minn. 394, 67 N. W. 1028 (search held sufficient); 1901, Hurley v. West St. Paul, 83 Minn. 401, 86 N. W. 427 (ancient copy of surveyor's report, not admitted where original was not searched for); 1920, Cookson v. Hill, 146 Minn. 165, 178 N. W. 591 (stock-books of a corporation; diligent search not shown, on the facts);

Mississippi: 1838, Doe v. M'Caleb, 2 How. 756, 767 (land-office certificate; search not sufficient); 1846, Smith v. R. Co., 6 Sm. & M. 179, 184 (receipt; loss sufficiently shown); 1854, Parr v. Gibbons, 27 Miss. 375, 378 (note; loss insufficiently shown);

Missouri: 1837, Miller v. Wells, 5 Mo. 6, 10 (bond; search held not to be sufficient); 1850, Finney v. College, 13 Mo. 266 (deposition shown to be lost or mislaid); 1852, Lewin

v. Dille, 17 Mo. 64, 69 (agent's instructions, not accounted for); 1862, Gould v. Trowbridge, 32 Mo. 291, 293 (draft; loss sufficiently shown); 1874, Parry v. Walser, 57 Mo. 169, 172 (destruction of records sufficiently shown); 1874, Shaw v. Pershing, 57 Mo. 416, 421 (loss of deed sufficiently shown); 1879, Studebaker Mfg. Co. v. Dickson, 70 Mo. 272 (contract; search sufficiently shown); 1884, Blondeau v. Sheridan, 81 Mo. 545, 556 (contract; search held insufficient); 1890, Henry v. Diviney, 101 Mo. 378, 383, 13 S. W. 1057 (letter; loss sufficiently shown);

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10516; 1894, Brooke v. Jordan, 14 Mont. 375, 378, 36 Pac. 450 (deed; search held sufficient);

Nebraska: 1886, Post v. School District, 19 Nebr. 135, 26 N. W. 911 (bond; loss not sufficiently shown); 1886, Murphy v. Lyons, 19 Nebr. 689, 28 N. W. 328 (affidavit; loss not sufficiently shown); 1890, Myers v. Beals, 30 Nebr. 280, 287, 46 N. W. 479 (exhibit at former trial; loss not sufficiently shown); 1895, Baldwin v. Burt, 43 Nebr. 245, 252, 61 N. W. 601 (mortgage; loss sufficiently shown); 1896, Regier v. Shreck, 47 Nebr. 667, 66 N. W. 618 (legal papers in a case; loss sufficiently shown);

Nevada: 1869, Milenovich's Estate, 5 Nev. 160, 186 (order of Probate Court; less sufficiently shown);

New Hampshire: 1850, Forsaith v. Clark, 21 N. H. 409, 417 (loss of charters, held sufficiently shown); 1852, Pickard v. Bailey, 26 N. H. 152, 166 (list of lands; search sufficient);

New Jersey: 1820, Sterling v. Potts, 5 N. J. L. 773, 776 (search held insufficient); 1826, Fox v. Lambson, 8 N. J. L. 275, 278 (court records; search insufficient); 1832, Kingwood v. Bethlehem, 13 N. J. L. 221, 226 (indenture of apprenticeship; search held sufficient); 1832, Smith v. Axtell, 1 N. J. Eq. 494, 498 (written agreement between heirs and administrators; search held insufficient); 1865, Clark v. Hornbeck, 17 N. J. Eq. 430, 450 (action against an executor on a note given by him to the testator; search held sufficient); 1880, Johnson v. Arnwine, 42 N. J. L. 451, 459 (complaint and warrant last seen with the grand jury; search held sufficient); 1904, Koehler v. Schilling, 70 N. J. L. 585, 57 Atl. 154 (contracts; Johnson v. Arnwine followed);

New York: 1813, Jackson v. Neely, 10 John. 374, 376 (deed said to have been in a house destroyed by fire; sufficient search); 1814, Jackson v. Woolsey, 11 John. 446, 454 (deed; search held sufficient); 1825, Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. 483, 491 (will; search held insufficient); 1826, Jackson v. Betts, 6 Cow. 377, 383 (will; search held sufficient); s. c. app. 9 Cow. 208, 222, 6 Wend. 173, 176 (same); 1826, Francis v. Ins. Co., 6 Cow. 404, 416 (British Consul's permit at Antigua; search held sufficient); 1830, Jackson v. Russell, 4 Wend. 543, 547 (will; search in the Surrogate's Office held sufficient); 1865, Leland v. Cameron, 31 N. Y. 115, 120 (lost execution; search held sufficient);

North Carolina: 1844, Kelly v. Craig, 5 Ired. 129, 133 (destruction not sufficiently shown); 1895, Blair v. Brown, 116 N. C. 631, 21 S. E. 434 (search held sufficient); 1902, Smith v. Garris, 131 N. C. 34, 42 S. E. 445 (certain legal papers; search held insufficient); 1904, Avery v. Stewart, 134 N. C. 287, 46 S. E. 519 (postal card; loss not sufficiently shown); 1912, Greene v. Messick Grocery Co., 159 N. C. 78, 74 S. E. 812 (telegram; here the ruling seems to be unconscionably strict);

North Dakota: 1901, McManus v. Commow, 10 N. D. 340, 87 N. W. 9 (loss of deed, sufficiently shown);

Ohio: 1833, Taylor v. Colvin, Wright 449 (note; loss sufficiently shown);

Oklahoma: 1893, Olds v. Congor, 1 Okl. 232, 238, 32 Pac. 337 (search held sufficient);

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 712, par. 2 (production excused when the original "cannot be produced by the party by whom the evidence is offered, in a reasonable time, with proper diligence, and its absence is not owing to his neglect or default"); 1881, Howe v. Taylor, 9 Or. 268 (undertaking as clerk; loss sufficiently shown); 1902, Harmon v. Decker, 41 Or. 587, 68 Pac. 11 (search held not sufficient); 1904, State v. Leasia, 45 Or. 410, 78 Pac. 328 (letter; loss sufficiently shown);

Pennsylvania: 1813, Caufman v. Congregation, 6 Binn. 59, 63 (written agreement; search held sufficient); 1814, Meyer v. Barker, 6 Binn. 228, 234 (loss sufficiently proved); 1842, Weir v. Hale, 3 W. & S. 291, 294 (either due diligence or irretrievable loss must be shown); 1850, Porter v. Wilson, 13 Pa. St. 641, 649 (search held insufficient); 1854, Bell v. Young, 1 Pa. 175 (search held sufficient for promissory note); 1870, Krise v. Neason, 66 Pa. 253, 260 ("when a written agreement was placed by both parties in the hands of a common friend, who afterwards died, diligent search among his papers is all that is required"); 1875, American Life Ins. Co. v. Rosenagle, 77 Pa. 507, 514 (slight evidence of the loss of ordinary letters between relatives, held sufficient); 1920, Weber's Estate, 268 Pa. 7, 119 Atl. 785 (will); 1920, Muncey v. Pullman Taxi S. Co., 269 Pa. 97, 112 Atl. 30 (plaintiff's account-books; search held insufficient);

Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 284 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); 1915, Michael & Co. v. Enriquez, 33 P. I. 87;

South Carolina: 1803, Anderson v. Robson, 2 Bay 495, 497 (bill of exchange from over seas; evidence of loss at sea held sufficient); 1814, Velton v. Briggs, 4 Des. 465 (evidence of loss of deed, held sufficient); 1818, Sims v. Sims, 2 Mill Const. 225 (search for note, held insufficient); 1824, North v. Drayton, Harp. Eq. 34, 41, 45 (loss of bond held sufficiently evidenced); 1830, Stockdale v. Young, 3 Strobh. 501, 506 (evidence of loss of old deed, held sufficient); 1839, Smith v. Smith, Rice 232, 234, 237 (search for judicial records, sufficient); 1852, McQueen v. Fletcher, 4 Rich. Eq. 152, 155, 159 (search often lengthy and laborious expositions of the facts and their sufficiency are ill-judged expenditures of effort for a Supreme Court. Such labor, in Lord Denman's emphatic words, is a "mere waste of time." As a test for the capabilities of a fine instrument, it would be interesting to set a steam-hammer to crack a nut; but as an habitual occupation, it would be plain folly. The Supreme Courts of Judicature spend overmuch time in cracking nuts. Long days of time and tedious pages of reports have been given up to investigations of detailed facts, under the present principle, resulting in rulings which never ought to be of any significance as precedents. It is to be hoped that this practice will fall completely into disuse.

§ 1196. Same: Kinds of Evidence admissible in Proving Loss (Circumstantial, Hearsay, Admissions, Affidavits, etc.). The ordinary principles otherwise established apply equally to the evidence used to prove the loss of a document. Certain kinds of evidence, however, occasionally raise specific questions concerning their use for the present purpose.

(1) Circumstantial evidence is of course proper;[1] it is in truth the commonest, for the evidence of a loss is usually reducible to the circumstance that a document after proper search has not been seen.[2]

(2) If the circumstances are such that the Court can raise a presumption of loss, as matter of law (post, §§ 2522, 2523), then this suffices to establish for judicial records, held sufficient); 1852, Floyd v. Mintsey, 5 Rich. 361, 365, 372 (search held insufficient; that the last possessor was dead and had lived out of the jurisdiction did not excuse a failure to inquire of his representatives); 1857, Berry v. Jourdan, 11 Rich. 67, 76 (evidence of loss of deed, held sufficient); 1892, Brooks v. McMeekin, 37 S. C. 285, 299, 14 S. E. 1019 (search not shown sufficient);

Tennessee: 1871, Quinby v. N. A. C. & T. Co., 2 Heisk. 596 (insufficient proof of loss, on the facts); 1900, Whiteside v. Watkins, — Tenn. —, 58 S. W. 1107 (same); 1901, Davidson L. Co. v. Jones, — Tenn. —, 62 S. W. 386 (same);
Texas: 1854, Clifton v. Lilley, 12 Tex. 130 (deed; loss sufficiently shown); 1863, White v. Burney, 27 Tex. 50 (deed; loss sufficiently shown); 1883, Vandergriff v. Piercy, 59 Tex. 371 (deed; loss insufficiently shown; last custodian's declarations insufficient; he must be called or accounted for); 1885, Continental Ins. Co. v. Pruitt, 65 Tex. 125, 128 (schedule of property; loss sufficiently shown); 1889, Ruby v. Van Valkenburg, 72 Tex. 459, 468, 10 S. W. 514 (judgment-record; loss sufficiently shown); 1890, Mugge v. Adams, 76 Tex. 448, 450, 13 S. W. 330 (letter; loss not shown); 1895, Cabell v. Holloway, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 307, 31 S. W. 201 (search held sufficient);
Vermont: 1831, Bliss v. Stevens, 4 Vt. 88, 92 (search for an execution, held sufficient); 1834, Braintree v. Battles, 6 Vt. 395, 399 (search for a charter in the proper place of custody, held sufficient); 1839, Viles v. Moulton, 11 Vt. 470, 474 (search for lost note, held insufficient); 1842, Royalton v. R. & W. T. Co., 14 Vt. 311, 323 (contract with a town; search held insufficient); 1861, Thrall v. Todd, 34 Vt. 97 (assignment of claim; search held insufficient); 1863, Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 536, 547 (newspaper notice; proof of loss of whole edition not necessary; diligent search for a copy, sufficient);
Washington: 1898, State v. Erving, 19 Wash. 435, 53 Pac. 717 (letter; loss sufficiently proved); 1916, Case Threshing M. Co. v. Wiley, 89 Wash. 301, 154 Pac. 437 (search for a letter held insufficient);
Wisconsin: 1858, Conkey v. Post, 7 Wis. 131, 137 (note; loss sufficiently shown); 1880, Mullenback v. Batz, 49 Wis. 499, 501, 5 N. W. 942 (letter used at a former trial; loss sufficiently shown).
Wyoming: 1920, Caswell v. Ross, 27 Wyo. 1, 188 Pac. 977 (promissory note).

§ 1196. [1] 1831, Swift v. Stevens, 8 Conn. 431, 437; 1825, Peay v. Picket, 3 McCord 318, 322.

[2] See the opinion of Colcock, J., in Peay v. Picket, supra. That direct testimony to the document's destruction is not needed, is apparently the meaning of Courts declaring that the loss need not be proved with absolute certainty: for example: 1882, Elwell v. Mersick, 50 Conn. 275 (a "reasonable presumption", even though by slight evidence); 1827, Taunton Bank v. Richardson, 5 Pick. Mass. 436, 441 (evidence of "absolute, irrecoverable loss" not necessary: "all due diligence having been used in searching for it" is enough); 1868, Corbett v. Nutt, 18

the loss; the lapse of time is a circumstance often thus availed of.[3] But it should be noted that, when the presumption of an unknown lost grant (post, § 2522) is appealed to, it does not avail to excuse the party from accounting for a specific deed by proving its loss.[4]

(3) The hearsay statement of a custodian or other person who has been applied to in the course of a search may be regarded in two aspects. (a) It may be distinctly offered as evidence that the assertion contained in it — the fact of loss or of search — is true, and is thus obnoxious to the Hearsay rule, and inadmissible;[5] though one Court has ruled otherwise on the ground that for proof to the judge (ante, § 4, post, § 2550) the ordinary rules do not apply.[6] (b) But it may also and better be regarded as merely one of the circumstances entering into the sufficiency of the search, i.e. not as testimony to the fact asserted, but as a circumstance tending to show that the searcher has not failed in reasonable diligence in not proceeding further (upon the principles of § 245, ante, § 1789, post). This view has been explained and recognized with approval in England,[7] and finds some favor in this country also,[8] as it should.

(4) Testimony by the party himself stands upon the same rules as other Gratt. Va. 624, 633, 638 (proof beyond possibility of mistake, not required; a moral certainty is sufficient).

Compare the cases for lost wills (post, § 2106).

[3] Eng. 1843, R. v. Hinley, 1 Cox Cr. 13 (a hamper used for sending goods six months before; destruction here held doubtful); Ala. 1845, Pond v. Lockwood, 8 Ala. 669, 676 (notes paid off and received by the maker several years before, presumed destroyed); Pa. 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64 (official list of original purchasers of land from William Penn, received, and production of their deeds not required); 1774, Hurst v. Dippe, ib. 20, semble (same, received); 1823, Kingston v. Lesley, 10 S. & R. 383, 387 (same; the deeds presumed unavailable); 1840, Tilghman v. Fisher, 9 Watts 441, 444 (loss of certain old papers presumed from lapse of time); Vt. 1871, Eddy v. Wilson, 43 Vt. 362, 375 (notice of sale posted, more than a year before; loss presumed).

[4] 1845, Reynolds v. Quattlebum, 2 Rich. 140, 144.

[5] Can. 1858, Bratt v. Lee, 7 U. C. C. P. 280 (testimony to a reported search by the plaintiff and his wife, who declared themselves to the witness to be unable to find, held insufficient); U. S. Kan. 1880, Brock v. Cottingham, 23 Kan. 383, 388 (clerk of Court's statements during search for execution by H. and clerk, excluded; his deposition or testimony should be had); N. Car. 1825, Governor v. Barkley, 4 Hawks 20 (declarations of the living administrator of the deceased possessor of the document, not admitted to show the loss); 1886, Justice v. Luther, 94 N. C. 793, 798 (depositary's hearsay reply, to the witness searching, that the document was lost, held insufficient); Or. 1912, Kenworthy v. Slooman, 62 Or. 604, 125 Pac. 273; S. Car. 1844, Cathcart v. Gibson, 2 Speer 661 (search and hearsay declarations of last possessor's search, insufficient); Tex. 1849, Dunn v. Choate, 4 Tex. 14, 18 (hearsay statements of the custodian, not sufficient; he must be called if living).

[6] 1850, Higgins v. Watson, 1 Mich. 428, 432 (hearsay confession of thief of document received, "this being a preliminary inquiry, and the testimony being given to the Court and not to the jury").

[7] 1845, Denman, L. C. J., in R. v. Kenilworth, 7 Q. B. 642, 649 (disapproving R. v. Denio, infra: "It would, I think, have been quite enough to say that the evidence of a 'bona fide' search was such as might satisfy the Sessions [trial Court]. . . . When the party got a reasonable account which showed that the documents could not be found, why was he to go farther?"; Williams, J.: "If you let that [declaration] in, there is quite enough to satisfy a reasonable man that the document is lost. If you do not, the search has been carried as far as, upon the admitted evidence, it can go. . . . It is not necessary to call the person who gives the answer, in order to show why he gave it"); 1858, R. v. Braintree, 1 E. & E. 51, 57 (indenture of apprenticeship; the inquiries to and answers by persons likely to have the document, held admissible; Campbell, L. C. J.: "Any questions may be put for the purpose of showing that there has been a reasonable and 'bona fide' search; though the answers to them may not be evidence in the ultimate question before the Court").

The rulings in England and Ireland, however, are not harmonious: 1815, R. v. Morton, 4 M. & S. 48, semble (admitted); 1827, R. v. Denio, 7 B. & C. 620 (excluded); 1828, R. v.

testimony, except in two respects. (a) When the disqualification of a party as witness prevailed (ante, § 577), it was often an especial hardship to satisfy the requirements of the present rule, because the party would commonly be the only person able to give information of the loss of his document. Accordingly an exception was established in almost every jurisdiction, by which the party, in spite of his disqualifying interest, was allowed to testify to the fact of loss; the exception being based by some Courts on the necessity of the case, by others on a broad principle that upon incidental matters provable to the judge the disqualification did not apply.[9] With the general removal of parties' disqualifications (ante, § 577), this exception ceased to exist as such; though it would on principle still apply for disqualified survivors (ante, § 578). (b) It became common, in some jurisdictions, to admit merely the party's affidavit for the above purpose; thus establishing an exception not only to the rule of disqualification, but also to the hearsay rule (post, § 1709).[10] When, therefore, in many jurisdictions, statutes made a certified copy of a recorded deed admissible to prove the execution and contents of the deed, if the original was unavailable, these statutes usually continued the old practice by providing that the party's affidavit should be admissible to prove the loss (post, § 1225). The disqualification of parties was by this time removed, so that they might have testified in person on the stand; and the affidavit-allowance was thus only an exception to the hearsay rule. The questions arising under these statutes (which usually allow the affidavit to prove that the document is either lost or out of the party's control) are considered under the subject of registered deeds (post, § 1225). The statutory exception, being in strictness only a survival of an exceptional common-law practice, of course does not authorize the use of a stranger's affidavit (post, § 1708).

Stourbridge, 8 B. & C. 96 (admitted); 1834, R. v. Rawden, 2 A. & E. 156 (not admissible, except when made by one in possession of the document); 1852, R. v. Saffron Hill, 1 E. & B. 93, 97 (whether admissible to show that search in other places was unnecessary, not decided); 1876, Smith v. Smith, 10 Ir. R. Eq. 273, 276, 280 (inquiries and replies admitted).

Compare the rule for a search for an attesting witness (post, § 1313), and the cases cited ante, §§ 158, 664.

[8] 1918, Virginia & W. V. Coal Co. v. Charles, D. C. W. D. Va., 251 Fed. 83 (loss of 1874 deed recorded in B. Co.: in 1903 the county clerk informed J. that the 1874 deed was destroyed by the B. Co. courthouse fire in 1885; J.'s testimony to this, admitted as showing diligent search); 1852, Harper v. Scott, 12 Ga. 125, 136 (admitted to lay the foundation for proof of search, the declarant being dead); 1906, Interstate Inv. Co. v. Bailey, — Ky. —, 93 S. W. 578 (deed); 1920, Weber's Estate, 268 Pa. 7, 110 Atl. 785 (testator's declaration that he had accidentally torn the will, considered; point not raised); 1868, Corbett v. Nutt, 18 Gratt. Va. 624, 633, 635 (inquiry for will and probate at the clerk's office, the clerk at the request of the witness making search and reporting the documents to have been among records burnt; held sufficient; though in case of suspicion the calling of the clerk might have been required).

[9] The following cases are only a few illustrating the principle: Cal. 1858, Bagley v. Eaton, 10 Cal. 126, 146; N. J. 1865, Clark v. Hornbeck, 17 N. J. Eq. 430, 450; N. Y. 1814, Butler v. Warren, 11 John. 57 (contra, but repudiated in the next case); 1819, Jackson v. Frier, 16 John. 193, 195; 1822, Chamberlain v. Gorham, 20 John. 144, 146; 1830, Betts v. Jackson, 6 Wend. 173, 177; 1841, Woodworth v. Barker, 1 Hill 172 (limiting the use); 1847, Vedder v. Wilkins, 5 Den. 64.

Occasionally a statute dealing with this old situation survives in the modern revisions; e.g. Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 8432.

[10] See, for example: 1844, Bachelder v. Nutting, 16 N. H. 261, 264; 1852, Neally v. Greenough, 25 N. H. 325, 329; 1828, Tayloe v. Riggs, 1 Pet. 591, 596; and the cases cited post, § 1709.

It was sometimes contended that this affidavit of the party was indispensable, and not merely allowable; [11] but this misunderstanding of the principle was generally repudiated.[12]

(5) Proof of the loss may also be made by the opponent's admission.[13] It may also be made by the record of judgment in a statutory proceeding to establish the contents of a lost document.[14]

(6) In a criminal prosecution for larceny, it is enough to prove the fact of the loss of the document by stealing, in order to proceed to establish its contents without production; it is not necessary to prove first the stealing by the defendant.[15]

§ 1197. Same: Discriminations between Loss and other situations.

(1) The statutory conditions on which a certified copy of a registered deed will be admitted include usually other things than loss; and these statutory conditions can best be examined in another place (post, § 1225).

(2) The fraudulent suppression or destruction of a document by the opponent, which puts the proponent in the same position as a loss (with reference to the non-necessity of giving notice) may be considered under the head of detention by the opponent (post, §§ 1207, 1209).

(3) On a charge of larceny, so far as the possession is assumed to be in the defendant, the case is governed by the rules applicable to detention by the opponent (post, §§ 1200, 1207).

(4) The doctrines of the substantive law of negotiable instruments, in regard to the conditions upon which an action or a criminal prosecution may be maintained upon them, when lost or destroyed and not producible, are not here involved.[1] The survivals of the old idea that a lost instrument was [11] 1791, Blanton v. Miller, 1 Hayw. 4 ("because no other can safely swear his want of possession").

[12] Fed. 1831, Doe v. Winn, 5 Pet. 233, 242 (a rule of Court of December, 1823, required the party's affidavit that the document was lost or destroyed and not in his control, as indispensable in addition to other evidence of loss; held, that if sufficient other evidence of loss existed, the rule of Court requiring additionally the affidavit was improper; Johnson, J., diss.); Ga. 1859, Sutton v. McLoud, 26 Ga. 637, 642; Mass. 1844, Foster v. Mackay, 7 Metc. 531, 537 (treated as not invariably requisite; here dispensed with, the record plaintiff being a nominal party only and having absconded); Tenn. 1849, Hale v. Darter, 10 Humph. 92 (affidavit by the party himself is not essential, if other sufficient evidence is given).

The rule regarding the necessity of an affidavit of loss in going to equity for relief is not within the present purview; see post, § 1197.

[13] 1895, Pentecost v. State, 107 Ala. 81, 18 So. 146.

For the case of the opponent's own possession and loss, and the necessity of giving notice in such a case, see post, § 1209. For the opponent's admission of the contents, see post, § 1255.

[14] For the sufficiency of a copy thus established, see post, §§ 1660, 1682; for the preference, if any, for such a copy, see post, §§ 1273, 1347.

For the use of recitals in old deeds as evidence of contents, see post, §§ 1573, 2143.

[15] The following ruling is of course absurd: 1864, R. v. Farr, 4 F. & F. 336 (burglary, and stealing a ring; a question about the inscription on the ring, not allowed; Counsel: "It is proved to have been stolen, so that we cannot produce it"; Channell, B.: "It is not proved to have been stolen by the prisoner, which indeed is the question to be tried").

§ 1197. [1] See, for example: 1809, Pierson v. Hutchinson, 2 Camp. 211 (action on a lost negotiable instrument); 1827, Hansard v. Robinson, 7 B. & C. 90 (same); Daniel, Negotiable Instruments, II, §§ 1475–1485, 4th ed.; 1901, Cross v. People, 192 Ill. 29, 61 N. E. 400 (forgery of a lost instrument may be prosecuted).

a lost right (ante, § 1177) are seen in the statutes enabling the owner of lost commercial paper to maintain an action, on specified conditions.[2]

(5) Certain statutes providing that lost pleadings or documents of title may be supplied by affidavit seem to concern only the providing of a copy for purposes of profert or of adjudication, and not to alter the ordinary rules as to proof of loss.[3]

§ 1198. Same: Intentional Destruction by Proponent himself. If it should appear that the party desiring to prove a document had himself destroyed it, with the object of preventing its production in court, the evidence of its contents, which he might then offer, could properly be regarded as in all likelihood false or misleading (ante, § 291). It is with this extreme case in mind that a few Courts have inconsiderately laid down an unconditional rule that the proponent's intentional destruction of the document bars him from evidencing its contents in any other way:

1824, EWING, C. J., in Broadwell v. Stiles, 8 N. J. L. 58, 60: "He who voluntarily, without mistake or accident, destroys primary evidence thereby deprives himself of the production and use of secondary evidence. The best evidence is required; and if a party, having such in his power, voluntarily destroys it, the law knows no relaxation for him, whatever may be given to accident or misfortune. . . . To admit of evidence under such circumstances is as repugnant to principle as to deny a party the cross-examination of the witnesses of his adversary."

But it is obvious that there may be many cases of intentional destruction which do not present the above extreme features. The intentional destruction may clearly appear to have been natural and proper, or it may be merely open to the bare suspicion of fraudulent suppression; and in such cases the evidence of its contents should be received, subject to comment on the circumstances. The more liberal view is represented in the following passages:

1824, TODD, J., in Riggs v. Tayloe, 9 Wheat. 483, 487: "It will be admitted that where a writing has been voluntarily destroyed with an intent to produce a wrong or injury to the opposite party, or for fraudulent purposes, or to create an excuse for its non-production, in such cases the secondary proof ought not to be received. But in cases where the destruction or loss, although voluntary, happens through mistake or accident, the party cannot be charged with default. In this case, the affiant states that if he tore up the paper, it was from a belief that the statements upon which the contract had been made were correct, and

[2] CANADA: N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 111, § 257; Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, § 21; Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, Rule 128; UNITED STATES: Ala. Code 1907, § 2491; Colo. Comp. L. 1921, § 6548; La. Rev. Civ. C. 1920, §§ 2279, 2280; Md. Ann. Code 1914, Art. 75, § 14; Mich. Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12543, 12544; Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 8433; N. Mex. Annot. St. 1915, §§ 4220–4222; N. Y. C. P. A. 1920, § 333; Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4190.

[3] S. C., St. 1870, C. C. P. 1922, § 747 (if original "pleading or paper" is lost, Court may authorize use of copy); Tenn. St. 1819, c. 27, §§ 1–4, Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 5694–5696 (any instrument lost or wrongfully detained by the opponent "may be supplied" by affidavit; if put in issue, may be proved by "competent evidence of its contents").

Relics of the old notion that the loss of the instrument precluded any action upon the right which is represented are seen in certain surviving remedial statutes; e.g. Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 1413.

In some States there is a rule of pleading requiring a count to set up a lost deed: 1900, Hatcher v. Hatcher, 127 N. C. 200, 37 S. E. 207 (at least, where the proof is not by certified copy).

For the requirement as to lost wills and records, see post, §§ 1267, 2106.

that he would have no further use for the paper; in this he was mistaken. If a party should receive the amount of a promissory note in bills and destroy the note, and it was presently discovered that the bills were forgeries, can it be said that the voluntary destruction of the note would prevent the introduction of evidence to prove the contents thereof? Or, if a party should destroy one paper believing it to be a different one, will this deprive him of his rights growing out of the destroyed paper? We think not."

1858, FIELD, J., in Bagley v. McMickle, 9 Cal. 430, 446: "The object of the rule of law which requires the production of the best evidence of which the facts sought to be established are susceptible is the prevention of fraud; for if a party is in possession of this evidence and withholds it, and seeks to substitute inferior evidence in its place, the presumption naturally arises that the better evidence is withheld for fraudulent purposes which its production would expose and defeat. When it appears that this better evidence has been voluntarily and deliberately destroyed, the same presumption arises, and unless met and overcome by a full explanation of the circumstances, it becomes conclusive of a fraudulent design, and all secondary or inferior evidence is rejected. If, however, the destruction was made upon an erroneous impression of its effect, under circumstances free from the suspicion of intended fraud, the secondary evidence is admissible. The cause or motive of the destruction is, then, the controlling fact which must determine the admissibility of this evidence in such cases."

The view now generally accepted[1] is that (1) a destruction in the ordinary § 1198. [1] The cases on both sides are as follows: ENGLAND: 1805, R. v. Johnson, 7 East 65, 66, 29 How. St. Tr. 437 (envelopes destroyed by fire, after opening, in the ordinary course of business; contents shown); 1807, Kensington v. Inglis, 8 East 273, 278, 288 (similar; expired trading license).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1824, Riggs v. Tayloe, 9 Wheat. 483, 487 (voluntary destruction, supposing the paper to be no longer needed; contents allowed; see quotation supra); 1824, Renner v. Bank, 9 Wheat. 581, 597 ("If the circumstances will justify a well-grounded belief that the original paper is kept back by design, no secondary evidence ought to be admitted"); 1832, U. S. v. Doebler, 1 Baldw. 519, 520 (letter sent by defendant to accomplice, and probably destroyed by him as a precaution; evidence of the contents, apparently from the accomplice, admitted);
Alabama: 1892, Rodgers v. Crook, 97 Ala. 722, 725, 12 So. 108 (throwing away a letter containing opponent's admissions; secondary proof allowed); 1896, Miller v. State, 110 Ala. 68, 20 So. 392 (bastardy; destruction of a letter from the defendant by the complainant at his request, held not to exclude oral evidence); Bracken v. State, 111 Ala. 68, 20 So. 636 (same);
California: 1858, Bagley v. McMickle, 9 Cal. 430, 435, 448 (destruction by consent; semble, production not necessary on the facts; see quotation supra); 1858, Bagley v. Eaton, 10 Cal. 126, 148 (the motive controls; if done under erroneous impression as to its effect, under circumstances free from suspicion of intended fraud, production not required); C. C. P. 1872, § 1855 (quoted ante, § 1195);
Colorado: 1875, Sellar v. Clelland, 2 Colo. 532, 535, 546 (fraudulent purpose must be negatived; here, a destruction by joint act of plaintiff and defendant, held not to exclude evidence of contents); 1883, Breen v. Richardson, 6 Colo. 605 (self-destroyed articles of partnership, allowed on the facts to be proved);
Connecticut: 1823, Bank of U. S. v. Sill, 5 Conn. 106, 111 (cutting a bill and sending the halves separately by mail, one half being lost; production not required);
Illinois: 1867, Blake v. Fash, 44 Ill. 302, 304 (voluntary destruction excludes secondary evidence, unless fraudulent design is disproved);
Indiana: 1859, Anderson Bridge Co. v. Applegate, 13 Ind. 339 (contract burned by promisee by way of cancellation; copy excluded); 1877, Rudolph v. Lane, 57 Ind. 115, 118 (letter torn up after reading; destruction with apparent fraudulent design bars other evidence, unless the fraud is rebutted); 1906, Gibbs v. Potter, 166 Ind. 471, 77 N. E. 942 (rule applied to an altered document);
Iowa: 1899, Murphy v. Olberding, 107 Ia. 547, 78 N. W. 205 (contract blurred by proponent's children with ink; after making a clean copy, he threw away the original; copy admitted);
Kentucky: 1899, Shields v. Lewis, — Ky. —, 49 S. W. 803 (breach of promise of marriage; voluntary destruction by plaintiff of defendant's letters, without fraud; other evidence admissible, in trial Court's discretion);
Maine: 1858, Tobin v. Shaw, 45 Me. 331, 344, 347 ("if it is satisfactorily shown that the act of destruction was not the result of fraudulent intent", other evidence is admissible; here, of letters from the defendant in an action for breach of promise of marriage, the plaintiff having been advised that they would not be needed by her);

course of business, and, of course, a destruction by mistake, is sufficient to allow the contents to be shown as in other cases of loss, and that (2) a de-

Maryland: 1898, Wright v. State, 88 Md. 436, 21 Atl. 795 (throwing away the wrapper of a butter-package; evidence of contents admitted);
Massachusetts: 1862, Joannes v. Bennett, 5 All. 169, 172 (voluntary destruction excludes other evidence, "in the absence of any proof that the destruction was the result of accident or mistake or of other circumstances rebutting any fraudulent purpose or design"); 1870, Stone v. Sanborn, 104 Mass. 319, 325 (approving Joannes v. Bennett);
Michigan: 1862, Gugins v. Van Goider, 10 Mich. 523 (grantee of an unrecorded deed consenting to destruction; evidence of contents excluded on the present principle); 1884, People v. Sharp, 53 Mich. 523, 525, 19 N. W. 168 (note not kept, and explanation sufficient; production not required); 1892, People v. Lange, 90 Mich. 454, 456, 51 N. W. 534 (embezzlement; defendant's employers' books suspiciously disappearing, the prosecution was not allowed to resort to evidence of their contents); 1895, Shrimpton v. Netzorg, 104 Mich. 225, 62 N. W. 343 (letter thrown, after reading, into the waste-basket; other evidence allowed); 1901, Davis v. Teachout, 126 Mich. 135, 85 N. W. 475 (contract burned, by all parties' consent, because considered useless; proof of contents allowed);
Minnesota: 1866, Winona v. Huff, 11 Minn. 119, 130 (when the document is 'prima facie' in the offeror's possession, he must show loss or destruction "without his culpability");
Missouri: 1846, Skinner v. Henderson, 10 Mo. 205 (burning by mutual consent of an illegal contract; contents provable in action to recover money paid); 1902, Stephan v. Metzger, 95 Mo. App. 609, 69 S. W. 625 (copy admitted of a fly-leaf account, first torn into pieces by a child, and then thrown away after the account had been copied from the pieces by the party offering the copy);
Montana: 1899, State v. Welch, 22 Mont. 92, 55 Pac. 927 (mere destruction of letters according to custom, not sufficient to exclude evidence of contents);
New Jersey: 1824, Broadwell v. Stiles, 8 N. J. L. 58 (one who had voluntarily erased and blotted out his name as an indorser was not allowed to show otherwise that the name was forged; see quotation supra); 1833, Vanauken v. Hornbeck, 14 N. J. L. 178, 181 (voluntary burning of the note sued on, held to exclude secondary evidence, as an "intentional destruction"); 1863, Wyckoff v. Wyckoff, 16 N. J. Eq. 401 ("If the instrument was voluntarily destroyed by the party, secondary evidence of its contents will not be admitted, until it be shown that it was done under a mistake, and until every inference of a fraudulent design is repelled"; admitting secondary evidence of a will destroyed by the residuary legatee after the testatrix' death after legal advice that it was invalid and under the honest belief that it was so); 1865, Clark v. Hornbeck, 17 N. J. Eq. 430, 451 ("voluntary destruction . . . would exclude all evidence of its contents"; said of a note);
New Mexico: 1911, Di Palma v. Weinman, 16 N. M. 302, 121 Pac. 38 (injury to business by destruction of goods and building and consequent removal; the case having been four times tried in eight years, the plaintiff's destruction of his invoices, etc. held to be sufficiently explained; approving the text above);
New York: 1802, Livingston v. Rogers, 2 Johns. Cas. 488, 1 Cai. Cas. 27 (a letter left with the attorney, who either carelessly lost it or else destroyed it thinking it useless; Lansing, Ch., was for exclusion on the ground of at least "inexcusable neglect"; the majority were for admission, there being no "reasonable grounds of suspicion of a suppression of the instrument" or "of mala fides in the plaintiff"); 1827, Jackson v. Lamb, 7 Cow. 431, 434 (papers buried during the war of the Revolution and thus probably lost or destroyed; contents admissible); 1834, Blade v. Noland, 12 Wend. 173 (voluntary destruction of a note, unexplained by the proponent, excludes secondary evidence); 1837, Clute v. Small, 17 Wend. 238, 243 (approving the preceding); 1864, Enders v. Sternbergh, 40 N. Y. (Keyes) 264, 269 ("If the paper be purposely destroyed by a party having an interest in its contents", it cannot be proved); 1881, Steele v. Lord, 70 N. Y. 280 (destruction by the plaintiff, in good faith and in the course of business, of drafts on which the advances sued for had been made; proof of contents allowed); 1882, Mason v. Libbey, 90 N. Y. 683 (a plaintiff's husband had destroyed old letters from the defendant, in order to reduce the bulk of household effects when moving to another city; evidence of contents admitted if "its destruction was not to produce a wrong or injury to the opposite party or to create an excuse for its non-production"; the trial Court's discretion to control in applying this principle);
North Carolina: 1854, McAulay v. Earnhart, 1 Jones L. 503 (a note paid off and then destroyed; secondary evidence allowed); 1873, Pollock v. Wilcox, 68 N. C. 46, 50 (same);
Ohio: 1834, Woods v. Pindall, Wright 507 (destruction of surrendered bond by plaintiff's predecessor; contents allowed to be proved);
Pennsylvania: 1841, Shortz v. Unangst, 3 W. & S. 45, 55 (copy admitted, the original having been burned by one who was a nominal plaintiff but really adverse);

struction otherwise made will equally suffice, provided the proponent first removes, to the satisfaction of the judge, any reasonable suspicion of fraud. The precedents, however, are not harmonious.

The question whether a title obtained by deed is revested in the grantor by the destruction of the deed with joint consent of grantor and grantee, or whether an alteration avoids the instrument, has sometimes, though improperly, been solved by invoking the present principle;[2] but the question is in truth one of the substantive law of property-transfer.[3]

§ 1199. (2) Detention by Opponent; in General. This excuse for non-production is historically one of the earliest recognized; yet there was a time when it was not conceded.[1] Only in the 1700s was the exemption, by repeated rulings, put beyond doubt.[2] To-day it is constantly enforced;[3] and it applies equally in criminal and in civil cases.[4]

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1392 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855);
South Carolina: 1892, State v. Head, 38 S. C. 258, 260, 16 S. E. 892 (witness read to L. a letter addressed to L., and L. then took it and burnt it: production not required);
South Dakota: 1905, Nelson v. Nat'l Drill Mfg. Co., 20 S. D. 299, 105 N. W. 630 (letters destroyed without improper motives; other evidence of them admitted);
Tennessee: 1871, Anderson v. Maberry, 2 Heisk. 653, 655 (destruction by the offeror's wife of a paper left behind by him in his house; production not required, there being no suspicion of suppression).

For the inference which may be drawn from a fradulent motive in destroying the original, see ante, § 291.

[2] The following cases illustrate the argument: 1855, Speer v. Speer, 7 Ind. 178 ("The voluntary surrender and destruction of an unrecorded deed may have the effect of divesting the title of the grantee by estopping him from proving the contents"); 1857, Thompson v. Thompson, 9 Ind. 323, 328 (delivery to grantor by grantee with intent to surrender title; "he cannot be permitted to allege that a deed is lost and thereupon give parol evidence of its contents, when he has surrendered t to be cancelled; the deed is not lost in such a case"; rule held applicable only to parties to the deed).

[3] For the authorities, see Jones, Real Property, II, § 1259; 1906, Crossman v. Keister, 223 Ill. 69, 79 N. E. 58; 1904, Tabor v. Tabor, 136 Mich. 255, 99 N. W. 4; 1916, Wagle v. Iowa State Bank, 175 Ia. 92, 156 N. W. 991; and the exhaustive article by Professor S. Williston, Harvard Law Review, XVIII, 105 (1904), on "Discharge of Contracts by Alteration", and the same author's treatise on Contracts, 1920, §§ 1876–1917.

§ 1199. [1] 1631, Earl of Suffolk v. Greenvill, 3 Rep. Ch. 89 (deed alleged to be concealed by the defendant; "the Court held it very dangerous to admit the contents and sufficiencies of deeds to be proved by testimony of witnesses"); 1677, Anon., 1 Mod. 266 (the defendant "had gotten the deed into his hands," in an action on a grant of advowson; the Court: "When the law requires that the deed be procured, you have your remedy for the deed at law; we cannot alter the law, nor ought to grant an imparlance [i.e. stay]").

[2] 1633, Bradford's Case, Clayt. 15 (copy allowable where defendant "himself hath the deed . . . and will not produce it"); 1662, Negus v. Reynal, 1 Keb. 12 (a deed taken away by the defendant; a lease "embezzled" by the plaintiff's lessor; neither required to be produced); 1670, Moreton v. Horton, 2 Keb. 483 (a lease "burnt and taken out of the plaintiff's trunk by the defendant", proved orally); 1683, Carver v. Pinkney, 3 Lev. 82 (debt for fees due from one owning a rectory by indenture from the Dean of L.; held, the indenture need not be shown, "which the defendant 'penes se habet'"); 1696, Lynch v. Clerke, 3 Salk. 154, Holt, C. J. ("in the possession of the plaintiff [opponent] himself"; copy admissible); 1711, Sir E. Seymour's case, 10 Mod. 8 (deed possessed by opponent, provable even with oral testimony, "by a man that had no copy"); 1718, Young v. Holmes, 1 Stra. 70 (rule recognized); 1754, Saltern v. Melhuish, Ambl. 247 (rule recognized); 1773, Attorney-General v. Le Merchant, 2 T. R. 201, note (copies of letters of the defendant had been taken while in the hands of the bankruptcy assignees; in notice and failure to produce, on a charge of unlawful importation of tea, the copies were admitted); 1778, R. v. Watson, 2 T. R. 199, per Buller, J. (said generally).

[3] The following cases merely recognize the general principle without ruling upon any of the details; the more detailed provisions of the Codes which recognize it are cited in the ensuing sections: Eng. 1836, Calvert v. Flower, 7 C. & P. 386; U.S. Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1855 (proof by production of original is excused, "2. when

The reason for the excuse is clear; if the opponent detains the document, then it is not available for the proponent, and as the fundamental notion of the general rule is that production is not required where it is not feasible, the rule here falls away and the non-production is excused:

1773, BULLER, J., in Attorney-General v. Le Merchant, 2 T. R. 201, note: "It was likewise said, in support of the motion, that the reason why copies are permitted to be evidence in common cases is because the party who has them in his custody, and does not produce them, is in some fault for not producing them; it is considered as a misbehavior in him in not producing them, and therefore in criminal cases a man who does not produce them is in no fault at all, and for that reason a copy is not admitted. But I do not take that to be the rule; it is not founded upon any misbehavior of the party, or considering him in fault; but the rule is this: the copies are admitted, when the originals are in the adversary's hands, for the same reason as when the originals are lost by accident; the reason is because the party has not the originals to produce."

It is clear that this notion of detention by the opponent, as an excuse for non-production, involves three essential elements: (a) possession, or more broadly, control, by the opponent; (b) demand, or notice, made to him by the proponent, signifying that the document will be needed; and (c) failure, or refusal, by the opponent to produce them in court. Only when these three circumstances coexist can it be said that the document is unavailable because the opponent detains it. The significance of this analysis is shown in the detailed rules.

§ 1200. Same: (a) Opponent's Possession; What Constitutes Possession. This element of possession, or control, is not to be tested by any of the technical definitions of possession applicable in other branches of the law. The question here is whether the proponent is unable to produce the document because the opponent has practically the control of it. It is enough for this purpose if the opponent has the control, whether technically named "possession" or not:

1833, LITTLEDALE, J., in Parry v. May, 1 Moo. & Rob. 280: "The instrument need not be in the actual possession of the party; it is enough if it is in his power; which it would be if in the hands of a party in whom it would be wrongful not to give up possession to him."

(1) It follows that the document need not be actually in the personal custody of the opponent himself; it is enough if it be held by a third person the original is in the possession of the party against whom the evidence is offered and he fails to produce it after reasonable notice"); Colo. Comp. L. 1921, C. C. P. § 391; Conn. 1795, Sedgwick v. Waterman, 2 Root 434; Iowa: 1889, Gafford v. Invest. Co., 77 Ia. 736, 738, 42 N. W. 550; Mass. 1830, Thayer v. Ins. Co., 10 Pick. 326, 329; 1852, Almy v. Reed, 10 Cush. 421, 425; Mich. 1884, Van Ness v. Hadsell, 54 Mich. 560, 563, 20 N. W. 585; 1886, Pangborn v. Ins. Co., 62 Mich. 638, 641, 29 N. W. 475 (on cross-examination); Minn. 1919, Kenyon Co. v. Johnson, 144 Minn. 48, 174 N. W. 436 (date for a map); Miss. 1857, Cooper v. Granberry, 33 Miss. 117, 122; Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10516; N. H. 1856, Cross v. Bell, 34 N. H. 82, 88; N. Y. 1814, Jackson v. Woolsey, 11 John. 446; 1831, Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 7 Wend. 31, 34; Or. Laws 1920, § 712, par. 1 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); Pa. 1900, Strawbridge v. Clamond Tel. Co., 195 Pa. 118, 45 Atl. 677; P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 284 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1392 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855).

[4] 1867, R. v. Elworthy, 10 Cox Cr. 579, 582, 583; and see numerous other instances in the ensuing notes.

on the opponent's behalf and subject to the opponent's demand.[1] The question whether notice to such a third person to produce is sufficient (post, § 1208) is a different one.[2]

(2) It is immaterial that the document is out of the jurisdiction, if it is held there on behalf of the opponent;[3] the only question can be as to the sufficiency of time allowed by the notice to produce (post, § 1208).[4]

(3) A past recent possession, not shown to have ceased, will ordinarily be assumed to continue.[5] A transfer of possession by the opponent to a third person after notice received will not take away the proponent's excuse for non-production.[6] Nor, in fairness, should a transfer shortly before notice

§ 1200. [1] The precedents cover various situations, and no more detailed rule can be or ought to be laid down:

ENGLAND: 1816, Baldney v. Ritchie, 1 Stark. 338 (an order of delivery sent to the captain of the defendant's vessel by the defendant; held the possession of the defendant): 1824, Partridge v. Coates, Ry. & Mo. 153 (agent's possession sufficient; banker held a customer's agent in holding a check); 1824, Sinclair v. Stevenson, 1 C. & P. 582, 585 (agent's possession is the principal's; here the opponent had given it to a third person and did not make it appear that he could not get it back); 1827, Burton v. Payne, 2 C. & P. 520 (a check with the defendant's bankers; no notice necessary to the latter; Bayley, J.: "The bankers are your [the defendant's] agents; you would have a right to go to the bankers and demand the check of them"); 1833, Parry v. May, 1 Moo. & Rob. 279 (a document in the hands of a common agent of the defendant and a third person, held not in the defendant's control; "he must have such a right to it as would entitle him not merely to inspect but to retain"); 1845, Robb v. Starkey, 2 C. & K. 143 (agent's possession sufficient, even though there is merely "evidence to go to the jury" of the defendant's agent's custody); 1860, Irwin v. Lever, 2 F. & F. 296 (Pollock, C. B.: "The possession of the plaintiff's attorney is the possession of the plaintiff; . . . though they [i.e. agents] might perhaps be subpœnaed, it is not necessary to subpœna them; when the principal is a party to the suit, it is sufficient to give the party notice"; here, the document was in the hands of an attorney in another suit, different from the one acting in the present suit; notice to the principal held sufficient); 1860, Blackburn, J., in Wright v. Bunyard, 2 F. & F. 193, 196 (opponent's banker's possession, held not sufficient); 1860, Pollock, C. B., in Irwin v. Lever, 2 F. & F. 296 (opponent's banker's possession sufficient).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64, 65 (that deeds were detained by the opponent's lessor under whom he claimed, sufficient); 1832, U. S. v. Doebler, 1 Baldw. 519, 522 (forgery; letter sent by defendant to accomplice, asking for more of the forged notes, held to be constructively in defendant's possession); Cal. 1901, Harloe v. Lambie, 132 Cal. 133, 64 Pac. 88 (possession of the attorney suffices); D. C. 1894, Main v. Aukam, 4 D. C. App. 51, 55 (possession by a co-defendant, subject to defendant's call, held the possession of defendant); Ill. 1906, Young v. People, 221 Ill. 51, 77 N. E. 536 (letter last seen in possession of K.; notice to K. required, before evidence of contents was admissible).

[2] Here the question is whether the opponent could control the document, irrespective of the time required to obtain it, and whether under any circumstances the proponent by giving notice can excuse himself; there the question is whether notice to the agent alone suffices; i.e. whether the third person had a duty to communicate it and time to surrender, or whether notice to the opponent alone allows him time to obtain the document.

[3] 1908, Cutter-Tower Co. v. Clements, 5 Ga. App. 291, 63 S. E. 58; 1874, Gimbel v. Hufford, 46 Ind. 125, 129 (though out of the State, yet it may nevertheless be within the party's own control).

[4] For the question whether notice is necessary (here the question is merely whether it is sufficient) to an opponent out of the jurisdiction, see post, § 1213.

The following case belongs here: 1913, Owner v. Bee Hive Spinning Co., [1914] 1 K. B. 105 (violation of factory act, plaintiff being an official inspector; to prove the contents of an abstract of the Factory Act as affixed to the wall in defendant's factory, the plaintiff offered secondary evidence; the law required the affixed abstract to be kept constantly affixed; defendant argued that notice to produce should have been given; held that the case was one of an irremovable document, and that the principle of § 1219, applied; Mortimer v. M'Callan, post, § 1219, cited).

[5] 1829, R. v. Hunter, 4 C. & P. 128 (former possession presumptively held to continue).

[6] 1819, Knight v. Martin, Gow 103.

served be an excuse, if the opponent did not duly advise the proponent, at the time of notice, that he had transferred it.[7]

§ 1201. Same: Mode of Proving Possession; Documents sent by Mail. Difficulties of principle sometimes arise with reference to the evidence offered to prove the opponent's possession so as to take advantage of the present excuse.

(1) In the first place, the opponent's possession must be somehow shown by the party offering a copy;[1] and the sufficiency of the proof is of course a preliminary question to be determined by the judge.[2]

(2) In the next place, it often happens that the only evidence of such possession is the mailing of the document, under cover duly stamped and addressed, to the opponent; this is on general principles (ante, § 95) to be regarded as sufficient evidence of its receipt by the addressee, and therefore ought to suffice as evidence of his possession in order to excuse the proponent's non-production after notice to the opponent.[3] This question must be

[7] Contra: 1860, Wright v. Bunyard, 2 F. & F. 193, 194 (the defendant had transferred it before notice served; copy not allowed, even though the proponent did not know, until the defendant so testified, what had become of it).

§ 1201. [1] The following citations include various instances of proof deemed sufficient on the facts: ENGLAND: 1819, Knight v. Martin, Gow 103; 1834, Whitford v. Tutin, 10 Bing. 395; UNITED STATES: Fed. 1825, Vasse v. Mifflin, 4 Wash. C. C. 519 (opponent denied receipt of letter; sending not shown; copy excluded); Ala. 1895, Loeb v. Huddleston, 105 Ala. 257, 16 So. 714; Ariz. 1917, Lally v. Cash, 18 Ariz. 574, 164 Pac. 443 (libel); Ga. 1857, Bell v. Chandler, 23 Ga. 356, 359 (execution, presumably on file); Ill. 1903, Landt v. McCullough, 206 Ill. 214, 69 N. E. 107 (lease); Ky. 1830, Hughes v. Easten, 4 J. J. Marsh. 572; Mich. 1874, Sun Ins. Co. v. Earle, 29 Mich. 406, 411; 1886, Gage v. Meyers, 59 Mich. 300, 306, 26 N. W. 522 (mere proof of writing a letter to opponent, the latter denying its receipt, insufficient); Minn. 1860, Desnoyer v. McDonald, 4 Minn. 515, 518 (documents sufficiently traced to defendant's possession); 1867, Thayer v. Barney, 12 Minn. 502, 512 (same); 1893, Lovejoy v. Howe, 55 Minn. 353, 356, 57 N. W. 57 (possession traced to opponent on the facts); Miss. 1906, Elmslie v. Thurman, 87 Miss. 537, 40 So. 67 (bill to enforce a vendor's lien on land conveyed to defendants; the latter not denying execution, their possession of the deed was presumed); N. J. 1819, Wills v. M'Dole, 5 N. J. L. 501 (that a document was "believed" to be in the possession of the defendant's agent, held insufficient); 1823, Den v. M'Allister, 7 N. J. L. 46, 55; N. Y. 1906, People v. Dolan, 186 N. Y. 4, 78 N. E. 569 (forgery of notes; other forged notes being relevant to show knowledge, etc., the prosecution was excused from producing the originals, without proof of loss, due notice to produce having been given to the defendant, since here the course of business raised the inference "that they were all returned to the possession of the defendant"); Okla. 1912, Landon v. Morehead, 34 Okl. 701, 126 Pac. 1027; Or. 1916, Toomey v. Casey, 82 Or. 71, 160 Pac. 583 (assignment of lease by defendant to L.; plaintiff gave notice to produce; defendant denied possession or existence, but did produce an assignment by T. to L.; plaintiff then testified to contents of the alleged assignment; held, error, since the defendant's possession had not been evidenced and presumably the alleged document would be in the assignee's hands; applying Lord's Or. L. §§ 712, 782).

[2] 1841, Harvey v. Mitchell, 2 Moo. & Rob. 366; 1906, People v. Dolan, 186 N. Y. 4, 78 N. E. 569; post, § 2550.

[3] Accord: Fed. 1883, Rosenthal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 185, 193, 4 Sup. 382 (letters mailed, but said by addressee not to have been received; copies allowed); 1904, Supreme Council v. Champe, 127 Fed. 541, 63 C. C. A. 282 (press-copy admitted, the letter having been proved written, but its mailing and its receipt being doubtful), Conn. 1905, City Bank v. Thorp, 78 Conn. 211, 61 Atl. 428 (assignments sent to defendant, who denied their receipt and possession; copies admitted); Ky. 1899, Shields v. Lewis, — Ky. —, 49 S. W. 803 (letter mailed to opponent; evidence of contents receivable); Mass. 1837, Dana v. Kemble, 19 Pick. 112, 114 (letter left at a hotel, where the usage was to distribute regularly letters so sent, held sufficient; the question is "whether it is sufficiently proved that the letter or document has come to the hands and is in the possession and power of the opposite party"); 1875, Augur S. A. & G. Co. v. Whit-carefully distinguished from another one; the question here is whether it is sufficient for the proponent, in excuse, to show this and give notice, as entitling him then to prove the contents; but the question may also be raised whether it is even necessary for him to give notice, i.e. whether he may not treat it as really a case of loss, and thus prove the contents without having given notice; this involves another consideration (post, § 1203).

(3) Whether an attorney may be asked as to his possession of a client's document involves the question of privilege (post, § 2309).

§ 1202. Same: (b) Notice to Produce: General Principle. The reason for the simple rule requiring notice has at times been the subject of some singular misunderstandings and fantastic inventions.

(1) It has been said, for example, that the opponent must be notified so that the proponent may not impose a false copy upon the Court.[1] The answer to this is, first, that giving notice does not remove this danger, for if the opponent does not produce the original, the proponent's copy may still be false, and, secondly, that the argument would be equally sound for a document in a third person's hands, for which concededly no notice need be given to the opponent.

(2) It has also been said that the notice must be given in order to prevent surprise on the opponent's part;[2] the answer to this is, first, that in general no party is obliged to guard against surprising his opponent by warning him of intended evidence (post, § 1845); secondly, that if here the purpose were to give the opponent time to discover evidence impeaching or confirming the document, the notice should allow time for such an investigation; yet the law is clear that only time enough to produce the document need be allowed; and, thirdly, that if in fact he is not surprised, it is in law still no excuse for not giving notice.

(3) The true reason is that which is naturally deducible from the proponent's situation. He is required to produce the document if he can; he has miscarried, and the case becomes one of loss, and therefore no notice at all is necessary; see post, § 1203.

tier, 117 Mass. 451, 453, 455 (letter mailed to opponent, and notice to produce; denial by him of the letter's receipt; a copy admitted); 1879, Dix v. Atkins, 128 Mass. 43 (letter delivered to opponent's clerk, but receipt denied by opponent; held sufficient evidence of possession); 1921, Eveland v. Lawson, — Mass. —, 132 N. E. 719 (letter sent by mail to opponent, and receipt denied by him); Or. 1895, Sugar Pine D. & L. Co. v. Garrett, 28 Or. 168, 42 Pac. 129 (letter properly mailed; sufficient on the facts).

Contra: 1851, Choteau v. Railt, 20 Oh. 132 (mere deposit in post-office addressed to opponent, not enough).

The only argument in favor of an adverse ruling seems to be that the opponent's denial of receipt overcomes the inference resting on the fact of mailing. But if so, as the proponent has shown the mailing and the opponent denies the arrival, the dilemma can be solved only by assuming that the document § 1202. [1] 1803, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Surtees v. Hubbard, 4 Esp. 203 ("the reason of giving notice . . . was to check a person from giving in evidence what was a false copy"); 1857, Merrick, C. J., in Williams v. Benton, 12 La. An. 91 ("The reason of the rule is that possibly the instrument, when produced, will be less favorable to the plaintiffs than the parol proof which they may obtain").

[2] 1811, Le Blanc, J., in How v. Hall, 14 East 274, 276 ("We see the good sense of the rule which requires previous notice to be given . . . that he may not be taken by surprise"); 1831, Curia, in Bank v. Brown, Dudley 62, 64 ("The rule is . . . to prevent his being taken by surprise, in cases where it is uncertain whether such evidence will be used by the adverse party").

says that he cannot, and shows that he cannot because the opponent has it and will not bring it in; but this essential proposition, that the opponent will not bring it in, can be supported only by showing that the opponent has been requested to do so and has failed to comply with the request. If we translate "notice" by "demand", we shall immediately appreciate the significance of the notice as a requirement. It is a demand for future production by the opponent; and this notice or demand is necessary, in Baron Parke's words,[3] "merely to exclude the argument that the party has not taken all reasonable means to procure the original; which he must do before he can be permitted to make use of secondary evidence." This reason is clearly the only correct one, and is not only consistent with the details of the rule but has frequently been pointed out by the Courts:[4]

1808, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Com. v. Messinger, 1 Binn. 273, 274: "Notice must be served on him or his attorney to produce it, because otherwise it cannot appear that the prosecutor might not have had the original if he had chosen to call for it."

1821, PORTER, J., in Abat v. Riou, 9 Mart. La. 465, 467: "The elementary principle, which requires that the best evidence the nature of the case permits of shall be produced, . . . refuses to a party permission to give secondary evidence of a written document on the ground of its being in possession of his adversary, until he has shown that by giving notice to that adversary to produce it, he has used every exertion in his power that the best evidence might be had."

The cases arising under this requirement involve two sets of questions: the necessity of the notice; and the procedure of giving notice. Under the first head may be considered, in order, cases in which the rule of notice is not applicable; cases in which the rule is satisfied; cases in which, by exception, notice is dispensed with.

§ 1203. Same: Rule of Notice not Applicable; Documents Lost, or Sent by Mail. (a) The rule requiring notice to the opponent proceeds on the assumption that the opponent has possession of the document, the object being to show a demand and refusal to produce. Hence, the mere giving of notice or demand, without showing that the opponent had the document demanded, is of no avail.[1]

(b) Conversely, the requirement of notice does not apply to the proponent

[3] In Dwyer v. Collins, quoted more fully post, § 1204.

[4] The following list contains sundry cases merely applying the rule without illustrating any of its details: ENGLAND: 1797, Molton v. Harris, 2 Esp. 549; 1835, Littledale, J., in Doe v. Morris, 3 A. & E. 46, 50 ("When a document is shown to have been in the possession of a defendant, the plaintiff is not at liberty to talk of it till he has given notice to produce it"); UNITED STATES: Fed. 1840, U. S. v. Winchester, 2 McLean 135, 138; Ala. 1893, Home Prot. Co. v. Whidden, 103 Ala. 203; Ga. 1896, Smith v. Holbrook, 99 Ga. 256, 25 S. E. 627; Ind. 1855, Smith v. Reed, 7 Ind. 242; 1858, Mumford v. Thomas, 10 id. 167, 169; Ind. Terr. 1897, Perry v. Archard, 1 I. T. 487, 42 S. W. 421; Me. 1859, State v. Mayberry, 48 Me. 218, 239 (Court Rule 27 merely affirms the existing law of evidence); Md. 1820, Kennedy v. Fowke, 5 H. & J. 63; 1861, Morrison v. Welty, 18 Md. 169, 174; Minn. 1871, Board v. Moore, 17 Minn. 412, 424; Nebr. 1877, Birdsall v. Carter, 5 Nebr. 517; 1890, Watson v. Roode, 30 Nebr. 264, 273, 46 N. W. 491; Tenn. 1858, Farnsworth v. Sharp, 5 Sneed 615.

§ 1203. [1] Cases cited ante, § 1201, requiring possession to be shown.

unless he is proceeding on the theory that the opponent has possession; for example, if he is accounting for the document as lost or destroyed, and not as in possession of the opponent, notice is unnecessary.[2] It follows that where the document can be shown to have been lost or destroyed while in the opponent's hands,[3] or is admitted by the opponent to have been destroyed or lost, even out of his own possession,[4] no notice is necessary; for it is no longer a case of opponent's possession, but of loss. Furthermore, where by the proponent's evidence the document is traced to the opponent's hands — as by the presumption from mailing — and the opponent denies the receipt of it, then, even taking the opponent's testimony at its highest value, the whereabouts of the document becomes an unexplainable mystery, and the case is virtually one of loss; so that the proponent should be allowed to prove the contents without having given notice; while, if we take the opponent's testimony as false and assume that he has in truth received the document, his denial is equivalent to an express refusal to produce, which equally puts the plaintiff in the position of being unable to obtain the document (post, § 1207), so that notice is unnecessary.[5]

[2] 1816, Teil v. Roberts, 3 Hayw. 138; 1840, McCreary v. Hood, 5 Blackf. 316; 1841, Linsee v. State, ib. 601, 603.

For the case of fraudulent suppression by the opponent, see post, § 1207.

[3] Contra: 1835, Doe v. Morris, 3 A. & E. 46 (notice necessary, even though the plaintiff claims that it can be shown to have been since destroyed).

[4] 1861, Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Jewett, 16 Ind. 273 (admission of opponent's agent, the custodian, sufficient to prove loss); 1903, Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Turner, 98 Md. 22, 55 Atl. 1023; 1890, Barmby v. Plummer, 29 Nebr. 64, 68, 45 N. W. 277.

Contra: 1873, Olive v. Adams, 50 Ala. 373, 375 (notice required, even where the opponent in litigation ten months before had admitted that his bond for title was lost or destroyed); 1885, Burlington Lumber Co. v. W. C. & M. Co., 66 Ia. 292, 23 N. W. 674 (opponent's admission of the loss, etc., of a document, not sufficient to dispense; the opinion erroneously supposes that the reason of the rule aims at allowing the opponent to obtain evidence as to contents or to disprove the existence of the paper, and not merely at giving time for search).

But the following case seems to go too far: 1882, Hope's Appeal, 48 Mich. 518, 12 N. W. 682 (opponent's denial of existence of document relieves from necessity of production; here, a second will said to have revoked a first, but denied by opponent to exist).

[5] This situation has given some trouble to the Courts in its solution; but the majority of rulings take the above view; Fed. 1894, Dunbar v. U. S., 156 U. S. 185, 194, 15 Sup. 325 (letters said to be in defendant's possession; defendant denied possession; semble, no notice needed); 1916, Watlington v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 233 Fed. 247 ("proved copies of letters sent to an accused may be admitted in evidence, without otherwise accounting for the originals"); 1918, Pilson v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 249 Fed. 328 (illegal use of the mails; letters sent to defendant, proved by secondary evidence without notice to produce, the evidence being that he had never received them); Ala. 1884, Littleton v. Clayton, 77 Ala. 571, 575 (following Roberts v. Spencer, infra); 1903, Bickley v. Bickley, 136 Ala. 548, 34 So. 946 (letters said to have been received by the opponent, but their receipt denied by her; no notice required); 1909, Jordan v. Austin, 161 Ala. 585, 50 So. 70 (approving the above conclusion); Cal. 1869, Jones v. Jones, 38 Cal. 584, 586 (paper presumed in defendant's possession; after notice, defendant disclaimed all knowledge of it; copy allowed); Ga. 1877, Carr v. Smith, 58 Ga. 361 (where the opponent denies the alleged possession or alleges loss, and thus the case is in effect one of loss for the opponent, no notice is necessary); Ia. 1906, Stark v. Burke, 131 Ia. 684, 109 N. W. 206 (plaintiff's document traced to R., a hostile witness, who denied possession of such a document; plaintiff not required to call R. to produce a document which he admitted having but asserted not to be the plaintiff's); Mass. 1877, Roberts v. Spencer, 123 Mass. 397, 399 (document mailed to opponent, but said by him not to have been received; no notice necessary); Pa. 1905, Neubert v. Armstrong W. Co., 211 Pa. 582, 61 Atl. 123 (copy of letter received without notice; but the point is not raised); Vt. 1901, Scott v. Bailey, 73 Vt. 49, 50 Atl. 557.

§ 1204. Same: Rule of Notice Satisfied; (1) Document present in Court. Where the document is at hand in the court-room, in the opponent's possession, an instant demand is sufficient, and no previous notice, i.e. before the trial, is necessary. A contrary view could rest only on some erroneous idea of the reason for requiring notice, — as, for example, that it is to allow the opponent to search for evidence. But, as the only reason for it is to make clear that the proponent has demanded and failed to obtain the document and has done all that he can to obtain it (ante, § 1202), a notice or demand made on the spot, for a document at the moment in court, is here equally satisfactory:[1]

1852, PARKE, B., in Dwyer v. Collins, 7 Exch. 639: "The next question is whether, the bill being admitted to be in court, parol evidence was admissible on its non-production, or whether a previous notice to produce was necessary. On principle, the answer must depend on the reason why notice to produce is required. If it be to give his opponent notice that such a document will be used by a party to the cause, so that he may be enabled to prepare evidence to explain or confirm it, then no doubt a notice at the trial, though the document be in court, is too late. But if it be merely to enable the party to have the document in court, to produce it if he likes, and if he does not, to enable the opponent to give parol evidence, — if it be merely to exclude the argument that the opponent has not taken

Contra: 1879, Dix v. Atkins, 128 Mass. 43 (letter delivered to opponent's clerk, but receipt denied by opponent; notice said to be necessary); 1878, Ferguson v. Hemingway, 38 Mich. 159 (letter to opponent; opponent's failure to recollect receipt of it, no reason for dispensing with notice); 1898, Clary v. O'Shea, 72 Minn. 105, 75 N. W. 115 (plaintiff alleged a lease to the defendant, in the latter's possession; defendant denied the existence of such a lease; notice held necessary).

Compare the different but related questions in § 1201, ante, and § 1209, n. 1, post.

§ 1204. [1] In the following citations, the term "not necessary" means that notice before trial is unnecessary and that notice at the trial suffices:

ENGLAND: (here the rule was not settled until the case of Dwyer v. Collins, above quoted); 1769, Roe v. Harvey, 4 Burr. 2484, 2487 (the only question decided dealt with the presumption from non-production; on the present question the opinions are obscure); 1816, Doe v. Grey, 1 Stark. 283 (notice required); 1832, Cook v. Hearn, 1 Moo. & Rob. 201, before three Judges (notice in court insufficient, though presumably the document was in court); 1834, Bate v. Kinsey, 1 Cr. M. & R. 38, 43 (the plaintiff's attorney had the deed in court, but claimed the attorney's privilege; Gurney, B.: "The fact of the instrument being in court makes no difference with regard to the necessity of a notice to produce"); 1842, Parke, B., in Lloyd v. Mostyn, 2 Dowl. Pr. N. S. 476, 481 (left undecided); 1852, Dwyer v. Collins, 7 Exch. 639 (plea of gaming to an action on a bill of exchange; the bill being in court in the plaintiff's hands, the defendant was not required to give notice; quoted supra).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1827, Rhoades v. Selim, 4 Wash. C. C. 715, 718 (not necessary); Ala. 1847, Brown v. Isbell, 11 Ala. 1009, 1022 (notice not necessary, "perhaps"); 1884, Littleton v. Clayton, 77 Ala. 571, 575 (not necessary); Ga. 1888, Crawford v. Hodge, 81 Ga. 728, 730, 8 S. E. 208, semble (not necessary); Ill. 1846, Ferguson v. Miles, 8 Ill. 358, 364 (not necessary); Ia. 1884, Bell v. R. Co., 64 Ia. 321, 322, 20 N. W. 456 (paper delivered at trial by opponent without notice; notice not necessary for proving missing portion); Ky. 1826, Lamb v. Moberly, 3 T. B. Monr. 179 (not necessary); 1829, Dana v. Boyd, 2 J. J. Marsh. 587, 592 (not necessary); Mass. 1857, McGregor v. Wait, 10 Gray 72, 73, 75, semble (not necessary); Mich. 1892, Hanselman v. Doyle, 90 Mich. 142, 144, 51 N. W. 195 (discretion of trial Court); N. Y. 1867, Howell v. Huyck, 2 Abb. App. 423 (action to foreclose a mortgage; plea, payment to the plaintiff's assignor; to prove the indorsements of payment on the mortgage, no notice was necessary, the papers being presumed to be in court in the plaintiff's possession); Oh. 1851, Choteau v. Raitt, 20 Oh. 132 (notice at trial "might be said to be reasonable"); S. C. 1845, Reynolds v. Quattlebum, 2 Rich. 140, 144 (not necessary); 1892, Bickley v. Bank, 39 S. C. 281, 293, 17 S. E. 977 (not necessary); 1898, Hampton v. Ray, 52 S. C. 74, 29 S. E. 537 (not necessary); Wis. 1861, Barker v. Barker, 14 Wis. 131, 150 (not necessary); 1863, Barton v. Kane, 17 Wis. 37, 45, semble (same).

all reasonable means to procure the original (which he must do before he can be permitted to make use of secondary evidence), then the demand of production at the trial is sufficient. . . . If this [the former] be the true reason, the measure of the reasonable length of notice would not be the time necessary to procure the document — a comparatively simple inquiry — but the time necessary to procure evidence to explain or support it, — a very complicated one, depending on the nature of the plaintiff's case and the document itself and its bearing on the cause; and in practice such matters have never been inquired into, but only the time with reference to the custody of the document and the residence and convenience of the party to whom notice has been given, and the like. We think the plaintiff's alleged principle is not the true one on which notice to produce is required, but that it is merely to give a sufficient opportunity to the opposite party to produce it and thereby secure if he pleases the best evidence of the contents; and a request to produce immediately is quite sufficient for that purpose, if it be in court. . . . It would be some scandal to the administration of the law if the plaintiff's objection had prevailed."

1829, MILLS, J., in Dana v. Boyd, 2 J. J. Marsh. 587, 592: "The design of the notice is that the party may be apprized of the necessity of bringing it in. If it is already there, demand of its production is sufficient notice."

§ 1205. Same: Rule of Notice Satisfied; (2) Implied Notice in Pleadings; New Trial; Trover, Forgery, etc. It is clear that the proponent's notification of his need for a specific document may be made otherwise than by an express writing formally calling upon the opponent to produce. Where by necessary implication the opponent has become informed to that effect, there is a sufficient notification, such that the opponent's failure to produce will place the proponent at liberty to prove the contents otherwise.

The chief instance of such a notice by necessary implication occurs where by the pleadings of the proponent the cause of action makes it clear that he will need to prove, as a material part of his case, the contents of a specific document in the opponent's possession:

1811, LEBLANC, J., in How v. Hall, 14 East 274, 277: "Where the nature of the action gives the defendant notice that the plaintiff means to charge him with the possession of such an instrument, there can be no necessity for giving him any other notice."

The principle is universally accepted; and a variety of cases — some of them more or less open to difference of opinion — illustrate its application.[1]

§ 1205. [1] ENGLAND: 1800, Anderson v. May, 2 B. & P. 237 (action by an attorney for services rendered; his bill had already been delivered to the defendant, though not by way of notice of the action, but in the ordinary way of a demand; no notice required); 1807, Jolley v. Taylor, 1 Camp. 143 (assumpsit upon a promise to carry three promissory notes; no notice required); 1817, Wood v. Stickland, 2 Meriv. 461 (notice not necessary for a Chancery hearing, where through the prior publication of the depositions the opponent knew that the document would be needed); 1827, Colling v. Treweek, 6 B. & C. 394, 398 ("where from the nature of the suit, the opposite party must know that he is charged with possession of the instrument"; here applied to an attorney's bill sued upon, the law requiring a delivery of it to the client one month before bringing suit); 1835, Read v. Gamble, 10 A. & E. 597 (the plaintiff sued on a check; plea, that it covered a gambling debt; the defendant held bound to give notice); 1839, Shearm v. Burnard, 10 A. & E. 593, 596, semble (plea that a note sued on was given in payment of an accommodation note; notice to produce the latter note required); 1840, Knight v. Waterford, 4 Y. & C. 283, 292 (action for tithes; bond to a predecessor in title for a lease of tithes; whether notice was not necessary, left undecided; Wood v. Stickland doubted).

CANADA: 1859, Bank of Montreal v. Snyder, 18 U. C. Q. B. 492 (action on a note; notice required, the plea not denying its genuineness but alleging fraud; unsound).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1912, Ætna Ins. Co. v. Bank, C. C. A., 194 Fed. 385 (policyholder's notification to the defendant of a fire

A few cases call for special mention:

(a) In an action of trover for a document, there can be no doubt that on the present principle the plaintiff may prove the conversion of the document without having expressly notified the defendant to produce it, because the very nature of the action sufficiently notifies the defendant.[2] But, practiloss, held improperly proved orally; the present point was not raised, but should have been, and it is astonishing that a court of appeal will reverse a judgment in such a case without noticing so obvious a point to save the reversa[1]); California: 1886, Nicholson v. Tarpey, 70 Cal. 608, 610, 12 Pac. 778 (action on the contract for sale of land, the defendant having possession of the only remaining dupiicate original of the contract; notice not required); Colorado: 1878, Cole v. Cheovenda, 4 Colo. 17, 21 (action for breach of contract; notice at the trial sufficient); Connecticut: 1803, Ross v. Bruce, 1 Day 100 (civil action for money paid on forged note: no notice needed); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5843 (express notice not necessary "when the action is brought to recover the paper or set it aside"); 1887, Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Tillman, 79 Ga. 607, 610, 5 S. E. 135 (action on contract of carriage; notice required for bill of lading); Illinois: 1886, Spencer v. Boardman, 118 Ill. 553, 9 N. E. 330 (petition to sell deceased's estate; notice of use of ante-nuptial contract, implied by the pleadings); Indiana: 1862, Commonwealth's Ins. Co. v. Monninger, 18 Ind. 352, 361 (action on a policy; notice for notice of loss, not required); Iowa: 1862, Patterson v. Linder, 14 Ia. 414 (bill to quiet title by vendor who had given bond for a deed; notice required for the bond); Kansas: 1902, State v. Dreany, 65 Kan. 292, 69 Pac. 182 (conspiracy in restraint of trade; notice to produce the illegal agreement, held to be implied from the issue); Minnesota: 1893, Dade v. Ins. Co., 54 Minn. 336, 56 N. W. 48 (action on fire policy; notice required of proofs of loss sent by plaintiff to defendant); Mississippi: 1860, Griffin v. Sheffield, 38 Miss. 359, 362, 389, 393 (defendant in ejectment had furnished plaintiff with a bill of particulars of title, including a copy of a title-bond; plaintiff allowed to use this copy without notice, on defendant's refusal to produce original); 1902, Cook v. State, 81 Miss. 146, 32 So. 312 (illegal sale of liquor; express notice required for a Federal liquor-license in defendant's possession; ruling unsound); Missouri: 1837, Hart v. Robinett, 5 Mo. 11, 16 (action for not returning an execution; notice not necessary); 1880, Cross v. Williams, 72 Mo. 577, 580 (action by bond-surety, alleging the contract to be either lost or in defendant's possession; notice not needed); New Hampshire: 1852, Neally v. Greenough, 25 N. H. 325, 329 (action on a bill of exchange against the acceptor; notice not necessary); New York: 1820, Hardin v. Kretsinger, 17 John. 293 (covenant for a sum of money in obligations promised in consideration of a conveyance; notice not required); 867, Howell v. Huyck, 2 Abb. App. 423 (action to foreclose a mortgage; plea, payment to the plaintiff's assignor; to prove the plea, the defendant was allowed to testify that the mortgagor, his vendor, had shown him the mortgage with the indorsements of payment thereon; held, that notice to produce the instrument need not have been given by the defendant; "the pleadings were notice to produce the papers; this was not notice, it may be said, to produce them for the purpose of showing indorsements on them; but a notice to produce them for any purpose, it seems to me, ought to be sufficient to admit parol proof of any fact which the production of the paper would show"); North Dakota: 1901, Nichols & S. Co. v. Charlebois, 10 N. D. 446, 88 N. W. 80 (breach of warranty of machinery; pleadings held to give sufficient notice to produce a notice of breach as required under the contract); Pennsylvania: 1816, Alexander v. Coulter, 2 S. & R. 494 (action on partnership agreement to keep fair and regular books, for sums collected by partner's administrator; notice required, for a specific book; "it is not enough that the paper is referred to in the declaration"); 1851, Garrigues v. Harris, 16 Pa. St. 344, 350 (ejectment for land held under a fraudulent deed; notice not required); South Carolina: 1831, Pickering v. Meyers, 2 Bail. 113 (assumpsit for wages; notice of written agreement held necessary); 1801, Worth v. Norton, 60 S. C. 293, 38 S. E. 605 (action on a note; defence, statute of limitations; note required for the defendant seeking to prove the date; ruling unsound); South Dakota: 1899, Zipp v. Colchester R. Co., 12 S. D. 218, 80 N. W. 367 (action on contract; pleadings held to imply notice as to orders and letters from plaintiff to defendant); Texas: 1855, Dean v. Border, 15 Tex. 298 (action on two notes; plea, payment, with specification of items including "draft on J. A."; held, not sufficient as notice); 1855, Hamilton v. Rice, 15 Tex. 382, 385 (trespass to try title; answer, that a survey was made, but the field-notes were fraudulently obtained and kept by the plaintiff, etc.; held, sufficient notice); Wisconsin: 1867, Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Whittaker, 21 Wis. 335 (contract mentioned in pleadings: no notice necessary; here the pleading alleged a duplicate original).

[2] Eng. 1811, How v. Hall, 14 East 274 (trover for a bond; Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "Is not the very nature of the action notice to the defendant to be prepared for the proof to be cally, the same result is also reached by another principle (§ 1242, post); for the plaintiff, in proving the conversion, does not need to prove the terms of the document, but only the existence and identity of it, and its taking by the defendant; so that the rule of production does not apply; and thus a number of rulings (post, § 1249) reach the same result upon this latter principle. There would be this difference between the two principles, that if under the former the defendant should produce under the implied notice, the plaintiff might still not be able to use it if it were illegally without stamp; while under the latter principle the document need not be either produced or accounted for and its lack of stamp would be immaterial.

(b) In a criminal prosecution in which the gist of the charge is an unlawful dealing with a document by the defendant, the charge is a sufficient notice to produce the document if in his possession:

1832, BALDWIN, J., in U. S. v. Doebler, 1 Baldw. 519, 524: "If the note he is charged with forging, passing, or delivering, is of the same kind with others which he has disposed of or retained in his possession, he had notice in effect that, if practicable to procure it, evidence will be given of their counterfeit character, and of his having passed them as true. It is notice in law, by which a party is as much bound both in civil and in criminal cases as by notice in effect. Notice in fact is notice in form; notice in law is notice in effect; and either are sufficient. . . . Knowing that proof of all these facts is as competent to the prosecutor as the one specifically charged, no injustice is done him."

1865, ELLIOTT, C. J., in McGinnis v. State, 24 Ind. 500, 503 (after stating that production cannot be compelled): "The description of the instrument in the indictment must be such that it would always serve to notify the defendant of the nature of the charge against him, save him from surprise, and enable him to be prepared to produce the writing, when it was his interest to produce it. But when its production would be likely to work an injury to the defendant by aiding in his conviction, it could not be expected that he would produce it in response to the notice. It is therefore difficult to perceive what benefit could result, either to the State or to the defendant, from the giving of such notice; while to the defendant it is liable to work a positive injury, by producing an unfavorable impression against him in the minds of the jury upon his refusal to produce it after notice."

It seems settled, therefore, that on a charge of larceny or of forgery no express notice is necessary; and the principle would also extend to other charges; but the nature of the charge will determine the application of the principle.[1] offered?"); 1835, Denman, L. C. J., in Read v. Gamble, 10 A. & E. 597 (notice not necessary); 1867, R. v. Elworthy, 10 Cox Cr. 579, 582 (Kelly, C. B.: "The ground of decision is this, that the defendant has notice by the action of the nature and contents of the document . . . and he could not be found guilty of the conversion without proof that the document had come into his possession"); Can. 1852, Tilly v. Fisher, 10 U. C. Q. B. 32 (trover for notes; original need not be accounted for; Draper, J., diss.); U. S. Mich. 1862, Rose v. Lewis, 10 Mich. 483, 484 (trover for a note; no notice required); Pa. 1820, McClean v. Hertzog, 6 S. & R. 154 (trover for notes; no express notice required, a notice being implied); S. Car. 1811, Oswald v. King, 2 Brev. 471 (trover for a deed; notice not necessary).

[1] ENGLAND: 1830, R. v. Haworth, 4 C. & P. 254, 256 (forgery of a deed; the defendant had since destroyed it; notice not required); 1853, R. v. Kitson, 6 Cox Cr. 159 (arson with intent to defraud the insurer; notice to produce the policy required); 1867, R. v. Elworthy, 10 Cox Cr. 579, 582 (perjury in stating that there was no draft of a certain statutory declaration; notice required; Littledale, J.: "The exception to the rule is when the other party is by the proceeding itself charged with the possession of the document. Here the indictment does not charge the defendant with the possession of the document, or give notice that it [is] meant to call on him to produce it in evidence").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1832, U. S. v. Doebler, 1 Baldw. 519, 522 (forgery; a letter by defendant to an accomplice, asking for more

When, however, the writings to be offered are not the subjects of the very criminal charge — as when similar counterfeits are offered to evidence intent — the present doctrine may not avail to dispense with notice; and the further question will then arise whether such documents need be produced or accounted for at all, being "collateral" and their precise terms not always material (post, § 1249).

(c) It would seem that at a subsequent trial of the same issue, no new notice need be given for a material document formerly produced by the opponent or formerly demanded by the proponent to be produced by the opponent; for the renewal of the issues is notice that what was needed then will be again needed now.[4]

(d) A ship's log-book is in the custody of the master; but the traditional rules of admiralty do not follow the technical rules of the common law in applying the present principle.[5]

§ 1206. Same: Rule of Notice Satisfied; (3) Notice of Notice. At some time early in the 1800s it came often to be urged, and sometimes judicially of the forged notes; notice not necessary, because the defendant by implication had notice "that the passing of other similar notes will be brought into question"); 1903, M'Knight v. U. S., — C. C. A. —, 122 Fed. 926 (no notice necessary for a document criminating and privileged); California: 1875, People v. Hust, 49 Cal. 653 (embezzlement; to prove agreement by which defendant took charge of the property, semble, notice necessary or other accounting for original); Indiana: 1859, Armitage v. State, 13 Ind. 441 (indictment for possessing counterfeit notes with intent; notice required; the Court proceeding upon analogy to civil cases and upon the erroneous notion that notice was always required in civil cases); 1861, Williams v. State, 16 Ind. 461 (larceny of pocket-book with bank-notes; same ruling); 1865, McGinnis v. State, 24 Ind. 500 (larceny of treasury-note; distinguishing the case of forgery as requiring greater particularity, and not passing upon the soundness of Armitage v. State, it is held that for larceny of written instruments no notice is required to produce the writings that are the subject of the larceny; overruling Williams v. State; see quotation supra); Maine: 1859, State v. Mayberry, 48 Me. 218, 239 (conspiracy by false pretences to obtain a promissory note and charge of having obtained possession of it; no notice required); Michigan: 1889, People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53, 57, 43 N. W. 779 (forgery of mortgage-discharge; notice not necessary, provided defendant's possession is shown; as it was not here); Missouri: 1893, State v. Flanders, 118 Mo. 227, 237, 23 S. W. 1086 (obtaining a warranty deed by false pretences; notice held necessary; no precedent cited; New York: 1816, People v. Holbrook, 13 John. 90, 92 (larceny of bank-notes; notice not required, either here or in trover for such things); North Carolina: 1887, State v. Wilkerson, 98 N. C. 696, 700, 3 S. E. 683 (false pretences in obtaining an order for money; express notice not required); Oregon: 1921, State v. Rowen, — Or. —, 200 Pac. 901 (forgery of a deed; notice not required for "documents which are the subject of the indictment"); Pennsylvania: 1808, Com. v. Messinger, 1 Binn. 273, 274, 278, 282 (larceny of a bill; express notice unnecessary; also put upon the ground that the accused's possession is not to be presumed).

The following type of statute seems to rest on this principle: Ala. St. 1909, No. 191, Spec. Sess. p. 63, Aug. 25, § 22½ (parol testimony of any U. S. internal revenue liquor tax stamp or license, admissible on a trial for illegal liquor sales, etc. under the prohibition law).

For the further bearing of the privilege against self-crimination by production, see post, § 1209.

For its bearing as making a notice improper, see post, §§ 2268, 2273.

For fraudulent suppression, see post, § 1207.

For stealing as equivalent to loss, see ante, § 1201.

[4] 1851, R. v. Robinson, 5 Cox Cr. 183 (notice served for the trial at a first session or term, sufficient where the trial was postponed to a later term); 1812, M'Dowell v. Hall, 2 Bibb 610, 612 (document used in former trial, then withdrawn from the file on Court order; notice at trial, sufficient on the facts). Contra: 1819, Knight v. Martin, Gow 103 (after a nonsuit, a new notice must be given for a second trial).

[5] U. S. Code 1919, §§ 7781–83, 8114, 8118, 8123, 8158 (ship's log-book; production compellable; stated more fully post, § 1641).

approved, that "notice to produce a notice" was not necessary before using a copy. This rule of thumb, obtaining a certain vogue, was then sought to be furnished with a reason based on convenience, namely, the necessity of stopping somewhere in the chain of notices.[1] Now this consideration applies in strictness to only one kind of notice, namely, the notice to produce. There, indeed, the chain would be endless if once begun; but it would not be so in the case of any other notice. This rule of thumb, so far as it is established, must be regarded as a distinct exception (post, § 1207) to the rule requiring a notice to produce.

But beyond the above-named instance (notice of a notice to produce) it cannot be said to be established except in a few jurisdictions. In England, the rulings have been in great conflict, though the exception seems also to have included the cases of a notice of a bill's dishonor and a landlord's notice to quit.[2] In this country, the phrase that "notice to produce a notice is unnecessary" has often been used in this broad form. Nevertheless, apart from the above single instance (notice to produce a notice to produce), most Courts from time to time recognize that the case of a notice — notice to quit, notice of dishonor, notice of suit, and the like — is to be governed merely by the general principle expounded in the preceding section, namely, where the pleadings by implication give notice to produce the notice, no express notice to produce it is necessary; but otherwise it is required. The rulings, § 1206. [1] 1826, Gibson, J., in Eisenhart v. Slaymaker, 14 S. & R. Pa. 153, 156 ("Every written notice is, for the best of all reasons, to be proved by a duplicate original; for, if it were otherwise, the notice to produce the original could be proved only in the same way as the original itself; and thus a fresh necessity would be constantly arising 'ad infinitum' to prove notice of the preceding notice; so the party would at every step be receding instead of advancing").

[2] 1793, Shaw v. Markham, Peake 165 (a letter notifying of the dishonor of a note; Kenyon, L. C. J., required notice); 1796, Hammond v. Plank, Peake 165 note (written demand in trover; Lord Kenyon did not require notice; no reason given); 1796, Gotlieb v. Danvers, 1 Esp. 455 (notice to take away a crane improperly built; Eyre, L. C. J., required no notice, but not on this ground; see post, § 1243); 1803, Surtees v. Hubbard, 4 Esp. 203 (notice of an assignment of a ship and freight; Ellenborough, L. C. J., required no notice, but semble on other grounds); 1804, Langdon v. Hulls, 5 Esp. 156 (notice to a drawer of the acceptor's non-payment; notice to produce required); 1809, Philipson v. Chase, 2 Camp. 110 (attorney's bill; notice required, per Lord Ellenborough, though he conceded the contrary for the case of a notice to quit); 1811, Ackland v. Pearce, 2 Camp. 599, 601 (notice of a bill's dishonor; per LeBlanc, J., no notice required); 1815, Roberts v. Bradshaw, 1 Stark. 28 (Lord Ellenborough, C. J., required no notice for a letter telling of a bill's dishonor, because it "was in the nature of a notice"); 1817, Grove v. Ware, 2 Stark. 174 (notice to a surety of default by the principal; Lord Ellenborough held it "not properly a mere notice", and required notice to produce); 1822, Kine v. Beaumont, 3 B. & B. 288, by the C. P., consulting the K. B. (notice not necessary for notice of dishonor of a bill); 1827, Lanauze v. Palmer, M. & M. 31 (notice of dishonor; notice required, because the bills were not those sued on); 1827, Colling v. Treweek, 6 B. & C. 394 (notice not necessary for a notice, "as, a notice to quit, or a notice of the dishonor of a bill of exchange"; here, an attorney's bill, delivered according to law one month beforehand, was held "substantially in the nature of a notice" of the amount claimed and of his intention to sue unless paid); 1835, Swain v. Lewis, 2 C. M. & R. 261, by all the Judges (notice not necessary for notice of dishonor; approving Kine v. Beaumont); 1909, Turner's Case, 3 Cr. App. 103, 118, 157, [1910] 1 K. B. 346 (under St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 59, § 10, former convictions may be evidenced only if seven days' notice has been given to the accused; no copy of this notice had been preserved, and oral evidence was offered; "it is a general rule that you have not to give notice to produce a notice").

to be sure, are by no means harmonious, and often fail to disclose the principle relied upon.[3]

Certain other principles, however, sometimes applicable, have served to confuse the precedents on this point: (a) If a notice is made out in duplicate,

[3] Federal: 1813, Underwood v. Huddlestone, 2 Cr. C. C. 76 (notice of note's nonpayment; notice required); 1815, Bank of Washington v. Kurtz, 2 Cr. C. C. 110 (same); Alabama: 1857, Dumas v. Hunter, 30 Ala. 75 (written demand and notice precedent to action for unlawful detainer; notice required, since the statute made the demand, etc., a prerequisite); 1879, Watson v. State, 63 Ala. 19, 21 (notice of notice — here, against trespassing — not required); 1884, King v. Belling, 77 Ala. 594, 596 (treating Dumas v. Hunter as an exception to the general rule of Watson v. State); 1893, Home Protection v. Whidden, 103 Ala. 203, 15 So. 567, semble (letter notifying of a fire loss; notice required); Arkansas: 1851, Jones v. Robinson, 11 Ark. 504, 511 (notice to indorser; notice required); California: 1860, Lombardo v. Ferguson, 15 Cal. 372 (mining-claim notice posted by plaintiff: defendant, in offering copy, required to give notice to produce, or otherwise to account for it); C. C. P. 1872, § 1938 (notice not necessary "where the writing is itself a notice"); 1881, Gethin v. Walker, 59 Cal. 502, 506 (notice of rescission of contract; notice not required, under § 1938); Delaware: 1848, Jefferson v. Conoway, 5 Harringt. 16 (written demand for goods; notice necessary, except for duplicate original); Georgia: 1871, Frank v. Longstreet, 44 Ga. 178, 187 (notice required for a notice of suit); 1888, Crawford v. Hodge, 81 Ga. 728, 8 S. E. 208 (notice required for notice to sue; but here not necessary because of the latter's loss); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7962 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1938); Illinois: 1872, Brown v. Booth, 66 Ill. 419 (notice to surety; notice to produce notice, not necessary); 1873, Williams v. Ins. Co., 68 Ill. 387, 390 (notice of assessment; notice to produce notice, not necessary); Iowa: 1886, McLenon v. R. Co., 69 Ia. 320, 321, 28 N. W. 619 (notice of injury; no notice required); Kansas: Kan. St. 1909, Gen. St. 1915, § 4995 (notice of demand for release of oil lease, etc.; a "letter-press or carbon or written copy thereof" may be used as if the original); Kentucky: 1828, Taylor v. Bank, 7 T. B. M. 576, 578 (notice for notice of dishonor, not required); Louisiana: 1821, Abat v. Riou, 9 Mart. 465, 467 (action against indorser of note, alleging notice of protest; notice not required); Michigan: 1845, Falkner v. Beers, 2 Doug. 117, 119 (notice to quit; notice required); 1885, Loranger v. Jardine, 56 Mich. 518, 23 N. W. 203 (notice by wife not to sell liquor to husband; notice not required); 1916, Holmes Realty Co. v. Silcox, 194 Mich. 59, 160 N. W. 465 (notice of cancellation of an option); Missouri: 1835, Hughes v. Hays, 4 Mo. 209 (notice of appeal; notice not required); 1874, Barr v. Armstrong, 56 Mo. 577, 586 (notice to creditor not to sell to wife; notice not required for any notice); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10586 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1938); Nebraska: 1883, Hawley v. Robinson, 14 Nebr. 435, 437, 16 N. W. 438 (notice to quit; notice apparently not required; here the paper was destroyed); New Hampshire: 1823, Leavitt v. Simes, 3 N. H. 14, 15 (action on a note against the indorser; notice to produce the notice of nonpayment, not required); New York: 1803, Peyton v. Hallett, 1 Cai. 363, 365, 380 (notice of abandonment of a vessel proved orally; case obscure); 1805, Tower v. Wilson, 3 Cai. 174 (notice served, proved orally; no reason given); 1816, Johnson v. Haight, 13 John. 470 (notice of dishonor of a note, proved by copy, on the principle that "a notice to produce a paper might be proved by parol"); North Carolina: 1829, Faribault v. Ely, 2 Dev. 67 (notice of dishonor; no notice required, apparently per Hall, J., because it was sufficient to show the fact of posting, under the law of the case; per Toomer, J., also because the action implied a notice); 1893, McMillan v. Baxley, 112 N. C. 578, 586, 16 S. E. 845 (notice of sale; notice held not necessary, but on improper grounds); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 782 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1938); Pennsylvania: 1826, Eisenhart v. Slaymaker, 14 S. & R. 153, 156 (notice to produce any written notice unnecessary; see quotation supra); 1864, Morrow v. Com., 48 Pa. 305, 308 ("notice to produce a notice is unnecessary"; here, to remove a fence); Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 322 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1938); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1453 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1938); Rhode Island: 1912, Eastman v. Dunn, 34 R. I. 416, 83 Atl. 1057 (notice of a claim; copy allowed without notice to produce the original; but the opinion states the rule confusedly); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7108 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1938); Vermont: 1863, Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 536, 547 ("There are many cases where notices given during the progress of a cause — notices to produce papers and notices to quit — have been allowed to be proved by copies and in some instances by parole evidence, without proof of notice to produce the originals"; but this does not cover "notices essential to the cause of action", as here, a notice of assessment); 1894, Waterman v. Davis, 66 Vt. 83, 87, 28 Atl. 664 (notice of assessment; no notice required, for notices in general; though here a manifold copy was offered).

and one part is served and the other retained, the latter may be used, as a duplicate original, without notice to produce the former; some rulings dispose of the matter on this principle (post, § 1234). (b) If at the same time an oral notice or demand was uttered and a written one also was served, the oral one may be proved without accounting for the written one, because the latter's terms are not involved (post, § 1243). (c) The fact of the delivery of a notice, irrespective of its terms, may for the same reason be proved without accounting for the writing (post, § 1248).

§ 1207. Same: Exceptions to the Rule of Notice; Opponent's Fraudulent Suppression; Recorded Deed; Waiver; Documents out of the Jurisdiction. (1) On the principle of convenience considered in the preceding section, a direct exception may be made for a notice to produce; no notice of this need be given; further than this the exception cannot be properly extended (ante, § 1206).

(2) The opponent's fraudulent suppression of a document in his possession, or of a document collusively secreted by a third person (who thus virtually acts as the opponent's agent), should exempt from the requirement of notice; because this suppression amounts to a refusal to produce, and the only object of a notice (ante, § 1202) is to make it clear that the opponent's failure to produce amounts to a refusal. This exception is generally recognized.[1]

(3) The opponent's absence from the jurisdiction, or the absence of the documents out of the jurisdiction, does not dispense with the necessity for notice, even though in a given instance the opponent might be known beforehand to be unlikely to respond by production.[2]

§ 1207. [1] England: 1803, Leeds v. Cook, 4 Esp. 256 (the opponent had secreted a document fraudulently taken from a witness of the proponent summoned under a 'duces tecum'; notice not required); 1831, Doe v. Ries, 7 Bing. 724 (loss by a stealing instigated by the defendant; notice not necessary);
U. S. Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1938 (notice not necessary "where it has been wrongfully obtained or withheld by the adverse party"); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 7962 (not necessary where the writing "has been wrongfully obtained or withheld by the adverse party"); Ia. 1857, Sellman v. Cobb, 4 Ia. 534, 537 (defendant, obtaining from the plaintiff in Court a note for inspection, handed it to the sheriff to levy on as the plaintiff's; copy allowed without notice); La. 1855, Bell v. Hearne, 10 La. An. 515, 517 (land-patent cancelled and delivered; destruction by opponent, sufficient); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10586 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1938); N. H. 1852, Neally v. Greenough, 25 N. H. 325, 330 (fraudulent possession by opponent; notice not necessary); N. C. 1824, Eure v. Pittman, 3 Hawks 364, 373 (stated per Hall, J., but not decided, that opponent's fraudulent suppression dispenses with notice); Or. Laws 1920, § 782 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1938); Pa. 1815, Gray v. Pentland, 2 S. & R. 23, 31 ("where the original is in the hands of the adverse party who has given it to a third person with a view of secreting it", semble, no notice necessary); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 322 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1938); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1453 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1938); S. C. 1831, Bank v. Brown, Dudley 62, 65, semble (destroyed in opponent's possession; no notice necessary); Tex. 1852, Cheatham v. Riddle, 8 Tex. 162, 166 (defendant's principal had fraudulently absconded with plaintiff's title-document: neither notice nor further search required); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7108 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1938); Vt. 1898, State v. Marsh, 70 Vt. 288, 40 Atl. 836 (defendant gave a note to the jail-housekeeper, to deliver to a co-defendant, and it was delivered; the housekeeper allowed to state its contents; whether the prosecution had intentionally put the original out of its power, depends on trial Court's discretion); Wash. 1915, State v. Morden, 87 Wash. 465, 151 Pac. 832 (statutory rape; letter sent by the female to the defendant held provable without notice to produce).

Compare the doctrines as to detention by a third person (post, §§ 1212, 1213) and as to loss (ante, § 1197).

[2] 1879, McAdam v. Spice Co., 64 Ga. 441

(4) That the documents are subject to the privilege against self-crimination is in itself no excuse; for the opponent might choose to produce without exercising the privilege, and until notice has been given it cannot be known whether he will do so.[3]

(5) Under statutory provisions allowing proof of a recorded deed to be made by copy when the original is "lost or out of the power" of the proponent (post, § 1225), the precise statutory conditions suffice to allow the use of a copy without notice, even though the opponent's possession is the fact which puts the original "out of the power" of the proponent.[4]

(6) An express waiver of notice, by agreement of counsel 'pro lite', or otherwise, suffices to exempt from notice; and there may be an implied waiver.[5]

(7) Where an agreement, or other transaction, turns out on the testimony to be in writing, and in the opponent's possession, the question may arise whether the party endeavoring to prove it may do so without having given notice to the opponent. This in truth involves the principle of the Parol Evidence (Integration) rule, for the answer depends upon the inquiry who has the burden of showing the agreement to be in writing (post, § 2447).

(8) A special exception is sometimes provided for the benefit of seamen.[6]

(rule applied even where the paper belonged to a party who was out of the State); 1880, Phillips v. Lindsey, 65 Ga. 139, 143 (same; but in such case notice to the local attorney suffices, of course); 1899, Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 2 Ind. T. 407, 51 S. W. 1068 (documents kept by opponent without the jurisdiction; notice apparently required); 1860, Carland v. Cunningham, 37 Pa. 229 (opponent's absence from the jurisdiction does not dispense).

That notice to the attorney suffices in such a case, see post, § 1208.

The following statute creates a special exception; P. E. I. St. 1889, § 58 (in an action against an absent debtor, copies of writings to him may be used without notice to produce, if it is proved that the originals were delivered to him or received by him or duly mailed to him in time to receive them before leaving the place of the address).

[3] 1834, Bate v. Kinsey, 1 Cr. M. & R. 38 (refusal to produce on ground of privilege does not render notice unnecessary).

Contra: 1906, O'Brien v. U. S., 27 D. C. App. 263, 273 (copy of document delivered to the defendant charged with embezzlement; notice not required; the ruling goes upon a misunderstanding of the principle of McGinnis v. State, quoted ante, § 1205); 1908, Moore v. State, 130 Ga. 322, 60 S. E. 544 (notice not needed for insurance policies in defendant's possession; reasoning unsound); 1897, State v. McCauley, 17 Wash. 88, 49 Pac. 221 (the requirement of notice not to be adopted "as an invariable rule"; here checks were held by a defendant charged with using public moneys, and privilege could be claimed; notice held not necessary).

Compare the cases in which notice was implied from the nature of a criminal charge (ante, § 1205); they assume notice of some sort to be necessary.

For the right to prove the contents of a privileged document, see post, § 1209.

Distinguish the question whether by giving such notice the privilege of the accused is violated (post, §§ 1209, 2268, 2273).

[4] 1866, Bowman v. Wettig, 39 Ill. 416, 421 (statutory mode of testifying that recorded deed is not in offeror's power; notice to grantee in possession of original is not required); 1857, Gilbert v. Boyd, 25 Mo. 27 (under the statute, no notice to an opponent in possession is needed); 1904, Patton v. Fox, 179 Mo. 525, 78 S. W. 804 (like Gilbert v. Boyd).

But distinguish the rule of some statutes as to another kind of notice in such cases (post, § 1860).

[5] 1883, Duringer v. Moschino, 93 Ind. 495, 499 (agreement by counsel that all letters material would be produced without notice; notice not needed); 1853, Dwinell v. Larrabee, 38 Me. 464, 466 (a voluntary offer to produce suffices); 1855, Farmers' & M. Bank v. Lonergan, 21 Mo. 46, 50 (the plaintiff was not allowed to prove its books by deposition; the defendant also was then not allowed to prove the plaintiff's books by deposition without notice, the plaintiff's attempt to prove by deposition not being a waiver); 1804, Jackson v. Van Slyck, 2 Caines N. Y. 178 (the opponent's admission of a document's existence, on cross-examination, does not dispense with notice).

[6] Can. Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 113, § 335 (shipping articles; any seaman may prove the contents "without producing or giving notice to produce the agreement or any copy thereof."

§ 1208. Same: Procedure of Notice; Person, Time, and Tenor. (1) As to the person notified, the question arises whether, when the document is in the actual custody of a third person as agent for the opponent, notice to the agent only suffices. Here it would seem that such a notice was insufficient, unless it appeared that the agent was a person having a duty to communicate the notice to the opponent, and this will usually not be the case except for one who is an agent for the purposes of the trial, i.e. an attorney; as to this particular class of agents, it is well settled that notice to the attorney suffices. But this situation is often not distinguished in the rulings from another, namely, the case of notice to an agent for the trial, i.e. an attorney, who is not in possession of the document; here it would seem that the proper person is notified, and that it is merely a question as to the sufficient time allowed by the notice for getting the document. The precedents on these two situations are not harmonious.[1]

A notice to the opponent only is sufficient, even though the document is not in his actual custody but is held for him by a third person or agent; for the party from whom production is expected must always be regarded as the appropriate person to notify.[2]

The person notifying may be any one acting on behalf of the proponent for purposes of trial.[3]

(2) The time of notice depends on no technical considerations nor fixed rules; the question is merely whether the time allowed was such that the opponent was fairly and truly able to obtain it, ready for production, if he had wished to:

1845, ALDERSON, B., in Lawrence v. Clark, 14 M. & W. 250, 253: "All these cases depend on their particular circumstances; and the question in each case is whether the notice was given in reasonable time to enable the plaintiff to be prepared to produce the document

§ 1208. [1] ENGLAND: 1773, Attorney-General v. Le Merchant, 2 T. R. 201, note ("the rule which has always been followed . . . is that notice be given to the attorney or agent of the adverse party"); 1789, Cates v. Winter, 3 T. R. 306 (same; notice to opponent himself not necessary); 1795, Read v. Passer, 1 Esp. 213, 216, semble (notice to agent, insufficient, on the facts); 1816, Doe v. Grey, 1 Stark. 283 (to the wife of the defendant's attorney the night before, at her house, insufficient); 1829, Aflalo v. Fourdrinier, M. & M. 334, note (notice to the attorney two days before, the documents being with the client at a distance, held insufficient); 1832, Houseman v. Roberts, 5 C. & P. 394 (should be served on the attorney); 1838, Byrne v. Harvey, 2 Moo. & Rob. 89 (notice to an attorney not in time to communicate with the client, held insufficient); 1849, R. v. Hankins, 3 Cox Cr. 434, 436 (notice to attorney, sufficient); UNITED STATES: Ga. 1873, Lathrop v. Mitchell, 47 Ga. 610, 612 (notice to an agent, held insufficient on the facts); 1889, Phillips v. Lindsey, 65 Ga. 139, 143 (notice to attorney of an opponent out of the State, sufficient); Miss. Code 1906, § 229, Hem. § 206 (any notice required to be served, to be as valid if served on an attorney as on the party); N. Y. 1831, McPherson v. Rathbone, 7 Wend. 216 (notice to the opponent's attorney by subpœna, not sufficient as notice for documents in the party's own custody); Vt. 1837, Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326, 335 (opponent absconded from the State; notice to his attorney held sufficient; "the party cannot be required to follow him to the world's end").

[2] 1825, Taplin v. Atty, 3 Bing. 164 (to a sheriff's attorney, for a document in the undersheriff's hands, sufficient); 1897, Morehead Bkg. Co. v. Walker, 121 N. C. 115, 28 S. E. 253 (note in attorney's possession; notice to the client sufficient).

Distinguish the question already discussed ante, § 1200; there the inquiry is whether the custody of a third person is to be considered as the opponent's possession at all, irrespective of the proper method of notice.

[3] 1834, Seely v. Cole, Wright 681 (notice by any one by authority of the offeror, sufficient).

at the time of the trial." POLLOCK, C. B.: "What is sufficient in one case may not be so in another; and much therefore must be left to the discretion of the presiding judge, subject of course to correction by the Court."

The matter is therefore distinctly one for the determination of the trial Court, for it must depend entirely on the circumstances of each case. The numerous rulings on the subject ought not to be treated as precedents;[4] they were for the most part a wasteful expense of time for the appellate Judiciary.

[4] Besides the following cases, compare the rule for documents present in Court (ante, § 1204):

ENGLAND: 1803, Sims v. Kitchen, 5 Esp. 46 (notice at seven o'clock the evening before trial, to a servant of the attorney, held insufficient); 1829, Tindal, C. J., in Aflalo v. Fourdrinier, M. & M. 334, note ("There must be at least a possibility of getting the instruments in consequence of the notice"); 1830, R. v. Haworth, 4 C. & P. 254 (since the Assizes began, held insufficient; a reasonable time before the Assizes required); 1832, Houseman v. Roberts, 5 C. & P. 394 (notice on Saturday, for Monday's trial, not sufficient); 1832, Doe v. Spitty, 3 B. & Ad. 182 (notice the day before the Assizes, insufficient on the facts); 1833, Trist v. Johnson, 1 Moo. & Rob. 259 (notice served on the attorney after Assizes begun, held insufficient); 1833, R. v. Ellicombe, 1 Moo. & Rob. 260 (notice served on the defendant after Assizes begun, the defendant being in jail, held insufficient); 1836, George v. Thompson, 4 Dowl. Pr. 656 (notice to the attorney the day before the Assizes, insufficient; "it is peculiarly a question for the judge at the trial"); 1836, Atkins v. Meredith, 4 Dowl. Pr. 658 (notice "on the evening previous to the trial is in general sufficient"; but here to the attorney for books in the client's hands, held insufficient); 1839, Holt v. Miers, 9 C. & P. 191, 195 (the night before, insufficient); 1839, Sturge v. Buchanan, 10 A. & E. 598, 603 ("in all cases depends on circumstances"); 1840, Hughes v. Budd, 8 Dowl. Pr. 315, 317 (a notice served on Sunday, the night before the trial, on the attorney, distant from his office, held insufficient); 1840, Firkin v. Edwards, 9 C. & P. 478 (sufficiently early, on the facts; Williams, J.: "The question is whether under all the circumstances reasonable notice has been given"); 1840, Gibbons v. Powell, 9 C. & P. 634 (notice the night before to the attorney, held sufficient, the document being one which he and not the client would have); 1841, Foster v. Pointer, 9 C. & P. 718 (notice the day before, held sufficient where it appeared that the document was destroyed); 1842, Lloyd v. Mostyn, 2 Dowl. Pr. N. S. 476, 480 (Parke, B.: "[the principle is] that reasonable time to produce a document must be given"; here the defendant long knew that the document would be wanted, and a notice the day before trial was held sufficient); 1845, Lawrence v. Clark, 14 M. & W. 250 (notice in London the evening before a Middlesex trial, not sufficient); 1847, Sturm v. Jeffree, 2 C. & K. 442 (since the notice is "for general convenience and for the attainment of justice", notice during trial suffices if practically in ample time); 1849, R. v. Hankins, 3 Cox Cr. 434, 436 (the day before the trial, sufficient); 1852, R. v. Hamp, 6 Cox Cr. 167, 169 (notice the day before the trial to the London agents of the country attorney, sufficient); 1853, R. v. Kitson, 6 Cox Cr. 159 (notice the day before, at a residence thirty miles from court, insufficient).

CANADA: 1866, Abel v. Light, 6 All. N. Br. 423 (notice on the day before trial, held sufficient on the facts).

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1884, Littleton v. Clayton, 77 Ala. 571, 574 ("a reasonable time, — sufficiently long to enable a party to procure and produce it without due inconvenience"); Cal. 1859, Burke v. T. M. W. Co., 12 Cal. 403, 407 ("a question of discretion"); C. C. P. 1872, §§ 1855, 1938 ("reasonable notice"); 1898, People v. Vasalo, 120 Cal. 168, 52 Pac. 305 (opponent's refusal to produce within statutory time, whether that interval is needed or not; secondary proof allowed); Conn. 1889, State v. Swift, 57 Conn. 508, 18 Atl. 664 (notice at trial, with readiness to give time for production; opponent not asking time nor producing; held sufficient); Haw. 1876, R. v. Lenehan, 3 Haw. 714, 716 (the trial Court determines reasonableness); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, §§ 7962, 7970 ("reasonable notice"); Ill. 1842, Cummings v. McKinney, 5 Ill. 57 (discretion of the trial Court); 1861, Warner v. Campbell, 26 Ill. 282, 286 (two days before trial, sufficient on the facts); Ia. 1859, Greenough v. Shelden, 9 Ia. 503, 506 ("reasonable time"); 1898, Brock v. Ins. Co., 106 Ia. 30, 75 N. W. 683 (trial Court's discretion); La. 1844, Hills v. Jacobs, 7 Rob. 406, 413 (notice sufficient on the facts); 1849, Plympton v. Preston, 4 La. An. 360 (notice at the trial, sufficient on the facts); Me. 1829, Emerson v. Fisk, 6 Greenl. 200, 202, 206 (notice on the first day of the trial, the opponent's residence being a few rods away, held insufficient, under a rule of Court requiring notice before the trial); Md. 1836, Divers v. Fulton, 8 G. & J. 202, 208 (notice to the attorney two days before trial, held sufficient on the facts; the notice must be "reasonable in point of time"); 1852, Glenn

Where the opponent is out of the jurisdiction, it would seem that the time of notice should not be affected by this fact, since, in general, for the purposes of a trial, a party must himself bear the risk of his absence from the scene, — especially as in the present instance the only function of a notice is to make it clear that the proponent is reasonably unable to obtain the document. Where only the document is out of the jurisdiction, however, the reasonableness of the time of notice should be affected by this circumstance; for the opponent, being otherwise ready for trial, might be equally disposed to produce the document if notified in time to obtain it.[5] That the opponent is physically or legally incapable of personal appearance is of course immaterial as regards the time of notice.[6]

(3) As to the tenor and form of the notice, first, it should be in writing, — not so much because it is thereby more correctly or surely provable, as because it is intended to procure the document and thus is more likely to attain its purpose if filed with the other papers in the cause.[7] Next, the particularity of the description of the document desired should depend on no formal tests; it is enough if the document desired is so described that it could be readily known by the opponent and with certainty distinguished from others:[8]

v. Rogers, 3 Md. 312, 320 ("no precise rule can be laid down"; here notice just before drawing the jury was held insufficient): Mich. 1888, Julius K. Optical Co. v. Treat, 72 Mich. 599, 40 N. W. 912 (time unreasonable on the facts); Minn. 1866, Winona v. Huff, 11 Minn. 119, 129 ("depends upon the circumstances in each case, and is a preliminary matter addressed to the judgment of the Court"); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10586 ("reasonable notice"); Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 5417 ("reasonable notice"); Or. Laws 1920, § 782 ("reasonable notice"); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 322 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1938); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1453 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1938); S. C. 1901, Worth v. Norton, 60 S. C. 293, 38 S. E. 605 (two hours' notice for a document in another county, held insufficient); Tenn. 1808, Kimble v. Joslin, 1 Overt. 379 ("reasonable notice"); 1872, Burke v. Shelby, 9 Heisk. 175, 177 (notice given in the plea, sufficient); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, §§ 7108, 7117 ("reasonable notice").

[5] The rulings do not always make this distinction, and are not harmonious:

England: 1824, Drabble v. Donner, Ry. & Mo. 47 (four days' notice to a person domiciled in Denmark, but present in London, the documents presumably being in Denmark, held sufficient); 1825, Bryan v. Wagstaff, 2 C. & P. 125, 127 (party abroad, notice given two months before; Abbott, C. J.: "I think that a person leaving the country and putting his case into the hands of his attorney must be taken to leave in his attorney's hands papers material to the cause; . . . if it were not so, a man might, as soon as notice of trial was given, set sail for the East Indies, and the other party must then delay proceeding with his cause till his return"); 1840, Hughes v. Budd, 8 Dowl. Pr. 315, 317 (a week's notice, served during opponent's absence in the North, sufficient); 1848, Ehrensperger v. Anderson, 3 Exch. 148, 153, 154 (party from India notified while in London before the trial; intimated to be insufficient).

United States: 1862, Bushnell v. Colony, 28 Ill. 204 (letter in New York; a day or two's notice, not sufficient); 1889, Mortlock v. Williams, 76 Mich. 568, 573, 43 N. W. 592 (notice for letters in another State, insufficient on the facts); 1892, Pitt v. Emmons, 92 Mich. 542, 544, 52 N. W. 1004 (notice on same day, possessor being in another State, insufficient); 1893, Dade v. Ins. Co., 54 Minn. 336, 56 N. W. 48 (notice at trial for documents in another State, insufficient on the facts).

[6] 1851, R. v. Robinson, 5 Cox Cr. 183 (on the defendant in jail, sufficient; Erle, J.: "The argument [against it] . . . might be just as applicable to a case where the notice was served on a person bed-ridden or incapable of moving").

[7] It always is in writing, and is so assumed to be in the preceding cases (except when given at the trial, ante, § 1204); but the decisions to that effect are rare: 1842, Cummings v. McKinney, 5 Ill. 57; 1903, Landt v. McCullough, 206 Ill. 214, 69 N. E. 107 (semble).

[8] The rulings vary in their requirements, and should not be taken as precedents for the specific facts:

1839, DENMAN, L. C. J., in Rogers v. Custance, 2 Moo. & Rob. 179, 181, "said that the Court did not mean to lay down any general rule as to what the notice ought to contain; that much must depend on the particular circumstances of each case; but where enough was stated on the notice to leave no doubt that the party must have been aware the particular instrument would be called for, the notice must be considered sufficient to let in secondary evidence."

§ 1209. Same: (c) Failure to Produce; what constitutes Non-Production. It has already been seen (ante, § 1199) that the present excuse for a proponent's non-production rests on the broad fact that he cannot obtain it from the opponent, — a fact involving three separate elements, namely, the opponent's possession, a demand or notice to produce, and his failure to produce. With this third element, as completing the fact upon which the proponent's excuse rests, we are now concerned.

(1) (a) Inquiring, first, what situation amounts to non-production, in the above sense, it may be noted that if the opponent produces a document which the proponent asserts not to be the one desired, the latter is not obliged to accept it as the one in issue, so as to be precluded from proving otherwise the contents of the desired document;[1] for the opponent's production of this one alone is virtually a failure to produce the one actually desired, and the proponent has thus established his excuse and may proceed to prove otherwise the terms of the true but non-apparent document.

(b) If the opponent refuses to produce because of a privilege against self-incrimination, is this refusal insufficient, for the purpose of establishing the ENGLAND: 1816, Harvey v. Morgan, 2 Stark. 17, 19 (mistake in the title of the plaintiff assignees, held fatal); 1825, Jones v. Edwards, 1 McCl. & Y. 139 ("notice to produce letters and copies of letters, also all books relating to this cause", held insufficient); 1825, France v. Lucy, Ry. & Mo. 341 (to prove notice of dishonor, a general notice of all letters, papers, etc., held insufficient); 1837, Jacob v. Lee, 2 Moo. & Rob. 33 (a notice to produce "all and every letters written by the said plaintiff to the said defendant relating to the matters in dispute in this action", held sufficient); 1839, Rogers v. Custance, 2 Moo. & Rob. 179 (a general notice to produce all books, extracts, etc., held sufficient on the facts; see quotation supra); 1841, Morris v. Hauser, 2 Moo. & Rob. 392 (a general notice to produce all letters between the parties from 1837 to 1841, held sufficient); 1845, Lawrence v. Clark, 14 M. & W. 250, 251 (notice wrongly entitled as to the Court; held sufficient; Alderson, B.: "Would the notice be bad if one of the names were spelled wrong? The question is whether the party has had such a notice as to justify the Court in admitting the secondary evidence"; disapproving Harvey v. Morgan); 1847, Smyth v. Sandeman, 2 Cox Cr. 239 (notice specifying three letters "and also all others, etc., in the general words usually employed"; held insufficient, semble, as to any other than the three specified); 1858, Justice v. Elstob, 1 F. & F. 256, 258 (description of receipts held sufficient); 1858, Graham v. Oldis, 1 F. & F. 262 (description of agreement held sufficient).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1825, Vasse v. Mifflin, 4 Wash. C. C. 519 (notice to produce all letters relating to moneys received under an award; sufficient); Cal. 1859, Burke v. T. M. W. Co., 12 Cal. 403, 408 ("Such description as will apprise a man of ordinary intelligence of the document desired is enough"); Ind. 1839, State v. Lockwood, 5 Blackf. 144 (terms of notice not sufficiently shown); Mass. 1840, Bemis v. Charles, 1 Metc. 440, 443 (notice sufficient where it was "impossible for the defendant to have doubted" what it referred to); 1895, McDowell v. Ins. Co., 164 Mass. 444, 41 N. E. 665 (notice to produce all letters, etc., received by defendant from plaintiff since the time of the fire alleged in the declaration, sufficient); Miss. 1873, Lockhart v. Camfield, 48 Miss. 471 (title bond already once produced on notice; ambiguous notice to produce a "deed", sufficient).

The "reasonable notice" of the Codes cited supra, par. 2, would apply also to the tenor of the notice.

§ 1209. [1] 1859, Hill v. Tounsend, 24 Tex. 575, 580 (party held not bound to accept document tendered by opponent, but allowed proponent's excuse and allowing him to prove the terms otherwise? By no means; for it is still a refusal, though an allowable one, and the proponent's excuse is equally established. The permission to the proponent to proceed to establish the document's terms by other evidence is not a violation of the privilege, for the privilege (post, § 2264) is merely that the possessor himself shall not furnish criminating evidence, and not that others shall not through their own witnesses do so.[2] Whether an unfavorable inference or admission should be drawn as to the contents from the claim of privilege is a different question (post, §§ 2272, 2273).

(2) It may be asked, Why should the opponent's mere failure or refusal to produce, in a case where he is not protected by a privilege, suffice to establish the proponent's excuse, namely, his inability to obtain the original? Since such an inability is the root-notion which allows him to prove the document's terms otherwise (ante, § 1199), how can he claim to be unable since by a bill of discovery, or in more modern times in a common-law court by a statutory order for production, he could compel the production? It is perfectly settled that this extreme step is not required of him;[3] and the reasons seem to be sound, namely, first, that the inconvenience of employing an equitable bill of discovery, or even a statutory order, for every document needed, would be such that for practical purposes the opponent's mere refusal on demand puts the proponent in the position of being unable to obtain the original, and secondly, because it does not fairly lie in the mouth of an opponent, refusing production without excuse and thus himself creating the dilemma, to insist upon so strict a test for judging the proponent's claim of inability to obtain the document.

to go on and prove contents of document desired); 1898, Helzer v. Helzer, 187 Pa. 243, 41 Atl. 40 (plaintiff had offered evidence of loss of note, and defendant then produced a document alleged to be the note; plaintiff not required either to accept it as the original or to submit it to her witness for identification).

The following case is peculiar: 1904, Romero v. N. I. M. & D. Co., 113 La. 110, 36 So. 907 (the plaintiff alleging a certain contract, the defendant admitting a contract but denying its terms to be as alleged and alleging its loss, the trial judge's order before trial, taking the contract to be as alleged by the plaintiff, was held erroneous).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 1203, n. 5.

[2] Accord: ENGLAND: 1773, Attorney-General v. LeMerchant, 2 T. R. 201, note ("But it is said that this [general rule] does not hold in criminal cases, because the consequence of it would be to compel a man to produce evidence against himself. . . . But the defendant, LeMerchant, is not compellable to produce those letters against himself; for he is liable to no punishment at all if he do not, but is left at his entire liberty either to do it or no; the only consequence must be that these copies (which must be sworn to be true copies) are read against him"); 1829, R. v. Barker, 3 C. & P. 591, 593; Oxford (Bishop of) v. Henly, [1907] Prob. 88, 104 (proceeding for ecclesiastical offence and canonical punishment; the respondent having refused to produce letters from the prosecutor to the respondent, copies verified by the prosecutor were admitted).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1919, Bryant v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 378; Ill. 1910, People v. Everham, — Ill. —, 93 N. E. 373 (rape of a daughter under age; the other children wrote a letter to the defendant charging him with rape; a copy was offered and admitted, after notice to the defendant to produce the original; held that the privilege was not violated); Ia. 1897, State v. Boomer, 103 Ia. 106, 72 N. W. 424; Mich. 1911, People v. Aldorfer, 164 Mich. 676, 130 N. W. 351.

For the necessity of notice, even where the privilege would protect from production, see ante, §§ 1205, 1207, post, § 2268.

[3] 1852, McLain v. Winchester, 17 Mo. 49, 54; 1816, Alexander v. Coulter, 2 S. & R. Pa. 494.

§ 1210. Same: Consequences of Non-Production for the Opponent (Exclusion of Evidence; Default; Inferences). (1) Where an opponent in possession refuses to produce on demand, he is afterwards forbidden to produce the document in order to contradict the other party's copy or evidence of its contents.[1] This is in one sense a proper penalty for unfair tactics; but the original refusal may also be regarded as a judicial admission, in advance (post, § 2588), of the correctness of the first party's evidence to this extent.

(2) The same penalty (and sometimes even the more serious one of judgment for default) is provided by most of the statutes which entitle a party to discovery and inspection (post, § 1858) of the opponent's documents before trial.[2] But the two rules are independent.

(3) The jury is entitled to make certain inferences from the non-production of documents on demand; but this is the consequence of an independent principle (ante, § 291).

(4) Where the opponent fails to produce on notice, and has the documents in court the Court may order him to produce, without subpœna, the demanding party not being confined to his right to use secondary evidence (post, §§ 2219, 2200).

§ 1211. (3) Detention by a Third Person; History. Historically, this excuse for non-production was one of the earliest to be established. Under the doctrine of profert (ante, § 1177) it was well settled that profert was not necessary of an instrument belonging to a third person, for the reason that the proponent "hath not any means to obtain the deed";[1] though a modi-

§ 1210. [1] ENGLAND: 1769, Yates, J., in Roe v. Harvey, 4 Burr. 2484, 2489; 1834, Doe v. Cockell, 6 C. & P. 525, 528 (Alderson, B.: "You must either produce a document when it is called for or never"); 1835, Lewis v. Hartley, 7 C. & P. 405 (applied to a dog; defendant not allowed to produce it later, if not produced on notice by opponent); 1840, Doe v. Hodgson, 12 A. & E. 135 ("the party who refused to produce the writing could not afterwards be at liberty to give it in evidence"); CANADA: 1910, Cyr v. DeRosier, 40 N. Br. 373 (lease; Doe v. Hodgson followed); UNITED STATES: Ky. 1829, Bank v. M'Williams, 2 J. J. Marsh. 256, 259, semble (failure to produce precludes other evidence); Mass. 1827, Bogart v. Brown, 5 Pick. 18 (a defendant refusing to produce an original, not allowed to use a copy admitted by the plaintiff to be correct); 1873, Doon v. Donaher, 113 Mass. 151; 1881, Gage v. Campbell, 131 Mass. 566 ("a party who has suppressed a written document, and refused to produce it upon notice, and so compelled the adverse party to resort to secondary evidence thereof, is not afterwards entitled to offer proof of its contents"); Minn. 1888, McGinness v. School District, 39 Minn. 499, 41 N. W. 103; Mo. 1854, Munford v. Wilson, 19 Mo. 669, 673 (where defendant set up the custody of a third person, without stating the paper to be beyond the defendant's control, a copy was taken for true); Okla. 1899, Barnes v. Lynch, 9 Okl. 11, 156, 59 Pac. 995 (rule applied against a plaintiff who had removed his books from the jurisdiction to prevent inspection by receiver); 1895, Powell v. Pearlstine, 43 S. C. 403, 21 S. E. 328; S. C. 1910, C. C. P. 1920, § 728 (bills of lading; quoted post, § 2132, n. 5); Vt. Gen. Laws 1917, § 2082 (before referees etc., "a disputed account shall not be allowed upon the oath of a party, when it appears that he has an original book of entries thereof, which he fails to produce upon reasonable notice, if able so to do").

Contra: 1870, Moulton v. Mason, 21 Mich. 363, 370 (Campbell, C. J.: "It is not a rule calculated to further the eliciting of truth; it is simply an attempt to punish one party by allowing his adversary to recover what does not belong to him or to defend unjustly against a proper claim"); 1879, Tewksbury v. Schulenberg, 48 Wis. 577, 580, 4 N. W. 757.

[2] The statutes are collected post, §§ 1858–1860, with some rulings illustrating their use.

§ 1211. [1] 1537, Anon., Dyer 29 b (in trespass, defendant pleaded a lease for years from a lessee for life from the king by letters patent; and it was argued that the letters patent must be shewn; to which three judges agreed; but fication of this was also established, not excusing from production where the proponent claimed anything in the right of the grantee owning the deed.[2] This early form of the doctrine, however, does not serve to solve the majority of our modern cases, because since the rule of profert applied only to documents under seal, i.e. chiefly title-deeds (ante, § 1177), and since the third person owning them was privileged not to disclose his title-deeds (post, § 2211), the case presented was the clear one of a third person from whom production could not be compelled by any process of law (post, § 1213). But nowadays virtually all documents are of a sort which would not be thus privileged under a subpœna duces tecum. In one respect, moreover, the rigor of the older rule no longer obtains; for the modification above-mentioned, by which non-production was not excused in a case of claim of right under the deed, left the proponent without the means of proving a document which it was legally impossible for him to obtain, — a result everywhere repudiated to-day, although certain analogous English rulings (post, § 1212) may be perhaps traced to the tradition of this older notion.

§ 1212. Same: (a) Person within the Jurisdiction. (1) If the person possessing the document is by reason of a privilege legally not compellable to produce it, this is clearly an excuse for non-production:

three others were opposed; "for a sub-collector, an under-sheriff, and an incumbent do not shew the king's patents, because they do not belong to them, and they have no means to make their masters or grantors shew them"); 1568, Estofte v. Vaughan, Dyer 277 a ('cestui' in remainder not required to produce the deed, because it "does not belong to him but to the feoffees"); 1591, Abbot of Strata Marcella's Case, 9 Co. 24 a (defendant claimed a certain privilege under feoffment from D., who was grantee of the fee of the manor from the King, who had by statute confiscated it from an abbot, who had the privilege by charter; held, that the abbot's charter need not be shown in profert; the plaintiff conceded that profert was not necessary for the charter, "because the charter was made to a stranger"); 1602, Dagg v. Penkevon, Cro. Jac. 70 (similar to Anon., supra; profert not required); 1609, Huntingdon v. Mildmay, Cro. Jac. 217 (similar to Estofte v. Vaughan, supra); 1631, Gray v. Fielder, Cro. Car. 209 (debt on bond assigned by bankrupt-commissioners; profert of bond not required, "because he comes in by act in law, and hath no means to obtain the obligation"); 1636, Stockman v. Hampton, Cro. Car. 441 (justification for trespass under a license from a remainderman; plea held good, "without showing the deed; first, because the deed doth not belong to him, . . . and he hath not any means to obtain the deed; and it should be mischievous to those who claim under such a deed if they should lose their estates unless they might produce it"); ante 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 252 ("Where a person is an utter stranger to a deed, there in pleading he is not compelled to shew it").

This doctrine is, in the earlier cases, not always to be distinguished from that of collateralness (post, § 1252).

[2] 1611, Dr. Leyfield's Case, 10 Co. Rep. 88 a (justification in trespass as servant of a lessee for years from a lessee for life by letters patent from the queen: it was argued that "the fee remains in the lessor or donor to whom the deed belongs and to no other, and therefore he shall not be compelled to shew the first deed"; but "the opinion of the whole Court was against the plaintiff, and the reason was because he is privy in the estate of the rent and claims by the first grant; . . . in many cases a man shall not plead a deed or release that doth not belong to him nor can have an action to recover, without shewing it; . . . so the lord by escheat shall not plead a release made to the disseisor by the disseisee without shewing it; neither shall he in remainder be received without shewing the deed: and yet it doth not belong to him, nor has he remedy to get it. . . . [But] there is another maxim in law, that where a man is stranger to a deed, and doth neither claim the thing comprised in the grant nor anything out of it, nor doth anything in the right of the grantee as bailiff or servant, there he shall plead the patent or deed without shewing it"); 1758, Titley v. Foxall, Willes 688 (justification of battery under process of a Court erected by letters patent; profert of letters not required, because the defendant was a stranger not claiming under them).

1848, POLLOCK, C. B., in Sayer v. Glossop, 2 Exch. 409, 410: "As the person who has the legal custody of the register is not by law compellable to produce it, the party who stands in need of the evidence which that document affords is not to suffer from its absence at the trial. . . . If in point of law you cannot compel a party who has the custody of a document to produce it, there is the same reason for admitting other evidence of its contents as if its production were physically impossible."

The only argument to the contrary could be drawn from the possibility that the privilege would not be exercised, but this is at the most a contingency, and the ascertainment of the fact of such willingness might entail too much inconvenience. The orthodox doctrine is that where a privilege applies, other evidence of contents may be given.[1]

(2) It is also often said that where the third person is hostile and fraudulently detains the document, this fact of itself suffices to excuse non-production,[2] though such an instance is perhaps often equally well disposed of by the doctrine of loss (ante, § 1194) or of the opponent's possession by the hands of an agent (ante, § 1200).

(3) Where neither of the above situations exists, and the case is an ordinary one of possession by a third person, it is clear that a demand at least must have been made; and the question as to which a difference of opinion exists is whether the compulsory process of law should also have been invoked by subpœna duces tecum. A number of Courts seem to lay down the fixed rule that a subpœna is necessary;[3] direct decisions to the contrary are § 1212. [1] Eng. 1854, Phelps v. Prew, 3 E. & B. 430, 438 (here an attorney refused to produce his client's title-deed; held that the possibility that the client it called might have waived the privilege was not sufficient to prevent the offering of secondary evidence; here the client had given orders not to exhibit the deed; "an attorney may hold a deed for a great many persons", and it would be unreasonable to require their calling); 1861, R. v. Leatham, 3 E. & E. 658, 668 (per Hill, J., "a well-established rule of law", that production of a privileged document is excused); U. S. Ariz. 1905, De Leon v. Terr., 9 Ariz. 161, 80 Pac. 348 (jailer allowed to testify to the contents of a letter by the accused to his wife); Conn. 1806, Richards v. Stewart, 2 Day 328, 334, 336, 338 (whether the privileged person must be subpœnaed; decision not given, but arguments set out); 1807, Lynde v. Judd, 3 Day 499 (production excused, if privileged person refuses to produce); 1808, U. S. v. Porter, 3 Day 283, 285 (attendance must be compelled); Minn. 1913, Schall v. Northland M. C. Co., 123 Minn. 214, 143 N. W. 357 (original in possession of Federal bankruptcy trustee, production not excused, because no privilege applies); N. Car. 1897, State v. Durham, 121 N. C. 546, 28 S. E. 26 (production excused of document in hands of wife claiming privilege).

[2] Ala. 1845, Blevins v. Pope, 7 Ala. 371, 375 (trover for a note, which the defendant had since given to the maker, who by collusion failed to produce it when requested; production not required); La. 1817, Stockdale v. Escant, 4 Mart. La. 564, 567 (opponent's vendor retaining claimant's bill of sale by collusion; production not required, though — Martin, J., diss. — no subpœna had been issued); Mass. 1862, Grimes v. Kimball, 3 All. 518 ("If a party is deprived of the possession of written instruments which belong to him, by the fraudulent representations or devices of another person, who unjustly detains or secretly disposes of them so that they cannot be found or recovered", they may be proved as if lost); N. J. 1823, Den v. M'Allister, 7 N. J. L. 46, 48, 55 (a deed affecting the opponent's title was shown to be somewhere in the hands of adversaries, not parties; and this was held sufficient); Pa. 1815, Gray v. Pentland, 2 S. & R. 23, 31 ("where it has been in the hands of a third person, who, in collusion with the adverse party or with a view of screening him, has put it out of the way", secondary proof is admissible).

[3] England: 1795, R. v. Castleton, 6 T. R. 236 (where the third person had merely been asked when out of court and had replied that she could not find it); 1834, Whitford v. Tutin, 10 Bing. 395 (subpœna necessary); U. S. Fed. 1806, U. S. v. Long, 1 Cr. C. C. 373, semble (third person must be summoned); 1822, U. S. v. Lynn, 2 id. 309 (same); 1905, Security Trust Co. v. Robb, 142 Fed. 78, C. C. A.

rare.[4] The greater number of rulings give no definite solution and seem to have been based on the circumstances of the case in hand.[5] The truth is that, while for the purposes of a general rule, it is better to require the process of subpœna, yet in the discretion of the trial Court the failure to use a subpœna, provided a demand has been made, may not be treated as fatal, if in view of the nature of the document, the residence of the possessor and his relations to the case, the risk of collusion, and other circumstances, the service of a subpœna would have been an unnecessary effort. — If the document is in court; a subpœna would of course be unnecessary.[6] If after service of subpœna the possessor is recalcitrant and refuses to obey, the proponent should be excused from production.[7]

(letter in a third person's hands; subpœna necessary); Ind. 1835, Carlton v. Litton, 4 Blackf. 1 (subpœna necessary); 1839, Rucker v. M'Neely, 5 Blackf. 123 (same); Ky. 1850, Beall v. Barclay, 10 B. Monr. 261, 262 (mere possession by a person amenable to process, not sufficient); 1853, Dickerson v. Talbot, 14 B. Monr. 60, 63 (possession by a third person, with notice to produce, insufficient); La. 1827, Gardere v. Fisk, 6 Mart. N. S. 387, 390 (receipt given by offeror to opponent's predecessor; subpœna required); 1827, Erwin v. Porter, 6 Mart. N. S. 166, 167 (similar; subpœna required); Miss. 1845, Chaplain v. Briscoe, 5 Sm. & M. 198, 207 (mere possession by a third person insufficient, since the person may be compelled by subpœna to produce); W. Va. 1872, Dickinson v. Clarke, 5 W. Va. 280, 282 (document in hands of one giving deposition but refusing to file the document; copy excluded); Wis. 1906, Menasha W. W. Co. v. Harmon, 128 Wis. 177, 107 N. W. 299 (letters sent to the county clerk, who had not been subpœnaed; copies excluded).

[4] 1832, U. S. v. Reyburn, 6 Pet. 352, 365 (privateer's commission belonging to C.; inability to find C., sufficient on the facts; subpœna not necessary).

[5] Ala. 1920, Grand Lodge v. Goodwin, 204 Ala. 213, 85 So. 553 (letter sent to N.; copy excluded, N. being present at the trial and no effort to obtain it from him being shown); Conn. 1793, Smith v. Holebrook, 2 Root 45 (counterfeit note taken and kept from plaintiff by revenue-officer; insufficient); Ga. 1879, Bosworth v. Clark, 62 Ga. 286, 288 (service of subpœna, sufficient in trial Court's discretion); Ia. 1859, Greenough v. Shelden, 9 Ia. 503, 506 (witness subpœnaed and present with the document, but no demand made; evidence of contents excluded); 1875, Hawkins v. Rice, 40 Ia. 435 (assignment left by offeror with another clerk of Court, held not without offeror's control); 1899, Ruthven v. Clarke, 109 Ia. 25, 79 N. W. 454 (documents testified to in deposition of intervenor's agent; originals required to be accounted for); N. C. 1824, Eure v. Pittman, 3 Hawks 364, 370 (a will traced to T.'s hands: held, that T. should have been subpœnaed duces tecum or inquiries should have been made of her, before the inference of collusion or suppression could be drawn; Henderson, J., diss.); Ohio: 1833, Clark v. Longworth, Wright 89 (not clear); Or. 1918, Stevens v. Myers, 91 Or. 114, 177 Pac. 37 (marital wills made identically pursuant to contract; attorney's testimony to the contents of the husband's will, without production, held improper); Pa. 1815, Tilghman, C. J., in Gray v. Pentland, 2 S. & R. 23, 31 ("It will always be a question whether with proper exertions he might not have had it in his power"); Vt. 1851, Williams v. Ward, 23 Vt. 369, 376 (notification posted by selectmen; not presumed to be in power of party questioning village officer's acts); Wis. 1897, Newell v. Clapp, 97 Wis. 104, 72 N. W. 367 (no measures taken to obtain the document; production not dispensed with).

The rule for loss (ante, § 1194) sometimes verges close upon the present rule.

[6] 1847, Doe v. Clifford, 2 C. & K. 448, 451 (the third person, being in court with the deed, declined to produce it, and a copy was admitted; otherwise, if the deed had not been there).

[7] This is implied in the rulings cited supra, note 3, and is expressed in the following statutes: Ga. Rev. Code 1910, § 5846 (where subpœna d.t. is employed, and party "is unable thereby to procure" the document, other evidence is allowable); Pa. St. 1846, Apr. 22, Dig. 1920, § 10297 (after subpœna d.t. requiring papers, and refusal to produce, followed by imprisonment and discharge, parol evidence of contents is admissible); S. C. St. 1870, C. C. P. 1922, § 747 (if an "original pleading or paper" is "withheld by any person", the Court may authorize use of copy).

The following rulings are therefore absurd, and would not be followed to-day: England: 1835, Alderson, B., in Jesus College v. Gibbs, 1 Y. & C. 145, 156 ("You could not have proved it by secondary evidence unless the document had been in the possession of a party [i.e. person] not bound to produce it. . . . [The third person refuses,] it is true, at his own peril; but you have no remedy except

(4) Where the desired witness possessing the document is himself also a party to the cause, on the side of the proponent, his possession is of course no excuse for non-production.[8]

§ 1213. Same: (b) Person without the Jurisdiction. It has just been seen that the amenability of the possessor to legal process should not invariably and absolutely bar the proponent from proving the document's contents by other evidence. Conversely, the mere fact of the non-amenability of the possessor to legal process should not of itself excuse non-production. Legal process cannot avail to obtain a document held out of the jurisdiction; but four possible forms of effort exist, any one or more of which may be deemed proper by a Court before excusing for non-production. If the precise whereabouts of the document is unknown, search may be made; if the possessor be ascertained, he may be requested to appear with the document; or he may be requested to deliver the document for use at the trial; or his deposition may be taken with a copy furnished by him annexed to it. No one or more of these efforts could be required as a fixed rule, nor do the Courts seem to make any such fixed requirement.

The rulings fall into three general groups. In the first group, the Courts require that an effort of some sort be made, its nature depending more or less on the circumstances of the case.[1] In the second group, the Courts, either against him"); 1853, R. v. Llanfaethly, 2 E. & B. 940 (Erle, J.: "The law does not admit the disobedience of a person served with a subpœna duces tecum as a sufficient excuse for not giving primary evidence of the contents of a document, where the person served is punishable for his disobedience"); Canada: 1852, Farley v. Graham, 9 U. C. Q. B. 438 (document in possession of the witness in court, but illegally refused to be produced; copy not allowed; "the party might have sought his remedy against the witness").

[8] 1874, Gimbel v. Hufford, 46 Ind. 125, 129 (where the person so in possession was the plaintiff himself, production was required); 1878, McMakin v. Weston, 64 Ind. 270, 274 (party annexing a copy to his deposition; excluded); 1877, Waterville v. Hughan, 18 Kans. 473 (document in another county in the hands of one of the plaintiffs or his attorney; production required).

Compare the case of the opponent's possession out of the jurisdiction (post, § 1213).

§ 1213. [1] England: 1855, Boyle v. Wiseman, 10 Exch. 647 (a document was in the hands of a person in France; the plaintiff's agent, in a libel-suit in which it was suggested that this document contained an admission of authorship, went to the holder and asked him for the letter, in order to bring it to England, not stating the purpose nor asking the holder whether he would bring it personally; the holder refused; held, that its non-availability was not shown).

Canada: 1894, Porter v. Hale, N. Br., 23 Can. Sup. 265, 270 (document in possession of C. in Scotland; inquiries addressed to C. and to other persons, held insufficient on the facts).

United States: Federal: 1853, Turner v. Yates, 16 How. 14, 26 (invoice in hands of London consignees; depositions "or some proper attempt made to obtain it", required); 1857, Comstock v. Carnley, 4 Blatchf. 58 (contract in third person's custody, in another State; copy not allowed, because the person could have been examined); 1865, Blackburn v. Crawfords, 3 Wall. 175, 183, 191, semble (private marriage-register in France; testimony about it excluded, where no effort was shown to obtain it or to take a copy); 1866, Dwyer v. Dunbar, 5 Wall. 318 (letter described by a deponent as forwarded to S. in Mexico, an agent of the opponent; original required to be accounted for); Alabama: St. 1915, No. 2, p. 8, § 17 (intemperance, in proving an order to ship liquor into the State, the original need not be produced or accounted for); Colorado: 1876, Londoner v. Stewart, 3 Colo. 47, 50 (there must be some effort to obtain the original; good opinion by Hallett, C. J.); Connecticut: 1812, Townsend v. Atwater, 5 Day 298, 306 (mere absence from the jurisdiction, insufficient; "the Court must be satisfied that the paper cannot be produced"); Georgia: 1904, New England M. S. Co. v. Anderson, 120 Ga. 1010, 48 S. E. (witness annexing a copy to his deposition; original required to be accounted for); Illinois: 1895, Bishop v. American Preservers' by express decision or by failing to mention any requirement, excuse the non-production although no such effort has been made, the mere fact sufficing that the document is out of the jurisdiction.[2] In the third group, the effort ac-

Co., 157 Ill. 284, 307, 41 N. E. 765 ("due effort" must be made for "papers out of the jurisdiction"); 1907, McDonald v. Erbes, 231 Ill. 295, 83 N. E. 162 (contract between plaintiff and defendant, left in the hands of a third person, who testified that it was at his home in Wisconsin, if anywhere; copy excluded, since "no effort was made by the appellant to obtain the original agreement prior to the trial"; such being "the rule in this State"); Iowa: 1895, Waite v. High, 96 Ia. 742, 65 N. W. 397 (the Court intimated that it must also appear impossible to secure the document); 1916, Fisher & Ball v. Carter, 178 Ia. 636, 160 N. W. 15 (letter addressed and mailed to a third person in Missouri; copy excluded, for lack of due diligence); Kansas: 1872, Shaw v. Mason, 10 Kan. 184, 189 (contract in third person's hands in Missouri; production necessary, if nothing further is shown by way of excuse); Louisiana: 1829, Lewis v. Beatty, 8 Mart. N. S. 287, 289 (deed in neighboring State; no attempt made to procure it; secondary evidence excluded); Michigan: 1891, Phillips v. U. S. Benef. Soc'y, 120 Mich. 142, 79 N. W. 1 (document in Canada; attempt to take deposition required); Minnesota: 1868, Wood v. Cullen, 13 Minn. 394, 396 (mere possession by certain opponents out of the State, held not to "excuse from diligent effort to procure it"); 1920, Gasser v. Great Northern Ins. Co., 145 Minn. 205, 176 N. W. 484 (receipt in custody of M., resident in Nebraska, but testifying at the trial; defendant had asked M. for it some time before the trial, and M. had refused; trial judge's discretion in allowing oral testimony to contents, confirmed); Missouri: 1838, Haile v. Palmer, 5 Mo. 403, 417 (sworn copy of marriage register and certificate in Louisiana, excluded because it did not appear that the law of Louisiana made them official records; apparently unsound); 1862, Farrel v. Brennan, 32 Mo. 328, 333 (letters addressed by F. to his father in Ireland; evidence of search or the like required); New York: 1883, Kearney v. Mayor, 92 N. Y. 617, 621 ("the last person known to have been in possession of the paper must be examined as a witness", and "even if he is out of the State, his deposition must be procured if practicable, or some good excuse given for not doing so"); North Carolina: 1842, Deaver v. Rice, 2 Ired. 280 (a constable had moved to another State, leaving some of his papers with an agent, and the document desired was not among these; held insufficient for offering oral evidence of the contents); 1886, Justice v. Luther, 94 N. C. 793, 798 (the mere residence of the depositary in another State is not sufficient); Oklahoma: 1906, Pringey v. Guss, 16 Okl. 82, 86 Pac. 292 (action on a contract, the original being in the possession of R., living in Nebraska; copy excluded, no diligence being shown to procure the original); Pennsylvania: 1846, McGregor v. Montgomery, 4 Pa. St. 237 (lease in the hands of a third person, out of the State, who had been notified to produce; other evidence excluded); South Carolina: St. 1870, C. C. P. 1922, § 747 (quoted ante, § 1212); Utah: 1907, McCollum v. Southern P. R. Co., 31 Utah 494, 88 Pac. 663 (special ruling upon a railroad ticket); Vermont: 1914, State v. Alpert, 88 Vt. 191, 92 Atl. 32 (invoices of a Massachusetts business house, which had a rule against removal of documents, not allowed to be proved by copy, the State not having proved any further effort to obtain the originals; unsound); Wisconsin: 1835, Diener v. Schley, 5 Wis. 483, 525 (letter written to a person in Germany; loss must further be shown); 1906, Bruger v. Princeton & S. M. M. F. Ins. Co., 129 Wis. 281, 109 N. W. 95 (application for an insurance policy out of the jurisdiction; "some fair showing should be made of efforts to obtain the original, unless it is clear that they would have been fruitless").

The following ruling is unique, and of course unsound: 1838, Steinkeller v. Newton, 9 C. & P. 313 (in a foreign deposition, the witness alluded to the contents of a letter; held, that the inability to compel the witness to produce the letter did not suffice to admit his reference to it).

[2] ENGLAND: 1855, Bruce v. Nicolopulo, 11 Exch. 129, 134 (a printed placard posted on a wall in Turkey by the Russian commandant: copy received); 1889, Burnaby v. Baillie, L. R. 42 Ch. D. 283, 291 (French official marriage-register, not required to be produced).

CANADA: P. E. I. St. 1889, § 57 (on commissions for examinations taken out of the province, the "books of account or books of original entries" may be proved by copies "given in evidence" or extracts certified by the commissioner).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1873, Burton v. Driggs, 20 Wall. 125, 134 (copy of a lost deposition of a witness beyond process, receivable, and a new taking of the deposition not necessary; documents in the possession of one "living in another State", provable "without further showing", by secondary evidence);
Alabama: 1831, Scott v. Rivers, 1 Stew. & P. 19, 22 (grantee in possession of deed, residing out of the State; copy receivable); 1878, Snow v. Carr, 61 Ala. 363, 368 (policies cancelled and returned to England; production not required); 1879, Whilden v.

Bank, 64 Ala. 1, 13, 30 (telegram in custody of person out of the State; production not required); 1880, Elliott v. Stocks, 67 Ala. 290, 300 (power of attorney in another State; production not required); 1880, Ware v. Morgan, 67 Ala. 461, 466 (bill of exchange in another State; production not required); 1883, Gordon v. Tweedy, 74 Ala. 232, 236 (books of a railroad company in another State; production not required); 1883, Martin v. Brown, 75 Ala. 442, 447 (letters in a foreign country; production not required); 1884, Pensacola R. Co. v. Schaffer, 76 Ala. 233, 237 (original of telegram in adjacent State; production not required); 1892, Alabama State L. Co. v. Kyle, 99 Ala. 474, 479, 13 So. 43 (certificate of entry out of State; copy received); 1906, Hoyle v. Mann, 144 Ala. 516, 41 So. 835 (ejectment; a writing "out of the State", held provable orally); 1907, Sellers v. Farmer, 151 Ala. 487, 43 So. 967 (unrecorded deed presumed to be in possession of grantee out of the State, proved orally);

Arkansas: 1876, Bozeman v. Browning, 31 Ark. 364, 371 (bond filed in a Court of another State; sufficient on the facts); 1902, Ritter v. State, 70 Ark. 472, 69 S. W. 262 (letters in possession of a third person, without the State; production not required);

California: 1856, Gordon v. Searing, 8 Cal. 49 (paper in hands of party out of the State, sufficient); 1893, Zellerbach v. Allenberg, 99 Cal. 57, 73, 33 Pac. 786 (letters mailed to a resident of Germany, presumed beyond the State, and thus "lost", under C. C. P. § 1963, subd. 24);

Connecticut: 1853, Shepard v. Giddings, 22 Conn. 282 (mere fact of possession out of the jurisdiction, sufficient);

Georgia: 1858, Goodwyn v. Goodwyn, 25 Ga. 203, 207 (execution on file out of the State; production not required); 1858, Lunday v. Thomas, 26 Ga. 537, 544 (in possession of a third person without the State; not required); 1869, White v. Clements, 39 Ga. 232, 242 (paper beyond the jurisdiction and not in the power of proponent; not required); 1871, Frank v. Longstreet, 44 Ga. 178, 187 (notice served without the jurisdiction; ruling obscure); 1875, Brown v. Oattis, 55 Ga. 416, 419 (deed in another State; proponent not required to try to get it); 1880, Schaefer v. R. Co., 66 Ga. 39, 45 (freight list, original out of the State; copy admitted); 1888, Calhoun v. Calhoun, 81 Ga. 91, 93, 6 S. E. 913 (deed beyond the jurisdiction, provable by copy); 1895, Bowden v. Achor, 95 Ga. 243, 22 S. E. 271 (document in another State; copy allowable); 1897, Miller v. McKinnon, 103 Ga. 553, 29 S. E. 467 (possession of third person beyond jurisdiction; production not required);

Illinois: 1855, Mitchell v. Jacobs, 17 Ill. 235 (lease sent to California with a deposition; production not required); 1920, People v. Bond, 291 Ill. 74, 125 N. E. 740 (letter in hands of defendant's attorneys in another State; prosecution allowed to testify to its contents);

Indiana: 1866, Thom v. Wilson, 25 Ind. 370, 372 (paper owned by a witness living abroad; copy attached to deposition, sufficient); 1881, Hall v. Bishop, 78 Ind. 370, 371 ("under the control of a witness not within the jurisdiction"; copy allowed);

Iowa: 1916, Worez v. DesMoines City R. Co., 175 Ia. 1, 156 N. W. 867 (insurance application outside of the jurisdiction in a third person's hands; copy allowed);

Kansas: 1912, McCord-Collins M. Co. v. Dodson, — Kan. —, 121 Pac. 1085 (draft in a Missouri bank, retained by the deposing cashier; copy held sufficient); G. S. 1915, § 7288 (records, by third persons, of entries in course of business, admissible as quoted post, § 1519, are provable by sworn copies, when the originals are "kept without the county");

Kentucky: 1838, Lemon v. Johnson, 6 Dana 399 (removal from the State by the possessor, and his death abroad; sufficient on the facts); 1847, Waller v. Cralle, 8 B. Monr. 11, 14 (release in the hands of a non-resident; sufficient);

Massachusetts: 1904, Cooley v. Collins, 186 Mass. 507, 71 N. E. 979 (a lease presumed to be in D.'s possession out of the jurisdiction, and therefore provable orally);

Michigan: 1888, Woods v. Burke, 67 Mich. 674, 676, 35 N. W. 798 (out of the jurisdiction, sufficient); 1890, Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 201, 47 N. W. 123 (bond out of the State; production not required);

Minnesota: 1897, Kleeberg v. Schrader, 69 Minn. 136, 72 N. W. 59 (contract in Germany; production not required);

Missouri: 1845, St. Louis P. Ins. Co. v. Cohen, 9 Mo. 416, 439 (agreement in Wisconsin; production not required); 1848, Robards v. McLean, 8 Ired. 522, 524 (the plaintiff's slave had a document which the defendant wished to prove; that the slave had escaped to another State was held sufficient, nor was the chance of finding it in his possession sufficient to require an attempt to get it);

Montana: 1921, Nelson v. Gough, — Mont. —, 202 Pac. 196 (original in hands of a person returned to Sweden, and not found on inquiry there; copy received, under Rev. C. § 7872);

New Hampshire: 1836, Burnham v. Wood, 8 N. H. 334, 337 (corporation books in another jurisdiction; production excused);

New Jersey: 1903, Hirsch v. Leatherbee L. Co., 69 N. J. L. 509, 55 Atl. 645 (letter sent to a non-resident now deceased; copy admitted);

New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 374 (foreign corporation's books may be proved by copy on ten days' notice of such intention and pursuant to details prescribed; except by a corporation proving its own acts);

Ohio: 1846, Reed v. State, 15 Oh. 217, 223

tually made is declared to be sufficient without laying down any rule as to its necessity.[3]

(a counterfeit bank-note out of the jurisdiction; production not required);
Pennsylvania: St. 1837, Mar. 31, § 20, Dig. 1920, § 10351 (certified copy of extract from certain foreign burial registers, receivable); 1886, Otto v. Trump, 115 Pa. 425, 429, 8 Alt. 786 (records in another State, not required to be produced);
South Dakota: 1896, Hagaman v. Gillis, 9 S. D. 61, 68 N. W. 192 (document out of the jurisdiction; provable without notice to holder to produce);
Texas: 1854, Clifton v. Lilley, 12 Tex. 130, 136 (the last custodian resided in another State; "it was not necessary to call on him by subpœna d. t. or otherwise"); 1888, Veck v. Holt, 71 Tex. 715, 717, 9 S. W. 743 (vendee out of the jurisdiction; proof of inaccessibility of bill of sale, or of demand, unnecessary); 1890, Frost v. Wolf, 77 Tex. 455, 459, 14 S. W. 440 (deed in a notary's office in Louisiana; production excused); 1902, Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Dilworth, 95 Tex. 327, 67 S. W. 88 (contents of a way-bill in Kansas, held provable by deposition, where it appeared that an effort to obtain the original would have been unavailing);
Vermont: 1856, Hayward R. Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29, 39 (letter to third persons, one deceased, the other out of the State; production not required); 1900, Blaisdell v. Davis, 72 Vt. 295, 48 Atl. 14, semble (original out of the jurisdiction; copy sufficient);
Virginia: 1806, Fitzhugh v. Love, 6 Call 5, 10 (a Liverpool notary's copy of an inaccessible protest by a London notary, excluded; semble, the London notary's copy admissible).

[3] Can. 1884, McDonald v. Murray, 5 Ont. 559, 570, 575 (document refused to be given up by a foreign official; production excused, without showing that by the foreign law it was irremovable); U. S. Ala. 1838, Mordecai v. Bell, 8 Port. 529, 535 (possession by one out of the State, and demand for it, sufficient on the facts); 1839, Swift v. Fitzhugh, 9 Ala. 39, 53 (same; deposition of holder need not be taken); 1844, Beall v. Dearing, 7 Ala. 124, 126 (demand of non-resident, sufficient; taking deposition, here equivalent to a demand); Ga. 1849, Doe v. Biggers, 6 Ga. 188, 196 (not decided); Ill. 1880, Fisher v. Greene, 95 Ill. 94, 99 (power of attorney held in New York and refused to be given up by holder; copy allowed); Ia. 1895, Bullis v. Easton, 96 Ia. 513, 65 N. W. 395 (sufficient where the possessor refused to give up the original, but this is not stated to be essential); Ky. 1898, Combs v. Breathitt Co., 20 Ky. 529, 46 S. W. 505 (in another county, beyond process, and after "due effort to obtain"; production not required); La. 1855, Montgomery v. Routh, 10 La. An. 316 (notes refused to be given up by holder out of the State; copies admitted); Mass. 1871, Binney v. Russell, 109 Mass. 55 (deponent out of the Commonwealth refused to annex a document, but annexed a copy; copy admitted); 1908, State Bank & T. Co. v. Evans, 198 Mass. 11, 84 N. E. 329; Minn. 1893, Thomson-Houston E. Co. v. Palmer, 52 Minn. 174, 181, 53 N. W. 1137 (document held by deponent in Kansas, and refused to be given up; production excused); Mo. 1854, Brown v. Wood, 19 Mo. 475 (document in Wisconsin, notice to produce having been given; production excused); N. D. 1906, Hanson v. Lindstrom, 15 N. D. 584, 108 N. W. 798 (document sent to a third person out of the State; diligence to procure it not being shown, secondary evidence was rejected); Pa. 1842, Ralph v. Brown, 3 W. & S. 395, 399 (deposition in the hands of one in another State who refused to give it up; production not required); 1875, American Life Ins. Co. v. Rosenagle, 77 Pa. 507, 513 (letters refused to be given up; question left undecided; here the holder was out of the jurisdiction); S. C. 1811, Bunch v. Hurst, 3 De Saus. 273, 290 (deed placed in the hands of a third person who had left the State and refused to give it up; the offeror himself having given it to the third person, the case was treated as one of suppression, and production required); Tex. 1899, Sayles v. Bradley & M. Co., 92 Tex. 406, 49 S. W. 209 (refusal of witness in another county, beyond the reach of subpœna, to attach paper to deposition; production not required); 1921, James v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 656, 228 S. W. 941 (murder; defendant's application for deferred classification under U. S. St. 1917, May 18, being material, and the records of the local selective service board having been forwarded to Washington, D. C., the board clerk's oral testimony was received); Wash. 1921, State v. Payne, 116 Wash. 640, 200 Pac. 314 (criminal syndicalism; a police-officer from Chicago allowed to prove by photograph the contents of a book in custody of the State's attorney at Chicago, which original the State's attorney had declined on request to surrender; the facts held to excuse production under either rule); Wis. 1861, Bonner v. Ins. Co., 13 Wis. 677, 687 (railroad shipping book out of jurisdiction; secondary proof allowed; whether railroad's refusal to furnish must be shown, undecided); 1879, Wisconsin River L. Co. v. Walker, 48 Wis. 614, 4 N. W. 803 (stock-book in Illinois, which possessor refused to deliver; secondary proof allowed); 1903, Speiser v. Phoenix M. L. Ins. Co., 119 Wis. 530, 97 N. W. 207 (insurance-application in N. Y., the holder refusing to give it up; proved by copy attached to deposition).

The circumstance that the possessor of the

The proper practice is to leave the matter entirely in the hands of the trial Court; except that no effort need ever be required to obtain a foreign public or official document irremovable by the foreign law (post, § 1218). Whether, when the document is a public one in another jurisdiction, the proof of its contents should be by certified copy, involves a different principle (post, § 1273).

§ 1214. (4) Physical Impossibility of Removal. Production should not be required where the written characters exist on something so firmly fixed to the realty that its removal for production would be impracticable under the circumstances:

1842, PARKE, B., in Jones v. Tarlton, 1 Dowl. Pr. N. S. 625, 626: "The exceptions . . . [cover things] not easily removed, as in the case of things fixed in the ground or to the freehold; for the law does not expect a man to break up his freehold for the purpose of bringing a notice into court."

Something should no doubt depend upon whether the realty is in the possession of the proponent or of a third person; for in the latter case a slight degree of injury or disturbance would suffice to render removal impracticable. The trial Court's determination should suffice in each instance.[1]

§ 1215. (5) Irremovable Judicial Records; General Principle (Records, Pleadings, Depositions, Wills, etc.; Statutory Rules). The record of a court should not be taken away from its place of custody into another court. This irremovability is often expressly enacted by statute; but, whether it is so enacted or not, the principle has always been judicially sanctioned on grounds of policy. The removal into another court as evidence would make it impossible for the time being for others to use the records; there would be a document is the opponent, and that therefore it might be obtained from abroad by legal process in the suit is immaterial; the case falls rather under the rule of § 1199, ante: 1900, Phillips v. U. S. Benevolent Soc'y, 125 Mich. 186, 84 N. W. 57 (insurance application filed at defendant's home office in Canada, provable by copy).

Contra: 1903, Central El. Co. v. Sprague El. Co., 57 C. C. A. 197, 120 Fed. 925 (minutes of the opponent corporation, in another State; the original or a certified copy required to be produced).

For the question whether the original must be sent to a deponent out of the jurisdiction, deposing to handwriting, see ante, § 1185.

§ 1214. [1] Eng. 1809, Cobden v. Bolton, 2 Camp. 108 (notice on a board inlaid in the wall of a coach-office; proved by an examined copy); 1833, R. v. Fursey, 6 C. & P. 81, 84 (notice affixed to a wall; copy admitted); 1834, Doe v. Cole, 6 C. & P. 359 (tablet in a church; production not required); 1839, Bartholomew v. Stephens, 8 C. & P. 728 (a notice painted on a board on a pole in a field; copy admitted); 1840, Mortimer v. M'Callan, 6 M. & W. 58, 63, 68 (handwriting on a wall; production not required); 1842, R. v. Edge, Wills, Circ. Evid., 5th Am. ed., 212, Maule, B. (an inscription on a coffin-plate; "being removable, it ought to have been produced"); 1842, Jones v. Tarlton, 9 M. & W. 65, 1 Dowl. Pr. N. S. 625 (a notice in a carrier's office, painted on a board fastened by a string to a nail; production required); 1848, Sayer v. Glossop, 2 Exch. 409, 411 (per Pollock, C. B., a writing pasted on a wall; per Rolfe, B., words chalked on a wall; used as examples of non-availability); 1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 12th day, Times' Rep. pt. 3, p. 159 (testimony being offered as to a notice posted up forbidding the payment of rent, it was ruled that "it is not necessary to produce the actual notices that were posted up").

U. S. 1896, Harper v. State, 109 Ala. 28, 19 So. 857 (notices posted against trespassing; production not required); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5757 (inscriptions on "walls, monuments, and other fixed objects", provable by copy); 1859, Stearns v. Doe, 12 Gray Mass. 482, 486 (name and port painted on the stern of a vessel, described by a witness; present point not raised).

serious risk of loss; and there would be a constant additional wear and tear upon the document. For the record of a court without the jurisdiction there is the added consideration that there is no legal means of obtaining the document.

(a) For these reasons (analogous to those affecting public records in general, post, § 1218) it is well settled that the record of another court may be proved without production:

Ante 1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 7: "Records, being the precedents of the demonstrations of justice, to which every man has a common right to have recourse, cannot be transferred from place to place to serve a private purpose; and therefore they have a common repository, from whence they ought not to be removed but by the authority of some other court; and this is in the treasury of Westminster. And this piece of law is plainly agreeable to all manner of reason and justice; for if one man might demand a record to serve his own occasions, by the same reason any other person might demand it; but both could not possibly possess it at the same time in different places, and therefore it must be kept in one certain place in common for them both. Besides, these records, by being daily removed, would be in great danger of being lost. And consequently it is on all hands convenient that these monuments of justice should be fixed in a certain place, and that they should not be transferred from thence but by public authority from superior justice. The copies of records must be allowed in evidence, for . . . the rule of evidence commands no farther than to produce the best that the nature of the thing is capable of; for to tie men up to the original that is fixed to a place, and cannot be had, is to totally discard their evidence, . . . for then the rules of law and right would be the authors of injury, which is the highest absurdity."

1811, NOTT, J., in Tobin v. Seay, 2 Brev. 470 (receiving an office copy of an execution): "An exemplification is all that a party can obtain. It is the best evidence the nature of the case admits of; because the Courts would not compel the clerks of courts to attend with the originals upon a subpœna 'duces tecum.'"

1868, JOYNES, J., in Bullard v. Thomas, 19 Gratt. 14, 18: "The usual mode of proving the record of another court is by the production of a certified copy. But the copy is not produced in such cases because it is better evidence than the original; it is received only on the ground of convenience, as a substitute for the original record. The reception of a copy avoids the inconvenience of removing the original record from place to place."

This rule applied to inferior courts also.[1] The docket of a justice of the peace is now provided for almost universally by statute (infra, note 11).

Distinguish the case where a lost judicial record is restored by decree; here the copy restored becomes the original, and the loss of the former need not be shown (post, § 1240).

(b) It follows that a writ, pleading, or the like, which appertains to the trial at bar in the same court and will become a part of the record in the suit, must be produced or accounted for like any other document.[2] Conversely,

§ 1215. [1] 1696, Holt, C. J., in R. v. Hains, Comb. 337: "We know that it is not usual for inferior courts to draw up their records, but only short notes; and copies of these short notes, being public things, are good evidence; otherwise of private things, for copies of rent-rolls are no evidence, but the original must be produced."

[2] Eng. 1807, Bayley v. Wylie, 6 Esp. 85 (a recital in a deposition of the commission authorizing it, held inadmissible; the commission required); Ala. 1880, Baucum v. George, 65 Ala. 259, 266 (execution, etc.; loss required to be shown); Ga. 1854, Ernest v. Napier, 15 Ga. 306, 308 (execution in the Court below; production held necessary, being obtainable by application to that Court or by mandamus in case of refusal); Ill. 1897, Roby v. Title Co., 166 Ill. 336, 46 N. E. 1110 (only the record allowable to prove rules of court;

a document which is part of the record in another court need not be produced, even though it is in fact in the control of the opponent and thus available.[3]

(c) The question will often arise whether a document is in legal theory a part of the record or is merely an incidental document which can be withdrawn from the other Court. An answer in Chancery, it was settled, need not be produced, although in strictness the Chancery in England was the central custodian of records for all Courts and although the Chancellor's permission for temporary removal was by tradition obtainable.[4] But an affidavit, it was thought, was not a part of the record and must be produced; though this would hardly be the ruling at the present day.[5] A will of land probated in the Ecclesiastical Court did not become a part of the record there, because that Court had no jurisdiction to render judgment upon a will of land (post, § 1238), and therefore the will must be produced at common law like any other document;[6] but statutes have everywhere changed this by creating courts with jurisdictions equally over wills of all kinds and by permitting the use of copies.[7] A deed offered in the other court for purposes but it is singular that a Court cannot take notice of its own rules); Tenn. 1874, Currey v. State, 7 Baxt. 154, 155 (same as next case; here proof of loss was waived); 1880, Epperson v. State, 5 Lea 291, 294 (copy of minutes of indictment, usable on accounting for the original).

[3] 1853, Fouke v. Ray, 1 Wis. 104, 108 (even where the opponent has the original in court); 1858, Dupont v. Downing, 6 Ia. 173, 176 (original not required, even where the opponent was the custodian).

Contra: 1854, Millard v. Hall, 24 Ala. 209, 212, 223 (order of sale issued by clerk of another court; production required); 1855, Lunsford v. Smith, 12 Gratt. Va. 554, 563 (execution in another court, not accounted for; copy excluded).

[4] Eng. 1809, Salter v. Turner, 2 Camp. 87; 1812, Lady Dartmouth v. Roberts, 16 East 334, 340 (answer in Chancery in a suit between other parties); 1813, Hodgkinson v. Willis, 3 Camp. 401 (answer in Chancery in another suit); 1817, Hennell v. Lyon, 1 B. & Ald. 182; 1825, Ewer v. Ambrose, 4 B. & C. 25; 1840, Abinger, C. B., in Mortimer v. M'Callan, 6 M. & W. 58, 68 ("formerly the actual production was required", but the inconvenience of getting the Lord Chancellor's consent on each occasion led to a change); U. S. N. Y. 1830, Winans v. Dunham, 5 Wend. 47 (original of a Chancery decree, etc., need not be produced); Va. 1817, Gibson v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 111, 120 (in a Superior Court, certified copy of judgment of the General Court suffices).

[5] 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 56 ("the reason is, because the answer is an allegation in a court of judicature, . . . but a voluntary affidavit hath no relation to any court of justice, and . . . the affidavit itself must be produced as the best evidence"); 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 239; 1825, Graham, B., in Rees v. Bowen, 1 McCl. & Y. 383, 389 ("I think there is a marked difference between an affidavit and an answer or anything else which is properly called a record, in the instance of which an attested copy is perfectly sufficient. . . . Answers, or other records, where they are regular, are never permitted to be removed from the files; but nothing is more usual than for a judge, where a party has occasion to make use of an affidavit, to direct it to be taken off the file for the purpose").

Contra: 1827, Highfield v. Peake, 1 M. & M. 109, Littledale, J.; 1847, Garvin v. Carroll, 10 Ir. L. R. 323, 330 ("It is a record of the Court", and need not be produced, except on a charge of perjury).

Depositions are usually provided for by the statutes governing them (post, §§ 1380–1383).

[6] 1685, Anon., Skin. 174 ("If they will not after proof deliver back the original, then this Court will intermeddle, and a proof of the will cannot be by copy"); 1697, Hoe v. Nathrop, 1 Ld. Raym. 154 (probated will of realty; copy excluded).

[7] These statutes have been placed, to avoid repetition, under § 1681, post; they allow the use of a copy of the judgment of probate (under whatever name it goes); though in a few States they allow production of the original will to be required, e.g. on a suggestion of fraud.

The following rulings were made under such statutes: Alabama: 1893, Newsom v. Holesapple, 101 Ala. 682, 691 (original not required; applying the statute); Illinois: 1890, Purdy v. Hall, 134 Ill. 298, 25 N. E. 645 (original must be accounted for); 1894, Nicewander v. Nicewander, 151 Ill. 156, 161, 37 N. E. 698 (same); South Carolina: 1824, Franklin v. Creyon, Harp. Eq. 243, 249 (certified copy of of proof was regarded as a part of the record, temporarily at least;[8] the question depends largely on the nature of the other proceeding and of the document.[9] Statutes often provide for the proof by copy of sundry documents required to be filed among court records.[10]

(d) In most jurisdictions statutes have expressly provided that the records of courts in general need not be produced. So far as these statutes brought within the rule certain judicial proceedings (such as those of justices of the peace), they may have served to make more certain or to amplify its operation. But for the most part these statutes merely declare, as to the present subject, that which was before never questioned; and their principal purpose was usually to amplify the rule (post, § 1681), concerning the exception to the Hearsay rule for certified copies by official custodians of documents.[11]

§ 1216. Same: Exception for 'Nul Tiel Record' and Perjury. (a) Where the plea of 'nul tiel record' was interposed, it seems to have been originally the practice to require production even from another court; the production probated will, received, the Court records being burnt); 1856, Wardlaw v. Hammond, 9 Rich. 454 (the notice required by statute must be in writing); 1859, Gourdin v. Staggers, 12 Rich. 307 (statutory notice held insufficient in tenor); 1860, Sally v. Gunter, 13 Rich. 72, 75 (certified copy of domestic probated will, established on a copy of will probated in another State, received); Tennessee: 1848, Weatherhead v. Sewell, 9 Humph. 272, 283 (will required to be produced, on suggestion of fraud, etc.); Texas: 1886, Hickman v. Gillum, 66 Tex. 314, 315, 1 S. W. 339 (original not required); 1889, Rio Grande & E. P. R. Co. v. Bank, 72 Tex. 467, 10 S. W. 563 (same); Virginia: 1826, Dickinson v. M'Craw, 4 Rand. 158, 160 (statute applied; copy sufficient).

[8] Ante 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 253 (where a deed being pleaded "is tied up to one court, and is impossible to be removed, it shall be pleaded in another without shewing"); 1593, Wymark's Case, 5 Co. Rep. 75 ("If a deed be denied in one court, by which it remains there, this deed may be pleaded in another court without shewing it; for 'lex non cogit ad impossibilia'").

[9] Eng. 1817, Handley v. Fitzhugh, 1 A. K. Marsh. 24 (document unavailable because lodged in a court of law in another suit; whole record of that suit required to be read, to show the reason for non-production); 1849, Davidson v. Davidson, 10 B. Monr. 115 (award filed in another court of the State: original required); Pa. 1811, Miles v. O'Hara, 4 Binn. 108, 111 (judge's notes are not a record, and must be produced); S. Car. 1802, Fant v. McDaniel, 1 Brev. 173 (malicious prosecution: original indictment need not be produced); Vt. 1836, Mattocks v. Bellamy, 8 Vt. 463, 467 (habeas corpus writ, in files of court, provable by copy).

The question is properly one of the nature of a record, not of any principle of evidence, and the above cases are merely a few illustrations of the range of the controversy.

[10] The following statutes include only those in which the document is treated as not a part of the record and is required to be produced or accounted for: many other statutes, providing for proof by copy without producing the original, are collected, to avoid repetition, post, § 1681: Conn. Gen. St. 1918, § 4857 (bond filed in Probate Court: if lost, a certified copy is admissible); Miss. Code 1906, § 1971, Hem. 1631 (in action on a writing filed in a suit brought thereon in another court, a certified copy is admissible; but if execution is denied by plea, the clerk having custody must attend with the original); N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 226, § 9 (copy of recorded deposition 'in perpetuam', usable if the original is "lost or out of the possession and control" of the party); N. C. Con. St. 1919, § 1779 (writings "recorded or filed as records in any court", provable by keeper's certified copy under seal, unless the Court orders production of the original); Okl. Comp. St. 1921, § 2951 (certified copy by clerk of district court of indictment, information, or bond filed, admissible when original is "lost, destroyed, or stolen, or for any other reason cannot be produced at the trial"); R. I. Gen. L. 1909, c. 320, § 9 (bond filed in Probate Court, provable by certified copy if lost); Tex. Rev. Civ. Stats. 1911, § 3706 (in a suit on an instrument filed in another domestic court, a certified copy is admissible; but on affidavit denying execution, the clerk shall attend on subpœna with the original).

[11] To save repetition the statutes are collected post, § 1681.

being obtained through Chancery by 'certiorari.'[1] But afterwards it came to be settled that production of the record was here unnecessary, and was required only where the record in issue existed in the same court or in an inferior court.[2] The practice in this country seems to be to require production of a record in the same court,[3] but not usually of a record in an inferior court,[4] and of course not of a record in a foreign court.[5]

(b) On a charge of perjury in an answer in Chancery, it was customary to require the production of the answer; [6] but this was rather because the jurat of the Master or other official did not in itself suffice to identify the accused as the signer, and the principle involved was in truth that of Authentication (post, § 2158).

§ 1217. Same: Discriminations (Dockets, Certified Copies, etc.). (1) The question will of course arise whether the docket-book, clerk's minutes, and such documents, may constitute the record instead of the original papers or the judgment-roll; this involves the nature of a judicial record, which is not a question of the law of Evidence, but involves the "parol evidence" rule (post, § 2450). (2) A sheriff's deed of sale usually recites the judgment and execution upon which it is founded; whether those papers should be produced is a question involving in part the present principle, but involving also and chiefly, the admissibility under the Hearsay rule of the sheriff's official recitals (post, § 1664). (3) That the original record, if in fact available and in Court, may be used, is clear (ante, § 1186). (4) In using copies to prove the record, an exception to the Hearsay rule allows the use of copies

§ 1216. [1] 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 26 ("It is regularly true that when the record is pleaded and appears in the allegations, it must be tried on the issue 'nul tiel record'; but where the issue is upon fact, the record may be given in evidence [by copy] to support that fact. When the issue is 'nul tiel record', the record must be brought, 'sub pede sigilli'; but where the record is offered to a jury [as evidence], any of the forementioned copies are evidence": Editor's Note: "So that the difference of the two cases is this: In the former the issue goes to the Court; for 'nul tiel record' is an issue in which the record itself is the only proof; . . . but where the issue is on the fact, and the record is only inducement, . . . a copy may be given in evidence").

[2] 1742, Woodcraft v. Kinaston, 2 Atk. 317 (Lord Hardwicke, L. C.: "There is a great difference between the record itself and the tenor; for this is only a transcript or copy; indeed it must be literal, but still it is only a transcript." "If 'nul tiel record' be pleaded, the Court cannot have the record but by 'certiorari' and then the tenor [i.e. a copy], if returned, is sufficient as evidence of the record, and will countervail the plea of 'nul tiel record': but when the record is to be proceeded upon [in a superior court], the record itself must be returned").

[3] 1847, Alexander v. Foreman, 7 Ark. 252 (production required); 1850, Adams v. State, 11 Ark. 466, 473 (production required if in same court); 1796, Burk v. Tregg, 2 Wash. Va. 215 (same); 1805, Anderson v. Dudley, 5 Call Va. 529 (same).

[4] Conn. 1783, Allin v. Hiscock, 1 Root 88 (justice's record; certified copies used; variance appearing, the original was required); Me. 1851, Dyer v. Lowell, 33 Me. 260, 262 (on 'certiorari' for quashing an order of partition; copy sufficient); Mass. 1808, Ladd v. Blunt, 4 Mass. 402 (Parsons, C. J.: "We never direct the record of the Court of Common Pleas to be sent us on the trial of 'nul tiel record', but receive copies of their records attested by the clerk"); N. H. 1852, Willard v. Harvey, 24 N. H. 344, 350 (certified copy sufficient); N. Y. 1825, Vail v. Smith, 4 Cow. 71 (record of an inferior domestic Court may be proved by exemplification, and need not be brought by 'certiorari').

[5] 1820, Baldwin v. Hale, 17 John. 272 (foreign record, provable by examined copy; here of an U. S. Circuit Court); 1813, Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cr. U. S. 481, 484 (record in another State; exemplified copy sufficient); 1818, Hampton v. M'Connel, 9 id. 234 (same).

[6] 1812, Lady Dartmouth v. Roberts, 16 East 334; 1825, Ewer v. Ambrose, 4 B. & C. 25; 1847, Garvin v. Carroll, 10 Ir. L. R. 323, 330.

certified out of Court by the legal custodian; the detailed rules of this exception are elsewhere dealt with (post, § 1681). (5) There are certain preferences accorded to particular kinds of copies; these involve another principle (post, §§ 1269–1273). (6) Whether, when a lost judicial record has been re-established by a decree, the loss has to be shown otherwise than as recited in the decree, is considered post, § 1660; and the conclusiveness of the re-established record is considered post, § 1347.

§ 1218. (6) Irremovable Official Documents; General Principle. For reasons similar to those applicable to judicial records, documents belonging in any public office need not be produced, but may be otherwise proved. Their removal for production in evidence would delay and hinder the official use of the files, would make it impossible for other persons to consult the absent documents, would subject them to risk of loss, and would injure them by constant wear and tear. These reasons and the general principle have long been established:[1]

1774, Mansfield, L. C. J., in Jones v. Randall, Cowp. 17: "A copy of [the Lords' journals] may certainly be read in evidence; for the inconvenience would be endless if the journals of the House of Lords were to be carried all over the kingdom."

1817, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Hennell v. Lyon, 1 B. & Ald. 182, 184: "The admission of copies in evidence is founded upon a principle of great public convenience, in order that documents of great moment should not be ambulatory, and subject to the loss that would be incurred if they were removable. The same has been laid down in respect of proceedings in courts, not of record, copies whereof are admitted, though not strictly of a public nature." Abbott, J.: "It is a general principle that copies are receivable in such cases without the originals, from the great inconvenience which would result if the documents were taken to different places. There would have been a danger of loss from such a practice, and besides, the documents might be wanted at different places at the same time."

1840, Abinger, L. C. B., in Mortimer v. M'Callan, 6 M. & W. 58, 69: "When the law is laid down that you cannot remove the document in which the writing is made, you are entitled to the next best evidence."

1844, Pollock, C. B., in Doe v. Roberts, 13 M. & W. 520, 530 (a statute required title-deeds, etc., to crown lands, to be deposited in a certain office): "When directed to be kept in any particular custody, and so deposited, they are provable by examined copies, not on the ground of their being books of a public nature such as that all the world may look at them, but on the ground of the great inconvenience of removing them."

1853, Lipscomb, J., in Coons v. Renick, 11 Tex. 134, 137 (holding a contract for military stores, filed with the quartermaster, to be a public document): "If Major Babbitt could be required to appear and produce the original in one of the courts, he would be equally liable to attend with his original contract all over the State, to the great hazard of a loss of the document, as well as to the great inconvenience of those interested in the contract from its being removed from the office of the quartermaster-general. It is impossible to foresee the extent of the inconvenience to the public service, if the rule should be laid down that the quartermaster could be called from his service, where his presence might be constantly necessary, to go with a document not his own but belonging to the government."

§ 1218. [1] Accord: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1855 (proof by production of original is excused, "3, when the original is a record or other document in the custody of a public officer"); Colo. Comp. L. 1921, C. C. P. § 391; Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10516; Or. Laws 1920, § 712, par. 3 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); § 712, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855; quoted post, § 1225) P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1392 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855).

It was once a phrase much used that a copy is admissible "where the original if produced would be evidence." [2] This was intended to be said of official documents; but it was not said as affording a test for the present purpose, nor could it do so; it was said with reference to the Hearsay exception for Official Statements (post, § 1630); and its meaning is that where the original document was admissible by exception as an official statement, there a copy of it would equally be admissible under the same exception to the Hearsay rule. So far as it has in later times been construed to mean that every official document admissible under the Hearsay exception may be proved by copy, it has been misunderstood; [3] for the principle of non-production does not depend on admissibility (for example, a government commission's report may not be admissible) but on its presence in official custody and its irremovability.

The conceivable scope of the principle may include several sorts of documents: (1) Where by statute or regulation a document in official custody is expressly or impliedly forbidden to be removed, it is clear that the principle applies and production is dispensed with.[4] (2) Where the document is one of the working-documents of the office, containing the official doings or being a paper made and consulted there officially in the course of office-duty, it is equally clear that it need not be produced. (3) Where the document is one made by a private person and filed in a public office, the principle does not apply if a statute or regulation does not expressly require it to be filed and kept there; if it does so require, then the principle applies; although the rulings lay down no clear distinction on the subject, and most of the instances are dealt with by a statute in general or specific terms. (4) Where the document is one made by a private person and required by law to be recorded in the public office but not to be kept there, the principle does not at common law apply; but in many instances a statute has provided for its application. (5) Where the document is made by a public officer and is delivered, after being recorded, to a private person (as, a government land-certificate), the principle does not apply; but by statute in many instances it has either been made to apply or the record has been constituted the basis of title, so that the record, as the original, being in official custody, need not be produced.

§ 1219. Same: Specific Instances, at Common Law. No definite and comprehensive test in applying the principle seems to have obtained acceptance at common law; and the rulings are varied and not entirely consistent. It may be noted that the practice as to producing legislative journals seems

In Sykes v. Beck, 12 N. D. 242, 96 N. W. 844 (1903), the utterly unfounded statement is made that "the right to make proof of official records and documents primarily by copy does not exist independent of statute." Perhaps the learned judge meant to say "by certified copy", but even that is scarcely true (post, § 1677).

[2] E.g.: 1696, Holt, C. J., in R. v. Hains, Comb. 337 ("A copy of any original is evidence wheresoever the original is evidence"), 1697, Hoe v. Northrop, 1 Ld. Raym. 154 ("Resolved per curiam that the immediate copy of an original is good evidence where the original itself is evidence").

[3] See, for example, the British statutes, post, § 1680.

[4] For the question whether the original may be removed and produced, see ante, § 1186, post, §§ 2182, 2367.

never to have been settled in England;[1] though in this country production is seldom required, and a statute often expressly thus provides.[2] The other kinds of documents ruled upon have led to no special or enlightening controversy.[3]

It may be noted that whether a document is an official one and need not be produced may be still a common-law question, even where a statute addi-§ 1219. [1] 1653, Faulconer's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 323, 349 (journal produced); 1662, Sir Henry Vane's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 119, 150 (book produced); 1774, Jones v. Randall, Cowp. 17 (Lord Mansfield, C. J.: "A copy [of the Lords' journals] may certainly be read in evidence"); 1781, R. v. Lord Gordon, 2 Dougl. 590, 593 (Commons' journals; copies received without objection); 1806, Lord Melville's Trial, 29 How. St. Tr. 685 (the printed journals rejected); 1840, Abinger, C. B., in Mortimer v. M'Callan, 6 M. & W. 58, 67 (cites the preceding cases as not allowing copies, because "any one wishing to remove them could get the sanction of the Speaker to do so").

For the conclusiveness of the certified enrolled statute, see post, § 1350; for judicial notice of the journals, see post, § 2572; for printed copies, see post, § 1684.

[2] See these collected post, §§ 1680, 1684.

[3] ENGLAND: 1720, Brocas v. Mayor, 1 Stra. 307 (election record of the City of London; copy allowed); 1721, R. v. Gwyn, 1 Stra. 401 (municipal corporate records; copy not allowed because the letter in question was not a corporate act); 1788, R. v. King, 2 T. R. 234 (assessment-books of the land-tax in London; copy allowed); 1811, Eyre v. Palsgrave, 2 Camp. 605 (license-books of the Privy Council, licenses recorded in the Secretary of State's office, provable by copy); 1812, Walker v. Wingfield, 18 Ves. 443, 444 (marriage-register, provable by copy, but intimating that the registers were so often ill-kept that production should be required); 1813, Attorney-General v. Tomkins, 1 Dow 404 (to prove a clearance, in a prosecution for clearing with an undue number of persons on board, a copy was offered of the entry signed by the master in the custom-house book of clearances; the original entry held, semble, under the particular circumstances, provable by a copy); 1834, Alivon v. Furnival, 1 Cr. M. & R. 277, 291 (a French document deposited with a notary, and by usage, though not by law, irremovable; held "in effect out of the power of the party"); 1840, Abinger, C. B., in Mortimer v. M'Callan, 6 M. & W. 58, 68 (custom-house books provable by copy); 1848, Sayer v. Glossop, 2 Exch. 409 (public marriage-register; production not required); 1860, Reed v. Lamb 6 Jur. N. S. 828 (under statute; register of voters held to be of a "public nature"); 1873, R. v. Weaver, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 85 (official register of births, held provable by copy within the statute); 1913, Owner v. Bee Hive Spinning Co., [1914] 1 K. B. 105 (document kept by law affixed publicly in a factory; cited more fully ante, § 1200, n. 4).

CANADA: 1837, McLean v. McDonell, 1 U. C. Q. B. 13 (memorial upon a land-claim filed in the Governor-General's office; copy allowed); 1875, Burpee v. Carvill, 16 N. Br. 141 (public documents in Liverpool in the custom-house proved by examined copies).

UNITED STATES: some of the following cases were doubtless affected by statutes, and reference should be made to the statutes collected post, § 1680:

Federal: 1830, Ronkendorff v. Taylor, 4 Pet. 349, 360 (official assessment list; original not required); 1896, Re Hirsch, 74 Fed. 928 (unlawful liquor-selling by C.; the application of C. for a Federal license to sell liquors being admissible to show intent, the fact that the document was on file in the records of the Federal deputy-collector of internal revenue, held not to excuse its production in court); 1879, Corbett v. Gibson, 16 Blatchf. 334 (documents in military headquarters of Department of the East, provable by copy); 1919, Cohn v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 258 Fed. 355 (correspondence between a naval officer and a purchaser, the defendant, filed with a court-martial record in the Navy Department, held to be documents required to be kept on file in a public office, and therefore provable by copy under U. S. Rev. St. § 882; but here the opinion holds that the originals should have been accounted for as unavailable; the precise grounds for the ruling are obscure);

Alabama: 1847, Doe v. Eslaya, 11 Ala. 1028, 1037, 1041 (certain Spanish records, etc.; under statute, production not required); 1869, Monts v. Stephens, 43 Ala. 217, 222 (judge's certified copy of constable's bond; original not required, semble, if goods as a statutory bond, but otherwise if valid only as a common-law bond); 1881, Donegan v. Wade, 70 Ala. 501, 506 (search required in Probate office of written contestation-grounds, before oral evidence of contents); 1889, Stanley v. State, 88 Ala. 154, 156, 7 So. 273 (reports of fees by clerk of Court to Auditor, provable by certified copies); 1892, Cofer v. Scroggins, 98 Ala. 342, 345, 13 So. 115 (claim of exemption, filed in Probate Court; production not required); 1893, Schwartz v. Baird, 100 Ala. 154, 156, 13 So. 497 (husband's written consent to wife's engaging in business, filed in Probate Court; production not required);

tionally applies; so that, if the statute is limited in its application, the original may still at common law not be required. Thus, the statutes covering the 1893, Willingham v. State, 104 Ala. 59, 16 So. 116 (certificate of incorporation recorded with Secretary of State; certified copy of record receivable, whether the certificate itself has been kept there or not);

Arkansas: 1892, Dawson v. Barham, 55 Ark. 286, 290, 18 S. W. 48 (swamp-land-office entries provable by certified copy); 1895, Woodruff v. State, 61 Ark. 157, 171, 32 S. W. 102 (report of State board, original being lost, proved by extracts in the Senate journal);
California: 1855, Norris v. Russell, 5 Cal. 250 (municipal ordinance; notice of tax sale; production required); 1857, Hensley v. Tarpey, 7 Cal. 288 (regulation of public office forbidding removal of papers, sufficient); 1857, Hensley v. Tarpey, 7 Cal. 288 (grant in Surveyor-General's office; production required); 1875, Vance v. Kohlberg, 50 Cal. 346, 349 (articles of consolidation filed by copy; certified copy sufficient without producing original); 1877, People v. Hagar, 52 Cal. 171, 173, 186 (certified copy of petition for reclamation, to the Board of Supervisors; original not required; same, for the register's notice thereof to the county-recorder); 1883, People v. Williams, 64 Cal. 87, 91 (certificate of U. S. census officer to contents, received, without producing original records);
Connecticut: 1841, Price v. Lyon, 14 Conn. 279, 290 (certificate of membership lodged with clerk of ecclesiastical society; production not required);
Illinois: 1884, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Shires, 108 Ill. 617, 623 (ordinance of city in Indiana; production of original not required); 1909, Chicago v. Mandel, 239 Ill. 559, 88 N. E. 226 (reports of the South Park Commissioners held not provable by printed copy without accounting for the originals; unsound; no authority cited);
Indiana: 1864, Wells v. State, 22 Ind. 241, 243 (books of county auditor; originals need not be produced); 1881, Waymire v. State, 80 Ind. 67, 69 (constable's bond; original not required);
Iowa: 1871, Bellows v. Todd, 34 Ia. 18, 26 (letters on file in the land-office; copies sufficient); 1878, Morrison v. Cond, 49 Ia. 571, 573 (contract not required to be filed; statute not applicable); 1889, Lyons v. Van Gorder, 77 Ia. 600, 601, 42 N. W. 500 (assessment of damages recorded with town-clerk; original accounted for); 1899, McPeek v. Tel. Co., 107 Ia. 356, 78 N. W. 63 (governor's proclamation of reward; original not required);
Kansas: 1895, Bowersock v. Adam, 55 Kan. 681, 41 Pac. 971 (statements of personal property for taxation; production not required, under Code § 372, unless proponent had control); 1906, State v. Nippert, 74 Kan. 373, 86 Pac. 478 (Federal revenue collector's records, proved by examined copy); 1906, State v. Schaeffer, 74 Kan. 390, 86 Pac. 477 (similar);
Louisiana: 1845, White v. Kearney, 9 Rob. 495, 499 (clearance and manifest of vessel at custom-house, not an official document);
Maine: 1881, State v. Wiggin, 72 Me. 425 (internal revenue record-book provable by certified copy); 1898, State v. Howard, 91 Me. 396, 40 Atl. 65 (records in U. S. tax-collector's office, provable by copy);
Michigan: 1876, Pierce v. Rehfuss, 35 Mich. 53 (bill of sale lawfully filed with town-clerk, provable by certified copy); 1895, People v. Clarke, 105 Mich. 169, 62 N. W. 1117 (election returns; loss shown); 1898, Deerfield Tp. v. Harper, 115 Mich. 678, 74 N. W. 207 (return of highway-taxes filed with supervisor; production required);
Mississippi: 1849, Routh v. Bank, 12 Sm. & M. 161, 185 (power of attorney authorized by Louisiana law to be kept on deposit by notary; certified copy admitted); 1855, James v. Kirk, 29 Miss. 206, 210 (same, bill of sale);
Missouri: 1823, Chouteau v. Chevalier, 1 Mo. 343 (marriage-contract deposited by Spanish custom among government archives, provable by copy); 1851, Harvey v. Chouteau, 14 Mo. 587, 597 (will codicil required by Louisiana law to be kept by notary, provable by copy); 1887, State v. Pagels, 92 Mo. 300, 310 (Illinois insane-hospital books not shown to be public); 1897, Carter v. Hornback, 139 Mo. 238, 40 S. W. 893 (a survey not official, and therefore not entitled to record; copy excluded);
New Hampshire: 1843, Woods v. Banks, 14 N. H. 101, 109 (proprietary records need not be produced); 1850, Forsaith v. Clark, 21 N. H. 409, 419 (proprietary character recorded; production not required); 1857, Willey v. Portsmouth, 35 N. H. 303, 309 (town records; production not required); 1858, Ferguson v. Clifford, 37 N. H. 86, 95 ("Books or records of this character [i.e. official registers or books kept by persons in public office], being themselves evidence, and being usually restricted to a particular custody, their contents may be proved by an immediate copy"); 1895, State v. Collins, 68 N. H. 299, 44 Atl. 495 (U. S. internal revenue collector's records, provable by copy);
New York: 1831, Jackson v. Leggett, 7 Wend. 377 (original certificate of incorporation of a society must be produced);
Ohio: 1840, Sheldon v. Coates, 10 Oh. 278, 282 (tax records; original not required);
North Carolina: 1816, Teil v. Roberts, 3 Hayw. 138, semble (postmasters' valuations, in the hands of the postmaster-general; production not required); 1817, Denton v. Foute, 4 Hayw. 73 (enlistment-contract of a soldier, kept at the Adjutant-General's and present subject have for their chief purpose (as noted in the ensuing section) to authorize custodians to give certified copies which shall be receivable in spite of the Hearsay rule, and so a statute authorizing the use of a certified copy of a given document will still leave in force the common-law principle on the present subject; so that the document may be proved by an examined copy without production.[4]

§ 1220. Same: Specific Instances, under Statutes. In a vast number of instances, statutes have expressly provided that specific documents in official custody may be proved without production, i.e. by copy. In many jurisdictions a general rule has by statute been enacted, making the same provision in general terms for official documents as a class.[1] These statutes, however, usually do no more, as regards the present principle, than the Courts would otherwise have done under the common-law principle; the chief object of such statutes being usually to amplify the common-law exception to the Hearsay rule by which certified copies by official custodians may become admissible.

§ 1221. Same: Exceptions at Common Law. (1) There was no exception to the general principle at common law for a case where the official document happened to be actually in court; i.e. it could still be proved by copy.[1] the Treasury; production not required); Pennsylvania: 1823, Kingston v. Lesley, 10 S. & R. 383, 387 (copy of official list in land-office; original not required); 1832, Oliphant v. Ferrant, 1 Watts 57 (statute applied to admit copies of land-office blotters); 1852, Strimpfler v. Roberts, 18 Pa. 283, 297 (same); Tennessee: 1869, Reeves v. State, 7 Coldw. 96 (account for expenses of taking escaped prisoner filed with Comptroller; production of original not required, as an official paper, in showing amount of money received by accountant; otherwise if a charge of forgery or perjury was based on the paper); 1879, Amis v. Marks, 3 Lea 568, 569, semble (constable's bond offered by certified copy; original must be accounted for);

Texas: 1853, Coons v. Renick, 11 Tex. 134, 136 (contract for military stores, filed in quartermaster's office; original not required); 1860, Dikes v. Miller, 25 Tex. (Suppl.) 281, 284, 290 (title-document filed in land-office, provable by copy, because irremovable though not lawfully filed); 1860, Highsmith v. State, 25 Tex. 137, 139 (account of assessor, etc., not lawfully a record of the Comptroller's office, not provable by copy);
Vermont: 1862, Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 57, 59, 67 (recorded appointment of deputy-sheriff; original not required); 1887, State v. Spaulding, 60 Vt. 228, 233, 14 Atl. 769 (internal-revenue record-book, provable by copy); 1898, State v. White, 70 Vt. 225, 39 Atl. 1085 (records in U. S. tax-collector's office, provable by copy); 1906, Clement v. Graham, 78 Vt. 290, 63 Atl. 146 (State auditor's vouchers, filed in his office, held to be of a public nature).

[4] 1882, Shutesbury v. Hadley, 133 Mass. 242 (copy of a public marriage register sufficient, where the place of residence of parties was to be shown by the record, although a statute authorizing copies spoke only of using them to show the fact of marriage).

Contra: 1889, Martin v. Hall, 72 Ala. 587 (official bond filed; proof of original's loss, etc., required for the use of any but duly certified copy; this seems unsound).

Compare the cases for recorded deeds (post, § 1225); and the rule as between different kinds of copies (post, §§ 1269, 1273).

§ 1220. [1] To save repetition, such statutes are collected under that subject, post, § 1680, since by one and the same enactment they exempt from producing the original (applying the present principle) and also admit certified copies (applying the Hearsay exception). Sometimes the statute distinctly repudiates the application of the present principle, by requiring the original to be accounted for before copies can be used. A few classes of statutes, however, will be found under the following heads: (a) a few in which the document is treated as of the nature of a judicial record (e.g. a probate bond filed) have been mentioned ante, § 1215; (b) those providing for the proof of a recorded conveyance are specially dealt with post, § 1225; (c) those providing for Government land-grants are placed post, § 1239.

§ 1221. [1] 1798, Marsh v. Collnett, 2 Esp. 665 (to prove transfer of stock, a copy of the

(2) There was no exception for an issue of 'non est factum',[2] as there was (ante, § 1216) for 'nul tiel record.'

§ 1222. Same: Discriminations. (1) Whether a certified or other copy by an official not testifying in court may be used, instead of an examined or sworn copy by a witness testifying on the stand, is a question of the exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1677). (2) Whether a certified or an examined copy is preferred to oral testimony is a question of Preferred Testimony (post, §§ 1267–1275). (3) Whether an official land-title record, or the like, should be produced, depends often on whether by the land-law the official record or the official certificate issued to the owner is regarded as the investitive and original document of title (post, § 1239); this question being determined, the principles of the present subject and of deed-registration (post, § 1224) then control the result. (4) Whether a public document is forbidden to be proved, either by original or by copy, because of a privilege of official secrecy, involves other principles (post, §§ 2182, 2367).

§ 1223. (7) Private Books of Public Importance (Banks, Corporations, Title-Abstracts, Marriage-Registers, etc.). Where private documents are in such general and constant use and importance that their liability to removal for production as evidence would cause not merely individual but general inconvenience, there is ground for applying the reasons of the preceding two rules of exemption and for allowing such documents to be proved without production. No such broad principle was established by the common law;[1] but some instances were recognized in which the germ of such a principle is contained; and in a few other specific instances it has been recognized by statute:

1840, ALDERSON, B., in Mortimer v. McCallan, 6 M. & W. 58, 67: "Then if they are not removable, on the ground of public inconvenience, that is upon the same footing in point of principle as in the case of that which is not removable by the physical nature of the thing itself. . . . The necessity of the case in the one instance, and in the other case the general public inconvenience which would follow from the books being removed, supplies the reason of the rule."

1878, CAMPBELL, C. J., in People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328, 331, 1 N. W. 1027: "Banks are subject to the performance of duties to the public which might be seriously interfered with if they were compelled to carry the books needed in their business into every court or tribunal where testimony is to be introduced concerning them. Books belonging in public offices cannot be removed from their legal custody without some strong necessity for their production. While bank-books are not public to the same extent, yet the business transfer taken from the Bank-books was received, though the books themselves were in court; Lord Kenyon, C. J., said "they were public books, which public convenience required should not be removed from place to place; and, though the books were in court, he would not, for the sake of example, break in upon a rule founded on that principle of public convenience").

Contra: 1818, Butler v. Carver, 2 Stark. 434 (where the witness produces the document in court, a copy is not allowed).

[2] 1843, Treasurers v. Witsall, 1 Speer S. C. 220, 221 (sheriff's bond; plea, 'non est factum'; certified copy sufficient).

§ 1223. [1] 1855, Pollock, C. B., in Boyle v. Wiseman, 10 Exch. 647, 654, suggested that there might be a like rule, in the case of "documents which though of a private nature are meant to be made public, such as commercial instruments", etc., as for public documents in the strict sense, e.g. court records; but he gives no reason for his view.

which the corporations are required to transact cannot be done unless the books are usually preserved where they belong. The blotter . . . must be in constant demand, and we see no reason why its contents may not be shown without production of the original, in ordinary cases, where no question of genuineness is likely to arise requiring a personal inspection."

Thus, at common law in England, the books of the Bank of England (legally a private institution) were not required to be produced; [2] and the same principle was applied to the books of the old East India Company; [3] and occasionally to other documents.[4]

In Canada and the United States, the principle has been applied to banks in a few instances at common law,[5] and in other instances by statute; [6] and also, by statute, to unofficial marriage-registers,[7] to abstracts of title privately owned but generally consulted,[8] and to specific kinds of privately-owned records in various occupations.[9]

[2] 1840, Mortimer v. M'Callan. 6 M. & W. 58, 67 (writing in the books of the Bank of England; copy receivable, since "the removal of them would be so inconvenient"; "the public inconvenience" as a principle "has been adopted in a variety of cases, and has never been questioned since").

So now, by statute, to all bankers' books: St. 1879, c. 11, §§ 3, 6, Bankers' Books Evidence Act (banker's book-entry provable by copy, verified on the stand or by affidavit; unless Court orders production); 1892, Parnell v. Wood, Prob. 137 ("The Act was passed mainly for the relief of bankers, to avoid the serious inconvenience occasioned to them by their having to produce books which were in constant use in their business").

[3] 1702, Geery v. Hopkins, 2 Ld. Raym. 851 (the cash-book of "the old East India Company", required to be produced); 1775, Trial of Maharajah Nundocomar, 20 How. St. Tr. 1057 (Council proceedings of the East India Company, provable by copy, because "the bringing the books and papers may subject them to the hazard of being lost and may impede the business"); 1771, Wynne v. Middleton, cited in 2 Dougl. 593 (transfer-books of the East India Company; Lord Mansfield, C. J., said "that the reason 'ab inconvenienti', for holding it not necessary to produce records, applied with still greater force to such public books as the transfer books of the E. I. Co.; for the utmost confusion would occur if they could be transported to any the most distant part of the kingdom whenever their contents should be thought material on the trial of a cause"); 1844, Parke, B., in Doe v. Roberts, 13 M. & W. 520, 532 (provable by copy).

[4] 1724, Downes v. Mooreman, Bunbury 189, 191 (copy of an old contract in the Bodleian Library of Oxford; the University statutes prohibited the taking out of books; the copy allowed "upon the very particular circumstances of this case").

[5] 1845, Crawford v. Branch Bank, 8 Ala. 79 (books of the State bank need not be produced); 1878, People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 328 (see quotation supra).

[6] Can. Newf. Con. St. 1916, c. 92, § 3 (bankers' books, provable by copy, on certain conditions); U. S. Kan. Gen. St. 1915, § 7288 (books of account "kept without the county"; quoted ante, § 1213); Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 77 (domestic bank's, etc., books, provable by affidavit copy of bank custodian); Pa. St. 1883, June 22, Dig. 1920, § 10343 ("verified" copies of bank-book entries, receivable where bank is not a party, unless against affidavit of injustice); Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4189 b (bank-books provable, apart from special order, by copy sworn to by an officer of the bank on the stand or by affidavit; the original to be open to the inspection of the party); 1918, Merkel v. State, 167 Wis. 512, 167 N. W. 802 (Stats. § 4189 b applied).

[7] These statutes, which also make a certain kind of copy admissible, have been collected in one place, post, § 1683; the statutes for public registers are placed post, § 1680. There is even a common-law ruling: 1814, Stoever v. Whitman, 6 Binn. 416 (church-register allowed to be proved by sworn copy, as a "common-law proof").

[8] These statutes are collected in one place, post, § 1705.

[9] Can. N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 99, § 204 (minutes of railway corporation's meetings, provable by secretary's certified copy); § 214 (so for bylaws, etc.); U. S. Ida. St. 1913, c. 27, p. 126, § 6 (carriers of liquor; record required by law to be kept is provable by agent's copy); Ind. Burns Ann. St. 1914, § 4162 (camp-meeting corporation's records, provable by secretary's certified copy); §§ 5771, 5794 (records of telegraph and telephone companies, provable by attested copy, "when the interests of said corporation are concerned"); La. Ann. Rev. St. 1915, § 694 (books and records of railroad companies, provable by

In some jurisdictions, a statute of questionable policy has applied the rule to corporation-books.[10] This line of discrimination is both unsound and unfair. That a business is managed by corporate powers, or that it is extensive and wealthy, is no reason for distinction. It is just as inconvenient for the poor man or for the individual merchant to carry off his account-books into court; and he can even less afford to suffer it. These statutes miss the real point of the rule. It implies two circumstances, namely, the frequency of litigation involving such documents, and the consequent demand for them in court by litigant third persons or opponents. Such conditions exist for the books of a business of banking, of transportation (by rail or by express), of insurance, of communication (by telegraph or by telephone), and of a few others. But they have no relation to the corporate organization of the business, or to the relative size of it. They aim merely to protect a business which is liable to be called upon in an inordinate degree to make that contribution to justice which every citizen must make as a witness when needed (post, § 2192).

If then any further concession can properly be made to personal convenience, by exempting from production the account-books of an ordinary business, secretary's certified copy under corporate seal); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 11232 (corporation for treating disease); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 13605 (workmen's compensation; records of "every hospital or other person" furnishing medical treatment to employee, provable by certified copy); N. Y. C. P. A. 1920, § 412 (records of a "public hospital" showing condition or treatment of a patient, are provable by copy, unless Court orders production of original); R. I. Gen. L. 1913, c. 292, § 48 (newspapers deposited with R. I. Historical Society, provable by certified copy); Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4182 a (certain insurance companies' books, not required to be produced, except by special order).

[10] CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 145, §§ 24, 28 (corporation documents or book-entries; cited post, § 1680); B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 32 (like Dom. R. S.); Man. St. R. S. 1913, c. 65, § 15 (like Dom. R. S.); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 11 (like Dom. R. S.); Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 26 (documents and books of "any corporation created by charter or statute in this province" are provable by certified copy); Yukon: Cons. Ord. 1914, 30, § 11 (like Dom. R. S.).

UNITED STATES: Ga. Code 1910, § 5823 (domestic corporation's books, provable without production, by chief officer's certified copy); 1900, Maynard v. Interstate B. & L. Assoc., 112 Ga. 443, 37 S. E. 741 (statute applied); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 15 (papers and records of "any corporation or incorporated association", provable by certified copy of clerk, etc., under corporate seal, if any); 1895, Mandel v. Swan L. C. Co., 154 Ill. 177, 189, 40 N. E. 462 (certain corporate records, etc. held not properly proved under this statute by copies in a deposition); 1904, Chicago, W. & V. C. Co. v. Moran, 210 Ill. 9, 71 N. E. 38 (contract between a miners' union and a coal company, held not properly proved under § 18 of the above statute by a sworn copy without seal); 1905, Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Weber, 219 Ill. 372, 71 N. E. 489 (a lease of the defendant railroad's entire property, evidenced by a copy certified by its secretary under corporate sale, held to be a "paper", under § 15 of the above statute); Ind. Burns Ann. St. 1914, § 489 ("acts and proceedings of corporations", provable by sworn copy); Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 51, § 22 (corporation-books, semble, may be proved by copy); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 9773 (domestic corporation's records and papers on file, provable by certified copy); Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 5417 (copy receivable "when the original is a record or other document in the custody of a public officer, or officer of a corporation"); Pa. St. 1897, May 25, Dig. 1920, § 18557, § 1 (quoted post, § 1519); Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, § 5569 (in actions between corporations and their stockholders, books are provable by secretary's certified copy); 1900, Page v. Knights & Ladies, — Tenn. —, 61 S. W. 1068 (corporation books of a benefit society; originals required, except that as between stockholders and the corporation a copy certified under seal by the secretary suffices, under Code § 5569).

One Court seems to have reached the result at common law: 1858, Madison D. & P. R. Co. v. Whitesel, 11 Ind. 55, 57 (record-books of corporations, not required to be produced); 1862, Evans v. Turnpike Co., 18 Ind. 101, 103 (articles of association of turnpike company; original required); 1873, King v. Ins. Co., 45 Ind. 43, 59 (like 11 id. 55, supra).

it should be made without discrimination. There is already, in Canada, a class of statutes which avoid that objectionable feature.[11] As a progressive measure, the best rule would be one which left the general principle, in its application in a given case, to the trial Court's discretion.

§ 1224. (8) Recorded Conveyances; General Principle; Four Forms of Rule. That a deed has been lawfully recorded is of itself no reason why the ordinary rule of production should not apply where the deed's contents are to be proved. The deed, after being recorded, is returned to the grantee or other party entitled to its possession, and does not become a part of the official files so as to be affected by the principle of either of the two preceding exemptions (§§ 1218, 1223); so that, apart from other special considerations, the party offering to prove the deed's contents should either produce it or account for its absence by some one of the ordinary excuses for non-production. Such special considerations, however, in many jurisdictions, have long been acknowledged — at common law and apart from express statutory provisions — to apply to the case of a recorded conveyance.

In England, it is not entirely clear whether these considerations were ever recognized. There existed only limited provisions for the public recording of conveyances; one of these covered the old method of transfer by "bargain and sale";[1] the other consisted of a group of special statutes providing a recording system for specific districts, notably Middlesex and Yorkshire counties.[2] These statutes did not expressly provide that proof might be made without production of the original conveyances; and the precedents, being complicated by the consideration whether under the Hearsay rule the recorder's or register's certified copies were receivable (post, § 1650), do not indicate a final settlement of the principle; although there was apparently at one time a regular practice of not requiring production,[3] and the tradition to the same effect in the southeastern colonies is strongly corroborative of this practice.

[11] Alta. St. 1910, 2d Sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, § 50 (like Ont. R. St. 1914); B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 46 (commercial documents; like Ont. Rev. St. 1914, substituting 5 and 3 days' notice); Man. Rev. St. 1913, c. 65, §§ 27, 28 (substantially like Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 73, § 51, substituting three days for the counter-notice); Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 49 ("telegrams, letters, shipping-bills, bills of lading, delivery orders, receipts, accounts, and other written instruments used in business and other transactions" are provable by copy, on ten days' notice before trial to the opponent; unless the opponent, within four days after the time mentioned in the notice offering opportunity of inspection, gives notice of intention to dispute the correctness or genuineness of the copy and to "require proof of the original"); P. E. I. St. 1889, § 48 (like Ont. R. S. 1897, c. 73, § 51; but allowing only three days for the opponent to demand the original); Sask. R. S. 1920, c. 44, § 26 (like Ont. R. St. 1914).

§ 1224. [1] See post, § 1650, for these statutes.

[2] See post, § 1650.

[3] 1593, Wymark's Case, 5 Co. Rep. 75 ("Although a deed be enrolled in court, one cannot plead it in the same court without shewing it"; but otherwise of letters patent); 1613, Read v. Hide, 3 Co. Inst. 173, semble (deed-enrolled may be proved by exemplified copy of enrolment; see quotation post, § 1682); 1684, Lady Ivy's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 555, 595 (deed enrolled, proved by examined copy); 1694, Smart v. Williams, Comb. 247 ("they held a sworn copy of a deed enrolled good evidence"); 1696, Lynch v. Clerke, 3 Salk. 154 (Holt, C. J.: "Wherever an original is of a public nature, and would be evidence if produced, an immediate sworn copy thereof will be evidence; as, the copy of a bargain and sale or of a deed enrolled, of a church register,

In the United States, three kinds of results were evolved at common law; a fourth kind was added by statutory invention; and statutes also in many jurisdictions followed one or another of the common-law methods:[4]

(a) By one of these views (originating in the southeastern States) the statutory system of public registration is thought to imply, in its policy, a general resort to the public record as a source of proof, and, for the sake of public convenience, a general dispensation from the necessity of preserving as a muniment of title a class of documents whose legal importance is comparatively little apart from the record. Thus, the registration system implies that the original deed need not be produced nor accounted for in any way:

1825, COLCOCK, J., in Peay v. Picket, 3 McCord 318, 321: "From the earliest enactments of the British Parliament on this subject, to the present day, a period of about 280 years, it has been the established law of that country that a copy of a deed duly enrolled is as good evidence as the original itself; and I think I do not say too much when I assert that it was generally considered to be the law of this land from the first enactment on the same subject here, in 1731, to the decision of Purris v. Robinson, a decision much to be regretted."

1831, STORY, J., in Doe v. Winn, 5 Pet. 233, 241: "We think it clear that by the common law, as held for a long period, an exemplification of a public grant under the Great Seal is admissible in evidence, as being record proof of as high a nature as the original. . . . There was in former times a technical distinction existing on this subject which deserves notice. As evidence, such exemplifications of letters patent seem to have been generally deemed admissible. But where, in pleading, a profert was made of letters patent, there, upon the principles of pleading, the original under the Great Seal was required to be produced, for a profert could not be made of any copy or exemplification. It was to cure this difficulty that the statutes of 3 Edw. VI, c. 4, and 13 Eliz. c. 6, were passed, by which patentees and all claiming under them were enabled to make title in pleading by showing forth an exemplification of the letters patent as if the original were pleaded and set forth. These statutes, being passed before the emigration of our ancestors, being applicable to our situation, and in amendment of the law, constitute a part of our common law. A similar effect was given etc."); ante 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 252 (an enrolment of a patent in the same court need not be proffered, though a deed enrolled must be, for the Court will take notice of the former public act, though not of the latter public act; but "by 10 Anne., c. 18, where any bargain and sale inrolled is pleaded with a profert, the party [offering it], to answer such profert, may produce a copy of the inrolment"); 1797, Molton v. Harris, 2 Esp. 549 (deed in opponent's hands: no notice being given, the "memorial of the conveyance" was excluded); 1826, Doe v. Kilner, 2 C. & P. 289 (after proof of loss of deed registered in Middlesex, examined copies from the registry were admitted); 1838, Collins v. Maule, 8 C. & P. 502 (Middlesex registry; a deed being shown lost, an examined copy of the registry was received); 1828, Rowe v. Brenton, 8 B. & C. 737, 755 (lease of land in duchy of Cornwall, the fee of which was alternately in the Duke and in the Crown; the enrolled record was clearly sufficient for a Crown lease, "because the Crown can only grant by matter of record"; the lease here was by a clause required to be enrolled; held, that the original need not be produced; Bayley, B.: "There is a regular office and an auditor for managing these matters, whose duty it is to enrol authentic documents only"); 1844, Doe v. Roberts, 13 M. & W. 520, 530 (enrolled leases of Crown lands in Wales, held provable by examined copies, on the ground that "the original documents . . . are kept among the muniments of the Crown" and could not be removed).

Compare the English precedents as to certified copies (post, § 1650).

[4] The earliest statutes appear to have been those of New Jersey in 1713, of Pennsylvania in 1715, and of South Carolina in 1731. Compare the history of the record system as further examined under the doctrine of certified copies (post, § 1651) by the statute of 10 Anne, c. 18, to copies of deeds of bargain and sale, enrolled under the statute of Henry VIII, when offered by way of profert in pleading; and since that period a copy of the enrolment of a bargain and sale is held as good evidence as the original itself. Such, then, being the rule of evidence of the common law in regard to exemplifications under the Great Seal of public grants, the application of it to the case now at bar will be at once perceived, since by the laws of Georgia all public grants are required to be recorded in the proper State department."

(b) By another view, chiefly represented in New England and in the States about the Ohio River (and appearing about the same time in all), the result was based on the change of custom naturally introduced into the practice for title-deeds by the registration system. The continuous handing down of prior title-deeds to each successive grantee becomes no longer necessary, and each grantee keeps his own deed and receives no prior ones. Thus, the only person who may fairly be supposed to possess a deed is the grantee; and hence it is only deeds in which the grantee is either the proponent or the opponent in the trial that can be assumed to be in either party's possession, since the prior ones are in prior grantees' hands and are likely to be no longer in existence as not being of importance:

1828, Per CURIAM, in Eaton v. Campbell, 7 Pick. 10: "In England, on the conveyance of land, all the title-deeds are delivered to the purchaser, and it is reasonable to require him to produce the original deed given to a prior grantee. . . . [But] here the grantee takes only the immediate deed to himself, relying on the covenants of his grantor; he has no right to the possession of all the title-deeds of the estate; and to require him to produce all the original deeds for 20 years or more, and to bring in the subscribing witnesses, would be unreasonable and oppressive."

1854, SHAW, C. J., in Com. v. Emery, 2 Gray 80: "In all cases original deeds should be required if they can be had; but as this would be burdensome and expensive, if not impossible in many cases, some relaxation of this rule was necessary for practical purposes. . . . Our system of conveyancing, modified by the registry law, is that each grantee retains the deed made immediately to himself, to enable him to make good his warranties. Succeeding grantees do not, as a matter of course, take possession of deeds made to preceding parties so as to be able to prove a chain of title by a series of original deeds. Every grantee, therefore, is the keeper of his own deed, and of his own deed only. . . . When, then, he has occasion to prove any fact by such deed, he cannot use a copy, because it would be offering inferior evidence, when in theory of law a superior is in his possession or power; it is only on proof of the loss of the original, in such case, that any secondary evidence can be received. . . . [So also even where the opponent is the grantee of the deed, i.e.] where such original is in theory of law in possession of the adverse party, because upon notice the adverse party is bound to produce it", or allow secondary evidence.

1856, STORRS, J., in Bolton v. Cummings, 25 Conn. 410, 421: "In view of this practice [for every grantee to retain his own title-deeds], which would oftentimes render it extremely inconvenient to produce remote original title-deeds of lands, and of the provisions of our registry-system, which require those deeds to be recorded and upon official copies of the records of which reliance may safely be placed as to the contents of those deeds, our Courts have departed from the common-law rule in regard to the admission of secondary evidence of their contents, and held that where a conveyance of real estate which is required to be recorded is to a person not a party to the suit, it is competent, and sufficient in the first instance, to prove the contents of it by a copy certified by the recording officer, without laying a foundation for such proof by first accounting for the non-production of the original."

In strictness, it will be noted, this reasoning would exempt from producing only the prior title-deeds in the proponent's chain of title. The case of a collateral and accessible grantee — for example, in an action for rent against a tenant evicted by superior title, the deed of the grantee-evictor, desired to be proved by the tenant — is not covered; but in most of those jurisdictions the principle was extended to it; so that the rule became, not only that he was exempted from producing all prior deeds in his own chain of title, but from producing any deeds whatever not presumably in possession of a party to the suit.

(c) By a third view (obtaining perhaps in the greater number of jurisdictions until statutes intervened), neither the policy of the registry system nor the practices it encouraged were regarded as justifying any exemption from the ordinary rule that the deed must be produced or accounted for. The recorded deed must be accounted for like any other:

1795, WATIES, J., in Purvis v. Robinson, 1 Bay S. C. 493, 494: "If, by recording a deed, the necessity of producing it was dispensed with, then the proof of its validity would rest on the ex parte oath of one of the subscribing witnesses before any justice of the peace and without any examination. It would be very easy by this means to conceal, under the fair dress of a record, the foulest features of fraud manifest on the face of the original, and to give even to a forged deed all the effects of a valid one."

(d) The fourth type of rule (entirely statutory) exhibits a number of minor varieties; but its substance is that the proponent may proceed without production if he first proves (often by affidavit) that the deed in question is "not within his possession or control." This rule falls short of the strict one last mentioned, in that the deed might be in the opponent's possession or in a third person's possession, and yet the proponent need make no effort to obtain it. The rule differs, too, from the second one above mentioned, in that for a non-grantee as proponent it is stricter, since he must at least make some proof that he has not control, while by the second rule this appears from the nature of the deed as alleged. The rule is, however, easier (than the second rule) for a grantee as proponent, since the proof that it is not in his "possession or control" may fall short of the proof by ordinary common-law rules that would be required of the grantee-proponent under the second rule. Furthermore, it is easier in that it does not require steps to be taken for production where the deed is in the opponent's possession (except by some statutes requiring prior notice). By one variety of this fourth form, the proponent is to show that the deed is "lost or out of his power." By another variety, he is to give notice a certain time beforehand that he intends to use a copy. Statutory enactments other than those taking the fourth form, or some variety of it, have usually adopted the first, i.e. in allowing unconditionally the use of a copy of the record without producing or accounting for the original.

§ 1225. Same: Statutes and Decisions.[1] The law to-day is in some juris-

§ 1225. [1] The limitations of the following collections of decisions and statutes are above-noted in the text; these same statutes, however, are also to be consulted elsewhere in their bearings on other principles, particularly the kind of officer certifying copies and the mode of certifying by seal, etc. (post, § 1651), and the necessity of notice to the opponent before using copies (post, § 1859*f*):

ENGLAND: the decisions have been collected ante, § 1224; the statutes are placed post, § 1650.

CANADA: Dominion: R. S. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act § 27 (similar to Ont. R. S. 1914, c. 76, §§ 33, 34).

Alberta: St. 1906, c. 24, § 17 (land-titles; quoted post, § 1651).

British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 127, § 145 (registrar's certified copy of any recorded instrument, except a will, may be used "in the absence of the original when the absence of such original is duly accounted for, and if produced by a party not having the control of the original"); c. 78, § 38 (like Ont. R. S. c. 76, §§ 33, 34); c. 78, § 44 (instrument kept or registered in a land office or registry of a county or the Supreme Court; certified copy shall be evidence "of the original"); c. 127, § 147 (the land registrar's certified copies of "any instruments affecting land which may be deposited, kept, filed, or registered in his office", and affecting land in his district, are admissible "as 'prima facie' evidence of the document of which it purports to be a copy, without proof of the signature or seal of such registrar"); c. 192, § 29 (registered declaration of quieted title; quoted post, § 1681); 1899, Pavier v. Snow, 7 Br. C. 81 (instruments recorded under c. 135, § 94, are admissible under § 98, without proof of loss of original).

Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 171, § 169, Real Property Act (a certificate of land title, or any instrument deposited or registered in such office, is provable by certified copy "as if the original within such office was produced"); c. 172, § 51, Registry Act (certified copy of a registered instrument, except crown grants, orders in council, mechanics' lien claims, and notices, etc., under a mortgage power of sale, shall be "'prima facie' evidence of the contents and execution of the original", "in case of loss, destruction, or obliteration, or partial destruction or obliteration of the original"; compare the statutes cited post, § 1651); c. 17, § 19 (bill of sale or mortgage of chattels; clerk's certified copy to be evidence of registration only); c. 65, § 18 (Quebec notarial instruments; like Ont. R. S. c. 76, §§ 33, 34).

New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 33 (Crown grants before the erection of the Province are provable "as hereinbefore provided"; compare post, § 1680); § 48 (deed or will registered in the sheriff-court books of Scotland is provable by certified copy, etc.); § 49 (Quebec notarial instruments; like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 33); § 69 (filed notice of sale under mortgage power of sale; certified copy admissible, on notice as in § 64, and an affidavit that the original is on file or that it is "not in the possession of the person offering the same, his agent or attorney, and that he does not know where the same is to be found"); § 63 (duly registered instruments, other than wills, may be proved, "in the absence of the original instrument", by the registrar's certified copy, on affidavit "that such original is not under the control of the party, and that he does not know where the same may be found", and on six days' written notice to the opponent with a copy of the copy and affidavit); § 64 (when the offering party "resides out of the province, or at the time of the making of the affidavit is without the province", his agent or attorney may make affidavit that the party is non-resident and that the affiant "has not the possession of the original instrument and does not know where the same is or may be found, and that he has reason to believe that such person has not the original instrument in his possession and does not know where the same is or may be found", and that he has not left to evade making affidavit, and, on six days' notice and service of a copy of the affidavit, a certified copy may be used); § 67 (no certified copy of any registered instruments shall be received unless the original, or a duplicate original, "is in the possession of the adverse party, and not in the possession of the party offering such evidence, and that due notice shall have been given to produce the same"); § 70 (instruments filed under the Bills of Sale Act of 1893 are provable by the registrar's certified copy, on affidavit that "such originals or a duplicate thereof are not under the control of the party", and after six days' notice to the opponent and service of a copy of the copy and the affidavit); c. 151, § 57, and St. 1920, c. 6, § 57 (registered title); 1883, McCormack v. McBride, 23 N. Br. 12 (three deeds; an affidavit that they were not under his control, etc., excluded; the affidavit should have said that neither was; Wetmore, J., diss.); 1886, Doe v. Kennedy, 26 N. Br. 83 88, 94 (the affidavit need not be of the party himself; Wetmore, J., diss.).

Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 91, § 22 (a "deed or document" duly registered may be proved by certified copy, if the original is "proved to be lost"); St. 1921, 12 Geo. V, c. 21, § 27 (recorded certificate of title quieted; copy admissible).

Northwest Territories (see also Dominion, supra): Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 43, § 30, c. 44, § 9 (mortgages and sales of chattels are provable by certified copy "as if the original instrument was produced").

Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 20 (crown grants provable, without production of the original, by certain certified copies); § 21 ("any deed, or any document from the books of registry" is provable by certified or examined copy, if it appears "by the affidavit of the party, his agent, or solicitor, that such original is not in the possession or under the control of the party, and that he is unable to procure the same"); § 24 ("every bill of sale or other document, filed in any registry of deeds, may be proved" by producing a certified copy); § 27 (Quebec notarial instruments; substantially like Ont. R. S. c. 76, §§ 33, 34); St. 1910, 10 Edw. VII, c. 28 (amending Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 27; cited more fully post, § 1651); 1904, Nova Scotia Steel Co. v. Bartlett, 35 Can. Sup. 527 (under N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 20, supra, a plan on file, referred to in a duplicate original grant, is not provable by certified copy; the ruling is a perverse one, for if the theory of substantive law sufficed to make the plan a part of the grant by reference, why could not the same theory make the statute admitting certified copies of the grant suffice also for the plan forming part of the grant?).

Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, §§ 33, 34 ("notarial act or instrument" in Quebec, filed, enrolled, or enregistered, is provable by notarial copy; compare the further quotation post, § 1651); § 46 (an "instrument or memorial" under the Registry Act is provable by certified copy); § 47 ("where it would be necessary to produce and prove an instrument or memorial" which has been registered in order to establish the contents, the foregoing certified copy may be used, on notice ten days before trial; unless the opponent within four days after receipt of notice gives notice that he "disputes its validity"); c. 122, § 2 (in completing contracts for the sale of land, "registered memorials of discharged mortgages" shall suffice without producing the originals, unless the former are shown inaccurate; and "the vendor shall not be bound to produce the mortgages unless they appear to be in his possession or power"; for other instruments, registered memorials twenty years old suffice, unless shown inaccurate, "if the memorials purport to be executed by the grantor, or in other cases, if possession has been consistent with the registered title"; the vendor "shall not be bound to produce the original instruments unless they appear to be in his possession or power; and the memorials shall be presumed to contain all the material contents of the instruments to which they relate"); c. 135, § 27 (chattel mortgage or sale filed; certified copy shall be received, but only to prove the fact of filing).

Prince Edward Island: St. 1889, § 42 (certified copy of a "deed or mortgage duly registered" is admissible if the Court is satisfied by the party's affidavit that the original "is not under his control, and that he does not know where the same may be found"); § 43 (seven days' notice must be given, with service of copies of the deed-copy and affidavit); § 44 (public lands commissioner's duplicate deed, provable on the same terms as in §§ 42, 43); § 45 (registered plan, provable like a deed); § 46 (Surrogate's registered license to sell real estate is provable by certified copy); § 49 (filed bill of sale or mortgage of chattels is provable by certified copy).

Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, c. 67, § 20 (land-titles; like Alb. St. 1906, c. 24, § 38); c. 44, Evidence Act, § 21 (any instrument filed or registered in a land registration office is provable by the land-register's certified copy); c. 44, § 18 (Quebec notarial acts; like Ont. R. S. c. 76, §§ 33, 34); c. 200, § 36 (chattel mortgages; like Yukon Consol. Ord. c. 7, § 30).

Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 7, § 30 (registered bills of sale and mortgages of personalty; the registration clerk's certified copy "shall be received as 'prima facie' evidence for all purposes as if the original instrument was produced"); c. 30, § 21 (copies of recorded deeds; quoted post, § 1651); ib. §§ 24, 26 (like N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, §§ 24, 26, for the Gold Commissioner's office).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1826, Brooks v. Marbury, 11 Wheat. 78, 82 (statute requiring record but not exempting from production of original; production required; decision by majority of the Court); 1826, Peltz v. Clark, 2 Cr. C. C. 703 (original need not be accounted for); 1830, Beall v. Dick, 4 id. 18 (same); 1831, Doe v. Winn, 5 Pet. 233, 241 (see quotation ante, § 1224; exemplification under the State seal of Georgia of a land-patent there recorded; production not required; Johnson, J., diss.); 1834, Dick v. Balch, 8 Pet. 30, 33 (production of original not necessary, where record is required, even though the statute does not make the copy evidence; here, the law of Maryland); 1835, Owings v. Hull, 9 Pet. 607, 625 (bill of sale required by Louisiana law to be kept by notary; production not required); 1860, Gregg v. Forsyth, 24 How. 179, 180 (original shown lost; copy allowed); 1901, Stout v. Rigney, 46 C. C. A. 459, 107 Fed. 545 (Missouri military-bounty land; see Mo., infra).

The following rulings deal with the assignment of a patent of invention; compare the citations under § 1657, post: 1844, Brooks v. Jenkins, 3 McL. 432, 436 (original not required, except the one under which party claims); 1848, Parker v. Haworth, 4 McL. 370 (original of first assignment not required); 1860, Lee v. Blandy, 1 Bond 361 (original of assignment to offeror, not required); 1893, Paine v. Trask, 5 U. S. App. 283, 286, 5 C. C. A. 497, 56 Fed. 233 (whether the original of a patent-assignment recorded must be accounted for; undecided); 1894, New York v. R. Co., 26 U. S. App. 7, 9 C. C. A. 336, 60 Fed. 1016 (original required); 1908, Eastern Dynamite Co. v. Keystone P. M. Co., C. C. N. D. Pa., 164 Fed. 47 (certified copy of record of an assignment of patent, the assignment having been acknowledged before a notary; original required).

Alabama: Code 1907, §§ 3374, 3360 (conveyances, etc., duly acknowledged or proved and recorded; "if it appears to the Court that the original conveyance has been lost or destroyed or that the party offering the transcript has not the custody or control thereof," a certified transcript is to be received); § 3395 (same for conditional sales of personalty); § 4000 ("If the original of any paper, properly registered, is lost or destroyed, a certified copy from the registry shall be deemed good secondary evidence"); St. 1911, No. 52, p. 31, Feb. 20, § 2 (certified transcript of recorded corporate conveyance, admissible if "the original conveyance has been lost or destroyed, or the party offering a transcript has not the custody or control thereof", unless the corporation is in possession and forgery is pleaded); 1831, Sommerville v. Stephenson, 3 Stew. 271, 277 (deed from opponent to offeror; production required, under the statute, which merely declared the common law); 1832, Mitchell v. Mitchell, 3 Stew. & P. 81, 84 (grantee offering; loss must be shown); 1839, Swift v. Fitzhugh, 9 Port. 39, 52, 57 (wife claiming under marriage settlement; original must be accounted for); 1844, Beall v. Dearing, 7 Ala. 124, 127 (purchaser at sheriff's sale; unrecorded deed to debtor, presumed not in purchaser's possession, on the facts); 1847, Thompson v. Ives, 11 Ala. 239, 243, semble (both parties claiming as vendee under execution against same person; neither party presumed to be in possession of deeds to debtor or his predecessor so that a copy could be used on notice to opponent); 1849, Potier v. Barclay, 15 Ala. 439, 441, 452 (dower; deed to plaintiff's husband; production by her required); 1855, Hussey v. Roquemore, 27 Ala. 281, 290 (grantee presumed to have possession; if he is a party, notice is necessary; here, not under the statute); 1859, Shorter v. Sheppard, 33 Ala. 648, 653½ (deed to plaintiff's grantor-debtor, presumed to have been carried off by him when fleeing the country); 1866, White v. Hutchings, 40 Ala. 253, 258 (deed to offeror's predecessor in title, more than 30 years before; presumed not in offeror's control); 1872, Jones v. Walker, 47 Ala. 174, 183 (deed to claimant's grantor; production not required); 1875, Hendon v. White, 52 Ala. 597, 600 (purchaser at execution; deed to debtor presumed not in his possession); 1883, Huckabee v. Shepherd, 75 Ala. 342, 344 (grantee offering; required to show the original unavailable); 1884, Beard v. Ryan, 78 Ala. 37, 43 (deeds to his grantor and predecessors, not presumed to be in offeror's possession); 1888, Allison v. Little, 85 Ala. 512, 516, 5 So. 221 (similar to White v. Hutchings); 1890, Florence L. M. & M. Co. v. Warren, 91 Ala. 533, 537, 9 So. 384 (creditor proving tax-deed to his debtor as grantee; presumption that it remained with grantee, so as to relieve creditor from "the duty of accounting for the original"); 1891, Jones v. Hagler, 95 Ala. 529, 532, 10 So. 345 (offeror of deed to his grantor; original not required, but after testimony that he had never had its control), 1895, Farrow v. R. Co., 109 Ala. 448, 453, 20 So. 303 (deed in chain of title and in offeror's possession; production required); 1895, King v. Scheuer, 105 Ala. 558, 16 So. 923 (original must be accounted for); 1896, Farrow v. R. Co., 109 Ala. 448, 20 So. 303 (statute applied, and original required to be accounted for); 1900, Burgess v. Blake, 128 Ala. 105, 28 So. 963 (following Farrow v. R. Co.); 1902, Hammond v. Blue, 132 id. 337, 31 So. 357 (proponent must show not only his non-possession but also his non-control of the original); 1914, Ballard v. Bank, 187 Ala. 335, 65 So. 356 (Code 1907, § 3374, as amended by Sp. Sess. St. 1909, p. 14).

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 525, 532, 534 (like Or. Laws 1920, §§ 9877, 9892, 9894); § 747 (mortgage of personalty; recorder's certified copy, admissible "if the original be lost or out of the power of the person wishing to use it").

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1743 ("Every instrument" permitted or required to be recorded with the county recorder is provable by the record or a certified copy "with the like effect as the original").

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 1531 (recorder's certified transcript of a duly recorded deed or other instrument affecting real estate, admissible, if the original appears to be "lost or not within the power and control of the party wishing to use the same"); § 1535 (duly recorded deeds of administrator, executor, guardian, commissioner in chancery, and sheriff; the original "or a certified copy thereof", admissible); § 7385 (chattel mortgages; recorder's certified copy admissible; but, if genuineness is questioned, recorder may produce original from his files); 1856, McNeill v. Arnold, 17 Ark. 154, 169, semble (production not required); 1856, Trammell v. Thurmond, 17 Ark. 206, 215 (production required, under territorial statute not expressly dispensing); 1860, Bright v. Pennywit, 21 Ark. 130, 133, 136 (deed to opponent; under the statute, offeror must show original not within his power or control; whether notice to produce must here also be given, undecided); 1885, Calloway v. Gibbins, 45 Ark. 81, 85 (unrecorded deed to offeror's predecessor; search held sufficient).

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1855 (the original of a writing must be produced, except "4. when the original has been recorded and a certified copy of the record is made evidence by this code or other statute"); § 1893 (certified copy of a "public writing", admissible "in like cases and with like effect as the original writing"); § 1951, as amended March 24, 1874 (certified copy of duly recorded instrument affecting realty "may also be read in evidence with the like effect as the original on proof, by affidavit or otherwise, that the original is not in the possession or under the control of the party producing the certified copy"); § 1951, as amended March 1, 1889 (so as to read: "be read in evidence with the like effect as the original instrument without further proof"); Civ. C. § 1207 (certain old defectively recorded instruments affecting realty, provable by certified copy); § 1855 a (records destroyed by public calamity; abstracts may be used without proof of destruction of original; cited more fully post, § 1705); Pol. C. 1872, § 4142 b (county recorder's certified copy of re-recorded instruments to replace lost or destroyed records, admissible); St. 1915, p. 1932, Nov. 3, No. 1049 (land-title registration: when an original certificate of registration is lost, and a certified copy has been issued to the owner, by court order, this certified copy becomes the muniment of title, in place of the original; hence, when a certified copy of the registrar's certificate is desired for use merely as evidence in court, and not for the above purpose, the registrar may issue it "upon receipt by him of an order therefor, made by the Court, provided that such certified copy shall have written or stamped across the face thereof the words 'for use as evidence only'"); § 41 (in every action involving land title, "the certificate of title of a registered owner shall be held in every court to be conclusive evidence, except as herein otherwise provided, that the registered owner has a good and valid title," etc.); § 48 (If a registered instrument "is forged, or executed by a person under legal disability, such registration shall be void; provided that the title of a registered owner, who has taken bona fide for a valuable consideration, shall not be affected by reason of claiming title through some one the registration of whose right was void as provided in this section"); § 52 (registrar's certified copy of all instruments etc. filed in office of registrar of titles "shall be received in all cases in place of the original, and as evidence shall have the same force and effect as the original instrument"); 1855, Ord v. McKee, 5 Cal. 515 (mortgage; original required; but whether the copy rejected was certified from a record does not appear); 1856, Macy v. Goodwin, 6 Cal. 579 (deed; a statute receiving a copy with like effect "as the originals could be if produced" does not dispense with production of the original); 1857, Gordon v. Searing, 8 Cal. 49 (deed; production required; here the plaintiff claimed under the grantee) 1859, Fallon v. Dougherty, 12 Cal. 104 (offeror of deed to predecessor; production required; search without showing his own lack of possession, insufficient); 1859, Skinker v. Flohr, 13 Cal. 638 (offeror not connected with deed as grantee may account for non-production by declaring it not within his control; under statute); 1862, Pierce v. Wallace, 18 Cal. 165, 170 (offeror of deed to predecessor; loss required to be shown by search among grantee's papers, etc.); 1862, Lawrence v. Fulton, 19 Cal. 683, 689 (offeror of deed to his grantor made affidavit of non-possession, but by other testimony made it probable that his grantor had it; held insufficient to exempt); 1864, Hicks v. Coleman, 25 Cal. 122, 129 (grantee offering deed; proof that it was lost or not in his control, held sufficient, under the statute); 1864, Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393, 413 (power of attorney, sufficiently shown "not under the control of the party"); 1864, Hurlbutt v. Butenop, 27 Cal. 50, 54 (offeror of deed to predecessor; that he had "never had control of the original deed and it was not then in his power or control", sufficient; proof of loss or search unnecessary); 1865, McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 Cal. 238, 243 (offeror of deed to grantor; under statutes of 1851 and 1860, original need not be shown out of offeror's control, or otherwise accounted for); 1866, Roberts v. Unger, 30 Cal. 676, 680 (offeror's grantor's claim and affidavit, under Possessory Act; certified copy received, on evidence of non-possession and search); 1866, Reading v. Mullen, 31 Cal. 104, 106 (married woman's recorded declaration as sole trader; production required); 1869, Garwood v. Hastings, 38 Cal. 216, 222 (certified copies receivable, on proof of "loss or inability of the party to produce the original"); 1869, Mayo v. Mazeaux, 38 Cal. 442, 449 (must be shown not under party's control); 1874, Canfield v. Thompson, 49 Cal. 210, 212 (certified copy of recorded deed, offered by successor of grantee, held "primary", under C. C. P. § 1893, i.e. semble, original need not be accounted for); 1875, Vance v. Kohlberg, 50 Cal. 346, 348 (certified copy of U. S. patent recorded in the county; original not required); 1877, People v. Hagar, 52 Cal. 171, 186 (certified copy of private writing, original not required; here, corporate by-laws); 1881, Gethin v. Walker, 59 Cal. 502, 506 (certified copy of deed to offeror; production not required); 1886, Brown v. Griffith, 70 Cal. 14, 11 Pac. 500 (comparison of C. C. P. §§ 1855, 1893, 1951; settled that a certified copy of a recorded deed, or the record of the deed, is receivable only after a showing that the original is not in the "possession or control" of the offeror, according to § 1951; Canfield v. Thompson cited as referring to transactions before the adoption of § 1951, intervening cases not cited); 1889, Marriner v. Dennison, 78 Cal. 202, 214, 20 Pac. 386 (preceding case approved); 1894, Green v. Green, 103 Cal. 108, 110, 37 Pac. 188 (original required to be accounted for); but now see the amendment of the Code by the statute of 1889, supra;

Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 4901 (recorded instrument not duly proved or acknowledged; certified copy may be "proved or acknowledged" with same effect as original, but "such certified copy so proved" is not admissible for any person "except upon satisfactory proof that the original thereof has been lost or destroyed, or is beyond his power to produce"); § 4903 (duly recorded instrument in writing, provable by the record or a transcript, "upon affidavit of the party desiring to use the same that the original thereof is not in his possession or power to produce"); § 8741 (recorder's certified copy of "all papers filed" and of records, admissible); § 5052 (certified copy of certificate of sale by trustee under trust deed, admissible); § 4907 (instruments affecting real estate in this State and executed before a notary in another U. S. State or Territory; [certified] copy admissible, "in case of the loss of the original"); § 5094 (chattel mortgages; county recorder's certified copy of record, admissible on affidavit that the original is lost or not in the power of the person to produce it); C. C. P. 391 (evidence of contents of a writing, "other than the writing", may be admitted "when the original has been recorded and a certified copy of the record is made evidence by statute"); 1874, Sullivan v. Hense, 2 Colo. 424, 432 (statute construed as to the affidavits necessary); 1889, Coleman v. Davis, 13 Colo. 98, 21 Pac. 1018 (proof of loss is not necessary; the statutory requirement suffices).

Columbia (District): Code 1919, § 1071 (duly recorded deed or other instrument, not testamentary, is provable by certified copy); § 519 ("the record or a copy thereof of any deed recorded", but defective, and covered by curative acts, is admissible).

Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 1306 (certified copy of recorded tax-collector's deed, admissible); § 319 (recorded survey-map, provable by town-clerk's certified copy); 1808, Talcott v. Goodwin, 3 Day 264 (production not required of deeds to predecessor-grantees; but required of grantees themselves, and here of the grantee's assignee in bankruptcy); 1814, Cunningham v. Tracy, 1 Conn. 252 (production by ordinary grantee of deeds to predecessor, not required, the custom having been for the grantee not to take his deed; but production required of deeds to the party himself, or, as here, to the ancestor of one claiming by inheritance); 1815, Phelps v. Foot, 1 Conn. 387, 390 (production by indorser of deed to maker of note, not required, as being "not in his power"); 1842, Clark v. Mix, 15 Conn. 152, 161, 174 (deed of personalty in probate records; production not required); 1847, Kelsey v. Hanmer, 18 Conn. 311, 318 (like Cunningham v. Tracy); 1856, Bolton v. Cummings, 25 Conn. 410, 421 (general rule as above; but also declaring production necessary for a deed to the opponent; see quotation ante, § 1224); 1902, Cunningham v. Cunningham, 75 Conn. 64, 52 Atl. 318 (certified copy of deed to defendant, admitted for plaintiff, there being no specific objection as to the non-production of the original).

Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 1388 (county deed-recorder's record, or certified copy, of any instrument authorized by law to be recorded, admissible); § 3215 (deeds of land: "the said record or an office copy thereof shall be sufficient evidence"); §§ 3202, 3203, 3213, 3214 (recorded deeds of trustees of married insane persons, and certain recorded deeds defectively acknowledged, provable by certified copy); § 3238 (recorded deed by foreign corporation of land in Delaware, provable by certified copy); § 3887 (recorded chancery bond etc., provable by certified copy "upon proof of loss of the original").

Florida: Const. 1887, Art. XVI, § 21 ("any deed or mortgage" is provable by certified copy of the record, "provided it be made to appear that the original is not within the custody or control of the party offering such copy"); Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2720 ("deed, conveyance paper, or instrument of writing", lawfully recorded in a public office of this State or a county, provable by certified copy; but this shall not prevent the Court from requiring the original to be produced or accounted for, "if the same shall be deemed necessary or proper for the attainment of justice"); § 1036 (suits on official bonds, etc.; quoted post, § 1680); 1889, Bell v. Kendrick, 25 Fla. 778, 6 So. 868 (under Const. 1887, Art. XVI, § 21, the custody and control of the original must first be accounted for); 1908, Florida Finance Co. v. Sheffield, 56 Fla. 285, 48 So. 42 (same).

Georgia: Rev. Code 1910, § 5798 (record in public office, provable by certified copy); § 5799 (such copies to be secondary only, for "such documents as by law properly remain in the possession of the party"); § 5806 ("if the original of any paper properly registered is lost or destroyed", it is provable by certified copy); § 4212 (on loss or destruction of original of duly recorded deed, copy from registry admissible); § 6299, Court Rule 40 (party's oath stating "his belief of the loss or destruction of the original and that it is not in his possession, power, or custody", sufficient); § 6300 (for a grant, the party's oath may state that "the original is not in his power or possession, and that he knows not where it is"); 1851, Beverly v. Burke, 9 Ga. 440, 445 ("copy-deed" to be "treated as the original"); 1851, Ratteree v. Nelson, 10 Ga. 439, 441 (by rule of Court, the original must be sworn to as lost or destroyed and out of the party's power); 1854, Marshall v. Morris, 16 Ga. 368, 372 (original to be accounted for); 1858, Morgan v. Jones, 24 Ga. 155, 161 (same); 1858, Churchill v. Corker, 25 Ga. 479, 490 semble (same for a probated will); 1859, Sutton v. McLoud, 26 Ga. 637, 641 (original required); 1859, Brooking v. Dearmond, 27 Ga. 58, 61 (same); 1874, Hadley v. Bean, 53 Ga. 685, 688 (must show loss or destruction or failure to obtain; here also notice to opponent required); 1897, Woods v. State, 101 Ga. 526, 28 S. E. 970 (original must be accounted for); 1898, Hayden v. Mitchell, 103 Ga. 431, 30 S. E. 287 (certified copy of marriage-contract, admissible after accounting for original); 1900, Smith v. Coker, 110 Ga. 650, 36 S. E. 105 (statute not satisfied on the facts); 1903, Cox v. McDonald, 118 Ga. 414, 45 S. E. 401 (Rule 42 of the superior courts, providing that the party's oath of loss, etc., shall be "a sufficient foundation" for a copy applies only to instruments "between the parties litigant", being in derogation of the common-law practice; Rule 42 and Code § 3630 compared); 1906, Bower v. Cohen, 126 Ga. 35, 54 S. E. 918 (deed; search held not sufficient on the facts, under Code § 3630); 1906, Patterson v. Drake, 126 Ga. 478, 55 S. E. 175 (Cox v. McDonald, supra, followed, as to the trial Court's discretion).

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 3117 ("the record of an instrument duly recorded, or a transcript thereof duly certified", may be read "with the like force and effect as the original instrument").

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7969 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951 as amended in 1874); § 7970 (writing itself must be produced, except when it is recorded and a certified copy is made evidence by statute).

Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 30, § 35 ("If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Court that the original deed so acknowledged or proved and recorded, is lost, or not in the power of the party wishing to use it", a certified copy is admissible); § 36 ("Whenever upon the trial of any cause at law or in equity in this State, any party to said cause, or his agent or attorney in his behalf, shall, orally in court, or by affidavit to be filed in said cause, testify and state under oath that the original" of any instrument affecting land, duly recorded, "is lost or not in the power of the party wishing to use it on the trial of said cause, and that to the best of his knowledge said original deed was not intentionally destroyed or in any manner disposed of for the purpose of introducing a copy thereof in place of the original", the record or recorder's certified copy is admissible); c. 95, § 5 (chattel mortgages, duly recorded, provable like conveyances of land); c. 109, §§ 2, 11 (so for plats of subdivisions recorded); St. 1897, May 1, § 39 (certified copy of an original certificate of registered title, admissible); § 58 ("in the event of a duplicate certificate of title being lost, mislaid, or destroyed", the registrar may issue a certified copy of the original in his office, and "such certified copy shall stand in the place of and have like effect" as the missing duplicate certificate); 1849, Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402, 415 ("not in the power"; statute applied); 1851, Newsom v. Luster, 13 Ill. 175, 180 (under statute of 1845, party's affidavit is not necessary; any kind of evidence suffices, in Court's discretion); 1858, Booth v. Cook, 20 Ill. 130 (an affidavit in general terms that it is "not in his power" to produce is insufficient: diligent inquiry and reasonable efforts to produce must be shown in detail); 1858, Roberts v. Haskell, 20 Ill. 59 (same); 1859, Hanson v. Armstrong, 22 Ill. 442, 445 ("not in the power"; statute applied); 1861, Dickinson v. Breeden, 25 Ill. 186 (grantee's residence appearing, his deposition should be taken as to loss, etc.); 1863, Pardee v. Lindley, 31 Ill. 174 (affidavit; statute applied); 1864, Prettyman v. Watson, 34 Ill. 175 (statute of 1861 applied); 1866, Bowman v. Wettig, 39 Ill. 416, 421 (statute applied); 1866, Deininger v. McConnel, 41 Ill. 227, 232 (affidavit; statute applied); 1869, Newman v. Cobleigh, 52 Ill. 387 (under the statute, a showing of search made is not necessary); 1873, Richley v. Farrell, 69 Ill. 264 (burnt records; loss of deeds sufficiently shown); 1874, Dowden v. Wilson, 71 Ill. 485, 487 (principle applied to note and mortgage on foreclosure); 1880, Harding v. Forsythe, 99 Ill. 312, 324, 328 (proof of contents of deed not accounted for, excluded); 1898, Scott v. Bassett, 174 Ill. 390, 51 N. E. 577 ("not in the power", applied); 1899, 1900, Scott v. Bassett, 174 Ill. 390, 51 N. E. 577, 57 Ill. 835 (sufficiency of party's affidavit); 1902, Glos v. Cary, 194 Ill. 214, 62 N. E. 555 (affidavit held sufficient); 1902, Scott v. Bassett, 194 Ill. 602, 62 N. E. 914 (collective affidavit held deficient); 1905, Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Brubaker, 217 Ill. 462, 75 N. E. 523 (evidence held insufficient); 1906, Tucker v. Duncan, 234 Ill. 453, 79 N. E. 613 (proof held insufficient); 1906, People v. Wieners, 225 Ill. 17, 80 N. E. 45 (plat of an addition, from the recorder's office; under Rev. St. c. 30, § 35, and c. 109, § 2, supra, the original must be shown not to be within the offeror's control); 1910, Burke v. Glos, 244 Ill. 627, 91 N. E. 701 (affidavit omitting the proviso "not intentionally destroyed" etc., held insufficient); 1911, Ellison v. Glos, 248 Ill. 275, 93 N. E. 763 (collective affidavit applying to each deed held sufficient).

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 478 (record of "deeds and other instruments", provable by keeper's attested copy under seal); § 3988 (certain deeds executed more than 20 years before date of Act [Feb. 28, 1857] and recorded in wrong county, provable by certified copy); § 8388 (recorded apprentice's indenture, provable by certified copy); § 3993 (same for recorded power of attorney to convey land); §§ 5830, 5836, 5848 (same for deeds re-recorded on change of county boundaries or creation of new county); § 9499 (same for certain re-recorded deeds); 1838, Bowser v. Warren, 4 Blackf. 522, 527 (original required only "if the deed is made to the party who relies upon it, or may be presumed from its character to be in his keeping"); 1839, Rucker v. M'Neely, 5 Blackf. 123 (grantee offering record; admitted after proof of deed's loss); 1839, Dixon v. Doe, 5 Blackf. 107 (non-grantee offering record of deed; admitted without accounting for original); 1840, Doe v. Holmes, 5 Blackf. 319 (same); 1842, Foresman v. Marsh, 6 id. 285 (general principle repeated); 1843, Daniels v. Stone, 5 Blackf. 450 (same); 1850, Pierson v. Doe, 2 Ind. 123 (deeds of plaintiff's title; copies allowed); 1860, Lyon v. Perry, 14 Ind. 515 (original not required); 1860, Morehouse v. Potter, 15 Ind. 477 (record-copy of mortgage; expressly decided that under the statute it is immaterial whether the original is or is not in the hands of the offeror); 1865, Winship v. Clendenning, 24 Ind. 439, 443 (same); 1872, Bowers v. Van Winkle, 41 Ind. 432, 435 (original not required); 1874, Patterson v. Dallas, 46 Ind. 48 (same); 1876, Abshire v. State, 53 Ind. 64, 65 (same); 1888, State v. Davis, 117 Ind. 307, 30 N. E. 159, semble (unrecorded deed; original required); 1891, Adams v. Buhler, 131 Ind. 66, 30 N. E. 883 (mechanic's lien notice recorded in the wrong book; original required).

Iowa: Code 1897, § 4630, Comp. C. 1919, § 7337 ("any instrument" recorded in public office by authority of law is provable by the record or duly authenticated copy, "whenever, by the party's own oath or otherwise, the original is shown to be lost, or not belonging to the party wishing to use the same, nor within his control"); 1867, Williams v. Heath, 22 Ia. 519 (original to be accounted for; the fact that the deed is to another than the offeror does not of itself suffice); 1868, Ackley v. Sexton, 24 Ia. 320 (statute applied); 1871, Byington v. Oaks, 32 Ia. 488 (same); 1873, Scarf v. Patterson, 37 Ia. 503, 513 (same); 1876, McNichols v. Wilson, 42 Ia. 385, 393 (possession by offeror's brother, within control of Court, but not subpœnaed or requested to produce; copy allowed); 1876, Ingle v. Jones, 43 Ia. 286, 290 (offeror not in control, on the facts); 1879, Olleman v. Kilgore, 52 Ia. 38, 2 N. W. 612 (offeror not in control, on the facts); 1881, Bixby v. Carskaddon, 55 Ia. 533, 537, 8 N. W. 354 (deeds executed to third persons; Court may presume them not in offeror's control); 1884, Jaffrey v. Thompson, 65 Ia. 323, 325, 21 N. W. 659 (excluding copy of mortgage not accounted for); 1886, Laird v. Kilbourne, 70 Ia. 83, 85, 30 N. W. 9 (deed shown unavailable on the facts); 1886, State v. Penny, 70 Ia. 190, 30 N. W. 561 (chattel mortgage to prosecuting witness; that he did not have possession, insufficient); 1890, Collins v. Nalleau, 79 Ia. 626, 629, 43 N. W. 284, 44 N. W. 904 (re-record in another county from certified copy; original instrument need not be accounted for); 1890, Kreuger v. Walker 80 Ia. 733, 735, 45 N. W. 871 (deeds sufficiently accounted for); 1891, Rea's Assignment, 82 Ia. 231, 234, 48 N. W. 78 (mortgage sufficiently accounted for); 1891, Kenosha Stove Co. v. Shedd, 82 Ia. 540, 545, 48 N. W. 933 (conveyances not in offeror's control; copies sufficient); 1894, McCollister v. Yard, 90 Ia. 621, 633, 59 N. W. 477 (deed of adoption; not shown unavailable on the facts); 1898, Independent School Dist. v. Hewitt, 105 Ia. 663, 75 N. W. 497 (statute applied; original; to be accounted for); 1900, Hall v. Cardell, 111 Ia. 206, 82 N. W. 503 (original sufficiently shown not in party's control).

Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7273 (record of "all papers authorized or required by law to be filed or recorded", admissible if "the original is not in the possession or is not under the control of the party desiring to use the same"); G. S. 1915, § 2077, G. S. 1868, c. 22, § 27 (recorded instruments "conveying or affecting real estate", provable by certified copy "upon proof of the loss or destruction of the original instrument, or that it is not under the control of the person desiring to use the same"; instruments recorded in other States for 10 years, and affecting land in this State, provable by certified copy, without mention of such showing); G. S. 1915, §§ 2078–83, G. S. 1868, c. 22, § 28 (instruments defectively acknowledged or recorded before passage of this act, provable by record or duly authenticated copy thereof, when "the original is shown to be lost, or not belonging to the party wishing to use the same, or not within his control"); G. S. 1915, § 2084, St. 1905, c. 324, § 1 (defectively acknowledged or recorded instruments, on record for 10 years, provable by record or duly authenticated copy, "without requiring the original instrument to be produced or accounted for"); 1876, Williams v. Hill, 16 Kans. 23 (statutory showing sufficient, as being less than the common-law requirement); 1890, Stratton v. Hawks, 43 Kans. 538, 23 Pac. 591 (the proof of the original's not being in possession or under control is sufficient if "to the satisfaction of the Court"); 1891, McLean v. Webster, 45 Kans. 644, 26 Pac. 10 (deed to adverse parties, presumed not in the possession or control of the proponent); 1893, Eby v. Winters, 51 Kans. 777, 783, 33 Pac. 471 (delivery to opponent, sufficient to exempt); 1901, Neosho V. I. Co. v. Hannum, 63 Kans. 621, 66 Pac. 631 (statute applied).

Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 519 ("certified copies of all instruments legally recorded shall be 'prima facie' evidence"); § 1638 (instrument duly registered out of the U. S., provable by the keeper's attested copy); 1814, Gholson v. Lefevre, Litt. Sel. C. 191 (original not required of Virginia grant, under statute); 1814, Wells v. Wilson, 3 Bibb 264, 265 (copy admissible from one not a party to the deed; other cases left undetermined); 1815, Tebbs v. White, 4 Bibb 42 (copy admissible in all cases; here offered by the vendee of the grantee); 1820, Hood v. Mathers, 2 A. K. Marsh. 553, 558 (original not required); 1821, Brooks v. Clay, 3 A. K. Marsh. 545, 548, semble (same); 1832, Griffith v. Huston, 7 J. J. Marsh. 385, 386 (copy offered by grantee; original required); 1838, King v. Mims, 7 Dana 267, 269 (Virginia deed; original not required); 1853, Dickerson v. Talbot, 14 B. Monr. 60, 67 (original required; but here the deed had not been legally recorded).

Louisiana: in the statutes of this State, it is somewhat difficult, for those not familiar with the theory of the French law and its phraseology, to discriminate between the provisions bearing on the present principle and those dealing with the rules of certified copies to prove the original's execution; the statutes have therefore been set out once only, under the latter head, post, § 1651; compare also the cases on notarial acts, post, § 1240, and the statute on lost documents in general (ante, § 1195). (1) The following seem to apply Rev. Civ. Code 1920, § 2279: 1827, Coleman v. Breaud, 6 Mart. N. S. 407, 408 (production required; here of a Tennessee deed); 1829, Lewis v Beatty, 8 Mart. N. S. 287, 289 (same; Georgia deed); 1839, Johnston v. Cox, 13 La. 536, 537 (statute applied); 1843, Wells v. McMaster, 5 Rob. La. 154, semble (original required); 1851, Winston v. Prevost, 6 La. An. 164 (deed; loss not sufficiently shown); 1854, Hall v. Acklen, 9 La. An. 219, 221 (warrant; loss sufficiently shown); 1857, Peace v. Head, 12 La. An. 582 (instrument sufficiently shown to be lost); 1858, Lawrence v. Burris, 13 La. An. 611 (deed; loss not sufficiently shown); 1878, Sharkey v. Bankston, 30 La. An. 891 (judgment; loss sufficiently shown). (2) The following apply Rev. Civ. Code, § 2280: 1847, Sexton v. McGill, 2 La. An. 190, 195 (original to be accounted for); 1848, Lacey v. Newport, 3 La. An. 227 (statute applied); 1853, Beebe v. McNeill, 8 La. An. 130 (§ 2280 does not apply to destroyed instruments); 1859, Andrew v. Keenan, 14 La. An. 705 (statute applied; Civ. C. § 2280); 1877, Ticknor v. Calhoun, 29 La. An. 277 (same). (3) The following apply Rev. Civ. C. § 2268: 1893, Chambers v. Haney, 45 La. An. 447, 450, 12 So. 621 (on the theory of a copy of a copy, production required). (4) The following require the production of an original not being a "public act": 1848, Leggo v. N. O. C. & B. Co., 3 La. An. 138; 1856, Boykin v. Wright, 11 La. An. 531, 533; 1857, Knight v. Knight, 12 La. An. 396; 1884, Hotard v. R. Co., 36 La. An. 450, 451.

Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 131 (in actions affecting realty, attested copies of a recorded deed are admissible, when the offeror is not grantee nor heir nor "justifies as servant" thereof); c. 12, § 19 (certain town proprietor's records, deposited with Maine Historical Society, provable by register of deeds' certified transcript); c. 14, § 38 (certain Indian deeds, recorded with Penobscot county register of deeds, provable by copy attested by Indian agent or register of deeds); 1831, Woodman v. Coolbroth, 7 Greenl. 181, 185 (grantee rule, as in Massachusetts; even though the original was in fact in the possession of the offeror of the office-copy, production not required of non-grantee); 1833, Knox v. Silloway, 1 Fairf. 201, 216 (approving the preceding case); 1834, Kent v. Weld, 2 Fairf. 459 (same, but this, semble, is allowable, under Court Rule 34, only "in actions touching the realty", "when the party offering such office-copy in evidence is not a party to the deed, nor claims as heir, nor justifies as servant of the grantee or his heirs"; not applicable, therefore, to a recorded power of attorney in an action for services rendered to an alleged agent of the defendant); 1901, Egan v. Horrigan, 96 Me. 46, 51 Atl. 246 (grantee rule applied).

Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 42 (any instrument required, by law of State or country where executed, to be registered, and lawfully registered, is provable by the keeper's certified copy); § 56 (land-office commissioner's certified copy of extract of deed transmitted by court clerk, admissible if the original deed and record are lost or destroyed); Art. 21, § 28 (recorded contract for conveyance of real estate provable by certified copy as fully as for deed); 1800, Gittings v. Hall, 1 H. & J. 14, 18 (copy of a deed not requiring enrolment, not receivable without express proof of loss, etc.); 1804, Cheney v. Watkins, ib. 527, 532 (same).

Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 114, § 4 (cemetery conveyances recorded by the corporation, provable by certified copy like registered deeds); c. 185, § 54 (the owner's duplicate certificate of registered title, and a certified copy of the original certificate on file, is admissible); c. 185, § 111 ("if a duplicate certificate is lost or destroyed, or cannot be produced by a grantee, heir, devisee, assignee, or other person applying for the entry of a new certificate to him or for the registration of any instrument", a new duplicate may be issued, which shall "thereafter be regarded as the original duplicate for all the purposes of this chapter"); 1828, Eaton v. Campbell, 7 Pick. 10 (grantee need not produce originals of deeds prior to that made to himself; see quotation ante, § 1224); 1829, Poignand v. Smith, 8 Pick. 272, 277 (mortgage belonging to an assignee; original to be accounted for); 1832, Burghardt v. Turner, 12 Pick. 534, 538 (rule of Eaton v. Campbell applicable to a deed made to a common ancestor, there being no reason to attribute possession of it to one party rather than the other); 1833, Scanlan v. Wright, 13 Pick. 523, 527 (rule applicable even where the prior grantee is within the jurisdiction; production is required only where the person proving the deed is himself the grantee or some one who must be presumed to have the deed); 1834, Ward v. Fuller, 15 Pick. 185, 187 (general principle as above); 1853, Blanchard v. Young, 11 Cush. 341, 345 (same; applied, in an issue of a conveyance in fraud of the defendant's creditors, to the defendant's deeds to third persons); 1854, Com. v. Emery, 2 Gray 80 (charge of being a common seller; to prove the defendant's ownership of the premises, the district attorney offered a registrar's copy of a deed to the defendant; excluded, the original being obtainable by notifying the opponent; quoted ante, § 1224); 1854, Bourne v. Boston, 2 Gray 494 (following Com. v. Emery; to prove the plaintiff a resident of Boston, copies of deeds in which the plaintiff was grantee, offered by the defendant, were excluded); 1856, Pierce v. Gray, 7 Gray 67

(rule applied to mortgages of personalty recorded); 1863, Barnard v. Crosby, 6 All. 327, 331 (same); 1863, Thacher v. Phinney, 7 All. 146, 148 (rule applied to admit a copy of a deed to the defendant's grantor, offered by the plaintiff); 1870, Samuel v. Borrowscale, 104 Mass. 207, 209 (rule applied); 1870, Stockwell v. Silloway, 105 Mass. 517 (same); 1878, Draper v. Hatfield, 124 Mass. 53, 56 (copies of deeds to the opponent, excluded, because no notice had been given).

Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11696, 11697, 11727, 11728, 11741, 11775, 11778, 11783, 12508, 12509, 12517 ("conveyances and other instruments" lawfully recorded are provable by the register's certified copy; also certain defectively recorded ones); 1863, Brown v. Cady, 10 Mich. 535, 538 (record not admissible unless lawfully recorded); 1889, People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53, 56, 43 N. W. 779 (forgery of a discharge of mortgage; record not admissible till original accounted for, "when the question of the forgery of the original instrument is in issue either in a criminal or civil suit").

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8456 (instrument authorized to be recorded and duly acknowledged or proved, provable by record or register's certified copy); §§ 6903, 6907 (registration of title; similar to the Illinois act supra; provision made for using certified copies of the certificate of title and also of deeds, etc., filed with the registrar, etc.); 1866, Winona v. Huff, 11 Minn. 119, 127 (map of dedication recorded; loss of record and of original map required to be shown); 1885, Gaston v. Merriam, 33 Minn. 271, 275, 22 N. W. 614 (loss of original sufficiently shown).

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1954, Hem. § 1614 (copies of record of "all instruments of writing which by the laws of any foreign country may be admitted to record upon acknowledgment or proof thereof", duly certified, admissible; but if execution is disputed on oath, "the original shall be produced or its absence accounted for before such copy shall be read in evidence"); Code § 1955, Hem. § 1615 (same for instrument "required or permitted to be" recorded in U. S. State or Territory or District of Columbia); Code § 1956, Hem. § 1616 (same for instrument "required or permitted to be" recorded in this State); 1844, Haydon v. Moore, 1 Sm. & M. 605 (original statute, requiring production of deed, applied); 1845, Chaplain v. Briscoe, 5 Sm. & M. 189 (same); 1846, Harmon v. James, 7 Sm. & M. 111, 118 (same); here a statute of 1844, abolishing the necessity of production, as above, became applicable in the later cases; 1848, Thomas v. Bank, 9 Sm. & M. 201 (original of a document not required to be recorded must be produced); 1860, Davis v. Rhodes, 39 Miss. 152, 156 (same, for document not recorded according to law).

Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 2208 (duly recorded instruments "conveying or affecting real estate", provable by certified copy when "it shall be shown to the Court by the oath or affidavit of the party wishing to use the same, or of any one knowing the fact, that such instrument is lost or not within the power of the party wishing to use the same"); § 2216 (duly recorded instruments dealing with military-bounty lands in this State, executed out of the State but in the U. S., provable by certified copy "upon proof of the loss or destruction of the original instrument"); § 5399 (certain ancient documents recorded 30 years before March 28, 1874, provable by certified copy if it appears "by oath or affidavit of the party wishing to use the same, or of any one knowing the fact, that such instrument is lost or not within the power of the party wishing to use the same"); § 5379 (any "bond, contract, or other instrument", for which provision for recording has been made, provable by certified copy when the original is "lost or not within the control of the party wishing to use the same"); § 5394 (certified copy of duly recorded marriage contract, admissible, when the original "is lost or is not in the power of the party wishing to use it"); §§ 5357, 5359 (conveyances, grants, records, etc., under French or Spanish government, deposited with recorder of land-titles or county recorder, provable by his certified copy "with like effect as the original"); § 5360 (when it appears that the original of such documents, after deposit and record, "cannot be found therein, or has been lost or destroyed, or that neither the original nor a duly certified copy thereof can be obtained by the parties wishing to use it, a copy of the record of such original, duly certified by the officer having charge of such record, shall be received"); § 5365 (where certain instruments not so recorded as ordinarily to be admissible are made admissible by lapse of time, etc., a certified copy is admissible if the original "has been lost or destroyed, or is not in the power of the party who wishes to use it"); § 5366 (where deed has been recorded more than 30 years, though not duly acknowledged, etc., and has been later duly proved and read on trial, then after loss or destruction of original, a copy, preserved in bill of exceptions contained in transcript filed in certain courts, is admissible when certified under seal of clerk of proper court); § 9285 (county recorder's certified copy of recorded plat, admissible); 1851, Walker v. Newhouse, 14 Mo. 373, 377 (deed to a third person; "in most cases", perhaps, efforts to procure would be required; here not, on the facts); 1851, Bosworth v. Bryan, 14 Mo. 575, 577 (deed to offeror's predecessor; copy allowed on proof of loss); 1858, Barton v. Murrain, 27 Mo. 235, 238 (ordinarily, if original is presumed to be in a third person's hands, not even the preliminary oath is necessary; if the deed deals with military-bounty land and is otherwise insufficiently recorded, then loss must be shown); 1867, Attwell v. Lynch, 39 Mo. 519 (original not accounted for; copy excluded); 1867, Boyce v. Mooney, 40 Mo. 104 (deed to trustees-plaintiffs under a marriage-contract; original not presumed out of their power); 1870, Christy v. Kavanagh, 45 Mo. 375 (loss not sufficiently shown on the facts; trial Court's discretion should control); 1872, Strain v. Murphy, 49 Mo. 337, 340 (original sufficiently accounted for); 1872, Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 415, 418 (military-bounty land; loss or destruction must be shown); 1874, Totten v. James, 55 Mo. 494, 496 (transfer of military-bounty land made in conformity to home law; original must be shown lost or destroyed); 1875, Tully v. Canfield, 60 Mo. 99 (overruling the preceding case; original need not be shown lost or destroyed; except for transfers made in another State according to its law); 1877, Sims v. Gray, 66 Mo. 613, 615 (administrator's deed in offeror's control; certified copy excluded); 1880, Crispen v. Hannavan, 72 Mo. 548, 554 (certified copies of deeds defectively acknowledged but recorded 30 years; original must be shown lost or destroyed, by implication of the statute); 1882, Boogher v. Neece, 75 Mo. 383, 385 (deed properly acknowledged out of the State but in conformity to home law; sufficient to show original not within offeror's power); 1885, Addis v. Graham, 88 Mo. 197, 202 (deed shown lost); 1887, Dollarhide v. Parks, 92 Mo. 178, 186, 5 S. W. 3 (deed shown lost); 1887, Hammond v. Johnston, 93 Mo. 198, 207, 6 S. W. 83 (under Stats. § 2395, the original of a recorded sheriff's deed need not be accounted for); 1893, Frank v. Reuter, 116 Mo. 517, 521, 22 S. W. 812 (deed must be accounted for); 1893, Hunt v. Selleck, 118 Mo. 588, 593, 24 S. W. 213 (same); 1898, Cazier v. Hinchey, 143 Mo. 203, 44 S. W. 1052, semble (widow proving husband's chain of title; loss must be shown); 1901, Stout v. Rigney, 46 C. C. A. 459, 107 Fed. 545, 551 (certified copy of deed to military-bounty land taken in Illinois according to Missouri law, admitted; following Tully v. Canfield, supra, proof that the original was not in the party's power sufficing under Rev. St., § 933, without proof of loss or destruction); 1903, Orchard v. Collier, 171 Mo. 390, 71 S. W. 677 (original not shown on the facts to be lost or out of the party's power); 1904, Patton v. Fox, 179 Mo. 525, 78 S. W. 704 (original shown to be in defendant's possession; no notice required; see the citations ante, § 1207, n. 4).

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10516 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); § 10598 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951, as amended by St. 1889, adding, for the class of instruments, "and every instrument authorized by law to be filed or recorded in the county clerk's office"); § 8284 (chattel mortgages recorded on acknowledgment; certified copy admissible "if said original be lost or out of the power of the person wishing to use it"); 1882, McKinstry v. Clark, 4 Mont. 370, 371 (mining location; certified copy admitted without requiring loss to be shown); 1886, Garfield M. & M. Co. v. Hammer, 6 Mont. 52, 64, 8 Pac. 153 (certified copy of recorded mining declaration and of deed, admissible without accounting for original); 1889, Flick v. Gold Hill & L. M. M. Co., 8 Mont. 298, 304, 20 Pac. 807 (principle of preceding cases approved); 1894, Manhattan M. Co. v. Sweteland, 14 Mont. 269, 36 Pac. 84 (originals required; repudiating the two earlier rulings above; compare the California rulings supra).

Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 5609 (record of deed or certified copy, admissible "whenever, by the party's oath or otherwise, the original is known to be lost, or not belonging to the party wishing to use the same, nor within his control"); 1880, Delaney v. Errickson, 10 Nebr. 492, 500, 6 N. W. 600 (deed to offeror's grantor; presumed not in his possession, and need not be accounted for); 1888, Fremont E. & M. V. R. Co. v. Marley, 25 Nebr. 138, 145, 40 N. W. 948 (use of record-copies to establish title is in discretion of trial Court); 1889, Hall v. Aitkin, 25 Nebr. 360, 363, 41 N. W. 192 (mortgage filed; production not required); 1889, Buck v. Gage, 27 Nebr. 360, 41 N. W. 192 (deeds not to the offeror; statute presumed satisfied by proof to the Court below); 1892, Rupert v. Penner, 35 Nebr. 587, 591, 53 N. W. 598 (in trial Court's discretion to require production of original deeds, in ejectment suits).

Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 1044 ("conveyance, or other instrument conveying or affecting real estate", duly recorded, provable by certified copy); §§ 1100, 1636, 2424, 2429, 2432, 2467, 2473, 2475 (mining; sundry contracts, claims, transfers, etc., provable by certified copy); § 5414 (recorded conveyances of realty; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951); § 5417 (original need not be produced when "the original has been recorded and a certified copy is made evidence by statute").

New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 27, § 18; c. 43, § 44 (duplicate certified copies of mutilated records may be used as originals without showing loss of the latter); c. 224, § 23 (certified copy by proper officer of any document required by law to be recorded in a public office, admissible "where the originals would be evidence"); 1831, Southerin v. Mendum, 5 N. H. 420, 428 (grantee rule, following Eaton v. Campbell, Mass.; applied to powers of attorney); 1840, Pollard v. Melvin, 10 N. H. 554 (original dispensed with "only in a chain of title, where due proof has first been made of the execution of the last conveyance"; rule not applicable to third person's title); 1840, Loomis v. Bedel, 11 N. H. 74, 86 (same); 1843, Homer v. Cilley, 14 N. H. 85, 98 (same); 1844, Lyford v. Thurston, 16 id. 399, 404 (same; the rule held to cover copies of deeds in the chain of the opponent's as well as of the proponent's title); 1845, Andrews v. Davison, 17 N. H. 413, 415 (same; is situate may be given in evidence"); 1796, Park v. Cochran, 1 Hayw. 410 (an office copy of a deed to the plaintiff, excluded, unless he accounted for the original); 1834, Smith v. Wilson, 1 Dev. & B. 40 (grantee offering a copy; original required; here a statute of 1846 intervened to excuse production conditionally); 1852, Burnett v. Thompson, 13 Ired. 379 (the registration of leases for years not being required, a copy from the registry does not dispense with the production of the original); 1854, Bohanan v. Shelton, 1 Jones L. 370 (statute applied to a bond to make title); 1893, Mitchell v. Bridger, 113 N. C. 63, 71, 18 S. E. 91 (contract to offeror's predecessor; original not required); 1902, Ratliff v. Ratliff, 131 N. C. 425, 42 S. E. 887 (statute applied).

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7916 ("every instrument conveying or affecting real property", provable by record or certified copy of record, "on proof by affidavit or otherwise that the original is not in the possession or under the control of the party producing such record or copy"); § 5597 (record of "all instruments entitled to record" is admissible, and may be read in evidence "without further proof thereof"); 1901, American Mge. Co. v. Mouse River L. S. Co., 10 N. D. 290, 86 N. W. 965 (statute applied).

Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 8540, 8557, 8558, 8571 (recorder's certified copy of a recorded power of attorney, "deed or other instrument of writing", and chattel mortgage, admissible); § 8822 (recorder's certified copy of grant of way or easement to railroad, admissible); § 8533 (recorded agreement fixing corner or line between adjoining owners; original or certified copy, admissible); 1833, Burnet v. Brush, 6 Oh. 32 (under the original recording act of 1820, the original was not required to be produced except where it was a deed from the offeror's immediate grantor; under the absolute terms of the act of 1831, held, that even this exception disappeared); 1839, Livingston v. M'Donald, 9 Oh. 168 semble (same); 1875, Kilbourn v. Fury, 26 Oh. St. 153, 161, semble (original must be accounted for).

Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 638 ("all papers authorized or required to be filed or recorded in any public office", provable by certified copy "when such original is not in the possession or under the control of the party desiring to use the same"); § 654 (records of public officers, admissible; "and when any such record is of a paper, document, or instrument authorized to be recorded, and the original thereof is not in the possession or under the control of the party desiring to use the same, such record shall have the same effect as the original"); § 5267 (all instruments affecting real estate and duly recorded are provable by certified copy, "in all cases where copies or other instruments might lawfully be used in evidence, and when not requiring record, by copy verified by oath or affidavit"); 1904, Enid & A. R. Co. v. Wiley, 14 Okl. 310, 78 Pac. 96 (record of a U. S. land-patent in a county registry of deeds; original required to be accounted for, under Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 4575); 1919, Smith v. Braley, 76 Okl. 220, 184 Pac. 587 (Rev. L. 1910, § 5099, now Comp. St. 1921, § 638, applied to admit county clerk's record of deeds shown not to be in the plaintiff's possession or control); 1915, Dyal v. Norton, 47 Okl. 794, 150 Pac. 703 (statute applied).

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 9877 (record or certified transcript of duly recorded conveyance, admissible "with like force and effect as the original conveyance"); § 712, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855, par. 4); § 9858 (for deeds of land, duly executed in a foreign country and recorded here, the county clerk's certified copy shall "have the same effect as the original"); 1921, State v. Rowen, — Or. —, 200 Pac. 901 (forgery of a deed; certified copies held admissible, under Or. Laws § 9877; the opinion deals with a Missouri decision cited on the brief; but on this subject, it might have been well known that the Missouri rule was of a distinct type).

Pennsylvania: St. 1715, May 28, § 5, Dig. 1920, § 8824 Deeds (certified copies under seal of deeds duly recorded, receivable "as the original deeds themselves"); St. 1870, Jan. 26, § 1, Dig. § 8792 (same for land in more than one county); St. 1828, Jan. 25, § 1, Dig. § 10334 Evid. (deeds duly recorded in land-office, though not in proper county, provable by exemplification); St. 1905, Apr. 22, § 6, Dig. § 8840 Deeds (exemplified copy admissible, for sheriffs' deeds recorded with the Court of Common Pleas); St. 1853, Apr. 5, §§ 4, 5, Dig. §§ 8908–8909 Deeds (mortgage of coal-mining rights; certified copy of recorded instrument, when original is lost, receivable conditionally); St. 1887, Apr. 28, § 8, Dig. § 8923 Deeds (certified copies of recorded mortgages, etc., of iron ore and other specified personalty receivable); St. 1834, Feb. 21, § 1, Dig. § 10310 Evid. (record or exemplifications of papers lawfully recorded, receivable); St. 1846, Mar. 14, § 1, Dig. § 8796 Deeds (record or certified copies of duly recorded Commonwealth patents, sheriffs', coroners', marshals', and treasurers' deeds, and deeds under decree of Court, receivable); St. 1849, Apr. 5, § 2, Dig. § 8794 Evid. (same for deeds of county commissioners); St. 1849, Apr. 5, § 5, Dig. § 10312 Evid. (same for assignments of mortgages and attorney-powers authorizing satisfaction of mortgages); St. 1828, Apr. 15, 1866, 1850, Dig. §§ 8798–8801, Deeds (duly recorded written discharges of "any legacy or recognizance charged upon lands" in the State; copies under recorder's seal, receivable; also other specified releases to executors, etc.); St. 1885, June 3, § 1, Dig. § 8797 Evid. (letters of attorney relating to personalty, duly recorded; exemplification receivable); St. 1854, Dec. 14, Dig. § 8795 Deeds (letters of attorney relating to personalty, duly made abroad before a U. S. officer or a notary, and here recorded, receivable, as also an exemplification, when the original is lost; also affidavits before a proper officer, duly certified, in another domestic State); 1810, Carkhuff v. Anderson, 3 Binn. 4, 7, 9 (copy allowable, under a statute by which the original deed was kept in the recording office); 1811, Vickroy v. McKnight, 4 Binn. 204, 208 (here the deed was not properly proved for registry by the required two witnesses; "if a deed is recorded without the authority of law, a copy of the record is not evidence"); 1857, Curry v. Raymond, 28 Pa. 144, 149 (mortgage; production not required).

Philippine Islands: Civ. C. §§ 1214–1216 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. §§ 4288–4290); ib. 1217–1230 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. §§ 4291–4304; on these, see the remark under Porto Rico, infra; C. C. P. 1901, § 284 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); ib. § 299 (like Cal. § 1893); ib. § 331 (like C. C. P. § 1951); Admin. C. 1917, § 194 (any recorded instrument "affecting the title of unregistered land" is provable by the record or a certified copy); ib. § 198 (recorded chattel mortgage or filed instrument is provable by certified copy); Act No. 496, Nov. 6, 1902, § 47 (land registration; cited more fully post, § 1651); Porto Rico: here the revisers have added to the original Spanish Code the texts of the California Code of Civil Procedure; the two rest on distinct theories of Evidence; it is difficult to see how they can both be given effect at the same time. Revised Statutes and Codes 1911, § 1987 ("An original instrument is one drawn up by a notary upon the contract or writing submitted to him for authentication and which is signed by the parties thereto, the witnesses to the document, or those having knowledge of the facts, as the case may be, and authenticated by the notary with his written signature, mark and seal, no stamped signature being allowed"); § 2001 ("By copy is understood a literal transcript of an instrument executed before a notary which the later, or the person who is lawfully in charge of the protocol, issues to the persons requesting same"); § 2006 ("A protocol is the collection, in proper order, of original documents, authenticated during one year by a notary"); § 4288 ("Proof of obligations devolves upon the persons claiming their fulfillment, and that of their extinction upon those opposing it"); § 4289 ("Proofs may be given by instruments, by confession, by the personal inspection of the court or judge, by experts, by witnesses, and by presumptions"); § 4290 ("Public instruments are those authenticated by a notary or by a competent public official, with the formalities required by law"); § 4291 ("Instruments in which a notary public takes part shall be governed by the notarial law"); § 4292 ("Public instruments are evidence, even against a third person, of the fact which gave rise to their execution and of the date of the latter. They shall also be evidence against the contradicting parties and their legal representatives with regard to the declarations the former may have made therein"); § 4293 ("Public instruments, made for the purpose of impairing a former instrument, between the same parties, shall be effective against third parties only when the contents of the former should have been entered in the proper public registry or in the margin of the original instrument, and in that of the transcript or copy, by virtue of which the third person may have acted"); § 4294 ("Copies of public instruments of which there is an original or protocol, contested by those they prejudice, shall have force of proof only when they have been duly collated. Should there be any difference between the original and the copy the contents of the former shall govern"); § 4295 ("Should the original instrument, the protocol, and the original record have disappeared, the following shall constitute evidence: 1. First, copies made by the public official who authenticated them. 2. Subsequent copies issued by virtue of a judicial mandate, after citing the persons interested. 3. Those which, without a judicial mandate, may have been taken in the presence of the persons interested and with their consent. In the absence of the said copies, any other copies, thirty, or more years old, shall be evidence, provided they have been taken from the original by the official who authenticated them or by any other in charge of their custody. Copies less than thirty years old, or which may be authenticated by a public official, in which the circumstances mentioned in the preceding paragraph do not concur, shall serve only as a basis of written evidence. The force of proof of copies of a copy shall be weighed by the courts according to the circumstances"); § 4296 ("The entry in any public registry of an instrument which may have disappeared shall be weighed according to the rules established in the last two paragraphs of the preceding section"); § 4297 ("An instrument which is defective by reason of the incompetency of the notary or by reason of any other fault in its form shall be considered as a private instrument when signed by the parties who executed the same"); § 4298 ("An instrument acknowledging an agreement or contract proves nothing against the instrument containing the same if by excess or omission, they disagree therewith, unless the novation of the former is expressly proven"); § 4299 ("A private instrument legally acknowledged shall have, with regard to those who signed it and their legal representatives, the same force as a public instrument"); § 4301 ("The date of a private instrument shall be considered, with regard to third persons, only from the date on which it may have been filed or entered in a public registry, from the death of any of those who signed it, or from the date on which it may have been delivered to a public official by virtue of his office"); § 1392 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); § 1416 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1893); § 1462 (like ib. § 1951, adding that nothing herein shall exclude any instrument admissible under the Civil Code); 1907, Chavier's Estate v. Adjuntas, 13 P. R. 331, 339 (notarial copy purporting to be a copy of an original on file with the notary, held sufficient under Evidence Act §§ 70, 74).

South Carolina: St. 1731, Quit Rents, § 30 (record of all grants in auditor-general's office and "all grants and deeds duly proved before a justice of the peace according to the usual method, and recorded", and also attested copies thereof, "shall be deemed to be as good evidence in the same force and effect as the original would have been if produced"); St. 1803, C. C. P. 1922, § 712 (certified copy of grant of land from this State or the State of North Carolina, receivable on oath that "the original grant is lost, destroyed, or out of his, her, or their power to produce," and that the offeror has not "destroyed, mislaid, or in any way willingly previous to that time put it so out of his power with the intent to produce an office-copy"); St. 1843, C. C. P. 1922, § 713 (certified copy of any recorded deed, receivable, "subject to the same rules" as in the preceding section, and on ten days' notice); 1795, Purvis v. Robinson, 1 Bay 493 (under the early statute above quoted, held that the loss of the original must still be shown; see a careful criticism by the reporter in a note to Peay v. Picket, post, and the quotations ante, § 1224); 1803, Turner v. Moore, 1 Brev. 236 (slight evidence of loss sufficient); 1807, Rosamond v. M'Ilwain, 2 Brev. 132 (copy of a grant alone, received under the statute, without copy of the plat annexed; Trezevant, J., diss., because at common law production would have been necessary, and the statute was not strictly followed); 1821, Dingle v. Bowman, 1 McC. 177 (loss of the original must be shown); 1821, Turnipseed v. Hawkins, 2 McC. 272, 278 (certified copy of deed, semble, receivable without accounting for the original; but here its loss was shown); 1823, M'Mullen v. Brown, Harp. 76 (loss of the original must be shown; but here lapse of time was allowed to suffice); 1825, Bird v. Smith, 3 McC. 300 (object of the statute of 1803, relating to North Carolina grants, was to substitute the party's oath for ordinary proof of loss); 1825, Peay v. Picket, 3 McC. 318 (original required to be accounted for, following the rule in Purvis v. Robinson; see quotation ante, § 1224); 1843, Hinds v. Evans, 2 Speer 17 (copy rejected because search for original was not sufficient); 1843, Birchfield v. Bonham, 2 Speer 62 (search for recorded deed held sufficient to admit copy); 1843, State v. Hill, 2 Speer 150, 160 (same); 1845, McLeod v. Rogers, 2 Rich. 19, 22 ("the copy was evidence only on proof of the loss of the original; . . . Dingle v. Bowman seems to have been lost sight of"; noting the conflict of rulings); 1846, Darby v. Huffman, 2 Rich. 532 (before using an office-copy, the loss alone, and not also the existence, of the original, need be proved); 1905, Uzzell v. Horn, 71 S. C. 426, 51 S. E. 253 (loss of original sufficiently proved by the admission of the opponents, residing in the house of the last custodian, that they did not have it).

South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2724 ("Every instrument in writing which is acknowledged or witnessed and duly recorded or duly filed" is provable by the record or a certified copy); § 2725 (similar, for instruments affecting real property, defectively recorded before Feb. 1, 1911); § 3095 (registration of land-title; rules for use of original certificate and certified copy); 1904, Reeder v. Wilber, 18 S. D. 426, 100 N. W. 1099 (statute applied).

Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 3704 (certified copy of acknowledgment of release of lien, receivable); § 3711 (copy of registered copy of deed of lands in different counties, receivable); § 3748 ("Any of said instruments [i.e. deeds, etc.] so proved or acknowledged and certified and registered shall be received as evidence"); extended to old or mutilated records re-copied, §§ 3778, 3786, 3792, 5575; § 3711*a* 1 (similar to § 3711, for power of attorney); 1806, King v. Hall, 1 Overt. 209 (grantee by warranty-deed need not produce prior deeds, which the grantor is supposed to keep); 1809, Cook v. Hunter, 2 Overt. 113 (same); 1812, McClellan v. Dunlap, 2 Overt. 183 (certified copy of mesne conveyance, received on affidavit that the original was beyond control; an alleged original was in Court, but, by hypothesis being altered, could not be regarded as the original in question); 1813, Smith v. Martin, 2 Overt. 208 (proof is needed that the original mesne conveyance is out of the control of the offeror, but "not the same necessity for strictness as with other sorts of copies"; here, an affidavit of the offeror or his agent was held sufficient); 1814, Jackson v. Dillon, 2 Overt. 261, 263 ("the law will always give an easy ear to the reception of affidavits respecting the loss or non-production of original papers which are required to be registered and have actually been registered agreeably to law"); 1817, Lannum v. Brooks, 4 Hayw. 121 (deed to the defendant; copy offered by plaintiff; production not required, because the plaintiff is presumed not to have possession; nor is notice to the defendant necessary); 1823, Norflet v. Nelson, Peck 188 (production required of deed offered by grantee himself or his heir); 1827, Anderson v. Walker, M. & Y. 201 (production dispensed with "only in those cases where the warrantor, not a defendant, was supposed to keep his title by him"; but here both grantor and grantee were joined as defendants, and the grantee therefore was obliged to account for a mesne deed to the grantor); 1844, Saunders v. Harris, 5 Humph. 345 (copy of recorded bill of sale to grantee, mother of plaintiff, excluded, because the original was in his power); 1832, M'Iver v. Robertson, 3 Yerg. 84, 89 (under the original St. 1809, c. 14, § 8, the offeror of a registered deed-copy must show the original not to be in his power, by express statutory provision); 1869, Walker v. Walker, 6 Coldw. 571, 573, semble (wife proving deed to deceased husband; production unnecessary, without order); 1874, Sampson v. Marr, 7 Baxt. 486, 492 (certified copy of deed to ancestor of plaintiff, the heir; production of original required, as the plaintiff was presumed to have possession).

Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3699 ("all conveyances and other instruments of writing between private individuals, which were filed in the office of any alcalde or judge in Texas previous to the first Monday in February, 1837", are provable by certified copy); § 3700 ("Every instrument of writing" lawfully proved or acknowledged and recorded with clerk of county court, or actually recorded for 10 years, whether lawfully or not, is provable by certified copy "whenever any party to the suit shall file among the papers of the cause an affidavit" stating that any such instrument "has been lost or that he cannot procure the original"); § 6856 (all instruments permitted by law to be registered, and recorded before Feb. 9, 1860, provable by certified copy as if the proof or acknowledgment were in accordance with existing laws, provided it was made before certain specified officers); § 7749 (in trespass to try title, "proof of a common source may be made by the plaintiff by certified copies of the deeds showing a claim of title, etc.", if filed with the papers three days before trial and notice given "as in other cases"); in the following cases, where nothing is specially noted, the ruling concerns the statutory terms in regard to an affidavit of loss or lack of control: 1853, Styles v. Gray, 10 Tex. 503, 505 (statute applied to the record-book); 1853, Crayton v. Munger, 11 Tex. 234 (statute strictly applied, as to the affidavit); 1856, Graham v. Henry, 17 Tex. 164, 166; 1856, Fulton v. Bayne, 18 Tex. 50, 56 (as to the notice); 1857, Butler v. Dunagan, 19 Tex. 559, 566 (as to the affidavit); 1858, Bateman v. Bateman, 21 Tex. 432 (a ruling against sufficiency of proof of loss by affidavit does not preclude an additional affidavit at a later trial); 1864, Winders v. Laird, 27 Tex. 616 (statute does not apply to judicial records; here, a probated will; no notice necessary); 1867, Hooper v. Hall, 30 Tex. 154, 158 (affidavit held insufficient on the facts); 1871, Ury v. Houston, 36 Tex. 260, 268; 1882, Hines v. Thorn, 57 Tex. 98, 103; 1882, Dotson v. Moss, 58 Tex. 152, 154; 1883, Vandergriff v. Piercy, 59 Tex. 371; 1885, Kauffman v. Shellworth, 64 Tex. 179; 1885, Ross v. Kornrumpf, 64 Tex. 390, 394; 1888, Nye v. Gribble, 70 Tex. 458, 462, 8 S. W. 608; 1888, Boydston v. Morris, 71 Tex. 697, 699, 10 S. W. 331 (common-law rule applied to recorded chattel-mortgages); 1890, Hill v. Taylor, 77 Tex. 295, 299, 14 S. W. 366; 1890, Foot v. Silliman, 77 Tex. 268, 271, 13 S. W. 1032; 1898, Oxsheer v. Watt, 91 Tex. 402, 44 S. W. 67 (recorded mortgage; original not required).

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7117 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. § 1951 as amended 1874); § 7117, par. 4 (like ib. § 1855); § 477 (certified copy of filed chattel-mortgage admissible "if such original be out of the control of the person wishing to use it"); 1892, Wilson v. Wright, 8 Utah 215, 30 Pac. 754 (defendant a party to the deed; production required, though another person had the custody).

Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 2742 (attested copy of deed recorded by county clerk, receivable "if the records of a town in which such deed or other conveyance is recorded are destroyed"); § 2748 (certified copy of recorded power of attorney authorizing deed, receivable "when the original cannot be produced"); § 3875 (sheriff's commissions and accused's recognizances, recorded with county clerk, provable by certified copy in case of loss or destruction); St. 1919, Mar. 27, No. 72 (recorded deed in another State or foreign country, provable by certified copy); 1827, Williams v. Wetherbee, 2 Aik. 329, 336 (mesne conveyances to plaintiff's grantor or predecessor; originals not presumed to be in plaintiff's possession, and therefore production not required; citing the statutes above as to county clerks' copies and powers of attorney copies; "these expressions do not necessarily imply that such copies may be read without proof that the originals are out of the parties' power; but the course has been, ever since the Act passed, to admit regular copies of such deeds as do not belong to the party wishing to use them"); 1830, Booge v. Parsons, 2 Vt. 456, 459 (same principle; here a record of deed to plaintiff's testator himself was received after proof of loss); 1834, Braintree v. Battles, 6 Vt. 395, 399, semble (charter deposited in public office; loss of original required to be shown); 1850, Williams v. Bass, 22 Vt. 353, 356 (record of a deed "to a third person, and not to the party", suffices); 1861, Pratt v. Battles, 34 Vt. 391, 397 ("a party may prove the various links in this chain of title" without producing the originals, "except the deed to himself . . . because it is supposed to be in his custody"; whether or not, on a 'prima facie' case of fraud or forgery, production would be required, undecided).

Virginia: Code 1919, § 6195 (copies of deeds imperfectly recorded under certain early statutes receivable); § 6241 (no certified copy of deed, will, account, or other original paper required to be recorded in a Court is to be used as evidence in place of a destroyed original or record, until such copy has been admitted to record in substitution); 1797, Maxwell v. Light, 1 Call 117, 121, semble (original dictions the result solely of judicial decision; in others, of one or more statutes super-imposed upon early decisions; and in others, of statutes from the beginning. For an accurate understanding of the present validity of the earlier rulings, a complete historical exposition of the course of legislation in each State would be necessary; but that is here impossible.

The data here to be considered include statutes and decisions affecting the production of recorded conveyances. They are therefore limited in the following respects: (1) They do not include an enumeration of the various specific kinds of conveyances authorized to be recorded — chattel mortgages, deeds of realty, powers of attorney, sheriffs' deeds, and the like. (2) The line of distinction between documents of the present class — conveyances — and those of the classes already dealt with (§§ 1215–1222) — official documents and judicial records — is sometimes obscure; certain provisions under those heads might by another interpretation belong equally or better under the present subject. (3) The proof of Government grants or patents of land is controlled by the present general principle, if it is applicable; but whether it is applicable depends upon the theory of substantive law as to which document constitutes the grant, i.e. the patent delivered to the grantee or the of recorded deed must be shown unavailable); 1804, Hord v. Dishman, 5 Call. 279, 284 (a copy, "by long-established usage in this country", is admissible without accounting for the original); 1815, Rowletts v. Daniel, 4 Munf. 473, 482 (certified copy of recorded deed to offeror's predecessor in title, dated 1765, received without accounting for original); 1821, Baker v. Preston, Gilmer 235, 284, semble (certified copy of recorded deed, admissible without accounting for the original; but at pp. 286, 294, it is not clear whether this was the point decided); 1824, Ben v. Peete, 2 Rand. 539, 543, semble (search required in the recording-office, etc.; but here it turned out that the deed was not lawfully recorded); 1835, Petermans v. Laws, 6 Leigh 523, 529 ("It is not necessary to consider whether Baker v. Preston settles the law" exempting from production of a locally recorded original; here, an original recorded in another State must be accounted for, unless the law there dispenses with it); 1845, Pollard v. Lively, 2 Gratt. 216, 218, semble (certified copy receivable, "on account of the inconvenience which would be occasioned by the necessity of producing the original"); 1847, Pollard v. Lively, 4 Gratt. 73, 80, semble (certified copy receivable; but there are intimations of a modified requirement of production).

Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1260 ("any deed, conveyance, bond, mortgage, or other writing", lawfully recorded or filed, is provable by certified copy); § 8760 (certified copy of instrument duly acknowledged abroad and recorded here, admissible "to the same extent and with like effect").

West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 130, § 4 (certain recorded deeds of Virginia, provable by copy); c. 73, §§ 7–11*a* (semble, a duly recorded deed, provable by certified copy; but the contents of a recorded deed not properly acknowledged or proved for record are thus provable only in case of loss of the original).

Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4156 (the record in the proper registry of every conveyance or land-patent lawfully recorded is admissible without further proof; "whenever any presumptive effect as evidence is given by law to such patent, conveyance, or instrument", such record and certified copies "shall have the like effect"); § 4713*a* (certified copy of conveyance, admissible in criminal cases); § 4151*q* (when records of deeds showing a chain of title are destroyed etc., deed and affidavit showing chain of title for 10 years are admissible on conditions specified), 1881, Johnson v. Ashland L. Co., 52 Wis. 458, 463, 9 N. W. 464 (whether the original must be accounted for, not clear).

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 4588 (record or certified copy of a duly recorded instrument concerning any interest in land in this State, admissible "upon the affidavit of the party desiring to use the same, that the original thereof is not in his possession or power to produce"); § 3097 (livestock brands; recorded assignments of brands or marks to be proved by certified copy "as is now provided for certified copies of instruments affecting real estate"); § 4603 (letters of attorney and contracts for sale of lands, provable like conveyances); § 4689 (recorded chattel mortgage; "either the original or the certified copy" is admissible).

official record retained; the question thus raised — namely, the question which document is the legal original — is the chief matter of controversy and complicates most of the cases, and is dealt with elsewhere (post, § 1239).

§ 1226. Same: Sundry Consequences of the Principle of not Producing Recorded Deeds. (1) If the form of proof (usually a certified copy) expressly provided for by a statute is not or cannot be employed, the proceeding is not under the statute and the statutory exemption does not obtain; so that the original must be accounted for according to ordinary common-law doctrines.[1] For the same reason, the original must be accounted for by common-law methods if it is in fact recorded but not lawfully recorded.[2]

(2) Conversely, if proof is proposed to be made by common-law modes and not a statutory certified copy, any statutory requirements — for example, an affidavit or a notice of using a certified copy — which may be more rigorous, need not be followed.[3]

(3) The statutory rule of some States (post, §§ 1651, 2132) exempting from proof of execution, where the opponent has failed by plea or affidavit to put the execution in issue, does not exempt from production of the original to show the contents, if under the rule for proving recorded deeds such production is required.[4]

(4) The statutory affidavit often required is merely a means of proving loss or other excuse for non-production; the affidavit does not suffice to supply the contents, which must otherwise be duly proved.[5]

(5) Where the proponent is under the present principle exempted from producing the original and uses a copy, the opponent also has the advantage of the exemption.[6]

(6) Where the original is offered, a certified copy also may be offered so far as it may throw light on the disputed contents of the original.[7]

§ 1226. [1] 1858, Brogan v. Savage, 5 Sneed 689, 692 (where the certified copy was inadmissible). Compare the different result reached ante, § 1219, in the case of official documents.

But this consequence would not be proper in a jurisdiction (ante, § 1224) where the rule had been reached without the aid of express statutes.

[2] 1853, Dickerson v. Talbot, 14 B. Monr. 60, 67; 1800, Gittings v. Hall, 1 H. & J. 14, 18; 1863, Brown v. Cady, 10 Mich. 535, 538; 1848, Thomas v. Bank, 9 Sm. & M. 201; 1860, Davis v. Rhodes, 39 Miss. 152, 156; 1880, Crispen v. Hannavan, 72 Mo. 548, 554; 1811, Vickroy v. McKnight, 4 Binn. 204, 208. Contra: 1865, McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 Cal. 238, 244 (certified copy of deed recorded but not properly proved for record; proof of execution required, but not production of original).

[3] 1859, Loftin v. Nally, 24 Tex. 565, 574; 1886, Blanton v. Ray, 66 Tex. 61, 7 S. W. 264; 1888, Pennington v. Schwartz, 70 Tex. 211, 8 S. W. 32.

[4] 1865, Younge v. Guilbeau, 3 Wall. 636 (Texas statute).

[5] 1872, Bounds v. Bounds, 11 Heisk. 318, 323 (where a statutory affidavit suffices to prove loss of the original, the contents must still be proved by testimony on the stand). For this affidavit, as originally an exception to the party's disqualification, see ante, § 1196.

[6] 1870, Samuel v. Borrowscale, 104 Mass. 207, 210 (where one party produced the copy, and the other was then allowed to testify that he had never signed such a deed, without producing the original).

[7] 1905, Senterfeit v. Shealy, 71 S. C. 259, 51 S. E. 142 (the original deed appearing to be mutilated, the record of it was shown in court); 1869, Walker v. Walker, 6 Coldw. Tenn. 571, 573 (where the original has an alteration, the registry copy may be looked to as an official statement of original's contents at time of registration).

Compare similar cases ante, § 1190, n. 7, and the cases cited ante, § 797, concerning photographic copies of handwriting.

(7) If the conveyance is recorded in another jurisdiction and according to its laws, then production should not be required if it is dispensed with by the law of that jurisdiction.[8]

§ 1227. Same: Other Principles Discriminated (Certified Copies, Affidavits, Abstracts). (1) The principle of Authentication (post, §§ 1648, 2130) requires that the execution of the recorded original be somehow proved; and an important question (for the settlement of which the foregoing statutes were chiefly intended) is whether under the Hearsay rule a custodian's certified copy of the recorded deed is admissible to prove the execution. This question is wholly independent of the rule of production; for example, if the rule of production be satisfied, as by showing the loss of the original, it is still to be determined whether a certified copy is proper evidence of the original's execution. This question is dealt with elsewhere (post, §§ 1651, 1682); and the distinctions between that and the present principle are there examined.

(2) By most statutes touching the present subject, the proof of loss or lack of possession (if that is required) may be made by affidavit; this involves the creation of an exception to the Hearsay rule, for that rule forbids the use of affidavits; in that aspect, the subject of affidavits is elsewhere dealt with (post, § 1710 and ante, § 1196).

(3) In some jurisdictions, a statute expressly provides for the use of abstracts of burnt records. These statutes add nothing to the present principle, since the non-production of a burnt original is always excused; but they involve the rule about a copy of a copy (post, § 1275), the rule about Completeness (post, § 2105), and the Hearsay exception for commercial documents (post, § 1705); under those heads the subject is further examined. So, also, the propriety of using a copy of a recorded conveyance, where the statutory provision for recording requires only an abstract to be recorded, involves the rule of Completeness (post, § 2105).

§ 1228. (9) Appointments to Office. There has been much difference of practice in regard to requiring the production of the written appointment to office, in proving a person to be an officer. The contents of the document would ordinarily be provable by production only, and it is upon the ground of the present principle that the rulings to that effect have proceeded.[1] But the best practice seems to have excused production, and to have done so for the specific reason either of the general inconvenience that such a rule would entail in actions for or against officers, or of the "collateral" nature (post, § 1252) of the issue.[2] There seems thus to be recognized this additional class

Such a statute as Kan. St. 1905, c. 323, passim. Contra: 1875, Tully v. Canfield, 60 Mo. 99, cited ante, § 1225.

§ 1228. [1] 1820, Holroyd, J., in Brewster v. Sewell, 3 B. & Ald. 296, 302.

[2] 1606, Bellamy's Case, 6 Co. Rep. 38 ("If the king's fermor brings a quominus in the Exchequer, he ought to alledge that he is the king's fermor to enable him to sue there; but

[8] 1852, Smith v. McWaters, 7 La. An. 145, 147; 1879, State v. Barrow, 31 La. An. 691, 692; 1895, Chase v. Caryl, 57 N. J. L. 545, 31 Atl. 1024; and other cases cited ante, § 1225, providing that "the original when produced shall prevail over the record or copy" would probably not forbid the above use of a copy.

of cases of exemption. But the usual sufficient proof, in the Courts where production is not required, is held to be the facts of acting as officer and of having a reputation as officer, or, in another form, of notoriously acting as officer; and the doctrine can more conveniently be considered under this presumption (post, § 2535).[3]

§ 1229. (10) Illegible Documents. Where a document, though still in existence, has become illegible, through tearing, rubbing, fading, or otherwise, it is for all practical purposes lost, and its contents may be proved by other evidence; though production may in discretion be required, in order to prove its legible part, if any, or to make certain that the document is really illegible.[1] Upon this principle also is justified the use of photographic enlargements of handwriting.[2]

§ 1230. (11) Voluminous Documents (Accounts, Records, Copyright Infringements, Absence of Entries). Where a fact could be ascertained only by the inspection of a large number of documents made up of very numerous detailed statements — as, the net balance resulting from a year's vouchers of a treasurer or a year's accounts in a bank-ledger — it is obvious that it would often be practically out of the question to apply the present principle by requiring the production of the entire mass of documents and entries to be perused by the jury or read aloud to them. The convenience of trials demands that other evidence be allowed to be offered, in the shape of the testimony of a competent witness who has perused the entire mass and will state summarily the net result. Such a practice is well established to be proper. Most Courts require, as a condition, that the mass thus summarily testified to shall, if the occasion seems to require it, be placed at hand in court, or at least be made accessible to the opposing party, in order that the correctness of the evidence may be tested by inspection if desired, or that the material for cross-examination may be available:

1854, BIGELOW, J., in Boston & W. R. Co. v. Dana, 1 Gray 83, 89, 104 (embezzlement; schedules showing the sales of tickets for certain periods were admitted): "It appears to us that questions of this sort must necessarily be left very much to the discretion of the judge who presides at the trial. It would doubtless be inexpedient in most cases to permit 'ex parte' statements of facts or figures to be prepared and submitted to the jury. It should only be done where books and documents are multifarious and voluminous and of a character to render it difficult for the jury to comprehend material facts without the aid of such statements. . . . In a trial embracing so many details and occupying so great a length of time as the case at bar, during which a great mass of books and documents were put in evidence, it was the only mode of attaining to an intelligible view of the cause before the jury."

he need not show it to the Court, for that is meer collateral to the action").

[3] For related doctrines, see also the following places: § 2168 (official character of the person signing or sealing a document, presumed); § 1625 (reputation, as evidence of incorporation); § 2576 (judicial notice of an officer).

§ 1229. [1] 1862, Dunning v. Rankin, 19 Cal. 640 (mining-claim notice on a tree, the notice now torn and illegible; production not required); 1883, Duffin v. People, 107 Ill. 113, 120 (signature faded and illegible; secondary evidence allowed); 1858, Little v. Downing, 37 N. H. 355, 365 (the ink had faded "the record, being illegible, was lost for all practical purposes").

[2] Cases cited ante, § 797, post, §§ 2010, 2019.

The most commonly recognized application of this principle is that by which the state of pecuniary accounts or other business transactions is allowed to be shown by a witness' schedule or summary.[1] So, also, in trying an issue

§ 1230. [1] ENGLAND: 1817, Meyer v. Sefton, 2 Stark. 274, 276 (value of a bankrupt's property; one who had examined his accounts allowed to testify, as "from the very nature of the case, such an inquiry could not be made in Court"); 1825, Gardner Peerage Case, LeMerchant's Rep. 61 (physician, having in Court a register of 9,000 cases of parturition, allowed to refer to notes of specific relevant cases taken from the register); 1847, Johnson v. Kershaw, 1 De G. & Sm. 260, 264 (expert's statement of the results of an examination of account-books, held conditional on the books being put in evidence).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1873, Burton v. Driggs, 20 Wall. 125, 136 ("When it is necessary to prove the results of voluminous facts or of the examination of many books and papers, and the examination cannot conveniently be made in court, the results may be proved by the person who made the examination"); 1898, Rollins v. Board, 33 C. C. A. 181, 90 Fed. 575 (tabulated statements by an expert of records of county indebtedness, etc., the books being offered also, admitted); 1898, Northern P. R. Co. v. Keyes C. C. C., 91 Fed. 47 (similar); 1919, Galbreuth v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 648, 658 (statement of assets and liabilities);
Alabama: 1902, Willis v. State, 134 Ala. 429, 33 So. 226 (embezzlement; principle applied); 1917, Alabama Fidelity & C. Co. v. Alabama P. L. Bank, 200 Ala. 337, 76 So. 103 (embezzlement; rule applied);
Arkansas: 1895, Woodruff v. State, 61 Ark. 157, 170, 32 S. W. 102 (testimony to a balance of voluminous accounts, received on the facts, by a majority); 1902, Ritter v. State, 70 Ark. 472, 69 S. W. 262 (embezzlement; expert accountant allowed to testify to the shortage shown in voluminous bank-books);
California: C. C. P. 1872, §§ 1855, 1937 (production excused "when the original consists of numerous accounts or other documents which cannot be examined in Court without great loss of time, and the evidence sought from them is only the general result of the whole"); 1898, San Pedro L. Co. v. Reynolds, 121 Cal. 74, 53 Pac. 410 (expert's schedule-summaries of account-books, admitted);
Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, C. C. P. § 391 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); 1911, Brown v. First Nat'l Bank, 49 Colo. 393, 113 Pac. 483 (bank's books);
Connecticut: 1899, McCann v. Gould, 71 Conn. 629, 42 Atl. 1002 (state of accounts; summaries allowable, in trial Court's discretion, if the examination of items would consume time and confuse jury; but the originals must be produced if demanded);
Delaware: 1898, Curry v. Charles Warner Co., 2 Marv. Super. 98, 42 Atl. 425 (witness' schedule of results of account-books in court, allowed to be used);
Georgia: 1861, Gant v. Carmichael, 31 Ga. 737, 741 (results based on invoices, etc., not introduced; excluded); 1910, Cabaniss v. State, — Ga. —, 68 S. E. 849 (unlawful bank-dividend; principle applied to expert testimony to net earnings);
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7970 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); 1913, State v. O'Neil, 24 Ida. 582, 135 Pac. 60 (false report by a bank officer; expert accountants' summaries, admitted; the above-cited statute ignored);
Illinois: 1902, Bartlett v. Wheeler, 195 Ill. 445, 63 N. E. 169 (testimony that certain books of account showed a shortage, not admitted on the facts); 1913, Reinke v. Sanitary District, 260 Ill. 380, 103 N. E. 236 (graphic summaries of statistics, admitted); 1917, Interstate Finance Co. v. Commercial Jewelry Co., 280 Ill. 116, 117 N. E. 440 (action for balance due; witness' schedules of accounts based on examination of the books, admitted); 1921, People v. Sawhill, 299 Ill. 393, 132 N. E. 477 (false pretences; an expert having testified to the summaries of voluminous accounts of defendant's company, held improper to refuse to direct the production of the original books in court, so as to be used in cross-examination of the expert);
Indiana: 1884, Rogers v. State, 99 Ind. 218, 228 (treasurer's accounts; experts' examinations of the books, received; "witnesses so testifying, to give their evidence weight, should be prepared to corroborate every statement by references to the records, in the presence of the jury, wherever either party desires it, on either the examination or cross-examination"); 1887, Hollingsworth v. State, 111 Ind. 289, 297, 12 N. E. 490 (defaulting treasurer; expert accountants' examination of the treasurer's books, etc., admitted, the documents being "voluminous and multifarious, and of such a character as to render it difficult for the jury to arrive at a correct conclusion as to amounts"); 1893, Equitable Acc. Ins. Co. v. Stout, 135 Ind. 444, 453, 33 N. E. 623 (insurance accounts; general principle sanctioned, but the pleadings here treated as excluding it); 1895, Chicago St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Wolcott, 141 Ind. 267, 39 N. E. 451 (expert's statement of results of complicated account-books, admitted);
Iowa: 1890, State v. Cadwell, 79 Ia. 432, 441, 44 N. W. 700 (expert's statement of results of examination of accounts, the books being in evidence, allowed);
Kansas: 1915, Spaeth v. Kouns, 95 Kan. 320, 148 Pac. 651 (abstract of title; cited more fully post, § 1960, n. 3); of infringement of copyright, the material passages may be culled from the Kentucky: 1903, Louisville Bridge Co. v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 75 S. W. 285 (tables of tolls paid, summarizing the contents of thousands of waybills, admitted);

Louisiana: 1901, State v. Mathis, 106 La. 263, 30 So. 834 (embezzlement; an expert's statement as to the results of his examination of the defendant's books, admitted, the books being assumed to have been offered); 1909, Shea v. Sewerage & Water Board, 124 La. 299, 50 So. 166 (compilations from records of contractor's work, admitted);
Maryland: 1893, Lynn v. Cumberland, 77 Md. 449, 458, 26 Atl. 1001 (expert's summary of tax-figures, books being in court, admitted);
Massachusetts: 1854, Boston & W. R. Co. v. Dana, 1 Gray 83, 89, 104 (schedules of sales of tickets, admitted; see quotation supra); 1874, Walker v. Curtis, 116 Mass. 98, 100, semble (summary of estimates of days' work admitted; here the books were produced); 1894, Bicknell v. Mellett, 160 Mass. 328, 35 N. E. 1130 (computations by an expert from an insolvent's account-books, admissible in trial Court's discretion);
Minnesota: 1891, Wolford v. Farnham, 47 Minn. 95, 49 N. W. 528 (summary of accounts from the firm's books, brought into court, admitted; though "the regular way would have been to introduce the books" also formally in evidence); 1901, State v. Clements, 82 Minn. 434, 85 N. W. 229 (receipt of bank-deposit during insolvency; the journals being in evidence, an expert's summaries of them were received); 1902, State v. Salverson, 87 Minn. 40, 91 N. W. 1 (expert's summaries of a bank's books produced in court, held admissible);
Mississippi: 1878, State v. Lewenthall, 55 Miss. 589 (tax-collector's books; memoranda of voluminous contents excluded, because the books were not also offered); 1896, Hauenstein v. Gillespie, 73 Miss. 742, 19 So. 673 (account-books belonging to a witness testifying on deposition; that the books were not annexed as exhibits, but were set out by copies of entries, held proper);
Missouri: 1870, Ritchie v. Kinney, 46 Mo. 298, 299 (receipts and disbursements; condensed statement showing aggregates, not admitted, the account-books not being produced); 1888, Masonic M. B. Soc'y v. Lackland, 97 Mo. 137, 139, 10 S. W. 895 (expert's results of an examination of account-books, admitted, the documents being in court); 1890, State v. Findley, 101 Mo. 217, 223, 14 S. W. 185 (tax-receipts, etc.; the papers being present, an expert was allowed to state the result of his examination);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10516 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855);
Nebraska: 1898, Bartley v. State, 53 Nebr. 310, 73 N. W. 744 (expert's examination of account-books, received, the books being in court); 1900, Bee Pub. Co. v. World Pub. Co., 59 Nebr. 713, 82 N. W. 28 (state of complicated accounts; books must be present in court, for purposes of cross-examination); 1904, Mendel v. Boyd, 71 Nebr. 657, 99 N. W. 493 (summary statement of six simple transactions, excluded); 1906, Kannow & Sons v. Farmers' C. S. Ass'n, 76 Nebr. 330, 107 N. W. 563 (expert's computation of the result of weigh-checks in evidence, admitted); 1916, Bauer v. State, 99 Nebr. 747, 157 N. W. 968 (embezzlement; summary of books of account made by expert, admitted);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5417 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); 1871, State v. Rhoades, 6 Nev. 352, 376 (expert accountant allowed to state the net balance of receipts and disbursements in the State Treasurer's books as examined by him, so as to show the cash that ought to be on hand); 1905, State v. Nevada C. R. Co., 28 Nev. 186, 81 Pac. 99 (expert accountant's statements of the "net earnings" of a railroad company as shown by the books, excluded, partly on the principle of § 1960, post, and partly because the questions were not framed in proper application of the present principle);
New York: 1878, Von Sachs v. Kretz, 72 N. Y. 548 (witness' statement of results of examination of account-books in court, admissible in referee's discretion);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 712, par. 5 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); 1895, State v. Reinhart, 26 Or. 466, 38 Pac. 822 (expert's summary of account-books put in evidence, admitted); 1902, Salem L. & T. Co. v. Anson, 41 Or. 562, 67 Pac. 1015, 69 Pac. 675 (expert's testimony to the results of an examination of voluminous accounts, admitted, the books being in court);
Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 284 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); 1918, U. S. v. Razon, 37 P. I. 856 (mortgage account);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1392 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855);
Tennessee: 1874, Shepherd v. Hamilton Co., 8 Heisk. 380 (officer's failure to pay over funds; a witness not allowed to state "the results of his examination" of the books and vouchers); 1900, Galbreath v. Knoxville, — Tenn. —, 59 S. W. 178 (summary statement of book-balance, allowed, the books being in court); 1918, State ex rel. Stewart v. Follis, 140 Tenn. 513, 205 S. W. 444 (revenue collector's accounts);
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7117 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855).
Wisconsin: 1909, Ruth v. State, 140 Wis. 373, 122 N. W. 733 (bank accounts).

Compare the cases cited post, § 1244, where a similar result may be reached, in some cases by a different principle.

entire volume and presented in such a way as to be conveniently compared.[2] Upon the same principle, summaries of official or corporate records might be presented;[3] and testimony, by one who has examined records, that no record of a specific tenor is there contained is receivable instead of producing the entire mass for perusal in the court-room.[4]

§ 1231. (12) Any Document provable by Copy in Trial Court's Discretion. Much of the petty disputatiousness and futile quibbling, observable in the application of the present rule (sound as the rule is in general policy) could be eliminated by leaving to the trial Court in discretion to sanction, on any ground the use of a copy without producing the original, where the nature of the controversy does not require an inspection of the original by the tribunal. Good headway has been made to this end in Canadian practice.[1]

(d) "Of the Writing Itself"

§ 1232. What is the "Original" Writing? General Principle. The fundamental notion of the general rule under consideration is that the terms of

For the opinion rule as applied to such testimony, see post, §§ 1957, 1959, 1978.

Whether an official custodian of records is a preferred witness is noticed post, § 1272.

[2] 1839, Lewis v. Fullerton, 2 Beav. 6, 8 (exhibits on both sides showing copied passages, etc., used by the Court to facilitate comparison); 1826, Mawman v. Tegg, 2 Russ. 385, 398 (same process sanctioned by Eldon, L. C.); 1869, Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 1, 72 (testimony of experts as to the extent of copying in a voluminous work charged to infringe a copyright, received, although the Court also examined the original material for itself); 1897, West Pub. Co. v. Lawyers, Coöp. P. Co., 25 C. C. A. 648, 79 Fed. 756 (in ascertaining the extent of a borrowing of paragraphs of syllabi, tables prepared by witnesses who had examined thousands of cases were used as evidence of their contents, after the Court had tested their accuracy).

[3] Federal: 1896, Ludtke v. Hertzog, 18 C. C. A. 487, 72 Fed. 142 (testimony to the identity of an enrolled soldier as gathered from a perusal of the various archives containing his name and doings, admitted); Arizona: 1901, Schumacher v. Pima Co., 7 Ariz. 269, 64 Pac. 490 (expert's summaries of fee-records in probate court, admitted); Florida: 1896, Adams v. Board, 37 Fla. 266, 20 So. 266 (substance of a number of records of a Board, excluded); Illinois: 1921, People ex rel. Miller v. C. B. & Q. R. R., 300 Ill. 399, 133 N. E. 325 (delinquent taxes; testimony expert to results of examination of sales-records in M. Co., held admissible); Indiana: 1860, Thornburgh v. R. Co., 14 Ind. 499, 501 (witness producing corporation-record, allowed to state the aggregate footings); Iowa: 1897, State v. Brady, 100 Ia. 191, 69 N. W. 290 (to show a system of defrauding by false warrants, more than 500 in all, a tabulated statement from the voluminous records was admitted); 1899, Plano Mfg. Co. v. McCoid, — Ia. —, 80 N. W. 659 (to show insolvency, a list of the recorded mortgages, etc., made by one testifying, excluded); Maryland: 1902, Blum v. State, 94 Md. 375, 51 Atl. 26 (summary of claims proved under a receivership, verified by the receiver, admitted); Oklahoma: 1920, Muskogee Gas & El. Co. v. State, 81 Okl. 176, 186 Pac. 730 (exhibits compiled from the records of a public utility company, admitted, the original records being in court and the witness being open to cross-examination); Oregon: 1903, Scott v. R. Co., 43 Or. 26, 72 Pac. 594 (average of rainfall for 18 years, allowed to be testified to from official records without stating detailed entries); Wisconsin: 1900, Jordon v. Warner, 107 Wis. 539, 83 N. W. 946 (summary of complicated land-records and tax-rolls, the originals being before the court, admitted).

[4] 1897, Hoffman v. Pack, 114 Mich. 1, 71 N. W. 1095 (a clerk, allowed to testify that no records of a certain sort existed). The same result may be reached on the principle of § 1244, post, where other cases are cited.

Whether an official custodian may make a hearsay statement, by certificate, to the same effect, is a different question; see post, § 1678. For the opinion rule, see post, §§ 1957, 1978.

§ 1231. [1] Besides the Canadian statutes so providing for commercial documents in general (ante, § 1223), the following statutes sanction this: Ontario: Rules of Court 1913, No. 350 (when a third person possesses a document liable to production and has given inspection of it before trial, the Court may order a certified copy to be prepared "which may be used for all purposes in lieu of the original"); and so in other Provinces.

a writing must be proved by producing it and not by offering testimony about them. It is commonly said that what is to be produced is the "original" and not a copy. What is meant by "original"?

"Original" is a relative term only. When a particular paper is said to reproduce the terms of another, the former is the "copy", the latter the "original." Thus, "original" and "copy" are words correlative, with reference to the succession of existence between them, and have no necessary connection with the present rule. Given merely two papers, A and B, of which A was copied from B, and A thus is the "copy" and B the "original", we still have no light at all on the application of the present rule, i.e. on the question whether paper A can be offered without accounting for the non-production of paper B. For example, paper A might be a libellous document handed by M to N, while paper B was kept by M in his private desk; so that to prove the publication of a libel, paper A and not paper B would be the document whose production the present rule would require; yet relatively to each other paper A is a "copy" and paper B an "original." Again, paper A may have been deposited for safe-keeping with N as bailee, and in an action for negligently injuring it, paper A is the document to be accounted for under the present rule, and paper B could be used only secondarily, although the former is only a "copy" and the latter is an "original." Thus, the terms "copy" and "original", being purely relative to each other, have no inherent relation to the present rule, and the term "original" has no real significance in indicating which paper it is (of all possible papers) whose production is required by the rule.

In order to state the rule, then, in terms which will indicate in the rule itself what documents are included in its scope, it must be noted that the production required is the production of the document whose contents are to be proved in the state of the issues. Whether or not that document was written before or after another, was copied from another, or was itself used to copy from, is immaterial. The question becomes: Is this the very document whose contents are desired to be, and, in the now state of the issues, by the substantive law may lawfully be proved? This inquiry is of course usually answered without hesitation; but there are numerous instances in which a difficulty of principle arises.

The cases in which a question may arise fall into four groups:

(1) Cases in which the document to be proved was brought into physical existence in duplicate (or multiplicate) form, — chiefly, the case of duplicate originals;

(2) Cases in which a document, first made by copying from another, has since been acted upon or dealt with at other times, by the same or another person, so that for the purposes of such later acts it is the document to be proved;

(3) Cases in which, of two or more documents, one or another of them will be the document in issue according to the substantive law of contract, property, etc., applicable to the case;

(4) Cases in which, by the rule of Integration, or Parol Evidence (post, § 2429), a document which would otherwise be the one in issue has been annulled or superseded by another one, which thus becomes the only one allowable by law to be proved and therefore the one necessary to be produced.

§ 1233. (1) Duplicates and Counterparts: (a) Either may be used without producing the Other; (b) All must be accounted for before using Copies. Where the writing constituting a bilateral transaction is executed by the parties in duplicate or multiplicate, each of these parts is "the" writing, because by the act of the parties each is as much the legal act as another. It can make no difference that one party has signed only the document taken by the other, except where it is desired to prove specifically the signature.

(a) Any one such a duplicate or counterpart, then, may be used without accounting for the non-production of any other, because the present rule is satisfied by the production of any one part: [1]

1809, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in Philipson v. Chase, 2 Camp. 110: "If there are two co-temporary writings, the counterparts of each other, one of which is delivered to the opposite party, and the other preserved, as they may both be considered as originals, and they have equal claims to authenticity, the one which is preserved may be received in evidence, without notice to produce the one which was delivered."

This result is generally accepted.

(b) Conversely: all duplicates or counterparts must be accounted for before using Copies. For, since all the duplicates or multiplicates are parts of the writing itself to be proved, no excuse for non-production of the writing itself can be regarded as established until it appears that all of its parts are unavailable (i.e. lost, detained by the opponent or by a third per-

§ 1233. [1] ENGLAND: 1842, Doe v. Pulman, 3 Q. B. 622 (to prove W. seised, a counterpart of a lease by him signed by the lessee was received, without accounting for the parts signed by W.); CANADA: 1858, Leonard v. Young, 4 All. N. Br. 111 (certain leases, held duplicate originals); UNITED STATES: Fed. 1828, Carroll v. Peake, 1 Pet. 18, 23 (opponent's copy of an agreement of lease, held an original, on the facts); Mich. 1868, Cleveland & T. R. Co. v. Perkins, 17 Mich. 296 (contract exchanged in duplicate; either receivable); Minn. 1907, International Harvester Co. v. Elfstrom, 101 Minn. 263, 112 N. W. 252 (contract executed in duplicate in one writing-act as to contents and signature, by placing a carbon between sheets, held a counterpart; and either usable without accounting for the other); Miss. 1876, Ketchum v. Brennan, 53 Miss. 597, 605, 608 (obscure); Mo. 1865, Carr v. Carr, 36 Mo. 408, 411, semble (either receivable); N. Y. 1827, Lewis v. Payn, 8 Cow. 71, 76 (two copies of a lease, each executed by both parties; "both are properly originals", on an issue of the existence of the tenancy); 1830, Jackson v. Denison, 4 Wend. 558 (counterpart of an agreement usable like the original); 1847, Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. 633, 730, semble (the lessor's counterpart of a lease is the original where it is offered as containing the lessee's declarations of a holding under the lessor); Okl. 1908, Reeves v. Martin, 20 Okl. 558, 94 Pac. 1058 (triplicate notice of breach of warranty); S. C. 1900, State v. Allen, 56 S. C. 495, 35 S. E. 204 (school certificates); 1907, Walker v. Southern R. Co., 76 S. C. 308, 56 S. E. 952 (bills of lading being made in triplicate, one signed by the shipper and filed with the carrier's auditor, another sent to the shipper with copied signature, and another filed by the carrier with copied signature, the first two were held to be duplicate originals, the third to be secondary).

The earlier practice seems to have been to treat the counterpart of a deed as a copy or secondary, as may be inferred from the utterances quoted post, § 1273, upon the preferred order of copies. Moreover the quotation in the next paragraph shows the persistence of this idea.

For the effect of an agreement that a specific counterpart shall be deemed the original, i.e. alone valid as to the text, see post, § 2449 (parol evidence rule).

son, or the like). This is well settled, though not always in the light of the correct reason:[2]

1825, BEST, C. J., in Munn v. Godbold, 3 Bing. 292: "When there are two instruments executed as parts of a deed, one of these parts is more authentic and satisfactory evidence of the contents of the other part than any other draft or copy. It is prepared with more care than any other copy, and the party who produces it, and against whom it is used, by taking and keeping it as a part of the deed, admits its accuracy. The Courts have therefore always required that if one part of a deed be lost, and another part be in existence, it must be produced"; but ". . . merely as secondary evidence of the part that was lost."

In the foregoing passage, the counterpart is treated as merely a preferred variety of copy (post, § 1273); but the same result is necessarily reached, apart from any theory of preferred copies, from the nature of the general rule.

§ 1234. Same: Duplicate Notices, Blotter-Press Copies, and Printing-Press Copies as Originals. (1) A doctrine was early established that where a notice was made by writing it out twice, at the same sitting, the writings were in fact duplicates, though not written nor executed contemporaneously and that thus the one retained could be used without accounting for the non-production of the one delivered.[1] This theory seems to have been in part

[2] ENGLAND: 1740, Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 71, Hardwicke, L. C.; 1773, Ludlam's Will, Lofft 362 (Mansfield, L. C. J.: "If you cannot prove a deed by producing it, you may produce the counterpart"); 1795, R. v. Castleton, 6 T. R. 236 (indenture of apprenticeship); 1825, Munn v. Godbold, 3 Bing. 292 (quoted supra); 1834, Alivon v. Furnival, 1 Cr. M. & R. 277, 292; 1836, Doe v. Wainwright, 1 Nev. & P. 8, 12 ("a counterpart is the next best evidence"); UNITED STATES: Ala. 1904, Norris v. Billingsley, — Ala. —, 37 So. 564 (oral testimony of defendant's counterpart, excluded, where plaintiff's was not accounted for); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5760; 1872, Breed v. Nagle, 46 Ga. 112 (lease in duplicate; in action by stranger against lessee, original of lessee, and not merely of lessor, to be accounted for); 1886, Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Disbrow, 76 Ga. 253 (duplicate contract; after accounting for both parts, a copy allowed); Haw. 1900, Rodriguez' Estate, 13 Haw. 202, 205 (counterparts of leases preferred to copies); Ill. 1871, White v. Herrman, 62 Ill. 73 (duplicate original of a contract, preferred to a copy); 1906, Hayes v. Wagner, 220 Ill. 256, 77 N. E. 211; Ind. 1912, Pittsburgh C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Brown, 178 Ind. 11, 98 N. E. 625 (action on a bill of lading delivered to plaintiff by defendant; the plaintiff's original being lost, and the pleadings containing a copy conceded to be correct, held that notice to produce the defendant's duplicate original was not necessary); La. 1827, Erwin v. Porter, 6 Mart. N. S. 166, semble; Me. 1874, Dyer v. Fredericks, 63 Me. 173 (duplicate originals of a bill of lading; rule applied); Mass. 1829, Poignand v. Smith, 8 Pick. 272, 279 (counterpart of a mortgage required); 1906, Peaks v. Cobb, 192 Mass. 196, 77 N. E. 881 (duplicate of a lease required).

Contra: 1844, Hewlett v. Henderson, 9 Rob. La. 379, 381, semble.

§ 1234. [1] England: 1796, Gótlieb v. Danvers, 1 Esp. 455 (Eyre, C. J., said "that where two copies of any instrument or notice were made at the same time, both were to be deemed originals"; here a notice to take away a crane); 1799, Jory v. Orchard, 2 B. & P. 39 (a written statutory demand; the attorney "made out two papers for that purpose, precisely to the same effect, and signed them both for his client, one of which he delivered" and the other he kept; held that the latter, as counterpart or "duplicate original", could be used in evidence; the analogies of a notice to quit and a notice to a justice were considered to control, and the existing practice to use the "duplicate original" was confirmed; Rooke, J., diss.); 1803, Surtees v. Hubbard, 4 Esp. 203 (copy of a notice of assignment, written at the same time and signed by the party; admitted, semble, as a duplicate original, per Ellenborough, L. C. J.); United States: Iowa: 1874, Hollenbeck v. Stanberry, 38 Ia. 325, 327 (copy of original summons served upon party, equivalent to the summons itself); Mo. 1874, Barr v. Armstrong, 56 Mo. 577, 586 (two numbers of notice written at same time and one served; each held an original); N. Y. 1818, Johnson v. Haight, 13 John. 470 (notice of dishonor proved by copy made at the time, as "a duplicate original"); Pa. 1826, Eisenhart v. Slaymaker, 14 S. & R. 153, 156 ("every written notice is to be proved by a duplicate original").

Distinguish the following: 1921, Lorch v.

the origin of the rule of thumb, already considered (ante, § 1206), that no notice to produce a notice need be given; but though the theory would logically extend to any kind of a document written in duplicate at the same sitting, such an extension appears not to have occurred.[2]

The fallacy of the theory seems to lie in ignoring this circumstance, that what makes two numbers of any instrument counterparts and equivalent is that the legal act as consummated embraces them both; it is not the coincidence of writing (for the counterpart of a deed may be written after an interval), but the unity given by the final legal act. Thus, if both numbers of a notice were served, and then the server retained one, the two would indeed be duplicates; but the mere writing at one sitting, followed by a legal act of service performed with one number only, cannot make the other an equivalent "original" for the purposes of the present rule.

(2) A reproduction by blotter-press or letter-press cannot be considered as a duplicate;[3] and policy here supports principle, for such reproductions are by no means uniformly identical or accurate. The same must be said of any

Page, — Conn. —, 115 Atl. 681 (under a statute requiring service of "duplicate copies" of a notice to quit, the document served cannot be a "true and attested copy of the original notice"; much learning is spent on this point; its relation to the ultimate doing of justice between landlord and tenant does not appear).

[2] 1800, Anderson v. May, 2 B. & P. 237 (copy of a bill of costs delivered to the defendant; admitted, on the authority of Jory v. Orchard); 1809, Philipson v. Chase, 2 Comp. 110 (doctrine conceded, but held not to apply to a book entry of an attorney's bill); 1822, Kine v. Beaumont, 3 B. & B. 288, 291, semble (three judges could not see "any great difference" between "a duplicate original and a copy made at the time"); 1827, Colling v. Treweek, 6 B. & C. 394, 398 (an attorney's bill, signed; a copy, made at the same time, but not signed, but offered to be signed at the trial; undecided); 1880, Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Walters, 24 Kan. 504, 509 (a written demand was essential to the claim; a copy drawn up at the same time with the one served, held not equivalent to the original).

[3] ENGLAND: 1812, Nodin v. Murray, 3 Camp. 228; UNITED STATES: California: 1885, Spottiswood v. Weir, 66 Cal. 525, 529, 6 Pac. 381; 1890, Ford v. Cunningham, 87 Cal. 209, 210, 25 Pac. 403; Georgia: 1876, Watkins v. Paine, 57 Ga. 50; Illinois: 1873, Richards Iron Works v. Glennon, 71 Ill. 11; 1874, King v. Worthington, 73 Ill. 161, 163; Indiana: 1883, Duringer v. Moschino, 93 Ind. 495, 499; Iowa: 1887, State v. Halstead, 73 Ia. 376, 378, 35 N. W. 457; Kentucky: 1898, Seibert v. Ragsdale, 103 Ky. 206, 44 S. W. 653; 1899, Heilman Milling Co. v. Hotaling, — Ky. —, 53 S. W. 655; Maryland: 1871, Marsh v. Hand, 35 Md. 123, 127; Massachusetts: 1869, Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362, semble; 1890, Smith v. Brown, 151 Mass. 338, 340, 24 N. E. 31 (title to a judgment; the assignment in issue); Missouri: 1895, Traber v. Hicks, 131 Mo. 180, 32 S. W. 1145; Nebraska: 1880, Delaney v. Errickson, 10 Nebr. 492, 501, 6 N. W. 600; 1883, Ward v. Beals, 14 Nebr. 114, 119, 15 N. W. 353; 1898, Westinghouse Co. v. Tilden, 56 Nebr. 129, 76 N. W. 416; New York: 1870, Foot v. Bentley, 44 N. Y. 166, 170; Virginia: 1905, Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Stock, 104 Va. 97, 51 S. E. 161; Wisconsin: 1906, Menasha W. W. Co. v. Harmon, 128 Wis. 177, 107 N. W. 299 (letters).

Distinguish the following: 1859, Nathan v. Jacob, 1 F. & F. 452 (as an admission, a copy kept in a letter-book by the writer is equivalent to the letter itself, and is an original).

By statute the rule has sometimes been altered: Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1753 ("The production of a letter-press copy of any letter, before the officer taking a deposition, shall be equivalent to producing the same at the trial, and when so produced a copy thereof may be attached to the deposition as an exhibit, and shall be evidenced of like force and effect as the letter-press copy itself; but such copies shall not be used if the original letters are produced at the trial"); Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2606 (original not required, where "any writing whatsoever shall have been copied by means of any machine or press which produces a facsimile impression or copy of such writing", on proof that the copy offered was so taken from the original); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1452 (adopting Cal. C. C. P. § 1937 as amended but ineffectively in 1901; "an impression of a letter taken in a letter-press copy-book before the mailing of the original" is an original "equally with the letter so copied").

process of machine-reproduction which consists in obtaining repeated ink-traces from a single writing so prepared as to furnish such traces by pressure or by chemical operation.

(3) The case of a type-machine (the ordinary printing-press, or its equivalents) is different. Here, the only variances that can occur between different numbers reproduced by printing must arise from a change in the type or from the exhaustion of the ink. But the ordinary printing-press is now self-feeding in respect to ink; and, on the supposition that the type is not intentionally altered, all the reproductions from the same setting of type may be regarded for practical purposes as identical and equivalent. For the printing-press having fixed type, it is clear therefore that to prove the contents of any one such impression any other one may be used without accounting for the former.[4] In these days, to be sure, of numerous differing editions of newspapers within a single day, and even of plural editions of periodical magazines and of novels with alterations made since the printing of the first copies, the proof of the above preliminary condition, namely, the absence of alteration in the type, becomes a more difficult matter; but this aspect of the subject does not seem yet to have been recognized in judicial rulings.

(4) In those type-writing office-machines in which the paper is stationary and the writer's hand applies a movable type or a pen, producing an impression through several carbon sheets at once, the case is more difficult; for though the first few impressions may be identical, yet the lower sheets are likely to be imperfect:[5]

[4] 1817, R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 116 (the defendant caused 500 placards to be printed and carried away 25 of them for posting; to prove the contents of those posted, one of the remainder was admitted; "every one of those worked off are originals, in the nature of duplicate originals"; "since it appears that they are from the same press, they must all be the same").

In the following case the principle was left undecided: 1837, Watts v. Fraser, 7 A. & E. 223, 232 (the defendant, to show provocation by the plaintiff's libel, offered a copy of a newspaper deposited under the law by the plaintiff at the public Stamp-Office; excluded, because knowledge of its contents by the defendant was not shown; whether, if knowledge of the contents of another number of the same issue had been shown, this number would have been received to prove contents, not decided).

In the following cases no common printing was shown, and thus the impressions in question could not be assumed to be identical: 1849, Boosey v. Davidson, 13 Q. B. 257, 266 (to prove prior publication of certain operatic pieces, production was required of copies alleged to have been seen elsewhere; for the identity of the contents with those of registered copies in court was to be shown, and there was by hypothesis no common printing); 1847, McGrath v. Cox, 3 U. C. Q. B. 332 (to prove a libel, the pamphlet charged as published could not be produced, nor was any one who had read it produced so as to be able to identify it with another pamphlet offered; a common printing was not shown, and the evidence of identity of general appearance, title-page, and dedication, was held not sufficient; Jones, J., diss.; the real error in the case lies in holding the proof of common printing insufficient; for the pamphlet was one circulated at an election and the general evidence of correspondence sufficed to dismiss doubt for any reasonable person not sitting in the judicial atmosphere of artificial reasoning).

In the following cases the principle stated in the text was ignored or repudiated: 1817, Williams v. Stoughton, 2 Stark. 292 (to show the contents of a prospectus received by a school-patron, another printed copy was rejected); 1881, Southwestern R. Co. v. Papot, 67 Ga. 675, 686 (newspaper itself the original, not some other printed copy, in proving publication of notice of sale).

[5] 1911, Federal U. Surety Co. v. Indiana L. & M. Co., 176 Ind. 328, 95 N. E. 1104 (a machine carbon-copy in triplicate; each one held an original); 1915, Wilkes v. Clark C. &

1907, ELLIOTT, J., in International Harvester Co. v. Elfstrom, 101 Minn. 263, 112 N. W. 252: "[In making the carbon copy of a contract here offered,] a sheet of carbon paper was placed between two sheets of order paper, so that the writing of the order upon the outside sheet produced a fac-simile upon the one underneath. The signature of the party was thus reproduced by the same stroke of the pen which made the surface, or exposed, impression. . . . We think . . that a clear distinction exists between letter-press copies of writings and duplicate writings produced as was the contract in the case at bar. It is well settled that, where a writing is executed in duplicate or multiplicate, each of the parts is the writing which is to be proved, because by the act of the parties each is made as much the legal act as the other. It is very generally held that a reproduction of a writing by a letter-press cannot be considered as a duplicate. The distinction between letter-press copies and instruments produced by the use of carbon paper, as in this instance, seems reasonably clear and satisfactory. What makes two numbers of an instrument duplicates and equivalents is the fact that the legal act of the parties as consummated embraces them both. Letter-press copies are produced by an act distinct from and subsequent to the consummation of the legal act of execution. It may or may not be the act of the parties to the contract. We know from common experience that such copies are ordinarily produced by the labor of clerks and other employes, and that the results are not always satisfactory. But all the numbers of a writing result from the completion of the legal act of the parties, although aided by mechanical devices or chemical agencies, meet the requirements of originals. If the reproduction is complete, there is no practical reason why all the products of the single act of writing the contract and affixing a signature thereto should not be regarded as of equal and equivalent value. In this instance the same stroke of the pen produced both signatures. The argument that the recognition of these instruments as duplicates would encourage fraudulent practices does not touch the principle involved."

(5) A more important circumstance is that the natural operation of the above simple principle is in practice complicated and disturbed by the intervention of other principles. Thus, (a) a printed impression may or may not be the writing to be proved, according as it or the manuscript draft constitutes the legal act desired to be proved (post, § 1235); (b) a specific printed impression may by the substantive law be the only one in issue, and then it must be accounted for before another can be used (post, § 1237); (c) and in that case, a question may arise (treated ante, §§ 415, 440) as to the sufficiency of the evidence of the identity or correctness of the copy offered; (d) a printed impression may be read aloud and then the words uttered may be proved, if material under the issues, without producing the printed impression (post, § 1243); (e) the act of sending or delivery may not require production (post, § 1248); furthermore, the authentication of the author or publisher of printed matter involves a different principle (post, § 2150).

§ 1235. (2) Copy acted on or dealt with, as an Original for Certain Pur-

G. Co., 95 Kan. 493, 148 Pac. 768 (bill of lading "made in triplicate by impression sheets"; consignee's set admitted); 1911, Goodman v. Saperstein, 115 Md. 678, 81 Atl. 695 (carbon-copy of a letter, held a duplicate original); 1907, International Harvester Co. v. Elfstrom, 101 Minn. 263, 112 N. W. 252 (carbon-copy produced by simultaneous impression on both sheets, held duplicate original; quoted supra, and cited more fully ante, § 1232, n. 1); 1906, State v. Teasdale, 120 Mo. App. 692, 97 S. W. 995 (a carbon-copy is not a duplicate original); 1907, Cole v. Ellwood Power Co., 216 Pa. 283, 65 Atl. 678 (duplicate notices, one being carbon-copy, executed in the same manner as the other, held counterparts); 1905, Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Stock, 104 Va. 97, 51 S. E. 161 (a carbon-copy made by the same impression of type is a duplicate original).

poses (Bailments, Admissions, Bank-books, Accounts, etc.). Where an act material to be proved consists in the adoption of a paper by acting upon it or dealing with it, the rule requiring production applies to this paper, as involving the terms of the act; so that it is immaterial whether the paper was first made by copying another paper. For the purposes of proving the act in question, the specific paper dealt with is the writing to be produced. For example, in an action against a bailee for wrongful dealing with a document deposited, the document deposited, whether a copy or an original, is the document to be accounted for.[1] Again, in proving the terms of an admission by an opponent, where he orally or otherwise has acknowledged the correctness of a certain document, the document thus acknowledged (usually a bank-book) is the one to be accounted for, whether it is a copy of something else or not.[2] Again, in proving an account stated, the statement furnished is the document to be proved, though it may be only a copy from books of account.[3] So also the criminal act to be proved may consist in the reading or posting of a document which otherwise may be but a copy from something else; [4] and other illustrations are of occasional occurrence.[5]

§ 1235. [1] See examples ante, § 1205.

[2] Canada: 1858, Lawton v. Tarratt, 4 All. N. Br. 1, 8 (a written statement by a debtor was shown by him to the creditor, who copied it in his presence; whether the creditor's writing was an original, not decided); United States: Federal: 1919, Cohn v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 258 Fed. 355 (correspondence between defendant and an official M. being material, an inspector visited defendant, who produced letters from M. and initialled carbon copies of replies to M.; the inspector caused typewritten and photographic copies of these to be made; afterwards, the originals became parts of a Navy Department official file and could not be produced; here the typewritten and photographic copies were held erroneously admitted, partly because not verified as copies, and partly for other reasons indefinitely stated; if verified on the stand as correct, the only objection could be the supposed rule against a copy of a copy; because the defendant had admitted the authenticity of the carbons of the replies, and therefore the copies offered were first copies of originals); Iowa: 1887, State v. Halstead, 73 Ia. 376, 377 (embezzlement; in showing deposits by defendant in a bank, his deposit-tickets are not secondary to the bank-books made up from them); North Dakota: 1898, Kelly v. Elevator Co., 7 N. D. 343, 75 N. W. 264 (defendant's agent's stub-entries copied from original entries and offered by plaintiff as admissions; allowed, the originals here being destroyed; but, on principle, the latter showing was not necessary); Washington: 1897, State v. McCauley, 17 Wash. 88, 49 Pac. 221, 51 Pac. 382 (to show the state of the defendant's account at a bank, the bank's books were introduced; held, that the defendant's checks need not be produced, because the defendant's examination of his pass-book, made up from the bank-books, was an admission of the latter's correctness; and thus the books came in as an admission, not as secondary evidence of the checks).

[3] 1835, Vinal v. Burrill, 16 Pick. 401, 407 (account stated; to prove its contents, the account delivered, and not the books from which it was taken, is the original); 1898, Missouri, P. R. Co. v. Palmer, 55 Nebr. 559, 76 N. W. 169 (plaintiff suing for medical expenses; physician's bill rendered, treated as original, not his account-books).

[4] 1817, R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 116 (C. took a manuscript to a printer, who printed 500 copies as a placard; the defendant came and took away 25 of them; one of the remainder was offered, upon a trial for posting a treasonable proclamation; the rule held not to require the production of the manuscript, because the defendant "adopted the printing", and thus the printed placards became the originals); 1820, R. v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald. 566, 568, 572 (seditious resolutions read at a meeting; a copy had been given to the witness by the defendant at the time as representing what was to be read, and the witness testified that they were read as in the copy; the copy held sufficient as an original for the purpose).

[5] 1904, Wright v. Michigan C. R. Co., 130 Fed. 843, 65 C. C. A. 327 (what is a "duplicate" bill of lading, under St. 1898, June 13, c. 448, 30 Stat. 459); 1887, Comer v. Comer, 120 Ill. 420, 430, 11 N. E. 848 (copy of letter; copy attached to contract and made a part of it becomes an original); 1904, Simonds v. Cash, 137 Mich. 558, 99 N. W. 754 (copy referred to in conversations).

So for a letter-press copy: ante, § 1234, note 3.

Compare the doctrine of § 1242, post.

§ 1236. (3) Copy made an Original by the Substantive Law applicable; (a) Telegraphic Dispatches. Of two or more documents, copied one from another, the substantive law of property, contracts, crimes, or torts, may indicate a specific one as the material one under the issue. In that case, it is immaterial whether or not the one thus indicated was, when first made, a "copy" from another; it must be accounted for. The principle is essentially the same as in the foregoing class of cases; the difference is merely that here it cannot be told which document is the writing to be produced, until some point of substantive law has been determined; when that is determined, it immediately indicates the document to which the present rule of evidence applies. Since the difficulty is raised and is determined solely by the substantive law, it is not necessary here to review all the various instances; it will suffice merely to indicate the bearings of the question in the cases of chief difficulty and commonest occurrence.

(a) Whether, in proving the terms of a telegram, the dispatch sent or the dispatch delivered and received is the one to be accounted for, depends upon the substantive law involved.[1] In an action, for example, by a customer § 1236. [1] ENGLAND: 1887, R. v. Regan, 16 Cox Cr. 203 (to prove a telegram sent by the accused, the writing handed to the telegraph office, not the copy received, is the original).

CANADA: N. Br. Con. St. 1903, c. 127, § 36 ("secondary evidence" may be given of a telegram "sent to the opposite party or shown to be in his possession" after the usual notice and failure to produce); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 30 ("as proof of the contents of the original telegraphic message" the party may introduce "the message received by him from the telegraph office", on ten days' notice to the opponent, and provided he "proves that it was received at the telegraph office of the place to which it purports to be addressed"); Ont. 1859, Kinghorne v. Tel. Co., 13 U. C. Q. B. 60, 66 (action for failure to deliver telegram; question whether the dispatches satisfied the statute of frauds; for this purpose the dispatch as handed to the operator was considered); 1906, Flynn v. Kelly, 12 Ont. L. R. 440 (contract by telegram, the dispute being as to its terms; the defendants' message handed to the telegrapher, held the original, and the plaintiff bound to prove its loss or destruction; destruction not presumed after six months); Yukon: Con. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 30 (like N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 30).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1894, U. S. v. Dunbar, 60 Fed. 75 (admissions of contents of a telegram, received); 1895, Dunbar v. U. S., 156 U. S. 185, 196 (telegram received by B. and admitted by the defendant to have been sent by him, received); Alabama: 1879, Whilden v. Bank, 64 Ala. 1, 13, 30 (action on promise to pay bill of exchange; to prove telegrams sent to the defendant, the originals on file at the sending office were produced; allowed, the delivered message being out of the jurisdiction; question reserved, as to which was the original); 1884, Western Union T. Co. v. Fatman, 73 Ala. 285, 292 (action for failure to deliver telegram in season; received telegram admitted as the original); 1884, Pensacola R. Co. v. Schaffer, 76 Ala. 233, 237 (telegram received, treated as secondary, the message being by one who delayed performance of contract); Georgia: 1893, Conyers v. P. T. C. Co., 92 Ga. 619, 622, 19 S. E. 253 (action for failure to deliver with diligence; delivered message the original); 1893, Western Union T. Co. v. Bates, 93 Ga. 352, 355, 20 S. E. 639 (same as the Fatman case, supra); 1894, Western U. Tel. Co. v. Blance, 94 Ga. 431, 19 S. E. 255 (action for failure to deliver with diligence; delivered paper the original); Illinois: 1861, Matteson v. Noyes, 25 Ill. 591 (assumpsit; dispatch sent treated as the original, and dispatch received as a copy); 1871, Morgan v. People, 59 Ill. 58, 61 (party telegraphing the sheriff to stop a sale; dispatch received is the original); 1888, Anheuser-Busch B. Ass'n v. Hutmacher, 127 Ill. 652, 657, 21 N. E. 626 (assumpsit for services; telegrams sent by defendant to plaintiff; delivered dispatch held the original); 1906, Young v. People, 221 Ill. 51, 77 N. E. 536 (swindling by bets; sender's telegram filed in Wisconsin, held to be the original on the facts, and the copy filed in the Chicago receiving office, excluded); Indiana: 1874, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, 49 Ind. 223, 227 (damages for failure to transmit message; dispatch handed to the operator treated as the original); 1888, Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Stockwell, 118 Ind. 98, 102, 20 N. E. 650 (that telegrams were sent by a conductor; oral testimony allowed, since it did not appear that the telegrams were in writing); Iowa: 1888, Riordan v. Guggerty, 74 Ia. 688, 693, 39 N. W.

against a broker for falsely reporting his bankruptcy to a third person, the dispatch sent would be the one to be proved; but in an action against a telegraph company by an addressee for delayed delivery, the dispatch delivered would be the material one; while in an action by an offeree against an offeror in which the acceptance of the offer is denied, the solution would depend on the rule in force as to the necessity of receipt of acceptance by the offeror; and in certain other actions both the sent and the received dispatches would have to be accounted for. These discriminations are accepted by most Courts, though in many rulings the grounds for decision are left obscure.

§ 1237. Same: (b) Printed Matter. If a contributor sues a magazine for an article accepted but not paid for, the manuscript accepted is the document to which the rule applies. If a person whose interview has been published in a newspaper is sued for libel, the words uttered are the thing to be proved, though the printed words would equally be provable if the printing was authorized by the defendant.[1] If the libel was charged as published in a newspaper or other printing of which multiple numbers existed, the number charged would in theory be the document to be proved,[2] though it would seem (on the principle of § 1234, ante), that the production of any other number printed from the same type-setting would satisfy the rule.[3] In this connection, there may also be involved the principles of § 1243, post, as well as of Authentication (post, § 2150) and of Identity (ante, §§ 415, 440).

107 (whether defendant sent a telegram; copy made at the receiving office, admitted, the sent document being shown lost); Maryland: 1880, Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 138, 145 (whether a contract was made by telegram; the promisor's telegram sent to the telegraph office, held the original, and here held not sufficiently authenticated); Massachusetts: 1895, Nickerson v. Spindell, 164 Mass. 25, 41 N. E. 107 (addressee's dispatch the original, unless a rule of law makes sender's dispatch binding); Minnesota: 1884, Wilson v. R. Co., 31 Minn. 481, 18 N. W. 291 (to prove a hiring by telegraph, the dispatch received in the original; on proof of its loss, oral testimony of its contents is admissible); 1890, Nichols v. Howe, 43 Minn. 181, 45 N. W. 14 (contract by telegram; production of the telegram required); Mississippi: 1859, Williams v. Brickell, 37 Miss. 682, 686 (hiring by telegram; plaintiff must produce the dispatch received); St. 1916, c. 133 (in actions against telegraph companies for non-delivery, etc., "the copy of the telegram received and transcribed by such company's operator at the office of final destination shall be conclusive evidence" of the original's filing by the sender, and may be introduced as "the best evidence of the filing of the original", etc.); Montana: 1904, Bond v. Hurd, 31 Mont. 314, 78 Pac. 579 (contract for medical services; message handed to telegrapher, held the original, on the facts); Nebraska: 1903, Yeiser v. Cathers, — Nebr. —, 97 N. W. 840 (telegram excluded on the facts); New Hampshire: 1869, Howley v. Whipple, 48 N. H. 487 (to show that J. G. had sent a telegram from Montreal, held, the dispatch as handed for transmission in Montreal was the original); New York: 1883, Oregon S. Co. v. Otis, 14 Abb. N. C. 388, 100 N. Y. 446, 453, 3 N. E. 485 (contract said to be made by the defendant as agent for the plaintiff; the "original message" said to be the primary evidence; opinion obscure); South Dakota. 1899, Western Twine Co. v. Wright, 11 S. D. 521, 78 N. W. 942 (contract of warranty; received dispatch from promisor, admitted for promisee, after evidence that telegraph company's rules required the destruction of originals after six months); 1902, Distad v. Shanklin, 15 S. D. 507, 90 N. W. 151 (breach of contract; sendee's copy admitted, the original having been destroyed by the telegraph company); Texas: 1887, Prather v. Wilkins, 68 Tex. 187, 4 S. W. 252 (no discrimination made on this point); Vermont: 1856, Durkee v. R. Co., 29 Vt. 127, 140 (action for commissions in raising loan for the defendant; to prove the contract, telegrams were involved; Redfield, C. J.: "It depends upon which party is responsible for the transmission across the line, or in other words whose agent the telegraph is"; where the received dispatch is the legally material document, it must be accounted for; a recorded copy of it would "ordinarily" be preferable to mere recollection; and the message as handed in by the sender "perhaps" might also serve as a copy; but "where the party to whom the communication is made is to take the risk of transmission, the message delivered to the operator is the original"); 1877, State v. Hopkins, 50 Vt. 316, 323, 332 (to show knowledge by communication, the delivered form of a telegram delivered to the defendant was received; to prove the contents of a telegram sent by the defendant, a copy of the delivered form was received, on proof of destruction of the sent original by the telegraph company); West Virginia: 1905, Cobb v. Glenn B. & L. Co., 57 W. Va. 49, 49 S. E. 1005 (principle considered); 1916, Showalter v. Chambers, 77 W. Va. 720, 88 S. E. 1072 (contract for sale of hay; secondary evidence of a telegram, admitted; Cobb v. G. B. & L. Co., supra, distinguished); Wisconsin: 1876, Saveland v. Green, 40 Wis. 431, 440 (contract by telegram; received message here the original, under the law of contracts); 1882, Randall v. N. W. Tel. Co., 54 Wis. 140, 143, 11 N. W. 419 (undecided).

For authentication of telegrams, see post, § 2154.

§ 1238. Same: (c) Wills and Letters of Administration. (1) At common law, the Ecclesiastical Court had jurisdiction to administer personalty and to adjudicate wills of personalty, but not to adjudicate wills of realty. Hence, a will of personalty, when probated, became a part of that Court's records, but a will of realty remained, even after probate, merely a deed taking effect after death.[1] It followed that a will of personalty need not be produced, but could be proved by the Court record or a copy of it, while a will of realty must be produced or accounted for.[2] Modern legislation has given Probate Courts jurisdiction over both kinds of wills; so that this distinction no longer exists; but the statutes dealing with the matter provide sometimes that the will itself, and not merely the record or a copy of it, may be required by the Court to be produced or accounted for (ante, § 1215, post, § 1658).

(2) The Ecclesiastical Court's grant of letters testamentary to an executor of a will over which it had jurisdiction, or of letters of administration on intestate personalty, was a judicial act constituted by the record; so that § 1237. [1] 1824, Adams v. Kelly, Ry. & Mo. 157 (libel; the defendant had told the matter to a reporter, who had taken it in writing, and it had then been published by a newspaper, which was the libel charged; held, that the newspaper statement must be shown to be the same as that which the defendant made to the reporter, and therefore the writing became an original to be produced; here the words as printed had to be shown to be authorized by the defendant); 1904, Prussing v. Jackson, 207 Ill. 85, 69 N. E. 771 (action for libel against the author of a letter published in a newspaper; the letter held to be the original; unsound, for the declaration alleged publication in the newspaper, and the plaintiff offered to connect the defendant with it).

[2] 1835, Johnson v. Morgan, 7 A. & E. 233 (libel by a song; the particular copy whose publication was alleged had been lost; and this showing was held requisite before other copies could be resorted to); 1847, McGrath v. Cox, 3 U. C. Q. B. 332, 337 (Robinson, C. J.: "The plaintiff [in libel], as I conceive, must be looked upon always as prosecuting for the inquiry arising from publishing some one certain libel to which particular act of publication his cause of action is confined").

[3] Thus the preceding two cases would seem to be unsound. Compare the cases cited ante, § 1234.

§ 1238. [1] 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 71 ("The probate of a will is good evidence as to the personal estate, and they are the records of that Court, and therefore a copy of them under the seal of that Court must be good evidence. . . . [But for real estate] he must have the original will, and not the probate only, for where the original is in being, the copy is no evidence, and the probate is no more than a true copy, under the seal of the Court, of a private instrument").

[2] 1695, Newport's Case, Skin. 431 (a copy of the record of the Ecclesiastical Court was received to show the contents of a will of personalty; "the act of the Court is the original, and the will is proved by the act of the Court, . . . and so a copy of the act of the Court is sufficient"); 1696, R. v. Haines, Skin. 583 ("A copy of a probate of a will where the Court has jurisdiction is good, because the probate itself in such case is an original act of the Court"); 1837, Doe v. Mew, 7 A. & E. 240, 253 (the will with a memorandum of the surrogate that the executor had proved the will and probate been sealed, admitted irrespective of the probate itself).

Contra: 1805, Jackson v. Lucett, 2 Cai. 363, 367, semble (record of judge of probate is secondary).

the letters themselves, i.e. the credentials given to the representative, were merely a copy of the judicial record; hence, in proving such an appointment, the Court record became the document to be proved, and for this purpose a certified copy of the record would suffice, without producing the letters, which were themselves legally only a copy of the record.[3] This also has been expressly regulated by modern statutes (ante, § 1215, post, § 1658).

§ 1239. Same: (d) Government Land-Grants, Land-Certificates, and Land-Patents; Mining Rights; Recorded Private Deeds. (1) An ordinary deed by a private party is itself the effective instrument of transfer, even under legislation making its public registration an additionally necessary element of validity. It has already been seen that, even where by common-law principles or by express statute the deed's contents may be proved by the registry or a copy of it, still the present rule is always thought of as applying to the deed itself, and its production is merely excused on the ground that it is practically unavailable, by reason of its proved loss or its possession by another or the inconvenience involved in requiring it (ante, § 1224). As to other deeds of transfer than Government land-grants, it is generally accepted that the party's deed of conveyance is the constitutive document (i.e. the original to be accounted for), and that the official register is merely a copy of that original.[1]

In transfers of mining-rights there occur certain partial modifications of this principle.[2]

The Torrens system of title-registration abandons it completely; here the "original certificate of title", i.e., the registrar's official entry founded on a judicial decree, becomes the basis of the title, together with the "duplicate certificate" issued to the owner. The statutes establishing the system usually [3] 1822, Plumer, M. R., in Cox v. Allingham, Jac. 514 ("The thing which it is required to prove is to whom the Ecclesiastical Court has granted the power of administering the property. The ordinary evidence is the probate; which is a copy of the will, with a certificate under the seal of the Court that probate has been granted to the executor. It is only the act of the Ecclesiastical Court that is to be proved. Now we have here the original book containing the entry of the act of the Court. The probate is only a copy of this act; this is the original and therefore the primary evidence").

Accord: 1807, Elden v. Keddell, 8 East 187; Mo. 1826, Lane v. Clark, 1 Mo. 658; N. H. 1834, Farnsworth v. Briggs, 6 N. H. 561 (record of the Court as to granting administration is the original, of which the letters are only a copy): N. Y. 1830, Jackson v. Robinson, 4 Wend. 436, 442 (records of Probate Court are the original, and therefore copies of them are receivable without showing the loss of the letters of administration); N. C. 1830, Hoskins v. Miller, 2 Dev. 360; S. Car. 1831, Browning v. Huff, 2 Bail. 174, 179 (action by administrator; the ordinary's record-book sufficient, for the letter of administration is merely a certificate that the order exists).

§ 1239. [1] 1826, Ewing, C. J., in Fox v. Lambson, 8 N. J. L. 275, 280 ("[The counsel] assimilates it to a common-law record, as for example of a judgment, and because such a record would be evidence he argued that the entry in question was so. But there is no analogy. The common-law record is in itself the original and supposes no other in existence. The record or registry of a deed or other instrument of writing is but a copy and presupposes an original"). Accord: 1886, Brown v. Griffith, 70 Cal. 14, 16; see post, § 2456, where the subject is treated from the point of view of the parol evidence rule.

[2] 1859, McGarrity v. Byington, 12 Cal. 426, 430 (same as next case); 1860, Atwood v. Fricot, 17 Cal. 37, 42 (record of transfer of mining-right; held an original, as showing compliance with regulations, but secondary to the document and fact of transfer); 1864, St. John v. Kidd, 26 Cal. 263, 270, semble (same). The statutes are placed ante, § 1225.

make express provision for the use of copies and originals in various situations.[3]

(2) But where the Government itself makes the grant of land, and not merely furnishes an office for registering the grants of private persons, the question arises whether the constitutive document of grant (and therefore the document to be produced or accounted for) is the Government's own entry or record of the grant, or is the certificate, patent, "testimonio", "expediente", or other document delivered to the grantee by the Government as his muniment of title. Herein is involved a question of property-law, not of Evidence. The rule of Evidence is easily applied, as soon as the question of property-law is answered.[4] If the first alternative above is taken, the original

[3] The statutes are placed ante, § 1225. The Uniform Land Title Registration Act, as adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners of Uniform State Laws, did not contain any provisions dealing with the evidential use of copies.

[4] Besides the following statutes and precedents directly dealing with the subject, other statutes and decisions more or less connected will be found elsewhere; (1) on letters, etc., filed in a public office (ante, § 1219, post, § 1680); (2) on recorded conveyances in general (ante, § 1225, post, § 1651); (3) on certain record-books of the land-office (post, § 1659); (4) on judicial records (ante, § 1215, post, §§ 1660, 1681); (5) on official certificates and returns (post, §§ 1672, 1674); (6) on preferred copies of records (post, § 1269);

Federal: U. S. Code 1919, § 683 (original application for entry of land, etc., on file in general land-office, when called for by subpœna duces tecum, is to be forwarded to register, authenticated by general land-office commissioner's seal, and "shall be received in evidence"); 1831, Doe v. Winn, 5 Pet. 233, 241 (exemplification under Georgia State seal of land-patent there recorded, admitted; Johnson, J., diss.; see quotation ante, § 1224); 1833, U. S. v. Percheman, 7 Pet. 51, 78, 84 (certified copy of Spanish land-grant, receivable, because the original decree is not issued but retained; the "copy is, in contemplation of law, an original"); 1833, Minor v. Tillotson, 7 Pet. 99 (land-grant in Louisiana; grant to patentee the original to be accounted for); 1840, U. S. v. Wiggins, 14 Pet. 334, 345 (certified copy of Spanish land-grant in Florida, received without accounting for the original); 1858, U. S. v. Sutter, 21 How. 170, 174 (Mexican land-grant in California; official record apparently treated as a copy; opinion obscure); 1860, U. S. v. Castro, 24 How. 346, 349 ("When therefore a party claims title to lands in California under a Mexican grant, the general rule is that the grant must be found in the proper office among the public archives; this is the highest and best evidence"; and accordingly the existence and loss of this public record must be shown; "written documentary evidence, produced by a claimant from a private receptacle" is not equivalent); 1902, Carr Land & L. S. Co. v. U. S., 55 C. C. A. 433, 118 Fed. 821 (a tract book prepared by the commissioner of the general land-office to replace the burned local records, and proved by the local register to be used as such, is not a copy which must be certified by the commissioner under U. S. Rev. St. § 2469); 1919, McGrew v. Byrd, 8th C. C. A., 255 Fed. 759 (land in Missouri; land register's certificate of purchase, not provable by certified copy of record); 1919, McGrew v. Byrd, 8th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 66 (certified copy of register's certificate of purchase, not admissible to evidence title, no Missouri statute requiring such record to be kept); 1880, U. S. v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378 (delivery of a public land patent is not necessary to pass title); 1921, U. S. v. Caster, 8th C. C. A., 271 Fed. 615 (nature of U. S. public land record; the record passes title);

Alabama: Code 1907, § 3979 (patents of the United States or any State are admitted "without further proof"; also tract-books in county probate offices); § 3980 (land-office certificates, admissible; register's certified copy of land-office documents in this State are 'prima facie' evidence of the facts contained therein); 1841, Hines v. Greenlee, 3 Ala. 73, 75 (certified copy of U. S. record of land-patent, received without accounting for the first patent issued; Ormond, J.: "The patent [issued to patentee] is not the title, but merely evidence; . . . [the record] is a public act, and therefore a second patent which may issue is not a copy of the first, but is rather a republication of the original"); 1872, Jones v. Walker, 47 Ala. 175, 178, 183 (deed of Federal government-land to plaintiff, filed at the land-office; production required); 1888, Woodstock Iron Co. v. Roberts, 87 Ala. 436, 438, 6 So. 349 (transcripts of land-patents; Jones v. Walker, repudiated, since the document is in official files; Hines v. Greenlee followed; the original is the public record and of course cannot be produced); 1889, Ross v. Goodwin, 88 Ala. 390, 391, 396, 6 So. 682 (same); 1893, Beasley v. Clarke, 102 Ala. 254, 255, 14 So. 744 (same); 1895, Holmes v. State, 108 Ala. 24, 26, 18 So. 529 (same, for a letter of and constitutive document being the Government record, not removable from official custody, it may be proved by a copy therefrom (ante, § 1218) with-cancellation of entry); 1902, Hammond v. Blue, 132 Ala. 337, 31 So. 357 (U. S. land-patent or a certified copy is preferred to a tract book); 1905, Butt v. Mastin, 143 Ala. 321, 39 So. 217 (not a certified copy from a tract book, but the patent or a certified copy, held the original); the provision for tract-books in Code 1907, § 3979, supra, was added in 1907 to meet the ruling in Hammond v. Blue, supra; and wording of Code 1907, § 3980, was also rephrased so as to meet the ruling in Butt v. Mastin, supra;

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 536 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 9896):

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1747 (certificate of purchase or of location or duplicate receiver's receipt of land in this State, etc., is evidence of title, except as against the U. S.);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4120 (certified copy, by register or receiver of land-office of the State, of entries in books or of papers filed, admissible); § 1533 (recorder's certified copy of recorded deed of commissioner of State lands, admissible); 1848, Finley v. Woodruff, 8 Ark. 328, 342 (State land-office claim-entries, etc., are primary, so that copies are receivable); 1892, Dawson v. Parham, 55 Ark. 286, 290, 18 S. W. 48 (entries of purchase in swamp-land-office, receivable); 1893, Steward v. Scott, 57 Ark. 153, 158, 20 S. W. 1088 (land-office entry, semble, held secondary to the certificate therefrom in showing title); 1905, Carpenter v. Smith, 76 Ark. 447, 88 S. W. 976 (State land commissioner's exemplification of a swamp-land patent, without accounting for the original patent, not admitted); 1905, Covington v. Berry, 76 Ark. 460, 88 S. W. 1005 (similar); 1905, Carpenter v. Dressler, 76 Ark. 400, 89 S. W. 89 (State land commissioner's certified transcript of his records, not admissible "without first accounting for the deed or certificate"; careful opinion by Hill, C. J., confirming Covington v. Berry, Carpenter v. Smith, supra, and explaining and modifying the opinion in Boynton v. Ashabranner, 75 Ark. 415, 88 S. W. 566, 1011); 1909, Thornton v. Smith, 88 Ark. 543, 115 S. W. 677 (duplicate deed of State land commissioner, issued under § 4730, Kirby's Digest, held not a new deed, but a duplicate only);

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1925 ("A certificate of purchase or of location of any lands in this State, issued or made in pursuance of any law of the United States or of this State, is primary evidence that the holder or assignee of such certificate is the owner of the land described therein"); § 1927 (mineral land-patent to be evidence of date of location of claim); 1859, Geogory v. McPherson, 13 Cal. 562, 572, 574 (the grant of land by a Mexican governor, forming part of the 'expediente' or whole record of granting, is the original, of which the copy or certificate to the grantee is only a copy; a proof of the former may therefore be made without accounting for the latter; Mexican grant on file in U. S. Surveyor-general's office; examined copy allowed, there being an inability to remove original from office); 1860, Natoma W. & M. Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 544, 549 (Mexican grant on file in U. S. Surveyor-general's office; production not required, the presence of the original there being shown, and certified copy under the statute being used); 1861, Soto v. Kruder, 19 Cal. 87, 94 (Mexican grant on file in Surveyor-general's office; in using an examined copy at common law, the legal impossibility of taking the original from the file must be shown; but if under the statute a certified copy is used, the original need not thus be expressly accounted for); 1867, Donner v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 500, 509 (same as Gregory v. McPherson, for Alcalde's book of grants); 1874, Sill v. Reese, 47 Cal. 294, 348 (approving Donner v. Palmer); 1877, Bixby v. Bent, 51 Cal. 590 (translation only, without original or certified copy, of Mexican grant on file in land-office, excluded); 1891, Eltzroth v. Ryan, 89 Cal. 135, 139, 26 Pac. 647 (U. S. land-patent; certified copy from land-office receivable, without accounting for patentee's certificate);

Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 6540 (U. S. land-office register's certificate of entry on purchase, admissible, but a patent is to be paramount title); § 6545 (recorded patent provable by copy like recorded deed); § 1149 (certified copy of recorded deed of State land by Governor, admissible);

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2724 (State lands; conveyances or title, etc., provable by certificate of State commissioner of agriculture); 1886, Liddon v. Hodnett, 22 Fla. 442 (certified copies of patents from U. S. general land-office, admitted); 1894, Sullivan v. Richardson, 33 Fla. 1, 98, 14 So. 692 (early Spanish grant; the grantee's document, on the facts, treated as an original, and admissible);

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 6300 (party's oath that original grant is "not in his power or possession and that he knows not where it is", sufficient); 1878, Brown v. Driggers, 60 Ga. 114, 115; 62 Ga. 354, 355 (homestead plat given to party is the original, as against a certified copy);

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2594 (in proving "any grant of land, lease, or other conveyance of any Government land or real estate, it shall not be necessary to produce the original patent, grant, lease or conveyance", but a certified copy under the hand and official seal of the proper officer suffices); § 340 ("land patents, leases, grants, or other conveyances of any government land or real estate", provable by the commissioners' certified copy under official seal, which is admissible "the same as the original instrument itself"); out regard to the whereabouts of the grantee's certificate, which is thus merely a copy of the official book. If, on the contrary, the latter alternative above

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7958 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1925);
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 19, § 10 (deeds, etc., affecting land by trustees of Illinois and Michigan canal or canal commissioners, provable by certified copy of record); § 11 (books and entries of sale by the same, provable by certified copy under official seal of secretary or commissioners); c. 30, § 41 (St. 1879, May 29) (on affidavit by party or agent that "the required U. S. patent conveying or concerning the title to the lands" in question "is lost, or not in the power of the party wishing to use it on such trial of any such case, and that to the best of his knowledge said patent was not intentionally destroyed, or lost, or in any manner disposed of for the purpose of introducing a copy thereof in place of the original", and if the original has been recorded with the county recorder, then the record or recorder's certified copy is admissible); c. 51, § 20 (U. S. land-office register's certificate of entry on purchase of any tract of land in his district, admissible); § 21 (land-patent to be paramount title to register's certificate); § 22 (where State land has been sold and Governor's patent issued, and "said patent has been or shall purport to be recorded" in the county "and said patent shall be lost, or out of the power of the party desiring to use the same to produce in evidence", recorder's certified copy is admissible to prove issuance and contents of patent; rule to apply to U. S. land-patents and certain canal deeds); § 23 (certified copy by custodian of "book and entries" of sale of State lands, admissible; certificate of purchase or issuance of patent admissible, but patent is to be paramount title; custodian's certified copy of "books and entries" of sales of swamp and overflowed lands, admissible; officer's certificate of sale or entry thereof and execution of deed therefor, admissible in place of deed, "if the original deed be lost, or it be out of the power of the party wishing to use the same to produce it in evidence, and such original deed has never been recorded"; and whenever both the deed is lost, etc., and the books of sale, etc., "have also been lost or destroyed", and a proper return of such sales has been made to the auditor of public accounts, the auditor's certified copy under official seal of such return is admissible); c. 122, § 265 (recorded State patent for school lands, provable by certified copy); § 266 ("duplicate copies" of such certificates of purchase and patents, obtained after affidavit of "loss or destruction of the originals", admissible); 1844, Graves v. Bruen, 6 Ill. 167, 172 (an auditor's patent to public land; copy from the record in case of loss not receivable; duplicate patent necessary); 1855, Lane v. Bommelmann, 17 Ill. 95 (land-patent; original need not be produced because a public record); 1861, Lee v. Getty, 26 Ill. 76, 80 (land-office record or recorded paper; provable by exemplification); 1868, Huls v. Buntin, 47 Ill. 396, 397 (patent lost; certified copies of the land-office books of entry, admissible); 1883, Wilcox v. Jackson, 109 Ill. 261, 265 ("half-breed scrip" and locations under it); 1886, Gormley v. Uthe, 116 Ill. 643, 649, 7 N. E. 73 (land-office records proved by exemplified copy); 1870, Seely v. Wells, 53 Ill. 120 (records of U. S. land-office, admitted); 1909, Black v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co., 237 Ill. 500, 86 N. E. 1065 (record of general land-office reciting a selection of a tract approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, admitted);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 482, 484, 491 (records of U. S. land-office or office for sale of Canal or Michigan road lands, provable by certified copies by keeper or State Secretary or auditor); § 492 (State or Federal patents of Indiana land, and record thereof, and certified copies, admissible); § 493 (record of all patents, certificates of purchase, etc., "whether issued by the U. S. or by this State, or made by any person or corporation", admissible like the original; also certified copies thereof); §§ 486, 487 (Wabash and Erie canal lands); 1838, Smith v. Mosier, 5 Blackf. 51, 53 (U. S. land-office patents; original must be accounted for; affidavit filed in local land-office, not being removable, copy admissible); 1842, Rawley v. Doe, 6 Blackf. 143 (first point of preceding case followed); 1847, Stephenson v. Doe, 8 Blackf. 508, 512 (same; but doubting for the case of a non-patentee offering the recorded copy);
Iowa: Code 1897, § 4633, Comp. Code, § 7340 (U. S. land-patents recorded in county, provable by recorder's certified copy); Comp. Code, §§ 7348, 7349 (land-office receiver's receipt or duplicate receipt; quoted post, § 1678, n. 2); 1853, Stone v. McMahan, 4 Greene 72 (land-office receiver's duplicate receipt is an original under the statute); 1858, Curtis v. Hunting, 6 Ia. 536 (recorded land-patent; original required); 1880, Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lewis, 53 Ia. 101, 107, 4 N. W. 842 (certified copies of land-office selections, admitted);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7284 (like Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, § 8917); § 7285 (certified copy, by register or receiver having custody, of papers lawfully deposited with U. S. land-office in the State and official communication thereto from any Federal department, admissible like the original); § 6792 (certified copies under official seal by register of deeds of U. S. land-patents recorded in county, admissible); § 6793 (U. S. land-patent, provable by certified copy "the same as the original"); § 10643 (State land-office records; register's certified copies under official seal to be "presumptive evidence of the facts to which they relate"); is taken, the grantee's patent, certificate, or other document, is the original, and the Government book is merely a copy of it, so that the necessity of pro-

Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 1445 (recorded land-patent or register's certificate, or receiver's receipt, by officers of Louisiana or of general Government, provable by recorder's certified copy; provided the party "made affidavit that the original of such patent or certificate is not in his possession or under his control", and opponent may dispute genuineness); 1823, Roman v. Smith, 1 Mart. N. s. 473 (whether the Spanish Governor's 'decreto' or his grant was an original delivered to the grantee, or whether the official record of it was the original); 1836, Montreuil v. Pierre, 9 La. 356, 371 (Spanish notary's original, register, and 'traslado', examined); 1836, Vidal v. Duplantier, ib. 525 (Spanish 'testimonio'); 1841, Lavergne v. Elkins, 17 La. 220 (Spanish land-grant); 1859, Beauvais v. Wall, 14 La. An. 199 (title-deeds filed in land-office; production not required);

Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 57 (land-office commissioner's certified copy under seal of any patent, certificate, entry in book deposited, or paper filed, admissible); § 58 (same for certificate in land-office with surveyor's notes, etc.; admissible "as if it were the original paper and proved to be" in the surveyor's writing and the surveyor proved dead);

Michigan: Comp. L. § 11717 (land-patent provable by certified copy of record); § 12520 (documents, etc., filed or recorded in U. S. land-office in Michigan, provable by register's or receiver's certified copy); § 409 (same for Secretary of State's certified copy under seal of Federal approval of land selections); § 560 (same for his copy of land-patents for internal improvements); § 4168 (tax homestead land deeds issued by State land-office commissioner; custodian's certified copy of record, to be evidence like the original); 1856, Lacey v. Davis, 4 Mich. 140, 150 (certified copy of U. S. land-patent, received where the original was lost); 1876, Bradley v. Silsbee, 33 Mich. 328 (land-patents recorded in office of Secretary of State; original required, because not authorized to be so recorded);

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8450 (receipt or certificate of register or receiver of any U. S. land-office as to entry, purchase, or location, to be evidence of title); § 8451 (certificate of register or receiver of any U. S. land-office within this State, as to entry under homestead, etc., laws, to be prima facie evidence of ownership); § 8454 (U. S. patents of land in this State, or duplicates from U. S. general land-office, recorded in county registry of deeds, provable by record or certified copy by register, like other conveyances of realty); § 8455 (survey-plats, provable by certified copy by register of land-office);

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1959, Hem. § 1619 (certificates issued by authorized person, in pursuance of Act of Congress, founded on warrant, etc., from U. S., of land in this State, admissible); § 1961, Hem. § 1621 (copies from books of land-entries "kept in any land-office in this State, or in the office of the Secretary of State, or land-commissioner, or other public office", certified by the officer having charge, admissible like the original certificate or entry); 1838, Doe v. M'Caleb, 2 How. Miss. 756, 767 (land-office certificate; original must be accounted for); 1839, Wooldridge v. Wilkins, 3 How. Miss. 360, 367 (land-patent at registry must be produced, by subpœna if necessary; but entries in the registry-books, provable by copy); 1846, Sessions v. Reynolds, 7 Sm. & M. 130, 152 (land-office certificate; copy allowed); 1896, Boddie v. Pardee, 74 Miss. 13, 20 So. 1 (as between the original certificate of entry of public land and a certified copy of the book of entries, there is under Code §§ 1782–1784 no preference for the former; both being merely copies of the entry which determines the title);

Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5354 (confirmations before commissioners of land claims or recorder of land-titles, provable by certified copy by recorder or by lawful custodian); § 5355 (certificate or record of land-titles for New Madrid earthquake sufferers, and "all other books and papers" required to be kept in his office, provable by his certified copy); § 5357 (grants, etc., in "Livre Terrein", and other French or Spanish records and evidences of title lawfully deposited with recorder of land-titles, provable by his certified copy); § 5371 (letters from U. S. land department, land commissioner's lists of land, etc., recorded by register of lands, provable by register's certified copy); § 5372 (certain ancient archives of French or Spanish Government, affecting land-titles, and deposited with St. Louis recorder, provable by certified copy); § 7024 (certified copy of record swamp-land-patent, admissible); § 10578 (county recorder's certified copy under official seal of recorded land-patents, admissible); § 5356 (old French and Spanish land-grants; cited more fully post, § 1676 a); § 5361 (all papers required to be kept in U. S. land surveyor's office, provable by his certified copy); 1838, Waldo v. Russell, 5 Mo. 387, 394 (land-patent, proved by copy); 1858, Barton v. Murrain, 27 Mo. 235, 237 (patent in land-office, provable by certified copy); 1879, Avery v. Adams, 69 Mo. 603, 604 (land-office patent by certified copy; original need not be accounted for);

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 6892 (U. S. or Montana letters patent; when lost or beyond the party's control, a certified transcript by the lawful custodian, when recorded, shall have "the same force and effect as the original, for title or for evidence, until the said original letters patent be recorded"); § 10575 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1925);

Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 5645 (certificates, ducing or accounting for the grantee's document depends upon the rule of the particular jurisdiction adopted for the ordinary case of a recorded conveyance (ante, § 1225):

patents, etc., of U. S. land-office, locally recorded, provable by certified copy of register of deeds or county clerk); § 8917 (certificate of land-office receiver as to sale to individual admissible if duplicate receipt is lost or destroyed; but is not proof of title against the holder of actual patent);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 1044 (State or U. S. "contract or patent" for land, recorded, provable by certified transcript); § 5415 (U. S. or Nevada patents to land provable by county recorder's certified copy);
New York: Cons. L. 1909, Public Lands, § 5 (letters patent to public lands; State secretary's certified copy of recorded patent, admissible "with the same force and effect as the original"); 1832, Peck v. Farrington, 9 Wend. 44 (original Federal patent need not be produced);
North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, §§ 1751–1762 (grants of land from State; various methods provided for proof by certified copy, and special methods provided for lands in certain counties, etc.);
Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 8524 (auditor's certified copy of State deed, admissible if the deed is "lost or destroyed by accident");
Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 649 ("The usual duplicate receipt of the receiver of any land-office", or, if that be lost or destroyed or beyond the reach of the party, the receiver's certificate that the books of office show a sale, is proof "equivalent to a patent against all but the holder of an actual patent"); § 650 (certified copy, by register or receiver of U. S. land-office in this Territory, of papers lawfully there deposited and of official communication there received from any department of U. S. Government, admissible): 1904, Enid & A. R. Co. v. Wiley, 14 Okl. 310, 78 Pac. 96 (record of a U. S. land-patent in a county registry of deeds; original required to be accounted for, under Rev. Ann. St. 1903, § 4575);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 9896 (record or certified transcript of duly recorded land-patent, admissible like the original); § 5561 (State lands; land board to preserve "a true copy of all such deeds", and "such copies shall be primary evidence of such conveyance"); § 5589 (irrigated desert land; similar to preceding statute); §§ 597, 598 (where deeds or patents to State or U. S. lands have been lost before record in county of location, certified copies from issuing office may be used for recording and admitted in evidence);
Pennsylvania: St. 1833, Feb. 16, § 1, Dig. 1920, § 10336, Evid. (record of patents for donation lands, receivable); St. 1828, Jan. 25, § 1, Dig. 1920, § 10334, Evid. (deeds duly recorded in the land-office, though not in the proper county, provable by exemplification); 1835, DeFrance v. Stricker, 4 Watts 327, 328 (land-patent; copy of the register "in a contest with a party not claiming under the original", receivable);
Philippine Isl. Civ. C. §§ 1216–1230 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. §§ 4290–4304); 1909, Yacapin v. Jibero, 12 P. I. 510 (a deed from the State not recorded under the royal order of Jan. 12, 1893, is nevertheless valid and admissible);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 4290–4304; (these provisions represent Spanish law, resting on principles different from the Anglo-American laws; quoted ante, § 1225);
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 569 (the record, or a certified copy, of the recorded copy of U. S. land-patents, etc., or of a recorded certified copy thereof, are "admissible in evidence without further proof"); St. 1921, c. 352, amending Rev. Code 1919, § 569 (certified copy of recorded letters patent, etc., admissible);
Tennessee: 1813, Duncan v. Blair, 2 Overt. 213 (certified copy of warrant containing land entry; the recorded entry, not the party's location for the entry, is the original); 1899, State v. Cooper, — Tenn. Ch. —, 53 S. W. 391 (certificate of survey of land-grant, not required to be produced; affidavit of loss required, but not strictly dealt with; affidavit of a single party suffices; the opinion contains a detailed history of the land-grant laws in Tennessee);
Texas: all the ensuing cases, except the last, deal with Spanish 'testimonios' and related documents: 1844, Smith v. Townsend, Dallam 569 (leading case); 1848, Houston v. Perry, 3 Tex. 390, 393; 5 Tex. 462, 464; 1851, Lewis v. San Antonio, 7 Tex. 288, 311; 1851, Herndon v. Casiano, 7 Tex. 322, 332; 1851, Paschal v. Perez, ib. 348 (leading case); 1852, Titus v. Kimbro, 8 Tex. 210, 212 (leading case); 1852, Hubert v. Bartlett, 9 Tex. 97, 102; 1853, Wheeler v. Moody, 9 Tex. 372, 375; 1856, Byrne v. Fagan, 16 Tex. 391, 398; 1859, Nicholson v. Horton, 23 Tex. 47; 1860, Word v. McKinney, 25 Tex. 258, 268; 1876, Blythe v. Houston, 46 Tex. 65, 77; 1877, State v. Cardinas, 47 Tex. 250, 286, 290; 1878, Gainer v. Cotton, 49 Tex. 101, 114; 1883, Houston v. Blythe, 60 Tex. 506, 513; 1886, Ney v. Mumme, 66 Tex. 268, 17 S. W. 407 (land-patent);
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7098 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1925);
Virginia: Code 1919, § 417 (State land-office register's certified copy of grant of public land, to be 'prima facie' evidence of title); 1796, Lee v. Tapscott, 2 Wash. 276 (attested copy of land-patent recorded in County Court, admitted, without production of land-register or other books, here the date being old and 1905, HILL, C. J., in Carpenter v. Dressler, 76 Ark. 400, 89 S. W. 80: "The first question for consideration is the effect to be given to a certified transcript from the office of the Land Commissioner, when offered in evidence to prove a transfer therein shown. The statute (§ 3064, Kirby's Dig.) only provides that, when properly certified, it shall be received in evidence of the existence of the records of which the transcript is a copy. It does not provide whether it shall be primary or secondary evidence, and the question here is whether such transcript can be received as original evidence to prove the issuance of a certificate or deed, without first accounting for the deed or certificate. In other words, does this statute make the record of the transaction required by law to be kept in the land office of the same grade of evidence as the certificate or deed issuing from the land office as a result of the transaction there recorded?

"One view to take of it is that the law requires a record to be had of the transaction, say a land sale, and as evidence of the consummation of that sale the deed is issued, and it is evidence, but not the only evidence, of the sale; for this record must precede the issuance of the deed, and the deed is based upon the transaction therein recorded. In this view the record and deed would be original evidence of equal grade, and this statute makes the certified transcript of the record equal to the record itself. This is the view taken, under closely analogous statutes, in Mississippi and Alabama. . . . The other view of the question is that the record in the land office is a public memorandum of the transaction, and that the primary evidence of the transaction is the deed or certificate issued by the Land Commissioner, and this public memorandum is only admissible evidence after the loss or destruction of, or inability of the party to produce, the original is shown, and then this public record (and by statute certified transcripts thereof) becomes the highest grade of secondary evidence to prove the transaction therein recorded. . . .

"This latter view is more consonant to the previous decisions of this Court."

The answer to this question of property-law has differed in different jurisdictions, and it would be without the present purview to examine the reasons for this variance in the results. It is enough to note that there are three different classes of Government grants involved, namely, the ordinary land-grants of the Federal and State Governments (having several sub-varieties — "patent", "scrip", "location", etc.), the land-grants of the Spanish Government (affecting chiefly titles in Louisiana, Missouri, and Texas), and the land-grants of the Mexican Government (affecting chiefly titles in Arizona, California, New Mexico, and Texas).

§ 1240. Same: (e) Tax-Lists Ballots, Notarial Acts, and Sundry Documents. Similar questions, depending wholly on some principle in another branch of the law, are to be noticed in various directions. For example, whether the possession having followed; Lyons, J., diss.);

Washington: 1860, Ward v. Moorey, 1 Wash. Terr. N. S. 104 (land-office papers, proved by certified copies);
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4151 (any record, etc., of purchase or entry of land in U. S. general land-office or land-office located in this State, provable by certified copy by secretary of the interior, commissioner of the general land-office, or register of the land-office "respectively, having the custody thereof"); § 4151 a (certified copy of document, etc., lawfully kept in office of commissioners of public lands in this State, admissible); § 4152 (lists of land certified as conveyed to the State by the President, the head of any department of the U. S. Government, the commissioner of the general land-office, or "any other office of the Government", admissible); § 4165 (receiver's certificate of purchase of public lands, and official certificate of entry, etc., by any register or receiver, admissible to show title); § 4153 (certain official deeds and certificates of title to public lands, admissible);
Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 4588 (if the certificate of purchase or payment by any land-office receiver be "lost or destroyed or beyond the reach of the holder, secondary evidence of its contents is proof of title to the lands therein described, equivalent to a patent against all, except the United States or a holder of a patent from the United States").

tax-list or assessment-roll as drawn up by the assessor or as placed in the hands of the collector, is the original to be proved, depends on the theory of tax-law.[1] Whether the ballots cast at an election, or the certificate of the election-officers, is to be regarded as the proper object of proof in establishing the result of an election, involves the theory of election-law.[2] The traditional doctrine of notarial acts is that the notary's book-entry is the original act, and that hence the protest-copy first sent need not be produced.[3] In these, and in similar cases depending on some principle of another department of law,[4] no question of evidence is raised, for the application of the rule of Evidence is simple enough when the other principle of law has been decided.

§ 1240. [1] See the following examples: Ind. 1836, Coman v. State, 4 Blackf. 241, 243 (assessment-roll is the original, as against the collector's transcript); 1884, Standard Oil Co. v. Bretz, 98 Ind. 231, 235 (tax-list duplicate; "each of the lists has all the force and effect of an original instrument"); Tex. 1886, Clayton v. Rhem, 67 Tex. 52, 2 S. W. 45 (assessment-roll); W. Va. 1885, Battin v. Woods, 27 W. Va. 58, 63, 72 (official list of lands redeemed from tax-sales; tax-receipts not held originals; Johnson, P., diss.).

For the admissibility of the assessor's books, see post, § 1640.

For testimony to the fact of an entry in such books, see post, § 1244.

Compare the statutes allowing certified copies (post, § 1680), and the parol evidence rule (post, § 2427).

[2] Ariz. 1898, Pusch v. Brady, 5 Ariz. 400, 53 Pac. 176 (oral testimony to contents of ballots not produced, not admissible); Ind. 1866, Wheat v. Ragsdale, 27 Ind. 191, 205 (ballot must be produced, if it is in existence and can be identified; otherwise, the voter may be asked for whom he voted; "we are aware that this course of examination would most probably be of but little practical importance, as but few voters would likely be able to identify their ticket; but, when insisted upon, it would be the proper course of examination, as being in conformity with the strict rules of evidence"); 1878, Reynolds v. State, 61 Ind. 392, 416, 424 (when preserved according to law, production required; certificate of canvassers is not sufficient, nor oral testimony of voters, as a substitute); 1892, Crabb v. Orth, 133 Ind. 11, 32 N. E. 711 (that the witness, a minor, voted for A; production of ballots unnecessary); La. 1880, Warren v. McDonald, 32 La. An. 987, 990; Nebr. 1912, Deeder v. State, 92 Nebr. 662, 138 N. W. 228 (fraudulent counting of ballots; production of the specific ballots, required); Oh. 1869, Sinks v. Reese, 19 Oh. St. 306, 319 (testimony by candidate and others that by counting ballots he had found errors in the returns; ballots, poll-book, and tally-sheet, required to be produced).

For the questions whether the results shown by the ballots are to override the official canvass, or whether the official canvass may be disputed by testimony of other persons, see post, §§ 1351, 2452.

For the question whether a voter may testify orally to his vote, in spite of the parol evidence rule, see post, § 2452.

[3] 1851, Geralopulo v. Wieler, 10 C. B. 690, 712 ("the general rule with respect to notarial instruments, that a duplicate made out from the original — or protocol — in the notarial book, is equivalent to an original made out at the time of the entry in the book"; here admitting a duplicate protest made after trial begun, instead of requiring secondary evidence of the one sent abroad at the time); 1851, Phillips v. Poindexter, 18 Ala. 579, 582 (original protest is the entry in notary's book, which is an official book, and therefore a copy of this may be received without accounting for the protest issued by him to the parties); 1857, McFarland v. Pico, 8 Cal. 626, 635 (certificate of record of protest equally good with the original). Compare the statutes dealing with the admissibility of the notary's protest (post, § 1675).

In Louisiana, for sales, the notary's record has perhaps a peculiar status: 1902, Hodge v. Palms, 54 C. C. A. 570, 117 Fed. 396 (Louisiana notary's copy of his record of an "act of sale" is a duplicate original; compare the cases cited ante, § 1225).

[4] Eng. 1824, Salte v. Thomas, 3 B. & P. 188 (to show the cause of a commitment to prison, an entry in the prison books, held merely a copy of the warrant of 'committitur', which was the true original); U. S. Fed. 1826, Catlett v. Ins. Co., 1 Paine C. C. 594, 612 (certified copy of ship's register; register the original); 1904, Brown v. Harkins, 131 Fed. 63, 65 C. C. A. 301 (distiller's books, and the transcript in the collector's office, required to be kept by U. S. Rev. St. 1878, §§ 3318 and 3330; status as originals, considered); S. Car. 1897, Long v. McKissick, 50 S. C. 218, 27 S. E. 636 (the sheriff's sale-book, and not the preliminary memorandum made at the sale); C. C. P. 1922, § 782 (bills of lading; quoted post, § 2132, n. 5); Vt. 1888, Lycoming F. I. Co. v. Wright, 60 Vt. 155, 521, 12 Atl. 103 (insurance license; no law

§ 1241. (4) Records, Accounts, etc., as Exclusive Memorials under the Parol Evidence Rule. By the principle of Integration or Parol Evidence (post, § 2425), a particular writing becomes under certain circumstances the exclusive repository of a transaction, superseding all other writings and rendering them legally immaterial. It follows that in proving the transaction this integrated document, or exclusive memorial, is the one, and the only one, to be produced or accounted for; the production of no other will suffice. Here, again, as in the two preceding groups of cases (§§ 1235, 1236), there is no controversy about the present rule of Evidence; the rule applies to whatever document is declared by the substantive law to be the one material to the issue, and when the substantive law declares that a specific document is the sole material one and that others are worthless, the rule of production plainly applies to the former. Thus, the problem involved is one of the Parol Evidence rule, not of the present rule. The question arises chiefly in two sorts of cases: (a) The law sometimes requires integration, i.e. makes a certain writing the exclusive memorial. The chief representative type of this class is the judicial record. The question thus arises whether, for example, a clerk's docket-book is the record and may be produced instead of the judgment-book, or whether an original writ is the record in the same sense.[1] (b) By act of the parties an integration may occur, i.e. the transaction may be embodied in a single written memorial, to the exclusion of all others; and then, in proving the transaction, the former must be produced, but the latter cannot be.[2]

(e) "Whenever the purpose is to establish its Terms"

§ 1242. General Principle; Facts about a Document, other than its Terms, provable without Production. (1) The fundamental notion of the rule requiring production is that in writings the smallest variation in words may be of importance, and that such errors in regard to words and phrases are more likely to occur than errors in regard to other features of a physical thing (ante, § 1181). Thus the rule applies only to the terms of the document, and not to any other facts about the document. In other words, the rule applies to exclude testimony designed to establish the terms of the document, and requires the document's production instead, but does not apply to exclude testimony which concerns the document without aiming to establish its terms:

requiring a record of it, the license itself is the original); W. Va. 1886, Singer v. Bennett, 28 W. Va. 16, 22 (original and duplicate of agreement of incorporation filed in separate State offices are both originals).

Compare the statutes admitting certified copies of public records (post, § 1680); the rule for conclusive registers or certificates (post, § 1352); and the parol evidence rule as applied to official documents (post, §§ 2427, 2453).

§ 1241. [1] These questions are dealt with post, § 2450.

[2] Questions of this sort are dealt with post, §§ 2427, 2429; though occasionally it is difficult to distinguish whether the principle involved is that of Parol Evidence or of § 1235, ante, for example, where it is asked whether a deposit-ticket or a pass-book is the document to be proved in showing a deposit received.

1826, MILLS, J., in Lamb v. Moberly, 3 T. B. Monr. 179 (allowing proof of the fact of purchase of a note, without production): "We cannot agree . . . that the production of the note was necessary. It could only be held necessary by not attending to the distinction between proving the existence and contents of a note and the sale of a note. Of the former, the note is the better evidence; but of the latter the note furnishes no evidence. . . . The existence of a note is as certainly perceived by the senses or acknowledged in conversation as that of any other article of commerce; and it might as well be urged that before the acknowledgments of a sale of any other article could be given in evidence the article itself must be produced in court in order that the Court might see that it really existed, as that a note thus sold should be produced."

1839, GREEN, J., in Enloe v. Hall, 1 Humph. 303, 310 (assumpsit for services in printing and publishing advertisements in a newspaper; production of the paper not required): "The work and labor for which this suit is brought was done upon the paper. . . . As well might the tailor be required to produce the coat or the watch-maker the watch as evidence that the work had been performed."

This much is generally accepted; the difficulty arises in applying the principle to specific cases. Testimony about a document cannot go very far without referring to its terms, and the instances in which some other fact about a document is material, and yet its terms are clearly not, are so few that in the other situations the natural tendency of Courts is to lean in favor of requiring production; since production would have to be made sooner or later in proving the terms as a material part of the issue. The line between testifying to terms or contents and testifying to other facts is not only thus difficult to draw in a given case, but its determination tends to become a matter of merely logical subtlety and verbal quibbling. There seems to be no way of invoking in its settlement any broad notion of policy definite enough to be useful in solving a given case. Moreover, apart from a few general classes of instances, the rulings depend generally upon the particular state of facts presented in each case and changing slightly in each instance, so that the rulings are generally of little profit as precedents.

(2) Besides this, the concurrent operation of the principle of Integration, or Parol Evidence (post, § 2429) has frequently to be distinguished. By that rule the oral part of a transaction may be legally annulled and made immaterial; so that though the oral part could be proved, so far as the present principle is concerned, without production, yet by the Integration rule the oral part is declared immaterial and ineffective and cannot be proved in any manner, so that the document becomes the exclusive transaction and must be proved and therefore produced. For example, the fact that a sheriff has served a writ or has read it aloud to the party is a fact separate from the terms of the document, and could therefore be proved without production of the writ, so far as the present principle is concerned; but, so far as the Parol Evidence rule declares that the sheriff's indorsement of service on the writ is the sole memorial of the act, the oral doings become immaterial, and in proving the act, the terms of the writing must be proved, and therefore production is necessary. In the same way, so far as the law does not recognize an oral transfer of land, the terms of the written document may alone be proved; and, so far as the parties to any contract have voluntarily embodied it in a single writing, the writing alone, and no oral matters accompanying it, may be proved. Thus, in these cases, and in many other instances to be noted, the present principle would allow proof of an oral statement without producing a document concerned in it, and the requirement to produce the document is due solely to the operation of the Parol Evidence rule, which forbids the oral matter to be proved at all. The operation of the latter rule should not mislead us to attribute the result to any exception to the present principle or to an inconsistency in the judicial application of it.

(3) For the reason just noted, the controversy that often arises as to who shall produce a contract, is usually dependent in the same way on the Integration (or Parol Evidence) rule, and not on any doubt as to the present principle. For example, A sues B for work done on B's house, and upon the cross-examination of A's witness or upon the examination of B's witness, it is testified that the contract for the work was reduced to writing by the parties, and the question then arises which party shall produce it; for the party whose duty it is to produce it can go no further in his proof of the contract's terms without producing or accounting for it. In form, this is a question under the present rule; in reality, it is not. The question really is, under the Parol Evidence rule, whose duty it is to prove the contract to have been integrated, i.e. reduced to writing; is it the duty of the claimant alleging performance, or of the opponent alleging non-performance? So soon as this question as to the duty to prove the integration is settled, the present rule comes into application without any question, i.e. if it is A's duty to prove the writing, of course it is A who must produce or account for it, and 'vice versa'. This question is therefore dealt with elsewhere (post, § 2447).

§ 1243. Application of the Principle: (1) Oral Utterances accompanying a Document read or delivered; (2) Document as the Subject of Knowledge or Belief. (1) When an oral utterance accompanies a dealing with a document, and assuming that the oral utterance is not forbidden to be proved by the Parol Evidence rule (as noted in the preceding section), the oral utterance may be proved as a separate fact, without producing the document:

1808, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in Smith v. Young, 1 Camp. 439 (proof of a demand, in an action of trover, was oral, the witness stating that he had both orally demanded and also in writing served notice): "I may do an act of this sort doubly. I may make a demand in words and a demand in writing; and both being perfect, either may be proved as evidence of the conversion. If the verbal demand had any reference to the writing, to be sure the writing must be produced; but if they were concurrent and independent, I do not see how adding the latter could supersede the former or vary the mode of proceeding."

1875, Tilton v. Beecher, Abbott's Rep. I, 389: Witness for plaintiff: "[Mr. Tilton had written the story of the whole affair for publication and wanted Mr. Beecher to hear it before publication,] and Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher, 'I will read to you one passage from this statement, and if you can stand that, you can stand any part of it', and he read to him a passage from that statement, which was about as follows as nearly as I can recollect." Mr. Evarts, for defendant: "The statement will speak for itself." Mr. Fullerton, for plaintiff: "What did he read?" Mr. Evarts: "We want that paper and the part of it that was read, as it appeared in that paper, and it is not competent to recite out of a written paper by oral proposition what the written paper is the best evidence of." Mr. Fullerton: "I propose to show what communication was made by Mr. Tilton on that occasion to Mr. Beecher; I do not care whether it originated in his own mind, or whether it was read from a paper, printed or written; it makes no difference; what it was that he said to him is what I have a right to." Judge NEILSON: "I think the witness can state what was said to Mr. Beecher, although he stated matter that had been incorporated in writing."

This result is illustrated in a variety of cases.[1]

(2) Where a person's knowledge or belief about a document is material, the knowledge or belief may be shown as a fact separate from the document's terms, without producing it.[2]

§ 1244. Same: (3) Identity of Document; (4) Summary Statement of Tenor of Multifarious Documents; (5) Absence of Entries. (3) Where a document is referred to as identical with or the same as another document, or as helping to identify some transaction or some other physical object, the question is a difficult one; and the ruling will depend upon whether in the case

§ 1243. [1] England: 1801, Jacob v. Lindsay, 1 East 460 (to prove a defendant's admission of indebtedness, a witness was allowed to testify that he had taken the account-book to the defendant, gone over the items with him, and heard the defendant admit the receipt of each one; the book could not be produced, being without the required stamp; production held not necessary); 1820, R. v. Hunt, 1 State Tr. N. S. 171, 252 (sedition; resolutions read at a meeting; printed copy verified as correctly giving what was read, allowed without producing the writing actually read); 1820, R. v. Dewhurst, 1 State Tr. N. S. 529, 558 (sedition; resolutions read from a paper; objection of no notice overruled; Bayley, J., "No; that has been decided over and over again; though a man reads from a paper, a person may give an account of what he hears him say"); 1839, Trewhitt v. Lambert, 10 A. & E. 470 (the plaintiff read from a writing, and the defendant assented, not seeing the writing; held, that the oral transaction might be proved); United States: 1873, Paige v. Loring, Holmes U. S. 749 (fraudulent transfer to creditor; to show an admission, a witness was allowed to testify to the words of the defendant who took up a letter and read it to the witness, the thing to be proved being not the contents of the letter, but "what the defendant stated to him to be the contents"); 1902, Brown v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc'y, 14 Haw. 80, 82 (reading from a letter); 1869, First Nat'l Bank v. Priest, 50 Ill. 321 (that a cashier, asked for returns of sales, showed the plaintiff an account of sales; production not required; the thing proved being "the answer made to the inquiry"); 1906, Purinton v. Purinton, 101 Me. 250, 63 Atl. 925 (letters read aloud by the plaintiff; the defendant not required to account for the letters); 1852, Glenn v. Rogers, 3 Md. 312, 321 (a written demand for payment, delivered by messenger, production required, since no oral demand accompanied it).

Contra: 1904, State v. Leasia, 45 Or. 410, 78 Pac. 328 (rule applied to the defendant's reading aloud of a letter; unsound; no authority cited); 1909, Eads v. State, 17 Wyo. 490, 101 Pac. 946 (larceny of a horse; time of knowing about or authorizing a telegram whose contents were undisputed; production not required).

For other questions arising in such cases as R. v. Hunt, supra, where a printed document is concerned, compare ante, §§ 1233–1235, § 415.

[2] Eng. 1816, Wyatt v. Gore, Holt N. P. 299, 303 (in proving previous currency of similar rumors in mitigation of damages for libel, the fact of their circulation in a newspaper was offered; production not required); U. S. 1897, Scullin v. Harper, 24 C. C. A. 169, 78 Fed. 460 (issue as to good faith in making a charge against an employee; the charge having been made after reading a record in a time-book, held that the book need not be produced to show what was read); 1897, Kearney v. State, 101 Ga. 803, 29 S. E. 127 (whether a witness knew of a document affecting her interest, admitted without production); 1874, State v. Cohn, 9 Nev. 179, 188 (over-insurance as motive for arson; amount of insurance which insured believed he had, shown without production of policies).

Contra: 1844, Com. v. Bigelow, 8 Metc. 235 (conversation about a bill to show the defendant's knowledge of its counterfeit character; rule applied to require production of the bill).

in hand greater emphasis and importance is to be given to the detailed marks of peculiarity or to the document as a whole regarded as an ordinary describable thing:

1845, Lawrence v. Clark, 14 M. & W. 250, 252; plea of fraud, to an action on a bill of exchange; to identify the bill spoken of as fraudulent, the bill was required to be produced. POLLOCK, C. B.: "The difficulty is, how do you prove the identity but by the contents?" ROLFE, B.: "You want to show that when a certain writing took place on a certain piece of paper, certain concomitant circumstances attended it; but then you must show it to be the same writing, as that which is stated on the record."

There is here naturally some inconsistency in the rulings.[1]

(4) Where the total balance of accounts is desired to be stated, as by testimony to a person's solvency, or to a year's total sales, or to a year's aggregate profits, it is possible to regard the net result as something independent of the detailed terms of the account-books, and therefore provable without production; though there is here room for much difference of opinion.[2] But

§ 1244. [1] Eng. 1867, R. v. Elworthy, 10 Cox Cr. 579 (perjury in stating that there was no draft of a certain statutory declaration; the identity of the draft so sworn to became material, i.e. which of two drafts was referred to; for proving the contents of a document said to be the draft in question, the rule was held applicable; Bramwell, B.: "If the only question had been as to the existence of a draft, the point would not have arisen; but it was thought fit to give evidence of the contents of it", and so "the general rule applies"); U. S. Fed. 1862, Boucicault v. Fox, 5 Blatchf. 87, 91 (copyright; whether the incidents of a drama were the same as those of a book; production of the book and the play required); Ark. 1869, Peterson v. Gresham, 25 Ark. 380, 386 (to identify a quantity of cotton, evidence that a receipt for thirty-six bales had been given was admitted, without producing the receipt); Ind. 1879, Lingenfelser v. Simon, 49 Ind. 82, 89 (identification of note; production not required); Ia. 1885, Sunberg v. Babcock, 66 Ia. 515, 24 N. W. 19 (whether an invoice seen was the same as that in controversy; production required); 1900, Myers' Estate, 111 Ia. 584, 82 N. W. 961 (identification of letters; production not required); Md. 1867, Higgins v. Carlton, 28 Md. 135 ("whether the memorandum differed from the will in any other respects?" excluded); Mass. 1857, Newcomb v. Noble, 10 Gray 47, semble (that a horse at a place was the same one described in a mortgage; production of the mortgage not required merely for this purpose); Mo. 1845, St. Louis P. Ins. Co. v. Cohen, 9 Mo. 416, 439 (possession of a paper; it may be described to identify it without production); N. J. 1849, West v. State, 22 N. J. L. 212, 238 ("the witness had sworn that he believed that the deed in question was not identical with a deed which had been previously seen by him", describing the differences; production not required, because "it was a simple question of identity or diversity"); 1861, Gilbert v. Duncan, 29 N. J. L. 133, 139 (whether the note sued on or another was agreed to be given; production of the other not required).

[2] Eng. 1791, Roberts v. Doxon, Peake 83 (one who had seen the accounts; "though he could not state the particulars of the books without producing them, yet he might speak to the general amount; . . . what from his general observation he perceived to be the general state of their accounts"); U. S. Ga. 1910, Cabaniss v. State, 8 Ga. App. 129, 68 S. E. 849 (bank-officer's payment of unjustifiable dividend; principle applied to lists of notes, etc. charged off as insolvent, etc.); Ill. 1904, Smythe's Estate v. Evans, 209 Ill. 376, 70 N. E. 906 (a bookkeeper's statement of the footings of figures, etc. is admissible, but not of the amount of profits shown); Mass. 1864, Stratford v. Ames, 8 All. 577 (amount of a bill rendered; production required); Mich. 1882, Steketee v. Kimm, 48 Mich. 322, 325, 12 N. W. 177 (aggregate amount of sales, allowed without producing the books); Pa. 1827, Pipher v. Lodge, 17 S. & R. 214, 226, per Rogers, J. ("The proof of the state of a person's pecuniary affairs is general in its nature; . . . it never was required that you should show a bill of sale for his personal property or the title-deeds of his real estate"); S. C. 1898, Murdock v. Mfg. Co., 52 S. C. 428, 29 S. E. 856 (profits of a mill, as based on the books of the mill; production required).

For solvency testimony, as affected by the opinion rule, see post, §§ 1957, 1959.

For dispensing with the production of voluminous accounts, see ante, § 1230.

For accounts as subjected to the Integration rule, see post, §§ 1339 ff.

the fact that a specific entry or item exists or was made may directly involve the terms of the document, so far at least as the fact of the entry can be distinguished from a status or relation produced by it.[3]

(5) On the other hand, the fact that an entry in a record or account-book does not exist, while in a sense it involves the document's terms, yet is usually and properly regarded as not requiring the books' production for proof; this may be justified either on the present ground or on that of the inconvenience of producing voluminous documents (ante, § 1230); it is difficult to ascertain which reason is the one judicially approved.[4]

[3] England: 1801, R. v. Coppull, 2 East 25 (whether a person was assessed for parish rates; the books must be produced); 1813, Henry v. Leigh, 3 Camp. 499 (the fact of the allowance of a certificate of bankruptcy; certificate required); 1856, Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. 1, 5, 10 (whether a person's name is written in a book containing the names of members of an association; production required); Canada: 1880, Appleby v. Secord, 28 N. Br. 403 (testimony of one present at a trial, not admitted to show what the dispute and the decision were; production of record required); United States: Ala. 1837, Kennedy v. Dear, 6 Port. 90, 96 (of a justice, whether a certain case was before him, allowed without production); 1855, Doe v. Reynolds, 27 Ala. 364, 376 (facts of foreclosure and sale; record must be produced); 1893, Roden v. Brown, 103 Ala. 324, 327, 329, 15 So. 598 (whether a bank's books showed an account with B.; production required); Ark. 1872, Burk v. Winters, 28 Ark. 6 (that a person was assignee in bankruptcy; production required); Colo. 1895, Union Pacific R. Co. v. Jones, 21 Colo. 340, 40 Pac. 892 (whether a verdict had been recovered; record required); Conn. 1811, Arnold v. Smith, 5 Day 150, 155 (that a ship had been libelled and condemned; rule applied); 1871, Supples v. Lewis, 37 Conn. 568 (the fact that an execution had been issued and given to an officer; production not required); Ill. 1829, Humphreys v. Collier, 1 Ill. 297 (that a person had been discharged in insolvency; record required); Ind. 1861, Scott v. Scott, 17 Ind. 308 (that certain persons were assessed for land; assessment roll required); 1879, Binns v. State, 66 Ind. 428, 430 ("the pendency of a suit, the parties to it, and its subject-matter, may be proved by parol, where the record is not the ground of the action"); 1889, Hewitt v. State, 121 Ind. 524, 23 N. E. 83 (maliciously killing a dog; to prove that it was listed for taxation, tax-list not required); 1892, File v. Springel, 132 Ind. 312, 31 N. E. 1054 (that a mortgage was held and a mortgage-suit was begun; production of mortgage and record unnecessary); Md. 1795, Owings v. Wyant, 3 H. & McH. 393 (that the defendant was a common innkeeper, such persons being required to be licensed; production not required); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2817, 3162, 3397 (village or city or county condemnation proceedings; register's testimony as to persons shown by records to be owners, admissible); Nebr. 1899, Reynolds v. State, 58 Nebr. 49, 78 N. W. 483 (that a person was divorced; production of decree or copy required); N. J. 1849, Chambers v. Hunt, 22 N. J. L. 552, 562 (fact of a trial involves the production of the record); 1849, Browning v. Flanagin, 22 N. J. L. 567, 577 (proving the existence of a judgment lien; production of the judgment required); Oh. 1848, Smiley v. Dewey, 17 Oh. 156, 159 (fact of appeal taken; record required); R. I. 1898, Stone v. Langworthy, 20 R. I. 602, 40 Atl. 832 (by a member of a town council, that a road was a highway, excluded); Vt. 1841, Cross v. Haskins, 13 Vt. 536, 540 (testimony by one receiving oil that he had credited H. for it on his books; the books not required to be produced); 1844, Sherwin v. Bugbee, 16 Vt. 439, 444, semble (existence of school district; records not required); W. Va. 1874, Hubbard v. Kelley, 8 W. Va. 46, 52 (that an appeal had been taken; production required).

Compare some of the cases under § 1249, post.

For the fact of conviction of crime, see post, § 1270.

For appointment to office, see post, § 2535.

For the fact of incorporation, see post, § 1625.

[4] The following list includes also the few cases contra, which are expressly so noted: ENGLAND: 1831, R. v. Backler, S. C. & P. 118 (like People v. Eppinger, Cal.); 1834, R. v. Brannan, 6 id. 326 (same); 1852, Maule, J., in Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 930, 938 ("Suppose a man is asked whether he made an entry in his day-book, and he says No; it cannot be necessary to produce the book"); UNITED STATES: Federal: 1865, Blackburn v. Crawfords, 3 Wall. 175, 183, 191 (that a marriage register did not contain an entry of a certain marriage; production required); 1873, Burton v. Driggs, 20 Wall. 125, 136 (absence of certain facts in record, allowed to be shown), 1917, Alabama Fidelity & C. Co. v. Alabama P. L. S. Bank, 200 Ala. 337, 76 So. 103 (embezzlement; expert's testimony to non-appearance of entries that should have been made to account for moneys, admitted);

§ 1245. Same: (6) Fact of Payment of a Written Claim; Receipts. (a) When a payment of money is made in discharge of a written claim — as, of a bond, a judgment — or in obedience to a written order, the fact of paying, including the amount paid, is usually a fact separate from the terms of the writing thus discharged, and the latter's production is not necessary. Nevertheless, in a given instance the terms of the writing may come to be drawn indirectly into the act of payment, — as where the question arises whether one draft or another was the object of the payment. For the ordinary situation first mentioned, it is generally agreed that production is unnecessary, but in instances of the latter sort production has been in some instances required.[1]

California: 1894, People v. Eppinger, 105 Cal. 36, 38 Pac. 538 (forgery of check on B. C. Bank in name of H. & Co.; teller's testimony that no firm of that name "kept or had any account in his books", admitted); Connecticut: 1905, McPhelemy v. McPhelemy, 78 Conn. 180, 61 Atl. 477 (that no entry of a certain marriage occurred in a parish-book, allowed); Georgia: 1852, Elkins v. State, 13 Ga. 435, 440 (clerk allowed to testify that no liquor-license had been granted to E.; no record being required to be kept, the record is not complete; where a record is required, then it must be produced to show that no such part exists); 1886, Mayson v. Atlanta, 77 Ga. 663, 665 (like Elkins v. State); 1899, Aspinwall v. Chisholm, 109 Ga. 437, 34 S. E. 568 (absence of entry in account-books; production required); 1903, Vizard v. Moody, 117 Ga. 67, 43 S. E. 426 (that no tax returns were found in the records where they would properly be, admitted); 1907, Wilson v. Wood, 127 Ga. 316, 56 S. E. 457 (that no administration has been granted, admissible from one who has made a thorough examination of the records); Illinois: 1874, Chicago v. McGraw, 75 Ill. 566, 571 (that no sales of U. S. land in a district were made; production of records required); Indiana: 1853, Nossaman v. Nossaman, 4 Ind. 648, 651 (by a clerk, that no such marriage-record appeared, allowed); 1864, Board v. Reinhart, 22 Ind. 463 (that the defendant had never before in any transactions made a certain claim; production of the written transactions not required); 1871, Lacey v. Marnan, 37 Ind. 168, 170 (by the U. S. land-register, that no land-entry existed, allowed); Iowa: 1906, Colton's Estate, 129 Ia. 542, 105 N. W. 1008 (attorney's testimony to the absence of a decree of a certain tenor, admitted; the official custodian not preferred; Sykes v. Beckwith, N. D., disapproved; good opinion by Ladd, J.); Kentucky: 1907, Stamper v. Com., — Ky. —, 100 S. W. 286 (by the county clerk, that no deed of a certain sort was recorded, allowed); Massachusetts: 1902, Com. v. Best, 180 Mass. 492, 62 N. E. 748 (that no warrant for an arrest had been issued, admitted from one who had searched the record); Michigan: 1901, Wagner v. Supreme Lodge, 128 Mich. 660, 87 N. W. 903 (testimony of the clerk of a lodge to plaintiff's non-membership, excluded on the facts); Missouri: 1883, Burnett v. McCluey, 78 Mo. 676, 689 (that a part of a record did not exist; production required; after evidence of its existence and loss by opponent, evidence of its non-existence is admissible in rebuttal); Nebraska: 1895, Smith v. Bank, 45 Nebr. 444, 447, 63 N. W. 796 (principle conceded; but one who has merely searched the index of a registry of deeds may not speak as to the absence of a record); North Dakota: 1903, Sykes v. Beck, 12 N. D. 242, 96 N. W. 844 (attorney's testimony that the county records contained nothing of a certain tenor, excluded; the official custodian's testimony is required); 1903, Fisher v. Betts, 12 N. D. 197, 96 N. W. 132 (whether the tax records did not contain a warrant of levy; the custodian required to be called, in preference to an attorney who had searched the records); Ohio: 1834, Emrie v. Gilbert, Wright 764 (accounting; whether an order on K. was included in the accounts due; production not required); Washington: 1921, Hoptowit v. Brown, 115 Wash. 661, 198 Pac. 370 (by an official, that no rule existed requiring an Indian allottee to pay certain charges, allowed); Wisconsin: 1905, State v. Rosenthal, 123 Wis. 442, 102 N. W. 49 (that no record of naturalization existed, allowed, for one who had made a search).

Compare the instances ante, § 1230.

Whether an official custodian's certificate that no entry or document exists is admissible is another question (post, § 1678).

Whether the opinion rule affects this kind of testimony is noticed post, § 1657.

Whether the custodian's certificate or testimony is preferred, is considered post, §§ 1272, 1273.

§ 1245. [1] Eng. 1801, Bayne v. Stone, 4 Esp. 13 (action to recover half of a payment made to a joint obligee by a surety; the security-document not required to be produced); U. S. Fed. 1811, Fairfax v. Fairfax, 2 Cr. C. C. 25 (payment of bond; production and proof

(b) The fact that a receipt was given by the other party does not change the result, so far as the present principle is concerned.[2] But under the Integration (or Parol Evidence) rule the question may arise whether the receipt has not become the sole memorial of the transaction, so as to exclude the parol act of payment from consideration (post, § 2432). This question is generally answered in the negative.

(c) Where the medium of payment is not coin or paper-money, but a check, note, or other form of written obligation, the case for requiring production may be more clear (than in (a) supra), for in paying with money it is usually a mere matter of counting the number of pieces, while in paying with an instrument of obligation the terms of the writing may be of consequence; at any rate, when they do receive any emphasis under the issues, it would seem that the rule of production should apply.[3] of execution not required); 1827, Patriotic Bank v. Coote, 3 Cr. C. C. 169 (assumpsit for overdraft; whether a check was drawn in a firm-name; production required): Ala. 1834, May v. May, 1 Port. 129 (whether payment had been made under a power of attorney to M.; to prove that the power was to S., production required); 1843, Planters' & M. Bank v. Borland, 5 Ala. 531, 543, 545 (that payment of certain drafts had been made, and that a payment on judicial process had been made; production not required, the contents not being material to the issue); 1912, Brannan v. Henry, 175 Ala. 454, 57 So. 967 (payment of taxes); Ia. 1874, Hollenbeck v. Stanberry, 38 Ia. 325, 327 (payment of judgment, provable without production); 1894, Shaffer v. McCrackin, 90 Ia. 578, 580, 58 N. W. 910 (same); Md. 1861, Cramer v. Shriner, 18 Md. 140, 146 (settlement of accounts made on the basis of a memorandum; since the verbal transaction was independent of the writing, production was not required); Mich. 1876, Mason v. District, 34 Mich. 228, 234 (that money was paid out on written orders; production required); Minn. 1867, Lowry v. Harris, 12 Minn. 255, 271 (payment for deed; production not required); Mo. 1830, Benton v. Craig, 2 Mo. 198 (payment of money, but not terms of the draft paid, admitted without production); 1836, Davidson v. Peck, 4 Mo. 438, 444 (payment by co-defendant of judgment, and action against the other for the amount; payment of the judgment provable without producing it before the witness or reciting it in his deposition; carefully reasoned opinion); Mont. 1898, Whiteside v. Hoskins, 20 Mont. 361, 51 Pac. 739 (payment of a judgment; judgment not produced); N. H. 1903, Roberts v. Dover, 72 N. H. 147, 55 Atl. 895 (whether certain fees had been paid, allowed without producing records); Pa. 1847, Milliken v. Barr, 7 Pa. 23 (that there was another note of similar date and indorsements, on which the payment pleaded had really been made; production of the other note required); Vt. 1846, Hayden v. Rice, 18 Vt. 353, 358 (action for contribution against joint promisor; to prove payment on execution, execution need not be produced).

[2] 1836, Wiggins v. Pryor, 3 Ala. 430, 433 (that money was paid and a receipt taken; production not required); 1877, Davis v. Hare, 32 Ark. 386, 390 (payment of taxes; the collector's books not required); 1832, Dennett v. Crocker, 8 Greenl. Me. 239, 244 (payment of taxes provable orally, without producing the receipted bills); 1849, Chambers v. Hunt, 22 N. J. L. 552, 562 ("It is clearly competent to prove payment by parol, or rather by verbal testimony, even though there may be written evidence as a receipt or order"; but where the giving of an order of payment on a third person, and its tenor, was to be shown as payment, production was required).

See also the cases cited post, § 2432.

[3] 1791, Breton v. Cope, Peake 30 (plea, payment of a bond by transfer of bank-stock to the plaintiff; rule applicable, and copy of the transfer-book required); 1803, Dover v. Maestaer, 5 Esp. 92, semble (bribery; that the defendant gave the witness a £5 note, for which the witness signed a note payable on demand, admitted without producing the documents); 1880, Ware v. Morgan, 67 Ala. 461, 466 (that a payment was made by bill of exchange; production not required); 1859, Daniel v. Johnson, 29 Ga. 207, 210 (that notes were given in payment, production not required); 1858, Ohio Ins. Co. v. Nunemacher, 10 Ind. 234, 237 (that in an offer of payment by check and note of a certain tenor was made; production required); 1890, Coonrod v. Madden, 126 Ind. 197, 25 N. E. 1102 (that a check was given in payment of note B, and not of note A, the one in suit; production of note B not required); 1865, Cecil Bank v. Snively, 23 Md. 253, 263 (that certain notes had been paid over by being sent to a bank and collected; production not required).

§ 1246. Same: (7) Fact of Ownership; (8) Fact of Tenancy. (7) The mere fact that a person is owner of property, whether real or personal, is a distinct thing from the terms of the document or documents by which he has become owner; although instances may be supposed in which the relation of ownership involves so directly the terms of a specific deed that the rule of production applies.[1] (8) The fact that a person occupies the relation of tenant, as to a piece of land or its owner, is a distinct fact; for he may have become tenant by parol or by writing, and the tenancy is the result of the transaction, and is not the transaction itself. Nevertheless, so far as the terms of a written tenancy are drawn into the question, the rule of production begins to be applicable.[2]

§ 1246. [1] Fed. 1811, Wilson v. Young, 2 Cr. C. C. 33 (title-interest in an insured ship, production required); Ala. 1880, Street v. Nelson, 67 Ala. 504, 507 (contract for sale of personalty; title to personalty "can be proved as a fact by oral testimony", unless the question arises between the parties); 1890, Florence L. M. & M. Co. v. Warren, 91 Ala. 533, 537, 9 So. 384 (testimony that the witness had not title, admitted); 1892, Wolfe v. Underwood, 97 Ala. 375, 378, 12 So. 234 (petitioners testifying that they own stock; books not necessary); Fla. 1904, Leon v. Kerrison, 47 Fla. 178, 36 So. 173 (conversion of a yacht; production of the bill of sale to the plaintiff, not required); Georgia: 1858, Newsom v. Jackson, 26 Ga. 241, 245 (that B.'s wife owned certain negroes; deed required); Ill. 1890, Kirkpatrick v. Clark, 132 Ill. 342, 345, 24 N. E. 71 (whether a person was owner of land; oral testimony excluded); Mass. 1897, Westfield Cigar Co. v. Ins. Co., 169 Mass. 382, 47 N. E. 1026 (whether a person owned a building; "title by deed must ordinarily be proved otherwise than by the oral testimony of the owner"; but here the objection was not properly made); Minn. 1867, McMahon v. Davidson, 12 Minn. 357, 369 (that a person was owner of a steamboat, allowed, "in the absence of any evidence that there was any writing"); 1868, Fay v. Davidson, 13 Minn. 523, 525 (same); Miss. 1867, Baldwin v. McKay, 41 Miss. 358, 362 (whether the plaintiff owned cotton; production of bill of sale required); N. J. 1916, Re McCraven, 87 N. J. Eq. 28, 99 Atl. 619 (appointment of a guardian; sundry pedantic rulings as to the net effect of documents); Oh. 1834, Lloyd v. Giddings, Wright 694 (whether a lot was included within the boundaries of a conveyance produced; deeds adjoining the boundary not required to be produced); Pa. 1852, Strimpfler v. Roberts, 18 Pa. 283, 296 (letter claiming ownership; production of title-deeds not required); 1892, Gallagher v. Assur. Co., — Pa. —, 21 Atl. 115 (that a certain person owned a leasehold; production of bill of sale not required); Tenn. 1871, Hart v. Vinsant, 6 Heisk. 616 (replevin for rails cut; in showing the boundary of land by title-bond, production required); Tex. Rev. P. C. 1911, § 1292 (criminal destruction of timber on land of another; ownership of land is provable by State "by verbal testimony of title or of notorious use and possession of the land by some person other than the defendant").

For testimony to ownership as objectionable under the Opinion rule, see post, § 1960.

[2] England: 1810, Doe v. Morris, 12 East 237 (ejectment against a tenant; tenancy proved by evidence of the payment of rent); 1810, Doe v. Pearson, 12 East 239, note (same; no objection raised in either case from the present point of view); 1820, R. v. Castle Morton, 3 B. & Ald. 588 (to show the value of a tenement occupied by a pauper, the writing of lease was held to be necessary); 1825, Cotterill v. Hobby, 4 B. & C. 465 (case for injury to a reversioner's interest by cutting trees; the written lease required to be produced); 1827, R. v. Holy Trinity, 7 B. & C. 611 (to prove the occupation of a tenement, as involving the settlement of a pauper, and to prove the amount of rent paid, the rule was not applied; the fact of tenancy and the value of the rent were proved by cross-examination without producing the written lease); 1828, Strother v. Barr, 5 Bing. 136 (action for injury to the plaintiff's reversion; whether, to prove the fact of the reversionary interest, the written agreement of lease must be shown, left undetermined, Gaselee and Park, JJ., contra, Best, C. J., and Burrough, J., pro; all the preceding cases are examined); 1830, R. v. Merthyr Tidvil, 1 B. & Ad. 29 (amount of rental; lease required to be produced; distinguishing R. v. Holy Trinity, because there the amount was merely incidental as evidence of value, while the later law of settlement of paupers made the amount of agreed rental material); 1832, Doe v. Harvey, 1 Moo. & Sc. 374 (to prove the value of the premises, in an action for mesne profits, by showing the occupation by the defendant as tenant of P. and the amount of his rent, the rule was held

§ 1247. Same: (9) Fact of Transfer of Realty, or (10) of Personalty. (9) It would seem a hard rule that would forbid a witness to say "I bought a house" without producing the title-deed; and yet how otherwise are we to avoid the argument that, since transfers of title to land must be in writing, oral testimony to such a transfer is testimony to the contents of a document not produced? The truth seems to be that much depends on the emphasis to be given in the particular instance to the detailed elements of the transfer. If, for example, a witness is qualifying as an expert in land values by stating that he has bought and sold land, the emphasis is upon the net fact that he has acted as buyer and seller, and not at all on the terms of the transfer; but if he is justifying a trespass as landlord of the premises, the emphasis is upon the fact that a document exists naming him and describing the premises; production should be required in the latter case, but not in the former. The rulings therefore vary, as might be expected; but it may be noted that the negative result is reached in some Courts by invoking the rule (§ 1252, post) as to collateral matters.[1] applicable; the fact of occupation as tenant might have been proved apart from the writing, but not the tenancy under P.).

United States: Ga. 1885, Central R. Co. v. Whitehead, 74 Ga. 441, 445, 447, 452 (action for personal injury on a road said to be leased by defendant; plaintiff allowed to prove that it was leased, without producing the writing; Hall, J., diss.); Ind. 1879, Hammon v. Sexton, 69 Ind. 37, 43 (fact of tenancy or occupancy provable by parol, in action by occupant against owner for taxes paid); Mich. 1870, Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 Mich. 5, 18 (trespass by lessee; to prove tenancy, production of lease required); Minn. 1906, Minnesota Deb. Co. v. Johnson, 96 Minn. 91, 107 N. W. 740 (whether defendant claimed land under D., "Did you hold it under D.?" "Yes, I rented it from him", held proper without producing the lease; "the terms of the tenancy were not in issue"; lucid opinion by Elliott, J.); Miss. 1875, Storm v. Green, 51 Miss. 103, 106 (terms of a written lease; production required); N. H. 1855, Putnam v. Goodall, 31 N. H. 419, 423 (whether a factory was leased to a specific person; production required); Va. 1871, Taylor v. Peck, 21 Gratt. 11, 17 (unlawful detainer, brought by landlord; the defendant, to prove himself tenant in possession, offered the plaintiff's receipts for rent, without producing the lease; received, because "the terms of the tenancy or of the lease . . . was perfectly immaterial; if he held them at that time as tenant, no matter on what terms and conditions, he held them lawfully"; R. v. Holy Trinity followed).

Distinguish the question which party has the burden of showing the agreement to be in writing (post, § 2447).

§ 1247. [1] In the following list are included rulings upon other kinds of transfers (e.g. of slaves) required to be in writing: Ala. 1828, Cloud v. Patterson, 1 Stew. 394 (that a house and lot had been sold as the property of J. S.; production of deed required); 1896, Goodson v. Brothers, 111 Ala. 589, 20 So. 443 (that land was sold by the sheriff as the plaintiff's; production required); Ga. 1859, Raines v. Perryman, 29 Ga. 529, 534 (that a slave was given to M.; deed required); 1876, Primrose v. Browing, 56 Ga. 369, 371 (that a conveyance was made to X; deed required); Ill. 1860, Snapp v. Pierce, 24 Ill. 156, 158 (that a deed was executed in satisfaction of a bond; production of bond required); Ia. 1851, Trimble v. Shaffer, 3 Greene Ia. 233 (that a deed was given, allowed without production); Ky. 1838, Nancy v. Snell, 6 Dana Ky. 148, 156 (sale of slave; bill of sale required); 1868, Calhoon v. Belden, 3 Bush 674, 676, semble (in proving lost deed, a deed, not an oral transfer, must be shown); La. 1847, Roebuck v. Curry, 2 La. An. 998 (that a slave had been emancipated; production of written act required); Mass. 1821, Tucker v. Welsh, 17 Mass. 160, 165 (assumpsit by the assignee of a policy; to disprove the existence of a consideration for a prior assignment, the fact of a mortgage was held orally provable, as a "collateral fact"); Mich. 1866, Thompson v. Richards, 14 Mich. 172, 183 (condition to give a deed: production required, in proving that a deed was given); 1869, Clemens v. Conrad, 19 Mich. 170, 173 (agreement to give deed; production not required, in testifying that a deed was given); 1873, Hatch v. Fowler, 28 Mich. 205, 210 (sale of land; production of contract required); 1891, Showman v. Lee, 86 Mich. 556, 563, 49 N. W. 578 (to whom a mortgage was given; production not required); Minn. 1913, Johnson v. Carlin, 121 Minn. 176, 141 N. W. 4 (lease of a farm: the

(10) The rule's application to the fact of a sale of personality depends upon the same considerations. It should be noted, however, that it is immaterial that the law does not require a writing for the sale of personalty, if in fact the sale was in writing.[2]

§ 1248. Same: (11) Execution of a Document; (12) Sending or Publication of a Demand, Notice, etc. (11) Where the existence or execution of a document is concerned, a good deal must depend on the emphasis in the particular instance. For example, to prove a pecuniary motive for murder, testimony that the defendant had seen the deceased receive a sum of money at the bank and give notes for it might be made without producing the notes; but, in an action for property transferred with intent to defraud creditors, the execution of other similar transfers to show intent could not be proved without producing or accounting for the documents. The rulings naturally are not harmonious; and again it is to be noted that the doctrine about "collateral" facts (post, § 1252) is often invoked to justify negative rulings.[1]

lease provided that "if the lessor sells said premises during the life of this lease etc."; held, that the fact of sale to H. could be evidenced without producing the deed to H.); Miss. 1839, Randolph v. Doss, 3 How. Miss. 205, 214 (that an administrator had sold land; production required); Pa. 1892, Gallagher v. Land Co., 149 Pa. 25, 24 Atl. 115 (that the witness had bought certain houses; production not required).

Compare also some cases under § 1249, post, and the New York cases under § 1256, post.

For the bearing of the Opinion rule, see post, § 1960.

[2] The cases are not harmonious: Eng. 1815, Davis v. Reynolds, 1 Stark. 115 (the plaintiff had bought a consignment of goods from the consignee, taking the indorsed bill of lading; his title allowed to be shown without the bill); U. S. Cal. 1863, Towdy v. Ellis, 22 Cal. 650, 659 (sale of goods in writing; production required); 1849, Thompson v. Mapp, 6 Ga. 260 (fact and time of a written sale of personalty; production not required); Ky. 1813, Luckett v. Anderson, Litt. Sel. C. 178 (assumpsit against one who sold a false banknote; production not required); 1818, Grimes v. Talbot, 1 A. K. Marsh. 205 (purchase of personalty; bill of sale required to be accounted for); 1826, Lamb v. Moberly, 3 T. B. Monr. 179 (assumpsit for the price of a note bought; the fact of purchase and promise proved without production); Mich. 1875, Sirrine v. Briggs, 31 Mich. 443, 446 (sale of stock of goods; production of writing not required, the terms not being material); Or. 1898, Price v. Wolfer, 33 Or. 15, 52 Pac. 759 (tracing chain of title to personalty by successive sales and deliveries; production of bill of sale, if any, in each case, required).

§ 1248. [1] ENGLAND: 1848, R. v. Duffy, 7 State Tr. N. s. 795, 938 (one who saw a document written, not allowed to name the author without producing the original); 1848, Sayer v. Glossop, 2 Exch. 409 (rule applies to proof of handwriting).

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1853, Dixon v. Barclay, 22 Ala. 370, 381 (signature of a note in payment of a debt; production not required; here, action for deceit in a sale); 1854, Snodgrass v. Branch Bank, 26 Ala. 161, 173 (that the witness had seen notes of S. in the bank's possession; production not required to prove "the fact of the existence of such notes"); 1876, Bell v. Denson, 56 Ala. 444, 448 (fact of execution of mortgage, as showing possession; production required); 1886, Hancock v. Kelly, 81 Ala. 368, 378, 2 So. 281 (that a written instrument "relating to her dower interest" was signed, admissible without production); Conn. 1828, Mather v. Goddard, 7 Conn. 304 ("I shipped, as per B. L."; production required); Del. 1819, De Pusey v. Du Pont, 1 Del. Ch. 77 ("The naked fact of the execution of a paper may certainly be proved, under circumstances, without the production of the paper"; here production required in proving the fact of indorsement of notes as involving mismanagement of a partnership); 1871, Plunkett v. Dillon, 4 Del. Ch. 198, 205 ("The execution of an agreement and the time, place, and circumstances of its being made, may for all purposes be proved by parol"); Ga. 1859, Holcombe v. State, 28 Ga. 66, 67 (the fact of writing a letter, admissible without production); Ia. 1870, St. Louis & C. R. R. Co. v. Eakins, 30 Ia. 279, 281 (to show performance of conditions of stock subscriptions, the fact of letting a contract, etc., proved without producing the writings); Ky. 1819, Dupey v. Ashby, 2 A. K. Marsh. 11 (existence of a written contract; rule applicable on the facts);

(12) The act of delivering, sending, or publishing a document, regarded as distinct from the terms of the document, may of course be proved without production; but, so far as such proof implies anything as to the document's terms and seeks to establish those terms by indirection, the rule is applicable and production necessary.[2]

§ 1249. Same: (13) Sundry Dealings with Documents, — Conversion, Loss, Forgery, Larceny, Agency, Partnership, Corporation, Service of Writ, etc. In an action of trover for the conversion of a document, the existence

Mich. 1889, Ranney v. Donovan, 78 Mich. 318, 325, 44 N. W. 276 (that the defendant asked him to sign a receipt of a certain tenor, that he refused, handed it back, etc.; production not required; "it was simply a part of the conversation"); 1891, Muskegon v. Lumber Co., 86 Mich. 625, 628, 49 N. W. 489 (whether he made a return of the tax-roll to the treasurer, allowed without production); Mo. 1830, Benton v. Craig, 2 Mo. 198 (who filed or signed a plea; production not required); N. Y. 1878, Bardin v. Stevenson, 75 N. Y. 164, 166 (a witness to handwriting who had seen the defendant sign his name was allowed to say what kind of instruments he had signed, as affecting the degree of attention which the witness might have given); Oh. 1833, Ellis v. Baldwin, 6 Oh. 15 (to prove the fact of issuance of a license, production not required); Pa. 1860, Shoenberger v. Hackman, 37 Pa. 87, 92 (action on a promise to pay heirs in consideration of their signing a release; "it was simply the act of signing the paper" that was to be proved; "it was therefore a collateral matter to the issue", and production of the release was not necessary); Vt. 1919, Wetmore & M. G. Co. v. Ryle, 93 Vt. 245, 107 Atl. 109 (notes said to have been cancelled in consideration of signing the note in action; rule held not applicable).

Compare the rules as to order of proof of execution, loss, and contents, ante, § 1189.

[2] ENGLAND: 1808, Smith v. Young, 1 Camp. 439 (to prove the fact of a written demand or notice, production is necessary); 1813, Doe v. Durnford, 2 M. & S. 61 (the fact of giving written notice to quit, held to require the production of the writing); UNITED STATES: Georgia: 1847, Bond v. Central Bank, 2 Ga. 92, 99, 107 (contents of notice in a newspaper; production required); 1849, Schley v. Lyon, 6 Ga. 530, 538 (same); Idaho: 1916, Rabb v. North American Acc. Ins. Co., 28 Ida. 321, 154 Pac. 493 (that proofs of loss on an accident policy were sent, allowed); Illinois: 1851, Pierce v. Carleton, 12 Ill. 358, 364 (that a paper was published in the State by H. & S., allowed by parol); 1898, Lingle v. Chicago, 172 Ill. 110, 50 N. E. 192 (fact of publication of notice; provable without production); 1899, McChesney v. Cook Co. Collector, 178 Ill. 542, 53 N. E. 356 (fact of newspaper publication of notice; production not required); Indiana: 1855, Unthank v. Turnpike Co., 6 Ind. 125, 127 (oath of publisher with one copy, sufficient to show publication on three occasions); Iowa: 1866, Des Moines v. Casady, 21 Ia. 570, 572 (that an ordinance was published in a newspaper, and the number of times; provable by oral testimony, without producing the printed document; its contents being otherwise in evidence); 1869, Burlington G. Co. v. Greene, 28 Ia. 289 (fact of a notice given, production not required); 1886, Bish v. Ins. Co., 69 Ia. 184, 186, 28 N. W. 553 (that a proof of loss blank had been filled out and sent; rule not applicable); 1890, Hagan v. Ins. Co., 81 Ia. 321, 332, 46 N. W. 1114 (proof of loss; preparation and sending, provable without production); Louisiana: 1835, Miller v. Webb, 8 La. 516 (fact of publication of notice; production not required); 1837, Baker v. Towles, 11 La. 432, 438, semble (same); Maryland: 1867, Beall v. Poole, 27 Md. 645, 652 (the fact that complaints had been made by letter; production required); Nebraska: 1886, Ponca v. Crawford, 18 Nebr. 551, 553, 26 N. W. 365, 23 Nebr. 662, 668, 37 N. W. 609 (whether a petition was presented; production not required); New Mexico: 1915, State v. McKnight, 21 N. M. 14, 153 Pac. 76 (fact of sending a letter; original not required); New York: 1803, Peyton v. Hallett, 1 Cai. 363, 365, 380 (notice of abandonment of a vessel given by letter delivered; semble, the fact of notice provable without production; case obscure); Vermont: 1863, Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Thrall, 35 Vt. 536, 546 (notice in newspaper as required by law; production of a copy of the newspaper required; "in cases where successive notices are required, we should incline to think that the production of one paper to show the contents, and proof by parole that there were successive publications of the same notice, would be enough"); Virginia: 1817, Moore v. Gilliam, 5 Munf. 346, 347 (editor's testimony to fact of publication of advertisement, received without producing it); Wisconsin: 1874, Sexton v. Appleyard, 34 Wis. 235, 239 (fact of publication of notice; oral testimony sufficient).

For the use of a publisher's affidavit as an exception to the Hearsay rule, see post, § 1710; for its use as preferred to other testimony, see post, § 1339.

and the taking of a document of a certain sort may be regarded as facts distinct from its detailed terms, and thus the rule of production is not applicable:[1]

1802, Bucher v. Jarratt, 3 B. & P. 145. HEATH, J.: "There is a material difference between an action of assumpsit on a promise contained in an instrument in writing and an action of trover for the instrument itself. In the former the promise must be proved as laid, and consequently can be best proved by inspection of the instrument. In the latter the gist of the action is the tort." ROOKE, J.: "Where the written instrument is to be used as a medium of proof by which a claim to a demand arising out of the instrument is to be supported, there [notice is required . . .] before evidence of its contents can be received. But this being an action of trover for the certificate of registry itself, I can see no sound reason why evidence should not be admitted of the existence of the certificate, in the same manner as evidence of a picture or other specific thing is constantly admitted where it is sought to be recovered in the same form of action."

The same reasoning applies in other cases where the fact to be proved is merely some dealing with the document as a material object, for example, by larceny, embezzlement, or loss;[2] but otherwise for forgery or counterfeiting.[3]

An agency may have been constituted by a written authority; but the repeated acting upon it, being equally a granting of authority, may be proved without production.[4] By the same reasoning, the fact that a partnership

Compare the other cases on newspaper copies, ante, § 1234.

§ 1249. [1] 1794, Cowan v. Abrahams, 1 Esp. 50 (trover for a bill of exchange; the declaration described it; Lord Kenyon, C. J., held the rule applicable, and the King's Bench concurred; practically overruled by the above case); 1813, Scott v. Jones, 4 Taunt. 865 (Gibbs, J.: "It used to be the practice in actions of trover for bills of exchange to give notice to produce the bill; it has very lately been held in the Court of King's Bench that such notice is unnecessary"; here, trover for an agreement for a lease); 1830, Whitehead v. Scott, 1 Moo. & R. 2 (trover for a deed; production not required). The same result might be reached by treating the rule as applicable, but implying from the pleadings a notice to produce (ante, § 1205). The practical difference between the former and the latter reasonings would be that, if the document could not be produced for want of a stamp, by the former doctrine this would be immaterial, by the latter it would prevent proof by copy; but, further, that by the latter it would be necessary to show possession by the defendant.

[2] 1802, Anon., cited in Bucher v. Jarratt, 3 B. & P. 145 (indictment for stealing a written instrument; notice to the defendant to produce, "certainly not the practice", and intimated to have been held unnecessary); 1898, First Nat'l Bank of B. v. First Nat'l Bank of N., 116 Ala. 520, 22 So. 976 (action for loss of a package of transfers of land-certificates deposited, the claim of damages being for expense incurred in procuring substitutes; rule held not to apply to the transfers).

[3] 1880, Fox v. People, 95 Ill. 71, 75 (forgery; rule applies to proof of former utterings); Ia. 1885, State v. Breckenridge, 67 Ia. 204, 25 N. W. 130 (other forged notes used to show intent; holding absolutely that production is necessary); 1886, State v. Saunders, 68 Ia. 371, 27 N. W. 455 (similar; holding that the document must be either produced or accounted for); N. Y. 1823, People v. Lagrille, 1 Wheeler Cr. C. 412 (uttering counterfeit bills; other counterfeits must be accounted for by proof of destruction or of defendant's refusal on notice); Oh. 1847, Reed v. State, 15 Oh. 217, semble (other counterfeit bills should be produced or accounted for); Wis. 1865, State v. Cole, 19 Wis. 129, 134 (uttering counterfeit bill; to prove the uttering of other counterfeits as evidence of guilty knowledge, the bills must be produced or else accounted for by showing defendant's refusal to produce on notice or prosecution's inability to obtain them otherwise).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 1205 (notice to produce), and ante, § 318 (evidencing intent by other forgeries).

[4] 1794, Neal v. Erving, 1 Esp. 61 (an agency proved by habitual action, without producing the instrument); 1812, Spencer v. Billing, 3 Camp. 310 (whether the plaintiff had habitually accepted bills addressed to him as partner; oral evidence allowed; otherwise, if the mode of dealing had varied, which would then involve the proof of "an individual written instrument"); 1814, Haughton v. Ewbank, 4 Camp. 88 (to prove an agency, the defendant's habit of paying upon such documents signed by the agent was proved orally, though the authority was in writing).

Compare the effect of the Opinion rule (post, § 1960).

or a corporation exists may be proved without producing the articles of partnership or the corporate charter.[5]

In a large number of other instances, the result seems to depend on the present principle, though the precise grounds and the classification of the opinions are open to difference of interpretation.[6] It may be noted that where the

[1] Here, however, the principle in a given case may perhaps really be the one referred to ante, § 1242, par. 3, i.e. that it is the duty of the opponent to prove that written articles of partnership exist; or the principle may be that of § 1255, post, that the articles may be proved by oral admissions of the opponent; or it may be that the partnership or corporate existence is a "collateral" fact, under § 1252, post. The opinions are seldom clear as to the precise principle invoked: Cal. St. 1907, p. 984, Mar. 23, § 6 (illegal trusts; in prosecutions, the trust may be proved "without proving or producing any articles of agreement, or any written instrument on which it may have been based, or that it was evidenced by any written instrument at all"); Conn. Gen. St. 1918, § 6636 (stealing a bank bill; act of incorporation need not be proved); Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, § 5725 (trusts and combinations; production of "article of agreement or any written instrument on which it may have been based", not necessary); Ida. 1915, First National Bank v. Walker, 27 Ida. 199, 148 Pac. 46 (corporate existence of a national bank); Ia. 1871, Jones v. Hopkins, 32 Ia. 503, 506 (that a corporation was organized; rule applicable); Mo. 1875, Price v. Hunt, 59 Mo. 258, 261 (production not always required; but here required, the issue being whether a contract was one of partnership); Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 6399 (illegal trusts, etc., may be proved "without producing the written instrument on which it may have been based"); Pa. 1810, Widdifield v. Widdifield, 2 Binn. 245, 249 (though by one witness the existence of a contract of partnership was proved, another was allowed to testify to the existence of a partnership, because they might have "afterwards formed a general partnership by parol"); Tex. Rev. P. C. 1911, § 940 (forgery of a bank bill; "proof of the existence of such bank by parol testimony" suffices); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 4495 (trust or combination may be evidenced without producing "any article of agreement or any written instrument on which it may have been based"); Vt. 1852, Cutler v. Thomas, 25 Vt. 73, 79 (suit by creditor against partner; articles need not be produced by plaintiff); 1855, Hastings v. Hopkinson, 28 Vt. 108, 117 (plaintiff charging a defendant as partner probably may prove the partnership as a fact independent of the articles; but a defendant defending by alleging partnership is invoking the articles and must produce them).

[2] Eng. 1807, Horn v. Noel, 1 Camp. 61 (since a Jewish ceremony of marriage was merely the ratification of a previously written contract, to prove the fact of marriage, the contract was required); U. S. Fed. 1822, Hutchinson v. Peyton, 2 Cr. C. C. 365 (expenses in procuring insurance; production of policy required); Conn. 1795, Morgan v. Minor, 2 Root 220 (that a certain prize in a lottery was drawn by his number; rule applicable); 1837, Dyer v. Smith, 12 Conn. 384, 391 (whether a person had a certain note in his possession; production not required); Ga. 1885, Harris v. Collins, 75 Ga. 97, 108 (that deeds of a certain description were deposited, given up again, etc., allowed, without production); 1913, Matthews & Son v. Richards, 13 Ga. App. 412, 79 S. E. 227 (that a later note was given in renewal of a prior one; production of the later note required); Ill. 1858, Rawson v. Curtiss, 19 Ill. 456, 473 (that he saw a "letter of credit", excluded; production necessary); 1905, Elgin, J. & E. R. Co. v. Thomas, 215 Ill. 158, 74 N. E. 109 (death of a person riding on cars; the fact that he had in his satchel a ticket between two named points, admitted, without producing the ticket); Ind. 1875, Miller v. Road Co., 52 Ind. 51, 60 (that steps were taken to organize a corporation and that articles were filed; production not required); Ky. 1811, M'Ilvoy v. Kennedy, 2 Bibb 381 (that a claim was set up under a bill of sale; production not required); 1897, Barnes v. Com., 101 Ky. 556, 41 S. W. 772 (fact of receipt of a letter: rule not applied); Mass. 1853, Hunt v. Roylance, 11 Cush. 117 (mode of keeping accounts, etc; production of books required); Mich. 1886, Simpson v. Waldby, 63 Mich. 439, 444, 30 N. W. 199 (that drafts were protested, not paid, and returned; production required); Minn. 1894, Hobe v. Swift, 58 Minn. 84, 88, 59 N. W. 831 (measurement of printer's ems in an advertisement; production required); N. C. 1892, Shelton v. Reynolds, 111 N. C. 525, 16 S. E. 272 (fact of showing a paper, but not the contents; production not needed); S. C. 1803, Hurt v. Davis, 1 Brev. 304 (assumpsit for services performed in pursuance of a written agreement; production required); 1812, Ford v. Whitaker, 3 Brev. 244 (trespass q. c. f.; evidence that the trespassing person acted under written orders from the defendant; production required); Tenn. 1839, Enloe v. Hall, 1 Humph. 303, 310 (services in printing and publishing advertisements in a newspaper; production of the paper not required); 1873, Lacy v. Sugarman, 12 Heisk. 354, 363 (whether an fact to be proved is some dealing with a document which goes to form a judicial record — as, the serving of a writ, the time of trial begun — the Parol Evidence rule (post, § 2450) may forbid the parol transaction to be shown at all, because the act in legal significance is constituted solely by the return on the writ or some other appropriate part of the record.[7]

§ 1250. Same: (14) Miscellaneous Instances. For a great many instances in which the present question arises it is unprofitable to pursue analysis more minutely or to seek a solution in any of the preceding generalizations.[1]

B. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE

§ 1252. (1) "Collateral" Facts; History. It was clearly enough settled, in the era of the rule of profert (ante, § 1177), that profert need not be made of a document whose contents were but an inducement to the claim alleged or, as it was commonly said, of a document which was "mere collateral to the action"; subject only to the qualification that profert of such a deed was nevertheless to be made if the deed was requisite 'ex institutione legis':

act was done within the lines of military occupation; the fact of actual occupation provable by parol, but to prove the limits as defined by military written order, the order must be produced); Vt. 1856, Houghton v. Paine, 29 Vt. 57 (services in "gathering data and writing a memoir"; production of the memoranda, etc., made by the plaintiff, not required); 1892, Johnson v. Marble Co., 64 Vt. 337, 353, 25 Atl. 441 (that the proceeds of a check were received by A and spent in a certain way; production unnecessary); Va. 1788, Dawson v. Graves, 4 Call 127 (smuggling; testimony by W. that he had received 71 hogsheads though he had taken out a permit for 50 only; production of the permit required).

[7] Eng. 1807, Thomas v. Ansley, 6 Esp. 80 (to prove the time of notice of a trial, the notice was required; and to prove the date of the trial at Nisi Prius, the record was required); 1837, R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 297, 305 (the fact that a distraint was made under a warrant; rule not applicable); Can. 1851, Thorne v. Mason, 8 U. C. Q. B. 236 (malicious arrest; the writ required to be produced); U. S. Ill. 1886, Foster v. Magill, 119 Ill. 75, 82, 8 N. E. 771 (evidence of an act done to take possession of property does not require production of the record; but not so of a suit brought); Ind. 1876, Stanley v. Sutherland, 54 Ind. 339, 353 (that a farm had been sold on execution for a certain debt; allowed, the validity of the sale not being disputed); Ky. 1905, Goslin v. Com., 121 Ky. 698, 90 S. W. 223 (perjury; that a prosecution was pending; production required); Mo. 1856, Wynne v. Auburn, 23 Mo. 30 (that a mare was taken under a writ; production required); Vt. 1892, Bates v. Sabin, 64 Vt. 511, 521, 24 Atl. 1013 (services rendered in serving process; production unnecessary); 1905, State v. Costa, 78 Vt. 198, 62 Atl. 38 (illegal sale of liquors; a witness to search and finding under a warrant, not required to produce the warrant).

Compare the cases ante under §§ 1241, note 2, and 1244, note 3.

§ 1250. [1] Ala. 1845, Graham v. Lockhart, 8 Ala. 9, 25 (fact of indebtedness as consideration for a deed "may as well be proved orally as by the production of the writing"); Ala. Lavretta v. Holcomb, 98 Ala. 503, 510, [illegible] 789 (that a person was president of a [illegible] minutes not required); Cal. 1858, Poole v. Gerrard, 9 Cal. 593 (to rebut evidence of marriage by habit and repute, testimony involving the terms of the contract were not received without the writing); Mo. 1830, Foster v. Wallace, 2 Mo. 231 (proving a cosigner of a bond to have signed merely as surety for the other; testimony to the fact of a debt allowable, without producing the instrument); N. Y. 1904, Taft v. Little, 178 N. Y. 127, 70 N. E. 211 (testimony that certain building work was extra; production of plans and contracts required); Pa. 1835, Ranl [illegible] Shewey, 4 Watts 218 (that an apparent surety on a bond was by another bond really co-obligor; production of the second bond required); P. R. 1918, People v. Mercado, 26 P. R. 107, 119 (conspiracy to defraud); S. C. 1892, Price v. R. Co., 38 S. C. 199, 204, 17 S. E. 732 (employee's action for death; written regulation of the defendant must be produced, in proving a regulation); Tenn. 1870, Smith v. Large, 1 Heisk. 5, 7 (debt on account for leather delivered; in showing the existence of a bond to deliver it, the bond must be produced).

For the case of an appointment to office, see ante, § 1228.

1606, Lord COKE, in Bellamy's Case, 6 Co. Rep. 38 (trespass de bonis asportatis; the defendant pleaded ownership of the land; the plaintiff pleaded a lease assigned to him; the defendant pleaded a condition not to assign without the lessor's license; the plaintiff pleaded a license by deed, without making profert; then the defendant demurred): "the reason and cause that deeds are shewed to the Court is because it belongs to the judges to adjudge of the sufficiency or insufficiency of them; yet it was resolved that the plaintiff need not shew it in this case for three reasons: 1. Because the plaintiff doth not claim by the said deed of licence any interest in the house, but the licence is meer collateral to the interest of it and pleaded only to excuse the forfeiture of the lease, and is not like a release or confirmat, for they transfer their right; 2. A good difference was taken and agreed when a deed is requisite 'ex institutionis legis' and when 'ex provisione hominis'; for when it is requisite 'ex institutione legis', there it ought to be shewed in court, although it concerns a collateral thing and transfers or conveys nothing." [1]

By some process of thought not clearly traceable, this limitation to the doctrine of profert was in England early repudiated as a limitation to the rule requiring production in evidence:

1750, L. C. HARDWICKE, in Cole v. Gibson, 1 Ves. Sr. 503, 505 (bill to set aside an annuity; a bond which had been a part of the transaction was required to be produced): "A distinction is endeavored between a bill to set aside the bond or other instrument, and a case wherein it is made use of only by collateral evidence; but there is no such distinction in point of evidence; the rule being the same whether it comes in by way of collateral evidence, or the very deed which the bill is brought to impeach." [2]

But in the United States the exception has survived, usually more or less below the surface, and potential only in occasional instances, though in some jurisdictions fully recognized and constantly enforced.

§ 1253. Same: Principle. Such a limitation most assuredly has a justification. In the great majority of instances where the terms of a document are not in actual dispute, it is inconvenient and pedantic to insist on the production of the instrument itself and to forbid all testimonial allusion, however casual, to its terms:

§ 1252. [1] Accord: 1555, Throckmerton v. Tracy, Plowd. 148 (profert not required of one not privy to the deed); 1602, Dagg v. Penkevon, Cro. Jac. 70 (debt for tithes, by a lessee for years from a lessee for life from the queen by letters patent; profert of the latter not required, because "the title shewn in the declaration is but a conveyance to the action"); 1636, Stockman v. Hampton, Cro. Car. 441 (justification for trespass under a license from one having a remainder after an estate tail, the plea traversing the opponent's claim of estate in fee for his ancestor: profert not necessary, "because it is but an inducement to the traverse and is not answerable"); ante 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 249 ("When a man shews a good title in himself, everything collateral to that title shall be intended, whether it be shewn or not"); 1800, Banfill v. Leigh, 8 T. R. 571 (plaintiff sued as assignee of debts under power of attorney, by which he had obtained an award under arbitration which defendant had promised to pay; in an action on the award, the plaintiff need not make profert of the assignment; Kenyon, L. C. J.: "It is not universally true that a profert must be made when the party pleading a deed derives title under it; . . . it is never necessary to make a profert of a deed which is pleaded only by way of inducement; and the deed in question is only inducement to the action").

[2] Yet this limitation is mentioned in the treatises of the 1800s: 1829, Phillipps, Evidence, 7th ed., I, 303 ("The general rule that the best evidence is to be produced which the nature of the thing admits to be understood as applying to deeds and agreements which form part of the issue or which are material to the issue"); 1842, Starkie, Evidence, 3d ed., I, 202; 1870, Best, Evidence, 5th ed., § 479.

1885, MULKEY, J., in Massey v. Bank, 113 Ill. 334, 338: "[The general principle] has no application to the facts above stated. We fully recognize the rule that whenever the existence of a deed or other writing is directly involved in a judicial proceeding, whether as proof of the precise question in issue or of some subordinate matter that tends to establish the ultimate fact or facts upon which the case turns, such deed or other writing itself must be produced, or its absence accounted for, before secondary evidence of its contents is admissible. Yet while this rule is fully conceded, it is also true that a witness, when testifying, may, for the purpose of making his statements intelligible, and giving coherence to such of them as are unquestionably admissible in evidence, properly speak of the execution of deeds, the giving of receipts, the writing of a letter, and the like, without producing the instrument or writing referred to. To hold otherwise would certainly be productive of great inconvenience, and in some cases would defeat the ends of justice. References to written instruments by a witness for the purpose stated are to be regarded as but mere inducement to the more material parts of his testimony. The present case well illustrates the principle in question. As remotely bearing upon the issue to be tried, the plaintiff sought to show the appellant had avowed a purpose not to pay the note [whose execution was in issue], — that he had said he was going to put his property out of his hands in order to defeat the claim. Now this, under the issue, is the important part of the answer to the question ['whether the note was a renewal note'], if indeed any of it can be so regarded. All, therefore, that was said about the deeding of the land, the giving of the mortgage, and getting the loan of $2000, we regard as mere matter of inducement to the more important part of the testimony."

The term "collateral", however, as a definition of the limits of this exception, is an unfortunate and elusive word, which is almost impossible of consistent application in practice. Yet a single satisfactory term or test is difficult to fix upon. If we say that production is not necessary where the terms of the document are not 'bona fide' disputed by the opponent we may go too far; for the opponent may not be prepared to dispute its terms and yet he may fairly desire the opportunity to see the document and not be obliged to accept the proponent's testimony to its contents. If, however, we recognize these possibilities, and leave to the trial Court to determine whether in the case in hand any useful purpose would be served by producing the original, even where its terms are not actually in dispute, we should be giving the needful flexibility to the rule. And such is the form already proposed (ante, § 1191).

In any case the misfortune of inconsistent precedents and the disadvantage of an obscure definition can be obviated by applying strictly that salutary doctrine of judicial discretion. Let the trial judge determine absolutely, and without review, the application of the principle to each case. Whether a document is "collateral" is practically a question whether it is important enough under all the circumstances to need production; and the judge presiding over the trial is fittest to determine this question finally (ante, § 16).

It should here be noted that the present exception has sometimes been confused with the Integration or Parol Evidence rule in a peculiar way. It is a part of that rule that an oral transaction, though reduced to writing, can be availed of where other parties are concerned, and the oral transaction is as between them the material one (post, § 2446). This does not mean that the writing's contents can be proved by oral testimony, but that the terms of the oral transaction can be shown. Having erroneously in mind this different rule, the Court of at least one jurisdiction has phrased the present exception so as to allow the terms of such a writing to be proved, between other than the parties, orally and without production.[1] This is purely a local misunderstanding; it has never elsewhere been doubted that the present applies to all writings, whether or not the parties in the case were the parties to the document.[2]

§ 1254. Same: Specific Instances. There is naturally little to be found by way of further generalization in collating the precedents.[1] Each case has depended much on its own circumstances.

§ 1253. [1] 1873, Pollock v. Wilcox, 68 N. C. 46, 49 (action to set aside a deed in fraud of creditors; the defendant was allowed to show orally the contents of notes surrendered and notes made by him as the price of the land; the rule not being applicable except between "the parties to a contract"); 1895, Carden v. McConnell, 116 N. C. 875, 21 S. E. 923 (action for slander of title; plaintiff's proof of a deed by him to I., allowed to be by parol, on the ground that the rule did not apply as between strangers to the deed); 1896, Archer v. Hooper, 119 N. C. 281, 26 S. E. 143 (title to personalty; plaintiff claimed under a bill of sale from B.; the bill not required to be produced).

[2] 1881, Smith v. Cox, 9 Or. 327, 331 (production required of a void deed between third persons).

§ 1254. [1] For the reason stated at the close of the text above, many precedents have been placed ante, §§ 1242–1250; while the precedents below include only those rulings which more or less definitely mean to recognize a real exception of the present sort; the precedents in those sections should therefore also be consulted on all of the states of facts dealt with in the citations below; compare also a few cases cited post, § 2143 (authentication of ancient copies of deeds):

Alabama: 1831, Sommerville v. Stephenson, 3 Stew. 271, 278, semble (exception recognized); 1847, Brown v. Isbell, 11 Ala. 1009, 1020, semble (action on agreement to pay deficiency of amount of a bill if not paid out of certain funds; bill's production not required); 1876, Lewis v. Hudmon, 56 Ala. 186 (false representations as defence to action on premium note for policy; production of application required, as not collateral); 1877, East v. Pace, 57 Ala. 521, 524 (conversion of a mule; process under which it was taken, not required to be produced, being an "incidental or collateral matter"); 1884, Winslow v. State, 76 Ala. 42, 48 (exception recognized); 1885, Jones v. Call, 93 Ala. 170, 179 (rule not applicable to "mere notices"); 1892, Rodgers v. Crook, 97 Ala. 722, 725, 12 So. 108 (exception recognized); 1897, Torrey v. Burney, 113 Ala. 496, 21 So. 348 (to show the reason for ill-feeling, evidence was offered that the person had read a newspaper clipping that would cause it; the clipping required to be produced); 1898, Foxworth v. Brown, 120 Ala. 59, 24 So. 1 (to show notice, rule not applicable); 1901, Griffin v. State, 129 Ala. 92, 29 So. 783 (assault on a person assisting a constable acting under a writ; writ not required to be produced, being collateral, and its contents not being in issue); 1901, Zimmerman v. State, — Ala. —, 30 So. 18 (similar); 1901, Costello v. State, 130 Ala. 143, 30 So. 376 (production not required of a written agreement which showed a witness' interest; compare § 1258, post); 1903, Webb v. State, 138 Ala. 53, 34 So. 1011 (rule not applied to a memorandum handed to witness by defendant); 1904, Garrison v. Glass, 139 Ala. 512, 36 So. 725 (contract for land; his ownership of adjoining land, "being a collateral or incidental matter", allowed to be shown by parol); 1905, Woodall v. State, 145 Ala. 662, 39 So. 718 (charge of desertion of family; questions as to the affidavit of complaint and the voter's registration, held collateral); 1905, Franklin v. State, 145 Ala. 669, 39 So. 979 (same, for notice of apprehension and arrest, in a charge of homicide); 1909, Mobile J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Hawkins, 163 Ala. 565, 51 So. 37 (letter); 1917, Woodward Iron Co. v. Collins, 200 Ala. 553, 76 So. 1911 (battery; letter only in issue incidentally, proved by copy); 1919, Empire Securities Co. v. Webb, 202 Ala. 549, 81 So. 51 (commissions as realty broker; that one of the parties to the exchange "made a deed", allowed, without producing or accounting for the deed).

Arkansas: 1848, Hammond v. Freeman, 9 Ark. 62, 67 (action against maker by indorsee for money paid on note to subsequent indorsee; in proving the intermediate indorsement to plaintiff, production required as not collateral); 1900, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Kilpatrick, 67 Ark. 47, 54 S. W. 971 (expulsion by brakeman; placard on car not required to be produced, because "merely incidental");

California: 1887, Marriner v. Dennison, 78 Cal. 202, 213, 20 Pac. 386 (action by promisee

The present doctrine has been invoked in deciding many of the cases falling under another aspect of the general principle (ante, §§ 1228, 1242–1250). For example, in proving that a defendant paid money upon a note, the payment of the money is an act separate from and not involving the terms of the document, so that to prove the payment is not to prove the document's under contract to sell land, the promisor having persuaded him to accept other lands by representing that he had a prior contract to sell to S.; testimony of S. offered to show that his contract was in truth subsequent; production of it not required); 1905, Wooldridge v. State, 49 Fla. 137, 38 So. 3 (signing of certain warrants);

Illinois: 1885, Massey v. Bank, 113 Ill. 334, 337 (whether a note in issue was a renewal note: incidental references to prior deed, mortgage, etc., allowed without production; see quotation supra);
Indiana: 1890, Coonrod v. Madden, 126 Ind. 197, 25 N. E. 1102 (to prove a plea of payment, in an action on a note, the defendant produced a check said to have been given in payment; the plaintiff then offered to testify that it was another note that had been paid by this check, and to give the date, amount, etc., of the other note, to identify it with the check; the rule was not applied to the other note); 1896, Lumbert v. Woodard, 144 Ind. 335, 43 N. E. 302, semble (a lease bearing on the case in an undisclosed way; rule not applicable);
Louisiana: 1915, Chapin v. Freeman, 138 La. 423, 70 So. 421 (tax election; bond for an injunction, held collateral);
Maine: 1904, State v. Mackinnon, 99 Me. 166, 58 Atl. 1028 (keeping a liquor nuisance; the telephone contract for the building, held a collateral document);
Massachusetts: 1784, Com. v. Fairfield, Dane's Abr., c. 84, art. 2, § 3 (that a witness owned land, as indicating his standing; provable by parol); 1898, Smith v. Bank, 171 Mass. 178, 50 N. E. 545 (covenant against incumbrances; report of engineer leading to sewer assessment, held collateral);
Michigan: 1864, Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241, 258 (contents of a deed; rule applies equally to collateral issues);
New Jersey: 1861, Gilbert v. Duncan, 29 N. J. L. 133, 139 (whether this note or another was agreed to be given up on receiving a third one; production of the different one not required, because the question was collateral, because "its contents are not material to the rights of the parties in the action", nor does the proponent "seek to avail himself of its contents as proof of any fact stated in it or of any obligation created or discharged by it"); 1896, New Jersey Zinc & I. Co. v. L. Z. & I. Co., 59 Mich. 189, 35 Atl. 915 (a contract recited by corporation minutes, the corporate action alone being material; rule not applicable);
New Mexico: 1918, State v. Goodrich, 24 N. M. 660, 176 Pac. 813 (assault in a dispute over land title; title shown by parol, the matter being collateral);
New York: 1813, Southwick v. Stevens, 10 John. 443, 446 (that a defendant was State printer and president of a bank; provable without production in an action for libel, as "collateral matter"; "it is every day's practice to give parol proof in such cases");
North Carolina: 1884, State v. Credle, 91 N. C. 640, 646 (notice posted warning against buying R.'s cattle, with the killing of which the defendant was charged; production not required); 1887, State v. Wilkerson, 98 N. C. 696, 699, 3 S. E. 683 (false pretences in obtaining an order for money for an alleged pauper; production of the order not required, the matter being collateral); 1893, McMillan v. Baxley, 112 N. C. 578, 586, 16 S. E. 845 (notice of sale; rule not applicable);
South Carolina: 1831, Lowry v. Pinson, 2 Bail. 324, 328 (to show fraud by other voluntary conveyances at the same time, the latter, being collateral, need not be produced); 1845, Gist v. McJunkin, 2 Rich. 154 (to show fraud in a sale of land, evidence may be given of a prior deed, as a collateral circumstance, without producing it); 1898, Hampton v. Ray, 52 S. C. 74, 29 S. E. 537 (letter-envelope held collateral, on the facts); 1901, Elrod v. Cochran, 59 S. C. 467, 38 S. E. 122 (resulting trust; production of the contract on which the money was paid, not required);
Tennessee: 1809, Stewart v. Massengale, 1 Overt. 479 ("When records, or evidence of a higher nature, are referred to incidentally, which have no effect upon or connection with the point in dispute", it is not necessary to produce such testimony of "higher nature"; here, "what was said at a trial" was testified to orally in sci. fac. against bail);
Vermont: 1797, Graham v. Gordon, D. Chip. 115 (action on promise to pay, in consideration of forbearance to sue on covenant of title broken by an ejectment; record of ejectment held not collateral, and required to be produced);
Washington: 1920, Proctor v. Appleby, 110 Wash. 403, 188 Pac. 481 (action for shares of stock in an amusement-concession corporation at Camp Lewis; voluminous documents showing title to the land occupied by the Camp, held not required to be produced, being "only collaterally involved");
West Virginia: 1908, State v. Clark, 64 W. Va. 625, 63 S. E. 402 (murder of an officer; oral testimony to his being constable, allowed).

contents, and therefore the rule of production does not apply; nevertheless many Courts express this by saying that the document is "collateral" and that hence the exception to the rule comes into play. Most of the cases in which the term "collateral" is invoked can be sufficiently explained by that principle.

§ 1255. (2) Party's Admission of Contents; Principle. The proposition that production should be dispensed with where the opponent has already admitted the contents of a document to be as alleged, is a plausible one, and its denial seems at first sight a mere insistence on an unnecessary formality. The doctrine that production is in such a case exceptionally dispensed with owes its best defence and its usual name to the following opinion of Baron Parke:

1840, PARKE, B., in Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664: "If such evidence were inadmissible, the difficulties thrown in the way of almost every trial would be nearly insuperable. The reason why such parol statements are admissible, . . . is that they are not open to the same objection which belongs to parol evidence from other sources, where the written evidence might have been produced; for such evidence is excluded from the presumption of its untruth arising from the very nature of the case where better evidence is withheld; whereas what a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so. The weight and value of such testimony is quite another question."

But there is much to be said against the recognition of such an exception; and the sum of these objections is found in the following passages:

1845, PENNEFATHER, C. J., in Lawless v. Queale, 8 Ir. L. R. 382, 385: "I cannot subscribe to what was said by Parke, B., in that case. . . . The doctrine there laid down is a most dangerous proposition. By it a man might be deprived of an estate of £10,000 per annum, derived from his ancestors by regular family deeds and conveyances, by producing a witness, or by one or two conspirators, who might be got to swear they heard the defendant say he had conveyed away his interest therein by deed, had mortgaged or otherwise incumbered it; and thus, by this facility so given, the most open door would be given to fraud, and a man might be stripped of his estate through this invitation to fraud and dishonesty. It is said, it is evidence against the person himself who made this admission, and that there is no danger of untruth in what a man admits against himself. Supposing the admission to be proved, is there no danger of mistake or misconception of the terms of a written instrument? It may be long and difficult; one part or clause may explain or qualify another; an unprofessional or ignorant man may be led to believe it may be so-and-so, whereas the real and true meaning may be the very reverse or something very different. But, produce the deed or writing, 'litera scripta manet.' On which side is the security, and why depart from the rule that, if you want to give evidence of the contents of a writing, the writing itself must be produced? Is there no danger of untruth or misrepresentation, when used against the party making the admission? That is the ground put by Parke, B., and in which I cannot agree, when I know by experience how easy it is to fabricate admissions, and how impossible to come prepared to detect the falsehood. Why are writings prepared at all but to prevent mistakes and misrepresentations? And why, having taken that precaution, with such writing at hand and capable of being produced, is the same to be laid aside and inferior and less satisfactory evidence resorted to?"

1850, MAULE, J., in Boulter v. Peplow, 9 C. B. 493, 501: "It [Slatterie v. Pooley] is certainly not very satisfactory in its reasons. . . . What the party himself says is not before the jury; but only the witness' representation of what he says."

Of the two arguments here offered in opposition, the first amounts to little. The possibility of error in an opponent's own understanding of the terms of a document is not great; and, so far as it exists, it can do little harm, because the opponent's extrajudicial admission is merely some evidence, and not conclusive (ante, § 1058); he may still prove the contents as he now knows them or may have the document produced. But the second argument — that it is easy to fabricate alleged oral admissions — is the real and serious objection to the doctrine. It may be conceded that the opponent's admission of contents is satisfactory evidence, if he made such an admission. But did he make it? Here we are left to choose between conflicting oral testimonies; and it does seem undesirable to leave the matter to depend on the credibility of this or the other witness when an inspection of the document itself would speedily settle the controversy.

The proper solution of the dilemma would be this: When an admission of the contents is testified to, let production be dispensed with; but if the fact of the admission is 'bona fide' disputed by the opponent and some testimony to that effect is put in by him, then let production be required or the document's absence be accounted for.

§ 1256. Same: Forms of Rule in Various Jurisdictions. The solution suggested in the preceding section does not seem yet to have been advanced by any Court. The results so far in the various jurisdictions have been either the entire rejection of the rule, or its entire adoption, or its recognition in a confused form.

(a) In England the rulings fluctuated until 1840, when the decision in Slatterie v. Pooley laid down the rule authoritatively.[1] That authority has ever since been accepted and followed in that jurisdiction, though often with reluctance and usually with an absurd modification, to be noticed.[2] In an

§ 1256. [1] Compare with the following the cases on duplicate originals (ante, § 1232): 1699, Anon., 1 Lord Raym. 732 (admission of a decree, by the opponent's witness, held sufficient); 1791, Breton v. Cope, Peake 30, semble (admission by opponent in a deed of the contents of a transfer-book of stock, held sufficient); 1793, Burleigh v. Stibbs, 5 T. R. 465 (action against a master on his indenture of apprenticeship; to prove the apprentice's execution of his part of the indenture, the defendant's recitals, admitting it, in his part were received); 1806, Roe v. Davis, 7 East 363, semble (acknowledgment by a lessee, in the landlord's counterpart of a lease, of the terms of the original, admitted as against an assignee of the lease); 1811, Flindt v. Atkins, 3 Camp. 115 (the former handing of a copy of a foreign judgment by the plaintiff to the defendant in proof of his claim, held not sufficient to enable the defendant to use the copy); 1812, Scott v. Clare, 3 Camp. 236 (defence, a discharge in insolvency; the plaintiff's oral admission of it held insufficient "to prove a judicial act of this sort", as "the plaintiff might be mistaken"); 1822, Summersett v. Adamson, 1 Bing. 73 (admission of a discharge in insolvency, sufficient); 1824, Sewell v. Stubbs, 1 C. & P. 73 (contents of a note; admission sufficient); 1825, Bloxam v. Elsie, 1 C. & P. 558, 563, Ry. & Mo. 187, Abbott, C. J. (oral admission insufficient); 1828, Paul v. Meek, 2 Y. & J. 116 (counterpart of a lease; admission sufficient); 1833, Earle v. Picken, 5 C. & P. 542 (contract; admission sufficient); 1835, R. v. Forbes, 7 C. & P. 224, Coleridge, J. ("strict proof" required; here a letter admitting a former forgery was received, though the other forged bill itself was not produced); 1836, Ashmore v. Hardy, 7 C. & P. 501, 503 (admission of a deed in an answer in chancery, allowed); 1840, Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664 (to prove a deed of composition with creditors — which could not be produced for want of the required stamp —, the defendant's verbal admission of the contents of the instrument was received)

[2] 1840, Newhall v. Holt, 6 M. & W. 662 (ac-

early Irish ruling and in many jurisdictions in Canada and the United States the rule has received express and full adoption.[3]

(b) In some later Irish rulings and in many jurisdictions in the United States, the rule is repudiated, though perhaps in some cases for oral admissions only, not for written admissions;[4] and it should be noted that the sec-count stated); 1841, Howard v. Smith, 3 Scott N. R. 574 (oral admission); Wollaston v. Hakewill, 3 Scott N. R. 593, 617 (here there was notice to produce); 1848, King v. Cole, 2 Exch. 628, 632 ("admission, either verbal or in writing, of the contents of a deed", is sufficient); 1849, Toll v. Lee, 4 Exch. 230 (a certificate of a deed of transfer, admitted as an admission of the deed's contents); 1850, Murray v. Gregory, 5 Exch. 467 (oral admissions of the contents and result of an award, received); 1850, Boulter v. Peplow, 9 C. B. 493, 506 (Williams, J.: "It is impossible for us to overrule Slatterie v. Pooley, though we may think the reasoning not quite satisfactory"; here a written admission); 1851, R. v. Basingstoke, 14 Q. B. 611 (support to a pauper; conduct held a sufficient admission of the contents of a certificate requiring such support); 1851, Pritchard v. Bagshawe, 11 C. B. 459, 463 (an abstract of deeds, received as an admission of contents); 1858, Sanders v. Karnell, 1 F. & F. 356 (Channell, B.: "The doctrine . . . is one not to be extended").

[3] IRELAND: 1843, Lord Trimlestown v. Kemmis, 5 Ir. L. R. 380, 396 (abstract of title); CANADA: N. Br. 1854, Doe v. Blanche, 3 All. N. Br. 180, 182 (admissions received; following Slatterie v. Pooley); UNITED STATES: Federal: 1894, Dunbar v. U. S., 156 U. S. 185, 196, 15 Sup. 325 (oral admission of sending a telegram, sufficient to allow a delivered copy to be used); Alabama: 1840, Sally v. Capps, 1 Ala. N. S. 121 (oral admission of the amount of a note, received; "the rule does not apply where the adversary has admitted the facts which are to be proved"); 1902, Barnett v. Wilson, 132 Ala. 375, 31 So. 521 (production of a copy admitted by opponent to be correct dispenses with the necessity of accounting for the original); Connecticut: 1893, Morey v. Hoyt, 62 Conn. 542, 556, 26 Atl. 127 (oral admission of contents of letter; Slatterie v. Pooley approved); Iowa: 1847, Gay v. Lloyd, 1 Greene Ia. 78, 83 (oral admission by defendant of transcript of judgment, received); Maine: 1877, Blackington v. Rockland, 66 Me. 332, 335 (records of a city, received as admissions of a notice; approving Slatterie v. Pooley; yet not deciding more than that a written admission is receivable); 1906, Purinton v. Purinton, 101 Me. 250, 63 Atl. 925 (rule of Slatterie v. Pooley, allowed to admit proof of letters by the opponent's oral reading aloud of their contents); Massachusetts: 1850, Smith v. Palmer, 6 Cush. 513, 520 (oral admission of contents of a record of judgment, execution, etc., allowed); 1851, Kellenberger v. Sturtevant, 7 Cush. 465 (same for acknowledgment in writing of a title to premises); 1857, Loomis v. Wadhams, 8 Gray 557, 562 (same for oral statement as to the contents of a deed); 1896, Com. v. Wesley, 166 Mass. 248, 44 N. E. 228 (same doctrine); 1899, Clarke v. Warwick C. M. Co., 174 Mass. 434, 54 N. E. 887 ("Admissions are evidence . . . although they relate to the contents of a written paper"; here a written admission); 1904, Cooley v. Collins, 186 Mass. 507, 71 N. E. 979, semble (Loomis v. Wadhams approved); Mississippi: 1847, Anderson v. Root, 8 Sm. & M. 362 (written receipt for a writing, sufficient to prove its contents); 1859, Williams v. Brickell, 27 Miss. 682, 686 (oral admission of contents of telegram, sufficient); North Carolina: 1906, Norcum v. Savage, 140 N. C. 472, 53 S. E. 289 (heirs of P.'s first wife claiming against heirs of his second wife, the land being on record as granted by deed to P., but plaintiffs claiming that this deed had been obtained by P. in place of a lost deed to his first wife; P.'s admissions that there was such a lost deed to his first wife, received); Ohio: 1878, Edgar v. Richardson, 33 Oh. St. 581, 592 (Slatterie v. Pooley approved; here, for admissions as to a record of divorce; semble, the record must be not obtainable); South Carolina: 1824, North v. Drayton, Harp. Eq. 34, 38 (recital of bond in mortgage, sufficient); Virginia: 1871, Taylor v. Peck, 21 Gratt. 11, 19 (landlord's receipt for rent received to show a lease; Slatterie v. Pooley followed).

Undecided: 1906, Minnesota Deb. Co. v. Johnson, 96 Minn. 91, 107 N. W. 740.

That the admissions need not be verbally precise or complete, see post, § 2105.

[4] IRELAND: 1845, Gosford v. Robb, 8 Ir. L. R. 217, semble; Lawless v. Queale, 8 Ir. L. R. 382 (positively decided; see quotation supra); 1849, Parsons v. Purcell, 12 Ir. L. R. 90 (admission in an answer in chancery of a release-deed); UNITED STATES: Fed. 1828, Carroll v. Peake, 1 Pet. 18, 22 (lease agreement; copy made by the defendant himself, admitted, without accounting for the original); Ark. 1861, Haliburton v. Fletcher, 22 Ark. 453 (guardian's admissions of record of appointment, excluded); Cal. 1860, Grimes v. Fall, 15 Cal. 63, 65 (charging the defendant as assignee of a contract to do that which was a trespass; the defendant's oral admission that he was assignee, excluded; no authority cited); 1872, Poorman v. Miller, 44 Cal. 269, 275 (declarations by offeror's own predecessor, excluded; question not raised); Conn. 1824.

ond objection above mentioned is practically obviated where a written admission exists, — so far, at least, as that writing is proved by production or by the opponent's refusal to produce it.

(c) The limitation has been attempted, and possibly obtains, in England, that an admission of the opponent made on the stand in testifying (usually, on cross-examination) shall not suffice to excuse non-production; i.e. the precedent of Slatterie v. Pooley is confined to precisely its same state of facts, namely, an admission made out of court.[5] An admission, however, made in testifying before judge and jury is authentic beyond dispute, and wholly escapes the above-described real objection to the doctrine, namely, the objection that testimony to the alleged admission might be easily fabricated. In other words, this proposed limitation involves the absurd result of excluding the admission in precisely the case where it might be received without danger and of admitting it in precisely the case where the danger exists. There is nothing in the modern rules of privilege (post, §§ 1856, 2218) to account for this result.

(d) A fourth type of result, in favor in some American jurisdictions, is to allow the proof by admissions whenever the document is shown to be lost or • Buell v. Cook, 5 Conn. 206, 208 (oral admission of written lease, excluded); Del. 1871, Plunkett v. Dillon, 4 Del. Ch. 198, 205, semble (parol admissions by opponent, excluded, except, of course, where the writing is produced); Ill. 1839, Bryan v. Smith, 3 Ill. 47, 49 (oral admission of a tenancy in common under a deed, excluded); 1880, Fox v. People, 95 Ill. 71, 75 (forgery; former utterings are to be shown otherwise than by the defendant's admissions); 1904, Prussing v. Jackson, 208 Ill. 85, 69 N. E. 771 (libel in a letter printed in a newspaper; held, that until the loss of the original was sufficiently shown, the printed copy could not be used as equivalent, merely upon oral admissions of its identity by the defendant or his testimony on the stand to that effect; upon the latter point the ruling is unsound); La. 1843, Clark v. Slidell, 5 Rob. La. 330 (excluded); Minn. 1913, Swing v. Cloquet Lumber Co., 121 Minn. 221, 141 N. W. 117 (written admissions of contents, receivable; here, of a policy and premium note); Mo. 1843, Bogart v. Green, 8 Mo. 115 (oral admission of summons, insufficient); 1875, Cornet v. Bertelsmann, 61 Mo. 118, 126 (whether a vendee had notice of an encumbrance; oral admissions held insufficient unless corroborated).

For the rulings in New York and elsewhere on the special subject of title to land, see § 1257, post.

[5] England: 1856, Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. 1, 5, 10 (Pollock, C. B.: "If a party has chosen to talk about a particular matter, his statement is evidence against himself; . . . but it does not follow that the plaintiff could be compelled to make such an admission by asking him in the witness-box, 'Have you executed a release?'"); 1859, Farrow v. Blomfield, 1 F. & F. 653, Pollock, C. B. (allowing the opponent's admission on the stand to suffice without production, after St. 1854, c. 125, § 24; quoted post, § 1263); 1859, Wolverhampton N. W. Co. v. Hawksford, 5 C. B. N. S. 703 (interrogatories to opponent before trial as to contents of a document, allowed only on condition that they should not be used at the trial unless the document should be shown lost); 1862, Henman v. Lester, 12 C. B. N. S. 776 (question to a party as to the result of a former suit of his, admitted; Byles, J., diss.: "It can make no difference that the witness was a party to the suit; the doctrine laid down in Slatterie v. Pooley . . . cannot comprehend parol admissions of the contents of written documents extorted from parties under the pressure of cross-examination"; but Willes and Keating, JJ., thought that on a collateral matter touching credit only, the party's admission sufficed); Canada: 1857, Lynch v. O'Hara, 6 U. C. C. P. 259, 265 (a party's compulsory admissions on discovery do not suffice); U. S. Federal: 1905, Security Trust Co. v. Robb, 142 Fed. 78, C. C. A. (letter in the hands of a third person; the defendant's agent's admission on the stand that "the paper offered was a copy of it", not sufficient; "the most conclusive proof of its correctness will not render a copy available, without ground laid for dispensing with the production of the original"; this is in itself a perversely rigid rule; but furthermore the opinion shows no appreciation of the rule at issue and cites irrelevant precedents).

detained by the opponent.[6] But this is of course no longer a genuine exception; i.e. the admission as to contents does not serve to excuse the party from production; he is required to account for the non-production, and may then use the admissions, as he could any other evidence, to prove the contents.

(c) It has been suggested, though apparently nowhere accepted, that the exception should apply only to documents "collateral" to the issue.[7]

§ 1257. Same: Related Rules (Deed-Recitals; Oral Disclaimer of Title; New York Rule). (1) It is perfectly clear and well understood that, even where the rule of Slatterie v. Pooley is not accepted, a judicial admission (post, § 2588) — i.e. a formal admission for the purposes of trial — dispenses with the necessity of production;[1] such an admission is a waiver of dispute, and suffices to concede any fact whatever in issue.

(2) In proving a partnership, the acting as partners may with reference to third persons be the source of liability irrespective of the written articles;[2] or the acts of the partners as admissions of the terms of the partnership may be regarded, upon the principle of the preceding section, as dispensing with production of the articles;[3] or the fact of the partnership may be regarded as a net resultant fact independent of the articles, so that the rule of production is not applicable (ante, § 1249); it is generally difficult to ascertain the precise ground of rulings on this point.

(3) The rule that recitals in a deed are evidence, as between the parties to it or their successors, of the contents of a former deed recited, is in effect an application and recognition of the present exception. Its propriety from the present point of view has not been questioned.[4] The controversy has been

[6] Ga. 1850, Flournoy v. Newton, 8 Ga. 306, 310 ("You cannot ask the witness what the opposite party has said as to the contents of papers executed by him, without accounting for their non-production"); Ky. 1812, Peart v. Taylor, 2 Bibb 556, 558 (letter admitting contents of a deed, received, the deed being lost); 1817, Clevinger v. Hill, 4 Bibb 498 (oral admissions "perhaps" not admissible till the deed appears unavailable); 1832, Griffith v. Huston, 7 J. J. Marsh. 385, 387 (oral admissions of predecessor received after loss shown); Me. 1832, Thomas v. Harding, 8 Greenl. 417, 419 (admitted where the opponent had failed to produce on notice); Oh. 1827, Allen v. Parish, 3 Oh. 107, 110 (admissions of opponent's grantor as to deed's contents, received as corroborative evidence, where the deed was lost).

[7] 1845, Crampton, J., in Lawless v. Queale, 8 Ir. L. R. 382, 390.

Compare the majority's opinion in Henman v. Lester, supra, note 5.

Distinguish also the parol evidence rule (post, § 2465), as applied to title-deeds, that the parties' understanding is not to vary the terms; this may exclude admissions contradicting the deed: 1847, Maloney v. Purden, 3 Kerr N. Br. 515, 525 (predecessor's admissions, contradicting a deed, as to the land included).

§ 1257. [1] 1845, Gosford v. Robb, 8 Ir. L. R. 217, 221, per Crompton, J.; 1851, R. v. Basingstoke, 19 L. J. M. C. 99 (Patteson, J.: "It is well put by Mr. Smith, in his 'Leading Cases', II, 426, that . . . 'the estoppel professes, not to supply the absence of the ordinary instruments of evidence, but to supersede the necessity of any evidence by showing that the fact is already admitted'"); 1919, Reynolds v. Wallace, 125 Va. 315, 99 S. E. 516 (defendant's implied admission of the correctness of a survey, held not sufficient).

[2] 1821, Doane v. Farrow, 10 Mart. La. 74, 78.

[3] 1869, Edwards v. Tracy, 62 Pa. 375, 379 (admissions of a partnership, received; following Widdifield v. Widdifield, ante, § 1249).

[4] England: 1697, Sussex v. Temple, 1 Ld. Raym. 310, 311 (answer in chancery, acknowledging a deed, held admissible against a defendant claiming title under the party answering); 1699, Sherwood v. Adderley, 1 Ld. Raym. 734 (recital of a will in the admittance to a copyhold, held admissible against the lord in favor of the devisee, without producing the will); 1704, Ford v. Grey, 1 Salk. 286, 6 Mod. 44 ("a recital of a lease in a deed of release is whether such recitals could be used, as hearsay evidence, against strangers to the deed (post, § 1573) and also whether such recitals were absolutely binding (ante, § 1058), and whether they were admissible if made by a predecessor in title (ante, § 1082).

(4) The rule of the Statute of Frauds forbidding proof of an oral grant or disclaimer of title is frequently difficult to distinguish from the question of the present rule. This convergence, and that of one or two other principles, is represented in a series of New York rulings, which have much influenced other Courts. Their results may be set forth as follows: (a) A declaration admitting that the declarant holds as tenant only may be used, if made by a predecessor in title, as an ordinary admission (on the principle of § 1082, ante); or, if made by a deceased person, though a stranger, as a declaration against interest (under the Hearsay exception, post, § 1458). (b) A declaration, by either the opponent's or the proponent's predecessor, claiming or disclaiming title may be used as a verbal act coloring the possession (on the principle of § 1778, post) where it is used in support of the proponent's title by adverse possession. (c) The admission, by an opponent or his predecessor of the contents of a deed which the proponent wishes to prove in support of a documentary title, might be used under the exception to the production-rule in Slatterie v. Pooley (ante, § 1255), if that exception were recognized; but in New York that exception is recognized only in the modified form of good evidence of such lease against the releasor and those that claim under him; but as to others [i.e. strangers], it is not, without proving that there was such a deed and it was lost or destroyed"; the latter use, i.e. as an exception to the Hearsay rule for ancient recitals in general, is considered post, § 1573; the point of the present case is accurately expounded by Story, J., in Carver v. Jackson, infra); UNITED STATES: Federal: 1830, Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 83 (recital of lease in deed of release is "an estoppel, and binds parties and privies, — privies in blood, privies in estate, and privies in law; but it does not bind mere strangers, or those who claim by title paramount the deed; [i.e.], it does not bind persons claiming by an adverse title or person claiming from the parties by title anterior to the date of the reciting deed"); 1832, Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet. 598, 611 (same; conclusive as to contents and execution); Georgia: 1846, M'Cleskey v. Leadbetter, 1 Ga. 551, 557 (recital of a lease, admitted against the grantor's privies); 1856, Horn v. Ross, 20 Ga. 210, 220 (recitals, in a settlement deed, of ante-nuptial contract, admitted against creditors by a subsequent debt); Pennsylvania: 1811, Penrose v. Griffith, 4 Binn. 231, 235 (recital, in a deed, of a previous deed, admissible, against the grantor and privies, not otherwise); 1814, Stoever v. Whitman, 6 Binn. 416, 418 (recitals of a former deed, admitted against one claiming under the grantor); 1816, Bell v. Wetherill, 2 S. & R. 350 (recital of a deed in a predecessor's patent, not accompanied by possession, insufficient); 1816, Stewart v. Butler, 2 S. & R. 381 (recital in a patent of a previous conveyance, received against one claiming under the grantor); 1816, Downing v. Gallagher, 2 S. & R. 455 (same: but only against those claiming after the former grant); 1818, Whitmire v. Napier, 4 S. & R. 290 (recitals of title in a land-patent, receivable against one claiming by possession, not title); 1852, Gingrich v. Foltz, 19 Pa. St. 38, 40 (recitals in a land-patent as to previous warrant, etc., are evidence against one who relies on possession alone and shows no paper title, and also against one claiming under a right arising subsequent to the patent; but not against one claiming by right prior to the patent); Vermont: 1836, Lord v. Bigelow, 8 Vt. 445, 460 (legislative charter reciting former grant, admitted against privies); 1903, Davis v. Moyles, 76 Vt. 25, 56 Atl. 174 (Carver v. Jackson approved); Virginia: 1830, Blow v. Maynard, 2 Leigh 29, 49 (recital, in post-nuptial settlement-deed, of an ante-nuptial contract not otherwise evidenced, is not binding on creditors); 1849, Wiley v. Givens, 6 Gratt. 277, 283 (recitals of an entry under a purchase from R.; not received against one claiming adversely by elder patent); 1852, Walton v. Hale, 9 Gratt. 194, 198 (preceding case approved); 1852, Hannon v. Hannah, 9 Gratt. 146, 150 (recital of a former deed, admissible against "parties and privies in blood, in estate, and law").

par. (d) of the preceding section, i.e. such admissions may be used if the document is shown to be lost or in the opponent's control.[5] (d) Where the opponent has already shown a title by deed, an oral admission of non-title (or, disclaimer of title), by himself or his predecessor, cannot be used against him to overthrow his proof of documentary title; for, though it is in one aspect merely an admission of the contents of some unspecified lost deed, yet standing as it does by itself, and no actual defeasing deed having been shown to exist, such a declaration amounts virtually to an oral defeasance or conveyance, and thus violates the Statute of Frauds requiring conveyances to be in writing. It practically sets up a title in somebody else through the sole medium of the oral declaration.[6] Were the existence of a specific defeasing deed to be shown, and were its loss or hostile control to be proved, then, under (c) supra, these admissions of this specific document's contents might be used. — With these more or less competing doctrines in view, the rulings are at least explainable, if not always reconcilable.[7]

[5] See the rulings infra, in 13, 17, and 18 Johnson, 7, 8, and 14 Wendell, and 68 New York.

[6] This doctrine, which is in itself not connected with the subject of Evidence, and is noticed only in order to discriminate it, is expounded in the following cases, besides those cited from New York in the next note: 1856, McMaster v. Stewart, 11 La. An. 546 (title to a slave; opponent's verbal admissions cannot be used to perfect title); 1846, Harmon v. James, 7 Sm. & M. Miss. 111, 118 (oral admission "that he had conveyed all his interests to M.", not received to prove a deed); 1908, Hudkins v. Crim, 64 W. Va. 225, 61 S. E. 166 (forceful opinion by Brannon, J.).

[7] The New York series of cases illustrating the above distinctions is here first given, those of other Courts then follow; the citations in the other sections named above (§§ 1082, 1458, 1778) may be compared:

New York: 1809, Jackson v. Bard, 4 John. 230 (parties claiming under competing deeds from the same person; admissions of the defendant's intermediary vendor, as to his title, received); 1810, Jackson v. Shearman, 6 John. 19, 21 (the defendant's oral acknowledgments of the plaintiff's title, excluded as "counteracting the beneficial purposes of the statute of frauds"; yet good "to support a tenancy", or "to satisfy doubts in case of possession"); the two foregoing cases thus led into two lines of decisions, each more or less ignoring the precedents of the other: 1810, Jenner v. Joliffe, 6 John. 9 (oral admission of an attachment, not received; principle applicable to specialties and records); 1810, Jackson v. Vosburgh, 7 John. 186 (after proof of a chain of title, the oral disclaimers of the plaintiff's lessors were not received, following Jackson v. Shearman); 1813, Hasbrouck v. Baker, 10 John. 148 (oral admission of a subpœna's contents, insufficient, where the proponent had the document in his possession); 1815, Jackson v. Belknap, 12 John. 96 (oral admissions by a predecessor of the plaintiff's title, received); 1815, Marks v. Pell, 1 John. Ch. 549, 598 (oral admissions by a deceased grantee that the deed was taken as a mortgage, excluded, as counteracting the policy of the statute of frauds); 1816, Mauri v. Heffernan, 13 John. 58, 74 (oral and written admissions of the contents of a document made abroad, and unobtainable, admitted); 1818, Jackson v. M'Vey, 15 John. 234, 237 (following the Shearman case); 1819, Jackson v. Cary, 16 John. 302, 306 (declarations disclaiming a larger title under certain deeds, excluded, as "parol proof to destroy or take away a title" contravening the statute of frauds); 1820, Brandt v. Klein, 17 John. 335, 339 (recitals in a deed of the contents of a will, admitted, the will being in the opponent's possession); 1820, Jackson v. M'Vey, 18 John. 330, 333 (admissions of an opponent as to a deed, receivable, semble, under the same circumstances); 1825, Jackson v. Cole, 4 Cow. 587, 593 (oral admissions by the defendant that the land belonged to his wife, whose heir the plaintiff was, admitted; the cases of exclusion are (1) parol disclaimer of title, which is forbidden by the statute of frauds, (2) admissions of the terms of written conveyances, which violate the rule requiring production; citing the Belknap and the M'Vey cases); 1827, Jackson v. Miller, 6 John. 751, 756 (defendant's oral admissions of adverse possession, excluded, a patent title having been shown); s. c. on appeal, 6 Wend. 228 (lower Court's ruling affirmed; defendant's admissions of a conveyance by him to plaintiff's ancestor, said to be receivable if the plaintiff proved his inability to produce the original); 1830, Jackson v. Denison, 4 Wend. 558, 560 (like the Cole case; the same distinctions taken); 1831, Jackson v. Livingston, 7 Wend. 136, 139 (oral admissions of contents of a power of attorney, received, because the document was unavailable); 1831, Jackson v. Vail, 7 Wend. 125 (same, for a lost deed); 1832, Welland Canal Co. v. Hathaway, 8 Wend. 480, 486 (a written receipt admitting corporate organization, excluded; "the admissions of a party are competent evidence against himself only in cases where parol evidence would be admissible to establish the same facts", i.e. where the document is unavailable); 1834, Jackson v. Myers, 11 Wend. 533 (admissions of defendant's grantor, that he had received his deed from P. in fraud of P.'s creditors now claiming on execution sale, received; "the doctrine that parol declarations shall not be received to divest a legal title is not applicable in this case"; approving Jackson v. Bard); 1834, Northrup v. Jackson, 13 Wend. 85, semble (oral admission of a written contract, excluded); 1835, Van Duyne v. Thayre, 14 Wend. 235 (lost mortgage set up by defendant in an action of ejectment for dower-land; admissions of the plaintiff's husband during his lifetime, as to the mortgage, received; following Jackson v. Bard and Jackson v. Myers); 1835, Corbin v. Jackson, 14 Wend. 619, 623, 630 (oral admissions of the contents of a power of attorney, admitted, the loss of the document being proved by the same admissions; Tracy, Sen., dissenting, especially on the latter point); 1837, Varick v. Briggs, 6 Paige 323, 327 (predecessor's declaration as to a prior conveyance by him, admitted, the loss of the deed being shown); 1844, Hunter v. Trustees, 6 Hill 407 (title to a burying-ground claimed by dedication; plaintiff's admissions of non-ownership, received, not to "affect his paper title", but to "give character to his possessory acts"); 1848, Pitts v. Wilder, 1 N. Y. 525, 527 (admissions of defendant's predecessor, as to the title he claimed under, received); 1859, Walker v. Dunspaugh, 20 N. Y. 170, 172 (defendant "showed no paper title", but offered admissions of the plaintiff that they "held under a conveyance for lives", with the defendant in remainder; held, "a party cannot make title to land by a parol admission of his adversary"); 1866, Gibney v. Marchay, 34 N. Y. 301 (declarations of defendant's predecessor in possession, admitting purchase of the land with trust funds, semble, held not admissible to overthrow a title "of record"); 1876, Mandeville v. Reynolds, 68 N. Y. 528, 536 (oral admissions by the defendant of the existence and contents of a judgment-roll, admissible, the roll being lost); 1901, People v. Holmes, 166 N. Y. 540, 60 N. E. 249 (grantor's oral admissions as to title, excluded where the issue was merely whether land was within the boundary of a certain lot).

OTHER JURISDICTIONS: CANADA: New Brunswick: 1851, Doe v. Todd, 2 All. 261, 264 (oral admissions by the plaintiff's grantor, that he had conveyed to defendant's grantor, excluded; "it would entirely destroy the effect of the statute of frauds"); Nova Scotia: 1681, Fairbanks v. Kuhn, 14 N. Sc. 147, 154 (defendant's admissions of holding under a lease, not accounted for, the defendant having shown a title by deed, held not sufficient; quaere whether admissible); UNITED STATES: Federal: 1873, Smiths v. Shoemaker, 17 Wall. 630, 638 (claim of title by gift of K.; letters by the claimant in possession, acknowledging the title of J. C., received); 1876, Dodge v. Freedman's S. & T. Co., 93 U. S. 379, 383 (predecessor's admissions are not receivable "to sustain or destroy the record title"; following Jackson v. Miller, N. Y.); Arkansas: 1882, Dorr v. School District, 40 Ark. 237, 242 (testimony to acknowledgment of deed, used when offered "for a collateral purpose"); California: 1877, McFadden v. Ellmaker, 52 Cal. 348, 350 (question expressly reserved); 1882, People v. Blake, 60 Cal. 497, 503, 511 (McKee and Ross, JJ., dissented on apparently the principle of oral disclaimer in the New York cases; but the majority ignored the point); Connecticut: 1837, Deming v. Carrington, 12 Conn. 1, 6, semble (plaintiff's predecessor's admissions that a deed to himself as sole grantee was for the benefit of defendant, said to be inadmissible); Iowa: 1902, Walter v. Brown, 115 Ia. 360, 88 N. W. 832 (admissible, when "not in contradiction of the record title"; here, as to knowledge of a mortgage); Maine: 1904, Phillips v. Laughlin, 99 Me. 26, 58 Atl. 64 (issue whether J.'s recorded deed to C., under whom defendant claimed, was forged by C.; C.'s letters to J., during C.'s possession, admitting the forgery, excluded, as against the defendant claiming by recorded mortgage from C.; following the opinion of Cooley, J., in Cook v. Knowles, Mich., infra); 1905, Fall v. Fall, 100 Me. 98, 60 Atl. 718 (deed to M. by T., and will by M. to O.; C. claims apparently by adverse possession against M., T., and O.; M.'s declarations, that she was not the owner and C. was, excluded, following Phillips v. Laughlin; the opinion is obscure in naming the parties); Massachusetts: 1841, Proprietors v. Bullard, 2 Mete. 363, 368 (admissions received, but here the title admitted was prescriptive merely); 1861, Osgood v. Coates, 1 All. 77, 79 (admissions received; point not raised); Michigan: 1878, Cook v. Knowles, 38 Mich. 316 (grantor's admissions that his deed was falsely antedated, received, in order to oust his record-title by notice of a prior title; Cooley, J., diss., following Jackson v. Cole, N. Y., and distinguishing between "receiving declarations to overthrow a title by deed and a title where no deed or other writing is needful"); 1906, Rix v. Smith, 145 Mich. 203, 108 N. W. 691 (grantor's statements, contemporaneous with making the deed, as to the location of boundaries, admitted; opinion obscure, ignoring the principles involved); New Hamp-

(5) Certain minor discriminations need occasionally to be made. For example, an admission of a document's execution is always receivable;[8] an admission of unspecified contents is worthless;[9] an admission, though improper under the preceding section, is sufficient if brought out by the opponent's own questions.[10]

§ 1258. (3) Witness' Admission of Contents, on 'Voir Dire'. When the disqualification by interest prevailed (ante, § 576), it was well settled that, where the disqualifying fact was contained in a document, its terms might be established by the opponent's examination of the witness on 'voir dire.' The reasons given for this exception are not always the same; but the traditional and the correct one seems to be that, since the person to be called as witness might not be known in advance to the opponent, it would be practically impossible for him to have the document at hand:

1830, WESTON, J., in Miller v. Mariner's Church, 7 Greenl. 51, 54: "An objection to the witness on the ground of interest is often unexpectedly made. Neither the witness, therefore, nor the party producing him can be reasonably required to have with them written papers or documents which may happen to be referred to upon such an inquiry."

1852, Counsel, arguing in Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 930, 937: "The rule as to examinations on 'voire dire' is thus stated in Russell [on Crimes, II, 987]: 'The party objecting could not know previously that the witness would be called, and consequently might not be prepared with the best evidence to establish his objection.'" MAULE, J.: "In many cases witnesses are called whom the opposite party has no reason to expect to see; the reason, therefore, given in that book is not a good one. An examination on the 'voire dire' is for the purpose of establishing something of which the Court is to be the judge, and shire: 1849, Cilley v. Bartlett, 19 N. H. 312, 323 (defendant's admissions of plaintiff's title, held decisive, if believed; but here the plaintiff was grantee in the deed, and the defendant claimed as beneficiary); 1858, Fellows v. Fellows, 37 N. H. 75, 85 (oral admissions of non-title, held receivable); 1860, Hurlburt v. Wheeler, 40 N. H. 73, 76 (same); New Jersey: 1856, Ten Eyck v. Runk, 26 N. J. L. 513, 517 (admissions receivable so far as "the extent of the right does not appear on the face of the title-deeds"); Pennsylvania: 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64 (ejectment; defendant's oral admission that he was lessee only, received); 1832, Gibblehouse v. Stong, 3 Rawle 436, 442 (declarations by a prior owner, that he had not paid the price but held in trust for another, admitted; Huston, J., diss., approving Jackson v. Shearman, N. Y., since here "the title of the plaintiff depended on facts and recorded deeds, and could not be affected by parol declarations of any prior owner"; yet declarations as to boundary would not be excluded by this rule); 1838, Criswell v. Altemus, 7 Watts 565, 578 (oral admissions of taking a lease, held sufficient as an admission of non-adverse possession); Utah: 1902, Scott v. Crouch, 24 Utah 377, 67 Pac. 1068 (M.'s admission that he had given a deed to D., received against M.'s administrator); Vermont: 1841, Carpenter v. Hollister, 13 Vt. 552, 555 (defendant's grantor in possession and before grant; his oral admissions that his own grantor, plaintiff's intestate, was insane when granting, excluded, against an innocent purchaser for value; because one holding by title good as appears of record should not "be defeated by the private concessions of any previous owner"; allowable only when made by occupier as to "character and extent of possession", i.e. that he possessed as tenant or according to certain boundaries); 1842, Hines v. Soule, 14 Vt. 99, 105 (Carpenter v. Hollister approved); West Virginia: 1897, High's Ex'rs v. Pancake, 42 W. Va. 607, 26 S. E. 537 ("Mere oral declarations to destroy title are inadmissible", because of the statute of frauds); 1906, Wade v. McDougle, 59 W. Va. 113, 52 S. E. 1026 (foregoing case approved).

[8] 1849, Doe v. Biggers, 6 Ga. 188, 201 (oral admissions of execution, received). See post, § 2132.

[9] 1845, Thompson v. Fry, 7 Blackf. 608 (admission that the items in a book, not produced, were correct; insufficient). But the terms of the document need not be precisely given: post, § 2105.

[10] 1831, Pettigru v. Sanders, 2 Bail. 549. Compare the English rule supra, § 1256.

not the jury. It may well be, therefore, that the rule there is not so exclusive as in the case of an examination going to a jury."

That the reason above-named, rather than the reason suggested by Mr. J. Maule, in the passage just quoted, was the true reason, is indicated by a qualification, laid down in some cases, that if the incompetency was clear and could be noticed merely on objection made, and a document removing it must clearly have been known beforehand to the party offering the witness, then he could not prove the removal of the incompetency by a re-examination without producing the document — e.g. a release — removing it.[1] But the general rule, irrespective of this modification, was well settled.[2]

§ 1259. (4) Witness' Admission of Contents, on Cross-examination; Rule in The Queen's Case; Principle. In the year 1820 an English decision, soon afterwards expressly annulled by legislation, but widely followed in this country in ignorance of its repudiation in the jurisdiction of origin, laid down a rule which for unsoundness of principle, impropriety of policy, and practical inconvenience in trials, committed the most notable mistake that can be found among the rulings upon the present subject. The doctrine laid down in The Queen's Case professed to apply the rule now under consideration, namely, that when the terms of a document are to be established, the document must be produced or accounted for; and its application here took the following shape: When a witness is to be asked on cross-examination as to the terms of a document written or signed by him, the document must be at the time produced and shown or read aloud to him before he can be asked as to its contents; in other words, he cannot be asked whether or not he said such and such things in the document, but the supposed document must be first shown to him before any questions upon its contents are allowable:

1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 286; the House of Lords put the following questions to the Judges: "First, whether, in the courts below, a party on cross-examination would be allowed to represent in the statement of a question the contents of a letter, and to ask the witness whether the witness wrote a letter to any person with such contents, or contents

§ 1258. [1] 1829, Goodhay v. Hendry, M. & M. 319, Best, C. J. (a bankrupt, desired to be shown discharged by his certificate); Anon., ib. 321, note, Tindal, C. J. (same), semble.

Contra: Wandless v. Cawthrone, ib. note, Parke, B.; 1839, Lunniss v. Row, 10 A. & E. 606 (objection to competency may be removed by oral evidence of a release-document, even though the objection was revealed to the party by the pleadings). So, too, the following variation: 1818, Butler v. Carber, 2 Stark. 433 (the witness having the document in court, production was held necessary).

[2] Eng. 1794, Butchers' Company v. Jones, 1 Esp. 160 (a question on the counter-examination allowed to show that a disqualification had ceased); Botham v. Swingler, 1 Esp. 164 (same; restoration to competency by oral evidence, allowed); 1811, R. v. Gisburn, 15 East 57 (a witness for a township, allowed to be asked whether he was rated for taxes, without producing the rate-book); 1824, Carlisle v. Eady, 1 C. & P. 234 (a bankrupt allowed to be asked as to his certificate of discharge); 1837, R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 297, 304; 1852, Cresswell and Maule, JJ., in Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 930, 937; U. S. Ala. 1849, Herndon v. Givens, 16 Ala. 261, 268; 1849, Robertson v. Allen, 16 Ala. 106, 108 (even by another witness); Conn. 1824, Stebbins v. Sackett, 5 Conn. 258, 262; Ill. 1863, Babcock v. Smith, 31 Ill. 57, 61 (that a judgment had been obtained against him, allowed); Ky. 1868, Nutall v. Brannin, 5 Bush 11, 18; Me. 1830, Miller v. Mariner's Church, 7 Greenl. 51, 54; Vt. 1844, Oaks v. Weller, 16 Vt. 63, 68 (where the witness is out of the State and his deposition is offered, another witness may testify to a release given to the deponent, without producing it).

to the like effect, without having first shown to the witness the letter, and having asked that witness whether the witness wrote that letter and his admitting that he wrote such letter? . . . Thirdly, whether, when a witness is cross-examined and, upon the production of a letter to the witness under cross-examination, the witness admits that he wrote that letter, the witness can be examined, in the courts below, whether he did not in such letter make statements such as the counsel shall, by questions addressed to the witness, inquire are or are not made therein; or whether the letter itself must be read as the evidence to manifest that such statements are or are not contained therein?" ABBOTT, C. J., for the judges, answered the first question in the negative: "The contents of every written paper are, according to the ordinary and well-established rules of evidence, to be proved by the paper itself, and by that alone, if the paper be in existence; the proper course, therefore, is to ask the witness whether or no that letter is of the handwriting of the witness; if the witness admits that it is of his handwriting, the cross-examining counsel may at his proper season read that letter as evidence." The third question was answered thus: "The judges are of opinion, in the case propounded, that the counsel cannot, by questions addressed to the witness, enquire whether or no such statements are contained in the letter, but that the letter itself must be read to manifest whether such statements are or are not contained in that letter. . . . [The judges] found their opinion upon what in their judgment is a rule of evidence as old as any part of the common law of England, namely, that the contents of a written instrument, if it be in existence, are to be proved by that instrument itself and not by parol evidence."

1852, Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 930; to show that the witness had been disgraced by a charge of forgery, he was asked: "Did you not write a letter [not in question] in answer to a letter charging you with forgery?" MAULE, J.: "If you want the jury to know that there was a letter containing a charge of forgery, the proper way to do so is by producing the letter itself. . . . Suppose the witness had said, 'I did write this letter in answer to another, which is in court', good sense obviously requires that the latter should be produced, if it is wished to get at its contents. . . . This seems to me to be just the sort of case where it is sought to give secondary evidence of the contents of a document in the power of a party who does not choose to produce it." CRESSWELL, J.: "Shift it as you will, it was a mere attempt to get in evidence of the contents of a written document without putting in the document itself." [1]

It may be noted that this doctrine was a pure creation of this decision of 1820, and had never before been advanced; [2] though by the pronouncement of the Judges in the House of Lords it was followed thereafter by the Courts as the law of the land.[3]

§ 1260. Same: Arguments against the Rule. It cannot be denied that there is a certain plausibility in the doctrine as expounded in the above passages, and this will account for its easy acceptance in other jurisdictions; and yet there are so many arguments against it and they have been so § 1259. [1] In this case, note that the witness, by answering the first letter, put its contents on the same footing as his own, under the principle of § 2102, post.

[2] 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 487 (doctrine not recognized); 1816, Graham v. Dyster, 2 Stark. 21, Ellenborough, L. C. J. (where the documents were part of defendant's case but in plaintiff's possession, and the defendant was not allowed to ask contents on cross-examination; but the reason was merely that it was an improper stage of the case, and no views were expressed on the point in question); 1817, Sideways v. Dyson, 2 Stark. 49 Ellenborough, L. C. J. (same situation, but defendant offered another witness to the contents, as the basis of a cross-examination; rejected, the proper time not having been reached).

[3] 1837, R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 297, 304 (questions as to an article in a newspaper written by the witness; rule applied); 1839, R. v. Taylor, ib. 726 (rule applied); 1852, Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 930 (quoted supra).

thoroughly exploited that its perpetuation in this country is somewhat surprising.

(1) In the first place, then, let it be granted for argument's sake that by asking the witness without producing the document the rule of production is broken in upon. Why not recognize for such a case an exception to the rule? (a) There can be no case in which the contents of the document could be more trustworthily established. It is the witness' own document. No one can know better than himself what is in it. If its contents as a lost document were to be proved, this person would be the very one to be called. (6) There can be no suspicion of misstatement, first, because the witness has been called for the other party, and, secondly, because the opponent now cross-examining is (in the usual case) desirous of discrediting the witness by the document (7) and the last thing to be feared is that the witness will misrepresent the document in favor of the cross-examiner. If the opponent is willing to take a hostile witness' statement of contents, who else needs to fear misrepresentation? (b) But the rule of production, — is it, then, indeed so sacred and inflexible? A number of instances have been noted in which production is dispensed with as a part of the rule itself. It has also been seen that there is a long-established exception for documents collaterally in issue (ante, § 1252); and where the witness (as is the usual case) is sought to be discredited by prior written statements, the principle of that exception is certainly satisfied.[1] It has also just been seen (ante, § 1258) that another exception is well-established for the case of a witness cross-examined to interest on the 'voir dire'; there the effect of allowing proof by questions is much more radical, for it wholly excludes the witness, while here it merely discredits him. It has also been seen (ante, § 1255) that another exception exists for a party's admissions of contents; and the only risk which there exists — the possibility of fabricated testimony to the admission — is here entirely obviated by the witness' admission being made on the stand. With so many recognized limitations and analogous exceptions to the rule of production, it is pedantic to treat the present question as involving a novel inroad upon a hitherto inviolable and inflexible rule. (c) But, it is said, a witness' admissions are not admissions in the sense that a party's are.[2] Very true; what a party says out of court is evidence, but not what a witness says out of court (ante, § 1260. [1] 1824, Starkie, Evidence, I, 203 ("It is a remarkable circumstance that the question was never, in the course of inquiry in the case which occasioned so much discussion on the subject, directly raised whether a cross-examination as to something written by the witness, for the purpose not of proving any fact in the cause but simply of trying the credit or ability of the witness, was subject to the same strict rules as governed examination for proving material facts. . . . The principle of the rule [that the best evidence should be adduced] is applicable only to evidence to prove a material fact, and is inapplicable where the object is merely to try the credit or ability of the witness"); so also Phillipps, Evidence, 302.

[2] 1852, Counsel in Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 937 (quoting Taylor on Evidence, "as the parol admissions of parties are now receivable in evidence although they relate to the contents of deeds or records [citing Slatterie v. Pooley], the same rule would seem to render the answers of a witness admissible in the case just put"; Cresswell, J.: "There is this striking difference between the two cases: a party is allowed to affect his own rights by parol admissions, but here the admission [by a witness only] would affect the parties in the cause").

§ 1069). But this is not said out of court; it is said in court. It is testimony, not an admission in the common significance. Moreover, it is in the usual case (as above pointed out) decidedly trustworthy testimony, for it is against interest. (d) But, again it is said, there is no precedent for it. This, to be sure, is very little of an argument from a Court which in the same case upset the traditions of the Bar on another point by establishing another novelty already examined (ante, § 1026). But on this very point the Court itself in The Queen's Case cited no precedent in its own behalf; if there was no precedent for the present contention, there was at least no precedent against it. The Court alluded to the current practice as in harmony with its ruling; but (as above noted) the practice had before then not been in harmony with it, and the vigorous protests of Mr. Starkie, Mr. Phillipps, and other practitioners made shortly afterwards, indicate that the ruling was a surprise to the Bar. Moreover, the exceptions already pointed out, for a witness on 'voir dire' and for collateral documents were close enough in principle to serve as precedents.

In sum, then, such questions should be allowed as a matter of principle, even if their allowance involved a distinct exception to the rule of Production.[3]

(2) But in any event, the principle is misapplied. Assuming that the rule of production should suffer no exception even where the document is only collaterally to be used and even where the witness' statement is trustworthy because made against his interest, nevertheless the rule in The Queen's Case is fallacious in that it does not correctly apply the principle it professes to invoke. The rule of production, with which our concern has been, calls for the exhibition of the document itself to judge and jury, in distinction from evidence about the document by a witness. The judge and the jury are supposed to ascertain its contents by inspection, as a source of proof superior to the assertions of witnesses. Now this production to judge and jury has nothing to do with a showing to a witness. It is not any witness that is to determine the contents of the document, but the tribunal (ante, § 1185). Yet the Judges' answer to the first question in The Queen's Case requires a showing to the witness, by virtue of the rule for production of documents.[4] Such a showing has nothing whatever to do with that rule. There is no reason why

[3] The Judges in The Queen's Case also gave the following reason, based on the principle of Completeness (post, § 2102): "If the course which is here proposed should be followed, the cross-examining counsel may put the Court in possession only of a part of the contents of the written paper; and thus the Court may never be in possession of the whole, though it may happen that the whole, if produced, may have an effect very different from that which might be produced by a statement of a part." But this objection is amply disposed of: (1) in the first place, the document itself may be produced by the witness' party, if it is in court or in his possession, to show the total effect of it; (2) the witness on re-examination may testify to any other terms of the document which counteract the possible wrong impression given by a part, under the ordinary principle of Completeness (post, § 2116); (3) the whole would have to be produced, in any case, when offered.

[4] 'Their answer to the third question, it is true, does require merely a reading of the document, which is a legitimate way to satisfy the rule of production (ante, § 1185). But there is nothing in the correct rule which requires such a reading at that stage of the case, i.e. before the witness is asked; the reading could properly wait until the cross-examiner is ready to put in his own case; and this indeed the judges prescribe as the normal rule.

the document should be shown to this witness rather than to any other witness in the case. It cannot be that the preliminary asking which is required in preparing to impeach by proving inconsistent statements (ante, § 1026) calls for such a showing; that requirement calls only for a fair warning as to the subject of the statement, and, in some jurisdictions, a further specification of time, place, and person; it was never supposed, nor do the Judges in The Queen's Case contend, that the showing of the document to the witness was any consequence of the rule as to impeachment by inconsistent statements. Observe, then, the fallacious and inconsequential nature of this rule that the document must be shown, as laid down by The Queen's Case: A certain principle about proving a document by production to judge and jury is said to involve a rule requiring the showing of the document to a witness; do, then, what this supposed rule dictates — namely, show the document to the witness — and thus satisfy the supposed rule; yet you are still no nearer than before to satisfying the above general principle about proving documents by production. In other words, if the cross-examiner were to show the document to the witness and put it in his pocket again, he would have satisfied the rule laid down by the first answer in The Queen's Case, and yet he would not have satisfied the general principle of production from which that answer professed to deduce that rule.[5] This fallacy is worth noting, for it is fundamental. The showing to the witness for his perusal is precisely the thing which the cross-examiner (for tactical reasons noted later) wishes in the usual case to avoid, and this same showing is a process which is in no way properly involved in the general principle invoked in The Queen's Case.

(3) Hitherto, it has here been assumed that the principle of production does apply to require at least production, and that (as in (1) supra) the case may be met by establishing an exception to the general principle. But, in truth, in the usual case, that principle does not require production at the time of asking the witness. Let us take, as the usual case, an attempt to impeach a witness by showing that he has at a former time in writing made an inconsistent statement on a material point or expressed a bias or a corrupt design against the opponent. The rule of impeachment applicable to such an attempt requires (ante, § 1025) that he shall be asked before leaving the stand whether he has made the statement subsequently to be proved against him. Now this asking, so far as it is a requirement, is not for the purpose of then and there proving the statement, but merely for the sake of fairly notifying him that the proof is to be offered; the requirement is satisfied by the mere asking, no matter what his answer (ante, §§ 1025, 1037). The cross-examiner, then, need not, if he does not choose, take an affirmative answer as proof; he has asked merely to satisfy the rule of fairness, and will in due time make

[5] It may be said that the cross-examiner must in any case show it to the witness in order to get an admission of its execution. The answer to this is (1) it would be enough for this purpose to show the signature, (2) the cross-examiner might equally well prove the execution, if he pleased, by calling the same or some other witness when he came to put in his own case.

the proof by producing the other witness (if it was an oral statement) or the document (if it was a written statement). Since, then, the asking is not done for the sake of proving the statement, the rule about proving a document's contents by production is not violated by the asking; the proof of the statement will be made later by the production of the document. This is clear enough, where the witness' answer is a denial of making the statement; but it is also true even where the witness' answer is an affirmative one; for the cross-examiner is not violating the documentary rule if he does not seek to accept the witness' answer in proof but proposes later during his own case to prove the statement and satisfy the documentary rule by producing the document. If then the cross-examiner does propose to prove the statement by the subsequent production of the document, and repudiates any desire to use the witness' affirmative answer as such proof (the asking, of course, is forced upon the cross-examiner by the impeachment-rule), he is not violating the documentary rule by not producing the document at that stage. Yet The Queen's Case erroneously assumes that he is. In other words, the impeachment-rule forces the cross-examiner to ask the question, and then The Queen's Case rule forbids him to ask it by conclusively imputing to him an intention to use a possible affirmative answer in a way in which he does not propose to use it even if it is given. Such is another of the incongruities of that rule.[6]

(4) The great objection, however, to the rule of showing, laid down in the first answer in The Queen's Case is one of practical policy. The circumstance which brought about such active opposition to it at the English Bar is that it abolished a most effective mode of discrediting a witness on cross-examination. Suppose, for example, that it is desired to show that the witness has in writing made a statement contrary to his present one, or has in writing shown bias or a corrupt intent; it is no doubt something accomplished to prove this by producing the writing; but much more, perhaps the entire overthrow of the witness, can be achieved if it is also made to appear that he is ready to falsify upon the stand in denial of this statement, or that he cannot correctly remember what he then wrote. Almost every strongly-contested trial affords examples of such an exposure; and it was by the loss of this weapon that the great practitioners contemporary with The Queen's Case were most keenly touched. Their criticism was unsparing;[7] and the following passages forcibly illustrate their objections:

1824, Mr. Thomas Starkie, Evidence, I, 203: "That the permitting such a cross-examination may frequently supply a desirable test for trying the memory and the credit of a witness admits of little doubt. If, for example, a witness profess to give a minute and detailed account of a transaction long past, such as the particulars of a conversation or the contents of a written document, and consequently where much depends upon the strength of his memory, it is most desirable to put that memory to the test by every fair and competent means. . . . If he either deny that he has made any representation on the subject, or be unable to recollect what statement he has made, the circumstance tends to impeach the faithfulness of his memory, even to a greater extent than if the representation had been merely oral, inasmuch as the act of writing is more deliberate and more likely to remain impressed on the memory than a mere oral communication. . . . A cross-examination of this nature affords no mean test for trying the integrity of the witness. An insincere witness, who is not aware that his adversary has it in his power to contradict him, will frequently deny having made declarations and used expressions which he is on cross-examination ultimately forced to avow; and it often happens that by his palpable and disingenuous attempts to conceal the truth he betrays his real character; and thus his denials, his manner and conduct, become of far greater importance, and much more strongly impeach his credit, than the answer itself does which he is at last reluctantly constrained to give. Where the party is confined to the mere production and reading of the paper, without previous cross-examination, all inferences of this nature are obviously excluded."

[6] It is to be noted that the above criticism is expressly made applicable to the "usual case", i.e. of attempting to discredit by proving an inconsistent or biassed statement. Where, on the other hand, the attempt is to prove the contents of a document material under the pleadings, it is clear that the rule of production does forbid this, and that what is said in (3) above does not apply, although some of the considerations mentioned in (1) supra are still applicable.

[7] "Opposed as the answers were to the most elementary principles of evidence", said Mr. Best, for example.

1828, Feb. 7, Mr. Henry Brougham, Speech on the Courts of Common Law, Hans. Parl. Deb., 2d ser., XVIII, 213, 219: "If I wish to put a witness' memory to the test, I am not allowed to examine as to the contents of a letter or other paper which he has written. I must put the document into his hands before I ask him any questions upon it, though by so doing he at once becomes acquainted with its contents, and so defeats the object of my inquiry. That question was raised and decided in the Queen's case, after solemn argument, and, I humbly venture to think, upon a wrong ground, namely, that the writing is the best evidence and ought to be produced, though it is plain that the object is by no means to prove its contents. Neither am I, in like manner, allowed to apply the test to his veracity; and yet, how can a better means be found of sifting a person's credit, supposing his memory to be good, than examining him to the contents of a letter, written by him, and which he believes to be lost? . . . I shall not easily forget a case in which a gentleman of large fortune appeared before an able arbitrator, now filling an eminent judicial place, on some dispute of his own, arising out of an election. It was my lot to cross-examine him. I had got a large number of letters in a pile under my hand, but concealed from him by a desk. He was very eager to be heard in his own cause. I put the question to him: 'Did you never say so and so?' His answer was distinct and ready, — 'Never.' I repeated the question in various forms, and with particularity, and he repeated his answers, till he had denied most pointedly all he had ever written on the matter in controversy. This passed before the rules in evidence laid down in the Queen's case; consequently I could examine him without putting the letters into his hand. I then removed the desk, and said, 'Do you see what is now under my hand?' pointing to about fifty of his letters. 'I advise you to pause before you repeat your answer to the general question, whether or not all you have sworn is correct.' He rejected my advice, and not without indignation. Now, those letters of his contained matter in direct contradiction to all he had sworn. I do not say that he perjured himself, — far from it. I do not believe that he intentionally swore what was false; he only forgot what he had written some time before. Nevertheless he had committed himself, and was in my client's power."

1849, Mr. W. M. Best, Evidence, § 478: "By requiring the document containing the supposed contradiction to be put into the hands of the witness in the first instance, the great principle of cross-examination is sacrificed at once. When a man gives certain evidence, and the object is to show that he has on a former occasion given a different account, common sense tells us that the way of bringing about a contradiction is to ask him if he has ever done so. . . . Yet, according to the practice under the resolutions in Queen Caroline's Case, if the witness had taken the precaution to reduce his previous statement to writing, the writing must be put into his hands accompanied by the question whether he wrote it, thus giving him full warning of the danger he had to avoid and full opportunity of shaping his answers to meet it." [8]

These criticisms expose the great fault in the ruling in The Queen's Case. It was unsound in principle because there is no reason why an adverse witness' testimony to contents on cross-examination should not — at least in the trial Court's discretion — be sufficient proof. But it also sinned against sound policy because it unnecessarily diminished the utility and effectiveness of that great instrument for the discovery of lies, — cross-examination. In the following passages from celebrated trials may be seen the efficiency of cross-examination, when unhampered by the rule, in exposing a falsifier:

1811, Berkeley Peerage Trial, Sherwood's Abstract, 120; Mrs. Jane Price, who had formerly lived as governess in the family of Lord Berkeley, was called to testify against the claim represented by Lady Berkeley; she had been asked: "Do you entertain any malice or ill-will towards Lady Berkeley, or any one of her family?" and had said, "Oh, none, upon my oath"; she was then asked as follows: "Did you not tell Lady Berkeley you would be her greatest enemy?" "Oh, never; Lady Berkeley cannot say it, for I never did." Afterwards the following paper was shown to the witness, and she was asked, "Is not the whole of this letter your handwriting?" — "Yes, the whole of this is mine." The same was then read, as follows: "Saturday, July 20th, 1799. Mrs. Price feels herself treated so unlike a gentlewoman in every respect in Lord Berkeley's family that she begs leave to say she wishes to be no longer engaged therein; though she does not mean to quit it without first informing her Ladyship, it is in Mrs. Price's power to be her greatest enemy."

1827, M'Garahan v. Maguire, Mongan's Celebrated Trials in Ireland, 16, 26; seduction of the plaintiff's daughter, the defendant being a priest; the case was shown by the evidence to be one of mere blackmail, but this was at the outset not apparent; the chief and first witness for the prosecution was Anne M'Garahan, the supposed victim of the defendant; and upon her cross-examination by Mr. Daniel O'Connell, the following passages took place: Mr. O'Connell: "Did you ever take a false oath about the business?" Witness: "Not that I recollect"; Mr. O'Connell: "Great God, is that a thing you could have forgotten?" Witness: "I believe I did not. I am sure I did not"; Mr. O'Connell: "Oh, I see I have wound you up. Perhaps, then, you will tell me now, did you ever swear it was false?" Witness: "I never took an oath that the charge against Mr. Maguire was false. I might have said it, but I never did swear it." . . . Mr. O'Connell: "Did you ever say that your family was offered £500 or £600 for prosecuting Mr. Maguire?" Witness: "I don't recollect"; . . . Mr. O'Connell: "Did you ever say that you would get £600 for prosecuting him?" Witness: "I never did"; Mr. O'Connell: "Or write it?" Witness: "Never"; Mr. O'Connell: "Is that your handwriting?" here a letter was handed to her; Witness: "It is"; Mr. O'Connell: "And yet you never wrote such a letter!" The letter read in part: "Dear Mr. Maguire, . . . I am the innocent cause of your present persecution. . . . Is there a magistrate in this county you can safely rely upon? If there is, let him call here as it were on a journey to feed his horse; let him have a strong affidavit of your innocence in his pocket; let me in the meanwhile know his name, that I may have a look out for him, and while his horse is feeding, I will slip down stairs and swear to the contents; I have already sworn to the same effect, but not before a magistrate. . . . £600 have been offered our family to prosecute you, but money shall never corrupt my heart." Witness: "I did not think when you were questioning me that you were alluding to this letter. I could not have supposed Mr. Maguire would have been so base as ever to have produced this letter, after swearing three solemn oaths that he would not. If I thought he would, I should have certainly told my counsel about it." After further questioning, "the witness seemed overcome; and she turned to the defendant, exclaiming, 'Oh, you villain! you villain!'"

[8] See also the following criticisms: 1853, Common Law Practice Commissioners, Second Report, 20; 1820, Mr. Denman, arguing in The Queen's Case, Linn's ed. I, 465.

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 54th day, Times' Rep. pt. 14, pp. 194, 195; this was virtually an action by Mr. Parnell and others, against the London "Times", for defamation, in charging among other things that Mr. Parnell had approved the Phœnix Park assassination; this charge was based on alleged letters of Mr. Parnell, plainly admitting complicity, sold to "The Times" by one Richard Pigott, an Irish editor, living in part by blackmail, who claimed to have procured them from other Irishmen. Pigott himself turned out to have forged them; but the case for their authenticity seemed sound, until Pigott was placed on the stand for "The Times" and came under the cross-examination of Sir Charles Russell. The object of the ensuing part of the cross-examination was to bring out Pigott's shiftiness in first selling the letters as genuine to "The Times", and then offering to the Parnell party for money to enable them to disprove the letters' genuineness. The letters had been first published in a series of articles entitled "Parnellism and Crime", beginning March 7, 1887, and bringing temporary obloquy to the Parnell party and causing the passing of the Coercion Act. Archbishop Walsh, mentioned in the examination, was an intimate friend of Mr. Parnell. Pigott, in his prior examination, had claimed that he had handed the letters to "The Times" merely for the latter's protection, to substantiate the articles, and that the publication of the letters "came upon me by surprise"; the falsehoods exposed in the following answers were in a sense partly immaterial, but they served all the more to show the man's thoroughly false character: Q. "You were aware of the intended publication of that correspondence?" A. "No, I was not at all aware." Q. "What?" A. "Certainly not." . . . Q. "You have already said that you were aware, although you did not know they were to appear in 'The Times', that there were grave charges to be made against Mr. Parnell and the leading members of the Land League?" A. "I was not aware till the publication actually commenced." Q. "Do you swear that?" A. "I do." Q. "No mistake about that?" A. "No." Q. "Is that your letter (produced)? Don't trouble to read it." A. "Yes; I have no doubt about it." Q. "My Lords, that is from Anderton's Hotel, and is addressed by the witness to Dr. Walsh, Archbishop of Dublin. The date, my Lords, is March 4, 1887, three days before the first appearance of the first series of articles known as 'Parnellism and Crime.' (Reading.) 'Private and confidential. My Lord, — The importance of the matter about which I write will doubtless excuse this intrusion on your attention. Briefly, I wish to say that I have been made aware of the details of certain proceedings that are in preparation with the object of destroying the influence of the Parnellite party in Parliament.' (To witness.) What were these certain proceedings that were in preparation?" A. "I do not recollect." Q. "Turn to my Lords, Sir, and repeat that answer." A. "I do not recollect." Q. "Do you swear that, writing on the 4th of March and stating that you had been made aware of the details of certain proceedings that were in preparation with the object of destroying the influence of the Parnellite party in Parliament less than two years ago, you do not know what that referred to?" A. "I do not know really." Q. "May I suggest?" A. "Yes." . . . Q. "Did that passage refer to these letters, among other things?" A. "No, I rather fancy it had reference to the forthcoming articles." Q. "I thought you told us you did not know anything about the forthcoming articles?" A. "Yes, I did. I find now that I am mistaken, but I must have heard something about them." Q. "Try and not make the same mistake again, if you please. (Reading.) 'I cannot enter more fully into details than to state that the proceedings referred to consist in the publication of certain statements, purporting to prove the complicity of Mr. Parnell himself and some of his supporters with murders and outrages in Ireland, to be followed in all probability by the institution of criminal proceedings against these parties by the government.' Who told you that?" A. "I have no idea." Q. "Did that refer, among others, to the incriminatory letters?" A. "I do not recollect that it did." Q. "Do you swear it did not?" A. "I will not swear it did not." Q. "Do you think it did?" A. "No." Q. "Very well; did you think that these letters, if genuine, would prove, or would not prove, Mr. Parnell's complicity with crime?" A. "I thought they were very likely to prove it." Q. "Now, reminding you of that opinion, and the same with Mr. Egan, I ask you whether you did not intend to refer — I do not suggest solely, but among other things — to the letters as being the matter which would prove, or purport to prove, complicity?" A. "Yes, I may have had that in mind." Q. "You can hardly doubt that you had that in your mind?" A. "I suppose I must have had." Q. "(Reading.) 'Your Grace may be assured that I speak with full knowledge, and am in a position to prove beyond all doubt or question the truth of what I say.' Was that true?" A. "It could hardly have been true." Q. "Then you wrote that which was false?" A. "I did not suppose his Lordship would give any strength to what I said. I do not think it was warranted by what I knew." Q. "Did you make an untrue statement in order to add strength to what you had said?" A. "Yes." Q. "A designedly untrue statement, was it?" A. "Not designedly." Q. "Try and keep your voice up." A. "I say, not designedly." Q. "Accidentally?" A. "Perhaps so." Q. "Do you believe these letters to be genuine?" A. "I do." Q. "And did at that time?" A. "Yes." Q. "(Reading.) 'And I may further assure your Grace that I am also able to point out how the designs may be successfully combated and finally defeated.' (To witness.) Now if these documents were genuine documents, and you believed them to be such, how were you able to assure his Grace that you were able to point out how the designs might be successfully combated and finally defeated?" A. "Well, as I say, I had not the letters actually in my mind at that time, so far as I can remember. I do not recollect that letter at all." Q. "You told me a moment ago without hesitation that you had both in your mind?" A. "But, as I say, it had completely faded out of my memory." Q. "That I can understand." A. "I have not the slightest idea of what I referred to." Q. "Assuming the letters to be genuine, what were the means by which you were able to assure his Grace you could point out how the designs might be successfully combated and finally defeated?" A. "I do not know." Q. "Oh, you must think, Mr. Pigott, please. It is not two years ago, you know. Mr. Pigott, had you qualms of conscience at this time, and were you afraid of the consequences of what you had done?" A. "Not at all." Q. "Then what did you mean?" A. "I cannot tell you at all." Q. "Try." A. "I cannot." Q. "Try." A. "I really cannot." Q. "Try." A. "It is no use." Q. "Am I to take it, then, that the answer to my Lords is that you cannot give any explanation?" A. "I really cannot." . . . Q. "Now you knew these impending charges were serious?" A. "Yes." Q. "Did you believe them to be true?" A. "I cannot tell you whether I did or not, because, as I say, I do not recollect." . . . Q. "First of all, you knew then that you had procured and paid for a number of letters?" A. "Yes." Q. "Which, if genuine, you have already told me would gravely implicate the parties from whom they were supposed to come?" A. "Yes, gravely implicate." Q. "You regard that as a serious charge?" A. "Yes." Q. "Did you believe that charge to be true or false?" A. "I believed that to be true." . . . Q. "Now I will read you this passage: — 'P.S. I need hardly add that did I consider the parties really guilty of the things charged against them, I should not dream of suggesting that your Grace should take part in an effort to shield them. I only wish to impress on your Grace that the evidence is apparently convincing, and would probably be sufficient to secure conviction if submitted to an English jury.' What have you to say to that?" A. "I say nothing, except that I am sure I could not have had the letters in my mind when I said that, because I do not think the letters convey a sufficiently serious charge to warrant my writing that letter." Q. "But as far as you have yet told us the letters constituted the only part of the charge with which you had anything to do?" A. "Yes, that is why I say that I must have had something else in my mind which I cannot recollect. I must have had some other charges in my mind." Q. "Can you suggest anything that you had in your mind except the letters?" A. "No, I cannot." . . . [On the next day, when Pigott resumed his examination]: Q. "Then I may take it that since last night you have removed from your mind — I think your bosom was the expression you used — that this communication of yours [to the Archbishop] referred to some fearful charges, something not yet mentioned?" A. "No, I told you so last night, but I am sure that it is not so. I will tell you my reason." Q. "You need not trouble yourself." A. "I may say at once that the statements I made to the Archbishop were entirely unfounded." . . . Q. "Then in the letters I have up to this time read — or some of them — you deliberately sat down and wrote lies?" A. "Well, they were exaggerations; I would not say they were lies." Q. "Was the exaggeration such as that it left no truth?" A. "I think very little."

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 31st day, Times' Rep. pt. 8, p. 212; the "Times" had charged the Irish Land League and its leaders with complicity in crime and agrarian outrage; many of the witnesses to prove its case were suspected of offering testimony fabricated by themselves in the hope of finding a willing ear and obtaining a pleasant sojourn in London and good pay for their time; one Thomas O'Connor, who had presented on the stand a highly-colored story (which was claimed by the Land League to be an entire fabrication) was thus cross-examined by Sir Charles Russell: Q. "When you came over here to give your evidence did you expect any money?" A. "I expected to be sent back." Q. "Did you expect any money?" A. "Well, no; I expected that I should be sent back and paid for the time I should spend here." Q. "Anything more?" A. "Nothing more." Q. "You did not expect to make money out of The Times?" A. "No." Q. "Merely your bare expenses?" A. "Yes." Q. "You volunteered to come over solely in the interests of morality, truth, and justice?" A. "Yes, and in the hope of banishing the hell on earth that exists round my own place in Ireland." Q. "You had no thought of gain for yourself at all?" A. "I do not care about the gain." Q. "You had no thought of gain for yourself at all?" A. "No." Q. "Were you asked by anyone to make statements incriminating any of the popular leaders in Ireland?" A. "No." . . . Q. "Were you asked to tell queer things?" A. "Well, he told me to tell everything I knew." . . . Q. "Were you afraid that because you could not tell him the queer things he wanted you would not get the money which you expected?" A. "I was not afraid of that, because I did not expect any money." Q. "Take this letter in your hand. Do not read it, but look at the signature. Have you any doubt as to its being your signature?" A. "No, I have not." Sir C. Russell: "I will read this letter: — 'Dear Pat, — I was here in London since yesterday morning. I was in Dublin two days. I got myself summoned for The Times. I thought I could make a few pounds in the transaction, but I find I cannot unless I would swear queer things. I am afraid they will send me to gaol, or at least give me nothing to carry me home. I would not bother with it at all, but my health was not very good when I was at home, and I thought I would take a short voyage and see a doctor at their expense. But, instead of it doing me any good, it has made me worse a little. I will be examined tomorrow, Tuesday, the 4th.'"[9]

§ 1261. Same: Details of the Rule. (1) The rule of showing and reading ceases, of course, to apply when the document is shown to be lost or otherwise unavailable; for then production is dispensed with, according to the principles already noticed.[1]

[9] The following are also illustrative: 1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., "Official" Report, III, 6-8; III, 6-8, 40-41, 109-113 (Mr. Beecher's cross-examination, by Mr. Fullerton); II, 174 (cross-examination of Mrs. S. C. D. Putnam, by Mr. Fullerton).

One of the neatest illustrations is found in the examination of Mr. McClelland by Mr. Hughes, before the New York Legislative (Armstrong) Committee on Insurance, on Nov. 29, 1905.

§ 1261. [1] 1820, Abbott, C. J., in the answer to the first question, in The Queen's Case, ante, § 1259; Starkie, Evidence, I, 202; Phillipps, Evidence, I, 298; 1840, Davies v. Davies, 9 C. & P. 252 (an office-copy, admitted to be correct, of an affidavit in another Court; cross-examination on it allowed); 1883, Horton v. Chadbourn, 31 Minn. 322, 17 N. W. 865 (but here the rule was too strictly applied).

(2) When the cross-examiner, in asking as to a prior inconsistent statement, asks merely whether the witness made such-and-such a statement, he must, if objection is made, specify either a statement made orally or a statement made in writing, so that the present rule can be enforced in the latter case.[2]

(3) The witness may be shown only the signature or some other part for the purpose of obtaining an admission of the execution of the document; but, for the purpose of proving the contents, the document's production at the proper time is necessary, and without it the questions as to contents cannot be asked.[3]

(4) The proper time for reading the letter to judge and jury is, in the absence of special considerations, the time when the cross-examiner comes to put in his own case.[4]

[2] 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 292 (Abbott, C. J.: "A witness is often asked whether there is an agreement for a certain price for a certain article . . . or other matter of that kind, being a contract; and when a question of that kind has been asked at nisi-prius, the ordinary course has been for the counsel on the other side . . . to ask the witness whether the agreement referred to in the question originally proposed by the counsel on the other side was or was not in writing; and if the witness answers that it was in writing, then the enquiry is stopped, because the writing itself must be produced").

[3] 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 286; 1903, Trentham v. Bluthenthal, 118 Ga. 530, 45 S. E. 421; 1848, Clapp v. Wilson, 5 Den. 285, 287.

For the question whether the whole of the writing, or only the parts strictly contradictory, may be introduced, see post, § 2113.

The following is of course sound: 1912, Larkin v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 205 N. Y. 267, 98 N. E. 465 (a statement typewritten by another person and signed by defendant is not inadmissible merely because he did not read it over).

[4] ENGLAND: 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 289 (Abbott, C. J.: "According to the ordinary rule of proceeding in the courts below, the letter is to be read as the evidence of the cross-examining counsel as part of his evidence in his turn after he shall have opened his case; that is the ordinary course. But if the counsel who is cross-examining suggests to the Court that he wishes to have the letter read immediately in order that he may, after the contents of that letter shall have been made known to the Court, found certain questions upon the contents of that letter, to be propounded to the witness, which could not well or effectually be done without reading the letter itself, that becomes an excepted case in the courts below, and for the convenient administration of justice the letter is permitted to be read at the suggestion of the counsel", but as still his evidence); UNITED STATES: Ark. 1901, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Faisst, 68 Ark. 587, 61 S. W. 374 (a writing may be read when cross-examining to lay the foundation, "if cross-examination upon the contents is desired and suggested to the Court"); Conn. 1902, Hennessy v. Ins. Co., 74 Conn. 699, 52 Atl. 490 (whether it is to be put in evidence during the cross-examination is in the trial Court's discretion); Haw. 1904, Terr. v. Boyd, 16 Haw. 660, 665 (the witness may be cross-examined to a document shown him, without necessarily filing it and making it evidence); Ill. 1898, Peyton v. Morgan Park, 172 Ill. 102, 49 N. E. 1003 (to be offered after cross-examination in the cross-examiner's case); N. H. 1872, Haines v. Ins. Co., 52 N. H. 470, 471 ("such matters as the identity of the paper and of the witness, and the genuineness of the signature, are not usually in dispute; and it would be well to wait and see what objections will be made to the introduction of the deposition when it is offered at the proper time"; but "no absolute rule can be laid down, because it is a matter of fact and reasonableness"); N. Y. 1872, Romertze v. Bank, 49 N. Y. 579 (document need not be offered till examiner's own case is put in; unless perhaps in the Court's discretion, in order to allow explanations by the witness); 1904, Hanlon v. Ehrich, 178 N. Y. 474, 71 N. E. 12 (like Romertze v. Bank); 1912, Larkin v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 205 N. Y. 267, 98 N. E. 465 (may be introduced "in the regular course of the trial"); Tex. 1920, Burgess v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 146, 225 S. W. 182.

Compare § 1884 (documents on cross-examination).

For the question whether the whole of the writing must be shown to the opponent's counsel on request, see post, §§ 1861, 2125.

Distinguish also the question whether the whole may be put in evidence by the opponent (post, § 2113).

Of course the document must be otherwise proved, if the witness does not admit its execution: 1910, Belskis v. Dering Coal Co., 246 Ill. 62, 92 N. E. 575 (here the document contained additions which the witness denied he had signed).

(5) Opposing counsel, as well as the witness, is entitled to inspect the document, at least before the witness leaves the stand; so as to be enabled to discover explanatory features in it and to re-examine the witness upon it.[5] All other analogies (ante, §§ 753, 762, post, § 1861), coincide to this purpose.

§ 1262. Same: Rule as applied to Prior Statements in Depositions. When a witness' testimony is taken down at a preliminary hearing for committal by a magistrate, or is taken by a commissioner in the shape of a deposition, it seems to be generally conceded that the written report is preferred testimony to his statements, i.e. it must be produced or accounted for before testimony can be given of the witness' oral words (post, §§ 1326–1332). This is not the same as holding that the magistrate's report is the witness' testimony (instead of the witness' oral words), — though this may be so where the witness has signed the report, and it is always taken to be so in the case of a deposition (in the strict sense) taken by a commissioner. However, waiving these objections (dealt with post, § 1349, with reference to the theory of such examinations), and assuming that the magistrate's written report or the commissioner's certified deposition is a statement in writing by the examinee or deponent, the rule in The Queen's Case obviously applies; i.e. a witness upon the stand cannot be asked as to any statements made in a deposition or at a magistrate's examination without producing and showing the document. This is simple enough as to a deposition, strictly so called. But as to a magistrate's report of an examination, the rule requiring it to be used as preferred proof of the witness' answers (post, § 1326) does not make it a preferred proof where it has omitted to record the answer in question, or at least where the answer or remark was not made during the course of the examination and thus was not required to be recorded by the magistrate (post, § 1326). There may thus have been oral answers of which the magistrate's report cannot be expected to furnish the written proof. Hence it would not be proper to cross-examine a witness about these statements, until it has been made to appear that the question refers to statements which could not have been in the magistrate's report or which could have been, but in fact are not, there found.

Such was, in England, the principle and effect of the Resolutions of the Judges in 1837.[1] The question had not attracted attention before that time,[2]

[5] 1918, State v. Worley, 82 W. Va. 350, 96 S. E. 56 (unsigned confession of accomplice, used in impeachment, required to be shown to defendant's counsel).

§ 1262. [1] 1837, circa February, Resolutions of Judges, 7 C. & P. 676 ((1) The witness cannot be asked whether he made a statement in his deposition before the magistrate, without reading the deposition as a part of his evidence; (2) So for questions as to other statements before the magistrate; the deposition must first be read to see whether it contains them; (3) So for questions as to any self-contradictions whatever; the question must specifically negative any reference to the deposition's statements); this last rule being established as a logical consequence of the first two, by R. v. Holden, 8 C. & P. 609 (1838) and R. v. Shellard, 9 id. 279 (1840); but R. v. Moir, 4 Cox Cr. 279 (1850) is contra to this Rule 3.

[2] The following case dealt with a slightly different point: 1832, Ridley v. Gyde, 1 M. & Rob. 197, Tindal, C. J. (where the witness was asked whether he had mentioned a fact when because by the Prisoners' Counsel Act,[3] in 1836, a counsel's aid for the first time became available, for the purposes of cross-examination, to defendants accused of felony, and so such attempts to discredit a prosecuting witness by professional methods had just begun to be common. The bindingness of this rule was for a time disputed.[4] The chief reason for the stand taken by the Bar against them was the supposed absence of a right in the prosecuting counsel to address the jury in closing, if the defence had introduced no evidence of its own; for thus, if the defence could by mere cross-examination bring out these self-contradictions, the prosecution would have no right to make a closing address; while if the defence were obliged to put in the deposition as a part of its own case, the prosecution would gain the right to make a closing address. But it seems to have been settled soon afterwards that the prosecution had such a right in any case, though it had customarily not been exercised;[5] and thus the chief reason for opposition ceasing to exist, the Resolutions received thereafter a general enforcement.[6] Attempts to evade them by indirection were discountenanced. Thus, the rule was held to be violated where the witness was shown his deposition and asked to say, after reading it silently, whether he persevered in his statement just made on the stand; for in this way there is given to the jury an implication as to the contents of the deposition.[7] But merely asking the witness to take the deposition and refresh his memory therefrom, and then to say whether after refreshing it he perseveres in his statement just made on the stand does not necessarily convey such an implication, and would be allowable.[8] examined before the bankruptcy commissioners; rule held not applicable).

Presumably the foregoing application of the rule in The Queen's Case would no longer be law in England, since the Statute 28 & 29 Vict.

[3] St. 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 114.

[4] In R. v. Coveney, 8 C. & P. 31 (January, 1837), Patteson, J., had allowed the question forbidden by Rule 1 to be asked and the affirmative answer to be taken as proof.

[5] April, 1837, R. v. Edwards, 8 C. & P. 26, 29, Coleridge, J. A compromise was in this case suggested, by which the judge should follow, deposition in hand, the witness' testimony on the stand, if he chose to do so in his discretion. But even here, "if the judge should refer to the depositions, and so introduce new facts in evidence", by questioning the witness about discrepancies, Coleridge, J., was not sure that the right to reply was lost.

[6] 1837, R. v. Edwards, 8 C. & P. 26, per Coleridge and Littledale, JJ.; at p. 31 is given a list of unreported rulings in which other judges affirmed the Resolutions. But they seem subsequently to have been confined to strict limits: 1861, R. v. Mohoney, 9 Cox Cr. 28 (on cross-examination a question allowed as to what the witness had said before the coroner, without producing the deposition, because the judges' rules applied only to examinations before a magistrate).

[7] 1850, R. v. Newton, 15 L. T. 26; 1851, R. v. Ford, 5 Cox Cr. 184: 1863, R. v. Brewer, 9 id. 409 (proposition to have the witness peruse the deposition and then say whether he adhered to his answer, rejected; the deposition must be "put in in the regular way"; following R. v. Ford). The following ruling rests on the same principle: 1849, R. v. Matthews, 4 Cox Cr. 93 (the witness not being able to read, counsel offered to have a court-officer read his deposition aloud to him, so as to refresh his memory and see whether he adhered to it; excluded, because it would make the officer a witness to contradict). But even since the statutory abolition of the rule in The Queen's Case, R. v. Ford may still in another aspect be correct; i.e. though the witness' testimony to the fact of contradicting himself would be proper without reading the document itself, yet if the witness said that he did "persevere in his statement", the implication that he had formerly stated the contrary might be in fact unjust, — the result of the counsel's trick. On this point, see ante, § 764.

[8] 1837, R. v. Edwards, 8 C. & P. 26, 31; 1850, R. v. Barnet, 4 Cox Cr. 269.

c. 18, § 5 (quoted post, § 1263) abolished the rule for criminal cases.[9]

It should, however, be noted that, irrespective of the rule in The Queen's Case (i.e. in jurisdictions where it is not in force), this use of a deposition to refresh memory raises some other and independent questions, (1) whether its use on cross-examination is dishonest under certain circumstances, as just mentioned (note 7, supra; and ante, § 764), (2) whether it may properly be done, the deposition not being a contemporary memorandum (ante, § 761), and (3) whether when done on re-direct examination it violates the rule against impeaching one's own witness (ante, § 904). Distinguish also the question whether the whole of a document may be put in evidence by the opponent (post, § 2113).

§ 1263. Same: Jurisdictions recognizing the Rule in The Queen's Case. In England, the rule laid down in The Queen's Case, so far as it applied to attempts to discredit a witness by cross-examining him to prior inconsistent or biassed or corrupt utterances, was unanimously condemned by the Bar. When the general revision of common-law procedure took place in 1854, a statute was passed which (a) expressly abolished the really indefensible part of the rule, namely, the requirement that the document must be shown to the witness before asking him about it, and (b) by implication abolished the requirement of then producing and reading the document, and thus allowed any document's terms to be proved by testimony of the writer on cross-examination without subsequent production; though in case of the witness' denial, production would of course be necessary; and in any case whatever the statute authorizes a judicial discretion to order production.[1] The judicial construction of the statute seems to accept these consequences fully.[2] [9] For the American rulings on the subject of the above section, see the notes to the next section.

§ 1263. [1] 1854, St. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 24 ("A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing or reduced into writing, relative to the subject-matter of the cause, without such writing being shown to him; but if it is intended to contradict such witness by the writing, his attention must, before such contradictory proof can be given, be called to those parts of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him; provided always that it shall be competent for the judge, at any time during the trial, to require the production of the writing for his inspection, and he may thereupon make such use of it for the purposes of the trial as he shall think fit"); extended in 1865 to criminal cases: 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, § 5; 1874, Day, Common Law Procedure Acts, 4th ed., 277 ("The effect is this: the witness in the first instance may be asked whether he has made such and such a statement in writing without its being shown to him. If he denies that he has made it, the opposite party cannot put in the statement without first calling his attention to it (showing it, or at least reading it to him) and to any parts of it relied upon as a contradiction").

It does not appear from the statute whether "calling his attention" means "showing the writing." But this is immaterial; the important thing is that the witness' readiness to lie or inability to remember can be tested by asking him before showing the writing to him.

[2] 1858, Sladden v. Sergeant, 1 F. & F. 322, Willes, J. (cross-examination on an affidavit made by the witness; production not necessary); 1858, Ireland v. Stiff, 1 F. & F. 340 (Willes, J.: "Strictly, the course is, to ask first if he received a letter of a certain date; then if he received a letter commencing, etc. It will come to the same thing [i.e., as here, where counsel asked if he had received a letter in the following terms]; it is only for the purpose of identification"); 1859, Farrow v. Blomfield, 1 F. & F. 653 (Pollock, C. B., allowing a question to the plaintiff on cross-examination as to the contents of a letter inconsistent with his

In Canada, similar corrective statutes have been enacted; though they seem to have been by some Courts construed strictly.[3]

In the United States, the rule seems not to have existed before 1820; wherever it was advanced, it seems to have come directly by adoption of the ruling in The Queen's Case. The statutory abolition of the rule in England did not become known in this country except in a few quarters.[4] The singular spectacle was presented of many Courts in this country adopting a supposed rule which had been repudiated in its jurisdiction of origin a generation before. The question has not been passed upon in all of our jurisdictions; but the rule has been adopted in most courts where it has been invoked, although with little attempt to develop its details, particularly as regards the use of questions upon depositions.[5] testimony: "If a question arises as to the contents of a written instrument, and you can get a witness to come and swear that he heard the plaintiff say it contained such and such expressions, that is good evidence of the contents of the instrument without producing it. And if the plaintiff is himself in the box, you may ask him as to the contents of the document, and his answer will be as good evidence as any previous statement. . . . The judge might say that the document ought to be produced; I should do so myself in some cases"); 1893, North Austr. T. Co. v. Goldsborough, 2 Ch. 381, 386; 1911, Steinie Morrison's Trial, p. 256 (Notable English Trials Series, 1922; Mr. Abinger: "I submit that, if you are cross-examining a man about his own letter, he is entitled to see it at the moment he is being cross-examined about it"; Mr. J. Darling: "No, not at the moment he is being cross-examined about it").

[3] Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act, § 10 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24; adding that a purporting deposition, duly produced, shall be presumed to have been signed by the witness); Alta. St. 1910, 2d sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, § 20 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24); B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 16 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24); 1914, R. v. Mulvihill, 18 D. L. R. 189, B. C. (murder; the accused was allowed to be cross-examined to his testimony at the inquest without producing the written deposition; "he has no right to ask before answering that he wants to see or hear what has been taken down in the depositions"; but on denial the document must be produced if contradiction is to be proved); N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 17 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24); 1859, Lawton v. Chance, 4 All. 441 (trial Court's discretion to order production under the statute, here exercised); 1862, Campbell v. Gilbert, 5 All. 420, 426 (trial Court's discretion exercised to require production of the original document being in England, not an office copy); 1880, R. v. Tower, 20 N. Br. 168, 190, 198 (cross-examination under the statute, without offering the paper in evidence, not allowed where it did not appear that the witness himself had written, signed or seen the paper); Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 91, § 9 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 44 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24); Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 17 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24); P. E. I. St. 1889, c. 9, § 17 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24); Sask. Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, § 34 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 42 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 24).

[4] Probably because the learned author of Greenleaf on Evidence died in 1853, the year before the statute, and The Queen's Case remained elaborately treated as law in his text, while the statute was only noticed in an obscure corner of the later editorial notes.

[5] For depositions, the cases cited ante, §§ 761, 764, 904, must be compared: UNITED STATES: Federal: 1884, The Charles Morgan, 115 U. S. 69, 77, 5 Sup. 1172 (must be shown to witness, "except under special circumstances"; "all that the law requires is that the memory of the witness shall be so refreshed by the necessary inquiries as to enable him to explain, if he can and desires to do so"; the trial Court to determine this); 1890, Chicago M. & S. P. R. Co. v. Artery, 137 U. S. 520, 11 Sup. 129 (The Queen's Case mentioned with approval, but on another point); 1892, Toplitz v. Hedden, 146 U. S. 254, 13 Sup. 70 (the plaintiff was asked whether in a former suit he had made a certain claim; an objection that the record should be produced was overruled; "if he wished to appeal to the prior record, to refresh his recollections he could call for it and do so; but the evidence as offered was competent, irrespectively of the record"); 1908, Jones v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 162 Fed. 417, 430 (the defendant having cross-examined the prosecution's witness by reading parts of a former sworn statement, the prosecution was allowed to put in the whole, apparently on the theory that this was merely permitting what the defendant should originally have been required to do by the present rule; but of course it was also justifiable, irrespective of the present rule, on the principle of § 2115);

To save effective cross-examination, this misguided rule should once and for all be disposed of by a statutory measure similar to the English pro-

1909, Richards v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 175 Fed. 911, 925, 942 (rule assumed to apply, in both majority and dissenting opinions): 1917, U. S. v. Phelan, D. C. S. D. Cal., 252 Fed. 891 (age of person failing to register under the Selective Service Act; defendant's mother having given July 13, 1886, as the date of birth, held that the rule requiring production was satisfied by showing to her photographic copies of an application by her on file in the U. S. Pension office, containing an inconsistent statement; as to the use of a photographic, instead of a certified copy, there was no reason for the Court's doubt; as to the necessity of showing either the original or copy, the Court reserves the question);

Alabama: 1883, Wills v. State, 74 Ala. 24 (writing must be shown and read; here, testimony before a committing magistrate); 1884, Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Moog, 78 Ala. 310 (same for deposition; here read aloud to witness, who could not read); 1886, Floyd v. State, 82 Ala. 22 (same rule: testimony before a committing magistrate); 1887, Gunter v. State, 83 Ala. 106 (same, preliminary examination of witness before justice of the peace); 1895, Sanders v. State, 105 Ala. 4, 16 So. 935 (cross-examination to former testimony reduced to writing, allowed without production): 1903, United States F. & G. Co. v. Dampskibsaktieselskabet Habil, 138 Ala. 348, 35 So. 344 (witness' memory of a contract tested without showing him the paper; 1911, Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Bush, 175 Ala. 49, 56 So. 731 (Gunter v. State followed);

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1502 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 864);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4188 (if the statement 'is in writing, it must be shown to the witness, and he allowed to explain it");

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 2052 (impeachment by prior self-contradiction; "if the statements be in writing, they must be shown to the witness before any question is put to him concerning them"); § 2054 (quoted post, § 1861; it affects this point); 1872, People v. Donovan, 43 Cal. 162, 165, semble (writing must be shown to the witness); 1872, People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 452 (former testimony at inquest; after questions as to time and place, held proper to put in the deposition, though not shown or read to the witness; present point not considered); 1875, Leonard v. Kingsley, 50 Cal. 628, 630 (letters; "he should have called the attention of the witness to them"); 1882, People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 Cal. 387, 394 (allowing contradiction by coroner's deposition; question not raised); 1887, People v. Ching Hing Chang, 74 Cal. 393, 16 Pac. 201 (testimony reduced to writing in foreign language must be translated); 1893, People v. Kruger, 100 Cal. 523, 35 Pac. 88 (question as to former statements, allowed, without reading over the writing); 1895, People v. Dillwood, — Cal. —, 39 Pac. 438 (testimony before magistrate; must be read, and shown to him if required); 1898, People v. Lambert, 120 Cal. 170, 52 Pac. 307 (the reading over of a deposition, if asked for by the witness as a substitute for showing, should not be allowed to cover the whole deposition, but only the self-contradictory parts); 1910, People v. Bond, 13 Cal. App. 175, 109 Pac. 150 (former testimony before the coroner; showing the transcript not required);

Florida: 1893, Simmons v. State, 32 Fla. 387, 391, 13 So. 896 (former testimony, reduced to writing by magistrate, must be shown to witness); 1909, Stewart v. State, 58 Fla. 97, 50 So. 642 (affidavit required to be shown);

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5881, P. C. § 1053 ("if in writing, the same should be shown to him, or read in his hearing, if in existence"); 1853, Stamper v. Griffin, 12 Ga. 454 (letter; the writing must be shown to the witness); but notice that since in this State the ruling for asking does not apply to prior sworn statements (ante, § 1035), the present rule also does not apply to them; 1900, Taylor v. State, 110 Ga. 150, 35 S. E. 161 (questions as to former testimony officially reported, allowed in order to test sincerity or memory, without production of report; but before proof of the former statements by the report, its contents should be "made known to her" and the report produced); 1905, Washington v. State, 124 Ga. 423, 52 S. E. 910 (rule applied to a letter);

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2620 (like Eng. St. 1854, with "or prosecution" after the words "of the cause");

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8039 (like Cal. C. C. P., § 2052); 1918, Bumpas v. Moore, 31 Ida. 668, 175 Pac. 339 (whether a report of former testimony must be shown to the witness when asked about self-contradictions in it, under Rev. C. § 4231; not decided; Budge, J., diss., holds the affirmative, collecting prior cases);

Illinois: 1893, Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Feehan, 149 Ill. 202, 214, 36 N. E. 1046 (witness apparently not shown a deposition, and the deposition then excluded because the witness' admission on cross-examination sufficed); 1897, Swift v. Madden, 165 Ill. 41, 45 N. E. 979 (contents of deposition read to the witness; no ruling on the present point); 1898, Peyton v. Morgan Park, 172 Ill. 102, 49 N. E. 1003 (similar); 1902, Momence Stone Co. v. Groves, 197 Ill. 88, 64 N. E. 335 (inquiry as to the contents of a written statement by the witness, held improper); 1905, Warth v. Loewenstein, 219 Ill. 222, 76 N. E. 378 (questions as to statements made by the witness in a deposition not introduced, allowed); 1910, Belskis v. Dering Coal Co., 246 Ill. 62, 92 N. E. 575 (question held proper, though the witness vision; although correct common-law principles would amply suffice to prevent its establishment.

had signed a statement which was to be offered as the self-contradiction);
Iowa: 1861, Morrison v. Myers, 11 Ia. 539 (letter; showing necessary); 1868, Callanan v. Shaw, 24 Ia. 454 ("the better, and probably the correct practice" is to show it); 1871, State v. Collins, 32 Ia. 41 ("his attention must first be drawn to the time, etc."; nothing said about showing the document); 1879, Peck v. Parchen, 52 Ia. 46, 52, 2 N. W. 597 (document must be shown); 1883, Glenn v. Gleason, 61 Ia. 28, 33, 15 N. W. 659 (the whole of a letter must be shown, and not merely parts required to be read; asking about the contents of a letter admitted genuine, held improper);
Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 598 ("if it [a different statement] be in writing, it must be shown to the witness, with opportunity to explain it"); § 604 (writing shown and proved must be read to jury before witness' testimony closed); 1901, Hendrickson v. Com., — Ky. —, 64 S. W. 954 (rule in The Queen's Case applied);
Kansas: 1908, Martin v. Hoffman, 77 Kan. 185, 93 Pac. 625 (questions on a letter identified by the witness, excluded, unless perhaps for testing credibility);
Louisiana: 1889, State v. Callegari, 41 La. An. 580, 7 So. 130 (testimony at a preliminary examination, reduced to writing; showing required); 1902, State v. Cain, 106 La. 708, 31 So. 300 (rule repudiated, no authority cited);
Maryland: 1914, Whisner v. Whisner, 122 Md. 195, 89 Atl. 393 (rule applied);
Massachusetts: 1873, Com. v. Kelley, 112 Mass. 452 (a constable, sought to be discredited by the contents of his oath made in getting a search-warrant; writing must be shown);
Michigan: 1868, Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 513 (deposition; "If a party desires to cross-examine the witness on the subject of his former statements, he should read the entire deposition in evidence before doing so. If he does not desire to cross-examine on that topic, it is sufficient to read it at any time"); 1881, DeMay v. Roberts, 46 Mich. 160, 163, 9 N. W. 146 (rule applied to an affidavit); 1888, Toohey v. Plummer, 69 Mich. 345, 349, 37 N. W. 297 (minutes of former testimony by a stenographer, not called, read over in part to the witness; reading of the whole not required, the supposed contradiction not being in truth in writing; "the minutes are not like a deposition read to the witness and then signed by him"); 1892, Maxted v. Fowler, 94 Mich. 106, 111, 53 N. W. 921 (showing required); 1892, Austrian v. Springer, 94 Mich. 343, 353, 54 N. W. 50 (questions on cross-examination about contents of a letter, allowed without producing);
Minnesota: 1893, O'Riley v. Clampet, 53 Minn. 539, 55 N. W. 740 (must be not only shown but introduced in evidence); 1904, McDonald v. Bayha, 93 Minn. 139, 100 N. W. 679 (cross-examination of the plaintiff to letters, without showing them, held improper; the Court is so far unaware of the impolicy of its own rule that it stigmatizes the trial Court's procedure as "inquisitorial");
Mississippi: 1876, Scarborough v. Smith, 52 Miss. 517, 522 (mere questioning, apparently enough; nothing said about showing the paper; here, a memorandum of former testimony); 1879, Cavanah v. State, 56 Miss. 299, 307 (written report of former testimony must be shown to the witness); 1878, Mitchell v. Savings Inst., 56 Miss. 444, 448 (letter; the witness' "attention should have been directed to it"); 1891, Story v. State, 68 Miss. 609, 630, 10 So. 47 (cross-examination as to a telegram sent by the witness; the telegram required to be shown to him);
Missouri: 1865, Gregory v. Cheatham, 36 Mo. 161 (letter; showing required); 1875, Prewitt v. Martin, 59 id. 334 (showing required); 1877, Spoonemore v. Cables, 66 Mo. 579 (affidavit containing a contradiction, shown to the witness); 1883, State v. Grant, 79 Mo. 113, 132 (affidavit to contradict one testifying by deposition; must be produced and asked about); 1883, State v. Stein, ib. 330 (letter required to be shown); 1885, State v. Matthews, 88 Mo. 121, 124 (after the witness' admission of genuineness, the whole writing must be read, and not merely particular passages be read and inquired about); 1889, State v. Young, 99 Mo. 666, 681, 12 S. W. 879 (defendant's statement before coroner reduced to writing; attention must be called); 1913, Ebert v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 174 Mo. App. 45, 160 S. W. 34 (deposition; a prior written statement not having been shown to the deponent, the statement was excluded);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10669 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2052); 1896, State v. O'Brien, 18 Mont. 1, 43 Pac. 1091 (statute applied);
Nebraska: 1879, Cropsey v. Averill, 8 Nebr. 151, 157 (deposition must first be proved and read before cross-examination); 1901, Omaha L. & T. Co. v. Douglas Co., 62 Nebr. 1, 86 N. W. 936 (rule applied);
New Hampshire: 1872, Haines v. Ins. Co., 52 N. H. 467, 470 (cross-examination upon a deposition for the purpose of impeaching or showing any inconsistency is not allowable; asking questions to prove the signature or to identify the deposition is a matter within the discretion of the trial Court as to the time of doing so, and "no absolute rule can be laid down"); 1905, Villineuve v. Manchester St. R. Co., 73 N. H. 250, 60 Atl. 745 (Haines v.

Ins. Co. followed; here a signed unsworn statement: the practice here sanctioned seems a poor one); 1921, Thompson v. Morin Co., — N. H. —, 114 Atl. 274 (Villineuve v. R. Co. followed; the witness cannot be cross-examined about the statement till it is proved);
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2177 (like Eng. St. 1854, without the proviso);
New York: 1832, Bellinger v. People, 8 Wend. 599 (a former examination before a magistrate, to show self-contradiction; the document must be shown or read); 1848, Clapp v. Wilson, 5 Den. 286, 288 (need not call attention to a particular passage, but must merely show the whole paper and get an admission of genuineness; but a deposition need not be shown to a witness to call his attention "being a sworn statement in writing"); 1862, Newcomb v. Griswold, 24 N. Y. 301 (a former affidavit, whether as cross-examiner's own evidence or as a contradictory statement does not appear; document must be shown or read); 1872, Romertze v. Bank, 49 N. Y. 578 (a deposition 'de bene', used to show self-contradiction, must be shown or read; but particular passages need not be called attention to); 1872, Gaffney v. People, 50 N. Y. 423 (must first be shown);
North Carolina: 1905, State v. Hayes, 138 N. C. 660, 50 S. E. 623 (rape; defendant allowed to cross-examine prosecutrix as to the contents of her letter in defendant's possession; decided on the theory of § 1252, ante);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 864 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2052); 1868, State v. Taylor, 3 Or. 10 (former testimony; the writing must be shown, even though the words asked about are in fact not in it); 1896, State v. Steeves, 29 id. 85, 43 Pac. 947 (statute applied); 1910, State v. Goodager, 56 Or. 198, 106 Pac. 638 (written statements must be shown; but a report of former testimony, not signed by the witness cannot be used for the purpose; this kind of ruling makes it very difficult for the party desiring to probe a liar);
Pennsylvania: St. 1887, May 23, §§ 3, 9, Dig. 1920, § 8172, Crim. Procedure, § 21859, Witnesses (former testimony to contradict a witness in criminal cases "may be orally proved"); 1909, Kann v. Bennett, 223 Pa. 36, 72 Atl. 342 (rule in The Queen's Case applied; no precedents cited, no consideration of the controversy);
Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 343 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2052); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 1527, 1529, 6277 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2052, 2054); 1915, Hermida v. Gestera, 23 P. R. 92 (questions as to contradictory admissions of a party-witness made in an affidavit, allowed without producing the affidavit);
Tennessee: 1872, Titus v. State, 7 Baxt. 132, 136 (deposition taken by magistrate need not be shown to witness before offering, because it is not the witness' writing; but a letter said to be the witness' must be shown);
Vermont: 1862, Randolph v. Woodstock, 35 Vt. 295 (letter need not be shown; "the plaintiffs were bound to first ask the witness before they would be allowed to contradict him, even by producing the letter. The plaintiffs must of course take the witness' statements as to what he wrote, unless they were prepared to contradict him by producing the letter, and could not prove its contents by witnesses without showing its loss"); 1898, Billings v. Ins. Co., 70 Vt. 477, 41 Atl. 516 (rule repudiated);
Virginia: St. 1899–1900, c. 117, § 3 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, except that after the words "contradicting him", the words were added "and the said writing shall be shown to him"; this insertion, unless very liberally construed, was likely to have the perverse effect of nullifying the only value of the statute, by requiring precisely what the original statute was intended to abolish; the framers of this legislation seem hardly to have appreciated the real problem at issue; in the later Code, this phrasing was corrected: Code 1919, § 6216 "A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing or reduced into writing, relative to the subject matter of the proceeding, without such writing being shown to him; but if it is intended to contradict such witness by the writing his attention must, before such contradictory proof can be given, be called to the particular occasion on which the writing is supposed to have been made, and he may be asked if he did not make a writing of the purport of the one to be offered to contradict him, and if he denies making it, or does not admit its execution, it shall then be shown to him, and if he admits its genuineness, he shall be allowed to make his own explanation of it; but it shall be competent for the court at any time during the trial to require the production of the writing for its inspection, and the court may thereupon make such use of it for the purpose of the trial as it may think best. The provisions of this section shall apply as well to criminal as civil cases. But this section is subject to this qualification, that in an action to recover for a personal injury or death by wrongful act or neglect, no 'ex parte' affidavit or statement in writing other than a deposition, after due notice, of a witness as to the facts or circumstances attending the wrongful act or neglect complained of, shall be used to contradict him as a witness in the case").
Wisconsin: 1880, Kalk v. Fielding, 50 Wis. 339, 342 (letter received by opponent; cross-examination to contents, allowed without production; Taylor, J., diss.);
Wyoming: 1909, Eads v. State, 17 Wyo. 490, 101 Pac. 946 (in asking about an impeaching document, "the cross-examiner may accept an affirmative answer as proof of the contents", without production).

C. Rules about Secondary Evidence of Contents (Copies, Degrees of Evidence, etc.)

§ 1264. In General. When the rule under consideration is satisfied, by accounting for the non-production of the document itself, the function and effect of the rule ends. The rule itself says nothing about the ways of evidencing a document not produced. The rule requires that as a preferred source of proof, the document itself be produced for autoptic inspection, and recognizes certain exemptions from production. Any rules that may obtain as to the mode of proving an unproduced document, by testimony of one sort or another, rest upon some other principle of Evidence. Nevertheless, for the sake of practical convenience, such of them as can adequately be examined apart from those other general principles will be here considered, with references to the general principles under which they properly belong.

1. Rules preferring One Kind of Testimony above Another (Degrees of Evidence, etc.)

§ 1265. General Principle. Under another head (§§ 1285–1339) it will be seen that a group of rules is recognized in our law (Preferential Rules) by which one kind of witness to a certain fact is preferred above another; i.e. the former witness' testimony must be obtained if it is available, and the latter's may be used only when the former's appears to be unavailable. By one variety of such rules — less common — the one witness' testimony is absolutely preferred, i.e. it is the only kind that can be used, and the other will not be received even though the former is unavailable. The rules of this sort do not form a systematic group or a single body of doctrine; each of them owes its existence to the peculiar circumstances of some given situation, making a particular kind of testimony highly desirable. It is feasible, without doing violence to the exposition of those rules in their proper place, to consider here such of them as deal with evidence of the contents of documents by preferring one kind of testimony to contents above another. The general notion underlying the group of rules as a whole is elsewhere considered (post, § 1285); but in the present place will be examined all the rules and precedents specifically dealing with testimony to the contents of a document.

These rules of Preference deal with four general questions:

1. When is testimony by copy preferred to testimony by oral recollection?

2. When is testimony by official copy preferred to testimony by private copy?

3. When is one kind of recollection testimony preferred to another?

4. When is testimony by direct copy preferred to testimony by copy of a copy?

§ 1266. Nature of Copy-Testimony, as distinguished from Recollection-Testimony. What is a "copy", as distinguished from other testimony to contents? This is a fundamental inquiry; for a correct notion of the significance of a copy will enable us to form a just idea of the reasons for making rules of preference.

A person who is qualified to testify to the contents of a document may present his knowledge in one of two ways: (1) He may, having at some time perused the document, summon up his recollection on the stand, and repeat the document's terms as furnished by that recollection. (2) Or, having in the same way perused the document, (a) he may have written down its words at the time of perusal, in successive stages, by writing the few words that he can carry precisely in his mind for the moment, and so on until the whole is transcribed; (b) or (as merely a variety of this method) he may have taken an alleged copy already made by another or by himself, and compared the original and this other, word for word or clause for clause; the only difference between these two sub-varieties (a and b) being that in the latter he has not had to carry any words in his mind during the time of transcribing, and has thus gained a greater probability of accuracy by reducing the necessary time of recollection to a minimum. Now between these two modes, (1) and (2), there is obviously a great difference in trustworthiness. By the former mode, the memory has had to be trusted for a considerable length of time,—perhaps for a day, perhaps for ten years. This recollection of the precise words of the document is sure to fade and to become less accurate than at the first moment after the perusal of each word or clause. The increasing degree of untrustworthiness (assuming the honesty and intelligence to be alike in the same witness for all kinds of testimony) will depend partly on the length of the document, partly on the circumstances likely to emphasize the words in his memory, and partly on the space of time that has elapsed between his perusal and his testimony on the stand. Thus his recollection-testimony may be highly trustworthy, and yet may be worthless. But his copy-testimony eliminates all these elements of untrustworthiness; the length of the document, the emphasis of words, the lapse of time, are all immaterial, for he transcribed or examined the copy word for word at such a time that there was practically no demand made upon his powers of memory; the transcription then permanently made in writing (and adopted on the stand as a record of past knowledge; ante, §§ 734, 739) preserves the words without any of the risk of change or disappearance that attends the operations of memory; moreover, the fact of a change, if it has occurred, is made known by the appearance of the writing.[1]

Such being the difference in trustworthiness between copy-testimony and recollection-testimony, does the law establish any rule of preference for the former over the latter? It is common to refer to this question by contrasting "oral evidence", or "parol evidence", with a copy; but the former terms are so loose and ambiguous (post, § 2400) that their further employment for purposes of discussion would be unpardonable. The proper contrast is between copy-testimony and testimony by present recollection.

§ 1266. [1] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913) particularly §§ 241, 290, 357.

§ 1267. Is a Written Copy the Exclusive Form of Testimony? Proof of a Lost Record, Deed, Will, etc., by Recollection. Is this relative untrustworthiness of recollection-testimony so great that such testimony will never be received to prove the contents of a document, even where copy-testimony is not available? In other words, is the latter absolutely preferred (post, § 1345) to the exclusion of the former?

Such a doctrine has never been suggested for ordinary writings. But it has often been urged as proper in application to judicial records, deeds, and wills. It is to be noted that the question is whether recollection-testimony is to be used, or else no evidence at all; for, by hypothesis, the original cannot be had, and copy-testimony is not available. Thus the question to be considered is whether the dangers of inaccuracy that may attend the reception of recollection-testimony are sufficiently great to over-balance the dangers attending the entire failure of evidence of the contents of lost or destroyed records and the like. On this point, it is clear that the answer must be in the negative; the considerations are well expounded in the following passage:

1799, HAYWOOD, J., note to Haggett v. ——, 2 Hayw. 243: "When there is no record or deed, nor any copy, parol evidence will in general relate the fact truly, and is as much better than no evidence at all as records and deeds are superior to itself. It ought to be received upon the same principle as they are, not because there is absolute certainty either in the one or in the other (for a record or deed may be altered, corrupted, substituted, or the like), but because, in choosing probabilities, it is wise to take the best that offers. To require the production of a record or deed, when there is undoubted proof of its destruction, is to require an impossibility, and 'lex neminem cogit ad impossibilia.' To say his right shall be lost with the record or deed that proves, though destroyed by invincible calamity, is to inflict punishment for the acts of Heaven, and 'actus Dei nemini facit injuriam.' It were far better to abolish the institution of deeds and records altogether than to admit the position under consideration as a consequence of them. . . . If it be argued that the party should take and preserve a copy of the record amongst his other evidences, and then the loss of the record would not prejudice him, and that it is his own fault if he neglects to do so and the record becomes extinct, the answer is, [Firstly] that in contemplation of law he is not bound to take a copy till his occasions require it, for the law itself has undertaken to keep and preserve the record for him, to the end he may have a copy when he wants it, and therefore the not taking or not keeping a copy cannot be imputed to his negligence; Secondly, if he take a copy, that as well as the record may be lost; yet according to the controverted position, he cannot be let into parol evidence."

1850, SCOTT, J., in Davies v. Pettit, 11 Ark. 349, 352: "It is known that not only the existence and loss but also the contents of lost bonds, bills, notes, and other memorials of contracts and various other written instruments, from time immemorial have been allowed to be proven by parol evidence; and that many of these relate to the most important transactions among men, and that they are in general executed in privacy and comparatively but few of them are ever submitted to the public gaze. And yet the inquest of centuries has failed to present this rule to the Legislature as a public grievance in promoting perjury, and for this reason to demand its eradication from our judicial regulations. If, then, the morals, and safety of society have received no serious injury from its operation in a wide field of temptation, where the suborned are for the most part unchecked by the public eye, can it be possible that the admission of parol evidence of the loss and the effect of judgments at law, which are not produced in private like these private instruments of evidence, but are the result of the united action of the judge, jury, officers of Court, parties, their attorneys and witnesses, all under the eye of the bystanders, can be productive of the great evils apprehended from this source? On the contrary, is it not certain that of all the cases of the proof, by parol, of the contents of lost instruments of evidence, that of lost judgments, from the circumstances to which we have alluded, is most secured against the crime of perjury? — But it is supposed that a disastrous blow would be stricken against the sanctity of records, and in this that public policy would be greatly outraged. If records, while they existed, were allowed to be contradicted or established by parol, this would not fail to be the result. But how this is to result from the establishment of their tenor and effect when destroyed is not altogether clear. Surely judicial records are not so sacred that their very ashes must not be disturbed, and that, to minister to their quiet, the most important rights of men must be sacrificed, with Pagan superstition, to their names. Such a doctrine would have better befitted the days of the old barons of England, when chirography was so much esteemed that it was an indulgence for crime, than in our own times; and it is by no means certain that it obtained even in those days. Shall personal liberty be sacrificed at this altar, and a man be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb because his plea of former acquittal cannot be established by the ashes of a conflagrated record? Shall a man be twice punished for the same offence because the record of his former conviction, under which he was punished, from its destruction, cannot be produced to protect him from a second prosecution? Or shall the convicted forger be delivered from the penitentiary and set at large upon society because the same incendiary flame that destroyed the record of his conviction at the same time consumed the material evidence of his guilt? But these and many other startling consequences are by no means the only result of this supposed doctrine; for, let it be distinctly understood that the destruction of judicial records is the end of the public and private rights depending upon them while they exist, and at once a high premium for vice and crime is held out by the law, under the influence of which just fears might be apprehended for the safety of judicial records. . . . The law would be placed in the singular predicament of openly permitting the rude hand of crime to seize upon her highest muniments of truth and right, apply the incendiary torch, and hold the blazing sacrifice in the very face of justice. We cannot think that such a scene can be enacted under the auspices of the common law, whose oracles have ever claimed for it a capacity to afford a remedy for every wrong. On the contrary, we think that its recuperative energies are fully equal to the work of setting up, by the legitimate operation of its harmonious rules, every landmark of truth and right that may be at any time prostrated, either by the hand of crime, the inevitable accidents incident to men, or by the onward wear of time."

Such has been the rule unanimously accepted by the Courts. Since the disappearance of the old notion (ante, § 1177) that a lost document was a lost right, and the recognition of the principle that the rule of production is subject to certain excuses and exemptions, the proof of unproducible documents has always been allowed to be made by recollection-testimony (in the absence of such copy-testimony as is otherwise required, under the rules shortly to be noticed).

The proposed doctrine, that such recollection-testimony should be absolutely excluded, has been repudiated for judicial and official records,[1] although it was for a time adopted in two jurisdictions.[2] Here distinguish the impro-

§ 1267. [1] In some of the following cases the thing admitted was a copy, but the rule is laid down in general terms for "parol" or "oral" evidence: ENGLAND: 1774, Kingston v. Horner, H. Cowper 102, 109 (Lord Mansfield, C. J.: "If a foundation can be laid that a record or a deed existed and was afterwards lost, it may be supplied by the next best evidence to be had"); UNITED STATES: Federal: 1806, U. S. v. Lambell, 1 Cr. C. C. 312 (warrant); California: 1859, Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 11, 20 (judgment); 1863, Warfield's Will, 22 Cal. 51, 64 (probate petition); Colorado: 1878, Hittson v. Davenport, 2 Colo.

169, 174; Connecticut: 1839, Davidson v. Murphy, 13 Conn. 212, 219; Delaware: 1852, Polite v. Jefferson, 5 Harringt. 388; Florida: 1895, Edwards v. Rives, 35 Fla. 89, 17 So. 416 (must be clearly proved); Illinois: 1864, Aulger v. Smith, 34 Ill. 534 (lost deposition; recollection-evidence admitted); 1897, Gage v. Eddy, 167 Ill. 102, 47 N. E. 200 (deposition lost after filing; offeror may prove contents, without re-taking the deposition); Indiana: 1829, Jackson v. Cullum, 2 Blackf. 228 (judgment, etc.); 1853, Schwartz v. Osthimer, 4 Ind. 109 (plea); 1881, Johnson v. State, 80 Ind. 220, 221 (summons); 1886, McCullough v. Davis, 108 Ind. 292, 296, 9 N. E. 276 (title-records; "much latitude is allowable"); 1886, McFadden v. Fritz, 110 Ind. 1, 5, 10 N. E. 120 (writ); Iowa: 1859, Higgins v. Reed, 8 Ia. 298; 1864, Davis v. Strohm, 17 Ia. 421, 424, 427 (bond); Kentucky: 1840, Hawkins v. Craig, 1 B. Monr. 27 (writ); Louisiana: 1841, Childress v. Allin, 17 La. 37; 1893, Landry v. Landry, 45 La. An. 1113, 13 So. 672 (completing a partly burnt deed by oral evidence); Maine: 1843, Gore v. Elwell, 9 Shepl. 442; 1848, Wing v. Abbott, 15 Shepl. 367, 373; Massachusetts: 1815, Stockbridge v. W. Stockbridge, 12 Mass. 399, 402 (act of incorporation of town); 1836, Sturtevant v. Robinson, 18 Pick. 175, 179 (admitting a copy of a 'scire facias' writ, loss being shown; "it would be as correct to say that the loss of an original deed should affect the grantee's title to land" as to exclude such proof); 1839, Pruden v. Alden, 23 Pick. 184, 187 (admitting a copy of a license of sale shown to be lost); 1842, Sayles v. Briggs, 4 Metc. 421, 423; 1842, Eaton v. Hall, 5 Metc. 287, 291 (an order of Court directing reference to arbitrators; a copy admitted, on proof of loss; "the consideration that a particular document constitutes the basis of the jurisdiction of a Court does not essentially vary the rule in regard to secondary evidence, though it may require more care and vigilance in its application"); 1851, Com. v. Roark, 8 Cush. 210, 212 (complaint and warrant); 1854, Tillotson v. Warner, 3 Gray 574, 577; Michigan: 1857, People v. Dennis, 4 Mich. 609, 617 (indictment); 1874, Millar v. Babcock, 29 Mich. 526, 527 (attachment); 1878, Drake v. Kinsell, 38 Mich. 232, 234; 1886, People v. Coffman, 59 Mich. 1, 6, 26 N. W. 207; 1886, Blanchard v. DeGraff, 60 Mich. 107, 111, 26 N. W. 849; 1888, Cilley v. Van Patten, 68 Mich. 80, 83, 35 N. W. 831; Minnesota: 1866, Winona v. Huff, 11 Minn. 119, 128; 1908, Rogers v. Clark Iron Co., 104 Minn. 198, 116 N. W. 729 (Federal land-patent); Mississippi: 1850, Scott v. Loomis, 13 Sm. & M. 635, 641 (justice's docket); 1868, Martin v. Williams, 42 Miss. 210, 218, semble; Missouri: 1827, Ravenscroft v. Giboney, 2 Mo. 1 ("though the record may not have been very ancient"); 1871, Foulk v. Colburn, 48 Mo. 225, 230; 1873, Compton v. Arnold, 54 Mo. 147; 1884, State v. Schooley, 84 Mo. 447, 454 (tax-books); 1889, Crane v. Dameron, 98 Mo. 567, 570, 12 S. W. 251; New Jersey: 1849, Browning v. Flanagin, 22 N. J. L. 567, 571 (record); North Carolina: 1813, Stuart v. Fitzgerald, 2 Murph. 255 'capias'; 1835, Kello v. Maget, 1 Dev. & B. 414, 424; 1878, Rollins v. Henry, 78 N. C. 342, 347; 1887, Mobley v. Watts, 98 N. C. 284, 287, 3 S. E. 677; Pennsylvania: 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64, 65 (lost survey); 1793, Todd v. Ockerman, 1 Yeates 295, 297 (same); 1821, Wolverton v. Com., 7 S. & R. 273, 276; 1847, Farmers' Bank v. Gilson, 6 Pa. 51, 57; Tennessee: 1816, Read v. Staton, 3 Hayw. 159 (judgment); Vermont: 1852, Spear v. Tilson, 24 Vt. 420, 423 (grand list of assessment); 1855, Brown v. Richmond, 27 Vt. 583 (attachment); Virginia: 1832, Newcomb v. Drummond, 4 Leigh 57, 60; Wisconsin: 1880, Wambold v. Vick., 50 Wis. 456, 458, 7 N. W. 438, semble.

Compare here the cases cited post, § 1273, n., that a proceeding for judicial restoration of a lost record is not the exclusive means of proof; the principle is related to those of §§ 1347 and 1660, post, and is there again referred to.

[2] North Carolina: 1799, Hargett v. ——, 2 Hayw. 76 (Moore, J.: "It is better to suffer a private mischief than a public inconvenience"; copy admissible, but oral evidence of a lost record's contents excluded); Arkansas: 1839, Smith v. Dudley, 2 Ark. 60, 65 (lost or destroyed record may not be proved by parol when it "constitutes the sole foundation of the proceeding or cause of action"; but only by "authenticated or sworn copy"); 1842, Williams v. Brummel, 4 Ark. 129, 137 (judicial record, not by parol, but only by certified copy); 1842, Fowler v. More, 4 Ark. 570, 573 (lost record may be proved by copy; at least "such portions as process and the like"); 1843, Bailey v. Palmer, 5 Ark. 208 (same); 1847, Alexander v. Foreman, 7 Ark. 252 (same); 1843, Wallace v. Collins, 5 Ark. 41, 48 (execution; if no objection is taken, any evidence admissible); 1849, Phelan v. Bonham, 9 Ark. 388, 393 (same for a notice); 1850, Davies v. Pettit, 11 Ark. 349, 351 (lost or destroyed judicial record may be established by parol; see quotation supra, overruling Smith v. Dudley, and the intervening cases); 1860, Gracie v. Morris, 22 Ark. 415, 418 (preceding case ignored; but copy of lost record allowed); 1870, Mason v. Bull, 26 Ark. 164, 167 (Davies v. Pettit approved); 1878, Gates v. Bennett, 33 Ark. 475, 489 (same); 1883, Mill v. State, 40 Ark. 488, 495 (indictment destroyed, and record not restored; secondary evidence allowed; Eakin, J., diss.); 1886, Hallum v. Dickinson, 47 Ark. 120, 125, 14 S. W. 477 (Davies v. Pettit approved).

priety of proving an oral judicial act (post, § 2450) from the propriety of proving a written judicial record by "oral" evidence.

It has been repudiated for deeds.[3] Note that this permission to prove a written conveyance by "parol" evidence of its contents is a different thing from proving an oral or "parol" conveyance forbidden by the statute of frauds or by the "parol evidence" rule (post, § 2437);[4] distinguish also the requirement as to the completeness of detail with which the deed's contents must be proved (post, § 2105), and the degree of positiveness which the proof must reach (post, § 2498).

A missing negotiable instrument may also be proved by recollection-evidence.[5]

In the case of a missing will, it is equally well settled that recollection-testimony is admissible.[6] But here certain other requirements apply which

[3] This result was (as might be inferred from the historical development noted ante, § 1177) at first not accepted in England; but by the end of the 1700s it was fully established; 1711 Seymour's Case, 10 Mod. 8 ("The Court seemed of opinion that in case a deed was lost by some inevitable accident, that there it might be proved by a copy; but in case there was no copy, the contents of it could not be proved from the memory of those that knew the deed; and though it were hard for a man that had no copy, to lose the benefit of his deed, yet the inconveniences of admitting that sort of evidence would be greater"; but otherwise if the defendant had the deed, "for that in this case the danger of allowing this sort of evidence was none at all; for if the defendant was wronged by the parol evidence, it was in his power to set all right by producing the deed"); 1721, Dalston v. Coatsworth, 1 P. Wms. 731 (burnt deed supplied by parol testimony); 1768, Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 368 (an "attested copy may be produced or parol evidence be given of its contents"); and the citations in note 1, supra.

In the United States the propriety of such evidence is everywhere conceded: Alabama: 1859, Shorter v. Sheppard, 33 Ala. 648, 653; California: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1937 (of private writings, "by a copy, or by a recital of its contents in some authentic document, or by the recollection of a witness"); Connecticut: 1794, Kelley v. Riggs, 2 Root 126, 128; 1857, St. Peter's Church v. Beach, 26 Conn. 355, 359, 365; Illinois; 1887, Bush v. Stanley, 122 Ill. 406, 416 13 N. E. 249; Kentucky; 1847, Chisholm v. Ben, 7 B. Monr. 408, 414 (but for the mere loss of a will, as distinguished from fraudulent suppression, circumstantial evidence does not suffice); Louisiana: 1885, Lane v. Cameron, 37 La. An. 250; 1901, Willett v. Andrews, 106 La. 319, 30 So. 883; Minnesota: 1889, Wakefield v. Day, 41 Minn. 344, 347, 43 N. W. 71; Missouri: 1820, Gipson v. Owens, 286 Mo. 33, 226 S. W. 856 (deed of adoption); New Hampshire: 1827, Colby v. Kenniston, 4 N. H. 262, 265; 1844, New Boston v. Dunbarton, 15 N. H. 201, 205 (charter); 1844, Downing v. Pickering, 15 N. H. 344; 1850, Forsaith v. Clark, 21 N. H. 409, 417 (proprietary charter); 1852, Neally v. Greenough, 25 id. 325, 330 ("Generally the party who is driven by the loss or destruction of a paper . . . to resort to secondary evidence is confined to no particular species of evidence; it may be more or less direct, or merely circumstantial"); New York: 1831, Jackson v. Livingston, 7 Wend. 136, 140; Pennsylvania: 1861, Miltimore v. Miltimore, 40 Pa. 151, 154 (abstract); Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 321 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1937); South Carolina: 1798, Frost v. Brown, 2 Bay 135, 138 ("It is very clear that the existence and loss of a deed may be presumed by a jury from circumstances"); Virginia: 1895 Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 226, 21 S. E. 347 (lost deed established by statements against interest in a chancery answer).

[4] 1861, Jenkins, J., in Roe & McDowell v. Doe & Irwin, 32 Ga. 39, 51 ("It is not evidence of a conveyance by parol. It is parol evidence of a conveyance by deed, the loss or destruction of which has been proven").

Here compare the New York cases (ante, § 1257) excluding certain admissions of parties as amounting to an oral conveyance.

[5] 1809, Jones v. Failes, 5 Mass. 101 (promissory notes); see citations ante, § 1197.

The following ruling is peculiar: 1869, Austine v. People, 51 Ill. 236, 239 (copy of a confession, made two years afterward from recollection alone, excluded).

[6] ENGLAND: 1824, Davis v. Davis, 2 Add. Eccl. 223, 224, 228; 1864, Wharram v. Wharram, 3 Sw. & Tr. 301 (pointing out the dangers of such evidence, but concluding that "at any rate" it "ought to be of a very cogent character"); 1858, Brown v. Brown, 8 E. & B. 876 (Lord Campbell, C. J.: "It was the common case of a lost instrument; and parol evidence of the contents of a lost instrument may be received as much when it is a will as if it were any other"); 1876, Sugden v. St.

must be distinguished, namely, the number of witnesses by which the contents or the execution must be proved (post, § 2052), the degree of positiveness or clearness which the evidence must attain in order to suffice (post, § 2498), the completeness of the details of the contents as thus evidenced (post, § 2106), the admissibility of circumstantial evidence, including the testator's belief as to the contents (ante, § 271), the admissibility of the testator's declarations (post, § 1734), and the conditional preference for a copy, if available, over recollection-testimony (post, § 1268).

§ 1268. Is a Written Copy conditionally preferred to Recollection? Admissibility of Recollection before showing Copy unavailable. Whether a copy must be offered, if available, i.e. whether a copy is conditionally preferred to recollection-testimony, is a question that is difficult to answer, both upon principle and upon precedent.

1. There are strong reasons on both sides of the question, and there has been little consistency of rulings even within single jurisdictions. The following passages expound the reasons for requiring such a preference:

1839, Anon., in 4 Monthly Law Magazine, 265, 267: "The argument relied on to show that a distinction exists among the various species of secondary evidence is a supposed equitable extension of the principle which postpones all secondary evidence until the non-production of the primary is accounted for. . . . Does it not follow, [is the claim on this behalf,] as a necessary corollary from this proposition, that if certain species of secondary evidence be manifestly better and more likely to contain a true account of what was in the original than others, a party ought not to be allowed to resort to the latter until his incapacity to produce the former be demonstrated? . . . [The argument is that] a copy, the correct-

Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154, 238 (Jessel, M. R.: "Can we admit, as a matter of course, secondary evidence in proof of a will? I should have thought that there could be but one answer to that question, and had it not been for the doubt thrown out by a very eminent judge in the case of Wharram v. Wharram, I should have thought it impossible to argue the question. . . . The whole theory of secondary evidence depends upon this, that the primary evidence is lost, and that it is against justice that the accident of the loss should deprive a man of the rights to which he would otherwise be entitled. I am at a loss to discover any reason whatever for distinguishing between the loss of a will and the loss of a deed"); 1890, Harris v. Knight, L. R. 15 id. 170, 179.

CANADA: 1903, Stewart v. Walker, 6 Ont. L. R., 495, 501 (Sugden v. St. Leonards followed; but some corroboration is required).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1884, Jacques v. Horton, 76 Ala. 238, 245; 1886, Skeggs v. Horton, 82 Ala. 353, 2 So. 110; California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1969 (a will instrument, except nuncupative, "must be produced, or secondary evidence of its contents be given"); Delaware: 1843, Kearns v. Kearns, 4 Harringt. 83; Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7973 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1969); Illinois: 1882, Anderson v. Irwin, 101, Ill. 411, 415; Kansas: G. S. 1915, § 11801; Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 68, § 9 (a lost will may be proved by a copy and subscribing witnesses' testimony, or by "any other evidence competent"); Massachusetts: 1825, Clark v. Wright, 3 Pick. 66, 68; 1844, Davis v. Sigourney, 8 Metc. 487; Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 7279 (a will lost or destroyed or out of the State and unproducible is provable by "parol or other evidence"); Missouri: 1834, Graham v. O'Fallon, 3 Mo. 507; 4 Mo. 601, 607; New Jersey: 1863, Wyckoff v. Wyckoff, 16 N. J. Eq. 401, 405; 1898, Coddington v. Jenner, 57 N. J. Eq. 528, 41 Atl. 874; New York: 1805, Jackson v. Lucett, 2 Caines 363, 367; 1863, Harris v. Harris, 26 N. Y. 433; North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 370 (destroyed will, "there being no copy thereof", may be established by proof of the "entire contents"); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 802; Pennsylvania: 1878, Foster's Appeal, 87 Pa. 67, 75 ("Its loss or accidental destruction differs not from the loss or destruction of any other solemn instrument, such as a deed, note or bond, or a record"), South Carolina: 1795, Potts v. Cogdell, 1 De Sauss. 454; 1795, Legare v. Ashe, 1 Bay 464; 1818, Reeves v. Reeves, 2 Mill Const. 334, Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 3911 (if the original is lost or mislaid, the trial may proceed upon a supposed copy); 1897, McNeely v. Pearson, ness of which is sworn to by a witness who has compared it with the original is far more to be relied on than the mere memory of that witness as to the contents of the latter, — both on account of the comparative imperfection of all verbal testimony, when compared with written, and also that in such a case the utmost which any witness under ordinary circumstances can be expected to remember of the contents of a writing in which he is not interested is that he shall have a general recollection of its leading features, but that he is not likely to remember conditions, limitations, or particular words used in it, which might however have a most material effect in altering or qualifying its meaning; so that . . . [only when counterpart, copy, and abstract fail] he may then, but not till then, be allowed to resort to the dangerous and unsatisfactory proof deduced from the memory of a witness."

1849, NISBET, J., in Doe v. Biggers, 6 Ga. 188, 199: "Now the highest degree of secondary evidence is not required. The rule upon that point is this: When there is no ground for legal presumption that better secondary evidence exists, any proof is received which is not inadmissible by other rules of law, unless the objecting party can show that better evidence was previously known to the other and might have been produced; thus subjecting him by positive proof to the same imputation of fraud which the law itself presumes when primary evidence is withheld."

1856, GOLDTHWAITE, C. J., in Harvey v. Thorpe, 28 Ala. 250, 262: "[The American weight of authority requires that] the best kind of that character of evidence which appears to be in the power of the party to produce must be offered. We confess that the American rule appears to us more reasonable than the English; and we see great propriety, if there was an examined copy of an instrument in the possession of a party, in refusing to allow him to prove it by the uncertain memory of witnesses. A copy of a letter, taken by a copying press, would unquestionably be better evidence of the original than the recollection of its contents by a witness; and the same reasons which would require the production of the original if in the control of the party, would operate in favor of the production of the facsimile or of the examined copy. But in all these cases the strength of the proposition consists in the fact there is secondary evidence in its nature and character better than that which the party offers, and that it is in his power to produce it."

The arguments against making any such distinction are thus set forth:

1840, ABINGER, L. C. B., in Doe v. Ross, 7 M. & W. 102 (the question was whether an attested copy of a deed was to be preferred to the testimony of one who had read it): "Upon examination of the cases, and upon principle, we think there are no degrees of secondary evidence. The rule is that if you cannot produce the original, you may give parol evidence of its contents. If indeed the party giving such parol evidence appears to have better secondary evidence in his power which he does not produce, that is a fact to go to the jury, from which they might sometimes presume that the evidence kept back would be adverse to the party withholding it. But the law makes no distinction between one class of secondary evidence and another." ALDERSON, B.: "The objection [to secondary evidence] must arise from the nature of the evidence itself. If you produce a copy, which shows that there was an original, or if you give parol evidence of the contents of a deed, the evidence itself discloses the existence of the deed. But reverse the case; the existence of an original does not show the existence of any copy; nor does parol evidence of the contents of a deed show the existence of anything except the deed itself. If one species of secondary evidence is to exclude another, a party tendering parol evidence of a deed must account for all the secondary evidence that has existed. He may know of nothing but the original and the other side at the trial may defeat him by showing a copy, the existence of which he had no means of ascertaining. Fifty copies may be in existence unknown to him, and he would be bound to account for them all."

— Tenn. —, 42 S. W. 165; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7115 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1969); Vermont: 1842, Minkler v. Minkler, 14 Vt. 125, 127, 1868, Dudley v. Wardner, 41 Vt. 59.

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, § 84, note: "On the other hand, it is said that this argument for the extension of the rule confounds all distinction between the weight of evidence and its legal admissibility; that the rule is founded upon the nature of the evidence offered, and not upon its strength or weakness; and that, to carry it to the length of establishing degrees in secondary evidence, as fixed rules of law, would often tend to the subversion of justice, and always be productive of inconvenience. If, for example, proof of the existence of an abstract of a deed will exclude oral evidence of its contents, this proof may be withheld by the adverse party until the moment of trial, and the other side be defeated, or the cause be greatly delayed; and the same mischief may be repeated, through all the different degrees of the evidence. It is therefore insisted, that the rule of exclusion ought to be restricted to such evidence only as, upon its face, discloses the existence of better proof; and that where the evidence is not of this nature, it is to be received, notwithstanding it may be shown from other sources that the party might have offered that which was more satisfactory; leaving the weight of the evidence to be judged of by the Jury, under all the circumstances of the case.[1] . . . The American doctrine, as deduced from various authorities, seems to be this; that if, from the nature of the case itself, . . . there is no ground for legal presumption that better secondary evidence exists, any proof is received, which is not inadmissible by other rules of law; unless the objecting party can show that better evidence was previously known to the other, and might have been produced; thus subjecting him, by positive proof, to the same imputation of fraud, which the law itself presumes, when primary evidence is withheld."

1849, Lipscomb, J., in Lewis v. San Antonio, 7 Tex. 288, 315: "It is believed that the rule sanctioned by Greenleaf is more philosophical and harmonizes better with the progress of the more enlightened jurisprudence of the age on the subject of the admissibility of evidence, — that is, to curtail and limit the objections to the competency and let the evidence in, to go to the jury to judge of its weight or credibility. In every case where a party kept back a more satisfactory kind of evidence that was in his power to have produced and within his knowledge, it would operate strongly against such as he had offered, of less certainty, with the jury. This would prevent embarrassing discussions that would often arise suddenly, at the moment when testimony would be offered, whether it was most satisfactory and carried the most weight of any that could be afforded. The only question should be whether it was admissible and legal; the party offering it would take the risk of its being satisfactory to prove the fact for which it was offered to the jury."

It will be seen that the conflict of arguments is due on the one hand to the conceded desirability of employing a copy as better than mere recollection, and, on the other hand, to the hardship of exacting this invariably of a proponent who may be put to excessive trouble to obtain such a copy.

A simple solution, giving effect to some extent to both of these considerations, is the following: Let the proponent of recollection-testimony be required, before using it, to show that he has not within his control a copy; if he has not, then he may offer recollection-testimony; and the opponent may then, if there is any real dispute on his part as to the contents, put in a copy if one is available. This rule procures the benefit of a copy without putting an undue burden upon the proponent; for if a copy is available at all, elsewhere than in the proponent's own control, it is fitter that the opponent should have the risk and the trouble of procuring it. The rule then, briefly, would be: The party offering to prove the contents of an unavailable original document, must offer a copy, if he has one in his control, in preference to recollection-testimony.

§ 1268. [1] See these arguments more fully set forth in the article in 4 Monthly Law Magazine 265, supra, where the author of the article concludes strongly against a rule of preference.

2. Coming to the rule of law as judicially enforced, it may first be noted that a fallacious definiteness has often been given to the question by referring (as in the passage above quoted) to the "English" rule as distinguished from the "American" rule. There is no such distinction. The English precedents are divided, though the ruling in Doe v. Ross (quoted above) finally established a rule for one class of cases; and the American jurisdictions are also divided. Moreover, any such generality as "there are no degrees of secondary evidence" [2] is of no value, because it is not correct; for there are at least two or three settled distinctions in that category (as the precedents in the ensuing sections indicate); such general remarks cannot safely be trusted and must be construed merely with reference to the distinction then before the Court.

As to the state of the precedents, it is clear that the orthodox English doctrine did for deeds prefer a copy before recollection-testimony;[3] and the same preference has been recognized in proving various kinds of documents, in rulings both English and American, although it does not usually appear clearly whether the preference is conditional on the copy being anywhere available or merely on its being in the proponent's control, nor whether it is for the opponent to show that such a copy is available or for the proponent to show that it is not available.[4] On the other hand, it is clear that by the [2] 1833, Brown v. Woodman, 6 C. & P. 206 (Parke, J.: "There are no degrees in secondary evidence," except perhaps for duplicate originals); 1858, Fitzgerald v. Williams, 24 Ga. 243, 345 (there are no degrees); 1869, Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362, semble (in general, "there are no degrees of legal distinction"); 1875, Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49, 52 ("There are no degrees of evidence, except where some document [must be produced in the original]"); 1873, Cornett v. Williams, 20 Wall. 226, 246 ("This Court has not yet gone the length of the English adjudications, which hold without qualification, that there are no degrees in secondary evidence").

[3] 1773, Lord Mansfield, C. J., in Ludlam's Will, Lofft 362 ("If you cannot prove a deed by producing it, you may produce the counterpart; if you can't produce the counterpart, you may produce a copy, even if you cannot prove it to be a true copy; if a copy cannot be produced, you may go into parol evidence of the deed"); 1740, Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 71 (Lord Hardwicke, L. C., places counterpart, copy, and parol evidence in this order); 1744, Omichund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 21, 49 (Lord Hardwicke, L. C., places a copy before "witnesses who have heard the deed; and yet it is a thing the law abhors to admit the memory of man for evidence").

For the rule requiring first a counterpart as equivalent to the original, see ante, § 1233.

[4] ENGLAND: 1791, Breton v. Cope, Peake 30 (Bank of England stock-books; written copy required); 1810, Rhind v. Wilkinson, 2 Taunt. 237 (license to trade during war; the register of licenses at the Secretary of State's office held a preferable source to the captain's recollection);

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1822, U. S. v. Britton, 2 Mason 464, 468 (examined copy, "if any such exist and can be found", preferred to oral testimony; here applied to a forged document); 1823, Riggs v. Taylor, 9 Wheat. 483, 486 ("[He] may read a counterpart, or if there is no counterpart, an examined copy, or if there should not be an examined copy, he may give parol evidence of its contents"); 1882, Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32, 43, 2 Sup. 313 (following Riggs v. Taylor, as to order of preference, and admitting oral testimony of contents of a deed by one who verified a certified copy not made by himself); 1899, Lloyd v. Supreme Lodge, 38 C. C. A. 654, 98 Fed. 66 (certified copy of lodge by-law, preferred to oral testimony); Georgia: 1849, Doe v. Biggers, 6 Ga. 188, 199 (copy preferred conditionally; see quotation supra; circumstantial proof of contents here allowed); 1867, Williams v. Waters, 36 Ga. 454, 458 (certified copies of contract, preferred to oral testimony); 1900, Shedden v. Heard, 110 Ga. 461, 35 S. E. 707 (use of a copy of insurance application excludes recollection-testimony of ruling in Doe v. Ross the English rule has been changed, and no preference is now accorded to a copy, for proving deeds and other private documents; and this result has been accepted in not more than a minority of the American Courts that have ruled upon the question;[5] although it is to be remembered (as appears in § 1269, post) that such rulings must be understood as applying usually to private documents only, and that any general principle enunciated in them cannot ordinarily be construed to mean more than that.

3. In determining what is a copy, for the purposes of the present rule, an alleged copy submitted to the witness and verified by him as correct, though not made nor previously seen by him, would perhaps be treated as a copy;[6] though obviously it is not, since the witness is dependent upon his memory for verifying the correctness of the alleged copy, and his testimony is open contents); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 116, § 28 (where an original conveyance, etc., is shown lost or out of the party's power, and the record is destroyed, "the Court shall receive all such evidence as may have a bearing on the case to establish the execution or contents" of the conveyance, record, etc.); 1899, Harrell v. Enterprise Sav. Bank, 183 Ill. 538, 56 N. E. 63 (after fruitless search for a record of a lost deed, memoranda, etc., showing the contents are admissible); Indiana: 1858, Madison I. & P. R. Co. v. Whitesel, 11 Ind. 55, 57 (certified copy of corporation-records, preferred to oral testimony); 1861, Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Jewett, 16 Ind. 273 (sworn copy of corporation-records not preferred to oral testimony, where the secretary had refused to produce the original or to furnish a copy); Maryland: 1909, Robinson v. Singerly P. & P. Co., 110 Md. 382, 72 Atl. 828 (American rule as stated by Greenleaf, adopted); Michigan: 1875, Day v. Backus, 31 Mich. 241, 245 (whether fresh copies of a letter are preferable to oral testimony, not decided); 1900, Phillips v. U. S. Benevolent Soc'y, 125 Mich. 186, 84 N. W. 57 (insurance application filed in Canada; sworn or certified copy preferred; Montgomery, C. J., and Hooker, J., diss.); New Jersey: 1832, Smith v. Axtell, 1 N. J. L. 494, 498 (copy of written agreement preferred to oral testimony); Pennsylvania: 1862, Stevenson v. Hoy, 43 Pa. 191, 193, 196 (facsimile press copy preferred to copy from recollection); Philippine Islands: 1906, Timbol v. Manalo, 6 P. I. 254 (nuncupative will executed before a notary; the notary's protocols and archives being lost, a certified copy under the notary's seal, in the executor's possession, was held sufficient, under Civ. C. § 1221, quoted ante, § 1225); Wisconsin: 1885, Cleveland v. Burnham, 64 Wis. 347, 357, 359, 25 N. W. 407 (bank-books; certain stock-certificates held better evidence than oral testimony).

[5] England: 1807, Kensington v. Inglis, 8 East 273, 279, 289 (a memorandum book of trading licenses, kept by a governor's secretary, not preferred to his oral statement of a license's contents); 1808, Fisher v. Samuda, 1 Camp. 193 (letter; copy not preferred to recollection); 1834, Doe v. Cole, 6 C. & P. 359 (tablet on a church; oral description allowed); 1840, Doe v. Ross, 7 M. & W. 102 (as between an attested copy of a deed and the testimony of one who had read the deed, no preference was given to the former; see quotation supra);

United States: Alabama: 1884, Jaques v. Horton, 76 Ala. 238, 246 (copy of a lost will, not preferable to oral testimony); Indiana: 1858, Carpenter v. Dane, 10 Ind. 125, 132 (sworn copy of a bond, not preferred to oral testimony by recollection; no degrees "as a general rule" in secondary evidence; Coman v. State, 4 Blackf. 241, repudiated); Michigan: 1873, Eglow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500, 205 (copy not preferred to oral testimony, for private writings not existing in counterpart); Minnesota: 1893, Minneapolis T. Co. v. Nimocks, 53 Minn. 381, 55 N. W. 546 (supposed copy of notice not preferred to sender's recollection); Missouri: 1906, State v. Barrington, 189 Mo. 23, 95 S. W. 235, semble (letter); New York: 1805, Jackson v. Lucett, 2 Caines 363 367 (deed is provable orally or by copy); 1805, Tower v. Wilson, 3 Caines 174 (notice served; no copy having been kept, it was proved orally); North Carolina: 1917, Universal Oil & F. Co. v. Burney, 174 N. C. 382, 93 S. E. 912 (plaintiff, the receiver of a letter from defendant, proved its loss; whether the copy retained by defendant was not required to be called for by defendant, in preference to his own recollection-testimony, not decided).

[6] 1833, R. v. Fursey, 6 C. & P. 81, 84 (a notice, Parke, J.: "The usual way in such cases is to give a copy to the witness and ask if it is a copy of what he saw. I do not say that parol evidence is inadmissible"); see other cases post, § 1280, where the admissibility of such a copy is considered.

to nearly all the possibilities of error to which ordinary recollection-testimony is open.

§ 1269. Same: (a) Copy preferred for proving Public Records. It has been noted (ante, § 1268) that the particular hardship of a rule of preference for copies lay in the circumstance that it imposed upon the proponent the burden of searching in possible places and of proving that a copy was not to be had. Such a hardship disappears when the original is kept in a known public office, whence copies may be obtained by any one upon request.

This is apparently the reason for a distinction well settled in all jurisdictions, namely, that judicial records, if in existence, must be proved by copy in preference to recollection-testimony.[1] It would seem that upon the same principle a copy would be preferred for proving a document of any sort in public official custody; this is the result accepted in a majority of jurisdictions;[2] though the contrary view finds some support.[3] Certainly some limi-§ 1269. [1] See the cases cited ante, § 1215, and § 1244, where this is assumed, and also the citations in § 1267, and the following cases: Canada: 1904, R. v. Drummond, 10 Ont. L. R. 546 (perjury; the indictment and judgment of the other trial must be evidenced by an exemplified or sworn copy, or certificate of substance under Dom. Cr. C. § 691, and not by the clerk's minute book); U. S. Ill. 1908, Felix v. Caldwell, 235 Ill. 159, 85 N. E. 228 (destroyed probate decree evidenced by recollection and the recitals of the administrator's deed, since "there was in existence no other writing or memorandum"); N. Y. 1810, Brush v. Taggart, 7 John. 19 (sworn copy of a writ of certiorari preferred to oral evidence); 1815, Foster v. Trull, 12 N. Y. 456 (same, for a writ of arrest); Pa. 1886, Otto v. Trump, 115 Pa. 425, 429, 8 Atl. 786 (contents of a foreign record: a copy preferred to parol).

But when a copy has been offered, the opponent may well be allowed to dispute its correctness by recollection-testimony without endeavoring to obtain another copy; 1866, Estes v. Farnham, 11 Minn. 423, 437 (lost pleadings; incorrectness of a supposed copy may be shown by parol, where better evidence is not disclosed by the case); Contra: 1900, Shedden v. Heard, Ga., semble, cited ante, § 1268.

The extreme phrasing in Glos v. Holmes, 228 Ill. 436, 81 N. E. 1064 (1907), that the correctness of a sworn copy of records of a tax-sale in the county-clerk's office "could not be disputed by oral evidence" must be understood in the light of the special case; the ruling was, in effect, merely that where the original record was in court, the sworn copy's correctness was disputable only by the original, not by recollection-testimony.

[2] Alabama: 1881, Miller v. Boykin, 70 Ala. 469, 478 (postmaster's register of mail-arrivals, etc.; not allowed to testify from memoranda of the register; a sworn or a certified copy indispensable); Arkansas: 1896, Jones v. Melindy, 62 Ark. 203, 208, 36 S. W. 22 (register of mortgages testifying to contents of record not lost, excluded; proof must be by examined or certified copy); 1898, Redd v. State, 65 Ark. 475, 47 S. W. 119 (certified copy of pardon, if available preferred to oral testimony of it); 1910, Russell v. State, 97 Ark. 92, 133 S. W. 188 (certified copy of public land plats and maps, etc., preferred to oral testimony); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1855 (for public or recorded documents, a copy is necessary; for documents lost or in the opponent's possession, "either a copy or oral evidence"); 1856, Brotherton v. Mart, 6 Cal. 488 (lost recorded deed; record copy preferred to other evidence); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5804 ("When a record has been burned, or otherwise destroyed, its contents may be proved by secondary evidence which does not disclose the existence of other and better evidence"); Rev. C. 1910, § 5807 (on the loss of record and original document, any evidence admissible "which does not disclose the existence of other and better evidence"); compare also § 5760 (examined copy preferred to oral evidence); 1873, Mobley v. Breed, 48 Ga. 44, 47 (sworn copy of assessment-proceedings, preferred to oral testimony); 1895, Bowden v. Achor, 95 Ga. 254, 22 S. E. 254 (document in another State; oral testimony sufficient, unless a certified copy were obtainable, as in the case of an official document); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7970 (for public records, or other documents in custody of a public officer, or recorded, a copy must be produced; for others, "either a copy or oral evidence of the contents"; Illinois: 1844, Williams v. Jarrot, 6 Ill. 120, 129 (clerk's certificate of letters of administration, preferred to oral evidence of appointment); 1848, Mariner v. Saunders, 10 Ill. 113, 121 (sworn or certified copy of a recorded deed, if available, preferred to recollection); Iowa: 1859, Higgins v. Reed, 8 Ia. 298, 300 (copy of tations to such a general rule may well obtain, and there should be a judicial discretion to make exceptions.

Where the judicial or official record is no longer in existence at the time of trial, the reason for the rule falls away, and it should be enough to require the proponent to show, before using recollection-testimony, that he has no copy within his control.[4] But the fact that the record is in another jurisdic-

a public record preferred to oral evidence); 1861, Horseman v. Todhunter, 12 Ia. 230, 234 (certified copy of recorded mortgage preferred to oral evidence); Louisiana: 1912, State v. Oden, 130 La. 598, 58 So. 351 (illegal liquor-selling; by statute the collector's certificate of an issuance of a Federal revenue license was admissible to prove such a license; the certificate held to be the "best evidence", so that the defendant's own admissions on cross-examination could not be asked for; this is a most unpractical ruling; it is of the kind that puts the law far away in the jungle of logical unrealities, where it has nothing to do with actual needs); Maine: 1915, Inhabitants of Rumford v. Inhabitants of Upton, 113 Me. 543, 95 Atl. 226 (pauper supplies; testimony from recollection of entries in town treasurer's books, not received; a certified or an examined copy being preferred); Massachusetts: 1829, Poignand v. Smith, 8 Pick. 272, 279 (registry-copy of a mortgage preferred to oral testimony); 1832, Sheldon v. Frink, 12 Pick. 567 (oral testimony of a record's contents; a certified transcript preferred); Michigan: 1873, Platt v. Hauer, 27 Mich. 167 (exemplification of U. S. land-patent, preferred to oral testimony); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10516 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); 1878, Belk v. Meagher, 3 Mont. T. 65, 72 (official copy of original title-records, preferred to recollection of witness as to location); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5417 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); New Hampshire: 1827, Colby v. Kenniston, 4 N. H. 262, 265, semble (record of lost deed, preferred to oral testimony); North Carolina: 1835, Kello v. Maget, 1 Dev. & B. 414, 424 (for bonds, records, etc.: order of preference is a copy, an abstract recollection); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 712 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); Tennessee: 1808, Hampton v. M'Ginnis, 1 Overt. 286, 294 (official list of land-entries in lost books, preferred to oral evidence of the entries); 1809, Reid v. Dodson, 1 Overt. 395, 402 (copy of recorded plat, preferred to surveyor's testimony, to prove an alteration); Texas: 1849, Lewis v. San Antonio, 7 Tex. 288, 311 (whether a certified or sworn copy of a lost recorded original is preferred to oral testimony: discussed but not decided); 1868, Werbiskie v. McManus, 31 Tex. 116, 122, semble (certified copy of letters of administration, preferred to clerk's testimony on the stand); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1392 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); § 4295 ("Should the original instrument, the protocol, and the original record have disappeared, the following shall constitute evidence: 1. First, copies made by the public official who authenticated them. 2. Subsequent copies issued by virtue of a judicial mandate, after citing the persons interested. 3. 'Those which, without a judicial mandate, may have been taken in the presence of the persons interested and with their consent. The force of proof of copies of a copy shall be weighed by the courts according to the circumstances"); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7117, par. 5 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855); Wisconsin: 1861, Sexsmith v. Jones, 13 Wis. 565, 568 (certified copy of record of lost mortgage preferred to oral testimony); 1881, Johnson v. Ashland L. Co., 52 Wis. 458, 463, 9 N. W. 464, semble (same).

For cases preferring the official custodian's testimony to the absence of a record, see ante, § 1244.

[3] Fed. 1832, U. S. v. Reyburn, 6 Pet. 352, 367 (privateer's commission by Government of Buenos Ayres; sworn or certified copy from the record, not preferred to testimony of one who had seen the commission, on the facte); Mich. 1906, People v. Christian, 144 Mich. 247, 107 N. W. 919 (oral testimony to a land-officer's letter, admitted, though a copy of the press-copy in the land office could have been had; "there are no degrees in secondary evidence"; no authority cited); Mo. 1835, Draper v. Clemens, 4 Mo. 52, 54 (copy of notary's register not preferred to the protest or to his testimony); N. J. 1866, Wells v. J. I. Mfg. Co., 47 N. H. 235, 256 (record in a town clerk's office; provable by parol, "where the case from its nature does not disclose the existence of other and better evidence"; here refusing to have a record made up anew); Oh. 1837, Blackburn v. Blackburn, 8 Oh. 81, 83 (lost deed; certified copy of record not preferred to oral recollection); S. C. St. 1911, No. 53, p. 91 (amending § 32 of St. 1907, Feb. 16; "records of the original books of the collector of internal revenue," showing payment of a U. S. liquor tax, may be evidenced "by the oath of any one who may have inspected the same").

Distinguish the principle of § 1244, ante, where the object of proof is not the terms of the record, but its net effect.

[4] Colo. 1878, Hittson v. Davenport, 4 Colo. 169, 174 (burnt judicial records; contents proved orally, the existence of better evidence not appearing), 1890, Conway v. John, 14 Colo. 30, 23 Pac. 170 (lost files, proved orally);

tion would not exempt from the requirement of a copy,[5] because a copy is obtainable and because the procuring a copy is no more difficult than the procuring a perusal for recollection-testimony.

§ 1270. Same: (b) Copy of a Record of Conviction, as preferred to the Convict's Testimony on Cross-examination. When it is desired to prove against a witness his conviction of crime, for the purpose either of excluding him as incompetent by infamy (ante, § 519) or of discrediting him by the conviction (ante, § 980), the object of the proof is the contents of the record embodying the judgment of conviction. A strict application, therefore, of the foregoing principle (ante, § 1269) would require the record's contents to be proved by a copy of it, and not by recollection-testimony:

1806, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in R. v. Castell Carcinion, 8 East 77, 79: "It cannot seriously be argued that a record can be proved by the admission of any witness. He may have mistaken what passed in court, and may have been ordered on his knees for a misdemeanor. This can only be known by the record."

1822, Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 514, 537: "If anything short of a record should be admitted to impeach the competency of a witness, it would be easy for parties accused to protect themselves from punishment; and it would be in most cases impossible for the witness attacked without previous notice to defend his reputation."[1]

But, while it may be conceded that such should be the rule as against the recollection-testimony of a second witness called for the purpose of proving the conviction, it is surely a straining of technical requirements to forbid proof by the testimony of the impeached witness himself, given on cross-examination. Lord Ellenborough's sober suggestion that the witness "may have mistaken what passed in court" is a refinement of apprehension, and borders nearly on the ridiculous. That there is any real risk of reaching an erroneous result by taking the witness' own admission against his credit, extracted on cross-examination, is impossible; there is in such a case no need to insist upon a copy:

1869, COOLEY, C. J., in Clemens v. Conrad, 19 Mich. 175: "We think the reasons for requiring record evidence of conviction have very little application to a case where the party convicted is himself upon the stand and is questioned concerning it with a view to sifting his character upon cross-examination. The danger that he will falsely testify to a conviction which never took place, or that he may be mistaken about it, is so slight that it may almost be looked upon as purely imaginary; while the danger that worthless charac-

Ill. 1907, Kennedy v. Borah, 226 Ill. 243, 80 N. E. 767 (whether preliminary proof of lack of a certified copy of burnt records of a court should be required; not decided); 1911, People v. Cotton, 250 Ill. 338, 95 N. E. 283 (forged entry in a chattel mortgage acknowledged before a justice; to prove that the justice's lost docket did not contain a note of a certain chattel in the mortgaged lot, the contents were allowed to be evidenced by oral recollection of the justice, without preferring a copy made as a part of testimony before the master); S. C. 1895, Hobbs v. Beard, 43 S. C. 370, 21 S. E. 305 (oral evidence of lost record's contents, admitted where no copy appeared to be in offeror's power).

[5] Otto v. Trump, Pa., Bowden v. Achor, Ga., in notes 1, 2, supra.

Contra: Va. 1803, Young v. Gregorie, 3 Call, 446, 452 (record in a foreign country may be proved by depositions, etc., without producing a copy of the record): 1809, Hadfield v. Jameson, 2 Munf. 53, 70, 76, 78 (preceding case approved).

§ 1270. [1] This, however, was said only of testimony by a second witness, and not of the first witness' cross-examination.

ters will unexpectedly be placed upon the stand, with no opportunity for the opposite party to produce the record evidence of their infamy, is always palpable and imminent."

1904, POWERS, J., in State v. Knowles, 98 Me. 429, 527 Atl. 588: "Whether to impeach his credibility the conviction of a witness may be proved by questioning him on cross-examination, has been variously decided by different judicial tribunals. Formerly, when conviction of an infamous crime rendered a witness incompetent, it was universally held that for that purpose the conviction could be proved by the record alone. . . In a technical sense, the record may be the best evidence and the rule of primariness may require its production. This general rule, however, is of no great value unless in its application to the subject under consideration, it is necessary for the interests of justice to avoid error, exclude falsehood, and promote the truth. It can hardly be claimed that a record of conviction is any more convincing to the mind, or less liable to error, than is the witness' own admission of the fact under oath. He may well be presumed to know what the truth is. There is very little possibility of his being mistaken as to the fact of the conviction and none as to the identity of the party convicted. He has every inducement of self-interest to protect his good name and reputation, and it is inconceivable that he will falsely accuse himself. In many cases also the prompt and proper administration of justice requires the acceptance of a broader and more liberal rule of evidence. The opposing party frequently has no knowledge that the witness is to testify until he takes the stand. It may then be too late to obtain a record of his conviction from other courts or counties, or even from distant States, without delaying the trial. Even if possible to obtain it, its production may be accompanied by great expense. Why should this burden be imposed upon a party seeking to impeach the credibility of the witness, if the witness himself is willing to admit the fact sought to be proved? If he does not admit it, it must then be proved by the record and the record is conclusive. If he does admit it, it would seem only reasonable to explore the source of evidence which is ready at hand rather than to seek for that which is far away and which it may require considerable time and money to produce, when there is apparently as little liability of error in the one source of evidence as in the other. Reason is the life of the law. 'Cessante ratione legis cessat ipsa fex.'

Such, indeed, was the earlier rule, when on the 'voir dire' a witness' infamy could be proved by his own admissions.[2] But, by the end of the 1700s, the English Courts were discouraging, in every technical way possible, objections based on the outworn rules of incompetency; and thus it came about that, while the incompetency of infamy still existed, the absolute rule was enforced that proof must be made by a copy of the record.[3] The rule thus established was usually made applicable also (except where statute had expressly intervened) for the purposes of discrediting a witness, after the statutory reforms under which infamy ceased to disqualify; though the reasons for treating with disfavor such a method of excluding a witness had little force for the mere process of discrediting him.[4]

[2] 1787, R. v. Priddle, Leach Cr. L., 3d ed., I, 382 ("being examined on the 'voir dire', he acknowledged" a conviction, and was excluded); 1791, R. v. Edwards, 4 T. R. 440 ("whether he had not stood in the pillory for perjury"; allowed, and witness rejected). There had been an earlier case to the contrary: 1699, R. v. Warden of the Fleet, 12 Mod. 337, 341.

[3] 1763, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 292 ("Note: the party who would take advantage of this exception to a witness must have a copy of the record of conviction ready to produce in Court"); 1806, R. v. Castell Careinion, 8 East 77; 1817, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in R. v. Watson 2 Stark. 116, 151 ("When a crime is imputed to a witness of which he may be convicted by due course of law, the Court know but one medium of proof, — the record of conviction"); 1852, Cresswell, J., in Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 930, 935.

[4] In some Courts, however, the distinction is made; see the cases infra in Arkansas and Tennessee.

The result is that three types of rule now obtain in the different jurisdictions:[5] (1) the requirement of a copy in all cases; (2) the allowance of an

[5] In the following list the various statutes and decisions are collected: rulings dealing with such quibbling and evasive questions as "whether he had been in jail" are included here; statutes not here quoted (though cited) are quoted ante, § 488: the statutes which allow a clerk's certificate, summarizing the record, involve the principles of §§ 1678, 2110, post, but are noted here

ENGLAND: 1851, St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, § 13 (record of conviction or acquittal is provable by the clerk's certified abstract); 1854, St. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 25 ("A witness in any cause may be questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any felony or misdemeanor, and upon being so questioned, if he either denies the fact or refuses to answer, it shall be lawful for the opposite party to prove such conviction: and a certificate containing the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction for such offence", signed by the clerk or other custodian, shall suffice, "upon proof of the identity of the person"); 1865, St. 28 Vict. c. 8, §§ 1, 6 (extended to criminal cases); 1913, Mash v. Darley, [1914] 1 K. B. 1 (bastardy: prior conviction for carnal intercourse, evidenced by a police officer who had been present at the trial).

CANADA: the following statutes are like the English St. 1854, varying only as to the kind of crime (ante, § 986) thus provable: Dom. R. S. 1096, c. 145, Evid. Act § 12 (substituting "any offence"); St. 1909, 9 Edw. VII, c. 82, § 101 (liquor license act: previous convictions provable "by the production of a certificate under the hand of the convicting justices or police magistrate or of the clerk of the peace, without proof of his signature or official character, or by other satisfactory evidence"): Alta. St. 1910, 2d sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, § 22 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 25): B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 18; N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 18, 46, § 22; Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 91, § 10; N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 45; Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 19; 1897, c. 73, § 19 (substituting "crime" for "felony or misdemeanor"); 1910, R. v Graves, 21 Ont. 329, 346 (under St. 1909, 9 Edw. VII, c. 82, § 101, held that "the oral evidence of bystanders" was not sufficient); P. E. I. St. 1889, c. 9, § 18, St. 1907, 7 Edw. VII, c. 3, § 25 (liquor offences; prior conviction provable by magistrate's certificate, "or other satisfactory evidence"); Sask. Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, § 35 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 25); 1917, R. v. Tansley, 38 D. L. R. 339, Sask. (illegal sale of liquor; prior conviction for the same offence in the same court, held sufficiently evidenced by the magistrate's minutes, verified by the clerk, without producing "either the formal conviction or a certificate of the conviction"; though the Liquor Act § 59 refers to the latter modes only); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 43 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 25, substituting "any crime").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1834, U. S. v. Woods, 4 Cr. C. C. 484, 486 (allowed on cross-examination, but not by other testimony); 1893, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Rambo, 8 C. C. A. 6, 59 Fed. 75 (proof of the oral plea of guilty by one present in court at the time, excluded); 1906, Bise v. U. S., 144 Fed. 374, C. C. A. (for disqualification of a witness, a copy of the record is necessary; here applied for Indian Territory): 1921, Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Dallavo, 6th C. C. A., 274 Fed. 258, 266 (cross-examination of the witness to his former conviction allowed, but not extrinsic testimony, except a copy of the record);
Alabama: Code 1907, § 4009 ("A witness may be examined touching his conviction for crime, and his answers may be contradicted by other evidence"); 1882, Baker v. Trotter, 73 Ala. 277, 281 (question not allowed); 1893, Thompson v. State, 100 Ala. 70, 72 (same); 1895, Murphy v. State, 108 Ala. 10, 18 So. 557 (record required);
Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1501 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 863);
Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4187 (a conviction "may be shown by the examination of a witness or record of a judgment"); 1886, Scott v. State, 49 Ark. 156, 158, 4 S. W. 750 (objection to competency; judge's report of convictions, excluded); 1893, Southern Ins. Co. v. White, 58 Ark. 277, 279, 24 S. W. 425 (objection to competency; production required); 1899, Cash v. Cash, 67 Ark. 278, 54 S. W. 744 (witness' admission on the stand, sufficient); 1902, Vance v. State, 70 Ark. 272, 68 S. W. 37 (to prove disqualification, and not merely impeachment of credit, the record-copy must be produced, the witness' admission not sufficing; the statute not applying to proof of a disqualifying crime; Riddick, J., diss.); 1906, Thrash v. State, 79 Ark. 347, 96 S. W. 360 (Vance v. State followed), 1911, Turner v. State, 100 Ark. 199, 139 S. W. 1124 (rule of Vance v. State affirmed);
California: C. C. P. 1872, § 2051 ("it may be shown by the examination of the witness, or the record of the judgment, that he had been convicted of a felony"); 1870, People v. Reinhart, 39 Cal. 449 (question not allowed); 1870, People v. McDonald, 39 Cal. 697 (same); 1874, People v. Manning, 48 Cal. 335, 338 (rule not applicable to a question about an arrest); 1886, People v. Rodrigo, 69 Cal. 606, 11 Pac. 481 (question allowed); 1895, People v. Dillwood, — Cal. —, 39 Pac. 439 (question allowed);

admission on cross-examination of the witness to be impeached, but the requirement of a copy or an abstract when proof is made by another witness,

Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 6555 (quoted ante, § 488);
Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 1067 (a conviction may be proved "either upon the cross-examination of the witness or by evidence 'aliunde'; it shall not be necessary to produce the whole record of the proceedings containing such conviction, but the certificate, under seal, of the clerk of the court wherein such proceedings were had, stating the fact of the conviction and for what cause, shall be sufficient");
Florida: 1900, Squires v. State, 42 Fla. 251, 27 So. 864 (allowed, on cross-examination); Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2706 (no conviction, except for perjury, shall disqualify; but "such conviction may be proved by questioning the proposed witness, or if he deny it, by producing a record of his conviction");
Georgia: 1873, Johnson v. State, 46 Ga. 118 (record-copy required); 1888, Doggett v. Simms, 79 Ga. 257, 4 S. E. 909 (the transcript must include the accusation or indictment); 1896, Killian v. R. Co., 97 Ga. 727, 25 S. E. 384 (record required); 1898, Huff v. State, 104 Ga. 384, 30 S. E. 868 (indictment; record required); 1921, Swain v. State, 151 Ga. 375, 107 S. E. 40 (under Civ. C. 1910, § 5748, conviction must be evidenced by the record, not by cross-examination);
Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2617 ("A witness may be questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any indictable or other offence"; the remainder substantially like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125); § 2603 (conviction or acquittal of an offence may be evidenced by a certificate of substance, made by the official custodian of the records and accompanied by evidence of identity);
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8038 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2051);
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 1 (quoted ante, § 488; applies only to civil proceedings); c. 38, § 426 (conviction of crime "may be shown" in criminal cases; no method stated); 1882, Bartholomew v. People, 104 Ill. 601, 606 (copy required in criminal cases; "at least the caption, returning of the indictment into open court by the grand jury, the indictment and arraignment", are essential; thus, a mittimus with a copy of the judgment, given to the jailer, are insufficient); 1897, Gage v. Eddy, 167 Ill. 102, 47 N. E. 200 (testimony by another witness, allowed); 1904, McKevitt v. People, 209 Ill. 180, 70 N. E. 693 (copy of record required in criminal cases); 1906, O'Donnell v. People, 224 Ill. 218, 79 N. E. 639 (Bartholomew v. People followed); 1908, Clifford v. Pioneer Fireproofing Co., 232 Ill. 150, 83 N. E. 448 (in a civil case, a copy is not required, but "unless admitted by the witness or the party", enough must be proved "to show the jurisdiction of the court and a conviction", even where a copy is used); 1921, People v. Cardinelli, 297 Ill. 116, 130 N. E. 355 (questions to witness as to plea of guilty to charge of robbery, held improper);
Indiana: 1877, Farley v. State, 57 Ind. 333 (excluded on cross-examination; yet left doubtful); 1909, Dotter v. State, 172 Ind. 357, 88 N. E. 689 ("If answered affirmatively, what good ground can there be for demanding the record?" repudiating the doubt in Farley v. State, supra);
Indian Ter. 1898, Williams v. U. S., 1 Ind. Terr. 560, 45 S. W. 116 (record required); 1904, Bise v. U. S., 5 Ind. T. 602, 82 S. W. 921 (record required, to disqualify the witness; otherwise for mere impeachment);
Iowa: Code 1897, § 4613, Comp. Code, § 7320 ("A witness may be interrogated as to his previous conviction for a felony. But no other proof is competent except the record thereof");
Kansas: 1886, State v. Pfefferle, 36 Kan. 90, 92, 12 Pac. 406 (record not necessary); 1891, State v. Probasco, 46 Kan. 310, 26 Pac. 749 (cross-examination allowed): 1921, Cole v. Drum, 109 Kan. 148, 197 Pac. 1105 (on denial of the fact of conviction upon cross-examination, proof by the copy of the record is made ordinarily later, unless the trial Court permits it during the cross-examination);
Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 597 (conviction may be shown "by the examination of a witness or record of a judgment"): 1892, Burdette v. Com., 93 Ky. 78, 18 S. W. 1011 ("previous conviction could not be more safely and satisfactorily shown by record evidence than by admission of the person himself who was convicted"); 1901, Wilson v. Com., — Ky. —, 64 S. W. 457 (allowed on cross-examination, in criminal cases); 1901, Mitchell v. Com., — Ky. —, 64 S. W. 751 (same); 1916, Blair v. Com., 171 Ky. 319, 188 S. W. 390 (former conviction not proved by a full copy of the record, excluded);
Louisiana: 1824, Castellano v. Peillon, 2 Mart. N. S. 466 (outside testimony excluded); 1900, State v. Robinson, 52 La. An. 541, 27 So. 129 (question to the witness himself, allowable); 1903, State v. McCoy, 109 La. 682, 33 So. 730 (whether he had been convicted and sent to the penitentiary, allowed);
Maine: 1904, State v. Knowles, 98 Me. 429, 57 Atl. 588 (cross-examination to conviction, allowed, as an application of common-law principles);
Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 6 (the whole record need not be produced, but only a certificate under seal); 1885, Smith v. State, 64 Md. 25 (whether he had ever been confined in jail, allowed); 1894, McLaughlin v. Mencke, 80 Md. 83, 30 Atl. 603 (question as to conviction, allowed); 1902, Gambrill v. Schooley, 95 Md. 260, 52 Atl. 500 (allowed, — this rarely by common-law decision, but widely by statute; (3) the allowance of recollection-testimony either from the witness to be impeached or from another, — this rarely, and by statute only.

on cross-examination); 1905, Deck v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 100 Md. 168, 59 Atl. 650 (what there was in the witness' record that led an officer to arrest him, not allowed on cross-examination; "the proper evidence of such convictions should have been produced"; no authority cited);

Massachusetts: 1769, Advocate-General v. Hancock, 1 Quincy 461 (record required); 1822, Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 514, 537 (see quotation supra); 1855, Com. v. Quin, 5 Gray 479 (record required); 1868, Com. v. Gorham, 99 Mass. 420, 421 (the record must include the final judgment, because the verdict may have been set aside); 1894, Com. v. Sullivan, 161 Mass. 59, 36 N. E. 583 (whether he had been in jail in Essex County; excluded); 1900, O'Brien v. Keefe, 175 Mass. 274, 56 N. E. 588 (upon a promise of late producing the record, the witness may be asked 'de bene' to identify him); 1907, Com. v. Walsh, 196 Mass. 369, 82 N. E. 19 (the common law rule of this State, not permitting the conviction to be proved orally by a witness, applies equally to a defendant testifying on cross-examination; prior practice and rulings followed); 1920, Com. v. Homer, 235 Mass. 526, 127 N. E. 517 (Com. v. Walsh followed);

Michigan: 1867, Wilbur v. Flood, 16 Mich. 44 (copy necessary for outside witness, but not for cross-examination; followed in ensuing cases); 1869, Clemens v. Conrad, 19 Mich. 170, 174 (see quotation supra); 1870, Dickinson v. Dustin, 21 Mich. 565 (here the record of an attorney's disbarment was technically defective); 1882, Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 416, 11 N. W. 221; 1886, People v. Mausaunau, 60 Mich. 15, 21, 26 N. W. 797; 1890, Helwig v. Lascowski, 82 Mich. 621, 46 N. W. 1033; Comp. L. 1915, § 15796 (justice's certificate of conviction, admissible); 1903, Pratt v. Wickham, 133 Mich. 356, 94 N. W. 1059 (allowed on cross-examination);

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8504 (quoted ante, § 488); 1888, State v. Curtis, 39 Minn. 359, 40 N. W. 263 (statute applied); 1908, State v. Gordon, 105 Minn. 217, 117 N. W. 483;

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1923, Hem. § 1583, § 1746 (cross-examination allowable; quoted ante, § 987); 1897, Jackson v. State, 75 Miss. 145, 21 So. 707 (question allowed);

Missouri: 1854, State v. Edwards, 19 Mo. 675, 676 (record required); 1878, State v. Rugan, 68 Mo. 214 (same); 1883, State v. Lewis, 80 Mo. 110, 111 (that the witness had been seen in the penitentiary as a convict, excluded); 1885, State v. Rockett, 87 Mo. 666, 669 (the record is the only evidence); 1890, State v. Brent, 100 Mo. 531, 13 S. W. 874 (excluded; on cross-examination); 1890, State v. Miller, 100 Mo. 606, 621, 13 S. W. 1051 (whether he had been in the penitentiary; record not required; preceding rulings ignored); 1893, State v. Taylor, 118 Mo. 153, 24 S. W. 449 (cross-examination allowed, "for the purpose of honestly discrediting him"); 1894, State v. Pratt, 121 Mo. 566, 26 S. W. 556 (similar); 1894, State v. Martin, 124 Mo. 514, 28 S. W. 12 (question as to number of times in jail; record not required); Rev. St. 1919, § 5439 (conviction is provable "either by the record or by his own cross-examination"; quoted ante, § 488); 1905, State v. Heusack, 189 Mo. 295, 88 S. W. 21 (statute applied); 1905, State v. Forsha, 190 Mo. 296, 88 S. W. 754 (after the witness' admission of conviction for common assault, the State was allowed to show a conviction for assault with intent to kill); 1905, State v. Spivey, 191 Mo. 87, 90 S. W. 81 (rule applied to a defendant cross-examined); 1905, State v. Woodward, 191 Mo. 617, 90 S. W. 90 (if the witness denies the conviction, the record-copy must be produced, if further proof is desired); 1920, Stack v. General Baking Co., 283 Mo. 396, 223 S. W. 89 (excluding a copy of the record, where witness admits the conviction; unsound; this is a misapplication of the principle of § 2591, post);

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10668 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2051); § 11603 (conviction may be proved by the record "or by his examination as such witness"); § 11120 (liquor offences; former conviction within the State provable by "the journal entry of judgment, or the docket or judgment-roll, or other proper court record"); 1895, State v. Black, 15 Mont. 143, 38 Pac. 674 (undecided); 1920, State v. Smith, 57 Mont. 563, 190 Pac. 36 (sedition; cross-examination of witness to prior conviction for sedition, allowed);

Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8848 (like Ia. Code § 7320); 1902, Leo v. State, 63 Nebr. 723, 89 N. W. 303 (questions held improper on the facts, because of abuse of the rule); 1910, Johns v. State, 88 Nebr. 145, 129 N. W. 992 (accused taking the stand may be questioned); 1921, Denker v. State, 106 Nebr. 779, 184 N. W. 945 (similar);

New Hampshire: 1862, Smith v. Smith, 43 N. H. 536, 538 (whether a witness had been bound over to appear on a charge of perjury; not allowed);

New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evid. § 7 (conviction may be proved by "examination of such witness or otherwise", and he may be contradicted); 1899, Brown v. State, 62 N. J. L. 666, 42 Atl. 811 (statute applied); 1904, State v. Fox, 70 N. J. L. 353, 57 Atl. 270 (the witness may be asked as to conviction of any other crime "without specifying time or place"); 1905, State v. Mont, 62 N. J. L. 365, 65 Atl. 259 (statute applied); 1909, Hill v. Maxwell, 77 N. J. L. 766, 73 Atl. 501 (statute applied to allow the question to the witness himself); 1916, State v. Rombolo, 89 N. J. L. 565, 99 Atl. 434 (copy of entire record is admissible, subject to instructions);

The second form is the only proper one, and now obtains in the majority of jurisdictions.

New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2179 (substantially like Eng. St. 1854);
New York: 1816, People v. Herrick, 13 John. 82, 84 (question not allowed, but chiefly on account of the privilege against self-disgrace); 1817, Hilts v. Colvin, 14 John. 182, 184 (even where the record has been burnt, oral evidence is inadmissible where a certificate of its tenor was required by law to be filed in the court of Exchequer); 1862, Newcomb v. Griswold, 24 N. Y. 299 (record necessary); 1870, Real v. People, 42 N. Y. 273, 281 (whether he has been "in jail, the penitentiary, or the State prison", admissible; as to having been convicted, "a different rule may perhaps apply"); St. 1877, C. P. A. 1920, § 350 (in civil or criminal cases, the conviction may be proved "either by the record or by his cross-examination"); 1881, Perry v. People, 86 N. Y. 353, 358 (oral question as to conviction improper; but if not objected to because the record should be produced the answer is receivable); P. C. 1881, Cons. L. 1909, Penal, § 2444 ("[The conviction may be proved] either by the record, or his cross-examination"); 1883, People v. Noelke, 94 N. Y. 137, 144 (question on cross-examination allowed); 1889, Spiegel v. Hayes, 118 N. Y. 660, 22 N. E. 1105 (same); 1912, People v. Cardillo, 207 N. Y. 70, 100 N. E. 715 (the accused's confessions out of court are not admissible to show prior convictions of crime: the Code prescribing the only permissible modes);
Ohio: 1870, Wroe v. State, 20 Oh. St. 471 (left undecided);
Oklahoma: 1898, Asher v. Terr., 7 Okl. 188, 54 Pac. 445 (whether the witness had been in jail, allowed); 1899, Hyde v. Terr., 8 Okl. 69, 56 Pac. 851 (allowed on cross-examination);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 863 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2051);
Pennsylvania: 1909, Com. v. Racco, 225 Pa. 113, 73 Atl. 1067 (defendant allowed to be questioned as to former convictions; and a police officer allowed to testify to the defendant's admission thereof, to impeach his denial);
Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 342 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2051);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 1526, 6276 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2051);
Rhode Island: 1892, State v. Ellwood, 17 R. I. 763, 768, 24 Atl. 782 (allowable on cross-examination);
South Carolina: 1903, State v. Williamson, 65 S. C. 242, 43 S. E. 671 (Clemens v. Conrad, Mich., followed; here applied to a question about an indictment);
Tennessee: 1895, Boyd v. State, 94 Tenn. 505, 29 S. W. 901 (record required, where the witness is to be excluded, not merely discredited); 1896, Moore v. State, 96 Tenn. 209, 33 S. W. 1046 (record required);
Texas: 1904, Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnson, 98 Tex. 76, 81 S. W. 4 (record required: and this must include the sentence, not merely the judgment on the verdict); 1906, Grabill v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 97 S. W. 1046 (for disqualifying a witness, a copy of the record is required; but for impeachment, his answer on cross-examination suffices); 1907, Fannin v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 41, 100 S. W. 916 (defendant's oral extra-judicial admission of conviction, excluded); 1918, Marshall v. State, 82 Tex. Cr. 623, 200 S. W. 836 (a questioning of accused as to prior conviction to disqualify, held on the facts to waive the necessity for producing written evidence of the pardon to restore competency);
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7141 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2065);
Vermont: 1897, State v. Slack, 69 Vt. 486, 38 Atl. 311, semble (record required); 1902, McGovern v. Hayes & Smith, 75 Vt. 104, 53 Atl. 326 (allowable on cross-examination);
Washington: 1893, State v. Payne, 6 Wash. 563, 568 (record required); R. & B. Code 1909, § 2290 (may be shown "either by the record thereof, or a copy of such record duly authenticated by the legal custodian thereof, or by other competent evidence, or by his cross-examination"); 1912, State v. Stone, 66 Wash. 625, 120 Pac. 76 (under Crim. Code 1909, § 37, Rem. & Ball. Code, § 2290, the witness may be cross-examined without producing the record-copy; "the rule stated in State v. Payne is no longer applicable"); 1912, State v. Overland, 68 Wash. 566, 123 Pac. 1011 (same);
West Virginia: 1902, State v. Hill, 52 W. Va. 296, 43 S. E. 160 (conviction may be proved by the witness' answer; in any case, the fact of having been in the penitentiary may be proved without the record-copy);
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4073 (quoted ante, § 488); 1859, Kirschner v. State, 9 Wis. 140, 144 (record required); 1879, Ingalls v. State, 48 Wis. 647, 654, 4 N. W. 785 (same); 1881, McKesson v. Sherman, 51 Wis. 303, 311, 8 N. W. 200, semble (same); 1900, Shafer v. Eau Claire, 105 Wis. 239, 81 N. W. 409 (allowed on cross-examination, but the time and place must be specified; this is merely a perversion of the rule of § 1025, ante); 1902, Cullen v. Hanisch, 114 Wis. 24, 89 N. W. 900 (question as to the mere fact of being in jail,

Where, for the purpose of discrediting, a judgment in a civil suit could be proved, it would seem that a similar rule should by analogy apply.[6]

§ 1271. Same: (c) Copy of Foreign Statutory Law, as preferred to Recollection-Testimony. The process of proving a foreign law raises a number of interesting questions of principle, not always sufficiently discriminated. Some of these have already been noticed, — the experiential qualifications necessary for a witness (ante, § 564), the necessity of personal knowledge by the witness (ante, §§ 668, 690), and the exemption from the rule requiring production of the original (ante, §§ 1213, 1218). Others involve subsequent principles, — the admissibility, under exceptions to the Hearsay rule, of certified copies (post, § 1680), of official printed volumes (post, § 1684), of private reports of cases (post, § 1703), and of legal treatises (post, § 1697), the effect of the Opinion rule (post, § 1953), the presumption as to the nature of an unproved foreign law (post, § 2536), and the part of the tribunal — judge or jury — to whom evidence is to be offered (post, § 2558).

The particular question here is whether the evidence of a foreign "written law" should be presented in the shape of a copy or merely by recollection-testimony of one qualified to know it.

That the "unwritten law", i.e. a customary law or a judicial decision, may be proved by the later mode has never been questioned. But on the principle already noted (ante, § 1269), when the law to be proved is a statute, the preferred mode of proof would be a copy of the literal terms of the official record. Is there any reason why the principle should suffer any modification in the present class of cases?

The argument in the negative is presented in the following passage:

1844, PATTESON, J., in Baron de Bode's Case, infra: "I quite agree that a witness conversant with the law of a foreign country may be asked what in his opinion the law of that country is. But I cannot help thinking that, as soon as it appears that he is going to speak of a written law, his mouth is closed. . . . The general rule is not denied, that when the contents of a written instrument are to be proved, the instrument itself should be produced, or, when the instrument from its nature is provable by an examined copy, then such examined copy. I cannot see why the rule should not be the same in the case of a foreign written law. . . . I think the rule would be just the same if the question related to the French code as existing at this moment. If a witness were asked what the law now is with respect to a bill of exchange in France, and were immediately cross-examined as to whether that law was not in writing, and answered that it was, I think a copy of the law must be produced."

excluded); 1903, Paulson v. State, 118 Wis. 89, 94 N. W. 771 (oral testimony to conviction is under the statute allowed only on cross-examination).

Wyoming: 1921, Anderson v. State, 27 Wyo. 345, 196 Pac. 1047 ("oral testimony, except on admission by the witness on cross-examination, is not admissible");

For the question whether identity of name suffices, without other evidence of identity of persons, see post, § 2529.

[6] 1862, Henman v. Lester, 12 C. B. N. S. 776 (question to party to discredit him as to losing a former civil suit; Byles, J., was for exclusion, because the record should be produced, the statute not affecting this sort of case; Willes & Keating, JJ., were for admission both in this case and that of a prior conviction, because either the person admits the judgment, which should suffice, or he denies it, when, apart from statute, he cannot be contradicted upon a collateral matter).

Compare the rules ante, §§ 1244 and 1256.

But the answer to this is clear. It may be conceded that, if the question were purely and simply directed to the contents of a specific statute, the proof should be by copy of its terms. But in the usual case this is not the question; the inquiry is as to the state of the law at the present time or at a given time past. This inquiry can be answered only by taking into consideration the appropriate statute, if any, the pre-existing rule of custom or judicial precedent as affected by the statute, the validity of the statute under some possible constitution, and the actual effect of the statute as determined by prior and subsequent judicial application of the constitution and by judicial construction of the statutory words. In short, an answer as to the state of the law at a given moment can never be a mere reproduction, offered in place of a copy, of statutory words; it is a statement (ante, § 1242) of a net fact separate from the words of a statute, and involving many considerations in which the words of a statute are but a single element. The acceptance of a mere copy of the statute, far from securing greater accuracy, would on the contrary tend rather to mislead, by ignoring these other material elements. This view of the question was expounded in masterly opinions in Baron de Bode's Case:

1844, Baron de Bode's Case, 8 Q. B. 250. DENMAN, L. C. J.: "The form of the question [as to the state of the law in France in 1789] is immaterial; in effect the witness is asked to speak to the decree. It is objected that this is a violation of the general principle that the contents of a written instrument can be shown only by producing the instrument or accounting for the non-production. But there is another general rule, that the opinions of persons of science must be received as to the facts of their science. That rule applies to the evidence of legal men; and I think it is not confined to unwritten law, but extends also to the written laws which such men are bound to know. Properly speaking, the nature of such evidence is not to set forth the contents of the written law, but its effect and the state of law resulting from it. The mere contents, indeed, might often mislead persons not familiar with the particular system of law. . . . When Pothier states the law of France as rising out of an ordonnance made in a particular year, can we exclude that as being merely his account of the contents of a written instrument? I cannot conceive that in any civilized country a statement from Blackstone's Commentaries would be rejected, which set forth what the law was, when altered, and up to what time continued. Such a statement would not relate merely to the contents of the statute referred to, but to the state of the law before or after its passing." COLERIDGE, J.: "What, then, do we mean by a knowledge of the law? That question seems to me to go to the foundation of the whole matter; and it must be determined, with reference to the particular question before us, by a little subdivision. We must first inquire as to the sources of our knowledge, and, secondly, as to the time over which we are to range for our knowledge. Now, with regard to the sources of the knowledge, we are to find it partly in the actual documents, the writings first existing as laws, . . . [and where these are wanting,] from text-books, reported decisions, records, and local customs prevailing in particular districts. . . . Then, next, as to the time over which our knowledge is to range. When we talk of a man having a knowledge of the law, do we mean a knowledge of the law only as it exists in the courts of justice at the present day, or do we mean that knowledge of the law and the changes it has undergone which he has acquired in the course of study that gives him the character of a scientific witness? I apprehend we clearly mean the latter. . . . The question for us is, not what the language of the written law is, but what the law is altogether, as shown by exposition, interpretation, and adjudication. How many errors might result if a foreign Court attempted to collect the law from the language of some of our statutes which declare instruments in certain cases to be 'null and void to all intents and purposes', while an English lawyer would state that they were good against the grantor and that the Courts have so expounded the statutes!"

1844, Lord BROUGHAM, in Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 85, 115: "It is perfectly clear that the proper mode of proving a foreign law is not by showing to the House the book of the law; for the House has not organs to know and to deal with the text of that law, and therefore requires the assistance of a lawyer who knows how to interpret it."

1846, ERLE, J., in Cocks v. Purday, 2 C. & K. 270: "The proper course, to ascertain the law of a foreign country, is to call a witness expert in it, and ask him on his responsibility what that law is, and not to read any fragments of a code, which would only mislead."

This solution is so plain that it is singular that judicial opinion waited so long to expound it. The opposite solution had been sanctioned by English common-law Courts on a few occasions before and after the year 1800;[1] but, in spite of these rulings, the overwhelming weight of English authority of that period, representing the original tradition, did not require proof by copy.[2] About the year 1845, the decisions quoted above removed for England the previous uncertainty of precedent.[3]

§ 1271. [1] In the following cases a copy was required: 1776, Sir G. Hay, in Harford v. Morris, 2 Hagg. Cons. 430 ("not by the opinions of lawyers, which is the most uncertain way in the world, but by certificates"); 1800, Boehtlinck v. Schneider, 3 Esp. 58 (on argument that the unwritten law, though not the written, could be proved orally, Kenyon, L. C. J., still insisted, for proof of the Russian law about stoppage 'in transitu', upon "an authenticated document of the laws"; and the K. B. concurred); 1812, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Clegg v. Levy, 3 Camp. 166 (but here the witness was probably incompetent); 1815, Gibbs, C. J., in Millar v. Heinrick, 4 Camp. 155 (Russian admiralty regulations). In the following cases the ruling is obscure: 1797, Alves v. Hodgson, 7 T. R. 241, Kenyon, L. C. J.; 1800, Male v. Roberts, 3 Esp. 164, Eldon, L. C. J.; 1801, Inglis v. Usherwood, 1 East 520, K. B.

[2] The following cases are to that effect, though some of them do not expressly apply the doctrine to a statute: 1744, Hardwicke, L. C., in Gage v. Bulkeley, Ridgw. cas. temp. Hardw. 276; 1774, Mostyn v. Fabrigas, Cowp. 161, 174 (Mansfield, L. C. J.: "The way of knowing foreign laws is by admitting them to be proved as facts, and the Court must assist the jury in ascertaining what the law is. For instance, if there is a French settlement, the construction of which depends upon the custom of Paris, witnesses must be received to explain what the custom is; as evidence is received of customs in respect to trade"; no discrimination made on the present point); 1789, Kenyon, L. C. J., in Walpole v. Ewer, Ridgw. 276, note, semble; 1791, Kenyon, L. C. J., in Ganer v. Lady Lanesborough, Peake 18 (the fact of a Jewish divorce, according to custom in Leghorn, proved orally); 1791, Kenyon, L. C. J., in Chauraud v. Angerstein, Peake 44; 1802, Sir W. Wynne, in Middleton v. Janverin, 2 Hagg. Cons. 443 (written and unwritten laws); 1806, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Picton's Trial, 30 How. St. Tr. 509 (written laws); 1807, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Richardson v. Anderson, 1 Camp. 66, semble; 1807, Buchanan v. Rucker, 1 Camp. 63 (mode of service of process in Tobago; the written law not required); 1812, Abbott, C. J., in Lacon v. Higgins, 3 Stark. 178, Dowl. & R. N. P. 44 (where also a text was offered); 1828, Trotter v. Trotter, 4 Bligh N. S. 504, House of Lords; 1834, Trimby v. Vignier, 4 Moore & S. 703 (by consent; Tindal, C. J., and Ct. of C. P.); 1834, Alivon v. Furnival, 1 C. M. & R. 291, Parke, B., and the Ct. of Exch.

[3] ENGLAND: 1844, Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 85, 114 (expert allowed to state the law of marriage in Rome, and to refresh his memory by looking at law-books at the same time); 1844, Baron de Bode's Case, 8 Q. B. 208, 246 (expert opinion as to the law of inheritance at a particular time in Alsace, that feudal law had been there ended by a decree of the French Assembly of Aug. 4, 1789, allowed without producing a copy of the decree; Patteson, J., diss.); 1845, Nelson v. Bridport, 8 Beav. 527, 539 (expert opinion of Sicilian law "upon several points", admitted); 1846, Cocks v. Purday, 2 C. & K. 269 (whether a parol transfer sufficed in Bohemian law, allowed); 1852, R. v. Newman, 3 C. & K. 252, 262, Lord Campbell, C. J. (proof of foreign Court's jurisdiction made by parol); 1863, Di Sora v. Phillipps, 10 H. L. C. 624, 633 (expert opinion as to legal effect of marriage contract in Italian law, admitted without requiring copies); CANADA: Man. Rev. St.

But in the meantime, in the United States, the just proportion of the minority of the English rulings not being perceived, some of them served to establish the erroneous view in a few early rulings in our Courts. Thus, unfortunately, in a majority of our jurisdictions the erroneous doctrine came to prevail (though later legislation has in some jurisdictions corrected it) that, wherever a statute was in any way involved, a copy of the statute was the preferred evidence required.[4] 1913, c. 65, § 32 (for the purpose of ascertaining foreign law judicially noticed, the judge may require "evidence upon oath", "oral or written, or by certificate or otherwise, as may seem proper"); 1917, Ex parte Thomas, 38 D. L. R. 716 N. B. (extradition; proof of Massachusetts law of larceny held sufficiently made by exemplified copy of the statute without calling an expert witness); N. Sc. Merritt v. Copper Crown Co., 36 N. Sc. 383, 393 (West Virginia statute proved by an admission); Ont. 1850, Short v. Kingsmill, 7 U. C. Q. B. 354; 1852, Arnold v. Higgins, 11 id. 446.

For the British statutes providing for the use of a judicial certificate of the law as obtaining in a foreign country or in some other part of the British Dominions, see post, § 1674.

[4] The cases on both sides, with the statutes, are as follows: UNITED STATES: Federal: 1804, Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cr. 238, semble (statute not provable orally); 1810, Livingston v. Ins. Co., 6 Cr. 274, 280 (foreign trade regulations not shown to be in writing, provable by parol); 1807, Robinson v. Clifford, 2 Wash. C. C. 1 (statute not provable orally); 1808, Seton v. Ins. Co., 2 Wash. C. C. 175 (same); 1808, Jaffray v. Dennis, 2 Wash. C. C. 253 (same); 1816, Consequa v. Willings, 1 Pet. C. C. 229 (same); 1843, Wilcocks v. Phillips' Ex'rs, 1 Wall. Jr. 49, 53 (same; though here the difficulty of getting a copy of a law of China was allowed to exempt from the rule); 1852, Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 426, semble (general rule as above); 1882, Pierce v. Insdeth, 106 U. S. 551, 1 Sup. 418, semble (same); 1901, Herbst v. Asiatic Prince, 47 C. C. A. 328, 108 Fed. 289 (law of Brazil, as to delivery of goods under the customs law, proved by a lawyer's testimony); 1902, Mexican N. R. Co. v. Slater, 53 C. C. A. 239, 115 Fed. 593, 606 (expert testimony "as to the proper construction of a statute of a foreign country and written in a foreign tongue", the terms of the statute having been proved by copy, held admissible); 1903, Badische A. & S. F. v. Klipstein, 125 Fed. 543 (testimony of German lawyers, that certain records of incorporation in Baden, proved by copy, were legally sufficient to incorporate, admitted);
Alabama: 1840, Innerarity v. Mims, 1 Ala. 666 (oral evidence of statute inadmissible);
Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1734 (like Del. Rev. St. § 4222);
Arkansas: 1850, Barkman v. Hopkins, 11 Ark. 168, semble (oral evidence of statute admissible); 1856, McNeil v. Arnold, 17 Ala. 154, 164 (oral testimony to registry-statutes, excluded); 1878, Bowles v. Eddy, 33 Ala. 645, 649 (same; usury statutes); 1884, Blackwell v. Glass, 43 Ala. 209, 211 (oral testimony to usage as to sufficiency of return, admitted);
California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1902 ("The oral testimony of witnesses skilled therein is admissible as evidence of the unwritten law of a sister State or foreign country"; this by implication preserves the erroneous rule);
Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 4222 ("The existence and the tenor or effect of all foreign laws may be proved as facts by parole evidence; but if it shall appear that the law in question is contained in a written statute or code, the Court may, in its discretion, reject any evidence of such law that is not accompanied by a copy thereof");
Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2717 (like Del. Rev. St. § 4222);
Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2716 (unwritten or common law of U. S. or a State or Territory "may be proved as facts by parol evidence");
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7946 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1902);
Illinois: 1858, Merritt v. Merritt, 20 Ill. 65, 80 (oral testimony to unwritten law, admissible); 1858, Hoes v. Van Alstyne, 20 Ill. 201 (specific statute not provable orally); 1868, Merritt v. Merritt, 45 Ill. 80, semble (same); 1873, McDeed v. McDeed, 67 Ill. 545, 548 (common-law provable orally); 1874, Milwaukee & S. P. R. Co. v. Smith, 74 Ill. 197, 199 (same);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 500 (like Del. Rev. St. 1915, § 4222, for "the laws of any foreign country"); 1840, Comparet v. Jernegan, 5 Blackf. 376 (oral evidence of statute, inadmissible); 1854, Heberd v. Myers, 5 Ind. 94 (like next case); 1860, Line v. Mack, 14 Ind. 330 (statute of domestic State, oral testimony excluded, but for foreign States, the Court has a discretion);
Iowa: Code 1897, § 4652, Comp. Code § 7359 ("unwritten or common law" provable by parol evidence); 1855, Lattourett v. Cook, 1 Ia. 1, 8 (deposition to statute excluded); 1859, Greasons v. Davis, 9 id. 223 (oral evidence of common law, admissible); 1874, Crafts v. Clark, 38 Ia. 241 (same); 1885, State v. Cross, 68 Ia. 180, 195, 26 N. W. 62 (statute as to notaries; expert testimony excluded);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7271 (like Okl. C. S.

The provision, in most of the reforming statutes, that the Court may in its discretion require that testimony from an expert be accompanied by a copy § 636); 1882, Brenner v. Luth, 28 Kan. 588 (oral evidence of the law, admitted; its nature does not appear); 1915, Spaeth v. Kouns, 95 Kan. 320, 148 Pac. 651 (abstract of title to Missouri land; Missouri lawyer and abstracter admitted to testify to merchantable and vested title);

Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 1640 (the unwritten law of another of U. S. is provable by "parol evidence of persons learned in the law"); § 1641 (substantially like Del. Rev. St. § 4222); 1831, Talbot v. Peoples, 6 J. J. M. 200 (statute as to legal rate of interest; oral evidence excluded); 1847, Tyler v. Trabue, 8 B. Monr. 306 (whether a note was negotiable; depositions allowed);
Louisiana: 1843, Rosine v. Bonnabel, 5 Rob. 163, 166 (foreign law in general; provable orally); 1847, Isabella v. Pecot, 2 La. An. 387, 391 (statute not provable orally); 1915, Walsh v. Walsh, 137 La. 157, 68 So. 392 (Irish law as to married women's capacity; Irish lawyers' testimony received, there being no evidence of a statute on the subject; of course);
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 130 (parol evidence of foreign law which "appears to be existing in a written statute or code", may be rejected unless accompanied by copy); 1838, Owen v. Boyle, 15 Me. 149, semble (statute not provable orally);
Maryland: 1857, Wilson v. Carson, 10 Md. 75, semble (U. S. State statute provable orally); 1867, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Glenn, 28 Md. 123 (U. S. State statute; not provable orally); 3869, Zimmerman v. Helser, 32 Md. 278 (same; both erroneously go upon Gardner v. Lewis, 7 Gill 394);
Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 71 ("The unwritten or common law of any other of the United States or of the territories thereof may be proved as facts by parol evidence"); § 72 ("The existence, tenor, and effect of all foreign laws shall be proved as facts by parol evidence; but if it appears", etc. as in Delaware); 1811, Legg v. Legg, 8 Mass. 99, semble (foreign law not provable orally); 1817, Frith v. Sprague, 14 Mass. 455, semble (contra); 1825, Raynham v. Canton, 3 Pick. 293, 296 (statute provable orally; "to require [an exemplification, etc.] would put the citizens to an unnecessary burden and expense"; but statute-book preferred to oral testimony); 1829, Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. 112, 130 ("if written, it must be proved by documentary evidence"); 1868, Kline v. Baker, 99 Mass. 254, semble (expert may testify to statute); Bowditch v. Soltyk, 99 Mass. 138, semble (same);
Michigan: 1858, People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349, 360 (foreign statute not provable orally); 1863, Kermott v. Ayer, 11 Mich. 184 (statute not provable orally; that the law is statutory, not assumed, at least where the consequence would be the reversal of a judgment otherwise good); 1880, Kopke v. People, 43 Mich. 43, 4 N. W. 551, semble (statute not provable orally);
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8417 (unwritten or common law of any State of the U. S., provable "as facts by parol evidence"); § 8413 (like Del. Rev. St. § 4222);
Mississippi: 1852, Stewart v. Swanzy, 23 Miss. 502 (statute not provable orally);
Missouri: 1857, Charlotte v. Chouteau, 25 Mo. 465, 473 (statute not provable orally);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10552 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1902);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8903 ("the unwritten or common law" is provable by parol evidence); § 8927 (same); 1907, Cook v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 78 Nebr. 64, 110 N. W. 718 (witness to contents of statutes of Idaho, no copy being offered, excluded);
New Hampshire: 1851, Watson v. Walker, 23 N. H. 471, 496 (oral testimony excluded for written law, semble, even where it does not appear whether the law was written); 1854, Emery v. Berry, 23 N. H. 473, 485 (of a foreign State, only by an exemplified copy under the seal of State or by a sworn copy; of a domestic State, also by official printed copy; but not orally); 1868, Hall v. Costello, 48 N. H. 176, 179 (expert testimony to British enlistment statute, admitted);
New York: 1806, Kenny v. Clarkson, 1 Johns. 394 (statute not provable orally); 1829, Chanoine v. Fowler, 3 Wend. 177 (same); 1830, Hill v. Packard, 5 Johns. 375, 384, semble (same); 1831, Lincoln v. Battelle, 6 id. 475, 482 (same); 1840, Re Roberts' Will, 8 Paige Ch. 448, semble (same); 1880, Hynes v. McDermott, 82 N. Y. 52 (same);
North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 1749 (the unwritten or common law may be proved "as a fact by oral evidence");
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7910 (like Okl. Comp. St. § 636); 1912, Paterson's Estate, 22 N. D. 480, 134 N. W. 751 semble (an over-technical decision);
Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11499 (unwritten law is provable as facts by parol evidence);
Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 636 ("The unwritten or common law of any other State, Territory, or foreign government, may be proved as facts by parol evidence");
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 749 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1902);
Pennsylvania: 1826, Dougherty v. Swett, 15 S. & R. 87 (statute not provable orally; but law will not be assumed to be statutory); 1840, Phillips v. Gregg, 10 Watts 161, 169 (the difficulty of obtaining information as to the Spanish or other laws in the early Louisiana of the statute in question, is a wise one. — It may be noted, finally, that, on the one hand, oral testimony merely to the words of a statute and to nothing more has never been claimed to be proper; [5] while, on the other hand, expert testimony to the technical construction of the words or phrases of a statute whose terms are otherwise properly proved is on all hands considered to be receivable.[6]

§ 1272. Preferences as between Recollection-Witnesses. Where no preference for a copy applies, and recollection-testimony is allowable, no further rule of preference can properly be laid down as between different kinds of recollection-witnesses, — for example, a rule preferring the writer of a lost document to a witness who had read it.[1] territory was regarded as sufficient to admit parol evidence);

Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 302 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1902);
Rhode Island: 1870, Barrows v. Downs, 9 R. I. 446 (statute provable orally; following the arguments of Baron de Bode's Case and Sussex Peerage Case);
South Carolina: C. C. P. 1922, § 707 (printed copies of foreign written law receivable; unwritten or common law "may be proved as facts by parol evidence"); 1907, Free v. Southern R. Co., 78 S. C. 57, 58 S. E. 952 (whether a North Carolina statute can be evidenced by a North Carolina Supreme Court decision; not decided);
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2718 (like Okl. Comp. St. § 636);
Texas: 1847, Bryant v. Kelton, 1 Tex. 436, semble (statute not provable orally); 1854, Martin v. Payne, 11 Tex. 292, 295 (oral testimony as to rate of interest, excluded);
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7085 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1902, adding "Territory");
Vermont: 1803, Woodbridge v. Austin, 2 Tyl. 364, 366 ("if a written law, it must be produced"); 1827, Danforth v. State, 1 Vt. 259, 260, 266 (testimony that a deposition-caption was according to the statute of Massachusetts, received); 1855, Smith v. Potter, 27 id. 304, 307, 309 (statute not provable orally); 1870, State v. Horn, 43 Vt. 20 (bigamy; proof of authority of a Pennsylvania justice to perform a marriage, required to be proved "by production of the statute"); 1914, Frederick v. Morse, 88 Vt. 126, 92 Atl. 16 (crim. con.; similar);
West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 13, § 4 (in noticing the law, "statutory or other", of the U. S. or any other State or country, the judge "may consult any printed book purporting to contain, state, or explain the same, and consider any testimony, information, or argument that is offered on the subject");
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, §§ 4138, 4139 (the common law of the U. S., a State or Territory is provable by parol; remainder substantially like Del. Rev. St. § 4222);
Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 5810 (like Ok. Gen. C. § 11499).

[5] This seems to have been assumed without decision.

[6] 1857, Bremer v. Freeman, 10 Moore P. C. 362; 1902, Mexican N. R. Co. v. Slater, C. C. A., supra; 1857, Walker v. Forbes, 31 Ala. 10; 1837, Dyer v. Smith, 12 Conn. 384, 390; 1898, Canale v. People, 177 Ill. 219, 52 N. E. 310.

Compare the opinion rule (post, § 1953).

§ 1272. [1] Eng.: 1816, Liebman v. Pooley, 1 Stark. 167 (writer of original not preferred to another who had seen it, in giving parol evidence of contents); U. S. Ill. 1869, Huls v. Kimball, 52 Ill. 390, 395 (maker of mortgage not preferred to mortgagee); Ia. 1906, Colton's Estate, 129 Ia. 542, 105 N. W. 1008 (see the citation ante, § 1244, n. 4); La. 1816, Las Caygas v. Larionda, 4 Mart. La. 283, 287 (official certificate of a notary's office and signature, not preferred to ordinary witness); 1843, Rosine v. Bonnabel, 5 Rob. La. 163, 166 (same); Tex. 1883, Johnson v. Skipworth, 59 Tex. 473, 475 (last custodian of a lost record, not preferred to other witnesses); Vt. 1896, Brown v. Stanton, 69 Vt. 53, 37 Atl. 280 (the town clerk is not the exclusive witness of the contents of the town records; any one who has examined them may testify to the absence of a certain record); Wis. 1905, State v. Rosenthal, 123 Wis. 442, 102 N. W. 49 (clerk of court is not a preferred witness to a search of records).

Contra: 1895, Hines v. Johnston, 95 Ga. 629, 23 S. E. 470 (deed-register's clerk is alone competent to prove existence and contents of his records, though any person may prove absence of a conveyance in record; a distinction indefensible); 1843, Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 1 Gill Md. 127, 141 (the addressee of a letter, held a preferred witness to its contents); 1903, Sykes v. Beck, 12 N. D. 242, 96 N. W. 844 (cited ante, § 1244, note 4); 1903, Fisher v. Betts, 12 N. D. 197, 96 N. W. 132 (similar).

Compare also the cases cited post, § 1278.

§ 1273. Preference as between Different Kinds of Written Copies; Certified and Sworn Copies. Every copy (except the sort mentioned post, § 1280, par. (2)), is in strictness an "examined" copy, in the sense that the original and the copy have been examined or compared together by the witness, either in his own act of transcription or by taking some one else's transcription and comparing it with the original (ante, § 1265). But the term "examined copy" has by tradition come to be associated with a copy made by a private person not the official custodian of the document. Thus the terms "examined" or "sworn" are used for copies sworn to upon the stand as correct, in distinction from "certified" or "attested" or "office" copies, i.e. copies made in the public office by the official custodian, where the document is an official one. This distinction, however, had its origin and maintains its importance in a very different field of the law, namely, the Hearsay rule; for, under the exception for Official Statements (post, § 1677) the question arises how far such official (or "certified", "attested", "office") copies are receivable; and whenever their admission, under that exception, is not justifiable, the copy must be verified by a witness on the stand, i.e. must be a "sworn" or "examined" copy. Thus, under that exception to the Hearsay rule, but there only, the distinction between certified and sworn or examined copies is a solid one.

It is because of this distinction, created and maintained under another principle of the law of Evidence, that there has been a tendency to recognize some distinction, for the present principle also, between the two kinds of copies, and to require a certified in preference to a sworn copy, in proving the contents of official documents.

Such a distinction has no support, either in orthodox tradition or in reasons of policy. So far as the traditional practice is concerned, the sworn copy was in England for a long time almost the exclusive mode of proving official documents other than judicial records, because the Hearsay exception allowing the use of certified copies was there recognized (until statutory changes occurred) to only a limited extent (post, § 1177). In the United States, however, owing to the broader scope given to this common-law exception, and owing to its liberal expansion by statute at an early date, the certified copy came into more general, if not almost exclusive use; so that the youngest generation of practitioners in many jurisdictions seldom use or even see a sworn copy of an official record. Add to this that the statutes enlarging the exception to the Hearsay rule and making all kinds of official documents in almost all jurisdictions provable by certified copy have sometimes been misapprehended by the Courts, e.g. a provision intended merely to enable such a copy to be used where it could not be used before has sometimes been ignorantly treated as though nothing not specified in the statute could be used as a copy, and thus a statute provided an exclusive mode (ante, § 1186, post, § 1676). In [illegible] ways as these the notion has been strengthened in a few jurisdictions that a certified copy should be preferred to a sworn copy.

That this notion is wholly unfounded, the following passages indicate:

Ante, 1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 15: "Objection. But if exemplifications under the Broad Seal are the highest evidence that the nature of the thing is capable of, then why are any proofs admitted but them? . . . Answer. [The rule does not mean] that nothing under the highest assurance possible should have been given in evidence to prove any matter in question. To strain the rule to that height would be to create an endless charge and perplexity, for there are almost infinite degrees of probability, one under the other; . . . a contract attested by two witnesses gains more credit than a contract attested by one, and therefore by the same argument one witness would be no good proof of a contract; and all these are plainly as good reasonings as to say that the sworn copy of a record ought not to be admitted because a copy under the Broad Seal is a stronger evidence."

1885, PETERS, C. J., in State v. Lynde, 77 Me. 561, 562, 1 Atl. 687: "Examined copies are in England resorted to as the most usual mode of proving records. The mode . . . seems to have prevailed in many of the States, including Pennsylvania and New York. It was at an early date adopted in some of the Federal Courts. It is not an unknown mode of proof in New England. . . . Why not admissible? The evidence is as satisfactory certainly as a certified copy. In the latter case we depend upon the honor and integrity of an official, and in the former upon the oath of a competent witness. In either case, an error or fraud is easily detectible. Probably the reason why such a mode of proof had not been much known, if known at all, in our practice, is that it is cheaper and easier to produce [certified] copies; and if a witness comes instead, it is more satisfactory to have [as here] the officer who controls the records bring them into court."

The precedents fall under the following heads:

(1) There is properly no preference for a certified or office copy over a sworn or examined copy;[1] though a few Courts have recognized such a preference in some instances.[2]

§ 1273. [1] New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 28 (record or document recorded or deposited "in any public office in this province" may be proved by an examined copy); UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1876, Blackman v. Dowling, 57 Ala. 78, 80 (statutory certified copy not preferred to examined copy); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 18 (records, etc., provable by certified copy, "may be proved by copies examined and sworn to by credible witnesses"); 1887, Union R. & T. Co. v. Shacklet, 119 Ill. 232, 240, 10 N. E. 896 (foreign administrator's appointment; certified copy not preferred to examined copy); Indiana: 1837, Harris v. Doe, 4 Blackf. 369, 370 (certified copy of land-petition not preferred to sworn copy, on the facts); 1842, Rawley v. Doe, 6 Ind. 142, 145 (similar); 1881, Hall v. Bishop, 78 Ind. 370, 371 (tax list; certified copy not preferred); Kansas: 1906, State v. Nugent, 74 Kan. 371, 86 Pac. 476 (Federal revenue records, an examined copy admitted, the officer having refused to certify a copy); State v. Schaeffer, 74 Kan. 390, 86 Pac. 477 (similar; general rule as to preference not decided); Kentucky: 1820, Bowman v. Bartlett, 4 A. K. Marsh. 80, an examined copy of probate of a will, not preferred); Maine: 1885, State v. Lynde, 77 Me. 561, 1 Atl. 687 (see quotation supra); New Hampshire: 1895, State v. Collins, 68 N. H. 299, 44 Atl. 495 (internal revenue record; certified copy not preferred); North Carolina: 1881, Manney v. Crowell, 84 N. C. 314 (certified copy of registered lost contract for title, not preferred to a sworn copy); Pennsylvania: 1886, Otto v. Trump, 115 Pa. 425, 429, 8 Atl. 786 (certified copy under Federal statute about foreign records, not preferred to examined copy); Texas: 1887, Harvey v. Cummings, 68 Tex. 599, 602, 5 S. W. 513 (certified copy of judicial record, not preferred to examined copy); 1904, Terry v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 75, 79 S. W. 320 (U. S. collector's records); 1906, Smithers v. Lawrence, 100 Tex. 77, 93 S. W. 1064 (certified copy, not preferred to examined copy of land-office records).

So, too, for proof of a revocation of the document, 1840, McConnel v. Reed, 3 Ill. 371 (certified copy of recorded deed, not preferred).

And all the jurisdictions ante, § 1265, not preferring a copy to parol testimony, they would probably also not prefer a certified to a sworn copy.

[2] Federal: 1824, Hunter v. Hunt, 9 Wheat.

(2) There is no preference for a copy judicially established under statutes[3] providing a mode for establishing a record of the contents of a lost or destroyed document.[4]

(3) There is no preference for the transcriber personally over any other person competent to verify the copy.[5]

(4) There is probably, and ought to be, a preference for a copy over an abstract, i.e. a copy ought to be shown unavailable before an abstract can be used.[6]

581, 597 (notarial copy of a note, not preferred, where the offeror is not shown to have one); Arkansas: 1910, Russell v. State, 97 Ark. 92, 133 S. W. 188 (under Kirby's Dig., §§ 3589–3594 public land plats and maps etc. can be proved only by the originals or certified copies); California: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1907 (examined or sworn copy of foreign judicial record, receivable only when also attested by the proved seal of the Court, or if none, or if not the record of a Court, by the legal keeper's proved signature); Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 5734 (examined copy of proceedings of any Court, community, corporation, society, or public board, admissible when clerk is absent or disabled); Georgia: 1846, Bryant v. Owen, 1 Ga. 355, 369 (certified copy of probate-bond, preferred to copy established instanter); 1895, Hines v. Johnston, 95 Ga. 629, 23 S. E. 470 (cited ante, § 1272; the astonishing rule is laid down that while any person who has examined the records may testify that a particular conveyance is not there, yet in showing the existence and contents of a record "this fact could not be proven by any witness other than the clerk; nor by him, except by a certified copy of such record under his hand and seal"); Indiana: 1877, Donellan v. Hardy, 57 Ind. 393, 402 (a certified transcript of judgment, preferred to an official printed report of decision); 1880, Jones v. Levi, 72 Ind. 586, 590 (a sworn copy of record ranks next to an attested copy); Massachusetts: 1836, Davidson v. Slocomb, 18 Pick. 464, 466 (the records of a justice of the peace may be proved by sworn copies, but only where the magistrate's certified copies are unavailable); North Carolina: 1824, State v. Isham, 3 Hawks 185 (record of another Court provable by exemplified copy, where the Court seal's indistinctness prevented the copy from being considered); South Carolina: 1832, Thomson v. Gaillard, 3 Rich. 418, 425 (certificate of the clerk of a Legislative body, preferred, in proving the contents of the journal, to the testimony of another person); Texas: 1877, State v. Cardinas, 47 Tex. 250, 290 (certified copy of Mexican archives, preferred to other copies, on the facts); 1886, Clayton v. Rhem, 67 id. 52, 2 S. W. 45 (certified copy of a tax roll in the comptroller's office, preferred to other copies in the assessor's hands)

Compare the North Dakota cases cited ante, § 1244, note 4.

[3] For these statutes, see post, §§ 1660, 1682, where are examined also certain other questions arising under them.

[4] Georgia: 1878, Jernigan v. Carter, 60 Ga. 131, 133; 1880, Cross v. Johnson, 65 Ga. 717, 719; 1897, Haug v. Riley, 101 Ga. 372, 29 S. E. 44; Illinois: 1898, Forsyth v. Vehmeyer, 176 Ill. 359, 52 N. E. 55; Maine: 1873, Nason v. Jordan, 62 Me. 480, 484 (oral evidence of a burned record of partition, not made secondary to a copy authorized to be recorded in place of the burnt record); Michigan: 1878, Drake v. Kinsell, 38 Mich. 232, 235; Missouri: 1874, Parry v. Walser, 57 Mo. 169, 172; North Carolina: 1887, Mobley v. Watts, 98 N. C. 284, 289, 3 S. E. 677; 1893, Varner v. Johnston, 112 N. C. 570, 576, 17 S. E. 483 (will probated and records burnt); 1893, Williams v. Kerr, 113 N. C. 306, 310, 18 S. E. 501 (foreclosure, record); 1899, Cox v. Beaufort C. L. Co., 124 N. C. 78, 32 S. E. 381; 1910, Hughes v. Pritchard, 153 N. C. 23, 135, 68 S. E. 906, 69 S. E. 3 (homestead appraisal); Texas: 1883, Johnson v. Skipworth, 59 Tex. 473, 475.

Compare the cases cited post, § 1347.

[5] See the citations post, § 1278.

[6] 1836, Doe v. Wainwright, 1 Nev. & P. 8, 12 (Patteson, J.: "It is certainly laid down in the books that a counterpart is the next best evidence, — that a copy is the next. The abstract of a deed is the next best evidence after the copy has been accounted for"; but whether, if a copy had been shown to exist, it would have been preferred to the abstract, was expressly left undecided); 1874, Illinois Land & L. Co. v. Bonner, 75 Ill. 315, 323 (copy of lost will, sent to the proponent, preferred to an abstract).

For abstracts, as violating the principle of Completeness, see post, §§ 2105, 2107; for statutes allowing the use of abstracts of burnt records, see the same place, and also the Hearsay exception, post, § 1705.

An abstract should not be preferred to an extract: 1892, Converse v. Wood, 142 Ill. 132, 136, 31 N. E. 314 (under Burnt Records Act of 1887, abstracts are not preferred to extracts or minutes in the sense that the former must first be shown unavailable).

(5) A few other miscellaneous instances of preference are now and then recognized.[7]

§ 1274. Discriminations against a Copy of a Copy; in General. The phrase "copy of a copy" has long been used[1] as in itself implying some sort of disparagement. This has in some quarters given rise to the loose notion that a copy of a copy (or "mediate copy", as it may better be termed, in contrast to an immediate copy) is in itself and always an improper mode of proof of contents.[2] This notion, indeed, finds some countenance in a passage of an early writer; who, however, probably did not mean any more than that a mediate copy was inferior to an immediate one:

1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 8: "A copy of a copy is no evidence; for the rule demands the best evidence that the nature of the thing admits, and a copy of a copy cannot be the best evidence; for the farther off a thing lies from the first original truth, so much the weaker must the evidence be."

Certainly there is in the nature of a mediate copy nothing that makes it 'per se' defective. When paper A is copied into paper B and this paper into C, the last is in theory as accurate a reproduction as B is. There is merely the possibility that an error may have occurred in the second transcription; but this possibility exists for the first also; there is merely a doubling of the total number of chances.

It must be concluded, then, that the discrimination, if any, against a mediate copy, is rather in the nature of a rule of preference, requiring first the use of an immediate copy, if one is available. This is the view taken in Mr. Justice Story's classical utterance:

1835, STORY, J., in Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. 663, 677: "We admit that the rule, that a copy of a copy is not evidence, is correct in itself, when properly understood and limited to its true sense. The rule properly applies to cases where the copy is taken from a copy, the original being still in existence and capable of being compared with it, for then it is a second remove from the original; or where it is a copy of a copy of a record, the record being still in existence by law deemed as high evidence as the original, for then also it is

[1] 1705, Stillingfleet v. Parker, 6 Mod. 248 (a copy of the enrolment of a lease, required to be enrolled, preferred to a copy in an ancient book of leases); 1849, Schley v. Lyon, 6 Ga. 530, 539 (newspaper publisher's sworn copy of his files, preferred to copy by another person); N. Y. C. P. A. 1920, § 374 (examined copy of foreign corporation's books preferred; details of verification by witness, specified).

For the question whether the recitals of a sheriff's deed are admissible instead of a copy of the judgment recited, see post, § 1664.

For the question whether a printed volume of statutes is receivable instead of a certified copy of the statute, see post, § 1684.

For the question whether letters of administration or letters testamentary are preferred to a copy of the probate record, see ante, § 1238.

The preference as between clerk's docket-entries or minutes and other evidence of a judicial record involves, not a rule of evidence, but the substantive law as to what constitutes the record; this matter is not within the purview of this treatise, but is dealt with briefly post, § 2450.

§ 1274. [1] One of its first appearances seems to be in 1653, Faulconer's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 323, 349, 356, cited in the next section.

[2] 1838, Alderson, B., in Everingham v. Roundell, 2 Moo. & Rob. 138 ("There would be no limit to the reception of secondary evidence, if that were so. . . . This is but the shadow of a shade").

a second remove from the record. But it is quite a different question whether it applies to cases of secondary evidence where the original is lost, or the record of it is not in law deemed as high evidence as the original; or where the copy of a copy is the highest proof in existence. On these points we give no opinion; because this is not in our judgment the case of a mere copy verified as such, but it is the case of a second copy verified as a true copy of the original [being R.'s copy of a record-copy, the latter being made by himself and compared with the original]. . . . In effect, therefore, he swears that both are true copies of the original power, [and either would be admissible]."

1871, FOSTER, J., in Cameron v. Peck, 37 Conn. 763: "The rule that a copy of a copy is not evidence properly applies [1] to cases where the original is still in existence and capable of being compared with it, or [2] where it is the copy of a copy of a record, the record being still in existence, and being by law as high evidence as the original."

§ 1275. Same: Specific Rules of Preference as to Copy of Copy. 1. In ascertaining whether there are any specific rules of preference properly applicable to the detriment of a mediate copy, we must first distinguish those situations in which a mediate copy would be excluded or admitted upon independent principles.

(a) On the one hand, assuming proof by a copy of a copy to be legitimate, the very notion implies that the intermediate document was a correct copy; and until the correctness of the intermediate document is shown, there is nothing to verify the second copy as being correct, for it is based on the anonymous hearsay of the person who made the first document, purporting to be but not shown to be really a copy of the original. Without such testimony by some one to the correctness of the intermediate document as a copy, the copy of it (on the principle of § 1278, post) is plainly inadmissible.[1]

(b) On the other hand, a copy which happens to have been first transcribed from an intermediate copy can be made itself an immediate copy, by comparing and verifying it directly from the original.[2] Moreover, a mediate copy used as a memorandum, by one knowing the original, to refresh recollection of the original (ante, § 760) and not offered as a copy, is not offered as a copy of a copy, and is therefore available, wherever (ante, § 1268) recollection-testimony is proper.[3]

2. It then remains to ascertain what definite rules of preference apply

§ 1275. [1] Eng. 1814, Teed v. Martin, 4 Camp. 90 (to prove an affidavit of ship-ownership, an official clerk who had made an entry from a certificate of registry made by another clerk who alone had seen the affidavit, not admitted): U. S. Cal. 1884, Dyer v. Hudson, 65 Cal. 372, 4 Pac. 235 (stenographer's copy of certified copy read in evidence at former trial, original document being lost, excluded: but here the stenographer was not called to verify it, nor the reader of the certified copy); Ill. 1898, Crane Co. v. Tierney, 175 Ill. 79, 51 N. E. 715 (copy of a record which was a copy of a copy of a document not proved, excluded); Mich. 1875, Fowler v. Hoffman, 31 Mich. 215 (copy of a copy, the latter not shown to be correct, inadmissible; unless the former can be verified from recollection as correct); 1882, People v. McKinney, 49 Mich. 334, 13 N. W. 619 (copy by one stenographer of another's notes without subsequent comparison of copy and original, excluded, the notes being lengthy and covering over 100 pages).

[2] 1835, Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. 663, 677 (copy of a record-copy of an original, both apparently being made and verified by R., receivable); 1859, Gregory v. McPherson, 13 Cal. 562, 574 (copy of a copy, compared anew with the original, received).

[3] 1843, Dunlap v. Berry, 5 Ill. 326, 331 (copy of a copy may be used to refresh memory as to the original); 1875, Fowler v. Hoffman, 31 Mich. 215, supra, note 1.

against a mediate copy as such, i.e. assuming that it is proved to be what it purports to be. These legitimate rules of preference are based upon the general notion that, where the original is still accessible (though not producible, under § 1218, ante) for the purpose of obtaining an immediate copy, there an immediate copy may be fairly required to be obtained and offered.

(a) In the first place, if the original is an existing public record, and the immediate copy not, a mediate copy from the latter (it seems well settled) should be excluded; since the original is still accessible for obtaining an immediate copy.[4]

(b) In the next place, if the original and also the immediate copy are both existing public records, the same rule would seem to apply, for it is still as feasible to obtain an immediate copy from the original record, though here is found some difference of judicial opinion and statutory rule.[5]

[4] ENGLAND: 1685, Anon., Skin. 174 ("If the original [will] be burnt or lost, etc., a copy of their [i.e. Ecclesiastical Court's] registry hath been often given in evidence; but a copy of a copy cannot"); UNITED STATES: Iowa: 1862, Sternberg v. Callanan, 14 Ia. 251 (copy of copy of declaration; excluded on the facts); Kansas: 1897, Drumm v. Cessnun, 58 Kan. 331, 49 Pac. 78 (copy of judicial records should be of the originals, not of the transcript); Massachusetts: 1869, Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362 (Wells, J.: "Whenever a copy of a record or document is itself made original or primary evidence, the rule is clear and well settled that it must be a copy made directly from or compared with the original; . . . so long as another may be obtained from the same source, no ground can be laid for resorting to evidence of an inferior or secondary character"); Minnesota: 1864, Lund v. Rice, 9 Minn. 230 (record of a copy of recorded deed, inadmissible apart from statute); New York: 1831, Lincoln v. Battelle, 6 Wend. 475, 484 (copy of a certified copy of a foreign decree, excluded); Oregon: 1881, Goddard v. Parker, 10 Or. 102, 106 (certified copy of certified copy of official map, excluded); Texas: 1890, Lasater v. Van Hook, 77 Tex. 650, 655, 14 S. W. 270 (certified copy of deed-record, original being lost, preferred to examined copy of certified copy); Vermont: 1843, Carpenter v. Sawyer, 17 Vt. 121, 124 ("a copy of a certified copy of a record is not evidence").

[5] In this class of cases the commonest instance of statutory change is the allowance of the use of copies from the re-record, in another county, of a judicial record or the like: UNITED STATES: Federal: Rev. St. 1878, §§ 897, 898, Code §§ 1400, 1401 (transcripts of certain judicial records into new books, admissible); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, C. C. § 1751 (certified copies of records of new county transcribed from records of original county, admissible); Arkansas: 1851, State v. Crow, 11 Ark. 642, 656 (justice's judgment-transcript filed in Circuit Court; clerk's copy of this sufficient); Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 4918 (certified copies of records transcribed on formation of new county, admissible); Illinois: 1873, Miller v. Goodwin, 70 Ill. 659 (transcript of official copy of original legislative minutes, admitted); Indiana: 1876, Nelson v. Blakey, 54 Ind. 29, 35 (articles of incorporation filed with county recorder, certified copy of this record filed with Secretary of State; certified copy from the Secretary's office, excluded as a copy of a copy of a copy not authorized by the statute); Iowa: Code 1897, § 4639 Comp. Code, § 7346 (documents in office of U. S. surveyor-general, though themselves copies, provable by copy); 1862, Niles v. Sprague, 13 Ia. 198, 202 (a foreign certificate of marriage must be proved by direct copy, and not by a copy of the clerk's record); Kentucky: 1816, Hedden v. Overton, 4 Bibb 406 (copy of a book of record, itself containing copies of Virginia patents, admitted, under a statute admitting copies of "records and other papers" of the register's office); 1816, Owings v. Ulery, 4 Bibb 450 (Maryland will, probated there, and recorded by copy in this State; copy of record admitted); 1817, Rogers v. Barnett, 4 Bibb 480 (similar); 1818, Spurr v. Trimble, 1 A. K. Marsh. 278, 279 (copy of power of attorney, certified by Virginia notary as recorded by him, then recorded by local clerk of Court; a copy of this, excluded); Louisiana: 1831, Lum v. Kelso, 2 La. 64, 67 (copy of record of judgment made in another court, excluded); 1851, Look v. Mays, 6 La. An. 726 (transcript of lower Court's transcript of Supreme Court's order of reversal, received); 1857, West Feliciana R. Co. v. Thornton, 12 La. An. 736 (similar); 1859, Wood v. Harrell, 14 La. An. 61, 63 (certified copies of recorded copies received on the facts); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 900 (county register of deeds' transcribed record of sheriffs' certificates of sale prior to 1862, admissible); § 902 (similar, for railroad grant lists, condemnation proceedings, etc., etc.); Mississippi: Code 1916, § 1984, Hem.

Where the original is out of the jurisdiction, the requirement may well be relaxed.[6]

3. Such are the legitimate and easily defended rules of preference. There remain to be noticed certain situations, in which it would seem that no rule of preference can properly exist, i.e. situations in which the original is no longer accessible for purposes of immediate copying.

Here a mediate copy may well be used as freely as an immediate copy, because otherwise the unfair burden (similar to that spoken of ante, § 1268) would be imposed on the proponent of searching for possible immediate copies and of proving them unobtainable. Any rule requiring in such a case the immediate copy to be accounted for must proceed on the radical principle that a mediate copy is so inferior to an immediate copy that the latter must always be used if any one pre-existing specimen can by possibility be found. It is one thing to require (as in par. b) that, where new direct copies can be obtained 'ad libitum', such a copy shall be procured at a definite office; but it is taking a much further step to say that, though no new ones can now be created, yet search must be made in unspecified places for any that may have been previously taken and may still exist. To such an extent very few Courts are willing to go.

Four varieties of this situation may be distinguished:

(a) Where the original and the first copy are both lost or destroyed, [illegible] clear that the mediate copy should be admitted; and this seems not to have been disputed.[7]

§ 1644 (records of county or court or office, transcribed by order of board of supervisors; copy or transcribed records to have same effect as original); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 12730 (county surveyor's certified copy of filed certified copy of U. S. field-notes, admissible); 1827, Bettis v. Logan, 2 Mo. 2 (transcript of transcribed record filed in another court, admissible); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 1636 (certified copies of certain transcribed mining records, admissible); North Carolina: 1824, State v. Welsh, 3 Hawks 404, 407, 409 (certified copy of a statute reciting another statute, admissible; Henderson, J., diss.); Con. St. 1919, § 609 (certified copy of judgment recorded with county recorder, admissible); Pennsylvania: St. 1798, Mar. 21, § 2, Dig. 1920, § 7608 Court Rec. (exemplifications of Phila. County Court records of roads, copied from original record, receivable); St. 1833, Feb. 16, §§ 1, 21, Dig. 1920, § 10336 Evid. (official copies of copies of official drafts of donation lands, receivable); Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, §§ 3703, 3704 (certified copies of transcribed records for new counties, admissible); §§ 6767–6777 (transcribed records in general; provisions for using); Virginia: 1814, Whitacre v. M'Ilhaney, 4 Munf. 310, 312 (copy of a record containing copies of decree, etc., excluded); West Virginia: St. 1881, c. 5, Code 1914, § 1539 (transcribed records in circuit and county courts).

[6] Fed. 1917, Werlich's Will, U. S. Court for China, 1 Extraterr. Cas. 668 (British certified copy of probate of a will already probated elsewhere, admitted, the original and the first copy being out of the jurisdiction; citing the above text with approval); Ky. 1900, Knoxville Nursery Co. v. Com., 108 Ky. 6, 55 S. W. 691 (certified copy of a foreign corporation's certificate of incorporation locally filed, admissible; the foreign certificate is not here the original, because the local certificate is itself a new admission of corporate existence); Mass. 1900, Com. v. Corkery, 175 Mass. 460, 56 N. E. 711 (corporation commissioner's certified copy of a copy filed with him of foreign articles of incorporation, admitted); Va. 1868, Corbett v. Nutt, 18 Gratt. 624, 633, 637 (certified copy of a will and probate from a court in D. C., where it had been probated from an authenticated copy from court of original probate, received, the second probate being out of the State; whether a copy of this second copy could be received, not decided).

[7] 1873, Cornett v. Williams, 20 Wall. 226, 245 (copy of a certified copy of a judgment, both original and certified copy being destroyed, admitted).

(b) Where the original is lost or destroyed, and the first copy is not producible because it is an official record, practically the same situation as the preceding is presented, since neither original nor first copy is producible. It is generally conceded that the mediate copy may be used; and the statutes which authorize the official copying of torn or illegible records provide usually for admitting copies of these copies.[8]

(c) Where the original is a deed lawfully recorded and therefore need not be produced (ante, §§ 1224, 1225), the first copy being the official record and thus also not producible, practically the same situation is again presented, except that here it is still possible to copy directly from the original if it could be discovered by search. But the object of such statutory provision for recording is generally understood to be to facilitate the use of the record for the purpose of obtaining copies, — the ordinary case of a recorded deed being the typical one. Hence, whatever may be the rule as to exempting from the production of the original deed (ante, § 1225), nevertheless, whenever a copy is receivable at all, — i.e. either after or without accounting for the original — it may be a copy from the official record; the objection that it is a mediate copy not being recognized as having force for such a case:

1835, STORY, J., in Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. 663, 677: "It is certainly a common practice to produce in the custody of the clerk, under a 'subpœna duces tecum', the original records of deeds duly recorded. But in point of law a copy from such record is admissible in evidence upon the ground stated in Lynch v. Clerk,[9] that where an original document of a

[8] Add also the statutes cited infra, note 12: ENGLAND: 1653, Faulconer's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 323, 349, 356 (a deposition being lost, but being recorded in Haberdasher's Hall, "the proper court where it ought to remain" and examined copy of the record, and another copy in the House journals, were used, though objected to as "but a transcript of a transcript, a copy of a copy"); UNITED STATES: Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, C. C. § 4722 (certified copies of transcribed defaced records, admissible); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 124, § 11 (certified copies of copies of lost enrolled laws in office of Secretary of State, admissible); Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 1290–1329 (copy of copy of lost records restored, admissible); § 1379 (re-recorded mutilated, etc., records of Supreme Court, provable by clerk's certified copy under court seal); Kentucky: Stats. 1915, §§ 1632–1634 (transcription of torn, etc., records, equivalent to original); Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 56 (land-office commissioner's certified copy under seal of an extract from a deed transmitted by court clerk, admissible if deed and record are lost or destroyed); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 10609 (re-recording of records, torn, etc.; certified copies admissible); New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, §§ 49, 129, Conveyances (mutilated, torn, etc., records may be proved by re-record or certified copy thereof); St. 1920, Mar. 26, c. 46 (public record office; custodian's certified copy of old, defaced, restored, etc. records re-copied, admissible); North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 3557 (certified, copies of old records, etc., transcribed, admissible); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 2774, 2775 (copy of copies of old records re-copied, admissible); Pennsylvania: St. 1833, Feb. 16, § 2, Dig. 1920, § 10338, Evid. (certified copies of official copies of defaced ancient official papers in surveyor-general's office, receivable); St. 1844, Apr. 29, § 3, Dig. 1920, § 10315, Evid. (copies by register of probate of entries from certain Orphans' Court papers, receivable "in the event of the loss or destruction" of such papers); Rhode Island: 1904, New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Horgan, 26 R. I. 448, 59 Atl. 310 (certified copy of an authorized record-copy of a dilapidated record of a town-meeting vote, admitted); Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 3979 (certified transcript of town records, to be used as originals if the originals are lost or destroyed); West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 73A, § 10 (proceedings of commissioners to establish contents of burnt records, usable when "no higher or better evidence can be had"); § 10*a* (county clerk's certified copy of re-recorded copy of lost or destroyed record, admissible); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, §§ 4151*j*–4151*o* (certified copies of re-recorded lost records, admissible).

[9] 3 Salk. 154.

public nature would be evidence if produced, an immediate sworn copy thereof is admissible in evidence; for as all persons have a right to the evidence which documents of a public nature afford, they might otherwise be required to be exhibited at different places at the same time."

1848, Stetson v. Gulliver, 2 Cush. 494, 499: "When the book of the register would be evidence, a certified copy is entitled to have the same effect; there being very little ground to apprehend any mistake from that cause, and upon consideration of the great public inconvenience which would result from having the books of record removed from their proper custody and place of security."

This is universally conceded where the first copy is contained in an official register (as with deeds of land usually), and is expressly declared in the statutes of registration (ante, § 1225); the only arguable case seems to be that of a copy required to be filed but not recorded in a book.[10] It is upon this principle also, or an extension of it, that a copy from an authorized re-record in general (e.g. in another county) is receivable;[11] and this principle, combined with that of 3 (b) above, admits copies of re-records of conveyances whose original records are destroyed, i.e. without requiring the copy to be taken from the original conveyance though in existence.[12] The use of an

[10] Eng. 1694, Smart v. Williams, Comb. 247 (a copy of a will recorded at the Prerogative Office, opposed "because it is but a copy of a copy; but the Court allowed it, for the entry in the ecclesiastical books is the original 'quoad hoc'; otherwise to make a title to lands by devise"; on the latter point, see the reason ante, § 1238); U. S. Ala. 1882, Martin v. Hall, 72 Ala. 587 (certified copy of record of official bond, required to be filed but not to be recorded, excluded); Cal. 1875, Vance v. Kohlberg, 50 Cal. 346, 349 (certified copy of officially filed copy of articles of consolidation, receivable); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1855 (for public or recorded documents, a copy of the record suffices; for documents lost or in opponent's possession, "either a copy or oral evidence"); Ill. 1873, Toledo W. & W. R. Co. v. Chew, 67 Ill. 378, 381 (corporate articles; copy filed by law; copy of this official record, admitted as copy of duplicate original); Ind. 1879, Board v. May, 67 Ind. 561, 566 (certified copy of official record of soldier's discharge, etc., admitted); Mass. 1848, Stetson v. Gulliver, 2 Cush. 494 (see quotation supra); 1869, Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362 (same); Or. 1876, Willamette F. C. & L. Co. v. Gordon, 6 Or. 175, 177, semble (copy of recorded document, admissible); Pa. 1900, Hilliard v. Enders, 196 Pa. 587, 46 Atl. 839 (certified copy of a record-copy, required to be filed, of a deed, admissible); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1392 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1855).

Compare the cases on foreign corporate articles, cited supra, note 6.

[11] Ala. Code 1907, § 3995 (transcribed records of any court or office to be evidence like the original); Fla. 1906, Mansfield v. Johnson, 51 Fla. 239, 40 So. 196 (certified copy from the record of H. county court, of a judgment there recorded on certified copy from D. county court, admitted); Ill. Rev. St. c. 30, § 29 (certified copies of recorded certified copy of deed of lands in different counties, admissible); Ia. 1890, Collins v. Valleau, 79 Ia. 626, 629, 43 N. W. 284, 44 N. W. 904 (re-record in another county; re-record admitted); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11729, 11731, 11732, 11739, 11766 (certain re-recorded deeds, provable by certified copy); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 10581 (deed affecting land in another county or in new subdivided county); 1880, Crispen v. Hannavan, 72 Mo. 548, 556 (re-recorded deed provable under statute by certified copy); N. H. St. 1913, c. 137, § 3 (central office of copies of ancient records; certified copy under seal of State by the Secretary of State to be evidence); N. C. Con. St. 1919, §§ 1768–1772 (records in specified counties); Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4151 b.

No attempt is made to collect all such statutes here, because they are too numerous to be set forth accurately, and because they almost always expressly make copies admissible. It may be noted that the statutes cited under 2 (a) supra, providing for transcribed public records in general, will thus usually cover the present case of deed-records.

[12] The statutes almost always expressly so provide; the following list is not complete, and those cited supra 3 (b) will also usually cover this case of deed-records; Fed. 1918, Virginia & W. V. Coal Co. v. Charles, D. C. W. D. Va., 251 Fed. 83 (certified copy of a record made from an attested copy, the original record not being in existence, admitted under Va. Code 1904, § 3339); Cal. St. 1906, Spec. Sess., c. 55, p. 73, June 6, § 1; Colo. Comp. St. 1921, § 5026 (recorder's certified copy under official seal of re-recorded docuabstract from such a record, however, involves the principle of Completeness, and may be better considered under that head (post, §§ 2105, 2107).

(d) The fourth variety of situation occurs where the original is lost or destroyed and the first copy is not an official record and is not shown to be lost or otherwise accounted for. This presents the only situation in which a supposed strict rule of preference can practically make any difference to the proponent's disadvantage. In the preceding cases there is virtually a general agreement that the mediate copy can be used because the immediate copy cannot be had; and the question here is really, Must it be shown that an immediate copy cannot be had? Is the mediate copy receivable without such a showing? The objection to such a rule, as already noted (ante, § 1275), is the excessive burden of search and proof placed on the proponent, — a burden disproportionate to the small risk of error involved in the use of a mediate copy.

As regards the state of the law, it is just here that the place of really debatable and still unsettled doctrine is found. It has already been seen (in paragraph 1, above) that there is no support for the extreme notion that a copy of a copy is absolutely inadmissible; it has also been seen, on the other hand (in paragraph 2, above) that a copy of a copy is generally conceded not to be receivable so long as the original is accessible for direct copying, and also (in paragraphs 3(a)–(d), above) that by general concession a copy of a copy is receivable when neither original nor first copy are to be had. But none of these concessions answers the present inquiry, namely, When the original is not accessible for a direct copy, but the intermediate copy copied from (or some other pre-existing direct copy) is by possibility available, must the latter be produced or accounted for? The orthodox English doctrine seems clearly to have laid down such a rule.[13] But, for the reasons above suggested, this unnecessarily strict requirement has been rejected by a majority of American Courts,[14] although, in view of the numerous discrim-ments whose original records are destroyed, admissible); Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, § 3834 (certified copies of re-recorded instruments or copies of deeds whose records have been burnt, admissible); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 116, §§ 6–8, 11, 22 (certified copies of conveyances, etc., or certified copies thereof, re-recorded to supply the loss of original records, admissible); La. St. 1910, No. 234 (destroyed records of district clerk and parish recorder); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 2204 (re-recorded conveyances where records have been destroyed by fire, admissible); N. Car. Con. St. 1919, § 1778 (wills in a certain county); Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 2479 (re-recorded surveys, etc.); Wis. Stats. 1919, §§ 4151*c*, 4151*e*.

[13] Eng. 1767, Tillard v. Shebbeare, 2 Wils. 366 (copy of a Bishop's institution-book entry, copying a presentation: the book itself called for; "the true point is, Might not the plaintiff have produced better evidence?"); 1816, Liebman v. Pooley, 1 Stark. 167 (letter; copy of a copy left at home, excluded); 1838, Everingham v. Roundell, 2 Moo. & Rob. 138, Alderson, B. (writ; copy of a copy left at home by the witness, excluded); U. S. Ga. 1849, Schley v. Lyon, 6 Ga. 530, 538 (witness copied from newspaper file, then copied the copy; excluded, even though files were unavailable); Ia. 1899, State v. Cohen, 108 Ia. 208, 78 N. W. 857 (copy of copy of policy, excluded, the first copy not being shown unavailable); Pa. 1782, Morris v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. 64, 65 (copy of a certificate of a survey, excluded).

[14] Conn. 1871, Cameron v. Peck, 37 Conn. 763 (admitting a copy of a press-copy of a letter); Ga. 1860, Womack v. White, 30 Ga. 696, 700 (copy of sale-advertisement, admitted; newspaper itself not required); Mass. 1869, Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362 (lost letter; the copy of a letter press copy, the latter not accounted for, was accepted;

inations above noted, it can hardly be said that any clear and settled doctrine exists except in a few jurisdictions.

2. Rules as to Qualifications of Witness to Copy

§ 1277. In general. A copy, merely as a piece of paper, has no standing as evidence. In order even to be termed "copy" it must have the support of a witness qualified to say that it represents the contents of the original document:

Ante 1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 96: "A copy of the deed must be proved by a witness that compared it with the original; for there is no proof of the truth of the copy, or that it hath any relation to the deed, unless there be somebody to prove its comparison with the original."

A copy, in short, is merely one mode (ante, § 799) of presenting the testimony of a witness. The witness, therefore, must be qualified; and thus the general principles of witnesses' qualifications have here certain special applications.

§ 1278. Witness to Copy must have Personal Knowledge of Original. A general principle for witness' qualifications is that he must speak from personal observation of the event or thing to be testified to, and that therefore in general a witness is not qualified who bases his testimony, not on his own personal observation, but on imagination, or inference, or the hearsay of others (ante, § 657). Upon this principle, then, a person who proposes to testify to the contents of a document, either by copy or otherwise, must have read it. He may not describe its contents merely on the credit of what another has told him it contains, even though his informant purports to have read it aloud in his presence.

This rule is not always enforced by Courts; and no doubt there are cases in which the trial Court's discretion may properly allow exceptions. But the general rule is a proper one, and is constantly invoked.[1] Upon the same

"there are no degrees of legal distinction in this class of evidence"); 1890, Smith v. Brown, 151 Mass. 338, 340, 24 N. E. 31 (two successive assignments of a judgment; the first being lost, the second was held not preferable to a copy of the first; "if there are several sources of information of the same fact, it is not ordinarily necessary to show that all have been exhausted before secondary evidence can be resorted to"); Mich. 1916, Bartholomew v. Walsh, 191 Mich. 252, 157 N. W. 575 (minutes of corporate meetings; copy of a copy, admitted only after evidence of later alteration of the original); N. Y. 1821, Robertson v. Lynch, 18 Johns. 451, 452, 457, semble (copy of a letter-book copy, receivable); 1830, Jackson v. Cole, 4 Cow. 587, 595 (copy of a copy of appraisers' certificate received, the original being lost); S. C. 1896, Howard v. Quattlebaum, 46 S. C. 95, 24 S. E. 93 (a copy from a certified copy of a will, the will and the record having been destroyed by fire, admitted); 1909, Pineland Club v. Robert, 4th C. C. A., 170 Fed. 341 (a record of a certified copy of a will, not admitted, under S. C. St. 1866, Dec. 20, the probate of the will being defective and the existence of the will not being otherwise established; the principle of §§ 1658 and 2110, post, being thus not satisfied; Howard v. Quattlebaum distinguished); Tenn. 1813, Duncan v. Blair, 2 Overt. 213, 214 (the recorded entry of land being lost, a copy of a warrant containing a copy of the entry and a copy of an abstract of the entries was received).

§ 1278. [1] In the following list the cases on both sides are included: ENGLAND: 1672, Peterborough v. Mordaunt, 1 Mod. 94 (the witness to a copy, "being asked whether he did see the very deed and compare it with that copy, he answered in the negative," whereupon his testimony was disallowed); 1830, R. v.

principle, testimony to contents by a foreigner or an illiterate person is ordinarily inadmissible.[2] It is upon this principle that a copy of a copy, as already noted (ante, § 1275, par. 1), may be excluded where it does not appear that the intermediate document was really a copy.[3]

Abstracts of title, as commonly made up, would of course be excluded on a

Haworth, 4 C. & P. 254, 256 (must have read the original); UNITED STATES: Ala. 1896, Edisto Phos. Co. v. Standford, 112 Ala. 493, 20 So. 613 (the witness must have seen the document); 1901, Laster v. Blackwell, 128 Ala. 143, 30 So. 663, 133 Ala. 337, 32 So. 166 (testimony of persons who had heard a deed read, admitted); 1910, Lacy v. Meador, 170 Ala. 482, 54 So. 161 (one L., an illiterate, had dictated a letter to one E., who wrote it; a witness who had heard some one read aloud the letter was excluded; citing the text above); Ark. 1853, Hooper v. Chism, 13 Ark. 496, 501 (one who had heard a bill of sale read, by an unspecified person; insufficient); Cal. 1910, Guinasso's Estate, Guinasso v. Arata, 13 Cal. App. 518, 110 Pac. 335 (one who heard B. read a will aloud, not competent); Ill. 1878, Weis v. Tiernan, 91 Ill. 27, 30 (a person who had heard or read that records were destroyed, excluded); Mass. 1848, Hodges v. Hodges, 2 Cush. 460 (one testifying from statements of the signer, excluded); Mo. 1846, Matthews v. Coalter, 9 Mo. 696, 699, 701 (one who heard a paper read, allowed to testify to the reading of contents, on the 'res gestæ' principle); N. J. 1892, Rice v. Rice, — N. J. Eq. —, 25 Atl. 321 (copy of a letter dictated, the writer not seeing the original nor the dictator the copy; received, with reservation that for formal documents, essential to a claim, etc., cross-reading, or the like, might be required); 1897, Schubert Lodge v. Schubert Verein, 56 N. J. Eq. 78, 38 Atl. 347 (printed copy of the constitution of a secret order; the State-lodge secretary received it from the Supreme-lodge secretary; the former's testimony held sufficient); N. Y. 1874, Nichols v. Kingdom Co., 56 N. Y. 618 (letter; even though the letter is now destroyed, not provable by one who has not read it); 1875, Edwards v. Noyes, 65 N. Y. 126, semble (same); N. C. 1880, Nelson v. Whitfield, 82 N. C. 46 (a lost will having been shown to be probated, its contents were proved by others who had heard read what purported to be the will or a copy); 1894, Propst v. Mathis, 115 N. C. 526, 20 S. E. 719 (rejecting a witness who testified to the contents of a lost will read over to him by the clerk; distinguishing Nelson v. Whitfield, supra, because here the same witness was expected to suffice for both the contents and the fact of probate); Pa. 1827, Pipher v. Lodge, 17 S. & R. 214, 221, 232 (a copy by a clerk of a deposition, not clearly shown to have been based on the original, receivable, per Tod, J., excluded, per Gibson, C. J., and Rogers, J.); 1869, McGinniss v. Sawyer, 63 Pa. 266 (lost document; witness must have seen and read it); 1870, Coxe v. England, 65 Pa. 212, 222 (one who saw a few words of a letter which another read aloud, not competent, because "her knowledge was hearsay"); Tex. Rev. Civ. Stats. 1911, § 3272 (lost will may be proved by one "who has heard it read"); Vt. 1871, Johnson v. Bolton, 43 Vt. 303, 304 (testimony by an illiterate who heard another person read a letter, excluded).

On the same principle it has been held that a bystander may not testify to the accuracy of a report of the examination of an illiterate accused: 1834, R. v. Chappell, 1 Moo. & R. 395 (Denman, L. C. J.: "For if the prisoner signs his name, this implies that he can read, and that he has read the examination and adopted it. But if he has not signed it, or has only put his mark, there are no grounds to infer that he can read or that he knows the contents, and no person can swear that the examination has been correctly read over to him except the person who read it").

Accord: 1834, R. v. Richards, 1 Moo. & R. 396, n., Patteson, J.

Contra: 1835, R. v. Hope, 1 Moo. & R. 396, n., Patteson and Vaughan, JJ., for certain cases.

[3] Cal. 1884, Russell v. Brosseau, 65 Cal. 605, 607, 4 Pac. 643 (testimony to contents of notice by one unable to read or write, excluded); Tenn. 1870, Cheek v. James, 2 Heisk. 170, 172 (a boy from 5 to 8 years old at the time of execution of a bond, held not competent to testify to its contents).

Contra: Colo. 1883, Breen v. Richardson, 6 Colo. 605 (a foreigner, executing articles of partnership read over to him, allowed to testify to the contents of the destroyed original); D. C. 1915, Chalvet v. Huston, 43 D. C. App. 77 (plaintiff allowed to testify to contents of a lost letter, written by defendant, in German, and read over to plaintiff by his wife, since dead); Tenn. 1872, Morris v. Swaney, 7 Heisk. 591, 597 (contents of a lost will allowed to be shown by illiterate persons who had heard it read aloud by others; the analogy of examined records invoked, in which cross-reading is not necessary).

[2] That a party's admission may suffice, though not based on personal knowledge, see ante, §§ 1053, 1255.

What personal knowledge is required as to the genuineness of the original from which the copy was taken is dealt with post, § 2158.

For copies of telegrams, see post, § 2154.

strict application of this principle;[4] but it has never been thought to be the real obstacle to using abstracts of title; the rule for originals (ante, § 1223), the hearsay rule (post, § 1705), and the rule for completeness (post, § 2105), also are to be faced. Statutes have in many States made an exception to all of these rules (post, § 1705).

§ 1279. Same: Exception for Copy of Official Records; Cross-Reading not Necessary. To the preceding rule there is a classical and settled exception, covering the case of the copy made of an official record. Here it has never been doubted that, if the witness "cross-read" with another person (usually the record-keeper or his clerk) — i.e. held the copy and followed it as the other read aloud the original, then followed the original while the other read aloud the copy — his testimony to the copy's correctness would be admissible; although it is obvious that his testimony is none the less based on hearsay. The only objection here raised has been that there should at least be a cross-reading, i.e. that a single co-reading, i.e. one or the other of the above parts of the process, is insufficient; but even this objection has been by long tradition and practice almost unanimously repudiated.[1]

§ 1280. Same: Sundry Distinctions (Press-Copies; Witness not the Copyist; Double Testimony; Impression or Belief; Spoliation). (1) Where a process of copying — by blotter-press or the like — is in its general operation fairly accurate, it should be enough that the witness has gone through the process, even though he has not afterwards verified the copy with the original.[1] The same principle should apply to photographic copies (ante, §§ 793, 795).

[4] 1915, Hitt v. Carr, 62 Ind. App. 80, 109 N. E. 456 (abstractor's testimony to contents of a lost summons-return, held inadmissible, on the ground that "his information was obtained from notes or secondary evidence procured by some member of the office force"; this would effectually exclude all abstracts; Indiana needs a liberal statute on the subject).

§ 1279. [1] 1808, Reid v. Margison, 1 Camp. 469 (Wood, B.: "Had the witness who was called done all that the defendant requires, still the other person engaged in the examination might by possibility have misread the copy as well as the original; and it would come to this, that to prove a copy of a record there must always be two witnesses, the man who read and the man who examined. But this would be a great public inconvenience, and there is no rule of law to require it").

Accord: Eng. 1795, M'Neil v. Perchard, 1 Esp. 264 (writ); 1808, Gyles v. Hill, 1 Camp. 471, note (official record); 1809, Rolf v. Dart, 2 Taunt. 52 (judgment); 1833, Fyson v. Kemp, 6 C. & P. 72 (bill of costs); 1839, R. v. Hughes, 1 Cr. & D. 13 (record of conviction); Conn. 1807, Lynde v. Judd, 3 Day 499; U. S. N. H. 1852, Pickard v. Bailey, 26 N. H. 152, 169; N. Y. 1830, Beardsley, Sen., in Hill v. Packard, 5 Wend. 375, 387 ("Copies of records are to be proved, as other transcripts, by a witness who has compared the copy line for line with the original, or has examined the copy while another person read the original"); Pa. 1870, Krise v. Neason, 66 Pa. 253, 260 (whether cross-reading is necessary; held not here, because the reader was the agent of both parties); Tenn. 1872, Morris v. Swaney, 7 Heisk. 591, 597, ante, § 1278, note 2.

Contra: 1837, Slane Peerage Case, 5 Cl. & F. 23, 42 (for public documents); 1892, Rice v. Rice, — N. J. Eq. —, 25 Atl. 321, semble, ante, § 1278, note 1.

Not clear: 1848, Crawford and Lindsay Peerages, 2 H. L. C. 534, 545 (cross-reading of an ancient document in Latin; both readers and the copyist called, on the facts).

That the personal knowledge of an officer giving a certified copy is not required, see post, §§ 1635, 1677.

§ 1280. [1] 1842, Simpson v. Thornton, 2 Moo. & Rob. 433; 1890, Ford v. Cunningham, 87 Cal. 209, 210, 25 Pac. 403; Haw. Rev. L. 1915, § 2606 ("where any writing whatsoever shall have been copied by means of any machine or press which produces a facsimile impression or copy of such writing", the copy suffices, on proof of being so taken, "without any proof that such impression or copy was compared with the said original").

(2) The witness to a copy need not be himself the transcriber or copyist. If he has at some time compared the original and the alleged copy made by another, he is qualified to verify the copy. If a period has elapsed between his sight of the original and his sight of the copy, so that he is virtually nothing more than a recollection-witness (ante, § 1266) — as where he is first shown the alleged copy in court and is asked to say whether it is a copy of the original as he remembers it — then it is possible that he should be regarded as an inferior witness to a copy-witness in the strict sense (as noted ante, § 1268); but that he is at least a qualified witness has not been doubted.[2]

(3) On the same principle, a paper may be shown a copy by the united testimony of two persons neither of whom alone could testify to all the elements. The typical instance is that of paper A shown by one witness to be a copy of a certain paper B, another witness then showing paper B to be identical with the absent original in issue.[3]

(4) On the principle of Knowledge (ante, § 658), it is not necessary that the quality of a witness' knowledge or belief should be that of absolute certainty; his belief or impression, if fairly certain and definite, will suffice. But it is of course difficult to draw the line precisely between the sufficient and the insufficient degrees of positiveness.[4]

[2] Eng. 1833, R. v. Fursey, 6 C. & P. 81, 84 (for proving notices, the usual way is "to give a [alleged] copy to the witness and ask if it is a copy of what he saw"); 1837, R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 297, 306, 307, 308, semble (testimony that a paper was similar to one in evidence, admitted); U. S. Ill. 1875, Lombard v. Johnson, 76 Ill. 599, 601 (the copyist himself need not come, if another qualified person can verify the copy); Ky. 1820, Barbour v. Watts, 2 A. K. Marsh. 290 (one who has first seen the copy some time after seeing the original; not decided); Mass. 1837, Dana v. Kemble, 19 Pick. 112, 116 (a paper in the handwriting of the deceased writer of an original; this paper testified to be of the same tenor as the original; held sufficient); Mo. 1851, Harvey v. Chouteau, 14 Mo. 587, 597 (the witness need not have the original before him, if the correctness of the copy is otherwise known to him); Nebr. 1894, Nostrum v. Halliday, 39 Nebr. 828, 833, 58 N. W. 429, semble (copy of a plat not made by witness nor compared with original, excluded); N. J. 1832, Smith v. Axtell, 1 N. J. L. 494, 498 ("It has not been compared; the witnesses who state it to be a copy, speak only from their recollection of the original"; admitted, though a copy in the strict sense was held preferable); Wis. 1881, Kollock v. Parcher, 52 Wis. 393, 400, 9 N. W. 67 (a defective official-copy may be verified by another person so as to be admissible); 1895, Althouse v. Jamestown, 91 Wis. 46, 64 N. W. 423 (the fact of serving a particular notice being in existence, and the testimony of the person who made the copy offered not being available, the testimony of one who had read the original and also the copy was received).

The length of time elapsing between seeing the original and making the copy is immaterial; it is then at least as good as recollection-testimony: 1913, Walter v. Calhoun, 88 Kan. 801, 129 Pac. 1176.

[3] Eng. 1699, Medlicot v. Joyner, 2 Keble 546 (a deed-copy "made by the witness to carry about to counsel, but never examined with the original", admitted, because "this is good evidence as well as [i.e. together with] testimony of a witness of the contents of the deed burnt"); 1817, R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 116, per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. ("When you wish to prove that a party has notice of the contents of a newspaper, you show by one witness that he had a copy of the paper and by another what the contents were"); U. S. 1885, Huff v. Hall, 56 Mich. 456, 457, 23 N. W. 88 (lost letter; B testifies to a letter shown him by A; A testifies that the letter was one received from the defendant; allowed); 1827, Bullitt v. Overfield, 2 Mo. 4 (copy verified by one witness for an original identified by another, admitted).

That the witness to an examined copy of a public record must show that the document examined was really the desired record, is dealt with under Authentication (post, § 2158).

[4] 1844, State Bank v. Ensminger, 7 Blackf. Ind. 104, 108 (copy made by clerk in such a hurry that he could not swear to accuracy; held sufficient, opponent possessing the original); 1886, Re Gazett, 35 Minn. 532, 533, 29 N. W. 347 (that a paper "seemed to be" a copy of a pleading, insufficient); see also ante, § 658.

(5) A document's contents may be inferred from circumstantial evidence, — in particular, from spoliation or suppression by the opponent (ante, § 291).

3. Rules depending on the Hearsay Rule and its Exceptions

§ 1281. Witness must be called, unless by Exception to the Hearsay Rule for Certified Copies, etc. A paper offered as a copy but not supported by any person's testimony in Court is a hearsay — i.e. extrajudicial — statement, obnoxious to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1362). Hence, some person must be called to the stand to verify the paper as the copy that it purports to be. A paper offered anonymously as a copy, or offered without calling some witness to verify it, is inadmissible. This principle, never disputed, is, with occasional lapses, constantly enforced in excluding supposed copies;[1] though in earlier times there was undoubtedly more laxity in this respect.[2]

But there are exceptions to the Hearsay rule, under which copies made by specific classes of persons may be admitted. (1) Under the exception for Official Statements (post, § 1677), copies made by officers lawfully authorized to give copies — i.e. exemplified, certified, attested, or office copies — are receivable. (2) Upon a similar principle, statutory provision is often made for the establishment, by judicial proceedings, of a copy of a lost or destroyed document (post, § 1682). (3) There is an early and limited exception, nowadays not much invoked, allowing the use of recitals in one deed of the contents of another as evidence of the latter's contents (post, § 1573). (4) There was also once an exception recognized for ancient copies of ancient lost records (post, § 1573). (4) There is an exception in favor of private reports of judicial decisions in other jurisdictions (post, § 1703), and, by statute, for copies certified by the clerks or other custodians of certain private documents such as corporate records (post, § 1683).

4. Sundry Principles

§ 1282. Completeness of Copy; Abstracts. The general principle of Completeness (post, §§ 2105–2111) requires that, where the terms of a document are to be proved, the whole of the contents, whether in the original or by copy, be presented to the tribunal. It is impracticable to separate from the general treatment of that principle the specific rules applicable to the proof of a document's contents, and the various questions are there dealt with; in particular, the questions whether the whole of a document must be contained in the copy, and not a mere extract or an abstract, whether a copy must be stated to have been "truly" or "correctly" copied, and the like.

§ 1281. [1] Eng. 1807, Fisher v. Samuda, 1 Camp. 190, 192 (a copy made by the plaintiff himself, incompetent from interest, excluded, because such testimony "must be of a nature which the law would receive in other instances"); U. S. N. J. 1819, Wills v. M'Dole, 5 N. J. L. 501 (copy insufficiently proved); 1906, Hall v. Callingham, 74 N. J. L. 211, 65 Atl. 123 (purporting copy of a letter, not verified by any witness, excluded); N. Y. 1885, Oregon S. S. Co. v. Otis, 100 N. Y. 446, 453, 3 N. E. 485 (the writing delivered to the telegraph office being the original, and destroyed, the transcript delivered to the sendee was taken as a copy, in the absence of any objection to its accuracy; compare § 2154, post); N. Car. 1844, Kelly v. Craig, 5 Ired. 129, 131 (paper delivered by a clerk to a sheriff, purporting to be a copy of the tax-list, excluded).

[2] 1707, Winne v. Lloyd, 2 Vern. 603 (copies by a deceased person admitted).

SUB-TITLE II: RULES OF TESTIMONIAL PREFERENCE

CHAPTER XL.

TOPIC I: PROVISIONAL (OR CONDITIONAL) TESTIMONIAL PREFERENCES

SUB-TOPIC A: PREFERENCE FOR AN ATTESTING WITNESS

(a) "Where the execution of any document"

(b) "Purports to have been attested"

(c) "A party desiring to prove its execution"

(d) "Against an opponent entitled in the state of the issues to dispute execution"

(e) "Must, before using other evidence"

(f) "Either produce the attester as a witness"

(g) "Or show his testimony to be unavailable"

§ 1285. Nature and Kinds of Testimonial Preference. In the preceding Chapter has been examined that sort of preference which is accorded to the original of a writing; its production before the tribunal is preferred, if feasible, instead of testimonial or circumstantial evidence about the contents. The preference now to be examined is a preference for one kind of testimonial evidence (i.e. one kind of witness) over another.

The rules of Preference here are of two sorts, one less stringent than the other. By one sort of preference, it is required that a particular witness or class of witnesses be called before any other can be resorted to, so that the latter cannot be used until the former is produced or is shown to be unavailable. This sort of preference may be termed provisional (or conditional) — formerly referred to as an application of the "best evidence" rule (ante, § 1174). By the other sort, the preferred witness or class of witnesses is not only first required, but if it is available, it is made the exclusive source of proof; that is, if the preferred witness is available, his testimony is taken as so trustworthy that no other testimony to the same point is received, nor is his testimony allowed to be shown incorrect. This sort of preference may be termed conclusive (or absolute). The various rules of conditional preference are dealt with in §§ 1286–1339; the rules of absolute preference in §§ 1345–1353. They are few in number, and rest upon considerations peculiar to the case of each one.

Topic I: PROVISIONAL (OR CONDITIONAL) TESTIMONIAL PREFERENCES

§ 1286. General Nature and Policy of these Rules. The general notion of preference which insists that a particular witness shall be called before another can be called rests on the supposed excellent position of that particular witness to obtain knowledge of the matter more accurately than any other person. His opportunities of knowledge, it must be supposed, have been not only better than those of others, but so much better that it would be a palpable risking of injustice to proceed in the trial without endeavoring to obtain him. Moreover, such a rule should be applied only where the class of witnesses thus preferred can be designated with some precision and certainty; because the party required to call him must in fairness be able to know beforehand, in order to summon them, the person or persons to whom the rule will be applied by the Court on the trial. Finally, such a rule obviously assumes nothing as to the precise nature of the witness' testimony. He may, on appearing, affirm or deny the existence of the fact in question; he is required to be used, but without any assumption that he will say the one thing or the other thing, and merely with the assumption that whatever he can contribute will be worth hearing. In other words, such a rule is a rule imposed by the law by way of insuring a supply of trustworthy testimony which otherwise the partisan interests of either side might fail to furnish.

Now the situations in which these combined considerations apply must necessarily be few. There are doubtless many classes of witnesses who might be supposed to have better opportunities of knowledge than others; but there are not many in which it can be securely assumed, for the purposes of a fixed rule, that they have had opportunities so far in excess of others that they must invariably and positively be utilized. Moreover, the precise definition of such persons by specific rules is still less often feasible. Finally, and most important of all, the cases in which the law needs, of its own motion, and independently of the litigants' efforts, to insist upon their attendance are decidedly few in number. The whole spirit of the Anglo-American system of trials is to leave the search for evidence in the hands of the parties themselves (post, § 2483). Their interested zeal is regarded as sufficient to insure a full and exhaustive marshalling of all the evidential data on either side; and this attitude of the law, whether originally wise or not, has so thrown the parties upon their own efforts that in practice parties do exert themselves as effectively as could be desired.[1] In fact, our system of partisan responsibility for the purveying of evidence, while it is marked by the natural defects of partisanship, is at least more successful in the thorough canvassing of all sources of evidence than any system of judicial responsibility could be in this country, or (perhaps) than in any other country such a system actually appears to be to-day. Under such conditions, then, the cases might well be extremely few in which it would be necessary for the law to step in and to insist, independently of the parties' probable efforts, on the presence of a specific witness. Such indeed is the fact in our law; for these rules are extremely few.

In general, then, there may be assumed to be no place in our system of evidence for rules of testimonial preference. A few do exist; but they exist as exceptions to a general principle.[2] Apart from these few definite exceptions, there is no general principle that the "best evidence" must be procured,[3] in the sense that a specific witness, presumably better qualified than other competent witnesses, must be produced or accounted for before the others can be used:

§ 1286. [1] Compare the influence of this spirit on other rules (post, §§ 1847, 2251).

[2] It might be thought that, of possible considerations leading to such exceptions, one might be the consideration that this preferred witness should be a person not likely to be known to one of the parties; and that another might be the consideration that the burden of showing such a witness unavailable should in fairness fall upon one party rather than the other; and these may be noticed as evidently having force in the maintenance of certain of the rules.

1834, STORY, J., in U. S. v. Gibert, 2 Sumner 19, 81 (refusing to require the calling of one who saw a fire, in preference to one who saw it set): "It appears to me that the whole basis of the argument is founded upon a mistake of the meaning of the rule of law as to the production of the best evidence. The rule is not applied to evidence of the same nature and degree; but it is applied to reject secondary and inferior evidence in proof of a fact which leaves evidence of a higher and superior nature behind in the possession or power of the party. Thus, if the party offers a copy of a paper in evidence, when he has the original in his possession, the copy will be rejected, for the original is evidence of a higher nature. . . . But the rule does not apply to several eye-witnesses testifying to the same facts or parts of the same facts, for the testimony is all in the same degree, and where there are several witnesses to the same facts, they may be proved by one only. All need not be produced. If they are not produced, the evidence may be less satisfactory or less conclusive, but still it is not incompetent."

1875, CAMPBELL, J., in Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49, 52 (repudiating any preference for a physician's testimony to an injured person's condition): "The term 'best evidence' is confined to cases where the law has divided testimony into primary and secondary; and there are no degrees of evidence, except where some document or other instrument exists the contents of which should be proved by an original rather than by other testimony which is open to the danger of inaccuracy. But where living witnesses are placed on the stand, one is in law on the same footing as another. If he can testify at all, he can testify in the presence as well as in the absence of those who may be supposed wiser or more reliable. There are some questions on which some witnesses cannot testify at all, for want of knowledge. No one can be allowed to prove what he has never learned, whether it be ordinary or scientific facts. But one who can testify under any circumstances upon the facts on which he is examined may do so as well where his superiors are to be found as where he knows as much as any other."

It remains to examine the few specific rules which appear in our law as deviations from this general principle.

Sub-topic A: PREFERENCE FOR AN ATTESTING WITNESS

§ 1287. History. The rule requiring the calling of a person who has attested a deed by his subscription comes down to us as the survival of a very early procedure. The connection by tradition is direct, though the original rule belongs to an epoch wholly alien in its ideas of proof and trial. Its history has been thus set forth:[1]

1898, Professor James Bradley Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 502: "[The rule] has a clear and very old origin. Such persons belonged to that very ancient class of [3] See ante, § 1174, for a further examination of the fallacies of this "best evidence" phrase.

§ 1287. [1] Substantially the same account had been given, in 1808, by Chief Justice Kent, in Fox v. Reil, 3 John. 477.

The function of the attesting documentary witness in the early Germanic system of proof is set forth in the following works: 1892, Brunner, Deutsche Rechtsgeschichte, I, 420–426; 1877, Ficker, Beiträge zur Urkundenlehre, I, §§ 61 ff.; 1887, Posse, Die Lehre von Privaturkunden, 70; 1889, Bresslau, Handbuch der Urkundenlehre, I, 489, 790–814; 1894, Giry, Manuel de diplomatique.

This feature of Germanic procedure was also of great importance, in the history of our parol evidence rule, in relation to the use of the seal; and it is therefore considered more particularly post, § 2426.

transaction or business witnesses, running far back into the old Germanic law, who were once the only sort of witnesses that could be compelled to come before a court. Their allowing themselves to be called in and set down as attesting witnesses was understood to be an assent in advance to such a compulsory summons. Proof by witnesses could not be made by those who merely happened casually to know the fact. However exact and full the knowledge of any person might be, he could not, in the old Germanic procedure, be called in court as a witness, unless he had been called at the time of the event as a preappointed witness. It was a part of such a system and in accordance with such a set of ideas that witnesses formally allowed their names to be written into deeds in large numbers. When jury trial, or rather proof by jury, as it originally was, came in, the old proof by witnesses was joined with it when the execution of the deed was denied; and the same process that summoned the twelve, summoned also these witnesses. The phrase of the precept to the sheriff was 'summone duodecim' (etc. etc.) 'cum aliis.' The presence of these witnesses was at first as necessary as that of the jury. Great delays and embarrassments attended such a requirement where the number of witnesses might be so great; the jury was cumbersome enough anyway. Accordingly, in 1318, the presence of the witnesses was made no longer absolutely necessary; they must still be summoned, but the case might go on without them. After another century and a half the process against the witness became no longer a necessity. It was not issued unless it were called for. After still another century, in 1562–3, process against all kinds of witnesses was allowed, requiring them to come in, not with the jury or as a part of the jury, but to testify before them in open court, and then the old procedure of summoning such witnesses with the jury seems to have died out; [but they must still be summoned as witnesses.] . . . As late as the early part of the eighteenth century it was doubtful whether a deed could be proved at all, if the attesting witnesses came in and denied it. Half a century later, Lord Mansfield, while reluctantly yielding to what he stigmatized as a captious objection that you must produce the witness, declared that 'It is a technical rule that the subscribing witness must be produced; and it cannot be dispensed with unless it appeared that his attendance could not be produced.'"

§ 1288. Reason and Policy of the Rule. This ancient rule thus continued to be enforced long after the disappearance of the primitive system of trial and the notions of proof in which it had its origin. By the end of the 1700s (ante, § 8) rules of Evidence began to be argued out and to be maintained or repudiated according as they seemed to possess or to lack a reason for existence. What was the reason that sufficed to maintain this rule as a part of the new and ratiocinative system of Evidence that began to be formed by the end of the 1700s?

Here is found considerable difference of opinion, — a difference natural enough in view of the fact that no sound reason could in truth be furnished for the strict and entire perpetuation of the rule. Under such circumstances, insufficient and inconsistent reasons were likely to be advanced by those who could not see the way to a radical departure from long tradition.

(1) A favorite reason was that the parties to the document had agreed to make the attester their witness to prove execution:[1]

1815, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in R. v. Harringworth, 4 M. & S. 350: "Inasmuch as they are the plighted witnesses, the knowledge they have upon the subject is essential, and if it can be procured must be forthcoming."

§ 1288. [1] Accord: 1796, Grose, J., in Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 265; 1826, McMurtry v. Frank, 4 T. B. Monr. Ky. 39.

1851, CRESSWELL, J., in Gerapulo v. Wieler, 10 C. B. 690, 696: "It is not on the ground that his is the best evidence; . . . but because he is the witness agreed upon between the parties."

1853, POLLOCK, C. B., in Whyman v. Garth, 8 Exch. 803: "The attesting witness must be called to prove the execution of a deed for this reason, that by an imperative rule of law the parties are supposed to have agreed 'inter se' that the deed shall not be given in evidence without his being called to depose to the circumstances attending its execution."

The difficulty about this reason is that no such agreement can be implied, particularly where attestation is required by law. Moreover, were such the reason, the rule would not apply between others than the parties to the document, — which is not the fact. Furthermore, this assumes that the opponent charged as obligor or maker is a party to the document, — which, if the execution is denied, is an assumption of the very point in issue:[2]

1807, SPENCER, J., in Hall v. Phelps, 2 John. 451: "The notion that the persons who attest an instrument are agreed upon to be the only witnesses to prove it, is not conformable to the truth of transactions of this kind, and, to speak with all possible delicacy, is an absurdity."

1895, BURKET, J., in Garratt v. Hanshue, 53 Oh. 482, 42 N. E. 256: "Another reason given for the rule is because the parties themselves, by selecting the witnesses, have mutually agreed to rest upon their testimony in proof of the execution of the instrument and of the circumstances which then took place, and because they know those facts which are probably unknown to others. This supposed mutual agreement is a pure fiction, and rarely, if ever, exists in fact. If in any case it has a real existence, and can be shown, it may perhaps be enforced; but the mere fiction is entitled to no weight and to no respect."

(2) Another reason, suggested almost as often, is that the opponent is entitled to the benefit of cross-examining the attesting-witness as to the circumstances of execution; or, put in another way, that the attester may not only know more than some other person observing the execution, but may be able to speak as to fraud, duress, or other matters of defence:

1779, ASHHURST, J., in Abbot v. Plumbe, 1 Doug. 216: "[The opponent] would be deprived of the benefit of cross-examining him concerning the time of the execution of the bond, which might be material."

1801, ALVANLEY, L. C. J., in Manners v. Postan, 4 Esp. 241: "The rule was founded on the principle that there should be an investigation from the subscribing witness of what took place at the time of the execution of the instrument."

1803, LEBLANC, J., in Call v. Dunning, 4 East 54: "A fact may be known to the subscribing witness not within the knowledge or recollection of the obligor, and he is entitled to avail himself of all the knowledge of the subscribing witness relative to the transaction."

The objections to this reason are numerous. First, it is inconsistent with the rule itself; for the rule applies even where fraud, duress, and time are not in issue, and even where the maker himself is competent as a witness. Again, the attester is in practice not usually a person who knows anything about the circumstances preceding the document's execution, or knows more than any other person who by being present would be a qualified witness. Finally, if the witness does possess special knowledge about some affirmative issue, the opponent is the proper person to call the witness, if he desires him. This reason for the rule, then, is no more capable of defence than the first.[3]

[2] Accord: 1834, Parker, J., in Farnsworth v. Briggs, 6 N. H. 561, 565.

(3) Has the rule, then, no justification in policy? It certainly has none, in its original broad form. But in most jurisdictions it has by statute been limited to documents required by law to be attested (post, § 1290); and in this shape it seems to be entirely justifiable. In the first place, the attestation is in such cases required by law as a special precaution against forgery;[4] thus the attestation itself must in any case be proved as an element in the validity of the document, and there seems to be no special hardship in obtaining the witness rather than in obtaining evidence of his signature. In the next place, such documents are, in most jurisdictions, wills of deceased persons and deeds of illiterate persons; for such documents, the maker himself being either deceased or not acquainted with writings, the attester's testimony is almost inevitably the most desirable and most trustworthy source of information as to the fact of execution; moreover, it is in such cases that the defences of fraud or undue influence are most likely to be made, and here also the attester's testimony is likely to be of use and ought to be obtained if possible. Still further, in these and all other cases where attestation is legally required, the situation is one in which by hypothesis the risk of a false document is serious, and the determination ought not to be left to the unsupported denial of the alleged maker (even assuming him competent and testifying). Finally, between the two parties, the burden of producing the witness or proving him unavailable ought fairly to be placed upon the party of whose case it is a part to prove the due execution and attestation. For these reasons, it seems unwise to dispense with the rule to any further extent.

§ 1289. Tenor of the Rule. The rule at common law may be thus stated:

Rule: (a) Where the execution of any document (b) purports to have been attested, (c) a party desiring to prove its execution, (d) against an opponent entitled in the state of the issues to dispute execution, (e) must, before using other evidence, (f) either produce the attester as a witness, (g) or show his testimony to be unavailable (h) and also authenticate his attestation, unless it is not feasible.

Such is the scope of the rule as it obtained in its orthodox and broadest form. This broadest form, however, was not adopted or maintained in all jurisdictions; and certain modifications, now more or less common, are to be noticed under the various parts.

[3] See some of these objections set forth in the following opinions: 1834, Parker, J., in Farnsworth v. Briggs, 6 N. H. 561, 565; 1895, Burket, J., in Garratt v. Hanshue, 53 Oh. 482, 42 N. E. 256. See, further, the reasons of the Common Law Procedure Commissioners, quoted post, § 1290, objecting to the scope of the rule as applicable to documents not required by law to be attested. The great critic of our Evidence system has also had his say against the rule: 1827, Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. VII, c. VI (Bowring's ed., vol. VII, p. 190).

[4] See the quotations post, § 1304.

(a) "Where the Execution of any Document"

§ 1290. Kinds of Documents covered by the Rule; at Common Law, all Documents were included; Statutory Modifications. At common law the rule was applied to all kinds of documents whatever, when purporting to bear an attestation, whether or not the document was sealed, whether or not it was in the nature of a specialty, and whether or not the attestation was required by law as an element of the document's validity.[1]

But by the beginning of the 1800s the unnecessary hardship and the mere technicality of the rule in this broadness of scope began to be recognized. It may be supposed, too, that the then increasing resort to handwriting-testimony (post, § 1993) made it easier to rely less upon attesting witnesses. In 1853, the objections to it found effective expression in the following passage in the Report of a Parliamentary Commission notable for the authoritative character of its members:

> 1853, Common Law Procedure Commission (Jervis, Martin, Walton, Bramwell, Willes, Cockburn), Second Report, 23: "We do not purpose to meddle with the preappointed evidence of execution required either by the Legislature or by persons creating powers; but we think it deserving of serious consideration whether this formal proof of the execution of written documents may not in other cases be dispensed with, where the execution is either admitted or capable of other proof. The principle on which the necessity for producing the attesting witness rests is that the witness is supposed to be conversant with all the circumstances under which the deed was executed. But it is notorious that in practice the attesting witness in the majority of instances knows nothing of the transaction; the instrument having been prepared, a clerk, a servant, or a neighbor is called in to attest it. Added to which, as parol testimony is not admitted to contradict or vary the terms of a written instrument, the occasions are few indeed where the evidence of the attesting witness goes further than to prove the execution of the writing. On the other hand, the necessity of calling the attesting witness, where the execution of the document is not the real matter in dispute and where there are no concomitant circumstances to be inquired into, is often attended with difficulty and expense, and sometimes leads to the defeat of justice. Cases have occurred where, in tracing a title, numerous witnesses from distant parts have been rendered necessary to prove the formal execution of deeds, though their execution was not really in dispute and the handwriting to all might have been proved by a single witness, and doubtless would have been admitted but for the difficulty which it was thought would by the existing rule be thrown in the way of the party alleging title. It also sometimes happens in the course of a cause that the adversary's case renders it necessary to give in evidence a document which it was not supposed would be required, or a document is produced by a witness on his subpœna which turns out, contrary to the expectation of the party requiring it, to be attested; the attesting witness is not at hand; yet the signature of the party might be easily proved, or the witness producing the instrument

§ 1290. [1] The American rulings are placed in note 4, infra; there was in England no question as to this proposition: 1810, Wardell v. Fermeur, 2 Camp. 282, 284 (refusing to distinguish between a lease-assignment and a post-obit bond; Ellenborough, L. C. J., said it did not depend on "the nature of the deed to be proved; it must depend upon the possibility of procuring the attendance of the attesting witness, not upon the testimony he is likely to give"); 1817, Higgs v. Dixon, 2 Stark. 180 (applied to a warrant to distrain); 1848, Streeter v. Bartlett, 5 C. B. 562 (applied to the proof in the Common Pleas of a debtor's schedule required by the Insolvent Debtor's Court to be attested, but not by the insolvency-statute).

may have heard him admit the execution; nevertheless the document cannot be received and the party requiring it loses his cause. When the genuineness of the document is not really in dispute, it is clear that the parties ought not to be limited to any particular witness to prove the execution. When the genuineness is in dispute, the party producing it will be sure to call the attesting witness, as the absence of the latter would throw the greatest discredit on the instrument. We therefore recommend that, except in cases where the evidence of attestation is requisite to the validity of the instrument, an attesting witness need not be called." [2]

Accordingly, in 1854, England restricted the rule thereafter to documents required by law to be attested, and this restriction has been adopted in Canada also.[3]

In the United States, the common-law doctrine was recognized to have the same scope as in England, except that by a few Courts it was confined to documents under seal. In many jurisdictions, however, a statutory restriction has been enacted similar to that of England;[4] under such restrictions,

[2] Compare the arguments set forth ante, § 1288.

[3] ENGLAND: 1854, St. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 26 ("It shall not be necessary to prove by the attesting witness any instrument to the validity of which attestation is not requisite; and such instrument may be proved by admission, or otherwise, as if there had been no attesting witness thereto"); 1854, St. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, § 526 (the attesting witness need not be called for shipping documents required by this Act to be attested); 1886, Re Rice, L. R. 32 Ch. D. 35 (appointment by attested deed, attestation not being requisite to validity; Cotton, L. J.: "In petitions in lunacy and in chancery, it has been usual since the Act to require proof by the attesting witness").

CANADA: the following statutes follow the wording of Eng. St. 1854, c. 125; Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act § 32; Alta. St. 1910, 2d sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, § 52 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 26, up to the semicolon); 1913, Nichols & S. Co. v. Skedanuk, Alta. S. C., 11 D. L. R. 199 (mortgage of land under Land Titles Act; whether it is a document required to be attested and thus the attesting witness must be called, not decided); B.C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 47; N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 19; 1877, c. 46, § 23; Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 91, § 20; N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 32; Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 51; P. E. I. St. 1889, c. 9, § 19; Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 20, § 32.

[4] Where no rulings or statutes are found, the Court would presumably apply the orthodox rule. In the following list, the statute in each jurisdiction is placed last, though in time the statute may have preceded some of the judicial rulings. In some jurisdictions (e.g. South Carolina) the statute does not go as far in restriction as the English statute; in others (e.g. Florida and California) the statute has in appearance gone farther:

Alabama: Code 1907, § 4004 (subscribing witness "must be produced in all cases", except as named); Code 1897, § 1797, Code 1907, § 4006 (quoted post, § 1291, n. 3); 1881, Ellerson v. State, 69 Ala. 1, 3 (applies to "every private writing"; here, a contract for cropping); 1896, Martin v. Mayer, 112 Ala. 620, 20 So. 963 (bill of sale); 1897, Jones v. State, 113 Ala. 95, 21 So. 229 (mortgage of personalty); 1899, Stamphill v. Bullen, 121 Ala. 250, 25 So. 928 (proof by joint maker, not sufficient under statute for co-maker's execution); 1904, Ballow v. Collins, 139 Ala. 543, 36 So. 712 (under Code § 1797, the maker's testimony suffices ordinarily; but where attestation is required for the validity of execution under Code § 2151, — here, an illiterate's mortgage, signed by mark, — the attestation also must be proved by the maker; as to whether an illiterate's mark is identifiable, see ante, § 693); 1915, Barksdale v. Bullington, 194 Ala. 624, 69 So. 891 (rule of Code § 4004 applied to a note and mortgage on "one black mare mule named Mat");

Arkansas: 1843, Brock v. Saxton, 5 Ark. 708 (applicable to all attested documents);

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1940 ("any writing" is provable either by one seeing the execution, or by evidence of the maker's hand, or by a subscribing witness; but this clearly was not intended to override C. C. P. § 1315, quoted post, § 1310); 1906, Castor v. Bernstein, 21 Cal. App. 703, 84 Pac. 244 ("The Code makes no distinction in rank between the various modes in which a writing may be proved"; here said of an attested release);

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 3608 (probate may be granted on the oath of the executor, or if he is interested, "of any other credible person having no interest under the will, that he verily believes the writing exhibited" to be the testator's last will);

Georgia: 1878, Davis v. Alston, 61 Ga. 227 (a written contract for the sale of land; assimilated to a deed, and tested by "the rule of law applicable to deeds", i.e. about preferred the rule comes into application chiefly for wills and for illiterates' deeds, and, in England, for powers of appointment. Moreover, even where the common-law rule obtains in strictness, the principle (post, § 1318), which dispenses with it for proof by copies of registered instruments, relieves nowawitnesses); 1895, Giannone v. Fleetwood, 93 Ga. 491, 21 S. E. 76 (applicable to all attested documents);

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2622 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125); 1913, Kaeo v. Ozaki, 21 Haw. 633 (assignment of a claim; witness need not be called);
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7964 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1940);
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 51 (whenever any instrument "not required by law to be attested by a subscribing witness" is offered in a civil cause, "and the same shall appear to have been so attested, and it shall become necessary to prove the execution of any such deed or other writing otherwise than as now provided by law, it shall not be necessary to prove the execution of the same by a subscribing witness to the exclusion of other evidence, but the execution of such instrument may be proved by secondary evidence without producing or accounting for the absence of the subscribing witness or witnesses");
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 126 (like Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 68);
Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 7 (attested document's execution may be proved as if not attested, except for proof of will);
Massachusetts: 1839, Valentine v. Piper, 22 Pick. 85 (rule applicable to "an instrument under seal and commonly requiring attesting witnesses"); Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 68 ("A signature to an attested instrument or writing, except a will, may be proved in the same manner as if it were not attested");
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12538 (a attested instrument may be proved without calling the subscribing witness, "except in cases of written instruments to the validity of which one or more subscribing witnesses are required by law");
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10588 (like C. C. P. § 1940);
New York: 1829, Henry v. Bishop, 2 Wend. 575 (does not apply "to instruments not under seal, or at least in regard to negotiable paper"); 1829, Jackson v. Rice, 3 Wend. 180, 183 (applicable to instruments under seal); C. P. A. 1920, § 331 (the subscribing witness need not be called, except for instruments to the validity of which a subscribing witness is necessary);
North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 370 (special rule provided for proving a copy of a lost probated will); § 1782 ("It is not necessary to prove by the attesting witness instruments to the validity of which the attestation is not requisite, and such instruments may be proved by admission or otherwise as if there had been no attesting witness thereto");
North Dakota: 1897, Brynjolfson v. Elev. Co., 6 N. D. 450, 71 N. W. 555 (holding the rule applicable to a chattel mortgage required to be attested under Rev. Code 1895, § 4738; but not clearly declaring how far R. C. §§ 3579, 3581, 3582, providing for proof before a recorder of deeds, abrogate the common-law doctrine); Comp. L. 1913, § 5890 ("In proving any written instrument or contract to which there is a subscribing witness, or to which there are two or more subscribing witnesses, it shall not be necessary to call said witness or any one of two or more of said subscribing witnesses; but the instrument or contract may be proved, except for purposes of filing or recording the same, by the same evidence by which an instrument or contract to which there is no subscribing witness may be proved"); 1901, McManus v. Commow, 10 N. D. 340, 87 N. W. 9 (applying § 3888*a*, Rev. Code 1899);
Ohio: 1877, Warner v. R. Co., 31 Oh. St. 265, 270 (applied to a contract);
Oregon: 1899, Hannan v. Greenfield, 36 Or. 97, 58 Pac. 888 (rule applied to agency-contract); Laws 1920, § 784 (common-law rule maintained);
Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 324 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1940); 1917, Antillon v. Barcelon, 37 P. I. 148 (documents provable by notarial certificate under the Spanish system; the witnesses need not be called);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1455 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1940); 1915, San Juan Fruit Co. v. Carrillo, 8 P. R. Fed. 176, 179 (notarial deed not signed by grantor or grantee, but by a witness; the witness required to be called or accounted for); 1906, People v. Roman, 10 P. R. 532 (bill of sale of horse, proved by one who saw it executed);
Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 46 (calling not required for "any instrument to the validity of which attestation is not requisite"; proof may be made "as if there had been no attesting witness thereto");
South Carolina: 1804, Madden v. Burris, 1 Brev. 387 (St. 1802, applied to an indorsement on a note); 1806, Gervais v. Baird, 2 Brev. 37 (same applied to signature by mark); 1807, Paisley v. Snipes, 2 Brev. 200 (St. 1802; the maker's signature suffices, even though a mark, if distinguishable); 1810, Shiver v. Johnson, 2 Brev. 397 (maker's peculiarity of mark, sufficient for St. 1802); 1825, Townsend v. Covington, 3 McC. 219 (St. 1802 does not apply to a written agreement for sale of land not under seal); 1827, Edgar v. Brown, 4 McC. 91 (bond executed in another State; St. 1802 applied); 1840, Blackman v. Stogner, Cheves Eq. 175 (St. 1802 applied in Chancery; days in most instances from its harshness. Finally, the practice of using attesters having been almost universally abandoned where not prescribed by law, the rule of Evidence has fallen into desuetude, for documents not thus requiring attestation, even in the jurisdictions which have not legislated.

In order to apprehend the precise scope of the statutory rule, it is therefore in most jurisdictions necessary to note what documents are required by law to be attested as an element of their validity; but this is a matter of substantive law, not within the present purview. From such statutes, however, three special kinds of statutes should be distinguished:

(1) A statute (as in Pennsylvania) which prescribes merely that a document shall be "proved" by (any) two or more witnesses involves a rule of Quantity (dealt with post, §§ 2048, 2049), and not a rule of Preference; i.e. any two or more competent witnesses suffice, and there is therefore no preference for attesting witnesses above others.[5]

(2) A statute providing that documents presented for registration must be "proved" to the registrar by the maker's acknowledgment or the statement of an attesting witness does not in itself concern the mode of proof before suit); 1841, Trammell v. Roberts, 1 McM. 305 (here the defendant made oath, and the exemption of St. 1802 did not apply); 1902, Swancey v. Parrish, 62 S. C 240, 40 S. E. 554, semble (the Court inclined to hold the rule not applicable to documents not requiring attestation; here, a chattel mortgage); St. 1731, C. C. P. 1922, §§ 716, 717 (deeds, bonds, etc., attested as proved before a mayor, governor, or notary of a domestic or foreign State, receivable "as if the witnesses to such deeds were produced and proved the same 'viva voce'"; with limitation as to claims against residents of this State, conditioned on "such foreign country" according similar treatment); St. 1802, C. C. P. 1922, §§ 701, 702 ("The absence of a witness to a bond or note" shall not be cause for postponement, "but the signature to such bond or note may be proved by other testimony", unless the opponent expressly disputes its genuineness); 1921, Matheson v. Caribo, — S. C. —, 109 S. E. 102 (rule not held applicable to a note); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2724 ("The execution of witnessed instruments, except wills, may be proven in the same manner as the execution of unwitnessed instruments"); 1905, Mississippi L. & C. Co. v. Kelly, 19 S. D. 577, 104 N. W. 265 (statute applied to a witnessed note; the statutes for proof to a recording officer held not applicable); Tennessee: 1834, Suggett v. Kitchell, 6 Yerg. 425, 428 (will of personalty; subscribing witnesses, or at least more than one, need not be called); 1850, Moore v. Steele, 10 Humph. 562, 564, semble (subscribing witnesses to a will of personalty not preferred); 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 101 (where there are in fact subscribing witnesses to a will of personalty, the rules of preferred witnesses are to be applied); St. 1789, c. 23, § 1, Shannon's Code 1916, § 3904 ("written wills with witnesses thereto", if not contested, are required to be proved by "at least one of the subscribing witnesses, if living"; if contested, every will, "written or nuncupative", by "all the living witnesses, if to be found, and by such other persons as may be produced to support it");

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7110 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1940);
Virginia: 1794, Turner v. Strip, 1 Wash. 319, 322 (proof of deed need not be by subscribing witness, under St. 1748);
Wisconsin: 1846, Carrington v. Eastman, 1 Pinney 650, 656 (rule applied to a receipt);
Wyoming: 1907, Bosweli v. First National Bank, 16 Wyo. 161, 92 Pac. 624 (power of attorney; not decided).

[5] 1784, Hight v. Wilson, 1 Dall. 94 (it is not necessary "that the proof of the will should be made by those who subscribed as witnesses", under the Act of 1705 requiring wills to be "proved by two or more credible witnesses, upon their solemn affirmation, or by other legal proof"); 1788, Lewis v. Maris, 1 Dall. 278, 288, semble (same); 1868, Carson's Appeal, 59 Pa. 493, 496 (same; under St. 1833).

See also post, § 1304.

A statute, however, providing for both "proving" and attesting does involve also a rule of preference for the attesters: 1815, Clarke v. Bartlett, 4 Bibb 201 (statute requiring manumissions to be "attested and proved by two witnesses"; held, that the two proving it must be the two attesting it).

a judicial tribunal, but only the conditions precedent to lawful registration, and does not make attestation a necessary element of validity so as to affect the application of the present rule.[6]

These statutes sometimes provide that the "proof" by attesting witness is to be made before a judge, whose certificate then suffices to entitle the deed to registration; but the proceeding is nevertheless not a judiciary one, in that it does not purport to establish the fact of execution, but merely to entitle the deed to registration.[7]

(3) The rule for proof of nuncupative wills by persons present involves both a rule of Preference and a rule of Quantity; but is better examined under the latter head (post, § 2050).

(4) Statutes sometimes provide for acceptance of a probate judgment, of ancient date or of another jurisdiction, based on the testimony of one attesting witness only, or of none. These statutes generally involve the principle of § 1304, post, and are there considered.

§ 1291. Documents Incidentally or "Collaterally" in Issue. Where the document whose execution is to be proved is not a document necessarily involved in the pleading, but is a minor document coming incidentally into issue in the course of the details of proof, there is much reason in dispensing with the rule. In the first place, the document is not of such importance as to call for the rigorous precaution of the rule; and secondly, it is not possible for the proponent to anticipate every minor turn in the course of the proof, and he may thus without fault be taken by surprise and be unprepared with the attester and yet otherwise able to make sufficient proof:

1813, BRACKENRIDGE, J., in Heckert v. Haine, 6 Binn. 16, 20 (here the plaintiff wished to prove the receipt of money from A, by the defendant's intestate for the use of the plaintiff, the payor A having taken an attested receipt): "The receipt is a matter collateral to his case and not directly in issue. . . . [The witness] could not legally be supposed to be in his keeping, as a witness called by a party to subscribe a writing is supposed to be. . . . In the case of a third person, even where it is the foundation of a suit and comes in collaterally, I do not see the reason. . . . I would then restrain the rule to a case where the execution of a writing is directly in issue, unless notice shall have been given that it was material to have this proof. . . . Coming in collaterally, it would be taking a party by surprise to render it necessary to produce the subscribing witness."

1845, GILCHRIST, J., in Rand v. Dodge, 17 N. H. 343, 357: "When one not a party or privy to the contract, nor claiming any benefit, or exemption from the fulfilment of its exigencies or the violation of its terms, has occasion for a collateral purpose to show that such a contract existed, . . . when the existence of the writing is of no consequence or significance but as a part of the 'res gestæ' which a stranger seeks to prove and to characterize with reference to his own rights, then the reason of the rule entirely fails and the rule itself has no application."

[6] For the exemption from the rule in the case of proof by copies of a registered deed, see post, § 1318.

Compare the following: 1909, Eadie v. Chambers, 9th C. C. A., 172 Fed. 73 (whether attestation is requisite to validity between the parties).

[7] Examples of the statutes are as follows: Vt. Gen. L. 1917, §§ 2751, 2752 (proving signature, for record, of deed of a grantor absconding or dying without making acknowledgment of deed, or refusing to make acknowledgment).

This limitation to the rule was never recognized in England;[1] but in the United States it has found frequent judicial support; accordingly, in many jurisdictions the rule is not applied in such cases.[2] The precise terms of this limitation are not uniformly defined, and are difficult to define; the trial judge's determination should be allowed to control. The term "collateral", often used, is elusive and unsatisfactory; and it is sometimes mistakenly employed to designate the principle of certain other cases (post, § 1293), where the rule is also not applied.

(b) "Purports to have been attested"

§ 1292. Who is an Attesting Witness. The notion of an attesting or subscribing witness is that of a person who, at the request or with the consent of the maker, places his name on the document for the purpose of making

§ 1291. [1] 1791, Breton v. Cope, Peake 30 (rule applied to a deed cancelled and offered only as containing an admission); 1801, Manners v. Postan, 4 Esp. 239 (action for penalties for usury; in proving the usury, an attested warrant of attorney, held subject to the rule).

[2] Accord: Alabama: Code 1907, § 4004, par. 4; 1881, Ellerson v. State, 69 Ala. 1, 3 (indictment for removing personal property subject to lien; witness to contract creating lien required to be called); 1892, Steiner v. Trainum, 98 Ala. 315, 318, 13 So. 365 (trover for a horse; note given at the sale; exempted); 1892, Lavrette v. Holcombe, 98 Ala. 503, 510 (same; affidavit); Georgia: 1890, Hudson v. Puett, 86 Ga. 341, 12 S. E. 640 (claim for rent; to show reasonable value, a contract of lease of same property to another, held not collateral); 1893, Giannone v. Fleetwood, 93 Ga. 491, 493, 21 S. E. 76 (execution on property claimed under mortgage; bill of sale used to rebut evidence of fraud, held not collateral); 1895, McVicker v. Conkle, 93 Ga. 584, 595, 24 S. E. 23 (rule not applicable to document offered only as standard for comparison of hands); 1897, Summerour v. Felker, 102 Ga. 254, 29 S. E. 448 (action for rent; note given for the rent, not collateral); Rev. C. 1910, § 5833 (production not necessary if paper is "only incidentally or collaterally material to the case"); Kentucky: 1816, Brashear v. Burton, 4 Bibb 442 (title to personalty; bill of sale incidentally in chain of title; rule not enforced); Maine: 1830, Drew v. Wadleigh, 7 Greenl. 94 (rule not applied to document used to discredit a witness as containing an inconsistent statement); 1841, Ayers v. Hewitt, 1 Appl. 281, 285 (if it is a document "wholly 'inter alias', under whom neither party can claim to deduce any right, title, or interest to himself", the rule does not apply; as here, to a bill of sale corroborating a witness' testimony to a third person's insolvency); 1845, Pullen v. Hutchinson, 12 Shepl. 249, 253 (the preceding case approved; here the rule was held applicable to a bill of sale to the defendant affecting his claim); Michigan: 1880, Hess v. Griggs, 43 Mich. 397, 399, 5 N. W. 427 (plaintiff in replevin, resting on possession under a contract with a third person by the defendant; rule applied); New Hampshire: 1845, Rand v. Dodge, 17 N. H. 343, 357 (rule not applied to a contract making G. the agent of an ancestor or to do acts of prescriptive possession; see quotation supra); Pennsylvania: 1813, Heckert v. Haine, 6 Binn. 16, 20 (see quotation supra); Tennessee: 1874, Demombreun v. Walker, 4 Baxt. 199 (to rebut a contention that the will under which the plaintiff claimed was procured by undue influence, the plaintiffs offered a former will of a similar tenor; held, that the rule did not apply, where a paper "comes incidentally in question", as here); 1874, Henly v. Hemming, 7 Baxt. 524 (rule not applicable to a bill of sale of goods sued for in replevin); Vermont: 1849, Curtis v. Belknap, 21 Vt. 433 (the plaintiff was hired by T. to perform work, but T. abandoned the contract; the defendant then hired the plaintiff to complete the work at the same prices: held, the rule did not apply to the writing between T. and the plaintiff, which "was only incidentally in question", and of which "the parties to his contract had never constituted the subscribing witness . . . the exclusive witness of their contract").

Contra: 1826, Roberts v. Tennell, 3 T. B. Monr. 247, 250; 1831, Goodall v. Goodall, 5 J. J. M. 596, 598; 1871, Kalmes v. Gerrish, 7 Nev. 31, 34.

Undecided: 1857, Com. v. Castles, 9 Gray 121 ("collaterally or incidentally"; left undecided).

Distinguish the cases cited post, § 1293.

thereby an implied [1] or expressed statement that the document was then known by him to have been executed by the purporting maker.[2]

(1) In the first place, then, a person who, though he saw the execution, and though his name is on the document, did not write it himself, is not an attesting witness, because he did not in fact make the attestation.[3]

(2) For the same reason, a fictitious person whose name is signed is not an attesting witness.[4]

(3) Again, an officer, whose signature is required by law or by rule of Court to give validity to a document or to enable it to be filed for a specific purpose, is an attesting witness,[5] though he signs for a different purpose; and for the same reason an officer authorized to take an acknowledgment and to give a certificate thereof admissible as evidence under the Hearsay exception (post, §§ 1676, 1682) would be an attesting witness.[6]

§ 1292. [1] A clause expressly using words of attestation is unnecessary, if the real purpose of signing was to attest: 1848, Chaplain v. Briscoe, 11 Sm. & M. 372, 379, 382 (persons signing in the usual place, but not named as witness, required to be called); and cases cited post § 1511.

The placing of the signatures of the alleged witnesses before the attestation clause, and of the testator's after it, is not fatal: 1922, Haber's Will, Surr. Ct., 192 N. Y. Suppl. 616.

[2] Distinguish the question of substantive law whether the attestation, as an element in the validity of a document required to be attested, suffices under that substantive law. See for examples: 1835, Doe v. Burdett, 4 A. & E. 1 (under what circumstances a general attestation is sufficient); 1855, Clay v. Holbert, 14 Tex. 189, 200.

Whether a person signing may under the "parol evidence" rule show that his intention was merely to attest and not to be an obligor is a different question (post, § 2419).

Whether the witness is competent or credible by the substantive law, so as to affect the validity of the attestation, is also a different question (post, § 1510).

[3] 1843, Cussons v. Skinner, 11 M. & W. 161, 168 (the attesting witness' name was written by another person in pencil; held, not necessary to call him; Abinger, L. C. B.: "It is not the mere presence of a person at the time of the execution of an instrument that makes him an attesting witness; for if five hundred persons were, if they do not sign as attesting witnesses, you are not bound to call one of them"); 1816, Jackson v. Lewis, 13 Johns. N. Y. 504 (signature of a second witness by the first, treated as if attested by one only); 1814, Allen v. Martin, 1 Law Repos. N. C. 373 (the maker had himself written the witness' name; rule not applicable).

The primitive notion of an attestation was quite otherwise, under the Germanic system of proof, by which a person might write the names of any number of his absent friends to his deed and get their consent afterwards; "a witness to a deed, according to the popular conception, was not necessarily one who had seen it executed, but one who was willing to give it credit by his name"; Thayer, Preliminary Treatics on Evidence, 98, citing instances; 1543, Rolfe v. Hampden, Dyer 53 b; and see another instance, since published, in the Selden Society's Select Civil Pleas, I, No. 76; see also the accounts in the German writers cited ante, § 1287, particularly Bresslau, pp. 536–538, 548, 790–814.

[4] 1791, Fasset v. Brown, Peake 23; 1805, Burrowes v. Lock, 10 Ves. Jr. 470, 474.

[5] Contra: 1844, Bailey v. Bidwell, 13 M. & W. 73 (an attorney attesting a petition in the Bankruptcy Court, where such attestation was required for filing; not necessary to be called); Ala. Code 1907, § 4004, par. 2 ("official bonds required to be approved or tested by a particular functionary"). Accord: 1916, Bybee's Estate, 179 Ia. 1089, 160 N. W. 400 (notary public).

[6] Accord: 1902, Hayes v. Banks, 132 Ala. 354, 31 So. 464, semble (notary's defective certificate of acknowledgment); 1903, Kelly v. Moore, 22 D. C. App. 9 (collecting cases); 1920, Tilton v. Daniels, 79 N. H. 368, 109 Atl. 145 (justice of the peace certifying to the execution of two witnesses' signatures; here a third witness was necessary, and the justice was deemed a witness; the opinion cites other precedents). Contra: Ala. Code 1907, § 4004, par. 6 (subscribing witness need not be produced "if the document is self-proving or properly acknowledged"); 1922, McDonough's Estate, Sup. App. Div., 193 N. Y. Suppl. 734 (notary). Undecided: 1907, Gump v. Gowans, 226 Ill. 635, 80 N. E. 1086 (notary).

In Lavretta v. Holcombe, 98 Ala. 503, 510, 12 So. 789 (affidavit acknowledged before a notary; held not an attesting witness requiring preference, though he might be to give validity

(4) A person who, though he sees the execution, does not then sign, is not an attesting witness;[7] for the object of attestation is to secure the written record of his knowledge before any doubt can arise as to its correctness.

(5) A person who attests, but is at the time incompetent to act as attesting witness, under the substantive law prescribing the qualities of a valid attestation, is without the scope of the rule and need not be called.[8] Whether his attestation may be used, by proving the signature, as evidence of execution, is another question (post, § 1510). Also the questions whether a subsequently-arising incompetency to testify exempts from production (post, § 1316) or invalidates the will (post, § 1510), involve other principles.

In all the preceding instances the rule of calling the witness does not apply, and other evidence may be used; although, the attestation being a nullity, the document may, under substantive law requiring it to be attested, be after all excluded as invalid.

(6) An illiterate person may be an attesting witness, subscribing by mark; but the proof of the mark may raise a difficulty (ante, § 693, n. 2).

(c) ". A party desiring to prove its execution"

§ 1293. Rule applies only in proving Execution, not in using the Document for other Purposes. The object of attestation is to provide a witness who shall be able to testify to the execution of the document by the person making it, i.e. to authenticate its genuineness. Hence, so far as the party is engaged in proving something about the document other than its mere execution — e.g. its contents, its delivery, or the like — the attesting witness is not a preferred witness.[1] For this reason, the rule does not apply where a to a document), the distinction between the rule of substantive law and the rule of evidence seems unsound; if the official as an attester gives validity to the will, the rule of evidence applies to him, and conversely.

For the rule of substantive law as to the sufficiency, for purposes of attestation, of a defective or unauthorized certificate of acknowledgment, see Keely v. Moore, 196 U. S. 38, 25 Sup. 169 (1904), collecting the cases.

[7] Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1935 ("A subscribing witness is one who sees a writing executed or hears it acknowledged, and at the request of the party thereupon signs his name"); Ky. 1914, McNamara v. Coughlin, 159 Ky. 810, 169 S. W. 555 (a witness to handwriting of a holographic will); Minn. 1915, Reid's Estate, Williams v. Reid, 130 Minn. 256, 153 N. W. 324 (under Gen. St. 1913, § 7240, as to a declaration of parentage of an illegitimate child, made "in writing and before a competent attesting witness", a person who merely sees the act of signing the document is not an attesting witness); N. Y. 1829, Henry v. Bishop, 2 Wend. 575, 577 (one who saw the execution but signed afterwards, not an attesting witness).

By the law of Georgia, an interpreter communicating the testator's wishes to the scrivener "must be sworn on the motion for probate": Rev. C. 1910, § 3845.

[8] 1848, Doe v. Twigg, 5 U. C. Q. B. 167, 170 ("the attestation . . . is a mere nullity", and the maker's execution is to be proved otherwise); 1853, Packard v. Dunsmore, 11 Cush. 283, 285 (may be proved "as if there had been no attesting witness").

The following case is peculiar, but seems sound; 1849, Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324, 346 (a negro, incompetent as a witness, was the interpreter making a will, and was required to be called; perhaps under the statute cited supra, n. 7).

§ 1293. [1] Besides the following cases, the authorities to the same effect, for proof of execution in general, cited post, § 2132, would be applicable; Ky. 1837, Hancock v. Byrne, 5 Dana Ky. 513 (identifying a note; on the theory that the writing itself is better than a witness, calling the witness held not necessary); Mass. 1879, Skinner v. Brigham, 126 Mass. 132 (trover for chattels obtained from the plaintiff in exchange for an invalid deed by third persons purporting to convey certain deed is used to show color of title or extent of claim by one claiming title through adverse possession (post, § 1778); for the claimant does not rest upon the authenticity of the deed, but upon its contents as embodying the extent of his claim.[1] Whether the rule should apply to one who desires to disprove the genuineness of a document is a difficult question;[2] but it would seem that, since by hypothesis the party alleging its execution must already have been excused or exempted from producing the witness, the party denying should not be put in a less favorable position, and the rule should not apply.

(d) "Against an opponent entitled in the state of the issues to dispute execution"

§ 1294. Execution not Disputable (1) because of Estoppel or other rule of Substantive Law. Where the opponent by his prior conduct is estopped from denying execution, the execution cannot be put in issue by him, and the party offering the document need not in any manner evidence its execution (post, § 2132). Since the production of the attesting witness is required solely for the purpose of evidencing execution, the rule of production therefore does not apply.[1] For the same reason, whenever a rule of substantive law forbids the execution to be denied, the rule does not apply; and this seems to include the case of a document whose execution the opponent was officially bound to secure and can therefore not now deny.[2]

§ 1295. Execution not Disputable (2) because of the rule of Pleading. So far as any rule of pleading requires that the execution of a document named in the declaration must be expressly traversed, the failure to plead in denial must, under such a rule, be equivalent to a confession of the allegation of exeland; witnesses not required, because the delivery of a paper, not the signing of a deed was to be proved); Mich. 1873, Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500, 502 (not required in proving contents); 1875, Raynor v. Norton, 31 Mich. 210, 213 (same); Mo. 1830, Foster v. Wallace, 2 Mo. 231 (that a co-signer of a bond had executed merely as surety for the other; production not required); Pa. 1813, Heckert v. Haine, 6 Binn. 16, 17 (to prove a written receipt the witness must be called, but not to prove the fact of payment); 1824, Babb v. Clemson, 10 S. & R. 419, 426 (same, for a bill of sale); 1826, Wishart v. Downey, 15 S. & R. 77, 79 (same, for a receipt); Vt. 1836, Harding v. Craigie, 8 Vt. 501, 508 (a note signed by three persons, with S. as witness; to prove that S. in fact witnessed only one signature, and that the others were added after attestation, S. need not be called).

[1] 1854, Jordan v. Faircloth, 13 Ga. 544 (not applicable to one calling the maker to deny the genuineness of a deed in his name); 1856, Stamper v. Griffin, 20 Ga. 312, 320 (claim of adverse possession under a bond in the name of Z., but admitted to have been forged; claimant must call witness, "whether the object be to prove that a writing is genuine or that it is spurious", since he "is the person who knows better than all others that the writing is genuine, if it is genuine, and spurious, if it is spurious"); 1859, Wells v. Walker, 27 Ga. 450, 452 (deed read by defendant to jury without producing witnesses; plaintiff may then, to deny execution, call a witness other than the subscribing ones; on the principle that he should be no worse off than if defendant had not been exempted from calling them).

§ 1294. [1] 1849, Perry v. Lawless, 5 U. C. Q. B. 514 (representations as to genuineness of a note, made before the plaintiff's purchase).

[2] 1822, Scott v. Waithman, 3 Stark. 168 (action against a sheriff for taking insufficient sureties on a replevin bond; the sheriff's duty being to take the bond, the due execution was taken as admitted by him); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5833 (rule not applicable to "office bonds required by law to be approved or tested by a particular functionary").

cution in the declaration, and thus the execution is not in issue on the trial, and the present rule does not apply. Accordingly, at common law, so far as a plea of 'non est factum', or other form of specific traverse distinct from the general issue, was required for putting the execution into issue, and of course so far as the opponent failed to plead the general issue or any specific traverse, the rule for calling the attesting witness did not apply,[1] though no liberality was shown in interpreting this principle.[2]

In more recent times, and since the improvement of common-law pleading, the place of this principle has generally been taken by statutory enactments expressly providing that the opponent's failure to put in issue a document whose execution is alleged in the opponent's pleading shall be taken as an admission of its execution, and the execution cannot be denied. These statutes provide for the joining of issue sometimes merely in the pleading, sometimes additionally by affidavit; but the principle and the effect are practically the same in all. These statutes, and the decisions interpreting them, involve a rule of pleading, and are therefore without the present purview.[3]

§ 1296. Execution not Disputable (3) because of Judicial Admission. For the purposes of proof, a judicial admission of the opponent — i.e. an express agreement for the purposes of the trial — has the same effect as a failure to plead in denial; it is a waiver of proof on the subject (post, § 2588). Hence when a document's execution is judicially admitted, the present rule does not apply.[1] Such judicial admissions, however, must be distinguished from

§ 1295. [1] 1818, Cooke v. Tanswell, 8 Taunt. 450 (Gibbs, C. J.: "In cases where 'non est factum' is not pleaded, . . . I never yet heard it contended that it was necessary to call the subscribing witness").

[2] 1811, Williams v. Sills, 2 Camp. 519 (Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "The defendant by refraining from the plea of 'non est factum' has only admitted so much of the deed as is expanded upon the record; and if the plaintiff would avail himself of any other part of the deed, he must prove it by the attesting witness in the common way"); 1838, Gillett v. Abbott, 7 A. & E. 783 (a plea admitting the execution of a deed of indemnity sued on, the deed's recital setting out in part a deed of trust, does not dispense with the witness to the deed of trust); 1841, Jackson v. Bowley, Car. & M. 97 (on an issue of 'plene administravit', in an action against an executor, the witness to a deed to the testator must be called).

[3] They are further noticed under Judicial Admissions (post, § 2594).

The curious result may occur, where such a statute exists, and where the limitation about documents incidentally in issue (ante, § 1290) does not exist, that the essential documents in the case need not be authenticated at all, while minor documents must be proved according to the rigor of the present rule; e.g. 1826, Roberts v. Tennell, 3 T. B. Monr. 247, 250.

Distinguish the following: 1878, Holden v. Jenkins, 125 Mass. 446 (failure to deny a signature, under a statute requiring a specific denial, does not relieve from proof of the attesting witness' signature for the purpose of availing of a longer statutory bar for attested documents; but "might relieve" from calling the witness to prove the maker's signature).

§ 1296. [1] 1800, Laing v. Kaine, 2 B. & P. 85 (warrant of attorney; since "it appeared that the defendant did not merely acknowledge the instrument, but agreed [for the purpose of legal proceedings] that the plaintiff should act upon it as if the witness himself had been produced", the calling was not required); 1839, Bringloe v. Goodson, 8 Scott 71, 83, per Tindal, C. J.; 1885, Coleman v. State, 79 Ala. 49; 1890, Richmond, etc. R. Co. v. Jones, 92 Ala. 226, 9 So. 276; 1893, Hawkins v. Ross, 100 Ala. 459, 464, 14 So. 278; 1881, Jones v. Henry, 84 N. C. 320, 323; 1834, Grady v. Sharron, 6 Yerg. Tenn. 320, 321, 324 (admission by counsel exempts from calling witnesses).

Contra, but clearly wrong: 1844, Hylton v. Hylton, 1 Gratt. Va. 161, 165 (admission, during trial, of the due execution of a will, not sufficient to dispense with the testimony required by law).

The following statute goes upon this principle: Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 192, § 2 (if a will-probate is "assented to in writing" by all heirs, etc., "it may be allowed without testimony").

ordinary or extra-judicial admissions, with which they have nothing in common except the name. The use of the latter sort in the present connection raises a different question (post, § 1300).

§ 1297. Execution not Disputable (4) because of Opponent's Claim under the Same Instrument. Where the opponent's claim, as expressly set forth in the pleadings or as developed in the course of proof, predicates the genuineness of the very document which the proponent now desires to prove, it is clear that the former is in precisely the same situation as if he had by pleading or by judicial admission conceded the document's execution. It is obviously inconsistent for him to assert its execution as an element of his present claim or defence, in one part of the proceedings, but in another part in effect to deny the execution by putting the proponent upon proof of it. So long as the opponent maintains the former attitude, he must relinquish the latter one; so long as the document is genuine for his purposes, it is also (so far as he is concerned) genuine for the proponent's purposes. The execution thus not being disputable, the rule requiring the attesting witness to prove it does not apply.

This has long been judicially conceded;[1] although the precise terms defin-§ 1297. [1] ENGLAND: 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 98 (a claim by the opponent under a deed A reciting a deed B exempts from proof of deed B); 1818, Knight v. Martin, Gow 26 (assignor against assignee of a lease; the defendant's possession of the instrument, claiming under it, dispenses with the witness); 1819, Gorton v. Dyson, 1 B. & B. 219, 221 (action against executors; their claim under the will, held to dispense with calling the witnesses); 1821, Orr v. Morice, 3 B. & B. 139; 6 Moore 347 (action for use and occupation against assignees in bankruptcy; the production by the defendants of the assignment, together with their occupation of the premises, held a "claim of beneficial interest", and the witness dispensed with); 1826, Doe v. Deakin, 3 C. & P. 402; 1826, Burnett v. Lynch, 8 D. & R. 368, 375, 5 B. & C. 589, 600, 604 (action on the covenants of a lease, by the lessee against the assignee, who had himself assigned to a third person; per Bayley, J., "if a party has taken under a deed all the interest which the deed is calculated to give", he cannot dispute execution); 1826, Doe v. Hemming, 9 D. & R. 15 (lease to a defendant by an ancestor of the plaintiff in ejectment; the plaintiff had obtained possession of the document and refused to produce or show it until the trial; no proof of execution required, because the plaintiffs "intended to derive a benefit from the possession of the lease, and their conduct . . . was such as clearly admitted its validity"); 1831, Bradshaw v. Bennett, 1 Moo. & Rob. 143, 5 C. & P. 48 (action to get back a deposit on a sale rescinded; the rule dispensed with as to the agreement of sale, the defendant being one "taking an interest" under it); 1835, Doe v. Wilkins, 4 A. & E. 86 (ejectment, the defendant claimed under a deed which the plaintiff offered; extrinsic evidence to show this claim held proper, and proof of execution dispensed with); 1835, Carr v. Burdiss, 1 C. M. & R. 782, 784 (trover for goods taken under a fraudulent assignment; the defendants pleaded the assignment; the plaintiff not required to call the witness to prove it, even though he was impeaching it as fraudulent; "the object which the parties have in calling for its production" is immaterial); 1836, Doe v. Wainwright, 1 Nev. & P. 8, 12 (ejectment, defendant possessing and claiming under a deed offered by the plaintiff; witness dispensable); 1839, Bringloe v. Goodson, 8 Scott 71, 83 (will; calling dispensed "where the will is recited in a deed under the seal of the party and some advantage is taken by him under it"); 1843, Bell v. Chaytor, 1 C. & K. 162 (action on a contract to employ; the defendant's claim that the contract was not broken held to dispense with the witness); 1810, Pearce v. Hooper, 3 Taunt. 60 (cited post, § 1298, n. 2).

CANADA: 1851, Chisholm v. Sheldon, 2 Grant U. C. 178 (conveyance produced by an opponent claiming an interest thereunder; no proof of execution necessary).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1827, Rhoades v. Selin, 4 Wash. C. C. 715, 719 (admissible without authentication, if the opponent producing is "a party to it or claims a beneficial interest under it"); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1941 (quoted post, § 1302); Ga. 1860, Herring v. Rogers, 30 Ga. 615, 617 (production by opponent, and claim under it, sufficient); Rev. C. 1910, § 5832 ("The production of the paper by ing the situation are not uniformly expressed, and the application of the principle to particular states of facts is open to more or less difference of opinion.

§ 1298. Same: Execution Disputable, and Rule Applicable, where the Opponent merely Produces the Instrument, without Claiming under it. Towards the end of the 1700s a doctrine was started that, where the document to be proved was in possession of the opponent, and was produced by him on notice, the proponent need not prove its execution, and therefore, of course, need not call the attester.[1] This singular doctrine was placed, in the first ruling, on the ground that the proponent would have been ignorant of the attester's name, and therefore the attester was in effect unavailable (on the principle of § 1314, post). But in later rulings it seems to have been supported rather on a confused notion of its identity with the principle just considered (in § 1297), i.e. the opponent's claim under the document. This latter ground is certainly unsound; for there is an essential difference between the opponent's mere custody of the document and his making claim under it; the former can never in itself be equivalent to a judicial admission of genuineness. The earlier reason is scarcely more tenable. The proponent's ignorance of the names might have been remedied by a bill for discovery, or by a motion for a continuance after learning the names on production; under modern statutes, the names could always be learned by demanding inspection before trial. Moreover, it is difficult to see why, even if the ignorance was irremediable, the proponent should be excused from all proof of execution; he might be excused from calling the attesters, but not from making some other proof of execution; there is a hiatus here, which indicates that this earlier reason was not so much the real one as the later one, above noted. Finally, as a matter of policy, it does not seem fair that an opponent who happens to possess a document should be obliged to have it taken against him as genuine merely because of that chance possession. The doctrine, in short, can only the opposite party, if he claims any benefit under it, dispenses with the necessity of proof"); 1905, McBrayer v. Walker, 122 Ga. 245, 50 S. E. 95 (administrator of grantee, claiming under the deed; the grantor allowed to use without authentication an admission of usury indorsed by the grantee on the deed); Haw. 1898, Brown v. Mendonca, 12 Haw. 249, 251 (production by the opponent, claiming "any interest of a substantial and abiding nature", even though not concerning the subject of the suit, suffices); Ky. 1821, Lewis v. Ringo, 3 A. K. Marsh. 247; 1857, McGregor v. Wait, 10 Gray 72, 73, 75 (plea of a right of way in an action of trespass; rule not applied to plaintiff's proof of deed under which defendant claimed); N. Y. 1819, Jackson v. Kingsley, 17 Johns. 158; P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 325 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1941); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1456 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1941); §§ 1548–1557 ("closed" or olographic wills; special rules, based on the Spanish law); Tenn. 1829, Duncan v. Gibbs, 1 Yerg. 256, 259 (plaintiff used a deed to defendant to prove D. incompetent for defendant as warrantor; held that defendant could use the deed though not legally recorded so as to prove execution).

§ 1298. [1] 1787, R. v. Middlezoy, 2 T. R. 41 (pauper settlement; the other parish proving a hiring in M. parish, the latter in rebuttal claimed a prior apprenticeship of the pauper in the former, and gave notice to produce the indenture; but, on its production by the opponent, offered no evidence of execution; held, unnecessary; Buller, J.: "In civil actions . . . the deed when produced [from the opponent's custody] must 'prima facie' be taken to be duly executed, because the plaintiff, knowing who are the subscribing witnesses, cannot come prepared at the trial to prove the execution of the deed; therefore, an instrument coming out of the hands of the opposite party must be taken to be proved"; and two such unreported rulings of Lord Mansfield were cited).

be termed, in the language of Mr. Justice Washington, "a kind of legal legerdemain."

After some fluctuation of rulings the doctrine of R. v. Middlezoy was in England finally repudiated.[2] It had already obtained some footing in this country;[3] but it has also been discountenanced in as many jurisdictions;[4] though the question has seldom come up for adjudication.

(Where the opponent refuses to produce, or otherwise suppresses the document, it would seem that his refusal would certainly (on the principle of § 291, ante) be some evidence of the document's genuineness, and might fairly dispense with the rule requiring production of the attester.[5]

[2] England: 1793, Bowles v. Langworthy, 5 T. R. 366 (R. v. Middlezoy approved; trover by assignees in bankruptcy; here the defendant had produced at the commissioners' hearing a bill of sale, claiming under it); 1807, Johnson v. Lewellin, 6 Esp. 101 (Ellenborough, L. C. J., thought that R. v. Middlezoy "appeared to have been decided without due consideration", and declined to follow it); 1807, Gordon v. Secretan, 8 East 548 (Ellenborough, L. C. J., "said that the case of R. v. Middlezoy, which was much questioned at the time, had been since overruled"; the production by the opponent "did not supersede the necessity of proving it by one of the subscribing witnesses, if any, as in ordinary cases"; counsel argued the difficulty of learning the names of the witnesses; but the Court pointed out that this was outweighed by the disadvantage that, "however questionable its execution might be, and even though he [the opponent] had impounded it because it was forged or had been obtained by fraud", yet the mere possession would in that case suffice to authenticate it; but a stay was granted to give an opportunity to call the witnesses); 1809, Wetherston v. Edgington, 2 Camp. 94 (Heath, J.: "The old rule was the sensible one, that an instrument coming from the opposite side was 'prima facie' taken to be duly executed"; but he conceded that the rule had been changed); 1810, Pearce v. Hooper, 3 Taunt. 60 (trespass for entering a close in C.; the defendant called for the deed of C., which would show that the close was not the plaintiff's; attesting witnesses unnecessary); 1821, Orr v. Morice, 3 B. & B. 139, C. P. (the fluctuations in the preceding rulings reviewed; Pearce v. Hooper regarded as taking a middle ground, i.e. possession, plus the claim of a beneficial estate; per Dallas, C. J., and Richardson, J., Gordon v. Secretan held to represent the law, qualified by Pearce v. Hooper; per Burrough, J., R. v. Middlezoy was still law; per Park, J., undecided on that point); 1826, Burnett v. Lynch, 8 D. & R. 368, 375 (lessee against assignee of the lease, who had assigned to D.; admitted "coming as it did out of the hands of the defendant, or of a person who claimed under him", per Holroyd, J.; "the deed came out of the possession of the party", per Bayley, J.); 1841, Collins v. Bayntun, 1 Q. B. 117 (assumpsit for money had and received; plea, partnership; an alleged agreement of partnership, proved by the defendant, but produced by the plaintiff; the witness held indispensable).

Canada: 1844, Joplin v. Johnston, 2 Kerr N. Br. 541 (mere production not sufficient).

[3] Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1941 (quoted post, § 1300); Ga. 1884, Hobby v. Alford, 73 Ga. 791; Ky. 1828, Stevenson v. Dunlap, 7 T. B. Monr. 134, 137, semble; N. Y. 1815, Betts v. Badger, 12 Johns. 223 (the practice here "has been in conformity with what Mr. J. Heath calls the old rule", i.e. of R. v. Middlezoy; "if the party producing the instrument is one of the parties to it", this dispenses with proof of execution); N. Car. 1898, Bernhardt v. Brown, 122 N. C. 587, 29 S. E. 884 (deed and bond produced on order by defendants, presumed genuine); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 325 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1941); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1456 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1941).

[4] 1827, Rhoades v. Selin, 4 Wash. C. C. 715, 719 (production of an instrument by one who is a party to it and claims a beneficial estate under it, necessary to dispense); 1819, Jackson v. Kingsley, 17 John. 158; 1859, Hill v. Townsend, 24 Tex. 575, 580, semble.

Delaware has added an interesting quibble to the rule: 1914, Saulsbury v. American V. Fibre Co., 5 Del. 182, 91 Atl. 536 (where a document is produced by the opponent upon a common-law notice to produce, and the calling party inspects it, and desires to use it, "it becomes evidence without further proof"; but where the document is produced by order of the court, under the statute adopting chancery discovery on motion, the calling party "must prove it just as though he had been in possession of it himself").

[5] 1818, Cooke v. Tanswell, 8 Taunt. 450 (the opponent refused to produce on notice; "if he wished to throw on the plaintiff the burthen of calling the subscribing witness, he might have produced the deed"); 1838, Poole v. Warren, 3 Nev. & P. 693 (copy of a notice to quit; proof of execution not neces-

(e) " Must, before using other evidence"

§ 1299. Attester preferred to any Third Person, including the Maker of the Document. By the very notion of a rule of preference, the rule for an attester's testimony prefers it in priority over the testimony of any other person present and observing the execution of the document.[1]

But is the rule so rigid that even the testimony to execution of the person actually purporting to be the maker of the document (not being a party to the suit) is not to dispense with the calling of the attester? Such was the orthodox acceptance:

1815, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in R. v. Harringworth, 4 M. & S. 350 (pauper-settlement; the pauper's own testimony, not a party to the suit, to his indenture, excluded): "The rule is universal that you must first call the subscribing witness; and it is not to be varied in each particular case by trying whether in its application it may not be productive of some inconvenience."

This extreme result has been maintained in England and in some American jurisdictions.[2] But there seems no good reason for it. It partakes of the pedantic and the obstinately technical to insist on the calling of the attester when the very person whose execution is to be proved is willing to take the responsibility of charging himself on oath with the act of execution. That he may possibly be a partisan of the proponent's is no more reason for excluding him than for excluding any other partisan witness, and is no more likely to be the case with his testimony than with that of the attester:

1858, ROBERTS, J., in White v. Holliday, 20 Tex. 679, 682: "When are they [the witnesses] needed? Are they needed at all when the parties are both agreed upon the same thing, about the execution and objects of the contract, and have no issue or dispute in relation to it? If it be an essential element in their creation and capacity that they must be produced when the parties are agreed, a party litigant cannot admit his deed by plea or other writing filed in court; [yet] that has never been doubted. . . . By what stronger evidence can it be made to appear that the parties to the deed do agree about its execution sary, following Cooke v. Tanswell). This effect would certainly follow under those statutes in some jurisdictions (ante, § 1295, post, § 1859) by which an opponent may be defaulted for refusal to produce on notice.

§ 1299. [1] 1856, Tudor v. Tudor, 17 B. Monr. Ky. 383, 390 (will not provable by draughtsman); 1823, Labarthe v. Gerbeau, 1 Mart. N. s. La. 486 (attester preferred even to the testimony of the parish judge certifying it); 1855, Barry v. Ryan, 4 Gray Mass. 523 (excluding proof by another person present). Contra: 1895, Garratt v. Hanshue, 53 Oh. 482, 42 N. E. 256 (not preferred to the officer taking the acknowledgment of the maker).

[2] England: 1794, Johnson v. Mason, 1 Esp. 89 (maker of the deed under which the plaintiff held); 1815, R. v. Harringworth, supra: 1853, Whyman v. Garth, 8 Exch. 803 (maker of a deed); U. S. Ala. 1881, Coker v. Ferguson, 70 Ala. 284, 286, 288; 1882, Russell v. Walker, 73 Ala. 315, 317 (mortgagor for mortgagee); 1913, Swindall v. Ford, 184 Ala. 137, 63 So. 651; Ga. 1849, Tyler v. Stephens, 7 Ga. 279 (grantor); 1889, Baker v. Massengale, 83 Ga. 137, 142, 10 S. E. 347 (maker's testimony, as assignor to plaintiff); 1895, Fletcher v. Perry, 97 Ga. 368, 23 S. E. 824; Ind. 1844, Sampson v. Grimes, 7 Blackf. 176; Ky. 1808, Reading v. Metcalf, Hardin 535 (release to interested witness; releasee's proof of execution not sufficient); 1816, Brashear v. Burton, 4 Bibb 442; 1820, M'Clain v. Gregg, 2 A. K. Marsh, 454, 456, semble; 1821, McIntire v. Funk, Litt. Sel. C. 425, 427; 1823, Rees v. Lawless, 4 Litt. 218; 1826, McMurtry v. Frank, 4 T. B. Monr. 34; Mass. 1862, Brigham v. Palmer, 3 All. 450 (mortgagee calling a mortagor in an action against third person; excluded); Mo. 1847, Glasgow v. Ridgeley, 11 Mo. 34, 39.

(and thereby dispense with the subscribing witnesses) than for the grantee to assert the execution in his petition and to procure the grantor to appear in open court on the trial and as a witness swear to the execution as alleged by the grantee? . . . [After pointing out that fraud, lack of consideration, etc., were not in issue and therefore the testimony of a witness could not be better than that of the disinterested grantor,] . . . This is not an exception under the rule that the subscribing witnesses must be called or accounted for, but a case above the rule and superseding it, and in accordance with that which enjoins that the best evidence must be adduced."

This desirable view has been accepted in a number of jurisdictions.[3] It is occasionally put on the ground of the statutory abolition of parties' disqualifications; but this is erroneous, for at common law the maker, though not incompetent by interest, was nevertheless excluded. If the attesting witness is called, but fails to testify (post, § 1302), the maker's testimony is then receivable.[4]

§ 1300. Attester preferred to Opponent's Extra-judicial Admissions. If the opponent has extra-judicially admitted the execution of the document, need the rule requiring the attester's testimony still apply? The distinction between a judicial or solemn admission and an ordinary or circumstantial admission (ante, §§ 1048, 1057) is here important; the former is an absolute waiver of proof on the whole matter, and relieves the proponent from offering any evidence of execution (ante, § 1296); the latter is simply an inconsistent utterance, offerable as one piece of evidence, going with the other evidence to discredit the opponent's present claim. The proponent is therefore here not relieved from proving execution; but the question is whether, of the various sorts of evidence available to him, he must employ the attester's testimony in preference to the extra-judicial utterances of his opponent. These utterances, it may be observed, if receivable, are equally receivable whether the opponent was (as usually) himself the maker of the document or not; in the former case they are more probative; but they come in, if at all, not because he was the maker, but because he is the opponent in the suit.

Now, so far as concerns their practical trustworthiness, for the purpose of dispensing with the attesting witness, it is to be observed, as already noticed

[3] Ala.: Code 1907, § 4006 ("The execution of any instrument of writing attested by witnesses may be proved by the testimony of the maker thereof, without producing or accounting for the absence of the attesting witnesses"); § 4004, par. 5 (attester need not be produced "if the party executing the instrument testifies to its execution"); 1902, Hayes v. Banks, 132 Ala. 354, 31 So. 464 (statute applied); 1904, Ballow v. Collins, 139 Ala. 543, 36 So. 712 (statute applied; see the citation ante, § 1290, n. 4); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5833 (attester not required if the maker "testifies to its execution"); 1904, Vizard v. Moody, 119 Ga. 918, 47 S. E. 348 (statute applied); Mo. 1874, Bowling v. Hax, 55 Mo. 447, 448, semble; N. Y. 1813, Jackson v. Neely, 10 John. 374, 376 (deed; testimony of the maker sufficient); Oh. 1895, Garrett v. Hanshue, 53 Oh. 482, 42 N. E. 256; Tex. 1858, White v. Holliday, 20 Tex. 679 (grantor of a deed, not a party, called to stand; witnesses dispensed with); 1878, Wiggins v. Fleishel, 50 Tex. 57, 63 (preceding case approved; but the grantee's testimony held not to dispense with subscribing witnesses); 1879, Texas Land Co. v. Williams, 51 Tex. 51, 59 (approving the preceding case; but making an exception where the deed is lost; the distinction rests on a misunderstanding of the phrase "secondary evidence").

[4] 1896, Kelly v. Sharp S. Co., 99 Ga. 393, 397, 27 S. E. 741 (maker's testimony received, where witnesses were called but could not prove execution).

in dealing with the same evidence for proving a document's contents (ante, § 1255), that the real objection to them rests only on the possibility of fabricated testimony to oral admissions. The possibility of error in an opponent's actual admission of the document's execution is very small. If in a writing produced to the Court, such an admission clearly appears to have been made, there is no reason why such evidence should not serve at least to dispense with the evidence of the attesting witness. But where the alleged admission is an oral utterance, and the opponent denies it, and the testimony of some witness has to be believed before we can assume that the admission was really uttered, here it seems less desirable to abandon the ordinary preference for the attesting witness and to replace it by evidence open to such uncertainties. In short, where the supposed admission is contained in a writing produced to the Court, it should suffice to dispense with the attesting witness; but not where it is alleged as a mere oral utterance and is denied by the opponent.

The rulings have been by no means harmonious. No express and final settlement of the point seems to have been reached in England; but apparently a written admission was sufficient to dispense; and there is some authority to the same effect for an oral admission.[1] In the United States the distinction between a written and an oral admission has seldom been taken, and the majority of Courts do not allow extra-judicial admissions to dispense with the rule.[2]

§ 1300. [1] 1701, Dillon v. Crawly, 12 Mod. 500 (the witness to a deed was subpœnaed but did not appear; an indorsement of the party himself on the deed, acknowledging it, was offered, but objected to; Holt, C. J.: "Can there be better evidence of a deed than to own it and recite it under his hand and seal?"; and all the Court agreed); 1779, Abbot v. Plumbe, 1 Doug. 216 (a bankrupt's extra-judicial oral acknowledgment of a bond, excluded, in an action of trover by the assignees, who wished to prove the petitioning creditor's debt); 1793, Bowles v. Langworthy, 5 T. R. 366 (trover by assignees in bankruptcy against one holding under a sale; to prove the bill of sale, as an act of bankruptcy, the defendant's admissions as to its execution were received; Abbot v. Plumbe distinguished because the defendant was there no party to the document); 1811, Jones v. Brewer, 4 Taunt. 46, semble (admissions excluded); 1841, Wollaston v. Hakewill, 3 Scott N. R. 593, 617 (a memorial — or recorded copy — of a deed, made by one of the parties, apparently held to dispense); 1845, Lord Gosford v. Robb, 8 Ir. L. R. 217 ("no admission of a party" can dispense; here, certain conduct of a landlord held not to dispense with the proof of a power of attorney to execute the lease); 1845, Fishmongers' Mistery v. Robertson, 1 C. B. 60, 74 (undecided); same case, 6 C. B. 896, 903 (a subsequent memorandum on a contract, admitting execution, held to dispense); 1856, Houghton v. Koenig, 18 C. B. 235, 238, semble (the acknowledgment by the lease, in the counterpart, of the holding on the terms of the lease is sufficient authentication of the lease).

[2] Federal: 1802, Smith v. Carolin, 1 Cr. C. C. 99 (admissions excluded); 1820, Turner v. Johnson, 2 id. 202 (same); 1848, Savage v. D'Wolf, 1 Blatchf. 343 (party's admission of contract not under seal, sufficient, by N. Y. law); Alabama: 1833, Bennet v. Robinson, 3 Stew. & P. 227, 240 (note; admissions by the maker, defendant's intestate, not sufficient; Hall v. Phelps, N. Y., repudiated; a well-reasoned opinion); 1882, Russell v. Walker, 73 Ala. 317 (admissions excluded); 1885, Coleman v. State, 79 Ala. 49 (mortgage; oral admissions of mortgagor-defendant, not 'in justicio', excluded); 1890, Richmond, etc. R. Co. v. Jones, 92 Ala. 226, 9 So. 276 (admissions excluded); 1893, Hawkins v. Ross, 100 Ala. 459, 464, 14 So. 278 (same); 1903, Sledge v. Singley, 139 Ala. 346, 37 So. 98 (Code § 1797, quoted ante, § 1299, n. 3, applies only to testimony on the stand or by deposition; hence the alleged maker's extra-judicial admissions do not dispense with calling the attester of a deed); 1905, Lewis v. Glass, — Ala. —, 39 So. 77 (admissions excluded); California: 1863, Holborn v. Alford, Distinguish here, however, (1) the exclusion of oral admissions of title, forbidden because in effect violating the Statute of Frauds (ante, § 1257); (2) the case of an attesting witness testifying to the maker's oral acknowledgment of execution on the faith of which the attester signs in attestation;[3] here the rule is satisfied by calling the witness, and the maker's acknowledgment is an adoption of his previously-placed signature and is itself equivalent to execution in the attester's presence (ante, § 1292).

§ 1301. Attester preferred to Opponent's Testimony on the Stand. When the opponent also becomes witness as well as opponent — i.e. when he is placed upon the stand or makes discovery on interrogatories — and thus his utterances are not only ordinary admissions but also testimony, the objections against dispensing from the rule disappear entirely. The principal objection

22 Cal. 482, 484 (note; Hall v. Phelps, N. Y., apparently approved); C. C. P. 1872, § 1942 (where "evidence is given that the party against whom the writing is offered has at any time admitted its execution", it is enough if the writing is more than 30 years old or is "produced from the custody of the adverse party and has been acted upon by him as genuine"; this clause unites in hopeless confusion several distinct principles, and it is not worth while to attempt to disentangle them; the Commissioners' amendment of 1901 correctly drew the section, by substituting for the entire sentence the following: "A writing may also be proved by evidence that the party against whom it is offered has at any time admitted its execution, or by evidence that it is produced from his custody and has been acted upon by him as genuine"; but this amendment never became law); Connecticut: 1794, Low v. Atwater, 2 Root 72 (admissions excluded); Georgia: 1851, Ellis v. Smith, 10 Ga. 253 (same); 1871, Mills v. May, 42 Ga. 623 (same); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7966 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1942, omitting the clause for ancient documents); Kentucky: 1816, Fearn v. Taylor, 4 Bibb 363, 365 (admissions of predecessor in title; "perhaps" witnesses must be called; here there were none); 1817, Cartmell v. Walton, 4 Bibb 488 (oral admission by defendant, excluded); 1828, Stevenson v. Dunlap, 7 T. B. Monr. 134, 137 (admissions of predecessor used on the facts); Missouri: 1826, Smith v. Mounts, 1 Mo. 671 (acknowledgment by maker of deed, excluded); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10590 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1942); New Hampshire: 1848, Cram v. Ingalls, 18 N. H. 613, 617 (recognition, in a deed, of an attested mortgage, evidence of its execution); New York: 1807, Hall v. Phelps, 2 John. 451 ("An instrument, though attested by a subscribing witness, may be proved by the confession of the party who gave it"; here a note, by the defendant's extra-judicial admission); 1808, Fox v. Reil, 3 John. 477 (a bond by the defendant; admissions excluded; Kent, C. J., distinguished the ruling in Hall v. Phelps as applying only to a note; "the rules of evidence may be more safely relaxed in the one case than in the other"); 1819, Shaver v. Ehle, 16 John. 201 (note orally admitted genuine by the defendant-maker; excluded, because the admission did not relate specifically to the note offered); 1824, Rowley v. Ball, 3 Cow. 303, 311 (similar admissions held sufficient, because applying to the specific note); 1835, Corbin v. Jackson, 14 Wend. 619, 623, 630 (oral admissions of the execution of an attested power of attorney, held sufficient; Tracy, Sen., diss.); 1844, Hollenback v. Fleming, 6 Hill 303, 305 ("confession or acknowledgment of the party" will not dispense); North Carolina: 1881, Jones v. Henry, 84 N. C. 320, 323 ("as a general rule", the admission of an obligor is not sufficient); Ohio: 1827, Zerby v. Wilson, 3 Oh. 42 (contract affecting realty; defendant's admissions not dispensatory); 1877, Warner v. R. Co., 31 Oh. St. 265, 270 (grantor's admissions, held not dispensatory); 1895, Garrett v. Hanshue, 53 Oh. St. 482, 42 N. E. 256 (same); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 786 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1942); Pennsylvania: 1804, Taylor v. Meekly, 4 Yeates 79 (oral and written admissions received, where one witness could not remember and the others seemed fictitious); 1849, Williams v. Floyd, 11 Pa. St. 499 (promissory note; admissions before a justice, sufficient, following Hall v. Phelps, N. Y.); Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 326 (quoted post, § 2132); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1457 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1942 as sought to be amended in 1901); Rhode Island: 1852, Kinney v. Flynn, 2 R. I. 319, 323 (admissions excluded); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7112 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1942, omitting the clause as to ancient writings); Vermont: 1802, Adams v. Brownson, 1 Tyl. 452 (note by deceased partner of defendant; deceased partner's admission allowed to dispense with witness); 1839, Hodges v. Eastman, 12 Vt. 358 (admission of note's execution, receivable in action on promise to pay in consideration of the note).

[3] 1794, Powell v. Blackett, 1 Esp. 97.

(noted ante, § 1300), that his extra-judicial oral admissions may be evidenced by fabricated testimony, is here of no force, for his testimony to the execution is delivered in the very presence of the tribunal. It is an excess of pedantry to insist on the production of the attester when the opponent himself (usually also the maker of the document) can be found testifying, on the stand or in a sworn answer, to the desired fact of execution. Nevertheless, this insistence is found in a number of jurisdictions;[1] though others properly here dispense with the rule and do not require the calling of the attester.[2] The latter result has sometimes been reached as a supposed consequence of the statutory abolition of parties' incompetency (though erroneously, for the question could and did come up at common law in regard to an answer obtained by a bill of discovery); the effect thus being, on this supposition, to admit also (for example) the testimony on his own behalf of a grantee-plaintiff to his grantor-defendant's execution.[3] But this result, though fair enough, is not maintainable on the same ground as the use of an opponent's testimony, and in truth goes beyond any of the foregoing principles of exemption.

(f) "Either produce the attester as a witness"

§ 1302. Attester need not Testify Favorably; Witness Denying or not Recollecting; Attester's Favorable Testimony not Conclusive. The notion of the rule of Preference for the attesting witness is that of the general desirability, in the furtherance of truth, of obtaining his knowledge on the subject (ante, § 1288). What may be the tenor of the witness' testimony, remains to § 1301. [1] Eng. 1803, Call v. Dunning, 4 East 53, 5 Esp. 16 (admission in an answer to a bill of discovery); 1836, Ashmore v. Hardy, 7 C. & P. 501, 503 (answer in chancery, admitting execution of a deed from W. to defendant); 1853, Whyman v. Garth, 8 Exch. 803 (the opponent, the maker of the deed, was not allowed to be called; Pollock, C. B.: "If in the course of the proceedings in the cause the party to the deed admits the execution, or if by his pleadings he does not require the execution to be proved, he may be very reasonably said to have waived the [implied] agreement [to call the subscribing witness]"; but not otherwise); U. S. Ala. 1884, Askew v. Steiner, 76 Ala. 218, 221 (testimony of plaintiff-grantee under mortgage, not sufficient to exempt from production); 1890, Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Jones, 92 Ala. 218, 226, 9 So. 276 (even questioning the party and maker on the stand, insufficient); 1895, Winter v. Judkins, 106 Ala. 259, 17 So. 627; Ga. 1851, Ellis v. Smith, 10 Ga. 253 (sworn answer, insufficient); 1878, Davis v. Alston, 61 Ga. 225, 227 (admissions on the stand, insufficient); Ky. 1826, Roberts v. Tennell, 3 T. B. Monr. 247, 250 (answer in chancery, insufficient); Mass. 1862, Brigham v. Palmer, 3 All. 450, semble (insufficient notwithstanding the abolition of parties' disqualifications); Tenn. 1874, Henly v. Hemming, 7 Baxt. 524, 526 (rule applies even since abolition of parties' disqualification).

[2] 1876, Doe v. Nevers, 16 N. Br. 614 (Whyman v. Garth, held not law for a deed executed since Consol. St. c. 46, § 23, quoted ante, § 1290); Ala. Code 1907, §§ 4004, 4006 (quoted ante, § 1299); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1942, as sought to be amended in 1901 (quoted ante, § 1300); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5833 (quoted ante, § 1299); 1885, Rayburn v. Lumber Co., 57 Mich. 273, 274, 23 N. W. 811 (proof by calling the opponent, allowed without requiring the attester); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 326 (quoted post, § 2132); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1457 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1942 as sought to be amended in 1901); 1858, White v. Holladay, 20 Tex. 679, semble (quoted ante, § 1299).

[3] 1874, Bowling v. Hax, 55 Mo. 447, 448 (since parties are made competent, the witness need not be called; here, a plaintiff suing on a contract, executed by plaintiff and defendant, was allowed to prove it). Contra: 1879, Wiggins v. Fleishel, 50 Tex. 57, 63, semble (cited ante, § 1299).

be seen; the object of the law is to obtain his knowledge, irrespective of the side in whose favor it may bear.

(1) Accordingly, it is not necessary, as a part of the rule, that he should testify in favor of execution. The rule is satisfied by calling him, i.e. by making his testimony available for the trial. If his testimony fails to evidence the execution, the present rule says nothing about the consequences, — whatever any other rule may say. The present rule's force is absolutely spent when the witness is produced for examination. Here also policy agrees with principle; for the practical working of the rule, if it required that the witness should not only testify but testify favorably (i.e. if the party desiring to prove execution must fail if the attesters failed to prove it) would be unfair and disastrous, especially in testamentary causes:

1839, TUCKER, P., in Clarke v. Dunnavant, 10 Leigh 13, 33: "It never could have been the design of the statute to vacate a will which was duly executed, whenever the witnesses to it have forgotten any material circumstances attending the attestation. They are indeed always called upon to prove the will, not because the statute requires that they shall prove a compliance with all the requisites of the law, but because they would be most likely to prove or disprove them, and because upon principles of common law the attesting witness to every instrument must be produced if living and within the power of the Court."

1862, DENIO, J., in Tarrant v. Ware, 25 N. Y. 425, 426: "Prior to any adjudication upon the subject, it might have been argued with some plausibility that the nature and objects of the provisions declaring a certain number of subscribing witnesses necessary to a valid will required that the number specified should unite in testifying to an execution and attestation of the instrument in the manner required by the act; or at least that the will could not be established if a part or all of them should deny the existence of the facts requisite to show a proper execution. The witnesses were supposed to be persons selected by the testator to bear witness that he had actually executed the paper with a knowledge of its contents and in the form prescribed by law and that he was of suitable age and capacity and not under restraint; if the persons thus selected could not or would not affirm the existence of these facts, the intention of the law (it might be said) would not be answered; . . . [and] if the testimony of the chosen witnesses, when unfavorable to the will, could be disregarded, a will may be set up and established by testimony not authorized by the statute and which the Legislature had not considered perfectly safe in ordinary cases. But, on the other hand, it was soon seen that the attesting witnesses might forget the facts to which they had once attested, and that it was not impossible that they might be tampered with by interested parties and thus be induced to deny on oath the facts which they had been selected to witness and to depose to. This view prevailed with the Courts. . . . Whether their [the witnesses'] denial of what they had attested proceeds from perversity or want of recollection, the testament may in either case be supported."

1895, LUMPKIN, J., in Gillis v. Gillis, 96 Ga. 1, 15, 23 S. E. 107: "[The attesting witnesses are,] unless accounted for, indispensably necessary witnesses; but the testimony, even as to the 'factum' of the execution, is not confined to them. The fact to be established is the proper execution of the will. If that is proved by competent testimony, it is sufficient, no matter from what quarter the testimony comes, provided the attesting witnesses are among those who bear testimony, or their absence is explained. The inquiry, as in other cases, is whether, taking all the testimony together, the fact is duly established. It is not required that any one or more of the essential facts should be proved by all or any number of the attesting witnesses. The right is simply to have the attesting witnesses examined, no matter what their testimony may be."

Accordingly, the failure of the attester, from lack of memory, to prove execution, is not in itself any breach of the present rule; and though the proponent has still to prove the execution in some sufficient way, he is no longer hampered by any rule about attesting witnesses.[1]

(2) For the same reason, the attester's positive denial of the facts of exe-

§ 1302. [1] Besides the following cases, the statutes and cases in the next note are also authorities to the same effect: ENGLAND: 1728, Dormer v. Thurland, 2 P. Wms. 506, 510 (obscure); 1844, Burgoyne v. Showler, 1 Roberts. Eccl. 5, 10 (even if they forget, the execution is assumed); 1848, Leach's Goods, 12 Jur. 381; UNITED STATES: Alabama: Code 1907, § 4005 (quoted post, § 1310); 1843, Lazarus v. Lewis, 5 Ala. 457, 459; 1861, Hall v. Hall, 38 Ala. 131, 133; 1895, Barnewall v. Murrell, 108 Ala. 366, 18 So. 831; California. C. C. P. 1872, § 1941; Georgia: 1857, Reinhart v. Miller, 22 Ga. 402, 416; 1895, Gillis v. Gillis, 96 Ga. 1, 14, 23 S. E. 107; 1896, Kelly v. Sharp S. Co., 99 Ga. 393, 398, 27 S. E. 741; 1898, Buchanan v. Grocery Co., 105 Ga. 393, 31 S. E. 105; Illinois: 1902, Webster v. Yorty, 194 Ill. 408, 62 N. E. 907. But by a queer forgetfulness of the present principle, the words of the local statute were for a time made to reach a contrary result: 1906, Greene v. Hitchcock, 222 Ill. 216, 78 N. E. 614 (by Rev. St. c. 148, § 2, quoted post, § 1304, n. 6, the oath of two attesting witnesses "that they were present and saw the testator sign, etc.", "shall be sufficient proof of the execution"; in this case, the will bore a full attestation clause, but one of the attesters could testify only that he did not remember whether he saw the testatrix sign, but that he would not have signed it except in her presence nor have let her sign it except in his presence, etc.; this was held insufficient, ignoring the present principle and citing no authority whatever, and then invoking the peculiar local rule of § 1303, n. 3, post, to exclude all other testimony; the result was to establish an unjust rule of hardship, contrary to two centuries of settled law. But the ruling in Greene v. Hitchcock was within a year practically repudiated: 1907, Mead v. Presbyterian Church, 229 Ill. 526, 82 N. E. 371 (the opinion does not mention Greene v. Hitchcock, though the briefs cited it); 1908, Schofield v. Thomas, 236 Ill. 122, 86 N. E. 122 (issue whether the testatrix was present at the attesters' signing; the attesters testified not, but another person testified that she was; due attestation was not found; but the opinion points out that the attesters' negative testimony was not of itself fatal, if other testimony to due attestation had been believed; approving Gould v. Seminary, 189 Ill. 282, 59 N. E. 536; not mentioning Greene v. Hitchcock, supra, but effectually repudiating it); 1915, O'Brien v. Rhembe's Estate, 269 Ill. 592, 109 N. E. 1044 (approving Mead v. Church); 1916, Britton v. Davis, 273 Ill. 31, 112 N. E. 283 (witness' failure to remember the circumstances of execution, while acknowledging the genuineness of his signature; here the failure of memory was in the probate court trial, and was not repeated in the circuit court trial); 1915, Thompson v. Kurme, 268 Ill. 168, 172, 108 N. E. 1101 (failure of the subscribing witnesses to testify to an essential fact, held not fatal); 1917, Dubach v. Jolly, 279 Ill. 530, 117 N. E. 77; 1918, Flynn v. Flynn, 283 Ill. 206, 119 N. E. 304; 1919, Rupp v. Jones, 289 Ill. 596, 124 N. E. 560 (attestation clause held sufficient evidence, even where the attesting witnesses do not recall the essentials; following O'Brien v. Rhembe's Estate); Kentucky: 1832, Griffith v. Huston, 7 J. J. Marsh. 385, 387; Maine: 1840, Quimby v. Buzzell, 4 Shepl. 470, 473; Massachusetts: 1829, Russell v. Coffin, 8 Pick. 143, 150; 1840, Dewey v. Dewey, 1 Metc. 349, 353 (if recollection were required, "the validity of a will would depend not upon the fact whether it was duly executed, but whether the testator had been fortunate in securing witnesses of retentive memories"); 1916, Hammill v. Weeks, 225 Mass. 245, 114 N. E. 203 (where two of the three attesters were called, held that it was not necessary that both should testify to every fact required for execution); Michigan: 1879, Abbott v. Abbott, 41 Mich. 540, 542, 2 N. E. 810; Minnesota: 1917, Baxter's Estate, 136 Minn. 59, 161 N. W. 261; Missouri: 1890, Mays v. Mays, 114 Mo. 536, 540, 21 S. W. 921 (failure to testify to sanity); 1896, Morton v. Heidorn, 135 Mo. 608, 37 S. W. 504; Pennsylvania: 1823, Marshall v. Gougler, 10 S. & R. 164, 167; 1832, Miller's Estate, 3 Rawle 312, 318 ("The law is not so unreasonable as to declare that the grantee must lose his right wherever they have lost their memory"; here, of a will); Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 632; South Carolina: 1855, Welch v. Welch, 9 Rich. 133, 136 (that one subscribing witness cannot recollect the facts, immaterial, if otherwise proved; here, by the other subscribers); 1897, Gable v. Rauch, 50 S. C. 95, 27 S. E. 555 (where two of three witnesses admitted their signatures, but could not recollect the circumstances); 1910, Mordecai v. Canty, 86 S. C. 470, 68 S. E. 1049 (failure to testify to sanity); South Dakota: 1904, Schouweiler v. McCaull, 18 S. D. 70, 99 N. W. 95 (mortgage); Texas: 1922, Allen v. Massey, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 236 S. W. 501 (failure of recollection by one witness; good opinion by Hamilton, J.); Virginia: 1839, Clarke v. Dunnavant, 10 Leigh 13, 22 (quoted supra).

cution, contradicting the statements implied or expressed in his attestation, leaves the proponent still free to prove by other testimony, if he can, the facts of due execution; a permission demanded not only by principle but also by policy, inasmuch as the proponent might otherwise be defeated of his rights by a corrupt attester.[2]

[2] ENGLAND: 1683, Hudson's Case, Skinn. 79 (two of the three swore that he was incapable and his hand was guided; but others proved the will); 1694, Dayrell v. Glascock, Skinn. 413; Austin v. Willes, Buller N. P. 264 ("notwithstanding the three witnesses all swore to its not being duly executed, the devisee obtained a verdict"); Pike v. Bradbury, Buller N. P. 264 ("the first and second witnesses denying their hands, it was objected he should go no farther; for it was argued that, though, if you call one witness who proves against you, you may call another, yet if he prove against you too, you can go no farther; but the Chief Justice admitted him to call other witnesses to prove the will, and he obtained a verdict"); 1729, Rice v. Oatfield, 2 Stra. 1096 (the preceding case, cited in argument, was apparently approved); 1762, Lowe v. Jolliffe, 1 W. Bl. 365 (besides the attesting witnesses themselves, "a dozen servants of the testator all unanimously swore him to be utterly incapable of making a will", etc.); 1779, Mansfield, L. C. J., in Abbot v. Plumbe, 1 Doug. 216 ("It was formerly doubted whether if the subscribing witness denies the deed, you can call other witnesses to prove it", but no longer); 1790, Ley v. Ballard, 3 Esp. 173, note (neither of the attesters had seen the execution; Kenyon, L. C. J.: "If they disavow having seen it executed, other persons who saw it executed, or can prove the party's handwriting, may be called"; so, too, even if they "prove contrary to what their attestation purport, namely, that the party did not execute it"); 1798, Kenyon, L. C. J., in Jordaine v. Lashbrook, 7 T. R. 599, 604 (approves Lowe v. Jolliffe); 1815, R. v. Harringworth, 4 M. & S. 350 (Ellenborough, L. C. J., "His testimony is indeed not conclusive, for . . . the party may go on to prove him such [untrustworthy] and may call other witnesses to prove the execution"); 1815, Bootle v. Blundell, 19 Ves. Jr. 494, 501, 507 (Eldon, L. C.: "If they had all denied their attestations, but it could be proved by circumstances that they unjustly denied it, the will might be proved to be a good will by other circumstances").

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1895, Barnewall v. Murrell, 108 Ala. 366, 18 So. 831; Arkansas: 1853, Rogers v. Diamond, 13 Ark. 474, 483; California: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1941 ("If the subscribing witness denies or does not recollect the execution of the writing, its execution may still be proved by other evidence"); Colorado: 1906, Shapter's Estate, 35 Colo. 578, 85 Pac. 688; Delaware: 1858, Rash v. Purnel, 2 Harringt. 448, 454; 1848, Talley v. Moore, 5 Del. 57; Georgia: 1857, Reinhart v. Miller, 22 Ga. 402, 416; 1895, Gillis v. Gillis, 96 Ga. 1, 14, 23 S. E. 107 (execution may be otherwise proved, no matter how the attesting witness testifies; see quotation, supra); 1913, Brock v. Brock, 140 Ga. 590, 79 S. E. 473 (Gillis v. Gillis followed); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7965; Illinois: 1917, Hutchison v. Kelly, 276 Ill. 438, 446, 114 N. E. 1012 (attestation clause and other evidence, held sufficient, even though one attester denied some of the facts of execution); 1918, King v. Westervelt, 284 Ill. 401, 120 N. E. 241; 1918, Kuehue v. Malach, 286 Ill. 120, 121 N. E. 391; 1921, Jenkins v. White, 298 Ill. 502, 131 N. E. 634 (even where one of the witnesses testifies to non-performance of some requirement; following Rupp v. Jones, supra, n. 1); Indiana: 1827, Booker v. Bowles, 1 Blackf. 90; Iowa: Code 1897, § 4619; Rev. Code, § 7326; Kentucky: 1907, Carmical v. Carmical, 32 Ky. L. 171, 104 S. W. 1037; 1917, Caddell's Heirs v. Caddell's Ex., 175 Ky. 505, 194 S. W. 540; Maryland: 1854, Barry v. Hoffman, 6 Md. 78, 87; Massachusetts: 1834, Whitaker v. Salisbury, 15 Pick. 534, 544; Mississippi: 1878, Martin v. Perkins, 56 Miss. 204, 209 (their testimony as to incapacity does not conclude the propounder of a will); 1918, Williams v. Morehead, 116 Miss. 653, 77 So. 658; Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10589; Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8853; New York: 1830, Jackson v. Christman, 4 Wend. 278, 282; 1861, Orser v. Orser, 24 N. Y. 51, 52; 1862, Tarrant v. Ware, 25 N. Y. 425, note (quoted, supra); 1862, Auburn Seminary v. Calhoun, 25 N. Y. 422, 425; S. C. A. 1920 (surrogates' courts; "if all the subscribing witnesses to the will be dead or incompetent by reason of lunacy or otherwise to testify or unable to testify, or are absent from the State and their testimony has been dispensed with, . . . or if a subscribing witness has forgotten the occurrence or testifies against the execution of the will, or was not present with the other witness at the execution of the will, the will may nevertheless be established"; remainder quoted post, § 1320); North Carolina: Crowell v. Kirk, 3 Dev. 356, 358, per Ruffin, J.; 1919, Deyton's Will, 177 N. C. 494, 99 S. E. 424 (whether the witness signed in the testatrix' presence); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 785; Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 325 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1941); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1011, § 1456 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1941); Rhode Island: 1909, Newell v. White, 29 R. I. 343, 73 Atl. 798; South Carolina: 1817, Pearson v. Wightman, 1 Mill

(3) Conversely, the testimony of the attesting witnesses is of course not conclusive in favor of execution even when all agree and when no personal impeachment is attempted. This would follow from the general principle examined post, § 1348. But, specifically, the unanimous testimony of the attesters may fail of credit even though the only opposing evidence is that of the alleged maker's handwriting as analyzed by expert witnesses.[3] The circumstantial evidence afforded by the handwriting may in a given case be more convincing than the testimony of the attesters. This possibility is one of the results of the modern scientific study of handwriting.[4]

§ 1303. Same: Discriminations (Refreshing Recollection; Implied Attestation Clause; Impeaching One's Own Witness, or One's Own Attestation; Illinois Rule admitting only Attesting Witnesses in Probate). (1) May not the attester, though not actually recollecting the circumstances, adopt his signature as a record of past recollection, and base his testimony on the faith of his signature, which he would not have put there had he not witnessed the execution? That he may, is clear by the principle of Recollection (ante, § 737, under which this mode of testifying has already been considered.

(2) If the witness' testimony on the stand wholly fails through lack of recollection, may not his signature and attestation, on being proved by himself or some one else, suffice as an implied testimony to the facts of due execution? To use the attestation in this way is to use a hearsay (i.e. extrajudicial) statement, but for this case a well-recognized exception to the Hearsay rule exists. Moreover, the question arises how far this implied statement can be regarded as covering all the facts essential to due execution; both these questions, involving the existence and scope of a Hearsay exception, are better considered under that head (post, §§ 1510–1512).

Whether the failure of recollection excuses from calling the witness is a different question (post, § 1315).

(3) If the attester, when called by the proponent, denies the facts of execution, in contradiction to his attestation, is it not a violation of the rule against impeaching one's own witness to allow the proponent to go on to prove

Const. 336, 340 ("It would be a terrible consequence if such testimony were not admissible; for how often and how easily might witnesses be tampered with to deny their own attestation?"); 1911, Merck v. Merck, 89 S. C. 347, 71 S. E. 969; 1921, Matheson v. Caribo, — S. C. —, 109 S. E. 102 (note signed by mark and witnessed; the witness' denial of execution, held not to take the case from the jury); Tennessee: 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 99 (attesting witness denying signature; signature may be proved); 1860, Rose v. Allen, 1 Coldw. 23, 27 (even if all deny due execution, the fact may be otherwise proved); 1869, Alexander v. White, 7 Coldw. 126, 128 (same); 1891, Simmons v. Leonard, 91 Tenn. 183, 190, 18 S. W. 280 (fact of attestation denied); Texas: Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 813; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7111 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1941); Virginia: 1846, Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. 439, 461; 1877, Lamberts v. Cooper, 29 Gratt. 61, 67 (sanity; witness who contradicts his attestation is to be viewed with suspicion); 1878, Cheatham v. Hatcher, 30 Gratt. 56, 64; West Virginia: 1881, Webb v. Dye, 18 W. Va. 376, 380; Wisconsin: 1878, Jenkins' Will, 43 Wis. 610; 1878, Meurer's Will, 44 Wis. 392, 401.

In particular, the attester therefore need not testify to a testator's sanity; 1902, Re Wells, 96 Me. 161, 51 Atl. 868.

[3] 1920, O'Connor's Estate, O'Connor v. Slaker, 105 Nebr. 88, 179 N. W. 401; 1917, Baird v. Shaffer, 101 Kan. 585, 168 Pac. 836.

[4] See Albert S. Osborn, Questioned Documents (N. Y., 1910), The Problem of Proof (1922).

due execution in spite of the attester's testimony? It is not, in truth; but even if it were a case coming under the rule, it would be excused by the exception for a necessary or compulsory witness (ante, § 917).

(4) If the supposed attester denies the genuineness of his signature, then, if this denial be taken as true, he is no attesting witness, and, the document thus not being attested, it is not necessary to call him as such (on the principle of § 1292, ante); the proponent may therefore take this as true and go on to prove execution by other testimony.[1] However, if the document is one required by law to be attested as a condition of validity, then it is of no use to the proponent to take the attester's denial as true, for, if he does, the document is invalid for lack of attestation; and he must therefore (and may, under the principle of § 1302) go on if possible to prove the signature's genuineness by other testimony.[2]

(5) That the attester, if he admits his signature, may not testify to the falsity of his own attesting statements (for example, by denying the identity of the maker) was a notion at one time much urged, in virtue of the supposed rule 'nemo allegans turpitudinem suam audiendus est'; but this doctrine never received final sanction (ante, § 528).

(6) In Illinois, by an odd statutory rule of early local origin, it was once the law that, on an appeal to a Superior Court from a refusal to allow probate of a will, any other testimony to execution might be produced, but on an appeal from a grant of probate, only the attester's testimony could be received.[3] But this statute was later amended, so that the limitation is narrowed to apply

§ 1303. [1] 1792, Grellier v. Neale, Peake 146 (Kenyon, L. C. J.: "The subscribing witness not having seen the deed executed, it is the same as if there was no witness at all; and in that case the handwriting may be proved by another witness"); 1805, Burrowes v. Lock, 10 Ves. Jr. 470, 474 ("If he denies that [i.e. execution in his presence], other evidence is admissible from circumstances, as where there were no attesting witnesses"); 1811, Fitzgerald v. Elsee, 2 Camp. 635 (indenture of apprenticeship; the witness had not seen the execution; handwriting allowed; Lawrence, J.: "It is to be treated as if there were no attesting witness"); 1810, Lemon v. Dean, 2 Camp. 636 note, LeBlanc, J. (note; same ruling); 1812, M'Craw v. Gentry, 3 Camp. 232 (the witnesses had seen the defendant acknowledge, but not sign the note; held, that it was as if there were no attesting witness; and thus the defendant's acknowledgment sufficed).

[2] 1808, Phipps v. Parker, 1 Camp. 412 (the witness had not seen the execution; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "If it was not executed in his presence, the conclusion of law is that it [a policy] was never executed as a deed, although it may have been signed by these two directors. . . . Now appearing certainly not to have been executed in the presence of the witness, I think it must be considered as invalid"; distinguishing Lowe v. Jolliffe, where the truth of the attesters was denied, and the requirements of attestation might have been in reality fulfilled).

[3] 1840, Walker v. Walker, 3 Ill. 291; 1860, Duncan v. Duncan, 23 Ill. 365; 1867, Andrews v. Black, 43 Ill. 256 (explaining the principle fully); 1875, Crowley v. Crowley, 80 Ill. 469; 1895, Hobart v. Hobart, 154 Ill. 610, 615, 39 N. E. 581 (the rule excluding other testimony on appeal from grant of probate does not apply to other testimony to testator's signature where an attesting witness is dead); 1898, Thompson v. Owen, 174 Ill. 229, 51 N. E. 1046; 1901, Illinois Masonic Orphans' Home v. Gracy, 190 Ill. 95, 60 N. E. 194; 1902, Webster v. Yorty, 194 Ill. 408, 62 N. E. 907; 1902, Re Tobin, 196 Ill. 484, 63 N. E. 1021; 1902, Kohley's Estate, 200 Ill. 189, 65 N. E. 699; 1904, O'Brien v. Bonfield, 213 Ill. 428, 72 N. E. 1090 (rule held constitutional); 1905, Senn v. Greundling, 218 Ill. 458, 75 N. E. 1020; 1905, Barry's Will, 219 Ill. 391, 76 N. E. 577; 1906, Greene v. Hitchcock, 222 Ill. 216, 78 N. E. 614; 1906, Stuke v. Glaser, 223 Ill. 316, 79 N. E. 105 (meaning of the proviso as to "fraud", determined); 1909, Dean v. Dean, 239 Ill. 424, 88 N. E. 149; 1917, Hutchison v. Kelly, 276 Ill. 438, 114 N. E. 1012.

The relevant statutory clauses are printed in part post, § 1304.

only to the contestants of the will, but is extended to include appeals from both a refusal and a grant of probate.[4]

§ 1304. Number of Attesters required to be Called. The object of placing more than one attestation upon a document, whether at the parties' voluntary instance or by requirement of law, is ordinarily not to demand the combined testimony of all at the trial, but merely to provide by way of caution a number of witnesses; so that the contingencies of death, removal of residence, and the like, may be guarded against, and one witness at least may be expected to be available. If a statute expressly required the document to be "proved" by a specified number (post, § 2048), the case would be different. But a main object in statutes requiring attestation as an element of validity is to surround the act of execution with certain safeguards; the object of securing evidence for litigation is a secondary one. So far, therefore, as such an object exists, it can hardly be implied to have in view anything beyond what is above noted, i.e. a precautionary supply of persons from whom a testifier is likely to remain available in spite of the accidents that might have totally destroyed the supply if there had been but one person provided in advance.

No doubt, statutes often negative the above view by expressly providing not only that a certain number shall attest, but also that all of the required number shall be called to testify. But, in the absence of express statements, such a requirement is not properly to be implied; and it was not implied in common-law practice:

1765, Lord CAMDEN in Doe v. Hindson,[1] 1 Day 41, 51: "The Legislature set up these witnesses as a guard, to protect the testator from fraud in that critical minute when he was about to execute his will. . . . There is a great difference between the method of proving a fact in a Court of justice and the attestation of that fact at the time it happens. . . . The new thing introduced by this statute [of Frauds] is the attestation; the method of proving this attestation stands as it did upon the old common-law principles. Thus, for instance, one witness is sufficient to prove what all three have attested; and, though that witness must be a subscriber, yet that is owing to the general common-law rule that, where a witness has subscribed an instrument, he must be always produced, because it is the best evidence. This we see in common experience; for after the first witness has been examined, the will is always read. . . . This [above distinction], I am afraid, has not always been attended to; but some persons have been apt to reason upon this point as if the statute had directed the will to be proved by three credible witnesses; forgetting the difference between the subscription and the proof of that subscription."

1834, TINDAL, C. J., in Wright v. Tatham, 1 A. & E. 3, 23: "It may be observed, however, that the Statute of Frauds did not look primarily to the mode of proving the will when contested, but to the security of the testator at the time of the execution of the will;[2] the statute intending that three witnesses should be in the nature of guards or securities, to protect him in the execution of his will against force or fraud or undue influence. The proof of the will by the three witnesses, supposing it should afterwards come in contest, is only an incidental and secondary benefit, derived from that mode of attestation. . . . It is well settled that in an action at law it is sufficient to call one only of the subscribing witnesses, if he can speak to the observance of all that is required by the statute."

[4] The statutory amendment, St. 1909, June 5, p. 472, is quoted post, § 1304. It was applied in the following cases: 1919, Mayer v. Schrenkler, 286 Ill. 324, 121 N. E. 604 (prior rulings examined, and the effect of the amending statute of 1909; Speer v. Josenhans, 274 Ill. 237, overruled on a certain point); 1919, Chandler v. Fisher, 290 Ill. 440, 125 N. E. 324.

§ 1304. [1] Reprinted s. v. Hinds v. Kersey. Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, IV, 118.

[2] So also, Temp. G. II, Allen v. Hill, Gilbert 257, 261.

In England, this was the view of the common law. For attested documents in general, the rule has always been that but one attester need be called.[3] For wills, the rule was clearly the same in the common-law Courts.[4] But in Chancery (while the precedents were not harmonious) the practice seems to have been to call all the required number of attesters, — at least unless the Chancellor's discretion was exercised to the contrary.[5]

In the United States,[6] several forms of the rule find representation. The [3] Eng. 1733, Holdfast v. Dowling, 2 Str. 1254; U. S. Ala. 1843, Thomas v. Wallace, 5 Ala. 268, 275; 1898, Sowell v. Bank, 119 Ala. 92, 24 So. 585; Conn. 1888, O'Sullivan v. Overton, 56 Conn. 102, 105, 14 Atl. 300; Ga. 1896, Cooper v. O'Brien, 98 Ga. 773, 26 S. E. 470; Ky. 1815, Allen v. Trimble, 4 Bibb 21; Md. 1800, Collins v. Elliott, 1 H. & J. 1; Mass. 1829, Russell v. Coffin, 8 Pick. 143, 150 ("unless there is some reason to believe or suspect that the instrument has been forged"); 1851, Gelott v. Goodspeed, 8 Cush. 411 ("in ordinary cases, where the mere formal execution" is involved); 1851, White v. Wood, 8 Cush. 413 (although the other witness was in court); N. H. 1860, Melcher v. Flanders, 40 N. H. 139, 157; Tenn. 1809, Shepherd v. Goss, 1 Overt. 487; 1855, Harrell v. Ward, 2 Sneed 610, 612; Va. 1849, Jesse v. Parker, 6 Gratt. 57, 61, 64.

[4] Ante 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 103 (one suffices, "unless they show such characters of fraud as would make it necessary to produce the rest"); 1763, Buller Nisi Prius, 264 ("The devisee need produce only one [witness], if that one prove all the requisites", the opponent being at liberty to call the others); 1816, Eldon, L. C., in Bullen v. Michel, 4 Dow 297, 331 (at common law "they usually call only one witness [to a will], . . . leaving it to the other side, if they think proper, to call the other witnesses"); 1834, Wright v. Tatham, 1 A. & E. 3, 22 (see quotation supra). Contra: 1748, Townsend v. Ives, 1 Wils. 216 ("It is a rule that all the witnesses, if living, must be examined to prove the will").

[5] 1748, Ogle v. Cook, 1 Ves. Sr. 177 (all required, by Hardwicke, L. C.); 1752, Grayson v. Atkinson, 2 id. 454, 460 (all to be accounted for; here two testified, and the third was beyond seas; but here the fact of the execution in his presence was not otherwise proved; the plaintiff conceded that all must be called if available, but claimed that "it was formerly not required to have all the three witnesses examined; it was first established by Lord Talbot in this Court"); 1760, Binfield v. Lambert, 1 Dick. 337 (Clarke, M. R., said "that the will could not be said to be strictly proved agreeably to the statute; but his conscience being satisfied", he would not require all, but would execute the trusts of the will; here the third witness could not be found); 1780, Bird v. Butler, 1 Dick. 337, n. (same facts, though the search not so thorough; trusts carried out, but the will not declared proved); 1789, Powel v. Cleaver, 2 Bro. C. C. 499, 504 (in practice, but not by absolute rule, all are to be called); 1793, Fitzherbert v. Fitzherbert, 4 Br. C. C. 231; 1800, Carrington v. Payne, 5 Ves. Jr. 404, 411, semble (all required); 1815, Bootle v. Blundell, 19 Ves. Jr. 494, 500, 505, 509 (Eldon, L. C.: "The rule of this Court requiring that to establish a will of real estate all the three witnesses shall be examined is not by any means, as it has been represented, a technical rule"; for after ordering an issue at law the testimony there may be reviewed, and before granting the devisee an issue at law, the witnesses may be examined; the general rule admitting necessary exceptions, and perhaps not applying where the will is not wholly, but only partially in question); 1829, Winchelsea v. Wauchope, 3 Russ. 441, 453, semble (all are not invariably required); 1831, Tatham v. Wright, 2 Russ. & Myl. 1, 8, 16 (the Court of Chancery may inform its conscience as it thinks best and may send an issue back to be tried by calling all the attesting witnesses; yet Brougham, L. C., at p. 30, speaks of "the rule which makes it imperative to call all the witnesses to a will", but regards it as applying only to a devisee who moves to establish a will, and not where an heir moves to set one aside).

Canada: Rules of Court 1914, No. 978 ("one or more of the witnesses", for proof in solemn form); N. Br. St. 1915, c. 23, §§ 20, 47 (quoted post, § 1310); P. E. I. St. 1873, c. 21, § 24 (quoted post, § 1310).

[6] Alabama: Code 1907, § 4004 (in general; "the subscribing witness" must be called); § 6185 (wills; "must be proved by one or more"); 1845, Bowling v. Bowling, 8 Ala. 538 (where probate is contested, all rule in perhaps most jurisdictions is to call but one attester, for probate in common form, and to call all the required number, for probate in solemn must be produced; where not contested, one "might be sufficient"; no statute at this time); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. §§ 746, 751 (in uncontested probate, the Court "may admit" on the testimony of one witness; if contested, "all the subscribing witnesses" available must be produced);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 10518 (wills; all required by implication; quoted post, § 1320); 1843, Campbell v. Garven, 5 Ark. 485, 491, semble (both necessary); 1876, Janes v. Williams, 31 Ark. 175, 180 (statute applied; proof by calling one witness only, insufficient);
California: C. C. P. 1872, §§ 1308, 1315 (in uncontested wills, by one subscribing witness only, if he testifies to the execution "in all particulars as required by law, and that the testator was of sound mind at the time of its execution"; in contested wills, by all);
Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 5203 ("It shall be the duty of each and every witness to any will" to appear and testify); § 5204 (the will is to be allowed if "it shall satisfactorily appear by the testimony of two or more of the subscribing witnesses" that it was duly executed);
Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, §§ 131, 122 (quoted post, § 1310);
Connecticut: 1869, Field's Appeal, 36 Conn. 277 (one suffices for a will);
Delaware: 1838, Rash v. Purnel, 2 Harringt. 448 (all must be called, on an issue out of Chancery to establish a will, because the judgment is final; otherwise, in trying a will at common law in ejectment, where the heir, if defeated, may again bring ejectment);
Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 3605 (at a probate contest, "such witnesses as the parties may produce shall be examined");
Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, §§ 3855, 3856 (one suffices, for probate in common form; all are necessary, in solemn form); 1855, Walker v. Hunter, 17 Ga. 364, 390, 407 (not clear); 1874, Evans v. Arnold, 52 Ga. 169, 179 (all required); 1921, Smith v. Smith, 151 Ga. 150, 106 S. E. 95 (will burnt; one witness being dead, the failure to call the other two was held fatal, although a partial admission of the tenor of their testimony had been made by the opponent);
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7455 (wills; like Cal. C. C. P. § 1315); § 7450 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1308);
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 148, § 2 (a will is to be signed by two or more credible witnesses, "two of whom, declaring on oath or affirmation, before the county court . . . shall be sufficient proof of the execution"); § 3 ("It shall be the duty of each and every witness to any will . . . executed in this State, as aforesaid, to be and appear before the county court on the regular day for the probate . . . to testify of and concerning the execution and validity of the same"); § 5 (if the county judge is an attester, he shall make oath in circuit court, and then "if there are other witnesses to said will, the county Court shall take their evidence . . . as in other cases"); § 13 (in case of refusal of probate by a county court, the proponent may support it in the circuit court "by any evidence competent to establish a will in chancery"); 1851, Rigg v. Wilton, 13 Ill. 15, 19 (at the trial of a will-issue out of chancery, the attesting-witness need not be called, because his probate deposition is usable (see post, § 1305); but, semble, at the probating both must be called); 1886, Re Page, 118 Ill. 576, 578, 8 N. E. 852 (one suffices to "establish" a will); 1897, Harp v. Parr, 168 Ill. 459, 48 N. E. 113, semble (same); 1898, Slinghoff v. Bruner, 174 Ill. 561, 51 N. E. 772 (same); 1902, Kohley's Estate, 200 Ill. 189, 65 N. E. 699 (the two must be produced); 1906, Greene v. Hitchcock, 222 Ill. 216, 78 N. E. 614 (on a grant of probate, the two attesters must testify); St. 1909, June 5, p. 472 (amending Rev. St. c. 148, § 13, so as to apply the rule to probate of a will "allowed or refused", and not merely to a probate refused);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 3141 (a will "shall be proven by one or more of the attesting witnesses"); 1871, Hayes v. West, 37 Ind. 21, 26 (one suffices);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 11764 ("The Court shall cause the witnesses to the will" to come and testify);
Kentucky: 1819, Lindsay v. M'Cormack, 2 A. K. Marsh. 229 (one suffices; the later rulings are the same); 1820, Harper v. Wilson, 2 A. K. Marsh. 465; 1821, Overall v. Overall, Litt. Sel. C. 501, 503; 1822, Turner v. Turner, 1 Litt. 101, 103; 1823, Elmendorff v. Carmichael, 3 Litt. 473, 479; 1829, Hall v. Sims, 2 J. J. M. 509, 511; 1833, Carrico v. Neal, 1 Dana 162 (if "direct, positive, and explicit"); 1840, Swift v. Wiley, 1 B. Monr. 114, 116; 1850, Cornelison v. Browning, 10 B. Monr. 425, 427;
Louisiana: C. Pr. 1900, § 933 (a will is to be proved "by the number of witnesses required for that purpose by law"); Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 1646 (the judge shall proceed to proof of a testament "in the presence of the notary and the witnesses who were present at the making of it, and who are on the spot or duly called"); see further the provisions for nuncupative wills and holographic wills (post, §§ 2050, 2051) which in this State trench partly on the field of the ordinary will;
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 68, §§ 7, 9 (where there is no objection, a will may be probated on the testimony of "any one or more" of the witnesses; where the original cannot be obtained, execution may be proved by the form. But statutes loosely drawn have introduced some confusion. Howsubscribing witnesses or by "any other evidence competent"); Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 93, § 350 (all are to be examined);

Massachusetts: 1815, Sears v. Dillingham, 12 Mass. 358, 362 (all are required); 1820, Brown v. Wood, 17 id. 68, 73 (same); Mass. Gen. L. 1920, C. 192, § 2 (for uncontested wills, probate may be granted upon the testimony of one witness only, by affidavit);
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 13782 (in uncontested probate "the Court may in its discretion" act upon "the testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses only"); 1879, Abbott v. Abbott, 41 Mich. 540, 543, 2 N. W. 810 ("Our statute does not in terms require all the subscribing witnesses to be sworn on a contest, except inferentially in the Probate Court. This requirement, if it exists, is only implied"); 1879, Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206, 223, 3 N. W. 882 (question not decided); 1915, Barney's Will, Barney v. Barney, 187 Mich. 145, 153 N. W. 730 ("the production of both is not mandatory", but here the absence of the second was accounted for, and what the Court meant was that both must be called or accounted for);
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 7268 (for uncontested wills the "testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses only" suffices in the Court's discretion); § 7271 (in case of contest, "all the subscribing witnesses who are within the State, and are competent and able to testify" must be produced);
Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1991, Hem. § 1656 (a will must be proved "by at least one of the subscribing witnesses"); 1848, Evans v. Evans, 10 Sm. & M. 402, 403 (all required); 1850, Kirk v. State, 13 Sm. & M. 406 (for personalty, only one is required to attest; hence, only one need be called); 1850, Ragland v. Green, 14 Sm. & M. 194, 199 (land; all must be called); 1858, Crusoe v. Butler, 36 Sm. & M. 150, 169 (land; only one need be called; preceding cases not cited);
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, §§ 522, 523 (all are required by implication to be called); 1834, Graham v. O'Fallon, 3 Mo. 507, 510 (one suffices); 1917, Bell v. Smith, 271 Mo. 619, 197 S. W. 128 (proof by one only, without accounting for the others, not sufficient); 1921, Lindsay v. Shaner, — Mo. —, 236 S. W. 319 (will-contest; both witnesses required to be produced or accounted for);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10030, 10035 (like Cal. C. C. P., §§ 1308, 1315);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1921, § 1259 (if not contested, the Court "may in its discretion grant probate thereof on the testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses only");
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5873 (in uncontested wills, the Court may admit on the "testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses only"); § 5875 (if contested, "all of the subscribing witnesses", if available, must be examined);
New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 187, § 6 (a non-contested will may be probated on the testimony of one witness, "though the others are living and within process of the Court");
New Jersey: 1806, Den v. Allen, 2 N. J. L. [24] 32 (not clear); 1902, Ward v. Wilcox, 64 N. J. Eq. 303, 51 Atl. 1094 (even for contested wills, one witness may suffice);
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 5878 (the judge shall "examine the attesting witnesses to the will");
New York: S. C. A. 1920, §§ 141, 142 ("two at least" must be produced, "if so many are within the State and competent and able to testify"; where one has been for cause dispensed with, "and one subscribing witness has been examined", the will may be probated on the latter's testimony alone); 1822, Jackson v. Legrange, 19 John. 386 (one of the witnesses is enough, "if he can prove the execution"; "but if the witness cannot prove these requisites, the other witnesses ought to be called"); 1825, Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. 483, 489 (one witness held sufficient; though here one of the other two names was not known); 1825, Jackson v. Luquere, 5 Cow. 221, 225 (one witness sufficient); 1828, Jackson v. Vickory, 1 Wend. 406, 412 (one is sufficient, "if he can prove its perfect execution", otherwise the others must be called); 1859, Hunt v. Johnson, 19 N. Y. 279, 293 (one suffices, if he can prove the necessary facts); 1862, Tarrant v. Ware, 25 N. Y. 425, note (all required); 1862, Auburn Seminary v. Calhoun, 25 N. Y. 422, 425 (same); 1867, Cornell v. Woolley, 42 N. Y. (Keyes) 378, 379 (one suffices);
North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 4144, par. 1 (two witnesses, i.e. all required to attest, must be called); 1906, Steadman v. Steadman, 143 N. C. 345, 55 S. E. 784 (rule applied to a will dated 1877);
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 8640 (uncontested will; the Court "may in its discretion grant probate . . . on the testimony of one only of the subscribing witnesses); § 8641 (contested will; "all the subscribing witnesses" are required);
Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 10516 (Court is to cause "the witnesses to such will" to be examined); § 4156 (certain ancient wills, in certain counties, validated on proof by one witness only);
Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 1104 (probate of uncontested will may be granted on testimony "of one of the subscribing witnesses only"); § 1108 (if a will is contested, "all the subscribing witnesses", if available, must be produced and examined);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 784 (one is sufficient);
Pennsylvania: See post, § 2048 (wills in Pennsylvania); ever, even where the entire number of those required to attest must be called, no more need be called, even though still others have in fact attested.[7]

From the above requirements of the present rule, the following doctrines must be distinguished: (1) By the substantive law prescribing the elements of a valid execution, it may be necessary to prove signing, delivery, presence of the maker, and the like. Now, if the present rule in a given jurisdiction requires but one attester to be called, and if he is unable to testify to all these elements, the present rule is satisfied, but the elements of the execution are not yet made out; so that the proponent may have to call others to prove the remaining facts of his case.[8] This, however, is not because of the present rule, but because otherwise the requirements of his particular case under the substantive law are not fulfilled. It is to this that the common expression refers, in the rulings above cited, that "one witness suffices, provided he can prove the requisites of a valid execution."

(2) Where a statute requires that execution be "proved" by a certain

Philippine Islands: See post, §§ 2050, 2051 (nuncupative and holographic wills); C. C. P. 1901, § 631 (for uncontested wills, one witness only); 1916, Cabang v. Delfinado, 34 P. I. 291 (contested will, all the required number of witnesses must be called; careful opinion by Trent, J.);

Porto Rico: See post, §§ 2050, 2051 (nuncupative and holographic wills); Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1548–1557 ("closed" wills; special rules, based on the Spanish law);

South Carolina: Civ. C. 1922, §§ 5569, 5570 (for probate in common form, one witness is sufficient; in solemn form, all are required); 1798, Hopkins v. De Graffenreid, 2 Bay 187, 192 (one suffices "though if they are all alive it is best to produce them"); 1803, Hopkins v. Albertson, 1 Brev. 240, 2 Bay 484 (one suffices); 1818, Howell v. House, 2 Mill Const. 80, 82 (one suffices);

South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 3211 (uncontested will; Court may admit to probate on testimony of one only); § 3226 (contested will; all must be "produced and examined");

Tennessee: St. 1789, Shannon's C. 1916, §§ 3904, 3910 ("Written wills with witnesses thereto, where not contested, shall be proved by at least one of the subscribing witnesses, if living; and every last will and testament, written or nuncupative, when contested, shall be proved by all the living witnesses, if to be found, and by such other persons as may be produced to support it"); 1812, Allen v. Allen, 2 Overt. 172 (under St. 1784 and 1789, the production of one witness suffices, where the other claims a privilege as interested, the will being contested); 1838, Crockett v. Crockett, Meigs 95 (by St. 1789, all the witnesses are required; semble, not so before); 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 103 (will of personalty; all must be produced);

Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3267 ("one of the subscribing witnesses" suffices);

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7572 (for uncontested wills, one witness; for contested, all);

Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 3220 (for wills uncontested, one suffices); 1855, Dean v. Dean, 27 Vt. 746, 749 (if contested, all should be called); 1866, Thornton v. Thornton, 39 Vt. 122, 151 (all must be called; the Chancery rule followed);

Virginia: 1846, Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. 439, 461 (one at law, two in chancery or probate); 1877, Lamberts v. Cooper, 29 Va. 61, 67, semble (all required);

Washington: St. 1917, Mar. 16, c. 156, (Probate Code, §§ 10–12; by implication, all must be called);

Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 3788 (for uncontested probate, "one of the subscribing witnesses only" suffices); 1897, Jones' Will, 96 Wis. 427, 70 N. W. 685 (holding (1) that the statute applies only to uncontested wills, (2) that by the common law one witness only is required if the other is unavailable, i.e. in effect, both must be called or accounted for);

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 6714 (quoted post, § 1310); § 6690 (for uncontested wills, "one of the subscribing witnesses only", suffices).

[7] 1898, Lamb v. Lippincott, 115 Mich. 611, 73 N. W. 887, semble (not more than the law requires need be called); 1857, Shirley v. Fearne, 33 Miss. 653, 664 (deed; one only being required to attest, one only need prove); 1903, Lorts v. Wash, 175 Mo. 487, 75 S. W. 95. Not decided: 1903, O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788 (whether all must be called, not decided; here the trial Court's ruling that the fifth must be called, being in court, was held not improper). Compare § 1309, post.

[8] See, for an illustration, Burrowes v. Lock, 10 Ves. Jr. 470, 474.

number of witnesses, that number must be called, and each must presumably testify to all the elements of a valid execution. But that is merely a rule of Quantity (post, § 2048), and has nothing to do with the Preferential rule. The requirement may be for example, that two witnesses prove execution; but these two may be any competent persons, whether or not they are the ones who have attested the document, and whether or not the document is attested at all. Statutes of this sort obtain in a few jurisdictions for proof of written wills, and in many jurisdictions for nuncupative wills.[9]

(3) Statutes in a few states have provided that a will defectively probated, in another State or at some prior time, may be accepted as valid. Usually the defect of probate mentioned is that only one attesting witness was called. Such curative or validating statutes virtually represent a special exception to the rule requiring two or more witnesses.[10]

§ 1305. Same: Rule Satisfied when One Competent Witness testifies by Deposition or Affidavit. Supposing the rule in a given jurisdiction to require only one witness to be called to furnish testimony, what amounts to such furnishing of testimony? Must he actually take the stand at trial? It is of course essential that he should be competent to testify.[1] But, assuming him competent, may he not testify by deposition, if the circumstances are such that a deposition would otherwise be admissible; i.e. supposing the requirements of the Hearsay rule satisfied, which allow the use of a deposition or of testimony at a former trial on certain conditions (post, §§ 1373–1384, §§ 1401–1414), is such a mode of testifying sufficient to satisfy the present rule that the testimony of one attesting witness must be offered? There should be no doubt that it is sufficient; the only objection can come through the Hearsay rule, and this is by hypothesis satisfied:

1834, TINDAL, C. J., in Wright v. Tatham, 1 A. & E. 3, 22 (not requiring a surviving witness to be called, where the testimony at a former trial of another deceased subscribing witness was offered): "[If the offer had been merely to prove the handwriting of B., the deceased subscribing witness, the survivor P. would have been preferable.] Such testimony might fairly be considered as evidence of a higher and better nature than mere presumption arising from the proof of the witness' handwriting. . . . The effect, however, of B.'s examination is not merely to raise a presumption; it is evidence as direct to the point in issue, and as precise in its nature and quality, as that of P. when called in person."

Wherever, then, by the general principles of the Hearsay rule, a deposition or former testimony would be receivable, its use will satisfy the present rule

[9] That they do not require the production of attesting witnesses, see the citations ante, § 1290. The general subject of these statutes is examined post, §§ 2048–2051.

[10] 1921, Sluder v. Wolf Mountain L. Co., 181 N. C. 69, 106 S. E. 215 (will probated in Maryland on testimony of one witness only; St. 1913, ex. sess., c. 142, curing defects in will probates, held applicable and valid).

§ 1305. [1] 1897, Houston v. State, 114 Ala. 15, 21 So. 813 (where the one called had subscribed by mark only, and could neither read nor write). The same result is implied in those rulings (post, § 1316) which allow proof of the witness' signature where he has become incompetent since attestation. A blind witness' testimony would apparently suffice (post, § 1316).

Distinguish the question of substantive law whether, under a statute requiring attestation of a will by "credible" witnesses, an attestation is valid if the attester subsequently becomes incompetent; in those cases it is conceded that he would be incompetent to satisfy the rule by testifying at the trial.

requiring an attesting witness to furnish testimony.[2] In some jurisdictions, a statute expressly provides for the use of attesting witnesses' prior testimony or depositions in testamentary cases (post, §§ 1411, 1413, 1416).[3] The practical bearing of this principle is that otherwise the providing of testimony by deposition or former testimony would be insufficient, and some other attesting witness would have to be called or accounted for.

An affidavit is ordinarily not receivable, under the Hearsay rule; but statutes occasionally provide for their employment by attesting witnesses in testamentary cases (post, § 1710); in such instances, they would presumably satisfy the present rule.

§ 1306. Same: When all Witnesses unavailable in Person, One Attestation only need be Authenticated. Under the principles of § 1320 and § 1505, post, when none of the attesters are available in person, the execution may be evidenced by authenticating the signature — i.e. the extra-judicial statement — of the attester; and in many jurisdictions (as noted in § 1320, post) the execution must be so evidenced. In that mode of proof, then, the same doctrine of numbers ought to apply, as regards the number of attestations to be authenticated, i.e. if in the particular jurisdiction the orthodox common-law rule obtains (under § 1304) that one attester's testimony suffices, then proof of one attestation also suffices; or, if the rule (under § 1304) requires the testimony of all the attesters to be furnished, then the attestations of all must be authenticated. The reason is that the attestation is in effect the extra-judicial statement of the attester to the fact of due execution, admitted under the Hearsay exception (post, § 1505), and being admissible so far as concerns the Hearsay rule, it is governed, so far as concerns the present rule, by the general principle in regard to the number of attesters required to be called. In short, if one attester suffices on the stand, one attester suffices when allowed to speak extra-judicially in the attestation-clause.

Accordingly, for attested documents in general, the rule (though perhaps once otherwise [1]) has long been generally settled to be that proof of a single attester's signature suffices,[2] just as the calling of a single attester to the stand

[2] But a deposition testifying to the execution of a specific document must ordinarily be made with the document before the deponent: ante, § 1185.

[3] Distinguish the question post, § 1312, whether the deposition of a witness out of the jurisdiction must be taken.

§ 1306. [1] 1694, Smart v. Williams, Comb. 247 (the two witnesses being dead, "if there be full evidence to prove one of their hands, and any evidence that endeavors have been used to find one to prove the other's hand, it is sufficient").

[2] In the following list, this is the doctrine maintained, except where otherwise noted: Eng. 1744, Omychund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 21, 49, Hardwicke, L. C.; 1798, Adam v. Kerr, 1 B. & P. 360; Can. 1848, Doe v. Twigg, 5 U. C. Q. B. 167, 170; U. S. Federal: 1882, Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32, 2 Sup. 313; Ala. 1843, Thomas v. Wallace, 5 Ala. 268, 275; 1897, Smith v. Keyser, 115 Ala. 455, 22 So. 149; Ga. 1863, Webb v. Wilcher, 33 Ga. 565, 568, semble; Ky. 1829, Fitzhugh v. Croghan, 2 J. J. Marsh. 429, 434; N. Car. 1852, Burnett v. Thompson, 13 Ired. 379, 381; S. Car. 1798, Hopkins v. De Graffenreid, 2 Bay 187, 191; 1803, Turner v. Moore, 1 Brev. 236; 1804, Manigault v. Hampton, 1 Brev. 394, semble (though lapse of time here excused the proof of one of the hands); 1823, Young v. Stockdale, 2 McC. 531 (handwriting of both witnesses required, but that of one was here dispensed with as not attainable); 1827, Sims v. De Graffenreid, 4 McC. 253 (signature of both witnesses required).

suffices. For wills, however, the differences of practice obtaining in regard to the number to be called to the stand (ante, § 1304) are also noticeable here in regard to the number of attesting signatures to be proved, i.e. in some jurisdictions one suffices, in others all are required, with varying distinctions.[3] It will be noted that there is no objection on principle to the former rule merely in the fact that the attestation of the others is also an element in the validity of execution (as of a will); for the express or implied statement of the attester is (post, § 1511) that all the requisites of execution took place, which includes an assertion that the other attestations were made as they purport to be.

The question does not frequently occur for decision, because now by statute, in the instance of most common occurrence — the proof of a will — an express rule as to the number of signatures to be proved is usually laid down.[4]

(g) "Or show his Testimony to be Unavailable"

§ 1308. General Principle of Unavailability. The notion of a rule of preference among witnesses (ante, § 1286) is that the preferred witness must be used if he can be had. Accordingly the rule's force is spent if it appears that his testimony is not available. Conversely, the attester, if he is not produced, must be shown unavailable.

This general notion of unavailability has seldom been broadly defined in judicial opinion. The law upon the subject has usually been enunciated by rulings specifying particular situations as exempting from production: but the following passage is comprehensive:

1842, WOODS, J., in Dunbar v. Madden, 13 N. H. 311, 314: "It is believed to be the well-established general rule of law on this subject, that proof of the handwriting of the witness may be given in all cases when from physical or legal causes it is not in the power of the party to produce the witness at the trial."[1]

[3] New York: 1814, Jackson v. Burton, 11 John. 64 ("There is no fixed rule requiring proof of the hand of all the witnesses"; here one was sufficient); 1822, Jackson v. Legrange, 19 John. 386, 389 (if there is no witness who can prove all the requisites of execution, semble, the hands of all or of the rest must be proved); 1825, Jackson v. Luquere, 5 Cow. 221, 225 (same, because "the testator may have acknowledged his signing to the witnesses separately"); 1828, Jackson v. Vickory, 1 Wend. 406, 412 (approving the preceding); North Carolina: 1837, Bethel v. Moore, 2 Dev. & B. 311, 315, semble (all required); South Carolina: 1803, Hopkins v. Albertson, 2 Bay 484, 1 Brev. 240 (all required, since one may be forged, "in which case it would only be witnessed by two witnesses, which is not an execution" according to law; Bay, J., diss.); 1817, Pearson v. Wightman, 1 Mill Const. 336, 344 semble (all required); 1821, Sampson v. White, 1 McC. 74 semble (one suffices); Tennessee: 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 103 (will of personalty; handwriting of all, if feasible, must be proved).

[4] These statutes, however, deal also with several matters involving proof by signature, and accordingly have been for convenience collected in a single place (post, § 1320), to which reference may be made.

Whether also the maker's signature must be proved, is a different question, dealt with post, §§ 1320, 1513.

§ 1308. [1] It would perhaps have been more accurate to add that it must be beyond the party's power to produce the witness "for purposes of examination", for this more clearly includes the case of a witness rendered incompetent by interest.

Other broad phrasings are as follows: 1779, Abbott v. Plumbe, 1 Doug. 216 (Mansfield, L. C. J.: "unless it appears that his attendance could not be procured"; Buller, J.: "unless some reason can be shown for his absence"); 1813, Logan, J., in Hart v. Coram, 3 Bibb 26 ("in a situation which renders his

§ 1309. All the Attesters must be shown Unavailable. The rule prefers an attester as a witness; the rule's force is therefore not spent until it appears that no attester can be had; in other words, if there is more than one attester, all must be shown unavailable before resort can be had to other testimony. This is ancient and settled doctrine; [1] though it must be noted that, where the law requires a certain number to attest, no more than that number need be accounted for (on the analogy of § 1304, ante), even though more than the required number have attested.[2]

§ 1310. Statutory Enumerations of Causes of Unavailability. Before considering the common-law doctrines as to sufficient causes of unavailability, it may be noted that statutes [1] have almost always come to deal expressly with examination impracticable"); 1806, Taylor, J., in Baker v. Blount, 2 Hayw. 404 ("divers exceptions, founded on necessity"); 1831, Clarke v. Courtney, 5 Pet. 319, 344 (Story, J.: "dead, or cannot be found, or is without the jurisdiction, or otherwise incapable of being produced"); 1814, Hill v. Nall, 2 Overt. 241 (absence "must be accounted for in some satisfactory manner").

§ 1309. [1] Eng. 1744, Omychund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 21, 49 Hardwicke, L. C.; 1764, Forbes v. Wale, 1 W. Bl. 532 (one dead, but the other living); 1790, Wallis v. Delancey, 7 T. R. 266, note (proof that the other witness was in foreign parts, required before going to handwriting); Can. 1848, Doe v. Twigg, 5 U. C. Q. B. 167, 170; U. S. Ga. 1898, Howard v. Russell, 104 Ga. 230, 30 S. E. 802; Ind. 1827, Booker v. Bowles, 1 Blackf. 90; Ky. 1829, Chambers v. Handley, 3 J. J. Marsh. 98; Me. 1845, Woodman v. Segar, 12 Shepl. 90, 92; N. Y. 1826, Jackson v. Gager, 5 Cow. 383, 385; 1830, Jackson v. Christman, 4 Wend. 278, 283; Pa. 1785, Davison v. Bloomer, 1 Dall. 123; 1835, Congregation v. Miles, 4 Watts, 146, 149.

The statutes quoted post, § 1310, usually mention this part of the rule.

[2] 1887, Snider v. Burks, 84 Ala. 53, 57, 4 So. 225 (will; where two of the three were dead, and proof of their handwriting was allowed).

The interesting question here is this: Supposing only one attester to be required to be called as a witness (ante, § 1304), and supposing him to have no recollection when called, may his signature then be proved as sufficient? This question really is: Has the rule been satisfied as to one witness? If so, the rule's force is spent. Now it would seem that at least the witness should, if called, also testify; i.e. it is immaterial (ante, § 1302) how he testifies, so far as the rule's application to himself is concerned; but so far as going on to other evidence is concerned, the other attesters must be first tried if the first attester is unavailable; and the present notion of unavailability of all as a condition precedent must be thought to include not merely an excused non-production, but also a production which through failure of recollection has resulted in no testimony at all. Accordingly, if the first one, though having no present recollection, adopts his attestation as a record of past recollection, he has in effect testified (ante, §§ 745, 754); but if he does not, he is a nullity as a witness, and the remaining attesters must be tried before other evidence can be used.

Compare here the principles of §§ 1302, 1303, ante, and 1315, post.

§ 1310. [1] The statutes deal with the causes noted in the ensuing sections, but to avoid repetition are placed together here. The judicial rulings noted in the later sections, §§ 1311–1318, include those made in application of these statutes to specific causes of non-availability; but rulings merely construing the statute generally are placed here with the statute; for statutes providing that the deposition of a witness out of the State, etc., may be used, see post, § 1411, under Depositions:

CANADA: Alta. Rules of Court 1914, No. 978 (for proof in solemn form, the propounder produces "one or more of the witnesses to the will, if he or they are alive"); N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 28, § 42; St. 1915, c. 23, § 19 (proof in common form may be made "by the oath of a subscribing witness administered in the form B"); §§ 20, 49 ("when all the witnesses to any will are dead, or some are dead and the others reside out of the province, or the whole do so reside", proof "by 'viva voce' testimony of the handwriting of the witnesses and the testator" suffices; on proof in solemn form and whenever the judge may deem necessary, a commission may be ordered to take the testimony of "the witnesses to the will" and others; but for witnesses in the country, the judge shall himself attend to take their evidence, if "such witness is by reason of age, illness, or other cause unable to travel"); Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, § 179 (quoted post, § 1320); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 158, § 18 ("when the witnesses live out of the province, or more than thirty miles distance from the registry, or by reason of age or illness are unable to appear and give evidence in court", their depositions are receivable); Ont. St. 1919, the same subject, especially for will-witnesses. These statutes are often obscurely phrased, and seldom enumerate more than two or three causes for

c. 27, § 1 (probate of the will of a soldier, mariner, or seaman in active military or naval service at the time of execution; if it appears that "the witnesses are dead or are incompetent, or that the whereabouts of the witnesses, or either of them, is unknown", the judge may "accept such evidence as he may consider satisfactory"); P. E. I. St. 1873, c. 21, § 24 ("If the only living witness to any will be out of the jurisdiction, proof of the fact of the death of the other witness, and of the handwriting of either of such witnesses, together with that of the testator, unless he be a marksman, in which case proof of his signature may be dispensed with, shall be sufficient evidence"; unless proof in solemn form is required, "in which case a commission may issue and evidence may be taken under the same in such manner as the surrogate may direct").

UNITED STATES: Alabama: Code 1907, § 6185 ("[a will] must be proved by one or more of the subscribing witnesses, or if they be dead, insane, or out of the State, or have become incompetent since the attestation", then by handwriting); § 6186 ("If none of the subscribing witnesses to such will are produced, their insanity, death, subsequent incompetency, or absence from the State, must be satisfactorily shown before proof of the handwriting of the testator or of any of the subscribing witnesses can be received"); § 4005 ("Whenever the subscribing witnesses to an instrument in writing are dead, insane, incompetent, or are without the state, or their residence is unknown, or being produced, they do not recollect the transaction, then proof of the actual signing by, or of the handwriting of, the alleged maker or subscribing witness shall be received as primary evidence of the fact of execution; and if such evidence be not attainable, the court may admit evidence of the handwriting of the subscribing witnesses, or other secondary evidence, to establish such fact of execution"); 1895, Barnewall v. Murrell, 108 Ala. 366, 378, 18 So. 831 ("if any one or more" is unavailable, the secondary grade may be resorted to; misconstruing the statute and misunderstanding Snider v. Burks, cited supra, § 1309);

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 751 (in contested wills, all must be produced "who are present in the county and who are of sound mind"; if none reside in the county, other testimony may be admitted);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, §§ 10517, 10518 (quoted post, § 1320);

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1315 (in contested wills, "all the subscribing witnesses who are present in the county and who are of sound mind must be produced and examined; and the death, absence, or insanity of any of them must be satisfactorily shown to the Court; if none of the subscribing witnesses reside in the county at the time appointed for proving the will, the Court may admit the testimony of other witnesses to prove the sanity of the testator and the execution of the will; and, as evidence of such execution", it may admit evidence of handwriting); § 1308 (in uncontested probates, the testimony of one subscribing witness suffices; if at the hearing "none of the subscribing witnesses resides in the county, but the deposition of one of them can be taken elsewhere, the Court may direct it to be taken, and may authorize a photographic copy of the will to be made and presented to such witness on his examination, who may be asked the same questions with respect to it and the handwriting of himself, the testator, and the other witness, as would be pertinent and competent if the original will were present. If neither the attendance in court nor the deposition of any of the subscribing witnesses can be procured, the Court may admit the testimony of any other witness as provided in § 1317");

Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 5209 ("in all cases where any one or more of the witnesses to any will shall die or remove to some distant country, unknown to the parties concerned, or cannot be found, so that his or her testimony cannot be procured", other evidence is allowable);

Columbia (District): Code 1919, § 131 ("all the witnesses" to a will "who are within the District and competent to testify must be produced and examined, or the absence of any of them satisfactorily accounted for"); § 132 (in wills of realty, for the testimony of a resident witness "unable from sickness, age, or other cause, to attend court, the register of wills may with such will attend upon said witness and take his testimony. If the testimony of resident attesting witnesses or witness to such will shall have been taken, and any other such witness to said will shall reside out of the District, but within the United States, it shall be sufficient to prove the signature of such witness so out of the District. If the sole witnesses to such will shall be out of said District as aforesaid, or if one or more should be within the United States and one or more be in some foreign country, then it shall be sufficient to take the testimony of any one or all within the United States, as the Court may determine, and to prove the signatures of those whose testimony is not required to be taken. If all such witnesses shall be out of the United States, then it shall be sufficient to take the testimony of such of them as the Court may require, and to prove the signature or signatures of the others"; the testimony of those out of the District to be taken by commission, with the will annexed); excuse. Whatever were the inner intentions of the Legislators, it would be Delaware: Gen. St. 1915, § 3334 ("In case any attesting and subscribing witness to a will shall be dead or not within the State", other proof may be used);

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, §§ 5833–5834 ("if from any cause the witness cannot be produced or sworn", he need not be; when witnesses are "dead, insane, incompetent, or inaccessible, or being produced, do not recollect the transaction", then other evidence is allowable); § 3856 (will-witnesses; they must be produced if "in existence and within the jurisdiction of the Court");
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7455 (like Cal. C. C. P., § 1315);
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 148, § 6 (where "any one or more of the witnesses of any will . . . shall die, be insane, or remove to parts unknown to the parties concerned, so that his or her testimony cannot be procured", handwriting and other evidence may be resorted to);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 3141 (if "dead, out of the State, or have become incompetent from any cause", then proof by handwriting may be used); § 3143 (all the witnesses must be shown unavailable by death, etc., before proving signatures);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 11767 (if "any witness" has "gone to parts unknown", or has become "incompetent" since execution, the will may be allowed "upon such proof as would be satisfactory, and in like manner as if such absent or incompetent witness were dead");
Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, §§ 1646–1654 (death or absence from the State suffices; quoted in full post, §§ 2050, 2051);
Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 93, § 350 ("all the witnesses thereto shall be examined if their attendance can be had"; the depositions may be taken "of any or all of the witnesses thereto who from any cause cannot conveniently attend to the office of said register of wills, wherever he may find such witness or witnesses, whether within the State of Maryland or beyond its jurisdiction"; and further the Orphans' Court "may in their discretion accept proof of any will in the manner prescribed in § 337 of this article, when the attendance of the witnesses thereto cannot in the judgment of the said Court be conveniently had"); Art. 93, § 353 ("If any witness or witnesses to any will shall die before probate thereof, or if at the time of the probate of any will any witness or witnesses shall be nonresidents or beyond the jurisdiction of the Orphans' Court, or if for any other reason their presence cannot be secured, then proof by any credible witness of the signature of the testator or of the signature of any such deceased or absent witness shall have the same effect" as if the witness had testified in court to execution);
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 13783 ("If none of the subscribing witnesses shall reside in this State", other testimony may be admitted or proof of handwriting); § 11821 ("their subsequent incompetency, from whatever cause it may arise", shall not prevent probate of a will otherwise proved); 1897, Sullivan v. Sullivan, 114 Mich. 189, 72 N. W. 135 (How. § 5803 refers to living witnesses; in How. § 5789, "incompetency, from whatever cause it may arise", includes sickness, death, etc.);
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 7269 ("If none of the subscribing witnesses reside in the State", the Court may admit other evidence); § 7271 (contested wills; quoted ante, § 1304);
Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1991, Hem. § 1656 (one at least must prove, "if alive and resident in the State, and competent to testify; but if none of the subscribing witnesses can be produced", then other evidence may be used); § 1992, Hem. § 1657 (if no contest, witness' affidavit suffices);
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 523 (when the attesting witnesses are "dead, insane, or their residences unknown", then other evidence may be used);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10035 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1315);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1921, § 1260 ("If none of the subscribing witnesses shall reside in this State" at the time, the Court may in discretion "admit the testimony of other witnesses"); § 1245 ("subsequent incompetency, from whatever cause it may arise", shall not prevent probate, if other proof is made); § 8853 (if a subscribing witness is absent from the county, other evidence is allowable);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5873 (in uncontested wills, "the testimony of one of the subscribing witnesses only" suffices whenever the witness "resides at a distance of more than 25 miles" from the place of trial, his affidavit to due execution and sanity shall suffice instead of calling him in person); § 5875 (in contested wills, all who "are present in the county, and who are of sound mind", must be examined; "and the death, absence, or insanity of any of them shall be satisfactorily shown to the Court");
New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 187, § 12 (if attesting witnesses "become incompetent from any cause", proof may be made by "other satisfactory evidence");
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 5878 (witnesses shall be examined "if their attendance is obtainable"; "if not", evidence of signatures, etc., is admissible); § 5877 (if any witness is "not a resident of the county", or is "incapacitated by sickness or age from attending", deposition may be taken and used);
New York: S. C. A. 1920, § 142 (testimony of a subscribing witness may be dispensed with in case of "death, absence from the State, incompetency by reason of lunacy or otherwise", or when he "cannot with due diligence be found within the State, or cannot be examined by reason of his physical or mental condition"; surrogate may order testimony taken by com-unfortunate to be obliged to construe the statutory enumeration as exhausmission if the witness "is absent from the State and his testimony can be obtained with reasonable diligence");

North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 4144, par. 1 (will-witness must be called "if living", but if "any one or more" are dead, or reside out of the State, or cannot be found within the State, or are insane, or otherwise incompetent to testify, then proof of handwriting suffices);
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 8641 (in contested probate, all "who are present in the county and who are of sound mind must be produced and examined; if none of the subscribing witnesses resides in the county and is present", other witnesses may be called); § 8642 ("Before the presence of a witness . . . can be dispensed with, it must be shown by affidavit or other competent evidence to the satisfaction of the Court that he is dead or disqualified, or that he cannot after due diligence be found within this State, or if within the State that he is so aged, sick, or infirm that his presence cannot safely be required");
Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 10517 (if "any witness is gone to parts unknown", or if "the witnesses to a will" have become incompetent, or if "the testimony of any witness cannot for any reason be obtained within a reasonable time", then the Court may give probate "upon such proof as would be satisfactory, and in like manner as if such absent or incompetent witness were dead");
Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 1108 (all of the witnesses "who are present in the county, and are of sound mind", must be produced; "and the death, absence, or insanity of any of them must be satisfactorily shown to the Court. If none of the subscribing witnesses reside in the county, and are not present at the time appointed for proving the will", other testimony may be admitted);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 784 (attesting witness must be called "if he be living and within the State and can testify"); St. 1921, Feb. 16, c. 97 (in non-contested probate, affidavits of attesting witnesses "may be used in lieu of the personal presence of said witness", but on motion the Court may require personal production or deposition);
Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 633 ("If none of the subscribing witnesses reside in the Philippine Islands at the time of the death of the testator, the court may admit the testimony of other witnesses to prove the sanity of the testator, and the due execution of the will, although the subscribing witnesses are living; and as evidence of the execution of the will, it may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witnesses, in cases where the names of the witnesses are subscribed to a certificate stating that the will was executed as required in this chapter. In case one or more of the subscribing witnesses has deceased, the sanity of the testator and the due execution of the will may also be proven in the manner in this section heretofore provided");
South Carolina: Civ. C. 1922, §§ 5569, 5570 (on probate of a will in common form, "death or removal from the State" suffices; in solemn form, it suffices if he is "dead or insane");
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 3227 (witnesses "who are present in the county, and are of sound mind must be produced and examined; and the death, absence, or insanity of any of them must be satisfactorily shown to the Court. If none of the witnesses reside in the county, and none are present at the time appointed", then other testimony is admissible); § 3211 (uncontested will; if no witness resides in county, deposition may be taken by commission, with the will or a photographic copy annexed);
Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 3904, 3910 (wills; if not contested, proof suffices by one witness "if living"; if contested by "all the living witnesses if to be found");
Texas: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1911, § 3267 ("If all the witnesses are non-residents of the county, or those resident of the county are unable to attend court", the deposition of one suffices; if none are living, then evidence of handwriting is admissible);
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7572 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1315);
Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 3221 (will-witness; if none reside in the State at the time of the testator's death, then other evidence is receivable);
Virginia: Code 1919, § 5252 (when an attesting witness "resides out of this State" or "is confined in another county or corporation under legal process, or is unable from sickness, age, or any other cause, to attend", the will "may be proved by the deposition of the subscribing witness or witnesses");
Washington: St. 1917, Mar. 16, c. 156, Probate Code, § 12 ("When one of the witnesses to such will shall be examined, and the other witnesses are dead, insane, or their residence be unknown, then proof shall be taken of the handwriting of the testator, and of the witnesses dead, insane, or residence unknown, and all such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove such will"); § 13 ("If it should appear, to the satisfaction of the Court, that all the subscribing witnesses to any such will are dead, insane, or their residence unknown, the Court shall take and receive proof of the handwriting of the testator and subscribing witnesses, to the will, and such other facts and circumstances as would tend to prove the will");
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 3788 ("If none of the subscribing witnesses shall reside in this State . . . or if any one or more of them shall have gone to parts unknown and the Court shall be satisfied that such witness, after due diligence tive; and this the Courts are apparently not inclined to do.[2] The statutes, therefore, leave the broad principle of the common law untouched, and merely confirm or correct its precedents.

§ 1311. Causes of Unavailability; (1) Death; (2) Ancient Document. (1) If there is to be any excuse at all for not producing the attester, it is clear that death supplies it; and this is universally accepted, although the earlier reports show traces of a rigor not recognizing even this exemption.[1]

(2) Where a document purports to be so old that attesters cannot be supposed to be yet alive, the same ground for exemption exists. An "ancient" document, in this sense, has long been defined by a fixed rule, i.e. a document purporting to be thirty years old. This rule applies not only to documents in general,[2] but also to wills.[3] Not only is the production of the attester sued, cannot be found", then other testimony is admissible);

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 6714 (for contested wills, "all the subscribing witnesses who are present in the county and who are of sound mind must be produced and examined; and the death, absence, or insanity of any of them must be satisfactorily shown to the Court; if none of the subscribing witnesses reside in the county", at the time of probate, others may be admitted; and "as evidence of the execution, it may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witnesses or any of them").

[2] 1849, Holmes v. Holloman, 12 Mo. 536 (heirs claimed privilege as parties; production excused; the statutory exemptions for death, etc., held not to be taken as " 'expressio unius exclusio alterius', but are merely a codification of what was already the common law, and a recognition of the principle upon which secondary evidence may be admitted"); 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. Tenn. 97, 99.

§ 1311. [1] 1673, Phillips v. Crawly, Freeman 83 (death sufficient); 1840, Henley v. Phillips, 2 Atk. 48 (same); 1748, Grayson v. Atkinson, 2 Ves. Sr. 454, 460 (Hardwicke, L. C.: "If the witness was dead, it might possibly be sufficient; that is the act of God"); 1796, Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 265 (death sufficient); 1874, Harris v. Tisereau, 52 Ga. 153, 163 (Code § 2431 does not prohibit probate of will on the death of witnesses, except by Probate Court); 1890, Maxwell v. Hill, 89 Tenn. 584, 15 S. W. 253 (death suffices).

[2] England: 1788, R. v. Farringdon, 2 T. R. 466 (certificate of pauper settlement required to be attested); 1795, Chelsea Water Works v. Cowper, 1 Esp. 275 (bond); 1798, Marsh v. Collnett, 2 Esp. 665 (Yates, J., ex rel. Kenyon, L. C. J., ruled "that he would not break in upon a rule so well established as that deeds of 30 years' standing proved themselves, by requiring the subscribing witness to be called"); 1828, Doe v. Wolley, 8 B. & C. 22, 24 ("the principle . . . is that the witnesses may be presumed to have died"; he need not be called, even if in fact he is living); 1845, Lord Gosford v. Robb, 8 Ir. L. R. 217, 219, semble (per Pennefather, C. J.); Canada: 1848, Doe v. Turnbull, 5 U. C. Q. B. 129, 131 (even if the witness is in fact alive); 1864, Orser v. Vernon, 14 U. C. C. P. 573, 587, semble; United States: Fed. 1830, Hinde v. Vatlier, 1 McLean 110, 116; 1835, Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. 663, 674 (applicable to all deeds of thirty years' standing, no matter how proved); 1920, Smythe v. New Providence, 3d C. C. A., 263 Fed. 481 (town bonds of the year 1868; signatures of the subscribing witnesses not required to be proved); Ala. Code 1907, § 4004, par. 1; 1888, Allison v. Little, 85 Ala. 512, 516, 5 So. 221; 1904, O'Neal v. Tennessee C. I. & R. Co., 140 Ala. 378, 37 So. 275; Ga. Code 1895, § 5244; 1850, Settle v. Allison, 8 Ga. 201, 205 (even if the witnesses are alive); 1876, Gardner v. Granniss, 57 Ga. 539, 555 (same); Ill. 1858, Smith v. Rankin, 20 Ill. 14, 23 (but not if the witness is living); Mass. 1900, Cunningham v. Davis, 175 Mass. 213, 56 N. E. 2 (even if the witness is alive and in court); Mo. 1874, Shaw v. Pershing, 57 Mo. 416, 421 (even though the witnesses were alive); N. Y. 1808, Jackson v. Blanshan, 3 Johns. 292, 295, 298, semble (even where the witness is alive); 1826, Jackson v. Thompson, 6 Cow. 178, 180; 1830, Jackson v. Christman, 4 Wend. 278, 282 (even where the witness is alive and available); 1840, Northrop v. Wright, 24 Wend. 221, 228 (same); 1847, Willson v. Betts, 4 Den. 201, 212; N. C. 1793, Jones v. Brinkley, 1 Hayw. 20; Pa. 1811, Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binn. 314, 326; 1823, McGennis v. Allison, 10 S. & R. 197, 199 ("perhaps . . . even if they were in full life"); S. C. 1840, Edmonston v. Hughes, Cheves 81, 84, semble.

[3] Eng. 1803, M'Kenire v. Fraser, 9 Ves. Jr. 5, semble; 1817, Rancliffe v. Parkyns, 6 Dow 149, 202, semble; 1826, Doe v. Passingham, 2 C. & P. 440; 1826, Doe v. Deakin, 3 C. & P. 402 (Vaughan, B.: "The rule of 30 years is founded on the presumption that the witnesses are dead"); 1828, Doe v. Wolley, 8 B. & C. 22; 1835, Doe v. Burdett, 4 A. & E. 1, 19 ("even excused, even though he is alive and available,[4] but the execution is upon certain other evidence assumed to have been valid; in this aspect, the rule for ancient documents, with the history of its peculiar limitation to thirty years, is elsewhere examined (post, §§ 2137–2146).

§ 1312. Same: (3) Absence from the Jurisdiction. A person not within the jurisdiction is not compellable by the Court's process to appear, and therefore is in effect unavailable as a witness:

1842, WOODS, J., in Dunbar v. Madden, 13 N. H. 311, 313: "The reason is that the process of the Court cannot reach the witness effectively in a foreign government or country, and consequently it is not within the power of the party, legally speaking, to produce him."

This general doctrine, though not positively established till the end of the 1700s,[1] is now universally accepted;[2] although there is considerable difference were they all alive"); U. S. 1917, Jarboe's Appeal, 91 Conn. 265, 99 Atl. 563 (will of 1860; witness not accounted for nor his signature proved); 1820, Duncan v. Beard, 2 N. & McC. S. Car. 400, 408 (in the form of a presumption of death).

[4] See the citations in the preceding notes. Distinguish the following ruling: 1815, Manby v. Curtis, 1 Price 225 (a receipt of 53 years before, offered as a hearsay statement against interest, excluded on hearsay grounds, because the writer was not shown deceased; the authentication question apparently not decided).

§ 1312. [1] 1673, Phillips v. Crawly, Freeman 83 (attested deed; "because they did not prove the witnesses dead, nor that they were gone to sea — though they alleged it — it was not permitted at first to be given in evidence"); 1740, Henley v. Phillips, 2 Atk. 48 (requiring stricter proof of death for witnesses living long abroad, i.e. apparently because if really alive their presence abroad would not satisfy the rule); 1779, Coghlan v. Williamson, 1 Doug. 93 (sufficient, where the witness was shown to have gone to India five years before); 1786, St. 26 Geo. III. c. 57 (where the attesting witness resides in the East Indies, proof of the handwriting of witness and party suffices); 1792, Holmes v. Pontin, Peake 99 (the witness was in France, and would not come over; Kenyon, L. C. J., referring to the preceding case: "It was considered as an innovation at the time; but was found to be so beneficial that it has since been adhered to"); 1793, Cooper v. Marsden, 1 Esp. 1 ("where it appeared that he was abroad", sufficient); 1796, Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 265 ("If residing abroad, by sending out a commission to examine him, or at least, by proving his handwriting, which last indeed is a relaxation of the old rule, and admitted only of late years"); 1798, Adam v. Kerr, 1 B. & P. 360 (out of the jurisdiction, sufficient).

[2] ENGLAND: 1802, Prince v. Blackburn, 2 East 250 (here the general doctrine was for the first time definitely established; moreover, mere absence, not necessarily domicile or permanent absence, suffices); 1809, Ward v. Wells, 1 Taunt. 461 (mere absence suffices); 1815, Hodnett v. Forman, 1 Stark. 90 (mere absence, without a request by the party to the witness to attend, sufficient); 1828, Kay v. Brookman, 3 C. & P. 555 (proof of disappearance, with intention of leaving the country, sufficient); 1840, Glubb v. Edwards, 2 Moo. & Rob. 300, Maule, J. (here the point was raised because the Common Law Courts had recently been given power to issue a foreign commission).

UNITED STATES: here the statutes ante, § 1310, are to be compared; the fact of absence was sufficient in the following cases, except as otherwise noted: Federal: 1804, Jones v. Lovell, 1 Cr. C. C. 183 (removal from the jurisdiction, sufficient); 1805, Welford v. Eakin, 1 Cr. C. C. 264 (residence without, sufficient); 1809, Cooke v. Woodrow, 5 Cr. 13 (witness going out of district and last heard of in Norfolk; handwriting not allowed, without proof of inability to find at N.); Alabama: 1851, Foote v. Cobb, 18 Ala. 585, 587 ("residing"); 1881, Allred v. Elliott, 71 Ala. 224, 226 (residence in another county, insufficient; "absent from the State when last heard from", sufficient); 1884, Guice v. Thornton, 76 Ala. 466, 473 ("absent from the State"); 1890, Caldwell v. Pollak, 91 Ala. 353, 359, 8 So. 546 ("residing"); 1897, Smith v. Keyser, 115 Ala. 455, 22 So. 149; Arkansas: 1838, Brown v. Hicks, 1 Ark. 233, 242 (absence from home, to return in a few months, insufficient); 1839, Wilson v. Royston, 2 Ark. 315, 327 (deed executed in another State; further evidence of witnesses' absence from jurisdiction required); 1860, Tatum v. Mohr, 21 Ark. 349, 352 ("being out of the jurisdiction"; but in fact he resided without); California: 1859, Stevens v. Irwin, 12 Cal. 306 (out of the county, not sufficient); Georgia: 1906, Terry v. Broadhurst, 127 Ga. 212, 56 S. E. 282 (attendance at school in another State, sufficient); Hawaii: 1856, Bullions v. Loring, 1 Haw. 209, 213 (residence out of the kingdom, held here sufficient); Illinois: 1844, Wiley v. Bean, 6 Ill. 302, 305 (absence from the State, sufficient); 1848, Mariner v. Saunders, 10 Ill. 113, 121 (residence in another State, sufficient); Indiana: 1819, Jones v. Cooprider, 1 Blackf. 46 (residence in another State, sufficient); 1828, Ungles v. Graves, 2 Blackf. 191 (same); 1845, State v. Bodly, 7 Blackf. 355, 357 (same); 1881, Herbert v. Berrier, 81 Ind. 1, 7 (will-statute applied); Iowa: 1870, Ballinger v. Davis, 29 Ia. 512 (absence from the jurisdiction in unknown place, sufficient); Kentucky: 1812, M'Dowell v. Hall, 2 Bibb 610, 612; 1813, Hart v. Coram, 3 Bibb 26 ("in a situation which renders his examination impracticable, as being absent in a foreign country or beyond the process of the Court or the Court's control"; here not shown on the facts); 1815, Clarke v. Bartlett, 4 Bibb 201, 203 (residence in another State, sufficient); 1816, Sentney v. Overton, 4 Bibb 445 (removal to an adjoining State, sufficient); 1817, M'Cord v. Johnson, ib. 531 (in an adjoining State on a transient visit, insufficient, though perhaps not "actual domicile" abroad would be necessary, and "long absence" might suffice); 1817, Creighton v. Johnson, Litt. Sel. C. 240 (transient absence in the adjoining State, insufficient); 1820, Bowman v. Bartlett, 3 A. K. Marsh. 86, 91 ("the absence from a State, or rather his residing abroad", suffices), 1822, Turner v. Turner, 1 Litt. 101, 104 ("out of the State"; sufficient in case of a will, provided one witness has proved the will); 1829, Kemper v. Pryor, 1 J. J. Marsh. 598 (removal from the State, and diligent inquiry, sufficient); Louisiana: 1819, Lynch v. Postlethwaite, 7 Mart. 69, 209 (absence from jurisdiction); 1823, Crouse v. Duffield, 12 Mart. 539, 542 (same); 1825, Villere v. Armstrong, 4 Mart. N. s. 21 ("left the State"); Maine: 1840, Emery v. Twombly, 5 Shepl. 65 (absence suffices; even though they lived within 30 miles of the place of trial); Massachusetts: 1809, Dudley v. Sumner, 5 Mass. 439, 444, 462, semble (absence from jurisdiction); 1814, Homer v. Wallis, 11 Mass. 309, 311 (same); 1851, Gelott v. Goodspeed, 8 Cush. 411 (same); 1860 Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray 91, 95 (same); Mississippi: 1838, Downs v. Downs, 2 How. 915, 924 (gone from the jurisdiction, sufficient); Missouri: 1826, Little v. Chauvin, 1 Mo. 626, 631 (residence out of the State, sufficient); 1838, Maupin v. Triplett, 5 Mo. 422 (in another county, not sufficient); 1843, Lawless v. Guelbreth, 8 Mo. 139 (residence just over the State line, sufficient); 1857, Clardy v. Richardson, 24 Mo. 295, 296 (residence out of the State, sufficient); Nebraska: 1894, Jewell v. Chamberlain, 41 Nebr. 254, 59 N. W. 784 (absence from the State suffices under Code § 343); New Hampshire: 1835, Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 N. H. 475, 483 (absence from jurisdiction); 1842, Dunbar v. Madden, 13 N. H. 311, 313 (same); New Jersey: 1909, Worman v. Seybert, 78 N. J. L. 176, 73 Atl. 529 (residence in Philadelphia, held to suffice); North Carolina: 1806, Baker v. Blount, 2 Hayw. 404 (the witness had fraudulently evaded process by removing from the county; held sufficient); 1826, Selby v. Clark, 4 Hawks 265, 273 (temporary absence without change of domicile, held usually not sufficient, because of the danger of collusion; but absence as a member of Congress, sufficient; permanent absence is always sufficient); 1814, Allen v. Martin, 1 Law Repos. 373 ("living beyond the process of the Court", held sufficient); 1832, Crowell v. Kirk, 2 Dev. 355, 356, per Daniel, J. (that he "is abroad", is sufficient); 1837, Bethel v. Moore, 2 Dev. & B. 311 (living in another State, sufficient); 1848, Edwards v. Sullivan, 8 Ired. 302, 305 (same); Ohio: 1824, Clark v. Boyd, 2 Oh. 280 (57) (absence from jurisdiction); 1858, Richards v. Skiff, 8 Oh. St. 586 (same); Pennsylvania: 1807, Engles v. Burlington, 4 Yeates 345 (will; absence from jurisdiction); 1810, Clark v. Sanderson, 3 Binn. 192, 195 (bond; "it is always to be understood that there must be no fraud or collusion in getting the witness out of the way"); 1816, Hautz v. Rough, 1 S. & R. 349 (residence without the county, not sufficient); South Carolina: 1902, Swancey v. Parrish, 62 S. C. 240, 40 S. E. 554 (out of the jurisdiction, sufficient); Tennessee: 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 99 (the statutory phrase, for contested wills, "if to be found", includes absence from the State, as exempting from production; but if his deposition has in fact been obtained, it must be read); 1855, Herrel v. Ward, 2 Sneed 610, 613 (absence "for a temporary purpose, where the return of the witness within a limited time is reasonably certain", insufficient; though not "as an inflexible rule", e.g. where the absence has been long, no collusion is suspected, and diligence has been used); Texas: 1854, Frazier v. Moore, 11 Tex. 755 (absence from jurisdiction); Vermont: 1800, Pearl v. Allen, 1 Tyl. 4 (if residing within process of the Court, he must be produced); Virginia: 1826, Nalle v. Fenwick, 4 Rand. 585, 589, semble (absence from the State, sufficient; but here it was alleged that "every legal means had been taken to procure their attendance"); 1827, Smith v. Jones, 6 Rand. 33, 37 ("removed from the State"; sufficient); Wisconsin: 1845, Garrison v. Owens, 1 Pinney 544 (absence from jurisdiction); 1863, Silverman v. Blake, 17 Wis. 213, semble (same).

of phrasing, even within the same Court's rulings, as to the sufficiency of mere temporary absence, and not permanent residence, without the jurisdiction.

It is immaterial that the proponent knew of the witness' intended absence and might have taken his deposition;[3] though a collusive procurement of the witness' absence would of course annul the excuse for non-production.[4] But at least must not the proponent have sought to obtain (by commission or otherwise) his deposition while in absence? Can it be said that the witness' testimony is unavailable, so long as it does not appear that his deposition could not with due diligence have been procured? The answer to this was at first given in the negative, — that is to say, in the period when the present excuse was with hesitation beginning to be accepted, this proviso as to taking the deposition was insisted on.[5] But the extreme inconvenience of sending abroad for the deposition was soon recognized as disproportionate to the benefit obtained; and in most jurisdictions to-day[6] no such proviso

[3] 1859, Jackson v. F. R. W. Co., 14 Cal. 18, 22 (lack of diligence, in not obtaining his testimony before departure, immaterial).

[4] See Clark v. Sanderson, Harrel v. Ward, and other cases in note 2, supra.

[5] 1748, Grayson v. Atkinson, 2 Ves. Sr. 454, 460 (Hardwicke, L. C.: "It is not necessary to presume that it is out of your power to get him if you please; . . . you may have a commission to examine the witness beyond sea; for in this Court you are not under the difficulty as in a Court of law where it must be 'viva voce'"); 1793, Fitzherbert v. Fitzherbert, 4 Bro. C. C. 231 (witness in America; commission required); 1796, Barnes v. Trompowsky (see quotation in note 1, supra).

[6] Besides the following cases, compare the statutes ante, § 1310:

ENGLAND: 1751, Webb v. St. Lawrence, 3 Bro. P. C. 640, 645 (witness in Holland; deposition not required); 1752, Banks v. Farquharson, 1 Dick. 167 (same; witness in Scotland); 1790, Wallis v. Delancey, 7 T. R. 266, note (Kenyon, L. C. J.: "The expense of sending out a commission would in many cases be more than the value of the sum in dispute"); 1800, Carrington v. Payne, 5 Ves. Jr. 404, 411 (not required; here, a will).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1804, Jones v. Lowell, 1 Cr. C. C. 183 (not required); Alabama: Ala. Code 1907, § 6187 (the judge "may issue a commission"); § 4005 (quoted, ante, § 1310); Georgia: 1850, Settle v. Allison, 8 Ga. 201, 205 (not required); Indiana: 1819, Jones v. Cooprider, 1 Blackf. 46 (not required); 1845, State v. Bodly, 7 Blackf. 355, 357 (same, even though the opponent has had it taken; but if the proponent uses this deposition, it is not improper to reject proof by handwriting of the witness); Iowa: 1870, Ballinger v. Davis, 29 Ia. 512 (not required); 1897, Allison's Estate, 104 Ia. 130, 73 N. W. 489 (same: even though the deposition is in fact obtainable, and was taken upon other points, proof of handwriting suffices; the fact of non-residence allows the use of the inferior grade); Kentucky: 1816, Sentney v. Overton, 4 Bibb 445, 447 (not required; "though the Court has the power to award the commission, it has no power to coerce its execution"); 1820, Bowman v. Bartlett, 3 A. K. Marsh. 86, 91 (same); 1822, Turner v. Turner, 1 Litt. 101, 104 (same); New Hampshire: 1842, Dunbar v. Madden, 13 N. H. 311, 316 (that the witness' whereabouts is known, immaterial); North Carolina: 1798, Irving v. Irving, 2 Hayw. 27 (not required); 1814, Allen v. Martin, 1 Law Repos. N. C. 373 (same); 1837, Bethell v. Moore, 2 Dev. & B. 311, 314 (same); Pennsylvania: 1810, Clark v. Sanderson, 3 Binn. 192, 196 (same); South Carolina: 1792, Oliphant v. Taggart, 1 Bay 255 (handwriting of the witness usually sufficient; but here, the opponent producing an affidavit of the witness denying it, a commission abroad was ordered); 1804, Price v. M'Gee, 1 Brev. 373, 376 (not required); 1853, Brown v. Wood, 6 Rich. Eq. 155, 165, semble (same); South Dakota: 1904, Schouweiler v. McCaull, 18 S. D. 70, 99 N. W. 95 (one witness called, the other out of the county; other testimony then allowed); Tennessee: 1807, Love v. Peyton, 1 Overt. 225 (if in another domestic State, deposition should be taken); 1809, Shepherd v. Goss, 1 Overt. 487 (same: otherwise, if he has "removed to some foreign nation"); 1818, Stump v. Hughes, 5 Hayw. 93 (preceding cases overruled; residence in another domestic State is sufficient, or absence there till the end of the trial; the delay, risk, and inconvenience of sending for a deposition are unnecessary); 1818, Den v. Mayfield, 5 Hayw. 121 (same; here, absence for 10 years, unheard from); 1838, Crockett v. Crockett, Meigs 95 (neither summons by subpœna nor attempt to get deposition is necessary); Vermont: 1803, Rich v. Trimble, 2 Tyl. 349 (though residing without the State, if his residence is known and is within reasonable distance, deposition required); 1888, Denny v. Pinney, 60 Vt. 525, 527, 12 Atl. 108 (the witness resided in another State, but had stayed for a few days since action begun at the testatrix' town in the State; deposition not required).

is recognized, and it is not necessary to have endeavored to obtain the absent witness' deposition.[7]

The sufficiency of the proof of absence at the time of trial has been the subject of many rulings, which cannot profitably be treated as precedents;[8] the matter should be left entirely to the discretion of the trial Court.[9] For one detail, however, there seems to have arisen a uniform rule, namely, that the attester's residence abroad at the time of execution — or, in another form, the occurrence abroad of the acts of execution and attestation — is sufficient proof that the attester is out of the jurisdiction at the time of the trial.[10]

§ 1313. Same: (4) Absence in Unknown Parts. If the attester's whereabouts cannot be discovered, he is practically unavailable;) and this (though historically there was the same hesitation that has been noted for the preceding exemptions [1]) is now universally recognized as an excuse for not pro-

[7] Distinguish, however, the question whether the absent witness' deposition may be taken and used. This depends on the general principles applicable to the use of depositions, post, §§ 1373, 1402, 1417; statutes sometimes expressly provide for the depositions of attesting witnesses. So far as the deposition is thus allowable, its use satisfies the present rule requiring the attester's "testimony", as noted ante, § 1305.

[8] See the rulings passim in note 2, supra, and also the following: Eng. 1790, Wallis v. Delancey, 7 T. R. 266, note (evidence that there had been abroad in 1774, at the place of execution, a person of the same name, held sufficient to show absence now); 1849, Austin v. Rumsey, 2 C. & K. 736 (inquiry of the witness' parents, sufficient); U. S. Fed. 1802, Rhodes v. Rigg, 1 Cr. C. C. 87; Ark. 1842, Nicks v. Rector, 4 Ark. 251, 277 (departure from the State four years before, and no news from him, sufficient); 1862, Delony v. Delony, 24 Ark. 7, 11 (evidence of absence insufficient on the facts); Ind. 1849, Gordon v. Miller, 1 Ind. 531 (continued residence abroad up to 15 months previous, held sufficient); Mo. 1838, Waldo v. Russell, 5 Mo. 387, 394 ("reported and believed to have died in Texas", sufficient).

For admissibility of the replies received while searching, as evidence of diligence, see the following: 1907, Cuff v. Frazee S. & C. Co., 14 Ont. L. R. 263 (former witness now absent; inquiries and replies, excluded as evidence of absence, but considered as evidence of inability to find), and compare the cases cited ante, §§ 261, 664, 1196, and post, § 1789.

For the admissibility of the witness' declarations of intent not to return, see post, § 1725.

[9] 1876, Jones v. Roberts, 65 Me. 273, 276.

[10] Cal. 1864, Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393, 408 (attestation out of the State by non-residents, sufficient, in the absence of evidence to show that the witness ever was within the State); 1865, McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 Cal. 238, 245 (same); 1865, McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300, 310 (same); Ky. 1817, Gibbs v. Cook, 4 Bibb 535, 536 (parties' residence abroad, etc., on the facts held to raise presumption of witness' absence); 1820, Bowman v. Bartlett, 3 A. K. Marsh. 86, 91 (residence of the maker abroad, etc., on the facts held to raise presumption of witness' residence abroad); La. 1823, Crouse v. Duffield, 12 Mart. La. 539, 542 (execution abroad; witnesses presumed abroad); 1832, Barfield v. Hewlett, 4 La. 118, 119 (same); Mass. 1839, Valentine v. Piper, 22 Pick. 85 ("If the instrument was apparently executed in a foreign country, we think that fact raised a sufficient presumption that the subscribing witnesses were not within the jurisdiction of the Court."); Mo. 1857, Clardy v. Richardson, 24 Mo. 295, 297 (non-residence at time of execution raises a presumption of continued non-residence); Vt. 1858, Sherman v. Transp. Co., 31 Vt. 162, 165, 174 (witness to document executed out of the State; no evidence of the witnesses having been in the State; held properly dispensed with; Valentine v. Piper approved); Wyo. 1907, Boswell v. First National Bank, 16 Wyo. 161, 92 Pac. 624 (residence and attestation in other States, with other evidence, held to raise the presumption of absence, so as to exempt from proof the witnesses' signatures).

Contra: 1826, Jackson v. Gager, 5 Cow. 383, 385 (power of attorney executed in Massachusetts; witnesses not presumed out of the jurisdiction).

§ 1313. [1] 1701, Anon., 12 Mod. 607 ("that he has made strict enquiry after them and cannot hear of them", sufficient); 1796, Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 265 (see quotation in note 4, infra); 1808, Crosby v. Percy, 1 Taunt. 364, 366 (Mansfield, C. J.: "The law has been much relaxed in this particular within the period of my practice; the increased commerce of the country, and the number of persons who every year go out of it, first rendered it necessary to admit secondary evidence in the case

ducing him.[2] But it is necessary, first, to exclude the suspicion that the witness may be secreting himself by collusion with the proponent,[3] and, secondly, to show that the proponent's ignorance of his whereabouts is not due to lack of effort to discover him; accordingly, it must be shown that honest and diligent search for the attester has been made.[4]

The sufficiency of this search has been dealt with in a number of rulings, not profitable for use as precedents; [5] the matter should be left entirely to the determination of the trial Court.[6] That the search should include a sheriff's search with subpœna seems unnecessary; [7] nor, on the other hand, should a sheriff's search and return of "not found" be invariably sufficient.[8] of witnesses being abroad; the dispensation was next extended to the case of witnesses who were not to be found").

[2] Eng. 1810, Wardell v. Fermour, 2 Camp. 282; U. S. Federal: 1802, Broadwell v. McClish, 1 Cr. C. C. 4; Ark. 1910, Thompson v. King, 95 Ark. 549, 129 S. W. 798; Ill. 1875, Hartford L. Ins. Co. v. Gray, 80 Ill. 28; Pa. 1815, Powers v. M'Ferran, 1 S. & R. 44, 46; Tenn. 1855, Harrel v. Ward, 2 Sneed 610, 614, semble.

[3] 1810, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Wardell v. Fermour, 2 Camp. 283: "I will watch very narrowly your proof of search. . . . If the attesting witness knows too much of the transaction, and his examination would hazard the validity of the deed, he may be sent out of the way, and we may be amused at the trial with an account of his having absconded."

[4] Various phrasings of this requirement are as follows: 1796, Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 265 ("If no intelligence can be obtained respecting the subscribing witness after reasonable inquiry has been made"; . . . if he "has been sought for and could not be found, so as to furnish a presumption that he is dead"); 1802, Cunliffe v. Sefton, 2 East 183 ("due diligence without effect"; "diligent inquiry"; here the place of execution was unknown, and search at the places of obligor and obligee was held sufficient); 1808, Crosby v. Percy, 1 Taunt. 364 (Mansfield, C. J.: "In all cases it must appear to the Court that there was a fair, serious, and diligent inquiry, and no evasion, or attempt to keep the witness out of the way"; here, on inquiry at the last abode, the party had been told that the witness had absconded to escape his creditors; advertising was not required); 1811, Waring v. Bowles, 4 Taunt. 132 (the Court required the party to show, not merely diligent inquiry, but "the particular search that had been made for the witness, and where he had been last seen or known to reside, and when he was last heard of, and what endeavors had been made to find him"); 1853, Crane v. Ayre, 2 All. N. Br. 577 ("all the circumstances must therefore be looked to in each case"); 1804, Manigault v. Hampton, 1 Brev. S. C. 394 (reasonable diligence required).

[5] ENGLAND: 1810, Parker v. Hoskins, 2 Taunt. 223; 1821, Burt v. Walker, 4 B. & Ald. 697 (the witness a clerk to the defendant, and disappearing somewhat suddenly; search held sufficient on the facts); 1822, Pytt v. Griffith, 6 Moore 538 (not sufficient where the witness was merely "keeping out of the way to avoid an arrest" for debt, unless at the instance of the opponent; unsound); 1823, James v. Parnell, Turn. & R. 417; 1842, Falmouth v. Roberts, 9 M. & W. 469, 471.

CANADA: 1846, Tylden v. Bullen, 3 U. C. Q. B. 10; 1848, Doe v. Twigg, 5 id. 167, 170.

UNITED STATES: California: 1853, Powell v. Hendricks, 3 Cal. 427, 430; Louisiana: 1839, Thompson v. Wilson, 13 La. 138, 142; Maine: 1820, Whittemore v. Brooks, 1 Greenl. 57; Michigan: 1879, McMillan v. Larned, 41 Mich. 521, 522, 2 N. W. 662; New York: 1811, Mills v. Twist, 8 John. 121; 1814, Jackson v. Burton, 11 John. 64; 1828, Jackson v. Cody, 9 Cow. 140, 149; 1832, Jackson v. Chamberlain, 8 Wend. 620, 624; 1833, Pelletreau v. Jackson, 11 Wend. 110, 123; 1838, Van Dyne v. Thayre, 19 Wend. 162, 165; Pennsylvania: 1847, Truby v. Byers, 6 Pa. St. 347 (mere ignorance of abode, without search, not enough); 1892, Gallagher v. Assoc. Co., 149 Pa. 25, 24 Atl. 115 (search for one having no fixed place of abode and going from place to place to get employment, held sufficient on the facts).

For the admissibility of the replies received in the search, as evidence of diligence, see cases cited ante, §§ 261, 664, 1196 and post, §§ 1725 and 1789.

[6] 1845, Woodman v. Segar, 12 Shepl. Me. 90, 92 ("in some measure"); 1823, McGennis v. Allison, 10 S. & R. Pa. 197, 200 (Duncan, J.: "What is reasonable inquiry? There can be no fixed and settled rule; every case must stand on its own bottom; and this point must be left with some latitude of discretion").

[7] 1829, Dismukes v. Musgrove, 8 Mart. N. s. 375, 379. Contra: 1838, Crockett v. Crockett, Meigs Tenn. 95 (return of subpœna, semble, necessary where the witness is not specifically shown to be out of the State).

[8] 1836, Jerman v. Hudson, 2 Harringt. Del. 134 (subpœna, and return "not found", suffi-

§ 1314. Same: (5) Witness' Name Unknown, through Loss or Illegibility of Document. It is clear that where the very name of the attester cannot be ascertained, the attester is unavailable for the purpose of furnishing his testimony. This situation occurs where the document is lost; here the proponent is exempt from producing the attester; [1] unless of course the name has otherwise before trial become known to the proponent;[2] for in that case his testimony, though not of great value without the document before him, might at least help to establish the fact that such a document did or did not once exist.[3]

Where the name of the attester is illegible, the same reason for exemption from production exists.[4]

§ 1315. Same: (6) Illness or Infirmity; (7) Failure of Memory; (8) Imprisonment. (6) When the attester is at the time of trial so ill, or so infirm from age, that it is impracticable, without danger to his life or health, to compel his attendance in Court, his production should be dispensed with.[1] There is little judicial authority on the subject, partly because statutes applicable to will-witnesses have frequently dealt with the point; in applying the statutory terms the analogies of the statutes excusing the non-attendance of deponents (post, § 1406) would be useful. But though attendance at the trial would seem properly excused, there is no reason why at least the attester's deposition should not be taken.[2]

(7) A failure of memory, so far as it involves a general mental disability, cient); 1847, Sexton v. McGill, 2 La. An. 190, 195 (same; insufficient); 1833, M'Donald v. M'Donald, 5 Yerg. Tenn. 307 ("if to be found", in St. 1789, c. 23, § 1, as to will-witnesses, is satisfied by a return of "not found" by the officer having the subpœna).

§ 1314. [1] England: 1796, Keeling v. Ball, Peake Add. Cas. 88 ("It did not appear that the plaintiff could by any possibility know who the subscribing witnesses were", and proof by the extra-judicial admissions of the maker allowed); 1853, R. v. St. Giles, 1 E. & B. 642 (per Erle, J., applying it to the case where the name is known, but the person cannot be found or identified; "it is the case of an attesting witness, unknown"); United States: Ga. 1854, Felton v. Pitman, 14 Ga. 530, 535 (deed lost and witnesses unknown; exempted); 1887, Terry v. Rodahan, 79 Ga. 278, 294, 5 S. E. 38 (deed lost and witnesses dead; exempted); 1892, Turner v. Cates, 90 Ga. 731, 744, 16 S. E. 971 (neither witness nor maker is then preferred); Me. 1831, Hewes v. Wiswell, 8 Greenl. 94, 96; 1833, Mellen, C. J., in Knox v. Silloway, 1 Fairf. 201, 219 (even though the witness be present; this seems unsound); Mass. 1829, Hathaway v. Spooner, 9 Pick. 23, 25; Mich. 1875, Raynor v. Norton, 31 Mich. 210, 213; N. H. 1827, Colby v. Kenniston, 4 N. H. 262, 265; 1835, Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 N. H. 475, 483, semble; N. J. 1832, Kingwood v. Bethlehem, 13 N. J. L. 221, 226 (indenture of apprenticeship; calling excused, "for the knowledge of them had been lost with the indenture itself"); N. Y. 1819, Jackson v. Kingsley, 17 John. 158, 160, semble (witnesses' names torn off); 1831, Jackson v. Vail, 7 Wend. 125, 129; S. C. 1880, Congdon v. Morgan, 14 S. C. 587, 593.

Contra: 1819, Gillies v. Smithers, 2 Stark. 528 (Abbott, C. J.: "The evidence of the attesting witness is essential to show that the bonds ever existed"; here they were said to have been destroyed).

[2] 1859, Smith v. Brannan, 13 Cal. 107, 115 (calling required, where by a copy the names of the witnesses appeared); 1819, McMahan v. McGrady, 5 S. & R. 314 (known attester must be called; repudiating the argument that it is useless to call him since there is nothing to testify to).

[3] Gillies v. Smithers, Eng., McMahan v. McGrady, Pa., supra.

[4] 1829, Kemper v. Pryor, 1 J. J. Marsh. 598.

§ 1315. [1] 1811, Jones v. Brewer, 4 Taunt. 46 ("even perhaps in some instances of sickness", his presence is not required, per Mansfield, C. J.; contra, semble, Heath, J.; all agreed in refusing to authorize a deposition to be taken, leaving the matter to be determined at the trial). Contra: 1796, Gordon v. Payne, 1 Mart. N. C. 72 (the witness when last heard from had been given up by his physician; handwriting not allowed). There could be no doubt on this point to-day.

[2] 1820, Jackson v. Root, 18 John. 60, 80 (aged and infirm and unable to attend, but organic in its nature, and analogous to insanity (post, § 1316), should excuse entirely from production of the person and of his deposition. But a mere casual failure of memory as to the facts of execution obviously cannot excuse; for it cannot be ascertained except after production to testify. — When it appears after such production, other principles come into play; (a) the witness may adopt his attesting signature as a record of past recollection, and upon the faith of it verify the facts of execution as thus known to him to have occurred (ante, §§ 98, 737, 747); (b) if he fails to do this, his signature may be otherwise proved, and his attestation taken as sufficient evidence of the facts of execution (post, 1511); (c) in any case, upon his failure to recollect, the facts of execution may be proved by other qualified persons (ante, § 1302); whether, in case of such a failure to recollect, the other attesters must first be called, is another question (ante, § 1309).

(8) Where the attester is imprisoned under sentence of law, and it is thus legally impossible to secure his attendance, it should be excusable for the same reason as in the case of illness;[3] but his deposition, if he is qualified to testify, should be taken.

§ 1316. Same: (9) Incompetency, through Interest, Infamy, Insanity, Blindness, etc. Where the attester has become, since the act of attestation, disqualified to give testimony, it would be useless to produce him, and production is therefore excused.

(a) This doctrine as applied to a supervening disqualification by interest has long been recognized. In some early rulings it was held not to apply where the interest had been voluntarily acquired by the attester;[1] this limiwithin the jurisdiction; deposition required). Compare § 1404, post.

[3] The statutes cited ante, § 1310, sometimes specify this cause of excuse.

§ 1316. [1] To the following citations should be added the statutes cited post, § 1510, providing that subsequent incompetency "shall not prevent the probate and allowance of the will." In the following rulings, subsequently acquired interest in general is treated as an excuse, except where a special proviso is noted: ENGLAND: 1715, Anon, cited in 1 P. Wms. 289, semble; 1717, Godfrey v. Norris, 1 Str. 34 (the witness to a bond became administrator d. b. n. of the obligee; his hand allowed to be proved; so also of a witness to a will afterwards becoming devisee); 1798, Buckley v. Smith, 2 Esp. 697; 1802, Cunliffe v. Sefton, 2 East 183; 1829, Hovill v. Stephenson, 5 Bing. 493 ("We do not dispute the authority of any of those decisions", and even an interest acquired in a partnership would not be fatal, but here the interest acquired was purely in the specific contract attested, and "the plaintiff cannot complain that his witness is disqualified, when he himself has been the cause of the disqualification"); CANADA: 1843, Hamilton v. Love, 2 Kerr N. Br. 243, 250, 253 (Parker, J., doubting); 1848, Doe v. Twigg, 5 U. C. Q. B. 167, 170; UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1833, Bennet v. Robinson, 3 Stew. & P. 227, 240 (interest as administrator, etc., sufficient, but not as assignee, this being purely voluntary and for personal benefit); 1848, McKinley v. Irvine, 13 Ala. 681, 706 (interest acquired by voluntary act; handwriting excluded); 1849, Robertson v. Allen, 16 Ala. 106, 107 (interest as legatee and heir; handwriting allowed); 1850, Cox v. Davis, 17 Ala. 714, 717 (in general; interest sufficient); Louisiana: 1826, Buard v. Buard, 5 Mart. N. S. 132, 134; Maine: 1820, Whittemore v. Brooks, 1 Greenl. 57; Massachusetts: 1809, Dudley v. Sumner, 5 Mass. 439, 444, 462, semble; 1815, Sears v. Dillingham, 12 Mass. 358, 362 (will); 1841, Amherst Bank v. Root, 2 Metc. 522, 532; Michigan: 1858, Jones v. Phelps, 5 Mich. 218, 222 (justice of the peace disqualified as the trial judge; no exemption from calling him, the disability being the result of the party's act); Mississippi: 1856, Tinnin v. Price, 31 Miss. 423; Missouri: 1849, Holmes v. Holloman, 12 Mo. 536 (otherwise, "the purposes of a testator might be defeated by events which no precaution on his part could anticipate or prevent"); North Carolina: 1792, Nelius v. Brickell, 1 Hayw. 19, semble; 1801, Hampton v. Garland, 2 Hayw. 147; 1804, Hall v. Bynum, 2 Hayw. 328 (not received, for a tation is proper enough as a punishment, where by collusion with the proponent of the document the interest has been acquired with the purpose of disqualifying the attester; but otherwise it is harsh and improper, and the disqualification, however occurring, should suffice to excuse, the opponent having liberty to compel the attester to testify if there appears to be a need of it. Whether the attestation itself is void and the document invalid in substantive law, is a different question (post, § 1510).— Where the disqualification was not acquired subsequently to attestation, but existed at the time of it, the attestation is void as such, and the person does not count for any purpose as an attester (ante, § 1292).

(b) Disqualification occurring through infamy, subsequently to attestation, is equally an excuse for non-production.[2]

(c) Disqualification through insanity, arising subsequently to attestation, is also an excuse.[3]

(d) Blindness would prevent the attester from identifying the maker's signature and his own; but it would not prevent him from testifying by recollection to the execution of such a document by such a person. Since, therefore, he is still qualified to testify in part at least, there would seem to be no reason for excusing his non-production as a rule, although upon a question purely as to the identity of a signature it would be useless to call him.[4]

§ 1317. Same: (10) Refusal to Testify, Privileged or Unprivileged. (a) Where the attester is privileged not to testify, and is thus not compellable, the proponent should be excused from production.[1] Whether it is necessary to call him and learn whether he will claim his privilege in court, or whether bond, where the witness had become assignee and had then assigned to the plaintiff; reason, the supposed danger of collusion and trickery); 1832, Crowell v. Kirk, 3 Dev. 355, 357; 1840, Saunders v. Ferrill; 1 Ired. 97, 101 (sufficient, whether acquired by law or by his own act; except for negotiable instruments); Pennsylvania: 1785, Davison v. Bloomer, 1 Dall. 123; 1813, Hamilton v. Marsden, 6 Binn. 45, 47 (sufficient, even when acquired by his own act voluntarily); 1851, Loomis v. Kellogg, 17 Pa. 60, 63 (one who by accepting an executorship becomes incompetent may by his attestation be a "full witness"; when he is objected to as incompetent, "they put him in the predicament of a witness dead or out of reach of process"); Rhode Island: 1852, Kinney v. Flynn, 2 R. I. 319, semble (wife of the maker of a note); South Carolina: 1833, Lever v. Lever, 1 Hill Ch. S. C. 62, 68 (incompetency as executor, note signed by mark; witness' handwriting insufficient, unless note is shown to have existed before interest accrued); Tennessee: 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 99 (the statutory phrase, "if to be found", for contested wills, "is not to be construed literally", and covers subsequent incompetency, as exempting production).

[2] 1729, Jones v. Mason, 2 Str. 833 ("as if dead"); 1815, Sears v. Dillingham, 12 Mass. 358, 361 (will).

[3] 1804, Bernett v. Taylor, 9 Ves. Jr. 381; 1813, Currie v. Child, 3 Camp. 283.

[4] The rulings are not harmonious: 1699, Wood v. Drury, 1 Ld. Raym. 734 semble (excused); 1833, Pedler v. Paige, 1 Moo. & Rob. 258, Parke, B. (not called; but "there is great weight in the reasons urged for calling the witness", i.e. that "the circumstances attending the execution might be proved by him"); 1839, Cronk v. Frith, 9 C. & P. 197; s. c. as Crank v. Frith, 1 Moo. & Rob. 262 (Abinger, L. C. B.: "He might from his recollection give most important evidence respecting it"; here the pleas to an action on a bond set up fraud and intoxication at the time of execution); 1847, Rees v. Williams, 1 De G. & Sm. 314, 320 (not excused); 1915, Reynolds v. Sevier, 165 Ky. 158, 176 S. W. 96 (witness unable to identify his handwriting, because of failure of eyesight, testified to execution by recollection, and other witnesses testified to due execution; held sufficient); 1806, Taylor, J., in Baker v. Blount, 2 Hayw. N. C. 404 (excused).

For illiterate attester, see ante, § 693, n. 2.

§ 1317. [1] 1849, Holmes v. Holloman, 12 Mo. 535 (heirs claimed privilege as parties; production excused); 1812, Allen v. Allen, 2

it is sufficient if it appears otherwise that he will if called exercise his privilege, should be left to the determination of the trial Court.[2]

(b) Where the attester, though not privileged, nevertheless refuses to testify, the proponent should be excused, provided it is made to appear that there is no collusion;[3] for there is no reason why the innocent proponent should be punished for the witness' fault, especially as the latter's refusal may be designed to aid his own or the opponent's interests.

§ 1318. Same: (11) Document proved by Registry-Copy. Where a document's execution is allowed to be proved by a certified copy from an official registry, the document's execution having been duly authenticated to an officer before registration (post, § 1648), the attester of the document need not be called.[1] This result may be justified on three grounds: (a) The object of the registration system is to provide a convenient and speedy method of authenticating a document duly registered (post, § 1648), and among the other advantages thus intended to be secured is the freedom from the inconvenience of searching for and producing the attesters; (b) Since the original document in such a case is not required in such jurisdictions to be produced (ante, § 1225), the value of the attester's testimony without the document and the original signatures before him would be slight; (c) In those jurisdictions (ante, § 1290) where the present rule is now by statute confined to documents required by law to be attested, the rule cannot apply to documents — for example, conveyances — required to be authenticated before a notary or a registrar by an attesting witness, because that requirement does not make attestation an element in the validity of the conveyance, but Overt. Tenn. 172 (under St. 1784 and 1789, a claim of privilege by an interested witness exempts from producing him, even where the will is contested).

[3] Compare the analogous cases of a privileged document, ante, § 1212.

[2] 1828, Bomford v. Wilme, 1 Beatty 252 (the witness refused to be examined, even after attachment for contempt; held, that handwriting could be proved only after a hearing in which the opponent should have an opportunity to show collusion).

§ 1318. [1] Canada: 1844, Smith v. Millidge, 2 Kerr N. Br. 408, 413, semble; United States: Federal: 1802, Edmondson v. Lovell, 1 Cr. C. C. 103; 1892, Paine v. Trask, 5 U. S. App. 283, 288; 1830, Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 82, semble; Alabama: 1893, Hawkins v. Ross, 100 Ala. 459, 464, 14 So. 278; 1898, Foxworth v. Brown, 120 Ala. 59, 24 So. 1; Georgia: 1885, Fletcher v. Horne, 75 Ga. 134, 137; Illinois: 1840, Doe v. Johnson, 3 Ill. 522, 528; 1848, Job v. Tebbetts, 10 Ill. 376, 379 (without any other preliminary proof; repudiating the contrary 'obiter dictum' in s. c. 9 id. 143, 151); Massachusetts: 1828, Eaton v. Campbell, 7 Pick. 10, 12; 1829, Hathaway v. Spooner, 9 Pick. 23, 25, semble; 1832, Powers v. Russell, 13 Pick. 69, 75 ("where the production of a deed is dispensed with and an office copy is competent evidence, . . . the necessity of calling them is dispensed with", because the witness could not be expected to remember without seeing the original); 1854, Com. v. Emery, 2 Gray 80, per Shaw, C. J. (except where the original's production is required, because in the party's hands as a grantee, according to § 1225, ante); 1870, Samuel v. Borrowscale, 104 Mass. 207, 209; 1872, Gragg v. Learned, 109 Mass. 167 (if "not made to either party to the action, nor presumed to be in the custody of either"; according to § 1225, ante); Missouri: 1842, Moss v. Anderson, 7 Mo. 337, 340 (though evidence of identity may be required; and "cases may arise" in which a Court might require the attesting witness); Nevada: 1868, Sharon v. Davidson, 4 Nev. 416; Pennsylvania: 1810, Carkhuff v. Anderson, 3 Binn. 4, 7, 10; South Carolina: 1821, Dingle v. Bowman, 1 McC. 177; 1845, McLeod v. Rogers, 2 Rich. 19, 22; S. Car. St. 1731, Code 1922, C. C. P. §§ 716, 717 (quoted ante, § 1290); Vermont: 1827, Williams v. Wetherbee, 2 Aik. 329, 335 (here an original); Wisconsin: 1864, Hinchcliff v. Hinman, 18 Wis. 130, 135.

Compare also the statutes cited ante, § 1310.

merely provides a lawful mode of authenticating the instrument for registration.

But the principle should not apply to a document merely filed in a public office; the contents may be provable without production (ante, § 1218), but unless a mode of authentication has been provided by statute as a condition precedent to the filing or registration (post, § 1680), it would seem improper to dispense with the attester's testimony.[2]

§ 1319. Same: Summary. The foregoing various causes for exempting from production of the attester may be grouped under four general heads: (a) Cases where the attester cannot be communicated with at all, either because he is non-existent, or because his whereabouts or his identity is unknown; (b) cases where, though he can be communicated with, he cannot be brought into court; (c) cases where, though he can be brought into court, his testimony cannot be obtained; (d) cases where, though his testimony can be obtained, other considerations excuse its employment. It does not appear, however, that anything turns in practice upon the distinctions between these four classes; except that in cases under the second head, as already noted, the attester's deposition may be required in lieu of his testimony on the stand.

(h) "And also authenticate his attestation, unless it is not feasible"

§ 1320. If the Witness is Unavailable, must his Signature be proved, or does it Suffice to prove the Maker's? The question here is, as usually put: When the production of the attester is excused because he is unavailable, must at least his signature be authenticated, or may the maker's signature alone be proved, without proving that of the attester?

The nature of the question, however, can be better understood if we recollect, and force into expression in the question, the true significance of proof of the attester's signature in such a case. What is it to prove his signature? It is in effect to offer in evidence the hearsay statement of the attester. The signing of a document in attestation by a witness, whether or not an express clause of attestation accompanies the signature, involves a statement by the attester that the person purporting to be the maker did then execute the document (post, § 1511). This extrajudicial statement, expressed or implied, is always, when the attester is unavailable, admissible by exception to the Hearsay rule (post, §§ 1505–1514). The question here is, not merely whether it is admissible, but whether it is preferred to any other testimony to the maker's execution. It is assumed that the attester is personally unavailable (for one of the causes noticed); and that the rule of preference is therefore to that extent disposed of, so that, if nothing more belonged to the rule, use could now be made of any competent testimony to prove the maker's execution. Is it, then, further, a part of the rule of Preference that, before thus going to other testimony, the attester's hearsay statement must be used?

[2] Contra: 1878, Lee v. Wisner, 38 Mich. 82, 87 (bond filed in court).

Stated in this way, the precise and singular nature appears of the supposed requirement of proving the attester's signature. That a preference should be given to any extrajudicial statement over testimony on the stand under cross-examination is an extraordinary measure, assuming for such a statement a value not at all to be attributed ordinarily to such statements. Nevertheless, such a preference unquestionably existed as a part of the orthodox common-law rule in England. The preference seems rarely to have been supported by any reason; and the following seems to be the most distinct effort to that end:

1834, TRACY, Sen., in Jackson v. Waldron, 13 Wend. 178, 197: "I acknowledge the reason of this preference is not at first glance perfectly obvious; and that it is not as induced some learned judges, without (I am now satisfied) due reflection, to question the wisdom of the rule, and by their doubts throw over it a shade of discredit. But . . . I am persuaded that good reasons may be found for maintaining it, over and above the consideration of its being so long settled and acknowledged. One of them, which strikes me as very apparent and forcible, is the greater risk a person incurs in forging the signatures of both witnesses and party than of the party alone; coupled with which consideration is the important one that in the suit on the obligation the person whose name was forged as the subscribing witness would be a competent witness to prove the forgery of his signature, while a party might be compelled to sit silently by (as I have myself witnessed) and see an instrument to which he was an utter stranger proved by evidence of his handwriting to have been executed by him."

In the United States, the rule was early perceived to have in most instances no more than a technical and traditional significance, and a number of Courts, believing that "a technical and artificial rule had prevailed over our right reason",[1] refused to accept it, and declined to require proof of the attester's signature in preference to proof of the maker's. Their reasoning was as follows:

1851, TRUMBULL, J., in Newsom v. Luster, 13 Ill. 175: "Why proof of the handwriting of a subscribing witness should be better evidence of the execution of an instrument than that of the obligor is not very apparent, and the attempts to give a reason have not in my judgment been very satisfactory. . . . [Stating the argument of Senator Tracy, quoted supra, as to forgery,] No one can doubt that proof of the handwriting of both the subscribing witness and party would be more satisfactory than that of either one. But this is a begging of the question, which is not whether a person would incur greater risk in forging the signature of both witness and party than of the party alone. . . . Surely a person would incur no greater risk in forging his [the witness'] signature than that of the party. . . . Another reason given for the rule is that the witnesses who subscribe at the time of the execution are agreed upon by the parties to be the only witnesses to prove it, which, in the language of the Supreme Court of New York, . . . is an absurdity. . . . Proof of the handwriting of the grantor to a deed furnishes altogether more satisfactory evidence of its execution than would proof of the handwriting of the subscribing witness. When the attesting witness cannot be had, the law requires the next best evidence, which means the next best evidence of those facts to which the attesting witness if present would be called upon to testify, — that is, not merely that he signed the paper as a witness, but that the party executed the instrument. It is difficult to account for the signature of a party to a writing which he did not execute; but it is easy to imagine how a forged instrument might be established against him when it is only necessary to procure the name of a person as a subscribing witness to such an instrument, and then establish it by proof of the handwriting of the witness."

§ 1320. [1] 1849, Lumpkin, J., in Watt v. Kilburn, 6 Ga. 356, 358.

1895, ATKINSON, J., in McVicker v. Conkle, 96 Ga. 584, 592, 24 S. E. 23: "The real question, then, upon the execution of a deed being as to the actual signing [by the maker], the primary inquiry should be as to the fact. . . . [The witnesses' handwriting] might be proven beyond controversy, and still the deed be a forgery; for, while the persons alleged to be subscribing witnesses may have signed the paper, that does not, except by inference, connect the alleged maker with the transaction, nor otherwise establish the execution of the deed by him. If, however, on the other hand, it be shown that the alleged maker in fact signed the identical paper offered in evidence, such evidence not only establishes directly the execution of the instrument, but likewise connects the maker directly with the transaction to which it relates. In the former case, the fact of execution would be established by inference only; in the latter, by direct evidence, and who will question that a rule is purely artificial and arbitrary which makes the former of higher proof than the latter?"

In order to ascertain the state of the law in the various jurisdictions, the following distinctions should be noted: (1) So far as concerns documents required by law to be attested, i.e. chiefly, wills, the question is ordinarily of little importance, because the attestation has to be authenticated in any case, as an element of validity. Furthermore, wherever by statutory restriction (ante, § 1290) the whole rule preferring the attester is confined to documents required by law to be attested, the present question disappears from consideration in regard to any other attested document; for the attester's signature need not be proved at all. Thus, the old controversy would to-day in such jurisdictions be of no consequence whatever, were it not for the will-statutes next to be mentioned.

(2) In many jurisdictions, the statute dealing with proof of wills lays down an express rule in regard to the proof of signatures where the attester is unavailable. Now some of these statutes prescribe proof of the signatures of "either the testator or the witnesses", "of the witnesses and the testator or any of them", and the like. Thus it may arise that, though (as above noted) the attester's signature ought to be proved as an element of the validity of the execution, yet under such a statute even this seems to be improperly dispensed with; and a Court may in this obscure state of things fall back upon the common-law rule of the jurisdiction.

(3) As regards the common-law rule itself, the decisions include two classes, — those which require the attester's signature to be proved in preference to the maker's and those which do not require it.[2] Now from this question must

[2] The rule on the present subject in the various jurisdictions may be gathered from the cases and statutes collected below.

For convenience' sake, the statutes dealing with the question of § 1306, ante (whether all the witnesses' signatures need be proved), and the question of § 1513, post (whether the maker's or testator's signature must be proved), have also been placed here once for all, as a single statutory clause usually deals with all three points:

ENGLAND: 1796, Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 265 (witness' signature preferred);

CANADA: New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 118, § 28, St. 1915, c. 23, § 20 (proof of "the handwriting of the witnesses and the testator" may be made); Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, § 179 ("If both the subscribing witnesses to a will are dead, or if from other circumstances no affidavit can be obtained from either of them", other persons present at the execution may be resorted to;

be discriminated a question arising under a different principle, namely, whether the maker's signature must also be proved, i.e. whether the attester's if no such person's affidavit is obtainable, affidavit must be obtained "of that fact and of the handwriting of the deceased and the subscribing witnesses");

Prince Edward Island: St. 1873, c. 21, § 24 (quoted ante, § 1310).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1805, Wellford v. Eakin, 1 Cr. C. C. 264 (witness' signature not required); 1810, Whann v. Hall, 2 Cr. C. C. 4, semble (required); 1830, Walton v. Coulson, 1 McLean 120, 123 (required); 1831, Clarke v. Courtney, 5 Pet. 319, 344 (same); 1882, Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32, 2 Sup. 313 (same);
Alabama: Code 1907, § 6185 ("[wills] must be proved by one or more of the subscribing witnesses, or if they be dead . . . then by proof of the handwriting of the testator and that of at least one of the witnesses to the will"); § 6186 (death, etc., must be shown, before proof of "the handwriting of the testator or of any of the subscribing witnesses" is admissible); § 4005 (quoted ante, § 1310); 1842, Mardis v. Shackelford, 4 Ala. 493, 503 (bond; witness' signature not needed); 1843, Lazarus v. Lewii, 5 Ala. 457, 459, semble (deed; same; but here one witness was called, though he could not recollect delivery); 1850, Cox v. Davis, 17 Ala. 714, 717 (deed; same; the rule "appears to have been settled here"); 1887, Snider v. Burks, 84 Ala. 53, 56, 4 So. 225 (will; same); 1913, Swindall v. Ford, 184 Ala. 137, 63 So. 651 (deed; proof of attestation required);
Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 751 (the Court "may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator, and of the subscribing witnesses, or any of them");
Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 10517 ("when one of the witnesses to such will shall be examined, and the other witnesses are dead, insane, or their residence unknown, then such proof shall be taken of the handwriting of the testator and of the witnesses dead, insane, or absent, and of such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove such will on a trial at common law"); § 10518 ("If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Court that all the subscribing witnesses are dead, insane, or absent, the Court or clerk shall take and receive such proof of the handwriting of the testator and subscribing witnesses to the will, and of such other facts and circumstances as would be sufficient to prove such will in a trial at law"); 1839, Wilson v. Royston, 2 Ark. 315, 328 (deed; witness' signature required); 1862, Delony v. Delony, 24 Ark. 7, 11 (not required where witness signed by mark only);
California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1315 (if none are in the county, the Court "may admit the testimony of other witnesses", and "as evidence of the execution, it may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witnesses or any of them"); 1864, Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393, 411 (witness' signature not required; laid down, "after deliberation, as 'a general rule'; but this rule might not apply to instruments which the law requires to be attested by witnesses"); 1864, McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 Cal. 238, 245 (same); 1864, McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300, 310 (same);
Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 5209 ("in all cases where any one or more of the witnesses" are unavailable, evidence is allowable "of the handwriting of any such deceased or absent witness as aforesaid, and such other secondary evidence as is admissible in courts of justice generally to establish written contracts generally, in similar cases");
Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, §§ 131, 132 (quoted ante, § 1310);
Delaware: Gen. St. 1915, § 3334 (if a witness is unavailable, "proof of the signature of such witness shall be sufficient; if that cannot be made, then proof of the signature of the testate shall be sufficient"); 1832, Boyer v. Norris, 1 Harringt. 22 (bill; witness' signature required); 1836, Jerman v. Hudson, 2 Colo. 134 (same: assignment of judgment);
Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5834 (if the witnesses are unavailable, proof of the maker's signature is "primary evidence"; if that is unavailable, witnesses' handwriting "or other secondary evidence" may be admitted); § 3856 (wills: proof "of their signatures and that of the testator", necessary for wills); 1849, Watt v. Kilburn, 7 Ga. 356, 358 (witness' signature a mark only, and therefore "a nullity"; maker's signature sufficient); 1895, McVicker v. Conkle, 96 Ga. 584, 585, 24 S. E. 23 (witness' signature required; rule affirmed as settled; but policy doubted by Atkinson, J.); 1896, Baker v. Adams, 99 Ga. 135, 25 S. E. 28 (trial held before the statute, supra; the witnesses deceased; the maker's testimony admitted by consent); 1898, Standback v. Thornton, 106 Ga. 81, 31 S. E. 805 (witness' signature not necessary, under the statutes); 1914, Strickland v. Babcock Lumber Co., 142 Ga. 120, 82 S. E. 531 (cited more fully post, § 1513, n. 3);
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7455 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1315);
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 148, § 6 (where one or more witnesses are dead, etc., "it shall be lawful . . . to admit proof of the handwriting of any such deceased, insane, or absent witness, as aforesaid, and such other secondary evidence as is admissible in courts of justice, to establish written contracts generally in similar cases"); 1851, Newsom v. Luster, 13 Ill. 175 (witness' signature not required, for instruments not required to be attested; quoted supra); 1865, signature alone suffices. This assumes that proof has voluntarily been made of the attester's signature, and asks whether the maker's additionally is needed.

Fash v. Blake, 38 Ill. 363, 368, semble (deed; not required);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 3141 (if the witnesses are dead, etc., "then by proof of the handwriting of the testator or of the subscribing witness thereto"); 1838, Bowser v. Warren, 4 Blackf. 522, 524 (witness' signature required); 1848, Yocum v. Barnes, 8 B. Monr. 496, 498 (convenant; witness' signature not required);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 11769 (if any witness "shall die, be insane, or remove to parts unknown", so that his testimony "cannot be procured", the Court may admit proof of the handwriting of such witness, "and such other secondary evidence as is admissible in courts of justice to establish written contracts generally in similar cases");
Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, §§ 1649, 1654 (testaments not acknowledged before a notary; signatures of both testator and witnesses must be proved; quoted in full post, §§ 2050, 2051); 1832, Barfield v. Hewlett, 4 La. 118, 119, semble (witness' signature not required); 1845, Grand Gulf R. & B. Co. v. Barnes, 12 Rob. 127, 130 (same);
Maine: 1845, Woodman v. Segar, 12 Shepl. 90, 93 (not required; but here it was intimated that the proof of the witness' handwriting was dispensed with merely because he never had been in the State and the proof was not accessible);
Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 93, § 353 (quoted ante, § 1310); 1864, Keefer v. Zimmerman, 22 Md. 274, semble (not required in certain cases);
Massachusetts: 1814, Homer v. Wallis, 11 Mass. 309, 311 (witness' signature not required, for documents not required to be attested); 1839, Valentine v. Piper, 22 Pick. 85 (not required; the maker's is "more direct and satisfactory than that of the handwriting of the witnesses"); 1851, Gelott v. Goodspeed, 8 Cush. 411 (same); 1892, Smith Charities v. Connolly, 157 Mass. 272, 276, 31 N. E. 1058 (mortgage; same);
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 13783 (the Court "may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witnesses");
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 7269 (if the witnesses are not resident, the Court "may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witnesses");
Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1991, Hem. § 1656 (if no witnesses can be produced, then "it may be established by proving the handwriting of the testator, and of the subscribing witnesses to the will, or of some of them"); 1838, Downs v. Downs, 2 How. 915, 925 (deed; grantor's signature and acknowledgment sufficient);
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 522 (when one witness is examined, and the others are "dead, insane, or their residences unknown, then such proof shall be taken of the handwriting of the testator and of the witnesses dead, insane, or residences unknown, and of such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove such will on a trial at common law"); § 523 (if all the witnesses are dead, etc., then shall be taken "such proof of the handwriting of the testator and subscribing witnesses to the will, and of such other facts and circumstances as would be sufficient to prove such will in a trial at law"); neither of these carelessly constructed sections can be said to be intelligible; both evidently misunderstood the former law; and words "common law" and "law" are ambiguous precisely where certainty was needed; 1857, Clardy v. Richardson, 24 Mo. 295, 297, semble (deed; witness' signature not required);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 1005 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1315);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1921, § 1260 (if none of the witnesses are resident, etc., the Court "may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator, and of the subscribing witnesses");
New Hampshire: 1834, Farnsworth v. Briggs, 6 N. H. 561, 563 (a note; witness' signature required; Parker, J., agreeing solely on authority, and approving the policy of requiring also proof of the grantor's signature); 1848, Cram v. Ingalls, 18 N. H. 613, 616 (possibly dispensable, when attestation is not required by law);
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 5878 (if the witnesses are not attainable, others shall be examined "to prove their signatures");
New York: S. C. A. 1920, § 142 (a will "may be established" upon proof of the testator's and witnesses' handwriting "and also of such other circumstances as would be sufficient to prove the will upon the trial of an action"); 1834, Jackson v. Waldron, 13 Wend. 178, 183, 197 (for a sealed instrument, the witness' signature required; "although many able judges have declared their dissatisfaction with the rule", per Walworth, C.; but Tracy, Sen., approved the rule); 1847, Willson v. Betts, 4 Den. 201, 209 (same, applied to a deed);
North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 4144, part 1 (proof of a will "may be taken of the handwriting, both of the testator and of the witness or witnesses so dead", etc., "and also of such other circumstances as will satisfy" of its execution; in all cases where the testator executed the will by making his mark, and where any one or more of the subscribing witnesses are dead or reside out of the State or are insane or otherwise incompetent to testify it shall not be necessary to prove the handwriting of the testator, but proof of the handwriting of the subscribing witness or witnesses so dead", etc., shall suffice); 1795, Jones v. Blount, 1 Hayw. 238 (grantor's signature ob-

This involves the inquiry what is implied by the attestation, and whether proof of it suffices (not whether it is necessary), and is elsewhere considered (post, § 1513), in dealing with the Hearsay exception for Attesting Witnesses. Thus, though the question is there sometimes, in form, whether both must be proved, the real inquiry is whether the maker's (not the witness') signature must additionally be proved. Courts requiring the maker's also, when the attester's is offered, need not be Courts requiring the attester's also if only the maker's is offered, though they frequently coincide; i.e. a Court might conceivably require a party proving the attester's to add the maker's, because of the insufficiency of the former (under § 1513, post), while the same Court, jected to because the signature was not essential and did not import delivery; objection repudiated);

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 8644 (the Court "may admit the testimony of any competent witness respecting the execution of the will, the capacity of the testator, or other material fact, and may also admit proof of the handwriting of the testator or of a subscribing witness and such other evidence as is admissible in courts of justice to establish or disprove written contracts in similar cases"); § 5890 (instruments in general; "nor shall it be permissible to prove such instrument or contract in any case by proof of the handwriting of said subscribing witness or witnesses as the case may be, but in all cases such instrument or contract must be proved in the same manner as one having no subscribing witness whatever"); § 8641 (if subscribing witnesses are not produced, the Court may admit "proof of the handwriting of the testator and the subscribing witnesses or any of them");

Ohio: 1824, Clark v. Boyd, 2 Oh. 280 (57) ("under proper circumstances . . . either may be sufficient");

Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 1108 (if the subscribing witnesses are unavailable, the Court "may admit proof of the hand-writing of the testator and of the subscribing witness, or any of them");

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 784 ("the handwriting of one of them, and that of the party, shall be proved");

Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 633 (quoted ante, § 1310);

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 1548–1557 ("closed" wills; special rules, based on the Spanish law);

South Carolina: Civ. C. 1922, §§ 5569, 5570 (for probate in common form, handwriting of the testator and the witnesses "or any other secondary evidence admissible and sufficient by the rules of the common law"; for solemn form, handwriting of the witnesses and the testator); 1803, Taylor v. Meyers, 2 Bay 506, 1 Brev. 245 (under the statute exempting from calling witnesses to notes and bonds, their handwriting need not be proved; the Court's first opinion, which alone is given in 1 Brev., was to the contrary); 1806, Gervais v. Baird, 2 Brev. 37, semble (witness' handwriting not needed, under the same statute); 1821, Corneil v. Buckley, 1 McC. 466 (deed; witness' signature required); 1829, Hill v. Hill, 2 Hill 542, note (deed; proof of maker's signature not sufficient);

South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 3227 (like Okl. Comp. St. § 1108);

Texas: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1911, § 3267 (if the witnesses are unavailable, probate may be granted "on proof by two witnesses of the handwriting of the subscribing witnesses thereto, and also of the testator if he was able to write"); 1922, Rogers v. Rogers, — Tex. —, 240 S. W. 1104 (R. S. § 3267, applied);

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7572 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1315);

Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 3221 (will-witnesses; if none reside in the State, the testimony of "other witnesses" may be received, and the Court "may admit proof of the handwriting of the testator and of the subscribing witnesses, in cases where the names of the witnesses are subscribed to a certificate stating that the will was executed as required in this chapter"); 1858, Sherman v. Transp. Co., 31 Vt. 162, 165, 175 (handwriting of a grantor, sufficient, where the attestation is "not required to the operative effect of the contract");

Virginia: 1826, Gilliam v. Perkinson, 4 Rand. 325 (contract; witness' handwriting dispensed with where he signs by mark only; semble, in other cases also); 1829, Raines v. Philip, 1 Leigh 483 (maker's handwriting can be resorted to only when proof of witness' handwriting is unavailable; here, of a bond); Washington; St. 1917, Mar. 16, c. 156, Probate Code §§ 12, 13 (quoted ante, § 1310);

Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 3788 (if the attesters are unavailable, the Court may admit other testimony to prove sanity "and the execution of the will, and may admit proof of his handwriting and of the handwriting of the subscribing witness");

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 5714 (quoted ante, § 1310); 1907, Boswell v. First National Bank, 16 Wyo. 161, 92 Pac. 624 (not decided; cited more fully, ante, § 1312).

under the present principle, might not require the attester's if the maker's is offered. Accordingly, so far as such decisions require "both", in the sense that the attester's is needed, even when the maker's is offered, they belong here; while so far as they require "both", in the sense that the maker's is needed, even when the attester's is offered, they belong there (post, § 1513). Nevertheless, comparison should be made of the two sets of rulings in examining the law upon either point.

§ 1321. Proof of Signature dispensed with, where not Obtainable. Just as the rule of Preference for the attester's testimony on the stand is not enforced where it appears that his testimony cannot be had (ante, § 1308), so also, in those jurisdictions where proof of his signature is next preferred, this requirement is abandoned where it appears that such proof cannot be had.

(a) The most common instance is that in which testimony to the identity of the handwriting cannot by honest and diligent search be obtained. The sufficiency of the search ought to be left to the determination of the trial Court; the rulings can seldom be taken as binding precedents; it seems generally accepted, however, that the search need not extend out of the jurisdiction.[1]

(b) Where the witness has subscribed by mark, it may be thought impracticable to attempt to identify it in the same way as handwriting; and it is on this ground that a few Courts have dispensed with such evidence in the case of a subscription by mark.[2]

(c) Where the attesting signature is not to be had for purposes of authentication, either by the loss of the document or the illegibility of the writing, evidence of the attester's signature is impracticable.[3]

§ 1321. [1] California: 1864, Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393, 409 (attestation and residence out of the State, sufficient to show non-availability; approving Newsom v. Luster, Ill., infra); 1865, McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 Cal. 238, 245 (same); 1865, McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300, 310 (same); Illinois: 1851, Newsom v. Luster, 13 Ill. 175 ("all that can be required in any case is that reasonable diligence should be used to procure evidence of the handwriting"; here a search for the witness in the neighboring State, where the deed was executed, or throughout the former State, was held unnecessary); Indiana: 1838, Bowser v. Warren, 4 Blackf. 522, 525 (diligence not shown on the facts; mere fact of delivery in Illinois near the border, insufficient to exempt from search); Kentucky: 1824, Ford v. Hale, 1 T. B. Monr. 23 (need not go out of the State for testimony); New York: 1833, M'Pherson v. Rathbone, 11 Wend. 96, 99 (search for evidence held sufficient on the facts); 1833, Pelletreau v. Jackson, 11 Wend. 110, 123 (search held insufficient); 1834, Jackson v. Waldron, 13 Wend. 178, 200, 223 (same); 1844, Northrop v. Wright, 7 Hill 476, 485 (a will more than 30 years old; no presumption of inability to find handwriting witnesses, and search held insufficient); 1847, Willson v. Betts, 4 Den. 201, 210 (such a presumption doubted; here search held sufficient); North Carolina: 1840, McKinder v. Littlejohn, 1 Ired. 66, 71 (no "precise rule of law" can be made; and the trial Court's discretion as to the ability to find evidence should control); Pennsylvania: 1820, Miller v. Carothers, 6 S. & R. 215, 223 (search held sufficient on the facts); South Carolina: 1798, Hopkins v. De Graffenreid, 2 Bay 187, 192 (search to prove the hand of an old woman "who did not sign her name more than once probably in 50 years", held not necessary in the present case; here, the grantor's signature); 1839, Dawson v. Dawson, Rice Eq. 243, 254 (proof of witness' handwriting, unavailable on the facts).

[2] See the cases passim cited in § 1320.

[3] 1796, Keeling v. Ball, Peake Add. Cas. 88 (the witnesses being unknown, proof by the maker's admissions was allowed); 1853, R. v. St. Giles, 1 E. & B. 426 (Erle, J., declaring squarely that "in no case whatever, where the instrument is lost and the attesting witness is dead, can it be necessary to prove his hand writing"; Wightman and Crompton, JJ., merely holding that proof of the fact of attestation, and of identity of an attesting person and a deceased person, was in this case equivalent to proof of handwriting of the witness). Compare the general principle as to lost documents (ante, § 1314).

(d) Distinguish the case where the attestation is to be proved as an element in the validity of the document; for here (apart from any such express statutory exemption as is noted in the preceding section) the genuineness of the attester's signature must somehow be proved, like any other element; and if evidence is not offered, the proponent fails, even though it was out of his power to obtain it.[4]

(not excused, semble, where instruments are required by law to be attested); and compare § 1513, post.

[4] 1848, Cram v. Ingalls, 18 N. H. 613, 616

SUB-TITLE II (continued): RULES OF TESTIMONIAL PREFERENCE

TOPIC I (continued): PROVISIONAL TESTIMONIAL PREFERENCES

CHAPTER XLI.

SUB-TOPIC B: PREFERRED REPORTS OF PRIOR TESTIMONY

SUB-TOPIC C: SUNDRY PREFERRED WITNESSES

Sub-topic B: PREFERRED REPORTS OF PRIOR TESTIMONY

§ 1325. Introductory. As another exception to the general principle (ante, § 1286) that no classes of witnesses are preferred in our law, there is a well-established doctrine preferring a certain kind of witness in proving the terms of another person's testimony delivered infra-judicially prior to the trial in which it is offered. In determining the scope of this doctrine it is necessary to discriminate between five different sorts of prior testimony, (a) the examination of an accused person before a committing magistrate, (b) the examination of a witness before a committing magistrate, a coroner, or the like, (c) the testimony of a witness at a former trial, (d) the deposition of a witness taken 'de bene esse' before an official for the purposes of the present trial, (e) dying declarations, or other statements admissible under Hearsay exceptions.

§ 1326. (a) Magistrate's Report of Accused's Statement; General Principle. The theory here is that, since the magistrate is required by law to take down in writing the statement of the accused, the written report thus made at the time is preferred to mere oral (or recollection) testimony of the terms of the statement; i.e. the official report is preferred not only to the recollection of any ordinary hearer but even to the recollection of the magistrate himself:

1722, EYRE, J., in R. v. Reason, 16 How. St. Tr. 35: "That which is set down in writing, if it be an examination taken in writing of a prisoner before a justice of the peace, you cannot give evidence of that examination 'viva voce', unless the examination be lost."

Ante 1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 59: "What is reduced to writing by an officer sworn to that purpose, from the very mouth of the witness, is of more credit than what a stander-by retains in memory of the same oath; for the images of things decay in the memory, by the perpetual change of appearances, but what is reduced to writing continues constantly the same."

1839, PARKE, B., in Leach v. Simpson, 5 M. & W. 309, 312: "The written deposition is the best evidence of what was said, and must first be produced before you can inquire by other means as to what passed on the occasion."

1850, WILDE, C. J., R. v. Christopher, 2 C. & K. 994, 1000, 4 Cox Cr. 81: "The reason why a deposition is the primary evidence of what passes before the magistrate is that the law casts a duty on the magistrate of taking down what the witnesses say, and the presumption is that he has done it. And therefore that which he so does becomes the best evidence."

Considering the easy accessibility of the testimony thus preferred, and the slightness of the burden imposed in preferring it (ante, § 1286), the rule may be regarded as a sound one.

But it will be noticed that it rests on two assumptions, — first, that the written report contains the entirety of what was said, and, secondly, that the report was made in pursuance of an official duty expressly imposed by law.[1]

§ 1326. [1] The following list of statutes includes also those affecting other kinds of testimony, and will be from time to time referred to in the ensuing §§ 1327–1332, 1349; it is probably not complete as to some kinds of judicial proceedings:

ENGLAND: 1554, St. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13, § 4 ("Justices of the peace . . . shall before any bailment or mainprise take the examination of the said prisoner and the information of them that bring him, . . . and the same or as much as may be material thereof to prove the felony, shall be put in writing before they make the bailment"); 1555, St. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10 ("The said justice or justices, before he or they shall commit or send such prisoner to ward, shall take the like examination of the prisoner and the information of those who bring him, and shall put the same in writing within two days after the said examination"); 1826, St. 7 Geo. IV, c. 64, § 2 (the justice shall take the examination of the prisoner "and the information upon oath of those who shall know the facts and circumstances of the case, and shall put the same, or as much thereof as shall be material, into writing"); 1849, St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, § 17 (the justices shall "take the statement on oath" of the witnesses, and "shall put the same into writing", and cause the witnesses to sign these depositions); § 18 (the justice shall read these depositions to the accused and ask him whether he wishes to say anything in answer, "and whatever the prisoner shall then say in answer thereto shall be taken down in writing and read over to him and shall be signed by the said justices"; provided that nothing herein shall prevent the prosecution from introducing "any admission or confession or other statement of the person accused or charged, made at any time, which by law would be admissible as evidence against such person"; for other parts of this statute, see the quotation ante, § 848.

CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 146, Cr. C. § 682 (the testimony before a committing magistrate "shall be taken down in writing in the form of a deposition"); § 684 ("whatever the accused then says in answer thereto [the magistrate's warning] shall be taken down in writing"); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 36, § 5 (the coroner "shall reduce the statement on oath of any witness to writing"); c. 100, § 121 (similar, for prosecutions for illegal sale of liquor).

UNITED STATES: Federal: § 6306 (in U. S. consular courts, "in all cases, criminal and civil, the evidence shall be taken down in writing");
Alabama: Code 1907, § 7600 (committing magistrate must reduce testimony to writing); Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 2420, 2424 (like Or. Laws 1920, §§ 1785, 1789; §§ 2382, 2444, 2447, 2480 (like Or. Laws 1920, §§ 1736, 1810, 1840);
Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, P. C. §§ 881 (examination of witnesses before the magistrate "must be reduced to writing as a deposition" in homicide, and in other cases on demand of the prosecuting attorney; the certified report "shall be 'prima facie' a correct statement of such testimony");

(1) As to the first requirement, its non-fulfilment would perhaps not affect the propriety of the present rule of mere preference so much as the propriety

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 2930 (committing magistrate in his minutes shall "make a general statement of the substance of what was proved"); § 1581 (testimony before coroner of suspected persons "may be . . . reduced to writing"); § 1582 ("the testimony of each witness, if material, shall be reduced to writing");
California: P. C. 1872, § 702 (threatened offence; the magistrate "must take their depositions in writing" of the informer and his witnesses); § 704 (if the charge is controverted "the evidence must be reduced to writing and subscribed by the witnesses"); § 869 (in cases of homicide, before the committing magistrate, "the testimony of each witness . . . must be reduced to writing; and in other cases, upon the demand of the prosecuting attorney, or the defendant, or his counsel"; it must be "corrected or added to until it conforms to what he [the witness] declares is the truth"; when taken in shorthand and transcribed and "certified as being a correct statement of such testimony", it "shall be 'prima facie' a correct statement of such testimony and proceedings"); § 1545 (testimony before coroner must be reduced to writing "by him or under his direction"); § 1539 (testimony before magistrate on search-warrant "must be reduced to writing," as in P. C. § 869); § 1811 (on information laid, magistrate must take witnesses' depositions in writing);
Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 6296 (examination of complainant and accused in bastardy "shall be taken down in writing"); § 8780 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing");
Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 194 (for the coroner, "it shall be his duty . . . to reduce the testimony of the witness to writing");
Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 233 (coroner "shall reduce to writing" the testimony before him);
Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 1350 (coroner; testimony of each witness "if material, shall be reduced to writing" and signed; voluntary examination of suspected person shall "be reduced to writing" and signed by him if willing); § 3971 (committing magistrate shall reduce to writing the voluntary examination of accused, in cases of felony; he shall also reduce the witness' testimony to writing, "if material", and have it signed);
Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 6198 (at coroner's inquest, "the evidence of such witnesses shall be in writing, subscribed by him or her");
Georgia: P. C. 1910, § 935 (defendant's statement; "it shall be the duty of the Court to reduce it to writing"); § 936 (in felony charge, "the Court shall cause an abstract of all the evidence to be made and returned"); § 1347 (coroner "shall commit to writing the substance of the testimony");
Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 3701 (testimony at an inquest "shall be reduced to writing by the Coroner or some other person by his direction"); § 1087 (evidence on committal of insane person shall be reduced to writing); § 2308 (district magistrates shall preserve in writing "the substance of the testimony" taken);
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 9314 (testimony at coroner's inquest "must be reduced to writing"); § 8754 (before committing magistrate, testimony "must be reduced to writing, as a deposition"); § 8633 (testimony on information of threatened offence "must be reduced to writing"); § 8709 (information before magistrate; he "must" take witness' "depositions in writing");
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 38, §§ 320, 348 (complaint to magistrate shall be reduced to writing); c. 32, § 18 (coroner is to have testimony of each witness "written out and signed by said witness"); Ill. St. 1907, May 17, p. 213 (re-enacting this part of c. 32, § 18, supra);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 1019 (justice must reduce to writing the woman's examination in bastardy); § 9440 (coroner shall reduce to writing "all testimony");
Iowa: Rev. Code, 1897, § 3219 (testimony before coroner shall be reduced to writing); § 9181 (committing magistrate "shall" cause the "substance of the testimony" to be written out); § 9195 (when defendant waives examination, magistrate "shall take the evidence in writing of the State's witnesses", on county attorney's demand);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7960 (committing magistrate shall reduce testimony to writing "when he shall think it necessary"); § 2607 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing"); ib. § 5120 (bastardy; justice shall reduce to writing the mother's testimony); § 11764 (will-probate testimony "shall be reduced to writing");
Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 530 (coroner shall "commit to writing the substance of the evidence"); C. Cr. P. § 64 (committing magistrate shall in his minutes state the substance of the testimony);
Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 662 (testimony at coroner's inquest "shall be reduced to writing"); R. S. 1870, § 1010 (preliminary examinations of accused; magistrate's duty is "to reduce to writing" the statements of accused and of witnesses);
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 141, § 5 (testimony at inquest "shall be reduced to writing and signed"); c. 135, § 12 (at preliminary examination, magistrate may reduce to writing and have signed any witness' testimony, "when he thinks it necessary"); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 276, § 40 (committing magistrate; witness' testimony of the rule of the conclusiveness of the report (post, § 1349). Moreover, although the statutes do not in all cases expressly require the whole to be is to be reduced to writing, and, if the Court requires, to be signed by witness); c. 38, § 11 (inquests; in certain classes of cases, the magistrate "shall cause a verbatim report of the evidence to be made"); c. 148, § 4 (State fire marshal shall reduce examinations to writing);

Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 15628 (magistrate examining complainant shall "reduce such examination to writing"); § 15650 (testimony before justice at an inquest "shall be reduced to writing"); § 15680 (testimony before committing magistrate "shall be reduced to writing");

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 1000 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing"); § 9082 (testimony before committing magistrate shall be reduced to writing); § 3215 (bastardy; examination shall be reduced to writing);

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 888, Hem. § 4055 (coroner "shall put in writing so much of the evidence given to the jury before him as shall be material");

Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 3825 ("in cases of homicide, but in no other", the evidence before a committing magistrate "shall be reduced to writing"); § 524 (testimony of probate in support of will "shall be reduced to writing"); § 5929 (testimony before coroner "shall be taken down in writing");

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, §§ 11638, 11783 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 702, 869); § 12386 (testimony before coroner "must be reduced to writing");

Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, §§ 6930, 6977, 6982, 6997 (various provisions for testimony before a committing magistrate);

New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 252, § 7 (testimony "may be reduced to writing by the magistrate, or under his direction, when he deems it necessary, and shall be signed by the witness"); §§ 8, 9 (magistrate "may take the examination in writing of the accused person" where the case requires it, "if the accused after being cautioned consents thereto"; the caution warning him that "the questions and answers will be written and preserved and may be evidence upon his trial"), c. 262, § 12 (testimony before coroner "shall be drawn up in writing and subscribed"); St. 1905, c. 60, amending St. 1903, c. 134 (the testimony before a medical referee as coroner "shall be reduced to writing");

New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Coroners § 14 (the coroner "shall put in writing the effect of so much of the evidence given to the jury before him as shall be material");

New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 3261 (magistrate committing "any criminal case"; testimony is to be "reduced to writing" by stenographer for transmission to grand jury); § 5878 (testimony of will witnesses shall be "reduced to writing");

New York: C. Cr. P. 1881, § 87 (testimony before magistrate must "be reduced to writing" and subscribed); § 778 (testimony before coroner "must be reduced to writing" by him); § 204 (testimony before committing magistrate must be reduced to writing and subscribed);

North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 4563 (testimony of accused before magistrate "shall be reduced to writing"); § 4560 (same for witnesses);

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 10411 (threatened offences; evidence before magistrate "must on demand of the defendant be reduced to writing"); § 3416 (testimony before coroner "must be reduced to writing"); § 10608 (on demand of State or defendant, "all the testimony in the case must be reduced to writing" as depositions, or by stenographer if both parties consent);

Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 12112 (magistrate is to reduce to writing testimony of bastardy complainant); § 10677 (same for proceedings against one embezzling decedent's property); § 2856 (the testimony before the coroner "shall be reduced to writing");

Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 2365 (threatened offence; evidence must "on demand of the defendant be reduced to writing"); § 2492 (before committing magistrate, on defendant's demand "all the testimony in the case must be reduced to writing in the form of depositions"); § 1106 (testimony of subscribing witnesses to will "must be reduced to writing"); § 1122 (so also for witnesses to lost or destroyed will); § 739 (so also for examination of insolvent debtor); § 5876 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing");

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 1785 (statement of defendant before committing magistrate "must be reduced to writing"); § 1789 (testimony of witnesses "need not be reduced to writing", except that depositions are taken at time of complaint made); §§ 1736, 1810 (complaint must be reduced to writing and witnesses' depositions taken); § 1840 (testimony before coroner "must be reduced to writing");

Pennsylvania: St. 1869, Apr. 17, § 4, Dig. 1920, § 10948, Fires (testimony of witnesses at fire inquest "shall be reduced to writing");

Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 356, § 17 (coroner "shall cause the testimony to be reduced to writing" and subscribed);

South Carolina: C. Cr. P. 1922, § 1035 (the coroner is to take testimony of witnesses in writing);

South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 4476 (like N. D. Comp. L. § 10411); § 3228 (at a will-probate, "the testimony of each witness, taken down, it is also true that the original English statutes under which the rule grew up did not require the whole to be taken.

(2) As to the second requirement, it is clear that there is no general principle in the law of Evidence which makes an official report a preferred testimony to the facts reported (ante, § 1286). On the contrary, the official duty leading to the report is merely that which suffices to make the report admissible at all, under an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1632), instead of calling the reporter to the stand; the fact of an official duty barely suffices to secure admissibility, and cannot be thought in itself and in general to go so far as to create a preference. While it may be conceded, then, that the preference for the magistrate's report is in the specific instance a satisfactory rule, this result is to be regarded as an exceptional and unusual step, taken solely because of the official duty requiring the report; and therefore it is at least necessary that such an official duty should be expressly imposed by law. A report made merely by custom, or casually, and not under such a statutory duty, is not to be accorded such a preference.

reduced to writing and signed by him, shall be taken"); § 4619 (testimony on search-warrant proceedings must be reduced to writing); § 10184 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing"); § 4504 (complaint to magistrate; testimony "shall be reduced to writing"); § 4575 (preliminary examination; on demand of defendant, "all the testimony in the case must be reduced to writing");

Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 7017, 7021 (accused's statement to be taken in writing by magistrate, and signed by accused or refusal noted; witness' testimony to be taken in writing by magistrate or under his direction, and signed by witness);

Texas: Rev. Civ. Stats. 1911, §§ 3273, 3274 (testimony on will-probate "shall be committed to writing"); Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 295 (accused's statement before magistrate "shall be reduced to writing"); § 300 (the witnesses' testimony also "shall be reduced to writing"); § 976 (justice of the peace examining witness for disclosure of crime "shall reduce said statements to writing"); § 1065 (testimony at coroner's inquest "shall be reduced to writing"); § 1086 (so also at fire inquest);

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 8568 (threatened injury; magistrate "may take their depositions in writing" of complainant and his witnesses); § 8573 (on the hearing, "the evidence, on demand of the person complained of, must be reduced to writing"); § 8750 (preliminary examination; like Cal. P. C. § 869, omitting "or the defendant or his counsel"); § 3228 (coroner "may require the testimony to be written"); § 7573 (testimony at will-probate "shall be reduced to writing");

Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, §§ 2571, 6613, 6617 (justices in criminal cases and inquests "shall take in writing the substances" of the testimony; at inquest by county or municipal judge, "a stenographer . . . shall take and transcribe the testimony");

Virginia: Code 1919, § 4844 (committing magistrate may reduce testimony to writing if he "deems it proper"); § 4810 (coroner "shall" reduce testimony to writing);

West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 154, § 4 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing" and subscribed); c. 156, § 14 (testimony before committing justice shall be, "when the justice deems it proper or the accused shall desire it");

Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1302 ("all the testimony adduced in support of the will [at probate] shall be reduced to writing, signed by the witnesses, and certified by the judge of the court"; so also § 1314); § 1938 (threatened offence; magistrate shall reduce testimony to writing); § 1953 (preliminary examination; testimony "shall be reduced to writing by the magistrate, or under his direction, when he shall think it necessary"); § 1962 (witness before magistrate, recognizing for appearance; magistrate "shall immediately take the deposition of such witness"); § 4019 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing" "in all cases where murder or manslaughter is supposed to have been committed");

Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4790 (testimony before committing magistrate "shall be reduced to writing"); § 4818 (threatened offence; magistrate shall "reduce such complaint to writing"); § 4872 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing");

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 1534 (testimony before coroner "shall be reduced to writing").

The terms of the statutes in the various jurisdictions have therefore to be kept in mind.

This rule of preference, then, though not conceived in England until the second century following the enactment of the earliest statute requiring the magistrate's report in writing,[2] has long been there established.[3] In the United States, it seems to be generally accepted (with variances) wherever a statute makes it the magistrate's duty to report the statement in writing.[4]

Whether the report is conclusive, i.e. may be shown to be erroneous or incomplete, is a question dealt with elsewhere (post, § 1349).

§ 1327. Same: Magistrate's Report not required if lost or not taken. The notion of conditionally preferred testimony (ante, § 1286) is that it must be used before any other, if it can be. Hence, if the preferred testimony is unavailable, either because it is lost or otherwise inaccessible, or because it never existed, the requirement of its use ceases. The magistrate's report, then, is not required, and any other testimony to what was said may be used, if the magistrate's report is lost or otherwise inaccessible,[1] or if it was irregularly taken so as to be inadmissible,[2] or if it was never taken in

[2] The doctrine first appears about 1720, in the time of R. v. Reason and of Gilbert's treatise, quoted supra; before that time the magistrate came on the stand and testified orally, usually referring to his notes of the examination; for example: 1679, Green's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 159, 192, 194 (the officer taking the examination testifies to the utterances without reading the examination); 1682, Coningsmark's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 1, 23 (same; though the written examinations were in Court).

[3] See the cases cited in the ensuing sections. Compare the comments of Mr. Gulson, in his treatise cited post, § 1349, n. 1.

[4] Alabama: 1910, Davis v. State, 168 Ala. 53, 52 So. 939 (oral testimony not admissible, unless magistrate's report is accounted for); Connecticut: 1792, Benedict v. Nichols, 1 Root 434 (defendant's examination on oath touching possession of deceased's effects; being "officially taken", it was "not to be proved by parol testimony"); Georgia: 1896, Leggett v. State, 97 Ga. 426, 24 S. E. 165 (magistrate's report of accused's testimony, preferred to oral evidence); Mississippi: 1874, Wright v. State, 50 Miss. 332 (written examination by justice must be used); New York: 1835, People v. White, 14 Wend. 111, 123 (statements at examination not orally provable, unless the examination was never reduced to writing); 1836, People v. Moore, 15 Wend. 419, 421, semble (deposition must be produced, if taken); Porto Rico: 1911, People v. Flores, 17 P. R. 166 (notes by district attorney's clerk, not required to be used); South Carolina: 1909, State v. Winter, 83 S. C. 153, 65 S. E. 209; Tennessee: 1853, Alfred v. Anthony, 2 Swan 581, 590 (magistrate's writing preferred); Texas: 1902, Grimsinger v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 1, 69 S. W. 583 (confession reduced to writing by the clerk of the grand jurors; writing not required to be put in).

See also the cases in the ensuing sections, where the doctrine is assumed to exist; and also the cases requiring the written examination to be produced in proving an inconsistent statement to impeach the accused's testimony (ante, §§ 1262, 1263).

It has been sometimes improperly preferred where no statutory duty exists; 1879, State v. Branham, 13 S. C. 389, 396 (deposition of accused, taken without statutory authority; writing must be produced as preferred testimony, "where there was no obstacle"). But see this case explained post, § 1328.

The magistrate, if it is his duty, is presumed to have made a written report: post, § 1327.

§ 1327. [1] R. v. Reason, quoted ante, § 1326; and the citations in the next section; and the following cases: 1898, R. v. Troop, 30 N. Sc. 339 (witness' contradictory testimony at the preliminary hearing, allowed to be proved by one present, the magistrate's report being lost; good opinion by Henry, J.; two judges thought that its loss was immaterial); 1901, Marx v. Hart, 166 Mo. 503, 66 S. W. 260 (statements of the opponent, at the time of taking his deposition, admitted, the deposition being lost).

[2] 1791, Lambe's Case, 2 Leach Cr. L. 3d ed. 625 (quoted in the next section); 1829, R. v. Hayman, M. & M. 403; 1838, R. v. Wilkinson, 9 C. & P. 662 (other evidence of a defendant's statement admitted, where a magistrate had merely returned a subsequent memorandum noting that the defendant had said nothing); 1843, Jeans v. Wheedon, 2 Moo. & Rob. 486.

writing at all.[3] But the party wishing to use such other testimony must show that the preferred testimony is unavailable; for, if a law imposed a duty for the magistrate to report in writing, it is properly assumed that the magistrate performed his duty and that such a report exists.[4]

§ 1328. Same: Written Examination usable as Memorandum or as Written Confession. If the magistrate's written report is inadmissible as such, because not taken regularly under the statute, it may still be employed in other aspects.

(1) It may be referred to by the magistrate as refreshing his present memory or as a record of his past recollection (ante, §§ 737, 761):

1722, PRATT, C. J., in Layer's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 214: "Your objection would prevail if they were going to read a confession as evidence which was neither read to him nor signed by him. But if there is no examination reduced into writing and signed by the party, the consequence of that is that the witness is at liberty to give an account of what was said, and he may look to his notes to refresh his memory. . . . You say there is no precedent for it; for God's sake, recollect yourself; it is every day done at the Old Bailey; if a person confesseth and it be not in writing, they do prove his confession 'viva voce.'"[1]

(2) It may have been orally acknowledged by the accused to be correct, after it was read over to him, and may thus be receivable, not as the magistrate's report of the accused's statement, but as the statement itself in writing; an oral acknowledgment and adoption of its terms being the same in effect as a signing of it. In such a case, if the writing is produced, it is not as the preferred magistrate's report, but as the confession itself made in writing:

1791, GROSE, J., in Lambe's Case, 2 Leach Cr. L. 3d ed. 625, 630 (an examination before a magistrate reduced to writing, but not signed by magistrate or accused, but orally acknowledged by the latter to be true when read over to him by the clerk): "The intention of the Legislature in passing the statute is clear and obvious. Its only object is to enable Justices of the Peace to take such information and to transmit what passes before the com-

[3] England: 1722, Layer's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 214 (quoted in the next section); U. S. California: 1910, People v. Luis, 158 Cal. 285, 110 Pac. 580 (here a confession in answer to the district attorney); New York: 1835, People v. White, 14 Wend. 111, 123; North Carolina: 1794, State v. Irwin, 1 Hayw. 112 ("There is certainly an impropriety in saying that evidence may be received of a confession made before a private man and that the same confession made before a justice shall not [be] because he hath omitted to perform his duty. This would put it in the power of a justice to make the confession evidence or not, at his election, and is a power the law never meant to give him. The Act is only directory; and if the Justice should not do his duty in the obeying it, that shall not be of so much prejudice to the State that the evidence shall be lost by it"); 1853, State v. Parish, Busbee L. 239 (oral evidence allowed, where the examination was not reduced to writing).

[4] 1779, Jacobs' Case, 1 Leach Cr. L., 3d ed., 347 (as also in Hinxman's Case and Fisher's Case, cited in a note); 1830, R. v. Hollingshead, 4 C. & P. 242; Phillips v. Wimburn, 4 C. & P. 273; 1837, R. v. Coventry, 7 C. & P. 667 (it is presumed that all was taken); 1848, R. v. Martin, 6 State Tr. N. S. 925, 989; 1852, R. v. McGovern, Ire., 5 Cox Cr. 506, Torrens, J. (with hesitation); 1899, Overtoom v. R. Co., 181 Ill. 323, 54 N. E. 898 (a coroner, required by law to take in writing); 1874, Wright v. State, 50 Miss. 332, 335.

§ 1328. [1] Accord: 1819, R. v. Telicote, 2 Stark. 483 (noticing its availability as a memorandum for the clerk); 1825, Dewhurst's Case, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 46 (the accused neither signing nor admitting the truth of the writing, oral evidence of the accused's oral statement was given by the clerk, using the writing to refresh his memory; two other cases noted, accord); 1831, R. v. Bell, 5 C. & P. 162 (the clerk reading in the third person); 1833, R. v. Pressley, 6 C. & P. 183; R. v. Tarrant, 6 C. & P. 182; 1851, R. v. Watson, 3 C. & K. 111.

mitting magistrate to the Court of Oyer and Terminer or Gaol Delivery, to enable the judge and jury before whom the prisoner is tried to see whether the offense is bailable, and whether the witnesses are consistent or contradictory in the evidence they give. . . . There is not a single expression in either of the statutes from which it is to be collected that the examination was directed to be taken merely as evidence against the prisoner. Nor indeed is the examination in practice ever given in evidence as a matter so required by the statutes, but containing a detail of circumstances taken under the solemnity of a public examination for a different purpose, it is more authentic on account of the deliberate manner in which it is taken. . . . The examinations which they directed to be taken became evidence, where they contained confessions, by operation of law, leaving all other confessions, good or bad, as they were before those statutes were made. . . . The examination, or paper-writing, . . . was under the circumstances of the case well received." [2]

If, then, this written confession is desired to be proved, the writing must be produced or accounted for (ante, § 1230). Nevertheless, it would seem that the oral statement of the accused and his subsequent adoption of the written report are in fact two distinct statements, and therefore if it were desired to prove the first and oral one, it would not be necessary to produce the second and written one.[3]

It should be noted, however, that so far as the accused's statement as such is inadmissible by the rules applicable to confessions before a magistrate (ante, §§ 842–852), then both the official report and the oral acknowledgment of it are alike inadmissible.

§ 1329. (b) Magistrate's or Coroner's Report of Witness' Testimony. So far as the law imposes on a committing magistrate or a coroner the duty of making a written report of the testimony delivered before him, the principle just examined (ante, § 1326) makes this official report a preferred testimony, to be used in preference to any other:

1742, Annesley's Trial, 17 How. St. Tr. 1121; a deposition before the coroner was read; the coroner was asked: "Are these all the minutes that you took?" Coroner: "If I may say anything more from my memory, I will do it." Counsel: "Then we will go upon the parole evidence." Counsel for the opponent: "When an officer has taken things down in writing, it is of dangerous consequence to admit parole evidence to be given of the same things." Counsel: "We do not insist upon it."

1839, ABINGER, L. C. B., in Leach v. Simpson, 7 Dowl. Pr. 513, 515: "When testimony has been reduced to writing by a person of competent authority, the writing is in the first instance, the only proper evidence of that testimony"; PARKE, B.: "That deposition is the best evidence of what was said."

1875, BRETT, J., in R. v. Taylor, 13 Cox Cr. 77: "Being before the magistrates, and the law saying that the deposition is primary evidence, the deposition should be put in; but for that reason only."

[2] Accord: 1794, R. v. Thomas, 2 Leach Cr. L. 3d ed. 727 (after a first reading, the accused acknowledged its correctness; upon a later reading, he denied it; admitted); 1827–8, Foster's Case and Hirst's Case, 1 Lew. 46 (a confession read over, the accused not signing nor asked to sign; excluded, because "there was nothing to show that she admitted it to be true"); 1913, State v. Harris, 74 Wash. 60, 132 Pac. 735, semble.

[3] Accord: 1906, Lowe v. State, 125 Ga. 55, 53 S. E. 1038, semble. Contra: 1879, State v. Branham, 13 S. C. 389, 397 (though the magistrate has no duty to examine and report in writing, yet if he does, and the accused signs, the writing must be produced).

This application of the principle, like the preceding one, was not recognized till the 1700s;[1] but since that time it has been unquestioned in England.[2] In the United States also it is accepted, with only an occasional contrary ruling; for there is no reason to discriminate between an accused's statement and a witness' testimony, except so far as the statute may in the latter case not impose the duty of reporting it in writing.[3]

The same qualifications here apply that have been noted for the case of an accused's statement in the preceding sections. The preference being only conditional upon the availability of the magistrate's report, any qualified witness is receivable if the official written report is lost or otherwise inac-

§ 1329. [1] 1679, Wakeman's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 591, 651 (Oates' examination before the Council, proved orally by one of the Councillors); 1679, Knox's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 763, 789 (justice's examination proved orally by the justice).

[2] Eng. 1789, Warren Hastings' Trial, Lords' Journal, May 27 (Nuncomar's examination having been taken down in writing, an oral report of it was excluded); 1839, R. v. Taylor, 8 C. & P. 726; 1839, Leach v. Simpson, 5 M. & W. 309, 7 Dowl. Pr. 513 (applied to civil and criminal cases equally); 1877, R. v. Dillon, 14 Cox Cr. 4 (an information in writing before a magistrate, the charge itself being made orally; the written information required); Can. 1905, Farlinger v. Thompson, 37 Sup. 513, 534 (examination of a debtor).

[3] To the following, add the cases, cited ante, §§ 1262, 1263, requiring a deposition to be produced for contradicting a witness, and the cases in the next notes infra: Alabama: 1905, Sandford v. State, 143 Ala. 78, 39 So. 370; Arkansas: 1839, Dunn v. State, 2 Ark. 229, 248 (defendant's affidavit before coroner, and coroner's testimony on the stand as to the examination before him, excluded, the written report of the examination being available); 1855, Atkins v. State, 16 Ala. 568, 588 (witness' prior inconsistent testimony before magistrate; deposition must be produced if available); 1876, Talbot v. Wilkins, 31 Ala. 411, 421 (testimony before bankruptcy-commissioners; written deposition "the only admissible evidence"); 1878, Shackelford v. State, 33 Ala. 539, 542 (deceased witness before examining magistrate, the law requiring only a reduction of the substance in general to writing; oral evidence allowed); 1894, Cole v. State, 59 Ala. 50, 52, 26 S. W. 377 (defendant's inconsistent testimony at inquest; coroner's report required); California: 1866, People v. Robles, 29 Cal. 421, semble (magistrate's report not required); 1872, Hobbs v. Duff, 43 Cal. 485, 490, semble (written record necessary; here it showed that there had been nothing to record); 1872, People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 452, 458 (contradiction in deposition; showing the deposition not required); 1875, People v. Curtis, 50 Cal. 95 (under P. C. § 869, the magistrate's report is not preferred); Georgia: 1875, Cicero v. State, 54 Ga. 156, 158 (magistrate's examination, if taken, preferred to oral report, and must be accounted for); 1882, Williams v. State, 69 Ga. 11, 30 (whether the magistrate's report of testimony is preferred to any other, left undecided); 1900, Haines v. State, 109 Ga. 526, 35 S. E. 141 (magistrate's report, not preferred); 1904, McKinney v. Carmack, 119 Ga. 467, 46 S. E. 719 (neither committing magistrate's nor coroner's report is preferred, where the testimony is used in impeachment; prior cases not cited); 1905, Green v. State, 124 Ga. 343, 52 S. E. 431 (coroner's report of testimony, not preferred); Illinois: 1899, Overtoom v. R. Co., 181 Ill. 323, 54 N. E. 898 (coroner's report of inquest-testimony, preferred to party's stenographer's report); 1905, Briggs v. People, 215 Ill. 330, 76 N. E. 499 (coroner's minutes of testimony need not be used; no authority cited); Indiana: 1878, Woods v. State, 63 Ind. 353, 357 (oral testimony excluded, where the examination had been reduced to writing, in accordance with the law; unless the writing is unavailable); Iowa: 1919, Wildeboer v. Petersen, 187 Ia. 1169, 175 N. W. 349 (civil action for rape; to show plaintiff's inconsistent statements made before the grand jury, members of the grand jury were allowed to testify, apparently irrespective of proof that no minutes were recorded or that the record was lost); Michigan: 1868, Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 507, 513 (said to be "presumptively the best evidence"); 1889, People v. Hinchman, 75 Mich. 587, 589, 42 N. W. 1006 (preliminary examination; report is the "only admissible evidence", when "present in Court"); New Jersey: 1824, State v. Zellers, 7 N. J. L. 220, 236 (coroner being obliged to take the testimony in writing, other evidence of it was rejected); South Carolina: 1888, State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201, 227, 7 S. E. 296 (coroner's report of testimony, termed the "best evidence"; Branham case, ante, § 1328, approved); Tennessee: 1872, Wade v. State, 7 Baxt. 80, 81, semble (any one may report the testimony, even if the magistrate has taken it in writing); 1872, Titus v. State, 7 Baxt. 132, 137 (magistrate's writing is the "best evidence of what she did say").

cessible,[4] or if it is inadmissible because irregularly taken,[5] or if it was never taken in writing at all;[6] and it is assumed, until the contrary is shown, that the magistrate has done his duty by making a written report.[7]

Whether the report may be shown to be erroneous or incomplete is another question (post, § 1349).

§ 1330. (c) Report of Testimony at a Former Trial. (1) There has never been, in the practice of the common law, any person required or even authorized by law to take in writing the testimony of the witnesses. Hence, the rule from the beginning has always been that no preferred witness is recognized, in proving testimony given at a former trial; in other words, any one who heard it may testify from recollection, with or without the aid (ante, §§ 737, 761) of written notes:[1]

1810, MANSFIELD, C. J., in Doncaster v. Day, 3 Taunt. 262: "What a witness has sworn . . . may be given in evidence either from the judge's notes, or from notes that have been taken by any other person who will swear to their accuracy; or the former evidence may be proved by any person who will swear from his memory to its having been given."

(2) The report of a stenographer is of course more trustworthy in the ordinary case than mere recollection; but, regard being had to the serious burden of searching for a preferred source of evidence and of showing it to be unavailable (ante, § 1286), the advantage to be gained by requiring a stenographic report to be used if available does not seem worth the inconvenience; and such an innovation is discouraged by the Courts:[2]

[4] 1722, R. v. Reason, 16 How. St. Tr. 31, 35 (magistrate's report required, "unless you show you are disabled to do it by some accident or other"; "unless the examination be lost"); 1844, Pearce v. Furr, 2 Sm. & M. 54, 58 (lost report of examination by magistrate; magistrate allowed to testify to the witness' testimony itself; but the Court assumed this to be equivalent to the contents of the paper).

[5] Ala. 1881, Roberts v. State, 68 Ala. 515, 525 (reduced to writing, but not signed; any one who heard, admissible); Ind. 1880, Brown v. State, 71 Ind. 470, 475 (the testimony being taken irregularly in writing, oral report was admitted); La. 1906, State v. Thompson, 116 La. 829, 41 So. 107 (the magistrate's report of the testimony being excluded for irregularity, the testimony of one who heard the former testimony was received); N. Y. 1840, People v. White, 24 Wend. 520, 533 (the witness' statement before the coroner may be proved orally to contradict him, where the coroner's writing was inadmissible); Tex. 1874, Alston v. State, 41 Tex. 40 (irregularly taken; oral report admissible).

[6] 1877, Nelson v. State, 32 Ark. 192, 196 (perjury before a coroner; the testimony not being reduced to writing, oral evidence allowed); 1914, Bennett v. State, 66 Fla. 369, 63 So. 842; 1882, Robinson v. State, 68 Ga. 833; 1872, Wade v. State, 7 Baxt. Tenn. 80, 81.

[7] 1779, R. v. Fearshire, 1 Leach Cr. L. 3d ed., 240; and cases cited ante, § 1327. Contra: 1875, People v. Curtis, 50 Cal. 95, semble.

§ 1330. [1] Accord: 1685, Fernley's Trial, 11 How. St. Tr. 381, 434; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5773, P. C. § 1027 (provable by "any one who heard it"); Ill. 1870, Roth v. Smith, 54 Ill. 431; 1871, Hutchings v. Corgan, 59 Ill. 70 (by a juror, admitted); N. Y. 1911, McRorie v. Monroe, 203 N. Y. 426, 96 N. E. 724; Tenn. 1850, Kendrick v. State, 10 Humph. 479, 488.

The same point is implied in many of the rulings cited post, § 2098 (whether the precise words must be proved).

Whether in malicious prosecution the former testimony can be proved only by the witness himself involves another question (post, § 1416).

[2] Accord: Alabama: 1895, Sanders v. State, 105 Ala. 4, 16 So. 935, semble; Arkansas: 1905, Petty v. State, 76 Ark. 515, 89 S. W. 466 (the witness may read his memorandum to the jury; of course; it is curious that a Court should dignify such an objection by noticing it); Delaware: 1893, Maxwell v. R. Co., 1 Mary. 199, Del. Super., 40 Atl. 945 (report of testimony taken before grand juryman: a juryman may testify to testimony there given yet not found in the report); Kansas: 1904, v. State v. Harmon, 70 Kan. 476, 78 Pac. 805; Nebraska: 1894, German N. Bank v. Leonard, 40 Nebr. 676, 684, 59 N. W. 107; Oregon; 1904,

1891, McIver, J., in Brice v. Miller, 35 S. C. 537, 549, 15 S. E. 272: "While it may be true that what a witness writes down himself, or what is contained in some paper written by another and signed by himself, may be the best evidence of what the witness has said on a former occasion, it does not follow that where a third person, be he stenographer or not, takes down in writing what a witness said, this writing is the best evidence, in such a sense as to exclude any other. Stenographers are no more infallible than any other human beings, and while as a rule they may be accurate, intelligent, and honest, they are not always so; and therefore it will not do to lay down as a rule that the stenographer's notes when translated by him are the best evidence of what a witness has said, in such a sense as to exclude the testimony of an intelligent bystander who has heard and paid particular attention to the testimony of the witness."

That the stenographer is an official one does not make the case any stronger so far as concerns the probable accuracy of the report; nor does it bring the case within the principle of the preceding sections, for the stenographer does not act as an independent officer of the Court, but only under the orders of the judge or the State's counsel; in most jurisdictions the official duty of the stenographer has not even sufficed to admit the reports as an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1669), and there seems little judicial disposition to require such reports to be produced as preferred testimony.[3]

State v. Woolridge, 45 Or. 389, 78 Pac. 333; 1906, State v. Martin, 47 Or. 282, 83 Pac. 849 (here because the stenographer could not verify the completeness and accuracy of the report); South Carolina: 1891, Brice v. Miller, 35 S. C. 537, 549, 15 S. E. 272 (quoted supra); 1898, Garrett v. Weinberg, 54 S. C. 127, 31 S. E. 341 (stenographer's report not preferred to counsel's notes); Washington: 1897, Kellogg v. Scheuerman, 18 Wash. 293, 51 Pac. 344 (stenographer's report of testimony of defendant in malicious prosecution, not preferred to defendant's own account of it); Wisconsin: 1883, Rounds v. State, 57 Wis. 45, 51, 14 N. W. 865 (stenographic report of testimony of defendant and witnesses, not preferred).

Contra: Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11496 ("If such evidence has not been taken by a stenographer, it may be proved by witnesses who were present at the former trial having knowledge of such testimony").

Conversely, recollection-testimony is not preferred: 1916, Spires v. The King, 28 D. L. R. 146, Que. (perjury; the perjured testimony proved by the stenographer verifying the shorthand report, without any other witness to the hearing of the words).

Compare the cases of contradictory testimony (ante, § 1263).

[3] Not required: Alabama: 1918, Harper v. State, 16 Ala. App. 538, 79 So. 632 (perjury; official stenographer's report of testimony, not exclusive; explaining away Todd v. State, 13 Ala. App. 301); 1921, Pressley v. State, — Ala. App. —, 88 So. 291 (perjury; oral testimony to the utterances admissible, though there was an official stenographic record; clearing up former inconsistent rulings); California: 1905, Meyer v. Foster, 147 Cal. 166, 81 Pac. 402 (not preferred to oral testimony from memory); Georgia: 1886, Brown v. State, 76 Ga. 626; Illinois: 1905, Miller v. People, 216 Ill. 309, 74 N. E. 743 (official stenographer's report; "we have no statute giving any special weight to stenographic notes"); Indiana: 1897, Hinshaw v. State, 147 Ind. 334, 47 N. E. 157; 1908, Studabaker v. Faylor, 170 Ind. 498, 83 N. E. 747; Iowa: 1911, State v. Kines, 152 Ia. 240, 132 N. W. 180); Kentucky: 1906, Austin v. Com., 124 Ky. 55, 98 S. W. 295 (cited post, § 1669); Maine: 1876, State v. McDonald, 65 Me. 467 (it "may be proved by any one who heard and recollects it"); Missouri: 1918, State v. Barnes, 274 Mo. 625, 204 S. W. 267; New York: 1911, McRorie v. Monroe, 203 N. Y. 426, 96 N. E. 724; Oklahoma: 1905, Harmon v. Terr., 15 Okl. 147, 79 Pac. 765 (official report, not preferred to the stenographer's testimony on the stand from his carbon copy); Wisconsin: 1905, Wells v. Chase, 126 Wis. 202, 105 N. W. 799 (a perverse ruling, excluding the official stenographer's sworn verification of his notes on the stand, because they were not "certified" by him under Rev. Sts. 1898, § 4141, cited post, § 1669, which declares his certified minutes admissible without calling him in person; the object of the statute was merely to make the minutes admissible without calling him, and his sworn testimony was of course at least as good as his certificate; here the Court, citing no authority, turned the abundant caution of the trial counsel into an error).

Required: California: 1904, People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 Pac. 169 (under P. C. § 869; cited post, § 1669, n. 2); Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2723 (stenographic transcript required in certain cases; quoted post, § 1668, n. 2); Missouri: 1905, Whether former testimony may be proved at all by a judge's notes or by any other hearsay reports is another question (post, §§ 1666–1669).

§ 1331. (d) Deposition taken 'de bene esse'; Affidavit. A deposition, in the narrow sense of the word, i.e. testimony given extrajudicially before a specially authorized officer for the purpose of subsequent use of a trial, stands upon a footing entirely different from that of the preceding sorts of testimony. In a deposition, the testimony is the writing taken down by the officer and signed by the deponent. The officer's writing is not his report of the witness' oral deposition; there is only one testimonial utterance, — the writing.

It is on its face singular that this difference of theory should be so solidly established between a deposition in the narrow sense and the testimony before a committing magistrate, because in both cases the writing is commonly required to be signed by the witness. But the explanation seems to lie in the history of the two kinds of testimony. In the common-law theory of trials, the testimony was what the witness said orally before the jury or the magistrate. In the statute of 1554 (quoted ante, § 1326) the magistrate was required to reduce it to writing; but the general theory continued unaltered. But at that time, and until the 1800s, there were in common-law practice no depositions 'de bene' (post, 1376). The power to order these taken was conceived to be exercisable in Chancery alone, and the statutory recognition of these powers on the common-law Courts in the 1800s was merely a grant of such power and practice as had been recognized in Chancery. Now the Chancery practice was moulded after the practice of the Canon law in the Ecclesiastical Courts; and in this practice all testimony was taken in writing, and in the theory the testimony or deposition was the writing and nothing else. The result was that the statutory adoption of the Chancery deposition-practice in the common-law Courts involved naturally the adoption of its theory of testimony as applied to depositions. Thus, side by side, in the common-law Courts, was found one theory for ordinary testimony and another for depositions 'de bene.'

It results from this, of course, that the written deposition, being itself the only testimonial utterance, must be produced, like any other writing, — a rule unquestioned. Furthermore, if the written deposition is lost, the whole is lost, for there is no other testimonial utterance; hence the terms of the lost writing are the thing to be proved, not the oral answers to the ques-

Estes v. Missouri P. R. Co., 111 Mo. App. 1, 85 S. W. 909 (citing none of these cases); W. Virginia: 1894, Carrico v. R. Co., 39 W. Va. 86, 90, 19 S. E. 571 (but where the witness made an illustration not reported, it was shown by other testimony).

Compare Pa. St. 1887, May 23, §§ 3, 9, Dig. 1920, § 8172, Crim. Procedure, § 21859, Witnesses (notes of former testimony may be used; but oral proof suffices where the testimony is used merely to contradict); and the cases cited ante, § 1263.

The proper method is exemplified in State v. Fetterly, 33 Wash. 599, 74 Pac. 810 (1903).

The following doubt is unnecessary: 1904, People v. Lewandowski, 143 Cal. 574, 77 Pac. 467 (the witness having identified a person in his former testimony by saying, "There is one; that fellow", and pointing, the stenographer was offered to identify the now defendant as the person pointed out; the Court remarks, "There is certainly much force in the contention that the statutory deposition cannot be thus added to"; on the contrary, there is no reason for doubting that it can be thus supplemented).

tions.[1] So, too, if the written deposition, being irregularly taken, is inadmissible the oral answers cannot be proved.

For an affidavit, as for a deposition, the writing is the sole testimonial utterance; and the deductions from this theory apply equally to affidavits.[2]

§ 1332. (e) Dying Declarations, Confessions, and other Extra-judicial Statements. Here it is necessary to notice three discriminations. (a) Where A orally makes a statement, and afterwards makes in writing a statement on the same subject, the two are distinct, and the oral one may be proved without regard to the writing. (b) Where A makes an oral statement, and B writes down its terms, B's writing is merely B's statement of what A has said; and unless B is a preferred witness, A's oral statement may be proved by any hearer without calling for B's writing. (c) Where A and B are negotiating, and the terms of the transaction are reduced to a writing adopted by both, the oral negotiations become immaterial, and the writing, being the only act recognized in law, may alone be used, on the principle of integration (post, § 2425). With these distinctions in mind, it remains to examine the rules applicable to written testimonial statements admissible under Hearsay exceptions.

(1) Dying declarations. (a) Where an auditor has made a written statement of the declarant's oral utterances, this written statement is not preferred testimony, and therefore need not be produced;[1] for there never was any principle in the law of Evidence preferring one person's written memorandum of testimony to another's oral or recollection-testimony. Nor is the case changed because the person thus making a written statement was a magistrate having power to administer oaths or take testimony on a preliminary hearing;[2] for such a person has no duty or authority by law to report dying declarations, and it is solely by virtue of an express duty, as we have seen, that a magistrate's report of testimony is preferred to other witnesses. (b) Where a written memorandum thus taken down is read over to the declarant and signed by him, the writing becomes a second and distinct declaration by him, and therefore on principle his first and oral declaration is provable by any auditor without producing the second and written one. Such is the result accepted by a few Courts;[2] but the majority, misapprehending the nature of the written utterance, and proceeding apparently on the mistaken analogy of a deposition, require the writing to be produced.[2] Of course, if the written one is desired to be proved, it must be produced. (c) Where the declarant makes one oral statement, and afterwards on a separate occasion a second statement, the latter being in writing or orally

§ 1331. [1] 1840, Com. v. Stone, Thacher Cr. C. 604, 608 (a deposition 'in perpetuam' was not recorded in season; on a charge of perjury in it, the deposition not being receivable, the parol testimony was excluded). Contra, and on this point preferable: 1904, State v. Woolridge, 45 Or. 389, 78 Pac. 333 (cited post, § 1349, n. 12; collecting authorities).

[2] 1877, State v. Kirkpatrick, 32 Ark. 117, 119 (perjury by affidavit; 'production required).

§ 1332. [1] Cases cited post, § 1450.

[2] Cases cited post, § 1450.

made but taken down in writing and signed, there are here clearly two distinct statements (whatever view may be held as to (b) supra), and therefore the first or oral statement may be proved without producing the other or written statement; this is generally accepted.[3] Distinguish from this question the operation of the principle of Completeness (post, § 2099), which requires the whole of a single utterance to be proved, and not merely fragments; this principle has nothing to do with the mode of utterance as written or oral; it requires that the whole, whether written or oral, be proved, and it permits one separate utterance to be proved without regard to another separate utterance, whether either or both are oral or written.

(2) Confessions, and statements admitted under Hearsay exceptions. In general, as already noted, the writing down of one person's hearsay statement by another person without a legal duty to report, cannot make the latter's writing a preferred testimony.[4] It need only be added that the statements admissible under exceptions to the Hearsay rule are in many instances originally and solely written statements, — as, entries in the course of business, certifications of copies, and the like, — so that the writing is required to be produced as the statement itself, and not merely as one person's report of another's statement.

Sub-topic C: SUNDRY PREFERRED WITNESSES

§ 1335. Official Certificates. In general, our law of Evidence regards with no special favor the certificate of an official as to a thing done or seen by him. It does not ordinarily even admit such a certificate as evidence under an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1674). So far as statutory provision has cured the objection of the Hearsay rule and made them admissible, it has done nothing more; no weight attaches to them so that in general they become a preferred source of testimony. The effect of such statutes is occasionally misunderstood, and their purpose as curing the Hearsay defect is exaggerated into a purpose to prefer them as testimony; but such rulings must be looked upon as heterodox.[1]

Barring these heterodox rulings, the general principle is so well established as to need only occasional decision, that an official certificate is not a preferred source of testimony, as against other witnesses.[2] It follows, in the spirit of

[3] Cases cited post, § 1450.

[4] 1910, People v. Luis, 158 Cal. 265, 110 Pac. 580 (confession); 1855, Fackler v. Chapman, 20 Mo. 249, 253 (declarations of slaves written down by persons questioning them; writing not preferred); 1914, State v. Kubaszewski, 86 N. J. L. 250, 92 Atl. 387 (confession taken down; not decided).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 863 (Confessions).

§ 1335. [1] 1876, Fornette v. Carmichael, 41 Wis. 200 (official scaling of logs, preferred testimony); 1882, Steele v. Schricker, 55 Wis. 134, 140, 12 N. W. 396 (same).

[2] 1850, Com. v. Damon, 128 Mass. 423 (like the next case); 1913, Com. v. Borasky, 214 Mass. 313, 101 N. E. 377 (record of autopsy, not preferred to testimony of operating physician); 1899, State v. Vaughan, 152 Mo 73, 53 S. W. 420 (coroner's report of post-mortem autopsy not preferred to an attendant physician's testimony); 1897, Duren v. Kee, 50 S. C. 444, 27 S. E. 875 (survey by judicial order not preferred).

So also a publisher's statutory affidavit of publication is not preferred: 1882, Matthews v. Supervisors, 48 Mich. 587, 12 N. W. 863; 1893, Seattle v. Doran, 5 Wash. 482, 484, 32

the same general notion, that such a certificate is not preferred to the testimony on the stand of the official himself.[3]

The practical difficulty, however, lies in distinguishing the application of this settled principle from the principle of the "parol evidence" rule, or rule of Integration (post, §§ 2427, 2450). By the latter principle, when an act is done in writing or is required by law to be done in writing, the only thing that can be material and provable is the writing itself. A parol act is nothing, has no legal effect, and therefore cannot be proved. The question thus often arises whether a particular official writing is merely an official report of a distinct act done in parol and legally effective in parol, or whether the official writing is the sole effective act; for in the former aspect, the official report of it is not a preferred testimony, and the parol act may be proved by any competent witness; while in the latter aspect the official writing, being exclusively the act itself, must be produced. The solution of such a question depends entirely on the substantive law defining the nature of the act; it is enough here to point out the nature of the problem.[4]

The foregoing statement of principle is of course inapplicable in Louisiana, Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico, where the Continental legal tradition prevails and the use of official documentary evidence stands on a peculiar footing.[5]

§ 1336. Same: Record or Certificate of Marriage or Birth as preferred to Other Eye-witnesses. (1) In spite of long tradition to the contrary, the effort is frequently made to persuade a Court to declare the celebrant's or the official's register or certificate of the performance of a marriage-ceremony to be preferred testimony to that of other eye-witnesses of the ceremony. No doubt the evidence of a certificate is more trustworthy, in that to be false its falsity would involve either forgery or a crime equivalent to perjury, while that of a witness on the stand would involve only perjury. But this relative advantage is not to be considered (ante, § 1286) in view of the serious burden of search

Pac. 105, 1002 (similar; repudiating Wilson v. Seattle, 2 Wash. 543, 549, 27 Pac. 474).

But distinguish Iverslie v. Spaulding, 1873, 32 Wis. 394, 396 (affidavit of posting of notice of tax-sale; being a part of the record of proceedings, its production was required).

[3] 1889, People v. Paquin, 74 Mich. 34, 36, 41 N. W. 852 (non-payment of liquor-tax; county treasurer's record not preferred to oral testimony of his deputy); 1824, Perry v. Block, 1 Mo. 484 (survey-plat not preferred to testimony of surveyor); 1830, Jackson v. Russell, 4 Wend. N. Y. 543, 547 (statutory certificate of a Surrogate that no will was filed, not preferred to other testimony; "his certificate was made evidence for greater convenience, not because it was a higher species of evidence than his oath in open court").

Whether the official may contradict his own certificate is a different question (ante, § 530).

[4] The following cases will serve as illustrations: compare the cases cited post, §§ 1352, 2427, 2453: Federal: 1895, Nelson v. Bank, 16 C. C. A. 425, 69 Fed. 800, 32 U. S. App. 554 (notary's certificate not required in proving demand, presentment, and notice); Mass. 1859, Stearns v. Doe, 12 Gray 482, 486 (register of ship not preferred to prove ownership; possession or acts of ownership held competent); 1870, Wayland v. Ware, 104 Mass. 46, 51 (record at the War Department of enlisted volunteers credited to a town, not preferred evidence as to D.'s having been included in that enlistment; the fact being one "which may exist in and be proved by a record, but which is not necessarily so to be proved"); 1895, Com. v. Walker, 163 id. 226, 39 N. E. 1014 (prison-keeper's record of prisoner's account of himself, not preferred); Mich. 1892, Curtis v. Wilcox, 91 Mich. 229, 237, 51 N. W. 992 (clerk's note of filing of mortgage, treated as the best evidence).

[5] The Code provisions are quoted ante, §§ 1179, 1225, post, § 1336.

or proof of loss involved in preferring its production; while the testimony of the celebrant is in itself no more valuable than that of any credible eye-witness. That the register or certificate of marriage is not preferred to testimony of other eye-witnesses has long been settled:[1]

1840, Dr. LUSHINGTON, in Woods v. Woods, 2 Curt. Eccl. 516, 522: "A register is not to be considered the best evidence of a marriage, nor has it ever been so considered in the books and authorities bearing on the question. The rule respecting best evidence is that you are not allowed, where there is evidence of a superior character, to give inferior evidence, unless you account for the non-production of the best evidence; the effect of which is to exclude all other evidence till the absence of the best evidence is accounted for. But I am of opinion that the register is not in contemplation of law the best evidence, for these reasons: first, that registration is not necessary for the marriage itself; secondly, that no error or blunder in the register could affect the validity of the marriage; and thirdly, that registration is not like an agreement or a deed in writing and the contents of which cannot be proved by 'viva voce' evidence, but it is a mere record afterwards of what has been done, . . . not the compact itself."

It has also been at times maintained that the particular persons signing the register as attesting witnesses are preferred to other eye-witnesses. This, and the supposed rule that in actions for criminal conversation and prosecutions for bigamy the eye-witnesses of the marriage-ceremony must be produced (in the old phrase, that a "marriage in fact" must be proved), are in essence rules of Quantity, not of Preference, and are therefore elsewhere examined (post, §§ 2085–2088).

(2) On the same principle, there is no preference for an official record of birth or baptism.[2]

(3) Here, however, in both foregoing cases, Louisiana, Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico, maintain the Continental legal tradition, which exalts official documentary statements (the "register of civil status") to a special testimonial rank. The effect of this is seen in a statutory rule preferring the official record of baptism or marriage on an issue of legitimacy.[3]

§ 1336. [1] The cases are more conveniently collected post, § 2088, with other rules for proof of marriage.

[2] 1921, State v. Berry, 192 Ia. 191, 182 N. W. 781 (statutory rape; prosecutrix' age evidenced by herself, the physician, and others, without the record); 1886, Com. v. Stevenson, 142 Mass. 466, 8 N. E. 341; 1888, Hermann v. State, 73 Wis. 248, 41 N. W. 171 (baptismal certificate or register, not preferred to the mother's testimony).

[3] For the history and legislation of the Continental "register of civil status", see Brissaud's History of French Private Law, §§ 573–576 (1912; vol. III of the Continental Legal History Series):

Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, §§ 193–195 (legitimacy; proof by marriage register preferred first, then proof by repute); § 196 ("If there be neither register of birth or baptism, nor this general reputation, or if the child has been registered under a false name, or if" etc. etc., then "the proof of his legitimate filiation may be made either by written or oral evidence"); 1829, Broussard v. Mallet, 8 Mart. N. S. 269; 1834, Duplessis v. Kennedy, 6 La. 231, 242; 1836, Stein v. Stein, 9 La. 278, 280. But the rule is not applied in criminal cases: 1903, State v. Menard, 110 La. 1098, 35 So. 360; 1906, State v. Romero, 117 La. 1003, 42 So. 482; Philippine Isl. Civ. C. §§ 53–55 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. §§ 3223–3225 but substituting at the end of § 3223: "unless such books have never been kept, or have disappeared, or the question arises in litigation, in which cases the marriage may be proved by evidence of any kind"); §§ 326, 327 (like P. R. §§ 3389, 3390); 1912, Adriano v. De Jesus, 23 P. I. 350 (baptismal certificate of 1870; "as the civil registry was never established in these Islands during the former sovereignty", a canonical certificate of baptism "constitutes as a public document proof of the facts . . . though it § 1337. Same: Official or Certified Copies of Documents, as preferred to Examined or Sworn Copies. There have also been occasional attempts to introduce a rule of preference for an official or certified copy of a public document as against a sworn or examined copy. In the traditions of the common law, the former sort was given so little regard, obnoxious as it was to the Hearsay rule, that only in a narrow class of cases — since much enlarged by statute in later times — was it admitted at all (post, § 1677); much less did it receive recognition as a preferred source of testimony. The reasons for this, and the occasional success of the effort to lay down a rule of preference, have already been dealt with in considering the rules for proving the contents of documents (ante, § 1273).

§ 1338. Preference of Copy-Witness to Recollection-Witness. In proving the terms of a document not available in court, there is a decided difference of value between a witness who has written down the terms directly upon reading the original — i.e. has made a copy — and a witness who trusts wholly to recollection. Whether in any or in all cases the superior value of a copy-witness should so outweigh the burden of requiring his production can be impugned and assailed by contrary proof"); 1916, Baltazar v. Alberto, 33 P. I. 336 (inheritance; "birth, marriage, and death certificates issued by the parish priests under the Spanish régime are merely presumptive evidence of the facts contained in them"); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 3223–3225 (record of marriages preferred; quoted post, § 2085); § 3389 ("The registry of civil status shall include the records or entries of births, marriages, emancipations, acknowledgments and legitimations, and deaths, and shall be in charge of the municipal judges in Porto Rico"); § 3390 ("The records in the registry shall be evidence of the civil status, and any other evidence can be admitted only when such records have never existed or the books of the registry should have disappeared or when a litigation is instituted before the courts"); 1912, People v. De Jesús, 18 P. R. 575 (rape on a female under 14; whether the registry certificate of birth is the best evidence, not decided); 1912, García v. Garzot, 18 P. R. 835, 845 (records of ecclesiastical proceeding, under the former Spanish system of jurisdiction, finding birth and baptism, held valid proof, being a judgment); 1912, People v. Diaz, 19 P. R. 497 (manslaughter; death is provable by physicians who made an autopsy, without accounting for the civil registry entry; citing Civ. C. § 320 and P. C. 206); 1913, Camacho v. Balasquide, 19 P. R. 564, 575 (filiation of natural child; certificate of inscription in the civil registry is not "an incontrovertible document", under Civ. C. § 320 and Evid. Act § 71; here contrary testimony as to date of birth was received); 1915, Assise v. Curet, 22 P. R. 518 (dissolution of marriage with a woman of 14; the mother's testimony to the woman's age, held properly admitted without proof by the registry there being no objection; it is not law that "the civil register must always be the only evidence of the age of a person", under Civ. C. § 320); 1916, Iturrino v. Iturrino 24 P. R. 439 (similar to García v. Garzot, supra; here held effective as to an acknowledgment of a natural child; the theory and practice of the Spanish ecclesiastical proceedings are here fully explained); 1917, Fortis v. Fortis, 25 P. R. 64 (heirship; the baptismal records being destroyed, other evidence of birth was admitted, under Rev. Civ. C. § 320); 1917, Montaloo v. Montaloo, 25 P. R. 800 (Iturrino v. Iturrino cited, as to using baptismal certificates of 1916 for a birth of 1893); 1917, Rodriguez' Succession v. Perez, 25 P. R. 73, 78 (heirship, in an action for title; "plaintiffs claiming as heirs in a reivindicatory action may prove status by oral testimony"; but here certificates of birth, baptism, and death were duly introduced, and the opinion's reference is probably to the non-necessity of producing a formal decree of heirship obtained in a special action 'ad hoc'); 1919, Morales v. Romea, 27 P. R. 17 (declaration of heirship; judgment in another suit for filiation, held binding); 1919, Ex parte Otero, 27 P. R. 315 (declaration of heirship; baptismal record of 1854, reciting maternal relationship of a natural child, admitted as an ancient record, on the principle of § 1573, post).

For the admissibility of such registers to evidence the further details of civil status, see the cases cited post, § 1646.

For the Louisiana, Philippines, and Porto Rico rule as to required proof of an illegitimate's recognition by the parent, see post, § 1606.

that a rule of preference should be established (ante, § 1286) is a matter that has much concerned the Courts. All the questions that concern rules of Preference as between copy-witnesses and recollection-witnesses, and between different kinds of copy-witnesses, have already been considered elsewhere (ante, §§ 1265–1275), in dealing with the modes of proving the contents of documents.

It need here only be said that to a limited extent, and depending on special considerations, in harmony with those here noted (ante, § 1286), there is a rule of preference for copy-witnesses over recollection-witnesses. This forms therefore the third established specific rule of Conditional Preference.

§ 1339. Sundry Preferences for Eye-witnesses and other Non-Official Witnesses (Writer of a Document, to prove Forgery; Bank President or Cashier, to prove Counterfeiting; Surveyor, to prove Boundary; Ship's Log-Book; etc.). It has already been seen (ante, § 1286) that there is in general no principle of preference among witnesses; that such rules of preference are limited to a few definite cases, of which the attesting-witness to a document's execution, the magistrate's official report of testimony, and the copy-witness to a document's contents are the only established ones, — each of these resting on a peculiar tradition or policy. Apart from these cases, a few attempts are recorded, from time to time, to establish a rule of preference in sundry situations where one class of persons is presumably better equipped testimonially than another. These attempts for the most part invoke as authority a ruling[1] delivered under the influence of that indefinite "best evidence" notion so often invoked for various purposes up to the end of the 1700s (ante, §§ 1173, 1174). This ruling in Williams v. East India Co. has long been repudiated in England;[2] but for a time it tended to produce considerable effect upon the law of Evidence in this country. In a few distinct lines of cases its authority was thought particularly suggestive:

(1) It was thought that for proving the genuineness of a document the alleged writer was a preferred witness;[3] but it is generally conceded that no such rule of preference exists.[4]

§ 1339. [1] 1802, Williams v. East India Co., 3 East 193 (injury by an explosive put on board a ship without due notice; the defendant's officer delivered it, and the first mate, deceased, received it; the plaintiff was held bound to call the defendant's officer, as the only remaining eye-witness; and his failure to call him was held ground for a non-suit).

[2] 1826, Koster v. Reed, 6 B. & C. 19 (insurance on a ship that never arrived; a rumor being offered that the ship had foundered but the crew escaped, held that it was not necessary to call some of the crew or show diligent search for them; repudiating such an application of the best-evidence principle; Williams v. E. I. Co. was cited in argument).

[3] 1796, Grose, J., in Stone's Trial, 25 How. St. Tr. 1313 ("Whenever you bring evidence for the purpose of proving a fact, you must give the best evidence. The fact intended to be proved to the jury is that this came from Mr. Stone, written by his order. Who is the best evidence to prove that? Why, the man who wrote it, in this and in every case, whether the matter be criminal or civil").

[4] Alabama: 1905, Washington v. State, 143 Ala. 62, 39 So. 388 (forgery); Georgia: 1885, Royce v. Gazan, 76 Ga. 79; 1910, McCray v. State, 134 Ga. 416, 68 S. E. 62 (magistrate's signature on a warrant, the magistrate, though present, held not a perferred witness to the signature); Louisiana: 1821, Abat v. Riou, 9 Mart. La. 465, 466 (not decided); Minnesota: 1873, Smith v. Valentine, 19 Minn. 452, 454 (proving a decree signed by a judge; the judge not preferred to the clerk of the court); Tennessee: 1836, Osborne v. State, 9 Yerg. 488 (issuing justice not preferred to a constable, to authenticate an execution); 1848, McCully v. Malcom, 9 Humph. 187, 192 (genuineness of a warrant; the issuing justice not a preferred witness, though present in court).

(2) As a specially fitting application of the preceding rule, it was for a long time (until the era of State bank-currency ended) a much-agitated question whether in proving the forgery of a document — particularly a bank-note — the person whose name was forged (for example, the president or the cashier of the bank) was not a preferred witness, as against (for example) one who was familiar with the signature. This requirement received scanty judicial support,[5] and was generally negatived.[6] Yet statutes were in many jurisdictions thought necessary for repudiating it.[7] To-day, it may be supposed that no Court would sanction such a rule.

[5] 1830, Cayford's Case, 7 Greenl. 57, 60 (president or cashier of a domestic bank must be called; but not of a bank in another State).

[6] 1801, R. v. M'Guire, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 311, note, Chambre, J.; 1802, R. v. Hughes, 1 Leach Cr. L., LeBlanc, J. (cashier, not preferred); 1886, Lefferts v. State, 49 N. J. L. 26, 27, 6 Atl. 521 (testimony of the supposed signer of a document, as to the signature's genuineness, not preferred to one who knows his handwriting); 1831, Hess v. State, 5 Oh. 5, 7 (teller of a bank, admitted to testify to forgery of signatures of president and cashier; "there is not such a distinction between one whose knowledge is of his own handwriting and the knowledge of another's on the same subject as constitutes the former evidence of a superior degree to the latter"); 1843, Foulke's Case, 2 Rob. Va. 836, 841.

Compare also the cases cited ante, §§ 570, 705, some of which imply the same result, and arose out of the same controversy.

[7] A few of these statutes, however (as in Florida and Massachusetts), still recognize a modified preference:

CANADA: R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. § 980 (on a trial involving counterfeit coin, "any witness suffices", and no mint officer, etc., need be called);

UNITED STATES: Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1048 (forgery, etc., of bill or note of corporation or bank; "persons of skill", competent to prove forged nature of document);
Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1966 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 2007);
California: P. C. 1872, § 1107 (forgery, etc., of bank-bill; "persons of skill", admissible to prove counterfeit nature of bill);
Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 6774 ("persons of skill", admissible to prove forgery of bill or note of bank or company on prosecution therefor);
Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 6083 (in prosecutions for forgery, etc., of bank-notes, "the testimony of the president and cashier of such banks may be dispensed with, if their place of residence is out of the State or more than 40 miles from the place of trial; and the testimony of any person acquainted with the signature of such president or cashier, or who has knowledge of the difference in the appearance of the true and counterfeit bills" is admissible);
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8954 (forging, etc., a bill, etc., of an incorporated company or bank; "persons of skill", admissible to prove forgery);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 2114 ("cashier of a bank purporting to have issued" a note, bill, draft, certificate of deposit, or other instrument, is a sufficient witness to genuineness);
Iowa: Code 1897, § 4870, Comp. Code § 8771 (forgery of bank-bill, etc.; "persons of skill", admissible to prove bill, etc., to be counterfeit);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 8137 ("persons of skill, or experts" may testify to genuineness of bill, etc., "or other writing");
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 123, § 8 (forgery of bank-bills, etc.; like Mass. Gen. L. 1921, c. 267, § 14);
Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 267, § 14 (in charges connected with counterfeit bank-bills, the testimony of president or cashier is not preferred if residing out of the State or more than 40 miles from place of trial, and testimony of other persons competent to distinguish the forgery is admissible);
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 15441 (in prosecutions for forgery, etc., of bank-bills, "the testimony of the president and cashier of such bank may be dispensed with, if their place of residence shall be out of this State or more than 40 miles from the place of trial, and the testimony of any person acquainted with the signature of the president or cashier of such banks, or who has knowledge of the difference in appearance of the true and counterfeit appearance of such bills or notes" may be admitted);
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8461 (substantially like Or. Laws 1920, § 2007);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 11983 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, §§ 6684, 7175 ("persons of skill", admissible to prove forged nature of bill or note of incorporated company or bank, on trial for forgery, etc.);
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 1600 (substantially like Mich. Comp. L. § 15441);

(3) It was suggested in a few jurisdictions that the surveyor of a boundary was to be preferred to any other competent witness; but this never received any sanction.[8] But in a few States a preference is given to an official surveyor, by forbidding the use of any other person's survey unless by mutual consent;[9] so also an official log-scaler's record is sometimes preferred.[10]

(4) Where lack of consent was an essential element in a crime, — as, the owner's lack of consent, in larceny, — it was suggested that the only person who could certainly know the fact was the owner himself, and that he should be called. This rule, however, which obtained a foothold in a few jurisdictions, seems not to be in truth a rule of Preference, and is elsewhere dealt with (post, § 2089).

(5) That which was merely a common practice in England came to be in a few American jurisdictions a fixed rule; namely, that all the eye-witnesses of a crime, so far as available, must be called by the prosecution, — a rule particularly invoked in prosecutions for homicide. It is not a rule of Preference, however, but a rule of Quantity, and is elsewhere dealt with (post, §§ 2079–2081).

(6) A ship's log-book, containing the master's entries, is by long maritime custom now enshrined in statute, the preferred evidence in almost all issues, civil or criminal, involving the happenings on a voyage. The statutory details, however, follow no one principle consistently.[11]

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 10862 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 2721 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 2007 (in prosecutions for forging, etc., bank-bill, "the testimony of any person acquainted with the signature" of the officer authorized to sign, "or who has knowledge of the difference in appearance of the true and counterfeit bills or notes thereof", is admissible to prove the bill's counterfeit character);
Pennsylvania: St. 1860, Mar. 31, § 55, Dig. 1920, § 8173, Criminal Procedure (testimony of expert witnesses to counterfeit paper, or coin, admissible, without requiring proof "of the handwriting or the other tests of genuineness" as heretofore);
Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 346, § 6 (counterfeit bank-bill; testimony of purporting signer shall not be required when he is out of the State or resides out of it or more than 30 miles distant, but any competent witness knowing his hand, or familiar with the difference between false and true bills and skilled therein, is admissible);
South Carolina: Crim. L. 1922, § 354 (on a trial for counterfeiting State bank notes, "the bank shall cause its cashier or some competent witness" to attend and give evidence);
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 4902 (like Cal. P. C. § 1107); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 8987 (like Cal. P. C. §1107);
Wisconsin; Stats. 1919, § 4626 (substantially like Fla. Rev. G. S. § 6083); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § [illegible] trial for forgery, etc., of bill or note [illegible] ated company or bank, "any perso [illegible] may be witness" to prove the forgery)

Add also the statutes which admit the affidavit of a State or Federal treasurer to prove the forgery of government paper (post, § 1710).

[8] Haw. 1907, Forrester v. Hurtt, 18 Haw. 256 (land location; surveyor not preferred); Ky. 1809, Bowling v. Helm, 1 Bibb 88 (the surveyor running a boundary, not preferred to any other witness); 1818, Grubbs v. Pickett, 1 A. K. Marsh. 253 (surveyor not preferred to prove boundary-correspondence); Md. 1860, Richardson v. Milburn, 17 Md. 67 (line of a fence-survey; the testimony of the surveyor held not preferable to that of an eye-witness); Mo. 1853, Weaver v. Robinett, 17 Mo. 459 (boundary lines provable by any one knowing them; field notes, survey, surveyor, or a witness of the survey, not preferred); W. Va. 1899, King v. Jordan, 46 W. Va. 106, 32 S. E. 1022 (in ejectment, a plat or survey of the lines is not essential evidence).

That a map need not be official, nor a photograph be proved by the photographer, is noticed ante, § 794.

[9] Statutes cited post, § 1665, n. 5 (surveyor's records).

[10] Cases cited ante, § 1335.

[11] Can. Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 113, § 288 (seamen's offences; if the log-book entry is

(7) In a few casual instances, attempts have been made, usually unsuccessful, to introduce some specific rule of preference for which no authority exists.[12]

From all such suggested rules of preference should be distinguished (as already noted in § 1335) questions involving the principle of "parol evidence" or Integration (post, §§ 2425, 2429), i.e. whether in a given instance the act was done in writing. If an act is done in writing, the writing must be produced in order to prove the terms of the act; but if the act as legally done and effective was in parol, and the doer merely wrote down a memorandum of it, then the parol act may be proved without producing the writing, because there are no rules of preference which can require it instead of other testimony. In which of these aspects a given transaction is properly to be viewed depends entirely on the intent of the parties and the substantive law applicable; it is enough here to call attention to the nature of the problem.[13] not produced or proved, the Court "may refuse to receive evidence of the offence"); U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 4597, amended by St. 1898, Dec. 21, §§ 19, 20, Code 1919, §§ 7781–7783, 8114, 8118, 8123, 8158 (the Court in admiralty may refuse to receive evidence of offences by seamen when not entered in the official log; cited also post, § 1641); 1906, The Amazon, 144 Fed. 153, D. C. (statute applied).

A ship's register is ordinarily not conclusive as to title; 1830, Colson v. Bonzey, 6 Greenl. 474 (action for supplies furnished).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 1240, post, §§ 1641, 1647.

[12] Fla. 1915, Carter v. State, 68 Fla. 143, 148, 66 So. 1000 (family Bible entry, not preferred to oral testimony); Ky. 1814, Beeler v. Young, 3 Bibb 520 (in proving age, a family Bible entry is not preferred to oral testimony); St. 1916, Mar. 18, p. 162 (age for school attendance; certain written evidence preferred; quoted post, § 1644); Mich. 1875, Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 49, 52 (fact and condition of bodily injuries; medical testimony not preferred); Mo. 1825, Buckner v. Armour, 1 Mo. 535 (book-entrant not preferred, to prove items of goods sold, etc.); N. Y. 1896, Domschke v. R. Co., 148 N. Y. 337, 42 N. E. 804 (the testimony of an owner, collecting his rents by an agent, as to their amount, excluded in the absence of a reason for not producing the agent, "who had personal knowledge", the former's testimony being "not the best evidence of the fact"); Oh. 1840, Vairin v. Ins. Co., 10 Oh. 223, 225 (authority by vendee to vendor to hold a boat as collateral security; vendee not a preferred witness to the facts).

[13] The following cases will serve as illustrations: Ala. 1841, Pharr v. Bachelor, 3 Ala. 237, 246 (written appraisal of value, not preferred); 1850, Sparks v. Rawls, 17 Ala. 211, 212 (invoice of goods; testimony by maker as to value, received without producing invoice); 1910, Stewart v. Sloss-Sheffield S. & I. Co., 170 Ala. 544, 54 So. 48 (account-books do not exclude testimony of one having independent knowledge); Ark. 1890, Pelican Ins. Co. v. Wilkerson, 53 Ark. 353, 356, 13 S. W. 1103 (inventory required by insurance policy to be kept; upon its loss without fault, other evidence of amount of goods lost is admissible); Mo. 1899, Rissler v. Ins. Co., 150 Mo. 366, 51 S. W. 755 (account-books not preferred as evidence of sales); N. Y. 1834, People v. Peck, 11 Wend. 604, 611 (register of authorized church-voters, authorized by statute, not preferred to other evidence).

Compare the useful remarks of Mr. Gulson, in his treatise cited post, § 1349, n. 1.

SUB-TITLE II (continued): RULES OF TESTIMONIAL PREFERENCE

TOPIC II: CONCLUSIVE (OR ABSOLUTE) PREFERENCES

CHAPTER XLII.

§ 1344. Nature of a Conclusive Testimonial Preference. The nature of a Conclusive Preference as distinguished from a Provisional Preference (ante, § 1285) is in itself simple. In the latter, the preferred witness is to be called first, so that his knowledge, whatever it amounts to, may be availed of; but when this has been done, the field is still open for the other witnesses; these may support or they may contradict the preferred witness; his testimony is in no sense final. In short, the preference for him is provisional only, and as against other witnesses it lasts only until his testimony is finished. But in the former class, the preferred witness is not merely called first; his testimony, when produced, is taken as final. No other witnesses will be allowed; the error of his testimony, if any, cannot be shown by other and contradicting witnesses. In short, his testimony is conclusive.

That such a strict and absolute effect should be conceded to any human being's testimony is indeed extraordinary, and it may well be asked whether our law of Evidence recognizes any rule of preference of the conclusive sort. May not the apparent cases of conclusive preference be explainable as in truth results of other independent principles of substantive law, sometimes loosely dealt with in terms of "conclusive evidence"? No doubt this is the true explanation of most of the instances in which such a term is employed, and it remains to ascertain whether, after all such explanations, there exist any instances of conclusive preference in the shape of genuine rules of evidence. The various instances to which the term "conclusive evidence" has been more or less plausibly applied may be grouped into three classes, i.e. two classes of rules clearly non-evidential, and one class clearly evidential (so far as it has any recognition). The first two must here be briefly considered.

§ 1345. Cases involving the Integration ("Parol Evidence") Principle, distinguished (Corporate Records, Judicial Records, Contracts, etc.). There are innumerable cases in which a writing is regarded as the sole and exclusive object of proof because of the "parol evidence" or Integration principle (post, §§ 2400, 2478). This principle assumes that, by some provision of law, or by the parties' intent, the act effective in law is a single written memorial, and that no parol act is to be regarded as of any effect for the purpose. Where this is the situation, it is obvious that the terms of the writing are alone to be proved; the writing must be produced, or, if it is unavailable, its terms must be proved. Here it is clear that the writing is not "evidence", nor "conclusive evidence", of the act; for it is the act. That the writing cannot be shown to represent inaccurately some prior parol conduct, is not because the writing is conclusive evidence of what that parol conduct was, but because the parol conduct is immaterial and ineffective, and therefore (ante, § 2) cannot be proved at all. It is not because we trust conclusively to the writing's testimony of what the parol conduct was, but because we do not care what the parol conduct was, and are not allowed to ascertain.

In consequence of this principle of Integration, then, the question is constantly presented whether a specific writing has become the sole act material to the case; and this is purely a question of the substantive law applicable to the kind of transaction involved. It is not a question of a rule of Evidence, — as later more particularly noted (post, § 2400).

The treatment of such questions would be here out of place and impracticable. It will be enough to note some illustrations of the kind of problem presented. For example, whether a corporate record can be shown to be incorrect depends on whether by the substantive law a corporate doings to be effective must be done in writing, — even though the question may be expressed by asking whether the written record is conclusive.[1] So where a surety gives bond to answer for an official's defalcation, to hold that the State auditing books are not conclusive is to say that he, the surety, has contracted to be responsible for the actual amount missing, and not for the amount recorded in the books as missing.[2] So where a statute prohibited a town to maintain as a schoolmaster a person not having a certain certificate of quali-

§ 1345 [1] 1851, Greeley v. Quimby, 22 N. H. 335, 338 ("as the law required that the return of the selectmen laying out the road should be in writing, no other proof can be substituted for it"); and cases cited post, § 2461.

[2] 1878, State v. Newton, 44 Ark. 270, 284

fications, to hold that those qualifications could not be shown by evidence without producing the certificate is not to hold the certificate conclusive evidence of them, but to hold that the only fact material under the law was the possession of a specific writing.[3] So, in a prosecution for publishing a seditious article in a newspaper, to hold that the proprietor's filing a sample copy at the registry-office as required by statute is "conclusive of publication" is merely to hold that the filing of such a copy is an act of publication for the purposes of the penal law.[4] Again, in an issue over the boundary of land granted by the Government, a ruling that the official survey is conclusive is not necessarily a ruling as to its conclusive testimonial effect but signifies that the survey is a part of the grantor's description of the land conveyed, and is therefore part of the deed of grant.[5] Other illustrations are furnished in those cases where certain judicial action will be taken according as a specific document does or does not exist, irrespective of any attempt to ascertain and establish the truth of the assertions in the document. For example, a person claiming to be a foreign envoy will be treated judicially as such if the Executive has recognized him as such, irrespective of the truth of the case;[6] a foreign commission carried by a ship will be held "conclusive" of its national character, i.e. no attempt to investigate further will be made;[7] a judge's certificate as to what passed at a trial will be treated as "conclusive" in an application for a new trial,[8] i.e. so far as concerns the terms for granting a new trial, one of them is that the trial judge's certificate shall state certain things. In some jurisdictions the answer of a garnishee as to how far he is chargeable shall be "conclusive",[9] i.e. for the purpose of allowing the use of garnishee-process, one of the terms of its allowance is that the garnishee's statements, whether true or not, shall be the basis of action. Finally it may be noted that a Court record is "conclusive" as to the proceedings of the Court, not because it is a preferred source of evidence of the things actually done in parol, but because it is itself the judicial act and the parol matters are not the judicial acts.[10]

§ 1346. Cases involving the Effect of Judgments, distinguished (Judgments, Certificates of Married Women's Acknowledgments, Sheriffs' Returns, Judicially Established Copies, Certificates of Naturalization, etc.). In considering the effect to be given to a judgment in another Court or cause, and especially a foreign judgment, when offered to sustain an action brought to enforce it or pleaded in defence to another action brought for the same claim, it is common to speak of the judgment in terms of Evidence and to describe its effect by the

[3] 1819, Com. v. Dedham, 16 Mass. 141.

[4] 1848, R. v. O'Doherty, 6 State Tr. N. s. 831, 874.

[5] 1901, Allmendinger v. McHie, 189 Ill. 308, 59 N. E. 517 (refusing to let a surveyor impeach a recorded plat made by statute equivalent to a deed); 1814, Ringgold v. Galloway, 3 H. & J. 451, 461; 1897, Carter v. Hornback, 139 Mo. 238, 40 S. W. 893.

[6] Post, § 2574.

[7] 1822, Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. 283, 335.

[8] 1718, R. v. Motherwell, 1 Stra. 93; 1874, Exp. Gillebrand, L. R. 19 Ch, App. 52.

[9] 1896, Phillips v. Meagher, 166 Mass. 152 44 N. E. 136.

[10] Post, § 2450.

phrase " conclusive evidence."[1] Is a judgment, then, an instance of a rule of conclusive preference, making the other Court's certificate that Doe has or has not a certain cause of action a conclusive testimony to that fact?

By no means. The theory of the use of judgments is not a matter to be lightly dogmatized about; yet it seems clear that the operation of recognizing it, when produced from another court, in support of a plaintiff or in defence of a defendant, is upon analysis not at all an employment of evidence. It is rather the lending of the Court's executive aid, on certain terms, to a claimant or a defendant, without investigation of the merits of fact. The closest analogy is that of an alias execution; when the legal effectiveness of a first execution has expired without the party's obtaining satisfaction of the judgment, he may without a new trial reinvoke the executive aid of the Court and obtain a second writ of execution, because the original judgment or order of the Court to make satisfaction has not yet been fulfilled. In such a case the Court lends its executive aid because of its own order or judgment already rendered; there is no question of re-trying the facts of the claim, but merely of whether and on what terms it will grant anew its executive aid. Now the act of the Court in giving effect through its own officers to a judgment in another Court or cause does not in its nature differ from the issuance of an alias execution; it differs only in regard to the terms upon which this effect and aid will be granted. Not upon the mere existence of another Court's judgment will the second Court lend its own aid; but only for certain kinds of judgments from the other Court. If the present Court believes that there was in the other Court a fair and full investigation of the facts, including a due summoning of parties bound to obey the summons, an opportunity for the full hearing of evidence on both sides, and an honest and intelligent deliberation by the tribunal over the evidence, then the present Court will lend its enforcing aid as if to its own judgment. The fairness, fulness, and legality of the § 1346. [1] E.g. Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Hall v. Obder, 11 East 118 ("evidence of the debt"); Brougham, L. C., in Houlditch v. Donegall, 2 Cl. & F. 470 ("a foreign judgment is only 'prima facie', not conclusive evidence of a debt"); 1910, Chantangco v. Abaroa, 218 U. S. 476, 31 Sup. 34 (where it is discouraging to find this Court discussing a judgment-bar in terms of its being "admissible in evidence").

The use of judgments of other Courts for relieving the party from proof of incidental facts needs much liberalizing. The principal instances are:

(1) Using a judgment of conviction of a principal in larceny, on the trial of the accessory; some cases are collected ante, § 1079, n. 5.

(2) Using a judgment of conviction to impeach a witness; this is unquestioned: ante, §§ 980, 987.

(3) Sundry uses:

Excluded: 1911, Lillie v. Modern Woodman, 89 Nebr. 1, 130 N. W. 1004 (beneficiary who had murdered her husband; the judgment in the criminal case held not admissible; the opinion declares this to be "fundamental and elementary", and it doubtless is, as matter of law; nevertheless, it reveals an instance where some of our fundamental law is fundamental nonsense); 1918, Keller & Co. v. Ellerman & B. S. Co., 38 P. I. 514 (non-delivery of imported goods; judgment on a criminal charge of theft of the goods, not admitted).

Admitted: 1910, In re Crippen, [1911] 1 P. 108 (application of a convicted felon, or his representative, to establish claim resulting from his own crime; conviction admissible); 1913, Mash v. Darley, [1914] 1 K. B. 1 (In re Crippen approved; here, on a bastardy complaint, the defendant's conviction for carnal intercourse with the complainant was received); 1908, Sheibley v. Fales, 81 Nebr. 795, 116 N. W. 1035 (libel on S., charging a defalcation as county officer; judgment against S. in a suit by the county, admitted, on the theory that defendant, as a resident taxpayer, was privy to the other suit).

other Court's investigation are merely the main circumstances affecting the present Court's willingness to lend its judicial aid and to treat the other Court's judgment or order as it own.

That a domestic judgment is ordinarily conclusive and cannot be collaterally attacked involves in truth merely a general duty and practice of domestic Courts to aid in enforcing one another's judgments without attempting to investigate anew the truth of the facts thereby adjudged to exist. That a foreign judgment by a Court not having jurisdiction, or by a Court imposed upon by fraud, or by a Court acting itself fraudulently, will not be enforced, is a proposition which in legal theory is precisely what it purports to be; namely, not the declining to take certain testimony as conclusive, but the failure to give enforcement to an order by another Court which cannot be enforced by this Court's officers unless this Court chooses to order it. The important feature is that in either case — whether treating or not treating the judgment as conclusive — there is no process of judicial investigation, resulting in taking the judgment as the conclusive testimony to some ulterior and main issue before the Court, but there is merely a declining or a granting the Court's aid to carry out an order of another Court. If the judgment is recognized as conclusive, then the plaintiff offering it is given an order to enforce it, or, when it is pleaded in bar, is denied an order to enforce his claim. If the judgment is not recognized as conclusive, then an action or a defence based on it is rejected, and the state of facts as to the original claim is investigated in a practically distinct proceeding, in which the prior judgment plays no part except in sometimes affecting the burden of proof.

The mode of dealing with a judgment, therefore, involves two alternatives. On the one hand, the Court may act upon and enforce the other Court's judgment without investigating the facts adjudged. On the other hand, it may decline to aid in enforcing the other Court's order, and may investigate the facts for itself. In neither alternative is the judgment used as conclusive evidence.[2]

It follows, then, that so far as any certificates, orders, findings, or other official determinations are to be assimilated to judicial judgments, they will be accepted by the Court and acted on as "conclusive", i.e. without allowing a new investigation of the facts. How far certain kinds of official determinations are thus to be assimilated to judicial judgments because of the judicial nature of the proceedings in the course of which they were rendered, is a question belonging to the law of Judgments, and not to the law of Evidence.

It may, however, be noted here that there are five sorts of such documents (other than formal judgments of other Courts) as to which this question of "conclusiveness" has been most commonly raised.

[2] This theory of the nature of the act of enforcing another Court's judgment seems to harmonize with that of Mr. (later C. J.) F. Piggott in his acute and philosophic treatise on Foreign Judgments, p. 20.

(1) The certificate of the magistrate, notary, justice, or other officer, taking the privy examination and acknowledgment of a married woman that a deed signed by her was executed of her own free will and with full knowledge, was at common law not open to disproof of its correctness, because it was regarded as in the nature of a judicial determination; but other views have in some jurisdictions prevailed, often in virtue of express statutory provision.[3]

(2) A sheriff's return, besides being admissible as an official statement (post, § 1664), is also usually treated as conclusive (i.e. not to be shown erroneous) to the same extent that the other parts of the same judicial proceeding are conclusively determined by the judgment, i.e. as against the parties and their privies; while as against the sheriff himself it will be affected by the doctrines of estoppel.[4]

(3) The establishment of a copy of a lost deed by judicial proceedings allowed by statute for that purpose might be regarded as conclusive of the [3] See the different theories expounded in the following cases: Federal: 1828, Elliott v. Peirsol, 1 Pet. 328; Ill. 1898, Davis v. Howard, 172 Ill. 340, 50 N. E. 258; Ind. 1843, McNeely v. Rucker, 6 Blackf. 391; Kan. 1898, Heaton v. Bank, 59 Kan. 281, 52 Pac. 876 (citing cases); Ky. 1870, Woodhead v. Foulds, 7 Bush 222; Mich. 1880, Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 Mich. 208, 219; Minn. 1861, Dodge v. Hollinshead, 6 Minn. 25, 39; Va. 1840, Harkins v. Forsyth, 11 Leigh 294, 301.

The following list will give a clue to the chief distinctions and authorities: Alabama: 1893, Edinburgh A. L. M. Co. v. People, 102 Ala. 24, 14 So. 656; 1905, Chattanooga N. B. & L. Ass'n v. Vaught, 143 Ala. 389, 39 So. 215; Arkansas: 1885, Petty v. Grisard, 45 Ark. 117; Florida: 1920, Hutchinson v. Stone, 79 Fla. 157, 84 So. 151; 1916, Bank of Jennings v. Jennings, 71 Fla. 145, 71 So. 31; Idaho: 1920, Myers v. Eby, 33 Ida. 266, 193 Pac. 77 (acknowledgment taken by telephone by justice of the peace); Illinois: 1911, Huston v. Smith, 248 Ill. 396, 94 N. E. 63; Indiana: Woods v. Polhemus, 8 Ind. 60, 66; Iowa: 1859, Tatum v. Goforth, 9 Ia. 247; Kentucky: 1870, Ford v. Teal, 7 Bush 156; 1877, Pribble v. Hall, 13 Bush 61, 65; 1904, Hall v. Hall, 118 Ky. 656, 82 S. W. 269; Mississippi: 1873, Lockhart v. Camfield, 48 Miss. 470, 489; Missouri: Mays v. Pryce, 95 Mo. 603, 612, 8 S. W. 731; North Carolina: 1897, Spivey v. Rose, 120 N. C. 163, 26 S. E. 701; 1901, Johnson Lumber Co. v. Leonard, 145 N. C. 339, 59 S. E. 134; 1915, Butler v. Butler, 169 N. C. 584, 86 S. E. 507; 1920, Frisbee v. Cole, 179 N. C. 469, 102 S. E. 890; Ohio: 1862, Truman v. Lore, 14 Oh. St. 144, 151; Texas: 1910, Veeder v. Gilmer, 103 Tex. 458, 129 S. W. 595; Washington: 1903, Western Loan & S. Co. v. Waisman, 32 Wash. 644, 73 Pac. 703.

The rule for proving the incorrectness of the certificate of examination by "clear and convincing evidence", instead of by a "mere preponderance" is a rule for measure of proof (post, § 2498).

[4] The following cases will give a clue to the distinctions and authorities: England: 1809, Gyfford v. Woodgate, 2 Camp. 117 (not conclusive as to the consent of the plaintiff to an alias fi. fa.); United States: Arkansas: 1848, State v. Lawson, 8 Ark. 380, 384 (conclusive against himself, and in actions between third persons, but not against the plaintiff in action against the sheriff for wasting goods levied on); 1882, Hunt v. Weiner, 39 Ark. 70, 75 (creditor's bill; return of 'nulla bona' conclusive); Connecticut: 1827, Watson v. Watson, 6 Conn. 334 (not conclusive on execution or mesne process); Illinois: 1908, Hilt v. Heimberger, 235 Ill. 235, 85 N. W. 304; 1920, Chapman v. North American Life Ins. Co., 292 Ill. 179, 126 N. E. 732 (sheriff's return of service cannot be contradicted after term of court of rendering judgment); Iowa: 1917, McWilliams v. Robertson, 180 Ia. 281, 163 N. W. 198 (service of notice of suit); Massachusetts: 1842, Niles v. Hancock, 3 Metc. 568, 569 (return of service of copy of citation; conclusive as to the copy's correctness); Nebraska: 1897, Campbell Co. v. Marder, 50 Nebr. 283, 69 N. W. 774 (not conclusive); New Jersey: 1849, Browning v. Flanagin, 22 N. J. L. 567, 573 (held conclusive as between debtor and creditor and their privies, and also against the sheriff himself always, but not in the sheriff's favor; here, not in an action for escape; cases copiously cited); North Carolina: 1917, Lake Drainage Com'rs v. Spencer, 174 N. C. 36, 93 S. E. 435; West Virginia: 1921, Nuttallbury S. M. F. Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, — W. Va. —, 109 S. E. 766 (service on corporation).

See a learned note by R. D., "False Sheriff's Return still Conclusively True in Pennsylvania" (U. of Pa. Law Rev., LXIX, 152, Jan. 1921).

terms of the deed, provided the result of the proceeding were regarded as a judgment affecting all persons concerned; but such does not seem to be the effect generally conceded.[5]

(4) The obsolete "trial by certificate" (as when the fact of bastardy was determined by certificate of the bishop offered in a common-law court) was in reality the acceptance of a judgment of an ecclesiastical or other tribunal upon a matter committed to its jurisdiction.[6]

(5) A certificate of naturalization is in theory a copy of a judgment, and is therefore not admissible in any independent litigation to evidence age or birthplace.[7]

§ 1347. Same: Determinations by Executive or Administrative Officer or Commission (U. S. Land Office, Chinese, Indians, Land Titles). The foregoing doctrine of the "conclusiveness" of a judgment applies equally to the determinations of an executive or administrative official or commission. When jurisdiction has been given to such an official to determine the facts in a given class of controversial cases, the determination (or finding, or judgment) settles the controversy, and can be used in other proceedings to relieve from renewed inquiry into the facts, precisely as in the case of a judicial judgment.

Whether a legislative measure handing over such determinations conclusively to the Executive branch of government is constitutional is another question (briefly examined post, § 1353). And whether such officials need observe the usual rules of Evidence is still another question (already considered ante, § 4*a*). It is enough here to note the principal types of official determination which have been judicially passed upon in terms of "conclusive evidence."

(1) The certificate or ruling of an officer of the Federal land office is, upon certain matters, in effect the judgment of a competent tribunal, and is therefore "conclusive."[1]

(2) The certificate or finding of a Federal or a foreign official as to occupation and identity of a Chinese person or of other kinds of immigrants has been given a conclusive effect, by Federal statute.[2]

(3) The facts of age and race, as affecting the persons entitled to share

[5] Cases cited ante, § 1273; post, § 1660.

[6] 1309, Bayeux v. Beryhale, Maitland's Year-books, II, 110, 3 Edw. II, No. 15 (Selden Soc. vol. XIX) (the bishop's certificate "suffices for ever" to prove a man legitimate); 1591, Abbot of Strata Mercella's Case, 9 Co. Rep. 31*a*; 1628, Coke upon Littleton, 74*a*; 1768, Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 333; 1793, Ilderton v. Ilderton, 2 H. Bl. 145, 156 (trial by bishop's certificate, held not applicable in a Scotch dower case; the opinion brings out the jurisdictional nature of the controversy).

[7] 1875, Mutual Benefit L. Ins. Co. v. Tisdale, 91 U. S. 238. But it ought to be at least admissible, though not conclusive: 1915, Colbert's Estate, 51 Mont. 455, 153 Pac. 1022 (foreign nativity).

§ 1347. [1] 1903, De Cambra v. Rogers, 189 U. S. 119, 23 Sup. 519; 1908, Rogers v. Clark Iron Co., 104 Minn. 198, 116 N. W. 739; 1906, Kennedy v. Dickie, 34 Mont. 205, 85 Pac. 982 (citing cases); and cases cited ante, § 4*c*.

[2] A statute, making conclusive, for certain purposes, a Chinese immigrant's certificate of occupation, has been enforced: U. S. 1884, July 5, c. 220, Code §§ 3656, 3657; 1891, Wan Shing v. U. S., 140 U. S. 424, 11 Sup. 729; 1904, U. S. v. Gin Hing, 8 Ariz. 416, 76 Pac. 639. Compare the rulings on constitutionality of immigration officials' findings (post, § 1355).

Indian lands in some regions, became material and were to be found and recorded in the census-proceedings of the Commissioners to the Five Civilized Tribes; and by statute these records were made "conclusive evidence"; virtually this was a judicial inquisition and perhaps a judgment. But certain other reports of Federal officials, provided for by statute to ascertain the status and property of Indians, do not have that effect; and some discrimination is therefore necessary between these several statutes.[3]

(4) The certificate of title to land, given by the registrar under the Torrens land-title registration system (ante, § 1239) is virtually an adjudication, and is therefore "conclusive."[4]

[3] Federal: 1894, Hegler v. Faulkner, 153 U. S. 109, 14 Sup. 779 (special Indian agent's finding under U. S. St. 1854, July 31, as to the age of an Indian, held not conclusive, because age was not material in the finding); U. S. St. 1908, May 27, 35 Stat. L. 312, c. 199; certain questions arising under this statute are dealt with in the following cases (compare also the cases cited post, § 1671, n. 11): 1914, Malone v. Alderdice, 8th C. C. A., 212 Fed. 668 (commission to the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma, to enrol their citizens, held a quasi-judicial body having power to determine, and its determinations of material facts held conclusive, including the fact of minority of age before 1900; but not conclusive as to facts not material, i.e. as to precise age); 1917, U. S. v. Wildcat, 244 U. S. 111, 437 Sup. 561 (allotment of Indian land in Oklahoma; on the issue whether T. a Creek Indian died prior to April 1, 1899, the enrolment by the Dawes Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes showed his name as alive in May, 1901; the opponent offered evidence that he died in January, 1899, and the evidence was rejected; held that the enrolment was conclusive, under St. 1898, June 28, Curtis Act, "there was thus constituted a quasi-judicial tribunal whose judgments, within the limits of its jurisdiction, were only subject to attack for fraud or such mistake of law or fact as would justify the holding that its judgments were voidable; . . . a correct conclusion was not necessary to the finality and binding character of its decisions"); 1918, U. S. v. Ferguson, 247 U. S. 175, 38 Sup. 434 (conveyance by Seminole Indian allottee; the enrolment under St. 1898, June 28, and St. 1908, May 27, held conclusive as to the quantum of Indian blood in the grantor); 1920, U. S. v. Atkins, 8th C. C. A., 268 Fed. 923;

Oklahoma: 1914, Scott v. Brakel, 43 Okl. 655, 143 Pac. 510 (the enrolment records under U. S. St. 1908, May 27, held not conclusive of the age of any Indian citizen or freeman in the determination of rights accrued prior to the date of the statute; distinction pointed out between the "enrolment record", the "approved roll", and the "census card"; leading opinion, by Kane, C. J.); 1914, Phillips v. Byrd, 43 Okl. 556, 143 Pac. 684 (similar); 1914, Grayson v. Durant, 43 Okl. 799, 144 Pac. 592 (similar, but holding the records inadmissible; the opinion loosely confuses several doctrines); 1915, Diamond v. Perry, 46 Okl. 16, 148 Pac. 88 (a Creek Nation enrolment record, made under U. S. St. 1908, May 27, is evidence of the age of an allottee named as grantor in a deed); 1915, Harris v. Hart, 49 Okl. 143, 151 Pac. 1038 (enrolment records of the Five Civilized Tribes are not conclusive as to an allottee's age, when material for a transaction prior to May 27, 1908, the date of the statute); 1916, Scott v. Quimby, 56 Okl. 301, 155 Pac. 1154 (enrolment as an adopted Seminole under St. 1906, Apr. 26, is not an adjudication as to quantum of Indian blood); 1916, Hart v. West, 62 Okl. 71, 161 Pac. 534 (title to land; under U. S. St. 1908, May 27, the Indian enrolment record, though conclusive as to year-age, leaves open to other evidence the precise date of birth); 1916, Gilcrease v. McCullough, 63 Okl. 24, 162 Pac. 178 (age of Creek Indian; similar to Hart v. West, supra); 1917, Miller v. Thompson, 65 Okl. 86, 163 Pac. 528 (Indian enrolment records made under U. S. St. 1908, May 27, are not admissible to show age in transactions completed before the statute took effect); 1921, Colbert v. Patterson, — Okl. —, 201 Pac. 256 (findings of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes are final); 1922, Minshall v. Berryhill, — Okl. —, 205 Pac. 932 (under the supplemental Creek Treaty of June 30, 1902, the absence of a name from the enrolled list by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes is not conclusive as to the inheritance of a Creek citizen whose father was on the tribal rolls; distinguishing the effect of the Seminole Treaty); Texas: 1920, Langford v. Newsom, — Tex. —, 220 S. W. 544 (enrolment record of Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, held conclusive evidence of age under U. S. St., May 27, 1908; rolls of citizenship and freedmen, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, distinguished).

[4] Uniform Land Registration Act, § 51 ("(1) Every certificate of title entered in the register of titles as aforesaid, together with the § 1348. Genuine Instances of Rules of Conclusive Preference; General Considerations of Policy and Theory applicable to them. After thus discriminating those instances of conclusiveness which in reality involve some application of the principle of Integration or the principle of Judgments, it is practicable to examine the cases in which some genuine rule of conclusive testimonial preference is put forward for recognition. Certain general considerations must first be noticed.

(1) The practical mark of distinction between instances of the "parol evidence" (or Integration) principle and genuine instances of Conclusive Preferences is this: When the writing in the former instance is lost or otherwise unavailable in Court, then its terms must be proved by copy or otherwise, and if it never existed as required by law, then nothing can be proved (post, §§ 2425, 2453); while in a case of conclusive testimonial preference, if the preferred testimony is not to be had, then the field is open to any other evidence of the fact. For example, if a judicial record never was made, the oral proceedings cannot be proved, because the only effective judicial act is the writing (post, § 2450); and if the record was made but has been lost, then the terms of the lost writing, not the parol proceedings, must be proved. But in the case of a magistrate's report of testimony taken before him (ante, § 1327, post, § 1349), or an election commission's certificate of the result of the election (post, § 1351), or the official enrolment of a legislative act (post, § 1350), the effective and material legal act is still the testimony uttered, or the vote cast, or the yeas and nays voiced. Though conclusive credit may be given to the report by the magistrate, or the commission, or the presiding officer, still his document can never be legally anything more than a testifying to the act of another person; hence, though this report if available may be treated as conclusive, yet if the report was never made, then the effective act of testifying or voting may be otherwise proved, and if the report was made but is unavailable through loss or destruction, then also the testifying or voting may be otherwise proved. The preference applies only when there exists a testimony available for the purposes of preference; and the loss of the preferred testimony therefore leaves the testifying or voting (since it is throughout the effective act for legal purposes) still provable by such evidence as remains available.

(2) Upon what general considerations of policy, if at all, should any rule of Conclusive Preference be recognized?

It is obvious that the recognition of such a rule is an extreme step to take. It amounts almost to an abdication of the Court's judicial functions (post, memorials thereon, if any, shall be known as 'the certificate of title.' (2) Said certificate shall be conclusive evidence of all matters contained therein, except as otherwise provided in this Act"); § 71 ("Whenever a duplicate certificate of title is lost or destroyed, . . . upon satisfactory proof that said duplicate certificate has been lost or destroyed, the court may direct the issuance of a new duplicate certificate, which shall be appropriately designated and take the place of the original duplicate"); the several State statutes are cited ante, § 1225.

§ 1353). To forego investigation into the existence of a fact because a certain officer not having judicial powers or opportunities of investigation has declared it to exist or not to exist, and to accept his statement as conclusive and indisputable, is in effect to refuse to exercise, as regards that specific fact, that function of the investigation and final determination of disputes which is the peculiar attribute of the Judiciary as distinguished from the Executive and the Legislature. That the Court may, if it chooses, in dealing with evidence, take such a step seems clear, — though whether the Legislature may constitutionally oblige it to do so is another question (post, § 1353). But obviously it is a step which will not be taken except when clearly indispensable as the best practical method of settling disputes and giving stability to the interests of all concerned.

For this reason, it would seem, 'a priori', that such a rule does become the most practical solution in two kinds of situations, and in two only:[1]

(a) A judicial judgment binds only the parties to the specific litigation, and therefore the same question of fact must be investigated anew, even innumerable times, between parties not affected by prior judgments. There may therefore be an analogous situation in which innumerable parties will be affected by a fact common to the rights or duties of all; and this fact, in the absence of a judicial proceeding binding on all, may be from time to time differently determined by different juries and judgments in successive litigations. In such a case, all the rights of the innumerable parties affected by this fact might be doomed to a perpetual instability; for no one concerned can predict what the issue will be in the possible litigation of innumerable successive adversaries. It would therefore be highly desirable, if a definite and trustworthy official certification of the fact had been authentically and openly made, for the judiciary to announce as a settled rule that this official certification would invariably be accepted in a judicial investigation as conclusive. Thus all the vital advantages of stability would be secured, and the disadvantages of possible error could be regarded as comparatively trifling. The typical, though not the sole, case fulfilling these conditions is that of the officially enrolled copy of a legislative act, used as conclusive evidence of the terms of the legislative enactment and the proceedings of its adoption (post, § 1350).

(b) It may occur that shortly after the doing of a legal act all ordinary evidence of its doing and its terms is likely to become practically unavailable, either because documents are destroyed or lost, or because witnesses are tampered with or become incompetent or non-compellable to testify. If a class of cases existed in which this dearth of satisfactory evidence habitually occurred, and if at the same time a trustworthy official statement of the fact as it was had been made close to the time of the fact and with the most satisfactory data before the officer, it might well be thought that on the whole a closer approach to the truth could be reached by accepting the official statement as conclusive, instead of by making the attempt to weigh the scanty or untrustworthy evidence that might be available for the purposes of the subsequent judicial investigation. It would be essential for such a situation that the official statement should be especially trustworthy, that the ordinary evidence subsequently available should be especially untrustworthy or scanty, and that both of these features should habitually be present in that class of disputes; but, given these three conditions, the case would seem to present a fair justification for refusing to investigate in the ordinary way and for taking the official statement as conclusive testimony to the fact in issue. The typical, though not the sole case, fulfilling these conditions, is that of an election officer's certificate as to the number and tenor of votes cast and the qualifications of the voters (post, § 1351).

§ 1348. [1] Mr. J. R. Gulson, in his treatise on Philosophy of Evidence (1905), at §§ 392–426, analyzes these problems in a careful and enlightening manner.

It may be added, finally, that wherever a rule of conclusive preference can be laid down at all, it can apply only to a written official statement, not to testimony on the stand. The statement must be official, because the sanctions of the official oath should at least be present, or else the statement is no more trustworthy than any other person's. The statement must be in writing, because otherwise the recollection-testimony, even of an official, is no better than another's recollection. No one has ever thought of suggesting a rule of conclusive preference for any testimony other than official written statements.

§ 1349. Same: (1) Magistrate's Report of Testimony. Where a committing magistrate is required by law to make a written report of the statement of the accused person under examination and of the testimony of the witnesses, this report, as already noticed (ante, §§ 1326–1329), must be produced as a preferred testimony to the words of the statement and the testimony. But is this report to be given such further and paramount weight that it is to stand as conclusive and irrefragable by any evidence of its error?

In the first place, it can hardly be contended that the express legal duty of the magistrate to make the report invests it with such conclusiveness; there is certainly no such general principle applicable to statements made under official duty. In the next place, the magistrate's report is not governed by the "parol evidence" theory of judicial records (post, § 2450); for testimony is not a judicial act; and the theory of judicial records is merely that the judicial act is originally done and constituted in writing, and the testimonial utterance of a witness or the accused is distinct from any judicial act done as a part of the record. Furthermore, neither of the general considerations of necessity and policy (mentioned in § 1348, ante) can apply to the present case to make it desirable to take the magistrate's report as conclusive. Finally, considering the circumstances under which such reports are drawn up and the unfair consequences that may often follow from the inability to expose their errors, policy seems rather to require that they should not be treated as conclusive:

1844, Reporters' Note to Jeans v. Wheedon, 2 Moody & Robinson 487 (approved by ALDERSON, B., in 1 Den. Cr. C. 542, as "admirably discussed"): "[Questions may arise] as to the extent to which other evidence is to be excluded; in the determination of which the necessity of the case, in some instances, the purposes of the enactment in others, must be looked to. Thus, judicial records are not only primary, but from their nature conclusive evidence of the decisions of Courts of justice. . . . [But as to depositions taken in criminal trials,] evidence is admissible by way of explanation, or to prove that the party made other statements besides those reduced into writing; otherwise the safety of prisoners and the credit of witnesses would depend on the honesty and accuracy of the clerks who take the examination. . . . Even if the entire examinations of the witnesses and the committal of a prisoner take place at the same time, it would seem most inconvenient, as well as unreasonable, to make the written examination conclusive as to all the preliminary statements of the witnesses on which it is founded."

The precedents on the subject must be considered separately for the case of an accused person's statement and that of a witness' testimony; for the doctrine has received different treatment in the two cases. In connection with both, it is to be remembered that the statutes on the subject of the magistrate's duty (ante, § 1326) often require him to take down no more than "the substance" of what was said or "so much as may be material":

(a) The rule seems to have become settled in England during the 1800s that the magistrate's report is conclusive as to the statement of the accused.[1] But this rule has been accepted in only a few American jurisdictions.[2] The rule, as accepted, applies only to such utterances as the magistrate has purported to take down; hence, utterances made at another time than the formal statement, or at that time but apart from the formal statement, may be proved by other testimony; the general notion being that so far as the magistrate's report goes, it is not to be contradicted.[3] It must be noted, on the one hand, § 1349. [1] 1816, R. v. Smith, 1 Stark. 242 (evidence denying the administration of the oath to the defendant when examined, excluded; Le Blanc, J., "could not allow that which had been sent in under the hand of a magistrate to be disputed"); 1833, R. v. Bentley, 6 C. & P. 148 (mistake in entering the defendant's statement as a complaint, not allowed to be shown); 1833, R. v. Lewis, ib. 161; 1836, R. v. Walter, 7 C. & P. 267; 1839, R. v. Pikesley, 9 C. & P. 124 (that the accused had been sworn).

[2] See the cases in the next note, and also these: Miss. 1874, Wright v. State, 50 Miss. 332 ("no parol evidence of what the prisoner may have said on that occasion can be received"; unless the writing cannot be had); 1898, Powell v. State, — Miss. —, 23 So. 266 (other testimony inadmissible, where this is available; it is "exclusive"); 1901, Cunning v. State, 79 Miss. 284, 30 So. 658 (Wright v. State approved); 1905, Bell v. State, — Miss. —, 38 So. 795 (Wright v. State approved); P. I. 1908, U. S. v. Estabillo, 9 P. I. 668.

[3] Such seems to be the principle of the sometimes obscure precedents:

ENGLAND: 1835, R. v. Spilsbury, 7 C. & P. 187 (remarks by the defendant during the examination of the witnesses, and not when himself examined, admitted); 1838, R. v. Morse, 8 C. & P. 605 (blanks cannot be filled; certain names here omitted in the clerk's written report of the testimony); 1846, R. v. Weller, 2 C. & K. 223 (remark of the defendant made while a witness was testifying, excluded); 1850, R. v. Christopher, 2 C. & K. 994 (the magistrate's notes having been given to the clerk to write them up in deposition-form, the clerk at his office asked some additional questions, and wrote them in; then in Court the depositions were later read over before the defendant and signed by the witnesses; held that the answers made to the clerk could be asked for orally, as no part of the depositions).

UNITED STATES: Arkansas: 1881, Griffith v. State, 37 Ark. 332 (testimony not allowed for answers not recorded, but allowed for magistrate's warning questions not recorded); Indian Terr. 1906, Willis v. U. S., 6 Ind. Terr. 424, 98 S. W. 147 (under a statute requiring the magistrate to make only a "general" statement in writing, the testimony of witnesses who heard is admissible); Louisiana: 1920, State v. Bailey, 146 La. 624, 83 So.

that even such utterances are not admissible if by the principles of confessions (ante, §§ 842–852) the whole statement is not receivable.[4] On the other hand, where the report has been read over to the accused and he has expressly assented to its correctness by oral acknowledgment or by signature, the writing is thus adopted as his own and becomes a statement by him in writing; he thus can no longer deny that it represents what he said.[5] In the absence of such an acknowledgment, the whole doctrine that the report is conclusive is (as already noted) ill-founded, and should be repudiated. It may be added that the doctrine itself applies only so long as the conclusively preferred testimony is available (ante, § 1348); and therefore if the magistrate's report was never taken or if it was lost, the case is open for ordinary testimony.[6]

(b) The doctrine was also applied in England[7] to the magistrate's report of the testimony of a witness, but was strictly confined to the testimony taken in a criminal case before the committing magistrate.[8] It has been occasionally recognized in this country.[9] The limitations already noted for the 854; New Jersey: 1790, State v. Wells, 1 N. J. L. 424, 429 (other confessions at other times receivable; but not other testimony of the statements deposed to the magistrate); New York: 1910, People v. Giro, 197 N. Y. 152, 90 N. E. 432.

[4] 1833, R. v. Lewis, 6 C. & P. 161; and cases cited ante, § 1328.

[5] 1840, State v. Eaton, 3 Harringt. Del. 554 (preferred and conclusive, but only when signed by the accused or expressly admitted true); State v. Harman, 3 Harringt. Del. 567 (same); 1904, State v. Busse, 127 Ia. 318, 100 N. W. 536, semble (a confession before a sheriff, written down by a bystander, read to the defendant, sworn and signed by him); 1905, State v. Usher, 126 Ia. 287, 102 N. W. 101 ("Such we conceive to be the rule", citing State v. Busse); 1896, State v. Steeves, 29 Or. 85, 43 Pac. 947 (the written record of an oral statement made by an accused, not under any statute, to a chief of police, and signed by the former; "Oral statements, intended to be reduced to writing, when committed to paper and signed by the person making them, are supplanted, and must of necessity be excluded, by the writing").

Nevertheless, on principle, the two are distinct statements (as noted ante, § 1332); and if the attempt is not to contradict the writing, but to show what the first and oral statement really was, this would seem proper.

Compare the cases on dying declarations (post, § 1450).

[6] Cases cited ante, §§ 1327, 1329, and the notes supra.

[7] But not originally; see § 1326, ante, and the following: 1679, Langhorn's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 417, 467 (the Lords' Journal of an examination before them was offered to show that Bedlow, the informer, did not there charge the defendant; L. C. J. Scroggs: "It is but a memorial taken by a clerk, and do you think that his omission shall be conclusive to us?").

[8] Eng. 1838, Robinson v. Vaughton, 8 C. & P. 252, 254 (applicable only in felony, "because by an act of Parliament magistrates are bound to take down what the witnesses say"); 1843, Jeans v. Wheedon, 2 Moo. & Rob. 486, Creswell, J., semble (not applicable in malicious prosecution); 1860, Filipowski v. Merryweather, 2 F. & F. 285, 287 (where the plaintiff's silent acquiescence, as an admission of the witness' statements, was to be shown, the deposition was not required); 1896, R. v. Erdheim, 2 Q. B. 260, 269 (statute providing for the taking down of a bankrupt's examination, reading over, and signing by him; held, not exclusive of other reports of the examination; here, of oral testimony of the shorthand-writer; compare Rowland v. Ashby, infra); Can. 1910, R. v. Prasiloski, 15 Br. C. 29 (per-jury; statements made by the witness, allowed to be orally proved, the magistrate not having purported to take down his entire testimony).

[9] 1904, Godfrey v. Phillips, 209 Ill. 584, 71 N. E. 19 (clerk's certificate of testimony of witnesses at probate of a will, under Rev. St. c. 148, § 7, cannot be contradicted as to the date by the clerk); 1874, Broyles v. State, 47 Ind. 251, 254 (after using report of examination before justice, oral evidence not allowed); 1906, State v. Jennings, 48 Or. 483, 87 Pac. 524 (but the coroner was here allowed to prove the witness' oral statement, to impeach him, because the witness denied the correctness of the signed written report).

Contra: Ark. 1881, Griffith v. State, 37 Ark. semble (contradicting a deceased witness by prior inconsistent statements; the magistrate's writing did not show that he had been asked about them on the examination; oral evidence of bystanders that he was asked, allowed; the report of an accused's statement would generally apply here also, 'mutatis mutandis'; in particular, other testimony may be used to prove utterances made on a distinct occasion, or on the same occasion but not as a part of the formal testimony, or even during the formal testimony but on matters additional to and not purporting to be covered by the magistrate's report.[10] The whole doctrine of conclusiveness, in the present application, as in the preceding, is unsound.

(c) A magistrate's report of a dying declaration involves somewhat different considerations.[11]

(d) A magistrate's report of a deposition 'de bene' involves a distinct theory.[12]

(e) An official stenographer's report is not conclusive (ante, § 1330).

§ 1350. Same: (2) Enrolled Copy of a Legislative Act; may the Journals override it? After a proposed bill has been reported, amended, read on different occasions, passed by the originating House, sent to the other House and there dealt with in the same way, the document thus enacted into a statute consists of one or more sheets of the original paper together with other writings or printings containing the tenor of the various legislative dealings with them. This complex, representing the net result of those dealings, is then copied out as a single document, and is certified by the presiding officers of each House, in England also by the Great Seal, and in this country usually by the Governor or President, and sometimes by a Secretary, to be the act as passed. This certified copy, or enrolment, was by English practice deposited in Chancery, but is in American practice usually deposited with the Secretary of State. When the precise terms of the act, or the legislative proceedings affecting its validity, are in issue, is this enrolled copy conclusive?

(1) It seems clear, at the outset, that the enrolment is only somebody's certificate and copy, because the effective legal act of enactment is the dealing preferable mode being to have the magistrate amend his return); Cal. 1875, People v. Curtis, 50 Cal. 95 (not conclusive, under P. C. § 869, quoted ante, § 1326; at any rate, when not signed by the witness); Ia. 1868, State v. Hull, 26 Ia. 293, 297 (not conclusive); N. Car. 1909, State v. Hooper, 151 N. C. 646, 65 S. E. 613 (here the justice had only made notes).

[10] 1825, Rowland v. Ashby, Ry. & Mo. 231, Best, C. J. (commissioners in bankruptcy; additions allowed, but the remarks must be shown by "clear and satisfactory evidence"); 1832, R. v. Harris, Mood. Cr. C. 338, by all the Judges (additions allowed); 1833, Venafra v. Johnson, 1 Moo. & Rob. 316, C. P. (held proper to prove "anything the party had said as a part of his information, beyond what was put in writing, either for the purpose of explanation or addition"); 1837, R. v. Coveney, 7 C. & P. 667, Alderson, B., and Patteson, J. ("There is a difference between adding and contradicting: I apprehend the object was to see that witnesses did not swear a thing before the magistrate and contradict it at the trial"); 1837, Resolutions of Judges, 7 C. & P. 676, Rule 3 (where a deposition does not mention a statement as having been made at the examination, either the witness may be asked to admit it, or, if he denies it, other witnesses may prove it); 1839, Leach v. Simpson, 7 Dowl. Pr. 513, 5 M. & W. 309, 312 (Parke, B.: "If it appear, on production of the deposition, that any particular statement alleged to have been made is not contained in it, you may add to it by parol evidence of that statement").

[11] Cases cited post, § 1450.

[12] Examined ante, § 1331.

Whether perjury may be committed in testifying by deposition where the deposition is not perfected so as to be admissible, is in theory a different question; and if the oral utterances constitute perjury, they should be provable: 1904, State v. Woolridge, 45 Or. 389, 78 Pac. 333 (citing authorities).

of the Legislature with the original document, i.e. the 'viva voce' vote. The Legislature has not dealt by vote with the enrolled document; the latter therefore can be only a certificate and copy of the transactions representing the enactment.[1] The enrolment is thus not a record in the sense of a judicial record, i.e. the act done in writing (post, § 2450).

(2) Furthermore, it is clear that the legislative journals are not the original enactment, for the 'viva voce' vote is not given upon them. They are but official statements of what has been done at a prior time, although the House may have heard them read and approved them as correct. Thus, the question whether the enrolled copy shall be conclusive as against the journal is only a question whether an official report and copy of one degree of solemnity and trustworthiness is to be preferred against another of a less degree.

(3) On the other hand, it is well settled that the enrolled copy cannot be shown erroneous or valid by any other testimony than that of the journals, — for example, by the oral testimony of a member as to the number of votes or readings, or the terms of an amendment, or a draft bill.[2] Furthermore, it is equally conceded on all hands that the journal cannot be shown erroneous by similar testimony.[3]

§ 1350. [1] 1875, Moore, J., in Blessing v. Galveston, 42 Tex. 641, 656 ("the signature of its officers and the approval of the Governor cannot, unquestionably, make that law which has not been enacted by the Legislature. They only furnish evidence, conclusive or otherwise, as may be held, of the enactment of the alleged law by the Legislature").

[2] Federal: 1855, Pease v. Peck, 18 How. 595 (whether the manuscript of a statute as reported by the commissioners should control the printed law as sanctioned by the Legislature in repeated revisions); Georgia: 1898, Cutcher v. Crawford, 105 Ga. 180, 31 S. E. 139 (whether a preliminary local election had been held; the statutory preamble not to be contradicted by a minority report in the journal nor by an election return); 1890, Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49, 11 S. E. 802 (that public notice had not been given for a local act; not admitted); Illinois: 1904, People v. McCullough, 210 Ill. 488, 71 N. E. 602 ("the departure . . . has never been extended beyond an inspection of the journals"); New Jersey: 1884, Passaic Co. v. Stevenson, 46 N. J. L. 173, 184 (under a constitutional provision requiring public notice of a local bill, and the preservation of the evidence of notice, the fact of notice may be proved otherwise than by the act and the journals; Dixon, J., diss.); North Carolina: 1870, Brodnex v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244, 248 (fact of no public notice of a local bill, not provable).

[3] Alabama: 1906, State v. Brodie, 148 Ala. 381, 41 So. 180; Colorado: 1905, Andrews v. People, 33 Colo. 193, 79 Pac. 1031 (Speaker's testimony excluded); 1908, Rio Grande S. Co. v. Catlin, 40 Colo. 450, 94 Pac. 323 (printed journals held conclusive as against a report of a committee; but the point is not clearly stated in the opinion); 1912, People v. Leddy, 53 Colo. 109, 123 Pac. 824 (entry of names of members voting); Delaware: 1910, Rash v. Allen, Ross v. Allmond, 1 Boyce Del. 444, 76 Atl. 370; Georgia: 1896, Fullington v. Williams, 98 Ga. 807, 27 S. E. 183 (as to notice of intention required before offering a bill); Idaho: 1897, Cohn v. Kingsley, 5 Ida. 416, 49 Pac. 985 (whether a bill was read the second time); Indiana: 1858, McCulloch v. State, 11 Ind. 424, 430 (though where they are silent, lawful action will be presumed); 1909, State v. Wheeler, 172 Ind. 578, 89 N. E. 1 (oral testimony not admissible against the journals); Iowa: 1883, Koehler v. Hill, 60 Ia. 543, 560, 14 N. W. 738, 15 N. W. 609 (oral testimony by a member of the Senate, not receivable to contradict the journal, if in existence); Kentucky: 1900, Taylor v. Beckham, 108 Ky. 278, 56 S. W. 177; Michigan: 1887, Attorney-General v. Rice, 64 Mich. 385, 389, 31 N. W. 165 (whether a bill's title expressed its object; parol testimony to contradict the journal, inadmissible); 1889, Sackrider v. Supervisor, 79 Mich. 59, 66, 44 N. W. 165 (same); Nebraska: 1898, Re Grander, 56 Nebr. 260, 76 N. W. 588 (journals not allowed to be contradicted by original draft of bill with indorsements); North Carolina: 1903, Wilson v. Markley, 133 N. C. 616, 45 S. E. 1023; 1904, State v. Armour Packing Co., — N. C. —, 47 S. E. 411; Ohio: 1832, State v. Moffitt, 5 Oh. 223, 5 Hamm. 358; 1886, State v. Smith, 44 Oh. St. 348, 364, 7 N. E. 447, 12 N. E. 829.

Add also the cases as to bribery, note 11.

With this preliminary survey of the limits of the problem,[4] we are in a position to consider the question whether the copy enrolled under the hands of the presiding officers authorized thereto is conclusive in every sense so as to exclude contradiction by the testimony of the official journal.[5]

[4] The following questions are also to be distinguished: (1) Whether the enrolled copy overrides a printed copy: Fed. 1904, Gibson v. Anderson, 131 Fed. 39, 42, 65 C. C. A. 277 (the "published statutes of the U. S." showed that a joint resolution was approved May 27, 1902; plaintiff not allowed to show that the true date was after June 1; unsound; erroneously taking as authority Field v. Clark, U. S., infra, note 5); 1906, Clagett v. Duluth, 143 Fed. 824, 827, C. C. A. (a printed official compilation of statutes, held not to prevail over "the original legislation"); Mo. 1883, Pacific R. Co. v. Seifert, 79 Mo. 210, 212 (a printed law imposed a fine of $20; the statute-roll reading "$90", held not to override this in action for penalty); Nebr. 1896, Bruce v. State, 48 Nebr. 570, 67 N. W. 454 (the enrolled act, properly certified, approved, and deposited, is conclusive as against the official statute-book); Oh. 1909, State v. Groves, 80 Oh. 351, 88 N. E. 1096 (enrolled statute prevails); Tex. 1870, Central R. Co. v. Hearne, 32 Tex. 546, 562 (certified copy of the enrolled act is the "best evidence", as against a printed copy); (2) Whether the journal is receivable for other purposes than to overthrow the enrolment: 1878, State v. Smalls, 11 S. C. 262, 286 (bribery by a member of the Senate; the journal received to show the matter pending); (3) Whether the original of the journal must be produced; ante, § 1219; (4) Whether the printed copy of the journals is admissible: post, § 1684; (5) Whether, if the journal may be consulted, its omissions are to be fatal or may be cured by presumption: 1898, Re Taylor, 60 Kan. 87, 55 Pac. 340; 1898, State v. Long, 21 Mont. 26, 53 Pac. 645 (under the constitutional rule requiring the fact of the signing of a bill to be entered on the journal, the omission of the journal to show the fact of signature was held immaterial); and cases cited infra, note 5; (6) Whether the enrolled copy may be impeached in a collateral proceeding: 1870, Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244, 247 (whether 30 days' notice of application for a private act had been given; the certified copy not impeachable collaterally; here, not in an application to enjoin the collection of a tax under the statute); (7) Whether a recital or preamble in a statute is conclusive: post, § 1352; (8) Whether by stipulation, or judicial admission, an unconstitutional defect in the enrolled copy can be waived: post, § 2591; (9) Whether the rule applies to the veto of a governor also: 1912, State ex rel. Crenshaw v. Joseph, 175 Ala. 579, 57 So. 942 (failure to veto); 1907, Powell v. Hayes, 83 Ark. 448, 104 S. W. 177; 1904, People v. McCullough, 210 Ill. 488, 71 N. E. 602 ("Only record evidence can be introduced to show that the Governor filed the bill in the office of the Secretary of State with his objections, in case the bill was vetoed by him"); 1905, Commissioners v. Warfield, 100 Md. 516, 60 Atl. 599 (here the Governor had signed by mistake and afterwards erased his signature); 1913, Tuttle v. Boston, 215 Mass. 57, 102 N. E. 350; 1907, Wrede v. Richardson, 77 Oh. 182, 82 N. E. 1072 (the record of the Governor, kept pursuant to law, stating the presentation of an act to him for approval on a specified date, is conclusive as to the fact of presentation).

[5] In the following summary most of the rulings against conclusiveness proceed upon the ground that the Constitution expressly requires certain legislative proceedings to be done or to appear to be done; this, as above noted, ought properly not to affect the result; nevertheless such Courts might at the same time hold the enrolment conclusive as to the tenor of the act; the nature of the fact to be proved has for that reason been noted below; but lack of space forbids noting the constitutional provisions. In point of numbers, the jurisdictions are divided almost equally pro and con the general principle (of these two or three have changed from their original position), two or three adopt a special variety of view (as in Illinois), three or four are not clear, and a small number have not yet made their decision:

England: 1606, the Prince's Case, 8 Co. Rep. 13, semble (enrolment conclusive); 1617, R. v. Arundel, Hob. 109 (whether a certain provision was in a private act, such acts being filed without enrolment but under the Great Seal; "Now suppose that the journal were every way full and perfect, yet it hath no power to satisfy, destroy, or weaken the act, which being a high record must be tried only by itself, 'teste meipso.' Now journals are no records, but remembrances for forms of proceeding to the record: they are not [kept] of necessity, nor have they always been. They are like the docket of the prothonotaries or the particular to the King's patents. . . . The journal is of good use for the observation of the generalty and materialty of proceedings and deliberations as to the three readings of any bill, the intercourses between the two houses, and the like; but when the act is passed, the journal is expired"); 1637, Hampden's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 825, 1153, 1236 (the statute 'de tallagio non concedendo', conceded to be a statute, though not found on the Rolls of Parliament); 1649, Bowes v. Broadhead, Style 155 ("Upon view of the Parliament

The arguments in favor of allowing the journals to be consulted for that purpose are sufficiently stated in the following passage, and in the succeeding quotations dealing with the answers to them:

1852, MURRAY, C. J., in Fowler v. Pierce, 2 Cal. 165, "If such matters cannot be inquired into, the wholesome restrictions which the Constitution imposes on legislative and executive action become a dead letter, and Courts would be compelled to administer laws made Roll, . . . it was found that the Statute was rightly recited, notwithstanding what had been objected and the journal-book of Parliament produced to the contrary; . . . and the Court said they were to be ruled by the Parliament Roll, and not the journal-book"; and in another case the same day the Roll was ordered produced, "to make it appear whether an adjournment of Parliament was well recited", and the Court "would not credit the journal-book"); 1650, Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, 1 Ch. Rep., App. 52 (an account of the making up of a statute-roll and of the mode of determining a disputed text; nothing said of the journals); 1653, Streater's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 365, 387 (L. C. J. Roll: "Now whereas you say, it is but an order of Parliament, and has not been three times read in the House; how can you tell but that it has been three times read? . . . But if it were but once read, we cannot call it into question, but must conceive it was on just grounds"); 1725, L. C. Macclesfield's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 767, 1334, 1388 (here it appears that under the original system there was a "parliament-roll" and a "statute-roll", but the former, from which the latter was made up, appears to have been entirely distinct from the journal); ante, 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 7, 10 ("the memorials of the legislature . . . are authentic beyond all manner of contradiction"); 1764, R. v. Robotham, 3 Burr. 1472 (a clear mistake of words in the enrolment appeared, but no resort was had to the journals); 1831, R. v. Middlesex, 2 B. & Ad. 818, 821 (until a certain statute, "if two acts of Parliament passed in the same session were repugnant, it was not possible to know which of them received the royal assent first, for there was then no indorsement on the roll of the day when bills received the royal assent"); for the modern method of drafting and enacting a bill in England, see Ilbert's Legislative Methods and Forms (1901), 89, 105.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1857, Thompson's Case, 9 Op. Attorney-General, 1, 3, per Black (in a forceful opinion denying to executive officers the right of such consultation; "we must take the acts of Congress as we find them, without addition or diminution"); 1867, Gardner v. Barney, 6 Wall. 499 (the date of the President's signature to a bill not being an essential part of the record, the legislative journals may be looked to with other evidence; and whenever "the existence of a statute" is in question, the Court may look to "any source of information" that is helpful); 1891, Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 670, 12 Sup. 495 (whether a clause was omitted from the engrossed act; journals not to be consulted; whether the failure to observe the constitutional rule requiring entry of yeas and nays on the journal could be thus inquired into, not decided); for Federal rulings interpreting the law of individual States, see infra, under California, Illinois, Nebraska, and North Carolina;

Alabama: 1868, Jones v. Hutchinson, 43 Ala. 721, 723 (whether a portion of a bill had been concurred in, etc.; journals consulted, "to ascertain whether it has a legal existence"; citing only the California and Illinois cases, with P. v. Purdy, New York, but affirming the doctrine as "well settled"); 1872, Moody v. State, 48 Ala. 116 (whether certain amendments as passed were omitted; journals examined); 1875, State v. Buckley, 54 Ala. 599, 613 (whether yeas and nays were taken; journals consulted); 1876, Harrison v. Gordy, 57 Ala. 49 (doctrine applied to notice of a bill); 1877, Walker v. Griffith, 60 Ala. 361, 364 (journals may be looked to, for ascertaining the constitutional requirements; but their silence does not require investigation; though in constitutionally specified cases their silence is conclusive); 1884, Sayre v. Pollard, 77 Ala. 608 (doctrine applied to error in enrolment); Moog v. Randoph, 77 Ala. 597, 600 (same); 1885, Abernathy v. State, 78 Ala. 411, 414 (same); Stein v. Leeper, 78 Ala. 517, 521; 1886, Hall v. Steele, 82 Ala. 562, 565, 2 So. 650 (doctrine applied to notice of a bill); 1898, 'Ex parte' Howard H. I. Co., 119 Ala. 484, 24 So. 516 (terms of an act; journals consulted); 1899, O'Hara v. State, 121 Ala. 28, 25 So. 622 (whether a bill was properly signed and voted for: journals consulted); 1900, Montgomery B. B. W. v. Gaston, 126 Ala. 425, 28 So. 497 (whether a bill was duly passed; journals consulted; another case illustrating the practical disadvantages of this rule); 1901, Robertson v. State, 130 Ala. 164, 30 So. 494 (journals consulted); 1902, Jackson v. State, 131 Ala. 21, 31 So. 380 (same; terms of an amendment); 1904, Yancy v. Waddell, 139 Ala. 524, 36 So. 733 (similar);

Arizona: 1876, Graves v. Alsap, 1 Ariz. 274, 282, 310, 318, 25 Pac. 836 (whether a statute not found among the certified files was in existence; journals not examined; Dunne, C. J., diss., because the attempt was merely to show the contents of the certified statute as a lost in violation of private and public rights, without power to interfere. The fact that the law-making power is limited by rules of government, and its acts receive judicial exposition from the Courts, carries with it, by implication, the power of inquiring how far those exerdocument and not to question its evidential force); 1895, Harwood v. Wentworth, 4 Ariz. 378, 42 Pac. 1025 (journals not to be consulted; here the purpose was to show that two sections were omitted from the bill after passing and before enrolling); 1913, Allen v. State, 14 Ariz. 458, 130 Pac. 1114 (referendum note; legislative record and governor's proclamation, held conclusive);

Arkansas: 1857, Burr v. Ross, 19 Ark. 250 (whether a bill was voted to passage; journals examined); 1871, Knox v. Vinsant, 27 Ark. 266, 278 (whether a bill was read three times; journals consulted); 1873, English v. Oliver, 28 Ark. 317, 320 (whether a bill was read three times, etc.; journals consulted); 1877, State v. R. Co., 31 Ark. 701, 711, 716 (whether an act took effect within a certain time after adjournment; journals consulted to learn the time of adjournment; whether a bill was read three times, etc.; journals consulted); 1877, Worthen v. Badgett, 32 Ark. 496, 511 (whether a bill was read three times, etc.; journals consulted); 1878, Smithee v. Garth, 33 Ark. 17, 25 (whether the votes had been entered, etc.; journals consulted); 1879, State v. Crawford, 35 Ark. 237, 243 (whether a bill was properly read; journals consulted); 1882, Chicot Co. v. Davies, 40 Ark. 200, 205 (whether a bill was read three times; journals consulted; whether the enrolled act corresponded to the bill passed; journals and original draft consulted); 1883, Smithee v. Campbell, 41 Ark. 471, 475 (whether an amendment was enacted; journals consulted); 1884, Webster v. Little Rock, 44 Ark. 536, 547 (whether a bill had been duly read; journals consulted; rule treated as settled, but disapproved); 1886, Davis v. Gaines, 48 Ark. 370, 384, 3 S. W. 184 (doctrine not applied to notice of a bill required by Constitution); 1887, Dow v. Beidelman, 49 Ark. 325, 333, 5 S. W. 297 (doctrine applied to error in enrolment); 1889, Glidewell v. Martin, 51 Ark. 559, 566, 11 S. W. 882 (doctrine applied to question of due reading; but disapproved); 1904, Rogers v. State, 72 Ark. 565, 82 S. W. 169 (tenor of the act; journals consulted, citing Chicot Co. v. Davies but no other of the thirteen foregoing cases); 1909, State v. Bowman, 90 Ark. 174, 118 S. W. 711 (Smithee v. Garth followed); 1915, Arkansas State Fair Ass'n v. Hodges, 120 Ark. 131, 178 S. W. 936 (whether the governor had first approved before vetoing a bill; journals considered); 1920, Rice v. Lonoke-Cabot R. I. Dist., 142 Ark. 454, 221 S. W. 179 (omitted parts of a bill; the enrolled bill not conclusive);

California: 1852, Fowler v. Pierce, 2 Cal. 165 (whether an act was approved after adjournment; oral evidence received; quoted supra); 1866, Sherman v. Story, 30 Cal. 253, 256 (whether a rejected amendment had been incorporated in the act; journals not to be consulted, nor the original bill; as to Fowler v. Pierce, "possibly it may be distinguished, . . . but if not, it must be overruled"); 1872, People v. Burt, 43 Cal. 560, 564 (Sherman v. Story approved); 1880, Weill v. Kenfield, 54 Cal. 111 (whether there was due reading; journals consulted; prior rulings ignored); 1882, Railroad Tax Case, 8 Sawyer 238, 293, per Sawyer, J. (whether a bill was finally passed; journals consulted); 1886, Oakland P. Co. v. Hilton, 69 Cal. 479, 489, 496, 11 Pac. 3 (constitutional amendment required by Constitution to be entered on journals when proposed; journals consulted; but Sherman v. Story treated as law); 1889, People v. Dunn, 80 Cal. 211, 22 Pac. 140 (question not decided); 1896, Hale v. McGettigan, 114 Cal. 112, 45 Pac. 1049 (question reserved); 1901, Yolo Co. v. Colgan, 132 Cal. 265, 64 Pac. 403 (whether the required number of votes had been given; journals not consulted; Sherman v. Story followed); 1901, People v. Harlan, 133 Cal. 16, 65 Pac. 9 (preceding case approved);

Colorado: 1881, Re Roberts, 5 Colo. 525 (due passage; journals may be consulted); 1888, Hughes v. Felton, 11 Colo. 489, 492, 19 Pac. 444 (doctrine implied); 1894, Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441, 446, 451, 36 Pac. 221 (whether proposed constitutional amendments were validly passed; journals consulted); 1894, Robertson v. People, 20 Colo. 279, 283, 38 Pac. 326 (due concurrence of vote of Houses; journals consulted); 1905, Andrews v. People, 33 Colo. 193, 79 Pac. 1031 (whether a bill was read, printed, etc.; journals consulted); 1906, Adams v. Clark, 36 Colo. 65, 85 Pac. 642 (Lieutenant-governor's signature; Re Roberts followed); 1912, People v. Leddy, 53 Colo. 109, 123 Pac. 824 (approving the Robertson and Andrews cases);

Connecticut: 1849, Eld v. Gorham, 20 Conn. 8, 15 (certified published copy of revised statutes, deposited with the Secretary of State and legislatively declared authentic, is the sole record of the law); 1906, State v. Savings Bank, 79 Conn. 141, 64 Atl. 5 (whether a bill was duly passed; journals, etc., consulted; here the Secretary of State had not recorded it; no precedents cited);

Dakota Terr.: 1889, Terr. v. O'Connor, 5 Dak. T. 397, 415, 41 N. W. 746 (question reserved);

Delaware: 1910, Rash v. Allen, Ross v. Allmond, 1 Boyce Del. 444, 76 Atl. 370 (number of votes; journals consulted and held conclusive under a constitutional requirement for entry of vote therein; two judges diss.);

Florida: 1884, State v. Brown, 20 Fla. 407, 419 (whether an amendment had been omitted from the enrolment, and whether due reading cising the law-making power have proceeded constitutionally. . . . It is said that parties would in every case dispute the existence of the law, and that such practice would lead to confusion and perjury. I have already said that this is a question for the Court. And had occurred: journals consulted); 1888 State v. Deal, 24 Fla. 293, 294, 4 So. 899 (error in enrolment; journals consulted); 1893, Mathis v. State, 31 Fla. 291, 303, 12 So. 681 (due enactment of revised statutes: journals consulted); 1895, State v. Hocker, 36 Fla. 358, 18 So. 767 (that an act was not read in the Senate, and was not read by sections in either House: journals consulted); 1906, Wade v. Atlantic L. Co., 51 Fla. 628, 41 So. 72 ("This Court is firmly committed to the holding"); 1918, Amos v. Moseley, 74 Fla. 555, 77 So. 619 (State v. Brown followed);

Georgia: 1910, De Loach v. Newton, 134 Ga. 739, 68 S. E. 708 (whether a majority vote was given; enrolled act conclusive; careful opinion by Fish, C. J.);

Idaho: 1895, Wright v. Kelly, 4 Ida. 624, 43 Pac. 565 (journals not to be examined in a collateral proceeding; here, mandamus against county officers); 1896, Blaine Co. v. Heard, 5 Ida. 6, 45 Pac. 890 (journals may be examined to see whether constitutional requirements were complied with); 1897, Cohn v. Kingsley, 5 Ida. 416, 49 Pac. 985 (journals may be consulted); 1897, State v. Boise, 5 Ida. 519, 51 Pac. 110 (in passing upon constitutionality, copy of the journals must be produced);

Illinois: 1846, People v. Campbell, 8 Ill. 466, 468 (journals referred to on the question of a third reading, and a joint resolution held invalid); 1853, Spangler v. Jacoby, 14 Ill. 297 (whether a final vote was had, journals consulted, because the Constitution required the votes on final passage to be entered in the journal); 1855, Turley v. Logan, 17 Ill. 151 (whether a bill was properly read; journals consulted); 1857, Prescott v. Board, 19 Ill. 324 (whether a bill had been amended and enacted; journals consulted); 1861, Board v. People, 25 Ill. 181 (whether a bill was read three times; journals consulted); 1863, People v. Hatch, 33 Ill. 9, 132 (adjournment before executive disapproval; journals consulted); 1864, People v. Starne, 35 Ill. 121, 135 (whether a bill was acted on; journals consulted; doctrine rested on the constitutional requirement as to enactment, and doubted as a matter of policy); 1865, Wabash R. Co. v. Hughes, 38 Ill. 174, 185 (whether a bill was presented to the Governor and returned; journals consulted); 1867, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Wren, 43 Ill. 77 (whether the yeas and nays were called; journals may be consulted); 1867, Bedard v. Hall, 44 Ill. 91 (same doctrine implied); 1871, People v. DeWolf, 62 Ill. 253 (whether a majority had concurred: journals consulted); 1872, Hensoldt v. Petersburg, 63 Ill. 157 (doctrine implied); 1873, Ryan v. Lynch, 68 Ill. 160, 164 (due reading; doctrine applied); 1873, Miller v. Goodwin, 70 Ill. 659 (whether a statute was properly passed; journals consulted); 1874, Plummer v. State, 74 Ill. 361, 362 (propriety of act's title; journals consulted); 1875, Larrison v. R. Co. 77 Ill. 11 (whether a bill was properly read, etc.; journals consulted): 1876, Binz v. Weber, 81 Ill. 288 (propriety of title; journals consulted); 1879, People v. Loewenthal 93 Ill. 191, 205 (due passage of amendment; journals consulted); 1876, Ottawa v. Perkins, 94 U. S. 260 (the Illinois rule declared to admit reference to the journals to overthrow the enrolled act; four judges dissenting, but on the question whether the journals must be offered in evidence); 1881, Post v. Supervisors, 105 U. S. 667 (same decision); 1881, Wenner v. Thornton, 98 Ill. 156, 163 (due passage; journals consulted); 1887, Burritt v. Com'rs, 120 Ill. 323, 332 (due passage; journals consulted); 1902, Chicago Telephone Co. v. Northwestern T. Co., 199 Ill. 324, 65 N. E. 329 (prior doctrine applied); 1912, Neiberger v. McCullough, 253 Ill. 312, 97 N. E. 660 (whether a bill was printed in final form before passage); 1915, Dragovich v. Iroquois Iron Co., 269 Ill. 478, 109 N. E. 993 (whether amendments were printed before final vote; journals consulted); 1917, People ex rel. Zeno v. Illinois State Board, 278 Ill. 144, 115 N. E. 852 (whether a bill was read three times; Neiberger v. McCullough followed);

Indiana: 1851, Skinner v. Dening, 2 Ind. 558 (whether a two-thirds vote had been given; journals consulted; purporting to follow Purdy v. People, N. Y.); 1856, Coleman v. Dobbins, 8 Ind. 156, 159 (whether a bill was read three times; journals proper to be examined); 1858, McCullock v. State, 11 Ind. 424, 429, 435 (whether a constitutional majority voted; journals examined); 1869, Evans v. Browne, 30 Ind. 514 (whether a constitutional quorum had voted; journals not allowed to overthrow the duly certified act; preceding rulings repudiated); 1876, Bender v. State, 53 Ind. 254 (whether an act was duly presented to the Governor before adjournment; enrolment conclusive); 1880, Edger v. Board, 70 Ind. 331, 338 (rule maintained; but journals consulted to interpret); 1894, State v. Boice, 140 Ind. 506, 513, 39 N. E. 64, 40 N. E. 113 (Evans v. Browne affirmed); 1894, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Taggart, 141 Ind. 281, 40 N. E. 1051 (Evans v. Browne affirmed); 1897, Lewis v. State, 148 Ind. 346, 350, 47 N. E. 675 (Evans v. Browne affirmed); 1909, State v. Wheeler, 172 Ind. 578, 89 N. E. 1 (whether a bill was vetoed; Evans v. Browne followed; but, for some reason not very clear, the Court proceed nevertheless to examine the journals);

Iowa: 1857, State v. Clare, 5 Ia. 508 (certified act on file is the "ultimate proof of the law"; here, as against a printed copy); 1859, State v.

why should not the citizen whose life, property, or liberty is made forfeit by the operation of a particular law, be allowed to show to the Court, if it is not advised of the fact, that the same was passed in violation of his constitutional rights, or that it has been placed among

Donehey, 8 Ia. 396 (similar): 1861, Duncombe v. Prindle, 12 Ia. 1, 11 (whether a passage was omitted from the original bill; "behind this [the enrolled act] it is impossible for any Court to go for the purpose of ascertaining what the law is"); 1883, Koehler v. Hill, 60 Ia. 543, 558, 591 (contents of a constitutional amendment, under a requirement that the terms be entered at length upon the journal; the journal held to override the enrolled act; Beck, J., diss., in a valuable opinion);

Kansas: 1874, Haynes v. Heller, 12 Kan. 381, 383, 393 (question not decided); 1875, Division of Howard Co., 15 Kan. 194, 211 (error in enrolment; journals may be consulted, but not engrossed bill); 1876, Commissioners v. Higginbotham, 17 Kan. 62, 78 (whether a bill was duly passed; journals consulted); 1881, Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment, 24 Kan. 700 (proposed constitutional amendment required to be entered on journals; journals consulted); 1882, State v. Francis, 26 Kan. 724, 731 (whether a majority voted; journals consulted); 1882, Vanderberg's Petition, 28 Kan. 243, 254 (whether a two-thirds majority voted; journals consulted); 1886, Weyand v. Stover, 35 Kan. 545, 553, 11 Pac. 355 (whether a due reading, etc., occurred; journals consulted); 1889, State v. Robertson, 41 Kan. 200, 204, 21 Pac. 382 (dates of origin and passage, etc.; journals consulted); 1898, Re Taylor, 60 Kan. 87, 55 Pac. 340 (where certain parts of an act were duly passed; journals consulted); 1902, State v. Andrews, 64 Kan. 474, 67 Pac. 870 (conformity of a title; journals consulted; Ellis, J., for the majority, doubts the propriety of this rule); 1906, Belleville v. Wells, 74 Kan. 823, 88 Pac. 47 (title of bills; journals consulted); 1907, Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Simons, 75 Kan. 130, 88 Pac. 551 (consututional majority; rule re-affirmed); 1918, State v. Fleeman, 102 Kan. 670, 171 Pac. 618 (an enrolled bill is "well-nigh conclusive");

Kentucky: 1869, Com. v. Jackson, 5 Bush 680, 684 (question not decided); 1878, Auditor v. Haycraft, 14 Bush 284, 288 (same); 1892, Norman v. Kentucky Board, 93 Ky. 537, 546, 563, 20 S. W. 901 (same; but Pryor, J., explicitly declared in favor of holding the enrolment conclusive); 1913, Hamlett v. McCreary, 153 Ky. 755, 156 S. W. 410 (journal cannot be used even to uphold validity of an act; here, the enrolled bill was not signed by the Senate President);

Louisiana: 1871, Louisiana State Lottery Co. v. Richoux, 23 La. An. 743 (whether a bill was properly read, etc.; journals not to be consulted);

Maine: 1889, Weeks v. Smith, 81 Me. 538, 18 Atl. 325 (whether a bill was approved; enrolled act conclusive);

Maryland: 1858, Fouke v. Douglass, 13 Md. 392, 412 (the engrossed and the printed statute corresponded; the legislative journals held not to override this); 1870, Mayor v. Harwood, 32 Md. 471, 477 (the final engrossment as constitutionally attested, held conclusive as to the statute's contents); 1874, Berry v. R. Co., 41 Md. 446, 463 (terms of act; journals consulted); 1874, Legg v. Annapolis, 42 Md. 203, 220 (substitution of false bill in second House; journals consulted); 1877, Strauss v. Heiss, 48 Md. 292, 295 (general doctrine approved; governor's testimony to time of signing two bills, received); 1915, Thrift v. Towers, 127 Md. 54, 95 Atl. 1064 (change of title of bill);

Michigan: 1844, Green v. Graves, 1 Doug. 351, 372 (whether a two-thirds majority had been given; journals consulted, but present question not discussed); 1865, People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481, 491 (whether the vote included members not lawfully seated; journals may be consulted in general to determine validity of statutes); 1867, People v. Onondaga, 16 Mich. 254, 257 (error in engrossment of title; journals consulted); 1882, Pack v. Barton, 47 Mich. 520, 11 N. W. 367 (whether a bill was introduced in time; journals consulted); 1884, Attorney-General v. Joy, 55 Mich. 94, 100, 20 N. W. 806 (whether a two-thirds vote had been given; journals consulted); 1886, Callahan v. Chipman, 59 Mich. 610, 617, 26 N. W. 806 (whether a bill was introduced in time; journals consulted); 1887, Attorney-General v. Rice, 64 Mich. 385, 31 N. W. 203 (whether a bill's title expressed its object; journals consulted); 1888, Hart v. McElroy, 72 Mich. 446, 40 N. W. 750 (whether the proper readings were had; journals consulted); 1889, Sackrider v. Supervisors, 79 Mich. 59, 66, 44 N. W. 165 (like A. G. v. Rice); 1890, Stow v. Grand Rapids, 79 Mich. 595, 597, 44 N. W. 1047 (whether an error had occurred in engrossment; journals consulted); Rode v. Phelps, 80 Mich. 598, 608, 45 N. W. 493 (whether errors occurred in engrossment; journals consulted); Caldwell v. Ward, 83 Mich. 13, 46 N. W. 1024 (whether a bill was introduced in time; journals consulted); 1891, People v. Burch, 84 Mich. 408, 411, 47 N. W. 765 (whether bill had been properly voted on; journals consulted);

Minnesota: 1858, Board v. Heenan, 2 Minn. 330, 338 (whether a bill had been properly read; journals consulted); 1877, State v. Hastings, 24 Minn. 78, 81 (whether a bill was properly read; journals consulted); 1884, Burt v. R. Co., 31 Minn. 472, 477, 18 N. W. 285, 289 (whether a two-thirds vote had been given; journals may be offered in evidence); 1888, State v. Peterson, 38 Minn. 143, 145, 36 N. W. 443 (whether a bill was properly read; the archives of government by fraud or mistake, and never had a legal existence? Is there no way of ascertaining whether the approval of the executive was forged, or whether officers have acted contrary to their constitutional obligations? It is no sufficient answer that we journals consulted); 1891, Lincoln v. Haugan, 45 Minn. 451, 48 N. W. 196 (whether a proper vote was had; journals consulted); 1915, State ex rel. Kohlman v. Wagner, 130 Minn. 424, 153 N. W. 749 ("We are not disposed at this time to overrule" the foregoing decisions);

Mississippi: 1856, Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 650, 684, 702, 735, 33 id. 735 (whether an act had been voted by the required number, journals not to overthrow the enrolled act; careful opinion; Smith, C. J., and Fisher, J., diss.); 1866, Swann v. Buck, 40 Miss. 268, 295 (whether a bill was properly read; enrolled act conclusive); 1874, Brady v. West, 50 Miss. 68, 77 (errors in enrolment; journals consulted; "qualifying" Green v. Weller); 1886, 'Ex parte' Wren, 63 Miss. 512, 528 (whether amendments were omitted; enrolled act held conclusive in a weighty opinion by Campbell, J., quoted supra; Brady v. West repudiated);
Missouri: 1821, Douglas v. Bank, 1 Mo. 24 (whether an act was duly passed; journals consulted, as "better and higher testimony"); 1836, State v. McBride, 4 Mo. 303 (whether a proper majority had voted; journals consulted to overthrow the enrolled document); 1856, Pacific R. Co. v. Governor, 23 Mo. 353, 362 (propriety of proceedings after a veto; journals not to control; opinion careful and detailed); 1875, Bradley v. West, 60 Mo. 33, 44 (doctrine implied that journals might be consulted); 1879, State v. Mead, 71 Mo. 266, 270 (whether a bill was properly read and signed; journals consulted under new Constitution); 1893, State v. Field, 119 Mo. 593, 606, 24 S. W. 752 (whether a bill's title was contained during passage; journals examined); 1907, Cox v. Mignery, 126 Mo. App. 669, 105 S. W. 675 (rule applied to a municipal ordinance);
Montana: 1906, Palatine Ins. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co., 34 Mont. 268, 85 Pac. 1032 (due passage by entering the vote, etc., journals consulted, repudiating anything to the contrary in State v. Long, cited supra, n. 4, par. 5); 1909, State v. Erickson, 39 Mont. 280, 102 Pac. 336 (whether amendments were adopted; journals not consulted to determine contents of bill);
Nebraska: 1876, Hull v. Miller, 4 Nebr. 503, 505 (whether an act was properly voted upon; journals consulted); 1879, Cottrell v. State, 9 Nebr. 125, 128, 1 N. W. 1008 (whether a bill was properly signed and voted on; journals consulted); 1880, State v. Liedtke, 9 Nebr. 462, 4 N. W. 68 (question not decided); 1885, Ballou v. Black, 17 Nebr. 389, 393, 23 N. W. 3 (whether a bill was properly entitled and amended; journals consulted); 1885, State v. McLelland, 18 Nebr. 236, 25 N. W. 77 (whether an error occurred in enrolment; journals consulted); 1886, State v. Robinson, 20 Nebr. 96, 29 N. W. 246 (similar); 1888, State v. Van Duyn, 24 Nebr. 586, 590, 39 N. W. 612 (whether certain parts of an enrolled act were properly voted upon; journals consulted); 1893, State v. Moore, 37 Nebr. 13, 15, 55 N. W. 299 (whether an error of terms was made in the engrossment; journals consulted); 1894, Ames v. R. Co., 64 Fed. 165, 168 (journals may be consulted under Nebraska law); 1898, Re Granger, 56 Nebr. 260, 76 N. W. 588 (terms of an act; journals consulted); 1898, Webster v. Hastings, 56 Nebr. 669, 77 N. W. 127 (journals may be consulted; Irvine, C., and Sullivan, J., diss.); 1899, State v. Abbott, 59 Nebr. 106, 80 N. W. 499 (whether certain appropriations were made in an act; journals may be referred to, but nothing else, e.g. original bill, etc.); 1900, Webster v. Hastings, 59 Nebr. 563, 81 N. W. 510 (change of title after passage; journals consulted); 1900, State v. Frank, 60 Nebr. 327, 83 N. W. 74 (same rule reiterated; but held not to allow the silence of a mutilated journal to overthrow the enrolment; the facts and opinion well illustrate the dangers and uncertainties to which the rule leads; that in these days the journals could be kept in the manner shown in this case is a disgrace to the State and a warning to others); 1901, Simpson v. Union Stockyards Co., C. C., 110 Fed. 799 (enrolled bill is controlled by the journals; here said of a Nebraska act); 1901, State v. Frank, 61 Nebr. 679, 85 N. W. 956 (approving the original decision, supra); 1904, Colburn v. McDonald, 72 Nebr. 431, 100 N. W. 961 (like State v. Frank, supra);
Nevada: 1875, State v. Swift, 10 Nev. 176, 179 (whether a bill as enrolled was properly passed; journals not to be consulted; full and careful opinion by Beatty, J.); 1883, State v. Glenn, 18 Nev. 34, 38, 1 Pac. 186 (preceding case affirmed); 1887, State v. Tufly, 19 Nev. 391, 12 Pac. 835 (whether a proposed constitutional amendment was entered upon the journals; journals consulted); 1895, State v. Nye, 23 Nev. 99, 101, 42 Pac. 866 (same as State v. Glenn); 1899, State v. Beck, 25 Nev. 68, 56 Pac. 1008 (whether a bill was properly read; journals not consulted);
New Hampshire: 1858, Opinion of the Justices, 35 N. H. 579 (the journals are the authentic records, to be resorted to for determining whether the two Houses concurred in assent to the law); 1872, Opinion of the Justices, 52 N. H. 622 (same);
New Jersey: 1866, Pangborn v. Young, 32 N. J. L. 29 (whether amendments made in the Senate were contained in the bill as approved: the filed and authenticated document held conclusive, and the journals not to be considered as evidence to the contrary; quoted must rely on the integrity of the executive or other officers, and that the record of facts is conclusive evidence of the truth of such acts. Our notions of free institutions revolt at the thought of placing so much power in the hands of one man, with no guard upon it but his supra); 1884, Passaic Co. v. Stevenson, 46 N. J. L. 173 (rule of Pangborn v. Young approved); 1890, Standard Underground C. Co. v. Att'y-Gen'l, 46 N. J. Eq. 270, 19 Atl. 733 (similar); 1907, Bloomfield v. Board, 74 N. J. L. 261, 65 Atl. 890 (that a bill was not approved within sixty days after adjournment; enrolled attested statute not allowed to be overthrown collaterally);

New Mexico: 1915, Kelley v. Marron, 21 N. M. 239, 153 Pac. 262 (whether bills were read in full; journals not consulted);

New York: 1839, Thomas v. Dakin, 22 Wend. 9, 112 (whether a law had been passed by a two-thirds vote; conclusiveness of the printed statute or of the certified original, expressly left undecided); 1840, Warner v. Beers, 23 Wend. 103, 125, 137, 168, 190 (whether a law had been passed by a two-thirds vote; Walworth, C., left the question undecided whether the printed statute's correctness could be examined on demurrer to a plea; Verplanck, Sen., was for examining both the certified original and the journals; Bradish, Pres. Sen., was for taking the certified original as conclusive, under R. S., tit. 4, ch. 7, § 11, making it "conclusive evidence"; the question was apparently decided by the Court of Errors without passing upon the point); 1841, Hunt v. Van Alstyne, 25 Wend. 605, 611 (same question, left undecided); 1841, People v. Purdy, 2 Hill 31 (same question; left undecided; but Bronson, J., on the principle that the unconstitutional exercise of legislative power must be prevented, thought that at least the certified original could be examined); s. c. appealed, s. v. Purdy v. People, 4 Hill 384, 390, 419 (Walworth, C., thought the certificate not conclusive; the Court voted against his opinion, without expressing itself on the particular point); 1845, De Bow v. People, 1 Den. 9, 14 (same question; "it seems that the journals . . . may be consulted"); 1846, Commercial Bank v. Sparrow, 2 Den. 97, 101 (the printed statute-book not conclusive; the other question not raised); 1853, People v. Supervisors, 8 N. Y. 317, 327 (whether the yeas and nays had been entered on the journal; semble, the journal not to be consulted, but it was); 1865, People v. Devlin, 33 N. Y. 269, 279, 286 (whether a bill had been passed by a three-fifths vote; semble, that the journals could not be consulted); 1873, People v. Com'rs, 54 N. Y. 276, 279 (whether a statute had been enacted by a two-thirds vote; "the original act is conclusive"); 1883, People v. Petrea, 92 N. Y. 128, 137, 139 (whether a statute was based on a bill reported by commissioners to revise the statutes; the journals may be resorted to); 1891, Rumsey v. R. Co., 130 N. Y. 88, 92, 28 N. E. 763 (certificate of enrolment being defective, the journals were consulted to sustain the act; but whether a complete certificate would be conclusive is left undecided; the Court citing both People v. Purdy and People v. Devlin, and improperly leaving the matter unsettled); Laws 1892, c. 682, § 40, Cons. L. 1909, Legislative, § 40 (presiding officer's certificate is to be "conclusive evidence" that a law was passed by the proper number of votes); 1896, New York & L. I. B. Co. v. Smith, 148 N. Y. 540, 42 N. E. 1088 (journals consulted, to learn whether a two-thirds vote was received); 1906, Stickney's Estate, 185 N. Y. 107, 77 N. E. 993 (journals consulted to determine the constitutional quorum);

North Carolina: 1870, Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244, 248, semble (enrolled statute, conclusive); 1895, Carr v. Coke, 116 N. C. 223, 233, 22 S. E. 16 (whether a bill was duly read; enrolled copy held conclusive, in a careful opinion); 1896, Union Bank v. Commissioners, 119 N. C. 214, 221, 25 S. E. 966 (whether the yeas and nays were entered on the journals as required by the Constitution; journals consulted to overthrow the act; distinguishing Carr v. Coke); 1897, Commissioners v. Snuggs, 121 N. C. 394, 398, 28 S. E. 539 (same ruling); 1899, Board v. Coler, 37 C. C. A. 484, 96 Fed. 284 (journal considered, under a constitutional requirement in North Carolina that for certain legislation the yeas and nays must be entered on the journal); 1901, Commissioners v. DeRosset, 129 N. C. 275, 40 S. E. 43 (Carr v. Coke approved; journals here consulted as to the several readings of a bill); 1903, Wilson v. Markley, 133 N. C. 616, 45 S. E. 1023 (journals not to be consulted; except for ascertaining the due passage of certain private acts coming under the provisions of Const. Art. 2, § 14); 1904, State v. Armour Packing Co., — N. C. —, 47 S. E. 411 (triple reading after amendment, etc.; authentication is conclusive, except so far as the Constitution requires that certain matters must appear in the journal); 1905, Bray v. Williams, 137 N. C. 387, 49 S. E. 887 (private act; like Wilson v. Markley); 1904, Board v. Traveler's Ins. Co., 128 Fed. 817, 825, 63 C. C. A. 467 (first reading; following Carr v. Coke, N. C., supra, the journals were consulted); 1906, Board v. Tollman, 145 Fed. 753, 764, C. C. A. (roll-call; N. C. rule applied);

North Dakota: 1901, Power v. Kitching, 10 N. D. 254, 86 N. W. 737 (whether a bill was amended; journals not consulted); 1901, Pickton v. Fargo, 10 N. D. 469, 88 N. W. 90 (journals of a municipal council may be consulted); 1911, Woolfolk v. Albrecht, 22 N. D. 36, 133 N. W. 310 (whether the enrolled is conclusive as to an amendment's passage, not decided); 1919, State v. Schultz, 44 N. D. own integrity; and our Constitution has wisely so distributed the powers of government as to make one a check upon the other, thereby preventing one branch from strengthening itself at the expense of the coördinate branches and of the public. Such evidence should be 269, 174 N. W. 81 (whether a vote on third reading took place; enrolled act not conclusive);

Ohio: 1854, Miller v. State, 3 Oh. St. 475, 479 (question raised but not decided); 1870, Fordyce v. Godman, 20 Oh. St. 1, 16 (whether a two-thirds vote had been given; journals consulted); 1886, State v. Smith, 44 Oh. St. 348, 363, 7 N. E. 447, 12 N. E. 829 (whether a bill was duly voted on; journals examined); 1887, State v. Kiesewetter, 45 Oh. St. 254, 256, 12 N. E. 807 (whether a bill was properly signed; journals consulted); 1916, Ritzman v. Campbell, 93 Oh. 246, 112 N. E. 591 (reviewing earlier cases; the enrolled bill, if shown by the journal to have been passed by the proper majority, is not "under any circumstances subject to impeachment as to its contents or the mode of its passage");
Oregon: 1883, Mumford v. Sewall, 11 Or. 67, 72, 4 Pac. 585 (whether a bill was properly read; journals and original bill consulted); 1887, State v. Wright, 14 Or. 365, 372, 12 Pac. 708 (error in an amendment; journals consulted); 1892, Currie v. Southern P. Co., 21 Or. 566, 570, 28 Pac. 884 (whether a bill received a sufficient vote; journals consulted; Bean, J., hesitating; Lord, J., reserving his opinion); 1892, State v. Rogers, 22 Or. 348, 364, 30 Pac. 74 (same ruling); 1897, McKennon v. Cotner, 30 Or. 588, 49 Pac. 956 (journals may be consulted; an amendment appearing on the journal, it was presumed that it had been reconsidered and defeated, and thus the enrolment could be sustained); 1904, Portland v. Yick, 44 Or. 439, 75 Pac. 706 (journals will be consulted only to determine whether mandatory provisions there appear to have been observed); 1921, Boyd v. Olcott, 102 Or. 327, 202 Pac. 431 (whether House amendments were concurred in, etc.; Harris, J.: "This Court has in prior decisions approved and followed the journal-entry rule. . . . The reasons given in support of the enrolled-bill rule are not only greater in number, but also are more persuasive in quality, than those given in support of the journal-entry rule; . . . we do not by anything here stated wish to be understood as receding from or overruling any of those prior decisions");
Pennsylvania: 1853, Speer v. P. R. Co., 22 Pa. 376 (the certificate is "conclusive" as to enrolment; main question not considered); 1856, Southwark Bank v. Com., 26 Pa. 446, 450 (the Legislature repealed a section of a pending bill; the journals consulted to identify the bill, and the section, though part of the bill as signed, treated as void); 1877, Kilgore v. Magee, 85 Pa. 401, 412 (whether a bill was properly entitled, read, etc.; enrolment conclusive); 1884, Com. v. Martin, 107 Pa. 185, 189, 204 (whether an act was properly entitled; enrolment conclusive);
South Carolina: 1870, State v. Platt, 2 S. C. 150 (whether the statute required "Court to be held at Barnwell or at Blackville; the enrolled act read originally "Barnwell", which was altered to read "Blackville"; the journals consulted: the chief argument relied on is the necessity of preventing the violation of constitutional safeguards; Moses, C. J., diss.); 1879, Bond Debt Cases, 12 S. C. 200, 226, 233, 289 (whether a two-thirds vote had been given; journals consulted); State v. Hagood, 13 S. C. 46, 54, 61, 70 (whether a bill was properly read; journals consulted; McIver, J., diss. in part, in a forcible opinion);
South Dakota: 1894, Somers v. State, 5 S. D. 321, 28 N. W. 804 (two statutes, approved the same day, having inconsistent provision; journal examined to see which was intended as repealing the other); 1901, Narregang v. Brown Co., 14 S. D. 357, 85 N. W. 602 (journals not to be consulted to impeach the enrolled act); 1901, State v. Bacon, 14 S. D. 394, 85 N. W. 605 (same);
Tennessee: 1879, State v. McConnell, 3 Lea 332, 341 (whether a bill was properly read; journals consulted, but the question not raised); 1880, Gaines v. Horrigan, 4 Lea 608, 611 (whether an amendment was properly passed; journals consulted; but question reserved in part); Williams v. State, 6 Lea 549, 553 (whether a proper majority voted; journals may be consulted); 1887, Hayes v. State (unreported oral opinion: cited in next two cases as in accord with them); 1888, Brewer v. Huntingdon, 86 Tenn. 733, 9 S. W. 166 (whether a bill was rejected: journals consulted); 1888, State v. Algood, 87 Tenn. 163, 167, 10 S. W. 310 (whether a bill had passed after amendment; journals consulted); 1892, Nelson v. Haywood Co., 91 Tenn. 596, 599, 20 S. W. 1 (whether a bill was duly passed, signed, etc.; journals consulted); 1911, Jackson v. Weis & L. M. Co., 124 Tenn. 421, 137 S. W. 757 (State v. Algood affirmed);
Texas: 1875, Blessing v. Galveston, 42 Tex. 641, 656 (question discussed, but not decided); 1880, Houston & T. R. Co. v. Odlum, 53 Tex. 343, 351 (whether an act was certified after adjournment; journals consulted to determine date of passage); 1881, Usener v. State, 8 Tex. Cr. App. 177 (State v. Swift, Nev., supra, followed); 1886, Hunt v. State, 22 Cr. App. 396, 400 (whether a bill was properly signed; journals consulted); 1890, 'Ex parte' Tipton, 28 Cr. App. 438, 442 (error in enrolment; journals not to be consulted, where no constitutional provision requires a matter to appear therein); 1890, Re Duncan, 139 U. S. 449, semble (the validity of the most satisfactory character; and there is less to be apprehended from the subornation of witnesses, subject to the tests which the law imposes, than from the exercise of so great a power without restraint or accountability."

The answers to these arguments are represented in the following passages, dealing in various ways with one or more of the forms of argument against the conclusiveness of the enrolment:

1841, NELSON, C. J., in Hunt v. Van Alstyne, 25 Wend. 605, 610: "There are only two modes of contradicting it [the certified enrolment]: 1. By the journals of the two Houses, and 2. by parol testimony. The presiding officer had all the benefit of the first; the ayes and noes are taken, and the journal made up, under his supervision and control. His means of ascertaining and determining the fact, when he declares the law to be passed, exceed those of any other tribunal that might be called upon to inquire into it. Besides, the hurry and looseness with which the journals are copied, and the little importance attached to the printed copies, necessarily impairs confidence in their correctness. They are most uncertain data upon which to found a judicial determination of the rights of property, much more of great constitutional questions. As to the second mode of contradicting the certificate, the evidence would if possible be still more fallible and unsatisfactory. Indeed, we can scarcely imagine a case where from its nature the proof would be so subject to the doubtful and conflicting recollection of witnesses. Nothing short of absolute necessity could justify a resort to it. It would hardly deserve much weight in contradicting the journal itself, — much less the certificate of the presiding officer affixed to the law."

of a Texas statute, under the rule of Usener v. State, infra, held not to be a Federal question); 1891, Ewing v. Duncan, 81 Tex. 230, 233, 16 S. W. 1000 (whether a two-thirds vote had been given; journals consulted; none of the above cases cited); 1892, Williams v. Taylor, 83 Tex. 667, 19 S. W. 156 (whether a bill had been duly reported; journals not consulted; good opinion by Gaines, J.; this case practically affirms Usener v. State, 8 Cr. App. 177, and expressly affirms 'Ex parte' Tipton, 28 Cr. App. 438, and distinguishes Ewing v. Duncan, supra, on the ground that the date of taking effect was in issue and did not furnish the data for determining whether a sufficient majority for giving immediate effect had voted); 1897, Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. McGlamory, 92 Tex. 150, 41 S. W. 466 (journals examined to see whether an act took effect from date of passage); 1907, El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Foth, 45 Tex. Civ. App. 275, 100 S. W. 171 (Williams v. Taylor followed); 1916, Teem v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 183 S. W. 1144 (time of enactment, journals not to be consulted);

Utah: 1896, Ritchie v. Richards, 14 Utah, 345, 47 Pac. 670 (whether the yeas and nays were taken, the Constitution requiring the fact to be entered on the journals on demand of five members; held, that the enrolled bill, duly signed, approved, and deposited, was the final record of the statute, and the journals could not be consulted; Batch and Miner, JJ., diss); Vermont: 1844, Re Welman, 20 Vt. 653, 656 (time when an act took effect; enrolment conclusive; though "in some instances" journals may be consulted); St. 1894, § 31, Gen. L. 1917, § 39 (the engrossed or typewritten copy kept by Secretary of State "shall be taken to be" the act);

Virginia: 1884, Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 269, 271, 281 (whether a two-thirds vote was given; journals consulted);

Washington: 1893, State v. Jones, 6 Wash. 452, 34 Pac. 201 (whether the constitutional requirements had been fulfilled; journals not to be consulted; opinion by Hoyt, J., perhaps the best on the subject);

West Virginia: 1871, Osburn v. Staley, 5 W. Va. 85, 89 (whether the required number of votes was given; journals consulted);

Wisconsin: 1866, Watertown v. Cady, 20 Wis. 501 (whether a vote was properly taken; question not decided); 1878, Bound v. R. Co., 45 Wis. 543, 557 (whether an act was properly passed; journals consulted); 1885, Meracle v. Down, 64 Wis. 323, 327, 25 N. W. 412 (same); 1891, McDonald v. State, 80 Wis. 407, 411, 50 N. W. 185 (whether a bill was passed as constitutionally required; journals may be consulted);

Wyoming: 1872, Brown v. Nash, 1 Wyo. T. 85, 93 (whether a proper vote was given; journals may be consulted); Union Pacific R. Co. v. Carr, 1 Wyo. T. 96, 103 (same); 1892, White v. Hinton, 3 Wyo. 753, 756, 30 Pac. 953 (whether a bill was passed and approved after expiration of the session; journals not consulted); 1904, State v. Cahill, 12 Wyo. 225, 75 Pac. 433 (signing, etc., of a bill; journals may be consulted for facts constitutionally required to be recorded); 1904, Younger v. Hehn, 12 Wyo. 289, 75 Pac. 443 (preceding case approved).

1866, BEASLEY, C. J., in Pangborn v. Young, 32 N. J. L. 29, 34: "[1] It is impossible for the mind not to incline to the opinion that the framers of the Constitution, in exacting the keeping of these journals, did not design to create records which were to be paramount to all other evidence with regard to the enactment and contents of laws. . . . If intended for any purpose whatever in any course of judicial investigation, can any one conceive that these registers would have been left in the condition in which by the Constitution we find them? In the nature of things they must be constructed out of loose and hasty memoranda, made in the pressure of business and amid the distractions of a numerous assembly. There is required not a single guarantee to their accuracy or to their truth; no one need vouch for them, and it is not enjoined that they should be either approved, copied, or recorded. . . . [2] These are the sanctions [the signatures of the two presiding officers and of the Governor] which the Legislature has provided for the authentication of its own acts, both to the public and to the judicial tribunals; and the question is therefore presented whether such authentication must not be deemed conclusive, or in other words, whether the Legislature does not possess the right of declaring what shall be the supreme evidence of the authenticity of its own statutes. This question, in my opinion, must be answered in the affirmative. How can it be otherwise? The body that passes a law must of necessity promulgate it in some form. . . . It is the power which passes the law which can best determine what the law is which itself has created. The Legislature in this case has certified to this Court, by the hands of its two principal officers, that the act now before us is the identical statute which it approved, and, in my opinion, it is not competent for this Court to institute an inquiry into the truth of the fact thus solemnly attested. . . . [3] I think the rule thus adopted accords with public policy. Indeed, in my estimation, few things would be more mischievous than the introduction of the opposite rule. . . . The rule contended for is that the Court should look at the journals of the Legislature to ascertain whether the copy of the act attested and filed with the Secretary of State conforms in its contents with the statements of such journals. This proposition means, if it has any legal value whatever, that, in the event of a material discrepancy between the journal and the enrolled copy, the former is to be taken as the standard of veracity and the act is to be rejected. This is the test which is to be applied not only to the statutes now before the Court, but to all statutes; not only to laws which have been recently passed, but to laws the most ancient. To my mind, nothing can be more certain than that the acceptance of this doctrine by the Court would unsettle the entire statute law of the State. We have before us some evidence of the little reliability of these legislative journals. . . . Can any one deny that if the laws of the State are to be tested by a comparison with these journals, so imperfect, so unauthenticated, the stability of all written law will be shaken to its very foundations? . . . We are to remember the danger, under the prevalence of such a doctrine, to be apprehended from the intentional corruption of evidences of this character. It is scarcely too much to say that the legal existence of almost every legislative act would be at the mercy of all persons having access to these journals. . . . [4] The principal argument in favor of this judicial appeal from the enrolled law to the legislative journal . . . was that the existence of this power was necessary to keep the Legislature from overstepping the bounds of the Constitution. The course of reasoning urged was that if the Court cannot look at the facts and examine the legislative action, that department of government can at will set at defiance in the enactment of statutes the restraints of the organic law. This argument, however specious, is not solid. The power thus claimed for the Judiciary would be entirely inefficacious as a controlling force over any intentional exorbitance of the law-making branch of the government. If we may be permitted, for the purpose of illustration, to suppose the Legislature to design the enactment of a law in violation of the principles of the Constitution, a judicial authority to inspect the journals of that body would interpose not the slightest barrier against such transgression; for it is obvious that there could not be the least difficulty in withholding from such journals every fact evincive of such transgression. A journal can be no check on the actions of those who keep it, when a violation of duty is intentional. . . . [5] Besides, if the journal is to be consulted, on the ground of the necessity of judicial intervention, how is it that the inquiry is to stop at that point? In law, upon ordinary rules, it is plain that a journal is not a record and is therefore open to be either explained or contradicted by parol proof. And yet, is it not evident that the Court could not, upon the plainest grounds, enter upon such an investigation? In the case now in hand, if an offer should be made to prove by the testimony of every member of the Legislature that the journals are false, and that as a matter of fact the enrolled law did receive in its present form the sanction of both houses, no person versed in jurisprudence, it is presumed, would maintain that such evidence would be competent. The Court cannot try issues of fact; nor, with any propriety, could the existence of statutes be made dependent on the result of such investigations. With regard to matters of fact, no judicial unity of opinion could be expected; and the consequence would necessarily be that the conclusion of different Courts as to the legal existence of laws from the same proofs would often be variant, and the same tribunal which to-day declared a statute void might to-morrow be compelled, under the effect of additional evidence, to pronounce in its favor. The notion that Courts could listen upon this subject to parol proof is totally inadmissible; and it therefore unavoidably results that if the journal is to be taken into consideration at all, its effect is uncontrollable; neither its frauds can be exposed nor its errors corrected. And if this be so, and the journal is to limit the inquiry of the judicial power, how obvious the inadequacy, if not futility, of such inquiry! . . . [6] In the frame of our State government the recipients and organs of this threefold power are the Legislature, the Executive and the Judiciary, and they are coördinate, in all things equal and independent. Each within its sphere is the trusted agent of the public. With what propriety, then, is it claimed that the judicial branch can erect itself into the custodian of the good faith of the legislative department? It is to be borne in mind that the point now touched does not relate to the capacity to pronounce a law, which is admitted to have been enacted, void by reason of its unconstitutionality. That is clearly a function of Judicature. But the proposition is, whether, when the Legislature has certified to a mere matter of fact, relating to its own conduct and within its own cognizance, the Courts of the State are at liberty to inquire into or dispute the veracity of that certificate. . . . In my opinion, the power to certify to the public the laws itself has enacted is one of the trusts of the Constitution to the Legislature of the State."

1869, FRAZER, J., in Evans v. Browne, 30 Ind. 514, 524: "It is important, certainly, that the question whether the enactment of a statute is valid shall be made capable of ready and correct solution, and that it shall not depend upon doubtful or conflicting evidence. When all are bound to know the law, they should have the means of knowledge, and not merely reasons for conjecture, uncertainty, and doubt. . . . It is argued that there is an appeal to these [legislative journals], from the official attestation of the presiding officers and to the archives in the executive department. Would the journals be as satisfactory to the mind? Such journals, it is notorious, are and must be made in haste, in the confusion of business, and are often inaccurate. Their reading is frequently omitted, so that these errors go without correction. They do not show the nature of the bill as introduced, but merely the amendments which have been proposed to it. They are not required to contain anything by which it could be even identified and its passage traced. . . . By what reason or analogy can we sustain ourselves in holding that the journal should override the signatures upon the enrolled act? Surely not because it is in the nature of things more likely to speak the whole truth upon the question in hand. . . . But it is argued that if the authenticated roll is conclusive upon the Courts, then less than a quorum of each House may by the aid of corrupt presiding officers impose laws upon the State in defiance of the inhibition of the Constitution. It must be admitted that the consequence stated would be possible. Public authority and political power must of necessity be confided to officers, who being human may violate the trusts reposed in them. This perhaps cannot be avoided absolutely. But it applies also to all human agencies. It is not fit that the Judiciary should claim for itself a purity beyond all others; nor has it been able at all times with truth to say that its high places have not been disgraced. The framers of our government have not constituted it with faculties to supervise coördinate departments and correct or prevent abuses of their authority. It cannot authenticate a statute; that power does not belong to it; nor can it keep a legislative journal. It ascertains the statute law by looking at its authentication, and then its function is merely to expound and administer it. . . . If it may [look beyond the enrolled act], then for the same reason it may go beyond the journal, when that is impeached; and so the validity of legislation may be made to depend upon the memory of witnesses, and no man can in fact know the law which he is bound to obey. Such consequences would be a large price to pay for immunity from the possible abuse of authority by the high officers who are, as we think, charged with the duty of certifying to the public the fact that a statute has been enacted by competent Houses. Human governments must repose confidence in officers. It may be abused, and there may be no remedy. — Nor is there any great force in the argument which seems to be regarded as of weight by some American Courts, that some important provisions of the Constitution would be a dead letter if inquiry may not be made by the Courts beyond the rolls. This argument overlooks the fact that legislators are sworn to support the Constitution, or else it assumes that they will wilfully violate that oath. It is neither modest nor just for judges thus to impeach the integrity of another department of government, and to claim that the Judiciary only will be faithful to its obligations."

1896, ZANE, C. J., in Ritchie v. Richards, 14 Utah 345, 47 Pac. 670: "Objections may be urged to either means of proof. Minutes and memoranda may not always be correctly transcribed upon the journals. And the minutes and memoranda are sometimes made amid circumstances calculated to confuse and distract the attention, and to divert it from the business in hand. Bills may sometimes be enrolled, and signed by presiding officers, and approved by the governor, that have never been duly passed. Either source is subject to possible error. Courts and lawyers will differ as to which is the surest and best source of information. However, when statutes are published people shape their actions and conduct with respect to them; they incur obligations, acquire rights, and discharge duties in reliance upon them. If such a law, in any instance, should turn out to be void, because some requirement of the Constitution had not been observed in its passage, great injustice would be likely to follow. We must regard the enrolled bill, duly signed, approved, and deposited in the public archives, as a more accessible and convenient source of authentication, and, if referred to, less liable to overturn law, and quite as reliable as the journals of the two Houses. The people ought not to be required to ransack such journals to ascertain whether laws have been duly passed, and they cannot be expected to do so. Nor should lawyers, before advising clients, be required to search such journals. Statutory enactments should not depend nor stand upon such a sandy and uncertain foundation, if a better one can be found. Laws evidenced by the signatures of the presiding officers, and the approval and signature of the governor, and the filing in the public archives, ought not to be overthrown by memoranda on the journals which the Constitution does not require to be made."

1898, IRVINE, C., in Webster v. Hastings, 56 Nebr. 669, 77 N. W. 127: "We are in this case for the first time confronted with its [i.e. the opposite rule's] mischievous results. If the fact of the due enactment of a statute is to be tried on any available evidence, certain results follow, of such character as to bid us pause and re-examine our premises. Being an issue of fact, it is to be tried by the triors of fact, — in many cases, a jury. Being an issue of fact, its determination in one court or in one case will be no bar to its retrial in other courts, or in the same court in an action where the parties are different. One jury or one judge may, on conflicting evidence, find that a statute was passed, and is therefore the law of the State. Another may find that it was not passed, and is therefore inoperative. The law will be one thing for one man, and another thing for another man, depending upon the diligence of his counsel, and the temper, or perhaps prejudice, of a jury. A city will be governed by one law when A sues it, and by a different law when B sues it. An issue of bonds will be valid after their maturity only when in a suit thereon a jury shall say that the Legislature passed the law authorizing the issue, and then they will be valid only as to the specific bonds in action. I need not amplify the illustrations. Such a state of affairs produces a confusion in our statute law suggesting anarchy." [6]

The arguments against conclusiveness seem to be reducible to three: first, the argument of legal theory, i.e. that the enrolment is not a record; second, that of practical policy, i.e. that there is danger of error and fraud; and third, that of constitutional necessity, i.e. the impossibility of securing in any other way the enforcement of constitutional restrictions on legislative action. — The first argument, on which stress is seldom laid, is met by the principle that there may be conclusive preferences for testimony, irrespective of records (ante, § 1348). — The second argument cannot for a moment stand (as the above passages make plain) against the considerations that there is equal or greater danger of error and fraud in the journals, and that the use of the latter plunges the community into the uncertainty of repeated litigation on a question never capable of final settlement; the first of the considerations already outlined (ante, § 1348 (2)). applies here in all its force. — The third argument, that of constitutional necessity, is the one most frequently pressed, and the one really responsible for almost all of the decisions against conclusiveness. But it seems, after all, to be but a spectral scruple, created by a false logic:

(1) In the first place, note that it is impossible of consistent application. If, as it is urged, the Judiciary are bound to enforce the constitutional requirements of these readings, a two-thirds vote, and the like, and if therefore an act must be declared no law which in fact was not read three times or voted upon by two thirds, this duty is a duty to determine according to the actual facts of the readings and the votes. Now the journals may not represent the actual facts. That duty cannot allow us to stop with the journals, if it can be shown beyond doubt that the facts were otherwise than therein represented. The duty to uphold a law which in fact was constitutionally voted upon is quite as strong as the duty to repudiate an act unconstitutionally voted upon. The Court will be going as far wrong in repudiating an act based on proper votes falsified in the journal as it will be in upholding an act based on improper votes falsified in the enrolment. This supposed duty, in short, is to see that the constitutional facts did exist; and it cannot stop short with the journals. Yet, singularly enough, it is unanimously conceded that an examination into facts as provable by the testimony of members present is not allowable.[7] If to support this it be said that such an inquiry

[6] The opinions by Hoyt, J., in State v. Jones, 6 Wash. 452, 34 Pac. 201, and Beasley, C. J., in Pangborn v. Young, 32 N. J. L. 29, are easily the best on the subject both for comprehensiveness and keenness of analysis and for clearness of exposition. The latter opinion is the best known; but the former, though rarely cited, would alone render superfluous all the other deliverances on the subject. It is not quoted here, because it does not lend itself to partial quotation; but it ought to be read in its entirety by every one desiring to make an argument on the subject.

[7] Cases cited supra, note 3.

would be too uncertain and impracticable, then it is answered that this concedes the supposed constitutional duty not to be inexorable, after all; for if the duty to get at the facts is a real and inevitable one, it must be a duty to get at them at any cost; and if it is merely a duty that is limited by policy and practical convenience, then the argument changes into the second one above, namely, how far it is feasible to push the inquiry with regard to policy and practical convenience; and from this point of view there can be but one answer.

(2) In the second place, the fact that the scruple of constitutional duty is treated thus inconsistently and pushed only up to a certain point suggests that it perhaps is based on some fallacious assumption whose defect is exposed only by carrying it to its logical consequences. Such indeed seems to be the case. It rests on the fallacious notion that every constitutional provision is 'per se' capable of being enforced through the Judiciary and must be safeguarded by the Judiciary because it can be in no other way. Yet there is certainly a large field of constitutional provision which does not come before the Judiciary for enforcement, and may remain unenforced without any possibility or judicial remedy. It is not necessary to invoke in illustration such provisions as a clause requiring the Governor to appoint a certain officer, or the Legislature to pass a law for a certain purpose; here the Constitution may remain unexecuted by the failure of Governor or Legislature to act, and yet the Judiciary cannot safeguard and enforce the constitutional duty.[8] A clearer illustration may be had by imagining the Constitution to require the Executive to appoint an officer or to call out the militia whenever to the best of his belief a certain state of facts exists; suppose he appoints or calls out when in truth he has no such belief; can the Judiciary attempt to enforce the Constitution by inquiring into his belief?[9] Or suppose the Constitution to enjoin on the legislators to pass a law upon a certain subject whenever in their belief certain conditions exist; can the Judiciary declare the law void by inquiring and ascertaining that the Legislature, or its majority, did not have such a belief?[10] Or suppose the Constitution commands the Judiciary to decide a case only after consulting a soothsayer, and in a given case the Judiciary do not consult one; what is to be done? These instances illustrate a general situation in which the judicial function of applying and enforcing the Constitution ceases to operate. That situation exists where the Constitution enjoins duties which affect the motives and judgment of a particular independent department of government, — Legislature, Executive, and Judiciary. Such duties are simply beyond enforcement by any other department if the one charged fails to perform them. The Constitu-

[8] These cases suggest the disputed question as to the Judiciary's use of the mandamus, and are therefore open to dispute.

[9] Post, § 2369.

[10] 1887, Day Land & C. Co. v. State, 68 Tex. 526, 4 S. W. 865 (a legislative preamble declaring an emergency to exist, justifying the suspension of the rule requiring three several readings, as permitted by the Constitution, is conclusive; "the Legislature . . . is made the sole judge whether facts exist to authorize the immediate passage of a bill").

tion may provide that no legislator shall take a bribe, but an act would not be treated as void because the majority had been bribed.[11] So far as the Constitution attempts to lay injunctions in matters leading up to and motivating the action of a department, injunctions must be left to the conscience of that department to obey or disobey. Now the act of the Legislature as a whole is for this purpose of the same nature as the vote of a single legislator. The Constitution may expressly enjoin each legislator not to vote until he has carefully thought over the matter of legislation; so, too, it may expressly enjoin the whole Legislature not to act finally until it has three times heard the proposition read aloud. It is for the Legislature alone, in the latter case as well as in the former, to take notice of this injunction; and it is no more the function of the Judiciary in the one case than in the other to try to keep the Legislature to its duty:

1877, Per CURIAM, in Kilgore v. Magee, 85 Pa. 401, 412: "So far as the duty and the consciences of the members of the Legislature are involved, the law [of the Constitution] is mandatory; they are bound by their oaths to obey the constitutional mode of proceeding; . . . [it is] a question of regularity in the conduct of those who have the power to enact a law and to declare it to be such. . . . But when a law has been passed and approved and certified in due form, it is no part of the judiciary to go behind the law as duly certified to inquire into the observance of form in its passage."

1886, CAMPBELL, J., in Ex parte Wren, 63 Miss. 512, 533: "It is the admitted province of the Courts to judge and declare if an act of the Legislature violates the Constitution. But this duty of the Courts begins with the completed act of the Legislature; it does not antedate it. . . . From necessity the judicial department must judge of the conformity of the legislative acts to the Constitution; but what are legislative acts must be determined by what are authenticated as such according to the Constitution. That instrument contains many provisions as to the passage of bills which are admitted to be addressed to legislators exclusively, and for the observance of which there is confessedly no remedy which Courts can apply. . . . [They are] to be enforced by the oath required of members, and not admitted to the Courts."

The truth is that many have been carried away with the righteous desire to check at any cost the misdoings of Legislatures. They have set such store by the Judiciary for this purpose that they have almost made them a second and higher Legislature. But they aim in the wrong direction. Instead of trusting a faithful Judiciary to check an evil Legislature, they should turn to improve the Legislature. The sensible solution is not to [11] Fed. 1810, Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cr. 87, 123, 130, 144; 1891, U. S. v. Des Moines, N. & R. Co., 142 U. S. 510, 544 ("The knowledge and good faith of a Legislature are not open to question; . . . the bill [here] alleges that its [the act's] passage was induced by the [defendant] Navigation Co., by false representations and threats of suits; but that amounts to nothing"); 1893, U. S. v. Old Settlers, 148 U. S. 427, 466; Ark. 1884, Eakin, J., in Webster v. Little Rock, 44 Ark. 536, 548 ("the rule everywhere recognized"); Ill. 1910, Murphy v. Chicago, Rock Island & P. R. Co., 247 Ill. 614, 93 N. E. 381 (rule applied to a city ordinance, said to have been passed for corrupt motives); Ind. 1906, State v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co., 166 Ind. 580, 77 N. E. 1077 (corruption); Pa. 1849, Jones v. Jones, 12 Pa. 350, 357; 1859, Lowrie, C. J., in Sunbury & E. R. Co. v. Cooper, 33 Pa. 278, 282 ("May the Judiciary sit in judgment upon a charge that the Legislature have been faithless to their oaths, to the Constitution, and to the public interests? . . . We cannot hesitate a moment on this question").

Compare Story, Commentary on the Constitution, § 1090 (whose arguments apply to the present problem).

patch and mend casual errors by asking the Judiciary to violate legal principle and to do impossibilities with the Constitution; but to represent ourselves with competent, careful, and honest legislators, the work of whose hands on the statute-roll may come to reflect credit upon the name of popular government.

§ 1351. Same: (3) Certificate of Election. The mode of dealing with election returns is everywhere regulated by statutes more or less voluminous, and frequently subjected to amendment; and it would be impossible to state here the condition of the law of Evidence in each jurisdiction without a consideration of all the provisions of the general election law. It will be enough to note broadly the considerations recognized as affecting the evidential doctrine of conclusive testimony.

(a) The certificate of the returning officer or commission that a certain person has been elected is generally held not to be conclusive; and the Court will therefore examine, with the aid of other sources (chiefly, the ballots themselves) into the fact in issue, of which the certificate is the provisional preferred testimony, i.e. into the total number and tenor of votes by qualified electors:

1765, WILMOT, J., in R. v. Vice-Chancellor, 3 Burr. 1647, 1649, 1661 (an order to compel the University proctors to declare who had the majority of votes): "I think it [their 'declaration'] immaterial; for the question depends not upon that, but upon the real majority of legal votes. Their declaration cannot alter or affect that. . . . Even if such declaration had been contrary to the truth of the fair and legal right, the Court must have taken up the matter upon the true and real merits."

1835, ROGERS, J., in Com. v. County Commissioners, 5 Rawle 75, 79: "It is a startling doctrine that in case of a notorious fraud or a palpable violation of the law a constable could palm an officer on the public by the force of his return, — that, by merely omitting to state the place where the election was held, he could control the election. when it was admitted that it was not in fact held at the place appointed by the act. If this be the law, it is useless to go through the mockery of an election; the constable may return whom he pleases, always taking care that his return is correct upon its face. It would be better to give the appointment to the constable at once, without the useless ceremony of an election."

1855, WHITON, C. J., in Attorney-General v. Barstow, 4 Wis. 567, 792: "The question is whether the canvass or the election establishes the right of a person to an office. It seems clear that it cannot be the former, because by our Constitution and laws it is espressly provided that the election by the qualified voters shall determine the question. . . . But it has been repeatedly contended in the course of this proceeding that, although the election by the electors determines the right to the office, yet the decision of the persons appointed to canvass the votes cast at the election settles finally and completely the question as to the persons elected, and that therefore no Court can have jurisdiction to inquire into the matter. It will be seen that this view of the question, while it recognizes the principle that the election is the foundation of the right to the office, assumes that the canvassers have authority to decide the matter finally and conclusively. . . . [As to this, we say that] Courts which have the power to entertain proceedings by 'quo warranto' have authority to determine who has this right, without being compelled to limit the proof of the right to the acts of those who by law are appointed to canvass the votes and make statements of them." SMITH, J.:[1] "It is said the Legislature has erected the board of State canvassers into a judicial tribunal, — supreme, final, and unquestionable. This is indeed strange doctrine. . . . Can this board of canvassers be considered a judicial tribunal when they have no power to issue a subpœna for nor to compel the attendance of witnesses, to summon parties before them, to grant a trial by jury? . . . If the decision of one board can oust the supreme judicial tribunal of the State of jurisdiction and paralyze its functions, so can another. The clerk of a board of supervisors and two justices of the peace of his own selection become the Court of the first and last resort in which the most sacred rights of freemen are adjudged and determined without appeal; and that, too, without a chance of being heard, without process, without a jury, without the privilege of appearing before the power which may pronounce upon their rights." [2]

§ 1351. [1] At pp. 781, 786.

1863, DAVIES, J., in People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 55: "What is it that confers title to the office and the legal right to the reception of its emoluments? It surely is the fact that the greatest number of qualified voters have so declared their wishes at an election held pursuant to law. It is not the canvass or estimate of certificate which determines the right. These are only evidences of the right; but the truth may be inquired into and the very right ascertained."

1865, WELCH, J., in Howard v. Shields, 16 Oh. St. 184, 191: "The question to be decided in an election contest is, Which party received the greatest number of legal votes? If the Court can, as it necessarily must, go behind the abstract, why should it not also go behind the poll-books and tally-sheets? . . . To hold that, when an election has been in fact held, and the majority of the legal voters have in fact and according to the prescribed forms of law cast their ballots for the candidates of their choice, the constitutional rights of the voters and of their candidates can be defeated by a mere misprision or omission of the judges or clerks, would be manifestly unjust and contrary to the plain intent and spirit of our election laws. Such a result should be permitted only in cases of necessity arising from the want of proper means to ascertain with reliable certainty the facts of the case."

Nevertheless, when the chief source of evidence, the ballots themselves, cannot be trusted because they have been tampered with, or when by law they have been destroyed, the condition already pointed out (ante, § 1348 (2) a) may exist, namely, the official certificate may become more trustworthy than any verdict that could be reached upon the scanty or suspicious evidence available. In such a situation the certificate, or some subordinate certificate such as the tally-list, may well be taken as conclusive. But this result has seldom been reached by the Courts except under express direction of a statute.[3] Most Courts, however, while not treating the certificate as conclusive, do lay down, upon the same considerations, a rule for measuring the relative value of the evidence, i.e. they refuse to decide according to the evidence of the ballots if the ballots have been so tampered with as to be untrustworthy; the chief difference of opinion here occurs merely on the question whether the ballots will be taken as reliable until the tampering is shown, or whether they will be taken as unreliable until the fact of tampering is negatived.[4]

[2] The most forceful exposition of the whole subject is to be found in the masterly arguments of Mr. (afterwards C. J.) Ryan, at pp. 674, 684, and Mr. (afterwards J.) Orton, at p. 703, in the above case.

[3] See the following: 1897, Weakley v. Wolf, 148 Ind. 208, 47 N. E. 466 (tally-sheets and certificates to be conclusive as to unprotested ballots, which are not to be looked at or testified about; the law having provided expressly for their destruction, R. S. 1894, § 6248).

[4] The following are illustrations: Arizona: 1898, Oakes v. Finlay, 5 Ariz. 390, 53 Pac. 173 (ballots not controlling where not clearly shown

(b) The certificate includes an assertion that the person named was voted for by the required number of qualified electors. Conceding that the certificate is not conclusive testimony to the net fact that the person named was elected, may it not at least be taken to be conclusive that the votes were cast by qualified electors?[5] The argument to this effect has occasionally been rested on the idea that the election officers were given a quasi-judicial function in determining to accept the vote of given electors. But the stronger argument, advanced in the more weighty opinions, is that the case presented involves the conditions already noted (ante, § 1348 (2)) namely, a dearth of evidence for the proper investigation of the facts at a judicial trial. These arguments are set forth in the following passages:

1863, DENIO, C. J., diss., in People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 77: "The real question is who, according to the arrangements which the Constitution and laws have provided for determining that question, received the greatest number of votes, and was elected to the office. If the law has left it as an open question, to be determined like ordinary matters upon which to have been preserved unaltered); Arkansas: 1887, Dixon v. Orr, 49 Ark. 238, 241, 4 S. W. 774 (poll-books and tally-sheets are preferred evidence; if unavailable, other evidence by observers is receivable); 1887, Wheat v. Smith, 50 Ark. 266, 282, 7 S. W. 161 (original and duplicate returns being lost, the election officers' testimony of their contents was received); 1890, Jones v. Glidewell, 53 Ark. 161, 176, 13 S. W. 723 (contents of stolen returns shown); 1891, Merritt v. Hinton, 55 Ark. 12, 16, 17 S. W. 270 (contents of lost or destroyed returns shown); California: 1865, People v. Holden, 28 Cal. 123, 131 (the statute providing for ballot-preservation, the tally-list of the election-officers may be overthrown: by the results of an inspection of the ballots themselves; ballots presumed not to have been tampered with); 1884, Coglan v. Beard, 65 Cal. 58, 63, 2 Pac. 737 (the election officers' certificate may be overturned by the ballots, if they are in the same condition as when delivered by the election-judges); 1905, People v. Davidson, 2 Cal. App. 100, 83 Pac. 161; Illinois: 1872, Knox Co. v. Davis, 63 Ill. 405, 418 (poll-books and returns having been rejected for fraud, other evidence of the votes cast was received); 1880, Kingery v. Berry, 94 Ill. 515 (ballots to control if not tampered with); 1887, Lawrence Co. v. Schmaulhausen, 123 Ill. 321, 332, 14 N. E. 255; 1897, Dooley v. Van Hohenstein, 170 Ill. 630, 49 N. E. 193 (neither ballot-count in Court nor election judges' return is conclusive; but the former is to be preferred when not under suspicion of tampering); 1900, Jeter v. Headley, 186 Ill. 34, 57 N. W. 784 (ballots control, if not tampered with); 1913, Rottner v. Buchner, 260 Ill. 475, 103 N. E. 454; 1919, Strubinger v. Ownby, 290 Ill. 380, 125 N. E. 363 (ballots control, if not tampered with); Indiana: 1904, Strebin v. Lavengood, 163 Ind. 478, 71 N. E. 494 (construing the law as to gravel-road elections); Kansas: 1877, Hudson v. Solomon, 19 Kans. 177 (Brewer, J.: "The necessities of the case make it [the certificate] 'prima facie' evidence, but, unless expressly so declared by statute, it is never conclusive"); 1906, Moorhead v. Arnold, 73 Kan. 132, 84 Pac. 742 (good opinion by Burch, J.); Kentucky: 1900, Taylor v. Beckham, 108 Ky. 278, 56 S. W. 177 (refusing to review the action of the Legislature, which was here the election board); 1902, Edwards v. Logan, 114 Ky. 212, 70 S. W. 852; 75 S. W. 257 (ballots control, if preserved intact); 1920, Craft v. Davidson, 189 Ky. 378, 224 S. W. 1082; Massachusetts: 1897, Attorney-General v. Drohan, 169 Mass. 534, 48 N. E. 279; 1909, Con. v. Edgerton, 200 Mass. 318, 86 N. E. 768; Nebraska: 1892, Albert v. Twohig, 35 Nebr. 563, 568, 53 N. W. 582 (ballots control the officers' returns, if properly preserved); New Hampshire: 1908, Sheehan v. Manchester, 74 N. H. 445, 68 Atl. 872; New York: 1825, People v. Van Slyck, 4 Cow. 297, 323 (Woodworth, J.: "The trial is had upon the right of the party holding office; the certificate is not conclusive; the Court will decide upon an examination of all the facts"); 1909, People v. Wintermute, 194 N. Y. 99, 86 N. E. 818 (voting-machine); North Dakota: 1899, Howser v. Pepper, 8 N. D. 484, 79 N. W. 1018; Oklahoma: 1913, Moss v. Hunt, 40 Okl. 20, 135 Pac. 282 (election officers' testimony not receivable, until the ballots are shown to be not identifiable or to have been probably tampered with); Washington: 1913, Quigley v. Phelps, 74 Wash. 73, 132 Pac. 738; West Virginia: 1905, Stafford v. Sheppard, 57 W. Va. 84, 50 S. E. 1016; 1906, Williamson v. Musick, 60 W. Va. 59, 53 S. E. 706; Wisconsin: 1899, State v. Luy, 103 Wis. 524, 79 N. W. 776.

[5] See the authorities cited supra, note 4; the local statutes are so lengthy and so complicated with other rules of law that it is impracticable to collect the authorities here.

private rights depend, or, which is much the same thing, if the certificate of the canvassers is made only 'prima facie' evidence of the state of the poll, as is argued, the right can only be definitely settled by the verdict of a jury. But the nature of the subject would lead us to conclude, 'a priori', that such could not be the system organized by the Legislature. . . . I am of opinion that the policy of the legal provisions which have been enacted upon this subject is to secure record evidence of the result of the election, which, save in a few exceptional cases to be presently mentioned, is conclusive upon the public and upon all individuals, and against the verity of which no allegation can be admitted. I do not proceed upon one of the grounds relied upon by the plaintiffs' counsel, namely, that the inspectors of elections are made judges of the qualifications of persons claiming to be elected and who may offer to vote. . . . But while I disclaim any reliance upon the alleged judicial character of the inspectors, I am still of opinion that, so far as the value of the vote is concerned, the voter is made a competent and effectual witness respecting his qualifications to vote. Should he swear falsely, he is liable to indictment and punishment for perjury; and the act directs the preservation of so much of the evidence of his having voted as shall be necessary to establish the fact upon the trial of an indictment. . . . The Legislature considered that if one claiming to be a voter came forward, openly and publicly, before the inspectors and the public, who would be likely to be his neighbors and acquaintances, and offered to vote and no one questioned his right, or swore positively to his qualifications if challenged, it would be quite safe to assume that he possessed the requisite qualifications; for the inspectors and the whole community would not be likely to conspire in the interest of illegal voting. The law, therefore, provided that in such a case the vote should be received without other evidence. As to those whose right should be challenged, the legislative will was that the voter should be questioned on oath by the inspectors; that if doubts as to his right should be entertained, these doubts should be stated to him and the law explained, and that then it should be left to his conscience whether to affirm upon his oath, under the peril of temporal punishment for perjury, and of such religious and moral responsibility as might affect his mind, or to abstain from voting. . . . No doubt the determination of the right is left to depend essentially upon the voter's oath, and that there is a possibility that a false or mistaken oath may sometimes be taken. But is the hazard of a perversion of the franchise under these arrangements, so great as to require us to hold, against the plain language of the statute, that a right is implied to reëxamine the question before a jury, in case the right of the prevailing candidate shall afterwards be called in question? I think not."

1868, Campbell, J., in People v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283, 294: "The first inquiry, therefore, is whether an election can be defeated as to any candidate by showing him to have received illegal votes. . . . And where the illegality consists in the casting of votes by persons unqualified, unless it is shown for whom they voted, it cannot be allowed to change the result. The question of the power of Courts to inquire into the action of the authorities in receiving or rejecting votes is, therefore, very closely connected with the power of inquiring what persons were voted for by those whose qualifications are denied. . . . The reasons why such an inquiry should be prevented do not necessarily rest on any assumption that the inspectors act throughout judicially, although under our registration system that objection has a force which would not otherwise be so obvious. Neither do they rest in any degree upon the assumption that one rule or another is most likely to induce perjury, as very hastily intimated in People v. Ferguson, 8 Cow. 102 [quoted post]. But a very strong ground for them is found in the fact that our whole ballot system is based upon the idea that unless inviolable secrecy is preserved concerning every voter's action, there can be no safety against those personal or political influences which destroy individual freedom of choice. . . . Under our statutes there is no general provision which makes the canvass for local officers conclusive in all cases, and, therefore, the rule is recognized that the election usually depends upon the ballots, and not upon the returns. These being written and certain, the result of a recount involves no element of difficulty or ambiguity beyond the risk of mistakes in counting or footing up numbers, which may in some respects be more likely in examining the ballots of a whole county, than in telling off those of a town or ward, but which involves no great time or serious disadvantage. But the introduction of parol evidence concerning single voters in a considerable district can rarely reach all cases of illegality effectually, and must so multiply the issues as to seriously complicate the inquiry. . . . No system can be devised which will prevent all illegal voting. But it cannot be said our legislation is not as likely to shut it out as any means open to judicial control would be. The registration law forbids the board from recording any name of which they have well-founded doubts, and it is practically impossible for any stranger to succeed in defrauding the law, with the publicity given to all the proceedings. Where a person applies for registration on election day, the inspectors act upon discretion, and are not compelled to admit a vote unless satisfied of its legality. The challengers on both sides, as we all know, canvass every district beforehand, and expect to challenge every one who is not known. While the inspectors cannot reject a registered voter who takes the proper oath, yet the means of previous inquiry, and the imminent risk of detection and punishment, have reduced the dangers of illegal voting within very narrow limits. . . . I am, therefore, of opinion that the election must be determined solely by the ballots received according to law; and that where the election proceedings are not irregular, and the law has been complied with in correcting the lists and preserving the ballots, the means of determining the result must be in the main arithmetical."

The arguments against the conclusiveness of the certificate as to the voter's qualifications are set forth in the following passages:

1827, SAVAGE, C. J., in People v. Ferguson, 8 Cow. 102 (repudiating the ruling of the trial judge that a voter's testimony to the tenor of an ambiguous ballot was inadmissible because "such a principle would be of the most dangerous tendency, as it would lead to subornation of perjury"): "The elector who put in the ballot is certainly higher evidence as [to] the person designated by it than the opinion of any other. Such elector is competent, unless he is to be excluded from principles of public policy. . . . It is true, if the voter should swear falsely, you probably cannot convict him of perjury. But are we to reject every witness who comes to swear under such circumstances that, if he swears false, he cannot be convicted of perjury? I know of no such rule of evidence."

1863, SELDEN, J., in People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 65: "The first ground upon which this position is attempted to be sustained is, that inspectors of elections are judicial officers, whose decisions in receiving the ballots are final and conclusive. . . . Inspectors are required to decide some questions, but they are such as ministerial officers are often required to decide. A county clerk, before recording a deed, must decide whether it is legally proved or acknowledged, but his decision is not conclusive; a sheriff must decide whether the person whom he arrests is the person described in his process, but his decision is not judicial, and he acts at his peril. . . . The inspectors may be required to decide important questions, and their decisions, for the purpose for which they are made, that of determining whether the votes shall be received or rejected, are final; but I do not think they are conclusive with regard to the legality of the votes when the question is presented in an action properly instituted to try the right of persons elected to office, or defeated, by the result of the decisions. They cannot call witnessses — they can receive no oral testimony excepting the oath of the voter, and no documentary evidence, unless the challenge is based on an alleged conviction of crime. . . . Their decision leaves the question open for more deliberate adjudication whether the voter had or had not a right to vote. Great interests often depend upon these questions. They lie at the foundation of the government, and it is of the utmost importance that the means of detecting and exposing fraud and imposition, and correcting error, should be such as to secure the confidence of the people in the ultimate result of elections. . . . The greatest number of lawful votes alone gives the right to an elective office in this State; and as no adjudication can be had to determine the lawfulness of votes before they are received, that question must be open to examination by Courts afterwards, or there is no power anywhere in the government to discriminate between those which are lawful and those which are unlawful. Indeed, if the rule contended for by the plaintiffs be adopted, the distinction between lawful and unlawful votes ceases to exist when they reach the ballot-box."

1868, CHRISTIANCY, J., in People v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283, 311: "I cannot go to the extent of holding that no inquiry is admissible in any case into the qualification of voters, or the nature of the votes given. Such a rule, I admit, would be easy of application, and as a general rule might not be productive of a great amount of injustice, while the multitude of distinct questions of fact in reference to the great number of voters whose qualification may be contested, is liable to lead to some embarrassment, and sometimes to protracted trials, without a more satisfactory result than would have been attained under a rule which should exclude all such inquiries. Still I cannot avoid the conclusion that, in theory and spirit, our Constitution and our statutes recognize as valid those votes only which are given by electors who possess the constitutional qualifications; that they recognize as valid such elections only as are effected by the votes of a majority of such qualified electors. And though the election boards of inspectors and canvassers, acting only ministerially, are bound in their decisions by the number of votes deposited in accordance with the forms of law regulating their action, it is quite evident that illegal votes may have been admitted by the perjury or other fault of the voters; and that the majority to which the inspectors have been constrained to certify and the canvassers to allow, has been thus wrongfully and illegally secured. And I have not been able to satisfy myself that, in such a case, these boards acting thus ministerially, and often compelled to admit votes which they know to be illegal, were intended to constitute tribunals of last resort for the determination of the rights of parties claiming an election. If this were so, and there were no legal redress, I think there would be much reason to apprehend that elections would degenerate into mere contests of fraud. The person having the greatest number of the votes of legally qualified electors, it seems to me, has a constitutional right to the office, and if no inquiry can be had into the qualification of any voter, here is a constitutional right depending upon the mode of trial unknown to the Constitution, and, as I am strongly inclined to think, opposed to its provisions. I doubt the competency of the Legislature, should they attempt it, which I think they have not, to make the decision of inspectors or canvassers final under our Constitution. The extent of the inquiry into the qualification of voters, and how they have voted, may be limited or qualified by other provisions of the Constitution. . . . He may, if he sees fit, testify in court to the vote which he has given. . . . And whenever the person who has voted admits that he was not constitutionally qualified, or the fact clearly appears, so that it no longer remains a question for the jury, he can claim no protection from this privilege."

§ 1352. Same: (4) Sundry Official Certificates (Certificates of Jurat, of Acknowledgment of Deed, of Record of Deed, of Ship Registry, of Protest of Commercial Paper, of Chemical Analysis; Legislative Recitals in Statutes). The suggestion has been made in many other instances that an official certificate should be taken as conclusive testimony to the fact certified; but this suggestion has been almost invariably repudiated by the Courts. Such cases, however, involve the necessity of distinguishing the rules of the substantive law bearing on the issue, and the law of judgments (as already noted in § 1346), and it would be impossible here to deal justly with the various questions. A few instances only may be noted, to illustrate the nature of the problem.

(1) A recital of fact in a statute, though it may in some conditions be admissible as an official statement (post, § 1662), is not conclusive testimony.

The Legislature's recitals are commonly intended merely as explanations of motives and purposes, and not as determinations of controverted fact. They could not, without gross injustice, be made evidentially conclusive, and this is generally conceded.[1] As a contract or an estoppel, or otherwise, the recital may be binding;[2] but that would not be due to a rule of Evidence.

(2) A jurat or certificate of the taking of an oath is ordinarily not conclusive testimony and may be shown erroneous.[3] But in a given case the law may prescribe, as a condition precedent to certain legal consequences, that certain documentary forms of oath be observed; and then, if those forms are not observed, it is of no effect that the oath or other act was done without those forms; here all will depend on the significance of the statutory requirement.[4]

(3) For the same reason, the conclusiveness of a deed's certificate of acknowledgment will depend upon the view taken of the policy of the Legislature in requiring certain conditions for the validity of a transfer under the registra-

§ 1352. [1] U. S. 1921, Block v. Hirsh, 256 U. S. 135, 41 Sup. 458 (rent-restriction statute, with a recital of the emergency growing out of war-conditions; "A legislative declaration of facts that are material only as the ground for enacting a rule of law — for instance, that the use is a public one — may not be held conclusive by the Courts; but a declaration by a Legislature concerning public conditions that by necessity and duty it must know is entitled at least to great respect"); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1903 (recitals in a public statute are conclusive only "for the purpose of carrying it into effect"; in a private statute, only "between parties who claim under its provisions"); Ga. 1849, Birdsong v. Brooks, 7 Ga. 88, 92 (statutory recital not conclusive; quoted post, § 1353); Ia. 1883, Koehler v. Hill, 60 Ia. 543, 564, 14 N. W. 738, 15 N. W. 609 (preamble of a statute by one Assembly reciting the terms of an act of a former one, not conclusive); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10553 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1903); Or. Laws 1920, § 750 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1903). Contra: 1921, Tims v. Mack, Mason v. Mack, 147 Ark. 112, 227 S. W. 393 (legislative act naming a list of lands subject to betterment assessment, held conclusive).

[2] 1921, U. S. v. Lumpkin, D. C. N. D. Ga., 276 Fed. 581 (killing mourning doves, being migratory birds, as forbidden by U. S. St. 1918, July 3, forbidding the killing of birds mentioned in a treaty, which recited: "The high contracting powers declare that the migratory birds . . . shall be as follows: . . . doves"; evidence that mourning doves are not migratory was held immaterial because "it does not lie in the mouth of any citizen to raise that issue"); 1902, Fraser v. James, 65 S. C. 78, 43 S. E. 292 (under a constitutional provision permitting the Legislature to establish new counties upon certain conditions, the existence of those conditions as recited in the statute establishing a new county cannot be disputed, apart from fraud or deceit by the Legislature); 1921, State ex rel. Short v. Hinkle, 116 Wash. 1, 198 Pac. 535 (constitutionality of a statute whose preamble recited that "the revenues of the State are insufficient to support the State government"; Mackintosh, J.: "Courts will inquire into the fact as to whether such a necessity exists, an inquiry necessarily based upon proof, but proof limited by law to so-called judicial knowledge"). Consult Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes (1888), § 375.

[3] 1700, Thurston v. Slatford, 1 Salk. 284 (a clerk's record as to an official not taking the oath; "if there be a mis-entry, it might be supplied and corrected by other evidence, for he should not be concluded by the mistake or negligence of the officer"); 1808, R. v. Emden, 9 East 437 (jurat of an affidavit, not conclusive as to the place of the swearing); 1904, Markey v. State, 47 Fla. 38, 37 So. 53 (on a charge of perjury); 1903, Nicholson v. Snyder, 97 Md. 415, 55 Atl. 484 (notary's certificate of oath to an answer in bankruptcy, not conclusive); 1899, Baumer v. French, 8 N. D. 319, 79 N. W. 340 (jurat of an affidavit, not conclusive).

Compare the similar question for perjury in a deposition (ante, § 1331, n. 1).

[4] Arkansas: 1911, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Webster, 99 Ark. 265, 137 S. W. 1103, 1199 (St. 1905, § 4, p. 779, May 11, providing that if signature of a deposition is waived, "the officer . . . must so certify", held not to forbid oral testimony to the waiver; Wood, J., diss.); Illinois: 1898, Ryder v. Alton, 175 Ill. 94, 51 N. E. 821 (assessment commissioner's report sworn to before a notary; commissioner not allowed to deny having sworn); Maine: 1823, Hale v. Cushing, 2 Greenl. 218, 220 (oath of an assistant assessor; if not recorded, provable orally; the statutory requirement being directory only); 1831, Tripp v. Garey, 7 Greenl. 266, semble (certificate of a militia commander as to the clerk's appointment is by statute the exclusive evition system, and also on the judicial or merely 'ex parte' character (ante, § 1347) of the proceeding in which the acknowledgment is taken.[5]

(4) So also the theory of the substantive law (ante, §§ 1225, 1239) must disclose whether, under the usual recording system of land-transfer, the recorder's registration of a deed is conclusive as to its contents,[6] or as to the execution of an entry of satisfaction of a mortgage,[7] or as to the time of entry for registration,[8] or as to other facts material to the re-dence); 1860, Hathaway v. Addison, 48 Me. 440, 443 (oath of collector and assessor; same as Hale v. Cushing); 1876, Farnsworth Co. v. Rand, 65 Me. 19, 21 (oath of a collector before a town clerk; if never recorded, provable orally); Massachusetts: 1812, Bassett v. Marshall, 9 Mass. 312 (a justice of the peace made no record of an oath to a militia clerk; the parol fact was allowed; "since the magistrate made no record, . . . the evidence admitted was the best that could be required"); 1826, Sherman v. Needham, 4 Pick. 66 (certificate of oath of appointment of militia clerk prescribed by statute; "this is not like the case where the regular evidence has been lost and inferior evidence is admitted; the Legislature seem to have prescribed the mode of taking the oath"; and so the prescribed certificate alone would suffice); 1827, Com. v. Sherman, 5 Pick. 239 (same); Nebraska: 1906, Sebesta v. Supreme Court, 77 Nebr. 249, 109 N. W. 166 (foreign notary's certificate of taking of an affidavit, the certificate itself reciting only the fact of signature, not of oath-taking, excluded under statutory wordings; here the ruling however, is perversely technical, because the affidavit itself recited that the signers were "each duly sworn upon their oaths").

For the conclusiveness of the purging oath of one charged with contempt, see post, § 1815, n. 2.

[5] See the following cases: Federal: 1911, Bonvier & Jaeger Coal Land Co. v. Sypher, C. C., 186 Fed. 644, 660; Alabama: 1910, Orendorff v. Suit, 167 Ala. 563, 52 So. 744; Arkansas: 1898, Merrill v. Sypert, 65 Ark. 51, 44 S. W. 462; Columbia (Dist.): 1906, Ford v. Ford, 27 D. C. App. 401, 408 (collecting the authorities); Illinois: 1867, Hill v. Bacon, 43 Ill. 477; 1899, Tuschinski v. R. Co., 176 Ill. 420, 52 N. E. 920; 1902, Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. Hutson, 198 Ill. 389, 65 N. E. 93; 1904, Walker v. Shepard, 210 Ill. 100, 71 N. E. 422 (notary's certificate of acknowledgment is not conclusive as to the grantor's mental capacity); 1909, Kosturska v. Bartkiewicz, 241 Ill. 604, 89 N. E. 657; Iowa: 1916, Roberts v. Roberts, 176 Ia. 610, 156 N. W. 399; Kansas: 1909, People's Gas Co. v. Fletcher, 81 Kan. 76, 105 Pac. 34; Massachusetts: 1899, Ayer v. Ahlborn, 174 Mass. 292, 54 N. E. 555; Minnesota: 1907, Skajewski v. Zantarski, 103 Minn. 27, 114 N. W. 247; Missouri: 1921, O'Bannon v. McArron, — Mo. —, 236 S. W. 48 (sheriff's deed; clerk's certificate of acknowledgment, held not conclusive); Oklahoma: 1915, Dyal v. Norton, 47 Okl. 794, 150 Pac. 703; Philippine Islands: 1911, Robinson v. Villafuerte, 18 P. I. 171, 187; 1918, Alpuerto v. Perez Pastor, 38 P. I. 785 (date of execution; effect of Civ. C. §§ 1225, 1227, considered; elaborate opinion by Street, J.); Washington: 1916, Chaffee v. Hawkins, 89 Wash. 130, 154 Pac. 143; West Virginia: 1905, Swiger v. Swiger, 58 W. Va. 119, 52 S. E. 23; 1916, South Penn Oil Co. v. Blue Creek D. Co., 77 W. Va. 682, 88 S. E. 1029.

Compare § 1347, ante, and the cases there cited for a married woman's acknowledgment. Certificates of this kind may by statute be judicial acts. Compare Jones on Mortgages, § 538.

For the measure of proof required in overturning such a certificate, see post, § 2498.

[6] See the following illustrations: 1856, Harvey v. Thorpe, 28 Ala. 250, 263; 1885, Gaston v. Merriam, 33 Minn. 271, 276, 22 N. W. 614; 1829, Hastings v. B. H. T. Co., 9 Pick. Mass. 80, 83; 1836, Ames v. Phelps, 18 Pick. Mass. 314.

[7] See the following illustrations: 1854, Fleming v. Parry, 24 Pa. 47, 51 (an entry of satisfaction of mortgage on the registry; that it was not intended as a satisfaction of the bond, allowed to be shown; the entry not being a record "to which that maxim applies, the proper application of which is to judicial records"); 1871, Lancaster v. Smith, 67 Pa. 427, 433 (deed-recorder's attestation of a discharge of mortgage, not conclusive; the act being that of the party and the recorder being merely the attester of the party's act).

[8] See the following illustrations: Eng. 1817, R. v. Reed, 3 Price 495, 506, 511; U. S. Mass. 1834, Tracy v. Jenks, 15 Pick. 465, 468 (register's certificate of time of receiving and recording deed, conclusive as between creditors); Pa. 1841, Musser v. Hyde, 2 W. & S. 314 (conclusive as to time, in favor of a purchaser for value on the faith of the entry); Vt. 1803, Taylor v. Holcomb, 2 Tyl. Vt. 344 (town clerk's endorsement of time of record of deed, conclusive; but here allowed to be interpreted by his usage in recording); 1846, Morton v. Edwin, 19 Vt. 77, 80 (justice's certificate of time of record of execution, not conclusive); corded title.[9] Under the title-registration (Torrens) system, the registrar's certificate of title is conclusive as an adjudication (ante, § 1347).

(5) So also a notary's certificate of protest, regarded from the point of view of evidence, is not conclusive.[10] Yet it is possible for the law of negotiable paper to make a certificate in a certain form sufficient or indispensable for fixing liability, — just as it may make the mere mailing of a notice, irrespective of its receipt, sufficient for the same purpose.

In Louisiana, Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico, the Continental principle of proof prevails, viz. that certain official notarial certificates, particularly for the execution of contracts, wills, deeds, etc., are conclusive, except for specified purposes. Transactions and documents ("acts") so drawn up are termed "authentic," which signifies "executed before a public officer and certified by him." The Code Civil of France, the model for the Louisiana Code, provides (§ 1319): "An authentic act makes full proof of the agreement contained in it, against the contracting parties and their assigns."[11]

(6) The certificate of a State inspector of materials — the State chemist[12] or the State grain inspector[13] — has occasionally been declared by a Legislature to be "conclusive evidence" of the facts found by him.

(7) Sundry other documents[14] from time to time are presented as having a

1850, Chandler v. Spear, 22 id. 388, 401 (clerk's certificate of time of record of tax-sale bill, not conclusive); 1861, Bartlett v. Boyd, 34 Vt. 256, 261 (town-clerk's statutory certificate of date of mortgage-record and filing, not conclusive); 1868, Johnson v. Burden, 40 Vt. 567, 571 (town-clerk's certificate of date of filing for record, not conclusive); Va. 1845, Horsley v. Garth, 2 Gratt. 471 (not conclusive as to date of filing and recording).

[9] 1827, Hubbard v. Dewey, 2 Ark. 312, 315 (clerk's certificate of fact of record of deed or execution, not conclusive); 1827, Myers v. Brownell, 2 Ark. 407, 409 (clerk's certificate of filing of deed with directions to delay recording, not conclusive); 1843, Carpenter v. Sawyer, 17 Vt. 121, 123 (clerk's certificate of source of record of notices, not conclusive). On the foregoing points, compare the cases cited ante, §§ 1225, 1239.

[10] 1875, Boit v. McKenzie, 54 Ala. 112; 1883, Martin v. Brown, 75 Ala. 442, 447; 1871, Rogers v. Stevenson, 16 Minn. 68; 1843, Wood v. Trust Co., 7 How. Miss. 609, 630; 1895, Cook v. Bank, 72 Miss. 982, 18 So. 481; 1821, Stewart v. Allison, 6 S. & R. Pa. 324.

[11] The application of this principle may be seen in the following case: 1912, Block's Succession, 131 La. 101, 59 So. 29 (notary's certificate of execution of a nuncupative will). Compare the Code sections quoted ante, §§ 1179, 1225, 1336, and post, § 1680.

[12] Can. N. Sc. St. 1918, c. 8, Temperance Act, § 44 (liquor offences; inspector's production of certificate of analyst of liquor "shall be conclusive evidence", if approved by the inspector-in-chief); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 1790 (State chemist's analysis of fertilizer to be "conclusive evidence of the facts" in an action between vendor and vendee); N. C. 1915, Carter v. McGill, 168 N. C. 507, 84 S. E. 802 (sale of fertilizer; State chemist's analysis, not required); Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, § 325*a* 73 (State agricultural director's certificate of analysis of commercial fertilizer, etc.; "only said official analysis . . . shall be admissible . . . on the trial of any issue involving the merits", etc.)

But distinguish the question whether the parties can by contract make such certificate conclusive (ante, § 7*a*), and whether such a statute is constitutional (post, § 1355).

[13] Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 4591 (State inspector's certificate of grade of hay or straw, to be "conclusive"); § 4594 (similar certificates to be 'prima facie' evidence); § 4458 (State inspector's certificate of grade and dockage of grain; his "decision shall be conclusive" and his certificate "shall be evidence thereof").

For the constitutionality of such statutes, see post, § 1355.

[14] Arkansas: 1920, Sherrin v. Coffman, 143 Ark. 8, 219 S. W. 348 (the county surveyor testified on the stand to the correctness of a survey line; the trial Court told the jury that this was " 'prima facie' evidence of the correct line"; but the Supreme Court held that since by statute a certified copy of the county surveyor's record was made 'prima facie' evidence, "it is only a certified copy of the record of the county surveyor which shall be conclusive testimonial value. But in the few instances when an official certificate, entry, record, or the like is forbidden to be disputed, it is usually not a genuine instance of conclusive testimony, but rather a consequence of some rule of substantive law.

The only plain instances of a rule of conclusive testimony, recognized on common-law principles, seem to be those of the magistrate's report of testimony, the enrolment of a statute, and the return of an election officer (ante, §§ 1349–1351).

§ 1353. Constitutionality of Statutes making Testimony Conclusive; General Principles. It remains now to consider the constitutionality of statutes purporting to make a rule of "conclusive evidence."

It has been suggested (ante, § 1348) that a Court takes an extreme step, amounting to a temporary and partial renunciation of its vital functions, when it foregoes a search among all available sources of evidence and accepts the testimony of a specific pre-determined person as conclusive of a fact to be judicially determined. That a Court may do this, when it believes the result to be a more likely approach to truth than its own investigations could obtain, cannot be doubted. But in such a case the Court acts voluntarily, and exercises its choice. Being charged constitutionally with the exclusive function of determining facts in controversy, it may believe this duty to be best carried out by accepting a certain person's statement (or a certain inference from a circumstance) as the most satisfactor ysource of reliance in reaching that determination. But can such a course be forced upon the Judiciary by another department of government? Can the Legislature prescribe a rule of conclusive evidence?

(1) On the one hand, so far as a so-called rule of conclusive evidence is not a rule of Evidence at all, but a rule of substantive law, it is clear that the Legislature is not infringing upon the prerogative of the Judiciary to determine the truth of a fact in issue. For example, a rule that an indorser's admitted as 'prima facie' evidence"; it is discouraging to find that any such mechanical rule could be attributed to the Legislature; the decision is due to that false notion of legislative rules mentioned post, § 1680); California: 1877, People v. Hagar, 52 Cal. 171, 187 (certified copy of petition on file; whether certificate of correctness of copy can be attached, not decided); Georgia: 1854, Peterson v. Taylor, 15 Ga. 483 (certificate by a clerk, as to papers filed; not conclusive); Iowa: 1887, Mussel v. Tama Co., 73 Ia. 101, 34 N. W. 762 (township trustees' certificate of pauper supplies furnished, conclusive under statute, except for fraud); Kentucky: Gen. Stats. 1899, c. 81, § 17, Stats. 1915, § 3760 ("Unless in a direct proceeding against himself or his sureties, no fact officially stated by an officer in respect of a matter about which by law he is required to make a statement in writing, either in the form of a certificate, return, or otherwise, shall be called in question, except upon the allegation of fraud in the party benefited thereby, or mistake on the part of the officer"); 1906, Husbands v. Polivick, 128 Ky. 652, 96 S. W. 825 (statute applied as a rule of presumption to a tax-collector's return on a tax sale); Massachusetts: 1903, O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788 (magistrate's certificate of taking of deposition, not conclusive); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 2289 (assessor's poll-tax receipt "is the only evidence of payment"); Washington: 1922, State v. Gibbons, — Wash. —, 203 Pac. 390 (unlawful possession of liquor; certified copy of record of former conviction, semble, not conclusive under St. 1917, c. 19, § 15).

Compare the additional instances cited and distinguished, ante, §§ 1346, 1347, post, § 2453.

Whether the officer himself is forbidden to impeach his own certificate, though it is otherwise not conclusive, is a different question (ante, § 530).

liability can be fixed by showing a notary's certificate of protest is not necessarily a rule making the certificate conclusive evidence of demand and notice, but a rule of the law of Negotiable Instruments; because the law might be that no demand or notice at all was necessary for fixing an indorser's liability; and thus, to require a notary's certificate is merely to require a formal official instrument irrespective of its truth, i.e. something half-way between requiring actual notice and requiring no notice at all. Again, to make a rule that as between successive grantees the recorder's certificate of the time of filing deeds shall be conclusive, is not to make a rule of Evidence, but merely to provide in the law of land-transfer that a deed found to be recorded as of a prior date shall take effect against a deed found to be recorded as of a subsequent date, irrespective of the actual time of entry and record. In such cases, and countless others, the use of the term " conclusive evidence " cannot conceal the true nature of the rule as a rule of substantive law making a certain right or obligation depend upon the existence of a certain official writing irrespective of its truth.[1] Such statutes do not in any way infringe the prerogative of the Judiciary to satisfy itself by inquiries of fact, because they make no rule of Evidence at all.

It is true that such statutes may in some other aspect be invalid because of express constitutional limitations of legislative power as to some substantive right. For example, in either of the above instances, if the statute was enacted to govern notes and deeds made prior to its passage, it might violate the constitutional prohibition against laws impairing the obligation of contracts or taking property without due process of law. Again, a law providing that an assessor's or collector's deed of land sold for taxes shall be conclusive evidence that all due proceedings have been taken in the forfeiture may be obnoxious to the prohibition against taking property without due process; for the law in effect provides that the property may be taken although in fact due proceedings have not been had, — in short, while purporting to make a rule of Evidence, it really makes a rule of Property-Law, by which certain acts are declared unnecessary which the Constitution has declared necessary. In such ways, various constitutional provisions may be violated; but the Legislative attempt is invalid, not because it deals with a rule of Evidence, but because it deals with a constitutional rule of substantive law.

(2) In order, then, to contrive a real test of the Legislature's power to make a rule of conclusive evidence in the genuine sense, there must be given a case in which fact A, said to be conclusively proved by fact B, is and remains the real and unchangeable fact in issue, to which fact B can never bear anything more than an evidential relation. Such a case, it will be seen, can hardly occur except when fact A is constitutionally preserved as the ultimate fact on which the right or obligation depends; because, were there no such constitutional sanction, all instances of such laws (except where the statute clearly showed the contrary legislative intention) could be (and usually should be) supportable as virtually substituting fact B for fact A in the substantive law (as, where a notary's certificate is substituted for actual notice); and thus the statute resolves itself into a change of a rule of substantive law, and not the making of a rule of conclusive evidence.

§ 1353. [1] Compare § 1346, ante.

Such instances, then, genuinely presenting a rule open only to interpretation as a rule of conclusive evidence, must be extremely rare. One instance, however, would seem to be a statute making an election certificate conclusive evidence of a candidate's election. Now constitutionally the votes actually cast are the effective facts of an election; the certificate of an official can never be anything more than evidence in relation to the facts of the votes cast. This, and a few other cases, present fairly the question whether the Legislature can constitutionally oblige the Judiciary to forego its own investigation and accept some person's testimony as determining the fact in issue.

To this question the answer can hardly be doubtful. It is one thing for the Judiciary, while exercising in its own way its constitutional powers, to choose to accept the aid of an official certificate in reaching its determination; but it is quite a different thing for the Judiciary to be forbidden altogether to exercise its powers in a certain class of cases. The judicial function under the Constitution is to apply the law in controverted cases; to apply the law necessarily involves the determination of the facts; to determine the facts necessarily involves the investigation of evidence as a basis for that determination. To forbid investigation is to forbid the exercise of an indestructible judicial function. To make a rule of conclusive evidence, compulsory upon the Judiciary, is to attempt an infringement upon their exclusive province.[2]

§ 1354. Same: (1) Statutes affecting Substantive Liability in Tort, Contract, or Crime. It remains to distinguish these two principles as they have been judicially invoked for various legislative provisions.

(1) A statute which in reality deals with some rule of substantive law cannot be obnoxious to the present principle, — although it may be obnoxious to some constitutional proviso which protects the rule of substantive law in question.

Thus, a statute which makes more stringent the rule of responsibility for a tort, by substituting some other test than negligence, may be constitutional.[1]

[2] 1849, Nisbet, J., in Birdsong v. Brooks, 7 Ga. 88, 92 (holding a statutory recital not conclusive; "The Legislature has no power to legislate the truth of facts. Whether facts upon which rights depend are true or false is an inquiry for the Courts to make, under legal forms. It belongs to the judicial department of the government").

§ 1354. [1] Federal: 1896, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 22, 17 Sup. 243 (statute making railroad companies liable absolutely, without regard to negligence, for fire communicated by its engines, held valid; an instruction declaring that the setting of the fire was only 'prima facie' evidence of negligence, held properly refused); 1897, Jones v. Brim, 165 U. S. 180, 17 Sup. 282 (statute making one who drives a herd of cattle over a highway along a hillside liable 'ipso facto' for damage by rocks rolled down or banks destroyed, held constitutional); Arkansas: 1878, Little Rock & S. F. R. Co. v. Payne, 33 Ark. 816 (contra to R. Co. v. Mathews, supra, on the ground that negligence is an essential of liability, and that the Legislature cannot "divest rights by prescribing to the Courts what should be conclusive

So also a statute which enlarges the rules of contract by creating an estoppel may be constitutional, — as when the terms of a bill of lading [2] or of a policy of insurance [3] or other contract [4] are declared to be "conclusive" in certain respects.

On the other hand, a statute making a tax-collector's deed of property "conclusive evidence" of the validity of the tax-sale is ineffective, so far as it virtually sanctions the divestiture of property whose owner is not in default; as is usually said, the essential facts which are constitutionally required for a "taking by due process of law" cannot be abolished by the Legislature, although the unessential details are entirely within the control of the Legislature to suspend or to abolish, conditionally or absolutely.[5] So, too, any evidence"; this is an ignoring of the history of the law of negligence); Michigan: 1918, Hatter v. Dodge Bros., 202 Mich. 97, 167 N. W. 935 (St. 1915, No. 302, § 29, Comp. L. 1915, § 4825, that when a family member is driving a motor vehicle "it shall be conclusively presumed that said motor vehicle is being driven by the consent or with the knowledge of such owner", held a provision of substantive law; approving the above passage in § 1353); 1920, Hawkins v. Ermatinger, 211 Mich. 578, 179 N. W. 251 (similar); Ohio: 1899, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Kreager, 61 Oh. 312, 56 N. E. 203 (statute making a railroad company absolutely liable, regardless of negligence, for loss by "fire originating upon the land belonging to such railroad company, caused by operating such railroad", held valid).

There is a bulky literature on the subject of liability without fault. No attempt is made here to collect the authorities on its constitutional aspect.

[2] Accord: 1889, Hazard v. Illinois C. R. Co., 67 Miss. 32, 7 So. 280; 1904, Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Bent, 94 Miss. 681, 47 So. 805 (quoting this section). Contra: 1917, Shellabarger Elev. Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 278 Ill. 333, 116 N. E. 170 (loss of grain shipped; St. 1871, Apr. 25, Hurd's Rev. St. 1916, c. 114, § 118, making the shipper's sworn statement of amount conclusive, held invalid; two judges diss.; authorities collected); 1902, Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Simonson, 64 Kan. 802, 68 Pac. 653 (statute making a bill of lading "conclusive proof of the amount, etc. so received by such railway company", held unconstitutional, on the ground that such statutes precluding judicial inquiry are an "invasion of the judicial province and a denial of due process of law"; Doster, C. J., and Smith and Ellis, JJ., diss., on the ground that, though statutes which "bind interested parties by the adversary action of others" may be invalid, the above statute merely applied the doctrine of estoppel to the party's own act).

[3] 1898, Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 565, 19 Sup. 281 (Missouri, valued-policy statute, held valid); 1896, Daggs v. Ins. Co., 136 Mo. 382, 38 S. W. 85 (statute forbidding an insurer against fire "to deny that the property insured thereby was worth at the time of the issuing of the policy the full amount insured thereon", held valid).

Legislators frequently seem to believe that something is gained by labelling such statutes as rules of evidence; e.g., Fla. St. 1897, c. 4554 (in actions on fire insurance policies, "the insurer shall not be permitted to deny that the property insured" was of the value insured; this was entitled "an act prescribing a rule of evidence").

[4] 1914, Street v. Farmers' Elev. Co., 34 S. D. 523, 149 N. W. 429 (S. D. P. C. § 495 declared a grain elevator receipt to be "conclusive evidence", as against the issuing bailee, that the grain was owned by the bailor, and that he is entitled to receive the grain promised to be delivered; held not to amount to a rule of evidence, but to an "enlargement of the rules of contract by creating an estoppel", and held constitutional).

[5] Federal: 1876, Callanan v. Hurley, 93 U. S. 387, 392 (statute making tax-deed conclusive as to certain parts of the proceeding, held valid); Alabama: 1872, Stoudenmire v. Brown, 48 Ala. 699, 709; 1876, Doe v. Minge, 50 Ala. 123; Arkansas: 1877, Walker, J., in Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Parks, 32 Ark. 131, 145; Iowa: 1864, Dillon, J., in Allen v. Armstrong, 16 Ia. 508, 513 (an element "so indispensable that without its performance no tax can be raised", cannot be abolished by statute); 1870, Cole, C. J., in McCready v. Sexton, 29 Ia. 356, 388 ("This power of the Legislature extends only to those things over which it is supreme; as to the essential and jurisdictional facts, so to speak, which the Legislature cannot annul or change, it cannot excuse the non-performance of them, and of course cannot make the doing of any other thing a substitute for them or conclusive evidence of their being done. To restate the proposition succinctly: Whatever the Legislature is at liberty to authorize or not, it may waive or estop denial; but not so as to that which it must require"); Kentucky:

other statute dealing with property rights or personal rights is to be tested by the question whether any legislative alteration of those rights is constitutionally forbidden, either by the general rule against 'ex post facto' laws (ante, § 7) or by some particular provision.[6]

In its control over the substantive criminal law, the Legislature seems to be unlimited except by the provisions against 'ex post facto' laws, against cruel punishments, and against deprivation of life and liberty without due process;[7] it may therefore, within those limits, create and define such crimes as it thinks best.[8] The unwritten constitutional principle, therefore, which 1906, Husbands v. Polivick, — Ky. —, 96 S. W. 826 (tax-deed is presumptive only); Louisiana: 1887, Re Lake, 40 La. An. 142, 3 So. 479 ("The exercise of legislative power has never been sanctioned so as to make such deeds conclusive as to essential prerequisites"); Wisconsin: 1863, Smith v. Cleveland, 17 Wis. 556, 566 (statute declaring certain irregularities in tax-sale proceedings not to invalidate the sale, held valid; "the Legislature might have fixed the time and provided for a sale without notice or advertisement; they may surely, by proper legislation in advance, guard against errors and cure mistakes when notice is required").

Compare the cases cited post, § 1356.

[6] Fed. 1854, Webb v. Den, 17 How. 576, 578 (statute making a conclusive presumption, after 20 years' registration of a deed, that it was properly acknowledged, etc., held valid); Cal. 1880, People v. Boggs, 56 Cal. 648 (statute declaring official surveyor's county lines conclusive is constitutional, for the Legislature has merely sanctioned beforehand such lines as he runs); 1905, Calkins v. Howard, 2 Cal. App. 233, 83 Pac. 280 (statute declaring that a sale in bulk without notice is "conclusively presumed to be fraudulent and void" as against creditors, enforced as valid); Ind. 1920, Collwell v. Bedford S. & C. Co., — Ind. App. —, 126 N. E. 439 (rule of "conclusive presumption" of dependency, under St. 1919, p. 165, held a rule of substantive law); Fla. 1922, Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Gainesville, 83 Fla. —, 90 So. 118 (St. 1911, June 6, declaring certain railroad property to be "held and treated as property fronting or abutting upon said street" for purposes of taxation, held void; the Legislature cannot "declare a thing to be so that in fact is not so"); Minn. 1888, Meyer v. Berlandi, 39 Minn. 438, 40 N. W. 513 (statute giving a building lien, and making the landowner's failure to forbid by law conclusive evidence of consent, held invalid as "a destruction of vested rights without due process of law"); N. Y. 1860, Cooper's Case, 22 N. Y. 67, 90 (statute making the grantee of the diploma of a certain law school entitled to admission to the bar, held valid, because the Legislature possessed the power of regulating the terms of admission); N. Car. 1907, Re Applicants for License, 143 N. C. 1, 55 S. E. 635 (a statute providing that applicants for the bar who file a certificate of good character signed by two attorneys, and satisfy the Court as to their legal knowledge shall be admitted, makes the certificate conclusive as to character, and is valid; the above distinction is recognized: "if a Legislature, having prescribed certain qualifications, should undertake to direct whether an applicant did or did not possess them, this might be an unconstitutional exercise of judicial power; but not so here", for the Legislature prescribed in effect the possession of such a certificate as a qualification; compare on this case Mr. Lee's article, cited post, § 1355); R. I. 1917, Glanta v. Gardiner, 40 R. I. 297, 100 Atl. 913 (bulk-sales law);

The following case was therefore decided upon the wrong theory: 1862, Goshen v. Richmond, 4 All. Mass. 458 (statute declaring that the validity of a marriage shall not be questioned on certain grounds in a collateral proceeding, held valid as a mere change in the admissibility of evidence).

[7] Ga. 1907, Powell, J., in Mulkey v. State, 1 Ga. App. 521, 57 S. E. 1022 (cited more fully post, § 1356); N. Y. 1824, Sandford, C., in Barker v. People, 3 Cow. 686, 705 ("Though no crime is defined in the Constitution, and no species of punishment is specially forbidden to the Legislature, yet there are numerous regulations of the Constitution which must operate as restrictions upon this general power"); 1856, A. S. Johnson, J., in Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, 420 ("There may, in respect to offences attempted to be created by legislation, a question arise, capable of being considered by Courts of justice, whether the thing forbidden is an essential part of either of those secured private rights [of life, liberty, or property] so essential that without it the right cannot exist at all").

[8] 1892, State v. Kingsley, 108 Mo. 135, 18 S. W. 994 (a statute declaring that "every person who shall obtain board or lodging . . . by means of any trick or deception . . . shall be held to have obtained the same with the intent to cheat . . . and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor", held valid, because "it is morally wrong to obtain board by means of a trick . . . and hence it is competent for the law-making power to declare it a crime").

some judges have recognized,[9] that the Legislature cannot declare to be a crime that which is in judicial opinion not so, is no more valid for criminal law than for other departments.

§ 1355. Same: (2) Statutes making Official Reports, Certificates, etc., Conclusive; Finality of Findings of Administrative Officials, Boards, etc. (2) Turning now to look for statutes which genuinely deal with a rule of evidence, it seems to be generally conceded, on the grounds already noticed (ante, § 1353, par. 2), that a legislative attempt to interfere with judicial powers by forbidding investigation of facts, through declaring certain testimony or other evidential data to be conclusive, is invalid.

The genuine instances of this sort, indeed, are rare; most statutes purporting to do this are really attempts to change the substantive law under the guise of a rule of Evidence, and therefore may or may not be valid, according to their interpretation, in the light of the considerations already noted (ante, § 1354). In the present class, however, would belong statutes which, while plainly recognizing one fact as still dominant in the substantive law, and not desiring to change it, should make another fact conclusive proof of it. Such a statute is almost inconceivable; but in the abstract it has often been declared futile, in the judicial utterances.[1]

[9] Ala. 1913, Ex parte Woodward, 181 Ala. 97, 61 So. 295; N. Car. 1887, State v. Divine, 98 N. C. 778, 4 S. E. 477 (statute making the president, etc., of a railroad criminally liable for the killing or injury of stock by the railroad, regardless of the person's actual share in the causing of the injury, held invalid; the opinion confuses this and the 'prima facie' question); Oh. 1908, Hammond v. State, 78 Oh. 15, 84 N. E. 416 (Rev. St. § 4427-6, Gen. C. Annot. 1921, § 6399, providing that, on a charge of being engaged in a trust-combination to control trade, "the character of the trust or combination alleged may be established by proof of its general reputation as such" is unconstitutional, as being in effect a "rule of conclusive evidence . . . that shall be binding"); R. I. 1882, State v. Kartz, 13 R. I. 528 (statute making it a crime to "keep a place in which it is reputed that intoxicating liquors" are kept for illegal sale, held invalid; "to introduce into the law the principle that a person can be punished for what other people say about him is to render all the constitutional safeguards of life, liberty, and property unavailing for his protection", in particular, the protection of "due process of law").

Compare here some of the judicial utterances quoted post, § 1356, which tend to the same view.

In the following case the point was not decided: 1880, State v. Thomas, 47 Conn. 546 (statute making it an offence to keep a place "where it is reputed that intoxicating liquors" are illegally sold, held constitutional; but the opinion evades the real issue by holding that the reputation only when "unexplained and uncontradicted" is to be "conclusive evidence"; the argument of Mr. Curtis for the defendant is ably put). Compare the cases and statutes merely admitting reputation as evidence (post, §§ 1620–1626).

§ 1355. [1] Besides the rulings of § 1354, which in effect assume this, are the following: Illinois: 1854, Pittsfield & F. P. R. Co. v. Harrison, 16 Ill. 81 ("The Legislature may not, indeed, deprive the party of all means of establishing the facts upon which his rights depend"); Indiana: 1862, Wantlan v. White, 19 Ind. 470 (Federal statute that "the oath of enlistment taken by a recruit shall be conclusive as to his age", held not to prevent a minor's guardian, demanding his release, from showing the fact); 1890, Mitchell, J., in Voght v. State, 124 Ind. 358, 24 N. E. 680; Iowa: 1864, Dillon, J., in Allen v. Armstrong, 16 Ia. 508, 513 ("If the Legislature should pass an act declaring that merely being found in the possession of property which had been stolen should be conclusive evidence of guilt, Courts would be very apt to hold that this was an assumption and exercise of a power which it did not possess"); Minnesota: 1899, Vega S. S. Co. v. Consol. Elev. Co., 75 Minn. 309, 77 N. W. 973 (Gen. St. 1894, § 7675, declaring the certificate of weight of grain, etc., by the State weighmaster, "shall be conclusive upon all parties", held unconstitutional, as "an arbitrary exercise of power, so as to deprive a person of his day in court to vindicate his right"; the plaintiff was here allowed to prove the actual amount of grain delivered, in opposition to the certificate's figures); New York: 1876, Howard v. Moot, 64 N. Y. 262, 269 ("It may

Conceding that conclusiveness cannot constitutionally be attributed by the Legislature to any testimonial evidence as such (ante, § 1353), there still remain two apparent but not real exceptions, in which conclusiveness (though not in the testimonial sense) can lawfully be created under some circumstances; one is the finding of an inferior court, and the other is the finding of an executive officer within his province of action:

(a) So far as constitutionally the organization of courts and the prohibition of appeals is within the legislative powers of regulation, it is obvious (ante, § 1347) that a statute which merely regulates the right of appeal from inferior judicial officers is valid.[2]

(b) So far as the Executive may constitutionally render decisions upon issues of fact, independent of the Judiciary organization, the determinations of the Executive lie without the sphere of the Judiciary; therefore, those determinations have finality, and must be given faith and acceptance, without reopening the issue, when they come before a court incidentally to a controversy, and without obstructing them by independent process directed to annul them.

This independent jurisdiction the Executive possesses inherently in a certain limited field, involving facts which concern directly the performance of its own duties. But the Legislature from time to time, in the vast and complex development of modern government, enlarges the Executive fields by creating new administrative offices and committing to them new subjects of civic life, often involving interests of the individual citizen in his relation to the State. In this field also (as in the orthodox judicial field) issues of fact are presented for official determination. Thus the question arises, be conceded, for all the purposes of this appeal, that a law that should make evidence conclusive, which was not so necessarily in and of itself, and thus preclude the adverse party from showing the truth, would be void, as indirectly working a confiscation of property or a destruction of vested rights"); Pennsylvania: 1788, Shippen, P., in Pleasants v. Meng, 1 Dall. 380, 383 ("The nature of evidence necessarily implies an adverse right to controvert and repel"); Vermont: 1909, Ex parte Allen, 82 Vt. 365, 73 Atl. 1078 (physician's sworn certificate of insanity, which was required by statute before committal, held not conclusive under the statute; and a statute which made it conclusive would be void).

The following case would raise the question: 1903, Snyder v. Bonbright, C. C., 123 Fed. 817 (by a statute of 1885, making the owner of a building liable for injuries caused through lack of a satisfactory fire escape, the certificate of an inspector that the fire escape is satisfactory was conclusive; the question of constitutionality was not here raised).

See an able and learned article by Mr. Blewett Lee, 13 Harv. Law Rev. 233, 252 ("Constitutional Power of the Courts over Admission to the Bar").

[2] Federal, 1871, Chase, C. J., in U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall. 128, 145 (here a statute making a pardon conclusive evidence of certain facts before the Court of Claims was held to be inconsistent with the right of appeal as otherwise guaranteed; Miller and Bradley, JJ., diss.); Ind. 1877, Hunter v. Turnpike Co., 56 Ind. 213, 224 (the report of an inspector of a road as to the fact of completion was made conclusive by statute; held valid; but here a privilege of appeal from the report to the Court existed); N. Y. 1854, Van Alstyne v. Erwine, 11 N. Y. 331, 341 (statute making the Court's appointment, on notice, of trustees for the property of an absconding debtor "conclusive evidence that the debtor therein named was a concealed, etc., debtor", applied); Pa. 1788, Pleasants v. Meng, 1 Dall. 380 (statute making a bankrupt's certificate of bankruptcy, etc., by the commissioners "sufficient evidence"; held here not to signify "conclusive evidence", i.e. without appeal to examine the proceedings of the commissioners).

whether the Legislature may constitutionally commit such issues to the administrative officials for final determination without review by the Judiciary.

This question is not one of "conclusiveness" in the testimonial sense, but rather one of the finality of another functionary's determination, — analogous to the finality of another court's judgment (ante, § 1347). Whether such administrative proceedings should have to observe the usual rules of judicial evidence in jury trials is an incidental inquiry already considered (ante, § 4 a). In the present aspect, the only constitutional question can be how far their proceedings must involve the elements of due process of law; and the Judiciary is entitled to review their findings for the purpose of ascertaining whether those requirements have been complied with. Any attempted bestowal of finality by the Legislature upon such Executive determinations would of course be ineffective. It is in this aspect that the "conclusiveness" of such findings, under various statutory grants of power, has been judicially passed upon.

These administrative officers and commissions are numerous, though a purporting conclusiveness for findings of fact has been attempted by the Legislature for only a small number of them. These include Federal and State commissions having supervision of railroads, public utilities, corporations, trade, and industrial accidents;[3] Federal officials having supervision of immigration;[4] and Federal officials of the treasury,[5] the postal service,[6] and the land-office.[7]

[3] The following are merely a few of the earlier examples: Federal: 1889, Chicago M. & S. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 452, 461, 464, 10 Sup. 462, 702 (statute making railroad commissioners' schedule of rates conclusive as to reasonableness, held invalid, because the question of reasonableness "is eminently a question for judicial investigation, requiring due process of law for its determination"; Bradley, J., and two others, diss., because the question, being a legislative one, could be delegated for investigation to the commission, "and such a body, though not a court, is a proper tribunal for the duties imposed upon it; . . . due process of law does not always require a court; it merely requires such tribunals and proceedings as are proper to the subject in hand"); Minn. 1888, State v. Chicago, M. & S. P. R. Co., 38 Minn. 281, 37 N. W. 782 (statute making railroad commissioners' schedule of rates conclusive as to reasonableness, held valid, on the ground that a common carrier's charges were within legislative control and hence no judicial ascertainment was necessary).

Here again there is a current notion that the language of the law of evidence can be used to evade the issue: Ark. St. 1901, Feb. 27, No. 24 ("An act to define a rule of evidence in certain cases: In all actions between private parties and railroad companies brought under the law establishing a railroad commission . . . [the commission's rates prescribed] shall be held, deemed, and accepted to be reasonable, fair, and just, and in such respects shall not be controverted therein").

[4] The following include only the most notable in a long line of rulings. The general result shows a shifting of position; in the earlier rulings little more is required of the administrative proceedings than the recording of a finding; then specifically the opportunity of a hearing is made essential; and later the elements of a fair hearing are more exactly scrutinized and required; distinctions are made as to requirements for different kinds of facts in issue; but the principle involved is that of due process of law, and not of conclusive evidence in the testimonial sense; so far as specific rules of Evidence are required to be followed, this has been noted ante, § 4 c; 1891, Nishimura Ekiu v. U. S., 142 U. S. 651, 660, 12 Sup. 336 (a Federal statute making conclusive the decision of an immigration inspector that an alien immigrant is within the classes prohibited from entering, held valid; Brewer, J., diss.); 1892, Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 713, 732, 742, 754, 761, 13 Sup. 1016 (preceding case approved and applied to a deportation statute; "the power of Congress to expel, like the power to exclude aliens, . . . may be exercised entirely through executive officers"; the prior cases marking the boundary between executive and judicial matters are here collected; Brewer and Field, JJ., and Fuller, C. J., diss.); 1895, Lem Moon Sing v. U. S., 158

Whether the specific rules of Evidence for jury trials are applicable in hearings before these administrative officers is of course a different question (ante, § 4 a).

§ 1356. Same: (3) Statutes declaring Rebuttable Presumptions or 'Prima Facie' Evidence. (3) There remains a question which has no concern with the question of conclusive evidence, but has often been assimilated to it, and U. S. 538, 15 Sup. 967 (proceeding cases approved); 1901, Fok Yung Yo v. U. S., 185 U. S. 296, 22 Sup. 686; 1901, Lee Gon Yung v. U. S., ib. 306, 22 Sup. 690; 1901, Chin Bak Kan v. U. S., 186 U. S. 193, 22 Sup. 891; 1903, Kaoru Yamataya v. Fisher, 189 U. S. 86, 23 Sup. 611 (Nishimura Ekiu's case followed; but the statute implies at least "an opportunity to be heard" before the executive department "upon the questions involving his right to be and to remain in the U. S."); 1902, Japanese Immigrant Case, 189 U. S. 86, 99, 23 Sup. 611 (the arbitrariness of an executive officer's action under such a statute will be reviewed); 1903, Gonzales v. Williams, 192 U. S. 1, 15, 24 Sup. 177 (passing on St. 1903, Mar. 3, c. 1012, 32 Stats. 1913); 1903, Re Lea, 126 Fed. 234, D. C. (under the immigration laws, a claim of citizenship is a judiciable question); 1903, U. S. v. Hung Chang, 126 Fed. 400, 405, D. C., semble (the deportation of a native-born citizen is unconstitutional; hence the issue whether a particular person to be deported is native-born is a judiciable one); 1904, Hopkins v. Fachant, 130 Fed. 839, 65 C. C. A. 1 (St. 1903, Mar. 3); 1904, Tom Hong v. U. S., 193 U. S. 517, 24 Sup. 517; 1904, U. S. v. Sing Tuck, 194 U. S. 161, 24 Sup. 621, overruling Sing Tuck v. U. S., 128 Fed. 592, C. C. A. (U. S. St. 1894, Aug. 18, c. 301, § 1, makes the decision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor conclusive, after a due hearing, upon the fact of non-citizenship of a person of Chinese parentage claiming entrance as a native-born citizen; constitutionality of the statute, not decided); 1905, U. S. v. Ju Toy, 198 U. S. 253, 25 Sup. 645 (constitutionality of the preceding statute affirmed; "with regard to him [a returning citizen], due process of law does not require a judicial trial; . . . the decision may be entrusted to an executive officer"; three judges dissenting; Brewer, J.: "Such a decision is to my mind appalling; . . . an obnoxious class may be put beyond the protection of the Constitution by ministerial officers of the State proceeding in strict accord with exactly similar rules"); 1906, Moy Suey v. U. S., 147 Fed. 697, C. C. A. ("Nativity gives citizenship, and is a right under the Constitution; it is a right that Congress would be without constitutional power to curtail or give away. It is a right to be adjudicated in the Courts, in the usual and ordinary way of adjudicating constitutional rights"; distinguishing U. S. v. Sing Tuck on the ground that here the alleged citizen is within the country, and not seeking to re-enter it after departure); 1907, Chin Yow v. U. S., 208 U. S. 8 (habeas corpus by a Chinese claiming citizenship by birth, and alleging that he was not permitted to adduce available testimony; Holmes, J.: "As between the substantive right of citizens to enter, and of persons alleging themselves to be citizens to have a chance to prove their allegation, on the one side, and the conclusiveness of the commissioner's fiat on the other, when one or the other must give way, the latter must yield"); 1908, In re Tang Tun, In re Gang Gong, In re Can Pon, D. C. W. D. Wash., 161 Fed. 618, 625 (here Hanford, J., emphasizes the gravity of danger in a law submitting to executive officials the determination of the constitutional right of citizenship by birth); 1909, Re Can Pon, 9th C. C. A., 168 Fed. 479 (procedure of immigration officers, prescribed); 1909, Re Tang Tun, 9th C. C. C., 168 Fed. 488 (similar); 1909, Liu Hop Fong v. U. S., 209 U. S. 453, 28 Sup. 576 (an order of deportation made by the district judge on the commissioner's findings, without other evidence, held improper under the circumstances); 1910, U. S. v. Chu Hang, D. C. S. C., 179 Fed. 564 (similar to Tang Tun's Case, per Brawley, J.); 1914, Hanges v. Whitfield, D. C. N. D. Ia., 209 Fed. 675 (deportation of an immigrant under St. 1907, Feb. 20, as amended by St. 1910, Mar. 26, c. 128, 36 Stats. L. 263); 1914, Ex parte Lam Pui, D. C. E. D. N. C., 217 Fed. 456 (forcible opinion by Connor, J., emphasizing the necessity of a fair hearing and sufficient evidence); 1915, Choy Gum v. Backus, 9th C. C. A., 223 Fed. 487 (a finding based in part on ex parte affidavits may be sustained, if "the inquiry appeared to be fair and impartial"); 1920, Kwock Jan Fat v. White, 253 U. S. 454, 40 Sup. 566 ("It is better that many Chinese immigrants should be improperly admitted than that one natural-born citizen should be permanently excluded from his country").

[5] 1855, Murray v. Hoboken L. & I. Co., 18 How. 272, 284 (statute making a warrant of distress for debt due from a government collector to the United States conclusive evidence of the indebtedness, held valid as covering a matter not essentially one of determination by the judicial power).

[6] 1904, Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194 U. S. 497, 24 Sup. 789 (order excluding fraudulent communications from the mails).

[7] Ante, § 1347, n. 7. Compare also the authorities cited ante, § 4 a and § 4 c (rules of evidence in administrative tribunals).

has received an undeserved importance and a needless confusion by that association, namely, the question of the constitutionality of statutes creating rules of presumption or 'prima facie' evidence.

A rule of presumption is simply a rule changing the burden of proof, i.e. declaring that the main fact will be inferred or assumed from some other fact until evidence to the contrary is introduced (post, § 2490). There is not the least doubt, on principle, that the Legislature has entire control over such rules, as it has over all other rules of procedure in general and evidence in particular (ante, § 7) — subject only to the limitations of the rules of Evidence expressly enshrined in the Constitution. If the Legislature can abolish the rules of disqualification of witnesses and grant the rule of discovery from an opponent, it can shift the burden of producing evidence. Yet this elementary truth has been repeatedly questioned, and Courts have repeatedly vouchsafed an unmerited attention to the question, chiefly through a hesitation in appreciating the true nature of a presumption and a tendency to associate in some indefinite manner the notion of conclusively shutting out all evidence and that of merely shifting the duty of producing it. Fortunately, sound principle has almost everywhere prevailed, though at an unnecessary expense of argument and hesitation:

1910, LURTON, J., in Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Turnipseed, 219 U. S. 35, 43: "The statutory effect of the rule is to provide that evidence of an injury arising from the actual operation of trains shall create an inference of negligence, which is the main fact in issue. The only legal effect of this inference is to cast upon the railroad company the duty of producing some evidence to the contrary. When that is done, the inference is at an end, and the question of negligence is one for the jury upon all of the evidence. In default of such evidence, the defendant, in a civil case, must lose, for the 'prima facie' case is enough as matter of law. The statute does not, therefore, deny the equal protection of the law or otherwise fail in due process of law, because it creates a presumption of liability, since its operation is only to supply an inference of liability in the absence of other evidence contradicting such inference.

"That a legislative presumption of one fact from evidence of another may not constitute a denial of due process of law or a denial of the equal protection of the law, it is only essential that there shall be some rational connection between the fact proved and the ultimate fact presumed, and that the inference of one fact from proof of another shall not be so unreasonable as to be a purely arbitrary mandate. So, also, it must not, under guise of regulating the presentation of evidence, operate to preclude the party from the right to present his defence to the main fact thus presumed. If a legislative provision not unreasonable in itself, prescribing a rule of evidence, in either criminal or civil cases, does not shut out from the party affected a reasonable opportunity to submit to the jury in his defense all of the facts bearing upon the issues, there is no ground for holding that due process of law has been denied him."

1914, LUMPKIN, J., in Griffin v. State, 142 Ga. 636, 639: "With certain limitations, the Legislature may enact that when specified facts have been proved, they shall, even in a criminal case, be 'prima facie' evidence of the guilt of the accused, and shift the burden of proof. On this power there are limitations, the principal one of which is that the fact or facts which will raise the presumption and shift the burden of proof must have some fair relation to, or material connection with, the main fact as to which the presumption is raised. The inference or presumption from the facts proved must not be merely arbitrary, or wholly unreasonable, unnatural, or extraordinary, but must bear some reasonable relation to the facts proved. To illustrate, if the Legislature should declare that every man found wearing a straw hat in September should be presumed to have committed any forgery which took place in that month, such an act would be invalid, because there is no rational connection between forgery and wearing a straw hat, and the presumption would be purely arbitrary. But if the Legislature should declare that one found in possession of stolen goods shortly after a larceny should be 'prima facie' presumed to be the thief, and that the burden of rebutting the presumption should rest on him, this would be valid, the presumption not being purely arbitrary but there being a reasonable connection between the possession of the stolen goods and the commission of the larceny. Moreover, the presumption so raised must not be final, but the accused must be allowed a fair opportunity to make his defence and show all of the facts bearing on the issue, and to have the whole case submitted to the jury for decision, after considering all of the evidence as well as the 'prima facie' presumption, if the facts from which it arises have been proved to exist."

Statutes giving presumptive or 'prima facie' weight have therefore been held constitutional in application to tax-collectors' deeds, as raising a presumption of regularity of proceedings;[1] to conduct indicating a banker's knowledge of insolvency;[2] to conduct indicating illegal gaming[3] or illegal liquor-selling[4]

§ 1356. [1] To the cases cited ante, § 1354, n. 5, which almost all concede this, add the following: Fed. 1851, Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. 472, 476; 1893, Marx v. Hanthorn, 148 U. S. 172, 181, 13 Sup. 508; 1912, Reitler v. Harris, 223 U. S. 437, 32 Sup. 248 (Kan. St. 1907, c. 373, making an entry of forfeiture of school land for default in payment 'prima facie' evidence of proper preliminary steps); Cal. 1893, McDonald v. Conniff, 99 Cal. 386, 390, 34 Pac. 71; 1894, Clarke v. Mead, 102 Cal. 516, 519, 36 Pac. 862; Ill. 1888, Gage v. Caraher, 125 Ill. 451, 17 N. E. 777; N. Y. 1855, Hand v. Ballou, 12 N. Y. 541; Wis. 1856, Delaplaine v. Cook, 7 Wis. 44 (well-reasoned opinion by Whiton, C. J.).

[2] 1894, Robertson v. People, 20 Colo. 279, 38 Pac. 326 (statute making a bank's failure within 30 days of a deposit 'prima facie' evidence of knowledge of insolvency, held constitutional); 1914, Griffin v. State, 142 Ga. 636, 83 S. E. 540 (Ga. P. C. 1910, § 204, providing that "every insolvency" of a bank, etc., "shall be deemed fraudulent", but "the defendant may repel the presumption of fraud by showing" etc., held constitutional, since "the presumption was not intended to be conclusive"); 1896, Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 56, 45 N. E. 303, 991 (insolvent bankers' statute, held constitutional); 1896, State v. Beach, 147 Ind. 74, 43 N. E. 949 (statute making failure of a bank within 30 days after receiving a deposit to be 'prima facie' evidence of intent to defraud, held constitutional); 1894, State v. Buck, 120 Mo. 479, 25 S. W. 573 (insolvent bankers' statute, held valid).

So also the following: 1903, Crane v. Waldron, 133 Mich. 73, 94 N. W. 593 (fraudulent conveyances).

[3] 1904, Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. 372 (policy slips; possession as raising a presumption of knowledge); 1888, Morgan v. State, 117 Ind. 569, 17 N. E. 154 (statute declaring the fact of gaming, etc., to a lessor's knowledge to be sufficient evidence of renting for the purpose of gaming, held constitutional); 1890, Voght v. State, 124 Ind. 358, 24 N. E. 680 (same statute held constitutional, and treated as merely defining a presumption); 1896, Com. v. Smith, 166 Mass. 370, 44 N. E. 503.

[4] Fed. 1922, Hawes v. Georgia, 258 U. S. 1, 42 Sup. 204 (knowing permission to others to use premises for illegal making of liquor; Ga. St. 1917, Ex. Sess. p. 7, § 22, providing that the finding of apparatus on premises "shall be 'prima facie' evidence that the person in possession had actual knowledge of the existence of the same", held constitutional; "undoubtedly there must be a relation between the two facts; that is, if one evidence the other, there must be connection between them, a requirement that reasoning insists on, and necessarily the law"; but since when was a legislature obliged to be logical at the risk of being unconstitutional? Can we afford to put so much legislation in danger!); Ala. 1910, Toole v. State, 170 Ala. 41, 54 So. 195 (statute making the keeping of liquor etc., 'prima facie' evidence of intent to sell, held constitutional); Conn. 1856, State v. Cunningham, 25 Conn. 195 (a statute making the possession of spirituous liquors presumptive evidence of keeping with intent to sell, held constitutional); 1917, Dees v. State, 16 Ala. App. 97, 75 So. 645 (St. 1915, p. 31, making possession 'prima facie' evidence, held constitutional); Ill. 1908, People v. McBride, 234 Ill. 146, 84 N. E. 865 (statute making the issuance of an internal revenue stamp 'prima facie' evidence, held constitutional, following Meadowcroft v. People, supra, n. 2); Kan. 1902, State v. Sheppard, 64 Kan. 451,

(though here there is one line of singularly perverse decisions[5]), or illegal transactions of other sorts;[6] to the findings of an auditor or referee in a

67 Pac. 870 (Kan. St. 1901, c. 232, § 8, providing that the possession of intoxicating liquors shall be 'prima facie' evidence of keeping for sale, held constitutional; "the Legislature has some power over the rules of evidence"); Mass. 1856, Com. v. Williams, 6 Gray 1 (statute declaring delivery of intoxicating liquor 'prima facie' evidence of a sale, held valid; Thomas, J., diss.); 1856, Com. v. Wallace, 7 Gray 222 (same; but Thomas, J., not diss.); 1859, Com. v. Rowe, 14 Gray 47 (same); N. Y. 1886, Board v. Merchant, 103 N. Y. 143, 149, 8 N. E. 484 (statute making the drinking of liquor on premises 'prima facie' evidence of the occupant's sale with intent that the liquor should be there drunk, held valid); 1893, People v. Cannon, 139 N. Y. 32, 34 N. E. 759 (statute making the possession of marked bottles without the owner's consent 'prima facie' evidence of unlawful purchase, held valid); N. C. 1915, State v. Barrett, 138 N. C. 630, 50 S. E. 506 (St. 1903, c. 434, making the possession of liquor under certain circumstances 'prima facie' evidence of intent to sell, held constitutional; quoting the above text with approval); Okl. 1915, Caffee v. State, 11 Okl. Cr. 485, 148 Pac. 680 (St. 1913, c. 26, § 6, making the keeping of certain quantities of liquor 'prima facie' evidence of intent to sell, held constitutional; quoting the above text with approval); 1915, Sellers v. State, 11 Okl. Cr. 588, 149 Pac. 1071 (similar); Tenn. 1910, Diamond v. State, 123 Tenn., 348, 131 S. W. 666 (illegal liquor sale; a statute making the procuring of a Federal revenue license 'prima facie' evidence of being in the liquor business, held valid).

[5] R. I. 1881, State v. Beswick, 13 R. I. 211 (statute making the "notorious character" of premises or their frequenters "'prima facie' evidence that said liquors are kept on such premises for the purposes of sale", held invalid, as depriving of liberty without "the law of the land", because "it virtually strips the accused of the protection of the common-law maxim that every person is presumed innocent until he is proved guilty"; yet the same ruling holds that another clause of the statute placing on the accused the burden of proof of a license is valid; the opinion discloses confused notions as to the nature of presumptions and burden of proof); 1881, State v. Higgins, 13 R. I. 330 (statute making the sale of liquor in a place "'prima facie' evidence that the sale is illegal", held valid, as in effect merely placing on the defendant the burden of proving a license; prior case distinguished); 1882, State v. Mellor, 13 R. I. 666 (similar case to the preceding, but apparently inconsistent); 1885, State v. Wilson, 15 R. I. 180, 1 Atl. 415 (a statute making reputation merely evidence of the character of a place as a liquor nuisance, leaving the jury "free to find the accused guilty or not", held constitutional).

So also in Louisiana: 1917, State v. Wilson, 141 La. 404, 75 So. 95 (St. 1908, No. 40, making the U. S. internal revenue collector's certificate of license issued admissible as 'prima facie' evidence of guilt of illegal liquor selling, held invalid; State v. Donato, 127 La. 393, "must be considered overruled"; the opinion is a typical illustration of the acute legal mind dwelling and reasoning in a lofty cloud-cuckoo-land of its own creation, thousands of parasangs distant from the world of men).

[6] Federal: 1910, Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Turnipseed, 219 U. S. 35, 31 Sup. 136 (negligence of railroad company; quoted supra); 1910, Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 220 U. S. 61, 31 Sup. 337 (a statute making the pumping of certain waters 'prima facie' evidence of an offence under the statute, and putting on such party the burden of showing that he comes within an exception, held valid); 1911, Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U. S. 219, 227, 31 Sup. 146 (Ala. Code 1896, § 4730, as amended, Code 1907, § 6845, making it a penal offence for a person after receiving money in advance from an employee under a contract to refuse to perform the service with intent to defraud, provided that the refusal to perform without returning the money and without just cause, should be 'prima facie' evidence of intent to defraud; held unconstitutional, two judges dissenting; Mobile R. Co. v. Turnipseed, supra, distinguished; the decision is unsound); 1917, Ng Choy Fong v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 245 Fed. 305 (concealment of opium; St. 1909, Feb. 9, §§ 2, 3, declaring that the possession of opium raised a presumption, etc., held valid); Georgia: 1907, Mulkey v. State, 1 Ga. App. 521, 57 S. E. 1022 (St. 1903, Aug. 15, p. 90, punishing fraudulent contracts to render service, and making non-performance presumptive evidence of fraudulent intent, held constitutional, but not applicable to remote acts; weighty opinion by Powell, J., the best on the subject); 1912, Wilson v. State, 138 Ga. 489, 75 S. E. 619 (P. C. 1910, § 715, making non-performance of a contract of service presumptive evidence of fraudulent intent, held valid); Kansas: 1920, State v. Nossaman, 107 Kan. 715, 193 Pac. 347 (unlawful traffic in cigarettes; statute making possession 'prima facie' evidence of violation of act, held constitutional); Massachusetts: 1904, Com. v. Anselvich, 186 Mass. 376, 71 N. E. 790 (a statute making the possession of registered bottles, etc., 'prima facie' evidence of crime); 1911, Opinion of the Justices, 208 Mass. 619, 94 N. E. 1044 (bill to prohibit labor in excess of 8 hours a day except in certain cases, providing that work more than 8 hours should be "'prima facie' evidence of the violation", etc.; clause held unconstitutional, because it made a presumption from "a fact which in ordinary cases has no tendency to establish guilt"; opinion unsound, both on principle and in application); Mississippi: 1922, Hollins v. State, — Miss. —, 90 So. 630 (St. 1914, c. 171, placing the burden of proving unchastity on the defendant for statutory rape, held constitutional because merely creating a "'prima facie' presumption"); Montana: 1921, State v. Pippi, 59 Mont. 116, 195 Pac. 556 (statute making the receipt of money from a prostitute presumptive evidence of lack of consideration); Nevada: 1921, State v. Rothrock, — Nev. —, 200 Pac. 525 (statute making certain acts 'prima facie' evidence of embezzlement, held constitutional); New York: 1918, People v. Woronoff, 222 N. Y. 456, 118 N. E. 102 (grand larceny; S. Consol. L. 1909, Business and Trade, § 442, making the failure to produce books of account to customer presumptive evidence of falsity of representations as to assets, held constitutional); North Carolina: 1911, State v. Griffin, 154 N. C. 611, 70 S. E. 292 (Rev. St. § 3431, making non-performance of labor 'prima facie' evidence of intent to cheat, as in the Alabama statute, held unconstitutional, following Bailey v. Alabama, U. S.); 1918, State v. Price, 175 N. C. 804, 95 S. E. 478 (statute making reputation admissible to evidence the character of a bawdy-house, held valid); Texas: 1869, Faith v. State, 32 Tex. 372 (St. 1866, Nov. 13, p. 223, making the possession of certain animals without written document of conveyance 'prima facie' evidence of illegal possession, held constitutional).

trial;[7] to the schedules of rates of a railroad commission;[8] and to sundry other data of inference, circumstantial or testimonial.[9]

The following opinion is peculiar and unsound: 1916, McFarland v. American Sugar Ref. Co., 241 U. S. 79, 36 Sup. 498 (by La. St. 1915, extra session, No. 10, the business of sugar refining was declared to be impressed with a public interest because of being a monopoly, and regulations for the buying of raw sugar were made; § 7 provided that any person engaged in the refining business "who shall systematically pay in Louisiana a less price for sugar than he pays in any other State shall be 'prima facie' presumed to be a party to a monopoly"; § 8 made a similar presumption from the closing of a refinery for more than one year; these rules of presumption were held invalid, on the ground that they "had no foundation except with tacit reference to the plaintiff", and thus violated the 14th Amendment as to equal protection of the laws; the opinion dismisses the subject curtly, without due consideration of the principle involved; it maintains that the Legislature cannot "declare an individual presumptively guilty of a crime"; but here the Legislature makes no such declaration, the description becomes individualized only by the party's own conduct in doing the acts described).

[7] 1877, Holmes v. Hunt, 122 Mass. 505, 516 (statute making the report of an "auditor", or referee in civil cases, 'prima facie' evidence, held valid).

Contra: 1860, Plimpton v. Somerset, 33 Vt. 283 (statute making a referee's report 'prima facie' evidence in common-law cases, held invalid, because the jury's verdict "becomes but the mere recording of a verdict made for them by others"; Barrett, J., diss.).

Compare Re Peterson, 253 U. S. 300 (1920), 40 Sup. 543, cited post, § 2484.

For the state of the doctrine in New Hampshire, which rested largely on historical grounds, see the following cases: 1875, Copp v. Henniker, 55 N. H. 179; 1876, Doyle v. Doyle, 56 N. H. 567; 1876, Perkins v. Scott, 57 N. H. 55; 1876, King v. Hopkins, 57 N. H. 334, 354, 359; in the last case, the opinion of Foster, C. J., deals with the question of evidence, and, while apparently conceding the legislative power to make rules of 'prima facie' evidence, it regards this statute as a virtual substitution of another tribunal for the jury; but his argument is labored: the answer of Cushing, C. J., is ample.

[8] 1915, Meeker v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 236 U. S. 412, 35 Sup. 328 (U. S. St. 1906, July 29, § 16, making the findings of the Interstate Commerce commission "'prima facie' evidence of the facts therein stated", held constitutional, as "only establishing a rebuttable presumption"); 1894, Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 37 N. E. 247 (statute making railroad commissioners' schedule of rates 'prima facie' evidence of their reasonableness, held constitutional); 1891, Burlington C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 82 Ia. 312, 48 N. W. 98 (statute making railroad commissioners' schedule of rates 'prima facie' evidence of reasonableness, held constitutional).

[9] Federal: 1910, Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Turnipseed, 219 U. S. 35, 31 Sup. 136 (Miss. Code 1896, § 1985, making injury inflicted to persons or property "by the running of the locomotives or cars" of a railroad 'prima facie' evidence of negligence, held constitutional); 1913, Luria v. U. S., 231 U. S. 9, 34 Sup. 10 (U. S. St. 1906, June 29, § 15, on naturalization, providing that the return of a naturalized citizen for permanent residence in a foreign country, within 5 years after naturalization, should be 'prima facie' evidence of initial lack of intent to become a permanent citizen, held constitutional, following Mobile R. Co. v. Turnipseed); Illinois: 1898, Baltimore & O. S. W.

It has occasionally been suggested that these legislative rules of presumption, or any legislative rules of evidence, must be tested by the standard of rationality, and are invalid if they fall short of it.[10] But this cannot be conceded. If the Legislature can make a rule of Evidence at all (ante, § 7), it cannot be controlled by a judicial standard of rationality, any more than its economic fallacies can be invalidated by the judicial conceptions of economic

R. Co. v. Tripp, 175 Ill. 251, 51 N. E. 833 (Rev. St. 1874, p. 814, St. 1869, Mar. 29, making the communication of fire by railroad locomotives 'prima facie' evidence of negligence, held constitutional); 1904, People ex rel. Hillel Lodge v. Rose, 207 Ill. 352, 69 N. E. 762 (St. 1901, May 10, declaring the failure of a corporation to file an annual report 'prima facie' evidence of non-user, is constitutional; otherwise if a rule of conclusiveness had been declared; Magruder, J., diss. on other grounds); Kentucky: 1905, Andricus' Adm'r v. Pineville Coal Co., 121 Ky. 724, 90 S. W. 233 (statute making a mine inspector's report 'prima facie' evidence, held constitutional); Louisiana: 1911, Learned v. Texas & P. R. Co., 128 La. 430, 54 So. 931 (St. 1886, No. 70, § 1, making the fact of injury or death of stock sufficient in an action against a railroad company, unless the defendant disproves negligence, held constitutional; "the rules of procedure and evidence are of course within legislative control"); Maine: 1921, Mansfield v. Gushee, 120 Me. 333, 114 Atl. 296 (statute making 'prima facie' evidence a party's suppletory oath to a book of accounts); Massachusetts: 1918, Duggan v. Bay State St. R. Co., 230 Mass. 370, 119 N. E. 757 (St. 1915, c. 553, changing the burden of proof as to contributory negligence, held constitutional); Missouri: 1919, Cunningham v. Chicago & A. R. Co., — Mo. —, 215 S. W. 5 (St. 1913, p. 578, § 40, and St. 1913, p. 177, amending Rev. St. 1909, § 3121, placing upon a common carrier the burden of proof that delay in transit was not due to negligence, held constitutional); North Dakota: 1918, Stoeber v. Minneapolis St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., 40 N. D. 121, 168 N. W. 562 (Comp. L. 1913, § 4644, making injury to stock 'prima facie' evidence of negligence, held valid); Oklahoma: 1905, Williams v. Fourth Nat'l Bank, 15 Okl. 477, 82 Pac. 496 (sales in bulk); Vermont: 1909, Ex parte Allen, 82 Vt. 365, 73 Atl. 1078 (statute making a physician's sworn certificate 'prima facie' evidence of insanity in committal proceedings, held valid); Washington: 1905, State v. Lawson, 40 Wash. 455, 82 Pac. 750 (official records of physicians' licenses).

[10] Ida. 1920, State v. Grimmett, 33 Ida. 203, 193 Pac. 380 (larceny of cattle; Comp. St. 1919, § 1948, providing that any person slaughtering cattle must retain the hide without alteration for 30 days, and that a failure to comply with this is "'prima facie' evidence of the commission of the crime of grand larceny", held unconstitutional, because the disposition of a hide within 30 days "is an act innocent in itself", and "the Legislature cannot indirectly accomplish the result [of taking away the presumption of innocence] by enacting that proof of a fact which has no rational tendency to prove that the defendant is guilty of a certain crime shall be 'prima facie' evidence thereof"; replying to the doctrine of the text above by invoking "the due process provision of the Constitution", which is "a limitation upon the power of the Legislature in the enactment of statutory rules of evidence"; if so, it would now be an apt exercise of due process for this Court to deconstitutionalize some of the really irrational rules of evidence invented by common-law judges themselves; Budge, J., diss., in a well-reasoned opinion); Ind. 1896, Monks, J., in State v. Beach, 147 Ind. 74, 43 N. E. 949, 46 N. E. 145 ("a statute which makes an act 'prima facie' evidence of a crime, which has no relation to a criminal act and no tendency whatever to establish a criminal act", would be unconstitutional); N. Y. 1856, Selden, J., in Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, 446 (statute making delivery 'prima facie' evidence of sale of liquor, declared invalid, on the ground that "all these fundamental rules of evidence . . . are placed by the Constitution beyond the reach of legislation . . . and are of course in their nature unchangeable"; this was obiter, the other judges not noticing the point); 1893, Peckham, J., in People v. Cannon, 139 N. Y. 32, 34 N. E. 759 ("The limitations are that the fact upon which the presumption is to rest must have some fair relation to or natural connection with the main fact. The inference of the existence of the main fact, because of the existence of the fact actually proved, must be not merely and purely arbitrary, or wholly unreasonable, unnatural, and extraordinary").

In State v. Price (1918), 175 N. C. 804, 95 S. E. 478, Walker, J., after alluding to the above text continues: "Without conceding that the rationality of the legislative rule of evidence is in no case open to judicial examination, it is probably safe to assume that the Courts will be reluctant, except in extraordinary cases, to declare that the legislative rule is so irrational as to be invalid."

See also the judicial utterances quoted ante, § 1354, n. 9.

truth. Apart from the Constitution, the Legislature is not obliged to obey either the axioms of logic or the axioms of economic science. All that the Legislature does in such an event is either to render admissible a fact which was before inadmissible, or to place the burden of producing evidence on the opposite party. When this has been done, the jury is free to decide; or, so far as it is not, this is because the party has voluntarily failed to adduce contrary evidence. There is here nothing conclusive, nothing prohibitive. So long as the party may exercise his freedom to introduce evidence, and the jurors may exercise their freedom to weigh it rationally, no amount of irrational legislation can change the result.

The advice may be ventured that if the Judiciary had long ago resented as unconstitutional that ill-advised species of legislative interference which forbade them to comment to juries upon the weight of evidence, they need never have cared about the evidential effect of enactments of the present sort.

§ 1357. Contracts making Specific Evidence Conclusive. Whether the parties may validly contract that a specified kind of evidence shall be conclusive, is part of a larger question whether in general contracts to alter or to waive the usual rules of Evidence are valid. This subject has already been considered elsewhere (ante, § 7*a*).